Critical Studies: "Getting Real: Making It (Up) with Ronald Sukenick," in Chicago Review, Winter 1972, and "Persuasive Account: Working It Out with Ronald Sukenick," in Seeing Castaneda, edited by Daniel Noel, New York, Putnam, 1976, both by Jerome Klinkowitz; "Reading Out" by Melvin J. Friedman, in Fiction International 1 (Canton, New York), Fall 1973; "Imagination and Perception" (interview), in The New Fiction: Interviews with Innovative American Writers by Joe David Bellamy, Urbana, University of Illinois Press, 1974; "Tales of Fictive Power: Dreaming and Imagining in Ronald Sukenick's Postmodern Fiction" by Daniel Noel, in Boundary 2 (Binghamton, New York), Fall 1976; "Obscuring the Muse: The Mock-Autobiographies of Ronald Sukenick'' by Timothy Dow Adams, in Critique (Atlanta), vol. 20, no. 1, 1978; "Way Out West: The Exploratory Fiction of Ronald Sukenick" by Alan Cheuse, in Itinerary Criticism 7 edited by Charles Crow, Bowling Green, Ohio, Bowling Green State University Press, 1978; The Novel as Performance: The Fiction of Ronald Sukenick and Raymond Federman by Jerzy Kutnik, Carbondale, Southern Illinois University Press, 1986.

Ronald Sukenick comments:

(1991) My fiction is not "experimental."

* * *

As the most representative example of the innovative writers who contributed to the transformation of both American fiction and its supporting culture, Ronald Sukenick has remained active for over three decades, not so much adapting to conditions as challenging and in some cases changing the literary, publishing, and academic worlds about him. As such, he suggests the activist role of his artistic generation; not content to be, like Ken Kesey, a seismograph of cultural shock and a barometer of radical change, Sukenick has undertaken a revolution himself, leading developments that have reformed the culture in and of which Americans write.

Like several key figures of the 1960s group of innovators, Sukenick earned a doctorate (in English from Brandeis University) and undertook a career as a university professor. His first book was a revision of his dissertation on the poet Wallace Stevens, and while not directly related to any theory or style of narrative does demonstrate Sukenick's affinity for writing that exercises imaginative control. Aware of how Stevens believed that "a fiction is not an ideological formulation of belief but a statement of a favorable rapport with reality," Sukenick began his own efforts as a writer by following this code for ordering reality: "not by imposing ideas on it but by discovering significant relations with it." The most significant section of Wallace Stevens: Musing the Obscure is collected in Sukenick's book of essays, In Form: Digressions Towards a Study of Composition, where it complements an aesthetic underlying the fictive art of an era.

Sukenick's first novel, Up, activates this imagination as the generating force for narrative. As a gesture toward suspending the suspension of disbelief, Sukenick names his narrator/protagonist "Ronald Sukenick" and has him doing many of the same things Sukenick did at the time: struggling to study and teach free of the inhibitions that had smothered academic life in the preceding age, working to complete a novel (titled Up), and trying to establish a rapport with the reality around him-a reality that includes the justdeveloping countercultural world of the New York's Lower East Side and the community of artists and hustlers who are his friends. Fantasy merits the same treatment as experience, and at one point Sukenick's protagonist teaches a lesson from Wallace Stevens to his class: that art is "the invention of reality" that seeks "a vital connection with the world that, to stay alive, must be constantly reinvented to correspond with our truest feelings." Up is a Bildungsroman of just such a struggle, and by the end, when the artist has come to maturity, the point is not to celebrate this status but to appreciate how it is achieved.

The Death of the Novel and Other Stories collects a novella (from which the volume takes its title) and five short stories, all of which suggest various strategies for such imaginative connection with the world. "The Death of the Novel" is famous for its opening paragraph, a statement that not only sums up critically the eclipse of realistic fiction but, as the protagonist's lecture notes, propels him into a narrative experience that proves each point. Equally significant are "Momentum" and "The Birds," two stories that propound Sukenick's belief, stated later in In Form, that fiction "is not about experience but is more experience." The test of such work, which another essay from In Form compares to the anthropological tales of Carlos Castaneda, is the degree to which the teller can present "a persuasive account." In league with how anthropologists understand the world. Sukenick argues that there is not one reality but only various accounts of it, the most convincing of which succeeds as the culture's model.

A cultural model for the revolutionary America of the late 1960s and early 1970s is provided in Sukenick's second novel, Out. Its structure draws on the vernacular American format of a cross-country journey with characters being formed and reshaped by their experiences along the way. Its East to West movement expresses both the historical settling of the Continent and the rhythm of increasing speed and opening up of space that the geography implies. To replicate this experience for the reader, Sukenick numbers his chapters backwards, starting with 10 and proceeding in the manner of a rocket-launch countdown; at the same time, each chapter reads more quickly, with chapter 10 offering 10-line blocks of print, chapter nine introducing a line of blank space for each nine lines of print, chapter eight adjusting the ratio to eight-to-two, and so forth until chapter one is rushing by with only one line of narrative for every nine of open space. Yet the novel, which has by now progressed to the near-vacancy of California, the virtual opposite of New York City's cluttered accumulation, has one more chapter: chapter zero, whose 10 lines of space and no lines of print at all send the reader spinning off into emptiness, much like the drag-racing cars in the James Dean film, Rebel Without a Cause, that speed out over the cliff into the nothingness beyond.

From the mid-1970s onwards Sukenick has devoted much of his energy to organizational causes, a commitment that has both biographical and artistic consequences. As a full professor at the University of Colorado, he attracted several key writers as faculty, including Clarence Major and Steve Katz. For a time he directed the Coordinating Council of Literary Magazines, working for grant support of alternative publishing venues; at the same time he became one of the founders of The Fiction Collective, a collaborative venture in which writers would fund their books' publication and therefore retain control of all phases of production, distribution, and sales. Working for equal reform in the profession of English, Sukenick became a member of the executive council of the Modern Language Association. His greatest impact, however, has been as publisher of The American Book Review, a tabloid dedicated to covering books neglected by the commercial reviews. He also began editing the magazine Black Ice.

His own novels began reflecting this increased social awareness and offered models for both resisting control by others and initiating personal reform. 98.6, published in 1975, offers three models for society: an initial section which interpolates dreams interfacing ancient and postmodern worlds, a central narrative detailing the attempts of countercultural revolutionaries to establish a commune, and a third part devoted to a utopian venture in psychic consciousness called, with pun intended, "the state of Israel." One of the author's most comically exuberant novels, 98.6 nevertheless answers critics' objections that innovative fiction was ignoring social and moral issues. Though ending in an exceedingly up-beat manner, its central indictment of the 1960s generation for failing to produce an enduring model is compelling (the title refers to the body temperature being monitored as a woman from the commune miscarries the child meant to be this world's future).

Sukenick's later works play with elements from realistic fiction in the service of just such social commentary, but always in ways that reaffirm the primacy of the imagination as the creative force in any world. Long Talking Bad Conditions Blues takes its form from a blues/jazz narrative, the style of composition Sukenick favors as proceeding by improvisation and being fueled by its own compositional energy. Set in Paris, where Sukenick owns an apartment and lives for a portion of each year, it is reminiscent of Up in that its world is created by not just a community but a central intelligence coming to terms with the experience of its being. Blown Away draws similar energy from the Colorado-California life the author has lived in the decades since leaving New York. Here the focus is on how Hollywood seeks to produce the country's imagination, a power based on the willing suspension of disbelief Sukenick scorns as the undoing of art. If audiences yield control of their imaginations, he argues, others will do their imagining for them—which means they will have no effective experience of life. Blown Away creates a culture suffering from just such imaginative stasis. Antidotes are found in the author's second collection of short stories, a book that bears the optimistic title The Endless Short Story—endless because the model is that of creation itself, on the order of Simon Rodia and his Watts Towers, an assemblage whose essence consists in a state of continual building from the detritus of an otherwise dead culture. Such rebuildings take the form of what Sukenick calls "hyperfictions" in the novel Doggy Bag. Here scenes from the global culture of European travel and international terrorism are played out within a cleverly comic language in which imaginatively dead citizens are not only called "Zombies" but are said to suffer from an unstoppable mind control plague called Zombie Immune Tolerance Syndrome, or "ZITS." Thus life becomes atomized, everyone mounting his or her own private revolution in isolation from others, a condition the author calls "the privatization of revolution." The counterforce to such stasis is to avoid rigidity by "getting your mojo working," something the hyperfiction of Doggy Bag enacts. Though clearly recognizable as a satire of contemporary life, Sukenick's writing moves a step further by creating its own typologies, taxonomies, grammars, and eventually a language itself in which to comment on present conditions.

Respect for the genius of creation and a curiosity about the ways in which it functions motivated Sukenick's writing of In Form: Digressions Toward a Study of Composition, his commentary on the nature of postmodern narrative art, and Down and In: Life in the Underground, an autobiographical account of Sukenick's fascination with the transformative styles of literary art initiated in Greenwich Village and the East Village during the 1950s and early 1960s. Behind both studies is the example of Henry Miller, who in Paris a quartercentury before had learned how to deny "official experience" and shape both his life and art according to a more imaginative model. Such has been the imperative for all of Sukenick's work, in literature and in the professions of English and publishing alike.

—Jerome Klinkowitz

SWAN, Susan

Nationality: Canadian. Born: Midland, Ontario, 1945. Education: Havergal College, early 1960s; McGill University, B.A. 1967. Career: Writer and performer in theatre, 1970s; creative writing teacher, York University, Toronto. Address: Robarts Centre for Canadian Studies, York University, Toronto, Canada.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Biggest Modern Woman in the World. Toronto, Lester & Orpen Dennys, 1983; New York, Ecco Press, 1986.

The Last of the Golden Girls. Toronto, Lester & Orpen Dennys, 1989; New York, Arcade Publishers, 1991.

The Wives of Bath. Toronto and New York, Knopf,1993.

Short Stories

Unfit for Paradise. Dingle Editions, 1982. Stupid Boys Are Good to Relax With. N.p. 1996.

Plays

Queen of the Silver Blades, 1975. Writing vs. Dance, 1977.

Down and In, 1978.

True Confessions of the Female Organs, 1978.

Poetry F.M., 1979.

X's and O's on the Longest Day of the Year, 1983.

Moral Passion, 1984.

Radio Plays: The Collaborators, Toronto, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 1974.

Television Plays: Futurework, Toronto, TVOntario, 1984.

Other

Contributor, Best Canadian Short Stories. Oberon, 1989.
 ContributorHard Times. Mercury Press, 1990.
 Editor, with Margaret Dragu and Sarah Sheard, Mothers Talk Back: Momz Radio. Toronto, Coach House Press, 1991.

* * *

Coming from a career in journalism and presently teaching at York University in Toronto, Canadian writer Susan Swan has produced three novels and two volumes of short pieces to date. Her first publication, Unfit for Paradise, is a small group of short stories on the theme of Canadians traveling on tropical vacations. The Biggest Modern Woman of the World is her greatest success because it handles the transition of history into the mythic at the touchpoint of feminist issues, and in so doing joins the company of Jeanette Winterson's Sexing the Cherry and Margaret Atwood's Alias Grace. It professes to tell the story of the nineteenth-century Nova Scotia giantess Anna Swan (1846-1888), who was exhibited in New York by P. T. Barnum and later toured Britain and Europe before settling down in Seville, Ohio, to an uneasy married life with the Kentucky Giant. The story has a clever mix of narration, including Anna's own voice, her letters, other people's letters, "testimonials," and fragments of poems and other documents. Anna's voice in particular is very cleverly presented, because the reader she is directly addressing is ostensibly her nineteenth-century listener, but in fact the quality of her observations are profoundly modern. While the story follows Anna's life in rough chronological sequence, its strength lies in the ironies set in motion by its title. Anna's experiences are precursors of the feminist moment of the late twentieth century, and her own narrative voice is a clever mixture of an educated nineteenth-century woman (the real Anna had extensive tutoring written into her contract with Barnum), a Nova Scotia Scots practical farmgirl, and a twentieth-century consciousness of how women feel themselves to be seen as strange and monstrous creatures. Anna says she intends to be "... A Victorian lady who refused to be inconsequential."

The novel is very direct about bodily functions and sexuality. Anna discovers that the Kentucky Giant is impotent and small, but she has two children with "Judge" Apollo Ingalls, her manager after she leaves Barnum. Anna's practicality and sharp eye for the world confound reader expectations of a giantess as a physical curiosity. In this witty and perceptive novel she emerges as an icon of "modern" womanhood, directing the reader to the personality rather than the body.

Swan's more recent books The Last of the Golden Girls, The Wives of Bath, and the short story collection Stupid Boys Are Good to Relax With are less coherent in tone and structure, but each has features that suggest that Swan is coming upon a style and form that may make her a first-rank writer.

The first half of The Last of the Golden Girls, subtitled "Losing," takes place in 1959 on the shores of Georgian Bay (renamed U-Go-I-Go Sound), where fifteen-year-old Jude "Dinger" Bell and her friends Roberta "Bobby" Gallagher and Shelly Moffat are discovering themselves and sex. It has the strengths of good psychological perception and sensitivity to the pressures on the girls and their resulting struggles with parents, boys, and each other. Dinger is attempting to write romances, and she and Bobby are able to quote the sexual encounters from Payton Place and Lady Chatterley's Lover. But there are always overtones of a struggle for dominance, and the section ends when Bobby and Shelly trick Dinger into performing oral sex on Jay Manchester, the boy de jour, at a beach party, horribly shaming her and bringing the summer to a bitter end.

The second half of the novel, "Winning," takes place ten years later when Bobby has married into the wealthy Cape family who own an island in the Sound. In this playground of the rich, Jude, now a journalist working on a book about the Cape family, is struggling with Shelly for the love of Child Cape, and Bobby is married to Bull Cape. Swan directs the section at "you," whom she identifies as the reader, Old Voyeur Eyes, who she imagines as actually present in the scenes she depicts. Thus she can address the reader, correcting what she sees as their misconceptions of the situation. This self-conscious narrative position represents an increased maturity in Jude, and from this stance she chronicles a series of sexual struggles within the family and involving Jonah Prince, a rich Jew who is having an affair with Bobby. The section centers on a series of sexual exchanges and struggles. But the novel switches tone near the end and becomes awkwardly apocalyptic as atomic bombs explode and the Capes, plus an Indian swami Mrs. Cape has recruited, end up under the Sound in a strange double sphere that she has had built. These events simply run away from the focus on human personal experience that the book has been about, and there is finally no explanation for the section title "Winning," and no resolution to the tangled lives that the voyeur reader has been watching. The unevenness of the plan for this novel overwhelms the energy of its narrative.

The Wives of Bath is much more coherent as a narrative and features Swan's most convincing character, Mary Beatrice "Mouse" Bradford, the slightly hunchbacked (she calls her hump Alice) daughter of a small-town physician. In this narrative she is sent to Huron Ladies College because her father Morley is nervous about bringing up a daughter and Mouse's stepmother Sal does not want her in the house. From the beginning we know that the trial of her roommate Pauline Sykes is underway, but the spectacular nature of her crime takes most of the retrospective narrative to emerge. The first-person narrative is intelligent, and Swan creates an edgy style that allows both a naturalistic representation of the young women at the school and overtones of caricature and even surrealism. Caricature emerges in the persons of the mistresses in the school and in aspects of school life, and surrealism in images of a former Victorian headmistress riding a gigantic three-wheeler. Mouse herself is a realist, almost a version of Anna Swan and Jude Bell. She sees her own situation clearly, and she has a wry eye for the world of the school. She copes with most things but is surprised by the discovery that Lewis, who is ostensibly Pauline's brother and who works on the grounds of the school, is in fact Pauline herself acting as a boy. Seeking her friendship, Mouse imitates male roles as well, but Pauline's behavior detonates into the pathological, leading to the brutal and bizarre conclusion of the novel.

The Wives of Bath, like The Last of the Golden Girls before it, lacks a unity of style. But unlike the unfitted compound parts of the earlier work the difficulty here may lie more with the reader than the author. Swan has found a tone for the narrative "I" of Mouse Bradford unlike any other woman's voice in fiction. If Mouse's bravado was removed, it would be like the voice of J. D. Salinger's Holden Caulfield—observant, sensitive, a touch cynical, and suffering through the shocks of discovering the intricacies of the world.

Stupid Boys Are Good to Relax With is a short story collection in two parts: Gutenberg Stories and Cyber Tales. The Cyber Tales are mytho-comic experiments in sexual politics featuring imagined emails between such luminaries as St. Paul, Hannibal, Catherine the Great, Marilyn Monroe, and Ariadne. Four of the Gutenberg Stories, however, extend the Mouse Bradford character from The Wives of Bath. Three of these are set before Wives, including the title story and "The Stupid Boy Handbook," a teenager's guide to boys. "The Unabridged Stupid Boy Handbook" is Mouse's adult version of the same handbook, written at the age of thirty.

Swan's oeuvre to date is a mixture of success and promise. She seeks new narrative approaches, like the Old Voyeur Eyes character of the reader who is actually present in The Last of the Golden Girls, and the knowing young woman characters of Jude Bell and Mouse Bradford, but the voice of Anna Swan is to date her only assured, flexible, and coherent vehicle.

-Peter Brigg

SWIFT, Graham

Nationality: British. Born: London, 4 May 1949. Education: Dulwich College, 1960–67; Queens' College, Cambridge, 1967–70, B.A., M.A.; York University, 1970–73. Lives in London. Awards: Geoffrey Faber Memorial prize, 1983; Guardian Fiction prize, 1983; Royal Society of Literature Winifred Holtby award, 1984; Premio Grinzane Cavour (Italy), 1987; Prix du meilleur livre étranger (France), 1994; Booker prize, 1996. Fellow, Royal Society of Literature, 1984. Agent: A.P. Watt Ltd., 20 John Street, London WC1N 2DR, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Sweet Shop Owner. London, Allen Lane, 1980; New York, Washington Square Press, 1985.

Shuttlecock. London, Allen Lane, 1981; New York, Washington Square Press, 1984.

Waterland. London, Heinemann, 1983; New York, Poseidon Press, 1984.

Out of This World. London, Viking, and New York, Poseidon Press, 1988.

Ever After. London, Picador, and New York, Knopf, 1992. Last Orders. New York, Knopf, 1996.

Short Stories

Learning to Swim and Other Stories. London, London Magazine Editions, 1982; New York, Poseidon Press, 1985.

Other

Editor, with David Profumo, The Magic Wheel: An Anthology of Fishing in Literature. London, Picador, 1985.

*

Critical Studies: "History and the 'Here and Now': The Novels of Graham Swift" by Del Ivan Janik, in Twentieth Century Literature (Hempstead, New York) vol. 35, No. 1, 1989.

* * *

"Can it be a kindness not to tell what you see? And a blessing to be blind? And the best aid to human happiness that has ever been invented is a blanket of soft, white lies?" asks one of the characters in Out of This World. These questions sound the central theme of Graham Swift's six novels: does human happiness depend on understanding or on feeling? While the question is asked as if for the first time in each novel, Swift's answer remains, with one exception, the same: "soft, white lies" are necessary to human happiness. In keeping with his belief that feelings matter more than understanding, Swift also adheres to a model of authorship that prioritizes self-expression above communication with readers.

The Sweet Shop Owner spans a single hot summer's day, the last day of the life of widowed shopkeeper Willy Chapman. Throughout much of the day Willy carries on an internal dialogue with his estranged daughter. He remembers his marriage to an unloving wife, Irene, who attempted to compensate by bearing him the child: "You were her gift." His scholarly daughter has forsaken her father, and, according to Mrs. Cooper, won't return. Refusing to accept this, Willy quietly kills himself in the hope of finally reuniting with his daughter. "Don't you see, you're no freer than before, no freer than I am? And the only thing that can dissolve history now is if, by a miracle, you come."

A single suspicion brings about the climax of Shuttlecock. Immobilized by the heroic figure of his war spy father, Prentis, a Dead Crimes Investigator, bullies his wife and two sons. The suspicion that his father may have been a traitor has multiple effects. It frees Prentis: "Something had collapsed around me; so I couldn't help, in the middle of the ruins, this strange feeling of release. I had escaped; I was free." The threat of the publicity of this suspicion also may have driven his father mad. The suspicion illustrates to Prentis the power—and the danger—of knowledge: "I stared again at the file. I thought of the number of times I'd opened the cover of Shuttlecock hoping Dad would come out; hoping to hear his voice. Was I afraid that the allegations might be true—or that they might be false? And supposing, in some extraordinary way, that everything Quinn told me was concocted, was an elaborate hoax—if I never looked in the file, I would never know. I read the code letters over and over again. C9/E ... And then suddenly I knew I wanted to be uncertain, I wanted to be in the dark." Rather than confirmation or denial of his father's betrayal, it is the suspicion—the "soft, white lies"—that ultimately proves more valuable because it preserves the possibility of a heroic man.

Like Charles Dickens's Great Expectations, Waterland is a bildungsroman about a young boy from the Fens of East Anglia. Unlike other Swiftian characters, Tom Crick, the history teacher protagonist, is drawn to face the truth of his family's tortured history: "I'm the one who had to ask questions, who had to dig up the truth (my recipe for emergencies: explain your way out)." But the price Tom pays for his knowledge is high. His wife abducts a child. His half-brother commits suicide.

The split between understanding and feelings structures Out of This World, which is narrated through the alternating monologues of photographer, Harry Beech, and his estranged daughter, Sophie. The latter has forbidden cameras (a metaphor for realist understanding) in her house. We learn that Sophie glimpsed Harry photographing the wreck of the car bombing of his own father: "I saw him first, then he saw me. He was like a man caught sleep-walking, not knowing how he could be doing what he was doing, as if it were all part of some deep, ingrained reflex. But just for a moment I saw this look on his face of deadly concentration. He hadn't seen me first because he'd been looking elsewhere, and his eyes had been jammed up against a camera." Appalled by her father's detachment, she has refused to speak to him for 10 years. At first Harry resists Sophie's point. Ultimately, Harry acknowledges that a lie reunited him with his estranged father. His father's lie, which shielded Harry from his wife's infidelity, demonstrated his father's love. Harry reciprocated by reaching out to his father: "We strolled to the end of the terrace. As we turned, I wanted to do that simple but rare thing and take his arm... . He said, 'I've never told you, have I?""

The split between understanding and feelings also structures Ever After, which is narrated through the alternating monologues of Victorian Darwinist Matthew Pearce and widowed English professor Billy Unwin. Whereas the Victorian Pearce sacrificed his wife and family to remain faithful to his Darwinist beliefs, Unwin would sacrifice the few beliefs he holds to bring back his deceased wife. "I would believe or not believe anything, swallow any old make-belief, in order to have Ruth back. Whereas Matthew—Whereas this Pearce guy-" After a seduction plot momentarily tempts Unwin to forget the memory of his wife, life no longer appears to be worth living to the professor, who attempts suicide. His revival leads him to the discovery that it is the "soft, white lie" of the memories of his wife that gives him a reason for living.

Like Faulkner's As I Lay Dying, the polyphonic Last Orders is narrated through the friends and family of a recently deceased man on the burial journey. Londoners Ray Johnson, Lenny Tate, Vic Tucker, Vince Dodds, and Amy Dodds are bound to the recently deceased Jack Dodds through decades of love, friendship, and secrets. Vince is Jack's adopted son, who ran away as a teenager. Ray fought with Jack in World War II, and has been in love with Jack's wife, Amy, for as many years. Amy remembers the foundering of her marriage as Jack refused to acknowledge their mentally retarded daughter: "He won't mention June so I won't mention Ray. Fair dos. What you don't know can't hurt." Here the lies sometimes serve not only to protect, but also to create a better community. "So when Vince Pritchett, but forget the Pritchett, dropped into my lap, into our lap," says Amy, "I ought to have known it wouldn't help a bit, it wouldn't win him back. You can't make a real thing out of pretending hard." Regardless of her denial, it is through "pretending hard" that Amy has created a family: After years of resentment, Vince has reunited with his adopted parents.

The importance of "soft, white lies" is apparent in Swift's attitude towards authorship. Some authors write to communicate with their readers a necessary piece of social criticism, a rationale which has its roots in the Realist tradition of social responsibility. Other authors write to express themselves, a rationale which has its roots in the Romantic tradition of self-expression. A quote from Swift expresses the Romantic tenet that deep feeling is the essential ingredient of art: "I am absolutely not a formalist, because what does matter to me are things as felt, and feeling seems at least to stand in opposition to form: form is to do with control and discipline, and feeling is to do with liberation..."

While expressing himself may be Swift's intention as an author, it's suspect that this self-expression is "liberation." After all, what kind of "liberation" can obsessively rewriting the same plot be called? Immobilized by the excessive expectations of her parents, Irene in The Sweet Shop Owner could neither fully reject, nor fully participate in her family life. Immobilized by the heroic figure of his father, Prentis in Shuttlecock is freed by the revelation that his father may have been a traitor to the English. Immobilized by the expectations of her father to become like her sanctified mother, Mary in Waterland goes mad. Sense a pattern here? Regardless of which book by Swift one chooses, one meets the same plot: an adult frozen in childhood must free him- or herself from the overpowering example of an idealized parent. The repetition of a single plot suggests that Swift has supported a rationale of writing as self-expression from necessity rather than from choice. Even if Swift had wanted to write for his audience, one wonders whether he could do so. As Swift has said, "I write a lot by sheer instinct, groping around in the dark."

Expressing himself may have been Swift's foremost aim, but communicating with his readers is a necessary aim of any author. Swift fails—as several reviewers' comments indicate—to communicate with his readers. Too many perspectives, none of which are authorized by the obfuscating narrator has been the frequent charge of reviewers. "Mr. Swift is so committed to seeing around perspectives, undermining his own assertions, squeezing the narrator between the pincers of the past and present, being ironic at the expense of what somebody didn't know but somebody now does, that the effect he creates is rather like a three-ring circus," a New York Times Book Review critic said of Waterland. "One yearns for a whiff of directness..." Stephen Wall of the London Review of Books also protested that the multiple perspectives in Ever After were not resolved: "Despite its manifestly humane intentions, the different areas of narrative interest in Ever After disperse, rather than concentrate attention. Although its varying strands are conscientiously knitted together ... they don't seem significantly to cohere." In failing to organize the multiple viewpoints, Swift violates the assumption that the author will provide a "hierarchical organization of details." Instead, the reader is left alone to make meanings; a job she could have done without the reading of any of Swift's novels.

Why this refusal to guide his readers? An answer lies in Swift's admiration of "vulnerability." Swift's characters are often proud to say, "I don't know." In Shuttlecock, Prentis says: "I don't know" ... It seemed to me that this was an answer I would give, boldly, over and over again for the rest of my life." According to Swift, when an author shows the reader his vulnerability, he gains the reader's trust: "An author ought to have authority ... It makes sure the reader trusts the writer ... Often that stems from the realization that the writer is prepared to show that vulnerability." When Swift has shown vulnerability, however, his reviewers have not trusted him. Just the opposite. Swift has said, "I am desperate to avoid a sense of power derived from form." His fear of authority is indeed evident in his novels.

-Cynthia Cameros

T

TAN, Amy (Ruth)

Nationality: American. Born: Oakland, California, 19 February 1952. Education: San Jose State University, California, B.A. in linguistics and English, 1973, M.A. in linguistics, 1974; University of California, Berkley, 1974–76. Family: Married Louis M. DeMattei in 1974. Career: Specialist in language development, Alameda County Association for Mentally Retarded, Oakland, 1976–80; project director, MORE Project, San Francisco, 1980–81; reporter, managing editor, and associate publisher, Emergency Room Reports, 1981–83; technical writer, 1983–87. Awards: Commonwealth Club gold award, 1989, and Bay Area Book Reviewers award, 1990, both for The Joy Luck Club; Best American Essays award, 1991. Honorary D.H.L.: Dominican College, San Rafael, 1991. Address: c/o Penguin Putnam Inc., 375 Hudson Street, New York, New York 10014–3658, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Joy Luck Club. New York, Putnam, and London, Heinemann, 1989.

The Kitchen God's Wife. New York, Putnam, and London, Collins, 1991.

The Hundred Secret Senses. New York, G.P. Putnam's Sons, 1995.

Play

Screenplay: The Joy Luck Club, 1993.

Other

The Moon Lady (for children). New York, Macmillan, 1992.The Chinese Siamese Cat, illustrated by Gretchen Shields (for children). New York, Macmillan, and London, Hamilton, 1994.

*

Film Adaptation: The Joy Luck Club, 1993.

Critical Studies: Amy Tan: A Critical Companion by E.D. Huntley, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1998; The Broom Closet: Secret Meanings of Domesticity in Postfeminist Novels by Louise Erdrich, Mary Gordon, Toni Morrison, Marge Piercy, Jane Smiley, and Amy Tan by Jeannette Batz Cooperman, New York, Peter Lang, 1999; Amy Tan, edited and with an introduction by Harold Bloom, Philadelphia, Chelsea House Publishers, 2000.

* * *

When Amy Tan's first novel The Joy Luck Club appeared in 1989, there had been a long interval since the publication of any work on Chinese-American identity, a theme briefly and convincingly explored by Maxine Hong Kingston in The Woman Warrior and China Men in the previous decade. Both The Joy Luck Club and The Kitchen God's Wife use the framing device of mother-daughter relationships, a motif used in works of American novelists such as Alice Walker, Toni Morrison, Edith Wharton, and Anzia Yezierska to name just a few.

In this way Tan draws upon a familiar and comforting tradition for the Western reader. Strategically too this theme is central to Western women in that it explores the twin poles of the daughter's desire for individuation, wherein she demands an identity as separate from her mother. This clashes with her intense and fierce attachment to and sense of continuum with her mother's life. In this, Tan's pursuit of mother-daughter relationships, rather than father-son ones, reinscribes the woman in the interrogation of origins, a theme only explored via sons who are the ''legitimate'' heirs to any notion of origins.

Marianne Hirsch points out in The Mother-Daughter Plot of 1989, that the mother-daughter narrative varies from the traditional father-son relationship in that the former is marked with opposition and contradiction. She argues that the Western narrative of mother-daughter relationships is located in the Demeter-Persephone myth which enacts the daughter's unbreakable attachment to her mother which is constantly interrupted by her relationship to her husband. To this extent, the daughters Jing-Mei Woo (along with a host of others) in The Joy Luck Club and Pearl in The Kitchen God's Wife indicate the tremendous difficulties of individuation and the loss of the maternal.

In Tan's novels, mother-daughter dyads ultimately become a metaphor for the relationship between China and the U.S. In the early part of this century Anzia Yezierska had written immigrant novels where the mother and daughter embody the old country and the new world respectively and it is within this framework that Tan too explores the Chinese part of a Chinese-American identity. Thus mother-daughter relationships as well as its intersection with the inscription of the old country get played out in the overarching theme of identity. As first-generation Americans, Jing-Mei Woo and Pearl signify the assimilation that America requires whereas their mothers, as immigrants, embody a severe sense of displacement. Jing-Mei and Pearl's desire for individuation thus goes beyond a break from the mother. Their lives also mirror the ambiguous relationship that Chinese-Americans have with the two mother-countries, the U.S. and China. In a further turn of the screw, Tan shows Pearl's mother, Winnie, as a daughter, in China. This repetition of mothers as daughters prefigures in the characters of Ying-Ying St. Clair and An-Mei Hsu in The Joy Luck Club. In this foregrounding of mothers as daughters, Tan reveals her ploy, wherein she wrests this particular theme from the Western tradition and locates it squarely within China. The oriental other who functions as the object of inquiry of the West is revealed to be the maternal progenitor of a Western tradition.

The Hundred Secret Senses uses themes familiar from Tan's two earlier novels: of sisters, of China and America, of competition, of the stories one tells about one's past. Ultimately, the issues that Tan's novels raise are: Can one really assimilate? Does assimilation bring about equality or is the Chinese-American always in an inferior position within dominant American identity? Can one emphasize difference while maintaining equality? There is no resolution to these questions, but rather conclusions that always end in the mother-country, China. Kwan, one of the two protagonists in The Hundred Secret Senses, remains almost entirely Chinese, even though she came to America as a teenager. Her assimilated half-sister Olivia is impatient with her and with her stories of ghosts and dragons, but ultimately Kwan and her stories win her over—particularly after the two travel to China with Olivia's estranged husband Simon, and find themselves in danger.

In addition to her novels, Tan has written two works of children's fiction, The Moon Lady (an excerpt from The Joy Luck Club), and The Chinese Siamese Cat, both of which deal with clever daughters.

-Radhika Mohanram

TENNANT, Emma (Christina)

Has also written as Catherine Aydy. Nationality: British. Born: London, 20 October 1937. Education: St. Paul's Girls' School, London. Family: Has one son and two daughters. Career: Travel correspondent, Queen, London, 1963; features editor, Vogue, London, 1966; editor, Bananas, London, 1975–78. Since 1982 general editor, In Verse, London; since 1985 editor, Lives of Modern Women series, Viking, publishers, London. Fellow, Royal Society of Literature, 1982. Address: 141 Elgin Crescent, London W.11, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Colour of Rain (as Catherine Aydy). London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1964.

The Time of the Crack. London, Cape, 1973; as The Crack, London, Penguin, 1978.

The Last of the Country House Murders. London, Cape, 1974; New York, Nelson, 1976.

Hotel de Dream. London, Gollancz, 1976.

The Bad Sister. London, Gollancz, and New York, Coward McCann, 1978.

Wild Nights. London, Cape, 1979; New York, Harcourt Brace, 1980. Alice Fell. London, Cape, 1980.

Queen of Stones. London, Cape, 1982.

Woman Beware Woman. London, Cape, 1983; as The Half-Mother, Boston, Little Brown, 1985.

Black Marina. London, Faber, 1985.

The Adventures of Robina, by Herself. London, Faber, 1986; New York, Persea, 1987.

Series: The Cycle of the Sun

The House of Hospitalities. London, Viking, 1987.

A Wedding of Cousins. London, Viking, 1988.

The Magic Drum. London, Viking, 1989.

Two Women of London: The Strange Case of Ms. Jekyll and Mrs. Hyde. London, Faber, 1989.

Sisters and Strangers. London, Grafton, 1990.

Faustine. London, Faber, 1991.

Pemberley; or, Pride and Prejudice Continued. New York, St. Martin's Press, 1993; as Pemberley: A Sequel to Pride and Prejudice, London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1993.

Tess. London, HarperCollins, 1993.

An Unequal Marriage; or, Pride and Prejudice Twenty Years Later. London, Sceptre, and New York, St. Martin's Press, 1994. Travesties. London and Boston, Faber and Faber, 1995.

Emma in Love: Jane Austen's Emma Continued. London, Fourth Estate. 1996.

Uncollected Short Stories

"Mrs. Ragley," in Listener (London), 1973.

- "Mrs. Barratt's Ghost," in New Statesman (London), 28 December 1973.
- "Philomela," in Bananas, edited by Tennant. London, Quartet-Blond and Briggs, 1977.
- "The Bed That Mick Built," in New Stories 2, edited by Derwent May and Alexis Lykiard. London, Arts Council, 1977.
- "Cupboard Love," in New Stories 4, edited by Elaine Feinstein and Fay Weldon. London, Hutchinson, 1979.
- "Tortoise-Shell Endpapers," in Time Out (London), 21 December 1979.
- "The Frog Prints," in London Tales, edited by Julian Evans. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1983.
- "The German in the Wood," in London Review of Books, 1984.

Play

Television Script: Frankenstein's Baby, 1990.

Other (for children)

The Boggart. London, Granada, 1980.

The Search for Treasure Island. London, Penguin, 1981.

The Ghost Child. London, Heinemann, 1984.

Dave's Secret Diary. London, Longman, 1991.

Other

The ABC of Writing. London, Faber, 1992.

Hooked Rugs (with Ann Davies). New York, Sterling, 1995.

Girlitude: A Memoir of the 50s and 60s. London, Jonathan Cape, 1999.

Strangers: A Family Romance (autobiography). New York, New Directions, 1999.

Burnt Diaries (memoir). Edinburgh, Canongate, 1999.

Editor, Bananas. London, Quartet-Blond and Briggs, 1977.

Editor, Saturday Night Reader. London, W.H. Allen, 1979.

*

Manuscript Collection: National Library of Scotland, Edinburgh.

Critical Studies: "Emma Tennant, Hyper-Novelist" by Gary Indiana, in Village Voice Literary Supplement (New York), May 1991.

. . .

Since the early 1970s, when she was in her mid-thirties, Emma Tennant has been a prolific novelist and has established herself as one of the leading British exponents of "new fiction." This does not mean that she is an imitator of either the French nouveaux romanciers or the American post-modernists, although her work reveals an indebtedness to the methods and preoccupations of some of the latter. Like them, she employs parody and rewriting, is interested in the fictiveness of fiction, appropriates some science-fiction conventions, and exploits the possibilities of generic dislocation and mutation, especially the blending of realism and fantasy. Yet, although parallels can be cited and influences suggested, her work is strongly individual, the product of an intensely personal, even idiosyncratic, attempt to create an original type of highly imaginative fiction.

The first novel she published under her own name was The Time of the Crack. This futuristic fable about an ever-widening crack in the riverbed of the Thames is a fusion of black farce, wide-ranging satire, and apocalyptic vision. One reviewer described it as "Lewis Carroll technique applied to H.G. Wells material," but other names suggest themselves even more strongly, notably Orwell and Waugh. Like Nineteen Eighty-Four, The Time of the Crack is, in its bizarre way, a "condition of England" novel, projecting onto the immediate future current obsessions with decline and fall, and literalizing the metaphor of national disintegration. Stylistically, the book is characterized by a satirical panache recalling Waugh's early period, as Tennant mercilessly caricatures many aspects of contemporary society.

Her next novel, The Last of the Country House Murders, is also set in the near future—Britain after the Revolution—and in its oblique way is another "condition of England" novel. Again like Orwell, Tennant extrapolates from the present a possible picture of the future, but what makes this novel so different from other dystopias is her ingenious fusion of the novel of pessimistic prophecy with an amusing parodistic re-working of the country-house brand of detective fiction. Indeed, the book increasingly focuses on the small group of peculiar, virtually caricature figures who arrive at Woodiscombe Manor to participate in the murder mystery planned by the government as a tourist attraction; the wider social and national issues become more marginal than in The Time of the Crack. The result is bizarre comedy, replete with the eccentricities, foibles, and oddities that recur throughout her oeuvre.

Eccentricity also pervades the small hotel that provides the setting for Hotel de Dream, in which the dreams and fantasies of the few residents, one of whom is a romantic novelist, play a much more important part than the framework of waking reality. Reality itself dissolves into fantasy and vice versa, and the various dreams and fictions merge with one another to create a super-reality of the collective unconscious, in which the dreamers acquire new identities and the romantic novelist's imaginary characters become as real as their creator. While the book is certainly not lacking in the weird humour of her two previous books, and actually abounds in the grotesque, there is a shift away from satirical comedy in favour of psychological fantasy, from a broad perspective to a closed world. Even so, Tennant still provides a tangentially symbolic comment on the "condition of England" issue through her characters and their dream-selves.

In both The Last of the Country House Murders and Hotel de Dream, Tennant plays self-consciously with novelistic conventions, but in The Bad Sister she attempts something much more daring and ambitious—some would say foolhardy. She models the entire book very closely on a literary masterpiece, Hogg's Confessions of a Justified Sinner. While setting her novel in the present and locating only part of it in Scotland, she adheres to Hogg's highly original structure, adopts some of the main features of his plot, and retains his embodiment of the Devil, Gil-Martin, though in a peripheral role. However, she does alter the sex of the main characters, the equivalent of the Justified Sinner being Jane Wild and her evil genius being Meg rather than Gil-Martin. This change allows Tennant to introduce the subject of feminism and the contemporary phenomenon of female urban guerrillas, but the main focus is not social or political but psychological—the split personality of Jane under the influence of the obsessional Meg. Like Hogg, Tennant is concerned with human duality, fanaticism, the subjectivity of reality, and the possibility of possession, but she interprets these in a contemporary context, developing the theme of the schizoid nature of modern woman.

If The Bad Sister is imaginatively claustrophobic, her two subsequent novels, Wild Nights and Alice Fell, are even more so, the dividing line between reality and fantasy being increasingly blurred and ambiguous. In Wild Nights, for example, the child-narrator presents a vision of the world controlled by the imagination rather than reason, in which magic and enchantment are an integral part of nature. Seasonal symbolism and archetypal images play a vital part, and the action seems timeless and placeless despite being located in postwar Scotland and England. For the most part, the relatively few characters in this closed world are strange, eccentric beings, more mythical than social. Alice Fell is strikingly similar to Wild Nights in a number of these respects, despite the differences that arise from it being a third-person narration. Tennant sustains the obsessive visionary quality of both novels by brilliant and evocative writing, but she does so at a price. In moving so far from The Time of the Crack, she sacrifices some of her most attractive qualities as a novelist. Nevertheless, Alice Fell, a reworking of the myth of Persephone in terms of contemporary British society in a state of upheaval, is a most ambitious imaginative feat, even if the symbolism and archetypal characterization tend to be too intrusive.

Queen of Stones represents a move away from the cul-de-sac of poetic fiction into which Tennant was in danger of becoming trapped. After The Time of the Crack, Tennant's fiction in the 1970s had gradually become more intense, more introspective, and narrower in focus. There was a gain in the sheer virtuosity of her writing, but there was also a loss of the comedy and satire of The Time of the Crack, together with its panoramic sweep. Like The Bad Sister, Queen of Stones has a specific literary model, Lord of the Flies (itself an antidote to Ballantyne's The Coral Island), but Tennant does not provide such close parallels to Golding's novel as she does to Hogg's in her earlier book.

The most striking resemblance between Queen of Stones and The Bad Sister is Tennant's use of sex-reversal, substituting females for their male equivalents in her sources. A sponsored walk in Dorset goes terribly wrong when a group of girls are lost in appalling fog; cut off from their normal everyday surroundings and the adult world, like Golding's schoolboys, they create their own imaginative reality involving ritual and sacrifice. Tennant arrives at a conclusion not dissimilar from Golding's. In her next novel, Woman Beware Woman, Tennant again investigates the deeper mythic reality behind the appearances of social reality, the subconscious drives that shape reality itself, especially as they manifest themselves in women and their behaviour. The literary roots of Woman Beware Woman are less obvious than in The Bad Sister and Queen of Stones, but the close similarity to the title of Middleton's Jacobean revenge tragedy Women Beware Women suggests that Tennant is creating her own highly imaginative equivalent of a drama of thwarted love, resentment, suppressed passion, hatred and revenge as various people assemble in a quiet part of Ireland following the death of a distinguished literary man.

Political undercurrents are present in a number of Tennant's novels, but Black Marina is the most explicitly political. The setting is the imaginary island of St. James, adjacent to Grenada in the Caribbean; the time, Christmas Eve 1983, not long after the murderous reallife coup against Maurice Bishop's government in Grenada which precipitated American military intervention. During the day in which the novel is set St. James is expected to be the target of a similar Marxist-Leninist coup by a group of those involved in the attempt to seize power in Grenada. The subject-matter is topical and journalistic, but Tennant's handling of it is characteristically complex and far removed from orthodox social realism. The principal narrator, Holly Baker, an English woman who came to the island in the 1960s and stayed, gradually unfolds in piecemeal fashion the network of human relationships in St. James and England that has eventually precipitated the happenings of Christmas Eve 1983. As usual in Tennant's fiction, mythic elements lie just beneath the contemporary surface, and the title itself, alluding to Shakespeare's Pericles (Marina is the King's long-lost daughter) and Eliot's related Ariel poem "Marina," points towards the most important of these, a daughter's quest for her father. Even so, Black Marina is something of a new departure for Tennant in setting and theme, and it confirms her ability to go on regenerating herself as a novelist.

The Adventures of Robina, by Herself is a lighter work in picaresque vein, but stylistically it is one of Tennant's most bravura performances, a brilliant display of sustained literary pastiche. Throughout she imitates the idiom Defoe adopts for his female narrators while wryly adapting it to accommodate her 20th-century concerns. After this "imitation" of Defoe, Tennant began work on something different again, a sequence of novels with the overall title The Cycle of the Sun that is intended to explore aspects of aristocratic and bohemian life in England from the 1950s to the 1980s, reflecting the major changes in the country's international role during these decades. So far two of these novels have appeared. In the first, The House of Hospitalities, Tennant introduces her central character Jenny going through a crisis of adolescence, while the second, A Wedding of Cousins, continues Jenny's confused life story four years later. Although Tennant's approach is essentially comic and satirical, there are elements of sadness and confusion at both social and individual levels. Despite the underlying realism of the sequence, Jenny's frequent inability to distinguish between reality and fantasy gives the novels a pervasive ambiguity typical of Tennant.

In 1989 Tennant published two novels outside the The Cycle of the Sun sequence, Two Women of London: The Strange Case of Ms. Jerkyll and Mrs. Hyde and The Magic Drum, both being crime stories of a characteristically eccentric and gothic kind. The subtitle of Two Women of London. The Strange Case of Ms. Jekyll and Mrs. Hyde. indicates that this is another of Tennant's reworkings of famous literary texts. Cast in fabular rather than realistic form, Tennant's tale of rape and murder in West London is a timely feminist adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's seminal exploration of the divided self, in which she examines the enormous pressure experienced by women in a violent, competitive society. The divided self she portrays reflects the divisions in a society where poverty and deprivation co-exist with conspicuous consumption and a "loadsamoney" philosophy. The subtext of the novel is highly political. By refurbishing an important Victorian work of fiction, Tennant radically subverts the "Victorian values" advocated by free-market and self-help politicians in the 1980s.

The Magic Drum is set in an isolated country house, Cressley Grange, the home of the cult feminist poet Muriel Cole before her suicide at the age of 32 (the same age as Sylvia Plath, to whom there are parallels and even references). Since Cole's death, her husband, also a famous poet, has turned the house into a shrine to her memory and a place of literary pilgrimage. The Grange has the potential for the kind of closed-world crime story favoured by such Golden Age authors as Agatha Christie, and there is certainly a mystery at the heart of the novel—a murder, too, if the main narrator, Catherine Treger, is to be believed. Yet the status of Catherine's diary entries for her five days of detective work at the Grange is uncertain. Do they provide a reliable, factual account or are they the imaginative outpourings of a disturbed mind? Is she observing reality or creating a "reality" of her own out of the materials of crime and gothic fiction? The ambiguous conclusion does not provide a clear answer. The Magic Drum is a teasingly enigmatic book in which Tennant remodels elements of crime fiction to examine the posthumous power exerted by the reallife equivalents of Cole, and to undermine commonsense assumptions about the meaning of "reality."

After Two Women of London: The Strange Case of Ms. Jekyll and Mrs. Hyde and The Magic Drum, Tennant did not return immediately to The Cycle of the Sun but published Sisters and Strangers, perhaps her most ambitious attempt to provide a comprehensive survey of the life-lies, contradictions and hypocrisies central to women's lives, both past and present. Although couched in the form of an a historical fable or A Moral Tale, as the subtitle puts it, Sisters and Strangers is, paradoxically, a history of woman. Within a fairy-tale format, Tennant retells the story of Eve in an imaginatively exuberant as well as incisively sardonic manner. The Genesis story is blended with 20th-century reality in a freewheeling, synchronic way that incorporates myth, legend, and fantasy as the narrative surveys the recurring roles offered to women, such as Harlot, Madonna, Courtesan, Bluestocking, and Witch (titles of some of the sections). For all its wit and inventiveness, Sisters and Strangers is a disturbing post-feminist analysis of the deceptions and self-deceptions, especially concerning love and romance, by which women are virtually forced to live if they are to survive at all.

During the 1990s, Tennant made a sharp turn away from the past, a move perhaps prefigured by her exploration of the 19th-century Jekyll and Hyde story. Her Faustine incorporated ideas from Goethe in a modern setting for a feminist retelling of Faust. There followed a series of sequels to Jane Austen: Pemberley, An Unequal Marriage, and Emma in Love. Unfortunately, the first two, which continued the story of Elizabeth Darcy (née Bennett) and Mr. Darcy from Pride and Prejudice, failed to replicate the joys of their precursor. The problem was that Tennant was writing in an entirely different time, and apparently thought it appropriate to picture Elizabeth discussing topics such as vaginal douches. Somewhat more successful was her sequel to Emma, but again Tennant faced the restrictions imposed by a theme that has existed at the margins, if not the center, of her work: time, and the changes time imposes on all of society.

-Peter Lewis, updated by Judson Knight

THAROOR, Shashi

Nationality: British. Born: London, 1956. Education: Delhi University, B.A. (with honors) 1975; Tufts University, M.A. 1976; M.A.L.D. 1977; Ph.D. 1978. Career: Assistant to the director of external affairs, 1978–79, public information officer, 1980–81, head of Singapore office, 1981–84, senior external affairs officer, 1985–87, executive assistant to the deputy high commissioner, 1987–89, all

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees; special assistant to the undersecretary general for peacekeeping operations, 1989–96, executive assistant to the Secretary-General, United Nations, 1996–98. Since 1998, director of special projects, Office of the Secretary General, United Nations. Awards: Rajika Kripalani Young Journalist award, 1976; Federation of Indian Publishers and Hindustan Times Best Book of the Year, 1990, and Commonwealth Writers prize (Eurasian region), 1990, both for The Great Indian Novel.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Great Indian Novel. New Delhi, Penguin, London, Viking, and New York, Arcade, 1989.

Show Business. New Delhi, Viking, 1991; New York, Arcade, 1992; London, Picador, 1994.

Short Stories

The Five-Dollar Smile: Fourteen Early Stories and a Farce in Two Acts. New Delhi, Viking, 1990; as The Five-Dollar Smile and Other Stories, New York, Arcade, 1993.

Other

Reasons of State: Political Development and India's Foreign Policy Under Indira Ghandi, 1966–1977. New Delhi, Vikas Publishing House, 1982.

India: From Midnight to the Millennium. New York, Arcade, 1997.

*

Critical Studies: History-Fiction Interface in Indian English Novel: Mulk Raj Anand, Nayantara Sahgal, Salman Rushdie, Shashi Tharoor, O.V. Vijayan by T.N. Dhar, New Delhi, Prestige, 1999.

* * *

Despite living and working overseas (in Switzerland and the United States) for much of his adult life, Shashi Tharoor's writing shares few of the concerns, such as identity, place, and displacement, that have become the stock-in-trade of writers of the Indian diaspora. The Great Indian Novel and Show Business, and a collection of early stories, The Five-Dollar Smile: Fourteen Early Stories and a Farce in Two Acts, have in common Tharoor's postmodernist interest in playing games with his readers. Indeed his taste for sometimes awful puns and his delight in elaborate wordplay is evident even in the early stories.

The title of Tharoor's first full-length work of fiction, The Great Indian Novel, immediately signposts his interest in language games. The title is at once a play on the elusive "great American novel" and a reference to the work which provides the framework of Tharoor's novel, India's greatest epic the Mahabharata (which roughly translated means "great India"). In his retelling of modern Indian history and politics, Tharoor explores ground similar to that covered by Salman Rushdie in Midnight's Children. Yet though Tharoor's voice is evidently of the post-Rushdie generation of Indian writing in English, it remains distinct. In the novel, figures from the Mahabharata are recreated as characters who in turn represent figures from recent Indian history. Thus Bhishma from the Mahabharata becomes Ganga Datta (who is also a fictional representation of Mahatma Gandhi) in Tharoor's version of the epic. Similarly, Karna becomes Muhammad Ali Karna in the novel, and a figure who parallels Jinnah from modern history. And just as all the major figures from recent Indian history are included in Tharoor's novel, so all the major events are recorded too, though at times two or three historical events are condensed into a single fictional one.

But perhaps of even greater importance than the history and politics in this novel is Tharoor's interest in language. Through his many linguistic and literary games—such as the novel's self-reflexivity and the frequent spot-the-allusion games—Tharoor exposes the power of language as a tool of the colonial process while at the same time pointing the reader back to literature. History and politics, the novel seems to suggest, are best understood via literature (the Mahabharata, for example). This is a neat conceit which also privileges Tharoor's own text.

In Show Business, his second novel, Tharoor casts his satirical eye over Bollywood, India's popular, Bombay-based cinema industry. The novel closely follows the career of Ashok Banjara, an Indian film hero (who despite the mandatory disclaimers is clearly based on India's superstar of the screen, Amitabh Bacchan)—his rise to fame, his marriage to an up-and-coming young heroine, his many affairs, his vast wealth, his flirtation with politics, and so on. Interspersed with Ashok Banjara's own story and ultimately indistinguishable from it are the plots of the various films in which he stars. The novel is at once a comic tale about the Indian film industry, a homily on greed and ambition, and a highly entertaining look at the boundaries between fiction and reality (which in the celluloid world of Bollywood is surely all illusion anyway).

Tharoor's early stories—some of which he wrote as a teenager for Indian mass-circulation periodicals—and a two-act play have been published in The Five-Dollar Smile. The stories, which treat such issues as racism ("The Boutique"), hypocrisy ("The Temple Thief"), and gender stereotyping ("City Girl, Village Girl"), show signs of the language skills which Tharoor exploits to such great effect in The Great Indian Novel. "Twenty-Two Months in the Life of a Dog" is a short play about abuses of power during Indira Gandhi's Emergency which lacks the satirical and political bite of a novel like Nayantara Sahgal's Rich Like Us, which covers the same territory. Tharoor has also written a work of non-fiction, Reasons of State: Political Development and India's Foreign Policy Under Indira Gandi, 1966–1977, which examines the making of Indian foreign policy.

-Ralph J. Crane

THEROUX, Alexander (Louis)

Nationality: American. Born: Medford, Massachusetts, 17 August 1939; brother of Paul Theroux, q.v. Education: St. Joseph's Seminary, 1960–62; St. Francis College, Biddeford, Maine, B.A. 1964;

University of Virginia, Charlottesville (Woodrow Wilson fellow), M.A. 1965, Ph.D. 1968; Brasenose College, Oxford. Career: Instructor, University of Virginia, 1968; Fulbright lecturer, University of London, 1968–69; instructor, Longwood College, Farmville, Virginia, 1969–73, and Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1973–78; writer-in-residence, Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, 1978–83; visiting artist, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, from 1983. Currently member of the Department of English, Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut. Awards: National Endowment for the Arts grant, 1966; Academy of American Poets award, 1966; Encyclopaedia Britannica award, 1973; Guggenheim fellowship, 1974. Address: Department of English, Yale University, P.O. Box 3545, New Haven, Connecticut 06520, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Darconville's Cat. New York, Doubleday, 1981; London, Hamish Hamilton, 1983.

An Adultery. New York, Simon and Schuster, 1987; London, Hamish Hamilton, 1988.

Short Stories

Three Wogs. Boston, Gambit, 1972; London, Chatto and Windus-Wildwood House, 1973.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "Fark Pooks," in Esquire (New York), August 1973.
- "Scugnizzo's Pasta Co.," in Encounter (London), September 1974.
- "Lynda Van Cats," in The Pushcart Prize 1, edited by Bill Henderson. Yonkers, New York, Pushcart Press, 1976.
- "Finocchio; or, The Tale of a Man with a Long Nose," in Massachusetts Review (Amherst), Summer 1976.

Plays

Christmas Eve at the Gordon Crumms, in Rapier, Spring 1968.

The Sweethearts and Chagrin of Roland McGuffey, in Rapier, Winter 1968.

The Master's Oral (produced Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1974). The Confessions of Mrs. Motherwell, in Rapier, Autumn 1976.

Poetry

The Lollipop Trollops and Other Poems. Normal, Illinois, Dalkey Archive Press, 1992.

Other (for children)

The Great Wheadle Tragedy. Boston, Godine, 1975.The Schinocephalic Waif. Boston, Godine, 1975.Master Snickup's Cloak. New York, Harper, and Limpsfield, Surrey, Dragon's World, 1979.

Other

Theroux Metaphrastes: An Essay on Literature. Boston, Godine, 1975.

The Primary Colors: Three Essays. New York, Holt. 1994. The Secondary Colors: Three Essays. New York, Henry Holt, 1996.

*

Critical Studies: "Alexander Theroux/Paul West Issue" of Review of Contemporary Fiction (Elmwood Park, Illinois), Spring 1991.

* * *

Unlike his prolific brother Paul, whose travel books and novels supply readers the here and now with journalistic directness, Alexander Theroux is the soul of anachronism, a backwards literary history: unconcerned with modern markets, romantic in sensibility, neoclassical in aesthetic judgments, renaissance in learning and style, medieval in spirit. His line of descent recedes from game-playing Nabokov to the late-Victorian romance writer Baron Corvo, satirists Swift and Sterne, and encyclopedist Thomas Browne. For Theroux, observation of the present, whether the London of Three Wogs or the American eastern seaboard of Darconville's Cat, is the occasion for, not the purpose of, writing, an activity generated by a long memory of other writing. And yet, despite or, perhaps, because of his hyperliteracy—his esoteric allusions, archaic lexicon, elegant inversions, and orotund voice-the here and now are somehow defamiliarized, his artificial characters made curiously human, by his hermetic eccentricities.

Theroux's first book, Three Wogs, collects three long stories, each featuring an immigrant from the Empire clashing with a representative 1960s Londoner. In "Mrs. Proby Gets Hers" a widowed middle-class matron develops a paranoid and ultimately killing fear of an old shopkeeper from Hong Kong. "Childe Roland" exercises a stupid laborer's hatred for an educated Indian student. In "The Wife of God" an epicene Anglican priest selfishly attempts to stop his African choirmaster's marriage. The Britishers' pride and racism mask feelings of inferiority to and envy of the more energetic and even better-mannered "wogs." While Theroux has innocent fun with his foreigners' malapropisms and misinformation, the English are savaged by their own smugly expressed pretensions and by the ironic punishments Theroux gives them at stories' ends. Wholly appropriate for the dilettante Reverend Which Therefore (sic) of "The Wife of God," Theroux's stylistic contrivances sometimes overwhelm their satiric targets in the first two stories, manufacturing sentence to sentence wit but risking a reversal of sympathies for his characters from the present "Age of Shoddy."

Three Wogs was a startling debut, sufficiently noticed to be read by a character in Darconville's Cat; but it's this later book that earns Theroux prominent shelfspace in the Library of Literary Extravagance, the "A" range of alphabetical amusements, anomalies, anatomies, and artificial autobiographies. Theroux's predilections struggled within the constraints of the short story; here they are freed to create a 704-page, densely printed story of courtly love gone sour. A crazed character named Crucifer slightly scrambles the novel's strategy and achievement: "Nothing exceeds like excess."

According to an essay on the Theroux family by James Atlas (New York Times Magazine, 30 April 1978), Alexander was once engaged to and then jilted by one of his students at Longwood College. He vowed literary revenge, and she said "Do your worst." Darconville's Cat is his best and worst, a very funny send-up of young love and a compendium of misogyny in which, says Atlas, Theroux doesn't change the name of the girl who disappointed him. The novel's writer-protagonist, Alaric Darconville, was, like Theroux, in and out of monasteries as a youth and taught at Harvard and a Virginia college for women. But as the very simple plot inches from first meeting through courtship to betrayal and bitterness, the parallels between life and art increasingly feel like literary hoaxing, a way to draw life-minded readers into worlds made of words. Once again, Crucifer seems to speak for Theroux, "Love was the invention of the Provençal knight-poets to justify their verse."

What's best about Darconville's Cat is the advantage Theroux takes of the tradition of The Book, the large storehouse of knowledge such as The Bible, Gargantua, or Moby-Dick. Elaboration is all. The reader who doesn't care for a chapter on college girls' late-night rap sessions or the dialogue in verse between Alaric and his beloved Isabel or a classical oration by Crucifer can skip ahead or back without losing essential continuity. There are learned disquisitions on love, hate, and the human ear; wonderful odd-lot lists; Shandyian japes such as a one-word chapter and a page of asterisks; and Swiftian renderings of small-town southern life, ranting religionists, academic foolery, and much more. The parts are all related but don't disappear into a whole, into an illusion of reality.

Darconville's Cat is boring and brilliant, both puerile and profound, self-indulgent and often cruel. Theroux lacks Thomas Pynchon's interest in this century and the popular humor of Gilbert Sorrentino's Mulligan Stew, the novel Theroux's most closely resembles. "Madness," Darconville says of a book very like the one in which he is a character. But like that excessive anomaly of the 1950s, William Gaddis's The Recognitions, Darconville's Cat should find a dedicated following, readers with an appetite for ambition and literary aberration, for a prodigal art that, in Darconville's world, "declassifies."

-Thomas LeClair

THEROUX, Paul (Edward)

Nationality: American. Born: Medford, Massachusetts, 10 April 1941; brother of Alexander Theroux, q.v. Education: Medford High School; University of Maine, Orono, 1959–60; University of Massachusetts, Amherst, B.A. in English 1963. Family: Married Anne Castle in 1967 (divorced 1993), married Sheila Donnelly in 1995; two sons. Career: Lecturer, University of Urbino, Italy, 1963; Peace Corps lecturer, Soche Hill College, Limbe, Malawi, 1963–65; lecturer, Makerere University, Kampala, Uganda, 1965–68, and University of Singapore, 1968–71; writer-in-residence, University of Virginia, Charlottesville, 1972. Awards: Playboy award, 1971, 1977, 1979; American Academy award, 1977; Whitbread award, 1978; Yorkshire Post award, 1982; James Tait Black Memorial prize, 1982; Thomas Cook award, for travel book, 1989. D. Litt.: Tufts University, Medford, Massachusetts, 1980; Trinity College, Washington, D.C., 1980; University of Massachusetts, 1988. Member: Fellow, Royal Society of Literature, and Royal Geographical Society; American Academy, 1984. Address: c/o Hamish Hamilton Ltd., 27 Wright's Lane, London W8 5TZ, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Waldo. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1967; London, Bodley Head, 1968.

Fong and the Indians. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1968; London, Hamish Hamilton, 1976.

Girls at Play. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, and London, Bodley Head, 1969.

Murder in Mount Holly. London, Ross, 1969.

Jungle Lovers. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, and London, Bodley Head, 1971.

Saint Jack. London, Bodley Head, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1973

The Black House. London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1974.

The Family Arsenal. London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1976.

Picture Palace: A Novel. London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1978.

The Mosquito Coast. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1981; Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1982.

Doctor Slaughter. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1984.

Half Moon Street: Two Short Novels (includes Doctor Slaughter and Doctor DeMarr). Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1984.

O-Zone. London, Hamish Hamilton, and New York, Putnam, 1986.
My Secret History. London, Hamish Hamilton, and New York, Putnam, 1989.

Doctor DeMarr. London, Hutchinson, 1990.

Chicago Loop. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1990; New York, Random House, 1991.

Millroy the Magician. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1993; New York, Random House, 1994.

My Other Life. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1996.

Kowloon Tong. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1997.

The Collected Short Novels. London, Penguin Books, 1999.

Short Stories

Sinning with Annie and Other Stories. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1972; London, Hamish Hamilton, 1975.

The Consul's File. London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1977.

World's End and Other Stories. London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1980.

The London Embassy. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1982; Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1983.

The Collected Stories. New York, Viking, 1997.

Plays

The Autumn Dog (produced New York, 1981).
The White Man's Burden. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1987.

Screenplay: Saint Jack, with Peter Bogdanovich and Howard Sackler, 1979.

Television Play: The London Embassy, from his own story, 1987.

Other

V.S. Naipaul: An Introduction to His Work. London, Deutsch, and New York, Africana, 1972.

The Great Railway Bazaar: By Train Through Asia. London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1975.

A Christmas Card (for children). London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1978.

The Old Patagonian Express: By Train Through the Americas. London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1979. London Snow (for children). Salisbury, Wiltshire, Russell, 1979; Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1980.

Sailing Through China. Salisbury, Wiltshire, Russell, 1983; Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1984.

The Kingdom by the Sea: A Journey Around the Coast of Great Britain. London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1983.

Sunrise with Seamonsters: Travels and Discoveries 1964–1984. London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1985.

The Imperial Way: Making Tracks from Peshawar to Chittagong, photographs by Steve McCurry. London, Hamish Hamilton, and Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1985.

Patagonia Revisited, with Bruce Chatwin. Salisbury, Wiltshire, Russell, 1985; Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1986.

The Shortest Day of the Year: A Christmas Fantasy. Leamington, Warwickshire, Sixth Chamber Press, 1986.

Riding the Iron Rooster: By Train Through China. London, Hamish Hamilton, and New York, Putnam, 1988.

Travelling the World. London, Sinclair Stevenson, 1990.

The Happy Isles of Oceania: Paddling the Pacific. London, Hamish Hamilton, and New York, Putnam, 1992.

The Pillars of Hercules: A Grand Tour of the Mediterranean. New York, G.P. Putnam's Sons, 1995.

Down the Yangtze. London, Penguin, 1995.

Sir Vidia's Shadow: A Friendship Across Five Continents. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1998.

Fresh Air Fiend: Travel Writings, 1985–2000. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 2000.

...

Paul Theroux comments:

(1986) Both in my fiction and non-fiction I have tried to write about the times in which I have lived. Although I have been resident in various countries for the past 25 years, and these countries have been the settings for my books, I consider myself an American writer. I have a strong homing instinct.

* * *

In his note to My Other Life, Paul Theroux writes that the book is "the story of a life I could have lived had things been different—an imaginary memoir." This brief statement could summarize a general paradox that drives the overwhelming majority of Theroux's acclaimed novels and short stories, as well as his immensely popular travel accounts: a person can only discover and comment on "the self" by taking on the role of a stranger. In fact, encounters with the "strange," both within and outside of the self, transform all of Theroux's narrators into travelers of sorts. Mingling the Gothic with the journalistic and the psychological with the geographical, Theroux blends the distant past with the distant present to comment on human nature, racism, colonialism, cultural identity, alienation from the natural world, and the hypocrisy of civilization. Like the author himself, the most compelling characters and settings in Theroux's novels seem to balance two identities—fiction and fact, sacred and secular, foreign and familiar, past and present, strange and mundane.

In both his fiction and nonfiction, Paul Theroux estranges the familiar by positioning Western (British and America) characters as outsiders in a foreign society or transforming Western landscapes into unfamiliar dystopias. Whether he is moving the New Englander to the Honduran Mosquito Coast, recounting his own journeys in his many travel narratives, or laying out an alien-infested O-Zone, he is fascinated by people and places who are out of sync.

In Saint Jack, Jack Flowers is an American expatriate who addresses the pathos and puzzlement of being an outsider in Singapore. Kowloon Tong, set against the backdrop of Hong Kong's reunification with China, features British expatriate Neville "Blunt" Mullard. Like Heather Monkhouse in Girls at Play, he seeks a Western lifestyle in a non-Western country. Although he was born in the colony and barely knows England, he lives a British lifestyle that is insulated from the Chinese culture around him (except for his visits to local "blue hotel" prostitutes and an affair with one of his employees). Both novels, one written early in Theroux's career and one written very recently, dislocate their Western characters to expose a common dilemma: their nostalgic constructions of Occidentalism are only at home when the characters are abroad.

In a novel like O-Zone, Theroux positions individual outsiders/ strangers within an estranged landscape that stresses the alienating effects of technology and a separation from nature. The story follows seven wealthy couples and a boy living in 21-century America as they encounter literal aliens—Skells, Starkies, Trolls, Diggers, and Roaches—during a New Year's Eve holiday in The Outer Zone. In this dystopic future New York, civilization has proved unfriendly and residents are afraid to leave their fortress-like homes. Traveling in a strange, brutal, and primitive Missouri outback, the mixed bag of characters once again address duplicitous identities, culture clashes, and the introspective process of traveling outside metaphorical safety zones of all kinds.

In creating such dystopias, Theroux dislocates entire Western social structures and landscapes. The Family Arsenal follows American consul Valentine Hood through the strange and violent dynamics of an East London terrorist underground.

In the Mosquito Coast, megalomaniac Allie Fox decides to start a utopic new life in Honduras, away from the corruption of modern America. In a forced estrangement from civilization and materialism, he moves his wife and four children from Hatfield, Massachusetts, to a remote clearing on the Mosquito Coast, where their quest for paradise quickly leads to apocalyptic destruction. Like the wizard Millroy in Millroy the Magician—who embarks on an odyssey through America, preaching the wisdom of a whole food diet and performing magic tricks for an awestruck crowd—Allie Fox invents himself as a messiah and prophet against the backdrop of corrupt[ing] fast-food-addicted society. Both men seem bigger than life, embodying myth and history, salvation and destruction, illusion and reality.

Theroux also uses traditional Gothicism to achieve a sense of discomfort and uncertainty, as in Girls at Play and The Black House. In the first novel, a horrific chain of events forces characters to abandon their illusions about themselves. In the second, spectral illusions make the characters' surroundings seem horrific. Girls at Play revolves around three women in East Africa: Miss Poole, the headmistress of a girls' school; Heather Monkhouse, a promiscuous salesgirl from Croydon who dreams of being a high-class call girl; and Bettyjean Lebow, a naïve American from the Peace Corps. Black/ white, East/West, male/female, civilized/savage collide as the women are faced with alien landscapes, vanishings, recurring nightmares, rape, and murder. In The Black House, anthropologist Alfred Munday returns to Dorset, England, after ten years in Uganda, where he "lived closely with an alien people," only to find a ghostly "foreigner" in his own house. Munday has an affair with an apparition, Caroline, who occasionally possesses the body of his wife, Emma; he uses the local church hall for lectures on African circumcision ceremonies and weaponry; and the once separate worlds of England and Africa begin to blur and reflect each other. Recalling Sam Fong in Fong and the Indians, Calvin Muller and Marais in Jungle Lovers, and the three women in Girls at Play, Munday is the ultimate outsider. He is out of joint in both time and place, realizing that the balance between seemingly solid and disparate points in geography, history, and psychology is tenuous as best.

The conflicting forces in these novels—Western and Eastern, order and chaos, white and black, past and present, history and fantasy—also speak to the importance of some fundamental duality in each of Theroux's novels. This duality can be absolutely literal, as in the characters' double lives in My Secret History and Chicago Loop, or come through more subtly in the divided lives for characters like Maude Coffin Pratt in Picture Palace and the fictional Paul Theroux of My Other Life.

On the one hand, My Secret History traces the double life of Andre Parent—writer, traveler, and lover of women—through an all-American boyhood, libertinism in Africa, a dangerous secret life, marriage, and self-analysis. Similarly, Chicago Loop explores the double life of successful Chicago businessman Parker Jagoda, who is a health-conscious suburban model of propriety by day and a sexual serial killer in the city by night. Both novels recall the earlier Half Moon Street, which combines two novellas on the theme of double identity: Doctor Slaughter (set in England) and Doctor DeMarr (set in America). Doctor Slaughter is a research fellow in political sciences and part-time prostitute; Dr. Marr is a man who takes over the identity of his murdered twin brother. In each case, the duality of the characters reflects Theroux's literary preoccupation with identity and alienation.

In books like Picture Palace: A Novel, on the other hand, the duality is more complicated. At age seventy, world-famous photographer Maude Coffin Pratt travels through her past as she rummages through her life's work. Theroux uses her recollections, which exist somewhere between the past and the present, to address, once again, issues of paradoxical double identity. In fact, in a conversation with T.S. Eliot, Maude compares herself to Tiresias from The Waste Land—'throbbing between two lives'—to express her position between the estranged, fictional, visual world of her photographs and the mundane, factual, blind world in which she lives. Throughout her narrative, Pratt's incestuous desire for her brother, who prefers their sister, and her psychosomatic blindness again interrogate the recurring dynamics of sexual desire, perception, and reality.

Further complicating this idea of double identity, the fictional narrator (named Paul Theroux) in My Other Life recalls scenes that are similar to the ones from the author's biography, as he begins the story as a 23-year-old Peace Corps volunteer teaching English in Africa. Like the author, the narrator writes books titled The Great Railway Bazaar and The Mosquito Coast, teaches in Singapore, lives in London with his wife and children, and moves back to Massachusetts later in his life. Yet, Theroux blends fiction and nonfiction to estrange his own familiar biography and expose our presumptions about the two genres. In setting up this alter-ego, Theroux also hearkens back to the two white characters in Jungle Lovers—Calvin Mullet, a divorced insurance agent from Massachusetts, and Marais, a revolutionary intent on overthrowing a corrupt fascist regime—who were, according to Theroux, "two opposing sides of [his] own personality." Like these characters, the fictional Theroux of My Other Life balances the author's contradictory impulses for security and upheaval, revealing the complicated relationship between autobiography, fiction, art, and reporting.

Like his travel narratives, Theroux's novels familiarize readers with the strange and violent. They interrogate arbitrary and capricious divisions in the modern world, and they blur the lines that define our assumptions about the city and the jungle, beauty and savagery, Self and Other.

-Christine Roth

THOMAS, Audrey (Grace)

Nationality: Canadian citizen. Born: Audrey Callahan in Binghamton, New York, 17 November 1935. Moved to Canada, 1959; lived in Kumasi, Ghana, 1964–66. Education: Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts, B.A. 1957; University of British Columbia, Vancouver, M.A. in English 1963. Family: Married Ian Thomas in 1958 (divorced); three daughters. Career: Since 1990 visiting professor, Concordia University, Montreal. Scottish-Canadian Exchange Fellow, Edinburgh, 1985-86; writer-in-residence, University of Victoria, British Columbia, University of British Columbia, Vancouver, Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, British Columbia, and David Thompson University Centre, Nelson, British Columbia. Awards: Atlantic Firsts award, 1965; Canada Council grant, 1969, 1971, 1972, 1974, and Senior Arts grant, 1974, 1977, 1979, 1987, 1991, 1994; Marian Engel award, 1987; Canada-Australia Literary prize, 1990; Ethel Wilson award and BC Book prize, 1985, for Intertidal Life, 1991, for Wild Blue Yonder, and 1995, for Coming Down From Wa. Honorary doctorate: Simon Fraser University, 1994; University of British Columbia, 1994. Address: R.R. 2, Galiano, British Columbia V0N 1P0, Canada.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Mrs. Blood. Indianapolis, Bobbs Merrill, 1967.

Munchmeyer, and Prospero on the Island. Indianapolis, Bobbs Merrill, 1972.

Songs My Mother Taught Me. Indianapolis, Bobbs Merrill, 1973.Blown Figures. Vancouver, Talonbooks, 1974; New York, Knopf, 1975.

Latakia. Vancouver, Talonbooks, 1979.
Intertidal Life. Toronto, Stoddart, 1984; New York, Beaufort, 1985.
Graven Images. Toronto, Penguin Canada, 1993.
Coming Down from Wa. Toronto and New York, Viking, 1995.
Isobel Gunn. Toronto, Viking, 1999.

Short Stories

Ten Green Bottles. Indianapolis, Bobbs Merrill, 1967.

Ladies and Escorts. Ottawa, Oberon Press, 1977.

Personal Fictions, with others, edited by Michael Ondaatje. Toronto, Oxford University Press, 1977.

Real Mothers. Vancouver, Talonbooks, 1981.

Two in the Bush and Other Stories. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, 1981.

Goodbye Harold, Good Luck. Toronto, New York, and London, Viking, 1986.

The Wild Blue Yonder. Toronto, Viking, 1990.

Plays

Radio Plays: Once Your Submarine Cable Is Gone . . . , 1973; Mrs. Blood, from her own novel, 1975.

*

Manuscript Collection: National Library of Canada, Ottawa, Ontario.

Critical Studies: "Audrey Thomas Issue" of Room of One's Own (Vancouver), vol. 10, no. 3–4, 1986.

Audrey Thomas comments:

I write primarily about women—modern women with their particular dreams, delights, despairs. Also how these women relate to men and the terrible things we do to one another in the name of love. I am also interested in what happens to a person set down in a strange city or country, without a familiar environment, friends, or job to define him, when he must ask serious questions. Madness, too, interests me, and the delicate balance between sanity and madness.

I like to tell a good tale, and at the same time I like to make the reader work. I assume my readers will want to run a bit for their money.

* * *

Audrey Thomas, a prolific Canadian-American author, uses the knowledge that societal roles are all too often understood to be rigid and blameless, supported by the highest religious, political, and social authorities as a base from which to build her explorations of the possibilities and multiplicities that are in direct contention with this human pull toward the accepted "norm" within society's network of ideology. Her characters pull to the surface all that is unstable, relative, and questionable as they continually explore the arbitrary nature of gender and caste systems, the power struggles between men and women, and the complexities of attraction and passion that are ever present within both the text and within the life of the author herself. Her work, autobiographical in nature, displays an interest in feminism and a love of experimentation, both with language and with literary devices.

Thomas, a significant figure in Canadian feminist literature for more than thirty years, has been, on numerous occasions, ranked among the best in her field. In Thomas's fiction, gender, culture at large, and character form a complex mixture of contradictory and variable patterns that can be readily seen in her latest novel Isobel Gunn, published in 1999. Here, the hierarchy of selves is so confused and confusing, that while arranging the personality through division and category, it calls attention to the potential weakness in its own foundation as an ordering system. And, we find that the many voices present are hailing forth our ability to call into question a certain discourse, or way of thinking. The examples of real versus constructed "realities" in Isobel Gunn are numerous and varied and thus expose many of the ideological inconsistencies of societal roles in individualistic America.

Thomas has demonstrated in her quasi-autobiographical fictions how small the territory of incident need be for the writer to create a continent of psychological complexity. Such categories as novel, novella, and short story are not easily applied to Thomas's work, for continuities are always present, within and between genres. The short stories that form her first novel, Ten Green Bottles, for example, are closely interrelated; all of them are told by an unhappy female persona, so in the end the book takes on in one's mind the character of a sequence of psychologically linked incidents. More loosely, the later collections—Ladies and Escorts; Real Mothers; and Goodbye Harold, Good Luck—appear as true organic unities in their representation respectively of the pain and sadness in sexual relations and the reality of generational links.

Similarly, the two novellas published in a single volume, Munchmeyer and Prospero on the Island, are not in reality separate works. They are linked by the fact that Munchmeyer (itself a kind of mirror work in which it is hard to tell what is meant as plot and what is the novelist-hero's fantasizing) is presented as the novel that had been written by Miranda, the narrator in Prospero on the Island, and is being discussed by her with "Prospero," an elderly painter friend who lives on the same British Columbian island. And the novels—Mrs. Blood, Songs My Mother Taught Me, Latakia and Intertidal Life—are in turn constructed within loose frameworks, so that structurally there are considerable resemblances between the groups of interrelated stories and the highly episodic novels.

It soon becomes evident that the structural principle of Thomas's fictions is one in which the psychological patterns take precedence over the aesthetic or self-consciously formal. The experience in them is, in merely physical terms, limited and largely repetitious; it also runs fairly closely parallel to Thomas's own life. She was born and brought up in upstate New York, spent time in England and Ghana, traveled in the Levant, and in recent years has been dividing her life between Vancouver and the nearby islands of the Gulf of Georgia, with their mixed population of aging English expatriates, writers, and artists.

In fictional terms it is equally interesting to observe that the central persona of the books appears to be the same, yet treated unchronologically. For example, a middle period book, Songs My Mother Taught Me, deals in a rather shapelessly flowing narrative with the childhood memories that already find their place as fleeting recollections in earlier stories. Mrs. Blood, which harrowingly evokes a somewhat perilous pregnancy in West Africa, also incorporates the persona's sentimental journeys in England. In the novella Prospero on the Island creation and memory meld together with the personanow-turned novelist reflecting on the creative present to which all these pasts contribute.

As in the case of even the novella, Munchmeyer (the one item presented as totally fictitious), it is hard to tell when the actuality of the author's life merges into the invented narrative. An added complication arises from Thomas's acute sense of place, whose expression she has developed from book to book, so that in two of her more recent novels, Latakia and Intertidal Life, the evocations of the Levantine background and of the Pacific coast, respectively, become almost as important as the always frustrated and pathetic relationships between human beings.

There are no absolutes in Thomas's work. Instead, it is full of endless movements of giving and receiving. Each character, each word, reinscribes something; each constructs the web it tries to decipher. When lost in her worlds, one must pay attention to not only that which is visible and present, but to the non-text as well, the unknown that is always being conquered and always conquering, to that which lies beyond the boundaries of society, the silences. In these images of grotesque ideas of familial bonds and honor, in examples of love and selfishness, in battles between various kinds of truths and lies Thomas seems to reveal many of her perplexities about the society in which she lives, but she does not offer solutions to these internal and external contradictions. This, perhaps, is exactly what makes her novels, as well as her shorter works, timeless masterpieces of perpetual questioning.

—George Woodcock, updated by Tammy Bird

THOMAS, D(onald) M(ichael)

Nationality: British. Born: Redruth, Cornwall, 27 January 1935. Education: Redruth Grammar School; University High School, Melbourne; New College, Oxford, B.A. (honours) in English 1958, M.A. 1961. Military Service: Served in the British Army (national service), 1953–54. Family: Married twice; two sons and one daughter. Career: Teacher, Teignmouth Grammar School, Devon, 1959–63; senior lecturer in English, Hereford College of Education, 1964–78, visiting lecturer in English, Hamline University, St. Paul, Minnesota, 1967; lecturer in Creative Writing, American University, Washington, D.C., 1982. Awards: Richard Hillary Memorial prize, 1960; Arts Council award, for translation, 1975, Cholmondeley award, for poetry, 1978; Guardian—Gollancz Fantasy Novel prize, 1979; Los Angeles Times prize, for novel, 1980; Cheltenham prize, 1981; Silver Pen award, 1982. Address: The Coach House, Rashleigh Vale, Truro, Cornwall TR1 1TJ, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Flute-Player. London, Gollancz, and New York, Dutton, 1979. Birthstone. London, Gollancz, 1980.

The White Hotel. London, Gollancz, and New York, Viking Press, 1981.

Series: Russian Nights

Ararat. London, Gollancz, and New York, Viking Press, 1983. Swallow. London, Gollancz, and New York, Viking, 1984. Sphinx. London, Gollancz, 1986; New York, Viking, 1987.

Summit. London, Gollancz, 1987; New York, Viking, 1988.Lying Together. London, Gollancz, and New York, Viking, 1990.Flying in to Love. London, Bloomsbury, 1991; New York, Carroll & Graf, 1995.

Pictures at an Exhibition. London, Bloomsbury, 1993; New York, Carroll & Graf, 1994.

Eating Pavlova. London, Bloomsbury, and New York, Carroll & Graf, 1994.

Lady with a Laptop. New York, Carroll & Graf, 1996.

Charlotte: The Final Journey of Jane Eyre. London, Duckworth, 2000.

Uncollected Short Stories

"Seeking a Suitable Donor," in The New SF, edited by Langdon Jones. London, Hutchinson, 1969.

"Labyrinth," in New Worlds (London), April 1969.

Plays

The White Hotel, adaptation of his own novel (produced Edinburgh, 1984).

Boris Godunov, adaptation of the play by Pushkin (broadcast 1984). Leamington, Warwickshire, Sixth Chamber Press, 1985.

Radio Plays: You Will Hear Thunder, 1981; Boris Godunov, 1984.

Poetry

Personal and Possessive. London, Outposts, 1964.

Penguin Modern Poets 11, with D.M. Black and Peter Redgrove. London, Penguin, 1968.

Two Voices. London, Cape Goliard Press, and New York, Grossman, 1968.

The Lover's Horoscope: Kinetic Poem. Laramie, Wyoming, Purple Sage, 1970.

Logan Stone. London, Cape Goliard Press, and New York, Grossman, 1971.

The Shaft. Gillingham, Kent, Arc, 1973.

Lilith-Prints. Cardiff, Second Aeon, 1974.

Symphony in Moscow. Richmond, Surrey, Keepsake Press, 1974.

Love and Other Deaths. London, Elek, 1975.

The Rock. Knotting, Bedfordshire, Sceptre Press, 1975.

Orpheus in Hell. Knotting, Bedfordshire, Sceptre Press, 1977.

The Honeymoon Voyage. London, Secker and Warburg, 1978.

Protest: A Poem after a Medieval Armenian Poem by Frik. Privately printed, 1980.

Dreaming in Bronze. London, Secker and Warburg, 1981.

Selected Poems. London, Secker and Warburg, and New York, Viking Press, 1983.

News from the Front, with Sylvia Kantaris. Todmorden, Lancashire, Arc, 1983.

The Puberty Tree, New & Selected Poems. Newcastle upon Tyne, Bloodaxe, 1992.

Other

The Devil and the Floral Dance (for children). London, Robson, 1978.

Memories and Hallucinations: An Autobiographical Excursion. London, Gollancz, and New York, Viking, 1988.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn: A Century in His Life. New York, St. Martin's Press, 1998.

Editor, The Granite Kingdom: Poems of Cornwall. Truro, Cornwall, Barton, 1970.

Editor, Poetry in Crosslight. London, Longman, 1975.

Editor, Songs from the Earth: Selected Poems of John Harris, Cornish Miner, 1820–84. Padstow, Cornwall, Lodenek Press, 1977.

Translator, Requiem, and Poem Without a Hero, by Anna Akhmatova. London, Elek, and Athens, Ohio University Press, 1979.

Translator, Way of All the Earth, by Anna Akhmatova. London, Secker and Warburg, and Athens, Ohio University Press, 1979.

Translator, Invisible Threads, by Evtushenko. New York, Macmillan, 1981.

Translator, The Bronze Horseman and Other Poems, by Pushkin.London, Secker and Warburg, and New York, Viking Press, 1982.Translator, A Dove in Santiago, by Evtushenko. London, Secker and Warburg, 1982; New York, Viking Press, 1983.

Translator, You Will Hear Thunder: Poems, by Anna Akhmatova. London, Secker and Warburg, and Athens, Ohio University Press-Swallow Press, 1985; as Selected Poems, London, Penguin, 1988.

*

Manuscript Collection: University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

* * *

D.M. Thomas began his writing career as a poet. His early work in this medium was ranged from the fantasy worlds of science fiction to what would become his trademark stocking-topped, suspenderbelted, bawdy sensuality. Fiction turned out to be the more accommodating genre, though, for his unconventional combinations of forms: narrative, poetry, letters, historical documents that flirt with time and the nature of reality.

Thomas's first novel, The Flute-Player, is set in an unnamed city of chaos, probably in Russia; there are glimpses of Leningrad, and the book is dedicated to the dissident Russian poets Mandlestam, Pasternak, Akhmatova, and Tsvetayeva. Elena, a flute player, here is the embodiment of the persecuted creative spirit, endangered by the city's totalitarian regime. Her presence is often lost, though, in the novel's whirl of characters, fast-moving incidents, and mood changes.

Thomas's most critically acclaimed and popular novel, The White Hotel, maintains its thematic focus more forcefully. Lisa Erdman, an imagined patient of Sigmund Freud, expresses her hyperbolic and crudely masochistic sexual fantasies in the novel's famed opening poem. The perverted brutality of Erdman's desires is later paralleled by the perverted brutality of a world in which the horrors of Babi Yar can take place. Erdman's private desires, which cannot be fully deciphered or cured by psychoanalysis, are not so private after all. The right kind of manipulation can penetrate into the masses and harness the power of their own similarly violent impulses, with horrifying results.

Ararat and Swallow, the first two novels of Thomas's "Russian Nights" quartet, are free-wheeling and fantastical, involving a number of "improvisatores." Swallow features an actual Olympiad of these extempore storytellers, whose rhyming narratives take up a large proportion of the novel. Through this poetry, Thomas explores the ways in which fiction is inspired by—or can create—reality; the improvisatores' stories are paralleled in their own lives and those of the people they encounter. The reader is never quite sure, nor is meant to be sure, where the frontiers of reality and fantasy lie, if indeed there are any frontiers. This dynamic often feels abstract, though, in contrast to the humanity portrayed in The White Hotel. The exception is Swallow's 'autobiographical' episodes, in which scenes from Thomas's (or his persona's) childhood are ingeniously interlaced with adapted passages from King Solomon's Mines.

The third novel in the "Russian Nights" quartet, Sphinx, feeds off Ararat and Swallow, extending their characters, plots, and the theme of the "improvisatores." Summit, the last of the quartet, breaks from this in the ancient tradition of a serious trilogy being succeeded by a farcical or satirical coda. In the antics of a thinly disguised President O'Rielly and a Russian Grobichov, we have a couple of lampooning caricatures on the "Spitting Image" level. The novel is in fact an extended joke based mainly on O'Rielly's mental difficulties, including a delayed ratiocination that finds him answering a question, at least one before the question actually being asked. It is amusing, but wears a bit thin as it goes on.

After rounding off his trilogy/quartet in such a traditional manner, Thomas produced Lying Together, effectively extending the quartet into a quintet. The characters of the earlier books meet up at a writers' conference, once again taking up their roles as "improvisatories." Lying Together has been described as "pure satire/poetic fantasy/autobiography and dirty book" all in one. In any case, this work, as its title suggests, makes fantasy and reality more indistinguishable than ever. Thomas is again a character, suggesting an autobiographical edge. The "improvisions" of the other characters in the book often seem more "realistic" than the characters who invent them, such as the lustful, menstruating, blind film producer who spends a deal of time groping about on the carpet for the tampons she has removed to accommodate her lover.

In Flying in to Love, Thomas returns to his earlier tactic of examining significant historical events through the prism of his fiction. The result is an ironic postmodern hatchet job of the Kennedy assassination. Thomas mocks the dizzying array of conspiracy theories and the ways they reveal Americans' sentimental attachment to the youthful prince of Camelot far more than their yearning for the truth. We heedlessly 'flew into Love' with Kennedy, the novel's title a convenient play on Dallas' only airport at the time. Thomas deconstructs the object of our affections as a smarmy playboy, who shares Marilyn Monroe with his brother Bobby.

Thomas revisited the Holocaust in Pictures at an Exhibition. Thomas presents the disturbing conundrum of Galewski, a Czech inmate at Auschwitz, who is called upon to cure an SS officer's headaches. Galewski uses his understanding of Freud to help Dr. Lorenz, a doctor who performs brutal experiments on the camp inmates. Out of fear for his own life, though, Galewski cannot state the obvious: that mass murder just might weight on one's mind. Galewski survives the war to become a psychoanalyst, his patients recalling the painful moral evasions of his wartime "apprenticeship" for his profession. Galewski and Dr. Lorenz meet again in London, fifty years after the war, and the two must contend with the awful emotional legacy of the Holocaust. The gravity of this subject matter clashes bizarrely and often distractingly with his confusing pastiche style. It is as if Thomas is trying to point out that evil can be obscured by the nonsensical and even the surreal. Yet evil it remains, so we must learn to contend with it despite the chaos.

Much of Thomas's work is heavily invested in Freudian theories of sex, dreams, and sublimation. Thus it is no surprise that Thomas should turn to Freud's life as a subject for fiction in Eating Pavlova. Thomas's trademark tangle of narrative threads isn't as jarring here. After all, the book is about Freud, a man who immersed himself in the interpretation of the seemingly dissociative world of dreams. What's more, Eating Pavlova's Freud is in his morphine-clouded, semiconscious last days. The strongest narrative thread here is that of Freud's daughter Anna, who is so devoted to her father and his work that she'll analyze his dying dreams for him.

Lady with a Laptop finds Thomas mocking his own profession. Simon, his protagonist, is teaching a New Age writing workshop on the subpar Greek island of Skagathos. Simon takes a cheap and cynical delight in his students' lack of talent, but the joke is on him. His career has hit the skids. He's not even much of a flirt anymore. Teacher and students have a chance to be redeemed when they come up with a bizarre, sordid murder mystery in a team writing exercise. The lead author, Lucinda, ends up a murder victim herself. She is the necessary victim, it seems, of the work of writing fiction, for every story ends in death—if not a literal one, then a figurative one, the dying of possibility that comes with the dot at the end of the final sentence.

Writing is also thematic material in Charlotte: The Final Journey of Jane Eyre. Jane Eyre has fallen prey to metafictional impulses before. Wide Sargasso Sea, Jean Rhys's 1966 exploration of the subjectivity of Rochester's mad and exotic first wife, comments on the limits of the British literary imagination in the Victorian era. In Thomas's version, Miranda Stevenson, a literature professor, takes a somewhat different tact, aiming to "bring out some of the repressed issues" in Bronte's novel. Her Jane abandons Rochester after finding him sexually insufficient. She travels to the West Indies, where she finds a black lover who impregnates her. Authoress Miranda, meanwhile, is off on far kinkier journeys. If Jane's black lover was scandalous for her day, Miranda tests the sexual mores of her own time by having sex with a drag queen and parading in front of her father (who, like Rochester, is nearly blind) in her dead mother's lingerie and suspender belt.

—John Cotton, updated by Lisa A. Phillips

THORNTON, Lawrence

Nationality: American. Born: Pomona, California, 14 October 1937. Education: University of California, Santa Barbara, B.A. 1960, M.A. 1967, Ph.D. 1973. Family: Married Toni Clark in 1969. Career: Assistant professor of English, Montana State University, Bozeman, 1974–79, associate professor of English, 1980–84; visiting associate professor at University of California, Los Angeles, and University of California, Santa Barbara, 1984–88; writer in residence at University of California, Irvine, 1990; writer, 1990—. Awards: Ernest Hemingway Foundation award, 1988; best novel award (PEN Center USA West), 1988; silver medal (Commonwealth Club of California), 1988; Shirley Collier award (University of California, Los Angeles), 1988. Agent: Ned Leavitt, William Morris Agency, 1350 Avenue of the Americas, New York, New York 10019, U.S.A. Address: 603 West Eighth St., Claremont, California 91711, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Imagining Argentina. New York, Doubleday, 1987.

Under the Gypsy Moon. New York, Doubleday, 1990.

Marlow's Book. New York, Doubleday, 1991.

Ghost Woman. New York, Ticknor & Fields, 1992.

Naming the Spirits. New York, Doubleday, 1995.

Tales from the Blue Archives. New York, Doubleday, 1997.

Other

Unbodied Hope: Narcissism and the Modern Novel (criticism). Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, Bucknell University Press, 1984.

*

Lawrence Thornton comments:

(2000) All the novels bear the stigmata of magic realism, though "The Argentina Trilogy" is probably my purest work in the form. Writing straight, realistic fiction goes against my natural bent to manipulate the continuum of time and space to reveal the impact of political reality on people's lives. I seek the language of exposure, condemnation, courage, love to shape the tales that come my way, voices that are unlimited by convention.

* * *

Imagining Argentina, Lawrence Thornton's first and most absorbing novel, is set in Buenos Aires in the late 1970s, a time when a brutal military regime silenced dissidents and even the most innocent by kidnapping, imprisoning, torturing, and killing. Instead of merely presenting a repetitive description of such actions, Thornton ingeniously creates the narrative device of having a clairvoyant, Carlos Rueda, relate what has happened to many of the victims as their relatives come to sessions in his garden in the hope of learning some word of those who have suddenly disappeared. The story's narrator publishes an account of the atrocities in a French magazine and constantly interacts with Rueda. Rueda had run a Children's Theatre until it was closed by the authorities, and his interest in fancy and creation mingle effectively with his seemingly magical powers to see on some occasions past and present events otherwise unknown to the general public. Thornton's imaginative immersion in the material makes Rueda's revelations and insights convincing in the context. The novel possesses a strong narrative drive and a frequently poetic prose that adds a haunting aura to the stark, realistic content.

The musical flow in no way diminishes the horror involving los desaparecidos, those who mysteriously disappeared by the thousands. The monstrous brutality and viciousness of the generals is conveyed in all its terrifying results: sudden day and night seizures of people from their homes and even from the streets, detention camps, and the hidden killing fields. White-scarved women constantly parade in protest in the Plaza de Mayo seeking information about their lost families, although the majority of citizens go about their daily business totally unconcerned.

Naming the Spirits, the sequel to Imagining Argentina, begins with the mass killing of seized citizens in a remote grove in the pampas. One young teenage girl manages to escape and wanders speechless and uncertain of her identity because of shock and a gun wound. She is taken in by a couple whose own daughter has disappeared. Carlos Rueda explains what has doubtless happened to the silent and bewildered girl.

Thornton uses an especially clever technique of having the spirits from the mass grave speak in unison at various times hoping that the girl or some searching group can help locate their camouflaged graveyard. Short, set pieces—in effect inter-chapters—of monologues are also added to focus on some of the dead who explain their backgrounds and lives before they were arrested and executed.

Argentina's military dictatorship has now collapsed, and the new government has official international and local organizations actively seeking the location of the graves of the disappeared. There is a particularly intense effort underway to locate not only the hidden graves, but also to find those babies and young children whom the generals did not execute but gave to their supporters. The birth parents are now determined to find their offspring.

Thornton handles with convincing effect the spirits speaking from the grave and their deep communion with the girl who was almost killed with them. He blends realism and imaginative threads in an often elegiac, lyrical prose that adds further dimension to the horrors that have occurred as the whole world comes to realize what the rulers of Argentina have long denied.

Tales from the Blue Archives, the final section of the trilogy, focuses on Dolores Masson, who never gives up the search for her two grandsons who disappeared years before when their mother was seized by the military. Earlier in the trilogy we have witnessed the Ponce family, who once worked for one of the powerful generals, move rapidly from place to place to avoid discovery, since as a childless couple they had longed for children and had been illegally given Dolores's grandsons. Justice is eventually achieved, but by an improbable and melodramatic plot twist when the Ponces commit suicide after killing the general who had originally given them the babies.

Tales from the Blue Archives, while realistically portraying the children's disappearance and other aspects of the fascist rulers' regime, is the weakest link in the trilogy. The prose is rarely lyrical as this melancholy (blue) era is described. Further, the novel is so overfurnished with details and description that the reader is pushed into a somnolent mood.

This pronounced tendency toward excessive detail also diminishes Thornton's other novels: Under the Gypsy Moon and Ghost Woman. While evincing some flashes of style and the imaginative fancy that distinguished the first two volumes of the Argentine trilogy, these books do not retain the intensity of narrative interest. The stories are excessively padded but would perhaps be more successful as novellas. It is not that Thornton did not include potentially successfully poetic material—as with the many forced references to Garcia-Lorca in Gypsy Moon and the more integrated Indian myths and legends in Ghost Woman—but there is very little intriguing suspense.

There is also the issue of political overkill. One may understandably sympathize with Thornton's political views regarding Franco's Spain or the mistreatment suffered by Indian tribes in pioneering America, but more narrative force and presentation are needed to overcome what becomes, in Thornton's handling, overly obvious political tracts. Further, much of this material has been handled better by other writers. Think Hemingway, for example.

In Imagining Argentina, a decidedly memorable book, Thornton effectively blended imaginative details with stark realism while conveying a vital message. The medium and the message coalesced powerfully. When his message becomes over-labored in much of his other work, realism not only suffers but also narrative freshness and force.

-Paul A. Doyle

THUBRON, Colin (Gerald Dryden)

Nationality: British. Born: London, 14 June 1939. Education: Eton College, Berkshire, 1953–57. Career: Editorial assistant, Hutchinson, publishers, London, 1959–62; production editor, Macmillan, publishers, New York, 1964–65; since 1965 freelance documentary filmmaker and writer. Awards: PEN award, 1985; Thomas Cook award, for travel book, 1988; Hawthornden prize, 1989. Agent: Gillon Aitken and Stone, 29 Fernshaw Road, London SW10 0TG. Address: Garden Cottage, 27 St. Ann's Villas, London W11 4RT, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The God in the Mountain. London, Heinemann, and New York, Norton, 1977.

Emperor. London, Heinemann, 1978.

A Cruel Madness. London, Heinemann, 1984; New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 1985.

Falling. London, Heinemann, 1989; New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 1990.

Turning Back the Sun. London, Heinemann, 1991; New York, HarperPerennial, 1994.

Distance. London, Heinemann, 1996.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "Nothing Has Changed," in Firebird 4, edited by R. Robertson. London, Penguin, 1985.
- "The Ear," in Foreign Exchange, edited by Julian Evans. London, Sphere, 1985.

Plays

Radio Plays: Emperor, from his own novel, 1989; A Cruel Madness, from his own novel, 1991.

Other

Mirror to Damascus. London, Heinemann, 1967; Boston, Little Brown, 1968.

The Hills of Adonis: A Quest in Lebanon. London, Heinemann, 1968; Boston, Little Brown, 1969.

Jerusalem, photographs by Alistair Duncan. London, Heinemann, and Boston, Little Brown, 1969.

Journey into Cyprus. London, Heinemann, 1975.

Istanbul, with others. Amsterdam, Time-Life, 1978.

The Venetians, with others. Alexandria, Virginia, Time-Life, 1980.

The Ancient Mariners, with others. Alexandria, Virginia, Time-Life, 1981.

The Royal Opera House Covent Garden, photographs by Clive Boursnell. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1982.

Among the Russians. London, Heinemann, 1983; as Where the Nights Are Longest: Travels by Car Through Western Russia. New York, Random House, 1984.

Behind the Wall: A Journey Through China. London, Heinemann, 1987; New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 1988.

The Silk Road China: Beyond the Celestial Kingdom. London, Pyramid, 1989.

The Lost Heart of Asia. London, Heinemann, and New York, HarperCollins, 1994.

In Siberia. New York, HarperCollins, 1999.

•

Colin Thubron comments:

My work as a novelist arises less from a fascination with plot or even character, than with the exploration of areas of experience which are distressing or (to me) unresolved. Hence the novels revolve around loss of religious faith, pain of love, enigma of memory; the gulf between ideal and reality.

* * *

Colin Thubron is well known as a travel writer but enjoys a growing reputation as a novelist. Thubron himself has stressed the distinction between his travel books, which focus away from himself on exterior landscapes, and the novels, which explore the strange interior landscape of the self. However, the novels are also intense love stories mainly ending in death. In three of them, the male protagonist kills the woman he loves most, though in widely differing circumstances. Part of the movement of the second novel, Emperor (it is set on a journey) is the Empress Fausta's realization that her husband will kill her and we are told in a postscript that this eventually happens. In A Cruel Madness, the man kills literally to touch his lover's heart, and Falling meditates about the mercy killing of a paralysed trapeze artist, Clara, by her lover, Mark.

Thubron claims retarded adolescence for his passive male heroes. The most deranged of the three, Daniel of A Cruel Madness, says he gives "a plausible imitation of masculinity," and even Constantine, the Emperor, conquers while feeling unable to control his wife, his emotions, and his religion. This so called "immaturity" is Thubron's Romanticism, predominant in both his fiction and travel writing—a quest for something he says he knows intellectually is not there.

In the novels, the quest is contained within a love affair, pursuing a woman who tends to be idealized and who has an inaccessible part: a region the male hero cannot enter. The resulting frustration is most evidently dangerous in A Cruel Madness, set in a mental hospital. We become increasingly aware of the narrator's fantasy world, blamed on the shadowy Sophia, who closed herself to him. The same motif occurs in a simpler form in The God in the Mountain: Julian missed the early passionate surrender of Ekaterina because he was too immature to give himself to their relationship. Returning after many years, he finds her unhappily married, with that part of her closed to him, and unable to give herself fully now that he is ready. Fausta, in Emperor, is remote and cannot love her husband, perhaps through damage in childhood. A profound and continuing dependence is demonstrated between them, even though she realizes it will end in her death. Falling is a study in loving two women, and Mark the narrator finds parts of both unreachable. He comes to need most the independent Clara, who is culturally furthest from him (in the circus) and who chooses to leave him (in death): "She acknowledged a human separateness which I never deeply accepted."

Thubron's novels exhibit a tension between an intellectual unbeliever and a romantic quest for perfect fulfillment in love or in God. This duality influences the novel's structure as the plots increase the tension to a moment of tragic action (Julian goes to the mountain, Clara falls, Daniel strikes, Constantine has a vision) and then a release at the end, usually in death, where Romantic and "realist" are resolved. Thubron experiments with narrative forms, notably in Emperor with multiple narration from the journals, diaries, and letters of the major characters. Some accounts are omitted, ostensibly "lost," "damaged by rain" etc., so what we have is an artful selection by the author disguised as historical chance.

This carefully arranged yet apparently wandering text is reinterpreted in A Cruel Madness and Falling. The former is narrated by a wandering mind but the novel is effectively organised to release significant information to the reader. Falling is similar, except that Mark is not mad but remembering in prison, and there is also the governing metaphor of the Fall. Clara, the swallow, falls literally, and disastrously because she won't use a safety net. Katherine makes a stained glass window of the Fall from heaven and all three fall in love, unsafely. Turning Back the Sun may offer hope in the romantic quest in sexual terms if not in the encounter with other cultures. Set in an unnamed colonial country, Rayner, a doctor, is exiled to a frontier town where "savages" roam, dangerous but also vulnerable. Romantically longing for his childhood home, "the Capital," he loves Zoe, another of Thubron's heroines desired for their separateness, their intense selves. Rayner, unusually, avoids tragedy when he treats the demonized savages but cannot cure a mysterious skin disease blackening the white colonists. After repression and torture, a massacre of savages is averted when Rayner's army patrol witness their religious attempt to "turn back the sun" to restore an Eden before sin and death. Rayner is able to stay with Zoe but the novel's colonial themes are tentatively mapped rather than thoroughly explored. Yet this novel is characteristic of Thubron's work in its longing for intensity, beyond the well-trodden margins of safety.

-S.A. Rowland

TINDALL, Gillian (Elizabeth)

Nationality: British. Born: London, 4 May 1938. Education: Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford, B.A. (honours) in English, M.A. 1959. Family: Married Richard G. Lansdown in 1963; one son. Career: Freelance journalist since 1960. Awards: Mary Elgin prize, 1970; Maugham award, 1972. Agent: Curtis Brown, 28–29 Haymarket, London SW1Y 4SP, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

No Name in the Street. London, Cassell, 1959; as When We Had Other Names, New York, Morrow, 1960.

The Water and the Sound. London, Cassell, 1961; New York, Morrow, 1962.

The Edge of the Paper. London, Cassell, 1963.

The Youngest. London, Secker and Warburg, 1967; New York, Walker, 1968.

Someone Else. London, Hodder and Stoughton, and New York, Walker, 1969.

Fly Away Home. London, Hodder and Stoughton, and New York, Walker, 1971.

The Traveller and His Child. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1975. The Intruder. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1979.

Looking Forward. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1983; New York, Arbor House, 1985.

To the City. London, Hutchinson, 1987.

Give Them All My Love. London, Hutchinson, 1989.

Spirit Weddings. London, Hutchinson, 1992.

Short Stories

Dances of Death: Short Stories on a Theme. London, Hodder and Stoughton, and New York, Walker, 1973.

The China Egg and Other Stories. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1981.

Journey of a Lifetime and Other Stories. London, Hutchinson, 1990.

Play

Radio Play: A Little Touch of Death, 1985.

Other

A Handbook on Witches. London, Barker, 1965; New York, Atheneum, 1966.

The Born: Exile: George Gissing. London, Temple Smith, and New York, Harcourt Brace, 1974.

The Fields Beneath: The History of One London Village. London, Temple Smith, 1977.

City of Gold: A Biography of Bombay. London, Temple Smith, 1982; New York, Penguin, 1992.

Rosamond Lehmann: An Appreciation. London, Chatto and Windus, 1985.

Countries of the Mind: The Meaning of Place to Writers. London, Hogarth Press, 1991.

Célestine: Voices from a French Village. London, Sinclair Stevenson, 1995.

The Journey of Martin Nadaud: A Life and Turbulent Times. London, Chatto & Windus, 1999.

* * *

Gillian Tindall's first novel, No Name in the Street, was published soon after she graduated from Oxford, and its heroine, Jane, is 19 years old. However, it was not just another autobiographical first novel about teenagers, jazz, and ennui. Though concerned with bohemian life on the Left Bank in Paris, it is written in a lucid and formal prose, and the novel is straightforward, if unexpected in its movement and denouement.

Jane is a half-French visitor from England who falls in love with Vincent Lebert, a painter much older than herself. She lives happily with him till she discovers that Vincent is having a homosexual affair with an English boy, and finds herself pregnant. Up to this point, the novel is merely pleasant, chiefly because of its somewhat naive, but innocent and thorough, romanticism; from this point on, it develops a dramatic power which Tindall handles with striking maturity and dexterity. The contrast between the everyday materials she chooses to use, and the depth of the uses to which she puts them, marks all of Tindall's most successful work.

Her second novel, The Water and the Sound, is also about a young girl, Nadia, and about Bohemian life in Paris. Nadia hopes to find out the truth about her parents, both of whom died young. She has been told that her father was a poetic genius, wild in his private life; and that her mother had misguidedly attempted to save him from himself, having loved him so much that she had committed suicide the day after he died. Nadia interviews every person she can find who had known her parents: friends, enemies, literary critics, servants, doctors, gossips, all. Tindall's sketches of these people are memorable, and her allusive descriptions bring the atmosphere of Paris, with its night clubs and trendies, to vivid life. There is nothing notable about the story itself: it is interesting because of Tindall's delineation of her characters, her compassionate insight into their psychology. She masters her wealth of material by the sheer quality of her writing, welding together the similar but historically separate worlds of Nadia and her parents with unhurried aplomb.

The Youngest, too, is a kind of psychological detective story of the soul. Elizabeth, intelligent, sensitive, educated, articulate, gives birth to a deformed baby, whom she smothers. Tindall's novel explores the question of what sort of woman Elizabeth is. Increasingly disturbed, Elizabeth undergoes a hard journey of self-discovery, realizing that her response to her deformed baby has typified her response to life as a whole: she has consistently rejected her responsibility towards others in her absorption with herself and her towering effort to become "independent," and she has, without earlier realizing it or putting it in these terms, actually sacrificed her mother, sister, and husband to her own views and desires. Written in the mid-1960s, this implicit condemnation of the attitudes of the "me-generation" was highly unusual in the fiction of the time, and remains unusual in contemporary fiction. Possibly for this reason, the virtues of this novel were not as widely appreciated as they might have been. Tindall has always been keen to use symbolism, but it had not been wholly integrated into her earlier novels; here, however, the deformed baby provides a powerful symbol of Elizabeth herself, with her own character and actions triggering her self-discovery. The book was variously received; some people perceived it as a complex and insightful work, her best book so far; others thought of it as "intelligent but limited," as failing to subjugate a social problem to the art of fiction, and as a fictionalised documentary rather than a novel.

In Fly Away Home Antonia is a fairly sensitive, but not particularly intelligent woman nearing 30 and going through an emotional crisis. She is married to Marc, a well-to-do and thoroughly assimilated Parisian Jew; her two daughters are growing up and needing her less than they did. We share Antonia's journey of self-discovery through the diary she keeps from 1966 to 1968. This diary is one of Tindall's best achievements, revealing the pattern of Antonia's life with something of the surprising-but-inevitable quality of reality. Events that are outwardly dramatic (deaths, births, violent quarrels) rub shoulders with more internal, emotional dramas "which prepare themselves for years and then are abruptly revealed." Antonia is excited by the Israeli victories, and she cannot understand why Marc remains unelated, putting it down to his Jewish fear of involvement. However, when students take over the Sorbonne, Marc's youthful revolutionary romanticism is stirred and he does become enthusiastically involved; Antonia, on the other hand, finds herself unmoved by the excitement of the times, perceiving the events as obscure and senseless. Such moments come rarely in fiction, moments in which people who think they know each other discover, by their unexpected reactions to events, how little they know each other in reality. Such moments occur repeatedly in this novel—for example, in the different way that people regard Marc's brother Jean-Luc after his accidental death in Israel; or in Antonia's deepening understanding of her mother whom she had earlier regarded as a typical do-gooder, always rushing after the latest thing which might be considered progressive, without her activities actually making much positive impact; or in the change in Marc's attitude to his parents, from dutiful politeness to anger when they condemn the students as gangsters or, worse, as anarchists. Like all of Tindall's best novels, this is moving and tender in its portrayal of human relationships, exquisitely written, and packed with insights. These qualities are even more in evidence in the short stories in Dances of Death: Short Stories on a Theme and The China Egg and Other Stories.

The Traveller and His Child concerns the unusual theme of the paternal instinct. Robert, divorced by his appalling American wife for his inability to adjust to her orgasmic sexuality, finds that he misses his son Robbie terribly; so much, in fact, that he decides to kidnap another boy, the seven-year-old son of old friends. This is apparently done on impulse, though Tindall shows how his character and situation have been leading up to this moment through the years of his miserable childhood and unfortunate marriage. Robert's longing for his own son, now in America, and the way in which that unexpressed love and longing are focused on the boy, Pip, are convincingly narrated. In showing us Robert's heart, Tindall is showing us too the heart of the woman who steals someone else's baby from a pram. Robert is selfish as much as he is self-deceived but, on a desperate journey through France with the boy, he experiences fear and shame, and slowly gains insight. He realizes that he has caused overwhelming anguish, and that he has caused this anguish to people who have trusted him and for whom he cares. He sees that his action is unforgivable. Yet, miraculously, he is forgiven, by the child, by his friends, and—it is hinted—by himself.

In Looking Forward Tindall's protagonist is a childless gynaecologist concerned with finding ways of overcoming infertility. The book typifies the qualities of Tindall's less successful novels. The infertility is emblematic of the book itself: good intentions struggle against creative deficiency. Earnest, professional, and well researched, it lacks the germ of imaginative vitality which might be warmed to life by Tindall's brooding. This is partly due to an over-concern with formal cleverness. The characters—families and friends whose careers are charted through the first seven decades of this century—are relatively inert, but arranged in tableaux characteristic of the various periods in which the narrative is set. To the City, the tale of a young man saved from the Holocaust as a boy and now returning to Vienna after many years, suffers many of the weaknesses of its predecessor. Much stronger is Give Them All My Love, which uses flashbacks far more effectively than did To the City. The protagonist has murdered the man who killed his daughter, and now he sits in jail, remembering the events that got him there. It is a powerful and cinematic portrayal on Tindall's part.

What really interests Tindall and brings her characters to life are the emotional cores of people. Where she is content to let her heart lead her, Tindall's work comes alive; where she allows her considerable intellectual gifts too much play, she has not yet shown that she can embody her strong and subtle moral sense to produce impressive fictional work. This is not to deride her intellectual gifts, which are best evidenced by her non-fictional books. In all her books she has a highly accomplished style, and her fictional examination of current shibboleths is cool and penetrating. Unpretentious and unusual, she has an impeccable sense of the nuances of life.

-Prabhu S. Guptara, updated by Judson Knight

TINNISWOOD, Peter

Nationality: British. Born: Liverpool, 21 December 1936. Education: Sale County Grammar School, 1947–54; University of Manchester, 1954–57, B.A. 1957. Family: Married 1) in 1966, three children; 2) Liz Goulding, 1980. Career: Insurance clerk, Vienna, 1957; journalist, Sheffield Star, 1958–63, Thomson newspapers, London, 1964–65, Cardiff Western Mail, 1966–69, and Liverpool Echo, 1967. Awards: Authors Club award, 1969; Winifred Holtby prize, 1974; Welsh Arts Council bursary, 1974, and prize, 1975; Sony Radio award, 1988, for play; Writers' Guild Best Radio Comedy of the Year, 1991. Fellow, Royal Society of Literature, 1974. Agent: Jonathan Clowes Ltd., Iron Bridge House, Bridge Approach, London NW1 8BD, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

A Touch of Daniel. London, Hodder and Stoughton, and New York, Doubleday, 1969.

Mog. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1970.

I Didn't Know You Cared. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1973.

Except You're a Bird. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1974.

The Stirk of Stirk. London, Macmillan, 1974.

Shemerelda. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1981.

The Home Front (novelization of TV series). London, Granada, 1982.

The Brigadier Down Under. London, Macmillan, 1983.

The Brigadier in Season. London, Macmillan, 1984.

The Brigadier's Brief Lives. London, Pan, 1984.

Call It a Canary. London, Macmillan, 1985.

The Brigadier's Tour. London, Pan, 1985.

Uncle Mort's North Country. London, Pavilion-Joseph, 1986.

Hayballs. London, Hutchinson, 1989.

Uncle Mort's South Country. London, Arrow, 1990.

Winston. London, Hutchinson, 1991.

Short Stories

Collected Tales from a Long Room. London, Hutchinson, 1982.
 Tales from a Long Room. London, Arrow, 1981.
 More Tales from a Long Room. London, Arrow, 1982.
 Tales from Witney Scrotum. London, Pavilion-Joseph, 1987.

Uncollected Short Story

"Summer, New York, 1978—That's All," in The After Midnight Ghost Book, edited by James Hale. London, Hutchinson, 1980; New York, Watts, 1981.

Plays

The Investiture (produced Bristol, 1971).

Wilfred (produced London, 1979).

The Day the War Broke Out (produced London, 1981).

You Should See Us Now (produced Scarborough, 1981; London, 1983). London, French, 1983.

Steafel Variations (songs and sketches), with Keith Waterhouse and Dick Vosburgh (produced London, 1982).

At the End of the Day (produced Scarborough, 1984).

The Village Fete (broadcast 1987; produced Scarborough, 1991); New York, S. French, 1995.

Napoli Milionaria, adaptation of the play by Eduardo De Filippo (produced London, 1991).

Radio Plays and Features: Hardluck Hall series, with David Nobbs, 1964; Sam's Wedding, 1973; The Bargeman's Comfort, 1977; A Touch of Daniel, from his own novel, 1977; The Umpire's Thoughts Regarding a Certain Murder, 1979; Jake and Myself, 1979; The Siege, 1979; A Gifted Child, 1980; Home Again series, 1980; An Occasional Day, 1981; Crossing the Frontier, 1985; The Village Fete, 1987; M.C.C.: The Fully Harmonious and Totally Unauthorised History, 1987; Winston series, 1989–91; A Small Union, 1989; Call It a Canary, 1989; The Sitters, 1990; I Always Take Long Walks, 1991; Two into Two, 1992; The Governor's Consory, 1993; Tales from the Brigadoon, 1993; Uncle Mot's Celtic Fringe, 1994.

Television Plays and Features: scripts for That Was the Week That Was and Not So Much a Programme series, with David Nobbs; Lance at Large series, with David Nobbs, 1964; The Signal Box of Grandpa Hudson, with David Nobbs, 1966; Never Say Die series, 1970; The Rule Book, 1971; The Diaries of Stoker Leishman, 1972; I Didn't Know You Cared, 4 series, 1975–79; Tales from a Long Room series, 1980; More Tales from a Long Room series, 1982; A Gifted Adult and At the Grammar (The Home Front series), 1983; South of the Border, 1985; Tinniswood's North Country, 1987; Uncle Mort's North Country series, 1987–88; Can You Hear Me, Mother?, 1988; Tinniswood Country, 1989.

*

Critical Studies: In New Review (London), November 1974.

Peter Tinniswood comments:

I write very short sentences.

And very short paragraphs.

I try to make people laugh. I am a very serious writer, who has a gloomily optimistic outlook on life.

My books about the Brandon family contain all the above qualities.

* * *

Peter Tinniswood is a journalist, a television-script writer, and the author of a large number of popular novels and short stories. He is predominantly a highly skilled craftsman and his style reflects both his professional background and his own self-confessed northern English temperament. His works tend to be set in the north of England, thematically dependent on the northern ethos, informed by the happy morbidity of the stock comic conventions of the north, and filled with stock northern characters. Tinniswood is a great creator of the memorable character.

Many of Tinniswood's novels are continuations of the same characters. The Brigadier is the acerbic narrator of Collected Tales from a Long Room, Tales from Witney Scrotum, and all of those works bearing his name. He leaps from the pages bristling with the kind of prejudice which can only stem from a military background coupled with the thoroughly English belief that the game of cricket is the only proper foundation for all social, sexual, moral, and intellectual judgments. Since the ultimate test for such a mind lies not with the conquering of the Antarctic, with war, with art, nor yet with Margaret Thatcher's Britain, but takes place between Lancashire and Yorkshire every summer, a comic perspective is created for what might otherwise be considered serious. Similarly, in Tinniswood's work, the more working-class prejudices of the Brandon family form a comic filter through which the changing face of the north of England in recent decades can be viewed.

A Touch of Daniel, I Didn't Know You Cared and Except You're a Bird, all novels which feature the Brandon family, are potentially the most seriously comic of Tinniswood's novels and perhaps the most intrinsically northern. Les and Annie, Uncle Mort, who is Annie's brother, Carter, Les and Annie's son, and Pat, Carter's girlfriend and later his wife are all stock northern characters. The women feed the men with Yorkshire puddings, treacle tart, and porridge with brown sugar. They keep their blood clear with sulfur tablets, their bowels free with Gregory powder, their complexions clear with bile beans, and colds at bay with daily doses of halibut oil, wheat germ oil, cod-liver oil, and Virol. The men wait for the women to serve their food and grumble. "Isn't it rum the way women think catering's the way to a man's heart?" says Uncle Mort. "I don't like these onions" says Les, "They make me sweat." Carter, of the second generation, flirts with the idea of running away and freedom, as he flirts with the idea of sexuality with the voluptuous Linda Preston, but ultimately he wants neither: "I don't want to run away. I want to stay here. I want things to be simple and clear-cut like what they used to be. I want it to be like when I was a nipper. I didn't have to make no decisions then." The pathetic exploration of entrapment and futility is eschewed by Tinniswood in favor of the comic. Carter retreats into characteristically passive disobedience before his wife and his moments of introspection and self-knowledge are confined to conversations with Daniel, his much younger cousin who dies of pneumonia when Carter takes him out in the rain. Pat, who hopes by carefully rationing her sexuality to achieve her dream of a new house, a "young executive" lifestyle, and the attention she craves, is also disappointed. Even her pregnancy is offset by other events; a silver wedding, her mother's courtship, Uncle Mort and Olive Furnival, or Carter's football team. "It's not fair" says Pat, "Well what about me and baby? Why can't we have the field clear for ourselves? Why can't we have all the limelight?" The Brandons are, as they would say in the north, set in their ways.

The blighted lives of the Brandon family are played out against the slow erosion of a way of life. This is epitomized in the novels by the new housing estate on which Carter and Pat live, and by Uncle Mort's trenchant refusal to sell off his allotment to developers. The emphasis is placed not on the intrinsic seriousness of stunted lives and stunted relationships, but on imaginative verbal flights informed by the cheerful misery of stock northern humor. "Life's not worth living is it?" reflects Les. "No" agrees Uncle Mort, "I wish there were summat else you could do with it." Tinniswood is at his best when tossing words and logic about without reference to the actual living of life. In this sense his novels are not realistic, but rather full blown caricatures of northern life. It is a sense of humor not always easily exported however, and drove one New York Times book reviewer to declare that Tinniswood's work should be read when "ready for a good chuckle at the expense of old age, deformity, sickness and death...." Death is as sudden, frequent, and funny in Tinniswood's work, as sex is serious, infrequent and if possible to be avoided

The treatment of elementals in Tinniswood's work is entirely blasé. The form and style of his work allows their discussion to take place with all of the intensity normally accorded to the need for a nice cup of tea. When Uncle Mort says that Olive Furnival has been fatally injured falling off a bus, as was his wife, he is driven to consider that he "never did have much luck with public transport," "Is your bust tender?' asks Mrs. Partington of the pregnant Pat. 'Yes' she replies. 'Well don't let Carter play with it.'" It is a style which will not ultimately cope with seriousness, not even that demanded by the good parody and satire. Thus Shemerelda, a satire on beautiful and spoilt American womanhood, fails insofar as it is unable to emulate and parody the form of the brief dialogue that has been perfected by those working in the tradition of Twain and Hemingway. The Stirk of Stirk, an attempt to parody the epic fable loses humor in the telling of a straight narrative, while the characters remain stereotypical and superficial. When seriousness is attempted in the Brandon novels, usually via Carter's moments of introspection, it allows the misogyny latent in stock northern humor, and therefore in most of Tinniswood's writing, to break through and reveal its unfortunate aspect. For the most part however the accent remains strictly on the comic. It is no accident that the Brandon household, when transferred to the timeless medium of the television situation comedy where neither change nor resolution are to be expected, have become something of a television classic. It is this medium which allows Tinniswood to excel.

-Jan Pilditch

TLALI, Miriam (Masoli)

Nationality: South African. Born: Doornfontein, Transvaal. Education: University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. Career: Cofounder, Staffrider magazine; board member, Skotaville Press. Address: c/o Pandora Press, 77–85 Fulham Palace Road, London W6 8JB, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Muriel at Metropolitan. Johannesburg, Ravan Press, 1975; London, Longman, 1979.

Amandla. Johannesburg, Ravan Press, 1980.

Short Stories

Mihloti. Johannesburg, Skotaville, 1984.

Footprints in the Quag: Stories and Dialogues from Soweto. Cape Town, Philip, 1989; as Soweto Stories, London, Pandora Press, 1989.

* * *

Miriam Tlali was brought up in Sophiatown, that legendary community within Johannesburg which was razed because it was the sole area where Africans were permitted to take permanent title to land. She successfully completed high school and entered Witwatersrand University. A series of practical difficulties forced her to seek employment as a book-keeper/typist. This background makes it the more remarkable that she is one of the few black South African women who have been able to express their experiences and concerns in print. Her first publication, Muriel at the Metropolitan, seems largely autobiographical, the events deriving predominantly from her office experience. In spite of being so personal this is not pure autobiography, the events are embellished with considerable skill and the sequence of incidents is controlled by a deliberate, artistic structuring.

Metropolitan Radio is a shop that provides radios and furniture to Africans on tempting but greedy hire-purchase terms. The staff becomes a microcosm of the society and the characters are designed to become representative of the racial elements which make up this complex country. The owner, Mr. Bloch, is a Jew who displays all the traditional expectations of sharp dealing to make a barely legal extra profit. There are two white female cashiers; an overtly racist Afrikaaner Mrs. Stein and an English-speaking liberal Mrs. Kuhn, whose racism is more subtle but ultimately similar. Then there are the "coloured" mechanics, and below them, a variety of African drivers and attendants. They work together not very harmoniously, and from time to time, all express antagonistic inter-racial prejudice.

If one took this work too seriously, the people would become mere symbols. In particular the underlying anti-Semitism would be cruelly evident. Mr. Bloch would become a modern Shylock, always eager to make a rand/ducat at the expense of the ignorant and unfortunate Africans. But the entire work is based upon an attitude of extraordinary tolerance and amiability. Muriel enjoys her work. She likes her involvement with the business. Generally she even likes Mr. Bloch. Since she is employed as an office worker, a status usually reserved for Whites, and manages her duties every bit as efficiently as they do, she is inevitably treated disrespectfully and often blamed for errors the White staff have made. She is used and abused; and given the task, beneath White dignity, of coping with a series of very legitimate African complaints. Sometimes she helps, by explaining the dangerous results of compound interest and is accused of disloyalty to the company. Sometimes she finds herself unavoidably becoming a tool of Mr. Bloch's calculated exploitation. The surprising thing about this book is its tone. It is occasionally defiant as Muriel stands up to false accusations with articulate denials. But there is a strange tolerance and humor, a genuine acceptance that sees the racist extremes as absurd as they are threatening. She can laugh at the comic illiteracy of the African clients' letters without unkindness. She beautifully rises above the political and racial status that has been imposed on her by saying, "I am just myself, just a person." It is this tolerant vein which sustains this work.

Eventually Miriam is offered the chance of a much better job. Government inspectors come and determine that the struggling immigrant employer cannot afford to build an "African woman" toilet. It is illegal for Muriel to share either African male or White women's facilities, therefore she cannot be employed. Although Muriel is denied her promotion, the explanation exposes the madness of the divisions imposed upon South African society. They are as ludicrous as wicked. Indicatively this book itself was immediately and even more absurdly "banned" by the government censors.

After Muriel at Metropolitan Tlali wrote a collection of short stories, Mihloti, some plays and essays. Her major work is a lengthy novel, Amandla. The title is chanted at public demonstrations and means power. This novel is very different from Muriel and displays no tolerance, rather, it takes a strongly committed and activist posture. The events take place in 1976 and such actual plot as there is, consists of a review of the circumstances of the Soweto rebellion against the imposition of Afrikaans in the African schools—the children's uprising. There is a single coherent aspect, violence imposed by the police, by troops, and by Africans against each other. Blood and shootings are a constant backdrop. There are various minimal sub-plots; a youthful love affair between the student leader Pholoso and his girlfriend Felleng which is aborted by his being driven to political activism by governmental persecution. There is an adulterous love relationship between the wife of the police sergeant and his subordinate. There is loving old Gramsy who contemplates the horrendous present from the warm sentiment of the past. There are other characters, too numerous to recall individually, who play their cameo roles but are forgotten against the main sweep of the story, which is political challenge against the existing regime. Many of such small incidents are portrayed with conviction. The language is colloquial and realistic, their concerns, though briefly detailed, connect to the local events at the true level of human consequence, the personal conflicts and miseries that are suffered. Unhappily these painful and tender circumstances are not the focal point of this novel in which the prime purpose is to make bitter political complaint about the appalling injustice of the South African system. In itself, this intention is legitimate enough. Hardly anyone would offer a defense of apartheid. But the writer of fiction must create a conviction in the reader by inventing realistic individuals who, by their acts, expose the social issues, and engage our imaginative sympathies. Richard Rive successfully acheived this with Emergency. Here Tlali prefers argument. Many will approve of her denunciations of this regime but the rhetoric in which it is conducted is full of improbably pompous speech and palpable jargon. The young students enforcing the trade boycott speak with an extreme formality before they pour the unacceptably purchased quarts of paint on the head of an unhappy man who sought only to renovate the walls of his house, and so politely explain why they must burn the new clothes an affectionate mother has bought for her children. One long section consists of nothing more than a debate between two characters, which is meant to educate the reader by making reference to the entire history of South African oppressive legislation detailing all the parliamentary enactments with their dates. Perhaps this has to be told. Many political scientists have expressed it more academically, but the inventor of fiction should give it life. Without that humanity the novel is stultified unless its admirers determine that its contents are of such supervening importance that the normal practices of fiction no longer apply. This is less novel than diatribe. At the same time it includes many enticing elements that show that Tlali is still a uniquely sensitive observer of the intolerably grotesque society in which she lives. When free from her perceived obligation to convince through denunciation and the political clichés which voice that stance, she still has all the qualities which will allow her to express with loving accuracy the human feelings of her people.

-John Povey

TÓIBÍN, Colm

Nationality: Irish. Born: Ireland, 1955. Career: Journalist and columnist for the Dublin Sunday Independent, beginning in 1985; essayist for Esquire (London), and London Review of Books. Awards: Irish Times—Aer Lingus International Fiction Prize, 1991; Encore Prize for best second novel published in Britain, 1992; E. M. Forster Award (American Academy of Arts and Letters), 1995. Agent: c/o Publicity Director, Penguin Books, 375 Hudson Street, New York, New York 10014. Address: 12 Upper Pembroke Street, Dublin 2, Ireland.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The South. London, Serpent's Tail, 1990; New York, Viking, 1991.The Heather Blazing. London, Pan Books, 1992; New York, Viking, 1993.

The Story of the Night. London, Picador, 1996; New York, Henry Holt, 1997.

Finbar's Hotel (serial novel, with others), devised and edited by Dermot Bolger. London, Picador, 1997; San Diego, Harcourt Brace. 1999.

The Blackwater Lightship. London, Picador, 1999; New York, Scribner, 2000.

Other

Walking along the Border. London, Macdonald, 1987; as Bad Blood: A Walk along the Irish Border. London, Vintage, 1994.

Martyrs and Metaphors. Dublin, Raven Arts Press, 1987.

Homage to Barcelona. New York, Simon & Schuster, 1990; with a new introduction by the author, New York, Penguin, 1992.

The Trial of the Generals: Selected Journalism, 1980–1990. Dublin, Raven Arts Press, 1990.

Dubliners (travelogue), photographs by Tony O'Shea. London, Macdonald, 1990.

The Sign of the Cross: Travels in Catholic Europe. New York, Pantheon, 1994.

The Irish Famine. London, Profile Books, 1999.

The Modern Library: The Two Hundred Best Novels in English Since 1950 (with Carmen Callil). London, Picador, 1999.

Editor, Seeing Is Believing: Moving Statues in Ireland. Mountrath, Ireland, Pilgrim Press, 1985.

Editor, Soho Square 6: New Writing from Ireland. London, Bloomsbury, 1993; published as New Writing from Ireland. Winchester, Massachusetts, Faber & Faber, 1994.

Editor, The Kilfenora Teaboy: A Study of Paul Durcan. Dublin, New Island Books, 1996.

Editor, The Penguin Book of Irish Fiction. New York, Viking, 2000.

* * *

Colm Tóibín's four novels pose the issues of tone and style. If we call it the "plain style," we will need to distinguish it from the ironic deadpan of Joyce's Dubliners or the deadbeat of Beckett's prose, to name two important antecedents for any Irish writer. But it is also different from the bravados of Gertrude Stein or Ernest Hemingway. We will find Tóibín's prose true to his characters rather than himself.

Not since Iris Murdoch's call in 1959 ("The Sublime and the Beautiful Revisited") for novelists to write about characters unlike themselves have we seen so thorough a forgetting of authorial personhood in the novel. The central character of The South is Katherine Proctor, who leaves husband, child, and ancestral big house behind. While the ostensible breaking point for her is her husband's insistence that a poor neighbor be sued for damages against her wishes, we learn that her mother also left her husband, her child, and this house behind after they were burnt out in the troubles by their Catholic neighbors. We find out later how alien Katherine felt in her home, surrounded by a hostile class and culture. Katherine's flight to Barcelona is supported by her mother.

Katherine is a painter. She begins a relationship with another painter who has suffered incarceration and torture for his revolutionary activities during the Spanish Civil War. They begin a different kind of life for themselves, centered on their work. They leave Barcelona for an isolated mountain village and have a daughter, but Miguel cannot forget the war, and Katherine finds that they are occupying a battlefield in Miguel's past. When he retrieves a fellow anarchist to recuperate with them, it brings the police down on them, upsetting Miguel's own tenuous stability. In one of the most terrible scenes in the novel, Miguel (who does not drive) takes their daughter with him in the jeep, and has an accident fatal to them both.

But Katherine's past has not been expunged either. Early in their relationship, Miguel and Katherine meet an Irish painter, Michael Graves, who is from Katherine's town. His continued friendship keeps her from losing her Irish identity in Spain, and they return to Ireland together after Miguel dies. Katherine makes an elaborate peace with her son, now married. She resumes her painting and forges a quiet companionship with Graves, but these accommodations are not presented as equal to what she has lost.

The Heather Blazing opens onto Eamon Redmond, a High Court judge who will drive off to his holiday cottage with his wife, Carmen, after delivering a judgement in favor of a hospital discharging a handicapped child into the care of its impoverished parents. The novel recovers the childhood that brought him to such a distant relation to the pain of others, to his wife and children.

Chapters alternate (roughly) between Eamon's present and his past, when he grew up in Enniscorthy. His father, a schoolteacher, raised him alone. His father was a respected teacher and local historian. When he has a stroke and goes into the hospital, Eamon cannot remain at home—he must live with relatives and go to a trade school. When his father is able to return, Eamon suffers with his father's slurred speech and diminished capacity. He follows his father's political affiliation to Fianna Fáil, and meets his future wife while canvassing. His rise in the courts is not hampered by his politics.

Carmen tries to reach him, to make him talk to her, to keep less to himself. Unexpectedly, she has a stroke; he tends to her but later, she dies. Eamon must then deal with his grief over her passing. He gradually comes closer to his children and their families through his grandson. In a beautifully understated final episode, he becomes a companion to the boy by making him a basin of seawater to play in. At the end, they go to the shore to play in the sea, repeating a custom that Eamon shared with his father.

The Story of the Night is set in Argentina during the military dictatorship of the late 1970s and early 1980s. Richard Garay's irreconcilably British mother taught him English and associated herself with the British enclave in Buenos Aires. When his father dies, their diminished income forces them to vacate their apartment for the grudging charity of Argentinean relatives she has scorned. They can return only after his mother has drawn on the charity of the resident British for a job for herself and help with Richard's tuition.

Richard feels distant from his parents, his relatives, his schoolfellows, and his fellow English teachers at the school, but he is in love with Jorge Canetto, a fellow university student who asked him to teach him English. Richard and Jorge go for a holiday in Spain together, paid for by the Canettos, but Jorge is emphatically heterosexual in his company. As Argentina destabilizes during the Malvinas debacle, Jorge's father envisions himself as the next president. To access American support, he secures an invitation for Richard to a party given by Donald and Susan Ford, two CIA operatives. Richard's bilingualism proves invaluable to the Fords, and he is woven into the profiteering of denationalizing the oil industry as a consultant.

As Richard's world widens beyond his parents' flat and their furniture, which he has kept, he meets Pablo, Jorge's brother returned from San Francisco. Eventually Pablo agrees to move into a modern house Richard sublets.

Although Tóibín's fictional characters speak as sparely as he writes, it is only The Story of the Night that is told in first-person narrative. Perhaps only the full power of his understated prose can carry what one expects or fears for Richard and Pablo. Although years are never given, Pablo's description of San Francisco recounts the initial appearance of AIDS. Pablo inexplicably leaves Richard. In despair, Richard visits in New York with an acquaintance from the oil industry who gives him sex and cocaine without complications, but Richard's apparently allergic reaction to the drugs shows how well this narrator keeps from himself and his readers how sick he is. He barely gets home on the plane. He has AIDS as well, and he encounters Pablo in the doctor's office, also being treated. The full weight of Tóibín's investment in spareness across several novels pays for a dignity of suffering at the end of the novel, in the last words Richard has for us:

We went into the house and closed the door behind us. He asked me to turn the heating on and said that he would go to bed for a while. Maybe, if he was well enough, I said, we could go back into the city in the evening and go to a movie. Maybe, he said, maybe we'll do that. He asked me to wake him in an hour or two if he was still asleep.

The Blackwater Lightship, shortlisted for the Booker Prize, leaves behind what threatened to be standard features of Tóibín's fiction as it adds the unexpected. The second novel quietly used the same area of Ireland (Enniscorthy) as his first, but his new novel consciously names properties and families from The Heather Blazing. Until we see more of his work, we cannot rule out the depressing idea that he has fallen to aspirations of an oeuvre and his own literary landscape. But the work itself is very fine, a new step, a more energetic narrating and listening to several characters good at telling their stories to each other, as if he had legacied his recognizably laconic prose style to Richard Garay's terminal narrative.

In the novel Helen's father died when she was a child, and her mother's need to tend him in the hospital in Dublin forged in Helen a separateness that she cannot relinquish. She lives her life as a principal of a comprehensive school, mother of two boys, and wife without allowing her mother to see any of it.

Her world apart is breached by a visitor who tells her that her brother Declan is near death from AIDS. Declan wants to leave the hospital to go to his grandmother's house in Cush (the locale detailed in The Heather Blazing). The grandmother Dora, her daughter Lily, and her granddaughter Helen must deal with Declan's friends and his life in the close area of a cliff-side cottage and the unremitting last stages of Declan's illness. When he inevitably must return to the hospital for treatment, each of the women has changed enough to come closer to each other.

-William Johnsen

TRAPIDO, Barbara

Nationality: British (emigrated from South Africa, 1963; granted British citizenship, 1968). Born: Barbara Schuddeboom, Capetown, South Africa, 5 November 1941. Education: University of Natal, South Africa, B.A. 1963; University of London, diploma in education, 1967. Family: Married Stanley Trapido, 1963; one daughter and one son. Career: English teacher, Greenwich Park School, London, 1964–67, and Sunderland College of Further Education, 1967–70. Since 1970, full-time writer. Awards: Whitbread Special prize for fiction, 1982, for Brother of the More Famous Jack. Agent: Felicity Bryan, 2A North Prade, Oxford OX2 6PE, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Brother of the More Famous Jack. London, Gollancz, and New York, Viking, 1982.

Noah's Ark. London, Gollancz, 1984; and New York, Watts, 1985.Temples of Delight. London, Michael Joseph, 1990; New York, Grove Weidenfeld, 1991.

Juggling. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1994; New York, Penguin, 1995.

The Travelling Hornplayer. London, H. Hamilton, 1998; New York, Viking, 1999.

*

Barbara Trapido comments:

Funny/warm/satirical/slightly highbrow but accessible.

* * *

Barbara Trapido was born in South Africa in 1941, the daughter of dissident academic parents. She emigrated to England in 1963 and has lived in Oxford since 1971. Her first novel won a special prize in the Whitbread Awards in 1982 and was widely praised.

All Trapido's novels feature a dominating, unconventional older man. In the first three books he causes the heroine to fall in love with him or with the freedom from convention he represents; in the last he has something like the opposite effect. In Brother of the More Famous Jack, Katherine's friendship with her urbane philosophy teacher, Jacob Goldman, and his family gives her, living in suburban rectitude with her mother "at the far reaches of the Northern line," an entre into a world in which passions are visibly displayed and strong views are essential. Katherine falls in love with a series of unsuitable men, but the uxorious Jacob is the real hero of the novel. A shaggy Jew from the East End, he is sexy, uninhibited, and refreshingly trenchant; when Katherine eventually finds a man worthy of her, it is with the most Jacob-like of his sons.

The eponymous Noah Glazer, in Noah's Ark, is an American. He is as uxorious and bossy and cocksure as Jacob but with a different accent and somewhat less charm. Effortlessly, he rescues vague Ali from a dreary existence as a single parent still under the thumb of her awful ex and marries her. But such dazzling rescues bring their own problems. Compliant Ali has never gotten over her first love. As she slowly comes to terms with him, with the country of her birth, South Africa, and also her talent for painting, her marriage almost founders. Noah, like Jacob, isn't a man to relish coming second. Ali is ultimately forgiven, though Noah has been softened by an inconvenient summer spent apart from her. Forgiveness, like marital happiness, is fragile.

By the third novel we know that the typical Trapido heroine is young, demure, clever, and ripe to be rescued by someone vivid and powerful by virtue of their subversive plain-speaking. In Temples of Delight, it is Jem, neither male nor Jewish nor even adult but nonetheless poised, Catholic, and well-read, who first rescues Alice. She is tall, scruffy, unconventional, given to flights of fancy (to disguise her humble origins), and believes in passion. Alice adores her and uses her as a touchstone—it is passion and not materialism that makes life worth living.

In Temples of Delight, Trapido uses attitudes toward food as an index of class and religion. Alice's friend Flora's appalling parents are so stingy that Flora is brought up to eat lumps of gristle and wear an overcoat indoors. Alice's mother treats Flora's family to a celebration meal in a restaurant. It is an episode of high comedy: Alice's builder father chats about bricks, Flora's father gropes Alice's mother and promptly dies of an unsuspected allergy to mussels, and the incontinent old grandmother piddles on the floor.

Though Temples of Delight uses the conventions of a school story, it includes elements of satire, melodrama (with some elements drawn from Mozart's Magic Flute), and comedy. The glue that sticks it together is psychological realism. Alice is fully drawn, though other characters, apart from Joe, the dominating male (this time Catholic and Italian-American), are lightly sketched. But when Joe arrives late in the novel—literally at Jem's deathbed—Alice, like Ali and Katherine before her, is ready to be swept off her feet.

Juggling is a sequel to Temples of Delight (though there are some inconsistencies with dates). It is more complex, full of unexpected twists and contrivances, and the women characters are its glory. Pamina is Jem's daughter, born by cesarean section while Jem lay dying. Christina was born early in Alice's marriage to Joe. But time moves on. Alice is less impressed by Joe than hitherto. As a teenager, Christina is filled with the need to rebel—both to quell Joe and to make her way in the world without his help. Abandoning her beloved sister, she finds a black, working-class replacement in the ebullient, capable Dulce. Alice also rebels, and there is an intricate, careful patterning of joinings-together and splittings-apart, of mistaken identities and disappearances, that mirrors the patterning of a Shakespearean comedy.

An undergraduate at Cambridge, Christina develops strong views on the Comedies. She has also learned more than the basics on relations between the sexes. "In the conflict of gender, the women win the war of words, but the men will win the battle." Katherine, and Alice before her, clever though they were, spent their youth without discovering as much. The book's ending, "frozen in a moment of precarious, brilliant symmetry," promises much for the future.

—Anne French

TREMAIN, Rose

Nationality: British. Born: Rose Thomson in London, 2 August 1943. Education: Frances Holland School, 1949–54; Crofton Grange School, 1954-60; the Sorbonne, Paris, 1960-61, diploma in literature 1962; University of East Anglia, Norwich, 1964-67, B.A. (honors) in English 1967. Family: Married 1) Jon Tremain in 1971 (divorced 1978), one daughter; 2) Jonathan Dudley in 1982 (divorced 1991). Career: Teacher, Lynhurst House School, London, 1968-70; assistant editor, British Printing Corporation, London, 1970-72; part-time research jobs, 1972–79; creative writing fellow, University of Essex, Wivenhoe, 1979-80. Since 1980 full-time writer and part-time lecturer in creative writing, University of East Anglia. Awards: Dylan Thomas prize, for short story, 1984; Giles Cooper award, for radio play, 1985; Angel Literary award, 1985, 1989; Sunday Express Book of the Year award, 1989; James Tait Black Memorial prize, 1993; Prix Femina étranger (France), 1994. Fellow, Royal Society of Literature, 1983. Agent: Richard Scott Simon, 43 Doughty Street, London WC1N 2LF. Address: 2 High House, South Avenue, Thorpe St. Andrew, Norwich NR7 0EZ, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Sadler's Birthday. London, Macdonald, 1976; New York, St. Martin's Press, 1977.

Letter to Sister Benedicta. London, Macdonald, 1978; New York, St. Martin's Press, 1979.

The Cupboard. London, Macdonald, 1981; New York, St. Martin's Press, 1982.

The Swimming Pool Season. London, Hamish Hamilton, and New York, Summit, 1985.

Restoration. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1989; New York, Viking, 1990.

Sacred Country. London, Sinclair Stevenson, 1993; New York, Atheneum, 1994.

The Way I Found Her. London, Sinclair-Stevenson, 1997; New York, Farrar, Straus, and Giroux, 1998.

Music and Silence. New York, Farrar, Straus, and Giroux, 2000.

Short Stories

The Colonel's Daughter and Other Stories. London, Hamish Hamilton, and New York, Summit, 1984.

The Garden of the Villa Mollini and Other Stories. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1987.

Evangelista's Fan. London, Sinclair Stevenson, 1994; published as Evangelista's Fan and Other Stories, Thorndike, Maine, Thorndike Press, 1995.

Collected Short Stories. London, Sinclair-Stevenson, 1996.

Plays

Mother's Day (produced London, 1980).

Yoga Class (produced Liverpool, 1981).

Temporary Shelter (broadcast 1984). Published in Best Radio Plays of 1984, Methuen, 1985.

Radio Plays: The Wisest Fool, 1976; Dark Green, 1977; Blossom, 1977; Don't Be Cruel, 1978; Leavings, 1978; Down the Hill, 1979; Half Time, 1980; Hell and McLafferty, 1982; Temporary Shelter, 1984; The Birdcage, 1984; Will and Lou's Boy, 1986; The Kite Flyer, 1987.

Television Plays: Halleluiah, Mary Plum, 1978; Findings on a Late Afternoon, 1980; A Room for the Winter, 1981; Moving on the Edge, 1983; Daylight Robbery, 1986.

Other

The Fight for Freedom for Women. New York, Ballantine, 1973. Stalin: An Illustrated Biography. New York, Ballantine, 1975. Journey to the Volcano (for children). London, Hamish Hamilton, 1985.

*

Rose Tremain comments:

Most interesting to me is my attempt to communicate ideas through many different forms of writing; this is allied to my belief that a writer who stays working in one form only risks becoming repetitive and stale. Hence, the large output of plays for radio and the three collections of short stories and children's novels.

I have strenuously resisted categorisation as a "woman's writer" and the notion that women should address themselves only to women's problems, as this strikes me as limiting and inhibiting, a kind of literary sexism in itself.

Themes that recur in my work are: dispossession, the effect of religious and exclusive "clubs" of all kinds on the individual's compassion, class antagonisms, solitariness, sexual bereavement, emotional bravery, and, above all, love.

* * *

A highly original, versatile writer, Rose Tremain explores past ages and the present time with equal conviction. The leading characters of her fictions, often first-person narrators, range from young children to the very old, and may be of either gender. At her best, her work combines wit and humor with a wistful, elegiac sadness.

Tremain's early novels are notable mainly for their unusual settings and unconventional leading characters. Of these, the first and most unlikely is Sadler, the decrepit old servant in Sadler's Birthday whose day is spent wandering the empty house willed to him by his gentry employers. Skillfully mingling his recollections with the routine visitors of the day—the vicar, the cleaning lady, a prying estate agent—the author outlines the events that have shaped Sadler's life, not least the repression of his feelings by the strait-jacket of domestic service. Sadler's unacknowledged longings for love and friendship are rendered all the more moving by Tremain's hard, unsentimental style. Sadler's Birthday is an accomplished work whose characters and conversations have the ring of truth, and the blend of incident and flashback is ably achieved. Letter to Sister Benedicta has as its narrator the fat middle-aged matron Ruby Constad. Living in the shadow of a successful husband and beautiful children, Ruby's life changes when her husband has a stroke and her children embark on an incestuous relationship. Faced by the challenge, Ruby emerges stronger than before, able to cope and find a new life of her own. Her experiences are described in her letters to the nun who raised her in India, and reveal not only her inner turmoil but her warmth and self-deprecating humor. In The Cupboard, an ambitious work spanning the twentieth century and both world wars, events are presented from two contrasting viewpoints. The neglected novelist Erica March, old and nearing death, is interviewed by Ralph, a failed hack journalist, and the novel unfolds her past and her innermost feelings in a series of conversations and quotations from her books. The dynamic life Erica has made for herself is contrasted with Ralph's futile, submissive existence, and as she prepares for death her example inspires him to his own kind of rebellion. Perhaps the least accessible of Tremain's works, The Cupboard has a richness of content that rewards a careful reading. In all three novels one feels that Tremain is setting herself a challenge to wring something of value from unpromising material. If so, it is a challenge she is more than able to meet.

The stories of The Colonel's Daughter and the novel The Swimming Pool Season move beyond central characters to encompass a network of inter-connected lives. The novel and the long title story of the collection have strong similarities. Written in a firm, direct present tense, they build to climax through a sequence of brief, sharply visualized incidents. Whether the criminal act of The Colonel's Daughter or the ill-fated venture of a swimming pool in a remote French village, each serves as a central point around which Tremain constructs the interwoven lives of her characters, events unfolding gradually and with deceptive stealth to emerge in eventual tragedy.

Tremain's eagerness to explore other forms—evidenced in her radio plays and her children's story Journey to the Volcano—is matched by continuing experiment and variety in her novels and short stories. The Garden of the Villa Mollini and Evangelista's Fan show a further honing of her talent for the shorter forms, with stories that explore the feelings and responses of her varied characters with brevity and assurance, her thoughtful prose compressing deep insights into a handful of pages.

Restoration, which marks a radical departure from previous work, is a historical rather than contemporary novel, but shares with The Swimming Pool Season the sense of interlocked lives, the slow workings of fate foreshadowed by a series of incidents akin to Joycean "epiphanies." Robert Merivel, her narrator and another unlikely hero-figure, admits early on that "I am also in the middle of a story which might have a variety of endings, some of them not entirely to my liking." Set during the reign of Charles II with its twin catastrophes the Great Plague and Great Fire of London, the novel examines Robert's career as "King's Fool," his ennoblement, his downfall as the King's favor is withdrawn, and his efforts at reintegration. Tremain shows great skill in alternating a past-tense main narrative with crucial present-tense flashbacks, and explores the complex nature of her hero. Merivel mirrors his age in his early excess and later, uncertain efforts at renunciation, and stands at the heart of a fascinating epic novel. Restoration, whose title refers not only to the time but to Merivel's re-ordering of his own broken world, is a deep, many-layered work, and at all levels the author's touch is firm and assured. One of Tremain's most challenging novels, it is also one of her best. Sacred Country has her switching to the modern world. Set mainly in rural Norfolk and spanning the period 1950s-80s, it centers on the realization by Mary Ward that her true nature is male. Her odyssey to gender change and fulfillment as Martin Ward is echoed by the lives of her own troubled family and their neighbors. Their linked stories are tracked to eventual resolution, Martin's fulfillment in the U.S.A. contrasted with the death and despair of Sonny and Estelle in the mean-spirited Britain of Margaret Thatcher. Once again Tremain creates a rich, complex epic, crammed like Restoration with evocative symbols and talismans.

Recent novels show Tremain at the height of her powers, writing with equal mastery of current events and those of the 1600s. The Way I Found Her describes a series of events leading to violence and tragedy in the hot Paris summer of 1994, as seen through the eyes of a young boy in his early teens. The character of Lewis the young narrator is a triumph, the reader drawn into his inner world with its blend of adult fantasies and childhood fears and preoccupations. The mystery that envelops not only him but his translator mother, Valentina the famous Russian novelist and Lewis's secret obsession, existentialist roofer Didier, and others, progresses at speed through a thickening plot with ingenious clues culled from literary quotations in the pages of Crime and Punishment and Le Grand Meaulnes to a final, tragic conclusion. Tremain's superb style hooks the reader from the opening lines, the rapid pace sustained throughout. It is matched by an unforgettable vision of the hot summer city, its landmarks, colors, and scents. Swift-moving and deep, its dark secret leavened by frequent moments of humor, The Way I Found Her is a magnificent creation and arguably its author's finest work. Music and Silence returns to the seventeenth century in an ambitious novel that rivals Restoration in complexity and scope. Lutenist Peter Claire, who takes service with King Christian IV of Denmark, is adopted by the king as his "angel." Claire, in his love for Emilia Tilsen, companion to the King's adulterous consort Kirsten Munk, is dogged by guilt over a past affair, while the King is haunted by the terrible death of his friend Bror Brorson, who Claire closely resembles. These themes are woven into a narrative that also contains incidents from the fraught existence of Emilia and her family, the rampant sex-life of Kirsten, Claire's musings on art and life, and the King's desperate attempts to save his impoverished realm by various ill-judged schemes. Once more Tremain brings the early period alive, action switching from Frederiksborg to Jutland to Norfolk and back again in a series of memorably vivid scenes. The story is told from multiple viewpoints, the author moving smoothly from first-person interior monologue to third-person narrative and from present to past tense without strain. The plot of Music and Silence expands to take in the nature of music and creative art, an examination of sensual pleasure, the dilemma of love versus duty, and references to alchemy, fairytale and miracles. The balanced, sedately paced prose fits perfectly, just as the faster-moving style matches The Way I Found Her. With these later works, Rose Tremain's writing attains an impressive peak.

-Geoff Sadler

TREVOR, William

Nationality: Irish. Born: Mitchelstown, County Cork, 24 May 1928. Education: St. Columba's College, Dublin, 1942-46; Trinity College, Dublin, B.A. 1950. Family: Married Jane Ryan in 1952; two sons. Career: History teacher, Armagh, Northern Ireland, 1951–53; art teacher, Rugby, England, 1953-55; sculptor in Somerset, 1955-60; advertising copywriter, Notley's, London, 1960-64. Lives in Devon, England. Awards: Transatlantic Review prize, for fiction, 1964; Hawthornden prize, for fiction, 1965; Society of Authors travelling fellowship, 1972; Allied Irish Banks prize, for fiction, 1976; Heinemann award, for fiction, 1976; Whitbread Award, 1976, 1983, Book of the Year, 1994; Irish Community prize, 1979; BAFTA award, for television play, 1983; Sunday Express Book of the Year, 1994. D.Litt.: University of Exeter, 1984; Trinity College, Dublin, 1986; D.Litt.: Queen's University, Belfast, 1989; National University, Cork, 1990. Member: Irish Academy of Letters. C.B.E. (Commander, Order of the British Empire), 1977. Agent: Peters Fraser and Dunlop Group, 503–504 The Chambers, Chelsea Harbour, Lots Road, London SW10 0FX, England; or, Sterling Lord Literistic Inc., 1 Madison Avenue, New York, New York 10010, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

A Standard of Behaviour. London, Hutchinson, 1958.

The Old Boys. London, Bodley Head, and New York, Viking Press, 1964.

The Boarding-House. London, Bodley Head, and New York, Viking Press, 1965.

The Love Department. London, Bodley Head, 1966; New York, Viking Press, 1967.

Mrs. Eckdorf in O'Neill's Hotel. London, Bodley Head, 1969; New York, Viking Press, 1970.

Miss Gomez and the Brethren. London, Bodley Head, 1971.

Elizabeth Alone. London, Bodley Head, 1973; New York, Viking Press, 1974.

The Children of Dynmouth. London, Bodley Head, 1976; New York, Viking Press, 1977.

Other People's Worlds. London, Bodley Head, 1980; New York, Viking Press, 1981.

Fools of Fortune. London, Bodley Head, and New York, Viking Press, 1983.

The Silence in the Garden. London, Bodley Head, and New York, Viking, 1988.

Two Lives (includes Reading Turgenev and My House in Umbria). London and New York, Viking, 1991.

Juliet's Story. New York, Simon & Schuster Books for Young Readers, 1994.

Felicia's Journey. London and New York, Viking, 1995.

After Rain. New York, Viking, 1996.

Death in Summer. New York, Viking, 1998.

The Hill Bachelors. New York, Viking, 2000.

Short Stories

The Day We Got Drunk on Cake and Other Stories. London, Bodley Head, 1967; New York, Viking Press, 1968.

Penguin Modern Stories 8, with others. London, Penguin, 1971.

The Ballroom of Romance and Other Stories. London, Bodley Head, and New York, Viking Press, 1972.

The Last Lunch of the Season. London, Covent Garden Press, 1973. Angels at the Ritz and Other Stories. London, Bodley Head, 1975; New York, Viking Press, 1976.

Lovers of Their Time and Other Stories. London, Bodley Head, 1978; New York, Viking Press, 1979.

The Distant Past and Other Stories. Dublin, Poolbeg Press, 1979.

Beyond the Pale and Other Stories. London, Bodley Head, 1981; New York, Viking Press, 1982.

The Stories of William Trevor. London and New York, Penguin, 1983

The News from Ireland and Other Stories. London, Bodley Head, and New York, Viking, 1986.

Nights at the Alexandra (novella). London, Century Hutchinson, and New York, Harper, 1987.

Family Sins and Other Stories. London, Bodley Head, and New York, Viking, 1990.

Trio: Three Stories from Cheltenham (novellas, with Jane Gardam and Rose Tremain). London, Penguin Books, 1993.

Outside Ireland: Selected Stories. London, Penguin Books, 1995. Cocktails at Doney's and Other Stories, edited by Giles Gordon.

London, Bloomsbury, 1996.

Ireland: Selected Stories. New York, Penguin Books, 1998.

Plays

The Elephant's Foot (produced Nottingham, 1965).

The Girl (televised 1967; produced London, 1968). London, French, 1968.

A Night with Mrs. da Tanka (televised 1968; produced London, 1972). London, French, 1972.

Going Home (broadcast 1970; produced London, 1972). London, French, 1972.

The Old Boys, adaptation of his own novel (produced London, 1971). London, Davis Poynter, 1971.

A Perfect Relationship (broadcast 1973; produced London, 1973). London, Burnham House, 1976.

The 57th Saturday (produced London, 1973).

Marriages (produced London, 1973). London, French, 1973.

Scenes from an Album (broadcast 1975; produced Dublin, 1981). Dublin, Co-op, 1981.

Beyond the Pale (broadcast 1980). Published in Best Radio Plays of 1980, London, Eyre Methuen, 1981.

Autumn Sunshine adaptation of his own story (televised 1981; broadcast 1982). Published in Best Radio Plays of 1982, London, Methuen, 1983.

Radio Plays: The Penthouse Apartment, 1968; Going Home, 1970; The Boarding House, from his own novel, 1971; A Perfect Relationship, 1973; Scenes from an Album, 1975; Attracta, 1977; Beyond the Pale, 1980; The Blue Dress, 1981; Travellers, 1982; Autumn Sunshine, 1982; The News from Ireland, from his own story, 1986; Events at Drimaghleen, 1988; Running Away, 1988.

Television Plays: The Baby-Sitter, 1965; Walk's End, 1966; The Girl, 1967; A Night with Mrs. da Tanka, 1968; The Mark-2 Wife, 1969; The Italian Table, 1970; The Grass Widows, 1971; O Fat White Woman, 1972; The Schoolroom, 1972; Access to the Children, 1973; The General's Day, 1973; Miss Fanshawe's Story, 1973; An Imaginative Woman, from a story by Thomas Hardy, 1973; Love Affair, 1974; Eleanor, 1974; Mrs. Acland's Ghosts, 1975; The Statue and the Rose, 1975; Two Gentle People, from a story by Graham Greene, 1975; The Nicest Man in the World, 1976; Afternoon Dancing, 1976; The Love of a Good Woman, from his own story, 1976; The Girl Who Saw a Tiger, 1976; Last Wishes, 1978; Another Weekend, 1978; Memories, 1978; Matilda's England, 1979; The Old Curiosity Shop, from the novel by Dickens, 1979; Secret Orchards, from works by J.R. Ackerley and Diana Petre, 1980; The Happy Autumn Fields, from a story by Elizabeth Bowen, 1980; Elizabeth Alone, from his own novel, 1981; Autumn Sunshine, from his own story, 1981; The Ballroom of Romance, from his own story, 1982; Mrs. Silly (All for Love series), 1983; One of Ourselves, 1983; Broken Homes, from his own story, 1985; The Children of Dynmouth, from his own novel, 1987; August Saturday, from his own novel, 1990; Events at Drimaleen, from his own story, 1992.

Other

Old School Ties (miscellany). London, Lemon Tree Press, 1976.A Writer's Ireland: Landscape in Literature. London, Thames and Hudson, and New York, Viking, 1984.

Excursions in the Real World. London, Hutchinson, and New York, Knopf, 1994.

Editor, The Oxford Book of Irish Short Stories. Oxford and New York, Oxford University Press, 1989.

*

Manuscript Collections: University of Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Critical Studies: "William Trevor's System of Correspondences," in Massachusetts Review (Amherst), Autumn 1987, and William Trevor, New York, Twayne, 1993, both by Kristin Morrison; William Trevor: A Study of His Fiction by Gregory A. Schirmer, London, Routledge, 1990; William Trevor: A Study of the Short Fiction by Suzanne Morrow Paulson, New York, Twayne, 1993; William Trevor: The Writer and His Work by Dolores MacKenna. Dublin, New Island, 1999.

* * *

William Trevor's celebrated writing career has largely been spent exploring the intersection of corruption and the human heart. His interest in moral vagaries and deluded, vulnerable characters speak to readers often through dark humor and acerbic perception. With over 30 published works—including fiction, short stories and non-fiction—Trevor is considered one of the greatest living short story writers and novelists, and his last few novels, especially, have been highly acclaimed.

Trevor's early works, dating back into the 1960s, mark a blooming affection for characters in bad relationships and down-andout-predicaments. The Old Boys and The Boarding-House are filled with colorful characters drawn from London life. But these eccentricities are not the sort to be taken lightly. They sometimes disguise motives that set characters against one another in wicked and oftencomical fashion. The comedy tends to disguise the kinds of evil that ultimately show through—a mask that Trevor becomes more concerned with in his later fiction. Mr. Jaraby's ambition to become president of the Old Boys Association of his school is hardly diabolical, and the extent to which he is willing to go to insure his election is as funny as it is outlandish. But as we learn more and more about him and his ambition, aspects of his private life-particularly his attitude towards his wife and son—reveal a sinister side to his nature that even his worst enemy, Mr. Nox, does not suspect. At the end, defeated in ways he had not anticipated, Mr. Jaraby is left alone with his wife who, though she counsels hope, rightly questions, "Has hell begun, is that it?" and urges, "Come now, how shall we prove we are not dead?"

William Wagner Bird's death at the beginning of The Boarding-House provides one answer to Mrs. Jaraby's question. He leaves a will that bequeaths his boarding-house, occupied by an odd assortment of individuals of both sexes, to two of its most vigorous enemies, Studdy and Nurse Clock, both of them senior residents. Studdy is a petty con artist whose success in stealing one of Nurse Clock's elderly patients away from her has heightened the rivalry and ugliness between the pair. The specific condition of the bequest-that they make no changes in the residents or staff—puts them in an awkward position, but not for long. Like many of Trevor's less reputable characters, they are extremely acquisitive and quickly see that they have more to gain by working together than by working against each other. Unholy alliance though it may be, they systematically try to rid themselves of those strange and solitary inmates in whose hearts Mr. Bird believed he had kindled some comfort by bringing them together in his "great institution in the south-western suburbs of London." By attempting to disrupt the careful arrangement Bird had created and cultivated, they finally destroy everything else, as from his grave Mr. Bird takes his revenge—in the person of a deranged and dispossessed resident who believes he is taking revenge on him.

Timothy Gedge in The Children of Dynmouth is a younger version of Mr. Studdy, and, being younger, displays the causes of his behavior more clearly. An unwanted child, neglected at home by his working mother and sister and abandoned by his father, Gedge finds in others' lives not so much vicarious pleasures as sources of information and feelings that feed his diseased imagination. These help him to blackmail various townspeople, even those once kindly disposed towards him. While his demands are seemingly innocuous—a wedding dress, a dog's-tooth suit, a discarded tin bath—his means to secure those ends are entirely vicious, masked by a false heartiness and cheer that belie his true feelings. Ironically—and Trevor is a master of irony—what he invents to piece out his knowledge often comes close to the truth, close enough in any case to cause considerable anguish and hurt, for example, to Commander and Mrs. Abigail, who for years—ever since they first got married—have been living a lie; or to Stephen and Kate, whose parents-Stephen's father and Kate's mother—have just been married and are off on a honeymoon, leaving their children to begin a difficult adjustment to a new family life. In these and other relationships, Gedge pretends to a friendship that none of the others feels, and that tends to drive him into greater fantasies—and greater invasions of their privacy. His worse invasions, however, are those of the human heart—until he is stopped by someone who recognizes what he is doing and whose wife, through understanding Gedge's plight, puts away her own discontents and concerns herself more fully with her family's future—and his, too.

This somewhat upbeat ending should not be overemphasized though subsequent novels also show an effort to overcome despair and pathos, optimism is always very qualified in Trevor's fiction and very hard-won, as his many short stories also reveal. Other People's Worlds and Fools of Fortune, give a good idea of just how high the costs can be. Francis Tyte, another descendant of Studdy in Trevor's own rogue's gallery, is a very attractive young man who works as an actor in bit parts and in making commercials. Even more than Timothy Gedge, he has been victimized in his youth by a male boarder in his parents' home, a debt-collector who draws Francis into what one of his later benefactors aptly describes as a "bitter world." Since that time, Francis has also turned into a debt-collector of sorts, like Studdy and Gedge reaping from others what he regards as his due. Already married to an elderly dressmaker in Folkestone who has thrown him out, he later meets Julia, 14 years his senior, who becomes infatuated with him and agrees to marry him and give him her jewelry. Their Italian honeymoon lasts a single day, during which Francis tells Julia everything, including the daughter he has fathered with Doris Smith, a poor shopgirl in Fulham, 12 years earlier. He absconds with the jewels and is not heard from again. But Julia is drawn into Dorrie Smith's world as well as Francis's other circles, including that of the aged parents he has long since abandoned in a retirement home. Despite the humiliation and despondency she naturally suffers because of her folly, Julia becomes more and more deeply involved in the shambles of others' lives Francis has left behind him. Once a devout Catholic, she nearly loses her faith altogether. But Dorrie's joy in more than one sense finally becomes Francis's own, as Gedge becomes Lavinia Featherston's. Drawn into other people's worlds and the messes they contain, she learns to value more her own, but not with smugness. The pain she has experienced has made her invulnerable to that and more truly compassionate than she had ever been before.

Fools of Fortune deepens the focus and the tone displayed in all of these novels, as Trevor resorts to first-person narrative and tells a story of revenge and retribution from several points of view. His eccentrics are still present, but here subordinated to their proper functions in a novel that spans the present century and deals with the perennial conflict between the Irish and their erstwhile British masters. Actually, the narrative goes back to the 19th century, when Irish Protestant William Quinton married English Anna Woodcombe and brought her to live in Kilneagh, County Cork. Two generations later, when for the third time a Quinton had taken a Woodcombe for his bride, Kilneagh is burned down by Black and Tans under the leadership of a Liverpool sergeant named Rudnick. Young Willie and his widowed mother survive the ordeal, but when years afterward Eve Quinton commits suicide—an alcoholic, she never recovered from the disaster—Willie decides to exact his revenge upon Rudnick. Just before he does so, he falls in love with yet another Woodcombe, Marianne, and fathers a child. But he is forced to spend most of the rest of his life in lonely exile, while Marianne and their daughter Imelda are taken in by Willie's aging aunts at what is left of Kilneagh. Anglo-Irish himself, Trevor has for many years lived in England and only occasionally attempted to treat the people and the landscapes of his native land in his fiction. In his short story "Attracta," about an elderly Protestant schoolteacher in a village near Cork, he sketched out some of the same themes he developed more fully in Fools of Fortune. But in "Matilda's England" he shows how the atrocities of the past and their impact upon the present are by no means limited to a single time or place or series of events.

Two more recent works, The Silence in the Garden, and his novella, Nights at the Alexandra, tend to bear out this trend. Both are set in Ireland, where Trevor grew up, and both reflect the elegiac tone that has grown more pronounced in his later work. Nights at the Alexandra looks back to the boyhood of a 58-year-old bachelor and the strange infatuation he felt for a beautiful and rather mysterious woman, Frau Messinger, an Englishwoman married to a German and brought to live in Ireland as World War II began. Isolated from the rest of the townsfolk in their home, Cloverhill, Frau Messinger befriends Harry, the narrator, who quickly falls under her spell. To provide some entertainment for his wife as well as for the townsfolk, Herr Messinger decides to establish a cinema, but it takes a long time to build, and meanwhile Frau Messinger falls ill. She dies shortly after the cinema opens and Harry is employed by her husband to help run it. Eventually he inherits the movie house, which at first was extremely popular. As the customers gradually stop coming, he closes it, just as Cloverhill is closed up when Herr Messinger leaves after his wife's death, and Harry is left to look after the boarded windows and her grave. In the end, he refuses to take a good offer for the place from a business partnership that would turn it into a furniture store.

The Silence in the Garden is a more complex and fully developed novel that uses several narrative techniques, including flashbacks and diary entries. Futile and misdirected love are part of the story, but so are senseless violence, superstition, family pride, and war. The novel is related from several viewpoints: the spinster Sarah Pollexfen's, a poor relation who comes to work at Carriglas, first as a governess, later as a companion to family duenna, old Mrs. Rolleston; Tom, son of the parlor maid (later cook) Brigid, whose intended husband, the butler Linchy, was killed in a Black and Tan ambush intended for the Rolleston men, Lionel and John James; Villana, granddaughter of Mrs. Rolleston, whose engagement to Sarah's brother, Hugh, is suddenly and mysteriously broken off shortly after Linchy's murder. Other Rollestons and townsfolk populate the novel; for example, Colonel Rolleston, Mrs. Rolleston's son and Villana's father, killed at Passchendaele; his sons, Lionel and John James; Finnamore Balt, the pedantic and elderly lawyer who eventually marries Villana; Mrs. Moledy, a widow who runs a boarding house, where she carries on a long liaison with John James, her "king," and who puts in an uninvited and comical appearance at Villana and Finnamore's wedding at Carriglas.

But the real protagonist of the novel is Ireland and her long unhappy history of Protestant landowners and Catholic servants and tenant farmers. If during the Great Famine an earlier generation of Rollestons had taken pity and forgiven rents, the later generation is still largely despised. As an example, when a bridge is proposed and built between the mainland and the island on which Carriglas is situated, it is named after Cornelius Dowley, the man responsible for Linchy's death but otherwise regarded as a hero of the struggle against the British. Over the course of the present century, Carriglas falls into disuse and disrepair, as one by one the Rollestons die out or leave, and only Tom is left. He inherits what is left of the estate, the old house whose value lies mainly in the valuable lead of its roof, and a little land—too little to make farming profitable. Although his would-be fiance, Esmeralda Coyne, thinks it would make a good resort hotel, Tom shows little interest in her or her idea, and the novel ends, like Nights at the Alexandra, with Tom likely to remain a bachelor and the old house steadily disintegrating.

In Death in Summer, Trevor creates a suspenseful tale ripe with elegant language and a subtlety readers have come to expect. Thaddeus Davenant has buried his wife, Letitia, who died in a freak accident. Letitia was a compassionate soul, though her nature was lost on Thaddeus, who married the woman for her money. His true and only affection is for his baby. After many interviews with less-thanqualified nannies, he even agrees to let Letitia's mother move in rather than risk any mishaps with his child. Though Thaddeus is a chilly sort, he manages to gain the affection of Pettie, one of the many nannies rejected for a position in Thaddeus's home. Pettie seems to be the oppositional force to Thaddeus's wintry nature. Having been deprived of love as a girl, she is ravenous for it now with Thaddeus. But is her affection so strong that she would kidnap the one person Thaddeus does love? Trevor's literary teeth are sharper than ever, and he is one of the top heirs to the Anglo-Irish tradition in fiction that has provided a wealth of talent. Trevor's legacy, both in its penchant for human evil and his gentle, luscious prose, make him a writer of insight and remarkable compassion.

—Jay L. Halio, updated by Maureen Aitken

TROLLOPE, Joanna

Also writes as Caroline Harvey. Nationality: English. Born: England, 9 December 1943. Education: Oxford University, M.A. 1965. Family: Married David Roger William Potter in 1966; two daughters. Career: Associated with Foreign Office, London, 1965–67; worked as an English teacher for twelve years and in the children's clothing business. Lives in Hampshire, England. Awards: Historical Novel of the Year Award (Romantic Novelists Association), 1979; Elizabeth Goudge Historical Award, 1980. Agent: Georges Borchardt, Inc., 136 East 57th Street, New York, New York 10022, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Eliza Stanhope. London, Hutchinson, 1978; New York, Dutton, 1979. Parson Harding's Daughter. London, Hutchinson, 1979, as Mistaken Virtues. New York, Dutton, 1980.

Leaves from the Valley. New York, St. Martin's, 1980.

The Steps of the Sun. New York, St. Martin's, 1984.

The Taverners' Place. New York, St. Martin's, 1986.

A Village Affair. New York, Harper, 1989.

A Passionate Man. London, Bloomsbury, 1990.

The Rector's Wife. London, Bloomsbury, 1991; New York, Random House, 1994.

Trollope Omnibus: A Village Affair, A Passionate Man, The Rector's Wife. London, Bloomsbury, 1992.

The Men and the Girls. New York, Random House, 1992.

The Choir. London, Black Swan, 1992; New York, Random House, 1995.

A Spanish Lover. London, Bloomsbury, 1993; New York, Random House, 1997. The Best of Friends. London, Bloomsbury, 1995; New York, Viking, 1998.

Next of Kin. London, Bloomsbury, 1996.

Other People's Children. New York, Viking, 1999.

The Brass Dolphin (as Caroline Harvey). New York, Viking, 1999. Marrying the Mistress. New York, Viking, 2000.

Legacy of Love (as Caroline Harvey). New York, Viking, 2000.

Recordings

A Second Legacy, 1995. The City of Gems, 1995.

Other

Britannia's Daughters: Women of the British Empire. London, Hutchinson, 1983.

Introduction, An Illustrated Autobiography: Including How the 'Mastiffs' Went to Iceland by Anthony Trollope. Glouchester, England, A. Sutton, 1987; Wolfeboro, New Hampshire, A. Sutton, 1987.

Foreword, Life, Death and Art: The Medieval Stained Glass of Fairford Parish Church: A Multimedia Exploration, edited by Sarah Brown and Lindsay MacDonald. Stoud, Gloucestershire, England, Sutton Publishing, 1997.

Foreword, Starting from Glasgow by Rosemary Trollope. Stoud, Gloucestershire, England, Sutton Publishing, 1998.

* * *

A popular author best known for her novels exploring the complexities of modern life, Joanna Trollope began her published career as a writer of historical fiction. The action of Eliza Stanhope takes place on the battlefield of Waterloo, where its heroine assists the surgeons in tending wounded soldiers, among them her cavalry officer lover, and displays the author's knowledge of the period. In Parson Harding's Daughter, perhaps Trollope's best known historical work, Catherine Harding makes the journey to Calcutta to meet a prospective husband who turns out to be an alcoholic, and their failing marriage is further endangered when she falls in love with another man. These, and her later historical novels—Leaves from the Valley, City of Gems, The Steps of the Sun-are all clearly the work of an assured, capable writer and give the impression of being thoroughly researched. As "Caroline Harvey" Trollope has also ventured effectively into the family saga, and in Legacy of Love and Second Legacy she traces the lives of several generations of women from Victorian times to the present day. From the late 1980s onwards she has continued to produce historical novels together with her contemporary works. One of the most ambitious is The Taverners' Place, whose story spans seven generations of rural landowners from 1870 to 1939 in a single volume. More recently, The Brass Dolphin depicts the adventures of a young woman in Malta during World War II, and is projected as the first of a series of novels. A talented historical writer whose work has been compared with that of Georgette Heyer, Trollope's gifts in this field are undeniable, but one cannot help feeling that she is at her best in her contemporary novels.

The Choir established Trollope's reputation as a writer concerned with modern life and relationships. With it she broke fresh ground, taking her writing to a different level and establishing a recognizable individual style. Set in the cathedral city of Aldminster, the action centers on the power struggle between the Dean and local headmaster Alex Fry to decide the fate of the choir. The Dean is pressing for its disbandment as a means of raising funds to repair the cathedral, and the intrigues that follow are shown from multiple viewpoints. As well as the Dean and Fry, these include Helen Ashworth (who turns from a failing marriage to a new life with choirmaster Leo Beckford), her choirboy son Henry and her father-inlaw, Labour Party councillor Frank Ashworth. The cathedral city setting and ecclesiastical intrigue recall the Barchester chronicles of her Victorian ancestor Anthony Trollope, who would probably have enjoyed reading the novel. Trollope handles her maze of plotlines in a deft, memorable fashion, the love affair of Helen and Leo neatly intertwined with Henry's emergence as a "star" with a hit record that saves the choir, Frank's bitter struggles with the council, and the maneuvering in higher ecclesiastical circles. Eventual resolution falls short of the "happy ending," the saving of the choir counter-balanced by the losses suffered by other characters. Still one of her most impressive creations, The Choir reveals Trollope as an accomplished modern novelist with a voice of her own.

A Village Affair marks a departure from The Choir, with Trollope choosing a small rural community as the setting for the action. Her account of the love affair between two women—one a conventional middle-class housewife, the other an aggressive, outspoken "highflyer"—examines the relationship and its effect on the village with a perceptive restraint and confirms the author's reputation. A similar country village provides the background in The Rector's Wife, where Anna Bouverie (whose name brings Flaubert's Emma Bovary to mind) is faced by the need to find an identity of her own distinct from "the rector's wife" of the title. When her husband, disappointed in his bid for promotion, turns away from her to bury himself in parish duties, Anna makes a bid for independence that leads to their eventual separation. The Rector's Wife ranks with The Choir and A Village Affair and shows Trollope's skill in probing the complications of modern life. All three novels have been successfully televised in the United Kingdom.

In The Men and the Girls Trollope examines the relationships of two young women whose partners are both older men. Sudden career changes, illness, and a random accident bring disruption into their lives and lead to radical alteration and re-adjustment. As in The Choir, Trollope handles a large cast with skill and assurance, and her conclusion matches triumph with tragedy. The central characters of A Spanish Lover are twin sisters, the successful married mother and career woman Lizzie and unattached, unsatisfied Frances. The action of the novel brings a sudden reversal of roles as Lizzie encounters business and domestic problems while her sister finds fulfillment with the married Spanish lover of the title. Trollope describes a difficult situation with a light, sympathetic style that allows the characters to speak for themselves, and once again the story is resolved only by a painful adaptation to changed circumstances. The Best of Friends again shows her ability to control a large and varied group of characters, its story dealing with two families whose lives are disrupted when one couple separate, and the effect on children and other relatives. Trollope produces a sensitive portrayal of the nature of love and its impact on several different generations, and further confirms her mastery of the form. This ability to present the action from multiple viewpoints is also evident in Next of Kin, where a sequence of events in a remote farming community leads to a violent suicide and its aftermath. Trollope draws a stark picture of the farmer's life—its isolation, the unbearable economic pressures, and their effect on individual relationships. Her skill in handling the "cast of thousands' has never been better demonstrated than in Other People's Children, the plot of which includes a complex network of relationships centered on the role of the step-parent and step-child. Here, action is perceived at different times by the natural mother, the step-mother, a would-be stepmother, and the children of the families involved. Trollope presents her characters sympathetically, without hiding the shortcomings that render them more believable. Her latest modern novel, Marrying the Mistress, once more addresses the theme of beginning life afresh after earlier, failed relationships, and displays her familiar qualities.

In these contemporary works Trollope explores love and loss with a clear, unwavering but sensitive perception, and is at her most compelling.

—Geoff Sadler

TUOHY, Frank

Nationality: British. Born: John Francis Tuohy in Uckfield, Sussex, 2 May 1925. Education: Stowe School, Buckinghamshire; King's College, Cambridge, 1943-46, B.A. (honours) 1946. Career: Lecturer, Turku University, Finland, 1947-48; professor of English language and literature, University of São Paulo, Brazil, 1950-56; contract professor, Jagiellonian University, Krakow, Poland, 1958-60; visiting professor, Waseda University, Tokyo, 1964-67; visiting professor and writer-in-residence, Purdue University, Lafayette, Indiana, 1970-71, 1976, 1980; visiting professor, Rikkyo University, Tokyo, 1983-89. Awards: Katherine Mansfield-Menton prize, 1959; Society of Authors Travelling fellowship, 1963; James Tait Black Memorial prize, 1965; Faber Memorial prize, 1965; E.M. Forster award (U.S.A.), 1972; Heinemann award, 1979, for Live Bait; Bennett award (Hudson Review), 1994. D.Litt.: Purdue University 1987. Fellow, Royal Society of Literature, 1965. Agent: Peters Fraser and Dunlop, 503-504 The Chambers, Chelsea Harbour, Lots Road, London SW10 0XF. Address: Shatwell Cottage, Yarlington, near Wincanton, Somerset BA9 8DL, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Animal Game. London, Macmillan, and New York, Scribner, 1957.

The Warm Nights of January. London, Macmillan, 1960.

The Ice Saints. London, Macmillan, and New York, Scribner, 1964.

Short Stories

The Admiral and the Nuns with Other Stories. London, Macmillan, 1962; New York, Scribner, 1963.

Fingers in the Door. London, Macmillan, and New York, Scribner, 1970.

Live Bait and Other Stories. London, Macmillan, 1978; New York, Holt Rinehart, 1979.

The Collected Stories. London, Macmillan, and New York, Holt Rinehart, 1984.

Play

Television Play: The Japanese Student, 1973.

Other

Portugal. London, Thames and Hudson, and New York, Viking Press, 1970.

Yeats (biography). London, Macmillan, and New York, Macmillan, 1976; as Yeats: An Illustrated Biography, London, Herbert Press, 1991.

Critical Studies: "Foreign Bodies: The Fiction of Frank Tuohy" by John Millors, in London Magazine, n.s.18, February 1979.

Frank Tuohy comments:

Most of what I write seems to start off with the interaction between two cultures, modes of behaviour, ways of living, etc. Sometimes this confrontation is between a foreigner and an alien environment, sometimes between groups in that environment itself. For me, the sense of displacement, loss, anxiety which happens to people derives from the world outside them, in their relationships with that world. If I thought of it as starting inside, as being a part of the Self, I probably would not write at all.

* * *

The novels and short stories of Frank Tuohy are marked by a strong sense of social reality. They are set in various places—England, Brazil, Poland—and give one a vivid sense of the physical place: the climate, landscape, local customs. Against the backdrop of special place, the drama of the characters' lives unfolds. In the short stories interest focuses usually on intense personal encounters in which the protagonist is made to face some unpleasant decision or harsh truth about himself or people close to him. These stories, sharply etched and intensely though quietly dramatic, have no apparent underlying theme. It is the revelation itself, the exquisitely rendered but 'painful bite down on the rotten tooth of fact,' to borrow a phrase from Tuohy, that one is meant to savor.

In his novels and longer stories there are the same sharp awareness of external reality and savoring of unpleasant fact, but there is also clearly a discernible moral structure. The writer's sympathies are with those who suffer and respond, who are capable of loyalty and self-abnegation. His dislike is for characters who, protected by money, indulge their appetites at the expense of those socially or culturally inferior or morally more sensitive.

The protagonist of Tuohy's first novel, The Animal Game, is Robin Morris, a young Englishman working in São Paulo, who encounters the beautiful corrupt daughter of a Brazilian aristocrat. Morris is attracted to this woman but is saved at the end of the novel from a relationship which, one sees, would have been sterile, self-indulgent, and ultimately destructive. Tuohy's moral sense is even more fully involved in his second novel about Brazil, The Warm Nights of January, which also deals with self-indulgence and sexual corruption. The Ice Saints takes place in Poland, some time after the Stalinist "thaw." Here the protagonist, an attractive, pleasant, but inexperienced and pampered young English woman visits her married sister and Polish brother-in-law with the idea of rescuing their son from what she regards as a grim and depressing existence, and taking him back to England to live. Although we are at first allowed to identify with the young woman's point of view (the horrors of Polish life are vividly presented), we are made to see, finally, the moral superiority of the Polish brother-in-law whose human qualities outweigh his lack of polish and urbanity.

Tuohy's stories and novels are written in a style that is compressed and economical yet remarkably evocative. One has the immediate sense of a physical world vividly and objectively presented and yet one also feels, but unobtrusively, the authorial presence choosing and arranging for judgmental effect.

-W.J. Stuckey

TYLER, Anne

Nationality: American. Born: Minneapolis, Minnesota, 25 October 1941. Education: Duke University, Durham, North Carolina, 1958–61, B.A. 1961; Columbia University, New York, 1961–62. Family: Married Taghi Modarressi in 1963 (deceased 1997); two daughters. Career: Russian bibliographer, Duke University Library, 1962–63; assistant to the librarian, McGill University Law Library, Montreal, 1964–65. Awards: American Academy award, 1977; Janet Kafka prize, 1981; PEN Faulkner award, 1983; National Book Critics Circle award, 1986; Pulitzer prize, 1989. Agent: Russell and Volkening Inc., 50 West 29th Street, New York, New York 10001. Address: 222 Tunbridge Road, Baltimore, Maryland 21212, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

If Morning Ever Comes. New York, Knopf, 1964; London, Chatto and Windus, 1965.

The Tin Can Tree. New York, Knopf, 1965; London, Macmillan, 1966.

A Slipping-Down Life. New York, Knopf, 1970; London, Severn House, 1983.

The Clock Winder. New York, Knopf, 1972; London, Chatto and Windus, 1973.

Celestial Navigation. New York, Knopf, 1974; London, Chatto and Windus, 1975.

Searching for Caleb. New York, Knopf, and London, Chatto and Windus, 1976.

Earthly Possessions. New York, Knopf, and London, Chatto and Windus, 1977.

Morgan's Passing. New York, Knopf, and London, Chatto and Windus, 1980.

Dinner at the Homesick Restaurant. New York, Knopf, and London, Chatto and Windus, 1982.

The Accidental Tourist. New York, Knopf, and London, Chatto and Windus, 1985.

Breathing Lessons. New York, Knopf, 1988; London, Chatto and Windus, 1989.

Saint Maybe. New York, Knopf, and London, Chatto and Windus, 1991

Ladder of Years. New York, Knopf, 1995.

A Patchwork Planet. New York, Knopf, 1998.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "I Play Kings," in Seventeen (New York), August 1963.
- "Street of Bugles," in Saturday Evening Post (Philadelphia), 30 November 1963.
- "Nobody Answers the Door," in Antioch Review (Yellow Springs, Ohio), Fall 1964.
- "I'm Not Going to Ask You Again," in Harper's (New York), September 1965.
- "Everything But Roses," in Reporter (New York), 23 September 1965.
- "As the Earth Gets Old," in New Yorker, 29 October 1966.
- "Feather Behind the Rock," in New Yorker, 12 August 1967.
- "Flaw in the Crust of the Earth," in Reporter (New York), 2 November 1967.
- "Common Courtesies," in McCall's (New York), June 1968.
- "With All Flags Flying," in Redbook (New York), June 1971.
- "Bride in the Boatyard," in McCall's (New York), June 1972.
- "Respect," in Mademoiselle (New York), June 1972.
- "Misstep of the Mind," in Seventeen (New York), October 1972.
- "Knack for Languages," in New Yorker, 13 January 1975.
- "Some Sign That I Ever Made You Happy," in McCall's (New York), October 1975.
- "Your Place Is Empty," in New Yorker, 22 November 1976.
- "Holding Things Together," in New Yorker, 24 January 1977.
- "Average Waves in Unprotected Waters," in New Yorker, 28 February 1977.
- "Foot-Footing On," in Mademoiselle (New York), November 1977.
- "The Geologist's Maid," in Stories of the Modern South, edited by Ben Forkner and Patrick Samway. New York, Penguin, 1981.
- "Laps," in Parents' Magazine (New York), August 1981.
- "The Country Cook," in Harper's (New York), March 1982.
- "Teenage Wasteland," in The Editors' Choice 1, edited by George E. Murphy, Jr. New York, Bantam, 1985.
- "Rerun," in New Yorker, 4 July 1988.
- "A Street of Bugles," in Saturday Evening Post (Indianapolis), July-August 1989.
- "A Woman Like a Fieldstone House," in Louder than Words, edited by William Shore. New York, Vintage, 1989.

Other

Tumble Tower (for children). New York, Orchard, 1993.

Editor, with Shannon Ravenel, The Best American Short Stories 1983. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1983; as The Year's Best American Short Stories, London, Severn House, 1984.

Editor, with Shannon Ravenel, Best of the South: From Ten Years of New Stories from the South. Chapel Hill, North Carolina, Algonquin Books of Chapel Hill, 1996.

*

Film Adaptations: The Accidental Tourist, 1988.

Bibliography: Anne Tyler: A Bio-Bibliography by Robert W. Croft, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1995.

Critical Studies: Art and the Accidental in Anne Tyler by Joseph C. Voelker, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1989; The Temporal Horizon: A Study of the Theme of Time in Anne Tyler's Major Novels by Karin Linton, Uppsala, Sweden, Studia Anglistica, 1989; The Fiction of Anne Tyler edited by C. Ralph Stephens, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1990; Understanding Anne Tyler by Alice Hall Petty, Columbia, University of South Carolina Press, 1990; Anne Tyler as Novelist, edited by Dale Salwak, Iowa City, University of Iowa Press, 1994; Moving On: The Heroines of Shirley Ann Grau, Anne Tyler, and Gail Godwin by Susan S. Kissel, Bowling Green, Ohio, Bowling Green State University Popular Press, 1996; An Anne Tyler Companion by Robert W. Croft, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1998; Anne Tyler: A Critical Companion by Paul Bail, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1998.

* * *

Anne Tyler's novels do not create cosmic waves but have quietly and carefully, for over a third of a century, attempted to illustrate the struggle between asserting one's individual identity versus functioning in a role within the American middle-class family. Perhaps it is because Tyler seems to place such importance on the role of family or because her settings stay primarily around the city and suburbs of Baltimore, Maryland, or perhaps critics do not see her pushing the boundaries enough. In any case, despite a Pulitzer Prize in 1989 for Breathing Lessons and a National Book Critics Circle Award, Tyler's work is chronically appreciated but not heralded by critics. Nevertheless, she is a prolific and popular writer. Her tendency to use humor to create colorful characters and place them into fairly ordinary circumstances has gained her a loyal readership and prompted comparisons to Eudora Welty, an American writer whose work she claims as an influence.

In Morgan's Passing, for instance, Morgan appears to be a well-adjusted family man. Inside, however, we discover he is struggling with what he sees as the madhouse he lives in—the goings on of his seven daughters and their friends are driving him over the edge. He attempts to cope through the use of costume and impersonation. Alternately, he becomes a tugboat captain, doctor, politician, clerk at a fish market, priest, and others. Morgan's home is not his haven, so he has to find shelter at his office at Cullen Hardware, and this refuge of changing identities within the world of work is reminiscent of Walter Mitty.

The quirky character in Breathing Lessons is Junie, Ira's sister. Like Jeremy in Celestial Navigation, Junie does not like to leave home. Ira's wife, Maggie, decides to help her break out of her shell by performing a makeover routine on her, from makeup to clothes. Like Morgan, Junie seems to draw courage from this disguised identity in the outside world. Unlike Morgan, however, Junie will only leave home with Ira at her side because as family, he represents a part of home going out with her.

In Dinner at the Homesick Restaurant, Ezra tries to create a family atmosphere at the restaurant that he feels is missing at home. In this novel, again there is a juxtaposition of the individual, the family, and the outside world of work and commerce. Tyler admits and demonstrates that the three do not always easily cohabit. In The Accidental Tourist, it takes another eccentric character, Muriel Pritchett, the dog trainer, to bring Macon Leary out of his sheltered world in which traveling is simply for business, not pleasure.

Delia Grinstead, in Ladder of Years, leaves her sheltered life in a much different way. If readers suspect Tyler is only capable of writing in a her self-established pattern, this novel marks a shift from the dependence on the quirky character device to an exploration of every family members' fantasy—what if I just walked right out that door and never came back? While at the beach, that is just what forty-year-old Delia does, finally settling in a small town in Delaware to find the self she never knew by living all of her adult life in the same house in which she grew up. As Tyler matures, so does her writing, and one wonders whether she may be one of the best chroniclers of the problems women born in mid-twentieth century America and living in the domestic sphere face in later life.

With A Patchwork Planet, Tyler returned to her familiar pattern, however. This time, she attempts to write from the point of view of Barnaby Gaitlin, a thirty-year-old loser who takes care of eccentric old people. In this novel, it is not so much a character from within a family doing the searching as it is a character without family searching for a home. While one wishes Tyler would venture out from her own protective sphere of character patterns, one cannot help but praise her for taking advantage of exploring what seems like every possible angle on the struggles of the individual inside and outside the shelter of home and family. Perhaps with the perspective of an elder spokesperson in the years ahead, she will offer new insights that only someone who has worked on a subject for many years can contribute to our understanding of this very ordinary, but vital aspect of the human condition.

-Connie Ann Kirk

U

UNSWORTH, Barry (Forster)

Nationality: British. Born: Durham, England, 10 August 1930. Education: University of Manchester, B.A. (with honors in English) 1951. Military Service: British Army, Royal Corps of Signals, 1951–53: second lieutenant. Family: 1) married Valerie Moor, 1959 (marriage dissolved, 1991) three daughters; 2) Aira Pohjanvaara-Buffa, 1992. Career: Lecturer in English, Norwood Technical College, 1960 and 1963–65; lecturer in English for British Council, University of Athens, Greece, 1960–63. Since 1965 lecturer in English for British Council, University of Istanbul, Turkey. Awards: Royal Society of Literature-Heinemann award for literature, 1974, for Mooncranker's Gift; Booker prize, 1992, for Sacred Hunger. Address: c/o Hamish Hamilton, 22 Wright's Lane, London W8 5TZ, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Partnership. London, Hutchinson, 1966.

The Greeks Have a Word for It. London, Hutchinson, 1967.

The Hide. London, Gollancz, 1970.

Mooncranker's Gift. London, Allen, 1973; New York, Houghton Mifflin, 1974.

The Big Day. London, Michael Joseph, 1976; New York, Mason/Charter, 1977.

Pascali's Island. London, Michael Joseph; as The Idol Hunter, New York, Simon and Schuster, 1980.

The Rage of the Vulture. London, Granada, 1982; New York, Houghton Mifflin, 1983.

Stone Virgin. London, Hamilton, 1985; New York, Houghton Mifflin, 1986.

Sugar and Rum. London, Hamilton, 1988.

Sacred Hunger. London, Hamilton, and New York, Doubleday, 1992.

Morality Play. New York, N.A. Talese, 1995.

After Hannibal. New York, N.A. Talese, 1997.

Losing Nelson. New York, N.A. Talese, 1999.

Other

The Student's Book of English: A Complete Coursebook and Grammar to Advanced Intermediate Level, with John Lennox Cook and Amorey Gethin. Oxford, Blackwell, 1981.

Novels and Novelists in the 1990's. London, Random House, 1993.

* * *

Barry Unsworth's fiction offers powerful and closely observed explorations of human relationships in which desire is entangled with exploitation and with potential, and sometimes actual, violence. In his first novel, The Partnership, the association of two business partners is complicated and eventually destroyed by the repressed homoerotic attraction that one of them has for the other, and in The Hide, a semiarticulate gardener is pressured by his dominating friend into arranging the rape of a young woman. Both of these early works are set in England in modern times, and their close focus on the relationships they portray largely excludes explicit engagement with wider concerns; but in Unsworth's most characteristic work, such relationships are placed in broader geographical, political, and historical contexts. Pascali's Island and The Rage of the Vulture go back to the last throes of the Ottoman Empire in 1908; Stone Virgin takes place in Venice, partly in the 15th century, partly in the 18th century, and partly in the later 20th century; Sacred Hunger, set in the 18th century, moves from the British port of Liverpool to a slave ship, the Guinea Coast, and Florida; Morality Play returns to northeast England in the 14th century, in a bitter time of plague, famine, poverty, and anarchy; the location of After Hannibal is the idyllic landscape of modern Umbria in Italy, but, as the novel's title indicates, we are reminded of its bloody past, when Hannibal massacred the Roman army or the homicidal Baglioni family ruled in the Renaissance; the narrator of Losing Nelson is a late 20th-century biographer who finds it hard to come to terms with the fact that his hero, Admiral Lord Horatio Nelson, tricked the Neapolitan Jacobean rebels in 1799 and sent them to their deaths.

A recurrent concern of Unsworth's novels is the link between the relationships of his characters and the artifacts and representations that they make, display, observe, exchange, or desire. In The Partnership, for example, the pixies turned out by one of the partners, Foley, provide the staple of the business, whereas the seraphs and cherubs he also makes represent his desire for independence and finally become the object of his partner's violence. Pascali's Island sets up a complex relationship between a marble head of a woman that is fraudulently claimed to have been found on an archaeological site, a bronze male statue, which is actually buried on the site and provokes a fatal attempt at theft, and a wax model of a saint that topples down during the ceremony of his Assumption. The central motif of Stone Virgin is a carved Venetian Madonna that is first fashioned by Girolamo, a Piedmontese stonecutter; is subsequently discovered after three hundred years by a rake called Ziani; and finally, in 1972, falls into the hands of an English conservation expert, Simon Raikes. The ambiguity of the artifact—as both a product and a denial of mortality—is forcefully encapsulated in Mooncranker's Gift, where the "gift" of the title is a bandaged effigy of the crucified Christ that is in fact made of sausage meat and turns rotten and stinking. Artifacts take on a range of symbolic functions in Unsworth's novels, and they link up with his other concerns, such as voyeurism, in The Hide, or the commodification of human beings, in Sacred Hunger. After Hannibal examines the way in which houses may become objects of desire, focusing on a group of people who come from the United Kingdom, the United States, and Germany to buy a house in Umbria-as Unsworth himself did after Sacred Hunger won the Booker Prize, the UK's best known literary award. The dream of a house, one of the characters reflects, is unlike any other dream of ownership because the dream of a way of life goes with it.

Theatrical representation is a key theme of Morality Play, as its title suggests. Unsworth's tale of a group of strolling players in medieval England provides a fascinating recreation of the stagecraft and theatrical philosophy of the Middle Ages and dramatizes the question of the relationship between art and life when the players decide, in order to try to increase their audience, to re-enact the recent murder of a twelve-year-old boy, for which a local woman is soon to be executed. The divide between representation and reality gives way as the woman's guilt is called into question and the actors don masks to play out a real event. On and off stage, things are not what they appear to be. Losing Nelson focuses on biographical and historical representation, on its protagonist's attempt to recreate and exculpate a truly heroic Nelson with whom he strongly identifies: the novel sharply examines the relationship between the truths that we may desire from history and biography and the truths which they may actually yield.

At his best, Unsworth has a precise, nuanced, and rhythmically accomplished style that enables him to register psychological complexity sensitively and evocatively to render time and place. Some of his novels, such as The Greeks Have a Word for It, employ an omniscient narrator, allowing for movement between the minds of different characters for dramatic effect; in other novels, for instance Pascali's Island, the story is told in the first person, whereas Stone Virgin combines third-person with some first-person narration. The novels are skillfully structured to maintain narrative interest—for example, Morality Play is, among other things, a compulsively readable mystery tale—and to provide a range of perspectives on their themes and symbols.

Whether he writes of the past or present, Unsworth demonstrates that he has the realist novelist's ability to bring places, people, and situations before us in a convincing and immediate way. But he also demonstrates a postmodernist awareness of the way in which fictionand, to some extent, history and biography—construct the reality they supposedly convey. Sugar and Rum, which portrays a novelist who wants to write a novel about the Liverpool slave trade but is suffering from writer's block, provides a kind of metafictional commentary on the book that follows it, Sacred Hunger. Despite its vivid medieval detail, Morality Play, like some of William Golding's novels, can be read as a kind of fable for the present. Losing Nelson explores the obsessions and compulsions that may enter into the writing of historical biography. Unsworth has made a major contribution to reviving the historical novel as a serious form both by writing powerful historical novels but also by raising questions, in his fiction, about how and why we represent the past. He has also, in both his historical and present-day fictions, shown the need to engage with the past in order adequately to portray and understand the present; for example, Sacred Hunger confronts an area of Britain's imperial past, its involvement with the slave trade, which is a deeply repressed but still potent subtext in contemporary British debates about immigration and national identity. Unsworth has become an increasingly accomplished and ambitious novelist, whose work constitutes an exciting and wide-ranging exploration of human complexity in the past and present.

-Nicolas Tredell

UPDIKE, John (Hoyer)

Nationality: American. Born in Shillington, Pennsylvania, 18 March 1932. Educated at public schools in Shillington; Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, A.B. (summa cum laude) 1954; Ruskin School of Drawing and Fine Arts, Oxford (Knox fellow), 1954–55.

Married 1) Mary Pennington in 1953 (marriage dissolved), two daughters and two sons; 2) Martha Bernhard in 1977. Career:staff reporter, New Yorker, 1955–57. Recipient: Guggenheim fellowship, 1959; Rosenthal award, 1960; National Book award, 1964; O. Henry award, 1966; Foreign Book prize (France), 1966; New England Poetry Club Golden Rose, 1979, MacDowell medal, 1981; Pulitzer prize, 1982, 1991; American Book award, 1982; National Book Critics Circle award, for fiction, 1982, 1991, for criticism, 1982; Union League Club Abraham Lincoln award, 1982; National Arts Club Medal of Honor, 1984; PEN/Faulkner award, 1988; National Medal of the Arts, 1989; Pulitzer Prize, 1991; National Book Critics Circle award, 1991; Harvard Arts medal, 1998; National Book Foundation award, Lifetime Achievement, 1998. Member, American Academy, 1976. Address: Beverly Farms, Beverly, Massachusetts 01915, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Poorhouse Fair. New York, Knopf, and London, Gollancz, 1959 Rabbit, Run. New York, Knopf, 1960; London, Deutsch, 1961 The Centaur. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1963. Of the Farm. New York, Knopf, 1965.

Couples. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1968 Rabbit Redux. New York, Knopf, 1971; London, Deutsch, 1972. A Month of Sundays. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1975.

1977.

The Coup. New York, Knopf, 1978; London, Deutsch, 1979.

Rabbit Is Rich. New York, Knopf, 1981; London, Deutsch, 1982.

The Witches of Eastwick. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1984.

Marry Me: A Romance. New York, Knopf, 1976; London, Deutsch,

Roger's Version. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1986. S. New York, Knopf, and London Deutsch, 1988.

Rabbit at Rest. New York, Knopf, 1990; London, Deutsch, 1991.Memories of the Ford Administration. New York, Knopf, 1992;London, Hamish Hamilton, 1993.

Brazil. New York, Knopf, and London, Hamish Hamilton, 1994. Rabbit Angstrom: A Tetralogy. New York, Knopf, 1995. In the Beauty of the Lilies. New York, Knopf, 1996. Toward the End of Time. New York, Knopf, 1997. Bech at Bay: A Quasi-novel. New York, Knopf, 1998. Gertrude and Claudius. New York, Knopf, 2000.

Short Stories

The Same Door. New York, Knopf, 1959; London, Deutsch, 1962.Pigeon Feathers and Other Stories. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1962.

Olinger Stories: A Selection. New York, Knopf, 1964.
The Music School. New York, Knopf, 1966; London, Deutsch, 1967.
Penguin Modern Stories 2, with others. London, Penguin, 1969.
Bech: A Book. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1970.
The Indian. Marvin, South Dakota, Blue Cloud Abbey, 1971.
Museums and Women and Other Stories. New York, Knopf, 1972; London, Deutsch, 1973.

Warm Wine: An Idyll. New York, Albondocani Press, 1973.

Couples: A Short Story. Cambridge, Massachusetts, Halty Ferguson, 1976.

Too Far to Go: The Maples Stories. New York, Knopf, 1979; London, Deutsch, 1980.

Three Illuminations in the Life of an American Author. New York, Targ, 1979.

The Chaste Planet. Worcester, Massachusetts, Metacom Press, 1980. The Beloved. Nothridge, California, Lord John Press, 1982.

Bech Is Back. New York, Knopf, 1982; London, Deutsch, 1982.

Getting Older. Helsinki, Eurographica, 1985.

Going Abroad. Helsinki, Eurographica, 1987

Trust Me. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1987.

The Afterlife. Leamington, Warwickshire, Sixth Chamber Press, 1987.

Baby's First Step. Huntington Beach, California, Cahill, 1993.

The Afterlife and Other Stories. New York, Knopf, and London, Hamish Hamilton, 1994.

Licks of Love: Short Stories and a Sequel, "Rabbit Remembered." New York, Knopf, 2000.

Uncollected Short Stories

"Morocco," in Atlantic (Boston), November 1979.

Plays

Three Tests from Early Ipswich: A Pageant. Ipswich, Massachusetts, 17th Century Day Committee, 1968.

Buchanan Dying. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1974.

Verse

The Carpentered Hen and Other Tame Creatures. New York, Harper, 1958; as Hoping for a Hoopoe, London, Gollancz, 1959.

Telephone Poles and Other Poems. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1963.

Verse. New York, Fawcett, 1965.

Dogs Death. Cambridge, Massachusetts, Lowell House, 1965.

The Angels. Pensacola, Florida, King and Queen Press, 1968.

Bath after Sailing. Monroe, Connecticut, Pendulum Press, 1968.

Midpoint and Other Poems. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1969.

Seventy Poems. London, Penguin, 1972.

Five Poems. Cleveland Bits Press, 1980.

Six Poems. New York, Aloe, 1973.

Query. New York, Albondocani Press, 1974.

Cunts (Upon Receiving the Swingers Life Club Memberships Solicitation). New York, Hallman, 1974.

Tossing and Turning. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1977. Sixteen Sonnets. Cambridge, Massachusetts, Halty Ferguson, 1979. An Oddly Lovely Day Alone. Richmond, Virginia, Waves Press, 1979.

Spring Trio. Winston-Salem, North Carolina, Palaemon Press, 1982. Jester's Dozen. Northridge, California, Lord John Press, 1984.

Facing Nature. New York, Knopf, 1985; London, Deutsch, 1986.

A Pear Like a Potato. Northridge, California, Santa Susana Press, 1986.

Two Sonnets. Austin, Texas, Wind River Press, 1987.

Collected Poems, 1953–1993. New York, Knopf, and London, Hamish Hamilton, 1993.

Other

The Magic Flute (for children), with Warren Chappell. New York, Knopf, 1962.

The Ring (for children), with Warren Chappell. New York, Knopf, 1964.

Assorted Prose. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1965. A Child's Calendar. New York, Knopf, 1965.

On Meeting Authors. Newburyport, Massachusetts, Wickford Press, 1968.

Bottom's Dream: Adapted from William Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Nights Dream" (for children). New York, Knopf, 1969.

A Good Place. New York, Aloe, 1973.

Picked-Up Pieces. New York, Knopf, 1975; London, Deutsch, 1976.Hub Fans Bid Kid Adieu. Northridge, California, Lord John Press, 1977.

Talk from the Fifties. Northridge, California, Lord John Press, 1979. Ego and Art in Walt Whitman. New York, Targ, 1980.

People One Knows: Interviews with Insufficiently Famous Americans. Northridge, California, Lord John Press, 1980.

Invasion of the Book Envelopes. Concord, New Hampshire, Ewert, 1981.

Hawthorne's Creed. New York, Targ, 1981.

Hugging the Shore: Essays and Criticism. New York, Knopf, 1983; London, Deutsch, 1984.

Confessions of a Wild Bore (essay). Newton, Iowa, Tamazunchale Press, 1984.

Emersonianism (lecture). Cleveland, Bits Press, 1984.

The Art of Adding and the Art of Taking Away: Selections from John Updike's Manuscripts, edited by Elizabeth A. Falsey. Cambridge, Massachusetts, Harvard College Library, 1987.

Self-Consciousness: Memoirs. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1989.

Just Looking: Essays on Art. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1989.

Odd Jobs: Essays and Criticism. New York, Knopf, and London, Deutsch, 1991.

Concerts at Castle Hill. Northridge, California, Lord John Press, 1993.

The Twelve Terrors of Christmas. New York, Gotham Book Mart, 1993

Golf Dreams: Writings on Golf, drawings by Paul Szep. New York, Knopf, 1996.

A & P, edited by Wendy Perkins. Fort Worth, Texas, Harcourt Brace College Publishers, 1998.

More Matter: Essays and Criticism. New York, Knopf, 1999.

Editor, Pens and Needles, by David Levine. Boston, Gambit, 1970.

Editor, with Shannon Ravenel, The Best American Short Stories 1984. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1984; as The Year's Best American Short Stories, London, Severn House, 1985.

Editor, A Century of Arts and Letters: The History of the National Institute of Arts and Letters and the American Academy of Arts and Letters as Told, Decade by Decade, by Eleven Members. New York, Columbia University Press, 1998.

*

Bibliography: John Updike: A Bibliography by C. Clarke Taylor, Kent, Ohio, Kent State University Press, 1968; An Annotated Bibliography of John Updike Criticism 1967–1973, and a Checklist of His Works by Michael A. Olivas, New York, Garland, 1975; John Updike: A Comprehensive Bibliography with Selected Annotations by Elizabeth A. Gearhart, Norwood, Pennsylvania, Norwood Editions, 1978; John Updike: A Bibliography, 1967–1993, compiled by Jack De Bellis, foreword by John Updike, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1994.

Manuscript Collection: Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Critical Studies: interviews in Life (New York), 4 November 1966, Paris Review, Winter 1968, and New York Times Book Review, 10 April 1977; John Updike by Charles T. Samuels, Minneapolis, University of Minnesota Press, 1969; The Elements of John Updike by Alice and Kenneth Hamilton, Grand Rapids, Michigan, Eerdmans, 1970; Pastoral and Anti-Pastoral Elements in John Updike's Fiction by Larry E. Taylor, Carbondale, Southern Illinois University Press, 1971; John Updike: Yea Sayings by Rachael C. Burchard, Carbondale, Southern Illinois University Press, 1971; John Updike by Robert Detweiler, New York, Twayne, 1972, revised edition, 1984; Rainstorms and Fire: Ritual in the Novels of John Updike by Edward P. Vargo, Port Washington, New York, Kennikat Press, 1973; Fighters and Lovers: Theme in the Novels of John Updike by Joyce B. Markle, New York, New York University Press, 1973; John Updike: A Collection of Critical Essays by Suzanne H. Uphaus, New York, Ungar, 1980; The Other John Updike: Poems/Short Stories/Prose/ Play, 1981, and John Updike's Novels, 1984, both by Donald J. Greiner, Athens, Ohio University Press; John Updike's Images of America by Philip H. Vaughan, Reseda, California, Mojave, 1981; Married Men and Magic Tricks: John Updike's Erotic Heroes by Elizabeth Tallent, Berkeley, California, Creative Arts, 1982; Critical Essays on John Updike edited by William R. Macnaughton, Boston, Hall, 1982; John Updike by Judie Newman, London, Macmillan, 1988; Conversations with John Updike edited by James Plath, Jackson, Mississippi, University Press, 1994; John Updike Revisited by James A. Schiff, New York, Twayne Publishers, 1998; John Updike and Religion: The Sense of the Sacred and The Motions of Grace, edited by James Yerkes, Grand Rapids, Michigan, W.B. Eerdmans, 1999; The John Updike Encyclopedia by Jack De Bellis, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 2000; John Updike, edited by Harold Bloom, Philadelphia, Chelsea House Publishers, 2000.

John Updike comments:

In over thirty years as a professional writer I have tried to give my experience of life imaginative embodiment in novels, short stories, and poems. Art is, as I understand it, reality passed through a human mind, and this secondary creation remains for me unfailingly interesting and challenging.

* * *

For over forty years, Updike has been regularly producing his novels about small town and suburban middle class Americans—in short, ordinary people—and their messy domestic lives. He writes with relish, caring, and precision of their marriages and remarriages, sexual trysts, and their struggles to make sense of themselves. Births, deaths, infidelities, and failures fill his pages. Violence, blessedly, is rarely present. Most often, the books chart the way his protagonists adjust their dreams to more nearly match reality. What mark, he wonders, do such people's lives finally make? He is adept at describing the day-to-day existence of suburban bridge players who cultivate their roses, trim their hedges, feed their faces, tidy their homes, maintain contact with children and grandchildren and "socioeconomically identical acquaintances," and travel to Florida and to Maine in suitable seasons, to paraphrase Updike. He also captures specific time periods in our history: the 1950s, the cold war, the Eisenhower and Kennedy eras, and Truman's America. Allegorically, the Nixon term in the White House lies behind The Coup, a novel set in Africa. Buchanan's aborted presidency and the Ford administration have also been treated. He adopts various voices, writing from a woman's perspective as well as a man's; using present tense to tell some tales; writing at once from the perspective of a Protestant, exbasketball star, Harry Angstrom, living in rural Pennsylvania, while at other times employing the persona of his alter-ego, Henry Bech, unmarried, childless, and Jewish, suffering from writer's block and settled in Manhattan.

In his first novel, The Poorhouse Fair, he took an old people's home as his subject and experimented with the form of the anti-novel. At the time, readers were startled that such a young man would write so knowingly about the old people, his grandfather's generation. In a sense, his career has come full circle. In 1997 he published Toward the End of Time, where he assumes the voice of Ben Turnbull, a sixtysix year old, twice married, retired investment counselor, living in Massachusetts in the year 2020. America has been reduced to a commonwealth, complete with new currency, brought about by a Sino-American Conflict that dissolved the government, collapsed the national economy, decimated the population, and resulted in social chaos. Only the criminal elements have the resources left to rule. Ben's journal recounts the happenings of a difficult year when he is preoccupied by sex and aging, only to find he has prostate cancer. He suffers the indignities and pain of surgery and the consequent incontinence and impotence that follow. He revisits his past, his life with his first wife, Perdita, and with his second wife, the ravishing, strong-willed, dynamic, Gloria, who is determined to have him kill the deer that are ruining her roses, yew bushes, and the euonymus hedge over by the driveway. There are blank spots in his thinking and his journal captures his daily life, often leaving the reader uncertain whether the facts he recounts are true or imagined. In typical Updike form, the novelist fleshes out Ben's mind, recounting his fascination with recent scientific theories about parallel universes that have branched from this moment of measurement. Often he seems to enter one or another of these other "many worlds." Ben also ruminates on Neanderthal man, the Biblical past, St. Paul and his crisis theology, his own personal ancestry, and looks forward into future time.

True also to form, Updike offers an unblinking account of the processes of aging and Ben's numerous infirmities, capturing his fears and joys, the toll age exacts and the hopes it awakens. Ben insists that his wife is worried about whether she or he will die first, priming him with vitamins by day while by night, dreaming of his death. Later he marvels at her loyalty and bravery in the face of his illness, at the same time he refuses to minimize his discomforts—his "rumbling, spurting bowels" and his diapers—or her level-headed, self-centered and self-protective ways. His olfactory sense is heightened—all stinks and messes are minutely described. He fears for the sanity of his mind and wonders how much he has forgotten. In one of his fantasies that seems to be real, he purchases the favors of a young prostitute, relishing the numerous ways he can take her, the cunnilingus and fellatio they can practice, his desire to slap her too decisively in the midst of sex, the pleasure he takes in talking crudely to her, addressing her as his "bitch," "whore," and "working-class doxy," but bringing her into his house as his so-called "wife" during a period of time when he claims that his wife has disappeared and he seems uncertain whether he has shot her in his attempt to get rid of the deer, or whether she is simply misplaced or has left him.

This novel and his latest book, Gertrude and Claudius, compare with other "last works" of such great writers as Shakespeare or Yeats in that the vision shifts, mellows, while the writer employs new forms and an altered style to reflect the wisdom and insights that come with age. Shakespeare completed his life with three "last plays," Cymbeline, The Winter's Tale, and The Tempest. In each, he abandons the form of the tragedy, replacing it with romance. In The Winter's Tale the central action of an entire tragedy is compressed into the opening act. Later, sixteen years passes, a child grows up, a statue comes to life, and Leontes, the jealous king of the first act regains a wife. In later poetry of Yeats, the poet continues his celebration of the world of artifice and Byzantium, but acknowledges in "The Circus Animals" Desertion" that all inspiration starts in "the foul rag-and-bone shop of the heart." Updike also relies more on romance and myth in his latest novels while at the same time reveling in the powers of the body and sex and probing philosophical questions about the nature of life, time, and religion. Even as the physical body visibly decays, the protagonist's hunger is not only undiminished, it is heightened, and the spirit of experimentation and a craving for plenty is abundant. Many of the passages explicitly describing sex recall the excesses of sexuality expressed in "The Wild Old Wicked Man" and other late poems by Yeats. The bizarre grotesqueries that also figure in Toward the End of Time have an oddness akin to the monstrous scene in Cymbeline where Imogen cradles the headless body of Cloten in her arms, mistaking him for her beloved Posthumous. The manner in which Updike condenses material that earlier had engrossed him, and lingers on descriptive passages of a bucolic texture while taking extreme liberties with time also make the comparison apt.

Updike has often drawn on myth and fairy tales in his novels and reworked the stories of others. The St. Stephen story figures prominently in The Poorhouse Fair and reappears in Toward the End of Time. The Centaur uses the Chiron version of the Hercules myth, alternately telling the tale of George Caldwell, a teacher and the Chiron figure, and the Centaur. The subject of Rabbit, Run, the first novel in his tetralogy, is based on Beatrix Potter's Tale of Peter Rabbit. In The Witches of Eastwick, Updike looks at the lives of three modern day divorcées, seeing the similarities between their predicament and those of witches and their covens. Darryl Van Horne is the devil in this work. Therefore, it is not unexpected to find him theorizing in Toward the End of Time that several worlds and different time periods may exist simultaneously and offering glimpses into these alternate worlds or earlier times.

His habit of rewriting stories from the perspectives of different characters is also one of his trademarks. He has written a trilogy of novels based on Nathaniel Hawthorne's, The Scarlet Letter. In Updike's case, A Month of Sundays tells the story of the adulterous minister, Marshfield, from his point of view and offers a parody of the triangle in Hawthorne's tale; in Roger's Version we are given the betrayed husband's perspective and Updike explores the theme of the unknowability of God; S. completes the trilogy providing the view of the adulterous woman, Hawthorne's Hester Prynne.

His decision to write a novel about the lives of Gertrude, Claudius, Hamlet Senior, and Hamlet immediately prior to where the action opens in Shakespeare's play is almost expected. I should hasten to mention that the central figures appear under different names in different parts of the book, a topic that bears further comment later.

Updike has long marveled at the talents of James Joyce, understanding his need to write his own variant of Shakespeare's story and the Hamlet material in his masterwork, Ulysses. Joyce uses Stephen to spin his erudite explanation of Shakespeare's relationship to his creations, both the real children he bore in life and those he invented in his writings. He is familiar with Tom Stoppard's Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead, also based on the Hamlet legend. Updike, ever the researcher and inventive in the interests of his art, fashions his novel in three parts and presents Gertrude's story. In Part I of his book, he turns to a late-twelfth-century Latin account of the ancient Hamlet legend in Historia Danica of Saxo Grammaticus that was first printed in Paris in 1514. In Part II, he uses alternate spellings of the central figures' names, drawing on another version of the Saxo tale, François de Belleforest's, Histoires tragiques, that appeared prior to Shakespeare's Hamlet and was republished in English in 1608, probably as a result of the popularity of Shakespeare's play. In Part III, he concludes his novel, drawing on the so-called Ur-Hamlet, generally attributed to Thomas Kyd that was acquired by Shakespeare's company and served as the source of his play. Updike achieves a marvelous sense of ancient history and times, largely by dint of employing the ancient spellings of the names of the central characters and by imitating the style of an old Danish legend in his writing. For example, Gerutha is Gertrude in Part I, Horwendil is Hamlet Senior, Feng is Claudius, and Corambis is Polonius, coming originally from a German variant of the ancient tale. Hamlet first emerges as Amleth. He recounts the tale whereby Rorik (Gertrude's father) pledges Gerutha to Horwendil, co-governor of Jutland, who has slain the tormentor of Denmark's coast, the feared King Koll of Norway, giving him the funeral he required while butchering the slain man's sister, as his brother, Feng (read Claudius) is fighting on behalf of the Holy Roman Emperor and whoring in far away lands. Updike takes sheer delight in writing this ancient saga with a thoroughly contemporary twist, and his stylistic touches show him at his best.

The book also seems to be a vehicle to answer some of his feminist critics who have faulted Updike for the way he treats women. He has been accused of constantly treating women as broads, airheads, often amoral. Some feminists loathed The Witches of Eastwick, resenting Updike's treatment of the three female women, their philosophies of life, their forays into lesbianism, their fascination with and seduction by Horne. In Gertrude and Claudius Hamlet is depicted as a cold, unloving son and Gertrude's affair with Claudius is traced to her ambivalence towards Hamlet Senior, a man whom she was obliged to marry by her father after he had conquered the King Koll.

Updike's style in this book is beguiling: he adopts the tone of an earlier age, proffering the story from Gertrude's perspective and capturing her domesticity, her boredom, her yearning to be truly needed by her husband and lord, not simply taken by him through his authority and used to produce heirs. His treatment of Gertrude's sense of guilt once she has taken her husband's brother to her bed and her desire to remain ignorant of Claudius's ultimate crime while harboring the truth just below her levels of consciousness is convincing. His grasp of Polonius, Hamlet, and Ophelia also seems fresh. Given how much has been written about this play of Shakespeare's, it is hard to imagine that a writer could offer another plausible reading, appropriate to the late twentieth century. Updike has managed to do this in a manner that will delight the reader.

One of the virtues of Updike's talent is that so many of his books are memorable. The tetralogy of books that take Harry Angstrom as their protagonist, namely Rabbit Run, Rabbit Redux, Rabbit is Rich, and Rabbit at Rest, assured Updike his place as one of America's best contemporary writers. He aspires to a quality of writing he finds in Iris Murdoch, Muriel Spark, Henry Green, Saul Bellow, and Philip Roth and it is fair to say that he has achieved that goal. The freshness of his characters, the truth of his vision, and his ability to describe exactly events, places, people, and feelings are all evident in this very American collection. In Couples, his wildly popular novel of wifeswapping among suburbanites, he ensured that his audience would remember him as one of the very finest describers of sex, belonging alongside Vladimir Nabokov, Philip Roth, Henry Miller, and Jack Kerouac, writers whom he invokes when he discusses how sex is depicted in this pornographic age of ours. Of course, D.H. Lawrence and James Joyce are the writers that first convinced him that sex must assume a central place in any writing that purports to capture life. His books on Bech, too, show us a writer in his prime, and they have the virtue of permitting him to write in the character and mind of someone like himself, although very dissimilar in certain ways, rather than constraining him to have to imagine the consciousness of a less welleducated, less privileged Middle-American. Finally, his recent writing, although continuing in veins he opened earlier, continues to surprise and please their reader.

—Carol Simpson Stern

UPWARD, Edward (Falaise)

Nationality: British. Born: Romford, Essex, 9 September 1903. Education: Repton School, Derby, 1917–21; Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (Chancellors's medal for English verse), 1922–24, M.A. 1925. Family: Married to Hilda Maude Percival; one son and one daughter. Career: Schoolmaster, 1928–62; Member of the Editorial Board, the Ploughshare, London, 1936–39. Lives in Sandown, Isle of Wight. Address: c/o Heinemann Ltd., 81 Fulham Road, London SW3 6RB, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Journey to the Border. London, Hogarth Press, 1938; revised edition, London, Enitharmon Press, 1994; Chester Springs, Pennsylvania, Dufour Editions, 1994.

In the Thirties. London, Heinemann, 1962.

The Rotten Elements. London, Heinemann, 1969.

The Spiral Ascent (includes In the Thirties, The Rotten Elements, No Home But the Struggle). London, Heinemann, 1977.

Short Stories

The Night and Other Stories. London, Heinemann, 1967. The Railway Accident and Other Stories. London, Heinemann, 1969.

The Mortmere Stories (with Christopher Isherwood). London, Enitharmon Press and Chester Springs, Pennsylvania, Dufour Editions, 1994.

The Scenic Railway. London, Enitharmon Press and Chester Springs, Pennsylvania, Dufour Editions, 1997.

Uncollected Short Story

"The Theft," in Colours of a New Day: Writing for South Africa, edited by Sarah Lefnau and Stephen Hayward. London, Lawrence and Wishart, and New York, Pantheon, 1990.

Poetry

Buddha. London, Cambridge University Press, 1924.

Other

An Unmentionable Man. London, Enitharmon Press, Dufour Editions, 1994.

Christopher Isherwood: Notes in Remembrance of a Friendship. London, Enitharmon, 1996.

*

Manuscript Collection: British Library, London.

Critical Studies: The Destructive Element: A Study of Modern Writers and Beliefs by Stephen Spender, London, Cape, 1935, Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1936; introduction by W.H. Sellers to The Railway Accident and Other Stories, 1969; article by Upward, in London Magazine, June 1969; Leben und Werk von Edward Upward by Dieter Mensen, unpublished thesis, Berlin, Free University, 1976; Aestheticism and Political Commitment in the Works of Edward Upward by Clarke Thayer, unpublished thesis, Tulsa, Oklahoma, University of Tulsa, 1981; History and Value by Frank Kermode, Oxford, Oxford University Press, 1988.

* * *

Edward Upward as a young writer in the 1930s achieved a great reputation, was indeed something of a legend, among a number of writers of his own age and younger. Christopher Isherwood told in Lions and Shadows how he and Upward (called Chalmers in Isherwood's book) at Cambridge invented a fantasy world they called Mortmere which paralleled and parodied the world about them. Mortmere seems to have been at once sinister and comic, partly surrealist and partly Gothic. That it had affinities with Auden's early poetry, influenced as it was by Freud, seems clear, and something of it seems to merge in the plays Isherwood wrote in collaboration with Auden, notably The Dog Beneath the Skin. Upward, however, overtly pursued the vein of fantasy in his fiction, but was even then politically committed in the cause of Marxism. The central character of Journey to the Border is a middle-class young man employed as a tutor in the house of a rich man; he is constantly struggling against the implications and ignominies of his position but is unable to resolve them. He is persuaded against his will to accompany his employer to a racemeeting. On the way, and while there, he experiences a series of hallucinations that mount in intensity and are the counterparts of the debate going on in his mind. By the end of the novel he is forced to realize that the only solution to this problem, the only way to reality, is for him to identify himself with the working-class struggle.

When the novel was first published, reviewers read the influence of Kafka into it. This is not much apparent now, if it ever existed. Upward's novel is much less complex than those in simple allegory. Nevertheless, the voltage of imaginative work is admirably sustained. It remains a brilliant experimental novel of a very unusual kind.

Upward published nothing for twenty-five years, and then in 1962 published In the Thirties (followed by The Rotten Elements and, as a complete trilogy incorporating No Home But the Struggle, The Spiral Ascent). These novels are based, it is impossible not to think, on the author's own life. In the Thirties describes the stages by which a young middle-class man comes to Communism. In a sense, the theme is that of Journey to the Border, but the treatment is entirely different. Fantasy has been replaced by literal realism, which is also the vein of later volumes of the trilogy. In The Rotten Elements the hero of the earlier novel, a school teacher now married, finds himself compelled in the years immediately after the war to leave the Communist Party, not because he has lost his political faith but because for him and his wife the British Communist Party, under the influence of Moscow, has deviated from Marxism-Leninism. No Home But the Struggle shows them recommitted to the campaign for nuclear disarmament. The trilogy lacks the literary interest of Journey to the Border, but it has an anguish of its own and a documentary quality which suggests that, though it may not be read in the future for its artistic value, it will be essential reading for scholars concerned with the role of the Communist party in Britain.

-Walter Allen

V

VANDERHAEGHE, Guy

Nationality: Canadian. Born: Esterhazy, Saskatchewan, 5 April 1951. Education: University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, B.A. 1972, M.A. 1975; University of Regina, B.Ed. 1978. Family: Married Margaret Elizabeth Nagel in 1972. Career: Archivist, University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, 1973–75; Editor, Journal of Orthomolecular Medicine, Regina, Saskatchewan, 1976–78; high school English and history teacher, Herbert, Saskatchewan, 1978–79; Researcher, Access Consulting (health care consultants), Saskatoon, 1979–81; writer, 1981—; writer-in-residence, Saskatoon Public Library, 1983–84. Lives in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada. Awards: Governor General's award for English fiction, 1982, 1996. Agent: c/o Writers Union of Canada, 24 Ryerson Ave., Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5T 2P3.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

My Present Age. Toronto, Macmillan of Canada, 1984; Ticknor & Fields, 1985.

Homesick. Toronto, McClelland & Stewart, 1989; Ticknor & Fields, 1990.

The Englishman's Boy. New York, Picador USA, 1997.

Short Stories

Man Descending. Toronto, Macmillan of Canada, 1982; New York, Ticknor & Fields, 1985.

The Trouble with Heroes. Ottawa, Borealis Press, 1983.

Things as They Are? Short Stories. Toronto, McClelland & Stewart, 1992.

Plays

I Had a Job I Liked, Once: A Play. Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Fifth House, 1992.

Other

Dancock's Dance. Winnipeg, Manitoba, Blizzard Publishers, 1996.Contributor, Aurora: New Canadian Writing. New York, Doubleday, 1978.

Contributor, Aurora: New Canadian Writing. New York, Doubleday, 1979

Contributor, Aurora: New Canadian Writing. New York, Doubleday, 1980.

Contributor, Sundogs: Stories from Saskatchewan, edited by Robert Kroetsch. Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Thunder Creek Publishing Cooperative, 1980.

Contributor, Best Canadian Short Stories. Oberon Press, 1980.

Contributor, Best American Short Stories, 1982.

Contributor, Myths and Voices: Contemporary Canadian Fiction, edited by David Lampe. Fredonia, New York, White Pine Press, 1993.

* * *

Having established himself on the Canadian literary scene on the strengths of such story collections as Man Descending, for which he was awarded the Governor General's award in 1982, and The Trouble with Heroes, Guy Vanderhaeghe turned to the novel form in 1984 with My Present Age. Pivoting on the quixotic quest of Ed, a character from his earlier stories who sets off to find a wife who has abandoned him, this is a story that is equal parts journey to the past and exploration of the future. More importantly, Ed's sometimes comic (mis)adventures prove an opportunity for extended exploration of many of the themes and issues that Vanderhaeghe probes in the strongest of his shorter fictions: the complex influences of time and place on the lives of individuals and communities; questions of what constitutes a hero and an act of heroism in the postmodern world; the moral implications of a cultural tendency toward stultifying selfdeceptions; and the resiliency of the human spirit and the ability of individuals to search out spiritual and emotional nourishment in even the bleakest of environments.

Similar questions and struggles are revisited in Homesick, Vanderhaeghe's second novel, as the widow Vera Monkman works toward reconciling herself with her own father and the prairie town in which she lives. With clear affiliations with the works of such antecedent prairie novelists as Margaret Laurence (the Manawaka books) and Sinclair Ross (notably As for Me and My House), it is a story that reveals a community torn between an intense, almost obsessive yearning for a sense of home and an equally powerful fear of the realities of the harsh geography in which they find themselves.

Although both novels were well received by critics and reviewers, it was Vanderhaeghe's third book, the richly textured The Englishman's Boy, that secured him a position in the upper ranks of Canadian novelists. Awarded the Governor General's award and nominated for the prestigious Giller prize, it is a carefully crafted narrative that weaves together two causally linked stories: one of a little known late nineteenth-century massacre of an encampment of Assiniboine by a group of white wolf hunters (based on an actual event in Canadian history), the other of a 1920s Hollywood mogul's determination to renarrate the details of the event in support of his megalomaniacal, and degradingly revisionist, goals. Connecting these two historical threads is Harry Vincent, a Canadian expatriate and frustrated writer hired by the mogul to find an infamous "Indian fighter," Shorty McAdoo, who might (or might not) hold the key to the many mysteries clouding the historical "truth" of the slaughter. Myopic and passive, Vincent proves the ideal witness to the increasingly sinister events that unfold in the novel; drawn deeper and deeper into the story of the Cypress Hills massacre, he proves a less than astute reader of the events that unfold around him. Developing slowly and with careful attention to subtle ironies and to the rhythms and nuances of language, The Englishman's Boy forces other readers (those of the novel proper) to confront questions of how they come to know the past, and how, via a traditional cultural commitment to such abstractions as historical truth and objectivity, each of us is to varying degrees complicit in the attitudes and policies that help sustain the machineries of exploitation and institutional repression serving the present.

-Klay Dyer

VANSITTART, Peter

Nationality: British. Born: Bedford, 27 August 1920. Education: Marlborough House School; Haileybury College, Hertford; Worcester College, Oxford (major scholar in modern history). Career: Director, Burgess School, London, 1947–59; formerly, publisher, Park Editions, London. Awards: Society of Authors travelling scholarship, 1969; Arts Council bursary, 1981, 1984. Fellow, Royal Society of Literature, 1985. Agent: Sheil and Associates Ltd., 43 Doughty Street, London WC1N 2LF. Address: 9 Upper Park Road, London N.W.3; or, Little Manor, Kersey, Ipswich, Suffolk, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

I Am the World. London, Chatto and Windus, 1942.

Enemies. London, Chapman and Hall, 1947.

The Overseer. London, Chapman and Hall, 1949.

Broken Canes. London, Lane, 1950.

A Verdict of Treason. London, Lane, 1952.

A Little Madness. London, Lane, 1953.

The Game and the Ground. London, Reinhardt, 1956; New York, Abelard Schuman, 1957.

Orders of Chivalry. London, Bodley Head, 1958; New York, Abelard Schuman, 1959.

The Tournament. London, Bodley Head, 1959; New York, Walker, 1961.

A Sort of Forgetting. London, Bodley Head, 1960.

Carolina. London, New English Library, 1961.

Sources of Unrest. London, Bodley Head, 1962.

The Friends of God. London, Macmillan, 1963; as The Siege, New York, Walker, 1963.

The Lost Lands. London, Macmillan, and New York, Walker, 1964.

The Story Teller. London, Owen, 1968.

Pastimes of a Red Summer. London, Owen, 1969.

Landlord. London, Owen, 1970.

Quintet. London, Owen, 1976.

Lancelot. London, Owen, 1978.

The Death of Robin Hood. London, Owen, 1981.

Harry. London, Park, 1981.

Three Six Seven. London, Owen, 1983.

Aspects of Feeling. London, Owen, 1986.

Parsifal. London, Owen, 1988; Chester Springs, Pennsylvania, Dufour, 1989.

The Wall. London, Owen, 1990.

A Choice of Murder. London, Owen, 1992.

A Safe Conduct. London, Owen, 1995; Chester Springs, Pennsylvania, 1995.

Other

The Dark Tower: Tales from the Past (for children). London, Macdonald, 1965; New York, Crowell, 1969.

The Shadow Land: More Stories from the Past (for children). London, Macdonald, 1967.

Green Knights, Black Angels: The Mosaic of History (for children). London, Macmillan, 1969.

Vladivostok (essay). London, Covent Garden Press, 1972.

Dictators. London, Studio Vista, 1973.

Worlds and Underworlds: Anglo-European History Through the Centuries. London, Owen, 1974.

Flakes of History. London, Park, 1978.

The Ancient Mariner and the Old Sailor: Delights and Uses of Words. London, Centre for Policy Studies, 1985.

Paths from a White Horse: A Writer's Memoir. London, Quartet, 1985.

London: A Literary Companion. London, Murray, 1992.

In the Fifties. London, Murray, 1995.

In Memory of England: A Novelist's View of History. London, John Murray, 1998.

Survival Tactics: A Literary Life. London and Chester Springs, Pennsylvania, P. Owen, 1999.

Editor, Voices from the Great War. London, Cape, 1981; New York, Watts, 1984.

Editor, Voices: 1870–1914. London, Cape, 1984; New York, Watts, 1985.

Editor, John Masefield's Letters from the Front 1915–1917. London, Constable, 1984; New York, Watts, 1985.

Editor, Happy and Glorious! An Anthology of Royalty. London, Collins, 1988.

Editor, Voices of the Revolution. London, Collins, 1989.

Editor, Kipps, by H.G. Wells. London, Everyman, 1993.

*

Peter Vansittart comments:

Though I have published non-fiction, novels alone excite my ambitions; not plays, short stories, poems, manifestos, sermons. My novels have been appreciated, if not always enjoyed, more by critics than the reading public, which shows no sign of enjoying them at all. This must be partly due to my obsession with language and speculation at the expense of narrative, however much I relish narrative in others. Today I take narrative more seriously, though still relying, perhaps over-relying, on descriptive colour, unexpected imagery, the bizarre and curious, no formula for popular success. The Game and the Ground, The Tournament, Lancelot, and Quintet, have succeeded the most in expressing initial vision and valid situation in fairly accessible terms. Others—A Verdict of Treason, A Sort of Forgetting—had interesting and provocative material, clumsily handled. The Story Teller, my own favourite, failed through excess of ambition, A Little Madness and Sources of Unrest, through too little.

My novels range in time from the second millennium BC, to AD 1986. They share the effect of time, and the apparently forgotten or exterminated on the present, time transmuting, distorting, travestying, ridiculing facts and ideas, loves and hates, generous institutions and renowned reputations. I was long impressed by the woeful distinction between the historical Macbeth and Shakespeare's: by the swift transformation of E.M. Forster's very English Mrs. Moore into an Indian goddess. Such phenomena relate very immediately to my own work, in which myth can be all too real, and the real degenerate into fantasy.

* * *

In his memoirs, Paths from a White Horse, Peter Vansittart comments enlighteningly on the genre with which he is most closely associated, the historical novel. He knows that it has come to be disdained by many readers because of its long tradition of crude sentimentality and easy picturesqueness, with language that is either over-spiced with random archaism in vocabulary and syntax or else bled white for the sake of coining a supposedly timeless idiom. Worst of all, the desire to present the "facts" is too often allowed to come between the novelist and his primary duty of creating significant fictions. Though Vansittart is uncommonly well informed about history, it has never been his intention to attempt to rehabilitate the historical novel by basing his work on a sounder foundation of scholarship. Instead, appreciating that the objects and methods of history and fiction are distinct, for all that the starting point in both enterprises is a serious contemplation of the past, he is content to leave research and verification to the historians and claims for novelists the right to speculate over the facts that are available. He argues that he is entitled to let his imagination brood over events, situations, and characters, discovering by poetic insight mythic continuities that could be too daring for academic minds. This can happen in especially interesting ways when the past is reflected through the personalities of highly individualised characters whose outlook necessarily colours every interpretation of what is related. For Vansittart, the historical novel is, moreover, not exclusively concerned with the depiction of the past. Far more excitingly, he always presents past and present as a continuity, and while relishing the otherness of remote ages and of the people who lived through them, he makes his historical fiction a vehicle for an alert commentary on our present discontents.

The Death of Robin Hood, for instance, is an ambitious attempt to unify experiences by portraying a huge tract of time, with fantasy and realism mingled to create myth. First comes a spell-binding evocation of the forest in primal times when strange rites are already seen as failing to arrest the processes of change and decay. The second part of the novel, "John in the Castle," depicts the paranoid terrors of a tyrant who cowers behind stone walls, dreading the prospect of conflict with the unruly bands that have taken refuge in the forest. Here there is fine descriptive writing, but it is John's state of mind that is the centre of attention. Next, not pausing to make the linkage explicit, Vansittart moves on to the Luddite riots of 1811 when Nottinghamshire workers rose up and smashed the new machines that were taking away their livelihood and then, as the forces of repression gathered, ran off in droves into the forest. Finally, reverting to the environment he had portrayed with satiric verve in Broken Canes, Vansittart shows the old values under attack in the closed world of an independent school just before the outbreak of World War II. With its abrupt transitions, The Death of Robin Hood can be puzzling, but the immediacy of the emotions and the vividness of the scenes carry the reader along. Lancelot is more straightforward. It takes as its starting point Field-Marshal Wavell's observation that "Arthur was probably a grim figure in a grim, un-romantic struggle in a dark period of history," and, once again, it presents within a framework of exciting events an enquiry into the meaning of change and apparent decay. Three Six Seven is set in A.D. 367, a year of cataclysm for Roman Britain

Parsifal is a novel that has some affinities with The Death of Robin Hood. The cryptic first chapter makes an explicit reference to Richard Wagner, but then the narrative doubles back to present, in chronological sequence, a series of portrayals of the Arthurian quasihero through the ages, from a curiously indeterminate prehistorical era to the fall of the Nazis. With his precise choice of vocabulary and tight-lipped style, Vansittart, without here trying very often for pictorial effects, creates compelling fiction. It evokes a world sadly out of joint, with legendary and literary elements curiously combined and with the extraordinary blend of reinterpreted myth and remorseless psychological realism which is the hallmark of Vansittart's historical novels.

Vansittart is by no means only a historical novelist, and his gift for description and his disabused insight into human motivations are equally well revealed in the portrayal of the life of the bourgeoisie in modern times in such novels as Quintet. The first of its five parts is set in Africa in the immediate post-war era when Britain was shedding its colonial responsibilities, and institutional decay is generally the framework within which flawed human beings pursue their complex ways.

As well as presenting a personal vision of man's lot and exploring the possibilities of narrative technique in challenging fashion, Vansittart possesses a most distinguished prose style. Provided every thought of complacent exuberance and lush imagery is banished, it might well be called poetic, for here there is a rare regard for the communicative power of the exact word in precisely the right place. Nouns in particular he values, not cluttering them with adjectives but letting them stand stark and unmodified to convey meaning. This gives an impression of elemental vigour which is apt in Lancelot, for example, and the tight-lipped statements suggest pressures that can be held in check only with difficulty just as dark hints leave us to draw dire conclusions for ourselves. In The Death of Robin Hood the prose, which is very stylised at first, becomes more and more relaxed as we move towards modern times, though Vansittart continues to use words with scrupulous care for their effect. In his novels there is humour too, but usually the laughter is uneasy, in situations that are becoming uncomfortable. Quite a prolific novelist, Vansittart has kept a voice that is distinctively his own.

The title of A Choice of Murder might lead one to guess it is a genre mystery, but in Vansittart's hands it is far from it. The protagonist is Timoleon of Syracuse, an actual historical figure who in the fourth century B.C. liberated his home in Sicily from Carthaginian domination. He also murdered his older brother, and the author examines his life to find out why. A Safe Conduct jumps forward to the eve of the Renaissance in Germany, again focusing on a real person. The heretic Hans Bohm was, along with contemporary Thomas Munzer, a precursor of twentieth-century political radicalism; in Vansittart's version, however, he becomes one who prepares the way for a more powerful prince, Albrecht.

-Christopher Smith, updated by Judson Knight

VASSANJI, M(oyez) G.

Nationality: Canadian (originally Kenyan, emigrated to United State, 1970; emigrated to Canada, 1978). Born: Nairobi, Kenya, 30 May 1950. Education: Massachusetts Institute of Technology, B.S. 1974; University of Pennsylvania, Ph.D. 1978. Family: Married Nurjehan

Aziz; one child. Career: Affiliated with Atomic Energy of Canada at Chalk River power station, 1978–80; research associate and lecturer in physics, 1980–89. Since 1989 full-time writer. Agent: Peter Livingston Associates, Inc., 89 Collier St., Toronto, Ontario M4W 1M2. Canada.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Gunny Sack. Oxford, Heinemann International, 1989.
No New Land. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, 1991.
The Book of Secrets. Toronto, McClelland & Stewart, 1994; New York, Picador, 1996.
Amriika. Toronto, McClelland & Stewart, 1999.

Short Stories

Uhuru Street. Heinemann International, 1991.

Other

A Meeting of Streams: South Asian Canadian Literature. Toronto, TSAR, 1985.

Editor, The Journey Prize Anthology: Short Fiction from the Best of Canada's New Writers. Toronto, McClelland & Stewart, 1995.

* * *

As a storyteller, M.G. Vassanji is fascinated with the often elliptical forms that stories can take and with the vestiges of experience (tangible and otherwise) that connect individuals and communities to them. And, as is often the case, it is this willingness to explore continually the boundaries of form that is at once the principal strength and weakness of his fiction.

Illustrative of this tension is The Gunny Sack, an episodic generational novel set, like all the strongest of Vassanji's writing, in and against the multicultural panorama of East Africa. Engaging a structure that reflects the randomness of reaching into a bag of treasures, he organizes this narrative around the artifacts that the book's narrator, Salim, recovers from an almost mythical repository passed to him by a great-aunt. Forever being ordered and reordered by the holder of the bag, each wisp of memory elicits any number of stories about one extended family's arrival and existence in this storyrich country. Considered individually, these episodes take many shapes—fables of community, lyrical remembrances of family, and recollections of political events. Considered cumulatively, they intermingle, though not always smoothly, to form a lush polyphony, an exploration of place and character that avoids flat archetypes and the subsumption of individual voices in any grand pattern of history or myth. Indeed, at times the genealogical details that accumulate with each subsequent episode threaten to become frustratingly labyrinthine.

This occasional awkwardness dissipates when Vassanji shifts form for his only short fiction collection, Uhuru Street, the sixteen linked stories that share a number of characters and episodes with The Gunny Sack. More traditional in style than his longer fiction, these are economical, but nonetheless vivid, evocations of the anxious movement of East Africa from the final days of colonial rule to the harsh realities of newfound independence. In the strongest inclusions, "All Worlds Are Possible Now," in which a man endeavors to reclaim a sense of place and self during a trip "home," and the bittersweet remembrances of "The London-returned," Vassanji's control of the story format creates a novelistic collection that moves almost seamlessly across the frontiers of geography and history to speak of stories at once individual and collective, singular and diverse.

Moving from the fluidity of The Gunny Sack and the interdependence that characterizes linked stories, Vassanji finds the form for The Book of Secrets, his most accomplished work of fiction, in a more fixed trace of the past: the 1913 diary of a colonial administrator, Corbin, that is discovered hidden in a shopkeeper's backroom in modern Dares Salaam. Lent to Pius Fernandes, a retired teacher whose own notebook entries also become part of the novel, the diary becomes the centerpiece in a quest to (re)construct the enigmatic family history believed to be concealed in its pages. Although the dual presence of diary and notebook suggests a certain precision to the notation and relationship of the times, places, and events that shape this story, Vassanji reveals both to be versions of the titular book of secrets, necessarily incomplete records of experiences that have no witnesses and of questions that remain unanswered-and perhaps unanswerable. Who exactly is the beautiful Shamsi woman, Mariamu, whom Corbin rescues from a potentially fatal exorcism? And what exactly is the nature of their intensely intimate relationship? Is it passion that inspires her to steal the Englishman's personal journal or something darker? Indeed, such questions accumulate with dazzling

An intriguing palimpsest of vernacular, historical, and cultural discourses, The Book of Secrets also foregrounds the themes and ideas that recur throughout Vassanji's fiction: notions of history and memory; inquiries into how much one can (and dare) know about the past; ideas of home and community as they extend across time and space; and the insidious legacies of colonialism, war, race prejudice, and religious intolerance. And though these books suggest that a relatively harmonious coexistence of peoples and cultures is at least possible, and at best vital, in the modern world, the potential for conflict is omnipresent. Institutional hypocrisy and racism, family feuds, petty jealousies, and sexual exploitation are never far from the surface of Vassanji's narratives. At times, this undercurrent of discord erupts in viciousness, notably in the violence of the Kurtz-like Maynard (The Book of Secrets), in the frequent convergence of commerce and sexual exploitation ("For a Shilling"), and in the racially motivated murder that symbolizes the changing times in "What Good Times We Had." Indeed, it is the image that ends this story, a tableau of death in which the brutalized victim hangs by her feet from a tree branch, that resonates in a number of subsequent stories in the Uhuru cycle. In The Book of Secrets and in stories like "The Beggar" and "Alzira," though, the immediate threat of confrontation is replaced or diffused by sudden and unexpected acts of kindness, allowing questions of dignity, humanity, and love to be invoked as optimistic counterpoints to the darker shadows that ripple through the lives of his characters and the stories they tell.

A writer whose most evocative works are distinguished by luxurious subtleties and a lightness of touch, Vassanji does allow his narratives to slide, on occasion, toward a heavy-handed characterization and somewhat stilted dialogue. Too often in his more traditionally structured novels—No New Land and the ambitious Amriika—Vassanji sacrifices explorations of nuanced character and story in favor of examining what might be best described as the anthropological or sociological tensions confronting immigrants drawn to the uneasy promise of a future in North America. Tracing the struggles of an idealistic young African who leaves home in 1968 to attend an American college, Amriika, for example, engages the backdrop of three tumultuous decades in American history, a period of anti-war protests, radicalized politics, sexual openness, and spiritual quests. The rich potentialities of setting are unable to sustain a story burdened, in this case, by a narrator whose presence remains nebulous and whose life journeys never lead to the kind of profound introspection that lift the stories of Fernandes, Salim, and others off the page.

Drawing often, as he does, on the specificities of East Africa has led to obvious comparisons with such novelists as Abdulrazak Gurnah, and in a less localized sense, with fellow Canadians Rohinton Mistry and Michael Ondaatje. Although such comparisons do tend to oversimplify the works of each writer, they also point to the fact that Vassanji has established himself as a writer whose novels continue to expand our understanding of stories, of the powers (and dangers) of borders, and of the common threads that connect readers and writers regardless of where they were born or where they reside.

-Klay Dyer

VIDAL, Gore

Pseudonym: Edgar Box. Nationality: American. Born: Eugene Luther Gore Vidal, Jr. in West Point, New York, 3 October 1925. Education: Los Alamos School, New Mexico, 1939–40; Phillips Exeter Academy, New Hampshire, 1940–43. Military Service: Served in the United States Army, 1943-46: Warrant Officer. Career: Editor, E.P. Dutton, publishers, New York, 1946. Lived in Antigua, Guatemala, 1947–49, and Italy, 1967–76; member, advisory board, Partisan Review, New Brunswick, New Jersey, 1960-71; Democratic-Liberal candidate for Congress, New York, 1960; member, President's Advisory Committee on the Arts, 1961-63; co-chairman, New Party, 1968–71. Awards: Mystery Writers of America award, for television play, 1954; Cannes Film Critics award, for screenplay, 1964; National Book Critics Circle award, for criticism, 1983; National Book award for nonfiction, 1993; Chevalier de l'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres, France, 1995. Address: La Rondinaia, Ravello, Salerno, Italy; or c/o Random House Inc., 201 East 50th Street, New York, New York 10022, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Williwaw. New York, Dutton, 1946; London, Panther, 1965.In a Yellow Wood. New York, Dutton, 1947; London, New English Library, 1967.

The City and the Pillar. New York, Dutton, 1948; London, Lehmann, 1949; revised edition, Dutton, and London, Heinemann, 1965; revised, with a new preface by the author, published as The City and the Pillar and Seven Early Stories, New York, Random House, 1995.

The Season of Comfort. New York, Dutton, 1949.

Dark Green, Bright Red. New York, Dutton, and London, Lehmann, 1950.

A Search for the King: A Twelfth Century Legend. New York, Dutton, 1950; London, New English Library, 1967.

The Judgment of Paris. New York, Dutton, 1952; London, Heinemann, 1953; revised edition, Boston, Little Brown, 1965; Heinemann, 1966.

Messiah. New York, Dutton, 1954; London, Heinemann, 1955; revised edition, Boston, Little Brown, 1965; Heinemann, 1968.

Three: Williwaw, A Thirsty Evil, Julian the Apostate. New York, New American Library, 1962.

Julian. Boston, Little Brown, and London, Heinemann, 1964.

Washington, D.C. Boston, Little Brown, and London, Heinemann, 1967.

Myra Breckinridge. Boston, Little Brown, and London, Blond, 1968.
Two Sisters: A Memoir in the Form of a Novel. Boston, Little Brown, and London, Heinemann, 1970.

Burr. New York, Random House, 1973; London, Heinemann, 1974.Myron. New York, Random House, 1974; London, Heinemann, 1975.

1876. New York, Random House, and London, Heinemann, 1976.
Kalki. New York, Random House, and London, Heinemann, 1978.
Creation. New York, Random House, and London, Heinemann, 1981.

Duluth. New York, Random House, and London, Heinemann, 1983. Lincoln. New York, Random House, and London, Heinemann, 1984. Empire. New York, Random House, and London, Deutsch, 1987.

Hollywood: A Novel of American in the 1920s. New York, Random House, and London, Deutsch, 1990.

Live from Golgotha. New York, Random House, 1992. The Smithsonian Institution. New York, Random House, 1998. The Golden Age. New York, Doubleday, 2000.

Novels as Edgar Box

Death in the Fifth Position. New York, Dutton, 1952; London, Heinemann, 1954.

Death Before Bedtime. New York, Dutton, 1953; London, Heinemann, 1954.

Death Likes It Hot. New York, Dutton, 1954; London, Heinemann, 1955.

Short Stories

A Thirsty Evil: Seven Short Stories. New York, Zero Press, 1956; London, Heinemann, 1958.

Plays

Visit to a Small Planet (televised 1955). Included in Visit to a Small Planet and Other Television Plays, 1956; revised version (produced New York, 1957; London, 1960), Boston, Little Brown, 1957; in Three Plays, 1962.

Honor (televised 1956). Published in Television Plays for Writers:
Eight Television Plays, edited by A.S. Burack, Boston, The Writer, 1957; revised version as On the March to the Sea: A Southron Comedy (produced Bonn, Germany, 1961), in Three Plays, 1962.

Visit to a Small Planet and Other Television Plays (includes Barn Burning, Dark Possession, The Death of Billy the Kid, A Sense of Justice, Smoke, Summer Pavilion, The Turn of the Screw). Boston, Little Brown, 1956.

The Best Man: A Play about Politics (produced New York, 1960). Boston, Little Brown, 1960; in Three Plays, 1962.

Three Plays (includes Visit to a Small Planet, The Best Man, On the March to the Sea ). London, Heinemann, 1962.

Romulus: A New Comedy, adaptation of a play by Friedrich Dürrenmatt (produced New York, 1962). New York, Dramatists Play Service, 1962.

Weekend (produced New York, 1968). New York, Dramatists Play Service, 1968.

An Evening with Richard Nixon and ... (produced New York, 1972). New York, Random House, 1972.

Screenplays: The Catered Affair, 1956; I Accuse, 1958; The Scapegoat, with Robert Hamer, 1959; Suddenly, Last Summer, with Tennessee Williams, 1959; The Best Man, 1964; Is Paris Burning?, with Francis Ford Coppola, 1966; Last of the Mobile HotShots, 1970; The Sicilian, 1970; Gore Vidal's Billy the Kid, 1989.

Television Plays: Barn Burning, from the story by Faulkner, 1954; Dark Possession, 1954; Smoke, from the story by Faulkner, 1954; Visit to a Small Planet, 1955; The Death of Billy the Kid, 1955; A Sense of Justice, 1955; Summer Pavillion, 1955; The Turn of the Screw, from the story by Henry James, 1955; Honor, 1956; The Indestructible Mr. Gore, 1960; Vidal in Venice (documentary), 1985; Dress Gray, from the novel by Lucian K. Truscott IV, 1986.

Other

Rocking the Boat (essays). Boston, Little Brown, 1962; London, Heinemann, 1963.

Sex, Death, and Money (essays). New York, Bantam, 1968.

Reflections upon a Sinking Ship (essays). Boston, Little Brown, and London, Heinemann, 1969.

Homage to Daniel Shays: Collected Essays 1952–1972. New York, Random House, 1972; as Collected Essays 1952–1972, London, Heinemann, 1974.

Matters of Fact and of Fiction: Essays 1973–1976. New York, Random House, and London, Heinemann, 1977.

Sex Is Politics and Vice Versa (essay). Los Angeles, Sylvester and Orphanos, 1979.

Views from a Window: Conversations with Gore Vidal, with Robert J. Stanton. Secaucus, New Jersey, Lyle Stuart, 1980.

The Second American Revolution and Other Essays 1976–1982. New York, Random House, 1982; as Pink Triangle and Yellow Star and Other Essays, London, Heinemann, 1982.

Vidal in Venice, edited by George Armstrong, photographs by Tore Gill. New York, Summit, and London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1985.

Armegeddon? Essays 1983–1987. London, Deutsch, 1987; as At Home, New York, Random House, 1988.

A View from the Diners Club. London, Deutsch, 1991.

The Decline and Fall of the American Empire. Berkeley, California, Odonian Press, 1992.

Screening History. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, and London, Deutsch, 1992.

United States: Essays, 1952–1992. New York, Random House, and London, Deutsch, 1993.

Palimpsest: A Memoir. New York, Random House, 1995.

The American Presidency. Monroe, Maine, Odonian Press, 1998.

Virgin Islands, a Dependency of United States: Essays 1992–1997. London, Abacus, 1998. The Essential Vidal, edited by Fred Kaplan. New York, Random House, 1999.

Gore Vidal, Sexually Speaking: Collected Sex Writings, edited by Donald Weise. San Francisco, Cleis, 1999.

Editor, Best Television Plays. New York, Ballantine, 1956.

*

Bibliography: Gore Vidal: A Primary and Secondary Bibliography by Robert J. Stanton, Boston, Hall, and London, Prior, 1978.

Manuscript Collection: University of Wisconsin, Madison.

Critical Studies: Gore Vidal by Ray Lewis White, New York, Twayne, 1968; The Apostate Angel: A Critical Study of Gore Vidal by Bernard F. Dick, New York, Random House, 1974; Gore Vidal by Robert F. Kiernan, New York, Ungar, 1982; Gore Vidal: Writer Against the Grain edited by Jay Parini, New York, Columbia University Press, and London, Deutsch, 1992; Gore Vidal: A Critical Companion by Susan Baker and Curtis S. Gibson, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1997; Gore Vidal: A Biography by Fred Kaplan, New York, Doubleday, 1999.

* * *

Gore Vidal has been called "our wild man of the literary left." He has lent his political savvy to monumental historical fiction projects such as the American Chronicle series which spans the history of the United States from the Revolution to the post-World War II years. The six novels arch from Hollywood to Washington, D.C., with a large cast of fictional and historical characters in a panorama of American politics interpreted by the intellectually adroit mind and drawn with the irreverent hand of a sophisticated and ironic observer. Vidal's oeuvre is not limited to historical fiction, however, as he has turned his attentions to doomsday fictions, playfully pornographic novels, a pseudonymous series of detective stories, and science fiction, as well as essays and plays. Always relevant, often funny, undeniably astute, Vidal's tone purposefully drifts into cynicism and his style into satire whenever possible.

Vidal's first novel, Williwaw, published in 1946, is set on an army transport vessel laying a course among the Aleutian Islands during World War II. The story about seven self-absorbed men whose enforced closeness results in a homicide about which no one really cares was written when Vidal was nineteen years old. Of more lasting interest among the early novels is his third published in 1948, The City and the Pillar, about a young man's gradual discovery that he is homosexual. The stark, unsentimental examination of his main character's sexual identity shocked the public, and the five novels which followed, including the somewhat redemptive Messiah, a savagely apocalyptic novel about merchandising a savior, were commercial failures. The rest, which were coolly received by critics, include In a Yellow Wood, a glimpse into the Manhattan demimonde; The Season of Comfort; A Search for the King: A Twelfth Century Legend, the first of Vidal's historical novels; and The Judgment of Paris, a campy updating of the Greek myth.

After a successful period of writing dramatic scripts for television, film, and the stage during the 1950s and 1960s, he published one of his most enduring early novels, Julian, in 1964. Vidal's first major novel purports to be the Emperor Julian's autobiographical memoir and private journal. The sympathetic fictional portrait is of Julian the Apostate, the fourth-century pagan Roman emperor who opposed Christianity. In scenes complexly imagined and impressively researched, Vidal recreates Julian's path from Christianity to Mithraism and from philosophy to military science. The novel is rewarding for its rich historicity and for the interplay of Julian's elevated discourse with the witty phrase-making of Priscus and the pedantry of Libanius, the editors of Julian's memoirs. Its ventriloquistic mode of narration became a proven formula for Vidal's most accomplished fiction.

Washington, D.C., published in 1967, is the first novel of a sequence and offers an illuminating portrait of the republic from the time of the New Deal to the McCarthy era. Widely regarded as Vidal's ultimate comment on how the American political system degrades those who participate in it, the novel traces the fortunes James Burden Day, a conservative senator eyeing the presidency, Clay Overbury, a congressional aide, and Blaise Sanford, a newspaper magnate. The novel follows the power and the money as the power mongers of the nation's capital transform the United States into 'possibly the last empire on earth.' As national events from Pearl Harbor to Korea stage themselves in the background, the histrionic characters prove the importance of image and the Hollywood style in the success of politics.

The theme of how public opinion is shaped by movies is fleshed out in Hollywood: A Novel of America in the 1920s, which begins with the fall of William Randolph Hearst on the eve of American involvement in the First World War and ends shortly after the mysterious death of Warren G. Harding, who is replaced by the taciturn Calvin Coolidge. It covers the scandals involving Roscoe ''Fatty'' Arbuckle and William Desmond Taylor, and a youthful Franklin Delano Roosevelt with his mistress, Lucy Mercer. It is the fifth in the biography of the United States series covering a period when Hollywood tries to shape public opinion on behalf of the powerful, and America exercises its world power.

The third novel in the sequence, 1876, is a sardonic centennial celebration of the nation's birth in which an old man named Charlie Schuyler returns from Europe to New York for the first time since 1837 and travels about the country in the service of a newspaper. Everywhere he sees violence and mendacity lurking behind the patriotic scrim of the nation's centenary—particularly in the scandals of the Grant administration and the bitterly contested Hayes-Tilden presidential election.

The centerpiece of the series, and one of Vidal's best novels, is Burr, an account of Aaron Burr's last days as written by the young Charlie Schuyler, whom Vidal imagines Burr employing and befriending. Schuyler's interest in Burr's life encourages the older man to give his written account of the early days of the republic—a compelling, gossipy account in which the Founding Fathers are little more than despoilers of infant America. The alternation of Burr's own narrative with Schuyler's worshipful memoir results in a composite portrait of Burr as both an unregenerate adventurer and an elegant arbiter of political style. It also shows Vidal at his best: iconoclastic, anecdotal, intellectually and stylistically agile.

In a duo of confections entitled Myra Breckinridge and Myron, Vidal indulges freely the taste for camp extravagance evident in his work as early as The Season of Comfort. Myra Breckinridge takes the form of a journal that the eponymous Myra begins when she arrives in Hollywood after a sex-change operation. Firm in her belief that film is the only art and militant in her devotion to Hollywood's Golden Age, she is no less imperious in her determination to realign the sexes—a determination rooted in her former life as Myron. The results are gaudily offensive, climaxing in her rape of a chauvinistic young man and ending (to her chagrin) in her accidental reversion into Myron. Myron picks up the story five years later when Myron falls into his television and discovers himself on a Hollywood set in 1948. As the novel progresses, Myra and Myron alternately commandeer the Breckinridge psyche, Myra bent on saving Hollywood from television, Myron on defeating Myra's revisionist imperative. Although not to everyone's taste, the books are enormously rich—a comedic feast of styles and sexualities, invention and invective. Their charm is considerable.

Vidal's greatest success in recent years has been in the historical mode. In Creation his central character and narrator is a fictional diplomat named Cyrus Spitama (a grandson of Zoroaster), who cuts a broad swath through the Persian-Greek wars and recounts fascinating meetings with the Buddha, Master Li, Confucius, and a host of kindred figures. Revisionist speculations and tantalizing "what ifs" energize what amounts to a Cook's Tour of the fifth century. If Lincoln overshadows Creation, it overshadows very nearly everything else in Vidal's oeuvre. A compelling, thoughtful, and well-researched portrait of America's sixteenth president, it renders his tragic Civil War years through candid viewpoints of his family, his political rivals, and even his future assassins. The result is a rare fusion of monumentality and intimacy, quite distinct from the idealized portraits created by romantic nationalism.

Vidal's historical novels move through time and the lives of famous personages with the breathless anticipation of good fictional epics, yet he continues to explore a variety of modes. Kalki is a mordant doomsday novel, narrated with odd restraint by a bisexual aviatrix, the personal pilot of a Vietnam veteran who exterminates the human race in a belief that he is the last avatar of Vishnu. Because of its emotional coolness, the story fails to engage except in scattered passages, as does the story in Duluth, a broad parody of law-and-order consciousness in middle America during the 1980s of the Reagan era. More interesting stylistically than these novels is the undervalued Two Sisters: A Memoir in the Form of a Novel, a Chinese box of narrations in which each narrative replicates a single story-line encapsulated in a screenplay at the heart of the novel.

The Smithsonian Institution is a recent, light foray into science fiction, time travel, historical costume romance, and Vidal's familiar political satire. The love story woven through the text is between Gore Vidal and the main character, who is Jimmie Trimble, based on Vidal's friend killed on Iwo Jima in March 1, 1945. In a whimsical revision of his personal history, Vidal rescues his lover from the destruction of one of the bloodiest battles fought in the Pacific. His novel surpasses the trivial material produced in the fantasy/science fiction genre while using its conventions. The story is driven by that powerfully brilliant and original mind which produced the Empire narratives.

The greatness of Vidal's fiction lies not only with its extraordinary range but with its small-scale effects: witty, autobiographical indiscretions; aphoristic nuggets, firm and toothsome; a fine interplay of the demonic and the mannered. Indeed, he must be regarded as one of the most important stylists of contemporary American prose. His ear for cadence and his touch with syntax are sure, and few can equal his ability to layer a sentence with wit and to temper it with intelligence. His book list survives in popular reprints despite the government's consistent attacks on left-wing politics and the public taboo against homosexuality.

VIRAMONTES, Helena Maria

Nationality: American. Born: East Los Angeles, 26 February 1954. Education: Immaculate Heart College, B.A., 1975; attended University of California at Irvine. Family: Two children. Career: Teaches at Cornell University. Awards: Statement Magazine first prize for fiction (California State University), 1977, 1978; first prize for fiction (University of California at Irvine Chicano Literary Contest), 1979. Agent: c/o Dutton/Signet, 375 Hudson Street, New York, New York 10014, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Under the Feet of Jesus. New York, Dutton, 1995. Their Dogs Came with Them. New York, Dutton, 2000.

Short Stories

The Moths and Other Stories. Houston, Texas, Arte Publico Press, 1985.

Paris Rats in E.L.A. N.p. 1993.

Other

Chicana Creativity and Criticism: Charting New Frontiers in American Literature (co-editor, with Maria Herrera-Sobek). Houston, Texas, Arte Publico Press, 1988.

Chicana (W)Rites: On Word and Film (co-editor, with Maria Herrera-Sobek). Berkeley, California, Third Woman Press, 1995.

Contributor, Cuentos: Short Stories by Latinas. Kitchen Table/Women of Color Press, 1983.

Contributor, Woman of Her Word, edited by Evangelina Vigil. Houston, Texas, Arte Publico Press, 1984.

Contributor, Breaking Boundaries: Latina Writings and Critical Readings, edited by Asuncion Horno-Delgado, Eliana Ortego, Nina M. Scott, and Nancy Saporta Sternbach. Amherst, University of Massachusetts Press, 1989.

Contributor, New Chicana/Chicano Writing, edited by Charles M. Tatum. Tucson, University of Arizona Press, 1992.

* * *

Helena Maria Viramontes is committed to exploring creative representations of Chicana women in the contemporary United States. As an academic she has co-edited with Maria Herrera-Sobek two anthologies that examine the imaginative output of Chicana women and its political implications: Chicana Creativity and Criticism: Charting New Frontiers in American Literature and Chicana (W)Rites: On Word and Film. As an author of fiction, Viramontes has published two novels and two collections of short pieces. The Moths and Other Stories, Paris Rats in E.L.A., Under the Feet of Jesus and Their Dogs Came with Them all focus on the lives of Chicana women and their relationships, both in the familial realm and in American society at large.

Viramontes no sooner began to publish than she began to receive accolades for her writing style and the sensitive depiction of her characters' internal conflicts. By 1979 she had received two awards from the literary magazine Statement and another from the University of California at Irvine for her short stories. The Moths and Other Stories, published after her enrollment in UC Irvine's creative writing program, emphasizes her dedication to providing counter narratives to popular representations of Chicana women, as does Paris Rats in E.L.A., her second story collection. Exploring the impact of sexual discrimination in their lives—both from within their communities and without—as well as the racial discrimination and disproportionate levels of poverty to which Chicana women are prone, Viramontes' stories provide a window into the interior lives of women too often overlooked by mainstream society. That their culture can be both sustaining and debilitating is crucial to Viramontes' fiction: the paternalism of American Imperialism is certainly critiqued, but not without a similar awareness of the damaging patriarchal impulse in Chicano culture. How these forces overlap and impact the lives of Chicana mothers, daughters, and wives is thematically central in these stories

Her first novel, Under the Feet of Jesus, is a sustained examination of the themes established in The Moths and Other Stories through the life of a thirteen-year-old migrant worker, Estella, and her family. Viramontes' much remarked upon lyrical language evokes not only Estella's enthusiasm, defiance, and dreams for the future, but also her dissatisfaction with her present life of discrimination, frustration, labor, and poverty. Through the stream of consciousness style Viramontes so often employs, the reader is also provided with compelling glimpses into the interior world of Estella's mother, Petra, defeated and betrayed by a life to which she seems condemned, and Estella's step-father, who contemplates escaping his responsibility by abandoning his family. Viramontes, as the daughter of former cottonpickers, brings both a personal and political commitment to representing the difficult lives of migrant workers and combating their erasure in popular representations of California. Distinctly American in subject matter and content, Under the Feet of Jesus is particular to the lives of her subjects, while also providing a basis for a critique of the organization and distribution of power in American society at large.

Their Dogs Came with Them, Viramontes' second novel, remains thematically consistent with her previous work, while moving from the rural setting of Under the Feet of Jesus to the urban East Los Angeles of the 1960s. Her characters do not have access to the political resources that would allow them to contest the impeding destruction of their neighborhood in order to construct a new freeway: in this novel urban renewal and development become synonymous with urban dislocation, denial, and destruction. Not merely a portrait of one family, Their Dogs Came with Them is both a requiem for, and celebration of, a community on the verge of eradication and dispersal. Nevertheless, a sense of a precedent for cultural continuity and survival is established in Viramontes' evocation of other historical colonial impositions on the Chicano people. The ancestral myths invoked by different characters find parallels in their knowledge that this moment in history will one day too assume mythic proportions. This communal experience and history is a unifying force in a narrative of a world populated by wildly disparate, never stereotypical characters, ranging from gang girls and boys to the devoutly faithful, the intellectually brilliant, and the physically—or more often emotionally—challenged.

Viramontes continues to be recognized for her wok, having received a National Endowment for the Arts fellowship, and the John Dos Passos prize in literature. Her social commitment to Chicano/a culture and peoples has kept pace with this recognition, not only through her fiction, but also in her advising Chicano/a students and aspiring writers through her work at Cornell University, where she is an Assistant Professor of Literature.

-Jennifer Harris

VIRTUE, Noel

Nationality: New Zealander. Born: 1947. Career: Formerly a zookeeper. Since 1987 a writer. Address: David Bolt Associates, 12 Heath Drive, Send, Surrey GU23 7ED, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Redemption of Elsdon Bird. London, Owen, and New York, Grove Press, 1987.

Then Upon the Evil Season. London, Owen, 1988.

In the Country of Salvation. Auckland, Random Century, and London, Hutchinson, 1990.

Always the Islands of Memory. London, Hutchinson, 1991.

The Eye of the Everlasting Angel. London, Owen, 1992.

Sandspit Crossing. London, Owen, 1993.

The Transfiguration of Martha Friend. Auckland and New York, Vintage, 1996.

Losing Alice. Auckland, Random House New Zealand, 1999.

Other

Among the Animals: A Zookeeper's Story. London, Owen, 1988. Once a Brethren Boy. (autobiography). Auckland, Vintage, 1995.

* * *

A latecomer to novel writing, Noel Virtue has made a small but definite name for himself in contemporary New Zealand fiction. He has been in residence in the United Kingdom for much of his career, but returned to New Zealand in 1995 to launch his autobiography, Once a Brethren Boy, at New Zealand's first Gay and Lesbian Writing Festival, which was held at Auckland College of Education. Virtue was a catalyst for the Man to Man Gay and Lesbian Writing Festival designed to increase the visibility of lesbian and gay writing with publishers and the general public, and to provide motivation and support for aspiring writers.

Much of Virtue's fiction deals with a very peculiar family life which is psychologically brutal due to religious fanaticism. Britain's newly acclaimed novelist, Jeanette Winterston, portrays her self-discovery as a lesbian woman in a similarly constricting and religiously irrational home in her breakthrough book, Oranges Are Not the Only Fruit. Virtue's approach to his fictional narratives about similar self-discoveries in an non-receptive, even hostile, environment differ from Winterston's postmodernism. His style and form are conservative, which is, perhaps, an aesthetic concession to the conservatism ingrained during his childhood. Nevertheless, the contrast of the conservative style to the liberal nature of the authorial narrative lends a powerful, even disturbing, tension that never ceases.

The Redemption of Elsdon Bird, Virtue's first work, is to my mind his most successful. In libraries it is often classed as teenage fiction, but this designation is misleading, as the emotions and themes it deals with are distinctly adult. Written in a spare, vivid style, it tells the story of a lonely youngster whose upbringing at the hands of 'holy roller' parents is strange and nightmarish. Isolated by his family's religious convictions, Elsdon is the subject of constant physical abuse. He is systematically deprived of everyone and everything he loves, and at the conclusion of the book, he faces life alone. The story's plot development of such extreme personal loss would be almost unbearable were it not for the protagonist's poignantly cheerful character.

Critics have been fascinated by the contrasting elements in Elsdon Bird, such as the victim's cheerful optimism and innocence despite his heartless environment, and the cruel irony of evil in religiosity in most of Virtue's other work. They find a saintly virtue in the author's courage to redeem passion from the control of hypocritical and close-minded Bible thumpers. The price Virtue pays for his sincerity is a socially inbred guilt about who he is. In a 1990 interview, Virtue suggests that he is "dogged by hellfire and brimstone."

One can surmise that Virtue's reluctance to present his life and sincere beliefs caused most of the delays in the onset of his public life as an author. For many years, he worked as a zookeeper. These years are chronicled in his 1988 book, Among the Animals: A Zookeeper's Story. Anonymity, however, always rewards fiction writers with the ability to eavesdrop on the lives and speech of those around them. Virtue's skilled use of New Zealand slang is specific evidence of this, especially in combination with Elsdon Bird's innocent way of speaking in the debut novel, which is both comic and touching. It is the character's own innocent optimism that will rescue him from the concluding despair in the story's end.

Then Upon the Evil Season continues the themes of violence and religious mania. As in the earlier novel the focus is on a child, in this case a teenager, Lubin, who must cope with his parent's fundamentalist belief and the persecution they invite. Mixed in with this burdensome family life, there is a murder and two unusual animals, an ostrich and a dolphin, whose natural goodness serves to highlight man's cruelty and greed. It is a more ambitious novel than The Redemption of Elsdon Bird because the plot is much more complex and the number of significant characters is greatly increased. For these reasons, Then Upon the Evil Season is less successful than the first novel, for it lacks the earlier book's intensity. The characters—some are animal and some are human—seem to be allegorical figures designed for readers in their teens, but may appear to be stereotypes to adult readers.

With In the Country of Salvation, Virtue has attempted to write a properly adult novel, one that deals with several different lives over a long period of time. The main focus, once again, is on a lonely child, Billy, whose upbringing at the hands of religiously obsessed parents causes him much unhappiness, driving him to attempt suicide. Billy, as it happens, has a double cross to bear in that he is homosexual; however, all of the family members are injured and suffering in some real or imagined ways, until all achieve some kind of a redemptive state of forgiveness. This third novel is more ambitious than the first two, and some say that Virtue sometimes fails to sustain interest in a lengthy narrative. To some extent the problem lies with the characters themselves: lacking Elsdon's touching optimism, their unhappiness is more grueling than affecting. Another problem is that the focus of the novel is too diffuse. Subplots involving Colin and Seddon, Billy's older brothers, are interesting but tend to distract from, rather than complement, Billy's agony. Despite its flaws, In the Country of Salvation does have its moments.

Virtue's books gain in mastery as he continues to explore religious mania and the suffering it inflicts upon children. He has published five books since 1991 in addition to his autobiography. They include Always the Islands of Memory, The Eye of the Everlasting Angel, Sandspit Crossing, The Transfiguration of Martha Friend, and Losing Alice. The most recent additions to Virtue's oeuvre continue in the development of his perspicacious voice, one that is moral and decent without the negative impositions of zealous religion.

-John O'Leary, updated by Hedwig Gorski

VOLLMANN, William T.

Nationality: American. Born: Santa Monica, California, 28 July 1959. Education: Attended Deep Springs College, 1977–79; Cornell University, B.A. 1981; graduate study at University of California, Berkeley, 1982–83. Career: Founder, CoTangent Press; writer. Awards: Ludwig Vogelstein award, 1987; Whiting Writers' award, 1988; Shiva Naipaul Memorial prize, 1989; PEN Center USA West Literary award, 1997. Agent: c/o Viking-Penguin, 375 Hudson Street, New York, New York 10014, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

You Bright and Risen Angels: A Cartoon. New York, Atheneum, 1987.

Seven Dreams: A Book of North American Landscapes, Volume 1, The Ice-Shirt, New York, Viking, 1990; Volume 2, Fathers and Crows, New York, Viking, 1992; Volume 6, The Rifles, New York, Viking, 1993.

Whores for Gloria; or, Everything Was Beautiful until the Girls Got Anxious (documentary novel). London, Pan-Picador, 1991; New York, Pantheon, 1992.

Butterfly Stories: A Novel. New York, Grove/Atlantic, 1993. The Royal Family. New York, Viking, 2000.

Short Stories

The Rainbow Stories. New York, Atheneum, 1989.

Thirteen Stories and Thirteen Epitaphs. London, Deutsch, 1991; New York, Grove, 1994.

The Atlas: People, Places, and Visions. New York, Viking, 1996.

Other

An Afghanistan Picture Show: Or, How I Saved the World (memoir). New York, Farrar, Straus, 1992.

Open All Night (text), photographs by Ken Miller. Woodstock, New York, Overlook Press, 1995. William T. Vollmann is the prodigiously prolific author of several novels, collections of short stories, and numerous nonfiction articles for The New Yorker, Spin, and other publications. Like others of his contemporaries labeled "postmodernists," Vollmann refuses to distinguish between fiction, journalism, autobiography, and fantasy, preferring instead to travel among genres in his work.

Temperamentally, Vollmann's fiction is most often described as alienated and lonely. His characters—prostitutes, street people, skinheads—are culled from the margins of society, and his stories unfold through finely drawn scenes of lust and violence rendered in prose at once poetic and clinical. Indeed, Vollmann has been accused of moral ambiguity in his work, in part because of this style of writing and in part because of his apparent reluctance to remark on the physical and spiritual brutality he often depicts. His collection The Atlas, and in particular the story "Under the Grass," provides a stirring counterpoint, however. The story begins with the 1968 drowning of Vollmann's sister, as the author characteristically embeds autobiographical detail into a work of fiction, and includes an extended mediation on death and guilt, responsibility and pain, and finally on the genesis of his own empathy for and identification with the doomed.

The oeuvre of Vollmann may be divided into two categories: his historical works and what might be best described as his "extreme fiction." Like other postmodern novelists before him—Don DeLillo and E.L. Doctorow, for instance—Vollmann's outlook seems to be shaped by philosophy's pronouncement of the death of the metanarrative, and in particular by the idea that history itself is an imaginative construct, a fiction. This sensibility is evident throughout Vollmann's historical novels, which critics have called "historiographic metafiction."

In his Seven Dreams: A Book of North American Landscapes, which is a planned series of seven volumes, Vollmann explores the contingency of history and colonialism and, most especially, the Western self's construction of the indigenous Other. In the three volumes completed, Vollmann effects a remarkable fusion of historiography, confessional poetry, anthropology, philosophy, and sociology. Each book is meticulously researched, and one can only marvel at the extent of Vollmann's polymath interests. In volume one, The Ice-Shirt, he examines the tenth-century Norse landings in Greenland; in volume two, Fathers and Crows, the French settlement of what would become Canada; and in volume six, The Rifles, the Canadian government's relocation of the Intuits to the Arctic Circle in the 1950s.

The second category of Vollmann's work is the extreme fiction, his portraits of the marginalized and his excursions into the sexual fringes of society. Characteristic is Butterfly Stories, in which Vollmann follows the protagonist—known to the reader first as "the butterfly boy," then later "the journalist" and finally "the husband"—through a travel narrative that empties into the killing fields of Cambodia. There he falls in love with a prostitute, Vanna. The journalist returns to California HIV-positive and dreams of bringing Vanna to America, but he is killed by the Khmer Rouge as he tries to re-enter Cambodia.

Vollmann has argued that what propels his fiction is the inescapable innateness of sex and violence in all people. And yet he has also said that what drives him most is the desire to construct beautiful sentences.

—Michele S. Shauf

VONNEGUT, Kurt, Jr.

Nationality: American. Born: Indianapolis, Indiana, 11 November 1922. Education: Shortridge High School, Indianapolis, 1936–40; Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, 1940-42; Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, 1943; University of Chicago, 1945–47. Military Service: Served in the United States Army Infantry, 1942-45: Purple Heart. Family: Married 1) Jane Marie Cox in 1945 (divorced 1979), one son and two daughters, and three adopted sons; 2) the photographer Jill Krementz in 1979, one daughter. Career: Police reporter, Chicago City News Bureau, 1946; worked in public relations for the General Electric Company, Schenectady, New York, 1947–50. Since 1950 freelance writer. After 1965, teacher, Hopefield School, Sandwich, Massachusetts. Visiting lecturer, Writers Workshop, University of Iowa, Iowa City, 1965-67, and Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1970–71; visiting professor, City University of New York, 1973–74. Awards: Guggenheim fellowship, 1967; American Academy grant, 1970. M.A.: University of Chicago, 1971; D.Litt.: Hobart and William Smith Colleges, Geneva, New York, 1974. Member: American Academy, 1973. Lives in New York City. Address: c/o Donald C. Farber, Tanner Gilbert Propp and Sterner, 99 Park Avenue, 25th Floor, New York, New York 10016, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Player Piano. New York, Scribner, 1952; London, Macmillan, 1953; as Utopia 14, New York, Bantam, 1954.

The Sirens of Titan. New York, Dell, 1959; London, Gollancz, 1962. Mother Night. New York, Fawcett, 1962; London, Cape, 1968.

Cat's Cradle. New York, Holt Rinehart, and London, Gollancz, 1963. God Bless You, Mr. Rosewater; or, Pearls Before Swine. New York, Holt Rinehart, and London, Cape, 1965.

Slaughterhouse-Five; or, The Children's Crusade. New York, Delacorte Press, 1969; London, Cape, 1970.

Breakfast of Champions; or, Goodbye, Blue Monday. New York, Delacorte Press, and London, Cape, 1973.

Slapstick; or, Lonesome No More! New York, Delacorte Press, and London, Cape, 1976.

Jailbird. New York, Delacorte Press, and London, Cape, 1979.Deadeye Dick. New York, Delacorte Press, 1982; London, Cape, 1983.

Galápagos. New York, Delacorte Press, and London, Cape, 1985.Bluebeard. New York, Delacorte Press, 1987; London, Cape, 1988.Hocus Pocus; or, What's the Hurry, Son? New York, Putnam, and London, Cape, 1990.

Three Complete Novels. New York, Wings Books, 1995. Timequake. New York, G.P. Putnam's, 1997.

Short Stories

Canary in a Cat House. New York, Fawcett, 1961.

Welcome to the Monkey House: A Collection of Short Works. New York, Delacorte Press, 1968; London, Cape, 1969.

Bagombo Snuff Box: Uncollected Short Fiction. New York, G.P. Putnam's Sons, 1999.

Plays

Happy Birthday, Wanda June (as Penelope, produced Cape Cod, Massachusetts, 1960; revised version, as Happy Birthday, Wanda June, produced New York, 1970; London, 1977). New York, Delacorte Press, 1970; London, Cape, 1973.

The Very First Christmas Morning, in Better Homes and Gardens (Des Moines, Iowa), December 1962.

Between Time and Timbuktu; or, Prometheus-5: A Space Fantasy (televised 1972; produced New York, 1976). New York, Delacorte Press, 1972; London, Panther, 1975.

Fortitude, in Wampeters, Foma, and Granfalloons, 1974.

Timesteps (produced Edinburgh, 1979).

God Bless You, Mr. Rosewater, adaptation of his own novel (produced New York, 1979).

Television Plays: Auf Wiedersehen, with Valentine Davies, 1958; Between Time and Timbuktu, 1972.

Other

Wampeters, Foma, and Granfalloons: Opinions. New York, Delacorte Press, 1974; London Cape, 1975.

Sun Moon Star. New York, Harper, and London, Hutchinson, 1980.Palm Sunday: An Autobiographical Collage. New York, Delacorte Press, and London, Cape, 1981.

Nothing Is Lost Save Honor: Two Essays. Jackson, Mississippi, Nouveau Press, 1984.

Conversations with Kurt Vonnegut, edited by William Rodney Allen. Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1988.

Fates Worse than Death: An Autobiographical Collage of the 1980s. New York, Putnam, 1991.

Like Shaking Hands with God: A Conversation about Writing (with Lee Stringer). New York, Seven Stories Press, 1999.

God Bless You, Dr. Kevorkian. New York, Seven Stories Press, 2000.

*

Bibliography: Kurt Vonnegut: A Comprehensive Bibliography by Asa B. Pieratt, Jr., Julie Huffman-Klinkowitz, and Jerome Klinkowitz, Hamden, Connecticut, Archon, 1987.

Critical Studies: Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., by Peter J. Reed, New York, Warner, 1972; Kurt Vonnegut: Fantasist of Fire and Ice by David H. Goldsmith, Bowling Green, Ohio, Popular Press, 1972; The Vonnegut Statement edited by Jerome Klinkowitz and John Somer, New York, Delacorte Press, 1973, London, Panther, 1975, Vonnegut in America: An Introduction to the Life and Work of Kurt Vonnegut edited by Klinkowitz and Donald L. Lawler, New York, Delacorte Press, 1977, Kurt Vonnegut, London, Methuen, 1982 and Slaughterhouse Five: Reforming the Novel and the World, Boston, Twayne, 1990, both by Klinkowitz; Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. by Stanley Schatt, Boston, Twayne, 1976; Kurt Vonnegut by James Lundquist, New York, Ungar, 1977; Vonnegut: A Preface to His Novels by Richard Giannone, Port Washington, New York, Kennikat Press, 1977; Kurt Vonnegut: The Gospel from Outer Space by Clark Mayo, San Bernardino, California, Borgo Press, 1977; Vonnegut's Duty-Dance with Death: Theme and Structure in Slaughterhouse-Five by Monica Loeb, Ume[ao], Sweden, Ume[ao] Studies in the Humanities, 1979; Critical Essays on Kurt Vonnegut edited by Robert Merrill, Boston, Hall, 1990; Forever Pursuing Genesis: The Myth of Eden in the Novels of Kurt Vonnegut by Leonard Mustazza, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, Bucknell University Press, 1990; Understanding Kurt Vonnegut by William Rodney Allen, Columbia, University of South Carolina Press, 1991; Kurt Vonnegut by Donald E. Morse, San Bernardino, California, Borgo Press, 1992; Critical Response to Kurt Vonnegut edited by Leonard Mustazza, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1994; Sanity Plea: Schizophrenia in the Novels of Kurt Vonnegut by Lawrence R. Broer, Tuscaloosa, University of Alabama Press, 1994; Kurt Vonnegut, Jr.'s Slaughterhouse-Five, edited by Tonnvane Wiswell and M. Fogiel, illustrations by Matteo DeCosmo, Piscataway, New Jersey, Research & Education Association, 1996; The Short Fiction of Kurt Vonnegut by Peter J. Reed, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1997; Chaos Theory and the Interpretation of Literary Texts: The Case of Kurt Vonnegut by Kevin A. Boon, Lewiston, New York, Edwin Mellen Press, 1997; Wholeness Restored: Love of Symmetry as a Shaping Force in the Writings of Henry James, Kurt Vonnegut, Samuel Butler and Raymond Chandler by Ralf Norrman, Frankfurt am Main and New York, P. Lang, 1998; Kurt Vonnegut, edited by Harold Bloom, Philadelphia, Chelsea House Publishers, 2000.

* * *

During the 1960s Kurt Vonnegut emerged as one of the most influential and provocative writers of fiction in America. His writing, indeed, constitutes an unremitting protest against horrors of the 20th century—the disastrous wars, the deterioration of the environment, and the dehumanization of the individual in a society dominated by science and technology. Such protest is by no means new in literature. The peculiar force of Vonnegut's voice may be traced to its complete contemporaneity. Fantasy (usually of the science variety), black humor, a keen sense of the absurd are the ingredients of his novels and stories.

Vonnegut has described himself as "a total pessimist." And indeed his writing offers little except wry laughter to counteract despair. This is certainly true of his first novel, Player Piano. The time of the story is the not-too-distant future and the place is an industrial city, Ilium, New York, which serves as the setting for much of Vonnegut's fiction and which resembles Schenectady, New York, where Vonnegut once worked in public relations. In the novel not only the local industry but industries throughout the nation have been completely mechanized. Machines supplant human workers because machines make fewer errors. All national policy is determined by huge computers located in Mammoth Cave. A small elite of scientists are in charge of all production. The masses, who are provided with all material necessities and comforts, including an impressive array of gadgetry, serve in either military or work battalions. Acutely aware of their dehumanization and worthlessness except as consumers of the huge output of the machines, the common people revolt under the leadership of a preacher and several renegade scientists. Though the revolt in Ilium, at least, is successful and many of the objectionable machines are destroyed, Vonnegut denies his readers any sense of satisfaction. He records that the rebels destroyed not only obnoxious machinery but also useful and necessary technological devices such as sewage disposal plants. Also, they soon began to tinker with the unneeded machines with a view to making them operative again. In the face of such inveterate stupidity the leaders suicidally surrender to the government forces.

An obvious question arises: Why should Vonnegut or his readers concern themselves with the dehumanization of apparent morons?

What, indeed, is there to be dehumanized? An answer is not readily forthcoming, but perhaps Vonnegut believes that there is some value in trying to save humanity from its own stupidity. In each novel there is at least one person who is aware of human folly, and thus is living proof that intellectual blindness is not universal. More frequently than not, these discerning individuals are reformers, as in Player Piano, who make self-sacrificing efforts to improve the lot of their fellow beings. Thus The Sirens of Titan, which in plot is a rather conventional example of science fiction with an interplanetary setting, has as its reformer a man who, having been rendered immortal, omniscient, and virtually omnipotent by entrapment in a "chrono-synclasticinfundibulum," sets about uniting all nations of the world in bonds of brotherhood by staging an abortive attack against the earth by Martians. The latter are earthlings abducted to Mars and converted to automatons by the insertion in their skulls of radio antennae through which orders are transmitted from a central directorate. These unfortunates are thus subjected to ruthless dehumanization and exploitation, but for a worthwhile end. The scheme is successful; the earth becomes united after the defeat of the Martians and the unity is cemented by the establishment of a new religion—the Church of God the Utterly Indifferent. The happy outcome is somewhat clouded, however, by the revelation that all human history has been determined by the trivial needs of the inhabitants of the planet Tralfamadore in one of the more remote galaxies.

Cat's Cradle and God Bless You, Mr. Rosewater; or, Pearls Before Swine also focus upon the efforts of altruistic individuals to alleviate misery. Cat's Cradle presents an entirely new religion, Bokonism, (named for its founder, Bokonon), much of the doctrine of which is written in Calypso verse. According to Bokonism religion should be an opiate; its function is to deceive and, by deceiving, make people happy. It teaches that God directs human destinies and that humankind is sacred, and it promotes an ethic of love, which believers manifest by pressing the soles of their feet against those of fellow believers. Bokonism was founded and flourished on a Caribbean island oppressed by a Duvalier-type dictator. It flourished because it was outlawed, for, according to Cat's Cradle at least, a religion functions most vigorously when opposed to the existing social order. There can be no doubt that Bokonism brings relief to the wretched islanders, the final horror of whose existence is that of being congealed, along with the rest of the world, by ice-nine, a discovery of an Ilium scientist. God Bless You, Mr. Rosewater; or, Goodbye, Blue Monday recounts the efforts of an enormously wealthy man to alleviate human misery through the more or less random disbursement of the Rosewater Foundation's almost limitless funds.

Two other novels, Mother Night and Slaughterhouse-Five; or, The Children's Crysade, both of which focus on World War II, contain no such reformers or philanthropists. In these the protagonists are never really in a position to be altruistic, even though they wish to be. In Mother Night Howard W. Campbell, Jr., serves schizophrenically as the Nazis' chief English-language radio propagandist at the same time that he is one of the allies' most effective spies. Years after the war he finds himself in an Israeli prison awaiting trial along with Adolf Eichmann. Here he commits suicide, even though a bizarre turn of events has ensured his acquittal. He realizes that one who has played his dual roles has betrayed beyond recovery his own humanity—a realization achieved by few Vonnegut characters in analogous situations.

Slaughterhouse-Five; or, The Children's Crusade, perhaps Vonnegut's most impressive novel, presents two characters who can see beneath the surface to the tragic realities of human history but make no attempt to bring about a change. These are the author himself, who is a frequent commentator, and the protagonist, Billy Pilgrim. The central event is the fire-bombing of Dresden—a catastrophe that Vonnegut had witnessed as a prisoner of war. Billy Pilgrim's liberating insights are the outgrowth of his being freed from the prison of time and, as a result, seeing the past, present and future as one and coexistent. One consequent realization is that death is an illusion. Though his periods of release from time occur on earth, their significance is explained to him by inhabitants of the distant planet Tralfamadore, to which he is transported on a Tralfamadorian spaceship. Though Billy finds no way to improve the tragically absurd condition of humanity, he does arrive at an understanding of it and a resultant deepening of compassion.

Four novels after Slaughterhouse-Five—Breakfast of Champions; or, Goodbye, Blue Monday, Slapstick; or, Lonesome No More!, Jailbird, and Deadeye Dick—continue to satirize human folly in its contemporary manifestations, still relying on fantasy, black humor, and the absurd as tools of satire. Yet their tone differs from that of the earlier fiction. The seriousness of theme and, above all, the compassion implicit in such books as Cat's Cradle and Slaughterhouse-Five are all but absent. Slapstick; or, Lonesome No More!, indeed, would be appropriate as a title for any of the four. Fun and wit and laughs aplenty are not lacking, but thought is in short supply. The clown has shoved aside the thinker. But in the novel following these four, Galápagos, Vonnegut achieves a more subtle and more effective irony. For an epigraph he quotes from Anne Frank's Diary: "In spite of everything, I still believe people are really good at heart." Though Vonnegut, or the narrator, declares that he agrees with this statement, the characters and events in the novel provide overwhelming evidence that most people are evil at heart. According to the novel, human beings have used their "big brains"-evolution's prized gift—to destroy themselves and the world they live in. But when, by a fantastic series of events that only Vonnegut could dream up, the human species is reduced to only ten individuals marooned on the Galápagos Islands, a reverse process of evolution sets in, the "big brains' disappear, and after a million years the human species is transformed into a gentle, seal-like mammal which actually is "good at heart."

In Galápagos there is a haunting quality that is not sustained in two later novels—Bluebeard and Hocus Pocus; or, What's the Hurry, Son? The protagonist in Bluebeard is an artist, one of the founders of the abstract expressionist school of painting but later a fanatical representationalist. His great opus, which he keeps locked in a potato barn on Long Island, is an eight-by-sixty-four foot depiction of a World War II scene, presenting each object and every one of innumerable men and women in the minutest detail. Most of the satire, which is gentler than in most of Vonnegut's work, is directed against artists and writers, though peripherally other matters such as war and genocide are dealt with. Hocus Pocus; or, What's the Hurray, Son? roams over a wider field of ills: the deterioration of American education, the "buying of America" by the Japanese, the Vietnam war, the prison system, and racism.

The narrator of Hocus Pocus remarks: "All I ever wanted to overthrow was ignorance and self-serving fantasies." Later he asserts: "The truth can be very funny in an awful way, especially as it relates to greed and hypocrisy." These two statements admirably sum up Vonnegut's intention and tone in most of his fiction. To achieve his purposes (and perhaps to carry along readers with short attention spans) he employs a technique, especially in his later novels, of breaking his narratives into brief sections of no more than a paragraph, in which he recounts an anecdote that more often than not ends with a punch line. The effect somewhat resembles the performance of a stage or television comedian, though with Vonnegut there is an underlying seriousness.

Timequake was Vonnegut's first novel after a seven-year silence—and, as he revealed publicly, it was to mark the end of his career. Actually, "novel" is a bit of a strong word to apply to what is really a collection of observations, or sketches for a novel, that Vonnegut's sci-fi writer alter-ego Kilgore Trout would have written if he'd gotten around to it. The premise is that "a sudden glitch in the space-time continuum" has forced everyone to repeat the period from 1991 to 2001 without being able to change a thing.

On 30 January 2000, fire struck Vonnegut's New York brownstone; he suffered smoke inhalation, but survived.

-Perry D. Westbrook, updated by Judson Knight

WAGONER, David (Russell)

Nationality: American. Born: Massillon, Ohio, 5 June 1926. Education: Pennsylvania State University, University Park, B.A. 1947; Indiana University, Bloomington, M.A. in English 1949. Military Service: Served in the United States Navy, 1944-46. Family: Married 1) Patricia Parrot in 1961 (divorced 1982); 2) Robin Heather Seyfried in 1982. Career: Instructor, DePauw University, Greencastle, Indiana, 1949–50, and Pennsylvania State University, 1950–53; assistant professor, 1954-57, associate professor, 1958-66, and since 1966 professor of English, University of Washington, Seattle. Elliston Professor of Poetry, University of Cincinnati, 1968; editor, Princeton University Press Contemporary Poetry Series, 1977-81. Since 1966 editor, Poetry Northwest, Seattle; since 1983 poetry editor, University of Missouri Press, Columbia. Awards: Guggenheim fellowship, 1956; Ford fellowship, for drama, 1964; American Academy grant, 1967; Morton Dauwen Zabel prize, 1967; National Endowment for the Arts grant, 1969; Oscar Blumenthal prize, 1974; Fels prize, 1975; Eunice Tietjens Memorial prize, 1977; Sherwood Anderson award, 1980; English-Speaking Union prize, 1980 (Poetry, Chicago); Union League prize, 1987; Ruth Lilly Poetry prize, 1991; Levinson prize, 1994. Chancellor, Academy of American Poets, 1978. Address: English Department, University of Washington, Seattle, Washington 98195, U.S.A; or 5416 154th Place, S.W., Edmonds, Washington 98026, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Man in the Middle. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1954; London, Gollancz, 1955.

Money, Money, Money. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1955. Rock. New York, Viking Press, 1958.

The Escape Artist. New York, Farrar Straus, and London, Gollancz,

Baby, Come On Inside. New York, Farrar Straus, 1968.

Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight? New York, Farrar Straus, 1970.

The Road to Many a Wonder. New York, Farrar Straus, 1974. Tracker. Boston, Little Brown, 1975.

Whole Hog. Boston, Little Brown, 1976.

The Hanging Garden. Boston, Little Brown, 1980; London, Hale, 1982.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "Afternoon on the Ground," in Prairie Schooner (Lincoln, Nebraska), Fall 1978.
- "Mr. Wallender's Romance," in Hudson Review (New York), Spring
- "Cornet Solo," in Boston Globe Magazine, 20 May 1979.
- "The Water Strider," in Boston Globe Magazine, 14 October 1979.
- "Fly Boy," in Ohio Review 25 (Athens), 1980.
- "The Bird Watcher," in Georgia Review (Athens), Spring 1980.

- "Snake Hunt," in Western Humanities Review (Salt Lake City), Winter 1980.
- "Magic Night at the Reformatory," in Shenandoah (Lexington, Virginia), vol. 34, no. 4, 1981.
- "The Sparrow," in Epoch (Ithaca, New York), Spring 1981.
- "Mermaid," in Western Humanities Review (Salt Lake City), Summer 1981.
- "Wild Goose Chase," in Necessary Fictions, edited by Stanley W. Lindberg and Stephen Corey. Athens, University of Georgia Press, 1986.
- "The Land of the Dead," in Georgia Review (Athens), Summer 1987.
- "The Riding Lesson," in Southwest Review (Dallas), Autumn 1987.

Plays

Any Eye for an Eye for an Eye (produced Seattle, 1973).

Screenplays: The Escape Artist, 1981.

Poetry

Dry Sun, Dry Wind. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1953. A Place to Stand. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1958.

Poems. Portland, Oregon, Portland Art Museum, 1959.

The Nesting Ground. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1963.

Five Poets of the Pacific Northwest, with others, edited by Robin Skelton. Seattle, University of Washington Press, 1964.

Staying Alive. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1966.

New and Selected Poems. Bloomington, Indiana University Press,

Working Against Time. London, Rapp and Whiting, 1970.

Riverbed. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1972.

Sleeping in the Woods. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1974. A Guide to Dungeness Spit. Port Townsend, Washington, Graywolf Press, 1975.

Travelling Light. Port Townsend, Washington, Graywolf Press, 1976. Collected Poems 1956-1976. Bloomington, Indiana University Press,

Who Shall Be the Sun? Poems Based on the Lore, Legends, and Myths of Northwest Coast and Plateau Indians. Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1978.

In Broken Country. Boston, Little Brown, 1979.

Landfall. Boston, Little Brown, 1981.

First Light. Boston, Little Brown, 1983.

Through the Forest: New and Selected Poems 1977–1987. New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 1987.

Walt Whitman Bathing. Champaign, University of Illinois Press, 1996.

Other

Editor, Straw for the Fire: From the Notebooks of Theodore Roethke 1943-1963. New York, Doubleday, 1972.

Manuscript Collections: Olin Library, Washington University, St. Louis; University of Washington, Seattle.

Critical Studies: "David Wagoner's Fiction: In the Mills of Satan" by William J. Schafer in Critique (Minneapolis), vol. 9, no. 1, 1965; "It Dawns on Us That We Must Come Apart," in Alone with America by Richard Howard, New York, Atheneum, 1969, London, Thames and Hudson, 1970, revised edition, Atheneum, 1980; "An Interview with David Wagoner," in Crazy Horse 12 (Marshall, Minnesota), 1972; "A Conversation with David Wagoner," in Yes (Avoca, New York), vol. 4, no. 1, 1973; "On David Wagoner," in Salmagundi (Saratoga Springs, New York), Spring-Summer 1973, and "Pelting Dark Windows," in Parnassus (New York), Spring-Summer 1977, both by Sanford Pinsker; David Wagoner by Ron McFarland, Boise, Idaho, Boise State University, 1989; The World of David Wagoner by Ron McFarland, Moscow, Idaho, University of Idaho Press, 1997.

David Wagoner comments:

It is almost impossible for me to comment coherently on my own fiction, except to say that I began writing poetry first and received early encouragement as a writer of fiction from Edward J. Nicols at Penn State and Peter Taylor at Indiana University, and later from Malcolm Cowley at Viking Press and Catherine Carver who was then at Harcourt Brace. I seem to have a penchant for what might be called serious farce, but whether farce can stand the serious strains I put on it, I must leave to others to say. I also recognize my tendency to write what I believe critics call "initiation" novels. I tend to dramatize or write in scenes rather than to be discursive. One clear theme would seem to be the would-be innocent protagonist vs. the corrupt city, perhaps a result of my having grown up between Chicago and Gary, Indiana, where the most sophisticated and effective forms of pollution were first perfected.

* * *

In his novels, David Wagoner has pursued the themes of innocence and corruption, of the connections between past, present and future, of the individual trapped in a violent society. The novels depict individuals corrupted by modern urban life, protagonists essentially innocent and helpless damaged by the pressures of family and further maimed by society. Wagoner skillfully uses Dickensian comedy and drama to create a tragic myth of man stripped and abandoned by his parents and his fellows yet struggling to survive and to remain intact.

The Man in the Middle and Money, Money, Money describe helpless, childlike adults caught up in criminal machinations. The Escape Artist and Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight? treat the same theme from the viewpoint of juvenile protagonists. Each novel involves criminals and corrupt politicians who pursue and persecute an innocent victim. There is a strong element of picaresque comedy in this drama of innocence adapting to a wicked world. The later novels also develop a complex sexual theme revolving around an Oedipal relationship—a child confronted and fascinated by a destructive mother figure. Each of the protagonists must overcome this infantile sexual bondage before he is free to live wholly, just as each must learn the depth of the world's wickedness before he can shed his infantile social innocence.

The Road to Many a Wonder continues Wagoner's comedy of nineteenth-century America (begun in Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?) and his parable of innocence and the frontier. In it a gold-seeker, Isaac Bender, succeeds by the most improbable means, his questing innocence overcoming the money-corruption of the gold rush and the Hobbesian savagery of the raw West. The novel is marked by a comic sweetness and light that offsets the bleak portraiture of venal American character-types.

Tracker and Whole Hog extend Wagoner's story of the frontier and the wild west by focusing on the uncertainties of the pioneer spirit, the fragility of familial and social relations and the ultimate triumph of intelligent virtue over mindless evil. Both tales revolve around juvenile protagonists (Wagoner's type of innocence) who learn by painful experience to outwit a lawless adult world.

In Rock and Baby, Come On Inside Wagoner deals with the destructiveness of family life and the crippling effects of the past. Both stories concentrate on the conflict between leaving home and returning home: "You can't go home again" vs. "You must go home again." In each novel, the protagonist tries to recapture his past, to find a home place, but ends in confusion and further exile.

A recurrent pattern in Wagoner's novels is that of pursuit and flight, a nightmarish sense of implacable evil, and a recurrent scene is a metaphorical return to the womb, to primordial shelter. Charlie Bell in The Man in the Middle spends a night in a railway coin locker. Willy Grier is left in a garbage can in Money, Money, Money. Danny Masters in The Escape Artist hides out in a Goodwill Industries collection box and a US mailbox. The pattern of flight and hiding, a fragile individual pursued by a terrifying nemesis, occurs in a comic context—cynical wit and slapstick farce—for the dreamlike or mythic dimension of Wagoner's novels derives from their mixed tone. The stories encompass suspense, adventure, comedy, pathos, and a strong sense of the social and political life of midwestern cities.

In The Hanging Garden Wagoner returns to a detective-story format of homicidal insanity defeated by a man who is basically good but worn from personal and political struggle. Returning to nature (a holiday cottage), the protagonist is confronted with "natural evil" in the form of a sadistic killer. The tale becomes a description of survival of the intelligent, cultured man faced with the most primitive forces of the human psyche.

Wagoner's tragicomedies of violence achieve effects somewhat like François Truffaut's Shoot the Piano Player. The mixture of naiveté, tough-guy dialogue, violence, thriller action, and insight into complex states of mind creates a fantasy world as an accurate analog for contemporary urban life. Danny Masters, in The Escape Artist, muses on violence and trickery and how to escape them:

Danny felt his own life shut inside him, keeping as quiet as it could, shying away. Nobody should be able to break anybody open like a nut and clean out the insides, but some people did it, and he would never let them come close. That was why getting away was important, getting out, getting loose, because they had to make you sit still long enough so they could crack you open, otherwise it spoiled their aim. They were no good with moving targets, no good if you weren't where they thought you were. They knew a lot of tricks, and that was why you had to keep ahead of them, and then if you got a big enough lead, you could afford to let them know who you were, taunting them from a distance yet always ready to change shape to fool them.

Wagoner's novels reflect society's torments and traps and also explore the paths to freedom—self-understanding, imagination, and the uses of experience. While they detail corruption and destruction, they also reflect innocence and virtue. The possibilities in this world are tragic and comic, and the inevitable price of survival is loss of innocence.

-William J. Schafer

WAKEFIELD, Dan

Nationality: American. Born: Indianapolis, Indiana, 21 May 1932. Education: Shortridge High School, Indianapolis, graduated 1950; Indiana University, Bloomington, 1950-51; Columbia University, New York, 1951-55, B.A. (honors) in English 1955. Career: News editor, Princeton Packet, New Jersey, 1955; research assistant to C. Wright Mills, Columbia University, 1955; staff writer, the Nation, New York, 1956-61; contributing editor, Atlantic Monthly, Boston, 1968–82; since 1992 contributing writer, GQ Magazine. Since 1983 co-chairperson of religious education, King's Chapel, Boston. Visiting lecturer, University of Massachusetts, Boston, 1965-67, 1981, Bread Loaf Writers Conference, Middlebury, Vermont, 1966, 1968, 1970, University of Illinois, Urbana, 1968, University of Iowa, Iowa City, 1972, and Emerson College, Boston, 1982-83. Distinguished visiting writer, Florida International University, 1995. Creator and story consultant, James at 15 series, NBC Television, 1977-78. Since 1994, Board of Directors, National Writers Union. Awards: Bread Loaf Writers Conference De Voto fellowship, 1957; Nieman Foundation fellowship, for journalism, Harvard University, 1963; Rockefeller grant, 1968; National Endowment for the Arts award, for "A Visit from Granny," 1966, for unknown, 1968; Golden Eagle award, for screenplay, 1983. Going All the Way was a selection at Sundance Film Festival, 1997. Address: King's Chapel, 64 Beacon Street, Boston, Massachusetts 02108, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Going All the Way. New York, Delacorte Press, 1970; London, Weidenfeld and Nicholson, 1971.

Starting Over. New York, Delacorte Press, 1973; London, Hart Davis MacGibbon, 1974.

Home Free. New York, Delacorte Press, and London, Hart Davis MacGibbon, 1977.

Under the Apple Tree. New York, Delacorte Press, 1982. Selling Out. Boston, Little Brown, 1985.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "The Rich Girl," in Playboy, September 1965.
- "Autumn Full of Apples," in The Best American Short Stories 1966, edited by Martha Foley and David Burnett. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1966.
- "A Visit from Granny," in American Literary Anthology #2, 1966.
- "Full Moon in Sagittarius," in Atlantic, Boston, January 1973.

Plays

Television Films: James at 15, 1977; The Seduction of Miss Leona, 1980; The Innocents Abroad, from the novel by Mark Twain, 1983.

Screenplays: Going All the Way, 1997

Other

Island in the City: The World of Spanish Harlem. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1959.

Revolt in the South. New York, Grove Press, 1961.

Between the Lines: A Reporter's Personal Journey Through Public Events. New York, New American Library, 1965.

Supernation at Peace and War. Boston, Little Brown, 1968.

All Her Children: The Making of a Soap Opera. New York, Doubleday, 1976.

Returning: A Spiritual Journey. New York, Doubleday, 1988.

The Story of Your Life: Writing a Spiritual Autobiography. Boston, Beacon Press, 1990.

New York in the Fifties. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1991.

Expect a Miracle. San Francisco, HarperSanFrancisco, 1995.

Creating from the Spirit: Living Each Day As a Creative Act. New York, Ballantine Books, 1996.

How Do We Know When It's God?: A Spiritual Memoir. Boston, Little, Brown, 1999.

Editor, The Addict: An Anthology. New York, Fawcett, 1963.

*

Manuscript Collection: Mugar Memorial Library, Boston University.

Film Adaptation: Going All the Way, 1997.

Critical Studies: The New American Novel of Manners: The Fiction of Richard Yates, Dan Wakefield, and Thomas McGuane by Jerome Klinkowitz, Athens, University of Georgia Press, 1986; "Remembering the '50s": Three Spiritual Mentors" by James Wall, in The Christian Century, 109(19), 3–10 June 1992.

Dan Wakefield comments:

I believe in the novel as story, entertainment, and communication—as if those elements could be separated! One of my college English professors defined the novel as "how it was with a group of people." I believe it is that and more. I want my novels to convey interior as well as social truth. I want them to enable readers to appreciate how other people felt, to make connections among human beings in all their diversity and in their alikeness as well. I love it when readers recognize some aspect of themselves in one of my characters and thus feel "I am not the only one!" who experienced some particular type of pain or joy. I try to write the way my characters think, the way they would express themselves, and I fear this attempt to be "plain" and open is sometimes misconstrued as an inability to write in a more self-consciously "literary" style. So be it. My aim is to convey the perception of the people I write about. I write about people I love, and in so doing I wish to honor them and celebrate our common humanity.

* * *

Dan Wakefield had already established himself as a feature journalist a decade before writing his first novel, but the unique style of his journalistic writing would lay the groundwork for his fiction. Island in the City: The World of Spanish Harlem, Revolt in the South, Between the Lines, and Supernation at Peace and War, were pioneering efforts in a field which became known as "The New Journalism." Sacrificing the distance and objectivity of conventional journalism, Wakefield found the best way to write about an issue was to immerse himself within it and then write about himself. Thus he lived inside the poverty of New York City's Spanish Harlem, experienced firsthand the civil rights movements in the American south, and travelled from coast to coast talking with common citizens about the state of their nation. Moreover, the New Journalism used the techniques of realistic fiction, including characterization, narrative development, imagery, and symbolism to tell its story-conventions which had recently been discarded by the innovative novelists who wished their fiction to practice no such structuring illusions. As a result, by 1970 Wakefield was prepared to write a new American novel of manners, using the traditional form of fiction to express the new semiotics of culture he had experienced firsthand as a New Journalist.

A strong sense of how the signs of culture operate pervades Wakefield's fiction, and his novels provide an excellent cross-section of the development of American manners since World War II. Going All the Way shows two young men returning to their homes in Indianapolis after serving in the Korean War. Anxious for their own lives to begin, they face the obstacles of being fettered by their parent's obsolescent manners and by the confusions, sexual and otherwise, being wrought by their exuberant young manhood. The times are changing as well, and within this kaleidoscope of radically different values Sonny and Gunner attempt to sort out new trends in dress, music, and social conduct. That matters do not improve with age is shown in Starting Over, in which a recently divorced advertising executive refashions his life in a new city, with a new profession and friends. An entirely new system of manners takes over, with innovations such as the single-person's lonely Sunday and holidays providing difficult tests of adjustment. His protagonist's mind, however, proves to be a tabula rasa upon which any suggestion can be planted. Therefore, readers can find an index to the manners of the times (the late 1960s and early 1970s in America) simply by watching the hero's reactions. The novel closes with him drifting into another marriage, with everyone telling him how lucky he is, as he stares wistfully after a young woman on the beach.

In Wakefield's first two novels his characters are richly imprinted by their social environment. That the radically changing times may have exhausted themselves and become as blank as the tablets of his characters is suggested by Wakefield's third novel, Home Free. Change has its rhythms and dynamics, and in this case the author shows how he can employ periods of lull and regression just as effectively. The protagonist begins college but is swept away by the countercultural movement of the times. When this movement fizzles out to its entropic end, he is cast adrift on a sea of nothingness. His stimuli have been ethereal—often just the suggestive lyrics of popular music—and when faced with reality, he has little ability to respond. He crosses America, but in a parody of Jack Kerouac's On the Road, for instead of energy Wakefield's hero draws on ennui. He winds up at the extreme edge of America, on the beach outside Los Angeles, where he lives in a situation as blank as a movie screen:

His life.

He'd walked into it like walking up the aisle of a movie and melting into the screen and becoming part of the picture, the story, finding out what happened as you went along, knowing from the beginning how it would end but not when. Then he'd be standing on the stage feeling silly and strange with the screen dark and the houselights on. Bright. He'd be blinking, trying to find his way out. In the meantime this was his life.

Under the Apple Tree and Selling Out are much fuller works because Wakefield again builds his fiction from the materials of popular culture, rather than from their lack. The first, set in a small Illinois town during the years of World War II, traces the maturation of a young boy as his older brother goes off to fight and the home community responds with a semiotic riot of patriotic support. The novel's action is a study of reading habits, as the war's far-off action is translated to the "home front" by means of advertisements, promotional campaigns, and instructive attitudes. Their signal nature is perfectly matched to the boy's innocence, and as he grows up so do popular notions toward the conflict. His own understanding of sexuality and human relations parallels this cultural development as his own ability to read his brother's and future sister-in-law's emotions rises from the comic-book level to the sophisticated.

Selling Out shows Wakefield's semiotic method in high relief, because the novel constitutes a test of it. His central character is a short-story writer named Perry Moss, who experiments with a new medium (film writing) in a new environment (Hollywood). Wakefield is judicially precise in his contrast of the bi-coastal and intermedia realities, as Perry finds the jet ride from Boston to Los Angeles has taken him into an entirely different world. The contrasts are shown to good purpose, not simply for their own value but for what they contribute to an understanding of Perry's fatal attempt at change. Yet his true allegiances remain to the printed word and life in New England, and when he returns to them at the end it is with a heightened sense of appreciation which his west coast adventures have made so obvious.

Based as it is upon self-evidently autobiographical materials, Selling Out paves the way for Wakefield's subsequent work in what he calls "spiritual autobiography." Returning: A Spiritual Journey documents his commercial success in Hollywood and chronicles his physical breakdown from the stress it entailed. To this point the book parallels Selling Out. Yet where Selling Out ends, with the protagonist's return to New England, Returning begins its major work, that of detailing the restorative powers Wakefield found in a spiritual understanding of himself. It is the employment of theological and not just intellectual elements that makes such a "return" possible, and in The Story of Your Life Wakefield presents a workable program for combining narrative activity with spiritual understanding as a way of constructing one's life as a meaningful work. Such patterns appear in his own canon, as New York in the Fifties not only summarizes his own involvement with the writers and thinkers of that era but investigates his own artistic growth; as such, it serves as the legwork for a novel in progress, set in the same time and region.

Wakefield knows that man is the sign-making animal, and his appreciation of the semiosis by which human life is conducted makes him ably qualified to describe how life is lived in America today.

WALKER, Alice (Malsenior)

Nationality: American. Born: Eatonton, Georgia, 9 February 1944. Education: Spelman College, Atlanta, 1961-63; Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, New York, 1963-65, B.A. 1965. Family: Married Melvyn R. Leventhal in 1967 (divorced 1976); one daughter. Career: Voter registration and Head Start program worker, Mississippi, and with New York City Department of Welfare, mid-1960s; teacher, Jackson State College, 1968-69, and Tougaloo College, 1970–71, both Mississippi; lecturer, Wellesley College, Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1972-73, and University of Massachusetts, Boston, 1972-73; associate professor of English, Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, after 1977. Distinguished Writer, University of California, Berkeley, Spring 1982; Fannie Hurst Professor, Brandeis University, Waltham, Massachusetts, Fall 1982. Co-founder and publisher, Wild Trees Press, Navarro, California, 1984-88. Awards: Bread Loaf Writers Conference scholarship, 1966; American Scholar prize, for essay, 1967; Merrill fellowship, 1967; MacDowell fellowship, 1967, 1977; Radcliffe Institute fellowship, 1971; Lillian Smith award, for poetry, 1973; American Academy Rosenthal award, 1974; National Endowment for the Arts grant, 1977; Guggenheim grant, 1978; American Book award, 1983; Pulitzer prize, 1983; O. Henry award, 1986; Nora Astorga Leadership award, 1989; Fred Cody award for lifetime achievement, Bay Area Book Reviewers Association, 1990; Freedom to Write award, PEN Center USA West, 1990; Shelia award, Tubman African American Museum, 1998. Ph.D.: Russell Sage College, Troy, New York, 1972; D.H.L.: University of Massachusetts, Amherst, 1983. Lives in San Francisco. Address: c/o Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Inc., 1250 Sixth Avenue, San Diego, California 92101, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Third Life of Grange Copeland. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1970; London, Women's Press, 1985.

Meridian. New York, Harcourt Brace, and London, Deutsch, 1976.
The Color Purple. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1982; London, Women's Press, 1983.

The Temple of My Familiar. San Diego, Harcourt Brace, and London, Women's Press, 1989.

Possessing the Secret of Joy. New York, Harcourt Brace, and London, Cape, 1992.

By the Light of My Father's Smile. New York, Random House, 1998.

Short Stories

In Love and Trouble: Stories of Black Women. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1973; London, Women's Press, 1984.

You Can't Keep a Good Woman Down. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1981; London, Women's Press, 1982.

Complete Short Stories, London, Women's Press, n.d.

Everyday Use, edited by Barbara T. Christian. New Brunswick, Rutgers University Press, 1994.

Uncollected Short Stories

"Cuddling," in Essence (New York), July 1985.

"Kindred Spirits," in Prize Stories 1986, edited by William Abrahams. New York, Doubleday, 1986.

Poetry

Once. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1968; London, Women's Press, 1986.

Five Poems. Detroit, Broadside Press, 1972.

Revolutionary Petunias and Other Poems. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1973; London, Women's Press, 1988.

Good Night, Willie Lee, I'll See You in the Morning. New York, Dial Press, 1979; London, Women's Press, 1987.

Horses Make a Landscape Look More Beautiful. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1984; London, Women's Press, 1985.

Her Blue Body Everything We Know: Earthling Poems 1965–1990. San Diego, Harcourt Brace, and London, Women's Press, 1991.

Other (for children)

Langston Hughes, American Poet (biography). New York, Crowell, 1974.

To Hell with Dying. San Diego, Harcourt Brace, and London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1988.

Finding the Green Stone. San Diego, Harcourt Brace, and London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1991.

Other

In Search of Our Mothers' Gardens: Womanist Prose. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1983; London, Women's Press, 1984.

Living by the Word: Selected Writings 1973–1987. San Diego, Harcourt Brace, and London, Women's Press, 1988.

Warrior Marks: Female Genital Mutilation and the Sexual Blinding of Women, with Pratibha Parmar. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1993.

The Same River Twice: Honoring the Difficult, A Meditation on Life, Spirit, Art, and the Making of The Film The Color Purple, Ten Years Later. New York, Scribner, 1996.

Alice Walker Banned. San Francisco, Aunt Lute Books, 1996.

Anything We Love Can Be Saved: A Writer's Activism. New York, Random House, 1997.

The Way Forward Is with a Broken Heart. New York, Random House, 2000.

Editor, I Love Myself When I Am Laughing ... and Then Again When I Am Looking Mean and Impressive: A Zora Neale Hurston Reader. Old Westbury, New York, Feminist Press, 1979.

*

Bibliography: Alice Malsenior Walker: An Annotated Bibliography 1968–1986 by Louis H. Pratt and Darnell D. Pratt, Westport, Connecticut, Meckler, 1988; Alice Walker: An Annotated Bibliography 1968–1986 by Erma Davis Banks and Keith Byerman, London, Garland, 1989.

Critical Studies: Brodie's Notes on Alice Walker's "The Color Purple" by Marion Picton, London, Pan, 1991; Alice Walker by Conna Histy Winchell, New York, Twayne, 1992; Alice Walker by Tony Gentry, New York, Chelsea, 1993; Alice Walker and Zora Neale Hurston: The Common Bond edited by Lillie P. Howard, Westport, Connecticut, and London, Greedwood Press, 1993; Alice Walker: Critical Perspectives Past and Present edited by Henry Louis Gates and K.A. Appiah, New York, Amistad, 1993; Black Feminist Consciousness by Kashinath Ranveer, Jaipur, India, Printwell, 1995; The Voices of African American Women: The Use of Narrative and Authorial Voice in the Works of Harriet Jacobs, Zora Neale Hurston, and Alice Walker by Yvonne Johnson, New York, P. Lang, 1998; Critical Essays on Alice Walker, edited by Ikenna Dieke, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1999; Alice Walker by Maria Lauret, New York, St. Martin's Press, 1999; Alice Walker: Freedom Writer by Caroline Lazo, Minneapolis, Lerner Publications, 2000; Alice Walker, edited by Harold Bloom, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Chelsea House Publishers, 2000; Alice Walker in the Classroom: Living by the Word by Carol Jago, Urbana, Illinois, National Council of Teachers of English, 2000.

* * *

With the publication of a single startling novel, The Color Purple, Alice Walker almost single-handedly brought the struggle of the African-American female into public view for the general reading audience in the United States. It paved the way for later novels like Toni Morrison's Beloved, to which it is often compared, to find a wider and more willing readership among audiences of all ethnic backgrounds.

While none of her novels since that one have achieved quite the same level of notoriety or are so frequently taught in schools and universities, there is no doubt that Walker's prolific and persistent political, cultural, and spiritual journeys through writing have engaged a national dialogue about important issues such as women's rights, race, and identity. Walker is an activist in each of the political, cultural, and spiritual spheres, as her many nonfiction titles attest. Her novels thus far include The Third Life of Grange Copeland and Meridian, which appeared before The Color Purple, and The Temple of My Familiar, Possessing the Secret of Joy, and By the Light of My Father's Smile, which appeared afterward. In her novels, as well as in her short fiction, essays, and poetry, Walker's activism is prevalent. In the novels, however, this activism runs the risk of didacticism. In other words, some of Walker's novels work more successfully as stories than others do.

Her second novel, Meridian, is a story about a civil rights activist from the 1960s and what happens to her during and after the movement on a personal level. In this novel, the political movement causes some real-life changes in Meridian, the protagonist. For example, she leaves her husband and child to join the movement with Truman, and she is given a scholarship as a result of her involvement. The struggles of the movement become even more complex, however, when they become personal and things do not always go as Meridian plans. Truman deserts her for a white woman, and college requires too much conformity. People in the movement change sides and loyalties are put into question. In some ways, Walker seems to be questioning the value of political activism throughout this book in a healthy sort of way. However, the reader considers these larger questions as a result of Meridian's experiences, not as a result of an imposing hand of the author.

Walker turned to the cultural sphere in The Color Purple. Celie survives incest and domestic abuse to gain more and more confidence in her own abilities and talents. In many ways, the novel is a classic American rags to riches story of sorts, which may account in part for the reason it, and the feature film made of the story, remain popular. However, Celie's voice throughout the novel is most engaging and creative on Walker's part. In a way much like James Joyce's Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, the reader can chart Celie's progress and growth through her narrative of her own story. While some coincidences seem unlikely in the story (e.g. Celie gaining the inheritance just in time to make her happy by the end of the novel), the voice that was found not only by Celie, but by many silent late-twentieth-century women who were reading her story, easily overcomes the novel's occasional flaws.

Possessing the Secret of Joy contains a character who appears briefly in The Color Purple, but the novel itself is not as successful and represents the other type of Walker novel, where activism dominates story. Celie's daughter-in-law, Tashi, the young African woman married to Adam, suffers female circumcision in Africa and later returns to murder the woman who did it, M'Lissa. The novel takes a strong stand against the practice of female circumcision and becomes almost an argumentative essay against the practice rather than a story about Tashi's experience.

If Walker is social critic in Secret of Joy, she becomes a medium of sorts in an earlier, longer novel, The Temple of My Familiar. The book is about memory and family history being handed down, and the multiplicity of voices in the novel both fascinates and frustrates critics. Many find form surpassing content, which again distracts from the story at hand.

Unfortunately, the trend to move away from sound storytelling continues in By the Light of My Father's Smile. In a final act that might be prophetic to Walker's work, novelist Susannah becomes a human sacrifice and dies along with her books. The scene appears to be either a subconscious act of placing writers on some kind of martyr's pyre in terms of their activism, or Walker's attempt to kill off the novelist she feels may be dying a slow death anyway within her own creative energies. One can only wonder what will happen to Walker's dead activist novelist, whether she will resurrect or enjoy an afterlife returning to good storytelling.

-Connie Ann Kirk

WALLACE, David Foster

Nationality: American. Born: Ithaca, New York, 21 February 1962. Education: Amherst College, A.B. 1985; University of Arizona, M.F.A. 1987. Career: Associate professor of English, 1993—. Awards: Whiting Writers' Award (Mrs. Giles Whiting Foundation), 1987; John Traine Humor Prize (Paris Review), 1988; Illinois Arts Council Award for Non-Fiction, 1989; Quality Paperback Book Club's New Voices Award in Fiction, 1991; Lannan Foundation

Award for Literature, 1996. Agent: Frederick Hill Associates, 1842 Union Street, San Francisco, California 94123, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Broom of the System. New York, Viking, 1987. Infinite Jest. Boston, Little, Brown, 1996.

Short Stories

Girl with Curious Hair. New York, Penguin, 1988. Brief Interviews with Hideous Men. Boston, Little, Brown, 1999.

Other

Signifying Rappers: Rap and Race in the Urban Present (with Mark Costello). New York, Ecco Press, 1990.

A Supposedly Fun Thing I'll Never Do Again: Essays and Arguments. Boston, Little, Brown, 1997.

Contributor, Innovations: An Anthology of Modern and Contemporary Fiction, edited by Robert L. McLaughlin. Normal, Illinois, Dalkey Archive Press, 1998.

* * *

David Foster Wallace has arguably become America's most well known younger—that is, under forty—writer, due largely to his mammoth novel, Infinite Jest. Though Wallace had already published a novel, The Broom of the System, and a collection of short stories, Girl with Curious Hair, before Infinite Jest appeared, it was with this last work that Wallace began to be favorably compared with such luminaries as Thomas Pynchon and William Gaddis. Like that of these two predecessors, Wallace's work is ambitious and sprawling, by turns epicomical and philosophical.

Wallace's meganovel—extending over one thousand pages, with over one hundred pages of endnotes-is, like so much fiction of the postwar era, an amalgam of highbrow and lowbrow, literature and pop culture. Set in the vaguely near future in which time itself is identified by corporate sponsors (the "Year of the Depend Adult Undergarment''), Infinite Jest revolves, mobius-strip-like, around two institutional settings, the elite Enfield Tennis Academy and the Ennett House Drug and Alcohol Recovery facility. While apparently situated at opposite ends of the social strata, the two settings mirror each other and what Wallace diagnoses as our peculiar modern malaise. As Wallace begins to probe the lives of the tennis prodigies at Enfield, who are there to prepare for the professional circuit or "The Show," and the histories of Ennett's addicts, he slowly reveals the inescapability of cultural conditioning. Whether it is the dysfunctional families of affluence who train their children in the spiritually deadening mores of privilege or the media complex that trains consumers in the likewise deadening "pleasure" of entertainment, all are trapped in the circularity of escapism and the contemporary obsession "with watching and being watched."

Like Pynchon's most expansive work, Infinite Jest makes no attempt to refuse the language and tone of techno-scientific discourse, especially as it is incorporated into vernacular language. Wallace seems to eschew the lyrical at all costs and instead finds eloquence, such as it is, in the flat euphemism and advertising-speak that so characterize American English at the millennium. Indeed, some critics describe Wallace, like William T. Vollmann and Richard Powers, as a distinctly information-age writer, one who has interiorized the decenteredness of the database and the pacing of hyperlinking to such a degree that his fiction feels more like information generation than literary fiction, with no discernible main character but instead an architecture of characters attached by tangential associations and prolonged riffs of uncertain meaning. Wallace himself refers to this stylization as "radical realism," because it is not intended as a postmodern experiment with the novel but as a mimetic reflection of American morality circa 2000.

Nevertheless, Wallace's plot structures in particular share a great deal with the novels we have come to regard as high postmodernism, Pynchon's Gravity's Rainbow, for instance. His almost inscrutable web of conspiracies and counter-conspiracies are virtually second-nature to postmodern readers, and his philosophical concerns about the fragmented self, the impossibility of communication, and the omnivorousness of capitalism are all well-worn themes explored extensively by postmodern philosophers such as Frederic Jameson.

Wallace followed Infinite Jest with A Supposedly Funny Thing I'll Never Do Again, an anthology of essays and travel pieces, and Brief Interviews with Hideous Men, a collection of short stories.

-Michele S. Shauf

WARNER, Marina

Nationality: British. Born: London, 9 November 1946. Education: Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford, B.A. in modern languages 1963, M.A. 1964. Family: Married 1) William Shawcross in 1972 (marriage dissolved 1981), one son; 2) John Dewe Mathews in 1981. Career: Getty Scholar, 1987–88; Tinbergen Professor, Erasmus University, Rotterdam, the Netherlands, 1991. Visiting professor, University of Ulster, 1994–95; Queen Mary and Westfield College, University of London, 1994. Awards: PEN award, 1988; Commonwealth Writers prize, 1989. Since 1985, Fellow Royal Society of Literature. Agent: Rogers, Coleridge, and White, 20 Powis Mews, London W11 1NJ, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

In a Dark Wood. London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, and New York, Knopf, 1977.

The Skating Party. London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1982; New York, Atheneum, 1984.

The Lost Father. London, Chatto and Windus, 1988; New York, Simon and Schuster, 1989.

Indigo. London, Chatto and Windus, 1992; New York, Simon and Schuster, 1993.

Short Stories

The Mermaids in the Basement. London, Chatto and Windus, 1993.

Plays

The Legs of the Queen of Sheba (libretto), music by Julian Grant (produced London, 1991).

Television Play: Tell Me More, 1991.

Other

The Dragon Empress: The Life and Times of Tz-u-hsi, 1835–1908, Empress Dowager of China. London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, and New York, Macmillan, 1972.

Alone of All Her Sex: The Myth and Cult of the Virgin Mary. London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1976; New York, Vintage, 1983.

Queen Victoria's Sketchbook. London, Macmillan, and New York, Crown 1979.

The Crack in the Teacup: Britain in the 20th Century (for children). London, Deutsch, and New York, Clarion, 1979.

Joan of Arc: The Image of Female Heroism. London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, and New York, Knopf, 1981.

The Impossible Day [Night, Bath, Rocket] (for children). London, Methuen, 4 vols., 1981–82.

The Wobbly Tooth (for children). London, Deutsch, 1984.

Monuments and Maidens: The Allegory of the Female Form. London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, and New York, Atheneum, 1985.

Into the Dangerous World (pamphlet). London, Chatto and Windus, 1989.

From the Beast to the Blonde: On Fairy Tales and Their Tellers. London, Chatto and Windus, 1994; New York, Farrar Straus, 1995.

Managing Monsters: Six Myths of Our Time. London, Vintage, 1994; published as Six Myths of Our Time: Little Angels, Little Monsters, Beautiful Beasts, and More, New York, Vintage, 1995.

The Book of Signs and Symbols. New York, DK Publishing, 1996. No Go the Bogeyman: Scaring, Lulling, and Making Mock. New York, Farrar, Straus, and Giroux, 1999.

Editor, Wonder Tales. London, Chatto and Windus, 1994; New York, Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1996.

* * *

Marina Warner is a historian and author of several studies of mythology. Historical events—real or imaginary—and mythological symbols pervade the worlds in which her novels take place, literally as well as subliminally.

In Warner's first novel, In a Dark Wood, Gabriel Namier, a Jesuit priest, is studying and writing an account of the life of another Jesuit Father who was involved in a mission to China in the seventeenth century. The two men's worlds, separated by three centuries, converge, both in outer circumstance—Gabriel, too, has lived in China, and the Catholic church of his time, like that of the seventeenth century, is internally divided—and on a more personal level. Gabriel's subject was accused by his rivals of homosexuality and in the course of the novel Gabriel himself develops an obsession, albeit not overtly homosexual, with a young man.

In The Skating Party, it is not the distant past that provides a point of reference, although one central motif of the book—a cycle of frescoes discovered in a secret room in the Vatican—does provide a symbol of the patterns of male-female relationship which are enacted by Warner's characters. The story within this story is instead a more recent event, a witch-hunting ritual to which the central characters of the novel were personal witnesses, and the distance is provided not by time but by the fact that it took place in a very different country and culture

Warner's novel The Lost Father is similar to In a Dark Wood, in that past and present are linked in the form of a historical account, a story within a story; here the narrator is writing a novel set in southern Italy, based on her own family's history, and the external and the internal narratives are shared by several characters. Warner uses the device to make a point about the fallacious nature of history—or the historical novel—itself. The narrator's imagination is captured by one dimly-remembered and ill-documented episode of family legend. When this is thrown into doubt, the reader is reminded that the narrator's portrayal of the family and its characters, however vivid and convincing, is nothing more than fiction.

More often, however, comparison between the past and the present only serves to show that human nature is a constant that transcends time and cultural differences. The dominant subject of Warner's novels is the family, and other characters are almost always seen in the context of their relationship to the family's members. In a Dark Wood shows the barriers that exist between different members of the same family. In The Skating Party, father and son are distanced, initially by lack of mutual interests and later by sexual rivalry, and the novel shows how wide the generation gap really is. The Pittagora family, the subject of The Lost Father, is closely knit and the relationships between mother and daughter and between sisters are warm and compassionate, but this emphasizes all the more strongly the absence of the "lost father" of the title. In all three novels, these barriers and gaps are aggravated, if not created, by an intruder. However, the relationships between Warner's characters are seldom straightforward and unambiguous; by the end of In a Dark Wood, Oliver is no longer Gabriel's object of temptation but is seen in the more positive role of Gabriel's niece's lover. Viola, of The Skating Party, whose husband is obsessed with Katy, sees the girl not only as a threat but also as someone deserving compassion.

In The Lost Father, with its Southern Italian setting, Warner is aided by the fact that her often highly poetic language does not jar with twentieth-century English vernacular in the way that it does in her first two novels, and does not give the impression of a gratuitous display of erudition, as it occasionally does in In a Dark Wood. Her meticulous description of detail, too, is at its best in this novel, where it brings to life the Italy of the last century and makes it as vivid and immediate as present-day London. Moreover, the intrusive and occasionally condescending voice of the author as omniscient narrator, which throughout the first novel breaks in to reveal and explain the characters' thoughts and motives rather than revealing them through their own words and actions, in the latest novel has been replaced by the voice of a fictional narrator, through whom both the world in which she lives, as well as the world about which she writes, are seen, and whose humour and understanding of her characters contribute much to the success of the novel.

This increasing complexity of narrative structure and density of descriptive detail is seen still more clearly in Indigo, which draws together many of the motifs of Warner's earlier work in an impressively rich and complex book, in which the distancing effect of other times and other cultures once again both establishes and undermines parallels. Starting from the mythical Caribbean island of Shakespeare's Tempest, the novel is a meditation on colonialism and its consequences, and a story of displacement and the silencing of the dispossessed. Warner recreates the story of Sycorac, Caliban, and Ariel in the sixteenth century, whose place in the island is usurped by the coming of Europeans intent on profit; in the twentieth century, the Everard family, descendants of those earlier settlers who have dominated the island's culture through the intervening centuries, are themselves suffering the dislocation and exile of those whose place in the world and understanding of themselves has been fundamentally disrupted. Conflict invades the family, which, a microcosm of the processes of imperialism, can no longer displace its own internal contradictions onto the colonized world: husband and wife, parent and child, master/mistress and servant, all exist in tension and instability.

This novel perhaps most successfully unites Warner's intellectual and imaginative languages, drawing on fantasy and romance as well as on realism, in an intricately elaborate and sensuous prose. Myth and history, and the relations between them, are fundamental: the myths people live by, colonists and others, are placed alongside alternative and unacknowledged versions of truth. Warner's later non-fiction too has been closely concerned with myths and monsters; her collected short stories, The Mermaids in the Basement, reiterates these preoccupations. Many of these tales are retellings of familiar myths and histories, set in the contemporary world or in dialogue with it. "The Legs of the Queen of Sheba," for instance, moves between a woman trying to be one of the boys at a conference in Jerusalem, and the Queen of Sheba trying to hold her own in conversation with Solomon: two women struggling for their own speech in a man's world and a man's language. Several are inspired by paintings, reinforcing the powerfully visual quality of Warner's writing. Once again, too, the intense bonds of family life are crucial, as the book's sections make plain: "Mothers & Sisters," "Husbands & Lovers," and "Fathers & Daughters." These are clearly tales of women's perspectives (however variously), written mostly in the first person; here Warner is occasionally less persuasive, and her attempts to occupy more distant identities not always successful.

Nonetheless, Warner's is a voice of increasing assurance and power in contemporary British fiction. And how many authors have been mentioned in a song by the group Dire Straits? The reference was an oblique one: "Lady writer on the TV / talk about the Virgin Mary...." But given the fact that the song came out in 1979, when Warner had recently been promoting her book Alone of All Her Sex, the line was most likely about her. "I wish I could claim something of more distinction in terms of popular culture," she laughed in a 1999 interview with Time magazine, "but I don't know that I can." Her books, on the other hand, have contributed a great deal.

-Jessica Griffin, revisions by Katharine Hodgkin and Judson Knight

WATERHOUSE, Keith (Spencer)

Nationality: British. Born: Leeds, Yorkshire, 6 February 1929. Education: Osmondthorpe Council Schools, Leeds. Military Service: Served in the Royal Air Force. Family: Married 1) Joan Foster in 1951 (divorced 1968), one son and two daughters; 2) Stella Bingham (divorced 1989). Career: Since 1950 freelance journalist and writer in Leeds and London; columnist, Daily Mirror, 1970–86, and Daily Mail since 1986, both London. Awards: (for journalism): Granada award, 1970, and special award, 1982; IPC award, 1970, 1973; British Press award, 1978; Evening Standard award, for play, 1991. Honorary Fellow, Leeds Polytechnic. Fellow, Royal Society of Literature.

Member: Kingman Committee on Teaching of English Language, 1987–88. Agent: David Higham Associates, 5–8 Lower John Street, London W1; (theatrical) London Management Ltd., 235–241 Regent Street, London W1. Address: 29 Kenway Road, London SW5 ORP, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

There Is a Happy Land. London, Joseph, 1957.

Billy Liar. London, Joseph, 1959; New York, Norton, 1960.

Jubb. London, Joseph, 1963; New York, Putnam, 1964.

The Bucket Shop. London, Joseph, 1968; as Everything Must Go, New York, Putnam, 1969.

Billy Liar on the Moon. London, Joseph, 1975; New York, Putnam, 1976.

Office Life. London, Joseph, 1978.

Maggie Muggins; or, Spring in Earl's Court. London, Joseph, 1981. In the Mood. London, Joseph, 1983.

Thinks. London, Joseph, 1984.

Our Song. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1988.

Bimbo. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1990.

Unsweet Charity. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1992.

Good Grief. London, Sceptre, 1997.

Plays

Billy Liar, with Willis Hall, adaptation of the novel by Waterhouse (produced London, 1960; Los Angeles and New York, 1963). London, Joseph, 1960; New York, Norton, 1961.

Celebration: The Wedding and The Funeral, with Willis Hall (produced Nottingham and London, 1961). London, Joseph, 1961.

England, Our England, with Willis Hall, music by Dudley Moore (produced London, 1962). London, Evans, 1964.

Squat Betty, with Willis Hall (produced London, 1962; New York, 1964). Included in The Sponge Room, and Squat Betty, 1963.

The Sponge Room, with Willis Hall (produced Nottingham and London, 1962; New York, 1964). Included in The Sponge Room, and Squat Betty, 1963; in Modern Short Plays from Broadway and London, edited by Stanley Richards, New York, Random House, 1969.

All Things Bright and Beautiful, with Willis Hall (produced Bristol and London, 1962). London, Joseph, 1963.

The Sponge Room, and Squat Betty, with Willis Hall. London, Evans, 1963.

Come Laughing Home, with Willis Hall (as They Called the Bastard Stephen, produced Bristol, 1964; as Come Laughing Home, produced Wimbledon, 1965). London, Evans, 1965.

Say Who You Are, with Willis Hall (produced Guildford, Surrey, and London, 1965). London, Evans, 1966; as Help Stamp Out Marriage (produced New York, 1966), New York, French, 1966.

Joey, Joey, with Willis Hall, music by Ron Moody (produced Manchester and London, 1966).

Whoops-a-Daisy, with Willis Hall (produced Nottingham, 1968). London, French, 1978.

Children's Day, with Willis Hall (produced Edinburgh and London, 1969). London, French, 1975.

- Who's Who, with Willis Hall (produced Coventry, 1971; London, 1973). London, French, 1974.
- Saturday, Sunday, Monday, with Willis Hall, adaptation of a play by Eduardo De Filippo (produced London, 1973; New York, 1974). London, Heinemann, 1974.
- The Card, with Willis Hall, music and lyrics by Tony Hatch and Jackie Trent, adaptation of the novel by Arnold Bennett (produced Bristol and London, 1973).
- Filumena, with Willis Hall, adaptation of a play by Eduardo De Filippo (produced London, 1977; New York, 1980). London, Heinemann, 1978.
- Worzel Gummidge (for children), with Willis Hall, music by Denis King, adaptation of stories by Barbara Euphan Todd (produced Birmingham, 1980; London, 1981). London, French 1984.
- Steafel Variations (songs and sketches), with Peter Tinniswood and Dick Vosburgh (produced London, 1982).
- Lost Empires, with Willis Hall, music by Denis King, adaptation of the novel by J.B. Priestley (produced Darlington, County Durham, 1985).
- Mr. and Mrs. Nobody, adaptation of The Diary of a Nobody by George and Weedon Grossmith (produced London, 1986).
- Budgie, with Willis Hall, music by Mort Shuman, lyrics by Don Black (produced London, 1988).
- Jeffrey Bernard Is Unwell (produced Brighton and London, 1989).London and New York, French, 1991.
- Bookends, adaptation of The Marsh Marlowe Letters by Craig Brown (produced London, 1990).
- Jeffrey Bernard Is Unwell, with Mr. and Mrs. Nobody and Bookends. London, Penguin, 1992.
- Our Song, adaptation of his own novel. London, French, 1993.
- Screenplays, with Willis Hall: Whistle Down the Wind, 1961; The Valiant, 1962; A Kind of Loving, 1963; Billy Liar, 1963; West Eleven, 1963; Man in the Middle, 1963; Pretty Polly (A Matter of Innocence), 1967; Lock Up Your Daughters, 1969.
- Radio Plays: The Town That Wouldn't Vote, 1951; There Is a Happy Land, 1962; The Woolen Bank Forgeries, 1964; The Last Phone-In, 1976; The Big Broadcast of 1922, 1979.
- Television Plays: The Warmonger, 1970; The Upchat Line series, 1977; The Upchat Connection series, 1978; Charlie Muffin, from novels by Brian Freemantle, 1979; West End Tales series, 1981; The Happy Apple series, from play by Jack Pulman, 1983; This Office Life, from his own novel, 1984; Charters and Caldicott, 1985; The Great Paper Chase, from the book Slip Up by Anthony Delaro, 1988; Andy Capp series, 1988; with Willis Hall— Happy Moorings, 1963; How Many Angels, 1964; Inside George Webley series, 1968; Queenie's Castle series, 1970; Budgie series, 1971–72; The Upper Crusts series, 1973; Three's Company series, 1973; By Endeavour Alone, 1973; Briefer Encounter, 1977; Public Lives, 1979; Worzel Gummidge series, from stories by Barbara Euphan Todd, 1979.

Other

- The Café Royal: Ninety Years of Bohemia, with Guy Deghy. London, Hutchinson, 1955.
- How to Avoid Matrimony: The Layman's Guide to the Laywoman, with Guy Deghy (as Herald Froy). London, Muller, 1957.

- Britain's Voice Abroad, with Paul Cave. London, Daily Mirror Newspapers, 1957.
- The Future of Television. London, Daily Mirror Newspapers, 1958.
  How to Survive Matrimony, with Guy Deghy (as Herald Froy).
  London, Muller, 1958.
- The Joneses: How to Keep Up with Them, with Guy Deghy (as Lee Gibb). London, Muller, 1959.
- Can This Be Love?, with Guy Deghy (as Herald Froy). London, Muller, 1960.
- Maybe You're Just Inferior: Head-Shrinking for Fun and Profit, with Guy Deghy (as Herald Froy). London, Muller, 1961.
- The Higher Jones, with Guy Deghy (as Lee Gibb). London, Muller, 1961.
- O Mistress Mine: or, How to Go Roaming, with Guy Deghy (as Herald Froy). London, Barker, 1962.
- The Passing of the Third-Floor Buck (Punch sketches). London, Joseph, 1974.
- Mondays, Thursdays (Daily Mirror columns). London, Joseph, 1976. Rhubard, Rhubard, and Other Noises (Daily Mirror columns). London, Joseph, 1979.
- The Television Adventures [and More Television Adventures] of Worzel Gummidge (for children), with Willis Hall. London, Penguin, 2 vols., 1979; complete edition, as Worzel Gummidge's Television Adventures, London, Kestrel, 1981.
- Worzel Gummidge at the Fair (for children), with Willis Hall. London, Penguin, 1980.
- Worzel Gummidge Goes to the Seaside (for children), with Willis Hall. London, Penguin, 1980.
- The Trials of Worzel Gummidge (for children), with Willis Hall. London, Penguin, 1980.
- Worzel's Birthday (for children), with Willis Hall. London, Penguin, 1981.
- New Television Adventures of Worzel Gummidge and Aunt Sally (for children), with Willis Hall. London, Sparrow, 1981.
- Daily Mirror Style. London, Mirror Books, 1981; revised, edition as Waterhouse on Newspaper Style, London, Viking, 1989.
- Fanny Peculiar (Punch columns). London, Joseph, 1983.
- Mrs. Pooter's Diary. London, Joseph, 1983.
- The Irish Adventures of Worzel Gummidge (for children), with Willis Hall. London, Severn House, 1984.
- Waterhouse at Large (journalism). London, Joseph, 1985.
- The Collected Letters of a Nobody (Including Mr. Pooter's Advice to His Son). London, Joseph, 1986.
- The Theory and Practice of Lunch. London, Joseph, 1986.
- Worzel Gummidge Down Under (for children), with Willis Hall. London, Collins, 1987.
- The Theory and Practice of Travel. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1989.
- English Our English (and How to Sing It). London, Viking, 1991.
- Sharon & Tracy & the Rest: The Best of Keith Waterhouse in the Daily Mail. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1992.
- City Lights: A Street Life. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1994.
- Streets Ahead: Life After City Lights. London, Hodder & Stoughton, 1995.
- Editor, with Willis Hall, Writers' Theatre. London, Heinemann, 1967.

* * *

Keith Waterhouse's fiction is distinguished by a sharp comic sense, a facility that works on closely polished verbal, imagistic, and logical incongruities. For example, in the well-known Billy Liar, a character who is one of the two owners of the funeral establishment where Billy works, a man who keeps a copy of Evelyn Waugh's The Loved One on his desk in order to get new ideas and who looks forward to the day when all coffins will be made of fiberglass, is introduced: "He was, for a start, only about twenty-five years old, although grown old with quick experience, like forced rhubarb," In Billy Liar on the Moon, a sequel to Billy Liar that both takes place and was written about fifteen years after the original, and which moves Billy from his Yorkshire locale of the late 1950s to a carefully designed community of shopping malls, motels, and perplexing oneway streets that lead only to motorways, a new housing estate is a "suburb of the moon" with "a Legoland of crescents and culs-de-sac with green Lego roofs and red Lego chimney stacks." In The Bucket Shop Waterhouse depicts the bumbling, self-deceptive owner of a tatty antique shop, unsuccessful alike in his business, his adulteries, and his efforts to make his wife and his nine-year-old daughter, Melisande, fit his trendy definitions of "interesting" people. After a long passage developing Melisande's fantasies about herself, Waterhouse adds, "She had William's gift for candid self-assessment." That kind of reductive comment, like the discordant contemporary images, the play with clichés, and the exploitation of grammatical incongruities, suggest comparisons with the comic prose of Evelyn Waugh.

Waterhouse builds his verbal texture on plots that often begin with a kind of adolescent humor. Billy, in Billy Liar, invents highly improbable and inconsistent stories, weaving a net of public and fantastic lies that is bound to be discovered by parents, bosses, and the three girlfriends to whom he is simultaneously engaged. He is full of elaborate compulsions: if he can suck a mint without breaking it or if he walks in certain complex patterns he feels he will escape the consequences of his stories. He is also a powerful leader in his fantasy land of Ambrosia. The point of view of the young boy in Waterhouse's first novel, There Is a Happy Land, is even more childlike. The boy plays at being blind, drunk, or maimed, mimics all his elders and delights in calling out cheeky statements that annoy or embarrass adults. Neither child nor adolescent, the central character in Jubb, a rent-collector and youth-club leader in a planned "New Town," is also full of grandiose schemes that others always see through and mimics others' accepted pieties. All these characters, inventive, iconoclastic, and living almost wholly within their disordered imaginations, assault an adult world that pretends it's stable.

Underneath the texture of mimicry and iconoclasm, Waterhouse sometimes gradually shows a world far more sinister than the one suggested by the escapades of adolescent humor. As There is a Happy Land develops, the tone shifts and the boy recognizes the sexuality, perversion, evil, and violence (including the murder of a young girl) in the abandoned quarries and behind the picture-windows of the lower-middle-class housing estate. The character of Jubb himself is gradually revealed as psychotic. Behind his fantasies and comic compulsions is the sexual impotence that has led him to become a peeping Tom, a pyromaniac, and a murderer. In The Bucket Shop William's incompetent management of money and women, as well as his incapacity to deal with the consequences of his fantasies, leads to the suicide of a dependent actress. Sometimes, as the humor fades from Waterhouse's novels, it leaves a melodramatic revelation of perverse and horrible humanity.

Later novels, generally set in the anonymous world of London, focus satire or an understated pathos on more restricted treatments of contemporary life. Office Life centers on a worker made redundant who is absorbed into the modern corporation where everyone is sustained in a network of gossip, affairs, and shuffling papers, and nothing is produced or accomplished. Maggie Muggins: or, Spring in Earl's Court chronicles a day in the life of Maggie, born Margaret Moon, a promiscuous and alcoholic drifter in London for the past 10 years in revolt from a square, stable Doncaster family. During the day, she learns of a close friend's suicide, her father's decision to marry and start a new family, and the fact that the father of her aborted baby could have married her, yet the clever prose, satirizing the social services and any pretense to reform, finally and tersely establishes her ratchety integrity and capacity to survive. Thinks is more experimental technically. Concentrating, as a deliberate fictional device, on the anxieties and fantasies in the mind of the central character, without reporting what he says, the novel charts the pressures on the last, long day of Edgar Bapty's life. Through train journeys, a visit to his doctor, a job interview he only dimly realizes he has fumbled, thoughts of his three former wives, numerous heavy meals, a visit to a prostitute, and several recognition's of his own sexual incapacity, Bapty's thoughts and fears build to "a magnificent Hallelujah chorus of sustained and bellowing rage" before his fatal heart attack. The compressed focus and the sharp writing give these novels immediacy and vitality.

The two novels concerning Billy Liar are lighter than Waterhouse's other fiction, although the persona of Billy represents Waterhouse's only perspective that attempts to alter circumstance. Billy lies less to cover horror or perversion than "to relieve the monotony of living on the moon," where the moon is his arid contemporary civic and domestic life. Both novels, as satire, also ridicule the parochial: in Billy Liar the target is, equally, romanticizing an old, rugged Yorkshire tradition and the "new" world of coffee bars, record shops, and the winner of the Miss Stradhoughton contest who delivers "whole sentences ready-packed in disposable tinfoil wrapper"; in Billy Liar on the Moon the target is civic pride, all the contemporary designs and shapes applied to experience and undermined both by their implicit fatuity and old-fashioned corruption. In both novels, Billy, the comic, the spinner of fantasies, uses the vision of "London" as his potential escape from provincial dullness, ineptitude, and self-seeking.

That any "real London" is no answer for Waterhouse is clear from other novels such as The Bucket Shop, Office Life, and Maggie Muggins. Yet the point in both books about Billy Liar is that he cannot, more than momentarily in the second book, manage the break to London, cannot do more than mimic, scoff, and invent within the limited world he is dependent on. Both as satire and as a potential means of revealing some deeply thought or felt version of experience, Waterhouse's comedy is thin, a covering for the sense of horror in experience in Jubb or Thinks, in which the latent pain seems unmanageable and unchangeable. Continuing themes explored in the preceding works, Our Song depicts a failed love affair between a married adman and a much younger girl in his office. The office also provides a setting of sorts for Unsweet Charity, a satire on the world of public relations and fundraising campaigns.

All the novels seem staged (and Waterhouse, in conjunction with Willis Hall, has written a number of plays characterized by sharply witty dialogue and clever invention). As Billy himself says, in Billy Liar on the Moon, he is still only a "juvenile lead" in a "comedy," not the central character in a "tragedy" he imagines, not equipped for any part in a drama of "real life." At the end of the novel, he returns to Ambrosia. Whatever the incapacities of his characters to alter or transcend experience, Waterhouse is invariably an excellent mimic, often cogent and terse, and has created a comic prose and a sense of the involuted logic of systematic fantasy that are strikingly effective and enjoyable.

-James Gindin

WATMOUGH, David

Nationality: Canadian. Born: London, England, 17 August 1926; became Canadian citizen in 1963. Education: Coopers' Company School, London, 1937-43; King's College, University of London, 1945–49, degree in theology. Military Service: Served in the Royal Navy, 1944-45. Career: Reporter, Cornish Guardian, Bodmin, Cornwall, 1943-44; editor, Holy Cross Press, New York, 1953-54; talks producer, BBC Third Programme, London, 1955; editor, Ace Books, London, 1956; feature writer and critic, San Francisco Examiner, 1957–60; arts and theater critic, Vancouver Sun, 1964–67; host of Artslib, weekly television show, 1979–80. Since 1991 arts columnist, Step magazine, Vancouver; since 1993 book reviewer and columnist for Xtra West, Vancouver, British Columbia. Awards: Canada Council senior arts grant, 1976, 1986; Province of British Columbia Arts award, for creative writing, 1994–95. Agent: Robert Drake, 1218 Saint Paul Street, Baltimore, Maryland 21202, U.S.A. Address: 3358 West First Avenue, Vancouver, British Columbia V6R 1G4, Canada.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

No More into the Garden. New York, Doubleday, 1978. The Year of Fears. Toronto, Mosaic Press, 1988. Families. Stamford, Connecticut, Knights Press, 1990. Thy Mother's Glass. Toronto and New York, HarperCollins, 1992. The Time of the Kingfishers. Vancouver, Arsenal Pulp, 1994. Hunting with Diana. Vancouver, Arsenal Pulp Press, 1996.

Short Stories

Ashes for Easter and Other Monodramas. Vancouver, Talonbooks, 1972.

Love and the Waiting Game: Eleven Stories. Ottawa, Oberon Press, 1975

From a Cornish Landscape. Padstow, Cornwall, Lodenek Press, 1975.

The Connecticut Countess. Trumansburg, New York, Crossing Press, 1984.

Fury. Ottawa, Oberon Press, 1984.

Vibrations in Time. Toronto, Mosaic Press, 1986.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "The Wounded Christmas Choirboy," in Canadian Short Stories. Kingston, Ontario, Quarry Press, 1990.
- "Eurydice, May I Kiss the Cop?," in Certain Voices. Boston, Alyson, 1991.
- "Thank You Siegfried Sassoon," in Indivisible. New York, New American Library, 1991.
- "Wedding Dress for a Greek Groom," in Queeries. Vancouver, 1993.
- "Cool Cats on the Internet," in Modern Words. San Francisco, 1994.
- "Maiden Voyage," in Sayme. Boston, 1994.
- "Leonard," in Church Wellesley Review. Toronto, 1994.
- "Secrets of Diomedes," in the Gay Review. Toronto, 1995.

Plays

Friedhof (produced Vancouver, 1966). Included in Names for the Numbered Years, 1967.

Do You Remember One September Afternoon? (produced Vancouver, 1966). Included in Names for the Numbered Years, 1967.

Names for the Numbered Years: Three Plays (includes Do You Remember One September Afternoon?, Friedhof, My Mother's House Has Too Many Rooms). Vancouver, Bau-Xi Gallery, 1967.

Other

A Church Renascent: A Study of Modern French Catholicism. London, SPCK, 1951.

The Unlikely Pioneer: Building Opera from the Pacific Through the Prairies. Toronto, Mosaic Press, 1986.

Editor, Vancouver Fiction. Winlaw, British Columbia, Polestar Press, 1985.

*

Critical Studies: "The Novel That Never Ends: David Watmough's Reminiscent Fictions," in The World of Canadian Writing by George Woodcock, Vancouver, Douglas and McIntyre, and Seattle, University of Washington Press, 1980; in The Oxford Companion to Canadian Literature edited by William Toye, Toronto, Oxford, and New York, Oxford University Press, 1983; article by Jerry Wasserman, in Canadian Writers since 1960 1st series, edited by W.H. New, Detroit, Gale, 1986; "The Human Whole" by Kate Sirluck, in Canadian Literature (Vancouver), Winter 1990.

David Watmough comments:

In a very real sense I regard each successive volume of my fiction as part of an ongoing "novel" that will not be complete until I can no longer write. My work is an attempt to chronicle the private history of one man of Cornish ancestry living as a Canadian through the twentieth century. My fictional protagonist, Davey Bryant, is depicted in childhood, adolescence, maturity, and, currently, middle age. If the work finally succeeds then it will be because I have been able to muster the kind of candor and honesty that such a confessional narrative demands. Another feature of the work is the depiction of private history—including the most intimate sexual and psychological detail—against the backdrop of public events.

(1995) Although I continue to write through my protagonist, Davey Bryant, I have recently branched out and in my current stories [Hunting with Diana] have him tell of experiences inspired by Greek myth and classical legend but refashioned and shown on the Internet via his P.C. monitor. The eventual collection of connected fictions will be entitled Odysseys on the Internet.

* * *

The name of Proust often comes up when the Canadian fiction writer David Watmough is discussed, and though Watmough is no imitator of Proust, the affinities between the two are clear. Both are concerned with memory and its transforming power, and both tend to transmute their own memories into the stuff of fiction. Watmough has written several volumes of short stories, notably Ashes for Easter (his first), Love and the Waiting Game, and The Connecticut Countess, and also a trio of open-ended novels, (No More into the Garden, The Year of Fears, and Families).

Watmough's claim is that for the past two decades he has really been engaged in writing a single novel that will take a lifetime to complete. It is a claim that must be taken seriously, for the same central character, Davey Bryant, appears in almost all the fiction Watmough writes, whether it is short stories, novels, or the spoken and semi-dramatic fictions he calls monodramas.

Though this is no exact sense fictionalized autobiography, Davey Bryant does in many ways resemble Watmough in the same way as some of his experiences parallel his creator's. Yet the character stands apart, observed with irony and candour. But the observation is from within as well as without, and each story, each chapter of a novel, is a confession of ambivalent acts, ambivalent motives, for the screen between the straight and the gay world constantly wavers and dissolves and forms again.

In a way the saga of Davey Bryant is in the classic tradition of modernist fiction—a portrait of the artist as a young but aging man or dog. We follow him from his boyhood to middle age. But real life—from which so much undoubtedly comes—is modified by memory and changed by art, and Watmough's fictions walk a variety of tightropes, between actuality and truth, between the oral and the written mode.

These fictions are all essentially ironic, with the initial nostalgia of the vision always underlaid by the nagging memory, the jarring truth that provokes the nostalgia. Some of the most telling stories are those that evoke moments of folly or unworthiness which stir similar recollections in the reader to those the writer experiences, or, alternatively, make him uneasy because of the perilous closeness of the predicaments—frequently homosexual—that are delineated by the possibilities of his own life.

In the novels, especially, Davey Bryant is shown as both the victim of ludicrous circumstances and the perpetrator of petty moral atrocities. The victim is always seen to be seeking victory, and most personal relationships are marred by a cruelty that degrades one or other of the participants.

The recurrent themes are united on another level by a pervading elegiac consciousness; in the novel No More into the Garden, for example, the longed-for garden that is never re-entered is in one sense the Cornwall of childhood happiness, and in another the state of collective innocence that all men seek to recover. The garden, however, can become "a harvest of threats." By the novel's end the fullness of life is balanced by ever-present death, for as the mind expands in consciousness the physical possibilities narrow. Here, for Watmough, is the irony and also the elegy. But the garden survives in the Proustian reality, and even in a later collection of stories, Fury, there is a return to the world of childhood with all its innocence and brutality.

Later novels have taken the narrating hero through the successive lustra of inner development and outward adventure as Davey metamorphoses from the boy of the original stories to the middleaged man of Families. The Year of Fears, for example, concerns the period of the Vietnam War when Davey lives in the pre-AIDS gay culture of California. When we come to Families he is settled in Vancouver, a city which not only has a considerable gay world, but also a good deal of friendly and mutually tolerant interaction between the gay and the straight communities. And here Davey seems at least to have found his special role, not only as a chronicler-participant of the gay world, but also as a kind of mediator among his friends: as if, like the celibacy of a priest, his different sexual role has given him a privileged position as a kind of emotional middle man in what turns out to be a multisexual world. The problems he encounters, and often dabbles in, give a serious cast to the novel, but the threat of solemnity is dispelled by an ironic, self-deprecating manner, in which gossip is used, rather as Proust used it, for revelation as much as diversion. Watmough has—and I say this approvingly rather than pejoratively a talent for the trivial. He knows how to use it for the maximum ironic effect, and how to temper the dynamics of structure by beginning and ending his novel, as it were, in mid-thought. Families ends with two friends, a heterosexual woman and a homosexual man, in a semirural park:

There, where the gravel at the lake's edge gave way to a grass bank, we sat down in the October sun and stretched our legs. This time we saw no kingfishers.

It looks like an anti-climax; in fact it is continuity, tying in a cord from the past, yet paradoxically opening to an as yet unrevealed but perhaps already lived future. By contrast, Thy Mother's Glass goes far, far back, to Davey's origins in Cornwall as the son of an overbearing, lesbian mother. He grows up, serves in the Navy during World War II, and is brought up on charges for homosexuality. The short stories of Hunting with Diana move toward the future again, with Davey now seventy-one years old and living in Vancouver with his lover, Ken, and their cat. He spends his late-night hours chatting on the Internet, and comes in contact with an array of characters who resemble figures from Greek mythology.

WELCH, James

Nationality: American. Born: Browning, Montana, in 1940. Education: The University of Montana, Missoula, B.A.; Northern Montana College, Harve. Awards: National Endowment for the Arts grant, 1969; Los Angeles Times prize, for Fools Crow, 1987. Address: Roseacres Farm, Route 6, Missoula, Montana 59801, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Winter in the Blood. New York, Harper, 1974.
The Death of Jim Loney. New York, Harper, 1979; London, Gollancz, 1980.

Fools Crow. New York, Viking, 1986.

The Indian Lawyer. New York, Norton, 1990.

The Heartsong of Charging Elk. New York, Doubleday, 2000.

Poetry

Riding the Earthboy 40. Cleveland, World, 1971; revised edition, New York, Harper, 1975.

Other

Killing Custer: The Battle of the Little Bighorn and the Fate of the Plains Indians, with Paul Stekler. New York, Norton, 1994.
Editor, with Ripley S. Hugg and Lois M. Welch, The Real West Marginal Way: A Poet's Autobiography, by Richard Hugo. New York, Norton, 1986.

*

Critical Studies: Four American Indian Literary Masters by Alan R. Velie, Norman, University of Oklahoma Press, 1982; James Welch by Peter Wild, Boise, Idaho, Boise State University 1983; "Beyond Myth: Welch's Winter in the Blood" by Jack Brenner, in Under the Sun: Myth and Realism in Western American Literature edited by Barbara Howard Meldrum, Troy, New York, Whitston, 1985; "Beyond Assimilation: James Welch and the Indian Dilemma" by David M. Craig, in North Dakota Quarterly (Grand Forks), Spring 1985; "Variations on a Theme: Traditions and Temporal Structure in the Novels of James Welch" by Roberta Orlandini, in South Dakota Review (Vermillion), Autumn 1988; Place and Vision: The Function of Landscape in Native American Fiction by Robert M. Nelson, New York, Lang, 1993; Understanding James Welch by Ron McFarland, Columbia, University of South Carolina Press, 2000.

* * *

James Welch has described himself as both an "Indian writer" and "an Indian who writes." This double vision of American Indian experience as unique and yet representative is at the heart of his first four novels, all set in or around reservation Montana and all revolving around protagonists, like Welch himself, of Blackfeet ancestry. Perhaps this is no more than saying that, like any good writer, Welch arrives at the universal through the particular. But the particular—the stresses and strains of Native American culture in uneasy contact with the culture that nearly destroyed it—has not much figured as a theme in serious American fiction. Welch has helped to change that, and he has done so without resort to sentimentality or preachiness.

Winter in the Blood, his first novel, takes up a week or so in the life of its unnamed narrator, a Thirty-two-year-old Blackfeet man suffering from a malaise he can neither understand nor escape from. There is no plot to speak of; the novel simply follows the narrator as he works for a few days as a farm-hand on his step-father's property, quizzes his strong-willed mother about the past, pursues an exgirlfriend he does not really want to find into the bars and streets of small-town Montana, gets into a minor brawl, and sleeps with a couple of white women. If there is any hope in this grim depiction of aimlessness and anomie it occurs toward the end, when the narrator recognizes a dignified, blind, and ancient Blackfeet man named Yellow Calf as his grandfather and the savior of his family line. But this "opening onto light" that Reynolds Price thought the emotional climax of the novel is closed up in the equally emblematic scene that follows, in which the narrator fails to rescue a cow from a suffocating death in a mudhole. Indeed, a powerful sense of alienation seems to grip Welch as much as his narrator; in the conjunction of the personal and the cultural that might explain such desolation, Welch leans a little too heavily on the latter, and a faintly deterministic air clings to the narrator's stoic despair. Welch's taut prose, dark humor, and sharp, laconic dialogue, so much admired by the book's critics, do not finally save Winter in the Blood from a congealment of its own.

The alienation of the principal character is taken to its logical conclusion in The Death of Jim Loney with his suicide. Actually, Loney's death is a sort of ritualistic murder that he wills upon himself, but that this death is the only form of affirmation available to him suggests the impasse that Welch had worked himself into. Moreover, the novel suffers from some surprisingly clumsy dialogue and unfinished characterization, notably in the two women in Loney's life; his girlfriend Rhea, a white school teacher from Texas, and his sister Kate, a successful education official in Washington, D.C. Loney himself seems like a slightly older, more depressed version of the narrator of Winter in the Blood. A half-breed at home neither in the White nor in the Indian world, he knows that there is "no real love in his life; that somehow, at some time, everything had gone dreadfully wrong." Since the second novel is almost as plotless as the first, there is little for Loney to do but drink and brood and watch passively as his girlfriend and sister try, but fail, to rescue his spirit.

If The Death of Jim Loney was an impasse, Fools Crow was one way out. This long, historical novel concerning a tribe of Blackfeet (Pikuni) in northern Montana in the terrible years after the Civil War, was a major departure for Welch and an unusual instance of a story told entirely from within the Indians' point of view. In Fools Crow Whites (Napikwans) are at most a marginal, though threatening, presence and the interpenetration of myth, religion, and daily life takes place with perfect matter-of-factness. For example the young warrior Fools Crow is guided on a solitary trip to the mountains by Raven, at once an ordinary bird and a trickster spirit. Such scenes effectively dispense with traditional notions of verisimilitude and involve the reader in a different kind of imaginative re-creation.

Welch's protagonist, though a brave warrior and a loving husband and provider, is not immune to the self-doubt and spiritual agony that afflict his two predecessors. But the existential uncertainty experienced by Fools Crow is motivated as much by forces from without as from within. In the course of the novel the Blackfeet are plagued by internal dissension, hunger, small pox, renegade tribespeople, and finally a massacre by white soldiers. Fools Crow's struggle for self knowledge enables him to withstand these shocks to his psyche and to take upon himself as much of the burden of his people as he can. This ethical awareness, new to Welch's fiction, impresses at least as much as his always vivid sense of the Montana landscape and his use of the Blackfeet's animistic speech patterns to describe it. If he does not always succeed in transcribing the Indians' metaphoric language into an unforced, conversational English, the somewhat wooden dialogue is a small price to pay for a novel that dares to forgo irony and narrative detachment in order to represent the harsh and beautiful traditions of the plains Indians at the moment those traditions began to unravel.

In its use of deliberately commercial formulas, The Indian Lawyer was a further departure for Welch. It reads fast, has a suspenseful plot, and even includes a few modest sex scenes. Far from representing a compromised artistry, however, The Indian Lawyer shows how well Welch can use commercial formulas to crest an entertainment of a very serious kind. The Indian lawyer is Sylvester Yellow Calf, who, at thirty-five, has risen above a childhood of deprivation and segregation to become the most promising member of an important law firm in Helena and the leading Democratic candidate for a vacant congressional seat. Suspense is generated by a blackmail attempt against Sylvester engineered by a vengeful prison inmate whose request for parole Sylvester, as a member of the State Board of Pardons, had denied. In fact, the blackmail threat, involving Sylvester's affair with the wife of the inmate, is hard to take seriously; even in conservative Montana, unmarried candidates for political office do not generally lose elections for having a sex life. But Welch arranges the mechanics of the blackmailing skillfully and Sylvester's affair with the lonely, unsophisticated Patti Ann is more than touching; here the more typical polarities of racial power are reversed, but the blue-collar white woman and the worldly, successful Indian share an experience of exclusion that allows them to transcend, if only with each other, constraints of race and class. Perhaps the novel's greatest strength is the characterization of Sylvester himself: a full-blooded Blackfeet both proud of and uncomfortable with his heritage, a liberal and idealist whose decision to run for congress is, as he well knows, exactly as selfish as it is selfless. The novel's ambiguous ending seems far more just than Jim Loney's weirdly affirmative death wish. Sylvester opts out of the race and commits himself to pro bono work for Indian water rights, but he is still competing fiercely against himself. Whether he has reconciled his own spiritual needs with the exigencies of social and moral responsibility is a question Welch does not attempt to answer. Impressive as his first novel is, it is not a question Welch would have thought to ask of the intense and intensely self-absorbed narrator of Winter in the Blood.

During the mid- to late 1990s, Welch moved increasingly into fact-based narrative, producing not only Killing Custer, an account of the Little Big Horn from the winners' viewpoint, but The Heartsong of Charging Elk, a novel based on the experience of an Oglala Sioux man who held a job with Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show.

-Stephen Akey

WELDON, Fay

Nationality: British. Born: Fay Birkinshaw in Alvechurch, Worcestershire, 22 September 1931; grew up in New Zealand. Education: Girls' High School, Christchurch; Hampstead Girls' High School, London; University of St. Andrews, Fife, 1949–52, M.A. in economics and psychology 1952. D. Litt, University of Bath, 1988, University of St. Andrews, 1992. Family: Married Ron Weldon in 1960 (marriage ended), married Nicholas Fox in 1994; four sons. Career: writer for the Foreign Office and Daily Mirror, both London, late 1950s; later worked in advertising. Awards: Writers Guild award, for radio play, 1973; Giles Cooper award, for radio play, 1978; Society of Authors traveling scholarship, 1981; Los Angeles Times award, for fiction, 1989. D.Litt: University of St. Andrews, 1990. Lives in London. Agent: Ed Victor, 6 Bayley St., London WC1B 3HB; Casarotto Company, National House, 62–66 Wardour Street, London W1V 3HP, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Fat Woman's Joke. London, MacGibbon and Kee, 1967; as ... and the Wife Ran Away, New York, McKay, 1968.

Down among the Women. London, Heinemann, 1971; New York, St. Martin's Press, 1972.

Female Friends. London, Heinemann, and New York, St. Martin's Press, 1975.

Remember Me. London, Hodder and Stoughton, and New York, Random House, 1976.

Words of Advice. New York, Random House, 1977; as Little Sisters, London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1978.

Praxis. London, Hodder and Stoughton, and New York, Summit, 1978.

Puffball. London, Hodder and Stoughton, and New York, Summit, 1980.

The President's Child. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1982; New York, Doubleday, 1983.

The Life and Loves of a She-Devil. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1983; New York, Pantheon, 1984.

The Shrapnel Academy. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1986; New York, Viking, 1987.

The Heart of the Country. London, Hutchinson, 1987; New York, Viking, 1988.

The Hearts and Lives of Men. London, Heinemann, 1987; New York, Viking, 1988.

Leader of the Band. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1988; New York, Viking, 1989.

The Cloning of Joanna May. London, Collins, 1989; New York, Viking, 1990.

Darcy's Utopia. London, Collins, 1990; New York, Viking, 1991. Life Force. London, Collins, and New York, Viking, 1992.

Affliction. London, Collins, 1994; as Trouble, New York, Viking, 1994.

Splitting: A Novel. New York, Grove Atlantic, 1994.

Worst Fears. New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 1996.

Big Girls Don't Cry. New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 1997.

Rhode Island Blues. New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 2000.

Short Stories

Watching Me, Watching You. London, Hodder and Stoughton, and New York, Summit, 1981.

Polaris and Other Stories. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1985; New York, Penguin, 1989.

The Rules of Life (novella). London, Hutchinson, and New York, Harper, 1987.

Moon over Minneapolis. London, Harper Collins, 1991.

Wicked Women: A Collection of Short Stories. London, Flamingo, 1995; New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 1997.

Angel, All Innocence, and Other Stories. London, Bloomsbury, 1995. A Hard Time to Be a Father. New York, St. Martin's Press, 1999.

Uncollected Short Stories

"Ind Aff; or, Out of Love in Sarajevo," in Best Short Stories 1989, edited by Giles Gordon and David Hughes. London, Heinemann, 1989; as The Best English Short Stories 1989, New York, Norton, 1989.

Plays

Permanence, in We Who Are about to ..., later called Mixed Doubles (produced London, 1969). London, Methuen, 1970.

Time Hurries On, in Scene Scripts, edited by Michael Marland. London, Longman, 1972.

Words of Advice (produced London, 1974). London, French, 1974. Friends (produced Richmond, Surrey, 1975).

Moving House (produced Farnham, Surrey, 1976).

Mr. Director (produced Richmond, Surrey, 1978).

Polaris (broadcast 1978). Published in Best Radio Plays of 1978, London, Eyre Methuen, 1979.

Action Replay (produced Birmingham, 1978; as Love Among the Women, produced Vancouver, 1982). London, French, 1980.

I Love My Love (broadcast 1981; produced Richmond, Surrey, 1982).London, French, 1984.

After the Prize (produced New York, 1981; as Word Worm, produced Newbury, Berkshire, 1984).

Jane Eyre, adaptation of the novel by Charlotte Brontë (produced Birmingham, 1986).

The Hole in the Top of the World (produced Richmond, Surrey, 1987). Someone Like You, music by Petula Clark and Dee Shipman (produced London, 1990).

Radio Plays: Spider, 1973; Housebreaker, 1973; Mr. Fox and Mr. First, 1974; The Doctor's Wife, 1975; Polaris, 1978; Weekend, 1979; All the Bells of Paradise, 1979; I Love My Love, 1981; The Hole in the Top of the World, 1993.

Television Plays: Wife in a Blonde Wig, 1966; A Catching Complaint, 1966; The Fat Woman's Tale, 1966; What About Me, 1967; Dr. De Waldon's Therapy, 1967; Goodnight Mrs. Dill, 1967; The 45th Unmarried Mother, 1967; Fall of the Goat, 1967; Ruined Houses, 1968; Venus Rising, 1968; The Three Wives of Felix Hull, 1968; Hippy Hippy Who Cares, 1968; £13083, 1968; The Loophole, 1969; Smokescreen, 1969; Poor Mother, 1970; Office Party, 1970; On Trial (Upstairs, Downstairs, series), 1971; Old Man's Hat, 1972; A Splinter of Ice, 1972; Hands, 1972; The Lament of an Unmarried Father, 1972; A Nice Rest, 1972; Comfortable Words, 1973; Desirous of Change, 1973; In Memoriam, 1974; Poor Baby, 1975; The Terrible Tale of Timothy Bagshott, 1975; Aunt Tatty, from the story by Elizabeth Bowen, 1975; Act of Rape, 1977; Married Love (Six Women series), 1977; Act of Hypocrisy ( Jubilee series), 1977; Chickabiddy ( Send in the Girls series), 1978; Pride and Prejudice, from the novel by Jane Austen, 1980; Honey Ann, 1980; Life for Christine, 1980; Watching Me, Watching You (Leap in the Dark series), 1980; Little Mrs. Perkins, from a story by Penelope Mortimer, 1982; Redundant! or, The Wife's Revenge, 1983; Out of the Undertow, 1984; Bright Smiles (Time for Murder series), 1985; Zoe's Fever (Ladies in Charge series), 1986; A Dangerous Kind of Love (Mountain Men series), 1986; Heart of the Country serial, 1987.

Other

Simple Steps to Public Life, with Pamela Anderson and Mary Stott. London, Virago Press, 1980.

Letters to Alice: On First Reading Jane Austen. London, Joseph, 1984; New York, Taplinger, 1985.

Rebecca West. London and New York, Viking, 1985.

Wolf the Mechanical Dog (for children). London, Collins, 1988.

Sacred Cows. London, Chatto and Windus, 1989.

Party Puddle (for children). London, Collins, 1989.

Godless in Eden: A Book of Essays. London, Flamingo, 1999.

Editor, with Elaine Feinstein, New Stories 4. London, Hutchinson, 1979.

*

Critical Studies: Fay Weldon by Lana Faulks, New York, Twayne Publishers, 1998.

* * *

Fay Weldon's concern began as personal relationships in contemporary society, focusing on women, especially as mothers, and thus widening to take in relationships between the generations: "By our children, you shall know us." She amusingly traces long chains of cause and effect, inexorable as Greek tragedy, stemming from both conscious and unconscious motivation, and from chance circumstances. She looks at society with devastating clearsightedness, showing how good may spring from selfishness, evil from altruism.

Weldon's unique narrative style highlights the contradiction between free will which her characters, like us, assume and the conditioning which we know we undergo. Her characters are continually referred to by their names, where English style would normally use a pronoun, and addressed directly in the second person by the author and assessed by her-"Lucky Lily" the author appraises a leading character in Remember Me, where she also "translates" passages of the characters' dialogue into what they mean, rather than say. In The Hearts and Lives of Men the author continually buttonholes "Reader." Weldon's apparently disingenuous surface, with her own paragraphing lay-out, is underpinned by a whole battery of ironic devices, indicating the limitations on her characters'—and our autonomy from cradle to grave. In Puffball this process is pushed back before the cradle, with sections "Inside Liffey" about the growth of the fetus and its conditioning via the circumstances of the mother's life.

The Fat Woman's Joke, Weldon's first novel, follows a greedy couple on a diet: this novel originated as a television play, and Weldon hadn't fully developed her unique style. Her characteristic plangent note, that the worst can happen and does, is accompanied by a muted optimism, especially in her novels' endings: gradual progress occurs, at least for the majority if not for the unfortunate individual. Down among the Women concludes "We are the last of the women"—that is, the half of the population defined earlier as living "at floor level, washing and wiping."

Weldon's feminism colors all her work, and is powerful when she doesn't shrink from detailing the faults of individual women, or the way women exploit what advantages the system yields them. Men are the exploiting sex because the system favors them, and they take for granted the status quo. In Female Friends, focusing on three women friends and their mothers, Grace is shown as worthless, until perhaps the end, while Oliver and Patrick take what the system offers—and more.

The machinery of plot in Remember Me is ostensibly supernatural, as a dead divorced wife haunts her ex-husband's second ménage. Weldon's apparent reliance on the supernatural may seem unsatisfactory both here and in Puffball, where pregnant Liffey is "overlooked" by the local witch. But in both novels the psychology suggests something of Marjorie's realization about her "haunted" home in Female Friends: "it was me haunting myself, sending myself messages."

In Little Sisters (Words of Advice in the U.S.) Weldon turned to the very rich. This black comedy centers melodramatically on the wheelchair-bound Gemma, narrator of the story within a story. Weldon also uses this device in The Fat Woman's Joke, Praxis, The President's Child, and Darcy's Utopia. The story-within-a-story device enables her to run different time-sequences simultaneously, emphasizing the interlocking of cause and effect between the generations, and also to highlight our imperfect understanding and information, through each individual's partial perception.

Praxis charts the life of a woman who served a prison sentence for killing "a poor little half-witted" baby, as we learn from one of the first-person chapters alternating at the start of the novel with the third-person chapters that subsequently take over. Puffball, about Liffey's pregnancy in Somerset while her husband remains working in London, is as strongly feminist, incorporating much information about female physiology and pregnancy. In The President's Child Isabel, the mother of an American presidential candidate's illegitimate child, is ruthlessly hunted in a parody of a thriller. The Life and Loves of a She-Devil describes Ruth's remorseless revenge on the bestseller writer who 'stole' her husband.

Two of Weldon's collections of short stories, Watching Me, Watching You and Polaris and Other Stories, are mainly concerned with men exploiting women in different domestic settings: an exception, the title story of the latter, is the best. Its antiwar theme is continued in The Shrapnel Academy: over the snowbound weekend of the Academy's prestigious Wellington Lecture, the contemporary "servant problem" with a largely Third World staff escalates into a "local" nuclear explosion. Chapters of military history, describing warfare's "development," break up the story.

The Hearts and Lives of Men, set against the 1960s swinging London art market, more frothily charts the marriages—mainly to each other—of a trendy pair and the fraught childhood of their kidnapped daughter. In The Heart of the Country Sonia, now in a psychiatric hospital, explains her attempts to help Natalie, suddenly abandoned by her husband. Weldon parades the countryside's problems, from pesticides to the withdrawal of buses.

As one of the dead able to "re-wind" their life-stories, Gabriella reviews her lovers in the novella The Rules of Life set in 2004. In Leader of the Band "Starlady Sandra," incidentally the result of a genetic experiment, abandons astronomy, TV program, and husband to accompany "mad Jack the trumpet-player" and his jazz band on tour in France.

The Cloning of Joanne May, set in the present day, shows Joanna secretly cloned by her husband, so that she has four sisters, young enough to be her daughters—all brought together by the plot. Darcy's Utopia is structured by the device of two journalists interviewing the notorious Mrs. Darcy, wife of an imprisoned government economic adviser; the journalists also have an affair. Despite much space, Darcy's ideas for a money-less and permissive society remain arbitrary and contradictory.

Although Weldon has widened her range, and has always used techniques of "alienation" to encourage the reader to think as well as feel, she has also increasingly relied on her unique narrative techniques, with her often deliberately intrusive authorial voice, to sustain each novel. In Big Girls Don't Cry, Weldon's twentieth novel, she pokes fun at the feminist movement—or as it was called in 1971, the setting of the book, "women's lib." The stories in A Hard Time to Be a Father are also characteristically impish, giving notice to Weldon fans that they will not be disappointed.

-Val Warner, updated by Judson Knight

WELSH, Irvine

Nationality: Scottish. Born: Edinburgh, Scotland, 1958. Education: Heriot-Watt University, M.B.A. Career: Worked at various jobs, including television repairman, musician, and software consultant; writer, 1993—. Agent: c/o Jonathan Cape, 20 Vauxhall Bridge Road, London SW1V 2SA, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Trainspotting. London, Secker & Warburg, 1993; New York, Norton, 1996.

Marabou Stork Nightmares: A Novel. London, J. Cape, 1995; New York, Norton, 1996.

Filth: A Novel. New York, Norton, 1998.

Short Stories

The Acid House. London, J. Cape; New York, Norton, 1995. Ecstasy: Three Chemical Romances. New York, Norton, 1996.

Plays

Screenplays: The Acid House: A Screen Play. London, Methuen Film, 1999.

Other

The Wedding: New Pictures from the Continuing "Living Room" Series (text), photographs by Nick Waplington. New York, Aperture, 1996.

You'll Have Had Your Hole. London, Methuen Film, 1998.Contributor, Intoxication: An Anthology of Stimulant-Based Writing.New York, Serpent's Tail, 1998.

* * *

In terms of its influence, Irvine Welsh's phenomenally successful first novel, Trainspotting, can be compared to Salman Rushdie's Booker Prize-winning Midnight's Children. Just as Rushdie's novel enlivened the somewhat insular, even moribund "English novel" by introducing a higher degree of postcolonial consciousness and postmodern play, Trainspotting has vastly expanded the nature and visibility of British fiction in general and Scottish fiction in particular. Originally issued by a small Edinburgh publisher in 1993, Trainspotting resonated with readers, and its reputation spread by word-of-mouth, largely in the British youth culture. The novel was soon reissued by a major London publisher and nominated for the Booker Prize. The acclaim, and notoriety, along with that of James Kelman's How Late It Was, How Late (winner of the 1994 Booker Prize), focused attention on the renaissance in Scottish writing that included established writers such as Kelman and Alisdair Gray, younger, consummate stylists Janice Galloway, A. L. Kennedy, and Candia McWilliam, and the rougher crowd of Alan Warner, Duncan McLean, Laura Hird, and Welsh. Following the success of Trainspotting (Welsh's novel as well as adaptations by Danny Boyle's film and Harry Gibson for stage), anthologies of Scottish and youth-based fiction flooded a literary market that expanded to include rave clubs and the "chemical generation" for whom Welsh soon became unofficial poet laureate. Against the excessive romanticizing of Scotland in the blockbuster films Rob Roy and Braveheart and the commercial success of the decidedly artsy, upscale Edinburgh Festival, Welsh offered a blackly humorous and stylistically energizing look at how the other half lives. For all its stylistic flair and cinematic structure, Trainspotting is in some ways a work in the naturalist tradition, both in its use of Edinburgh dialect and its preoccupation with social ills. These include, most obviously, heroin use and HIV infection as well as a dysfunctional social welfare system, a socially destructive capitalist ethos, a Scottish national character heavily dependent on drinking, violence, and sexual abuse of women, the lingering effects of English colonization, and most importantly, the demoralization and disaffiliation of Scottish youth.

The world of Trainspotting, the Edinburgh of Leith and Muirhouse, is a world without beliefs and without illusions, in which the phrase "choose life" has all the authenticity of a government-sponsored ad campaign. Although it has in style and subject a certain affinity to the heroin fictions of Alexander Trocchi and William S. Burroughs, Trainspotting is nonetheless a highly original work: unsparing and unsentimental on the one hand, stylistically brilliant on the other, not only in its at-times-fantastical depiction of "the life-taking elixir," "ma beautiful heroine's tender caresses," but in the compact, slangy brilliance of individual lines, such as "Lizzie is a shag extraordinaire, but has a temper like a sailor and a castrating stare." Although it slips rapidly and without warning in and out of various characters' firstperson narratives, Trainspotting focuses on Mark Renton, who realizes that in a world in which carpe diem has been taken to the furthest extreme, both in the drug-subculture and in a Britain made in Margaret Thatcher's image, a world in which there are "Nae friends, in this game. Jist associates," the only escape lies in betrayal.

After Trainspotting, Welsh's two collections of short fiction were assured success, especially given their titles and suitably garish cover art. Although stylistically less interesting and innovative than Trainspotting, Acid House (21 stories and novella) extends the range of Welsh's examination of (some would say exploitation of) the social ills affecting Euro-youth. Ecstasy's three hastily written novellas are weaker but interesting nonetheless, not for the violence and grossness with which Welsh is often criticized but for a surprising streak of sentimentality, carefully controlled in Marabou Stork Nightmares, all but overwhelming in Filth. Set in Scotland and Africa and dealing with various forms of exploitation (colonialism, racism, sexism, sexual abuse of women and children), Marabou Stork Nightmares is Welsh's most ambitious novel. The narrative literally-typographically-travels up into the hospitalized, semi-comatose narrator's semi-consciousness and at times down deeper into memory, dream, nightmare, and overdose-induced hallucination. The character of Roy Strang tries unsuccessfully to escape his past (including his part in a brutal gang-rape) via a third-rate adventure story involving stalking and exterminating Strang's symbol of "evil incarnate," the exceptionally ugly and predatory Marabou stork, symbol too of Strang's self-loathing. The novel's complexity puts Welsh's efforts to explain if not quite excuse Roy's actions in perspective. The same cannot be said for Filth, which often reads like an episode of Prime Suspect as written by the makers of Friday the 13th under the influence of fellow Scottish writers Ian Rankin and Robert Louis Stevenson (Jekyll and Hyde). Bruce Robertson is a detective for whom abuse of power is a way of life—a frighteningly lonely life, it turns out. Unfortunately, Robertson's appalling isolation is all but overwhelmed by Welsh's crude approach (however deliberate some or all of it may be) and, once again, an equally appalling sentimentality when it comes to explaining (if not quite exonerating) Robertson's personality and behavior. Although the subject of much criticism for its cover—a pig wearing a constable's helmet—Filth—like the tapeworm-shaped passages that devour its host's narrative right on the page—tries too hard both to offend and explain. Whatever its aesthetic weaknesses, Filth evidences Welsh's willingness to address topics of concern to his mainly youthful audience in ways and forms sure to shock and even offend the general public: in his widely read novels and short stories; in the 'blasphemous' film version of three Acid House stories (for which Welsh wrote the screenplay); in Headstate, a theater piece performed at rave clubs; and You'll Have Had Your Hole, a contemporary Jacobean revenge play set in an abandoned recording studio in Edinburgh.

-Robert Morace

WELTY, Eudora (Alice)

Nationality: American. Born: Jackson, Mississippi, 13 April 1909. Education: Mississippi State College for Women, Columbus, 1925–27; University of Wisconsin, Madison, B.A. 1929; Columbia University School for Advertising, New York, 1930-31. Career: Part-time journalist, 1931-32; publicity agent, Works Progress Administration (WPA), 1933-36; staff member, New York Times Book Review, during World War II. Honorary Consultant in American Letters, Library of Congress, Washington, D.C., 1958. Awards: Bread Loaf Writers Conference fellowship, 1940; O. Henry award, 1942, 1943, 1968; Guggenheim fellowship, 1942, 1948; American Academy grant, 1944, Howells Medal, 1955, and gold medal, 1972; Ford fellowship, for drama; Brandeis University Creative Arts award, 1965; Edward MacDowell medal 1970; Pulitzer prize, 1973; National Medal for Literature, 1980; Presidential Medal of Freedom, 1980; American Book award, for paperback, 1983; Bobst award, 1984; Common Wealth award, 1984; Mystery Writers of America award, 1985; National Medal of Arts, 1987; National Endowment for the Arts Award, 1989; National Book Foundation Medal, 1991; Charles Frankel prize, 1992; French Legion of Honor, 1996. D.Litt.: Denison University, Granville, Ohio, 1971; Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts; University of Wisconsin, Madison; University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee; Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia. Member: American Academy, 1971; Chevalier, Order of Arts and Letters (France), 1987. Address: 1119 Pinehurst Street, Jackson, Mississippi 39202, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Robber Bridegroom. New York, Doubleday, 1942; London, Lane, 1944.

Delta Wedding. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1946; London, Lane, 1947.

The Ponder Heart. New York, Harcourt Brace, and London, Hamish Hamilton, 1954.

Losing Battles. New York, Random House, 1970; London, Virago Press, 1982. The Optimist's Daughter. New York, Random House, 1972; London, Deutsch, 1973.

Complete Novels. New York, Library of America, 1998.

Short Stories

A Curtain of Green. New York, Doubleday, 1941; London, Lane, 1943.

The Wide Net and Other Stories. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1943; London, Lane, 1945.

Music from Spain. Greenville, Mississippi, Levee Press, 1948.

The Golden Apples. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1949; London, Lane, 1950.

Selected Stories. New York, Modern Library, 1954.

The Bride of Innisfallen and Other Stories. New York, Harcourt Brace, and London, Hamish Hamilton, 1955.

Thirteen Stories, edited by Ruth M. Vande Kieft. New York, Harcourt Brace. 1965.

The Collected Stories of Eudora Welty. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1980; London, Boyars, 1981.

Moon Lake and Other Stories. Franklin Center, Pennsylvania, Franklin Library 1980.

Retreat. Jackson, Mississippi, Palaemon Press, 1981.

Stories, Essays and Memoir. New York, Library of America, 1998. The First Story. Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1999.

Poetry

A Flock of Guinea Hens Seen from a Car. New York, Albondocani Press, 1970.

Other

Short Stories (essay). New York, Harcourt Brace, 1949.

Place in Fiction. New York, House of Books, 1957.

Three Papers on Fiction. Northampton, Massachusetts, Smith College, 1962.

The Shoe Bird (for children). New York, Harcourt Brace, 1964.

A Sweet Devouring (on children's literature). New York, Albondocani Press, 1969.

One Time, One Place: Mississippi in the Depression: A Snapshot Album. New York, Random House, 1971.

A Pageant of Birds. New York, Albondocani Press, 1975.

Fairy Tale of the Natchez Trace. Jackson, Mississippi Historical Society, 1975.

The Eye of the Story: Selected Essays and Reviews. New York, Random House, 1978; London, Virago Press, 1987.

Ida M'Toy (memoir). Urbana, University of Illinois Press, 1979.

Miracles of Perception: The Art of Willa Cather, with Alfred Knopf and Yehudi Menuhin. Charlottesville, Virginia, Alderman Library, 1980.

Conversations with Eudora Welty, edited by Peggy Whitman Prenshaw. Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1984.

One Writer's Beginnings. Cambridge, Massachusetts, Harvard University Press, 1984; London, Faber, 1985.

Photographs. Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1989.

A Worn Path (for children). Mankato, Minnesota, Creative Education, 1991.

A Writer's Eye: Collected Book Reviews, edited by Pearl Amelia McHaney. Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1994.

Country Churchyards. Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 2000.

Editor, with Ronald A. Sharp, The Norton Book of Friendship. New York, Norton, 1991.

*

Bibliography: In Mississippi Quarterly (Mississippi State), Fall 1973, and Eudora Welty—A Bibliography of Her Work, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1994, both by Noel Polk; Eudora Welty: A Reference Guide by Victor H. Thompson, Boston, Hall, 1976; Eudora Welty: A Critical Bibliography by Bethany C. Swearingen, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1984; The Welty Collection: A Guide to the Eudora Welty Manuscripts and Documents at the Mississippi Department of Archives and History by Suzanne Marrs, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1988.

Manuscript Collection: Mississippi Department of Archives and History, Jackson.

Critical Studies (selection): Eudora Welty by Ruth M. Vande Kieft, New York, Twayne, 1962, revised edition, 1986; A Season of Dreams: The Fiction of Eudora Welty by Alfred Appel, Jr., Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 1965; Eudora Welty by Joseph A. Bryant, Jr., Minneapolis, University of Minnesota Press, 1968; The Rhetoric of Eudora Welty's Short Stories by Zelma Turner Howard, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1973; A Still Moment: Essays on the Art of Eudora Welty edited by John F. Desmond, Metuchen, New Jersey, Scarecrow Press, 1978; Eudora Welty: Critical Essays edited by Peggy Whitman Prenshaw, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1979; Eudora Welty: A Form of Thanks edited by Ann J. Abadie and Louis D. Dollarhide, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1979; Eudora Welty's Achievement of Order by Michael Kreyling, Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 1980; Eudora Welty by Elizabeth Evans, New York, Ungar, 1981; Tissue of Lies: Eudora Welty and the Southern Romance by Jennifer L. Randisi, Boston, University Press of America, 1982; Eudora Welty's Chronicle: A Story of Mississippi Life by Albert J. Devlin, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1983, and Welty: A Life in Literature edited by Devlin, University Press of Mississippi, 1988; With Ears Opening Like Morning Glories: Eudora Welty and the Love of Storytelling by Carol S. Manning, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1985; Eudora Welty by Louise Westling, London, Macmillan, 1989; Eudora Welty: Eye of the Storyteller edited by Dawn Trouard, Kent, Ohio, Kent State University Press, 1989; Eudora Welty: Seeing Black and White by Robert MacNeil, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1990; Serious Daring from Within: Female Narrative Strategies in Eudora Welty's Novels by Franziska Gygax, New York, Greenwood, 1990; Eudora Welty: Seeing Black and White by Robert MacNeil, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1990; The Heart of the Story: Eudora Welty's Short Fiction by Peter Schmidt, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1991; The Critical Response to Eudora Welty's Fiction by Laurie Champion, Westport, Connecticut, Greenwood Press, 1994; Daughter of the Swan: Love and Knowledge in Eudora Welty's Fiction by Gail Mortimer (Gail Linda), Athens, University of Georgia Press, 1994; The Dragon's Blood: Feminist Intertextuality in Eudora Welty's

"The Golden Apples" by Rebecca Mark, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1994; Eudora Welty's Aesthetics of Place by Jan Nordby Gretlund, Newark, University of Delaware Press, 1994; The Still Moment by Paul Binding, London, Virago, 1994; More Conversations with Eudora Welty, edited by Peggy Whitman Prenshaw, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1996; A Reader's Guide to the Short Stories of Eudora Welty by Diane R. Pingatore, New York, G.K. Hall, and London, Prentice Hall International, 1996; Eudora Welty and Virginia Woolf: Gender, Genre, and Influence by Suzan Harrison, Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 1997; Eudora Welty: A Study of the Short Fiction by Carol Ann Johnston, New York, Twayne Publishers, and London, Prentice Hall International, 1997; The Late Novels of Eudora Welty, edited by Jan Nordby Gretlund and Karl-Heinz Westarp, Columbia, University of South Carolina Press, 1998; Understanding Eudora Welty by Michael Kreyling, Columbia, University of South Carolina Press, 1999; Eudora Welty, edited by Harold Bloom, Broomall, Pennsylvania, Chelsea House Publishers, 1999; Eudora Welty: Writers' Reflections Upon First Reading Welty, edited by Pearl Amelia McHaney, Athens, Georgia, Hill Street Press, 1999; Prophets of Recognition: Ideology and the Individual in Novels by Ralph Ellison, Toni Morrison, Saul Bellow, and Eudora Welty by Julia Eichelberger, Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 1999; Eudora Welty and Politics: Did the Writer Crusade?, edited by Harriet Pollack and Suzanne Marrs, Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 2000.

* * *

For Peggy Whitman Prenshaw's collection of tributes, I described Eudora Welty as a rare phenomenon in American letters, "a civilized writer." To explain my meaning, I must turn to Ruth M. Vande Kieft's introduction to the revised version of her Eudora Welty. Though Vande Kieft does not employ my term, she explains that as an artist Welty "does not seem to have felt any deep personal alienation from her culture, made no strong protests about the encroachment of industrialism or passing of the old order." Unlike the modernists, she is a writer who has accepted, as the price of civilization, its discontents.

This acceptance finds form in her still too much neglected first novel, The Robber Bridegroom, which comes as close as any American fiction to providing a myth of the nation's maturing as, with the passing of the frontier, the wilderness gives way to the mercantile state. "All things are double," planter Clement Musgrove observes ruefully as his own pastoral world that has replaced the Indian wild gives way in its turn to urban society. As for Jamie Lockhart, the two-faced hero of this serio-comic fantasy, Welty notes that "the outward transfer from bandit to merchant had been almost too easy to count it a change at all." The transformation is only cosmetic; merchants use the same gifts as bandits to operate legally in polite society.

Even in her first published story, "Death of a Traveling Salesman," Welty had subtly countered the Wastelanders of the 1920s and 1930s by counterpointing the death of the titular figure (that Arthur Miller would later confirm as emblematic of the dying world) with a Promethean bringer of fire as head of a family just emerging from barbarism to give promise of civilization's renewal.

The kind of memorable stories collected in Welty's first book, A Curtain of Green—"Why I Live at the P.O.," "Petrified Man," "A Visit of Charity," and the lilting jazz text "Powerhouse"—had been enthusiastically received by Cleanth Brook's and Robert Penn Warren's Southern Review, house organ of the New Criticism that flourished on ironic portrayals of the differences between people's expectations and their fulfillment. Unlike other writers, however, Welty was able to expand her vision with changing times. With two stories in her next collection, The Wide Net, employing such historical figures as Aaron Burr ("First Love") and the bandit Murrell, the Man of God Lorenzo Dow, and the naturalist Audubon in "A Still Moment," Welty seemed embarked (as in The Robber Bridegroom) on creating a mythology that earlier aspirants had failed to produce for the emerging nation. In "A Still Moment" she had indeed captured as tellingly as Melville in Billy Budd the awful cost of civilization in the destruction of beauty as the quiet naturalist-artist horrifies the two wild men into whose company he has fallen by his cool shooting of a beautiful heron to use as a model for a painting.

Welty did not linger in the distant past, but returned with her next novel, Delta Wedding, to the world where she best found her voice (as she describes the climactic step in her development in the autobiographical One Writer's Beginnings), the Mississippi of her own lifetime where outsiders were beginning to challenge the rule of imperiously aristocratic family-clans that had dominated the society. Against the most tranquil background that Welty could summon up, she depicts the struggle of an uncle's bride and a niece's groom from what the Fairchilds regard as an inferior class to claim their spouses from a deeply loving but overprotective and tradition-ridden family.

Family dominates also The Golden Apples. Welty includes this work in her Collected Stories, but it is really what Forrest Ingram calls "a short-story cycle," a novel composed of tales that can be read individually but that gain additional meaning when considered in relationship to each other. Welty explains in One Writer's Beginnings how stories that she had originally written about various characters "under different names, at different periods in their lives, in situations not yet interlocking but ready for it," grew into "a shadowing of Greek mythological figures, gods and heroes that wander in various guises, at various times, in and out, emblems of the characters' heady dreams." Focused on "one location already evoked," the portentously named town of Morgana, Mississippi, the meandering tales demonstrate how these provincial versions of universal types, though some wander afar and some stay at home, all return at last to their origins.

Despite the principle of the eternal return seemingly underlying this story-sequence, Welty over the next decade began casting about to evoke what she regards as supremely important in fiction, "a sense of place," about somewhere beyond contemporary Mississippi—the Civil War in "The Burning," the Mississippi delta beyond New Orleans in "No Place for You, My Love," and dreamlike regions as far afield as Italy and Cork, Ireland, in "Going to Naples" and "The Bride of Innisfallen," in the stories collected in the volume named for the last mentioned. None of these experiments, however, had quite the authenticity of a story included with them, "Ladies in Spring," and the separately published novelette The Ponder Heart, both of which take place in the rural Mississippi to which Welty returned, like her characters in The Golden Apples, after wandering.

The Ponder Heart, which went on to become a successful play after first being published in its entirety in one issue of the New Yorker, exemplifies the narrative form Welty handles with the most consummate skill, the first-person monologue of a figure with whom she by no means identifies, but whose mind she can read and whose words she can capture with the skill of the mockingbird, mimicking the sounds of its Southern "place." This tale, told by a busybody small-town hotel-keeper about the surprising outcome of the trial of her elderly uncle Daniel Ponder for literally tickling his teenaged bride to death, appropriately won the William Dean Howells award of the American Academy of Arts and Letters for the most distinguished work of American fiction for the years 1950 to 1955; for it was Howells who had in The Rise of Silas Lapham laid down the challenge to American writers to which Welty's work has become the major response, "... it is certain that our manners and customs go for more in life than our qualities. The price that we pay for civilization is the fine yet impassable differentiation of these. Perhaps we pay too much." Whatever Welty's views of Howell's last speculation, after her triumphs with The Ponder Heart, she settled down to working in the same vein for fifteen years as she was preoccupied with her longest and most complex novel, Losing Battles, the chronicle in many voices (that she reads aloud magically) of the reunion of an immense clan of subsistence farmers in one of the poorest backwoods regions of the northeast Mississippi hills. In part Losing Battles returns (as does later The Optimist's Daughter) to the story of an outside bride's attempts to rescue (as she sees it) the husband for whom she has given up her own ambitions to improve her place in the world from the clutches of his dependent family. As the story takes shape, however, Julia Mortimer-the kind of schoolteacher whom Welty admits in One Writer's Beginnings she has most often written about, although she dies beyond the principal scenes of the novel during the day and a half of its action—takes over as the focal figure. She is the embodiment of the enlightened disciplinarian who, though constantly losing battles, has never surrendered in the war to share her illumination with her charges in the waste land at the margin of civilization. A marvelous mixture of comedy and pathos, the long folk-like tale is a remarkable tribute to the indomitability of the human spirit, especially the female spirit in the role that Howells celebrated as the poised guardian of civilized culture.

The writing of the novel was interrupted by two of Welty's most powerful stories that did not appear in book form until her stories were collected in 1980. "Where Is the Voice Coming From?," written in a single night after the shooting of civil rights leader Medgar Evers, is the internal monologue of his killer, for which, Welty explains in One Writer's Beginnings, she entered "into the mind and inside the skin of a character who could hardly have been more alien or repugnant to me." "The Demonstrators" is an almost equally harrowing account of a small community's white doctor's involvement in some sordid affairs of the blacks during the years of the civil rights crises that he perceives necessitate the transformation of his traditional community. Most remarkable about the two stories is their revelation of the intensity that the most crucial experiences of her "place" can evoke from her.

Perhaps under the impact of such recent events, even Welty's good humor and civilized virtues have been sorely tried, as is suggested by her most recent novel, The Optimist's Daughter, in which she reverts to the ironic mode of her earliest stories to depict the plight of a woman who has lost her beloved husband, her mother, and her father as she is deprived of her inheritance and driven out of her home place by her father's young second wife, a redneck (never Welty's term) from Texas (envisioned here as beyond the edge of civilization). Despite all the honors that Welty has justifiably received and despite her avowal in One Writer's Beginnings that "Of all my strong emotions, anger is the one least responsible for my work," the ironically titled The Optimist's Daughter seems an acknowledgment that like Julia Mortimer, she and her society have been fighting losing battles, although the struggle has been worthwhile in honoring what she describes as her reverence for "the holiness of life."

WENDT, Albert

Nationality: Samoan. Born: Apia, Western Samoa, 27 October 1939; member of the Aiga Sa-Tuala. Education: New Plymouth Boys High School, New Zealand, graduated 1957; Ardmore Teacher's College, diploma in teaching, 1959; Victoria University, Wellington, 1960-64, M.A. (honours) in history 1964. Family: Married Jennifer Elizabeth Whyte in 1964; two daughters and one son. Career: Teacher, 1964-69, and principal, 1969-73, Samoa College, Apia; senior lecturer, 1974-75, assistant director of Extension Services, 1976–77, and professor of pacific literature, 1982–87, University of the South Pacific, Suva, Fiji. Since 1988 professor of English, University of Auckland. Director, University of the South Pacific Centre, Apia, Western Samoa, after 1978. Editor, Bulletin, now Samoa Times, Apia, 1966, and Mana Publications, Suva, Fiji, 1974–80. Coordinator, Unesco Program on Oceanic Cultures, 1975–79. Awards: Landfall prize, 1963; Wattie award, 1980. Agent: Tim Curnow, Curtis Brown (Australia) Pty. Ltd., 27 Union Street, Paddington, New South Wales 2021, Australia. Address: Department of English, University of Auckland, Private Bag 92019, Auckland 1, New Zealand.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Sons for the Return Home. Auckland, Longman Paul, 1973; London, Penguin, 1987; Honolulu, University of Hawaii Press, 1996.

Pouliuli. Auckland, Longman Paul, 1977; Honolulu, University Press of Hawaii, 1980; London, Penguin, 1987.

Leaves of the Banyan Tree. Auckland, Longman Paul, 1979; London, Allen Lane, 1980; as The Banyan, New York, Doubleday, 1984.

Ola. Auckland, Penguin, 1990; Honolulu, University of Hawaii Press, 1995.

Black Rainbow. Auckland, Penguin, 1991; Honolulu, University of Hawaii Press, 1995.

Photographs. Auckland, Auckland University Press, 1995.

Short Stories

Flying-Fox in a Freedom Tree. Auckland, Longman Paul, 1974; Honolulu, University of Hawaii Press, 1999.

The Birth and Death of the Miracle Man. London and New York, Viking, 1986.

Plays

Comes the Revolution (produced Suva, Fiji, 1972). The Contract (produced Apia, Western Samoa, 1972).

Poetry

Inside Us the Dead: Poems 1961 to 1974. Auckland, Longman Paul, 1976.

Shaman of Visions. Auckland, Auckland University Press, 1984; Oxford, Oxford University Press, 1985.

Other

Editor, Some Modern Poetry from Fiji [Western Samoa, the New Hebrides, the Solomon Islands, Vanuatu]. Suva, Fiji, Mana, 5 vols., 1974–75.

Editor, Lali: A Pacific Anthology. Auckland, Longman Paul, 1980.
Editor, Nuanua: A Pacific Anthology. Auckland, Auckland University Press, 1995; published as Nuanua: Pacific Writing in English Since 1980, Honolulu, University of Hawaii Press, 1995.

*

Critical Studies: "Towards a New Oceania" by Wendt, in Mana Review (Suva, Fiji), January 1976; chapter on Wendt in South Pacific Literature: From Myth to Fabulation by Subramani, Suya, Fiji, University of the South Pacific, 1985; Albert Wendt and Samoan Identity by Sina Va'ai, Apia, Samoa, NUS Publications, 1997.

* * *

As the Samoan novelist, short story writer, and poet Albert Wendt has said, he "belongs to two worlds in almost every way." For more than a decade after his early teens he experienced the difficulties of adapting himself to an alien culture in New Zealand, and his return to Samoa gave rise to a process of readjustment both to his ancestral past and to the post-independence present of his country. His writing stems in some measure from this bi-cultural predicament. It is a return to and a quest for the roots of his being. Significantly enough, Inside Us the Dead is the title of his volume of poems.

If his novels and short stories are the work of a self-acknowledged literary pioneer, they are much more than a welcome indication that a Polynesian literature is developing in the southwest Pacific. However difficult it may be to assess the ultimate value of productions for which in many important ways no firm basis for comparison exists, it is nonetheless clear that they achieve distinction as explorations of human relations and a way of life that have almost escaped the attention of romantic or racist outlanders.

Sons for the Return Home, Wendt's first novel, was published many years after his own return to Western Samoa. The simplicity of its plot and language is in marked contrast to the ambiguities and ironies of the pursuit of selfhood that, interwoven with a Samoan myth, provides the theme and gives substance and meaning to the narrative. Because it is mainly concerned with a Samoan family living in New Zealand, the fa'a Samoa or the Samoan way of life becomes an integral part of the novel's structure and not an intrusive element requiring unnecessary explanation. The doubts and difficulties implicit in the theme are developed in terms of incident and human relationship, and the disillusion experienced after "the return home" becomes the novel's climax, which offers no easy solution to the personal problems arising from cultural shock.

Wendt's later publications are centred on the extended families in the villages of Samoa, but they contain little to suggest that they are guidebooks to an exotic and romantic island-world. In the short stories of Flying-Fox in a Freedom Tree, in Pouliuli, and in the three parts of Leaves of the Banyan Tree the quest for identity, the attempt to discover the true self caught between the claims of contending cultures, and the search for a precarious freedom from the dictates of competing orthodoxies are raised to a higher level. They are not merely the consequences of racial disharmony, but originate in the basic conditions of human existence. The flying-fox hangs upsidedown in the freedom tree. The powerful head of an extended family rejects his past, repudiates his present, and in advanced old age seeks freedom in Pouliuli, in darkness. The rise and fall of another titled head of an aiga in Leaves of the Banyan Tree, with his lust for power and his imitation of Papalagi (European) ways, may be related to the social pollution of the islands but have their source in a deeper corruption.

This long and powerful novel explores in myth and legend, in traditional social structure, and in the changing post-independence present not only what has happened to the fa'a Samoa, but what has happened to human beings. The comedy and the tragedy, the violence, the horror and the glory of human life, together with man's desperate search for the meaning of existence, are localised in a village setting populated by an extraordinary variety of characters. The middle section of an expanded version of Flying-Fox in a Freedom Tree, the novella that gives its title to the earlier volume of short stories, becomes an essential and thoroughly coordinated part of the whole book, linking the first section, "God, Money, and Success," to the third, "Funerals and Heirs," of this saga of a Samoan village.

The Birth and Death of the Miracle Man is a divergence from Wendt's earlier writings. Where in previous works Wendt's protagonists struggled to find a place for themselves in a society that suppressed individualism, in Birth and Death communal values, parent-child relationships, and a strong familial structure are emphasized. Particularly prevalent are the relationships between fathers and sons. "A Talent," "Elena's Son," and "The Balloonfish and the Armadillo" deal with fathers who have failed in their obligations and sons who are held hostage by unreasonable expectations, both of their fathers and of themselves. Occasionally a story like "Hamlet" verges on the sentimental, but most of the tales in this collection leave the reader with an affecting, memorable impression, entirely in keeping with Wendt's belief that the fa'a Samoa is best presented by Samoans themselves.

Ola, a novel, delves into issues concerning the creative process. A Samoan word that functions as both noun and verb, Ola means "life" and "to create life." It is these two merging concepts that the author tinkers with in the novel. When a biographer begins to rearrange Olamaiileoti Farou Monroe's letters, diaries, and poems, he finds that he has begun to reconstruct an entirely singular existence. Particularly effective is the chapter "Crocodile," which captures the conflict between public fictions and private realities. The schoolgirl Ola gets a glimpse of this conflict after sharing a moment of empathy with a middle-aged schoolteacher who had been previously shrouded in myth and innuendo.

Black Rainbow, Wendt's next novel, adopts the devices of science fiction to advocate cultural differentness. Set in a futuristic New Zealand, ala Orwell's 1984, Black Rainbow addresses the relationship between postcolonialism and postmodernism, contending that the creation of a national literature is a kind of colonialization itself—the imposition of a criteria on something that should be fluid. Through humor and a willful mixing of Anglo and Samoan popular culture, Wendt challenges the idea of a "pure culture," untainted by the outside world. Culture is not immutable, the novel suggests, but constantly in flux—modified and enhanced by outside influences. Taking as its subtext a lithograph by Maori artist Ralph Hotere, which protests nuclear testing in the South Pacific, the novel also explores the legacy of cultural imperialism and the effects of progress on the Polynesian Garden of Eden.

As a Polynesian writer Wendt has not been satisfied to produce fiction that has entertainment value alone or to exploit the fa'a Samoa for the benefit of the foreign tourist. His aim has been far more ambitious, and he has taken greater risks. If at times he lays himself open to adverse critical comment and his intentions have not always been realised, his achievement is nonetheless impressive. He has set a standard that augurs well for the future.

-H. Winston Rhodes, updated by Lynda Schrecengost

WESLEY, Mary

Nationality: British. Born: Mary Farmar in Englefield Green, Berkshire, 24 June 1912. Education: Queen's College, London, 1928–39; London School of Economics, 1931–32. Family: Married 1) Lord Swinfen in 1937 (divorced 1944), two sons; 2) Eric Siepmann in 1951, one son. Career: Staff member, War Office, London, 1939–41. C.B.E. (Commander, Order of the British Empire), 1995. Address: c/o Bantam Press, 61–63 Uxbridge Road, London W5 5SA, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Sixth Seal. London, Macdonald, 1969; New York, Stein and Day, 1971.

Jumping the Queue. London, Macmillan, 1983; New York, Penguin, 1988.

Haphazard House. London, Dent, 1983.

The Camomile Lawn. London, Macmillan, 1984; New York, Summit, 1985.

Harnessing Peacocks. London, Macmillan, 1985; New York, Scribner, 1986.

The Vacillations of Poppy Carew. London, Macmillan, 1986; New York, Penguin, 1988.

Not That Sort of Girl. London, Macmillan, 1987; New York, Viking, 1988.

Second Fiddle. London, Macmillan, 1988; New York, Viking, 1989. A Sensible Life. London, Bantam, and New York, Viking, 1990.

A Dubious Legacy. London, Bantam, 1992; New York, Viking, 1993. An Imaginative Experience. London, Bantam, 1994; New York, Viking, 1995.

Part of the Furniture. New York, Viking, 1996.

Other (for children)

Speaking Terms. London, Faber, 1969; Boston, Gambit, 1971.

* * *

Mary Wesley's popularity can be traced in part to the humor, sensitivity, and wit with which she handles her characters and plots. Depicting quintessentially British middle-class life she creates fast moving, tightly constructed scenarios written in simple yet evocative language. The frankness with which she deals with her subject matter has led one critic to comment that Wesley "... has reached an age when she can say dangerous or naughty things without shocking." All seven of her novels deal with seemingly taboo subjects such as incest, matricide, suicide, and prostitution; love, sex, and death are dominant themes throughout.

The female protagonists of her books are misfits—eccentric, for the most part independent women who live on the periphery of the middle-class world so often described. Matilda Poliport, the central figure in Wesley's first novel, Jumping the Queue begins this trend of characterization. Matilda comes from a comparatively privileged world, she resides in the South West of England (a favorite setting for Wesley's books), and she is alone. Recently widowed at the opening of the book, Matilda meticulously plans her suicide, only to be thwarted by the entrance of Hugh, a fugitive from the police. Also contemplating suicide, Hugh is instead taken home by Matilda and life begins again for them both.

Jumping the Queue is original and often maliciously witty. In common with Wesley's later novels the plot contains a series of subplots, farcical scenes, and bitter twists. We find for example that Tom, Matilda's much idolized husband, was in reality having an incestuous relationship with his daughter and was also involved in drug smuggling and espionage. Perhaps most shocking of all is the discovery that Matilda is aware of some if not all of these occurrences. Although the novel is filled with black humor it also possesses moments of extreme sadness and poignancy, the most surprising of which is Matilda's successful suicide at the end of the book. In this respect the novel differs from the author's other works which have somewhat happier endings. Even in Second Fiddle, which ends with the protagonist Laura walking away from the men who love her, there is some semblance of hope as the reader knows that Laura is a capable and strong woman, a survivor. However, Matilda dies completely disillusioned, having lost everything she ever cared for, even her dignity in death.

The Camomile Lawn introduces the colorful Calypso Grant, who reappears in four of the later works. Set initially during World War II, the book follows the fortunes and relationships of five cousins, Oliver, Polly, Calypso, Walter and Sophie over a period of forty years. Sex is a dominant theme, and the war becomes the liberating factor in allowing the female characters in particular the freedom to experiment with their own sexuality. Hence we find Polly enjoying a relationship with twin brothers, one or both of whom father her children, and Calypso and Sophie embark on a series of affairs. Sophie is the misfit child (a common character in Wesley's books) who at the beginning of the book is hopelessly in love with Oliver, a love which endures and which is finally consummated four decades later.

The theme of a lasting love that finally wins through is a favored one in Wesley's work occurring in Harnessing Peacocks, Not That Sort of Girl, and A Sensible Life. In Not That Sort of Girl the central figure, Rose, rejects her beloved yet impoverished Mylo Cooper for the staid and rich Ned Peel. Over the next forty years she remains faithful to both men; Ned, her husband, and Mylo her lover. When Ned dies, Rose and Mylo finally marry, their love having survived marriages, births, and deaths. Similarly, in Harnessing Peacocks Hebe falls pregnant at the beginning of the book then rediscovers and falls in love with the father of her son some seventeen years later. Hebe is probably one of the most likable of Wesley's female characters. Running away from her grandparents, who plan to force her to have an abortion, Hebe instead becomes first a cook and then a prostitute who sells her favors for vast amounts of money in order to school her son Silas. Hebe is independent, pragmatic, and very much in control of the men who pass through her life.

Laura, the protagonist in Second Fiddle, shares with Hebe her attraction for men. Both women are mysterious and unattainable, Hebe because of the nature of her work and Laura because of her avoidance of entanglement. Although Wesley never actually states it, through suggestion and innuendo the reader concludes that Laura is the product of an incestuous relationship between her mother and uncle, the twins Emily and Nicholas Thornby. To complicate matters further we find that Laura has also been sexually abused by Nicholas, who if not her father is certainly her uncle. Laura is a strange character who the reader never really knows. Combining strength with surprising vulnerability she embarks on a relationship with a 23-year-old would-be writer and inevitably falls in love with him. Choosing to be alone she ends the relationship and rejects the two men who love her.

Poppy Carew in The Vacillations of Poppy Carew advocates pleasure over commitment. Left a great deal of money by her milkman father (also an inveterate but successful gambler) Poppy is suddenly thrust into a completely new world. Moving from North Africa to the South West of England, the novel is crammed with charming and vital characters, sub-plots and petty intrigues. Although Poppy, like Laura, rejects the man who loves her (the pig farmer Willie Guthrie) she finally realizes that she can have both pleasure and commitment with him. Thus, unlike Laura, Poppy decides to take the risk.

Flora, the pivotal character in A Sensible Life, combines the independence of Laura and Hebe with the awkwardness of the young Sophie. Sojourning with her parents in Dinard in 1926 the ten-year-old Flora meets and falls in love with three young men, Cosmo, Hubert, and Felix. Rejected by her parents who consider her a misfit in the same way that Laura, Sophie, and Hebe are considered strange by their parents, guardians and grandparents, Flora turns instead to the three men for love and attention. Over a period of forty years (a popular time span in Wesley's books) she explores her feelings for all of them and ends up with Cosmo.

Wesley's other works include The Sixth Seal, an apocalyptic and frightening vision of the world. Haphazard House which focuses on an eccentric painter and his family, who go to live in an old and haunted house in the country, and differs from Wesley's other works in that the reader receives a much more personal account of events as seen through the eyes of the narrator Lisa. Wesley has also written a children's book called Speaking Terms, in which a group of children learn to understand and speak to the animals through a bullfinch named Mr. Bull. Charmingly written and illustrated, the message of the book is essentially conservationist. An Imaginative Experience, produced when the author was well into her eighties, depicts a romantic triangle of good man/good woman/bad man, and does so in such a deft and delightful fashion that one's major complaint is the book's length-too short. Part of the Furniture, a tale of May-December romance set against the backdrop of World War II, is perhaps even more delightful.

Several of these later works mark a departure for Wesley: stylistically her use of language is still concise and simple, yet her sentence structure is shorter in these books, and her use of dialogue more extensive. Thematically several of the topics tackled in the later novels—love, death, and age—also occur in these books, and her characters retain their sense of individuality, humor, and eccentricity.

Wesley's books show a great understanding of human nature. Young and old alike are depicted with sensitivity, perception, and wit. The combination of a frank style, rich and complex plots, and a concise and simple use of language create extremely charming and readable books.

-Aruna Vasudevan, updated by Judson Knight

WEST, Anthony C(athcart Muir)

Nationality: Irish. Born: County Down, Northern Ireland, 1 July 1910. Military Service: Served in the Royal Air Force Pathfinder Force during World War II: air observer and navigator bomber. Family: Married Olive Mary Burr in 1940; 11 children. Awards: Atlantic award, 1946. Address: c/o Midland Bank Ltd., Castle St., Beaumaris, Anglesey, Gwynedd LL58 8AR, Wales.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Native Moment. New York, McDowell Obolensky, 1959; London, MacGibbon and Kee, 1961.

Rebel to Judgment. New York, Obolensky, 1962.

The Ferret Fancier. London, MacGibbon and Kee, 1963; New York, Simon and Schuster, 1965.

As Towns with Fire. London, MacGibbon and Kee, 1968; New York, Knopf, 1970.

Short Stories

River's End and Other Stories. New York, McDowell Obolensky, 1958; London, MacGibbon and Kee, 1960.

All the King's Horses and Other Stories. Dublin, Poolbeg Press, 1981.

*

Critical Studies: Forces and Themes in Ulster Fiction by John Wilson Foster, Dublin, Gill and Macmillan, 1974; Celtic, Christian, Socialist: The Novels of Anthony C. West by Audrey S. Eyler, Rutherford, New Jersey, Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1993.

Anthony C. West comments:

I have a creative and an a-political interest in the human condition, wherever and however it may be found, with the incorrigible hope for social harmony and world tolerance.

* * *

The fiction of Anthony C. West is filled with poignant and great tenderness, yet it is not just lyric. The main characters of his novels are all very much attuned to nature, yet in the world if not entirely of it. He handles scenes of childhood well, yet his children grow up. As Towns with Fire, his latest novel, creates a focus, almost a culmination, for The Native Moment and The Ferret Fancier.

As Towns with Fire is the portrait of a man and a war. Beginning New Year's Eve, 1939, it traces the experiences of Christopher MacMannan, an Irishman who has settled in London to train himself as a writer, to the day of his discharge from the R.A.F. after the war has ended. During this time he has done odd jobs and worked with the

A.R.P., married, had two children, gone to Belfast where he suffered employment, unemployment, and air raids, joined the Air Force, and flown many missions as observer in Mosquitoes.

There is almost too much in this book, but all of it is good. The war scenes are vivid and suspenseful. There is a charming lyric episode when MacMannan camps out in the hills of Northern Ireland. There is mystery in that, although a long flashback traces his childhood in detail, his history stops when he leaves school; however, references throughout the story imply that between then and the beginning of the story proper, he had traveled widely and saved enough money for a free year in London, at the same time maturing without losing the sensitivity he had as a child. He refuses to submit his poetry for publication until it reaches some form of perfection known only to him. There is some sort of symbolism in his efforts to protect little ducks from the cruelty of thoughtless children.

A similar affinity with nature is in The Native Moment, an account of the day Simon Green goes to Dublin with a live eel in a pail; because London sales have dropped off, he is seeking an Irish market for the eels that abound in the northern lakes. He gets drunk, sleeps with a prostitute, is disappointed in a meeting with an old friend, and resolves to marry a girl made pregnant by her uncle. Yet so long as he can keep the eel alive, changing its water regularly he survives his crises. The Ferret Fancier is a pastoral in which the same kind of sensitive character is given a ferret as a pet when a child.

West has been compared with Joyce and Beckett, and if one does not seek word play or the broadly comic, it is possible to see the comparison. But in his feeling for nature, for the persons and places of the Irish countryside, he adds another ingredient. For all of their accomplishments this century, Irish writers have tended to be parochially Irish, or write mainly of urban settings or rural settings, but rarely both. West has broken through this barrier.

-William Bittner

WEST, Paul (Noden)

Nationality: American. Born: Eckington, Derbyshire, England, 23 February 1930; moved to the United States, 1961; became citizen, 1971. Education: The University of Birmingham, 1947–50, B.A. (1st class honours) 1950; Oxford University, 1950-52; Columbia University, New York, M.A. 1953. Military Service: Served in the Royal Air Force, 1954-57: flight lieutenant. Career: Assistant professor, 1957-58, and associate professor of English, 1959-62, Memorial University of Newfoundland, St. John's. Associate professor, 1962-68, professor of English and comparative literature, and senior fellow, 1968-94, and since 1994, emeritus professor of English, Institute for the Arts and Humanistic Studies, Pennsylvania State University, University Park. Visiting professor of comparative literature, University of Wisconsin, Madison, 1965-66; Pratt Lecturer, Memorial University of Newfoundland, 1970; Crawshaw Professor of Literature, Colgate University, Hamilton, New York, Fall 1972; Virginia Woolf Lecturer, University of Tulsa, Oklahoma, 1973; Melvin Hill Visiting Professor, Hobart and William Smith Colleges, Geneva, New York, Fall 1974; writer-in-residence, Wichita State University, Kansas, 1982, and University of Arizona, Tucson, 1984; visiting professor, Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, 1986. Contributor to New Statesman, London, 1954-62. Since 1962 regular contributor to New York Times Book Review and Washington Post Book World. Awards: Canada Council Senior fellowship, 1960; Guggenheim fellowship, 1962; Aga Khan prize (Paris Review), 1974; National Endowment for the Arts fellowship, 1980, 1985; Hazlett Memorial award, 1981; American Academy award, 1985; Pushcart prize, 1987, 1991; New York Public Library Literary Lion award, 1987; Best American Essays award, 1990; Outstanding Achievement medal, Pennsylvania State University, 1991; Grand Prix Halpérine-Kaminsky for Best Foreign Book, 1992; Lannan prize, for fiction, 1993; Distinguished Teaching award, Joint Graduate Schools of the Northeast, 1993. Agent: Elaine Markson, 44 Greenwich Avenue, New York, New York 10011, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

A Quality of Mercy. London, Chatto and Windus, 1961.

Tenement of Clay. London, Hutchinson, 1965.

Alley Jaggers. London, Hutchinson, and New York, Harper, 1966.

I'm Expecting to Live Quite Soon. New York, Harper, 1970; London, Gollancz, 1971.

Caliban's Filibuster. New York, Doubleday, 1971.

Bela Lugosi's White Christmas. London, Gollancz, and New York, Harper, 1972.

Colonel Mint. New York, Dutton, 1972; London, Calder and Boyars, 1973.

Gala. New York, Harper, 1976.

The Very Rich Hours of Count von Stauffenberg. New York, Harper,

Rat Man of Paris. New York, Doubleday, 1986; London, Paladin, 1988.

The Place in Flowers Where Pollen Rests. New York, Doubleday,

Lord Byron's Daughter. New York, Doubleday, 1989.

The Women of Whitechapel and Jack the Ripper. New York, Random House, 1991.

Love's Mansion. New York, Random House, 1992.

The Tent of Orange Mist. New York, Scribner, 1995.

Sporting with Amaryllis. Woodstock, New York, Overlook Press,

Terrestrials. New York, Scribner, 1997.

Life with Swan. New York, Scribner, 1999.

O.K.: The Corral, the Earps, and Doc Holliday. New York, Scribner, 2000.

Short Stories

The Universe and Other Fictions. New York, Overlook Press, 1988.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "The Man Who Ate the Zeitgeist," in London Magazine, April-May
- "Invitation to a Vasectomy," in Words (Boston), Summer 1973.
- "The Wet-God's Macho," in Remington Review (Elizabeth, New Jersey), Spring 1974.
- "The Monocycle," in Carleton Miscellany (Northfield, Minnesota), Spring 1975.

- "Gustav Holst Composes Himself," in New Directions 33. New York, New Directions, 1976.
- "Field Day for a Boy Soldier," in Iowa Review (Iowa City), Spring 1979.
- "Dewey Canyon," in Conjunctions (New York), Spring 1982.
- "The Destroyer of Delight," in Paris Review, Spring 1983.
- "He Who Wears the Pee of the Tiger," in Tri-Quarterly (Evanston, Illinois), Spring 1984.
- "Hopi," in Kenyon Review (Gambier, Ohio), Fall 1986.

Poetry

(Poems). Oxford, Fantasy Press, 1952.

The Spellbound Horses. Toronto, Ryerson Press, 1960.

The Snow Leopard. London, Hutchinson, 1964; New York, Harcourt Brace, 1965.

Other

The Fossils of Piety: Literary Humanism in Decline. New York, Vantage Press, 1959.

The Growth of the Novel. Toronto, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 1959.

Byron and the Spoiler's Art. London, Chatto and Windus, and New York, St. Martin's Press, 1960.

The Modern Novel. London, Hutchinson, 1963; New York, Hillary House, 1965.

I, Said the Sparrow (autobiography). London, Hutchinson, 1963.

Robert Penn Warren. Minneapolis, University of Minnesota Press, 1964; London, Oxford University Press, 1965.

The Wine of Absurdity: Essays in Literature and Consolation. University Park, Pennsylvania State University Press, 1966.

Words for a Deaf Daughter. London, Gollancz, 1969; New York, Harper, 1970.

Doubt and Dylan Thomas (lecture). St. John's, Newfoundland, Memorial University, 1970.

Out of My Depths: A Swimmer in the Universe. New York, Doubleday, 1983.

Sheer Fiction. New Paltz, New York, McPherson, 1987; Sheer Fiction II, 1991; Sheer Fiction III, 1994.

Portable People. New York, Paris Review Editions, 1991.

Duets (text), photographs by James Kiernan. New York, Random House, 1994.

A Stroke of Genius. New York, Viking, 1995.

My Mother's Music. New York, Viking, 1996.

The Secret Lives of Words. New York, Harcourt, 2000.

The Dry Danube: A Hitler Forgery. New York, New Directions, 2000.

Manuscript Collections: Pattee Library, Pennsylvania State University, University Park.

Critical Studies: By John W. Aldridge, in Kenyon Review (Gambier, Ohio), September 1966; New Literary History (Charlottesville, Virginia), Spring 1970 and Spring 1976: "The Writer's Situation II" in New American Review 10, New York, New American Library, 1970, and "In Defense of Purple Prose," in New York Times, 15 December 1985, both by West; interview with George Plimpton, in Caliban's

Filibuster, 1971; article by Brian McLaughlin, in British Novelists since 1960 edited by Jay L. Halio, Detroit, Gale, 1983; "Alexander Theroux / Paul West Issue" of Review of Contemporary Fiction (Elmwood Park, Illinois), Spring 1991; Understanding Paul West by David Madden, Columbia, University of South Carolina Press, 1994.

Paul West comments:

Looking back, I see myself as a late starter who, between thirty and forty, in a sustained and intensive spell of application, set down half a lifetime's pondering and moved from a restless contentment with criticism and fairly orthodox fiction to an almost Fellini-like point of view.

Imagination, as I see it, is an alembic in limbo; it invents, and what it invents has to be added to the sum of Creation—even though nothing imagination invents is wholly its own. I think the realistic novel has served its turn. Fiction has to reclaim some of its ancient privileges, which writers like Lucian and Nashe and Rabelais and Grimmelshausen exploited to the full. I think that only the plasticity of a free-ranging imagination can do justice to late-twentieth-century man who, as incomplete as man ever was, keeps on arming himself with increasing amounts of data which, as ever, mean nothing at all.

My own fiction I have come to see as—I want it to be—a kind of linear mosaic, which is what my second novel, Tenement of Clay, was in a rudimentary form and which two others—The Very Rich Hours of Count von Stauffenberg and Rat Man of Paris—are in a much more advanced and demanding way. Actually, since both vocabulary and syntax are themselves fictive I don't regard my autobiographical writing as essentially different from my fiction: they're both part of the mosaic I invent.

* * *

For excellent reasons, Camden, the central character in Paul West's uneven, faintly gothic first novel, A Quality of Mercy, feels that "what was wrong was not that life was too much but that it was just too many. There was powder in the wind when there should have been crystals immune from every wind.... Life was an unknown and unknowable quantity." Although now, more than twenty-five years later, West's fiction has grown so rich and apparently diverse that good readers will be suspicious of generalizations, it is still possible to see him as an artist working out unexpected variations on the theme Camden hints at indirectly; the problem of contingency. The final human tragedy, Santayana coolly observes, lies in our awareness that everything might just as well have been otherwise, in our consciousness that we are accidental creatures gratuitously existing in random places and forms. We might have been Caesar or we might have been a victim of the Holocaust; and in times when few can go on believing that angels were destined to be angels and stones stones, this can be a devastating insight. There are writers—Sartre, for example—who are in fact appalled by the idea; there are writers like Wallace Stevens and Iris Murdoch who are often exhilarated by the inexplicable variety of being; and there are also a few writers, like Nabokov and West, who veer back and forth eloquently but uneasily between delight and disgust.

A good many of West's characters live condemned to this awareness of contingency, and to make matters worse, condemned to exist in exotic and unlovely forms. The archetypal figure is Caliban, an artist of sorts, howling for justice or at least freedom. In A Quality of Mercy there is Camden; in Tenement of Clay there are Lazarus, the defiant dwarf, and his mentor, Papa Nick, failed saint and keeper of a flophouse whose inmates he tries to reconcile to "the truth of life," and in helping them to swallow that truth to learn, himself, the proper "angle of drinking." In Caliban's Filibuster, there is Cal, the failed writer, and in West's finest novel Count von Stauffenberg, who must go on suffering beyond the grave for his failures. But clearest of all there is Alley Jaggers. At the start of that novel, Alley, longing for some dimly perceived beauty, is "enclosed and embattled but not closed up and defeated," but by the end he is both defeated and literally locked away. In Bela Lugosi's White Christmas Alley provides what is probably West's bitterest cry of rage:

I never applied for admission to your so-called universe. I was kidnapped into it from a better place ... where it is more optional than it is here and now, about the time old God Almighty was in a poxdoctoring dither, not sure which day was which, and wondering why the bejesus he got involved with the whole thing in the first place. . . . My own feeling is this, in case you care, want it for your little black book: if only He'd kept at it all through the seventh day and maybe for all of the next week, we'd all of us be better off. It's just the same as saying the world—your so-called universe—is just a wee bit carelessly put together, fundamentally, firmamentally, fucked up, there being whole armies of folks with club foots, hare lips, folks with spines open to the fresh air and brains blown up as big as hunchback's humps, not to mention the deaf and the blind and the straightforward deformed, the slobberers and slaverers, the daft and St. Vitus dancers, the monkey-faced and the Siamese twins, folks whose hands grow out from their shoulders and folks with no especial sex at all. Don't tell me that twenty sets of quints can make up for all that. Why, it's like asking a pharmacist for an aspirin and getting gunpowder instead. Better to scrap it in the first place if he couldn't get it right or couldn't make up his mind ... Whatever blueprint there was, well, it was just a bit smudged. There ought to be laws against great minds bringing universes into being just for fun. There: that's AJ's first book of the bible; I could have done better myself once I'd gotten the sun to co-operate.

"Blow it all up then?" asks Alley's equally failed analyst, to which Alley replies, "I would, except I'd be loth to give your old universe a helping hand with a dead hand of my own." It is natural enough to wonder where this view of things comes from, and tempting to conclude that it grew from West's experiences with his own deaf, brain-damaged daughter, Mandy. In such cases a parent's first response is often to ignore the handicap, to make it "go away" or to make it go away by making the child go away. But there is another possible response: to see the handicap as a special kind of gift, and while trying to eliminate it still to "learn its nature by heart, as a caution." Words for a Deaf Daughter is the astonishing account of West's infinitely patient attempts to understand the world in which Mandy is enclosed but not, if he can help it, defeated; to grasp, by imaginative participation, the "super-sensitivity" which such children often possess. The "caution," that is, the lesson, turns out to be an awareness of just how arbitrary our definitions of sense and madness can be. The world West and his readers learn to look at through Mandy's eyes is a world in which things are seen with cleansed perception.

Words for a Deaf Daughter is "fact"; Gala is "fiction," or, as West puts it, "the scenario of a wish-fulfillment," in which an adolescent Mandy comes to visit her father in America and finally speaks to him. The importance of this wish-fulfillment is central to West's fiction and makes it imperative to remember that something like Alley's cry of rage is not really West's own cry. For all of the pain which these characters must endure, West sees that act of expression, of imaginative creation, as an act of defiance and achievement, a substantial addition to the sum of existing things. In a 1971 interview he remarked:

What a gratuitous universe it is, anyway; what a bloody surd ... what with such defectives as waltzing mice, axolotls that should become salamanders but don't, children born without one of the human senses. Not that I'm harping on the universe's lapses rather than its norms; no, what impresses me finally is the scope for error within the constancy of the general set-up contrasted with the power to imagine things as otherwise—to rectify, to deform. What is man? He's the creature imaginative enough to ask that question. And although I know that the imagination had always to start with something not its own—hasn't complete underivedness—it can generate much pearl from little grit.

In The Wine of Absurdity he states even more emphatically that the imagination is ''the only restorative each man has that is entirely his own ... Imagination, trite and presumptuous as it may seem to express the fact, is the only source of meaning our lives can have.'' Thus imagining Mandy's visit and making her speak is a triumphant act; and having so imagined, West reports that ''I can begin sentences with an I again, not so much glad or proud as astounded to be here on this planet as myself and not as a peppermint starfish, a thistle, an emu, a bit of quartz. Or a doorknob.'' It is the artist's imagination, then, which can turn Camden's irritating powder into crystals—if, of course, the artist has anything like West's drive and dazzling verbal resources.

—Elmer Borklund

WHARTON, William

Name is a pseudonym. Nationality: American. Born: Phildalphia, Pennsylvania, 7 November 1925. Education: The University of California, Los Angeles. Military Service: Served in the United States Army Infantry, 1943–47. Family: Married; four children (one deceased). Career: Teacher, 1950–60; since 1960, full-time painter and writer. Awards: American Book award, 1980. Address: B.P. 18 Port Marly 78, France.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Birdy. New York, Knopf, and London, Cape, 1979.Dad. New York, Knopf, and London, Cape, 1981.A Midnight Clear. New York, Knopf, and London, Cape, 1982.

Scumbler. New York, Knopf, and London, Cape, 1984. Pride. New York, Knopf, 1985; London, Cape, 1986. Tidings. New York, Holt, 1987; London, Cape, 1988. Franky Furbo. New York, Holt, and London, Cape, 1989. Last Lovers. New York, Farrar Straus, and London, Granta, 1991. Wrongful Deaths. London, Granta, 1995.

Other

Ever After: A Father's True Story. New York, Newmarket Press, 1995.

Houseboat on the Seine. New York, Newmarket Press, 1996.

*

Film Adaptations: Birdy, 2000.

William Wharton comments:

Fantasy and intimacy are two main thrusts of my work. I usually write in the first person, continuous present to eliminate the artificial barrier of time and teller. One, too often, finds fiction told in the third person, past. It is a remnant from the "presidium" of the theatre, separating players, participants, from audience. I want to, as much as possible, dissolve that barrier from my work.

I use multiple print faces whenever possible to minimize referrals (He said, she said, Harry said), or narrative actions inserted merely to establish speaker.

I work from idea, to create stimulating, challenging dialogue with the reader, not merely to entertain. I write only about things I know, so there is often an aura of autobiography in the work. Actually the reader should be seduced to the material, so, in a sense, it is biography.

(1995) I think we are living in the age of the literate illiterate, that is, they have been taught to read, but don't. Probably the responsibility can be placed on schools, TV, and films. The wonder of creating a personal world from words in a dialogue with the writer is being lost. Too bad.

* * *

In Birdy, William Wharton's first novel, the title character longs to fly. But this is only part of his larger goal. Birdy seeks a way to "know" his life without "knowledge," to move toward a free and unselfconscious life more in tune with the rhythms of the world and nature than the life offered him as a human male. Much of Birdy is taken up with meticulous descriptions of the life cycles of pigeons and canaries. It is from living as closely as possible with these birds that Birdy hopes to learn how to live his ideal life. Set in contrast to Birdy is his friend Alfonso, a wrestler who is looking to "pin" the world any way he can to gain revenge or some advantage. Both Birdy and Alfonso are drawn into World War II, and the horror of the war drives Birdy out of his human self. He begins imitating a baby bird waiting to be fed. It is Alfonso, himself damaged—physically, where it can most harm his image of himself—who tries to "feed" Birdy what he needs to know to be willing to become human again, though Alfonso is in no hurry to rejoin the race, either. So much of Birdy is taken up with the minute particulars of the lives of the birds that Alfonso's story is only sketchily told and this asymmetry of bird life over human life makes for tedious reading at times.

Birdy's greatest happiness during his time of involvement with his birds comes not from his attempts to fly, but during the nesting time when he helps the young birds survive and learn to fly. Birdy's involvement with the canaries is centered on the female he calls "Birdie." (He names her dark, violent mate "Alfonso.") Birdy identifies strongly with the bird's nurturing side, envies her her female role. This is a thread that is part of several other Wharton characters, most notably the title character in Scumbler. Scum, as he calls himself, is an aging American painter living with his family in Paris. Scum at times wishes he were a woman, even telling one young woman to teach him how to love her "as a woman would." Scum rents out a string of apartments, rooms, and shelters he has fixed up. He calls these his "nests." (He also thinks of his paintings as "nests" or "hideouts.") Scum, like Birdy, attempts to recreate his own existence: "I'm always trying to design my life ... it has to be lived on purpose with purpose." His purpose in life is as much nesting and nurturing (though his own children hardly figure in the novel at all) as it is painting. Like Birdy, Scumbler is episodic, almost Quixotic, and relies on a string of epiphanies rather than on any plot resolution for its effect. Both novels end abruptly, with visions of the title characters' personal Utopias.

Dad is Wharton's most conventional novel, the story of three generations of men in a family. The oldest man is dying even while enjoying a period of restored youth; his son watches and thinks of himself as "next in line," while the third, not yet out of his teens, is impatient to get on with his life out from under the cautionary umbrella of his father's wishes for him. The grandfather is a grand character, full of life and honest surprise, but the others are little more than place holders, stock figures used to illustrate the contrasts Wharton wants to establish. Dad is Wharton's longest novel, but brings little new insight to the generational conflict.

Set at the beginning of the Battle of the Bulge, A Midnight Clear is at once Wharton's most direct and believable novel and that which most clearly illustrates the absurdity of human conflict. Two groups of soldiers, one American, one German, are holed up in a mountain valley. Using a snowman, a scarecrow, and a Christmas tree the two sides communicate their desire for peace with one another. Against all their best efforts death and war descend on the scene. Wharton's always meticulous prose takes on a hardboiled sound in A Midnight Clear: "My being squad leader is also another story. It's another story the way Peter Rabbit is another story from Crime and Punishment."

In Pride Wharton's efforts at using a nonhuman way of life to throw light on human moral questions is much more successful than in Birdy. The novel is set in 1938, as the Depression is easing up and unions are working their way into more industries. The young narrator's father is being threatened by union-breakers. The family travels to the sea shore while the father sorts out his thoughts. While they are there a lion escapes from a boardwalk sideshow and kills a man who has tortured him. The double meaning of the word "pride"—honor and the family group—is manipulated by Wharton to parallel the lion's condition with that of the father. The lion, whose pride(s) has been destroyed, goes to his death because he has nowhere else to go. The father gathers his pride(s) and sets off on a course of self-reliance.

A personal tragedy in 1988 informs Ever After, a narrative nonfiction account of the circumstances surrounding the fatal accident that took from Wharton his daughter Kate, her husband Bert, and their two children. Parts of the book are written in first person as Kate. Last Lovers, written in the aftermath of his loss, is a painful novel with a glimmer of hope: an American expatriate painter, down and out in Paris, finds love and fulfillment with a homeless woman two decades his senior.

-William C. Bamberger

WHITE, Edmund Valentine, III

Nationality: American. Born: Cincinnati, Ohio, 13 January 1940. Education: The University of Michigan, Ann Arbor (Hopwood award, 1961, 1962), B.A. 1962. Career: Staff writer, Time, 1962–79, and editor, Saturday Review, 1972–73, both New York; assistant professor, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, 1977–79; adjunct professor, Columbia University, New York, 1981–83, and instructor in creative writing, Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut. Executive director, Institute for the Humanities, New York 1981–82. Awards: Ingram Merrill grant, 1973, 1978; Guggenheim fellowship, 1983; American Academy award, 1983; recipient Chevalier de l'ordre des Arts et Lettres, 1993; National Book Critics Circle award, 1994. Agent: Maxine Groffsky, 2 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York 10011, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Forgetting Elena. New York, Random House, 1973.

Nocturnes for the King of Naples. New York, St. Martin's Press, 1978; London, Deutsch, 1980.

A Boy's Own Story. New York, Dutton, 1982; London, Picador, 1983. Caracole. New York, Dutton, 1985; London, Pan, 1986.

The Beautiful Room Is Empty. New York, Knopf, and London, Picador, 1988.

The Farewell Symphony. New York, Knopf, 1997.

The Married Man: A Love Story. New York, Knopf, 2000.

Short Stories

The Darker Proof: Stories from a Crisis, with Adam Mars-Jones. London, Faber, 1987.

Skinned Alive. London, Chatto and Windus, 1995; New York, Knopf, 1995.

Other

When Zeppelins Flew, with Peter Wood. New York, Time/Life, 1969. The First Man, with Dale Browne. New York, Time/Life, 1973.

States of Desire: Travels in Gay America. New York, Dutton, and London, Deutsch, 1980.

Genet: A Biography. New York, Knopf, and London, Chatto and Windus, 1993.

The Burning Library, edited by David Bergman. New York, Knopf, 1994.

Sketches from Memory: People and Places in the Heart of Our Paris, illustrated by Hubert Sorin. London, Chatto and Windus, 1994; published as Our Paris: Sketches from Memory, New York, Knopf, 1995. Altars (text), photographs by Mapplethorpe. New York, Random House, 1995.

Marcel Proust. New York, Viking, 1999.

Editor, with Charles Silverstein, The Joy of Gay Sex: An Intimate Guide for Gay Men to the Pleasures of a Gay Lifestyle. New York, Crown, 1977.

Editor, The Faber Book of Gay Short Fiction. London, Faber, 1991; Boston, Faber, 1992.

Editor, The Selected Writings of Jean Genet. Hopewell, New Jersey, Ecco, 1993.

*

Critical Studies: Edmund White: The Burning World by Stephen Barber, New York, St. Martin's Press, 1999.

* * *

Elegant and explicit writing, gay characters, economic elitism, AIDS. Edmund White's large appeal may be due to the wild and wide convergence of these many issues over his thirty-year writing career. His voice eloquently articulates the gay community's trajectory from oppression and indecisiveness through self-definition and, finally, toward liberation. His poetry, nonfiction, and fiction has garnered a cultivating and curious audience who see White as a witness to gay culture during rocky decades when AIDS, homosexual stereotypes, and protests for gay rights seemed to balloon in mainstream American consciousness.

White is a prolific writer. His numerous nonfictional works include States of Desire: Travels in Gay America and The Joy of Gay Sex (co-authored with Dr. Charles Silverstein). Several essays (in particular, "The Artist and AIDS") and magazine pieces have established his reputation as that of an urbane and insightful commentator on contemporary social and political issues.

His books, including Forgetting Elana, Nocturnes for the King of Naples, A Boy's Own Story, The Beautiful Room Is Empty, and The Married Man, as well as a co-written collection of short stories about AIDS, reveal a love of poetic language. His writing has an erotic, sensuous quality and his images, like his phrases, are extravagant and memorable. An ethos of homoeroticism permeates almost every aspect of his fictional art; it informs his diction and gives shape to his plots. In the opening paragraphs of Nocturnes for the King of Naples, for example, images of water and darkness swirl rapturously around images of violence and unrequited love:

A young man leans with one shoulder against the wall, and his slender body remains motionless against the huge open slab of night sky and night water behind him ... On the other side of the water, lights trace senseless paths up across hills, lash-marks left by an amateur whip. He turns toward me a look of hope tempered by discretion ... I have failed to interest him. He turns back to his river as though it were the masterpiece and I the retreating guard.

A central theme in White's work is that of sexual maturation and of breaking away. Part of this maturation is individual, as in the case of his male protagonists who must break away from the repressive confines of their bourgeois families in order to express their own sexuality. But there is also the case of the American gay community, which had to break away from various regimes of oppression in order to find a geographical and linguistic terrain in which to explore its desires. This concern with personal and communal histories informs his two most successful novels to date: A Boy's Own Story and its sequel The Beautiful Room Is Empty. Together these novels, as a sort of homosexual Bildungsroman, describe the progression of a young unnamed male narrator from a state of confusion and immaturity to an acceptance of his homosexual identity on the very night that the Stonewall riots rocked the heterosexual establishment in New York City in 1969, thus ushering in the contemporary gay liberation movement. On the night of the riots, White's narrator, finds himself proudly anticipating the day "gays might someday constitute a community rather than a diagnosis."

Because of White's personal concern with the social and political dynamics of the gay community, his novels frequently have an autobiographical element to them. They are usually written in the first-person and parallel personal events in his own life, such as fraught relationships with fathers and male lovers, a desire to have a literary career, and a sardonic outlook on the foibles of middle-class America. His narrators frequently find solace from their own self-internalized condemnation of homosexuality in their writing, as, for example, does the unnamed narrator in The Beautiful Room Is Empty: "there was another reason to write: to redeem the sin of my life by turning it into the virtue of art." Many of White's novels are artistic parables and they describe an individual's exploration of his literary and sexual identities.

In White's fiction, art and reality are frequently inseparable. His novels celebrate the polymorphous potentiality of contemporary gay relationships and lifestyles with their capacity to move between friendships and love relationships; and they explore the creative energy found in a minority group's ability to invent its own personal and erotic language and identity amidst overwhelming social and literary oppression.

Because nearly every story in White's collection Skinned Alive addresses the topic of AIDS, there is a new tenderness in the relationships, a closeness between the couples involved, and a quiet acceptance of life, threatened as it may be. The raunchy details of sex, which was a constant and vital factor in White's writing, is still present, but muted, and the celebration he writes of most often is the joy of being alive.

His latest book, The Married Man turns its attention once again to AIDS. When Austin, in his fifties, meets the young and married Julien in Paris, the twosome entangle themselves in French culture and lovemaking. Austin is HIV positive, and when Julien contracts AIDS, the two travel through Nice, Venice, Rome, and carry with them the biological reality of death and its profound sorrow. The book has been recognized for its immense detail and mature perspective towards love.

—Thomas Hastings, revisions by Geoffrey Elborn and Maureen Aitken

WIDEMAN, John Edgar

Nationality: American. Born: Washington, D.C., 14 June 1941. Education: Schools in Pittsburgh; University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia (Franklin scholar), B.A. 1963 (Phi Beta Kappa); New College, Oxford (Rhodes scholar, 1963; Thouron fellow, 1963–66), B.Phil. 1966; University of Iowa, Iowa City (Kent fellow), 1966–67.

Family: Married Judith Ann Goldman in 1965; two sons and one daughter. Career: Member of the Department of English, Howard University, Washington, D.C., 1965; instructor to associate professor of English, 1966–74, assistant basketball coach, 1968–72, and director of the Afro-American Studies Program, 1971–73, University of Pennsylvania; professor of English, University of Wyoming, Laramie, 1974–85. Since 1986 professor of English, University of Massachusetts, Amherst. Phi Beta Kappa Lecturer, 1976. Awards: PEN/Faulkner award, 1984, 1991; Lannan award, 1991; MacArthur fellowship, 1993; Rea prize, 1998. D.Litt.: University of Pennsylvania, 1985. Agent: Wylie Aitken and Stone Inc., 250 West 57th Street, Suite 2106, New York, New York 10107. Address: Department of English, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts 01003, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

A Glance Away. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1967; London, Allison and Busby, 1986.

Hurry Home. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1970.

The Lynchers. New York, Harcourt Brace, 1973.

Damballah. New York, Avon, 1981; London, Allison and Busby, 1984.

Hiding Place. New York, Avon, 1981; London, Allison and Busby, 1984.

Sent for You Yesterday. New York, Avon, 1983; London, Allison and Busby, 1984.

Reuben. New York, Holt, 1987; London, Viking, 1988.

Philadelphia Fire. New York, Holt, 1990; London, Viking, 1991.

The Homewood Books. Pittsburgh, University of Pittsburgh Press, 1992.

Identities: Three Novels. New York, H. Holt, 1994. Two Cities. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1998.

Short Stories

Fever: Twelve Stories. New York, Holt, 1989.

The Stories of John Edgar Wideman. New York, Pantheon, 1992; as All Stories Are True, London, Picador, and New York, Vintage, 1993.

Uncollected Short Story

"Concert," in Georgia Review (Athens), Fall 1989.

Other

Brothers and Keepers (memoirs). New York, Holt Rinehart, 1984; London, Allison and Busby, 1985.

Fatheralong: A Meditation on Fathers and Sons, Race and Society. New York, Pantheon, 1994.

*

Critical Studies: Blackness and Modernism: The Literary Career of John Edgar Wideman by James W. Coleman, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1989; John Edgar Wideman: Reclaiming the African Personality by Doreatha Drummond Mbalia, Selinsgrove, Susquehanna University Press, and London, Associated University Presses, 1995; Stories of Resilience in Childhood: The Narratives of Maya Angelou, Maxine Hong Kingston, Richard Rodrigues, John Edgar Wideman, and Tobias Wolff by Daniel D. Challener, New York, Garland, 1997; Conversations with John Edgar Wideman, edited by Bonnie Tu Smith, Jackson, University Press of Mississippi, 1998; John Edgar Wideman: A Study of the Short Fiction by Keith E. Byerman, New York, Twayne Publishers, 1998.

* * *

Following the publication of the Homewood trilogy, the New York Times proclaimed John Edgar Wideman, "one of America's premier writers of fiction." The winner of two PEN/Faulkner awards, Wideman is also one of the most prolific writers of his generation. Though he has published nine novels, several short story collections (including Fever and All Stories Are True), two works of nonfiction (Brothers and Keepers and Fatheralong), and numerous essays, Wideman's work still receives very little critical attention.

Most available criticism surrounds the Homewood trilogy: Damballah, Hiding Place, and Sent for You Yesterday. The works are set in the Homewood section of Pittsburgh where Wideman was raised. Often compared to William Faulkner's Yoknapatawpha, the Homewood stories center on the Lawson family, past and present, and the community. Throughout Wideman's work, he examines the connections between family and history. Committed to making certain that "all the stories" are told, Wideman infuses his writing with the style of jazz. His novels are polyphonic and improvisational; genres and discourses blend; and stories and characters are repeated, but played a different way each time. Wideman's riffing style illuminates the diversity of African-American experience, and the inadequacies of traditional narrative in capturing that experience. The necessity of sharing known and unknown stories in order to combat the marginalized portrait of African Americans in history and in the popular imagination is one of Wideman's most important thematic concerns.

These themes and techniques can be found in the first novel, A Glance Away. Eddie Lawson has returned home from a southern rehabilitation clinic. His home is an unidentified northern city, and the inversion of the historical migration of African Americans to the "promised land" is a trope for the writer's journey to his roots. Another character in the novel is Robert Thurley, a white professor who tries to connect with Lawson but is unable. Wideman has said that the character of Thurley was influenced by T.S. Eliot. Thurley's inability to communicate to others in the work represents the failure of the dominant ideology to sustain African-American life. Another voice in the novel is Brother, an albino African American. Brother is a storyteller; he can remember the stories of the Lawson family, even when Eddie cannot. Eddie has "glanced away" from his family and community, and the result is alienation.

The theme of the alienated African-American intellectual is further examined in Wideman's second novel, Hurry Home. The main character is Cecil Braithwaite, a lawyer who abandons his wife and travels to Europe and Africa. The reader is uncertain whether or not Braithwaite actually takes his journey or if it occurs only in his mind. The novel opens with the epigraph, the "pain of being two." Braithwaite's journey (real or imagined) is a reflection of a deeply embedded double-consciousness. He finds that he cannot connect to the history of Europe, and when he travels to Africa (an inverted image of the Middle Passage), Braithwaite discovers that he's alienated there as well.

The Lynchers also examines the weight of African-American history. The opening pages of the novel document the history of lynching in America. The novel begins with four men planning to subvert this history by killing a white policeman. The act, a "lynching in black face," will, according to the group's leader bring the community together. Wideman often suggests that symbolic ritual can be a healthy way to combat racism. But here the inversion of lynching is portrayed as a self-destructive act. In order to lynch the policeman, the conspirators must kill his African-American girlfriend. It is even suggested that her child may have to die. These acts against the community, and the inability of the conspirators to re-imagine their lives using their own stories and rituals, doom the plan to failure. Only one of the conspirators, Thomas Wilkerson, sees that the men are merely mimicking the hatred and violence that is illustrated in the preface. Wilkerson, a history teacher, finally realizes that the only way to remedy the disease of racism is through family and the sharing of stories.

The importance of family stories is at the heart of the three works that make up the Homewood trilogy. Damballah, a short story cycle, offers past and present vignettes about the Lawson family as well as those of the neighborhood of Homewood. The family is connected through space and time through the stories. The titular tale is set in the early days of American slavery. Its central character, Orion, is an African who will not give up his traditions. Orion could be a Lawson ancestor or any African-American family's, suggesting that 'family' extends to race. Wideman opens the work with a description of the god, Damballah (a symbol of family and history), a begat chart of the Lawson family, and a letter to his brother, Robby. The stories are 'letters' to Robby; their purpose is to keep him connected to the family while he is in jail.

Robby's fictional counterpart, Tommy, appears not only in Damballah, but also in Hiding Place. The novel follows Tommy while he is on the run from the law. He flees to Bruston Hill, the place where Homewood and the family began. The only family living there now is Mother Bess, who has run away from the world, isolating herself in a cabin. Tommy's brother, a writer, has also "run away" from Homewood to Wyoming. The theme of flight permeates the novel, inverting the image of fugitive slaves. These characters are not running to anything; they are "hiding." It is not until Tommy decides to turn himself in that Mother Bess sees that she must go back down the hill to her family and reconnect.

Sent for You Yesterday follows three generations of Homewood: John French and Albert Wilkes; Carl Lawson, Lucy, and Brother Tate; and Carl's nephew, John. We see again the character of Brother, the albino who appeared in A Glance Away. While not a continuation of that character, this Brother is a variation on a theme. Wilkes, a musician, is a catalyst for most of the novel's action. His death haunts the community, particularly Carl, Lucy, and Brother. Wilkes's blues music had been a sustaining force for Homewood, and after he is gone the neighborhood forgets their music and their past. The last pages of the novel offer hope that stories will be remembered and shared again as John begins to dance to a song he once knew as a child.

The novel Reuben is also set in Homewood. Reuben, the title character, is a lawyer in the neighborhood. He is a revision of the alienated intellectual figure that appears in many of Wideman's other novels. Unlike those characters, Reuben refuses to flee from his suffering. His office is a trailer in the middle of Homewood, from which he advises the community. Reuben's search for a twin brother who may be in jail is reminiscent of Wideman's nonfiction work, Brothers and Keepers. However, it is never clear if the brother even exists; the brother may be another version of Reuben.

Philadelphia Fire is based on the MOVE house bombing in Philadelphia. The novel intertwines the voices of Cudjoe, a writer, and Wideman, as the author and as a character. This virtuoso novel blends multiple texts and discourses from history to The Tempest. These are the voices that the African-American writer must confront and revise. In many ways, the novel is about writing and history, but it is also the story of lost children: Simba, a survivor of the bombing, and Wideman's son.

The Cattle Killing also revises texts. The novel revisits Wideman's short story, "Fever," about the yellow fever epidemic in Philadelphia in 1793. A neo-slave narrative, the novel is set in eighteenth century and contemporary Philadelphia, as well as Africa and England. Episodes in the novel are filtered through the central character, an unnamed African-American preacher who wanders the diseased city. The preacher tells stories to an ailing woman, who is possibly an African spirit, to soothe her fever and his rage. The stories are a lifeline to the past and to the African-American community. The "fever" is also the symbolic epidemic of racism that has plagued this country since its inception.

Wideman's latest work, Two Cities, connects its characters through shared suffering. Three characters voice the text: Kassima, Robert, and Mr. Mallory, a photographer. It is Mallory who links the two cities, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, together. He uses his "double-exposed" photographs to express the lives of people who the world has silenced. Like all of Wideman's work, the novel embraces the necessity to address the silences of the African-American community, to let all the voices be heard. The repeated image of lost children in each of the novels stands as a warning of a future that could be lost if the past is not remembered.

-Tracie Church Guzzio

WIEBE, Rudy (Henry)

Nationality: Canadian. Born: Fairholme, Saskatchewan, 4 October 1934. Education: Alberta Mennonite High School; University of Alberta, Edmonton, 1953-56, 1958-60 (International Nickel graduate fellow, 1958-59; Queen Elizabeth graduate fellow, 1959-60), B.A. 1956, M.A. 1960; University of Tübingen, Germany (Rotary fellow), 1957-58; University of Manitoba, Winnipeg, 1961; University of Iowa, Iowa City, 1964. Family: Married Tena F. Isaak in 1958; one daughter and two sons. Career: Research officer, Glenbow Foundation, Calgary, 1956; foreign service officer, Ottawa, 1960; high school teacher, Selkirk, Manitoba, 1961; editor, Mennonite Brethren Herald, Winnipeg, 1962-63; assistant professor of English, Goshen College, Indiana, 1963–67. Assistant professor, 1967–70, associate professor, 1970-77, professor of English, University of Alberta, 1977–92; since 1992, professor emeritus. Awards: Canada Council arts scholarship, 1964, award, 1971; Governor General's award for fiction, 1973, 1994; grant, 1977; Lorne Pierce medal, 1987. D.Litt.: University of Winnipeg, Manitoba, 1986; Wilfred Laurier University, 1991. LLD: Brock University, 1991. Address: 5315–143 St., Edmonton, Alberta T6H 4E3, Canada.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Peace Shall Destroy Many. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, 1962; Grand Rapids, Michigan, Eerdmans, 1964.

First and Vital Candle. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, and Grand Rapids, Michigan, Eerdmans, 1966.

The Blue Mountains of China. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, and Grand Rapids, Michigan, Eerdmans, 1970.

The Temptations of Big Bear. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, 1973; Athens, Ohio University Press, 2000.

The Scorched-Wood People. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, 1977. The Mad Trapper. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, 1977.

My Lovely Enemy. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, 1983.

A Discovery of Strangers. Toronto, Knopf, 1994.

Short Stories

Where Is the Voice Coming From? Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, 1974.

Personal Fictions, with others, edited by Michael Ondaatje. Toronto, Oxford University Press, 1977.

Alberta: A Celebration, edited by Tom Radford. Edmonton, Alberta, Hurtig, 1979.

The Angel of the Tar Sands and Other Stories. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, 1982.

River of Stone: Fictions and Memories. Toronto, Vintage Books, 1995.

Play

Far as the Eye Can See, with Theatre Passe Muraille. Edmonton, Alberta, NeWest Press, 1977.

Other

A Voice in the Land: Essays by and about Rudy Wiebe, edited by W.J. Keith. Edmonton, Alberta, NeWest Press, 1981.

Playing Dead: A Contemplation Concerning the Arctic. Edmonton, Alberta, NeWest Press, 1989.

Silence: The Word and the Sacred (essays). Waterloo, Ontario, Wilfrid Laurier University Press, 1989.

Chinook Christmas (for children), illustrated by David More. Red Deer College Press, 1993.

Stolen Life: The Journey of a Cree Woman. Toronto, Knopf Canada, 1998; Athens, Ohio, Swallow Press, 2000.

Editor, The Story-Makers: A Selection of Modern Short Stories. Toronto, Macmillan, 1970.

Editor, Stories from Western Canada: A Selection. Toronto, Macmillan, 1972.

Editor, with Andreas Schroeder, Stories from Pacific and Arctic Canada: A Selection. Toronto, Macmillan, 1974.

Editor, Double Vision: An Anthology of Twentieth-Century Stories in English. Toronto, Macmillan, 1976.

Editor, Getting Here: Stories. Edmonton, Alberta, NeWest Press, 1977

Editor, with Aritha van Herk, More Stories from Western Canada. Toronto, Macmillan, 1980.

Editor, with Aritha van Herk and Leah Flater, West of Fiction. Edmonton, Alberton, NeWest Press, 1982.

Editor, with Bob Beal, War in the West: Voices of the 1885 Rebellion. Toronto, McClelland and Stewart, 1985.

*

Manuscript Collection: University of Calgary Library, Alberta.

Critical Studies: The Comedians: Hugh Hood and Rudy Wiebe by Patricia A. Morley, Toronto, Clarke Irwin, 1977; Epic Fiction: The Art of Rudy Wiebe by W.J. Keith, Edmonton, University of Alberta Press, 1981; articles in A Voice in the Land, 1981, and Journal of Commonwealth Literature (Edinburgh), 19(1), 1984.

Rudy Wiebe comments:

I believe that the worlds of fiction—story—should provide pleasure of as many kinds as possible to the reader; I believe fiction must be precisely, peculiarly rooted in a particular place, in particular people; I believe writing fiction is as serious, as responsible an activity as I can ever perform. Therefore in my fiction I try to explore the world that I know: the land and people of western Canada; from my particular world view: a radical Jesus-oriented Christianity.

* * *

Canada's foremost Mennonite writer, and one of the most innovative writers of historical fiction today, Rudy Wiebe, has consistently addressed far-reaching moral, social, and spiritual questions through narratives that focus on specific, rigorously researched, historical moments. Of his eight major novels to date, three—Peace Shall Destroy Many, The Blue Mountains of China, and My Lovely Enemy—focus directly on Mennonite communities in Canada and elsewhere; the remaining five—First and Vital Candle, The Mad Trapper, The Temptations of Big Bear, The Scorched-Wood People, A Discovery of Strangers (and to some extent, My Lovely Enemy)—examine the encroachments of white society on traditional Native American, Métis, and Inuit ways of life.

Irrespective of their differences, Wiebe's works are all thematically informed by his radical Mennonite faith, and his plots are all set in motion by what, in the title of his latest work, he calls "a discovery of strangers." Wiebe emphasizes the extent to which traditional indigenous and Mennonite communities were separated from the rest of humanity by barriers of space, language, culture, and, most importantly, religious belief. Day-to-day life in these communities was organized in accordance with religious and moral certainties, which, having solidified into fixed codes of conduct, remained for many years unquestioned. However, in each of Wiebe's novels, the boundaries of a closed community are broken open. Traditional cultural practices and religious certainties are either directly challenged from without or are exposed, as a result of external pressures, to threats that are latent within. In either case, a period of spiritual and moral disorientation ensues, in which the protagonist's most fundamental beliefs and values are tested.

Wiebe subjects his readers also to forces of disorientation. As his career progresses, he departs more and more from the conventions of narrative realism. The Blue Mountains of China, The Temptations of Big Bear, My Lovely Enemy, and (to a lesser extent) A Discovery of Strangers are fragmented, multi-voiced, stylistically heterogeneous narratives in which Wiebe "re-writes" existing historical documents and religious texts by inserting them into new verbal contexts. Perhaps because he is so acutely aware that meanings are intertextually generated, Wiebe continually tests the textual foundations of historical and religious certainty.

At times, Wiebe's Mennonite rhetoric intrudes awkwardly into his narratives, as in First and Vital Candle or in the end of The Blue Mountains of China. But Wiebe, in fact, addresses this very problem in First and Vital Candle and My Lovely Enemy, where he dramatizes the unsavory politics of Christian proselytizing. Mindful that his readership is not a congregation to be browbeaten, but a diverse community to be drawn into active dialogue with his texts, Wiebe has developed various intricate modes of indirect address. The main characters in both First and Vital Candle and The Mad Trapper escape to the seclusion of the Arctic. Abe Ross, from First and Vital Candle, eventually finds a new community while Albert Johnson severs all human contact, leaving mysterious his past, motives, and even identity.

Those of Wiebe's novels that are concerned with Canada's indigenous peoples are readable as post-colonial historical metafictions. They dramatize the power of communications technologies—writing, print, photography, telegraphy, film, computers, and other electronic media—as instruments of colonial and neo-imperial domination. Yet, in the process of recounting history from various indigenous perspectives, Wiebe also articulates Mennonite religious, social, and ecological values. In so doing, he has attracted accusations of cultural appropriation.

Throughout his writing career, Wiebe has concerned himself with the exploration of the mystery and variety of love. After touching rather awkwardly on love and divine grace in First and Vital Candle, Wiebe's exploration of love becomes at once more philosophical and more physically explicit, a quality that has provoked objections to his manner of representing women and female sexuality. In My Lovely Enemy, passionate sexual love works as a metaphor through which Wiebe revivifies the familiar Christian abstraction of God's redemptive love for humanity. In A Discovery of Strangers, Wiebe develops an extended metaphor of colonized woman: as the first Franklin expedition advances across the far northern landscape, the beautiful face of Birdseye, a Tetsot'ine woman of great prophetic wisdom, is progressively corroded by disease. Birdseye's fifteen-year-old daughter, Greenstockings, an object of universal male desire, embodies the virgin territory men struggle to possess. Miraculously, given the structural imbalance of power that exists between them, two strangers— Greenstockings and the English midshipman Robert Hood—come momentarily together as lovers by mutual agreement. Although Wiebe does not openly articulate his Mennonite beliefs in A Discovery of Strangers, they hover behind his representation of Tetsot'ine understandings of life as a divine gift and of human beings as spiritually connected with each other and with all living things by sacred ties of mutual physical dependence.

While Wiebe is best known for his novels, he is also skilled in other areas of literature. He is the author of several collections of short stories including The Angel of the Tar Sands and Other Stories, River of Stone: Fictions and Memories, Alberta: A Celebration, and Where Is the Voice Coming From? In Alberta: A Celebration, Wiebe uses a slightly different approach than in his other short story collections. In this work, Wiebe examines the legend of Albert Johnson and attempts to give a new perspective to the Canadian past by combining photographs with accounts of local places and their unique legends.

Wiebe has also composed a play, Far As the Eye Can See, and a children's book entitled Chinook Christmas, in which he writes about Coaldale, Alberta, a small community that he moved to in 1947. Wiebe's most recent work is Stolen Life: The Journey of a Cree Woman. This book, which is a chronicle of justice and injustice, tells the true story of the great-great-granddaughter of Cree Chief Big Bear, Yvonne Johnson, who was placed behind bars after being charged with murder. While this work is nonfiction, many critics have claimed that the text reads like a mystery novel. In his writing, Wiebe is successful at uniting realism with passion and reviving the past, so that it can be seen in a fresh light.

-Penny van Toorn, updated by Marta Krogh

WIER, Allen

Nationality: American. Born: San Antonio, Texas, 9 September 1946. Education: Baylor University, B.A. 1968; Louisiana State University, M.A. 1970; Bowling Green State University, M.F.A. 1974. Family: Married 1) Dara Dixon in 1969 (divorced 1983); 2) Donnie Holloway in 1984; one son. Career: Yard clerk, Kansas City Southern Railroad, 1966-67; laborer, All-Tex Ranch Supply, Waco, Texas, 1967-68; instructor in English, Longwood College, Farmville, Virginia, 1970–72; assistant professor of English, Carnegie-Mellon University, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 1974–75; assistant professor of English, Hollins College, Virginia, 1975–79; associate professor and later professor, University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, 1980-94; professor, University of Tennessee, Knoxville, 1994—. Awards: Robert Penn Warren Award (Fellowship of Southern Writers), 1997. Agent: Irene Tumulty, Julian Bach Literary Agency, Inc., 3 East 48th Street, New York, New York 10017, U.S.A. Address: Department of English, University of Tennessee, 103 McClung Tower, Knoxville, Tennessee 37996-0430, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Blanco. Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 1978. Departing as Air: A Novel. New York, Simon & Schuster, 1983. A Place for Outlaws. New York, Harper, 1989.

Short Stories

Things about to Disappear. Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 1978.

Other

Editor with Don Hendrie, Jr., Voicelust: Eight Contemporary Fiction Writers on Style. Lincoln, University of Nebraska Press, 1985.

Editor, Walking on Water and Other Stories. Tuscaloosa, University of Alabama Press, 1996.

Introduction, Bad Man Blues: A Portable George Garrett. Dallas, Texas, Southern Methodist University Press, 1998.

* * *

Allen Wier is one of the finest novelists to emerge from the American Southwest, and yet his novels transcend regional boundaries in their reflection upon human loneliness, the improbability of real human connections, and the tenuousness of life itself. Evocative of the works of such masters as William Goyen and Katherine Anne Porter, Wier's novels depict realistic characters whose stories become melanges of memory, imagination, and event that question the very nature of reality, of past and future. Blanco, Wier's first novel, is named after a real town in the Texas Hill Country north of San Antonio, but its spiritual setting is that of the American small town peopled by inhabitants who are isolated from one another and thereby dwell in their own death-obsessed imaginations. Departing as Air moves into a more exotic landscape, both literal and symbolic, shifting in time and memory from the frozen World War II landscape of Kansas, through Texas, to the fragrant, lush, and magical setting of Mexico, where memory and imagination become indistinguishable. A Place for Outlaws, Wier's most realistic and traditional novel, follows the life of Julia Marrs from its uncertain beginning to a sort of spiritual triumph in maturity and existential freedom. In all three novels, Wier's understanding of human frailty tempered by an affirmation of tragic nobility establishes him as a major voice in contemporary American fiction.

Blanco-in Spanish the word for white, blank, or empty-depicts the lives of Eunice Marrs, her son Turk, daughter June, and sonin-law Cage. Turk, at forty-five, still lives with Eunice, or Momma, as she is most often called, a passive-aggressive widow who spends much of her time on the phone discussing the illnesses and deaths of other people and predicting the certainty of her own death. Turk has not yet found his niche in life, nor has he been able to declare his love for Sally, his old sweetheart who has already outlived or divorced three husbands. Between husbands, Sally amuses herself with Turk, but would not in the words of Eunice, marry Turk "if it harelipped the governor." Married but not connected to Cage, June floats in the pink landscape of her imagination, subliminally aware that she may have health problems, foreshadowed by a surreal pre-marital exam at the public health department, and, later, by the rotting pink Christmas tree in her pink living room. Both Turk and June have trouble sorting reality—the past, even the present—from fantasy. When Turk realizes that the past is "a made-up story no more real than the future," he articulates one of the central motifs of Wier's fiction-life and time are ephemeral, shifting, fragile as the Texas landscape that Cage and his business associates are developing at lightning speed.

In Departing as Air, a novel that could be called magical realism, Wier intensifies his use of imagination as an alternate reality that blends with memory to shape the past of his principal character, Jessie. Aging now, Jessie tries to reconstruct the major events of her life as she studies old photographs of Camel, a man she has loved, followed to Mexico, and lost, in a way concealed or obscured by the juxtaposition of memory and imagination. When Jessie's first husband, Marlin, a man old enough to be her father, dies of a gallbladder ailment, Jessie is free to follow Camel to Mexico, where he has gone to buy cut flowers for a wholesale florist in Texas. The memory of Marlin plagues Jessie as if she has murdered him, and once in Mexico she confesses the imagined crime to a priest even though she is not Catholic. Jessie's imagination, reflected in the photographs she takes and the lush Mexican setting, shapes the novel with visions of horror and beauty, of madness and love. But Jessie's visions, or memories, are also tactile, concrete; they resonate with the smell of burnt coffee from the grocery bag of a beautiful woman electrocuted in a freak street accident, the soft feel of a pair of elegant alligator shoes. Jessie's memory cannot, or does not, isolate the loss of Camel. He is seized deep in the jungle by Mexican soldiers; he joins a renegade priest in search of his former wife, Miss Minnesota, whose body has disappeared from her casket after the plane transporting it crashes between North Dakota and Minnesota; he develops lung cancer. In the world of the novel, the most realistic "memory" is the least plausible. Camel has appeared in Jessie's life as if out of thin air and he departs as air. Experience cannot be grasped, lives not possessed, not even in the photographs that stir memory.

A Place for Outlaws returns to the more traditional form of the realistic novel. Outlaws tells the story of a self-reliant woman, Julia Marrs, the name if not the character repeated from Blanco. After her mother dies, Julia is raised first by her fundamentalist grandmother, Huldah, then by her flighty Aunt Annabelle, who is as much of a child as is Julia. Although she is twice orphaned, Julia is loved in both homes and grows into a capable young woman. Engaged to Larry Otto, the son of a wealthy cotton farmer, Julia is introduced to Avery Marrs, and her life at once changes. In the dislocation of World War II, Julia marries Avery and begins to live what might appear to be a charmed life with their son Cole. When tragedy comes Julia's way, she does not falter. But in Wier's fiction, life is never clean, never neat. Julia's charmed life, and Cole's as well, develops a dark side, a flirtation with danger, with violence that seems to pervade American culture. A professor of American studies at a university in Alabama, Cole is caught up in a drama fraught with estranged husbands and guns that leads him back into his mother's life and more violence. That Cole and Julia transcend speaks to the Biblical beginnings of the novel, to questions of redemption, and eventually to Julia's acceptance of existential freedom and responsibility. In many ways, A Place for Outlaws is Wier's most compelling novel because Julia Marrs, her fallibility, and her decency in a not-too-decent world, resonate through its pages. Outlaws draws on Wier's skill as a first-rate storyteller and his strong eye for character.

Wier's fictional landscapes, inner and outer, are constructed with insight and craft. Certainly his three novels, together with his short story collection Things about to Disappear, and his writings on contemporary fiction earn him a place among the finest of contemporary American writers.

-Celia M. Kingsbury

WIGGINS, Marianne

Nationality: American. Born: Lancaster, Pennsylvania, 8 November 1947. Family: Married 1) Brian Porzak in 1965 (divorced 1970), one daughter; 2) Salman Rushdie in 1988 (marriage ended). Agent: Wylie, Aitken & Stone, Suite 2106, 250 West 57th Street, New York, New York 10107, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Babe. New York, Avon, 1975. Went South. New York, Delacorte, 1980. Separate Checks. New York, Random House, 1984. John Dollar. New York, Harper, 1989. Eveless Eden. New York, HarperCollins, 1995. Almost Heaven. New York, Crown, 1998.

Short Stories

Herself in Love and Other Stories. New York, Viking, 1987.Learning Urdu. New York, Harper, 1990.Bet They'll Miss Us When We're Gone. New York, HarperCollins, 1991.

Other

Introduction, Other Edens by Nick Waplington. New York, Aperture, 1994.

Contributor, From the Heart: The Power of Photography, A Collector's Choice by Adam D. Weinberg. New York, Aperture, 1998.

* * *

Few would describe Marianne Wiggins's writing as the gentle, delicate sort. Her fierce, satiric wit and bold characters are legendary practice throughout her four novels and two works of short fiction. Wiggins seems to relish the edgy, bizarre characters wielding their way through divorces and odd relationships. The American writer who has spent a great deal of her writing life in Britain, richly straddles the complex personal lives of her characters with political climates of colonialism, patriarchy, and supremacy. These strong characters often get caught in the maelstrom of these conditions, and try to extract themselves from the ensuing confinements.

Wiggins's early books captured some attention for their quirky-traited characters. Her first book Babe, was published in 1975, and set the tone for a future emphasis on edgy dispositions. Maggie Novak has a bizarre tendency to call everyone Babe, much to the discomfort of her lover. Novak is a divorcee who also seems overly impressed by her own observations. While Novak's circumstances may not be the best, her vitality as a character, and her assuredness create an energy that is infectious. But it's the mix of character tendencies—habits and self-indulgences—that make Novak compelling, and seem to be a foundation of character complexity that Wiggins relies on in future novels.

Went South is another story of problematic love, but in this novel the central character, Megan Rosen, suffers from too much comfort. Rosen lives on a New Jersey mini-farm with her child and her husband. But her husband is obsessed with money, and Rosen begins to see her life as much like the mini-farm—a miniature existence without much in the way of challenge. Her ennui comes to a climax and Megan, the woman destined for a life of fading beauty, finds herself wrenched from her own fate, and heading south for adventure.

Wiggins's interest in bold characters sometimes gets her into trouble. Separate Checks was judged by critics as writing that pushed too far into the extreme. The novel involves Ellery McQueen, a thirty-three-year-old actress who writes down experiences as a sort of therapy. But when the reader learns there are no men in the McQueen family because they have supposedly been eaten by the women of this matriarchy, it is easy to see Ellery is not the only one in need of therapy. Ellery was named after her mother, a mystery writer. The book is at times funny, but sometimes muddled down with too many risks. The title comes from the Last Supper cafe, where the waiter asks if a meal will be on separate checks.

After two praised story collections (Herself in Love and Bet They'll Miss Us When We're Gone) Wiggins went on to write her most hailed book to date: John Dollar. This book has often been compared to Lord of the Flies, except with a gender switch. In the novel, Charlotte Lewes has lost her husband in World War I and travels to Rangoon, Burma, to offer an act of Christian service. She begins to teach there, but service isn't her only interest. Charlotte also takes on sailor John Dollar as a lover. In a trip to the Amdaman Islands with schoolgirls, an accident leaves them stranded on an island. Dollar, who is a god-like figure to the girls, is left paralyzed. But the girls' descent from initial observance sinks quickly into cannibalism, and subversion. Critics agree that this devouring of John Dollar satirically pokes fun at colonialism and Western dominance. The book's large acclaim speaks to a more streamlined plot in John Dollar than in previous Wiggins works, and a graceful language contrasting barbarous events.

Wiggins's most recent book, Almost Heaven was published in 1998 to a mixed response. Holden Garfield, a war corespondent still recovering from his stint in Bosnia flees back to the United States and finds a woman suffering from traumatic amnesia after the loss of her family. Melanie also happens to be the sister of Holden's friend Noah John. The name is a satirical hint at the cause of fierce weather in the United States. The book's atmospheric focus touches on the chaotic conditions of our current world political order.

-Maureen Aitken

WILDING, Michael

Nationality: British. Born: Worcester, 5 January 1942. Education: Royal Grammar School, Worcester, 1950-59; Lincoln College, Oxford (editor, Isis, 1962), B.A. 1963, M.A. 1968. Career: Primary school teacher, Spetchley, Worcestershire, 1960; lecturer in English, University of Sydney, 1963-66; assistant lecturer, 1967-68, and lecturer in English, 1968, University of Birmingham. Senior lecturer, 1969–72, reader in English, 1972-93, and since 1993 professor in English and Australian literature, University of Sydney. Visiting professor, University of California, Santa Barbara, 1987; George Watson Visiting Fellow, University of Queensland, St. Lucia, 1989. Editor, Balcony, Sydney, 1965-69, and Tabloid Story, Sydney, 1972-76; general editor, Asian and Pacific Writing series, University of Queensland Press, 1972-82; director, Wild and Woolley, publishers, Sydney, 1974–79; editor, Post-Modern Writing, Sydney, 1979–81; currently Australian editor, Stand Magazine, U.K. Since 1971 Australian editor, Stand, Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Fellow, Australian Academy of Humanities, 1988. Awards: Australia Council senior fellowship, 1978. D.Litt., University of Sydney, 1996. Address: Department of English, University of Sydney, Sydney, New South Wales 2006, Australia.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Living Together. St. Lucia, University of Queensland Press, 1974. The Short Story Embassy. Sydney, Wild and Woolley, 1975. Pacific Highway. Sydney, Hale and Iremonger, 1982. The Paraguayan Experiment. Ringwood, Victoria, and London, Penguin, 1985.

Book of the Reading. Sydney, Pope, 1994.

Wildest Dreams. St. Lucia, Queensland, University of Queensland Press, 1998.

Short Stories

Aspects of the Dying Process. St. Lucia, University of Queensland Press, 1972.

The West Midland Underground. St. Lucia, University of Queensland Press, 1975.

Scenic Drive. Sydney, Wild and Woolley, 1976.

The Phallic Forest. Sydney, Wild and Woolley, 1978.

Reading the Signs. Sydney, Hale and Iremonger, 1984.

The Man of Slow Feeling: Selected Short Stories. Ringwood, Victoria, Penguin, 1985.

Under Saturn: Four Stories. Moorebank, New South Wales, Black Swan, 1988.

Great Climate. London, Faber, 1990; as Her Most Bizarre Sexual Experience, New York, Norton, 1991.

This Is for You. Sydney, Angus and Rotokun, 1994.

Somewhere New: New and Selected Stories. Rockhampton, Queensland, Central Queensland University Press 1996.

Plays

Screenplay: The Phallic Forest, 1972.

Television Play: Reading the Signs, 1988.

Other

Milton's Paradise Lost. Sydney, Sydney University Press, 1969.Cultural Policy in Great Britain, with Michael Green. Paris, Unesco, 1970.

Marcus Clarke. Melbourne and London, Oxford University Press, 1977.

Political Fictions. London, Routledge, 1980.

Dragons Teeth: Literature and Politics in the English Revolution. Oxford, Clarendon Press, 1987.

The Radical Tradition: Lawson, Furphy, Stead. Townsville, Foundation for Australian Literary Studies, 1993.

Social Visions. Sydney, Sydney Studies in Society and Culture, 1993.Editor, with Charles Higham, Australians Abroad: An Anthology.Melbourne, Cheshire, 1967.

Editor, Three Tales, by Henry James. Sydney, Hicks Smith, 1967.Editor, Marvell: Modern Judgements. London, Macmillan, 1969;Nashville, Aurora, 1970.

Editor, with others, We Took Their Orders and Are Dead: An Anti-War Anthology. Sydney, Ure Smith, 1971.

Editor, The Portable Marcus Clarke. St. Lucia, University of Queensland Press, 1976.

Editor, with Stephen Knight, The Radical Reader. Sydney, Wild and Woolley, 1977.

Editor, The Tabloid Story Pocket Book. Sydney, Wild and Woolley, 1978.

Editor, The Workingman's Paradise, by William Lane. Sydney, Sydney University Press, 1980.

Editor, Stories, by Marcus Clarke. Sydney, Hale and Iremonger, 1983.

Editor, with Rudi Krausmann, Air Mail from Down Under. Vienna, Gangan, 1990.

Editor, The Oxford Book of Australian Short Stories. Melbourne, Oxford University Press, 1994; New York, Oxton, 1995.

Editor, with Mabel Lee, History, Literature, and Society, Essays in Honour of S.N. Mukherjee. Leichhardt, Australia, Sydney Association for Studies in Society and Culture, 1997.

*

Critical Studies: "The Short Stories of Wilding and Moorhouse" by Carl Harrison-Ford, in Southerly (Sydney), 33, 1973; interviews with Rudi Krausmann, in Aspect, 1, 1975, David Albahari, in Australian Literary Studies (Hobart, Tasmania), 9, 1980, Kevin Brophy and Myron Lysenko, in Going Down Swinging, 3, 1982, Giulia Giuffre, in Southerly (Sydney), 46, 1986, and Peter Lewis, in Stand (Newcastleupon-Tyne), 32, 1991; "Recent Developments in Australian Writing, with Particular Reference to Short Fiction" by Brian Kiernan, in Caliban (Toulouse), 14, 1977; "The New Novel" by Leon Cantrell, in Studies in the Recent Australian Novel edited by K.G. Hamilton, St. Lucia, University of Queensland Press, 1978; "Uncertainty and Subversion in the Australian Novel," in Pacific Moana Quarterly (Hamilton, New Zealand), 4, 1979, and "Character and Environment in Some Recent Australian Fiction," in Waves (Downsview, Ontario), 7, 1979, both by Ken Gelder; "Laszlo's Testament, or Structuring the Past and Sketching the Present in Contemporary Short Fiction," in Kunapipi I (Aarhus, Denmark), 1979, "A New Version of Pastoral," in Australian Literary Studies (Hobart, Tasmania), 11, 1983, and "Paradise, Politics, and Fiction: The Writing of Michael Wilding," in Meanjin (Melbourne), 45, 1986, all by Bruce Clunies Ross; "The New Writing, Whodunnit?" by G.M. Gillard, in Meanjin (Melbourne), 40, 1981; "Michael Wilding: Post-Modernism and the Australian Literary Heritage" by Hans Hauge, in Overland (Melbourne), 96, 1984; "Lost and Found: Narrative and Description in Michael Wilding's 'What It Was Like, Sometimes'" by Simone Vauthier, in Journal of the Short Story in English (Angers, France), 12, 1989; The New Diversity: Australian Fiction 1970-1988 by Ken Gelder and Paul Salzman, Fitzroy, Victoria, McPhee Gribble, 1989; "Koka Kola Kulture" by Don Graham in Southwest Review (Dallas, Texas), 78, Spring 1993; "Frank Moorhouse and Michael Wilding and Internationalism" by Frank Parigi, in Antipodes (Austin, Texas) 8, June 1994; "Talking with Michael Wilding" by Nadezda Obradovic, in Antipodes (Austin, Texas) 8, June 1994.

* * *

Michael Wilding is one of a "new generation" of writers in Australia who began publishing in the early 1970s. Impelled to political action by Australia's involvement in the Vietnam war, Wilding has also protested in his writings against censorship, conservative social values, and a subservience to American cultural imperialism.

In the first of his collections of stories Aspects of the Dying Process, an English persona is attracted and bemused in several stories by the hedonistic Sydney youth culture which he encounters. The title suggests the "dying" as an immigrant changes color with his new culture and extinguishes to some degree the old, and is a pun also on his sexual initiation rites. D.H. Lawrence and Henry James have left their mark on the writer's early style, in its rendering of the impulses and withdrawals of an observer who is not yet a participant in the new life. The West Midland Underground, Wilding's second volume of stories, has a free-wheeling variety of narrative modes and settings which include England, Greece, the United States, and Australia. In "Canal Run" a boy's claustrophobic world is evident in images of the English industrial midlands; at the center of frustration is a thwarted sexuality: "Thinking back it is hard to see exactly when one's consciousness of sex began and became a desire for, a whole youth's looking for, fulfillment. Then, though, there was only a strong sense of sin and shame and dirt; no lyricism, and none of the hatred. It was wrong and furtive and C stream; which was another way of saying lower class." Most stories in The Phallic Forest energetically flout "normal" sexual and social mores, or celebrate alternatives; and in a later collection, Reading the Signs, a more reflective consciousness draws on a background of class awareness for sharp and penetrating observations of appearance and behavior. In Wilding's later work the term "Midlander" connotes the circumscribed spirit, against which all his writings rebel.

Wilding's first novel, Living Together, relates the exploits, and fantasies, of young men and women cohabiting in inner suburban Sydney. The traumas of Martin, Paul, and Ann (second names are unimportant) are related with wit and verve as they paint and decorate their house and have sex, joints, or drink with neighbors and visitors. (In a later novel, a character comments that the Pill introduced "a whole new anthropology" for the writer.) The strongest character is the irenic Ann, who, after leaving her outrageously chauvinist partner Martin half way through the novel, returns at the end to give his life some shape and order. The men are weaker and more ambivalent. Paul, the author's alter ego, has taken his sexual apprenticeship, but is unsure of his future directions. Martin's scenario of the house as a sort of "cultural center" is never realized; its most memorable visits are two female grotesques, the ever-ready next-door neighbor Mrs. Bilham, and Gretel Mann, of "cavernous appetite," who helps Paul out of his innocence. Late in the novel Paul has decided that "Change is the only aphrodisiac." The literary progenitor of this urban comedy of the 1970s is perhaps Thomas Love Peacock, whose miscellaneous parties of odd characters in English country houses also mix satire and romance, but where the treatment of sex is much more circumspect.

Wilding's second novel, The Short Story Embassy, and his third, Pacific Highway, contain insights into the literary process. The "Embassy," situated "halfway to the north" on Australia's east coast, approximates to the "cultural center" envisaged by Martin in Living Together. The juxtaposition of culture and nature is a source of comedy, as in this version of "pot pastoral": "The people traveling up from the south rested there and stripped off and got their bodies brown before going on to the full north. They lay around by creeks and wove garlands of bush flowers around each other. They made daisy-chains around their necks and twined poppies in their pubic hairs. The cows came and gazed on them and licked them and they licked each other."

Here, as elsewhere, Wilding is both lyrical and amused; he celebrates the new freedoms and is affectionately ironic about them. While whimsy sometimes predominates, a sharper irony is evident in observations about characters' literary outlooks and values. The middle-aged Laszlo, for instance, possessively jealous of his lover, Valda, puzzles over his generation of radicals, who read Tom Paine, while hers has been "turned on" to astrology. To Valda, Laszio seems to use books as "leaning posts." The Short Story Embassy quizzically examines the "new" experimental literature of process and locates its enemy as the Thought Police. But this is Kafka without the menace. The visitor, Tichborne, who mysteriously leaves the Embassy, may be one of the enemy (his name is a reminder of the famous Tichborne impersonation case), but his departure lacks consequence. There is paranoia aplenty in this novel but "plot" in the conventional sense is missing.

The pastoral element is paramount in Pacific Highway. In some respects it is a 1980s version of Vance Palmer's The Passage (1930), in which a rural holiday retreat on the Pacific Ocean is destroyed by "progress" and "development." But the tone and style of the two novels differ markedly. In Pacific Highway the attempt by the narrator and his girlfriend, Lily, to recreate an idyllic world of innocence among friends who will live off the land, re-cycling their waste, is confronted by a censorious, authoritarian regime. This household (two young women and a man), is differentiated from other "hippies" by being middle-class and theoretical: escapees from the midlands. Confrontations with the wider society are often presented as wry comedy: for instance, how does a household with idealistic communist notions rationalize its employment of a cleaning woman? Another dimension is the love story—of the narrator and Lily—which contains some fine lyrical passages.

A search for utopia, implicit elsewhere, is the explicit theme of Wilding's fourth novel, The Paraguayan Experiment. The novel marks a departure for Wilding, who uses historical documents in his firm narration of the story of the New Australia movement. Disillusioned with the economic depression and social repression in Australia in the 1890s, William Lane led a group of 400 men, women, and children to found a New Australia in Paraguay. Using letters (especially Lane's), memos, and official documents, Wilding builds a lively account of this historic precursor to the idealistic communalists of the 1970s. Anachronisms in dialogue and commentary are evident, but these seem deliberate: in certain respects, which Wilding does not wish to conceal, this was a parable for the 1980s. Hence many of the issues which have obsessed this writer—the creation of alternative human settlements, the clash between individual and group needs, sexual politics, the use of drugs—are evident in this tale of a previous era in Australian history. In form and style, this novel shows Wilding's continuing interest in literary experimentation and is rich in humor, fantasy, and social observation.

The stories in This Is for You suggest that Wilding's themes have begun to seem a bit dated—too much a part of the 1960s (and the twentieth century in general), and thus outmoded for a world entering a new millennium. Wildest Dreams is, on the one hand, a memoir, but it is also a novel featuring Wilding's alter-ego Graham. Again the focus is on issues that for many other people were settled long ago: Vietnam, Marxism, drugs, and the beatnik lifestyle.

WILKINS, Damien

Nationality: New Zealander. Born: 1963. Awards: Heinemann Reed fiction award, 1989; New Zealand book award for fiction, 1993.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Miserables. Wellington, New Zealand, Victoria University Press, and New York, Harcourt Brace, 1993.

Little Masters. Wellington, New Zealand, Victoria University Press, 1996; New York, Holt, 1997.

Short Stories

The Veteran Perils. Auckland, New Zealand, Heinemann Reed, 1990.

Poetry

The Idles. Wellington, New Zealand, Victoria University Press, 1993.

* * *

Damien Wilkins is part of a new generation of New Zealand writers who came of age in the midst of a surge of literary production in their home country, just as New Zealand literature was beginning to gain significant recognition internationally. With the 1990 publication of his collection of short stories, The Veteran Perils, Wilkins himself emerged as a writer of the late "post-Provincial" period, loosely characterized by its acknowledgement of international exchanges and its engagement with post-modernism and post-colonialism. He certainly meets these informal criteria in his creative work.

Wilkins's first novel, The Miserables, was published in 1993 to critical acclaim, winning the New Zealand book award for fiction. A classic bildungsroman, the novel traces the return of its protagonist, Healey, to Wellington, New Zealand, for the funeral of his grandfather. The return to his birthplace is accompanied by the return of memories, emotions, and the revelation of a self suppressed. But the self is more than suppressed, it is also dislocated, and as Healey revisits his memories of previous journeys undertaken, his dislocation is gradually displaced by a sense of place and a grounding that previously eluded him. In a creative triumph, Wilkins's imagining of Healey gains coherence precisely by abandoning all linear pretenses at coherence, as Healey slides in and out of memories and recognitions triggered by the encountering of places, or interactions with family members gathered for the funeral. However, in The Miserables there are no strategically placed epiphanies, denouements, or climaxes that will satisfy the lazy reader. Instead, Wilkins has engaged in a project of cartography that demands thoughtful contemplation on the part of the reader.

In his second novel, Little Masters, published in 1996, Wilkins makes his expectations of the reader more apparent. The novel opens with a scene of a therapy session, which we learn is taped and shared with the parents of the analyzed, forcing them to witness and consider the details of her life. This analyzed subject, who does not recur in the novel as a character, nevertheless sets the tone of the novel, and continues to signify on the story throughout in ways that are not immediately apparent. Wilkins, ever playful, further extends this metaphor of analysis by embedding other literary texts—a short story and a radio play—in the novel and creating dialogue in which his characters analyze their significance and meaning.

Thematic and stylistic similarities abound between the two novels. Both are fragmentary and episodic, spanning continents and history in their non-linear narratives. However, Little Masters is more ambitious, weaving together the narratives of several characters, all suffering a kind of spiritual dislocation. At the center of the novel are two New Zealanders in England, dissatisfied with the transnational lives they lead. One, Adrian, is the child of refugees liberated from a Polish camp at the end of World War II and relocated to New Zealand. As such, Adrian embodies several key themes that permeate that novel, including the residual effects of the trauma of war as manifested in the children of those who survive. As the dislocated son of dislocated parents who has a dislocated child himself, Adrian also draws attention to how the meaning of one's life is shifted by the experience of being a transnational subject. In order to achieve any grounding in the midst of this chaos of the unfamiliar and foreign, Wilkins's characters reconsider their primary relationships-families, lovers—as a means of staying their current sense of disorientation in their relationships with others. However, while his first novel closed with an invocation of tenderness, these notes in Wilkins are not uncomplicated: Little Masters also closes with an act of tenderness, but it is coupled with acts of innocent destruction and the presence of death.

As a graduate of the Victoria University of Wellington's creative writing course, and a former writing student at Washington University who also worked in London's publishing industry before returning to Wellington, Wilkins is widely recognized as a force to be reckoned with in the future of New Zealand literature. Not only a novelist, Wilkins has also published a book of poetry, The Idles, and written for television.

-Jennifer Harris

WILLIAMS, John A(lfred)

Nationality: American. Born: Jackson, Mississippi, 5 December 1925. Education: Central High School, Syracuse, New York; Syracuse University, A.B. 1950. Military Service: Served in the United States Navy, 1943–46. Family: Married 1) Carolyn Clopton in 1947 (divorced), two sons; 2) Lorrain Isaac in 1965, one son. Career: Member of the public relations department, Doug Johnson Associates, Syracuse, 1952-54, and Arthur P. Jacobs Company; staff member, CBS, Hollywood and New York, 1954-55; publicity director, Comet Press Books, New York, 1955-56; publisher and editor, Negro Market Newsletter, New York, 1956-57; assistant to the editor, Abelard-Schuman, publishers, New York, 1957-58; director of information, American Committee on Africa, New York, 1958; European correspondent, Ebony and Jet magazines, 1958-59; announcer, WOV Radio, New York, 1959; Africa correspondent, Newsweek, New York, 1964-65. Regents' Lecturer, University of California, Santa Barbara, 1972; Distinguished Professor of English, LaGuardia Community College, City University of New York, 1973–78; visiting professor, University of Hawaii, Honolulu, Summer 1974, Boston University, 1978-79, and New York University, 1986-87. Professor of English, 1979-90, Paul Robeson Professor of English, 1990–94, and since 1994 professor emeritus, Rutgers University, Newark, New Jersey. Bard Center Fellow, Bard College, 1994–95. Member of the Editorial Board, Audience, Boston, 1970–72; contributing editor, American Journal, New York, 1972. Awards: American Academy grant, 1962; Syracuse University Outstanding Achievement award, 1970; National Endowment for the Arts grant, 1977; Rutgers University Lindback award, 1982; Before Columbus Foundation award, 1983; American Book award, 1998. Litt.D.: Southeastern Massachusetts University, North Dartmouth, 1978; Syracuse University, 1995. Agent: Barbara Hogenson Agency, 19 W. 44th St., New York, New York 10036. Address: 693 Forest Avenue, Teaneck, New Jersey 07666, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Angry Ones. New York, Ace, 1960; as One for New York, Chatham, New Jersey, Chatham Bookseller, 1975.

Night Song. New York, Farrar Straus, 1961; London, Collins, 1962.Sissie. New York, Farrar Straus, 1963; as Journey Out of Anger, London, Eyre and Spottiswoode, 1968.

The Man Who Cried I Am. Boston, Little Brown, 1967; London, Eyre and Spottiswoode, 1968.

Sons of Darkness, Sons of Light. Boston, Little Brown, 1969; London, Eyre and Spottiswoode, 1970.

Captain Blackman. New York, Doubleday, 1975.

Mothersill and the Foxes. New York, Doubleday, 1975.

The Junior Bachelor Society. New York, Doubleday, 1976.

!Click Song. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1982.

The Berhama Account. Far Hills, New Jersey, New Horizon Press, 1985.

Jacob's Ladder. New York, Thunder's Mouth Press, 1987. Clifford's Blues. Minneapolis, Coffee House Press, 1998.

Other

Africa: Her History, Lands, and People. New York, Cooper Square, 1962.

The Protectors (on narcotics agents; as J. Dennis Gregory), with Harry J. Anslinger. New York, Farrar Straus, 1964.

This Is My Country, Too. New York, New American Library, 1965; London, New English Library, 1966.

The Most Native of Sons: A Biography of Richard Wright. New York, Doubleday, 1970.

The King God Didn't Save: Reflections on the Life and Death of Martin Luther King, Jr. New York, Coward McCann, 1970; London, Eyre and Spottiswoode, 1971.

Flashbacks: A Twenty-Year Diary of Article Writing. New York, Doubleday, 1973.

Minorities in the City. New York, Harper, 1975.

If I Stop I'll Die: The Comedy and Tragedy of Richard Pryor, with Dennis A. Williams. New York, Thunder's Mouth Press, 1991.

Flashbacks 2: A Diary of Article Writing. Westport, Connecticut, Orange Ball Press, 1991.

Editor, The Angry Black. New York, Lancer, 1962.

Editor, Beyond the Angry Black. New York, Cooper Square, 1967.Editor with Charles F. Harries, Amistad I and II. New York, Knopf, 2 vols., 1970–71.

Editor, with Gilbert H. Muller, The McGraw Hill Introduction to Literature. New York, McGraw Hill, 1985.

Editor, with Gilbert H. Muller, Bridges: Literature Across Cultures. New York, McGraw Hill, 1994.

Editor, Ways In: Approaches to Reading and Writing about Literature. New York, McGraw Hill, 1994.

Editor, Introduction to Literature 2/e. New York, McGraw Hill, 1995.

*

Manuscript Collections: Syracuse University, New York; Rochester University, New York.

Critical Studies: America as Seen by a Black Man by Robert T. Haley, unpublished thesis, San Jose State College, California, 1971; "The Art of John A. Williams" by John O'Brien, in American Scholar (Washington, D.C.), Summer 1973; The Evolution of a Black Writer: John A. Williams by Earl Cash, New York, Third Press, 1974; American Fictions 1940–1980 by Frederick R. Karl, New York, Harper, 1983; John A. Williams by Gilbert H. Muller, Boston, Twayne, 1984; article by James L. de Jongh, in Afro-American Fiction Writers after 1955 edited by Thadious M. Davis and Trudier Harris, Detroit, Gale, 1984.

John A. Williams comments:

I think art has always been political and has served political ends more graciously than those of the muses. I consider myself to be a political novelist and writer to the extent that I am always aware of the social insufficiencies which are a result of political manipulation. The greatest art has always been social-political, and in that sense I could be considered striving along traditional paths.

* * *

An essayist, novelist, anthologist, poet, and biographer, John Alfred Williams is the author of nearly twenty books including a dozen novels that span four decades. With so diverse an oeuvre, it is helpful to group Williams's novels into particular phases, representative of the author's maturing vision of his principle theme—the tension between black experience and American ideology, portrayed against the backdrop of history.

The first phase comprises, The Angry Ones (One for New York), Night Song, and Sissie, and marks a semi-autobiographical focus. Tracing its protagonist's employment as a publicity director for a vanity press, The Angry Ones explores the hypocrisy of corporate America, the vanishing of the American dream, the psychological complexities surrounding interracial sex, and the black writer's challenge to maintain cultural integrity in an exploitative society. The main character, Steve Hill, leads a life that resembles Williams's. After leaving the navy, Williams worked in New York's burgeoning publishing industry. In Night Song Williams expands the narrow, first person focus of the first novel by relaying point of view through three distinct, though equally tragic protagonists: Richie "Eagle" Stokes, a decaying, self-destructive jazz musician; David Hillary, a self-pitying, ex college professor; and Keel Robinson, a former preacher. A study in nocturnal landscapes and the symbolic portrayal of mental desuetude, the novel draws from the mythic life of Charlie "Bird" Parker and pioneers what would later become the subgenre of "jazz fiction." The novel also concerns the decay of social optimism, miscegenation, and the gaps between white and black America. These early novels also lay the important sociopolitical groundwork that undergirds all of Williams's work. This is perhaps especially true of Sissie with its relentless framing of individual characters against a politically charged history. A grand biography of the Joplin family's struggle over several generations, Sissie testifies to Williams's growing skill with a complex form of narrative time mechanics that has been likened to Faulkner, and which would later be put to effective use in The Man Who Cried I Am. In this first phase, Williams dramatizes black social struggle, but suggests the possibility of success in characters who do not resort to violence or reactionary politics, as they strive to reconcile their idealisms with the brutal facts of an oppressive racial system.

It is in the second phase that Williams reverses this political orientation. Now characters do realize the necessity of acquiring a heightened political and historical consciousness in order to not only succeed, but to survive in America. Written after being ruthlessly passed over for a promised Prix de Rome from the American Academy of Arts and Letters, the highly political novels of the second phase articulate most clearly the rage of the "angry black" and show the author's movement away from the image of the black protagonist struggling for confirmation of his self-worth. In The Man Who Cried I Am, a novel that has been called his masterpiece, Williams creates Max Reddick, a black writer who becomes a "success" in the white world, but who eventually asks himself "was it worth what it cost?" Reddick's final confirmation of "self" comes not from the white world, but from a metaphysical, interior space where the fact of existence outweighs the superficiality of race: "All you ever want to do is remind me that I am black. But, goddamn it, I also am,' exclaims Reddick famously. Few writers match Williams in destroying the illusions of the black man as a victim subjugated by the pressures of racial injustice in the Western world. Slowly dying from rectal cancer, Reddick eventually learns of a secret plan kept by the American government. In times of emergency, the King Alfred plan calls for a mass detention and imprisoning of African Americans. Finally, after tragically realizing the impossibility of national identity, Reddick dies having stumbled across this information. The Man Who Cried I Am delivers perhaps the bleakest commentary on the incommensurability of national inclusiveness and national racist agendas, while plotting the convergence of tumultuous historical and cultural forces on the figure of the African American. In Sons of Darkness, Sons of Light Eugene Browning mulls over the advantages of knowing his past. But it is with reason and without anger, that Browning, after coming to the conclusion that civil rights and freedom marches would not bring justice to blacks, employs Mafia tactics in the assassination of a policeman guilty of killing a sixteenyear-old black boy. Novels of the rage period advertise the heightened sense of group conscious, self-resolve, and resourcefulness needed by blacks to eliminate racial injustices. Captain Blackman confronts American history from a military perspective. A Vietnam officer and also a teacher of military history, Abraham Blackman drifts back in time to recount black experiences in early American wars. In Blackman, the novel presents an allegorical figure of the black soldier, a paradoxical icon of heroism and national belonging, but also an object of hateful scorn to generals and politicians. At times the novel merges into historical nonfiction, as Williams inserts little-known but heavily documented letters which reveal the racism of such leaders as Teddy Roosevelt and Abraham Lincoln with starling clarity. All of the novels of the second phase register the need to both come to terms with history and to struggle against it.

With the publication of Mothersill and the Foxes and The Junior Bachelor Society, Williams enters a brief third phase noted for sexual parody, a modified politics, and technical complexity. Breaking away from traditional narrative modes, Williams experiments with postmodernism to relate the sexual odyssey of Odell Mothersill and the "foxes" whom he courts. The novel broaches bizarre sexual scenarios—incest, voyeurism, masturbation—in an uneven variety of techniques, ranging from surrealistic parody to pastoral fairy tale. Ludicrous, naturalistic, and absurdist, the novel's scenes of sexuality often devolve to horrific grotesques, which like the many allusions to grotesque art, comment on the macabre lack of emotion regarding sexuality and corporeality in Mothersill's picaresque world. The Junior Bachelor Society returns to the multi-character plot structure of Williams's earlier novels, as it cross cuts among the lives of its nine aging protagonists, who attend a hometown reunion in celebration of a former high school coach. Reminiscent of Sissie in its poignant portrayal of individuals striving against a repressive social order and in its concern for interpersonal relationships, the novel focuses on varieties of middle class and blue collar, late middle-aged, African-American masculinity. While investigating the vexed role that sports play in American culture and in the black imagination, the novel also stresses the relationship between physical contests and success in life.

In his fourth phase, Williams seems to reinvest in the political and social themes of his first two stages, but now through sharply drawn characters whose interior conflicts mirror the external political forces shaping history. !Click Song, The Berhama Account, Jacobs Ladder, and Clifford's Blues return to techniques that investigate the dynamics of storytelling while conveying a deeply political, increasingly global consciousness.

!Click Song reprises a character central to Williams's fiction, the black novelist. An obvious literary descendent of Max Reddick, Cato Douglass must bear the humiliating racism that drives the publishing industry as he develops relationships with his three sons, each from different wives: one white, one black, and one in Spain. Behind his scathing bitterness, Douglass shields an essentially artistic, deeply philosophic mind, which cleaves to its productions, both artistic and filial, in order to shore up some defense against the abuses of the literary establishment. The Berhama Account is a tale of international political intrigue and the panacea of romantic love. Another multiplot story of personal optimism, the novel concerns a fake assassination, the political struggle of a Caribbean nation, and a re-ignited love affair that heals a journalist recovering from cancer. Although The Berhama Account evidences a global awareness of racist power dynamics, it finally expresses a degree of hope and possibility through love that is unparalleled in Williams's other novels. Jacob's Ladder turns to Africa and the specific problems in nation building that Fasseke, the newly installed president of Pandemi, faces. When African-American war hero Henry Jacob arrives to help Fasseke, much of the resulting dialogue between them explores the diasporic tensions separating Africans from African Americans. The novel critiques colonial history, slavery, and inter-African prejudice, while responding to American culture from a post-colonial vantage point. No less historically sophisticated is Clifford's Blues, which recounts in journal format the experiences of Clifford Pepperidge, an itinerant, homosexual, black American jazz musician who finds himself interred by the Nazis in Dachau. To stay alive, Clifford assembles a jazz band with other prisoners to entertain the Nazi officers. Like Captain Blackman, Clifford's Blues is an informative novel built upon exacting historical research of blacks in concentration camps, but its vivid, somber prose prevents it from waxing didactic. As with Sissie, Night Song, and The Junior Bachelor Society, Clifford's Blues eloquently dramatizes the individual's triumph of will in the face of great adversity, and thus transcends the thematics of American racial injustices to evoke a wider sense of historical barbarity and heroism.

-Michael A. Chaney

WILLIS, Connie

Nationality: American. Born: Constance Elaine, Denver, Colorado, 31 December 1945. Education: University of Northern Colorado, B.A. in English and elementary education. Family: Married Courtney Wayne Willis, 1967; one daughter. Career: Elementary school teacher, 1967-68, and junior high teacher, 1968-69, Branford, Connecticut, public schools. Awards: Nebula award, 1982, and Hugo award, 1982, both for Fire Watch; 1982 for "A Letter from the Clearys"; Nebula award, 1988, and Hugo award, 1988, both for The Last of the Winnebagos; Campbell Memorial award for best science fiction novel, 1988, for Lincoln's Dreams; Nebula award, 1989 for "At the Rialto"; Nebula award, 1992, Locus award, 1992, and Hugo award, 1993, both for "Even the Queen"; Nebula award, 1992, Locus award, 1992, and Hugo award, 1993, both for Doomsday Book; Locus award, 1993, for Impossible Things, 1993, for "Close Encounter"; Hugo award, 1994, for "Death on the Nile"; Hugo award, 1997, for The Soul Selects; Hugo award, 1999, for To Say Nothing of the Dog. Agent: Ralph Vicinanza, 111 Eighth Ave., Suite 1501, New York, New York 10011, U.S.A. Address: 1716 Thirteenth Ave., Greeley, Colorado 80631, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Water Witch, with Cynthia Felice. New York, Ace Berkeley, 1980. Lincoln's Dreams. New York, Bantam, 1986.

Light Raid, with Cynthia Felice. New York, Ace Berkeley, 1988.Doomsday Book. New York, Bantam, and Hodder and Stoughton, 1992.

Impossible Things. New York, Bantam, 1994.

Uncharted Territory. New York, Bantam, and Hodder and Stoughton, 1994.

Remake. New York, Bantam, 1995.

Bellwether. New York, Bantam Books, 1996.

Promised Land (with Cynthia Felice). New York, Ace Books, 1997. To Say Nothing of the Dog; Or, How We Found the Bishop's Bird Stump at Last. New York, Bantam Books, 1997.

Short Stories

Fire Watch. New York, Bluejay, 1985.

Miracle, and Other Christmas Stories. New York, Bantam Books, 1999.

*

Connie Willis comments:

I first fell in love with science fiction at age thirteen, when I read Robert A. Heinlein's Have Space Suit, Will Travel. That's not unusual. Science fiction and adolescence have a lot in common: love of adventure, love of ideas, boundless enthusiasm for the universe. For many readers, it's only an infatuation, but for me it has turned into a lifelong love affair, I think because the medium of science fiction is ideal for the stories I want to tell and the themes I want to write about.

I find that looking at things obliquely, through the disguise of other places, other times, cuts through not only the reader's prejudices and defenses but my own and makes it possible to look clearly at our own world, our own faces. And the conventions of science fiction—Martians, time travel, robots—carry within them the themes that matter most to me. Time travel, especially, with its built-in resonances of grief and loss and regret, I could write about forever. After all these years, I still come to science fiction with that same shock of joy and recognition that I did at thirteen.

* * *

Connie Willis is one of the most beloved and respected writers in the field of science fiction. For her novels and short fiction, Willis has earned more Hugo and Nebula awards—the two major prizes given by readers and writers of science fiction and fantasy—than any other author. She is a noted humorist; her comical works are satirical while expressing great warmth. Often overshadowing the screwball antics and witty dialogue is a keen sympathy for the human condition, filling her novels with heart-wrenching pain.

Willis's earliest novels, Water Witch and Light Raid, were written with Cynthia Felice; they are generally considered slight and implausible. However, Fire Watch, her first short story collection, reveals Willis's talents for both humor and tragedy. The titular story, "Fire Watch" (1982), a Hugo and Nebula winner, is indicative of the themes and concerns which recur in her fiction. In the twenty-first century, time travel technology permits history students to visit the era of their studies. The protagonist is sent back to London during the Blitz of World War II, a period that fascinates Willis. Working with the volunteers who attempt to save St. Paul's Cathedral from the Luftwaffe, he learns that history is not a matter of textbook statistics but of living people, laboring side by side to save what they love, with their many species of courage and weakness.

Willis's first solo novel, Lincoln's Dreams, winner of the John W. Campbell Memorial award for best science fiction novel, is another story of history and (after a fashion) time travel. This remarkable debut investigates the horror with which the American Civil War continues to haunt us—as Willis says in her foreword, it disturbs us like a cry for help, or a dream, so that we still puzzle over its meaning. The first-person narrator, Jeff Johnston, is a researcher for an author of historical novels. Well-versed in Civil War minutiae and piecing together the story of Traveller, the noble-hearted horse of the noble-hearted general Robert E. Lee, he is only partly prepared to meet Annie, a woman suffering terrible nightmares. Jeff falls in love with this attractive and fragile woman as she tells him of her dreams. They hold no meaning for her, but Jeff recognizes the details as incidents from General Lee's actual memories. To learn the meaning of this extraordinary psychic link, Jeff escorts Annie on a tour of the Southern battlefields. He hopes to break the link by explaining to Annie the tragedies Lee and his men endured, but Annie determines to "finish the dreams" and exorcise Lee's guilt so that he may literally rest in peace. Jeff's discovery of the courage and ultimate fate of Traveller reveal to him his own connection to the inexorable replay of Lee's life and death. With immensely sympathetic characterization and vivid presentation of the horrors of war, Lincoln's Dreams is an unforgettable drama of love, loyalty, and duty.

Doomsday Book and To Say Nothing of the Dog, or, How We Found the Bishop's Bird Stump At Last are set in the same world as "Fire Watch." In the former, set in 2054, history student Kivrin wishes to visit medieval Oxford for her practicum. However, the time-travel time technician has fallen suddenly ill with an unknown virus, and in his delirium he accidentally sends her to 1384, the year of the Black Death.

Doomsday Book, which also won both Hugo and Nebula awards, alternates between the two timelines, showing that human nature is much the same in each era, as both sets of characters must cope with an apocalyptic plague and ensuing panic. Kivrin seems doomed to die in the past, grieving as the villagers who have succored her succumb, one after another, to bubonic plague, because there is no way that she can signal her friend Professor Dunworthy that she is in the wrong place and time. The sweet and wise Dunworthy, however, has reasoned this out, and struggles with idiotic bureaucracy and social chaos to do everything he can to bring her back. Through mesmerizing adventure and dialogue, Willis works out her theme of the psychological response to the end of the world, portraying religious faith, helplessness, and incredible heroism.

A couple of collections, Impossible Things and Futures Imperfect, and the short novels Remake, Uncharted Territory, and Bellwether, followed Doomsday Book. Remake is a satire about censorship, presenting a future in which classic films are edited to the point of meaninglessness to remove any scenes showing sexual innuendo, drinking, smoking, or other immoral activities. The protagonists, two star-crossed lovers seeking their big break in a Hollywood that is ironically, sickeningly corrupt, long for the days when movies told real stories with real actors. Uncharted Territory parodies many science fiction clichés in its portrayal of a daring exploration of another planet, a mapping project that is bedeviled by ridiculous regulations and fussily bureaucratic aliens. Its more important themes, also comically treated, concern love, sex, and gender roles. Bellwether is a screwball romance between a woman who studies fads and a chaos theorist who arrive at a cynical revelation of how human bellwethers start trends.

To Say Nothing of the Dog, Willis's next "big" novel, is as ambitious as Doomsday Book, though not nearly as soul wrenching. A cheerful homage to Jerome K. Jerome's Three Men in a Boat, the novel documents a time-traveler's misadventures in a madcap tour of Victorian England. The plot involves a quest to find something called a bird-stump, but weaving through the antics is a satirical needle pointing out the puritanical (or Victorian) morality of the United States in the 1990s. It won the Nebula award in 1998.

Willis's fiction is not unlike that of Mark Twain's—very funny, often savage, and deeply compassionate. Her satire targets petty bureaucrats, hypocrites, and control freaks who make life miserable for others. Her protagonists are often middle-aged women wondering what happened to their happily-ever-afters and still seeking romance, or young people struggling to find love and preserve beauty while hampered by busybodies. Throughout her fiction there sounds a sorrowful note of loss and destruction, but Willis is optimistic that kindness and loyalty will always, if not prevail, then at least burn brightly in the metaphorical night of war, plague, and vicious stupidity. Her fans live in anticipation of her coming works, for, at whatever length, they always guarantee a good read.

-Fiona Kelleghan

WILSON, A(ndrew) N(orman)

Nationality: British. Born: Stone, Staffordshire, 27 October 1950. Education: Rugby School, Warwickshire, 1964–69; New College, Oxford (Chancellor's Essay prize, 1971; Ellerton Theological prize, 1975), 1969-72, M.A.; studied for priesthood, 1973-74. Family: Married 1) Katherine Duncan-Jones in 1971 (divorced 1990), two daughters; 2) Ruth Guilding. Career: Assistant master, Merchant Taylors' School, London, 1975–76; lecturer, St. Hugh's College, Oxford, 1976-82, and New College, 1977-80; literary editor, the Spectator, London, 1981-83. Presenter, Eminent Victorians television series, 1989. Awards: Rhys Memorial prize, for fiction, 1978, for biography, 1981; Maugham award, 1981; Arts Council National Book award, 1981; Southern Arts prize, 1981; W.H. Smith Literary award, 1983; Whitbread prize, for biography, 1988. Fellow, Royal Society of Literature, 1981. Agent: Peters Fraser and Dunlop, 503-504 The Chambers, Chelsea Harbour, Lots Road, London SW10 0XF. Address: 21 Arlington Rd., London NW1 7ER, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Sweets of Pimlico. London, Secker and Warburg, 1977; New York, Penguin, 1989.

Unguarded Hours. London, Secker and Warburg, 1978.

Kindly Light. London, Secker and Warburg, 1979.

The Healing Art. London, Secker and Warburg, 1980; New York, Penguin, 1988.

Who Was Oswald Fish? London, Secker and Warburg, 1981; New York, Penguin, 1988.

Wise Virgin. London, Secker and Warburg, 1982; New York, Viking Press, 1983.

Scandal; or, Priscilla's Kindness. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1983;New York, Viking, 1984.

Gentlemen in England: A Vision. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1985; New York, Viking, 1986.

Love Unknown. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1986; New York, Viking, 1987.

Incline Our Hearts. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1988; New York, Viking, 1989.

A Bottle in the Smoke. London, Sinclair Stevenson, 1989; New York, Viking, 1990.

Daughters of Albion. London, Sinclair Stevenson, 1991; New York, Viking, 1992.

The Vicar of Sorrows. London, Sinclair Stevenson, 1993; New York, Norton, 1994.

Hearing Voices. London, Sinclair-Stevenson, 1995; New York, W.W. Norton, 1996.

A Watch in the Night. London, Sinclair-Stevenson, 1996.

Dream Children. New York, W.W. Norton, 1998.

Poetry

Lilibet: An Account in Verse of the Early Years of the Queen until the Time of Her Accession. London, Blond and Briggs, 1984.

Other (for children)

Stray. London, Walker Books, 1987; New York, Orchard, 1989.
The Tabitha Stories. London, Walker Books, 1988; as Tabitha, New York, Orchard, 1989.

Hazel the Guinea-Pig. London, Walker Books, 1989; Cambridge, Massachusetts, Candlewick Press, 1992.

Other

The Laird of Abbotsford: A View of Sir Walter Scott. Oxford and New York, Oxford University Press, 1980.

The Life of John Milton. Oxford and New York, Oxford University Press, 1983.

Hilaire Belloc. London, Hamish Hamilton, and New York, Atheneum, 1984.

How Can We Know? An Essay on the Christian Religion. London, Hamish Hamilton, and New York, Atheneum, 1985.

The Church in Crisis, with Charles Moore and Gavin Stamp. London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1986.

Landscape in France, photographs by Charlie Waite. London, Elm Tree, 1987; New York, St. Martin's Press, 1988.

Penfriends from Porlock: Essay and Reviews 1977–1986. London, Hamish Hamilton, 1988; New York, Norton, 1989.

Tolstoy: A Biography. London, Hamish Hamilton, and New York, Norton, 1988.

Eminent Victorians. London, BBC Publications, 1989; New York, Norton, 1990.

C.S. Lewis: A Biography. London, Collins, and New York, Norton, 1990.

Against Religion. London, Chatto and Windus, 1990.

Jesus. London, Sinclair Stevenson, 1992.

The Rise and Fall of the House of Windsor. London, Sinclair Stevenson, and New York, Norton, 1993.

Paul: The Mind of the Apostle. New York, W.W. Norton, 1997.

God's Funeral. New York, W.W. Norton, 1999.

Editor, Ivanhoe, by Scott. London, Penguin, 1982.

Editor, Dracula, by Bram Stoker. Oxford, Oxford University Press, 1983

Editor, Essays by Divers Hand 44. Woodbridge, Suffolk, Boydell and Brewer, 1986.

Editor, The Lion and the Honeycomb: The Religious Writings of Tolstoy. London, Collins, and New York, Harper, 1987.

Editor, John Henry Newman: Prayers, Poems, and Meditations. London, SPCK, 1989; New York, Crossroad, 1990.

Editor, The Faber Book of Church and Clergy. London, Faber, 1992. Editor, The Faber Book of London. London, Faber, 1994.

Editor, The Norton Book of London. New York, Norton, 1994.

* * *

A. N. Wilson is a prolific writer who has produced seventeen novels, biographies of Sir Walter Scott, Milton, Hilaire Belloc, Tolstoy, and C.S. Lewis, controversial accounts of Jesus and St. Paul, studies of religion, and many polemical articles. As a novelist, his territory is a familiar one in British fiction; the world of the English middle and upper middle classes, as represented primarily by Oxbridge graduates, London intellectuals, and Anglican clergymen. To some extent, his technique resembles the satire and black comedy of Evelyn Waugh and Ronald Firbank but he is generally a gentler, more affectionate writer with a capacity to evoke both love and, in his later work, the depths of despair. By his own account, he is a one-draft writer, who does not spend time revising; and this sometimes shows in the prose of his fiction; but he nonetheless has the ability to bring scenes and characters vividly and economically before the reader and he can be very funny; as some of his nonfiction books might suggest, however, he is also concerned to explore in his novels serious ethical and theological issues.

His first novel, The Sweets of Pimlico, is a comic and touching debut that traces the relationship between Evelyn Tradescant, a young upper middle-class Cambridge graduate teaching in London, and the elderly and enigmatic Baron Theo Gormann. It was followed by Unguarded Hours and Kindly Light, highly entertaining comedies that recount the embarrassments and exploits of Norman Shotover, a shy, awkward Cambridge graduate who becomes an Anglican priest, gets mixed up with lots of girls, jumps off a cathedral tower with a hang glider, joins the CIA—the Catholic Institute of Alfonso—and plunges into a host of other improbable roles. Though relatively lightweight, Wilson's second and third novels do raise questions about the nature of modern religious institutions. The vein of comic satire is mined more substantially in Who Was Oswald Fish? which combines strong characterization, farce, parody, and astute observation of social change—the novel runs from the victory of Conservative leader Edward Heath in the British General Election of 1970 to that of Margaret Thatcher in 1979. Deeper emotional depths are sounded in The Healing Art and Wise Virgin; The Healing Art presents alternating narratives of two women whose X-rays have been confused at a cancer clinic, so that one of them, Pamela, believes, mistakenly, that she has but a short time to live, and the other, Dorothy, believes, again incorrectly, that she is cancer-free. Pamela, her mind concentrated by the prospect of imminent death, seeks to behave less selfishly and to develop the sort of kindness that comes more readily to Dorothy. Wise Virgin explores the relationship between a medieval scholar, nearing fifty, who has lost his sight, his young female research assistant who wants to marry him, and his daughter, who is herself discovering the possibilities of love. Both these novels demonstrate Wilson's capacity to combine comedy, bleakness, and tenderness in a potent and moving mixture.

Scandal is coarser black comedy, focusing on a prostitute, Bernadette Woolley, and an ambitious politician, Derek Blore, who considers treason and murder in order to save himself from damaging revelations about his masochistic indulgences. But Wilson's excursions into London lowlife in this novel are unconvincing; in particular, he is unable to find an appropriate tone for the portrayal of Bernadette and his representation of her becomes rather heartless and caricatural. Gentlemen in England is an indulgent but enjoyable voyage back to the Victorian era to explore generational conflicts as the cosmopolitan Marvo Chatterway disrupts the Nettleship family, and its younger members are drawn to the religion of art and to apocalyptic Christianity. Wilson returns to the modern comedy of manners with Love Unknown, which follows the fortunes of three women, Monica, Belinda, and Richeldis, who, twenty years before, shared a London flat, went their separate ways, and now find that their different lives are not wholly satisfactory.

Wilson's next novel broke down the barrier between his adult and children's writing: Stray is the vividly written autobiography of Pufftail, an alley cat, and it can be read with pleasure by all ages. It was followed by the ambitious work The Vicar of Sorrows, in which a clergyman who has lost his faith and his love for his wife finds himself engulfed by crisis after his mother dies and he falls for a New Age traveler. Comedy here is combined with somber renderings of emotional and spiritual distress that show Wilson moving further into the dark territory he had begun to explore in The Healing Art and Wise Virgin. The novel that appeared after The Vicar of Sorrows is perhaps his most powerful and disturbing to date: Dream Children takes up the theme of pedophilia in its account of the sexual relationship between Oliver Gold, an admired philosopher who has not realized his potential for greatness, and Bobs, a sensitive, affectionate prepubertal girl. The novel is daring in the way it evokes sympathy for Oliver even as it demonstrates the appalling nature of child abuse.

The novels Incline Our Hearts, A Bottle in the Smoke, Daughters of Albion, Hearing Voices, and A Watch in the Night, which comprise the novel sequence "The Lampitt Chronicles," stand somewhat apart from Wilson's other fiction, although they share its combination of comedy and seriousness. The narrator of the quintet is the orphan Julian Ramsay, who grows up in a Norfolk vicarage, goes through prep school, public school, National Service, and eventually becomes an actor. The novels turn on Ramsay's quest for the truth about the life and death of the Edwardian writer, James Petworth Lampitt, and on the way in which the same facts may be differently interpreted concerns that link up with Wilson's own biographical writing. The sequence moves through a range of settings in London, New York, Italy and Venice, covers a time-span that stretches from the 1930s to early in the twenty-first century, and deploys a considerable variety of characters, some of whom are thinly disguised versions of actual people. It has been compared to Anthony Powell's twelve-novel sequence, A Dance to the Music of Time, but this comparison is exaggerated; in contrast to Powell, we hear too much of the narrator's voice and other potentially significant characters are not given space to develop. Nonetheless, the series is admirably ambitious and richly interesting.

Wilson has now produced a substantial body of fiction. His gift for comedy ensures that his novels are consistently entertaining; but as his career has progressed, he has also shown a capacity to develop his range, to tackle large and serious themes, and to respond to contemporary social concerns, despite his initial reputation as a "young fogey" opposed to modern attitudes. Although he enjoys a high reputation as a biographer, Wilson feels that fiction can present truths that elude biography and history; and his novels can be seen to constitute an engaging and insightful exploration of the nature of middle and upper middle-class British identity as it encounters the complex pressures of the later twentieth century.

-Nicolas Tredell

WINTERSON, Jeanette

Nationality: British. Born: Lancashire in 1959. Education: St. Catherine's College, Oxford. Awards: Whitbread award, 1985; John Llewellyn Rhys Memorial prize, 1987. Address: c/o Bloomsbury, 2 Soho Square, London W1V 5DE, England.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Oranges Are Not the Only Fruit. London, Pandora Press, 1985; New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 1987.

Boating for Beginners. London, Methuen, 1985.

The Passion. London, Bloomsbury, 1987; New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 1988.

Sexing the Cherry. London, Bloomsbury, and New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, 1989.

Written on the Body. London, Cape, 1992; New York, Knopf, 1993. Art and Lies. London, Cape, 1994; New York, Knopf, 1995.

Gut Symmetries. New York, Knopf, 1997.

The PowerBook. New York, Knopf, 2000.

Short Stories

The World and Other Places. New York, Knopf, 1999.

Uncollected Short Stories

"Orion," in Winter's Tales 4 (new series), edited by Robin Baird-Smith. London, Constable, and New York, St. Martin's Press,

"The Green Man," in The New Yorker, 26 June-3 July 1995.

Plays

Radio Plays: Static, 1988.

Television Plays: Oranges Are Not the Only Fruit (series), from her own novel, 1990.

Other

Fit for the Future: The Guide for Women Who Want to Live Well. London, Pandora Press, 1986.

Art Objects: Critical Essays. London, Cape, and New York, Knopf,

Editor, Passion Fruit: Romantic Fiction with a Twist. London, Pandora Press, 1986.

Critical Studies: So Far So Linear: Responses to the Work of Jeanette Winterson by Christopher Pressler. Nottingham, England, Paupers' Press, 1997.

Jeanette Winterson is often described as one of the most controversial yet innovative fiction writers in contemporary English literature. Her promising beginnings as a young talent have been rounded off in the past decade and a half by an increasingly general acclaim. Her fiction has entered the literary canon but still resists categorization.

Winterson's is a dense epigrammatic prose rich in beautiful images and flights of fancy. Her fiction brings in a play of signifiers that result in a continuous deferral of meaning that suggests a number of alternative readings. While abounding in experimental narrative techniques and decentering strategies that have been associated with postmodernist writings, Winterson's texts also show a dialogic relationship with the modernist tradition, especially with Virginia Woolf, T. S. Eliot, and James Joyce—as manifest in her volume of essays Art Objects. Winterson self-consciously questions the mechanisms by which narrative texts are produced and partakes of a clear penchant for fantasy, magical realism, and the fabulous. Postmodernist techniques, modernist tradition, metafiction, and magical realism are, however, mere instruments that Winterson deftly combines with a strong political commitment aimed at subverting socio-cultural power structures and, ultimately, at appropriating traditionally male-defined concepts for her lesbian politics.

Winterson began her literary career by reinventing herself in fiction. Oranges Are Not the Only Fruit is her only explicitly lesbian text to date. Not surprisingly, it has been widely understood as autobiographical: it tells the story of an adopted girl, significantly called Jeanette, growing up a lesbian inside a strict religious community. Oranges is both the most obvious example of Winterson's realist impulse and her first conscious attempt at deconstructing the opposition reality/fiction. Her rewriting the novel into a television script completed this Indian rope trick, which allowed the flesh-and-blood author to disappear behind a double fictionalization. Reading, or watching, Oranges as simply autobiographical would be, then, to disregard the complexity of layers that lie behind Jeanette's/Jess's story. Oranges manipulates several of the monologic narratives on which mainstream culture rests. It tells the story of Jeanette's quest for subjectivity and (homo)sexuality but rejects the traditional appropriation of the theory of the subject by the masculine and emphasizes instead the mother-daughter bonding as a counter-narrative of conventional masculine bondage that highlights female specificity and gender difference.

Boating for Beginners is euphemistically called an early work, despite its having been published immediately after Oranges. This disdainful attitude of the critics has been fuelled by Winterson herself, who regrets having written this "comic book" and separates it from her fiction experiment. Full of funny sketches, Boating rewrites another Biblical episode, the Flood and Noah's Ark. In Winterson's fiction, God has not created men, it is Noah that makes God "by accident out of a piece of gateau and a giant electric toaster." Told by a homodiegetic adolescent female narrator, Gloria, who struggles to find her own identity in a world of distorted fictions that pass for unquestionable realities, the story has many issues in common with Oranges. It is, above all, a demystification of religion, romantic love, and heterosexuality. Gloria, together with the reader, learns to distrust all these long-established truths and to re-evaluate the neglected potential of storytelling.

"Stories were all we had," says Henri, the male protagonist of Winterson's The Passion, which together with Sexing the Cherry constitute two examples of "historiographic metafiction." In these two novels Winterson expands on her quarrel with the nature of time, the instability of the self, love and desire, narrative, and historical discourse that she had initiated in Oranges: "History should be a hammock for swinging and a game for playing, the way cats play. Claw it, chew it, rearrange it." If history is discourse, the notions of objectivity and verisimilitude no longer hold. History is shown to be subjective, limited, biased and open to revision and recontextualization. The Passion is situated in the aftermath of the French Revolution and the rise and fall of Napoleon Bonaparte. It combines the life stories of two character-narrators, Henri, a French soldier-cook from the ranks and files of Bonaparte, and Villanelle, a Venetian bisexual woman who has webbed feet like the men in her society. Set in Puritan England in the years of the English Civil War, the Great Plague, and the Great Fire of London, Sexing the Cherry is also told by two different voices, the Rabelaisian Dog Woman-a sublime portrait of excess that was prefigured by Jeanette's mother in Oranges-and Jordan, a foundling brought by the river to the childless Dog Woman, who travels both physically and mentally in search of his flying selfrepresented in the story by Fortunata, one of the Twelve Dancing Princesses. In both texts Winterson blends high and low art by pairing T. S. Eliot's Four Quartets with Tarot cards and fairy tales. By means of intertextuality, Winterson exposes linguistic and narrative conventions and provides alternative versions of history that focus on groups of people who have been marginalized by official history.

Written on the Body explores the nature of love, desire, and sexuality at the same time as it experiments with the limits of narrative by taking structure away. Having proved in her previous fictions that there is no such thing as a univocal fixed sexual identity, Winterson's character-narrator is unnamed and ungendered. Its story—an obsessive passion for a married woman, Louise, who has decided to leave her husband, a cancer-researcher, but who may be dying from leukemia—is not set in a particular place or time. There is no suspense because the whole story is already revealed in the first pages of the book. Written on the Body is Winterson's proof that a story should not be reduced to its plot, that conventions and clichés in narrative do not make good books just as conventions and clichés are useless when talking about love. Winterson's account of abnegation and loss in Written on the Body is an overt critique of romance narratives with their long established sexual roles, their happy endings, and their formulaic expressions. Winterson demonstrates that true love is original and poetic even when the lover resorts to anatomy textbooks for its imagery.

The nature of love, time, and art are again at the core of Art and Lies, a difficult book that has received the harshest criticism together with the most passionate acclamation of the author's oeuvre. The book is a time travel experience for the reader, who shares a high-speed train with Picasso, a young artist escaping from a sexually and emotionally abusive family; Handel, a disillusioned priest turned breast surgeon; and Sappho, the historical poet who, like Woolf's Orlando, has been alive since antiquity. As the title suggests, Art and Lies is more of a philosophical digression about art as artifice and invention than a story in the traditional sense of the term. It criticizes the Platonic notion of art as mimesis and reverences the power of the word. For Winterson art and, by extension, literature, do not simply reflect reality but construct it in and through language. Therefore art and literature not only have the potential but also the responsibility to change givens by opening up endless, more comprehensive possibilities.

Literature becomes multi-dimensional and cosmic in Gut Symmetries. Like Art and Lies the story is told by three different voices, each giving a particular version of the "events." Stella and Jove are a married couple but they "live on different planets." Stella refuses passion because feelings are always painful. Jove is a renowned physicist who works in a new model of the cosmos and lectures on time travel and "The World and Other Places." Alice, also a physicist, brings in a double love affair as she falls in love with both Jove and Stella. Stella, Jove, and Alice are placed in a floating space, a boat, where everything is unstable. There is no conventional plotline, characters are not too convincing, and there is no passion in their love affairs. Passion, though, oozes from Winterson's dense poetic writing, which sublimates the eternal love triangle by making it a part of physics' Grand Unified Theory, the metaphor contained in the title of the book. Gut Symmetries is structured by Tarot cards, alchemy, and cabalistic theology, on the one hand, and by quantum physics and geometry on the other. The result seems to be a world that is both real and virtual, material and philosophical.

Apart from being the title of Jove's lecture in Gut Symmetries, The World and Other Places is Winterson's only collection of short stories, an open window to Winterson's creative trajectory. Written over a period of twelve years beginning soon after the publication of Oranges, these stories chart Winterson's preoccupation with the nature of time, the nature of love in its multiple forms, the search for the self as journey or quest, and the figure of the outsider either in the form of a stranger or because a character is marginalized by society. All these are not only key issues but also leitmotifs in each of Winterson's fictions. It is not surprising, then, that some of these stories prefigure Winterson's major books. "The Three Friends" is an especially significant example in this respect because it is an interlude in Gut Symmetries and resonates with echoes of The Passion and Sexing the Cherry. Like Jove, Winterson keeps on experimenting on a new model of the cosmos free from the constricting power of gravity. Her fiction transports her readers into a space where time is suspended. Her critical poise, her wonderful way with words, and her ability for outrageous humor are all at the service of feeling and imagination.

-Mar Asensio-Aróstegui

WINTON, Tim

Nationality: Australian. Born: Karrinyup, Western Australia, 1960. Education: Western Australian Institute of Technology. Awards: Australian/Vogel award, 1981, for An Open Swimmer; Miles Franklin award, 1984, for Shallows; Deo Gloria award, 1991, WA Premiers award, 1991, National Book Council's Banjo award, 1992, and Miles Franklin award, 1992, all for Cloudstreet. Address: c/o Pan Macmillan, Level 18, St. Martin's Tower, 31 Market St., Sydney, New South Wales 2000, Australia.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

An Open Swimmer. Sydney, Allen and Unwin, 1982.

Shallows. Sydney, Unwin, 1985; London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, and New York, Atheneum, 1986.

That Eye, the Sky. Melbourne, McPhee Gribble, New York, Atheneum, and London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1986.

In the Winter Dark. Melbourne, McPhee Gribble, 1988; London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1989.

Cloudstreet. London, Picador, 1991; Saint Paul, Minnisota, Graywolf Press, 1992. The Riders. New York, Scribner, and London, Picador, 1995. Blueback: A Contemporary Fable. New York, Scribner, 1997.

Short Stories

Scission. Fitzroy, Victoria, McPhee Gribble, 1985; as Scission and Other Stories, London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1987.
Minimum of Two. Fitzroy, Victoria, McPhee Gribble, 1987; New York, Atheneum, and London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1988.
Blood and Water. London, Picador, 1993.

Other

Jesse (for children). N.p., 1989.

Lockie Leonard, Human Torpedo (for children). N.p., Bodley Head, 1990; Boston, Little Brown, 1991.

Local Colour: Travels in Australia, with Bill Bachman. London, Allen and Unwin, 1994.

* * *

Tim Winton is perhaps the most precocious and prolific novelist Australia has yet produced. Born in 1960, he published his first novel, An Open Swimmer, at the age of twenty-two and has subsequently gone on to publish more than a dozen books of fiction, including several for children. An Open Swimmer seems, like much of Winton's early fiction, to have been influenced by Hemingway, though Winton denies this and says he owes far more to fellow western Australian writer Randolph Stow. Its protagonist Jerra, short for Jeremiah, is a former admirer of The Old Man and the Sea, to which there are two references, and the novel takes laconicism almost to the point of silence. At one point the author even acknowledges this: "It was apathetic conversation, even for them." Not just Jerra and his mate Sean but all of the handful of characters in the novel speak in monosyllables, sparingly dished out, and the laconicism is carried over into the narrative voice of the novel as well. The spare, unadorned factuality of the writing is fleshed out with a few pervasive metaphors, the most important of which is the pearl that can sometimes be found in a kingfisher's head when it is cut open, but the theme of the novel is unclear, unless it is Jerra's sexual traumas, perhaps unwillingness to embrace the world of adulthood generally. As with much of Winton's work, the most interesting element is the preoccupation with landscape and especially seascape.

Set in the town of Angelus in the southern part of western Australia, Winton's second novel, Shallows (which won the Miles Franklin Award for best Australian novel of the year), deals with the conflict between whalers and a band of environmentalists who set out to disrupt the already dying industry. As The Old Man and the Sea provided a kind of reference point for the earlier novel, so Moby-Dick does for this. The novel cuts deliberately from character to character, as Shallows alternated between past and present. There are the young couple, Cleveland and Queenie Cookson, Queenie's father Daniel Coupar, the egregious Des Pustling and his reluctant girlfriend Marion Lowell, and the aged Presbyterian clergyman William Pell. There is a prologue set in 1831, and Winton also makes use of the diary of Daniel Coupart's grandfather, Nathaniel, which has been given to Cleve. The central conflict is between Cleve and Queenie but it springs up almost too quickly for plausibility and is dissolved at the end in a similarly peremptory manner. In the course of the narrative Queenie becomes steadily stronger while Cleve deteriorates morally, so that their final upbeat reunion, with Queenie pregnant by him, seems to have an imposed quality. The vision of life the novel offers is perhaps best summed up by Daniel Coupar: "It's having the choices that kills a man. It's the best and the worst. You get to choose and you get to regret. Almost guaranteed to bugger it up. And sometimes not."

Jerra reappears in Scission, Winton's first collection of short stories. The epigraphs, this time coming from The Book of Job and East Coker, suggest the increasing importance of Christian belief in Winton's work. Again the style is spare, restrained, attempting to suggest or imply unstated significances; most of the stories are very short. Domesticity-of a young couple, of father and son-and especially its fragility is often the main concern. In the final, title story, the preoccupation with "scissions" of various kinds is taken even into the writing itself, its style and structure acting out the sense of a mind incapable of ordering its experience. The rather awkward title of That Eye, the Sky refers to those who have aspiration or faith. The sky or its absence is constantly referred to throughout the novel: "I go out and look at the sky but it's blank; no stars, nothing," the novel's twelve-year-old narrator, Morton ("Ort") Flack, says despairingly at one point near the end. No matter. This is the most explicitly Christian of Winton's works to date, the culmination of the movement that led to the affirmations in many of the stories in Scission. There is literally a deus ex machina in the unlikely person of Henry Warburton, former poet and hippy and now evangelist and car thief as well as the seducer of Ort's renegade sister, Tegwyn, with whom he flees at the end of the novel. When Henry finally runs away for the second time and the family discovers that the car he brought back has been stolen, all would seem to be lost, but it is then that Ort experiences his epiphany. He sees his stricken father: "His eyes are open and they're on me and smiling as I come in shouting 'God! God! God!' His face is shining. I'm shaking all over. 'God! God! God!'"

The title of Minimum of Two, Winton's second collection of stories, refers to the sentence a rapist receives in the title story—"five years with a minimum before parole of two." Although one of the longest, at fifteen pages, it is also one of the weakest stories in this rather undernourished collection, the strongest point of which is its continuity with Winton's earlier fiction. In "Laps," for instance, we meet Queenie Cookson and her husband seven years after the events narrated in Shallows. More commonly, the protagonists are Jerra and, by implication, in "A Measure of Eloquence," his wife Rachel, their son Sam, and friends Ann and Philip. The story "Gravity" refers directly to when the honeymooning couple stayed in Jerra's shack. Jerra himself is now something of a mess. After trying to make it as a musician he seems burned-out, living off the dole, resentful of his parents and full of self-pity. The final story takes us back in time to the agonizingly painful birth of Sam. "Blood and Water" reminds us of the dedication of the book to Winton's wife and child in its graphic, impressionist account of childbirth. Elsewhere, though, the prose takes on the familiar cadences of Hemingway, as in this passage from "Forest Winter": "He had been broken once before, years back, when he was still half a boy, and he knew that when you were beaten properly, you didn't get up; you had to wait for some obscure grace to put you together, and there was no guarantee it would come by a second time." That "obscure grace" is the key to Winton's vision.

In the Winter Dark is unusual among Winton's fiction, a short, barely novella-length account by an old man of a series of horrifying events that took place almost a year ago. Of the four people involved, two are now dead, the narrator Maurice Stubbs is tortured by incessant nightmares, and Murray Jaccob, his neighbor in the isolated valley known as the Sink, is drinking himself to death. Something or someone, we slowly learn, has been killing and disemboweling the animals in the area, but when Maurice and his wife, Jaccob, and a pregnant young woman named Ronnie collaborate to hunt it down they are unsuccessful, as their own private fears and guilts from the past take over. The novel is a skillful study in suspense.

Cloudstreet, perhaps Winton's most impressive and substantial novel, won him a second Miles Franklin Award. It is the most ambitious of his works, not only in terms of its length and in the time it covers (roughly 1943 to 1964), but also in its extraordinary gallery of characters and in the stylistic experiments that are new to Winton's fiction and seem to move him almost into the realms of magic realism. The novel is the story of two families named Lamb and Pickles (Winton has a lot of fun with names in this novel), who move into a huge house at no. 1 Cloud Street and bicker and love their way through two decades of Australian history. Lester and Oriel Lamb are God-fearing people who give thanks to the Lord when their son Fish comes back from drowning-except that not all of Fish Lamb has come back, his brain having been left behind in the sea. Sam and Dolly Pickles, on the other hand, are a feckless couple who fail to prosper. Sam loses most of the fingers of one hand in an episode of violence characteristic of this novel and takes to gambling; Dolly is an alcoholic. Winton covers the history of both sets of parents and their numerous offspring in numerous short episodes, some comic, others near tragic.

The style of the novel varies. There are sections written in the present tense, sudden bursts of lyricism, passages of interior monologue, and a great deal of slightly heightened Australian vernacular. Winton is also fond of bizarre and incongruous juxtapositions, often of a comically macabre kind: "His mother came in to find him stuffing the old boy's dentures in. He stopped rigid, they exchanged looks, and it appeared with the upper plate the way it was, that the old man had died eating a small piano." There are also ventures into fabulism: the house in which they live gives out sighs, a pig speaks in Pentecostal tongues, a woman sets up house in a tent in the backyard. If there is a sustaining theme running through the novel it is the various views of chance and the contingent that the two families hold. For Sam Pickles, luck is "the shifty shadow of God," which "you do your best to stay out of the way of." Whereas with the Lambs, there is "making luck, the hardest ... yacker there is."

The Riders is Winton's most baffling novel, though it is also quite exhilarating to read. A young Australian man named Scully labors in the novel's first section to restore a house in Ireland that he has bought on the whim of his wife. He is sustained in his labor by the thought of her imminent arrival as well as that of their seven-year-old daughter, Billie, but when he finally gets to the airport only his daughter is there, too traumatized to explain what has happened. The rest of the novel is concerned with Scully's demented chase all over Europe—Greece, Italy, France, Holland, England—in search of his missing wife, a search that is finally left unresolved.

Winton's account of Scully's quest is as electrifying as it is implausible. Scully himself may embody all the possibilities, play all the roles that his creator suggests—"working-class boofhead with a wife who married beneath herself," "hairy bohemian with a beautiful family," "mongrel expat with the homesick twang and ambitious missus," "poor decent-hearted bastard who couldn't see the roof coming down on his head." It is not possible to decide who or what he is because his behavior and personality change from moment to moment as he is violently propelled through the next series of dramatic events. Whatever he is, he behaves with a quite exceptional stupidity that, like much else in this novel, remains as mysterious as the imagery of the night riders that runs through the novel.

Blueback: A Contemporary Fable is the story of a boy and a blue grouper, the title character. It is not so much a novel as a tract, a call for environmental responsibility, and the spare, clean quality of Winton's language here is not helped by the use of preachy messages such as "there was nothing in nature as cruel and savage as a greedy human being." Yet this book, too, contains themes common to Winton's best work. The motif of the quest or the odyssey is present in most of his fiction, especially as it concerns the quest in search of the self. Also central is the tension between a sense of the importance of chance and the contingent in life and the wavering faith in some kind of force that imposes order upon the universe. Perhaps this is what Winton's protagonist senses in the riders he glimpses again at the end of the novel: "He knew them now and he saw that they would be here every night seen and unseen, patient, dogged faithful in all weathers and all worlds, waiting for something promised, something that was plainly their due, but he knew that as surely as he felt Billie tugging on him, curling her fingers in his and pulling them easily away, that he would not be among them and must never be, in life or death."

-Laurie Clancy, updated by Judson Knight

WOIWODE, Larry (Alfred)

Nationality: American. Born: Carrington, North Dakota, 30 October 1941. Education: University of Illinois, Urbana, 1959–64, A.A. 1964. Family: Married Carole Ann Peterson in 1965; four children. Career: Actor in Miami and New York, 1964-65; writer-in-residence, University of Wisconsin, Madison, 1973-74; visiting professor, Wheaton College, Illinois, summers 1981 and 1984; visiting professor, 1983-84, professor of English, 1984-88, director of the Writing Program, 1985–88, and co-director of the semester in London program, Spring 1988, State University of New York, Binghamton. Since 1988 professor of English, Beth-El Institute for the Arts and Sciences, Carson, North Dakota. Since 1978 farmer-rancher in western North Dakota, raising grains, sheep, and quarter horses. Awards: MacDowell fellowship, 1965; Faulkner Foundation award, 1969; Guggenheim fellowship, 1971; American Academy award, 1980; Southern Review award, for The Neumiller Stories, 1990; Aga Khan prize (Paris Review), 1990; John Dos Passos prize, for a literary body of work, 1991; Award of Merit, American Academy of Arts and Letters, 1995. D.Litt.: North Dakota State University, Fargo, 1977. Agent: Candida Donadio and Associates, 231 West 22nd Street, New York, New York 10011, U.S.A. Address: Route 1, Box 57, Mott, North Dakota, 57646, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

What I'm Going to Do, I Think. New York, Farrar Straus, 1969; London, Weidenfeld and Nicholson, 1970.

Beyond the Bedroom Wall: A Family Album. New York, Farrar Straus, 1975.

Poppa John. New York, Farrar Straus, 1981.

Born Brothers. New York, Farrar Straus, 1988. Indian Affairs. New York, Atheneum/Macmillan, 1991.

Short Stories

The Neumiller Stories. New York, Farrar Straus, 1989. Silent Passengers. New York, Atheneum/Macmillan, 1993.

Uncollected Short Story

"Summer Storms," in Paris Review, Spring 1990.

Poetry

Poetry North: Five North Dakota Poets, with others. Fargo, North Dakota Institute for Regional Studies, 1970.

Even Tide. New York, Farrar Straus, 1977.

Other

Acts. San Francisco, HarperSanFrancisco, 1993.

What I Think I Did: A Season of Survival in Two Acts (memoir). New York, Basic Books, 2000.

The Aristocrat of the West: Biography of Harold Schafer. Fargo, North Dakota Institute for Regional Studies, 2000.

*

Manuscript Collection: Allen Memorial Library, Valley City State University, North Dakota.

Larry Woiwode comments:

(1981) I believe that prose should be set down so that the readers sees through it to the book's essential action: a fireplace screen behind which the blaze burns, as I've expressed it elsewhere. Yet I work in my books to make the prose do as much as it is able, in realms of rhythm, imagery, and underlying sound. If this seems a paradox, it perhaps is; it sometimes feels so as I work. But I believe that our language, and its heritage, is too rich to be relegated to the utilitarian. Besides trying to keep up on contemporaries and present trends, I like to read in the century of our language's flowering, in the Elizabethans and metaphysical poets, for instance, and all of the early novelists and novels, such as Pilgrim's Progress. Its structure is still valid and its language full of sparks.

In my books I try to convey the contours and textures of life as it's lived. Each book is a separate entity with its special demands, since each is lived by a different character, or series of them. The rhythm of every sentence of the six-hundred-and-some pages of Beyond the Bedroom Wall is modulated to fit the voice that speaks it. Or there was a conscious attempt to make this so. What I want to do in my fiction, with the help of the prose I work at, is to keep all of the reader's senses informed on every moment that he lives within a certain character's skin. This world we breathe. I expect a reader to emerge from my work affected, if not with a change of heart.

* * *

Larry Woiwode's second novel, Beyond the Bedroom Wall, is sure to be ranked as one of the great achievements of American fiction of the 1970s. It is a midwestern novel, an American novel, a universal novel. It spans four generations, and could be set in almost any century. The book's significant events emerge out of the natural histories of human beings. It is about births and deaths, love and courtship, joy and grief, motherhood and fatherhood, childhood, adolescence, old age. It is about strength of character, spoiled character, redeemed character. It is about hardship and work, competence and incompetence, faith and distrust. It is about provincial bigotry and the lot of a Catholic family in a town of Methodists. It is about enduring.

Otto Neumiller emigrated from Germany in 1881. He went all the way to the Dakota plain, where he prospered and then lost most of what he had gained. In his old age, he is lonely and envied and unloved by his neighbors. His son Charles returns to the homestead to attend him at his death. In one of the book's finest chapters, Woiwode shows Charles at work making his father's coffin, lovingly washing and dressing his father's body, burying him in the unhallowed ground of the farm he loved. Like his father, Charles Neumiller has been a devout Catholic all his life; and so is Charles's son Martin. Most of the novel is the story of Martin, his wife Alpha, who dies at 34, and their six children. The older children, the fourth generation, are off on their own in the 1970s.

The great strength of this novel is in Woiwode's rendering of the commonplace. The Neumiller family may be a bit more intelligent and may perhaps possess more fortitude than the average family, but they are not particularly special. In addition to the virtues, there certainly are waywardness, carelessness, and ill-considered, impulsive behavior among them. Indeed, one of the beautiful ironies in the novel is that it is the ill-considered decision of Martin, usually so steady and prudent, to move his family from North Dakota to Illinois that brings disaster to the family, including ultimately his beloved wife's death. But the fabric of the novel is made of such scenes as the father's telling stories to his children, the father's being overcome with frustration and kicking one of his sons viciously, the acting out of guilt feelings brought on by the nearly fatal illness of a child. An important motif running through the novel is the family's emotional involvement with each of the various houses in which they live.

The marriage of Martin and Alpha is old-fashioned and ordinary. Except for what is done by acts of nature, it is a marriage that is not susceptible to disruption. This man and this woman become totally entangled with each other, and regardless of what befalls them they cannot imagine themselves married to anyone else. To Martin and Alpha, marriage is for better or for worse, forever.

Even in bulk Woiwode's first novel, What I'm Going to Do, I Think, is not half the novel that Beyond the Bedroom Wall is. It has a small cast of characters, with the focus rarely leaving Chris or Ellen; it does not range over generations, but is concerned with only a few seasons in the lives of its young couple. It is lyrical and symbolic; unfortunately it is also murky. Its central situation is commonplace: the young woman is pregnant and the couple marry. They take an extended honeymoon at an isolated lodge up in northern Michigan. Only then does the nature of the commitment he has made become real to Chris. He is not single anymore; he must take account of another person. He is uncertain about which emotions to share and which to conceal. He experiences much anger, resentment, and frustration, but he does not know what to do with such feelings in the new context. Their physical relationship is different under the blanket of marriage; expectation, disappointment, jealously, and fulfillment have a new texture. Neither Chris nor Ellen has had an appropriate model for the roles of husband and wife; Chris, especially, suffers as a result.

Both had unusual childhoods. Ellen's parents were killed in an accident, and she has been raised by four grandparents. Chris's alienation from his parents is so severe that he hardly ever thinks of them; he does not invite them to his wedding, and he does not attend his mother's funeral. It is the quality of Chris's earlier life that is suggested by the title of the novel. The words are part of a remark made by his father when Chris has hurt himself being clumsy at a chore. What his father thinks he is going to do is get himself a new kid.

The child Ellen is carrying is born dead. When Ellen calls her grandmother for consolation, she is told that this is the "wages of sin." Chris and Ellen do not have another child. The novel ends with the suggestion that Chris always will be a troubled man and that the marriage will not bring fulfillment or much joy to husband or wife. The lives of Chris and Ellen will never have the richness of the lives of Martin and Alpha. Standing by itself, the earlier novel does not have a meaning that clearly emerges from the interaction of character and plot. When it is put beside Beyond the Bedroom Wall, its theme is quite clear: without firm familial commitments, modern life will exact constant feelings of despair and loss.

In Indian Affairs, Woiwode picks up where he left off in his very first novel. It is seven years later, and Chris and Ellen are having normal marital problems. The general plot is interesting, but the many subplots are distracting and unnecessary. Woiwode's collection of stories Silent Passengers deals, once again, with midwestern family stories. Readers can see many threads of father-son relationships and how they influence other family members.

At his best, Woiwode renders the commonplace with such emotional and psychological truth that all the reader's capacity for empathy and compassion is tapped. Woiwode often demonstrates marvelous descriptive power; at his best, his readers see and feel and learn with him, making easy transfers of their fictional experience to their own lives.

-Paul Marx, updated by Loretta Cobb

WOLFE, Tom

Nationality: American. Born: Thomas Kennerly Wolfe, Jr. in Richmond, Virginia, 2 March 1930. Education: Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia, A.B. (cum laude) 1951; Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, Ph.D. 1957. Family: Married Sheila Berger Wolfe in 1978; one daughter and one son. Career: Reporter, Springfield Union, Massachusetts, 1956-59, Washington Post, 1959-62, and New York, Herald Tribune, 1962-66; writer, New York World Journal Tribune, 1966-67. Awards: American Book award, 1980; Columbia award, for journalism, 1980; National Sculpture Society citation for art history, 1980; John Dos Passos award, 1984; Gari Melchers medal, 1986; Benjamin Pierce Cheney medal, Eastern Washington University, 1986; Washington Irving medal, St. Nicholas Society, 1986; Theodore Roosevelt medal, Theodore Roosevelt Association, 1990; Wilbur Cross medal, Yale Graduate School Alumni Association, 1990; St. Louis Literary award, 1990; Quinnipiac College Presidential award, 1993. D.Litt.: Washington and Lee University, 1974; St. Andrews Presbyterian College, 1990; Johns Hopkins University, 1990; University of Richmond, 1993. Honorary D.F.A: Minneapolis College of Art, 1971; School of Visual Arts, 1987. L.H.D: Virginia Commonwealth University, 1983; Southampton College, 1984; Randolph-Macon College, 1988; Manhattanville College, 1988; Longwood College, 1989. Agent: Lynn Nesbit, Janklow and Nesbit, 598 Madison Avenue, New York, New York 10022, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Bonfire of the Vanities. New York, Farrar Straus, 1987; London, Cape, 1988.

A Man In Full. New York, Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1998.

Uncollected Short Stories

"The Commercial," in Esquire (New York), October 1975.

"2020 A.D.," in Esquire (New York), January 1985.

Plays

Screenplays: Almost Heroes (with Mark Nutter and Boiyd Hale). Warner Brothers, 1998.

Other

The Kandy-Kolored Tangerine Flake Streamline Baby (essays). New York, Farrar Straus, 1965; London, Cape, 1966.

The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test. New York, Farrar Straus, and London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1968.

The Pump House Gang (essays). New York, Farrar Straus, 1968; as The Mid-Atlantic Man and Other New Breeds in England and America, London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1969.

Radical Chic and Mau-Mauing the Flak Catchers. New York, Farrar Straus, 1970; London, Joseph, 1971.

The Painted Word. New York, Farrar Straus, 1975.

Mauve Gloves and Madmen, Clutter and Vine, and Other Stories (essays). New York, Farrar Straus, 1976.

The Right Stuff. New York, Farrar Straus, and London, Cape, 1979. In Our Time (essays). New York, Farrar Straus, 1980.

From Bauhaus to Our House. New York, Farrar Straus, 1981; London, Cape, 1982.

Editor, with E.W. Johnson, The New Journalism. New York, Harper, 1973; London, Pan, 1975.

*

Critical Studies: "Tom Wolfe's Vanities" by Joseph Epstein, in New Criterion (New York), February 1988; Tom Wolfe by William McKeen, New York, Twayne Publishers, 1995.

* * *

In a world concerned with high tech gadgetry, the Internet, and the latest IPO, Tom Wolfe is a true literary superstar. His 1998 novel, A Man in Full, had a first printing of 1.2 million copies and was nominated for the National Book Award a month before it was even released. The subsequent buzz surrounding Wolfe's tale of high society life in Atlanta reached deafening levels and propelled the book to the top of every bestseller list.

But, the inevitable backlash against someone with Wolfe's selling power is intense. In fact, some of America's foremost writers, including John Updike, Norman Mailer, and John Irving, all took Wolfe to task for A Man in Full. Their comments centered on whether Wolfe's work was literature or merely entertainment. For his part, Wolfe responded with his typical acerbic wit, telling the New York Post, "The lead dog is the one they always try to bite in the ass." The literary feud is one that will assuredly be played out for years to come.

Perhaps part of Wolfe's enduring popularity is that he exudes charisma, style, and an inherent coolness that most authors cannot duplicate. He is a master at spotting the next trend or finding the perfect words to describe the big picture and big events, like dubbing the 1970s "The Me Decade." He made his reputation by investigating subjects that have since become part of the national popular culture pantheon, like the acid tripping days of the 1960s and fighter pilots in The Right Stuff.

By the early 1960s, Wolfe was already the most famous journalist of his day and chief proponent of "New Journalism," which held that good reporting should have as much style and flair as a work of fiction. In fact, Wolfe lambasted novelists for studying their own "gullets," instead of tackling the larger issues that make up the grand spectacle of modern life. Decades later, assessing his criticism of the modern novel, Wolfe said, "I said if the novel is to survive, it will have to be a form that will be known as a documentary or journalistic novel, based on deep and heavy reporting. In my humble opinion, I have been absolutely right."

Leaving journalism behind, Wolfe joined the novelists to show them how it should be done. In 1987, he debuted with The Bonfire of the Vanities, a work every bit as wide in scope and weighty in content as some of the heavy-wrought productions against which he had once railed. The book though, represents more an exploitation of the novel form than a homage to it, and, in its hurtling Technicolor progress through a world in which the horrible maxim is "All for one and one for all and lots for oneself!" settled a few unanswered questions about the nature of Wolfe's output.

The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test, upon which his original reputation rested, was not so much reportage as biographical improvisation. While it relied more heavily on historical fact than most novels, and was every jumpy inch as distorted and disjointed as the hallucinogenically-induced experiences it sought to describe.

Ultimately, Wolfe's first novel-length outing was utterly dependent on his own imaginative vibrancy. Valuable not only as an insight into the addled consciousness of fellow experimentalist Ken Kesey, Wolfe's tract remains, in all its fragmentary, speeding glory, the outstanding document of 1960s counterculture. Not only an exploration into the wild lifestyle of Kesey's Merry Pranksters, but a catalogue of the pressures which caused the embryonic hippie movement to self-combust.

Wolfe's writing in subsequent years honed new journalism's thick stew of style and content. The reader is invited to trace the growth of Wolfe's technique and the development of a highly intuitive perceptive gift, whether it is eyeing California's junior surf bums as they chill out on the extra-good vibe of being independent at 14 and living in low-rent garages, journeying through America's carcustomizing shops and small-town racetracks, or cresting the adrenal wave of being very young and hip in swinging London.

During the 1970s, Wolfe's inquisitive ardor seems to have diminished somewhat. Fixing his attention on other areas of criticism,

Wolfe turned in some surprisingly flat period pieces. In Mauve Gloves and Madmen, Clutter and Vine, however, he enjoyed a renaissance. Kicking off with a ritual dismemberment of a major author, and ending with a prophetic tale about the selfishness and ruthlessness of Manhattan cab-hailers, Wolfe roamed, among other things, through a dissertation on one woman's hemorrhoids, the story of a Navy pilot risking his life on a daily basis over North Vietnam, and a genuinely funny piece of short fiction concerning one black athlete's efforts to make a conscionable perfume commercial.

In 1979, entering yet another brain-warping space, Wolfe produced an effortless and enthralling, warts and all history of America's launch into the stars. The Right Stuff, borne out of Wolfe's "ordinary curiosity" remains his best-written and most complete book, consummately encapsulating, in all seriousness, the adventurous spirit of the age. As in previous works, functioning on the intimate level of fraternity tale—Tom, the clever brother, is the wise spectator, while the rest of the gang goes off running and jumping into colorful and phenomenal dangers; in this case, sitting atop a huge stick of dynamite, waiting "for someone to light the fuse." A must for vicarious thrill seekers everywhere (although not as appealing, probably to animal rights activists), The Right Stuff is Wolfe's second absolutely indispensable book—as vital to the social historian as the reader with only the most limited interest in space flight.

The Bonfire of the Vanities, like everything Wolfe has done, seeks to hold up a mirror to contemporary life and shout "There! That's what it's like." Sherman McCoy's noisy descent from a cloud of privilege and wealth into the purgatorial netherworld of New York's criminal justice system is fitting reward for his participation in "the greed storm" of the consumerist 1980s.

Wolfe's incisive political awareness, his desire to penetrate the "thickening democratic façade" is equally as urgent as in his earlier denunciation of white liberal angst Radical Chic (further, his understanding of what makes the underclasses tick is piercing). McCoy, a cartoon-like central character is pitched on a spiraling express ride into the deepest, most decrepit tunnels of urban deprivation, becoming the victim of the startling contrast between what he is capable of possessing and what others cannot hope to touch. McCoy's culpability matters little: it is significant only that he is suitably placed to become a totemic sacrifice in a political game. For this fact alone, Wolfe finally offers him a ragged salvation while damning most everyone else.

A Man in Full is the story of Atlanta real estate magnate Charlie Croker, who has overextended his means building an edge-city tower to himself, "Croker Concourse," that no one wants to rent. Croker stands on the verge of losing everything. The story also intertwines the fates of a blue-collar worker in one of Croker's plants, a black Georgia Tech football star, and plenty of lawyers, bankers, and politicians.

Like all of Wolfe's oeuvre, A Man in Full attacks the 1990s with vigor. Wolfe's satirical eye is fixed on Croker's 29,000-acre quail-hunting plantation, his trophy wife, and vacuous associates. But, throughout the book, the author also tackles race relations, the decline of urban neighborhoods, rap music, and suburban life. In short, Wolfe allows the reader to glimpse the modern world as it exists, both its foibles and triumphs.

Wolfe has held tenure as arbiter of style, master of the idiom, observer and interpreter of signs, symbols, and portents for more than four decades. He is a rare individual who actually laid out a bodacious blueprint for changing modern literature, and then showed us that it could be done through his own masterful works.

Despite the ongoing quarrel with his colleagues, Wolfe must be regarded as one of the top novelists of the twentieth century. It will be interesting to see whether young writers take his advice and move toward journalistic novels. While the book world eagerly anticipates the next big author, it will be difficult for someone to duplicate the success of Wolfe.

-Ian McMechan, updated by Bob Batchelor

WOLFF, Tobias (Jonathan Ansell)

Nationality: American. Born: Birmingham, Alabama, 19 June 1945. Education: Hill School, 1964; Oxford University, B.A. 1972, M.A. 1975; Stanford University, California, M.A. 1977. Military Service: Served in the United States Army, 1964-68: Lieutenant. Family: Married Catherine Dolores Spohn in 1975; two sons and one daughter. Career: Jones Lecturer in creative writing, Stanford University, (Stegner fellow), 1975-78; since 1980 Peck Professor of English, Syracuse University, New York. Awards: National Endowment fellowship, 1978, 1985; Rinehart grant, 1979; O. Henry award, for short story, 1980, 1981, 1985; St. Lawrence award, 1981; Guggenheim fellowship, 1982; PEN/Faulkner award, 1985; Rea award, for short story, 1989; Whiting Foundation award, 1990; Lila Wallace-Reader's Digest award, 1994; Lyndhurst Foundation award, 1994; Esquire-Volvo-Waterstone's award, 1994. Agent: Amanda Urban, International Creative Management, 40 West 57th Street, New York, New York 10019.

PUBLICATIONS

Novel

The Barracks Thief. New York, Ecco Press, 1984; London, Cape, 1987.

Short Stories

In the Garden of the North American Martyrs. New York, Ecco Press, 1981; as Hunters in the Snow, London, Cape, 1982.Back in the World. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1985.The Night in Question: Stories. New York, Knopf, 1996.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "The Other Miller," in The Best American Short Stories 1987, edited by Ann Beattie and Shannon Ravenel. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1987.
- "Smorgasbord," in The Best American Short Stories 1988, edited by Mark Helprin and Shannon Ravenel. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1988.
- "Migraine," in Antaeus (New York), Spring-Autumn, 1990.
- "Sanity," in Atlantic (Boston), December 1990.

Other

Ugly Rumours. London, Allen and Unwin, 1975.This Boy's Life: A Memoir. New York, Atlantic Monthly Press, and London, Bloomsbury, 1989. In Pharaoh's Army: Memories of the Lost War. New York, Knopf, and London, Bloomsbury, 1994.

Editor, Matters of Life and Death: New American Short Stories. Green Harbor, Massachusetts, Wampeter Press, 1983.

Editor, The Short Stories of Anton Chekhov. New York, Bantam, 1987.

Editor, Best American Short Stories, 1994. New York, Houghton Mifflin, 1994.

Editor, The Vintage Book of Contemporary American Short Stories. New York, Vintage, 1994.

Editor, Writers Harvest 3. New York, Dell, 2000.

*

Critical Studies: Stories of Resilience in Childhood: The Narratives of Maya Angelou, Maxine Hong Kingston, Richard Rodrigues, John Edgar Wideman, and Tobias Wolff by Daniel D. Challener, New York, Garland, 1997.

Tobias Wolff comments:

Writers are the worst interpreters of their own work. If their fiction is any good, it should be saying things they weren't aware of.

* * *

Tobias Wolff writes with a sparsity and clarity typical of the voices of the best writers of his generation, realists of the ilk of Raymond Carver, Richard Ford, William Kittredge, Jayne Anne Phillips, Mary Robison, and Stephanie Vaughan, all of whom are represented in Matters of Life and Death, an anthology of contemporary American short stories which Wolff put together in the early 1980s. In explaining his choices, Wolff wrote that in the stories "I heard something that I couldn't ignore, some notes of menace or hope or warning or appeal or awe; and in the matter of the stories themselves, the people who inhabit them and what they do, I saw something that I couldn't look away from."

The same should be said of Wolff's work. Every story, the novella The Barracks Thief, and the memoir This Boy's Life go right to the heart. Nowhere is there a slack page; Wolff writes as if each work were the only one he will every publish. He has admitted in interviews to being a relentless reviser. The Barracks Thief, scarcely a novella, was once a manuscript of several hundred pages. In the stories collected in In the Garden of the North American Martyrs and Back in the World, character development is quick and vivid, background material rare, as if Wolff has always kept clear in his mind Hemingway's axiom that stories get their energy from what is left unsaid. The result is a rather modest output. After fifteen years of publishing, all of Wolff's work could easily be contained in a single volume of 600 pages. But this hypothetical volume would say as much if not more than any other conceivable work about the generation of American men born in the decade after World War II.

The men in Wolff's stories have fathers and uncles who fought and won in the good war; their own war is a squalid and ambiguous affair that went on and on in a very hot place, and the themes of these fictions are deceit, betrayal, failure, and self-loathing, and the queer persistence of fellow-feeling in spite of all of these. Wolff was himself a member of the Special Forces and had a tour of duty in Vietnam. Yet nowhere has he written—not yet, anyway—of combat or his service in Southeast Asia. Instead the war is insinuated, providing the future with menace, or the past with ambivalence and depth. In other words, unconfronted, unobtruded, the Vietnam war remains in Wolff's fiction what it is for most men of his age, noncombatants as well as soldiers, the great shaping force that can never quite be understood, much less expunged. Consequently, many of Wolff's characters seemed surprised who they have become, survivors of a catastrophe who have become dependent on safety. As the narrator of The Barracks Thief puts it:

I didn't set out to be what I am ... I'm a conscientious man, a responsible man, maybe even what you'd call a good man—I hope so. But I'm also a careful man, addicted to comfort, with an eye for the safe course. My neighbors appreciate me because they know I will never give my lawn over to the cultivation of marijuana, or send my wife weeping to their doorsteps at three o'clock in the morning, or expect them to be my friends. I am content with my life most of the time.

Comfort, however, scarcely describes the experience of reading Wolff's fiction. Instead, the reader is made uneasy by characters whose actions, often for the best of motives, lead them into error and excess. In "Hunters in the Snow" Tub and Frank rediscover their friendship while Kenny, bleeding or freezing to death, lies neglected in the back of the pick-up truck. In "Coming Attractions," a sister risks her life trying to get a bicycle out of the deep end of a swimming pool. In "Dessert Breakdown, 1968" a man nearly abandons his wife and children on a whim. And in "The Rich Brother," a man leaves his ineffectual younger brother by the side of a highway in the cold and an almost absolute darkness. Driving all of Wolff's fiction is the dynamism derived from the irreconcilable difference between who we might like to be and who our actions reveal us to be.

In This Boy's Life, an autobiography of his adolescence, Wolff writes "It takes a childish or corrupt imagination to make symbols of other people," and the comment affords an important insight into Wolff's aesthetic and ethical aims. For all of their economy, Wolff's works are never glib or shallow. They are never didactic, and the characters who inhabit them speak and act on their own in settings that are precisely and efficiently conceived. The plots move quickly, and since characters are never arrested and made to stand for something, reading Wolff is a headlong sort of business, wholly free of the artificial and emphatic closures of more ponderous writing. Invariably Wolff leaves the fate of his characters open. This can be exhilarating; however oblique the strike, we feel that we have made contact with the honest sufferings and joys of real people.

—Mark A.R. Facknitz

WRIGHT, Charles (Stevenson)

Nationality: American. Born: New Franklin, Missouri, 4 June 1932. Educated in public schools in New Franklin and Sedalia, Missouri. Military Service: Served in the United States Army, in Korea, 1952–54. Career: Stockboy in St. Louis, late 1950s; then freelance writer: columnist ("Wright's World"), Village Voice, New York. Lives in New York City. Address: c/o Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 19 Union Square West, New York, New York 10003, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Messenger. New York, Farrar Straus, 1963; London, Souvenir Press, 1964.

The Wig: A Mirror Image. New York, Farrar Straus, 1966; London, Souvenir Press, 1967.

Absolutely Nothing to Get Alarmed About. New York, Farrar Straus, 1973

Uncollected Short Stories

- "A New Day," in The Best Short Stories by Negro Writers, edited by Langston Hughes. Boston, Little Brown, 1967.
- "Sonny and the Sailor," in Negro Digest (Chicago), August 1968.
- "Mr. Stein," in Black American Literature Forum (Terre Haute, Indiana), Summer 1989.

*

Charles Wright comments:

(1972) Numbers. One number has always walked through the front door of my mind. But when I was writing my first book, The Messenger, I did not think of numbers. I was very bitter at the time. The Messenger was simply a money roof. I was amused at its success. Mini-popular first published thing. A pleasant dream with the frame of reality.

The Wig was my life. And as I write this on a night of the last week in April of 1971—I have no regrets. Let me explain: A year after the publication of The Messenger I was thinking of that folkloric, second novel, and began a rough draft of a novel about a group of Black men, very much like the Black Panthers. But, in 1963, America was not ready for that type of novel, nor were they ready for The Wig. Ah! That is the first horror hors d'oeuvre. My agent, Candida Donadio, said: "This is a novel. Write it." I will tell you quite simply ... that I was afraid that I could not sustain the thing for say ... fifty pages.

Now it was another year, another country (Morocco). Frightened, I returned to the states and rewrote The Wig in twenty-nine days ... the best days of my life. The basic plot was the same but most of it was new. Thinking, working, like seven and, yes, sometimes fourteen hours a day. It took me less than three hours to make the final changes before the publishers accepted. I was hot ... hot for National Desire ... a short N. West-type of novel very much like The Wig, although Race would not have been the theme.

And.

And. Many things have happened to me and to my country since then. The country has always been like this, I suppose. I only know that something left me. As a result ... I haven't written a novel in six years. I remember Langston Hughes saying: "Write another nice, little book like The Messenger. White folks don't like to know that Negros can write books like that." Ah, yes ... dear, dead Friend. Then. Yes. Another Messenger. And, what follows? Something that I've always wanted to do, something different ... say an action packed Hemingway novel and then say ... a Sackville-West novel. All I've ever wanted was a home by the sea and to be a good writer.

* * *

The literary output of Charles Wright has been slight in volume and promising, but not always effective, in practice. Wright's three small "novels" are each the size of Nathanael West novels, and they reflect the same mordant wit, yearning despair, and surrealistic lunacy of vintage West. Wright's world, however, is essentially a race-twisted society of black grotesques, of crippled lovers and dishwasher poets whose lives of wine, whores, and junkie-songs spell slow murder in white America.

The Messenger, The Wig, and Absolutely Nothing to Get Alarmed About portray an Inferno-world of sexual deviates: prostitutes (male and female), pimps, transvestites, poseurs, flower-children, sadistic cops. We meet not only lovers but pretenders, false black friends who set you up, genteel female perverts, white liberals whose children suddenly snarl "nigger," beloved black musicians who betray their heritage to gain white favor. Each novel centers around the efforts of a young protagonist ("Charles Stevenson" in the first and "Charles Wright" in the third novel) to cope with city life, where literally and metaphorically the protagonists prostitute themselves to survive. Each must dissemble, disguise, and sell himself; each finds the gimmicks and the humbling tricks to hustle an existence.

In The Messenger, which is heavily autobiographical, a young writer, Charles Stevenson (Wright's full name is Charles Stevenson Wright), stumbles to find himself, moving from the South to the army to New York. As a writer, he knows he must feel and record; his literal job as messenger is unimportant compared to his literary obligation to spread the word about life. As a black, however, he is torn between his compassion for outcast blacks and his emotional shield compounded of numbness, indifference, and cynicism. Although the writing occasionally slips into clichés or strained metaphor, style is the novel's chief attraction and is marvelously wedded to content. The writing is terse, the narrator-hero's manner laconic and usually guarded. Most episodes are deliberately inconclusive and undeveloped, sketchy vignettes that affect the narrator more than he acknowledges. Deeply touching are the few pages in which the spiritually exhausted young veteran is united with his warm, righteous grandmother, while his athletic command performance in a southern police station is outrageously comic and brilliantly symbolic of racial debasement.

If The Messenger seems like a patch-quilt of styles and moods, The Wig is more consistent in tone and mood, but regrettably so. For Wright's second novel goes all-out as black comedy, but despite its wildness it is more black, or malicious, than comic. There is a similar gallery of transvestites and other disguise-wearing freaks in quest of identity without guilt, failure, or self-hatred, but they are portrayed without hope or compassion. The hero, Lester Jefferson, is, like all the other blacks, on the make: he has conked and curled his Afro hair into a beautiful white "wig" that will open the doors to the Great (White) Society. Alas, he doesn't make it but we are not even sorry, for neither he nor the author reaches Ellison's solution that "visibility" begins with confronting and accepting one's truly created self. There are two or three successful comic achievements: Jimmy Wishbone, who once "kept 100 million colored people contented for years" as a Stepin Fetchit type in movies and who now wants to sue white society and redeem his lost fleet of Cadillacs; and Lester himself, crawling the streets in a feathery chicken-suit as employee of the Southern Fried Chicken King.

The last exchange of dialogue in The Messenger goes: "'Charles, what's wrong?' 'Nothing,' I said. 'Absolutely nothing.'" Wright's latest novelistic autobiography, Absolutely Nothing to Get Alarmed About, picks up from its predecessor's conclusion, although the locale has moved from mid-Manhattan to the Lower East Side. The mood if more uniformly despairing, with only a few attempts at the pathos and yearning of The Messenger or the caustic hilarity of The Wig. In place of the homosexual-junkie nightmare world of The Messenger, Wright's metaphor of our foundering American culture is here the yellowblack-white world of the Bowery. Appropriate to their original publication in New York's Village Voice, many chapters echo the vivid tone and the felt immediacy of "new journalism" prose.

-Frank Campenni

WURLITZER, Rudolph

Nationality: American. Born: 1937. Awards: Atlantic Firsts award, 1966. Address: c/o Knopf Inc., 201 East 50th Street, New York, New York 10022, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Nog. New York, Random House, 1969; as The Octopus, London, Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1969.

Flats. New York, Dutton, 1970; London, Gollancz, 1971.

Quake. New York, Dutton, 1972; London, Pan, 1985.

Slow Fade. New York, Knopf, 1984; London, Pan, 1985.

Walker (novelization of screenplay). New York, Perennial Library, 1987.

Uncollected Short Story

"Boiler Room," in Atlantic (Boston), March 1966.

Plays

Two-Lane Blacktop (screenplay), with Will Corry. New York, Award, 1971.

Screenplays: Two-Lane Blacktop, with Will Corry, 1971; Glen and Randa, with Lorenzo Mans and Jim McBride, 1971; Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid, 1973; Walker, 1989; Voyager, 1991.

Other

Hard Travel to Sacred Places. Boston, Shambhala, 1994.

*

Critical Studies: Rudolph Wurlitzer, American Novelist and Screenwriter by David Seed, Lewiston, New York, Mellen Press, 1991.

Theatrical Activities: Actor: Films—Two-Lane Blacktop, 1971; Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid, 1973.

* * *

Rudolph Wurlitzer's novels represent a determined attempt to escape the materials of narrative. Unwilling to suspend disbelief and create a representative world of people, places, and ideals, he discards the conventions of mimetic storytelling in favor of a flat-out style of direct address which in his later novels slowly modulates into a more naturalized manner, yet never one that attempts to counterfeit a world. Instead, Wurlitzer's later work draws upon certain artifices of conduct which by virtue of long use have a structure which appears to be naturally made. In either case, the novelist is excused from proposing an enabling structure for his work; from first to last, Wurlitzer's novels speak with their own sense of authority, pretending to be nothing other than they are.

Nog and Flats are alternately diverse and spare works which rely upon the narrator's direct address for their substance and direction. Mirror-images of the same artistic vision, these novels contrast wild geographic narrative with a Beckett-like stasis of character, mood, and location, yet each ending with the same sense of voice alone. Even coherent character yields to this presence of mere voice, since in the first work Wurlitzer's narrator sometimes talks about Nog as a distinct person ("Nog, he was apparently of Finnish extraction, was one of those semi-religious lunatics you see wandering around the Sierras on bread and tea, or gulping down peyote in Nevada with the Indians'') and other times speaks as Nog himself, while the narrator of Flats proposes a similar exchange of identities with a person he has met and has been describing. The effect of such shimmering exchanges is to efface any sense of represented identity, establishing the narrative voice as a pure speaking sound which draws its sense of character from what is being described. In Nog this iridescence becomes geographical, as the narrator's voice yields to the onrunning panorama of place, from the desert American southwest, through the Pacific and the Panama Canal, to the eastern seaboard and New York City. Flats presents the precise opposite of this range, but not of this tendency: the narrator sits within a small square of wasteland, vocally defending his space against all interlopers. He and they are named by their apparent home towns—"Call me Memphis," he introduces himself-but in their little square of desert they are motionless and without any identities all the same. All that exists is their voice, which is the text of Wurlitzer's novel.

Thematically, Wurlitzer argues against representation as well. Nog prizes silence and is proud not to divulge information to other characters (and therefore to the reader): "No history," he remarks, "therefore no bondage." Rather than act, he makes lists, because "Lists don't need direction." Flats elevates this theme to phenomenological proportion, refusing to grasp events lest their surface take shape. "I don't care to look around, having disappeared in all directions," the narrator admits, refusing any identity at all. "There is only my momentum," which is the text's own movement. And even this is reductive: "I want to say the same words over and over. I want just the sound. I want to fill up what space I am with one note ... I want a sound that is not involved with beginning or ending." Wurlitzer's subsequent novels, Quake and Slow Fade, maintain their author's spare sense of prose, but now a textually self-conscious situation relieves the burden of flat narration. In Quake it is an earth tremor which by devastating the landscape erases any sense of conventional continuity; as the artifices of normal behavior crumble, the narrator is free to establish his own voice as the sole reality of his story. "The words around us blurred and carried no definition," and so his voice is the only anchor of authority. Yet the unreality unleashed by the earthquake is only a destruction of conventionality; what is now revealed is that "this day has given expression to what has always been latent within us." By the novel's end the narrator is reduced to guttural sounds, his own ability to articulate having been destroyed with the world around him. Yet even before this it has proven to be a talent whose time has been eclipsed.

Slow Fade is ostensibly Wurlitzer's most conventional work, as it is set securely within a recognizable world and is peopled by characters whose consistency of motive and behavior qualifies them for the most realistic fiction. But as with Quake, the author's choice of circumstance allows for purely self-conscious narrative, since here the action involves scriptwriting and filming, two undertakings which lend a textual self-appearance to the novel. As the stories of film director Wesley Hardin, his children, and his intrusive entrepreneur evolve, the narrative becomes less a document of their lives than a series of filters and indirect analyses, as events are perceived not as themselves but with references to scenes in films. This sense of intertextuality is enhanced by Wes's desire to learn the fate of his daughter, which he pursues by paying his son to write a film script which fictionalizes the details yet encodes the answer to his question. Yet as his son writes the script, he pauses to question his father about their relationship and to sort out the memory of his own wife's life and death. Soon so many layers of textuality have been sedimented upon the basic story that only text (and not any representations) remain. The climax of this layering occurs when Wes Hardin aborts his own film project and becomes the subject of a cinema-verité work encompassing his own breakdown as occasioned by his daughter's loss. In this respect the role of the entrepreneur A.D. Ballou, becomes instrumental. What happens in the world, Wurlitzer concludes, is due to direct action but by the manipulation of texts. As A.D. Ballou produces Hardin's autobiographical movie, so too does the reader produce the narrators' texts. Without either act, nothing would happen, and therefore Wurlitzer's novels place as little as possible in the way of this readerly action.

With Walker, Wurlitzer combines his novelist's role with his screenwriting activities to produce a work far different from the usual novelization of a film. The story itself is based on history, evoking the colorful career of the mid-nineteenth-century American adventurer William Walker as a way of providing not just a colorful narrative about Nicaragua during those years but a metaphoric commentary on American involvement in that country during the 1980s. Walker was a freebooting entrepreneur who made use of the business interests of Cornelius Vanderbilt in installing himself as President of Nicaragua, a position he held from 1855 through 1857. That his empire fell and he was eventually executed by a Honduran firing squad does not detract from his sense of ambition and idealism, tempered by the current reader's appreciation that such motives have often led to disasters in American foreign policy and the most unconscionable exploitation of foreign lands. In presenting this work Wurlitzer provides a fictive narrative, but supplements it with both historical and Walker's autobiographical accounts; these are then framed with shooting notes, production journals, and interviews with the filmmakers.

-Jerome Klinkowitz

YAFFE, James

Nationality: American. Born: Chicago, Illinois, 31 March 1927. Education: Fieldston School, graduated 1944; Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, 1944–48, B.A. (summa cum laude) 1948 (Phi Beta Kappa). Military Service: Served in the United States Navy, 1945–46. Family: Married Elaine Gordon in 1964; two daughters and one son. Career: Since 1968 member of the Department of English, currently professor of English, and since 1981 Director of General Studies, Colorado College, Colorado Springs. Awards: National Endowment for the Arts award, for drama, 1968. Address: 1215 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Good-for-Nothing. Boston, Little Brown, and London, Constable, 1953.

What's the Big Hurry? Boston, Little Brown, 1954; as Angry Uncle Dan, London, Constable, 1955.

Nothing But the Night. Boston, Little Brown, 1957; London, Cape, 1958.

Mister Margolies. New York, Random House, 1962.

Nobody Does You Any Favors. New York, Putnam, 1966.

The Voyage of the Franz Joseph. New York, Putnam, 1970.

Saul and Morris, Worlds Apart. New York, Holt Rinehart, 1982.

A Nice Murder for Mom. New York, St. Martin's Press, 1988.

Mom Meets Her Maker. New York, St. Martin's Press, 1990.

Mom Doth Murder Sleep. New York, St. Martin's Press, 1991.

Mom Among the Liars. New York, St. Martin's Press, 1993.

Short Stories

Poor Cousin Evelyn. Boston, Little Brown, 1951; London, Constable, 1952

My Mother, the Detective: The Complete "Mom" Short Stories. Norfolk, Virginia, Crippen and Landru Publishers, 1997.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "On the Brink," in The Queen's Awards 8, edited by Ellery Queen. Boston, Little Brown, and London, Gollancz, 1953.
- "One of the Family," in The Queen's Awards 11, edited by Ellery Queen. New York, Simon and Schuster, and London, Collins, 1956.
- "The Problem of the Emperor's Mushrooms," in All But Impossible!, edited by Edward D. Hoch. New Haven, Connecticut, Ticknor and Fields, 1981; London, Hale, 1983.
- "D.I.C. (Department of Impossible Crimes)," in Ellery Queen's Book of First Appearances, edited by Ellery Queen and Eleanor Sullivan, New York, Dial Press, 1982.

Plays

The Deadly Game, adaptation of a novel by Friedrich Dürrenmatt (produced New York, 1960; London, 1967). New York, Dramatists Play Service, 1960.

This Year's Genie (for children), in Eight Plays 2, edited by Malcolm Stuart Fellows. London, Cassell, 1965.

Ivory Tower, with Jerome Weidman (produced Ann Arbor, Michigan, 1968). New York, Dramatists Play Service, 1969.

Cliffhanger (as Immorality Play, produced Atlanta, 1983; as Cliffhanger, produced New York, 1985). New York, Dramatists Play Service, 1985.

Television Plays: for U.S. Steel Hour, Studio One, G.E. Theater, Frontiers of Faith, The Defenders, Breaking Point, Alfred Hitchcock Presents, The Doctors and the Nurses, and other series, 1953–67

Other

The American Jews. New York, Random House, 1968.So Sue Me! The Story of a Community Court. New York, Saturday Review Press, 1972.

*

James Yaffe comments:

(1991) For me, to write novels has been to create characters and to combine and juxtapose those characters, involve them in confrontations, place them in situations which challenge them, strengthen them, destroy them, transform them, test their mettle—and out of a variety of such characters, to build a world. Where do I get the raw material for my characters? From my own experience, of course—mostly from my experience of the world I was born and brought up in, the world of middle-class, second- and third-generation Jews living in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, I have chosen to write about this world because I know it instinctively and subliminally, because it was part of me before I was old enough to doubt my perceptions.

But I have always tried to treat this experience not analytically or sociologically or philosophically but novelistically—that is, by imagining, and trying to re-create, the world as seen through each character's eyes. The greatest novelists, it seems to me, are those who succeed in merging their personalities with the lives and feelings of their people. This is the special ability shared by writers as different as Tolstoy and Jane Austen, Trollope and Joyce (to mention a few of my favorites). The attempt to follow their example may be presumptuous and doomed to failure, but it is also inevitable for anybody who wants to write novels.

* * *

James Yaffe is considered a leading novelist of middle-class Jewish life in America. His early collection of short stories (Poor Cousin Evelyn) and his first novel (The Good-for-Nothing) are essentially drawing room comedies set in New York. As in the novels of Jane Austen, whom Yaffe admits a special fondness for, small conflicts are closely scrutinized within a closed society—in Yaffe's case, the Jewish family, with all its attendant social hierarchies, its patriarchs, its strong-men and its failures, its pressures of shame and guilt applied by loved ones to safeguard conformity and tradition. In these earlier works, characters are simply drawn and situations directly presented, largely through dialogue.

A recurring Yaffe theme involves the "dreamer," an impractical or artistically oriented individual confronted with pressures to survive in a competitive business world of the shady deals and opportunism. In The Good-for-Nothing this conflict is represented by two brothers, apparently very different from each other, yet mutually dependent. The one is college-educated and totally ineffectual in the business world, a charming sycophant. The other, a Certified Public Accountant, supports him, but in so doing restricts his own life. As they interact, it becomes unclear which is the "good for nothing," which the success or the failure: in different ways, both are unwilling to face responsibilities or the possibility of failure. Self-righteousness and self-indulgence, like sentimentality, are both forms of escape, excuses for not taking risks.

In a later novel, Mister Margolies, this pattern of self-deception is advanced to the point where the manipulation of reality becomes a life-style. Stanley Margolies, defeated in his early attempt to become a concert pianist, yet unable to give up totally his dreams of a poetic life, withdraws into a world of fantasies. The reality of business and competition crashes in on this, and he withdraws deeper, erecting more elaborate defenses. Yaffe's "dreamers" create worlds which are both sad and poetic, but they are not the demonic Rose-gardens of the totally mad. They are the tiny fantasies of little men, dreams reinforced by sympathetic and condescending friends with whom they still retain some form of contact.

Yaffe avoids several stereotypes popular in much contemporary Jewish literature: the dominant Jewish Mother, and the Jew-Gentile confrontation, particularly in matters sexual, as an expression of, or as a means of resolving feelings of inferiority. In general, he maintains a comic narrative tone—some of the scenes are funny—and though his characters are forever lecturing each other, their messages are frequently as confused as they are. The novels themselves preach little other than a deep compassion for the small man and his hopes.

The theme of the dreamer in search of his vision makes a terrifying appearance in Nothing But the Night, which is based on the Nathan Leopold-Richard Loeb murder case of 1924, and the celebrated defense by Clarence Darrow. The case history is seen through the eyes of one of the young men, not as an investigation of the criminal mind, but as a study of a lonely and creative child. As in Chekhov, Yaffe's characters take their emotions very seriously and ponder them deeply. They are often trapped by their own visions and the pressures to succeed imposed from outside. In their struggle to hold on to their dreams, they are destroyed, transformed, and occasionally liberated. An example of the latter is presented in Nobody Does You Any Favors, which despite its 1940s cinema-sounding title is perhaps his best novel. As opposed to the earlier New York novels which suggest short stories in their structural focus on a single event, Nobody Does You Any Favors with its time span of roughly forty years allows for an extended development and growth in character. The confrontation between father and son is drawn with an understanding and passion valid beyond a scene of very special terror and insight. Certainly this novel is a significant contribution to American literature of the twentieth century.

The Voyage of the Franz Joseph represented an epic departure from his usual drawing room style. Like Nothing But the Night, it is based on an historical event, the sailing of the German liner St. Louis in 1939 with a thousand Jewish refugees searching for a homeland.

-Paul Seiko Chihara

YAMANAKA, Lois-Ann

Nationality: American. Born: Ho'olchua, Molokai, Hawaii, 7 September 1961. Education: University of Hawaii at Manoa, B.Ed. 1983, M.Ed. 1987. Family: Married—husband's name John; one son. Career: Language arts resource teacher and English teacher, Hawaii Department of Education; writer. Lives in Honolulu, Hawaii. Awards: Pushcart prize, 1993; Elliot Cades award for literature, 1993; Asian American Studies National Book award, 1994 (prize revoked); Pushcart Prize, 1994; Rona Jaffe award for women writers, 1996.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Wild Meat and the Bully Burgers. New York, Farrar, Straus, 1996. Blu's Hanging. New York, Farrar, Straus, 1997. Heads by Harry. New York, Farrar, Straus, 1999. Name Me Nobody (juvenile fiction). New York, Hyperion, 1999.

Short Stories

Saturday Night at the Pahala Theatre (verse novellas). Honolulu, Hawaii, Bamboo Ridge Press, 1993.

Other

Contributor, Transnational Asia Pacific: Gender, Culture, and the Public Sphere, edited by Shirley Geok-lin Lim, Larry E. Smith, and Wimal Dissanayake. Urbana, University of Illinois Press, 1999.

* * *

Lois-Ann Yamanaka's writing is uncontrovertibly controversial. She did not set out to be controversial; indeed, she didn't even set out to be a writer. It was while Yamanaka was working as a schoolteacher in her native Hawaii that she observed her students writing poetry, and realized that she, too, was capable of creative writing. After returning to the University of Hawaii to study writing, Yamanaka has gone on to become one of that state's best known novelists, as well as a vocal proponent of Hawaiian Creole English, the pidgin spoken by many of the islands' working-class residents and in which Yamanaka often writes. This dialect is a combination of English, Japanese, and Philippine, and as a teacher Yamanaka was warned against using it in the working-class school in which she taught. As a writer she found her first collection, Saturday Night at the Pahala Theatre, banned by the Hawaii school system.

This attempt to suppress and assimilate minority cultures is precisely what Yamanaka is writing against in her novels. The descendant of Japanese agricultural workers and the daughter of educators, she grew up in the sugar-plantation town of Pahala, where pidgin was her native tongue. The sense of alienation and difference she felt from predominantly white, mainstream urban culture and its values has become the nucleus of much of her fiction. Her first collection, Saturday Night at the Pahala Theatre, explores that sense of difference through poetic narratives, critiquing race and gender relations in small-town Hawaii, while affirming the linguistic power of pidgin to do so. Awarded the Association for Asian American Studies National Book award, the Elliot Cades award for literature, and a Pushcart prize, the book more importantly reflected the lives of a segment of the Hawaiian population predominantly absent in the mainstream, the working-class Japanese segment from which Yamanaka hails. For Yamanaka, writing about a world erased in popular representations of Hawaii, and in the language of that world, is a fundamentally political act.

It is this close-knit Japanese world that Yamanaka has continued to explore in her adult novels to date, a loosely woven trilogy about coming of age in contemporary Hawaii. Wild Meat and the Bully Burgers inaugurates this triptych with the story of young Lovey Nariyoshi, whose desire for blond hair is just one of the many examples of her internalization of mainstream society's privileging of white middle-class culture. Set in 1970s rural Hilo, Lovey's reality does not mirror the conformist suburban fantasy of which she dreams. Instead, her family is poor and eccentric, in addition to being culturally marginalized. Her sense of cultural alienation is reinforced by schoolteachers who disparage her dialect and culture, classifying Lovey as slow. Through a series of vignettes, we witness Lovey's struggle, alternately comic and poignant, to establish a sense of selfworth as she moves into adolescence. That Yamanaka has written this story in pidgin is the final vindication of Lovey and the world she represents.

Yamanaka's second novel, Blu's Hanging, is admittedly the bleakest of the trio. After the death of their mother, three siblings attempt to negotiate an unremittingly severe world of poverty, violence, racism, and exploitation. As their father struggles to make ends meet, twelve-year old Ivah attempts to assume her mother's responsibilities, but can not provide the kinds of love and support necessary for her younger siblings or herself. While the children's energy is unavoidably infectious, their particular vulnerability is equally obvious, and the brother, Blu, is raped by a neighbor, just as Ivah is preparing to leave the family to attend boarding school. The children's father reads this departure as a form of betrayal and abandonment, and initially blames Ivah for her brother's victimization. Both the rape and its fallout are crucial for scholars of Yamanaka. The tension between Ivah and her father stemming from the rape is indicative of a thematic preoccupation in Yamanaka's works with Japanese-American father-daughter relations. In her work, Yamanaka often explores the emotional distancing, elisions, and reticence—as well as the moments of revelation and understanding-that characterize this particular familial bond.

However, the rape of Blu in Blu's Hanging is important not only for its fallout, or relevance to the narrative, but also for the political upheaval that resulted in regards to Yamanaka's work and literary reputation. That Blu is raped by a Filipino neighbor, Uncle Paulo, led to charges of racism that ultimately resulted in the Association for Asian American Studies revoking the fiction prize it had awarded the book—both acts occurring on the same day. Yamanaka's previous publications also came under fire, particularly a piece in Saturday Night at the Pahala Theatre where a youngster recounts being warned about Filipinos practicing cannibalism. While the passage appears ironic in context—there is also a warning that if you borrow someone's deodorant, you might catch their body order, or if you make faces you will get Japanese eyes—out of context, and with the history of Filipino-Japanese tension in Hawaii, it appears problematic. Likewise, that Uncle Paulo is the representative Filipino in the text, and not a fully developed character, is also troublesome. However, Uncle Paulo is not the only deviant adult in the novel, and the others are all Japanese. It is even rumored, according to Ivah, that his family hides their part Japanese heritage. Nevertheless, the passionate controversy ignited by the AAAS award and the decision to revoke it is very real, and it remains to be seen if or how Yamanaka will respond in her future writing.

Blu's Hanging was followed by the lighter and less controversial Heads by Harry, the last in Yamanaka's Hawaiian coming-of-age trilogy. In this novel her protagonists are older, and even reach adulthood, but still belong to the tight-knit family unit whose dynamics Yamanaka loves to explore and expose in her writing. The Yagyuus are uproarious in their eccentricities and antics, but genuine in their love for each other, which remains constant despite their individual attempts to achieve independence. The father-daughter relationship is again investigated through the eldest daughter, Toni, and the father whose taxidermy business she will inherit, as the only son—the flamboyant Sheldon—has chosen to open up a hair salon. Despite the family's propensity to misadventures, Yamanaka endows Toni, Sheldon, and the manipulative favorite, Bunny, with a sense of dignity and individuality that allows them to transcend easy categorization or stereotypes. Sheldon may be a gay hairdresser, but he is also an entrepreneur whose love of his family causes him to remain in Hilo and set up shop next door to his father's business. Nor is he a "token" character in Yamanaka's fiction; indeed, butch girl cousins and friends abound, and are central to the narrative of her 1999 children's novel, Name Me Nobody, which explores racism, poverty, discrimination, and sexuality with the same unflinching gaze as her adult novels.

In addition to her novels for adults and children, Yamanaka's works Saturday Night at the Pahala Theatre and Wild Meat and the Bully Burgers have both been produced as plays by Kuma Kahua. Yamanaka has weathered all criticism well, and remains committed to the use of pidgin and the importance of continuing to write about the experiences of her community, while insisting on the necessity of remaining true to the integrity of the characters and their experience, no matter how unpopular that experience may be.

-Jennifer Harris

YGLESIAS, Helen

Nationality: American. Born: Helen Bassine in New York City, 29 March 1915. Family: Married 1) Bernard Cole in 1938 (divorced 1950), one son and one daughter; 2) Jose Yglesias in 1950 (divorced 1992, deceased 1995); one son. Career: Literary editor, the Nation, New York, 1965–69; Visiting Professor, Columbia University School of the Arts, New York, 1973, and University of Iowa Writers Workshop, Iowa City, 1980. Awards: Houghton Mifflin Literary fellowship, 1972. LHD: University of Maine, 1996. Address: 123 W. 13th Street, No. 311, New York, New York 10011–7801, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

How She Died. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1972; London, Heinemann, 1973.

Family Feeling. New York, Dial Press, 1976; London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1977.

Sweetsir. New York, Simon and Schuster, and London, Hodder and Stoughton, 1981.

The Saviors. Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1987.

The Girls. Harrison, New York, Delphinium Books, 1999.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "Semi-Private," in New Yorker, 5 February 1972.
- "Kaddish and Other Matters," in New Yorker, 6 May 1974.
- "Liar, Liar," in Seventeen (New York), February 1976.

Other

Starting: Early, Anew, Over, and Late. New York, Rawson Wade, 1978.

Isabel Bishop. New York, Rizzoli, 1989.

* * *

The novels of Helen Yglesias were written from her 54th year onwards. As she notes in her book of meditations, Starting: Early, Anew, Over, and Late, she had already had an active career of book reviewing and editorial work; she was for a time the literary editor of the Nation. Yglesias's account of her career and of the careers of other men and women in Starting shows that a recurrent pattern in her novels is an expression of her own sense of what a proper career for a person is. Each person has, as the many conversations with others in Starting shows, the opportunity to discover his or her "true self" and initiate actions that allow that self to unfold. Or, alternately, to turn aside and spend the years in conformity to the expectations of a group and thus court defeat and stultification. As Yglesias asks in the Introduction to Starting: "Is there 'a true self'? Does it indeed exist and does its existence matter? Is there measurable damage in human and social terms when an impostor inhabits the corner of space and time reserved for a unique self—whatever that is? To do what one has always wanted to do-to be what one has always wanted to be-what does that mean?"

In the body of her book Yglesias devotes space to her own life as a young Jewish intellectual bucking the waves of indifference she met in the 1930s; it is a story that is repeated in her second novel, Family Feeling. She also relates the "starting" of her son, the novelist Rafael Yglesias, who, in his mid-teens, withdrew from society to realize his artistic destiny. And Yglesias moves on to many others whose diverse destinies are marked by the urgent questioning she directed at her own life. With a sort of modesty she remarks of herself: "I admit to a vast general ignorance of things physical, technological, mythical, religious, and political-social." Such remarks indicate the drive behind the novels, and they also suggest the areas that are left for other novelists to handle. The Yglesias novels are tales of struggle: chiefly female struggle in a society that imposes on such struggle a terminology invented by males. Yglesias is a connoisseur of the successes and failures that women like her heroines—and one supposes, herself—meet. These struggles are often well realized and convince not so much by their general truth as by the mass of detail that is clustering at center-stage. This gives the novels an effect of conviction that cannot be overlooked. Occasionally Yglesias abandons this area for theoretical speculation; she endows a heroine with her own former or present political loyalties and her own esthetic preferences, and the novels become temporarily less vivid. But the textures that are impelling are soon re-established.

Family Feeling is the novel that is a rough equivalent (and a successful one) to the story Yglesias tells in the opening section of Starting. Sweetsir is a negative version of the successful struggles in Family Feeling; the efforts of the heroine of Sweetsir commence and recommence but never move very far from the point where the repeated departures take place: the heroine's desire to be something, to realize in the relations of love some amorphous inner power that the heroine senses but cannot express. In contrast, the heroine of Family Feeling has an abundance of words to apply to each twist and turn of her journey. Yglesias's first novel, How She Died, is an account of a woman whose "starting" and its consequences lie somewhere between the distinct success and the grim failures related in the other two novels. The heroine of How She Died, Jean, devotes herself to a dying woman, has a love-affair with the woman's husband, neglects her own children, and realizes that her political ardor has brought her little reason for pride.

The other two novels, as suggested, are more decisive in their impact. Family Feeling reproduces the complex history of an immigrant Jewish family: a family that starts in poverty and that ends—for some of the members at least—in considerable prosperity and personal satisfaction. Barry Goddard is a son who ends as the owner of vast enterprises and an apartment that overlooks Central Park. Anne, whose intelligence is usually (but not always) the center of the story, follows a different course, one which leads her through social protest, literary projects that occasionally distract the reader, and finally to several years of a happy marriage with a WASP magazine editor who finds the Jewishness of Anne's family a constant diversion. The main concern of the moving narrative is not the social and personal goods that various characters grasp; it is the panorama of endless struggle—of "starting" and then achieving a continuation that is sometimes wasteful and sometimes admirable.

Such continuations do not appear in Sweetsir. This long and minutely executed novel, in which many pages are devoted to the details of legal procedures, begins with a domestic battle between Sally and Morgan Sweetsir, a battle that ends when Sally pushes a knife into the body of her brutal husband. Attention thus engages, the reader is conducted through the considerable number of years that brought Sally Sweetsir to her fatal confrontation. If one chooses to wonder why Sally's many "startings" go nowhere in particular, answers arise again and again. Sally comes from a lower-class milieu where there is no such tradition of struggle and survival as that which gave strength to Anne Goddard in Family Feeling. Sally has almost no words to put to her desires, the desires that take her through two marriages and into the law courts. And she lacks the intelligence to direct the sexuality and the ambition that come and go in her. And quite beyond her control are the crudity and insensitivity of the two males in her life. It is no surprise that in Sally's "world" (as assembled by Yglesias) Sally does not have to pay a social penalty for her "crime." Her long list of failures to "start" constitutes a sufficient punishment.

Yglesias describes her novel writing as "a happiness I could only liken to the happiness of love." Such happiness is open to the reader in long stretches of Family Feeling. And its absence is keenly felt elsewhere in the work of Yglesias.

-Harold H. Watts

YOUNG, Al(bert) (James)

Nationality: American. Born: Ocean Springs, Mississippi, 31 May 1939. Education: The University of Michigan, Ann Arbor (co-editor, Generation magazine), 1957-61; Stanford University, California (Stegner Creative Writing fellow), 1966–67; University of California, Berkeley, A.B. in Spanish 1969. Family: Married Arline June Belch in 1963; one son. Career: Freelance musician, 1958–64; disc jockey, KJAZ-FM, Alameda, California, 1961-65; instructor and linguistic consultant, San Francisco Neighborhood Youth Corps Writing Workshop, 1968-69; writing instructor, San Francisco Museum of Art Teenage Workshop, 1968-69; Jones Lecturer in creative writing, Stanford University, 1969–74; screenwriter, Laser Films, New York, 1972, Stigwood Corporation, London and New York, 1972, Verdon Productions, Hollywood, 1976, First Artists Ltd., Burbank, California, 1976–77, and Universal, Hollywood, 1979; writer-in-residence, University of Washington, Seattle, 1981–82. Since 1979 director, Associated Writing Programs. Founding editor, Loveletter, San Francisco, 1966-68. Since 1972 co-editor, Yardbird Reader, Berkeley, California; contributing editor, since 1972, Changes, New York, and since 1973, Umoja, New Mexico; since 1981 editor and publisher, with Ishmael Reed, Quilt magazine, Berkeley; vice-president, Yardbird Publishing Cooperative. Awards: National Endowment for the Arts grant, 1968, 1969, 1974; San Francisco Foundation Joseph Henry Jackson award, 1969; Guggenheim fellowship, 1974; Pushcart prize, 1980; Before Columbus Foundation award, 1982. Agent: International Creative Management, 40 West 57th Street, New York, New York 10019. Address: 514 Bryant St., Palo Alto, California 94301, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

Snakes. New York, Holt Rinehart, 1970; London, Sidgwick and Jackson, 1971.

Who Is Angelina? New York, Holt Rinehart, 1975; London, Sidgwick and Jackson, 1978.

Sitting Pretty. New York, Holt Rinehart, 1976.

Ask Me Now. New York, McGraw Hill, and London, Sidgwick and Jackson, 1980.

Seduction by Light. New York, Delta, 1988; London, Mandarin, 1989.

Straight No Chaser. Berkeley, California, Creative Arts Book, 1994.

Uncollected Short Stories

- "My Old Buddy Shakes, Alas, and Grandmama Claude," in Nexus (San Francisco), May-June 1965.
- "The Question Man and Why I Dropped Out," in Nexus (San Francisco), November-December 1965.

- "Chicken Hawk's Dream," in Stanford Short Stories 1968, edited by Wallace Stegner and Richard Scowcroft. Stanford, California, Stanford University Press, 1968.
- "Moon Watching by Lake Chapala," in Aldebaran Review 3 (Berkeley, California), 1968.

Plays

Screenplays: Nigger, 1972; Sparkle, 1972.

Poetry

Dancing. New York, Corinth, 1969.

The Song Turning Back into Itself. New York, Holt Rinehart, 1971.Some Recent Fiction. San Francisco, San Francisco Book Company, 1974.

Geography of the Near Past. New York, Holt Rinehart, 1976.

The Blues Don't Change: New and Selected Poems. Baton Rouge, Louisiana State University Press, 1982.

Heaven: Collected Poems 1958–1988. Berkeley, California, Creative Arts, 1989.

Heaven: Collected Poems 1956–1990. Berkeley, California, Creative Arts, 1992.

Recording: By Heart and by Ear, Watershed, 1986.

Other

Bodies and Soul: Musical Memoirs. Berkeley, California, Creative Arts, 1981.

Kinds of Blue: Musical Memoirs. Berkeley, California, Creative Arts, 1984.

Things Ain't What They Used to Be: Musical Memoirs. Berkeley, California, Creative Arts, 1987.

Mingus/Mingus: Two Memoirs, with Janet Coleman. Berkeley, California, Creative Arts, 1989.

Drowning in the Sea of Love: Musical Memoirs. Hopewell, New Jersey, Ecco Press, 1995.

Editor, with Ishmael Reed, Yardbird Lives! New York, Grove Press, 1978.

Editor, with Ishmael Reed, Quilt 2–3. Berkeley, California, Reed and Young's Quilt, 2 vols., 1981–82.

Editor, African American Literature: A Brief Introduction and Anthology. New York, HarperCollins College Publishers, 1996.

* * *

In his story "Chicken Hawk's Dream" Al Young tells of a young man who believes that as magically as in a dream he might become a jazz artist. Failing to bring even a sound out of a borrowed horn, Chicken Hawk retreats into dope and alcohol, but his delusion persists so that when the narrator meets him later on a Detroit street corner Chicken Hawk says that he is off to New York to cut a record—just as soon as he gets his instrument out of the pawnshop. The dream of Chicken Hawk with its refusal of discipline and lack of nerve represents a version of what Young terms "art as hustle." It is not titillation, he says in a "Statement on Aesthetics, Poetics, Kinetics" (in New Black Voices, 1972), but the touching of human beings so that both toucher and touched are changed that matters most in art as in life. Touch may be magical but before all else it is the sign of willingness to engage actual life.

Through the metaphor of touch and repudiation of attitudinizing Young explains most of his literary practice. His novels gain much of their force from his ability to limn the texture of experience. Precise detailing of speech demonstrates how individuals play roles uniquely significant to those with whom they have personal relationships, including readers; and ways of seeing, talking, becoming, in short, ways of expressing the feel of life's touch, engender the books' movement.

In his first novel, Snakes, Young infuses the traditional narrative of adolescent growth with a principle of fluidity affecting every aspect of structure, style, and theme. MC, whose journey to maturity is the story's subject, gets turned on to modern jazz, an art of process which illustrates that personality itself may derive from music. Stylistically the book is largely constructed out of raps, oral performances by MC's friends, and reminiscences of his grandmother. The first concur with the performance of improvisational music to convey the importance of expressive response; the latter carry process into biographical temporality where memory of past events maintains influence in the present. Style and structure together support Young's theme of the struggle to be free, outlined in MC's thoughts on a bus to New York where he, unlike Chicken Hawk, will cut a record: "For the first time in my life I don't feel trapped; I don't feel free either but I don't feel trapped and I'm going to try and make this feeling last for as long as I can."

Who Is Angelina? picks up Young's theme in the story of a young woman who must regain the sense of not being trapped. In one answer to the question posed by the title, Angelina finds herself, in the words of a Pepsi-drinking fortune teller, poised between freedom to choose what she wishes and weaknesses which hold her back. A return to roots among family and neighborhood renews a sense of love for origins in Angelina but also demonstrates that she has no choice but to accept her distinct individuality; and to make the best of it, she must learn to move with awareness through her own becoming. Young allows Angelina to try transcendental meditation as a means of renewal, but her crucial realization of self occurs as it must, in the context of mundane experience. In a tussle with a purse snatcher she impulsively ventilates feelings of outrage that offend the liberal sentiments of friends and bystanders. Thereby she wipes out, for herself, the illusions one gains by living second-hand.

A year in the life of Sidney J. Prettymon, known as Sitting Pretty or sometimes plain Sit, provides the story line for Young's third novel. Sit's literary cousin is Langston Hughes's Jesse B. Semple, a.k.a. Simple. By the world's reckoning both Sit and Simple are ordinary men, but each has a philosophy and style that raises him above the average. In Sit's case the philosophy involves getting by without harming others and without succumbing to the values that will compromise integrity or happiness; thus, living is an improvisational performance. Rendered in the voice of Sit the novel Sitting Pretty works as the prose equivalent of an Afro-American musical composition alternatively echoing the situations of blues and celebratory riffs that are unique to the character's expressive style. Sit, jogging through the streets of Palo Alto, putting his two cents worth in on a radio talk show, caring deeply for his former wife in her time of trouble and his children when they don't even know they have problems, is a triumphant creation who deserves a place in the popular imagination right alongside Simple and probably, as Wallace Stegner suggested, Huckleberry Finn too.

Like Ishmael Reed, his colleague in Yardbird enterprises, Young is impatient with expectations that black writers should show their ethnicity in some predictable or stereotypical way. O.O. Gabugah the militant poet was Young's satirical treatment of such message writing, and O.O. makes an appearance in Sitting Pretty also. Usually, though, Young makes his point, as in Ask Me Now, by unselfconscious narrative of the human trials of his characters. What makes the books black is that the people, such as Woody Knight, the retired basketball player of his most recent novel, are granted a broad range of experience in which they talk and touch others in the style of black culture. That style permits comedy right along with tribulation, the sort of love that yields happy endings and the losses that create frustration and anger. Reviewers loaded with prescriptions for the ethnic author and critics who want the message straight can be displeased, but Young's art will persist as a loving treatment of the versions of human process that are its source and subject.

-John M. Reilly

YURICK, Sol

Nationality: American. Born: New York City, 18 January 1925. Education: New York University, A.B. 1950; Brooklyn College, New York, M.A. 1961. Military Service: Served in the United States Army, 1944–45. Family: Married Adrienne Lash in 1958; one daughter. Career: Librarian, New York University, 1945–53; social investigator, New York City Department of Welfare, 1954–59. Since 1959 fulltime writer. Lives in Brooklyn, New York. Awards: Guggenheim fellowship, 1972. Agent: Georges Borchardt Inc., 136 East 57th Street, New York, New York 10022, U.S.A. Address: c/o Morrow, 105 Madison Ave., New York, New York 10016, U.S.A.

PUBLICATIONS

Novels

The Warriors. New York, Holt Rinehart, 1965; London, W.H. Allen, 1966.

Fertig. New York, Simon and Schuster, and London, W.H. Allen, 1966.

The Bag. New York, Simon and Schuster, 1968; London, Gollancz, 1970.

An Island Death. New York, Harper, 1975.

Richard A. New York, Arbor House, and London, Methuen, 1982.

Short Stories

Someone Just Like You. New York, Harper, 1972; London, Gollancz, 1973.

Other

Editor, Voices of Brooklyn: An Anthology. Chicago, American Library Association, 1973.

*

Manuscript Collection: Tanument Library, New York University.

* * *

Taken singly, each of Sol Yurick's works constitutes a substantial contribution to the growing body of contemporary fiction that depicts the American megalopolis in perpetual crisis. Taken together, his novels make up the most compelling vision available to us (in fiction or in non-fiction) of the most nightmarish megalopolis of all: New York now. Yurick is (as surely befits someone who was involved for several years in attempting to construct a sound theoretical and practical base for action on the American left) not interested in formal experimentation in the novel for the novel's own sake. Yet neither is he a polemicist with little sense of artistic form. He is an extreme rarity: a social critic with broad theoretical and "street level" experience. Yet, he is at the same time an erudite novelist with solid historical knowledge of the genre and great skill in handling the form. In a deliberate and obviously self-conscious way, he consistently attempts to close the gap between the biblical and classical Greek world so often alluded to in his works and the world of welfare, of murder, and of political power plays, the three major elements in his portrait of New York today.

The Warriors is a novel about a decimated New York teenage gang whom we first met on hostile "turf" on their way back to their "homeland" after a gang conference which has just ended in attempted murder. The opening scene is prefaced by an epigraph drawn from Xenophon: "My friends, these people whom you see are the last obstacle which stops us from being where we have so long struggled to be. We ought, if we could, to eat them up alive." The anabasis of Hinton (the gang artist), Lunkface, Bimbo, The Junior, and Hector is filled with memories of Ismael, leader of the Delancey Thrones, organizer of the citywide gang conference, and victim of the violence with which the conference had come to an abrupt close. "Ismael," we are told, "had the impassive face of a Spanish grandee, the purpleblack color of an uncontaminated African, and the dreams of an Alexander, a Cyrus, a Napolean." He will return in The Bag as a saturnine figure (now with only one eye), a dope pusher, rent collector for a slum landlord (Faust), and stockpiler of rifles, waiting for that moment when the downtrodden of the city will rise up and use these arms to kill their ancient oppressors. Ismael is not alone in his reappearance. Though seemingly selfcontained when read singly, the novels (much like those of Faulkner) shade from one into another. The gang artist, Hinton in The Warriors, reappears, for instance, as a major figure in The Bag. Hinton's mother, Minnie (permanently on welfare and having a new "lover"), and his brother the addict, Alonso, minor figures at the end of Hinton's anabasis, also return but now as full-fledged characters in The Bag.

In contrast to the lower depths of The Warriors and part of The Bag, Fertig appears at first to be an exploration of a strictly middleclass New York Jewish milieu. But the death of Fertig's son as a result of indifference on the part of the staff of a New York hospital triggers such a paroxysm of grief that Fertig cold-bloodedly murders some seven people involved however tenuously in his son's death. As mass murderer, Fertig is then thrust into the company of the criminals, madmen, and junkies who populate Yurick's other two novels. We are also given our first view of the political elite of this mythical New York: Judge Mabel Crossland whose thighs have encompassed every prominent jurist in New York in her climb to the judgeship; Fertig's lawyer, Royboy, the small but handsome sexual athlete, with multiple obligations to his female admirers (including Mabel Crossland) on his way to becoming Senator Roy, a character whom we then meet in The Bag; and Irving Hockstaff, king-maker, the man who indirectly runs the whole political apparatus of the city. A pawn in the political games of the mighty. Fertig and Fertig's trial are painfully reminiscent of An American Tragedy.

The evocation in Fertig of another classic work of literature is an integral part of Yurick's aesthetic and political methodology. The book is shaped as a contemporary replay of a recurrent phenomenon; the destruction of "the little man" by the power elite. Fertig's name comments ironically on a phenomenon that never ends. Likewise Ismael and Faust in The Bag are conscious restatements on a theme as old as poverty. Minnie (referred to by Yurick as a black Cybele and as the Wyf of Bath) loves Alpha (Fertig or Omega's opposite?) who has left his wife, Helen. They share the world with Faust (a figure drawn not only from Goethe but from Kosinski's The Painted Bird), with Faust's daughter, the lesbian Eve, and with Faust's ambitious urban renewal project: Rebirth. Finally, Rebirth and all the little men and women are crushed as the ghetto detonates despite the best efforts of the man from Agape (love, affection), the master of the government's counter-insurgency game plan. We know with Yurick at the end of The Bag (though it is never explicitly stated) that the future of this city that is all cities lies not with the Ismael's and others who seek social improvement but with the Royboys and the Hockstaffs. It is they who seem to believe: "It didn't matter how many people you killed so long as you contained it [the revolution] and cooled it and co-opted it and made it run smoothly." So it has always been says Yurick and so it will be: Alpha and Agape are Omega and Fertig. The end of Ismael in The Bag returns us not only to Ismael at the beginning of The Warriors but to the ancient admonition drawn from the Anabasis. The "homeland" lies permanently within sight but beyond reach. There is some doubt that, all his aesthetic skill and political acumen notwithstanding, Yurick will ever get us any closer, but his portrayal of anabasis itself is worthy of comparison with its ancient counterpart.

—John Fuegi

NOTES ON ADVISERS AND CONTRIBUTORS

ABNEY, Lisa. Assistant professor of English and director of the Louisiana Folklife Center at Northwestern State University; research interests in folklore, sociolinguistics, and southern literature; currently working on a collection of essays regarding Louisiana writers from 1865–1945 (with Suzanne Green), and conducting linguistic survey of north Louisiana (to be completed in 2002). Editor (with Green) of Songs of the New South: Writing Contemporary Louisiana, 2001. Essay: Clyde Edgerton.

ABUNASSER, Rima. Doctoral candidate, University of North Texas, Denton. Specializes in English literature with a focus on eighteenth-century British literature and postcolonial theory. Essay: Nadine Gordimer.

AITKEN, Maureen. Teacher at University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. Author of short fiction published in various literary journals; winner of Fish Short Story Prize (Ireland). Essays: Octavia E. Butler; Carol Shields; William Trevor; Edmund White; Marianne Wiggins.

AKEY, Stephen. Freelance writer. Essays: Paul Auster; James Welch.

ALLEN, Walter. Critic and novelist. Author of The English Novel: A Short Critical History, 1954; Tradition and Dream: The English and American Novel from the Twenties to Our Time, 1965; and other critical studies. Died 1994. Essay: Edward Upward.

ALMONTE, Richard. Doctoral candidate in English, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario; marketing director, Insomniac Press, Toronto. Author of two editions of nineteenth-century Black Canadian texts and an essay on Blackness in Canadian literature. Essays: Peter Ackroyd; Rick Moody.

ALTNER, Patricia. Librarian, Department of Defense, Washington, D.C. Reviewer of historical fiction for Library Journal; associate editor of This Year's Scholarship in Science Fiction, Fantasy, and Horror. Essays: Carol Hill; Mary Robison.

ANDERSEN, Richard. James Thurber writer-in-residence, Ohio State University, Columbus. Author of critical studies of William Goldman and Robert Coover, and four novels—Muckaluck, Straight Cut Ditch, On the Run, and The Reluctant Hero. Essay: William Goldman.

ANG, Susan. Faculty member, Department of English Language and Literature, National University of Singapore. Essay: Catherine Lim.

ASENSIO-ARÓSTEGUI, Mar. Assistant lecturer of English language and English literature at the University of La Rioja, Spain. She has completed an M.A. in studies in fiction at the University of East Anglia, Great Britain, and is currently about to finish her Ph.D. thesis on Jeanette Winterson's fiction of the 1980s. Her published work includes articles on Doris Lessing, Jeanette Winterson, Woody Allen, Ridley Scott and Peter Weir. Essay: Jeanette Winterson.

AUBERT, Alvin. Professor emeritus of English, Wayne State University, Detroit; founding editor of Obsidian magazine, now Obsidian II. Author of five books of poetry—Against the Blues, 1972; Feeling Through, 1975; South Louisiana, 1985; If Winter Come, 1994; and Harlem Wrestler, 1995. Essay: Ernest J. Gaines.

AUGENBRAUM, Harold. Director, The Mercantile Library of New York and its Center for World Literature. Author of Growing Up Latino (co-edited with Ilan Stavans); The Latino Reader; and U.S.

Latino Literature: A Critical Guide for Students and Teachers (both co-edited with Margarite Fernández Olmos). Editor of forthcoming Norton Anthology of Latino Literature of the United States. Essays: Cristina Garcia; Oscar Hijuelos; John Rechy.

BAKERMAN, Jane S. Professor of English emerita, Indiana State University, Terre Haute. Author of numerous critical essays, interviews, and reviews; adviser and contributor, American Women Writers 1–4; and Twentieth-Century Crime and Mystery Writers, 1991. Co-author of The Adolescent in the Novel After 1960. Editor of Adolescent Female Portraits in the American Novel 1961–1981 (with Mary Jean DeMarr), 1983; and And Then There Were Nine: More Women of Mystery, 1984. Essay: Lisa Alther.

BALL, John Clement. Associate professor of English, University of New Brunswick, Fredericton, New Brunswick. Author of articles on postcolonial and Canadian literature. Editor of Studies in Canadian Literature. Essays: Andre Alexis; Amitav Ghosh; Arundhati Roy.

BAMBERGER, William C. Editor and publisher of Bamberger Books, Flint, Michigan. Author of A Jealousy for Aesop, 1988; William Eastlake: High Desert Interlocutor (forthcoming); criticism in Review of Contemporary Fiction; and fiction in CoEvolution, Ascent, and other periodicals. Essays: Barry Hannah; Alice Hoffman; Diane Johnson; Steve Katz; David Madden; William Wharton.

BARNES, John. Reader in English, La Trobe University, Bundoora, Victoria; editor of Meridian. Author of Henry Kingsley and Colonial Fiction, 1971; and articles on Hal Porter and Patrick White. Essay: Peter Cowan.

BATCHELOR, Bob. Writer at UpStart Communications, a division of Fleishman-Hillard. His work has appeared in dbusiness.com, Office.com, Voter.com and many other online and off-line publications. He is a contributing editor at Inside Business magazine and the author of the forthcoming The 1900s: American History through Culture (Greenwood). Essays: Howard Norman; Tom Wolfe.

BELL, Ian A. Professor of English, University of Wales, Swansea. Author of Defoe's Fiction, 1985; and Literature and Crime in Augustan England, 1991. Editor, with Graham Daldry, Watching the Detectives: Essays in Crime Fiction, 1990; and Henry Fielding, 1994. Essays: James Kelman; Alan Spence.

BELLMAN, Samuel I. Professor of English, California State University; freelance writer and critic. Essay: Alan Cheuse.

BENNETT, Bruce. Professor of English, University College, University of New South Wales, Australian Defense Force Academy, Canberra. Formerly editor of Westerly: A Quarterly Review, and director of the Center for Studies in Australian Literature, University of Western Australia. Author of Place, Region and Community, 1985; and An Australian Compass, 1991. Editor of European Relations, 1985; A Sense of Exile, 1988; Myths, Heroes and Anti-Heroes, 1992; books of critical essays on Australian authors; and anthologies of Australian and postcolonial literatures. Essays: Alex Miller; Michael Wilding.

BERGONZI, Bernard. Emeritus professor of English, University of Warwick, Coventry. Author of a novel, The Roman Persuasion, 1981; and several books on modern literature and criticism, of which the most recent are Exploding English, 1990; Wartime and Aftermath, 1993; and David Lodge, 1995. Essays: David Lodge; Julian Mitchell; Andrew Sinclair.

BIRD, Tammy. General education coordinator and distance education coordinator, ECPI College of Technology, Virginia Beach, Virginia. Research interests center around women's writing and women's literary history; American literature; feminist theory and pedagogy; rhetoric/composition; implementation of virtual-based communication in classrooms and the effects of hypertext documentation in literary research and analysis. Essays: Phyllis Gotlieb; Audrey Thomas.

BIRNEY, Earle. Formerly regents professor in creative writing, University of California, Irvine; past editor of Canadian Forum, Canadian Poetry Magazine, Prism International, and New American and Canadian Poetry. Author of more than 20 books of poetry (most recently Copernican Fix, 1985); two novels (Turvey: A Military Picaresque, 1949 [revised 1977] and Down the Long Table, 1955); short stories (Big Bird in the Bush: Selected Stories and Sketches, 1978); plays for stage and radio, and critical studies on creative writing. Editor of selections of poetry by Canadian writers.

BITTNER, William. Late professor of English, Acadia University, Wolfville, Nova Scotia. Author of Poe: A Biography; The Novels of Waldo Frank; and of articles in Atlantic Monthly, The Nation, Saturday Review, New York Post, and other periodicals. Died 1977. Essay: Anthony C. West.

BORDEN, William. Chester Fritz Distinguished Professor of English, University of North Dakota, Grand Forks. Author of the novel Superstoe, 1968; and plays, including The Last Prostitute, 1982; and Loon Dance, 1983. Essay: William Melvin Kelley.

BORKLUND, Elmer. Professor of English, Pennsylvania State University, University Park. Former associate editor of Chicago Review. Author of Contemporary Literary Critics, 1977 (2nd edition 1982); and of articles in Modern Philology, Commentary, New York Herald-Tribune Book Week, and Journal of General Education. Essays: Mavis Gallant; Susan Sontag; Paul West.

BRADBURY, Malcolm. See his own entry. Essay: William Cooper.

BRADFORD, M.E. Professor of English and American studies, University of Dallas; member of the editorial board of Modern Age. Author of Rumours of Mortality: An Introduction to Allen Tate, 1967; A Better Guide Than Reason, 1980; Generations of the Faithful Heart: On the Literature of the South, 1982; A Worthy Company: Brief Lives of the Framers of the Constitution, 1982; Remembering Who We Are: Observations of a Southern Conservative, 1985; The Reactionary Imperative: Essays Literary and Political, 1989; and of articles in Bear, Man, and God, 1971; Allen Tate and His Work, 1971; and Sewanee Review, National Review, Southern Review, and other periodicals. Editor of The Form Discovered: Essays on the Achievement of Andrew Lytle, 1973. Essay: Madison Jones.

BREITINGER, Eckhard. Associate professor, Institute for African Studies, Bayreuth University; former instructor at University of the West Indies (Jamaica), UST in Kumasi (Ghana), Makerere University (Uganda), and additional universities in Africa and Europe. Author of publications on the 18th-century novel, American radio drama, and African and Caribbean literature, mainly on theatre. Translator of plays into German; assembled theatre photographs in exhibitions shown in Africa, Europe, and the United States. Essays: Nuruddin Farah; Abdulrazak Gurnah.

BRIGG, Peter. Associate professor of English, University of Guelph, Guelph, Ontario. Author of J.G. Ballard and A Shanghai Year; chapters in volumes on Ursula K. Le Guin, Arthur C. Clarke, and Robertson Davies; articles in Science Fiction Studies, Extrapolation, Mosaic, Foundation, English Studies in Canada, Canadian Literature, World Literature Written in English, Canadian Drama, and Educational Theatre Journal; and encyclopedia entries in Survey of Science Fiction Literature, Twentieth-Century Science Fiction Writers, Survey of Modern Fantasy Literature, and The International Dictionary of the Theatre. Essays: Ursula Hegi; Michael Ignatieff; Anne Michaels; John Steffler; Susan Swan.

BRIGHT, Juliette. Freelance writer and journalist. Essays: Alice Munro.

BROUGHTON, W.S. Senior lecturer in English, Massey University, Palmerston North, New Zealand; member of New Zealand Literary Fund Advisory Committee, 1985–90. Essay: Owen Marshall.

BROWN, Lloyd W. Member of the Department of Comparative Literature, University of Southern California, Los Angeles. Author of West Indian Poetry, 1978 (revised 1984); Amiri Baraka, 1980; and Women Writers in Black Africa, 1981. Editor of The Black Writer in Africa and the Americas, 1973. Essays: Austin C. Clarke; Roy A.K. Heath; Marion Patrick Jones.

BROWN, Richard. Senior lecturer in English, University of Leeds; co-editor of James Joyce Broadsheet. Author of James Joyce, 1992; and James Joyce and Sexuality, 1985. Essays: Martin Amis; Julian Barnes.

BRYER, Lynne. Publisher, Chameleon Press, Cape Town; former critic and journalist; responsible for rediscovering and reissuing Daphne Rooke's South African novels in that country. Author of The British Settlers of 1820, 1986. Essay: Daphne Rooke.

BUCKNALL, Harry. English language teacher and freelance writer. Essay: Charles Johnson.

BURGESS, Anthony. Novelist and critic; author of A Clockwork Orange, 1962, among numerous other novels and works of nonfiction. Died 1993.

BUXTON, Jackie. Doctoral candidate in English, York University, Toronto. Dissertation on the contemporary historical novel. Author of articles on various aspects of contemporary fiction in Contemporary Literature and English Studies in Canada. Essays: Margaret Atwood; Witi Ihimaera.

BYERMAN, Keith. Professor, Department of English, Indiana State University, Terre Haute. Author of Fingering the Jagged Grain: Tradition and Form in Recent Black Fiction, 1986; Alice Walker: An Annotated Bibliography (with Erma Banks), 1989; Seizing the Word: History, Art, and Self in the Work of W.E.B. DuBois, 1994; The Short Fiction of John Edgar Wideman, 1998; and numerous book and journal articles on African-American and Southern literature.

CADOGAN, Mary. Secretary of an educational trust, governor of an international school, and freelance writer. Author of three books on popular literature with Patricia Craig—You're a Brick, Angela!, 1976; Women and Children First, 1978; and The Lady Investigates, 1981—three volumes of The Charles Hamilton Companion (with John Wernham), 1976–82; The Morcove Companion (with Tommy Keen), 1981; From Wharton Lodge to Linton Hall: The Charles Hamilton Christmas Companion (with Tommy Keen), 1984; Richmal Crompton: The Woman Behind William, 1986; Frank Richards: The Chap Behind the Chums, 1988; and The William Companion, 1990. Essay: Gillian Freeman.

CAMEROS, Cynthia. Teacher at Montclair State University, New Jersey. Author of reviews in Modern Fiction Studies and Kirkus Reviews. Essays: Penelope Lively; Graham Swift.

CAMPENNI, Frank. Associate professor of English, University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee. Author of articles and reviews in periodicals. Essays: Howard Fast; Irvin Faust; Mark Mirsky; Michael Rumaker; Budd Schulberg; Charles Wright.

CANEPARI-LABIB, Michela. Researcher of English literature. Born in Italy and educated at the University of Pavia (Italy) and the University of Sussex (United Kingdom). After she was awarded her first degree, she moved to the South of England, where she has lived ever since. She has combined teaching with translating and writing, publishing on both contemporary authors and topical issues of a literary and theoretical nature. She is the author of Word-Worlds: Language, Identity and Reality in the Work of Christine Brooke-Rose. Essay: Christine Brooke-Rose.

CARCHIDI, Victoria. Teaches postcolonial literature and media studies at Massey University, Palmerston North, New Zealand. Essays: Lois McMaster Bujold; Shimmer Chinodya; Njabulo Ndebele.

CHAMBERS, D.D.C. Associate professor of English, Trinity College, Toronto. Editor of two book of poetry by Thomas Traherne, and A Few Friends: Poems for Thom Gunn's 60th Birthday, 1989. Essay: John Rechy.

CHANEY, Michael A. Doctoral candidate in English with a minor in African American Studies at Indiana University. His dissertation explores antebellum cultural intersections of slave narratives and race spectacles with travel literature and ethnography. Chaney has written on nineteenth-century sentimentalism in the American Transcendental Quarterly; and has written reviews for Post Modern Culture and African American Review. Essays: Wesley Brown; Trey Ellis; Festus Iyayi; Jamal Majhoub; John A. Williams.

CHEW, Shirley. Lecturer in English, University of Leeds. Editor of Selected Poems: Arthur Hugh Clough, 1987. Essay: Patricia Grace.

CHIHARA, Paul Seiko. Associate professor of Music, University of California, Los Angeles. Composer of numerous works, including Driftwood (string quartet), 1969; Forest Music for Orchestra, 1970; and music for ballets and films. Author of "Revolution and Music," 1970; and other essays. Essay: James Yaffe.

CLANCY, Laurie. Reader in English, La Trobe University, Bundoora, Victoria. Author of three novels: A Collapsible Man, 1975; Perfect Love, 1983; and The Wild Life Reserve, 1994; two collections of short stories: The Wife Specialist, 1978; and City to City, 1988; and critical works on Christina Stead, Xavier Herbert, and Vladimir Nabokov, as well as A Reader's Guide to Australian Fiction, 1992. Essays: Glenda Adams; Thea Astley; Murray Bail; Brian Castro; Robert Coover; Blanche d'Alpuget; Sara Dowse; Beverley Farmer; David Foster;

Kate Grenville; Rodney Hall; Shirley Hazzard; Janette Turner Hospital; Elizabeth Jolley; Neil Jordon; Victor Kelleher; C.J. Koch; Peter Mathers; Roger McDonald; Gerald Murnane; Jayne Ann Phillips; Rosie Scott; C.K. Stead; Tim Winton.

CLARK, Anderson. Associate professor of English and director of the International English Institute, Belmont College, Nashville. Essay: Shelby Foote.

COALE, Sam. Professor of English, Wheaton College, Norton, Massachusetts. Author of Hawthorne's Shadow: American Romance from Melville to Miller, 1985; and William Styron Revisited, 1991. Essay: James Lee Burke.

COBB, Loretta. Director emeritus of the Harbert Writing Center, University of Montevallo; freelance writer and editor, and columnist for The Birmingham News. Essays: Barry Hannah; Ward Just; W.P. Kinsella; Larry Woiwode.

COLONNESE, Tom. Teacher at Northern Arizona University, Flagstaff; program director for Native Americans for Community Action, and Native American Social Service Agency. Author of American Indian Novelists: An Annotated Critical Bibliography (with Louis Owens), 1985; and Dictionary of American Indian Novelists (forthcoming). Essays: Jim Harrison; Jay McInerney; Larry McMurtry; N. Scott Momaday.

COOKE, Judy. Freelance writer and editor, London. Editor of The Best of Fiction Magazine (with Elizabeth Bunster), 1986; and Passions and Reflections: A Collection of 20th-Century Women's Fiction, 1991. Essays: A.L. Barker; Jennifer Dawson; Maureen Duffy; Neil Jordan.

CORBALLIS, Richard. Senior lecturer in English, Massey University, Palmerston North, New Zealand. Author of Stoppard: The Mystery and the Clockwork, 1984; and Introducing Witi Ihimaera (with Simon Garrett), 1984. Editor of George Chapman's Minor Translations: A Critical Edition of His Renderings of Musaeus, Hesiod and Juvenal, 1984. Essays: Alan Duff; Stevan Eldred-Grigg; Patricia Grace; Keri Hulme.

COTTON, John. Author of many books of poetry—collections include Old Movies and Other Poems, 1971; The Day Book, 1983; The Storyville Portraits, 1984; The Poetry File, 1988; and Here's Looking at You Kid, 1990—and of British Poetry since 1965, 1973. Essays: Brian Aldiss; Maggie Gee; D.M. Thomas.

COX, F. Brett. Teaches literature and writing and is director of the Alabama Center for Literary Arts, Alabama Southern College, Monroeville, Alabama. Author of fiction and criticism in New England Quarterly, The New York Review of Science Fiction, Century Magazine, The Robert Frost Encyclopedia, Baltimore Sun, and elsewhere. Essays: Mark Childress; Edwidge Danticat; William Gay; William Gibson; Bruce Sterling.

CRANE, Ralph J. Senior lecturer in English, University of Waikato, Hamilton, New Zealand. Teaches colonial and postcolonial literatures. Author of Inventing India: A History of India in English-Language Fiction, 1992; Ruth Prawer Jhabvala, 1992; and Troubled Pleasures: The Fiction of J.G. Farrell (with Jennifer Livett), 1997. Editor of collections of essays on Ruth Prawer Jhabvala, Maurice Shadbolt, Nayantara Sahgal, J.G. Farrell, and Indian diaspora writing. Since 1994 he has been chairperson of the South Pacific Association for Commonwealth Literature and Language Studies (SPACLALS) and co-editor of the association's journal, Span. Essays: Anita Desai; Ruth Prawer Jhabvala; Bharati Mukherjee; I. Allan Sealy; Maurice Shadbolt; Bapsi Sidhwa; Shashi Tharoor.

CUSHMAN, Susan E. Doctoral candidate, Lehigh University, Pennsylvania. Specializes in twentieth-century American literature and teaches English and women's studies. Dissertation on postmodern trends in American autobiography, in particular the contributions that bicultural writers Maxine Hong Kingston, Leslie Marmon Silko, and Gloria Anzaldua have made to the genre. Essay: Sandra Cisneros.

CUSICK, Edmund. Lecturer in English, Liverpool Polytechnic; formerly assistant editor of Shorter Oxford English Dictionary. Author of "Macdonald and Jung," in The Gold Thread, 1991. Essays: Michael Moorcock; Carolyn Slaughter.

DANIEL, Helen. Freelance critic and reviewer. Author of Double Agent: David Ireland and His Work, 1982; and Liars: Australian New Novelists, 1988. Editor of Australian Book Review, and the books Expressway, 1989; The Good Reading Guide: Australian Fiction 1968-1988, 1989; and Millennium, 1991. Essay: Marion Campbell.

DAWSON, Terence. Lecturer in English, National University of Singapore. Author of numerous articles on both English and French literature. Essay: Edna O'Brien.

D'CRUZ, Doreen. Lecturer in English, Massey University, Palmerston North, New Zealand. Essay: Barbara Anderson.

de KOCK, Leon. Lecturer in English, University of South Africa, Pretoria. Essays: André Brink; Nadine Gordimer; Christopher Hope.

DELREZ, Marc. Teaches English literature at the University of Liege. Author of articles on David Malouf, Randolph Stow, and Janet Frame; and a forthcoming monograph on Janet Frame. Essay: David Malouf.

DESY, Peter. Member of the Department of English, Ohio University, Lancaster. Author of fiction and poetry in many journals and anthologies. Essays: Denis Johnson; W.P. Kinsella; Susan Fromberg Schaeffer.

deVILLE, Susie. Production editor and freelance writer. Contributor to Travelers' Quarterly. Essay: Festus Iyayi.

DICKINSON, Adam. Doctoral candidate at the University of Alberta with research interests in contemporary Canadian and American literature and ethics. Essay: Michael Ondaatje.

DICKINSON, Peter. Teaches in the English department and Critical Studies in Sexuality Program at the University of British Columbia. Author of Here is Queer: Nationalisms, Sexualities, and the Literatures of Canada, 1999. Essays: Stephen Gray; Tomson Highway; Shyam Selvadurai.

DILLARD, R.H.W. Professor of English and chairman of the graduate program in Contemporary Literature and Creative Writing, Hollins College, Virginia; editor of Hollins Critic. Author of four books of poetry (most recently The Greeting: New and Selected Poems, 1981); two novels The Book of Chances, 1974; and The First Man on the Sun, 1983; a screenplay; and of Horror Films, 1976; and Understanding George Garrett, 1988. Editor of two collections of essays. Essay: George Garrett.

DOYLE, Paul A. Professor of English, Nassau Community College, State University of New York, Garden City; editor, Evelyn Waugh Newsletter and Studies and Nassau Review. Author of Sean O'Faolain, 1968; Introduction to Paul Vincent Carroll, 1971; Liam O'Flaherty, 1971; Guide to Basic Information Sources in English Literature, 1976; Pearl S. Buck, 1980; A Reader's Companion to the Novels and Short Stories of Evelyn Waugh, 1988; of bibliographies of O'Flaherty and Waugh; and A Concordance to the Collected Poems of James Joyce, 1966; co-author of Early American Trains, 1993. Editor of Alexander Pope's Iliad: An Examination, 1960. Essays: John Ed Bradley; Thomas Flanagan; Piers Paul Read.

DRABBLE, Margaret. See her own entry.

DRIVER, Dorothy. Senior lecturer in English, University of Cape Town, South Africa; South African correspondent to the Journal of Commonwealth Literature. Author of Pauline Smith and the Crisis of Daughterhood (forthcoming) and of numerous articles on writing by South African women. Editor of The Little Karoo by Pauline Smith, 1983.

DUCKWORTH, Deborah. Formerly instructor in English and English as a Second Language, Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge. Essay: Elaine Dundy.

DUNCAN, Andy. Teaches creative writing, composition, and literature at the University of Alabama. Author of Beluthahatchie and Other Stories, 2000; fiction in Asimov's, Event Horizon, Realms of Fantasy, Weird Tales, Starlight 1, and Stephen Jones's Best New Horror series; and has been nominated for the Hugo, Nebula, Campbell, and International Horror Guild awards. Also author of critical essays in FEMSPEC, The New York Review of Science Fiction, and North Carolina Literary Review. Essays: Randall Kenan; Stewart O'Nan.

DURSO, Patricia Keefe. Independent scholar; teacher of English and creative writing at various universities. Author of articles on American women writers in various publications, including the Colby Quarterly, In Process: A Journal of African-American and African Diasporan Literature and Culture, and Anglophone Literature (forthcoming). Research interests in ethnicity and race; compiled special issue on "whiteness" for Modern Language Studies. Essay: Gish Jen.

DWELLE, Josh. Master's degree candidate, University of North Texas, Denton. Specializes in twentieth-century American literature. Essays: Cormac McCarthy; Ian McEwan.

DYER, Klay. Assistant professor, Department of English and Canadian Studies, Brock University, Ontario; academic advisor to the Early Canadiana Online digitalization project. Author of articles on Canadian literature and culture. Contributing editor for Journal of Canadian Poetry and Harpweaver. Essays: George Bowering; Bonnie Burnard; David Adams Richards; Guy Vanderhaeghe; M.G. Vassanji.

EDMANDS, Ursula. Former lecturer in English, Leeds Polytechnic; now with Sheffield City Council. Essays: C.J. Driver; Dan Jacobson.

EISINGER, Chester E. Former professor of English, Purdue University, Lafayette, Indiana; now retired. Author of Fiction of the Forties, 1963; and articles in Proletarian Writers of the Thirties, 1968; and Saturday Review. Editor of The 1940's: Profile of a Nation in Crisis, 1969. Essays: Louis Auchincloss; William H. Gass; Shirley Ann Grau.

ELBORN, Geoffrey. Freelance writer and critic. Essays: Peter Ackroyd; John Banville; Pat Barker; William Boyd; Sebastian Faulks; Alan Hollinghurst; Bernice Rubens; Lisa St. Aubin de Teran; Edmund White.

FACKNITZ, Mark A.R. Lecturer in English, James Madison University, Harrisonburg, Virginia. Essay: Tobias Wolff.

FERRAN, Peter. Professor, Rochester Institute of Technology. Essay: James Ellroy.

FERRELL, Keith. Novelist, nonfiction writer, and speaker. Author of more than a dozen books and over 1,000 articles. Dozens of public and media appearances to his credit. From 1990 until 1996 he was editor-in-chief of OMNI Magazine, and oversaw the migration of the magazine to the Internet, the first major publication to do so. His novel Passing Judgment was published in 1996; other books include biographies of H.G. Wells and Ernest Hemingway. A new novel should appear in 2000. Essays: Greg Bear; Gregory Benford.

FIEDLER, Leslie A. Critic and novelist. Clemens Chair Professor, Department of English, State University of New York, Buffalo. Author of Love and Death in the American Novel, 1960; No! In Thunder, 1960; What Was Literature? Class Culture and Mass Society, 1982; and other works of criticism.

FIERO, John W. Professor of English, University of Southwestern Louisiana, Lafayette; director of creative writing and the Deep South Writers Conference. Author of several plays and articles on Bertolt Brecht, Anton Chehkov, Max Frisch, Ernest Gaines, A.R. Gurney, Jr., Bret Harte, Preston Jones, Ben Jonson, Franz Kafka, Terrence McNally, William Saroyan, and Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. Essay: Anne Rice.

FOSTER, Ruel E. Benedum Professor of American Literature, West Virginia University, Morgantown. Author of Work in Progress, 1948; William Faulkner: A Critical Appraisal, 1951; Elizabeth Madox Roberts, American Novelist (with Harry Modean Campbell), 1956; and Jesse Stuart, 1968. Essay: John Knowles.

FRANKS, Jill. Faculty member, Department of English, University of British Columbia; freelance writer and critic. Essays: Ama Ata Aidoo; Rosellen Brown; Susan Minot.

FRENCH, Anne. Managing editor, Museum of New Zealand, Wellington. Author of four books of poetry—All Cretans Are Liars, 1987; The Male as Evader, 1988; Cabin Fever, 1990; and Seven Days on Mykonos, 1993. Contributor to The Oxford Companion to Contemporary Poetry, The Oxford Companion to New Zealand Literature, and The Routledge Encyclopaedia of Commonwealth Literature. Essay: Barbara Trapido.

FRENCH, Warren. Professor of English and director of the Centre for American Studies, Indiana University-Purdue University, Indianapolis, retired 1986; member of the editorial board, American Literature and Twentieth-Century Literature; editor of the American Authors series for Twayne publishers. Author of John Steinbeck, 1961; Frank Norris, 1962; J.D. Salinger, 1963 (revised 1976); A Companion to "The Grapes of Wrath," 1963; The Social Novel at the End of an Era, 1966; The South in Film, 1981; Jack Kerouac, 1986; and a series on American literature: The Thirties, 1967; The Forties, 1968;

The Fifties, 1971; and The Twenties, 1975. Essays: R.K. Narayan; Tom Robbins; Khushwant Singh; Elizabeth Spencer; Eudora Welty.

FRIEDMAN, Melvin J. Professor of comparative literature, University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee; advisory editor of Journal of Popular Culture, Studies in the Novel, Renascence, Journal of American Culture, Studies in American Fiction, Fer de Lance, Contemporary Literature, Journal of Beckett Studies, International Fiction Review, Arete, Yiddish, Journal of Modern Literature, and Studies in American Jewish Literature. Author of Stream of Consciousness: A Study in Literary Method, 1955. Author or editor of works about Beckett, Flannery O'Connor, Styron, Ezra Pound, Catholic novelists, and Ionesco. Essays: Wallace Markfield; Philip Roth.

FROST, Lucy. Senior lecturer in English, La Trobe University, Bundoora, Victoria. Author of No Place for a Nervous Lady: Voices from the Australian Bush, 1984; A Face in the Glass: The Journal and Life of Annie Baxter Dawbin, 1992; and articles on nineteenth- and twentieth-century literature and culture. Essays: Marion Halligan; Frank Moorhouse.

FUEGI, John. Professor and director of the comparative literature program, University of Maryland, College Park; managing editor, Brecht Yearbook. Author of The Wall (documentary film), 1961; The Essential Brecht, 1972; and Bertolt Brecht: Chaos According to Plan. Editor of Brecht Today, 3 vols., 1972–74. Essay: Sol Yurick.

FULLER, Roy. Poet, novelist, and critic. Died 1991.

GALLOWAY, David. Chair of American studies, University of the Ruhr, Bochum, West Germany. Author of The Absurd Hero in American Fiction, 1966 (revised 1970 and 1981); Henry James, 1967; Edward Lewis Wallant, 1979; and four novels—the most recent being Tamsen, 1983. Editor of The Selected Writings of Edgar Allan Poe, 1967; Ten Modern American Short Stories, 1968; Calamus, 1982; and The Other Poe: Comedies and Satires, 1983. Essay: Evan Hunter.

GAUTHIER, Tim. Doctoral candidate, University of Nevada, Las Vegas. Dissertation addresses the idea of history in the British novel of the 1980s and 1990s. Research interests extend to contemporary literature in general, including Irish and Canadian, and the evolution of the short-story sequence. Essays: Shane Connaughton; Michael Cunningham.

GEARHART, Stephannie S. Instructor of English, English Department, Lehigh University, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. Essays: Russell Banks; Chitra Banerjee Divakaruni.

GEHERIN, David. Professor of English, Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti. Author of several articles and four books on mystery fiction: Sons of Sam Spade, John D. MacDonald, The American Private Eye, and Elmore Leonard. Teaches courses in twentieth-century literature and on mystery and detective fiction. Essays: Frederick Barthelme; Arthur Hailey; Elmore Leonard; Walter Mosley; Robert Stone.

GINDIN, James. Late professor of English, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. Author of Postwar British Fiction, 1962; Harvest of a Quiet Eye: The Novel of Compassion, 1971; The English Climate: An Excursion into a Biography of John Gals Worthy, 1979; John Galsworthy's Life and Art: An Alien's Fortress, 1986; and William Golding, 1988. Editor of The Return of the Native, by Hardy, 1969.

Died. Essays: John Bowen; Malcolm Bradbury; David Cook; Lionel Davidson; Margaret Drabble; John Fowles; Thomas Hinde; Elizabeth Jane Howard; Norman Mailer; Keith Waterhouse.

GOONETILLEKE, D.C.R.A. Senior professor and department head of English, University of Kelaniya, Sri Lanka; world chair, Association for Commonwealth Literature and Language Studies; vice-chair, International Federation for Modern Languages and Literatures. Author of Developing Countries in British Fiction, 1977; Between Culture: Essays on Literature, Language and Education, 1987; Images of the Raj: South Asia in the Literature of the Empire, 1988; and Joseph Conrad: Beyond Culture and Background, 1990. Editor of Heart of Darkness by Joseph Conrad, 1995; and of anthologies of Sri Lankan poetry, fiction, and drama.

GORDON, Lois. Professor of English and comparative literature, Fairleigh Dickinson University, Teaneck, New Jersey. Author of Stratagems to Uncover Nakedness: The Dramas of Harold Pinter, 1969; Donald Barthelme, 1981; Robert Coover: The Universal Fictionmaking Process, 1983; American Chronicle: Six Decades in American Life, 1920–1979, 1987; Harold Pinter: A Casebook, 1990; American Chronicle: Seven Decades in American Life, 1920–1989, 1990; The Columbia Chronicles of American Life, 1910–1995, 1995; and articles on Faulkner, T.S. Eliot, Beckett, Philip Roth, Arthur Miller, and other writers. Essays: Ann Beattie; Erica Jong.

GORDON-SMITH, Pat. Commissioning editor and freelance writer. Essay: Caryl Phillips.

GORSKI, Hedwig. Doctoral candidate, University of Louisiana, Lafayette; poet, dramatist, journalist, and screenplay writer. Dissertation on Wislawa Szymborska. Essays: James Lee Burke; Maurice Gee; Aidan Higgins; Christopher Hope; Tana Jamowitz; Fiona Kidman; Sue McCauley; Larry McMurtry; Vincent O'Sullivan; Gore Vidal; Noel Virtue.

GRACIAS, Marian. Doctoral candidate, University of British Columbia, Vancouver, specializing in gender studies and postcolonialism. Essay: David Dabydeen.

GRAHAM, Colin. Lecturer in Irish Writing, Queen's University of Belfast. Author of Ideologies of Epic, 1998. Essays: Roddy Doyle; Hanif Kureishi; John McGahern.

GREEN, Suzanne Disheroon. Assistant professor of American literature, Northwestern State University. Co-author of Kate Chopin: An Annotated Bibliography of Critical Works, 1999; and At Fault by Kate Chopin: A Scholarly Edition with Background Readings (with David J. Caudle), 2001; and Songs of the New South: Writing Contemporary Louisiana (with Lisa Abney), 2001. Author of numerous articles on Southern writers, including "How Edna Escaped: The Life is a Journey Conceptual Metaphor in The Awakening" in The Poetics of Cognition. Essays: Kaye Gibbons; Erica Jong.

GREGORY, Sinda. Associate professor of English and comparative literature, San Diego State University. Author of numerous books and essays about contemporary fiction, including Private Investigations: The Work of Dashiell Hammett and Alive and Writing: Interviews with American Authors of the 1980s (with Larry McCaffery). Contributed an interview with Marianne Hauser to Some Other Frequency: Interviews with Contemporary American Innovative Fiction Writers by McCaffery, 1995. Essay: Marianne Hauser.

GRELLA, George. Associate professor of English, Rochester University, New York. Author of studies of Ian Fleming, Ross Macdonald, and John le Carré in New Republic; and articles on the detective novel, film, and popular culture. Essays: Len Deighton; J.P. Donleavy; John Gregory Dunne; John Irving.

GRIFFIN, Jessica. Editor and freelance writer. Essay: Marina Warner.

GUERARD, Albert. See his own entry.

GUPTARA, Prabhu S. Freelance writer, lecturer, and broadcaster. Author of Indian Spirituality, 1984; and Black British Literature: An Annotated Bibliography, 1986. Editor of Third Eye: The Prospects of Third World Film, 1986; and The Lotus: An Anthology of Contemporary Indian Religious Poetry in English, 1988. Essay: Gillian Tindall.

GUTTENBERG, Laurie Schwartz. Faculty member, Nassau Community College, Suffolk Community College, S.U.N.Y. College at Farmingdale, Syosset Central Schools. Essay: Joanne Greenberg.

GUZZIO, Tracie Church. Assistant professor of English, State University of New York, Plattsburgh. Specializes in African-American Literature. Essay: John Edgar Wideman.

HALIO, Jay L. Professor of English, University of Delaware, Newark; chair of the editorial board, University of Delaware Press. Author of Angus Wilson, 1964; and Understanding Shakespeare's Plays in Performance, 1988. Editor of British Novelists since 1960, 1983; Critical Essays on Angus Wilson, 1985; and As You Like It: An Annotated Bibliography 1940–1980 (with Barbara C. Millard). Essay: William Trevor.

HALL, James B. See his own entry. Essay: R.V. Cassill.

HALL, Joan Wylie. Instructor in English, University of Mississippi, Jackson. Author of Shirley Jackson: A Study of the Short Fiction (forthcoming); and articles on Francis Bacon, William Faulkner, and Willa Cather. Essay: Marilyn French.

HANRAHAN, John. Freelance writer and critic. Essays: Liam Davison.

HARRIS, Jennifer. Doctoral candidate in English, York University, Toronto. Author of several articles in Canadian feminist journals. Associate editor of Alphabet City and co-editor of a forthcoming issue of the Canadian Review of American Studies titled "Blackness and the 49th Parallel." Essays: Leland Bardwell; Erna Brodber; Austin C. Clarke; Jack Hodgins; Mick Jackson; Jamaica Kincaid; Earl Lovelace; Terry McMillan; James McNeish; Eilis Ní Dhuibhne; Mordecai Richler; Jeff Shaara; Helena Maria Viramontes; Damien Wilkins; Lois-Ann Yamanaka.

HARRIS, June. Associate professor of teaching and teacher education, University of Arizona-South, Sierra Vista. Essays: John Grisham; Kim Stanley Robinson.

HART, James A. Late emeritus professor of English, University of British Columbia, Vancouver; former member of the editorial board, Canadian Review of American Studies and English Studies in Canada. Author of articles on Alan Seeger, Allen Tate, George Sylvester Viereck, and Joyce Kilmer in Dictionary of Literary Biography, vols. 45 and 54, 1986, 1987. Died. Essay: Edward Hoagland.

HART, Sue. Professor of English, Montana State University, Billings. Author of Thomas and Elizabeth Savage, chapters in Women in Western American Literature, Visions of War, and Willa Cather: Family and Community, and of numerous critical essays and reviews. Essay: Thomas Savage.

HASTINGS, Thomas. Doctoral candidate, Department of English, York University, Toronto. Essays: Alan Hollinghurst; Edmund White.

HAWKES, John. Novelist, playwright, and poet. Author of The Cannibal, 1949; The Lime Twig, 1961; Second Skin, 1964; Adventures in the Alaskan Skin Trade, 1985; Whistlejacket, 1988; and others. Died 1998.

HEATON, David M. Associate professor of English, and University Ombudsman, Ohio University, Athens. Author of poetry; poetry translations; and articles on Ted Hughes, Alan Sillitoe, Stanley Plumly, Alan Stephens, Ben Belitt, Marvin Bell, Jon Anderson, and George P. Elliott. Essays: Frederick Busch; Joan Didion; Toni Morrison; Hubert Selby, Jr.

HERBERT, John. Freelance writer. Essay: E.L. Doctorow.

HERGENHAN, Laurie. Reader in English, University of Queensland, Brisbane; editor of Australian Literary Studies. Author of Unnatural Lives, 1983. Editor of The Australian Short Story, 1986.

HERMANN, Michelle. Doctoral candidate in English, University of Chicago, Illinois; visiting lecturer in English, Swarthmore College, Pennsylvania. Essay: Jeannette Armstrong.

HILL, Susan. See her own entry.

HODGKIN, Katharine. Faculty member, Department of English, University of Wales, Swansea. Author of articles on contemporary women writers, including Janet Frame. Essay: Marina Warner.

HOLM, Janis Butler. Associate professor of English, Ohio University, Athens. Author of articles on cultural theory and Tudor conduct books. Editor of The Mirrhor of Modesty by Giovanni Bruto, 1987. Essay: Gayl Jones.

IKIN, Van. Lecturer in English, University of Western Australia, Nedlands. Editor of the journal Science Fiction: A Review of Speculative Literature; and the books Australian Science Fiction, 1982; and Glass Reptile Breakout and Other Australian Speculative Stories, 1990. Essays: Robert Drewe; David Ireland.

JAMES, Louis. Professor of English and American literature. Keynes College, University of Kent, Canterbury. Author of The Islands in Between, 1968; Fiction for the Working Man 1830–50, 1974; Jean Rhys, 1978; and Writers from the Caribbean, 1990. Editor of Print and the People 1819–1851, 1976; and Performance and Politics in Popular Drama: Aspects of Popular Entertainment in Theatre, Film and Television (with others), 1980. Essays: Nicholas Hasluck; V.S. Naipaul.

JEFFARES, A. Norman. Professor emeritus of English Studies, University of Stirling, Scotland; general editor of the Macmillan Histories of Literature series and the York Classics series; co-editor of the Macmillan anthologies of English literature; past editor of A Review of English Studies and Ariel. Author of Yeats: Man and Poet, 1949 (revised 1962); Seven Centuries of Poetry, 1956; Oliver Goldsmith, 1959; Gogarty, 1961; George Moore, 1965; A Critical Commentary on She Stoops to Conquer, 1966; A Commentary on the Collected Poems, 1968; and Collected Plays, with A.S. Knowland, 1975; Yeats, Anglo-Irish Literature, 1982; A New Commentary on the Poems of W. B. Yeats, 1984; and W. B. Yeats: A New Biography, 1988. Editor of Scott's Mind and Art, 1969; Restoration Comedy, 1974; Yeats: The Critical Heritage, 1977; Poems of W.B. Yeats: A New Selection, 1984; Yeats's Poems, 1989; Yeats the European, 1989; Yeats's Vision, 1990; Swift: The Selected Poems, 1992; Ireland's Women (with Brendan Kennelly and Katie Donovan), 1994; and Images of Imaginations, 1995. Formerly chair of the Literature Section of the Scottish Arts Council for the Study of Anglo-Irish Literature. Essay: John le Carré.

JEFFREY, David K. Professor and head of the English department, James Madison University, Harrisonburg, Virginia; formerly coeditor of Southern Humanities Review. Editor of Grit's Triumph: Essays on the Works of Harry Crews, 1983. Author of numerous articles on Harry Crews, Edgar Allan Poe, Tobias Smollett, Alexander Pope, Herman Melville, and contemporary mystery writers. Essay: Ellen Douglas.

JENKINS, Annibel. Associate professor of English, Georgia Institute of Technology, Atlanta. Author of Nicholas Rowe, 1977. Essay: Emma Smith.

JENKINS, Ron. Lecturer in English, University of British Columbia. Author of articles on Graeme Gibson, Paul Theroux, Thomas Pynchon, Laurence Sterne, and George Peele. Essays: Graeme Gibson; Joy Kogawa.

JOHNSEN, Rosemary E. Member of the National Coalition of Independent Scholars. Author of essays on Edith Wharton, Grant Richards, Patrick Hamilton, and Miriam Grace Monfredo. Currently working on a book-length study of feminist historical crime fiction. Essays: Maeve Kelly; Deirdre Madden; Val Mulkern.

JOHNSEN, William A. Professor of English, Michigan State University, East Lansing. Author of publications on Irish, British, and European literature as well as critical theory. Author of numerous book and journal articles. Essays: Wilton Barnhardt; Dermot Bolger; Dermot Healy; Colm Tóibín.

KEATING, H.R.F. Crime novelist and critic. Author of the Inspector Ghote series including, most recently, The Body in the Billiard Room, 1987; Dead on Time, 1988; Inspector Ghote, His Life and Crimes, 1989; and Doing Wrong, 1994; of three novels as Evelyn Hervey: The Governess, 1984; The Man of Gold, 1985; and Into the Valley of Death, 1986; and of critical works including Writing Crime Fiction, 1986; Crime and Mystery: The 100 Best Books, 1987; and The Bedside Companion to Crime, 1989. Editor of Agatha Christie: First Lady of Crime, 1977; Whodunit? A Guide to Crime, Suspense, and Spy Fiction, 1982; and The Best of Father Brown, 1987. Essays: Dick Francis; Arun Joshi.

KEITH, Margaret. Freelance writer and researcher; also an actress and director. Essays: Hugh Hood; Norman Levine.

KEITNER, Wendy Robbins. Associate professor of English, University of New Brunswick, Frederiction. Essay: Jane Rule.

KELLEGHAN, Fiona. Librarian and associate professor at the University of Miami, Richter Library. Author of Mike Resnick: An Annotated Bibliography and Guide to His Work, 2000; articles and reviews in Science-Fiction Studies, ParaDoxa, Extrapolation, The

New York Review of Science Fiction, and Nova Express; and published essays and chapters in numerous reference works, including St. James Guide to Science Fiction Writers, St. James Guide to Crime & Mystery Writers, Magill's Guide to Science Fiction and Fantasy Literature, Cyclopedia of World Authors, Fantasy and Horror: A Critical and Historical Guide, and Twentieth-Century Literary Movements Dictionary. Essays: Ray Bradbury; Robert Olen Butler; Sebastian Faulks; Mark Helprin; Gwyneth Jones; Jonathan Lethem; Connie Willis.

KEMP, Sandra. Lecturer in English literature, University of Glasgow. Author of Kipling's Hidden Narratives, 1988. Editor of Selected Stories, 1987; and Debits and Credits, 1988, both by Kipling. Essay: Eva Figes.

KENDLE, Burton. Professor of English, Roosevelt University, Chicago. Author of articles on D.H. Lawrence, John Cheever, William March, Tennessee Williams, and others, and on screenwriting. Essays: Isabel Colegate; Alan Lelchuk.

KENNEDY, Jake. Doctoral candidate in English literature, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario. Dissertation concerns Marcel Duchamp and literary modernism. Essays: John Berger; Hilary Mantel; Thomas Pynchon.

KENNEDY, Liam. Lecturer in History, Department of American and Canadian Studies, University of Birmingham. Editor of Economic Theory of Co-operative Enterprises: Selected Readings, 1983; and An Economic History of Ulster, 1820–1940 (with Philip Ollerenshaw), 1985. Essay: William Kennedy.

KHAIR, Tabish. Teacher at Copenhagen University. Author of six books, including Where Parallel Lines Meet, 2000; and Babu Fictions: A Study of Contemporary Indian English Fiction (forthcoming). Essay: Sunetra Gupta.

KIERNAN, Robert F. Associate professor of English, Manhattan College, Bronx, New York. Former associate editor of Literary Research Newsletter. Author of Katherine Anne Porter and Carson McCullers: A Reference Guide, 1976; Gore Vidal, 1982; American Writing since 1945: A Critical Survey, 1983; Noel Coward, 1986; and Frivolity Unbound: Six Masters of the Camp Novel, 1990. Essay: Gore Vidal.

KING, Bruce. Freelance writer and editor; Albert S. Johnston professor of English, University of North Alabama, Florence; has taught at universities in the United States, France, Israel, Nigeria, Canada, England, and New Zealand. Co-editor of Macmillan Modern Dramatists series. Author of Dryden's Major Plays, 1966; Marvell's Allegorical Poetry, 1977; New English Literatures: Cultural Nationalism in a Changing World, 1980; A History of Seventeenth-Century English Literature, 1982; Modern Indian Poetry in English, 1987; Three Indian Poets: Ezekiel, Ramanujan and Moraes, 1990; V. S. Naipaul, 1993; Derek Walcott and West Indian Drama, 1995; and other books. Editor of Introduction to Nigerian Literature, 1971; Literatures of the World in English, 1974; A Celebration of Black and African Writing, 1976; and West Indian Literature, 1979. Essays: Mike Phillips; Salman Rushdie; Vikram Seth.

KINGSBURY, Celia M. Kingsbury teaches in the English Department at Florida State University. Her area of specialization is World War I literature and cultural studies. She has published articles in Conradiana and Modern Fiction Studies. Essay: Allen Wier.

KIRK, Connie Ann. Writer, poet, and scholar of various topics in American literature, including American narratives, Emily Dickinson, and children's literature; teaches at Mansfield University, Pennsylvania. Essays: Louise Erdrich; Bobbie Ann Mason; Lorrie Moore; Anne Tyler; Alice Walker.

KLAUS, H. Gustav. Part-time professor of English, University of Osnabrück, and visiting professor, University of Halle, both Germany. Author of Caudwell im Kontext, 1978; and The Literature of Labour: Two Hundred Years of Working-Class Writing, 1985. Editor of Gulliver: German-English Yearbook, 1976–82; The Socialist Novel in Britain: Towards the Recovery of a Tradition, 1982; and The Rise of Socialist Fiction 1880–1914, 1987. Essay: Barry Hines.

KLEIN, Marcus. Professor of English, State University of New York, Buffalo. Author of After Alienation: American Novels at Mid-Century, 1964; and Foreigners: The Making of American Literature 1900–1940, 1981. Editor of The American Novel since World War II, 1969; and, with Robert Pack, of Literature for Composition on the Theme of Innocence and Experience, 1966; and Short Stories: Classic, Modern, Contemporary, 1967. Essay: Richard G. Stern.

KLINKOWITZ, Jerome. Professor of English, University of Northern Iowa, Cedar Falls. Author of Kurt Vonnegut Jr.: A Descriptive Bibliography (with Asa B. Pieratt, Jr.), 1974; Literary Disruptions, 1975 (revised 1980); Donald Barthelme: A Comprehensive Bibliography (with others), 1977; The Life of Fiction, 1977; Kurt Vonnegut, 1980; The Practice of Fiction in America, 1980; The American 1960's, 1980; Peter Handke and the Postmodern Transformation (with James Knowlton), 1983; The Self-Apparent Word, 1984; Literary Subversions, 1985; The New American Novel of Manners, 1986; Kurt Vonnegut: A Comprehensive Bibliography (with Judie Huffman-Klinkowitz), 1987; A Short Season and Other Stories (as Jerry Klinkowitz), 1988; Rosenberg, Barthes, Hassan: The Postmodern Habit of Thought, 1988; Their Finest Hours: Narratives of the RAF and Luftwaffe in World War II, 1989; Slaughterhouse-Five: Reforming the Novel and the World, 1990; Listen, Gerry Mulligan: An Aural Narrative in Jazz, 1991; Donald Barthelme: An Exhibition, 1991; Structuring the Voice, 1992; and Basepaths (as Jerry Klinkowitz), 1995. Editor of Innovative Fiction, 1972; The Vonnegut Statement, 1973; and Writing under Fire: Stories of the Vietnam War, 1978 (all with John Somers); Vonnegut in America (with Donald L. Lawler), 1977; The Diaries of Willard Motley, 1979; Nathaniel Hawthorne, 1984; and Writing Baseball, 1991. Essays: Jonathan Baumbach; Stephen Dixon; Kenneth Gangemi; Clarence Major; Thomas McGuane; Gilbert Sorrentino; Michael Stephens; Ronald Sukenick; Dan Wakefield; Rudolph Wurltitzer.

KNIGHT, Judson. Freelance writer; co-owner of The Knight Agency, a firm specializing in literary sales and marketing. Author of Ancient Civilizations and Medieval Reference Library, 2000; Abbey Road to Zapple Records: A Beatles Encyclopedia, 1999; volumes in the UXL series Slavery Throughout History, 2000, and African American Biography, 1998; and three chapters in Don't Fence Me In: An Anecdotal Biography of Lewis Grizzard by Those Who Knew Him Best, 1995. Contributor to more than a dozen reference series published by Gale. Essays: Bret Easton Ellis; Michael Frayn; Marilyn French; Marge Piercy; Richard Powers; E. Annie Proulx; Piers Paul Read; Tom Robbins; Michèle Roberts; Peter Robinson; Philip Roth; Jane Rule; Thomas Savage; Will Self; Mona Simpson; Andrew Sinclair; F. Sionil Jose; Elizabeth Spencer; Alan Spence; Emma Tennant; Gillian Tindall; Peter Vansittart; Kurt Vonnegut, Jr.; Fay Weldon; Mary Wesley; Michael Wilding; Tom Winton.

KOHL, Judith C. Professor emeritus of English and Humanities, Dutchess Community College (SUNY); freelance writer. Former teacher at Exploring Transfer Program, Vassar College (also served on its board of directors), Marist College's Center for Lifetime Studies, and Washington College's Academy of Lifelong Learning, Chestertown, Maryland. Author of "Talk of the Towns" for the Kent County News (Maryland) and contributor to Contemporary Novelists (6th edition); An Encyclopedia of British Women Writers, 1988, 1998; Southern Writers, 1999; Lesbian Histories and Cultures, 2000; and The World Encyclopedia of Censorship (forthcoming), among others. Essays: Anita Brookner; David Guterson; Barbara Kingsolver; Hilary Masters; Alice McDermott; Tim Parks.

KORGES, James. Freelance writer. Editor of Critique: Studies in Modern Fiction, 1962–70. Author of Erskine Caldwell, 1969. Died 1975.

KORINKOVA, Iva. Doctoral candidate at the University of North Texas. She focuses on contemporary American literature, American culture studies, and feminism. She translates from English to Czech; she has published her translation of the book Quentin Tarantino: Shooting from the Hip and several articles by Bruce Sterling. Essay: Rita Mae Brown.

KROGH, Marta. Graduate student in American literature, University of North Texas, Denton. Essays: Kristin Hunter; Anita Shreve; Rudy Wiebe.

LANE, Suzanne. Teacher, Expository Writing Program, Harvard University. Specializes in contemporary African-American literature. Essays: Charles Johnson; Gayl Jones; Chang-rae Lee.

LANKFORD, Ryan. Teaches English at Auburn University, Alabama. Essay: Harry Crews.

LAUER, Josh. Freelance editor and writer, Lauer InfoText, Inc. Associate editor of Science and Its Times: Understanding the Social Significance of Scientific Discovery (7 vols., Gale, 2000–01). Contributing editor for Contemporary Literary Criticism (Gale).

LAY, Mary M. Associate professor of liberal studies, Clarkson University, Potsdam, New York. Author of Strategies for Technical Writing: A Rhetoric with Readings, 1982; and articles on Margaret Drabble and Henry James. Essays: Gail Godwin; Maureen Howard.

LECKER, Robert. Associate professor of English, McGill University, Montreal; editor of the journal Essays on Canadian Writing. Author of On the Line: Readings in the Short Fiction of Clark Blaise, John Metcalf and Hugh Hood, 1982; Robert Kroetsch, 1986; and Another I: The Fictions of Clark Blaise, 1988. Editor of The New Canadian Anthology: Poetry and Short Fiction in English (with Jack David), 1988; and several works on Canadian literature; co-editor of the series The Annotated Bibliography of Canada's Major Authors and Canadian Writers and Their Works. Essays: Clark Blaise; John Metcalf.

LeCLAIR, Thomas. Professor of English, University of Cincinnati. Author of In the Loop, 1987; The Art of Excess: Mastery in Contemporary American Fiction, 1989; and of articles on contemporary fiction in Tri-Quarterly, Contemporary Literature, and other journals; and reviews in New York Times Book Review, New Republic, Washington Post, and other periodicals. Editor, with Larry McCaffery, Anything Can Happen: Interviews with Contemporary American Novelists, 1983. Essays: Richard Powers; Alexander Theroux.

LEE, Hermione. Lecturer in English, University of York. Presenter, Book Four television programme, 1982–85. Author of The Novels of Virginia Woolf, 1977; Elizabeth Bowen: An Estimation, 1981; Philip Roth, 1982; Willa Cather: A Life Saved Up, 1989; and introductions to works by Flannery O'Connor, Edith Oliver, Antonia White, Bowen, Woolf, and Cather. Editor of Stevie Smith: A Selection, 1983; The Duke's Children by Trollope, 1983; The Secret Self: Short Stories by Women, 2 vols., 1985–87; The Mulberry Tree: Writings of Elizabeth Bowen, 1986; and The Short Stories of Willa Cather, 1989.

LEHMANN, John. Founding editor of New Writing, Daylight, Penguin New Writing, The London Magazine and the BBC's New Soundings. Author of poetry, including The Reader at Night, 1974; fiction, including In the Purely Pagan Sense, 1976; and In My Own Time: Memoirs of a Literary Life, Thrown to the Woolfs: Leonard and Virginia Woolf and the Hogarth Press, 1978; Rupert Brooke: His Life and His Legend, 1981; The English Poets of the First World War, 1981; Three Literary Friendships: Byron and Shelley, Rimbaud and Verlaine, Robert Frost and Edward Thomas, 1983; and Christopher Isherwood: A Personal Memoir, 1987. Editor of The Penguin New Writing 1940–50 (with John Fuller), 1985; and Vienna: A Travellers' Companion (with Richard Bassett), 1988. Died 1987.

LEIGH, Chris. Freelance writer. Author of numerous articles about American literature, Henry James, and Robert Penn Warren. Essay: William Cobb.

LEMBERGER, Michal. Doctoral candidate, University of California, Los Angeles. Dissertation on the use of Biblical themes in twentieth-century American poetry. Essay: Elizabeth Knox.

LEVIN, Harry. Irving Babbitt Professor of Comparative Literature, Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Author of many critical books, including The Myth of the Golden Age in the Renaissance, Grounds for Comparison, Shakespeare and the Revolution of the Times, 1976; Memories of the Moderns, 1981; and Playboys and Killjoys: An Essay on the Theory and Practice of Comedy, 1987.

LEWIS, Peter. Reader in English, University of Durham. Author of John Gay: The Beggar's Opera, 1976; Orwell: The Road to 1984, 1981; John le Carré, 1984; Fielding's Burlesque Drama, 1987; Eric Ambler, 1990; and The National: A Dream Made Concrete, 1990. Editor of The Beggar's Opera by John Gay, 1973; Poems '74 (anthology of Anglo-Welsh poetry), 1974; Papers of the Radio Literature Conference 1977, 1978; Radio Drama, 1981; and John Gay and the Scriblerians (with Nigel Wood), 1988. Essays: Peter Ackroyd; Paul Bailey; Maurice Gee; Nicholas Mosley; Emma Tennant.

LINDBERG, Stanley W. Editor of The Georgia Review and professor of English, University of Georgia, Athens. Author of The Annotated McGuffey, 1976; Van Nostrand's Plain English Handbook (with others), 1980; and co-author of The Nature of Copyright, 1991. Editor of The Plays of Frederick Reynolds, 3 vols., 1983; Keener Sounds: Selected Poems from the Georgia Review (with Stephen Corey), 1986; and The Legacy of Erskine Caldwell, 1989. Essays: Jack Matthews.

LINDSAY, Jack. Author of more than 100 books, including fiction, verse, and plays, and critical studies of William Blake, Mulk Raj Anand, Charles Dickens, George Meredith, William Morris, and others. Editor of works by Robert Herrick, Morris, J.M.W. Turner, and anthologies of poetry; and translator of Greek and Roman texts. Died 1990. Essay: James Aldridge.

LIVETT, Jennifer. Lecturer in English, University of Tasmania. Essav: Russell Hoban.

LODGE, David. See his own entry.

LOOSER, Devoney. Assistant professor of English and Women's Studies, Indiana State University. Author of numerous articles on women's literature and feminist theory. Editor, Jane Austen and Discourses of Feminism, 1995. Essays: Carolyn See; Mona Simpson.

LOW, Gail. Teacher of postcolonial and contemporary British and American literatures in English, University of Dundee, Scotland. Author of White Skins/Black Masks, 1996, and publications in New Formations, Research into African Literatures, Kunapipi and Women: A Cultural Review. Essay: Fred D'Aguiar.

LUCAS, John. Professor and head of the Department of English and Drama, Loughborough University, Leicestershire; advisory editor, Victorian Studies, Literature and History, and Journal of European Studies. Author of Tradition and Tolerance in 19th-Century Fiction, 1966; The Melancholy Man: A Study of Dickens's Novels, 1970; Arnold Bennett, 1975; Egitssaga: The Poems, 1975; The Literature of Change: Studies in the Nineteenth-Century Provincial Novel, 1977; The 1930's: Challenge to Orthodoxy, 1978; Romantic to Moderns: Literature: Essays and Ideas of Culture, 1750–1900, 1982; Modern and Contemporaries: Novelists, Poets, Critics, 1985; Modern English Poetry from Hardy to Hughes, 1986; Studying Grosz on the Bus, 1989; and England and Englishness, 1990. Editor of Literature and Politics in the Nineteenth-Century, 1971; and of works by George Crabbe and Jane Austen. Essay: Barry Cole.

LYNCH, Robert E. Professor of English, New Jersey Institute of Technology, Newark. Author of Professional Writing, 1993; and articles in The Reader's Encyclopedia of Shakespeare, 1966; and The Reader's Encyclopedia of World Drama, 1969. Editor of The Example of Science: An Approach to College Composition, 1981. Essays: Frederick Forsyth; Thomas Keneally; Leonard Michaels; John Mortimer.

MACDONALD, Andrew. Associate professor at Loyola University, New Orleans, Louisiana. Author of numerous articles on popular culture concerns and three books: Howard Fast, 1996; and, with Gina Macdonald and Mary Ann Sheridan, Shapeshifting: Images of Native Americans in Recent Popular Fiction, 2000, and Shaman or Sherlock? The Native American Detective, 2001. Essay: Andrei Codrescu.

MacDONALD, Gary D. Writer and teacher of English at Auburn University, Alabama, where he studies nineteenth-century American literature. Essay: Lee Smith.

MacDONALD, Gina. Author of numerous articles and reference entries for Buccoli Press, Salem Press, and St. James Press, and four books: James Clavell, 1995; Robert Ludlum, 1996; and, with Andrew Macdonald and MaryAnn Sheridan, Shapeshifting: Images of Native Americans in Recent Popular Fiction, 2000, and Shaman or Sherlock? The Native American Detective, 2001. Essays: Sherman Alexie; Barbara Mertz.

MACHANN, Clinton. Associate professor of English, Texas A & M University, College Station. Author of Krásná Amerika: A Study of the Texas Czechs 1851–1939, 1983; Jason Jackson (a novel), 1993; The Essential Matthew Arnold, 1993; The Genre of Autobiography in Victorian Literature, 1994; and numerous articles on British and American literature. Editor of Matthew Arnold in His Time and Ours (with Forrest D. Burt), 1988; Katherine Anne Porter and Texas: An Uneasy Relationship, 1990; Czech Voices: Stories from the Amerikan narodní kalendár, 1991; and Selected Letters of Matthew Arnold (with Forrest D. Burt), 1993. Essay: Leslie Marmon Silko.

MADDEN, David. See his own entry.

MAKOWSKY, Veronica. Professor of English, University of Connecticut. Author of Caroline Gordon: A Biography, 1989; Susan Glaspell's Century of American Women, 1993; and articles on southern and other American writers. Essay: Doris Betts.

MALIN, Irving. Professor of English, City College of the City University of New York. Author of William Faulkner: An Interpretation, 1957; New American Gothic, 1962; Jews and Americans, 1965; Saul Bellow's Fiction, 1969; Nathanael West's Novels, 1972; and Isaac Bashevis Singer, 1972. Editor of casebooks and collections of essays on Bellow, Capote, Styron, Singer, and McCullers, and of Psychoanalysis and American Fiction and Contemporary American-Jewish Literature. Essay: James Purdy.

MARX, Paul. Professor of English, University of New Haven, Connecticut. Editor of 12 Short Story Writers, 1970. Essays: Richard Ford; Larry Woiwode.

MATHEWS, Lawrence. Teaches English at Memorial University, Newfoundland. Essay: Ray Smith.

MATHIAS, Roland. Poet and critic; former editor of Anglo-Welsh Review, and former chairman of the Welsh Arts Council Literature Committee. Author of seven books of poetry (most recently Burning Brambles: Selected Poems 1944–1979, 1983); a collection of short stories; and studies of Vernon Watkins, John Cowper Powys, and Anglo-Welsh literature. Editor of Anglo-Welsh Poetry 1480–1980 (with Raymond Garlick), 1984; works by Welsh authors; and a collection of essays on David Jones. Essay: Emyr Humphreys.

McCORMICK, John. Emeritus professor of comparative literature, Rutgers University, New Brunswick, New Jersey. Author of Catastrophe and Imagination (on the modern novel), 1957; The Complete Aficionada, 1967; American Literature 1919–1932: A Comparative History, 1971; Fiction as Knowledge, 1975; George Santayana: A Biography, 1987; and Wolfe, Malraux, Hesse: A Study in Creative Vitality, 1987. Essay: Sybille Bedford.

McDOWELL, Frederick P.W. Professor of English, University of Iowa, Iowa City. Author of Ellen Glasgow and the Ironic Art of Fiction, 1960; Elizabeth Madox Roberts, 1963; Caroline Gordon, 1966; Forster: An Annotated Bibliography of Writings about Him, 1976; E.M. Forster, 1982; and articles on Shaw and Robert Penn Warren. Essays: Melvyn Bragg; Frederic Raphael.

McDOWELL, Margaret B. Professor of rhetoric and women's Studies, University of Iowa, Iowa City. Author of Edith Wharton, 1975 (revised 1990); and Carson McCullers, 1980. Essays: Ellen Gilchrist; Jamaica Kincaid; Gloria Naylor; Tillie Olsen.

McLEOD, John. Lecturer in English, LSU College of Higher Education, Southampton. Essays: Michael Ondaatje; Caryl Phillips.

McMECHAN, Ian. Freelance writer. Author of articles on contemporary crime fiction. Essays: Madison Smartt Bell; Tama Janowitz; Tim O'Brien; Tom Wolfe.

McNEILLY, Kevin. Faculty member, Department of English, University of British Columbia; freelance writer and critic. Essays: Jeannette Armstrong; Thomas King; Wole Soyinka.

MEPHAM, John. Freelance writer and teacher of philosophy and literature, Bennington College, Vermont. Co-author of Issues in Marxist Philosophy, 4 vols., 1979; author of To the Lighthouse by Virginia Woolf (study guide), 1987; Virginia Woolf: A Literary Life, 1991; and Virginia Woolf: State of the Art, 1991; and of many articles on philosophy and literature. Essay: Gabriel Josipovici.

MERIVALE, Patricia. Professor of English, University of British Columbia, Vancouver. Author of Pan the Goat-God: His Myth in Modern Times; and of articles in Harvard Studies in Comparative Literature and other periodicals. Essay: Jerzy Peterkiewicz.

MIELKE, Robert E. Assistant Professor of English, Northeast Missouri State University, Kirksville. Author of The Riddle of the Painful Earth: Suffering and Society in W.D. Howells's Major Writings of the Early 1890's; and articles in Northwest Review, Paintbrush; and other journals. Essay: J.G. Ballard.

MILLER, D. Quentin. Freelance writer; creative writing instructor and doctoral candidate in English, University of Connecticut, Storrs. Essays: Cormac McCarthy; Tim O'Brien.

MILNES, Stephen. Doctoral candidate, University of British Columbia. Essay: Sky Lee.

MOHANRAM, Radhika. Lecturer, Department of Women's Studies, University of Waikato, New Zealand. Author of articles on New Zealand postcolonial feminism. Co-editor of Postcolonial Discourse and Changing Cultural Contexts (forthcoming), and English Postcoloniality: Literatures from around the World (forthcoming). Essays: Upamanyu Chatterjee; Amy Tan.

MONTROSE, David. Freelance writer. Regular reviewer for the Times Literary Supplement. Essay: William Boyd.

MOORE, Gerald. Editor of the Modern African Writers series. Former Professor of English, University of Jos, Nigeria. Author of The Chosen Tongue, 1969; Wole Soyinka, 1971 (revised 1978); and Twelve African Writers, 1980. Editor, with Ulli Beier, of The Penguin Book of Modern African Poetry, 1984. Essays: Elechi Amadi; George Lamming; Garth St. Omer.

MOORE, Harry T. Research professor of English emeritus, Southern Illinois University, Carbondale; editor of the Crosscurrents/ Modern Critiques series. Author and editor of many books, including studies of Lawrence, Steinbeck, Forster, Rilke, Durrell, and James. Died 1981. Essay: Francis Stuart.

MORACE, Robert A. Teacher at Daemen College, Amherst, New York. Author of The Dialogic Novels of Malcolm Bradbury and David Lodge, John Gardner: An Annotated Secondary Bibliography, and numerous essays on contemporary literature, including most recently "The Life and Times of Ariel Dorfman's Death and the Maiden." Co-editor (with Kathryn Van Spanckeren) of John Gardner: Critical Perspectives. Essays: Malcolm Bradbury; Tibor Fischer; Janice Galloway; Nick Hornby; Carole Maso; Candia McWilliam; Rohinton Mistry; Lawrence Norfolk; Will Self; Irvine Welsh.

MORDDEL, Anne. Freelance writer. Essays: Mervyn Jones; Marilynne Robinson.

MORPURGO, J.E. Emeritus professor of American literature, University of Leeds. Author and editor of many books, including The Pelican History of the United States, 1955 (third edition 1970); Master of None: An Autobiography, 1990; and volumes on Cooper, Lamb, Trelawny, Cobbett, Barnes Wallis, Margery Allingham, the publisher Allen Lane, and on Athens, Venice, and rugby football.

MOSS, Laura. Assistant professor of postcolonial literature and theory at the University of Manitoba. Research and teaching interests include the literatures of Canada, Southern Africa, Nigeria, India, Trinidad, New Zealand, and Australia; performance and politics; multiculturalism in Canada; and the intersection of race and gender studies. Recent publications include work on Chinua Achebe, Ngugi, Ian Wedde, Rohinton Mistry, Salman Rushdie, and postcolonial theory. She is currently editing a critical edition of Frances Brooke's early epistolary novel The History of Emily Montague. Essays: Peter Carey; Timothy Findley; Thomas King; Ann-Marie MacDonald.

MUIRHEAD, Eric. Member of the English faculty and director of creative writing, San Jacinto College, Pasadena, Texas. Author of poetry and short stories in journals and anthologies. Essay: Daniel Stern.

MURPHY, Graham J. Doctoral candidate in English literature, University of Alberta; instructor at Seneca College, Toronto. Dissertation: Cy(ber)borg Netizens: (Re)Configuring the Post/Human Body in the Cultural Intersections of ScyberFiction and Cyberspace. Author of material on Tarzan comic books, N. Katherine Hayles' How We Became Posthuman, and Pierre Lévy's Collective Intelligence. Co-editor of Paddy Whacking: The Irish in Popular Literature of the Early American Republic. Essays: Arthur C. Clarke; Samuel R. Delany.

MURRAY, Heather. Independent scholar and critic; co-editor of the Journal of New Zealand Literature. Author of Double Lives: Women in the Stories of Katherine Mansfield. Essays: Marilyn Duckworth; Stephanie Johnson.

MURRAY-SMITH, Stephen. Reader in education, University of Melbourne. Founding editor of Overland; and former editor of Melbourne Studies in Education. Author of Henry Lawson, 1962 (2nd edition 1975); Mission to the Islands, 1979; and Indirections, 1981. Editor of The Tracks We Travel, 1953; An Overland Muster, 1965; His Natural Life by Marcus Clarke, 1970; Classic Australian Short Stories (with Judah Waten), 1974; and The Dictionary of Australian Quotations, 1984.

NADLER, Janna Z. Doctoral candidate, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario. Research interests include Canadian fiction and the figure of the child in contemporary Canadian immigrant fiction. Essay: Anne Rice.

NARAYAN, Shyamala A. Lecturer in English, Ranchi Women's College, India. Author of Sudhin N. Ghose, 1973; Raja Rao: The Man and His Work, 1988; and studies of Nissim Ezekiel, Amitav Ghosh,

Salman Rushdie, Shashi Tharoor, and other Indian writers; and reviews in Indian Literature, The Hindu, Journal of Indian Writing in English, and other periodicals. Compiler of the Indian section of "The Bibliography of Commonwealth Literature" published annually in Journal of Commonwealth Literature. Essays: Mulk Raj Anand; Sasthi Brata; Shashi Deshpande; Chaman Nahal; Nayantara Sahgal.

NEW, W.H. Professor of English, University of British Columbia, Vancouver. Author and editor of numerous books on postcolonial subjects, including Dreams of Speech and Violence: The Art of the Short Story in Canada and New Zealand; Land Sliding: Imagining Space, Presence, and Power in Canadian Writing; A History of Canadian Literature; Borderlands; and Reading Mansfield and Metaphors of Form. Also the author of several books of poetry, including Science Lessons, Raucous, Stone Rain (forthcoming), and Vanilla Gorilla (for children). Essays: Janet Frame; Zulfikar Ghose; Randolph Stow.

NEWMAN, Judie. Lecturer in English, University of Newcastle upon Tyne. Author of Saul Bellow and History, 1984; John Updike, 1988; and Nadine Gordimer, 1988. Editor of Gred: A Tale of the Great Dismal Swamp by Harriet Beecher Stowe, 1992. Essay: Mary Gordon.

NORRIS, Leslie. Poet and lecturer. Christensen Fellow in the Humanities, Brigham Young University, Salt Lake City. Author of several books of poetry including Sliding and Other Stories, 1976; Walking the White Fields, 1980; The Girl from Cardigan: Sixteen Stories, 1989; and a study of Glyn Jones. Editor of a translation of The Mabinogion and of books on Vernon Watkins and Andrew Young; and translator of The Sonnets of Orpheus by Rilke (with Alan Keele), 1989. Essay: Glyn Jones.

NOWAK, Maril. Lecturer in English, Rochester Institute of Technology and Hobart and William Smith Colleges. Essay: Doris Grumbach.

NYE, Robert. See his own entry. Essay: Alan Burns.

O'BRIEN, Liam. Freelance writer. Essay: Howard Jacobson.

O'HEARN, D.J. Sub-dean, Faculty of Arts, University of Melbourne. Author of articles on Australian literature; regular fiction reviewer for Melbourne Age and Sydney Australian. Died 1993. Essay: Morris Lurie.

O'LEARY, John. Freelance writer. Essays: Ron Hansen; Noel Virtue.

ORR, Leonard. Associate professor of English and Liberal Arts Coordinator, Washington State University, Richland. Author of ten books, including Research in Critical Theory Since 1965, 1989; A Dictionary of Critical Theory, 1991; Problems and Poetics of the Nonaristotelian Novel, 1991; Yeats and Postmodernism, 1991; Critical Essays on Samuel Taylor Coleridge, 1994; A Joseph Conrad Companion, 1999; and numerous book and journal essays. Editor of International Review of Modernism.

ORTEGO, James. Doctoral candidate and teacher, University of Louisiana, Lafayette. Specializes in the study of medieval and Renaissance literature as well as the modern novel written in English. Essay: Bernard MacLaverty.

OZICK, Cynthia. See her own entry.

PACEY, Desmond. Late vice-president (academic), University of New Brunswick, Fredericton. Author of Frederick Philip Grove, 1945; Creative Writing in Canada, 1952 (revised 1962); The Picnic and Other Stories, 1958; Our Literary Heritage, 1968; and Essays in Canadian Criticism, 1969. Editor of A Book of Canadian Stories, 1947; and Ten Canadian Poets, 1958. Died 1975.

PAGE, Malcolm. Professor of English, Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, British Columbia. Author of John Arden, 1984; Richard II, 1987; Howard's End, 1993. Editor of the volumes in the Writers on File series on John Arden, Alan Ayckbourn, David Edgar, Michael Frayn, David Hare, John Osborne, Harold Pinter, Peter Shaffer, and Tom Stoppard. Essay: Michael Frayn.

PARISI, Joseph. Editor-in-chief of Poetry magazine, Chicago. Author of Viewers' Guide to "Voices and Visions," 1987; and Marianne Moore: The Art of a Modernist, 1990. Editor of The "Poetry" Anthology 1912–1977 (with Daryl Hine), 1978. Essays: Janet Burroway; Colin Spencer.

PEHOWSKI, Marian. Freelance writer and critic. Has taught comparative literature or journalism at five universities. Essay: Hortense Calisher.

PENNER, Tom. Doctoral candidate, University of Alberta. Research interests hinge upon the liminal performance of identity within Canadian multicultural literatures. Essay: Kazuo Ishiguro.

PERKINS, George. Professor of English, Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti. Author or editor of Writing Clear Prose, 1964; Varieties of Prose, 1966; The Theory of the American Novel, 1970; Realistic American Short Fiction, 1972; American Poetic Theory, 1972; The Harper Handbook to Literature (with others), 1985; The Practical Imagination (with others), 1987; Contemporary American Literature (with Barbara Perkins), 1988; The American Tradition in Literature (with others), seventh edition, 1990; and Reader's Encyclopedia of American Literature (with Barbara Perkins and Phil Leininger), 1991. Essay: Robert Gover.

PHILLIPS, Lisa A. Writer and public radio reporter. She has taught writing and earned her M.F.A at the University of Pittsburgh. Essays: Frederick Busch; Richard Ford; Abby Frucht; Richard Price; Susan Straight; D.M. Thomas.

PIERCY, Marge. See her own entry. Essay: Joanna Russ.

PILDITCH, Jan. Lecturer in English, University of Waikato, Hamilton, New Zealand. Essay: Peter Tinniswood.

PINSKER, Sanford. Shadek Humanities Professor, Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pennsylvania. Author of The Schlemiel as Metaphor: Studies in the Yiddish and American-Jewish Novel, 1971; The Comedy That "Hoits": An Essay on the Fiction of Philip Roth, 1975; Still Life and Other Poems, 1975; The Languages of Joseph Conrad, 1978; Between Two Worlds: The American Novel in the 1960's, 1978; Memory Breaks Off and Other Poems, 1984; Conversations with Contemporary American Writers, 1985; The Uncompromising Fictions of Cynthia Ozick, 1987; Bearing the Bad News: Contemporary American Literature and Culture, 1990; Jewish-American Fiction, 1917–1987, 1992; The Catcher in the Rye: Innocence Under Pressure, 1993; and many articles on contemporary fiction. Editor of Critical Essays on Philip Roth, 1982; and America and the Holocaust (with Jack Fischel), 1984. Essays: T. C. Boyle;

David Bradley; Bruce Jay Friedman; Johanna Kaplan; Maxine Hong Kingston; Jay Neugeboren; E. Annie Proulx, Jane Smiley.

PORTALES, Marco. Associate professor of literature, University of Houston, Clear Lake; associate editor of MELUS. Author of Youth and Age in American Literature, 1989; and articles on Virginia Woolf, Henry James, Twain, Kate Chopin, Sarah Orne Jewett, Chicano and Native American writers, and other subjects. Essay: Rudolfo A. Anaya.

PORTER, Hal. Fiction writer, poet, and playwright. Author of three novels (A Handful of Pennies, The Tilted Cross, The Right Thing); several collections of short stories (Selected Stories, 1971); four plays; three books of poetry; three volumes of autobiography; and other non-fiction; a general selection, Hal Porter, was published in 1980. Died 1984.

POVEY, John. Teacher of English as a second language and applied linguistics, Los Angeles, California. Editor of A Sociolinguistic Profile of Urban Centers in Cameroon (with others), 1983. Essays: Chinua Achebe; Miriam Tlali.

POWELL, Anthony. Writer. Noted for his landmark series titled "A Dance to the Music of Time," comprising twelve novels.

POWER, Cathy Kelly. Teacher, English Department, Alabama Southern Community College; assistant director for the Alabama Center for Literary Arts; project director for the Alabama Writers Symposium. Essay: Albert Murray.

POYNTING, Jeremy. Lecturer, Thomas Danby College, Leeds. Author of articles in Journal of Commonwealth Literature, Journal of South Asian Literature, World Literature Written in English, Kykover-Al, and other periodicals. Essays: Michael Anthony; Ralph de Boissière.

PRICE, Joanna. Lecturer, Liverpool John Moores University. Essays: Bret Easton Ellis; A.L. Kennedy.

PURDY, Elizabeth. Political scientist and freelance writer. Essay: Winston Groom.

PYKETT, Lyn. Senior lecturer in English, University College of Wales, Aberystwyth. Author of Emily Brontë, 1989; and of articles on contemporary fiction in Critical Quarterly, New Welsh Review, and Watching the Detectives edited by Ian A. Bell and Graham Daldry, 1990. Essays: Anita Brookner; Marge Piercy.

QUIGLY, Isabel. Freelance writer and critic. Author of the novel The Eye of Heaven, 1955; The Heirs of Tom Brown: The English School Story, 1982; a book on Charlie Chaplin; and many articles and reviews in The Times, The Guardian, and other periodicals. Editor, with Susan Hill, of New Stories 5, 1980. Translator of works of European fiction and non-fiction. Essay: Winston Graham.

RAVENSCROFT, Arthur. Late senior lecturer in English, University of Leeds; founding editor, Journal of Commonwealth Literature, 1965–79. Author of Chinua Achebe, 1969 (revised 1977); Nigerian Writers and the African Past, 1978; A Guide to Twentieth-Century English, Irish and Commonwealth Literature (with Harry Blamires and Peter Quartermain), 1983; and "Teaching Words" in African Literature, 1986. Translator, with C.K. Johnman, of Journal of Jan van Riebeeck, vol. 3, 1958. Died 1989. Essays: I.N.C. Aniebo; Ahmed Essop; John Munonye; Ngugi wa Thiong'o.

RAY, Sandra. Novelist and freelance writer. Essays: Louis Auchincloss; Alice Hoffman.

REILLY, John M. Professor of English, State University of New York, Albany. Author of many articles on African-American literature, popular crime writing, and social fiction, and bibliographical essays in Black American Writers, 1978; and American Literary Scholarship. Editor of Richard Wright: The Critical Reception, 1978; and the reference book Twentieth-Century Crime and Mystery Writers, 1980 (2nd edition 1985). Essays: Kristin Hunter; Paule Marshall; Peter Matthiessen; Al Young.

REISMAN, Jessica. Writer of fiction, screenplays, and nonfiction; research associate at the University of Texas, Austin. Author of works in various publications, including the magazines Realms of Fantasy and The Third Alternative. Essays: Andrea Barrett; Gita Mehta.

REXROTH, Kenneth. Poet and critic; lecturer at the University of California, Santa Barbara. Author of many books of verse (including The Morning Star, 1979); plays (Beyond the Mountains, 1951); and non-fiction (including The Elastic Retort, 1973; and Communalism, 1975). Editor of several collections of poetry and translator of works by Asian, European, and classical authors. Died 1982.

RHODES, H. Winston. Late professor of English, University of Canterbury, Christchurch, New Zealand. Co-founder of Tomorrow and New Zealand Monthly Review. Author of New Zealand Fiction since 1945, 1968; Frank Surgeson, 1969; New Zealand Novels, 1969; Frederick Sinclaire: A Memoir, 1984; and other books. Editor of six volumes of Rewi Alley's prose and poetry and I Saw in My Dream by Sargeson, 1976. Died 1987. Essay: Albert Wendt.

RIACH, Alan. Senior lecturer in English, University of Waikato, Hamilton, New Zealand. Author of three collections of poetry: The Folding Map, 1990; An Open Return, 1991; and Hugh MacDiarmid's Epic Poetry, 1991. Editor of The Radical Imagination: Lectures and Talks by Wilson Harris; Selected Poems and Selected Prose by Hugh MacDiarmid; and general editor of Collected Works by Hugh MacDiarmid. Essays: Wilson Harris; Ben Okri.

ROBERTSON, Karen. Visiting assistant professor of English, Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, New York. Author of articles on Renaissance revenge tragedy. Editor of the forthcoming books Sexuality and Politics in Renaissance Drama (with Carole Levin) and John Pikeryng's Horestes (with Jodi George). Essay: Maeve Binchy.

ROSE, Marilyn. Associate professor, Department of English, and Director, Canadian Studies Program, Brock University, St. Catharines, Ontario. Author of various articles, papers, and encyclopedia entries on Canadian fiction and poetry, as well as a number of papers on Canadian detective fiction. Essay: Peter Robinson.

ROSS, Alan. Editor of London Magazine and managing director of London Magazine Editions. Author of several books of poetry, including Death Valley, 1980; and of critical works, travel books, and books for children. Editor of works by John Gay and Lawrence Durrell and of several anthologies. Translator of four French works.

ROSSET, Barney. Former president of Grove Press, Inc. Editor of Evergreen Review Reader 1 and 2, 1979.

ROTH, Christine. Doctoral candidate, University of Florida. Specializes in Victorian studies and travel narratives. Dissertation on the cult of the little girl in late nineteenth-century England. Essay: Paul Theroux.

ROWLAND, S. A. Freelance writer. Essays: Michèle Roberts; Colin Thubron.

ROYLE, Trevor. Freelance writer and broadcaster; literary editor of Scotland on Sunday. Author of We'll Support You Ever More: The Impertinent Saga of Scottish Fitba', with Ian Archer, 1976; Jock Tamson's Bairns: Essays on a Scots Childhood, 1977; Precipitous City: The Story of Literary Edinburgh, 1980; Death Before Dishonour: The True Story of Fighting Mac, 1982; The Macmillan Companion to Scottish Literature, 1983; James and Jim: The Biography of James Kennaway, 1983; The Kitchener Enigma, 1985; The Best Years of Their Lives: The National Service Experience 1945–63, 1986; War Report: The War Correspondent's View of Battle from the Crimea to the Falklands, 1987; The Last Days of the Raj, 1989; Anatomy of a Regiment, 1990; and In Flanders Fields: Scottish Poetry and Prose of the First World War, 1991; and many articles in journals. Editor of A Dictionary of Military Quotations, 1990. Essays: Richard Adams; Stan Barstow; Nina Bawden; Jonathan Coe; Ronald Frame; Brian Glanville; Giles Gordon; Alasdair Gray; Clifford Haney; Robin Jenkins; Benedict Kiely; Allan Massie; Robert Nye; Charles Palliser; James Plunkett.

RUBIN, Alan. Doctoral candidate in English at Lehigh University, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. Essay: Martin Amis.

RUBIN, Louis D., Jr. Professor of English, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill; general editor, Southern Literary Studies series; co-editor, Southern Literary Journal. Author and editor of many books, including the novel The Golden Weather, 1961; and William Elliott Shoots a Bear, 1975; The Wary Fugitives: Four Poets and the South, 1978; The American South: Portrait of a Culture, 1979; The Even-Tempered Angler, 1983; A Gallery of Southerners, 1984; The Literary South, 1986; An Apple for My Teacher, 1987; and The Edge of the Swamp, 1989. Essay: William Styron.

SADLER, Geoff. Assistant librarian, local studies, Chesterfield, Derbvshire. Author of western novels (as Jeff Sadler), including, most recently Hangrope Journey, 1994; and (as Wes Calhoun) Sierra Trail, 1993; the Justus trilogy of planation novels (as Geoffrey Sadler), 1982; a 5-volume history of Chesterfield librarians 1879–1944; Around Shirebrook, 1994; and Journey to Freedom (with Antoni Snarski), 1990. Editor of the reference book Twentieth-Century Western Writers, 2nd edition, 1991. Essays: Stan Barstow; Rachel Billington; Clare Boylan; Michael Crichton; Desmond Hogan; David Plante; David Pownall; Ruth Rendell; Rose Tremain.

SAMBROOK, Hana. Freelance editor and writer. Author of study guides to The Tenant of Wildfell Hall, Lark Rise to Candleford, Victory, My Family and Other Animals, and Sylvia Plath: Selected Works. Essays: Janice Elliott; Margaret Forster; Hilary Mantel; Bernice Rubens.

SANDERS, David. Emeritus professor of English, Harvey Mudd College, Claremont, California. Author of John Hersey, 1967; John Dos Passos: A Comprehensive Bibliography, 1987; John Hersey, Revisited, 1990. Essay: Vance Bourjaily.

SANDERSON, Stewart. Honorary Harold Orton Fellow, University of Leeds, now retired; former chair of the literature committee, Scottish Arts Council. Author of Ernest Hemingway, 1961 (revised 1970); and of many articles on British and comparative folklore and ethnology, and on modern literature. Editor of The Secret Common-Wealth by Robert Kirk, 1976; The Linguistic Atlas of England (with others), 1978; Studies in Linguistic Geography, 1985; and World Maps: A Dialect Atlas of England, 1987. Essay: Dorothy Dunnett.

SCHAFER, William J. Professor of English, Berea College, Kentucky. Author of articles on David Wagoner, Mark Harris, and Ralph Ellison in Critique and Satire Newsletter. Editor of The William Nelson Reader, 1989. Essays: Elliott Baker; Stephen Becker; Thomas Berger; Harry Crews; Nell Dunn; David Ely; Mark Harris; Reynolds Price; Ishmael Reed; Wilfrid Sheed; Clancy Sigal; David Wagoner.

SCHLAGER, Neil. President, Schlager Information Group, Inc. Editor of St. James Press Gay and Lesbian Almanac (St. James Press), 1998, Best Literature By and About Blacks (Gale), 2000, and Science and Its Times: Understanding the Social Significance of Scientific Discovery (7 vols., Gale), 2000–01.

SCHORER, Mark. Late professor of English, University of California, Berkeley. Author of three novels, three collections of short stories, and several critical works, including studies of Blake, Lawrence, and Sinclair Lewis. Editor of anthologies of fiction and literary criticism and of works by Capote and Lawrence. Died 1977.

SCHRECENGOST, Lynda D. Freelance writer and editor. Essays: Boman Desai; Kelvin Christopher James; Ursula K. Le Guin; Albert Wendt.

SCHREYER, Roberta. Associate professor, English and Communication Department, State University of New York, Potsdam. Teaches a wide range of courses, including women and literature and psychology and literature. Essays: Margaret Forster; Edna O'Brien.

SEMPLE, Linda. Writer, and owner of Silver Moon Women's Bookshop, London. Author of A Suitable Job for a Woman: Women Mystery Writers, 1990; and many articles and reviews on women writers. Essay: Rita Mae Brown.

SHAUF, Michele S. Assistant professor, School of Literature, Communication, and Culture, Georgia Institute of Technology, Atlanta. Essays: Dorothy Allison; Wilma Dykeman; Percy Everett; Hugo Hamilton; Jane Hamilton; William T. Vollmann; David Foster Wallace.

SHUCARD, Alan R. Professor of English, University of Wisconsin-Parkside, Kenosha. General editor of the English Section of Twayne's Critical History of Poetry series. Author of three books on poetry, a study of Countee Cullen, 1984; American Poetry: The Puritans Through Walt Whitman, 1988; and Modern American Poetry, 1865'1950 (with Fred Moramarco and William Sullivan), 1989; as well as numerous articles on American poetry and fiction. Essay: Kathrin Perutz.

SIMPSON, Melissa. Freelance writer. Essays: Pat Conroy; Toni Morrison.

SMALLMAN, Victoria A. Doctoral candidate at McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario. Essay: Patrick McCabe.

SMITH, Angela. Director, Centre of Commonwealth Studies, University of Stirling, Scotland. Author of East African Writing in English, 1989; the chapter on writing in Mauritius in The Writing of East and Central Africa edited by G.D. Killam, 1985; and of study guides to Wuthering Heights, Persuasion, and Voss. Essay: Ayi Kwei Armah.

SMITH, Christopher. Senior lecturer, School of Modern Languages and European History, University of East Anglia, Norwich; editor of Seventeenth-Century French Studies. Author of Alabaster, Bikinis and Calvados: An ABC of Toponymous Words, 1985; Jean Anouilh: Life, Work, Criticism, 1985; and many articles and reviews of the performing arts. Editor of works by Antoine de Montchrestien, Jean de la Taille, and Pierre Matthieu. Essays: Buchi Emecheta; Peter Vansittart.

SMITH, Curtis C. Professor of humanities, University of Houston, Clear Lake. Author of Olaf Stapledon: A Bibliography (with Harvey J. Satty), 1984. Editor of the reference book Twentieth-Century Science-Fiction Writers, 1981 (2nd edition, 1986). Essay: Ursula K. LeGuin.

SOLOMON, Andy. Professor of English, University of Tampa; fiction editor of The Tampa Review; regular book critic for the New York Times, Washington Post, Chicago Tribune, Boston Globe, Los Angeles Times, San Francisco Chronicle, Miami Herald, and St. Petersburg Times; book commentator and essayist on National Public Radio. Author of fiction, poetry, and articles in the Atlantic, Boulevard, and New Orleans Review. Essays: Madison Smartt Bell; Mary Lee Settle; Carol Shields.

SOLOMON, Eric. Professor of English, San Francisco State University. Author of Stephen Crane in England, 1963; Stephen Crane: From Parody to Realism, 1966; and many articles on 19th- and 20th-century British and American fiction. Editor of The Faded Banners, 1960; and The Critic Agonistes, 1985. Essay: Albert Guerard.

SPARKS, Tabitha. Doctoral candidate, University of Washington; teaches literature and cultural studies at Georgia Institute of Technology. Dissertation on Victorian literature. Essays: Mary Beckett; Carolyn Chute.

STEDMAN, Jane W. Emeritus professor of English, Roosevelt University, Chicago. Author of W.S. Gilbert: A Classic Victorian and His Theatre, 1995; and poems, articles, and reviews in anthologies of Victorian studies, scholarly journals, literary periodicals, and Opera News. Editor of Gilbert Before Sullivan: Six Comic Plays, 1967. Essays: P.D. James; Ira Levin; Anne Perry.

STEEMSON, Caroline. Tutor in women's studies and women's history, University of Waikato, Hamilton, New Zealand. Essay: Sue McCauley.

STEIN, Mark. Teaching fellow at Johann Wolfgang Goethe Universität (Frankfurt) and a research assistant at University of Kent (Canterbury). Research interests are postcolonial and diaspora theory, and British cultural studies. Author of essays on Black British, African and West Indian literatures in the journals Wasafiri, Kunapipi, and several edited collections. Co-editor of Can the Subaltern Be Read? Acolit Special, 1996. Essay: Jackie Kay.

STERN, Carol Simpson. Professor and Chair of the Department of Performance Studies, Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois. Former Dean of The Graduate School, Northwestern University. Former President of the American Association of University Professors. Held numerous positions on the Councils and Boards of The American Association of University Professors, Council of Graduate Schools, National Communication Association, Northwestern University Press, Museum of Contemporary Art, and others. Author of Performance: Texts and Contexts (with Bruce Henderson), 1993. Regular contributor to Contemporary Novelists, Contemporary Poets, Contemporary Dramatists, Reference Guide to Short Fiction, British Mystery and Thriller Writers Since, 1940, Dictionary of Literary Biography (volume 87), and Twentieth Century Crime and Mystery Writers. Contributed articles to Communication Quarterly, Victorian Studies, English Literature in Transition, Literature in Performance, and other journals. Contributor of a chapter to Academic Freedom: An Everyday Concern, edited by Ernst Benjamin, 1995. Essays: Doris Lessing; Joyce Carol Oates; Judith Rossner; John Updike.

STEVENS, James R. Master, Confederation College, Thunder Bay, Ontario. Author of Sacred Legends of the Sandy Lake Cree, 1971; Paddy Wilson's Gold Fever, 1976; Legends from the Forest, 1985; and Killing the Shamen, 1985. Essay: Fred Bodsworth.

STONEHILL, Brian. Associate professor of English, Pomona College, Claremont, California; formerly fiction editor for the Chicago Review. Author of The Self-Conscious Novel: Artifice in Fiction from Joyce to Pynchon, 1988; and articles and reviews for the Los Angeles Times and the Washington Post. Essays: Harry Mathews; Joseph McElroy.

STRANDBERG, Victor. Professor of English, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina. Author of A Colder Fire: The Poetry of Robert Penn Warren, 1965; The Poetic Vision of Robert Penn Warren, 1977; A Faulkner Overview: Six Perspectives, 1981; Religious Psychology in American Literature: A Study in the Relevance of William James, 1981; and "The Art of Cynthia Ozick" in Texas Studies in Literature and Language, Summer 1983. Essay: Cynthia Ozick.

STRUTHERS, J.R. Faculty member, Department of English, University of Guelph. Author of numerous articles in books and periodicals, including essays, interviews, and bibliographies of Hugh Hood and Alice Munro. Editor of Before the Flood: Our Exagmination round His Factification for Incamination of Hugh Hood's Work in Progress, 1979; The Montreal Story Tellers, 1985; Origins, 1985; New Directions from Old, 1991; The Possibilities of Story, 2 vols., 1992; Canadian Classics (with John Metcalf), 1993; and How Stories Mean (with John Metcalf), 1993. Essays: Jack Hodgins; Hugh Hood; Alice Munro.

STUCKEY, W.J. Professor of English, Purdue University, Lafayette, Indiana; founding editor of Minnesota Review, acting editor of Modern Fiction Studies, and associate editor of Journal of Narrative Technique. Author of Pulitzer Prize Novels, 1966 (revised 1980); and Caroline Gordon, 1972. Essay: Frank Tuohy.

SULLIVAN, Maggi R. Lecturer in English, Finger Lakes Community College, Canandaigua, New York; freelance writer. Editor of a two-volume series on local history. Essay: Allan Gurganis.

SUMMERS, Judith. Freelance writer. Author of two novels (Dear Sister, 1985; and I, Gloria Gold, 1988); and of Soho: A History of London's Most Colourful Neighbourhood, 1989. Essay: Zoë Fairbairns.

SUTHERLAND, Fraser. Freelance writer; managing editor of Books in Canada magazine. Author of several books, including The Style of Innocence: A Study of Hemingway and Callaghan, 1972; Madwomen (poetry), 1978; John Glassco: An Essay and Bibliography, 1984;

Whitefaces (poetry), 1986; The History of Canadian Magazines, 1988; and of fiction, poetry, and criticism in journals and anthologies. Essay: Douglas Glover.

SUTHERLAND, John. Professor of English, California Institute of Technology, Pasadena. Author of Fiction and the Fiction Industry, 1978; Bestsellers: Popular Fiction of the 1970's, 1980; Offensive Literature: Decensorship in Britain, 1982; The Longman Companion to Victorian Fiction, 1988 (as The Sanford Companion to Victorian Fiction, 1989); and Mrs. Humphry Ward: Eminent Victorian, Preeminent Edwardian, 1990. Editor of works by Jack London, Thackeray, and Trollope. Essay: Tom Sharpe.

SWINFORD, Dean. Doctoral candidate in English at the University of Florida. Essay: J. G. Ballard.

SYKES, Arlene. Senior Lecturer in English, University of Queensland, Brisbane. Formerly editor in the Drama Department, Australian Broadcasting Commission. Author of Harold Pinter, 1970; and of articles on modern drama and Australian fiction. Editor of Five Plays for Radio and four other anthologies of Australian plays. Essay: Jessica Anderson.

TACON, Shana. Postgraduate student, Department of English, University of Queensland, Australia; researching Pacific women's writing. Essay: Barbara Anderson.

TALLEY, Sharon. Recently completed a Ph.D. in American literature at the University of North Texas and currently teaches English at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. Her particular interests include nineteenth- and twentieth-century American literature, death in literature, and nonfiction prose studies. Essay: Saul Bellow.

TANNER, Tony. Reader in English, King's College, Cambridge. Author of books on Conrad and Bellow and of The Reign of Wonder: Naivety and Reality in American Literature, 1965; City of Words: American Fiction 1950–1970, 1971; Adultery in the Novel, 1980; Thomas Pynchon, 1982; Henry James: The Writer and His Work, 1985; Jane Austen, 1986; and Scenes of Nature, Signs of Men, 1987. Editor of works by Jane Austen, Henry James, and Herman Melville, and of a collection of essays on James.

TAYLOR, Anna-Marie. Lecturer in drama, University of Wales, Swansea; freelance theatre critic. Author of numerous articles on contemporary literature and European drama. Essays: Kazuo Ishiguro; Alison Lurie.

THIEME, John. Professor and head of English Studies, South Bank University, London; previously taught at the Universities of Guyana, North London, and Hull. Author of numerous articles on postcolonial writing, particularly Caribbean, Canadian, and Indian literatures; books include The Web of Tradition: Uses of Allusion in V.S. Naipaul's Fiction, 1987; The Arnold Anthology of Post-Colonial Literatures in English, 1996; and Derek Walcott, 1999. Articles Editor for The Journal of Commonwealth Literature and General Editor of the Manchester University Press Contemporary World Writers Series. Essay: Robert Kroetsch.

THOMPSON, Roger. Assistant professor of American Literature, Virginia Military Institute. Specializes in nineteenth-century American literature and rhetorical theory, with an emphasis on the American Renaissance. Essay: Reynolds Price.

TIDWELL, Drew. Master's candidate, University of North Texas, Denton. Essay: Jay McInerney.

TIFFIN, Chris. Senior lecturer in English, University of Queensland, Brisbane. Author of articles on Australian and Pacific literatures. Editor of South Pacific Images, 1978; South Pacific Stories (with H.M. Tiffin), 1980; and Rosa Praed, 1851–1935: A Bibliography, 1989. Essays: Helen Garner; Colin Johnson.

TOOMEY, Philippa. Staff member, The Times, London. Regular reviewer for The Times, The Tablet, Home and Country, and other periodicals. Essay: Alice Thomas Ellis.

TOULSON, Shirley. Poet and freelance writer. Author of several books of poems, and of guidebooks and studies of rural history, regional folklore, and Celtic history, most recently The Celtic Alternative, 1987; Walking Round Wales, 1988; and The Companion Guide to Devon, 1991. Essays: David Hughes; Bernard Kops; Stanley Middleton.

TREDELL, Nicolas. Teaches literature and cultural and film studies at Sussex University, England. Contributor to numerous literary journals in the United Kingdom and United States. Author or editor of eleven books, including Uncancelled Challenge: The Work of Raymond Williams, 1990; The Critical Decade: Culture in Crisis, 1993; Conversations with Critics: Interviews with Leading Figures in Literary Criticism, 1994; and The Fiction of Martin Amis, 2000. Currently working on a study called Notes Towards a Definition of Digital Culture and editing The Icon Critical History of Film Theory. Essays: David Caute; J.M. Coetzee; Douglas Coupland; Louis de Bernières; Kinky Friedman; Stephen King; William Kotzwinkle; Andrew O'Hagan; Terry Pratchett; Robert Silverberg; Neal Stephenson; Barry Unsworth; A.N. Wilson.

TRUESDALE, C.W. Poet, short story writer, and essayist; founding editor and publisher of New Rivers Press. Essay: Jon Hassler.

TUERK, Richard. Professor of literature and languages, East Texas State University, Commerce. Author of Central Still: Circle and Sphere in Thoreau's Prose, 1975; and essays on Jewish-American literature, Emerson, Jacob Riis, and Twain. Essay: John Barth.

van TOORN, Penny. Postdoctoral research fellow, Department of English, University of Sydney. Author of Rudy Wiebe and the Historicity of the Word, 1995; and articles on postcolonial literatures and theory. Co-editor of Speaking Positions: Aboriginality, Gender and Ethnicity in Australian Cultural Studies, 1995. Essays: Neil Bissoondath; Rudy Wiebe.

VASUDEVAN, Aruna. Freelance writer. Essay: Mary Wesley.

VOGLER, Thomas A. Professor of English and comparative literature, and chair of the Humanities Institute, University of California, Santa Cruz. Author of Preludes to Vision, 1970; Unnam'd Forms: Blake and Textuality (with Nelson Hilton), 1986; and numerous essays on poetry and fiction of the 18th to 20th centuries. Essays: William Gibson; Ken Kesey.

WACHINGER, Tobias. Doctoral candidate, University of Munich, Germany. Dissertation on contemporary writers positioning themselves in a cultural space in-between. Author of essays on the modern city novel, postcolonial Englishness, the politics of food in Indian writing, as well as on Salman Rushdie, Peter Ackroyd, and Christopher Hope. Essays: Julian Barnes; Romesh Gunesekera; Timothy Mo.

WALSH, William. Emeritus professor of Commonwealth literature, University of Leeds. Author of The Use of Imagination: Educational Thought and the Literary Mind, 1959; A Human Idiom: Literature and Humanity, 1964; Coleridge: The Work and the Relevance, 1967; A Manifold Voice: Studies in Commonwealth Literature, 1970; R. K. Narayan, 1971; Commonwealth Literature, 1973; V.S. Naipaul, 1973; D.J. Enright: Poet of Humanism, 1974; Patrick White's Fiction, 1977; F.R. Leavis, 1980; R.K. Narayan: A Critical Appreciation, 1982; and Indian Literature in English, 1990. Editor of Readings in Commonwealth Literature, 1974. Essay: Kamala Markandaya.

WARNER, Val. Freelance writer. Author of two books of poetry: Under the Penthouse, 1973; and Before Lunch, 1986; and short stories, articles, and reviews in periodicals. Editor of Charlotte Mew: Collected Poems and Prose, 1981. Translator of Centenary Corbière, 1974. Essays: Beryl Bainbridge; Philip Callow; Elaine Feinstein; Francis King; Adam Mars-Jones; Elizabeth Mavor; Julia O'Faolain; Grace Paley; Fay Weldon.

WATSON, Diane. Lecturer in English, University of British Columbia, Vancouver. Essays: John Berger; Michael Ondaatje.

WATTS, Harold H. Emeritus professor of English, Purdue University, West Lafayette, Indiana. Author of The Modern Reader's Guide to the Bible, 1949; Ezra Pound and the Cantos, 1951; Hound and Quarry, 1953; The Modern Reader's Guide to Religions, 1964; and Aldous Huxley, 1969. Essays: Frederick Buechner; Herbert Gold; William Maxwell; Harry Mark Petrakis; J.D. Salinger; Helen Yglesias.

WELDON, Fay. See her own entry.

WESTBROOK, Perry D. Emeritus professor of English, State University of New York, Albany. Author of Acres of Flint: Writers of Rural New England, 1951; Biography of an Island, 1958; The Greatness of Man: An Essay on Dostoevsky and Whitman, 1961; Mary Ellen Chase, 1966; Mary Wilkins Freeman, 1967; John Burroughs, 1974; William Bradford, 1978. Free Will and Determinism in American Literature, 1979; The New England Town in Fact and Fiction, 1982; and A Literary History of New England, 1988. Essay: Kurt Vonnegut, Jr.

WHITE, Jon Manchip. Author and former Lindsay Young Professor of English, University of Tennessee, Knoxville. Author of numerous novels, short fiction, and historical essays. Essay: Nicholas Delbanco.

WILCOX, Leonard. Head of the American Studies Department at the University of Canterbury in Christchurch, New Zealand. He has written on postmodernism and its relationship to American fiction and drama, and is editor of Rereading Shepard: Contemporary Essays on the Plays of Sam Shepard. He has also written on American intellectual history and is the author of V.F. Calverton: Radical in the American Grain. Essay: Don DeLillo.

WILLIAMS, Mark. Lecturer in English, University of Waikato, Hamilton, New Zealand. Editor of New Zealand Poetry 1972–86, 1987.

WILLY, Margaret. Lecturer for the British Council, and at the City Literary Institute and Morley College, London. Author of two books of poetry: The Invisible Sun, 1946; and Every Star a Tongue, 1951; and several critical books, including studies of Chaucer, Traherne, Fielding, Browning, Crashaw, Vaughan, Emily Brontë, and English diarists. Editor of two anthologies and of plays by Goldsmith. Essays: Susan Hill; Muriel Spark.

WILSON, Janet. Faculty member, Department of English, University of Otago. Essays: Russell Haley; Fiona Kidman; Vincent O'Sullivan.

WITHERUP, Bill. Freelance book reviewer and critic. Author of two collections of poetry: Black Ash, Orange Fire and Men at Work. Contributing editor to Atomic Ghosts: Poets Respond to the Nuclear Age, 1995. Essay: James B. Hall.

WOOD, Michael. Professor of English, University of Exeter, Devon. Author of Stendhal, 1971; and America in the Movies, 1975; and articles in New York Review of Books, London Review of Books, and other periodicals.

WOODCOCK, George. Freelance writer, lecturer, and editor. Author of poetry (Collected Poems, 1983); plays; travel books; biographies; autobiographies (Letter to the Past, 1982; and Beyond the Blue Mountains, 1987); and works on history and politics; critical works include William Godwin, 1946; The Incomparable Aphra, 1948; The Paradox of Oscar Wilde, 1949; The Crystal Spirit (on Orwell), 1966; Hugh MacLennan, 1969; Odysseus Ever Returning: Canadian Writers and Writing, 1970; Mordecai Richler, 1970; Dawn and the Darkest Hour (on Aldous Huxley), 1972; Herbert Read, 1972; Thomas Merton, 1978; The World of Canadian Writers, 1980; Northern Spring: The Flowering of Canadian Literature, 1987; A Social History of Canada, 1988; and The Century That Made Us: Canada 1814–1914, 1989. Editor of anthologies and of works by Charles Lamb, Malcolm Lowry, Wyndham Lewis, Hardy, Meredith, and others. Died 1995. Essays: Jack Hodgins; Audrey Thomas; David Watmough.

WOODS, Tim. Lecturer in English, University College of Wales, Aberystwyth. Essays: Patrick McGrath; David Profumo.

WOOLF, Michael. Director of the Council on International Education Exchange, London. Author of "Exploding the Genre: The Crime Fiction of Jerome Charyn," in American Crime Fiction, 1988. Essay: Jerome Charyn.

WYLIE, J.J. Writer; graduate of University of Nevada, Las Vegas, where he studied under novelists Richard Wiley and Douglas Unger. Essays: Richard Bausch; Jim Crace; Alex Garland; Patrick McCabe; Steven Millhauser; James Sallis.

YABES, Leopoldo Y. Late professor emeritus of literature and Philippine studies, University of the Philippines, Quezon City. Author of more than 20 books and numerous essays and articles; books include The University and the Fear of Ideas, 1956; Philippine Literature in English, 1958; The Filipino Struggle for Intellectual Freedon, 1959; Jose Rizal on His Centenary, 1963; The Ordeal of a Man of Academe, 1967; and Graduate Education at the University of the Philippines, 1975. Editor of many books, including Philippine Short Stories, 2 vols., 1975–81. Former editor of Philippine Social Sciences and Humanities Review. Died 1988. Essay: F. Sionil Jose.

ZANI, Steven. Assistant professor in English and Foreign Languages, Lamar University, Beaumont, Texas. Specializes in Romanticism and literary theory. Essay: Ferrol Sams.

ZWICKER, Heather. Faculty member, Department of English, University of Alberta, Edmonton. Essay: Daphne Marlatt.

NATIONALITY INDEX

Below is the list of entrants divided by nationality. The nationalities were chosen largely from information supplied by entrants. A small number of entrants submitted two nationalities (e.g., American and British) and thus are listed under both. It should be noted that "British" was used for all English entrants and for any other British entrant who chose that designation over a more specific one, such as "Scottish."

	N. 1 1 E 11 D 11
American	Nicholas Franklin Delbanco	Jon Hassler
Sherman Joseph Alexie, Jr.	Don DeLillo	Shirley Hazzard
Dorothy E. Allison	Boman Desai	Ursula Hegi
Lisa Alther	Joan Didion	Mark Helprin
Rudolfo A. Anaya	Chitra Banerjee Divakaruni	Oscar Hijuelos
Louis Auchincloss	Stephen Dixon	Carol Hill
Paul Auster	E.L. Doctorow	Edward Hoagland
Elliott Baker	Ellen Douglas	Russell Hoban
Russell Banks	Elaine Dundy	Alice Hoffman
Wilton Barnhardt	John Gregory Dunne	Maureen Howard
Andrea Barrett	Wilma Dykeman	Evan Hunter
John Barth	Clyde Carlyle Edgerton	Kristin Hunter
Frederick Barthelme	Bret Easton Ellis	John Irving
Jonathan Baumbach	Trey Ellis	Tama Janowitz
Richard Bausch	James Ellroy	Gish Jen
Gregory Dale Bear	David Ely	Ruth Prawer Jhabvala
Ann Beattie	Louise Erdrich	Charles Johnson
Stephen Becker	Percival L. Everett	Denis Johnson
Madison Smartt Bell	Howard Fast	Diane Johnson
Saul Bellow	Irvin Faust	Gayl Jones
Gregory Albert Benford	Thomas Flanagan	Madison Jones
Thomas Berger	Shelby Foote	Erica Jong
Doris Betts	Richard Ford	Ward Just
Vance Bourjaily	Marilyn French	Johanna Kaplan
T. Coraghessan Boyle	Bruce Jay Friedman	Steve Katz
Ray Bradbury	Kinky Friedman	William Melvin Kelley
David Bradley	Abby Frucht	Randall Kenan
John Ed Bradley	Ernest J. Gaines	William Kennedy
Rita Mae Brown	Kenneth Gangemi	Ken Kesey
Rosellen Brown	Cristina Garcia	Jamaica Kincaid
Wesley Brown	George Garrett	Stephen King
Frederick Buechner	William H. Gass	Barbara Kingsolver
Lois McMaster Bujold	William Gay	Maxine Hong Kingston
James Lee Burke	Kaye Gibbons	John Knowles
Janet Burroway	William Gibson	William Kotzwinkle
Frederick Busch	Ellen Gilchrist	Chang-rae Lee
Octavia Estelle Butler	Gail Godwin	Ursula K. Le Guin
Robert Olen Butler, Jr.	Herbert Gold	Alan Lelchuk
Hortense Calisher	William Goldman	Elmore Leonard
R.V. Cassill	Mary Gordon	Jonathan Lethem
Jerome Charyn	Robert Gover	Ira Levin
Alan Cheuse	Shirley Ann Grau	Alison Lurie
Mark Childress	Joanne Greenberg	David Madden
Carolyn Chute	John Grisham Winston Groom	Norman Mailer
Sandra Cisneros William Cobb	Doris Grumbach	Clarence Major
		Wallace Markfield
Andrei Codrescu	Aller Cymanic	Paule Marshall
Pat Conroy Robert Coover	Allan Gurganis	Carole Maso Bobbie Ann Mason
	David Guterson James B. Hall
Harry Crews		Hilary Masters
Michael Cuppingham	Jane Hamilton	Harry Mathews Jack Matthews
Michael Cunningham	Barry Hannah Mark Harris
Edwidge Danticat		Peter Matthiessen
Samuel R. Delany	Jim Harrison	William Maxwell

Cormac McCarthy Alice McDermott Joseph McElroy Thomas McGuane, III Jay McInerney Terry McMillan Larry McMurtry Barbara Mertz Leonard Michaels Steven Millhauser Susan Minot Mark Mirsky N. Scott Momaday Rick Moody Lorrie Moore Toni Morrison Walter Mosley Albert L. Murray Gloria Naylor Jay Neugeboren Howard A. Norman Joyce Carol Oates Tim O'Brien Tillie Olsen Stewart O'Nan Cynthia Ozick Grace Paley Kathrin Perutz Harry Mark Petrakis Jayne Anne Phillips Marge Piercy David Plante Richard Powers Reynolds Price Richard Price E. Annie Proulx James Purdy Thomas Pynchon Frederic Raphael John Rechy Ishmael Reed

Tom Robbins
Kim Stanley Robinson
Marilynne Robinson
Mary Robison
Judith Rossner
Philip Roth
Michael Rumaker
Joanna Russ
J.D. Salinger
James Sallis
Ferrol Sams, Jr.
Thomas Savage

Anne Rice

Susan Fromberg Schaeffer

Budd Schulberg Carolyn See Hubert Selby, Jr. Mary Lee Settle Jeff Shaara

Wilfrid Sheed Carol Shields Anita Shreve Clancy Sigal Leslie Marmon Silko Robert Silverberg Mona Simpson Jane Smiley Lee Smith Susan Sontag Gilbert Sorrentino Elizabeth Spencer Michael Stephens Neal Stephenson Bruce Sterling Daniel Stern Richard G. Stern Robert Stone Susan Straight William Styron Ronald Sukenick

Alexander Theroux
Paul Theroux
Lawrence Thornton
Anne Tyler
John Updike
Gore Vidal
Helena Maria Viramontes
William T. Vollmann
Kurt Vonnegut, Jr.
David Wagoner

Amy Tan

Dan Wakefield Alice Walker David Foster Wallace James Welch Eudora Welty Paul West William Wharton

Edmund Valentine White, III John Edgar Wideman Allen Wier Marjanne Wiggins

Marianne Wiggins John A. Williams Connie Willis Larry Woiwode Tom Wolfe Tobias Wolff Charles Wright Rudolph Wurlitzer James Yaffe Lois-Ann Yamanaka Helen Yglesias

Sol Yurick

Australian

Glenda Adams

Al Young

James Aldridge Jessica Anderson Thea Astley Murray Bail Marion Campbell Peter Carey Brian Castro Peter Cowan Blanche d'Alpuget Liam Davison Ralph de Boissière Dale Sara Dowse Robert Drewe Beverley Farmer David Foster Helen Garner Kate Grenville Marion Halligan Elizabeth Harrower Nicholas Hasluck Janette Turner Hospital

Elizabeth Jolley
Victor Kelleher
Thomas Keneally
C.J. Koch
Morris Lurie
David Malouf
Peter Mathers
Roger McDonald
Alex Miller
Frank Moorhouse
Mudrooroo
Gerald Murnane
Randolph Stow
Tim Winton

David Ireland

Barbadian

Austin C. Clarke George Lamming

British

Peter Ackroyd Richard Adams Brian Aldiss Martin Amis Paul Bailey Bervl Bainbridge J.G. Ballard A.L. Barker Pat Barker Julian Barnes Stan Barstow Nina Bawden Sybille Bedford John Berger Rachel Billington John Bowen William Boyd Malcolm Bradbury Melvyn Bragg

Christine Brooke-Rose Anita Brookner

Sasthi Brata

Alan Burns Robin Jenkins Frank Tuohy Philip Callow Glyn Jones Barry Unsworth David Caute Gwyneth A. Jones Edward Upward Arthur C. Clarke Mervyn Jones Peter Vansittart Jonathan Coe Gabriel Josipovici Marina Warner Barry Cole Francis King Keith Waterhouse Isabel Colegate Bernard Kops Fay Weldon David Cook Hanif Kureishi Mary Wesley William Cooper John le Carré Michael Wilding Jim Crace Doris Lessing A.N. Wilson David Dabydeen Penelope Lively Jeanette Winterson Fred D'Aguiar David Lodge

Canadian Lionel Davidson Jamal Mahjoub André Alexis Jennifer Dawson Hilary Mantel Jeannette Armstrong Louis de Bernières Adam Mars-Jones Margaret Atwood Len Deighton Allan Massie Clark Blaise

Margaret Drabble Elizabeth Mavor Fred Bodsworth C.J. Driver Ian McEwan George Bowering Maureen Duffy Patrick McGrath Bonnie Burnard Nell Dunn Candia McWilliam Douglas Coupland Dorothy Dunnett Stanley Middleton Timothy Findley Janice Elliott Julian Mitchell Mavis Gallant Alice Thomas Ellis Timothy Mo Graeme Gibson Buchi Emecheta Michael Moorcock Douglas Glover Zoë Fairbairns John Mortimer Phyllis Fay Gotlieb Sebastian Faulks Nicholas Mosley Arthur Hailey Elaine Feinstein Lawrence Norfolk Tomson Highway Eva Figes Robert Nye Jack Hodgins

Tibor Fischer Tim Parks Hugh Hood Margaret Forster Anne Perry Michael Ignatieff Frederick Forsyth Jerzy Peterkiewicz Thomas King Caryl Phillips John Fowles W.P. Kinsella Mike Phillips Ronald Frame Joy Kogawa Dick Francis David Pownall Robert Kroetsch Michael Frayn Terry Pratchett Sky Lee

Gillian Freeman David Profumo Norman Levine Alex Garland Piers Paul Read Ann-Marie MacDonald Maggie Gee Ruth Rendell John Metcalf Zulfikar Ghose Michèle Roberts Anne Michaels

Brian Glanville Bernice Rubens Bharati Mukherjee Giles Gordon Salman Rushdie Alice Munro Winston Graham Lisa St. Aubin de Teran Michael Ondaatje Abdulrazak S. Gurnah Will Self David Richards

Russell Halev Tom Sharpe Mordecai Richler Rodney Hall Andrew Sinclair Peter Robinson Clifford Hanley Carolyn Slaughter Jane Rule Wilson Harris Emma Smith Shyam Selvadurai Susan Hill Muriel Spark Ray Smith Thomas Hinde Alan Spence John Steffler Barry Hines Colin Spencer Susan Swan Alan Hollinghurst Graham Swift Audrey Thomas Nick Hornby Emma Tennant

Guy Vanderhaeghe Elizabeth Jane Howard Shashi Tharoor David Watmough David Hughes D.M. Thomas Rudy Wiebe Emyr Humphreys Colin Thubron French Kazuo Ishiguro

Mick Jackson Peter Tinniswood Dan Jacobson Barbara Trapido Ghanaian

Gillian Tindall

Howard Jacobson Rose Tremain Ama Ata Aidoo P.D. James Joanna Trollope Ayi Kwei Armah

Marianne Hauser

Guyanese

Roy A.K. Heath Pauline Melville Mike Phillips

Indian

Mulk Raj Anand Upamanyu Chatterjee

Anita Desai Shashi Deshpande Ahmed Essop Amitav Ghosh Sunetra Gupta Arun Joshi

Kamala Markandaya

Gita Mehta Rohinton Mistry Chaman Nahal R.K. Narayan Arundhati Roy Nayantara Sahgal I. Allan Sealy Vikram Seth Khushwant Singh

Irish

John Banville
Leland Bardwell
Maeve Binchy
Dermot Bolger
Clare Boylan
J.P. Donleavy
Roddy Doyle
Hugo Hamilton
Dermot Healy
Aidan Higgins
Desmond Hogan
Jennifer Johnston
Neil Jordan
Maeve Kelly
Benedict Kiely

Benedict Kiely
Bernard MacLaverty
Patrick McCabe
John McGahern
Val Mulkerns
Eilis Ní Dhuibhne
Edna O'Brien
Joseph O'Connor
Julia O'Faolain

Charles Palliser James Plunkett Colm Tóibín William Trevor Anthony C. West

Jamaican Erna Brodber

Kenyan

Ngugi wa Thiong'o M.G. Vassanji

Malaysian

Daphne Marlatt

New Zealander

Barbara Anderson Marilyn Duckworth

Alan Duff

Janet Frame

Stevan Eldred-Grigg

Maurice Gee
Patricia Grace
Keri Hulme
Witi Ihimaera
Stephanie Johnson
Fiona Kidman
Elizabeth Knox
Owen Marshall
Sue McCauley
James McNeish
Vincent O'Sullivan
Rosie Scott
Maurice Shadbolt
C.K. Stead
Noel Virtue

Nigerian

Chinua Achebe Elechi Amadi I.N.C. Aniebo Festus Iyayi John Munonye Ben Okri Wole Soyinka

Damien Wilkins

Northern Irish Mary Beckett

Shane Connaughton

Deirdre Madden

Pakistani

Bapsi Sidhwa

Philippine

F. Sionil Jose

Saint Lucian

Garth St. Omer

Samoan

Albert Wendt

Scottish

Janice Galloway Alasdair Gray Jackie Kay James Kelman A. L. Kennedy Andrew O'Hagan Irvine Welsh

Singaporean

Catherine Lim

Somali

Nuruddin Farah

South African

André Brink J.M. Coetzee Nadine Gordimer Stephen Gray Christopher Hope Njabulo S. Ndebele Daphne Rooke Miriam Tlali

Sri Lankan

Romesh Gunesekera

Sudanese

Jamal Mahjoub

Trinidadian

Michael Anthony Neil Bissoondath

Kelvin Christopher James Marion Patrick Jones

Earl Lovelace V.S. Naipaul

Zimbabwean

Shimmer Chinodya

TITLE INDEX

The following list includes the titles of all books listed in the Novels and Short Stories (designated "s") sections of the entries in the book. The name in parenthesis is meant to direct the user to the appropriate entry, where full publication information is given.

Abbess of Crewe (Spark), 1974

Aberration of Starlight (Sorrentino), 1981

About a Boy (Hornby), 1998 About a Marriage (Gordon), 1972 About Harry Towns (Friedman), 1975

About My Table, and Other Stories (s Delbanco), 1983

Absent Friends (s Busch), 1989 Absolute Hero (Humphreys), 1986

Absolutely Nothing to Get Alarmed About (Wright), 1973

Absurd Affair (Spencer), 1961 Accident (Mosley), 1966 Accident (Plante), 1991 Accidental Tourist (Tyler), 1985 Accidental Woman (Coe), 1987 According to Mark (Lively), 1985

Accordion Crimes (Proulx), 1996

Ace of Diamonds Gang (s Marshall), 1993

Acid House (s Welsh), 1995 Acolyte (Astley), 1972 Acrobats (Richler), 1954

Across the Black Waters (Anand), 1940 Across the Bridge: Stories (s Gallant), 1993 Across the Sea Wall (Koch), 1982 Across the Sea of Stars (Clarke), 1959

Across the Sea of Suns (Benford), 1984 Act of Darkness (King), 1983 Act of Terror (Brink), 1991 Action (King), 1978

Actual (Bellow), 1997 Adah's Story (Emecheta), 1983 Adaptable Man (Frame), 1965

Admiral and the Nuns with Other Stories (s Tuohy), 1963

Admiring Silence (Gurnah), 1996 Adult Entertainment (s Metcalf), 1989

Adultery (Theroux), 1988

Adulthood Rites: Xenogenesis (Butler), 1988

Adventures of Alyx (s Russ), 1985 Adventures of Augie March (Bellow), 1995 Adventures of Christian Rosy Cross (Foster), 1986 Adventures of Robina, by Herself (Tennant), 1987 Adventures of Una Persson and Catherine Cornelius in the Twentieth Century (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1976

Advertisements for Myself (s Mailer), 1961

Aesop's Forest (s Coover), 1986 Affair to Remember (Cassill), 1957

Affliction (Banks), 1990 Affliction (Weldon), 1994

Africa and After (s Kelleher), 1983 African Horse (Pownall), 1975 African Stories (s Lessing), 1965 African Trilogy (Achebe), 1988 After a Fashion (Middleton), 1987 After China (Castro), 1992

After-Dinner's Sleep (Middleton), 1986

After Goliath (Cassill), 1985 After Hannibal (Unsworth), 1997 After Julius (Howard), 1966

After Lazarus: A Filmscript (s Coover), 1980

After Rain (Trevor), 1996

After Rome, Africa (Glanville), 1959 After the Act (Graham), 1966

After the Fire (Rule), 1989 After the Rain (Bowen), 1959 After the War (Raphael), 1989 After the War (Stern), 1965 After Z-Hour (Knox), 1987

Afterlife (s Updike), 1987

Afterlife and Other Stories (s Updike), 1994 Afterlife of George Cartwright (Steffler), 1993 Afternoon of a Good Woman (Bawden), 1977

Against Infinity (Benford), 1983 Against the Dark (Middleton), 1998 Against the Fall of Night (Clarke), 1953 Against the Season (Rule), 1972

Agatha (Colegate), 1973 Age (Aldiss), 1967 Age (Calisher), 1987

Age of Consent (Greenberg), 1987 Age of Grief (s Smiley), 1988 Age of Iron (Coetzee), 1990

Age of Miracles: Stories (s Gilchrist), 1995

Age of Terror (Plante), 1999

Age of the Rainmakers (s Harris), 1971

Agent (Hinde), 1974

Agrippa's Daughter (Fast, as Cunningham), 1965

Agüero Sisters (Garcia), 1997

Ahmed and the Oblivion Machines: A Fable (Bradbury), 1998

Air and Angels (Hill), 1991 Air That Kills (King), 1948 Air We Breathe (Josipovici), 1981 Airframe (Crichton, as Lange), 1996

Airport (Hailey), 1968 Airs of Earth (s Aldiss), 1963 Airships (s Hannah), 1991 Alabaster Egg (Freeman), 1971

Albany Trio: Three Novels from the Albany Cycle

(Kennedy), 1996

Albatross and Other Stories (s Hill), 1975 Alberta: A Celebration (s Wiebe), 1979 Albert's Memorial (Cook), 1972 Alburquerque (Anaya), 1992 Alder Tree (Jones), 1982 Alias Grace (Atwood), 1996 Alibi (Kroetsch), 1983

Alice (Fast, as Cunningham), 1965

Alice Fell (Tennant), 1980

Alien Heat (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1972 Alien Years (Silverberg, as Knox), 1998 Aliens from Space (Silverberg, as Knox), 1958

Alice in Thunderland: A Feminist Fairytale (Kelly), 1993

All Done with Mirrors (Haley), 1999 All Gone: 18 Short Stories (s Dixon), 1990

1109

All My Friends Are Going to Be Strangers (McMurtry), 1973

All-Night Visitors (Major), 1969 All Souls' Rising (Bell), 1995 All That Glitters (Anthony), 1981

All the Days and Nights: The Collected Stories of William

Maxwell (s Maxwell), 1995

All the Good People I've Left Behind (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1979

All the King's Horses and Other Stories (s West), 1981

All the Nice Girls (Anderson), 1994 All the Pretty Horses (McCarthy), 1993

All the Tenderness Left in the World: Short Stories (s Johnson), 1993

All Things Nice (Billington), 1969 All Tomorrow's Parties (Gibson), 1999

All-True Travels and Adventures of Lidie Newton (Smiley), 1998

All Visitors Ashore (Stead), 1984 All We Need of Hell (Crews), 1987 All You Need (Feinstein), 1991 Alley Jaggers (West), 1966 Alleys of Eden (Butler), 1981 Alligator Report (s Kinsella), 1985 Ally Ally Aster (Jones), 1981 Almost Heaven (Wiggins), 1998

Alone (Farmer), 1980

Along the Arno (Glanville), 1957

Already Dead: A California Gothic (Johnson), 1997

Altered States (Brookner), 1996 Always Coming Home (Le Guin), 1986 Always Home and Other Stories (s Ely), 1991

Always Outnumbered, Always Outgunned: The Socrates Fortlow

Stories (s Mosley), 1997

Always the Islands of Memory (Virtue), 1991

Alyx (s Russ), 1976

Amalgamemnon (Brooke-Rose), 1994

Amandla (Tlali), 1980

Amateur's Guide to the Night (s Robison), 1983

Amberstone Exit (Feinstein), 1972 Ambition and Love (Just), 1994

Ambrose's Vision: Sketches Towards the Creation of a Cathedral

(Gordon), 1980

American: A Middle Western Legend (Fast, as

Cunningham), 1949

American Ambassador (Just), 1987

American Appetites (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1989

American Blues (Just), 1984 American Brat (Sidhwa), 1994 American Dad (Janowitz), 1988 American Dream (Mailer), 1965 American Experience (s Mathews), 1991 American Marriage (Masters), 1969 American Mischief (Lelchuk), 1973 American Pastoral (Roth), 1997 American Psycho (Ellis), 1991 American Scrapbook (Charyn), 1969

American Woman in the Chinese Hat (Maso), 1994

Americana (DeLillo), 1990

Americans, Baby (s Moorhouse), 1972

Ammie, Come Home (Mertz, as Michaels), 1969

Amnesia Moon (Lethem), 1995

Amnesty (Dowse), 1993

Among the Cinders (Shadbolt), 1984 Amongst Thistles and Thorns (Clarke), 1965 Amongst Women (McGahern), 1990

Amriika (Vassanji), 1999 Amsterdam (McEwan), 1999 Ana Historic (Marlatt), 1990

Anabasis: A Journey to the Interior (Gilchrist), 1994

Anatomy Lesson (Roth), 1984
Ancestor Game (Miller), 1994
Ancestral Vices (Sharpe), 1980
Anchor Tree (Humphreys), 1980
Ancient Child (Momaday), 1989
Ancient Evenings (Mailer), 1983
Ancient History (McElroy), 1971
And Chaos Died (Russ), 1970
And We Were Young (Baker), 1980

Andromeda Strain (Crichton, as Lange), 1969

Anemones (Howard), 1998

Angel, All Innocence, and Other Stories (s Weldon), 1995

Angel at the Gate (Harris), 1982 Angel Landing (Hoffman), 1982

Angel of Light (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1981

Angel of the Tar Sands and Other Stories (s Wiebe), 1982 Angel on the Roof: The Stories of Russell Banks (s Banks), 2000

Angelica's Grotto (Hoban), 1999

Angell, Pearl and Little God (Graham), 1970

Angels (Johnson), 1984

Angels at the Ritz and Other Stories (s Trevor), 1976

Angels Falling (Elliott), 1969 Angled Road (Levine), 1952

Angry Brigade: A Documentary Novel (Burns), 1973

Angry Ones (Williams), 1960

Angry Tide: A Novel of Cornwall 1798-1799 (Graham), 1978

Anil's Ghost (Ondaatje), 2000 Animal Dreams (Kingsolver), 1990 Animal Game (Tuohy), 1957 Anna Apparent (Bawden), 1972 Anna Papers (Gilchrist), 1989

Annie, Gwen, Lily, Pam, and Tulip (s Kincaid), 1986

Annie John (Kincaid), 1985

Anniversary and Other Stories (s Auchincloss), 1999

Annunciation (Gilchrist), 1984 Annunciation (Plante), 1994

Anonymity of Sacrifice (Aniebo), 1974

Another Family Christmas: A Collection of Short Stories (s Boylan), 1997

Another Flesh (Callow), 1989

Another Part of the City (Hunter), 1986 Another Part of the Wood (Bainbridge), 1980 Another Roadside Attraction (Robbins), 1973

Another Street, Another Dance (Hanley, as Calvin), 1984

Another World (Barker), 1999 Another You (Beattie), 1995 Answer Yes or No (Mortimer), 1950

Ant Colony (King), 1991 Antarctica (Robinson), 1998 Antelope Wife (Erdrich), 1998

Anthills of the Savannah (Achebe), 1988

Antipodes (s Malouf), 1985

Antiquities: A Sequence of Short Stories (s Mulkerns), 1978

Anvil of Stars (Bear), 1992

Any Excuse for a Party: Selected Stories (s Barker), 1991

Any Minute I Can Split (Rossner), 1977 Any Woman's Blues (Jong), 1990

Anya (Schaeffer), 1976

Anything for Billy (McMurtry), 1989 Anywhere But Here (Simpson), 1986 Apology for a Hero (Barker), 1950 Apostles of Light (Douglas), 1973 Apple of the Eye (Middleton), 1970

Apprentice (Joshi), 1975

Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz (Richler), 1959 April, June and November (Raphael), 1976 April Morning (Fast, as Cunningham), 1961 April Robin Murders (Hunter), 1959

Aquaboogie: A Novel in Stories (Straight), 1990

Arcadia (Crace), 1992

Archimedes and the Seagle (Ireland), 1987 Are You Listening Rabbi Löw (Donleavy), 1988

Are You Mine? (Frucht), 1993

Aren't You Happy for Me? and Other Stories (s Bausch), 1995

Armadillo (Boyd), 1998

Armadillos and Old Lace (Friedman), 1994

Armstrong Trilogy (Heath), 1994

Around the Mountain: Scenes from Montreal Life (s Hood), 1967

Arranged Marriage: Stories (s Divakaruni), 1995

Arrow of God (Achebe), 1967 Art and Lies (Winterson), 1995 Art Lover (Maso), 1990

Arthur Rex: A Legendary Novel (Berger), 1979

Artifact (Benford), 1985 Artificial Kid (Sterling), 1980 Artist Type (Glanville), 1968

Artist of the Floating World (Ishiguro), 1986 As Far as You Can Go (Mitchell), 1963

As She Climbed Across the Table (Lethem), 1997

As Summers Die (Groom), 1980 As Towns with Fire (West), 1970 Ascent to Omai (Harris), 1970

Ash on an Old Man's Sleeve (King), 1996

Ashes for Easter and Other Monodramas (s Watmough), 1972

Ashworth Hall (Perry), 1997 Ask Me Now (Young), 1980 Ask Me Tomorrow (Barstow), 1962 Aspects of Feeling (Vansittart), 1986

Aspects of the Dying Process (s Wilding), 1972

Assassin Who Gave Up His Gun (Fast, as Cunningham), 1970

Assassins (Mosley), 1993

Assassins: A Book of Hours (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1975

Assignation (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1988 Asta's Book (Rendell, as Vine), 1993 Astonishing the Gods (Okri), 1995

Astrologer's Day and Other Stories (s Narayan), 1947

Asya (Ignatieff), 1991 Asylum (McGrath), 1997 At Fever Pitch (Caute), 1961 At Paradise Gate (Smiley), 1981

At Play in the Fields of the Lord (Matthiessen), 1966

At Risk (Hoffman), 1988

At the Bottom of the River (s Kincaid), 1984

At the Jerusalem (Bailey), 1967

At Weddings and Wakes (McDermott), 1991 At Winter's End (Silverberg, as Knox), 1988

Athena (Banville), 1995

Atlantis: Three Tales (s Delany), 1995

Atlas: People, Places, and Visions (s Vollmann), 1996 Atonement, and Other Stories (s Auchincloss), 1997 Atonement of Ashley Morden (Bodsworth), 1964

Atrocity Exhibition (s Ballard), 1970 Attachments (Rossner), 1977

August (Rossner), 1983

August Is a Wicked Month (O'Brien), 1965

August Nights (s Hood), 1985

Augustus: The Memoirs of the Emperor (Massie), 1986

Aureole (Maso), 1996

Autobiography of Foudini M. Cat (Schaeffer), 1997 Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman (Gaines), 1973 Autobiography of My Mother (Brown), 1976

Autobiography of My Mother (Kincaid), 1996

Autobiopsy (Rubens), 1993 Autumn Manoeuvres (Bragg), 1978 Autumn People (s Bradbury), 1965 Ava (Maso), 1993

Awaiting Court Martial (s Iyayi), 1996 Awake for Mourning (Kops), 1958

Awakening of George Darroch (Jenkins), 1985 Awfully Big Adventure (Bainbridge), 1991

Ax (Hunter), 1964 Azadi (Nahal), 1977

B (Figes), 1972

Babble (Baumbach), 1976 Babe (Wiggins), 1975 Babel (Burns), 1970 Babel-17 (Delany), 1976

Baby, Come On Inside (Wagoner), 1968

Baby No-Eyes (Grace), 1998 Baby Sitters (Caute), 1978 Baby's First Step (s Updike), 1993 Bachelor of Arts (Narayan), 1937 Bachelors (Spark), 1961

Bachman Books: Four Early Novels (King), 1996

Back in the World (s Wolff), 1985 Backward Place (Jhabvala), 1965

Bad Lot and Other Stories (s Glanville), 1977

Bad Music (McCauley), 1990 Bad Sister (Tennant), 1978

Bad Streak and Other Stories (s Glanville), 1961

Badlands (Kroetsch), 1983 Bag (Yurick), 1970 Bag of Bones (King), 1998

Bagombo Snuff Box: Uncollected Short Fiction (s

Vonnegut), 1999

Bailey's Café (Naylor), 1993 Balcony of Europe (Higgins), 1972

Ball of Malt and Madame Butterfly (s Kiely), 1973

Ballad of Beta-2 (Delany), 1965

Ballad of Beta-2, and Empire Star (Delany), 1977

Ballad of Erinungarah (Foster), 1997

Ballad of Peckham Rye (Spark), 1960

Ballad of the Public Trustee (s Kinsella), 1982

Ballroom of Romance and Other Stories (s Trevor), 1972

Bandits (Leonard), 1987

Bane of the Black Sword (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1984

Bang the Drum Slowly, by Henry W. Wiggen: Certain of His

Enthusiasms Restrained (Harris), 1956

Bang-Bang You're Dead and Other Stories (s Spark), 1982

Banished Misfortune (s Healy), 1982

Banker (Francis), 1983 Bankrupts (Glanville), 1958 Banquet (Slaughter), 1984 Bar (s Rumaker), 1964

Barbarians of Mars (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1966

Barbarous Tongue (Duckworth), 1963

Barbary Shore (Mailer), 1952

Barber's Trade Union and Other Stories (s Anand), 1944

Barclay Family Theatre (s Hodgins), 1981 Barefoot in the Head (Aldiss), 1970 Bargain with God (Savage), 1953

Barking at Butterflies, and Other Stories (s Hunter), 2000

Barking Man and Other Stories (s Bell), 1990

Barn Blind (Smiley), 1994 Barney's Version (Richler), 1997

Barnum Museum: Stories (s Millhauser), 1997

Barracks (McGahern), 1964 Barrayar (Bujold), 1991

Barrytown Trilogy (Doyle), 1992 Bastard out of Carolina (Allison), 1992 Bats Out of Hell (s Hannah), 1993 Battle for Christabel (Forster), 1991 Baumgartner's Bombay (Desai), 1989 Bay of Contented Man (s Drewe), 1991 Bay of Love and Sorrows (Richards), 1998

Bay of Noon (Hazzard), 1970

Bay of Silence (St. Aubin de Teran), 1986 Be Buried in the Rain (Mertz, as Michaels), 1986

Be Cool (Leonard), 1999
Beach (Garland), 1997
Beach Music (Conroy), 1995
Beachmasters (Astley), 1986
Bean Trees (Kingsolver), 1988
Beans of Egypt, Maine (Chute), 1985
Bear and His Daughter: Stories (s Stories)

Bear and His Daughter: Stories (s Stone), 1997 Bear Went over the Mountain (Kotzwinkle), 1996

Bearded Ladies (s Grenville), 1984

Bear's Fantasies: Six Stories in Old Paradigms (s Bear), 1992 Beast God Forgot to Invent: Novellas (Harrison), 2000

Beast of Heaven (Kelleher), 1984

Beastly Beatitudes of Balthazar B (Donleavy), 1969

Beasts of the Southern Wild (s Betts), 1973

Beau Bumbo (Sinclair), 1985 Beautiful (Billington), 1974 Beautiful Greed (Madden), 1961 Beautiful Room Is Empty (White), 1988 Beautiful Visit (Howard), 1950

Beautiful Words (Jones), 1979 Beauty and the Beast (Hunter), 1983

Beautyful Ones Are Not Yet Born (Armah), 1969 Beauty's Punishment (Rice, as Roquelaure), 1984 Beauty's Release (Rice, as Roquelaure), 1994

Because It Is Bitter, and Because It Is My Heart (Oates, as

Smith, R.), 1991

Because the Night (Ellroy), 1987 Bech: A Book (s Updike), 1970

Bech at Bay: A Quasi-novel (Updike), 1998

Bech Is Back (s Updike), 1982 Becket Factor (Anthony), 1990

Bedrock (Alther), 1990

Beehive Arranged on Human Principles (s Sorrentino), 1986

Beet Queen (Erdrich), 1987 Before and After (Brown), 1993

Before My Life Began (Neugeboren), 1985

Before My Time (Howard), 1975

Before She Met Me (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1986 Beggar My Neighbour (s Jacobson), 1964

Beginners (Jacobson), 1966 Beginning to End (Middleton), 1991

Beginnings: Samplings from a Long Apprenticeship: Novels Which Were Imagined, Written, Re-Written, Submitted, Rejected, Abandoned, and Supplanted (s Hodgins), 1983

Beheading and Other Stories (s Hunter), 1971 Behold the Man (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1970

Being Dead (Crace), 2000 Being Invisible (Berger), 1988

Bela Lugosi's White Christmas (West), 1972 Belfast Woman and Other Stories (s Beckett), 1980

Belgrave Square (Perry), 1993 Believe Them (s Robison), 1988

Believers to the Bright Coast (O'Sullivan), 1998

Belinda (Rice, as Roquelaure), 1987 Bellarmine Jug (Hasluck), 1984 Bellarosa Connection (s Bellow), 1989 Bellefleur (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1981

Bellwether (Willis), 1996 Bellydancer (Lee), 1994 Beloved (Morrison), 1987 Beloved (s Updike), 1982 Beloved Latitudes (Pownall), 1981

Ben, in the World: The Sequel to the Fifth Child (Lessing), 2000

Bend in the River (Naipaul), 1979 Benefactor (Sontag), 1964 Benefits (Fairbairns), 1982 Berhama Account (Williams), 1985 Berlin Game (Deighton), 1984 Beside Myself (Haley), 1990

Best Man to Die (Rendell, as Vine), 1970 Best of Friends (Humphreys), 1978 Best of Friends (Trollope), 1998 Best of Rumpole (s Mortimer), 1993 Best There Ever Was (Bradley), 1990

Bet They'll Miss Us When We're Gone (s Wiggins), 1991

Bethlehem Road (Perry), 1991

Beti (Rooke), 1959 Betrayals (Palliser), 1995 Bettany's Book (Keneally), 1999 Better Times Than These (Groom), 1978 Betting Man (s Glanville), 1969 Between (Brooke-Rose), 1968

Between Tears and Laughter (s Anand), 1973

Beyond Heaven's River (Bear), 1980

Beyond the Bedroom Wall: A Family Album (Woiwode), 1975

Beyond the Blue Mountains (Lively), 1997 Beyond the Bridge (Matthews), 1970 Beyond the Fall of Night (Benford), 1990 Beyond the Fall of Night (Clarke), 1990

Beyond the Pale and Other Stories (s Trevor), 1982

Beyond the Safe Zone: Collected Short Fiction (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1986

Big as Life (Doctorow), 1966 Big Bazoohley (Carey), 1995 Big Bounce (Leonard), 1969 Big Day (Unsworth), 1977 Big Dipper (Billington), 1970 Big Fix (Hunter), 1952

Big Girls Don't Cry (Weldon), 1997

Big Glass (Josipovici), 1991 Big Heart (Anand), 1980 Big Man (Hunter), 1978 Big Man (Neugeboren), 1966 Big Picture: Stories (s Everett), 1996

Big Season (Gee), 1962 Big U (Stephenson), 1984

Bigamist's Daughter (McDermott), 1982

Bigger Light (Clarke), 1975

Biggest Modern Woman in the World (Swan), 1986

Bijou (Madden), 1974

Billenium and Other Stories (s Ballard), 1962 Billie Dyer and Other Stories (s Maxwell), 1992

Billion-Dollar Brain (Deighton), 1966 Billy Bathgate (Doctorow), 1989 Billy Liar (Waterhouse), 1960

Billy Liar on the Moon (Waterhouse), 1976 Billy Phelan's Greatest Game (Kennedy), 1983

Bimbo (Waterhouse), 1990 Binary (Crichton, as Lange), 1972 Binding Vine (Deshpande), 1994

Bingo (Brown), 1988 Bingo Palace (Erdrich), 1994 Birchbark House (Erdrich), 1999 Birchwood (Banville), 1973

Bird (Hinde), 1970 Bird Artist (Norman), 1994 Bird of Night (Hill), 1973 Birdcage (Bowen), 1962

Birds of America: Stories (s Moore), 1998

Birds of Passage (Rubens), 1982 Birds of the Air (Ellis), 1981

Birds of the Innocent Wood (Madden), 1988

Birds on the Trees (Bawden), 1995

Birdsong (Faulks), 1993 Birdy (Wharton), 1979

Birth and Death of the Miracle Man (s Wendt), 1986

Birth of a Hero (Gold), 1951 Birthday Boys (Bainbridge), 1994 Birthstone (Thomas), 1980

Bit of Singing and Dancing (s Hill), 1973 Bitter Knowledge (s Matthews), 1964 Black Album (Kureishi), 1995 Black Angels (s Friedman), 1967 Black Baby (Boylan), 1989 Black Betty (Mosley), 1994 Black Butterfly (s Hannah), 1982

Black Cherry Blues (Burke), 1990

Black Cloud, White Cloud (s Douglas), 1963 Black Corridor (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1969

Black Dogs (McEwan), 1992 Black Hornet (Sallis), 1994 Black House (Theroux), 1974 Black Idol (St. Aubin de Teran), 1987 Black Jasmine (s Singh), 1971 Black Madonna (s Lessing), 1966 Black Marina (Tennant), 1985

Black Marsden: A Tabula Rasa Comedy (Harris), 1972 Black Moon: A Novel of Cornwall 1794–1795 (Graham), 1974

Black Mountain Breakdown (Smith), 1980 Black Prince and Other Stories (s Grau), 1956 Black Rainbow (Mertz, as Michaels), 1983

Black Rainbow (Wendt), 1995 Black Swan (s Hope), 1987 Black Tickets (s Phillips), 1980 Black Tower (James), 1975

Black Water (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1992 Blackboard Jungle (Hunter), 1955

Blacker Than a Thousand Midnights (Straight), 1994

Blacking Factory, and Pennsylvania Gothic: A Short Novel and a Long Story (s Sheed), 1969 Blackmailer (Colegate), 1958 Blackwater Lightship (Tóibín), 2000

Blades of Mars (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1966

Blake (Ackroyd), 1996 Blanco (Wier), 1978

Blast from the Past (Friedman), 1998 Bleeding Heart (French), 1980 Bless Me, Ultima (Anaya), 1972

Blessed Assurance: A Moral Tale (s Gurganis), 1990

Blessing (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1976 Blind Assassin (Atwood), 2000

Blind Blonde with Candles in Her Hair: Stories (s Stead), 1998

Blind Geometer (Robinson), 1986 Blind Understanding (Middleton), 1982

Blinder (Hines), 1966 Bliss (Carey), 1981 Bliss Body (Callow), 1969

Bloch and Bradbury (s Bradbury), 1969 Blonde (Oates, as Smith, R.), 2000

Blood (s Galloway), 1991

Blood: A Southern Fantasy (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1994

Blood and Water (s Ní Dhuibhne), 1988 Blood and Water (s Winton), 1993

Blood and Water and Other Tales (s McGrath), 1989

Blood at the Root: An Inspector Banks Mystery (Robinson), 1997

Blood Countess (Codrescu), 1995

Blood Lines: Long and Short Stories (s Rendell, as Vine), 1996

Blood Meridian; or, The Evening Redness in the West

(McCarthy), 1989 Blood Music (Bear), 1985 Blood on the Moon (Ellroy), 1985 Blood Red, Sister Rose (Keneally), 1974 Blood Relatives (Hunter), 1976 Blood Rights (Phillips), 1989 Blood Sport (Francis), 1968

Blood, Tears & Folly (Deighton), 1993

Blood Tie (Settle), 1977 Blood Ties (Richards), 1976 Bloodbrothers (Price), 1976

Bloodchild and Other Stories (s Butler), 1995

Bloodfather (Ireland), 1988 Bloodline (s Gaines), 1968

Bloodshed and Three Novellas (s Ozick), 1976 Bloodsmoor Romance (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1983

Blosseville File (Hasluck), 1992 Blott on the Landscape (Sharpe), 1984 Blow Your House Down (Barker), 1984

Blown Away (Sukenick), 1986 Blown Figures (Thomas), 1975 Blue Afternoon (Boyd), 1995 Blue Apes (Gotlieb), 1995 Blue Bed (s Jones), 1938 Blue Blood (Eldred-Grigg), 1997

Blue Calhoun (Price), 1992

Blue-Eyed Buddhist and Other Stories (s Gilchrist), 1990

Blue-Eyed Shan (Becker), 1982 Blue Eyes (Charyn), 1975 Blue Guitar (Hasluck), 1980 Blue Hill Avenue (Mirsky), 1972 Blue Light: A Novel (Mosley), 1998 Blue Mars (Robinson), 1996

Blue Mountains of China (Wiebe), 1970

Blue Pastoral (Sorrentino), 1985

Blueback: A Contemporary Fable (Winton), 1997

Bluebeard (Vonnegut), 1988

Bluebeard's Egg and Other Stories (s Atwood), 1987 Bluebottle: A Lew Griffin Novel (Sallis), 1999

Bluegate Fields (Perry), 1992 Bluejay's Dance (Erdrich), 1995 Bluest Eye (Morrison), 1980 Bluette (Frame), 1990

Blu's Hanging (Yamanaka), 1997 B-movie (Barstow), 1987 Boarding-House (Trevor), 1965 Boat Load of Home Folk (Astley), 1983 Boating for Beginners (Winterson), 1985 Bob the Gambler (Barthelme), 1997 Bobby-Soxer (Calisher), 1986

Bodies and Souls (Rechy), 1984 Bodily Harm (Atwood), 1982

Bodily Harm (Billington), 1993

Body (Crews), 1990

Body of Martin Aguilera (Everett), 1994

Body of Water: A Year's Notebook (s Farmer), 1990

Bodysurfers (s Drewe), 1984 Bogeyman (Forster), 1966

Bohemians: John Reed and His Friends (Cheuse), 1982

Bolt (Francis), 1987 Bomber (Deighton), 1970

Bonds of Attachment (Humphreys), 1991 Bone by Bone (Matthiessen), 1999 Bone People (Hulme), 1985

Bonecrack (Francis), 1972

Bonfire of the Vanities (Wolfe), 1988

Boo (Conroy), 1970

Book Class (Auchincloss), 1984 Book of Bebb (Buechner), 1979 Book of Brian Aldiss (s Aldiss), 1972 Book of Common Prayer (Didion), 1977 Book of Daniel (Doctorow), 1996 Book of Evidence (Banville), 1990 Book of Jamaica (Banks), 1980 Book of Knowledge (Grumbach), 1995

Book of Mrs. Noah (Roberts), 1987 Book of Ruth (Hamilton), 1988 Book of Secrets (Kidman), 1987 Book of Secrets (Vassanji), 1996

Book of Skulls (Silverberg, as Knox), 1978 Book of the Reading (Wilding), 1994

Boomerang (Hannah), 1989 Border (Feinstein), 1989

Border Station (Connaughton), 1989 Border Trilogy (McCarthy), 1999 Borderline (Hospital), 1985 Borders of Infinity (Bujold), 1989 Born Brothers (Woiwode), 1988 Born Indian (s Kinsella), 1981 Born of Man (Gray), 1989

Born with the Dead (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1975

Bornholm Night-Ferry (Higgins), 1983

Borrower of the Night (Mertz, as Michaels), 1974

Both Sides of the Moon (Duff), 1998 Bottle Factory Outing (Bainbridge), 1975 Bottle in the Smoke (Wilson), 1990 Bounty Hunters (Leonard), 1956 Bow Down to Nul (Aldiss), 1960 Box Garden (Shields), 1996 Box Socials (Kinsella), 1992

Boy on the Mountain (Rooke), 1969

Boy, the Bridge, the River (O'Sullivan), 1978 Boys and Girls Together (Goldman), 1965

Boys from Brazil (Levin), 1976 Boys in the Island (Koch), 1974 Boys of Winter (Sheed), 1987 Boy's Own Story (White), 1983 Braided Lives (Piercy), 1982 Brass Dolphin (Trollope), 1999 Bray House (Ní Dhuibhne), 1990 Brazen Prison (Middleton), 1971

Brazil (Updike), 1994

Brazzaville Beach (Boyd), 1991 Breach of Promise (Perry), 1998

Bread (Hunter), 1974 Break In (Francis), 1986

Breakfast in the Ruins: A Novel of Inhumanity (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1974

Breakfast of Champions; or, Goodbye, Blue Monday

(Vonnegut), 1973

Breakfast on Pluto (McCabe), 1998 Breaking of Bumbo (Sinclair), 1959

Breaks (Price), 1983 Breast (Roth), 1973

Breath, Eyes, Memory (Danticat), 1994

Breathing Lessons (Tyler), 1989

Breathing Trouble and Other Stories (s Busch), 1974

Breed of Women (Kidman), 1988

Brendan (Buechner), 1987

Brethren (Grisham), 2000

Briar Rose (Coover), 1996

Bride (Sidhwa), 1983

Bride Price (Emecheta), 1976

Bride for the Sahib and Other Stories (s Singh), 1967

Bride of Innisfallen and Other Stories (s Welty), 1955

Bride of Lowther Fell: A Romance (Forster), 1981

Bridesmaid (Rendell, as Vine), 1989

Bridge Builder's Story (Fast, as Cunningham), 1995

Bridge of Lost Desire (Delany), 1987 Bridge to a Wedding (Munonye), 1978

Bridgeport Bus (Howard), 1965

Brief Conversation and Other Stories (s Lovelace), 1988

Brief Hours (Middleton), 1997

Brief Interviews with Hideous Men (s Wallace), 1999

Brief Lives (Brookner), 1991

Briefing for a Decent into Hell (Lessing), 1971

Brigadier Down Under (Tinniswood), 1983

Brigadier in Season (Tinniswood), 1984

Brigadier's Brief Lives (Tinniswood), 1984

Brigadier's Tour (Tinniswood), 1985

Bright Center of Heaven (Maxwell), 1934

Bright Lights, Big City (McInerney), 1985

Bright Road to El Dorado (Anthony), 1982

Brightfount Diaries (Aldiss), 1955

Brightness Falls (McInerney), 1993

Brighton Belle and Other Stories (s King), 1968

Brill among the Ruins (Bourjaily), 1971

Bring Larks and Heroes (Keneally), 1968

Bring Me the Head of Rona Barrett (s Gover), 1981

British Museum Is Falling Down (Lodge), 1967

Broke Heart Blues (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1999

Broken Canes (Vansittart), 1950

Broken Ground (Hodgins), 1998

Brooklyn Book of the Dead (Stephens), 1994

Brooklyn Boy (Lelchuk), 1989

Broom of the System (Wallace), 1987

Brothel in Rösenstrasse (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1987

Brother Frank's Gospel Hour, and Other Stories (s

Kinsella), 1996

Brother of the More Famous Jack (Trapido), 1982

Brothers (Barthelme), 1993

Brothers (Goldman), 1986

Brothers (Rubens), 1984

Brothers in Arms (Bujold), 1989

Brothers in Confidence (Madden), 1972

Brothers of the Head (Aldiss), 1978

Brothers of the Head, and Where the Lines Converge

(Aldiss), 1979

Brother's Tale (Barstow), 1980

Brown Girl, Brownstones (Marshall), 1960

Brownout on Breadfruit Boulevard (Mo), 1995

Brown's Requiem (Ellroy), 1984

Brunswick Gardens (Perry), 1998

Bubble (Anand), 1988

Buccaneer (Cassill), 1958

Bucket Shop (Waterhouse), 1968

Buddha of Suburbia (Kureishi), 1990

Budding Prospects: A Pastoral (Boyle), 1984

Buddwing (Hunter), 1964

Buffalo Afternoon (Schaeffer), 1989

Buffalo Gals and Other Animal Presences (s Le Guin), 1987

Buffalo Gals, Won't You Come Out Tonight (Le Guin), 1994

Buffalo Girls (McMurtry), 1991

Bulibasha (Ihimaera), 1994

Bull and the Spear (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1973

Burger's Daughter (Gordimer), 1979

Buried Land (Jones), 1963

Burn (Ireland), 1975

Burn (s Kelman), 1991

Burning (Johnson), 1971

Burning Angel (Burke), 1995

Burning Book (Gee), 1984

Burning Boy (Gee), 1990

Burning Chrome (Sterling), 1986

Burning House (s Beattie), 1983

Burning Water (Bowering), 1980

Burning World (Ballard), 1964

Burr (Vidal, as Box), 1974

Busconductor Hines (Kelman), 1984

Bushwhacked Piano (McGuane), 1989

Busted Scotch: Selected Stories (s Kelman), 1997

Buster (Burns), 1972

But for Bunter (Hughes), 1985

But We Are Exiles (Kroetsch), 1966

Butcher Boy (McCabe), 1993

Buttercup Chain (Elliott), 1967

Butterfly (Rumaker), 1968

Butterfly Plague (Findley), 1970

Butterfly Stories: A Novel (Vollmann), 1993

Buzzards (Burroway), 1970

By the Light of My Father's Smile (Walker), 1998

By the North Gate (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1963

By the Shores of Gitchee Gumee (Janowitz), 1996 By the Waters of Whitechapel (Kops), 1970

Bye-Bye, Blackbird (Desai), 1971

Bystander (Guerard), 1959

Bystander (Stow), 1957

Byzantium Endures (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1982

Cabal and Other Stories (s Gilchrist), 2000

Cabin Fever (Jolley), 1991

Cabot Wright Begins (Purdy), 1965

Cadillac Jack (McMurtry), 1982

Cadillac Jukebox (Burke), 1996

Caedmon's Song (Robinson), 1990

Caesar (Massie), 1994 Cage (Hinde), 1962

Cain His Brother (Perry), 1995

Caitaani Mutharaba-ini (Ngugi wa Thiong'o), 1980

Cakewalk (s Smith), 1980

Cal (MacLaverty), 1983

Calcutta Chromosome: A Novel of Fevers, Delirium and

Discovery (Ghosh), 1995

Caliban's Filibuster (West), 1971

California Time (Raphael), 1976

Call It a Canary (Tinniswood), 1985 Call for a Miracle (Kiely), 1951 Call for the Dead (le Carré), 1962

Call of Fife and Drum: Three Novels of the Revolution (Fast, as Cunningham), 1987 Callander Square (Perry), 1980 Caltrop's Desire (Gray), 1980 Calypso (Hunter), 1979 Cambridge (Phillips), 1992

Camelot Caper (Mertz, as Michaels), 1976

Cameo (Graham), 1988

Camera Always Lies (Hood), 1967 Camomile Lawn (Wesley), 1985 Campaign (Freeman), 1963

Can We Talk, and Other Stories (s Chinodya), 1998

Canary in a Cat House (s Vonnegut), 1961 Candace and Other Stories (s Cheuse), 1980 Candles of Your Eyes (s Purdy), 1985

Candles of Your Eyes and Thirteen Other Stories (s Purdy), 1988

Cannibal Galaxy (Ozick), 1984 Cannibal in Manhattan (Janowitz), 1988 Canopy of Time (s Aldiss), 1959 Can't Quit You, Baby (Douglas), 1990

Cape Breton Is the Thought Control Centre of Canada (s

Smith), 1969 Capital (Duffy), 1976 Caprice (Bowering), 1987

Caprice and Rondo (Dunnett), 1998

Capricorn Games (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1978

Captain Blackman (Williams), 1975

Captain Corelli's Mandolin (de Bernières), 1994

Captain Kidd (Charyn), 1999 Captain Maximus (s Hannah), 1985 Captain with the Whiskers (Kiely), 1961 Captains and the Kings (Johnston), 1972 Captive in the Land (Aldridge), 1963 Captives of the Flame (Delany), 1963 Captivity Captive (Hall), 1988

Car (Crews), 1973

Cara Massimina (Parks), 1990 Caracole (White), 1986

Cardington Crescent (Perry), 1990

Cards of the Gambler: A Folktale (Kiely), 1953 Caribbean Crisis (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1962

Carn (McCabe), 1997 Carnival (Harris), 1985 Carnival Trilogy (Harris), 1993 Carolina (Vansittart), 1961 Carpathians (Frame), 1988 Carpe Jugulum (Pratchett), 1998 Carpet People (Pratchett), 1992

Carrie: A Novel of a Girl with a Frightening Power (King), 1991

Carrier (Mahjoub), 1998

E.), 1989

Cartesian Sonata and Other Novellas (Gass), 1998 Casablanca and Other Stories (s Moorcock, as Bradbury,

Case Examined (Barker), 1965 Case of Knives (McWilliam), 1988 Case of Lone Star (Friedman), 1987 Case of Need (Crichton, as Lange), 1968 Case of the Kidnapped Angel (Fast, as Cunningham), 1983 Case of the Murdered Mackenzie (Fast, as Cunningham), 1985 Case of the One-Penny Orange (Fast, as Cunningham), 1978 Case of the Poisoned Eclairs (Fast, as Cunningham), 1980 Case of the Russian Diplomat (Fast, as Cunningham), 1979 Case of the Sliding Pool (Fast, as Cunningham), 1982

Casino and Other Stories (s Burnard), 1994

Cassandra Singing (Madden), 1969

Casual Acquaintance and Other Stories (s Barstow), 1976

Casual Brutality (Bissoondath), 1989 Casualties of Peace (O'Brien), 1967 Cat and the King (Auchincloss), 1981

Cat Chaser (Leonard), 1986 Cat Man (Hoagland), 1956 Cat on the Scent (Brown), 1999 Catacomb (Glanville), 1988 Catalysts (Middleton), 1994

Catastrophe Practice: Plays for Not Acting (Mosley), 1992

Cater Street Hangman (Perry), 1979

Catfish Man: A Conjured Life (Charyn), 1980

Catherine Carmier (Gaines), 1966 Catherine Wheel (Harrower), 1960

Catholic (Plante), 1986
Cat's Cradle (Vonnegut), 1963
Cat's Eye (Atwood), 1989
Cave with Echoes (Elliott), 1962
Cavedweller (Allison), 1998
Caverns (Kesey), 1990
Celebration (Crews), 1998
Celebration (Settle), 1986
Celebrations (Burns), 1967
Celestial Navigation (Tyler), 1975
Celibate Season (Shields), 1991

Cement Garden (McEwan), 1978 Centaur (Updike), 1963 Centigrade 233 (Benford), 1990 Central Line (s Binchy), 1978 Centre of the Green (Bowen), 1960

Century (s Smith), 1986

Century's Daughter (Barker), 1986 Certain Age (Janowitz), 1999 Certain Justice (James), 1997

Cetaganda: A Vorkosigan Adventure (Bujold), 1996

Chain of Voices (Brink), 1982 Chamber (Grisham), 1994 Chamber Music (Grumbach), 1979 Champagne Barn (s Levine), 1985

Champion of Garathorm (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1973

Chancer (Kelman), 1985

Chaneysville Incident (Bradley), 1986

Change (Duffy), 1987

Change and Decay in All Around I See (Massie), 1978

Change Here for Babylon (Bawden), 1955 Change for the Better (Hill), 1969 Change for the Better (s Mathers), 1984 Change of Climate (Mantel), 1994 Change of Heart (Humphreys), 1951 Changeling (Jenkins), 1958

Changes: A Love Story (Aidoo), 1993 Changes and Chances (Middleton), 1990 Changing Places: A Tale of Two Campuses (Lodge), 1979

Changing the Past (Berger), 1990

Chant of Jimmie Blacksmith (Keneally), 1972

Chantic Bird (Ireland), 1968 Charade (Mortimer), 1948 Charades (Hospital), 1988

Charisma Campaigns (Matthews), 1972

Charity (Deighton), 1996 Charley Bland (Settle), 1989

Charlie in the House of Rue (s Coover), 1980

Charlotte Gray (Faulks), 1999 Charming Billy (McDermott), 1998 Charms for the Easy Life (Gibbons), 1993

Chaste Planet (s Updike), 1980 Chateau (Maxwell), 1961 Chatterton (Ackroyd), 1988 Checkmate (Dunnett), 1997 Chelsea Murders (Davidson), 1978

Chez Charlotte and Emily (Baumbach), 1979

Chicago Loop (Theroux), 1991

Child in Time (McEwan), 1987

Chieftain's Carnival and Other Stories (s Anthony), 1993

Child of God (McCarthy), 1975 Child of Time (Silverberg, as Knox), 1991

Childhood: A Novel (Alexis), 1998 Childhood's End (Clarke), 1954

Child's Play, with Eustace and the Prowler (Malouf), 1982

Children (Fast, as Cunningham), 1947

Children in the Woods: New and Selected Stories (s

Busch), 1994

Children Is All (s Purdy), 1963

Children of Darkness and Light (Mosley), 1997

Children of Dynmouth (Trevor), 1977 Children of Light (Stone), 1986

Children of Lir: Stories from Ireland (s Hogan), 1981

Children of Men (James), 1993 Children of the Rose (Feinstein), 1975 Children's Bach (Garner), 1984 Childwold (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1977

Chiller (Benford), 1993

Chilly Scenes of Winter (Beattie), 1976

Chimera (s Barth), 1974

China Egg and Other Stories (s Tindall), 1981

Chinese Bandit (Becker), 1976

Chisholms: A Novel of the Journey West (Hunter), 1976

Choice of Enemies (Richler), 1957 Choice of Murder (Vansittart), 1992

Choices (Settle), 1995 Choir (Trollope), 1995 Choir Invisible (Hauser), 1959

Chosen Instrument (Hanley, as Calvin), 1969 Chosen Place, The Timeless People (Marshall), 1970

Christine (King), 1983

Christine/Annette (Guerard), 1985

Christmas at Fontaine's (Kotzwinkle), 1982 Christmas Letters: A Novella (Smith), 1996

Christmas Tree (Johnston), 1982

Chroma and Other Stories (s Barthelme), 1989

Chronicles of Castle Brass (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1985 Chronicles of Corum (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1986 Chronopolis and Other Stories (s Ballard), 1971

Cider House Rules (Irving), 1985 Cigarettes (Mathews), 1988

Cimarron Rose: A Novel (Burke), 1997

Cinderella (Hunter), 1986

Cinnamon Gardens (Selvadurai), 1999

Circle (Feinstein), 1970 Circle Home (Hoagland), 1960 Circle of Friends (Binchy), 1991 Circle of Friends (Mitchell), 1967 Circle of Reason (Ghosh), 1986 Circles of Deceit (Bawden), 1987 Circus Animals (Plunkett), 1990

Cities of the Plain (McCarthy), 1998

Citizen Sidel (Charyn), 1999

Circus Fire (O'Nan), 2000

Citizen Tom Paine (Fast, as Cunningham), 1946 City and the Pillar (Vidal, as Box), 1948

City and the River (Joshi), 1990

City in the Autumn Stars (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1987

City of a Thousand Suns (Delany), 1969 City of Darkness, City of Light (Piercy), 1996

City of Discontent: An Interpretive Biography of Vachel Lindsay, Being Also the Story of Springfield, Illinois, USA, and of the Love of the Poet for That City, That State, and That Nation,

by Henry W. Wiggen (Harris), 1952

City of Glass (Auster), 1985 City of God (Doctorow), 2000 City of Gold (Deighton), 1992 City of Illusions (Le Guin), 1971 City of Night (Rechy), 1964 City of the Mind (Lively), 1991 City of Women (Ireland), 1981

City Primeval: High Noon in Detroit (Leonard), 1981

City Tales (s Hoagland), 1986

Civil Campaign: A Comedy of Biology and Manners

(Bujold), 1999

Civil Wars: A Novel (Brown), 1984

Claiming of Sleeping Beauty (Rice, as Roquelaure), 1983

Clam Shell (Settle), 1971 Clandestine (Ellroy), 1984

Clarkton (Fast, as Cunningham), 1947

Clay's Ark (Butler), 1984 Clear Light of Day (Desai), 1980 Clem Anderson (Cassill), 1960 Clemmons (Masters), 1985 Cleopatra's Sister (Lively), 1993

Client (Grisham), 1993

Clifford's Blues (Williams), 1998

! Click Song (Williams), 1982

Cliffs of Fall and Other Stories (s Hazzard), 1963

Clipped Wings (Callow), 1964 Clock Winder (Tyler), 1973 Clockers (Price), 1992

Cloning of Joanna May (Weldon), 1990 Close Range: Wyoming Stories (s Proulx), 1999

Close-Up (Deighton), 1972 Closed Eye (Brookner), 1991 Closing (Fairbairns), 1988 Closing Arguments (Busch), 1991 Cloudsplitter (Banks), 1998 Cloudstreet (Winton), 1992 Coast To Coast (Raphael), 1999 Cocaine Nights (Ballard), 1998 Cock and Bull (s Self), 1993

Cock Robin; or, A Fight for Male Survival (Billington), 1972

Cockles of the Heart (Halligan), 1996

Cocksure (Richler), 1968

Cocktails at Doney's and Other Stories (s Trevor), 1996

Coda (Astley), 1995

Coffee, Cigarettes and A Run in the Park (s Butler), 1996

Coffer Dams (Markandaya), 1969 Cold Country (Dawson), 1965 Cold Gradations (Middleton), 1972

Cold Ground Was My Bed Last Night (s Garrett), 1964

Cold Is the Grave (Robinson), 2000 Collected African Stories (s Lessing), 1981

Collector (Fowles), 1963

Collector Collector (Fischer), 1997

Collector of Hearts: New Tales of the Grotesque (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1998

Collision Course (Silverberg, as Knox), 1961

Colonel Mint (West), 1973

Colonel's Daughter and Other Stories (s Tremain), 1984

Color of Darkness (s Purdy), 1961 Color of Light (Goldman), 1984 Color of the Sky (Cowan), 1986 Color Purple (Walker), 1983 Colour of Magic (Pratchett), 1983 Colour of Rain (Tennant), 1964 Columba (Slaughter), 1979

Comanche Moon (McMurtry), 1997 Come to Grief (Francis), 1995

Come Up and Be Dead (Deshpande), 1985

Come Winter (Hunter), 1973 Comeback (Francis), 1991

Comedy of the White Dog (s Gray), 1979 Comfort of Strangers (McEwan), 1981

Comforters (Spark), 1957 Comic (Glanville), 1975

Coming Down from Wa (Thomas), 1995 Coming from Behind (Jacobson), 1984

Coming Home (Jones), 1986

Coming of Age at the Y (Cobb), 1984 Coming of the Night (Rechy), 1999 Coming of Winter (Richards), 1974

Coming Through Slaughter (Ondaatje), 1979

Commandant (Anderson), 1975 Commitments (Doyle), 1989 Common Pasture (Masters), 1967 Common People (Callow), 1958 Communion (Gibson), 1971

Companions of the Day and Night (Harris), 1975

Company of Women (Gordon), 1981 Company of Women (Singh), 1999 Compass Error (Bedford), 1969 Compass Rose (s Le Guin), 1983 Composers Plays (s Pownall), 1994 Comrade Jacob (Caute), 1962 Con Man (Hunter), 1960

Conceived in Liberty: A Novel of Valley Forge (Fast, as Cunningham), 1939

Concentric Circles (Bowering), 1977 Concerning Virgins (s Boylan), 1989 Concrete Island (Ballard), 1974 Concubine (Amadi), 1966

Condition of Muzak (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1978

Conditions of Faith (Miller), 2000 Condor Passes (Grau), 1972 Cone-Gatherers (Jenkins), 1981 Confederates (Keneally), 1980 Conference-ville (s Moorhouse), 1976 Confession of a Lover (Anand), 1988

Confessions of a Spent Youth (Bourjaily), 1961 Confessions of an Indian Woman Eater (Brata), 1971 Confessions of Josef Baisz (Jacobson), 1979

Confessions of Nat Turner (Styron), 1968

Confusion (Howard), 1993

Conglomeroid Cocktail Party (Silverberg, as Knox), 1985

Congo (Crichton, as Lange), 1981

Congressman Who Loved Flaubert: 21 Stories and Novellas (s

Just), 1973

Connecticut Countess (s Watmough), 1984

Conservationist (Gordimer), 1975

Consider Sappho Burning (Delbanco), 1969

Consul's File (s Theroux), 1977

Contemporary Portraits and Other Stories (s Bail), 1975

Continent (s Crace), 1987 Continental Drift (Banks), 1985

Contract (Iyayi), 1982

Contract with the World (Rule), 1990

Contradictions (Ghose), 1966

Contre-Jour: A Triptych after Pierre Bonnard (Josipovici), 1986

Control (Goldman), 1982 Convention (s Coover), 1982

Conversations at Curlow Creek (Malouf), 1996 Conversations in Another Room (Josipovici), 1984

Conversions (Mathews), 1962 Convict: A Novel (Burke), 1995

Coolie (Anand), 1936 Cooper (Masters), 1987 Cop Hater (Hunter), 1958

Copenhagen Connection (Mertz, as Michaels), 1983

Copper Beach (Binchy), 1993

Copper Peacock and Other Stories (s Rendell, as Vine), 1991

Cordelia (Graham), 1950 Corker's Freedom (Berger), 1993

Corky's Brother and Other Stories (s Neugeboren), 1970 Cornelius Chronicles (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1977

Corner of Rife and Pacific (Savage), 1988

Corona (Bear), 1984 Corregidora (Jones), 1988

Corroboree: A Book of Nonsense (Gangemi), 1977

Corruption (Mosley), 1958

Corruption and Other Stories (s Lively), 1984

Cosm (Benford), 1998

Cosmo Cosmolino (Garner), 1993

Count Brass (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1976

Count Zero (Gibson), 1986 Countdown (Ghosh), 1999

Counterlife (Roth), 1987 Counting (s Phillips), 1978 Counting House (Dabydeen), 1996

Country (Plante), 1981

Country Ahead of Us, the Country Behind (s Guterson), 1989

Country Cooking and Other Stories (s Mathews), 1980

Country Cousin (Auchincloss), 1978 Country Girls (O'Brien), 1960

Country Girls Trilogy and Epilogue (O'Brien), 1987

Country Without Music (Hasluck), 1990 Countrymen of Bones (Butler), 1983

Coup (Updike), 1979 Couple (s Gordon), 1978 Couples (Updike), 1968

Couples: A Short Story (s Updike), 1976 Courts of Love: Stories (s Gilchrist), 1996

Cousins (Grace), 1992

Covenant with Death (Becker), 1965 Cover Her Face (James), 1966

Cow in the House and Nine Other Stories (s Kiely), 1978

Cowboys and Indians (O'Connor), 1991 Coyote Columbus Story (King), 1992

Cradle (Clarke), 1988 Craft Slices (Bowering), 1985

Crash (Ballard), 1973

Crazy Horse (McMurtry), 1999 Crazy in Alabama (Childress), 1993 Crazy in Berlin (Berger), 1958 Crazy Women (s Matthews), 1985

Creamy and Delicious: Eat My Words (in Other Words) (s Katz), 1970

Creation (Vidal, as Box), 1981

Credo (Bragg), 1996

Cricket in the Road and Other Stories (s Anthony), 1973

Crime Story (Gee), 1995

Crimes of Conscience (s Gordimer), 1991 Crimes of Neglect (Johnson), 1992 Criminal Conversation (Hunter), 1994 Crocodile Bird (Rendell, as Vine), 1993

Crocodile on the Sandbank (Mertz, as Michaels), 1976

Cross Channel (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1996 Crossing (Fast, as Cunningham), 1972

Crossing (McCarthy), 1994

Crossing the Border (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1978

Crossing the River (Phillips), 1994 Crow Eaters (Sidhwa), 1983

Crown and the Loincloth (Nahal), 1981 Crown Jewel (de Boissière), 1981 Crown of Columbus (Erdrich), 1991 Cruel Madness (Thubron), 1985 Cry in the Jungle Bar (Drewe), 1981 Cry of Absence (Jones), 1972 Cry of Crickets (Glanville), 1970 Cry, The Peacock (Desai), 1963

Cry to Heaven (Rice, as Roquelaure), 1990 Crying Child (Mertz, as Michaels), 1973 Crying of Lot 49 (Pynchon), 1967

Crying Oit Loud (Cook), 1988 Cryptonomicon (Stephenson), 1999

Crystal and the Amulet (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1986

Crystal Express (Sterling), 1989 Crystal Rooms (Bragg), 1992 Crystal Vision (Sorrentino), 1982 Crystal World (Ballard), 1966 Cuba Libre (Leonard), 1998

Cube Root of Uncertainty (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1970

Cujo (King), 1981 Culp (s Gass), 1985

Cumbrian Trilogy (Bragg), 1984 Cupboard (Tremain), 1982

Cupid and Psyche (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1970 Cure for Cancer (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1979

Cure for Dreams (Gibbons), 1991 Curious Street (Hogan), 1984 Current Climate (Friedman), 1989

Curse of the Pharaohs (Mertz, as Michaels), 1982

Curtain of Green (s Welty), 1943 Custodian (s Hill), 1972 Custom House (King), 1962 Cut Me In (Hunter), 1960

Cut-Rate Kingdom (Keneally), 1984 Cuts: A Very Short Novel (Bradbury), 1987

Cutting Lisa (Everett), 1986 Cutting Stone (Burroway), 1992 Cybele (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1979 Cycle of the Werewolf (King), 1983 Cyclone and Other Stories (s Narayan), 1944 Cynthia (Fast, as Cunningham), 1969

Da Silva da Silva's Cultivated Wilderness, and Genesis of the

Clowns (Harris), 1977 Dad (Wharton), 1981 Daddy's Girl (Savage), 1970 Daddy's Girls (Fairbairns), 1991 Daisy (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1977

Dalva (Harrison), 1989 Damascus Gate (Stone), 1998 Damballah (Wideman), 1984 Dames' Delight (Forster), 1964

Dan Lemo and the Limehouse Golem (Ackroyd), 1994

Dance in the Sun (Jacobson), 1956 Dance Me Outside (s Kinsella), 1986 Dance of the Happy Shades (s Munro), 1974 Dance the Eagle to Sleep (Piercy), 1971 Dancer from the Dance (Burroway), 1968 Dancer of Fortune (Munonye), 1974 Dancers at Night (s Richards), 1978

Dancers at the End of Time (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1983

Dancers Dancing (Ní Dhuibhne), 1999 Dancers on the Shore (s Kelley), 1965

Dances of Death: Short Stories on a Theme (s Tindall), 1973

Dancing Face (Phillips), 1997

Dancing Girls and Other Stories (s Atwood), 1982

Dancing on Coral (Adams), 1988 Dandelion Wine (s Bradbury), 1999

Dandy Edison for Lunch, and Other Stories (s O'Sullivan), 1981

Danger (Francis), 1984 Danger Zone (Shadbolt), 1976 Dangerous Friend (Just), 1999 Dangerous Love (Okri), 1996 Dangerous Mourning (Perry), 1994 Dangerous Pawn (Graham), 1937 Dangling Man (Bellow), 1946 Daniel Martin (Fowles), 1977

Danny Hill: Memoirs of a Prominent Gentleman (King), 1977

Darconville's Cat (Theroux), 1983 Darcy's Utopia (Weldon), 1991 Dark (McGahern), 1966

Dark-Adapted Eye (Rendell, as Vine), 1986

Dark Carnival (s Bradbury), 1948 Dark Dominion (Hauser), 1947 Dark Duet (Mertz, as Michaels), 1983 Dark Glasses (s Hood), 1976

Dark Glasses (King), 1956 Dark Green, Bright Red (Vidal, as Box), 1950

Dark Half (King), 1989

Dark Holds No Terrors (Deshpande), 1980

Dark Lady (Auchincloss), 1977 Dark Light Years (Aldiss), 1964

Dark on the Other Side (Mertz, as Michaels), 1973

Dark Places (Grenville), 1994 Dark Room (Narayan), 1938

Dark Side of the Sun (Pratchett), 1976 Dark Tower: The Gunslinger (King), 1976

Dark Tower II: The Drawing of the Three (King), 1989 Dark Tower III: The Waste Lands (King), 1991 Dark Tower IV: Wizard and Glass (King), 1997

Dark Visions (s King), 1989

Darker Proof: Stories from a Crisis (s Mars-Jones), 1987 Darker Proof: Stories from a Crisis (s White), 1987

Darkest England (Hope), 1996 Darkness (s Mukherjee), 1985 Darkness of the Body (Plante), 1974 Darktown Strutters (Brown), 1994

Darling (Raphael), 1965

Darlin' Bill: A Love Story of the Wild West (Charyn), 1980

Darwin's Radio (Bear), 1999
Daughter Buffalo (Frame), 1973
Daughters (Marshall), 1992
Daughters of Albion (Wilson), 1992
Daughters of Passion (s O'Faolain), 1982
Daughters of the House (Roberts), 1992
David and Charles (Desai), 1990
Dawn: Xenogenesis (Butler), 1987
Dawning Light (Silverberg, as Knox), 1964

Day after the Fair: Collection of Play and Stories (s Purdy), 1977

Day and a Night at the Baths (Rumaker), 1979

Day Daddy Died (Burns), 1981

Day Hemingway Died (s Marshall), 1984

Day in Shadow (Sahgal), 1975

Day It Rained Forever (s Bradbury), 1959

Day of Creation (Ballard), 1988 Day of Forever (s Ballard), 1967 Day of the Jackal (Forsyth), 1971 Day Superman Died (s Kesey), 1980 Day the Call Came (Hinde), 1965

Day the Men Went to Town: 16 Stories by Women from Cape

Breton (s MacDonald), 1999

Day We Got Drunk on Cake and Other Stories (s Trevor), 1968

Daylight (Feinstein), 1997

Daymaker (Jones), 1987 Daymare (Hinde), 1980 Days (Figes), 1974 Days (s Robison), 1979

Days of Vengeance (Petrakis), 1985 Daysman (Middleton), 1984 Dead Babies (Amis), 1976 Dead Cert (Francis), 1962

Dead Man's Walk (McMurtry), 1995 Dead of the House (Greenberg), 1972 Dead School (McCabe), 1995

Dead Sea Cipher (Mertz, as Michaels), 1975

Dead Zone (King), 1979

Deadeye Dick (Vonnegut), 1983

Deadline for Love and Other Stories (s Lim), 1992 DeAlfonce Tennis: The Superlative Game of Eccentric

Champions: Its History, Accoutrements, Conduct, Rules and

Regimen (Donleavy), 1985

Dealing; or, the Berkeley-to-Boston Forty-Brick Lost-Bag Blues

(Crichton, as Lange), 1971 Dean's December (Bellow), 1982 Dean's List (Hassler), 1997 Dear Deceit (Brooke-Rose), 1961 Dear Future (D'Aguiar), 1996 Dear James (Hassler), 1993

Dear Miss Mansfield: A Tribute to Kathleen Mansfield

Beauchamp (s Ihimaera), 1990

Death Before Bedtime (Vidal, as Box), 1954

Death in Summer (Trevor), 1998 Death in the Devil's Acre (Perry), 1991

Death in the Fifth Position (Vidal, as Box), 1954 Death Is a Lonely Business (Bradbury), 1986

Death Kit (Sontag), 1968

Death Likes It Hot (Vidal, as Box), 1955

Death of Fathers (Driver), 1972 Death of Jim Loney (Welch), 1980 Death of Men (Massie), 1982

Death of Robin Hood (Vansittart), 1981 Death of a Hero (Anand), 1963 Death of a Tango King (Charyn), 1998

Death of an Expert Witness (James), 1977 Death of the Body (Stead), 1986 Death of the Fox (Garrett), 1972

Death of the Novel and Other Stories (s Sukenick), 1969

Death Will Have Your Eyes: A Novel About Spies (Sallis), 1997 Debatable Land (McWilliam), 1994

Deceits of Time (Colegate), 1988 Deceiver (Forsyth), 1991 Deception (Roth), 1990 Decider (Francis), 1993

Declarations of War (s Deighton), 1971 Decline of the West (Caute), 1966 Dedicated Man (Robinson), 1991

Deeds of the Disturber (Mertz, as Michaels), 1988 Deep Fix (s Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1966

Deep Green Sea (Butler), 1997 Deep Range (Clarke), 1957

Deeper Than the Darkness (Benford), 1970

Deer Park (Mailer), 1957

Defend and Betray (Perry), 1992

Defiance (Maso), 1998 Delta Wedding (Welty), 1947

Dem (Kelley), 1967

Demelza: A Novel of Cornwall 1788-1790 (Graham), 1953

Democracy (Didion), 1984 Demon (Selby), 1977 Demon Box (Kesey), 1986

Demon in My View (Rendell, as Vine), 1977 Departing as Air: A Novel (Wier), 1983 Descant for Gossips (Astley), 1960 Descend Again (Burroway), 1960 Descent of Man (s Boyle), 1980

Desert of Stolen Dreams (Silverberg, as Knox), 1981

Desert of the Heart (Rule), 1965 Desert Rose (McMurtry), 1985

Despair and Other Stories of Ottawa (s Alexis), 1994

Desperadoes (s Barstow), 1961 Desperadoes (O'Connor), 1993 Desperation (King), 1996

Destination Biafra (Emecheta), 1982

Destinies of Darcy Dancer, Gentleman (Donleavy), 1978

Destiny (Parks), 2000

Destiny of Nathalie "X" (s Boyd), 1995

Detective (Hailey), 1997 Deuce (Butler), 1989

Devices and Desires (James), 1990 Devil by the Sea (Bawden), 1976 Devil in a Blue Dress (Mosley), 1990 Devil-May-Care (Mertz, as Michaels), 1978

Devil's Alternative (Forsyth), 1980 Devil's Dream (Smith), 1992 Devil's Valley (Brink), 1999

Dew in the Morning (Chinodya), 1982

Dhalgren (Delany), 1977 Diamond (Glanville), 1962

Diamond Age: Or, A Young Lady's Illustrated Primer

(Stephenson), 1995

Diamond Dust: Stories (s Desai), 2000

Diamond Jo (Rooke), 1965

Diamondback Dog (Bowering), 1998

Diamonds at the Bottom of the Sea and Other Stories (s Hogan), 1979

Diaries of Jane Somers (Lessing), 1984 Diary of a Good Neighbour (Lessing), 1983 Diary of a Yuppie (Auchincloss), 1987

Dick (Friedman), 1971

Die ambassadeur (Brink), 1963

Die Eerste lewe van Adamastor (s Brink), 1988

Die eindelose weë (Brink), 1960 Die for Love (Mertz, as Michaels), 1985

Die gebondenes (Brink), 1959 Die meul teen die hang (s Brink), 1958 Difference Engine (Sterling), 1990 Difference Engine (Gibson), 1991 Different Drummer (Kelley), 1963

Different Kinds of Love (s Bardwell), 1987

Different Seasons (King), 1982 Diggers (Pratchett), 1990 Digging (Dowse), 1996

Digging Up the Mountains (s Bissoondath), 1986

Dimension Thirteen (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1969 Dinner Along the Amazon (s Findley), 1985 Dinner at the Homesick Restaurant (Tyler), 1982

Dinosaur Junction (Jones), 1992 Dinosaur Summer (Bear), 1997 Dinosaur Tales (s Bradbury), 1983 Diplomat (Aldridge), 1950

Director's Wife and Other Stories (s Glanville), 1963

Dirty Bird Blues (Major), 1996
Dirty Friends (s Lurie), 1983
Dirty Tricks (s Matthews), 1990
Disaffection (Kelman), 1989
Disappearance (Dabydeen), 1993
Disappearing Acts (McMillan), 1989
Disappearing Moon Cafe (Lee), 1991
Disaster Area (s Ballard), 1967
Disclosure (Crichton, as Lange), 1994
Discovery of Strangers (Wiebe), 1994
Disenchanted (Schulberg), 1951

Dislocations (s Hospital), 1988 Disobedience: A Novel (Hamilton), 2000

Disgrace (Coetzee), 2000

Disorderly Conduct (Duckworth), 1984 Disorderly Knights (Dunnett), 1997

Dispossessed: An Ambiguous Utopia (Le Guin), 1974

Disquiet and Peace (Cooper), 1957 Dissent of Dominick Shapiro (Kops), 1967

Distance (Thubron), 1996 Distant Likeness (Bailey), 1973

Distant Past and Other Stories (s Trevor), 1979

Distant Stars (s Delany), 1981

Distant Suns (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1975

Distortions (s Beattie), 1976 Distraction (Sterling), 1998 Distractions (Middleton), 1975 Disturbing Influence (Mitchell), 1962

Divided World: Selected Stories (s Marshall), 1989

Dividing Stream (King), 1951 Divine Endurance (Jones), 1984 Dixie City Jam (Burke), 1994

Dixon Cornbelt League and Other Baseball Stories (s

Kinsella), 1993

DNA Business (Hanley, as Calvin), 1967 Do, Lord, Remember Me (Garrett), 1965

Do Me a Favour (Hill), 1963 Do Unto Others (Hunter), 2000

Do with Me What You Will (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1974

Doctor Cobb's Game (Cassill), 1969 Doctor Copernicus (Banville), 1976 Doctor Criminale (Bradbury), 1993 Doctor DeMarr (Theroux), 1990

Doctor Fielder's Common Sense (Cole), 1972 Dr. Haggard's Disease (McGrath), 1993

Doctor Lopez (Baker), 1995

Dr. Orwell and Mr. Blair (Caute), 1994 Doctor Rat (Kotzwinkle), 1976 Doctor Slaughter (Theroux), 1984 Doctor Sleep (Bell), 1991

Doctor Wooreddy's Prescription for Enduring the Ending of the World (Mudrooroo, as Johnson), 1983

Dodu and Other Stories (s Narayan), 1943

Dog Attempts to Drown Man in Saskatoon (s Glover), 1985

Dog Rock: A Postal Pastoral (Foster), 1985

Dog Soldiers (Stone), 1975 Dog Tags (Becker), 1974 Doggy Bag (Sukenick), 1994

Dogs Enjoy the Morning (Kiely), 1968

Dogs of War (Forsyth), 1974

Dogs Think That Every Day Is Christmas (Bradbury), 1997

Doin' Wildcat (Mudrooroo, as Johnson), 1988

Doll (Hunter), 1966

Dolley: A Novel of Dolley Madison in Love and War (Brown), 1994

Dolly (Brookner), 1994

Dolly and the Bird of Paradise (Dunnett), 1984 Dolly and the Cookie Bird (Dunnett), 1970 Dolly and the Doctor Bird (Dunnett), 1971 Dolly and the Nanny Bird (Dunnett), 1982 Dolly and the Singing Bird (Dunnett), 1968 Dolly and the Starry Bird (Dunnett), 1973

Dolores Claiborne (King), 1993 Dolphin Connection (Bainbridge), 1991

Domestic Animal (King), 1970

Domestic Particulars: A Family Chronicle (s Busch), 1976 Don Vincente: A Novel in Two Parts (Sionil Jose), 1999 Don't Call Me by My Right Name and Other Stories (s Purdy), 1956

Don't Crowd Me (Hunter), 1960 Don't Tell Anyone (Busch), 2000

Don't Worry about the Kids: Stories (s Neugeboren), 1997

Doors (Hunter), 1976

Dormitory Women (Cassill), 1953

Dottie (Gurnah), 1990 Double God (Kelleher), 1994 Double Life (Raphael), 1993 Double-Wolf (Castro), 1991 Double Yoke (Emecheta), 1983 Doubleman (Koch), 1986 Doubtfire (Nye), 1968

Dove of the East, and Other Stories (s Helprin), 1975

Dove on the Waters (s Shadbolt), 1996 Down among the Women (Weldon), 1972 Down: An Explanation (Fairbairns), 1969 Down and Out in the Year 2000 (Robinson), 1992

Down by the River (O'Brien), 1997 Down in the City (Harrower), 1957

Downtown (Hunter), 1989

Downward to the Earth (Silverberg, as Knox), 1977

Dracula Unbound (Aldiss), 1991 Dragon Can't Dance (Lovelace), 1981

Dragon in the Sword (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1987

Drakenstein (Gray), 1994 Dream Children (s Godwin), 1977 Dream Children (Wilson), 1998

Dream More Luminous than Love: The Yandilli Trilogy

(Hall), 1995

Dream of a Beast (Jordan), 1989 Dream of Kings (Petrakis), 1967

Dream Sleepers and Other Stories (s Grace), 1980

Dream Stuff: Stories (s Malouf), 2000

Dream Swimmer (Ihimaera), 1997

Dreamer (Johnson), 1998

Dreamerika! A Surrealist Fantasy (Burns), 1972

Dreamers (Feinstein), 1994 Dreamhouse (Grenville), 1987 Dreaming (Gold), 1988

Dreaming in Cuban (Garcia), 1992

Dreaming: Hard Luck and Good Times in America (See, as Highland), 1995

Dreams of the Kalahari (Slaughter), 1987

Dreams Surround Us: Fiction and Poetry (s Metcalf), 1977 Dreamweaver's Dilemma: Stories and Essays (s Bujold), 1995

Dressing Up for the Carnival (s Shields), 2000

Dressmaker (Bainbridge), 1973

Drift (Castro), 1994 Drift (s Cowan), 1944

Driftglass: 10 Tales of Speculative Fiction (s Delany), 1978

Driver's Seat (Spark), 1970 Driving Blind (Bradbury), 1997 Driving Force (Francis), 1992 Drop of Patience (Kelley), 1966 Drowned World (Ballard), 1963 Drowner (Drewe), 1997

Drowning Season (Hoffman), 1979 Drug of Choice (Crichton, as Lange), 1970 Drunk with Love (s Gilchrist), 1987

Dry White Season (Brink), 1980

Drylands: A Book for the World's Last Reader (Astley), 1999

D-Tours (Baumbach), 1998

Duane's Depressed (McMurtry), 1999 Dubious Legacy (Wesley), 1993 Dubious Persuasions (s Matthews), 1981

Dublin 4 (s Binchy), 1983 Dublin People (s Binchy), 1993

Dublin Where the Palm Trees Grow (Hamilton), 1996

Dud Avocado (Dundy), 1958 Duffy (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1986 Duluth (Vidal, as Box), 1983

Dunfords Travels Everywheres (Kelley), 1970

Dunster (Mortimer), 1992 Duplicate Keys (Smiley), 1984

During Mother's Absence (Roberts), 1993

Dusk (Sionil Jose), 1998
Dusklands (Coetzee), 1985
Dust on the Paw (Jenkins), 1961
Dust to Dust: Stories (s Findley), 1997
Dutch Shea, Jr. (Dunne), 1982
Dutiful Daughter (Keneally), 1971
Dwarves of Death (Coe), 1990
Dying, In Other Words (Gee), 1984
Dying Inside (Silverberg, as Knox), 1974
Dying of the Light (Glanville), 1976

Eagle and the Chickens and Other Stories (s Aidoo), 1986

Eagle Eye (Calisher), 1973 Eagle on the Coin (Cassill), 1950 Ear of the Dragon (Shadbolt), 1971 Earlsdon Way (Raphael), 1958 Early Christmas (s Price), 1992 Early Harvest (s Bear), 1988 Earthlight (Clarke), 1998

Earthly Possessions (Tyler), 1977

Earth's Other Shadow (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1977

Earthsea (Le Guin), 1977 Earthsong (Kelleher), 1997 Earthworks (Aldiss), 1966

East into Upper East: Plain Tales from New York and New Delhi

(s Jhabvala), 1998 East Is East (Boyle), 1991

East of the Mountains (Guterson), 1999 East, West: Stories (s Rushdie), 1994 Easter Egg Hunt (Freeman), 1981

Easter Man (a Play) and Six Stories (s Hunter), 1972

Easy Go (Crichton, as Lange), 1972 Eater: A Novel (Benford), 2000

Eaters of the Dead: The Manuscript of Ibn Fadlan, Relating His Experiences with the Northmen in A.D. 922 (Crichton, as Lange), 1976

Eating People Is Wrong (Bradbury), 1960

Eating Women Is Not Recommended (s Ní Dhuibhne), 1991

Ebony Tower: Collected Novellas (s Fowles), 1974

Echo Chamber (Josipovici), 1980

Echo House (Just), 1997 Echoes (Binchy), 1986

Ecstasy of Dr. Miriam Garner (Feinstein), 1976 Ecstasy: Three Chemical Romances (s Welsh), 1996

Eden Close (Shreve), 1989 Edge (Francis), 1989

Edge of the Alphabet (Frame), 1962 Edge of the City (Hogan), 1994 Edge of the Paper (Tindall), 1963 Edible Woman (Atwood), 1996 Edna O'Brien Reader (O'Brien), 1994

Education of Oscar Fairfax (Auchincloss), 1995 Education of Patrick Silver (Charyn), 1976

Edwin Mullhouse: The Life and Death of an American Writer

(Millhauser), 1972

Eight Black Horses (Hunter), 1985

Eight Months on Ghazzah Street (Mantel), 1997

1876 (Vidal, as Box), 1976 Eighty Million Eyes (Hunter), 1966 Eighty-Minute Hour (Aldiss), 1974 Einstein Intersection (Delany), 1968

Einstein's Monsters: Five Stories (s Amis), 1987 Eisenhower, My Eisenhower (Charyn), 1971

El Bronx (Charyn), 1997 Elected Member (Rubens), 1969

Electric City and Other Stories (s Grace), 1987 Electrical Experience (s Moorhouse), 1974 Elegy for a Revolutionary (Driver), 1970 Elephant Bangs Train (s Kotzwinkle), 1971 Eleven Million Mile High Dancer (Hill), 1985

Eliza Stanhope (Trollope), 1979 Elizabeth Alone (Trevor), 1974 Elizabethan Trilogy (Garrett), 1998 Ellen Foster (Gibbons), 1987

Ellis Island and Other Stories (s Helprin), 1981

Elric at the End of Time: Fantasy Stories (s Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1985

Elric of Melniboné (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1972

Elric: The Return to Melniboné (s Moorcock, as Bradbury,

E.), 1973

Elsinore (Charyn), 1991

Elvis, Jesus, and Coca Cola (Friedman), 1993

Elvis over England (Hines), 1999 Embezzler (Auchincloss), 1966 Emerald Blue (Murnane), 1995 Emergency Exit (Major), 1979 Emigrants (Lamming), 1955 Emily's Shoes (Bolger), 1992

Emma Who Saved My Life (Barnhardt), 1989

Emmeline (Rossner), 1980 Empathy Experiment (Foster), 1977

Emperor (Essop), 1984 Emperor (Thubron), 1978

Emperor, Swords, Pentacles (Gotlieb), 1981

Empire (Vidal, as Box), 1987

Empire: A Visual Novel (Delany), 1978 Empire of the Sun (Ballard), 1984 Empire Star (Delany), 1966

Empress of the Splendid Season (Hijuelos), 1999

Empty Hours (s Hunter), 1963 Empty Street (s Cowan), 1965 Em's Story (Kelleher), 1988

Enchanted Night: A Novella (Millhauser), 1999

Enclosure (Hill), 1961 Encounter (s Brata), 1978

Encounters with the Element Man (s Atwood), 1982 End of All Songs (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1976

End of My Life (Bourjaily), 1963

End of the Century at the End of the World (Stead), 1992

End of the Hunt (Flanagan), 1994 End of the Road (Barth), 1967

End of the World and Other Stories (s Gallant), 1974

End Zone (DeLillo), 1973

Endless Short Story (s Sukenick), 1986 Ends and Means (Middleton), 1977 Enduring Love (McEwan), 1998 Eneaux troubles (Bowering), 1982 Enemies (Vansittart), 1947

Enemies: A Novel about Friendship (Gordon), 1977

Enemies of the System (Aldiss), 1978

England, England (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1999 English Assassin (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1979 English, August: An Indian Story (Chatterjee), 1988

English Music (Ackroyd), 1993 English Patient (Ondaatje), 1992 English Queens (Nahal), 1979 English Teacher (Narayan), 1945 Englishman's Boy (Vanderhaeghe), 1997 Enigma of Arrival (Naipaul), 1987

Enormous Changes at the Last Minute (s Paley), 1975

Enquiry (Francis), 1971

Entered from the Sun (Garrett), 1990

Enthusiast (s Crews), 1981

Entrance to Porlock (Buechner), 1970

Entropy Tango (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1981

Entry into Jerusalem (Middleton), 1989

Eon (Bear), 1985

Epiphany: Stories (s Sams), 1994

Equal Music (Seth), 1999 Equal Rites (Pratchett), 1987 Equinox (Figes), 1966 Eric (Pratchett), 1989 Ermita (Sionil Jose), 1988 Errata (Bowering), 1988

Escape Artist (Wagoner), 1965

Escape from Five Shadows (Leonard), 1957 Escape from Kathmandu (s Robinson), 1990

Escape Plans (Jones), 1986 Escape to Reality (s Foster), 1977 Esmond in India (Jhabvala), 1958 Estrangement (Amadi), 1986

E.T., the Extra-Terrestrial Storybook (Kotzwinkle), 1982 E.T., the Storybook of the Green Planet: A New Storybook (Kotzwinkle), 1985

Eternal Champion (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1978

Eternity (Bear), 1988

Ethan of Athos (Bujold), 1986 Eucalyptus (Bail), 1998 Europa (Parks), 1997

Europe after the Rain (Burns), 1970

Europe; or, Up and Down with Schreiber and Baggish

(Stern), 1961

Eustace Chisholm and the Works (Purdy), 1968

Evangelista's Fan (s Tremain), 1994

Eva's Man (Jones), 1976 Eveless Eden (Wiggins), 1995

Even Cowgirls Get the Blues (Robbins), 1977

Even the Wicked (Hunter), 1979

Evening (Minot), 1998

Evening and the Morning and the Night (Butler), 1991

Evening Class (Binchy), 1996 Evening News (Hailey), 1990 Evening of Adam (Ellis), 1994 Evening of the Holiday (Hazzard), 1966

Evening Performance: New and Selected Short Stories (s

Garrett), 1985

Evening Snow Will Bring Such Peace (Richards), 1991

Evensong (Godwin), 1999 Ever After (Swift), 1992

Ever-Interesting Topic (Cooper), 1953 Everest Hotel: A Calendar (Sealy), 1998

Everlasting Secret Family and Other Secrets (s Moorhouse), 1980

Every Day Is Mother's Day (Mantel), 2000 Every Little Crook and Nanny (Hunter), 1972 Every Man for Himself (Bainbridge), 1996

Everyday Use (s Walker), 1994

Everything That Moves (Schulberg), 1981 Everything You Need (Kennedy), 1999 Evidence of Love (Grau), 1977

Evidence of Love (Jacobson), 1960

Evil Sleep! (Hunter), 1952

Exagggerations of Peter Prince (Katz), 1968 Except You're a Bird (Tinniswood), 1974 Excommunication (s Aldiss), 1975

Exile (Jones), 1970 Exile (Kotzwinkle), 1987 Exiles (Guerard), 1963

Exit Lady Masham (Auchincloss), 1984

Exit 3 and Other Stories (Rumaker), 1966 Exit to Eden (Rice, as Roquelaure), 1985

Expatriates (Jenkins), 1971

Expedition to Earth (s Clarke), 1998 Expensive Habits (Howard), 1986

Expensive People (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1969 Expensive Place to Die (Deighton), 1967 Experience of India (s Jhabvala), 1972 Experiment in Love (Mantel), 1996 Explorations (Dykeman), 1984

Explosions on the Sun (s Duckworth), 1989 Extra(Ordinary) People (Russ), 1985

Extreme Magic: A Novella and Other Stories (s Calisher), 1964

Eye in the Door (Barker), 1994

Eye of the Cricket: A Lew Griffin Novel (Sallis), 1997

Eye of the Everlasting Angel (Virtue), 1992

Eye of the Heron (Le Guin), 1983 Eye of the Scarecrow (Harris), 1965

Eyes (Burroway), 1966

Eyes of the Dragon (King), 1987

Fabulous Harbors (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1995

Face of a Stranger (Perry), 1993

Face of the Waters (Silverberg, as Knox), 1991 Face of Trespass (Rendell, as Vine), 1974

Face to Face (s Gordimer), 1949

Faces (Perutz), 1987

Faces in the Water (Frame), 1962

Facts in the Case of E.A. Poe (Sinclair), 1980 Facts of Life and Other Fictions (s Nye), 1983

Fahrenheit 451 (Bradbury), 1997 Fair and Tender Ladies (Smith), 1988 Fair Exchange (Roberts), 1999 Fair Game (Johnson), 1965

Fairly Conventional Woman (Shields), 1982

Fairly Good Time (Gallant), 1970

Fairy Tale (Ellis), 1998

Fairy Tale of New York (Donleavy), 1973

Faith (Deighton), 1994

Faith and the Good Thing (Johnson), 1974

Fall and Rise (Dixon), 1985 Fall of Innocence (Freeman), 1956

Fall of Kelvin Walker: A Fable of the Sixties (Grav), 1986

Fall of Moondust (Clarke), 1961 Fall of the Towers (Delany), 1971 Fall on Your Knees (MacDonald), 1996 Fallen Angel (Fast, as Cunningham), 1952

Fallen Curtain and Other Stories (s Rendell, as Vine), 1976

Falling (Schaeffer), 1973 Falling (Thubron), 1990 Falling Free (Bujold), 1988 Falling in Place (Beattie), 1981 Falling Slowly (Brookner), 1999 False Entry (Calisher), 1962 False Gods (s Auchincloss), 1993

Falstaff (Nye), 1976

Familiar Passions (Bawden), 1979 Families (Watmough), 1990 Family (Plante), 1978

Family: A Novel in the Form of a Memoir (Gold), 1983

Family and Friends (Brookner), 1985 Family Arsenal (Theroux), 1976 Family Feeling (Yglesias), 1977 Family Life (Banks), 1975 Family Linen (Smith), 1985 Family Madness (Keneally), 1986 Family Man (s Charyn), 1995 Family Money (Bawden), 1991 Family Planning (Parks), 1989

Family Sins and Other Stories (s Trevor), 1990

Family Trust (Just), 1978 Family's Affairs (Douglas), 1994 Famished Road (Okri), 1992 Famous Last Words (Findley), 1987 Fan Man (Kotzwinkle), 1974

Fanatic Heart: Selected Stories (s O'Brien), 1985

Fancy Man (McCauley), 1996 Fancy Strut (Smith), 1973

Fanny, Being the True History of the Adventures of Fanny

Hackabout-Jones (Jong), 1980 Far Corners of the Earth (Sinclair), 1991

Far Cry (Smith), 1950

Far Cry from Bowmore and Other Stories (s Jenkins), 1973

Far Cry from Kensington (Spark), 1988

Far Family (Dykeman), 1966

Far from the City of Class and Other Stories (s Friedman), 1963

Far from the Sea (Hunter), 1983
Far Journey of Oudin (Harris), 1961
Far Side of Victory (Greenberg), 1983
Far Tortuga (Matthiessen), 1989
Farai's Girls (Chinodya), 1984
Farewell Companions (Plunkett), 1978
Farewell, Fond Dreams (s Gordon), 1975
Farewell Symphony (White), 1997
Farewell to Prague (Hogan), 1995

Farmer (Harrison), 1993

Farming of Bones (Danticat), 1998
Farriers' Lane (Perry), 1994
Farthest Shore (Le Guin), 1973
Fast Lanes (s Phillips), 1987
Fasting, Feasting (Desai), 2000
Fat Man in History (s Carey), 1980
Fat Woman's Joke (Weldon), 1967
Fata Morgana (Kotzwinkle), 1977
Fatal Inversion (Rendell, as Vine), 1987

Fathers: A Novel in the Form of a Memoir (Gold), 1967

Father and Other Stories (s Cassill), 1965 Father Melancholy's Daughter (Godwin), 1991

Fathering (Delbanco), 1973 Father's Day (Goldman), 1971 Father's Kisses (Friedman), 1996 Father's Music (Bolger), 1997 Father's Words (Stern), 1986 Fatima's Scarf (Caute), 1998

Faust (Nye), 1981

Favourite of the Gods (Bedford), 1963

Fear (Keneally), 1965 Fear Man (Jones), 1995 Fear of Flying (Jong), 1974

Feast of All Saints (Rice, as Roquelaure), 1982

Feast of St. Dionysus (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1976

Feast of Snakes (Crews), 1977 Feather Crowns (Mason), 1993 Feeding the Ghosts (D'Aguiar), 1999 Feeling in the Air (Hughes), 1957 Feet of Clay (Pratchett), 1996 Felicia's Journey (Trevor), 1995

Felix in the Underworld (Mortimer), 1997

Fellow Passengers: A Novel in Portraits (Auchincloss), 1990 Fellow Passengers: Collected Stories (s Jolley), 1997

Felo de Se (Higgins), 1960 Female Friends (Weldon), 1975 Female Man (Russ), 1977 Femina Real (s Barker), 1971

Fencepost Chronicles (s Kinsella), 1987 Fenella Phizackerley (Forster), 1971

Feral City (Scott), 1992 Fergus Lamont (Jenkins), 1979 Ferret Fancier (West), 1965 Fertig (Yurick), 1966 Feud (Berger), 1984

Fever Tree and Other Stories (s Rendell, as Vine), 1982

Fever: Twelve Stories (s Wideman), 1989

Few Last Words (s Sallis), 1970 Fiddle City (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1986 Field of Scarlet Poppies (Dawson), 1979 Field of Thirteen (s Francis), 1998

Fierce Invalids Home from Hot Climates (Robbins), 2000

15 x 3 (s Cassill), 1957 15 x 3 (s Gold), 1957 15 x 3 (s Hall), 1957 Fifth Child (Lessing), 1988 Fifth Elephant (Pratchett), 2000

Fifth Wexford Omnibus (Rendell, as Vine), 1991

Fifty-Two Pickup (Leonard), 1974

Fight Night on a Sweet Saturday (Settle), 1965

Fighting Back (Bowen), 1989

Fighting with Shadows; or, Sciamachy (Healy), 1984

Figure of Fun (Jenkins), 1974 Figures in Bright Air (Plante), 1976

Figures in Light: Selected Stories (s Shadbolt), 1979 File on Stanley Patton Buchta (Faust), 1970

Filth: A Novel (Welsh), 1998
Filthy Lucre (Bainbridge), 1986
Final Account (Robinson), 1995
Final Beast (Buechner), 1965

Final Beast (Buechner), 1965 Final Cut (Stern), 1975 Final Diagnosis (Hailey), 1960

Final Fate of the Alligators (s Hoagland), 1992

Final Passage (Phillips), 1990 Final Payments (Gordon), 1978

Final Programme (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1979

Financial Expert (Narayan), 1953 Financiers (Glanville), 1972 Finbar's Hotel (Johnston), 1997 Finbar's Hotel (O'Connor), 1997 Finbar's Hotel (Tóibín), 1997 Finbar's Hotel (Doyle), 1997 Find the Changeling (Benford), 1980

Fine Balance (Mistry), 1996

Fine Madness (Baker), 1964 Fingers in the Door (s Tuohy), 1970 Finished Man (Garrett), 1960 Finishing School (Godwin), 1985 Fire Dancer (Kelleher), 1996 Fire Eaters (Cobb), 1994

Fire in the Morning (Spencer), 1948 Fire on the Mountain (Desai), 1977

Fire Watch (s Willis), 1985

Fireclown (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1967

Fireflies (Hoffman), 1997 Firefly Summer (Binchy), 1988

Fireman's Wife and Other Stories (s Bausch), 1990

Firestarter (King), 1980

Firewalkers: A Memoir (King), 1956

Firm (Grisham), 1991

First and Vital Candle (Wiebe), 1966 First Discworld Novels (Pratchett), 1999 First Life of Adamastor (Brink), 1993

First Light (Ackroyd), 1989

First Love: A Gothic Tale (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1996

First Love, Last Rites (s McEwan), 1975

First Nights (Schaeffer), 1983

First Rumpole Omnibus (s Mortimer), 1983

First Signs (Hines), 1972 First Story (s Welty), 1999

First Winter of My Married Life (s Gass), 1979

Fisher King (Marshall), 2000

Fisherman of the Inland Sea: Science Fiction Stories (s Le Guin), 1994

Fiskadoro (Johnson), 1985 Fist of God (Forsyth), 1994

Five Acre Virgin and Other Stories (s Jolley), 1976

Five-Dollar Smile: Fourteen Early Stories and a Farce in Two Acts (s Tharoor), 1990

Five for the Symbol (s Stead), 1981

Five Legs (Gibson), 1969

Five Minutes in Heaven (Alther), 1995 Five: Short Novels (s Lessing), 1953 Five Stories (s Kinsella), 1987 Five Tales (s Maxwell), 1988

Five Thousand and One Nights (s Lively), 1997

Five Year Sentence (Rubens), 1978 Flag for Sunrise (Stone), 1981 Flag on the Island (s Naipaul), 1968

Flame (Cassill), 1980

Flaming Corsage (Kennedy), 1996

Flats (Wurlitzer), 1971

Flaubert's Parrot (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1985

Flesh and Blood (Cunningham), 1995 Flesh and Blood (Humphreys), 1974 Flesh & Blood (Roberts), 1994 Flesh and Blood (s Scott), 1984 Flesh and Gold (Gotlieb), 1998 Flesh of Morning (Callow), 1971 Flesheaters (Ireland), 1972

Flight from Nevèrÿon (Delany), 1989 Flight into Danger (Hailey), 1958 Flight to Canada (Reed), 1976

Flights (s King), 1973

Flights of Angels: Stories (s Gilchrist), 1998 Fling with a Demon Lover (James), 1996

Floating Opera (Barth), 1968

Floating in My Mother's Palm (Hegi), 1990 Floatplane Notebooks (Edgerton), 1988

Florrie's Girls (Kelly), 1989

Florry of Washington Heights (Katz), 1989

Flowerdust (Jones), 1995

Flowers and Shadows (Okri), 1980

Fludd (Mantel), 1989 Flute-Player (Thomas), 1979 Fly Away Home (Piercy), 1984 Fly Away Home (Tindall), 1971 Fly Away Peter (Malouf), 1982 Fly in the Ointment (Ellis), 1989

Flycatcher and Other Stories (s Bowering), 1974

Flying a Red Kite (s Hood), 1962 Flying Finish (Francis), 1967

Flying-Fox in a Freedom Tree (s Wendt), 1999

Flying Hero Class (Keneally), 1991

Flying Home (Lurie), 1982

Flynn: A Novelisation (McDonald), 1992

Foe (Coetzee), 1987

Folded Leaf (Maxwell), 1946

Folk Tales and Fantasies (s Anthony), 1976

Follow Me Down (Foote), 1951

Folly (Minot), 1992

Fong and the Indians (Theroux), 1976

Fooling (s Duckworth), 1994 Fool's Alphabet (Faulks), 1992

Fools and Other Stories (s Ndebele), 1985

Fools Crow (Welch), 1986 Fools of Fortune (Trevor), 1983 Fool's Sanctuary (Johnston), 1988 Foot of Clive (Berger), 1962

Footprints in the Quag: Stories and Dialogues from Soweto (s Tlali), 1989

For Her Dark Skin (Everett), 1989

For Kicks (Francis), 1965

For Mary with Love (Savage), 1983 For the Good of the Company (Hinde), 1961

For Those Who Hunt the Wounded Down (Richards), 1993

For Want of a Nail (Bragg), 1965 Foreign Affairs (Lurie), 1985 Foreign Bodies (s Aldiss), 1981 Foreign Devils (Faust), 1973 Foreign Woman (s Kidman), 1993

Foreigner (Joshi), 1968 Foreigner (Plante), 1984

Foreseeable Future: Three Long Stories (s Price), 1991

Forest of the Night (Jones), 1961

Forfeit (Francis), 1969 Forge of God (Bear), 1987 Forgetting Elena (White), 1973 Forgotten Life (Aldiss), 1989 Forgotten Story (Graham), 1945 Forms of Water (Barrett), 1993 Forrest Gump (Groom), 1986

Fortress of the Pearl (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1989

Fortune (Drewe), 1987

Fortune Is a Woman (Graham), 1953 Fortune's Daughter (Hoffman), 1985 Fortune's Rocks (Shreve), 2000 Forty Lashes Less One (Leonard), 1972 Forty-Seventeen (s Moorhouse), 1989

43 Fictions (s Katz), 1991

Foundation and Chaos (Bear), 1998 Foundation's Fear (Benford), 1997 Founder's Praise (Greenberg), 1976 Fountains of Paradise (Clarke), 1979

Four Banks of the River of Space (Harris), 1990 Four-Dimensional Nightmare (s Ballard), 1963

Four-Grated City (Lessing), 1969 Four Past Midnight (s King), 1990 Four Stories (s Josipovici), 1977

Four Swans: A Novel of Cornwall 1795-1797 (Graham), 1977

Four Ways to Forgiveness (Le Guin), 1995

Fourteen Sisters of Emilio Montez O'Brien (Hijuelos), 1993

Fourth Angel (Rechy), 1972 Fourth Protocol (Forsyth), 1984

Fourth Wexford Omnibus (Rendell, as Vine), 1990

Fowler's Snare (Dawson), 1962

Foxfire: Confessions of a Girl Gang (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1993

Foxybaby (Jolley), 1986 Fragments (Armah), 1975 Francoeur Family (Plante), 1984 Frankenstein Unbound (Aldiss), 1974 Franklin Scare (Charyn), 1977

Franky Furbo (Wharton), 1989 Franny and Zooey (s Salinger), 1962

Fraud (Brookner), 1994 Freaky Deaky (Leonard), 1988 Free Frenchman (Read), 1987 Free-Lance Pallbearers (Reed), 1968

Freedom Road (Fast, as Cunningham), 1946

Freedomland (Price), 1998 Fremder (Hoban), 1996

French Lieutenant's Woman (Fowles), 1969

Frenzy (Everett), 1997

Frequent Flyer (Friedman), 1989

Friday's Footprint and Other Stories (s Gordimer), 1960

Friend from England (Brookner), 1988 Friend of Don Juan (s Mulkerns), 1988 Friend of My Youth (s Munro), 1990 Friend of the Earth (Boyle), 2000

Friends: More Will and Magna Stories (s Dixon), 1990

Friends of God (Vansittart), 1963

Frog (s Dixon), 1991

From a Cornish Landscape (s Watmough), 1975

From a Crooked Rib (Farah), 1970 From a Seaside Town (Levine), 1970

From Doon with Death (Rendell, as Vine), 1965

From the Fifteenth District: A Novella and Eight Short Stories (s Gallant), 1979

From the Heat of the Day (Heath), 1979 From the Oceans, From the Stars (Clarke), 1962 From the Realm of Morpheus (Millhauser), 1986

Frozen Music (s King), 1988

Fruit Man, the Meat Man, and the Manager (s Hood), 1971

Fruit of the Month (s Frucht), 1988

Fugitive Pieces (Michaels), 1997 Fun & Games (s Major), 1990 Funeral in Berlin (Deighton), 1965 Funland (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1983

Funny Boy: A Novel in Six Stories (Selvadurai), 1994

Furious Gulf (Benford), 1994

Further Adventures of Slugger McBatt (s Kinsella), 1988

Further Inquiry (Kesey), 1990 Fury (s Watmough), 1984

Futility and Other Animals (s Moorhouse), 1969

Future to Let (Peterkiewicz), 1959

Fuzz (Hunter), 1968

G (Berger), 1972

Gabrielle: An Entertainment (Guerard), 1992

Gabriel's Lament (Bailey), 1987

Gain (Powers), 1998 Gala (West), 1976

Galápagos (Vonnegut), 1985 Galatea 2.2 (Powers), 1995

Gallowglass (Rendell, as Vine), 1990 Gallows View (Robinson), 1990 Game and the Ground (Vansittart), 1957

Game in Heaven with Tussy Marx (Read), 1966

Game Men Play (Bourjaily), 1980 Game of Kings (Dunnett), 1997 Game of Patience (King), 1974 Game of Thirty (Kotzwinkle), 1994 Game of Touch (Hood), 1970 Game, Set and Match (Deighton), 1989

Gamekeeper (Hines), 1975

Games at Twilight and Other Stories (s Desai), 1980 Games of Chance: The Interviewer, The Investigator

(Hinde), 1967

Games of Choice (Gee), 1976 Games of the Strong (Adams), 1989 Games Were Coming (Anthony), 1968 Gap in the Spectrum (Duckworth), 1959

Garbage (Dixon), 1988 Garden (Perutz), 1962

Garden of Earthly Delights (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1970

Garden of Rama (Clarke), 1991

Garden of the Villa Mollini and Other Stories (s Tremain), 1987

Garden State (Moody), 1992 Gardener (Pownall), 1990

Gardens of Fire (Eldred-Grigg), 1993 Garish Day (Billington), 1986 Garrick Year (Drabble), 1965 Gates (Johnston), 1973 Gates of Ivory (Drabble), 1991

Gathering of Old Men (Gaines), 1984 Gemini (Dunnett), 2000

Gems She Wore: A Book of Irish Places (Plunkett), 1973

General Ludd (Metcalf), 1980 Generally a Virgin (Hinde), 1972

Generation X: Tales for an Accelerated Culture (Coupland), 1991

Generous Man (Price), 1967 Genetha (Heath), 1981 Genoese Fancy (Hughes), 1979 Gentle Insurrection (s Betts), 1954 Gentleman and Ladies (Hill), 1969 Gentleman Death (Gibson), 1993

Gentlemen in England: A Vision (Wilson), 1986 George Beneath a Paper Moon (Bawden), 1974

Georges' Wife (Jolley), 1993 Georgy Girl (Forster), 1966 Gerald's Game (King), 1992 Gerald's Party (Coover), 1986 Geronimo Rex (Hannah), 1972 Gertrude and Claudius (Updike), 2000

Gertrude of Stony Island Avenue (Purdy), 1997

Gesture Life (Lee), 1999

Get Ready for Battle (Jhabvala), 1963

Get Shorty (Leonard), 1990 Gettin Place (Straight), 1996 Getting It Right (Howard), 1982 Getting Older (s Updike), 1985

Getting Pretty on the Table (Gover), 1975 Getting Through (s McGahern), 1980 Ghandi Quartet (Nahal), 1993

Ghost Dance (Maso), 1987

Ghost from the Grand Banks (Clarke), 1990 Ghost of Henry James (Plante), 1970 Ghost of the Sun (Petrakis), 1990 Ghost Road (Barker), 1995 Ghost Town (Coover), 1998 Ghost Woman (Thornton), 1992

Ghostly Populations (s Matthews), 1987

Ghosts (Auster), 1986 Ghosts (Banville), 1993 Ghosts (Figes), 1988 Ghosts (Hunter), 1980 Ghosts (Perutz), 1966 Giant, O'Brien (Mantel), 1998 Giant's Chair (Graham), 1938

Gift (Humphreys), 1963

Ghost Writer (Roth), 1979

Gift of a Daughter (Humphreys), 1998

Gift of Stones (Crace), 1989 Giggler Treatment (Doyle), 2000

Giles Goat-Boy; or, The Revised New Syllabus (Barth), 1967

Gilgamesh the King (Silverberg, as Knox), 1985

Ginger Man (Donleavy), 1965 Ginger, You're Barmy (Lodge), 1965 Girl (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1974 Girl at the Lion d'Or (Faulks), 1999 Girl Green as Elderflower (Stow), 1980 Girl in Gingham (Metcalf), 1978 Girl in Landscape (Lethem), 1998 Girl in a Swing (Adams), 1980

Girl on a Bicycle: A Novel (Bardwell), 1977 Girl Who Can and Other Stories (s Aidoo), 1997 Girl Who Loved Tom Gordon (King), 1999

Girl with a Monkey (Astley), 1987

Girl with a Monkey: New and Selected Stories (s Michaels), 2000

Girl of Forty (Gold), 1986

Girl with Curious Hair (s Wallace), 1988 Girl with Red Hair (Gordon), 1974 Girl with the Glass Heart (Stern), 1957

Girlfriend in a Coma (Coupland), 1998

Girls (Busch), 1997 Girls (Yglesias), 1999

Girls: A Story of Village Life (Bowen), 1987

Girls at Play (Theroux), 1969 Girls at War (s Achebe), 1973 Girls High (Anderson), 1991

Girls in Their Married Bliss (O'Brien), 1968 Girls of Slender Means (Spark), 1963

Give the Boys a Great Big Hand (Hunter), 1962 Give Them All My Love (Tindall), 1989 Give Them Stones (Beckett), 1987 Give Us This Day (Barstow), 1989

Giver (Cole), 1971

Glad Eye and Other Stories (s Barstow), 1984 Glade within the Grove (Foster), 1996

Glamorama (Ellis), 1999

Glamour and the Sea (Knox), 1996 Glance Away (Wideman), 1986 Glass Alembic (Feinstein), 1973 Glass Canoe (Ireland), 1976 Glass Lake (Binchy), 1995 Glass Palace (Ghosh), 2000 Glass People (Godwin), 1972

Glass Whittler: And Other Stories (s Johnson), 1989

Glass Zoo (McNeish), 1976 Glassblower's Breath (Gupta), 1993

Glide Path (Clarke), 1969

Glimpse of Sion's Glory (s Colegate), 1985

Glittering Prizes (Raphael), 1978

Glitz (Leonard), 1985

Globalhead: Stories (s Sterling), 1992 Gloriana (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1979 Glorious Morning, Comrade (s Gee), 1975

Glory Days (Scott), 1988 Glyph (Everett), 1999

Go-Away Bird and Other Stories (s Spark), 1960

Go Tell the Lemming (Rubens), 1984

Go the Distance: Baseball Stories (s Kinsella), 1995 Go When You See the Green Man Walking (s Brooke-Rose), 1970

Goalkeepers Are Crazy: A Collection of Football Stories (s Glanville), 1964

Goat's Song (Healy), 1995

God Bless John Wayne (Friedman), 1995

God Bless You, Mr. Rosewater; or, Pearls Before Swine

(Vonnegut), 1965

God Bless the Child (Hunter), 1965 God-Fearer (Jacobson), 1993 God in the Mountain (Thubron), 1977 God of Small Things (Roy), 1997 God Perkins (Pownall), 1977

God Stealer and Other Stories (s Sionil Jose), 1968

Godded and Codded (O'Faolain), 1970

Goddess and Other Women (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1975 Godling, Go Home! (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1964

Godmother (Elliott), 1967 Godric (Buechner), 1981 Gods and Generals (Shaara), 1996 God's Country (Everett), 1994

God's Own Country (s Kiely), 1993

Gog (Sinclair), 1967

Going Abroad (s Updike), 1987 Going after Cacciato (O'Brien), 1978 Going All the Way (Wakefield), 1971

Going Away: A Report, A Memoir (Sigal), 1963

Going Down Fast (Piercy), 1969 Going Down Slow (Metcalf), 1972 Going for Mr. Big (Gover), 1979 Going Places (s Michaels), 1970 Going to Jerusalem (Charyn), 1968

Going to the Dogs (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1987

Going to the Moon (Callow), 1968

Going West (Gee), 1992

Going Wrong (Rendell, as Vine), 1990 Gold and Sand (s Aldridge), 1960 Gold-Bug Variations (Powers), 1992

Gold Coast (Leonard), 1982 Gold Coast (Robinson), 1988 Golden Age (Vidal, as Box), 2000 Golden Apples (s Welty), 1950

Golden Apples of the Sun (s Bradbury), 1953 Golden Barge (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1980

Golden Calves (Auchincloss), 1989 Golden Days (See, as Highland), 1987 Golden Dress (Halligan), 1999 Golden Evening (Middleton), 1968

Golden Gate: A Novel in Verse (Seth), 1986 Golden Honeycomb (Markandaya), 1977 Golden Notebook (Lessing), 1962

Golden River (Fast, as Cunningham), 1960

Golden Rope (Schaeffer), 1996 Golden States (Cunningham), 1984

Goldilocks (Hunter), 1978 Golk (Stern), 1960

Gone Fishin': An Easy Rawlins Novel (Mosley), 1996

Gone for Good (Childress), 1998 Gone for Soldiers (Shaara), 2000 Gone Indian (Kroetsch), 1973 Gone the Sun (Groom), 1988 Gone to Soldiers (Piercy), 1987 Good Bones (s Atwood), 1993 Good Day to Die (Harrison), 1993

Good Evening Mr. and Mrs. America, and All the Ships at Sea

(Bausch), 1996

Good-for-Nothing (Yaffe), 1953 Good Grief (Waterhouse), 1997 Good Hearts (Price), 1988 Good Help (s Gurganis), 1988 Good House (Burnard), 1999 Good Husband (Godwin), 1994 Good Man in Africa (Boyd), 1982

Good Omens: The Nice and Accurate Predictions of Agnes

Nutter, Witch (Pratchett), 1990 Good Policeman (Charyn), 1991

Good Scent from a Strange Mountain: Stories (s Butler), 1992

Good Terrorist (Lessing), 1985 Good Times (s Kelman), 1999

Goodbye, Columbus, and Five Short Stories (s Roth), 1959

Goodbye Harold, Good Luck (s Thomas), 1986

Goodbye Mickey Mouse (Deighton), 1982 Goodbye Un-America (Aldridge), 1979

Goodness (Parks), 1991 Gooseboy (Barker), 1987 Gor Saga (Duffy), 1982 Gospel (Barnhardt), 1993

Gospel According to the Son (Mailer), 1997

Gospel Singer (Crews), 1968 Goss Women (Cassill), 1975

Gossip from the Forest (Keneally), 1976 Gould: A Novel in Two Novels (Dixon), 1997

Goy (Harris), 1970 Grace (Gee), 1989

Grace Abounding (Howard), 1984 Grace Notes (MacLaverty), 1997 Graduate Wife (Raphael), 1962 Grain of Truth (Bawden), 1968 Grain of Truth (Hasluck), 1994

Grain of Wheat (Ngugi wa Thiong'o), 1967

Grand Opening (Hassler), 1987 Grandmothers' Club (Cheuse), 1986 Grandmother's Pigeon (Erdrich), 1996 Grandmother's Tale (s Narayan), 1993

Grantchester Grind: A Porterhouse Chronicle (Sharpe), 1995

Granted Wishes (s Berger), 1984 Grass Is Singing (Lessing), 1950 Grasse, 3/23/66 (Delbanco), 1968

Grave Descend (Crichton, as Lange), 1970

Graven Images (Thomas), 1993

Graveyard for Lunatics: Another Tale of Two Cities

(Bradbury), 1990

Gravity's Rainbow (Pynchon), 1973

Greasy Lake and Other Stories (s Boyle), 1985

Great American Jackpot (Gold), 1971 Great American Novel (Roth), 1973

Great Apes (Self), 1997 Great Climate (s Wilding), 1990 Great Fake Book (Bourjaily), 1987 Great Fire of London (Ackroyd), 1988 Great Indian Novel (Tharoor), 1989 Great Jones Street (DeLillo), 1974 Great Occasion (Colegate), 1962 Great Ponds (Amadi), 1973

Great Profundo and Other Stories (s MacLaverty), 1988

Great Pursuit (Sharpe), 1984 Great Realizations (Hood), 1997

Great Rock 'n' Roll Swindle (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1977

Great Santini (Conroy), 1976 Great Sky River (Benford), 1987

Great Train Robbery (Crichton, as Lange), 1975

Great World (Malouf), 1991

Great World and Timothy Colt (Auchincloss), 1957

Greek Fire (Graham), 1958

Greeks Have a Word for It (Unsworth), 1967 Green Days by the River (Anthony), 1967

Green Equinox (Mavor), 1973 Green Flash (Graham), 1987

Green Flows the Bile (Peterkiewicz), 1969 Green Grass, Running Water (King), 1993

Green Journey (Hassler), 1986

Green Mars (Robinson), 1988 Green Mile (King), 1996

Green Shadows, White Whale (Bradbury), 1992 Green Water, Green Sky (Gallant), 1960

Greenlanders (Smiley), 1988

Greenwich Killing Time (Friedman), 1986

Greeting from Southern California (See, as Highland), 1988

Grey Area, and Other Stories (s Self), 1996 Grey Beginning (Mertz, as Michaels), 1986

Greybeard (Aldiss), 1964

Greygallows (Mertz, as Michaels), 1973 Greyhound for Breakfast (s Kelman), 1987

Greyling (Rooke), 1963 Grimus (Rushdie), 1979 Grisly Wife (Hall), 1993 Grotesque (McGrath), 1989

Ground Beneath Her Feet (Rushdie), 1999

Grove of Eagles (Graham), 1964 Guards! Guards! (Pratchett), 1991 Guerrillas (Naipaul), 1975 Guest of Honour (Gordimer), 1971 Guests of Fame (Stern), 1958 Guests of War (Jenkins), 1956 Guide (Narayan), 1958

Guide to Animal Behaviour (s Glover), 1991 Guilty Thing Surprised (Rendell, as Vine), 1970

Gump & Co (Groom), 1995

Gun, With Occasional Music (Lethem), 1994

Gunny Sack (Vassanji), 1989 Guns (Hunter), 1977 Gunsights (Leonard), 1979 Gut Symmetries (Winterson), 1997 Guyana Quartet (Harris), 1985 Gwendolen (Emecheta), 1989 Gypsy's Curse (Crews), 1975

Habit of Loving (s Lessing), 1957

Hack (Sheed), 1963 Ha-Ha (Dawson), 1961

Hail, Hail, The Gang's All Here! (Hunter), 1971

Hail to the Chief (Hunter), 1973 Hair o' the Chine (s Coover), 1979 Hajji and Other Stories (s Essop), 1978

Half a Heart (Brown), 2000

Half Asleep in Frog Pajamas (Robbins), 1994

Half Moon Street (Perry), 2000

Half Moon Street: Two Short Novels (Theroux), 1984

Half of Paradise (Burke), 1995 Hall of Mirrors (Stone), 1968 Hallelujah Bum (Sinclair), 1963 Hamilton Stark (Banks), 1978 Hammer of God (Clarke), 1993 Hammertown Tales (s Masters), 1987 Hand at the Shutter (s King), 1996 Hand-Reared Boy (Aldiss), 1970

Hand That Feeds You: A Satiric Nightmare (Hasluck), 1982

Handful of Rice (Markandaya), 1966 Handmaid's Tale (Atwood), 1986 Hanged Man in the Garden (Halligan)

Hanged Man in the Garden (Halligan), 1989 Hanger Stout, Awake! (Matthews), 1967 Hanging Garden (Wagoner), 1982 Hanging Tree (Massie), 1990 Hanging Valley (Robinson), 1992 Haphazard House (Wesley), 1983 Happenstance (Shields), 1980 Happy as Larry (Hinde), 1958 Happy Endings (Cook), 1974

Happy for the Child (Jenkins), 1953

Happy Marriage and Other Stories (s Cassill), 1967

Happy New Year, Herbie, and Other Stories (s Hunter), 1965

Happy Times (s Lurie), 1969

Harald, Claudia, and Their Son Duncan (Gordimer), 1996

Hard Blue Sky (Grau), 1959

Hard Feelings and Other Stories (s King), 1976 Hard Time to Be a Father (s Weldon), 1999 Harder They Fall (Schulberg), 1996

Hardfought (Bear), 1988

Hardwater Country (s Busch), 1979 Harland's Half Acre (Malouf), 1984 Harlot's Ghost (Mailer), 1991 Harlot's Progress (Dabydeen), 1999 Harm Done (Rendell, as Vine), 1999 Harnessing Peacocks (Wesley), 1986 Harriet Said (Bainbridge), 1973 Harris's Requiem (Middleton), 1960

Harry (Vansittart), 1981

Harry and Catherine (Busch), 1990 Harry Reunited (Cobb), 1995

Harry's Fragments: A Novel of International Puzzlement

(Bowering), 1990

Harvest of Thorns (Chinodya), 1991 Hassan's Tower (s Drabble), 1980

Hat on the Letter O and Other Stories (s Hasluck), 1978

Haunt (Barker), 1999 Haunted Land (Stow), 1957

Haunted: Tales of the Grotesque (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1994

Haunting of Jessica Raven (Jones), 1994 Have the Men Had Enough? (Forster), 1989 Hawaii One Summer (Kingston), 1998

Hawk Is Dying (Crews), 1974

Hawkmoon (s Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1995 Hawksbill Station (Silverberg, as Knox), 1968

Hawksmoor (Ackroyd), 1986 Hayballs (Tinniswood), 1989 He, She and It (Piercy), 1991 He Who Hesitates (Hunter), 1965

He/She (Gold), 1982

Headbanger (Hamilton), 1996 Headhunter (Findley), 1994 Heading West (Betts), 1981 Headlong (Frayn), 1999 Heads (Bear), 1990

Heads by Harry (Yamanaka), 1999

Healers (Armah), 1979 Healing (Jones), 1998 Healing Art (Wilson), 1988

Health and Happiness (Johnson), 1991 Hear and Forgive (Humphreys), 1953 Hearing Voices (Wilson), 1996 Heart of Aztlán (Anaya), 1976 Heart of It (Hines), 1994

Heart of Red Iron (Gotlieb), 1989 Heart of the Comet (Benford), 1986 Heart of the Country (Weldon), 1988 Heart of the River (Slaughter), 1983

Heart Songs, and Other Stories (s Proulx), 1989

Heartland (Harris), 1964

Hearts and Lives of Men (Weldon), 1988

Hearts in Atlantis (King), 1999

Hearts of Wood, and Other Timeless Tales (s Kotzwinkle), 1986

Heart's Wild Surf (Johnson), 1996 Heartsong of Charging Elk (Welch), 2000 Heartstones (Rendell, as Vine), 1987

Heartwood (Burke), 1999 Heat (Goldman), 1985

Heat and Dust (Jhabvala), 1976

Heat and Other Stories (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1991

Heat Wave (Lively), 1996 Heather Blazing (Tóibín), 1993 Heaven and Earth (Raphael), 1985 Heaven's Prisoners (Burke), 1990 Heavy Feather (Barker), 1979

Heavy Water and Other Stories (s Amis), 1999

Heavy Weather (Sterling), 1994 Heckler (Hunter), 1962

Hegira (Bear), 1979

Hello America (Ballard), 1981

Helen (Fast, as Cunningham), 1967 Helen Blake (Jones), 1955 Helliconia Spring (Aldiss), 1982 Helliconia Summer (Aldiss), 1983 Helliconia Trilogy (Aldiss), 1985 Helliconia Winter (Aldiss), 1985

Helsingør Station and Other Departures: Fictions and Autobiographies 1956–1989 (s Higgins), 1989

Henderson the Rain King (Bellow), 1959 Henry James' Midnight Song (Hill), 1993 Henry Sows the Wind (Glanville), 1954 Her Infinite Variety (Auchincloss), 2000 Her Mother's Daughter (French), 1987

Her Side of It (Savage), 1981 Her Story (Jacobson), 1987 Here Goes Kitten (Gover), 1965 Here I Stay (Mertz, as Michaels), 1985

Here on Earth (Hoffman), 1997 Here Today (Fairbairns), 1984 Hermes 3000 (Kotzwinkle), 1972 Hermit King (Cobb), 1987

Hero: A Fable (Sealy), 1991 Heroes (Iyayi), 1986

Heroes of the Empty View (Aldridge), 1954

Herr Nightingale and the Satin Woman (Kotzwinkle), 1978 Herself in Love and Other Stories (s Wiggins), 1987

Herzog (Bellow), 1965

Hessian (Fast, as Cunningham), 1973

Hey Jack! (Hannah), 1987

Hidden I: A Myth Revised (Raphael), 1990 Hidden in the Heart (Jacobson), 1991

Hidden Ones (Jones), 1988

Hidden Side of the Moon (s Russ), 1989

Hidden Symptoms (Madden), 1986

Hide (Unsworth), 1970 Hiding Place (Wideman), 1984

High (Hinde), 1969

High Cost of Living (Piercy), 1979

High Crimes and Misdemeanors (s Greenberg), 1980

High Fidelity (Hornby), 1995

High Ground and Other Stories (s McGahern), 1987

High Hearts (Brown), 1986 High Lonesome (Hannah), 1996 High-Rise (Ballard), 1977 High Road (O'Brien), 1988 High Stakes (Francis), 1976 Higher Ground (Phillips), 1989 Highgate Rise (Perry), 1992 Highways to a War (Koch), 1995 Hill Bachelors (Trevor), 2000

Hills of Apollo Bay (Cowan), 1989 Him They Compelled (Middleton), 1964

Him with His Foot in His Mouth and Other Stories (s Bellow), 1984

Hind's Kidnap: A Pastoral on Familiar Airs (McElroy), 1970

Hired Man (Bragg), 1970 His Little Women (Rossner), 1990 His Mistress's Voice (Freeman), 1999

History Maker (Gray), 1995 History Man (Bradbury), 1976

History of the Ginger Man (Donleavy), 1994

History of the Runestaff (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1979 History of the World in 10 1/2 Chapters (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1989

Hitting the Wall: Two Novellas (s Foster), 1989

Hocus Pocus; or, What's the Hurry, Son? (Vonnegut), 1990

Hogfather (Pratchett), 1998 Hogg (Delany), 1998

Holden's Performance (Bail), 1987 Holder of the World (Mukherjee), 1993

Holding On (Jones), 1973 Holiday (Middleton), 1974

Hollow Lands (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1975 Hollywood: A Novel of American in the 1920s (Vidal, as

Box), 1990

Hollywood Nocturnes (s Ellroy), 1994

Holy Fire (Sterling), 1996 Holy Pictures (Boylan), 1983 Holy Tree (Jenkins), 1969 Hombre (Leonard), 1961

Home at the End of the World (Cunningham), 1990

Home Free (Wakefield), 1977 Home Front (Tinniswood), 1982 Home Is the Exile (Masters), 1996 Home Made (s Price), 1990 Home Repairs (Ellis), 1993 Home Rule (Boylan), 1993

Home Thoughts (Parks), 1987 Home Time (s Farmer), 1985

Home Truths: Selected Canadian Stories (s Gallant), 1985 Homeland and Other Stories (s Kingsolver), 1989

Homesick (Vanderhaeghe), 1990 Homesickness (Bail), 1999 Homewood Books (Wideman), 1992

Honest Account of a Memorable Life: An Apocryphal Gospel (Price), 1994

Honey Seems Bitter (Kiely), 1954

Honor, Power, Riches, Fame and the Love of Women (Just), 1979

Honorable Men (Auchincloss), 1986 Honorary Patron (Hodgins), 1987

Honour, and Other People's Children: Two Stories (s

Garner), 1982

Honourable Schoolboy (le Carré), 1977

Hope (Deighton), 1995

Hope in the Desperate House (Richards), 1996

Hopeful Monsters (Mosley), 1991 Horatio Stubbs Saga (Aldiss), 1985 Horse and Two Goats (s Narayan), 1970

Horse Heaven (Smiley), 2000

Horse under Water (Deighton), 1968

Horsefly (Hoffman), 2000 Horsehair Sofa (Hughes), 1961 Horseman, Pass By (McMurtry), 1961

Horse's Head (Hunter), 1968 Hosanna Man (Callow), 1956 Hospital Wedding (s Dawson), 1978 Hot Jazz Trio (Kotzwinkle), 1989 Hot Money (Francis), 1988

Hot Month (Hanley, as Calvin), 1967

Hot Sky at Midnight (Silverberg, as Knox), 1994

Hotel (Hailey), 1965

Hotel de Dream (Tennant), 1976 Hotel du Lac (Brookner), 1985 Hotel in the Jungle (Guerard), 1995 Hotel New Hampshire (Irving), 1981 Hothouse by the East River (Spark), 1973

Hottentot Room (Hope), 1987

Hottest Night of the Year (s Adams), 1989

Hound of Earth (Bourjaily), 1956 Hour of the Bell (Petrakis), 1986 Hours (Cunningham), 1998 House (Bardwell), 1984

House for Mr. Biswas (Naipaul), 1962

House Guest (Anderson), 1995 House Gun (Gordimer), 1998 House in the Light (Farmer), 1995

House Made of Dawn (Momaday), 1969 House of Doctor Dee (Ackroyd), 1993 House of Five Talents (Auchincloss), 1961

House of Many Shadows (Mertz, as Michaels), 1975

House of Sleep (Coe), 1998

House of Splendid Isolation (O'Brien), 1994 House of Stairs (Rendell, as Vine), 1989 House of Strife (Shadbolt), 1993

House of the Prophet (Auchincloss), 1980 House on Coliseum Street (Grau), 1961 House on Mango Street (Cisneros), 1984 House on the Sound (Perutz), 1965 House That Jack Built (Hunter), 1988

House That Jack Built (Kelleher), 1994

House with the Stained-Glass Windows (Graham), 1934

Houseguest (Berger), 1989

Householder (Jhabvala), 1960

Houses of Stone (Mertz, as Michaels), 1993

Housespy (Duffy), 1978

How Far Can You Go? (Lodge), 1980

How I Became a Holy Mother and Other Stories (s Jhabvala), 1976

How Late It Was, How Late (Kelman), 1994

How Many Miles to Babylon? (Johnston), 1974

How Mickey Made It (s Phillips), 1981

How She Died (Yglesias), 1973 How Stella Got Her Groove Back (McMillan), 1996

How the Dead Live (Self), 2000

How to Save Your Own Life (Jong), 1977

Hoyt's Child (Cassill), 1976

Human Element and Other Stories (s Barstow), 1969

Human Stain (Roth), 2000 Humboldt's Gift (Bellow), 1975

100 Scenes from Married Life: A Selection (Gordon), 1976

Hundred Secret Senses (Tan), 1995 Hungering Shame (Cassill), 1956

Hungry Ghosts: Seven Allusive Comedies (s Oates, as Smith,

R.), 1975

Hunt (Bragg), 1972 Hunted (Guerard), 1947 Hunted (Leonard), 1978 Hunter (Aldridge), 1951

Hunter and the Trap (Fast, as Cunningham), 1967 Hunting the Wild Pineapple (s Astley), 1991 Hunting with Diana (Watmough), 1996

Hurricane Hazel and Other Stories (s Atwood), 1986

Hurry Home (Wideman), 1970 Hyde Park Headsman (Perry), 1994

I Am the World (Vansittart), 1942

I Been in Sorrow's Kitchen and Licked out All the Pots (Straight), 1992

I Cannot Get You Close Enough: Three Novellas (s Gilchrist), 1991

I Come as a Thief (Auchincloss), 1973

I Didn't Know You Cared (Tinniswood), 1973

I Don't Want to Know Anyone Too Well: 15 Stories (s Levine), 1971

I, Dreyfus (Rubens), 1999 I, etcetera (s Sontag), 1979

I Heard My Sister Speak My Name (Savage), 1977 I Like Being Killed: Stories (s Fischer), 2000

I Like 'em Tough (s Hunter), 1958 I Like It Better Now (s Hall), 1992

I Lock My Door upon Myself (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1990

I Married a Communist (Roth), 1998 I Sent a Letter to My Love (Rubens), 1978 I Shall Not Hear the Nightingale (Singh), 1961 I Sing the Body Electric! (s Bradbury), 1970

I Think We Should Go into the Jungle (s Anderson), 1993

I Want (Dunn), 1972

I Want to Go to Moscow: A Lay (Duffy), 1973 I Wanted a Year Without Fall (Busch), 1971 I Wish He Would Not Die (Aldridge), 1958

I Would Have Saved Them If I Could (s Michaels), 1975

Ice (Hunter), 1983

Ice Age (Drabble), 1977 Ice-Candy-Man (Sidhwa), 1988 Ice-Cream War (Boyd), 1983 Ice House (Bawden), 1983 Ice People (Gee), 1998 Ice Saints (Tuohy), 1964

Ice Schooner (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1985

Ice Storm (Moody), 1994 Icehenge (Robinson), 1985 Icon (Forsyth), 1996

Idea of Perfection (Grenville), 1999 Identifying the Object (s Jones), 1993 Identities: Three Novels (Wideman), 1994 Idle Woman and Other Stories (s Mulkerns), 1980

Idoru (Gibson), 1996

If I Die Today (Deshpande), 1982 If I Were Me (Blaise), 1997

If Morning Ever Comes (Tyler), 1965 If the Old Could— (Lessing), 1984 If the River Was Whiskey (s Boyle), 1989 If the Stars Are Gods (Benford), 1977 If Wishes Were Horses (Kinsella), 1996

Ikon Maker (Hogan), 1979

Illumination Night (Hoffman), 1987 Illuminations (Duffy), 1991 Illusionist (Johnston), 1995

Illusionist and Other Fictions (s Gordon), 1978

Illustrated Man (s Bradbury), 1997

Illywhacker (Carey), 1985 Image to Die For (Phillips), 1997 Imaginary Friends (Lurie), 1967 Imaginary Life (Malouf), 1978 Imaginary Toys (Mitchell), 1961 Imaginative Experience (Wesley), 1995

Imaginative Qualities of Actual Things (Sorrentino), 1971

Imagining Argentina (Thornton), 1987 Imaginings of Sand (Brink), 1996

Imago (Butler), 1989 Imago Bird (Mosley), 1991

Immortality at Any Price (Cooper), 1991

Imperial Earth (Clarke), 1976

Imperial German Dinner Service (Hughes), 1983

Impersonators (Anderson), 1980

Impossible Man and Other Stories (s Ballard), 1966

Impossible Object (Mosley), 1993 Impossible Saints (Roberts), 1998 Impossible Things (Willis), 1994 In a Dark Wood (Warner), 1977 In a Dry Season (Robinson), 1999 In a Free State (Naipaul), 1971 In a Harbour Green (Kiely), 1950 In a Hotel Garden (Josipovici), 1995 In a Strange Land (Middleton), 1979 In a Yellow Wood (Vidal, as Box), 1967

In Alien Flesh (Benford), 1986 In Alien Flesh (s Benford), 1986 In America (Sontag), 2000

In Another Country (Silverberg, as Knox), 1990

In Any Case (Stern), 1963

In Bed One Night and Other Brief Encounters (s Coover), 1983

In Between the Sheets (s McEwan), 1979

In Country (Mason), 1986 In Custody (Desai), 1985 In Her Day (Brown), 1976 In High Places (Hailey), 1962 In Honour Bound (Bawden), 1961

In Love and Trouble: Stories of Black Women (s Walker), 1984

In Lower Town (s Levine), 1977

In Memory of Junior: A Novel (Edgerton), 1992

In My Father's Den (Gee), 1972 In My Father's House (Gaines), 1978

In Our Nature: Stories of Wilderness (s Atwood), 2000 In Search of Love and Beauty (Jhabvala), 1983 In the Absence of Angels (s Calisher), 1953 In the Bear's House (Momaday), 1999 In the Beauty of the Lilies (Updike), 1996 In the Briar Patch (s Garrett), 1961

In the Castle of My Skin (Lamming), 1953 In the City of Fear (Just), 1982

In the Country of Last Things (Auster), 1988 In the Country of Salvation (Virtue), 1990

In the Ditch (Emecheta), 1972

In the Electric Mist with Confederate Dead (Burke), 1993

In the Fertile Land (s Josipovici), 1987

In the Frame (Francis), 1978

In the Garden of the North American Martyrs (s Wolff), 1981

In the Heart of the Country (Coetzee), 1977

In the Heart of the Heart of the Country and Other Stories (s Gass), 1969

In the Heat of the Day (Anthony), 1996 In the Hour of Signs (Mahjoub), 1996 In the Lake of the Woods (O'Brien), 1994

In the Land of Dreamy Dreams: Short Fiction (s Gilchrist), 1982

In the Land of Morning (Petrakis), 1973 In the Middle Distance (Delbanco), 1971 In the Mood (Waterhouse), 1983 In the Name of Mercy (Delbanco), 1995 In the Night Season: A Novel (Bausch), 1998 In the Ocean of Night (Benford), 1977 In the Palace of the Movie King (Calisher), 1993

In the Penny Arcade (s Millhauser), 1986 In the Red Kitchen (Roberts), 1990 In the Skin of a Lion (Ondaatje), 1987

In the Slammer with Carol Smith (Calisher), 1997

In the Springtime of the Year (Hill), 1974

In the Thirties (Upward), 1962 In the Walled City (s O'Nan), 1993 In the Winter Dark (Winton), 1989 In This City (s Clarke), 1992 In This Sign (Greenberg), 1970

In Transit: Twenty Stories (s Gallant), 1990 Incidents at the Shrine (s Okri), 1986

Incidents in the Rue Laugier (Brookner), 1996

Incline Our Hearts (Wilson), 1989 Incompatible Atuk (Richler), 1963

Incurable (Dunn), 1971

Indecent Exposure (Sharpe), 1987 Independence Day (Ford), 1995

Independent Woman (Fast, as Cunningham), 1997

Indian (s Updike), 1971

Indian Affairs (Woiwode), 1991 Indian Killer (Alexie), 1998 Indian Lawyer (Welch), 1990 Indian Summer (Knowles), 1966

Indifferent Children (Auchincloss), 1947

Indigo (Warner), 1993

Indirect Method and Other Stories (s King), 1980

Infinite Jest (Wallace), 1996 Infinite Rehearsal (Harris), 1987 Infinite Riches (Okri), 1999 Infinity Concerto (Bear), 1984 Information (Amis), 1995 Informers (Ellis), 1994 Injured Party (Dundy), 1974 Injured Party (Schaeffer), 1986 Injury Time (Bainbridge), 1978

Injustice Collectors (s Auchincloss), 1951

Ink Truck (Kennedy), 1970

Inklings: Selected Stories (s Jacobson), 1973

Inland (Murnane), 1989

Inland Ice and Other Stories (s Ní Dhuibhne), 1997 Inland Passage and Other Stories (s Rule), 1985 Inn at the Edge of the World (Ellis), 1990

Inner Circle (Peterkiewicz), 1966 Innocence of Age (Bissoondath), 1992

Innocent (Jones), 1957 Innocent (McEwan), 1990 Innocent Blood (James), 1980 Innocent Cities (Hodgins), 1990

Innocent Graves: An Inspector Banks Mystery (Robinson), 1996

Innocents (Slaughter), 1986

Innocents: Variations on a Theme (s Barker), 1948 Inside the Wardrobe: 20 Stories (s Lurie), 1978

Insomnia (King), 1994

Inspector Wexford (Rendell, as Vine), 1993

Instant in the Wind (Brink), 1977 Insular Possession (Mo), 1987 Intangibles Inc. (s Aldiss), 1969 Intended (Dabydeen), 1991 Intensive Care (Frame), 1971 Interceptor Pilot (Gangemi), 1980 Interesting Times (Pratchett), 1994

Interpreters (Soyinka), 1970 Interstate (Dixon), 1995 Intertidal Life (Thomas), 1985 Intimacy (Kureishi), 1999 Into Another Dawn (Nahal), 1977

Into the Dark (Kelleher), 1999

Into the Darkness (Mertz, as Michaels), 1990

Into the Fog (Graham), 1935 Into Their Labours (Berger), 1992 Introduction (s Mitchell), 1960 Intruder (Tindall), 1979

Intrusion and Other Stories (s Deshpande), 1994

Intrusions (Hegi), 1981

Invaders from Earth (Silverberg, as Knox), 1977 Inventing Memory: A Novel of Mothers and Daughters

(Jong), 1997

Invention of the World (Hodgins), 1978

Inventory (Josipovici), 1968

Invincible Barriers (Silverberg, as Knox), 1958

Invisible Mending (Busch), 1984 Invisible Worm (Johnston), 1993 Involution Ocean (Sterling), 1977

Iowa Baseball Confederacy (Kinsella), 1986

Ipcress File (Deighton), 1963

I'm Cannon—For Hire (Hunter), 1959

I'm Expecting to Live Quite Soon (West), 1971

I'm the King of the Castle (Hill), 1970 Ireland: Selected Stories (s Trevor), 1998 Irish Signorina (O'Faolain), 1986

Ironweed (Kennedy), 1984 Isaac Quartet (Charyn), 1984 Island Death (Yurick), 1975 Island of Apples (Jones), 1992 Islands in the Net (Sterling), 1988

Isobars (s Hospital), 1992 Isobel Gunn (Thomas), 1999

Isolation: A Novel in Five Acts (Peterkiewicz), 1960

Isolation Booth (s Hood), 1991

It (King), 1986

It Could Be You (McCauley), 1997 It Looked Like For Ever (Harris), 1979 It Was Dark (s Deshpande), 1986

It Was the Nightingale (s Deshpande), 1986 Italian Gadget (Hanley, as Calvin), 1966

Italian Wife (Humphreys), 1958

Item from the Late News (Astley), 1984 Its Colours They Are Fine (s Spence), 1977

It's Different Abroad (Hanley, as Calvin), 1963

It's Raining in Mango: Pictures from a Family Album (Astley), 1988

Itsuka (Kogawa), 1993 Ivory Swing (Hospital), 1983

J—, Black Bam and the Masqueraders (St. Omer), 1972

Jack and the Beanstalk (Hunter), 1984

Jack Gance (Just), 1989

Jack in the Box (Kotzwinkle), 1980

Jack Maggs (Carey), 1998

Jack of Diamonds and Other Stories (s Spencer), 1988

Jack Orkney (s Lessing), 1978

Jack Would Be a Gentleman (Freeman), 1959 Jackal's Head (Mertz, as Michaels), 1969

Jacklighting (s Beattie), 1981 Jacko (Keneally), 1993

Jacob's Ladder (Williams), 1987

Jade Man's Eyes (s Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1973

Jailbird (Vonnegut), 1979

Jalamanta: A Message from the Desert (Anaya), 1996 Jane and Louisa Will Soon Come Home (Brodber), 1980

Janine (Callow), 1977

Japanese by Spring (Reed), 1993

Japanese Girl and Other Stories (s Graham), 1972 Japanese Umbrella and Other Stories (s King), 1964

Jasmine (Mukherjee), 1990 Jazz (Morrison), 1992

J.C. Kitten Trilogy (Gover), 1982

J.C. Saves (Gover), 1979 Jeremiah 8:20 (Hill), 1970 Jeremy Poldark: A Novel of Cornwall 1790-1791

(Graham), 1950

Jerusalem the Golden (Drabble), 1967

Jesus' Son (s Johnson), 1992

Jewel in the Skull (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1977

Jewel of the Moon (s Kotzwinkle), 1985

Jewels of Aptor (Delany), 1977

Jigsaw (Hunter), 1970

Jigsaw: An Unsentimental Education (Bedford), 1989

Jim Dandy (Faust), 1994 Jingo (Pratchett), 1997

Jitterbug Perfume (Robbins), 1984 Joan Makes History (Grenville), 1988 Joanna (St. Aubin de Teran), 1991 Joanna's Luck (Jones), 1984

Joby (Barstow), 1964 John and Mary (Jones), 1967

John Brown's Body (Barker), 1969

John Dollar (Wiggins), 1989

John Ross: The True Story (Gray), 1987

Johnno (Malouf), 1978

Johnny and the Dead (Pratchett), 1993 Johnny I Hardly Knew You (O'Brien), 1977

Johnny Mnemonic (Gibson), 1995 John's Wife (Coover), 1996 Jones (Humphreys), 1984

Jordan County: A Landscape in Narrative (Foote), 1954

Joseph (Jones), 1970

Joseph Winter's Patronage (Cole), 1969

Josh Lawton (Bragg), 1972

Joshua Then and Now (Richler), 1980 Journal from Ellipsia (Calisher), 1966 Journal of the Flood Year (Ely), 1992

Journalist (Mathews), 1994 Journey Home (Bolger), 1990

Journey of a Lifetime and Other Stories (s Tindall), 1990

Journey to Ithaca (Desai), 1995 Journey to the Border (Upward), 1994 Journey to the Seven Streams (s Kiely), 1963

Journey Within (Aniebo), 1978

Joy (McNeish), 1982 Joy Luck Club (Tan), 1989

Joy-Ride and After (s Barker), 1964 Joys of Motherhood (Emecheta), 1979 J'Ouvert Morning (Jones), 1976 Jubb (Waterhouse), 1964 Judas Cloth (O'Faolain), 1992 Judasland (Dawson), 1989

Judgement Day (Lively), 1981 Judgement in Stone (Rendell, as Vine), 1978 Judgment of Dragons (Gotlieb), 1980

Judgment of Paris (Vidal, as Box), 1966

Judith (Mosley), 1991 Juggling (Trapido), 1995 Juice (Becker), 1959 Julian (Vidal, as Box), 1964 Juliet's Story (Trevor), 1994 Julip (Harrison), 1994 July's People (Gordimer), 1981

Jumping Ship and Other Stories (s James), 1992

Jumping the Queue (Wesley), 1988 Jungle Kids (s Hunter), 1956 Jungle Lovers (Theroux), 1971

Junior Bachelor Society (Williams), 1976

Junk Mail (Self), 1995 Junkers (Read), 1969

Junky's Christmas and Other Stories (s O'Hagan), 1994

Jupiter Project (Benford), 1980

Jurassic Park (Crichton, as Lange), 1991

Just Duffy (Jenkins), 1988 Just Exchange (Middleton), 1962 Just Like a Lady (Bawden), 1960 Just Relations (Hall), 1983

Just You Wait and See (Barstow), 1986

Kairos (Jones), 1988

Kalki (Vidal, as Box), 1978

Karate Is a Thing of the Spirit (Crews), 1972

Kate Vaiden (Price), 1987

Kayhut: A Warrior's Odyssey (Metcalf), 1998

Keep the Change (McGuane), 1990 Keepers of the House (Grau), 1964

Keepers of the House (St. Aubin de Teran), 1982 Keepsakes and Other Stories (s Hassler), 1999

Kehinde (Emecheta), 1994 Kennis van die aand (Brink), 1973

Kepler (Banville), 1983

Kestrel for a Knave (Hines), 1968 Keys of Chance (Graham), 1939

Keys to the Street (Rendell, as Vine), 1996

K-Factor (Caute), 1983 Killer Diller (Edgerton), 1991 Killer on the Road (Ellroy), 1986 Killer's Choice (Hunter), 1960 Killer's Payoff (Hunter), 1960 Killer's Wedge (Hunter), 1961 Killing Doll (Rendell, as Vine), 1984 Killing Everybody (Harris), 1973

Killing Mister Watson (Matthiessen), 1990

Killing Time (Berger), 1968 Killshot (Leonard), 1989 Kind of Fool (Munonye), 1999 Kind of Loving (Barstow), 1961

Kind of Loving: The Vic Brown Trilogy (Barstow), 1981

Kind of Marriage (Emecheta), 1986

Kindling (Elliott), 1970 Kindly Light (Wilson), 1979 Kindness Cup (Astley), 1974 Kindness of Women (Ballard), 1991

Kindred (Butler), 1988 Kinflicks (Alther), 1976 Kinfolks (Hunter), 1996

King, a Street Story (Berger), 1999 King David (Massie), 1995 King Death's Garden (Jones), 1986 King Hereafter (Dunnett), 1982 King Ludd (Sinclair), 1988

King of Babylon Shall Not Come Against You (Garrett), 1996 King of Hackney Marshes and Other Stories (s Glanville), 1965

King of the Mountain (s Garrett), 1959

King of the Swords (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1971 King Solomon's Carpet (Rendell, as Vine), 1991

Kingdom Come (Bragg), 1980 Kingdom Come (Rubens), 1990 Kingdom of the Cats (Gotlieb), 1983

Kingdoms of the Wall (Silverberg, as Knox), 1993 Kingfisher Come Home: The Complete Maori Stories (s Ihimaera), 1995

King's Persons (Greenberg), 1963 King's Ransom (Hunter), 1961

Kinky Friedman Crime Club (Friedman), 1992

Kiss (Hunter), 1992

Kiss Before Dying (Levin), 1954

Kiss in the Hotel Joseph Conrad, and Other Stories (s Norman), 1989

Kiss of Kin (Settle), 1955

Kiss of the Fur Queen (Highway), 1998 Kisses of the Enemy (Hall), 1989 Kissing America (Glanville), 1985

Kissing the Gunner's Daughter (Rendell, as Vine), 1992

Kitchen God's Wife (Tan), 1991

Kittatinny: A Tale of Magic (Russ), 1978

Kitty and Virgil (Bailey), 2000 Kleinzeit (Hoban), 1974 Klynt's Law (Baker), 1976

Knife Thrower and Other Stories (s Millhauser), 1998 Knight of the Swords (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1971

Knights and Dragons (Spencer), 1966 Knights of the Cross (Read), 1997 Knock-Down (Francis), 1975 Knockout Artist (Crews), 1988

Knot (Figes), 1996

Knotted Cord (Peterkiewicz), 1954 Kolymsky Heights (Davidson), 1994

Komarr: A Miles Vorkosigan Adventure (Bujold), 1998

Konek Landing (Figes), 1969 Kowloon Tong (Theroux), 1997 Krik? Krak! (s Danticat), 1995 Kruger's Alp (Hope), 1985

Kwaku; or, The Man Who Could Not Keep His Mouth Shut

(Heath), 1982

Kwinkan (Mudrooroo, as Johnson), 1993

La Vie Passionée of Rodney Buckthorne: A Tale of the Great American's Last Rally and Curious Death (Cassill), 1968

LaBrava (Leonard), 1984 Labors of Love (Cassill), 1980 Ladder of Years (Tyler), 1995 Ladies (Grumbach), 1984

Ladies and Escorts (s Thomas), 1977

Ladies' Man (Price), 1978

Lady Chatterley's Confession (Feinstein), 1995

Lady Killer (Hunter), 1961

Lady, Lady, I Did It! (Hunter), 1963 Lady of Situations (Auchincloss), 1991

Lady Oracle (Atwood), 1977

Lady Who Sold Furniture (s Metcalf), 1970

Lady's Maid (Forster), 1991 Lagoon: Stories (s Frame), 1952

Lajwanti and Other Stories (s Anand), 1966

Lake of Darkness (Rendell, as Vine), 1980 Lakestown Rebellion (Hunter), 1978

Lamb (MacLaverty), 1980

Lamb of Abyssalia (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1979 Lament on the Death of a Master of Arts (Anand), 1939

Lanark: A Life in Four Books (Gray), 1981

Lancelot (Vansittart), 1978

Land Leviathan (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1974

Land Without Stars (Kiely), 1946 Landing on the Sun (Frayn), 1991 Landlocked (Lessing), 1965 Landlord (Hunter), 1970 Landlord (Vansittart), 1970

Landscape with Landscape (Murnane), 1985

Landscapes Within (Okri), 1981 Langrishe, Go Down (Higgins), 1966 Languages of Love (Brooke-Rose), 1957

Lantern Lecture and Other Stories (s Mars-Jones), 1981

Lantern Slides (s O'Brien), 1990 Lanterns Across the Snow (s Hill), 1988 Larry's Party (Shields), 1997

Last Barricade (Jones), 1953 Last Burden (Chatterjee), 1993

Last Circus, and The Electrocution (s Bradbury), 1980

Last Continent (Pratchett), 1999 Last Dance (Hunter), 1999

Last Day the Dogbushes Bloomed (Smith), 1968

Last Days (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1985 Last Days of Louisiana Red (Reed), 1974

Last Exile (Aldridge), 1961

Last Exit to Brooklyn (Selby), 1966 Last Frontier (Fast, as Cunningham), 1948

Last Full Measure (Shaara), 1998 Last Go Round (Kesey), 1994 Last Good Time (Bausch), 1984 Last Labyrinth (Joshi), 1981 Last Lovers (Wharton), 1991

Last Lunch of the Season (s Trevor), 1973

Last Magician (Hospital), 1992 Last Mandarin (Becker), 1979 Last Man's Head (Anderson), 1970

Last of the Country House Murders (Tennant), 1976

Last of the Crazy People (Findley), 1967 Last of the Curlews (Bodsworth), 1995 Last of the Golden Girls (Swan), 1991 Last of the Pleasure Gardens (King), 1965 Last of the Savages (McInerney), 1996

Last Orders (Swift), 1996

Last Orders and Other Stories (s Aldiss), 1989

Last Peacock (Massie), 1980 Last Picture Show (McMurtry), 1972

Last Resort (Lurie), 1998 Last Resorts (Boylan), 1986 Last Shot (Hamilton), 1992

Last Spin and Other Stories (s Hunter), 1960 Last Stand at Saber River (Leonard), 1959

Last Summer (Hunter), 1969

Last Testament of Oscar Wilde (Ackroyd), 1983

Last Thing He Wanted (Didion), 1996

Last Things (Jones), 1989

Last Voyage of Somebody the Sailor (Barth), 1991

Latakia (Thomas), 1979

Late Bourgeois World (Gordimer), 1966

Late Candidate (Phillips), 1990 Late Child (McMurtry), 1995 Late Mr. Shakespeare (Nye), 1999 Latecomers (Brookner), 1989 Later the Same Day (s Paley), 1985 Lateshows (s Moorhouse), 1990 Lathe of Heaven (Le Guin), 1972 Latin Lover (s Raphael), 1994

Laughter of Carthage (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1984

Law at Randado (Leonard), 1957 Law for the Lion (Auchincloss), 1953 Lawley Road (s Narayan), 1956

Lay Down My Sword and Shield (Burke), 1971

Le Divorce (Johnson), 1997 Le Mariage (Johnson), 2000 Leader (Freeman), 1966

Leader of the Band (Weldon), 1989

Lean Tales (s Gray), 1985 Lean Tales (s Kelman), 1985 Learning Lark (Jones), 1960 Learning Urdu (s Wiggins), 1990

Learning to Swim and Other Stories (s Swift), 1985

Leather Boys (Freeman), 1962 Leather Wings (Duckworth), 1995 Leave It to Me (Mukherjee), 1997 Leaves from the Valley (Trollope), 1980 Leaves of the Banyan Tree (Wendt), 1980

Leaves on Grey (Hogan), 1980 Leavetaking (McGahern), 1984 Leaving Cheyenne (McMurtry), 1972 Left Bank of Desire (Cassill), 1955 Left Hand of Darkness (Le Guin), 1994

Legacy (Bear), 1995 Legacy (Bedford), 1957

Legacy and Other Stories (s Deshpande), 1978

Legacy of Love (Trollope), 2000

Legend in Green Velvet (Mertz, as Michaels), 1976

Legend of La Llorona (Anaya), 1984

Legends from the End of Time (s Moorcock, as Bradbury,

E.), 1976

Legends of the Fall (Harrison), 1980

Legs (Kennedy), 1976 Leila (Donleavy), 1983 Leila (Jenkins), 1995

Lemprière's Dictionary (Norfolk), 1991

Less Than Zero (Ellis), 1985 Lesson Before Dying (Gaines), 1993 Lesson in Music (s Hauser), 1964

Lest We Forget Thee, Earth (Silverberg, as Knox), 1958

Lestriad (Katz), 1987

Let the Dead Bury Their Dead and Other Stories (s Kenan), 1992

Letourneau's Used Auto Parts (Chute), 1988

Let's Fall in Love (Hill), 1975

Let's Hear It for a Beautiful Guy and Other Works of Short

Fiction (s Friedman), 1984

Let's Hear It for the Deaf Man (Hunter), 1973

Letter Left to Me (McElroy), 1988

Letter to Our Son (s Carey), 1994

Letter to Peachtree and Nine Other Stories (s Kiely), 1988

Letter to Sister Benedicta (Tremain), 1979

Letters (Barth), 1980 Letting Go (Roth), 1962 Leviathan (Auster), 1992

Levitation: Five Fictions (s Ozick), 1982

Lewis Percy (Brookner), 1990

Liar (Savage), 1967

Liberty Man (Freeman), 1955 Libra (DeLillo), 1988

Licks of Love: Short Stories and a Sequel, "Rabbit Remembered"

(s Updike), 2000

Licorice: A Novel (Frucht), 1990 Lie Down in Darkness (Styron), 1952 Lies and Stories (s Adams), 1976 Life after God (s Coupland), 1994

Life and Death of My Lord Gilles de Rais (Nye), 1990 Life and Loves of a She-Devil (Weldon), 1984 Life and Times of Captain N (Glover), 1993 Life and Times of Major Fiction (s Baumbach), 1987

Life and Times of Michael K (Coetzee), 1984

Life Before Death (Frucht), 1997 Life Before Man (Atwood), 1980 Life Force (Weldon), 1992 Life in the West (Aldiss), 1990

Life of Her Own, and Other Stories (s Kelly), 1976

Life of the Body (s Smiley), 1990 Life Stories (s Barker), 1981 Life with Swan (West), 1999 Lifetime Burning (Douglas), 1983 Lifetime on Clouds (Murnane), 1976

Light (Figes), 1983

Light a Penny Candle (Binchy), 1983

Light Can Be Both Wave and Particle (s Gilchrist), 1990

Light Fantastic (Pratchett), 1986 Light in the Piazza (Spencer), 1961 Light of Other Days (Clarke), 2000 Light on a Honeycomb (Pownall), 1978 Light Possessed (Cheuse), 1990 Light Years (Gee), 1986 Light Years (Howard), 1990 Lightning (Hunter), 1984

Like Birds, Like Fishes and Other Stories (s Jhabvala), 1964

Like Life (s Moore), 1990 Like Love (Hunter), 1964

Like Men Betrayed (Mortimer), 1954 Like Men Betrayed (Raphael), 1971

Lilac Bus (s Binchy), 1992

Lilac and Flag: An Old Wives' Tale of a City (Berger), 1991

Lilacs Out of the Dead Land (Billington), 1972

Lilian's Story (Grenville), 1986 Lilith's Brood (Butler), 2000 Limits of Love (Raphael), 1961

Limits of the Sensible World (s Sallis), 1995

Lincoln (Vidal, as Box), 1984 Lincoln's Dreams (Willis), 1986 Linden Hills (Naylor), 1985 Lindmann (Raphael), 1964 Lines of Flight (Campbell), 1985 Lion at My Heart (Petrakis), 1959 Lion Country (Buechner), 1971

Lion in the Valley (Mertz, as Michaels), 1987 Lion of Boaz-Jachin and Jachin-Boaz (Hoban), 1973

Lion of Comarre, and Against the Fall of Night (Clarke), 1970

Lions of the Grunewald (Higgins), 1993

Lisa (Cooper), 1937

Listen Ruben Fontanez (Neugeboren), 1968

Literary Woman (s Beckett), 1991 Little Angel Street (Charyn), 1994 Little Big Man (Berger), 1965 Little Book (Hughes), 1996

Little Disturbances of Man (s Paley), 1960 Little Drummer Girl (le Carré), 1983

Little Ironies: Stories of Singapore (s Lim), 1978

Little Kingdom (Humphreys), 1946

Little Kingdoms: Three Novellas (s Millhauser), 1993 Little Love, A Little Learning (Bawden), 1966

Little Madness (Vansittart), 1953 Little Masters (Wilkins), 1997 Little Stranger (McWilliam), 1989 Little Walls (Graham), 1955

Little Yellow Dog: An Easy Rawlins Mystery (Mosley), 1996

Live and Learn (Middleton), 1996 Live as Family (Fairbairns), 1968

Live Bait and Other Stories (s Tuohy), 1979

Live Bodies (Gee), 1998

Live Flesh (Rendell, as Vine), 1986 Live from Golgotha (Vidal, as Box), 1992

Lives and Times of Jerry Cornelius (s Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1976

Lives of Girls and Women (Munro), 1973 Lives of Short Duration (Richards), 1981

Lives of the Poets: Six Stories and a Novella (s Doctorow), 1985

Lives of the Twins (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1987

Lives on Fire (Scott), 1993 Living Hothouse (s Halligan), 1988 Living in the Maniototo (Frame), 1981 Living Together (Wilding), 1974

Livingstone's Companions (s Gordimer), 1972

Lizzie (Hunter), 1984

Lobola vir die lewe (Brink), 1962 Local Colour (Gray), 1975 Local Girls (Hoffman), 1999 Locked Room (Auster), 1987 Lodestar Project (Bradley), 1986 Loitering with Intent (Spark), 1981 Lona Hanson (Savage), 1948 London Embassy (s Theroux), 1983 London Fields (Amis), 1990

London Jungle Adventures of Charlie Hope (Lurie), 1968

London Match (Deighton), 1986

London Observed: Stories and Sketches (s Lessing), 1992

London Transports (s Binchy), 1986 Londoners: An Elegy (Duffy), 1983

Lone Ranger and Tonto Fistfight in Heaven (s Alexie), 1994

Lonely Girl (O'Brien), 1962 Lonesome Dove (McMurtry), 1986 Long after Midnight (s Bradbury), 1977 Long Afternoon of Earth (Aldiss), 1962 Long and Happy Life (Price), 1962 Long Day's Dying (Buechner), 1951

Long Home (Gay), 1999

Long Hot Summer (Anderson), 1999 Long Lankin (s Banville), 1970 Long Logged Fly: A Novel (Sallie), 10

Long-Legged Fly: A Novel (Sallis), 1992

Long Live Sandawara (Mudrooroo, as Johnson), 1980

Long Made Short (s Dixon), 1993 Long March (Styron), 1962 Long Prospect (Harrower), 1958

Long Talking Bad Conditions Blues (Sukenick), 1979

Long Time No See (Hunter), 1977 Long View (Howard), 1956 Long Walk (King), 1979

Long Way from Home (Busch), 1993 Long Way from London (s Jacobson), 1958 Long Way to Shiloh (Davidson), 1966

Long Weekend with Marcel Proust: Seven Stories and a Novel

(Frame), 1986

Longest Memory (D'Aguiar), 1995 Longings of Women (Piercy), 1994

Longleg (Adams), 1992 Longshot (Francis), 1990 Look at Me (Brookner), 1983 Looking Forward (Tindall), 1985

Looking for Mr. Goodbar (Rossner), 1975 Looking for the Possible Dance (Kennedy), 1993

Looking-Glass War (le Carré), 1965 Lookout Cartridge (McElroy), 1974 Looks and Smiles (Hines), 1981 Loon Lake (Doctorow), 1980

Loopdoppies: Nog dopstories (s Brink), 1984

Loose Lips (Brown), 1999

Loot and Loyalty (Peterkiewicz), 1955 Lord Byron's Daughter (West), 1989 Lord Nelson Tavern (Smith), 1974

Lord of Darkness (Silverberg, as Knox), 1983

Lord of the Dawn: The Legend of Quetzalcoatl (Anaya), 1987

Lord Prestimion (Silverberg, as Knox), 1999 Lord Richard's Passion (Jones), 1974

Lord Valentine's Castle (Silverberg, as Knox), 1980

Lords and Ladies (Pratchett), 1992 Lords of Discipline (Conroy), 1980 Losing Alice (Virtue), 1999 Losing Battles (Welty), 1982 Losing Nelson (Unsworth), 1999

Lost and Old Rivers: Stories (s Cheuse), 1998 Lost Child and Other Stories (s Anand), 1934

Lost Children (Gee), 1994 Lost Father (Simpson), 1992 Lost Father (Warner), 1989

Lost Get-Back Boogie (Burke), 1986

Lost in the Funhouse: Fiction for Print, Tape, Live Voice (s Barth), 1969

Lost Lands (Vansittart), 1964 Lost Man's River (Matthiessen), 1997 Lost Possessions (Hulme), 1985

Lost upon the Roundabouts (s Barker), 1964 Lost World: A Novel (Crichton, as Lange), 1995

Lotus Land (See, as Highland), 1983

Louisiana (Brodber), 1997 Love (Schaeffer), 1981

Love, Action, Laughter, and Other Sad Tales (s Schulberg), 1992

Love, Again: A Novel (Lessing), 1996

Love Always (Beattie), 1985 Love and Friendship (Lurie), 1962 Love and Glory (Bragg), 1983 Love and Like (s Gold), 1961 Love and Obits (Bradley), 1992

Love and the Waiting Game: Eleven Stories (s Watmough), 1975

Love and Will: Twenty Stories (s Dixon), 1989

Love and Work (Price), 1968 Love Child (Duffy), 1971 Love Child (Freeman), 1984 Love, Dad (Hunter), 1981 Love Department (Trevor), 1967 Love Eaters (Settle), 1954 Love Feast (Buechner), 1975

Love from Everybody (Hanley, as Calvin), 1959

Love Hunter (Hassler), 1981
Love in a Blue Time (Kureis

Love in a Blue Time (Kureishi), 1997 Love in a Dry Season (Foote), 1951 Love Is a Fervent Fire (Jenkins), 1959

Love Is Not Love and Other Stories (s Glanville), 1985

Love Life (s Mason), 1989 Love Medicine (Erdrich), 1985 Love Object (s O'Brien), 1969

Love of a Good Woman: Stories (s Munro), 1998

Love of Innocence (Jenkins), 1963 Love on the Coast (Cooper), 1973

Love Song of J. Edgar Hoover (Friedman), 1996 Love Songs of Nathan J. Swirsky (s Hope), 1993

Love Talker (Mertz, as Michaels), 1981

Love Test (Hamilton), 1995 Love Unknown (Wilson), 1987 Lovelock (McNeish), 1986 Lovelock Version (Shadbolt), 1981 Love's Mansion (West), 1992 Lover for Estelle (Rooke), 1961 Lover's Almanac (Howard), 1998

Lovers and Cohorts: Twenty-Seven Stories (s Gold), 1986

Lovers' Knots (Halligan), 1995

Lovers of Their Time and Other Stories (s Trevor), 1979

Lovesong (Jolley), 1997

Loving Attitudes (Billington), 1988 Loving Brecht (Feinstein), 1992

Loving Cup: A Novel of Cornwall 1813-1815 (Graham), 1985

Loving Hands at Home (Johnson), 1969

Loving Roger (Parks), 1986 Loving Ways (Gee), 1996

Low-Flying Aircraft and Other Stories (s Ballard), 1976

Low-lands (s Pynchon), 1978 Lucid Stars (Barrett), 1988 Lucy (Kincaid), 1991 Lullaby (Hunter), 1987

Lunar Attractions (Blaise), 1979

Lunching With The Antichrist: A Family History: 1925–2015 (s Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1995 Lunderston Tales (s Jenkins), 1996 Lust and Other Stories (s Minot), 1989 Lustful Summer (Cassill), 1958

Lusts (Blaise), 1983

Lydia (Fast, as Cunningham), 1965 Lying Days (Gordimer), 1953 Lying in Bed (Harris), 1984 Lying Low (Johnson), 1979 Lynchers (Wideman), 1973

Lynx Hunter and Other Stories (s Marshall), 1987

Machineries of Joy (s Bradbury), 1964 Macken Charm (Hodgins), 1995 Mackenzie (McNeish), 1970 Mackenzie Affair (McNeish), 1972 Mad and Bad Fairies (s Kelly), 1987

Mad Man (Delany), 1994

Mad River and Other Stories (s Glover), 1981

Mad Trapper (Wiebe), 1977 Madame Sousatzka (Rubens), 1962

Madness (Lurie), 1991

Madness of a Seduced Woman (Schaeffer), 1984

Magdalene (Slaughter), 1979

Maggie Muggins; or, Spring in Earl's Court (Waterhouse), 1981

Maggot (Fowles), 1985 Magic (Goldman), 1976

Magic and Fate: Being the Not Quite Believable Adventures of

Sissie Slipper (Billington), 1996

Magic Flute (Spence), 1990 Magic of the Past (s Aldiss), 1987 Magic Striptease (s Garrett), 1973 Magic Time (Kinsella), 1998

Magic Will: Stories and Essays of a Decade (s Gold), 1971

Magician's Girl (Grumbach), 1987 Magician's Wife (Charyn), 1988 Magnolia (Callow), 1994 Magog (Sinclair), 1972 Magus (Fowles), 1978 Maia (Adams), 1985

Maid of Buttermere (Bragg), 1987 Maidens' Trip (Smith), 1948 Mainland (Schaeffer), 1985

Majipoor Chronicles (Silverberg, as Knox), 1982

Major (Hughes), 1965

Make Death Love Me (Rendell, as Vine), 1979 Making Good Again (Davidson), 1968 Making History (See, as Highland), 1991

Making of the Representative for Planet 8 (Lessing), 1982

Making Time (Howard), 1991 Malacia Tapestry (Aldiss), 1977 Malafrena (Le Guin), 1980 Malcolm (Purdy), 1960

Male Cross-Dresser Support Group (Janowitz), 1992

Male Response (Aldiss), 1963 Malgudi Days (s Narayan), 1943 Mama (McMillan), 1987 Mama Day (Naylor), 1988

Mambo Kings Play Songs of Love (Hijuelos), 1989

MAMista (Deighton), 1991 Man and His World (s Blaise), 1992 Man and Two Women (s Lessing), 1963 Man Come Home (Heath), 1974 Man Crazy (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1997 Man Descending (s Vanderhaeghe), 1985 Man-Eater of Malgudi (Narayan), 1962 Man from the Creeks (Kroetsch), 1998

Man In Full (Wolfe), 1998

Man in the Cellar (s O'Faolain), 1974 Man in the Maze (Silverberg, as Knox), 1990

Man in the Middle (Wagoner), 1955 Man Made of Smoke (Middleton), 1973

Man of Power (Colegate), 1960

Man of Slow Feeling: Selected Short Stories (s Wilding), 1985

Man of the Market: Short Stories (s Aniebo), 1994

Man of the People (Achebe), 1966 Man on Fire (Cassill), 1957

Man on Stage: Play Stories (s Dixon), 1996

Man on the Rock (King), 1958

Man to Conjure With (Baumbach), 1966 Man Who Cried I Am (Williams), 1968

Man Who Grew Younger and Other Stories (s Charyn), 1967

Man Who Invented Tomorrow (Hughes), 1968
Man Who Knew Kennedy (Bourjaily), 1967
Man Who Loved Jane Austen (Smith), 1999
Man Who Was Not With It (Gold), 1965
Man Who Wasn't There (Barker), 1990
Mandarin Summer (Kidman), 1981
Mandelbaum Gate (Spark), 1965
Maniac Responsible (Gover), 1964
Man's Estate (Humphreys), 1956
Mantissa (Fowles), 1982

Manuscript for Murder (Masters), 1987

Mao II (DeLillo), 1991

Manual Labor (Busch), 1974

Map of the World (Hamilton), 1994

Maquisard: A Christmas Tale (Guerard), 1946

Mara and Dann: An Adventure by Doris Lessing (Lessing), 1999

Marabou Stork Nightmares: A Novel (Welsh), 1996

Marathon Man (Goldman), 1975

Marble Mountain and Other Stories (s St. Aubin de Teran), 1989

Margaretha de la Porte (Rooke), 1974 Margie (Fast, as Cunningham), 1968 Maria's Girls (Charyn), 1994 Marilee: Three Stories (s Spencer), 1981

Marilee: Three Stories (s Spencer), 198 Marilyn the Wild (Charyn), 1990 Marilyn's Daughter (Rechy), 1988 Marital Rites (Forster), 1982

Mark of Vishnu and Other Stories (s Singh), 1950

Marlow's Book (Thornton), 1991

Marnie (Graham), 1961

Marriage Machine (Freeman), 1975

Marriages Between Zones Three, Four, and Five (Lessing), 1980

Marriages and Infidelities (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1974

Married Alive (Duckworth), 1985 Married Man (Read), 1980

Married Man: A Love Story (White), 2000 Married Past Redemption (Middleton), 1993 Marry Me: A Romance (Updike), 1977 Marrying the Mistress (Trollope), 2000

Martha Peake: A Novel of the Revolution (McGrath), 2000

Martha Quest (Lessing), 1952

Martian Chronicles (s Bradbury), 1950

Martian Race (Benford), 1999 Martians (Robinson), 1999

Martin Dressler: The Tale of an American Dreamer

(Millhauser), 1996

Martlet's Tale (Delbanco), 1966 Mary, Mary (Hunter), 1992 Mary Swann (Shields), 1996

Marya: A Life (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1987

Maskerade (Pratchett), 1997

Masks of Time (Silverberg, as Knox), 1968

Mason & Dixon (Pynchon), 1997

Mass (Sionil Jose), 1984

Master Georgie: A Novel (Bainbridge), 1998

Master of Big Jingles and Other Stories (s Marshall), 1982

Master of Blacktower (Mertz, as Michaels), 1967 Master of Life and Death (Silverberg, as Knox), 1977

Master of Petersburg (Coetzee), 1994 Master of the Crossroads (Bell), 2000

Master of the Ghost Dreaming (Mudrooroo, as Johnson), 1991

Master of the Moor (Rendell, as Vine), 1982 Matchbox House (Duckworth), 1961 Mate in Three (Rubens), 1965 Mates of Mars (Foster), 1991

Matigari (Ngugi wa Thiong'o), 1989

Matriarch (Ihimaera), 1986 Matter of Conviction (Hunter), 1959 Matter of Time (Deshpande), 1999 Matter's End (s Benford), 1991 Matters of Chance (s Feinstein), 1972

Matthew and Sheila (Jenkins), 1999

Mavis Belfrage: A Romantic Tale, with Five Shorter Tales

(Gray), 1996

Max Jamison (Sheed), 1970 Maximum Bob (Leonard), 1991 Mayo Sergeant (Hall), 1967 McBain Brief (s Hunter), 1983

McBain's Ladies: The Women of the 87th Precinct (s

Hunter), 1988

McBain's Ladies Too (s Hunter), 1990

McGrotty and Ludmilla; or, The Harbinger Report (Gray), 1990

McGuffin (Bowen), 1985 Me and Hitch (Hunter), 1997

Me and My Baby View the Eclipse: Stories (s Smith), 1990

Me and My Mom (Hauser), 1993

Me, the Moon, and Elvis Presley (Hope), 1997

Means of Evil and Other Stories (s Rendell, as Vine), 1980

Medicine for Melancholy (s Bradbury), 1959

Medicine River (King), 1989 Medusa Frequency (Hoban), 1987

Meet My Maker the Mad Molecule (s Donleavy), 1965

Meeting Evil (Berger), 1992 Meeting Place (Mosley), 1962 Meeting Point (Clarke), 1972

Meeting with Medusa (s Clarke), 1988

Mefisto (Banville), 1989

Megan's Two Houses: A Story of Adjustment (Jong), 1996 Melancholy Baby and Other Stories (s O'Faolain), 1978

Memento Mori (Spark), 1959

Memoir from Antproof Case (Helprin), 1995 Memoirs of a New Man (Cooper), 1966 Memoirs of a Survivor (Lessing), 1975 Memoirs of Lord Byron (Nye), 1989

Memoirs of the Late Mr. Ashley: An American Comedy

(Hauser), 1986

Memories of Dying (Hughes), 1976 Memories of Rain (Gupta), 1992

Memories of the Ford Administration (Updike), 1993

Memories of the Space Age (s Ballard), 1988

Memory (Bujold), 1996 Memory Board (Rule), 1987

Memory of Departure (Gurnah), 1987 Memory of Elephants (Desai), 1988 Memory of Murder (s Bradbury), 1984

Memory of Whiteness: A Scientific Romance (Robinson), 1986

Men and Angels (Gordon), 1985 Men and the Girls (Trollope), 1992 Men at Arms (Pratchett), 1993 Men of Brewster Place (Naylor), 1998 Merciless Ladies (Graham), 1980

Meridian (Walker), 1976 Merlin (Nye), 1979

Mermaids in the Basement (s Warner), 1993 Merry-Go-Round in the Sea (Stow), 1966

Merry Men (Chute), 1994

Message from Harpo (Duckworth), 1989

Messenger (Wright), 1964 Messiah (Codrescu), 1999 Messiah (Vidal, as Box), 1968 Messiah of Stockholm (Ozick), 1987 Messiah of the Last Days (Driver), 1974 Metroland (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1981

Mexico Set (Deighton), 1985 Micky Darlin' (Kelleher), 1992 Microcosm (Duffy), 1966 Microserfs (Coupland), 1995 Midden (Sharpe), 1997

Middle-Class Education (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1980

Middle Class Education (Sheed), 1961 Middle Ground (Drabble), 1980 Middle Kingdom (Barrett), 1991 Middle Passage (Johnson), 1991

Middleman and Other Stories (s Mukherjee), 1989 Middlemen: A Satire (Brooke-Rose), 1961

Middling: Chapters in the Life of Ellie Toms (Barker), 1967

Midnight All Day (s Kureishi), 1999 Midnight Clear (Wharton), 1982 Midnight Examiner (Kotzwinkle), 1989

Midnight Line (Savage), 1976

Midnight Magic: Selected Stories of Bobbie Ann Mason (s Mason), 1998

Midnight Turning Gray (s Matthiessen), 1984

Midnight's Children (Rushdie), 1981 Mighty Walzer (Jacobson), 1999 Migration of Ghosts (s Melville), 1998

Migrations (Josipovici), 1977 Miguel Street (Naipaul), 1960 Mihloti (s Tlali), 1984 Milk (s Farmer), 1983 Milk and Honey (Jolley), 1987

Miller's Dance: A Novel of Cornwall 1812–1813 (Graham), 1983

Millie (Fast, as Cunningham), 1975 Millroy the Magician (Theroux), 1994

Millstone (Drabble), 1966 Mimic Men (Naipaul), 1967 Mimi's Ghost (Parks), 1995 Mind of My Mind (Butler), 1977 Mind to Murder (James), 1967 Minimum of Two (s Winton), 1988 Ministry of Hope (Heath), 1997 Miracle: A Romance (O'Sullivan), 1976

Miracle, and Other Christmas Stories (s Willis), 1999 Miracle and Other Stories (s Deshpande), 1986 Miraculous Day of Amalia Gómez (Rechy), 1991 Miranda Must Die (Hanley, as Calvin), 1968

Miriam at Thirty-four (Lelchuk), 1975 Miriam in Her Forties (Lelchuk), 1985

Mirror Dance (Bujold), 1993

Mirror on the Floor (Bowering), 1967

Misalliance (Brookner), 1986

Miscellany Two (s Humphreys), 1981

Mischief (Hunter), 1993 Miscrables (Wilkins), 1993 Miscry (King), 1987

Miskien nooit: 'n Somerspel (Brink), 1967

Miss America (Stern), 1959

Miss Gomez and the Brethren (Trevor), 1971 Miss Hobbema Pageant (s Kinsella), 1989

Ms. Muffet and Others: A Funny, Sassy, Heretical Collection of

Feminist Fairytales (s Kelly), 1986 Miss Owen-Owen Is at Home (Forster), 1969 Miss Peabody's Inheritance (Jolley), 1985 Miss Wyoming (Coupland), 1999

Miss Wyoming (Coupland), 1999 Missing Person (Grumbach), 1981 Missing Persons (Cook), 1986 Missionaries (Jenkins), 1957 Mist in the Mirror (Hill), 1993 Mistaken Identity (Sahgal), 1989

Mr. Armitage Isn't Back Yet (Jones), 1971 Mr. Bedford and the Muses (s Godwin), 1984

Mr. Bone's Retreat (Forster), 1971 Mr. Darwin's Shooter (McDonald), 1998

Mr. Evening: A Story and Nine Poems (s Purdy), 1970 Mr. Field's Daughter: A Novel (Bausch), 1989 Mr. Halliday and the Circus Master (McNeish), 1996

Mr. Ives' Christmas (Hijuelos), 1995 Mr. Majestyk (Leonard), 1986 Mister Margolies (Yaffe), 1962 Mr. Nicholas (Ely), 1975

Mr. Nicholas (Hinde), 1953

Mr. Sammler's Planet (Bellow), 1996 Mr. Sampath (Narayan), 1949 Mr. Scobie's Riddle (Jolley), 1985 Mr. Spaceman (Butler), 2000

Mr. Stone and the Knights Companion (Naipaul), 1964

Mr. Vertigo (Auster), 1994

Mr. Wakefield's Crusade (Rubens), 1985

Mister White Eyes (Gold), 1985 Mr. Wrong (s Howard), 1976 Misterioso (Sorrentino), 1989 Mrs. de Winter (Hill), 1993 Mrs Dixon and Friend (s Kidman), 1982

Mrs. Blood (Thomas), 1967

Mrs. Eckdorf in O'Neill's Hotel (Trevor), 1970

Mistress of Spices (Divakaruni), 1997

Mrs. Reinhardt and Other Stories (s O'Brien), 1978 Mrs. Shakespeare: The Complete Works (Nye), 2000

Mittee (Rooke), 1952 Mobiles (s Cowan), 1979

Mobius the Stripper: Stories and Short Plays (s Josipovici), 1974 Moccasin Telegraph and Other Indian Tales (s Kinsella), 1985

Mockery in Arms (Aldridge), 1975

Model Behavior: A Novel and 7 Stories (McInerney), 1998

Mog (Tinniswood), 1970

Mom Among the Liars (Yaffe), 1993 Mom Doth Murder Sleep (Yaffe), 1991 Mom Meets Her Maker (Yaffe), 1990 Moment of Eclipse (s Aldiss), 1972 Moment under the Moment (Hoban), 1992 Mona in the Promised Land (Jen), 1996 Mona Lisa Overdrive (Gibson), 1988 Monday Voices (Greenberg), 1965 Monday's Warriors (Shadbolt), 1992

Mondo Desperado: A Serial Novel (McCabe), 1999

Money: A Suicide Note (Amis), 1985 Money, Money, Money (Wagoner), 1955

Moneychangers (Hailey), 1975 Monique (Hauser), 1934 Monk Dawson (Read), 1970 Monkey Grip (Garner), 1981 Monkey King (Mo), 1980 Monkeys (Minot), 1986

Monkeys in the Dark (d'Alpuget), 1980 Monkfish Moon (s Gunesekera), 1992 Monopolies of Loss (s Mars-Jones), 1993

Monsieur Teste in America and Other Instances of Realism (s Codrescu), 1987

Montezuma's Man (Charyn), 1993 Month of Sundays (Updike), 1975

Moo (Smiley), 1995 Moo Pak (Josipovici), 1995 Moon Deluxe (s Barthelme), 1984

Moon Lake and Other Stories (s Welty), 1980 Moon over Minneapolis (s Weldon), 1991

Moon Palace (Auster), 1990 Moon Tiger (Lively), 1988

Mooncranker's Gift (Unsworth), 1974

Moonferns and Starsongs (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1971

Moonlight into Marzipan (Gupta), 1995

Moonlite (Foster), 1987

Moons of Jupiter (s Munro), 1983 Moonshine War (Leonard), 1970

Moorcock's Book of Martyrs (s Moorcock, as Bradbury,

E.), 1976

Moor's Last Sigh (Rushdie), 1995 Morality Play (Unsworth), 1995 More Die of Heartbreak (Bellow), 1987

More Tales I Tell My Mother (s Fairbairns), 1987

Moreau's Other Island (Aldiss), 1980 Morgan's Passing (Tyler), 1980 Morning Face (Anand), 1986 Morning for Flamingoes (Burke), 1993 Morning in Antibes (Knowles), 1962 Moroccan Traffic (Dunnett), 1991

Mort (Pratchett), 1987

Mortality and Mercy in Vienna (s Pynchon), 1976

Mortmere Stories (s Upward), 1994 Mosaic Man (Sukenick), 1999

Mosby's Memoirs and Other Stories (s Bellow), 1969

Moscow Gold (Caute), 1980

Moses, Prince of Egypt (Fast, as Cunningham), 1959

Moses the Lawgiver (Keneally), 1975

Mosquito (Jones), 1999

Mosquito Coast (Theroux), 1982

Moth (Sallis), 1993

Mother and Two Daughters (Godwin), 1982 Mother Can You Hear Me? (Forster), 1979

Mother Is a Country: A Popular Fantasy (Perutz), 1968 Mother London (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1989

Mother Night (Vonnegut), 1968 Mother Russia (Rubens), 1992 Motherless Brooklyn (Lethem), 1999 Mothers and Daughters (Hunter), 1961 Mothers' Boys (Forster), 1994

Mothers, Daughters (See, as Highland), 1977

Mother's Girl (Feinstein), 1988 Mother's Kisses (Friedman), 1965 Mothersill and the Foxes (Williams), 1975 Moths and Other Stories (s Viramontes), 1985

Motorbike (Kops), 1962

Mountains of Majipoor (Silverberg, as Knox), 1995 Mourning Thief and Other Stories (s Hogan), 1987

Movie Dreams (Scott), 1995 Movies (s Dixon), 1983 Moving Mars (Bear), 1993 Moving On (McMurtry), 1971 Moving Out (Garner), 1983 Moving Parts (Katz), 1977 Moving Pictures (Pratchett), 1990

Mugger (Hunter), 1959

Mulching of America (Crews), 1995

Mules (s Spencer), 1982

Mulligan Stew (Sorrentino), 1980

Multiple Effects of Rainshadow (Astley), 1996

Multiple Orgasms (s Markfield), 1977

Mum (Eldred-Grigg), 1995

Mum and Mr. Armitage: Selected Stories (s Bainbridge), 1987

Mumbo-Jumbo (Reed), 1989

Mummy Case (Mertz, as Michaels), 1986

Mummy: or Ramses the Damned (Rice, as Roquelaure), 1989 Munchmeyer, and Prospero on the Island (Thomas), 1972 Murder at Monticello; or, Old Sins (Brown), 1994

Murder Being Once Done (Rendell, as Vine), 1972

Murder in Mount Holly (Theroux), 1969

Murder in the Dark: Short Fictions and Prose Poems (s Atwood), 1984

Murder in the Navy (Hunter), 1955 Murder of Aziz Khan (Ghose), 1969 Murder of Quality (le Carré), 1963 Murder on the Prowl (Brown), 1998 Murder, She Meowed (Brown), 1996 Murderer (Heath), 1992

Murders of Richard III (Mertz, as Michaels), 1989

Muriel at Metropolitan (Tlali), 1979 Museum Guard (Norman), 1998

Museums and Women and Other Stories (s Updike), 1973

Music and Silence (Tremain), 2000 Music from Spain (s Welty), 1948 Music of Chance (Auster), 1991

Music on Clinton Street (McCabe), 1986

Music School (s Updike), 1967 Musical Chairs (Friedman), 1991

Mustian (Price), 1983

Mutant Season (Silverberg, as Knox), 1989

Mutual Friend (Busch), 1978

Mutuwhenua: The Moon Sleeps (Grace), 1988

My Amputations (Major), 1986

My Brother, My Executioner (Sionil Jose), 1979

My Brother Tom (Aldridge), 1966 My Chocolate Redeemer (Hope), 1989

My Experiences in the Third World War (s Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1980

My Father More or Less (Baumbach), 1982

My Father's Moon (Jolley), 1989 My First Satyrnalia (Rumaker), 1981 My Friend Judas (Sinclair), 1961

My Glorious Brothers (Fast, as Cunningham), 1950 My Hard Heart: Selected Fiction (s Garner), 1998 My Heart Is Broken: Eight Stories and a Short Novel (s Gallant), 1964

My Heart Laid Bare (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1998 My Idea of Fun: A Cautionary Tale (Self), 1994

My Juliet (Bradley), 2000 My Life as a Man (Roth), 1974

My Life, Starring Dara Falcon (Beattie), 1997

My Lovely Enemy (Wiebe), 1983

My Mother, the Detective: The Complete "Mom" Short Stories (s Yaffe), 1997

My Mother's Pearl Necklace (s Plante), 1987 My Name Is Paradiso (McNeish), 1995

My Organic Uncle and Other Stories (s Pownall), 1976

My Other Life (Theroux), 1996 My Present Age (Vanderhaeghe), 1985 My Pretty Pony (s King), 1989 My Secret History (Theroux), 1989 My Silver Shoes (Dunn), 1996 My Sister's Keeper (Cassill), 1961 My Son's Story (Gordimer), 1990 My Summer with George (French), 1996

My True Faces (Nahal), 1973 My Turn Next (Graham), 1942

Myal (Brodber), 1988

Myra Breckinridge (Vidal, as Box), 1968

Myron (Vidal, as Box), 1975 Mysteries of Motion (Calisher), 1983

Mysteries of Winterthurn (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1984

Mystic Masseur (Naipaul), 1959

Myths of the Near Future (s Ballard), 1982

'n Emmertjie wyn: 'n versameling dopstories (s Brink), 1981

Nail on the Head (s Boylan), 1985

Naive and Sentimental Lover (le Carré), 1972

Naked and the Dead (Mailer), 1998 Naked in Garden Hills (Crews), 1969 Naked Morning (Cassill), 1957 Naked Needle (Farah), 1976

Naked Once More (Mertz, as Michaels), 1990

Name Me Nobody (Yamanaka), 1999 Name of the World (Johnson), 2000

Names (DeLillo), 1983

Names and Faces of Heroes (s Price), 1963 Names of the Dead (O'Nan), 1996 Naming the Spirits (Thornton), 1995

Narcissa and Other Fables (s Auchincloss), 1983

Narrowing Stream (Mortimer), 1989

Nashville 1864: The Dying of the Light: A Novel (Jones), 1997

Natalie Natalia (Mosley), 1971 National Winner (Humphreys), 1971

Native (Plante), 1988

Native Ground (s Callow), 1959 Native Moment (West), 1961 Native Speaker (Lee), 1995 Natives (s Humphreys), 1968

Natives of My Person (Lamming), 1972 Natural Curiosity (Drabble), 1989 Natural History (Howard), 1992 Natural Selection (Barthelme), 1990 Natural Shocks (Stern), 1978 Nature of Blood (Phillips), 1997 Nature of Passion (Jhabvala), 1957

Navigation of a Rainmaker: An Apocalyptic Vision of War-Torn

Africa (Mahjoub), 1989

Nazi Lady: The Diaries of Elisabeth von Stahlenberg 1933-1948

(Freeman), 1978

Neanderthal Planet (s Aldiss), 1970 Necessary End (Robinson), 1992 Necessary Treasons (Kelly), 1985

Necessity of Anti-Semitism (Raphael), 1998 Nectar in a Sieve (Markandaya), 1955

Needful Things (King), 1991

Needle (King), 1976

Needle in a Timestack (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1979

Needle's Eye (Drabble), 1972 Negotiator (Forsyth), 1989 Neighbors (Berger), 1981 Nelly's Version (Figes), 1988 Neon Rain (Burke), 1989 Nephew (Purdy), 1961 Nerve (Bragg), 1971 Nerve (Francis), 1964 Net of Jewels (Gilchrist), 1992

Net of Jewels (Gilchrist), 1992 Neumiller Stories (s Woiwode), 1989

Neuromancer (Gibson), 1994 Never Again (King), 1948 Never Die (Hannah), 1991

Never Look Back (Glanville), 1980

Nevèrÿona; or, The Tale of Signs and Cities (Delany), 1989 New Arrivals, Old Encounters: Twelve Stories (s Aldiss), 1980

New Confessions (Boyd), 1988 New Country (s Cowan), 1976 New Dominion (Jhabvala), 1972 New Girl Friend (s Rendell, as Vine), 1986 New Lease of Death (Rendell, as Vine), 1967 New Net Goes Fishing (s Ihimaera), 1978 New Orleans of Possibilities (s Madden), 1982

New Shirt (Hogan), 1986

New Springtime (Silverberg, as Knox), 1990

New Town (Jones), 1953 New World (s Banks), 1978 New York Trilogy (Auster), 1990 New Yorkers (Calisher), 1970

New Zealanders: A Sequence of Stories (s Shadbolt), 1961

News (Delbanco), 1970

News from Ireland and Other Stories (s Trevor), 1986

News from Nowhere (Caute), 1986

News from the City of the Sun (Colegate), 1979

News from the Sun (s Ballard), 1982 News of the Spirit (Smith), 1997

Newspaper of Claremont Street (Jolley), 1988

Newsreel (Faust), 1980

Newton Letter: An Interlude (Banville), 1987

Next (Brooke-Rose), 1998 Next of Kin (Barstow), 1991 Next of Kin (Trollope), 1996

Next Stop the Stars (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1979

Next to Nature, Art (Lively), 1982 Niccolò Rising (Dunnett), 1986 Nice Change (Bawden), 1997

Nice Friendly Town (Hanley, as Calvin), 1967

Nice Murder for Mom (Yaffe), 1988

Nice Work (Lodge), 1989 Nicholson at Large (Just), 1975 Nick the Greek (Petrakis), 1980

Night (O'Brien), 1973

Night and Other Stories (s Upward), 1967

Night at the Movies; or, You Must Remember This (s

Coover), 1987

Night-Book (Kotzwinkle), 1974

Night Geometry and the Garscadden Trains (s Kennedy), 1990

Night in Question: Stories (s Wolff), 1996

Night in Tunisia and Other Stories (s Jordan), 1979

Night Inspector (Busch), 1999 Night Journey (Graham), 1968 Night Journey (Guerard), 1951 Night Manager (le Carré), 1993

Night of Four Hundred Rabbits (Mertz, as Michaels), 1971

Night of Wenceslas (Davidson), 1961 Night School (Cassill), 1961

Night Shift (Bolger), 1985 Night Shift (s King), 1978

Night-Side (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1979

Night Song (Williams), 1962 Night Train (Amis), 1997 Night Travellers (Spencer), 1991

Night We Ate the Sparrow: A Memoir and Fourteen Stories (s Lurie), 1985

Night Without Stars (Graham), 1950 Nightfall (Silverberg, as Knox), 1990

Nightlines (Jordan), 1995 Nightlines (s McGahern), 1971

Nightmares & Dreamscapes (s King), 1993

Nights at the Alexandra (s Trevor), 1987 Nights below Station Street (Richards), 1987 Nights in the Gardens of Spain (Ihimaera), 1995

Nights with Grace (Scott), 1991 Nightspawn (Banville), 1971 Nightwatchmen (Hannah), 1973 Nightwings (Silverberg, as Knox), 1972 NIMROD Conspiracy (Jones), 1999 Nine African Stories (s Lessing), 1968

Nine Billion Names of God: The Best Short Stories of Arthur C.

Clarke (s Clarke), 1967

Nine Men Who Laughed (s Clarke), 1986

Nine Months in the Life of an Old Maid (Rossner), 1977

Nine Women (s Grau), 1986 1982, Janine (Gray), 1984 1915: A Novel (McDonald), 1980

1968: A Short Novel, An Urban Idyll, Five Stories, and Two

Trade Notes (s Stern), 1971 Ninety Double Martinis (Hinde), 1963

98.6 (Sukenick), 1975

Ninety-Two in the Shade (McGuane), 1974

NO (Major), 1973

No Comebacks: Collected Short Stories (s Forsyth), 1982

No Country for Young Men (O'Faolain), 1987

No Cure for Love (Robinson), 1995 No Exit: An Adventure (Graham), 1940 No Longer at Ease (Achebe), 1961

No More Dying Then (Rendell, as Vine), 1972 No More into the Garden (Watmough), 1978 No More Mister Nice Guy (Jacobson), 1998 No Name in the Street (Tindall), 1959

No New Land (Vassanji), 1991 No Night Is Too Long (Rendell, as Vine), 1994

No Place for an Angel (Spencer), 1968 No Reck'ning Made (Greenberg), 1993

No Relief (s Dixon), 1976 No Retreat (Bowen), 1994

No Saddles for Kangaroos (de Boissière), 1964

No Sweetness Here (s Aidoo), 1971 No Time to Be Young (Jones), 1952 No Way To Treat a Lady (Goldman), 1968 No Witchcraft for Sale: Stories and Short Novels (s

Lessing), 1956

No Word of Love (s Barker), 1985 Noah's Ark (Trapido), 1985

Noble Rot: Stories 1949–1988 (s Stern), 1989 Nobody Does You Any Favors (Yaffe), 1966 Nobody Knew They Were There (Hunter), 1972

Nobody's Angel (McGuane), 1982 Nobody's Fault (Jones), 1977 Nocturne (St. Aubin de Teran), 1993

Nocturnes for the King of Naples (White), 1980

Nog (Wurlitzer), 1969

Noise from the Zoo (s Elliott), 1991

Non-Stop (Aldiss), 1958

None Genuine Without This Signature (s Hood), 1980

None to Accompany Me (Gordimer), 1994 Noorjehan and Other Stories (s Essop), 1990

Nor Any Country (St. Omer), 1969

North American Education (s Blaise), 1973

North of Hope (Hassler), 1990

North South West: Three Novellas (s Foster), 1973

North Wind (Jones), 1996 Northern Lights (Norman), 1987 Northern Lights (O'Brien), 1975

Not a Word about Nightingales (Howard), 1962

Not Being Miriam (Campbell), 1989

Not by the Door (Hall), 1954

Not for Publication and Other Stories (s Gordimer), 1965

Not Just for Christmas (Doyle), 1999

Not Not While the Giro and Other Stories (s Kelman), 1983 Not Safe After Dark and Other Stories (s Robinson), 1998

Not That Sort of Girl (Wesley), 1988

Not to Disturb (Spark), 1972

Not Wanted on the Voyage (Findley), 1985 Nothing But Blue Skies (McGuane), 1992 Nothing But the Best (Hanley, as Calvin), 1964

Nothing But the Night (Yaffe), 1958

Nothing Happens in Carmincross (Kiely), 1985

Nothing Is Black (Madden), 1994

Nothing Missing But the Samovar and Other Stories (s Lively), 1978 Nova (Delany), 1969

Novelette with Other Stories (s Barker), 1951 Novellas of Hortense Calisher (Calisher), 1997

Novels of Muriel Spark (Spark), 1995

Novotny's Pain (s Roth), 1980

Now (Josipovici), 1998

Now Playing in Canterbury (Bourjaily), 1976 Now That You're Back (s Kennedy), 1994

Now You Know (Frayn), 1993 Nowhere (Berger), 1986 Nowhere City (Lurie), 1966 Nowhere Man (Markandaya), 1973 Nuclear Age (O'Brien), 1986 Numbers (Rechy), 1967

Nurses' Quarters (Cassill), 1962

O Master Caliban! (Gotlieb), 1976

O Singapore!: Stories in Celebration (s Lim), 1989 Oak and the Ram (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1973

Obasan (Kogawa), 1994 Obbligato (Raphael), 1956 Obedient Wife (O'Faolain), 1985

Obi (Munonye), 1969

Occam's Razor (Duffy), 1993

Occasion for Loving (Gordimer), 1963 Occasion of Sin (Billington), 1983

Occupation (Caute), 1972

October Country (s Bradbury), 1996 Odd Flamingo (Bawden), 1954 Odd Girl Out (Howard), 1972 Odd Number (Sorrentino), 1985 Odd Woman (Godwin), 1975 Odds Against (Francis), 1966 Odds On (Crichton, as Lange), 1966

Odessa File (Forsyth), 1972

Odyssey of Kostas Volakis (Petrakis), 1963 Of Age and Innocence (Lamming), 1981 Of Love and Dust (Gaines), 1968 Of Many Men (Aldridge), 1946

Of Space-Time and the River (Benford), 1985 Of Such Small Differences (Greenberg), 1988

Of the Farm (Updike), 1965

Of Time and Stars: The Worlds of Arthur C. Clarke (s Clarke), 1972

Of Wives, Talismans and the Dead (s Aniebo), 1983

Off Keck Road (Simpson), 2000 Office Life (Waterhouse), 1978 Office Politics (Sheed), 1967 Oil Man of Obange (Munonye), 1971

O.K.: The Corral, the Earps, and Doc Holliday (West), 2000

Ola (Wendt), 1995

Old and New (s Narayan), 1981

Old Army Game: A Novel and Stories (Garrett), 1994

Old Boys (Trevor), 1964 Old Jest (Johnston), 1980 Old Man and Me (Dundy), 1964

Old Man at the Railroad Crossing and Other Tales (s Maxwell), 1966

Old Pub Near the Angel (s Kelman), 1973

Old Scores (Delbanco), 1997 Old Scores (Raphael), 1995 Old Soldier (Bourjaily), 1990 Old Soldiers (Bailey), 1980

Old Woman and the Cow (Anand), 1960

Oldest Man, and Other Timeless Stories (s Kotzwinkle), 1971

Olinger Stories: A Selection (s Updike), 1964 Olivia; or, The Weight of the Past (Rossner), 1994

Olt (Gangemi), 1969

Olvidon and Other Stories (s Sionil Jose), 1988

Olympian (Glanville), 1969 Omensetter's Luck (Gass), 1967 On Distant Ground (Butler), 1985 On Keeping Women (Calisher), 1977 On Margate Sands (Kops), 1978 On Strike Against God (Russ), 1987 On the Big Wind (Madden), 1980 On the Contrary (Brink), 1994

On the Darkening Green (Charyn), 1965

On the Eve of Uncertain Tomorrows (s Bissoondath), 1990

On the Gulf (s Spencer), 1991 On the Last Day (Jones), 1958

On the Occasion of My Last Afternoon (Gibbons), 1998 On the River Styx and Other Stories (s Matthiessen), 1989

On the Road with the Archangel (Buechner), 1997

On the Third Day (Read), 1991

On the Yankee Station and Other Stories (s Boyd), 1988

On with the Story: Stories (s Barth), 1996

Once in Europa (Berger), 1989 Once Upon a Droshky (Charyn), 1964

Once Upon a Time: A Floating Opera (Barth), 1994

Once Were Warriors (Duff), 1995

One Across, Two Down (Rendell, as Vine), 1971

One and Only (King), 1994

One by One in the Darkness (Madden), 1996

One Day's Perfect Weather: More Twice Told Tales (s

Stern), 1999

One Flew over the Cuckoo's Nest (Kesey), 1963

One Generation (Heath), 1981

One Good Story, That One (s King), 1993

One Hundred Dollar Misunderstanding (Gover), 1962

158-Pound Marriage (Irving), 1980

110 Shanghai Road (See, as Highland), 1986

One Is a Wanderer: Selected Stories (s King), 1986

One Last Glimpse (Aldridge), 1977 One Night in Winter (Massie), 1984 One Night Out Stealing (Duff), 1992

One of Our Asteroids Is Missing (Silverberg, as Knox), 1964

One of the Wattle Birds (Anderson), 1994 One Way Ticket (s Levine), 1961 Onion Eaters (Donleavy), 1971

Only (Groom), 1984

Only Child: A Simple Story of Heaven and Hell (Dunn), 1978

Only Children (Lurie), 1979 Only Problem (Spark), 1984 Only Son (Munonye), 1966

Only When I Larf (Deighton), 1968

Only You Can Save Mankind (Pratchett), 1992

Oom Kootjie Emmer (s Brink), 1973

Oom Kootjie Emmer en die nuwe bedeling: 'n stinkstorie (s Brink), 1983

Open Heart (Buechner), 1972 Open Secrets (Humphreys), 1988 Open Secrets (s Munro), 1994 Open Swimmer (Winton), 1982

Open to the Public: New and Collected Stories (s Spark), 1997

Opening Nights (Burroway), 1985

Operation Shylock: A Confession (Roth), 1993 Operation Wandering Soul (Powers), 1994

Opium General and Other Stories (s Moorcock, as Bradbury,

E.), 1984

Opportunity of a Lifetime (Smith), 1980

Optimist (Gold), 1959

Optimist's Daughter (Welty), 1973

Or Else, the Lightning God and Other Stories (s Lim), 1980

Oracles and Miracles (Eldred-Grigg), 1987

Oral History (Smith), 1983 Orange Fish (s Shields), 1990 Orange Horses (s Kelly), 1990

Oranges Are Not the Only Fruit (Winterson), 1987

Orchard Keeper (McCarthy), 1994 Orchard Street (Gee), 1998 Orchard Thieves (Jolley), 1995 Orchestra and Beginners (Raphael), 1968

Orders of Chivalry (Vansittart), 1959

Ordinary Love and Good Will (s Smiley), 1990

Ordinary Lunacy (Anderson), 1964

Orealla (Heath), 1984 Orgie (Brink), 1965

Origin of the Brunists (Coover), 2000 Origin of Waves (Clarke), 1997 Original Bliss (Kennedy), 1997 Original Sin (James), 1995 Original Sins (Alther), 1981

Orlando at the Brazen Threshold (Colegate), 1971

Orlando King (Colegate), 1969 Orlando Trilogy (Colegate), 1984 Orphan's Tale (Neugeboren), 1976 Orrie's Story (Berger), 1990 Orsinian Tales (s Le Guin), 1977 Oscar and Lucinda (Carey), 1988

Osiris Rising: A Novel of Africa Past, Present, and Future

(Armah), 1995

Other Halves (McCauley), 1985 Other Men's Daughters (Stern), 1974 Other Names (Fairbairns), 1998 Other Paris (s Gallant), 1957

Other People: A Mystery Story (Amis), 1981 Other People's Children (Trollope), 1999 Other People's Lives (s Kaplan), 1975 Other People's Worlds (Trevor), 1981

Other Side (Gordon), 1990 Other Side (Middleton), 1980 Other Side of the Fire (Ellis), 1983 Other Side of the Sky (s Clarke), 1961

Other Women (Alther), 1985 Our Father (French), 1995 Our Father (Hinde), 1976 Our Father (Rubens), 1987 Our Fathers (O'Hagan), 1999 Our Game (le Carré), 1995

Our Gang (Starring Tricky and His Friends) (Roth), 1971

Our House in the Last World (Hijuelos), 1983

Our Lady of Babylon (Rechy), 1996

Our Sister Killjoy; or, Reflections from a Black-Eyed Squint

(Aidoo), 1979

Our Song (Waterhouse), 1988 Our Sunshine (Drewe), 1991 Out (Brooke-Rose), 1964 Out (Sukenick), 1973

Out of India: Selected Stories (s Jhabvala), 1987

Out of Ireland (Koch), 1999 Out of Sight (Leonard), 1996 Out of the Shelter (Lodge), 1989 Out of This World (Swift), 1988 Outcasts (Becker), 1967

Outer Dark (McCarthy), 1994 Outerbridge Reach (Stone), 1992

Outfoxed (Brown), 2000 Outlander (s Rule), 1981

Outrageous Behaviour: Best Stories (s Lurie), 1985 Outside Ireland: Selected Stories (s Trevor), 1995 Outside the House of Baal (Humphreys), 1965 Over by the River and Other Stories (s Maxwell), 1977

Over the Fence Is Out (Duckworth), 1969

Overhead in a Balloon: Stories of Paris (s Gallant), 1987

Overload (Hailey), 1979 Overloaded Man (s Ballard), 1967 Overseer (Vansittart), 1949 Owls Do Cry (Frame), 1961 Oxbridge Blues (s Raphael), 1984

Oxbridge Blues and Other Stories (s Raphael), 1984

Oxherding Tale (Johnson), 1995

Oyster (Hospital), 1998

Oyster Is a Wealthy Beast (s Purdy), 1967

O-Zone (Theroux), 1986

Pacific Edge (Robinson), 1990 Pacific Highway (Wilding), 1982 Pack of Cards: Stories 1978-86 (s Lively), 1989

Pack of Lies (Sorrentino), 1997 Packages (s Stern), 1980

Paddy Clarke Ha Ha Ha (Doyle), 1993 Paddy's Puzzle (Kidman), 1985 Pagan Babies (Leonard), 2000 Pagan Days (Rumaker), 1999 Pagan Place (O'Brien), 1970

Pagan Rabbi and Other Stories (s Ozick), 1972

Painted Desert (Barthelme), 1995 Painted Devil (Billington), 1975

Painted Turtle: Woman with Guitar (Major), 1988

Painter of Our Time (Berger), 1959 Painter of Signs (Narayan), 1977 Painter's Confessions (Callow), 1989 Pair from Space (Silverberg, as Knox), 1965

Palace (St. Aubin de Teran), 1999 Palace of Strangers (Masters), 1971 Palace of the Peacock (Harris), 1960

Pale Blue Crochet Coathanger Cover (Foster), 1988

Pale View of Hills (Ishiguro), 1982

Palms and Minarets: Selected Stories (s O'Sullivan), 1992

Palomino (Jolley), 1987 Pan Beat (Jones), 1973 Panama (McGuane), 1978 Panna Maria (Charyn), 1982 Paper Dragon (Hunter), 1967 Parable of the Sower (Butler), 1995 Parachutes and Kisses (Jong), 1984

Paradise (Gurnah), 1994
Paradise (Morrison), 1998
Paradise Man (Charyn), 1988
Paradise News (Lodge), 1991
Paradise Postponed (Mortimer), 1985
Paradox Players (Duffy), 1968
Paragon (Knowles), 1971
Paragon Walk (Perry), 1981

Paraguayan Experiment (Wilding), 1985

Paremata (Knox), 1989

Paragraphs (s Stephens), 1974

Parents From Space (Bowering), 1994 Paris Rats in E.L.A (s Viramontes), 1993

Park (Forster), 1968

Park City: New and Selected Stories (s Beattie), 1998 Parsecs and Parables (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1973

Parsifal (Vansittart), 1989

Parson Harding's Daughter (Trollope), 1979

Part of the Furniture (Wesley), 1996 Partisans (Matthiessen), 1956 Partner (Grisham), 1997 Partners (Auchincloss), 1974 Partners (Kops), 1975 Partnership (Unsworth), 1966 Pascali's Island (Unsworth), 1980

Pass (Savage), 1944

Passage through Gehenna (Jones), 1978

Passenger (Keneally), 1979 Passing On (Lively), 1990 Passion (Winterson), 1988 Passionate Man (Trollope), 1990

Passionate Past of Gloria Gaye (Kops), 1972

Passport to Eternity and Other Stories (s Ballard), 1963

Past (Jordan), 1980

Past Must Alter (Guerard), 1938 Past Reason Hated (Robinson), 1993 Pastimes of a Red Summer (Vansittart), 1969

Patchwork Planet (Tyler), 1998 Patrimonies (s Cassill), 1988

Patriot (Read), 1996

Patriot for Hire (Sinclair), 1978

Patriot's Dream (Mertz, as Michaels), 1978

Patternmaster (Butler), 1976

Pawing through the Past (Brown), 2000 Pawn in Frankincense (Dunnett), 1997

Pay Dirt, or, Adventures at Ash Lawn (Brown), 1995

Peace Breaks Out (Knowles), 1981 Peace Shall Destroy Many (Wiebe), 1964

Peacock Cry (Mulkerns), 1954

Peacocks: And Other Stories (s Anderson), 1997

Peacock's Tail (Hoagland), 1965 Peeping Tom (Jacobson), 1985

Pegnitz Junction: A Novella and Five Short Stories (s Gallant), 1974

Pelican Brief (Grisham), 1992 Penelope (Fast, as Cunningham), 1966 Penelope's Hat (Frame), 1991 Penelope's Island (McNeish), 1990 Penny Wars (Baker), 1969

Pentecost Alley (Perry), 1996

People Will Always Be Kind (Sheed), 1974

People in Glass Houses: Portraits from Organization Life

(Hazzard), 1967

Percy, Bob, and Assenpoop (Baker), 1999 Perfect Happiness (Billington), 1996 Perfect Happiness (Lively), 1984 Perfect Spy (le Carré), 1986 Perfect Woman (Slaughter), 1985 Perfectionists (Godwin), 1971 Perfidia (Rossner), 1997

Pericles on 31st Street (s Petrakis), 1965 Permanent Errors (s Price), 1971 Perpetual Motion (Gibson), 1982 Persian Nights (Johnson), 1987 Pet Sematary (King), 1983

Petals of Blood (Ngugi wa Thiong'o), 1978

Pete and Shirley: The Great Tar Heel Novel (Edgerton), 1995

Peter Smart's Confessions (Bailey), 1977 Petrakis Reader (s Petrakis), 1978 Phallic Forest (s Wilding), 1978 Phantom of Manhattan (Forsyth), 1999 Philadelphia Fire (Wideman), 1991 Phineas: Six Stories (s Knowles), 1968

Phoenix Café (Jones), 1998

Phoenix in Obsidian (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1970

Photocopies (Berger), 1996 Photographs (Wendt), 1995 Phyllis (Fast, as Cunningham), 1962 Piano Man's Daughter (Findley), 1995 Picnic on Paradise (Russ), 1969 Picture Palace: A Novel (Theroux), 1978

Picturegoers (Lodge), 1960

Pictures from an Exhibition (s Gordon), 1970 Pictures of the Journey Back (Matthews), 1973

Picturing Will (Beattie), 1991 Piece of My Heart (Ford), 1987 Piece of the Night (Roberts), 1978

Pig Earth (Berger), 1980

Pigeon Feathers and Other Stories (s Updike), 1962

Pigs in Heaven (Kingsolver), 1993 Pilgermann (Hoban), 1983 Pilgrim (Findley), 1999 Pilgrim's Way (Gurnah), 1988 Pillars of Gold (Ellis), 2000 Pilot's Wife (Shreve), 1998

Pinocchio in Venice (s Coover), 1991 Pinocchio's Nose (Charyn), 1983 Place Among People (Hall), 1975 Place at Whitton (Keneally), 1965 Place for Outlaws (Wier), 1989 Place in England (Bragg), 1971

Place in Flowers Where Pollen Rests (West), 1988 Place in the City (Fast, as Cunningham), 1937

Place Like Home (Hinde), 1962 Place of Birth (s Farmer), 1990 Place of Greater Safety (Mantel), 1993 Place to Die (s Bowering), 1973 Place to Stand (Middleton), 1992

Plagiarized Material (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1974

Plague Dogs (Adams), 1978 Plains (Murnane), 1985

Planet Killers (Silverberg, as Knox), 1959 Planet of Death (Silverberg, as Knox), 1967

Planet of Exile (Le Guin), 1972 Planet on the Table (s Robinson), 1987 Plans for Departure (Sahgal), 1986

Platinum and Other Stories (s Sionil Jose), 1983

Platitudes (Ellis), 1988

Plato Papers: A Prophecy (Ackroyd), 2000 Play and Other Stories (s Dixon), 1988 Play It as It Lays (Didion), 1971 Player Piano (Vonnegut), 1953 Players (DeLillo), 1991

Playing the Game (Lelchuk), 1995

Playland (Dunne), 1995 Playmaker (Keneally), 1987 Pleasure City (Markandaya), 1982 Pleasure-Dome (Madden), 1979 Pledge for the Earth (Callow), 1960

Plot Against Earth (Silverberg, as Knox), 1959

Plumbum (Foster), 1083

Plumbum (Foster), 1983 Plus (McElroy), 1977 Po-on (Sionil Jose), 1985 Pocock and Pitt (Baker), 1972 Poet and Dancer (Jhabvala), 1993

Point of Darkness: A Sam Dean Mystery (Phillips), 1995

Poison (Hunter), 1987

Poison Chasers (Hanley, as Calvin), 1971

Poison Pen (Garrett), 1986

Poisoned Kiss and Other Stories from the Portuguese (s Oates, as

Smith, R.), 1976

Poisonwood Bible (Kingsolver), 1998 Polaris and Other Stories (s Weldon), 1989

Political Fable (s Coover), 1980 Polly's Ghost: A Novel (Frucht), 2000

Polonaise (Read), 1976 Pomare (Knox), 1994 Pomeroy (Castro), 1991 Ponder Heart (Welty), 1954 Ponsonby Post (Rubens), 1978 Poor Cousin Evelyn (s Yaffe), 1952

Poor Devils (Ely), 1970 Poor Things (Gray), 1993 Poorboy at the Party (Gover),

Poor Cow (Dunn), 1967

Poorboy at the Party (Gover), 1966 Poorhouse Fair (Updike), 1959 Pope's Rhinoceros (Norfolk), 1996 Poppa John (Woiwode), 1981

Porcupine (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1992

Pork Butcher (Hughes), 1985 Pornographer (McGahern), 1979 Porterhouse Blue (Sharpe), 1974 Portnoy's Complaint (Roth), 1969

Portrait in Brownstone (Auchincloss), 1962 Portrait of a Romantic (Millhauser), 1977 Portrait of the Artist's Wife (Anderson), 1993

Posh (Katz), 1971

Positronic Man (Silverberg, as Knox), 1993 Possessing the Secret of Joy (Walker), 1992

Possession (Delbanco), 1977 Possession (Markandaya), 1963

Postcard from "The Endless Short Story" (s Sukenick), 1974

Postcards (Proulx), 1993

Postcards from Surfers (s Garner), 1989 Posthumous Sketch (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1973

Potiki (Grace), 1995 Pouliuli (Wendt), 1987

Pounamu, Pounamu (s Ihimaera), 1973 Poverty Castle (Jenkins), 1991 Power (Fast, as Cunningham), 1963 Power and Light (Hannah), 1983 Power of Darkness (McGahern), 1991

Power of Darkness and Other Stories (s Anand), 1958

Power of the Dog (Savage), 1967 PowerBook (Winterson), 2000 Powerhouse (Jones), 1997

Powers of Attorney (s Auchincloss), 1963 Practical Heart (s Gurganis), 1993 Practical Magic (Hoffman), 1995

Prague Orgy (Roth), 1985

Praisesong for the Widow (Marshall), 1983

Praxis (Weldon), 1978

Prayer for Owen Meany (Irving), 1989 Prayer for the Dying (O'Nan), 1999

Precious (Glover), 1984 Precious Gift (Bowen), 1992 Prelude to Mars (Clarke), 1965 Prelude to Space (Clarke), 1953

Presence of Music: Three Novellas (s Shadbolt), 1967

Present (Josipovici), 1975 President (Cassill), 1964

President's Child (Weldon), 1983 Pretenders (Sionil Jose), 1962

Pretenders and Eight Short Stories (s Sionil Jose), 1962

Pretty Boy Floyd (McMurtry), 1995 Pretty Leslie (Cassill), 1964 Price of Coal (Hines), 1979

Price of Diamonds (Jacobson), 1958 Pricksongs and Descants (s Coover), 2000

Pride (Wharton), 1986 Primal Urge (Aldiss), 1967 Prime Minister (Clarke), 1978

Prime of Miss Jean Brodie (Spark), 1962

Prince Ishmael (Hauser), 1964

Prince of Darkness (Mertz, as Michaels), 1971

Prince of Tides (Conroy), 1986 Princess Bride (Goldman), 1975

Printer's Devil (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1966

Prisoner's Dilemma (Powers), 1989 Prissy (Hanley, as Calvin), 1978

Private Life of an Indian Prince (Anand), 1970 Private Life of Axie Reed (Knowles), 1986

Private Papers (Forster), 1986

Private Parts and Other Tales (s Hope), 1982

Private View (Brookner), 1994 Privileged Conversation (Hunter), 1996 Proceedings of the Rabble (Mirsky), 1970

Professor of Desire (Roth), 1978 Professor's Daughter (Read), 1971 Progress of Love (s Munro), 1987

Project (Sinclair), 1960 Promise of Rest (Price), 1995 Promised Land (Willis), 1997 Pronto (Leonard), 1993 Proof (Francis), 1985

Proper Marriage (Lessing), 1954 Property Of (Hoffman), 1978 Prospect Before Us (Gold), 1954

Protective Footwear: Stories and Fables by George Bowering (s

Bowering), 1978

Proud and the Free (Fast, as Cunningham), 1952

Proud Empires (Clarke), 1986 Proud Garments (Anderson), 1996 Providence (Brookner), 1984 Provinces of Night (Gay), 2001 Prowler (Campbell), 1999 Prowlers (Gee), 1987 Proxopera (Kiely), 1987

Psyche and the Hurricane (Roberts), 1991

Psychlone (Bear), 1979
Public Burning (Coover), 1978
Public Image (Spark), 1968
Puffball (Weldon), 1980
Pulling Faces (Duckworth), 1987
Punishments (King), 1990
Puppeteer (Kroetsch), 1993
Pure Land (Foster), 1985
Purple America (Moody), 1997
Purple Cane Road (Burke), 2000

Pursuit of Happiness (Jones), 1976

Pursuit of the Prodigal (Auchincloss), 1960

Pusher (Hunter), 1959 Puss in Boots (Hunter), 1987

Put On by Cunning (Rendell, as Vine), 1981

Puttermesser Papers (Ozick), 1997

Putting the Boot In (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1985

Pyramids (Pratchett), 1989

Quake (Wurlitzer), 1985 Quality of Mercy (West), 1961

Quantity Theory of Insanity: Together with Five Supporting

Propositions (Self), 1995 Quarantine (Crace), 1997 Quarantine (Hasluck), 1979 Queen of Angels (Bear), 1990 Queen of Egypt (s Schaeffer), 1980

Queen of Love and Other Stories (s Scott), 1993 Queen of Springtime (Silverberg, as Knox), 1989

Queen of Stones (Tennant), 1982 Queen of Swords (Kotzwinkle), 1983

Queen of the Swords (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1971

Queenie (Calisher), 1973 Queenie (Munro), 1999 Queens' Play (Dunnett), 1997 Quest for Karla (le Carré), 1982

Quest for Tanelorn (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1976

Question (Clarke), 1999

Question of Loyalties (Massie), 1989 Quick and the Dead (Peterkiewicz), 1961 Quicker Than the Eye (Bradbury), 1996

Quiet Life (Bainbridge), 1977 Quincunx (Palliser), 1990 Quinn's Book (Kennedy), 1988 Quintet (Vansittart), 1976 Quite Contrary (s Dixon), 1979

Rabbit Angstrom: A Tetralogy (Updike), 1995

Rabbit at Rest (Updike), 1991 Rabbit Is Rich (Updike), 1982 Rabbit Redux (Updike), 1972 Rabbit, Run (Updike), 1961 Race of Scorpions (Dunnett), 1990 Race Rock (Matthiessen), 1955 Racers to the Sun (Hall), 1962 Rachel Papers (Amis), 1974 Radiant Way (Drabble), 1987 Radical Surgery (Markfield), 1991 Raditzer (Matthiessen), 1962

Rage (King), 1977

Rage of the Vulture (Unsworth), 1983

Ragged Lion (Massie), 1994 Raging Calm (Barstow), 1968 Ragtime (Doctorow), 1975

Railway Accident and Other Stories (s Upward), 1969 Railway Police, and The Last Trolley Ride (Calisher), 1966

Railway Station Man (Johnston), 1985 Rain Ascends (Kogawa), 1995

Rain Barrel and Other Stories (s Bowering), 1994

Rainbearers (Mosley), 1955 Rainbirds (Frame), 1968

Rainbow Stories (s Vollmann), 1989 Raining Tree War (Pownall), 1974 Rainmaker (Grisham), 1995

Raise High the Roof Beam, Carpenters, and Seymour: An  $\,$

Introduction (s Salinger), 1963

Raj (Mehta), 1989 Raker (Sinclair), 1964 Rama Revealed (Clarke), 1993 Rama II (Clarke), 1989 Raney (Edgerton), 1985 Rangoon (s Barthelme), 1970 Ransom (McInerney), 1986 Rape of Shavi (Emecheta), 1985

Rappaport (Lurie), 1967

Rappaport's Revenge (Lurie), 1973

Rape of Tamar (Jacobson), 1970

Rare and Endangered Species: A Novella and Stories (s

Bausch), 1994

Rat Man of Paris (West), 1988 Rat Race (Francis), 1971

Rates of Exchange (Bradbury), 1983

Ratner's Star (DeLillo), 1991 Ratoons (Rooke), 1953 Ravelstein (Bellow), 2000

Raven's Wing (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1987

Raw Silk (Burroway), 1977 Ray (Hannah), 1981

Kay (Hannan), 1981

Reach for Tomorrow (s Clarke), 1998 Reaching Tin River (Astley), 1990 Reading the Signs (s Wilding), 1984

Real Illusions: A Selection of Family Lies and Biographical Fictions in Which the Ancestral Dead Also Play Their Part (s Haley), 1985

Real Mothers (s Thomas), 1981 Real People (Lurie), 1970

Real Presence: A Novel (Bausch), 1980 Reality and Dreams (Spark), 1997

Reality Trip and Other Implausibilities (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1972

Realms of Gold (Drabble), 1975 Reaper Man (Pratchett), 1991 Rearguard Actions (Aniebo), 1998 Rebel Powers (Bausch), 1993 Rebel to Judgment (West), 1962

Recalled to Life (Silverberg, as Knox), 1974

Reckless Eyeballing (Reed), 1989 Recovery (Middleton), 1988 Rector of Justin (Auchincloss), 1965 Rector's Wife (Trollope), 1994 Red Adam (Mirsky), 1989 Red Death (Mosley), 1991

Red-Haired Bitch (Hanley, as Calvin), 1969

Red Heart (s Scott), 1999 Red Mars (Robinson), 1993 Red the Fiend (Sorrentino), 1995 Red, White and Blue (Dunne), 1987 Red Wolf, Red Wolf (s Kinsella), 1990

Redback (Jacobson), 1987

Redemption (Fast, as Cunningham), 1999 Redemption of Elsdon Bird (Virtue), 1987 Redeye: A Western (Edgerton), 1995

Redoubt (Mavor), 1967

Redundancy of Courage (Mo), 1991

Reef (Gunesekera), 1995

Reena and Other Stories (s Marshall), 1983

Refiner's Fire: The Life and Adventures of Marshall Pearl, a

Foundling (Helprin), 1977

Reflections on the Golden Bed (s Anand), 1947

Reflex (Francis), 1981

Reflex and Bone Structure (Major), 1975 Regan's Planet (Silverberg, as Knox), 1964

Regeneration (Barker), 1992

Regeneration Trilogy (Barker), 1996 Regiment of Women (Berger), 1974 Regina v. Rumpole (s Mortimer), 1981

Regular Guy (Simpson), 1996 Regulators (King), 1996 Reinhart in Love (Berger), 1963 Reinhart's Women (Berger), 1982

Relation of My Imprisonment (Banks), 1983

Relative Successes (Barker), 1984

Relatives (Plante), 1974

Reluctant Dictator (Glanville), 1952 Remains of the Day (Ishiguro), 1989 Remake (Brooke-Rose), 1996

Remake (Willis), 1995

Remaking History, and Other Stories (s Robinson), 1991

Remember Me (Weldon), 1976 Remembering Babylon (Malouf), 1993 Remembering Light and Stone (Madden), 1992

Remembrance Day (Aldiss), 1993 Renderings: A Novel (Sallis), 1996 Rendezvous in Haiti (Becker), 1987 Rendezvous with Rama (Clarke), 1973 Renegade or Halo2 (Mo), 1999

Repentance of Lorraine (Codrescu), 1976 Report on Probability A (Aldiss), 1969 Republic of Love (Shields), 1992 Requiem for a Dream (Selby), 1979

Reruns (Baumbach), 1974 Reservation Blues (Alexie), 1995

Reservoir and Other Stories (s Frame), 1966 Reservoir: Stories and Sketches (s Frame), 1963

Resident Alien (s Blaise), 1986 Resistance (Shreve), 1995

Rest for the Wicked (Duckworth), 1986

Rest in Pieces (Brown), 1992

Rest Is Done with Mirrors (See, as Highland), 1970 Rest of Life: Three Novellas (s Gordon), 1993

Restitution (Duffy), 1998 Restoration (Tremain), 1990 Resurrection Row (Perry), 1981

Resurrection at Sorrow Hill (Harris), 1993

Resurrection of Joseph Bourne; or, A Word or Two on Those

Port Annie Miracles (Hodgins), 1979 Resuscitation of a Hanged Man (Johnson), 1991

Retreat (s Welty), 1981

Retreat to Innocence (Lessing), 1959

Return Journey (s Binchy), 1996 Return of Ansel Gibbs (Buechner), 1958 Return of Little Big Man (Berger), 1999 Return of Service (s Baumbach), 1979

Return the Innocent Earth (Dykeman), 1973

Return to (Delany), 1994 Returning (s O'Brien), 1982 Reuben (Wideman), 1988

Revenge of the Rose (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1991

Revolutions of the Night (Burns), 1986 Revolving Door (Jones), 1973

Rhéa (Cooper), 1937

Rhine Maidens (See, as Highland), 1981 Rhoda: A Life in Stories (s Gilchrist), 1995 Rhode Island Blues (Weldon), 2000

Rhode Island Blues (Weldon), 200 Rich Like Us (Sahgal), 1986 Richard A (Yurick), 1982 Richard's Things (Raphael), 1975

Richter 10 (Clarke), 1996 Ricochet Baby (Kidman), 1996 Riddle of John Rowe (Graham), 1935 Riddley Walker (Hoban), 1998

Ride Out (Foote), 1996 Riders (Winton), 1995 Riding Shotgun (Brown), 1996 Riding the Bullet (King), 2000 Riding the Rap (Leonard), 1995 Right Here, Right Now (Ellis), 1999 Right True End (Barstow), 1976 Rights of Desire (Brink), 2000

Ring of Brightest Angels around Heaven: A Novella and Stories

(s Moody), 1995

Ringed Castle (Dunnett), 1997 Rio Grande Fall (Anaya), 1996 Riotous Assembly (Sharpe), 1972 Ripple From the Storm (Lessing), 1958 Rise of Gerry Logan (Glanville), 1965

Rise of Life on Earth (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1991

Rising Sun (Crichton, as Lange), 1992

Risk (Francis), 1994

Rite of Passage (s Greenberg), 1972

Riven Rock (Boyle), 1998

River Between (Ngugi wa Thiong'o), 1965

River King (Hoffman), 2000

River of Stone: Fictions and Memories (s Wiebe), 1995

River Sutra (Mehta), 1993 River to Pickle Beach (Betts), 1995 River Town (Keneally), 1995

River's End and Other Stories (s West), 1960

RL's Dream (Mosley), 1995 Road (Anand), 1987

Road (Anand), 1967 Road Home (Harrison), 1998 Road Rage (Rendell, as Vine), 1997 Road to Lichfield (Lively), 1991

Road to Many a Wonder (Wagoner), 1974 Road to the Stilt House (Richards), 1985

Road to Wellville (Boyle), 1993 Roadkill (Friedman), 1997 Roads (McMurtry), 2000 Roadwalkers (Grau), 1994 Roadwork: A Novel of the First Energy Crisis (King), 1981

Roar Lion Roar and Other Stories (s Faust), 1965

Robber Bride (Atwood), 1993 Robber Bridegroom (Welty), 1944 Robert Crews (Berger), 1994 Robinson (Spark), 1958

Rocannon's World (Le Guin), 1972

Rock (Wagoner), 1958

Rock Cried Out (Douglas), 1994 Rock Springs (s Ford), 1988 Roger's Version (Updike), 1986 Roman Marriage (Glanville), 1967

Romance of the Equator: Best Fantasy Stories (s Aldiss), 1990

Romantic Egoists: A Reflection in Eight Minutes (s

Auchincloss), 1954 Rooi (s Brink), 1965

Rookery Blues (Hassler), 1995

Room (Selby), 1972

Room for a Single Lady (Boylan), 1997 Room on the Hill (St. Omer), 1968

Room Service: Comic Writings (s Moorhouse), 1987

Roots and Shadows (Deshpande), 1983

Rose Madder (King), 1995 Rose of Tibet (Davidson), 1962 Rose Rabbi (Stern), 1971 Rose Theatre (Sorrentino), 1987 Rosemary's Baby (Levin), 1967

Ross Poldark: A Novel of Cornwall 1783-1787 (Graham), 1945

Rotten Elements (Upward), 1969 Rough Wallaby (McDonald), 1995

Rounds (Busch), 1980 Roxanna Slade (Price), 1998 Royal Family (Vollmann), 2000 Rubyfruit Jungle (Brown), 1978 Rude Awakening (Aldiss), 1979

Rufus at the Door and Other Stories (s Hassler), 2000

Ruins (Aldiss), 1987

Rule of the Bone (Banks), 1995 Rules of Attraction (Ellis), 1988 Rules of Life (s Weldon), 1987

Rum and Coca-Cola (de Boissière), 1984

Rum Punch (Leonard), 1992 Rumming Park (Mortimer), 1948 Rumours of Rain (Brink), 1978 Rumpelstiltskin (Hunter), 1981 Rumpole (s Mortimer), 1980

Rumpole à la Carte (s Mortimer), 1990

Rumpole and the Age of Miracles (s Mortimer), 1989 Rumpole and the Angel of Death (Mortimer), 1996 Rumpole and the Golden Thread (s Mortimer), 1983 Rumpole for the Defence (s Mortimer), 1982 Rumpole of the Bailey (s Mortimer), 1980 Rumpole on Trial (s Mortimer), 1992 Rumpole's Last Case (s Mortimer), 1988 Rumpole's Return (s Mortimer), 1982 Run Across the Island (Cole), 1968

Run River (Didion), 1994

Run with the Horsemen (Sams), 1982 Runaway Black (Hunter), 1957

Run of the Country (Connaughton), 1992

Runaway Jury (Grisham), 1996 Running Dog (DeLillo), 1979

Running from Legs and Other Stories (s Hunter), 2000

Running Man (King), 1982 Running Nicely (s Lurie), 1979 Running Wild (Ballard), 1989 Rushes (Rechy), 1979

Rushing to Paradise (Ballard), 1995 Russia House (le Carré), 1989 Russian Interpreter (Frayn), 1966 Rutland Place (Perry), 1983

S (Updike), 1988

Sabbath's Theater (Roth), 1995 Sabbatical: A Romance (Barth), 1982 Sacred Country (Tremain), 1994 Sacred Hunger (Unsworth), 1992

Sacrificial Egg and Other Stories (s Achebe), 1962

Sad Bastard (Hamilton), 1998

Saddest Summer of Samuel S (Donleavy), 1967

Sadie When She Died (Hunter), 1972 Sadler's Birthday (Tremain), 1977 Safe Conduct (Vansittart), 1995 Sailing Bright Eternity (Benford), 1995

Sailing to Byzantium (Silverberg, as Knox), 1985

Sailor on the Seas of Fate (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1976

Sailor Song (Kesey), 1993 Saint Jack (Theroux), 1973 Saint Maybe (Tyler), 1991

St. Urbain's Horseman (Richler), 1971

Salem's Lot (King), 1991 Salesman (O'Connor), 1999

Saliva Tree and Other Strange Growths (s Aldiss), 1966

Sally (Fast, as Cunningham), 1967

Salt (Gold), 1964 Salt (Lovelace), 1997

Salt & Sawdust: Stories and Table Talk (s Narayan), 1993

Salt Dancers (Hegi), 1995 Salt Line (Spencer), 1985 Salt of Life (Nahal), 1990

Salt of the Earth (Humphreys), 1985 Samantha (Fast, as Cunningham), 1968

Same Door (s Updike), 1962 Sam's Legacy (Neugeboren), 1974 Sanctuary V (Schulberg), 1970 Sandglass (Gunesekera), 1999 Sandmouth People (Frame), 1987

Sandra Street and Other Stories (s Anthony), 1973

Sands of Mars (Clarke), 1952 Sandspit Crossing (Virtue), 1993 Santa Barbara Stories (s Boyle), 1998

Sapphires (Dowse), 1994 Sarah Conley (Gilchrist), 1997 Saratoga, Hot (s Calisher), 1985 Sardana Dancers (Jenkins), 1964 Sassafras (Matthews), 1983 Satanic Verses (Rushdie), 1989

Saturday Night at the Pahala Theatre (s Yamanaka), 1993

Saul and Morris, Worlds Apart (Yaffe), 1982

Sauna Bath Mysteries and Other Stories (s Haley), 1978

Savage Crows (Drewe), 1976 Save Me, Joe Louis (Bell), 1993 Saving Grace (Smith), 1995 Saviors (Yglesias), 1987 Saw (Katz), 1972

Scales of Gold (Dunnett), 1992

Scandalous Woman and Other Stories (s. O'Brian), 1984

Scandalous Woman and Other Stories (s O'Brien), 1974

Scar Lover (Crews), 1992 Scar Tissue (Ignatieff), 1994 Scarborough Fear (Duffy), 1982 Scarlet Thread (Betts), 1964 Scars (s Kinsella), 1978

Scenes from a Receding Past (Higgins), 1977 Scenes from Bourgeois Life (s Jones), 1976 Scenes from Later Life (Cooper), 1983 Scenes from Life (Cooper), 1961 Scenes from Married Life (Cooper), 1961

Scenes from Married Life, and Scenes from Later Life

(Cooper), 1984

Scenes from Metropolitan Life (Cooper), 1982 Scenes from Provincial Life (Cooper), 1950

Scenes from Provincial Life, and Scenes from Metropolitan Life

(Cooper), 1983

Scenic Drive (s Wilding), 1976 Scenic Railway (s Upward), 1997

Scented Gardens for the Blind (Frame), 1964

Scents (Perutz), 1985 Schemetime (Dowse), 1990 Schindler's Ark (Keneally), 1982 Schismatrix (Sterling), 1985 Schismatrix Plus (s Sterling), 1996 Schoolmaster (Lovelace), 1968 Schultz (Donleavy), 1980 Scission (s Winton), 1985

Scorched-Wood People (Wiebe), 1977 Scratch One (Crichton, as Lange), 1967

Scumbler (Wharton), 1984 Sea Change (Howard), 1960 Sea Eagle (Aldridge), 1944 Sea Hath Bounds (Rooke), 1946

Sea King's Daughter (Mertz, as Michaels), 1977

Sea Music (Profumo), 1988 Seal Woman (Farmer), 1992

Sealed with a Loving Kiss (Hughes), 1959

Search for Rita (Cole), 1970

Search for the King: A Twelfth Century Legend (Vidal, as

Box), 1967

Search the Shadows (Mertz, as Michaels), 1988

Searching for Caleb (Tyler), 1976 Searching for Survivors (s Banks), 1975

Searoad (s Le Guin), 1992 Season at Coole (Stephens), 1972 Season in Purgatory (Keneally), 1977 Season in the West (Read), 1989 Season of Adventure (Lamming), 1999 Season of Anomy (Soyinka), 1974 Season of Comfort (Vidal, as Box), 1949 Season of Delight (Greenberg), 1981 Season of the Jew (Shadbolt), 1987 Season of the Stranger (Becker), 1951 Season of the Strangler (Jones), 1982 Season with Eros (s Barstow), 1971 Seasons' Difference (Buechner), 1952 Seasons in Flight (s Aldiss), 1986 Second Best (Cook), 1991

Second Bridegroom (Hall), 1991 Second Chance (s Auchincloss), 1971 Second-Class Citizen (Emecheta), 1975

Second Ending (Hunter), 1956 Second Fiddle (Wesley), 1989 Second Home (Glanville), 1966 Second Inheritance (Bragg), 1967 Second Life (Bolger), 1994 Second Marriage (Barthelme), 1985 Second Nature (Hoffman), 1994

Second Rumpole Omnibus (s Mortimer), 1988 Second Trip (Silverberg, as Knox), 1979

Second Wind (Francis), 1999

Seconds (Ely), 1964

Secret Defector (Sigal), 1992 Secret Harmonies (Barrett), 1989

Secret House of Death (Rendell, as Vine), 1969

Secret Integration (s Pynchon), 1980 Secret Isaac (Charyn), 1978 Secret Ladder (Harris), 1963 Secret Lives (s King), 1991

Secret Lives and Other Stories (s Ngugi wa Thiong'o), 1975 Secret of This Book: 20 Odd Stories (s Aldiss), 1995

Secret of the Northern Lights (s Kinsella), 1998

Secret of the Runestaff (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1969

Secret Pilgrim (le Carré), 1991

Secret Sharer (Silverberg, as Knox), 1988

Secret Table (s Mirsky), 1975 Secrets (James), 1993

Secrets and Other Stories (s MacLaverty), 1984

Secrets and Surprises (s Beattie), 1979 Seduction: A Book of Stories (s Barker), 1994

Seduction and Other Stories (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1975

Seduction by Light (Young), 1989

Seduction of Mrs. Pendlebury (Forster), 1974

See Them Die (Hunter), 1963 Seed (Cowan), 1966

Seed of Earth (Silverberg, as Knox), 1978

Seeing Red (Duckworth), 1993

Seize the Day, with Three Short Stories and a One-Act Play (s

Bellow), 1957

Selected Declarations of Dependence (s Mathews), 1977

Self-Help (s Moore), 1985

Self-Made Brain Surgeon, and Other Stories (s Harris), 1999

Self Possession (Halligan), 1987 Selling Out (Wakefield), 1985

Send War in Our Time, O Lord (Driver), 1970 Señor Vivo and the Coca Lord (de Bernières), 1991

Sensationist (Palliser), 1991 Sensible Life (Wesley), 1990

Sensuous Guru: The Making of a Mystic President (Brata), 1980

Sent for You Yesterday (Wideman), 1984 Sentimental Agents (Lessing), 1983

Sentimental Education (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1978

Sentinel (s Clarke), 1985 Sentries (Hunter), 1965

Separate Checks (Wiggins), 1984 Separate Development (Hope), 1981 Separate Hours (Baumbach), 1990 Separate Peace (Knowles), 1999 September September (Foote), 1978

Serenissima: A Novel of Venice (Jong), 1987

Serenity House (Hope), 1992 Serious Woman (Middleton), 1961

Serpent (Mosley), 1992 Serpent Mage (Bear), 1986 Service of Clouds (Hill), 1999 Set of Wives (Jones), 1965 Set on Edge (Rubens), 1960

Set This House on Fire (Styron), 1961 Setting Free the Bears (Irving), 1979 Settle Down Simon Katz (Kops), 1973

Settlement (Haley), 1986 Seven Ages (Figes), 1987

Seven Books for Grossman (Lurie), 1983

Seven Dreams: A Book of North American Landscapes

(Vollmann), 1990

Seven League Boots (Murray), 1996 Seven Rivers West (Hoagland), 1986

Seven Summers: The Story of an Indian Childhood

(Anand), 1951

Seven Tales and a Fable (s Jones), 1995 Seven Wives: A Romance (Baumbach), 1994

Seventh Babe (Charyn), 1979 Seventh Heaven (Hoffman), 1991

Seventh Sinner (Mertz, as Michaels), 1975 Sexing the Cherry (Winterson), 1989 Shades of Grey (s St. Omer), 1968 Shadow Baby (Forster), 1996 Shadow Bride (Heath), 1988 Shadow Knows (Johnson), 1975 Shadow Knows (s Madden), 1970 Shadow Lines (Ghosh), 1989

Shadow Master (Feinstein), 1979 Shadow of Myself (Phillips), 2000

Shadow of a Shadow of a Dream: Love Stories of Singapore (s Lim), 1987

Shadow Play in India (Hauser), 1937 Shadows on Our Skin (Johnston), 1978

Shadrach (s Styron), 1979

Shadrach in the Furnace (Silverberg, as Knox), 1977 Shake Hands for Ever (Rendell, as Vine), 1975

Shallows (Winton), 1986 Shaman Winter (Anaya), 1999 Shame (Rushdie), 1983

Shampoo Planet (Coupland), 1992 Shanghai Incident (Becker), 1956 Shape Shifter: Stories (s Melville), 1990

Shardik (Adams), 1975 Shards of Honor (Bujold), 1986 Shards of Memory (Jhabvala), 1995 Shares and Other Fictions (Stern), 1992 Sharp Teeth of Love (Betts), 1997

Sharpshooter: A Novel of the Civil War (Madden), 1996

Shattered Silk (Mertz, as Michaels), 1987 Shawl: A Story and a Novella (s Ozick), 1989

She and He (Brata), 1973

She Took My Arm As If She Loved Me (Gold), 1997

Shear (Parks), 1994

Shemerelda (Tinniswood), 1981 Shepherd (Forsyth), 1976 Sherbrookes (Delbanco), 1978 Shikasta (Lessing), 1979 Shiloh (Foote), 1952

Shiloh and Other Stories (s Mason), 1985

Shining (King), 1991

Shining City (Eldred-Grigg), 1991

Ship Fever and Other Stories (s Barrett), 1996 Ship Island and Other Stories (s Spencer), 1969

Ship Rock, A Place: From Women and Men, A Novel in Progress (McElroy), 1980

Ship on the Coin: A Fable of the Bourgeoisie (Hall), 1972

Shipping News (Proulx), 1994 Shipping Out (Stephens), 1979 Shipwreck Party (s Davison), 1989 Shirley (Fast, as Cunningham), 1964 Shiva Descending (Benford), 1980 Shoeless Joe (Kinsella), 1988

Shoeless Joe Jackson Comes to Iowa (s Kinsella), 1993

Shoot! (Bowering), 1994 Shooting Party (Colegate), 1981 Shooting the Stars (s Metcalf), 1993

Shores of Tomorrow (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1976

Short Answer (Middleton), 1958

Short Hall: New and Collected Stories (s Hall), 1980 Short History of a Prince: A Novel (Hamilton), 1998

Short Sad Book (Bowering), 1977 Short, Sharp Shock (Robinson), 1990 Short Story Embassy (Wilding), 1975

Short Tales from the Nightshift (s Kelman), 1978 Short Throat, the Tender Mouth (Grumbach), 1964

Short Time to Live (Jones), 1981 Short Walk in the Rain (s Hood), 1989

Shotgun (Hunter), 1969 Show Business (Tharoor), 1994 Show World: A Novel (Barnhardt), 1998 Shrapnel Academy (Weldon), 1987

Shrinking: The Beginning of My Own Ending (Lelchuk), 1978

Shroud for a Nightingale (James), 1971 Shrouded Planet (Silverberg, as Knox), 1964

Shuttlecock (Swift), 1984

Sight for Sore Eyes (Rendell, as Vine), 1999

Sights Unseen (Gibbons), 1995 Signals of Distress (Crace), 1995

Signed with Their Honour (Aldridge), 1942 Silas Timberman (Fast, as Cunningham), 1955

Silence in Hanover Close (Perry), 1989 Silence in the Garden (Trevor), 1988 Silence of Desire (Markandaya), 1960 Silence of Llano (s Anaya), 1982 Silent Areas (s Feinstein), 1980 Silent Cry (Perry), 1997

Silent Gondoliers (Goldman), 1984

Silent Invaders (Silverberg, as Knox), 1975

Silent Passengers (s Woiwode), 1993

Silent Terror (Ellroy), 1990

Silhouette in Scarlet (Mertz, as Michaels), 1984

Silken Net (Bragg), 1974 Silver City (Dowse), 1984 Silver Wedding (s Binchy), 1989 Simisola (Rendell, as Vine), 1994 Simon's Night (Hassler), 1979 Simple Gifts (Greenberg), 1986 Sin (Sionil Jose), 1994

Sin Eater (Ellis), 1977 Sin of Colour (Gupta), 1999

Singing Citadel: Four Tales of Heroic Fantasy (s Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1970 Singing Head (Elliott), 1968 Singing Whakapapa (Stead), 1994 Single & Single (le Carré), 1999 Single Eye (Duffy), 1964

Singular Family: Rosacoke and Her Kin (s Price), 1999

Singular Man (Donleavy), 1964 Singular Pleasures (s Mathews), 1988

Sinking of the Odradek Stadium and Other Novels

(Mathews), 1985

Sinning with Annie and Other Stories (s Theroux), 1975

Sins of the Father (Massie), 1991 Sins of the Wolf (Perry), 1994 Siren Celia (Eldred-Grigg), 1989 Sirens of Titan (Vonnegut), 1962 Sirian Experiments (Lessing), 1980

Sissie (Williams), 1963

Sister Hollywood (Stead), 1990 Sister of My Heart (Divakaruni), 1999

Sisters (s Bear), 1992 Sitters (Miller), 1995 Sitting Pretty (Young), 1976 Situation in New Delhi (Sahgal), 1977 Six Feet of the Country (s Gordimer), 1956

Six of One (Brown), 1979 Sixth Seal (Wesley), 1971 63: Dream Palace (s Purdy), 1957 Skating Party (Warner), 1984 Skeleton in the Cupboard (Ellis), 1988

Skinned Alive (s White), 1995

Skinny Island: More Tales of Manhattan (s Auchincloss), 1988

Skinny Legs and All (Robbins), 1991 Skull Beneath the Skin (James), 1982 Sky Changes (Sorrentino), 1966 Sky People (s Grace), 1994 Skybreaker (Jones), 1990 Slap (McDonald), 1996

Slapstick; or, Lonesome No More! (Vonnegut), 1976

Slash (Armstrong), 1998

/ (Bear), 1997

Slaughterhouse-Five; or, The Children's Crusade

(Vonnegut), 1970 Slave (Amadi), 1978 Slave Girl (Emecheta), 1977 Slave Trade (Gold), 1979

Slaves of New York (s Janowitz), 1987

Slay-Ride (Francis), 1973

Sleep: Stories (s Dixon), 1999 Sleep Tight (s Purdy), 1979

Sleepers of Roraima (s Harris), 1970

Sleeping Beauty Trilogy (Rice, as Roquelaure), 1999

Sleeping Life (Rendell, as Vine), 1978 Sleeping Partner (Graham), 1956

Sleeping Sorceress (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1972

Sleeps Six (s Raphael), 1979 Sleepside Story (s Bear), 1987

Slipping Down Life (T

Slipping-Down Life (Tyler), 1983 Slipstream (McDonald), 1982

Sliver (Levin), 1991

Slow Digestions of the Night (Crace), 1995

Slow Fade (Wurlitzer), 1985

Slow Learner: Early Stories (s Pynchon), 1985

Slow Natives (Astley), 1967

Slow Train to Milan (St. Aubin de Teran), 1983

Small Bang (Calisher), 1992 Small Ceremonies (Shields), 1996 Small Changes (Piercy), 1987 Small Gods (Pratchett), 1992 Small Rain (Delbanco), 1975 Small Rain (s Pynchon), 1980 Small Remedies (Deshpande), 2000 Small Town in Germany (le Carré), 1968

Small World: An Academic Romance (Lodge), 1985 Smell of the Coast and Other Stories (s Phillips), 1987

Smile (Bradbury), 1991

Smiley's People (le Carré), 1980 Smith's Dream (Stead), 1973 Smith's Gazelle (Davidson), 1971

Smithsonian Institution (Vidal, as Box), 1998

Smoke (Bradley), 1994

Smoke and Mirrors (Mertz, as Michaels), 1989

Smokescreen (Francis), 1972 Smuggler's Bible (McElroy), 1968 Snake Eyes (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1992

Snakes (Young), 1971 Snap (Frucht), 1988 Snapper (Doyle), 1992 Snare (Spencer), 1972 Sneaky People (Berger), 1980 Snow Angels (O'Nan), 1994 Snow Crash (Stephenson), 1992 Snow Falling on Cedars (Guterson), 1994

Snow Failing on Cedars (Guterson), 1994 Snow in Spain (s O'Sullivan), 1990

Snow Man (Chute), 1999

Snow White and Rose Red (Hunter), 1985

Snowman, Snowman: Fables and Fantasies (s Frame), 1963

So Gaily Sings the Lark (Jenkins), 1951

So Hurt and Humiliated and Other Stories (s King), 1959

So I Am Glad (Kennedy), 1995

So Long as You Both Shall Live (Hunter), 1976 So Long, See You Tomorrow (Maxwell), 1989

Soft Voice of the Serpent and Other Stories (s Gordimer), 1953 Soldier Erect; or, Further Adventures of the Hand-Reared Boy

(Aldiss), 1971

Soldier in the Rain (Goldman), 1960 Soldier of the Great War (Helprin), 1991 Soldier of the Revolution (Just), 1970 Soldier's Embrace (s Gordimer), 1980

Soldier's Joy (Bell), 1989 Soldier's Return (Bragg), 1999 Solitary Child (Bawden), 1966 Solitary Grief (Rubens), 1991

Solomon Gursky Was Here (Richler), 1989 Solstice (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1985 Some Can Whistle (McMurtry), 1990 Some Faces in the Crowd (s Schulberg), 1954 Some Inner Fury (Markandaya), 1956 Some Kind of Grace (Jenkins), 1960

Some Lie and Some Die (Rendell, as Vine), 1973

Some Love (Callow), 1991

Some Monday for Sure (s Gordimer), 1976 Somebody's Darling (McMurtry), 1978

Someone Else (Tindall), 1969

Someone in the House (Mertz, as Michaels), 1983

Someone Just Like You (s Yurick), 1973

Someone to Watch Over Me: Stories (s Bausch), 1999

Something about a Soldier (Harris), 1958 Something Happened Here (s Levine), 1991 Something in Disguise (Howard), 1970 Something in the Wind (Smith), 1971

Something I've Been Meaning to Tell You (s Munro), 1974

Something Leather (Gray), 1991 Something Out There (s Gordimer), 1984 Something to Be Desired (McGuane), 1985

Something to Remember Me By: Three Tales (s Bellow), 1991 Something Wicked This Way Comes (Bradbury), 1963

Sometimes a Great Notion (Kesey), 1966

Sometimes I Live in the Country (Busch), 1986

Somewhere East of Life (Aldiss), 1994

Somewhere in the Night (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1966 Somewhere New: New and Selected Stories (s Wilding), 1996

Somnambulists (Elliott), 1964 Son of a Smaller Hero (Richler), 1955 Son of Laughter (Buechner), 1993 Son of Man (Silverberg, as Knox), 1979

Son of Rosemary: The Sequel to Rosemary's Baby (Levin), 1998

Son of the Circus (Irving), 1994

Son of the Morning (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1979 Son of the Morning and Other Stories (s Gotlieb), 1983

Song of Solomon (Morrison), 1978 Song of the Silent Snow (s Selby), 1986 Songs My Mother Taught Me (Thomas), 1973 Songs of Distant Earth (Clarke), 1986

Songs of Earth and Power (Bear), 1992 Songs of Enchantment (Okri), 1993

Songs of Summer and Other Stories (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1979

Sons (Hunter), 1970

Sons for the Return Home (Wendt), 1996 Sons of Darkness, Sons of Light (Williams), 1970 Sons of the Wolf (Mertz, as Michaels), 1968

Sophie's Choice (Styron), 1979

Sorcerer's Amulet (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1968

Sorcerer's Apprentice: Tales and Conjuration (s Johnson), 1988

Sorcerers of Majipoor (Silverberg, as Knox), 1997

Sort of Forgetting (Vansittart), 1960

Sot-Weed Factor (Barth), 1967

Soul Clap Hands and Sing (s Marshall), 1962

Soul-Mate (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1989

Soul Music (Pratchett), 1995

Souls Raised from the Dead (Betts), 1994 Sound of Trumpets (Mortimer), 1999

Soundings (Davison), 1993 Sour Sweet (Mo), 1985

Source of Embarrassment (Barker), 1974

Source of Light (Price), 1981 Sourcery (Pratchett), 1989

Sources of Unrest (Vansittart), 1962

South (Tóibín), 1991

South Street (Bradley), 1975

South Will Rise at Noon (Glover), 1989 Southern Discomfort (Brown), 1983 Southern Family (Godwin), 1987

Southpaw: by Henry W. Wiggen: Punctuation Inserted and

Spelling Greatly Improved (Harris), 1953

Southpaw: Short Stories (s St. Aubin de Teran), 1999 Space, Time, and Nathaniel: Presciences (s Aldiss), 1957

Spaces of the Dark (Mosley), 1951 Spanish Lover (Trollope), 1997

Spanking Watson: A Novel (Friedman), 1999

Spanking the Maid (Coover), 1987 Sparrow's Fall (Bodsworth), 1967 Spartacus (Fast, as Cunningham), 1952 Speaker of Mandarin (Rendell, as Vine), 1983

Special Flower (Gee), 1965 Speed (Harris), 1990 Speed Queen (O'Nan), 1997 Spence + Lila (Mason), 1989

Spending: A Utopian Divertimento (Gordon), 1998

Sphere (Crichton, as Lange), 1987 Sphinx and the Sybarites (Pownall), 1993

Spider (McGrath), 1991 Spider Cup (Halligan), 1990 Spiderman (Sionil Jose), 1991 Spiderweb (Lively), 1999 Spiked Heel (Hunter), 1957 Spiral Ascent (Upward), 1977 Spirit Ring (Bujold), 1992 Spirit Weddings (Tindall), 1992

Spirits and Other Stories (s Bausch), 1987

Spit Delaney's Island: Selected Stories (s Hodgins), 1976

Splendide-Hôtel (Sorrentino), 1973 Split Images (Leonard), 1983 Splitting: A Novel (Weldon), 1994 Spoils of Flowers (Grumbach), 1962 Sport of Nature (Gordimer), 1987 Sporting Club (McGuane), 1969 Sporting Proposition (Aldridge), 1973 Sporting with Amaryllis (West), 1996

Sportswriter (Ford), 1986 Spreading Fires (Knowles), 1974 Spring of Souls (Cobb), 1999 Spring of the Ram (Dunnett), 1988 Spring Sonata (Rubens), 1986 Spy Hook (Deighton), 1988 Spy Line (Deighton), 1989 Spy Sinker (Deighton), 1990 Spy Story (Deighton), 1974

Spy Who Came In from the Cold (le Carré), 1964

Spyglass Tree (Murray), 1991 Square's Progress (Sheed), 1965

Squeak: A Biography of NPA 1978A 203 (Bowen), 1984

Squeeze Play (Auster), 1984

SS-GB: Nazi-Occupied Britain 1941 (Deighton), 1979

Stagg and His Mother (Pownall), 1991

Staggerford (Hassler), 1977

Stained White Radiance (Burke), 1993

Stand (King), 1978

Stand We at Last (Fairbairns), 1983 Standard Dreaming (Calisher), 1972 Standard of Behaviour (Trevor), 1958 Star Called Henry (Doyle), 1999 Star in the Family (Faust), 1975 Star Invaders (s King), 1964

Star of the Gypsies (Silverberg, as Knox), 1987

Star Wars: Rogue Planet (Bear), 2000 Starborne (Silverberg, as Knox), 1996

Starcarbon: A Meditation on Love (Gilchrist), 1994

Starhaven (Silverberg, as Knox), 1958

Staring at the Sun (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1987

Starr Bright Will Be With You Soon (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1999

Stars and Bars (Boyd), 1985 Stars at Noon (Johnson), 1987

Stars in My Pocket Like Grains of Sand (Delany), 1984

Stars of the New Curfew (s Okri), 1989

Starswarm (s Aldiss), 1979 Start in Life (Brookner), 1981 Starting Over (Wakefield), 1974 State of Independence (Phillips), 1986 State of Ireland (s Kiely), 1982 State of Siege (Frame), 1967

Statement Against Corpses (s Ghose), 1964 States of Emergency (Brink), 1989 Statesman's Game (Aldridge), 1966 Statues in a Garden (Colegate), 1966

Steagle (Faust), 1966

State Ward (Duff), 1994

Stealer of Souls and Other Stories (s Moorcock, as Bradbury,

E.), 1967

Steel Tsar (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1982

Steelwork (Sorrentino), 1970

Step-Father (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1978

Stepford Wives (Levin), 1972 Stephanie (Graham), 1993

Stephen King's Skeleton Crew (s King), 1985

Stepper (Castro), 1997

Stepping Westward (Bradbury), 1995 Steps of the Sun (Trollope), 1984

Stepsons of Terra (Silverberg, as Knox), 1958

Stern (Friedman), 1963 Stick (Leonard), 1984 Still Life (Stephens), 1978

Still Life with Woodpecker (Robbins), 1980

Still Waters (Middleton), 1976 Stillness (Delbanco), 1980 Stirk of Stirk (Tinniswood), 1974 Stitch (Stern), 1967

Stochastic Man (Silverberg, as Knox), 1976

Stolen Jew (Neugeboren), 1981 Stolen Past (Knowles), 1984 Stolen Stories (s Katz), 1984 Stone Diaries (Shields), 1994

Stone Garden and Other Stories (s Spence), 1995

Stone Virgin (Unsworth), 1986 Stones (s Findley), 1990

Stones from the River (Hegi), 1994

Stories from the Warm Zone and Sydney Stories (s

Anderson), 1988

Stories of Misbegotten Love (s Gold), 1985

Storm (Buechner), 1998

Storm in Chandigarh (Sahgal), 1969 Storm of Fortune (Clarke), 1973 Storm Tide (Piercy), 1998

Stormbringer (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1977

Story for Europe (Self), 1996

Story of a Non-Marrying Man and Other Stories (s

Lessing), 1972

Story of Lola Gregg (Fast, as Cunningham), 1957

Story of My Desire (Callow), 1976 Story of My Life (McInerney), 1988 Story of the Night (Tóibín), 1997 Story of the Weasel (Slaughter), 1976 Story Teller (Vansittart), 1968 Storyboard (Bowen), 1960

Storyhood as We Know It and Other Tales (s Matthews), 1993

Storyman (Kelleher), 1996 Straight (Francis), 1989 Straight Cut (Bell), 1987 Straight No Chaser (Young), 1994 Straits of Messina (Delany), 1989 Strange Case of Billy Biswas (Joshi), 1971

Strange Fits of Passion (Shreve), 1991

Strange God (Savage), 1974 Strange Meeting (Hill), 1972 Strange One (Bodsworth), 1960

Strange Yesterday (Fast, as Cunningham), 1934 Stranger from the Sea: A Novel of Cornwall 1810–1811

(Graham), 1982 Strangers (Jones), 1974

Strangers and Journeys (Shadbolt), 1972 Strangers Meeting (Graham), 1939 Strangers When We Meet (Hunter), 1958

Strata (Pratchett), 1981

Strawberry Boy (Dawson), 1976

Strawberry Tree (s Rendell, as Vine), 1990

Street Games (s Brown), 1974 Street Lawyer (Grisham), 1998

Street of the Five Moons (Mertz, as Michaels), 1988

Street: Stories (s Richler), 1969 Streets of Conflict (Anthony), 1976 Streets of Gold (Hunter), 1975 Streets of Laredo (McMurtry), 1994 Strength of Stones (Bear), 1981 Strength of the Hills (Sinclair), 1992 Strickland: A Romance (Masters), 1990

String (Lurie), 1995

Stringer (Just), 1974

Strong Medicine (Hailey), 1984

Stronger Climate: Nine Stories (s Jhabvala), 1969 Struggles of Albert Woods (Cooper), 1953

Strumpet City (Plunkett), 1969 Studhorse Man (Kroetsch), 1970 Studmuffin (Duckworth), 2000

Stupid Boys Are Good to Relax With (s Swan), 1996

Subscript (Brooke-Rose), 1999 Subtraction (s Robison), 1991 Suburbs of Hell (Stow), 1984 Subway to New York (Callow), 1979

Success (Amis), 1987 Success (s Masters), 1992 Success Stories (s Banks), 1986

Succession: A Novel of Elizabeth and James (Garrett), 1983

Such (Brooke-Rose), 1966

Such a Long Journey (Mistry), 1991 Such a Pretty, Pretty Girl (Groom), 1999 Such Was the Season (Major), 1987 Sudden Death (Brown), 1983 Sudden, Fearful Death (Perry), 1993

Sudden Times (Healy), 2000 Suder (Everett), 1983

Suffrage of Elvira (Naipaul), 1958 Sugar and Rum (Unsworth), 1988 Sugar Cane (Bailey), 1993 Sugar Mother (Jolley), 1989 Suicide Academy (Stern), 1968 Suicide Hill (Ellroy), 1988 Suicide's Wife (Madden), 1978

Suitable Boy (Seth), 1993 Sula (Morrison), 1974 Summer (Cowan), 1964

Summer Before the Dark (Lessing), 1973 Summer Bird-Cage (Drabble), 1964

Summer Fires and Winter Country (s Shadbolt), 1966

Summer in the Greenhouse (Mayor), 1960 Summer of the Dragon (Mertz, as Michaels), 1980 Summer of the Royal Visit (Colegate), 1992

Summer People (Piercy), 1989 Summerhouse (Mulkerns), 1984 Summerhouse Trilogy (Ellis), 1994

Summering: A Book of Short Stories (s Greenberg), 1966

Summer's Lease (Mortimer), 1988 Sun Between Their Feet (s Lessing), 1973

Sun Chemist (Davidson), 1976 Sun Dogs (Butler), 1982

Sun on the Wall: Three Novels (Frame), 1994

Sunburst (Gotlieb), 1978

Sundance and Other Science Fiction Stories (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1975

Sunday Best (Rubens), 1980

Sundered Worlds (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1966 Sundog: The story of an American foreman, Robert Corvus Strang, as told to Jim Harrison (Harrison), 1985

Sunrise in Fiji (Nahal), 1988

Sunrise with Sea Monster (Jordan), 1995

Sunrising (Cook), 1986 Sunset Limited (Burke), 1998 Superman III (Kotzwinkle), 1983

Supper Waltz Wilson and Other New Zealand Stories (s

Marshall), 1979

Surface of Earth (Price), 1978 Surfacing (Atwood), 1973 Surrey Cat (Sinclair), 1976 Surrogate City (Hamilton), 1990

Survivor (Butler), 1978 Survivor (Jones), 1968 Survivor (Keneally), 1970

Survivor: A Selection of Stories (s Joshi), 1975

Survivors (Feinstein), 1991 Survivors (Hunter), 1975

Survivors of the Crossing (Clarke), 1964

Suspects (Berger), 1996

Suspended Sentences (s Guerard), 1999

Suttree (McCarthy), 1980 Swag (Leonard), 1986

Swami and Friends: A Novel of Malgudi (Narayan), 1935

Swann: A Mystery (Shields), 1992 Swanny's Ways (Katz), 1995 Sweet Dreams (Frayn), 1974

Sweet Hereafter: A Novel (Banks), 1992 Sweet Shop Owner (Swift), 1985 Sweet Smell of Psychosis (Self), 1999 Sweet William (Bainbridge), 1976 Sweethearts (s Phillips), 1976 Sweets of Pimlico (Wilson), 1989

Sweetsir (Yglesias), 1981 Swiftie the Magician (Gold), 1975

Swimmer in the Secret Sea (Kotzwinkle), 1975 Swimming Pool Season (Tremain), 1985

Switch (Leonard), 1979

Sword and the Miracle (Bragg), 1996 Sword and the Sickle (Anand), 1942

Sword and the Stallion (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1974 Sword of the Dawn (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1977 Swords Trilogy (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1977

Sybil (Auchincloss), 1952

Sycamore Tree (Brooke-Rose), 1959 Sylvia (Fast, as Cunningham), 1962

Symposium (Spark), 1990 System (Hanley, as Calvin), 1962

Tabloid Dreams (s Butler), 1996 Tailor of Panama (le Carré), 1996 Take Me Back: A Novel (Bausch), 1981

Take My Life (Graham), 1967 Take This Man (Busch), 1981

Take Two Popes (Hanley, as Calvin), 1972

Taken (Marlatt), 1996 Takeover (Spark), 1976

Taking Shelter (Anderson), 1990

Tale for the Mirror: A Novella and Other Stories (s Calisher), 1963

Tale Maker (Harris), 1994
Tale of Asa Bean (Matthews), 1971
Tales from Firozsha Baag (s Mistry), 1992
Tales from Planet Earth (s Clarke), 1990
Tales from Watership Down (Adams), 1996

Tales from the Blue Archives (Thornton), 1997 Tales from the Empty Notebook (s Kotzwinkle), 1996

Tales from the White Hart (s Clarke), 1998 Tales I Tell My Mother (s Fairbairns), 1980 Tales I Tell My Mother (s Roberts), 1978 Tales I Told My Mother (s Nye), 1970

Tales of (s Delany), 1988

Tales of Burning Love (Erdrich), 1996 Tales of Manhattan (s Auchincloss), 1967

Tales of Mystery and Romance (s Moorhouse), 1977

Tales of Ten Worlds (s Clarke), 1963 Tales of Yesteryear (Auchincloss), 1994 Tales of the Ohio Land (s Matthews), 1978

Tales Told by an Idiot: Selected Short Stories (s Anand), 1999

Talisman (King), 1984 Talk Stories (s Kincaid), 2000 Talkative Man (Narayan), 1987

Talking It Over (Barnes, as Kavanagh), 1991

Talking Room (Hauser), 1976

Talking to Strange Men (Rendell, as Vine), 1987

Tall Houses in Winter (Betts), 1955 Tall Hunter (Fast, as Cunningham), 1942 Tall Woman (Dykeman), 1962

Tamarisk Row (Murnane), 1974 Tangents (s Bear), 1989 Tangi (Ihimaera), 1973 Tar Baby (Charyn), 1973 Tar Baby (Morrison), 1981 Tara Road (Binchy), 1996 Taste for Death (James), 1986 Taste of Sin (Cassill), 1959

Taste of Too Much (Hanley, as Calvin), 1960

Tathea (Perry), 1999

Taverners' Place (Trollope), 1986

Tawa (Knox), 1998

Tax Inspector (Carey), 1992

Teach Me to Fly, Skyfighter! and Other Stories (s Lee), 1983

Tear His Head Off His Shoulders (Dunn), 1975

Teeth, Dying, and Other Matters, and The Gamesman's Island: A Play (s Stern), 1964

Teeth of My Father (s Metcalf), 1975

Tehanu: The Last Book of Earthsea (Le Guin), 1990

Teitlebaum's Window (Markfield), 1971 Tell Me a Riddle: A Collection (s Olsen), 1964

Telling of Lies (Findley), 1988 Tempest (Cassill), 1959

Tempest of Clemenza (Adams), 1996 Temple of Flora (Mavor), 1961 Temple of Gold (Goldman), 1957 Temple of My Familiar (Walker), 1989 Temples of Delight (Trapido), 1991 Temporary Shelter (s Gordon), 1987 Temptations of Big Bear (Wiebe), 2000

Ten Green Bottles (s Thomas), 1967 Ten Indians (Bell), 1996 Ten Plus One (Hunter), 1964

10 Lb. Penalty (Francis), 1997 Ten Tales Tall and True (s Gray), 1994

Tenancy (Figes), 1993 Tenants (Cowan), 1994 Tenants of Time (Flanagan), 1988

Tender (Childress), 1990 Tender Mercies (Brown), 1979 Tenderness (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1996 Tenement of Clay (West), 1965

Tennessee Waltz and Other Stories (s Cheuse), 1990

Tennis Handsome (Hannah), 1983 Tent of Orange Mist (West), 1995 Terminal Beach (s Ballard), 1993 Terminal Man (Crichton, as Lange), 1972 Termination Rock (Freeman), 1989 Terms of Endearment (McMurtry), 1999 Terms of Reference (Middleton), 1966

Terrestrials (West), 1997
Terrible Threes (Reed), 1989
Terrible Twos (Reed), 1990
Territorial Rights (Spark), 1979
Tesseract (Garland), 1999
Testament (Grisham), 1999
Testostero (Foster), 1987
Texasville (McMurtry), 1987
Textermination (Brooke-Rose), 1991
Textures of Life (Calisher), 1963

That Angel Burning at My Left Side (Peterkiewicz), 1963

That Bad Woman (s Boylan), 1995

That Darcy, That Dancer, That Gentleman (Donleavy), 1991

That Eye, the Sky (Winton), 1986 That London Winter (Bardwell), 1981 That Long Silence (Deshpande), 1988 That Night (McDermott), 1987

That Night We Were Ravenous (Steffler), 1998

That Year in Paris (Jones), 1988 That's How It Was (Duffy), 1984

Thebes of the Hundred Gates (Silverberg, as Knox), 1993

Theft (s Bellow), 1989

Their Dogs Came with Them (Viramontes), 2000

Them (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1971

Theme for Diverse Instruments (s Rule), 1990

Then Again (McCauley), 1987

Then Upon the Evil Season (Virtue), 1988 Theo and Matilda (Billington), 1991

Therapy (Lodge), 1995

There Are No Elders (s Clarke), 1994 There Is a Happy Land (Waterhouse), 1957 There Was an Ancient House (Kiely), 1955 There We Have Been (Bardwell), 1989 Therefore Be Bold (Gold), 1962

These Enchanted Woods (Massie), 1993 They Came like Swallows (Maxwell), 1937

They Do Return (s Lim), 1983 They Fly at Ciron (Delany), 1993 They Whisper (Butler), 1994 Thin Ice (s Levine), 1980

Thing He Loves and Other Stories (s Glanville), 1973

Thing of It Is... (Goldman), 1967 Things about to Disappear (s Wier), 1978

Things as They Are? Short Stories (s Vanderhaeghe), 1992

Things Fall Apart (Achebe), 1992 Things They Carried (s O'Brien), 1990 Think of England (s Raphael), 1988 Thinks (Waterhouse), 1984 Thinner (King), 1984

Third Life of Grange Copeland (Walker), 1985 Third Rumpole Omnibus (s Mortimer), 1998

Thirsty Evil: Seven Short Stories (s Vidal, as Box), 1958 Thirteen Stories and Thirteen Epitaphs (s Vollmann), 1994

13th Immortal (Silverberg, as Knox), 1957 30: Pieces of a Novel (Dixon), 1999 This Crooked Way (Spencer), 1952 This Day's Death (Rechy), 1970 This Is Not for You (Rule), 1987 This Is for You (s Wilding), 1994 This Perfect Day (Levin), 1970

This Summer's Dolphin (Shadbolt), 1969 This Thing Don't Lead to Heaven (Crews), 1970

This Time of Morning (Sahgal), 1966

This Was the Old Chief's Country (s Lessing), 1952

This Year It Will Be Different and Other Stories: A Christmas

Treasury (s Binchy), 1996 Thistle and the Grail (Jenkins), 1954 Thorns (Silverberg, as Knox), 1969

Those Who Watch (Silverberg, as Knox), 1977

Thou Worm, Jacob (Mirsky), 1967 Thought Gang (Fischer), 1995 Thousand Acres (Smiley), 1991 Three Blind Mice (Hunter), 1990

Three Cheers for the Paraclete (Keneally), 1969

Three Continents (Jhabvala), 1987

Three Farmers on Their Way to a Dance (Powers), 1988

Three Filipino Women (s Sionil Jose), 1992

Three Gospels (Price), 1996 Three Lives (s Auchincloss), 1994 Three Marriages (Cooper), 1946 Three Six Seven (Vansittart), 1983 3001: The Final Odyssey (Clarke), 1997

Three: Williwaw, A Thirsty Evil, Julian the Apostate (Vidal, as

Box), 1962

Three Winters (Mortimer), 1956 Three Wogs (s Theroux), 1973 Three Women (Piercy), 1999 Thrill of the Grass (s Kinsella), 1985 Through the Wilderness (s Jacobson), 1968

Throwback (Sharpe), 1984 Thru (Brooke-Rose), 1975

Thy Mother's Glass (Watmough), 1992

Tiberius (Massie), 1990

Ticket for a Seamstitch, by Henry W. Wiggen: But Polished for the Printer (Harris), 1957 Tides of Light (Benford), 1989 Tides of Lust (Delany), 1979

Tidewater Tales: A Novel (Barth), 1988

Tidings (Wharton), 1988
Tiger (St. Aubin de Teran), 1984
Tiger for Malgudi (Narayan), 1983
Tiger in the Tiger Pit (Hospital), 1984
Tiger of Gold (Jenkins), 1962
Tiger's Daughter (Mukherjee), 1973

'Til Death (Hunter), 1961 Timbuktu (Auster), 1999 Time and Tide (O'Brien), 1992 Time Dweller (s Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1971

Time Gate (Silverberg, as Knox), 1989 Time-Hoppers (Silverberg, as Knox), 1968 Time in Its Flight (Schaeffer), 1978

Time of Changes (Silverberg, as Knox), 1973

Time of Our Darkness (Gray), 1988 Time of Our Time (Mailer), 1998 Time of the Crack (Tennant), 1973 Time of the Kingfishers (Watmough), 1994

Time Out (s Ely), 1969

Time Outworn (Mulkerns), 1952 Time to Be Happy (Sahgal), 1958 Time to Dance (Bragg), 1991

Time to Dance and Other Stories (s MacLaverty), 1982

Time to Go (s Dixon), 1984 Time to Kill (Grisham), 1993 Time Will Darken It (Maxwell), 1949 Timeline (Crichton, as Lange), 1999

Time's Arrow; or, The Nature of the Offence (Amis), 1991

Time's Rub (Benford), 1984 Timequake (Vonnegut), 1997 Timescape (Benford), 1980 Tin Can Tree (Tyler), 1966 Tin Men (Frayn), 1966

Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Spy (le Carré), 1974 Tins and Other Stories (s Cowan), 1973

Tinsel (Goldman), 1979

Tirra Lirra by the River (Anderson), 1984

Tisch (Dixon), 2000

Titmuss Regained (Mortimer), 1990 Tivington Nott (Miller), 1989 Tlooth (Mathews), 1987 TNT for Two (Hall), 1956

To an Early Grave (Markfield), 1965

To Fear a Painted Devil (Rendell, as Vine), 1965

To Kill a Cardinal (Rumaker), 1992 To Lie with Lions (Dunnett), 1996 To Live Again (Silverberg, as Knox), 1975 To Morrow Now Occurs Again (Gover), 1975 To Open the Sky (Silverberg, as Knox), 1970 To Open the Sky (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1967 To Recollect a Cloud of Ghosts: Christmas in England (s

Garrett), 1979

To Say Nothing of the Dog; Or, How We Found the Bishop's Bird Stump at Last (Willis), 1997

To Sing Strange Songs (s Bradbury), 1979 To Skin a Cat (s McGuane), 1987

To the Bright and Shining Sun (Burke), 1995

To the City (Tindall), 1987 To the Dark Tower (King), 1946 To the Hermitage (Bradbury), 2000 To the Hilt (Francis), 1996

To the Islands (Stow), 1982

To the Land of the Living (Silverberg, as Knox), 1990

To the Precipice (Rossner), 1977 To the Wedding (Berger), 1995 To the Winds (Jones), 1996 To Whom She Will (Jhabvala), 1955

To Worlds Beyond (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1969

Toast to the Lord (Jenkins), 1972

Today the Struggle (Jones), 1978

Todd Andrews to the Author (s Barth), 1979

Tokyo Woes (Friedman), 1986

Tom O'Bedlam (Silverberg, as Knox), 1986

Tombs of Atuan (Le Guin), 1972 Tomcat in Love (O'Brien), 1998 Tommyknockers (King), 1987

Tomorrow Midnight (s Bradbury), 1966

Tomorrow We Save the Orphans (s Marshall), 1992

Tomorrow's World (Hunter), 1956 Tongues of Angels (Price), 1990 Tongues of Flame (Parks), 1985

Too Far to Go: The Maples Stories (s Updike), 1980

Too Late (Dixon), 1978

Too Late American Boyhood Blues (s Busch), 1984

Torquemada (Fast, as Cunningham), 1967

Tortilla Curtain (Boyle), 1995

Tortoise by Candlelight (Bawden), 1963

Tortuga (Anaya), 1979 Touch (Leonard), 1988 Touch of Clay (Shadbolt), 1974 Touch of Daniel (Tinniswood), 1969

Touch of Love (Coe), 1989

Tough Guys Don't Dance (Mailer), 1984

Tough, Tough Toys for Tough, Tough Boys (s Self), 1998 Toughest Indian in the World: Stories (s Alexie), 2000

Tour (Ely), 1967 Tourmaline (Stow), 1983 Tournament (Foote), 1949 Tournament (Vansittart), 1961

Toward the End of Time (Updike), 1997 Toward the Sea (Middleton), 1995 Towards Asmara (Keneally), 1989

Towards the End of the Morning (Frayn), 1967 Tower of Glass (Silverberg, as Knox), 1976

Towers of Toron (Delany), 1968

Town and Country Lovers (s Gordimer), 1980

Toy Epic (Humphreys), 1958

Toynbee Convector (s Bradbury), 1989

Tracer (Barthelme), 1986 Tracker (Wagoner), 1975 Tracks (Erdrich), 1988

Tractor and the Corn Goddess and Other Stories (s Anand), 1947

Tragic Magic (Brown), 1978 Trailerpark (s Banks), 1981 Train to Pakistan (Singh), 1961 Train Whistle Guitar (Murray), 1974 Trainspotting (Welsh), 1996

Traitor's Gate (Perry), 1995 Transatlantic Blues (Sheed), 1979 Transfer Station (s Haley), 1989

Transfiguration of Martha Friend (Virtue), 1996

Transformation of Miss Mavis Ming (Moorcock, as Bradbury,

E.), 1977

Transformations (Jones), 1988 Transit of Venus (Hazzard), 1980

Transit to Narcissus: A Facsimile of the Original Typescript

(Mailer), 1978 Translator (Just), 1991 Trap (Jacobson), 1955 Trap (Mathers), 1970 Trash (s Allison), 1988 Traveller (Adams), 1989

Traveller and His Child (Tindall), 1975

Travelling Entertainer and Other Stories (s Jolley), 1979

Travelling Hornplayer (Trapido), 1999 Travels of Maudie Tipstaff (Forster), 1967

Treasure (Knox), 1992

Treasure Hunt (Buechner), 1978 Treasures of Time (Lively), 1979

Tree (Sionil Jose), 1978

Tree of Hands (Rendell, as Vine), 1985 Tree of Knowledge (Figes), 1991 Tree of the Sun (Harris), 1978

Tremor (Graham), 1995 Trespasses (Bailey), 1971 Trial Run (Francis), 1979

Trials of Rumpole (s Mortimer), 1981

Tribal Justice (s Blaise), 1974 Trick of It (Frayn), 1990

Trick of the Light (Faulks), 1984

Trigger (Clarke), 1999 Trina (Cooper), 1934

Trio: Three Stories from Cheltenham (s Trevor), 1993 Tripmaster Monkey, His Fake Book (Kingston), 1989

Triton (Delany), 1977

Triumph of the Spider Monkey (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1976

Triumph of the Tricolour (Nahal), 1993 Trojan Gold (Mertz, as Michaels), 1987 Trot: A Novel of Suspense (Ely), 1964 Trotter-Nama: A Chronicle (Sealy), 1988

Trouble in Bugland: A Collection of Inspector Mantis Mysteries (s Kotzwinkle), 1983

Trouble with England (Raphael), 1962 Trouble with Heroes (s Vanderhaeghe), 1983

Troublesome Offspring of Cardinal Guzman (de Bernières), 1994

Trout in the Turnhole (Kiely), 1995 Truant State (Hasluck), 1988 Truckers (Pratchett), 1990 True Believers (s O'Connor), 1992

True Believers (s O'Connor), 1992 True Confessions (Dunne), 1978 True Love (Gold), 1984

True Stars (Kidman), 1990

True Story of Lola MacKellar (Aldridge), 1992

Trumpet (Kay), 1998

Trumpet to the World (Harris), 1946

Trust (Ozick), 1967

Trust in Chariots (Savage), 1961 Trust Me (s Updike), 1987

Trusting and the Maimed, Other Irish Stories (s Plunkett), 1959

Truth (Pratchett), 2000

Truth about Lorin Jones (Lurie), 1988 Truth and Bright Water (King), 2000

Truth: Four Stories I Am Finally Old Enough to Tell (s Douglas), 1998

Truth Will Not Help Us: Embroidery on an Historical Theme (Bowen), 1956

Trying to Save Piggy Snead (s Irving), 1993

Tumatumari (Harris), 1968 Tumbled House (Graham), 1960 Tunnel (Gass), 1995

Tupelo Nights (Bradley), 1988 Tupolev Too Far (s Aldiss), 1994 Turning Back the Sun (Thubron), 1994

Turtle Beach (d'Alpuget), 1981 Turtle Diary (Hoban), 1976 Turtle Moon (Hoffman), 1992

Twenty-One: Selected Stories (s Just), 1990

27th Kingdom (Ellis), 1999 Twice Shy (Francis), 1982 Twice Told Tales (s Stern), 1989 Twice Twenty Two (s Bradbury), 1966 Twice Upon a Time (s Stern), 1992

Twilight Man (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1970 Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Spy (Deighton), 1976

Twisted Root (Perry), 1999

Twisted Sword: A Novel of Cornwall 1815-1816 (Graham), 1991

Two (s Crews), 1984

Two Against One (Barthelme), 1989 Two Brothers (Middleton), 1978

Two Brothers, Running: Seventeen Stories and a Movie (s Lurie), 1990

Two Cities (Wideman), 1998 Two Dead Girls (King), 1996

Two Filipino Women (s Sionil Jose), 1982

Two for Texas (Burke), 1995

Two in the Bush and Other Stories (s Thomas), 1981

Two Leaves and a Bud (Anand), 1954

Two Lives (Trevor), 1991 Two Moons (Johnston), 1998 Two of Them (Russ), 1986

Two Sisters: A Memoir in the Form of a Novel (Vidal, as Box), 1970

2001: A Space Odyssey (Clarke), 1994 Two Thousand Seasons (Armah), 1980 2061: Odyssey Three (Clarke), 1988 2010: Odyssey Two (Clarke), 1982 Two Valleys (Fast, as Cunningham), 1934

Two Virgins (Markandaya), 1974

Two Women and Their Man (Jones), 1982 Two's Company (Middleton), 1963

Typical American (Jen), 1991

Ugly Little Boy (Silverberg, as Knox), 1992

Uhuru Street (s Vassanji), 1991 Ultimate Good Luck (Ford), 1989 Umbrella Man (Gordon), 1971 Unburied (Palliser), 1999

Uncharted Territory (Willis), 1994

Uncle Mort's North Country (Tinniswood), 1986 Uncle Mort's South Country (Tinniswood), 1990 Unconditional Surrender (Humphreys), 1996

Unconsoled (Ishiguro), 1995

Under Saturn: Four Stories (s Wilding), 1988 Under the Apple Tree (Wakefield), 1982

Under the Banyan Tree and Other Stories (s Narayan), 1985

Under the Feet of Jesus (Viramontes), 1995

Under the Frog (Fischer), 1994

Under the Gypsy Moon (Thornton), 1990 Under the Shadow (Sorrentino), 1991 Under the Skin (Bawden), 1964 Under the Wheel (Benford), 1987

Underground (Mudrooroo, as Johnson), 1999 Underground Christmas (Hassler), 1999 Underground Man (Jackson), 1997 Underwood and After (Frame), 1991 Underworld (DeLillo), 1997

Undiscovered Country (Mitchell), 1970 Undue Influence (Brookner), 2000 Undying (Mudrooroo, as Johnson), 1998

Unearned Pleasures and Other Stories (s Hegi), 1988

Unearthing Suite (s Atwood), 1983 Unexplained Laughter (Ellis), 1987

Unfamiliar Territory (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1975

Unfinished Business (Hines), 1983 Unfit for Paradise (s Swan), 1982 Unguarded Hours (Wilson), 1978 Unhealthful Air (Baker), 1988

Unholy Loves (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1980

Unicorn Hunt (Dunnett), 1994 Union Street (Barker), 1983

Universal Baseball Association, Inc., J. Henry Waugh, Prop

(Coover), 1970

Universe and Other Fictions (s West), 1988 Unkindness of Ravens (Rendell, as Vine), 1985 Unknown Industrial Prisoner (Ireland), 1971 Unknown Man No. 89 (Leonard), 1977 Unknown Soldier (Cassill), 1991 Unlawful Entry (Duckworth), 1992 Unlikely Stories, Mostly (s Gray), 1984 Unlimited Dream Company (Ballard), 1979

Unmarried Woman (Hill), 1978 Unnatural Causes (James), 1967 Unploughed Land (s Cowan), 1958 Unrequited Loves (s Baker), 1974 Unsuitable Friends (s Kidman), 1988 Unsuitable Job for a Woman (James), 1973 Unsweet Charity (Waterhouse), 1992

Untouchable (Anand), 1970 Untouchable (Banville), 1997 Untouchable Juli (Aldridge), 1976

Unusual Life of Tristan Smith (Carey), 1995 Unvanquished (Fast, as Cunningham), 1947

Up (Sukenick), 1968

Up the Junction (s Dunn), 2000 Up the Line (Silverberg, as Knox), 1987

Upon the Sweeping Flood and Other Stories (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1973

Upstairs People (Dawson), 1988

Upstart (Read), 1973 Urban Affair (Stern), 1980 Us He Devours (s Hall), 1964

V (Pynchon), 1963

V for Victor (Childress), 1984 Vacant Places (Middleton), 1990 Vacant Possession (Mantel), 2000

Vacillations of Poppy Carew (Wesley), 1988 Valdez Is Coming (Leonard), 1970

Valentine Pontifex (Silverberg, as Knox), 1984

Valley Beyond Time (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1973

Valley of Decision (Middleton), 1987 Valley, The City, The Village (Jones), 1956

Vampires (Rechy), 1971 Van (Doyle), 1992

Vanguard from Alpha (Aldiss), 1959

Vanish with the Rose (Mertz, as Michaels), 1992

Vanishing Ladies (Hunter), 1961 Vanishing Points (s Astley), 1995

Vanishing Tower (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1977

Vanity Dies Hard (Rendell, as Vine), 1970 Various Miracles (s Shields), 1994

Vegas: A Memoir of a Dark Season (Dunne), 1974

Veiled One (Rendell, as Vine), 1988 Vein of Riches (Knowles), 1978 Velodrome (Davison), 1988 Velvet Waters (s Murnane), 1990 Vendor of Sweets (Narayan), 1967

Venging (s Bear), 1992

Venom Business (Crichton, as Lange), 1969 Ventriloquist's Tale (Melville), 1997

Venus Envy (Brown), 1993 Venus Hunters (s Ballard), 1980 Venus in Sparta (Auchincloss), 1958 Verbivore (Brooke-Rose), 1990 Verdict of Treason (Vansittart), 1952 Vermilion Sands (s Ballard), 1973

Veronica and the Gongora Passion (s Ghose), 1998 Veronica; or, The Two Nations (Caute), 1990 Very Like a Whale (Mulkerns), 1986 Very Model of a Man (Jacobson), 1994

Very Old Bones (Kennedy), 1992 Very Private Life (Frayn), 1968 Very Proper Death (Hospital), 1991

Very Rich Hours of Count von Stauffenberg (West), 1980

Very Scotch Affair (Jenkins), 1968

Vespers (Hunter), 1990

Veteran Perils (s Wilkins), 1990 Vibrations in Time (s Watmough), 1986 Vicar of Sorrows (Wilson), 1994

Victim (Bellow), 1948

Victim of the Aurora (Keneally), 1978 Victoria Line (s Binchy), 1980 Victory over Japan (s Gilchrist), 1985

Vida (Piercy), 1980

Villa Golitsyn (Read), 1982 Villa Vittoria (Stead), 1997 Village (Anand), 1939 Village (Hinde), 1966

Village Affair (Trollope), 1989 Vineland (Pynchon), 1990

Vintage Bradbury (s Bradbury), 1965

Vintage Stuff (Sharpe), 1984 Vintner's Luck (Knox), 1998 Violated (Bourjaily), 1962 Violence (Bausch), 1992 Violence (Iyayi), 1979 Violent Stars (Gotlieb), 1999 Violent Ward (Deighton), 1993 Violet Clay (Godwin), 1978 Virtual Light (Gibson), 1993 Virtuous Woman (Gibbons), 1989 Visible People (Gray), 1977 Vision of Emma Blau (Hegi), 2000

Visionary: The Life Story of Flicker of the Serpentine (s Le Guin), 1984

Visitants (Stow), 1981 Visitation (Essop), 1980 Visitation (Roberts), 1978 Visitation of Spirits (Kenan), 1989 Visiting Cards (King), 1990

Visitors (Brookner), 1997 Vital Parts (Berger), 1971

Voice at the Back Door (Spencer), 1957 Voice of God and Other Stories (s Singh), 1957

Voice of a Stranger (Humphreys), 1949

Voices (s Cowan), 1988 Voices at Play (s Spark), 1962 Voices from the River (Kelleher), 1991 Voices in an Empty Room (King), 1984 Voices in the City (Desai), 1965

Voices of Time and Other Stories (s Ballard), 1992

Volcano Lover (Sontag), 1992

Volcanoes from Puebla (Gangemi), 1979 Von Bek (s Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1995

Vor Game (Bujold), 1990

Vorkosigan's Game (Bujold), 1990 Voyage of the Destiny (Nye), 1982 Voyage of the Franz Joseph (Yaffe), 1970 Voyage of the Narwhal (Barrett), 1998

Wabash (Butler), 1987

Wabash Factor (Fast, as Cunningham), 1987

Wages of Virtue (Middleton), 1969

Waiariki (s Grace), 1975

Wait for What Will Come (Mertz, as Michaels), 1980

Waiting for Cordelia (Gold), 1978 Waiting for the Barbarians (Coetzee), 1982 Waiting for the End of the World (Bell), 1985 Waiting for the Mahatma (Narayan), 1955

Wait Till I Tell You (s McWilliam), 1997

Waiting Game (Rubens), 1997 Waiting Room (Harris), 1967 Waiting to Exhale (McMillan), 1992 Wake Up, Stupid (Harris), 1960

Waking (Figes), 1982 Waldo (Theroux), 1968

Walk Me to the Distance (Everett), 1985

Walk Proud (Hunter), 1979 Walk Through Fire (Cobb), 1992 Walker (Wurlitzer), 1987

Walker in Shadows (Mertz, as Michaels), 1981 Walking Across Egypt (Edgerton), 1987

Walking Davis (Ely), 1972

Walking My Mistress in Deauville: A Novella and Nine Stories

(s Frame), 1992

Walking Naked (Bawden), 1982 Walking Stick (Graham), 1967

Walking the Dog and Other Stories (s MacLaverty), 1995

Walkin' the Dog (Mosley), 1999

Wall (Vansittart), 1990

Wall of the Plague (Brink), 1985

Wall of the Sky, the Wall of the Eye: Stories (s Lethem), 1996

Walter (Cook), 1985

Walter and June (Cook), 1989 Wanderers (Price), 1974

War Amongst The Angels: An Autobiographical Story

(Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1997 War and War (Barthelme), 1971 War Babies (Busch), 1988

War Between the Tates (Lurie), 1974

War Child (Gray), 1993

War Cries over Avenue C (Charyn), 1986

War Crimes (s Carey), 1979 War Fever (s Ballard), 1991

War Hound and the World's Pain (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1982

War of Don Emmanuel's Nether Parts (de Bernières), 1991 Warleggan: A Novel of Cornwall 1792–1793 (Graham), 1953

Warlock (Harrison), 1981

Warlord of the Air (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1971

Warm Nights of January (Tuohy), 1960 Warm Wine: An Idyll (s Updike), 1973 Warning to the Curious (Rendell, as Vine), 1987 Warrior of Mars (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1981

Warriors (Yurick), 1966

Warrior's Apprentice (Bujold), 1986

Warriors of Mars (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1966

Wars (Findley), 1978

Washington, D.C (Vidal, as Box), 1967 Washington Square Ensemble (Bell), 1983 Watch in the Night (Wilson), 1996

Watch Tower (Harrower), 1966 Watchers on the Shore (Barstow), 1967

Watchfires (Auchincloss), 1982

Watching Me, Watching You (s Weldon), 1981 Watching Mrs. Gordon and Other Stories (s Frame), 1985 Watching the Climbers on the Mountain (Miller), 1988

Water and the Sound (Tindall), 1962 Water Is Wide (Conroy), 1972 Water Is Wide (s Le Guin), 1976 Water Man (McDonald), 1993 Water-Method Man (Irving), 1980 Water Music (Boyle), 1982 Water Music (s Jones), 1944 Water Pourer (s Coover), 1972

Water Witch (Willis), 1980 Water with Berries (Lamming), 1972

Waterfall (Drabble), 1969 Waterfront (Schulberg), 1956 Waterland (Swift), 1984

Waters of Thirst (Mars-Jones), 1994

Watershed (Everett), 1996 Watership Down (Adams), 1974 Waterworks (Doctorow), 1994 Watson's Apology (Bainbridge), 1985 Waves Behind the Boat (King), 1967

Waves of Night and Other Stories (s Petrakis), 1969

Way I Found Her (Tremain), 1998 Way in the World (Naipaul), 1994

Way of Being Free (Okri), 1997

Way of Life and Other Stories (s Jacobson), 1971

Way to Go (Spence), 1998

Way We Live Now (s Sontag), 1991

Waywaya and Other Short Stories from the Philippines (s Sionil Jose), 1980

We Are for the Dark: Six Ghost Stories (s Howard), 1951

We Could Do Worse (Benford), 1988

We Might See Sights! and Other Stories (s O'Faolain), 1968

We Were the Mulvaneys (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1996

We Who Are About to. . . (Russ), 1987

Weather and Women Treat Me Fair: Stories (s Everett), 1989

Weather in Iceland (Profumo), 1993 Wednesday's Child (Robinson), 1995 Weekend in Dinlock (Sigal), 1960 Weekend with Claude (Bainbridge), 1982 Weep Not, Child (Ngugi wa Thiong'o), 1969

Weighed in the Balance (Perry), 1996

Weight of Water (Shreve), 1997

Weird Dance and Other Stories (s Nahal), 1965

Weird of the White Wolf (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1984

Welcome to Hard Times (Doctorow), 1960

Welcome to Tangier (Lurie), 1997

Welcome to the Monkey House: A Collection of Short Works (s Vonnegut), 1969 Well (Jolley), 1986

Well-Dressed Explorer (Astley), 1988

Welsh Heirs (s Jones), 1977 Went South (Wiggins), 1980 West Block (Dowse), 1983

West Midland Underground (s Wilding), 1975

Westworld (Crichton, as Lange), 1974

Wexford: An Omnibus (Rendell, as Vine), 1988

Whale Rider (Ihimaera), 1988 Whanau (Ihimaera), 1975 What a Carve Up! (Coe), 1994

What Becomes of the Broken Hearted? (Duff), 1996

What Comes Next (Baumbach), 1968 What I Lived For (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1994 What I'm Going to Do, I Think (Woiwode), 1970 What Makes Sammy Run? (Schulberg), 1941

What Remains (Delbanco), 2000 What the Crow Said (Kroetsch), 1978

What Was Mine and Other Stories (s Beattie), 1991

Whatever Happened to Gloomy Gus of the Chicago Bears? (s Coover), 1988

What's the Big Hurry? (Yaffe), 1954

Wheel of Love and Other Stories (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1971

Wheels (Hailey), 1971

When All the World Was Young (Sams), 1991

When He Was Free and Young and He Used to Wear Silks (s Clarke), 1973

When She Was Good (Roth), 1967 When the Cat's Away (Friedman), 1988 When the War Is Over (Becker), 1970 When We Were Orphans (Ishiguro), 2000 When Women Rule (s Clarke), 1985

Where Are You Going, Where Have You Been? Stories of Young America (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1974

Where Are the Snows (Gee), 1992

Where Is Here? (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1992

Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight? (Wagoner), 1970 Where Is the Voice Coming From? (s Wiebe), 1974

Where or When (Shreve), 1993

Where Shall We Go This Summer? (Desai), 1975

Where the Dreams Cross (Douglas), 1968 Where the Road Goes (Greenberg), 1998 Where There's Smoke (Hunter), 1975

Where Trouble Sleeps: A Novel (Edgerton), 1997

Where You'll Find Me and Other Stories (s Beattie), 1987

Which Ones Are the Enemy? (Garrett), 1962 While Gods Are Falling (Lovelace), 1966

Whip Hand (Francis), 1980

Whisper of the River (Sams), 1984

Whispering in Shadows (Armstrong), 1999

Whistler (Johnson), 1998 White Butterfly (Mosley), 1992 White Cutter (Pownall), 1989 White Eye (d'Alpuget), 1994 White Father (Mitchell), 1965

White Figure, White Ground (Hood), 1964

White Horses (Hoffman), 1983 White Hotel (Thomas), 1981 White Noise (DeLillo), 1986

White People: Stories and Novellas (s Gurganis), 1991

White Queen (Jones), 1993 White Rat (s Jones), 1977 White Solitaire (Mavor), 1988 White Woman (Davison), 1994 Who Calls the Tune (Bawden), 1953

Who Do You Think You Are? (s Munro), 1978 Who Do You Think You Are? Stories and Parodies (s

Bradbury), 1984

Who Is Angelina? (Young), 1978 Who Is Teddy Villanova? (Berger), 1977 Who Shall Live, Who Shall Die (Stern), 1963 Who Was Oswald Fish? (Wilson), 1988 Who Were You with Last Night? (Raphael), 1971

Whole Armour (Harris), 1962 Whole Hog (Wagoner), 1976 Who's Irish?: Stories (s Jen), 1999

Whores for Gloria; or, Everything Was Beautiful until the Girls

Got Anxious (Vollmann), 1992 Why Are We in Vietnam? (Mailer), 1969 Why Are We So Blest? (Armah), 1975

Why Do You Live So Far Away? A Novella and Six Stories (s Levine), 1984

Why I Can't Talk on the Telephone (s Codrescu), 1972 Why I Want to Fuck Ronald Reagan (s Ballard), 1968 Why Should I Have All the Grief? (Gotlieb), 1969

Wicked Women: A Collection of Short Stories (s Weldon), 1997

Wide Net and Other Stories (s Welty), 1945

Widow (King), 1957 Widow (Slaughter), 1989

Widow for One Year (Irving), 1998

Widows (Hunter), 1991

Widow's Mite and Other Stories (s Sams), 1987

Wier and Pouce (Katz), 1984 Wife (Mukherjee), 1987 Wife Next Door (Cassill), 1960 Wig: A Mirror Image (Wright), 1967 Wild Blue Yonder (s Thomas), 1990

Wild Cat Falling (Mudrooroo, as Johnson), 1965

Wild Decembers (O'Brien), 2000 Wild Girl (Roberts), 1984 Wild Horses (Francis), 1994

Wild Meat and the Bully Burgers (Yamanaka), 1996

Wild Nights (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1985

Wild Nights (Tennant), 1980

Wild Saturday and Other Stories (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1984

Wild Seed (Butler), 1980 Wild Shore (Robinson), 1985 Wild Surmise (Raphael), 1962

Wildcat Screaming (Mudrooroo, as Johnson), 1992

Wilderness Station (s Munro), 1994 Wilderness Tips (s Atwood), 1991 Wildest Dreams (Wilding), 1998

Wildlife (Ford), 1990

Will Shakespeare: The Untold Story (Mortimer), 1978 Will You Always Love Me? and Other Stories (s Oates, as Smith, R.), 1996

Willie Masters' Lonesome Wife (Gass), 1971

Williwaw (Vidal, as Box), 1965 Willow Tree (Selby), 1998 Willy Remembers (Faust), 1971

Wilt (Sharpe), 1984

Wilt Alternative (Sharpe), 1981 Wilt on High (Sharpe), 1985

Wind from a Burning Woman (s Bear), 1983

Wind from Nowhere (Ballard), 1967

Wind from the Sun: Stories of the Space Age (s Clarke), 1972

Wind Shifting West (s Grau), 1974 Windeater/Te Kaihau (s Hulme), 1987 Window in Mrs. X's Place (s Cowan), 1987 Wind's Twelve Quarters (s Le Guin), 1976 Wine of Astonishment (Lovelace), 1984

Wings (Pratchett), 1991

Wings of Dust (Mahjoub), 1994

Wings of the Falcon (Mertz, as Michaels), 1979

Winston (Tinniswood), 1991

Winston Affair (Fast, as Cunningham), 1960

Winter (Deighton), 1987 Winter Doves (Cook), 1985 Winter Garden (Bainbridge), 1981 Winter Helen Dropped By (Kinsella), 1995

Winter in Jerusalem (d'Alpuget), 1986 Winter in July (s Lessing), 1966 Winter in the Blood (Welch), 1974 Winter Journey (Colegate), 1995 Winter Journey (Figes), 1968 Winter Journey (Frame), 1986 Wintering (Kelleher), 1990 Winter's Tale (Helprin), 1983

Winthrop Covenant (Auchincloss), 1976

Wise Virgin (Wilson), 1983

Wish You Were Here (Brown), 1990

Wishbone (Halligan), 1994 Witch (Mertz, as Michaels), 1975 Witch of Exmoor (Drabble), 1996 Witches Abroad (Pratchett), 1991 Witches of Eastwick (Updike), 1984 Witches Trilogy (Pratchett), 1995 With Cat for Comforter (Bradbury), 1997 With Shuddering Fall (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1965

With the Snow Queen and Other Stories (s Greenberg), 1991

Without a City Wall (Bragg), 1969 Without a Hero (s Boyle), 1994 Without Motive (Graham), 1936 Wives of Bath (Swan), 1993 Wizard of Earthsea (Le Guin), 1971 Wizards' Country (Rooke), 1957

Wizard's Daughter (Mertz, as Michaels), 1982

Wizard's Tide (Buechner), 1990

Wolf (Harrison), 1993

Wolf to the Slaughter (Rendell, as Vine), 1968 Woman Beware Woman (Tennant), 1983

Woman Hollering Creek and Other Stories (s Cisneros), 1991

Woman in a Lampshade (s Jolley), 1986 Woman in Black: A Ghost Story (Hill), 1986 Woman in the Mirror (Graham), 1975 Woman Lit by Fireflies (Harrison), 1991

Woman of Judah: A Novel and Fifteen Stories (Frame), 1989

Woman of My Age (Bawden), 1967 Woman of the Future (Ireland), 1980 Woman of the Inner Sea (Keneally), 1993 Woman on the Edge of Time (Piercy), 1979 Woman Who Talked to Herself (Barker), 1989 Woman Who Walked into Doors (Doyle), 1996

Woman Who Was God (King), 1988 Woman with a Poet (s Callow), 1983 Woman's Age (Billington), 1980

Woman's Book of Superlatives (s Lim), 1993

Woman's Daughter (Bolger), 1991 Women and Ghosts (s Lurie), 1994 Women and Men (McElroy), 1987 Women in the Wall (O'Faolain), 1975

Women of Brewster Place: A Novel in Seven Stories

(Naylor), 1983

Women of Influence (s Burnard), 1988

Women of Whitechapel and Jack the Ripper (West), 1991

Women with Men: Three Stories (s Ford), 1997

Women's Hour (Caute), 1991 Women's Room (French), 1978 Wonder-Worker (Jacobson), 1974 Wonderland (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1972

Woods (Plante), 1982

Word for World Is Forest (Le Guin), 1977

Words (Josipovici), 1971 Words of Advice (Weldon), 1977 Words of My Roaring (Kroetsch), 1966

Work (Dixon), 1977

World According to Garp (Irving), 1978 World and Other Places (s Winterson), 1999

World Away (O'Nan), 1998 World Elsewhere (Bowen), 1967 World Inside (Silverberg, as Knox), 1976 World Made of Fire (Childress), 1984

World of a Thousand Colors (s Silverberg, as Knox), 1982

World of Nagaraj (Narayan), 1990 World of Profit (Auchincloss), 1969 World of Strangers (Gordimer), 1958

World's End (Boyle), 1988

World's End and Other Stories (s Theroux), 1980

World's Fair (Doctorow), 1986

Worlds of Exile and Illusion (s Le Guin), 1996

Worlds within Her (Bissoondath), 1998

Worry Box (s Halligan), 1993 Worst Fears (Weldon), 1996 Wort Papers (Mathers), 1973 Would-Be Saint (Jenkins), 1980 Wound of Love (Cassill), 1956

Wounds (Duffy), 1969

Wreath for Garibaldi and Other Stories (s Garrett), 1969

Wreath for Maidens (Munonye), 1973

Wrecks of Time (Moorcock, as Bradbury, E.), 1967 Writer's Trade, and Other Stories (s Delbanco), 1990

Written on the Body (Winterson), 1993 Wrongful Deaths (Wharton), 1995 Wyrd Sisters (Pratchett), 1988

Xorandor (Brooke-Rose), 1988

XPD (Deighton), 1981

Y Tri Llais (Humphreys), 1958 Year Before Yesterday (Aldiss), 1987 Year in San Fernando (Anthony), 1996 Year of Fears (Watmough), 1988

Year of Living Dangerously (Koch), 1979

Year of Silence (Bell), 1987

Year of the French (Flanagan), 1979

Year of the Hot Jock and Other Stories (s Faust), 1985 Yellow Back Radio Broke-Down (Reed), 1971

Yes from No-Man's Land (Kops), 1966

Yesterday in the Back Lane (Rubens), 1995

Yesterday's Spy (Deighton), 1975

You Are Now Entering the Human Heart (s Frame), 1984 You Bright and Risen Angels: A Cartoon (Vollmann), 1987

You Can't Catch Me (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1995 You Can't Get There from Here (Hood), 1984

You Can't Keep a Good Woman Down (s Walker), 1982 You Could Live If They Let You (Markfield), 1974 You Must Remember This (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1988 You Want the Right Frame of Reference (Cooper), 1971

Young Adolf (Bainbridge), 1979

Young in One Another's Arms (Rule), 1990

Young Miles (Bujold), 1997 Young People (Cooper), 1958 Youngest (Tindall), 1968

You'll Catch Your Death (s Hood), 1992

Your Turn to Curtsy, My Turn to Bow (Goldman), 1958 You're Not Alone: A Doctor's Diary (Cooper), 1976

Yours (Callow), 1972

Zanzibar Cat (s Russ), 1983 Zeitgeist (Sterling), 2000 Zeke and Ned (McMurtry), 1997

Zeph (Barker), 1992

Zero Cool (Crichton, as Lange), 1972 Zero db and Other Stories (s Bell), 1987

Zia Summer (Anaya), 1995

Zodiac: The Eco-Thriller (Stephenson), 1988

Zombie (Oates, as Smith, R.), 1995 Zone of the Interior (Sigal), 1976 Zuckerman Bound (Roth), 1985 Zuckerman Unbound (Roth), 1981 Zulu and the Zeide (s Jacobson), 1959

ISBN 1-558L2-408-2 90000 917815581624085

