

THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

FOUNDED BY JAMES LOEB, LL.D.

EDITED BY

†T. E. PAGE, C.H., LITT.D.

.. CAPPS, PH.D., LL.D.    W. H. D. ROUSE, LITT.D.

.. A. POST, M.A.            E. H. WARMINGTON, M.A., F.R.HIST.SOC.

CICERO

DE INVENTIONE

DE OPTIMO GENERE ORATORUM

TOPICA

CICERO
DE INVENTIONE
DE OPTIMO GENERE
ORATORUM
TOPICA

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

H. M. HUBBELL

TALCOTT PROFESSOR OF GREEK YALE UNIVERSITY

LONDON
WILLIAM HEINEMANN LTD
CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS
HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS
MCMXLIX

Grad. R. R. 1

PA

6304

.R5

H88

cap. 2

Printed in Great Britain

12.14

11-5-61

added copy

CONTENTS

	PAGE
DE INVENTIONE—
INTRODUCTION . . . . .	vii
BIBLIOGRAPHY . . . . .	xv
BOOK I . . . . .	1
BOOK II . . . . .	165
DE OPTIMO GENERE ORATORUM—
INTRODUCTION . . . . .	349
BIBLIOGRAPHY . . . . .	352
TEXT . . . . .	354
TOPICA—
INTRODUCTION . . . . .	377
BIBLIOGRAPHY . . . . .	379
TEXT . . . . .	382
INDEX . . . . .	461

INTRODUCTION

THE treatise de Inventione is a youthful work of Cicero, which was probably written while he was studying the elements of oratory, and is in fact hardly more than an elaborate note-book in which he recorded the dictation of his teacher. To this he later added conventional introductions when he decided to publish. It is an immature work, stiff, didactic and formal, and shows, except in the introductions, no promise of the opulence of style and breadth of thought which were to characterize the rhetorical works of his later years. We are not surprised, then, that when he composed the de Oratore at the height of his career as an advocate, Cicero spoke slightly of the de Inventione, and in fact used language which might be interpreted to mean that the publication was an accident.<sup>a</sup>

Of the date of composition we know nothing beyond Cicero's own statement (v. note a) that it was written when he was a boy or youth (puer aut adulescentulus)—two words which, vague in themselves, do not gain precision by being combined.

<sup>a</sup> de Orat. I, 5. . . . quæ pueris aut adulescentulis nobis ex commentariolis nostris incohata ac rudia exciderunt, vix hac ætate digna et hoc usu sunt quem ex causis quas diximus tot tantisque consecuti sumus. "The incomplete work—merely a rough draft—which escaped from my note-books between boyhood and youth is hardly worthy of my age and of the experience that I have acquired from the many important cases in which I have appeared."

INTRODUCTION

Many attempts have been made to determine a more exact date, but none have met with general acceptance. The most that can be said is that it contains no reference to any event later than 91 B.C., though references to all earlier periods of Roman history are common. This does not prove that it was written before that date, but does suggest strongly that its composition cannot belong to a much later period. Cicero was fifteen years old in 91. If the de Inventione was published in 87, at the age of 19, he might well describe himself at that time as puer aut adulescentulus.

Equally elusive is the relationship of the de Inventione to the other rhetorical work of the same period which has come down to us in the Ciceronian corpus, but which is certainly by another hand. This work is dedicated to one Gaius Herennius, and because of the lack of certainty as to its authorship, is now generally referred to as Auctor ad Herennium. It is a complete treatise on rhetoric, whereas the de Inventione is unfinished. In the parts which they have in common, the two treatises have a high degree of similarity which necessitates the assumption of common origin. When one endeavours to make the relationship clearer, however, the problem becomes involved, and no definite agreement has been reached. No one, nowadays, attempts to prove that Cicero copied the Auctor, or served as his source. Parallels have been cited which indicate that each author copied the other, and the net result is that the arguments cancel out. They do prove, however, that both derive ultimately from Greek τέχναι or text-books of rhetoric, and probably from the same one, that this τέχνη was interpreted and adapted for Roman students by the teacher whom Cicero and the Auctor followed, and that in so doing they used a more or less uniform technical terminology in Latin which had become current in Rome.<sup>a</sup>

INTRODUCTION

The authorship of these Greek τέχναι cannot be determined, but it has been shown conclusively that the important part of the book, the doctrine of constitutio causae, or determination of the "issue", is derived with some modifications from Hermagoras of Temnos, a rhetorician of the second century B.C. who first formulated the principles. Hermagoras leaned heavily on Stoic logic, and Stoic ideas appear frequently in the de Inventione, but no Stoic is mentioned. On the other hand, there are frequent references to Peripatetics, and this fact suggests that Cicero's source combined Hermagorean and Peripatetic doctrine. Further than that one cannot go with confidence.

A modern text-book of rhetoric deals largely with style—choice of words, figures of speech, formation of sentences, arrangement of paragraphs—and has in view the practice of writing fully as much as of speaking. An ancient Rhetoric trained men entirely for speaking, and almost exclusively for speaking in the law court. It is a doctrine of controversy and debate. Furthermore, it is concerned with matter as well as with style. Invention, or the discovery of ideas and subject matter, was the first and perhaps the most important section of any formal treatise on rhetoric. In developing "invention" the authors are of necessity busied with the concepts and procedure of the court-room. A rhetoric thus becomes a "Practical Pleader's Guide." Hence much of the de Inventione reads like a law book.

<sup>a</sup> Both authors, for example, translate στάσις as constitutio, by no means the only way of rendering it, for Cicero in his later rhetorical works uses status.

INTRODUCTION

"Invention" was the first of five parts in a rhetorical treatise. It was followed by chapters on Arrangement, Expression or Style, Memory and Delivery. Cicero intended to write a complete Rhetoric, but only the section on Invention was finished. This accounts for the title de Inventione which has clung to it for centuries, though the original title Rhetorici Libri gave a better indication of the original plan of the work.

A brief outline of the de Inventione follows :

BOOK I

1. General introduction: defence of eloquence, §§ 1-5.

2. The function, end, materials and divisions of eloquence, §§ 5-9.

3. a. The four issues, coniecturalis, definitiva, generalis, translativa defined, §§ 10-16.

b. The case may be simple or complex, § 17.

c. Cases arising out of a written document, §§ 17-18.

d. Further analysis of the constitutiones, §§ 18-19.

4. The parts of an oration :

a. Exordium, §§ 20-26.

b. Narrative, §§ 27-30.

c. Partition, §§ 31-33.

d. Confirmation, §§ 34-77.

e. Refutation, §§ 78-96.

f. Digression, §§ 97.

g. Peroration, §§ 98-109.

5. Conclusion, § 109.

INTRODUCTION

BOOK II

1. Introduction: eclectic nature of this book, §§ 1–10.

✓ 2. Subject matter of Book II: the arguments appropriate to each “issue” and to each kind of speech, §§ 11–13.

3. Forensic speeches (genus iudiciale).

(Under each heading a similar plan of presentation is followed: brief statement of the facts in a typical case; the charge, answer and point of decision; the arguments available for the prosecution and defence; the “common topics.”)

a. Cases involving general reasoning:

Issue of fact (constitutio coniecturalis), §§ 14–51.

Issue of definition (constitutio definitiva), §§ 52–56.

Issue of competence (constitutio translativa), §§ 57–61.

Issue of quality (constitutio generalis), §§ 62–115.

b. Cases involving interpretation of a document:

✓ Ambiguity, §§ 116–120.

Letter and intent, §§ 121–143.

Conflict of laws, §§ 144–147.

✓ Reasoning by analogy, §§ 148–153.

Definition, §§ 153–154.

4. Political speeches (genus deliberativum), §§ 155–176.

5. Epideictic speeches (genus demonstrativum), §§ 176–177.

6. Conclusion, § 178.

INTRODUCTION

The war has made it impossible to examine the manuscripts in preparation for this edition. I have therefore been compelled to rely on the testimony of Weidner, Ströbel and others, particularly of Ströbel, who gives in his edition (Teubner, Leipzig, 1915) the fullest apparatus criticus. As my text is essentially that of Ströbel, I have cited manuscript readings only where I differ from him, or in the few instances where a variant seemed likely to interest the reader.

The manuscripts used in the apparatus with their sigla, following the scheme of Ströbel, are :

CODICES MUTILI

- H. Codex Herbipolitanus Mp. m. f. 3.
- P. Codex Parisinus 7774 A.
- S. Codex Sangallensis 820.
- L. Codex Leidensis Vossianus LXX.
- R. Codex Corbeiensis (Petropolitanus) F vel. 8
auct. class. Latin.
- M. the consensus of H P S L R or of H P.

CODICES INTEGRI

- b. Codex Bambergensis 423 MV 8.
- l. Codex Leidensis Gronovianus 22.
- s. Codex Sangallensis Vadianus 313.
- u. Codex Urbinas 1144.
- v<sub>2</sub>. Codex Vaticanus 1698.
- v<sub>7</sub>. Codex Vaticanus 3236.
- J. all or most of the Codices Integri.
- i. some of the Codices Integri.
- C. consensus of M and J.

INTRODUCTION

$\omega_1$ . editions of Omnibonus (1470), Manutius (1540) Lambinus (1566), Ernesti (1774), Schütz (1804), Lindemann (1828).

This stemma represents approximately the relation of the manuscripts as worked out by Ströbel. Of a complete MS. (earlier than the ninth century) two copies were made, M and J. The original and both copies are now lost. M was mutilated by the loss of several leaves (from I, 62 quod enim to I, 76 hoc est. tum inductione, and from II, 170 huius modi necessitudines to II, 174 expectare oportebit are missing), and from this mutilated copy H S P R L are ultimately derived. Both P and S show signs of having been corrected from a manuscript of the J class. E is another descendant of M with the lacunae filled from J. It is now lost, but from it were derived the great mass of complete MSS., of which I cite b, l, d, s, u, v<sub>2</sub>, v<sub>7</sub>.

INTRODUCTION

In general the M recension is more reliable than J, but not sufficiently superior to justify an editor in following it exclusively.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

THE principal modern editions are :

TEXT

- Johann Kaspar von Orelli, M. Tullii Ciceronis opera quae supersunt omnia. Vol. I. Zürich, 1826.
id. and Johann Georg Baiter, editio altera. Zürich, 1845.
Reinhold Klotz, M. Tullii Ciceronis scripta quae manserunt omnia. Vol. I. Leipzig, 1851.
id. Editio altera. Leipzig, 1863.
Carl Ludwig Kayser, M. Tullii Ciceronis opera quae supersunt omnia, ed. J. G. Baiter, C. L. Kayser. Vol. I. M. Tullii Ciceronis opera rhetorica, rec. C. L. Kayser. Leipzig, 1860.
Andreas Weidner, M. Tullii Ciceronis artis rhetoricae libri duo. Berlin, 1878.
Wilhelm Friedrich, M. Tullii Ciceronis scripta quae manserunt omnia, rec. C. F. W. Mueller. Pars I, vol. I. Opera rhetorica, rec. Gulielmus Friedrich. Leipzig, 1884.
Eduard Ströbel, M. Tullii Ciceronis scripta quae manserunt omnia, Fasc. 2, Rhetorici libri duo qui vocantur De Inventione, rec. Eduardus Stroebel. Leipzig, 1915.

TEXT AND TRANSLATION

- Henri Bornecque, Cicero, De l'invention, édit et traduit par Henri Bornecque. Paris, 1932.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

TRANSLATIONS

Bornecque, v. above.

Charles Duke Yonge, The Orations of Marcus Tullius Cicero. Vol. IV, containing the fourteen orations against Marcus Antonius, to which are appended the Treatise on Rhetorical Invention, etc. London, 1852.

BOOKS AND ARTICLES ABOUT THE DE INVENTIONE<sup>a</sup>

Karl Aulitzky, Apsines περί ἐλέου. Wiener Studien xxxix, 1, pp. 26–49. Discussion of the source of the passages on Pity (I, 98).

K. Barwick, Die Gliederung der Narratio in der rhetorischen Theorie und die Bedeutung für die Geschichte des antiken Romans. Hermes lxxiii (1928), pp. 261–287. Discussion of I, 27.

Emilio Costa, Cicerone giureconsulto, 2 vols. Bologna, 1927.

G. Herbolzheimer, Ciceros rhetorici libri und die Lehrschrift des Auctor. Philologus lxxxi (1925–26), pp. 391–426. Herbolzheimer thinks that both Cicero and the Auctor drew from a rhetorical treatise in Latin.

Werner Hofrichter, Studien zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der Deklamation. Diss. Breslau, 1935. A good discussion of the history of some of the illustrative cases used by Cicero.

Wilbur Samuel Howell, The Rhetoric of Alcuin and Charlemagne. Princeton, 1941. Has an interesting introduction on the use of the de Inventione as a source by later rhetoricians.

<sup>a</sup> This list is supplementary to the bibliography of Ströbel, but includes a few of the works there mentioned which may be useful to the reader.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Walter Jaeneke, De statuum doctrina ab Hermogene tradita. Diss. Leipzig, 1904. Corrects and extends the investigations of Thiele.
- Wilhelm Kroll, Das Epicheirema. Sitzungsberichte der Academie der Wissenschaften in Wien, Phil.-hist. Klasse, vol. 216. 2. Vienna and Leipzig, 1937.
- Wilhelm Kroll, Rhetorik, in Pauly-Wissowa-Kroll R. E., Supplementband 7.
- L. Laurand, De M. T. Ciceronis studiis rhetoricis. Paris, 1907.
- Claus Peters, De rationibus inter artem rhetoricam quarti et primi saeculi intercedentibus. Diss. Kiel, 1907.
- Torsten Petersson, Cicero: a Biography. Berkeley, University of California, 1920. Contains a good chapter on rhetoric.
- Friedrich Pfister, Isokrates und die spätere Gliederung der Narratio. Hermes lxxviii (1933), pp. 457-460.
- Rudolph Preiswerk, De inventione orationum Ciceronianarum. Diss. Basel, 1905.
- Maximilian Schamberger, De declamationum Romanarum argumentis observationes selectae. Diss. Halle, 1917. On declamations based on de Inv. II, 87, and II, 144.
- Hans Kurt Schulte, Orator. Untersuchungen über das ciceronianische Bildungsideal. Frankfurt, 1935. On Poseidonius as the source of de Inv. I, 1-5. Cf. R. Philippson, Ciceroniana in Jahrbücher für classische Philologie cxxxiii (1886), pp. 417-425. Berliner philologische Wochenschrift xxxviii (1918), pp. 630 ff.
- Friedrich Solmsen, Aristotle and Cicero on the orator's

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- playing on the feelings. Classical Philology xxxiii (1938), pp. 390-404.
- Friedrich Solmsen, The Aristotelian tradition in ancient rhetoric. American Journal of Philology lxii (1941), pp. 35-50, 169-190. Shows that Aristotle's principles had more currency in the practical treatises on rhetoric than is generally believed.
- Friedrich Solmsen, Drei Rekonstruktionen. III, Hermes lxxvii (1932), pp. 151-154.
- Johannes Stroux, Aus der Status-Lehre (zu Quintilian III, xi, 15-17). Philologus lxxxv (1929-30), 342-346.
- Georg Thiele, Hermagoras: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Rhetorik. Strassburg, 1893. This is the classic work on the doctrine of status or constitutio (determination of the "issue"). It has been corrected and extended by later scholars, but is still the best source.
- Philip Thielmann, De sermonis proprietatibus quae leguntur apud Cornificium et in primis Ciceronis libris. Strassburg, 1879. The most important work on the language of the de Inventione.
- Hermann Throm, Die Thesis, Ein Beitrag zu ihrer Entstehung und Geschichte (Rhetorische Studien, 17. Heft). Paderborn, 1932. Beginning with the history of θέσις (quaestio) and ὑπόθεσις (causa) discusses many aspects of the Hermagorean tradition to be found in Cicero.
- Richard Weidner, Ciceros Verhältnis zur griechisch-römischen Schulrhetorik seiner Zeit. Diss. Erlangen, 1925.

TWO BOOKS ON RHETORIC
DE INVENTIONE

BOOK I

M. TULLI CICERONIS
RHETORICI LIBRI DUO
QUI VOCANTUR DE INVENTIONE

LIBER PRIMUS

1 I. SÆPE et multum hoc mecum cogitavi, bonine an mali plus attulerit hominibus et civitatibus copia dicendi ac summum eloquentiæ studium. Nam cum et nostræ rei publicæ detrimenta considero et maximarum civitatum veteres animo calamitates colligo, non minimam video per disertissimos homines in vectam partem incommodorum; cum autem res ab nostra memoria propter vetustatem remotas ex litterarum monumentis repetere instituo, multas urbes constitutas, plurima bella restincta, firmissimas societates, sanctissimas amicitias intellego cum animi ratione tum facilius eloquentia comparatas. Ac me quidem diu cogitantem ratio ipsa in hanc potissimum sententiam ducit, ut existimem sapientiam sine eloquentia parum prodesse civitatibus, eloquentiam vero sine sapientia nimium obesse plerumque, prodesse nunquam.) Quare si quis omissis rectissimis atque

MARCUS TULLIUS CICERO
TWO BOOKS ON RHETORIC
COMMONLY CALLED ON INVENTION

BOOK I

1 I. I HAVE often seriously debated with myself whether men and communities have received more good or evil from oratory and a consuming devotion to eloquence. For when I ponder the troubles in our commonwealth, and run over in my mind the ancient misfortunes of mighty cities, I see that no little part of the disasters was brought about by men of eloquence. When, on the other hand, I begin to search in the records of literature for events which occurred before the period which our generation can remember, I find that many cities have been founded, that the flames of a multitude of wars have been extinguished, and that the strongest alliances and most sacred friendships have been formed not only by the use of the reason but also more easily by the help of eloquence. For my own part, after long thought, I have been led by reason itself to hold this opinion first and foremost, that wisdom without eloquence does too little for the good of states, but that eloquence without wisdom is generally highly disadvantageous and is never helpful. Therefore if anyone neglects the study of philosophy and honestissimis studiis rationis et officii consumit omnem operam in exercitatione dicendi, is inutilis sibi, perniciosus patriae civis alitur; qui vero ita sese armat eloquentia, ut non oppugnare commoda patriae, sed pro his propugnare possit, is mihi vir et suis et publicis rationibus utilissimus atque amicissimus civis fore videtur.

CICERO

2 Ac si volumus huius rei quae vocatur eloquentia, sive artis sive studi sive exercitationis cuiusdam sive facultatis ab natura profectae considerare principium, reperiemus id ex honestissimis causis natum atque optimis rationibus profectum. II. Nam fuit quoddam tempus cum in agris homines passim bestiarum modo vagabantur et sibi victu fero vitam propagabant, nec ratione animi quicquam, sed pleraque viribus corporis administrabant; nondum divinae religionis, non humani officii ratio colebatur, nemo nuptias viderat legitimas, non certos quisquam aspererat liberos, non, ius aequabile quid utilitatis haberet, acceperat. Ita propter errorem atque inscientiam caeca ac temeraria dominatrix animi cupiditas ad se explendam viribus corporis abutebatur, perniciosissimis satellitibus.

Quo tempore quidam magnus videlicet vir et sapiens cognovit quae materia esset et quanta ad

---

* The exact nature of rhetoric was the subject of long and acrimonious debate in antiquity, and this debate was reflected in the definitions with which the handbooks usually began and of which we have an extended discussion in the second book of Philodemus, de Rhetorica. Hailed as an art or even as a science by its advocates, it was dismissed as a mere "knack" or "skill" by its opponents, or as a natural gift which needed little or no guidance. Studium, here translated "study," is unusual in definitions of rhetoric; so unusual that the text

DE INVENTIONE, I. I.-II. 2

moral conduct, which is the highest and most honourable of pursuits, and devotes his whole energy to the practice of oratory, his civic life is nurtured into something useless to himself and harmful to his country; but the man who equips himself with the weapons of eloquence, not to be able to attack the welfare of his country but to defend it, he, I think, will be a citizen most helpful and most devoted both to his own interests and those of his community.

2 Moreover, if we wish to consider the origin of this thing we call eloquence—whether it be an art, a study, a skill, or a gift of nature <sup>a</sup>—we shall find that it arose from most honourable causes and continued on its way from the best of reasons. II. For there was a time when men wandered at large in the fields like animals and lived on wild fare; they did nothing by the guidance of reason, but relied chiefly on physical strength; there was as yet no ordered system of religious worship nor of social duties; no one had seen legitimate marriage nor had anyone looked upon children whom he knew to be his own; nor had they learned the advantages of an equitable code of law. And so through their ignorance and error blind and unreasoning passion satisfied itself by misuse of bodily strength, which is a very dangerous servant.

At this juncture a man—great and wise I am sure—became aware of the power latent in man and the wide has been questioned. It is apparently Cicero's translation of the Greek ἄσκησις, meaning pursuit or study, which is used particularly of devotion to and practice of the tenets of a philosophical sect. It is essentially equivalent to ars (cf. de Oratore II, 232: natura, studio, exercitatione). Cicero may have had in mind such a definition as that given in Rhet. Graec. VII, 49, ῥητορικὴ ἐστὶν ἄσκησις λόγου ἐν ἰσοσθένεσι τὸν ῥήτορα γυμνάζουσα λόγοις.

CICERO

maximas res opportunitas in animis inesset hominum, si quis eam posset elicere et praecipiendo meliorem reddere; qui dispersos homines in agros et in tectis silvestribus abditos ratione quadam compulit unum in locum et congregavit et eos in unam quamque rem inducens utilem atque honestam primo propter insolentiam reclamantes, deinde propter rationem atque orationem studiosius audientes ex feris et immanibus mites reddidit et mansuetos.

3 Ac mihi quidem videtur hoc nec tacita nec inops dicendi sapientia perficere potuisse ut homines a consuetudine subito converteret et ad diversas rationes vitae traduceret. Age vero, urbibus constitutis, ut fidem colere et iustitiam retinere discerent et aliis parere sua voluntate consuescerent ac non modo labores excipiendos communis commodi causa, sed etiam vitam amittendam existimarent, qui tandem fieri potuit, nisi homines ea quae ratione invenissent eloquentia persuadere potuissent? Profecto nemo nisi gravi ac suavi commotus oratione, cum viribus plurimum posset, ad ius voluisset sine vi descendere, ut inter quos posset excellere, cum eis se pateretur aequari et sua voluntate a iucundissima consuetudine recederet quae praesertim iam naturae vim obtineret propter vetustatem.

Ac primo quidem sic et nata et progressa longius eloquentia videtur et item postea maximis in rebus pacis et belli cum summis hominum utilitatibus esse

---

* For parallels to the thought of this section, see the discussion by F. Solmsen in Hermes lxxvii (1932), pp. 151-154.

DE INVENTIONE, I. II. 2-3

field offered by his mind for great achievements if one could develop this power and improve it by instruction. Men were scattered in the fields and hidden in sylvan retreats when he assembled and gathered them in accordance with a plan; he introduced them to every useful and honourable occupation, though they cried out against it at first because of its novelty, and then when through reason and eloquence they had listened with greater attention, he transformed them from wild savages into a kind and gentle folk.<sup>a</sup>

3 To me, at least, it does not seem possible that a mute and voiceless wisdom could have turned men suddenly from their habits and introduced them to different patterns of life. Consider another point; after cities had been established how could it have been brought to pass that men should learn to keep faith and observe justice and become accustomed to obey others voluntarily and believe not only that they must work for the common good but even sacrifice life itself, unless men had been able by eloquence to persuade their fellows of the truth of what they had discovered by reason? Certainly only a speech at the same time powerful and entrancing could have induced one who had great physical strength to submit to justice without violence, so that he suffered himself to be put on a par with those among whom he could excel, and abandoned voluntarily a most agreeable custom, especially since this custom had already acquired through lapse of time the force of a natural right.

This was the way in which at first eloquence came into being and advanced to greater development, and likewise afterward in the greatest undertakings of peace and war it served the highest interests of versata ; postquam vero commoditas quaedam, prava virtutis imitatrix, sine ratione officii, dicendi copiam consecuta est, tum ingenio freta malitia pervertere urbes et vitas hominum labefactare assuevit.

CICERO

4 III. Atque huius quoque exordium mali, quoniam principium boni diximus, explicemus. Veri simillimum mihi videtur quodam tempore neque in publicis rebus infantes et insipientes homines solitos esse versari nec vero ad privatas causas magnos ac disertos homines accedere, sed cum a summis viris maximae res administrarentur, arbitror alios fuisse non incallidos homines qui ad parvas controversias privatorum accederent. Quibus in controversiis cum saepe a mendacio contra verum stare homines consuescerent, dicendi assiduitas induit audaciam, ut necessario superiores illi propter iniurias civium resistere audacibus et opitulari suis quisque necessariis cogeretur. Itaque cum in dicendo saepe par, nonnunquam etiam superior, visus esset is qui omisso studio sapientiae nihil sibi praeter eloquentiam comparasset, fiebat ut et multitudinis et suo iudicio dignus qui rem publicam gereret videretur. Hinc nimirum non iniuria, cum ad gubernacula rei publicae temerarii atque audaces homines accesserant, maxima ac miserrima naufragia fiebant. Quibus rebus tantum odi atque invidiae suscepit eloquentia ut homines ingenio-mankind. But when a certain agreeableness of manner—a depraved imitation of virtue—acquired the power of eloquence unaccompanied by any consideration of moral duty, then low cunning supported by talent grew accustomed to corrupt cities and undermine the lives of men.

4 III. Let me now set forth the origin of this evil also, since I have explained the beginning of the good done by eloquence. It seems to me very probable that there was a time when those who lacked eloquence and wisdom were not accustomed to meddle with public affairs, and when on the other hand great and eloquent men did not concern themselves with private suits at law, but while matters of the greatest importance were managed by men of the highest distinction, there were, I think, other men not without shrewdness who concerned themselves with the petty disputes of private citizens. Since in these disputes men grew accustomed to stand on the side of falsehood against the truth, constant practice in speaking led them to assume a bold front; the inevitable result was that the better class was compelled because of injuries to their fellow citizens to resist the audacious and help their own kin and friends. And so, because one who had acquired eloquence alone to the neglect of the study of philosophy often appeared equal in power of speech and sometimes even superior, such a one seemed in his own opinion and that of the mob to be fit to govern the state. Therefore it was not undeserved, I am sure, that whenever rash and audacious men had taken the helm of the ship of state great and disastrous wrecks occurred. These events brought eloquence into such odium and unpopularity that men of the sissimi, quasi ex aliqua turbida tempestate in portum, sic ex seditiosa ac tumultuosa vita se in studium aliquod traderent quietum. Quare mihi videntur postea cetera studia recta atque honesta per otium concelebrata ab optimis enituisse, hoc vero a plerisque eorum desertum obsolevisse tempore quo multo vehementius erat retinendum et studiosius ad-5 augendum. Nam quo indignius rem honestissimam et rectissimam violabat stultorum et improborum temeritas et audacia summo cum rei publicae detrimento, eo studiosius et illis resistendum fuit et rei publicae consulendum.

CICERO

IV. Quod nostrum illum non fugit Catonem neque Laelium neque Africanum neque eorum, ut vere dicam, discipulos Gracchos Africani nepotes: <sup>1</sup> quibus in hominibus erat summa virtus et summa virtute amplificata auctoritas et, quae et his rebus ornameto et rei publicae praesidio esset, eloquentia. Quare meo quidem animo nihilo minus eloquentiae studendum est, etsi ea quidam et privatim et publice abutuntur; sed eo quidem vehementius, ne mali

<sup>1</sup> neque eorum ut vere dicam discipulum Africanum neque Gracchos Africani nepotes J: Africanum. Neque M: neque . . . nepotes omitted by Victorinus, questioned by Friedrich. Ammon proposes to bracket Gracchos, Ströbel to bracket Africani nepotes. The reading in the text is the conjecture of Martha.

---

* Marcus Porcius Cato the Censor, consul 195 B.C.

† Gaius Laelius (Sapiens) consul 140 B.C. He was the close friend of Scipio (note c).

‡ Publius Cornelius Scipio Aemilianus Africanus, consul 147 and 134 B.C., destroyed Carthage. He and Laelius were the chief members of the "Scipionic circle."

§ Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus, tribune 133 B.C., and Gaius Sempronius Gracchus, tribune 123 B.C., popular leaders greatest talent left a life of strife and tumult for some quiet pursuit, as sailors seek refuge in port from a raging storm. For this reason, I think, at a later period the other worthy and honourable studies were prosecuted vigorously in quiet seclusion by the men of highest virtue and were brought to a brilliant development, while this study of eloquence was abandoned by most of them and fell into disuse at a time when it needed to be maintained more earnestly 5 and extended with greater effort. For the more shamefully an honourable and worthy profession was abused by the folly and audacity of dull-witted and unprincipled men with the direst consequences to the state, the more earnestly should the better citizens have put up a resistance to them and taken thought for the welfare of the republic.

IV. This was well known to our Cato,<sup>a</sup> to Laelius,<sup>b</sup> and Africanus<sup>c</sup> and to their pupils—as I may rightfully call them—the Gracchi,<sup>d</sup> the grandsons of Africanus. These men possessed the highest virtue and an authority strengthened by their virtue, and also eloquence to adorn these qualities and protect the state. Therefore, in my opinion at least, men ought none the less to devote themselves to the study of eloquence although some misuse it both in private and in public affairs. And they should study it the more earnestly in and reformers. They were the sons of Cornelia the daughter of Scipio Africanus the Elder, who defeated Hannibal at Zama in 202 B.C. Cicero generally expresses an unfavourable opinion of the Gracchi as subverters of the state. The phrase ut vere dicam is intended as an apology for including them with such patriots as Cato and Africanus, just as he excuses a similar favourable reference to the reformers in the speech on the Agrarian Law (II, 5, 10).

CICERO

magno cum detrimento bonorum et communi omnium perniciæ plurimum possint; cum praesertim hoc sit unum, quod ad omnes res et privatas et publicas maxime pertineat, hoc tuta, hoc honesta, hoc illustris, hoc eodem vita iucunda fiat. Nam hinc ad rem publicam plurima commoda veniunt, si moderatrix omnium rerum praesto est sapientia; hinc ad ipsos qui eam adepti sunt laus, honos, dignitas confluit; hinc amicis quoque eorum certissimum et tutissimum praesidium comparatur. Ac mihi quidem videntur homines, cum multis rebus humiliores et infirmiores sint, hac re maxime bestiis praestare, quod loqui possunt. Quare praeclarum mihi quiddam videtur adeptus is qui qua re homines bestiis praestent ea in re hominibus ipsis antecellat. Hoc si forte non natura modo neque exercitatione conficitur, verum etiam artificio quodam comparatur, non alienum est videre, quae dicant ei qui quaedam eius rei praecepta nobis reliquerunt.

Sed antequam de praeceptis oratoriis dicimus, videtur dicendum de genere ipsius artis, de officio, de fine, de materia, de partibus. Nam his rebus cognitis facilius et expeditius animus unius cuiusque ipsam rationem ac viam artis considerare poterit.

6 V. Civilis quaedam ratio est, quae multis et magnis ex rebus constat. Eius quaedam magna et ampla

---

* The passage in sections 2-5 in praise of eloquence and its function in promoting civilization is a commonplace at least as old as Isocrates. It may be compared to Cicero, de Oratore I, 32 f.; de Natura Deorum II, 148, Tusc. Disp. V, 5, where a similar rôle is attributed to philosophy; Isocrates Nicocles 5 (= Antidosis 253). Cf. also Hubbell, The Influence of Isocrates on Cicero, Dionysius and Aristides, pp. 27-30, and Reinhardt,

DE INVENTIONE, I. iv. 5-v. 6

order that evil men may not obtain great power to the detriment of good citizens and the common disaster of the community; especially since this is the only thing which has a very close relation to both private and public affairs, this renders life safe, honourable, glorious and even agreeable. For from eloquence the state receives many benefits, provided only it is accompanied by wisdom, the guide of all human affairs. From eloquence those who have acquired it obtain glory and honour and high esteem. From eloquence comes the surest and safest protection for one's friends. Furthermore, I think that men, although lower and weaker than animals in many respects, excel them most by having the power of speech. Therefore that man appears to me to have won a splendid possession who excels men themselves in that ability by which men excel beasts. And if, as it happens, this is not brought about by nature alone nor by practice, but is also acquired from some systematic instruction, it is not out of place to see what those say who have left us some directions for the study of oratory.<sup>6</sup>

But before I speak of the rules of oratory I think I should say something about the nature of the art itself, about its function, its end, its materials, and its divisions. For if these are understood the mind of each reader will be able more easily and readily to grasp the outline and method of the subject.

6 V. There is a scientific system of politics which includes many important departments. One of these departments—a large and important one—is elo-

Hekataios von Abdera und Demokrit, Hermes xlvii (1912), pp. 492-513.

CICERO

pars est artificiosa eloquentia quam rhetoricam vocant. Nam neque cum eis sentimus qui civilem scientiam eloquentia non putant indigere, et ab eis qui eam putant omnem rhetoris vi et artificio contineri magnopere dissentimus. Quare hanc oratoriam facultatem in eo genere ponemus, ut eam civilis scientiae partem esse dicamus. Officium autem eius facultatis videtur esse dicere apposite ad persuasionem; finis persuadere dictione. Inter officium et finem hoc interest quod in officio quid fieri, in fine quid effici conveniat consideratur. Ut medici officium dicimus esse curare ad sanandum apposite, finem sanare curatione, item, oratoris quid officium et quid finem esse dicamus, intellegimus, cum id quod facere debet officium esse dicimus, illud cuius causa facere debet finem appellamus.

- 7 Materiam artis eam dicimus in qua omnis ars et ea facultas quae conficitur ex arte versatur. Ut si medicinae materiam dicamus morbos ac vulnera, quod in his omnis medicina versetur, item, quibus in rebus versatur ars et facultas oratoria, eas res materiam artis rhetoricae nominamus. Has autem res alii plures, alii pauciores existimarunt. Nam Gorgias Leontinus, antiquissimus fere rhetor, omnibus de rebus oratorem optime posse dicere existimavit. Hic infinitam et immensam huic artificio materiam subicere videtur. Aristoteles autem, qui huic arti plurima adiumenta atque ornamenta subministravit,

---

<sup>a</sup> Famous sophist of the fifth century B.C.

<sup>b</sup> Aristotle, Rhetoric 1358b 7.

DE INVENTIONE, I. v. 6-7

quence based on the rules of art, which they call rhetoric. For I do not agree with those who think that political science has no need of eloquence, and I violently disagree with those who think that it is wholly comprehended in the power and skill of the rhetorician. Therefore we will classify oratorical ability as a part of political science. The function of eloquence seems to be to speak in a manner suited to persuade an audience, the end is to persuade by speech. There is this difference between function and end: in the case of the function we consider what should be done, in the case of the end what result should be produced. For example, we say that the function of the physician is to treat the patient in a manner suited to heal him, the end is to heal by treatment. So in the case of the orator we may understand what is meant by function and end when we call what he ought to do the function, and the purpose for which he ought to do it, the end.

7 By the material of the art I mean that with which the art as a whole and the power produced by the art are concerned. For example, we say the material of medicine is diseases and wounds because medicine is wholly concerned with these; in the same way we call the material of the art of rhetoric those subjects with which the art and power of oratory are concerned. However, some have thought that there are more and some less of these subjects. To cite one example, Gorgias of Leontini,<sup>a</sup> almost the earliest teacher of oratory, held that the orator could speak better than anyone else on all subjects. Apparently he assigned to the profession a vast—and in fact infinite—material. Aristotle,<sup>b</sup> on the other hand, who did much to improve and adorn this art, thought that the tribus in generibus rerum versari rhetoris officium putavit, demonstrativo, deliberativo, iudiciali. Demonstrativum est quod tribuitur in alicuius certae personae laudem aut vituperationem; deliberativum, quod positum in disceptatione civili habet in se sententiae dictionem; iudiciale, quod positum in iudicio habet in se accusationem et defensionem aut petitionem et recusationem. Et, quemadmodum nostra quidem fert opinio, oratoris ars et facultas in hac materia tripertita versari existimanda est.

CICERO

8 VI. Nam Hermagoras quidem nec quid dicat attendere nec quid polliceatur intellegere videtur, qui oratoris materiam in causam et in quaestionem dividat, causam esse dicat rem quae habeat in se controversiam in dicendo positam cum personarum certarum interpositione; quam nos quoque oratori dicimus esse attributam (nam tres eas partes, quas ante diximus, supponimus, iudicialem, deliberativam, demonstrativam).

Quaestionem autem eam appellat quae habeat in se controversiam in dicendo positam sine certarum personarum interpositione, ad hunc modum: "Ecquid sit bonum praeter honestatem?" "Verine sint sensus?" "Quae sit mundi forma?" "Quae sit solis magnitudo?" Quas quaestiones procul ab oratoris officio remotas facile omnes intellegere existimamus. Nam quibus in rebus summa ingenia philosophorum plurimo cum labore consumpta intelle-function of the orator was concerned with three classes of subjects, the epideictic, the deliberative, and the judicial. The epideictic is devoted to the praise or censure of a particular individual; the deliberative is at home in a political debate and involves the expression of an opinion; the judicial is at home in a court of law and involves accusation and defence or a claim and counter-plea. According to my opinion, at least, the art and faculty of the orator must be thought of as concerned with this threefold material.

DE INVENTIONE, I. v. 7-vi. 8

8 VI. For Hermagoras<sup>a</sup> indeed does not seem to notice what he says or understand what he promises when he divides the material of the orator into "special cases" and "general questions," and defines "special cases" as a matter involving a controversy conducted by a speech with the introduction of definite individuals (this we too say is assigned to the orator, for we give him the three parts which we have already mentioned: judicial, deliberative, epideictic).

"General question" he defines as a matter involving a controversy conducted by a speech without the introduction of definite individuals, as for example, "Is there any good except honour?" "Can the senses be trusted?" "What is the shape of the world?" "How large is the sun?" I think that everyone understands perfectly that these questions are far removed from the business of an orator. It seems the height of folly to assign to an orator as if they were trifles these subjects in which

<sup>a</sup> Hermagoras of Temnos, rhetorician of the second century B.C.

CICERO

gimus, eas sicut aliquas parvas res oratori attribuere magna amentia videtur.

Quodsi magnam in his Hermagoras habuisset facultatem studio et disciplina comparatam, videretur fretus sua scientia falsum quiddam constituisse de oratoris artificio et non quid ars, sed quid ipse posset, exposuisse. Nunc vero ea vis est in homine, ut ei multo rhetoricam citius quis ademerit quam philosophiam concesserit: neque eo, quod eius ars quam edidit, mihi mendosissime scripta videatur; nam satis in ea videtur ex antiquis artibus ingeniose et diligenter electas res collocasse et nonnihil ipse quoque novi protulisse; verum oratori minimum est de arte loqui, quod hic fecit, multo maximum ex arte dicere, quod eum minime potuisse omnes videmus.

- 9 VII. Quare materia quidem nobis rhetoricae videtur artis ea quam Aristoteli visam esse diximus; partes autem eae quas plerique dixerunt, inventio, dispositio, elocutio, memoria, pronuntiatio. Inventio est excogitatio rerum verarum aut veri similium quae causam probabilem reddant; dispositio est rerum inventarum in ordinem distributio; elocutio est

---

* It is likely that Cicero or his source misunderstood Hermagoras' meaning. As the textbook of Hermagoras has perished, we have no sure means of determining his position, but other authorities (Sextus Empiricus, adversus Math. II, 62, Augustine, de Rhetorica. RLM fr. 139. 29, and Hermogenes, RG II, p. 17 S) imply that he claimed for rhetoric the right to discuss moral and philosophical questions of general interest, but excluded technical questions requiring specialized knowledge of a scientific field. Even so Hermagoras was undoubtedly trying to extend the field of rhetoric and was trespassing on territory claimed by philosophers. The first and third questions here propounded were Stoic problems, we know that the sublime genius of philosophers has spent so much labour.<sup>a</sup>

But if Hermagoras had possessed great skill in dealing with these subjects—a skill acquired by study and training—he would seem to have laid down a false principle about the profession of the orator through confidence in his own knowledge, and to have described not what the art, but what he himself could accomplish. But as a matter of fact the man's ability is such that one will more readily deny him the power of rhetoric than grant him acquaintance with philosophy. Not that I think the text-book which he published is very faulty, for he seems to have done well enough at arranging topics which he had chosen with ingenuity and care from earlier authors, and to have added something new himself;<sup>b</sup> but for an orator it is a very slight thing to talk about his art, as he has done; by far the most important thing is to speak in accordance with the principles of his art, which we all see he was wholly incapable of doing.

- 9 VII. Therefore the material of the art of rhetoric seems to me to be that which we said Aristotle approved. The parts of it, as most authorities have stated, are Invention, Arrangement, Expression, Memory, Delivery. Invention is the discovery of valid or seemingly valid arguments to render one's cause plausible. Arrangement is the distribution of arguments thus discovered in the proper order.

the others were favourite problems of the Epicureans. Quaestio translated "general question" is Hermagoras' θείσις; causa or "special case" is ὑπόθεσις.

<sup>b</sup> Ungenerous of Cicero, for Hermagoras was the inventor of the doctrine of "status" which forms the backbone of the de Inventione.

CICERO

idoneorum verborum<sup>1</sup> ad inventionem accommodatio; memoria est firma animi rerum ac verborum<sup>2</sup> perceptio; pronuntiatio est ex rerum et verborum dignitate vocis et corporis moderatio.

Nunc his rebus breviter constitutis eas rationes quibus ostendere possimus genus et finem et officium huius artis aliud in tempus differemus. Nam et multorum verborum indigent et non tanto opere ad artis descriptionem et praecepta tradenda pertinent. Eum autem qui artem rhetoricam scribat de duabus reliquis rebus, materia artis ac partibus, scribere oportere existimamus. Ac mihi quidem videtur conjuncte agendum de materia ac partibus. Quare inventio, quae princeps est omnium partium, potissimum in omni causarum genere, qualis debeat esse, consideretur.

- 10 VIII. Omnis res quae habet in se positam in dictione ac disceptatione aliquam controversiam, aut facti aut nominis aut generis aut actionis continet quaestionem. Eam igitur quaestionem ex qua causa nascitur constitutionem appellamus. Constitutio est prima conflictio causarum ex depulsione intentionis profecta, hoc modo: "Fecisti." "Non feci," aut: "Iure feci." Cum facti controversia est, quoniam coniecturis causa firmatur, constitutio coniecturalis appellatur. Cum autem nominis, quia vis vocabuli

<sup>1</sup> After verborum the MSS. except M<sup>1</sup> insert et sententiarum.

<sup>2</sup> ad inventionem, after verborum is omitted by Cassiodorus, bracketed by Lambinus. Ströbel keeps the phrase, understanding retinendam.

---

* Constitutio is a translation of the Greek στάσις, and was supplanted in Cicero's later writings by status. It denotes the basis or ground for dispute.

Expression is the fitting of the proper language to the invented matter. Memory is the firm mental grasp of matter and words. Delivery is the control of voice and body in a manner suitable to the dignity of the subject matter and the style.

Now that these terms have been defined briefly we shall postpone to another time the discussion in which we could explain the nature, the end and the function of this art; for they require lengthy treatment and are not so intimately connected with the description of the art and the transmission of rules. But we think that one who is to write a text-book of rhetoric ought to write about the other two subjects, the material of the art and its divisions. And I think I should treat material and divisions together. Therefore let us consider what the character of invention should be; this is the most important of all the divisions, and above all is used in every kind of pleading.

- 10 VIII. Every subject which contains in itself a controversy to be resolved by speech and debate involves a question about a fact, or about a definition, or about the nature of an act, or about legal processes. This question, then, from which the whole case arises, is called constitutio or the "issue."<sup>a</sup> The "issue" is the first conflict of pleas which arises from the defence or answer to our accusation, in this way: "You did it"; "I did not do it," or "I was justified in doing it." When the dispute is about a fact, the issue is said to be conjectural (coniecturalis),<sup>b</sup> because the plea is supported by conjectures or inferences. When the issue is about a definition, it

<sup>b</sup> In the terms of our law, the constitutio coniecturalis is an issue of fact, the others are issues of law.

CICERO

definienda verbis est, constitutio definitiva nominatur. Cum vero qualis res sit quaeritur, quia et de vi et de genere negoti controversia est, constitutio generalis vocatur. At cum causa ex eo pendet, quia non aut is agere videtur quem oportet, aut non cum eo quicum oportet, aut non apud quos, quo tempore, qua lege, quo crimine, qua poena oportet, translativa dicitur constitutio, quia actio translationis et commutationis indigere videtur. Atque harum aliquam in omne causae genus incidere necesse est. Nam in quam rem non inciderit, in ea nihil esse poterit controversiae; quare eam ne causam quidem convenit putari.

11 Ac facti quidem controversia in omnia tempora potest tribui. Nam quid factum sit potest quaeri, hoc modo: Occideritne Aiace[m] Ulixes; et quid fiat, hoc modo: Bonone animo sint erga populum Romanum Fregellani; et quid futurum sit, hoc modo: Si Karthaginem reliquerimus incolumem, num quid sit incommodi ad rem publicam perventurum.

Nominis est controversia, cum de facto convenit et quaeritur, id quod factum est quo nomine appelletur. Quo in genere necesse est ideo nominis esse controversiam, quod de re ipsa non conveniat; non quod de facto non constet, sed quod id quod factum sit aliud alii videatur esse et idcirco alius alio nomine id

---

* This fictitious case is stated more fully in ad Herennium I, 18: When Ajax learned what he had done in his fit of madness, he went into the forest and fell on his sword. Ulysses chanced to pass by, saw that Ajax was dead and drew the blood-stained sword from the corpse. Teucer came by, saw his brother dead and his brother's enemy holding the blood-stained sword. He charges Ulysses with murder. Quintilian (IV, ii, 13), who gives the story in greater detail, says that it was taken from the tragic stage (ex tragoediis), but is called the definitional issue, because the force of the term must be defined in words. When, however, the nature of the act is examined, the issue is said to be qualitative, because the controversy concerns the value of the act and its class or quality. But when the case depends on the circumstance that it appears that the right person does not bring the suit, or that he brings it against the wrong person, or before the wrong tribunal, or at a wrong time, under the wrong statute, or the wrong charge, or with a wrong penalty, the issue is called translative because the action seems to require a transfer to another court or alteration in the form of pleading. There will always be one of these issues applicable to every kind of case; for where none applies, there can be no controversy. Therefore it is not fitting to regard it as a case at all.

- 11 As to the dispute about a fact, this can be assigned to any time. For the question can be "What has been done?" e.g. "Did Ulysses kill Ajax?"<sup>a</sup> and "What is being done?," e.g. "Are the Fregellans friendly to the Roman people?," and what is going to occur, e.g. "If we leave Carthage untouched, will any harm come to the Roman state?"

The controversy about a definition arises when there is agreement as to the fact and the question is by what word that which has been done is to be described. In this case there must be a dispute about the definition, because there is no agreement about the essential point, not because the fact is not certain, but because the deed appears differently to different people, and for that reason different people the source has not been identified, and it is more likely that the story is the invention of a rhetorician.

CICERO

appellet. Quare in eiusmodi generibus definienda res erit verbis et breviter describenda, ut, si quis sacrum ex privato surripuerit, utrum fur an sacrilegus sit iudicandus. Nam id cum quaeritur, necesse erit definire utrumque, quid sit fur, quid sacrilegus, et sua descriptione ostendere alio nomine illam rem de qua agitur appellari oportere atque adversarii dicunt.

12 IX. Generis est controversia, cum et quid factum sit convenit, et quo id factum nomine appellari oporteat constat et tamen quantum et cuiusmodi et omnino quale sit quaeritur, hoc modo: Iustum an iniustum, utile an inutile, et omnia in quibus, quale sit id quod factum est, quaeritur sine ulla nominis controversia. Huic generi Hermagoras partes quatuor supposuit, deliberativam, demonstrativam, iuridicalem, negotialem. Quod eius, ut nos putamus, non mediocre peccatum reprehendendum videtur, verum brevi, ne aut si taciti praeterierimus, sine causa non secuti putemur, aut si diutius in hoc constiterimus, moram atque impedimentum reliquis praeceptis intulisse videamur.

Si deliberatio et demonstratio genera sunt causarum, non possunt recte partes alicuius generis causae putari. Eadem enim res alii genus esse, alii pars potest, eidem genus esse et pars non potest. Deliberatio autem et demonstratio genera sunt describe it in different terms. Therefore in cases of this kind the matter must be defined in words and briefly described. For example, if a sacred article is purloined from a private house, is the act to be adjudged theft or sacrilege? For when this question is asked, it will be necessary to define both theft and sacrilege, and to show by one's own description that the act in dispute should be called by a different name from that used by the opponents.

---

* For the problem which Cicero here discusses see Excursus, p. 346.

12 IX. There is a controversy about the nature or character of an act when there is both agreement as to what has been done and certainty as to how the act should be defined, but there is a question nevertheless about how important it is or of what kind, or in general about its quality, e.g. was it just or unjust, profitable or unprofitable? It includes all such cases in which there is a question about the quality of an act without any controversy about definition. Hermagoras divided this genus into four species: deliberative, epideictic, equitable, and legal. I think I ought to criticize this error of his—no inconsiderable error as I think—but briefly lest if we pass it by in silence we be thought to have failed to follow him without good reason, or if we linger on the point too long, we seem to have hindered and delayed the presentation of the rules to be laid down in the rest of the book.<sup>a</sup>

If deliberative and epideictic are genera of argument they cannot rightly be thought to be species of any one genus of argument. For the same thing can be genus in relation to one thing and species in relation to another, but cannot be both genus and species in relation to the same thing. Moreover the deliberative and epideictic are genera of arguments. For causarum. Nam aut nullum causae genus est aut iudiciale solum aut et iudiciale et demonstrativum et deliberativum. Nullum dicere causae esse genus, cum causas esse multas dicat et in eas praecepta det, amentia est; unum iudiciale autem solum esse qui potest, cum deliberatio et demonstratio neque ipsae similes inter se sint et ab iudicali genere plurimum dissideant et suum quaeque finem habeat quo referri debeat? Relinquitur ergo ut omnia tria genera sint causarum. Deliberatio et demonstratio non possunt recte partes alicuius generis causae putari. Male igitur eas generalis constitutionis partes esse dixit.

CICERO

- 13 X. Quodsi generis causae partes non possunt recte putari, multo minus recte partis causae partes putabuntur. Pars autem causae est constitutio omnis, non enim causa ad constitutionem, sed constitutio ad causam accommodatur. At demonstratio et deliberatio generis causae partes non possunt recte putari quod ipsa sunt genera; multo igitur minus recte partis eius quae hic dicitur partes putabuntur. Deinde si constitutio et ipsa et pars eius quaelibet intentionis depulsio est, quae intentionis depulsio non est, ea nec constitutio nec pars constitutionis est; at si, quae intentionis depulsio non est, ea nec constitutio nec pars constitutionis est, deliberatio et demonstratio neque constitutio nec pars constitutionis est. Si igitur constitutio et ipsa et pars eius intentionis either there is no classification of arguments or there are only forensic arguments, or there are three genera, forensic, epideictic, and deliberative. To say that there is no classification of arguments when he says that there are many and gives rules for them, is madness. How can there be only one genus—the forensic—when deliberative and epideictic are not similar to each other and are far different from the forensic kind and each has its own end to which it may be referred? It follows, therefore, that there are, in all, three genera of arguments. Deliberative and epideictic cannot rightly be regarded as species of any kind of argument. He was wrong, then, in saying that they are species of the qualitative issue.

13 X. Wherefore if they cannot rightly be regarded as species of a genus of argument, there will be much less justification for regarding them as sub-heads of a species of argument. But the "issue" is nothing but a sub-head of argument. For the argument is not subsumed under the issue but the issue is subsumed under the argument. But epideictic and deliberative cannot rightly be regarded as species of a genus of argument, because they are themselves the genera of argument; there will be much less justification for regarding them as sub-heads of this species which is here described. In the second place, if the issue, either entire or any part of it, is an answer to an accusation, then that which is not an answer to an accusation cannot be either an issue or a sub-head of an issue. But if what is not an answer to an accusation is neither an issue or a sub-head of an issue, deliberative and epideictic speeches are not an issue or a sub-head of an issue. If, then, the issue, either entire or any part of it, is the answer to an depulsio est, deliberatio et demonstratio neque constitutio neque pars constitutionis est. Placet autem ipsi constitutionem intentionis esse depulsionem; placeat igitur oportet demonstrationem et deliberationem non esse constitutionem nec partem constitutionis. Atque hoc eodem urguebitur, sive constitutionem primam causae accusatoris confirmationem dixerit sive defensoris primam deprecationem; nam eum eadem omnia incommoda sequentur.

CICERO

- 14 Deinde coniecturalis causa non potest simul ex eadem parte eodem in genere et coniecturalis esse et definitiva. Nec definitiva causa potest simul ex eadem parte eodem in genere et definitiva esse et translativa. Et omnino nulla constitutio nec pars constitutionis potest simul et suam habere et alterius in se vim continere, ideo quod una quaeque ex se et ex sua natura simpliciter consideratur; altera assumpta numerus constitutionum duplicatur, non vis constitutionis augetur. At deliberativa causa simul ex eadem parte eodem in genere et coniecturalem et generalem et definitivam et translativam solet habere constitutionem et unam aliquam et plures nonnunquam. Ergo ipsa neque constitutio est nec pars constitutionis. Idem in demonstratione solet usu venire. Genera igitur, ut ante diximus, haec causarum putanda sunt, non partes alicuius constitutionis.

accusation, deliberative and epideictic speeches cannot be either an issue or a sub-head of an issue. But he himself is of the opinion that the issue is the answer to an accusation. He ought, therefore, to be of the opinion that epideictic and deliberative speeches are not the issue or a sub-head of the issue. And he will be pressed by the same argument whether he defines issue as the first assertion of his cause by the accuser or the first plea of the defendant. For all the same difficulties will attend him.

14 Furthermore a conjectural argument cannot at one and the same time and from the same point of view and under the same system of classification be both conjectural and definitive, nor can a definitive argument be at one and the same time and from the same point of view and under the same system of classification both definitive and translative. And, to put it generally, no issue or sub-head of an issue can have its own scope and also include the scope of another issue, because each one is studied directly by itself and in its own nature, and if another is added, the number of issues is doubled but the scope of any one issue is not increased. But a deliberative argument generally includes at one and the same time and from the same point of view and under the same system of classification an issue, or constitutio, the conjectural, qualitative, definitional, or translative, either any one of these or at times more than one. Therefore it is not itself an issue or a sub-head of an issue. The same thing is wont to occur in the demonstrative (or epideictic) speech. These, then, as we said before, are to be regarded as the genera of oratory and not as sub-heads under any issue.

CICERO

XI. Haec ergo constitutio, quam generalem nominamus, partes videtur nobis duas habere, iuridicialem et negotialem. Iuridicialis est in qua aequi et recti natura aut praemi aut poenae ratio quaeritur; negotialis, in qua, quid iuris ex civili more et aequitate sit, consideratur; cui diligentiae praeesse apud nos
15 iure consulti existimantur. Ac iuridicialis quidem ipsa<sup>1</sup> in duas tribuitur partes, absolutam et assumptivam. Absoluta est quae ipsa in se continet iuris et iniuriae quaestionem; assumptiva, quae ipsa ex se nihil dat firmi ad recusationem, foris autem aliquid defensionis assumit. Eius partes sunt quatuor, concessio, remotio criminis, relatio criminis, comparatio. Concessio est cum reus non id quod factum est defendit, sed ut ignoscatur postulat. Haec in duas partes dividitur, purgationem et deprecationem. Purgatio est cum factum conceditur, culpa removetur. Haec partes habet tres, imprudentiam, casum, necessitatem. Deprecatio est cum et peccasse et consulto peccasse reus se confitetur et tamen ut ignoscatur postulat; quod genus perraro potest accidere. Remotio criminis est cum id crimen quod infertur ab se et ab sua culpa et potestate<sup>2</sup> in alium reus remove conatur. Id dupliciter fieri poterit, si aut causa aut factum in alium transferetur. Causa transfertur, cum aliena dicitur

<sup>1</sup> ipsa P<sup>2</sup>J Victorinus ipsa et M et ipsa i.

<sup>2</sup> culpa vi et potestate P<sup>2</sup>J. Victorinus, Cassiodorus, omit vi from the text: Kayser brackets vi et potestate.

---

<sup>a</sup> See Quintilian, III, vi, 57–60, for a discussion of Cicero's faulty interpretation of Hermagoras' doctrine at this point.

<sup>b</sup> Purgatio is very nearly "justification," but in Anglo-American law justification would include at least relatio criminis and probably comparatio.

XI. Therefore this issue, which we call the qualitative issue, seems to us to have two subdivisions, equitable and legal. The equitable is that in which there is a question about the nature of justice and right or the reasonableness of reward or punishment. The legal is that in which we examine what the law is according to the custom of the community and according to justice: at Rome the jurisconsults are thought to be in charge of the study of this subject.<sup>a</sup> The equitable is itself divided into two parts, the absolute and the assumptive. The absolute is that which contains in itself the question of right and wrong done. The assumptive is that which of itself provides no basis for a counter plea, but seeks some defence from extraneous circumstances. It has four divisions, concessio (confession and avoidance), remotio criminis (shifting the charge), relatio criminis (retort of the accusation), and comparatio (comparison). Confession and avoidance is used when the accused does not defend the deed but asks for pardon. This is divided into two parts: purgatio and deprecatio.<sup>b</sup> It is purgatio when the deed is acknowledged but intent is denied; it has three parts, ignorance, accident, necessity. Deprecatio is used when the defendant acknowledges that he has given offence and has done so intentionally, and still asks to be forgiven; this can very rarely occur. It is shifting of the charge when the defendant tries to shift to another the charge brought against himself by transferring to another either the act or the intent or the power to perform the act. This can be done in two ways: either the cause or the act itself is attributed to another. The cause is attributed when the deed is said to have been done because of the

vi et potestate factum; factum autem, cum alius aut debuisse aut potuisse facere dicitur. Relatio criminis est cum ideo iure factum dicitur, quod aliquis ante iniuria laccessierit. Comparatio est cum aliud aliquod factum rectum aut utile contenditur, quod ut fieret, illud quod arguitur dicitur esse commissum.

16 In quarta constitutione, quam translaticivam nominamus, eius constitutionis est controversia, cum aut quem aut quicum aut quomodo aut apud quos aut quo iure aut quo tempore agere oporteat quaeritur aut omnino aliquid de commutatione aut infirmatione actionis agitur. Huius constitutionis Hermagoras inventor esse existimatur, non quo non usi sint ea veteres oratores saepe multi, sed quia non animadverterunt artis scriptores eam superiores nec rettulerunt in numerum constitutionum. Post autem ab hoc inventam multi reprehenderunt, quos non tam imprudentia falli putamus (res enim perspicua est) quam invidia atque obtrectatione quadam impediri.

XII. Et constitutiones quidem et earum partes exposuimus; exempla autem cuiusque generis tum commodius exposituri videamur cum in unum quodque eorum argumentorum copiam dabimus. Nam argumentandi ratio dilucidior erit cum et ad genus et ad exemplum causae statim poterit accommodari.

---

<sup>a</sup> I.e. the case of an official accused of nonfeasance, where the defence is that the failure to perform the act was due to the negligence of another official.

<sup>b</sup> In Auct. ad Her. I, 25, this is stated as a case where the defendant claims that he chose the lesser of two evils.

power and authority of another; the deed is transferred when it is alleged that another should have done it or could have done it.<sup>a</sup> The retort of the charge is used when the defendant claims that the deed was done lawfully because some one had first illegally provoked him. Comparison is used when it is argued that some other action was lawful and advantageous, and then it is pleaded that the misdemeanour which is charged was committed in order to make possible this advantageous act.<sup>b</sup>

16 In the fourth issue which we call the translative there is a controversy when the question arises as to who ought to bring the action or against whom, or in what manner or before what court or under what law or at what time, and in general when there is some argument about changing or invalidating the form of procedure. Hermagoras is thought to be the inventor of this issue, not that orators did not use it before his day—many did use it frequently—but because earlier writers of text-books did not notice it nor include it with the issues. Since his invention of the term many have found fault with it, not misled by ignorance, I think, for the case is perfectly plain, so much as they have been kept from adopting it by a spirit of envy and a desire to disparage a rival.

XII. We have explained the issues and their divisions, but it would seem that we can give instances of each kind more conveniently when we give a store of arguments for each of them, for the principles of argumentation will be plainer if they can be applied immediately both to the general classification and to the particular instance.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>c</sup> This is done in Book II.

17 Constitutione causae reperta statim placet considerare utrum causa sit simplex an iuncta; et si iuncta erit, utrum sit ex pluribus quaestionibus iuncta an ex aliqua comparatione. Simplex est quae absolutam in se continet unam quaestionem, hoc modo: “Corinthiis bellum indicamus an non?” Coniuncta, ex pluribus quaestionibus in qua plura quaeruntur, hoc pacto: “Utrum Karthago diruatur an Karthaginensibus reddatur an eo colonia deducatur.” Ex comparatione, in qua per contentionem, utrum potius aut quid potissimum sit quaeritur, ad hunc modum: “Utrum exercitus in Macedoniam contra Philippum mittatur qui sociis sit auxilio, an teneatur in Italia ut quam maximae contra Hannibalem copiae sint.”

Deinde considerandum est, in ratione an in scripto sit controversia. Nam scripti controversia est ea quae ex descriptionis genere nascitur. XIII. Eius autem genera, quae separata sunt a constitutionibus, quinque sunt. Nam tum verba ipsa videntur cum sententia scriptoris dissidere, tum inter se duae leges aut plures discrepare, tum id quod scriptum est duas aut plures res significare; tum ex eo quod scriptum est aliud quod non scriptum est inveniri; tum vis verbi quasi in definitiva constitutione, in quo posita sit, quaeri. Quare primum genus de scripto et sententia, secundum ex contrariis legibus, tertium ambiguum, quartum ratiocinativum, quintum definiti-

---

* Or, reasoning, inference. For a definition v. II, 148.

17 When the issue in the case has been determined, it is well to consider whether the case is simple or complex, and if complex, whether it involves several questions or a comparison. A simple case is one which contains in itself one plain question, such as "Shall we declare war on Corinth or not?" A complex case is made up of several questions; in which several inquiries are made, such as: "Should Carthage be destroyed, or handed back to the Carthaginians, or should a colony be established there?" The case involves comparison when various actions are contrasted and the question is which one is more desirable or which is most desirable to perform, in this fashion: "Should an army be sent to Macedonia against Philip to support our allies, or should it be kept in Italy so that the greatest possible force may oppose Hannibal?"

In the second place one must consider whether the dispute turns on general reasoning or on written documents. For a dispute about a document is one which arises from the nature of a written document. XIII. Of this there are five kinds, which are separate from the "issues." In one case it seems that there is a variance between the actual words and the intent of the author; in another, that two or more laws disagree; again, that what is written has two or more meanings; again, that from what has been written something is discovered which has not been written; finally, that there is a question about the meaning of a word, i.e., on what the meaning depends, as if it were in the definitional issue. Therefore the first class is said to be concerned with the letter and the intent, the second with the conflict of laws, the third with ambiguity, the fourth with reasoning by analogy,<sup>a</sup> 18 vum nominamus. Ratio est autem, cum omnis quaestio non in scriptione, sed in aliqua argumentatione consistit.

CICERO

Ac tum, considerato genere causae,<sup>1</sup> cum simplexne an iuncta sit intellexeris et scripti an rationis habeat controversiam videris, deinceps erit videndum, quae quaestio, quae ratio, quae iudicatio, quod firmamentum causae sit; quae omnia a constitutione proficiscantur oportet. Quaestio est ea quae ex conflictione causarum gignitur controversia, hoc modo: "Non iure fecisti." "Iure feci." Causarum autem est conflictio in qua constitutio constat. Ex ea igitur nascitur controversia quam quaestionem dicimus haec: "Iurene fecerit?" Ratio est ea quae continet causam, quae si sublata sit, nihil in causa controversiae relinquatur, hoc modo, ut docendi causa in facili et pervulgato exemplo consistamus: Orestes si accusetur matricidi, nisi hoc dicat "Iure feci, illa enim patrem meum occiderat," non habet defensionem. Qua ratione sublata omnis controversia quoque sublata sit. Ergo eius causae ratio est, quod illa Agamemnonem occiderit. Iudicatio est quae ex infirmatione et confirmatione<sup>2</sup> rationis nascitur controversia. Nam sit ea nobis exposita ratio quam paulo ante exposuimus: "Illa

<sup>1</sup> After causae the MSS. have cognita constitutione (having determined the issue).

<sup>2</sup> et confirmatione omitted by P<sup>1</sup>: bracketed by Kayser and Ströbel.

18 and the fifth with definition. There is a case of general reasoning on the other hand when the whole question turns, not on a written document, but on some logical proof.

And then, after considering the nature of the case, when you have found out whether it is simple or complex, and you have seen whether it discusses a written document or involves general reasoning, then you must see what the question in the case is (quaestio), and the excuse or reason (ratio), the point for the judge's decision (iudicatio) and the foundation or supporting argument (firmamentum). All of these should develop out of the determination of the issue. The question (quaestio) is the subject of debate which arises from the conflict of pleas, in this way: "You were not justified in doing it." "I was justified in doing it." It is the conflict of pleas, moreover, which determines the issue. From this then comes the subject of debate which we call the question (quaestio), as follows: "Was he justified in doing it?" The reason or excuse is that which holds the case together: if this were taken away there would be no debate left about the case. For instance, to make my meaning clear, let me dwell on a simple and well-known example: If Orestes be accused of murdering his mother, unless he say, "I was justified; for she had killed my father," he has no defence. If this excuse were taken away, the whole debate would be taken away, too. Therefore the excuse in this case is that she killed Agamemnon. The point for the judge's decision (iudicatio) is that which arises from the denial and assertion of the reason or excuse. Suppose, for example, that the excuse has been set up which we mentioned a little while ago. "For she," he says, enim meum," inquit, "patrem occiderat." "At non," inquit adversarius, "abs te filio matrem necari oportuit; potuit enim sine tuo scelere illius factum puniri." XIV. Ex hac diductione rationis illa summa nascitur controversia quam iudicationem appellamus. Ea est huiusmodi: Rectumne fuerit ab Oreste matrem occidi cum illa Orestis patrem occidisset.

CICERO

19 Firmamentum est firmissima argumentatio defensoris et appositissima ad iudicationem: ut si velit Orestes dicere eiusmodi animum matris suae fuisse in patrem suum, in se ipsum ac sorores, in regnum, in famam generis et familiae, ut ab ea poenas liberi sui potissimum petere debuerint.

Et in ceteris quidem constitutionibus ad hunc modum iudicationes reperiuntur; in coniecturali autem constitutione, quia ratio non est (factum enim non conceditur), non potest ex diductione rationis nasci iudicatio. Quare necesse est eandem esse quaestionem et iudicationem: factum est, non est factum, factumne sit? Quot autem in causa constitutiones aut earum partes erunt, totidem necesse erit quaestiones, rationes, iudicationes, firmamenta reperiri.

Tum his omnibus in causa repertis denique singulae partes totius causae considerandae sunt. Nam non ut quidque dicendum primum est, ita primum animadvertendum videtur; ideo quod illa quae prima

---

* Nearly equal to speech.

“ had killed my father.” “ But,” the opponent will say, “ your mother ought not to have been killed by you, her son; her act could have been punished without your committing a crime.” XIV. From this narrowing or limitation of the excuse the chief dispute arises, which we call iudicatio or point for the judge’s decision. It is as follows: “ Was it right for Orestes to kill his mother because she had killed Orestes’
 19 father? ” The foundation is the strongest argument of the defence, and the one most relevant to the point for the judge’s decision; for example, if Orestes should choose to say that his mother had shown such disposition towards his father, himself, and his sisters, the kingdom, the good name of the clan and household that her own children were of all people in the world most bound to exact the penalty from her.

In all the other issues the points for the judge’s decision are found in this way; but in the conjectural issue, because there is no excuse alleged in defence—for the defendant does not admit that he did the deed—the point for the judge’s decision cannot arise from the narrowing of the excuse. Therefore in that case the question and the point for the judge’s decision must be the same: “ It was done ; ” “ It was not done.” “ Was it done? ” Moreover it will be necessary to find the same number of questions, excuses, points for the judge’s decision and foundations as there are issues or parts of issues in the case.

Then, after all these points about the case have been discovered, the separate divisions of the whole case <sup>a</sup> must be considered. For it does not follow that everything which is to be said first must be studied first; for the reason that, if you wish the first part of dicuntur, si vehementer velis congruere et cohaerere cum causa, ex eis ducas oportet quae post dicenda sunt. Quare cum iudicatio et ea quae ad iudicationem oportet argumenta inveniri diligenter erunt artificio reperta, cura et cogitatione pertractata, tum denique ordinandae sunt ceterae partes orationis. Eae partes sex esse omnino nobis videntur: exordium, narratio, partitio, confirmatio, reprehensio, conclusio.

CICERO

Nunc quoniam exordium princeps debet esse, nos quoque primum in rationem exordiendi praecepta
20 dabimus. XV. Exordium est oratio animum auditoris idonee comparans ad reliquam dictionem; quod eveniet si eum benivolum, attentum, docilem confecerit. Quare qui bene exordiri causam volet eum necesse est genus suae causae diligenter ante cognoscere. Genera causarum quinque sunt: honestum, admirabile, humile, anceps, obscurum. Honestum causae genus est cui statim sine oratione nostra favet auditoris animus; admirabile, a quo est alienatus animus eorum, qui audituri sunt; humile, quod negligitur ab auditore et non magnopere attendendum videtur; anceps, in quo aut iudicatio dubia est aut causa et honestatis et turpitudinis particeps, ut et benivolentiam pariat et offensionem; obscurum, in quo aut tardi auditores sunt aut difficilioribus ad

---

<sup>a</sup> Or, ready to receive instruction.

<sup>b</sup> Admirabilis, here translated "difficult," is equivalent to the Greek παράδοξος, "marvellous," apparently from the point of view of the juror, who thinks it strange that anyone should speak in behalf of such a defendant. It is therefore a "difficult" case to present.

the speech to have a close agreement and connexion with the main statement of the case, you must derive it from the matters which are to be discussed afterward. Therefore when the point for decision and the arguments which must be devised for the purpose of reaching a decision have been diligently discovered by the rules of art, and studied with careful thought, then, and not till then, the other parts of the oration are to be arranged in proper order. These seem to me to be just six in number: exordium, narrative, partition, confirmation, refutation, peroration.

Now since the exordium has to come first, we shall likewise give first the rule for a systematic treatment 20 of the exordium. XV. An exordium is a passage which brings the mind of the auditor into a proper condition to receive the rest of the speech. This will be accomplished if he becomes well-disposed, attentive, and receptive.<sup>a</sup> Therefore one who wishes his speech to have a good exordium must make a careful study beforehand of the kind of case which he has to present. There are five kinds of cases: honourable, difficult,<sup>b</sup> mean, ambiguous, obscure. An honourable case is one which wins favour in the mind of the auditor at once without any speech of ours: the difficult is one which has alienated the sympathy of those who are about to listen to the speech. The mean is one which the auditor makes light of and thinks unworthy of serious attention; the ambiguous is one in which the point for decision is doubtful, or the case is partly honourable and partly discreditable so that it engenders both goodwill and ill-will; the obscure case is one in which either the auditors are slow of wit, or the case cognoscendum negotiis causa est implicata. Quare cum tam diversa sint genera causarum, exordiri quoque dispari ratione in uno quoque genere necesse est. Igitur exordium in duas partes dividitur, principium et insinuationem. Principium est oratio perspicue et protinus perficiens auditorem benivolum aut docilem aut attentum. Insinuatio est oratio quadam dissimulatione et circumitione obscure subiens auditoris animum.

CICERO

21 In admirabili genere causae, si non omnino infesti auditores erunt, principio benivolentiam comparare licebit. Sin erunt vehementer abalienati, confugere necesse erit ad insinuationem. Nam ab iratis si perspicue pax et benivolentia petitur, non modo ea non invenitur, sed augetur atque inflammatur odium. In humili autem genere causae contemptiois tollendae causa necesse est attentum efficere auditorem. Anceps genus causae si dubiam iudicationem habebit, ab ipsa iudicatione exordiendum est. Sin autem partem turpitudinis, partem honestatis habebit, benivolentiam captare oportebit, ut in genus honestum causa translata videatur. Cum autem erit honestum causae genus, vel praeteriri principium poterit vel, si commodum fuerit, aut a narratione incipiemus aut a lege aut ab aliqua firmissima ratione nostrae dictionis; sin uti principio placebit, benivolentiae partibus utendum est, ut id quod est augeatur. XVI. In involves matters which are rather difficult to grasp. Hence, since the kinds of cases are so diverse, it is necessary to construct the exordium on a different plan in each kind of case. The exordium is, then, divided into two species, introduction and insinuation. An introduction is an address which directly and in plain language makes the auditor well-disposed, receptive, and attentive. Insinuation is an address which by dissimulation and indirection unobtrusively steals into the mind of the auditor.

- 21 In the difficult case, if the auditors are not completely hostile, it will be permissible to try to win their good-will by an introduction; if they are violently opposed it will be necessary to have recourse to the insinuation. For if amity and good-will are sought from auditors who are in a rage, not only is the desired result not obtained, but their hatred is increased and fanned into a flame. In the mean case, on the other hand, it is necessary to make the audience attentive in order to remove their disdain. If an ambiguous case has a doubtful point for the judge's decision, the exordium must begin with a discussion of this very point. But if the case is partly honourable and partly discreditable, it will be proper to try to win good-will so that the case may seem to be transferred to the honourable class. When, however, the case is really in the honourable class, it will be possible either to pass over the introduction or, if it is convenient, we shall begin with the narrative or with a law or some very strong argument which supports our plea: if, on the contrary, it is desirable to use the introduction, we must use the topics designed to produce good-will, that the advantage which already exists may be increased. XVI. In a case of the obscuro causae genere per principium dociles auditores efficere oportebit.

CICERO

Nunc quoniam quas res exordio conficere oporteat dictum est, reliquum est ut ostendatur quibus quaeque rationibus res confici possit.

- 22 Benivolentia quattuor ex locis comparatur: ab nostra, ab adversariorum, ab iudicum persona, a causa. Ab nostra, si de nostris factis et officiis sine arrogantia dicemus; si crimina illata et aliquas minus honestas suspiciones iniectas diluemus; si, quae incommoda acciderint aut quae instent difficultates, proferemus; si prece et obsecratione humili ac supplici utemur. Ab adversariorum autem, si eos aut in odium aut in invidiam aut in contemptionem adducemus. In odium ducentur si quod eorum spurce, superbe, crudeliter, malitiose factum proferetur; in invidiam, si vis eorum, potentia, divitiae, cognatio,<sup>1</sup> proferentur atque eorum usus arrogans et intolerabilis, ut his rebus magis videantur quam causae suae confidere; in contemptionem adducentur si eorum inertia, negligentia, ignavia, desidiosum studium et luxuriosum otium proferetur. Ab auditorum persona benivolentia captabitur si res ab eis fortiter, sapienter, mansuete gestae proferentur, ut ne qua assentatio nimia significetur, si de eis quam honesta existimatio obscure kind the introduction must be used to make the audience receptive.

<sup>1</sup> After cognatio the MSS. read pecuniae (money); bracketed by Ströbel.

Now that it has been stated what results the orator ought to accomplish by the exordium, it remains to show by what means each result can be obtained.

22 Good-will is to be had from four quarters: from our own person, from the person of the opponents, from the persons of the jury, and from the case itself. We shall win good-will from our own person if we refer to our own acts and services without arrogance; if we weaken the effect of charges that have been preferred, or of some suspicion of less honourable dealing which has been cast upon us; if we dilate on the misfortunes which have befallen us or the difficulties which still beset us; if we use prayers and entreaties with a humble and submissive spirit. Good-will is acquired from the person of the opponents if we can bring them into hatred, unpopularity, or contempt. They will be hated if some act of theirs is presented which is base, haughty, cruel, or malicious; they will become unpopular if we present their power, political influence, wealth, family connexions, and their arrogant and intolerable use of these advantages, so that they seem to rely on these rather than on the justice of their case. They will be brought into contempt if we reveal their laziness, carelessness, sloth, indolent pursuits or luxurious idleness. Good-will will be sought from the persons of the auditors if an account is given of acts which they have performed with courage, wisdom, and mercy, but so as not to show excessive flattery: and if it is shown in what honourable esteem they are held and how eagerly their quantaque eorum iudici et auctoritatis expectatio sit ostendetur; ab rebus, si nostram causam laudando extollemus, adversariorum causam per contemp-tionem deprimemus.

CICERO

23 Attentos autem faciemus si demonstrabimus ea quae dicturi erimus magna, nova, incredibilia esse, aut ad omnes aut ad eos qui audient, aut ad aliquos illustres homines aut ad deos immortales aut ad summam rem publicam pertinere; et si pollicebimur nos brevi nostram causam demonstraturos atque exponemus iudicationem aut iudicationes si plures erunt. Dociles auditores faciemus si aperte et breviter summam causae exponemus, hoc est, in quo consistat controversia. Nam et, cum docilem velis facere, simul attentum facias oportet. Nam is est maxime docilis qui attentissime est paratus audire.

XVII. Nunc insinuationes quemadmodum tractari conveniat, deinceps dicendum videtur. Insinuatione igitur utendum est cum admirabile genus causae est, hoc est, ut ante diximus, cum animus auditoris infestus est. Id autem tribus ex causis fit maxime: si aut inest in ipsa causa quaedam turpitudine aut ab eis qui ante dixerunt iam quiddam auditori persuasum videtur aut eo tempore locus dicendi datur cum iam illi quos audire oportet defessi sunt audiendo. Nam ex hac quoque re non minus quam ex primis duabus in oratore nonnunquam animus auditoris offenditur.

---

<sup>a</sup> Perhaps Cicero is mistaken in bringing in this definition. The statement of the issue properly belongs in the Partition, and Cicero or his teacher mistook the words of Hermagoras. By summam causae must have been meant originally a brief outline of the case, not a statement of the exact issue. v. Peters, De rationibus inter artem rhetoricam quarti et primi saeculi intercedentibus, p. 32.

<sup>b</sup> The heading "receptive" seems hardly necessary, as it

judgement and opinion are awaited. Good-will may come from the circumstances themselves if we praise and exalt our own case, and depreciate our opponent's with contemptuous allusions.

23 We shall make our audience attentive if we show that the matters which we are about to discuss are important, novel, or incredible, or that they concern all humanity or those in the audience or some illustrious men or the immortal gods or the general interest of the state; also if we promise to prove our own case briefly and explain the point to be decided or the several points if there are to be more than one. We shall make the auditors receptive if we explain the essence of the case briefly and in plain language, that is, the point on which the controversy turns.<sup>a</sup> For when you wish to make an auditor receptive, you should also at the same time render him attentive. For he is most receptive who is prepared to listen most attentively.<sup>b</sup>

XVII. Now I think that we should discuss secondly the proper method of handling insinuations. The insinuation, then, is to be used when the case is difficult, that is, as I said above, when the spirit of the audience is hostile. This hostility arises principally from three causes: if there is something scandalous in the case, or if those who have spoken first seem to have convinced the auditor on some point, or if the chance to speak comes at a time when those who ought to listen have been wearied by listening. For sometimes the mind of the auditor takes offence at an orator no less from this last can be included under "attentive." Anaximenes' division seems better—the exordium should instruct the audience and make them well-disposed and attentive.

CICERO

24 Si causae turpitudine contrahit offensionem aut pro eo homine in quo offenditur alium hominem qui diligitur interponi oportet; aut pro re in qua offenditur, aliam rem quae probatur; aut pro re hominem aut pro homine rem, ut ab eo quod odit ad id quod diligit auditoris animus traducatur; et dissimulare te id defensurum quod existimeris; deinde, cum iam mitior factus erit auditor, ingredi pedetemptim in defensionem et dicere ea quae indignentur adversarii tibi quoque indigna videri: deinde, cum lenieris eum qui audiet, demonstrare nihil eorum ad te pertinere et negare quicquam de adversariis esse dicturum, neque hoc neque illud, ut neque aperte laedas eos qui diliguntur, et tamen id obscure faciens, quoad possis, alienes ab eis auditorum voluntatem; et aliquorum iudicium simili de re aut auctoritatem proferre imitatione dignam; deinde eandem aut consimilem aut maiorem aut minorem agi rem in praesenti demonstrare.

25 Sin oratio adversariorum fidem videbitur auditoribus fecisse—id quod ei qui intelliget quibus rebus fides fiat facile erit cognitu—oportet aut de eo quod adversarii firmissimum sibi putarint et maxime ei qui audient probarint, primum te dicturum polliceri, aut ab adversari dicto exordiri et ab eo potissimum quod ille nuperrime dixerit, aut dubitatione uti quid

24 cause than from the first two. If the scandalous nature of the case occasions offence, it is necessary to substitute for the person at whom offence is taken another who is favoured, or for a thing at which offence is taken, another which is approved, or a person for a thing or a thing for a person, in order that the attention of the auditor may be shifted from what he hates to what he favours. Also, you must conceal your intention of defending the point which you are expected to defend. After that, when the audience has now become more tractable, approach the defence little by little and say that the things which displease your opponents are also displeasing to you. Next, after pacifying the audience, show that none of these charges apply to you and assert that you will say nothing about your opponents, neither this nor that, so as not openly to attack those who are favoured, and yet, by working imperceptibly, as far as possible to win the good-will of the audience away from your opponents. Also you may offer a decision or opinion of some authorities in a similar case as worthy of imitation; then show that in the present case the same question is to be decided, or one like it or one of greater or less importance.

25 On the other hand, if the speeches of your opponents seem to have won conviction among the audience—a result which will easily be apprehended by one who knows the means by which conviction is won—it behoves you to promise to discuss first the argument which the opponents thought was their strongest and which the audience have especially approved. Or you may begin by a reference to what has been said by your opponent, preferably to something that he has said recently. Or you may express doubt as primum dicas aut cui potissimum loco respondeas, cum admiratione. Nam auditor cum eum quem adversarii perturbatum putavit oratione videt animo firmissimo contra dicere paratum, plerumque se potius temere assensisse quam illum sine causa confidere arbitratur. Sin auditoris studium defatigatio abalienavit a causa, te brevius quam paratus fueris esse dicturum commodum est polliceri; non imitaturum adversarium.

CICERO

Sin res dabit, non inutile est ab aliqua re nova aut ridicula incipere aut ex tempore quae nata sit, quod genus strepitu acclamatione; aut iam parata, quae vel apologum vel fabulam vel aliquam contineat irrisionem; aut si rei dignitas adimet iocandi facultatem, aliquid triste, novum, horribile statim non incommodum est inicere. Nam, ut cibi satietas et fastidium aut subamara aliqua re relevatur aut dulci mitigatur, sic animus defessus audiendo aut admiratione integratur aut risu novatur.

XVIII. Ac separatim quidem quae de principio et de insinuatione dicenda videbantur haec fere sunt; nunc quidem brevi communiter de utroque praeciendum videtur.

Exordium sententiarum et gravitatis plurimum debet habere et omnino omnia quae pertinent ad to what to say first, or which passage to answer before all others, at the same time showing perplexity and astonishment. For when the audience see that he whom they think is shaken by the opponent's speech is ready to speak in reply with confidence and assurance, they generally think that they have assented too readily rather than that he is confident without good cause. If, in the third place, weariness has alienated the sympathy of the auditor from your case, it is a help to promise that you will speak more briefly than you were prepared to speak; that you will not imitate your opponent.

If the case permits, it is not unprofitable to begin with some new topic, or a jest, either one which is extemporaneous—a kind which meets with uproarious applause and shouts of approval—or one already prepared containing a fable, or a story, or some laughable incident. Or, if the seriousness of the occasion denies an opportunity for a jest, it is not disadvantageous to insert something appalling, unheard of, or terrible at the very beginning. For, just as a loathing and distaste for food is relieved by some morsel with a bit of a tang, or appeased by a sweet, so a mind wearied by listening is strengthened by astonishment or refreshed by laughter.

XVIII. This is about all that it seemed necessary to say concerning the introduction and the insinuation separately: now it seems desirable to state some brief rules which will apply to both alike.

The exordium ought to be sententious to a marked degree and of a high seriousness, and, to put it generally, should contain everything which con-

CICERO

dignitatem in se continere, propterea quod id optime faciendum est quod oratorem auditori maxime commendat; splendoris et festivitatis et concinnitudinis minimum, propterea quod ex his suspicio quaedam apparationis atque artificiosae diligentiae nascitur, quae maxime orationi fidem, oratori adimit auctoritatem.

26 Vitia vero haec sunt certissima exordiorum quae summopere vitare oportebit: vulgare, commune, commutabile, longum, separatum, translatum, contra praecepta. Vulgare est quod in plures causas potest accommodari, ut convenire videatur. Commune, quod nihilo minus in hanc, quam in contrariam partem causae, potest convenire. Commutabile, quod ab adversario potest leviter mutatum ex contraria parte dici. Longum est quod pluribus verbis aut sententiis ultra quam satis est producit. Separatum, quod non ex ipsa causa ductum est nec sicut aliquod membrum annexum orationi. Translatum est quod aliud conficit quam causae genus postulat: ut si qui docilem faciat auditorem, cum benivolentiam causa desideret, aut si principio utatur, cum insinuationem res postulet. Contra praecepta est quod nihil eorum efficit quorum causa de exordiis praecepta traduntur; hoc est, quod eum qui audit neque benivolum neque attentum neque docilem efficit, aut, quo nihil profecto peius est, ut contra sit, facit. Ac de exordio quidem satis dictum est.

tributes to dignity, because the best thing to do is that which especially commends the speaker to his audience. It should contain very little brilliance, vivacity, or finish of style, because these give rise to a suspicion of preparation and excessive ingenuity. As a result of this most of all the speech loses conviction and the speaker, authority.

26 The following are surely the most obvious faults of exordia, which are by all means to be avoided: it should not be general, common, interchangeable, tedious, unconnected, out of place, or contrary to the fundamental principles. A general exordium is one which can be tacked to many cases, so as to seem to suit them all. A common exordium is one equally applicable to both sides of the case. The interchangeable can with slight changes be used by the opponent in a speech on the other side. The tedious exordium is one which is spun out beyond all need with a superabundance of words or ideas. The unconnected is one which is not derived from the circumstances of the case nor closely knit with the rest of the speech, as a limb to a body. It is out of place if it produces a result different from what the nature of the case requires: for example, if it makes the audience receptive when the case calls for goodwill, or uses an introduction when the situation demands an insinuation. It is contrary to fundamental principles when it achieves none of the purposes for which rules are given about exordia, that is, when it renders the audience neither well-disposed, nor attentive, nor receptive, or produces the opposite result; and nothing surely can be worse than that. This is enough to say about the exordium.

27 XIX. Narratio est rerum gestarum aut ut gestarum expositio. Narrationum genera tria sunt: unum genus est in quo ipsa causa et omnis ratio controversiae continetur; alterum, in quo digressio aliqua extra causam aut criminationis aut similitudinis aut delectationis non alienae ab eo negotio quo de agitur aut amplificationis causa interponitur. Tertium genus est remotum a civilibus causis quod delectationis causa non inutili cum exercitatione dicitur et scribitur. Eius partes sunt duae, quarum altera in negotiis, altera in personis maxime versatur. Ea quae in negotiorum expositione posita est tres habet partes: fabulam, historiam, argumentum. Fabula est in qua nec verae nec veri similes res continentur, cuiusmodi est:

Angues ingentes alites, iuncti iugo . . .

Historia est gesta res, ab aetatis nostrae memoria remota; quod genus:

Appius indixit Karthaginensibus bellum.

Argumentum est ficta res, quae tamen fieri potuit. Huiusmodi apud Terentium:

Nam is postquam excessit ex ephebis . . .

Illa autem narratio quae versatur in personis eiusmodi

* Pacuvius frg. 397 R<sup>s</sup>. ROL ii, p. 254 line 242.

27 XIX. The narrative is an exposition of events that have occurred or are supposed to have occurred. There are three kinds: one which contains just the case and the whole reason for the dispute; a second in which a digression is made beyond the strict limits of the case for the purpose of attacking somebody, or of making a comparison, or of amusing the audience in a way not incongruous with the business in hand, or for amplification. The third kind is wholly unconnected with public issues, which is recited or written solely for amusement but at the same time provides valuable training. It is subdivided into two classes: one concerned with events, the other principally with persons. That which consists of an exposition of events has three forms: fabula, historia, argumentum. Fabula is the term applied to a narrative in which the events are not true and have no verisimilitude, for example:

“Huge winged dragons yoked to a car.”<sup>a</sup>

Historia is an account of actual occurrences remote from the recollection of our own age, as:

“War on men of Carthage Appius decreed.”<sup>b</sup>

Argumentum is a fictitious narrative which nevertheless could have occurred. An example may be quoted from Terence:<sup>c</sup>

“For after he had left the school of youth.”

But the form of narrative which is concerned with persons is of such a sort that in it can be seen not only

<sup>b</sup> Ennius, Annals, vii, 223 V<sup>3</sup>. ROL i, p. 86, line 238.

<sup>c</sup> Andria, 51.

CICERO

est, ut in ea simul cum rebus ipsis personarum sermones et animi perspicui possint, hoc modo :

Venit ad me saepe clamans<sup>1</sup> : Quid agis, Micio ?
Cur perdis adolescentem nobis ? cur amat ?
Cur potat ? cur tu his rebus sumptum suggeris ?
Vestitu nimio indulges, nimium ineptus es.
Nimium ipse est durus praeter aequumque et bonum.

Hoc in genere narrationis multa debet inesse festivitas confecta ex rerum varietate, animorum dissimilitudine, gravitate, lenitate, spe, metu, suspitione, desiderio, dissimulatione, errore, misericordia, fortunae commutatione, insperato incommodo, subita laetitia, iucundo exitu rerum. Verum haec ex eis quae postea de elocutione praecipientur ornamenta sumentur.

- 28 XX. Nunc de narratione ea quae causae continet expositionem dicendum videtur. Oportet igitur eam tres habere res : ut brevis, ut aperta, ut probabilis sit. Brevis erit, si unde necesse est inde initium sumetur et non ab ultimo repetetur, et si, cuius rei satis erit summam dixisse, eius partes non dicentur—nam saepe satis est quid factum sit dicere, ut ne narres quemadmodum sit factum—et si non longius, quam quo opus est, in narrando procedetur, et si nullam in rem

<sup>1</sup> clamans Bentley: clamitans C.

---

<sup>a</sup> Terence, Adelphoe, 60–64. Tr. by Sargeaunt, LCL.

<sup>b</sup> Or, from a variety of materials, i.e. . . . But compare ad Her. I, 13.

<sup>c</sup> The last form of narrative is illustrated by a quotation from comedy, but may also be found in other genres, the mime, some types of elegy, and romance. The writing of such exercises in character drawing (prosopopoeiae) formed events but also the conversation and mental attitude of the characters. For example: "He comes to me perpetually, crying, 'What are you about, Micio? Why are you bringing the boy to ruin on our hands? Why this licence? Why these drinking parties? Why do you pile him up the guineas for such a life and let him spend so much at the tailor's? It's extremely silly of you.' He himself is extremely hard, past right and sense." <sup>a</sup> This form of narrative should possess great vivacity, resulting from fluctuations of fortune,<sup>b</sup> contrast of characters, severity, gentleness, hope, fear, suspicion, desire, dissimulation, delusion, pity, sudden change of fortune, unexpected disaster, sudden pleasure, a happy ending to the story. But these embellishments will be drawn from what will be said later about the rules of style.<sup>c</sup>

28 XX. Now it seems necessary to speak of that form of narrative which contains an exposition of a case at law. It ought to possess three qualities: it should be brief, clear, and plausible. It will be brief if it begins with what needs to be said, and is not carried back to the most remote events; if it does not include details when it is sufficient to have stated the substance of the story—for often it is sufficient to say what happened, so that you do not need to tell how it happened—and if the narrative is not carried farther than is needed, and if it does not digress to part of the preliminary training in composition, useful alike to orator and poet. (For a different interpretation of this puzzling and oft discussed passage, v. Barwick, K., Die Gliederung der Narratio und seine Bedeutung, Hermes lxxiii (1928), pp. 261-287.) Cf. also Pfister, F., Isokrates und die spätere Gliederung der Narratio, Hermes lxxviii (1933), pp. 457-460.

CICERO

aliam transibitur; et si ita dicetur, ut nonnunquam ex eo quod dictum est id quod non est dictum intellegatur; et si non modo id quod obest verum etiam id quod nec obest nec adiuvat praeteribitur; et si semel unum quidque dicetur; et si non ab eo quo in proxime desitum erit deinceps incipietur. Ac multos imitatio brevitatis decipit, ut, cum se breves putent esse, longissimi sint; cum dent operam ut res multas brevi dicant, non ut omnino paucas res dicant et non plures quam necesse sit. Nam plerisque breviter videtur dicere qui ita dicit: "Accessi ad aedes. Puerum vocavi. Respondit. Quaesivi dominum. Domi negavit esse." Hic, tametsi tot res brevius non potuit dicere, tamen quia satis fuit dixisse: "Domi negavit esse," fit rerum multitudine longus. Quare hoc quoque in genere vitanda est brevitatis imitatio et non minus rerum non necessariarum quam verborum multitudine supersedendum est.

29 Aperta autem narratio poterit esse, si ut quidque primum gestum erit ita primum exponetur, et rerum ac temporum ordo servabitur, ut ita narrentur ut gestae res erunt aut ut potuisse geri videbuntur. Hic erit considerandum ne quid perturbate, ne quid contorte dicatur, ne quam in aliam rem transeatur, ne ab ultimo repetatur, ne ad extremum prodeatur, ne quid quod ad rem pertineat praetereatur; et omnino quae praecepta de brevitate sunt hoc quoque in genere sunt conservanda. Nam saepe res parum est intellecta

another story. Brevity may be gained if the story is told in such a way that at times something which has not been mentioned can be gathered from what has been said; also if not only what is prejudicial is omitted but also what is neither prejudicial nor helpful; and if each thing is mentioned once and once only, and if it does not begin all over again at the point at which it has just stopped. Many are deceived by an appearance of brevity so that they are prolix when they think they are brief. This occurs when they try to say many things in a brief compass, rather than saying very few or not more than is necessary. Many, for example, think that one is speaking briefly who speaks as follows: "I went to his house, I called the slave. He answered. I asked for his master. He said that he was not at home." Here, although so many things could not be said more briefly, still because it was sufficient to say, "He said he was not at home," it is made too long by the abundance of details. Therefore in this section of the speech too, a false brevity is to be avoided, and one must refrain no less from an excess of superfluous facts than from an excess of words.

29 It will be possible to make the narrative clear if the events are presented one after another as they occurred, and the order of events in time is preserved so that the story is told as it will prove to have happened or will seem possible to have happened. On this point care must be taken not to say anything in a confused and intricate style, not to shift to another subject, not to go back to ultimate beginnings nor to go on too far, and not to omit anything pertinent to the case. In general the rules about brevity are to be followed in seeking clarity also. For often a case longitudine magis quam obscuritate narrationis. Ac verbis quoque dilucidis utendum est; quo de genere dicendum est in praeceptis elocutionis.

CICERO

XXI. Probabilis erit narratio, si in ea videbuntur inesse ea quae solent apparere in veritate; si personarum dignitates servabuntur; si causae factorum exstabunt; si fuisse facultates faciendi videbuntur; si tempus idoneum, si spatii satis, si locus opportunus ad eandem rem qua de re narrabitur fuisse ostendetur; si res et ad eorum qui agent naturam et ad vulgi morem et ad eorum qui audient opinionem accommodabitur. Ac veri quidem similis ex his rationibus esse poterit.

30 Illud autem praeterea considerare oportebit, ne, aut cum obsit narratio aut cum nihil prosit, tamen interponatur; aut non loco aut non, quemadmodum causa postulet, narretur. Obest tum, cum ipsius rei gestae expositio magnam excipit offensionem quam argumentando et causam agendo leniri oportebit. Quod cum accidet, membratim oportebit partes rei gestae dispergere in causam et ad unam quamque confestim rationem accommodare, ut vulneri praesto medicamentum sit et odium statim defensio mitiget. Nihil prodest narratio tum, cum ab adversariis re exposita nostra nihil interest iterum aut alio modo narrare; aut ab eis qui audiunt ita tenetur negotium, is misunderstood more from excessive length of the narrative than from obscurity. The diction must also be perspicuous; this topic must be discussed among the rules for style.

---

<sup>a</sup> I.e. a consul should be made to act and speak like a consul, not like a clown.

XXI. The narrative will be plausible if it seems to embody characteristics which are accustomed to appear in real life; if the proper qualities of the character are maintained,<sup>a</sup> if reasons for their actions are plain, if there seems to have been ability to do the deed, if it can be shown that the time was opportune, the space sufficient and the place suitable for the events about to be narrated; if the story fits in with the nature of the actors in it, the habits of ordinary people and the beliefs of the audience. Verisimilitude can be secured by following these principles.

30 In addition to observing these precepts, one must also be on guard not to insert a narrative when it will be a hindrance or of no advantage, and also not to have it out of place or in a manner other than that which the case requires. A narrative can be a hindrance when a presentation of the events alone and by themselves gives great offence, which it will be necessary to mitigate in arguing and pleading the case. When this situation arises, it will be necessary to distribute the narrative piecemeal throughout the speech and to add an explanation directly after each section so that the remedy may heal the wound and the defence may immediately lessen the animosity. A narrative is of no advantage when the facts have been explained by the opponents and it is of no importance to us to tell the story again or in a different way. The narrative is also useless when the audience has grasped the facts so thoroughly that it is of no advantage to us to instruct ut nostra nihil intersit eos alio pacto docere. Quod cum accidit, omnino narratione supersedendum est. Non loco dicitur, cum non in ea parte orationis collocatur in qua res postulat; quo de genere agemus tum, cum de dispositione dicemus; nam hoc ad dispositionem pertinet. Non quemadmodum causa postulat, narratur, cum aut id quod adversario prodest dilucide et ornate exponitur aut id quod ipsum adiuvat obscure dicitur et neglegenter. Quare, ut hoc vitium vitetur, omnia torquenda sunt ad commodum suae causae, contraria quae praeteriri poterunt praetereundo, quae dicenda erunt leviter attingendo, sua diligenter et enodate narrando.

CICERO

Ac de narratione quidem satis dictum videtur; deinceps ad partitionem transeamus.

- 31 XXII. Recte habita in causa partitio illustrem et perspicuam totam efficit orationem. Partes eius sunt duae, quarum utraque magno opere ad aperiendam causam et constituendam pertinet controversiam. Una pars est quae quid cum adversariis conveniat et quid in controversia relinquatur ostendit; ex qua certum quiddam destinatur auditori in quo animum debeat habere occupatum. Altera est in qua rerum earum de quibus erimus dicturi breviter expositio ponitur distributa; ex qua conficitur ut certas animo res teneat auditor, quibus dictis intellegat fore peroratum.

Nunc utroque genere partitionis quemadmodum conveniat uti, breviter dicendum videtur. Quae partitio, quid conveniat aut quid non conveniat, ostendit, haec debet illud quod convenit inclinare ad them in a different fashion. In such a case one must dispense with narrative altogether. The narrative is out of place when it is not set in that part of the speech which the situation demands; this topic we shall take up when we discuss arrangement, for it affects the arrangement. The narrative is not presented in the manner required by the case when a point which helps the opponent is explained clearly and elegantly, or a point which helps the speaker is presented obscurely and carelessly. Therefore, to avoid this fault, the speaker must bend everything to the advantage of his case, by passing over all things that make against it which can be passed over, by touching lightly on what must be mentioned, and by telling his own side of the story carefully and clearly.

62

Sufficient has, I think, been said about narrative; let us now pass to the partition.

31 XXII. In an argument a partition correctly made renders the whole speech clear and perspicuous. It takes two forms, both of which greatly contribute to clarifying the case and determining the nature of the controversy. One form shows in what we agree with our opponents and what is left in dispute; as a result of this some definite problem is set for the auditor on which he ought to have his attention fixed. In the second form the matters which we intend to discuss are briefly set forth in a methodical way. This leads the auditor to hold definite points in his mind, and to understand that when these have been discussed the oration will be over.

Now I think I ought to present briefly the method of using each form of partition. A partition which shows what is agreed upon, and what is not, should turn the subject of agreement to the advantage of suae causae commodum, hoc modo: "Interfectam matrem esse a filio convenit mihi cum adversariis." Item contra: "Interfectum esse a Clytaemestra Agamemnonem convenit." Nam hic uterque et id posuit quod conveniebat et tamen suae causae commodo consuluit. Deinde quid controversiae sit ponendum est in iudicationis expositione; quae quemadmodum inveniretur ante dictum est.

CICERO

- 32 Quae partitio rerum distributam continet expositionem, haec habere debet: brevitatem, absolutionem, paucitatem. Brevitas est, cum nisi necessarium nullum assumitur verbum. Haec in hoc genere idcirco est utilis quod rebus ipsis et partibus causae, non verbis neque extraneis ornamentis animus auditoris tenendus est. Absolutio est per quam omnia quae incidunt in causam genera de quibus dicendum est amplectimur in partitione, ne aut aliquod genus utile relinquatur aut sero extra partitionem, id quod vitiosissimum ac turpissimum est, inferatur. Paucitas in partitione servatur, si genera ipsa rerum ponuntur neque permixte cum partibus implicantur. Nam genus est quod plures partes amplectitur, ut animal. Pars est quae subest generi, ut equus. Sed saepe eadem res alii genus, alii pars est. Nam homo animalis pars est, Thebani aut Troiani genus. XXIII. Haec ideo diligentius

---

* In ad Her. I, 17, where both examples are given, it is made clearer that the first statement is made by Orestes' prosecutor, the second by Orestes: "I agree with the opponents that Orestes killed his mother: whether he was justified in doing so is the question." "It is granted that Agamemnon was killed by Clytemnestra: though this is so, they say I ought not to have avenged my father."

<sup>b</sup> As is done in the passage from the ad Her. quoted in note a.

the speaker's case, in the following manner: "I agree with my opponents that the mother was killed by her son." In the same way on the other side of the case, "It is agreed that Agamemnon was killed by Clytemnestra."<sup>a</sup> For here each speaker stated what was agreed upon, yet was mindful of the advantage of his own side of the case. Secondly, what is in controversy should be set forth in explaining the point for the judge's decision; <sup>b</sup> how this is discovered has been stated above.<sup>c</sup>

32 The form of partition which contains a methodical statement of topics to be discussed ought to have the following qualities: brevity, completeness, conciseness. Brevity is secured when no word is used unless necessary. It is useful in this place because the attention of the auditor should be attracted by the facts and topics of the case, and not by extraneous embellishments of style. Completeness is the quality by which we embrace in the partition all forms of argument which apply to the case, and about which we ought to speak, taking care that no useful argument be omitted or be introduced late as an addition to the plan of the speech, for this is faulty and unseemly in the highest degree. Conciseness in the partition is secured if only genera of things are given and they are not confused and mixed with their species. To explain: a genus is a class that embraces several species, as animal. A species is that which is a part of a genus, as horse. But often the same thing is a genus in relation to one thing and a species in relation to another. For example, man is a species of animal, but a genus of which Thebans or Trojans are species. XXIII. I have given this description with

<sup>c</sup> § 18.

inducitur discriptio, ut aperte intellecta <sup>1</sup> generum et partium ratione paucitas generum in partitione servari possit. Nam qui ita partitur: "Ostendam propter cupiditatem et audaciam et avaritiam adversariorum omnia incommoda ad rem publicam pervenisse," is non intellexit in partitione, exposito genere, partem se generis admiscuisse. Nam genus est omnium nimirum libidinum cupiditas: eius autem 33 generis sine dubio pars est avaritia. Hoc igitur vitandum est, ne cuius genus posueris eius aliquam sicuti diversam<sup>2</sup> ac dissimilem partem ponas in eadem partitione. Quodsi quod in genus plures incident partes, id cum in prima causae partitione erit simpliciter expositum, distribuetur tempore eo commodissime, cum ad ipsum ventum erit explicandum in causae dictione post partitionem. Atque illud quoque pertinet ad paucitatem, ne aut plura quam satis est demonstraturos nos dicamus, hoc modo: "Ostendam adversarios quod arguamus et potuisse facere et voluisse et fecisse"; nam fecisse satis est ostendere: aut, cum in causa partitio nulla sit,<sup>3</sup> cum simplex quiddam agatur, tamen utamur distributione, id quod perraro potest accidere.

Ac sunt alia quoque praecepta partitionum quae ad hunc usum oratorium non tanto opere pertineant quae versantur in philosophia ex quibus haec ipsa translulimus quae convenire viderentur quorum nihil in ceteris artibus inveniebamus.

<sup>1</sup> aperte intellecta C: aperta H: aperta [intellecta] Weidner, Ströbel.

<sup>2</sup> aliquam sicuti diversam Schuetz: sicuti aliquam diversam P<sup>2</sup>Ri: secuti aliquam diversam H<sup>1</sup>P<sup>1</sup>: secum H<sup>2</sup>S: sicuti eius * sicuti aliquam diversam Ströbel.

<sup>3</sup> After sit the MSS. have et. Bracketed by Weidner.

some care so that when the theory of classification is clearly understood, conciseness in dealing with classes may be secured in the partition. For one who divides his speech as follows: "I shall show that through the covetousness, audacity and avarice of my opponents all disasters have come upon the state," was not aware that in his partition he mentioned a genus and then combined it with a species of that genus. For covetousness or desire certainly is the genus of all appetites, and of this genus avarice is 33 without doubt a species. You should therefore be on your guard lest after mentioning a genus you mention a species of it in the same partition, as if it were different and dissimilar. But if a genus has several species, after stating it straightforwardly in the first partition, the division into species may be most conveniently made when one comes to explain that particular point in the course of the speech after the partition. It also contributes to conciseness not to say that we shall prove more than is necessary, as is done in the following example: "I shall show that my opponents were able to commit the crime with which we charge them, that they wished to, and that they did commit it;" for it would have been enough to prove that they did commit the crime; nor, when there is no partition in the case, because a single question is being debated (but this is a very rare occurrence), to use in spite of that fact a careful distribution.

There are other rules for the partition not so closely connected with oratorical practice; they are used in philosophy, and from them we have chosen the particular rules which seemed to apply and which we did not find in the other textbooks.

CICERO

Atque his de partitione praeceptis in omni dictione meminisse oportebit, ut et prima quaeque pars, ut exposita est in partitione, sic ordine transigatur et omnibus explicatis peroratum sit,<sup>1</sup> ut ne quid posterius praeter conclusionem inferatur. Partitur apud Terentium breviter et commode senex in Andria quae cognoscere libertum velit :

    Eo pacto et gnati vitam et consilium meum
    Cognosces et quid facere in hac re te velim.

Itaque quemadmodum in partitione proposuit, ita narrat, primum nati vitam :

    Nam is postquam excessit ex ephebis . . .

Deinde suum consilium :

    Et nunc id operam do . . .

Deinde quid Sosiam velit facere, id quod postremum posuit in partitione, postremum dicit :

    Nunc tuum est officium . . .

Quemadmodum igitur hic et ad primam quamque partem primum accessit et omnibus absolutis finem dicendi fecit, sic nobis placet et ad singulas partes accedere et omnibus absolutis perorare.

34 Nunc de confirmatione deinceps, ita ut ordo ipse postulat, praecipendum videtur. XXIV. Confirmatio est per quam argumentando nostrae causae fidem et auctoritatem et firmamentum adiungit oratio. Huius partis certa sunt praecepta quae in singula causarum genera dividuntur. Verumtamen

<sup>1</sup> After sit the MSS. have hoc modo. Bracketed by Kayser.

Now that the rules for partition have been stated, it is necessary to remind the orator that throughout the speech he should bear in mind to complete the sections in order one after another as they have been planned in the partition, and that after all have been dispatched he should bring the speech to a close so that nothing be introduced after the conclusion. The old man in the Andria of Terence makes a brief and neat partition of what he wishes his freedman to know: "In this way you will learn my son's manner of life, my plan, and what I wish you to do in the matter." And his narrative follows the plan laid down in the partition: first, his son's manner of life,

"For after he had left the school of youth . . ."
then his plan:

"And now I am anxious . . ."

then what he wishes Sosia to do, which was the last point in the partition, is stated last:

"Now your task is . . ."

Just as he turned his attention first to each point as it arose, and after dispatching them all stopped speaking, so I favour turning our attention to each topic and when all have been dispatched, winding up the speech.

Now it seems desirable to give in turn the rules about confirmation as is demanded by the regular 34 order of the speech. XXIV. Confirmation or proof is the part of the oration which by marshalling arguments lends credit, authority, and support to our case. For this section of the speech there are definite rules which will be divided among the different kinds of cases. But I think that it will non incommodum videtur quandam silvam atque materiam universam ante permixtim et confuse exponere omnium argumentationum, post autem tradere quemadmodum unum quodque causae genus hinc omnibus argumentandi rationibus tractis confirmari oporteat.

CICERO

Omnes res argumentando confirmantur aut ex eo quod personis aut ex eo quod negotiis est attributum. Ac personis has res attributas putamus: nomen, naturam, victum, fortunam, habitum, affectionem, studia, consilia, facta, casus, orationes.

Nomen est quod uni cuique personae datur quo suo quaeque proprio et certo vocabulo appellatur.

Naturam ipsam definire difficile est; partes autem eius enumerare eas quarum indigemus ad hanc 35 praeceptionem facilius est. Eae autem partim divino, partim mortali in genere versantur. Mortalium autem pars in hominum, pars in bestiarum genere numerantur. Atque hominum genus et in sexu consideratur, virile an muliebre sit, et in natione, patria, cognatione, aetate. Natione, Graius an barbarus; patria, Atheniensis an Lacedaemonius; cognatione, quibus maioribus, quibus consanguineis; aetate, puer an adulescens, natu grandior an senex. Praeterea commoda et incommoda considerantur ab natura data animo aut corpori, hoc modo: valens an imbecillus, longus an brevis, formosus an deformis, velox an tardus sit, acutus an hebetior, memor an not be inconvenient to set forth in the beginning, without any attempt at order or arrangement, a kind of raw material for general use from which all arguments are drawn, and then later to present the way in which each kind of case should be supported by all the forms of argumentation derived from this general store.

---

<sup>o</sup> Habit, as shown by the definitions given below (36, and II, 30), means an acquired mental or physical constitution, character, disposition, way of acting.

All propositions are supported in argument by attributes of persons or of actions. We hold the following to be the attributes of persons: name, nature, manner of life, fortune, habit,<sup>a</sup> feeling, interests, purposes, achievements, accidents, speeches made.

Name is that which is given to each person, whereby he is addressed by his own proper and definite appellation.

It is hard to give a simple definition of nature. It is easier to enumerate the parts of it which are necessary for laying down rules here. And these concern partly divine and partly mortal beings. Of those concerned with mortal beings, part are reckoned as belonging to human beings, and part to beasts. And in respect to human beings, their nature is considered first as to sex whether male or female, and as to race, place of birth, family, and age. As to race, whether one is a Greek or a foreigner; as to place of birth, whether an Athenian or a Lacedaemonian; as to family, what are one's ancestors and kin; as to age, whether one is a boy, or youth, of middle age, or an old man. Besides, we take into consideration such advantages and disadvantages as are given to mind and body by nature, as, for example: whether one is strong or weak, tall or short, handsome or ugly, swift or slow; whether bright or obliviosus, comis<sup>1</sup> an infacetus, pudens, patiens an contra. Et omnino quae a natura dantur animo et corpori considerabuntur.<sup>2</sup> Nam quae industria comparantur, ad habitum pertinent, de quo posterius est dicendum.

CICERO

XXV. In victu considerare oportet, apud quem et quo more et cuius arbitrato sit educatus, quos habuerit artium liberalium magistros, quos vivendi praeceptores, quibus amicis utatur, quo in negotio, quaestu, artificio sit occupatus, quo modo rem familiarem administret, qua consuetudine domestica sit.

In fortuna quaeritur, servus sit an liber, pecuniosus an tenuis, privatus an cum potestate: si cum potestate, iure an iniuria; felix, clarus an contra; quales liberos habeat. Ac si de non vivo quaeretur, etiam quali morte sit affectus erit considerandum.

36 Habitum autem<sup>3</sup> appellamus animi aut corporis constantem et absolutam aliqua in re perfectionem, ut virtutis aut artis alicuius perceptionem aut quamvis scientiam et item corporis aliquam commoditatem non natura datam, sed studio et industria partam.

Affectio est animi aut corporis ex tempore aliqua de causa commutatio, ut laetitia, cupiditas, metus, molestia, morbus, debilitas et alia quae in eodem genere reperiuntur.

Studium est autem animi assidua et vehementer ad aliquam rem applicata magna cum voluptate

<sup>1</sup> After comis the MSS. have officiosus (courteous). Bracketed by Schuetz.

<sup>2</sup> After considerabuntur the MSS. have et haec in natura considerata (and this ought to be considered under nature) with some variation in individual words. The passage was first bracketed by Kayser.

<sup>3</sup> Habitus autem hunc C.

dull, retentive or forgetful, affable or unmannerly, modest, long-suffering, or the contrary; and in short we shall take into consideration all qualities of mind and body that are bestowed by nature. For the qualities acquired by one's own industry have to do with habit, which is to be discussed below.

XXV. Under manner of life should be considered with whom he was reared, in what tradition and under whose direction, what teachers he had in the liberal arts, what instructors in the art of living, with whom he associates on terms of friendship, in what occupation, trade, or profession he is engaged, how he manages his private fortune, and what is the character of his home life.

Under fortune one inquires whether the person is a slave or free, rich or poor, a private citizen or an official with authority, and if he is an official, whether he acquired his position justly or unjustly, whether he is successful, famous, or the opposite; what sort of children he has. And if the inquiry is about one no longer alive, weight must be also given to the nature of his death.

36 By habit we mean a stable and absolute constitution of mind or body in some particular, as, for example, the acquisition of some capacity or of an art, or again some special knowledge, or some bodily dexterity not given by nature but won by careful training and practice.

Feeling is a temporary change in mind or body due to some cause: for example, joy, desire, fear, vexation, illness, weakness, and other things which are found in the same category.

Interest is unremitting mental activity ardently devoted to some subject and accompanied by intense occupatio, ut philosophiae, poëticae, geometricae, litterarum.

CICERO

Consilium est aliquid faciendi aut non faciendi excogitata ratio.

Facta autem et casus et orationes tribus ex temporibus considerabuntur: quid fecerit,<sup>1</sup> quid ipsi acciderit, quid dixerit; aut quid faciat, quid ipsi accidat, quid dicat; aut quid facturus sit, quid ipsi casurum sit, qua sit usus oratione. Ac personis quidem haec videntur esse attributa.

37 XXVI. Negotiis autem quae sunt attributa, partim sunt continentia cum ipso negotio, partim in gestione negoti considerantur, partim adiuncta negotio sunt, partim gestum negotium consequuntur.

Continentia cum ipso negotio sunt ea quae semper affixa esse videntur ad rem neque ab ea possunt separari. Ex his prima est brevis complexio totius negoti quae summam continet facti, hoc modo: parentis occisio, patriae proditio; deinde causa eius summae per quam et quam ob rem et cuius rei causa factum sit quaeritur; deinde ante gestam rem quae facta sint continenter usque ad ipsum negotium; deinde, in ipso gerendo negotio quid actum sit; deinde, quid postea factum sit.

38 In gestione autem negoti, qui locus secundus erat de eis quae negotiis attributa sunt, quaeretur<sup>2</sup> locus, tempus, occasio, modus, facultas. Locus consideratur, in quo res gesta sit, ex opportunitate quam pleasure, for example interest in philosophy, poetry, geometry, literature.

<sup>1</sup> After fecerit and acciderit the MSS. have aut. Bracketed by Kayser.

<sup>2</sup> quaeritur M<sup>2</sup>J.

Purpose is a deliberate plan for doing or not doing something.

Achievements, accidents, and speech will be considered under three tenses of the verb: what he did, what happened to him, what he said: or what he is doing, what is happening to him, what he is saying; or what he is going to do, what is going to happen to him, what language he is going to use. These are the accepted attributes of persons.

37 XXVI. The attributes of actions are partly coherent with the action itself, partly considered in connexion with the performance of it, partly adjunct to it and partly consequent upon its performance.

Coherent with the action itself are those things which seem always connected with it and which cannot be separated from it. The first of these is a brief summary of the whole action comprising the sum of the matter, for example, "murder of parent," "betrayal of country." Then inquiry is made as to the reason for this whole matter, i.e., by what means, and why, and for what purpose the act was done. In the next place we inquire what happened before the event right down to the actual deed; then what was done in the performance of the act, and again what was done afterwards.

38 In connexion with the performance of the act (which was the second topic under the heading of attributes of actions) inquiry will be made about place, time, occasion, manner, and facilities. In considering the place where the act was performed, account is taken of what opportunity the place seems videatur habuisse ad negotium administrandum. Ea autem opportunitas quaeritur ex magnitudine, intervallo, longinquitate, propinquitate, solitudine, celebritate, natura ipsius loci et vicinitatis et totius regionis; ex his etiam attributionibus: sacer an profanus, publicus ane privatus, alienus an ipsius de quo agitur locus sit aut fuerit.

CICERO

39 Tempus autem est—id quo nunc utimur, nam ipsum quidem generaliter definire difficile est—pars quaedam aeternitatis cum alicuius annui, menstrui, diurni, nocturnive spati certa significatione. In hoc et quae praeterierint, considerantur; et eorum ipsorum, quae aut propter vetustatem obsoleverint aut incredibilia videantur, ut iam in fabularum numerum reponantur; et quae iam diu gesta et a memoria nostra remota, tamen faciant fidem vere tradita esse, quia eorum monumenta certa in litteris exstant; et quae nuper gesta sint quae scire plerique possint; et item quae instent in praesentia et cum maxime fiant et quae consequantur. In quibus potest considerari quid ocius et quid serius futurum sit. Et item communiter in tempore perspiciendo longinquitas eius est consideranda. Nam saepe oportet commetiri cum tempore negotium et videre potueritne aut magnitudo negoti aut multitudo rerum in eo transigi tempore. Consideratur autem tempus et to have afforded for its performance. Opportunity, moreover, is a question of the size of the place, its distance from other places, i.e., whether remote or near at hand, whether it is a solitary spot or one much frequented, and finally it is a question of the nature of the place, of the actual site, of the vicinity and of the whole district. The following attributes are also to be considered: whether the place is or was sacred or profane, public or private, the property of the person in question or of another.

39 Time in the sense in which we now use it—for to define it absolutely and in general terms is difficult—time is a part of eternity definitely indicated as being of a certain length, a year, month, day, or night. Under this category not only are past events examined, and of these past events those which have either lost their significance through lapse of time or seem incredible so that now they are regarded as fabulous, and those which though they occurred long ago and are remote from our recollection still impress us as having been correctly reported because definite records of them are extant in literature, and those which have occurred recently so that most people can know them, but also those things which exist at the present moment and are most certainly going on, and thirdly actions which are to follow, of which it is possible to consider what will come to pass sooner and what later. Likewise, generally, in examining time the length of time has to be taken into consideration. For often it is proper to measure the action in terms of time, and to see whether such an important action or such a number of undertakings could be accomplished in the given time. One also anni et mensis et diei et noctis et vigiliae et horae et in aliqua parte alicuius horum.<sup>1</sup>

CICERO

40 XXVII. Occasio autem est pars temporis habens in se alicuius rei idoneam faciendi aut non faciendi opportunitatem. Quare cum tempore hoc differt: nam genere quidem utrumque idem esse intellegitur, verum in tempore spatium quodam modo declaratur quod in annis aut in anno aut in aliqua anni parte spectatur, in occasione ad spatium temporis faciendi quaedam opportunitas intellegitur adiuncta. Quare cum genere idem sit, fit aliud quod parte quadam et specie, ut diximus, differat. Haec distribuitur in tria genera: publicum, commune, singulare. Publicum est quod civitas universa aliqua de causa frequentat, ut ludi, dies festus, bellum. Commune, quod accidit omnibus eodem fere tempore, ut messis, vindemia, calor, frigus. Singulare autem est quod aliqua de causa privatim alicui solet accidere, ut nuptiae, sacrificium, funus, convivium, somnus.

41 Modus autem est in quo, quemadmodum et quo animo factum sit, quaeritur. Eius partes sunt prudentia et imprudentia. Prudentiae autem<sup>2</sup> ratio quaeritur ex eis, quae clam, palam, vi, persuasione fecerit. Imprudentia autem in purgationem confer- tur, cuius partes sunt inscientia, casus, necessitas,

---

<sup>1</sup> Consideratur . . . horum omitted by Anonymus (RLM 309, 7): bracketed by Knackstedt, Weidner and Ströbel.

<sup>2</sup> autem bracketed by Ernesti.

---

* This apparent contradiction is cleared up by the fuller statement of Fortunatianus (RLM 104, 23–27): acts performed openly are characterized by violence, passion and daring, secret acts by deceit, fraud, etc.

takes into account the time of the year, of the month, the day, the night, the watch, the hour, and any part of any of these.

40 XXVII. An occasion is a period of time offering a convenient opportunity for doing or not doing something. And it is on the matter of opportunity that occasion differs from time: for both seem to be the same in genus, but under the category of time a space is fixed and limited in some way because the action is viewed as occurring in a period of time, several years, one year, or some part of a year, but under the category of occasion it is understood that to the space of time there is added the concept of an opportunity for performing the action. Therefore though occasion is of the same genus as time, it is something else, because it differs from it in some respect and, as we have said, belongs to a different species. Occasion falls into three classes, public, general, particular. A public occasion is one in which for some reason the whole community takes part, as games, a holiday, or war. A general occasion is one which affects all people at about the same time, as harvest, vintage, hot weather, or cold weather. A particular occasion, finally, is one which for some reason affects some one individually, as a wedding, a sacrifice, a funeral, a banquet, or sleep.

41 Manner, again, is the category under which one inquires how and in what state of mind the act was performed. Its parts are intention and lack of intention. Now we seek to calculate one's intention from the acts which one performed secretly or openly,<sup>a</sup> by the use of force or by persuasion. Lack of intention, on the other hand, is related to justification, the sub-heads of which are ignorance, in affectionem animi, hoc est, molestiam, iracundiam, amorem et cetera quae in simili genere versantur.

CICERO

Facultates sunt aut quibus facilius fit aut sine quibus aliquid confici non potest.

XXVIII. Adiunctum negotio autem id intellegitur quod maius et quod minus et quod aequae magnum et quod simile erit ei negotio quo de agitur, et quod contrarium et quod disparatum, et genus et pars et eventus. Maius et minus et aequae magnum ex vi et ex numero et ex figura negoti, sicut ex statura 42 corporis, consideratur. Simile autem ex specie comparabili aut ex conferenda atque assimilanda natura iudicatur. Contrarium est quod positum in genere diverso ab eo cui contrarium dicitur, plurimum distat, ut frigus calori, vitae mors. Disparatum autem est id quod ab aliqua re praepositione negationis separatur, hoc modo: sapere et non sapere. Genus est quod partes aliquas amplectitur, ut cupiditas. Pars est quae subest generi, ut amor, avaritia. Eventus est exitus alicuius negoti, in quo quaeri solet quid ex quaque re evenerit, eveniat, eventurum sit. Quare hoc in genere, ut commode quid eventurum sit ante animo colligi possit, quid quaque ex re soleat evenire

---

* Examples given by Victorinus in his commentary on the de Inventione (RLM, p. 227) may throw some light on what Cicero meant by this obscure passage. Quoting from the first Catilinarian the sentence, "Publius Scipio the Pontifex Maximus though a private citizen killed Tiberius Gracchus who was only slightly weakening the stability of the state; shall we, the consuls, put up with Catiline who is trying to lay waste the whole world with fire and sword," he then illustrates "values" of words and of person. "Lay waste" is "greater" than "weaken," "world" is "greater" than accident and necessity, and to emotions, such as annoyance, anger, love, and the others belonging to the same class.

Facilities are the conditions which make something easier to do, or without which it cannot be accomplished.

42 XXVIII. By adjunct of an action we mean something that is greater or less than the action in question or of equal magnitude or similar to it, also its contrary and negative, and anything bearing the relation of genus or species or result. The concept of greater and less and of equality of size is derived from an examination of the values and numbers involved, and from the form of the action, just as if we were considering the stature of a body. Similarity is decided on the basis of comparable appearance and natural characteristics which can be set side by side and likened one to another.<sup>a</sup> Contrary is that which, placed in a class different from that to which it is said to be contrary, is as far as possible removed from it, for example hot and cold, life and death. Negative is that which is distinguished from something by a prefix meaning "not," as intelligent, unintelligent. Genus is a term embracing several species, for example, desire. A species is a subdivision of a genus, for example, love, avarice. Result is the outcome of any action; in this connexion it is customary to inquire what happened after each thing, what is happening, and what will happen. Therefore, in order that it may be possible to reason accurately beforehand as to what is going to happen, it is necessary to consider under "state," and "Catiline" is more to be feared than "Gracchus." As regards numbers, "two consuls" are "greater" than "Scipio."

CICERO

considerandum est, hoc modo: Ex arrogantia odium, ex insolentia arrogantia.

43 Quarta autem pars est ex eis<sup>1</sup> quas negotiis dicebamus esse attributas consecutio. In hac eae res quaeruntur, quae gestum negotium consequuntur: primum, quod factum est, quo id nomine appellari conveniat; deinde eius facti qui sint principes et inventores, qui denique auctoritatis eius et inventionis comprobatores atque aemuli; deinde ecquae de ea re aut eius rei sit lex, consuetudo, pactio, iudicium, scientia, artificium; deinde natura eius, evenire vulgo soleat an insolenter et raro; postea homines id sua auctoritate comprobare an offendere in eis consueverint; et cetera quae factum aliquid similiter confestim aut ex intervallo solent consequi. Deinde postremo attendendum est, num quae res ex eis rebus quae positae sunt in partibus honestatis aut utilitatis consequantur; de quibus in deliberativo genere causae distinctius erit dicendum. Ac negotiis quidem fere res haec, quas commemoravimus, sunt attributae.

44 XXIX. Omnis autem argumentatio quae ex eis locis quos commemoravimus sumetur, aut probabilis aut necessaria debet esse. Etenim, ut breviter describamus, argumentatio videtur esse inventum aliquo ex genere rem aliquam aut probabiliter ostendens aut necessarie demonstrans.

Necessarie demonstrantur ea quae aliter ac dicuntur nec fieri nec probari possunt, hoc modo: "Si peperit, cum viro concubuit." Hoc genus argumentandi, this head what is the usual result of each thing; for example, arrogance begets hatred, and pride begets arrogance.

<sup>1</sup> After eis Oudendorp and Ströbel add rebus.

43 The fourth class of what are called attributes of actions, is consequence. Under this category those things are sought which ensue from an action being performed. First, by what name shall the act be designated? Secondly, who are the chief agents and the originators of this undertaking, and who approve or emulate this example and innovation? Again, is there any law about this, any custom, compact, judicial decision, scientific knowledge or set of rules? Then the nature of the event, whether it is wont to occur frequently or rarely and exceptionally? Furthermore, have men been in the habit of giving such a case the approval of their authority, or of taking offence at it? And all other things are to be considered which are wont to follow an action in the same way, either immediately or after an interval. Finally, it should be noted whether any of the things which are classed under honour or advantage ensue. A more detailed account of this will have to be given in connexion with the deliberative style of oratory. The list which I have given covers approximately the attributes of actions.

44 XXIX. All argumentation drawn from these topics which we have mentioned will have to be either probable or irrefutable. For, to define it briefly, an argument seems to be a device of some sort to demonstrate with probability or prove irrefutably.

Those things are proved irrefutably which cannot happen or be proved otherwise than as stated; for example, "If she has borne a child, she has lain with a man." This style of argument which is used for quod in necessaria demonstratione versatur, maxime tractatur in dicendo aut per complexionem aut per enumerationem aut per simplicem conclusionem.

CICERO

- 45 Complexio est in qua, utrum concesseris, reprehenditur, ad hunc modum: "Si improbus est, cur uteris? si probus, cur accusas?" Enumeratio est in qua pluribus rebus expositis et ceteris infirmatis una reliqua necessario confirmatur, hoc pacto: "Necesse est aut inimicitarum causa ab hoc esse occisum aut metus aut spei aut alicuius amici gratia aut, si horum nihil est, ab hoc non esse occisum; nam sine causa maleficium susceptum non potest esse: si neque inimicitiae fuerunt nec metus ullus nec spes ex morte illius alicuius commodi neque ad amicum huius aliquem mors illius pertinebat, relinquitur igitur ut ab hoc non sit occisus." Simplex autem conclusio ex necessaria consecutione conficitur, hoc modo: "Si vos me istuc eo tempore fecisse dicitis, ego autem eo ipso tempore trans mare fui, relinquitur ut id quod dicitis non modo non fecerim, sed ne potuerim quidem facere." Atque hoc diligenter oportebit videre, ne quo pacto genus hoc refelli possit, ut ne confirmatio modum in se argumentationis solum<sup>1</sup> habeat et quandam similitudinem necessariae conclusionis, verum ipsa argumentatio ex necessaria ratione consistat.

- 46 Probabile autem est id quod fere solet fieri aut quod in opinione positum est aut quod habet in se ad haec quandam similitudinem, sive id falsum est

<sup>1</sup> solum before modum S: before habeat P<sup>2</sup>: in margin J: bracketed by Weidner: omitted by Ströbel.

---

<sup>a</sup> For illustrations of this form of argument see Cicero, in Verrem I, 36, and Antiphon, On the Murder of Herodes, 57.

rigorous proof, generally in speaking takes the form of a dilemma, or of an enumeration or of a simple 45 inference. A dilemma is a form of argument in which you are refuted, whichever alternative you grant, after this fashion: "If he is a scoundrel, why are you intimate with him? If he is an honest man, why accuse him?" Enumeration is a form of argument in which several possibilities are stated, and when all but one have been disproved, this one is irrefutably demonstrated; the following is an example: "He must have been killed by the defendant either because of his enmity to him, or through fear or hope or to gratify a friend; if none of these statements is true, he cannot have been killed by the defendant. For a crime cannot be committed without a motive. If there was no enmity, and no fear, and no hope of any advantages from his death and his death was of no interest to any friend of the defendant, it therefore follows that the defendant did not kill him." <sup>a</sup> A simple inference arises from a necessary consequence, as follows: "If you say that I did this at that time, but at that particular time I was overseas, it follows that I not only did not do what you say, but that I was not even in a position to do it." And it will be necessary to keep a sharp watch that this kind of argument cannot be refuted in any way, so that the proof may not contain in itself only a form of argument and a mere appearance of a necessary conclusion, but rather that the argument may rest on rigorous reasoning.

46 That is probable which for the most part usually comes to pass, or which is a part of the ordinary beliefs of mankind, or which contains in itself some resemblance to these qualities, whether such re-

CICERO

sive verum. In eo genere quod fere fieri solet probabile huiusmodi est: "Si mater est, diligit filium: si avarus est, neglegit ius iurandum." In eo autem quod in opinione positum est, huiusmodi sunt probabilia: Impiis apud inferos poenas esse praeparatas; eos qui philosophiae dent operam non arbitrari deos esse. XXX. Similitudo autem in contrariis, et ex paribus, in eis rebus quae sub eandem rationem cadunt maxime spectatur. In contrariis, hoc modo: "Nam si eis qui imprudentes laeserunt ignosci convenit, eis qui necessario profuerunt haberi 47 gratiam non oportet." Ex pari, sic: "Nam ut locus sine portu navibus esse non potest tutus, sic animus sine fide stabilis amicis non potest esse." In eis rebus quae sub eandem rationem cadunt hoc modo probabile consideratur: "Nam si Rhodiis turpe non est portorium locare, ne Hermocreonti quidem turpe est conducere." Haec tum vera sunt, hoc pacto: "Quoniam cicatrix est, fuit vulnus"; tum veri similia, hoc modo: "Si multus erat in calceis pulvis, ex itinere eum venire oportebat."

Omne autem (ut certas quasdam in partes tribuamus) probabile quod sumitur ad argumentationem aut signum est aut credibile aut iudicatum aut 48 comparabile. Signum est quod sub sensum aliquem cadit et quiddam significat quod ex ipso profectum videtur, quod aut ante fuerit aut in ipso negotio aut

---

<sup>a</sup> Quoted by Aristotle, Rhet. 1397a, 13 ff. from an unknown poet (possibly Agathon or Theodectas).

<sup>b</sup> The latter half of this parallel is given in Aristotle, Eudemian Ethics, 1237b, 12.

<sup>c</sup> The same example, but with the name Diomedon, is given in Aristotle's Rhet. 1397a, 25.

semblance be true or false. In the class of things which for the most part usually come to pass are probabilities of this sort: "If she is his mother, she loves him." "If he is avaricious, he disregards his oath." Under the head of ordinary beliefs or opinions come probabilities of this sort: "Punishment awaits the wicked in the next world." "Philosophers are atheists." XXX. Resemblance is seen mostly in contraries, in analogies, and in those things which fall under the same principle. In contraries, as follows: "For if it is right for me to pardon those who have wronged me unintentionally, I ought not to be grateful to those who have assisted me because they 47 could not help it." <sup>a</sup> In analogies, thus: "For as a place without a harbour cannot be safe for ships, so a mind without integrity cannot be relied on by friends." <sup>b</sup> In the case of those things which fall under the same principle, probability is considered after this fashion: "For if it is not disgraceful for the Rhodians to farm out their customs-duties, neither is it disgraceful for Hermocreon to take the contract." <sup>c</sup> Arguments of this kind are sometimes rigorous—for example: "Since there is a scar, there has been a wound"—sometimes they are only plausible, for instance: "If there was much dust on his shoes, he must have been on a journey."

For the sake of making definite subdivision we may say that all probability that is used in argument is either a sign, or something credible, or a point on which judgement has been given, or something which 48 affords an opportunity for comparison. A sign is something apprehended by one of the senses and indicating something that seems to follow logically as a result of it: the sign may have occurred before post sit consecutum, et tamen indiget testimoni et gravioris confirmationis, ut cruor, fuga, pallor, pulvis, et quae his sunt similia. Credibile est quod sine ullo teste auditoris opinione firmatur, hoc modo: "Nemo est qui non liberos suos incolumes et beatos esse cupiat." Iudicatum est res assensione aut auctoritate aut iudicio alicuius aut aliquorum comprobata. Id tribus in generibus spectatur, religioso, communi, approbato. Religiosum est quod iurati legibus iudicarunt. Commune est quod homines vulgo probarunt et secuti sunt, huiusmodi: ut maioribus natu assurgatur, ut supplicum misereatur. Approbatum est quod homines, cum dubium esset quale haberi oporteret, sua constituerunt auctoritate, velut Gracchi patris factum populus Romanus qui eum<sup>1</sup> eo quod insciente collega in censura nihil<sup>2</sup> gessit post cen-

49 suram consulem fecit. Comparabile autem est quod in rebus diversis similem aliquam rationem continet. Eius partes sunt tres: imago, collatio, exemplum. Imago est oratio demonstrans corporum aut naturarum similitudinem. Collatio est oratio rem cum re ex similitudine conferens. Exemplum est quod rem auctoritate aut casu alicuius hominis aut negoti

<sup>1</sup> After eum the MSS. have ob id factum; bracketed by Oudendorp. eo is omitted by J.

<sup>2</sup> nonnihil Schuetz, Ströbel.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. [Aristotle] Rhet. ad Alex. 13, 1430b.

<sup>b</sup> Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus, consul 177 and 163, censor 169 B.C. with Gaius Claudius Pulcher. Their strict use of the censorial power aroused vigorous opposition, and they were charged with treason. Claudius was about to be convicted and Gracchus acquitted, but he refused to accept a divided verdict, and both were acquitted. Details of the story vary in different versions. The text here given is obscure and may be corrupt.

the event or in immediate connexion with it, or have followed after it, and yet needs further evidence and corroboration; examples might be, blood, flight, pallor, dust, and the like.<sup>a</sup> A statement is credible which is supported by the opinion of the auditor without corroborating evidence: for example, "There is no one who does not wish his children to be safe and happy." Judgement is the approval of an act by the assent or authority or judicial decision of some person or persons. It may be divided into three classes, according as the judgement is supported by religious sanction, by the common practice of mankind, or by some special act of approval. A judgement has religious sanction if it has been rendered by judges under oath in accordance with law. A judgement rests on the common practice of mankind if all men in general have approved of it or have followed it, as for example, rising out of respect to elders, or pitying suppliants. A special act of approval is a case in which there was doubt as to how an event was to be regarded and men have settled it by an authoritative vote; for example, the Roman people approved the acts of the elder Gracchus by electing him consul after his censorship because during his censorship he had performed no act without the knowledge of

49 his colleague.<sup>b</sup> Lastly, probability which depends on comparison involves a certain principle of similarity running through diverse material. It has three subdivisions, similitude, parallel, example. A similitude is a passage setting forth a likeness of individuals or characters. A parallel is a passage putting one thing beside another on the basis of their resemblances. An example supports or weakens a case by appeal to precedent or experience, citing confirmat aut infirmat. Horum exempla et descriptiones in praeceptis elocutionis cognoscentur.

CICERO

Ac fons quidem confirmationis, ut facultas tulit, apertus est nec minus dilucide quam rei natura ferebat demonstratus est; quemadmodum autem quaeque constitutio et pars constitutionis et omnis controversia, sive in ratione sive in scripto versabitur, tractari debeat et quae in quamque argumentationes convenient, singillatim in secundo libro de uno quoque genere dicemus. In praesentia tantummodo numeros et modos et partes argumentandi confuse et permixtim dispersimus; post discripte et electe in genus quodque causae, quid cuique conveniat, ex hac copia digeremus.

50 Atque inveniri quidem omnis ex his locis argumentatio poterit: inventa exornari et certas in partes distingui et suavissimum est et summe necessarium et ab artis scriptoribus maxime neglectum. Quare et de ea praeceptione nobis et in hoc loco dicendum visum est, ut ad inventionem argumentandi ratio<sup>1</sup> adiungeretur. Et magna cum cura et diligentia locus hic omnis considerandus est, quod rei non solum magna utilitas est, sed praecipienda quoque summa difficultas.

<sup>1</sup> argumentandi ratio u: ratio argumentandi v, : argumentandi J: argumenti M.

---

<sup>o</sup> Infra, §§ 79 ff.

<sup>b</sup> Or rhythms and melodies, cf. Horace, Epist. II, 2, 144: verae numerosque modosque ediscere vitae.

some person or historical event. Instances and descriptions of these principles will be given with the rules for style.<sup>a</sup>

Now the sources of confirmatory arguments have been revealed as the occasion offered, and explained as clearly as the nature of the subject required. But in the second book we shall discuss in connexion with each class individually what treatment is to be given to each issue or subdivision of an issue or to the whole controversy, whether it depends on general reasoning or on written documents, and also what forms of argumentation are appropriate for each issue. For the present we have merely scattered in an irregular and random manner the categories, rules,<sup>b</sup> and classes of argumentation. Later we shall choose and arrange, and from this material we shall explain in order what is appropriate to each kind of case.

50 Furthermore every kind of argument can be discovered under these headings: but it is the embellishment of the argument once it has been discovered, and the arrangement of it in definite divisions, which make the speech attractive to the audience; this elaboration of the argument is necessary to the highest degree, and yet has been greatly neglected by writers on the art of rhetoric. For that reason it seemed to us necessary to speak about the rules for this and to do so at this point so that the subject of invention of arguments may be combined with the theory of argumentation. This topic must be considered with great care and diligence not only because it is extremely useful, but also because there is great difficulty in formulating rules.

51 XXXI. Omnis igitur argumentatio aut per inductionem tractanda est aut per ratiocinationem.

Inductio est oratio quae rebus non dubiis captat assensiones eius quicum instituta est; quibus assensionibus facit ut illi dubia quaedam res propter similitudinem earum rerum quibus assensit probetur; velut apud Socraticum Aeschinen demonstrat Socrates cum Xenophontis uxore et cum ipso Xenophonte Aspasia locutam: "Dic mihi, quaeso, Xenophontis uxor, si vicina tua melius habeat aurum quam tu habes, utrum illudne an tuum malis?" "Illud," inquit. "Quid si vestem aut ceterum ornatum muliebrem preti maioris habeat quam tu habes, tuumne an illius malis?" Respondit: "Illius vero." "Age sis," inquit, "quid si virum illa meliorem habeat
52 quam tu habes, utrumne tuum malis an illius?" Hic mulier erubuit. Aspasia autem sermonem cum ipso Xenophonte instituit. "Quaeso," inquit, "Xenophon, si vicinus tuus equum meliorem habeat quam tuus est, tuumne equum malis an illius?" "Illius," inquit. "Quid si fundum meliorem habeat quam tu habes, utrum tandem fundum habere malis?" "Illum," inquit, "meliorem scilicet." "Quid si uxorem meliorem habeat quam tu habes, utrum tuamne an <sup>1</sup> illius malis?" Atque hic Xenophon quoque ipse tacuit. Post Aspasia: "Quoniam uterque vestrum," inquit, "id mihi solum non respondit quod ego solum audire

<sup>1</sup> tuamne an added by v.

---

* I have kept the traditional terms, induction and deduction, but it should be understood that Cicero was describing a rhetorical, not a logical, kind of reasoning, and that his use of such terms is loose and, at times, careless. The process

51 XXXI. All argumentation, then, is to be carried on either by induction or by deduction.<sup>a</sup>

Induction is a form of argument which leads the person with whom one is arguing to give assent to certain undisputed facts; through this assent it wins his approval of a doubtful proposition because this resembles the facts to which he has assented. For instance, in a dialogue by Aeschines Socraticus Socrates reveals that Aspasia reasoned thus with Xenophon's wife and with Xenophon himself: "Please tell me, madam, if your neighbour had a better gold ornament than you have, would you prefer that one or your own?" "That one," she replied. "Now, if she had dresses and other feminine finery more expensive than you have, would you prefer yours or hers?" "Hers, of course," she replied. "Well now, if she had a better husband than you have, would you prefer your husband or 52 hers?" At this the woman blushed. But Aspasia then began to speak to Xenophon. "I wish you would tell me, Xenophon," she said, "if your neighbour had a better horse than yours, would you prefer your horse or his?" "His," was his answer. "And if he had a better farm than you have, which farm would you prefer to have?" "The better farm, naturally," he said. "Now, if he had a better wife than you have, would you prefer yours or his?" And at this Xenophon, too, himself was silent. Then Aspasia: "Since both of you have failed to tell me the only thing I wished to hear, I myself will tell you which he calls induction might more accurately be described as analogy, and under deduction he describes not the syllogism of Aristotle, but the enthymeme or epicheireme, a rhetorical adaptation of the syllogism. Cf. p. 104, note a.

volueram, egomet dicam quid uterque cogitet. Nam et tu, mulier, optimum virum vis habere et tu, Xenophon, uxorem habere lectissimam maxime vis. Quare, nisi hoc perfeceritis, ut neque vir melior neque femina lectior in terris sit, profecto semper id quod optimum putabitis esse, multo maxime requiretis ut et tu maritus sis quam optimae et haec quam optimo viro nupta sit.<sup>1</sup> Hic cum rebus non dubiis assensum est, factum est propter similitudinem, ut etiam illud quod dubium videretur, si qui separatim quaereret, id pro certo propter rationem rogandi concederetur.

53 Hoc modo sermonis plurimum Socrates usus est propterea quod nihil ipse afferre ad persuadendum volebat, sed ex eo quod sibi ille dederat quicum disputabat, aliquid conficere malebat, quod ille ex eo quod iam concessisset necessario approbare deberet.

XXXII. Hoc in genere praecipendum nobis videtur primum, ut illud quod inducemus per similitudinem eiusmodi sit ut sit necesse concedere. Nam ex quo postulabimus nobis illud quod dubium sit concedi, dubium esse id ipsum non oportebit. Deinde illud cuius confirmandi causa fiet inductio, videndum est, ut simile eis rebus sit quas res quasi non dubias ante induxerimus, nam aliquid ante concessum nobis esse nihil proderit si ei dissimile erit id cuius causa illud concedi primum voluerimus; deinde ne intellegat quo spectent illae primae inductiones et ad quem sint

<sup>1</sup> ut . . . sit bracketed by Weidner and Ströbel.

---

<sup>a</sup> Aesch. Socr. Rel. (Krauss). Cf. for a discussion of the content of this dialogue, Natorp in Philologus li (1892), pp. 489-500.

what you both are thinking. That is, you, madam, wish to have the best husband, and you, Xenophon, desire above all things to have the finest wife. Therefore unless you can contrive that there be no better man or finer woman on earth you will certainly always be in dire want of what you consider best, namely, that you be the husband of the very best of wives, and that she be wedded to the very best of men." <sup>a</sup> In this instance, because assent has been given to undisputed statements, the result is that the point which would appear doubtful if asked by itself is through analogy conceded as certain, and this is due to the method employed in putting the 53 question. Socrates used this conversational method a good deal, because he wished to present no arguments himself, but preferred to get a result from the material which the interlocutor had given him—a result which the interlocutor was bound to approve as following necessarily from what he had already granted.

XXXII. In argumentation of this kind I think the first rule to lay down is that the statement which we introduce as a basis for analogy ought to be of such a kind that its truth must be granted. For a statement on the strength of which we expect a doubtful point to be conceded, ought not itself to be doubtful. In the second place, one must make sure that the statement to be proved by the induction resembles those statements which we have presented previously as indisputable, for something granted to us previously will be no help if it is unlike the statement for the proof of which we wished the first point to be conceded. In the next place the interlocutor must not perceive what is the aim of those first examples

54 exitum perventurae. Nam qui videt, si ei rei quam primo rogetur recte assenserit, illam quoque rem quae sibi displiceat esse necessario concedendam, plerumque aut non respondendo aut male respondendo longius rogationem procedere non sinit; quare ratione rogationis imprudens ab eo quod concessit ad id quod non vult concedere deducendus est. Extremum autem aut taceatur oportet aut concedatur aut negetur. Si negabitur, aut ostendenda similitudo est earum rerum quae ante concessae sunt aut alia utendum inductione. Si concedetur, concludenda est argumentatio. Si tacebitur, elicienda responsio est aut, quoniam taciturnitas imitatur confessionem, pro eo ac si concessum sit concludere oportebit argumentationem. Ita fit hoc genus argumentandi tripertitum: prima pars ex similitudine constat una pluribusve; altera ex eo quod concedi volumus cuius causa similitudines adhibitae sunt; tertia ex conclusione, quae aut confirmat concessionem aut quid ex ea conficiatur ostendit.

55 XXXIII. Sed quia non satis alicui videbitur dilucide demonstratum, nisi quid ex civili causarum genere exempli subiecerimus, videtur eiusmodi quoque utendum exemplo, non quo praeceptio differat aut aliter hoc in sermone atque in dicendo sit utendum, sed ut eorum voluntati satis fiat qui id quod aliquo in loco viderunt, alio in loco, nisi monstratum est, nequeunt cognoscere. Ergo in hac causa, quae apud Graecos est pervagata, cum Epaminondas, Thebano-

54 or to what conclusion they will lead. For one who sees that if he gives the proper answer to the first question that he is asked, he will be compelled to grant also a proposition which is displeasing to him, will generally put a stop to further questioning by not answering or by answering incorrectly. Therefore by careful direction of the questions he must be led without his knowing it from the statement which he has granted to that which he does not wish to grant. Finally, he must either refuse to answer, or concede your point or deny it. If he denies it, you must show that it resembles the points which have previously been conceded, or use another induction. If he concedes the point, the argument must be brought to a close. If he refuses to answer, he must be lured into giving an answer, or since "silence gives consent" you must finish the argument just as if he had conceded your point. Thus this style of argument is threefold: the first part consists of one or more similar cases, the second of the point which we wish to have conceded, for the sake of which the similar cases have been cited; the third is the conclusion which reinforces the concession or shows what results follow from it.

55 XXXIII. But because some may think the demonstration is not sufficiently clear unless we add an example from the field of public issues, it seems desirable to give an example of this sort also, not that the principle is different or that it is used differently in conversation and in a speech, but to satisfy the desire of those who after seeing something in one place cannot recognize it in another unless it is pointed out. Therefore let us take the case, well known among the Greeks, of Epaminondas rum imperator, ei <sup>1</sup> qui sibi ex lege praetor successerat exercitum non tradidit et, cum paucos ipse dies contra legem exercitum tenuisset, Lacedaemonios funditus vicit, poterit accusator argumentatione uti per inductionem, cum scriptum legis contra sententiam defendet, ad hunc modum: " Si, iudices, id quod Epaminondas ait legis scriptorem sensisse ascribat ad legem et addat hanc exceptionem: extra quam si quis rei publicae causa exercitum non tradiderit, patiemini? Non opinor. Quid si vosmet ipsi, quod a vestra religione et a sapientia remotissimum est, istius honoris causa hanc eandem exceptionem iniussu populi ad legem ascribi iubeatis, populus Thebanus id patieturne fieri? Profecto non patietur. Quod ergo ascribi ad legem nefas est, id sequi, quasi ascriptum sit, rectum vobis videatur? Novi vestram intellegentiam; non potest ita videri, iudices. Quodsi litteris corrigi neque ab illo neque a vobis scriptoris voluntas potest, videte, ne multo indignius sit id re et iudicio vestro mutari quod ne verbo quidem commutari potest."

Ac de inductione quidem satis in praesentia dictum videtur. Nunc deinceps ratiocinationis vim et naturam consideremus.

XXXIV. Ratiocinatio est oratio ex ipsa re probabile aliquid eliciens quod expositum et per se cognitum the Theban general. He did not hand over the army to the officer who had legally succeeded him as commander, and keeping the army under his own command for a few days contrary to law, won a decisive victory over the Lacedaemonians. The prosecutor will be able to use the argument by analogy in defending the letter of the law against 56 the intent, in the following way: "If, gentlemen of the jury, Epaminondas should add to the law what he says the author of the law intended, and should subjoin this proviso, 'except in the case that a commander shall for the common weal refuse to hand over his army,' will you permit it? I think not. Or again, if you yourselves—though this is decidedly out of keeping with your wisdom and punctiliousness—if you yourselves without consulting the people should out of respect to him order this same proviso to be added to the law, will the people of Thebes permit this? Most assuredly not. Would it then seem right to you to follow a principle as if it were a part of the law, though it is wrong to make it a part of the law? I know your intelligence. It cannot seem right to you, gentlemen of the jury. Therefore if the intent of the law-maker cannot be amended in writing either by him or by you, beware lest it be much worse to alter in deed, i.e., by your judicial act, what cannot be changed even in word."<sup>a</sup>

<sup>1</sup> ei J: quod ei M, Ströbel.

* For a discussion of this trial v. Bonner and Smith in Cl. Phil. xl (1945), pp. 18, 19.

57 Enough has been said, I think, for the present about induction. In the next place let us consider the essence and nature of the syllogism.

XXXIV. Deduction or syllogistic reasoning is a form of argument which draws a probable conclusion from the fact under consideration itself; when this probable conclusion is set forth and recognized by sua se vi et ratione confirmet. Hoc de genere qui diligentius considerandum putaverunt, cum idem in usu dicendi sequerentur, paululum in praecipiendo ratione dissenserunt. Nam partim quinque eius partes esse dixerunt, partim non plus quam in tres partes posse distribui putaverunt. Eorum controversiam non incommodum videtur cum utrorumque ratione exponere. Nam et brevis est et non eiusmodi ut alteri prorsus nihil dicere putentur, et locus hic nobis in dicendo minime neglegendus videtur.

CICERO

58 Qui putant in quinque tribui partes oportere, aiunt primum convenire exponere summam argumentationis, ad hunc modum: "Melius accurantur quae consilio geruntur quam quae sine consilio administrantur." Hanc primam partem numerant; eam deinceps rationibus variis et quam copiosissimis verbis approbari putant oportere, hoc modo: "Domus ea quae ratione regitur omnibus est instructior rebus et apparatus quam ea quae temere et nullo consilio administratur. Exercitus is cui praepositus est sapiens et callidus imperator omnibus partibus commodius regitur quam is qui stultitia et temeritate alicuius administratur. Eadem navigi ratio est. Nam navis optime cursum conficit ea quae scientis-

59 simo gubernatore utitur." Cum propositio sit hoc pacto approbata et duae partes transierint ratiocina-

---

<sup>a</sup> This is description rather than definition. Cf. note on p. 92.

<sup>b</sup> Or possibly, reading docendo, in teaching.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Cicero, de Natura Deorum, II, 85, as an example of the way in which this form of argument is given a more artistic expression. The argument, common with the Stoics, derives from Plato, Timaeus.

itself it proves itself by its own import and reasoning.<sup>a</sup> Those who have thought this form of argument worthy of a very careful consideration differ somewhat in their formulation of rules, although they follow the same principles in the actual practice of speaking. For some have said that it has five parts and others have thought that it could be divided into not more than three parts. I think it will not be out of place to explain this controversy and give the reason on both sides. For it will not take long and is not of such a nature as to produce the impression that either side is talking nonsense, and we think that this topic is by no means to be neglected in speaking.<sup>b</sup>

58 Those who think that the syllogism ought to be divided into five parts say that first one should state the basis of the argument in this way: "Things that are done by design are managed better than those which are governed without design." This they count as the first part. Then they think it should be supported by a variety of reasons and the greatest possible fullness of expression, in the following manner: "The house that is managed in accordance with a reasoned plan, is in every respect better equipped and furnished than one which is governed in a haphazard way with a total lack of design. The army that is commanded by a wise and shrewd general is guided in all ways more advantageously than one which is governed by someone's folly and rashness. The same line of reasoning is applicable to navigation, for the ship which has the services of the most expert pilot makes the most successful 59 voyage."<sup>c</sup> When the major premise has been proved in this fashion and two parts of the syllogism have

tionis, tertia in parte aiunt, quod ostendere velis, id ex vi propositionis oportere adsumere, hoc pacto: "Nihil autem omnium rerum melius, quam omnis mundus, administratur." Huius assumptionis quarto in loco aliam porro inducunt approbationem, hoc modo: "Nam et signorum ortus et obitus definitum quendam ordinem servant et annuae commutationes non modo quadam ex necessitudine semper eodem modo fiunt, verum ad utilitates quoque rerum omnium accommodate, et diurnae nocturnaeque vicissitudines nulla in re unquam mutatae quicquam nocuerunt." Quae signo sunt omnia non mediocri quodam consilio naturam mundi administrari. Quinto inducunt loco complexionem eam quae aut id infert solum quod ex omnibus partibus cogitur, hoc modo: "Consilio igitur mundus administratur," aut unum in locum cum conduxerit breviter propositionem et assumptionem, adiungit quid ex his conficiatur, ad hunc modum: "Quodsi melius geruntur ea quae consilio quam quae sine consilio administrantur, nihil autem omnium rerum melius administratur quam omnis mundus, consilio igitur mundus administratur." Quinquepertitam igitur hoc pacto putant esse argumentationem.

60 XXXV. Qui autem tripertitam putant esse, ei non aliter tractari putant oportere argumentationem, sed partitionem horum reprehendunt. Negant enim neque a propositione neque ab assumptione approbationes earum separari oportere, neque propositionem absolutam neque assumptionem sibi perfectam

---

* Cf. the discussion of this problem by Quintilian, V, xiv, 5 ff.

been completed, in the third part they say you should state as a minor premise what you wish to show, this being in line with the thought of the major premise; the following will be an example: "Of all things nothing is better governed than the universe." And then in the fourth place they introduce another proof, that is of this minor premise, in this way: "For the risings and the settings of the constellations keep a fixed order, and the changes of the seasons not only proceed in the same way by a fixed law but are also adapted to the advantage of all nature, and the alternation of night and day has never through any variations done any harm." All these points are proof that the nature of the world is governed by no ordinary intelligence. In the fifth place they put the conclusion, which either merely states the necessary deduction from all the parts, as follows: "Therefore the universe is administered by design," or after bringing the major premise and the minor premise together in one brief statement adds what follows from them, after this fashion: "Therefore if those things are administered better which are governed by design than those which are administered without design, and nothing is governed better than the universe, then the universe is governed by design." This is the way in which they think the argument is expressed in five parts.<sup>6</sup>

60 XXXV. Those, however, who think that it is threefold, hold that the argumentation should be treated in the same way, but criticize the division into five parts. For they say that the proofs ought not to be separated from the major premise and the minor premise, and that a major premise does not seem to them finished nor a minor premise complete which is videri quae approbatione confirmata non sit. Quare quas illi duas partes numerent, propositionem et approbationem, sibi unam partem videri, propositionem; quae si approbata non sit, propositio non sit argumentationis. Item, quae ab illis assumptio et assumptionis approbatio dicatur, eandem sibi assumptionem solam videri. Ita fit ut eadem ratione argumentatio tractata aliis tripertita, aliis quinquepertita videatur. Quare evenit ut res non tam ad usum dicendi pertineat quam ad rationem praeceptionis.

61 Nobis autem commodior illa partitio videtur esse quae in quinque partes tributa est, quam omnes ab Aristotele et Theophrasto profecti maxime secuti sunt. Nam quemadmodum illud superius genus argumentandi quod per inductionem sumitur maxime Socrates et Socratici tractarunt, sic hoc quod per ratiocinationem expolitur summe est ab Aristotele atque a Peripateticis<sup>1</sup> et Theophrasto frequentatum, deinde a rhetoribus eis qui elegantissimi atque artificiosissimi putati sunt. Quare autem nobis illa magis partitio probetur dicendum videtur, ne temere secuti putemur; et breviter dicendum, ne in huiusmodi rebus diutius quam ratio praecipendi postulat commoremur.

62 XXXVI. Si quadam in argumentatione satis est uti propositione et non oportet adiungere appro-

<sup>1</sup> atque a Peripateticis bracketed by Linsmayer and Kayser.

---

* Cicero is in error here. The Peripatetic syllogism had only three parts. The fivefold arrangement must derive from the rhetorical adaptation of syllogistic reasoning, perhaps the work of Hermagoras. The rhetorician used an adaptation of the logical syllogism either in the form of the not supported by proof. Therefore major premise and proof, which the other group count as two parts, seem to them to be one, namely major premise; if this is not proved, it could not be the major premise of the argument. Likewise, what is called by the other group minor premise and proof, seems to them merely minor premise. The result is that an argument treated in the same way seems to one group threefold and to another fivefold. Consequently the subject is not so important for the actual practice of oratory as it is for methods of instruction.

61 The division into five parts would seem to us to be more suitable. This has been adopted particularly by the followers of Aristotle and Theophrastus.<sup>a</sup> For just as that earlier form of argument which proceeds by induction was practised particularly by Socrates and the Socratics, so this which is elaborated in the form of a syllogism, was most largely used by Aristotle and by the Peripatetics and Theophrastus, and then was taken up by the teachers of rhetoric who have been regarded as most precise and accomplished in their art. But I think that I should explain why I favour this division so that I may not be thought to have followed it without due cause: and the explanation should be brief so that we may not linger on matters of this sort longer than our plan of instruction requires.

62 XXXVI. If in a given argument it is sufficient to use the major premise and is not necessary to add the enthymeme, a syllogism in which the major premise is only probable, or one in which one term is omitted, or the epicheireme, which is the technical term for the fivefold division here presented by Cicero. Cf. Thiele, Hermagoras, pp. 131-137, and ad Her. II, xviii, 27.

bationem propositionis, quadam autem in argumentatione infirma est propositio, nisi adiuncta sit approbatio, separatum est quiddam a propositione approbatio. Quod enim et adiungi et separari ab aliquo potest, id non potest idem esse quod est id ad quod adiungitur et a quo separatur. Est autem quaedam argumentatio in qua propositio non indiget approbationis, et quaedam in qua nihil valet sine approbatione, ut ostendemus. Separata igitur est a propositione approbatio. Ostendetur autem id, quod polliciti sumus, hoc modo: Quae propositio in se quiddam continet perspicuum et quod stare inter omnes necesse est, hanc velle approbare et firmare nihil attinet. Ea est huiusmodi: "Si, quo die ista caedes Romae facta est, ego Athenis eo die fui, in caede interesse non potui." Hoc quia perspicue verum est, nihil attinet approbari. Quare assumi statim oportet, hoc modo: "Fui autem Athenis eo die." Hoc si non constat, indiget approbationis; qua inducta complexio consequetur. Est igitur quaedam propositio quae non indiget approbatione. Nam esse quidem quandam quae indigeat, quid attinet ostendere, quod cuius facile perspicuum est? Quodsi ita est, ex hoc et ex eo quod proposueramus hoc conficitur, separatum esse quiddam a propositione approbationem. Sin autem ita est, falsum est non esse plus quam tripertitam argumentationem.

64 Simili modo liquet alteram quoque approbationem separatam esse ab assumptione. Si quadam in argumentatione satis est uti assumptione et non oportet adiungere approbationem assumptioni, quadam autem proof of the premise, but on the other hand in another argument the major premise is weak unless the proof be added, then the proof is something separate from the major premise. For what can be added to something and separated from it cannot be the same as that to which it is added and from which it is separated. There is, moreover, a form of argument in which the major premise does not require proof, and one in which it has no validity without proof as we shall show below. Proof is therefore separate from major premise. What we promised will be shown in the following way. There is no point in requiring proof or demonstration of a premise which contains a plain statement which must be granted by everyone. The following is an example: "If I was in Athens on the day on which the murder was committed at Rome, I could not have been present at the murder." Because this is obviously true there is no point in having it proved. Therefore we should pass immediately to the minor premise, as follows: "But I was at Athens on that day." If this is not granted, it needs proof, after which the conclusion follows. There is, therefore, a kind of major premise which does not need proof. What, then, is the point of showing that there is a premise which does need proof, for that can easily be seen by anyone? But if this is so, it follows from this statement and from my previous statement that proof is a thing separate from premise. And if this is so, it is untrue that an argument can have no more than three points.

64 In a similar way it is clear that the second proof may also be separated from the minor premise. If in a certain argument it is sufficient to use the minor premise and it is not necessary to add the proof to in argumentatione infirma est assumptio, nisi adiuncta sit approbatio, separatum quiddam extra assumptionem est approbatio. Est autem argumentatio quaedam in qua assumptio non indiget approbationis, quaedam autem in qua nihil valet sine approbatione, ut ostendemus. Separata igitur est ab assumptione approbatio. Ostendemus autem quod polliciti sumus 65 hoc modo: Quae perspicuam omnibus veritatem continet assumptio, nihil indiget approbationis. Ea est huiusmodi: "Si oportet velle sapere, dare operam philosophiae convenit." Haec propositio indiget approbationis; non enim perspicua est neque constat inter omnes propterea quod multi nihil prodesse philosophiam, plerique etiam obesse arbitrantur. Assumptio perspicua; est enim haec: "Oportet autem velle sapere." Hoc quia ipsum ex se perspicitur et verum esse intellegitur, nihil attinet approbari. Quare statim concludenda est argumentatio. Est ergo assumptio quaedam, quae approbationis non indiget; nam quandam indigere perspicuum est. Separata est igitur ab assumptione approbatio. Falsum ergo est non esse plus quam tripertitam 66 argumentationem. XXXVII. Atque ex his illud iam perspicuum est, esse quandam argumentationem in qua neque propositio neque assumptio indigeat approbationis, huiusmodi, ut certum quiddam et breve exempli causa ponamus: "Si summo opere sapientia petenda est, summo opere stultitia vitanda est: summo autem opere sapientia petenda est: summo igitur opere stultitia vitanda est." Hic et propositio et assumptio perspicua est; quare neutra quoque indiget approbatione. Ex hisce omnibus

CICERO

the premise, but in another argument the premise is weak unless the proof be added, then the proof is something different from the premise. There is, however, an argument in which the premise does not need proof and another in which it has no validity without the proof, as we shall show below. Therefore the proof is separate from the minor premise. We 65 shall show what we promised in this way: a minor premise which contains a truth plain to all does not need proof. Such an argument is of this nature: "If one ought to desire wisdom, it is proper to study philosophy." Here the major premise needs proof; for it is not plain nor agreed upon by everyone; for many think that philosophy is no help and not a few think it is a positive disadvantage. The minor premise, however, is clear; it is as follows: "One should desire wisdom." Because this is clear by itself and is known to be true, there is no point in proving it. Therefore the argument should be brought to a conclusion immediately. There is then a minor premise that does not need proof, and it is clear that some do need proof. Therefore proof is different from minor premise. It is, therefore, untrue that an argument cannot have more than 66 three parts. XXXVII. And from this it is now clear that there is a certain form of argument in which neither the major nor the minor premise needs proof of this sort (to give a brief and definite instance as illustration): "If wisdom is to be sought above all things, then folly is to be avoided above all things; but wisdom is to be sought above all things, therefore folly is to be avoided above all things." Here both the major and minor premise are clear, therefore neither needs proof. From all this it is clear that illud perspicuum est approbationem tum adiungi, tum non adiungi. Ex quo cognoscitur neque in propositione neque in assumptione contineri approbationem, sed utramque suo loco positam vim suam tanquam certam et propriam obtinere. Quodsi ita est, commode partiti sunt illi qui in quinque partes tribuerunt argumentationem.

- 67 Quinque igitur partes sunt eius argumentationis quae per ratiocinationem tractatur: Propositio, per quam locus is breviter exponitur, ex quo vis omnis oportet emanet ratiocinationis; approbatio, per quam id quod breviter expositum est rationibus affirmatum probabilius et apertius fit; assumptio, per quam id quod ex propositione ad ostendendum pertinet assumitur; assumptionis approbatio, per quam id quod assumptum est rationibus firmatur; complexio, per quam id quod conficitur ex omni argumentatione breviter exponitur. Quae plurimas habet argumentatio partes, ea constat ex his quinque partibus; secunda est quadripertita; tertia tripertita; dein bipertita; quod in controversia est. De una quoque parte potest alicui videri posse consistere. XXXVIII.
- 68 Eorum igitur quae constant exempla ponemus, horum quae dubia sunt rationes afferemus.

Quinquepertita argumentatio est huiusmodi: “Omnes leges, iudices, ad commodum rei publicae referre oportet et eas ex utilitate communi, non ex scriptione quae in litteris est interpretari. Ea enim virtute et sapientia maiores nostri fuerunt ut in sometimes the proof is added and sometimes not. From this it can be recognized that the proof is not contained in a major premise nor in a minor premise but that each occupying its own place has its own character which is, as I may say, definite and proper to itself. Therefore, if this is so, those have made a suitable arrangement who have divided this form of argument into five parts.

- 87 There are, then, five parts of an argument by deductive or syllogistic reasoning: major premise which sets forth briefly the principle from which springs the whole force and meaning of the syllogism; proof by which the brief statement of the major premise is supported by reasons and made plainer and more plausible; the minor premise in which is premised the point which on the basis of the major premise is pertinent to proving the case; the proof of the minor premise, by which what has been premised is established by reasons; the conclusion in which there is stated briefly what is proved by the whole deduction. The form of the syllogism that has the largest number of parts consists of these five; the second has four, the third three, the next two, but this is disputed; it is possible that some may
- 68 think that it can have only one part. XXXVIII. We shall give examples of those on which there is general agreement, and bring forward reasons for those which are in doubt.

The following is an example of a fivefold argument:
 “ It is right, gentlemen of the jury, to relate all laws to the advantage of the state and to interpret them with an eye to the public good and not according to their literal expression. For such was the uprightness and wisdom of our ancestors that in framing legibus scribendis nihil sibi aliud nisi salutem atque utilitatem rei publicae proponerent. Neque enim ipsi quod obsesset scribere volebant, et, si scripsissent, cum esset intellectum, repudiatum iri legem intellegebant. Nemo enim leges legum causa salvas esse vult, sed rei publicae, quod ex legibus omnes rem publicam optime putant administrari. Quam ob rem igitur leges servari oportet, ad eam causam scripta omnia interpretari convenit: hoc est, quoniam rei publicae servimus, ex rei publicae commodo atque utilitate interpretemur. Nam ut ex medicina nihil oportet putare proficisci, nisi quod ad corporis utilitatem spectet, quoniam eius causa est instituta, sic a legibus nihil convenit arbitrari, nisi quod rei publicae conducat, proficisci, quoniam eius causa sunt comparatae. Ergo in hoc quoque iudicio desinite litteras legis perscrutari et legem, ut aequum est, ex utilitate rei publicae considerate. Quid magis utile fuit Thebanis quam Lacedaemonios opprimi? Cui magis Epaminondam, Thebanorum imperatorem, quam victoriae Thebanorum consulere decuit? Quid hunc tanta Thebanorum gloria, tam claro atque exornato tropaeo carius aut antiquius habere convenit? Scripto videlicet legis omisso scriptoris sententiam considerare debebat. At hoc quidem satis consideratum est, nullam esse legem nisi rei publicae causa scriptam.

CICERO

laws they had no object in view except the safety and welfare of the state. They did not themselves intend to write a law which would prove harmful, and they knew that if they did pass such a law, it would be repealed when the defect was recognized. For no one wishes laws to be upheld merely for their own sake, but for the sake of the state, because everyone believes that the state is best governed when administered according to law. All written laws ought, then, to be interpreted in relation to the object for which laws ought to be observed: that is, since we are servants of the community, let us interpret the laws with an eye to the advantage and profit of the community. For as it is right to think that the art of medicine produces nothing except what looks to the health of the body, since it is for this purpose that medicine was founded, so we should believe that nothing comes from the laws except what conduces to the welfare of the state, since the laws were made for this purpose. Therefore in this trial also, cease to search the letter of the law and rather, as is just, examine the law in relation to the public welfare. What was more useful to Thebes than the defeat of Sparta? What should Epaminondas, the Theban commander, have had in mind more than the victory of Thebes? What should he have regarded as dearer or more precious than such a glorious exploit of the Thebans, than a trophy so honourable, so magnificent? It is obvious that he was bound to forget the letter of the law and to consider the intent of the law-maker. But certainly this point has been examined and established beyond a doubt, that no law has been passed except for the good of the state. He thought it, therefore,

CICERO

Summam igitur amentiam esse existimabat, quod scriptum esset rei publicae salutis causa, id non ex rei publicae salute interpretari. Quodsi leges omnes ad utilitatem rei publicae referri convenit, hic autem saluti rei publicae profuit, profecto non potest eodem facto et communibus fortunis consuluisse et legibus non obtemperasse."

70 XXXIX. Quattuor autem partibus constat argumentatio, cum aut proponimus aut assumimus sine approbatione. Id facere oportet, cum aut propositio ex se intellegitur aut assumptio perspicua est et nullius approbationis indiget. Propositionis approbatione praeterita quattuor ex partibus argumentatio tractatur, ad hunc modum: "Iudices, qui ex lege iurati iudicatis, obtemperare legibus debetis. Obtemperare autem legibus non potestis, nisi id quod scriptum est in lege sequimini. Quod enim certius legis scriptor testimonium voluntatis suae relinquere potuit quam quod ipse magna cum cura atque diligentia scripsit? Quodsi litterae non exstarent, magno opere eas requireremus, ut ex eis scriptoris voluntas cognosceretur; nec tamen Epaminondae permetteremus, ne si extra iudicium quidem esset, ut is nobis sententiam legis interpretaretur, nedum nunc istum patiamur, cum praesto lex sit, non ex eo quod apertissime scriptum est, sed ex eo quod suae causae convenit, scriptoris voluntatem interpretari. Quodsi vos, iudices, legibus obtemperare debetis et id facere non potestis, nisi id quod scriptum est in lege sequimini, quin istum contra legem fecisse iudicatis?"

---

* Preiswerk in his dissertation, De inventione orationum Ciceronianarum (Basel, 1905), p. 101, cites the following cases of the use of this form of argument in the orations of Cicero: pro Archia, 18-19; pro Caecina, 41-43; pro Murena 3-5; pro Quinctio, 48-50; pro Rabirio perd. 29, 30; pro Tullio, 41, 42.

stark madness not to interpret a law with an eye to the safety of the state when that law had been passed for the safety of the state. In view of this, if all laws ought to be related to the advantage of the state, and Epaminondas contributed to the safety of the state, surely he cannot by the same act have promoted the common interest and have failed to obey the laws." <sup>a</sup>

70 XXXIX. An argument consists of four parts when we state a premise, either major or minor, without giving the proof. This should be done either when the major premise is self-intelligible or when the minor premise is an obvious statement needing no proof. An argument in four parts with the proof of the major premise omitted is handled in this fashion: "Gentlemen of the jury, you, who have sworn to decide according to the law, ought to obey the laws. But you cannot obey the laws unless you follow what is written in the law. What more certain proof of his intent could the author of the law have left than the statement which he wrote himself with great care and pains? Therefore, if there were no written documents we should be in sad need of them to learn from them the intent of the law-giver; nevertheless we should not permit Epaminondas even if he were not under the jurisdiction of the court to interpret to us the meaning of the law; much less, since we have the law before us, should we suffer him to interpret the intent of the law-maker, not by what is quite plainly written, but by what suits his case. Hence, gentlemen of the jury, if you ought to obey the laws, and you cannot do this unless you follow what is written in the law, why not decide that he acted contrary to law?"

71 Assumptionis autem approbatione praeterita quadripartita sic fiet argumentatio: " Qui saepe numero nos per fidem fefellerunt, eorum orationi fidem habere non debemus. Si quid enim perfidia illorum detrimenti acceperimus, nemo erit praeter nosmet ipsos quem iure accusare possimus. Ac primo quidem decipi incommodum est; iterum, stultum; tertio, turpe. Karthaginienses autem persaepe iam nos fefellerunt. Summa igitur amentia est in eorum fide spem habere quorum perfidia totiens deceptus sis."

72 Utraque approbatione praeterita tripartita fit hoc pacto: " Aut metuamus Karthaginienses oportet si incolumes eos reliquerimus, aut eorum urbem diruamus. At metuere quidem non oportet. Restat igitur ut urbem diruamus."

XL. Sunt autem qui putant nonnunquam posse complexione supersederi, cum id perspicuum sit quod conficiatur ex ratiocinatione; quod si fiat, bipartitam quoque fieri argumentationem, hoc modo: " Si peperit, virgo non est: peperit autem." Hic satis esse proponere et assumere: quod conficiatur quoniam perspicuum sit, complexionis rem non indigere. Nobis autem videtur et omnis ratiocinatio concludenda esse et illud vitium quod illis displicet magno opere vitandum, ne quod perspicuum sit, id in complexione inferamus. Hoc autem fieri poterit si complexionum genera intellegentur. Nam aut ita com-

71 And an argument in four parts can be made as follows, with the proof of the minor premise omitted: "We ought not to trust the statements of those who have often deceived us by false promises. For if we are harmed by their treachery, we shall have no right to blame anyone except ourselves. To be deceived once is annoying, it is foolish to be deceived twice; the third time it is a disgrace. Now the Carthaginians have deceived us many times in the past. It is therefore the height of folly to place confidence in the promises of those by whose treachery you have so often been deceived."

72 If the proof of both premises is omitted, the argument becomes threefold; for example: "We must either live in fear of the Carthaginians if we leave them with their power undiminished, or we must destroy their city. But we certainly should not live in fear. The alternative is, then, to destroy their city."

XL. There are, moreover, those who think that one may at times dispense with the conclusion when the result of the reasoning is perfectly clear; in this case the argument may also have only two parts, as follows: "If she has borne a child, she is not a virgin; but she has borne a child." Here, they say, it is sufficient to state the major and minor premises; since the deduction is perfectly plain, there is no need of a conclusion. We, on the other hand, think that every reasoning should have a formal conclusion, and also that the fault which they dislike should be avoided by all means, lest we put into the conclusion

73 a statement that is perfectly plain. This result may be secured if the different varieties of conclusion are understood. That is to say, we shall state a conclusion

CICERO

plectemur, ut in unum conducamus propositionem et assumptionem, hoc modo: "Quodsi leges omnes ad utilitatem rei publicae referri convenit, hic autem saluti rei publicae profuit, profecto non potest eodem facto et saluti communi consuluisse et legibus non obtemperasse." Aut ita, ut ex contrario sententia conficiatur, hoc modo: "Summa igitur amentia est in eorum fide spem habere, quorum perfidia totiens deceptus sis." Aut ita, ut id solum quod conficitur inferatur, ad hunc modum: "Urbem igitur diruamus." Aut, ut id quod eam rem quae conficitur sequatur necesse est. Id est huiusmodi: "Si peperit, cum viro concubuit: peperit autem." Conficitur hoc: "Concubuit igitur cum viro." Hoc si nolis inferre et inferas id quod sequitur: "Fecit igitur incestum," et concluderis argumentationem et perspicuam fugeris 74 complexionem. Quare in longis argumentationibus aut ex conductionibus aut ex contrario complecti oportet, in brevibus id solum quod conficitur exponere, in eis in quibus exitus perspicuus est consecutione uti.

Si qui autem ex una quoque parte putabunt constare argumentationem, poterunt dicere saepe satis esse hoc modo argumentationem facere: "Quoniam peperit, cum viro concubuit." Nam hoc nullius neque approbationis neque complexionis indigere. Sed nobis ambiguitate nominis videntur errare. Nam argumentatio nomine uno res duas significat, ideo

---

* The "contrariness" consists in making an affirmative statement "to place confidence" qualified by "the height of folly" rather than saying in the negative form, "We should not place confidence."

in one way by combining major and minor in one sentence, as, "If, then, all laws should be related to the advantage of the state, and he contributed to the safety of the state, he certainly cannot by one and the same act have had regard for the common safety and have disobeyed the laws." Or in another way by making a contrary statement, for example: "It is therefore the height of folly to place confidence in the promises of those by whose treachery you have so often been deceived." <sup>a</sup> Or again, it may be done by stating merely the deduction, after this fashion: "Let us therefore destroy the city," or by stating what is the necessary consequence of the deduction, of which the following is an example: "If she has borne a child, she has lain with a man; but she has borne a child." The deduction is, "Therefore she has lain with a man." If you do not wish to state the conclusion in that way, and state the next logical step: "Therefore she is unchaste," you will round out the argument and avoid stating a conclusion 74 which is perfectly obvious. Therefore, in long arguments one ought to state the conclusion by bringing major and minor together, or by a contrary statement, in short ones to state only the deduction, and in those in which the outcome is perfectly plain to state the consequence.

If any think that an argument may also consist of only one part, they will be able to assert that often it is sufficient to present an argument in the following form: "Since she has borne a child, she has lain with a man." For this needs no proof or conclusion. But they seem to be led astray by an ambiguity in the use of a word. For the one word "argument" has two meanings, because a thought on any matter that is quod et inventum aliquam in rem probabile aut necessarium argumentatio vocatur et eius inventi 75 artificiosa expolitio. Cum igitur proferent aliquid huiusmodi: "Quoniam peperit, cum viro concubuit," inventum proferent, non expolitionem; nos autem de expolitionis partibus loquimur.

XLI. Nihil igitur ad hanc rem ratio illa pertinebit; atque hac distinctione alia quoque quae videbuntur officere huic partitioni propulsabimus, si quis aut assumptionem aliquando tolli posse putet aut propo-sitionem. Quae si quid habet probabile aut neces-sarium, quoquo modo commoveat auditorem necesse
 est. Quod si solum spectaretur ac nihil, quo pacto tractaretur id quod esset excogitatum referret, nequaquam tantum inter summos oratores et me-76 dioces interesse existimaretur. Variare autem orationem magno opere oportebit; nam omnibus in rebus similitudo mater est satietatis. Id fieri poterit, si non similiter semper ingrediamur in argumentationem. Nam primum omnium generibus ipsis distinguere convenit, hoc est, tum inductione uti, tum ratiocinatione, deinde in ipsa argumenta-tione non semper a propositione incipere nec semper quinque partibus abuti neque eadem partes ratione expolire, sed tum ab assumptione incipere, tum approbatione alterutra, tum utraque, tum hoc, tum illo genere complexionis uti. Id ut perspici-either probable or certain is called an argument, and the same term is applied to the artistic embellishment 75 of this thought. Therefore, when they offer a statement of this sort: "Since she has borne a child, she has lain with a man," they offer a thought, not embellishment. But we are talking about the methods of embellishment.

XLI. Their line of reasoning, then, will not affect this matter; and by this distinction we shall repel other attacks which will seem to be damaging to this division of the argument into five parts; for example, if anyone should think that either the minor or the major premise may sometimes be omitted. And if this idea has any probability or cogency, it must have some sort of effect on the auditor. But if the bare statement of the argument were the only object, and it were of no consequence how the thought is developed and expanded, we should certainly not think that there is such a difference between the 76 greatest orators and the ordinary ones. Variety in the treatment of the speech will be the great necessity. For in everything monotony is the mother of boredom. Variety can be secured if we do not always approach the argument in the same way. For first of all it is desirable to produce diversity merely by using different kinds of arguments, that is, to use induction at one time and deduction at another; and again, in the deductive argument not to begin in every case with the major premise nor always employ all five possible parts nor embellish the parts in the same fashion, but sometimes to begin with the minor premise, sometimes use one of the two proofs, sometimes both, and finally, use now this and now that form of conclusion. That this may be

CICERO

atur, scribamus; in quolibet exemplo de eis quae proposita sunt hoc idem exerceamus, ut quam facile factu sit periclitari licet.<sup>1</sup>

77 Ac de partibus quidem argumentationis satis nobis dictum videtur. Illud autem volumus intellegi nos probe tenere aliis quoque rationibus tractari argumentationes in philosophia multis et obscuris, de quibus certum est artificium constitutum. Verum illa nobis abhorrere ab usu oratoris visa sunt. Quae pertinere autem ad dicendum putamus, ea nos commodius quam ceteros attendisse non affirmamus; perquisitius et diligentius conscripsisse pollicemur. Nunc, ut statuimus, proficisci ordine ad reliqua pergemus.

78 XLII. Reprehensio est per quam argumentando adversariorum confirmatio diluitur aut infirmatur aut elevatur. Haec fonte inventionis eodem utetur quo utitur confirmatio, propterea quod, quibus ex locis aliqua res confirmari potest, isdem potest ex locis infirmari. Nihil enim considerandum est in his omnibus inventionibus nisi id quod personis aut negotiis attributum est. Quare inventionem et argumentationum expolitionem ex illis quae ante praecepta sunt hanc quoque in partem orationis transferri oportebit. Verumtamen, ut quaedam praeceptio detur huius quoque partis, exponemus modos reprehensionis; quos qui observabunt, facilius ea quae contra dicentur diluere aut infirmare poterunt.

<sup>1</sup> The sentence is probably corrupt; Ströbel marks a lacuna after scribamus, at which point M gives scribamus, J aut scribamus aut, and Weidner reads scribamus oportet aut, and brackets hoc . . . ut, which is omitted by M.

made perfectly plain, we should try writing rhetorical exercises. In any of the examples given above let us practice this same exercise that one may prove how easy it is to do.

77 Enough has, I think, been said about the parts and divisions of deductive reasoning. I should, however, like it to be understood that I am well aware that in philosophy deductive reasoning is treated in many other forms too; in fact they are intricate and involved, and a precise system has been formulated. But they seem to me to be quite unfit for oratorical practice. But as for the principles which are pertinent to speech, I would not claim that I have studied them more completely than all others, but I do assert that I have written with greater care and accuracy. And now we shall go on in order to the other points as originally proposed.

78 XLII. The refutation is that part of an oration in which arguments are used to impair, disprove, or weaken the confirmation or proof in our opponents' speech. It utilizes the same sources of invention that confirmation does, because any proposition can be attacked by the same methods of reasoning by which it can be supported. For nothing need be considered in all these quests for arguments except the attributes of persons or of actions. Therefore the rules for the invention and embellishment of arguments may properly be transferred from what has been said before to this part of the oration. In order, however, that some instructions may be given about this section too, we shall set forth the methods of refutation. Those who follow these rules will more easily be able to impair or disprove the arguments made against them.

CICERO

79 Omnis argumentatio reprehenditur, si aut ex eis quae sumpta sunt non conceditur aliquid unum plurave aut his concessis complexio ex his confici negatur, aut si genus ipsum argumentationis vitiosum ostenditur, aut si contra firmam argumentationem alia aequae firma aut firmior ponitur.

Ex eis quae sumuntur aliquid non conceditur, cum aut id quod credibile dicunt negatur esse eiusmodi, aut, quod comparabile putant, dissimile ostenditur, aut iudicatum aliam in partem traducitur, aut omnino iudicium improbatur, aut, quod signum esse adversarii dixerunt, id eiusmodi negatur esse, aut si comprehensio aut una aut utraque ex parte reprehenditur, aut enumeratio falsa ostenditur, aut simplex conclusio falsi aliquid continere demonstratur. Nam omne quod sumitur ad argumentandum sive pro probabili sive pro necessario, necesse est sumatur ex his locis, ut ante ostendimus.

80 XLIII. Quod pro credibili sumptum erit, id infirmabitur si aut perspicue falsum erit, hoc modo: "Nemo est quin pecuniam quam sapientiam malit." Aut ex contrario quoque credibile aliquid habebit, hoc modo: "Quis est qui non officii cupidior quam pecuniae sit?" Aut erit omnino incredibile, ut si aliquis, quem constet esse avarum, dicat alicuius mediocris officii causa se maximam pecuniam neglexisse, aut si, quod in quibusdam rebus aut hominibus accidit, id omnibus dicitur usu venire, hoc pacto: "Qui pauperes sunt, eis antiquior officio pecunia est." "Qui locus desertus est, in eo caedem factam esse

---

<sup>a</sup> Cicero here uses comprehensio for the form of argument described as complexio in § 45.

<sup>b</sup> § 44.

79 Every argument is refuted in one of these ways: either one or more of its assumptions are not granted, or if the assumptions are granted it is denied that a conclusion follows from them, or the form of argument is shown to be fallacious, or a strong argument is met by one equally strong or stronger.

One of the assumptions of the opponents is not granted when either what they say is credible is denied to be such, or what they think is a parallel case is shown to be dissimilar, or a judicial decision is interpreted in a different sense, or decisions in general are denied validity, or what the adversaries regard as sound evidence is denied to be such, or one or both horns of a dilemma <sup>a</sup> are shown to be unsound, or an enumeration is demonstrated to be incomplete, or a simple conclusion is shown to contain a fallacy. For everything which is used in argumentation, either as a probable or rigorous proof, must come under one of these heads, as we have shown above.<sup>b</sup>

80 XLIII. A statement assumed as credible may be disproved either if it is obviously false, for example: "Everyone prefers wealth to wisdom," or if there is another credible statement to be made to the contrary, for example, "Who is there who does not desire to do his duty more than to acquire wealth?" Or the statement may be wholly incredible, as in the case of a man known by everyone to be avaricious who says that he neglected great financial returns for the sake of doing some humble duty, or if what happens in certain circumstances or to certain people is said to be universally true, after this fashion: "The poor prefer money to duty," "The murder must have been committed in a lonely spot. How could oportet; in loco celebri homo occidi qui potuit? ”

CICERO

Aut si id quod raro fit fieri omnino negatur, ut Curio pro Fulvio: “ Nemo potest uno aspectu neque praeteriens in amorem incidere.”

81 Quod autem pro signo sumetur, id ex isdem locis, quibus confirmatur, infirmabitur. Nam in signo primum verum esse ostendi oportet; deinde esse eius rei signum proprium qua de agitur, ut cruorem caedis; deinde factum esse quod non oportuerit, aut non factum quod oportuerit; postremo scisse eum de quo quaeritur eius rei legem et consuetudinem. Nam eae res sunt signo attributae; quas diligentius aperiemus, cum separatim de ipsa coniecturali constitutione dicemus. Ergo horum unum quodque in reprehensione aut non esse signo aut parum magno esse aut a se potius quam ab adversariis stare, aut omnino falso dici aut in aliam quoque suspicionem duci posse demonstrabitur.

82 XLIV. Cum autem pro comparabili aliquid inducitur, quoniam id per similitudinem maxime tractatur, in reprehendendo conveniet simile id negare esse quod conferetur ei quicum conferetur. Id fieri poterit si demonstrabitur diversum esse genere, natura, vi, magnitudine, tempore, loco, persona, opinione; ac si, quo in numero illud quod per similitudinem afferetur, et quo in loco hoc cuius causa afferetur, haberi conveniat, ostendetur. Deinde quid

---

<sup>a</sup> Orat. Rom. Frag.<sup>2</sup>, p. 253 (Meyer).

<sup>b</sup> In Book II, 14–51.

<sup>c</sup> For an expansion of this, v. Victorinus, ad loc.

a man be killed in a crowd?" Or if what rarely happens is declared never to happen at all, as for example the passage in Curio's speech In Defence of Fulvius:<sup>a</sup> "No one can fall in love at first sight, or as he is passing by."

81 What is assumed to be a "sign" will be disproved by use of the same topics by which it is supported. For in the case of a sign, first it must be shown to be true; and in the second place to be a proper sign of the thing under discussion, as, for example, blood is a sign of murder; in the third place that it indicates that something has been done which ought not to have been done, or that something has been left undone which ought to have been done; and finally that the person knew the law and custom in respect to the matter under discussion. For these matters are subject to proof by signs, and will be discussed more fully when we speak separately about the conjectural issue.<sup>b</sup> Therefore in the refutation it will be shown of each of these points that it is not a sign, or not an important one, or that it favours one's own side rather than the opponents', or that it is absolutely false, or that it can be shifted so as to create a suspicion in a different quarter.

82 XLIV. When something is introduced as a parallel, since this topic is largely treated by showing similarity, it will be proper in refutation to deny that the thing compared is similar to that to which it is compared. This can be done if it is shown that it differs in kind, nature, meaning, importance, time, place, person, or repute;<sup>c</sup> and in particular if it is shown in what class it is proper to put that which is cited as similar, and in what group to put that which the comparison is intended to illumine. In the next place we shall res cum re differat demonstrabimus: ex quo docebimus aliud de eo quod comparabitur, et de eo quicum comparabitur existimare oportere. Huius facultatis maxime indigebimus, cum ea ipsa argumentatio quae per inductionem tractatur erit reprehendenda.

CICERO

Sin iudicatum aliquod inferetur, quoniam id ex his locis maxime firmatur: laude eorum qui iudicarunt; similitudine eius rei qua de agitur ad eam rem qua de iudicatum est; et commemorando non modo non esse reprehensum iudicium, sed ab omnibus approbatum; et demonstrando difficilius et maius fuisse ad iudicandum quod afferatur quam id quod instet: ex contrariis locis si res aut vera aut veri similis permittet, infirmari oportebit. Atque erit observandum diligenter ne nihil ad id quo de agatur pertineat id quod iudicatum sit; et videndum est ne ea res proferatur in qua sit offensum ut de ipso qui iudicavit iudicium
83 fieri videatur. Oportet autem animadvertere ne, cum aliter sint multa iudicata, solitarium aliquid aut rarum iudicatum afferatur. Nam sic his rebus auctoritas iudicati maxime potest infirmari. Atque ea quidem quae quasi probabilia sumentur ad hunc modum temptari oportebit.

XLV. Quae vero sicuti necessaria dicentur, ea si forte imitabuntur modo necessariam argumentationem neque erunt eiusmodi, sic reprehendentur:

---

* Cicero's thought loses clarity from too great compression; he means that the "topic" of "praise" involves also "blame." A judgement which is supported by praising the judge can be attacked by condemning him.

demonstrate how the one thing differs from the other; as a result we shall prove that different judgements should be passed on the thing compared and on the thing to which it is to be compared. We shall especially need the ability to do this when the criticism is to be directed against that particular form of argument which is handled by induction.

In case a decision or judgement is offered as an argument, it should, if truth or plausibility permits, be attacked by using the same topics by which it is supported, viz. by praising those who have made the decision,<sup>a</sup> by the similarity between the matter under discussion and the matter about which judgement has been given; by stating that not only has the judgement not been attacked but that it has received universal approval; and by demonstrating that the case cited was more difficult or more important to decide than the present case. And one must watch sharply to see whether the decision is pertinent to the case under discussion, and be careful to observe that a case is not cited of such a nature that objection has been made to it, so that a judgement might seem to have been passed on him 83 who has done the judging. One ought also to notice if a unique or extraordinary case has been cited when many decisions have been made in the opposite tenor. For thus by such arguments the authority of a decision or judgement can best be weakened. Also statements which are assumed to be probably true ought to be assailed in the same way.

XLV. Statements which are made with the implication that they are necessarily true can be attacked in the following way if they only imitate a rigorous argument and are not really such: in the first place primum comprehensio quae utrum concesseris debet tollere, si vera est, nunquam reprehendetur; si falsa, duobus modis, aut conversione aut alterius partis infirmatione; conversione,<sup>1</sup> hoc modo:

Nam si veretur, quid eum accuses qui est probus?
 Sin inverecundum animi ingenium possidet,
 Quid autem accuses qui id parvi auditum aestimet?

Hic, sive vereri dixeris sive non vereri, concedendum hoc putat ut neget esse accusandum. Quod conversione sic reprehendetur: "Immo vero accusandus est. Nam si veretur, accuses; non enim parvi auditum aestimabit. Sin inverecundum animi ingenium possidet, tamen accuses; non enim probus est."

84 Alterius autem partis infirmatione hoc modo reprehendetur: "Verum si veretur, accusatione tua correctus ab errato recedet."

Enumeratio vitiosa intellegitur si aut praeteritum quiddam dicimus quod velimus concedere, aut infirmum aliquid adnumeratum quod aut contra dici possit, aut causa non sit quare non honeste possimus concedere. Praeteritur quiddam in eiusmodi enumerationibus: "Quoniam habes istum equum, aut emeris oportet aut hereditate possideas aut munere acceperis aut domi tibi natus sit aut, si eorum nihil est, surripueris necesse est: si<sup>2</sup> neque emisti neque hereditate venit neque donatus est neque domi natus
 85 est, necesse est ergo surripueris." Hoc commode

<sup>1</sup> conversione bracketed by Linsmayer, Ströbel.

<sup>2</sup> si M: sed J.

---

<sup>o</sup> Trag. Rom. Frag. Ribbeck<sup>s</sup>, p. 302. Remains of Old Latin, ii, p. 614.

the dilemma, which ought to be a decisive argument no matter which alternative you choose, if it is true, can never be answered, but if it is false, it can be answered in two ways, either by conversion or by denial of one part: by conversion in this way: "For if the man be modest, why should you attack so good a man? And if the temper of his mind be shameless, then what avails your accusation of one who reck little of such a charge?"<sup>a</sup> Here it is expected that whether you say he is modest or not, you will have to grant that you should not accuse him. This can be answered by conversion, thus: "On the contrary, he ought most certainly to be accused. For if he is modest you should accuse him, for he will not reckon little of such a charge. But if the temper of his mind be shameless, you still should accuse him, for he is not an upright 84 man." It can be answered by denial of one alternative, as follows: "But if he is modest, he will be reformed by your accusation and abandon the error of his way."

An enumeration is recognized as faulty if we mention something that has been omitted which we should be willing to grant, or if some weak point has been included in it which can be denied, or if there is no reason why we cannot honourably grant some point. A point is omitted in enumerations of this character: "Since you are in possession of that horse, you must have bought it, or inherited it, or received it as a gift, or it must have been foaled at your farm, or if none of these is true, you must have stolen it. If you did not buy it nor inherit it nor receive it as a present, and it was not foaled on your 85 farm, then you must have stolen it." A proper reprehenditur, si dici possit ex hostibus equus esse captus, cuius praedae sectio non venierit; quo illato infirmatur enumeratio; quoniam id sit inductum quod praeteritum sit in enumeratione. XLVI. Altero autem modo reprehendetur si aut contra aliquid dicetur, hoc est, si exempli causa, ut in eodem versemur, poterit ostendi hereditate venisse, aut si illud extremum non erit turpe concedere, ut si qui, cum dixerit adversarius: "Aut insidias facere voluisti aut amico morem gessisti aut cupiditate elatus es," amico se morem gessisse fateatur.

CICERO

86 Simplex autem conclusio reprehenditur si hoc quod sequitur non videatur necessario cum eo quod antecessit cohaerere. Nam hoc quidem: "Si spiritum ducit, vivit," "Si dies est, lucet," eiusmodi est, ut cum priore necessario posterius cohaerere videatur. Hoc autem: "Si mater est, diligit," "Si aliquando peccavit, nunquam corrigetur," sic conveniet reprehendi ut demonstretur non necessario cum priore posterius cohaerere. Hoc genus et cetera necessaria et omnino omnis argumentatio et eius reprehensio maiorem quandam vim continet et latius patet quam hic exponitur; sed eius artificii cognitio eiusmodi est ut non ad huius artis partem aliquam adiungi possit, sed ipsa separatim longi temporis et magnae atque arduae cognitionis indigeat. Quare illa nobis alio tempore atque ad aliud institutum, si facultas erit, answer is made to this if it can be said that the horse was captured from the enemy and there was no sale of this booty. When this has been stated the enumeration is rendered invalid, since a point has been noted which was omitted in the enumeration. XLVI. The second method of answering, that is, if any point can be denied, is exemplified by the following case: if, for instance (to use the same illustration) it can be shown that the horse was inherited. Or it can be answered, if, finally, it will not be dishonourable to concede a point, as in the case of the man who, when his opponents have said, "You wished to lay a plot, or to gratify a friend, or you were carried away by avarice," might confess that he gratified a friend.

88 A simple conclusion is answered if the consequence does not seem to be necessarily consistent with what precedes. For instance the sentences, "If he is breathing, he is alive," "If it is daytime, it is light," are of such a nature that the conclusion seems to be necessarily connected with the condition; but statements of this kind, "If she is his mother, she loves him," "If he has sinned once, he will never be reformed," it is proper to answer by showing that the conclusion is not necessarily consistent with the condition. This kind and the other rigorous arguments and in fact the whole science of argumentation and rebuttal have a greater importance and wider ramifications than here set forth. But the theoretical mastery of this art is so difficult that it cannot be appended to any chapter of rhetoric, but demands for itself alone a long period of profound and arduous thought. Therefore this will be treated by us at another time and in another work, if opporexplicabuntur; nunc his praeceptionibus rhetorum ad usum oratorium contentos nos esse oportebit. Cum igitur ex eis quae sumentur aliquid non concedetur, sic infirmabitur.

CICERO

87 XLVII. Cum autem, his concessis, complexio ex his non conficitur, haec erunt considerata: num aliud conficiatur, aliud dicatur, hoc modo: si, cum aliquis dicat se profectum esse ad exercitum, contra eum quis velit hac uti argumentatione: "Si venisses ad exercitum, a tribunis militaribus visus esses; non es autem ab his visus: non es igitur ad exercitum profectus." Hic cum concesseris propositionem et assumptionem, complexio est infirmanda. Aliud enim, quam cogebatur, illatum est.

88 Ac nunc quidem, quo facilius res cognosceretur, perspicuo et grandi vitio praeditum posuimus exemplum; sed saepe obscurius positum vitium pro vero probatur, cum aut parum memineris quid concesseris, aut ambiguum aliquid pro certo concesseris. Ambiguum si concesseris ex ea parte quam ipse intellexeris, eam partem adversarius ad aliam partem per complexionem velit accommodare, demonstrare oportebit non ex eo quod ipse concesseris, sed ex eo quod ille sumpserit, confici complexionem, ad hunc modum: "Si indigetis pecuniae, pecuniam non habetis; si pecuniam non habetis, pauperes estis: indigetis autem pecuniae; mercaturae enim, ni ita esset, operam non daretis: pauperes igitur estis."

---

* The trick lies in confusing "set out for" with "came to."

tunity shall offer. Now we shall have to be content with these rules laid down by teachers of rhetoric for the use of speakers. When, therefore, one of the assumptions made is not granted, it may be attacked thus.

87 XLVII. When, however, these points have been admitted and a conclusion does not follow from them, one must consider whether it is not true that one result follows and a different one has been expressed, for instance, if, when one might say he had set out for the army, an opponent might wish to use against him this form of argument: "If you had come to the army you would have been seen by the military tribunes. But you were not seen by them. Therefore you did not set out for the army." Here you may grant the major and minor premises, but the conclusion must be denied. For an inference has been made which was not inevitable.<sup>a</sup>

88 In this case in order to make the subject plainer we have given an example containing an obvious and monstrous fallacy. But often a fallacy stated obscurely is accepted as truth, either when you do not exactly recall what you have granted or you have granted something as certain which is really doubtful. If you have conceded a doubtful point in the sense in which you understand it, and your opponent wishes to work it into a conclusion in a different sense, it will be necessary to show that the conclusion does not follow from what you have admitted but from what he has assumed. The following is an example: "If you want money, you do not have money; if you do not have money, you are poor; you do want money, for otherwise you would not engage in trade; therefore you are poor." This is answered in the following

Hoc sic reprehenditur: “Cum dicebas: Si indigetis pecuniae, pecuniam non habetis, hoc intellegebam: Si propter inopiam in egestate estis, pecuniam non habetis, et idcirco concedebam; cum autem hoc sumebas: Indigetis autem pecuniae, illud accipiebam: Vultis autem pecuniae plus habere. Ex quibus concessionibus non conficitur hoc: Pauperes igitur estis; conficeretur autem, si tibi primo quoque hoc concessissem, qui pecuniam maiorem vellet habere, 89 eum pecuniam non habere.” XLVIII. Saepe autem oblitum putant quid concesseris, et idcirco id quod non conficitur, quasi conficiatur, in conclusionem infertur, hoc modo: “Si ad illum hereditas veniebat, veri simile est ab illo necatum.” Deinde hoc approbant plurimis verbis. Post assumunt: “Ad illum autem hereditas veniebat.” Deinde infertur: “Ille igitur occidit.” Id quod ex eis, quae sumpserant, non conficitur. Quare observare diligenter oportet et quid sumatur, et quid ex his conficiatur.

Ipsam autem genus argumentationis vitiosum his de causis ostendetur, si aut in ipso vitium erit aut non ad id quod instituitur accommodabitur. Atque in ipso vitium erit, si omnino totum falsum erit, si commune, si vulgare, si leve, si remotum, si mala definitione, si controversum, si perspicuum, si non concessum, si turpe, si offensum, si contrarium, si inconstans, si adversarium.

90 Falsum est in quo perspicue mendacium est, hoc modo: “Non potest esse sapiens qui pecuniam negligit. Socrates autem pecuniam neglegebat: non way: "When you said, 'If you want money, you do not have money,' I understood it to mean, 'If on account of poverty you are in extreme want, you do not have money,' and therefore I granted the point; when, however, you said, 'You do want money,' I took that to mean 'You do want to have more money.'" From this admission it does not follow that you are poor. It would follow, if at first I had made this admission also, "Whoever wishes to have more money, does not have money." XLVIII.

89 Moreover, they often think that you have forgotten what you have admitted, and therefore they insert in the conclusion what does not follow, under pretence that it does; for example: "If the estate came to him, it is probable that he committed the murder." Then they prove this at considerable length. Next they state the minor: "But the estate did come to him," and then the conclusion: "Therefore he killed him." But this does not follow from their premises. Therefore one ought to watch carefully both what is premised and what is deduced from the premises.

On the other hand, the very nature of the argumentation may be shown to be faulty for the following reasons: if there is any defect in the argumentation itself or if it is not adapted to prove what we purpose to prove. To be specific, there will be a defect in the argument itself if it is wholly false, general, common, trifling, far-fetched, a bad definition, controvertible, self-evident, disputable, discreditable, offensive, "contrary," inconsistent, or adverse.

90 A false argument is one containing a statement obviously untrue, for example: "One cannot be wise who is indifferent to money. But Socrates was indifferent to money: therefore he was not wise."

CICERO

igitur sapiens erat." Commune est quod nihilo minus ab adversariis, quam a nobis facit, hoc modo: " Idcirco, iudices, quia veram causam habebam, brevi peroravi." Vulgare est quod ad aliquam quoque rem non probabilem, si nunc concessum sit, transferri possit, ut hoc: " Si causam veram non haberet, vobis se, iudices, non commisisset." Leve est quod aut post tempus dicitur, hoc modo: " Si in mentem venisset, non commisisset:" aut perspicue turpem rem levi tegere vult defensione, hoc modo:

Cum te expetebant omnes, florentissimo
Regno reliqui: nunc desertum ab omnibus
Summo periculo sola ut restituam paro.

91 XLIX. Remotum est quod ultra quam satis est petitur, huiusmodi: " Quodsi non P. Scipio Corneliam filiam Ti. Graccho collocasset atque ex ea duos Gracchos procreasset, tantae seditiones natae non essent; quare hoc incommodum Scipioni ascribendum videtur." Huiusmodi est illa quoque conquestio:

Utinam ne in nemore Pelio securibus
Caesae accedissent abiernae ad terram trabes!

Longius enim repetita est quam res postulabat. Mala definitio est cum aut communia describit, hoc modo:

---

<sup>a</sup> TRF<sup>3</sup>, p. 304. ROL, ii, p. 262. From the Medus of Pacuvius. Tr. by Warmington.

<sup>b</sup> TRF<sup>3</sup>, p. 49. ROL, i, p. 312. From the Medea of Ennius.

A general argument is one which is no less helpful to the opponents' case than to ours, for example: "Therefore, gentlemen of the jury, I have summed up in a few words because justice was on my side."

A common argument is one which if granted now could be transferred to another situation not worthy of approval, as in the following sentence: "If he had not had justice on his side, gentlemen of the jury, he would not have entrusted himself to your decision."

A trifling argument is one which is offered too late, as: "If he had thought, he would not have done it," or in which the pleader tries to cloak an obviously disgraceful act by a trifling defence, for example:

"When all men sought you out, while yet your throne

Did flourish greatly, I deserted you;

But now that you forsaken are by all,

In greatest peril, I alone prepare

A plan whereby I can restore you." <sup>a</sup>

91 XLIX. A far-fetched argument is one derived from circumstances too remote, as in this case: "If Publius Scipio had not given his daughter Cornelia in marriage to Tiberius Gracchus, and if he had not had by her the two Gracchi, so great civil strife would not have arisen. Therefore this disaster seems attributable to Scipio." The following lament is of the same nature:

"Would God no axes e'er had felled to earth

The firs in Pelion's wood." <sup>b</sup>

For this went farther back in the succession of events than the argument required. A bad definition is one which sets forth characteristics applicable to

CICERO

“ Seditiosus est is qui malus atque inutilis civis ; ” nam hoc non magis seditiosi, quam ambitiosi, quam calumniatoris, quam alicuius hominis improbi vim describit ; aut falsum quiddam dicit, hoc pacto : “ Sapientia est pecuniae quaerendae intellegentia ; ” aut aliquid non grave nec magnum continens, sic : “ Stultitia est immensa gloriae cupiditas. ” Est haec quidem stultitia, sed ex parte quadam, non ex omni genere definita. Controversum est in quo ad dubium demonstrandum dubia causa affertur, hoc modo :

Eho tu, di quibus est potestas motus superum
atque inferum, Pacem inter sese conciliant, conferunt con-cordiam.

- 92 Perspicuum est de quo non est controversia : ut si quis, cum Orestem accuset, planum faciat ab eo matrem esse occisam. Non concessum est, cum id quod augetur in controversia est, ut si quis, cum Ulixem accuset, in hoc maxime commoretur : indig-num esse ab homine ignavissimo virum fortissimum Aiacem necatum. Turpe est quod aut eo loco in quo dicitur, aut eo homine qui dicit, aut eo tempore quo dicitur, aut eis qui audiunt, aut ea re qua de agitur, indignum propter inhonestam rem videtur. Offensum est quod eorum qui audiunt voluntatem laedit :
ut, si quis apud equites Romanos cupidos iudicandi
93 Caepionis legem iudiciariam laudet. L. Contrarium

---

<sup>o</sup> TRF<sup>3</sup>, p. 36. ROL, i, p. 356. From the Thyestes of Ennius.

<sup>b</sup> The lex Servilia iudiciaria which sought to deprive the equites of their exclusive right to serve as iudices. See Hendrickson's note on Brutus 164, LCL.

many objects, as follows: "He is seditious who is a bad and useless citizen," for this does not describe the character of a seditious man any more than of one who is over-ambitious or a pettifogger, or any wicked person; or one which makes a false statement, in this fashion: "Wisdom is knowledge of how to acquire money;" or one which contains some small or insignificant point, like the following: "Folly is boundless greed for fame." This is folly, to be sure, but is only a partial and not a complete definition. A controvertible argument is one in which a dubious reason is given to prove a dubious case, as follows:

" See how the gods, who rule and move
The heavens above and shades below
In peace and harmony together stand." <sup>a</sup>

- 92 A self-evident argument is one about which there is no dispute; for instance, if one, in accusing Orestes, should make it quite plain that he killed his mother. A disputable argument is one where the point which is being amplified is a matter of controversy; for instance, if anyone in accusing Ulysses should linger long over this point, that it is unworthy that Ajax, the bravest of men, should be killed by the most arrant coward. A discreditable argument is one which because of something dishonourable seems unworthy of the place in which it is delivered or of the speaker or of the time at which it is delivered or of the audience or of the subject under discussion. An offensive argument is one which wounds the sensibilities of the audience; for instance, if anyone speaking before the Roman equites who desire the privilege of serving on the jury should praise Caepio's
- 93 law regulating jury service.<sup>b</sup> L. A "contrary" argu-

CICERO

est quod contra dicitur atque ei qui audiunt fecerunt : ut si quis apud Alexandrum Macedonem dicens contra aliquem urbis expugnatorem diceret nihil esse crudelius quam urbes diruere, cum ipse Alexander Thebas diruisset. Inconstans est quod ab eodem de eadem re diverse dicitur : ut si qui, cum dixerit, qui virtutem habeat, eum nullius rei ad bene vivendum indigere, neget postea sine bona valetudine posse bene vivi ; aut, se amico adesse propter benivolentiam, sperare autem aliquid commodi ad se perven-

94 turum. Adversarium est quod ipsi causae aliqua ex parte officit, ut si quis hostium vim et copias et felicitatem augeat, cum ad pugnandum milites adhortetur.

Si non ad id quod instituitur accommodabitur aliqua pars argumentationis, horum aliquo in vitio reperietur : si plura pollicitus pauciora demonstrabit ; aut si, cum totum debet ostendere, de parte aliqua loquatur, hoc modo : “ Mulierum genus avarum est ; nam Eriphyla auro viri vitam vendidit ; ” aut si non id quod accusabitur defendet, ut si qui, cum ambitus accusabitur, manu se fortem esse defendet ; aut ut Amphion apud Euripidem, item apud Pacuvium,<sup>1</sup> qui vituperata musica sapientiam laudat ; aut si res ex hominis vitio vituperabitur, ut si qui doctrinam ex alicuius docti vitiiis reprehendat ; aut si qui, cum ment is one which is made against actions performed by the audience; for instance, if a person speaking before Alexander of Macedon against someone who had stormed a city should say that nothing is more cruel than to destroy cities, when Alexander himself had destroyed Thebes. An argument is inconsistent when conflicting statements are made by the same speaker on the same subject; for instance, if one after stating that the virtuous man needs nothing else to live a good life, should later deny that one can live a good life without good health; or one might say that he is helping his friend out of kindness, but expects to get some 94 profit from it. An adverse argument is one which does harm to one's own case in some respect; for instance, if a general in exhorting his soldiers to fight should magnify the strength, forces and good fortune of the enemy.

<sup>1</sup> item apud Pacuvium bracketed by Kayser, Ströbel.

If some part of the argumentation is not adapted to its purpose, it will be found to have one of the following defects: if the speaker proves fewer points than he has promised to prove; or if when he ought to demonstrate something about a whole class, he speaks only of a part, as follows: "The race of women is avaricious, for Eriphyla sold her husband's life for gold;" or if he answers a charge which has not been brought against him, for instance, if a man accused of bribery should offer as defence that he is valiant in battle; or like Amphion in the play of Euripides, and that of Pacuvius as well, who replies to an attack on music by praising philosophy; or if a thing is criticized because of the fault of a man, for instance, if some one should blame learning because of the error of some learned man; or if wishing to

CICERO

aliquem volet laudare, de felicitate eius, non de virtute dicat; aut si rem cum re ita comparabit, ut alteram se non putet laudare, nisi alteram vituperarit; aut si alteram ita laudet, ut alterius non faciat 95 mentionem; aut si, cum de certa re quaeretur, de communi instituetur oratio, ut si quis, cum aliqui deliberent, bellum gerant an non, pacem laudet omnino, non illud bellum inutile esse demonstret; aut si ratio alicuius rei reddetur falsa, hoc modo: “Pecunia bonum est, propterea quod ea maxime vitam beatam efficit;” aut infirma, ut Plautus:

Amicum castigare ob meritam noxiam,
Immune est facinus; verum in aetate utile
Et conducibile; nam ego amicum hodie meum Concastigabo pro commerita noxia;

aut eadem, hoc modo: “Malum est avaritia; multos enim magnis incommodis affecit pecuniae cupiditas;” aut parum idonea, hoc modo: “Maximum bonum est amicitia; plurimae enim delectationes sunt in amicitia.”

96 LI. Quartus modus erit reprehensionis per quem contra firmam argumentationem aequae firma aut firmior ponitur. Hoc genus in deliberationibus maxime versabitur, cum aliquid quod contra dicatur, aequum esse concedimus, sed id quod nos defendimus, necessarium esse demonstramus; aut cum id quod illi defendant, utile esse fatemur, quod nos dicamus, honestum esse demonstramus.

---

<sup>a</sup> Plautus, Trinummus, 23–26. Tr. Nixon, LCL.

praise some one he should speak of his good luck and not of his virtue; or if he compares one thing with another with the idea that he cannot praise one 95 without blaming the other; or if he praises one without mentioning the other; or if when a definite subject is under discussion, he addresses his speech to a common topic, for instance, if one, when some state is deliberating whether to go to war or not, should devote his speech to praise of peace in general and not prove that this particular war was useless; or if a false reason is given for something, as is illustrated in the following: "Money is good, for it is the thing which does the most to make life happy;" or the reason may be weak, as in these lines from Plautus:

"Castigating a friend even when his offence deserves it is a thankless job, but at times it's useful and expedient. Now here am I—with a friend I mean to castigate thoroughly, as his offence thoroughly deserves." <sup>a</sup> or the reason may be merely a statement of the same idea in different words, for example: "Avarice is bad, for desire for money has brought great disasters on many;" or the reason may be insufficient, for example: "Friendship is the highest good, for there are many pleasures in friendship."

96 LI. The fourth method of refutation is to counter a strong argument with one equally strong or stronger. This kind will be used particularly in speaking before a deliberative body, when we grant that something said on the other side is fair, but prove that the position we are defending is necessary; or when we acknowledge that the course of action which they defend is advantageous, but prove that ours is honourable.

CICERO

Ac de reprehensione haec<sup>1</sup> existimavimus esse dicenda.<sup>2</sup>

97 Hermagoras digressionem deinde, tum postremam conclusionem ponit. In hac autem digressionem ille putat oportere quandam inferri orationem a causa atque a iudicatione ipsa remotam, quae aut sui laudem aut adversari vituperationem contineat aut in aliam causam deducat ex qua conficiat aliquid confirmationis aut reprehensionis, non argumentando, sed augendo per quandam amplificationem. Hanc si qui partem putabit esse orationis, sequatur licebit. Nam et augendi et laudandi et vituperandi praecepta a nobis partim data sunt, partim suo loco dabuntur.<sup>3</sup> Nobis autem non placuit hanc partem<sup>4</sup> in numerum reponi, quod de causa digredi nisi per locum communem displicet; quo de genere posterius est dicendum. Laudes autem et vituperationes non separatim placet tractari, sed in ipsis argumentationibus esse implicatas. Nunc de conclusione dicemus.

98 LII. Conclusio est exitus et determinatio totius orationis. Haec habet partes tres: enumerationem, indignationem, conquestionem.

Enumeratio est per quam res disperse et diffuse dictae unum in locum coguntur et reminiscendi causa unum sub aspectum subiciuntur. Haec si semper eodem modo tractabitur, perspicue ab omnibus arti-

<sup>1</sup> haec Weidner: haec quidem Mi: quidem haec Jw.

<sup>2</sup> After dicenda the MSS. have Deinceps nunc de conclusione ponemus. (We shall now in the next place treat the peroration.) Bracketed by Oudendorp.

<sup>3</sup> Nam . . . dabuntur bracketed by Kayser.

<sup>4</sup> hanc partem bracketed by Weidner, Friedrich, Ströbel.

This is what we have thought it necessary to say about refutation.

97 Hermagoras puts the digression next, and then finally the peroration. In this digression he thinks a passage should be introduced unconnected with the case and the actual point to be decided; it might contain praise of oneself or abuse of the opponent, or lead to some other case which may supply confirmation or refutation not by argument but by adding emphasis by means of some amplification. If anyone thinks this is a proper division of a speech, he may follow Hermagoras' rule. For some of the rules for amplification and praise and vituperation have already been given, and the rest will be given in the proper place. But we do not think that this should be listed among the regular parts of the speech, because we disapprove of digressing from the main subject except in case of "commonplaces"; and this topic is to be discussed later. Moreover, I am of the opinion that praise and vituperation should not be made a separate part, but should be closely interwoven with the argumentation itself. Now we shall discuss the peroration.

98 LII. The peroration is the end and conclusion of the whole speech; it has three parts, the summing-up, the indignatio or exciting of indignation or ill-will against the opponent, and the conquestio or the arousing of pity and sympathy.

The summing-up is a passage in which matters that have been discussed in different places here and there throughout the speech are brought together in one place and arranged so as to be seen at a glance in order to refresh the memory of the audience. If this is always treated in the same manner, it will be ficio quodam tractari intellegetur; sin varie fiet, et hanc suspicionem et satietatem vitare poterit. Quare tum oportebit ita facere, ut plerique faciunt propter facilitatem, singillatim unam quamque rem attingere et ita omnes transire breviter argumentationes; tum autem, id quod difficilius est, dicere quas partes exposueris in partitione de quibus te pollicitus sis dicturum, et reducere in memoriam quibus rationibus unam quamque partem confirmaris; hoc modo: "Illud docuimus, illud planum fecimus," tum ab eis qui audiunt quaerere quid sit quod sibi velle debeant demonstrari. Ita simul et in memoriam redibit auditor et putabit nihil esse praeterea quod debeat desiderare.

CICERO

99 Atque in his generibus, ut ante dictum est, tum tuas argumentationes transire separatim, tum, id quod artificiosius est, cum tuis contrarias coniungere; et cum tuam dixeris argumentationem, tum, contra eam quod afferatur, quemadmodum dilueris, ostendere. Ita per brevem comparationem auditoris memoria et de confirmatione et de reprehensione redintegrabitur. Atque haec aliis actionis quoque modis variare oportebit. Nam tum ex tua persona enumerare possis, ut quid et quo quidque loco dixeris admoneas; tum vero personam aut rem aliquam inducere et enumerationem ei totam attribuere.

perfectly evident to everyone that it is being handled according to some rule or system. But if it is managed in different ways it will be possible to avoid both this suspicion and the boredom which comes from repetition. Therefore it will be proper at times to sum up in the manner which the majority of speakers employ, because it is easy, i.e. to touch on each single point and so to run briefly over all the arguments. At times, however, it is well to take the harder course and state the topics which you have set out in the partition and promised to discuss, and to recall to mind the lines of reasoning by which you have proved each point, in this fashion: "We have demonstrated this, we have made this plain." At times one may inquire of the audience what they might rightly wish to have proved to them. Thus the auditor will refresh his memory and think that there is nothing more that he ought to desire.

99 Furthermore, in the summing-up, as has been said above, you should at times run over your own arguments one by one, and at times combine the opposing arguments with yours, which requires greater artistry; and after stating your argument, show how you have refuted the argument which has been made against it. Thus by this brief comparison the memory of the audience is refreshed in regard to both the confirmation and the refutation. It may also be advisable to produce variety by changing the method of presentation. That is to say, at times you can sum up in your own person, reminding the audience of what you have said and in what order each point was discussed; but at other times you can bring on the stage some person or thing and let this actor sum up the whole argument. The following

Personam hoc modo: " Nam si legis scriptor existat et quaerat sic id a vobis quid dubitetis, quid possitis dicere, cum vobis hoc et hoc sit demonstratum." Atque hic, item ut in nostra persona, licebit alias singillatim transire omnes argumentationes, alias ad partitionis singula genera referre, alias ab auditore quid desideret quaerere, alias haec facere per comparisonem suarum et contrariarum argumentationum.

100 Res autem inducetur, si alicui rei huiusmodi, legi, loco, urbi, monumento oratio attribuetur per enumerationem, hoc modo: " Quid, si leges loqui possent? Nonne haec apud vos quererentur? Quidnam amplius desideratis, iudices, cum vobis hoc et hoc planum factum sit? " In hoc quoque genere omnibus isdem modis uti licebit. Commune autem praeceptum hoc datur ad enumerationem, ut ex una quaque argumentatione, quoniam tota iterum dici non potest, id eligatur quod erit gravissimum, et unum quidque quam brevissime transeat, ut memoria, non oratio renovata videatur.

LIII. Indignatio est oratio per quam conficitur ut in aliquem hominem magnum odium aut in rem gravis offensio concitetur. In hoc genere illud primum intellegi volumus, posse omnibus ex locis eis quos in confirmationis praeceptis posuimus tractari indignationem. Nam ex eis rebus quae personis aut quae negotiis sunt attributae quaevis amplificationes et indignationes nasci possunt, sed tamen ea quae is an example of the use of a person: "If the author of the law should appear and ask why you hesitate, what, pray, could you say, since this and this has been proved to you?" And here, as when speaking in one's own proper person, the orator may at one time run over all the arguments singly, at another, refer to each topic in the partition, or again, inquire of the auditor what he desires, or again, sum up by comparing his own and the opposing arguments.

100 A thing is brought on the stage if in the enumeration the words are given to something of this sort, a law, a place, a city, or a monument; for example, "What if the laws could speak? Would they not make this complaint to you: 'What more do you desire, gentlemen of the jury, when this and this has been made plain to you?'" In this kind of summing up as well, one may use all the same methods. As a general principle for summing up, it is laid down that since the whole of any argument cannot be given a second time, the most important point of each be selected, and that every argument be touched on as briefly as possible, so that it may appear to be a refreshing of the memory of the audience, rather than a repetition of the speech.

LIII. The indignatio is a passage which results in arousing great hatred against some person, or violent offence at some action. In discussing this topic we wish it to be understood at the beginning that indignatio is used in connexion with all the topics which we laid out when giving rules for confirmation. In other words, all the attributes of persons and things can give occasion for any use of amplification that may be desired, or any method of arousing

CICERO

separatim de indignatione praecipere possunt consideraremus.

- 101 Primus locus sumitur ab auctoritate, cum commemoramus, quantae curae res ea fuerit eis quorum auctoritas gravissima debeat esse: diis immortalibus, qui locus sumetur ex sortibus, ex oraculis, vatibus, ostentis, prodigiis, responsis, similibus rebus; item maioribus nostris, regibus, civitatibus, gentibus, hominibus sapientissimis, senatui, populo, legum scriptoribus. Secundus locus est per quem illa res ad quos pertineat, cum amplificatione per indignationem ostenditur, aut ad omnes aut ad maiorem partem, quod atrocissimum est, aut ad superiores, quales sunt ei quorum ex auctoritate indignatio sumitur, quod indignissimum est; aut ad pares animo, fortuna, corpore, quod iniquissimum est; aut ad inferiores, quod superbissimum est. Tertius locus est per quem quaerimus quidnam sit eventurum si idem ceteri faciant; et simul ostendimus, huic si concessum sit, multos aemulos eiusdem audaciae futuros; ex quo
- 102 quid mali sit eventurum demonstrabimus. Quartus locus est per quem demonstramus multos alacres exspectare quid statuatur, ut ex eo quod uni concessum sit, sibi quoque tali de re quid liceat, intellegere possint. Quintus locus est per quem ostendimus ceteras res perperam constitutas intellecta veritate commutatas corrigi posse; hanc esse rem quae si sit semel iudicata, neque alio commutari iudicio neque

---

<sup>a</sup> Of the fifteen topics enumerated in the following passage, the first ten are given in ad Her. ii, 48 ff.

<sup>b</sup> Ad Her. ii, 48.

<sup>c</sup> Ad Her. ii, 48.

<sup>d</sup> Ad Her. ii, 48.

<sup>e</sup> Ad Her. ii, 48.

enmity; still we should consider what particular and separate rules can be given about indignatio.<sup>a</sup>

- 101 The first topic is derived from authority when we relate how much care and interest has been devoted to the subject under discussion by those whose authority ought to have the greatest weight, namely, the immortal gods (and the material on this topic will be derived from the casting of lots, from oracles, soothsayers, portents, prodigies, responses and the like); also our forefathers, kings, states, nations, men of supreme wisdom, the senate, the people and authors of laws.<sup>b</sup> The second topic is the one in which it is shown, with a display of passion emphasized by amplification, who is affected by this act which we are denouncing; the act may affect all or a great majority (which is most dreadful) or one's superiors, such as those whose authority gives ground for indignatio (which is most unbecoming), or one's equals in spirit, fortune or physique (which is most unjust) or one's inferiors (which is most arrogant).<sup>c</sup> The third topic is one in which we inquire what would happen if everybody else should act in the same way, and at the same time show that if he is permitted this licence, many will emulate the same career of crime; and we shall prove what evil
- 102 will result from this.<sup>d</sup> Under the fourth topic we prove that many are eagerly awaiting the decision so that from the licence which is granted to one they can know what they too may do in a similar case.<sup>e</sup> The fifth topic is one in which we show that in other cases a false decision has been changed when the truth was learned, and the wrong has been righted; but in this case, once the decision has been made it cannot be changed by any judicial body, nor can any ulla potestate corrigi possit. Sextus locus est per quem consulto et de industria factum demonstratur et illud adiungitur, voluntario maleficio veniam dari non oportere, imprudentiae concedi nonnunquam convenire. Septimus locus est per quem indignamur quod taetrum, crudele, nefarium, tyrannicum factum esse dicamus, per vim, manum, opulentiam; quae res ab legibus et ab aequabili iure remotissima sit. LIV.

- 103 Octavus locus est per quem demonstramus non vulgare neque factitatum esse ne ab audacissimis quidem hominibus id maleficio de quo agatur; atque id a feris quoque hominibus et a barbaris gentibus et immanibus bestiis esse remotum. Haec erunt quae in parentes, liberos, coniuges, consanguineos, supplices crudeliter facta dicentur, et deinceps si qua proferantur in maiores natu, in hospites, in vicinos, in amicos, in eos quibuscum vitam egeris, in eos apud quos educatus sis, in eos a quibus eruditus, in mortuos, in miseros et misericordia dignos, in homines claros, nobiles et honore usos, in eos qui neque laedere alium nec se defendere potuerunt, ut in pueros, senes, mulieres; quibus ex omnibus acriter excitata indignatio summum in eum qui violarit horum aliquid
- 104 odium commovere poterit. Nonus locus est per quem cum aliis peccatis, quae constat esse peccata, hoc quo de quaestio est comparatur, et ita per contentionem, quanto atrocius et indignius sit illud de quo agitur ostenditur. Decimus locus est per quem omnia quae

<sup>a</sup> Ad Her. ii, 48.

<sup>b</sup> Ad Her. ii, 49.

<sup>c</sup> Ad Her. ii, 49.

<sup>d</sup> Ad Her. ii, 49.

<sup>e</sup> Ad Her. ii, 49.

power right the wrong.<sup>a</sup> In the sixth topic it is shown that the deed was done purposely and intentionally and the remark is added that voluntary misdeeds should not be pardoned, but that sometimes inadvertent acts may be forgiven.<sup>b</sup> The seventh topic is used when we express our indignation, saying that a foul, cruel, nefarious and tyrannical deed has been done by force and violence or by the influence of riches, and that such an act is utterly at variance 103 with law and equity.<sup>c</sup> LIV. Under the eighth topic we show that the crime which is under discussion is no ordinary one, nor has it been frequently committed even by the boldest of men; that it is unknown even among savages, barbarous tribes, and wild beasts. Such will be acts of cruelty which may be said to have been committed against parents, children, wives, kinsmen, or suppliants; and in the second place if any acts of injustice should be cited against elders, guests, neighbours, friends, against those with whom you have lived, those in whose home you have been reared or by whom you have been educated, against the dead, the wretched or pitiable, against famous men of renown and position, against those who can neither harm another nor defend themselves, such as children, old men, and women. By all of these circumstances violent indignation is aroused and this 104 can produce the greatest hatred of one who has violated any of these sacred relationships.<sup>d</sup> The ninth topic involves a comparison of the deed in question with other crimes which are by common consent regarded as crimes, and so by contrast it is shown how much more horrible and shameful is the offence now before the court.<sup>e</sup> The tenth topic is that in which we bring together all the circumstances,

CICERO

in negotio gerundo acta sunt quaeque post negotium consecuta sunt, cum unius cuiusque indignatione et criminatione colligimus et rem verbis quam maxime ante oculos eius apud quem dicitur ponimus, ut id quod indignum est proinde illi videatur indignum ac si ipse interfuerit ac praesens viderit. Undecimus locus est per quem ostendimus ab eo factum a quo minime oportuerit, et a quo, si alius faceret, prohiberi convenerit. Duodecimus locus est per quem indignamur, quod nobis hoc primis acciderit neque alicui 105 unquam usu venerit. Tertius decimus locus est si cum iniuria contumelia iuncta demonstratur, per quem locum in superbiam et arrogantiam odium concitatur. Quartus decimus locus est per quem petimus ab eis qui audiunt, ut ad suas res nostras iniurias referant; si ad pueros pertinebit, de liberis suis cogitent; si ad mulieres, de uxoribus; si ad senes, de patribus aut parentibus. Quintus decimus locus est per quem dicimus, inimicis quoque et hostibus ea quae nobis acciderint indigna videri solere. Et indignatio quidem his fere de locis gravissime sumetur.<sup>1</sup>

106 LV. Conquestio est oratio auditorum misericordiam captans. In hac primum animum auditoris mitem et misericordem conficere oportet, quo facilius conquestione commoveri possit. Id locis communibus efficere oportebit, per quos fortunae vis in omnes et hominum infirmitas ostenditur; qua oratione habita graviter et sententiose maxime demittitur animus hominum et ad miseri-

<sup>1</sup> After sumetur the MSS. have Conquestionis autem huiusmodi de rebus partes petere oportebit. (Moreover the various kinds of conquestio should be sought from topics of this kind.) Bracketed by Schuetz.

<sup>a</sup> Ad Her. ii, 49.

both what was done during the performance of the deed and what followed after it, accompanying the narration with reproaches and violent denunciations of each act, and by our language bring the action as vividly as possible before the eyes of the judge before whom we are pleading, so that a shameful act may seem as shameful as if he had himself been present and seen it in person.<sup>a</sup> The eleventh topic is one in which we show that the act was committed by one who least of all should have done it and who would have been expected to prevent it if done by another. The twelfth topic is that in which we express our indignation that this has happened to us first and has 105 never befallen anyone else. Under the thirteenth topic it is shown that insult has been added to injury; in this topic resentment is aroused against haughtiness and arrogance. Under the fourteenth topic we ask the audience to consider our injuries as their own; if it affects children let them think of their own children, if women, let them think of their wives, if the aged, let them think of their fathers or parents. Under the fifteenth topic we say that even foes and enemies are regarded as unworthy of the treatment that we have received. Indignatio will be derived most effectively from these topics.

106 LV. Conquestio (lament or complaint) is a passage seeking to arouse the pity of the audience. In this the first necessity is to make the auditor's spirit gentle and merciful that he may be more easily moved by the conquestio. This ought to be done by the use of "commonplaces" which set forth the power of fortune over all men and the weakness of the human race. When such a passage is delivered gravely and sententiously, the spirit of man is greatly abased and

CICERO

107 cordiam comparatur, cum in alieno malo suam infirmitatem considerabit. Deinde primus locus est misericordiae per quem quibus in bonis fuerint et nunc<sup>1</sup> quibus in malis sint ostenditur. Secundus, qui in tempora tribuitur, per quem quibus in malis fuerint et sint et futuri sint demonstratur. Tertius, per quem unum quodque deploratur incommodum, ut in morte filii pueritiae delectatio, amor, spes, solatium, educatio et, si qua simili in genere quolibet de incommodo per conquestionem dici poterunt. Quartus, per quem res turpes et humiles et illiberales proferuntur et indigna esse aetate, genere, fortuna pristina, honore, beneficiis quae passi perpessurive sint. Quintus, per quem omnia ante oculos singillatim incommoda ponuntur, ut videatur is qui audit videre et re quoque ipsa quasi adsit non 108 verbis solum ad misericordiam ducatur. Sextus, per quem praeter spem in miseris demonstratur esse, et, cum aliquid expectaret, non modo id non adeptus esse, sed in summas miseras incidisse. Septimus, per quem ad ipsos qui audiunt<sup>2</sup> convertimus et petimus, ut de suis liberis aut parentibus aut aliquo, qui illis carus debeat esse, nos cum videant, recordentur. Octavus, per quem aliquid dicitur esse factum quod non oportuerit, aut non factum quod oportuerit, hoc modo: "Non adfui, non vidi, non postremam vocem eius audivi, non extremum spiritum eius excepi." Item: "Inimicorum in prepared for pity, for in viewing the misfortune of another he will contemplate his own weakness.

<sup>1</sup> per quem repeated after nunc by M.

<sup>2</sup> After audiunt M reads similem in causam, J similem causam.

107 After that the first topic with which to evoke pity is that by which it is shown what prosperity they once enjoyed and from what evils they now suffer. The second employs a division according to time, and shows in what troubles they have been, still are, and are destined to be. The third, in which each separate phase of misfortune is deplored; for example, in lamenting the death of a son, one might mention the delight that his father took in his childhood, his love, his hope for the boy's future, the comfort he derived from him, the careful training, and whatever in a similar case can be said in bewailing any misfortune. The fourth, in which one recounts shameful, mean, and ignoble acts and what they have suffered or are likely to suffer that is unworthy of their age, race, former fortune, position or preferment. The fifth, in which all the misfortunes are presented to view one by one, so that the auditor may seem to see them, and may be moved to pity by the actual occurrence, as if he

108 were present, and not by words alone. The sixth, in which it is shown that one is in distress contrary to all expectation, and when he looked forward to receiving some benefit, he not only did not gain it, but fell into the greatest distress. The seventh, in which we turn to the audience and ask them when they look at us to think of their children or parents or some one who ought to be dear to them. The eighth, in which something is said to have happened which ought not, or that something did not happen which ought to have happened: for example, "I was not present, I did not see him, I did not hear his last words, I did not catch his last breath."

CICERO

manibus mortuus est, hostili in terra turpiter iacuit insepultus, a feris diu vexatus, communi quoque honore in morte caruit.” Nonus, per quem oratio ad mutas et expertes animi res referetur, ut si ad equum, domum, vestem sermonem alicuius accommodes, quibus animus eorum qui audiunt et aliquem dilexerunt vehementer commovetur. Decimus, per quem inopia, infirmitas, solitudo demonstratur. Undecimus, per quem liberorum aut parentum aut sui corporis sepeliendi aut alicuius eiusmodi rei commendatio fit. Duodecimus, per quem disiunctio deploratur ab aliquo, cum diducaris ab eo quicum libentissime vixeris, ut a parente filio, a fratre familiari. Tertius decimus, per quem cum indignatione conquerimur, quod ab eis a quibus minime conveniat, male tractemur, propinquis, amicis, quibus benigne fecerimus, quos adiutores fore putarimus, aut a quibus indignum est, ut servis, libertis, clientibus, supplicibus. LVI. Quartus decimus, qui per obsecrationem sumitur; in quo orantur modo illi qui audiunt humili et supplici oratione, ut misereantur. Quintus decimus, per quem non nostras, sed eorum qui cari nobis debent esse fortunas conqueri nos demonstramus. Sextus decimus, per quem animum nostrum in alios misericordem esse ostendimus et tamen amplum et excelsum et patientem incommodorum esse et futurum esse, si quid acciderit, demonstramus. Nam saepe virtus et magnificentia, in quo gravitas et auctoritas est, plus proficit ad misericordiam commovendam quam humilitas et obsecratio.

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. ad Her. iv, 66.

Similarly: "He died among the enemy, in a hostile land he lay shamefully unburied, long torn by wild beasts, and in death he was deprived even of the honour due to all mankind." The ninth, in which a discourse is addressed to mute and inanimate objects, for example: if you should represent one as speaking to a horse, a house, or a garment, by which the mind of the audience who have loved something is greatly affected.<sup>a</sup> The tenth, in which one's helplessness and weakness and loneliness are revealed. The eleventh, in which the speaker commends to the audience his children, his parents, the task of burying him, or some such duty. The twelfth, in which separation from some one is deplored, when you are torn away from one with whom you have lived with the greatest pleasure, for example a father, son, brother, or intimate friend. The thirteenth, in which with anger we complain because we are being badly treated by those whom such conduct least becomes, relatives, friends whom we have treated kindly, whom we expected to help us, or by those to whom such conduct is a disgrace, namely slaves, freedmen, clients, or suppliants. LVI. The fourteenth, which is devoted to entreaty: here the only thing is to implore the audience in humble and submissive language to have mercy. The fifteenth, in which we show that it is not our ill fortune which we bemoan but that of our dear ones. The sixteenth, in which we show that our soul is full of mercy for others, but still is noble, lofty, and patient of misfortune and will be so whatever may befall. For often virtue and highmindedness in which there is naturally influence and authority does more to arouse pity than humility and entreaty.

CICERO

Commotis autem animis diutius in conquestione morari non oportebit. Quemadmodum enim dixit rhetor Apollonius, lacrima nihil citius arescit.

Sed quoniam satis, ut videmur, de omnibus orationis partibus diximus et huius voluminis magnitudo longius processit, quae sequuntur deinceps in secundo libro dicemus.

But when the emotions have been aroused it will be advisable not to linger over the conquestio. For as the rhetorician Apollonius said, "Nothing dries more quickly than tears."<sup>a</sup>

Now since I have said enough, I think, about all the divisions of the speech, and this volume has grown too long, what follows I shall include in the second book.

<sup>a</sup> On this proverb compare G. D. Kellogg in Amer. Journal of Phil. xxviii (1907), pp. 301-310. Apollonius is probably the rhetorician surnamed Molon who was later Cicero's teacher.

BOOK II

M. TULLI CICERONIS
RHETORICI LIBRI DUO
QUI VOCANTUR DE INVENTIONE

LIBER SECUNDUS

- 1 I. CROTONIATAE quondam, cum florerent omnibus copiis et in Italia cum primis beati numerarentur, templum Iunonis, quod religiosissime colebant, egregiis picturis locupletare voluerunt. Itaque Heracleotem Zeuxim, qui tum longe ceteris excellere pictoribus existimabatur, magno pretio conductum adhibuerunt. Is et ceteras complures tabulas pinxit, quarum nonnulla pars usque ad nostram memoriam propter fani religionem remansit, et, ut excellentem muliebris formae pulcritudinem muta in se imago contineret, Helenae pingere simulacrum velle dixit; quod Crotoniatae, qui eum muliebri in corpore pingendo plurimum aliis praestare saepe accepissent, libenter audierunt. Putaverunt enim, si, quo in genere plurimum posset, in eo magno opere elaborasset, egregium sibi opus illo in fano relicturum.
- 2 Neque tum eos illa opinio fefellit. Nam Zeuxis ilico quaesivit ab eis quasnam virgines formosas haberent. Illi autem statim hominem deduxerunt in palaestram atque ei pueros ostenderunt multos,

MARCUS TULLIUS CICERO
TWO BOOKS ON RHETORIC
COMMONLY CALLED ON INVENTION

BOOK II

- 1 I. THE citizens of Croton, once upon a time, when they had abundant wealth and were numbered among the most prosperous in Italy, desired to enrich with distinguished paintings the temple of Juno, which they held in the deepest veneration. They, therefore, paid a large fee to Zeuxis of Heraclea who was considered at that time to excel all other artists, and secured his services for their project. He painted many panels, some of which have been preserved to the present by the sanctity of the shrine; he also said that he wished to paint a picture of Helen so that the portrait though silent and lifeless might embody the surpassing beauty of womanhood. This delighted the Crotoniats, who had often heard that he surpassed all others in the portrayal of women. For they thought that if he exerted himself in the genre in which he was supreme, he would leave
- 2 an outstanding work of art in that temple. Nor were they mistaken in this opinion. For Zeuxis immediately asked them what girls they had of surpassing beauty. They took him directly to the wrestling school and showed him many very handsome magna praeditos dignitate. Etenim quodam tempore Crotoniatae multum omnibus corporum viribus et dignitatibus antisteterunt atque honestissimas ex gymnico certamine victorias domum cum laude maxima rettulerunt. Cum puerorum igitur formas et corpora magno hic opere miraretur: "Horum," inquit illi, "sorores sunt apud nos virgines. Quare qua sint illae dignitate potes ex his suspicari." "Praebete igitur mihi, quaeso," inquit, "ex istis virginibus formosissimas dum pingo id quod pollicitus sum vobis, ut mutum in simulacrum 3 ex animali exemplo veritas transferatur." Tum Crotoniatae publico de consilio virgines unum in locum conduxerunt et pictori quam vellet eligendi potestatem dederunt. Ille autem quinque delegit; quarum nomina multi poëtae memoriae prodiderunt quod eius essent iudicio probatae qui pulcritudinis habere verissimum debuisset. Neque enim putavit omnia, quae quaereret ad venustatem, uno se in corpore reperire posse ideo quod nihil simplici in genere omnibus ex partibus perfectum natura expolivit. Itaque, tamquam ceteris non sit habitura quod largiatur, si uni cuncta concesserit, aliud alii commodi aliquo adiuncto incommodo muneratur.

CICERO

4 II. Quod quoniam nobis quoque voluntatis accidit ut artem dicendi perscriberemus, non unum aliquod proposuimus exemplum cuius omnes partes, quocumque essent in genere, exprimendae nobis necessarie viderentur; sed, omnibus unum in locum coactis scriptoribus, quod quisque commodissime praecipere young men. For at one time the men of Croton excelled all in strength and beauty of body, and brought home the most glorious victories in athletic contests with the greatest distinction. As he was greatly admiring the handsome bodies, they said, "There are in our city the sisters of these men; you may get an idea of their beauty from these youths." "Please send me then the most beautiful of these girls, while I am painting the picture that I have promised, so that the true beauty may be transferred 3 from the living model to the mute likeness." Then the citizens of Croton by a public decree assembled the girls in one place and allowed the painter to choose whom he wished. He selected five, whose names many poets recorded because they were approved by the judgement of him who must have been the supreme judge of beauty. He chose five because he did not think all the qualities which he sought to combine in a portrayal of beauty could be found in one person, because in no single case has Nature made anything perfect and finished in every part. Therefore, as if she would have no bounty to lavish on the others if she gave everything to one, she bestows some advantage on one and some on another, but always joins with it some defect.

4 II. In a similar fashion when the inclination arose in my mind to write a text-book of rhetoric, I did not set before myself some one model which I thought necessary to reproduce in all details, of whatever sort they might be, but after collecting all the works on the subject I excerpted what seemed the most suitable precepts from each, and so culled the flower of many minds. For each of the writers who are worthy of videbatur excerpsumus et ex variis ingeniis excellentissima quaeque libavimus. Ex eis enim qui nomine et memoria digni sunt nec nihil optime nec omnia praeclarissime quisquam dicere nobis videbatur. Quapropter stultitia visa est aut a bene inventis alicuius recedere si quo in vitio eius offenderemur, aut ad vitia eius quoque accedere cuius 5 aliquo bene praecepto duceremur. Quodsi in ceteris quoque studiis a multis eligere homines commodissimum quodque quam sese uni alicui certe vellent addicere, minus in arrogantiam offenderent, non tanto opere in vitiis perseverarent, aliquanto levius ex inscientia laborarent. Ac si par in nobis huius artis atque in illo picturae scientia fuisset, fortasse magis hoc in suo genere opus nostrum, quam ille<sup>1</sup> in sua<sup>2</sup> pictura nobilis eniteret. Ex maiore enim copia nobis quam illi fuit exemplorum eligendi potestas. Ille una ex urbe et ex eo numero virginum quae tum erant eligere potuit; nobis omnium quicumque fuerunt ab ultimo principio huius praeceptionis usque ad hoc tempus, expositis copiis, quodcumque placeret eligendi potestas fuit.

6 Ac veteres quidem scriptores artis usque a principe illo atque inventore Tisia repetitos unum in locum conduxit Aristoteles et nominatim cuiusque praecepta magna conquisita cura perspicue conscripsit atque enodata diligenter exposuit; ac tantum inventoribus ipsis suavitate et brevitate dicendi praestitit ut nemo illorum praecepta ex ipsorum libris cognoscat, sed omnes qui quod illi praecipiant velint intellegere ad hunc quasi ad

<sup>1</sup> ille C: illius Lambinus.

<sup>2</sup> sua C: suo Ernesti: pictura ille P.

fame and reputation seemed to say something better than anyone else, but not to attain pre-eminence in all points. It seemed folly therefore, either to refuse to follow the good ideas of any author, merely because I was offended by some fault in his work, or to follow the mistakes of a writer who had attracted me by some 5 correct precept. And it is also true of other pursuits that if men would choose the most appropriate contributions from many sources rather than devote themselves unreservedly to one leader only, they would offend less by arrogance, they would not be so obstinate in wrong courses, and would suffer somewhat less from ignorance. And if my knowledge of the art of rhetoric had equalled his knowledge of painting, perhaps this work of mine might be more famous in its class than he is in his painting. For I had a larger number of models to choose from than he had. He could choose from one city and from the group of girls who were alive at that time, but I was able to set out before me the store of wisdom of all who had written from the very beginning of instruction in rhetoric down to the present time, and choose whatever was acceptable.

6 Aristotle collected the early books on rhetoric, even going back as far as Tisias, well known as the originator and inventor of the art; he made a careful examination of the rules of each author and wrote them out in plain language, giving the author's name, and finally gave a painstaking explanation of the difficult parts. And he so surpassed the original authorities in charm and brevity that no one becomes acquainted with their ideas from their own books, but everyone who wishes to know what their doctrines are, turns to Aristotle, believing him to quendam multo commodiorem explicatorem rever-7 tantur. Atque hic quidem ipse et sese ipsum nobis et eos, qui ante fuerunt, in medio posuit, ut ceteros et se ipsum per se cognosceremus: ab hoc autem qui profecti sunt, quamquam in maximis philo-sophiae partibus operae plurimum consumpserunt, sicuti ipse cuius instituta sequebantur fecerat, tamen permulta nobis praecepta dicendi reliquerunt.

Atque alii quoque alio ex fonte praeceptores dicendi emanaverunt, qui item permultum ad dicendum, si quid ars proficit, opitulati sunt. Nam fuit tempore eodem, quo Aristoteles, magnus et nobilis rhetor Isocrates; cuius ipsius quam constet esse 8 artem non invenimus. Discipulorum autem atque eorum, qui protinus ab hac sunt disciplina profecti, multa de arte praecepta reperimus. III. Ex his duabus diversis sicuti familiis, quarum altera cum versaretur in philosophia, nonnullam rhetoricae quoque artis sibi curam assumebat, altera vero omnis in dicendi erat studio et praeceptione occupata, unum quoddam est conflatum genus a posterioribus, qui ab utrisque ea quae commode dici videbantur in suas artes contulerunt; quos ipsos simul atque illos superiores nos nobis omnes, quoad facultas tulit, proposuimus et ex nostro quoque nonnihil in 9 commune contulimus. Quodsi ea quae in his libris exponuntur tanto opere eligenda fuerunt quanto studio electa sunt, profecto neque nos neque alios industriae nostrae paenitebit. Sin autem temere aliquid alicuius praeterisse aut non satis eleganter

---

* The reference is to the Συναγωγή Τεχνῶν of Aristotle, a work now lost.

7 give a much more convenient exposition.<sup>a</sup> He, then, published his own works and those of his predecessors, and as a result we became acquainted with him and the others as well through his work. His successors, although they devoted most of their attention to the noblest parts of philosophy, as the master whose principles they followed had done, nevertheless left us much instruction in rhetoric.

From another fountain head has come a stream of teachers of rhetoric who have also done much to improve oratory, as far at least as rules of art can accomplish anything. For in Aristotle's day there was a great and famous teacher of oratory named Isocrates; there is known to be a textbook from his 8 hand, but I have not seen it. I have, however, found many treatises on the art by his pupils and by those who carried on his doctrines. III. These two opposing sects (as we may call them), one busy with philosophy, but devoting some attention to the art of rhetoric as well, the other entirely devoted to the study and teaching of oratory, were fused into one group by later teachers who took into their own books from both sources what they thought was correct.<sup>b</sup> All of these as well as the earlier authorities I have had before me as far as possible, and have contributed
9 some ideas of my own to the common store. Therefore if the value of the principles set forth in these volumes is equal to the enthusiasm with which they were chosen, certainly neither I nor anyone else will regret my industry. But if it shall prove that I have been too rash in passing over some point in an author

<sup>b</sup> It is impossible to identify these sources more accurately. Hermagoras, Philo, Antiochus may be intended. v. Hubbell, The Influence of Isocrates on Cicero, p. 40.

secuti videbimur, docti ab aliquo facile et libenter sententiam commutabimus. Non enim parum cognosce, sed in parum cognito stulte et diu perseverasse turpe est, propterea quod alterum communi hominum infirmitati, alterum singulari cuiusque
 10 vitio est attributum. Quare nos quidem sine ulla affirmatione simul quaerentes dubitanter unum quidque dicemus, ne, dum parvulum hoc<sup>1</sup> consequamur, ut satis haec commode perscripsisse videamur, illud amittamus quod maximum est ut ne cui rei temere atque arroganter assenserimus. Verum hoc quidem nos et in hoc tempore et in omni vita studiose, quoad facultas feret, consequemur. Nunc autem, ne longius oratio progressa videatur, de reliquis quae praecipienda videntur esse dicemus.

11 Igitur primus liber, exposito genere huius artis et officio et fine et materia et partibus, genera controversiarum et inventiones et constitutiones<sup>2</sup> continebat, deinde partes orationis et in eas omnes omnia praecepta. Quare cum in eo ceteris de rebus distinctius dictum sit, disperse autem de confirmatione et de reprehensione, nunc certos confirmandi et reprehendendi in singula causarum genera locos tradendos arbitramur. Et quia, quo pacto tractari conveniret argumentationes, in libro primo non indiligenter expositum est, hic tantum ipsa inventa unam quamque in rem exponuntur simpliciter sine ulla exornatione, ut ex hoc or have not followed him with sufficient discrimination, I shall, when someone points out my error, readily and gladly change my opinion. For disgrace lies not in imperfect knowledge but in foolish and obstinate continuance in a state of imperfect knowledge; for ignorance is attributed to the infirmity common to the human race, but obstinacy to a man's own fault.

<sup>1</sup> hoc parvulum or parvulum hoc J : hoc omitted by Ströbel : bracketed by Weidner, Friedrich.

<sup>2</sup> After constitutiones a few late MSS. read et iudicationes (and the points for the judge's decision).

10 Therefore without affirming anything positively, I shall proceed with an inquiring mind and make each statement with a degree of hesitation, lest in gaining the small point of having written an apparently useful book, I fall short of the chief goal, not to be rash and hasty in giving my approval to any item. This principle I shall of course pursue both now and in all my life as zealously as possible; now, however, that this introduction may not seem to run on too long, I shall state the topics which remain to be elucidated.

11 The first book, after discussing the nature of this art, its function, end, materials and divisions,<sup>a</sup> took up the kinds of controversies, the methods of invention and the determination of the issue,<sup>b</sup> and finally the division of a speech and all the rules for all of them.<sup>c</sup> Since the first book then treated all topics definitely and clearly except confirmation and refutation, of which the treatment was in somewhat general terms, now I think I ought to give concrete examples of arguments to be used in confirmation or refutation in each kind of case. And because in the first book the manner of developing argumentations was explained with some care, in the second book I shall present only the invented arguments or ideas involved in each case without any literary adornment,

<sup>a</sup> § 5.

<sup>b</sup> §§ 10-19.

<sup>c</sup> §§ 19-109.

CICERO

inventa ipsa, ex superiore autem expolitio inventorum petatur. Quare haec quae nunc praecipientur ad confirmationis et reprehensionis partes referre oportebit.

- 12 IV. Omnis et demonstrativa et deliberativa et iudicialis causa necesse est in aliquo eorum quae ante exposita sunt constitutionis genere, uno pluribusve, versetur. Hoc quamquam ita est, tamen cum communiter quaedam de omnibus praecipi possint, separatim quoque aliae sunt cuiusque generis diversae praeceptiones. Aliud enim laus, aliud vituperatio, aliud sententiae dictio, aliud accusatio aut recusatio conficere debet. In iudiciis quid aequum sit quaeritur, in demonstrationibus quid honestum, in deliberationibus, ut nos arbitramur, quid honestum sit et quid utile. Nam ceteri utilitatis modo finem in suadendo et in dissuadendo
- 13 exponi oportere arbitrati sunt. Quorum igitur generum fines et exitus diversi sunt, eorum praecepta eadem esse non possunt. Neque nunc hoc dicimus, non easdem incidere constitutiones, verumtamen oratio quaedam ex ipso fine et ex genere causae nascitur, quae pertineat ad vitae alicuius demonstrationem aut ad sententiae dictionem. Quare nunc in exponendis controversiis<sup>1</sup> in iudiciali genere causarum et praeceptorum versabimur, ex quo pleraque in cetera quoque causarum genera simili implicata controversia nulla cum difficultate transferuntur; post autem separatim de reliquis dicemus.

<sup>1</sup> in exponendis controversiis bracketed by Weidner and Ströbel.

so that in this book one may look for the ideas, but in the former book for the embellishment of the ideas. Therefore the reader should regard the suggestions which follow as applying to confirmation and refutation.

- 12 IV. Every speech whether epideictic, deliberative or forensic must turn on one or more of the "issues" described in the first book.<sup>a</sup> Although this is true, nevertheless, in spite of there being many rules common to all, there are also other and different rules applicable to each kind of speech. For one object should be attained by praise, another by censure, another by an expression of opinion and another by accusation or defence. In trials the inquiry is about what is just, in an epideictic speech, about what is honourable, in speeches before deliberative bodies, as I think, about what is honourable and what is advantageous. Other writers, however, have thought that advantage alone should be proposed as an object
- 13 in urging or opposing a political measure. Those kinds of speeches, then, which have different ends and purposes cannot have the same rules. I am not saying now that the same "issues" do not arise, but that an oration which is aimed at portraying someone's life or at expressing an opinion on a political subject, arises out of its very purpose and the nature of its subject. Therefore at present I shall concern myself in explaining controversies with the class of speech delivered in courts of law and the rules applying to them; many of these rules can with no difficulty be transferred to other kinds of speeches, too, which involve a similar controversy. Later I shall speak separately of the others.

<sup>a</sup> §§ 10-19.

CICERO

- 14 Nunc ab coniecturali constitutione proficiscamur; cuius exemplum sit hoc expositum: In itinere quidam proficiscentem ad mercatum quendam et secum aliquantum nummorum ferentem est comitatus. Cum hoc, ut fere fit, in via sermonem contulit; ex quo factum est ut illud iter familiarius facere vellent. Quare cum in eandem tabernam divertissent, simul cenare et in eodem loco somnum capere voluerunt. Cenati discubuerunt ibidem. Copo autem—nam ita dicitur post inventum, cum in alio maleficio deprehensus est—cum illum alterum, videlicet qui nummos haberet, animum advertisset, noctu postquam illos artius iam ut ex lassitudine dormire sensit, accessit et alterius eorum qui sine nummis erat, gladium propter appositum e vagina eduxit et illum alterum occidit, nummos abstulit, gladium cruentum in vaginam recondidit, ipse se in suum lectum recepit. Ille autem cuius gladio occisio erat facta multo ante lucem surrexit, comitem illum suum
- 15 in clamavit semel et saepius. Illum somno impeditum non respondere existimavit; ipse gladium et cetera quae secum attulerat sustulit, solus profectus est. Copo non multum post conclamat hominem esse occisum et cum quibusdam diversoribus illum qui ante exierat consequitur in itinere. Hominem comprehendit, gladium eius e vagina educit, reperit cruentum. Homo in urbem ab illis deducitur ac reus fit. In hac intentio est criminis: “Occidisti.” Depulsio: “Non occidi.” Ex quibus constitutio

14 Now let us begin with the conjectural issue (or issue of fact), and let the following be taken as an example. On a highway a traveller joined himself to another who was on a business trip and had with him a considerable sum of money. As is natural, they fell into conversation as they went along, and the result was that they were ready to make the trip together as close friends. Therefore on stopping at the same inn, they planned to dine together and sleep in the same apartment. After dinner they went to bed in the same room. Then the innkeeper—for it is said the truth was found out when he had been caught in another crime—who had taken note of one of the travellers, that is the one with the money, came in the dead of night when he knew that they were sleeping heavily as people do when tired, drew the sword of the one who did not have the money—it was lying by his side—killed the other man, took his money, replaced the blood-stained sword in its sheath and went back to his own bed. Long before dawn the man whose sword had been used to commit the murder, got up and called his 15 companion again and again. Deciding that he did not answer because he was sound asleep, the traveller took his sword and the rest of his belongings and set out alone. Not long afterward the innkeeper raises a cry of “murder” and with some of the guests goes down the road in pursuit of the traveller who had left earlier. He seizes him, draws the sword from its sheath and finds it stained with blood. The fellow is brought to the city and accused of the crime. In this case the charge is, “You committed murder;” the answer is, “I did not.” From this arises the constitutio or issue, that is the question, the same in est, id est quaestio,<sup>1</sup> eadem in coniecturali<sup>2</sup> quae iudicatio: Occideritne?

CICERO

16 V. Nunc exponemus locos, quorum pars aliqua in omnem coniecturalem incidit controversiam. Hoc autem et in horum locorum expositione et in ceterorum oportebit attendere, non omnes in omnem causam convenire. Nam ut omne nomen ex aliquibus, non ex omnibus litteris, scribitur, sic omnem in causam non omnis argumentorum copia, sed eorum necessario pars aliqua conveniet. Omnis igitur ex causa, ex persona, ex facto ipso coniectura capienda est.

17 Causa tribuitur in impulsionem et in ratiocinationem. Impulsio est quae sine cogitatione per quandam affectionem animi facere aliquid hortatur, ut amor, iracundia, aegritudo, vinolentia et omnino omnia in quibus animus ita videtur affectus fuisse ut rem perspicere cum consilio et cura non potuerit et id quod fecit impetu quodam animi potius quam

18 cogitatione fecerit. Ratiocinatio est autem diligens et considerata faciendi aliquid aut non faciendi excogitatio. Ea dicitur interfuisse tum, cum aliquid faciendi aut non faciendi<sup>3</sup> certa de causa vitasse aut secutus esse animus videbitur; si amicitiae quid causa factum dicetur, si inimici ulciscendi, si metus, si gloriae, si pecuniae, si denique, ut omnia generatim amplectamur, alicuius retinendi, augendi adipiscendive commodi aut contra reiciundi, deminuendi devitandive incommodi causa. Nam in horum genus alterutrum illa quoque incident in quibus aut

<sup>1</sup> id est quaestio bracketed by Ströbel.

<sup>2</sup> in coniecturali bracketed by Ernesti.

<sup>3</sup> faciendum aut non faciendum J: bracketed by Schuetz.

the conjectural issue as the point for the judge's decision, " Did he commit murder? "

16 V. Now I shall explain the arguments, some of which apply to every controversy which is determined by inference. But you must note in the exposition of these arguments and of those that follow that all do not fit every case. As, for example, every word is spelled with some letters, but not with all, so the whole store of arguments will not fit every case, but, necessarily, only a part of them. Every inference, then, is based on arguments from the cause of the action, from the character of the person involved, and from the nature of the act.

17 The cause of an act falls under the heads of impulse and premeditation. An impulse is what urges a person to do something without thinking about it, because of some feeling or emotional state; examples are love, anger, grief, intoxication, and in fact every state in which the mind seems to have been so affected that it could not examine the act with care and deliberation, but did what it did from a certain mental urge rather than from reflection.

18 Premeditation on the other hand is careful and thoughtful reasoning about doing or not doing something. It is said to have been present when the mind seems to have avoided or sought something to do or not to do for a definite cause; if an act is said to have been performed because of friendship, to punish an enemy, or because of fear, glory or money, or finally, to sum the matter up in general terms, if the act is done to retain, increase or acquire some advantage, or on the other hand to throw off, lessen or avoid some disadvantage. For under one or the other of these classes those cases will incommodi aliquid maioris adipiscendi commodi causa aut maioris vitandi incommodi suscipitur aut aliquod commodum maioris adipiscendi commodi aut maioris vitandi incommodi praeteritur.

CICERO

19 Hic locus sicut aliquod fundamentum est huius constitutionis. Nam nihil factum esse cuiquam probatur, nisi aliquid quare factum sit ostenditur. Ergo accusator, cum impulsione aliquid factum esse dicet, illum impetum et quandam commotionem animi affectionemque verbis et sententiis amplificare debet et ostendere quanta vis sit amoris, quanta animi perturbatio ex iracundia fiat aut ex aliqua causa earum, qua impulsus aliquem id fecisse dicet. Hic et exemplorum commemoratione, qui simili impulsu aliquid commiserint, et similitudinum collatione et ipsius animi affectionis explicatione curandum est ut non mirum videatur si quod ad facinus tali perturbatione commotus animus accesserit.

20 VI. Cum autem non impulsione, verum rationatione aliquem commisisse quid dicet, quid commodi sit secutus aut quid incommodi fugerit demonstrabit et id augebit quam maxime poterit, ut, quod eius fieri possit, idonea quam maxime causa ad peccandum hortata videatur. Si gloriae causa, quantam gloriam consecuturam existimavit; item si dominationis, si pecuniae, si amicitiae, si inimicitiarum, et omnino quicquid erit quod causae fall in which some disadvantage is accepted in order to gain a greater advantage or avoid a greater disadvantage, or some advantage is neglected in order to gain a greater advantage or avoid a greater disadvantage.
21 fuisse dicet id summe augere debet. Et hoc eum

19 This topic is what one might call the foundation or basis of this issue. For no one can be convinced that a deed has been done unless some reason is given why it was done. Therefore the prosecutor when he says that something was done on impulse, will be under the necessity of dilating upon that passion and, as it were, agitation and state of mind, with the full powers of his thought and expression, and of showing how great is the force of love, what powerful mental agitation arises from anger or from any of the causes by which he claims that the defendant was urged to commit this crime. Here pains must be taken that it may not seem strange that a mind disquieted by such passion should undertake some crime. This can be done by citing examples of those who have done something under a similar impulse and by collecting parallels and by explaining the nature of mental disturbance.

20 VI. When, on the other hand, the prosecutor says that the defendant did the deed not from impulse, but deliberately, he will show what advantage was sought or what disadvantage avoided and will amplify this point to the best of his ability, so that, as far as in him lies, it may be shown that a perfectly sufficient motive prompted the crime. If it was for glory, how great glory he expected to win; likewise if for power or wealth, because of friendship or enmity, and in short whatever he says the cause was, the prosecutor must enlarge upon it most emphatically.

21 And he ought to consider very carefully not merely magno opere considerare oportebit, non quid in veritate modo, verum etiam vehementius quid in opinione eius quem arguet fuerit. Nihil enim refert non fuisse aut non esse aliquid commodi aut incom-modi, si ostendi potest ei visum esse qui arguatur.

 Nam opinio dupliciter fallit homines, cum aut res alio modo est ac putatur, aut non is eventus est quem arbitrati sunt. Res alio modo est tum, cum aut id quod bonum est malum putant, quod malum est, bonum, aut quod nec malum est nec bonum, malum aut bonum, aut quod malum aut bonum est, 22 nec malum nec bonum. Hoc intellecto si qui negabit esse ullam pecuniam fratris aut amici vita aut denique officio suo antiquiorem aut suaviorem, non hoc erit accusatori negandum. Nam in eum culpa et summum odium transferetur qui id quod tam vere et pie dicetur negabit. Verum illud dicendum est, illi ita non esse visum; quod sumi oportet ex eis quae ad personam pertinent, de quo 23 post dicendum est. VII. Eventus autem tum fallit, cum aliter accidit atque ei qui arguuntur arbitrati esse dicuntur: ut, si qui dicatur alium occidisse ac voluerit, quod aut similitudine aut suspicione aut demonstratione falsa deceptus sit;
 aut eum necasse, cuius testamento non sit heres, quod eo testamento se heredem arbitratus sit. Non enim ex eventu cogitationem spectari oportere, sed qua cogitatione animus et spe ad malefium productus sit considerari; quo animo quid quisque faciat, non quo casu utatur, ad rem pertinere.

what the result might really have been, but more particularly what the result might have been in the opinion of the man on trial. For it is no matter if there was or is no advantage or disadvantage connected with the act, if it can be shown that the defendant thought there was. For opinion deceives men in two ways, either when some thing is different from what it is thought to be, or when the result of an action is not what was expected. A thing is different when they think what is bad, good; or on the other hand think what is good, bad; or when they regard as good or bad what is neither, or regard 22 as neither what is really good or bad. On this understanding, if anyone denies that any wealth is dearer or sweeter than the life of brother or friend, or even his duty, the prosecutor should not deny this. For he will be blamed and loathed if he denies a statement so true and so expressive of our sentiments of devotion. But he should say that the defendant did not think so: and this statement should be based on the traits of personality, which are to be discussed
 23 later. VII. The result is deceptive when the matter turns out differently from what the defendants are said to have expected; for example, if one be said to have killed a person other than he wished to kill because he was misled by resemblance, or suspicion, or false description; or to have killed a man under whose will he did not inherit, because he thought that he would be an heir under that will; for (the prosecutor will say) we should not judge his intent by the result, but consider with what intent and hope his mind set out on a career of crime; the pertinent fact is the purpose with which anyone performs an act, not what success he attains.

CICERO

24 Hoc autem loco caput illud erit accusatoris, si demonstrare poterit alii nemini causam fuisse faciendi; secundarium, si tantam aut tam idoneam nemini. Sin fuisse aliis quoque causa faciendi videbitur, aut potestas defuisse aliis demonstranda est aut facultas aut voluntas. Potestas, si aut nescisse aut non adfuisse aut conficere aliquid non potuisse dicentur. Facultas, si ratio, adiutores, adiumenta ceteraque quae ad rem pertinebunt defuisse alicui demonstrabuntur. Voluntas, si animus a talibus factis vacuus et integer esse dicetur. Postremo, quas ad defensionem rationes reo dabimus, eis accusator ad alios ex culpa eximendos abutetur. Verum id brevi faciendum est et in unum multa sunt conducenda ut ne alterius defendendi causa hunc accusare, sed huius accusandi causa defendere alterum videatur.

25 VIII. Atque accusatori quidem haec fere sunt<sup>1</sup> consideranda. Defensor autem ex contrario primum impulsionem aut nullam fuisse dicet aut, si fuisse concedet, extenuabit et parvulam quandam fuisse demonstrabit aut non ex ea solere huiusmodi facta nasci docebit. Quo erit in loco demonstrandum quae vis et natura sit eius affectionis qua impulsus aliquid reus commisisse dicetur; in quo et exempla et similitudines erunt proferendae et ipsa diligenter natura eius affectionis quam levissime quietissima

<sup>1</sup> After sunt J add in causa facienda et.

24 Under this topic comes a familiar line of argument, if the prosecutor can show that no one else had a motive for committing the crime; secondly that no one had so strong or sufficient a motive. But if it seem that others, too, had a reason for the crime, it must be shown that others lacked the power, or the opportunity or the desire. The power, if it can be said that they did not know about the possibility of the crime, or were not present or were not physically able to perform some act. The opportunity, if it can be shown that any one lacked a plan, helpers, tools and all other things pertinent to the deed. The desire, if his mind can be said to be free from such crimes and unsullied. Finally, the prosecutor will use in excluding others from blame the same lines of reasoning which we shall assign to the accused for presenting his defence. But this must be done quickly, and much must be compressed into a brief space in order that he may not seem to accuse the defendant for the sake of defending another, but to defend another for the sake of accusing the defendant.

25 VIII. These are the points which the prosecutor must take into consideration. The counsel for the defence, on the contrary, will say, first, that there was no impulse, or if he grants that there was, he will make light of it and prove that it was only a weak emotion, and prove that it was not the kind from which deeds of this sort generally arise. Under this head it will be proper to point out the force and nature of the emotion which is said to have driven the defendant to the crime. In so doing he will have to offer examples and parallels, and carefully explain the nature of this emotion as calmly and quietly as ab parte explicanda ut et res ipsa a facto crudeli et turbulento ad quoddam mitius et tranquillius traducatur et oratio tamen ad animum eius qui audiet et ad animi quendam intimum sensum accommodetur.

CICERO

- 26 Ratiocinationis autem suspiciones infirmabit si aut commodum nullum esse aut parvum aut aliis maius esse aut nihilo sibi maius quam aliis, aut incommodum sibi maius quam commodum dicet; ut nequaquam fuerit illius commodi quod expetitur dicatur magnitudo aut cum eo incommodo quod acciderit, aut cum illo periculo quod subeatur comparanda; qui omnes loci similiter in incommodi
- 27 quoque vitiatione tractabuntur. Sin accusator dixerit eum id esse secutum quod ei visum sit commodum, aut id fugisse quod putarit esse incommodum, quamquam in falsa fuerit opinione, demonstrandum erit defensori neminem tantae esse stultitiae qui tali in re possit veritatem ignorare. Quodsi hoc concedatur, illud non concessum iri, ne dubitasse quidem eum, quid eius iuris esset, et id quod falsum fuerit sine ulla dubitatione pro falso, quod verum pro vero <sup>1</sup> probasse; quia si dubitarit, summae fuisse amentiae dubia spe impulsus certum in periculo
- 28 eum se committere. Quemadmodum autem accusator, cum ab aliis culpam demovebit, defensoris locis utetur, sic eis locis qui accusatori dati sunt utetur reus, eum in alios ab se crimen volet transferre.

IX. Ex persona autem coniectura capietur, si eae res quae personis attributae sunt diligenter considerabuntur, quas omnes in primo libro exposuimus.

<sup>1</sup> pro vero M : pro falso quod verum pro vero J : Ströbel omits pro falso quod verum.

possible so that even the crime may be changed from a violent and cruel deed to something milder and less agitating, and the discussion may still be adapted to the soul of the auditor and to the deepest emotions of his soul.

- 26 He will weaken the suspicion of premeditation if he says that there was little or no gain for the defendant, or greater gain for others, or no greater for him than for others, or that the loss was greater than the gain so that in no way was the size of the gain which he is said to have sought to be compared with the loss which he incurred, or with the danger which he faced. And all these topics will be treated in the
- 27 same way in discussing the avoidance of loss. But if the prosecutor says that the defendant followed what seemed to him advantageous or avoided what he thought a disadvantage, although he was mistaken in his opinion, the counsel for the defence must point out that no one is stupid enough to be ignorant of the truth in such a matter; saying that if this be granted, the other point would not be; that the defendant had no doubts about his rights in the matter, and undoubtedly held what was false as false and what was true as true. For if he was in doubt it was
- 28 stark madness to rush into certain danger through the lure of a doubtful hope. Moreover, just as the prosecutor will use the topics of defence when he clears others of fault, so the defendant will use the topics which are given to the prosecutor when he wishes to shift the responsibility for the crime from himself to others.

IX. Inferences may be drawn from the person of the accused if the attributes of persons are carefully taken into account. I explained all of these in the

CICERO

- Nam et de nomine nonnunquam aliquid suspicionis nascitur—nomen autem cum dicimus, cognomen quoque intellegatur oportet; de hominis enim certo et proprio vocabulo agitur—ut si dicamus idcirco aliquem Caldum vocari quod temerario et repentino consilio sit; aut si ea re hominibus Graecis imperitis verba dederit quod Clodius aut Caecilius aut Mutius
- 29 vocaretur; et de natura licet aliquantum ducere suspicionis. Omnia enim haec, vir an mulier, huius an illius civitatis sit, quibus sit maioribus, quibus consanguineis, qua aetate, quo animo, quo corpore, quae naturae sunt attributa, ad aliquam coniecturam faciendam pertinebunt. Et ex victu multae trahuntur suspensiones, cum quemadmodum et apud quos et a quibus educatus et eruditus sit quaeritur, et quibuscum vivat, qua ratione vitae, quo more domestico vivat.
- 30 Et ex fortuna saepe argumentatio nascitur, cum servus an liber, pecuniosus an pauper, nobilis an ignobilis, felix an infelix, privatus an in potestate sit aut fuerit aut futurus sit, consideratur; aut denique aliquid eorum quaeritur quae fortunae esse attributa intelleguntur. Habitus autem, quoniam in aliqua perfecta et constanti animi aut corporis

---

* §§ 34–36.

† A Roman always had two names, and usually three or more. E.g. Marcus Tullius Cicero; Marcus was the praenomen, given to the child by his parents; Tullius, the nomen, borne by all the members of the gens; Cicero, the cognomen borne by the familia, as sub-group of the gens. Cognomina were frequently assumed by Romans because of some trait or physical characteristic, or to commemorate some exploit. The name Caldus cited in the text may have had the significance given there when it was originally applied, but as first book.<sup>a</sup> For example, some suspicion arises at times from a name—when I say name, it should be understood that the cognomen is also included; we are talking about the fixed and proper appellation of an individual—for instance, if we should say that a man is called Caldus (Hot) because he has a quick and violent temper; or if inexperienced Greeks have been fooled because a man was called Clodius or 29 Caecilius or Mutius.<sup>b</sup> And one may base some suspicion on the nature of the defendant. For all the following attributes of nature are pertinent for making an inference: Is the person a man or woman, of this city or of that? Who were his ancestors, who are his kin? What is his age, temperament, physical condition? And many suspicions may be suggested by a man's way of life when the question is asked how and with whom and by whom he was reared and educated, and with whom he lives, what his plan or purpose in life is, and what his home life is like.

30 And frequently an argument can be made out of a person's fortune, when account is taken of whether he is, or has been, or will be slave or free, wealthy or poor, famous or unknown, successful or a failure, a private citizen or a public official; or finally when inquiry is made about any of the conditions which are understood to be predicated of fortune. And since habit consists of a complete and abiding con-such names were inherited for many generations, the argumentative use here suggested would be sophistical.

The "inexperienced" Greeks were probably misled by the reference to a Roman by his nomen instead of the cognomen, which in some cases was the more usual form. It is as if some one referred to Cicero as Tullius, or Caesar as Julius. As a Greek had only one name, he might find the Roman practice disconcerting.

CICERO

absolutione consistit, quo in genere est virtus, scientia et quae contraria sunt, res ipsa, causa posita, docebit ecquid hic quoque locus suspicionis ostendat. Nam affectionis quidem ratio perspicuam solet prae se gerere coniecturam, ut amor, iracundia, molestia, propterea quod et ipsorum vis intellegitur et quae res harum aliquam rem consequatur facile est cognitu.

31 Studium autem quod est assidua et vehementer aliquam ad rem applicata magna cum voluptate occupatio, facile ex eo ducetur argumentatio quam res ipsa desiderabit in causa. Item ex consilio sumetur aliquid suspicionis; nam consilium est aliquid faciendi non faciendive excogitata ratio. Iam facta et casus et orationes, quae sunt omnia, ut in confirmationis praeceptis dictum est, in tria tempora distributa, facile erit videre ecquid afferant ad confirmandam coniecturam suspicionis.

32 X. Ac personis quidem res hae sunt attributae, ex quibus omnibus unum in locum coactis accusatoris erit improbatione hominis uti. Nam causa facti parum firmitudinis habet, nisi animus eius qui insimulatur in eam suspicionem adducitur uti a tali culpa non videatur abhorruisse. Ut enim animum alicuius improbare nihil attinet, cum causa quare peccaret non intercessit, sic causam peccati intercedere leve est si animus nulli minus honestae rationi affinis ostenditur. Quare vitam eius quem arguet ex ante factis accusator improbare debet

---

<sup>a</sup> Suspicio, translated here and elsewhere in the treatise by "suspicion" really hovers in meaning between "suspicion" and "suggestion" or "hint." At times the latter seems the more appropriate rendering.

stitution of mind or of body—under this head come strength, knowledge and their opposites—the circumstances, when the case has been fully set forth, will show whether this topic will yield any suspicions.<sup>a</sup> A consideration of feeling or emotion such as love, anger, annoyance usually reveals an obvious inference, because the force of these emotions is known and it is easy to note what the consequence of any of them is.

31 Interest is unremitting activity ardently devoted to some subject and accompanied by intense pleasure. From this such arguments can be drawn as the circumstances in the case require. Likewise some suspicion can be drawn from purpose; for purpose is a considered reason for doing or not doing something. Finally in the case of accomplishments, accidents and speeches, all of which, as was said in the rules for confirmation, may be considered in relation to three tenses,<sup>b</sup> it will be easy to see what suspicions they offer for strengthening an inference.

32 X. These are the attributes of persons, and it will be the task of the prosecutor to select arguments from all this collection to discredit the defendant. For there can be little foundation for a motive for crime unless such suspicion is cast on the character of the accused that it will seem not to be inconsistent with such a fault. For as there is no point in discrediting the character of a man where there was no motive for him to go wrong, so it is idle to allege a motive for a crime if his character is shown to be inclined to no line of conduct which is less than honourable. Therefore the prosecutor ought to discredit the life of the accused on the basis of his past et ostendere, si quo in pari ante peccato convictus sit; si id non poterit, si quam in similem ante suspicionem venerit, ac maxime, si fieri poterit, simili quo in genere eiusdemmodi causa aliqua commotum peccasse aut in aequae magna re aut in maiore aut in minore, ut si qui quem pecunia dicat inductum fecisse possit demonstrare aliqua in re eius aliquod factum avarum.

<sup>b</sup> Book I. 36.

CICERO

33 Item in omni causa naturam aut victum aut studium aut fortunam aut aliquid eorum quae personis attributa sunt ad eam causam qua commotum peccasse dicet adiungere atque ex dispari quoque genere culparum, si ex pari sumendi facultas non erit, improbare animum adversari oportebit: si avaritia inductum arguas fecisse, et avarum eum quem accuses demonstrare non possis, aliis affinem vitiis esse doceas, et ex ea re non esse mirandum, qui in illa re turpis aut cupidus aut petulans fuerit, hac quoque in re eum deliquisse. Quantum enim de honestate et auctoritate eius qui arguitur deductum est, tantundem de facultate eius totius est defensionis deminutum.

34 Si nulli affinis poterit vitio reus ante admissio demonstrari, locus inducetur ille per quem hortandi iudices erunt ut veterem famam hominis nihil ad rem putent pertinere. Nam eum ante celasse, nunc manifesto teneri; quare non oportere hanc rem ex superiore vita spectari, sed superiorem vitam acts, and to point it out if he has previously been convicted of any crime equally serious. If this is impossible, he should prove that the defendant has been under suspicion of similar crime before, and particularly, if possible, that in similar circumstances he committed an offence because under the influence of some motive of the same kind, either in a matter of equal, or greater or less importance; an example would be a case in which a prosecutor could prove that the man who he alleges acted from desire for money, has acted avariciously on some other occasion.

33 Likewise in every case he should show the connexion between the motive by which he says the defendant was led to the crime and his nature, manner of life, interests or fortune or any of the attributes of persons, and discredit his character by reference to crimes of a different nature if there is no chance to cite those of a similar kind. If you charge that the man whom you accuse acted from avarice and cannot prove that he is avaricious, you should show that other vices are not foreign to his nature, and that it is no wonder if one who in that other affair acted basely, passionately and wantonly should have transgressed in this case also. For everything that detracts from the defendant's honour and repute, lessens in so far his chance for a complete defence.

34 If it cannot be shown that the accused has ever been implicated in any fault, the argument will be brought in by which the judges are to be urged to think that the long-standing reputation of the man has nothing to do with the case. For he has been concealing his true character before, and has now been caught red-handed; therefore this act should not be judged in view of his past life, but his past life

CICERO

ex hac re improbari, et aut potestatem ante peccandi non fuisse aut causam; aut si haec dici non poterunt, dicendum erit illud extremum, non esse mirum, si nunc primum deliquerit; nam necesse esse eum qui velit peccare aliquando primum delinquere. Sin vita ante acta ignorabitur, hoc loco praeterito et cur praetereatur demonstrato, argumentis accusationem statim confirmare oportebit.

35 XI. Defensor autem primum, si poterit, debebit vitam eius qui insimulabitur quam honestissimam demonstrare. Id faciet, si ostendet aliqua eius nota et communia officia; quod genus in parentes, cognatos, amicos, affines, necessarios; etiam quae magis rara et eximia sunt, si ab eo cum magno aliquid labore aut periculo aut utraque re, cum necesse non esset, officii causa aut in rem publicam aut in parentes aut in aliquos eorum qui modo expositi sunt factum esse dicet; denique si nihil deliquisse, nulla cupiditate impeditum ab officio recessisse. Quod eo confirmatius erit si, cum potestas impune aliquid faciendi minus honeste fuisse dicetur, voluntas a faciendo demonstrabitur should be discredited by this act; that previously he had no power or motive to commit the crime. And if none of these statements can be made, one should have recourse to the last possible argument, that it is no wonder that he has now for the first time committed a crime; for one who wishes to sin, must have a first offence. But if his past life is unknown, it will be fitting to pass over this topic and after showing why it is passed over, proceed to support the accusation by arguments.

36 a fuisse. Hoc autem ipsum genus erit eo firmiter si eo ipso in genere quo arguetur integer ante fuisse demonstrabitur: ut si, cum avaritiae causa fecisse arguatur, minime omni in vita pecuniae cupidus fuisse doceatur. Hic illa magna cum gravitate

35 XI. The counsel for the defence, on the other hand, will have to show first, if he can, that the life of the accused has been upright in the highest degree. He will do this if he can point to some services well known to everyone: for example, how the defendant has treated his parents, his kin by blood or marriage, his friends and connexions; likewise, though this opportunity is rarer and more unusual, if he can say that the defendant has performed some service to the state, his parents or some of those just mentioned, though he was not compelled to do so but acted merely from a sense of duty, and the act was very difficult or dangerous or both; finally, if he can prove that the defendant has never committed any offence and has never been led by passion to fail in his duty. This argument will be strengthened if it can be shown that when he had an opportunity of doing a dishonest
36 deed with impunity he had no desire to do so. This statement will be stronger if it can be shown that he has previously been innocent of the kind of crime of which he is accused: for example, if when a man is accused of having acted through avarice, it is shown that in his whole life he has been anything but eager for money. At this point a passage expressing inducetur indignatio, iuncta conquestioni, per quam miserum facinus esse et indignum demonstrabitur, cum animus in vita fuerit omni a vitiis remotissimus, eam causam putare, quae homines audaces in fraudem rapere soleat, castissimum quoque hominem ad peccandum potuisse impellere; aut: iniquum esse et optimo cuique perniciosissimum non vitam honeste actam tali in tempore quam plurimum prodesse, sed subita ex criminatione, quae confingi quamvis false possit, non ex ante acta vita, quae neque ad tempus fingi neque ullo modo mutari possit, facere iudicium.

CICERO

- 37 Sin autem in ante acta vita aliquae turpitudines erunt, aut falso venisse in eam existimationem dicetur ex aliquorum invidia aut obtrectatione aut falsa opinione; aut imprudentiae, necessitudini, persuasioni, adulescentiae aut alicui non malitiosae animi affectioni attribuentur; aut dissimili in genere vitiorum esse ostendentur,<sup>1</sup> ut animus non omnino integer, sed ab tali culpa remotus esse videatur. At si nullo modo vitae turpitude aut infamia leniri poterit oratione, negare oportebit de vita eius et de moribus quaeri, sed de eo crimine quo de arguatur; quare, ante factis omissis, illud quod instet id agi oportere.

<sup>1</sup> esse ostendentur supplied exempli gratia by Ströbel.

resentment coupled with one of complaint can be introduced with great effect;<sup>a</sup> in this it will be pointed out that when his character has been throughout his life utterly foreign to wrongdoing, it is miserable and unworthy treatment to suppose that the motive which often hurries audacious men into guilt could have induced the purest of men to commit a crime. Or the argument may be handled in this way: it is unfair and injurious to every good man that one's honourable life in the past should not be of the greatest possible help to him at such a time, but that judgement should be given on the basis of a sudden charge which can be made up out of whole cloth rather than on the basis of his past life, which cannot be made up for the occasion nor changed in any way.

37 But if there are some discreditable phases in the defendant's past life, it may be alleged that he got this reputation wrongly through the envy of a few people, or back-biting, or false opinion. Or these acts may be attributed to folly, necessity, persuasion, youth or some trait of character that is not malicious; or they may be shown to be vices of a different kind so that his character, though not perfect in all respects, may seem to have no connexion with such a crime as is now charged against him. But if a speech can do nothing to relieve the shame and baseness of his life, the counsel will have to say that the defendant's life and character are not under investigation, but only the crime of which he is accused; that, therefore, his past deeds should be left out of the discussion, and only the present case should be debated.

<sup>a</sup> For this, cf. I. 98, 100, 106.

CICERO

38 XII. Ex facto autem ipso suspiciones ducentur, si totius administratio negoti ex omnibus partibus pertemptabitur; atque eae suspiciones partim ex negotio separatim, partim communiter ex personis atque ex negotio proficiscentur. Ex negotio duci poterunt, si eas res quae negotiis attributae sunt diligenter considerabimus. Ex eis igitur in hanc 39 omnia, partes generum pleraeque. Videre igitur primum oportebit, quae sint continentia cum ipso negotio, hoc est, quae ab re separari non possint. Quo in loco satis erit diligenter considerasse, quid sit ante rem factum ex quo spes perficiendi nata et faciendi facultas quaesita videatur; quid in ipsa re gerenda, quid postea consecutum sit.

Deinde ipsius est negoti gestio pertractanda. Nam hoc genus earum rerum quae negotio sunt attributae secundo in loco nobis est expositum.
40 Hoc ergo in genere spectabitur locus, tempus, occasio, facultas; quorum unius cuiusque vis diligenter in confirmationis praeceptis explicata est. Quare, ne aut hic non admonuisse aut ne eadem iterum dixisse videamur, breviter iniciemus, quid quaque in parte considerari oporteat. In loco igitur opportunitas, in tempore longinquitas, in occasione commoditas ad faciendum idonea, in facultate copia et potestas earum rerum propter quas aliquid facilius fit aut quibus sine omnino confici non potest, consideranda est.

38 XII. Suspicions may be derived from the act itself, if one explores the whole course of the affair from all angles, and these suspicions may proceed in part from the act considered separately, and in part from the persons and the act taken together. They can be discovered in the action if we consider carefully the attributes of actions.<sup>a</sup> All the main classes of these seem to fit this issue and most of the sub-39 divisions. It will be necessary to see first what is coherent with the action itself, that is, what cannot be separated from it. Under this head it will be sufficient to examine with care what occurred before the act from which it seems that hope of success was aroused or an opportunity to perform it was sought, what was actually done in carrying out the act, and what followed after it.

Next, the actual performance of the act should be considered. For this kind of attribute of the action 40 was put by us in the second place. Under this head we look into the place, time, occasion and facilities. The meaning of each of these was carefully explained in the rules for confirmation.<sup>b</sup> We shall therefore insert here a discussion of what should be looked for under each head, in order that we may not seem to have omitted it here, but we shall be brief in order that we may not seem to repeat. In reference to place one should consider the opportunity which it afforded for the act, and in reference to time, length or duration, in reference to occasion, any circumstances lending themselves to the doing of the act, and under "facilities" the supply of, and access to, the means which make an act easier to perform or without which it cannot be done at all.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Book I. 36-43.

<sup>b</sup> Book I. 38-41.

41 Deinde videndum est quid adiunctum sit negotio, hoc est, quid maius, quid minus, quid aequè magnum sit, quid simile; ex quibus coniectura quaedam ducitur, si, quemadmodum res maiores, minores, aequè magnae, similes agi soleant, diligenter considerabitur. Quo in genere eventus quoque videndus erit; hoc est, quid ex quaque re soleat evenire magno opere considerandum est, ut metus, laetitia,

42 titubatio, audacia. Quarta autem pars rebus erat ex eis quas negotiis dicebamus esse attributas, consecutio. In ea quaeruntur ea quae gestum negotium confestim aut intervallo consequuntur. In quo videbimus ecqua consuetudo sit, ecqua lex, ecqua pactio, ecquod eius rei artificium aut usus aut exercitatio, hominum aut approbatio aut offensio, ex quibus nonnunquam elicitur aliquid suspicionis.

XIII. Sunt autem aliae suspensiones, quae communiter et ex negotiorum et ex personarum attributionibus sumuntur. Nam et ex fortuna et ex natura et ex victu, studio, factis, casu, orationibus, consilio et ex habitu animi aut corporis pleraque pertinent ad eas res, quae rem credibilem aut incredibilem facere possunt et cum facti suspensione iunguntur.

43 Maxime enim quaerere oportet in hac constitutione, primum potueritne aliquid fieri; deinde ecquo ab alio potuerit; deinde facultas, de qua ante diximus; deinde utrum id facinus sit quod paenitere fuerit necesse, quod spem celandi non haberet; deinde necessitudo, in qua necesse fuerit id aut fieri aut ita

41 In the next place one should examine the "adjunct" of the affair, that is, what is larger, smaller, of equal size, and similar; on these an inference may be based if one considers carefully how greater events, or lesser, those equally important or similar are wont to occur. The result has also to be considered under this head, that is one must particularly examine what condition usually results from every action, as for

42 example, fear, joy, vacillation, boldness. The fourth of our attributes of actions was consequence. Under this head we look for things which ensue on the performance of an act, either immediately or after some interval. In so doing we shall see whether it has given rise to any custom, law, covenant, technique, habit or practice, whether it has received the approval or disapproval of mankind; from these points frequently some suspicion is brought out.

XIII. There are, moreover, other angles of attack which derive in common from the attributes of actions and of persons. For many things in a man's fortune, his nature, manner of life, interests, deeds, accidents, speeches, purposes, and in his mental and physical characteristics are pertinent to the material which can make a charge credible or incredible, and are closely connected with a suspicion of crime.

43 The most important questions, indeed, in this issue are: first, could a given act have been performed? Second, could it have been performed by any one else? The third point concerns facilities, about which we spoke earlier. Next, was the crime of such a nature that the author was bound to repent of it, or one in which there was no hope of concealment? The next point is necessity, under which the question is, whether this act had to be done or fieri, quaeritur. Quorum pars ad consilium pertinet, quod personis attributum est, ut in ea causa quam exposuimus. Ante rem, quod in itinere se tam familiariter applicaverit, quod sermonis causam quaesierit, quod simul diverterit, dein cenarit. In re nox, somnus. Post rem, quod solus exierit, quod illum tam familiarem tam aequo animo reliquerit, 44 quod cruentum gladium habuerit.<sup>1</sup>

CICERO

Rursum, utrum videatur diligenter ratio faciendi esse habita et excogitata, an ita temere, ut non veri simile sit quemquam tam temere ad maleficium accessisse. In quo quaeritur num quo alio modo commodius potuerit fieri vel a fortuna administrari. Nam saepe, si pecuniae, adiumenta, adiutores desint, facultas fuisse faciendi non videtur. Hoc modo si diligenter attendamus, apta inter se esse intellegimus haec quae negotiis, et illa quae personis sunt attributa.

Hic non facile est neque necessarium est distinguere, ut in superioribus partibus, quo pacto quidque accusatorem et quomodo defensorem tractare oporteat. Non est necessarium, propterea quod causa posita, quid in quamque conveniat, res ipsa docebit eos qui non omnia hic se inventuros putabunt, sed<sup>2</sup> modo quandam in commune mediocrem
45 intellegentiam conferent; non facile autem quod et infinitum est tot de rebus utramque in partem

<sup>1</sup> After habuerit P<sup>2</sup>J add Horum pars ad consilium pertinet (some of these are related to "purpose").

<sup>2</sup> sed C: si sv, Weidner.

---

<sup>a</sup> §§ 14, 15. What follows discusses the case of the two travellers and the murder.

done in this way. Part of these have reference to purpose or intent, which is an attribute of persons, as, for example, in the case which we outlined above.<sup>a</sup> Pertinent circumstances before the deed are that he approached the rich man so familiarly, that he sought occasion to speak to him, that he stopped at the same inn and dined with him. The circumstances immediately connected with the deed are that it was night, and the victim was asleep. Pertinent events after the deed are that the accused left the inn alone, that he abandoned his intimate friend with such indifference, that he had a blood-stained sword.

44 Another point to be considered is whether a plan of action seems to have been carefully formed and thought out, or whether the deed was done so rashly that it seems unlikely that anyone rushed with such rashness into crime. In this connexion one may inquire whether the event could not have occurred more readily in another way, or even have been a result of chance. For often, if money, assistance and assistants are lacking, there seems to have been no possibility of acting. If we watch carefully in this way we shall find that the attributes of actions and of persons are closely connected.

In this case it is neither easy nor necessary to distinguish, as I did in earlier sections, how the prosecutor and how the counsel for the defence should handle each argument. It is not necessary, because when the case is once stated the facts themselves will show what argument applies to each side; at least it will be plain to those who will not expect to find every detail set down in this book, but will 45 contribute only a fair grade of intelligence. It is not easy because it is an endless task to explain singillatim de una quaque explicare et alias aliter haec in utramque partem causae solent convenire. XIV. Quare considerare haec quae exposuimus oportebit. Facilius autem ad inventionem animus incidet, si gesti negoti et suam et adversarii narrationem saepe et diligenter pertractabit et quod quaeque pars suspicionis habebit eliciens considerabit quare, quo consilio, qua spe perficiendi quidque factum sit; hoc cur modo potius quam illo; cur ab hoc potius quam ab illo; cur nullo adiutore aut cur hoc; cur nemo sit conscius aut cur sit aut cur hic sit; cur hoc ante factum sit; cur hoc ante factum non sit;<sup>1</sup> cur hoc in ipso negotio, cur hoc post negotium, an factum de industria an rem ipsam consecutum sit; constetne oratio aut cum re aut ipsa secum; hoc huiusne rei sit signum an illius, an et huius et illius et utrius potius; quid factum sit, quod non oportuerit, aut non factum, 46 quod oportuerit. Cum animus hac intentione omnes totius negoti partes considerabit, tum illi ipsi in medium coacervati loci procedent, de quibus ante dictum est; et tum ex singulis, tum ex coniunctis argumenta certa nascentur, quorum argumentorum pars probabili, pars necessario in genere versabitur. Accedunt autem saepe ad coniecturam quaestiones, testimonia, rumores, quae contra omnia uterque

CICERO

<sup>1</sup> cur hoc ante factum non sit omitted by M, bracketed by Kayser.

---

<sup>a</sup> Quaestio here probably has the meaning of "examination under torture."

- so many arguments one by one about every fact of every case, and besides these arguments usually fit each part of the case differently on different occasions. XIV. Therefore one should study carefully what we have set forth. Furthermore, the mind will more easily come upon "inventions" if one examines frequently and carefully one's own narrative of the events and that of the opponent, and eliciting any clues that each part may afford, ponders why, with what intent and with what hope of success each thing was done; why it was done in this way rather than in that; why by this man rather than by that; why with no helper or why with this one; why no one knew about it, or why some one did, and why it was this one who did; why another act was performed earlier; why another act was not performed earlier; why this was done in immediate connexion with the event, and this other thing after the event; whether this was done intentionally or followed as a natural consequence of the event; whether what he said is consistent with the events or with itself; whether this is a sign of this or of that, or both of this and of that and of which the more; what was done that ought not to have been done, or what was left undone that ought to have 48 been done. When the mind studies so attentively every part of the whole affair, then the topics mentioned above which are stored up will come forth of their own accord; and then sometimes from one, sometimes from a combination of topics definite arguments will be produced, part of which will be classed as probable and part as irrefutable. Inference is often assisted or supported by examinations,<sup>a</sup> testimony, rumours, all of which each counsel should simili via praeceptorum torquere ad suae causae commodum debebit. Nam et ex quaestione suspiciones et ex testimonio et ex rumore aliquo pari ratione ut ex causa et ex persona et ex facto duci oportebit.

47 Quare nobis et ei videntur errare qui hoc genus suspicionum artifici non putant indigere, et ei qui aliter hoc de genere ac de omni coniectura praeciendum putant. Omnis enim eisdem ex locis coniectura sumenda est. Nam et eius qui in quaestione aliquid dixerit, et eius qui in testimonio, et ipsius rumoris causa et veritas ex eisdem attributionibus reperietur.

Omni autem in causa pars argumentorum est adiuncta ei causae solum quae dicitur, et ex ipsa ita ducta ut ab ea separatim in omnes eiusdem generis causas transferri non satis commode possit; pars autem est pervagatior et aut in omnes eiusdem generis aut in plerasque causas accommodata.

48 XV. Haec ergo argumenta, quae transferri in multas causas possunt, locos communes nominamus. Nam locus communis aut certae rei quandam continet amplificationem, ut si quis hoc velit ostendere, eum qui parentem necarit maximo supplicio esse dignum; quo loco, nisi perorata et probata<sup>1</sup> causa, non est utendum; aut dubiae, quae ex contrario quoque habeat probabiles rationes argumentandi, ut suspicionibus credi oportere, et contra, suspicionibus credi non oportere. Ac pars locorum com-

<sup>1</sup> et probata omitted by M: bracketed by Schuetz, Ströbel.

---

<sup>a</sup> The reference is to the division of proofs into ἔντεχνοι (subject to rules of rhetoric or logic) and ἄτεχνοι (not subject to such rules). The latter class included witnesses, documents, etc. The division is as old as Aristotle. Cf. Rhet. I. ii, 2, 1355 b.

twist to the advantage of his own case, making them tell in opposite directions though he follows a similar course of rules. For suspicion will have to be derived from investigation and testimony and some rumour in like manner as from the case and from the person and from the act.

47 Therefore those seem to me to be wrong who think that this kind of suspicion does not need systematic treatment by the art of rhetoric, as also do those who think that the rules about this kind should differ from those about inference as a whole. For all inference has to be based on the same forms of argument. For the cause or motive of one who makes a statement under torture and the truth of what he says will be ascertained from the same attributes as other arguments, and the same is true of one who gives testimony, and even of rumour itself.<sup>a</sup>

In every case some of the arguments are related only to the case that is being pleaded, and are so dependent on it that they cannot advantageously be separated from it and transferred to other cases, while others are of a more general nature, and adaptable to all or most cases of the same kind. XV.

48 These arguments which can be transferred to many cases, we call common topics. A common topic either contains an amplification of an undisputed statement—for example, if one should wish to show that a man who has murdered his father or mother deserves the extreme penalty (this type is to be used only when the case has been finished and proved)—or of a doubtful statement against which there are also plausible lines of argument; for example, it is right to put confidence in suspicions, and on the other hand, it is not right. Some common topics are used munium per indignationem aut per conquestionem inducitur, de quibus ante dictum est; pars per aliquam probabilem utraque ex parte rationem. Distinguitur autem oratio atque illustratur maxime raro inducendis locis communibus et aliquo loco iam certioribus illis argumentis confirmato. Nam et tum conceditur commune quiddam dicere, cum diligenter aliqui proprius causae locus tractatus est, et auditoris animus aut renovatur ad ea quae restant aut omnibus iam dictis exsuscitatur. Omnia autem ornamenta elocutionis, in quibus et suavitatis et gravitatis plurimum consistit, et omnia quae in inventione rerum et sententiarum aliquid habent dignitatis in communes locos conferuntur. Quare non, ut causarum, sic oratorum quoque multorum communes loci sunt. Nam nisi ab eis qui multa in exercitatione magnam sibi verborum et sententiarum copiam comparaverint, tractari non poterunt ornate et graviter, quemadmodum natura ipsa eorum desiderat.

CICERO

Atque hoc sit nobis dictum communiter de omni genere locorum communium. XVI. Nunc exponemus, in coniecturalem constitutionem qui loci communes incidere soleant: suspicionibus credi oportere et non oportere; rumoribus credi oportere et non oportere; testibus credi oportere et non oportere; quaestionibus credi oportere et non oportere; vitam ante actam spectari oportere et non oportere; eiusdem esse, qui in illa re peccarit, hoc quoque admisisse, et non esse eiusdem; causam maxime spectari oportere et non oportere. Atque in connexion with resentment and complaint, which have been explained above,<sup>a</sup> and part in supporting 49 some probable line of reasoning on either side. A speech, however, is occasionally rendered distinguished or brilliant by introducing common topics and some topic backed up by arguments when the audience is already convinced. In fact that is certainly the moment when it is permissible to say something "common", when some passage peculiar to the case has been developed with great care, and the spirit of the audience is being refreshed for what is to come, or is being roused to passion now that the argument has been concluded. Moreover, all the ornaments of style, which lend charm and dignity, are lavished on common topics, as well as everything which in the invention of matter or 50 thought contributes to weight and grandeur. Therefore, though these are topics "common" to many cases, they are not common to many orators. For they cannot be treated with elegance and dignity, as their very nature requires, except by those who through long practice have acquired a vast store of words and ideas.

This is enough to say in general about every kind of common topic. XVI. Now I shall set down what common topics usually fit the issue of fact: one should and should not put confidence in suspicions, in rumours, in witnesses, in examinations under torture; one should and should not take into consideration a man's past life; it is and is not natural for the same man to commit that offence and this crime also; one should and should not give especial consideration to the motive. These and any other similar common

<sup>a</sup> I. 100-109.

hi quidem et si qui eiusmodi ex proprio argumento communes loci nascentur, in contrarias partes diducuntur.

51 Certus autem locus est accusatoris, per quem auget facti atrocitatem, et alter, per quem negat malorum misereri oportere: defensoris, per quem calumnia accusatorum cum indignatione ostenditur et per quem cum conquestione misericordia captatur. Hi et ceteri loci omnes communes ex eisdem praeceptis sumuntur quibus ceterae argumentationes; sed illae tenuius et subtilius et acutius tractantur, hi autem gravius et ornatius et cum verbis tum etiam sententiis excellentibus. In illis enim finis est ut id quod dicitur verum esse videatur, in his, tametsi hoc quoque videri oportet, tamen finis est amplitudo. Nunc ad aliam constitutionem transeamus.

52 XVII. Cum est nominis controversia, quia vis vocabuli definienda verbis est, constitutio definitiva dicitur. Eius generis exemplo nobis posita sit haec causa: C. Flaminius, is qui consul rem male gessit bello Punico secundo, cum tribunus plebis esset, invito senatu et omnino contra voluntatem omnium optimatum per seditionem ad populum legem agrariam ferebat. Hunc pater suus concilium plebis habentem de templo deduxit; arcessitur maiestatis. Intentio est: "Maiestatem minuisti, quod tribunum plebis de templo deduxisti." Depulsio est: "Non ° Gaius Flaminius proposed to divide the territory of Picenum and Cisalpine Gaul among needy citizens. He met his death at the battle of Lake Trasimenus in 217 B.C. Another version of the story (in Valerius Maximus, V, iv, 5) makes the father use only moral suasion.

---

topics which may spring out of an argument peculiar to the case in hand, are applicable to both sides.

51 There is, however, a common topic belonging to the prosecutor alone, in which he makes much of the atrocity of the crime, and another in which he asserts that malefactors should not be pitied, and one for the counsel for the defence in which the malice of the prosecution is indignantly denounced, and another in which he bemoans the lot of the defendant and pleads for mercy. These and other common topics are subject to the same rules as are other arguments. But the others are treated with greater restraint, simplicity and acumen, while the common topics are developed with greater emphasis and embellishment, and with lofty language and thought. For in arguments the end is to give what is said the appearance of truth; in common topics, although this should also be an object, still the chief end is amplification. Now let us pass to another issue.

52 XVII. When there is a dispute about the name by which an act is described, the issue is known as the constitutio definitiva (or issue of definition) because the meaning of the word must be defined; we may take the following case as an example of this class: Gaius Flaminius <sup>a</sup>—the one who as consul conducted an unsuccessful campaign in the Second Punic War—when tribune of the people seditiously proposed an agrarian law to the people against the wishes of the senate and in general contrary to the desires of all the upper classes. As he was haranguing the popular assembly his father dragged him from the rostrum, and was charged with lese-majesty. The charge is, “You committed lese-majesty in that you dragged a tribune of the people from the rostrum.” The minui maiestatem." Quaestio est: Maiestatemne minuerit? Ratio: "In filium enim quam habebam potestatem, ea sum usus." Rationis infirmatio: "At enim, qui patria potestate, hoc est privata quadam, tribuniciam potestatem, hoc est populi potestatem infirmat, minuit maiestatem." Iudicatio est: Minuatne is maiestatem qui in tribuniciam potestatem patria potestate utatur? Ad hanc iudicationem argumentationes omnes afferre oportebit.

CICERO

53 Ac ne qui forte arbitretur nos non intellegere aliam quoque incidere constitutionem in hanc causam, eam nos partem solam sumimus in quam praecepta nobis danda sunt. Omnibus autem partibus hoc in libro explicatis, quivis omni in causa, si diligenter attendet, omnes videbit constitutiones et earum partes et controversias si quae forte in eas incident. Nam de omnibus praescribemus.

Primus ergo accusatoris locus est eius nominis cuius de vi quaeritur brevis et aperta et ex opinione hominum definitio, hoc modo: Maiestatem minuere est de dignitate aut amplitudine aut potestate populi aut eorum quibus populus potestatem dedit aliquid derogare. Hoc sic breviter expositum pluribus verbis est et rationibus confirmandum et ita esse ut descripseris ostendendum. Postea ad id quod definieris factum eius qui accusabitur adiungere oportebit et ex eo quod ostenderis esse verbi causa

---

<sup>a</sup> In Roman law a father had full authority—even of life or death—over his children, no matter how old they might be.

<sup>b</sup> The case might presumably be argued under the constitutio generalis by pleading that he was carrying out the order of the Senate in restraining a seditious person (remotio

answer is : " I did not commit lese-majesty." The question is, " Did he commit lese-majesty?" The excuse is, " I used the authority which I had over my son." <sup>a</sup> The denial of the excuse, " On the contrary, one who uses the authority belonging to him as a father—that is private authority—to lessen the authority of a tribune—that is, the authority of the people—is guilty of lese-majesty." The point for the judge's decision is, " Would he be guilty of lese-majesty, who used his authority as father against the authority of a tribune?" All arguments must be directed to this point.

53 And lest any one happen to think that we are not aware that another issue arises in this case, we shall say that we are taking up only the part for which we must at this time give rules and principles. <sup>b</sup> When all facts have been discussed in this book, any one in any case will, if he pays careful attention, find all the issues and their facts and the disputes, whatever they are, which may arise : for we shall give directions about all of them.

The first topic in the prosecutor's argument is a brief, clear and conventional definition of the word whose meaning is sought, as follows : Lese-majesty is a lessening of the dignity or high estate or authority of the people or of those to whom the people have given authority. This brief exposition must be supported by a lengthy discussion of reasons, and shown to be as you have outlined it. Then it will be necessary to show the connexion between the act of the accused and your definition, and on the basis of what you have shown to be the meaning of lese-criminis), or that the act was committed for the sake of a greater good (comparatio). Cf. Book I. 15.

maiestatem minuere, docere adversarium maiestatem minuisse et hunc totum locum communi loco confirmare, per quem ipsius facti atrocitas aut indignitas aut omnino culpa cum indignatione augeatur. Post 54 erit infirmanda adversariorum descriptio. Ea autem infirmabitur, si falsa demonstrabitur. Hoc ex opinione hominum sumetur, cum quemadmodum et quibus in rebus homines in consuetudine scribendi aut sermocinandi eo verbo uti soleant, considerabitur. Item infirmabitur, si turpis aut inutilis esse ostenditur eius descriptionis approbatio et, quae incommoda consecutura sint, eo concessio ostendetur—id autem ex honestatis et ex utilitatis partibus sumetur, de quibus in deliberationis praeceptis exponemus—et si cum definitione nostra adversariorum definitionem conferemus et nostram veram, honestam, 55 utilem esse demonstrabimus, illorum contra. Quaeremus autem res aut maiore aut minore aut pari in negotio similes, ex quibus affirmetur nostra descriptio.

XVIII. Iam si res plures erunt definiendae: ut, si quaeratur, fur sit an sacrilegus, qui vasa ex privato sacra surriperit, erit utendum pluribus definitionibus; deinde simili ratione causa tractanda. Locus autem communis in eius malitiam, qui non modo rerum, verum etiam verborum potestatem sibi arrogare conatus et faciat quod velit, et id quod fecerit quo velit nomine appellet.

majesty as far as words are concerned, to demonstrate that your opponent committed lese-majesty, and then to support the whole argument by a common topic in which you magnify and inveigh against the enormity of the deed itself, its heinousness or at least its guilt. After that the definition of the 54 opposing counsel must be invalidated; this can be done if it is shown to be false. Such an argument will be based on common belief when one considers how and in what connexion people are accustomed to use such a word in ordinary writing or speech. The definition of the opponents may also be attacked if we show that to approve it is dishonourable and inexpedient, and point out what disadvantages will follow if their definition is accepted (this is based on the concepts of honour and advantage which we shall expound in giving the rules for speeches before deliberative bodies);<sup>a</sup> and if we compare our definition with that of our opponents and prove that ours is 55 true, honourable and expedient, and theirs the opposite. Furthermore, we shall search for similar cases of greater or less or of equal seriousness to support our definition.

XVIII. In a case in which several words have to be defined—for example, when the question is whether it is theft or sacrilege to steal sacred vessels from a private house—one must make use of several definitions and then proceed to treat the case in the manner already laid down. Another common topic attacks the villainy of a man who, attempting to arrogate to himself the control not only of acts but also of words, both does what he pleases and calls his deed by whatever name he pleases.

<sup>a</sup> §§ 157-176.

CICERO

Deinde defensoris primus locus est item nominis brevis et aperta et ex opinione hominum descriptio, hoc modo: Maiestatem minuere est aliquid de re publica, cum potestatem non habeas, administrare. Deinde huius confirmatio similibus et exemplis et rationibus,<sup>1</sup> postea sui facti ab illa definitione separatio. Deinde locus communis, per quem 56 facti utilitas aut honestas adaugetur. Deinde sequitur adversariorum definitionis reprehensio, quae eisdem ex locis omnibus quos accusatori praescriptimus conficitur; et cetera post eadem praeter communem locum inducentur. Locus autem communis erit defensoris is per quem indignabitur accusatorem sui periculi causa non res solum convertere, verum etiam verba commutare conari. Nam illi quidem communes loci, aut qui calumniae accusatorum demonstrandae aut misericordiae captandae aut facti indignandi aut a misericordia deterrendi causa sumuntur, ex periculi magnitudine, non ex causae genere ducuntur. Quare non in omnem causam, sed in omne causae genus incidunt. Eorum mentionem in coniecturali constitutione fecimus. Inductione<sup>2</sup> autem, cum causa postulabit, utemur.

57 XIX. Cum autem actio translationis aut commutationis indigere videtur, quod non aut is agit quem oportet, aut cum eo quicum oportet, aut apud quos, qua lege, qua poena, quo crimine, quo tempore

---

<sup>1</sup> similibus et exemplis et rationibus, bracketed by Kayser, Friedrich, Ströbel.

<sup>2</sup> For inductione Phillipson suggests indignatione.

The first topic for the defence is likewise a brief, clear and conventional definition of the word, as follows: "Lese-majesty consists in doing some public business without authority." Then follows the confirmation of this definition by examples and arguments similar to those used by the prosecution. After this it can be shown that the act does not square with the definition. Then a common topic enlarging on the advantage and honour arising from the act.

56 Then follows the invalidation of the definition given by the opposing counsel, which is accomplished by using all the same lines of argument that we have prescribed for the prosecutor. And after this all the other arguments used by the prosecution may be employed except the common topic. The common topic available for the defendant is one in which he expresses his indignation that the prosecutor attempts to put him in jeopardy not only by distorting facts but even by altering the meaning of the language. For the common topics which are used to demonstrate the ill-will of the prosecutors or to arouse pity, or to denounce a crime or to deter the judges from showing mercy, arise out of the magnitude of the peril, not out of the kind of case. Therefore they are not incidental to every case, but to every kind of case. We mentioned them in connexion with the issue of fact. Induction is another thing that we shall use when the case requires.<sup>a</sup>

57 XIX. When it seems necessary to transfer the action to another court, or to make a change in procedure because the proper person does not bring the action, or it is not brought against the proper person or before the proper court, or under the proper statute, or with a proper request for penalty, or with oportet, constitutio translativa appellatur. Eius nobis exempla permulta opus sint, si singula translationum genera quaeramus; sed quia ratio praecceptorum similis est, exemplorum multitudine super-sedendum est. Atque in nostra quidem consuetudine multis de causis fit ut rarius incidant translationes. Nam et praetoris exceptionibus multae excluduntur actiones et ita ius civile habemus constitutum, ut causa cadat is qui non quemadmodum oportet 58 egerit. Quare in iure plerumque versantur. Ibi enim et exceptiones postulatur et agendi<sup>1</sup> potestas datur et omnis conceptio privatorum iudiciorum constituitur. In ipsis autem iudiciis rarius incidunt et tamen, si quando incidunt, eiusmodi sunt ut per se minus habeant firmitudinis, confirmentur autem assumpta alia aliqua constitutione: ut in quodam iudicio, cum venefici cuiusdam nomen esset delatum et, quia parricidi causa subscripta esset, extra ordinem esset acceptum, cum in accusatione autem alia quaedam crimina testibus et argumentis confirmarentur, parricidi autem mentio solum facta esset, defensor in hoc ipso multum oportet et diu consistat: cum de nece parentis nihil demonstratum esset, indignum facinus esse ea poena afficere reum qua parricidae afficiuntur; id autem, si damnaretur, fieri necesse esse, quoniam et id causae subscriptum

CICERO

59 et ea re nomen extra ordinem sit acceptum. Ea igitur poena si affici reum non oporteat, damnari

<sup>1</sup> et agendi et quoniammodo agendi M: et agendi erased in P: deleted in SL: et quodammodo agendi Ju: de modo agendi Victorinus.

---

<sup>a</sup> I.e. the crime was so heinous that it was brought up immediately before a special court.

the proper accusation, or at the proper time, the issue is called translative (or procedural). We should need very many examples if we should look for every kind of transfer or change; but because the principle of all the rules is the same, we must dispense with a multitude of examples. In legal procedure at Rome there are many reasons why speeches involving transfers rarely are made. For many actions are excluded by the exceptiones (counter-pleas) granted by the praetor, and the provisions of our civil law are such that one who does not bring his action in 58 the proper form loses his suit. Therefore such questions generally are disposed of in iure (before the praetor). For it is there that exceptions are requested and right of action is granted, and the complete formula for the guidance of the trial of private (or civil) actions is drawn up. Pleas for transfer rarely come up in the actual trial and if they do they are of such a nature that they have little force in themselves, but are supported by the aid of some other issue: for instance, in a certain trial a man was accused of poisoning, and because the indictment signed by the prosecutor alleged parricide, the case was accepted out of turn,<sup>a</sup> but at the trial certain other crimes were proved by testimony and arguments, and parricide was barely mentioned. The counsel for the defence should dwell long and emphatically on this very point: that since no proof has been given of the murder of a parent it is an outrage to inflict on the defendant the penalty inflicted on parricides; but if he is convicted, this must necessarily follow, for this was in the signed indictment and for this reason the case was accepted 59 out of turn. If, then, this penalty ought not to be quoque non oportere, quoniam ea poena damnationem necessario consequatur. Hic defensor poenae commutationem ex translativo genere inducendo totam infirmabit accusationem. Verumtamen ceteris quoque criminibus defendendis coniecturali constitutione translationem confirmabit.

CICERO

XX. Exemplum autem translationis in causa positum nobis sit huiusmodi: Cum ad vim faciendam quidam armati venissent, armati contra praesto fuerunt, et cuidam equiti Romano quidam ex armatis resistenti gladio manum praecidit. Agit is cui manus praecisa est iniuriarum. Postulat is quicum agitur a praetore exceptionem: Extra quam in 60 reum capitis praeiudicium fiat. Hic is qui agit iudicium purum postulat; ille quicum agitur exceptionem addi ait oportere. Quaestio est: Excipiendum sit an non. Ratio: "Non enim oportet in recuperatorio iudicio eius malefici, de quo inter sicarios quaeritur, praeiudicium fieri." Infirmatio rationis: "Eiusmodi sunt iniuriae, ut de eis indignum sit non primo quoque tempore iudicari." Iudicatio: Atrocitas iniuriarum satisne causae sit, quare, dum de ea iudicatur, de aliquo maiore maleficio, de quo iudicium comparatum sit, praeiudicetur? Atque exemplum quidem hoc est. In omni autem causa ab utroque quaeri oportebit a quo et per quos inflicted on the defendant, he should not be convicted either, because the penalty necessarily follows conviction. Here the counsel for the defence by bringing a change of penalty into the speech, by using the translative issue, will invalidate the whole accusation. Nevertheless, there will be a defence against the other charges, too, on the issue of fact, and that will fortify his plea for a change of procedure.

---

* A board of three or five persons appointed for summary trial.

XX. As an example of translatio (transfer) in a case at law let us take the following: Some armed men had come with the intent to do violence, and other armed men were ready to meet them. A Roman knight resisted and one of the armed band cut off his hand with a sword. The man whose hand had been cut off brings action for iniuriae (personal injury). The defendant claims an exception from the praetor in these words: "Provided that pre-judgement shall not be given against the defendant 60 on a capital charge." Here the complainant asks for a trial on a simple fact; the defendant says that the exception should be added. The question is: "Should the exception be granted or not?" The supporting argument for the defendant's counter-plea is: "In a trial before recuperatores<sup>a</sup> the defendant should not be pre-judged of a crime which belongs to the court trying assassination." The reply to his plea is: "The wrong is so serious that it is improper not to try the case at the earliest opportunity." The point for the judge's decision is: "Is the seriousness of the wrong sufficient reason why, in passing judgement upon it, a greater crime, for which a court is assigned, should be pre-judged?" This is an example. But in every case it will be proper for both sides to consider by whom and through whom et quo modo et quo tempore aut agi aut iudicari aut 61 quid statui de ea re conveniat. Id ex partibus iuris, de quibus post dicendum est, sumi oportebit et ratiocinari quid in similibus rebus fieri soleat, et videre, utrum malitia aliud agatur, aliud simuletur, an stultitia, an necessitudine, quod alio modo agere non possit, an occasione agendi sic sit iudicium aut actio constituta, an recte sine ulla re eiusmodi res agatur.

Locus autem communis contra eum qui translationem inducet: fugere iudicium ac poenam, quia causae diffidat. A translatione autem: omnium fore perturbationem, si non ita res agantur et in iudicium veniant quo pacto oporteat; hoc est, si aut eum eo agatur quocum non oporteat, aut alia poena, alio crimine, alio tempore; atque hanc rationem ad perturbationem iudiciorum omnium pertinere.

Tres igitur haec constitutiones, quae partes non habent, ad hunc modum tractabuntur. Nunc generalem constitutionem et partes eius consideremus.

62 XXI. Cum et facto et facti nomine concesso neque ulla actionis illata controversia, vis et natura et genus ipsius negoti quaeritur, constitutionem generalem appellamus. Huius primas esse partes duas nobis videri diximus, negotialem et iudicialem.

---

<sup>a</sup> For a full discussion of the legal proceedings involved in translatio v. Greenidge, The Legal Procedure of Cicero's Time, pp. 132-81; Buckland, The Main Institutions of Roman Private Law, chaps. XIX, XX; Buckland, A Text-Book of Roman Law from Augustus to Justinian, 2nd ed. (1932), chap. XIII; Girard, Manuel Élémentaire de Droit Romain, 8th ed., pp. 1061-99.

and how and at what time it is fitting that action be brought or judgement given or any decision made 61 about this case.<sup>a</sup> One must base this on the principles of the civil law which we are to discuss later,<sup>b</sup> and study what is generally done in similar cases, and see whether through malice one thing is actually being done while another is pretended, or whether the trial is conducted and the action set up in this way through stupidity or through necessity because the action can be brought in no other way, or for the sake of some convenience in hurrying the case, or whether the action is properly brought without any circumstance of this kind.

The common topic to be used against the one who proposes a change of procedure: that he refuses to face trial and punishment, because he has no confidence in his case; in defence of change of procedure: that there will be a general confusion if cases are not tried and brought to judgement in the proper way, i.e. if the action is brought against the wrong person, or with a wrong penalty, or charge, or at a wrong time; and that such a course of action tends to a confusion of the whole judicial process. ]

These three issues, which have no subdivisions, will be treated in this way. Now let us consider the qualitative issue and its subdivisions.

62 XXI. When it is agreed that an act has been performed and by what name it shall be called and there is no dispute about procedure, and the question is simply about the import, the nature and the essence of the occurrence, we call the issue qualitative. We have said<sup>c</sup> that we think there are two divisions of it, legal and equitable.

<sup>a</sup> Below, §§ 65-68.

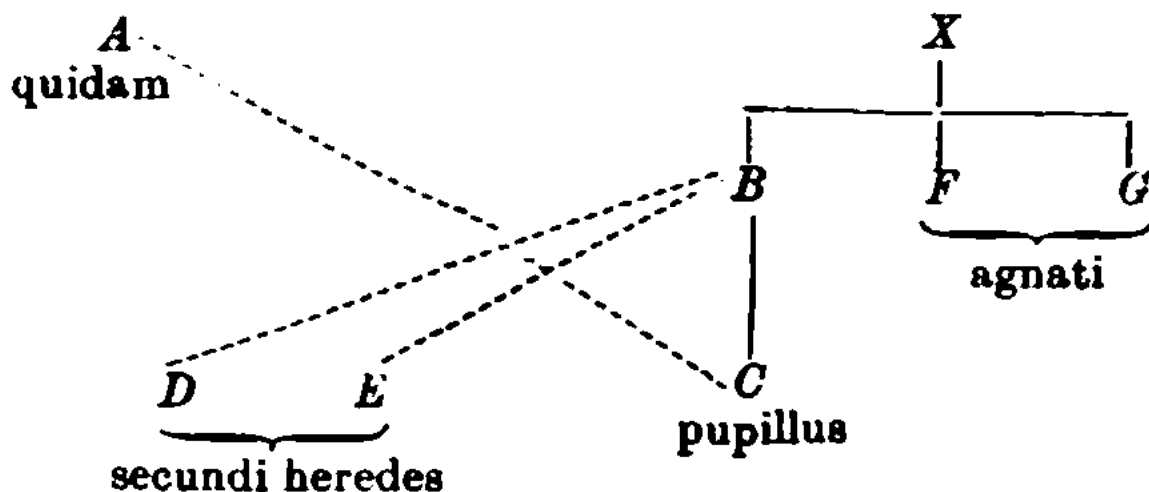

<sup>c</sup> I. 14.

CICERO

Negotialis est quae in ipso negotio iuris civilis habet implicatam controversiam. Ea est huiusmodi: Quidam pupillum heredem fecit; pupillus autem ante mortuus est, quam in suam tutelam venit. De hereditate ea quae pupillo venit, inter eos qui patris pupilli heredes secundi sunt et inter agnatos pupilli controversia est. Possessio heredum secundorum est. Intentio est agnatorum: "Nostra pecunia est, de qua is cuius agnati sumus testatus non est." Depulsio est: "Immo nostra qui heredes testamento patris sumus." Quaestio est: Utrorum sit? Ratio: "Pater enim et sibi et filio testamentum scripsit, dum is pupillus esset. Quare, quae fili fuerunt, testamento patris nostra fiant necesse est." Infirmatio rationis: "Immo pater sibi scripsit et secundum heredem non filio, sed sibi iussit esse. Quare, praeterquam quod ipsius fuit, testamento illius vestrum esse non potest." Iudicatio: Possitne quisquam de fili pupilli re testari; an heredes secundi ipsius patrisfamilias, non fili quoque eius pupilli heredes sint?

* That is, next of kin on the male side, who would take the inheritance in default of a will.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. the similar case cited in Brutus, 194-98, and de Oratore I. 180. Such cases seem to have been resolved in

A legal issue is one which has a dispute involving only a point of civil law. The following is an example: A certain man made a ward his heir; the ward, however, died before coming of age. A dispute arises between the reversionary heirs of the father of the ward and the agnates<sup>a</sup> of the ward over the property which the ward had inherited. The reversionary heirs have possession. The complaint of the agnates is: "We should have the property concerning which he, whose agnates we are, left no will." The answer is: "On the other hand, it belongs to us who are the heirs under the father's will." The question is: "Who takes?" The plaintiff's argument is: "The father made a will for himself and for his son as long as he should be a ward; therefore the property of the son must be ours according to the father's will." The reply to the argument is: "On the other hand, the father made his will for himself, and named reversionary heirs for himself, but not for his son; therefore nothing except what belonged to the father can come to you by his will." The point for the judge's decision is: "Can anyone bequeath property of a son who becomes a ward? Or are the reversionary heirs heirs of the father only, and not of his minor son also?"<sup>b</sup> later law, at least, in favour of the reversionary heir. Cf. Girard, Manuel Élémentaire de Droit Romain, 8th ed., pp. 881-85; Buckland, A Text-Book of Roman Law, 2nd ed., p. 302. The diagram may elucidate the case.

There was no dispute over the property which C inherited from B; that went to D and E under B's will. The question is about the inheritance of property inherited by C from A after B's death.

CICERO

63 Atque hoc non alienum est, quod ad multa pertineat, ne aut nusquam aut usquequaque dicatur, hic admonere. Sunt causae quae plures habent rationes in simplici constitutione; quod fit, cum id quod factum est aut quod defenditur, pluribus de causis rectum aut probabile videri potest, ut in hac ipsa causa. Supponatur enim ab heredibus haec ratio: “Unius enim pecuniae plures dissimilibus de causis heredes esse non possunt, nec unquam factum est, ut eiusdem pecuniae alius testamento, 64 alius lege heres esset.” Infirmatio autem haec erit: “Non est una pecunia, propterea quod altera pupilli iam erat adventicia; cuius heres non illo in testamento quisquam scriptus erat, si quid pupillo accidisset; et de altera patris etiam nunc mortui voluntas plurimum valebat, quae iam mortuo pupillo suis heredibus concedebat.” Iudicatio est: Unane pecunia fuerit; aut si hac erunt usi infirmatione: Posse plures esse unius heredes pecuniae dissimilibus de causis et de eo ipso esse controversiam, iudicatio nascitur: Possintne eiusdem pecuniae plures dissimilibus generibus heredes esse? XXII. Ergo una in constitutione intellectum est quomodo et rationes et rationum infirmationes et propterea iudicationes plures fiant.

65 Nunc huius generis praecepta videamus. Utrisque aut etiam omnibus, si plures ambigent, ius ex quibus rebus constet, considerandum est. Initium ergo eius ab natura ductum videtur; quaedam autem ex utilitatis ratione aut perspicua nobis aut obscura

63 A warning applicable to many cases may not be amiss at this point, that it may not be omitted altogether or repeated everywhere. There are cases that have several supporting arguments for one issue. This occurs when what has been done or what is defended can seem right or probable from several causes, as in this very case. For suppose that the heirs offer this argument: "There cannot be several heirs of one property for different reasons, nor was there ever a case in which one person inherited property by will and another inherited the same

64 property by law." The answer is as follows: "It is not one property, because part of the minor's property at the time of his death was adventitious, and there was no statement in that will that anyone was to inherit property which might have fallen to the minor; and about the other part the wish of the father now dead was perfectly valid, which bequeathed the property to his heirs when once the minor was dead." The point for decision is: "Was there one property?" Or if they use this reply: that there can be several heirs of one property for different reasons, and that the dispute is about this very question, the point for decision arises: "Can there be several heirs of the same property for different reasons?" XXII. And so it has been shown how there can be several arguments and replies and points for decision in connexion with one issue.

65 Now let us look at the rules governing this issue. Both parties (or all parties if there are more than two concerned in the litigation) must consider the sources from which law arises. Its origin seems to be in nature. Certain principles either obvious or obscure to us have by reason of advantage passed into custom; in consuetudinem venisse; post autem approbata quaedam a consuetudine aut vero utilia visa legibus esse firmata; ac naturae quidem ius esse, quod nobis non opinio, sed quaedam innata vis adferat, ut religionem, pietatem, gratiam, vindicationem, 66 observantiam, veritatem. Religionem eam quae in metu et caerimonia deorum sit appellant; pietatem, quae erga patriam aut parentes aut alios sanguine coniunctos officium conservare moneat; gratiam, quae in memoria et remuneratione officiorum et honoris et amicitiarum observantiam teneat; vindicationem, per quam vim et contumeliam defendendo aut ulciscendo propulsamus a nobis et nostris, qui nobis cari esse debent, et per quam peccata punimur; observantiam, per quam aetate aut sapientia aut honore aut aliqua dignitate antecedentes veremur et colimus; veritatem, per quam damus operam, ne quid aliter quam confirmaverimus 67 fiat aut factum aut futurum sit. Ac naturae quidem iura minus ipsa quaeruntur ad hanc controversiam, quod neque in hoc civili iure versantur et a vulgari intellegentia remotiora sunt; ad similitudinem vero aliquam aut ad rem amplificandam saepe sunt inferenda.

CICERO

Consuetudine autem ius esse putatur id quod voluntate omnium sine lege vetustas comprobarit. In ea autem quaedam sunt iura ipsa iam certa propter vetustatem. Quo in genere et alia sunt multa et eorum multo maxima pars quae praetores edicere consuerunt. Quaedam autem genera iuris

---

<sup>a</sup> On taking office the praetor published the rules for legal procedure by which he would be governed during his term. In the course of time these came to be more and more a repetition of the practice of the past, and developed into a code of civil law.

afterward certain principles approved by custom or deemed to be really advantageous have been confirmed by statute. And the law of nature is something which is implanted in us not by opinion, but by a kind of innate instinct; it includes religion, duty, gratitude, revenge, reverence, and truth.

66 Religion is the term applied to the fear and worship of the gods. Duty warns us to keep our obligations to our country or parents or other kin. Gratitude has regard for remembering and returning services, honour, and acts of friendship. Revenge is the act through which by defending or avenging we repel violence and insult from ourselves and from those who ought to be dear to us, and by which we punish offences. Reverence is the act by which we show respect to and cherish our superiors in age or wisdom or honour or any high position. Truth is the quality by which we endeavour to avoid any discrepancy between our statements and facts, past,

67 present or future. The rights of nature themselves are, however, relatively unimportant for this sort of controversy because they are not involved in the civil law and are somewhat remote from the understanding of the vulgar; they may, however, frequently be brought in for a comparison or to enlarge on some topic.

Customary law is thought to be that which lapse of time has approved by the common consent of all without the sanction of statute. In it there are certain principles of law which through lapse of time have become absolutely fixed. Among the many others in this class are by far the largest part of those which the praetors have been accustomed to embody in their edicts.<sup>a</sup> Moreover, certain ideas of

CICERO

iam certa consuetudine facta sunt; quod genus 68 pactum, par, iudicatum. Pactum est quod inter quos convenit ita iustum putatur ut iure praestare dicatur. Par, quod in omnes aequabile est. Iudica-tum, de quo iam ante sententia alicuius aut aliquorum constitutum est. Iam iura legitima ex legibus cognosci oportebit. His ergo ex partibus iuris, quod cuique aut ex ipsa re aut ex simili aut maiore minoreve nasci videbitur, attendere atque elicere pertemptando unamquamque iuris partem oportebit.

Locorum autem communium quoniam, ut ante dictum est, duo genera sunt, quorum alterum dubiae rei, alterum certae continet amplificationem, quid ipsa causa det, et quid augeri per communem locum possit et oporteat, considerabitur. Nam certi qui in omnes incidant loci praescribi non possunt; in plerisque fortasse ab auctoritate iuris consultorum et contra auctoritatem dici oportebit. Attendendum est autem et in hac et in omnibus num quos locos communes praeter eos quos nos exponimus ipsa res ostendat.

Nunc iuridiciale genus et partes consideremus.
69 XXIII. Iuridicalis est in qua aequi et iniqui natura et praemi aut poenae ratio quaeritur. Huius partes sunt duae, quarum alteram absolutam, assumptivam alteram nominamus. Absoluta est quae ipsa in se, non ut negotialis implicite et abscondite, sed patentius et expeditius recti et non recti quaestionem continet.

---

<sup>a</sup> Or, to be manifest in principles of justice.

<sup>b</sup> II. 48.

68 law have now become fixed by custom ; among these are covenants, equity and decisions. A covenant is a compact which is regarded as so binding between the contracting parties that it is said to take priority in law.<sup>a</sup> Equity is what is just and fair to all. A decision is something determined previously by the opinion of some person or persons. Statute law must be learned from the statutes. Using these divisions of the law the speaker must study what seems to develop in each case either from the case itself or from a similar case or one of greater or less importance, and bring out the proper argument by a careful examination of each division of the law.

As for common topics, since, as has been said before,<sup>b</sup> there are two kinds, one of which contains an amplification of a doubtful statement, the other, of an undisputed fact, one will consider what the case offers, and what can and should be amplified by a common topic. For definite common topics cannot be prescribed to fit all cases ; it is likely that in many cases it will be necessary to speak for and against the authority of jurisconsults. Moreover, it is necessary to consider in this issue, and in all, whether the facts of the case themselves do not suggest other common topics than those which we propose.

69 Now let us consider the division of the qualitative issue which is known as equitable, and its subdivisions. XXIII. The term equitable covers cases in which there is a question of the nature of justice and of the principles of reward or punishment. There are two subdivisions, absolute and assumptive. The absolute contains in itself the question of right and wrong, not confusedly and obscurely, as in the legal, but more clearly and obviously.

CICERO

Ea est huiuscemodi: Cum Thebani Lacedaemonios bello superavissent et fere mos esset Graiis, cum inter se bellum gessissent, ut ei qui vicissent tropaeum aliquod in finibus statuerent victoriae modo in praesentiam declarandae causa, non ut in perpetuum belli memoria maneret, aëneum statuerunt tropaeum. Accusantur apud Amphictyonas id est
70 apud commune Graeciae consilium.<sup>1</sup> Intentio est: “Non oportuit.” Depulsio est: “Oportuit.” Quaestio est: Oportueritne? Ratio est: “Eam enim ex bello gloriam virtute peperimus, ut eius aeterna insignia posteris nostris relinquere vellemus.” Infirmatio est: “At tamen aeternum inimicitarum monumentum Graios de Graiis statuere non oportet.” Iudicatio est: Cum summae virtutis concelebrandae causa Graii de Graiis aeternum inimicitarum monumentum statuerunt, rectene an contra fecerint? Hanc ideo rationem subiecimus, ut hoc causae genus ipsum de quo agimus cognosceretur. Nam si eam supposuissemus qua fortasse
71 Locos autem communes et ex causa ipsa, si quid

<sup>1</sup> id . . . consilium bracketed by Schuetz, Ströbel.

It is illustrated by the following case: It was a nearly universal custom among the Greeks when they had fought with one another that the victors should set up a trophy in the country to commemorate the victory, but only for the time being, not that the record of the war might remain forever. The Thebans, having defeated the Lacedaemonians in battle, set up a trophy of bronze. They were accused before the Amphictyons, that is, before 70 the common council of Greece. The charge is: "It was not right." The reply is: "It was right." The question is: "Was it right?" The defendants' reason is: "By our valour we won such glory in war that we wished to leave a perpetual memorial of it to our descendants." The counter-argument is: "Still it is not right for Greeks to set up a permanent memorial of their quarrels with Greeks." The point for the judge's decision is: "Granted that Greeks in order to publish abroad their consummate valour have set up a permanent memorial of their quarrels with Greeks, did they do right or wrong?" We have given this as the defendant's reason in order to make clear the essential nature of this kind of case which we are discussing. For if we had given this reason, which perhaps they actually used: "You made war contrary to the dictates of justice and religion," we should be going over to relatio criminis (retort of the accusation) of which we shall speak later. It is clear that either kind of issue fits this case. Arguments for it must be drawn from the same topics as in the legal issue
71 which was discussed above.<sup>a</sup> It will be permissible and right to take many weighty common topics both from the case itself if it contains any grounds

CICERO

inerit indignationis aut conquestionis, et ex iuris utilitate et natura multos et graves sumere licebit et oportebit, si causae dignitas videbitur postulare.

XXIV. Nunc assumptivam partem iuridicialis consideremus. Assumptiva igitur tum dicitur, cum ipsum ex se factum probari non potest, aliquo autem foris adiuncto argumento defenditur. Eius partes sunt quattuor: comparatio, relatio criminis, remotio criminis, concessio.

- 72 Comparatio est cum aliquid factum quod ipsum non sit probandum ex eo cuius id causa factum est defenditur. Ea est huiusmodi: Quidam imperator, cum ab hostibus circumsederetur neque effugere ullo modo posset, depectus est cum eis ut arma et impedimenta relinqueret, milites educeret; itaque fecit; armis et impedimentis amissis praeter spem milites conservavit. Accusatur maiestatis. Incurrit huc definitio. Sed nos hunc locum de quo agimus
- 73 consideremus. Intentio est: "Non oportuit arma et impedimenta relinquere." Depulsio est: "Oportuit." Quaestio est: Oportueritne? Ratio est: "Milites enim omnes perissent." Infirmatio est aut coniecturalis: "Non perissent;" aut altera coniecturalis: "Non ideo fecisti." Ex quibus iudicatio est: Perissentne? et: Ideone fecerit? <sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Weidner, Friedrich, and Ströbel bracket Ex . . . fecerit.

---

<sup>a</sup> In Auctor ad Herenniam, I. 25 the commander is said to have been Gaius Popilius: the incident occurred in the war against the Tigurini, 107 B.C. (Livy, Epit. LXV). Orosius, V. 15, 24, says that he also gave hostages.

for the use of resentment or complaint, and from the nature and expediency of law if the importance of the case seems to require it.

XXIV. Now let us consider the assumptive branch of the equitable issue. The issue is said to be assumptive when the act taken by itself cannot be approved, but is defended by some argument from extraneous circumstances. There are four subdivisions: comparatio (comparison), relatio criminis (retort of the accusation), remotio criminis (shifting the charge), concessio (confession and avoidance).

72 Comparatio (comparison) is the case where some act which cannot be approved by itself, is defended by reference to the end for which it was done. It is of this sort: A certain commander, being surrounded by the enemy and unable to escape in any way, made an agreement with them to surrender the arms and baggage, and withdraw with his men. The agreement was carried out. He lost the arms and baggage but saved the soldiers from a hopeless situation. He is accused of lese-majesty.<sup>a</sup> Here an issue of definition confronts us, but let us examine 73 only the topic that we are discussing. The charge is: "It was not right to abandon the arms and baggage." The answer is: "It was right." The question is: "Was it right?" The reason is: "I did it because otherwise all the soldiers would have perished." The denial is either concerned with fact: "They would not have perished," or another concerned with fact: "That was not the reason why you did it," (from which the point for decision becomes, "Would they have perished?" or "Was that the reason why he did it?") or this aut haec comparativa, cuius nunc indigemus: “ At enim satius fuit amittere milites quam arma et impedimenta concedere hostibus.” Ex qua iudicatio nascitur: Cum omnes perituri milites essent, nisi ad hanc pactionem venissent, utrum satius fuerit amittere milites, an ad hanc condicionem venire?

CICERO

74 Hoc causae genus ex suis locis tractare oportebit et adhibere ceterarum quoque constitutionum rationem atque praecepta; ac maxime coniecturis faciendis infirmare illud quod cum eo quod crimini dabitur ei qui accusabuntur comparabunt. Id fiet, si aut id quod dicent defensores futurum fuisse nisi id factum esset, de quo facto iudicium est, futurum fuisse negabitur; aut si alia ratione et aliam ob causam ac dicet reus se fecisse demonstrabitur esse factum. Eius rei confirmatio et item contraria de parte infirmatio ex coniecturali constitutione sumetur. Sin autem certo nomine malefici vocabitur in iudicium, sicut in hac causa—nam maiestatis arcessitur—definitione et praeceptis definitionis uti oportebit. XXV. Atque haec quidem plerumque in hoc genere accidunt ut et coniectura et definitione utendum sit. Sin aliud quoque aliquod genus incidet, eius generis praecepta licebit huc pari ratione transferre. Nam accusatori maxime est in hoc elaborandum ut id ipsum factum propter quod sibi reus concedi putet oportere quam plurimis one involving comparison which we want for our present discussion: "But surely it was better to lose the soldiers than to surrender the arms and baggage to the enemy." From this arises the point for the judge's decision: "Granted that all the soldiers were going to perish unless they had come to this agreement, was it better to lose the soldiers or to come to these terms?"

- 74 One should treat this kind of case by topics peculiar to itself and also adapt the principles and rules which apply in the other issues. And in particular by making inferences one should attack the comparison which the accused will make with the act of which he is accused. This will be done, if it is denied that the result would have followed which the counsel for the defence say would have followed if the act now before the court for judgement had not been performed; or if it is shown to have been done in a different fashion or for a reason other than that alleged by the defendant. Arguments in support of this statement of the defence and likewise arguments used by the opponents to demolish it will be derived from the conjectural issue. Furthermore, if the defendant is brought to trial for a definite crime, as in this case—for he is accused of lese-majesty—one should employ definition and the rules for its use. XXV. And it frequently happens in this kind of case that one must use both inference and definition; and if any other issue applies it will be permissible to transfer its rules to the case in hand in a similar way. For the chief task of the prosecutor is to attack by all possible means the act because of which the defendant thinks that some concession should be made infirmet rationibus. Quod facile est, si quam plurimis constitutionibus aggredietur id improbare.

CICERO

75 Ipsa autem comparatio separata a ceteris generibus controversiarum sic ex sua vi considerabitur, si illud quod comparabitur aut non honestum aut non utile aut non necessarium fuisse aut non tantopere utile aut non tantopere honestum aut non tantopere necessarium fuisse demonstrabitur. Deinde oportet accusatorem illud quod ipse arguat ab eo quod defensor comparat separare. Id autem faciet, si demonstrabit non ita fieri solere neque oportere neque esse rationem quare hoc propter hoc fiat, ut propter salutem militum ea quae salutis causa comparata sunt hostibus tradantur. Postea comparare oportet cum beneficio maleficium et omnino id quod arguitur cum eo quod factum ab defensore laudatur aut faciendum fuisse demonstratur contendere et hoc extenuando malefici magnitudinem simul adaugere. Id fieri poterit, si demonstrabitur honestius, utilius, magis necessarium fuisse illud quod vitavit reus quam illud quod to him. This is easy if he proceeds to invalidate it by using as many issues as possible.
76 fecerit. Honesti autem et utilis et necessarii vis et natura in deliberationis praeceptis cognoscetur. Deinde oportebit ipsam illam comparativam iudicationem exponere tamquam causam deliberativam et de ea ex deliberationis praeceptis dicere. Sit enim haec iudicatio quam ante exposuimus: Cum omnes perituri milites essent, nisi ad hanc pactionem venissent, utrum satius fuerit perire milites an ad

---

• Below, §§ 157-76.

75 But comparison itself separated from the other kinds of dispute will be considered on its own merits, if the act which is compared is shown not to have been honourable or advantageous or necessary, or not advantageous or honourable or necessary to such a degree. In the second place the prosecutor should separate the crime which he charges from the act which the counsel for the defence brings in for comparison. He will accomplish this if he shows that it is not usual or right for events to move in this way and that there is no reason why this should be done for that, as for example that for the safety of the soldiers the instruments provided for their safety should be surrendered to the enemy. Then he should compare the harm with the advantage and in general contrast the crime with the act which is praised by the counsel for the defence, or is shown to have been necessary to do, and by belittling this act should magnify the enormity of the wrong. This can be done, if it is shown that the action which the defendant avoided is more honourable, more advantageous or more necessary than that which

76 he performed. But the essence and nature of honour, advantage and necessity will be investigated in connexion with the rules for deliberative speeches.<sup>a</sup> Then it will be necessary to expound this whole question of comparison as if it were a deliberative case and to discuss it in the light of the rules for deliberative speeches. Take, for instance, this problem which we stated above: "Granted that all the soldiers were going to perish unless they had come to this agreement, was it better to let the soldiers perish

CICERO

hanc pactionem venire? Hoc ex locis deliberationis, quasi aliquam in consultationem res veniat, tractari oportebit. XXVI. Defensor autem, quibus in locis ab accusatore aliae constitutiones erunt inductae, in eis ipse quoque ex isdem constitutionibus defensionem comparabit; ceteros autem omnes locos qui ad ipsam comparisonem pertinebunt ex contrario tractabit.

- 77 Loci communes autem erunt: accusatoris, in eum qui, cum de facto turpi aliquo aut inutili aut utroque fateatur, quaerat tamen aliquam defensionem, et facti inutilitatem aut turpitudinem cum indignatione proferre;<sup>1</sup> defensoris est, nullum factum inutile neque turpe neque item utile neque honestum putari oportere, nisi quo animo, quo tempore, qua de causa factum sit intellegatur; qui locus ita communis est ut bene tractatus in hac causa magno ad persuadendum momento futurus sit; et alter locus, per quem magna cum amplificatione benefici magnitudo ex utilitate aut honestate aut facti
- 78 necessitudine demonstratur; et tertius, per quem res expressa verbis ante oculos eorum qui audiunt ponitur, ut ipsi se quoque idem facturos fuisse arbitrentur, si sibi illa res atque ea faciendi causa per idem tempus accidisset.

Relatio criminis est cum reus id quod arguitur confessus, alterius se inductum peccato, iure fecisse

<sup>1</sup> et facti . . . proferre bracketed by Weidner.

or to come to this agreement?" This should be treated along the lines of a deliberative speech, just as if the matter were to come up for an inquiry about policy. XXVI. In the places where the prosecutor has brought in other forms of the issue, the counsel for the defence likewise will work up his defence on the basis of these issues; but all the other topics which pertain exclusively to comparison he will discuss so as to turn them against the prosecutor.

77 The common topics will be: of the prosecutor, to inveigh against a man who when he confesses to a deed that is base or disadvantageous or both, yet seeks some defence, and to bring out the inexpediency or the baseness of the deed with great indignation; of the counsel for the defence, that no deed should be judged inexpedient or base, or for that matter advantageous or honourable unless it is known with what intent, at what time and for what reason it was done. This topic is so general in its application that if well handled it will have great persuasive force in such a case. And a second common topic is that in which the magnitude of the service performed is demonstrated and enlarged upon by reference to the advantage or honour or necessity
78 of the deed; and a third, in which by a vivid verbal picture the event is brought before the eyes of the audience, so that they will think that they too would have done the same if they had been confronted with the same situation and the same cause for action at the same time.

A retort of the charge occurs when the defendant admits the act of which he is accused but shows that he was justified in doing it because he was influenced demonstrat. Ea est huiusmodi: Horatius occisis tribus Curiatiis et duobus amissis fratribus domum se victor recepit. Is animadvertit sororem suam de fratrum morte non laborantem, sponsi autem nomen appellantem identidem Curiatii cum gemitu et lamentatione. Indigne passus virginem occidit.

CICERO

79 Accusatur. Intentio est: "Iniuria sororem occidisti." Depulsio est: "Iure occidi." Quaestio est: Iurene occiderit? Ratio est: "Illa enim hostium mortem lugebat, fratrum neglegebat; me et populum Romanum vicisse moleste ferebat." Infirmatio est: "Tamen a fratre indamnatam necari non oportuit." Ex quo iudicatio fit: Cum Horatia fratrum mortem neglegeret, hostium lugeret, fratris et populi Romani victoria non gauderet, oportueritne eam a fratre indamnatam necari?

XXVII. Hoc in genere causae primum, si quid ex ceteris dabitur constitutionibus, sumi oportebit, sicuti in comparatione praeceptum est; postea, si qua facultas erit, per aliquam constitutionem illum in

80 quem crimen transferetur defendere; deinde, levius esse illud quod in alterum peccatum reus transferat quam quod ipse susceperit; postea translationis partibus uti et ostendere a quo et per quos et quo modo et quo tempore aut agi aut iudicari aut statui

---

<sup>a</sup> Above, § 74.

by an offence committed by the other party. The following is an example: Horatius after killing the Curiatii and losing his two brothers returned home in triumph. He noticed his sister not distressed by the death of her brothers, but repeatedly calling on the name of Curiatius, her betrothed, with groans and tears. Filled with rage he killed the girl. He is brought to trial. The charge is: "You killed your sister without warrant." The answer is: "I was justified in killing her." The question is: "Was he justified in killing her?" The defendant's reason is: "For she was distressed at the death of our enemies; she was unmoved by the fall of her brothers; she was grieved that I and the Roman people were victorious." The prosecutor's answer is: "Nevertheless she ought not to have been killed by her brother uncondemned." From this the point for decision arises: "Granted that Horatia was unmoved by the death of her brothers, and was distressed at the death of our enemies and did not rejoice over the victory of her brother and the Roman people, ought she to have been killed by her brother without condemnation?"

XXVII. In this kind of case it will be proper first to take from the other issues what assistance they may offer, as was directed in connexion with "comparison,"<sup>a</sup> then, if there shall be opportunity, one may use some issue to defend the person to whom the guilt is transferred; then one may show that the offence which the defendant imputes to the other party is less serious than that with which he himself is charged. Next one may use the forms of translatio (transfer) and show by whom and through whom and how and at what time it was proper that action

CICERO

de ea re convenerit; ac simul ostendere non oportuisse ante supplicium quam iudicium interponere. Tum leges quoque et iudicia demonstranda sunt, per quae potuerit id peccatum quod sponte sua reus poenitus sit moribus et iudicio vindicari. Deinde negare audire oportere id quod in eum criminis conferatur, de quo is ipse qui conferat iudicium fieri noluerit, et id quod iudicatum non sit pro infecto
81 habere oportere; postea impudentiam demonstrare eorum qui eum nunc apud iudices accusent quem sine iudicibus ipsi condemnarint, et de eo iudicium faciant de quo iam ipsi supplicium sumpserint; postea perturbationem iudici futuram dicemus et iudices longius quam potestatem habeant progressuros, si simul et de reo et de eo quem reus arguat iudicarint; deinde, si hoc constitutum sit, ut peccata homines peccatis et iniurias iniuriis ulciscantur, quantum incommodorum consequatur; ac si idem facere ipse qui nunc accusat voluisset, ne hoc quidem ipso quicquam opus fuisse iudicio; si vero ceteri quoque idem faciant, omnino iudicium
82 nullum futurum. Postea demonstrabitur, ne si iudicio quidem illa damnata esset in quam id crimen ab reo conferatur, potuisse hunc ipsum de illa supplicium sumere; quare esse indignum eum qui ne

---

* I.e. a court has never decided that Horatia mourned for Curiatius, therefore her mourning is not admissible as evidence.

should be brought and the case adjudged and decided; and at the same time one may point out that punishment should not be inflicted before judgement is given. Then one should also point to the laws and courts of justice by which the crime which the defendant avenged on his own authority, could have been punished in accordance with custom and judicial process. Then the prosecutor should deny that it is right to listen to the charge which the defendant brings against the other party, which he himself, the very man who brings it, was unwilling to submit to a court of law, and then claim that an act which has not been passed upon by a court should be 81 regarded as not done.<sup>a</sup> After that he should call attention to the shamelessness of those who now accuse before a jury one whom they themselves have condemned without a jury, and are now trying an offence which they have already punished with their own hands. After that he should argue that the judicial process will be disturbed, and that the judges will go beyond their authority if they pass judgement at the same time on the defendant and the person whom the defendant accuses; then he should point out what disastrous results will follow if it is established that men may avenge crimes with crimes and injuries with injuries; and if the prosecutor had been willing to do the same there would have been no need of this trial either; and if every-
82 one should act in the same way there would be no trials at all. After that it will be pointed out that even if she had been condemned whom the defendant blames for his offence, he himself could not have inflicted the punishment on her; therefore it is intolerable that he who could not with his own

CICERO

de damnata quidem poenas sumere ipse potuisset de ea supplicium sumpsisse quae ne adducta quidem sit in iudicium. Deinde postulabit, ut legem, qua lege fecerit, proferat. Deinde quemadmodum in comparatione praecipiebamus, ut illud quod compararetur extenuaretur ab accusatore quam maxime, sic in hoc genere oportebit illius culpam in quem crimen transferatur cum huius maleficio qui se iure fecisse dicat comparare. Postea demonstrandum est non esse illud eiusmodi ut ob id hoc fieri convenerit. Extrema est, ut in comparatione, assumptio iudicationis et de ea per amplificationem ex deliberationis praeceptis dictio.

- 83 XXVIII. Defensor autem, quae per alias constitutiones inducentur, ex eis locis qui traditi sunt infirmabit; ipsam autem relationem comprobabit, primum augendo eius in quem referet crimen culpam et audaciam, et quam maxime per indignationem, si res feret, iuncta conquestione ante oculos ponendo; postea levius demonstrando se poenitum quam sit illius promeritum, et suum supplicium cum illius iniuria conferendo. Deinde oportebit eos locos qui ita erunt ab accusatore tractati ut refelli et contrariam in partem converti

---

<sup>a</sup> Above, § 76.

<sup>b</sup> The construction of the sentence is changed as if "defendant" had been the subject, rather than "counsel for the defence."

hand have exacted the penalty from her even if she had been condemned, should have inflicted punishment on one who has not even been brought to trial. Then he will demand that the defendant produce the law under which he acted. Then, just as we suggested in the case of comparison that the prosecutor should disparage as much as possible the deed which is cited by way of comparison, so in this case he should compare the fault of the person to whom the blame is transferred with the crime of him who says that he was justified in committing it; afterward it should be pointed out that the one act is not of such a nature that because of it the other should have been done. Finally, as in case of comparison, the point for decision is taken up and dilated upon in accordance with the rules for a deliberative speech.<sup>a</sup>

83 XXVIII. The counsel for the defence will answer the arguments which will be brought in from other issues by using the topics which have already been set forth; he will support his attempt to lay the blame on some one else, first, by magnifying the culpability and audacity of the person on whom he lays the blame, and by placing the scene vividly before the eyes of the jury with an intense display of indignation, if opportunity presents, coupled with vehement complaint; secondly, by proving that he punished the offence more lightly than the offender deserved, and by comparing the punishment which he inflicted with the crime that she had committed.<sup>b</sup> In the next place he should attack by contrary reasoning the arguments which have been presented by the prosecutor in such a way that they can be refuted and turned to the advantage

CICERO

possint, quo in genere sunt tres extremi, contrariis 84 rationibus infirmare. Illa autem acerrima accusa-torum criminatio, per quam perturbationem fore omnium iudiciorum demonstrant, si de indamnato supplici sumendi potestas data sit, levabitur, primum si eiusmodi demonstrabitur iniuria, ut non modo viro bono, verum omnino homini libero videatur non fuisse toleranda; deinde ita perspicua, ut ne ab ipso quidem, qui fecisset, in dubium vocaretur; deinde eiusmodi, ut in eam is maxime debuerit animadvertere qui animadverterit;<sup>1</sup> ut non tam rectum, non tam fuerit honestum in iudicium illam rem pervenire quam eo modo atque ab eo vindicari quo modo et ab quo sit vindicata; postea sic rem fuisse apertam ut iudicium de ea re fieri nihil atti-85 nuerit. Atque hic demonstrandum est rationibus et similibus rebus permultas ita atroces et perspicuas res esse ut de his non modo non necesse sit, sed ne utile quidem, quam mox iudicium fiat expectare.

Locus communis accusatoris in eum qui, cum id quod arguitur negare non possit tamen aliquid sibi spei comparet ex iudiciorum perturbatione.
Atque hic utilitatis iudiciorum demonstratio et de eo conquestio qui supplicium dederit indamnatus; in eius autem qui sumpserit audaciam et crudelitatem 86 indignatio. Ab defensore, in eius, quem ultus sit audaciam <cum> sui conquestione; rem non ex

<sup>1</sup> animadvertit Ströbel.

---

<sup>a</sup> In the Latin, "counsel for the defence." Cf. the confusion in § 83.

of the opposing side; the last three are of this kind.
 84 But the force of the severest attack of the prosecutors, by which they point out that the whole judicial process will be thrown into confusion if privilege is given of punishing offences without convicting the criminal, will be lessened, in the first place if it is demonstrated that the offence was of such a nature that it would seem intolerable not only to a good man, but to any sort of free man at all; in the second place that it was so manifest that it could not be questioned even by the offender; then that it was of such a nature that he who punished it was in duty bound to punish it; that it was not so right or so honourable for the offence to be brought before a court as to have it avenged in the manner in which it was and by the person by whom it was; then that the case was so clear that there was no
 85 point in having a court pass upon it. And here it must be made plain by arguments and similar means that there are many offences so foul and undisputed that it is not only unnecessary but even inexpedient to wait for the trial to take place.

The prosecutor will use the common topic against the man who when he cannot deny the crime with which he is charged, nevertheless raises some hope for himself by disturbing the due course of the law. This is the place for showing the advantages of orderly trials and for complaining about the fate of one who was punished without being convicted, and for denouncing the audacity and cruelty of him
 86 who inflicted the punishment. The defendant<sup>a</sup> will speak against the audacity of the criminal on whom he took revenge, and lament his own lot, saying that a deed should be judged not by the name

CICERO

nomine ipsius negoti, sed ex consilio eius qui fecerit et causa et tempore considerari oportere; quid mali futurum sit aut ex iniuria aut scelere alicuius, nisi tanta et tam perspicua audacia ab eo ad cuius famam aut ad parentes aut ad liberos pertineret aut ad aliquam rem quam caram esse omnibus aut necesse est aut oportet esse, vindicata.

XXIX. Remotio criminis est cum eius intentio facti quod ab adversario infertur in alium aut in aliud demovetur. Id fit bipertito: nam tum 87 causa, tum res ipsa removetur. Causae remotionis hoc nobis exemplo sit: Rhodii quosdam legarunt Athenas. Legatis quaestores sumptum, quem oportebat dari, non dederunt. Legati profecti non sunt. Accusantur. Intentio est: "Proficisci oportuit." Depulsio est: "Non oportuit." Quaestio est: Oportueritne? Ratio est: "Sumptus enim, qui de publico daro solet, is ab quaestore non est datus." Infirmatio est: "Vos tamen id, quod publice vobis erat negoti datum, conficere oportebat." Iudicatio est: Cum eis qui legati erant sumptus qui debebatur de publico non daretur, oportueritne eos conficere nihilo minus legationem?

Hoc in genere primum, sicut in ceteris, si quid aut ex coniecturali aut ex alia constitutione sumi possit, videri oportebit. Deinde pleraque et ex comparaattached to it, but in the light of the intent of the person who performed it, and of the cause and of the time; showing what ill results will follow from someone's wrongdoing or crime unless such wanton and manifest audacity were avenged by him whose reputation, parents, children or something which must and ought to be dear to all men, is affected by such conduct.

87 XXIX. Remotio criminis (shifting of the charge) occurs when the accusation for the offence which is alleged by the prosecutor is shifted to another person or thing. It is done in two ways: sometimes the responsibility is shifted and sometimes the act itself. Let us take the following as an example of the shifting of the responsibility: The Rhodians appointed certain men as ambassadors to Athens. The treasury board did not give them the money for travelling expenses which should have been given. The ambassadors did not set out. They are accused. The charge is: "They should have set out." The answer is: "They should not." The question is: "Should they?" The defendant's reason is: "The money for expenses which is regularly paid from the public funds, was not paid by the treasurer." The refutation is: "Nevertheless you should have performed the task assigned to you by the state." The point for the judge's decision is: "Granted that the money which was due the ambassadors from the public funds was not paid to them, should they nonetheless have discharged their duties?"

In this kind of case, as in the other, the first requisite is to see if any help can be got from the issue of fact or from any other issue. In the second place many arguments used in comparison tione et ex relatione criminis in hanc quoque causam convenire poterunt.

CICERO

88 Accusator autem illum cuius culpa id factum reus dicet primum defendet, si poterit; sin minus poterit, negabit ad hoc iudicium illius, sed huius quem ipse accuset culpam pertinere. Postea dicet suo quemque officio consulere oportere; nec, si ille peccasset, hunc oportuisse peccare; deinde, si ille deliquerit, separatim illum sicut hunc accusari oportere et non cum huius defensione coniungi illius accusationem.

Defensor autem cum cetera, si qua ex aliis incident constitutionibus, pertractarit, de ipsa remotione sic
89 argumentabitur: Primum, cuius acciderit culpa, demonstrabit; deinde, cum id aliena culpa accidisset, ostendet se aut non potuisse aut non debuisse id facere quod accusator dicat oportuisse; quid potuerit, ex utilitatis partibus, in quibus est necessitudinis vis implicata, demonstrabit; quid debuerit, ex honestate considerabitur. De utroque distinctius in deliberativo genere dicetur. Deinde omnia facta esse ab reo quae in ipsius fuerint potestate; quod minus quam convenerit factum sit, culpa id alterius 90 accidisse. Deinde alterius culpa exponenda demonstrandum est, quantum voluntatis et studi fuerit in ipso; et id signis confirmandum huiusmodi: ex cetera diligentia, ex ante factis aut dictis; atque and in retort of the charge can be adapted to this case also.

---

<sup>a</sup> In the Latin, "counsel for defence." Cf. §§ 83, 85.

<sup>b</sup> Below, §§ 157-76.

88 The prosecutor will first defend, if he can, the person who the defendant says was responsible for the act. If he cannot do this, he will say that this court is not concerned with the fault of that other person, but only with the fault of the man whom he is accusing. Then he will say that each man should think of his own duty; that if one official has done wrong, that is no reason why the other should; finally, if the treasurer has been delinquent he ought to be accused separately, as the ambassador is, and that the accusation of the treasurer should not be joined with the defence of the ambassador.

The defendant,<sup>a</sup> after treating the other points which arise from other issues, will argue as follows 89 about the actual shifting of the charge: first, he will show by whose fault the event happened; then since it happened through another's fault, he will show that it was not possible or obligatory for him to do what the prosecutor says he should have done. What was possible will be examined with reference to the principles of advantage, in which an element of necessity is involved; what was obligatory, with reference to honour. Both these topics will be treated more precisely under deliberative oratory.<sup>b</sup> In the next place counsel will assert that the defendant did everything in his power; it was due to another's fault that less was 90 done than was proper. Then, in pointing out the other's fault, it will be necessary to show what good will and devotion the defendant exhibited, and to support this statement by evidence like the following: his diligence in other offices, his previous acts hoc ipsi utile fuisse facere, inutile autem non facere, et cum cetera vita fuisse hoc magis consentaneum quam quod propter alterius culpam non fecerit. XXX. Si autem non in hominem certum, sed in rem aliquam causa demovebitur, ut in hac eadem re, si quaestor mortuus esset et idcirco legatis pecunia data non esset, accusatione alterius et culpa depulsione dempta ceteris similiter uti locis oportebit et ex concessionis partibus, quae convenient assumere; de quibus nobis dicendum erit.

91 Loci autem communes idem utrisque fere qui in superioribus assumptivis, incident; hi tamen certissime: accusatoris, facti indignatio; defensoris, cum in alio culpa sit, in ipso non sit, supplicio se affici non oportere.

Ipsius autem rei fit remotio, cum id quod datur crimini negat neque ad se neque ad officium suum reus pertinuisse; nec, si quid in eo sit delictum, sibi attribui oportere. Id causae genus est huiusmodi: In eo foedere quod factum est quondam cum Samnitibus quidam adolescens nobilis porcum sustinuit iussu imperatoris. Foedere autem ab senatu improbato et imperatore Samnitibus dedito, quidam in senatu eum quoque dicit qui porcum tenuerit, dedi

---

<sup>a</sup> Below, §§ 94–109.

<sup>b</sup> Above, § 71 ff.

<sup>c</sup> The reference is to the treaty concluded with Samnites by the consuls, Postumius and Veturius, after the disastrous defeat of the Romans at the Caudine Forks, 321 B.C. The incident given here is not recorded elsewhere and is undoubtedly a fiction of the rhetorical schools. In fact the whole story of the rejection of the treaty by the Senate is probably an invention of Roman historians. For the and words; and that it was advantageous to him to do it, and disadvantageous not to, and that doing it was more consistent with his past life than to fail to do it through the fault of another. XXX. But if the blame is shifted not to a definite person but to some circumstance, as, for instance, in this same case, if the treasurer had died, and for that reason the ambassadors did not receive the money, then as there is no opportunity to accuse another or to avoid responsibility, it will be proper to use all the other arguments without change, and to take such arguments as may fit from the topics of concessio (confession and avoidance) which we must discuss presently.<sup>a</sup>

91 Both sides will have available about the same common topics as in the divisions of "assumptive" issue already discussed.<sup>b</sup> But the following will most assuredly be used: the prosecutor will arouse indignation at the deed; the defendant will claim that he ought not to be punished since the fault is in another and not in himself.

The act itself is shifted when the defendant denies that the act imputed to him concerned him or his duty, and says that if there was any criminality in the act, it should not be attributed to him. This kind of case is illustrated as follows: In ratifying the treaty which was made once upon a time with Samnites, a youth of noble birth held the sacrificial pig as ordered by his general.<sup>c</sup> The treaty, however, was disavowed by the Senate and the commander was surrendered to the Samnites, whereupon some one in the Senate said that the youth also, who held sacrifice of a pig in concluding a treaty, see the full description in Livy I. 24.

92 oportere. Intentio est: "Dedi oportet." Depulsio est: "Non oportet." Quaestio est: Oporteatne? Ratio est: "Non enim meum fuit officium nec mea potestas, cum et id aetatis<sup>1</sup> et privatus essem et esset summa cum auctoritate et potestate imperator, qui videret ut satis honestum foedus feriretur." Infirmatio est: "At enim quoniam particeps tu factus es in turpissimo foedere summae religionis, dedi te convenit." Iudicatio est: Cum is qui potestatis nihil habuerit iussu imperatoris in foedere et in tanta religione interfuerit, dedendusne sit hostibus necne? Hoc genus causae cum superiore hoc differt, quod in illo concedit se reus oportuisse facere id quod fieri dicat accusator oportuisse, sed alicui rei aut homini causam attribuit quae voluntati suae fuerit impedimento sine concessionis partibus; nam earum maior quaedam vis est, quod

93 paulo post intellegetur. In hoc autem non accusare alterum nec culpam in alium transferre debet, sed demonstrare eam rem nihil ad se nec ad potestatem neque ad officium suum pertinuisse aut pertinere. Atque in hoc genere hoc accidit novi, quod accusator quoque saepe ex remotione criminationem conficit, ut, si quis eum accuset qui, cum praetor esset, in expeditionem ad arma populum vocarit, cum consules essent.<sup>2</sup> Nam ut in superiore exemplo reus ab suo

<sup>1</sup> After id aetatis HS and Alcuin add non habui.

<sup>2</sup> essent M: adessent J: ibi essent P<sup>3</sup>.

---

<sup>a</sup> This case is stated as it would be in a deliberative speech. Before a court it would run: Charge: "You were guilty of lese-majesty." Answer: "I was not." Question: "Was he guilty of lese-majesty?" etc.

<sup>b</sup> In view of the last sentence in § 90, it may be that we should read with Weidner, non sine, not without pleas etc.

92 the pig, ought to be surrendered. The charge is: "He ought to be surrendered." The answer is: "He ought not." The question is: "Ought he to be surrendered?"<sup>a</sup> The defendant's reason is: "It was not my duty nor was it in my power, since I was so young and a private soldier, and there was a commander with supreme power and authority to see that an honourable treaty was made." The prosecutor's reply is: "But since you had a part in a most infamous treaty sanctioned by solemn religious rites, you ought to be surrendered." The point for decision is: "Granted that he who had no authority took part in making the treaty and in performing the holy rites, should he be surrendered to the enemy or not?" This kind of case differs from the former in that in the former the defendant grants that he ought to have done what the prosecutor says ought to have been done, but attributes to some thing or person the cause which interfered with his desires, without pleas of confession and avoidance.<sup>b</sup>

93 as will be recognized presently. But in this case he must not accuse the other party nor transfer the blame to another but prove that this act did not and does not bear any relation to himself, his powers or his duty. And in this case there is this new point, that even the prosecutor often makes his accusation by shifting the responsibility as in the case of one who accuses a man who while praetor called the people to arms for a campaign, when there were consuls in office.<sup>c</sup> For just as in <sup>a</sup> Both praetors and consuls had the imperium, i.e. the right among other things to call out the troops, but the consul held higher rank than the praetor.

CICERO

officio et a potestate factum demovebat, sic in hoc ab eius officio ac potestate qui accusatur ipse accusator factum removendo hac ipsa ratione confirmat accusationem. In hac ab utroque ex omnibus partibus honestatis et ex omnibus utilitatis partibus, exemplis, signis, ratiocinando, quid cuiusque officii, iuris, potestatis sit, quaeri oportebit et fueritne ei quo de agetur id iuris, officii, potestatis attributum necne.

Locos autem communes ex ipsa re, si quid indignationis aut conquestionis habebit, sumi oportebit.

XXXI. Concessio est per quam non factum ipsum probatur ab reo, sed ut ignoscatur, id petitur. Cuius partes sunt duae: purgatio et deprecatio. Purgatio est per quam eius qui accusatur non factum ipsum, sed voluntas defenditur. Ea habet partes tres: imprudentiam, casum, necessitudinem.

95 Imprudentia est, cum scisse aliquid is qui arguitur negatur; ut apud quosdam lex erat: Ne quis Dianae vitulum immolaret. Nautae quidam cum adversa tempestate in alto iactarentur, voverunt si eo portu quem conspiciebant potiti essent, ei deo qui ibi esset se vitulum immolatuos. Casu erat in eo portu fanum Dianae eius, cui vitulum immolare non licebat. Imprudentes legis, cum exissent, vitulum immolaverunt. Accusantur. Intentio est: " Vitulum immolastis ei deo cui non

---

<sup>a</sup> For the meaning of these terms v. note on I. 15.

the former instance the defendant denied any connexion between the act and his duty or powers, so in this case the prosecutor by denying that the act is connected with the duty or power of the accused man, supports his accusation by this very 94 line of reasoning. In this case both sides ought to use all the principles of honour and advantage, historical parallels, evidence and reasoning from analogy to inquire what is each one's duty, right and power, and whether such right, duty or power has, or has not been given to the man on trial.

Common topics ought to be suggested by the circumstances of the case, if it affords grounds for denunciation or complaint.

XXXI. Concessio (confession and avoidance) is the plea in which the defendant does not as a matter of fact approve of the deed itself, but asks that it be pardoned. It has two forms, purgatio and deprecatio.<sup>a</sup> Purgatio is the plea by which the intent of the accused is defended but not his act. It has three forms, ignorance, accident, necessity.

95 It is a plea of ignorance when the accused claims that he was not aware of something. For instance, a certain people had a law that prohibited the sacrifice of a bull-calf to Diana. Some sailors tossed on the deep by a terrible storm vowed that if they could gain the harbour which was in sight, they would sacrifice a bull-calf to the divinity whose temple stood there. It so happened that in that port there was a shrine of that Diana to whom it was unlawful to sacrifice a bull-calf. Ignorant of the law they landed and sacrificed a bull-calf. They are brought to trial. The charge is: "You sacrificed a bull-calf to the divinity to whom it was licebat.” Depulsio est in concessione posita. Ratio est: “Nescivi non licere.” Infirmatio est: “Tamen, quoniam fecisti quod non licebat ex lege, supplicio dignus es.” Iudicatio est: Cum id fecerit quod non oportuerit, et id non oportere nescierit, sitne supplicio dignus?

CICERO

96 Casus autem inferetur in concessionem, cum demonstratur aliqua fortunae vis voluntati obstitisse, ut in hac: Cum Lacedaemoniis lex esset ut, hostias nisi ad sacrificium quoddam redemptor praebuisset, capital esset, hostias is qui redemerat cum sacrifici dies instaret, in urbem ex agro coepit agere. Tum subito magnis commotis tempestatibus fluvius Eurotas, is qui praeter Lacedaemonem fluit, ita magnus et vehemens factus est ut ea traduci victimae
97 nullo modo possent. Redemptor suae voluntatis ostendendae causa hostias constituit omnes in litore, ut qui trans flumen essent videre possent. Cum omnes studio eius subitam fluminis magnitudinem scirent fuisse impedimento, tamen quidam capitis arcesserunt. Intentio est: “Hostiae quas debuisti ad sacrificium praesto non fuerunt.” Depulsio est <sup>1</sup> concessio. Ratio: “Flumen enim subito accrevit et ea re traduci non potuerunt.” Infirmatio: “Tamen, quoniam quod lex iubet factum non est, supplicio dignus es.” Iudicatio est: Cum in ea re contra unlawful." The answer consists in confession and avoidance. The reason is: "I did not know that it was unlawful." The prosecutor's reply is: "Nevertheless, since you have done what was unlawful, you deserve punishment." The point for the judge's decision is: "Granted that he did what he ought not, and did not know that he ought not, does he deserve punishment?"

<sup>1</sup> est LRJ : omitted by Ströbel.

- 96 Chance will be brought into the plea of avoidance when it is shown that the defendant's intention was thwarted by some act of Fortune, as in the following case: The Lacedaemonians had a law that visited capital punishment on a contractor who did not furnish the animals for a certain sacrifice. When the day for the sacrifice was at hand, the man who had taken the contract began to drive the animals from the country to the city. Then suddenly a great storm came up, and the river Eurotas which flows by Lacedaemon became so high and rapid that the victims could not by any possibility be driven across at that point.
- 97 The contractor to show his intent placed all the animals on the bank so as to be seen by those across the river. Although every one knew that his efforts had been thwarted by the sudden rise of the river, nevertheless some citizens put him on trial for his life. The charge is: "The animals which you were bound to furnish for the sacrifice were not at hand." The answer is confession and avoidance. The reason is: "The river rose suddenly and for that reason they could not be driven across." The prosecutor's reply is: "Nevertheless since the provisions of the law were not carried out, you deserve punishment." The point for the judge's decision is: "Granted that the contractor acted legem redemptor aliquid fecerit, qua in re studio eius subita fluminis obstiterit magnitudo, supplicio dignusne sit?

CICERO

98 XXXII. Necessitudo autem infertur, cum vi quadam reus id quod fecerit fecisse defenditur, hoc modo: Lex est apud Rhodios ut si qua rostrata in portu navis deprehensa sit, publicetur. Cum magna in alto tempestas esset, vis ventorum invitis nautis in Rhodiorum portum navem coëgit. Quaestor navem populi vocat, navis dominus negat oportere publicari. Intentio est: "Rostrata navis in portu deprehensa est." Depulsio est<sup>1</sup> concessio. Ratio: "Vi et necessario sumus in portum coacti." Infirmatio est: "Navem ex lege tamen populi esse oportet." Iudicatio est: Cum rostratam navem in portu deprehensam lex publicarit cumque haec navis invitis nautis vi tempestatis in portum coniecta sit, oporteatne eam publicari?

99 Horum trium generum idcirco in unum locum contulimus exempla, quod similis in ea praeceptio argumentorum traditur. Nam in his omnibus, primum si quid res ipsa dabit facultatis, coniecturam induci ab accusatore oportebit, ut id quod voluntate factum negabitur consulto factum suspicione aliqua demonstretur; deinde inducere definitionem necessitudinis aut casus aut imprudentiae et exempla ad eam definitionem adiungere in quibus imprudentia contrary to law in this case in which his efforts were thwarted by the sudden rise of the river, does he deserve punishment? ”

<sup>1</sup> est SRi: omitted by Ströbel.

---

<sup>a</sup> Quaestor is probably a translation of the Greek ταμίης, a financial officer with rather broad powers in most Greek states.

98 XXXII. Necessity is brought in when the accused is defended as having done what he did because of some force beyond his control, as follows: There is a law at Rhodes that if any ship with a ram is caught in the harbour it is confiscated. There was a violent storm at sea, and the force of the wind compelled the sailors against their will to put into the harbour of Rhodes. The treasurer<sup>a</sup> claims the ship as public property, the master of the vessel denies that it ought to be confiscated. The charge is: “A ship with a ram has been caught in the harbour.” The answer is confession and avoidance. The reason is: “We were driven into the harbour by force and necessity.” The prosecutor’s reply is: “Nevertheless the ship ought to be confiscated according to law.” The point for the judge’s decision is: “Granted that the law confiscates a ship with a ram caught in the harbour, and that this ship was driven into port by the force of the storm against the desire of the crew, should it be confiscated? ”

99 We have placed the examples of these three varieties together because similar rules for argument are given for them. For in all of these, first the prosecutor should, if the facts of the case provide any opportunity, introduce the argument from conjecture, so as to prove by some inference that the act which, it will be asserted, was performed involuntarily, was really done intentionally. Then he should introduce a definition of necessity or chance or ignorance and accompany the definition by examples in which ignorance or accident or fuisse videatur aut casus aut necessitudo et ab his id quod reus inferat separare, id est ostendere dissimile, quod <sup>1</sup> non ignorabile, non fortuitum, non necessarium fuerit; postea demonstrare potuisse vitari: aut ratione <sup>2</sup> provideri potuisse, si hoc aut illud fecisset, aut, nisi <sup>3</sup> fecisset, praecaveri; et definitionibus ostendere non hanc imprudentiam aut casum aut necessitudinem, sed inertiam, negligentiam, fatuitatem nominari oportere. Ac si qua necessitudo turpitudinem videbitur habere, oportebit per locorum communium implicationem redarguentem demonstrare quidvis perpeti, mori denique satius fuisse quam eiusmodi necessitudini obtemperare. Atque tum ex eis locis de quibus in negotiali parte dictum est iuris et aequitatis naturam oportebit quaerere et quasi in absoluta iuridicali per se hoc ipsum ab rebus omnibus separatim considerare. Atque hoc in loco, si facultas erit, exemplis uti oportebit, quibus in simili excusatione non sit ignotum, et contentione, magis illis ignoscendum fuisse, et deliberationis partibus, turpe aut inutile esse concedi eam rem, quae ab adversario commissa sit; permagnum esse et magno futurum detrimento, si ea res ab eis qui potestatem habent vindicandi neglecta sit.

101 XXXIII. Defensor autem conversis omnibus his partibus poterit uti; maxime autem in voluntate

<sup>1</sup> After quod J has levius facilius, M, lenius facilius: bracketed by Kayser.

<sup>2</sup> et hac ratione J: hac ratione M, Ströbel: aut ratione Weidner.

<sup>3</sup> nisi Mi: ne sic P: ni sic or nisi sic i.

---

<sup>a</sup> Above, §§ 65–8.

<sup>b</sup> Above, §§ 69–71.

necessity seem to have played a part, and separate the defendant's story from these, that is to show the dissimilarity between the cases, because the matter was such that it could not be unknown, fortuitous or necessary. After that he should show that it could have been avoided, or by the use of reason could have been foreseen if he had done thus and so, or could have been guarded against if he had not done thus and so. Furthermore he may show by definitions that this should not be called ignorance or chance or necessity, but laziness, care-100 lessness or folly. And if in any case yielding to necessity seems to involve an act of baseness he should weave in common topics and prove in rebuttal that it was better to endure any fate, even death, rather than yield to such a necessity. And then by use of the topics described under legal issue<sup>a</sup> he should inquire into the nature of law and equity and as if it were a case under the "absolute" section of the issue of equity<sup>b</sup> consider this point by itself without reference to other things. At this point, if opportunity offers, he should cite examples of those who have not been pardoned though offering a similar excuse, and argue that they were by comparison more worthy of pardon, and adopt the arguments of a deliberative speech, that it is base and inexpedient to condone the act which has been committed by the opponent; saying that this is a serious case and that great harm will ensue if this act is overlooked by those who have the power to punish it.

101 XXXIII. The defendant, on the other hand, will be able to turn all these arguments about and use them for a different conclusion; in particular, defendenda commorabitur et in ea re adaugenda, quae voluntati fuerit impedimento; et se plus, quam fecerit, facere non potuisse; et in omnibus rebus voluntatem spectari oportere; et se convinci non posse, quod absit a culpa; suo nomine communem hominum infirmitatem posse damnari. Deinde nihil esse indignius quam eum qui culpa careat supplicio non carere.

CICERO

102 Loci autem sunt communes: accusatoris in confessionem, et quanta potestas peccandi relinquatur, si semel institutum sit ut non de facto, sed de facti causa quaeratur; defensoris conquestio est calamitatis eius, quae non culpa, sed vi maiore quadam acciderit, et de fortunae potestate et hominum infirmitate et uti suum animum, non eventum considerent. In quibus omnibus conquestionem suarum aerumnarum et crudelitatis adversariorum indignationem inesse oportebit.

103 Ac neminem mirari conveniet, si aut in his aut in aliis exemplis scripti quoque controversiam adiunctam videbit. Quo de genere post erit nobis separatim dicendum, propterea quod quaedam genera causarum simpliciter ex sua vi considerantur, quaedam autem sibi aliud quoque aliquod controversiae genus assumunt. Quare omnibus cognitis, non erit difficile in unam quamque causam transferre quod ex eo quoque genere conveniet; ut in his exemplis concessionis inest omnibus scripti contro-

---

* I.e. the dispute over the letter of the law.

however, he will spend some time in defending his good intentions and in magnifying the circumstances which thwarted his purpose; saying that it was impossible to do more than he did, that in all things one should regard the intent and that he cannot be convicted because he is free of guilt, and that under his name the weakness common to all men may be condemned; finally, that nothing is more shocking than that he who is free of guilt should not be free of punishment.

102 Now for the common topics: the prosecutor will attack the plea of confession and avoidance and point out what a chance is offered for transgression if it is once established that the thing to be inquired into is not the act but the excuse for the act. The defendant may lament the misfortune which has befallen one not because of his fault but from force majeure, enlarge on the power of fortune and the infirmity of mankind, and beg the jury to consider his intent and not the result. With all of which there should be combined a lament over his own tribulations and a denunciation of the cruelty of his opponents.

103 No one should be surprised if he sees in these or in other examples a dispute over the letter of the law also. We shall have to speak separately about this question because certain kinds of cases are considered straightforwardly on their own merits, while others involve some other form of dispute. Therefore when all forms have been studied, it will not be hard to transfer to each case anything in this form,<sup>a</sup> too, which shall be appropriate; as in all these examples of confession and avoidance there is involved a dispute about the letter of the versia, ea quae ex scripto et sententia nominatur; sed, quia de concessione loquebamur, in eam praecepta dedimus, alio autem loco de scripto et de sententia dicemus.

CICERO

104 Nunc ut <sup>1</sup> alteram concessionis partem consideraremus <sup>2</sup> iam contendemus.<sup>3</sup> XXXIV. Deprecatio est in qua non defensio facti, sed ignoscendi postulatio continetur. Hoc genus vix in iudicio probari potest, ideo quod concesso peccato difficile est ab eo, qui peccatorum vindex esse debet, ut ignoscat, impetrare.
Quare parte eius generis, cum causam non in eo constitueris, uti licebit; ut si <sup>4</sup> pro aliquo claro aut forti viro, cuius in rem publicam multa sunt beneficia, dicens <sup>5</sup> possis, cum videaris non uti deprecatione, uti tamen, ad hunc modum: "Quodsi, iudices, hic pro suis beneficiis, pro suo studio, quod in vos semper habuit, tali suo tempore multorum suorum recte factorum causa uni delicto ut ignosceretis postularet, tamen dignum vestra mansuetudine, dignum virtute huius esset, iudices, a vobis hanc rem hoc postulante impetrari." Deinde augere beneficia licebit et iudices per locum communem ad ignoscendi 105 voluntatem ducere. Quare hoc genus, quamquam in iudiciis non versatur nisi quadam ex parte, tamen, quia et pars haec ipsa inducenda nonnunquam est et in senatu aut in consilio saepe omni in genere tractanda, in id quoque praecepta ponemus. Nam

<sup>1</sup> ut Weidner: in MP: erased by P<sup>2</sup>: omitted by R.

<sup>2</sup> consideremus M, Weidner: considerationem J.

<sup>3</sup> iam contendemus Friedrich: iam intendemus Ströbel:
intendemus Jω: la contendemus HS: iam tendamus PL:
iam contendimus R.

<sup>4</sup> si omitted by H, Weidner.

<sup>5</sup> dicens Kayser: dicere M: dixeris J.

law, which goes by the name of the letter and the intent. But because we were speaking of confession and avoidance we gave the rules for that; in another place<sup>a</sup> we shall discuss the letter and the intent.

104 Now we shall go about the consideration of the second form of confession and avoidance. XXXIV. Deprecatio (plea for pardon) is the designation of the plea which contains no defence of the deed but only a request for pardon. This form can hardly be recommended in a trial because when the offence is admitted, it is difficult to demand pardon from him whose duty it is to punish offences. Therefore it will be admissible to make partial use of this form, although you do not rest your case upon it. For instance, if you are speaking on behalf of a brave or distinguished man who has performed many services for the state you might plead for pardon without seeming to in this way: "Therefore, gentlemen of the jury, if this man in return for his services, in return for the devotion which he has always shown to you, at such a critical moment for him asked you to pardon one error for the sake of his many good deeds, it would be only what is due to your reputation for clemency and to his virtue that he should obtain from you this favour that he requests." Then it will be right to magnify his services and to lead the jury by a common topic to a mood of forgiveness.

105 Therefore, although this form is not used commonly in trials except in part, nevertheless because this very part has to be brought in occasionally and is often adopted exclusively in the Senate and Council, we shall give rules for it too. For instance, there

<sup>a</sup> Below, §§ 121-43.

CICERO

et in senatu aut in consilio<sup>1</sup> de Syphace diu deliberatum est, et de Q. Numitorio Pullo apud L. Opimium et eius consilium diu dictum est, et magis in hoc quidem ignoscendi quam cognoscendi postulatio valuit. Nam semper animo bono se in populum Romanum fuisse non tam facile probabat cum coniecturali constitutione uteretur quam ut propter posterius beneficium sibi ignosceretur cum deprecationis partes adiungeret.

106 XXXV. Oportebit igitur eum qui sibi ut ignoscatur postulabit commemorare si qua sua poterit beneficia et, si poterit, ostendere ea maiora esse quam haec quae deliquerit, ut plus ab eo boni quam mali profectum esse videatur; deinde maiorum suorum beneficia, si qua exstabunt, proferre; deinde ostendere non odio neque crudelitate fecisse quod fecerit, sed aut stultitia aut impulsu alicuius aut aliqua honesta aut probabili causa; postea polliceri et confirmare se et hoc peccato doctum et beneficio eorum, qui sibi ignoverint, confirmatum, omni tempore a tali ratione a futurum; deinde spem ostendere aliquo se in loco magno eis qui sibi concesserint usui futurum; postea, si facultas erit, se aut
107 consanguineum magnis et principibus viris<sup>2</sup> aut

<sup>1</sup> aut in consilio omitted by Victorinus, bracketed by Kayser.

<sup>2</sup> magnis et principibus viris added by Kayser from Victorinus.

---

<sup>a</sup> Al. African prince, alternately allied to the Romans and the Carthaginians in the Second Punic War. Livy (XXX. 17) records that on his arrival in Italy as a captive the Senate debated his case, and decided to imprison him at Alba. There are conflicting stories about his death.

<sup>b</sup> In 125 B.C. Pullus betrayed his native town, Fregellae, was a long deliberation in the Senate or in the Council about Syphax<sup>a</sup> and long speeches were made about Quintus Numitorius Pullus<sup>b</sup> before Lucius Opimius and his council; and in this case the plea for mercy prevailed over the demand for judicial action. For he did not find it as easy to prove that he had always been well affected towards the Roman people when he was using the issue of fact, as to urge that he should be pardoned for his subsequent services while adding the plea for pardon to his defence.

108 XXXV. One who requests that he be pardoned will, therefore, have to recount whatever good deeds of his own he can, and if possible to show that they are of greater weight than these present mistakes, so that he may seem to have been the source of more good than harm. Then he should mention the good deeds of his ancestors if there are any such; then show that he did what he did, not out of hatred or cruelty, but through folly or the instigation of some one, or from some honourable or plausible reason. After that he should promise and affirm that, taught by this error and strengthened by the kindness of those who have pardoned him, he will forever after refrain from such a course of conduct. Then he may hold out the hope that 107 who have done him this favour. After that, if facts permit, he may show that he is kin to great and leading men of the state or that from the earliest to the Roman commander, Lucius Opimius. The incident in the text, which is not found elsewhere, obviously involved the decision whether Pullus should be punished as a rebel or pardoned for his services as a traitor.

CICERO

iam a maioribus imprimis amicum esse <sup>1</sup> demonstrabit et amplitudinem suae voluntatis, nobilitatem generis, eorum qui se salvum velint dignitatem ostendere, et cetera ea quae personis ad honestatem et amplitudinem sunt attributa cum conquestione, sine arrogantia, in se esse demonstrabit <sup>1</sup> ut honore potius aliquo quam ullo supplicio dignus esse videatur; deinde ceteros proferre, quibus maiora delicta concessa sint. Ac multum proficiet, si se misericordem in potestate, propensum ad ignoscendum fuisse ostendet. Atque ipsum illud peccatum erit extenuandum, ut quam minimum obfuisse videatur, et aut turpe aut inutile demonstrandum tali de 108 homine supplicium sumere. Deinde locis communibus misericordiam captare oportebit ex eis praeceptis quae in primo libro sunt exposita.

XXXVI. Adversarius autem malefacta augebit: nihil imprudenter, sed omnia ex crudelitate et malitia facta dicet; ipsum immisericordem, superbum fuisse; et, si poterit, ostendet semper inimicum fuisse et amicum fieri nullo modo posse. Si beneficia proferet, aut aliqua de causa facta, non propter benevolentiam demonstrabit, aut post ea odium esse acre susceptum, aut illa omnia maleficiis esse deleta, aut leviora beneficia quam maleficia, aut, cum beneficiis honos habitus sit, pro maleficio poenam 109 sumi oportere. Deinde turpe esse aut inutile ignosci. Deinde, de quo ut potestas esset saepe

<sup>1</sup> After esse the MSS. have demonstrabit: bracketed by Lindemann.

times his family have been friends to them, and set forth the earnestness of his good will, the nobility of his family and the high position of those who wish him to be saved, and in sorrow rather than in arrogance show that he possesses all the other qualities which are regarded as making for honour and greatness of character, so that he may seem to deserve some honour rather than any punishment. Then he should cite the example of the others who have had graver errors pardoned. Furthermore, it will help his case greatly if he shows that he has been merciful when in authority, and prone to forgiveness. He should also make light of the offence so that it may appear that very little harm resulted from it, and prove that it is shameful or inexpedient to inflict punishment on such a man. Then he ought to try to arouse pity by using common topics in accordance with the rules that were set forth in the first book.<sup>a</sup>

108
 XXXVI. The opponent, on the other hand, will magnify the offences; he will say that nothing was done inadvertently, but everything out of cruelty and ill-will; that the defendant has been merciless and overbearing; and if possible, he will show that the defendant has always been unfriendly and can by no possibility become a friend. If he mentions any good acts he will prove that they were done from some ulterior motive and not out of good-will, or that later the defendant conceived a violent hatred, or that all those good deeds were outweighed by the bad, or that the offence should be punished because the good deeds have been rewarded. Then 109 that it is base or inexpedient to pardon; then that it is the height of folly not to use the opportunity

CICERO

optarint, in eum oblata potestate<sup>1</sup> non uti summam esse stultitiam; cogitare oportere quem animum in eum et quod odium habuerint.

Locus autem communis erit indignatio malefici et alter eorum misereri oportere, qui propter fortunam, non propter malitiam in miseris sint.

Quoniam ergo in generali constitutione tamdiu propter eius partium multitudinem commoramur, ne forte varietate et dissimilitudine rerum diductus alicuius animus in quendam errorem deferatur, quid etiam nobis ex eo genere restet et quare restet admonendum videtur.

Iuridicalem causam esse dicebamus, in qua aequi et iniqui natura et praemi aut poenae ratio quaereretur. Eas causas, in quibus de aequo et 110 iniquo quaeritur, exposuimus. XXXVII. Restat nunc ut de praemio et de poena explicemus. Sunt enim multae causae quae ex praemi alicuius petitione constant. Nam et apud iudices de praemio saepe accusatorum quaeritur et a senatu aut a consilio aliquod praemium saepe petitur. Ac neminem conveniet arbitrari nos, cum aliquod exemplum ponamus, quod in senatu agatur, ab iudiciali genere exemplorum recedere. Quicquid enim de homine probando aut improbando dicitur, cum ad eam dictionem sententiarum quoque ratio accommodetur, id non, si per sententiae dictionem agitur, deliberathat is offered to punish him whom they have often prayed to have the opportunity to punish; finally that they ought to remember what feelings, nay, what hatred they have had toward him.

<sup>1</sup> oblata potestate A, Klotz: ob potestatem HS<sup>1</sup>, Ströbel with sign of lacuna: potestatem PL, bl: potestate RJ.

A common topic will be denunciation of crime and for the other side that those should be pitied who are in misery through ill fortune and not through wickedness.

Now then, since I have lingered so long over the qualitative issue because of the great number of its subdivisions, it seems necessary to remind the reader of what remains to be said about this issue and why anything is left, in order that his mind may not by chance be distracted by the variety and difference in the subject matter, and so be led astray.

We said that equitable was the term applied to a case in which there was a question of the nature of justice and injustice and of the principles of reward or punishment. We have expounded the cases in which there is a question of justice and injustice.

110 XXXVII. It now remains to explain about reward and punishment. There are, as a matter of fact, many speeches which consist of a request for some reward. For example, one often raises before a court the question of rewarding the prosecutors, and often some reward is requested from Senate or Council. And no one should think that in citing some instance of a case to come up in the Senate, we are abandoning our principle of referring to trials in court. For whatever is said in approval or disapproval of a person, even though the speech is classified under the advocacy of policy, is not a deliberative speech for all that it is presented as a declaration of policy, but it is to be regarded as tivum est; sed quia de homine statuitur, iudiciale est habendum. Omnino autem qui diligenter omnium causarum vim et naturam cognoverit, genere et prima conformatione eas intelletget dissidere, ceteris autem partibus aptas inter se omnes et aliam in alia implicatam videbit.

CICERO

111 Nunc de praemiis consideremus. L. Licinius Crassus consul quosdam in citeriore Gallia nullo illustri neque certo duce neque eo nomine neque numero praeditos uti digni essent qui hostes populi Romani esse dicerentur, qui tamen excursionibus et latrociniis infestam provinciam redderent, consecratus est et confecit. Romam redit: triumphum ab senatu postulat. Hic et in deprecatione nihil ad nos attinet rationibus et infirmationibus rationum supponendis ad iudicationem pervenire, propterea quod, nisi alia quoque incidet constitutio aut pars constitutionis, simplex erit iudicatio et in quaestione ipsa continebitur in deprecatione huiusmodi: Oporteatne poena affici? in hac, huiusmodi: Oporteatne dari praemium?

112 Nunc ad praemi quaestionem appositos locos exponemus. XXXVIII. Ratio igitur praemi quatuor est in partes distributa: in beneficia, in hominem, in praemi genus, in facultates.

Beneficia ex sua vi, ex tempore, ex animo eius qui fecit, ex casu considerantur. Ex sua vi quaerentur hoc modo: magna an parva, facilia an diffi-

---

* The distinguished orator, consul 95 B.C.

a judicial or forensic speech because a decision is sought about a person. But in general, one who diligently studies the function and character of all speeches will find that they differ in a large way and in general arrangement, but will see that they are all connected and related one to another as far as the smaller divisions of the speech are concerned.

111 Now let us consider rewards. Lucius Licinius Crassus<sup>a</sup> when consul ran down and destroyed some bands in Cisalpine Gaul. They had no distinguished or even regular leader, nor were they so famous or numerous that they deserved to be called enemies of the Roman people, yet by their plundering raids they had made the province unsafe. Crassus returns to Rome and demands that the Senate grant him a triumph. In such a case and in a plea for pardon we are not interested in reaching the point for decision by supplying reasons and rebuttals of reasons, because unless some other issue or part of an issue comes into the case the point for the judge's decision is simple and is wholly contained in the question. In a plea for pardon, it is: "Should he be punished?" In this case it is: "Should he receive a reward?"

112 Now I shall give topics apposite to the question of reward. XXXVIII. The matter of reward has four heads: the services to be rewarded, the person to receive it, the kind of reward, and the ability to give it.

Services are examined with reference to their character, the time at which they were performed, the intent of the person who rendered them, and chance. They are examined with reference to their character as follows: Are they great or small, easy cilia, singularia sint an vulgaria, vera an falsa quadam exornatione honestentur; ex tempore autem, si tum, cum indigeremus, cum ceteri non possent aut nollent opitulari, si tum, cum spes deseruisset; ex animo, si non sui commodi causa, si eo consilio fecit omnia, ut hoc conficere posset; ex casu, si non fortuna, sed industria factum videbitur aut si industriae fortuna obstitisse.

CICERO

113 In hominem autem, quibus rationibus vixerit, quid sumptus in eam rem aut laboris insumpserit; ecquid aliquando tale fecerit; num alieni laboris aut deorum bonitatis praemium sibi postulet; num aliquando ipse talem ob causam aliquem praemio affici negarit oportere; aut num iam satis pro eo quod fecerit honos habitus sit; aut num necesse fuerit ei facere id quod fecerit; aut num eiusmodi sit factum, ut, nisi fecisset, supplicio dignus esset, non, quia fecerit, praemio; ut num ante tempus praemium petat, et spem incertam certo venditet pretio; aut num, quod supplicium aliquod vitet, eo praemium postulet, uti de se praeiudicium factum esse videatur.

XXXIX. In praemi autem genere, quid et quantum et quamobrem postuletur et quo et quanto quaeque res praemio digna sit, considerabitur; or difficult, unique or common, esteemed and honoured for their merit or only on false pretences? With reference to the time when the services were performed: Was it at a time when we were in need, when others could not or would not succour us, when hope had been abandoned? With reference to the intent, it is asked whether he did not do it for his own advantage, and if he did everything with the intent of accomplishing this result. With reference to chance, if it seems to have been done intentionally rather than accidentally, or if an accident seems to have thwarted his intention.

113 Under the heading person one considers in what manner he lived, what expense or effort he devoted to this service; whether he has ever done anything like it at any other time; whether he is demanding for himself the reward for another's labour or for the blessings sent by the gods; whether at any time he himself denied that a reward should be granted for similar services; whether he has already received sufficient honour for what he did; whether he was obliged to do what he did; or whether the act was such that he would have deserved punishment for not performing it rather than reward for its accomplishment; whether he is seeking a reward before the proper time, and bartering a vague hope for a definite price; or whether he claims a reward because he is trying to avoid punishment so that the case may seem to have already been decided in his favour.

XXXIX. Under the heading, "kind of reward," consideration will be given to what and how much is demanded and why, and what and how great a reward each act deserves; then one inquires what deinde, apud maiores quibus hominibus et quibus de causis talis honos habitus sit, quaeretur; deinde, 114 ne is honos nimium pervulgetur. Atque hic eius qui contra aliquem praemium postulantem dicet locus erit communis: Praemia virtutis et officii sancta et casta esse oportere neque ea aut cum improbis communicari aut in mediocribus hominibus pervulgari; et alter: Minus homines virtutis cupidos fore virtutis praemio pervulgato; quae enim rara et ardua sint, ea experiendo pulchra et iucunda hominibus videri; et tertius: Si existant, qui apud maiores nostros ob egregiam virtutem tali honore dignati sunt, nonne de sua gloria, cum pari praemio tales homines affici videant, delibari putent? et eorum enumeratio et cum eis, quos contra dicas, comparatio. Eius autem qui praemium petet facti sui amplificatio, eorum qui praemio affecti sunt cum 115 suis factis contentio. Deinde ceteros a virtutis studio repulsum iri, si ipse praemio non sit affectus.

CICERO

Facultates autem considerantur, cum aliquod pecuniarum praemium postulatur; in quo, utrum copiane sit agri, vectigalium, pecuniae, an penuria, consideratur. Loci communes: Facultates augere, non minuere oportere; et, impudentem esse qui pro beneficio non gratiam, verum mercedem postulet;
contra autem de pecunia ratiocinari sordidum esse, men received such honour in the time of our forefathers, and for what reasons; then it will be urged that such an honour should not be made too common.

- 114 Here one who is opposing the demand for a reward will use the common topic: that the rewards for heroism and devotion to duty ought to be considered sacred and holy and should not be shared with inferior men nor made common by being bestowed on men of no distinction; a second: men will be less eager to be virtuous if the reward of virtue is made common; that it is the rare and difficult which seems fair and pleasant for men to attain; and a third: if those should rise from the dead who in our forefathers' day were deemed worthy of such honour because of their outstanding heroism, would they not think that their glory was lessened, when they see such men receiving an equal reward? Then these men of the past can be named over and compared with those whom you are opposing. The common topic for one seeking a reward is to magnify his own act and compare the deeds of those who have received a reward with his own.
- 115 Then he will urge that others will be deterred from the pursuit of virtue if he himself does not receive a reward.

Ability to give is taken into consideration when a demand is made for some valuable reward. In this case one considers whether there is a plenty or scarcity of land, revenues and money. The common topics: the national resources should be increased, rather than diminished; and that he is a shameless man who demands wages for his service to the state rather than gratitude. On the other hand it may be urged that it is mean to haggle over cum de gratia referenda deliberetur; et, se pretium non pro facto, sed honorem ita ut factitatum sit pro beneficio postulare.

CICERO

Ac de constitutionibus quidem satis dictum est; nunc de eis controversiis quae in scripto versantur dicendum videtur.

116 XL. In scripto versatur controversia cum ex scriptiotionis ratione aliquid dubii nascitur. Id fit ex ambiguo, ex scripto et sententia, ex contrariis legibus, ex ratiocinatione, ex definitione.

Ex ambiguo autem nascitur controversia cum quid senserit scriptor obscurum est, quod scriptum duas pluresve res significat, ad hunc modum: Paterfamilias, cum filium heredem faceret, vasorum argenteorum pondo centum<sup>1</sup> uxori suae sic legavit: heres meus uxori meae vasorum argenteorum pondo centum, quae volet, dato. Post mortem eius vasa magna et pretiose caelata petit a filio mater. Ille se, quae ipse vellet, debere dicit.

Primum, si fieri poterit, demonstrandum est non esse ambigue scriptum, propterea quod omnes in consuetudine sermonis sic uti solent eo verbo uno pluribusve in eam sententiam in quam is qui dicit
117 accipiendum esse demonstrabit. Deinde ex superiore et ex inferiore scriptura docendum id quod quaeratur fieri perspicuum. Quare si ipsa separatim ex se verba considerentur, omnia aut pleraque ambigua visum iri; quae autem ex omni considerata scriptura perspicua fiant, haec ambigua non oportere existi-

<sup>1</sup> pondo centum P<sup>2</sup>J: centum pondo S<sup>3</sup>i, Ströbel: centum pondus M.

---

<sup>a</sup> Literally as (he or she) wishes. The ambiguity arises from the nature of the Latin verb, which may have a pronominal subject understood but not expressed.

money when debating about showing gratitude; and that he does not ask for pay for his work but the customary honour for his good services.

Enough has now been said about the "issues"; now I think we should discuss the controversies which turn upon written documents.

116 XL. A controversy turns upon written documents when some doubt arises from the nature of writing. This comes about from ambiguity, from the letter and intent, from conflict of laws, from reasoning by analogy, from definition.

A controversy arises from ambiguity when there is doubt as to what the writer meant, because the written statement has two or more meanings, after this fashion: A father, in making his son his principal heir bequeathed to his wife a hundred pounds of silver plate in the following terms: "Let my heir give to my wife a hundred pounds of silver plate as desired."<sup>a</sup> After his death the mother asks her son for some magnificent examples of plate with costly chasing. He says that he is obligated to give her only what he desires.

In the first place it should be shown, if possible, that there is no ambiguity in the statement, because in ordinary conversation everyone is accustomed to use this single word or phrase in the sense in which the speaker will prove that it should be taken.

117 In the second place it must be shown that from what precedes or follows in the document the doubtful point becomes plain. Therefore, if words are to be considered separately by themselves, every word, or at least many words, would seem ambiguous; but it is not right to regard as ambiguous what becomes plain on consideration of the whole context.

CICERO

mare. Deinde, qua in sententia scriptor fuerit ex ceteris eius scriptis et ex factis, dictis, animo atque vita eius sumi oportebit, et eam ipsam scripturam, in qua inerit illud ambiguum de quo quaeretur totam omnibus ex partibus pertemptare, si quid aut ad id appositum sit quod nos interpretemur, aut ei quod adversarius intellegat, adversetur. Nam facile, quid veri simile sit eum voluisse qui scripsit ex omni scriptura et ex persona scriptoris atque eis rebus quae personis attributae sunt considerabitur.

118 Deinde erit demonstrandum, si quid ex re ipsa dabitur facultatis, id quod adversarius intellegat multo minus commode fieri posse quam id quod nos accipimus, quod illius rei neque administratio neque exitus ullus exstet; nos quod dicamus, facile et commode transigi posse; ut in hac lege—nihil enim prohibet fictam exempli loco ponere, quo facilius res intellegatur—: meretrix coronam auream ne habeto; si habuerit, publica esto, contra eum qui meretricem publicari dicat ex lege oportere possit dici neque administrationem esse ullam publicae meretricis neque exitum legis in meretrice publicanda, at in auro publicando et administrationem et exitum facilem esse et incommodi nihil inesse.

119 XLI. Ac diligenter illud quoque attendere oportebit, num, illo probato quod adversarius intellegat,

---

<sup>a</sup> Again the ambiguity arises from a peculiarity of the Latin language: a confusion of real and grammatical gender. Both meretrix (prostitute) and corona (crown) are feminine in gender, and the adjective publica might modify either. The instance is, however, far-fetched, and could hardly arise in actual practice.

In the next place, one ought to estimate what the writer meant from his other writings, acts, words, disposition and in fact his whole life, and to examine the whole document which contains the ambiguity in question in all its parts, to see if any thing is apposite to our interpretation or opposed to the sense in which our opponent understands it. For it is easy to estimate what it is likely that the writer intended from the complete context and from the character of the writer, and from the qualities which are associated with certain characters.

118 In the next place it should be pointed out, if opportunity presents, that the interpretation which our opponent favours can be followed with much less convenience than the one which we take, because there is no way of carrying out or complying with his interpretation, whereas what we propose can be easily and conveniently managed. For example, in the following law—there is no reason for not using an imaginary case for illustration in order to make the problem more intelligible: “A prostitute shall not wear a crown of gold; if she does, the penalty shall be confiscation as public property”<sup>a</sup>—against a litigant who argues that the prostitute should be seized as public property in accordance with the law, it can be urged that there is no way to manage a prostitute as state property nor can one comply with the law by seizing a prostitute, but that it is easy to administer and comply with the law by seizing gold, and that it causes no inconvenience.

119 XLI. Another point which will deserve careful attention is whether it will not appear if we accept the interpretation proposed by our opponent, that res utilior aut honestior aut magis necessaria ab scriptore neglecta videatur. Id fiet, si id quod nos demonstrabimus honestum aut utile aut necessarium demonstrabimus, et si id quod ab adversariis dicetur minime eiusmodi esse dicemus. Deinde si in lege erit ex ambiguo controversia, dare operam oportebit ut de eo quod adversarius intellegat 120 alia in <sup>1</sup> lege cautum esse doceatur. Permulum autem proficiet illud demonstrare, quemadmodum scripsisset, si id quod adversarius accipiat fieri aut intellegi voluisset ut in hac causa in qua de vasis argenteis quaeritur possit mulier dicere, nihil attuisse ascribi, quae volet, si heredis voluntati permetteret. Eo enim non ascripto nihil esse dubitationis, quin heres, quae ipse vellet, daret. Amentiae igitur fuisse, cum heredi vellet cavere, id ascribere, quo non ascripto nihilominus heredi caveretur.

 121 Quare hoc genere magno opere talibus in causis uti oportebit: “Hoc modo scripsisset, isto verbo usus non esset, non isto loco verbum istud collocasset.” Nam ex his sententia scriptoris maxime perspicitur. Deinde quo tempore scriptum sit quaerendum est, ut quid eum voluisse in eiusmodi tempore veri simile sit intellegatur. Post ex deliberationis partibus, quid utilius et quid honestius et illi ad scribendum et his ad comprobandum sit, demonstrandum; et ex his, si quid amplificationis dabitur, communibus utrimque locis uti oportebit.

<sup>1</sup> After in HP have re.

the writer neglected something more expedient, more honourable or more necessary. This can be brought about by saying that the interpretation which we make is honourable, expedient and necessary, and that of the opposition by no means of such a nature. Then if the controversy arises over an ambiguity in a law, we must try to make it appear that the interpretation which our opponent offers is dealt with 120 in another law. It will help greatly to show how he would have written if he had wished the opponent's interpretation to be carried out or adopted. For instance, in this case which deals with the silver plate, the woman could say that there was no point in adding the words "as desired" if the testator was leaving the choice to his heir. For with these words omitted there is no doubt that the heir was to give what he himself wished. It was therefore stark madness, if he wished to provide for the interest of his heir, to add the words the omission of which would not prejudice the heir's interest.
 121 Therefore in such cases it will be necessary to make use of this kind of argument: "He would have written it in this way," "He would not have used that word," "He would not have put that word in that place." For these considerations particularly reveal the intention of the writer. Then one might ask when it was written, so that it may be known what he was likely to write at such a time. Finally, by the topics of deliberative oratory we must show what was more expedient and more honourable both for the testator to write and for our opponents to sanction; and on the basis of these statements if there is any chance for amplification, both sides may use common topics.

XLII. Ex scripto et sententia controversia consistit, cum alter verbis ipsis quae scripta sunt utitur, alter ad id quod scriptorem sensisse dicet omnem adiungit 122 dictionem. Scriptoris .autem sententia ab eo qui sententia se defendet tum semper ad idem spectare et idem velle demonstrabitur; tum ex facto aut ex eventu aliquo ad tempus id quod instituit accommodabitur. Semper ad idem spectare, hoc modo: Paterfamilias cum liberorum haberet nihil, uxorem autem haberet, in testamento ita scripsit: si mihi filius genitur unus pluresve, is mihi heres esto. Deinde quae assolent. Postea: si filius ante moritur, quam in tutelam suam venerit, tum mihi dicet <sup>1</sup> heres esto. Filius natus non est. Ambigunt agnati cum eo qui est heres si filius ante quam in suam
 123 tutelam veniat mortuus sit. In hoc genere non potest hoc dici, ad tempus et ad eventum aliquem sententiam scriptoris oportere accommodari, propterea quod ea sola esse demonstratur, qua fretus ille, qui contra scriptum dicit, suam esse hereditatem defendit. Aliud autem genus est eorum, qui sententiam inducunt, in quo non simplex voluntas scriptoris ostenditur, quae in omne tempus et in omne factum idem valeat; sed ex quodam facto aut eventu ad tempus interpretanda dicitur. Ea partibus iuridicalis assumptivae maxime sustinetur. Nam tum inducitur

<sup>1</sup> dicet M: dicebat secundus J.

---

* Cf. above, II. 62 for a slightly different statement of this case.

XLII. A controversy over the letter and the intent occurs when one party follows the exact words that are written, and the other directs his whole pleading to what he says the writer meant. The one who bases his defence on the intent will sometimes show that the intent of the writer always had the same end in view and desired the same result, at other times he will show that the writer's purpose has to be modified to fit the occasion as a result of some act or event. He may be proved to have always had the same end in view in the following way: A head of a family, having a wife but no children, drew his will as follows: "If one or more sons are born to me, he or they are to inherit my estate." Then follow the usual phrases. Then comes, "If my son dies before coming of age, then So-and-So is to be my heir." No son was born. The agnates dispute with the man who was to be the reversionary heir in case the son died before coming of age.<sup>a</sup> In this kind of case it cannot be said that the intent of the writer ought to be made to fit some time or some event, because the only possible meaning is shown to be that on which the litigant who opposes the literal interpretation of the will defends his own right to inherit. But there is another kind of argument brought forward by advocates of the intent in which the wish of the writer is shown not to be absolute, i.e. having the same weight for every occasion and for every action, but it is argued that his wishes ought to be interpreted to fit the occasion in the light of some act or some event. This argument will be supported largely by topics under the assumptive branch of the issue of equity. For example, sometimes comparatio (com-

CICERO

comparatio, ut in eo qui, cum lex aperiri portas noctu vetaret, aperuit quodam in bello et auxilia quaedam in oppidum recepit, ne ab hostibus opprimerentur, si 124 foris essent, quod prope muros hostes castra haberent; tum relatio criminis, ut in eo milite qui, cum communis lex omnium hominem occidere vetaret, tribunum militum,<sup>1</sup> qui vim sibi afferre conaretur, occidit; tum remotio criminis, ut in eo qui, cum lex quibus diebus in legationem proficisceretur praestituerat, quia sumptum quaestor non dedit, profectus non est; tum concessio per purgationem et per imprudentiam, ut in vituli immolatione, et per vim, ut in nave rostrata, et per casum, ut in Eurotae magnitudine. Quare aut ita sententia inducetur, ut unum quiddam voluisse scriptor demonstretur; aut sic, ut in eiusmodi re et tempore hoc voluisse doceatur.

125 XLIII. Ergo is qui scriptum defendet his locis plerumque omnibus, maiore autem parte semper poterit uti: primum scriptoris collaudatione et loco communi, nihil eos qui iudicent nisi id quod scriptum<sup>2</sup> spectare oportere; et hoc eo magis, si legitimum scriptum proferetur, id est, aut lex ipsa aut aliquid ex lege; postea, quod vehementissimum est, facti aut intentionis adversariorum cum ipso scripto

<sup>1</sup> After militum the MSS. have suum: bracketed by Friedrich.

<sup>2</sup> After scriptum SP<sup>2</sup>Ri insert est: J sit.

---

<sup>a</sup> The case is stated more explicitly in the speech In Defence of Milo, 9.

<sup>b</sup> Above, §§ 87–98.

parison) is used, as in the case of the man who, though the law forbade opening the gates at night, opened them in a certain war and let certain auxiliary forces into the town in order that they might not be wiped out by the enemy if left outside, for the enemy was encamped near the walls.

124 Sometimes relatio criminis (retort of accusation) is used; an example is the case of the soldier who killed a military tribune who offered him violence,<sup>a</sup> although the universal law of the human race forbids killing a man. Again remotio criminis (shifting of the charge) may be used; an instance is the case of the ambassador who although the law set a certain date for him to proceed on his embassy did not set out because the Treasurer did not supply funds. Again one may use concessio (confession and avoidance) in the form of purgatio, by a plea of ignorance as in the case of the sacrifice of the bull-calf, or of force majeure, as in the case of the warship, or of accident, as in the case of the flood of the Eurotas.<sup>b</sup> To sum up, intent will be presented so as to show that the writer desired one definite thing, or to prove that he desired this in such circumstances and at such a time.

125 XLIII. An advocate who will defend the letter will be able to use all of the following topics most of the time, and the greater part of them on every occasion; first, high praise of the writer, and a common topic that the judges should regard nothing except what is written; and this may be made more emphatic if some statutory document is offered, i.e. either a whole law or some part of it; after that one may use the most effective argument, a comparison of the action and purpose of the opcontentione, quid scriptum sit, quid factum, quid iuratus iudex; quem locum multis modis variare oportebit, tum ipsum secum admirantem quidnam contra dici possit, tum ad iudicis officium revertentem et ab eo quaerentem, quid praeterea audire aut exspectare debeat; tum ipsum adversarium quasi in testis loco producendo hoc est interrogandum utrum scriptum neget esse eo modo, an ab se contra factum esse aut contra contendi neget; utrum negare ausus sit, se dicere desitutum.

CICERO

126 Si neutrum neget et contra tamen dicat: nihil esse quo hominem impudentiorem quisquam se visurum arbitretur. In hoc ita commorari conveniet, quasi nihil praeterea dicendum sit et quasi contra dici nihil possit, saepe id quod scriptum est recitando, saepe cum scripto factum adversarii configendo atque interdum acriter ad iudicem ipsum revertendo. Quo in loco iudici demonstrandum est quid iuratus sit, quid sequi debeat: duabus de causis iudicem dubitare oportere, si aut scriptum sit obscure aut 127 neget aliquid adversarius; XLIV. cum et scriptum aperte sit et adversarius omnia confiteatur, tum iudicem legi parere, non interpretari legem oportere.

Hoc loco confirmato tum diluere ea quae contra dici poterunt oportebit. Contra autem dicetur si aut prorsus aliud sensisse scriptor et scripsisse aliud demonstrabitur; ut in illa de testamento, quam ponents with the letter of the law, showing what was written, what was done, what the judge has sworn to do. And it will be well to vary this topic in many ways, first expressing wonder in his own mind as to what can possibly be said on the other side, then turning to the judge's duty and asking what more he can think it necessary to hear or expect. Then one may bring in the opponent himself like a witness, that is ask him whether he denies that the law is so written, or denies that he has acted contrary to it or endeavoured so to do, and offer to stop speaking if he dares deny either.

126 But if he denies neither statement and still continues to dispute, say that there is no reason why any one should think that he will ever see a more shameless man. It will be wise to linger over this point as if it were unnecessary and impossible to say anything more, often reading the document, often comparing the act of the opponent with the letter of the law, and often turning sharply to the judge. In this connexion one should point out to the judge what oath he has taken, and what course he is bound to follow, saying that there are two reasons why a judge should hesitate: if the document is obscurely drawn, or if the accused denies 127 any allegation. XLIV. That when the document is plain and the accused confesses everything, then the judge ought to comply with the law and not interpret it.

When this point has been established it will be time to attack the arguments which can be made on the other side. Arguments will be made in reply to either of two positions, that is, if it is shown definitely that the writer meant one thing and posuimus, controversia, aut causa assumptiva inferetur quamobrem scripto non potuerit aut non oportuerit obtemperari.

CICERO

128 Si aliud sensisse scriptor, aliud scripsisse dicetur, is qui scripto utetur haec dicet: non oportere de eius voluntate nos argumentari, qui, ne id facere possemus, indicium nobis relinquerit suae voluntatis; multa incommoda consequi, si instituat ut ab scripto recedatur. Nam et eos qui aliquid scribant non existimatos id quod scripserint ratum futurum; et eos qui iudicent certum quod sequantur nihil habituros si semel ab scripto recedere consueverint. Quod si voluntas scriptoris conservanda sit, se, non adversarios, a voluntate eius stare. Nam multo propius accedere ad scriptoris voluntatem eum qui ex ipsius eam litteris interpretetur quam illum qui sententiam scriptoris non ex ipsius scripto spectet, quod ille suae voluntatis quasi imaginem reliquerit, sed domesticis suspicionibus perscrutetur.

129 Sin causam afferet is qui a sententia stabit, primum erit contra dicendum: quam absurdum non negare contra legem fecisse, sed, quare fecerit, causam aliquam invenire; deinde, conversa esse omnia: ante solitos esse accusatores iudicibus persuadere, affinem esse alicuius culpae eum qui accusaretur, causam proferre quae eum ad peccan-

wrote another, as in the controversy which we have cited about the will, or if an assumptive argument is introduced to show why it was impossible or undesirable to comply with the written word.

128 If the writer is alleged to have meant one thing and written another, the advocate who follows the letter will say: It is not right for us to argue about the intent of one who left us a clear indication of his intent in order that we might not be able to dispute it; that much inconvenience would result if it should be established as a principle that we may depart from the written word. For those who draw up a written document will not feel that what they have written will be fixed and unalterable, and judges will have no sure guide to follow if once they become accustomed to depart from the written word. Therefore if the object is to carry out the wish of the writer, counsel will urge that it is he rather than the opponents who adhere to the writer's wishes; for one gets much closer to a writer's intent if one interprets it from the writer's own words than one who does not learn the writer's intention from his own written document which he has left as a picture, one might say, of his own desires, but makes one's own inferences.

129 If the litigant who adheres to the writer's intent adduces a reason or excuse, the rebuttal should take the following form: first, how absurd it is not to deny that he broke the law, but to invent some reason for breaking it; in the second place that the whole world is turned upside down. Formerly prosecutors used to persuade the judges that the accused was implicated in a crime, and offer a reason which impelled him to offend; now the dum impulisset; nunc ipsum reum causam afferre 130 quare deliquerit. Deinde hanc inducere parti-tionem, cuius in singulas partes multae convenient argumentationes: primum, nulla in lege ullam causam contra scriptum accipi convenire; deinde, si in ceteris legibus conveniat, hanc esse eiusmodi legem ut in ea non oporteat; postremo, si in hac quoque lege oporteat, hanc quidem causam accipi minime oportere. XLV. Prima pars his fere locis confirmabitur: scriptori neque ingenium neque operam neque ullam facultatem defuisse quo minus aperte posset perscribere id quod cogitaret; non fuisse ei grave nec difficile eam causam excipere quam adversarii proferant si quicquam excipiendum 131 putasset: consuesse eos qui leges scribant exceptio-nibus uti. Deinde oportet recitare leges cum exceptionibus scriptas et maxime videre, ecquae in ea ipsa lege, qua de agatur, sit exceptio aliquo in capite aut apud eundem legis scriptorem, quo magis probetur eum fuisse excepturum, si quid excipien-dum putaret; et ostendere causam accipere nihil aliud esse nisi legem tollere; ideo quod, cum semel causa consideretur, nihil attineat eam ex lege con-siderare, quippe quae in lege scripta non sit. Quod si sit institutum, omnibus dari causam et potestatem peccandi, cum intellexerint vos ex ingenio eius qui contra legem fecerit non ex lege, in quam iurati

---

* Note the sudden change to direct discourse. Cicero is no longer listing arguments proper to the topic, but is addressing a jury ("You"). This is a quotation from a rhetorical exercise. The same phenomenon recurs at § 139.

130 defendant himself offers the reason for his delinquency. Then he should introduce the following partition, each head of which will have many suitable arguments: first, under no law should a reason or excuse be accepted contrary to the letter of the law; secondly, if such a course is permissible under other laws, this is not the kind of law under which it should be done; finally, even if such a course is permissible under this law, this excuse at least should by no means be accepted. XLV. The first topic will be supported by arguments like these:
 the author of the law did not lack the intelligence, diligence or opportunity to write plainly what he intended; it was not hard or difficult to make an exception of the excuse which the opposing advocates offer, if he had thought that any exception ought to be made. The law-makers are accustomed to make 131 exceptions. Then it will be in point to read laws that include exceptions and in particular to see if there is any exception in any chapter of the law in question or in laws by the same law-maker, in order that it may be better established that he would have made an exception if he had thought one ought to be made. Furthermore, one should show that accepting an excuse is nothing more than repealing the law, because when once an excuse is taken into consideration there is no point in weighing it with reference to the law, seeing that it is not written in the law. And if this principle is set up, all men will be given a reason and opportunity for violating the law, when they know that you are deciding the case by the character of the man who broke the law rather than by the law which you are sworn to uphold.<sup>a</sup> Again he may show that all

CICERO

sitis, rem iudicare; deinde et ipsis iudicibus iudicandi et ceteris civibus vivendi rationes perturbatum iri, 132 si semel ab legibus recessum sit; nam et iudices neque quid sequantur habituros si ab eo quod scriptum sit recedant, neque quo pacto aliis probare possint quod contra legem iudicarint; et ceteros cives quid agant ignoraturos si ex suo quisque consilio et ex ea ratione quae in mentem aut in libidinem venerit, non ex communi praescripto civitatis unam quamque rem administrabit; postea quaerere ab iudicibus ipsis quare in alienis detineantur negotiis; cur rei publicae munere impediuntur, quo setius suis rebus et commodis servire possint; cur in certa verba iurent; cur certo tempore conveniant, cur certo discedant, nihil quisquam afferat causae, quo minus frequenter operam rei publicae det, nisi quae causa in lege excepta sit; an se legibus obstrictos in tantis molestiis esse aequum censeant, adversarios nostros leges negligere concedant; deinde item quaerere ab iudicibus, si eius rei 133 propter quam se reus contra legem fecisse dicat, exceptionem ipse in lege ascribat, passurine sint; hoc<sup>1</sup> quod faciat indignius et impudentius esse quam si ascribat; age porro, quid, si ipsi vellent iudices ascribere, passurusne sit populus? atque hoc esse indignius, quam rem verbo et litteris mutare non possint, eam re ipsa et iudicio maximo commu- 134 tare; deinde indignum esse de lege aliquid derogari

<sup>1</sup> Before hoc the MSS. have postea; bracketed by Kayser.

---

* I translate concedant as if it were concedere, which would make a more logical sentence.

principles which enable judges to give judgement and the rest of the citizens to live will be unsettled 132 if once they depart from the law; for the judges will have no rule to follow if they depart from the letter of the law, nor will they have any means of winning the approval of others to their decision which has been made contrary to the law, and other citizens will not know what to do if every one regulates all his affairs according to his own ideas or any whim that strikes his mind or fancy, and not according to the ordinances common to the whole state. And then he may make an appeal to the judges' own interest, asking them why they spend their time over other people's business; why they let public duties prevent them from serving their own interest and advantage; why they swear a precise and definite oath; why they assemble at a fixed time and leave at a fixed time, and no one offers any excuse for not serving the state frequently except such excuse as is particularly stated in the law. Do they think it fair that they should be 133 bound by law in so many annoying details, and allow <sup>a</sup> our opponents to violate the laws? Then he might ask the judges another question, whether they would permit the defendant to write into the law as an exception the excuse for which he says he acted contrary to law; and that what he is doing is bolder and more shameful than adding to the law. Or to go one step further, if the judges should desire to add a provision to the law on their own authority, would the people permit it? But it is bolder to alter actually by the weight of their decision what they cannot alter by changing the 134 written words of the law. Then it may be urged aut legem abrogari aut aliqua ex parte commutari, cum populo cognoscendi et probandi aut improbandi potestas nulla fiat; hoc ipsis iudicibus invidiosissimum futurum; non hunc locum esse neque hoc tempus legum corrigendarum; apud populum haec et per populum agi convenire; quodsi nunc id agant, velle se scire qui lator sit, qui sint accepturi; se factiones videre et dissuadere velle; quodsi haec cum summe inutilia tum multo turpissima sint, legem, cui cuimodi sit, in praesentia conservari ab iudicibus, post, si displiceat, a populo corrigi convenire; deinde, si scriptum non exstaret, magno opere quaereremus neque isti, ne si extra periculum quidem esset, crederemus; nunc cum scriptum sit, amentiam esse eius qui <sup>1</sup> peccarit potius quam legis ipsius verba cognoscere. His et huiusmodi rationibus ostenditur causam extra scriptum accipi non oportere.

135 XLVI. Secunda pars est, in qua est ostendendum, si in ceteris legibus oporteat, in hac non oportere. Hoc demonstrabitur, si lex aut ad res maximas, utilissimas, honestissimas, religiosissimas videbitur pertinere; aut inutile aut turpe aut nefas esse tali in re non diligentissime legi obtemperare; aut ita that it is improper to repeal a law in part or in whole or to change any provision when the people have no opportunity to examine the matter and approve or disapprove; that such conduct is certain to bring the judges into ill repute; that this is not the place nor the time to correct the laws; such action should be taken before the people and by the people; that if they are trying to do that now, he would like to know who is proposing the amendment, and what body is going to accept it; that he sees party strife arising and wishes to resist it. In view of this, he will urge that if the proposals of the opposing counsel are not only highly disadvantageous but also very scandalous, the judges ought for the present to leave the law unchanged, whatever its character may be, and that later it may properly be amended by the people if they disapprove of it. Besides, if there were no written document we should be at great pains to get one, and we should not believe the defendant even if he were not in peril; but now since there is a written law it is silly to accept the argument of the man who has broken it rather than the plain words of the law. By these and similar arguments it is shown that an excuse ought not to be accepted contrary to the letter of the law.

<sup>1</sup> eius rei C.

135 XLVI. The second head is that under which it is made plain that departure from the letter of the law though permissible under other laws, is not permissible in this case. This may be done if it is made to appear that the law has to do with matters of the highest importance, advantage, honour and sanctity; that it is inexpedient, or base or criminal not to follow the law most exactly in such a case. Or lex diligenter perscripta demonstrabitur, ita cautum una quaque de re, ita quod oportuerit exceptum, ut minime conveniat quicquam in tam diligenti scriptura praeteritum arbitrari.

CICERO

136 Tertius est locus ei qui pro scripto dicet maxime necessarius, per quem oportet ostendat, si conveniat causam contra scriptum accipi, eam tamen minime oportere quae ab adversariis afferatur. Qui locus idcirco est huic necessarius, quod semper is qui contra scriptum dicet aequitatis aliquid afferat oportet. Nam summa impudentia sit eum qui contra quam scriptum sit aliquid probare velit non aequitatis praesidio id facere conari. Si quid igitur ex hac ipsa<sup>1</sup> accusator derogat, omnibus partibus iustius et probabilius accusare videatur. Nam superior oratio hoc omnis faciebat ut, iudices etiamsi nollent, necesse esset; haec autem, etiamsi
137 necesse non esset, ut vellent contra iudicare. Id autem fiet, si, quibus ex locis culpa demonstrabitur esse in eo qui comparatione aut remotione aut relatione criminis aut concessionis partibus se defendet—de quibus ante, ut potuimus, diligenter perscripsimus—ex eis locis,<sup>2</sup> quae res postulabit ad causam adversariorum improbandam transferemus, aut causae et rationes afferentur quare et quo consilio ita sit in lege aut in testamento scriptum, ut sententia quoque et voluntate scriptoris, non ipsa solum scrip-

<sup>1</sup> ipsa quippiam J.

<sup>2</sup> ex eis locis Weidner: si de his i: si his M: de his J: si de iis Ströbel.

it may be shown that the law was so carefully framed, that such provision was made for every situation and proper exceptions made, that it is not at all fitting to think that anything was omitted from a document drawn up with such care.

The third head is highly important for one who is speaking in favour of the letter; in this he should show that, if it is proper to accept an excuse contrary to the letter of the law, the excuse offered by the opponents should by no means be admitted.

136 This topic is indispensable for him because one who is speaking against the letter ought always to adduce some principle of equity. For it would be the height of impudence for one who wishes to gain approval for some act contrary to the letter of the law, not to attempt to gain his point with the help of equity. If, then, the prosecutor can weaken this argument at all, his accusation would seem in every way more just and plausible. For all the earlier part of his speech was devoted to making conviction necessary even if the judges were unwilling: but this, to making them willing to convict even if it

137 is unnecessary. This will be done if the topics which prove that guilt attaches to someone who defends himself by the arguments of comparison, or shifting the charge or retort of the accusation or confession and avoidance concerning which we have given rules as carefully as we could above,<sup>a</sup>—if such of these topics as the case demands are taken over to attack the excuse offered by our opponents. Or if causes and reasons are given why and with what design it was so written in the law or the will, in order that our case may seem to be supported by the intent and wish of the writer and not merely tura causa confirmata esse videatur, aut aliis quoque constitutionibus factum coarguetur.

CICERO

- 138 XLVII. Contra scriptum autem qui dicet, primum inducet eum locum per quem aequitas causae demonstratur; aut ostendet quo animo, quo consilio, qua de causa fecerit; et, quamcumque causam assumet, assumptionis partibus se defendet de quibus ante dictum est. Atque in hoc loco cum diutius commoratus sui facti rationem et aequitatem causae exornaverit, tum ex his locis fere contra adversarios dicet oportere causas accipi. Demonstrabit nullam esse legem quae aliquam rem inutilem aut iniquam fieri velit; omnia supplicia quae ab legibus proficiscantur culpae ac malitiae vindicandae causa
- 139 constituta esse; scriptorem ipsum, si existat, factum hoc probaturum et idem ipsum, si ei talis res accidisset, facturum fuisse; ea re legis scriptorem certo ex ordine iudices certa aetate praeditos constituisse, ut essent, non qui scriptum suum recitarent, quod quivis puer facere posset, sed qui cogitatione assequi possent et voluntatem interpretari; deinde illum scriptorem, si scripta sua stultis hominibus et barbaris iudicibus committeret, omnia summa diligentia perscripturum fuisse; nunc vero, quod intellexeret quales viri res iudicaturi essent, idcirco eum quae perspicua videret esse non ascripsisse; neque enim vos scripti sui recitatores, sed voluntatis interpretes fore putavit.

---

* §§ 71-109.

<sup>b</sup> With this sudden change from indirect to direct statement compare § 131 and note.

by the written word. Or if the crime is proved without a doubt by the use of other issues.

138 XLVII. On the other hand the speaker who is attacking the letter will first of all present the argument to prove the equity of making an excuse; or he will show with what intention or design he did what he did, and for what reason; and whatever excuse he adopts he will make his defence with the assumptive arguments which we have discussed above.<sup>a</sup> When he has spent some time on this topic and put a fair front on the reason for his act and the justice of his excuse, he will then use the following arguments against his opponents to prove that excuses ought to be accepted. He will point out that there is no law which requires the performance of any inexpedient or unjust act; that all penalties provided by law were established to punish wickedness and 139 vice; that the author of the law himself, if he should rise from the dead, would approve this act, and would have done the same if he had been in a similar situation; that the reason why the author of the law provided for judges from a certain class and of a certain age was that there might be a judicial body able not only to read his law, which any child could do, but to comprehend it with the mind and interpret his intentions; again, that if the law-maker had been giving his law to ignorant men and barbarous judges, he would have written everything out in precise detail; but as he knew the quality of the men who were to judge the cases, he did not add what he saw was perfectly plain. For he did not think of you as clerks to read his law aloud in court, but as interpreters of his wishes.<sup>b</sup>

140 Postea quaeret<sup>1</sup> ab adversariis: Quid, si hoc fecisset? Quid, si hoc accidisset? Eorum aliquid, in quibus aut causa sit honestissima aut necessitudo certissima, tamenne accusaretis? Atqui lex<sup>2</sup> nusquam excepit; non ergo omnia scriptis, sed quaedam, quae perspicua sint, tacitis exceptionibus caveri; deinde nullam rem neque legibus neque scriptura ulla, denique ne in sermone quidem cotidiano atque imperiis domesticis recte posse administrari si unus quisque velit verba spectare et non ad voluntatem eius qui ea verba habuerit accedere;

141 XLVIII. deinde ex utilitatis et honestatis partibus ostendere quam inutile aut quam turpe sit id quod adversarii dicant fieri oportuisse aut oportere, et id quod nos fecerimus aut postulemus, quam utile aut quam honestum sit; deinde leges nobis caras esse non propter litteras, quae tenues et obscurae notae sint voluntatis, sed propter earum rerum quibus descriptum est utilitatem et eorum qui scripserint sapientiam et diligentiam; postea, quid sit lex describere, ut ea videatur in sententiis, non in verbis consistere; et iudex is videatur legi obtemperare qui sententiam eius, non qui scripturam sequatur; deinde quam indignum sit eodem affici supplicio eum qui propter aliquod scelus et audaciam contra leges fecerit, et eum qui honesta aut necessaria de causa non ab sententia, sed ab litteris legis recesserit;

<sup>1</sup> quaeret Schuetz: quaerere C.

<sup>2</sup> hoc lex J.

- 140 After that he will ask his opponents: "Suppose that I had done so and so; suppose that so and so had happened—mentioning any of those acts for which there is a most honourable excuse or a certain plea of necessity—would you still accuse me?" But the law makes no exception. Therefore all cases are not covered by exceptions expressed in writing, but some that are self-evident are covered by exceptions understood but not expressed. Then it may be urged that nothing at all could be done either with laws or with any instrument in writing, or even about our every day conversation and the orders issued in our own homes, if every one wished to consider only the literal meaning of the words and not to follow the intentions of the speaker.
- 141 XLVIII. Then from the principles of advantage and honour he may show how inexpedient and base is the course of conduct which the opponents say we were or are bound to follow, and how advantageous and honourable is our act or request. Then, that we value the laws not because of the words, which are but faint and feeble indications of intention, but because of the advantage of the principles which they embody, and the wisdom and care of the law-makers. Next he may set forth the true nature of law, that it may be shown to consist of meanings, not of words, and that the judge who follows the meaning may seem to comply with law more than one who follows the letter. Again, how harsh it is to visit the same punishment on one who from criminal audacity has violated the laws, and on one who from some honourable and necessary cause has departed from the letter but not from the intent of the law. By these and similar arguments he will prove that on atque his et huiusmodi rationibus et accipi causam et in hac lege accipi et eam causam quam ipse afferat oportere accipi demonstrabit.

CICERO

- 142 Et quemadmodum ei dicebamus qui ab scripto diceret hoc fore utilissimum, si quid de aequitate ea quae cum adversario staret derogasset, sic huic qui contra scriptum dicit plurimum proderit, ex ipsa scriptura aliquid ad suam causam convertere aut ambigue aliquid scriptum ostendere; deinde ex illo ambiguo eam partem quae sibi prosit defendere aut verbi definitionem inducere et illius verbi vim quo urgeri videatur ad suae causae commodum traducere aut ex scripto non scriptum aliquid inducere
- 143 per ratiocinationem, de qua post dicemus. Quaecumque autem in re, quamvis leviter probabili, scripto ipso defenderit, cum aequitate causa abundabit, necessario multum proficiet, ideo quod, si id quo nititur adversariorum causa subduxerit, omnem eius illam vim et acrimoniam lenierit ac diluerit.

Loci autem communes ceteris ex assumptionis partibus in utramque partem convenient. Praeterea autem eius qui a scripto dicit: leges ex se, non ex eius qui contra commiserit utilitate spectari oportere et legibus antiquius haberi nihil oportere. Contra general principles an excuse ought sometimes to be accepted, that it ought to be accepted under this law, and that the excuse which he offers for his own actions ought to be accepted.

- 142 And just as we said that the speaker who is upholding the letter of the law would find it most useful to lessen in some degree the justice or equity which supports his opponent's claim, so the speaker who opposes the letter will profit greatly by converting something in the written document to his own case or by showing that it contains some ambiguity; then on the basis of that ambiguity he may defend the passage which helps his case, or introduce a definition of some word and interpret the meaning of the word which seems to bear hard upon him, so as to support his own case, or develop from the written word something that is not expressed; this is the method of reasoning from
- 143 analogy, which we shall discuss below.<sup>a</sup> In a word, in whatever way, however slightly plausible it may be, he can defend himself by appealing to the letter of the law, when his case is amply supported by abstract justice, he will profit greatly, because if he can remove the foundation on which his opponents' case rests, he will lessen and mitigate all its force and effectiveness.

Common topics from the other parts of the assumptive issue will suit both sides. In addition, however, the speaker who defends the letter of the law may use the following: laws ought to be judged with reference to their own intrinsic merits and not to the advantage of the transgressor; and that nothing should be esteemed more highly than the laws. Against the letter of the law: the value of scriptum : leges in consilio scriptoris et utilitate communi, non in verbis consistere ; quam indignum sit aequitatem litteris urgueri, quae voluntate eius qui scripserit defendatur.

CICERO

144 XLIX. Ex contrariis autem legibus controversia nascitur cum inter se duae videntur leges aut plures discrepare, hoc modo : Lex : Qui tyrannum occiderit, Olympionicarum praemia capito et quam volet sibi rem a magistratu deposcito et magistratus ei concedito. Et altera lex : Tyranno occiso quinque eius proximos cognatione magistratus necato. Alexandrum, qui apud Pheraeos in Thessalia tyrannidem occuparat, uxor sua, cui Thebe nomen fuit, noctu, cum simul cubaret, occidit. Haec filium suum, quem ex tyranno habebat, sibi in praemi loco deposcit. Sunt qui ex lege occidi puerum dicant oportere. Res in iudicio est.

In hoc genere utramque in partem idem loci atque eadem praecepta convenient, ideo quod uterque suam legem confirmare, contrariam in-
145 firmare debet. Primum igitur leges oportet contendere considerando, utra lex ad maiores, hoc est, ad utiliores, ad honestiores ac magis necessarias res pertineat ; ex quo conficitur, ut, si leges duae aut si plures erunt, quotquot erunt,<sup>1</sup> conservari non possint, quia discrepent inter se, sed<sup>2</sup> ea maxime conservanda putetur, quae ad maximas res

<sup>1</sup> quotquot erunt R : aut quotquot erunt C.

<sup>2</sup> se sed M : se tamen P<sup>s</sup> : se J.

---

* According to Xenophon, Hell. VI. iv, 35-37, Alexander was killed by his wife's brothers with her connivance, and she law depends on the intention of the legislator and on the common weal, not on words: how unfair it is that justice and equity, which it is the intention of the legislator to protect, should be hindered by words.

144 XLIX. A controversy arises from a conflict of laws when two or more laws seem to disagree; the following is an example. Law: A tyrannicide shall receive the reward commonly given to victors at the Olympic games and he shall ask the magistrate for whatever he wishes, and the magistrate shall give it to him. Another law: When a tyrant has been slain the magistrate shall execute his five nearest blood-relations. Alexander, who had set himself up as tyrant at Pherae in Thessaly, was killed by his wife, named Thebe, at night, when he was in bed with her. She demands as a reward her son whom she had by the tyrant. Some say that the boy ought to be executed according to law. The case is brought before a court.<sup>a</sup>

In this kind of case the same topics and the same rules will suit each side because each litigant will be under the necessity of supporting his own law and attacking the one that conflicts. In the first 145 place, then, one should compare the laws by considering which one deals with the most important matters, that is, the most expedient, honourable or necessary. The conclusion from this is that if two laws (or whatever number there may be if more than two) cannot be kept because they are at variance, the one is thought to have the greatest claim to be upheld which has reference to the greatest matters.

had no son. History has been altered to make a good illustration for the rhetorician.

CICERO

pertinere videatur; deinde, utra lex posterius lata sit; nam postrema quaeque gravissima est; deinde, utra lex iubeat aliquid, utra permittat; nam id quod imperatur, necessarium, illud quod permittitur, voluntarium est; deinde, in utra lege, si non obtemporatum sit, poena adiciatur aut in utra maior
146 poena statuatur; nam maxime conservanda est ea quae diligentissime sancta est; deinde, utra lex iubeat, utra vetet; nam saepe ea quae vetat, quasi exceptione quadam corrigere videtur<sup>1</sup> illam quae iubet; deinde, utra lex de genere omni, utra de parte quadam; utra communiter in plures, utra in aliquam certam rem scripta videatur; nam quae in partem aliquam et quae in certam quandam rem scripta est, propius ad causam accedere videtur et ad iudicium magis pertinere; deinde, ex lege utrum statim fieri necesse sit, utrum habeat aliquam moram et sustentationem; nam id quod statim
147 faciendum sit perfici prius oportet; deinde operam dare, ut sua lex ipso scripto videatur niti, contraria autem aut per ambiguum aut per ratiocinationem aut per definitionem induci, cum<sup>2</sup> sanctius et firmitus id videatur esse quod apertius scriptum sit; deinde suae legis ad scriptum ipsum sententiam quoque adiungere, contrariam legem item ad aliam sententiam transducere, ut, si fieri poterit, ne discrepare quidem videantur inter se; postremo facere, si causa facultatem dabit, ut nostra ratione

<sup>1</sup> videtur PRi: videatur C.

<sup>2</sup> cum added by Stroux.

In the second place, he should consider which law was passed last, for the latest law is always the most important; then which law enjoins some action and which permits, for that which is commanded is necessary, that which is permitted is optional; then in which law a penalty is prescribed for non-compliance or which law has the greater penalty, 146 for that law has the highest claim to be upheld in which the penalties are most carefully prescribed; then which law enjoins and which prohibits, for frequently the law that prohibits seems to have amended the law that enjoins by making an exception; then, which law applies to a whole class, and which to a subdivision; which seems to have been framed with reference to many cases in common, and which to one certain case, for the law that is framed to apply to some part or to some particular situation seems to get closer to the case and have a closer relation to the trial; whether in one case the law enjoins immediate action, and in the other admits of some postponement or delay, for what must be done immediately should 147 be done first. Again, the litigant should be at some pains to show that his law rests on the precise language in which it is drawn, whereas the contradictory law is brought in through an ambiguity or by reasoning by analogy, or by definition, since what is plainly stated seems to be stronger and more binding. Again, he should show that in his law the intent is at one with the letter, and then prove that the other law has a different intent, so that, if possible, it may appear that the two do not even disagree. Finally, if the circumstances of the case permit, we should make it clear that on utraque lex conservari videatur, adversariorum ratione altera sit necessario neglegenda.

CICERO

Locos autem communes et quos ipsa causa det videre oportebit et ex utilitatis et ex honestatis amplissimis partibus sumere demonstrantem per amplificationem ad utram potius legem accedere oporteat.

- 148 L. Ex ratiocinatione nascitur controversia cum ex eo quod uspiam est ad id quod nusquam scriptum est venit, hoc pacto: Lex: Si furiosus est, agnatum gentiliumque in eo pecuniaque eius potestas esto. Et lex: Paterfamilias uti super familia pecuniaque sua legassit, ita ius esto. Et lex: Si
- 149 paterfamilias intestato moritur, familia pecuniaque eius agnatum gentiliumque esto. Quidam iudicatus est parentem occidisse et statim, quod effugiendi potestas non fuit, lignae soleae in pedes inditae sunt; os autem obvolutum est folliculo et praeligatum; deinde est in carcerem deductus, ut ibi esset tantisper, dum culleus, in quem coniectus in profluentem deferretur, compararetur. Interea quidam eius familiares in carcerem tabulas afferunt et testes adducunt; heredes, quos ipse iubet, scribunt; tabulae obsignantur. De illo post supplicium sumitur. Inter eos qui heredes in tabulis scripti sunt, et inter agnatos de hereditate controversia est.

---

<sup>a</sup> Literally, ratiocination or reasoning. The method of stretching a statute to cover an analogous case is common in modern law, but there seems to be no technical term to denote it. A lawyer would probably say that the case "comes within the purview of the statute."

<sup>b</sup> Agnates are near kin on the male side, gentiles all those bearing the same "gentile" name, e.g. Cornelius, Julius.

<sup>c</sup> "Household" here means slaves, and "property" inanimate objects.

our principles both laws are upheld, and on the opponents' one must be disregarded.

It will be well to consider the common topics offered by the case itself and to borrow some from the most general topics of advantage and honour, pointing out in passages of amplification to which law adherence should be given.

- 148 L. A controversy arises from reasoning from analogy<sup>a</sup> when from a statement written somewhere one arrives at a principle which is written nowhere after this fashion: there is a law, If a man is mad, his agnates and gentiles<sup>b</sup> shall have power over him and his property; and another law: In whatever way a head of a household has made a will concerning his household and property,<sup>c</sup> so let it be; and another law: If a head of a household dies intestate, his household and property shall
- 149 go to the agnates and gentiles. A certain man was convicted of murdering a parent,<sup>d</sup> and because there was no chance of his avoiding the penalty, the wooden sandals were immediately put on his feet, his head was covered and tied up with a bag and he was then taken to prison to stay there until they could get ready the sack into which he was to be placed before being thrown into the river.<sup>e</sup> Meanwhile some of his friends bring tablets and witnesses to the prison, they write a will naming as heirs those whom he wished; the tablets are sealed. Later he was executed. A controversy about succession arose between the heirs that were

<sup>a</sup> Auctor ad Her. in citing the same case (I. 23) says that he killed his mother.

<sup>e</sup> The parricide was sewn in a sack with a dog, a cock, a viper and a monkey, and thrown into the river, or sea.

CICERO

Hic certa lex, quae testamenti faciendi eis qui in eo loco sint adimat potestatem, nulla profertur. Ex ceteris legibus et quae hunc ipsum supplicio eiusmodi afficiunt et quae ad testamenti faciendi potestatem pertinent, per ratiocinationem veniendum est ad eiusmodi rationem, ut quaeratur, habueritne testamenti faciendi potestatem.

- 150 Locos autem communes in hoc genere argumentandi hos et huiusmodi quosdam esse arbitramur: primum eius scripti quod proferas laudationem et confirmationem; deinde eius rei qua de quaeratur cum eo de quo constet collationem eiusmodi, ut id de quo quaeritur ei, de qua constet, simile esse videatur; postea admirationem per contentionem, qui fieri possit ut qui hoc aequum esse concedat illud neget, quod aut aequius aut eodem sit in genere; deinde idcirco de hac re nihil esse scriptum quod, cum de illa esset scriptum, de hac is qui scribebat dubitaturum neminem arbitratus sit;
- 151 postea multis in legibus multa praeterita esse, quae idcirco praeterita nemo arbitretur, quod ex ceteris de quibus scriptum sit intellegi possint; deinde aequitas rei demonstranda est, ut in iuridicali absoluta.

Contra autem qui dicet, similitudinem infirmare debet; quod faciet, si demonstrabit illud, quod named in the will, and the agnates. In this case no law is offered which definitely deprives those in such a situation of testamentary capacity. But on the basis of other laws, both those which visit a penalty of this sort on the man, and those which relate to testamentary capacity, one must come by reasoning from analogy to a consideration of the question whether or not he possessed testamentary capacity.

150 As for topics, we are of the opinion that in this style of argument the following and others of similar nature are used: first, praise and support of the law which you quote; then a comparison of the circumstances in question with the accepted principles of the law in order to show the similarity between the circumstances in question and the established principle; then comparing the two cases the speaker will wonder how it can be that one who grants that one is fair, should deny that the other is, which as a matter of fact is just as fair or fairer. Then he may argue that no rule was laid down for this case, because when the rule was made for the other, the author of the law thought that no one would 151 have any hesitation about this case; furthermore, that many provisions have been omitted in many laws, but nobody thinks that they have been omitted, because they can be inferred from the other cases about which rules have been laid down. Finally, he should point out the fairness of his position, as is done in the absolute subdivision of the equitable issue.

The litigant who is opposing the extension of the law will have to attack the similarity of the two cases, which he will do if he points out that the cases conferatur, diversum esse genere, natura, vi, magnitudine, tempore, loco, persona, opinione; si, quo in numero illud quod per similitudinem afferetur, et quo in loco illud cuius causa afferetur, haberi conveniat, ostendetur; deinde, quid res cum re differat, demonstrabitur, ut non idem videatur de 152 utraque existimari oportere. Ac, si ipse quoque poterit ratiocinationibus uti, isdem rationibus, quibus ante praedictum est, utetur; si non poterit, negabit oportere quicquam, nisi quod scriptum sit, considerare; multas de similibus rebus et in unam quamque rem tamen singulas esse leges; omnia posse inter se vel similia vel dissimilia demonstrari.

Loci communes: a ratiocinatione, oportere coniectura ex eo quod scriptum sit ad id quod non sit scriptum pervenire; et neminem posse omnes res per scripturam amplecti, sed eum commodissime scribere qui curet ut quaedam ex quibusdam intellegantur;
 153 contra ratiocinationem huiusmodi: coniecturam divinationem esse et stulti scriptoris esse non posse omnibus de rebus cavere quibus velit.

LI. Definitio est cum in scripto verbum aliquod est positum cuius de vi quaeritur, hoc modo: Lex: Qui in adversa tempestate navem reliquerint, omnia amittunto; eorum navis et onera sunt qui in nave remanserint. Duo quidam, cum iam in alto navigarent, et cum eorum alterius navis, alterius onus esset, naufragum quendam natantem et manus ad se tendentem animum adverterunt; misericordia commoti navem ad eum applicarunt, hominem ad

---

* Cf. I. 82 note c.

152 compared differ in kind, nature, meaning, importance, time, place, person or repute,<sup>a</sup> and in particular, if it is shown in what class it is proper to put that which is cited as similar, and in what group to put that which the comparison is intended to illumine so that it may seem that it is not proper to take the same position in regard to both. And if he too can use reasoning by analogy, he may adopt the same arguments that have been set forth above; if he cannot, he will deny that anything should be considered except the letter of the law; saying that there are many laws about similar cases, but only one law applicable to any one case; and that all things can be proved to be like or unlike.

Common topics: in favour of reasoning by analogy, that it is proper to proceed by inference from what is written to what is not written, and that no one can include every case in one statute but that he makes the most suitable law who takes care that some things may be understood from certain others.

153 Against reasoning by analogy as follows: that inference is no better than divination, and that it is a stupid lawmaker who cannot provide for every case that he desires.

LI. Definition is used in a case in which a document contains some word the meaning of which is questioned. The following is an instance. Law: "Whoever abandons ship in time of storm, shall lose everything; the ship and the cargo shall belong to those who have remained on the ship." Two men were sailing on the high seas; one owned the ship, the other, the cargo. They caught sight of a shipwrecked mariner swimming and begging for help. Taking pity on him they brought the ship

CICERO

- 154 se sustulerunt. Postea aliquanto ipsos quoque tempestas vehementius iactare coepit, usque adeo, ut dominus navis, cum idem gubernator esset, in scapham confugeret et inde funiculo qui a puppi religatus scapham annexam trahebat navi quoad posset moderaretur, ille autem cuius merces erant in gladium in navi ibidem incumberet. Hic ille naufragus ad gubernaculum accessit et navi, quod potuit, est opitulatus. Sedatis autem fluctibus et tempestate iam commutata navis in portum pervehitur. Ille autem, qui in gladium incubuerat, leviter saucius facile ex vulnere est recreatus. Navem cum onere horum trium suam quisque esse dicit. Hic omnes scripto ad causam accedunt et ex nominis vi nascitur controversia. Nam et relinquere navem et remanere in navi, denique navis ipsa quid sit, definitionibus quaeretur. Isdem autem ex locis omnibus quibus definitiva constitutio tractabitur.
- 155 Nunc expositis eis argumentationibus quae in iudiciale causarum genus accommodantur, deinceps in deliberativum genus et demonstrativum argumentandi locos et praecepta dabimus, non quo non in aliqua constitutione omnis semper causa versetur, sed quia proprii tamen harum causarum quidam loci sunt, non a constitutione separati, sed ad fines
- 156 horum generum accommodati. Nam placet in iudiciali genere finem esse aequitatem, hoc est,

---

* This case smells of scholastic rhetoric. It is ingeniously constructed to make decision difficult; almost too ingeniously. What good could the man in the dinghy do by pulling on the tow line? The parallel case in ad Herennium I, 19 is simpler; there all abandon ship except one who is too ill to leave. The ship is saved by accident and is claimed by the sailor who did not leave because he could not. There

154 alongside and took him on board. Shortly afterward, they too, began to be tossed about by a violent storm, so violent in fact that the owner of the ship who was also the pilot, took refuge in the skiff, and from there guided the ship, as far as he could, by the line by which the skiff was towed from the stern of the vessel. The owner of the cargo then and there fell on his sword on the ship. The shipwrecked sailor took the helm and did what he could to save the ship. When the weather changed and the sea went down the ship got into port. The merchant who had fallen on his sword proved to have only a slight wound and made a quick recovery. Each of the three claims the ship and cargo.<sup>a</sup> In this instance all come into court relying on the letter of the law, and the controversy arises over the meaning of words. For they will seek to define "abandon ship" and "remain on ship" and finally "ship" itself. The case will be argued by using the same topics that apply to the issue of definition.<sup>b</sup>

155 Now that I have explained the forms of argumentation that fit the forensic type of speech, I shall next give the topics and the rules for the presentation of arguments in the deliberative and epideictic types. It is not that every speech does not always turn on some constitutio (or issue), but there are certain topics that are peculiar to these speeches; they are not distinct from the "issues," but are particularly appropriate to the ends proposed for these types of speech. For example, it is generally is another variant form of the story in Hermogenes (II, 141, 11 Sp.).

156 agreed that the end in the forensic type is equity,

<sup>a</sup> Above, §§ 52-6.

CICERO

partem quandam honestatis. In deliberativo autem Aristoteli placet utilitatem, nobis et honestatem et utilitatem; in demonstrativo, honestatem. Quare in<sup>1</sup> quoque genere causae quaedam argumentationes communiter ac similiter tractabuntur, quaedam separatius ad finem quo referri omnem orationem oportet adiungentur. Atque unius cuiusque constitutionis exemplum supponere non gravaremur, nisi illud videremus, quemadmodum res obscurae dicendo fierent apertiores sic res apertas obscuriores fieri oratione.

Nunc ad deliberationis praecepta pergamus.

157 LII. Rerum expetendarum tria genera sunt; par autem numerus vitandarum ex contraria parte. Nam est quiddam quod sua vi nos alliciat ad sese, non emolumento captans aliquo, sed trahens sua dignitate, quod genus virtus, scientia, veritas. Est aliud autem non propter suam vim et naturam, sed propter fructum atque utilitatem petendum; quod genus pecunia est. Est porro quiddam ex horum partibus iunctum, quod et sua vi et dignitate nos illectos ducit et prae se quandam gerit utilitatem, quo magis expetatur, ut amicitia, bona existimatio.

158 Atque ex his horum contraria facile, tacentibus nobis, intellegentur. Sed ut expeditius ratio tradatur, ea quae posuimus brevi nominabuntur. Nam in primo genere quae sunt honesta appellabuntur; quae autem in secundo, utilia. Haec autem tertia,

<sup>1</sup> After in the MSS. have hoc: bracketed by Lambinus.

i.e. a subdivision of the larger topic of "honour." In the deliberative type, however, Aristotle accepts advantage as the end, but I prefer both honour and advantage. In the epideictic speech it is honour alone. Therefore certain forms of argument will be handled in the same way that is common to every kind of speech, but others will have a distinct reference to the end to which the whole speech should tend. And I should not hesitate to give an example of each "issue" if I did not see that just as obscure problems are cleared up by discussion, so plain cases can be obscured by too much language.

Now let us proceed to the rules for deliberative
 157 oratory. LII. There are three kinds of things to be sought, and on the opposite side an equal number to be avoided. There is, namely, something which draws us to it by its intrinsic merit, not winning us by any prospect of gain, but attracting us by its own worth; to this class belong virtue, knowledge and truth. But there is something else that is to be sought not because of its own merit and natural goodness, but because of some profit or advantage to be derived from it. Money is in this class. There is, furthermore, something which unites qualities from both these classes; by its own merit and worth it entices us and leads us on, and also holds out to us a prospect of some advantage to induce us to seek it more eagerly. Examples are friendship and a good reputation. And these will easily suggest their opposites without our saying more.
 158 But that the principle may be stated more concisely, we shall give them names in a few words. The things in the first class will be called honourable, those in the second, advantageous. Because the quia partem honestatis continent et quia maior est vis honestatis, iuncta esse omnino et duplici genere intelleguntur, sed in meliorem partem vocabuli conferantur et honesta nominentur. Ex his illud conficitur ut petendarum rerum partes sint honestas et utilitas, vitandarum turpitudine et inutilitas. His igitur duabus rebus res duae grandes sunt attributae, necessitudo et affectio; quarum altera ex vi, altera ex re et personis consideratur. De utraque post apertius perscribemus; nunc honestatis rationes primum explicemus.

CICERO

159 LIII. Quod aut totum aut aliqua ex parte propter se petitur, honestum nominabimus. Quare, cum eius duae partes sint, quarum altera simplex, altera iuncta sit, simplicem prius consideremus. Est igitur in eo genere omnes res una vi atque uno nomine amplexa virtus. Nam virtus est animi habitus naturae modo atque rationi consentaneus. Quamobrem omnibus eius partibus cognitis tota vis erit simplicis honestatis considerata. Habet igitur partes quattuor: prudentiam, iustitiam, fortitudinem, temperantiam.

160 Prudentia est rerum bonarum et malarum neutrarumque scientia. Partes eius: memoria, intelligentia, providentia. Memoria est per quam animus repetit illa quae fuerunt; intelligentia, per quam ea perspicit quae sunt; providentia, per quam futurum aliquid videtur ante quam factum est.

---

<sup>a</sup> "Affectio" is used in the older philosophical meaning of "a temporary or non-essential state, condition or relation of anything."

<sup>b</sup> Below, §§ 170-5.

<sup>c</sup> Here, as in many other passages, honestum is used to translate the Greek καλόν, and denotes "honour" in a broad sense; "moral beauty" might be a more exact rendering.

third group possesses some of the characteristics of honour, and because honour is a higher quality, we may apply the better term to them and call them honourable, although it is understood that they are undoubtedly complex and belong to both groups. From this it follows that honour and advantage are the qualities of things to be sought, and baseness and disadvantage, of things to be avoided. These two classes—things to be sought and things to be avoided—are related to two important circumstances—necessity and affection.<sup>a</sup> Necessity is considered with reference to force, and affection with reference to events and persons. We shall write at length with somewhat more detail about both later in the book.<sup>b</sup> Now let us explain the nature of what is honourable.

159 LIII. We shall call honourable<sup>c</sup> anything that is sought wholly or partly for its own sake. Now, since it has two divisions, one simple and the other complex, let us consider the simple one first. Everything in this class is embraced in one meaning and under one name, virtue. Virtue may be defined as a habit of mind in harmony with reason and the order of nature. Therefore when we have become acquainted with all its parts we shall have considered the full scope of honour, pure and simple. It has four parts: wisdom, justice, courage, temperance.

160 Wisdom is the knowledge of what is good, what is bad and what is neither good nor bad. Its parts are memory, intelligence, and foresight. Memory is the faculty by which the mind recalls what has happened. Intelligence is the faculty by which it ascertains what is. Foresight is the faculty by which it is seen that something is going to occur before it occurs.

CICERO

Iustitia est habitus animi communi utilitate conservata suam cuique tribuens dignitatem. Eius initium est ab natura profectum; deinde quaedam in consuetudinem ex utilitatis ratione venerunt; postea res et ab natura profectas et ab consuetudine 161 probatas legum metus et religio sanxit. Naturae ius est quod non opinio genuit, sed quaedam in natura vis iniecit, ut religionem, pietatem, gratiam, vindicationem, observantiam, veritatem. Religio est, quae superioris cuiusdam naturae, quam divinam vocant, curam caerimoniamque affert; pietas, per quam sanguine coniunctis patriaeque benivolum officium et diligens tribuitur cultus; gratia, in qua amicitiarum et officiorum alterius memoria et remunerandi voluntas continetur; vindicatio, per quam vis aut iniuria et omnino omne, quod obfuturum est, defendendo aut ulciscendo propulsatur; observantia, per quam homines aliqua dignitate antecedentes cultu quodam et honore dignantur; veritas, per quam immutata ea quae sunt aut ante fuerunt aut futura sunt dicuntur.

162 LIV. Consuetudine ius est, quod aut leviter a natura tractum aluit et maius fecit usus, ut religionem; aut si quid eorum quae ante diximus ab natura profectum maius factum propter consuetudinem videmus, aut quod in morem vetustas vulgi approbatione perduxit; quod genus pactum est,

---

* With these definitions compare the similar but variant version given above, §§ 65-7.

Justice is a habit of mind which gives every man his desert while preserving the common advantage. Its first principles proceed from nature, then certain rules of conduct became customary by reason of their advantage; later still both the principles that proceeded from nature and those that had been approved by custom received the support of religion and the fear of the law. The law of nature is that which is not born of opinion, but implanted in us by a kind of innate instinct: it includes religion, duty, gratitude, revenge, reverence and truth. Religion is that which brings men to serve and worship a higher order of nature which they call divine. Duty is the feeling which renders kind offices and loving service to one's kin and country. Gratitude embraces the memory of friendships and of services rendered by another, and the desire to requite these benefits. Revenge is the act of defending or avenging ourselves and so warding off violence, injury or anything which is likely to be prejudicial. Reverence is the feeling by which men of distinguished position are held worthy of respect and honour. Truth is the quality by which events in the past, present or future are referred to without alteration of material fact.<sup>a</sup>

162 LIV. Customary law is either a principle that is derived only in a slight degree from nature and has been fed and strengthened by usage—religion, for example—or any of the laws that we have mentioned before which we see proceed from nature but which have been strengthened by custom, or any principle which lapse of time and public approval have made the habit or usage of the community. Among these are covenants, equity and decisions. A par, iudicatum. Pactum est quod inter aliquos convenit; par, quod in omnes aequabile est; iudicatum, de quo alicuius aut aliquorum iam sententiis constitutum est. Lege ius est, quod in eo scripto, quod populo expositum est, ut observet, continetur.

CICERO

- 163 Fortitudo est considerata periculorum susceptio et laborum perpessio. Eius partes magnificentia, fidentia, patientia, perseverantia. Magnificentia est rerum magnarum et excelsarum cum animi ampla quadam et splendida propositione cogitatio atque administratio; fidentia est per quam magnis et honestis in rebus multum ipse animus in se fiduciae certa cum spe collocavit; patientia est honestatis aut utilitatis causa rerum arduarum ac difficilium
- 164 voluntaria ac diuturna perpessio; perseverantia est in ratione bene considerata stabilis et perpetua permansio.

Temperantia est rationis in libidinem atque in alios non rectos impetus animi firma et moderata dominatio. Eius partes continentia, clementia, modestia. Continentia est per quam cupiditas consili gubernatione regitur; clementia, per quam animi temere in odium alicuius inferioris<sup>1</sup> concitati comitate retinentur; modestia, per quam pudor honesti curam et stabilem comparat auctoritatem. Atque haec omnia propter se solum, ut nihil adiungatur emolumentum, petenda sunt. Quod ut demonstretur neque ad hoc nostrum institutum pertinet et

<sup>1</sup> inferioris Lambinus : iniectionis M : invectionis P<sup>s</sup>J.

---

° The text is corrupt and the meaning uncertain. The restoration and translation which I have given is suggested covenant is an agreement between some persons. Equity is what is just and fair to all. A decision is something determined previously by the opinion of some person or persons. Statute law is what is contained in a written document which is published for the people to observe.

- 163 Courage is the quality by which one undertakes dangerous tasks and endures hardships. Its parts are highmindedness, confidence, patience, perseverance. Highmindedness consists in the contemplation and execution of great and sublime projects with a certain grandeur and magnificence of imagination. Confidence is the quality by which in important and honourable undertakings the spirit has placed great trust in itself with a resolute hope of success. Patience is a willing and sustained endurance of difficult and arduous tasks for a noble and useful end. Perseverance is a firm and abiding persistence in a well-considered plan of action.

Temperance is a firm and well-considered control exercised by the reason over lust and other improper impulses of the mind. Its parts are continence, clemency, and modesty. Continence is the control of desire by the guidance of wisdom. Clemency is a kindly and gentle restraint of spirits that have been provoked to dislike of a person of inferior rank.<sup>a</sup> Modesty is a sense of shame or decency which secures observance and firm authority for what is honourable. All these qualities are desirable for their own sake, though no profit be connected with them. To prove this is not pertinent to our present purpose nor is it consistent with the brevity by a definition in Seneca de Clementia, 2, 31. Clemency is gentleness of a superior to an inferior.

CICERO

165 a brevitate praecipienda remotum est. Propter se autem vitanda sunt non ea modo quae his contraria sunt, ut fortitudini ignavia et iustitiae iniustitia, verum etiam illa quae propinqua videntur et finitima esse, absunt autem longissime; quod genus, fidentiae contrarium est diffidentia et ea re vitium est; audacia non contrarium, sed appositum est ac propinquum et tamen vitium est. Sic uni cuique virtuti finitimum vitium reperietur, aut certo iam nomine appellatum, ut audacia, quae fidentiae, pertinacia, quae perseverantiae finitima est, superstitio, quae religioni propinqua est, aut sine ullo certo nomine. Quae omnia item uti contraria rerum bonarum in rebus vitandis reponentur.

Ac de eo quidem genere honestatis quod omni ex 166 parte propter se petitur, satis dictum est. LV. Nunc de eo in quo utilitas quoque adiungitur, quod tamen honestum vocamus, dicendum videtur. Sunt igitur multa quae nos cum dignitate tum quoque fructu suo ducunt; quo in genere est gloria, dignitas, amplitudo, amicitia. Gloria est frequens de aliquo fama cum laude; dignitas est alicuius honesta et cultu et honore et verecundia digna auctoritas; amplitudo potentiae aut maiestatis aut aliquarum copiarum magna abundantia; amicitia voluntas erga aliquem rerum bonarum illius ipsius causa quem

165 required in a text-book. On the other side the qualities to be avoided for their own sake are not only the opposites of these—as, for example, cowardice is the opposite of courage, and injustice of justice—but also those qualities which seem akin and close to these but are really far removed from them. To illustrate, diffidence is the opposite of confidence, and is therefore a vice; temerity is not opposite to courage, but borders on it and is akin to it, and yet is a vice. In a similar way each virtue will be found to have a vice bordering upon it, either one to which a definite name has become attached, as temerity which borders on courage, or stubbornness, which borders on perseverance, or superstition which is akin to religion; or one without any definite name. All of these as well as the opposites of good qualities will be classed among things to be avoided.

166 LV. Enough has been said about the kind of honourable thing that is sought entirely for its own sake. Now I think I should speak of that which is also coupled with advantage; which, nevertheless, we call honourable. There are then many things that attract us not only by their intrinsic worth but also by the advantage to be derived from them; this class includes glory, rank, influence, and friendship. Glory consists in a person's having a widespread reputation accompanied by praise. Rank is the possession of a distinguished office which merits respect, honour, and reverence. Influence is a fulness of power, dignity, or resources of some sort. Friendship is a desire to do good to some one simply for the benefit of the person whom one loves, with a requital of the feeling on his

CICERO

167 diligit cum eius pari voluntate. Hic, quia de civilibus causis loquimur, fructus ad amicitiam adiungimus ut eorum quoque causa petenda videatur; ne forte qui nos de omni amicitia dicere existimant, reprehendere incipiant. Quamquam sunt qui propter utilitatem modo petendam putant amicitiam; sunt qui propter se solum; sunt qui propter se et utilitatem. Quorum quid verissime constituatur, alius locus erit considerandi. Nunc hoc sic ad usum oratorium relinquatur, utramque propter rem amicitiam esse expetendam. Amicitiarum autem ratio, quoniam partim sunt religionibus iunctae, partim non sunt, et quia partim veteres sunt, partim novae, partim ab illorum, partim ab nostro beneficio profectae, partim utiliores, partim minus utiles, ex causarum dignitatibus, ex temporum opportunitatibus, ex officiis, ex religionibus, ex vetustatibus habebitur.

LVI. Utilitas autem aut in corpore posita est aut in extrariis rebus; quarum tamen rerum multo maxima pars ad corporis commodum revertitur, ut in re publica quaedam sunt quae, ut sic dicam, ad corpus pertinent civitatis, ut agri, portus, pecunia, classis, nautae, milites, socii, quibus rebus incolomitatem ac libertatem retinent civitates, aliae vero, quae iam quiddam magis amplum et minus necessarium conficiunt, ut urbis egregia exornatio atque amplitudo, ut quaedam excellens pecuniae magnitudo, amicitiarum ac societatum multitudo.

167 part. Since we are here discussing speeches about public issues, we associate friendship with benefits to be derived from it, so that it may seem desirable because of these as well as for its own sake. I say this that I may not perhaps be taken to task by those who think I am speaking of every kind of friendship. As a matter of fact there are some who think that friendship is to be sought solely for advantage, others, for itself alone, and others for itself and for advantage. Which opinion has the best foundation is a matter to be considered at another time. For the present let it be left thus as far as oratorical practice is concerned, that friendship is to be sought 168 for both reasons. In as much as some friendships are related to religious scruples, and some not, and some are old and some new, some arise from a kindness done to us by others, and some from our own services to them, some are more advantageous and some less, an examination of their nature will involve a consideration of the value of causes, the suitability of times and occasion, moral obligation, religious duties, and length of time.

LVI. Advantage lies either in the body or in things outside the body. By far the largest part of external advantages, however, results in advantage of the body. For example, in the state there are some things that, so to speak, pertain to the body politic, such as fields, harbours, money, a fleet, sailors, soldiers and allies—the means by which states preserve their safety and liberty—and other things contribute something grander and less necessary, such as the great size and surpassing beauty of a city, an extraordinary amount of money and a multitude of friendships and alliances.

169 Quibus rebus non illud solum conficitur ut salvae et incolumes, verum etiam ut amplae atque potentes sint civitates. Quare utilitatis duae partes videntur esse, incolumitas et potentia. Incolumitas est salutis rata atque integra conservatio; potentia est ad sua conservanda et alterius attenuanda idonearum rerum facultas. Atque in eis omnibus quae ante dicta sunt, quid fieri et quid facile fieri possit, oportet considerare. Facile id dicemus quod sine magno aut sine ullo labore, sumptu, molestia quam brevissimo tempore confici potest; posse autem fieri quod quamquam laboris, sumptus, molestiae, longinquitatis indiget atque<sup>1</sup> omnes aut plurimas aut maximas causas habet difficultatis, tamen, his susceptis difficultatibus, confieri atque ad exitum perducitur potest.

170 Quoniam ergo de honestate et de utilitate diximus, nunc restat ut de eis rebus quas his attributas esse dicebamus, necessitudine et affectione, perscribamus. LVII. Puto igitur esse hanc necessitudinem, cui nulla vi resisti potest, quo ea setius id quod facere potest perficiat, quae neque mutari neque leniri potest. Atque, ut apertius hoc sit, exemplo licet vim rei qualis et quanta sit cognoscamus. Uri posse flamma ligneam materiam necesse est. Corpus mortale aliquo tempore interire necesse est; atque ita necesse, ut vis postulat ea, quam modo describebamus, necessitudinis.<sup>2</sup> Huiusmodi necessitudines cum in dicendi rationes incident, recte necessitudines appellabuntur; sin aliquae res accident difficiles, in illa superiore, possitne fieri,

<sup>1</sup> atque M : atque aut J. •

<sup>2</sup> Atque . . . necessitudinis bracketed by Friedrich, Ströbel.

* See note on § 158.

169 These things not only make states safe and secure, but also important and powerful. Therefore, there seem to be two parts of advantage—security and power. Security is a reasoned and unbroken maintenance of safety. Power is the possession of resources sufficient for preserving one's self and weakening another. Moreover, it is proper to inquire in connexion with all these things that have been mentioned above, what can be done and what can easily be done. We shall call easy anything which can be accomplished in the shortest possible time without great or without any exertion, expense or trouble. A task is said to be possible which although it requires exertion, expense, trouble or long-continued effort and presents every reason for considering it difficult, or at least the most or greatest reasons, can nevertheless, if these difficulties are faced, be accomplished and brought to an end.

170 Now that we have discussed honour and advantage there remain to be described the qualities that go with these, namely necessity and affection.<sup>a</sup> LVII. I regard necessity as something that no force can resist and thereby one is prevented from accomplishing some possible task; and this necessity cannot be altered or alleviated. To make the matter plainer, we may use an illustration to show the nature and extent of its influence. It is necessary that anything made of wood is capable of being consumed by fire. It is necessary that a mortal body die at some time or other. And it is necessary in the way that the force of necessity, which we just now described, requires. When necessities of this sort come up in planning a speech, they are rightly called necessities; but if other matters arise that are merely difficult we

CICERO

171 quaestione considerabimus. Atque etiam hoc mihi videor videre, esse quasdam cum adiunctione necessitudines, quasdam simplices et absolutas. Nam aliter dicere solemus: "Necesse est Casilinenses se dedere Hannibali." Aliter autem: "Necesse est Casilinum venire in Hannibalis potestatem." Illic, in superiore, adiunctio est haec: "Nisi si malunt fame perire." Si enim id malunt, non est necesse; hoc inferius non item, propterea quod, sive velint Casilinenses se dedere sive famem perpeti atque ita perire, necesse est Casilinum venire in Hannibalis potestatem. Quid igitur haec perficere potest necessitudinis distributio? Prope dicam plurimum cum locus necessitudinis videbitur incurrere. Nam cum simplex erit necessitudo, nihil erit quod multa dicamus, cum eam nulla ratione lenire possimus;

172 cum autem ita necesse erit, si aliquid effugere aut adipisci velimus, tum adiunctio illa quid habeat utilitatis atque honestatis, erit considerandum. Nam si velis attendere, ita tamen ut id quaeras quod conveniat ad usum civitatis, reperias nullam esse rem quam facere necesse sit, nisi propter aliquam causam, quam adiunctionem nominamus; pariter autem esse multas res necessitatis, ad quas similis adiunctio non accedit; quod genus,<sup>1</sup> homines mortales necesse est interire, sine adiunctione; ut cibo shall consider them under the question discussed 171 above: <sup>a</sup> Can it be done? Furthermore, I seem to see that there are some necessities with qualifications and some that are simple and absolute. For example, we use the word in one sense when we say: "It is necessary for the people of Casilinum to surrender to Hannibal," but in a different sense when we say: "It is necessary for Casilinum to fall into the power of Hannibal." In the first case there is this qualification: "Unless they prefer to die of starvation." For if they prefer that, it is not necessary to surrender. But in the second statement the case is not the same, because whether the people of Casilinum choose to surrender or to face starvation and so perish, it is necessary that Casilinum fall into the power of Hannibal. What can be accomplished by such a distinction between different kinds of necessity? I might say, a great deal, when it seems likely that the subject of necessity will come up. For when the necessity is simple there is no reason for saying a great deal since it is 172 utterly impossible to modify it. When, however, we use the word necessary meaning thereby that an act is necessary if we wish to avoid or gain something, then we must consider to what extent that qualification is advantageous or honourable. For if you would observe, under condition, however, that you seek the thing that will conduce to the advantage of the state, you would find that there is nothing which must be done except for some reason which we call the qualification. In the same way there are many acts of necessity for which there is no similar qualification. In this class is the statement that mortal men must die, without qualification. It is not

<sup>1</sup> After the MSS. have ut: bracketed by Ernesti.

CICERO

173 utantur, non necesse est, nisi cum illa exceptione “ extra quam, si nolint fame perire.” Ergo, ut dico, illud quod adiungitur semper cuiusmodi sit erit considerandum. Nam omni tempore id pertinebit, ut aut ad honestatem hoc modo exponenda necessitudo sit: “Necesse est si honeste volumus vivere;” aut ad incolumitatem, hoc modo: “Necesse est si incolumes volumus esse;” aut ad commoditatem, hoc modo:
“Necesse est si sine incommodo volumus vivere.”

174 LVIII. Ac summa quidem necessitudo videtur esse honestatis; huic proxima, incolumitatis; tertia ac levissima, commoditatis; quae cum his nunquam poterit duabus contendere. Hasce autem inter se saepe necesse est comparari, ut, quamquam praestet honestas incolumitati, tamen utri potissimum consulendum sit deliberetur. Cuius rei certum quoddam praescriptum videtur in perpetuum dari posse. Nam, qua in re fieri poterit, ut, cum incolu-mitati consuluerimus, quod sit in praesentia de honestate delibatum, virtute aliquando et industria recuperetur, incolumitatis ratio videbitur habenda; cum autem id non poterit, honestatis. Ita in huiusmodi quoque re, cum incolumitati videbimur consulere, vere poterimus dicere nos honestatis rationem habere, quoniam sine incolumitate eam nullo tempore possumus adipisci. Qua in re vel concedere alteri vel ad condicionem alterius de-scendere vel in praesentia quiescere atque aliud 175 tempus exspectare oportebit, modo illud attendatur, dignane causa videatur ea quae ad utilitatem pertine-bit quare de magnificentia aut de honestate quiddam necessary for them to eat, except with the qualification, "Unless they prefer to die of starvation."

173 Therefore, as I say, the nature of the qualification must always be examined. For it will always be pertinent to the extent that the necessity has to be explained either with reference to honour in this way: "It is necessary if we wish to live honourably," or with reference to security in this way, "It is necessary if we wish to be secure," or with reference to convenience in this way, "It is necessary if we wish to live without inconvenience."

LVIII. The greatest necessity is that of doing what is honourable; next to that is the necessity of security and third and last the necessity of convenience; this can never stand comparison with 174 the other two. It is often necessary to weigh these, one against the other, so that, although honour is superior to security, it may be a question which it is preferable to follow. In this matter it seems possible to give a fixed and universal rule. For one should take thought for security in a case in which though honour is lost for the moment while consulting security, it may be recovered in the future by courage and diligence. If this is not possible, one should take thought for honour. So in a case of this sort, too, when we seem to consult our security, we shall be able to say with truth that we are concerned about honour, since without security we can never attain to honour. In such circumstances it will be proper to yield to another, or to meet another's terms, or to keep quiet for the present and await 175 another opportunity, provided only that some attention is paid to the question whether this cause which conduces to our advantage is worth a loss in derogetur. Atque in hoc loco mihi caput illud videtur esse, ut quaeramus quid sit illud quod si adipisci aut effugere velimus, aliqua res nobis sit necessaria, hoc est quae sit adiunctio, ut proinde, uti quaeque res erit, elaboremus et gravissimam quamque causam vehementissime necessariam iudicemus.

176 Affectio est quaedam ex tempore aut ex negotiorum eventu aut administratione aut hominum studio commutatio rerum, ut non tales, quales ante habitae sint aut plerumque haberi soleant, habendae videantur esse; ut ad hostes transire turpe videatur esse, at non illo animo quo Ulixes transiit; et pecuniam in mare deicere inutile, at non eo consilio quo Aristippus fecit. Sunt igitur res quaedam ex tempore et ex consilio, non ex sua natura considerandae; quibus in omnibus, quid tempora petant, quid personis dignum sit, considerandum est et non quid, sed quo quidque animo, quicum, quo tempore, quamdiu fiat, attendendum est. His ex partibus ad sententiam dicendam locos sumi oportere arbitramur.

177 LIX. Laudes autem et vituperationes ex eis locis sumentur qui loci personis sunt attributi, de quibus ante dictum est. Sin distributius tractare qui volet,

---

<sup>a</sup> The reference is to Odysseus' entering Troy as a spy, Odyssey IV, 242-264.

<sup>b</sup> The pupil of Socrates, and founder of the Cyrenaic School of philosophy. Diogenes Laertius, II, 77, tells the story: "He was taking a sea trip once upon a time, and discovered that he was on a pirate ship. So he took out his money and began to count it, let it fall overboard as if by accident and then bewailed his loss. Some say that he remarked afterward that it was better for the money to perish because of Aristippus than for Aristippus to perish because of the money."

glory and honour. The main thing under this head seems to me to be the question what the thing is which makes some action necessary for us if we wish to acquire or avoid it; in other words, what is the qualification—in order that we may expend our energies in harmony with the real state of affairs, and may judge the most important reason in each case to be the most overwhelmingly necessary.

176 “Affection” is a change in the aspect of things due to time, or the result of actions or their management, or to the interests and desires of men, so that it seems that things should not be regarded in the same light as they have been or have generally been regarded. For example, it is an act of baseness to go over to the enemy, but not if done with the purpose which Ulysses had.<sup>a</sup> It is useless to throw money into the sea, but not so if done with the purpose with which Aristippus did it.<sup>b</sup> There are then certain matters that must be considered with reference to time and intention and not merely by their absolute qualities. In all these matters one must think what the occasion demands and what is worthy of the persons concerned, and one must consider not what is being done but with what spirit anything is done, with what associates, at what time, and how long it has been going on. From these divisions we think the ideas should be drawn for expressing an opinion.

177 LIX. Praise and censure will be derived from the topics that are employed with respect to the attributes of persons; these have been discussed above.<sup>c</sup> If one wishes to treat the subject more <sup>c</sup> Book I, 34-6, II, 32-4.

CICERO

partiat in animum et corpus et extraneas res licebit. Animi est virtus cuius de partibus paulo ante dictum est; corporis valetudo, dignitas, vires, velocitas; extraneae honos, pecunia, affinitas, genus, amici, patria, potentia, cetera quae simili esse in genere intellegentur. Atque in his id quod in omnia valere oportebit; contraria quoque, quae et qualia sint, intellegentur.

- 178 Videre autem in laudando et in vituperando . oportebit non tam, quae in corpore aut in extraneis rebus habuerit is de quo agetur, quam quo pacto his rebus usus sit. Nam fortunam quidem et laudare stultitia et vituperare superbia est, animi autem et laus honesta et vituperatio vehemens est.

Nunc quoniam omne in causae genus argumentandi ratio tradita est, de inventionem, prima ac maxima parte rhetoricae, satis dictum videtur. Quare, quoniam et una pars ad exitum hoc ac superiore libro perducta est et hic liber non parum continet litterarum, quae restant in reliquis dicemus.

methodically, these may be divided into mind, body and external circumstances. The virtue of the mind is that whose parts we discussed only recently.<sup>a</sup> The virtues of the body are health, beauty, strength, speed. Extraneous virtues are public office, money, connexions by marriage, high birth, friends, country, power, and all other things that are understood to belong to this class. And the principle ought to apply to these which applies everywhere; the opposites of these qualities and their nature will be apparent.

178 Moreover, in praise and censure it will be necessary to observe not so much what the subject of the speech possessed in bodily endowment or in extraneous goods as what use he made of them. For it is foolish to praise one's good fortune and arrogant to censure it, but praise of a man's mind is honourable and censure of it very effective.

Now that I have presented the principles on which arguments can be made in every kind of speech, enough has, I think, been said about Invention, which is the first and most important part of rhetoric. Therefore since one section has been brought to completion in this and the preceding book, and this book has grown to a great length, we shall leave the other topics for the later books.

• §§ 159-65.

EXCURSUS

* In de Inv. I, 9, 12 Cicero objects to Hermagoras' division of the constitutio generalis into (pars) deliberativa, demonstrativa, iuridicialis and negotialis. The criticism arises because Cicero has (in I, 5, 7) divided all oratory into three classes, deliberative, demonstrative and forensic. This is the tripartite division of Aristotle, based on the difference in the audience to which the speech is addressed, i.e. the deliberative speech is addressed to a legislative body, the forensic to a court of law, and the demonstrative to a group which is gathered for entertainment or amusement.

Hermagoras, on the other hand, began his division with subject matter. All speeches are divided according to the subject matter into two classes: (1) θέσεις or general questions, (2) ὑποθέσεις or special cases. Special cases are subdivided into λογικὰ ζητήματα or questions involving reasoning, and νομικὰ ζητήματα or questions involving law. The questions involving reasoning are divided according to the four στάσεις or constitutiones, coniecturalis, definitiva, generalis, translativa. The constitutio generalis involved the question of right and wrong and was divided again into four parts: (1) concerning the correctness of future acts (i.e. deliberative); (2) concerning a person—whether he was good or bad (i.e. epideictic or demonstrative, covering both laudatory and vituperative speeches); (3) iuridicialis, dealing with principles of equity and justice as applied to a given law suit; (4) negotialis, which involved questions of the interpretation of laws. Naturally the classification which brought the kinds of speeches in under the constitutio generalis did not square with Aristotle's method of classification, but the error is in Cicero's source who attempted to combine the two systems, and not in Hermagoras. There was, however, a logical fault in Hermagoras' classification. The νομικὰ ζητήματα really belong under στάσεις (constitutiones) and are not co-ordinate with the λογικὰ ζητήματα.

Cicero does not see that similar difficulties arise in the constitutio coniecturalis, where the examples of present and future time both belong to the causa deliberativa.

THE BEST KIND OF ORATOR

INTRODUCTION

THE short treatise which bears the title de Optimo Genere Oratorum was written by Cicero in the year 46 B.C. sometime between the publication of the Brutus and the composition of the Orator. This can be determined by internal evidence; the Brutus was a history of Roman Oratory, but also used that history to demonstrate the correctness of Cicero's attitude toward oratorical style, and to combat the views of the Roman Atticists who would confine the orator to the simplicity and artlessness of the early Attic orators. To Cicero in the Brutus and again in the present treatise Demosthenes, who could command at will all styles from the opulent to the simple, is the greatest orator of all time, and a standing rebuke to those who would confine the term "Attic" to writers such as Lysias. In the Orator Cicero goes one step further and seeks for the pattern of the perfect orator, for an ideal which has never been embodied in any one orator, and perhaps never will be found, but to which Demosthenes is the closest approximation. Of this advanced position there is no trace in the de Optimo Genere Oratorum, and it seems unlikely that if it had been written after the Orator, Cicero would have reverted to his earlier views.

It professes to be an introduction to a translation of Demosthenes On the Crown, and Aeschines Against

INTRODUCTION

Ctesiphon. The translation was never published and probably never made. Furthermore, the introduction was not published during Cicero's lifetime. It exhibits a roughness and at times obscurity of style which would hardly have been put forth by the fastidious author of the Brutus and the Orator; and beyond that there are two passages (12, 18) in which the confusion of thought can best be explained by assuming that the manuscript contained two drafts of the same ideas, which waited for a final revision that never came because the task was laid aside for the more ambitious Orator.<sup>a</sup>

For the constitution of the text of the de Optimo Genere we have two classes of manuscripts; one composed of two codices of the eleventh century, Sangallensis 818 (G) and Parisinus 7347 (P); the other comprising a number of manuscripts from the fifteenth century. As in the case of the de Inventione the war has prevented the translator from making his own collations. He offers, therefore, a second-hand text based on the apparatus offered by Orelli, Friedrich, Hedicke, Fossataro, Wilkins and others. Furthermore, he is embarrassed by the disagreement among previous editors as to the readings in several passages and can therefore give no assurance that even the apparatus criticus is correct.

The eleventh-century codices seem to contain many minor errors, most of which have been corrected in one or another of the later manuscripts. The more serious difficulties, however, are common to all, and some may even derive from the peculiar circumstances of its composition and publication which have been described above.

<sup>a</sup> In this preface I follow in general the theories of Professor Hendrickson in his article, "Cicero De Optimo Genere Oratorum," in the American Journal of Philology xlvii. (1926), pp.109-123.

INTRODUCTION

The manuscripts used in the apparatus with their sigla are :

- G. codex Sangallensis 818
- P. codex Parisinus 7347
- C. codices
- c. some or all of the fifteenth-century codices
- f. codex Vitebergensis (Halensis Yg24)
- g. codex Gudianus 38
- O. codex Ottobonianus 2057
- o. codex Ottobonianus 4449
- ω. codex Ottobonianus 1996
- r. codex Vaticanus reginensis 1841
- T. codex Parisinus 7704
- vulg. early editions

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Besides the complete texts of Cicero mentioned in the bibliography of the de Inventione (p. xv) we have text editions of :

A. S. Wilkins, M. Tulli Ciceronis Rhetorica, in two volumes. Volume II contains Brutus, Orator, De Optimo Genere Oratorum, Partitiones Oratoriae, Topica ; and the following special editions :

Marco Biglia, M. Tullio Cicerone De Optimo Genere Oratorum: Turin 1933. A school edition.

Henri Bornecque, Orator et De Optimo Genere Oratorum. Paris 1921. Text and Translation.

Paolo Fossataro, Cicerone, Della Forma Perfetta di Eloquenza. Second edition, Citta di Castello 1914. Fossataro gives an exegetical commentary and the fullest apparatus criticus.

Edmund Hedicke, M. Tulli Ciceronis libellus De Optimo Genere Oratorum. Sorau 1889. Hedicke was the first to collate Parisinus 7347 (P) and Parisinus 7704 (T).

Otto Jahn, Ciceros Orator: Anhang: De Optimo Genere Oratorum. Leipzig 1851. Commentary and concise apparatus criticus.

L. Quicherat, Brutus et De Optimo Genere Oratorum, Paris 1900.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

There is an English translation by Charles Duke Yonge in the volume cited in the bibliography of the de Inventione (p. xvi); and French translations by F. Richard, Brutus et la perfection oratoire, Paris 1934; and H. Bornecque, above.

M. TULLI CICERONIS

DE OPTIMO GENERE ORATORUM

I. ORATORUM genera esse dicuntur tamquam poetarum; id secus est, nam alterum est multiplex. Poematis enim tragici, comici, epici, melici, etiam ac dithyrambici, quod magis est tractatum a Graecis quam a Latinis, suum cuiusque est,<sup>1</sup> diversum a reliquis. Itaque et in tragoedia comicum vitiosum est et in comoedia turpe tragicum; et in ceteris suis est cuique<sup>2</sup> certus sonus et quaedam intelligentibus nota vox. Oratorum autem si quis ita numerat plura genera, ut alios grandis aut gravis aut copiosos, alios tenuis aut subtilis aut brevis, alios eis interiectos et tamquam medios putet, de hominibus dicit<sup>3</sup> aliquid, de re parum. In re enim quid optimum sit quaeritur, in homine dicitur quod est. Itaque licet dicere et Ennium summum epicum poetam, si cui ita videtur, et Pacuvium tragicum et Caecilium fortasse comicum.

<sup>1</sup> quod . . . cuiusque est Pluygers, Mnemosyne N.F. viii, p. 367: quod c: quo GOP: magis C: rarius Hedicke: a Latinis bracketed by Friedrich: suum cuiusque Manutius: suum quo ius GO: suum cuius P: suumque ius r: suum quodvis o: suum quod ius T.

<sup>2</sup> cuique G: cuiusque P.

<sup>3</sup> de hominibus dicit Orelli: hominibus deicit GP.

---

<sup>a</sup> Quintus Ennius, 239–169 B.C.; Roman poet who wrote in many genres, but was best known for his epic of Roman History, the Annales.

MARCUS TULLIUS CICERO

THE BEST KIND OF ORATOR

I. It is said that there are various kinds of orators as there are of poets. But the fact is otherwise, for poetry takes many forms. That is to say, every composition in verse, tragedy, comedy, epic, and also melic and dithyrambic (a form more extensively cultivated by Greeks than by Romans) has its own individuality, distinct from the others. So in tragedy a comic style is a blemish, and in comedy the tragic style is unseemly; and so with the other genres, each has its own tone and a way of speaking 2 which the scholars recognize. But in the case of orators if one in the same way enumerates several kinds, regarding some as grand, stately or opulent, others as plain, restrained or concise, and others in an intermediate position, forming as it were a mean between the other two, he gives some information about the men but does not tell us enough about the art of oratory. For in an art we ask what is ideal perfection; in a man we describe what actually is. Therefore, one may call Ennius<sup>a</sup> supreme in epic, if he thinks that is true, and Pacuvius<sup>b</sup> in tragedy and
3 Caecilius,<sup>c</sup> perhaps, in comedy. The orator I do not

<sup>b</sup> Marcus Pacuvius, 220–circa 132 B.C., nephew of Ennius; his writing was confined almost entirely to tragedy.

<sup>c</sup> Statius Caecilius, circa 168 B.C., a contemporary of Ennius, and the immediate predecessor of Terence. Cicero elsewhere (cf. ad Atticum vii, 3, 10; Brutus 258) speaks slightly of his Latinity.

CICERO

3 Oratorem genere non divido ; perfectum enim quaero. Unum est autem genus perfecti, a quo qui absunt, non genere differunt, ut Terentius ab Accio, sed in eodem genere non sunt pares. Optimus est enim orator qui dicendo animos audientium et docet et delectat et permovet. Docere debitum est, delectare honorarium, permovere necessarium. Haec ut alius melius quam alius, concedendum est ; verum id fit non genere sed gradu. Optimum quidem unum est et proximum quod ei simillimum. Ex quo perspicuum est, quod optimo dissimillimum sit, id esse deterri-

4 mum.

II. Nam quoniam eloquentia constat ex verbis et ex sententiis, perficiendum est, ut pure et emendate loquentes, quod est Latine, verborum praeterea et priorum et translatorum elegantiam persequamur : in propriis ut lautissima eligamus, in translatis ut similitudinem secuti verecunde utamur alienis.

5 Sententiarum autem totidem genera sunt quot dixi esse laudum. Sunt enim docendi acutae, delectandi quasi argutae, commovendi graves. Sed et verborum est structura quaedam duas res efficiens, numerum et levitatem,<sup>1</sup> et sententiae suam compositionem

<sup>1</sup> lenitatem c, Bentley (ad Hor. Art. Poet. 26).

---

<sup>a</sup> Publius Terentius Afer, circa 190–159 B.C.

<sup>b</sup> Lucius Accius, born 170 B.C., lived to a great age. Writer of tragedies and of history of the Roman stage.

<sup>c</sup> This version takes honorarium in the sense of complimentary gift, contrasted with debt (debitum) which the orators owe in the giving of information. It may also be taken in the sense of “winning him honour and esteem,” i.e. securing the audience’s favour; delectare is in this statement of the orator’s function frequently replaced by conciliare, “win the favour of the audience.”

divide into types, for I am looking for the perfect example. There is only one kind of perfect orator: those who do not belong to this group do not differ in genre as Terence<sup>a</sup> differs from Accius,<sup>b</sup> but though classified with him do not equal him in attainments. The supreme orator, then, is the one whose speech instructs, delights and moves the minds of his audience. The orator is in duty bound to instruct; giving pleasure is a free gift to the audience,<sup>c</sup> to 4 move them is indispensable. We must grant that one does it better than another, but the difference is in degree, not in kind. There is one best, and the next best is that which resembles it most. It is plain from this that what is most unlike the best is the worst.

II. For as eloquence consists of language and thought,<sup>d</sup> we must manage while keeping our diction faultless and pure—that is in good Latin—to achieve a choice of words both “proper” and figurative. Of “proper” words we should choose the most elegant, and in the case of figurative language we should be
 5 modest in our use of metaphors and careful to avoid far-fetched comparisons. On the other hand, there are as many kinds of thoughts as I said above there are of styles of oratory. For exposition and explanation they should be pointed, for entertainment, bright and witty, for rousing the emotions, weighty and impressive. In addition to this, there is a way of putting words together—a structure as it were—to produce the two effects of rhythm and smoothness, <sup>a</sup> The Latin sententia means a thought, and also the expression of it, a sentence, or if the expression is pointed, a maxim or apophthegm. All these meanings hover over this paragraph and can hardly be brought out in English.

CICERO

habent, et <sup>1</sup> ad probandam rem accommodatum ordinem. Sed earum omnium rerum ut aedificiorum <sup>2</sup> memoria est quasi fundamentum, lumen actio.

6 Ea igitur omnia in quo summa erunt,<sup>3</sup> erit perfectissimus <sup>4</sup> orator; in quo media, mediocris; in quo minima, deterrimus. Et appellabuntur omnes oratores, ut pictores appellantur etiam mali, nec generibus inter sese, sed facultatibus different. Itaque nemo est orator qui Demostheni se <sup>5</sup> similem nolit esse; at Menander Homeri noluit; genus enim erat aliud. Id non est in oratoribus aut, etiam si est ut alius gravitatem sequens subtilitatem fugiat, contra alius acutiorem se quam ornatiorem velit, etiam si est in genere tolerabilis,<sup>6</sup> certe non est optimus, si quidem, quod omnis laudes habet, id est optimum.

7 III. Haec autem dixi brevius quidem quam res petebat, sed ad id quod agimus non fuit dicendum pluribus; unum enim cum sit genus, id quale sit quaerimus. Est autem tale quale floruit Athenis; ex quo Atticorum oratorum ipsa vis ignota est, nota gloria. Nam alterum multi viderunt, vitiosi nihil apud eos esse, alterum pauci, laudabilia esse multa. Est enim vitiosum in sententia si quid absurdum aut alienum aut non acutum aut subinsulsum est; in verbis si inquinatum, si abiectum, si non aptum, si

<sup>1</sup> et added by Lambinus.

<sup>2</sup> ut aedificiorum bracketed by Lambinus.

<sup>3</sup> erunt added by Lambinus.

<sup>4</sup> perfectissimus c, Lambinus: peritissimus C.

<sup>5</sup> se added by Aldus, c.

<sup>6</sup> tolerabilis . . . optimus Hendrickson, A.J.P. xlvii (1926), p. 116: tolerabili, certe non est in optimo C: tolerabile T.

and a way of arranging the ideas and an order which is best suited to proving one's case. But all these are but parts of a building as it were; the foundation is memory; that which gives it light is delivery.

6 The man who is supreme in all these departments will be the most perfect orator; one who attains moderate success will be mediocre; he who has the least success will be the worst speaker. Still they will all be called orators, as painters are called painters, though they may be inferior, and will differ in ability, not in kind. Therefore, there is no orator who is unwilling to resemble Demosthenes, but Menander<sup>a</sup> did not wish to write like Homer, for he was working in a different genre. But the same is not true of orators, or, even if one in pursuit of weight and dignity avoids simplicity, and on the other hand, another prefers to be plain and to the point rather than ornate, though he is tolerable as an orator, he is not the best if it is true that the best style is that which includes all virtues.

7 III. I have made this introduction briefer than the subject deserved, but for our present purpose there was no need of a fuller statement. Since there is but one kind of oratory, we are searching for what its nature is. It is the kind that flourished at Athens. The distinction of the Attic orators in their style is well known, but their essential characteristics are unknown. Many see one side—that there was nothing in them with which to find fault—but few see the other side—that there was much to praise. For it is a fault in an idea if it is absurd, or irrelevant, or pointless, or flat; a word is faulty if it is impure, mean, <sup>a</sup> Menander, 343/2–291/0 B.C. (both dates approximate); the leading representative of New Comedy.

CICERO

8 durum, si longe petatum. Haec vitaverunt fere omnes qui aut Attici numerantur aut dicunt Attice. Sed qui eatenus<sup>1</sup> valuerunt, sani et sicci dumtaxat habeantur, sed ita ut palaestritae; spatiari in xysto ut liceat, non ab Olympiis coronam petant. Qui, cum careant omni vitio, non sunt contenti quasi bona valetudine, sed viris, lacertos, sanguinem quaerunt,<sup>2</sup> quandam etiam suavitatem coloris, eos imitemur si possumus; si minus, illos potius qui incorrupta sanitate sunt, quod est proprium Atticorum, quam eos quorum vitiosa abundantia est, qualis Asia multos
9 tulit. Quod cum faciemus—si modo id ipsum assequemur; est enim permagnum—imitemur, si potuerimus, Lysiam et eius quidem tenuitatem potissimum; est enim multis locis grandior, sed quia et privatas ille plerasque et eas ipsas aliis<sup>3</sup> et parvarum rerum causulas scripsit, videtur esse ieunior, cum se ipse consulto ad minutarum causarum genera limaverit. IV. Quod qui ita faciet, ut,<sup>4</sup> si cupiat uberius esse, non possit, habeatur sane orator, sed de minoribus; magno autem oratori etiam illo modo saepe dicendum 10 est in tali genere causarum. Ita fit ut Demosthenes certe possit summissè dicere, elate Lysias fortasse non possit. Sed si eodem modo putant exercitu in

<sup>1</sup> qui eatenus Gulielmius: quatenus C.

<sup>2</sup> quaerunt c: quaerant GP.

<sup>3</sup> ipsas aliis c: ipsas et alias C.

<sup>4</sup> faciet ut si c: faciet si GP.

---

<sup>a</sup> Lysias, circa 445—circa 378 B.C. He was supreme in the plain or unadorned style.

<sup>b</sup> Titus Annius Milo, accused of the murder of Clodius in 52 B.C. Cicero attempted his defence, but was unnerved by

8 inappropriate, harsh, or far-fetched. These errors have been avoided by well nigh all who are accounted Attics or who speak the Attic tongue. But those who have attained only to this may be considered sound and spare as far as that goes, but may be compared to athletes who are fit to promenade in the gymnasium, but not to seek the prize at Olympia. The prize-winners, though free from all diseases, are not content with merely good health, but seek strength, muscles, blood, and even as it were an attractive tan. Let us imitate them if we can; if not, let us imitate those whose purity is untainted—which is characteristic of the Attic writers—rather than those whose opulent style is full of faults; Asia produced this latter

9 sort in abundance. In doing this—if indeed we can accomplish even this much, for it is a very great achievement—let us imitate Lysias,<sup>a</sup> if possible, and his simplicity above all. He does indeed rise toward a loftier style in many passages, but because he wrote private speeches almost exclusively, and even these were for other people and concerned with trifling affairs, he seems excessively meagre, since he purposely filed down his style to match the nature of the petty suits. IV. If anyone speaks in this manner without being able to use a fuller style if he wishes, he should be regarded as an orator, but as a minor one. The great orator must often speak in that way

10 in dealing with cases of such a kind. In other words, Demosthenes could certainly speak calmly, but Lysias perhaps not with passion. But if they think that at the trial of Milo,<sup>b</sup> when the army was the unusual situation described in the text. The extant oration In Defence of Milo was written and published after the trial.

CICERO

foro et in omnibus templis, quae circum forum sunt, collocato dici pro Milone decuisse, ut si de re privata ad unum iudicem diceremus, vim eloquentiae sua facultate, non rei natura metiuntur.

- 11 Qua re quoniam non nullorum sermo iam increbruit, partim se ipsos Attice dicere, partim neminem nostrum <sup>1</sup> dicere, alteros neglegamus; satis enim eis res ipsa respondet, cum aut non adhibeantur <sup>2</sup> ad causas aut adhibiti derideantur; nam si rideretur, <sup>3</sup> esset id ipsum Atticorum. Sed qui dici a nobis Attico more nolunt, <sup>4</sup> ipsi autem se non oratores esse profitentur, si teretes auris habent intellegensque iudicium, tamquam ad picturam probandam adhibentur etiam inscii faciendi cum aliqua sollertia iudicandi;
- 12 sin autem intellegentiam ponunt in audiendi fastidio neque eos quicquam excelsum magnificentumque delectat, dicant se quiddam subtile et politum velle, grande ornatumque contemnere; id vero desinant dicere, qui subtiliter dicant, eos solos Attice dicere, id est quasi sicce et integre. Et ample et ornate et copiose cum eadem integritate Atticorum est. Quid? dubium est utrum orationem nostram tolerabilem tantum

<sup>1</sup> nostrum vulg.: vestrum GP: nostrorum f.

<sup>2</sup> adhibeantur Manutius alii: adhibentur C.

<sup>3</sup> rideretur Hendrickson, o.c., p. 118: riderentur C.

<sup>4</sup> nolunt Osg: volunt GPT.

---

* "They" in this sentence refers to the self-styled "Attic" orators at Rome, who are not formally introduced until the next paragraph.

<sup>b</sup> The two classes are perhaps represented by Calvus (cf. Brutus 284) and his followers, practising orators who had greater success than Cicero here grants them: the second

stationed in the Forum and in all the temples round about, it was fitting to defend him in the same style that we would use in pleading a private case before a single referee, they measure the power of eloquence by their own limited ability, not by the nature of the art.<sup>a</sup>

- 11 Therefore we must make an answer to the claims of certain people which have now gained some currency: one group say that they themselves speak in the Attic manner, the others that no Roman does.<sup>b</sup> The second group we may neglect, for they are sufficiently answered by the facts, since they are not invited to conduct trials, or if invited, they are laughed out of court; for if it was their wit which caused the jury to laugh, this would be prime evidence that they were "Attic." But those who deny that we speak in the Attic manner, but confess that they themselves are not orators, if they have cultivated ears and an intelligent judgement, we consult them as a painter consults people invited to view a painting, who have
- 12 no ability to paint, but a certain skill in criticism. If, on the other hand, they make intelligence consist in fastidiousness of taste in oratory and take no pleasure in anything lofty and magnificent, let them say that they prefer a plain and refined style and despise the grand and ornate. But let them cease to claim that the plain orators are the only ones who speak in the Attic manner, that is, as they say, sparely and without fault. A grand, ornate, and copious style that is equally faultless is the mark of Attic orators. Is there any doubt whether we desire our eloquence to group is not so easy to identify; the most plausible conjecture is that it is composed of men like Memmius (Brutus 247), highly trained in letters, but only in Greek, for he scorned Latin.

CICERO

an etiam admirabilem esse cupiamus? Non enim iam quaerimus quid sit Attice, sed quid sit optime dicere.

- 13 Ex quo intellegitur, quoniam Graecorum oratorum praestantissimi sint ei qui fuerint Athenis, eorum autem princeps facile Demosthenes, hunc si qui imitetur, eum et Attice dicturum et optime, ut,<sup>1</sup> quoniam Attici nobis propositi sunt ad imitandum, bene dicere id sit Attice dicere.

V. Sed cum in eo magnus error esset, quale esset id dicendi genus, putavi mihi suscipiendum laborem utilem studiosis, mihi quidem ipsi non necessarium.

- 14 Converti enim ex Atticis duorum eloquentissimorum nobilissimas orationes inter seque contrarias, Aeschinis et<sup>2</sup> Demosthenis; nec converti ut interpretes, sed ut orator, sententiis isdem et earum formis tamquam figuris, verbis ad nostram consuetudinem aptis. In quibus non verbum pro verbo necesse habui reddere, sed genus omne<sup>3</sup> verborum vimque servavi. Non enim ea me adnumerare lectori putavi oportere, sed tamquam appendere. Hic labor meus hoc assequetur,<sup>4</sup>
- 15 ut nostri homines quid ab illis exigant, qui se Atticos volunt, et ad quam eos quasi formulam dicendi revocent intellegant.

“Sed exorietur<sup>5</sup> Thucydides; eius enim quidam eloquentiam admirantur.”<sup>6</sup> Id quidem recte; sed

<sup>1</sup> ut Oo: utrus G: utrum PT: verum r: cf. Hendrickson, o.c., p. 119.

<sup>2</sup> et added by Orelli.

<sup>3</sup> omne Hieronimus: omnium C.

<sup>4</sup> adsequetur Ascensius: adsequitur C.

<sup>5</sup> exorietur GPc: exoritur c.

<sup>6</sup> admirantur c: admiratur GP.

---

<sup>a</sup> The Oration against Ctesiphon of Aeschines (circa 390–circa 315 B.C.) and The Oration on the Crown (or In Defence of Ctesiphon) by Demosthenes (384/3–322 B.C.).

13 be merely tolerable, or to arouse admiration as well? For we are not inquiring what speaking in the Attic manner is, but what is the best manner. It can be inferred from this that since the most outstanding Greek orators were those who lived at Athens, and of these Demosthenes was easily the chief, one who imitates him will speak in the Attic manner and in the best manner, so that, since they set up Attic orators as models for our imitation, speaking in the Attic fashion means speaking well.

V. But since there was a complete misapprehension as to the nature of their style of oratory, I thought it my duty to undertake a task which will be useful to students, though not necessary for myself.

14 That is to say I translated the most famous orations of the two most eloquent Attic orators, Aeschines and Demosthenes, orations which they delivered against each other.<sup>a</sup> And I did not translate them as an interpreter, but as an orator, keeping the same ideas and the forms, or as one might say, the "figures" of thought, but in language which conforms to our usage. And in so doing, I did not hold it necessary to render word for word, but I preserved the general style and force of the language. For I did not think I ought to count them out to the reader like coins, but to pay them by weight, as it were.

15 The result of my labour will be that our Romans will know what to demand from those who claim to be Atticists and to what rule of speech, as it were, they are to be held.

"But Thucydides<sup>b</sup> will rise up against you; for some admire his eloquence." Right they are; but <sup>b</sup> Athenian of the fifth century B.C., who wrote the history of the Peloponnesian War.

CICERO

nihil ad eum oratorem quem quaerimus. Aliud est enim explicare res gestas narrando, aliud arguendo criminari crimineve dissolvere; aliud narrantem tenere auditorem, aliud concitare.<sup>1</sup> “At loquitur
16 pulchre.” Num melius quam Plato? Necesse est tamen oratori quem quaerimus controversias explicare<sup>2</sup> forensis dicendi genere apto ad docendum, ad delectandum, ad permovendum. VI. Qua re si quis erit qui se Thucydideo genere causas in foro dicturum esse profiteatur, is abhorrebit etiam a suspicione eius quod<sup>3</sup> versatur in re civili et forensi; sin<sup>4</sup> Thucydidem laudabit, ascribat suae nostram sententiam.

17 Quin ipsum Isocratem, quem divinus auctor Plato suum fere aequalem admirabiliter in Phaedro laudari fecit ab Socrate quemque omnes docti summum<sup>5</sup> oratorem esse dixerunt, tamen hunc in numerum non repono. Non enim in acie versatur nec ferro,<sup>6</sup> sed quasi<sup>7</sup> rudibus eius eludit oratio. A me autem, ut cum maximis minima conferam, gladiatorum par nobilissimum inducitur, Aeschines, tamquam Aeserninus, ut ait Lucilius, non spurcus homo, sed acer et doctus cum Pacideiano hic componitur,—optimus longe post homines natos—.

<sup>1</sup> concitare o: concitantem C.

<sup>2</sup> explicare c: explicantem GPT.

<sup>3</sup> quod Ernesti: quae C.

<sup>4</sup> sin Orelli in apparatus: in GP: (et) qui c, Orelli in text.

<sup>5</sup> docti summum c vulg.: doctissimum C.

<sup>6</sup> nec ferro Hammer: et ferro GP: et (in) foro c.

<sup>7</sup> sed quasi c: et quasi GP.

- that has no bearing on the orator whom we are seeking. For it is one thing to set forth events in an historical narrative, and another to present arguments to clinch a case against an opponent, or to refute a charge. It is one thing to hold an auditor while telling a story, and another to arouse him. "But his style is beautiful." Is it better than Plato's?
- 16 For the orator whom we are seeking must treat cases in court in a style suitable to instruct, to delight, and to move. VI. Therefore, if there shall ever be a man who professes to plead cases in court in the style of Thucydides, he will prove that he has not the faintest notion of what goes on in political and legal life. But if he is content to praise Thucydides, let him enter my vote beside his.
- 17 Even Isocrates,<sup>a</sup> whom the divine Plato, practically his contemporary, represents as receiving high praise from Socrates in the Phaedrus,<sup>b</sup> and whom all scholars have cited as a consummate orator, even him I do not include in the class of perfection. For his oratory does not take part in the battle nor use steel, but plays with a wooden sword, as I may say.<sup>c</sup> But, to compare the magnificent with the insignificant, what I am now doing is rather introducing a famous pair of gladiators, Aeschines like Aeserninus, not a nasty fellow as Lucilius says, but bold and clever; he is matched with Pacideianus, by far the best fighter

<sup>a</sup> Greek orator, 436-338 B.C., perhaps more famous as a teacher and founder of a school and tradition of rhetoric.

<sup>b</sup> Plato, Phaedrus, 278E-279B.

<sup>c</sup> A wooden sword was used by gladiators and soldiers for practice. Isocrates, lacking nerve and a good voice, refrained from public appearances; almost all of his "speeches" were written to be read.

CICERO

Nihil enim illo oratore arbitror cogitari posse divinius.

18 Huic labori nostro duo genera reprehensionum opponuntur. Unum hoc: "Verum melius Graeci." A quo quaeratur ecquid possint ipsi<sup>1</sup> melius Latine? Alterum: "Quid istas potius legam quam Graecas?" Idem Andriam et Synephebos nec minus<sup>2</sup> Andromacham aut Antiopam aut Epigonos Latinos recipiunt.<sup>3</sup> Quod igitur est eorum in orationibus e Graeco<sup>4</sup> conversis fastidium, nullum cum sit in versibus?

19 VII. Sed adgrediamur iam quod suscepimus, si prius exposuerimus quae causa in iudicium deducta sit. Cum esset lex Athenis, NE QVIS POPVLI SCITVM FACERET VT QVISQVAM CORONA DONARETVR IN MAGISTRATV PRIVS QVAM RATIONES RETTVLISSET; et altera lex, EOS QVI A POPVLO DONARENTVR, IN CONTIONE DONARI DEBERE; QVI A SENATV,<sup>5</sup> IN SENATV, Demosthenes curator muris reficiendis fuit eosque refecit pecunia sua; de hoc igitur Ctesiphon scitum fecit nullis ab illo

<sup>1</sup> ipsi C: illi G.

<sup>2</sup> After minus the MSS. have Terentium et Caecilium quam Menandrum legunt nec: bracketed by Jahn.

<sup>3</sup> After recipiunt the MSS. have sed tamen Ennium et Pacuvium et Accium potius quam Euripidem et Sophoclem legunt: bracketed by Jahn.

<sup>4</sup> e Graeco Lambinus: a greco C.

<sup>5</sup> qui a senatu Muretus: quia C.

---

<sup>6</sup> Cicero is quoting freely from the second satire of Lucilius. The passage in full is (text and translation by E. H. Warmington, Remains of Old Latin iii, pp. 56, 57 (LCL)):

Aeserninus fuit Flaccorum munere quidam
Samnis, spurcus homo, vita illa dignus locoque.
Cum Pacideiano componitur, optimus multo post homines natos gladiator qui fuit unus.

since the creation of man, for I think nothing can be imagined more inspired than the orator Demosthenes.<sup>a</sup>

18 Two sorts of objections can be raised to this undertaking of mine. The first is: "It is better in the original Greek." One might ask this critic whether they themselves can produce anything better in Latin. The second is: "Why should I read this translation of yours, rather than the Greek original?" But at the same time they accept the Andria, the Synephebi and likewise the Andromache or the Antiope or the Epigoni in Latin.<sup>b</sup> Why their aversion to speeches translated from the Greek when they have none to translations of poetry?

19 VII. But let us now turn to our task, after an introductory explanation of the case which was brought before the court. There was a fundamental law at Athens that no one should propose a bill to crown a citizen while he was a magistrate before he had rendered an account of his office; and another law providing that those who were rewarded by the people should receive the award in the popular assembly, and those who were rewarded by the Council should receive it in the Council chamber. Demosthenes was superintendent in charge of repairing the city walls, and repaired them at his own expense. For this service, then, Ctesiphon proposed

In the public show given by the Flacci was a certain Aeserninus, a Samnite, a nasty fellow, worthy of that life and station. He was matched with Pacideianus, who was by far the best of all the gladiators since the creation of man.

<sup>a</sup> The Andria of Terence; Caecilius' Synephebi (Companions in Youth), fragments in Warmington, ROL i, pp. 536-540; the Andromacha of Ennius, ROL i, pp. 244-254; the Antiope of Pacuvius, ROL ii, pp. 158-170; the Epigoni of Accius, ROL ii, pp. 420-428.

CICERO

rationibus relatis, ut corona aurea donaretur eaque donatio fieret in theatro populo convocato, qui locus non est contionis legitimae, atque ita praedicaretur, EVM DONARI VIRTUTIS ERGO BENEVOLENTIAEQVE QVAM IS 20 ERGA POPVLVM ATHENIENSEM HABERET. Hunc igitur Ctesiphontem in iudicium adduxit Aeschines quod contra leges scripsisset, ut et rationibus non relatis corona donaretur et ut in theatro, et quod de virtute eius et benevolentia falsa scripsisset, cum Demosthenes nec vir bonus esset nec bene meritus de civitate.

Causa ipsa abhorret illa quidem a formula consuetudinis nostrae, sed est magna. Habet enim et legum interpretationem satis acutam in utramque
21 sanè gravem. Itaque causa fuit Aeschini, cum ipse a Demosthene esset capitis accusatus, quod legationem ementitus esset, ut ulciscendi inimici causa nomine Ctesiphontis iudicium fieret de factis famaue Demosthenis. Non enim tam multa dixit de rationibus non relatis, quam de eo quod civis improbus ut optimus
22 laudatus esset. Hanc multam Aeschines a Ctesiphonte petivit quadriennio ante Philippi Macedonis mortem; sed iudicium factum est aliquot annis post Alexandro iam Asiam tenente; ad quod iudicium

---

<sup>a</sup> According to the spurious indictment inserted in Demosthenes, On the Crown (55), this last charge involved violation of a fundamental law forbidding false statements in bills; Cicero does not mention this law above.

<sup>b</sup> In 343 B.C. Both orations are extant.

<sup>c</sup> The complaint was lodged in 336 and the trial took place in 330. As a matter of fact, Philip was murdered in 336 shortly after Aeschines' complaint against Ctesiphon. The error arises from a confusion of the event here mentioned with an earlier crowning of Demosthenes in 340.

in a bill, though Demosthenes had not rendered an account of his office, that he should receive a crown of gold, and that the presentation should be made in the theatre before the assembled people, though this was not the place for a legal assembly; and that proclamation should be made that he received the crown for his virtue and the benevolence which he had shown 20 to the people of Athens. Aeschines then summoned this Ctesiphon to court charging him with proposing a bill contrary to the fundamental law in that the crown was to be presented before Demosthenes had rendered his account, and in that the presentation was to be made in the theatre, and because the statement about virtue and benevolence was untrue, since Demosthenes neither was a good man nor had deserved well of the city.<sup>a</sup>

This case in its very nature is far removed from the customary procedure of our courts; still it is important. For it involves a very nice interpretation of the law on both sides, and a comparison of the public services of the two orators which is extremely 21 impressive. Furthermore, as Aeschines had been accused by Demosthenes on the capital charge of malfeasance on an embassy,<sup>b</sup> he had reason to seek vengeance on his enemy by subjecting the career and reputation of Demosthenes to a judicial review under the guise of an attack on Ctesiphon. Therefore, he did not make so much of the charge that Demosthenes had not rendered his account as he did of his having been praised as the best of citizens when he was a 22 villain. Aeschines instituted this prosecution against Ctesiphon four years before the death of Philip of Macedon, but the trial was held several years later when Alexander was now master of Asia.<sup>c</sup> The trial concursum dicitur e tota Graecia factus esse. Quid enim tam aut visendum aut audiendum fuit quam summorum oratorum in gravissima causa accurata et 23 inimicitiis incensa contentio? Quorum ego<sup>1</sup> orationes si, ut<sup>2</sup> spero, ita expressero virtutibus utens illorum omnibus, id est sententiis et earum figuris et rerum ordine, verba persequens eatenus, ut ea non abhorreant a more nostro—quae si e Graecis omnia conversa non erunt, tamen ut generis eiusdem sint, elaboravimus—,<sup>3</sup> erit regula, ad quam eorum dirigantur orationes qui Attice volent dicere. Sed de nobis satis. Aliquando enim Aeschinem ipsum Latine dicentem audiamus.

CICERO

<sup>1</sup> ego vulg.: ergo GP.

<sup>2</sup> si ut C: sicut Go.

<sup>3</sup> elaboravimus Hieronimus: elaborabimus C.

was attended by a crowd from every part of Greece. For what was so worth going to see or hear as two consummate orators engaged in a desperate struggle for which they had prepared with great effort and in which they were influenced by personal animosity?

23 If I shall succeed in rendering their speeches, as I hope, by retaining all their virtues, that is, the thoughts, the figures of thought and the order of topics, and following the language only so far as it does not depart from our idiom—if all the words are not literal translations of the Greek, we have at least tried to keep them within the same class or type—there will be a norm by which to measure the speeches of those who may wish to speak in the Attic manner. But enough of myself. Now at last let us listen to Aeschines himself speaking in the Latin tongue.

TOPICA

INTRODUCTION

THE genesis of the Topica is explained fully in the opening paragraphs, nor is there any reason to doubt the essential facts of the story or to assume that it is merely a literary artifice. Trebatius had found in Cicero's library at Tusculum a copy of Aristotle's Topica, and had asked Cicero to explain it to him. For a while Cicero declined, but finally, while sailing from Velia to Rhegium, composed the treatise entirely from memory. This is confirmed by the letter (ad Fam. vii, 19) which Cicero wrote from Rhegium on July 28, 44 B.C. and sent to Trebatius with the Topica.

So far so good. But we are immediately confronted with the problem of what Cicero was doing, and what he thought he was doing. The work professes to be a translation or adaptation of the Topics of Aristotle, with illustrations and examples from Roman jurisprudence, but it bears little resemblance to this treatise. True, some of the topics presented by Cicero can be discovered in Aristotle's Topica; more can be found in the list given in the twenty-third chapter of the second book of Aristotle's Rhetoric; still others are demonstrably later, and of Stoic origin. There is a further consideration that the same topics, classified according to the same scheme, are given in the de Oratore, II, 162-173.

INTRODUCTION

It must also be noted that the Topica deals with more than topics of argumentation. At § 72 Cicero apologizes to Trebatius for going beyond his original plan. The following sections discuss testimony, and are succeeded by an enumeration of the three kinds of oratory, the parts of a speech, etc. What emerges is a miniature treatise on Invention, and it seems clear that Cicero is adapting, perhaps from memory, some late Hellenistic treatise, and that he was misled by the mention of Aristotle (§ 6) as the first writer on Topics into thinking that his source really represented Aristotle's work.

Attempts have been made to determine more precisely the author of the work which Cicero reproduces. Wallies suggested Antiochus of Ascalon, and his view was followed by Kroll; Hammer thought of Diodotus. Both suggestions are plausible, but not much more can be said for them.

Trebatius, to whom the book is dedicated, was Gaius Trebatius Testa, a jurisconsult of repute, who on Cicero's recommendation had served with Caesar in Gaul. Cicero addressed to him the letters ad Familiares vii, 6–22 (cf. also ad Fam. vii, 5, Cicero's letter commending him to Caesar), and Horace makes him a speaker in the first Satire of the second book.

OUTLINE OF CONTENTS

1–5. Introduction. Dedication to Trebatius. This is to be an interpretation of the "Topics" of Aristotle.

6–8. Definition of "Topics" or the art of invention. Topics are intrinsic or extrinsic.

INTRODUCTION

9-23. The intrinsic topics are enumerated, with a brief example of each.

24. The extrinsic topics.

25. Interlude: We shall now take up the topics in detail.

26-71. The intrinsic topics are discussed again, this time with a full analysis of each.

72. Interlude: The extrinsic topics are not pertinent to jurisprudence, but will be included for the sake of completeness.

73-78. The extrinsic topics are fully treated.

79-86. There are two kinds of subjects for speeches: the general proposition and the special case. The general proposition is discussed at length in connexion with the "issues" (status) raised in them—of fact (sitne), of definition (quid sit), of quality (quale sit).

87-90. Certain topics are suited to each form of the general proposition.

91-96. Special cases are forensic, deliberative or epideictic: certain topics are appropriate to each.

97-99. The four parts of a speech—introduction, narrative, proof, peroration—and the appropriate topics.

100. Conclusion: this work has included more than was originally planned.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Besides the complete texts of Cicero, mentioned on pp. xv and 352, there is a text, translation and commentary by Henri Bornecque, Cicéron, Divisions de l'art oratoire, Topiques, Paris, 1924.

An English translation by Charles Duke Yonge

INTRODUCTION

is included in the volume cited in the bibliography on p. xvi.

The following monographs and articles have been found useful:

Emilio Costa, Cicerone Giureconsulto. Bologna, 1927.

Wilhelm Friedrich, Zu Ciceros Topica. Jahrbücher für classische Philologie xxxv (1889), pp. 281–296. The fullest information about the manuscripts.

Casper Hammer, Commentatio de Ciceronis Topicis. Prog. Landau, 1879.

Johann Joseph Klein, Dissertatio de Fontibus Topicorum Ciceronis. Bonn, 1844; thinks that Cicero used Aristotle's Rhetoric as a source.

Thomas Stangl, Textkritische Bemerkungen zu Ciceros rhetorischen Schriften. Blätter für das bayerische Gymnasialschulwesen, xviii (1882), pp. 245–253.

Maximilian Wallies, De Fontibus Topicorum Ciceronis. Diss. Halle, 1878; thinks that Cicero used Antiochus of Ascalon who had combined Peripatetic, Academic and Stoic logic.

TEXT

The manuscripts fall into three classes. The first contains two codices, Ottobonianus 1406 (O) of the tenth century and the closely related Vitebergensis (f). These are the best evidence and in most cases their reading is to be preferred. The second group, nearly as reliable, comprises (A), Codex Vossianus 84; (B), Codex Vossianus 86; and m, Codex Marcianus 257, all three of the tenth century. These manuscripts so frequently agree that it is convenient to cite them together as A. There remain for the third class a large number of inferior manuscripts, of which I cite only L, Codex Leidensis 90; V, Codex Vossianus 70; a, Codex Einsiedlensis 324; c, Codex Sangallensis 854. I have seen none of these except the photographic facsimile of (A), and as the reports in apparatus critici are sometimes contradictory, it has not always been possible to be certain about the proper reading.

INTRODUCTION

O. Codex Ottobonianus 1406.

f. Codex Vitebergensis.

A. Consensus of

(A) Codex Vossianus 84.

(B) Codex Vossianus 86.

m Codex Marcianus 257.

L. Codex Leidensis 90.

V. Codex Vossianus 70.

a. Codex Einsiedlensis 324.

c. Codex Sangallensis 854.

codd. Consensus of all MSS. or of those not otherwise cited.

MARCUS TULLI CICERONIS

TOPICA

I. MAIORES nos res scribere ingressos, C. Trebati, et his libris quos brevi tempore satis multos edidimus digniores, e cursu ipso revocavit voluntas tua. Cum enim mecum in Tusculano esses et in bibliotheca separatim uterque nostrum ad suum studium libellos quos vellet evolveret, incidisti in Aristotelis Topica quaedam, quae sunt ab illo pluribus libris explicata. Qua inscriptione commotus continuo a me librorum<sup>2</sup> eorum sententiam requisisti; quam cum tibi exposuissem, disciplinam inveniendorum argumentorum, ut sine ullo errore ad ea<sup>1</sup> ratione et via<sup>2</sup> perveniremus, ab Aristotele inventam illis libris contineri, verecunde tu quidem ut omnia, sed tamen facile ut cernerem te ardere studio, mecum ut tibi illa traderem egisti. Cum autem ego te non tam vitandi laboris mei causa quam quia tua id interesse arbitrarer, vel ut eos per te ipse legeres vel ut totam rationem a doctissimo quodam rhetore acciperes, hortatus essem, utrumque, ut ex te audiebam, es

<sup>1</sup> ad ea Klotz from Boethius : ad eam codd.

<sup>2</sup> ratione et via vulg. from Boethius : rationem via codd.

---

<sup>2</sup> He had begun the de Officiis, which was interrupted and not finished until his return from his voyage mentioned below. He had within a year published the Consolatio, de

MARCUS TULLIUS CICERO

TOPICS

I. I HAD set out to write on a larger subject and one more in keeping with the books of which I have published enough surely in the recent past, when I was recalled from my course by your request, my dear Trebatius.<sup>a</sup> You will remember that when we were together in my Tusculan villa and were sitting in the library, each of us according to his fancy unrolling the volumes which he wished, you hit upon certain Topics of Aristotle which were expounded by him in several books. Excited by the title, you immediately asked me what the subject
2 of the work was. And when I had made clear to you that these books contained a system developed by Aristotle for inventing arguments so that we might come upon them by a rational system without wandering about, you begged me to teach you the subject. Your request was made with the modesty which you show in everything, yet I could easily see that you were aflame with eagerness. Not so much to avoid labour as because I thought it would be for your good, I urged you to read the books yourself, or acquire the whole system from a very learned teacher of oratory whom I named. You

Finibus, Academicæ Quaestiones, de Natura Deorum, de Divinatione, de Fato, de Amicitia, de Senectute and de Gloria.

CICERO

- 3 expertus. Sed a libris te obscuritas reiecit; rhetor autem ille magnus haec, ut opinor, Aristotelia se ignorare respondit. Quod quidem minime sum admiratus eum philosophum rhetori non esse cognitum, qui ab ipsis philosophis praeter admodum paucos ignoretur; quibus eo minus ignoscendum est, quod non modo rebus eis quae ab illo dictae et inventae sunt allici debuerunt, sed dicendi quoque incredibili quadam cum copia tum etiam suavitate.
- 4 Non potui igitur tibi saepius hoc roganti et tamen verenti ne mihi gravis esses—facile enim id cernebam—debere diutius, ne ipsi iuris interpreti fieri videretur iniuria. Etenim cum tu mihi meisque multa saepe scripsisses,<sup>1</sup> veritus sum ne, si ego gravarer, aut ingratum id aut superbum videretur. Sed dum fuimus una, tu optimus es testis quam fuerim occupatus;
- 5 ut autem a te discessi in Graeciam proficiscens, cum opera mea nec res publica nec amici uterentur nec honeste inter arma versari possem, ne si tuto quidem mihi id liceret, ut veni Veliam tuaque et tuos vidi, admonitus huius aeris alieni nolui deesse ne tacitae quidem flagitationi tuae. Itaque haec, cum mecum libros non haberem, memoria repetita in ipsa navigatione conscripsi tibi que ex itinere misi, ut mea diligentia mandatorum tuorum te quoque, etsi admonitore non eges, ad memoriam

<sup>1</sup> scripsisses : cavisses Of.

---

<sup>a</sup> This may refer to legal opinions given for Cicero and his clients, or to books which Trebatius had dedicated to Cicero. Trebatius was the author of several works, now lost.

3 had tried both, as you told me. But you were repelled from reading the books by their obscurity; and that great teacher replied that he was not acquainted with these works, which are, as I think, by Aristotle. I am not indeed astonished in the slightest degree that the philosopher was unknown to the teacher of oratory, for he is ignored by all except a few of the professed philosophers. The philosophers deserve less excuse for their neglect, because they should have been attracted, not only by the matter which he has discovered and presented, but also by an unbelievable charm and richness in his style.

4 When you repeated your request again and again, and at the same time were afraid of annoying me—that I could easily see—I could no longer refrain from paying the debt, lest the interpreter of the law should be treated unlawfully. For taking into consideration that you had often written at great length for me and my friends,<sup>a</sup> I was afraid that my hesitation might be thought to be ingratitude or discourtesy. But you yourself can best testify how 5 busy I was when we were together; and when I left you, and set out on my way to Greece, since neither the state nor my friends required my services and I could not with honour live in the midst of the strife of arms, supposing that I might have done so with safety, and on reaching Velia I saw your family and your home, I was reminded of this debt, and was unwilling to refuse even your silent demand for payment. Therefore, since I had no books with me, I wrote up what I could remember on the voyage and sent it to you, in order that by my diligence in obeying your commands I might arouse you—though you need no admonition—to keep my businostrarum rerum excitarem. Sed iam tempus est ad id quod instituimus accedere.

6 II. Cum omnis ratio diligens disserendi duas habeat partis, unam inveniendi alteram iudicandi, utriusque princeps, ut mihi quidem videtur, Aristoteles fuit.
Stoici autem in altera elaboraverunt; iudicandi enim vias diligenter persecuti sunt ea scientia quam διαλεκτικὴν appellant, inveniendi artem quae τοπικὴ 7 dicitur, quae et ad usum potior erat et ordine naturae certe prior, totam reliquerunt. Nos autem, quoniam in utraque summa utilitas est et utramque, si erit otium, persequi cogitamus, ab ea quae prior est ordiemur. Ut igitur earum rerum quae absconditae sunt demonstrato et notato loco facilis inventio est, sic, cum pervestigare argumentum aliquod volumus, locos nosse debemus; sic enim appellatae ab
Aristotele sunt eae quasi sedes, e quibus argumenta 8 promuntur. Itaque licet definire locum esse argu-menti sedem, argumentum autem rationem quae rei dubiae faciat fidem.

Sed ex his locis in quibus argumenta inclusa sunt, alii in eo ipso de quo agitur haerent, alii assumuntur extrinsecus. In ipso tum ex toto, tum ex partibus eius, tum ex nota, tum ex eis rebus quae quodam

---

* Apparently Trebatius was acting in some capacity for Cicero: the phrase here used may be compared with the similar language of the letter which Cicero wrote to Trebatius from Velia at this time: ad Fam. vii, 20, 3: Sed valebis meaque negotia videbis (But you must keep well, and look after my affairs).

<sup>b</sup> Greek τόπος "place" or "region" gives the adjective τοπικός from which "topic" is derived. Aristotle used τόπος to denote the pigeon-hole or region in the mind where similar arguments are stored, and secondarily the type of such similar arguments. For a fuller discussion v. Cope, ness in mind.<sup>a</sup> But it is now time to turn to our appointed task.

6 II. Every systematic treatment of argumentation has two branches, one concerned with invention of arguments and the other with judgement of their validity; Aristotle was the founder of both in my opinion. The Stoics have worked in only one of the two fields. That is to say, they have followed diligently the ways of judgement by means of the science which they call διαλεκτική (dialectic), but they have totally neglected the art which is called τοπική (topics), an art which is both more useful
7 and certainly prior in the order of nature. For my part, I shall begin with the earlier, since both are useful in the highest degree, and I intend to follow up both, if I have leisure. A comparison may help: It is easy to find things that are hidden if the hiding place is pointed out and marked; similarly if we wish to track down some argument we ought to know the places or topics: for that is the name given by Aristotle to the "regions", as it were, from 8 which arguments are drawn. Accordingly, we may define a topic as the region of an argument, and an argument as a course of reasoning which firmly establishes a matter about which there is some doubt.<sup>b</sup>

Of the topics under which arguments are included, some are inherent in the very nature of the subject which is under discussion, and others are brought in from without. Inherent in the nature of the subject are arguments derived from the whole, from its parts, from its meaning, and from the things which are in some way closely connected with the

Introduction to Aristotle's Rhetoric, pp. 124-133; Jebb, The Rhetoric of Aristotle, a Translation, pp. 142-144.

CICERO

modo affectae<sup>1</sup> sunt ad id de quo quaeritur. Extrinsecus autem ea ducuntur quae absunt longeque disiuncta sunt.

- 9 Sed ad id totum de quo disseritur tum definitio adhibetur, quae<sup>2</sup> quasi involutum evolvit<sup>3</sup> id de quo quaeritur; eius argumenti talis est formula: Ius civile est aequitas constituta eis qui eiusdem civitatis sunt ad res suas obtinendas; eius autem aequitatis utilis cognitio est; utilis ergo est iuris civilis scientia;
- 10 —tum partium enumeratio, quae tractatur hoc modo: Si neque censu nec vindicta nec testamento liber factus est, non est liber; neque ulla est earum rerum; non est igitur liber;—tum notatio, cum ex verbi vi argumentum aliquod elicitur hoc modo: Cum lex assiduo vindicem assiduum esse iubeat, locupletem iubet locupleti; is est enim assiduus, ut ait L. Aelius, appellatus ab aere dando.

<sup>1</sup> adfectae codd: adfictae Nettleship.

<sup>2</sup> quae O: qua codd.

<sup>3</sup> evolvit O: evolvitur codd.

---

<sup>a</sup> For these methods of manumission see Buckland, W. W., A Text-Book of Roman Law from Augustus to Justinian, 2nd ed. (1932), pp. 72–78.

<sup>b</sup> I.e. assi from as, gen. assis, a coin, and duus from do, I give. The etymology is wrong, but was the one commonly accepted at the time; assidui (tax-payers or freeholders) were contrasted in early times with proletarii.

The Aelius who is quoted as the authority for this etymology is probably Lucius Aelius Stilo Praeconinus, a noted grammarian and rhetorician, and one of Cicero's teachers; or he may be the jurist Sextus Aelius Paetus Catus, consul 198 B.C. who wrote a commentary on the Twelve Tables.

The law involved is explained in the following quotation from Buckland, A Text-Book of Roman Law from Augustus to Justinian, 2nd ed., p. 618 f., describing the procedure for collecting a judgement. "The process was as follows:

subject which is being investigated. Arguments from external circumstances are those that are removed and widely separated from the subject.

- 9 Sometimes a definition is applied to the whole subject which is under consideration; this definition unfolds what is wrapped up, as it were, in the subject which is being examined. The following is the pattern of such an argument: The civil law is a system of equity established between members of the same state for the purpose of securing to each his property rights; the knowledge of this system of equity is useful; therefore the science of civil
- 10 law is useful. Sometimes there is an enumeration of parts, and this is handled in the following manner: So-and-So is not a free man unless he has been set free by entry in the census roll, or by touching with the rod, or by will.<sup>a</sup> None of these conditions has been fulfilled, therefore he is not free. Then etymology may be employed, when some argument is derived from the force or meaning of a word, in this fashion: Since the law provides that an assiduus (tax-payer or freeholder) shall be vindex (representative) for an assiduus, it provides that a rich man be representative for a rich man; for that is the meaning of assiduus, it being derived, as Aelius says, from aere dando (paying money).<sup>b</sup> after 30 days from the judgement or other event justifying the seizure, the claimant brought the party liable before the magistrate. . . . The defendant might not defend himself against the manus iniectio, but if he claimed that it was not justified, some one must appear on his behalf to prove this—a vindex. The effect of the intervention was that the defendant was released, and further proceedings were against the vindex." Cf. also, Bruns, Fontes Iuris Romani, 7th ed., p. 18.

CICERO

- 11 III. Ducuntur etiam argumenta ex eis rebus quae quodam modo affectae sunt ad id de quo quaeritur. Sed hoc genus in pluris partis distributum est. Nam alia coniugata appellamus, alia ex genere, alia ex forma, alia ex similitudine, alia ex differentia, alia ex contrario, alia ex adiunctis,<sup>1</sup> alia ex antecedentibus, alia ex consequentibus, alia ex repugnantibus, alia ex causis, alia ex effectis, alia ex comparatione maiorum aut parium aut minorum.
- 12 Coniugata dicuntur quae sunt ex verbis generis eiusdem. Eiusdem autem generis verba sunt quae orta ab uno varie commutantur, ut sapiens sapienter sapientia. Haec verborum coniugatio συζυγία dicitur, ex qua huius modi est argumentum: Si compascuus ager est, ius est compascere.
- 13 A genere sic ducitur: Quoniam argentum omne mulieri legatum est, non potest ea pecunia quae numerata domi relicta est non esse legata; forma enim a genere, quoad suum nomen retinet, nunquam seiungitur, numerata autem pecunia nomen argenti retinet; legata igitur videtur.
- 14 A forma generis, quam interdum, quo planius accipiatur, partem licet nominare hoc modo: Si ita Fabiae pecunia legata est a viro, si ei viro materfamilias esset; si ea in manum non convenerat, nihil debetur. Genus enim est uxor; eius duae formae: una matrumfamilias, eae sunt, quae in <sup>1</sup> adiunctis Oc : coniunctis codd.

---

* I have translated compascuus as "common" rather than as "common pasture," because freeholders might cut wood on it as well as use it for pasture. Cf. Voigt, in Abhandlungen der philol.-hist. Classe der K. sächsischen Gesellschaft der Wis-

11 III. Arguments are also drawn from circumstances closely connected with the subject which is under inquiry. But this class has many subdivisions. For we call some arguments "conjugate," others we derive from genus, species, similarity, difference, contraries, adjuncts, antecedents, consequents, contradictions, cause, effect, and comparison with events of greater, less or equal importance.

12 "Conjugate" is the term applied to arguments based on words of the same family. Words of the same family are those which are formed from one root but have different grammatical forms, as wise, wisely, wisdom. Such a "conjugation" of words is called συζυγία (syzygy), and yields an argument of this sort: If a field is "common" (compascuus), it is legal to use it as a common pasture (compascere).<sup>a</sup>

13 An argument is derived from genus in the following way: Since all the silver was bequeathed to the wife, the coin which was left in the house must also have been bequeathed. For the species is never separated from its genus, as long as it keeps its proper name; coin keeps the name of silver; therefore it seems to have been included in the legacy.

14 An argument is derived from the species of a genus as follows (sometimes for greater clarity we may call a species a part): If Fabia's husband has bequeathed her a sum of money on condition that she be mater familias, and she has not come under his manus, nothing is due her. For "wife" is a genus, and of this genus there are two species; one matres familias, that is, those who have come senschaften X. (1888), pp. 229-233. Quintilian (V, x, 85) says that the argument is too silly to mention, except that Cicero had included it in the Topica.

CICERO

manum convenerunt; altera earum, quae tantum modo uxores habentur. Qua in parte cum fuerit Fabia, legatum ei <sup>1</sup> non videtur.

15 A similitudine hoc modo: Si aedes eae corruerunt vitiumve faciunt quarum usus fructus legatus est, heres restituere non debet nec reficere, non magis quam servum restituere, si is cuius usus fructus legatus esset deperisset.

16 A differentia: Non, si uxori vir legavit argentum omne quod suum esset, idcirco quae in nominibus fuerunt legata sunt. Multum enim differt in arcane positum sit argentum an in tabulis debeatur.<sup>2</sup>

17 Ex contrario autem sic: Non debet ea mulier cui vir bonorum suorum usum fructum legavit cellis vinariis et oleariis plenis relictis, putare id ad se pertinere. Usus enim, non abusus, legatus est. Ea sunt inter se contraria.<sup>3</sup>

18 IV. Ab adiunctis: Si ea mulier testamentum fecit quae se capite nunquam deminuit, non videtur ex edicto praetoris secundum eas tabulas possessio dari. Adiungitur enim, ut secundum servorum, <sup>1</sup> ei omitted by O.

<sup>2</sup> debeatur bracketed by Hotman.

<sup>3</sup> Ea . . . contraria bracketed by Hammer.

---

<sup>o</sup> In the primitive Roman form of marriage the woman passed from the power of her father into that of her husband and became a member of his agnatic family; such a wife was called mater familias and said to be in manu. Besides this there grew up very early another form of marriage by which the woman remained in patria potestate and did not change her family. This ultimately became the prevailing form. Cf. Sohm-Mitteis-Wenger, Institutionen, Geschichte und System des römischen Privatrechts, 17th ed. (1933), pp.

under manus; the second, those who are regarded only as wives (uxores). Since Fabia belonged to the second class, it is clear that no legacy was made to her.<sup>a</sup>

- 15 An argument is based on similarity or analogy in the following manner: If one has received by will the usufruct of a house, and the house has collapsed or is in disrepair, the heir (i.e. the remainder-man) is not bound to restore or repair it, any more than he would have been bound to replace a slave of which the usufruct had been bequeathed, if the slave had died.
- 16 An argument based on difference: If a man has bequeathed to his wife all the money that is his, he has not, therefore, bequeathed what is owed him; for it makes a great difference whether the money is stored in a strong-box or is on his books.
- 17 An argument from contraries, as follows: A woman whose husband has bequeathed her the usufruct of his property and has left full wine and oil cellars ought not to think that she has a right in these. For it is use and not consumption that was bequeathed. And these are contrary one to the other.<sup>b</sup>
- 18 IV. From adjuncts (corollaries): If a woman who has never changed her civil status makes a will, it appears that possession of the inheritance cannot be given by praetorian edict in accordance with the terms of this instrument. For the corollary is that it would appear that possession is given by praetorian

506-509; Corbett, P. E., The Roman Law of Marriage, pp. 68-106, 113.

<sup>b</sup> "As the usufructuary was bound to return the thing in good condition, there was no usufruct of perishables." Buckland, A Text-Book of Roman Law, 2nd ed., p. 271.

secundum exsulum, secundum puerorum tabulas possessio videatur ex edicto dari.

19 Ab antecedentibus autem et consequentibus et repugnantibus hoc modo; ab antecedentibus: Si viri culpa factum est divortium, etsi mulier nuntium remisit, tamen pro liberis manere nihil oportet.

20 A consequentibus: Si mulier, cum fuisset nupta cum eo quicum conubium non esset, nuntium remisit; quoniam qui nati sunt patrem non sequuntur, pro liberis manere nihil oportet.

21 A repugnantibus: Si paterfamilias uxori ancillarum usum fructum legavit a filio neque a secundo herede legavit, mortuo filio mulier usum fructum non amittet. Quod enim semel testamento alicui datum est, id ab eo invito cui datum est auferri non potest. Repugnat<sup>1</sup> enim recte accipere et invitum reddere.

22 Ab efficientibus rebus hoc modo: Omnibus est ius parietem directum ad parietem communem adiungere vel solidum vel fornicatum. Sed qui in pariete communi demoliendo damni infecti promiserit, non debet praestare quod fornix viti fecerit. Non enim eius vitio qui demolitus est damnum factum est, sed eius operis vitio quod ita aedificatum est ut suspendi non posset.

<sup>1</sup> repugnat O: pugnat codd.

---

<sup>a</sup> Until the time of Hadrian a woman could not make a will unless she became sui iuris by suffering capitis deminutio (change of civil status) and coming under a tutor. V. Buckland, op. cit., p. 288; and for capitis deminutio, pp. 134–141.

<sup>b</sup> The rule was that if a woman or her paterfamilias divorced her husband without due cause on his part, one-sixth of the dowry was left with the husband for each child of the marriage. (Not more than half the total dowry was so left.) V. Corbett, op. cit., p. 192, and the authorities there cited.

edict in accordance with the terms of the wills of slaves, exiles, and minors.<sup>a</sup>

19 From antecedents, consequents and contradictions in the following manner. From antecedents: If a divorce occurs through an offence by the husband, although the woman has sent the letter of divorce-ment, still no part of the dowry should be left for the children.<sup>b</sup>

20 From consequents: If a woman, married to a man with whom she does not have conubium (right of marriage), has divorced him, inasmuch as the children who have been born do not follow the father, no part of the dowry should be left for the children.

21 From contradictions: If a pater familias has bequeathed to his wife the usufruct of maid-servants as a proviso in naming his son as heir, and has made no such proviso in naming a reversionary heir, on the death of the son the woman will not lose her usufruct. For what has once been given to some one by will cannot be taken from him to whom it has been given without his consent. For "receiving legally" and "surrendering unwillingly" are contradictory.

22 From efficient causes in this way: Anyone has a right to build a wall to touch a party wall at a right angle; and this new wall may be either solid or resting on arches. But a man who has given guarantees against eventual damage in demolishing a party wall will not be bound to make good the loss which is caused by an arch. For the damage was not caused by any fault of the man who demolished the party wall, but by a defect in building the arch which was so constructed that it could not be supported (without the party wall).

23 Ab effectis rebus hoc modo: Cum mulier viro in manum convenit, omnia quae mulieris fuerunt viri fiunt dotis nomine.

Ex comparatione autem omnia valent quae sunt huius modi: Quod in re maiore valet valeat in minore,<sup>1</sup> ut si in urbe fines non reguntur, nec aqua in urbe arceatur. Item contra: Quod in minore valet, valeat in maiore. Licet idem exemplum convertere. Item: Quod in re pari valet valeat in hac quae par est; ut: Quoniam usus auctoritas fundi biennium est, sit etiam aedium. At in lege aedes non appellantur et sunt ceterarum rerum omnium quarum annuus est usus. Valeat aequitas, quae paribus in causis paria iura desiderat.

24 Quae autem assumuntur extrinsecus, ea maxime ex auctoritate ducuntur. Itaque Graeci talis argumentationes ἀτέχνους vocant, id est artis expertis, ut si ita respondeas: Quoniam P. Scaevola id solum esse ambitus aedium dixerit, quod<sup>2</sup> parietis communis tegendi causa tectum proiceretur, ex quo

<sup>1</sup> re minore OLV.

<sup>2</sup> quod vulg.: quantum OB Boethius: quo d: quoad Valla.

---

<sup>a</sup> For the discussion of the law in such a case, v. Buckland, op. cit., p. 107; Corbett, op. cit., p. 149.

<sup>b</sup> The boundaries (fines) here referred to were strips of land five feet wide between estates, which could not be acquired by either neighbour through usucapio. The action for excluding water (actio aquae pluviae arcendae) lay against your neighbour who diverted a water-course to your land.

<sup>c</sup> In case of a farm, the vendor sells the use (usus) of it and warrants the possessor that he is well and duly seized of the property. This warranty (auctoritas) runs for two years, after which the purchaser has title by adverse pos-

23 From effects as follows: When a woman comes under the manus (legal control) of her husband, all her property goes to the husband under the designation of dowry.<sup>a</sup>

All arguments from comparison are valid if they are of the following character: What is valid in the greater should be valid in the less, as for example since there is no action for regulating boundaries <sup>b</sup> in the city, there should be no action for excluding water in the city. Likewise the reverse: What is valid in the less should be valid in the greater; the same example may be used if reversed. Likewise: What is valid in one of two equal cases should be valid in the other; for example: Since use and warranty run for two years in the case of a farm, the same should be true of a (city) house. But a (city) house is not mentioned in the law, and is included with the other things use of which runs for one year.<sup>c</sup> Equity should prevail, which requires equal laws in equal cases.

24 Extrinsic arguments depend principally on authority. Therefore the Greeks call such means of argumentation ἀτεχνοί (atechnoi), that is, not invented by the art of the orator; such would be the case if you answered your opponent as follows: Since Publius Scaevola <sup>d</sup> has said that the ambitus of a house is only that space which is covered by a roof put up to protect a party wall, from which roof the session (usucapio). V. Th. Mommsen, Ad legem de scribis et viatoribus et de auctoritate commentationes duae, Doctoral Dissertation (1843), pp. 18-20 = Gesammelte Schriften III, pp. 463-464.

<sup>d</sup> A jurisconsult, whose opinion on a point of law would have weight (auctoritas) with a jury.

CICERO

tecto in eius <sup>1</sup> aedis qui protexisset aqua deflueret, id ambitus <sup>2</sup> videri.

- 25 His igitur locis qui sunt expositi ad omne argumentum reperiendum <sup>3</sup> tamquam elementis quibusdam significatio et demonstratio <sup>4</sup> datur. Utrum igitur hactenus satis est? Tibi quidem tam acuto et tam occupato puto. V. Sed quoniam avidum hominem ad has discendi epulas recepi, sic accipiam, ut reliquiarum sit potius aliquid quam te hinc patiar
- 26 non satiatum discedere. Quando ergo unus quisque eorum locorum quos exposui sua quaedam habet membra, ea quam subtilissime persequamur.

- Et primum de ipsa definitione dicatur. Definitio est oratio quae id quod definitur explicat quid sit. Definitionum autem duo genera prima: unum earum rerum quae sunt, alterum earum quae intel-
- 27 leguntur. Esse ea dico quae cerni tangique possunt, ut fundum aedes, parietem stillicidium, mancipium pecudem, supellectilem penus et cetera; quo ex genere quaedam interdum vobis definienda sunt. Non esse rursus ea dico quae tangi demonstrarive non possunt, cerni tamen animo atque intellegi possunt, ut si usus capionem, si tutelam, si gentem,

<sup>1</sup> tecto in eius Boethius: in tectum eius codd.

<sup>2</sup> ambitus Parker, Hermathena xiii (1905), p. 252: tibi ius C.

<sup>3</sup> reperiendum omitted by O.

<sup>4</sup> After demonstratio the MSS. except O have ad reperiendum.

---

* There is a vagueness about the meaning of ambitus. The grammarian Festus (Paul. ex Fest., p. 16, Mueller) says that "properly speaking it is a space of 2½ feet left as a passage way between neighbouring buildings."

The passage in the text is obscure, and probably corrupt.

water flows into the home of the man who has put up the roof, this seems to be the meaning of ambitus.<sup>a</sup>

25 Well then, the topics which I have set forth as the rudiments so to speak for discovering any argument, have been defined and described. Is it enough to have gone thus far? For you, I think, yes; you are so quick to get the point, and so busy. V. But as I have a guest with such a ravenous appetite for this feast of learning, I shall provide such an abundance that there may be something left from the banquet, rather than let you go un-

26 satisfied. Therefore, since each of the topics which I have set forth has certain subdivisions of its own, let us hunt them out even to the minutest detail.

First of all, then let us take up definition itself. A definition is a statement which explains what the thing defined is. Of definitions there are two prime classes, one defining things that exist, and the other, things which are apprehended only by the 27 mind. By things that exist I mean such as can be seen and touched: for example, farm, house, wall, rain-water, slave, animal, furniture, food, etc.; sometimes you<sup>b</sup> have to define objects of this class. On the other hand, by things which do not exist I mean those which cannot be touched or pointed out, but can, for all that, be perceived by the mind and comprehended; for example, you might define acquisition by long possession, guardianship, gens,<sup>c</sup>

The sense would be improved by bracketing communis. I owe this emendation to my colleague, A. R. Bellinger.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. the jurisconsults.

<sup>c</sup> Gens included all who bore a common name, such as Claudius, Julius.

CICERO

si agnationem definias, quarum rerum nullum subest<sup>1</sup> corpus, est tamen quaedam conformatio insignita et impressa intelligentia, quam notionem voco. Ea saepe in argumentando definitione explicanda est.

28 Atque etiam definitiones aliae sunt partitionum aliae divisionum; partitionum, cum res ea quae proposita est quasi in membra discerpitur, ut si quis ius civile dicat id esse quod in legibus, senatus consultis, rebus iudicatis, iuris peritorum auctoritate, edictis magistratum, more, aequitate consistat. Divisionum autem definitio formas omnis complectitur quae sub eo genere sunt quod definitur hoc modo: Abalienatio est eius rei quae mancipi est aut traditio alteri nexu aut in iure cessio inter quos ea iure civili fieri possunt.

VI. Sunt etiam alia genera definitionum, sed ad huius libri institutum illa nihil pertinent; tantum 29 est dicendum qui sit definitionis modus. Sic igitur veteres praecipunt: cum sumpseris ea quae sint ei rei quam definire velis cum aliis communia, usque eo persequi, dum proprium efficiatur, quod nullam in aliam rem transferri possit. Ut haec: Hereditas est pecunia. Commune adhuc; multa enim genera

---

<sup>1</sup> After subest the MSS. have quasi: bracketed by Proust.

<sup>a</sup> Relation on the father's side.

<sup>b</sup> Mancipatio (grasping by the hand) was an ancient method of transferring "by copper and scales" in the presence of five witnesses and a weigher, certain property known as res mancipi, i.e. Italian soil, rustic servitudes (easements) such as the right to cross land (via, iter, actus, aquaeductus), slaves and beasts of draught or burden. The second method required the intended vendee to claim the property in court: the vendor put up no defence, and the court gave title. V. Buckland, op. cit., pp. 226-241. Traditio nexu is here equivalent to mancipatio. V. Pflüger, Zur

agnation;<sup>a</sup> of these things there is no body, but a clear pattern and understanding impressed on the mind, and this I call a notion. In the course of argumentation this notion frequently requires definition.

28 Secondly, definitions are made partly by enumeration and partly by analysis; by enumeration, when the thing which has been set up for definition is divided into its members as it were: for instance, if one should define the civil law as made up of statutes, decrees of the Senate, judicial decisions, opinions of those learned in the law, edicts of magistrates, custom, and equity. Definition by analysis includes all the species that come under the genus which is being defined, as follows: Abalienatio (transfer of property according to the forms of civil law) of a thing which is mancipi is either transfer with legal obligation (mancipatio) or cession at law (fictitious suit) between those who can do this in accordance with the civil law.<sup>b</sup>

VI. There are also other kinds of definition, but they have no connexion with the purpose of this book; we have only to describe the method of 29 definition. The ancients, then, lay down the rules as follows: when you have taken all the qualities which the thing you wish to define has in common with other things, you should pursue the analysis until you produce its own distinctive quality which can be transferred to no other thing. Here is an example: An inheritance is property. This is a common quality; for there are many kinds of Lehre vom Erwerbe des Eigentums nach römischen Recht, pp. 97-110, where the extensive literature on the subject is cited. Also v. Mitteis, Römisches Privatrecht, pp. 136-146.

CICERO

pecuniae. Adde quod sequitur: quae morte alicuius ad quempiam pervenit. Nondum est definitio; multis enim modis sine hereditate teneri pecuniae mortuorum possunt. Unum adde verbum: iure; iam a communitate res diiuncta videbitur, ut sit explicata definitio sic: Hereditas est pecunia quae morte alicuius ad quempiam pervenit iure. Nondum est satis; adde: nec ea aut legata testamento aut possessione retenta; confectum est. Itemque:<sup>1</sup> Gentiles sunt inter se qui eodem nomine sunt. Non est satis. Qui ab ingenuis oriundi sunt. Ne id quidem satis est. Quorum maiorum nemo servitatem servivit. Abest etiam nunc. Qui capite non sunt deminuti. Hoc fortasse satis est. Nihil enim video Scaevolam pontificem ad hanc definitionem addidisse. Atque haec ratio valet in utroque genere definitionum, sive id quod est, sive id quod intellegitur definiendum est.

30 Partitionum autem<sup>2</sup> et divisionum genus quale esset ostendimus, sed quid inter se differant planius dicendum est. In partitione quasi membra sunt, ut corporis, caput, umeri, manus, latera, crura, pedes et cetera. VII. In divisione formae, quas Graeci

<sup>1</sup> After itemque the MSS. have ut illud: bracketed by Friedrich.

<sup>2</sup> autem bracketed by Lambinus.

---

* "Where a hereditas was, or had been iacens (there being no heres suus or necessarius, who was in without acceptance), anyone might, by taking the property or part of it not yet possessed by the heres, even after acceptance, become owner by holding it (even land) for one year without good faith." Buckland, op. cit., p. 244. Gaius II, 52.

<sup>b</sup> Capitis deminutio (loss of civil capacity) was of three degrees: maxima, loss of liberty, i.e. enslavement, involving loss of citizenship and family rights; media or minor, loss of property. Add the following: which comes to some one at the death of another. It is not yet a definition; for the property of the dead can be held in many ways without inheritance. Add one word, "legally." By now the thing will seem to be separated from those with which it shares qualities in common, so that the definition has been developed as follows: An inheritance is property which has come to one legally at the death of another. It is still not satisfactory. Add: and this property was not bequeathed by will or kept by adverse possession.<sup>a</sup> The definition is complete. A second example follows: "Gentiles" are those who have the same name in common. That is not enough. Who are sprung from freeborn ancestors. Not even that is sufficient. None of whose ancestors has ever been in slavery. There is still something wanting. Who have never suffered loss of civil capacity.<sup>b</sup> This is probably enough; for I see that Scaevola the pontiff<sup>c</sup> added nothing to this definition. Furthermore, the method is valid in either kind of definition, whether we must define what exists or what is apprehended by the mind.

30 We have explained the nature of enumeration and analysis, but must make plainer how they differ from one another. In an enumeration we have, as it were, parts, as for example a body has head, shoulders, hands, sides, legs, feet and so forth. VII. In analysis we have classes or kinds which the citizenship and family rights without loss of liberty; minima, change of family position, e.g. by adoption.

<sup>a</sup> Quintus Mucius Scaevola, consul 95 B.C. Pontifex Maximus and jurisconsult. Cicero, who was his pupil, speaks of him in de Oratore (i. 180) as the ablest orator in the ranks of jurists and the ablest jurist in the ranks of orators.

CICERO

εἶδη vocant, nostri, si qui haec forte tractant, species appellant, non pessime id quidem sed inutiliter ad mutandos casus in dicendo. Nolim enim, ne si Latine quidem dici possit, specierum et speciebus dicere; et saepe his casibus utendum est; at formis et formarum velim. Cum autem utroque verbo idem significetur, commoditatem in dicendo non arbitror neglegendam.

- 31 Genus et formam definiunt hoc modo: Genus est notio ad pluris differentias pertinens; forma est notio cuius differentia ad caput generis et quasi fontem referri potest. Notionem appello quod Graeci tum ἔννοιαν tum πρόληψιν. Ea est insita et ante<sup>1</sup> percepta<sup>2</sup> cuiusque cognitio enodationis indigens. Formae sunt igitur<sup>3</sup> eae in quas genus sine ullius praetermissione dividitur; ut si quis ius in legem, morem, aequitatem dividat. Formas qui putat idem esse quod partis, confundit artem et similitudine quadam conturbatus non satis acute quae
- 32 sunt discernenda distinguit. Saepe etiam definiunt et oratores et poetae per translationem verbi ex similitudine cum aliqua suavitate. Sed ego a vestris exemplis nisi necessario non recedam. Solebat igitur Aquilius collega et familiaris meus, cum de

<sup>1</sup> ante C: animo Hammer.

<sup>2</sup> percepta codd.: praeepta f.

<sup>3</sup> igitur bracketed by Orelli: omitted by f.

---

<sup>a</sup> The difficulty exists, of course, only in Latin. I shall translate Cicero's forma by "species."

<sup>b</sup> For the interpretation of this passage, v. Norman W. De Witt, The Gods of Epicurus and the Canon, Transactions of the Royal Society of Canada, 1942, Section II, p. 41.

Greeks call εἶδη (eidê), and Latin authors who have happened to treat of the subject call species, not a bad translation, to be sure, but inconvenient if we wish to use different cases of the word in a sentence. For even if Latin usage allowed, I should be unwilling to say specierum (genitive plural) or speciebus (dative or ablative plural). Still we often have to use these cases. But I should prefer formis and formarum. Since, however, either word has the same meaning, I think one should not fail to use the convenient word.<sup>a</sup>

- 31 They define genus and species as follows: a genus is a concept which applies to several different classes; species is a concept whose special characteristic can be referred to a head and source, 'as it were, in the genus. By concept I mean what the Greeks call now ἐννοια (ennoia), now πρόληψις (prolepsis). This is an innate knowledge of anything, which has been previously apprehended, and needs to be unfolded.<sup>b</sup> The species are the classes into which the genus is divided without omitting anything, as, for example, if one should divide jurisprudence into statutes, custom, and equity. If anyone thinks that species are the same as parts, he brings confusion into the subject, and misled by a casual resemblance fails to distinguish sharply enough between things which
- 32 must be separated. Orators and poets often go so far as to define by comparison, using metaphors with a pleasing effect. But I, unless forced to do so, will not use any examples except those supplied by you jurisconsults. A case in point is Aquilius, my colleague and intimate friend.<sup>c</sup> When there litoribus ageretur, quae omnia publica esse vultis, quaerentibus eis quos ad id pertinebat, quid esset litus, ita definire, qua fluctus eluderet; hoc est, quasi qui adulescentiam florem aetatis, senectutem occasum vitae velit definire; translatione enim utens discedebat a verbis propriis rerum ac suis. Quod ad definitiones attinet, hactenus; reliqua videamus.

<sup>c</sup> Gaius Aquilius Gallus, a distinguished jurist, was praetor with Cicero in 66 B.C.

33 VIII. Partitione tum sic utendum est, nullam ut partem relinquant; ut, si partiri velis tutelas, inscienter facias, si ullam praetermittas. At si stipulationum aut iudiciorum formulas partiare, non est vitiosum in re infinita praetermittere aliquid. Quod idem in divisione vitiosum est. Formarum enim certus est numerus quae cuique generi subiiciantur; partium distributio saepe est infinitior, was a discussion of shores, which you jurists claim are all public property, and those who were interested in the matter asked what a shore was, he was accustomed to define it as the place upon which the waves play. This is as if one should choose to define youth as the flower of a man's age or old age as the sunset of life, for by using a metaphor he abandoned the language proper to the object and to his profession. As for definition, this is enough; let us now consider the other points.
34 tamquam rivorum a fonte diductio. Itaque in oratoriis artibus quaestionis genere proposito, quot eius formae sint, subiungitur absolute. At cum de ornamentis verborum sententiarumve praecipitur, quae vocant σχήματα, non fit idem. Res est enim infinitior; ut ex hoc quoque intellegatur quid velimus inter partitionem et divisionem interesse. Quamquam enim vocabula prope idem valere videbantur,<sup>1</sup> tamen quia res differebant, nomina rerum distare voluerunt.

<sup>1</sup> videbantur Orelli: videantur C: videntur Boethius.

- 33 VIII. You must at times use enumeration with care not to omit any part. For instance, if you wished to enumerate guardianships, you must be stupid to pass over any. But if you were enumerating the formulas for contracts and actions, it is not wrong to pass over something in a class which is indefinitely large. But the same procedure is faulty in an analysis. For there is a fixed number of species which are included in each genus. But a division into parts is more indefinite, like drawing
- 34 streams of water from a fountain. And so in textbooks of rhetoric when the genus "quaestio" (subject for debate) is under discussion, there is added a precise statement of the number of its species.<sup>a</sup> But the same method is not used when rules are being given about the figures of style and thought which they call σχήματα (schemata), for there is no limit to this subject. From this, too, it may be plain what distinction we wish to make between enumeration and analysis. For although the words seemed to mean almost the same, it was desired that the names of the processes should differ, because the processes were distinct.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. the analysis in de Inv. I, 10.

35 Multa etiam ex notatione sumuntur. Ea est autem, cum ex vi nominis argumentum elicitur; quam Graeci ἐτυμολογίαν appellant, id est verbum ex verbo veriloquium; nos autem novitatem verbi non satis apti fugientes genus hoc notationem appellamus, quia sunt verba rerum notae. Itaque hoc quidem Aristoteles σύμβολον appellat, quod Latine est nota. Sed cum intellegitur quid signi-

36 ficetur, minus laborandum est de nomine. Multa igitur in disputando notatione eliciuntur ex verbo, ut cum quaeritur postliminium quid sit—non dico quae sint postlimini; nam id caderet in divisionem, quae talis est: Postliminio redeunt haec: homo, navis, mulus clitellarius, equus, equa quae frenos recipere solet—; sed cum ipsius postlimini vis quaeritur et verbum ipsum notatur; in quo Servius noster, ut opinor, nihil putat esse notandum nisi post, et liminium illud productionem esse verbi vult, ut in finitimo, legitimo, aeditimo non plus inesse

37 timum quam in meditullio tullium; Scaevola autem P. F. iunctum putat esse verbum, ut sit in eo et post et limen; ut, quae a nobis alienata, cum ad hostem pervenerint, ex suo tamquam limine exierint, hinc

---

<sup>a</sup> Men (or chattels) captured by the enemy lost their legal position in the Roman state, but regained it on returning home. In the case of citizens the right of postliminium was contingent on there being no disgrace in their capture by the enemy.

<sup>b</sup> Meditullium is probably from medius and tullus, an old form of tellus (earth). The Servius referred to is Servius Sulpicius Rufus, consul 51 B.C., a noted juriconsult.

<sup>c</sup> v. p. 403, note c.

35 Many arguments are derived from notatio (etymology). This is what is used when an argument is developed out of the meaning of a word. The Greeks call this ἐτυμολογία (etymologia), and this translated word for word would be in Latin veriloquium (veriloquence). But to avoid using a new word that is not very suitable, we call this kind notatio, because words are tokens (notae) of things. So Aristotle uses σύμβολον (symbolon) for the idea represented by the Latin nota. But when the meaning is clear, we need not be so particular about the word

36 which expresses it. In debate, as I have said, many arguments are developed from a word by etymology. An example would be the question as to the meaning of postliminium (reverter or return to one's former status)<sup>a</sup>—I do not mean what things are subject to postliminium, for that would be a case for analysis, somewhat as follows: By the right of postliminium, the following return home: man, ship, pack-mule, stallion, mare which is customarily used with bridle;—but when the meaning of the term postliminium is sought, and etymology is applied to the word itself. In this connexion our friend Servius, I think, holds that post is the only part which determines the meaning, and will have it that -liminium is merely a formative suffix, as in fnitimus (neighbour), legitimus (lawful), aeditimus (attendant in a temple), the ending -timus has no more meaning than -tullium in meditullium

37 (middle).<sup>b</sup> But Scaevola, the son of Publius,<sup>c</sup> regards it as a compound word, the component parts being post (behind or after) and limen (threshold); as property of which we have lost control on its passing into the power of the enemy has departed, as it were, from its own threshold, hence when it returns ea cum redierint post ad idem limen, postliminio redisse videantur. Quo genere etiam Mancini causa defendi potest, postliminio redisse; deditum non esse, quoniam non sit receptus; nam neque deditionem neque donationem sine acceptione intellegi posse.

38 IX. Sequitur is locus qui constat ex eis rebus quae quodam modo adfectae sunt ad id de quo ambigitur; quem modo dixi in plures partes distributum. Cuius est primus locus ex coniugatione, quam Graeci συζυγίαν vocant, finitimus notationi, de qua modo dictum est; ut, si aquam pluviam eam modo intellegeremus quam imbri collectam videremus, veniret Mucius, qui, quia coniugata<sup>1</sup> verba essent pluvia et pluendo, diceret omnem aquam oportere arceri quae pluendo crevisset.

39 Cum autem a genere ducetur argumentum, non erit necesse id usque a capite arcessere. Saepe etiam citra licet, dum modo supra sit quod sumitur, quam id ad quod sumitur; ut aqua pluvia ultimo genere ea est quae de caelo veniens crescit imbri, sed propiore, in quo quasi ius arcendi continetur, genus est aqua pluvia nocens: eius generis formae

<sup>1</sup> coniugata Of: iugata codd.

---

<sup>a</sup> Gaius Hostilius Mancinus was defeated by the army of Numantia in 136 B.C., and concluded a treaty. The Senate not only refused to accept the treaty, but delivered him to Numantia as a captive. The authorities of Numantia refused to receive him. He returned to Rome and resumed his place in the Senate, but was challenged on the ground that citizenship lost by delivery to the enemy could not be regained postliminio. (Cicero, de Oratore I, 181.) The case was settled by a special law confirming his citizenship. (Dig. 50. 7. 17).

<sup>b</sup> § 11.

afterward (post) to the same threshold it seems to have returned postliminio. The case of Mancinus can be defended in this style, by arguing that he returned by right of postliminium: he was not surrendered by the state as a captive because he was not accepted by the enemy. For surrender and gift have no meaning without acceptance.<sup>a</sup>

38 IX. Next comes the topic embracing circumstances which are in one way or another closely connected with the subject under inquiry. As stated above<sup>b</sup> this has many subdivisions. The first of these is "conjugation" (words etymologically related), which is called συζυγία (syzygia) by the Greeks, and is near akin to etymology, which we discussed a moment ago. For example, if we were defining rain-water as only that which we see collect from showers, Mucius would come to argue that because rain-water (pluvia) and rain (pluere) are "conjugate" words, all water which has risen because of rain should be excluded (from a neighbour's property).<sup>c</sup>

39 When, however, an argument is drawn from genus it will not be necessary to trace it back to its origin. Frequently one may stop short of that point, provided that what is assumed as a genus is higher than what is subsumed under it. For example, rain-water in the last analysis is water which falls from heaven and is increased by showers, but on a nearer analysis (and the legal principle of excluding rain-water depends on this) the genus is harmful rain-water. Of this there are two species: one which does damage because of a fault in the land,

<sup>a</sup> In certain circumstances A could be restrained by an actio aquae pluviae arcendae (suit for keeping off rain-water) from allowing rain-water to run from his land to B's.

loci vitio et manu nocens, quarum altera iubetur ab 40 arbitro coerceri altera non iubetur. Commode etiam tractatur haec argumentatio quae ex genere sumitur, cum ex toto partis persequere hoc modo: Si dolus malus est, cum aliud agitur aliud simulatur, enumerare licet quibus id modis fiat, deinde in eorum aliquem id quod arguas dolo malo factum includere; quod genus argumenti in primis firmum videri solet.

41 X. Similitudo sequitur, quae late patet, sed oratoribus et philosophis magis quam vobis. Etsi enim omnes loci sunt omnium disputationum ad argumenta suppeditanda, tamen aliis disputationibus abundantius occurrunt aliis angustius. Itaque genera tibi nota sint; ubi autem eis utare, quae-42 stiones ipsae te admonebunt. Sunt enim simili-tudines quae ex pluribus collationibus perveniunt quo volunt hoc modo: Si tutor fidem praestare debet, si socius, si cui mandaris, si qui fiduciam acceperit, debet etiam procurator. Haec ex pluribus perveniens quo vult appellatur inductio, quae Graece ἐπὶ πλεονεξίᾳ nominatur, qua plurimum est usus in sermonibus 43 Socrates. Alterum similitudinis genus collatione sumitur, cum una res uni, par pari comparatur hoc modo: Quem ad modum, si in urbe de finibus controversia est, quia fines magis agrorum videntur esse quam urbis, finibus regendis adigere arbitrum non possis, sic, si aqua pluvia in urbe nocet, quoniam and the other because of the work of man. The law provides that one of these shall be restrained 40 by the arbitrator, but not the other. It makes a neat treatment of this argument from genus when you can tell off the parts of the whole, as follows: If "fraud" is defined as doing one thing and pretending to do another, one may enumerate the various ways in which this can be done, and include under one of these heads the act which you allege was fraudulently committed. This kind of argument generally seems highly cogent.

41 X. Similarity comes next. This is an extensive topic, but of more interest to orators and philosophers than to you jurists. For although all topics can be used to supply arguments in all sorts of debate, still they occur more frequently in some debates and more rarely in others. Well then, know the types of argument; the case itself will instruct you when 42 to use them. For example, there are certain arguments from similarity which attain the desired proof by several comparisons, as follows: If honesty is required of a guardian, a partner, a bailee, and a trustee, it is required of an agent. This form of argument which attains the desired proof by citing several parallels is called induction, in Greek ἐπαγωγή (epagoge); Socrates frequently used this in his dia-
 43 logues. Another kind of argument from similarity rests on comparison, when one thing is compared to one, equal to equal, as follows: If there is a dispute about boundary lines in the city you could not require arbitration for the regulation of boundaries, because the whole matter of boundary regulation applies to country property rather than to city; on the same principle, if rain-water does damage in the res tota magis agrorum est, aquae pluviae arcendae 44 adigere arbitrum non possis. Ex eodem simili-tudinis loco etiam exempla sumuntur, ut Crassus in causa Curiana exemplis plurimis usus est, qui testamento sic heredes instituti,<sup>1</sup> ut si filius natus esset in decem mensibus isque mortuus prius quam in suam tutelam venisset, hereditatem obtinuissent.

CICERO

Quae commemoratio exemplorum valuit, eaque vos 45 in respondendo uti multum soletis. Ficta enim exempla similitudinis habent vim; sed ea oratoria magis sunt quam vestra; quamquam uti etiam vos soletis, sed hoc modo: Finge mancipio aliquem dedisse id quod mancipio dari non potest. Num idcirco id eius factum est qui accepit? aut num is qui mancipio dedit ob eam rem se ulla re obligavit?
In hoc genere oratoribus et philosophis concessum est, ut muta etiam loquantur, ut mortui ab inferis excitentur, ut aliquid quod fieri nullo modo possit augendae rei gratia dicatur aut minuendae, quae ὕπερβολή dicitur, multa alia mirabilia. Sed latior est campus illorum. Eisdem tamen ex locis, ut ante dixi, et [in]<sup>2</sup> maximis et minimis [in]<sup>3</sup> quaestionibus argumenta ducuntur.

<sup>1</sup> instituti: instituisset codd.: qui cum . . . instituti essent Madvig.

<sup>2</sup> in omitted by codd.

<sup>3</sup> in minimis Of: in omitted by V.

---

<sup>a</sup> v. p. 396, note 6, § 23.

<sup>b</sup> This is the famous causa Curiana, 92 B.C., in which Lucius Licinius Crassus successfully defended the claims of Curius, who was the reversionary heir named in the will city you could not require arbitration for excluding rain-water, since the whole matter applies rather 44 to country property.<sup>a</sup> Under the same topic of similarity comes also the citing of examples or parallel cases, as Crassus in his defence of Curius cited many cases of men who, having been named as heirs in the event that a son was born within ten months and died before attaining his majority, would have taken the inheritance. Such a citation of parallel cases carried the day, and you jurists make frequent 45 use of it in your responses.<sup>b</sup> In fact fictitious examples of similarity have their value, but they belong to oratory rather than to jurisprudence, although even you are wont to use them, but in the following way: Suppose some one has conveyed property by mancipation which cannot be so conveyed.<sup>c</sup> Does it therefore become the property of the one who has accepted it? Or has the one who has conveyed by mancipation in any way obligated himself by that act? Under this topic of similarity orators and philosophers have licence to cause dumb things to talk, to call on the dead to rise from the world below, to tell of something which could not possibly happen, in order to add force to an argument or lessen it: this is called ὑπερβολή (hyperbole). And they do many other strange things; but they have a wider field. Nevertheless, as I said above,<sup>d</sup> whether the question be important or trifling, the arguments for it are derived from the same topics.

against the attack of Scaevola, counsel for one Coponius. v. Brutus, 194-198, de Orat. I, 180, and the note on p. 226. (de Inv. II, 62.)

<sup>a</sup> On the restrictions of this form of conveyance, v. p. 400. note b, § 28.

<sup>d</sup> § 41.

- 46 XI. Sequitur similitudinem differentia rei maxime contraria superiori; sed est eiusdem dissimile et simile invenire. Eius generis haec sunt: Non, quem ad modum quod mulieri debeas, recte ipsi mulieri sine tutore auctore solvas, item, quod pupillo aut pupillae debeas, recte possis eodem modo solvere.
- 47 Deinceps locus est qui e contrario dicitur. Contrariorum autem genera plura; unum eorum quae in eodem genere plurimum differunt, ut sapientia stultitia. Eodem autem genere dicuntur quibus propositis occurrunt tamquam e regione quaedam contraria, ut celeritati tarditas, non debilitas. Ex quibus contrariis argumenta talia existunt: Si stultitiam fugimus, sapientiam sequamur, et bonitatem si malitiam. Haec quae ex eodem genere
- 48 contraria sunt appellantur adversa. Sunt enim alia contraria, quae privantia licet appellemus Latine, Graeci appellant στερητικά. Praeposito enim "in" privatur verbum ea vi quam haberet si "in" praepositum non fuisset, dignitas indignitas, humanitas inhumanitas, et cetera generis eiusdem, quorum tractatio est eadem quae superiorum quae adversa
- 49 dixi. Nam alia quoque sunt contrariorum genera, velut ea quae cum aliquo conferuntur, ut duplum simplum, multa pauca, longum breve, maius minus. Sunt etiam illa valde contraria quae appellantur negantia; ea ἀποφατικά Graece, contraria aientibus:

46 XI. After similarity comes difference, which is the exact opposite of the foregoing, but it is the same mental process which finds differences and similarities. The following is an example of this sort: Though you may properly pay a debt owed to a woman directly to the woman without the authorization of her tutor, you may not in the same way discharge a debt owed to a minor, whether male or female.

47 The next topic is that which is called "from contraries." But there are several sorts of contraries. One, of things which belong to the same class, but differ absolutely, as wisdom and folly. Words are said to belong to the same class if when they are uttered they are met face to face, as it were, by certain opposites. For example slowness is contrary to speed, but weakness is not. From these contraries arguments develop such as these: If we shun folly (as of course we do), let us pursue wisdom; and kindness if we shun malice. These contraries which belong to the same class are called

48 opposites. For there are other contraries which we may call privantia (privatives) in Latin; the Greeks call them στερητικά (steretica). For if "in" is prefixed, a word loses the force which it would have if "in" were not prefixed, such as dignity and indignity, humanity and inhumanity and others of this sort; these are handled in the same way as the former

49 class which I called "opposites." There are still other kinds of contraries, such as those which are compared with something, as double and single, many and few, long and short, greater and less. There are also those intensely contrary expressions which are called negatives, in Greek ἀποφατικά (apophatica), being contrary to affirmative, as shown

Si hoc est, illud non est. Quid enim opus exemplo est? Tantum intellegatur, in argumento quaerendo contrariis omnibus contraria non convenire.

- 50 Ab adiunctis autem posui equidem exemplum paulo ante, multa adiungi, quae suscipienda essent si statuissimus ex edicto secundum eas tabulas possessionem dari, quas is instituisset cui testamenti factio nulla esset. Sed locus hic magis ad coniecturales causas, quae versantur in iudiciis, valet, cum quaeritur quid aut sit aut evenerit aut futurum
51 sit aut quid omnino fieri possit. XII. Ac loci quidem ipsius forma talis est. Admonet autem hic locus, ut quaeratur quid ante rem, quid cum re, quid post rem evenerit. "Nihil hoc ad ius; ad Ciceronem," inquebat Gallus noster, si quis ad eum quid tale rettulerat, ut de facto quaereretur. Tu tamen pati ne nullum a me artis institutae locum praeteriri; ne, si nihil nisi quod ad te pertineat scribendum putabis, nimium te amare videare. Est igitur magna ex parte locus hic oratorius non modo non iuris consultorum, sed ne philosophorum quidem.
52 Ante rem enim quaeruntur quae talia sunt: apparatus, colloquia, locus, constitutum, convivium; cum re autem: pedum crepitus, strepitus hominum,<sup>1</sup> corporum umbrae et si quid eius modi; at post rem: pallor, rubor, titubatio, si qua alia signa con-

<sup>1</sup> strepitus hominum bracketed by Friedrich: not used by Boethius: pedum strepitus, crepitus hominum O.

<sup>a</sup> § 18.

<sup>b</sup> For Gallus, v. note c on p. 405.

in the following: If this is so, that is not. Need I give an example? It is sufficient to understand that in seeking an argument it is not every contrary which is suitable to be opposed to another.

- 50 I gave an example of argument from adjuncts (corollaries) a little while ago,<sup>a</sup> saying that there were many corollaries which would have to be admitted if we decided that possession of an inheritance could be given by the praetor's edict in accordance with the terms of a will made by one who did not have testamentary capacity. But this topic is of more value in conjectural issues which come up in trials, when it is a question of what is true or what has occurred, or what will happen, or
- 51 what can happen at all. XII. Such indeed is the bare outline of the topic. It suggests, however, that one should inquire what happened before an event, what at the same time, and what afterward. Our friend Gallus<sup>b</sup> used to say, "This is not a matter for the law but for Cicero" when any one brought to him a case which turned on a question of fact. You, however, will allow me to omit no part of the text-book which I have begun, lest you appear to be selfish if you think that only matters of interest to you should be included. As I was saying, this topic is of value largely to orators, and is not only not used by jurisconsults, but not even by philosophers.
- 52 To give examples: Circumstances before the event which are looked for are the following: preparations, conversation, the locale, a compact, a banquet; contemporary with the event: sound of feet, people shouting, shadows of bodies, and the like; after the event: pallor, a blush, trembling, and any turbationis et conscientiae, praeterea restinctus ignis, gladius cruentus ceteraque quae suspicionem facti possunt movere.

- 53 Deinceps est locus dialecticorum proprius ex consequentibus et antecedentibus et repugnantibus. Nam coniuncta, de quibus paulo ante dictum est, non semper eveniunt; consequentia autem semper. Ea enim dico consequentia quae rem necessario consequuntur; itemque et antecedentia et repugnantia. Quidquid enim sequitur quamque rem, id cohaeret cum re necessario; et quidquid repugnat, id eius modi est ut cohaerere nunquam possit. XIII. Cum tripertito igitur distribuatur locus hic, in consecutionem, antecessionem, repugnantiam, reperiendi argumenti locus simplex est, tractandi triplex. Nam quid interest, cum hoc sumpseris, pecuniam numeratam mulieri deberi cui sit argentum omne legatum, utrum hoc modo concludas argumentum: Si pecunia signata argentum est, legata est mulieri. Est autem pecunia signata argentum. Legata igitur est; an illo modo: Si numerata pecunia non est legata, non est numerata pecunia argentum. Est autem numerata pecunia argentum; legata igitur est; an illo modo: Non et legatum argentum est et non est legata numerata pecunia. Legatum autem argentum est; legata
- 54 igitur numerata pecunia est? Appellant autem dialectici eam conclusionem argumenti, in qua, cum primum assumpseris, consequitur id quod annexum est primum conclusionis modum; cum id quod other signs of agitation and a guilty conscience; and besides, an extinguished fire, a bloody sword, and other things which can arouse suspicions about a crime.<sup>a</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. de Inv. I, 38–41 for a fuller treatment of this topic.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. § 13.

53 Next comes the topic which is the peculiar province of the logicians—consequents, antecedents, and contradictories. For conjuncts, which have just been discussed, do not always happen, but consequents always do. By “consequents,” of course, I mean what necessarily follows something; and the same necessary connexion is characteristic of antecedents and contradictories. For whatever follows something is inevitably connected with it. And whatever is contradictory has such a nature that it can never be connected with it. XIII. Since, as I have said, this topic is divided into three parts—consequence, antecedence and contradiction—the topic is single as far as concerns the discovery of arguments, but the treatment is threefold. For what difference does it make in which way you draw a conclusion in this assumed case—that a woman who has received as a bequest “all the silver,” is entitled to the coin?<sup>b</sup> You may do it in this way: If coined money is silver, it was bequeathed to the woman. But coined money is silver, therefore it was bequeathed. Or in this way: If coin was not bequeathed, coin is not silver; but coin is silver; therefore it was bequeathed. Or in this way: It is not possible to say that silver was bequeathed, but coin was not; but silver was bequeathed, there-
54 fore coin was bequeathed. The logicians give the name of “first form of conclusion” to this way of concluding an argument, in which when you have assumed the first statement, that which is connected

CICERO

annexum est negaris, ut id quoque cui fuerit annexum negandum sit, secundus is appellatur concludendi modus; cum autem aliqua coniuncta negaris et ex eis unum aut plura sumpseris, ut quod 55 relinquitur tollendum sit, is tertius appellatur conclusionis modus. Ex hoc illa rhetorum ex contrariis conclusa, quae ipsi ἐνθύμηματα appellant; non quod omnis sententia proprio nomine ἐνθύμημα non dicatur, sed, ut Homerus propter excellentiam commune poetarum nomen efficit apud Graecos suum, sic, cum omnis sententia ἐνθύμημα dicatur, quia videtur ea quae ex contrariis conficitur acutissima, sola proprie nomen commune possedit. Eius generis haec sunt:

hoc metuere, alterum in metu non ponere!

eam quam nihil accusas damnas, bene quam meritam esse autumas .

---

<sup>a</sup> Strangely enough in a treatise which purports to be a translation of Aristotle, Cicero is here stating the five ἀναπόδεικτοι συλλογισμοί as formulated by the Stoics. (In terms of modern logic they are hypothetical and disjunctive syllogisms.) They are set forth by Sextus Empiricus in Πυρρώνειοι Ὑποτυπώσεις 157, as follows:

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| (1) If it is day, there is light.It is day,∴ there is light.                 | (Constructive hypothetical syllogism or modus ponendo ponens .)  |
| (2) If it is day, there is light.There is no light,∴ it is not day.          | (Destructive hypothetical syllogism or modus tollendo tollens .) |
| (3) It cannot be day and night at the same time.It is day,∴ it is not night. | (Affirmative disjunctive syllogism or modus ponendo tollens .)   |

with it follows as true;<sup>a</sup> when you deny what is connected, with the result that that statement with which it is connected must also be denied, this is called the second form; when, however, you deny that certain things are associated and assume the truth of one or more, so that the remaining statement must be excluded, this is called the third form.

55 To this belong those forms of conclusion from contraries adopted by teachers of rhetoric, to which they themselves have given the name ἐνθυμήματα (enthymemes). Not that any expression of thought is not properly called an ἐνθύμημα, but just as among the Greeks Homer by his outstanding merit has made the name of poet peculiarly his own,<sup>b</sup> although it is common to all poets, so although every expression of thought may be called ἐνθύμημα (enthymema), that one which is based on contraries has, because it seems the most pointed form of argument, appropriated the common name for its sole possession. The following lines will illustrate this sort of argument: Fear this, and not dread the other! You condemn the woman whom you accuse of nothing, and do you assert that the one deserves punishment whom

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| (4) It is either day or night.It is day,∴ it is not night. | (Affirmative disjunctive syllogism or modus ponendo tollens .) |
| (5) It is either day or night.It is not night,∴ it is day. | (Negative disjunctive syllogism or modus tollendo ponens .)    |

Cicero's sixth and seventh forms are merely re-statements of number three.

<sup>a</sup> "The Poet," without further qualification, meant Homer: v. A. M. Harmon, The Poet κατ' ἐξοχήν, Classical Philology xviii (1923), pp. 35-47.

CICERO

dicis <sup>1</sup> male merere?

id quod scis prodest nihil; id quod nescis obest?

56 XIV. Hoc disserendi genus attingit omnino vestras quoque in respondendo disputationes, sed philosophorum magis, quibus est cum oratoribus illa ex repugnantibus sententiis communis conclusio quae a dialecticis tertius modus, a rhetoribus ἐνθύμημα dicitur. Reliqui dialecticorum modi plures sunt, qui ex disiunctionibus constant: Aut hoc aut illud; hoc autem; non igitur illud. Itemque: Aut hoc aut illud; non autem hoc; illud igitur. Quae conclusiones idcirco ratae sunt quod in disiunctione
57 plus uno verum esse non potest. Atque ex eis conclusionibus quas supra scripsi prior quartus posterior quintus a dialecticis modus appellatur. Deinde addunt coniunctionum negantiam sic: Non et hoc et illud; hoc autem; non igitur illud. Hic modus est sextus. Septimus autem: Non et hoc et illud; non autem hoc; illud igitur. Ex eis modis conclusiones innumerabiles nascuntur, in quo est tota fere διαλεκτική. Sed ne hae quidem quas exposui ad hanc institutionem necessariae.

58 Proximus est locus rerum efficientium, quae causae appellantur; deinde rerum effectarum ab efficientibus causis. Harum exempla, ut reliquorum locorum, paulo ante posui equidem ex iure civili; sed haec patent latius.

XV. Causarum enim <sup>2</sup> genera duo sunt; unum, quod vi sua id quod sub eam vim subiectum est certe

<sup>1</sup> dicis added from Orator 166.

<sup>2</sup> enim codd: igitur Offβ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Ribbeck<sup>3</sup>, Trag. frag. incert. 200 f. Warmington, Remains of Old Latin, ii, p. 620.

you believe to deserve reward? What you know is of no use; is what you do not know a hindrance? <sup>a</sup>

56 XIV. This kind of argumentation has doubtless a relation to your discussions when you give answers on legal problems, but it more closely concerns the philosophers, who share with orators that method of drawing a conclusion from contradictory statements which the logicians call the third form, and the teachers of rhetoric, the ἐνθύμημα (enthymema). There are several other methods used by the logicians, which consist of propositions disjunctively connected: Either this or that is true; but this is true, therefore that is not. Similarly, either this or that is true; but this is not, therefore that is true. These conclusions are valid because in a disjunctive state-

57 ment not more than one half can be true. Of the conclusions given above, the former is called by the logicians the fourth method and the latter, the fifth. Then they add a denial of the possibility of two statements being conjoined, thus: This and that are not both true; but this is, therefore that is not. This is the sixth form. The seventh is: This and that are not both true; this is not, therefore that is. From these forms innumerable conclusions are derived; in fact almost the whole of διαλεκτική (dialectice) consists of this. But not even those which I have explained are necessary for this treatise.

58 The next topic concerns efficient forces which are called causes, and secondly, things effected by efficient causes. I gave examples of these, as of other topics, from the civil law a little while ago; but these have a wider application.

XV. There are two kinds of causes: one which by its own force surely produces that effect which efficit, ut: Ignis accendit; alterum, quod naturam efficiendi non habet sed sine quo effici non possit, ut si quis aes statuae causam velit dicere, quod sine eo 59 non possit effici. Huius generis causarum, sine quo non efficitur, alia sunt quieta, nihil agentia, stolidi quodam modo, ut locus, tempus, materia, ferramenta, et cetera generis eiusdem; alia autem praecursionem quandam adhibent ad efficiendum et quaedam afferunt per se adiuvantia, etsi non necessaria, ut: Amori congressio causam attulerat,<sup>1</sup> amor flagitio. Ex hoc genere causarum ex aeternitate pendentium fatum a Stoicis nectitur.

Atque ut earum causarum sine quibus effici non potest genera divisi, sic etiam efficientium dividi possunt. Sunt enim aliae causae quae plane efficiant nulla re adiuvante, aliae quae adiuvari velint, ut: Sapientia efficit sapientis sola per se; beatos efficiat 60 necne sola per sese quaestio est. Qua re cum in disputationem inciderit causa efficiens aliquid necessario, sine dubitatione licebit quod efficitur ab ea causa concludere. XVI. Cum autem erit talis causa, ut in ea non sit efficiendi necessitas, necessaria conclusio non sequitur. Atque illud quidem genus causarum quod habet vim efficiendi necessariam errorem afferre non fere solet; hoc autem sine quo depends on this force; for example, fire burns; the second which does not have the quality of producing an effect, but is that without which the effect cannot be produced; for example, if some one should call bronze the "cause" of a statue, because 59 the statue cannot be made without it. In this group, without which something is not produced, some causes are quiet, inactive, one might say, inert, as place, time, material, instruments, and other things of this type; others furnish a preparation for producing something, and add certain things which themselves give aid, although they are not necessary; for example: Meeting had given occasion for love, and love for crime. From this kind of causes following one another in an infinite series the Stoics have woven their doctrine of Fate.

<sup>1</sup> attulerat codd. dell. Boethius: attulerit codd.

Furthermore, just as I have distinguished the different kinds of causes without which something cannot be accomplished, so also may the efficient causes be distinguished. That is to say, there are some causes which clearly effect a result without aid from another source, and others which require assistance. For example, wisdom alone and unaided makes men wise, but it is a question whether or not it makes them happy, alone and unaided.
 60 Therefore, when in a discussion one comes on a cause which inevitably produces an effect, one may without hesitation state as an inference what is effected by that cause. XVI. But when you have a cause such that it does not involve the necessity of effecting a result, an inevitable conclusion does not follow. Furthermore, the kind of cause which has the power of inevitably effecting a result does not usually lead to a mistake. But the cause without non efficitur saepe conturbat. Non enim, si sine parentibus filii esse non possunt, propterea in parentibus causa fuit gignendi necessaria.

CICERO

- 61 Hoc igitur sine quo non fit, ab eo in quo certe fit diligenter est separandum. Illud enim est tamquam utinam ne in nemore Pelio—

Nisi enim “accedissent<sup>1</sup> abiegnae ad terram trabes,” Argo illa facta non esset, nec tamen fuit in his trabibus efficiendi vis necessaria. At cum in Aiacis navim crispisulcans igneum fulmen iniectum est, inflammatur navis necessario.

- 62 Atque etiam est causarum dissimilitudo, quod aliae sunt, ut sine ulla appetitione animi, sine voluntate, sine opinione suum quasi opus efficiant, vel ut omne intereat quod ortum sit; aliae autem aut voluntate efficiunt aut perturbatione animi aut habitu aut natura aut arte aut casu: voluntate, ut tu, cum hunc libellum legis; perturbatione, ut si quis eventum horum temporum timeat; habitu, ut qui facile et cito irascitur;<sup>2</sup> natura, ut vitium in dies crescat; arte, ut bene pingat; casu, ut prospere naviget. Nihil horum sine causa nec quidquam omnino; sed huius modi causae non necessariae.

- 63 Omnium autem causarum in aliis inest constantia, in aliis non inest. In natura et in<sup>3</sup> arte constantia

<sup>1</sup> accidissent AaV: cecidissent codd.

<sup>2</sup> irascitur Oc: irascatur codd.

<sup>3</sup> in omitted by ObL.

---

<sup>a</sup> The opening lines of Euripides' Medea as translated by Ennius. A longer extract is given in ad Her. ii, 22, 34, and Remains of Old Latin, i, p. 312, and Vahlen's Ennius, 246–254.

<sup>b</sup> Ribbeck<sup>s</sup>, frg. inc. 36–37. Warmington, ROL, ii, p. 408, following a suggestion of Ribbeck in the notes, assigns it to Accius.

which something is not effected often gives rise to confusion. For example, if there cannot be sons without parents, it does not follow that there was in the parents a necessary cause of procreation.

61 This cause without which something does not occur must, therefore, be carefully distinguished from that by which something surely occurs. The former may be illustrated by the line:

Would that ne'er in Pelion's grove <sup>a</sup>

For unless "the beams of fir had fallen to earth," the Argo would not have been built; yet there was no inevitable efficient power in the beams. But when "the fiery bolt cutting a wavy furrow fell on the ship of Ajax," <sup>b</sup> the ship is inevitably set on fire.

62 There is a further difference in causes in that some effect their own work as it were without any eagerness of mind, without desire, without opinion; for instance, the rule that everything that is born must die. Others work through desire, or mental agitation, or disposition, or nature, or art, or accident: by desire, as in your case when you read this book; by agitation, as when some one might dread the outcome of the present crisis; by disposition, as when one is easily or quickly moved to anger; by nature, for instance it comes about that a vice grows day by day; by art that one should paint well; by accident, that one should have a successful voyage. None of these events is without its cause, nor for that matter is anything at all; but causes of this nature are not inevitable.

63 Looking at all causes we find that in some there is uniformity of operation, and not in others. There is uniformity in nature and art, but none in the rest.

est, in ceteris nulla. XVII. Sed tamen earum causarum quae non sunt constantes aliae sunt perspicuae, aliae latent. Perspicuae sunt quae appetitionem animi iudiciumque tangunt; latent quae subiectae sunt fortunae. Cum enim nihil sine causa fiat, hoc ipsum est fortuna, qui eventus obscura causa et latenter efficitur.<sup>1</sup> Etiam ea quae fiunt partim sunt ignorata partim voluntaria; ignorata, quae necessitate effecta sunt; voluntaria, 64 quae consilio.<sup>2</sup> Nam iacere telum voluntatis est, ferire quem nolueris fortunae. Ex quo aries subicitur ille in vestris actionibus: si telum manu fugit magis quam iecit. Cadunt etiam in ignorationem atque imprudentiam perturbationes animi; quae quamquam sunt voluntariae—obiurgatione enim et admonitione deiciuntur—tamen habent tantos motus, ut ea quae voluntaria sunt aut necessaria interdum aut certe ignorata videantur.

65 Toto igitur loco causarum explicato, ex earum differentia in magnis quidem causis vel oratorum vel philosophorum magna argumentorum suppetit copia; in vestris autem si non uberior, at fortasse subtilior. Privata enim iudicia maximarum quidem rerum in iuris consultorum mihi videntur esse prudentia. Nam et adsunt multum et adhibentur in consilia et patronis diligentibus ad eorum pru-

<sup>1</sup> fortuna, eventus qui . . . efficitur Madvig: fortunæ eventus codd.

<sup>2</sup> After consilio the MSS. have Quae autem fortuna, vel ignorata vel voluntaria (What is accomplished by Fortune is either unintentional or voluntary): bracketed by Schuetz.

XVII. But of the causes which are not uniform in operation, some are evident and others are concealed. Those are evident which affect our impulses or judgement; those that are controlled by fortune are concealed. For since nothing happens without cause, this is exactly what Fortune is, an event which is the result of an obscure and unseen cause. Again, these results which are produced are partly unintentional, and partly due to our own volition. The unintentional are the product of necessity; those in our own volition are accomplished by design.

64 To illustrate, throwing a weapon is an act of the will, but hitting some one unintentionally is the act of Fortune. This distinction supplies the beam which you use to prop up a weak case in your pleadings: "Perchance he did not throw the weapon, but it slipped from his hand." Mental agitation belongs with acts performed in ignorance or lack of foresight. For though such a state of mind is voluntary—for these conditions yield to reproof and admonition—still they produce such violence of emotion that acts which are voluntary seem sometimes to be necessary and certainly unintentional.

65 We have now explained the topic of causes in full. From the great variety of them there is supplied a great store of arguments at least for the important discussions of orators and philosophers; in your profession, if they are less numerous, they are perhaps more subtle. At any rate private suits involving highly important issues seem to me to depend on the wisdom of the jurisconsults. For they frequently attend the trials and are invited to be members of the judge's advisory board, and supply weapons to diligent advocates who seek

CICERO

66 dentiam confugientibus hastas ministrant. In omnibus igitur eis iudiciis, in quibus ex fide bona est additum, ubi vero <sup>1</sup> etiam ut inter bonos bene agier oportet, in primisque in arbitrio rei uxoriae, in quo est quod eius aequius melius, parati eis esse debent. Illi dolum malum, illi fidem bonam, illi aequum bonum, illi quid socium socio, quid eum qui negotia aliena curasset ei cuius ea negotia fuissent, quid eum qui mandasset, eumve cui mandatum esset, alterum alteri praestare oporteret, quid virum uxori, quid uxorem viro tradiderunt. Licebit igitur diligenter argumentorum cognitis locis non modo oratoribus et philosophis, sed iuris etiam peritis copiose de consultationibus suis disputare.

67 XVIII. Coniunctus huic causarum loco ille locus est qui efficitur ex causis. Ut enim causa quid sit effectum indicat, sic quod effectum est quae fuerit causa demonstrat. Hic locus suppeditare solet oratoribus et poetis, saepe etiam philosophis, sed eis qui ornate et copiose loqui possunt, mirabilem copiam dicendi, cum denuntiant quid ex quaque re sit futurum. Causarum enim cognitio cognitionem eventorum facit.

68 Reliquus est comparationis locus, cuius genus et exemplum supra positum est ut ceterorum; nunc explicanda tractatio est. Comparantur igitur ea quae aut maiora aut minora aut paria dicuntur; in quibus spectantur haec: numerus, species, vis, quaedam etiam ad res aliquas affectio.

<sup>1</sup> vero omitted by Odcf.

66 succour in their skill. In all suits, then, in which the phrase "in good faith" appears in the formula, or the phrase "as one should deal honestly with honest men," and especially in arbitration over the return of dowry, where the principle "as is better and more equitable," is applied, the jurisconsults are bound to be ready (with their counsel). It is they who have defined fraud, good faith, equity, the duties of partner to partner, of an agent to his principal, of mandator and mandatee respectively, and of husband to wife and wife to husband. A careful study of the topics of arguments, therefore, will permit not only orators and philosophers, but even jurisconsults to discourse fluently on questions about which they have been consulted.

67 XVIII. Closely connected with the topic of causes is the topic of the effects of causes. For just as the cause shows what has been effected, so what has been effected points out what the cause was. This topic is wont to give a marvellous fulness of expression to orators and poets, and frequently even to philosophers (that is to those who can speak with elegance and fluency) when they declare what will be the outcome of each situation. For a knowledge of causes produces a knowledge of results.

68 There remains the topic of comparison; of this, as of the other, a definition and example were given above.<sup>a</sup> Now I must explain more fully how it is used. To begin then, comparison is made between things which are greater, or less or equal. And in this connexion the following points are considered: quantity, quality, value, and also a particular relation to certain things.

<sup>a</sup> § 23.

CICERO

69 Numero sic comparabuntur, plura bona ut paucioribus bonis anteponantur, pauciora mala malis pluribus, diuturniora bona brevioribus, longe et late pervagata angustis, ex quibus plura bona propagentur quaeque plures imitentur et faciant.

Specie autem comparantur, ut anteponantur quae propter se expetenda sunt eis quae propter aliud et ut innata atque insita assumptis atque adventiciis, integra contaminatis, iucunda minus iucundis, honesta ipsis etiam utilibus, proclivia laboriosis, necessaria non necessariis, sua alienis, rara vulgaribus, desiderabilia eis quibus facile carere possis, perfecta incohatis, tota partibus, ratione utentia rationis expertibus, voluntaria necessariis, animata inanimis, naturalia non naturalibus, artificiosa non artificiosis.

70 Vis autem in comparatione sic cernitur: efficiens causa gravior quam non efficiens; quae se ipsis<sup>1</sup> contenta sunt meliora quam quae egent aliis; quae in nostra quam quae in aliorum potestate sunt; stabilia incertis; quae eripi non possunt eis quae possunt.

Affectio autem ad res aliquas est huius modi: principum commoda maiora quam reliquorum;

<sup>1</sup> ipsis Oef: ipsa codd.

---

* Or, reasonable beings to those devoid of reason.

69 Things will be compared in respect to quantity as follows: more "goods" are preferred to fewer, fewer evils to more, goods which last for a longer time to those of shorter duration, those which are distributed far and wide to those which are confined in narrow limits, those from which more goods are generated, and those which more people imitate and produce.

In comparing things in respect to their quality we prefer those which are to be sought for their own sake to those which are desired because they make something else possible; also we prefer innate and natural qualities to acquired and adventitious ones, what is pure to what is defiled, the pleasant to the less pleasant, what is honourable to what is profitable itself, the easy task to the difficult, the necessary to the unnecessary, our own good to that of others, things which are rare to those that are common, desirable things to those which you can easily do without, the perfect to the incomplete, the whole to its parts, reasonable actions to those devoid of reason,<sup>a</sup> voluntary to necessary acts, animate beings to inanimate objects, the natural to the unnatural, that which is artistic to that which is not.

70 In regard to value, distinctions are drawn in comparison as follows: An efficient cause is weightier than one that is not; things which are sufficient in themselves are better than those that require help from others; we prefer what is in our own power to what is in the power of others; the stable to the uncertain; what cannot be taken from us to that which can.

Relation to other things is of this nature: the interests of leading citizens are of more importance than those of the rest; a similar value attaches to itemque quae iucundiora, quae pluribus probata, quae ab optimo quoque laudata. Atque ut haec in comparatione meliora, sic deteriora quae eis sunt contraria.

- 71 Parium autem comparatio nec elationem habet nec submissionem; est enim aequalis. Multa autem sunt quae aequalitate ipsa comparantur; quae ita fere concluduntur: Si consilio iuvare cives et auxilio aequa in laude ponendum est, pari gloria debent esse ei qui consulunt et ei qui defendunt; at quod primum, est; quod sequitur igitur.

Perfecta est omnis argumentorum inveniendorum praeceptio, ut, cum profectus sis a definitione, a partitione, a notatione, a coniugatis, a genere, a formis, a similitudine, a differentia, a contrariis, ab adiunctis, a consequentibus, ab antecedentibus, a repugnantibus, a causis, ab effectis, a comparatione maiorum, minorum, parium, nulla praeterea sedes argumenti quaerenda sit.

- 72 XIX. Sed quoniam ita a principio divisimus, ut alios locos diceremus in eo ipso de quo ambigitur haerere, de quibus satis est dictum, alios assumi extrinsecus, de eis pauca dicamus, etsi ea nihil omnino ad vestras disputationes pertinent; sed tamen totam rem efficiamus, quandoquidem coepimus. Neque enim tu is es quem nihil nisi ius civile delectet, et quoniam haec ita ad te scribuntur ut things that are pleasanter, that are approved by the majority, or are praised by all virtuous men. And just as these are the things which in a comparison are regarded as better, so the opposites of these are regarded as worse.

71 When equals are compared there is no superiority or inferiority; everything is on the same plane. But there are many things which are compared because of their very equality. The argument runs something like this: If helping one's fellow-citizens with advice and giving them active assistance are to be regarded as equally praiseworthy, then those who give advice and those who defend ought to receive equal glory. But the first statement is true, therefore the conclusion is also.

This is the end of the rules for the invention of arguments, so that if you have journeyed through definition, partition, etymology, conjugates, genus, species, similarity, difference, contraries, adjuncts, consequents, antecedents, contradictions, causes, effects, and comparison of things greater, less and equal, no region of arguments remains to be explored.

72 XIX. But since at the beginning<sup>a</sup> we divided topics into two groups, saying that some are intrinsic or inherent in the very nature of the subject which is under discussion (these we have discussed at sufficient length), and that others are extrinsic or brought in from without, let us say a few words about these topics from without, although they bear no relation to your discussions of the law. But now that we have begun, let us develop the whole subject. For you are not the person to take pleasure in nothing but the civil law, and since this book is written for you, but in such a form that it is going etiam in aliorum manus sint ventura, detur opera, ut quam plurimum eis quos recta studia delectant prodesse possimus.

CICERO

73 Haec ergo argumentatio, quae dicitur artis experta, in testimonio posita est. Testimonium autem nunc dicimus omne quod ab aliqua re externa sumitur ad faciendam fidem. Persona autem non qualiscumque est testimoni pondus habet; ad fidem enim faciendam auctoritas quaeritur; sed auctoritatem aut natura aut tempus affert. Naturae auctoritas in virtute inest maxima; in tempore autem multa sunt quae afferant auctoritatem: ingenium, opes, aetas, fortuna,<sup>1</sup> ars, usus, necessitas, concursio etiam non numquam rerum fortuitarum. Nam et ingeniosos et opulentos et aetatis spatio probatos dignos quibus credatur putant; non recte fortasse, sed vulgi opinio mutari vix potest ad eamque omnia dirigunt et qui iudicant et qui existimant. Qui enim rebus his quas dixi excellunt, ipsa virtute videntur excellere.

74 Sed reliquis quoque rebus quas modo enumeravi quamquam in his nulla species virtutis est, tamen interdum confirmatur fides, si aut ars quaedam adhibetur—magna est enim vis ad persuadendum scientiae—aut usus; plerumque enim creditur eis qui experti sunt. XX. Facit etiam necessitas fidem, quae tum a corporibus tum ab animis nascitur. Nam to come into the hands of others, let us take pains to give all possible help to those who take pleasure in honourable studies.

<sup>1</sup> fortuna bracketed by Friedrich.

73 This form of argumentation, that is said not to be subject to the rules of art, depends on testimony. For our present purpose we define testimony as everything that is brought in from some external circumstance in order to win conviction. Now it is not every sort of person who is worth consideration as a witness. To win conviction, authority is sought; but authority is given by one's nature or by circumstances. Authority from one's nature or character depends largely on virtue; in circumstances there are many things which lend authority, such as talent, wealth, age, good luck, skill, experience, necessity, and even at times a concurrence of fortuitous events. For it is common belief that the talented, the wealthy, and those whose character has been tested by a long life, are worthy of credence. This may not be correct, but the opinion of the common people can hardly be changed, and both those who make judicial decisions and those who pass moral judgements steer their course by that. As I was saying, those who excel in these things seem to excel in virtue.

74 But as for the rest of the qualities that I just now enumerated, although they have in them no kind of virtue, yet they sometimes strengthen conviction, if a person is shown to possess skill or experience; for knowledge has great influence in convincing, and people generally put faith in those who are experienced. XX. Necessity, too, wins conviction, and this necessity may be either physical or mental. For what men say when they have been worn down et verberibus, tormentis, igni fatigati quae dicunt ea videtur veritas ipsa dicere, et quae perturbationibus animi, dolore, cupiditate, iracundia, metu, qui necessitatis vim habent, afferunt auctoritatem et fidem.

75 Cuius generis etiam illa sunt ex quibus verum nonnunquam invenitur, pueritia, somnus, imprudentia, vinolentia, insania. Nam et parvi saepe indicaverunt aliquid, quo id pertineret ignari, et per somnum, vinum, insaniam multa saepe patefacta sunt. Multi etiam in res odiosas imprudenter inciderunt, ut Staieno nuper accidit, qui ea locutus est bonis viris subauscultantibus pariete interposito, quibus patefactis in iudiciumque prolatis ille rei capitalis iure damnatus est. Huic simile quiddam de Lacedaemonio Pausania accepimus.

76 Concurso autem fortuitorum talis est, ut si inventum est casu, cum aut ageretur aliquid quod proferendum non esset, aut diceretur. In hoc genere etiam illa est in Palamedem coniecta suspicionum proditionis multitudo; quod genus refutare interdum veritas vix potest. Huius etiam est generis fama vulgi, quoddam multitudinis testimonium.

Quae autem virtute fidem faciunt ea bipertita sunt; ex quibus alterum natura valet alterum industria. Deorum enim virtus natura excellit, homi-

---

* For Staienus, v. the Brutus, 241, and the speech In Defence of Cluentius, passim. According to Cicero he was a proper scoundrel, deeply involved in bribing juries.

† Thucydides, I. 133-135.

‡ For Palamedes, v. Vergil, Aeneid ii, 81-85, and Servius ad loc. A member of the Greek expedition against Troy, he was convicted by a chain of circumstantial evidence fabricated by Ulysses.

by stripes, the rack, and fire, seems to be spoken by truth itself; and what they say under stress of mind—grief, lust, anger or fear—lends authority and conviction, because these emotions seem to have the force of necessity.

75 This class also includes those states or conditions from which the truth is sometimes discovered, such as childhood, sleep, inadvertence, intoxication and insanity. Small children have often given some information without knowing its pertinence, and many facts have been revealed by persons asleep, intoxicated or insane. Many men, too, have fallen into disgrace through inadvertence, as lately happened to Staienus<sup>a</sup> who made incriminating statements within the hearing of some reputable citizens concealed behind a wall. When these remarks of his were published, and reported in court, he was justly condemned on a capital charge. We have heard a similar story about Pausanias, the Lacedaemonian.<sup>b</sup>

76 The concurrence of fortuitous events is illustrated, for example, by a chance interruption when something was being said or done which should be kept secret. An instance of this sort is the mass of circumstantial evidence of treason which was heaped on Palamedes.<sup>c</sup> Sometimes truth itself can scarcely refute evidence of this sort. We may also put in this class public opinion, which is a kind of testimony of the multitude.

The testimony which produces conviction through virtue is of two kinds; one sort gets its efficacy by nature, the other acquires it by hard work. That is to say, the surpassing virtue of the gods is the result of their nature, but the virtue of men is the

CICERO

- 77 num autem industria. Divina haec fere sunt testimonia: primum orationis—oracula enim ex eo ipso appellata sunt, quod inest in<sup>1</sup> his deorum oratio—; deinde rerum, in quibus insunt quasi quaedam opera divina: primum ipse mundus eiusque omnis ordo et ornatus; deinceps aërii volatus avium atque cantus; deinde eiusdem aëris sonitus et ardores multarumque rerum in terra portenta atque etiam per exta inventa praesensio; a dormientibus quoque multa significata visis. Quibus ex locis sumi interdum solent ad fidem faciendam testimonia deorum.
- 78 In homine virtutis opinio valet plurimum. Opinio est autem non modo eos virtutem habere qui habeant, sed eos etiam qui habere videantur. Itaque quos ingenio, quos studio, quos doctrina praeditos vident quorumque vitam constantem et probatam, ut Catonis, Laeli, Scipionis, aliorumque plurium, rentur eos esse qualis se ipsi velint; nec solum eos censent esse talis qui in honoribus populi reque publica versantur, sed et oratores et philosophos et poetas et historicos, ex quorum et dictis et scriptis saepe auctoritas petitur ad faciendam fidem.
- 79 XXI. Expositis omnibus argumentandi locis illud primum intellegendum est nec ullam esse disputationem in qua<sup>2</sup> non aliquis locus incurrat, nec fere omnis locos incidere in omnem quaestionem et

<sup>1</sup> in A: om. codd.

<sup>2</sup> in qua codd.: in quam A vulg.

77 result of hard work. The testimony of the gods is covered thoroughly enough by the following: first, utterances, for oracles get their name from the fact that they contain an utterance (oratio) of the gods; secondly, things in which are embodied certain works of the gods. First, the heavens themselves and all their order and beauty; secondly, the flight of birds through the air and their songs; thirdly, sounds and flashes of fire from the heavens, and portents given by many objects on earth, as well as the foreshadowing of events which is revealed by the entrails (of sacrificial animals). Many things also are revealed by visions seen in sleep. The testimony of the gods is at times adduced from these topics in order to win conviction.

78 In the case of a man, it is the opinion of his virtue which is most important. For opinion regards as virtuous not only those who really are virtuous, but also those who seem to be. And so when people see men endowed with genius, industry and learning, and those whose life has been consistent and of approved goodness, like Cato, Laelius, Scipio and many more, they regard them as the kind of men they would like to be. Nor do they hold such an opinion only about those who have been honoured by the people with public office and are busy with matters of state, but also about orators, philosophers, poets, and historians. Their sayings and writings are often used as authority to win conviction.

79 XXI. All the topics of argumentation have now been set forth, and it must be understood in the first place that there is no discussion in which there is not at least one topic involved, but that all topics scarcely ever occur in every inquiry, and that some quibusdam quaestionibus alios, quibusdam alios esse aptiores locos. Quaestionum duo genera sunt:<sup>1</sup> alterum infinitum, definitum alterum. Definitum est quod ὑπόθεσιν Graeci, nos causam; infinitum quod θέσιν illi appellant, nos propositum possumus 80 nominare. Causa certis personis, locis, temporibus, actionibus, negotiis cernitur aut in omnibus aut in plerisque eorum, propositum autem aut in aliquo eorum aut in pluribus nec tamen in maximis. Itaque propositum pars est causae. Sed omnis quaestio earum aliqua de re est quibus causae continentur, aut una aut pluribus aut nonnunquam omnibus.

CICERO

81 Quaestionum autem "quacumque de re" sunt duo genera: unum cognitionis alterum actionis.

82 Cognitionis sunt eae quarum est finis scientia, ut si quaeratur a naturane ius profectum sit an ab aliqua quasi condicione hominum et pactione. Actionis autem huius modi exempla sunt: Sitne sapientis ad rem publicam accedere. Cognitionis quaestiones tripertitae sunt; aut sitne aut quid sit aut quale sit quaeritur. Horum primum coniectura, secundum definitione, tertium iuris et iniuriae distinctione explicatur.

Coniecturae ratio in quattuor partes distributa est, quarum una est cum quaeritur sitne aliquid; altera unde ortum sit; tertia quae id causa effecerit; quarta in qua de commutatione rei quaeritur. Sitne sic:<sup>2</sup> ecquidnam sit honestum, ecquid aequum

<sup>1</sup> genera sunt Of: generae L: sunt genera V.

<sup>2</sup> Sitne sic Friedrich: sit necne sit codd.: sitne necne sit A.

---

° Literally, Is it? What is it? Of what sort is it?

topics are better suited to some inquiries than to others. There are two kinds of inquiry, one general and the other particular. The particular is what the Greeks call ὑπόθεσις (hypothesis), and we call cause or case; the general inquiry is what they call 80 θέσις (thesis), and we can call proposition. The hallmark of a case is that it involves definite persons, places, times, actions, or affairs, either all or most of these; a proposition involves one or several of these, but not the most important. Therefore a proposition is a part of a case. But every inquiry concerns some one of the subjects of which cases consist, that is, it concerns one or more or sometimes all of them.

81 Inquiries "about any possible subject" (i.e. general inquiries) are of two kinds: one theoretical,
 82 the other practical. Theoretical inquiries are those of which the purpose is knowledge: for example, one may inquire whether law has its origin in nature or in some agreement and contract between men. The following is an example of the practical inquiry: Should a philosopher take part in politics? Theoretical questions fall into three groups; the question asked is either, Does it exist? or What is it? or What is its character? <sup>a</sup> The first of these is treated and answered by inference and conjecture, the second by definition, and the third by distinguishing between right and wrong.

There are four ways of dealing with conjecture or inference: the question is asked, first whether anything exists or is true; second, what its origin is; third, what cause produced it; fourth, what changes can be made in anything. As to existence, as follows: Is there really any such thing as honour re vera; an haec tantum in opinione sint. Unde autem sit ortum: ut cum quaeritur, natura an doctrina possit effici virtus. Causa autem efficiens sic quaeritur, quibus rebus eloquentia efficiatur. De commutatione sic: possitne eloquentia commutatione aliqua converti in infantiam.

CICERO

83 XXII. Cum autem quid sit quaeritur, notio explicanda est et proprietas et divisio et partitio. Haec enim sunt definitioni attributa; additur etiam descriptio, quam χαρακτῆρς Graeci vocant. Notio sic quaeritur: sitne id aequum quod ei qui plus potest utile est. Proprietas sic: in hominemne solum cadat an etiam in beluas aegritudo. Divisio et eodem pacto partitio sic: <sup>1</sup> triane genera bonorum sint. Descriptio, qualis sit avarus, qualis assentator ceteraque eiusdem generis, in quibus et natura et vita describitur.

84 Cum autem quaeritur quale quid sit, aut simpliciter quaeritur aut comparate; simpliciter: Expetendane sit gloria; comparate: Praeponendane sit divitiis gloria. Simplicium tria genera sunt: de expetendo fugiendoque, de aequo et iniquo, de honesto et turpi. Comparationum autem duo: unum de eodem et alio, alterum de maiore et minore. De expetendo or equity, or are these merely matters of opinion? As to origin: for example, the question may be asked whether virtue can be engendered by nature or by instruction. An instance of a question about the efficient cause is: What produces eloquence? Change is illustrated as follows: Can eloquence by any change be transformed into want of eloquence?

<sup>1</sup> sic Of: omitted by codd.

---

* Cf. Thrasymachus' definition of justice in Plato's Republic, 338c.

83 XXII. When the question concerns what a thing is, one has to explain the concept, and the peculiar or proper quality of the thing, analyze it and enumerate its parts. For these are the essentials of definition. We also include description, which the Greeks call χαρακτήρ (character or hallmark). The concept is inquired into in this way: Is justice that which is to the advantage of the stronger?<sup>a</sup> An example of inquiry into the peculiar or proper quality of a thing is the following question: Is grief incidental to man alone, or to the animals as well? Analysis and enumeration are treated in the same fashion: Are there three kinds of "goods?" Description may be illustrated as follows: What sort of person a miser or a flatterer is, and other cases of the same sort, in which both a person's character and his manner of life are described.

84 When the question is about the nature of anything, it is put either simply or by comparison; simply as in the question: Should one seek glory?—by comparison, as: Is glory to be preferred to riches? There are three kinds of subjects for simple questions: what to seek and what to avoid, what is right and what wrong, what is honourable and what base. Questions involving a comparison are of two kinds: one about sameness and difference, the other about superiority and inferiority. Questions et fugiendo huius modi: Si expetendae divitiae, si fugienda paupertas. De aequo et iniquo: Aequumne sit ulcisci a quocumque iniuriam acceperis. De honesto et turpi: Honestumne sit pro patria 85 mori? Ex altero autem genere, quod erat bipertitum, unum est de eodem et alio: Quid intersit inter amicum et assentatorem, regem et tyrannum; alterum de maiore et minore, ut si quaeratur eloquentiane pluris sit an iuris civilis scientia. De cognitionis quaestionibus hactenus.

86 Actionis reliquae sunt, quarum duo genera: unum ad officium, alterum ad motum animi vel gignendum vel sedandum planeve tollendum. Ad officium sic, ut cum quaeritur suscipiendine sint liberi. Ad movendos animos cohortationes ad defendendam rem publicam, ad laudem, ad gloriam; quo ex genere sunt querellae, incitationes, miserationesque flebiles; rursusque oratio tum iracundiam restinguens, tum metum eripiens, tum exultantem laetitiam comprimens, tum aegritudinem abstergens. Haec cum in propositi<sup>1</sup> quaestionibus genera sint, eadem in causas transferuntur.

87 XXIII. Loci autem qui ad quasque quaestiones accommodati sint deinceps est videndum. Omnes illi quidem ad plerasque, sed alii ad alias, ut dixi, aptiores. Ad coniecturam igitur maxime apta quae ex causis, quae ex effectis, quae ex coniunctis sumi possunt. Ad definitionem autem pertinet ratio

<sup>1</sup> propositi codex Bamberg. MV 13 : propositis codd.

---

* Or taking suscipere in its technical sense, 'should children be kept'?

<sup>b</sup> By which he means the class which he called adjuncts (corollaries) above, §§ 11, 18, 50.

about what to seek and what to avoid are like this: Should riches be sought? Should poverty be avoided? A question about right and wrong: Is it right to take vengeance on one who has wronged you? A question about honour and baseness: Is it honourable to die for one's country? In the other class which we divided into two parts, one applies to resemblance and difference, for instance: What is the difference between a friend and a flatterer, between a king and a tyrant? The second applies to superiority and inferiority; for example, one might ask whether eloquence or jurisprudence is more valuable. So much for the theoretical questions.

86 There remain the practical questions, and of these there are two kinds: one has to do with our duty, the other with arousing, calming or utterly removing some emotion. A question of duty is: Should one have children?<sup>a</sup> Under the head of arousing emotions come exhortations to defend the state, and to seek fame or glory. Here belong complaints, words of encouragement, and tearful commiserations; and again, speeches which now repress rage, now remove fear, now restrain the transports of joy, and now wipe away sorrow. All these types are used in inquiries of a general nature, and may therefore be transferred to particular cases.

87 XXIII. Our next task is to consider what topics are suited to each question. As a matter of fact all are suited to more than one, but as I said, some are better adapted to one question, and some to another. The topics which can be drawn from causes, effects and conjuncts<sup>b</sup> are best fitted to conjecture and inference. The knowledge and et scientia definiendi. Atque huic generi finitimum est illud quod appellari de eodem et de altero diximus, quod genus forma quaedam definitionis est; si enim quaeratur idemne sit pertinacia et perseverantia, definitionibus iudicandum est. Loci autem convenient in eius generis quaestionem consequentis, antecedentis, repugnantis; adiuncti etiam eis qui sumuntur ex causis et effectis. Nam si hanc rem illa sequitur, hanc autem non sequitur; aut si huic rei illa antecedit, huic non antecedit; aut si huic rei repugnat, illi non repugnat; aut si huius rei haec, illius alia causa est; aut si ex alio hoc, ex alio illud effectum est: ex quovis horum id de quo quaeritur idemne an aliud sit inveniri potest.

CICERO

89 Ad tertium genus quaestionis, in quo quale sit quaeritur, in comparationem ea cadunt quae paulo ante in comparationis loco enumerata sunt. In illud autem genus in quo de expetend ofugiendoque quaeritur adhibentur ea quae sunt aut animi aut corporis aut externa vel commoda vel incommoda. Itemque cum de honesto turpique quaeritur, ad unimi bona aut mala omnis oratio dirigenda est.

90 Cum autem de aequo et iniquo disseritur, aequitatis loci colligentur. Hi cernuntur bipertito, et natura et instituto. Natura partes habet duas,tributionem science of defining is important for definition. Closely allied to this is what I said was called sameness and difference, this being a kind of definition. For if one should ask whether obstinacy and perseverance are the same, the matter would 88 have to be settled by definition. The topics of antecedence, consequence and contradiction are also suitable for a question of this sort; and those from cause and effect may be added to these. For if something follows this action but does not follow another; if it precedes this action but does not precede another; or if it is contradictory to this but not to another; or if this is the cause of this action, and that has a different cause; or if this is produced from one thing and that from another; from each of these contradictions we can find the solution of our question, i.e. whether we have here a sameness or a difference.

89 In respect to the third type of question, that in which the inquiry is directed to the nature of the thing, those points are useful for comparison which were enumerated shortly before under the topic of comparison. For the group which deals with questions of what to seek and avoid we use the advantages and disadvantages of mind, body or external circumstance. Likewise when the discussion turns on honour or baseness the whole speech must be directed to a consideration of the 90 virtues and defects of the mind. When, however, right and wrong are being discussed, the topics of equity will be brought together. These are of two kinds, the distinction being between natural law and institutions. Natural law has two parts, the right of every man to his own property, and the sui cuique et ulciscendi ius. Institutio autem aequitatis tripartita est: una pars legitima est, altera conveniens, tertia moris vetustate firmata. Atque etiam aequitas tripartita dicitur esse: una ad superos deos, altera ad manes, tertia ad homines pertinere. Prima pietas, secunda sanctitas, tertia iustitia aut aequitas nominatur.<sup>1</sup> XXIV. De proposito satis multa, deinceps de causa pauciora dicenda sunt. Pleraque enim sunt ei cum proposito communia.

CICERO

- 91 Tria sunt igitur<sup>2</sup> genera causarum: iudici, deliberationis, laudationis. Quarum fines ipsi declarant quibus utendum locis sit. Nam iudici finis est ius, ex quo etiam nomen. Iuris autem partes tum expositae, cum aequitatis. Deliberandi finis utilitas, cuius eae partes quae modo expositae.<sup>3</sup> Laudationis finis honestas,
- 92 de qua item est ante dictum. Sed definitae quaestiones a suis quaeque locis quasi propriis instruntur, . . . quae in accusationem defensionemque partitae; in quibus existunt haec genera, ut accusator personam arguat facti, defensor aliquid opponat de tribus: aut non esse factum aut, si sit factum, aliud eius facti nomen esse aut iure esse factum. Itaque aut infitialis aut coniecturalis prima appelletur, definitiva altera, tertia, quamvis moles-

<sup>1</sup> Atque . . . nominatur bracketed by Schuetz.

<sup>2</sup> igitur omitted by O: enim codd.

<sup>3</sup> After expositae the MSS. have rerum expetendarum: (of things to be sought) bracketed by Friedrich.

---

<sup>a</sup> § 90.

<sup>b</sup> § 89.

<sup>c</sup> § 89.

<sup>d</sup> There is a break in the text at this point; the words in brackets fill out the sense, but are wholly conjectural.

right of revenge. The institutions affecting equity are threefold: the first has to do with law, the second with compacts, the third rests on long continued custom. Equity is also said to have three parts: one pertains to the gods in heaven, the second to the spirits of the departed, the third to men. The first is called piety, the second respect, the third justice or equity. XXIV. This is enough about the general proposition. We must next treat the special case, but in briefer compass; for it has many points in common with the general proposition.

91 There are three kinds of speeches on special subjects: the judicial, the deliberative, and the encomiastic; and the "ends" of these three show what topics are to be used. The end of the judicial speech is justice, from which it also derives its name. But the parts of justice were enumerated when we discussed equity.<sup>a</sup> The end of a deliberative speech is advantage, and the divisions of this subject have just now been enumerated.<sup>b</sup> The end of an encomiastic speech is honour, and this, 92 too, was discussed above.<sup>c</sup> But particular inquiries are built up of topics which are the peculiar property, as it were, of each one. [The first of these particular inquiries is the judicial]<sup>d</sup> which is divided into accusation and defence; in which there are the following classes: the prosecutor charges some one with a crime, and the counsel for the defence makes one of three replies, either that the crime was not committed, or that, if it was committed, it has a different name, or that it was justified. The first, then, is called infitialis (denial) or coniecturalis (based on inference or conjecture), the second definitiva (involving definition) and the third (though tum nomen hoc sit, iuridicialis vocetur. XXV. Harum causarum propria argumenta ex eis sumpta locis quos exposuimus in praeceptis oratoriis explicata sunt. Refutatio autem accusationis, in qua est depulsio criminis, quoniam Graece στάσις dicitur appelletur Latine status; in quo primum insistit quasi ad repugnandum congressa defensio. Atque in deliberationibus et laudationibus idem existunt status. Nam et negantur saepe ea futura quae ab aliquo in sententia dicta sunt fore, si aut omnino fieri non possint aut sine summa difficultate non possint; in qua argumentatione status coniecturalis existit; aut cum aliquid de utilitate, honestate aequitate disseritur deque eis rebus quae his sunt contrariae incurrunt status aut iuris aut nominis; quod idem contingit in laudationibus. Nam aut negari potest id factum esse quod laudetur, aut non eo nomine afficiendum quo laudator affecerit, aut omnino non esse laudabile quod non recte, non iure factum sit. Quibus omnibus generibus usus est nimis impudenter Caesar contra Catonem meum.

CICERO

93
94
95 Sed quae ex statu contentio efficitur, eam Graeci κρινόμενον vocant, mihi placet id, quoniam quidem ad te scribo, qua de re agitur vocari. Quibus autem

---

* Cicero's apology for using iuridicialis, a word newly-coined as a translation of δικαιολογική (dicaeologicê).

† He may refer to his own Text-Book of Rhetoric (de Inventione) or to any text-book of a similar kind.

• Both Latin status and Greek στάσις come from the root sta, to stand. In the de Inventione Cicero used the older term constitutio. It means the point on which the issue is joined.

the word annoys me)<sup>a</sup> iuridicialis (involving right and wrong). XXV. The proper arguments for these cases, selected from the topics which we have enumerated, have been developed in the rules for 93 oratory.<sup>b</sup> The reply to the accusation which constitutes the denial of the charge, may be called in Latin status since the Greeks call it στάσις (stasis): for this is the place where the defence takes its stand, as if it were coming to grips in a counter-attack.<sup>c</sup> The same issues (status) come up in deliberative and encomiastic speeches. For when some one has given his opinion that certain things will happen, the opponents deny that this is true, basing their argument on the statement that these things 94 issue arises. Or when there is some discussion about advantage, honour, or equity and their opposites, we have the issue of justification and definition. And the same holds true of encomiastic speeches. For one can deny that the deed which is being praised was done at all; or that it deserves the name which the praiser gives it, or that it is at all praiseworthy, because it was immoral or illegal to do it. All these arguments were brazenly used by Caesar against my dear Cato.<sup>d</sup>

95 The debate which arises from the issue (status) is called by the Greeks κρινόμενον (the thing being decided), but I prefer to call it qua de re agitur (the question at stake) especially in writing to you. The arguments by which this "question at stake" is hoc qua de re agitur continetur, ea continentia vocentur, quasi firmamenta defensionis, quibus sublatis defensio nulla sit.

<sup>a</sup> Cicero wrote an encomium of Marcus Porcius Cato Uticensis, one of the last Republican leaders to hold out against Caesar, and Caesar replied in his Anticato.

96 Sed quoniam lege firmissime in controversiis disceptandis esse nihil debet, danda est opera ut legem adiutricem et testem adhibeamus. In qua re alii quasi status existunt novi, sed appellentur legitima
96 disceptationes. Tum enim defenditur non id legem dicere quod adversarius velit, sed aliud. Id autem contingit, cum scriptum ambiguum est, ut duae sententiae differentes accipi possint. Tum opponitur scripto voluntas scriptoris, ut quaeratur verbane plus an sententia valere debeant. Tum legi lex contraria affertur. Ista sunt tria genera quae controversiam in omni scripto facere possint: ambiguum, discrepantia scripti et voluntatis, scripta contraria. XXVI. Iam hoc perspicuum est, non magis in legibus quam in testamentis, in stipulationibus, in reliquis rebus quae ex scripto aguntur, posse controversias easdem existere. Horum tractationes in aliis libris explicantur.

97 Nec solum perpetuae actiones sed etiam partes orationis isdem locis adiuvantur, partim propriis, partim communibus; ut in principiis, quibus<sup>1</sup> ut benevoli, ut dociles, ut attentissimi sint qui audiant, efficiendum est propriis locis; itemque narrationes ut ad suos fines spectent, id est ut planae sint, ut breves, ut evidentes, ut credibiles, ut moderatae,

<sup>1</sup> quibus bracketed by Friedrich.

---

* The use of technical terms here is at variance with Part. Orat. 103, and de Inv. I, 13, 18. The confusion is too involved for a discussion here; v. Thiele, Hermagoras, pp. 67-75.

supported are called continentia (supports); they are, as it were, the foundation of the defence, for if these are removed, there is no defence.<sup>a</sup>

But since there should be no firmer foundation than law in settling disputes, we must be careful to summon the Law as our helper and witness. Hence there arise certain new quasi issues, but let us 96 call them disputes about a law. For instance, sometimes the defence is made that the law does not say what the opponent tries to make it say, but something different. This occurs when the law is ambiguous, so that two different meanings can be got out of it. Again, the intent of the author is shown to be opposed to the letter of the law, so that the question is raised whether words or meaning should prevail. Again, a law is cited which conflicts with the law under discussion. These are the three situations which can raise a controversy over any written document; ambiguity, variance between the letter and the intent, and conflicting documents.
 XXVI. It is of course plain that such controversies arise no more from laws than from wills, contracts, and in any other matter which rests on a written document. The methods of treating these are set forth in other books.

97 Not only whole speeches, but also the several parts of a speech receive help from these topics, some of which are proper to each part, and some are of use to all alike. The proper topics must be used in the introductions to make the audience well-disposed, receptive and attentive. The narratives must receive similar treatment in order that they may look to their goal, which is to be plain, brief, clear, credible, restrained and dignified.

CICERO

ut cum dignitate. Quae quamquam in tota oratione esse debent, magis tamen sunt propria narrandi.

- 98 Quae autem sequitur narrationem fides, ea persuadendo quoniam efficitur, qui ad persuadendum loci maxime valeant dictum est in eis in quibus de omni ratione dicendi. Peroratio autem et alia quaedam habet et maxime amplificationem, cuius effectus hic debet esse, ut aut perturbentur animi aut tranquillentur et, si ita affecti iam ante sint, ut aut
- 99 augeat eorum motus aut sedet oratio. Huic generi, in quo et misericordia et iracundia et odium et invidia et ceterae animi affectiones perturbantur, praecepta suppeditantur aliis in libris, quos poteris mecum legere cum voles. Ad id autem quod te velle senseram, cumulate satis factum esse debet
- 100 voluntati tuae. Nam ne praeterirem aliquid quod ad argumentum in omni ratione reperiendum pertineret, plura quam a te desiderata erant sum complexus fecique quod saepe liberales venditores solent, ut, cum aedes fundumve vendiderint rutis caesis receptis, concedant tamen aliquid emptori quod ornandi causa apte et loco positum esse videatur; sic tibi nos ad id quod quasi mancipio dare debuimus ornamenta quaedam voluimus non debita accedere.

---

* §§ 6-24.

<sup>b</sup> Ruta caesa covered minerals and timber already mined or cut, which the vendor of real estate reserved for himself and had a right to remove.

<sup>c</sup> "In the last words Cicero probably referred to rocks or pebbles, or trunks of trees, not permanently affixed, but disposed by way of rustic ornament, or perhaps to wooden buildings not affixed to the soil, for such were counted among ruta et caesa." Roby, Roman Private Law, vol. II, p. 146, no. 1.

Though these qualities should prevail throughout the whole speech, they are more characteristic of 98 the narrative. The division of a speech which follows the narrative is the proof. Since this is accomplished by persuasion, this subject—that is the topics which are especially important for persuasion—has been covered in what was said about the whole theory of oratory.<sup>a</sup> The peroration among other topics makes especial use of amplification; the effect of this should be to excite the spirits of the audience or calm them, and if they have already been so 99 affected, to heighten their feelings or quiet them still more. Rules for this division of a speech, in which pity, anger, hatred, envy and other emotions are aroused, are given in other books, which you can read with me when you wish. But for the object which you had in mind, this should be enough 100 and more than enough to satisfy your desires. For in order not to omit anything which had to do with the discovery of arguments in any fashion, I have included more than you requested, and have done what liberal sellers are wont to do; when they sell a house or farm, reserving title to minerals and timber,<sup>b</sup> they make a concession to the buyer and allow him to keep something which seems to be put in the right spot as an ornament.<sup>c</sup> So in addition to what we were bound to sell you, as it were, we wished to give you some ornaments not called for in the contract.

INDEX

I = de Inventione, Book I; II = de Inventione, Book II; O = de Optimo Genere Oratorum; T = Topica. Arabic numbers refer to sections, indicated on the margins.

- ABSOLUTE, subdivision of equitable issue, I, 15, II, 69-71
 Accius, Lucius, Roman tragic poet, O, 3; his Epigoni, O, 18
 Adjunct, argument from, T, 18, 50-52
 Advantage, II, 166-169
 Aelius, defined assiduus, T, 10 and note b
 Aelius, Gaius Aelius Staienus, T, 75
 Aeschines, Attic orator, O, 14, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23
 Aeschines Socraticus, Greek philosopher, I, 51
 Aeserninus, O, 17
 "Affection," a change in the aspect of things from lapse of time, etc., II, 176
 Africanus, see Cornelius Agamemnon, I, 18, 31
 Ajax, son of Oileus, T, 61
 Ajax, son of Telamon, I, 11, 92
 Alexander the Great, I, 93, O, 22
 Alexander of Pherae, II, 144
 Ambiguity in a written document, I, 17, II, 116-121, T, 96
 Ambiguous case, I, 20, 21
 Amphictyons, II, 69
 Amphion, I, 94
 Analysis, T, 30-32
 Annus, Titus Annus Milo, O, 10
 Antecedents, argument from, T, 19, 53-57
 Antiochus, Greek philosopher, p. 378, II, 8, note b
 Antiphon, Greek orator, his speech On the Murder of Herodes, I, 45, note a Apollonius of Alabanda, rhetorician, I, 109
 Appius, see Claudius
 Aquilius, Gaius Aquilius Gallus, juriconsult, T, 32 and note c, 51
 Argo, T, 61
 Arguments, irrefutable, I, 44-45
 Arguments, probable, I, 46-49
 Aristippus of Cyrene, Greek philosopher, II, 176
 Aristotle, I, 7, 9, 61, II, 6, 7, 156; his Rhetoric quoted, I, 7, note b, I, 47, note c; II, 47 note a, p. 377; Rhet. ad Alex. quoted, I, 48, note a; his Topica, p. 377, T, 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 54 note a
 Arrangement of a speech, defined, I, 9
 Asia, O, 8, 22
 Aspasia, I, 51
 Assumptive subdivision of equitable issue, I, 15, II, 71-115
 Athens, Athenians, I, 35, 63, II, 87, O, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 23
 Attention, how obtained, I, 23
 Attic style, p. 349, O, 7-13
 Atticists, (Attici novi), p. 349, O, 11-13
 Attributes of actions, use of in argument, I, 37-43, II, 38-46
 Attributes of persons, use of in argument, I, 34-36, II, 28-37
Auctor ad Herennium, p. viii, quoted II, 72 note a, 149, note d, 154, note a, and passim
 Augustine, on Hermagoras, I, 8, note a
 CAECILIUS, II, 28
 Caecilius, Staius Caecilius, Roman comic poet, O, 2; his Synephebi, O, 18
 Caepio, see Servilius
 Caesar, see Julius Calvus, II, 28

INDEX

- Carthage, I, 11, 17, 37, 71, 72
 Casilinum, II, 171
 Cato, see Porcius
 Caudine Forks, battle of, 321 B.C., II, 91 note c
 Cause of the action, as a basis for inference, II, 17-28
 Censure, II, 177-178
 Chance, plea of, II, 96-97, 98-101
 Cicero, quoted, p. vii, I, 2, note a, I, 5, note d, I, 45, note a, I, 58, note c, I, 69, note a, II, 62, note b, II, 124, note a, O, 11, note b, T, 4, note a, 29, note c, 37, note a, 44, note b, 75, note a, 94, note d; his philosophical works, T, 1, note a
 Claudius, Appius Claudius Caudex, I, 27
 Claudius, Gaius Claudius Pulcher, censor, 169 B.C. with Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus, I, 48, note b
 Clodius, II, 28
 Clytaemnestra, I, 18, 31
 Common Topics, II, 48-51, 55-56, 61, 68, 77-78, 85-86, 91, 94, 101-103, 108, 109, 143, 147, 152-153
 Comparison, I, 15, II, 72-78, T, 23, 68-71
 Complex case, I, 17
 Confession and avoidance, I, 15, II, 94-109
 Confirmation, I, 19, 34-77, T, 98
 Conflict of laws, I, 17, II, 144-147, T, 96
 "Conjugate" arguments, T, 12, 38
Conquestio, passage arousing pity, I, 106-109, II, 36, T, 98-99
 Consequents, argument from, T, 20, 53-57
 Contradictions, argument from, T, 21, 53-57
 Contraries, argument from, T, 17, 47-49
 Coponius, Marcus Coponius, principal in the famous causa Curiana, T, 44, note b
 Corinth, I, 17
 Cornelia, mother of the Gracchi, I, 91
 Cornelius, Publius Cornelius Scipio Africanus the Elder, I, 5, 91
 Cornelius, Publius Cornelius Scipio Africanus the Younger, I, 5, T, 78
 Corollary, argument from, T, 18, 50-52
 Courage, II, 163
 Crassus, see Licinius
 Croton, II, 1, 2, 3
 Ctesiphon, O, 19-22
 Curiatii, II, 78
 Curio, see Scribonius
 Curius, Manius, principal in the famous causa Curiana, T, 44 and note b
 DEDUCTION, I, 57-77, T, 54-57
 Defects in arguments, I, 89-95
 Definition, in a dispute about a written document, I, 17; use in argumentation, T, 9, 27-32, cf. Issue, definitional Deliberative speeches, one of the divisions of oratory, I, 7, 12, II, 12, 155-176, T, 91-94
 Delivery, defined, I, 9
 Democritus, Greek philosopher, I, 5, note a Demosthenes, O, 6, 10, 13, 14, 17, 19, 20, 21
Deprecatio, I, 16, II, 104-109
 Dialectic, defined, T, 6
 Diana, II, 95
 Diction, O, 4, 7
 Difference, argument from, T, 16, 46
 "Difficult" case, I, 20, 21, 23
 Digression, I, 97
 Diodotus, possible source of the Topica, p. 378
 ECLECTIC nature of de Inventione, II, 5-10
 Effects, argument from, T, 23, 67
 Efficient cause, argument from, T, 22, 58-66
 Eloquence, its uses and abuses, I, 1-5; its origin, I, 2-3; its relation to political science, I, 6; its function and end, I, 6; its subject matter, I, 7; ideal of, O, 1-4, 6; see Rhetoric
 Ennius, Quintus, Roman poet, O, 2; his Andromacha, O, 18; quotation from Annals, I, 27; Medea, I, 91, T, 61; Thyestes, I, 91
 Enumeration of parts, I, 84-85, T, 10, 28, 30, 33-34
 Epaminondas, Theban general, I, 55, 56, 69, 70
 Epideictic speeches, one of the three divisions of oratory, I, 7, 12, II, 12, 155-156, 177-178, T, 91-94

INDEX

Equitable division of qualitative issue,
   I, 14, 15, II, 69-115
 Eriphyla, I, 94
 Etymology, T, 10, 35-37
 Euripides, I, 94
 Eurotas, II, 96, 124
 Excuse or reason, I, 18
 Exordium, I, 19-26, T, 97
 Expression (or style) defined, I, 9 Extrinsic arguments, T, 24, 72-78,
   cf. I, 17, II, 116-156

FESTUS, grammarian, his definition of ambitus quoted, T, 24, note a Figures of speech, O, 4
 Flacci, O, 17, note a Flaccus, see Fulvius Flaminius, Gaius, II, 52, and note a Fortunatianus, his interpretation of an obscurity, I, 41 note a Foundation or supporting argument, I,
   18, 19, T, 95
 Fregellae, I, 11, II, 105, note b
 Fulvius, Servius Fulvius Flaccus, I, 80

GALLIA, II, 111
 Gallus, see Aquilius Genus and species, argument from,
   T, 14, 39-40
 Good-will, how obtained, I, 22
 Gorgias, sophist of fifth century, I, 7
 Gracchus, see Sempronius
 Greece, Greeks, I, 35, 55, II, 28, 69, 70, O, 1, 22, T, 5, 24, 30, 35, 48, 49,
   55, 93, 95

HANNIBAL, I, 17, II, 171
 Hecataeus, Greek philosopher, I, 5,
   note a (p. 12)
 Helen, II, 1
 Herennius, Gaius, rhetoric addressed to, p. viii
 Hermagoras, Greek rhetorician, p. ix,
   I, 8, notes a and b, 12, 16, 97, II, 8,
   note b, Excursus p. 346
 Hermocreon, I, 47 Hermogenes, Greek rhetorician, his testimony on Hermagoras, I, 8, note
   a, II, 154, note a Homer, II, 176, note a, O, 6, T, 55
 Honour, II, 157-168
 Honourable case, I, 20, 21
 Horace, Epist. II, 2, 144 quoted, I, 49, note b

Horatia, II, 79
 Horatius, Roman hero, II, 78
 Hostilius, Gaius Hostilius Mancinus, Roman general defeated by the Numantines, T, 37 and note a

IGNORANCE, plea of, II, 95, 98-101
 Impulse, II, 17, 19, 25
Indignatio, passage arousing anger, I, 100-105, II, 36, T, 98-99
 Induction, I, 51-56, T, 42
 Inquiries (quaestiones), general, T, 81; theoretical, T, 82-85; practical, T, 82, 86
 Insinuation, kind of exordium, I, 20, 21, 23-25
 Intrinsic arguments, T, 8-71
 Introduction, kind of exordium, I, 20-22
 Invention, defined, I, 9, O, 5, 7, T, 6
 Isocrates, Greek orator, II, 7, O, 17; quoted, I, 5, note a; Isocrates and the theory of Narratio, I, 27,
   note c.
 Issue, conjectural, I, 10, 11, 19, II,
   14-51, T, 82
 Issue, defined, I, 10, 13; II, 12, 13, T, 82, 92-94 and passim
 Issue, definitional, I, 10, 11, II, 52-
   56, 153-154, T, 83
 Issue, qualitative, I, 10, 12; its subdivisions, I, 12, 14, II, 62-115, T, 84-85
 Issue, translative, I, 10, 16, II, 57-61
 Italy, I, 17, II, 1

JUDICIAL speeches, one of the divisions of oratory, I, 7, T, 91, I and T passim
 Julius, Gaius Julius Caesar, T, 94; his Anticato, T, 94 note d
 Juno, II, 1
 Jurisconsult, I, 14, T, 44, 65-66
 Justice, II, 160-162

LACEDAEMON, Lacedaemonians, I, 35, 55, 69, II, 69, 96
 Laelius, Gaius, I, 5, T, 78
 Law, its origin and nature, II, 65-68, 162
 Law Cases—
   Aeschines vs. Ctesiphon, O, 19-23;
   Causa Curiana, T, 44; Epaminondas, accused of not handing over the army to his successor, I, 55-

INDEX

- 56, 69; Flaminius, accused of lese-majesty, II, 52; Fulvius, accused of incest, I, 80; Horatius' murder of Horatia, II, 78; Mancinus and postliminium, T, 37; Milo, defended by Cicero, O, 10; Orestes' murder of Clytaemnestra, I, 18, 31; Palamedes, T, 76; Pausanias, T, 75; Gaius Popilius, lese-majesty, II, 72; Staienus overheard, T, 75; Did Ulysses kill Ajax? I, 11, 92
- Law Cases, anonymous—
 Abandoning ship, II, 153; Bequest of plate, (quae rolet), II, 116; Contractor fails to deliver animals at Lacedaemon, II, 96, 124; Convict's will disputed, II, 148; Inheritance case, II, 62, 122; Iniuriae, II, 59; Murder of military tribune in self-defence, II, 124; Murder of traveller, II, 14, 43; Opening gates at night, II, 123; Poisoning and parricide case, II, 58; Reward for tyrannicide, II, 144; Rhodian ambassadors (without travel money), II, 87, 124; Sacrifice of bull-calf to Diana, II, 95, 124; Sacrilege, or theft, I, 11; Thebans accused of erecting illegal trophy, II, 69; Warship confiscated at Rhodes, II, 98, 124; Young officer at Caudine Forks, II, 92
- Law, Roman, reference to principles of— Actio aquae arcendae, T, 23; Ambitus defined, T, 24; Arch against a neighbour's wall, T, 22; Boundaries, T, 43; Disposition of dowry after divorce, T, 19, 20; Fraud defined, T, 40; Gentiles defined, T, 29; Inheritance defined, T, 29; Mancipatio, T, 28, 45; Manumission, T, 10; Marriage, T, 14, 23; Payment of debt to woman and minor, T, 46; Postliminium defined, T, 36, 37; Rain-water defined, T, 38, 39, 43; Ruta caesa, T, 100; Shores defined, T, 32; Testamentary capacity, T, 18, 50; Usucapio, T, 23; Usufruct, T, 15-17, 21; Vindex, T, 10
- Legal division of qualitative issue, I, 14, II, 62-68
- Letter and intent of a law or document, I, 17, II, 116-143, T, 96
- Licinius, Gaius Licinius Calvus, Roman orator, O, 11, note b
- Licinius, Lucius Licinius Crassus, Roman orator and statesman, II, 111, T, 44 and note b
- Livy, quoted, II, 72, note a, 91, note c, 105, note a
- Lucilius, O, 17
- Lysias, O, 9, 10
- MACEDONIA, I, 17, O, 22
- Mancinus, see Hostilius
- "Mean" case, I, 20, 21
- Memmius, Gaius, Roman orator, O, 11, note b
- Memory, defined, I, 9
- Menander, O, 6
- Micio, I, 27
- Milo, see Annius
- Mucius, family name of several juriconsults, T, 38
- Mucius, Publius Mucius Scaevola, name of two juriconsults, T, 24, 37
- Mucius, Quintus Mucius Scaevola, juriconsult, T, 29, and note c, 44, note b
- Mutius, II, 28
- NARRATIVE, I, 19, 27-30, T, 97; non-oratorical narratives, I, 27
- Necessity, plea of, II, 98-100; its connexion with honour and advantage, II, 170-175
- Numitorius, Quintus Numitorius Pulus Fregellanus, II, 105
- OBSCURE case, I, 20, 21
- Olympia, O, 8
- Opimius, Lucius, II, 105
- Orestes, I, 18, 19, 92
- Orosius, quoted, II, 72, note a
- PACIDELIANUS, O, 17
- Pacuvius, Marcus, Roman tragic poet, O, 2; his Medus, I, 27, 90, 94; his Antiopa, O, 18
- Palamedes, T, 76, and note c
- Partition, I, 19, 31-33
- Pausanias, Spartan general, T, 75
- Pelion, I, 91, T, 61
- Peripatetics, p. ix, I, 61
- Peroration, I, 19, 98-109, T, 98
- Pherae, II, 144
- Philip II, of Macedon, O, 22
- Philip V, of Macedon, I, 17

INDEX

- Philo, Greek philosopher, II, 8, note a Philodemus, Epicurean philosopher, I, 2, note a Plato, O, 15, 17
 Plautus, his Trinummus, I, 95
 Point for judge's decision, I, 18, II, passim Popilius, Gaius, accused of lese-majesty, II, 72, note a Porcius, Marcus Porcius Cato the Censor, I, 5, T, 78
 Porcius, Marcus Porcius Cato Uticensis, T, 94
 Postumius Spurius, commander at Caudine Forks, II, 91, note c
 Praise, II, 177-178
 Premeditation, II, 18, 20-24, 26-28
Purgatio, I, 15, II, 94-103
- QUESTION in the case, I, 18, T, 95
 Quintilian, on the death of Ajax, I, 10, note a; on Hermagoras, I, 14, note a; on the syllogism, I, 59, note a; on the "conjugate" argument, T, 12, note a
- REASONING by analogy, I, 17, II, 148-154
 Refutation, I, 19, 78-96
 Retort of the accusation, I, 15, II, 78-86
 Rewards and punishments, II, 110-115
 Rhetoric, art of, subdivisions, I, 9; see Eloquence Rhodes, I, 47, II, 87, 98
 Rhythm, O, 5
 Rome, Romans, I, 11, 48, 63, 92, II, 59, 79, 105, 111, O, 1, 11, 15, T, 30, 35, 48, 93
- SAMNTES, II, 91
 Scaevola, see Mucius
 Scipio, see Cornelius
 Scribonius, Gaius Scribonius Curio, I, 80
 Sempronius, Gaius Sempronius Gracchus (Tribune 123 and 122 B.C.), I, 5, 91
 Sempronius, Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus (cos. 177 B.C.), I, 48, 91
 Sempronius, Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus (Tribune 133 B.C.), I, 5, 91
- Seneca the philosopher, II, 164, note a Sentence structure, O, 5
 Servilius, Quintus Servilius Caepio, his Lex iudiciaria, I, 92
 Servius, his commentary on Vergil quoted, T, 76, note c
 Servius, see Sulpicius Sextus Empiricus, Greek philosopher, his testimony on Hermagoras, I, 8, note a; on Stoic dialectic, T, 54, note a
 Shifting the charge, I, 15, II, 86-94
 Similarity, argument from, T, 15, 41-45
 Simple case, I, 17
 Socrates, I, 51, 53, 61, 90, T, 42
 Socratica, I, 61, II, 176, note b, O, 17, T, 42
 Sosia, I, 33
 Species and genus, argument from, T, 14, 39-40
 Staienus, see Aelius
 Stoics, their dialectic, p. ix, p. 377, T, 6, 54, note a; their concept of Fate, T, 59
 Sulpicius, Servius Sulpicius Rufus, juriconsult, T, 36, note b
 Summing-up, I, 98-100
 Syllogism, T, 54-57
 Syphax, II, 105, and note a
- TEMPERANCE, II, 164
 Terentius, O, 3; his Adelphi, I, 27, 33; his Andria, O, 18
 Thebe, II, 144
 Thebes, Thebans, I, 32, 55, 56, 69, 93, II, 69
 Theophrastus, I, 61
 Thessaly, II, 144
 Thucydides, admired by Atticists, O, 15, 16; quoted, T, 75, note b
 Tisias, Greek rhetorician, II, 6
 Topics, defined, T, 2, 7, 8; which topics applicable to the various issues, T, 87-90
 Trebatius, Gaius Trebatius Testa, juriconsult, to whom the Topica is dedicated, pp. 377, 378, T, 1, 4, note a, 5, note a
 Trojans, I, 32
 Tusculanum, Cicero's villa, T, 1
- ULYSSES, I, 11, 92, II, 176, T, 76, note b

INDEX

- VALERIUS, Maximus, quoted, II, 52
note a
Velia, T, 5
Vergil, quoted, T, 76, note c
Veturius, Titus Veturius Calvinus, commander at Caudine Forks, II,
91, note c
Victorinus, interpretations of obscurities, I, 42, note a; I, 82, note c Virtue, II, 159-165
- WISDOM, II, 160
Written documents, dispute arising from, I, 17, II, 116-154, T, 95-96
- XENOPHON, I, 51, quoted, II, 144,
note a
- ZEUXIS, Greek painter, his picture of Helen, II, 1-3