To tear off arm and scalp.

21 ^cHe chose for himself the best,
For there is the portion of the revered chieftain,
Where the heads of the people come.
He executed the LORD's judgments
And His decisions for Israel.^c

22 And of Dan he said:

Dan is a lion's whelp
That leaps forth from Bashan.

23 And of Naphtali he said:

O Naphtali, sated with favor
And full of the LORD's blessing,
Take possession on the west and south.

24 And of Asher he said:

Most blessed of sons be Asher;
May he be the favorite of his brothers,
May he dip his foot in oil.

25^d May your doorbolts be iron and copper,
And your security last all your days.

26 O Jeshurun, there is none like God,
Riding through the heavens to help you,
Through the skies in His majesty.

27^d The ancient God is a refuge,
A support are the arms everlasting.
He drove out the enemy before you
By His command: Destroy!

18–19: Zebulun and Issachar will enjoy great influence owing to the resources of the Mediterranean and Lake Chinnereth, later known as the Sea of Galilee (Gen. 49.13).

20–21: Gad occupied the best table-land in Transjordan but aided the other tribes in the occupation of Canaan (Num. ch 32). 22: Dan, vigorous as a lion's whelp, must here already have migrated from its original tribal allotment on the coastal plain, adjacent to the Philistine pentapolis, to the far north, at the base of Mount Hermon (Judg. ch 18). Bashan, in northern Transjordan. 23: Naphtali, located in the region of the Sea of Galilee and the Gennesar plain, west and south of Dan. 24–25: Asher, located below Phoenicia, is to be strong and prosperous. 26–29: The resumption of the hymn to the Divine Warrior (vv. 2–5) and a return to the focus upon Jeshurun (v. 26), meaning all Israel (v. 28). 26: Much like the Canaanite storm god Ba'al, Israel's Divine Warrior is represented as riding upon the clouds (Isa. 19.1; Pss. 18.10; 68.33). 27: As translators' note d indicates, the Hebrew is difficult. NJPS's translation, although plausible, seems inconsistent with the emphasis of v. 26 upon God as Divine Warrior. On that basis, the alternate reconstruction of the Hebrew by the NRSV seems more appropriate: "He subdues the ancient gods, shatters the forces of old; he drove out the enemy before you, and said, 'Destroy!' "

a I.e., the one horn. b I.e., the other horn.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; cf. vv. 3–5 (with note c) above, and saphun "esteemed" in post-biblical Heb.

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

28 Thus Israel dwells in safety,
Untroubled is Jacob's abode,^a
In a land of grain and wine,
Under heavens dripping dew.
29 O happy Israel! Who is like you,
A people delivered by the LORD,
Your protecting Shield, your Sword triumphant!
Your enemies shall come cringing before you,
And you shall tread on their backs.

34 Moses went up from the steppes of Moab to Mount Nebo, to the summit of Pisgah, opposite Jericho, and the LORD showed him the whole land: Gilead as far as Dan; ²all Naphtali; the land of Ephraim and Manasseh; the whole land of Judah as far as the Western^b Sea; ³the Negeb; and the Plain—the Valley of Jericho, the city of palm trees—as far as Zoar. ⁴And the LORD said to him, “This is the land of which I swore to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, ‘I will assign it to your offspring.’ I have let you see it with your own eyes, but you shall not cross there.”

⁵So Moses the servant of the LORD died there, in the land of Moab, at the command of the LORD. ⁶He buried him in the valley in the land of Moab, near Beth-peor; and no one knows his burial place to this day. ⁷Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died; his eyes were undimmed and his vigor unabated. ⁸And the Israelites bewailed Moses in the steppes of Moab for thirty days.

The period of wailing and mourning for Moses came to an end. ⁹Now Joshua son of Nun was filled with the spirit a Others “fountain.” b I.e., Mediterranean; cf. note at 11.24.

28: As in Ugaritic epic, the theophany of the Divine Warrior and His proclamation as King results in the fertility of the land. 29: Tread on their backs, the standard biblical and Near Eastern symbol of military triumph (Josh. 10.24; Ps. 110.1; also attested in Neo-Assyrian reliefs).

34.1–12: The death of Moses. This chapter highlights the absence of access to Moses, who leaves behind no progeny and whose burial site is unknown. The Torah alone is the enduring Mosaic bequest. After the insertion of the Song of Moses (ch 32) and the Blessing of Moses (ch 33), the chapter directly continues the narrative concerning the death of Moses and the transfer of leadership to Joshua, his successor (ch 31). At another level, however, the chapter also directly continues the narrative thread of Num. ch 27, where God had commanded Moses to “ascend these heights” to survey the promised land before his death, and to “lay your hand” upon Joshua, to transfer the mantle of authority to him (vv. 12, 18). The belated resumption of that narrative, with its two themes of Mosaic death and succession, forms a literary bracket around the book of Deuteronomy, suggesting that editors interrupted the narrative in order to work

Deuteronomy into the Torah. 1: Went up, responding to the command of 32.49; Num. 27.12. The verse joins two different traditions about the site of Moses' death: Mount Nebo, which is in Transjordan, east of Jericho; and the summit of Pisgah, which is slightly to its west, and unmentioned in 32.49. Seeking to preserve both traditions, the editor presents them as if they were the same. 2–3: The lofty vantage point allows Moses to look northward to the Sea of Galilee (area of the tribal allotment of Dan and Naphtali), to the Western Sea (the Mediterranean), south to the Negeb desert and along the Jordan rift valley as far south as Zoar (once located at the southern end of the Dead Sea as one of the “cities of the Plain” and thus likely destroyed; Gen. 14.2, 8; 19.29). 5: At the command of the LORD, see 32.50 n. The unusual formulation greatly honors Moses, who, despite advanced age, does not die of old age nor succumb to physical or intellectual infirmity. 6: He buried him: The clear indication is that God Himself buried Moses, as He Himself sealed Noah into the ark (Gen. 7.16). Instead of Moses' progeny assuming the important legal responsibility of caring for the dead, God undertook it personally. This divine care fits the image of Moses in Deuteronomy. Beth-peor, see 3.29; 4.46; Josh. 13.20. No one knows his burial place, thus precluding pilgrimages to the site as a shrine. 7: A hundred and twenty, see 31.2 n. 8: Thirty days, so also for Aaron (Num. 20.29). Israel mourns the loss of Moses for the full mourning period stipulated for a parent (21.13). 9: Joshua . . . was filled with the spirit of wisdom: As at 1.13 and 16.18–20, Deuteronomy revises earlier traditions to stress wisdom as the essential qualification of office, and thus what Joshua receives from Moses. In Num. 27.18, Joshua was already “an inspired man” (often associated with prophecy or possession), while Moses was to transfer his “authority” to him. Here “the spirit of wisdom” is what Joshua receives from Moses. Because Moses of wisdom because Moses had laid his hands upon him; and the Israelites heeded him, doing as the LORD had commanded Moses.

¹⁰Never again did there arise in Israel a prophet like Moses—whom the LORD singled out, face to face,¹¹ for the various signs and portents that the LORD sent him to display in the land of Egypt, against Pharaoh and all his courtiers and his whole country,¹² and for all the great might and awesome power that Moses displayed before all Israel.

had laid his hands upon him: as at Num. 27.22–23, a means of transfer of attributes (Lev. 16.21; Num. 8.10–13), here used for investiture into office. 10–12: An editor eulogizes Moses as marking the pinnacle of prophecy, both because of his direct access to divine revelation and his power to work miracles. This double elevation of Moses to an ideal standard differs from his more human representation elsewhere in the book. The contrast between the two suggests that an editor's later, idealizing retrospective operates here, as Deuteronomy is now worked into the Torah. 10: Never again: Note the discrepancy between the perspective of this verse and the divine promise to Moses that the line of prophetic succession will continue in the future: "I will raise up a prophet for them . . . like yourself" (18.18). Face to face, rather than through dreams or visions (13.2); similarly, Exod. 33.11; Num. 12.8–10. Other traditions reject that Moses had such direct access to God (Exod. 33.20–23).

NEVI'IM

Terminology and Content

ACCORDING TO JEWISH TRADITION, the second canonical division, Nevi'im or Prophets, is comprised of the eight books Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the Twelve Minor (in the sense of short) Prophets. Samuel and Kings, which are now each divided into two books, are each considered as a single book in Jewish tradition, though the NJPS translation follows the practice, first found in the Septuagint, of dividing these two long books in half. In the classical rabbinic period, these eight books were seen as a single unit; in the medieval period, these books were divided in half thematically, with Joshua through Kings called the former prophets (nevi'im rishonim), and Isaiah through the Twelve called the latter prophets (nevi'im 'aharonim). The terms "former" and "latter" refer to the placement of these collections within Nevi'im rather than their chronological order since, for example, some of the events narrated in Kings, the fourth book of Nevi'im, transpire later than the events in some of the Twelve Minor Prophets.

It is likely that these eight books were canonized after the Torah, and that at some point the canon was comprised of Torah plus Nevi'im (see "Canonization," pp. 2072-77). It is less certain why the first four books were called "prophets" and how they became part of a larger collection called Nevi'im. Perhaps the collection is named after its last four books, which were seen as the more significant part of the collection. Alternatively, the name Nevi'im reflects an awareness that prophets and prophetic activity play important roles in each of the first four books as well: In the book of Joshua, Joshua is depicted as the prophetic successor to Moses (see esp. ch 1); in Judges oracles are often consulted (e.g., 1.1; 20.18); Samuel the prophet is a central figure of the book that bears his name; and Elijah, Elisha, and several other named and unnamed prophets figure prominently in Kings. Thus, even though Joshua through Kings might be categorized as historical books according to their genre, and are so placed in non-Jewish Bibles, which follow the order of the Septuagint (see the chart on p. 2076), their inclusion in Nevi'im reflects an ancient tradition that reflects the history of canonization rather than a thematic or generic arrangement of the books. Nevertheless, due to their different content and nature, they will be treated separately in this introduction.

The Historical Books and Historiography

THE BOOKS OF JOSHUA THROUGH KINGS are often categorized as historical texts. Yet the idea that historical writing should capture the events "as they really were," that historians should attempt to write an objective account of the events of the past, is a relatively recent notion which developed in European universities in the 19th century. Before that, history was typically didactic in nature, teaching the readers how to be good citizens or how to lead proper religious lives. Sometimes histories were produced in the royal court, in which case they were apologetic, showing how the king fulfilled his royal duties. Surviving historical documents from the ancient Near East show similar religious and ideological goals. Thus, it should not be surprising that the biblical writers are not primarily interested in the accurate recording of real events; rather, they use narratives about the past to illustrate various issues of significance to their earliest audience, the ancient Israelite community.

It is easiest to understand the biblical notion of history by first focusing on an earlier work, Exodus ch 13. Verse 3 begins: "And Moses said to the people, 'Remember this day, on which you went free from Egypt, the house of bondage.'" This would seem to suggest the importance of history for its own sake. This unit continues, however, with a set of commandments that directly result from this event: "No leavened bread shall be eaten" (v. 3); "seven days you shall eat unleavened bread, and on the seventh day there shall be a festival of the LORD" (v. 6); "no leavened bread shall be found with you, and no leaven shall be found in all your territory" (v. 7); "And you shall explain to your son on that day . . ." (v. 8); "and this shall serve you as a sign on your hand and as a reminder on your forehead" (v. 9); "you shall set apart for the LORD every first issue of the womb: every male firstling that your cattle drop shall be the LORD's" (v. 12). Taken as a whole, this passage indicates that the exodus is not significant as a disembodied historical event, as the beginning of v. 3 might suggest; rather, the exodus is a key occurrence because it serves as the basis for the observance of a central set of laws or norms.

The use of historical material in Psalms is even more instructive, since these traditions about the past are typically surrounded by a framework which explicitly highlights their theological significance or purpose. For example, in Psalm 78, a particular set of traditions is chosen and shaped so:

that a future generation might know —children yet to be born—and in turn tell their children that they might put their confidence in God, and not forget God's great deeds,
 but observe His commandments,
 and not be like their fathers,
 a wayward and defiant generation,
 a generation whose heart was inconstant, whose spirit was not true to God. (vv. 6–8)

Psalm 106 tells how God saved Israel time after time, despite their covenant violations. This is used as an argument to God that they should be rescued again:

Deliver us, O LORD our God, and gather us from among the nations,
to acclaim Your holy name,
to glory in Your praise. (v. 47)

Unfortunately, the material collected in Joshua through Kings is not as explicit about its purposes as these psalms or Exodus; for this reason, these books need to be subjected to internal analysis, in order to see what motivations and interests best explain their shape.

The Former Prophets and the Deuteronomistic History

NOT ONLY ARE JOSHUA THROUGH KINGS separated from the “true” prophetic books that follow on the basis of content, but Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings, along with the preceding book of Deuteronomy, fit so well together that it is likely that at some point these five books were edited together as a single work. This work is called by scholars the Deuteronomistic History, meaning the history written under the influence of ideas found in the book of Deuteronomy. This theory has much to commend it: These five books do read as a unified whole from a chronological perspective, narrating a continuous history from the end of the life of Moses through the Babylonian exile (586 BCE), and they share many phrases and ideological notions, such as an insistence on exclusive worship of God and the catastrophic consequences of idolatry, a concern with the centrality of Jerusalem, and a belief in the supremacy of the eternal Davidic dynasty. If this theory is correct, the size of the Deuteronomistic History, and the long period that it depicts, is quite remarkable, especially for an ancient historical work.

Many details of this theory remain debated; some scholars suggest that these books are not quite unified enough to represent the product of a single individual, intellectual school, or movement. For example, the book of Samuel has remarkably few echoes of the language of Deuteronomy, and the book of Kings contains narratives in which the great prophets Elijah and Elisha are legitimately active outside of the Jerusalem Temple (see especially Elijah on Mt. Carmel, 1 Kings ch 18). Scholars have thus suggested various theories concerning successive editions of the Deuteronomistic History, which many believe was begun in the 7th century under the Judean King Josiah (640–609 BCE), but was completed only in the Babylonian exile (586–538 BCE) or later. Some suggest that the lack of unity is due to non-Deuteronomistic material that has been added at a late stage to an earlier Deuteronomistic History. There have also been attempts to isolate narratives which might have preceded the Deuteronomistic History and other sources used by the Deuteronomist(s), and to discern their original purposes before these narratives and sources became integrated into the larger literary work. In sum, this collection has a long and complicated history, so it is impossible to speak of a totally unified purpose or interest in the compilation of the books of Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings. They reflect many different interests and stages of development: pre-Deuteronomic, Deuteronomistic, and later, postexilic concerns. The interests of the individual books of the Deuteronomistic History are thus discussed in the introductory material at the beginning of each book.

The Historical Books and Historicity

THE PROBLEMATIC NATURE OF ALL of these texts as historical documents does not mean that we have no idea of the historical periods that they cover, or that they are entirely useless as historical sources. Each text needs to be weighed individually in terms of its date of composition and its likely goals. Using these criteria, there are reasons to accept the veracity of, for example, the dry notice in 1 Kings 14.25–26 (“In the fifth year of King Rehoboam, King Shishak of Egypt marched against Jerusalem and carried off the treasures of the House of the LORD and the treasures of the royal palace. He carried off everything; he even carried off all the golden shields that Solomon had made”), which might even come from an archival source, and has some confirmation from Egyptian sources. In contrast, there are good reasons to be suspicious of the historicity of the long, detailed, and embellished story of David slaying Goliath in 1 Sam. ch 17; this story uses late biblical Hebrew language, comes from a different source than the surrounding material in Samuel, and is structured like a fairy-tale, in that the poor, short, unexpected hero gets to marry the tall king’s daughter by killing the giant who had vilified God. Additionally, 2 Samuel 21.19 reads: “Again there was fighting with the Philistines at Gob; and Elhanan son of Jaare-oregim the Bethlehemite killed Goliath the Gittite, whose spear had a shaft like a weaver’s bar.” It is much more likely that a short tradition in which Goliath is killed by a relatively unknown figure (Elhanan) would be the source for the long, elaborate tale attributing the same event to the well-known David, rather than vice versa. Thus, the modern historian must subject each text in these Historical Books to the type of internal analysis used on nonbiblical historical texts when external information bearing on the text is lacking.

There are a number of cases where we do have external, ancient Near Eastern written evidence that deals with events depicted in these Historical Books. For example, the events surrounding the siege of Jerusalem by the Assyrian King Sennacherib in 701 BCE are narrated in several Assyrian sources, and are also depicted in the palace reliefs of that king. These sources suggest that part of the terse account in 2 Kings 18.13–16 is quite accurate, while the highly developed continuation of the story in chs 19 and 20, especially the note in 19.35, that the angel of the LORD killed 185,000 Assyrian soldiers in a single night, is most likely imaginative. Similarly, from various Mesopotamian sources, we know of a “house of Omri”; Omri’s name is also mentioned on the Moabite Mesha Stele. This confirms the existence of the Northern (Israelite) king mentioned in 1 Kings 16.23–28. However, Kings tells little of his achievements during his twelve years as monarch, other than his building of Samaria and the notice that: “Omri did what was displeasing to the LORD; he was worse than all who preceded him. He followed all the ways of Jeroboam son of Nebat and the sins which he committed and caused Israel to commit, vexing the LORD, the God of Israel, with their futilities” (vv. 25–26). The external sources, however, suggest that Omri was a powerful king who established a significant name for himself through his military activities. This highlights the extreme selectivity of the biblical sources.

Archeological evidence confirms the picture suggested above: There may be some truth (or kernel of truth) to some of the biblical stories, but in their current form, they lack historical veracity, because that is not their prime concern. Recent decades, for example, have seen a remarkable reevaluation of the evidence concerning the conquest of the land of Canaan by Joshua. As more sites have been excavated, there has been a growing consensus that the main story of Joshua, that of a speedy and complete conquest (e.g., Josh. 11.23: "Thus Joshua conquered the whole country, just as the LORD had promised Moses") cannot be upheld by the archeological record, though there are indications of some destruction and conquest at the appropriate time. Various events and traditions have been reworked very substantially over time and ultimately included in the Bible in order to substantiate a particular picture of God.

In sum, though Joshua through Kings are often viewed as early historical texts, they should not be viewed as historical in the contemporary sense. Many of these texts do contain the raw materials for a modern historian researching the history of ancient Israel from the time of the conquest through the 6th century BCE or later, but this material can only be teased out using sophisticated and complex tools. This is because these various biblical historians each wrote accounts, sometimes using sources, to illustrate particular perspectives concerning the relationship between God and Israel. These accounts did not remain stagnant, but were changed by later tradents, authors and editors, who revised them in accordance with their beliefs. It is these religious and religio-political perspectives that we must try to appreciate as we study these books; if we read them as we read modern historical accounts, we will misunderstand these texts in the most fundamental way. Thus, given that prophets frequently are depicted as the vehicles of religious and religio-political perspectives, "the former prophets" is a suitable name for the first part of this collection.

The Latter Prophets and Their Order

THE BOOKS OF ISAIAH, JEREMIAH, EZEKIEL, AND THE TWELVE are fundamentally different from the previous four books: With the exception of Jonah in the Twelve, they all contain collections of oracles attributed to various prophets, who spoke these oracles publicly to the Israelites. These contrast with the prophets described in the Former Prophets, whose mission was largely private, mostly to kings, and whose prestige was often established through performing unusual ("magical") actions (see esp. Elijah and Elisha, 1 Kings chs 17–19, 21; 2 Kings chs 1–9) rather than through speaking the divine word in elevated rhetorical speeches.

In contrast to the Torah, there is some debate about how these four latter prophetic books should be ordered. The typical manuscript order of the first three, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, reflects chronological ordering. (First) Isaiah was active mostly in the later 8th century, Jeremiah prophesied in the late 7th through the early 6th century, while Ezekiel spoke in the Babylonian exile in the 6th century. The Twelve is then placed last as reflecting prophets working in a diversity of time periods; the latest prophets (Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi) are later than Ezekiel, reflecting the return from exile. A different order is noted in the Babylonian Talmud (b. B. Bat. 14b): Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Isaiah, the Twelve. This is explained in terms of offering thematic continuity: The pessimistic Jeremiah follows the destruction noted at the end of Kings, and this is followed by Ezekiel, which opens with destruction and finishes with consolation.

The Nature and Composition of the Prophetic Books

THE PROPHETIC BOOKS ARE UNUSUAL and complex compositions. While the books undoubtedly do preserve authentic words of the prophets in question, we should not think of the prophetic books simply as transcriptions of the words of prophets. Although much remains unknown about the composition of the prophetic books, it is possible to reconstruct a general picture. Scholars generally agree that the poetic materials of most of the prophetic books originated as oral pronouncements by the prophet to a public audience. These oral sayings were subsequently written down, perhaps by the prophet or a disciple. Various circumstances led to the compilation of these original written collections. A reference in Isaiah suggests that oracles might be written down as a form of authentication (Isa. 30.8). The book of Jeremiah describes a situation in which Jeremiah, having been banned from speaking publicly in the Temple, had his assistant Baruch write down a selection of his prophetic words so that they could be taken into the Temple and read to the people (Jer. 36.5–6). When King Jehoiakim destroyed the scroll, Jeremiah had Baruch write out another copy, to which they added additional material (Jer. 36.27–32). This collection may have formed the nucleus of the book of Jeremiah. (Unlike most of the other prophetic books, Ezekiel may have been composed as a written document from the beginning.) It is unclear if what was written was identical to what the prophet recited, or if the prophet or his disciples even at this earliest stage introduced changes, reflecting the difference between the oral form of a publicly recited oracle versus the written form of a scroll.

Once small collections of prophetic oracles and pronouncements were made, they were subject to further editing, rearranging, annotating, and expansion. Like other biblical texts, these prophetic works did not fossilize. In some cases narratives about the prophet were added; these are both autobiographical (e.g., Isa. chs 6, 8; Jer. 1.4–19; 13.1–11; Hos. chs 1–2; Amos 7.1–7) and biographical (e.g., Isa. chs 7, 36–39; Jer. chs 26, 36–44; Hos. ch 3; Amos 7.10–17). The occasions for such editorial activity will have differed, but national crises may have prompted some of this process. Most likely, written collections of the oracles of Amos and Hosea, which were originally addressed to the Northern Kingdom (Israel) were brought to Judah after the fall of the Northern Kingdom in 722 BCE, and edited and circulated there (see Amos 1.1–2 n.). Isaiah of Jerusalem seems to have knowledge of Amos's oracles, and Jeremiah is unquestionably influenced by Hosea. Many of the prophetic books originating before the fall of Judah to the Babylonians in 586 BCE show evidence of editorial additions and reorganizations that reflect the circumstances of exilic and postex-ilic times. The book of Amos, for example, now includes material that presupposes the fall of Judah (9.11–15). The most dramatic example of the expansion and reworking of prophetic materials is the book of Isaiah. Although it contains extensive material from the 8th-century prophet, chs 40–66 clearly reflect the situation of the Babylonian exile and the subsequent period of the restoration of the Judean community after the exile. Yet even though the book contains materials dating from several centuries, it is unified by a number of motifs, themes, and topics that recur throughout the work.

The complex activity of preserving and developing the prophetic oracle collections reflects a conviction that a prophet's words were not only significant for the circumstance in which they were originally pronounced but potentially relevant for later ones as well. (This notion, which became more significant in the exilic and postexilic period, is very well established in the Dead Sea Scrolls and in later rabbinic literature.) At the same time, the freedom with which later generations could rework the prophetic oracles indicates that the prophets' words did not at first possess the kind of fixed authority that is later associated with canonical Scripture. Although the processes by which the prophetic books came to assume a relatively final form and canonical status are difficult to trace, this probably occurred during the Persian and early Hellenistic periods (the 5th through the 3rd centuries BCE). Most likely, during this time scribal editors added the superscriptions that introduce most of the books, indicating the identity of the prophet (name, father's name, and occasionally other information) and often the kings of Israel or Judah during whose reigns the prophets were active (e.g., Isa. 1.1; Jer. 1.1–3; Hos. 1.1). In addition to editorial additions to the individual prophetic books, the smaller prophetic books (Hosea through Malachi) were arranged and edited to form a group known as "the book of the Twelve," which was copied on a single scroll. By the beginning of the 2nd century BCE Ben Sirach refers to these prophets as "the twelve" (Sir. 49.10). The number twelve is symbolic of the twelve sons of Jacob and the twelve tribes of Israel, and considerable editorial work was required to organize these prophetic materials into a grouping of twelve. In fact, the book of Zechariah consists of three separate collections (chs 1–8, 9–11, 12–14) grouped together editorially. Only the first of these comes from the prophet Zechariah, whereas the other two are anonymous. The final book in the collection, Malachi, is also an anonymous piece, since "Malachi" is not a personal name but a phrase meaning "my messenger," picked up from 3.1 to serve as the name of the prophet in the superscription.

The Phenomenon of Prophecy

THE PHENOMENON OF PROPHECY was widespread in the ancient Near East, and many important themes and genres familiar from biblical prophecy have parallels there. It should be viewed as part of a larger belief in that area that the deity's will is transparent in the world. This may happen through omen interpretation, as was typical in Mesopotamia, or through prophecy, which seems to have been the preferred method in Israel.

Many popular perceptions of biblical prophecy are incorrect. The prophets were not predominantly forecasters of the future, ancient fortune-tellers. Rather, they had a crucial role in critiquing and trying to change society. This could be accomplished through foretelling the future, but most often these predictions were contingent upon the nation's behavior. Not all prophets, however, were interested in changing the people's conduct—biblical religion sometimes suggested that Israel had gone too far, and must be punished (see esp. Jer. ch 25). In such cases, the main role of the prophet was to assure the nation that their punishment, which derived from God, was deserved.

It is natural to read the prophets, which canonically follow the Torah, in relation to this previous canonical body of writing. Jewish tradition thus typically reads the prophets as interpreters of the Torah, whose role was to make sure that the people adhered to the Torah. Protestant tradition, on the other hand, often emphasized the apparently antinomian tendencies in such prophecies as Isaiah 1.10–20 or Amos 5.21–25. Neither of these views is correct from a scholarly perspective. Critical biblical scholarship has ascertained that the Torah and Prophets developed simultaneously from a chronological perspective; thus, not all prophets knew all the Torah since the Torah had not yet been canonized by the time that most of the prophets were active. The Protestant view is problematic because it ignores the fact that certain prophetic oracles are very interested in punctilious performance of particular ritual laws (see esp. Jer. 17.19–27). Furthermore, a close reading of prophets such as Isaiah or Amos suggests that they are not anti-law or anti-Temple, but are rhetorically emphasizing that ritual behavior alone, without proper moral behavior, is insufficient to assure divine blessing.

Many more prophets were active in ancient Israel and Judah than those whose work is represented in the prophetic books of the Bible, and their activities were more varied than these writings suggest. The books of Samuel and Kings provide important additional information. Since our sources are limited, it is difficult to reconstruct the history of prophecy. Some of the features are clear, however. The prophet was essentially an intermediary between God and the people, and one of the major functions was that of messenger (Heb mal'akh). Often prophets introduced their communications with a version of the formula typically used by messengers, "thus says the LORD." But prophets might also carry inquiries from the people to God or make intercession on behalf of the people. In contrast to the priesthood, which was exclusively male, both women and men could be prophets. Women prophets included Deborah (Judg. 4.4) and Huldah (2 Kings 22.14); see also Joel 3.1. Additional aspects of the prophetic role are suggested by the various terms used to identify them. In addition to "prophet" (Heb navi', perhaps meaning "one who is called"), the prophets are identified as seers (Heb ro'eh), visionaries (Heb hozeh), and holy men (Heb 'ish 'elohim, lit. "man of God"). It is uncertain if these different titles reflect different types of prophets.

The religious phenomenon of Israelite prophecy can be traced for more than a thousand years, from the premonarchical period to the turn of the era. As one would expect, over such a long period of time the nature and function of prophecy altered in response to changing historical, social, and religious circumstances. Four periods define the major epochs of prophecy: the early monarchical period (11th through 9th centuries), the Assyrian ian crisis (8th century), the Babylonian crisis (late 7th through early 6th centuries), and the postexilic restoration (mid-6th through mid-5th centuries).

In the earliest period prophets may have been local or itinerant holy men and women who were revered for their special religious powers and who might be consulted for a variety of private inquiries, from locating lost property (1 Sam. 9.1–10) to learning whether a sick child would live or die (1 Kings 14.1–18). Some lived in prophetic communities which cultivated ecstatic forms of religious experience (1 Sam. 19.18–24; 2 Kings 6.1–7); these are called “sons of (the) prophets” in the sense of members of prophetic guilds. Prophets also had the public function of declaring God’s will concerning whether the people should go to war (Judg. 4.4–10). The emergence of monarchy in ancient Israel may have changed aspects of the prophets’ role. Prophets appear as king-makers and king-breakers, as they announce that God has designated an individual to become king or has rejected a reigning king (1 Sam. 10.1; 15.23; 1 Kings 11.29–39; 14.1–18). Though prophets continued their role in advising about matters of war (1 Kings ch 22), they also served as critics of the king in religious and social affairs. The consolidation of royal power and the foreign religious practices introduced through royal marriages often threatened older tribal institutions and values. The conflict between Elijah, the prophet, and Ahab and Jezebel, the king and queen, illustrates these tensions between prophet and king (1 Kings chs 18–21).

Prophecy appears to have undergone a dramatic change during the 8th century, although this impression may be affected by the change in the nature of the sources of information. From the 8th century onward collections of prophetic oracles are preserved, yet, with the exception of Jeremiah, few extended narratives about prophets exist. It does appear, however, that in this period prophets began to function less as private counselors and critics of kings and more as public figures who influenced opinion through their pronouncements in the Temple courts and in other public places. Prophets of the 8th century (Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, Micah) interpreted international affairs, critiqued complacent religious practices, and condemned the abuses of social justice that accompanied the increasing urbanization and centralization of state power characteristic of the 8th century. The prophetic careers of Hosea, Micah, and Isaiah took place in the shadow of the expansionist Assyrian empire, which eventually put an end to the Northern Kingdom of Israel and subjected Judah to the condition of vassalage. They interpreted these events, however, in terms of the judgment of the LORD, not simply as the success of a powerful Assyrian empire. This perspective allowed Isaiah, for example, to anticipate the ultimate downfall of Assyria because of its overweening arrogance.

The third major period of prophecy occurred during the Babylonian crisis. The prophet Nahum celebrated the defeat of Assyria (612–609 BCE), but the excitement he expressed was soon turned to confusion as Babylonia succeeded Assyria as the dominant empire (see the introduction and notes to Habakkuk and the essay “Historical and Geographical Background,” pp. 2048–62). Jeremiah’s prophetic career (ca. 627–586) spanned the time from the decline of Assyria through the Babylonian overlordship of Judah, to the revolt and destruction of Judah and the exile of a portion of its population. Although it is difficult to correlate many of his poetic oracles with specific events in this period, the narratives about Jeremiah give a vivid picture of a nation and its leadership deeply conflicted about what political course to follow and the religious significance of the choices that were forced upon it. Even the prophetic community was bitterly divided and gave contradictory advice to the king concerning the will of the LORD (Jer. chs 26–29, 36–44). Overlapping the career of Jeremiah, the prophet Ezekiel (active 593–ca. 571 BCE) was among the Judeans exiled to Babylonia after the revolt of 597 BCE, a decade before the final revolt and the destruction of Jerusalem. Ezekiel's prophetic work was, first, to persuade the exiled Judeans of the inevitability of Jerusalem's destruction, and to justify this event. Following the fall of the city, he began to articulate the theological grounds for conceiving a possible future, including a return of the exiles and a rebuilding of the destroyed Temple. In contrast to most of the prophets who preceded him, Ezekiel drew strongly on Priestly traditions for his categories of thought, forms of speech, and evocative symbols.

The defeat of the Babylonian empire by the Persian king Cyrus in 539 BCE altered political conditions dramatically. Although Judah did not regain its independence but became a part of the Persian empire, Cyrus and his successors authorized the rebuilding of the Temple and of Jerusalem, allowing members of the exiled community in Babylonia who so desired to return to Judah. Thus the prophetic task during this period largely concerned issues of the restoration of the community and its institutions in a context significantly different from that which prevailed during the Israelite and Judean monarchy. The anonymous prophet whose work is found in Isa. chs 40–55 (often called "Second Isaiah") addressed the Babylonian exiles just at the time that Cyrus was engaged in the conquest of Babylonia. Second Isaiah had to persuade the exilic community that unfolding events represented God's action in history, to interpret the significance of Cyrus (God's "anointed" who would rebuild Jerusalem [44.28–45.1]), and to encourage the exiles to return to Jerusalem. The process of rebuilding the Temple (520–515 BCE) provides the context for the prophets Haggai and Zechariah. Zechariah's work in particular suggests this was a time of expectation that perhaps the monarchy might be restored, an event that did not occur. Issues concerning reorganization of the Judean community and tensions regarding economic justice, institutional corruption, and the boundaries of the community are variously reflected in Zechariah, Isa. chs 56–66, and Malachi, prophets who were active in roughly the period 525–475 BCE.

Although prophets in all periods might speak of the dramatic intervention of God in historical events and the consequent transformation of the conditions of life, this type of language seems to have become more common and more vivid in the postexilic prophets (e.g., Isa. chs 56–66, Zechariah, Malachi, Joel, and postexilic additions to earlier prophetic books, such as Isa. chs 24–27). Some of the passages anticipate a war or other cataclysmic event of cosmic proportions that will precede a time of deliverance, peace, and virtual re-creation of the world, themes associated with apocalypticism. Such imagery and the expectations it expresses suggest to some scholars that apocalypticism emerges out of post-exilic prophecy. Though it is true that apocalyptic literature is influenced by these prophetic writings and their imagery, apocalyptic cannot simply be understood as an outgrowth of the phenomenon of prophecy.

The book of Daniel, a prophetic book which is found in the Kethuvim (in Christian Bibles it is included among the prophets), is the only book in the Hebrew Bible that could be called an apocalypse. In the latter part of the book, Daniel is the recipient of visions which disclose the future. These vision reports do bear significant similarities to those found in Ezekiel and especially in Zechariah, though their almost allegorical style is quite different. Similarly, although general claims about God's foreknowledge of historical events can be found in Second Isaiah, Daniel's representation of history as predetermined both with respect to its epochal structure and its specific events is strikingly different from the representation of history by the prophets. A clue to the relationship of apocalyptic to prophecy may be found in Dan. ch 9, where Daniel is presented as studying the book of Jeremiah and receiving an angelic interpretation of its significance. As suggested by the representation of Daniel as a technically trained sage, the authors of apocalyptic books, many of which were produced in the Hellenistic period, were perhaps themselves learned scribes who studied and appropriated aspects of the prophetic tradition and combined them with other influences in their attempts to understand the nature of the cosmos and the course of history. The movement from receiving the prophetic word directly, as in the first three periods, to receiving it via an intermediary angel in the fourth period, and of understanding what God wants by studying earlier prophetic texts, would ultimately become responsible for the perception among many in the Second Temple period that prophecy as a living, core institution had died. With the canonization of God's revelation in the form of the written books of the Bible, new revelations through prophets became superfluous. Prophecy was gradually replaced by scriptural study and interpretation, and prophets by scribes, sages, and rabbis.

[MARC ZVI BRETTLER]

Joshua

THE BOOK OF JOSHUA, which derives its title from the name of its chief character, begins after the death of Moses (Deut. ch 34) and continues until the death and burial of Joshua (Josh. 24.29–30). Its narratives recount how Joshua leads the people of Israel across the Jordan River into the land promised to the ancestors, takes possession of that land, divides it among the tribes, and leads them in swearing allegiance to the covenant. Many of these narratives, such as the story of Rahab and the spies and the conquest of Jericho, are well known; others, such as the treaty with the Gibeonites and the land grant to Achsah, are more obscure. Even less familiar are other parts of Joshua: lists of tribal towns and boundaries, and descriptions of rituals.

As the first biblical book following the Torah, Joshua has many features in common with some of those books, especially Deuteronomy. Some passages are nearly direct quotations of texts from Deuteronomy. In addition, just as Deuteronomy is cast as a series of hortatory speeches by Moses, Joshua is replete with declamatory speeches—by Joshua, the leaders, Rahab, the people, and even God. As in Deuteronomy, the focus on the covenant is central to Joshua, with obedience to the covenant a prerequisite for God’s blessings.

These similarities and the fact that the land promise of Genesis is only fulfilled in Joshua led many scholars in the 19th and early 20th centuries to speak of the Hexateuch, the first six books of the Bible, comprising Genesis through Joshua. Even more widely accepted now is the idea that, because Deuteronomic features are found throughout the Former Prophets (Joshua to 2 Kings), Joshua in its final form is the result of the compilation of a comprehensive historical work called the Deuteronomistic History, which begins in Deuteronomy and ends in 2 Kings. Such a work might have initially taken shape in the late 7th century BCE, when King Josiah is said to have found a “scroll of the Teaching” and subsequently instituted reforms that reflect Deuteronomic rules and perspectives (see 2 Kings chs 22–23). Because the last events of this “history” take place during the exile, it probably received a final editing in the 6th century BCE. This sequence of redactions may explain some of the duplications and inconsistencies of the book.

Although the completed book may date to the middle of the first millennium BCE, some of its elements may be much older. It clearly draws on materials—such as town lists, battle stories, and etiologies—that are similar to ancient historiographic and folkloristic traditions known from other ancient Near Eastern cultures of the second and first millennia BCE. In addition, it contains twelve personal names of non-Israelites (including Rahab, Jabin, and Adoni-zedek), and these names are attested in Near Eastern documents dating from or before the period of early Israel.

The reputation of Joshua—the leader and the book—usually is based on the belief that the land was entirely conquered by Israelites in the early post-Mosaic period. There are two problems with this view of the narrative, however. First, the book's idea of total acquisition of the land involves carrying out the command to annihilate all the inhabitants of the land (see, e.g., 6.21); carrying out this herem, or “proscription,” would have been a project of genocidal proportions. Second, the intense archeological investigation of virtually all of the places mentioned in Joshua that can be identified with current sites reveals no pattern of destruction that can be correlated, in either chronology or location, with the period of early Israel. The moral horror of the first problem may, in fact, be diminished by the historical data provided by the second. That is, the military and destructive aspects of the so-called conquest are probably not entirely historical, but rather are literary-theological constructions to portray the overarching idea of Israelite acquisition of all the land promised to the ancestors. Indeed, most scholars now speak of Israelite settlement in the land, rather than of conquest, especially because archeology has also shown that earliest Israel consisted of scores of new villages—settlements of previously unoccupied territory in the central highlands—rather than rebuilt towns on destroyed Canaanite strongholds. In this understanding, the herem is not historical but rather an ideological expression of the divine ownership of the land being transmitted to the Israelites as the rightful heirs to their inheritance (naḥalah) from the LORD. It also emphasizes that the Deuteronomistic authors of Joshua felt that the native population of Canaan posed a serious religious threat, which in theory should be dealt with through annihilation (see also Deut. 7.2; 20.16–18). That the herem was not applied to all these Canaanites is also suggested by references in Joshua and Judges that non-Israelites did indeed survive in the land for generations to come.

The structure of the book is straightforward, with an overall division into two parts: The first twelve chapters present the conquest, and the second twelve describe the apportionment of the land. Within each half there are several units. The conquest part contains an elaborate account of crossing the Jordan (chs 1–5), followed by military narratives (chs 6–12). The latter focus mainly on the center of the country (chs 6–9), giving only cursory attention to the south (ch 10) and the north (half of ch 11). The apportionment consists of a unit delineating tribal lands (chs 13–21) followed by an epilogue of closing speeches and ceremonies (chs 22–24).

The religious aspects of the book, aside from the overall concern with following God's teaching, are manifest in several institutions and ceremonies that appear in Joshua. Circumcision and the Passover sacrifice mark the entry to the land and thereby provide didactic value in emphasizing two traditions, introduced in the Torah, that were to become defining practices of Judaism. Similarly, the important role of the Ark of the Covenant—along with priests, altars, and sacrifices—reflects the integral relationship of the sacral and political in ancient Israelite life. This prominence of the Ark, as the repository of the covenant, foreshadows the centrality of the synagogue Ark ('aron), which serves as the repository of the Torah scrolls in later Jewish tradition.

In its frequent usage of Deuteronomistic forms (e.g., speeches), language, and themes, the book of Joshua reveals its didactic intent rather than its interest in accurately depicting the past for its own sake. Furthermore, the telling of Israel's early "history" is not simply to provide a narrative of claim for the land; it also provides a way to make features of the land itself become signals of the past. For example, the numerous etiologies (origin accounts), many of them connected with stone heaps presumably visible on the ancient landscape of the later authors, provide instructional associations for geographic markers.

The continuity with Deuteronomy, and with the Torah in general, is most striking in the way Joshua mirrors aspects of Moses' leadership. Just as Moses led a miraculous crossing of the parted waters of the Reed Sea, so Joshua leads a miraculous crossing of the divided waters of the Jordan. Both leaders send out spies and apportion the land. The exodus itself is thus replicated, to a certain extent, in the experiences of the Israelites described in Joshua. Perhaps most important, the unity of all Israel, exhorted to act in obedience to the Teaching of the LORD, is emphasized in Joshua as in the Torah. This unity will dissipate in the succeeding biblical books. But it is an ideal, along with the concept of an extensive territorial holding with no foreign enclaves, that dominates the book of Joshua. That Israel falls short of the covenant and territorial ideals is alluded to; but it remains for the rest of the Bible to develop those tensions between the ideal and reality. [CAROL MEYERS]

1 After the death of Moses the servant of the LORD, the LORD said to Joshua son of Nun, Moses' attendant:

²"My servant Moses is dead. Prepare to cross the Jordan, together with all this people, into the land that I am giving to the Israelites. ³Every spot on which your foot treads I give to you, as I promised Moses. ⁴Your territory shall extend from the wilderness and the Lebanon to the Great River, the River Euphrates [on the east]—the whole Hittite country—and up to the Mediterranean^a Sea on the west. ⁵No one shall be able to resist you as long as you live. As I was with Moses, so I will be with you; I will not fail you or forsake you.

⁶"Be strong and resolute, for you shall apportion to this people the land that I swore to their fathers to assign to them. ⁷But you must be very strong and resolute to observe faithfully all the Teaching that My servant Moses enjoined upon you. Do not deviate from it to the right or to the left, that you may be successful wherever you go. ⁸Let not this Book of the Teaching cease from your lips, but recite it day and night, so that you may observe faithfully all that is written in it. Only then will you prosper in your undertakings and only then will you be successful.

1.1–5.12: Preparing to enter the land. 1.1–18: Commissioning Joshua. 1: The announcement of Moses' death connects the book of Joshua to the end of the Torah, for the last chapters of Deuteronomy (32–34) are concerned with the end of Moses' life. The continuity of leadership, originating in the authority of Moses and now manifest in Joshua, was emphasized in the Torah (Num. 27.15–23; Deut. 31.7–8). It was important to rabbinic Judaism as well, as was the connection of the Torah to the subsequent biblical books. Probably for those reasons, the haftarah (prophetic reading) for Simhat Torah at the conclusion of Sukkot, when chs 33–34 of Deuteronomy are read, is Josh. 1.1–18. 2–18: The commission is presented in four speeches, one delivered by God (vv. 2–9), two by Joshua (vv. 10–11,

^a Heb. "Great."

⁹"I charge you: Be strong and resolute; do not be terrified or dismayed, for the LORD your God is with you wherever you go."

¹⁰Joshua thereupon gave orders to the officials of the people: ¹¹"Go through the camp and charge the people thus: Get provisions ready, for in three days' time you are to cross the Jordan, in order to enter and possess the land that the LORD your God is giving you as a possession."

¹²Then Joshua said to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, ¹³"Remember what Moses the servant of the LORD enjoined upon you, when he said: 'The LORD your God is granting you a haven; He has assigned this territory to you.' ¹⁴Let your wives, children, and livestock remain in the land that Moses assigned to you ^aon this side of^a the Jordan; but every one of your fighting men shall go across armed^b in the van of your kinsmen. And you shall assist them ¹⁵until the LORD has given your kinsmen a haven, such as you have, and they too have gained possession of the land that the LORD your God has assigned to them. Then you may return to the land on the east side of the Jordan, which Moses the servant of the LORD assigned to you as your possession, and you may possess it."

a-a Lit. "across."

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

12–15), and one by the people (vv. 16–18). 2–9: The first speech introduces major themes of the book: crossing the Jordan, acquiring the territory promised to Moses, apportioning the land to the people, and obeying God's teaching as a requisite for success and prosperity. 2–5: The full extent of the land runs from the Jordan on the east to the Mediterranean Sea on the west, from the Lebanon in the northwest and the Great River, the River Euphrates, in the northeast to the wilderness in the south. These borders are virtually the same as in the description given by Moses in Deut. 11.24–25. These are ideal borders only, and likely do not refect the land held by Israel either in this period, or in some later time. 2: People . . . land is a juxtaposition that is central to the covenant idea, depicted as originating in the ancestral period and becoming actualized in the era of Joshua. 4: The whole Hittite country does not appear in the parallel description of the land in Deut. 11 or in the Septuagint, the earliest translation of the Bible. It may therefore be a later addition, referring to northern Aram. 5: With Moses . . . with you emphasizes God's presence, essential for success. 6: The military exhortation to be strong and resolute, which occurs three times in this section and again at the end of ch 1, echoes the language of Deut. 31.6, 7, 23, and also appears in Josh. 10.25. The Vilna Gaon (Elijah ben Solomon Zalman of Vilna, an 18th-century Lithuanian rabbi and biblical commentator) considered "strong" to refer to the body and "resolute" to the emotions, and together they have come to signify the courage necessary for all difficult endeavors.

7–9: Daily reflections on God's teaching, along with courage, are essential for successful occupation of the land. Many consider these verses as an addition, which reinterprets the earlier idea of strength through military victory as strength through Torah study and obedience. 7: Teaching is the translation here of Heb "torah." It is thus understood to be broader than legislation, whereas Christian translations use "law." Here, as in many places in the Bible, it is unclear if "torah" should be translated as the canonized Torah, or as a set of precanonical "teachings."

8: Book denotes that God's teachings are in written form, though in this period they would have been on a scroll rather than in a book of bound pages (cf. Exod. 24.3–7). Language similar to this verse is also found in Ps. 1.2–3. The opening chapters of Nevi'im and Kethuvim thus both contain references to "torah," emphasizing the significance of Torah within the canon. 10–11: Joshua gives his first orders. 11: Three days may denote a ritual period before a significant event and is not always to be taken literally (e.g., Gen. 40.13, 19, 20; Exod. 3.18; 19.11). 12–15: Joshua's second speech is directed to the two-and-a-half Transjordanian tribes. The other nine-and-a-half tribes have helped them take their territory; now they are to cross the Jordan to help those tribes acquire their land (cf. Num. ch 32; Deut. 3.12–20). 14: Wives, children, and livestock are the three parts of a household that are taken as booty in warfare (cf. Deut. 20.14). Mention of them is the first indication that taking the land will involve warfare. The term fighting men, used several times (8.3; 10.7) in ¹⁶They answered Joshua, "We will do everything you have commanded us and we will go wherever you send us. ¹⁷We will obey you just as we obeyed Moses; let but the LORD your God be with you as He was with Moses! ¹⁸Any man who flouts your commands and does not obey every order you give him shall be put to death. Only be strong and resolute!"

2 Joshua son of Nun secretly sent two spies from Shittim, saying, "Go, reconnoiter the region of Jericho." So they set out, and they came to the house of a harlot named Rahab and lodged there. ²The king of Jericho was told, "Some men have come here tonight, Israelites, to spy out the country." ³The king of Jericho thereupon sent orders to Rahab: "Produce the men who came to you and entered your house, for they have come to spy out the whole country." ⁴The woman, however, had taken the two men and hidden them. "It is true," she said, "the men did come to me, but I didn't know where they were from. ⁵And at dark, when the gate was about to be closed, the men left; and I don't know where the men went. Quick, go after them, for you can overtake them."—⁶Now she had taken them up to the roof and hidden them under some stalks of flax which she had lying on the roof.—⁷So the men pursued them in the direction of the Jordan down to the fords; and no sooner had the pursuers gone out than the gate was shut behind them.

⁸^aThe spies^a had not yet gone to sleep when she came up to them on the roof. ⁹She said to the men, "I know that the LORD has given the country to you, because dread of you has fallen upon us, and all the inhabitants of the land are quaking before you. ¹⁰For we have heard how the LORD dried up the waters of the Sea of Reeds for you when you left Egypt, and what you did to Sihon and Og, the two Amorite kings across the Jordan, whom you doomed.^b ¹¹When we heard about it, we lost heart, and no man had any more spirit left because of you; for the LORD your God is the only God in heaven above and on earth

a-a Heb. "They."

b I.e., placed under herem, which meant the annihilation of the inhabitants. Cf. Deut. 2.34 ff.

Joshua to refer to Israelite warriors, likewise anticipates military encounters. 16–18: The Transjordanian tribes deliver the final speech in ch 1, affirming Joshua as the authoritative successor to Moses.

2.1–24: Reconnaissance: the spies and Rahab. The story of the capture of Jericho in ch 6 is anticipated by the narrative of ch 2, in which two spies are sent to investigate the area west of the Jordan. In commissioning this reconnaissance, Joshua reflects the actions of his predecessor Moses, who had earlier sent out spies, according to Num. ch 13. This evidence for the continuity of leadership was important in Jewish tradition and is marked by the fact that the haftarah for Shelah-Lekha (Num. chs 13–15) is Josh. ch 2. 1: Shittim is the Transjordanian camp of the Israelites and also the setting of the problematic sexual encounter between the Israelites and the Moabite women (Num. 25.1). The mention of Shittim is a fitting introduction to the reconnaissance narrative because of the sexual occupation of the woman who shelters the spies. 2: Rahab, a harlot of Jericho, is mentioned by name in ch 2 (and again in 6.17, 23, 25), while the spies are not named. The idea of a prostitute as the hero of the narrative was troubling to the Rabbis. Thus she is said (Sifre Num., 78; Zuta., 75) to have become a pious convert because of her encounter with the spies; she then marries Joshua and becomes the ancestor of nine prophets, including Huldah. In Christian tradition she is reckoned as an ancestor of Jesus (Matt. 1.5) and as an example of living by faith (Hebrews 11.31). An alternate solution, based on a wordplay with "zonah," "harlot"—already found in the Targum and some medieval Jewish commentators—is the claim that Rahab was an innkeeper, who provided food ("mazon"). 2: Jericho, identified as Tel es-Sultan, is situated about 8 km (five miles) west of the Jordan. Extensive archeological investigations of the site indicate that it was uninhabited at the time of the Israelite settlement in the land; it had probably been destroyed several centuries earlier. 6: Flax, like other agricultural products, was laid out to dry on the roof. The flat roofs of ancient dwellings were often used for such food-processing activities. 9–13: In her speech to the spies, Rahab is depicted as having familiarity with the exodus and the battle with the Amorite kings Sihon and Og (Num. ch 21). She also gives voice to what will be the below. ¹²Now, since I have shown loyalty to you, swear to me by the LORD that you in turn will show loyalty to my family. Provide me with a reliable sign ¹³that you will spare the lives of my father and mother, my brothers and sisters, and all who belong to them, and save us from death." ¹⁴The men answered her, "Our persons are pledged for yours, even to death! If you do not disclose this mission of ours, we will show you true loyalty when the LORD gives us the land."

¹⁵She let them down by a rope through the window—for her dwelling was at the outer side of the city wall and she lived in the actual wall. ¹⁶She said to them, "Make for the hills, so that the pursuers may not come upon you. Stay there in hiding three days, until the pursuers return; then go your way."

¹⁷But the men warned her, "We will be released from this oath which you have made us take ¹⁸[unless,] when we invade the country, you tie this length of crimson cord to the window through which you let us down. Bring your father, your mother, your brothers, and all your family together in your house; ¹⁹and if anyone ventures outside the doors of your house, his blood will be on his head, and we shall be clear. But if a hand is laid on anyone who remains in the house with you, his blood shall be on our heads. ²⁰And if you disclose this mission of ours, we shall likewise be released from the oath which you made us take." ²¹She replied, "Let it be as you say."

She sent them on their way, and they left; and she tied the crimson cord to the window.

²²They went straight to the hills and stayed there three days, until the pursuers turned back. And so the pursuers, searching all along the road, did not find them.

²³Then the two men came down again from the hills and crossed over. They came to Joshua son of Nun and reported to him all that had happened to them. ²⁴They said to Joshua, "The LORD has delivered the whole land into our power; in fact, all the inhabitants of the land are quaking before us."

3 Early next morning, Joshua and all the Israelites set out from Shittim and marched to the Jordan. They did not cross immediately, but spent the night there. ²Three characteristic enemy response to the Israelites: we have heard . . . we lost heart (see 5.1). Clearly, as in other ancient historical writing, the narrator is speaking by inserting these words into her mouth.

10: The term doomed, which occurs fourteen times in Joshua in verbal form, appears for the first time here. It refers to the "herem," or utter destruction of the enemy. The noun form, translated "proscribed," also is used frequently (see 6.17–18). 11: The designation of the LORD as the only God in heaven above and on earth below is rare in the Bible. Calling the LORD the only deity is usually associated with 6th-century BCE prophecy (see Isa. 45.18). 14–22: The spies pledge loyalty to Rahab, but with conditions that minimize the danger to them. In contrast, Rahab's loyalty to them is absolute; it involves risks and is thus heroic.

15: Dwelling . . . in the actual wall refers to a type of fortification called a casemate wall, one constructed of two separate walls with a space between, which could be left empty or be filled with rubble. It therefore differed from a solid wall by having rooms—often living quarters—between its outer and inner faces. 16: Make for the hills, head westward, where there would be trees and uneven terrain in which the spies might hide.

18: The crimson cord is identified in Jewish tradition with the scarlet thread used to mark the elder of Tamar's twin sons (Gen. 38.28). Rahab's family will be spared because the house will be marked by a red cord, just as the Israelites were spared from the plague of the first-born by marking their homes with red blood (Exod. 12.7, 13).

23–24: The spies report back to Joshua, relying on Rahab's words rather than on their direct observations, that the land would be theirs to take. 23: The words Joshua son of Nun appear at the end of the spy story as at the beginning (v. 1), thus defining the Rahab narrative as a literary unit. 24: Delivered . . . into our power, lit. "given . . . into our hands," is a phrase used in the ancient Near East to denote that a god is granting victory over enemies.

3.1–5.1: Crossing the Jordan. The story of crossing into the land west of the Jordan is told in several overlapping units (3.1–17; 4.1–9; 4.10–14; 4.15–18; 4.19–5.1), with some of the constituent events anticipated and recounted more than once. The resulting complex narrative may be the result of a redactor days later, the officials went through the camp ³and charged the people as follows: "When you see the Ark of the Covenant of the LORD your God being borne by the levitical priests, you shall move forward. Follow it—⁴but keep a distance of some two thousand cubits from it, never coming any closer to it—so that you may know by what route to march, since it is a road you have not traveled before." ⁵And Joshua said to the people, "Purify yourselves,^a for tomorrow the LORD will perform wonders in your midst."

⁶Then Joshua ordered the priests, "Take up the Ark of the Covenant and advance to the head of the people." And they took up the Ark of the Covenant and marched at the head of the people.

⁷The LORD said to Joshua, "This day, for the first time, I will exalt you in the sight of all Israel, so that they shall know that I will be with you as I was with Moses. ⁸For your part, command the priests who carry the Ark of the Covenant as follows: When you reach the edge of the waters of the Jordan, make a halt in the Jordan."

⁹And Joshua said to the Israelites, "Come closer and listen to the words of the LORD your God. ¹⁰By this," Joshua continued, "you shall know that a living God is among you, and that He will dispossess for you the Canaanites, Hittites, Hivites, Perizzites, Girgashites, Amorites, and Jebusites: ¹¹the Ark of the Covenant of the Sovereign of all the earth is advancing before you into the Jordan. ¹²Now select twelve men from the tribes of Israel, one man from each tribe. ¹³When the feet of the priests bearing the Ark of the LORD, the Sovereign of all the earth, come to rest in the waters of the Jordan, the waters of the Jordan—the water coming from upstream—will be cut off and will stand in a single heap."

¹⁴When the people set out from their encampment to cross the Jordan, the priests bearing the Ark of the Cove-

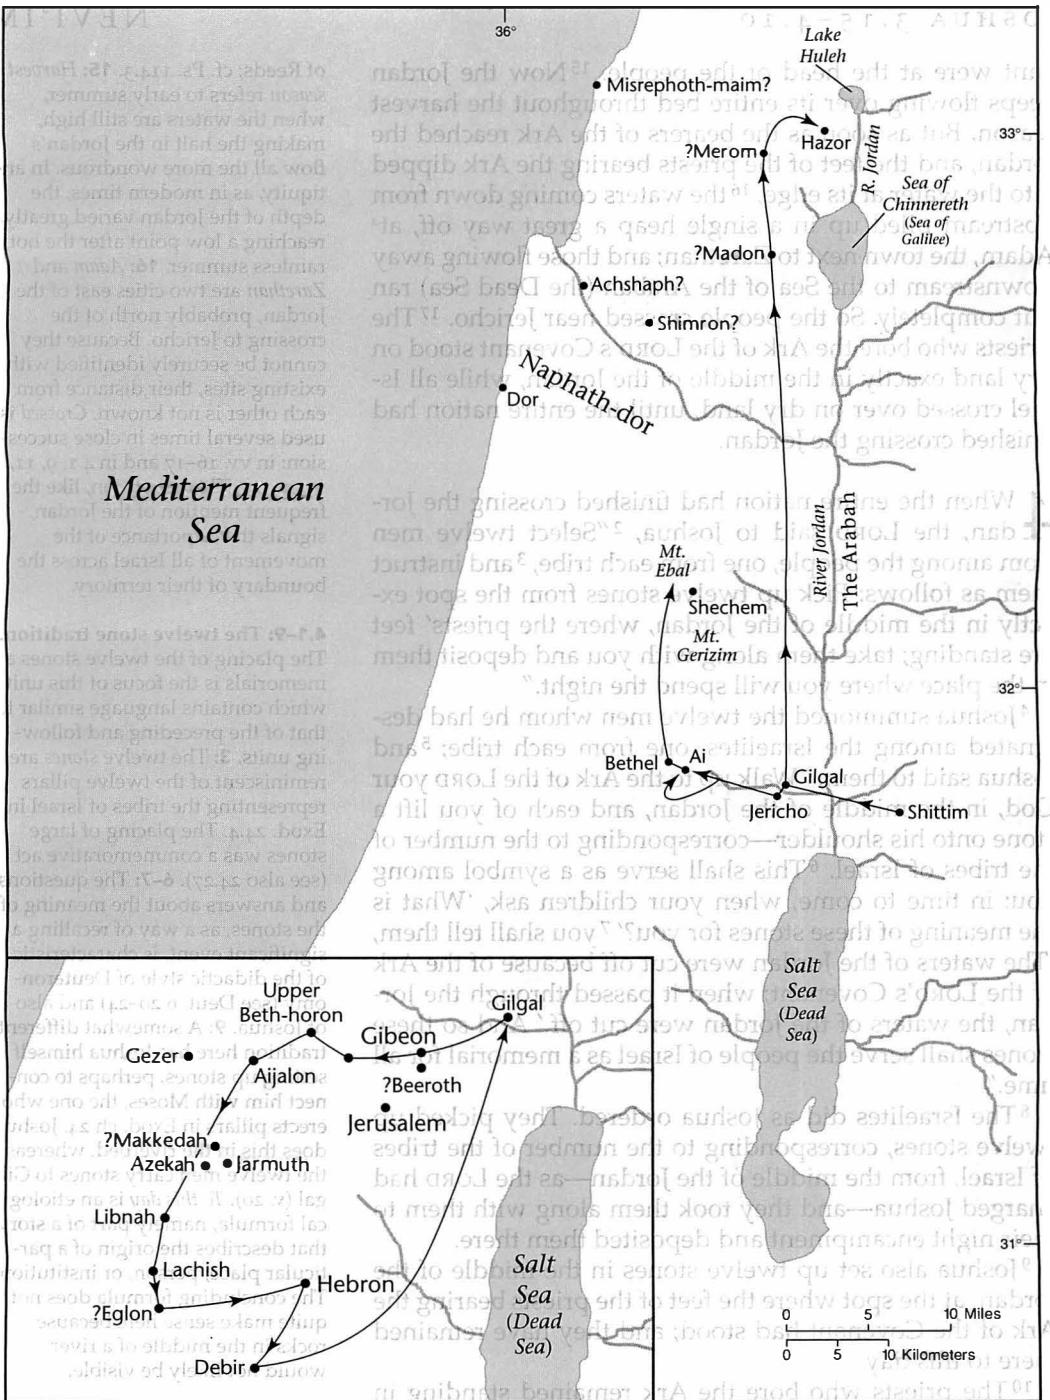

a See Exod. 19.10, 15.

using different sources and being unwilling to eliminate repetitive components.

3.1-17: The Ark and the people cross. The first description of the crossing introduces the religious aspects of the event, represented by the actions of the priests as bearers of the Ark of the Covenant. 1: Early next morning, a phrase meaning that diligent activity is about to begin, recurs at 6.12; 7.16;

8.10. It serves as a formula proclaiming that Joshua is carrying out God's instructions. The Jordan symbolizes all the borders of the promised land, and crossing a river into Israel's territory echoes the people's passage through water (the Reed Sea) under the leadership of Moses at the outset of the journey. This strengthens the depiction of Joshua as a new Moses, with great authority. 2: Connects with 1.11. 3: The Ark of the Covenant served as a container for the Book of Teaching according to Deut. 31.26. As the potent physical symbol of God's presence among the people, it could be protective in battle (see Num. 10.33-35; 1 Sam. 4.3-5). The levitical priests, as bearers of the Ark, may have been a militant group in early Israel (cf. Gen. 49.5-7). 4: Two thousand cubits, about 1,000 m (.625 mile) was the distance needed to separate the people from the powerful sanctity of the Ark. 5: Purify yourselves connotes ritual sanctity, befitting God's presence. The preparations are faintly reminiscent of the preparations for the revelation at Sinai (Exod. 19.9-15). 7: The statement the LORD said to Joshua occurs repeatedly in chs 1-6, indicating that Joshua fully succeeds Moses; and I will be with you resumes the promise of the commission in 1.5. 8: The priests halt in the Jordan; this image recurs in vv. 13, 15, 17 and in 4.9-10. 10: A living God is archaic language, perhaps drawn from the identification of the LORD with the Canaanite deity El. It expresses the vitality of God. Canaanites . . . Jebusites is a stereotyped listing of the existing population of the land. Similar lists, with varying components, appear frequently in the Bible, often totaling seven groups, thereby signaling the totality of non-Israelite groups (because seven is a symbolic number, representing completeness). Not all of these names can be identified, but the plurality of groups itself may indicate ethnic diversity in the population of Canaan. 12: Twelve men indicates the tribal components of the unified group—all Israel—that figures prominently in Joshua; it anticipates the ceremonial acts of 4.1-9, 20. 13: Stand, in reference to the miraculous piling up of water, is also used for the miraculous halt of the sun's course in 10.13. Heap is an unusual term, used elsewhere in the Bible only in references to the parting of the Sea of Reeds (Exod. 15.8; cf. Ps. 78.13). The crossing of the Jordan is thus made parallel to the crossing of the Sea

The conquest of Canaan according to the book of Joshua

nant were at the head of the people. ¹⁵Now the Jordan keeps flowing over its entire bed throughout the harvest season. But as soon as the bearers of the Ark reached the Jordan, and the feet of the priests bearing the Ark dipped into the water at its edge, ¹⁶the waters coming down from upstream piled up in a single heap a great way off, at^a Adam, the town next to Zarethan; and those flowing away downstream to the Sea of the Arabah (the Dead Sea) ran out completely. So the people crossed near Jericho. ¹⁷The priests who bore the Ark of the LORD's Covenant stood on dry land exactly in the middle of the Jordan, while all Israel crossed over on dry land, until the entire nation had finished crossing the Jordan.

4 When the entire nation had finished crossing the Jordan, the LORD said to Joshua, ²"Select twelve men from among the people, one from each tribe, ³and instruct them as follows: Pick up twelve stones from the spot exactly in the middle of the Jordan, where the priests' feet are standing; take them along with you and deposit them in the place where you will spend the night."

⁴Joshua summoned the twelve men whom he had designated among the Israelites, one from each tribe; ⁵and Joshua said to them, "Walk up to the Ark of the LORD your God, in the middle of the Jordan, and each of you lift a stone onto his shoulder—corresponding to the number of the tribes of Israel. ⁶This shall serve as a symbol among you: in time to come, when your children ask, 'What is the meaning of these stones for you?' ⁷you shall tell them, 'The waters of the Jordan were cut off because of the Ark of the LORD's Covenant; when it passed through the Jordan, the waters of the Jordan were cut off.' And so these stones shall serve the people of Israel as a memorial for all time."

⁸The Israelites did as Joshua ordered. They picked up twelve stones, corresponding to the number of the tribes of Israel, from the middle of the Jordan—as the LORD had charged Joshua—and they took them along with them to their night encampment and deposited them there.

⁹Joshua also set up twelve stones in the middle of the Jordan, at the spot where the feet of the priests bearing the Ark of the Covenant had stood; and they have remained there to this day.

¹⁰The priests who bore the Ark remained standing in the middle of the Jordan until all the instructions that the LORD had ordered Joshua to convey to the people had of Reeds; cf. Ps. 114.3. 15: Harvest season refers to early summer, when the waters are still high, making the halt in the Jordan's flow all the more wondrous. In antiquity, as in modern times, the depth of the Jordan varied greatly, reaching a low point after the hot, rainless summer. 16: Adam and Zarethan are two cities east of the Jordan, probably north of the crossing to Jericho. Because they cannot be securely identified with existing sites, their distance from each other is not known. Crossed is used several times in close succession: in vv. 16–17 and in 4.1, 9, 11, 13, 22, 23. This repetition, like the frequent mention of the Jordan, signals the importance of the movement of all Israel across the boundary of their territory.

4.1–9: The twelve stone tradition.

The placing of the twelve stones as memorials is the focus of this unit, which contains language similar to that of the preceding and following units. 3: The twelve stones are reminiscent of the twelve pillars representing the tribes of Israel in Exod. 24.4. The placing of large stones was a commemorative act (see also 24.27). 6–7: The questions and answers about the meaning of the stones, as a way of recalling a significant event, is characteristic of the didactic style of Deuteronomy (see Deut. 6.20–24) and also of Joshua. 9: A somewhat different tradition here has Joshua himself setting up stones, perhaps to connect him with Moses, the one who erects pillars in Exod. ch 24. Joshua does this in the riverbed, whereas the twelve men carry stones to Gilgal (v. 20). To this day is an etiological formula, namely part of a story that describes the origin of a particular place, person, or institution. The concluding formula does not quite make sense here because rocks in the middle of a river would not likely be visible.

4.10–14: The people cross. The crossing of the Jordan is reiterated with a strong emphasis on the connection of this event, led by Joshua, with Moses and the exo-

^a So kethib; qere "from."

been carried out. And so the people speedily crossed over,^a just as Moses had assured Joshua in his charge to him.^a ¹¹And when all the people finished crossing, the Ark of the LORD and the priests advanced to the head of the people.

¹²The Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh went across armed^b in the van of the Israelites, as Moses had charged them.^c ¹³About forty thousand shock troops went across, at the instance of the LORD, to the steppes of Jericho for battle.

¹⁴On that day the LORD exalted Joshua in the sight of all Israel, so that they revered him all his days as they had revered Moses.

¹⁵The LORD said to Joshua, ¹⁶"Command the priests who bear the Ark of the Pact to come up out of the Jordan." ¹⁷So Joshua commanded the priests, "Come up out of the Jordan." ¹⁸As soon as the priests who bore the Ark of the LORD's Covenant came up out of the Jordan, and the feet of the priests stepped onto the dry ground, the waters of the Jordan resumed their course, flowing over its entire bed as before.

¹⁹The people came up from the Jordan on the tenth day of the first month, and encamped at Gilgal on the eastern border of Jericho. ²⁰And Joshua set up in Gilgal the twelve stones they had taken from the Jordan. ²¹He charged the Israelites as follows: "In time to come, when your children ask their fathers, 'What is the meaning of those stones?' ²²tell your children: 'Here the Israelites crossed the Jordan on dry land.' ²³For the LORD your God dried up the waters of the Jordan before you until you crossed, just as the LORD your God did to the Sea of Reeds, which He dried up before us until we crossed. ²⁴Thus all the peoples of the earth shall know how mighty is the hand of the LORD, and you shall fear the LORD your God always."

5 When all the kings of the Amorites on the western side of the Jordan, and all the kings of the Canaanites near the Sea, heard how the LORD had dried up the waters of the Jordan for the sake of the Israelites until they crossed over, they lost heart, and no spirit was left in them because of the Israelites.

²At that time the LORD said to Joshua, "Make flint knives and proceed with a second circumcision of the Israelites." ³So Joshua had flint knives made, and the Israelites were circumcised at Gibeath-haaraloth.^d a-a Connection of clause uncertain; cf. Deut. 31.7-8. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c See Num. 32.20-22. d I.e., "the Hill of Foreskins."

10: Speedily is reminiscent of the haste of the exodus. 12-13: The participation of the Transjordanian tribes in the anticipated military events echoes 1.12-13 and again emphasizes Moses' role.

14: Joshua is exalted, as promised in 3.7; he is again compared to Moses.

4.15-18: The priests cross. This unit is largely repetitive in its description of the priests exiting the Jordan, but now the river resumes its flow. 16: Pact is an alternative term for the covenant but appears only here in Joshua (cf. 2 Kings 11.12).

4.19-5.1: The question and answer about the stones, in the last unit of the crossing narrative, emphasizes the didactic role of the story. 4.19: The first month would have been Nisan (formerly Aviv), and the entrance to the land west of the Jordan on the tenth day recalls the date when preparations began for the first Passover (Exod. 12.3). 20: The twelve stones are now deposited by Joshua (cf. 4.8). Gilgal ("round"), named as the site of the stone deposit, cannot be identified with any certainty. 21: See a similar didactic question in v. 6. 23: The exodus analogy is stated directly in this passage, which contains a large number of echoes of the exodus tradition. 24: All the peoples extends the focus from one people, Israel (v. 19), to the non-Israelite world; Israel's crossing gives to other peoples knowledge of the LORD's power (see 2.9-11). 5.1: Two of the groups of 3.19 represent all the peoples west of the Jordan. Heard . . . lost heart resumes 2.9-11 (cf. the opening verse of chs 9-11).

5.2-15: Final preparations for the people and Joshua. Preparations for entering the land are completed by two rituals: circumcision and Passover (5.2-12). The latter is relevant to the selection of these verses (along with 5.13-6.1) as the haftarah for the first day of Passover, when the account of the Passover in Exodus (12.21-51) is ⁴This is the reason why Joshua had the circumcision performed: All the people who had come out of Egypt, all the males of military age, had died during the desert wanderings after leaving Egypt. ⁵Now, whereas all the people who came out of Egypt had been circumcised, none of the people born after the exodus, during the desert wanderings, had been circumcised. ⁶For the Israelites had traveled in the wilderness forty years, until the entire nation—the men of military age who had left Egypt—had perished; because they had not obeyed the LORD, and the LORD had sworn never to let them see the land that the LORD had sworn to their fathers to assign to us, a land flowing with milk and honey. ⁷But He had raised up their sons in their stead; and it was these that Joshua circumcised, for they were uncircumcised, not having been circumcised on the way. ⁸After the circumcising of the whole nation was completed, they remained where they were, in the camp, until they recovered.

⁹And the LORD said to Joshua, "Today I have rolled away from you the disgrace of Egypt."^a So that place was called Gilgal,^b as it still is.

¹⁰Encamped at Gilgal, in the steppes of Jericho, the Israelites offered the passover sacrifice on the fourteenth day of the month, toward evening.

¹¹On the day after the passover offering, on that very day, they ate of the produce of the country, unleavened bread and parched grain. ¹²On that same day,^c when they ate of the produce of the land, the manna ceased. The Israelites got no more manna; that year they ate of the yield of the land of Canaan.

¹³Once, when Joshua was near Jericho, he looked up and saw a man standing before him, drawn sword in hand. Joshua went up to him and asked him, "Are you one of us or of our enemies?" ¹⁴He replied, "No, I am cap-a I.e., of the Egyptian bondage. b Interpreted as "rolling."

c Lit. "on the day after."

the main Torah reading. Joshua himself is prepared by meeting with the LORD's military commander (5.13–15).

5.2–12: Circumcision and Passover. 5.2: Second circumcision may refer to the need to circumcise males who had been born during the wilderness period; the first circumcision would have been that performed in Egypt. As a requirement for celebrating the Passover (Exod. 12.48), circumcision, a sign of induction into the Israelite community, is a necessary prelude to the ensuing celebration. 4: Because of the specification of military age, twenty years and older (Num. 1.3), the text is assuming adult circumcision, more typical of peoples practicing this rite than the infant circumcision of the Priestly source (Gen. 17.10–14), which became the norm in Judaism. 6: Land flowing with milk and honey is a phrase used many times in the Torah, particularly in Deuteronomy and related literature, but only here in Joshua. In the Torah, the forty years of wandering is attributed to the sin of the spies (Num. ch 13; 14.33), which has been compensated for by the successful mission of the second set of spies in ch. 2. 8: Nation ("goy," here and in v. 6), rarely used as a designation for the Israelites (see also 3.17; 4.1), who are usually called a "people" ("am"). Nation means a people with a land. 9: Disgrace may signify the lack of circumcision since the exodus, which has been rectified, because "disgrace" is also used for the uncircumcised son of Hamor in Genesis 34.14. Gilgal is given a folk etymology, enhancing its didactic role in recounting the crossing of the Jordan. 10: Offering the Passover sacrifice is one more narrative parallel between the exodus and the entrance to the land. Fourteenth day, in conformity with Exod. 12.6, gives the circumcised Israelites three days to recover. 11: Unleavened bread is consumed after the Passover offering (a lamb) and may have originally been part of a separate festival derived from farmers, in contrast to the paschal sacrifice, which may derive from shepherds. It too contributes to the exodus connection (Exod. 12.17–20). Parched grain is added in anticipation of the "produce of the land" (v. 12), designated in Lev. 23.14 as one of the first fruits of the land. 12: The cessation of manna, the food of wandering, marks the beginning of settled agrarian life.

5.13–15: Joshua's final preparation. 13: Angels are always nameless until the postexilic period, though this unidentified man standing is identified as the archangel Michael according to Jewish tradition (Aggadat Bereshit 32.64). 14: The man identifies himself as captain of the LORD's host, a military figure that partakes of the imagery of the LORD as a divine warrior with commanding officers of the heavenly hosts (cf. Deut. 33.2; tain of the LORD's host. Now I have come!" Joshua threw himself face down to the ground and, prostrating himself, said to him, "What does my lord command his servant?"¹⁵ The captain of the LORD's host answered Joshua, "Remove your sandals from your feet, for the place where you stand is holy." And Joshua did so.

6 Now Jericho was shut up tight because of the Israelites; no one could leave or enter.

²The LORD said to Joshua, "See, I will deliver Jericho and her king [and her] warriors into your hands. ³Let all your troops march around the city and complete one circuit of the city. Do this six days, ⁴with seven priests carrying seven ram's horns preceding the Ark. On the seventh day, march around the city seven times, with the priests blowing the horns. ⁵And when a long blast is sounded on the horn—as soon as you hear that sound of the horn—all the people shall give a mighty shout. Thereupon the city wall will collapse, and the people shall advance, every man straight ahead."

⁶Joshua son of Nun summoned the priests and said to them, "Take up the Ark of the Covenant, and let seven priests carrying seven ram's horns precede the Ark of the LORD." ⁷And he instructed the people, "Go forward, march around the city, with the vanguard marching in front of the Ark of the LORD." ⁸When Joshua had instructed the people, the seven priests carrying seven ram's horns advanced before the LORD, blowing their horns; and the Ark of the LORD's Covenant followed them. ⁹The vanguard marched in front of the priests who were blowing the horns, and the rear guard marched behind the Ark, with the horns sounding all the time. ¹⁰But Joshua's orders to the rest of the people were, "Do not shout, do not let your voices be heard, and do not let a sound issue from your lips until the moment that I command you, 'Shout!' Then you shall shout."

¹¹So he had the Ark of the LORD go around the city and complete one circuit; then they returned to camp and spent the night in camp. ¹²Joshua rose early the next day; and the priests took up the Ark of the LORD, ¹³while the seven priests bearing the seven ram's horns marched in front of the Ark of the LORD, blowing the horns as they marched. The vanguard marched in front of them, and the rear guard marched behind the Ark of the LORD, with the horns sounding all the time. ¹⁴And so they marched around the city once on the second day and returned to the camp. They did this six days.

¹⁵On the seventh day, they rose at daybreak and Judg. 5:20; Zech. 9:14). In prostrating himself, Joshua acknowledges that the man is a messenger from God. 15: "Remove . . . holy" quotes Exod. 3:5 directly and provides one more connection between Joshua and Moses. This episode seems to end in the middle; it is unclear if something has been lost, or if we are to follow the text's clue and continue to fill in the chapter from Exod. 3.

6.1–12.24: Conquest of Canaanite towns. The Israelite military advance proceeds in three stages: center (6.1–9.27), south (10.1–43), and north (11.1–15). Summaries of conquest (11.16–23; 12.1–24) conclude the account.

6.1–9.27: The central campaign. Taking the central part of the land involves two major victories, Jericho (6.1–27) and Ai (7.1–8.29), followed by a covenant ceremony at Shechem (8.30–35) and an alliance with the Gibeonites (9.1–27).

6.1–27: The destruction of Jericho. The LORD gives specific instructions to Joshua in language combining ritual with warfare. Joshua then carries out the commands, vanquishing Jericho and instituting the "herem," the complete annihilation of the enemy, but, following the promise of ch 2, sparing Rahab and her family. 3: The circuit ploy is a folkloric element contributing to the rhetoric of conquest. City is really a walled town, a much smaller settlement than the term "city" usually implies. Such towns, with their surrounding villages, formed the city-states of Canaanite Palestine (cf. 13.23, 28, etc.). 4: Seven appears 14 times (2 × 7) in ch 6—to indicate days, priests, ram's horns, and circuits of the city. As a biblical idiom for completeness, seven might function as a magical number, but also denotes the totality of the ensuing territorial possession. Ram's horns, or shofars, are battle trumpets here (cf. Judg. 6.34) but are more often used to signal worship in the Bible. In Num. 10.9, trumpets play an analogous role. 5: Archeological research has marched around the city, in the same manner, seven times; that was the only day that they marched around the city seven times. ¹⁶On the seventh round, as the priests blew the horns, Joshua commanded the people, "Shout! For the LORD has given you the city. ¹⁷The city and everything in it are to be proscribed for the LORD; only Rahab the harlot is to be spared, and all who are with her in the house, because she hid the messengers we sent. ¹⁸But you must beware of that which is proscribed, or else you will be proscribed:^a if you take anything from that which is proscribed, you will cause the camp of Israel to be proscribed; you will bring calamity upon it. ¹⁹All the silver and gold and objects of copper and iron are consecrated to the LORD; they must go into the treasury of the LORD."

²⁰So the people shouted when the horns were sounded. When the people heard the sound of the horns, the people raised a mighty shout and the wall collapsed. The people rushed into the city, every man straight in front of him, and they captured the city. ²¹They exterminated everything in the city with the sword: man and woman, young and old, ox and sheep and ass. ²²But Joshua bade the two men who had spied out the land, "Go into the harlot's house and bring out the woman and all that belong to her, as you swore to her." ²³So the young spies went in and brought out Rahab, her father and her mother, her brothers and all that belonged to her—they brought out her whole family and left them outside the camp of Israel.

²⁴They burned down the city and everything in it. But the silver and gold and the objects of copper and iron were deposited in the treasury of the House of the LORD. ²⁵Only Rahab the harlot and her father's family were spared by Joshua, along with all that belonged to her, and she dwelt among the Israelites—as is still the case. For she had hidden the messengers that Joshua sent to spy out Jericho.

²⁶At that time Joshua pronounced this oath: "Cursed of the LORD be the man who shall undertake to fortify this city of Jericho: he shall lay its foundations at the cost of his first-born, and set up its gates at the cost of his youngest."

²⁷The LORD was with Joshua, and his fame spread throughout the land.

7The Israelites, however, violated the proscription: Achan son of Carmi son of Zabdi son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, took of that which was proscribed, and the LORD was incensed with the Israelites.

²Joshua sent men from Jericho to Ai, which lies close to shown that the last city wall of Jericho no longer existed at the time of earliest Israel; therefore the story of its conquest may be more symbolic than historical. 17–19: Proscribed denotes the sacral extermination, or "herem," of the enemy, a linking of violence and sanctity common to war ideologies. The destroyed enemy items—people, animals, and objects—are consecrated to the deity who made the victory possible. The "herem" is also mentioned in the Moabite Mesha stele. 19: Silver . . . iron are valuable metal objects and constitute booty for the LORD. 24: House of the LORD, the most common designation for the Jerusalem Temple, is used anachronistically here.

26: Cursed . . . be the man, an imprecation proleptically (i.e., by anticipation) cursing the city's possible rebuilder, is unique in the Bible. The fulfillment of this curse is narrated in 1 Kings 16.34. 27: This verse is meant to contrast with the following episode, illustrating one of the main themes of the Deuteronomistic History: Following the divine word leads to blessing, while abrogating it leads to curse and punishment.

7.1–8.29: Achan's sin and the destruction of Ai. 7.1–26: Achan's sin. The men of Ai, the next city to be taken, at first overpower the Israelites because one person, Achan, had disobeyed the order to destroy Jericho utterly. 1: The LORD was incensed, describing divine displeasure, appears only once in Joshua in contrast to its frequent presence in Judges. 2: Ai means "The Ruin." The city's name appears very frequently (27 times) in chs 7 and 8, etymologically calling attention to Israel's territorial rights. Archeological research indicates that, like Jericho, the site of Ai (modern et-Tel), located 13 km (8 miles) north of Jerusalem, was uninhabited at the time of earliest Israel. Thus, like the previous story of Jericho, this account is not historically accurate. 3–5: The attack on Ai does not mention God's presence; the result is a severe routing. 6–15: An exchange bea i.e., be put to death; cf. Lev. 27.28–29.

Beth-aven—east of Bethel—with orders to go up and spy out the country. So the men went up and spied out Ai. ³They returned to Joshua and reported to him, “Not all the troops need go up. Let two or three thousand men go and attack Ai; do not trouble all the troops to go up there, for [the people] there are few.” ⁴So about three thousand of the troops marched up there; but they were routed by the men of Ai. ⁵The men of Ai killed about thirty-six of them, pursuing them outside the gate as far as Shebarim, and cutting them down along the descent. And the heart of the troops ^asank in utter dismay.^a

⁶Joshua thereupon rent his clothes. He and the elders of Israel lay until evening with their faces to the ground in front of the Ark of the LORD; and they strewed earth on their heads. ⁷“Ah, Lord GOD!” cried Joshua. “Why did You lead this people across the Jordan only to deliver us into the hands of the Amorites, to be destroyed by them? If only we had been content to remain on the other side of the Jordan! ⁸O Lord, what can I say after Israel has turned tail before its enemies? ⁹When the Canaanites and all the inhabitants of the land hear of this, they will turn upon us and wipe out our very name from the earth. And what will You do about Your great name?”

¹⁰But the LORD answered Joshua: “Arise! Why do you lie prostrate? ¹¹Israel has sinned! They have broken the covenant by which I bound them. They have taken of the proscribed and put it in their vessels; they have stolen; they have broken faith! ¹²Therefore, the Israelites will not be able to hold their ground against their enemies; they will have to turn tail before their enemies, for they have become proscribed. I will not be with you any more unless you root out from among you what is proscribed. ¹³Go and purify the people. Order them: Purify yourselves for tomorrow. For thus says the LORD, the God of Israel: Something proscribed is in your midst, O Israel, and you will not be able to stand up to your enemies until you have purged the proscribed from among you. ¹⁴Tomorrow morning you shall present yourselves by tribes. Whichever tribe the LORD indicates^b shall come forward by clans; the clan that the LORD indicates shall come forward by ancestral houses, and the ancestral house that the LORD indicates shall come forward man by man. ¹⁵Then he who is ^cindicated for proscription,^c and all that is his, shall be put to the fire, because he broke the Covenant of the LORD and because he committed an outrage in Israel.”

tween Joshua (and the elders) and the LORD consists of a complaint and a petition followed by God's explanation and instructions. The setting—in front of the Ark—indicates that the divine presence is understood to dwell in the Ark. Joshua's role as intercessor is similar to that of Moses (e.g., Exod. 32.11-13; Num. 11.11-15; 14.13-19). 6: Rent his clothes, a typical act of penitence as well as mourning. 7: Amorites here represents all the inhabitants of the land (as in 24.15). 11: Sinned . . . stolen indicates that the proscribed vessels belonged to God and that Achan's taking them was theft, a sin violating the covenant.

14: Tribes . . . clans . . . ancestral houses comprise the sociopolitical structure of the Israelites. “Ancestral house,” or family household, was the basic unit of society and is understood to represent the extended family and its possessions. Indicates probably refers to the casting of lots, a method by which divine decisions were communicated to humans (cf. 14.2).

a-a Lit. “melted and turned to water.”

b Lit. “catches.” c-c Or “caught in the net.”

¹⁶Early next morning, Joshua had Israel come forward by tribes; and the tribe of Judah was indicated. ¹⁷He then had the clans of Judah come forward, and the clan of Zerah was indicated. Then he had the clan of Zerah come forward by "ancestral houses,"^a and Zabdi was indicated. ¹⁸Finally he had his ancestral house come forward man by man, and Achan son of Carmi, son of Zabdi, son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, was indicated.

¹⁹Then Joshua said to Achan, "My son, pay honor to the LORD, the God of Israel, and make confession to Him. Tell me what you have done; do not hold anything back from me." ²⁰Achan answered Joshua, "It is true, I have sinned against the LORD, the God of Israel. This is what I did: ²¹I saw among the spoil a fine Shinar mantle, two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold weighing fifty shekels, and I coveted them and took them. They are buried in the ground in my tent, with the silver under it."^b ²²Joshua sent messengers, who hurried to the tent; and there it^b was, buried in his tent, with the silver underneath. ²³They took them from the tent and brought them to Joshua and all the Israelites, and displayed^c them before the LORD. ²⁴Then Joshua, and all Israel with him, took Achan son of Zerah—and the silver, the mantle, and the wedge of gold—his sons and daughters, and his ox, his ass, and his flock, and his tent, and all his belongings, and brought them up to the Valley of Achor. ²⁵And Joshua said, "What calamity you have brought upon us! The LORD will bring calamity upon you this day." And all Israel pelted him with stones. They put them to the fire and stoned them. ²⁶They raised a huge mound of stones over him, which is still there. Then the anger of the LORD subsided. That is why that place was named the Valley of Achor^d—as is still the case.

8 The LORD said to Joshua, "Do not be frightened or dismayed. Take all the fighting troops with you, go and march against Ai. See, I will deliver the king of Ai, his people, his city, and his land into your hands. ²You shall treat Ai and her king as you treated Jericho and her king; however, you may take the spoil and the cattle as booty for yourselves. Now set an ambush against the city behind it."

³So Joshua and all the fighting troops prepared for the march on Ai. Joshua chose thirty thousand men, valiant

16–20: The guilty party is identified by lots, through a dramatic selection process involving all Israel, thus intensifying the notion of communal responsibility for adherence to the covenant. 21: The stolen objects are identified: a garment from Shinar (probably Babylonia), 200 shekels of silver (2.5 kg, 5.9 lbs) and a 50-shekel wedge of gold (about .5 kg, 1.25 lbs).

25: The reference to calamity is foreshadowed by 6.18. Put them to the fire and stoned them probably means that the stolen booty was burned and the guilty family stoned. Like severe ritual impurity, Achan's sin had infected the entire household. 26: Mound of stones . . . still there: The didactic function of the narrative is made clear in this etiology. Valley of Achor is a word-play on "to stir up a calamity" ("akhar").

8.1–29: The destruction of Ai.

1–2: Now that the Israelites are purified of Achan's sin, the LORD provides instructions that will assure victory. The annihilation of Ai, however, unlike that of Jericho, will allow for booty. 3–8: Joshua relays God's instructions but in much greater detail, thus contributing to the drama of the impending event. 3: Thirty thousand men, an impossible number for an ambush, possibly means "thirty, a man from each contingent," or "thirty contingents." The word translated "thousand" can also denote a small military unit, ranging from five to fifteen men per contingent. Valiant warriors echoes 1.14 and anticipates 10.7. The Heb is the same in these three verses.

9: Bethel, which became a major city of the Northern Kingdom, is identified with modern Beitun, less than 3.5 km (2 miles) west of Ai. 10–29: Using brilliant military strategy, the Israelites take Ai and put all its inhabitants to death. A similar strategy is used in Judg. chs 9 and 21. 12: Five thousand men may represent another, smaller ambush; or it may be an alternative designation for the warriors of 8.3. 14: Facing the Arabah, eastward, toward the Jordan Valley.

a-a So some Heb. mss. and some ancient versions; most mss. and editions have "men."

b I.e., the mantle. c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d Connected with 'akhar "to bring calamity upon"; cf. v. 25.

warriors, and sent them ahead by night. ⁴He instructed them as follows: "Mind, you are to lie in ambush behind the city; don't stay too far from the city, and all of you be on the alert. ⁵I and all the troops with me will approach the city; and when they come out against us, as they did the first time, we will flee from them. ⁶They will come rushing after us until we have drawn them away from the city. They will think, 'They are fleeing from us the same as last time'; but while we are fleeing before them, ⁷you will dash out from your ambush and seize the city, and the LORD your God will deliver it into your hands. ⁸And when you take the city, set it on fire. Do as the LORD has commanded. Mind, I have given you your orders."

⁹Joshua then sent them off, and they proceeded to the ambush; they took up a position between Ai and Bethel—west of Ai—while Joshua spent the night with the rest of the troops.

¹⁰Early in the morning, Joshua mustered the troops; then he and the elders of Israel marched upon Ai at the head of the troops. ¹¹All the fighting force that was with him advanced near the city and encamped to the north of Ai, with a hollow between them and Ai.—¹²He selected about five thousand men and stationed them as an ambush between Bethel and Ai, west of the city. ¹³Thus the main body of the army was disposed on the north of the city, but the far end of it was on the west. (This was after Joshua had "spent the night" in the valley.^b)—¹⁴When the king of Ai saw them, he and all his people, the inhabitants of the city, rushed out in the early morning to the "meeting place,"^c facing the Arabah, to engage the Israelites in battle; for he was unaware that a force was lying in ambush behind the city. ¹⁵Joshua and all Israel fled in the direction of the wilderness, as though routed by them. ¹⁶All the troops in the city gathered to pursue them; pursuing Joshua, they were drawn out of the city. ¹⁷Not a man was left in Ai or in Bethel who did not go out after Israel; they left the city open while they pursued Israel.

¹⁸The LORD then said to Joshua, "Hold out the javelin in your hand toward Ai, for I will deliver it into your hands." So Joshua held out the javelin in his hand toward the city. ¹⁹As soon as he held out his hand, the ambush came rushing out of their station. They entered the city and captured it; and they swiftly set fire to the city. ²⁰The men of Ai looked back and saw the smoke of the city rising to the sky; they had no room for flight in any direction.

18: The javelin is indicated by a rare word for a weapon that symbolized sovereignty. Joshua holds it out (vv. 18, 26) in a magical gesture reminiscent of Moses' actions (Exod. 14.15–21, 26–27; 17.9–12). Later commentators such as Rashi, disturbed at the magical background of this action, instead viewed it as sign for those ambushing to attack.

a-a So with some mss. (cf. v. 9); most mss. and editions read "marched."

b Syriac reads "with the troops"; cf. v. 9. c-c Emendation yields "descent"; cf. 7.5.

The people who had been fleeing to the wilderness now became the pursuers. ²¹For when Joshua and all Israel saw that the ambush had captured the city, and that smoke was rising from the city, they turned around and attacked the men of Ai. ²²Now the other [Israelites] were coming out of the city against them, so that they were between two bodies of Israelites, one on each side of them. They were slaughtered, so that no one escaped or got away. ²³The king of Ai was taken alive and brought to Joshua.

²⁴When Israel had killed all the inhabitants of Ai who had pursued them into the open wilderness, and all of them, to the last man, had fallen by the sword, all the Israelites turned back to Ai and put it to the sword.

²⁵The total of those who fell that day, men and women, the entire population of Ai, came to twelve thousand.

²⁶Joshua did not draw back the hand with which he held out his javelin until all the inhabitants of Ai had been exterminated. ²⁷However, the Israelites took the cattle and the spoil of the city as their booty, in accordance with the instructions that the LORD had given to Joshua.

²⁸Then Joshua burned down Ai, and turned it into a mound of ruins for all time, a desolation to this day. ²⁹And the king of Ai was impaled on a stake until the evening. At sunset, Joshua had the corpse taken down from the stake and it was left lying at the entrance to the city gate. They raised a great heap of stones over it, which is there to this day.

³⁰At that time Joshua built an altar to the LORD, the God of Israel, on Mount Ebal, ³¹as Moses, the servant of the LORD, had commanded the Israelites—as is written in the Book of the Teaching of Moses^a—an altar of unhewn stone upon which no iron had been wielded. They offered on it burnt offerings to the LORD, and brought sacrifices of well-being. ³²And there, on the stones, he inscribed a copy of the Teaching that Moses had written for the Israelites. ³³All Israel—stranger and citizen alike—with their elders, officials, and magistrates, stood on either side of the Ark, facing the levitical priests who carried the Ark of the LORD's Covenant. Half of them faced Mount Gerizim and half of them faced Mount Ebal, as Moses the servant of the LORD had commanded them of old, in order to bless the people of Israel. ³⁴After that, he read all the words of the Teaching, the blessing and the curse, just as is written in the Book of the Teaching.^b ³⁵There was not a word of all

27: The modification of the "herem," perhaps to prevent another Achan incident, is less liberal than that of Deut. 20.14, where even women and children can be taken as booty, provided the captured town is not in Israelite territory. 28: Ruins for all time echoes the language of Deut. 13.16, contributes to the etymology of Ai, and provides an instructive etiology. 29: The king of Ai, who has been taken alive, is impaled on a stake, a common treatment of a vanquished ruler in the ancient Near East (cf. 10.26–27). The removal of his body at evening may reflect the precept in Deut. 21.23. Heap of stones . . . to this day, another etiological proclamation.

8.30–35: Covenant ceremony at Shechem. This section, which narrates the fulfillment by Joshua of Deut. ch 27, interrupts the continuity between 8.29 and 9.1–3. It portrays an event in a location some distance from Jericho and Ai and is similar in theme to ch 24. Its presence here maintains the importance of the Book of the Teaching of Moses in the Joshua narrative (cf. 1.7–8) and also affirms again Joshua's legitimacy as successor to Moses. 30: Mount Ebal is situated opposite Mount Gerizim (v. 33) in the hill country of Ephraim. The important northern city of Shechem (modern Tel Balatah), near Nablus, commands the valley between the two mountains. 31: The altar of unhewn stone fits the guidelines of Exod. 20.22 and fulfills the directive of Moses in Deut. 27.5. Burnt offerings . . . sacrifices of well-being replicate the sacrifices ordered by Moses after he wrote all the words of the covenant at Mount Sinai (Exod. 24.3–5). 32: The stones, not the altar stones but rather those intended for the copy of the Teaching to be inscribed on stone when the Israelites cross the Jordan according to Moses' instructions (Deut. 27.2–3). Since these stones could not hold a complete copy of the Torah or even all of Deuteronomy, it is unclear exactly what was written that Moses had commanded that Joshua failed to read in the presence of the entire assembly of Israel, including the women and children and the strangers who accompanied them.

^a See Deut. 27.3–8. ^b See Deut. 27.11–28.68.

9 When all the kings ^awest of^a the Jordan—in the hill country, in the Shephelah, and along the entire coast of the Mediterranean Sea up to the vicinity of Lebanon, the [land of the] Hittites, Amorites, Canaanites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites—learned of this, ²they gathered with one accord to fight against Joshua and Israel.

³But when the inhabitants of Gibeon learned how Joshua had treated Jericho and Ai, ⁴they for their part resorted to cunning. They set out ^bin disguise:^b they took worn-out sacks for their asses, and worn-out waterskins that were cracked and patched; ⁵they had worn-out, patched sandals on their feet, and threadbare clothes on their bodies; and all the bread they took as provision was dry and crumbly. ⁶And so they went to Joshua in the camp at Gilgal and said to him and to the men of Israel, “We come from a distant land; we propose that you make a pact with us.” ⁷The men of Israel replied to the Hivites, “But perhaps you live among us; how then can we make a pact with you?”^c ⁸They said to Joshua, “We will be your subjects.” But Joshua asked them, “Who are you and where do you come from?” ⁹They replied, “Your servants have come from a very distant country, because of the fame of the LORD your God. For we heard the report of Him: of all that He did in Egypt, ¹⁰and of all that He did to the two Amorite kings on the other side of the Jordan, King Sihon of Heshbon and King Og of Bashan who lived in Ashtaroth. ¹¹So our elders and all the inhabitants of our country instructed us as follows, ‘Take along provisions for a trip, and go to them and say: We will be your subjects; come make a pact with us.’ ¹²This bread of ours, which we took from our houses as provision, was still hot when we set out to come to you; and see how dry and crumbly it has become. ¹³These wineskins were new when we filled them, and see how they have cracked. These clothes and sandals of ours are worn out from the very long journey.” ¹⁴The men ^btook [their word] because of^b their provisions, and did not inquire of the LORD. ¹⁵Joshua established friendship with them; he made a pact with them to spare their lives, and the chieftains of the community gave them their oath.

on them. This topic is the subject of much debate and discussion in rabbinic and medieval Jewish commentary. 34: The blessing and the curse typically conclude covenants in the ancient Near East (as Deut. 27.11–13; ch 28; cf. Lev. 26.3–34). 35: Women . . . strangers, indicating the inclusive community required to hear the recitation of the teaching, as in Deut. 31.12.

9.1–27: The treaty with the Gibeonites. Having conquered Ai through a ruse, the Israelites themselves are now tricked by the clever strategy of the Gibeonites. The story that follows both shows the great power of the LORD and explains the origins of a particular class of Temple servants. 1–2: This introductory statement describes the response—preparation for war—of those who hear of the Israelite victories. The list of people should probably also include the Girgashites, as in 3.10 and 24.11. These verses introduce through contrast the actions of the Gibeonites. 3: Gibeon, identified with modern el-Jib, lies on an important east-west route 9 km (5.5 miles) north of Jerusalem. Its existence during the period of Israelite beginnings is doubtful according to the archeological evidence, but it was an important city during the monarchy. 6: Pact, another translation of “berit,” Heb for “covenant.” 7: Hivites, a group probably originating in Asia Minor. 9: The Gibeonites claim to be from a distant country, which would mean they would not be subject to the required annihilation of those living in territory promised to Israel (cf. 8.27, Deut. 20.14). Fame of the LORD, meaning that the victories of a people are attributed to their god. 10: The conquest of the Transjordanian kings Sihon . . . Og, like the departure from Egypt, arouses dread (as in 2.10; see Num. 21.21–35; Deut. 2.26–3.17). 12–13: The details of their provisions and clothing, anticipated in vv. 4–5, create vivid dramatic interest. 15: Friendship, Heb “shalom,” or “peace.”

a-a Lit. “across.” b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Cf. Deut. 7.2.

¹⁶But when three days had passed after they made this pact with them, they learned that they were neighbors, living among them. ¹⁷So the Israelites set out, and on the third day they came to their towns; these towns were Gibeon, Chephirah, Beeroth, and Kiriath-jearim. ¹⁸But the Israelites did not attack them, since the chieftains of the community had sworn to them by the LORD, the God of Israel. The whole community muttered against the chieftains, ¹⁹but all the chieftains answered the whole community, "We swore to them by the LORD, the God of Israel; therefore we cannot touch them. ²⁰This is what we will do to them: We will spare their lives, so that there may be no wrath against us because of the oath that we swore to them." ²¹And the chieftains declared concerning them, "They shall live!" And they became hewers of wood and drawers of water for the whole community, as the chieftains had decreed concerning them.

²²Joshua summoned them and spoke to them thus: "Why did you deceive us and tell us you lived very far from us, when in fact you live among us? ²³Therefore, be accursed! Never shall your descendants cease to be slaves, hewers of wood and drawers of water for the House of my God." ²⁴But they replied to Joshua, "You see, your servants had heard that the LORD your God had promised His servant Moses to give you the whole land and to wipe out all the inhabitants of the country on your account; so we were in great fear for our lives on your account. That is why we did this thing. ²⁵And now we are at your mercy; do with us what you consider right and proper." ²⁶And he did so; he saved them from being killed by the Israelites. ²⁷That day Joshua made them hewers of wood and drawers of water—as they still are—for the community and for the altar of the LORD, in the place that He would choose.

10 When King Adoni-zedek of Jerusalem learned that Joshua had captured Ai and proscribed it, treating Ai and its king as he had treated Jericho and its king, and that, moreover, the people of Gibeon had come to terms with Israel and remained among them, ²he was^a very frightened. For Gibeon was a large city, like one of the royal cities—in fact, larger than Ai—and all its men were warriors. ³So King Adoni-zedek of Jerusalem sent this message to King Hoham of Hebron, King Piram of Jarmuth, King Japhia of Lachish, and King Debir of Eglon: ⁴"Come up and help me defeat Gibeon; for it has come to terms with Joshua and the Israelites."

a-a Heb. "they were."

16–27: The Gibeonite deception is discovered, and the Israelites reluctantly honor their pact, which had been sworn, presumably, in the name of the LORD. The Bible takes such vows very seriously (see Exod. 20.7; Deut. 5.11). Thus, a main theme of this chapter is the conflict between the obligation to obliterate the inhabitants of the land, and the oath promising to allow these people to live. According to 2 Sam. ch 21, Saul violated this promise and put some Gibeonites to death. 17: The Hivites live in Gibeon and in Chephirah, Beeroth, and Kiriath-jearim, three settlements west of Gibeon.

21: Hewers of wood and drawers of water are the menial jobs to which the Gibeonites are assigned as subjects of Israel, despite the idea that even such workers were equal participants in the covenant (Deut. 29.10–11). This eternal assignment is repeated in vv. 23 and 27, underscoring the servitude of the deceivers. 24: The Gibeonites refer to the "herem" (Deut. 20.16–18). 27: As they still are is an etiological marker. Place that He would choose is the typical language of Deuteronomy (e.g., Deut. 12.5–18), anticipating the central and sole place, namely Jerusalem, for sacrificing to the LORD. This oblique reference to Jerusalem offers continuity with the following chapter, which narrates a coalition led by the king of Jerusalem.

10.1–43: Southern campaign. Two units comprise the military encounters leading to the control of the south: vanquishing a coalition of five kings (vv. 1–27); seven other victories (vv. 28–43).

10.1–27: The battle with the five kings. The first unit of the southern campaign is recounted in two parts. First, Joshua and the Israelites honor their pact with Gibeon and rescue them from an Amorite coalition (vv. 1–15). Then the kings of that coalition are captured and executed (vv. 16–27). 10.1–15: Rescuing the Gibeonites. Led by the king of Jerusalem, a group of five kings, fearing the ⁵The five Amorite kings—the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, and the king of Eglon, with all their armies—joined forces and marched on Gibeon, and encamped against it and attacked it. ⁶The people of Gibeon thereupon sent this message to Joshua in the camp at Gilgal: “Do not fail your servants; come up quickly and aid us and deliver us, for all the Amorite kings of the hill country have gathered against us.” ⁷So Joshua marched up from Gilgal with his whole fighting force, all the trained warriors.

⁸The LORD said to Joshua, “Do not be afraid of them, for I will deliver them into your hands; not one of them shall withstand you.” ⁹Joshua took them by surprise, marching all night from Gilgal. ¹⁰The LORD threw them into a panic before Israel: [Joshua] inflicted a crushing defeat on them at Gibeon, pursued them in the direction of the Beth-horon ascent, and harried them all the way to Azekah and Makkedah. ¹¹While they were fleeing before Israel down the descent from Beth-horon, the LORD hurled huge stones on them from the sky, all the way to Azekah, and they perished; more perished from the hailstones than were killed by the Israelite weapons.

¹²On that occasion, when the LORD routed the Amorites before the Israelites, Joshua addressed the LORD; he said in the presence of the Israelites:

“Stand still, O sun, at Gibeon,
O moon, in the Valley of Aijalon!”

¹³ And the sun stood still
And the moon halted,

While a nation wreaked judgment on its foes

—as is written in the Book of Jashar.^a Thus the sun halted in midheaven, and did not press on to set, for a whole day; ¹⁴for the LORD fought for Israel. Neither before nor since has there ever been such a day, when the LORD acted on words spoken by a man. ¹⁵Then Joshua together with all Israel returned to the camp at Gilgal.

¹⁶Meanwhile, those five kings fled and hid in a cave at Makkedah. ¹⁷When it was reported to Joshua that the five kings had been found hiding in a cave at Makkedah, ¹⁸Joshua ordered, “Roll large stones up against the mouth of the cave, and post men over it to keep guard over them. ¹⁹But as for the rest of you, don’t stop, but press on the alliance between Gibeon and Israel, seeks to vanquish Gibeon. The Gibeonites are saved by invoking their pact with the Israelites, who themselves receive help from the LORD; and the kings of certain cities that would be central to later history, such as Jerusalem and Hebron, are vanquished.

^a Presumably a collection of war songs.

1: Jerusalem, appearing here by this name for the first time in the Bible, is depicted in a leadership role among local Amorite city-states. Inhabited by Jebusites, it did not become Israelite until the time of David (see 15.63 and 2 Sam. 5.6–9; Judg. 1.8 is not historical). Ai . . . Jericho . . . Gibeon differs from the order of the preceding narratives.

3: Debir as the king’s name is problematic, for it is a city name in v.

38. 6: Hill country designates the central highlands, the core of ancient Israel (cf. v. 40); but three of the cities of the coalition (Jarmuth, Lachish, and Eglon) are in the foothills, or Shephelah. 8–10: The LORD is to be directly involved.

The mention of Azekah and Makkedah, both probably in the southern Shephelah, anticipates the second unit of the southern campaign in which Makkedah figures prominently (vv. 16, 17, 21, 28, 29).

11: Descent from Beth-horon, a pass also known as the Valley of Aijalon (see v. 12), is a major route from the Shephelah to the hill country. Hailstones, lit. “large stones,” wreak havoc on the enemy. They are understood as divine intervention, and they are echoed by the “large stones” of v. 18. 12: Stand still . . ., opens an ancient mythic poem, using language similar to that used for the Divine Warrior in Canaanite mythology (cf. Judg. 5.20; Hab. 3.11) and signifying God’s miraculous and direct involvement in human affairs. As stated in the following verse, the purpose of this action is for the Israelites to have sufficient time to kill the enemy before the sun set.

13: Book of Jashar, also cited in 2 Sam. 1.18, is one of many biblical references to ancient Heb writings that are no longer extant.

10.16–27: Capturing the kings.

16: Their forces have been defeated by God, but the five kings themselves escape. 17–18: Large stones, same as the “hailstones” of v. 11. The cave is first a refuge and then a tomb (v. 27) for the kings, thus serving two functions of caves in ancient Israel.

heels of your enemies and harass them from the rear. Don't let them reach their towns, for the LORD your God has delivered them into your hands." ²⁰When Joshua and the Israelites had finished dealing them a deadly blow, they were wiped out, except for some fugitives who escaped into the fortified towns. ²¹The whole army returned in safety to Joshua in the camp at Makkedah; no one so much as snarled^a at the Israelites. ²²And now Joshua ordered, "Open the mouth of the cave, and bring those five kings out of the cave to me." ²³This was done. Those five kings—the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, and the king of Eglon—were brought out to him from the cave. ²⁴And when the kings were brought out to Joshua, Joshua summoned all the men of Israel and ordered the army officers who had accompanied him, "Come forward and place your feet on the necks of these kings." They came forward and placed their feet on their necks. ²⁵Joshua said to them, "Do not be frightened or dismayed; be firm and resolute. For this is what the LORD is going to do to all the enemies with whom you are at war." ²⁶After that, Joshua had them put to death and impaled on five stakes, and they remained impaled on the stakes until evening. ²⁷At sunset Joshua ordered them taken down from the poles and thrown into the cave in which they had hidden. Large stones were placed over the mouth of the cave, [and there they are] to this very day.

²⁸At that time Joshua captured Makkedah and put it and its king to the sword, proscribing it^b and every person in it and leaving none that escaped. And he treated the king of Makkedah as he had treated the king of Jericho.

²⁹From Makkedah, Joshua proceeded with all Israel to Libnah, and he attacked it. ³⁰The LORD delivered it and its king into the hands of Israel; they put it and all the people in it to the sword, letting none escape. And he treated its king as he had treated the king of Jericho.

³¹From Libnah, Joshua proceeded with all Israel to Lachish; he encamped against it and attacked it. ³²The LORD delivered Lachish into the hands of Israel. They captured it on the second day and put it and all the people in it to the sword, just as they had done to Libnah.

³³At that time King Horam of Gezer marched to the help of Lachish; but Joshua defeated him and his army, letting none of them escape.

³⁴From Lachish, Joshua proceeded with all Israel to 24: Joshua's officers put their feet on the necks of the five kings in a symbolic action of conquest (cf. 1 Kings 5:17; Ps. 110:1). Various representations of this action in Mesopotamian royal reliefs indicate that it was an action used widely in the ancient Near East. 25: Firm and resolute echoes God's exhortation of 1.7, 9 and signals impending battles. 26: After being killed, the kings are impaled on five stakes; the public exposure of corpses is meant to instill fear in other enemies (as in 8.29). 27: To this very day signifies an etiology.

10.28–43: Seven additional victories. In repetitive language, the conquest of seven cities is reported (vv. 27–39), followed by a summary of the southern campaign (vv. 40–43). 28: Proscribing is specified for four of the cities, and other terms indicate that all are subject to the complete slaughter of the vanquished. The treatment of the king of Jericho is not mentioned in the account of the fall of Jericho in ch 6. 31: Lachish (modern Tel ed-Duweir), a major site in the southern Shephelah, holds out for two days. There is no mention of the slaughter of its king. 33: Gezer is the main site of the central Shephelah. Its king and army are defeated in the field, but the city itself remains a Canaanite stronghold until the time of Solomon (see 16.10; Judg. 1.29; 1 Kings 9.16). 36: Hebron, south of Jerusalem, is conquered by Caleb, not Joshua, according to 15.13 (cf. Judg. 1.9). 37: All its towns, designating the satellite settlements of an ancient walled city, is used only for Hebron and Debir, both sites in the hill country. 38: The taking of Debir is attributed elsewhere to Othniel (15.15–17; Judg. 1.11–13). 39: As they had done is used seven times in vv. 28–39, conveying the complete success of the southern campaign. 41–42: In these summary verses, Joshua, like the typical ancient Near Eastern ruler, is credited with all the victories, despite other texts with different traditions. 41: Kadesh-barnea . . . Gibeon designates the southern

^a Cf. Exod. 11.7.

^b So several mss.; most mss. and the editions read "them."

Eglon; they encamped against it and attacked it.³⁵ They captured it on the same day and put it to the sword, proscribing all the people that were in it, as they had done to Lachish.

³⁶From Eglon, Joshua marched with all Israel to Hebron and attacked it.³⁷ They captured it and put it, its king, and all its towns, and all the people that were in it, to the sword. He let none escape, proscribing it and all the people in it, just as he had done in the case of Eglon.

³⁸Joshua and all Israel with him then turned back to Debir and attacked it.³⁹ He captured it and its king and all its towns. They put them to the sword and proscribed all the people in it. They let none escape; just as they had done to Hebron, and as they had done to Libnah and its king, so they did to Debir and its king.

⁴⁰Thus Joshua conquered the whole country:^a the hill country, the Negeb, the Shephelah, and the slopes, with all their kings; he let none escape, but proscribed everything that breathed—as the LORD, the God of Israel, had commanded.⁴¹ Joshua conquered them from Kadesh-barnea to Gaza, all the land of Goshen, and up to Gibeon.⁴² All those kings and their lands were conquered by Joshua at a single stroke, for the LORD, the God of Israel, fought for Israel.⁴³ Then Joshua, with all Israel, returned to the camp at Gilgal.

11 When the news reached King Jabin of Hazor, he sent messages to King Jobab of Madon, to the king of Shimron, to the king of Achshaph,² and to the other kings in the north—in the hill country, in the Arabah south of Chinnereth, in the lowlands, and in the district^b of Dor on the west;³ to the Canaanites in the east and in the west; to the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, and Jebusites in the hill country; and to the Hivites at the foot of Hermon, in the land of Mizpah.⁴ They took the field with all their armies—an enormous host, as numerous as the sands on the seashore—and a vast multitude of horses and chariots.⁵ All these kings joined forces; they came and encamped together at the Waters of Merom to give battle to Israel.

⁶But the LORD said to Joshua, “Do not be afraid of them; tomorrow at this time I will have them all lying slain before Israel. You shall hamstring their horses and burn their chariots.”⁷ So Joshua, with all his fighting men, came upon them suddenly at the Waters of Merom, and territory, with Goshen referring to the northern Negev, not the Egyptian Goshen (Gen. 45.10). 43: All Israel emphasizes that the successful campaign involved the whole people.

11.1–15: Northern campaign.

Fewer details are provided for the conquest of the north, revealing the narrator's greater interest in the central and southern regions, a bias that likely reflects Judean authorship. All the northern kings join in one large coalition, which Joshua overcomes through divine intervention. 1: Jabin is called the King of Canaan in Judg. 4.2, underscoring his prominence in the north. Hazor (modern Tel el-Qedah), located in upper Galilee on a route controlling trade with Mesopotamia, was a powerful city-state for much of the Bronze Age. Madon . . . Shimron . . . Achshaph cannot be securely identified but are presumably in the vicinity of Hazor. Although scholars have proposed various ways of harmonizing this account with Judg. chs 4–5, none of these harmonizations has succeeded because they all tend to treat these narratives as straightforward historical accounts and do not recognize that they are legendary, fictional tales. 2–3: The inclusiveness of the northern enemy is provided by listing geographical extent and by naming peoples (six groups; as 9.1; cf. 3.9; 24.11). 2: Arabah . . . Chinnereth, Jordan Valley . . . Sea of Galilee. 3: Hermon, a high mountain northeast of the Sea of Galilee. 4: Sands on the seashore uses hyperbole to convey the enormity of the enemy force and recalls God's promise to the ancestors (Gen. 22.17). Horses and chariots denote military technology superior to Israelite infantry. 5: Waters of Merom may specify a high plain, suitable for chariot warfare, because “merom” can mean “elevated.” 6: Hamstringing their horses and burn their chariots, a strategy to remove the Canaanite technological advantage. Hamstringing means cutting the large tendon of a horse's rear leg, thereby dis-

^a I.e., the whole southern part of Canaan.

^b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

pounced upon them. ⁸The LORD delivered them into the hands of Israel, and they defeated them and pursued them all the way to Great Sidon ^aand Misrephothmaim,^a and all the way to the Valley of Mizpeh^b on the east; they crushed them, letting none escape. ⁹And Joshua dealt with them as the LORD had ordered him; he hamstringed their horses and burned their chariots.

¹⁰Joshua then turned back and captured Hazor and put her king to the sword.—Hazor was formerly the head of all those kingdoms.—¹¹They proscribed and put to the sword every person in it. Not a soul survived, and Hazor itself was burned down. ¹²Joshua captured all those royal cities and their kings. He put them to the sword; he proscribed them in accordance with the charge of Moses, the servant of the LORD. ¹³However, all those towns that are still standing on their mounds were not burned down by Israel; it was Hazor alone that Joshua burned down. ¹⁴The Israelites kept all the spoil and cattle of the rest of those cities as booty. But they cut down their populations with the sword until they exterminated them; they did not spare a soul. ¹⁵Just as the LORD had commanded His servant Moses, so Moses had charged Joshua, and so Joshua did; he left nothing undone of all that the LORD had commanded Moses.

¹⁶Joshua conquered the whole of this region: the hill country [of Judah], the Negeb, the whole land of Goshen, the Shephelah, the Arabah, and the hill country and coastal plain of Israel—¹⁷[everything] from Mount Halak, which ascends to Seir, all the way to Baal-gad in ^cthe Valley of the Lebanon^c at the foot of Mount Hermon; and he captured all the kings there and executed them.

¹⁸Joshua waged war with all those kings over a long period. ¹⁹Apart from the Hivites who dwelt in Gibeon, not a single city made terms with the Israelites; all were taken in battle. ²⁰For it was the LORD's doing to stiffen their hearts to give battle to Israel, in order that they might be proscribed without quarter and wiped out, as the LORD had commanded Moses.

²¹At that time, Joshua went and wiped out the Anakites from the hill country, from Hebron, Debir, and Anab, from the entire hill country of Judah, and from the entire hill country of Israel; Joshua proscribed them and their towns.

²²No Anakites remained in the land of the Israelites; but some remained in Gaza, Gath, and Ashdod.

a-a Change of vocalization yields "and Misrephoth on the west."

b Apparently identical with Mizpah in v. 3.

c-c I.e., the valley between the Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon ranges.

abling it (cf. 2 Sam. 8.4). 8: The western and eastern extent of the rout. 10: Head of all those kingdoms again suggests Hazor's supremacy in the north. 11–14: The proscription against the northern coalition involves the burning of Hazor and slaughter of its inhabitants, but only the slaughter of the people and kings of the other cities, with booty allowed. 13: Mounds is the word for "tel," the artificial hill formed by the successive building of settlements over earlier ones. 15: Moses . . . Joshua again conveys the transition of divinely ordained leadership.

11.16–23: Summary of the conquest. The acquisition of all the territory west of the Jordan, except Gibeon, is presented in sweeping terms. "Whole," "all," and "entire"—the same Heb word—appear repeatedly in this section to emphasize the complete extent of the conquest. Yet this section likely incorporates several sources, including v. 18, which contains a different notion of the conquest.

17: Mount Halak (Jebel Halaq) is southeast of Beersheba. Seir, a name for the mountain of Edom, east of the Rift Valley. Baal-gad, a northern site, possibly Banias on the slopes of Mount Hermon.

18: The notion that these wars were waged . . . over a long period contradicts the tenor of the previous material, and likely reflects another voice in the text. 19: Made terms, lit. "made shalom," a reference to the treaty with Gibeon.

20: Stiffen their hearts, the phrase used to describe God's control over the pharaoh of the exodus (Exod. 4.21, etc.), thereby allowing Moses to succeed as Joshua now has done. 21: Anakites, a name for pre-Israelite inhabitants of Canaan who were renowned for their stature (Num. 13.33; Deut. 9.2).

21: Mention of the hill country of Judah . . . Israel reflects the perspective of the narrator, aware of a southern and a northern kingdom, Judah and Israel. 22: Gaza, Gath, and Ashdod, all Philistine cities, may indicate that the Anakites were related peoples. The giant Goliath ²³Thus Joshua conquered the whole country, just as the LORD had promised Moses; and Joshua assigned it to Israel to share according to their tribal divisions. And the land had rest from war.

12 The following are the local kings whom the Israelites defeated and whose territories they took possession of:

East of the Jordan, from the Wadi Arnon to Mount Hermon, including the eastern half of the Arabah: ²King Sihon of the Amorites, who resided in Heshbon and ruled over part of Gilead—from Aroer on the bank of the Wadi Arnon and the wadi proper up to the Wadi Jabbok [and] the border of the Ammonites—³and over the eastern Arabah up to the Sea of Chinnereth and, southward by way of Beth-jeshimoth at the foot of the slopes of Pisgah on the east, down to the Sea of the Arabah, that is, the Dead Sea. ⁴Also the territory of King Og of Bashan—one of the last of the Rephaim—who resided in Ashtaroth and in Edrei ⁵and ruled over Mount Hermon, Salcah, and all of Bashan up to the border of the Geshurites and the Maacathites, as also over part of Gilead [down to] the border of King Sihon of Heshbon. ⁶These were vanquished by Moses, the servant of the LORD, and the Israelites; and Moses, the servant of the LORD, assigned ^bthat territory^b as a possession to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh.

⁷And the following are the local kings whom Joshua and the Israelites defeated on the west side of the Jordan—from Baal-gad in the Valley of the Lebanon to Mount Halak, which ascends to Seir—which Joshua assigned as a possession to the tribal divisions of Israel: ⁸in the hill country, in the lowlands, in the Arabah, in the slopes,^c in the wilderness, and in the Negeb—[in the land of] the Hittites, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites. ⁹They were:

	the king of Jericho	1
	the king of Ai, near Bethel,	1
10	the king of Jerusalem	1
	the king of Hebron	1
11	the king of Jarmuth	1
	the king of Lachish	1
12	the king of Eglon	1
	the king of Gezer	1

a Meaning of vv. 2 and 3 uncertain.

b-b Lit. "it."

c I.e., the slopes of Pisgah; cf. 13.20.

was from Gath (1 Sam. 17.4; cf. 2 Sam. 21.19). 23: To share . . . divisions, anticipating the territorial allotments presented in the second half of Joshua. The land had rest from war begins the transition to territorial assignments and also links Joshua's defeat of the Anakites with another tradition in which Caleb defeats them (14.6–13).

12.1–24: The vanquished kings.

Another summary of Israel's victories includes those of Moses in Transjordan (vv. 1–6) and those of Joshua—summarized (vv. 7–8) and then listed by city (vv. 9–24)—west of the Jordan. This chapter continues the main theme of a complete conquest, but accomplishes this in a different form, using lists.

12.1–6: Moses in Transjordan, a summary based on Num. 21.21–35 and Deut. 2.26–3.17 (cf. Joshua 2.10; 9.10). The cities mentioned, as far as they have been identified with excavated ruins, appear not to have been occupied at the time of Israelite beginnings. Again, the historicity of the narrative appears doubtful. 1: Wadi Arnon to Mount Hermon comprises Ammon, Gilead, and Bashan. The east-west Arnon gorge divides Ammon from Moab to the south. 2: Wadi Jabbok, the east-west gorge separating Ammon from Gilead. 4: Bashan, northern Transjordan, known today as the Golan Heights. Rephaim, perhaps a designation for professional chariot warriors, also signified people of great stature (see Deut. 2.20–21). 12.7–8: Joshua's victories, summarized once more, as in 11.2–3, 16–17. 12.9–24: List of conquered cities. This list includes more than twice as many cities as those mentioned in the preceding narratives, indicating how selective the narratives are. Of the total of thirty-one cities, only twenty have been securely identified with excavated sites. Of those, only two—Bethel (v. 16) and Hazor (v. 19)—reflect the claims of Joshua: destruction of a city followed by a smaller, presumably Israelite settlement. This discrepancy between text and archeol-

13	the king of Debir	1
	the king of Geder	1
14	the king of Hormah	1
	the king of Arad	1
15	the king of Libnah	1
	the king of Adullam	1
16	the king of Makkedah	1
	the king of Bethel	1
17	the king of Tappuah	1
	the king of Hopher	1
18	the king of Aphek	1
	the king of Sharon	1
19	the king of Madon	1
	the king of Hazor	1
20	the king of Shimron-meron	1
	the king of Achshaph	1
21	the king of Taanach	1
	the king of Megiddo	1
22	the king of Kedesh	1
	the king of Jokneam in the Carmel	1
23	the king of Dor in the district ^a of Dor	1
	the king of Goiim in Gilgal	1
24	the king of Tirzah	1
	Total number of kings	31.

ogy, as for the Transjordanian cities, points to the Joshua narratives as serving ideological purposes rather than preserving historical sequences of events.

13.1–21.43: Tribal land allotments. Having accomplished his first task, taking possession of most of the land, Joshua must now divide it into portions for all the tribes located west of the Jordan. The priest Eleazar and heads of the family households join Joshua in this task, presented in religious as well as sociopolitical terms. The assignment of Transjordanian allotments by Moses is reviewed (ch 13), and the apportionment of the remaining tribal lands follows (chs 14–19). It uses boundary descriptions as well as lists of towns; and brief narratives, integrated into some of the tribal sections, give an instructional quality to the otherwise tedious designations of territory. The final allotments, within tribal possessions, are the cities of refuge (ch 20) and the Levitical cities (ch 21). It is unclear which period, if any, these lists reflect.

13 Joshua was now old, advanced in years. The LORD said to him, “You have grown old, you are advanced in years; and very much of the land still remains to be taken possession of. ²This is the territory that remains: all the districts of the Philistines and all [those of] the Geshurites, ³from the Shihor, which is close to Egypt, to the territory of Ekron on the north, are accounted Canaanite, namely, those of the five lords of the Philistines—the Gazites, the Ashdodites, the Ashkelonites, the Gittites, and the Ekronites—and those of the Avvim ⁴on the south; further, all the Canaanite country from Mearah of the Sidonians to Aphek at the Amorite border ⁵and the land of the Gebalites, with the whole [Valley of the] Lebanon, from Baal-gad at the foot of Mount Hermon to Lebohamath on the east, ⁶with all the inhabitants of the hill country from the [Valley of the] Lebanon to ^bMisrephothmaim, ^bnamely, all the Sidonians. I Myself will dispossess ^cthose nations^c for the Israelites; you have only to apportion ^dtheir lands^d by lot among Israel, as I have commanded you. ⁷Therefore, divide this territory into heredi-

13.1–7: The remaining land. Despite the overall picture of complete conquest, these verses acknowledge that some territory, in the southeast and the north, is not yet controlled by Israelites according to the full dimensions of the land in Num. 34.1–12. Other passages in chs 13–21 will similarly acknowledge the presence of uncaptured areas or of foreigners remaining within tribal boundaries (15.63; 16.10; 17.11–13; 19.47).

1: The beginning of this verse is similar to 23.1. This suggests that the intervening material, dealing with tribal allotments, may be a resumptive repetition, which was inserted secondarily in Joshua.

2: Philistines and Geshurites controlled the southwestern coast and the land east of the Sea of Galilee, respectively. These areas became Israelite at the time of the united monarchy (2 Sam. 8.1–2; 3.3).

4–6: Areas to the north and northeast (i.e., Phoenicia) will be taken for the Israelites by God. 7: Heredi- a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b See note on 11.8.

c-c Lit. “them.” d-d Lit. “it.”

tary portions for the nine tribes and the half-tribe of Manasseh.”

⁸Now the Reubenites and the Gadites, along with ^athe other half-tribe,^a had already received the shares which Moses assigned to them on the east side of the Jordan—as assigned to them by Moses the servant of the LORD: ⁹from Aroer on the edge of the Wadi Arnon and the town in the middle of the wadi, the entire Tableland [from] Medeba to Dibon, ¹⁰embracing all the towns of King Sihon of the Amorites, who had reigned in Heshbon, up to the border of the Ammonites; ¹¹further, Gilead, the territories of the Geshurites and the Maacathites, and all of Mount Hermon, and the whole of Bashan up to Salcah—¹²the entire kingdom of Og, who had reigned over Bashan at Ashtaroth and at Edrei. (He was the last of the remaining Rephaim.) These were defeated and dispossessed by Moses; ¹³but the Israelites failed to dispossess the Geshurites and the Maacathites, and Geshur and Maacath remain among Israel to this day. ¹⁴No hereditary portion, however, was assigned to the tribe of Levi, their portion being the fire offerings of the LORD, the God of Israel, as He spoke concerning them.^b

¹⁵And so Moses assigned [the following] to the tribe of the Reubenites, for their various clans, ¹⁶and it became theirs: The territory from Aroer, on the edge of the Wadi Arnon and the town in the middle of the wadi, up to Medeba—the entire Tableland—¹⁷Heshbon and all its towns in the Tableland: Dibon, Bamoth-baal, Beth-baal-meon, ¹⁸Jahaz, Kedemoth, Mephaath, ¹⁹Kiriathaim, Sibmah, and Zereth-shahar ^cin the hill of the valley,^c ²⁰Beth-peor, the slopes of Pisgah, and Beth-jeshimoth—²¹all the towns of the Tableland and the entire kingdom of Sihon, the king of the Amorites, who had reigned in Heshbon. (For Moses defeated him and the Midianite chiefs Evi, Rekem, Zur, Hur, and Reba, who had dwelt in the land as princes of Sihon. ²²Together with the others that they slew, the Israelites put Balaam son of Beor, the augur, to the sword.) ²³The boundary of the Reubenites was the edge of the Jordan. That was the portion of the Reubenites for their various clans—those towns with their villages.

²⁴To the tribe of Gad, for the various Gadite clans, Moses assigned [the following], ²⁵and it became their territory: Jazer, all the towns of Gilead, part of the country of the Ammonites up to Aroer, which is close to Rabbah,

tary portions is the translation of “naḥalah,” a word appearing repeatedly in the allotment chapters, usually as “portion” (e.g., 13.14, 23, 33; 14.2, 3; 15.1, 13, 20; 19.49). A legal term, it designates land as part of an estate; God, the ultimate owner of the land, bestows it on the tribes.

13.8–33: Transjordanian allotments. A general description of the territories across the Jordan (vv. 8–13) and a statement about Levi’s lack of territory (v. 14) are followed by a detailed description of the boundaries and cities of the two-and-a-half Transjordanian tribes (vv. 15–32) and another statement about the Levites having no portion (v. 33). This land was rarely controlled by the Israelites but was usually considered within the ideal boundaries of the land (as Deut. 3.12–18). 10–12: Sihon and Og, Transjordanian rulers said to have been conquered by Moses, are repeatedly mentioned in Joshua (see 12.2–6). 13: One of several acknowledgements that not all the land was controlled by Israelites. 14: Levi, a priestly group, lacks its own tribal lands and will be dispersed among the other tribes (ch 21). Fire offerings, sacrifices brought by other Israelites, become the revenues of the officiants. 15: Reubenites, descendants of Jacob’s first-born son, come first here as elsewhere in the Bible (e.g., Gen. 35.23; 46.8, 9; Exod. 1.2). 20: Beth-peor, a place near the burial spot of Moses (Deut. 34.6). Probably the same as Baal Peor, it is the site of the idolatrous Israelite behavior (Num. ch 25) alluded to in Joshua 22.17. 21: Midianite, a designation for southern groups controlling desert trade routes. Seen as close to the Israelites at the time of Moses (Exod. 3.1), they are elsewhere Israel’s enemies (Judg. chs 7–8). 22: Balaam . . . the augur, a prophetic figure depicted favorably in Num. chs 22–24, is here said to have been killed by Israelites (cf. Num. 31.8). 23: Towns with their villages denotes walled settlements with their satellite settlements (cf. 6.3 n.).

a-a Lit. “it.”

b See Deut. 18.1.

c-c Eneudation yields “in the hill country; and in the Valley . . .”

²⁶and from Heshbon to Ramath-mizpeh and Betonim, and from Mahanaim to the border of Lidbir;^a ²⁷and in the Valley, Beth-haram, Beth-nimrah, Succoth, and Zaphon—the rest of the kingdom of Sihon, the king of Heshbon—down to the edge of the Jordan and up to the tip of the Sea of Chinnereth on the east side of the Jordan. ²⁸That was the portion of the Gadites, for their various clans—those towns with their villages.

²⁹And to the half-tribe of Manasseh Moses assigned [the following], so that it went to the half-tribe of Manasseh, for its various clans,³⁰ and became their territory: Mahanaim,^b all of Bashan, the entire kingdom of Og, king of Bashan, and all of Havvoth-jair^c in Bashan, sixty towns;³¹ and part of Gilead, and Ashtaroth and Edrei, the royal cities of Og in Bashan, were assigned to the descendants of Machir son of Manasseh—to a part of the descendants of Machir—for their various clans.

³²Those, then, were the portions that Moses assigned in the steppes of Moab, on the east side of the Jordan. ³³But no portion was assigned by Moses to the tribe of Levi; the LORD, the God of Israel, is their portion, as He spoke concerning them.^d

14 And these are the allotments of the Israelites in the land of Canaan, that were apportioned to them by the priest Eleazar, by Joshua son of Nun, and by the heads of the ancestral houses of the Israelite tribes, ²the portions that fell to them by lot, as the LORD had commanded through Moses for the nine and a half tribes. ³For the portion of the other two and a half tribes had been assigned to them by Moses on the other side of the Jordan. He had not assigned any portion among them to the Levites; ⁴for whereas the descendants of Joseph constituted two tribes, Manasseh and Ephraim, the Levites were assigned no share in the land, but only some towns to live in, with the pastures for their livestock and cattle. ⁵Just as the LORD had commanded Moses, so the Israelites did when they apportioned the land.

⁶The Judites approached Joshua at Gilgal, and Caleb son of Jephunneh the Kenizzite said to him: “You know what instructions the LORD gave at Kadesh-barnea to Moses, the man of God, concerning you and me. ⁷I was forty years old when Moses the servant of the LORD sent me from Kadesh-barnea to spy out the land, and I gave 14.1–5: Introduction to the allotments west of the Jordan. The lands of the other nine-and-a-half tribes are assigned by Joshua, the priest Eleazar, and officials of subtribal units through the casting of lots. 1: Eleazar is the priest who presided at Joshua’s installation as successor to Moses (Num. 27.15–23). Heads of the ancestral houses, denoting leaders of household groups smaller than tribes, appears only here and in 19.51 and 21.1. 2: Apportionment by lot was the standard procedure for assigning undivided inheritances in the ancient Near East. The tribes are thus made co-beneficiaries of God’s bequest. This explains the role of Eleazar, who is probably imagined as the official casting lots with the Urim and Thummim (see Ezra 2.63; Neh. 7.65). 4: Manasseh and Ephraim, the sons of Joseph, one of Jacob’s twelve sons, each become eponymous ancestors of land-holding tribes to compensate for Levi as a tribe without territory, thus maintaining the total of twelve territorial tribes.

14.6–17.18: Judah and Joseph allotments. Allocation of tribal lands proceeds in stylized format: A narrative framework encloses boundaries and town lists as well as brief stories. The first tribe is Judah (14.6–15.63), which will become the most prominent of all as the biblical story unfolds. The one-and-a-half Joseph tribes are next (chs 16–17); these would be central in the Northern Kingdom. The emphasis on Judah and Joseph, and certain parallels in the structure used to describe them, thus reflect the prominence of the Northern and Southern Kingdoms after the monarchy is divided in the early 10th century (ca. 922 BCE).

14.6–15: Caleb’s role. A narrative reviewing deeds of a leading Judahite figure, Caleb, begins the Judahite allotment. It reinforces a main theme of the book: God keeps His word, obedience is rewarded, and through God’s power, even the greatest enemies are vanquished. 6: Caleb, one of the

^a Change of vocalization yields “Lo-debar”; cf. 2 Sam. 9.4, 5; 17.27.

^b Lit. “from Mahanaim.”

^c See note on Num. 32.41. ^d See Deut. 18.1.

him a forthright report. ⁸ While my companions who went up with me took the heart out of the people, I was loyal to the LORD my God. ⁹ On that day, Moses promised on oath, 'The land on which your foot trod shall be a portion for you and your descendants forever, because you were loyal to the LORD my God.' ¹⁰ Now the LORD has preserved me, as He promised. It is forty-five years since the LORD made this promise to Moses, when Israel was journeying through the wilderness; and here I am today, eighty-five years old. ¹¹ I am still as strong today as on the day that Moses sent me; my strength is the same now as it was then, for battle and for activity. ¹² So assign to me this hill country as the LORD promised on that day. Though you too heard on that day that Anakites are there and great fortified cities, if only the LORD is with me, I will dispossess them, as the LORD promised."

¹³ So Joshua blessed Caleb son of Jephunneh and assigned Hebron to him as his portion. ¹⁴ Thus Hebron became the portion of Caleb son of Jephunneh the Kenizzite, as it still is, because he was loyal to the LORD, the God of Israel.—¹⁵ The name of Hebron was formerly Kiriath-arba: [Arba] was the great man among the Anakites.

And the land had rest from war.

15 The portion that fell by lot to the various clans of the tribe of Judah lay farthest south, down to the border of Edom, which is the Wilderness of Zin. ² Their southern boundary began from the tip of the Dead Sea, from the tongue that projects southward. ³ It proceeded to the south of the Ascent of Akrabbim, passed on to Zin, ascended to the south of Kadesh-barnea, passed on to Hezron, ascended to Addar, and made a turn to Karka. ⁴ From there it passed on to Azmon and proceeded to the Wadi of Egypt; and the boundary ran on to the Sea. That shall be your southern boundary.

⁵ The boundary on the east was the Dead Sea up to the mouth of the Jordan. On the northern side, the boundary began at the tongue of the Sea at the mouth of the Jordan. ⁶ The boundary ascended to Beth-hoglah and passed north of Beth-arabah; then the boundary ascended to the Stone of Bohan son of Reuben. ⁷ The boundary ascended ^b from the Valley of Achor to Debir and turned north ^b to Gilgal, ^c facing the Ascent of Adummim which is south of the wadi; from there the boundary continued to the waters of En-shemesh and ran on to En-rogel. ⁸ Then the boundary ascended into the Valley of Ben-hinnom, along twelve spies sent out by Moses (Num. chs 13–14), was celebrated for military prowess and loyalty in defeating the formidable Anakites (see 11.21–22). Kenizzite, originally a non-Israelite group, perhaps from Edom (Gen. 36.9–11, 15, 42), but later incorporated into the Judahite genealogy (Judg. 1.13).

8: Took the heart out, undermined the morale of the people, who feared the might of the inhabitants of the land. 13: Hebron, in the hills 30 km (19 miles) south of Jerusalem. 15: Kiriath-arba, lit. "Town of the Four," may mean that it once was a small coalition of neighboring settlements. But "Arba" becomes etymologically linked with the Anakites.

15.1–63: Judah's allotment consists of three different types of materials: boundary descriptions (vv. 1–12), a brief narrative about Caleb and Othniel (vv. 13–19), and a list of towns (vv. 20–63) that ends with a notice of the failure to capture Jerusalem.

15.1–12: Judah's boundaries are laid out in a counterclockwise direction: south (vv. 2–4), east (v. 5a), north (vv. 5b–11), and west (12a). A summary statement appears in v. 12b. 1: Zin, northeast of Kadesh-barnea (see Num. 20.1), is probably a region of the northern Negev. 3: Hezron, also the name of a Judahite figure considered the ancestor of most of the families in the hill country of Judah (Gen. 46.12; Num. 26.21; 1 Chron. 2.9–55). 4: Wadi of Egypt, presumably Wadi el-Arish, southwest of Gaza. 6: Bohan, nowhere else listed as a son of Reuben (except 18.17), means "thumb" and may be a topographical feature (thumb-shaped stone) displacing a personal name. 8: Jebusites, implying Jerusalem is not yet Israelite.

a Lit. "and to go out and come in." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Apparently identical with Geliloth, 18.17.

the southern flank of the Jebusites—that is, Jerusalem. The boundary then ran up to the top of the hill which flanks the Valley of Hinnom on the west, at the northern end of the Valley of Rephaim. ⁹From that hilltop the boundary curved to the fountain of the Waters of Nephtoah and ran on to the towns of Mount Ephron; then the boundary curved to Baalah—that is, Kiriath-jearim. ¹⁰From Baalah the boundary turned westward to Mount Seir,^a passed north of the slope of Mount Jearim—that is, Chesalon—descended to Beth-shemesh, and passed on to Timnah. ¹¹The boundary then proceeded to the northern flank of Ekron; the boundary curved to Shikkeron, passed on to Mount Baalah, and proceeded to Jabneel; and the boundary ran on to the Sea. ¹²And the western boundary was the edge of the Mediterranean Sea. Those were the boundaries of the various clans of the Judites on all sides.

¹³In accordance with the LORD's command to Joshua, Caleb son of Jephunneh was given a portion among the Judites, namely, Kiriath-arba—that is, Hebron. ([Arba] was the father of Anak.) ¹⁴Caleb dislodged from there the three Anakites: Sheshai, Ahiman, and Talmai, descendants of Anak. ¹⁵From there he marched against the inhabitants of Debir—the name of Debir was formerly Kiriath-sepher—¹⁶and Caleb announced, "I will give my daughter Achsah in marriage to the man who attacks and captures Kiriath-sepher." ¹⁷His kinsman Othniel the Kenizzite^b captured it; and Caleb gave him his daughter Achsah in marriage.

^{18c}When she came [to him], she induced him^c to ask her father for some property. She dismounted from her donkey, and Caleb asked her, "What is the matter?" ¹⁹She replied, "Give me a present; for you have given me away as Negeb-land;^d so give me springs of water." And he gave her Upper and Lower Gulloth.^e

²⁰This was the portion of the tribe of the Judites by their clans:

²¹The towns at the far end of the tribe of Judah, near the border of Edom, in the Negeb, were: Kabzeel, Eder, Jagur, ²²Kinah, Dimonah, Adadah, ²³Kedesh, Hazor, Ithnan, ²⁴Ziph, Telem, Bealoth, ²⁵Hazor-hadattah, Kerioth-hezron—that is, Hazor—²⁶Amam, Shema, Moladah, ²⁷Hazar-gaddah, Heshmon, Beth-pelet, ²⁸Hazar-shual, Beer-sheba, Biziothiah, ²⁹Baalath, Iim, Ezem, ³⁰Eltolad, Chesil, Hormah, ³¹Ziklag, Madmannah, Sansannah, 15.13–19: Recollections of Caleb and Othniel (see 10.36–39; 14.8–13; this material is repeated with minor variants in Judg. 1.9–15). As already reported, Caleb conquers Hebron. His Kenizzite kinsman takes Debir and marries Caleb's daughter. 15: Debir, south of Hebron, is probably Khirbet Rabūd. 17: Achsah, Caleb's daughter, is a reward for Othniel's victory. She in turn manipulates her father so that she owns well-watered lands (vv. 18–19).

15.20–63: Judah's towns. The list is the longest and most detailed of the tribal town lists, a function of the material available to the author, and reflecting Judah's leading role in the biblical account of ancient Israel—it is the tribe of the Davidic dynasty and the dominant tribe of the Southern Kingdom, Judah. If one includes the two units not yet conquered (the Philistine cities, vv. 45–47; Jerusalem, v. 63), the towns comprise twelve units and probably represent authentic administrative districts established later during the monarchy. 63: Contrast Judg. 1.21.

a Not the Seir of Edom. b Cf. 14.6, 14.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Some Greek mss. read "he induced her"; cf. Judg. 1.14.

d I.e., as a dryland, that is, without a dowry. e I.e., "springs."

³² ^aLebaoth, Shilhim, ^aAin and Rimmon. ^b Total: 29^c towns, with their villages.

³³ In the Lowland: Eshtaol, Zorah, Ashnah, ³⁴ Zanoah, En-gannim, Tappuah, Enam, ³⁵ Jarmuth, Adullam, Socoh, Azekah, ³⁶ Shaaraim, Adithaim, Gederah, and Gederothaim—14^d towns, with their villages.

³⁷ Zenan, Hadashah, Migdal-gad, ³⁸ Dilan, Mizpeh, Joktheel, ³⁹ Lachish, Bozkath, Eglon, ⁴⁰ Cabbon, Lahmas, Chithlish, ⁴¹ Gederoth, Beth-dagon, Naamah, and Makkedah: 16 towns, with their villages.

⁴² Libnah, Ether, Ashan, ⁴³ Iphtah, Ashnah, Nezib, ⁴⁴ Keilah, Achzib, and Mareshah: 9 towns, with their villages.

⁴⁵ Ekron, with its dependencies and villages. ⁴⁶ From Ekron westward, all the towns in the vicinity of Ashdod, with their villages—⁴⁷ Ashdod, its dependencies and its villages—Gaza, its dependencies and its villages, all the way to the Wadi of Egypt and the edge of the Mediterranean Sea.

⁴⁸ And in the hill country: Shamir, Jattir, Socoh, ⁴⁹ Danah, Kiriath-sannah^e—that is, Debir—⁵⁰ Anab, Eshtemoh, Anim, ⁵¹ Goshen, Holon, and Giloh: 11 towns, with their villages.

⁵² Arab, Dumah, Eshan, ⁵³ Janum, Beth-tappuah, Aphekah, ⁵⁴ Humtah, Kiriath-arba—that is, Hebron—and Zior: 9 towns, with their villages.

⁵⁵ Maon, Carmel, Ziph, Juttah, ⁵⁶ Jezreel, Jokdeam, Zanoah, ⁵⁷ Kain, Gibeah, and Timnah: 10 towns, with their villages.

⁵⁸ Halhul, Beth-zur, Gedor, ⁵⁹ Maarath, Beth-anoth, and Eltekon: 6 towns, with their villages.^f

⁶⁰ Kiriath-baal—that is, Kiriath-jearim—and Rabbah: 2 towns, with their villages.

⁶¹ In the wilderness: Beth-arabah, Middin, Secacah, ⁶² Nibshan, Ir-melah,^g and En-gedi: 6 towns, with their villages.

⁶³ But the Judites could not dispossess the Jebusites, the inhabitants of Jerusalem; so the Judites dwell with the Jebusites in Jerusalem to this day.

a-a Cf. below 19.6.

b Cf. Ain, Rimmon, 19.7 below, and 1 Chron. 4.32; En-rimmon, Neh. 11.29.

c The number is uncertain. Some of the same towns are listed under Simeon, cf. 19.1-9; so Rashi.

d The number is uncertain. Tappuah and Enam may have been one place; so Rashi on basis of 17.7.

e Emendation yields "Kiriath-sepher"; cf. Septuagint.

f Septuagint adds: Tekoa, Ephrathah—that is, Bethlehem—Peor, Etam, Kulon, Tatani, Sores, Karem, Gallim, Bether, and Manach—11 towns, with their villages.

g Or "the City of Salt."

16 The portion that fell by lot to the Josephites ran from the Jordan at Jericho—from the waters of Jericho east of the wilderness. From Jericho it ascended through the hill country to Bethel. ²From Bethel it ran to Luz and passed on to the territory of the Archites at Ataroth, ³descended westward to the territory of the Japhletites as far as the border of Lower Beth-horon and Gezer, and ran on to the Sea. ⁴Thus the Josephites—that is, Manasseh and Ephraim—received their portion.

⁵The territory of the Ephraimites, by their clans, was as follows: The boundary of their portion ran from Atroth-addar on the east to Upper Beth-horon, ⁶and the boundary ran on to the Sea. And on the north, the boundary proceeded from Michmethath to the east of Taanath-shiloh and passed beyond it up to the east of Janoah; ⁷from Janoah it descended to Ataroth and Naarath, touched on Jericho, and ran on to the Jordan. ⁸Westward, the boundary proceeded from Tappuah to the Wadi Kanah and ran on to the Sea. This was the portion of the tribe of the Ephraimites, by their clans, ⁹together with the towns marked off^a for the Ephraimites within the territory of the Manassites—all those towns with their villages. ¹⁰However, they failed to dispossess the Canaanites who dwelt in Gezer; so the Canaanites remained in the midst of Ephraim, as is still the case. But they had to perform forced labor.

17 And this is the portion that fell by lot to the tribe of Manasseh—for he was Joseph's first-born. Since Machir, the first-born of Manasseh and the father of Gilead, was a valiant warrior, Gilead and Bashan were assigned to him. ²And now assignments were made to the remaining Manassites, by their clans: the descendants of Abiezer, Helek, Asriel, Shechem, Hopher, and Shemida. Those were the male descendants of Manasseh son of Joseph, by their clans.

³Now Zelophehad son of Hopher son of Gilead son of Machir son of Manasseh had no sons, but only daughters. The names of his daughters were Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah. ⁴They appeared before the priest Eleazer, Joshua son of Nun, and the chieftains, saying: "The LORD commanded Moses to grant us a portion among our male kinsmen." So, in accordance with the LORD's instructions, they were granted a portion among their father's kinsmen. ⁵Ten districts fell to Manasseh, apart from the lands of Gilead and Bashan, which are across the Jordan. ⁶Manasseh's daughters inherited a por-

16.1–17.18: Joseph's allotment (Ephraim and half of Manasseh). The Joseph tribes dominate the Northern Kingdom and thus are presented immediately after Judah. An introductory narrative (16.1–4) treats the Joseph tribes together, and the Ephraimite boundaries are then described (16.5–10). A brief narrative scene relaying the story of several female descendants of Manasseh (17.1–6) precedes the description of Manasseh's borders (17.7–13) and a Josephite complaint about its allotment (17.14–18). Manasseh lacks a town list.

16.1–4: Introductory narrative links Ephraim and half Manasseh and delineates their southern border. 1: One lot for more than one tribe suggests the ambiguity of the Joseph tribes—more than one, less than two.

16.5–10: Ephraim's boundaries, a much less detailed account than for Judah. 10: Canaanites . . . in Gezer resist Israelite control until the time of Solomon (see 10.33 n.; cf. Judg. 1.29).

17.1–6: Manassite clans—male and female. 1: Manasseh—for he was Joseph's first-born, in agreement with the tradition in Gen. 48.13–20. Machir, Manasseh's oldest son, represents the Transjordanian part of Manasseh, though he is elsewhere associated with events west of the Jordan (Judg. 5.14–17). Valiant warrior may be an attempt to provide for Manasseh a hint of heroic deeds, like those of Caleb and Othniel for the Judahites (14.6–13; 15.13–17). 3: No sons, but only daughters, this is noteworthy because the land is typically passed through the male line. 4: Appeared before the leaders, indicating women as well as men had access to certain official decision-making groups. 6: In this anomalous case, where there are no direct male heirs, the sisters receive a portion (cf. Num. 27.1–11; 36.1–12), just as Achsah acquired land.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^b Cf. Num. 27.1–11.

tion in these together with his sons, while the land of Gil-ead was assigned to the rest of Manasseh's descendants.

⁷The boundary of Manasseh ran from Asher to Michmethath, which lies near Shechem. The boundary continued to the right, toward the inhabitants of En-tappuah.—⁸The region of Tappuah belonged to Manasseh; but Tappuah, on the border of Manasseh, belonged to the Ephraimites.—⁹Then the boundary descended to the Wadi Kanah. Those towns to the south of the wadi belonged to Ephraim as an enclave among the towns of Manasseh. The boundary of Manasseh lay north of the wadi and ran on to the Sea.¹⁰ What lay to the south belonged to Ephraim, and what lay to the north belonged to Manasseh, with the Sea as its boundary. [This territory] was contiguous with Asher on the north and with Issachar on the east. ¹¹ Within Issachar and Asher, Manasseh possessed Beth-shean and its dependencies, Ibleam and its dependencies, the inhabitants of Dor and its dependencies, the inhabitants of En-dor and its dependencies, the inhabitants of Taanach and its dependencies, and the inhabitants of Megiddo and its dependencies: "these constituted three regions."

¹²The Manassites could not dispossess [the inhabitants of] these towns, and the Canaanites stubbornly remained in this region. ¹³ When the Israelites became stronger, they imposed tribute on the Canaanites; but they did not dispossess them.

¹⁴The Josephites complained to Joshua, saying, "Why have you assigned as our portion a single allotment and a single district, seeing that we are a numerous people whom the LORD has blessed so greatly?" ¹⁵ "If you are a numerous people," Joshua answered them, "go up to the forest country and clear an area for yourselves there, in the territory of the Perizzites and the Rephaim, seeing that you are cramped in the hill country of Ephraim." ¹⁶ "The hill country is not enough for us," the Josephites replied, "and all the Canaanites who live in the valley area have iron chariots, both those in Beth-shean and its dependencies and those in the Valley of Jezreel." ¹⁷ But Joshua declared to the House of Joseph, to Ephraim and Manasseh, "You are indeed a numerous people, possessed of great strength; you shall not have one allotment only. ¹⁸ The hill country shall be yours as well; true, it is forest land, but you will clear it and possess it to its farthest limits. And you shall also dispossess the Canaanites, even though they have iron chariots and even though they are strong."

17.7–13: Manasseh's boundaries are incomplete and irregular, with Ephraimite towns within Manasseh (v. 9), and with Manasseh holding towns of Issachar and Asher (vv. 11–12). As for Ephraim, Canaanites remain and pay tribute to Manasseh (vv. 12–13; cf. Judg. 1.27–28). 7: Shechem, the major city between Mounts Ebal and Gerizim (cf. 8.30–35), will be an asylum town (20.7), a Levitical city (21.21), and the site of the covenant scene of ch 24. 11: Dor, probably not the coastal city of that name. 12: These towns, the ones listed in v. 11, are all located in the Jezreel Valley, an area of great strategic and economic importance and a traditional Canaanite stronghold (see v. 16).

17.14–18: Joseph's complaints. The logic of the Josephite complaint and Joshua's response is vague, suggesting that vv. 14–15 and 16–18 are separate traditions that have not been smoothly combined. The text is problematic in places, but may reflect an old tradition, now known through archaeology, that the earliest Israelite settlements were in the hill country. 15: Forest country, denoting land still heavily forested in early biblical times. 17: House of Joseph, an unusual designation, contrasting with the standard "Josephite" (lit. "children of Joseph") of chs 16–17 and highlighting the importance of the Joseph tribes.

18 The whole community of the Israelite people assembled at Shiloh, and set up the Tent of Meeting there. The land was now under their control; ²but there remained seven tribes of the Israelites which had not yet received their portions. ³So Joshua said to the Israelites, "How long will you be slack about going and taking possession of the land which the LORD, the God of your fathers, has assigned to you? ⁴Appoint three men of each tribe; I will send them out to go through the country and write down a description of it for purposes of apportionment, and then come back to me. ⁵They shall divide it into seven parts—Judah shall remain by its territory in the south, and the house of Joseph shall remain by its territory in the north.—⁶When you have written down the description of the land in seven parts, bring it here to me. Then I will cast lots for you here before the LORD our God. ⁷For the Levites have no share among you, since the priesthood of the LORD is their portion; and Gad and Reuben and the half-tribe of Manasseh have received the portions which were assigned to them by Moses the servant of the LORD, on the eastern side of the Jordan."

⁸The men set out on their journeys. Joshua ordered the men who were leaving to write down a description of the land—"Go, traverse the country and write down a description of it. Then return to me, and I will cast lots for you here at Shiloh before the LORD."

⁹So the men went and traversed the land; they described it in a document, town by town, in seven parts, and they returned to Joshua in the camp at Shiloh. ¹⁰Joshua cast lots for them at Shiloh before the LORD, and there Joshua apportioned the land among the Israelites according to their divisions.

¹¹The lot of the tribe of the Benjaminites, by their clans, came out first. The territory which fell to their lot lay between the Judites and the Josephites. ¹²The boundary on their northern rim began at the Jordan; the boundary ascended to the northern flank of Jericho, ascended westward into the hill country and ran on to the Wilderness of Beth-aven. ¹³From there the boundary passed on southward to Luz, to the flank of Luz—that is, Bethel; then the boundary descended to Atroth-addar [and] to the hill south of Lower Beth-horon. ¹⁴The boundary now turned and curved onto the western rim; and the boundary ran southward from the hill on the south side of Beth-horon till it ended at Kiriath-baal—that is, Kiriath-jearim—a town of the Judites. That was the western rim. ¹⁵The southern rim: From the outskirts of Kiriath-jearim, the 18.1–19.51: Allotments to the remaining seven tribes. These portions are described with far less detail than are those of the Judahites and Josephites, clearly the leading groups in ancient Israel.

18.1–10: Survey of the land. Introducing the last accounts of apportionment is the report of a reconnaissance (cf. 2.1; 7.2) of the territory to be divided. 1: Shiloh, mentioned often in this chapter (and also 19.51; 21.2; 22.9, 12), was the major northern sacred site before the monarchy (see 1 Sam. chs 1–4). Modern Khirbet Seilûn, it is in the heart of Ephraim some 30 km (19 miles) north of Jerusalem. Tent of Meeting, another term for the portable sanctuary ("mishkan," or "tabernacle") of the wilderness period. 4: Write down, a command assuming some literacy among some Israelites; the general rate of literacy in ancient Israel is debated. 10: Lots . . . LORD, makes the apportionment the result of God's will.

18.11–28: Benjamin's portion. Benjamin is north of Judah and with Judah forms the Southern Kingdom after the monarchy divides. A boundary description (vv. 12–20) precedes the town list (vv. 21–28), which is organized by districts as are the Judahite towns. 28: Jerusalem is a Judahite town in 15.63.

boundary passed westward^a and ran on to the fountain of the Waters of Nephtoah. ¹⁶Then the boundary descended to the foot of the hill by the Valley of Ben-hinnom at the northern end of the Valley of Rephaim; then it ran down the Valley of Hinnom along the southern flank of the Jebusites to En-rogel. ¹⁷Curving northward, it ran on to En-shemesh and ran on to Geliloth, facing the Ascent of Adummim, and descended to the Stone of Bohan son of Reuben. ¹⁸It continued northward to the edge of the Arabah and descended into the Arabah. ¹⁹The boundary passed on to the northern flank of Beth-hoglah, and the boundary ended at the northern tongue of the Dead Sea, at the southern end of the Jordan. That was the southern boundary. ²⁰On their eastern rim, finally, the Jordan was their boundary. That was the portion of the Benjaminites, by their clans, according to its boundaries on all sides.

²¹And the towns of the tribe of the Benjaminites, by its clans, were: Jericho, Beth-hoglah, Emek-keziz, ²²Beth-arabah, Zemaraim, Bethel, ²³Avvim, Parah, Ophrah, ²⁴Chephar-ammonah, Ophni, and Geba—12 towns, with their villages. ²⁵Also Gibeon, Ramah, Beeroth, ²⁶Mizpeh, Chephirah, Mozah, ²⁷Rekem, Irpeel, Taralah, ²⁸Zela, Eleph, and Jebus^b—that is, Jerusalem—Gibeath [and] Kiriath:^c 14 towns, with their villages. That was the portion of the Benjaminites, by their clans.

19 The second lot fell to Simeon. The portion of the tribe of the Simeonites, by their clans, lay inside the portion of the Judites. ²Their portion comprised: Beer-sheba—or Sheba—Moladah, ³Hazar-shual, Balah, Ezem, ⁴Eltolad, Bethul,^d Hormah, ⁵Ziklag, Beth-marcaboth, Hazar-susah, ⁶e Beth-lebaoth, and Sharuhene^e—13 towns, with their villages. ⁷Ain, Rimmon, Ether, and Ashan: 4 towns, with their villages—⁸together with all the villages in the vicinity of those towns, down to Baalath-beer [and] Ramath-negeb. That was the portion of the tribe of the Simeonites, by their clans. ⁹The portion of the Simeonites was part of the territory of the Judites; since the share of the Judites was larger than they needed, the Simeonites received a portion inside their portion.

¹⁰The third lot emerged for the Zebulunites, by their clans. The boundary of their portion: Starting at Sarid, ¹¹their boundary^f ascended westward to Maralah, touching Dabbesheth and touching the wadi alongside Jok-

19.1-9: Simeon's portion. This brief section indicates that Simeon's territory was eventually incorporated into that of Judah (vv. 1, 9; cf. Judg. 1.3).

19.10-16: Zebulun's portion. The borders (vv. 10-14) and a brief list of towns (v. 15) are given for Zebulun. The area is in southern Galilee and is wedged in among four other tribes.

a Emendation yields "eastward." b Heb. "the Jebusite."

c Emendation yields "and Kiriath-jearim."

d 15.30 reads "Chesil." e-e 15.32 reads "Shilhim." f I.e., the southern one.

neam.¹² And it also ran from Sarid along the eastern side, where the sun rises, past the territory of Chisloth-tabor and on to Daberath and ascended to Japhia.¹³ From there it ran [back] to the east, toward the sunrise, to Gath-hepher, to Eth-kazin, and on to Rimmon, where it curved to Neah.¹⁴ Then it turned—that is, the boundary on the north—to Hannathon. Its extreme limits^a were the Valley of Iphtah-el,¹⁵ Kattath, Nahalal, Shimron, Idalah, and Bethlehem: 12 towns, with their villages.¹⁶ That was the portion of the Zebulunites by their clans—those towns, with their villages.

¹⁷The fourth lot fell to Issachar, the Issacharites by their clans.¹⁸ Their territory comprised: Jezreel, Chesulloth, Shunem,¹⁹ Hapharaim, Shion, Anaharath,²⁰ Rabbith, Kishion, Ebez,²¹ Remeth, En-gannim, En-haddah, and Beth-pazzez.²² The boundary touched Tabor, Shaha-zimah, and Beth-shemesh; and their boundary ran to the Jordan: 16 towns, with their villages.²³ That was the portion of the tribe of the Issacharites, by their clans—the towns with their villages.

²⁴The fifth lot fell to the tribe of the Asherites, by their clans.²⁵ Their boundary^b ran along Helkath, Hali, Beten, Achshaph,²⁶ Allammelech, Amad, and Mishal; and it touched Carmel on the west, and Shihor-libnath.²⁷ It also ran^c along the east side to Beth-dagon, and touched Zebulun and the Valley of Iphtah-el to the north, [as also] Bethemek and Neiel; ^dthen it ran to Cabul on the north;^d²⁸ Ebron,^e Rehob, Hammon, and Kanah, up to Great Sidon.²⁹ The boundary turned to Ramah and on to the fortified city of Tyre; then the boundary turned to Hosah^d and it ran on westward to Mehebel,^d Achzib,³⁰ Ummah, Aphek, and Rehob: 22 towns, with their villages.³¹ That was the portion of the tribe of the Asherites, by their clans—those towns, with their villages.

³²The sixth lot fell to the Naphtalites, the Naphtalites by their clans.³³ Their boundary ran from Heleph, Elon-bezaananim, Adami-nekeb, and Jabneel to Lakkum, and it ended at the Jordan.³⁴ The boundary then turned westward to Aznoth-tabor and ran from there to Hukok. It touched Zebulun on the south, and it touched Asher on the west, and Judah at the Jordan on the east.³⁵ Its fortified towns were Ziddim, Zer, Hammath, Rakkath, Chin-

19.17–23: Issachar's portion. This short account features a list of territories and an attenuated description of its borders between the eastern Jezreel Valley and the Jordan River.

19.24–31: Asher's portion. The town list is integrated with the border description for Asher, which occupies the coastal areas of the western Galilee. That it includes areas of the Phoenician coast up to Sidon and Tyre (vv. 28–29), which never became Israelite, betrays the idealized character of the territorial allotments.

19.32–39: Naphtali's portion. A border description (vv. 33–34) and a town list (vv. 35–38) place Naphtali in the mountainous region of upper and eastern Galilee but do not indicate how far north it extended.

19.40–48: Dan's portion. The last allotment is for the problematic tribe of Dan, which could not take possession of its southeastern allotment (cf. Judg. 1.34). Only a town list is provided (vv. 41–47), along with a brief account of Dan's migration north (cf. Judg. 5.17; 18.1–31). No description of its territory, other than the city Dan, is indicated. 47: Leshem, an alternative form of Laish, is modern Tel Dan/Tel el-Qādi.

19.49–51: Conclusion to the division of the land. Joshua received an individual portion (vv. 49–50), just as Caleb had (14.6–15). Caleb had fought for Hebron, but Joshua requests a mountainous site that he himself fortifies. A final summation (v. 51), by mentioning the figures of 14.1 and the place of 18.1, closes off the full account of the allotments west of the Jordan. 50: Timnath-serah, probably modern Khirbet Tibnah, southwest of Shechem. Meaning "leftover" portion, it may have earlier been called "Sun's Portion" ("Timnath-heres," in Judges 2.9). 51: A conclusion formula, referring back to 14.1, thus enclosing the unit about tribal allotment west of the Jordan.

a I.e., the northwest corner, opposite the starting point, Sarid.

b I.e., the southern one.

c I.e., from Helkath, v. 25.

d-d Meaning of Heb. unclear.

e Some Heb. mss., as well as Josh. 21.30 and 1 Chron. 6.59, read "Abdon."

f The geography of vv. 33–35 is unclear in part.

nereth, ³⁶Adamah, Ramah, Hazor, ³⁷Kedesh, Edrei, En-hazor, ³⁸Iron, Migdal-el, Horem, Beth-anath, and Beth-shemesh: 19 towns, with their villages. ³⁹That was the portion of the tribe of the Naphtalites, by their clans—the towns, with their villages.

⁴⁰The seventh lot fell to the tribe of the Danites, by their clans. ⁴¹Their allotted territory comprised: Zorah, Eshtaol, Ir-shemesh, ⁴²Shaalabbin, Aijalon, Ithlah, ⁴³Elon, Timnah, Ekron, ⁴⁴Eltekeh, Gibbethon, Baalath, ⁴⁵Jehud, Beneberak, Gath-rimmon, ⁴⁶Me-jarkon, and Rakkon, at the border near Joppa. ⁴⁷But the territory of the Danites slipped from their grasp. So the Danites migrated and made war on Leshem.^a They captured it and put it to the sword; they took possession of it and settled in it. And they changed the name of Leshem to Dan, after their ancestor Dan. ⁴⁸That was the portion of the tribe of the Danites, by their clans—those towns, with their villages.

⁴⁹When they had finished allotting the land by its boundaries, the Israelites gave a portion in their midst to Joshua son of Nun. ⁵⁰At the command of the LORD they gave him the town that he asked for, Timnath-serah in the hill country of Ephraim; he fortified the town and settled in it.

⁵¹These are the portions assigned by lot to the tribes of Israel by the priest Eleazar, Joshua son of Nun, and the heads of the ancestral houses, before the LORD at Shiloh, at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting.

20 When they had finished dividing the land, ¹the LORD said to Joshua: ²“Speak to the Israelites: Designate the cities of refuge—about which I commanded you through Moses—³to which a manslayer who kills a person by mistake, unintentionally, may flee. They shall serve you as a refuge from the blood avenger. ⁴He shall flee to one of those cities, present himself at the entrance to the city gate, and plead his case before the elders of that city; and they shall admit him into the city and give him a place in which to live among them. ⁵Should the blood avenger pursue him, they shall not hand the manslayer over to him, since he killed the other person without intent and had not been his enemy in the past. ⁶He shall live in that city until he can stand trial before the assembly, [and remain there] until the death of the high priest who is in office at that time. Thereafter, the manslayer may go back to his home in his own town, to the town from which he fled.”

20.1–21.43: Additional portions. Appended to the tribal portions are two allotment units, each setting aside towns within the tribes for special usages. Joshua and others designate towns for asylum (20.1–9) and for Levites (21.1–40), following the instructions of God through Moses (20.2; 21.2; cf. Num. ch 35; Deut. 19.1–13). A conclusion (21.41–43) gives an ideal picture of the acquisition and settlement of all the territories.

20.1–9: Asylum towns. Six towns, three on each side of the river, are assigned to provide refuge for anyone accused of involuntary manslaughter, until the case is tried, for such persons might be the target of blood revenge. The six designated towns are also Levitical towns (21.11, 21, 27, 32, 36, 38). In a fashion that may be typified as proto-rabbinic, the narrative here combines aspects of the laws found in Num. 35.9–29 and Deut. 19.1–10. The main function of this narrative is to explain the existence and function of the Levitical cities, mentioned in the following chapter. 3: An example of killing by mistake is given in Deut. 19.5. Blood avenger, lit. a “redeemer (go’el) of blood,” was usually a close relative of the slain person (see 2 Sam. 14.2–9). 4: The gate of ancient Israelite towns typically had an adjacent plaza used for civic purposes (see Amos 5.15; Ruth 4.1–12). 6: Trial before the assembly seems to be at odds with the information in v. 4 and may be a separate tradition. Death of the high priest, following Num. 35.25, perhaps the occasion for a general amnesty.

^a Called Laish in Judg. 18.7 ff.

The Levitical cities. Cities of refuge are highlighted with a star. The tribal boundaries are shown by a dashed line.

⁷So they set aside Kedesh in the hill country of Naphtali in Galilee, Shechem in the hill country of Ephraim, and Kiriath-arba—that is, Hebron—in the hill country of Judah. ⁸And across the Jordan, east of Jericho, they assigned Bezer in the wilderness, in the Tableland, from the tribe of Reuben; Ramoth in Gilead from the tribe of Gad; and Golan in Bashan from the tribe of Manasseh. ⁹Those were the towns designated^a for all the Israelites and for aliens residing among them, to which anyone who killed a person unintentionally might flee, and not die by the hand of the blood avenger before standing trial by the assembly.

21 The heads of the ancestral houses of the Levites approached the priest Eleazar, Joshua son of Nun, and the heads of the ancestral houses of the Israelite tribes,² and spoke to them at Shiloh in the land of Canaan, as follows: “The LORD commanded through Moses that we be given towns to live in, along with their pastures for our livestock.” ³So the Israelites, in accordance with the LORD’s command, assigned to the Levites, out of their own portions, the following towns with their pastures:

⁴The [first] lot among the Levites fell to the Kohathite clans. To the descendants of the priest Aaron, there fell by lot 13 towns from the tribe of Judah, the tribe of Simeon, and the tribe of Benjamin;⁵ and to the remaining Kohathites [there fell] by lot 10 towns from the clans of the tribe of Ephraim, the tribe of Dan, and the half-tribe of Manasseh.

⁶To the Gershonites [there fell] by lot 13 towns from the clans of the tribe of Issachar, the tribe of Asher, the tribe of Naphtali, and the half-tribe of Manasseh in Bashan.

⁷[And] to the Merarites, by their clans—12 towns from the tribe of Reuben, the tribe of Gad, and the tribe of Zebulun. ⁸The Israelites assigned those towns with their pastures by lot to the Levites—as the LORD had commanded through Moses.

⁹From the tribe of the Judites and the tribe of the Simeonites were assigned the following towns, which will be listed by name; ¹⁰they went to the descendants of Aaron among the Kohathite clans of the Levites, for the first lot had fallen to them. ¹¹To them were assigned in the hill country of Judah Kiriath-arba—that is, Hebron—together with the pastures around it. [Arba was] the father of the Anokites.^b ¹²They gave the fields and the villages of the 21.1–40: Levitical towns. Lacking a discrete tribal portion (Deut. 10.8–9; Josh. 13.14, 33; 18.7), the Levites are to be integrated into all Israel by receiving towns with adjacent pastureland in the territories of all the other tribes. Altogether they are to have forty-eight towns, which are not equally distributed among the tribes. The allocation is made according to the three Levitical clans—Kohathites, Gershonites, and Merarites—and is presented in summary form (vv. 4–8) and then with specified cities (vv. 9–40). 4: The Kohathite clans, the most important priestly group (see Num. 4.4), are associated with Aaron and receive the most towns (twenty-three). 6: The Gershonites receive thirteen towns, indicating they are less prominent than the Kohathites. 7: The Merarites, with twelve towns, are the weakest of the three Levitical groups. 10–11: A narrative insert, about Hebron and its association with Caleb, adds to Hebron’s stature (cf. 14.13–15; 15.13–19).

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^b Elsewhere Anakites; cf. Num. 13.22; Deut. 9.2.

town to Caleb son of Jephunneh as his holding.¹³ But to the descendants of Aaron the priest they assigned Hebron—the city of refuge for manslayers—together with its pastures, Libnah with its pastures,¹⁴ Jattir with its pastures, Eshtemoa with its pastures,¹⁵ Holon with its pastures, Debir with its pastures,¹⁶ Ain with its pastures, Juttah with its pastures, and Beth-shemesh with its pastures—9 towns from those two tribes.¹⁷ And from the tribe of Benjamin: Gibeon with its pastures, Geba with its pastures,¹⁸ Anathoth with its pastures, and Almon with its pastures—4 towns.¹⁹ All the towns of the descendants of the priest Aaron, 13 towns with their pastures.

²⁰^a As for the other clans of the Kohathites, the remaining Levites descended from Kohath, the towns in their lot were: From the tribe of Ephraim²¹ they were given, in the hill country of Ephraim, Shechem—the city of refuge for manslayers—with its pastures, Gezer with its pastures,²² Kibzaim with its pastures, and Beth-horon with its pastures—4 towns.²³ From the tribe of Dan, Elteke with its pastures, Gibbethon with its pastures,²⁴ Aijalon with its pastures, and Gath-rimmon with its pastures—4 towns.²⁵ And from the half-tribe of Manasseh, Taanach with its pastures, and Gath-rimmon with its pastures—2 towns.²⁶ All the towns for the remaining clans of the Kohathites came to 10, with their pastures.

²⁷ To the Gershonites of the levitical clans: From the half-tribe of Manasseh, Golan in Bashan—the city of refuge for manslayers—with its pastures, and Beeshterah with its pastures—2 towns.²⁸ From the tribe of Issachar: Kishion with its pastures, Dobrath with its pastures,²⁹ Jarmuth with its pastures, and En-gannim with its pastures—4 towns.³⁰ From the tribe of Asher: Mishal with its pastures, Abdon with its pastures,³¹ Helkath with its pastures, and Rehob with its pastures—4 towns.³² From the tribe of Naphtali, Kedesh in Galilee—the city of refuge for manslayers—with its pastures, Hammoth-dor with its pastures, and Kartan with its pastures—3 towns.³³ All the towns of the Gershonites, by their clans, came to 13 towns, with their pastures.

³⁴ To the remaining Levites, the clans of the Merarites: From the tribe of Zebulun, Jokneam with its pastures, Kartah with its pastures,³⁵ Dimnah with its pastures, and Nahalal with its pastures—4 towns.^b ³⁶ From the tribe of Gad, Ramoth in Gilead—the city of refuge for manslayers—

a Explicating v. 5.

b Some mss. and editions add the following (cf. 1 Chron. 6.63–64): "And from the tribe of Reuben: Bezer with its pastures, Jahaz with its pastures, Kedemoth with its pastures, and Mephaath with its pastures—4 towns."

with its pastures, Mahanaim with its pastures,³⁷ Heshbon with its pastures, and Jazer with its pastures—4 towns in all.³⁸ All the towns which went by lot to the Merarites, by their clans—the rest of the levitical clans—came to 12 towns.³⁹ All the towns of the Levites within the holdings of the Israelites came to 48 towns, with their pastures.⁴⁰ Thus those towns were assigned, every town with its surrounding pasture; and so it was with all those towns.

⁴¹The LORD gave to Israel the whole country which He had sworn to their fathers that He would assign to them; they took possession of it and settled in it. ⁴²The LORD gave them rest on all sides, just as He had promised to their fathers on oath. Not one man of all their enemies withstood them; the LORD delivered all their enemies into their hands. ⁴³Not one of the good things which the LORD had promised to the House of Israel was lacking. Everything was fulfilled.

22 Then Joshua summoned the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, ²and said to them, “You have observed all that Moses the servant of the LORD commanded you, and have obeyed me in everything that I commanded you. ³You have not forsaken your kinsmen through the long years down to this day, but have faithfully observed the Instruction of the LORD your God. ⁴Now the LORD your God has given your kinsmen rest, as He promised them. Therefore turn and go to your homes, to the land of your holdings beyond the Jordan that Moses the servant of the LORD assigned to you. ⁵But be very careful to fulfill the Instruction and the Teaching that Moses the servant of the LORD enjoined upon you, to love the LORD your God and to walk in all His ways, and to keep His commandments and hold fast to Him, and to serve Him with all your heart and soul.” ⁶Then Joshua blessed them and dismissed them, and they went to their homes.

⁷To the one half-tribe of Manasseh Moses had assigned territory in Bashan, and to the other Joshua assigned [territory] on the west side of the Jordan, with their kinsmen.^b

Furthermore, when Joshua sent them^c off to their homes, he blessed them ⁸and said to them, “Return to your homes with great wealth—with very much livestock,

21.41–43: General Summary. The LORD is responsible for the Israelites' ability to acquire and settle the land. In claiming totality of conquest, the summary overlooks the reality of continual enemy presence and provides an idealized view of divine trustworthiness: Everything promised was delivered. This is emphasized through the use of the Heb word “kol,” “all,” six times in these three verses. 41: Sworn to their fathers . . . assign to them echoes the opening promise of 1.6. 42: A fulfillment of Deut. 12.10. 43: House of Israel, a phrase appearing only here in Joshua, emphasizes Israelite unity.

22.1–24.33: Epilogue. The concluding chapters of Joshua stress faithfulness to the LORD. Ch 22 recounts the return of the Transjordanian warriors and their problematic construction of an altar east of the Jordan; in ch 23, Joshua delivers a final speech; ch 24 describes a covenant ceremony at Shechem (vv. 1–28) and gives burial accounts (vv. 29–33) of three leaders: Joshua, Joseph, and Eleazar. All three chapters include much language and many themes found in Deuteronomy as well as the introduction to Joshua in ch 1.

22.1–34: Return of the Transjordanians. The Jordan represents more than a geographical division between the two-and-a-half and the nine-and-a-half tribes. The warriors return to their homes east of the river (vv. 1–9), where they construct an altar viewed as a violation of the LORD's word (vv. 10–34).

22.1–9: Warriors return. The introduction to the fighting men from across the Jordan in 1.12–18 is here paralleled by Joshua's farewell to them (vv. 2–5), which also emphasizes obedience to the Teaching of Moses and the commandments of the LORD. 3: Long years represents seven years of conquest and seven years of land division, according to the Rabbis (Seder Olam 11).

5: This verse is composed totally a Meaning of verse uncertain.

b I.e., the other nine tribes.

c I.e., the two and a half tribes.

with silver and gold, with copper and iron, and with a great quantity of clothing. Share the spoil of your enemies with your kinsmen.”⁹ So the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh left the Israelites at Shiloh, in the land of Canaan, and made their way back to the land of Gilead, the land of their own holding, which they had acquired by the command of the LORD through Moses.¹⁰ When they came to the region of the Jordan in the land of Canaan, the Reubenites and the Gadites and the half-tribe of Manasseh built an altar there by the Jordan, a great conspicuous altar.

¹¹ A report reached the Israelites: “The Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh have built an altar opposite the land of Canaan, in the region of the Jordan, across from the Israelites.”¹² When the Israelites heard this, the whole community of the Israelites assembled at Shiloh to make war on them.¹³ But [first] the Israelites sent the priest Phinehas son of Eleazar to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh in the land of Gilead,¹⁴ accompanied by ten chieftains, one chieftain from each ancestral house of each of the tribes of Israel; they were every one of them heads of ancestral houses of the contingents of Israel.¹⁵ When they came to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh in the land of Gilead, they spoke to them as follows:

¹⁶ “Thus said the whole community of the LORD: What is this treachery that you have committed this day against the God of Israel, turning away from the LORD, building yourselves an altar and rebelling this day against the LORD!¹⁷ Is the sin of Peor, which brought a plague upon the community of the LORD, such a small thing to us? We have not cleansed ourselves from it to this very day;¹⁸ and now you would turn away from the LORD! If you rebel against the LORD today, tomorrow He will be angry with the whole community of Israel.¹⁹ If it is because the land of your holding is unclean, cross over into the land of the LORD’s own holding, where the Tabernacle of the LORD abides, and acquire holdings among us. But do not rebel against the LORD, and do not rebel against us by building for yourselves an altar other than the altar of the LORD our God.²⁰ When Achan son of Zerah violated the proscription, anger struck the whole community of Israel; he was not the only one who perished for that sin.”

²¹ The Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh replied to the heads of the contingents of Israel: They said,²² “God, the LORD God! God, the LORD God! He knows, and Israel too shall know! If we acted in rebellion or in treachery against the LORD, do not vindicate us this of Deuteronomic clichés. For example, Love the LORD is Deuteronomic language (Deut. 6.5; 10.12–13; etc.) and appears again in 23.11. Walk . . . soul uses Deuteronomic terminology. The emphasis on keeping commandments, for example, appears thirty-seven times in Deuteronomy, including the Shema passage (Deut. 6.4–9).

22.10–34: The problem of the Transjordanian altar. The returning warriors construct an altar as soon as they cross the Jordan, an act seen as unacceptable by the west-of-the-Jordan majority. The Transjordanian tribes provide an acceptable explanation, stressing national unity. 13: Because Phinehas provides priestly leadership for the confrontation and because the focus is on a sacral structure (an altar), many scholars see this as a priestly admonition against illegal ritual sites and acts. 16: The treachery of the altar involves the assumption that it will be used for sacrifice, which would violate the Deuteronomic notion of one altar for sacrifice (Deut. 12.13–14). The sacrilege may be especially serious since the altar is constructed east of the Jordan, and thus is not on territory that is centrally part of the land of Israel. 17: Recalling the sin of Peor (see 13.20 n.) marks the seriousness of their action by comparing it to a particularly grievous sin, where according to the notion of corporate responsibility, the sins of a few can bring punishment to the whole. 19: The suggestion of unclean land across the Jordan may reflect a tendentious perspective, namely, that God’s true territory—the LORD’s own holding—lies west of the Jordan. Tabernacle, Tent of Meeting (cf. 18.1). 20: Recalling Achan (ch 7) means remembering the notion of group punishment. Violated, or “committed treachery against,” uses the same (often Priestly) term as 7.1 (see also 22.16, 22). 25: The Transjordanians fear discrimination, perhaps rightly so (see Judg. 12.1–6). 28: As a witness (cf. Gen. 31.47–48), the altar—probably made of stones (cf.

day!²³ If we built an altar to turn away from the LORD, if it was to serve burnt offerings or meal offerings upon it, or to present sacrifices of well-being upon it, may the LORD Himself demand [a reckoning].²⁴ We did this thing only out of our concern that, in time to come, your children might say to our children, 'What have you to do with the LORD, the God of Israel?'²⁵ The LORD has made the Jordan a boundary between you and us, O Reubenites and Gadites; you have no share in the LORD!' Thus your children might prevent our children from worshiping the LORD.²⁶ So we decided to provide [a witness] for ourselves by building an altar—not for burnt offerings or [other] sacrifices,²⁷ but as a witness between you and us, and between the generations to come—that we may perform the service of the LORD before Him^a with our burnt offerings, our sacrifices, and our offerings of well-being; and that your children should not say to our children in time to come, 'You have no share in the LORD.'²⁸ We reasoned: should they speak thus to us and to our children in time to come, we would reply, 'See the replica of the LORD's altar,^a which our fathers made—not for burnt offerings or sacrifices, but as a witness between you and us.'²⁹ Far be it from us to rebel against the LORD, or to turn away this day from the LORD and build an altar for burnt offerings, meal offerings, and sacrifices other than the altar of the LORD our God which stands before His Tabernacle."

³⁰ When the priest Phinehas and the chieftains of the community—the heads of the contingents of Israel—who were with him heard the explanation given by the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the Manassites, they approved.³¹ The priest Phinehas son of Eleazar said to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the Manassites, "Now we know that the LORD is in our midst, since you have not committed such treachery against the LORD. You have indeed saved the Israelites from punishment by the LORD."

³² Then the priest Phinehas son of Eleazar and the chieftains returned from the Reubenites and the Gadites in the land of Gilead to the Israelites in the land of Canaan, and gave them their report.³³ The Israelites were pleased, and the Israelites praised God; and they spoke no more of going to war against them, to ravage the land in which the Reubenites and Gadites dwelt.

³⁴ The Reubenites and the Gadites named the altar ["Witness"], meaning, "It is a witness between us and them that the LORD is [our] God."

8.31)—was to serve didactic purposes (8.34), as do many other stone heaps in Joshua (e.g., 4.9; 7.25; 8.29; 10.27; 24.27).

a I.e., at Shiloh.

23 Much later, after the LORD had given Israel rest from all the enemies around them, and when Joshua was old and well advanced in years,² Joshua summoned all Israel, their elders and commanders, their magistrates and officials, and said to them: "I have grown old and am advanced in years.³ You have seen all that the LORD your God has done to all those nations on your account, for it was the LORD your God who fought for you.⁴ See, I have allotted to you, by your tribes, [the territory of] these nations that still remain, and that of all the nations that I have destroyed, from the Jordan to the Mediterranean Sea in the west.⁵ The LORD your God Himself will thrust them out on your account and drive them out to make way for you, and you shall possess their land as the LORD your God promised you.

⁶"But be most resolute to observe faithfully all that is written in the Book of the Teaching of Moses, without ever deviating from it to the right or to the left,⁷ and without intermingling with these nations that are left among you. Do not utter the names of their gods or swear by them; do not serve them or bow down to them.⁸ But hold fast to the LORD your God as you have done to this day.

⁹"The LORD has driven out great, powerful nations on your account, and not a man has withstood you to this day.¹⁰ A single man of you would put a thousand to flight, for the LORD your God Himself has been fighting for you, as He promised you.¹¹ For your own sakes, therefore, be most mindful to love the LORD your God.¹² For should you turn away and attach yourselves to the remnant of those nations—to those that are left among you—and intermarry with them, you joining them and they joining you,¹³ know for certain that the LORD your God will not continue to drive these nations out before you; they shall become a snare and a trap for you, a scourge to your sides and thorns in your eyes, until you perish from this good land that the LORD your God has given you.

¹⁴"I am now going the way of all the earth. Acknowledge with all your heart and soul that not one of the good things that the LORD your God promised you has failed to happen; they have all come true for you, not a single one has failed.¹⁵ But just as every good thing that the LORD your God promised you has been fulfilled for you, so the LORD can bring upon you every evil thing until He has wiped you off this good land that the LORD your God has given you.¹⁶ If you break the covenant that the LORD your God enjoined upon you, and go and serve other gods and bow down to them, then the LORD's anger will burn against you, and you shall quickly perish from the good land that He has given you.”

23.1–16: Joshua's final speech. Like Jacob (Gen. 49) and Moses (Deut. ch 33), Joshua delivers a final speech before he dies. His charge, replete with Deuteronomic terminology, celebrates the LORD as the one responsible for conquest and exhorts the people to obey the covenant. This speech may have originally followed 13.1; see 13.1 n. 1: Rest (elsewhere "haven") from enemies, a main theme of Deuteronomy, is promised in 1.13, 15 and proclaimed to have been achieved in 21.42 and 22.4, always as a result of the LORD's acts. 2: All Israel, here perhaps represented by the leaders. 6: Strength is reflected in Torah observance, as in 1.7–8, which is here applied to all Israel. 7: Nations that are left, acknowledging that all the territory has not yet been acquired (cf. v. 12). Do not . . . bow down invokes a fundamental covenant concept, expressed in the Decalogue (Exod. 20.5, Deut. 5.9) and recurring in Deuteronomic texts. 11: Love the LORD, see 22.5 n. 12–13: The problem of cultural identity and boundaries between groups is manifest in the prohibition of intermarriage (cf. Exod. 34.11–16; Deut. 7.1–4). 13: Even at this early period of the narrative, immediately after narrating the conquest, the author emphasizes the conditional nature of land tenure. 14: Going the way of all the earth means "to die" and gives Joshua a royal tinge; King David is the only other biblical leader to use this phrase (1 Kings 2.2). 15: Good thing . . . evil thing signifies the blessings and the curses of the covenant. 16: Anger will burn is a euphemism for the LORD striking disobedient people with the deadly plague (cf. Num. 11.33). The notion that Israel will quickly perish from the good land if it is disobedient is found in Deut. 4.26; 11.17.

24 Joshua assembled all the tribes of Israel at Shechem. He summoned Israel's elders and commanders, magistrates and officers; and they presented themselves before God. ²Then Joshua said to all the people, “Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: In olden times, your forefathers—Terah, father of Abraham and father of Nahor—lived beyond the Euphrates and worshiped other gods. ³But I took your father Abraham from beyond the Euphrates and led him through the whole land of Canaan and multiplied his offspring. I gave him Isaac, ⁴and to Isaac I gave Jacob and Esau. I gave Esau the hill country of Seir as his possession, while Jacob and his children went down to Egypt.

⁵“Then I sent Moses and Aaron, and I plagued Egypt with [the wonders] that I wrought in their midst, after which I freed you—⁶I freed your fathers—from Egypt, and you came to the Sea. But the Egyptians pursued your fathers to the Sea of Reeds with chariots and horsemen. ⁷They cried out to the LORD, and He put darkness between you and the Egyptians; then He brought the Sea upon them, and it covered them. Your own eyes saw what I did to the Egyptians.

“After you had lived a long time in the wilderness, ⁸I brought you to the land of the Amorites who lived beyond the Jordan. They gave battle to you, but I delivered them into your hands; I annihilated them for you, and you took possession of their land. ⁹Thereupon Balak son of Zippor, the king of Moab, made ready to attack Israel. He sent for Balaam son of Beor to curse you, ¹⁰but I refused to listen to Balaam; he had to bless you, and thus I saved you from him.

¹¹“Then you crossed the Jordan and you came to Jericho. The citizens of Jericho and the Amorites, Perizzites, Canaanites, Hittites, Girgashites, Hivites, and Jebusites fought you, but I delivered them into your hands. ¹²I sent a plague^a ahead of you, and it drove them out before you—[just like] the two Amorite kings—not by your sword or by your bow. ¹³I have given you a land for which you did not labor and towns which you did not build, and you have settled in them; you are enjoying vineyards and olive groves which you did not plant.

¹⁴“Now, therefore, revere the LORD and serve Him with undivided loyalty; put away the gods that your forefa-

24.1–28: Covenant ceremony at Shechem. Cast as another speech of Joshua, this is partly the LORD's review of Israel's history (vv. 2–13). Joshua then convinces the people to choose the LORD, warning them of the consequences if they do not (vv. 14–24). A ceremony cements the covenantal relationship. 1: All the tribes, emphasizing Israelite unity. Shechem, a centrally located Ephraimite town, where Joshua had already built an altar (8.30–35) and also a city of refuge and a Levitical city (20.7; 21.21). The ceremony there signifies its importance in Israelite political and religious life. 2–13: The review of Israel's history includes the ancestral period (vv. 2–4), the escape from Egypt (vv. 5–7), and the acquisition of the land (vv. 8–13). As in Deut. 26.5–9, Sinai is not mentioned. 2–4: These verses are central to the Haggadah's retelling of the Passover story. 9: Balak and Balaam, see 13.22 n. (cf. Num. chs 22–24). 11: Amorites . . . Jebusites, a final listing of the totality of the inhabitants of the land, all seven nations (cf. 3.10). 11–12: This account of the conquest of Jericho differs from that of ch 6. 12: Plague, sometimes translated “hornet” (see Exod. 23.28; Deut. 7.20) is narrated as a fulfillment of the promise in Deut. 7.20. Its symbolism is uncertain. Two Amorite kings, Sihon and Og (12.2, 4; 13.10, 12, 27, 30–31). 14–24: Revere the LORD: A major covenant stipulation (see 4.24) is loyalty to God. Put away the gods replicates Jacob's words to his household at Shechem (Gen. 35.2–4); both texts may reflect an ancient purification ritual.

^a See note at Exod. 23.28.

thers served beyond the Euphrates and in Egypt, and serve the LORD. ¹⁵ Or, if you are loath to serve the LORD, choose this day which ones you are going to serve—the gods that your forefathers served beyond the Euphrates, or those of the Amorites in whose land you are settled; but I and my household will serve the LORD.”

¹⁶ In reply, the people declared, “Far be it from us to forsake the LORD and serve other gods! ¹⁷ For it was the LORD our God who brought us and our fathers up from the land of Egypt, the house of bondage, and who wrought those wondrous signs before our very eyes, and guarded us all along the way that we traveled and among all the peoples through whose midst we passed. ¹⁸ And then the LORD drove out before us all the peoples—the Amorites—that inhabited the country. We too will serve the LORD, for He is our God.”

¹⁹ Joshua, however, said to the people, “You will not be able to serve the LORD, for He is a holy God. He is a jealous God; He will not forgive your transgressions and your sins. ²⁰ If you forsake the LORD and serve alien gods, He will turn and deal harshly with you and make an end of you, after having been gracious to you.” ²¹ But the people replied to Joshua, “No, we will serve the LORD!” ²² Thereupon Joshua said to the people, “You are witnesses against yourselves that you have by your own act chosen to serve the LORD.” “Yes, we are!” they responded. ²³ “Then put away the alien gods that you have among you and direct your hearts to the LORD, the God of Israel.” ²⁴ And the people declared to Joshua, “We will serve none but the LORD our God, and we will obey none but Him.”

²⁵ On that day at Shechem, Joshua made a covenant for the people and he made a fixed rule for them. ²⁶ Joshua recorded all this in a book of divine instruction. He took a great stone and set it up at the foot of the oak in the sacred precinct of the LORD; ²⁷ and Joshua said to all the people, “See, this very stone shall be a witness against us, for it heard all the words that the LORD spoke to us; it shall be a witness against you, lest you break faith with your God.” ²⁸ Joshua then dismissed the people to their allotted portions.

²⁹ After these events, Joshua son of Nun, the servant of the LORD, died at the age of one hundred and ten years. ³⁰ They buried him on his own property, at Timnath-serah in the hill country of Ephraim, north of Mount Gaash. ³¹ Israel served the LORD during the lifetime of Joshua and the lifetime of the elders who lived on after Joshua, and who had experienced all the deeds that the LORD had wrought for Israel.

16–18: Because the LORD has performed wonders for them, the people will swear allegiance, knowing full well what that entails. 19: Jealous God, or “El the Jealous” (cf. “the living God,” 3.10). God’s jealousy typically is cited in contexts of idolatry (Exod. 20.5; 34.14; Deut. 5.9). The results of such behavior are usually disastrous (Deut. 6.15). 22: Witnesses suggests a binding ceremonial act. 25: Fixed rule, lit. “statute and judgment,” signifies the contents of the covenant document. The plural is used three times in the same sense in Deut. ch 4 (vv. 5, 8, 14). 26: Book of divine instruction, or “Book of the Teachings of God,” expands the language of 1.8 and 8.34 (cf. 8.32; 23.6). Great stone, one last example of stones memorializing events (see 22.28 n.).

24.29–33: Epilogue: three burial accounts. 29–31: This is narrated in a slightly different form and order in Judg. 2.7–9. 29: Servant of the LORD, a frequent designation for Moses in Joshua (1.1, 2, 13; 8.31, 33; etc.) but used only here for Joshua himself, a final case where the narrator compares Moses to Joshua, thereby legitimating him. One hundred and ten years, ten fewer than for Moses, for whom 120 years signifies Mosaic uniqueness (Deut. 34.7, 10). 30: Timnath-serah, see 19.50 n. 31: The point seems to be that obedience depends on witnesses who recount God’s great power. 32: Bones of Joseph are buried, fulfilling the promise to him in Gen. 50.24–25 (cf. Exod. 13.19). The recollection of this tradition in Genesis, along with the observation that the land promise, a main theme of Genesis, is only fulfilled in Joshua has suggested to some modern scholars that we should speak of the first six books of the Bible together as the Hexateuch (“six books”), namely the Torah (Pentateuch) plus Joshua (see intro.). Shechem, where Jacob had bought land and built an altar when he entered the land (Gen. 33.18–20). 33: The death of Eleazar, as punishment for insufficient mourning for ³²The bones of Joseph, which the Israelites had brought up from Egypt, were buried at Shechem, in the piece of ground which Jacob had bought for a hundred kesitahs^a from the children of Hamor, Shechem's father, and which had become a heritage of the Josephites.

³³Eleazar son of Aaron also died, and they buried him on the hill of his son Phinehas, which had been assigned to him in the hill country of Ephraim.

Joshua according to Jewish legend (b. Shab. 105b), ends the book with an event of Priestly interest. This interest is central to the Priestly sections of the Torah and is reflected sporadically in Joshua.

^a See note at Gen. 33.19.

Judges*

THE BOOK OF JUDGES is the second of Former Prophets. Its place was determined chronologically—it covers the period after Joshua’s death at the end of the book of Joshua and before the anointing of Saul as king in 1 Samuel. The book is named after its central characters, “judges” (typically translated in NJPS as “chieftains”). Although the book ends before the birth of Samuel the prophet, 1 Samuel 8.1, “When Samuel grew old, he appointed his sons judges over Israel,” suggests that Samuel and his sons should be considered judges as well.

The judges are mostly shown as tribal leaders who delivered their people from oppression. Some were military leaders (Othniel, Ehud, Barak, Gideon, and Jephthah), some were lone warriors (Shamgar and Samson), and one was both leader and commander (Jephthah). Some judges were prophets (Deborah and Samuel), one was a Nazirite (Samson), some were also priests (Eli and Samuel), or sat in judgment (Deborah and Samuel), while the acts of others are not specified (Tola, Jair, Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon). The term “judge,” Hebrew shofet (see esp. 2 Sam. 7.11; 2 Kings 23.22; Ruth 1.1; 1 Chron. 17.6, 10), thus covers the range of diverse leaders who flourished in the period prior to the monarchy. It should not be understood in a narrow juridical sense.

The book of Judges does not describe the entire period of the judges, nor is it organized chronologically. It opens in the time of the elders who survived Joshua and concludes with Samson, so the last judges, Eli (1 Sam. 4.18) and Samuel (1 Sam. 7.15–17), now appear in the book of Samuel. The ending of the book of Judges, however, deals with events that took place at the start of the period: the conquest of Dan and the war against Gibeah, both of which are placed in the third generation after the exodus from Egypt (18.30; 20.28). Its nonchronological order shows that the editors’ purpose was not only to describe and record the period, but to draw lessons from it. The book’s main theme is the inefficacy of the judges, who could only save and affect their people for a limited time; then the people would relapse, would be punished, and would cry to the LORD to save them again. This recurrent theme of sin, punishment, and rescue gives the book a cyclical structure.

The book offers two principal lessons. The first concerns the role of God in history: It describes the course of history as an interaction between God and His people, with God heeding His people's cries, and saving them through various judges. The second concerns the type of preferred leader: The judges are not depicted as ideal leaders, and their depiction thus paves the way for the establishment of a more successful political institution, namely the monarchy. The ideal king could confront the people's enemies and prevent anarchy, though the book warns that the king may also be a villain, as in the case of Abimelech, symbolized by the bramble (ch 9).

* This is the traditional rendering of shofetim, which, however, in the text is rendered “chieftains.” The corresponding verb shafat is usually translated not “judged” but “ruled” or “led.”

The book can be divided into three parts. The first is an exposition that describes the background to the rise of the judges (1.1–3.6). The second, main part of the book is devoted largely to the acts of the judges (3.7–16.31). The third, final part describes two episodes: that of Micah's graven image and the shrine built at Dan, and the story of the rape in Gibeah and the subsequent civil war (chs 17–21). These final episodes create the impression that monarchy alone could end the chaotic period of the judges, when "there was no king in Israel; every man did as he pleased" (17.6; 21.25).

The Sages (b. B. Bat. 14b) assumed that the book of Judges was written by the prophet Samuel, who lived not long after the events described. Biblical scholars, however, maintain that this book, like the other historiographic books in the Bible, was written later, and should not be viewed as a unified work of a single author. Scholars suggest that it could only have been written in an established social culture possessing self-consciousness, appropriate institutions, and a receptive public. Scholars distinguish between the judges' stories, which are based on local-tribal traditions of deliverance and which do not interpret events with theological causality, and their frameworks, which depict the deliverer in a broad national context, characterized by a cycle that begins with sin and ends with peace. There is widespread agreement that these frameworks reflect a Deuteronomistic redaction which took the tribal stories, gave them a national-religious character, and fitted the whole into the great Deuteronomistic work that describes the history from the years in the wilderness (the book of Deuteronomy) to the Babylonian exile (the end of the book of Kings). At a later stage, they suggest, post-Deuteronomistic redactors added certain passages, such as the ones about the Canaanite nations that were or were not driven out, in the exposition (1.1–2.5) and the concluding chapters (17–21).

But the assumption that the book of Judges reflects the ideological world of Deuteronomy may not be correct. Deuteronomy's ideology and style are only partly evident in the book of Judges. Deuteronomistic literature criticizes monarchy (Deut. 17.14–20), places prophets above it (Deut. 18.15–19; 1 Kings 12.22–24, etc.), demands centralization of cult (Deut. 12.5–28; 1 Kings 8.16ff, etc.), and depicts the deity as a remote being whose name alone dwells in the Temple (Deut. 12.5; 1 Kings 8.27, etc.). By contrast, the book of Judges has positive expectations from the monarchy, makes scarcely any reference to prophecy and its function of predicting historical events, does not call for the centralization of the cult, and shows God intervening in the events, directly or by means of angels. Moreover, the phrases that are typical of Deuteronomistic literature are concentrated only in the exposition of the book (2.6–3.4). It would seem, therefore, that the main redaction of the book of Judges was completed in the pre-Deuteronomistic stage—namely, in the late 8th or in the 7th century BCE—and that it reflected the shocked mood in Judah after the downfall of the Northern Kingdom of Israel in 722 (see the allusion to exile in 18.30). This would explain the negative portrayal of the northern tribes throughout the book, from the exposition which accuses them of the sin of failing to drive out the local inhabitants, to the final chapters that speak of Mount Ephraim and the shrine at Dan as sinful places. By contrast, the tribe of Judah is depicted in the opening as a tribe which succeeded completely in driving out the local inhabitants and was faithful to the covenant with God. The redaction sought to justify the punishment that befell the Northern Kingdom by showing it as a group of sinful tribes; this theme is evident in each of the sections of the book. The book later was slightly adapted when it became part of the great Deuteronomistic work of Deuteronomy-Kings. Additions from this period or later may include: Deuteronomistic phrases noticeable in the exposition (2.11–19), the text criticizing Gideon for making the ephod (8.27b), and the episode of the concubine in Gibeah (chs 19–21), which is mainly a veiled polemical attack on the house of Saul.

The book of Judges presents itself as covering a period of more than 400 years—111 years of subjugation, and 299 of judgeship and peace (or possibly 319 years, given the uncertainty about the length of Samson's period). These data do not agree either with the chronology of 1 Kings 6.1, according to which 480 years passed from the exodus to the building of the Jerusalem Temple, or with the historical and archeological findings, which suggest that less than 200 years passed from the end of the 13th century, when the hill country was settled, to the latter half of the 11th century BCE and the beginning of the established monarchy. Modern research has abandoned the conservative view, which accepted the bulk of the book of Judges as historically authentic, and has emphasized certain ideological (anti-Northern Kingdom, anti-Saul, pro-Davidic) and literary elements of the book. At the same time, it acknowledges the fact that ancient traditions sometimes preserve some echo of the historical reality. Thus, while some scholars chose not to speak of a "period of the judges" at all, other scholars regard this period—namely, the time of settlement leading up to the monarchy—as a decisive one in the history of the people of Israel, in the course of which groups of settling nomads grew into an established society, developed a sense of national identity with a cultural-religious heritage, and came to form the people of Israel.

[YAIRAH AMIT]

1 After the death of Joshua, the Israelites inquired of the LORD, "Which of us shall be the first to go up against the Canaanites and attack them?" ²The LORD replied, "Let [the tribe of] Judah go up. I now deliver the land into their hands." ³Judah then said to their brother-tribe Simeon, "Come up with us to our allotted territory and let us attack the Canaanites, and then we will go with you to your allotted territory." So Simeon joined them.

Introduction to the book of Judges (1.1–3.6) 1.1–2.10: The days of the elders. The period between the death of Joshua and the beginning of the age of the judges is called the days of the elders (cf. 2.7). This period is created to explain how the people, who during the days of Joshua were noted for their loyalty to the LORD, became ⁴When Judah advanced, the LORD delivered the Canaanites and the Perizzites into their hands, and they defeated ten thousand of them at Bezek. ⁵At Bezek, they encountered Adoni-bezek, engaged him in battle, and defeated the Canaanites and the Perizzites. ⁶Adoni-bezek fled, but they pursued him and captured him; and they cut off his thumbs and his big toes. ⁷And Adoni-bezek said, "Seventy kings, with thumbs and big toes cut off, used to pick up scraps under my table; as I have done, so God has requited me." They brought him to Jerusalem and he died there.

⁸The Judites attacked Jerusalem and captured it; they put it to the sword and set the city on fire. ⁹After that the Judites went down to attack the Canaanites who inhabited the hill country, the Negeb, and the Shephelah.

¹⁰The Judites marched against the Canaanites who dwelt in Hebron, and they defeated Sheshai, Ahiman, and Talmi. (The name of Hebron was formerly Kiriath-arba.) ¹¹From there they marched against the inhabitants of Debir (the name of Debir was formerly Kiriath-sepher). ¹²And Caleb announced, "I will give my daughter Achsah in marriage to the man who attacks and captures Kiriath-sepher." ¹³His younger kinsman, Othniel the Kenizzite,^a captured it; and Caleb gave him his daughter Achsah in marriage. ¹⁴^bWhen she came [to him], she induced him to ask her father for some property. She dismounted from her donkey, and Caleb asked her, "What is the matter?" ¹⁵She replied, "Give me a present, for you have given me away as Negeb-land; give me springs of water." And Caleb gave her Upper and Lower Gulloth.^b

¹⁶The descendants of the Kenite, the father-in-law of Moses, went up with the Judites from the City of Palms to a Cf. Josh. 14.6, 14. b-b Cf. Josh. 15.18-19 and notes.

transformed into one that repeatedly did evil in His eyes. During this period the tribes needed to fight against the nations who remained in the land after Joshua's death. The tribe of Judah did so, but most of the tribes preferred to subjugate the remaining nations and allowed them to remain in their habitations, thereby laying the groundwork for assimilation and sin.

1.1-20: The conquests of Judah. The tribe of Judah and the tribe of Simeon that joined them destroyed the Canaanites, with the exception of the inhabitants of the valley, who had iron chariots and therefore could not be destroyed. This presentation shows the preference of Judah, which characterizes the whole passage. 3: The connection between Judah and Simeon reflects the geographical-historical reality of assimilation of the tribe of Simeon within Judah's inheritance (Josh. 19.1-9; 15.26-32). 5: Bezek is mentioned as the site where Saul mustered his army in his first war (1 Sam. 11.8). It is generally identified with Khirbet Izbik, about 25 km (15 miles) northeast of Shechem. Adoni-bezek: Many think that the name of this king is a corruption of Adoni-zedek, who was king of Jerusalem according to Josh. 10.1. The fact that the king was buried in Jerusalem (v. 7) supports this conjecture. 7: The king's servants took him to die in Jerusalem. 8: In the description of the conquest of Jerusalem by the Judites, there is no hint that any inhabitants were left. Further on (v. 21), the blame for not dispossessing the Jebusites from Jerusalem is placed on Benjamin, while in Josh. 15.63 it is imposed upon Judah. According to many modern historians, Jerusalem remained a Jebusite enclave until it was conquered by David. 9: A general summary of Judah's conquests south of Jerusalem. 10: The biblical Hebron is identified with Tel Rameda, 30 km (18 miles) southwest of Jerusalem. The conquest of Hebron and its giants ("Anakites," v. 20) is here attributed to Judah. Other traditions appear in Josh. 10.36-37; 14.6-14, as well as in v. 20 below. Hebron is an important city in the ancestral narratives in Genesis (see esp. Gen. ch 23), and in the early part of David's reign (2 Sam. chs 2-5). 11: Debir is identified with Khirbet Rabud, 15 km (9 miles) southwest of Hebron. 12: The families of Caleb and Kenaz are presented here as part of the tribe of Judah. 13: The representation of Othniel as younger than Caleb indicates that Caleb's clan was a more important one. 14: According to this v., Achsah persuaded Othniel, but further on the negotiation occurs between Achsah and Caleb; hence, many scholars prefer the reading of the Septuagint, according to which Othniel persuaded Achsah. Dismounting from the donkey is a gesture of politeness. 16: The Kenites were another group integrated into the tribe of Judah. The origins of the connection with them is told through the story of Moses's marriage to Zipporah, daughter of Jethro (Exod. 2.16-22). The City of Palms: As the name is applicable to any settlement in the wilderness of Judah; and they went and settled among the people^a in the Negeb of Arad. ¹⁷ And Judah with its brother-tribe Simeon went on and defeated the Canaanites who dwelt in Zephath. They proscribed it, and so the town was named Hormah.^b ¹⁸ And Judah captured^c Gaza and its territory, Ashkelon and its territory, and Ekron and its territory.

¹⁹ The LORD was with Judah, so that they took possession of the hill country; but they were not able to dispossess the inhabitants of the plain, for they had iron chariots. ²⁰ They gave Hebron to Caleb, as Moses had promised; and he drove the three Anakites out of there. ²¹ The Benjaminites did not dispossess the Jebusite inhabitants of Jerusalem; so the Jebusites have dwelt with the Benjaminites in Jerusalem to this day.

²² The House of Joseph, for their part, advanced against Bethel, and the LORD was with them. ²³ While the House of Joseph were scouting at Bethel (the name of the town was formerly Luz), ²⁴ their patrols^d saw a man leaving the town. They said to him, "Just show us how to get into the town, and we will treat you kindly." ²⁵ He showed them how to get into the town; they put the town to the sword, but they let the man and all his relatives go free. ²⁶ The man went to the Hittite country. He founded a city and named it Luz, and that has been its name to this day.

²⁷ Manasseh did not dispossess [the inhabitants of] Bethshean and its dependencies, or [of] Taanach and its dependencies, or the inhabitants of Dor and its dependencies, or the inhabitants of Ibleam and its dependencies, or the inhabitants of Megiddo and its dependencies. The Canaanites persisted in dwelling in this region. ²⁸ And when Israel gained the upper hand, they subjected the Canaanites to forced labor; but they did not dispossess them. ²⁹ Nor did Ephraim dispossess the Canaanites who inhabited Gezer; so the Canaanites dwelt in their midst at Gezer.

³⁰ Zebulun did not dispossess the inhabitants of Kitron or the inhabitants of Nahalol; so the Canaanites dwelt in their midst, but they were subjected to forced labor. ³¹ Asher did not dispossess the inhabitants of Acco or the inhabitants of Sidon, Ahlab, Achzib, Helbah, Aphik, and Rehob. ³² So the Asherites dwelt in the midst of the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land, for they did not dispossess them. ³³ Naphtali did not dispossess the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh or the inhabitants of Beth-anath.

which there are date palms, it is difficult to identify. 18: Gaza . . . Ashkelon . . . Ekron: The conquest of three of the five Philistine royal city-states, which elsewhere were only conquered in the days of David, is here attributed to Judah. 20: Judah gave the city to Caleb and he dispossessed the giants (Anakites), whose names are mentioned in v. 10 above. The story of a struggle with giants appears in the narratives of the conquest (see, e.g., Num. 13.28, 32–33).

1.21–36: The conquests of the northern tribes. The tribes of the north, who here number seven, are mentioned in order from south to north, from Benjamin to Dan, who was forced to leave his inheritance and later settled in the north. This order is similar to that of the whole book, which begins with Ehud the Benjaminite and concludes with the northward wandering of Dan. The northern tribes are represented as responsible for the majority of the failures to take possession of the land. 22–29: Similar to Judah who conquered Jerusalem, the first conquest of the House of Joseph is their central cultic city, Bethel. Bethel is identified with the Arab village Beitin, about 20 km (12 miles) north of Jerusalem. 30–33: The tribes dwelling north of the valley of Jezreel are described as a minority that ruled the Canaanite population. 34–35: The tribe of Dan did not succeed in taking hold of its inheritance, and was forced into the area of Har-heres near Beth-shemesh. The House of Joseph, unlike Judah who cooperated with Simeon his brother, did not help the tribe of Dan and preferred to subjugate the Amorites as forced labor.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "Anakites"; cf. 1 Sam. 15.6.

b I.e., "Proscribed." Cf. notes at Num. 21.2–3.

c Septuagint reads "But Judah did not capture Gaza . . ." Gaza is in the coastal plain referred to in v. 19. d Lit. "watchmen."

But they settled in the midst of the Canaanite inhabitants of the land, and the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh and Beth-anath had to perform forced labor for them.

³⁴The Amorites pressed the Danites into the hill country; they would not let them come down to the plain.

³⁵The Amorites also persisted in dwelling in Har-heres, in Aijalon, and in Shaalbim. But the hand of the House of Joseph bore heavily on them and they had to perform forced labor. ³⁶The territory of the Amorites^a extended from the Ascent of Akrabbim—from Sela—onward.

2 An angel of the LORD came up from Gilgal to Bochim and said, "I brought you up from Egypt and I took you into the land which I had promised on oath to your fathers. And I said, 'I will never break My covenant with you. ²And you, for your part, must make no covenant with the inhabitants of this land; you must tear down their altars.' But you have not obeyed Me—look what you have done! ³Therefore, I have resolved not to drive them out before you; they shall become your oppressors,^b and their gods shall be a snare to you." ⁴As the angel of the LORD spoke these words to all the Israelites, the people broke into weeping. ⁵So they named that place Bochim,^c and they offered sacrifices there to the LORD.

⁶When Joshua dismissed the people, the Israelites went to their allotted territories and took possession of the land.

⁷The people served the LORD during the lifetime of Joshua and the lifetime of the older people who lived on after Joshua and who had witnessed all the marvelous deeds that the LORD had wrought for Israel. ⁸Joshua son of Nun, the servant of the LORD, died at the age of one hundred and ten years, ⁹and was buried on his own property, at Timnath-heres^d in the hill country of Ephraim, north of Mount Gaash. ¹⁰And all that generation were likewise gathered to their fathers.

Another generation arose after them, which had not experienced [the deliverance of] the LORD or the deeds that He had wrought for Israel. ¹¹And the Israelites did what was offensive to the LORD. They worshiped the Baalim ¹²and forsook the LORD, the God of their fathers, who had brought them out of the land of Egypt. They followed other gods, from among the gods of the peoples around them, and bowed down to them; they provoked the LORD. ¹³They forsook the LORD and worshiped Baal and the

2.1-5: The assembly in Bochim and the punishment for non-dispossessing. This episode is somewhat obscure. 1: The angel is evidently a prophet sent by the LORD to the city of Bochim, i.e., Bethel. This identification is based upon the Septuagint, and upon the connection of Bethel to weeping (v. 5; see 20.26, 17-23; 21.2). It was only natural that Bethel, which is identified with the golden calf (1 Kings 12.25-30), was chosen to serve as the place of rebuke to the northern tribes, who violated the covenant and sinned in non-dispossessing.

2.6-3.6: Characterization of the age of the judges. 2.6-10: The first generation of the age of the judges did not know the deliverance of the LORD. 2.11-19: The period of the judges is characterized by repeating cycles comprised of four stages: the sin of doing evil in the eyes of the LORD (vv. 11-13); punishment by subjugation to the surrounding nations (vv. 14-15), deliverance by judges (v. 16), and the days during which the judges ruled, which were periods of calm following the deliverance (vv. 17-19). Sometimes the people returned to sin during the judge's lifetime, and at others only after his death; in any event the period of sin always returns. Later in the book, the stage of deliverance (see 3.9, etc.) is also preceded by a stage of crying out or turning to the LORD. The absence of this stage here emphasizes the nation's apostasy. This description is rich in repetitions and in Deuteronomistic expressions, suggesting a late editing. 11: Baalim: Baal, whose name means "master," was one of the heads of the Canaanite pantheon. The use of the plural may indicate the existence of a multiplicity of cults of which Baal is the center, or various other kinds of idolatry. 13: Ashtaroth: The name Ashtoreth also appears here in the plural. This goddess, one of the consorts of Baal, was responsible for love and fertility.

a Some Septuagint mss. read "Edomites."

b So Targum and other ancient versions. Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c I.e., "weepers." d Some mss. read "Timnath-heres"; cf. Josh. 24.30.

Ashtaroth.^a 14 Then the LORD was incensed at Israel, and He handed them over to foes^b who plundered them. He surrendered them to their enemies on all sides, and they could no longer hold their own against their enemies. 15 In all their campaigns, the hand of the LORD was against them to their undoing, as the LORD had declared and as the LORD had sworn to them; and they were in great distress. 16 Then the LORD raised up chieftains who delivered them from those who plundered them. 17 But they did not heed their chieftains either; they went astray after other gods and bowed down to them. They were quick to turn aside from the way their fathers had followed in obedience to the commandments of the LORD; they did not do right. 18 When the LORD raised up chieftains for them, the LORD would be with the chieftain and would save them from their enemies during the chieftain's lifetime; for the LORD would be moved to pity by their moanings because of those who oppressed and crushed them. 19 But when the chieftain died, they would again act basely, even more than "the preceding generation"^c—following other gods, worshiping them, and bowing down to them; they omitted none of their practices and stubborn ways.

20 Then the LORD became incensed against Israel, and He said, "Since that nation has transgressed the covenant that I enjoined upon their fathers and has not obeyed Me, 21 I for My part will no longer drive out before them any of the nations that Joshua left when he died." 22 For it was in order to test Israel by them—[to see] whether or not they would faithfully walk in the ways of the LORD, as their fathers had done—23 that the LORD had left those nations, instead of driving them out at once, and had not delivered them into the hands of Joshua.

3^d These are the nations that the LORD left so that He might test by them all the Israelites who had not known any of the wars of Canaan,^e so that succeeding generations of Israelites might be made to experience war—but only those who had not known the "former wars:"^f 3 the five principalities^g of the Philistines and all the Canaanites, Sidonians, and Hivites who inhabited the hill country of the Lebanon from Mount Baal-hermon to Lebo-hamath.^g 4 These served as a means of testing Israel, to learn whether they would obey the commandments which the LORD had enjoined upon their fathers through Moses.

a Canaanite female deities. b Lit. "plunderers." c-c Lit. "their fathers."

d The sentence structure of vv. 1–2 is uncertain.

e-e Lit. "them formerly." f Lit. "lords." g See note at Num. 13.21.

2.20–3.6: Three answers as to why the nations remained. This is clearly a composite text, reflecting various answers to the central question: Why was the conquest of the indigenous population not complete? 21: The sins of the period of the judges made the LORD decide not to continue to dispossess the nations. 22–23: According to a second view, God intended from the outset to leave the nations in order to test Israel and see if they would be loyal to Him. 3.1–2: According to a third view, incorporated in the previous one, God planned from the outset to leave the other nations in order to allow the Israelites practice in the art of war. 5–6: The lack of complete annihilation of the local population led to assimilation (see Deut. 7.1–6; 20.16–18), and thus explains the faithlessness of the Israelites in the rest of the book.

3.7–11: Othniel the Kenizzite.

The first judge was from Judah, and he waged war against an enemy from the far north, thus lending a national character to the event. The description of the deliverance does not give any details about the war itself, but is rich in terms found elsewhere in the cyclical formulae. This description serves as a transitional stage from the introduction to the specific narratives. Othniel's success is complete, suggesting the preeminence of Judah. 7: Asheroth: The plural indicates a multiplicity of cults. In the Ugaritic pantheon Asherah is the consort of El, the old chief god. The word is used in the Bible both as the name of the goddess and as the term for a cultic object made of wood, which was evidently her symbol (see, e.g., Deut. 16.21–22). 8: Cushan-rishathaim: The name is strange. The dual ending (ayim) seems intended to suggest a particularly wicked enemy. The name as a whole may be translated as "Dark double-wickedness," and is likely symbolic. Aram-naharaim: The land of the family of the two rivers (Tigris and Euphrates), in north-east Syria. Some think that the ⁵The Israelites settled among the Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites; ⁶they took their daughters to wife and gave their own daughters to their sons, and they worshiped their gods. ⁷The Israelites did what was offensive to the LORD; they ignored the LORD their God and worshiped the Baalim and the Asheroth. ⁸The LORD became incensed at Israel and surrendered them to King Cushan-rishathaim of Aram-naharaim; and the Israelites were subject to Cushan-rishathaim for eight years. ⁹The Israelites cried out to the LORD, and the LORD raised a champion for the Israelites to deliver them: Othniel the Kenizzite, a younger kinsman of Caleb. ¹⁰The spirit of the LORD descended upon him and he became Israel's chieftain. He went out to war, and the LORD delivered King Cushan-rishathaim of Aram into his hands. He prevailed over Cushan-rishathaim, ¹¹and the land had peace for forty years.

When Othniel the Kenizzite died, ¹²the Israelites again did what was offensive to the LORD. And because they did what was offensive to the LORD, the LORD let King Eglon of Moab prevail over Israel. ¹³[Eglon] brought the Ammonites and the Amalekites together under his command, and went and defeated Israel and occupied the City of Palms. ¹⁴The Israelites were subject to King Eglon of Moab for eighteen years.

¹⁵Then the Israelites cried out to the LORD, and the LORD raised up a champion for them: the Benjaminite Ehud son of Gera, a left-handed man. It happened that the Israelites sent tribute to King Eglon of Moab through him. ¹⁶So Ehud made for himself a two-edged dagger, a gomed in length, which he girded on his right side under his cloak. ¹⁷He presented the tribute to King Eglon of Moab. Now Eglon was a very stout man. ¹⁸When [Ehud] had finished presenting the tribute, he dismissed the people who had conveyed the tribute. ¹⁹But he himself returned from Pesilim, near Gilgal, and said, "Your Majesty, I have a secret message for you." [Eglon] thereupon commanded, "Silence!" So all those in attendance left his presence; ²⁰and when Ehud approached him, he was sitting alone in his cool upper chamber. Ehud said, "I have a message for you from God"; whereupon he rose from his seat. ²¹Reaching with his left hand, Ehud drew the dagger from his right side and drove it into [Eglon's]^a belly. ²²The fat closed over the blade and the hilt went in after the blade—for he did not pull the dagger out of his belly—and the filth^b came out.

name Aram is a corruption of Edom, which borders Judah, but it is more likely that the intention is to attribute to Othniel from Judah a national war against a powerful distant nation. 10: The spirit of the LORD: This refers to a temporary endowment of power or charisma that allows him to be a successful warrior and leader.

3.12–30: Ehud son of Gera. In this story, the deliverance performed by Ehud the Benjaminite is performed with military tactics, some planned and others improvised. The victory suggests that divine providence stands behind human success. 13: The City of Palms: In this case, unlike 1.16, most commentators, following Josephus, identify this place with Jericho. 16: Two-edged dagger: Ordinary daggers were curved and sharp only on the inner edge. Ehud's dagger, intended for stabbing, was short, perhaps a foot long, and sharpened on both edges, perhaps because he would wield it in his left hand, contrary to the usual practice. 17: The king's stoutness is emphasized because it complicated the planned assassination, as Ehud had a short sword. The picture of the dagger buried in the fleshy king's abdomen (vv. 21–22) adds to the humorous put-down of Eglon. 18: Had finished . . . he dismissed the people: These expressions create the impression of an elaborate gift-offering ceremony. The time consumed by the ceremony enabled Ehud to become familiar with the place and to create the impression of a submissive subject. Ehud alone remained, thereby obviating the need to reenter the well-guarded palace. 19: Ehud arrived at Eglon's residence after previously visiting the Pesilim ("idols"), evidently a cultic site with statues of the gods near Gilgal, next to Jericho. 20: From God: Ehud anticipated that, upon hearing God's name, the king would stand up and stretch himself, thereby making it easier to kill him. Eglon expects a divine oracle, but receives a divinely sanctioned stabbing. Some sages emphasized

^a Heb. "his." ^b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Important cities mentioned in the book of Judges. Square boxes indicate Philistine cities.

²³Stepping out into the vestibule,^a Ehud shut the doors of the upper chamber on him and locked them. ²⁴After he left, the courtiers returned. When they saw that the doors of the upper chamber were locked, they thought, "He must be relieving himself in the cool chamber." ²⁵They waited a long time; and when he did not open the doors of the chamber, they took the key and opened them—and there their master was lying dead on the floor! ²⁶But Ehud had made good his escape while they delayed; he had passed Pesilim and escaped to Seirah. ²⁷When he got there, he had the ram's horn sounded through the hill country of Ephraim, and all the Israelites descended with him from the hill country; and he took the lead. ²⁸"Follow me closely," he said, "for the LORD has delivered your enemies, the Moabites, into your hands." They followed him down and seized the fords of the Jordan against the Moabites; they let no one cross. ²⁹On that occasion they slew about 10,000 Moabites; they were all robust and brave men, yet not one of them escaped. ³⁰On that day, Moab submitted to Israel; and the land was tranquil for eighty years.

³¹After him came Shamgar ^bson of Anath,^b who slew six hundred Philistines with an ox-goat. He too was a champion of Israel.

4 The Israelites again did what was offensive to the LORD—Ehud now being dead. ²And the LORD surrendered them to King Jabin of Canaan, who reigned in Hazor. His army commander was Sisera, whose base was Harosheth-goiim. ³The Israelites cried out to the LORD; for he had nine hundred iron chariots, and he had oppressed Israel ruthlessly for twenty years.

⁴Deborah, wife of Lappidoth, was a prophetess; she led Israel at that time. ⁵She used to sit under the Palm of Deborah, between Ramah and Bethel in the hill country of a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Or "the Beth-anathite."

the positive aspect in Eglon's behavior, namely, that he stood up out of respect for the LORD, and they considered Ruth the Moabite to be Eglon's daughter, making David one of his descendants (Ruth Rab. 2.9). 23: The architectural details are unclear. 24: Eglon is indeed relieving himself in that his guts are spilling out. 25: Lying dead: The servants did not sense the murder, as the fat covering the dagger prevented bleeding. They therefore did not suspect Ehud, who had enough time to escape. 26: Seirah, unidentified site in the hill country of Ephraim. 28: The fords of the Jordan, places that served as river-crossings where the river was shallow. 29: Not one of them escaped, a likely allusion to divine providence. 31: Shamgar son of Anath: The report about Shamgar may be based on his mention in the Song of Deborah (5.6). It is reminiscent of other stories of heroism, such as the story about Samson who smote 1,000 people with the jaw bone of an ass (Judg. 15.15-16; cf. 2 Sam. 23.8). The inclusion of Shamgar among the judges rounds out their number to twelve.

4.1-24: Deborah, Jael, and Barak. Deborah the prophetess, Barak the army commander, and Jael wife of Heber the Kenite, all contributed to achieving delivery from the Canaanite enemy. None of them is called the deliverer, because each of these human figures made only a partial contribution to the victory; in practice, the true deliverer was God (v. 23). In Jewish tradition this story, and the song which follows, constitute the haftarah for "Be-shallah," whose Torah reading relates that the LORD confused the camp of Egypt (cf. Exod. 14.24; Judg. 4.15), that they drowned in the sea until "not one of them remained" (cf. Exod. 14.28; Judg. 4.16), and that Moses and Israel sang a song to the LORD after they saw their salvation (cf. Exod. 15.1-18; Judg. ch 5). The prose account of the defeat of Sisera in ch 4, followed by the song in ch 5, is structurally similar to the prose account of the drowning of the Egyptians in Exod. ch 14, followed by the Song of the Sea in ch 15. 2: King Jabin of Canaan, a problematic phrase found in this story alone (cf. vv. 23-24) since Canaan, which was divided into many royal city-states, was not ruled by a king. The desire to magnify the dimensions of this deliverance may have led to the creation of this idiom. Who reigned in Hazor: Jabin is mentioned below (v. 17) as the king of Hazor, which is located in upper Galilee and was known as a very important city (Josh. 11.9). Sisera: The origin and meaning of the name are unknown. Harosheth-goiim: The place, mentioned only here, has not been identified. The name Harosheth seems to be derived from the term "harish," i.e., a plowed area, referring to the flat areas in the Jezreel Valley near Taanach and Megiddo, where Sisera's army encamped Ephraim, and the Israelites would come to her for decisions.

⁶She summoned Barak son of Abinoam, of Kedesh in Naphtali, and said to him, "The LORD, the God of Israel, has commanded: Go, march up to Mount Tabor, and take with you ten thousand men of Naphtali and Zebulun. ⁷And I will draw Sisera, Jabin's army commander, with his chariots and his troops, toward you up to the Wadi Kishon; and I will deliver him into your hands." ⁸But Barak said to her, "If you will go with me, I will go; if not, I will not go." ⁹"Very well, I will go with you," she answered. "However, there will be no glory for you in the course you are taking, for then the LORD will deliver Sisera into the hands of a woman." So Deborah went with Barak to Kedesh. ¹⁰Barak then mustered Zebulun and Naphtali at Kedesh; ten thousand men marched up ^aafter him;^a and Deborah also went up with him.

¹¹Now Heber the Kenite had separated ^bfrom the other Kenites,^b descendants of Hobab, father-in-law of Moses, and had pitched his tent at Elon-bezaananim, which is near Kedesh.

¹²Sisera was informed that Barak son of Abinoam had gone up to Mount Tabor. ¹³So Sisera ordered all his chariots—nine hundred iron chariots—and all the troops he had to move from Harosheth-goyim to the Wadi Kishon. ¹⁴Then Deborah said to Barak, "Up! This is the day on which the LORD will deliver Sisera into your hands: the LORD is marching before you." Barak charged down Mount Tabor, followed by the ten thousand men, ¹⁵and the LORD threw Sisera and all his chariots and army into a panic ^cbefore the onslaught of Barak.^c Sisera leaped from his chariot and fled on foot ¹⁶as Barak pursued the chariots and the soldiers as far as Harosheth-goyim. All of Sisera's soldiers fell by the sword; not a man was left.

¹⁷Sisera, meanwhile, had fled on foot to the tent of Jael, wife of Heber the Kenite; for there was friendship between King Jabin of Hazor and the family of Heber the Kenite. ¹⁸Jael came out to greet Sisera and said to him, "Come in, my lord, come in here, do not be afraid." So he entered her tent, and she covered him with a blanket. ¹⁹He said to her, "Please let me have some water; I am thirsty." She opened a skin of milk and gave him some to drink; and she covered him again. ²⁰He said to her, "Stand at the entrance of the tent. If anybody comes and asks you with his chariot. 6: Kedesh in Naphtali, located in the southeast part of the inheritance of Naphtali, identified with Khirbet Kadish at the foot of Poriyah. Mount Tabor: At this mountain, overlooking the Valley of Jezreel from the north, Barak was commanded to gather his army. 7: Wadi Kishon, one of the branches of the Kishon, the most important of the brooks of the Jezreel Valley. This branch flows close to Taanach and Megiddo and is referred to in the song as "Megiddo's waters" (5.19). 8: If not; I will not go: The military leader needs the prophetess as a means of inquiring of the LORD. 9: Into the hands of a woman: This does not enhance the army commander's dignity. The reader assumes that this refers to Deborah, but when reaching the end of the story, realizes that Jael is meant. Thus, Deborah's "prophecy" in this verse is fulfilled. 11: Heber the Kenite, a tribal unit that became separated from the Kenites who were annexed to Judah (1.16). 14: The LORD is marching before you: These words of Deborah indicate the LORD's direct participation in the battle, as the leader going at the head of the army. 15: "At the edge of the sword" (translators' note c-c): These words are appended here from v. 16. Nowhere else in the entire Bible does the LORD throw the enemy into a panic by the sword. 16: Not a man was left: This unrealistic detail alludes to divine intervention (cf. 3.29). 17: To the tent of Jael . . . for there was friendship: Sisera preferred the tent of the Kenites to Harosheth-goyim, because he was convinced that this direction of flight would not occur to his pursuers, due to the friendship between the Kenites and the Israelites. 19: Even though he asked for water she gave him milk, because of its soothing qualities; Jael wanted to assure that Sisera would sleep deeply. 21: Here it is revealed that Jael is the woman into whose hands the LORD delivered Sisera (see v. 9). 23: God subdued: The conclusion emphasizes the LORD's central role in accomplish-

a-a Lit. "at his feet."

b-b Lit. "from Cain"; cf. 1.16.

c-c Lit. "at the edge of the sword before Barak."

if there is anybody here, say 'No.' " ²¹ Then Jael wife of Heber took a tent pin and grasped the mallet. When he was fast asleep from exhaustion, she approached him stealthily and drove the pin through his temple till it went down to the ground. Thus he died.

²² Now Barak appeared in pursuit of Sisera. Jael went out to greet him and said, "Come, I will show you the man you are looking for." He went inside with her, and there Sisera was lying dead, with the pin in his temple.

²³ On that day God subdued King Jabin of Canaan before the Israelites. ²⁴ The hand of the Israelites bore harder and harder on King Jabin of Canaan, until they destroyed King Jabin of Canaan.

5 On that day Deborah and Barak son of Abinoam sang:

^{2a} When ^blocks go untrimmed^b in Israel,
When people dedicate themselves—
Bless the LORD!

³ Hear, O kings! Give ear, O potentates!
I will sing, will sing to the LORD,
Will hymn the LORD, the God of Israel.

⁴ O LORD, when You came forth from Seir,
Advanced from the country of Edom,
The earth trembled;
The heavens dripped,
Yea, the clouds dripped water,

⁵ The mountains quaked^c—
Before the LORD, Him of Sinai,
Before the LORD, God of Israel.

a In many parts of this poem the meaning is uncertain.

b-b Apparently an expression of dedication; cf. Num. 6.5.

c Taking nazelu as a by-form of nazollu; cf. Targum.

ing the general victory and the partial contribution of the human figures.

5.1-31: The Song of Deborah.

This is a hymn of praise thanking and extolling God for overcoming the enemies that threatened His people. It incorporates calls and addresses expressing the joy of victory and the need to offer thanksgiving. The poem is written in the first person, presented from the viewpoint of the speaker; readers in effect sing the song and identify with the speaker. Besides the opening (vv. 2-3) and closing (v. 31a) it consists of three sections. The first (vv. 4-11c) depicts God's theophany, the difficult situation of His people and its hope for salvation; the second (vv. 11d-23) portrays the Israelite warriors in contrast with the Canaanite kings; the third (vv. 24-30) focuses upon Jael, who represents victory, contrasted with Sisera's mother, who represents defeat. Although there are similarities between the song in ch 5 and the story in ch 4, there are also numerous differences: e.g., the story only mentions two tribes who participate in battle, the song mentions at least six; according to the song Sisera headed the Canaanite alliance and Jabin is not mentioned. Many scholars believe that the story was composed as an interpretation of the song. Stylistically, the song is in archaic Heb, and is extremely difficult, and in places, perhaps corrupt. It makes use of extensive contrasts and extreme transitions: from the LORD's might to Israel's unfortunate situation; from the Israelite tribes to their enemies; from Jael to Sisera's mother. It also conveys an atmosphere of spontaneous enthusiasm. The poem does not mention Judah, Simeon, and Levi, suggesting that it was composed in the north. 1: According to the editor, Deborah and Barak uttered the song in immediate reaction to the joy of victory.

5.2-3: Opening explaining the circumstances of reciting the song. 2: When locks go untrimmed, the Heb is difficult. The translation alludes to the phenomenon of Nazirites who dedicated themselves to warfare wearing long hair (see Num. ch 6). Rashī's interpretation, that the phrase refers to disturbances or even disasters that confronted Israel, is preferable. Dedicate, volunteer of one's own will. Bless, addressed to the people of Israel. 3: I will sing . . .: The repetition emphasizes the function of the speaker and strengthens the involvement of the person later reciting the song.

5.4-5: God's theophany and His influence on the mighty forces of nature. 4: Seir . . . Edom, synonyms referring to God's revelation in the land of Edom, south-east of Judah. On the tradition of God's epiphany there, see Deut. 32.2. 5: Quaked, some interpret the Heb in the sense of flowing, liquid matter. On the connection between earthquakes and liquid imagery, see Amos 9.5.

- 6 In the days of Shamgar ^ason of Anath,^a
In the days of Jael, caravans^b ceased,
And wayfarers went
By roundabout paths.
- 7 Deliverance ceased,
Ceased in Israel,
Till you^c arose, O Deborah,
Arose, O mother, in Israel!
- 8 When they chose new gods,
^dWas there a fighter then in the gates?^d
No shield or spear was seen
Among forty thousand in Israel!
- 9 My heart is with Israel's leaders,
With the dedicated of the people—
Bless the LORD!
- 10 You riders on tawny she-asses,
You who sit on saddle rugs,
And you wayfarers, declare it!
Louder than the ^esound of archers,^e
There among the watering places
Let them chant the gracious acts of the LORD,
His gracious deliverance of Israel.
Then did the people of the LORD
March down to the gates!
- 12 Awake, awake, O Deborah!
Awake, awake, strike up the chant!
Arise, O Barak;
Take your captives, O son of Abinoam!
- 13 Then was the remnant made victor over the mighty,
The LORD's people^f won my victory over the warriors.
- 14 From Ephraim came they whose roots are in Amalek;

a-a Or "the Beth-anathite." b Or "roads."

c Heb. qamti, archaic second-person singular feminine.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "then was war in the gates."

e-e Or "thunder peals"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

f Reading 'am (with pathah) Adonai; so many Heb. mss.

5.6–11c: Description of the difficult situation in Israel. 6: Shamgar, see 3.31 n. 7: Deliverance ceased: In the Aramaic Targum and in traditional exegesis the Heb word "per-azon" is taken as referring to

"open" cities. People were afraid to live in towns without a wall, and fled to fortified cities. You arose: Here the speaker addresses Deborah; see v. 12. 8: New gods: The cause of the difficult situation is the people's abandonment of the LORD for the gods of Canaan. See Deut. 32.15–19. Then: This word is repeated five times (vv. 8, 11, 13, 19, 22). Its appearance indicates various stages in the course of the war: danger, gathering together, arrival at the battlefield, war, retreat. Forty thousand, an exaggerated typological number, intended to suggest a war of national dimensions. 9: Leaders: The Heb formula carries the connotation of legislators. 10: You riders . . .: Only the wealthy could allow themselves to ride specifically on yellowish donkeys. Riding on a donkey was a symbol of wealth; see 10.4 n. 11: Sound of archers: Alternately, the Heb may refer to the noise made by shepherds while dividing their flocks in order to water them. The sound of those who tell God's victories will be louder than this sound. His gracious deliverance: The LORD's deliverance restored confidence.

5.11d-13: General description of preparation for war. 11: Gates: The city gate served as a gathering place. Those who had left the unwalled cities gathered at the gates of the fortified cities in order to set out to battle. 12: Strike up the chant: Deborah is expected to prophesy on the eve of the war. Take your captives: On the connection between victory and booty, see v. 30. 13: Then was the remnant . . .: The Heb is difficult. A preferable reading is "Then they went down to Sarid [a city in the Jezreel Valley] against the mighty ones [i.e., the Canaanite kings; see v. 25], the LORD's people with their warriors."

5.14–18: Description of the Israelite side. Most commentators state that six tribes went to war (Ephraim, Benjamin, Machir [i.e., Manasseh], Zebulun, Issachar and Naphtali), while four other tribes (Reuben, Gilead [i.e., Gad and the other half of Manasseh], Dan and Asher) refused to join. According to the interpretation suggested here, all ten northern tribes participated. 14: In Amalek: This phrase is

After you, your kin Benjamin;
 From Machir came down leaders,
 From Zebulun such as hold the marshal's staff.
 15 And Issachar's chiefs were with Deborah;
 As Barak, so was Issachar—
 Rushing after him into the valley.

Among the clans of Reuben
 Were great decisions of heart.
 16 Why then did you stay among the sheepfolds
 And listen as they pipe for the flocks?
 Among the clans of Reuben
 Were great searchings of heart!
 17 Gilead tarried beyond the Jordan;
 And Dan—why did he linger ^aby the ships?^a Asher remained at the seacoast
 And tarried at his landings.
 18 Zebulun is a people ^bthat mocked at death,^b
 Naphtali—on the open heights.

Then the kings came, they fought:
 The kings of Canaan fought
 At Taanach, by Megiddo's waters—
 They got no spoil of silver.
 20 The stars fought from heaven,
 From their courses they fought against Sisera.
 21 The torrent Kishon swept them^c away,
 The raging torrent, the torrent Kishon.

March on, my soul, with courage!
 22 Then the horses' hoofs pounded ^dAs headlong galloped the steeds.^d a-a Or "at Onieth," a presumed designation of Dan's region.

 b-b Lit. "belittled its life to die." c I.e., the kings of Canaan (v. 19).
 d-d Lit. "From the gallopings, the gallopings of his steeds."

unclear; hence one should adopt the emendation based on the similarity of the Heb letters: "From Ephraim chieftains [went down] to the valley (Heb 'mk; Amalek is 'mlk)." Your kin: The collective noun here follows the plural in the Heb, which may be interpreted as: "After you, Benjamin, among your kinfolk." This usage strengthens the sense of Benjamin's large army. Benjamin is mentioned as a fighting tribe in ch 20, in the blessing of Jacob (Gen 49.27), and in the description of the establishment of the kingdom (2 Sam. ch 11). Machir: The first-born son of Manasseh; cf. Josh. 17.1. Marshal's staff: the Heb word suggests commanders, who recorded the number of those going to war (see 2 Kings 25.19). 15: So was Issachar: It is strange that Issachar is repeated twice in this v., while Naphtali is absent. It therefore seems likely that it originally read "Naphtali." This conjecture is strengthened by the fact that Barak was from Ke-desh-Naphtali, and by the affinity of this v. to the description of Naphtali in the blessing of Jacob (Gen. 49.21). Heart: The ancients thought of the heart as the center of thinking and wisdom (see, e.g., 1 Kings 3.12). 16: Why then: the Heb "lamah" (why) does not necessarily imply query. Here and in v. 17 it seems preferable to read as a term of negation with an emphatic mem. Thus, it is not a denunciation of Reuben, and later Dan, for not taking part in the battle. A preferable translation, which notes Reuben's participation, is: "You [certainly] did not stay among the sheepfolds . . . !" 17: Tarried, alternately, "dwelled" or "lived," suggesting that even though the inhabitants of Gilead (Gad and the half tribe of Manasseh) lived far away from the locus of events, they took part in them. And Dan . . . ships, alternately, "Dan [certainly] did not linger by the ships." The mention of ships is difficult, because the territory of Dan, both in the south and in the north, has no connection to the sea. Asher: The tribe Asher, who dwell on the northern coastal plain, also joined the war. 18: Zebulun . . . Naphtali: These two tribes alone are mentioned as bold warriors. This is why they alone are mentioned in the prose story (ch 4). Open heights: The war was in the valley; the expression alludes to Naphtali's inheritance.

5.19-23: The battle. 19: Kings of Canaan: Jabin, who is mentioned in the prose story, does not appear here; v. 20 notes Sisera as heading the alliance. At Taanach, by Megiddo's waters: The battlefield was between Taanach and one of the tributaries of the Kishon next to Megiddo, in Jezreel Valley, near the ancient international highway connecting Egypt and Mesopotamia (see 4.7). 21: The raging torrent: The Heb is obscure, and an emendation suggests "the brook Kishon came in front of them." March on: The joy of victory finds expression as the speaker addresses himself. 22: A description of the noise of the enemy's horses' feet fleeing 23 "Curse Meroz!" said the angel of the LORD.

 "Bitterly curse its inhabitants,
 Because they came not to the aid of the LORD,
 To the aid of the LORD among^a the warriors."

24 Most blessed of women be Jael,
 Wife of Heber the Kenite,
 Most blessed of women in tents.
 25 He asked for water, she offered milk;
 In a princely bowl she brought him curds.
 26 Her [left] hand reached for the tent pin,
 Her right for the workmen's hammer.
 She struck Sisera, crushed his head,
 Smashed and pierced his temple.
 27 At her feet he sank, lay outstretched,
 At her feet he sank, lay still;
 Where he sank, there he lay—destroyed.

28 Through the window peered Sisera's mother,
 Behind the lattice she whined:^b
 "Why is his chariot so long in coming?
 Why so late the clatter of his wheels?"
 29 The wisest of her ladies give answer;
 She, too, replies to herself:
 30 "They must be dividing the spoil they have found:
 A damsel or two for each man,
 Spoil of dyed cloths for Sisera,
 Spoil of embroidered cloths,
 A couple of embroidered cloths
 Round every neck as spoil."

31 So may all Your enemies perish, O LORD!
 But may His friends be as the sun rising in might!

And the land was tranquil forty years.

6 Then the Israelites did what was offensive to the LORD, and the LORD delivered them into the hands of the Midianites for seven years. ²The hand of the Midianites prevailed over Israel; and because of Midian, the Israelites a Or "against." b Or "gazed"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

from the battle's confusion.
23: Meroz, which has not been identified and whose inhabitants did not join the battle, is cursed.
The warriors: Here and in v. 13 it speaks of the warriors of Israel who joined the LORD's battle.

5.24–27: Description of the killing of Sisera in Jael's tent.
 Death at the hands of a woman was considered shameful; cf. 9.54.
 The appearance of Jael in the poem is not explained; furthermore, the song does not suggest that Sisera slept, implying instead that Jael struggled with Sisera. The poem describes Sisera's death in slow motion.

5.28–30: Transition to Sisera's house. The mother's apprehension contrasts with the ladies' expectations of booty. This scene, which is not found in the narrative in ch 4, portrays Sisera's demise from a different perspective. 28: The picture of a woman looking through the window is repeated in the Bible (2 Sam. 6.16; 2 Kings 9.30) and in other ancient Near Eastern texts. 30: Dyed cloths . . . embroidered: The making of dye was expensive; hence colored clothing was expensive, as were garments embroidered with colored threads.
 Cf. Exod. 26.36. Every neck: This seems to refer to the necks of those who took the spoils.

5.31a: Closing. His friends: The people of the LORD are compared to the sun, rising with great intensity.

5.31b: Editorial conclusion. These words are not part of the song, but are the closing frame of the Deborah-Barak cycle. In its present location it emphasizes the transition to a new cycle of stories.

6.1–8.28: The cycle of Gideon stories. The description of Gideon's deliverance of the Israelites is divided into two sections, distinctive in subject matter, events, and characterization. The former (6.1–7.23) depicts the period from the people's sin and consequent subjugation to the Midianites until Gideon's victory. This section is rich with miracles, while Gideon is portrayed as a coward requiring divine support. By contrast, the second section (7.24–8.28) is concerned with problems of leadership, there are no miracles, and Gideon is displayed as a charismatic leader. The two sections illustrate the central problem of Judges: What is the preferred leadership? Divine leadership rich in miraculous signs, as in the first section, or human rule, as in the provided themselves with refuges in the caves and strongholds of the mountains.^a ³After the Israelites had done their sowing, Midian, Amalek, and the Kedemites would come up and raid them; ⁴they would attack them, destroy^b the produce of the land all the way to Gaza, and leave no means of sustenance in Israel, not a sheep or an ox or an ass. ⁵For they would come up with their livestock and their tents, swarming as thick as locusts; they and their camels were innumerable. Thus they would invade the land and ravage it. ⁶Israel was reduced to utter misery by the Midianites, and the Israelites cried out to the LORD.

⁷When the Israelites cried to the LORD on account of Midian, ⁸the LORD sent a prophet to the Israelites who said to them, "Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: I brought you up out of Egypt and freed you from the house of bondage. ⁹I rescued you from the Egyptians and from all your oppressors; I drove them out before you, and gave you their land. ¹⁰And I said to you, 'I the LORD am your God. You must not worship the gods of the Amorites in whose land you dwell.' But you did not obey Me."

¹¹An angel of the LORD came and sat under the terebinth at Ophrah, which belonged to Joash the Abiezrite. His son Gideon was then beating out wheat inside a winepress in order to keep it safe from the Midianites. ¹²The angel of the LORD appeared to him and said to him, "The LORD is with you, valiant warrior!" ¹³Gideon said to him, "Please, my lord, if the LORD is with us, why has all this befallen us? Where are all His wondrous deeds about which our fathers told us, saying, 'Truly the LORD brought us up from Egypt'? Now the LORD has abandoned us and delivered us into the hands of Midian!" ¹⁴The LORD turned to him and said, "Go in this strength of yours and deliver Israel from the Midianites. I herewith make you My messenger." ¹⁵He said to Him, "Please, my lord, how can I deliver Israel? Why, my clan is the humblest in Manasseh, and I am the youngest in my father's household."

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b I.e., by grazing their livestock.

second? Gideon's victory is also mentioned in Isa. 10.26 and Ps. 83.10-13.

6.1-10: Exposition. 1-2: The period of oppression lasted for only seven years, but since it involved subjugation by nomadic tribes with grazing flocks, they succeeded in causing great damage by destroying all the crops. The Israelites were forced to go into hiding and to conceal their grain in the hills. 3: Amalek . . . Kedemites, wandering tribes from southern and eastern deserts who joined the Midianites. 4: Gaza, located in the southwest of Israel, later marking the boundary of the land (1 Kings 5.4). Its mention here suggests that the entire land was devastated.

5: As locusts, an image emphasizing a large number and severe damage. Cf. Joel 1.6-7. 7-10: Israel cried to the LORD, but this time He delayed the deliverer and sent a prophet to rebuke the people for being ungrateful and violating the covenant.

6.11-24: Gideon's appointment as savior. The account is a stereotypic scene composed of seven stages: meeting (vv. 11-13), presentation of the mission (v. 14), refusal (v. 15), encouragement (v. 16), request for and giving of a sign (vv. 17-22), acknowledgment and fear (v. 23), and further encouragement (v. 24). The appointment of Moses in Exod. 3.1-4.17 has a similar structure, but in a different sequence. 11: Ophrah: There are several other places bearing this name. Ophrah of the Abiezrites (v. 24) is located within the territory of the Abiezer clan, one of the important families in Manasseh, who is mentioned in the Samaria Ostraca from the mid-8th century BCE. Gideon: This story offers a folk etymology of his name from the root "g-d-ʿ," "to hack," mentioned in connection with destroying sacred posts (Deut. 7.5). Winepress: The winepress, in contrast to a threshing floor, is sunk in the ground, and thus is more effective for hiding the grain from the Midianites. 12: Angel: Angels, or messengers from God, tend to appear as adult human beings; therefore Gideon does not know that he is confronted by an angel. The LORD is with you: A conventional formula of blessing and encouragement (Ruth 2.4). Valiant warrior: An allusion to the military role that Gideon is expected to play. 13: The angel alludes to the prophet's rebuke in vv. 7-10. 14: The LORD, as the angel of the LORD. This strength, Rashi: "By virtue of the fact that you spoke in defense of my sons." 15: Humblest . . . youngest, a polite refusal characteristic of appointment stories, since Gideon's family is depicted as prosperous (vv. 19, 25, 27; cf. 1 Sam. 9.21). The choice of the 16 The LORD replied, "I will be with you, and you shall defeat Midian to a man." 17 And he said to Him, "If I have gained Your favor, give me a sign that it is You who are speaking to me: 18 do not leave this place until I come back to You and bring out my offering and place it before You." And He answered, "I will stay until you return."

19 So Gideon went in and prepared a kid, and [baked] unleavened bread from an ephah of flour. He put the meat in a basket and poured the broth into a pot, and he brought them out to Him under the terebinth. As he presented them, 20 the angel of God said to him, "Take the meat and the unleavened bread, put them on yonder rock, and spill out the broth." He did so. 21 The angel of the LORD held out the staff that he carried, and touched the meat and the unleavened bread with its tip. A fire sprang up from the rock and consumed the meat and the unleavened bread. And the angel of the LORD vanished from his sight. 22 Then Gideon realized that it was an angel of the LORD; and Gideon said, "Alas, O Lord God! For I have seen an angel of the LORD face to face."

23 But the LORD said to him, "All is well; have no fear, you shall not die." 24 So Gideon built there an altar to the LORD and called it "Adonai-shalom." To this day it stands in Ophrah of the Abiezrites.

25 That night the LORD said to him: "Take the ^byoung bull^b belonging to your father and another bull seven years old; pull down the altar of Baal which belongs to your father, and cut down the sacred post which is beside it. 26 Then build an altar to the LORD your God, on ^bthe level ground^b on top of this stronghold. Take the other bull and offer it as a burnt offering, using the wood of the sacred post that you have cut down." 27 So Gideon took ten of his servants and did as the LORD had told him; but as he was afraid to do it by day, on account of his father's household and the townspeople, he did it by night. 28 Early the next morning, the townspeople found that the altar of Baal had been torn down and the sacred post beside it had been cut down, and that the second bull had been offered on the newly built altar. 29 They said to one mysterious stranger is an angel is his avoidance of eating; instead he uses the materials from the meal for a cultic ceremony: The meat is a sacrificial offering, the cakes are a meal offering, and the gravy is a substitute for the libation. 21: The second sign is the appearance of fire from the rock (cf. 13.20; 1 Kings 18.38; etc.), consuming the materials of the meal; the third sign is the miraculous disappearance of the angel. This piling up of signs is later mirrored in the signs that Gideon requests at the end of the ch. 22: Once Gideon realized that he had seen God's angel, he was afraid that this contact with the divine might prove fatal, since encounter with the divine is typically fraught with danger (see Exod. 20.15; Judg. 13.22). 24: The name of the altar is related to God's comforting words in v. 23: "All is well."

6.25–32: Gideon wages war against the Baal cult. On the night after his appointment, the LORD commands Gideon to destroy his father's altar of Baal, to cut down the sacred post next to it, and to build an altar to the LORD. Gideon fears the townspeople and works with ten of his servants under cover of darkness. In the morning, after a short investigation, the townspeople want to kill Gideon, but his father prevents them from doing so by saying that, if Baal is god, he can fight his own battles. This story mocks Baal worship, and explains the additional name given to Gideon: Jerubbaal (see v. 32), emphasizing that Gideon did battle with the cult of Baal.

25: Another bull seven years old: The reference to two bulls here, and to the second bull in vv. 26 and 28, is problematic, and may reflect a textual error; therefore, it should be translated: "the bull that had been fattened for seven years." Sacred post, symbol of the goddess Asherah (see 3.7 n.). 26: The building of the LORD's altar in place of Baal's symbolizes the LORD's victory over Baal, who is unable to wage his own battles. 27: Gideon is shown as a coward, a feature rea-a I.e., "The LORD, 'All-is-well.'"

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

youngest is also a repeated motif (e.g., 1 Sam. 16.11), whose function is to emphasize divine intervention through the unexpected. 17: A sign that it is You: Gideon is skeptical that the messenger is God's angel and asks for proof. 18: The proof is based upon the belief that angels do not usually participate in human meals (cf. 13.15; Tobit 12.19). 19: Prepared from dough that has not risen, unleavened bread bakes quickly. Ephah, about 23 liters (21 dry quarts), a large quantity, signifying an honorable portion. 20: The first sign that this another, "Who did this thing?" Upon inquiry and investigation, they were told, "Gideon son of Joash did this thing!"³⁰ The townspeople said to Joash, "Bring out your son, for he must die: he has torn down the altar of Baal and cut down the sacred post beside it!"³¹ But Joash said to all who had risen against him, "Do you have to contend for Baal? Do you have to vindicate him? Whoever fights his battles shall be dead by morning! If he is a god, let him fight his own battles, since it is his altar that has been torn down!"³² That day they named him^a Jerubbaal, meaning "Let Baal contend with him, since he tore down his altar."

³³ All Midian, Amalek, and the Kedemites joined forces; they crossed over and encamped in the Valley of Jezreel.³⁴ The spirit of the LORD enveloped Gideon; he sounded the horn, and the Abiezrites rallied behind him.³⁵ And he sent messengers throughout Manasseh, and they too rallied behind him. He then sent messengers through Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali, and they came up to meet the Manassites.^b

³⁶ And Gideon said to God, "If You really intend to deliver Israel through me as You have said—³⁷ here I place a fleece of wool on the threshing floor. If dew falls only on the fleece and all the ground remains dry, I shall know that You will deliver Israel through me, as You have said."³⁸ And that is what happened. Early the next day, he squeezed the fleece and wrung out the dew from the fleece, a bowlful of water.³⁹ Then Gideon said to God, "Do not be angry with me if I speak just once more. Let me make just one more test with the fleece: let the fleece alone be dry, while there is dew all over the ground."⁴⁰ God did so that night: only the fleece was dry, while there was dew all over the ground.

7 Early next day, Jerubbaal—that is, Gideon—and all the troops with him encamped above En-harod,^c while the camp of Midian was in the plain to the north of him, at Gibeath-moreh.^d ² The LORD said to Gideon, "You have too many troops with you for Me to deliver Midian into their hands; Israel might claim for themselves the glory due to Me, thinking, 'Our own hand has brought us victory.'³ Therefore, announce to the men, 'Let anybody who is timid and fearful turn back, "as a bird flies from Mount Gilead.'"^e Thereupon, 22,000 of the troops turned back and 10,000 remained.

⁴ "There are still too many troops," the LORD said to peated in the first section (until 7.23). 31: Joash puts Baal to the test in the eyes of his believers. This motif is reminiscent of Elijah's test at Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18.20-40). By morning, i.e., of the next day. Joash left time for Baal to act. 32: Jerubbaal, originally a theophoric name, praising Baal as founder. The component "Jeru," repeated in the name "Jerusalem," means to establish. The derivation of the name here as Let Baal contend . . . is a folk etymology.

6.33-35: The military mustering. The Midianite army had spread out across the Jezreel Valley; troops from Gideon's father's house were not sufficient, so he called to his assistance his own and the neighboring tribes who were harmed by the Midianites.

6.36-40: The signs of the fleece. Gideon requires additional signs and tests God with two opposite tests, in order to be certain that it was not by chance, but by the LORD's will, that Gideon will deliver Israel. This is the culmination of a ch which has as its theme Gideon's fear.

7.1-8: The three hundred lappers. Gideon's army was reduced from a force of 32,000 warriors to a band of 300 lappers of water, in order to convince the people that the deliverance comes from God. According to rabbinic tradition the lappers were chosen because, unlike those who bent on their knees, they did not bow down to an idol (Tanhumna, ed. Buber, Toledot 19; Yalqut Shim'oni, Judges 62; 1 Kings 29). According to Josephus the lappers were the cowards. Following this view, which is more likely, Gideon highlights the miracle of the victory by choosing cowards (Josephus, Ant., V.vi.3 [216-17]). 1: Plain: The Midianites encamped on the plain at the feet of Gibeath-moreh, south of Afula. 2: The concern was that Israel would be haughty and attribute the victory to themselves and not to God (see Deut. 8.17-18). 3: A call to those fearful of war to re-

^a I.e., Gideon. ^b Heb. "them." ^c Or "the Spring of Harod."
^d Or "the Hill of Moreh." ^{e-e} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Gideon. "Take them down to the water and I will sift them for you there. Anyone of whom I tell you, 'This one is to go with you,' that one shall go with you; and anyone of whom I tell you, 'This one is not to go with you,' that one shall not go." ⁵So he took the troops down to the water. Then the LORD said to Gideon, "Set apart all those who ^blap up the water with their tongues like dogs^b from all those who get down on their knees to drink." ⁶Now those who "lapped" the water into their mouths by hand numbered three hundred; all the rest of the troops got down on their knees to drink. ⁷Then the LORD said to Gideon, "I will deliver you and I will put Midian into your hands through the three hundred 'lappers'; let the rest of the troops go home." ⁸^cSo [the lappers] took the provisions and horns that the other men had with them,^c and he sent the rest of the men of Israel back to their homes, retaining only the three hundred men.

The Midianite camp was below him, in the plain. ⁹That night the LORD said to him, "Come, attack^d the camp, for I have delivered it into your hands. ¹⁰And if you are afraid to attack, first go down to the camp with your attendant Purah ¹¹and listen to what they say; after that you will have the courage to attack the camp." So he went down with his attendant Purah to the outposts of the warriors who were in the camp.—¹²Now Midian, Amalek, and all the Kedemites were spread over the plain, as thick as locusts; and their camels were countless, as numerous as the sands on the seashore.—¹³Gideon came there just as one man was narrating a dream to another. "Listen," he was saying, "I had this dream: There was a commotion^e—a loaf of barley bread was whirling through the Midianite camp. It came to a tent and struck it, and it fell; it turned it upside down, and the tent collapsed." ¹⁴To this the other responded, "That can only mean the sword of the Israelite Gideon son of Joash. God is delivering Midian and the entire camp into his hands."^f

¹⁵When Gideon heard the dream told and interpreted, he bowed low. Returning to the camp of Israel, he shouted, "Come on! The LORD has delivered the Midianite camp into your hands!" ¹⁶He divided the three hundred men into three columns and equipped every man with a ram's horn and an empty jar, with a torch in each jar. ¹⁷"Watch me," he said, "and do the same. When I get to turn to their homes appears in the laws of war in Deut. 20.8. 6: The v. seems to be corrupt, the phrase "in their mouth by hand" belongs at its end, as a dog does not lap water by bringing its hand to its mouth.

7.9–15a: The dream of the Midianite soldier and its meaning. Gideon, who remains fearful of battle, is given another encouraging sign. God commands him to go close to the Midianite camp; there he hears a Midianite telling his friend a dream, whose solution signifies their defeat. Gideon thanks God. 13: A dream was understood by the ancients as revealing God's will. (See esp. Gen. chs 37, 40, 41; Dan. ch 2.) A commotion—a loaf. . . . : The Midianite dreamer heard a commotion in which a loaf of barley bread whirled through the camp until it knocked over a tent. 14: The falling of the tent is interpreted as the defeat of Midian, while the barley bread symbolizes Gideon's sword.

7.15b-23: The battle. The battle description consists of three stages: the preparations (vv. 15b–18), the battle itself (vv. 19–22), and the pursuit (v. 23). The description emphasizes the passivity of the (cowardly) fighters, whose only task is to blow the ram's horns, cry out "For the LORD and for Gideon," and watch God's deliverance. 15: The army is divided into three parts in order to surround the camp. 19: Middle watch: The night is divided into three watches. During the middle watch sleep is strongest; hence, at the time of changing guards, the soldiers are likely to be groggy and to panic at every sound. 20: In order to emphasize that the sword is the LORD's, Gideon's soldiers are shown as having both their hands occupied: in the right hand the horns to blow, and in the left, the torches, so that all they can do is to shout. 21: Unlike "real" soldiers, Gideon's soldiers stood at their places while the Midianites

a Lit. "smelt."

b-b Actually, using their hands as a dog uses its tongue; see v. 6.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d Lit. "descend upon"; so in vv. 10 and 11.

e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

f The loaf of bread symbolizes the agricultural Israelites; the tent, the nomadic Midianites.

the outposts of the camp, do exactly as I do. ¹⁸When I and all those with me blow our horns, you too, all around the camp, will blow your horns and shout, 'For the LORD and for Gideon!' "

¹⁹Gideon and the hundred men with him arrived at the outposts of the camp, at the beginning of the middle watch, just after the sentries were posted. ^aThey sounded the horns and smashed the jars that they had with them, ^a²⁰and the three columns blew their horns and broke their jars. Holding the torches in their left hands and the horns for blowing in their right hands, they shouted, "A sword for the LORD and for Gideon!" ²¹They remained standing where they were, surrounding the camp; but the entire camp ran about yelling, and took to flight. ²²For when the three hundred horns were sounded, the LORD turned every man's sword against his fellow, throughout the camp, and the entire host fled as far as Beth-shittah and on to Zererah—as far as the outskirts of Abel-meholah near Tabbath.

²³And now the men of Israel from Naphtali and Asher and from all of Manasseh rallied for the pursuit of the Midianites. ²⁴Gideon also sent messengers all through the hill country of Ephraim with this order: ^b"Go down ahead of the Midianites and seize their access to the water all along the Jordan down to Beth-barah." So all the men of Ephraim rallied and seized the waterside down to Beth-barah by the Jordan. ²⁵They pursued the Midianites and captured Midian's two generals, Oreb and Zeeb. They killed Oreb at the Rock of Oreb and they killed Zeeb at the Winepress of Zeeb; and they brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb from the other side of the Jordan to Gideon.

8 And the men of Ephraim said to him, "Why did you do that to us—not calling us when you went to fight the Midianites?" And they rebuked him severely. ²But he answered them, "After all, what have I accomplished compared to you? Why, Ephraim's gleanings are better than Abiezer's vintage! ³God has delivered the Midianite generals Oreb and Zeeb into your hands, and what was I able to do compared to you?" And when he spoke in this fashion, their anger against him abated.

a-a Emendation yields "He sounded the horn and smashed the jar that he had with him."

b Meaning of rest of verse uncertain.

called for help and began to flee. 22: The blowing of 300 horns, coupled with the LORD's intervention, caused the Midianites to kill one another. Those who escaped fled southeast, to the fords of the Jordan. The places mentioned have not been identified. 23: The men of Israel . . . rallied: The fighting units of Naphtali, Asher, and all of Manasseh joined in the chase.

7.24–8.3: The confrontation with Ephraim. Ephraim's warriors were insulted because they were invited to the chase and not to the battle itself, and were concerned for their status among the tribes. Gideon calmed them, preventing a civil war while displaying responsible leadership and diplomatic talent. This story opens the second section, in which there are no divine interventions or miracles, and Gideon is not fearful. 24: Upon setting out in pursuit, Gideon called the men of Ephraim, imposing upon them responsibility for the pursuit adjacent to their territory. Beth-barah has not been identified. Gideon's instruction was to seize all the water sources flowing into the Jordan. 25: Rock of . . . The places where the Midianite generals were killed, north of Jericho and to the west of the Jordan, are named for them. The other side of the Jordan, east of the Jordan.

8.1: When you went to fight:

Ephraim's warriors were angry that Gideon did not involve them earlier when he called Manasseh, Asher, and Naphtali (6.35).

2: Gleanings, the grapes that remain after the main part of the harvest has been completed. Gideon explained to the warriors in a diplomatic way that the killing of the two generals was even more important than the battle itself, in which he and his family, the house of Abiezer, had taken part.

⁴Gideon came to the Jordan and crossed it. The three hundred men with him were famished, but still in pursuit. ⁵He said to the people of Succoth, "Please give some loaves of bread to the men who are following me, for they are famished, and I am pursuing Zebah and Zalmunna, the kings of Midian." ⁶But the officials of Succoth replied, "Are Zebah and Zalmunna already in your hands,"^a that we should give bread to your troops?" ⁷"I swear," declared Gideon, "when the LORD delivers Zebah and Zalmunna into my hands, I'll thresh^b your bodies upon desert thorns and briers!" ⁸From there he went up to Penuel and made the same request of them; but the people of Penuel gave him the same reply as the people of Succoth. ⁹So he also threatened the people of Penuel: "When I come back safe, I'll tear down this tower!"

¹⁰Now Zebah and Zalmunna were at Karkor with their army of about 15,000; these were all that remained of the entire host of the Kedemites, for the slain numbered 120,000 fighting men.^c ¹¹Gideon marched up the road of the tent dwellers, up to east of Nobah and Jogbehah, and routed the camp, which was off guard. ¹²Zebah and Zalmunna took to flight, with Gideon^d in pursuit. He captured Zebah and Zalmunna, the two kings of Midian, and threw the whole army into panic.

¹³On his way back from the battle at the Ascent of Heres, Gideon son of Joash ¹⁴captured a boy from among the people of Succoth and interrogated him. The latter drew up for him a list of the officials and elders of Succoth, seventy-seven in number. ¹⁵Then he came to the people of Succoth and said, "Here are Zebah and Zalmunna, about whom you mocked me, saying, "Are Zebah and Zalmunna already in your hands,"^a that we should give your famished men bread?" ¹⁶And he took the elders of the city and, [bringing] desert thorns and briers, he punished^e the people of Succoth with them. ¹⁷As for Penuel, he tore down its tower and killed the townspeople.

¹⁸Then he asked Zebah and Zalmunna, "Those men you killed at Tabor, 'what were they like?'"^f "They looked just like you," they replied, "like sons of a king." ¹⁹"They were my brothers," he declared, "the sons of my mother. As the LORD lives, if you had spared them, I would not kill you." ²⁰And he commanded his oldest son Jether, "Go kill

8.4–21: The confrontation with Succoth and Penuel. Gideon, leading 300 men, crosses the Jordan to smite the camp of Midian in the east and to capture Zebah and Zalmunna, the kings of Midian. The inhabitants of the Israelite cities Succoth and Penuel question their ability to defeat the Midianites and refuse to give bread to Gideon's tired troops. After smiting the Midianites, Gideon comes back to severely punish these two towns. In this second confrontation, Gideon is again shown as an authoritative and decisive leader. 5: Succoth is located east of the Jordan, in Gad's territory. It is first mentioned in the tradition of Jacob (Gen. 33.17), and is usually identified with Tel Deir 'Alla. Kings of Midian: Earlier Oreb and Zeeb were described as generals. Both titles refer to heads of tribes.

6: The response of the Succoth officials indicates that they had not yet heard about Gideon's mighty deeds in the west. 8: Penuel is located east of Succoth, close to it and to Jabbok ford. It is mentioned in the tradition of Jacob (Gen. 32.23–31) and served as the temporary capital of Jeroboam I (1 Kings 12.25). Its identification has not been fixed definitively. 9: Tower, a fortified building that served for defense and observation. 10: Karkor, a desert oasis on the caravan route of pilgrims to Mecca, about 170 km (100 miles) southeast of Amman. The numbers mentioned here are exaggerated, as is the notion that Gideon had a battle so far away. 11: A nomadic route east of Amman. Off guard: The Midianites did not suspect that Gideon and his army would get so far. 17: Gideon did not threaten to kill the people of the city, but to destroy the tower. Therefore Radak concludes: "Perhaps they were warring with him when he came to destroy the tower." 18: Tabor: Mount Tabor is in the northeastern corner of Jezreel Valley. Zebah and Zalmunna relate to Gideon as to a king; their behavior is the opposite of that of Succoth and Penuel. 20: The description of Jether as fearful is reminiscent of Gideon's a-a Lit. "Is the palm of Zebah and Zalmunna in your hand."

b I.e., throw them naked in a bed of thorns and trample them; but exact meaning uncertain.

c Lit. "men who drew the sword." d Heb. "him."

e Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "threshed"; cf. v. 7.

f-f Others "Where are they?"

them!" But the boy did not draw his sword, for he was timid, being still a boy. ²¹Then Zebah and Zalmuruna said, "Come, you slay us; for strength comes with manhood." So Gideon went over and killed Zebah and Zalmunna, and he took the crescents that were on the necks of their camels.

²²Then the men of Israel said to Gideon, "Rule over us—you, your son, and your grandson as well; for you have saved us from the Midianites." ²³But Gideon replied, "I will not rule over you myself, nor shall my son rule over you; the LORD alone shall rule over you." ²⁴And Gideon said to them, "I have a request to make of you: Each of you give me the earring he received as booty." (They^a had golden earrings, for they were Ishmaelites.) ²⁵"Certainly!" they replied. And they spread out a cloth, and everyone threw onto it the earring he had received as booty. ²⁶The weight of the golden earrings that he had requested came to 1,700 shekels of gold; this was in addition to the crescents and the pendants and the purple robes worn by the kings of Midian and in addition to the collars on the necks of their camels. ²⁷Gideon made an ephod of ^bthis gold^b and set it up in his own town of Ophrah. There all Israel went astray after it, and it became a snare to Gideon and his household.

²⁸Thus Midian submitted to the Israelites and did not raise its head again; and the land was tranquil for forty years in Gideon's time.

a i.e., the Midianites. The author explains that the Midianites wore earrings like the Ishmaelites, who were better known to his contemporaries.

b-b Heb. "it."

behavior in the first section, and highlights the changed attitude of Gideon in the second section. 21: The kings of Midian preferred that Gideon, and not the youth, should kill them, both as a matter of honor and because they wanted to die quickly at the hand of an experienced warrior.

8.22–23: The offer of kingship to Gideon. Gideon's refusal to rule as king is interpreted by scholars in different ways. Some see it as an early text connected to the ideology that God alone may be king; others claim that it is a later interpolation critical of the monarchy; still others suggest that it has nothing to do with this political issue, and Gideon is simply offering a polite refusal, although the text then depicts him as a king. In the larger context of the Deuteronomistic History, Gideon's refusal may reflect the awareness that Israelite society was not yet ripe for a monarch. If the army of a few tribes should offer kingship to someone, there would likely be civil war, as may be seen from the case of Abimelech in the following ch. 22: The men of Israel, the army of the tribes, which in this case is composed of five: Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun, Naphtali, and Ephraim (6.35; 7.24). You, your son, a rule that passes from father to son, that is, a royal dynasty. You have saved us: The army sees Gideon and not the LORD as their deliverer. 23: Gideon emphasizes that the LORD raises up the redeemer and therefore He is the ruler. Throughout these vv., the verb used is "to rule" (Heb "m-sh-l"), not "to reign" (Heb "m-l-k").

8.24–28: The golden ephod.

24: The substitution of Ishmaelites, who were descendants of Hagar, for Midianites, who were descendants of Keturah, also appears in the Joseph story (Gen. 37.25–36). The author thereby indicates a relationship between them. Alternatively, the term "Ishmaelites" may be a generic designation for nomadic traders and not a mark of ethnic identity. 25: Willingness to forgo the booty indicates Gideon's status and influence. 27: Ephod: The ephod is mentioned in various contexts: a means of inquiring of God (1 Sam. 23.6–12), or a part of the priestly garment (Exod. 28.6–8; 1 Sam. 2.18). It seems that the reference here is to a statue intended to commemorate the deliverance, which over the course of time became an object of pagan adulation. The making of the statue is reminiscent of the golden calf story (Exod. 32.2–4). In his own town of Ophrah: Ophrah is depicted as Gideon's capital city for those tribes who recognized his leadership. There all . . . a snare . . . : The description of Gideon as one who sinned and caused Israel to sin is inappropriate to the whole cycle and to the view that he did good for Israel (8.35; 9.16ff.). Thus, this phrase seems to be an addition by a late editor, who criticized the making of the ephod and wished to justify the murder of Gideon's sons. 28: Tranquil for forty years, a formulaic conclusion (see 5.31b).

²⁹So Jerubbaal son of Joash retired to his own house. ³⁰Gideon had seventy sons of his own issue, for he had many wives. ³¹A son was also born to him by his concubine in Shechem, and he named him Abimelech. ³²Gideon son of Joash died at a ripe old age, and was buried in the tomb of his father Joash at Ophrah of the Abiezrites.

³³After Gideon died, the Israelites again went astray after the Baalim, and they adopted Baal-berith as a god. ³⁴The Israelites gave no thought to the LORD their God, who saved them from all the enemies around them. ³⁵Nor did they show loyalty to the house of Jerubbaal-Gideon in return for all the good that he had done for Israel.

9 Abimelech son of Jerubbaal went to his mother's brothers in Shechem and spoke to them and to the whole clan of his mother's family. He said, ²"Put this question to all the citizens of Shechem: Which is better for you, to be ruled by seventy men—by all the sons of Jerubbaal—or to be ruled by one man? And remember, I am your own ^aflesh and blood."^b ³His mother's brothers said all this in his behalf to all the citizens of Shechem, and they were won over to Abimelech; for they thought, "He is our kinsman." ⁴They gave him seventy shekels from the temple of Baal-berith; and with this Abimelech hired some worthless and reckless fellows, and they followed him. ⁵Then he went to his father's house in Ophrah and killed his brothers, the sons of Jerubbaal, seventy men on one stone. Only Jotham, the youngest son of Jerubbaal, survived, because he went into hiding.

⁶All the citizens of Shechem and all Beth-millo convened, and they proclaimed Abimelech king at the terebinth of the pillar^b at Shechem. ⁷When Jotham was ina-a Lit. "bone and flesh." b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

8.29–9.57: The rule of Abimelech. Abimelech was the son of Gideon by his concubine from Shechem, and thus of lower status than his brothers. Unlike his father, he was willing to pay any price to become king. He murdered his brothers, conducted a civil war, and was ultimately killed in battle. His brief and bloody reign marks the failure of the first attempt at monarchy. 8.30: Seventy, a large typological number (cf. 2 Kings 10.1, 7). Having many wives and sons conveys having a significant social position; see 10.4 n.; 12.9, 14.

31: At that time marriage also had political significance; therefore Abimelech is closely tied to his mother's city of Shechem. Abimelech, a theophoric name: "God [who is referred to as king] is my father." It is ironic that the person with a name highlighting divine kingship attempts to become the first king of Israel. 33: Baal-berith, also called El-berith (9.46), he had a temple in Shechem (9.3–4). He is not known from other sources. 35: From here on Gideon is only mentioned by his name Jerubbaal.

9.1–6: Abimelech's enthronement. Abimelech is depicted as a powerful figure, who became king through his own bloody deception and not by the will of God. He is negatively characterized through the contrast between his actions and those of Gideon. 1: He first convinces his mother's brothers, then the family of his maternal grandfather, and only afterwards addresses the other city citizens. 2: His suggestion that being ruled by seventy men is an actual possibility is absurd and rhetorical. 4: From the temple . . .: Ancient Near Eastern temples often have large treasuries (cf. 1 Kings 7.51). Worthless . . .: Jephthah (11.3) and David (1 Sam. 22.2) also utilized such people at the beginning of their path. 5: One stone: One stone was used for all seventy people, a particularly horrific image. Jotham, a theophoric name meaning "God acts with integrity." The name, and perhaps this whole story, are likely symbolic. 6: Beth-millo seems to refer to a quarter of the city that was built upon a filling of earth near Shechem (see v. 20). The terebinth: There may be a relationship between this tree and the oak mentioned in the stories of Jacob (Gen. 35.4) and Joshua (Josh. 24.23–27). Many of these stories concerning Shechem are connected to the fact that this city was significant in the Northern Kingdom (see esp. 1 Kings 12.1).

9.7–21: Jotham's parable. Jotham, who was saved from being slaughtered, stood at the top of Mount Gerizim and told the Shechemites a parable (vv. 7–15) and its interpretation (vv. 16–20). The connection between the parable and what it represents is not exact, but this happens with other biblical parables as well (see esp. Jonah 4.6–11). Abimelech, for example, unlike the trees in the parable, was not offered the monarchy, and he and his supporters, unlike the explanation, were not burned by the citizens of Shechem. It seems, therefore, that the parable was an independent anti-monarchic work, but was integrated here to criticize formed, he went and stood on top of Mount Gerizim and called out to them in a loud voice. "Citizens of Shechem!" he cried, "listen to me, that God may listen to you.

⁸"Once the trees went to anoint a king over themselves. They said to the olive tree, 'Reign over us.' ⁹But the olive tree replied, 'Have I, through whom God and men are honored, stopped yielding my rich oil, that I should go and wave above the trees?' ¹⁰So the trees said to the fig tree, 'You come and reign over us.' ¹¹But the fig tree replied, 'Have I stopped yielding my sweetness, my delicious fruit, that I should go and wave above the trees?' ¹²So the trees said to the vine, 'You come and reign over us.' ¹³But the vine replied, 'Have I stopped yielding my new wine, which gladdens God and men, that I should go and wave above the trees?' ¹⁴Then all the trees said to the thornbush, 'You come and reign over us.' ¹⁵And the thornbush said to the trees, 'If you are acting honorably in anointing me king over you, come and take shelter in my shade; but if not, may fire issue from the thornbush and consume the cedars of Lebanon!'

¹⁶"Now then, if you acted honorably and loyally in making Abimelech king, if you have done right by Jerubbaal and his house and have requited him according to his deserts—¹⁷considering that my father fought for you and saved you from the Midianites at the risk of his life, ¹⁸and now you have turned on my father's household, killed his sons, seventy men on one stone, and set up Abimelech, the son of his handmaid, as king over the citizens of Shechem just because he is your kinsman—¹⁹if, I say, you have this day acted honorably and loyally toward Jerubbaal and his house, have joy in Abimelech and may he likewise have joy in you. ²⁰But if not, may fire issue from Abimelech and consume the citizens of Shechem and Beth-millo, and may fire issue from the citizens of Shechem and Beth-millo and consume Abimelech!"

²¹With that, Jotham fled. He ran to Beer and stayed there, because of his brother Abimelech.

²²Abimelech held sway over Israel for three years. ²³Then God sent a spirit of discord between Abimelech and the citizens of Shechem, and the citizens of Shechem broke faith with Abimelech—²⁴to the end that the crime

Abimelech and to inform the reader that when all the trees are interested in having a king, they must beware of the thornbush and look carefully for a suitable tree. The parable is based upon a pattern of three and four, where the fourth element is different and climactic: three refusals by the useful trees—olive, fig, and grapevine—opposed to the agreement of the fourth, the thornbush. This structure emphasizes that the refusal of the useful trees cleared the way for an aggressive figure, and that Abimelech is totally useless.

7: It would have been impossible for the Shechemites to hear things uttered at the top of Mount Gerizim; this is a literary model of uttering from a high place (cf., e.g., 1 Sam. 26.13–14; Num. 23.14).

9: God and men are honored: The oil and the wine (v. 13) were used in the cult and in everyday life. Wave above, to supervise, to rule.

14: Thornbush, a barren shrub whose fruit is inedible. 15: Shade, an ironic description, because the thornbush hardly provides shade. Cedars, archetypal tall and strong trees. The thornbush warns those interested in his protection that, if they attempt to rebel, his fire will be so powerful that it will consume even the highest and strongest trees. 16: Now, a transitional formula to a new subject, used here to introduce the parable's explanation. 16b–19b: Many scholars consider this passage to be an addition, intended to strengthen the connection between the Abimelech and Gideon cycles. 21: Beer, an unidentified locale.

9.22: The kingship of Abimelech. Held sway, Heb "sasar" may be interpreted as arbitrary rule (translated "lord it over" in Num. 16.13). It is likely significant that the more typical verb "malak," "reigned," is not used. Over Israel: This does not refer to all Israel, but to Shechem and its environs, and perhaps to additional areas in the hill country of Ephraim that were interested in kingship. Three years: The number indicates a brief reign, and prepares for the description of Abimelech's downfall.

9.23–41: First stage: the first battle in Shechem. The editor explains that Abimelech's fall is a measure-for-measure divine punishment (see also vv. 56–57). 23: The power of the evil spirit also affects King Saul (1 Sam. 16.14; 18.10). Here the God of justice intervened directly. 24: The punishment will also fall upon the citizens of Shechem who committed against the seventy sons of Jerubbaal might be avenged, and their blood recoil upon their brother Abimelech, who had slain them, and upon the citizens of Shechem, who had abetted him in the slaying of his brothers. ²⁵The citizens of Shechem planted ambushes against him on the hilltops; and they robbed whoever passed by them on the road. Word of this reached Abimelech.

²⁶Then Gaal son of Ebed and his companions came passing through Shechem, and the citizens of Shechem gave him their confidence. ²⁷They went out into the fields, gathered and trod out the vintage of their vineyards, and made a festival. They entered the temple of their god, and as they ate and drank they reviled Abimelech. ²⁸Gaal son of Ebed said, "Who is Abimelech and who are [we] Shechemites, that we should serve him? *This same son of Jerubbaal and his lieutenant Zebul once served the men of Hamor, the father of Shechem;^a so why should we serve him? ²⁹Oh, if only this people were under my command, I would get rid of Abimelech! One^b would challenge Abimelech, 'Fill up your ranks and come out here!' "

³⁰When Zebul, the governor of the city, heard the words of Gaal son of Ebed, he was furious. ³¹He sent messages to Abimelech at Tormah^c to say, "Gaal son of Ebed and his companions have come to Shechem and they are inciting^a the city against you. ³²Therefore, set out at night with the forces you have with you and conceal yourself in the fields. ³³Early next morning, as the sun rises, advance on the city. He and his men will thereupon come out against you, and you will do to him whatever you find possible."

³⁴Abimelech and all the men with him set out at night and disposed themselves against Shechem in four hiding places. ³⁵When Gaal son of Ebed came out and stood at the entrance to the city gate, Abimelech and the army with him emerged from concealment. ³⁶Gaal saw the army and said to Zebul, "That's an army marching down from the hilltops!" But Zebul said to him, "The shadows of the hills look to you like men." ³⁷Gaal spoke up again, "Look, an army is marching down from Tabbur-erez, and another column is coming from the direction of Elon-meonenim." ³⁸"Well," replied Zebul, "where is your boast, 'Who is Abimelech that we should serve him'? There is the army you sneered at; now go out and fight it!"

supported Abimelech. 26: It is difficult to determine whether the name of his father was Ebed (Heb for "slave") or whether Gaal was the son of a slave. Gaal was apparently the head of a brigade, similar to Jephthah (11.3) and David (1 Sam. 22.2). Gaal and his men did not intend to settle in Shechem; rather, their services were hired by the citizens of the city for purposes of the battle, just as Achish hired the services of David (1 Sam. 28.1-2). 27: They entered the temple in order to thank their god for the grape harvest.

28: Who is . . . and who are . . .: Gaal incites the citizens by means of his rhetorical questions: Who is Abimelech that he should rule over Shechem, and why should we Shechemites maintain loyalty to him? He represents himself as one of the Shechemites. Son of Jerubbaal: Gaal represents Abimelech as a foreigner, mentioning the name of his Israelite father but not of his Shechemite mother. Lieutenant: Further on Zebul appears as the ruler of the city (v. 30). The men of Hamor: The family of Hamor represents the old Canaanite element in the city (Gen. 34.2), who should not accept this upstart ruler.

29: This people, the people of Shechem. Gaal proposes the Shechemites accept his rule and unite to free the city of the rule of Abimelech and his men. 30: Abimelech at that time was at Tormah, a corruption of Arumah (see v. 41). Zebul, who remained loyal to Abimelech, secretly sent messengers, informing him that he needed to go to war against Shechem. 34: Four hiding places, in order to surround the city. 36: The shadows . . .: It is difficult to determine whether visibility was poor, whether Zebul wanted to distract Gaal, or whether he was mocking and alluding to the fears of Gaal, who began to understand the severity of the situation. 37: From Tabbur-erez: The expression is also found in Ezek. 38.12. The Septuagint and most commentators interpret it as "the navel of the earth." Elon-meonenim: A road named for a sacred terebinth that

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Septuagint reads "I."

c Called "Arumah" in v. 41.

³⁹So Gaal went out at the head of the citizens of Shechem and gave battle to Abimelech. ⁴⁰But he had to flee before him, and Abimelech pursued him, and many fell slain, all the way to the entrance of the gate. ⁴¹Then Abimelech stayed in Arumah,^a while Zebul expelled Gaal and his companions and kept them out of Shechem.

⁴²The next day, when people went out into the fields, Abimelech was informed. ⁴³Taking the army, he divided it into three columns and lay in ambush in the fields; and when he saw the people coming out of the city, he pounced upon them and struck them down. ⁴⁴While Abimelech and the column^b that followed him dashed ahead and took up a position at the entrance of the city gate, the other two columns rushed upon all that were in the open and struck them down. ⁴⁵Abimelech fought against the city all that day. He captured the city and massacred the people in it; he razed the town and sowed it with salt.

⁴⁶When all the citizens of the Tower of Shechem^c learned of this, they went into the tunnel^d of the temple of El-berith.^e ⁴⁷When Abimelech was informed that all the citizens of the Tower of Shechem had gathered [there], ⁴⁸Abimelech and all the troops he had with him went up on Mount Zalmon. Taking an ax^f in his hand, Abimelech lopped off a tree limb and lifted it onto his shoulder. Then he said to the troops that accompanied him, "What you saw me do—quick, do the same!" ⁴⁹So each of the troops also lopped off a bough; then they marched behind Abimelech and laid them against the tunnel, and set fire to the tunnel over their heads. Thus all the people of the Tower of Shechem also perished, about a thousand men and women.

⁵⁰Abimelech proceeded to Thebez; he encamped at Thebez and occupied it. ⁵¹Within the town was a fortified tower; and all the citizens of the town, men and women, took refuge there. They shut themselves in, and went up on the roof of the tower. ⁵²Abimelech pressed forward to the tower and attacked it. He approached the door of the tower to set it on fire. ⁵³But a woman dropped an upper millstone on Abimelech's head and cracked his skull. ⁵⁴He immediately cried out to his attendant, his arms-bearer, "Draw your dagger and finish me off, that they

9.42–45: Second stage: the second battle in Shechem. There is no explicit justification for the second war and the harsh means taken by Abimelech against the Shechemites. It is directly connected to the depiction of Abimelech in the parable and its explanation: He is a fire that consumes all its environs. 45: Sowed it with salt, a symbolic action intended to signify that the destruction is final and the city would be barren and could not be rebuilt. Assyrian kings behaved in a similar manner. Already in the days of Jeroboam I, however, Shechem is mentioned as a central place (1 Kings 12.1).

9.46–49: Third stage: the battle at the Tower of Shechem. Once again the narrative gives no reason for the war. Here the fire imagery is strengthened, because Abimelech himself made use of fire. On the other hand, he is described as a charismatic, though excessively cruel leader. It would appear that the Tower of Shechem (Heb "migdal shekhem") was not part of Shechem, which had already been destroyed, but was a nearby settlement whose name was Migdal-shechem. 46: Of this, the destruction of Shechem. 48: Zalmon, a mountain near Shechem, whose identification is uncertain. Do the same: These words are reminiscent of Gideon (7.17).

9.50–54: Fourth stage: the battle of Thebez and Abimelech's death. In this fourth, climactic stage, Abimelech meets his ignominious death (see 2 Sam. 11.20–21). 50: Thebez: Contemporary scholars think that this name is a corruption of Tirzah, located 12 km (7 miles) northeast of Shechem. 51: Went up: They went up on the roof in order to fight by throwing rocks, arrows, and the like. 53: The Sages (Tanḥuma, Buber ed., Vayera 51b [102]) emphasize the principle of measure for measure, connecting Abimelech's death from a stone to the stone upon which he slew his brothers. 54: Abimelech's request to his armor-bearer is similar to a Cf. "Tormah" in v. 31. b Heb. "columns."

c Perhaps identical with Beth-millo of vv. 6 and 20.

d Cf. 1 Sam. 13.6; others "citadel." e Called "Baal-berith" in v. 4. f Heb. plural.

was adjacent to it, where necromancers (Heb "me'onenim") were evidently active. 39: Many men from Gaal's army fell in the area between the battle location and the city gate. 41: After his victory Abimelech returned to dwell in Arumah.

may not say of me, 'A woman killed him!' " So his attendant stabbed him, and he died. ⁵⁵When the men of Israel saw that Abimelech was dead, everyone went home.

⁵⁶Thus God repaid Abimelech for the evil he had done to his father by slaying his seventy brothers; ⁵⁷and God likewise repaid the men of Shechem for all their wickedness. And so the curse of Jotham son of Jerubbaal was fulfilled upon them.

10 After Abimelech, Tola son of Puah son of Dodo, a man of Issachar, arose to deliver Israel. He lived at Shamir in the hill country of Ephraim. ²He led Israel for twenty-three years; then he died and was buried at Shamir.

³After him arose Jair the Gileadite, and he led Israel for twenty-two years. (⁴He had thirty sons, who rode on thirty burros and owned thirty boroughs^a in the region of Gilead; these are called Havvoth-jair^b to this day.) ⁵Then Jair died and was buried at Kamon.

⁶The Israelites again did what was offensive to the LORD. They served the Baalim and the Ashtaroth, and the gods of Aram, the gods of Sidon, the gods of Moab, the gods of the Ammonites, and the gods of the Philistines; they forsook the LORD and did not serve Him. ⁷And the LORD, incensed with Israel, surrendered them to the Philistines and to the Ammonites. ⁸That year they battered a Imitating the pun in the Heb., which employs 'ayarim first in the sense of "donkeys" and then in the sense of "towns."

b I.e., "the villages of Jair"; cf. Num. 32.41.

that of Saul in the battle of Gilboa (1 Sam. 31.4), and emphasizes how even in his death he was concerned for his honor. Yet he is remembered as the one killed by a woman (2 Sam. 11.20–21).

9.55–57: Denouement: the dispersion of the army and the end of the cycle. 55: Upon Abimelech's death, the army that supported him was dispersed, thereby ending the first attempt to establish monarchical rule over Israel. The fall of his kingship showed that in order to assure quiet and stability it is not enough to have a charismatic king who is supported by the army. 56–57: The story concludes by alluding to the various units that opened it: the murder and the parable.

10.1–5: Consecutive judges: first list. The judges mentioned after Abimelech appear one after another, without intervening periods of sin and punishment; they may therefore be described as consecutive judges. (Other scholars call them "minor judges," because the accounts of their actions are "minor" or short.) The account referring to them does not describe any acts of deliverance, but merely lists the place where they lived, their burial place, the period they were judges, and sometime their descendants and property. Scholars debate whether they are to be seen as a distinct type of judge, or if they were similar to the other judges, but for whatever reasons, less information has been recorded about them. Their appearance helps create the impression that leadership continuity may prevent return to a period of sin, and thus on the one hand, softens the negative impression created by the kingdom of Abimelech, and on the other, confirms the final conclusion of the book concerning the advantages of monarchy. A second list appears in 12.8–15. Some scholars believe that these two lists were originally joined, and that Jephthah was in the middle of this list, and the expanded Jephthah story now interrupts the list. 1: To deliver: It is not told from whom or how he delivered Israel. Tola: This name is connected with the families of the tribe of Issachar (Gen. 46.13; Num. 26.23–25; 1 Chron. 7.1–5). Shamir . . . Ephraim . . .: Not identified, but the existence of families from Issachar in the central mountain suggests that they began taking possession there, before they went down to the Jezreel Valley. 3: Sources outside the book of Judges (Num. 32.41; Deut. 3.14; 1 Chron. 2.22–23) relate this tradition to an earlier Jair, who conquered territory in Gilead. 4: The large number of offspring and burros indicates his established position. 5: Kamon, located in northern Gilead.

10.6–16: Introduction to the Jephthah cycle. Following Jair the Gileadite no other judge appears, and as a result the people return to sin. The stages of sin, punishment, and crying out that precede Jephthah are particularly detailed and represented as graver than those that preceded it. 6: The text enumerates seven types of idolatry, concluding by stating that Israel had completely abandoned the worship of the LORD. 7: The subjugation is also presented as more severe. This time the LORD gave His people to the Philistines in the west and the Ammonites in the east. The reference to the Philistines may also foreshadow the stories of Samson. The sequel of this description focuses on the Ammonites. 8: The land of the Amorites: It follows from the sequel (11.22) that this refers to southern Gilead, the territory lying between the and shattered the Israelites—for^a eighteen years—all the Israelites beyond the Jordan, in [what had been] the land of the Amorites in Gilead. ⁹The Ammonites also crossed the Jordan to make war on Judah, Benjamin, and the House of Ephraim. Israel was in great distress.

¹⁰Then the Israelites cried out to the LORD, “We stand guilty before You, for we have forsaken our God and served the Baalim.” ¹¹But the LORD said to the Israelites, “[I have rescued you] from the Egyptians, from the Amorites, from the Ammonites, and from the Philistines. ¹²The Sidonians, Amalek, and Maon^b also oppressed you; and when you cried out to Me, I saved you from them. ¹³Yet you have forsaken Me and have served other gods. No, I will not deliver you again. ¹⁴Go cry to the gods you have chosen; let them deliver you in your time of distress!” ¹⁵But the Israelites implored the LORD: “We stand guilty. Do to us as You see fit; only save us this day!” ¹⁶They removed the alien gods from among them and served the LORD; and He could not bear the miseries of Israel.

¹⁷The Ammonites mustered and they encamped in Gilead; and the Israelites massed and they encamped at Mizpah. ¹⁸The troops—the officers of Gilead—said to one another, “Let the man who is the first to fight the Ammonites be chieftain over all the inhabitants of Gilead.”

11 Jephthah the Gileadite was an able warrior, who was the son of a prostitute. Jephthah's father was Gilead; ²but Gilead also had sons by his wife, and when the wife's sons grew up, they drove Jephthah out. They said to him, “You shall have no share in our father's property, for you are the son of an outsider.”^c ³So Jephthah fled from his brothers and settled in the Tob country. Men of low character gathered about Jephthah and went out raiding with him.

⁴Some time later, the Ammonites went to war against pelled from the inheritance by his brothers, established himself as the head of a band of ruffians in the eastern border area. It seems that his expulsion was with the approval of the elders of Gilead.

Thanks to his military experience, and the absence of any other candidate, the elders were forced to ask him to lead the army. But he made his appointment conditional: If he won the war, he would be leader of all the inhabitants of Gilead. The elders agreed and appointed Jephthah before the LORD in Mizpah, not only as commander, but also as chieftain. This story depicts Jephthah similarly to Abimelech, hinting at his problematic rule. The story of Jephthah's appointment and his victory over the Ammonites (11.1–12.7, omitting the story of Jephthah's daughter) is read as the haftarah for the parashah of Hukat (Num. chs 19–21), which describes Israel's war against Sihon king of the Amorites, a subject that arises in the negotiation between Jephthah and the king of the Ammonites.

10.17: Mizpah (which means “outlook”) has not been identified.

18: The first . . .: The phrasing emphasizes their despair. The leadership is promised to whoever will dare to fight, and not necessarily to the one who achieves victory. Chieftain: a leader whose authority is not only military, but also judicial and administrative. The people are prepared to convey this authority to the one who dares to fight the Ammonites even during the period following the war.

11.1: According to the Sumerian law of Lipit-Ishtar, when a man has no sons by his wife but does have sons by a harlot, those sons are allowed to inherit his estate. Perhaps a similar law applied in Israel. 2: Gilead's wife apparently bore him sons after Jephthah's birth. Outsider, in this context, a euphemism for a prostitute.

3: Tob country, located in the northeast of Gilead; presumably a border district to which lawbreakers and banished people came. Men of low character, see 9.4.

4: This v. belongs before 10.17.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; perhaps “enough for” or “continuing for.”

b Septuagint reads “Midian.” c Lit. “another woman.”

Rivers Arnon and Jabbok. 10–16: This time God rebuked His people, and they acknowledged their sin and removed the foreign gods. 10: We stand guilty before You: This v., very close to the book's center, is the only explicit reference to repentance in the entire book, and may be a later addition; elsewhere, the Israelites simply “cry out.”

12: Maon: The Maonites were a nomadic tribe in the southwest of Judah (1 Chron. 4.41; 2 Chron. 26.7); therefore their mention here is surprising. In some manuscripts this word is missing, supporting its possible deletion. 16: It is possible that some ritual action stands behind the activity depicted here and in Gen. 35.1; Josh. 24.23 and 1 Sam. 7.3.

10.17–11.11: Jephthah's appointment. Jephthah, who had been ex-

Israel.⁵ And when the Ammonites attacked Israel, the elders of Gilead went to bring Jephthah back from the Tob country.⁶ They said to Jephthah, "Come be our chief, so that we can fight the Ammonites."⁷ Jephthah replied to the elders of Gilead, "You are the very people who rejected me and drove me out of my father's house. How can you come to me now when you are in trouble?"⁸ The elders of Gilead said to Jephthah, "Honestly, we have now turned back to you. If you come with us and fight the Ammonites, you shall be our commander over all the inhabitants of Gilead."⁹ Jephthah said to the elders of Gilead, "[Very well,] if you bring me back to fight the Ammonites and the LORD delivers them to me, I am to be your commander."¹⁰ And the elders of Gilead answered Jephthah, "The LORD Himself shall be witness between us: we will do just as you have said."

¹¹Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the people made him their commander and chief. And Jephthah repeated all these terms before the LORD at Mizpah.

¹²Jephthah then sent messengers to the king of the Ammonites, saying, "What have you against me that you have come to make war on my country?"¹³ The king of the Ammonites replied to Jephthah's messengers, "When Israel came from Egypt, they seized the land which is mine, from the Arnon to the Jabbok as far as the Jordan. Now, then, restore it peaceably."

¹⁴Jephthah again sent messengers to the king of the Ammonites.¹⁵ He said to him, "Thus said Jephthah: Israel did not seize the land of Moab or the land of the Ammonites.¹⁶ When they left Egypt, Israel traveled through the wilderness to the Sea of Reeds and went on to Kadesh.¹⁷ Israel then sent messengers to the king of Edom, saying, 'Allow us to cross your country.' But the king of Edom would not consent. They also sent a mission to the king of Moab, and he refused. So Israel, after staying at Kadesh,¹⁸ traveled on through the wilderness, skirting the land of

11.12–28: The negotiation with the king of the Ammonites. Jephthah attempted to prevent war by negotiation, where he questions the Ammonites' motivation for war. Against the argument of the Ammonite king that the territory "from the Arnon to the Jabbok as far as the Jordan" belongs to the Ammonites (v. 13), Jephthah justifies the Israelite conquest by the following arguments: (1) the area under dispute never belonged to Ammon, but to Sihon king of the Amorites (vv. 14–19); (2) Israel was forced to wage war against Sihon because he did not allow them to pass through his land (v. 20); (3) the conquest of Sihon's land was the LORD's will (vv. 21–24); (4) for the past 300 years the Ammonites have not questioned Israelite settlement in these areas (vv. 25–26). Once the king of the Ammonites rejected these arguments, war was inevitable. For a variety of reasons, including the fact that Chemosh (v. 24) is the national god of Moab, not Ammon, and that the story mentions the Moabite King Balak (v. 25), many scholars believe that much of this ch was a separate document concerning Israel and Moab; once this became integrated here, Moab was changed to Ammon—at the beginning and at the end (vv. 12–14, 27–28). The subject is repeated in the Torah (Num. 20.14–21; 33.37–49; Deut. chs 2–3). 13: Arnon . . . Jabbok . . . Jordan: The brook Arnon, which spills into the Dead Sea, marks the southern border of Gilead and the land of Sihon, and the northern boundary of Moab. The Jabbok spills into the Jordan north of the city Adam and divides Gilead into two parts. The western border is the Jordan and the eastern is the desert. Reuben and Dan settled in the land of Sihon. 16: The narrator describes events from the beginning of the period of wandering briefly, focusing upon those that preceded the conquest of the disputed region. Kadesh, Kadesh-barnea, a desert oasis in northern Sinai. 19: Heshbon, located about 10 km (6 miles) north of Medeba, and described as a royal city from

5: The elders of Gilead: They are so desperate, they come themselves rather than sending messengers. 6: Chief, in this context, a man of war ("katzin"), whose authority is less than that of the "head" ("ro'sh"). Jephthah understands this adverse proposal, and therefore begins negotiations. 7–9: From Jephthah's viewpoint the elders are responsible for his expulsion because they did not stop his brothers. The elders do not deny it and offer him all the authority he asks for. Jephthah, in all fairness, states that he will accept the position only if he is victorious. 10: The witness of God was usual in Israel (Gen. 31.50; etc.) and divine witnesses are well known from treaties in the ancient Near East. 11: Before the LORD, in a place sanctified to the LORD, such as a temple or an altar.

Edom and the land of Moab. They kept to the east of the land of Moab until they encamped on the other side of the Arnon; and, since Moab ends at the Arnon, they never entered Moabite territory.

¹⁹“Then Israel sent messengers to Sihon king of the Amorites, the king of Heshbon. Israel said to him, ‘Allow us to cross through your country to our homeland.’ ²⁰But Sihon would not trust Israel to pass through his territory. Sihon mustered all his troops, and they encamped at Jahaz; he engaged Israel in battle. ²¹But the LORD, the God of Israel, delivered Sihon and all his troops into Israel’s hands, and they defeated them; and Israel took possession of all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that land. ²²Thus they possessed all the territory of the Amorites from the Arnon to the Jabbok and from the wilderness to the Jordan.

²³“Now, then, the LORD, the God of Israel, dispossessed the Amorites before His people Israel; and should you possess their land? ²⁴Do you not hold what Chemosh your god gives you to possess? So we will hold on to everything that the LORD our God has given us to possess.

²⁵“Besides, are you any better than Balak son of Zippor, king of Moab? Did he start a quarrel with Israel or go to war with them?

²⁶“While Israel has been inhabiting Heshbon and its dependencies, and Aroer and its dependencies, and all the towns along the Arnon for three hundred years, why have you not tried to recover them all this time? ²⁷I have done you no wrong; yet you are doing me harm and making war on me. May the LORD, who judges, decide today between the Israelites and the Ammonites!”

²⁸But the king of the Ammonites paid no heed to the message that Jephthah sent him.

²⁹Then the spirit of the LORD came upon Jephthah. He marched through Gilead and Manasseh, passing Mizpeh of Gilead; and from Mizpeh of Gilead he crossed over [to] the Ammonites. ³⁰And Jephthah made the following vow to the LORD: “If You deliver the Ammonites into my hands, ³¹then whatever comes out of the door of my house to meet me on my safe return from the Ammonites shall be the LORD’s and shall be offered by me as a burnt offering.”

³²Jephthah crossed over to the Ammonites and attacked them, and the LORD delivered them into his hands. ³³He utterly routed them—from Aroer as far as Minnith, twenty towns—all the way to Abel-cheramim. So the Ammonites submitted to the Israelites.

which Sihon ruled his country.

20: Jahaz, identification uncertain; it is also mentioned in the Moabite Mesha inscription (ll. 18–20).

24: Chemosh, the national god of Moab, mentioned in the Mesha inscription (ll. 5–6, etc.). As noted, the reference to Chemosh, rather than Milcom, the high god of Ammon, indicates the source of this document. 25: On Balak, who wished to curse Israel and ended up blessing them, see Num.

22.2–24.5: 26: Aroer: Located on the northern shore of the Arnon, it marks the southern border of Sihon’s kingdom. It is mentioned in the Moabite Mesha inscription as a city he built (l. 26). Three hundred: A round and inexact number that has no relation to the length of the period of the judges. The author thought that 300 years had passed from the conquest until Jephthah.

11.29–40: The war and the oath.

Before going out to battle Jephthah makes a vow, stating that if the LORD will give him victory, he will make Him an offering of the first thing that comes out of his house. After defeating the Ammonites he returns home, where he is met by his only daughter, who had come out to greet him, and he is forced to carry out his vow. In practice, the brief account of the war is incorporated within the account of the vow, depicted in detail and in a way that emphasizes the tragedy of this fateful, irreversible error. Biblical literature struggles with the norm of offering human sacrifices, which was apparently practiced throughout the First Temple period (2 Kings 21.6; 23.10; Jer. 7.31; etc.). Hence, this incident shows Jephthah in a negative light. Jephthah is, genealogically speaking, a marginal person both in his ancestry and in his progeny. 29: Jephthah advanced in a northeasterly direction. The places mentioned here and in v. 33 have not been identified. 31: The formulation of the oath, referring to one coming out of the door of his house, suggests a human rather than animal sacrifice.

³⁴When Jephthah arrived at his home in Mizpah, there was his daughter coming out to meet him, with timbrel and dance! She was an only child; he had no other son or daughter. ³⁵On seeing her, he rent his clothes and said, "Alas, daughter! You have brought me low; you have become my troubler! For I have "uttered a vow" to the LORD and I cannot retract." ³⁶"Father," she said, "you have uttered a vow to the LORD; do to me as you have vowed, seeing that the LORD has vindicated you against your enemies, the Ammonites." ³⁷She further said to her father, "Let this be done for me: let me be for two months, and I will go with my companions and lament^b upon the hills and there bewail my maidenhood." ³⁸"Go," he replied. He let her go for two months, and she and her companions went and bewailed her maidenhood upon the hills. ³⁹After two months' time, she returned to her father, and he did to her as he had vowed. She had never known a man. So it became a custom in Israel ⁴⁰for the maidens of Israel to go every year, for four days in the year, and chant dirges for the daughter of Jephthah the Gileadite.

12 The men of Ephraim mustered and crossed [the Jordan] to Zaphon. They said to Jephthah, "Why did you march to fight the Ammonites without calling us to go with you? We'll burn your house down over you!" ²Jephthah answered them, "I and my people were in a bitter conflict with the Ammonites; and I summoned you, but you did not save me from them. ³When I saw that you were no saviors, I risked my life and advanced against the Ammonites; and the LORD delivered them into my hands. Why have you come here now to fight against me?" ⁴And Jephthah gathered all the men of Gilead and fought the Ephraimites. The men of Gilead defeated the Ephraimites; for "they had said, "You Gileadites are nothing but fugitives from Ephraim—being in Manasseh is like being in Ephraim.""^c ⁵The Gileadites held the fords of the Jordan against the Ephraimites. And when any fugitive from a-a Lit. "opened my mouth."

b Lit. "descend," i.e., with weeping; cf. Isa. 15.3.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

34: Mizpah: This is not Mizpeh of Gilead mentioned in v. 29, but is apparently Mizpah which is mentioned in 11.11. 35: I cannot retract: Jephthah and his daughter understand the oath as an obligation that cannot be nullified, since vows were taken very seriously in the biblical period (see Deut.

23.22–23; Prov. 20.25; Eccl. 5.3–4).

37: My maidenhood: I will weep because I will die in my youth, as a childless virgin. 39: The text shies away from explicitly depicting her sacrifice, which leads some ancient and modern interpreters (e.g., Radak) to suggest that she was not actually killed. 40: The story has an etiological conclusion, explaining a custom that had presumably existed since hoary antiquity: to sing dirges four days a year in memory of Jephthah's daughter. This custom is unattested elsewhere in the Bible.

12.1–7: Jephthah's battle with Ephraim and the conclusion. This story likewise shows Jephthah in a negative light. The men of Ephraim had threatened to burn Jephthah's house because he had not called them to participate in the war against the Ammonites. Jephthah replies that he had attempted to call them in the past, but they refused. He went to war against Ephraim, and this concluded with the death of 42,000 Ephraimites. This conflict mirrors Gideon's conflict with Ephraim (8.1–3) and presents Ephraim negatively in a struggle for inter-tribal hegemony. Within the broader book, this fits the pro-Judean, anti-northern ideology of the editor. (Ephraim is used elsewhere in the Bible to refer to the Northern Kingdom.) While Gideon succeeded in preventing a civil war, Jephthah conducted a bloody conflict. The blocking of the Jordan crossings was a tactic used by Ehud (3.28), but while Ehud made war against the Moabites, Jephthah did so against his own people. These comparisons stress that Jephthah is not fit to lead.

1: Zaphon: This may refer to the settlement Zaphon, located in the territory of Gad near the city of Succoth (Josh. 13.27). 4: The men of Gilead were insulted by the Ephraimites. According to one interpretation, even the lowest of Ephraim, naming the fugitives, despised the people of Gilead, telling them that they had no importance in Ephraim and Manasseh. Others suggest that the phrase "fugitives of Ephraim" relates to the inhabitants of Gilead as refugees who left the region of Ephraim and Manasseh. 5: The Gileadites seized the Jordan fords even before the men of Ephraim Ephraim said, "Let me cross," the men of Gilead would ask him, "Are you an Ephraimite?"; if he said "No,"⁶ they would say to him, "Then say shibboleth"; but he would say "sibboleth," not being able to pronounce it correctly. Thereupon they would seize him and slay him by the fords of the Jordan. Forty-two thousand Ephraimites fell at that time.

⁷Jephthah led Israel six years. Then Jephthah the Gileadite died and he was buried in one of the towns of Gilead.

⁸After him, Ibzan of Bethlehem^a led Israel. ⁹He had thirty sons, and he married off thirty daughters outside the clan and brought in thirty girls from outside the clan for his sons. He led Israel seven years. ¹⁰Then Ibzan died and was buried in Bethlehem.

¹¹After him, Elon the Zebulunite led Israel; he led Israel for ten years. ¹²Then Elon the Zebulunite died and was buried in Aijalon, in the territory of Zebulun.

¹³After him, Abdon son of Hillel the Pirathonite led Israel. ¹⁴He had forty sons and thirty grandsons, who rode on seventy jackasses. He led Israel for eight years. ¹⁵Then Abdon son of Hillel the Pirathonite died. He was buried in Pirathon, in the territory of Ephraim, on the hill of the Amalekites.

13 The Israelites again did what was offensive to the LORD, and the LORD delivered them into the hands of the Philistines for forty years.

²There was a certain man from Zorah, of the stock of Dan, whose name was Manoah. His wife was barren and had borne no children. ³An angel of the LORD appeared to the woman and said to her, "You are barren and have borne no children; but you shall conceive and bear a son.

a I.e., Bethlehem in Zebulun; cf. Josh. 19.15.

arrived. 6: The difference in pronunciation, "sibboleth" instead of "shibboleth" (s/sh) reflected dialectical variation in the different areas of settlement. It is uncertain whether the word "shibboleth" refers to the current of the river (Ps. 69.3) or to sheaves of grain (Gen. 41.5–7). 7: While Jephthah the commander did indeed save his people from the Ammonites, he did not prove himself as a leader, and his term only lasted six years. The final burial notice is odd; it would be expected that he was buried in his city, Mizpah.

12.8–15: Consecutive judges: second list. Three consecutive judges appear after Jephthah, suggesting an additional period without sin, punishment, or deliverance. On these judges, see 10.1–5 n. 8: Except Othniel, who was from Judah, all the judges throughout the book are from northern Israel. Hence, the Bethlehem mentioned here is a city in the territory of Zebulun

(Josh. 19.15). 9: The author wishes to indicate his extensive connections, as marriage was one of the means of creating foreign alliances. 13: Pirathon is elsewhere mentioned as the city of Benaiah of Ephraim, one of David's warriors (2 Sam. 23.30; 1 Chron. 27.14).

Chs 13–16: The Samson cycle. Samson was different from the other judges. His activity bears a miraculous character, he fights as an individual rather than a commander, and his heroic acts are the result of personal involvement with Philistine women. The stories concerning him are filled with remnants of myth, legends, and folk traditions. On the other hand, he is not portrayed as a giant, and he has a direct connection with God, both through his being a Nazirite and through his prayers. Concluding the stories of the judges with a hero who does not deliver his people but only himself, and who dies in enemy captivity, contributes to the feeling of disappointment with the type of leadership that the judges represent. This bolsters the book's ultimate conclusion, that permanent kingship over all of Israel must be established. This cycle, like the others in the book, comprises originally distinct stories which have been joined together into a largely unified whole.

13.1–25: Samson's birth. The story is reminiscent of other announcement stories, where God or His messengers appear (Gen. 18.1–15; Judg. 6.11–24; 1 Sam. ch 1; 2 Kings 4.8–37). This story serves as the haftarah for the Torah portion of Naso' (Num. 4.21–7.89), which includes the Nazirite laws (6.1–21), since Samson is depicted as a Nazirite from before his birth. 1: Subjugation of 40 years is the longest in the book. The absence of the stage of crying out strengthens the impression of distance from the LORD. 2: Zorah, located in the territory of Dan, near the modern kibbutz of that name. Nearby is an altar carved into rock, commonly known as "the altar of Manoah."

⁴Now be careful not to drink wine or other intoxicant, or to eat anything unclean. ⁵For you are going to conceive and bear a son; let no razor touch his head, for the boy is to be a nazirite to God from the womb on. He shall be the first to deliver Israel from the Philistines."

⁶The woman went and told her husband, "A man of God came to me; he looked like an angel of God, very frightening. I did not ask him where he was from, nor did he tell me his name. ⁷He said to me, 'You are going to conceive and bear a son. Drink no wine or other intoxicant, and eat nothing unclean, for the boy is to be a nazirite to God from the womb to the day of his death!'"

⁸Manoah pleaded with the LORD. "Oh, my Lord!" he said, "please let the man of God that You sent come to us again, and let him instruct us how to act with the child that is to be born." ⁹God heeded Manoah's plea, and the angel of God came to the woman again. She was sitting in the field and her husband Manoah was not with her. ¹⁰The woman ran in haste to tell her husband. She said to him, "The man who came to me before^a has just appeared to me." ¹¹Manoah promptly followed his wife. He came to the man and asked him: "Are you the man who spoke to my wife?" "Yes," he answered. ¹²Then Manoah said, "May your words soon come true! What rules shall be observed for the boy?" ¹³The angel of the LORD said to Manoah, "The woman must abstain from all the things against which I warned her. ¹⁴She must not eat anything that comes from the grapevine, or drink wine or other intoxicant, or eat anything unclean. She must observe all that I commanded her."

¹⁵Manoah said to the angel of the LORD, "Let us detain you and prepare a kid for you." ¹⁶But the angel of the LORD said to Manoah, "If you detain me, I shall not eat your food; and if you present a burnt offering, offer it to LORD."—For Manoah did not know that he was an angel of the LORD. ¹⁷So Manoah said to the angel of the LORD, "What is your name? We should like to honor you when your words come true." ¹⁸The angel said to him, "You must not ask for my name; it is unknowable!"

¹⁹Manoah took the kid and the meal offering and offered them up on the rock to the LORD; ^band a marvelous thing happened^b while Manoah and his wife looked on. ²⁰As the flames leaped up from the altar toward the sky, the angel of the LORD ascended in the flames of the altar, while Manoah and his wife looked on; and they flung themselves on their faces to the ground.—²¹The angel of Stock: The Heb word used here is "family," referring to the entire tribe, as this small tribe consisted of only one family (Num. 26.42). 5: Samson's Nazirite-hood is exceptional, referred to by the Sages as "the Nazirite-hood of Samson"—namely, even when his hair grew heavy he did not thin it (m. Naz. 1.2). The prohibition of drinking wine applies only to his mother. The first, the Heb and KJV: "he shall begin," meaning that he will not deliver them fully, but only in a partial manner (Rashi ad loc). 6: From the woman's report to her husband, she seems to suspect that the man of God was an angel, and therefore did not ask him usual questions, such as his name or where he was from. 7: To the day of his death: The woman does not repeat the angel's words exactly. She focuses upon the prohibitions applied to her, and interprets the partial deliverance as alluding to the premature death of the child. Thus, she creates gaps that cause Manoah to ask for another appearance of the visitor. 8: Us: Manoah wants to be a full partner in the additional visit; he seems to mistrust his wife's report. 9: Due to the woman's preferred status in birth stories (cf. 2 Kings 4.8-17), the angel, notwithstanding Manoah's request, reappears to the woman, and thereafter Manoah follows his wife. 11: The observation that Manoah promptly followed his wife is unusual in biblical literature, and reflects the role reversal of man and woman in this ch. 12: Your words, i.e., of prophecy. For the boy: Manoah asks how to behave regarding the child who is to be born. 13-14: The angel's answer ignores Manoah's question and only relates to the woman. 15: Manoah invites the angel to a meal—behavior reminiscent of Gideon's in 6.18. Perhaps the function of the meal is to determine whether he is in fact an angel; alternatively, the text suggests that Manoah has no clue that this man is actually an angel. 16: The angel, as angels do, refuses to eat and suggests that the goat be offered to the LORD. The second half of this a Lit. "in the day." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

the LORD never appeared again to Manoah and his wife.—Manoah then realized that it had been an angel of the LORD. ²² And Manoah said to his wife, “We shall surely die, for we have seen a divine being.” ²³ But his wife said to him, “Had the LORD meant to take our lives, He would not have accepted a burnt offering and meal offering from us, nor let us see all these things; and He would not have made such an announcement to us.”

²⁴ The woman bore a son, and she named him Samson. The boy grew up, and the LORD blessed him. ²⁵ The spirit of the LORD first moved him in the encampment of Dan, between Zorah and Eshtaol.

14 Once Samson went down to Timnah; and while in Timnah, he noticed a girl among the Philistine women. ² On his return, he told his father and mother, “I noticed one of the Philistine women in Timnah; please get her for me as a wife.” ³ His father and mother said to him, “Is there no one among the daughters of your own kinsmen and among all our^a people, that you must go and take a wife from the uncircumcised Philistines?” But Samson answered his father, “Get me that one, for she is the one that pleases me.” ⁴ His father and mother did not realize that this was the LORD’s doing: He was seeking a pretext against the Philistines, for the Philistines were ruling over Israel at that time. ⁵ So Samson and his father and mother went down to Timnah.

When he^b came to the vineyards of Timnah [for the first time], a full-grown lion came roaring at him. ⁶ The spirit of the LORD gripped him, and he tore him asunder with his bare hands as one might tear a kid asunder; but he did not tell his father and mother what he had done. ⁷ Then he went down and spoke to the woman, and she pleased Samson.

⁸ Returning the following year to marry her, he turned aside to look at the remains of the lion; and in the lion’s skeleton he found a swarm of bees, and honey. ⁹ He scooped it into his palms and ate it as he went along.

^a Heb. “my.” ^b Heb. “they.”

v. (for Manoah . . .) may belong at the end of v. 15. 17: Manoah continues to examine the angel and asks for his name. He justifies this question by stating that he wishes to honor the messenger once his tidings are realized. Since angels do not have names (see Gen. 32.30), this may be Manoah’s way of testing to see if the man is an angel, or it may be the narrator’s way of suggesting that Manoah is not very clever, and in contrast to his wife, still does not realize that an angel is before him. 18: The angel refuses to disclose his name. 19–20: The angel behaves in a miraculous way and disappears when the sacrifice is offered, while Manoah and his wife watch.

20: Altar, the rock. 21: Only after the angel disappears does Manoah understand that God’s messenger had been revealed to them. His wife already felt this at the first encounter. 22: The view that seeing the LORD brings death (cf. 6.22 and elsewhere) causes Manoah to express his fear. 23: Manoah’s wife is logical. She calms him by stating that if God had wished to kill them He would not have sent His angel twice. The narrator’s depiction of Manoah in this ch supports the Rabbis’ observation that “Manoah was a boorish, ignorant person” (b. Ber. 61a). 24a: The woman gives the infant his name. Many commentators connect the name with the sun (Heb “Shimshon” [Samson]/“shemesh” [sun]), seeing in this a mythological allusion. 24b–25: These vv. summarize Samson’s unique growth and development under divine protection. Eshtaol, near Zorah.

14.1–15.20: Samson’s marriage to the Timnite and its consequences.

Samson’s marriage to a Philistine woman is part of a deliberate divine strategy that might be described as a policy of “pretext,” by which Samson’s connection with Philistine women was intended to provide him justification for harming the Philistines by a series of annoyances and not by wars of deliverance. As in wisdom texts, God acts in mysterious ways that are not transparent to human observers. 14.1: Timnah, located between Beth Shemesh and Ekron. 5: Although Samson went with his parents, during the journey he left the main road, so that they did not know of his struggle with the lion (v. 6; see also v. 9). Gilgamesh, the hero of the Babylonian myth, and Hercules, the Greek mythic hero, also overcame lions. 8: The removal of honey from the skeleton of a lion has parallels in the literature of the ancient world. These two acts provide the material for the riddle. 9: Samson gave his parents some of the honey, but did not

When he rejoined his father and mother, he gave them some and they ate it; but he did not tell them that he had scooped the honey out of a lion's skeleton.

¹⁰So his father came down to the woman, and Samson made a feast there, as young men used to do. ¹¹When they^a saw him, they designated thirty companions to be with him. ¹²Then Samson said to them, "Let me propound a riddle to you. If you can give me the right answer during the seven days of the feast, I shall give you thirty linen tunics and thirty sets of clothing; ¹³but if you are not able to tell it to me, you must give me thirty linen tunics and thirty sets of clothing." And they said to him, "Ask your riddle and we will listen." ¹⁴So he said to them:

"Out of the eater came something to eat,
Out of the strong came something sweet."

For three days they could not answer the riddle.

¹⁵On the seventh^b day, they said to Samson's wife, "Coax your husband to provide us with the answer to the riddle; else we shall put you and your father's household to the fire; have you invited us here^c in order to impoverish us?" ¹⁶Then Samson's wife harassed him with tears, and she said, "You really hate me, you don't love me. You asked my countrymen a riddle, and you didn't tell me the answer." He replied, "I haven't even told my father and mother; shall I tell you?" ¹⁷During the rest of the seven days of the feast she continued to harass him with her tears, and on the seventh day he told her, because she nagged him so. And she explained the riddle to her countrymen. ¹⁸On the seventh day, before the sunset, the townsmen said to him:

"What is sweeter than honey,
And what is stronger than a lion?"

He responded:

"Had you not plowed with my heifer,
You would not have guessed my riddle!"

¹⁹The spirit of the LORD gripped him. He went down to Ashkelon and killed thirty of its men. He stripped them and gave the sets of clothing to those who had answered the riddle. And he left in a rage for his father's house.

²⁰Samson's wife then married one of those who had been his wedding companions.

15 Some time later, in the season of the wheat harvest, Samson came to visit his wife, bringing a kid as a gift. He said, "Let me go into the chamber to my wife."

a I.e., the people of Timnah. b Septuagint and Syriac read "fourth."
c Reading halom, with some Heb. mss. and Targum.

tell them its source. 10: The father alone is mentioned here; the mention of Samson's mother at the beginning of the ch may help connect this story, an originally separate narrative (note that Samson is never depicted as a Nazirite in chs 14–15), with the previous ch, in which the mother plays a central role. 11: To be with him, to provide him with companionship, as he was a stranger. 12: A riddle: The proposal of a riddle accompanied by betting was part of the feast entertainment. The postponement of the riddle's solution until the seventh day indicates that Samson was convinced that it could be impossible to solve. 13: Samson takes upon himself an obligation 30 times greater than that of any other. 14: Samson's riddle is personal, and could not be solved without knowledge of his earlier acts. 15: On the seventh day: Some versions of the Septuagint suggest the fourth day, which is more likely in context. Have you invited us here: The Philistines accuse the bride and her family of collaboration with Samson, with the intent of impoverishing them. 16: My countrymen: This formulation emphasizes the national confrontation: she and her countrymen against Samson. 18: Samson responds with a riddle. He compares the woman to a heifer and the way of discovering to plowing. Thus he suggests that he knows how they arrived at the solution. His parable is phrased in a poetic formulation identical to the solution that they proposed, thereby concealing his anger and allowing the festive atmosphere to continue. 19: Samson responds measure for measure, without deviating from the number 30. 20: After his vengeance, Samson returns to his father's house. It is possible that the marriage had yet to be consummated. 15.2: Taken a dislike may be a technical term for divorce. 3: In accordance with the policy of pretexts, Samson takes revenge not only against his wife's family, but against the Philistines in general. 4: The motif of using foxes to damage fields is also known from other

But her father would not let him go in. ²"I was sure," said her father, "that you had taken a dislike to her, so I gave her to your wedding companion. But her younger sister is more beautiful than she; let her become your wife instead." ³Thereupon Samson declared, "Now the Philistines can have no claim against me for the harm I shall do them."

⁴Samson went and caught three hundred foxes. He took torches and, turning [the foxes] tail to tail, he placed a torch between each pair of tails. ⁵He lit the torches and turned [the foxes] loose among the standing grain of the Philistines, setting fire to stacked grain, standing grain, vineyards, [and]^a olive trees.

⁶The Philistines asked, "Who did this?" And they were told, "It was Samson, the son-in-law of the Timnite, who took Samson's^b wife and gave her to his wedding companion." Thereupon the Philistines came up and put her and her father^c to the fire. ⁷Samson said to them, "If that is how you act, I will not rest until I have taken revenge on you." ⁸^dHe gave them a sound and thorough thrashing.^d Then he went down and stayed in the cave of the rock of Etam.

⁹The Philistines came up, pitched camp in Judah and spread out over Lehi. ¹⁰The men of Judah asked, "Why have you come up against us?" They answered, "We have come to take Samson prisoner, and to do to him as he did to us." ¹¹Thereupon three thousand men of Judah went down to the cave of the rock of Etam, and they said to Samson, "You knew that the Philistines rule over us; why have you done this to us?" He replied, "As they did to me, so I did to them." ¹²"We have come down," they told him, "to take you prisoner and to hand you over to the Philistines." "But swear to me," said Samson to them, "that you yourselves will not attack me." ¹³"We won't," they replied. "We will only take you prisoner and hand you over to them; we will not slay you." So they bound him with two new ropes and brought him up from the rock.

¹⁴When he reached Lehi, the Philistines came shouting to meet him. Thereupon the spirit of the LORD gripped him, and the ropes on his arms became like flax that catches fire; the bonds melted off his hands. ¹⁵He came upon a fresh jawbone of an ass and he picked it up; and with it he killed a thousand men. ¹⁶Then Samson said:

ancient literature (cf. Song 2.15).

6: The Philistines justify Samson's anger by taking revenge against his wife and her father. 7: The violence escalates. 8: A sound and thorough thrashing: The exact meaning of the Heb expression, lit. "calf as well as thigh," is not known, but it is clear that the sense is a severe beating. Etam: Samson goes to live in the cleft of a rock in Judah, near Zorah; see 1 Chron. 4.3.

9: Samson's presence in the territory of Judah led the Philistines to apply further pressure on the tribe of Judah. Lehi, not identified. The folk etymology of the name, which means "jaw," appears in v. 17.

10-13: Samson is not afraid of the Philistines, but of an attack by Judah. He therefore makes them take an oath. 15: The jawbone of the ass was the first chance object that came to his hand. This act of bravery is reminiscent of the heroic acts of Shamgar son of Anath (3.31); cf. 2 Sam. 23.8-23.

16: Samson does not mention God in his song of victory.

^a So Targum.

^b Heb. "his."

^c Many mss. read "her father's household"; cf. 14.15.

^{d-d} Lit. "He smote them leg as well as thigh, a great smiting."

"With the jaw of an ass,
Mass upon mass!
With the jaw of an ass
I have slain a thousand men."

¹⁷As he finished speaking, he threw the jawbone away; hence that place was called Ramath-lehi.^a

¹⁸He was very thirsty and he called to the LORD, "You Yourself have granted this great victory through Your servant; and must I now die of thirst and fall into the hands of the uncircumcised?" ¹⁹So God split open the hollow which is at Lehi, and the water gushed out of it; he drank, regained his strength, and revived. That is why it is called to this day "En-hakkore^b of Lehi."

²⁰He led Israel in the days of the Philistines for twenty years.

16 Once Samson went to Gaza; there he met a whore and slept with her. ^{2c}The Gazites [learned]^d that Samson had come there, so they gathered and lay in ambush for him in the town gate the whole night; and all night long they kept whispering to each other, "When daylight comes, we'll kill him." ³But Samson lay in bed only till midnight. At midnight he got up, grasped the doors of the town gate together with the two gateposts, and pulled them out along with the bar. He placed them on his shoulders and carried them off to the top of the hill that is near Hebron.

⁴After that, he fell in love with a woman in the Wadi Sorek, named Delilah. ⁵The lords of the Philistines went up to her and said, "Coax him and find out what makes him so strong, and how we can overpower him, tie him a i.e., "Jawbone Heights." b Understood as "The Spring of the Caller."

c Meaning of parts of verse uncertain. d Septuagint reads "were told."

18: Samson's thirst is interpreted as a result of the battle, but it also has educational meaning. He realizes that his might and life are dependent upon God's will. Your servant: This time, in contrast to the song of victory, Samson represents himself as a servant before his master and admits that the victory came from God. 19: The etymology connects the name of the spring with Samson's calling upon God (v. 18). 20: The appearance here of the closing formula, citing the number of years that he judged

Israel, may suggest that the cycle originally ended here. Alternately, it is meant to indicate that the period of his being judge took place between his marriage and the events in ch 16 that led to his death. In the days of the Philistines: The emphasis that Samson judged Israel during the period of Philistine rule indicates that his mighty acts did not bring about deliverance or quiet.

16.1–21: Samson's betrayal and capture. Samson's final acts, all of which are associated with the city of Gaza, end with his death in Philistine captivity. As in all the Samson stories, a woman plays a prominent role. 1–3: Gaza: Samson easily carried off the city gates, leaving the Philistines ashamed and exposed. This explains the Philistines' readiness to pay Delilah any price in order to catch Samson. 2: The town gate was a fortified structure with numerous rooms. 3: Against the preparations of the townspeople "the whole night" (repeated twice), the author repeats that already "at midnight" Samson had left. Thus, while they were still waiting to catch him, he was no longer in the place. To the top of the hill . . . : The geographical details emphasize the miracle. Samson walked a distance of some 58 km (35 miles), from the lowlands to the mountains, carrying the doors, the gateposts, and the bar on his shoulders. 4–21: Delilah: Delilah exploits Samson's love and, in exchange for a handsome sum, discovers the secret of his strength and betrays him to the Philistines. Samson is taken, blind and humiliated, to a prison in Gaza. Delilah's attempts to uncover the source of his strength are based upon the model of ascending numbers, three and four (see Jotham's parable: 9.8–15). Three times she fails (vv. 6–9, 10–12, 13–14), but in the climactic fourth (vv. 15–21) he reveals his secret to her. In so doing he betrays his destiny and is punished. 4: He fell in love: For the first time we are told that Samson was in love, and the woman is named. This indicates that this time Samson was emotionally involved and was bound to behave differently. A woman: It is not mentioned that Delilah was a Philistine. Wadi Sorek, adjacent to Zorah and Eshtaol, rather than to the Philistine cities. Delilah: The etymology of Delilah may relate to woven braids of hair (Song 7.6), and thus may foreshadow Samson's undoing. 5: Each . . . eleven hundred shekels: Hence Delilah was offered the enormous sum of 5,500 shekels, as there were five Philistine lords, heading the five up, and make him helpless; and we'll each give you eleven hundred shekels of silver."

⁶So Delilah said to Samson, "Tell me, what makes you so strong? And how could you be tied up and made helpless?" ⁷Samson replied, "If I were to be tied with seven fresh tendons that had not been dried,^a I should become as weak as an ordinary man." ⁸So the lords of the Philistines brought up to her seven fresh tendons that had not been dried. She bound him with them, ⁹while an ambush was waiting in her room. Then she called out to him, "Samson, the Philistines are upon you!" Whereat he pulled the tendons apart, as a strand of tow comes apart at the touch of fire. So the secret of his strength remained unknown.

¹⁰Then Delilah said to Samson, "Oh, you deceived me; you lied to me! Do tell me now how you could be tied up." ¹¹He said, "If I were to be bound with new ropes that had never been used, I would become as weak as an ordinary man." ¹²So Delilah took new ropes and bound him with them, while an ambush was waiting in a room. And she cried, "Samson, the Philistines are upon you!" But he tore them off his arms like a thread. ¹³Then Delilah said to Samson, "You have been deceiving me all along; you have been lying to me! Tell me, how could you be tied up?" He answered her, "If you weave seven locks of my head into the web."^b ¹⁴And she pinned it with a peg^c and cried to him, "Samson, the Philistines are upon you!" Awakening from his sleep, he pulled out the peg, the loom,^d and the web.

¹⁵Then she said to him, "How can you say you love me, when you don't confide in me? This makes three times that you've deceived me and haven't told me what makes you so strong." ¹⁶Finally, after she had nagged him and pressed him constantly, he was wearied to death ¹⁷and he confided everything to her. He said to her, "No razor has ever touched my head, for I have been a nazirite to God since I was in my mother's womb. If my hair were cut, my strength would leave me and I should become as weak as an ordinary man."

¹⁸Sensing that he had confided everything to her, Delilah sent for the lords of the Philistines, with this message: "Come up once more, for he has confided everything to me." And the lords of the Philistines came up and brought the money with them. ¹⁹She lulled him to sleep on her lap.

cities: Gaza, Ashkelon, Gath, Ekron, and Ashdod. 6: Evidently, tendons taken from the intestines or sinews of animals. Their being fresh assures their flexibility and makes it more difficult to tear them. 10: By the second attempt Delilah is angry that Samson misled her. This attempt is reminiscent of the incident at Lehi (15:13-14). 13: In the third attempt Delilah's tone is more imperious, and Samson reveals the object of his undoing, his hair, but not how it might undo him. Samson's answer is incomplete: It begins with a conditional sentence, but without the second half. The verse may be completed by the LXX. This time the ambush is not mentioned. Locks: In this connection and from the continuation (v. 19), we may understand that his hair was divided into seven plaits, which were tied into a braid. Into the web, into the threads of the warp of the loom. 14: The loom, and the web, the weave and the threads of the warp, which are part of the loom. 15: On the fourth attempt, Delilah marshals her femininity and claims that Samson's declarations of love are false. He can convince her that his love is true only by revealing his secret. 16: This attempt continued during a long time of nagging until Samson felt his life wasn't worth living. This is reminiscent of the woman in 14:16. 19: As he fell asleep on her lap, she called a man to assist her in cutting his hair, because she was afraid that he might waken.

a For use as bowstrings.

b Septuagint adds "and pin it with a peg to the wall, I shall become as weak as an ordinary man. So Delilah put him to sleep and wove the seven locks of his head into the web."

c Septuagint adds "to the wall."

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Then she called in a man, and she had him cut off the seven locks of his head; thus she weakened him^a and made him helpless: his strength slipped away from him.

²⁰She cried, "Samson, the Philistines are upon you!" And he awoke from his sleep, thinking he would break loose^b and shake himself free as he had the other times. For he did not know that the LORD had departed from him.

²¹The Philistines seized him and gouged out his eyes. They brought him down to Gaza and shackled him in bronze fetters, and he became a mill slave in the prison.

²²After his hair was cut off, it began to grow back.

²³Now the lords of the Philistines gathered to offer a great sacrifice to their god Dagon and to make merry. They chanted,

"Our god has delivered into our hands
Our enemy Samson."

²⁴When the people saw him, they sang praises to their god, chanting,

"Our god has delivered into our hands
The enemy who devastated our land,
And who slew so many of us."

²⁵As their spirits rose, they said, "Call Samson here and let him dance for us." Samson was fetched from the prison, and he danced for them. Then they put him between the pillars. ²⁶And Samson said to the boy who was leading him by the hand, "Let go of me and let me feel the pillars that the temple rests upon, that I may lean on them." ²⁷Now the temple was full of men and women; all the lords of the Philistines were there, and there were some three thousand men and women on the roof watching Samson dance. ²⁸Then Samson called to the LORD, "O Lord God! Please remember me, and give me strength just this once, O God, to take revenge of the Philistines, if only for one of my two eyes." ²⁹He embraced the two middle pillars that the temple rested upon, one with his right arm and one with his left, and leaned against them; ³⁰Samson cried, "Let me die with the Philistines!" and he pulled with all his might. The temple came crashing down on the lords and on all the people in it. Those who were slain by him as he died outnumbered those who had been slain by him when he lived.

³¹His brothers and all his father's household came down and carried him up and buried him in the tomb of his father Manoah, between Zorah and Eshtaol. He had led Israel for twenty years.

16.22–31: Samson's death and burial.

The Philistines gathered at Dagon's temple to offer sacrifices and to thank their god for catching Samson. They wanted to entertain themselves by taunting the defeated. Samson turned to the LORD to assist him in having a final vengeance upon the Philistines, by enabling him to overturn the pillars of the temple and all that was within it. Thus, even Samson's death became a pretext for a strike against the Philistines. Members of his tribe took his body and buried him in his father's grave. 22: The mention of his hair growing back alludes to the renewal of his strength; only in this ch is his strength connected to his "magical" locks. 25: The Philistines wished to enjoy the sight of Samson humiliated (the Heb text does not explicitly mention dancing). 28: As in the earlier story, Samson prays (15.18), but this time the prayer is a supplication for vengeance. In En-hakkore (15.19) one could hear in his prayer an element of questioning and even complaint. 29: One may assume that the pillars were placed closely together. 30: Samson, upon feeling his strength returning to him, utters a cry of encouragement to himself. 31: His brothers, his compatriots. He had led . . .: This refers to the period preceding what is related in ch 16. This phrase returns the reader to 15.20.

^a Taking wattahel as equivalent to wattahal; cf. vv. 7, 11, and 17.

^b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^c This verse would read well after v. 25.

17 There was a man in the hill country of Ephraim whose name was Micah.^a ²He said to his mother, “The eleven hundred shekels of silver that were taken from you, so that you uttered an imprecation^b which you repeated in my hearing—I have that silver; I took it.” “Blessed of the LORD be my son,” said his mother.^c ³He returned the eleven hundred shekels of silver to his mother; but his mother said, “I herewith consecrate the silver to the LORD, transferring it to my son to make a sculptured image and a molten image. I now return it to you.” ⁴So when he gave the silver back to his mother, his mother took two hundred shekels of silver and gave it to a smith. He made of it a sculptured image and a molten image, which were kept in the house of Micah.

⁵Now the man Micah had a house of God; he had made an ephod and teraphim and he had inducted one of his sons to be his priest. ⁶In those days there was no king in Israel; every man did as he pleased.

⁷There was a young man from Bethlehem of Judah, from the clan seat of Judah; he was a Levite and had resided there as a sojourner. ⁸This man had left the town of Bethlehem of Judah to take up residence wherever he could find a place. On his way, he came to the house of Micah in the hill country of Ephraim. ⁹“Where do you come from?” Micah asked him. He replied, “I am a Levite from Bethlehem of Judah, and I am traveling to take up residence wherever I can find a place.” ¹⁰“Stay with me,” Micah said to him, “and be a father and a priest to me, and I will pay you ten shekels of silver a year, an allowance of clothing, and your food.”^d “The Levite went.”^d ¹¹The Levite agreed to stay with the man, and the youth became like one of his own sons. ¹²Micah inducted the Levite, and the young man became his priest and remained in Micah’s a “Micah” here and in v. 4.

b Cursing anyone who knew the whereabouts of the silver and did not disclose it; cf. Lev. 5:1; 1 Kings 8:31.

c In order to nullify the imprecation. d-d Force of Heb. uncertain.

17.1—18.31: Micah’s house of God and the temple of Dan. This story, focused upon cultic sites, serves to criticize the period of the judges by representing it as an age of anarchy: “In those days there was no king in Israel; every man did as he pleased.” In terms of chronology, the story is set at the beginning of the age of the judges (see 18.30 and the introduction), but is placed at the end of the book to emphasize that the end of the period was similar to its beginning and the judges were unable to correct the situation; hence, the solution is monarchy. In several details, including its setting (cf. 16.31 to 18.2, 8, 11) and the sum of money—1,100 silver shekels (16.5 and 17.3), this story is connected to the Samson cycle. 1–13: Micah’s house of God: The account of establishing Micah’s house of God reveals the manner in which God was worshipped during the period of the judges: A statue made by means of stolen silver was the center of the cult, and the priest was Micah’s son, whom he himself appointed. During this period Levites sought a livelihood; hence Micah hired a Levite and appointed him as priest rather than his son. Some scholars think that Micah’s temple in the hill country of Ephraim is an allusion to Bethel, which was connected with Dan, and that the criticism here is of the central temples of the Northern Kingdom. 1: Hill country of Ephraim: The name of Micah’s town is not specified, but rather the broad region of the central hill country. Cf. 13.2. 4: Two hundred shekels: His mother said that she had consecrated the money to the LORD, but in practice she only set aside 200 out of 1,100 shekels—this too reflects poorly on the cult center that is ultimately established. Sculptured image and a molten image: This may refer to a single article, namely a molten (cast) sculpture. In any event, these are expressions related to pagan worship or worship of the LORD in a pagan manner (see Deut. 27:15; Exod. 20:3; 34:17; etc.). Micah and his mother are described as serving the LORD, but not in the proper way. 5: Ephod and teraphim, means of inquiring of God. One of his sons, an illegitimate appointment, as he was not a Levite. 6: This statement criticizes what precedes it, and serves as a critical introduction to what follows. It also suggests that Micah’s specific act is representative of the whole. 7: A Levite could not be a resident in Judah, but only a temporary sojourner. 8: A place, where he would be able to earn a livelihood. The Levite came to Micah’s house to rest from his travels and did not imagine that he would find his livelihood there. 10: A father: Micah promises the Levite a respected position (cf. Gen. 45.8). Ten shekels . . . a year: The gap between the annual wage of the Levite and the amount of money stolen by Micah indicates his great shrine. ¹³“Now I know,” Micah told himself, “that the LORD will prosper me, since the Levite has become my priest.”

18In those days there was no king in Israel, and in those days the tribe of Dan was seeking a territory in which to settle; for to that day no territory had fallen to their lot among the tribes of Israel. ²The Danites sent out five of their number, from their clan seat at Zorah and Eshtaol—valiant men—to spy out the land and explore it. “Go,” they told them, “and explore the land.” When they had advanced into the hill country of Ephraim as far as the house of Micah, they stopped there for the night. ³While in the vicinity of Micah’s house, they recognized the speech^a of the young Levite, so they went over and asked him, “Who brought you to these parts? What are you doing in this place? What is your business here?” ⁴He replied, “Thus and thus Micah did for me—he hired me and I became his priest.” ⁵They said to him, “Please, inquire of God; we would like to know if the mission on which we are going will be successful.” ⁶“Go in peace,” the priest said to them, “the LORD views with favor the mission you are going on.” ⁷The five men went on and came to Laish. They observed the people in it dwelling carefree, after the manner of the Sidonians, a tranquil and unsuspecting people, with no one in the land to molest them and ^bwith no hereditary ruler.^b Moreover, they were distant from the Sidonians and had no dealings with anybody.

⁸When [the men] came back to their kinsmen at Zorah and Eshtaol, their kinsmen asked them, “How did you fare?” ⁹They replied, “Let us go at once and attack them! For we found that the land was very good, and you are sitting idle! Don’t delay; go and invade the land and take possession of it, ¹⁰for God has delivered it into your hand. When you come, you will come to an unsuspecting people; and the land is spacious and nothing on earth is lacking there.”

¹¹They departed from there, from the clan seat of the Danites, from Zorah and Eshtaol, six hundred strong, girt with weapons of war. ¹²They went up and encamped at Kiriath-jearim in Judah. That is why that place is called “the Camp of Dan” to this day; it lies west of Kiriath-jearim. ¹³From there they passed on to the hill country of Ephraim and arrived at the house of Micah. ¹⁴Here the wealth. The Levite went: This expression seems superfluous and may be an erroneous duplication (dittography) of the words that follow (“the Levite agreed”), which are similar to it in Heb.

18.1–31: The conquest of Dan and the setting up of its temple. The Danites’ wandering may reflect the intertribal relations during the period of the judges, the difficult situation of the individual, and the status of the cultic sites. 1: In those days . . . : A truncated version of 17.6, suggesting its critical sequel: “every man did as he pleased.” Here too this statement is integrated within the transition from one scene to another, bearing on both what precedes and what follows. The tribe of Dan was forced to leave its territory in the coastal lowlands, near Zorah and Eshtaol, and to seek a new territory, while none of the other tribes came to their help (see 1.34–35; Josh. 19.47). 4: Thus and thus . . . : The narrator abbreviates the information already known from ch 17. 5: Inquire of God: Before carrying out any task it was customary to inquire of God; see 1 Sam. 23.1–13 and the opening v. of Judges. 7: Laish, the former name of Dan (see v. 29), referred to in Josh. 19.47 as Leshem. The description of the city is from the viewpoint of the spies, who emphasized that it was peaceful and isolated, and therefore could easily be conquered. Distant from . . . : The Galilee separates Laish and the area of the Sidonians. 9: Sitting idle: The spies criticize the apathy of their tribe and enumerate the virtues of the place and the ease with which it might be conquered. Their enthusiasm is reminiscent of Joshua and Caleb (Num. 14.7ff.). 11: Six hundred indicates a military unit. See 1 Sam. 30.9. 12: Kiriath-jearim, located on the border of Judah and Benjamin, west of Jerusalem, and identified with Abu-Ghosh. The Camp of Dan: The site has not been identified. To this day, the days of the author (see v. 30). 14: In these houses: Micah’s house was not an isolated house in a Lit. “voice.” The men could tell by his dialect that he came from Judah and was therefore a former neighbor of the Danites; cf. vv. 11–12.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

five men who had gone to spy out the Laish region remarked to their kinsmen, "Do you know, there is an ephod in these houses, and teraphim, and a sculptured image and a molten image? Now you know what you have to do."¹⁵ So they turned off there and entered the home of the young Levite at Micah's house and greeted him.¹⁶ The six hundred Danite men, girt with their weapons of war, stood at the entrance of the gate,¹⁷ while the five men who had gone to spy out the land went inside and took the sculptured image, the ephod, the teraphim, and the molten image. The priest was standing at the entrance of the gate, and the six hundred men girt with their weapons of war,¹⁸ while those men entered Micah's house and took "the sculptured image, the molten image, the ephod, and the household gods."^a The priest said to them, "What are you doing?"¹⁹ But they said to him, "Be quiet; put your hand on your mouth! Come with us and be our father and priest. Would you rather be priest to one man's household or be priest to a tribe and clan in Israel?"²⁰ The priest was delighted. He took the ephod, the household gods, and the sculptured image, and he joined the people.

²¹They set out again, placing the children, the cattle, and their household goods in front.²² They had already gone some distance from Micah's house, when the men in the houses near Micah's mustered and caught up with the Danites.²³ They called out to the Danites, who turned around and said to Micah, "What's the matter? Why have you mustered?"²⁴ He said, "You have taken my priest and the gods that I made, and walked off! What do I have left? How can you ask, 'What's the matter'?"²⁵ But the Danites replied, "Don't do any shouting at us, or some desperate men might attack you, and you and your family would lose your lives."²⁶ So Micah, realizing that they were stronger than he, turned back and went home; and the Danites went on their way,²⁷ taking the things Micah had made and the priest he had acquired. They proceeded to Laish, a people tranquil and unsuspecting, and they put them to the sword and burned down the town.²⁸ There was none to come to the rescue, for it was distant from Sidon and they had no dealings with anyone; it lay in the valley of Beth-rehob.

They rebuilt the town and settled there,²⁹ and they named the town Dan, after their ancestor Dan who was Israel's son. Originally, however, the name of the town was Laish.³⁰ The Danites set up the sculptured image for the hill country of Ephraim, but was located within a settlement whose name is not given. It seems to refer to Bethel (cf. Jer. 4.15). You know what you have to do, an agreed signal among conspirators. 15: The home of the young Levite, i.e., the temple in which he serves. 20: The priest was delighted: The narrator probes the Levite's thoughts to represent him as one who prefers his own interest—to be a priest for an entire tribe—over ethics and loyalty. 21: In front: As they wished to protect their property and the weak among them, they placed them in the front, so that the fighting men would serve as a buffer against marauders from the rear. In the case of Jacob, Esau was approaching him, so he behaved in the opposite manner, placing the women and children in the rear. 22: See v. 14 above. 23: The Danites' questions were sarcastic, as they knew the real reason. 24: Micah's answer indicates the depth of divine worship in an improper manner. 28: Beth-rehob, an Aramean kingdom (2 Sam. 10.6) whose locale is unidentified. 30: Jonathan . . .: Here the Levite's identity is revealed, being a grandson of Moses, the third generation from the exodus. The name Moses is obscured and turned into Manasseh (an evil Judean king) by means of a hanging letter "nun" to clear Moses from his grandson's misdeeds. (According to Exod. 2.22, Gershom is Moses' son.) Exile: This seems to refer to 732 BCE, when Galilee was exiled by Assyria (2 Kings 15.29), or the exile of the Northern Kingdom in 722.

a-a Lit. "the sculptured image of the ephod, and the household gods, and the molten image."

themselves; and Jonathan son of Gershom son of Manasseh,^a and his descendants, served as priests to the Danite tribe until the land went into exile.³¹ They maintained^b the sculptured image that Micah had made throughout the time that the House of God stood at Shiloh.

19 In those days, when there was no king in Israel, a Levite residing at the other end of the hill country of Ephraim took to himself a concubine from Bethlehem in Judah.² Once his concubine deserted^c him, leaving him for her father's house in Bethlehem in Judah; and she stayed there a full four months.³ Then her husband set out, with an attendant and a pair of donkeys, and went after her to woo her and to win her back. She admitted him into her father's house; and when the girl's father saw him, he received him warmly.⁴ His father-in-law, the girl's father, pressed him, and he stayed with him three days; they ate and drank and lodged there.⁵ Early in the morning of the fourth day, he started to leave; but the girl's father said to his son-in-law, "Eat something to give you strength, then you can leave."⁶ So the two of them sat down and they feasted together. Then the girl's father said to the man, "Won't you stay overnight and enjoy yourself?"⁷ The man started to leave, but his father-in-law kept urging him until he turned back and spent the night there.⁸ Early in the morning of the fifth day, he was about to leave, when the girl's father said, "Come, have a bite." The two of them ate, dawdling until past noon.⁹ Then the man, his concubine, and his attendant started to leave. His father-in-law, the girl's father, said to him, "Look, the day is waning toward evening; do stop for the night. See, the named places and what occurred there the author strongly hints his preference for David from Bethlehem over Saul from Gibeah. Even though the story is framed by the motto "in those days there was no king in Israel" (19.1; 21.25), it seems doubtful that this was intended to concretize anarchy. The story depicts a unified society, sensitive to problems of ethics and serving the LORD. It therefore appears that by using the motto the episode was appended to the book of Judges as an anticipatory hint to the book of Samuel, preparing specifically for the disappointment from Saul of Gibeah and the hope from Bethlehem. The story includes numerous allusions to stories from the Torah and from the early prophets. It likewise raises many strange questions which have no solution (see the commentary)—suggesting that its composition was not completed. Finally, it contains several echoes to the beginning of Judges (see 20.18 and 1.1–2; 21.24 and 2.6), using the literary device of an inclusio to frame the book and bring it to a close.

19.1–30: Between two cities. A concubine from the hill country of Ephraim left her husband and returned to her father's home in Bethlehem in Judah. Her husband came to take her back and enjoyed outstanding hospitality. On the way home they stopped to sleep in Gibeah, where the woman was raped by the townspeople until she died. The husband conveyed this terrible news to all the tribes of Israel. There are many points of similarity between this incident and the earlier story of Sodom (Gen. ch 19); and Gibeah, Saul's city, is thus portrayed as a wicked Sodom. 1: Concubine, a woman in a lower legal status than a wife. 3–9: The repeated entreaties of the father-in-law, the focus upon the feasts and staying overnight, and the emphasis that the hospitality continued for five days—all these emphasize the generous hospitality offered in Bethlehem in Judah.

a Heb. מֹשֶׁה with v suspended, indicating an earlier reading "Moses"; cf. Exod. 2.22.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Lit. "played the harlot."

31: This v. does not fit the one that precedes it. Shiloh was destroyed in the days of Samuel (1 Sam. chs 4–5), more than 300 years before the Assyrian invasion. It seems that this v. is an editorial addition, introduced to connect the story with the book of Samuel, which begins with the temple of Shiloh (1 Sam. ch 1). The mention of Kirjath-jearim in v. 12 also connects Judges to Samuel (see 1 Sam. 7.1–2).

Chs 19–21: The happenings with Gibeah and Benjamin. This account concerns a brutal rape in the town of Gibeah, following which all the tribes of Israel set out to punish those responsible. The tribe of Benjamin covered for the townspeople, and as a result a war broke out and Benjamin was nearly decimated. After the war, the other tribes arranged for the surviving Benjaminites to marry women from Jabesh-gilead and Shiloh. A distinctive feature of this episode is the anonymity of the figures involved and the focus upon place names. Gibeah, which fails to provide hospitality, is contrasted with the exemplary hospitality of Bethlehem in Judah. Through the day is declining; spend the night here and enjoy yourself. You can start early tomorrow on your journey and head for home."

¹⁰But the man refused to stay for the night. He set out and traveled as far as the vicinity of Jebus—that is, Jerusalem; he had with him a pair of laden donkeys, and his concubine ^awas with him.^a ¹¹Since they were close to Jebus, and the day was very far spent, the attendant said to his master, "Let us turn aside to this town of the Jebusites and spend the night in it." ¹²But his master said to him, "We will not turn aside to a town of aliens who are not of Israel, but will continue to Gibeah. ¹³Come," he said to his attendant, "let us approach one of those places and spend the night either in Gibeah or in Ramah." ¹⁴So they traveled on, and the sun set when they were near Gibeah of Benjamin.

¹⁵They turned off there and went in to spend the night in Gibeah. He went and sat down in the town square, but nobody took them indoors to spend the night. ¹⁶In the evening, an old man came along from his property ^boutside the town.^b (This man hailed from the hill country of Ephraim and resided at Gibeah, where the townspeople were Benjaminites.) ¹⁷He happened to see the wayfarer in the town square. "Where," the old man inquired, "are you going to, and where do you come from?" ¹⁸He replied, "We are traveling from Bethlehem in Judah to the other end of the hill country of Ephraim. That is where I live. I made a journey to Bethlehem of Judah, and now I am on my way ^cto the House of the LORD,^c and nobody has taken me indoors. ¹⁹We have both bruised straw and feed for our donkeys, and bread and wine for me and your handmaid,^d and for the attendant ^ewith your servants.^e We lack nothing." ²⁰"Rest easy," said the old man. "Let me take care of all your needs. Do not on any account spend the night in the square." ²¹And he took him into his house. He mixed fodder for the donkeys; then they bathed their feet and ate and drank.

²²While they were enjoying themselves, the men of the town, a depraved lot, had gathered about the house and were pounding on the door. They called to the aged owner of the house, "Bring out the man who has come into your house, so that we can be intimate with him."

10: There is no external corroboration that Jebus was the previous name of Jerusalem. The name Jerusalem is known from the beginning of the second millennium BCE. 12: According to 2 Sam. ch 5, Jerusalem was conquered only in the days of David, so that during the period of the judges it was a foreign city. It is mentioned here to emphasize the lack of expectations from an alien city as opposed to the Israelite city of Gibeah. 13: The mention of Ramah, located 10 km (6 miles) north of Jerusalem, alludes to Samuel, who anointed Saul and David. The mention of these specific cities suggests that they avoid the good cities, associated with David and Samuel, and choose the evil city associated with Saul. 14-21: The man who hosted the Levite and his company in his house was not from Gibeah but a stranger from the hill country of Ephraim. The mention of this location helps to tie this story to the previous one (18.2, 12, 13). Similarly, in the episode of Sodom it was the stranger Lot who provided hospitality to the strangers (Gen. 19.2-3). 22-26: The violence of the people of Gibeah is reminiscent of the Sodomites: Both try to break into the host's house and want to sodomize the guests. But while in Sodom the guests were angels, here they were ordinary human beings; hence the different result. The host protected the Levite, offering his own virgin daughter and the concubine. At the end the Levite gave them his concubine, whom they abused all night long, until in the morning she was found dead at the threshold of the house. This description entails many strange features, indicating its relation to the story of Sodom, and on the other hand its incomplete editing. It is strange that the host offers them the concubine, who was a guest. It is strange that the people of Gibeah were satisfied with the concubine and did not insist upon receiving the Levite or the virgin daughter. It is also strange that once the woman fell at the entrance to the house and her hands were on a-a Emendation yields "and his attendant."

b-b Lit. "in the field."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "to my home"; cf. v. 29.

d I.e., the concubine.

e-e I.e., "with us."

²³The owner of the house went out and said to them, "Please, my friends, do not commit such a wrong. Since this man has entered my house, do not perpetrate this outrage. ²⁴Look, here is my virgin daughter, and his concubine. Let me bring them out to you. Have your pleasure of them, do what you like with them; but don't do that outrageous thing to this man." ²⁵But the men would not listen to him, so the man seized his concubine and pushed her out to them. They raped her and abused her all night long until morning; and they let her go when dawn broke.

²⁶Toward morning the woman came back; and as it was growing light, she collapsed at the entrance of the man's house where her husband was. ²⁷When her husband arose in the morning, he opened the doors of the house and went out to continue his journey; and there was the woman, his concubine, lying at the entrance of the house, with her hands on the threshold. ²⁸"Get up," he said to her, "let us go." But there was no reply. So the man placed her on the donkey and set out for home. ²⁹When he came home, he picked up a knife, and took hold of his concubine and cut her up limb by limb into twelve parts. He sent them throughout the territory of Israel. ³⁰And everyone who saw it cried out, "Never has such a thing happened or been seen from the day the Israelites came out of the land of Egypt to this day! Put your mind to this; take counsel and decide."

20 Thereupon all the Israelites—from Dan to Beersheba and [from] the land of Gilead—marched forth, and the community assembled to a man before the LORD at Mizpah. ²All the leaders of the people [and] all the tribes of Israel presented themselves in the assembly of God's people, 400,000 fighting men on foot.—³The Benjaminites heard that the Israelites had come up to Mizpah.^a—The Israelites said, "Tell us, how did this evil thing happen?" ⁴And the Levite, the husband of the murdered woman, replied, "My concubine and I came to Gibeah of Benjamin to spend the night. ⁵The citizens of Gibeah set out to harm me. They gathered against me around the house in the night; they meant to kill me, and they ravished my concubine until she died. ⁶So I took hold of my concubine and I cut her in pieces and sent them through every part of Israel's territory. For an outrageous act of depravity had been committed in Israel. ⁷Now you are all Israelites; produce a plan of action here and now!"

⁸Then all the people rose, as one man, and declared,

a This sentence is continued at v. 14 below.

the threshold no one heard her; were they asleep? 23: Outrage, a strong term, used in the context of sexual transgressions (see Gen. 34.7; Deut. 22.21; etc.). 25: The numerous descriptions of time ("all night," "long until morning," "when dawn broke") emphasize the brutality. 27: The Levite's behavior was strange as well. He prepares to leave as though nothing had happened, and upon seeing the concubine's body, he calls her to get up and go. 29: The cutting of the body and the sending of its pieces are also strange. It is meant to recall Saul who divided a pair of cattle (1 Sam. 11.7), but there the purpose is clear: to dramatize what Saul would do to the cattle of those who refused to join him.

20.1–48: The war against Benjamin. Benjamin's refusal to turn over those who were guilty in Gibeah led to a bloody war. On the first two days Israel was defeated, for reasons that are not clear. On the third day they overpowered Benjamin, leaving only 600 people. This description raises problems to which there is no solution, and also relies upon the well-known story of Israel's war against Ai (Josh. chs 7–8). 1: There is no other unification of this type throughout the book of Judges; this description thus prepares the reader for the establishment of the monarchy in the beginning of the book of Samuel, which follows. 2: The number 400,000 is exaggerated. 3: It is strange that the examination of the Levite is only performed once the army had been mustered. 4–11: The story of the Levite is brief and not entirely truthful; nevertheless, the Israelite side does not feel a need to investigate, but adopts a decision to go to war. 9: According to lot: The casting of lots determines when to go to war and which of the tribes will go first (v. 18). 10: Ten percent were responsible for the supplies to the combatants. 11–13: The men of Israel were interested in punishing only the scoundrels from Gibeah, but the tribe of Benjamin did not

"We will not go back to our homes, we will not enter our houses! ⁹But this is what we will do to Gibeah: [we will wage war] against it according to lot. ¹⁰We will take from all the tribes of Israel ten men to the hundred, a hundred to the thousand, and a thousand to the ten thousand to supply provisions for the troops—to prepare for their going to Geba in Benjamin^a for all the outrage it has committed in Israel." ¹¹So all the men of Israel, united as one man, massed against the town. ¹²And the tribes of Israel sent men through the whole tribe^b of Benjamin, saying, "What is this evil thing that has happened among you? ¹³Come, hand over those scoundrels in Gibeah so that we may put them to death and stamp out the evil from Israel." But the Benjaminites would not yield to the demand of their fellow Israelites.

¹⁴So the Benjaminites gathered from their towns to Gibeah in order to take the field against the Israelites. ¹⁵On that day the Benjaminites mustered from the towns 26,000 fighting men, mustered apart from the inhabitants of Gibeah; 700 picked men ¹⁶of all this force—700 picked men—were left-handed. Every one of them could sling a stone at a hair and not miss. ¹⁷The men of Israel other than Benjamin mustered 400,000 fighting men, warriors to a man. ¹⁸They proceeded to Bethel and inquired of God; the Israelites asked, "Who of us shall advance first to fight the Benjaminites?" And the LORD replied, "Judah first." ¹⁹So the Israelites arose in the morning and encamped against Gibeah.

²⁰The men of Israel took the field against the Benjaminites; the men of Israel drew up in battle order against them at Gibeah. ²¹But the Benjaminites issued from Gibeah, and that day they struck down 22,000 men of Israel.

²²Now the army—the men of Israel—rallied and again drew up in battle order at the same place as they had on the first day. ²³For the Israelites had gone up and wept before the LORD until evening. They had inquired of the LORD, "Shall we again join battle with our kinsmen the Benjaminites?" And the LORD had replied, "March against them." ²⁴The Israelites advanced against the Benjaminites on the second day. ²⁵But the Benjaminites came out from Gibeah against them on the second day and struck down 18,000 more of the Israelites, all of them fighting men.

²⁶Then all the Israelites, all the army, went up and came to Bethel and they sat there, weeping before the LORD.

agree to turn them over, preferring to fight. 15–17: The number of combatants from Benjamin is problematic. There is a conflict between the number mentioned here (26,700 fighters) and the number in v. 35 (25,100, with 600 surviving), as well as with vv. 44–47 (25,000, with 600 left). 16: Left-handed, see 3.15. On a group of chosen people from Benjamin who used both hands, see 1 Chron. 12.2. 17: The number 400,000 seems to include the tenth appointed over the supplies. 18: Judah first: This seems to have been introduced under the influence of the beginning of the book (1.1–2). 19–25: It would seem that v. 22 ought to appear after v. 23. In the first two battles Israel acted after asking the LORD; nevertheless the Benjaminite warriors killed 40,000 of them. 26–28: The army of Israel went up a third time to Bethel, where the Ark of God was at that time and where Phinehas son of Eleazar son of Aaron, third generation from the exodus, served as priest. This connects the end of Judges to the end of Joshua (Josh. 24.33), while much of the rest of the story connects it to the following book of Samuel. The army fasted, offered burnt offerings, and inquired of the LORD. God promised that this time He would give Benjamin into their hands.

a-a Emendation yields "for those who go to requite Gibeah."

b Heb. plural.

c Meaning of parts of vv. 15 and 16 uncertain.

They fasted that day until evening, and presented burnt offerings and offerings of well-being to the LORD. ²⁷The Israelites inquired of the LORD (for the Ark of God's Covenant was there in those days, ²⁸and Phinehas son of Eleazar son of Aaron the priest ministered before Him in those days), "Shall we again take the field against our kinsmen the Benjaminites, or shall we not?" The LORD answered, "Go up, for tomorrow I will deliver them into your hands."

²⁹Israel put men in ambush against Gibeah on all sides. ³⁰And on the third day, the Israelites went up against the Benjaminites, as before, and engaged them in battle at Gibeah. ³¹The Benjaminites dashed out to meet the army and were drawn away from the town onto the roads, of which one runs to Bethel and the other to Gibeah. As before, they started out by striking some of the men dead in the open field, about 30 men of Israel.

³²The Benjaminites thought, "They are being routed before us as previously." But the Israelites had planned: "We will take to flight and draw them away from the town to the roads." ³³And while the main body of the Israelites had moved away from their positions and had drawn up in battle order at Baal-tamar, the Israelite ambush was rushing out from its position at Maareh-geba.^a ³⁴Thus 10,000 picked men of all Israel came to a point south of^b Gibeah, and the battle was furious. Before they realized that disaster was approaching, ³⁵the LORD routed the Benjaminites before Israel. That day the Israelites slew 25,100 men of Benjamin, all of them fighting men. ³⁶Then the Benjaminites realized that they were routed.^c Now the Israelites had yielded ground to the Benjaminites, for they relied on the ambush which they had laid against Gibeah. ³⁷One ambush quickly deployed against Gibeah, and the other ambush advanced and put the whole town to the sword.

³⁸A time had been agreed upon by the Israelite men with those in ambush: When a huge column of smoke was sent up from the town, ³⁹the Israelite men were to turn about in battle. Benjamin had begun by striking dead a Emendation yields "west of Gibeah."

b So many Heb. mss. and Targum; most mss. and the editions read "opposite."

c This sentence is continued by v. 45.

29–47: According to most scholars this story has been expanded and reworked here. Abrahanel already wrote: "The verses in this narrative seem to be repeated and inconsistent, and the interpreters did not solve them properly." The material here seems to be a combination of two versions, whose reworking into a single text was not completely successful. Underlying both versions is a combined strategy trick of ambush and decoy, known from Joshua's battle with Ai (Josh. chs 7–8). The function of the ambush was to besiege the city and set fire to it after tempting its inhabitants to chase an Israelite decoy force that would stage a retreat. Once the pursuers saw their city going up in flames, they would lose their fighting spirit, and the pursued would become pursuers. Thus the Benjaminites would find themselves caught between the ambush and the new pursuers, while the city and its protectors were destroyed. While the first version refers to the task of the main Israelite force which encamped at Baal-tamar and was counted neither with the decoy force nor with the ambush, the second version relates to the agreed signal between the decoy force and the ambush. 29: According to vv. 33–34 the main force was east of Gibeah, the ambush west of the city, while the decoy force was opposite the city. 30: This refers to the decoy force alone; see v. 34. 31: To Gibeah: It is preferable to read "to Geba," located east of Gibeah. The choice of two directions of flight divides the pursuing force. About 30 men: The small number of the fallen, in comparison to the first two wars, is evidently influenced by the story of Ai (Josh. 7.5). 33: The main Israelite force had been mustered before in Baal-tamar, whose location has not been identified. 34: Before they realized, i.e., before the Benjaminites realized. 35: See the interpretation of vv. 15–17. 36b: The second version begins here. It emphasizes that the Israelite army, who had relied upon the ambush, placed to the west of Gibeah, waited for a sign to enter into battle, giving the decoy time to lead the inhabitants of Gibeah away from their city. 37: The English translation divides the ambush into two parts, which is unnecessary. It should read: "The ambush quickly deployed against Gibeah and advanced . . ." 38–39a: The Israelite decoy force and the ambush agreed upon a about 30 Israelite men, and they thought, "They are being routed before us as in the previous fighting."⁴⁰ But when the column, the pillar of smoke, began to rise from the city, the Benjaminites looked behind them, and there was the whole town going up in smoke to the sky!⁴¹ And now the Israelites turned about, and the men of Benjamin were thrown into panic, for they realized that disaster had overtaken them.⁴² They retreated before the men of Israel along the road to the wilderness, where the fighting caught up with them; meanwhile those "from the towns" were massacring them in it.⁴³ They encircled the Benjaminites, pursued them, and trod them down [from] Menuhah to a point opposite Gibeah on the east.⁴⁴ That day 18,000 men of Benjamin fell, all of them brave men.⁴⁵ They turned and fled to the wilderness, to the Rock of Rimmon; but [the Israelites] picked off another 5,000 on the roads and, continuing in hot pursuit of them up to Gidom, they slew 2,000 more.⁴⁶ Thus the total number of Benjaminites who fell that day came to 25,000 fighting men, all of them brave.⁴⁷ But 600 men turned and fled to sign—a great cloud of smoke rising from the city—to determine when the pursued would turn into pursuers. 39b: Cf. this clause to vv. 31–32. 41: The Israelites turned about, the decoy force. 42: The Benjaminites attempted to escape from the pincer motion of the ambush and the decoy force by fleeing in the direction of the desert, but the war overtook them there as well. From the towns: Those who fled from the town of Gibeah were killed in the middle. 43: The v. is in the form of a (difficult) poem, which may be a remnant of an epic poem in whose center is the victory over Benjamin. Israel surrounded Benjamin and pursued them from a settlement called Nuhah (see 1 Chron. ch 8) until close to Gibeah. 45–47: Here, the total number of those fallen from Benjamin was 25,000. Six hundred men found shelter in the Rock of Rimmon on the edge of the desert east of Bethel, where they remained for four months.

- a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "in the town" (i.e., Gibeah).
- b Meaning of verse uncertain.

Sites mentioned in connection with the Benjaminite War

the wilderness, to the Rock of Rimmon; they remained at the Rock of Rimmon four months. ⁴⁸The men of Israel, meanwhile, turned back to the rest of the Benjaminites and put them to the sword—towns, people, cattle—everything that remained. Finally, they set fire to all the towns that were left.

21 Now the men of Israel had taken an oath at Mizpah: “None of us will give his daughter in marriage to a Benjaminite.”

²The people came to Bethel and sat there before God until evening. They wailed and wept bitterly, ³and they said, “O LORD God of Israel, why has this happened in Israel, that one tribe must now be missing from Israel?” ⁴Early the next day, the people built an altar there, and they brought burnt offerings and offerings of well-being.

⁵The Israelites asked, “Is there anyone from all the tribes of Israel who failed to come up to the assembly before the LORD?” For a solemn oath had been taken concerning anyone who did not go up to the LORD at Mizpah: “He shall be put to death.” ⁶The Israelites now relented toward their kinsmen the Benjaminites, and they said, “This day one tribe has been cut off from Israel! ⁷What can we do to provide wives for those who are left, seeing that we have sworn by the LORD not to give any of our daughters to them in marriage?”

⁸They inquired, “Is there anyone from the tribes of Israel who did not go up to the LORD at Mizpah?” Now no one from Jabesh-gilead had come to the camp, to the assembly. ⁹For, when the roll of the troops was taken, not one of the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead was present. ¹⁰So the assemblage dispatched 12,000 of the warriors, instructing them as follows: “Go and put the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead to the sword, women and children included. ¹¹This is what you are to do: Proscribe every man, and every woman who has known a man carnally.” ¹²They found among the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead 400 maidens who had not known a man carnally; and they brought them to the camp at Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan.^a

¹³Then the whole community sent word to the Benjaminites who were at the Rock of Rimmon, and offered them terms of peace. ¹⁴Thereupon the Benjaminites returned, and they gave them the girls who had been spared from the women of Jabesh-gilead. ^bBut there were not enough of them.^b a I.e., west of the Jordan, while Jabesh-gilead is east of the Jordan.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

48: The army of Israel treated Benjamin like a proscribed Canaanite city (see Deut. 20.16–18), destroying its population, property, and cities.

21.1–14: The war against Jabesh-gilead. The Israelite army had taken an oath at Mizpah (20.1, 3) not to marry their daughters to the Benjaminites and to put to death those who did not join the battle. In order to rehabilitate the remnants of Benjamin, it was necessary to find them wives. Investigation revealed that Jabesh-gilead had not joined the war; therefore it was decided to smite its inhabitants apart from the virgins, and the result was leaving 400 maidens from Jabesh-gilead for those left from Benjamin. This story, which condemns Jabesh-gilead, relates to the story of Israel’s war against the Midianites at the time of the wanderings in the desert (Num. ch 31), which combines condemnation of Midian and taking their women captive. The story thus reflects negatively on Jabesh-gilead which, according to the traditions preserved in Samuel, was closely affiliated with Saul (1 Sam. 31.11–13; 2 Sam. 2.4–7; etc.). 1: From the sequel it follows that at the gathering in Mizpah at the beginning of the war the Israelites took another oath: to put to death those who did not join in the war effort (v. 5). 2: The people gathered at Bethel, which once again serves as a place for weeping (2.1–5; 20.23, 26). 5: The purpose of the inquiry was to find out who did not participate in the gathering at Mizpah and would be subject to the death penalty, but simultaneously exempt from the oath against giving their daughters to the Benjaminites. 9: Jabesh-gilead is located in the north of Gilead, but has not been precisely identified. 10–11: Use of the typical number 12,000, in which each 1,000 represents one tribe, as well as of the term woman who has known a man carnally, indicates the connection to Num. ch 31. 12: The maidens were brought to Shiloh and not to Mizpah or Bethel because of the ¹⁵Now the people had relented toward Benjamin, for the LORD had made a breach in the tribes of Israel. ¹⁶So the elders of the community asked, "What can we do about wives for those who are left, since the women of Benjamin have been killed off?" ¹⁷For they said, "There must be a saving remnant for Benjamin, that a tribe may not be blotted out of Israel; ¹⁸yet we cannot give them any of our daughters as wives," since the Israelites had taken an oath: "Cursed be anyone who gives a wife to Benjamin!"

¹⁹They said, "The annual feast of the LORD is now being held at Shiloh." (It lies north of Bethel, east of the highway that runs from Bethel to Shechem, and south of Lebonah.)

²⁰So they instructed the Benjaminites as follows: "Go and lie in wait in the vineyards. ²¹As soon as you see the girls of Shiloh coming out to join in the dances, come out from the vineyards; let each of you seize a wife from among the girls of Shiloh, and be off for the land of Benjamin. ²²And if their fathers or brothers come to us to complain, we shall say to them, "Be generous to them for our sake! We could not provide any of them with a wife on account of the war, and you would have incurred guilt if you yourselves had given them [wives].'"^a ²³The Benjaminites did so. They took to wife, from the dancers whom they carried off, as many as they themselves numbered. Then they went back to their own territory, and rebuilt their towns and settled in them. ²⁴Thereupon the Israelites dispersed, each to his own tribe and clan; everyone departed for his own territory.

²⁵In those days there was no king in Israel; everyone did as he pleased.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

sequel, which also takes place in Shiloh. 14: Returned: The surviving men from Benjamin returned from the Rock of Rimmon to their towns, but there were still 200 left without wives.

21.15–25: The abduction at Shiloh. In order to resolve the problem of the 200 additional Benjaminites who were left without wives, the elders of the community suggested that the others circumvent the oath by lying in wait in the vineyards of Shiloh to abduct from there the young women dancing at the feast of the LORD. The motif of stealing women on a festival day is known from Greek (Herodotus) and Roman (Livy) literature. The story connecting Benjamin with Shiloh prepares the ground for the decline of the town's status in the days of Eli and his sons according to the following book of Samuel.

15: The blow struck to the Benjaminites harmed the overall structure of the Israelite tribes. 19: The annual feast: It is not clear what feast this refers to. According to Josephus this was one of the three pilgrimage festivals, while a rabbinic tradition knows of a similar festival commemorated on the 15th of Av (the fifth month, in the mid-summer) or the Day of Atonement (m. Ta'an. 4.8). It may simply refer to a local grape-harvest festival similar to the vintage festival in Shechem (9.27). The detailed geographical description of Shiloh's location is unusual in the Bible. This may be an addition from the period when Shiloh, which is identified with Khirbet Sailun, north of Bethel, was destroyed. 24: Once a solution had been found, the Israelites left Bethel and returned to their own territories. 25: The book concludes with the motto that expresses disappointment in the judges and hope in the monarchy. Given the negative associations in the story with Saul, it is the Davidic monarchy to which the book looks forward.

I Samuel

Name and Contents

THE BOOKS OF SAMUEL were originally one book. In the Septuagint it was divided into two, owing to its length, and the Christian tradition followed this division. In Hebrew Bibles used by the Jewish community, this division was not made before the 15th century, under the influence of the Vulgate. Following a pattern found in some other biblical books, which end with the death of a main character, the division in the book of Samuel was made at the point of Saul's death. Thus, 1 Samuel recounts the periods of Eli (chs 1–4), Samuel (chs 5–12), and Saul (chs 13–31); 2 Samuel tells of the reign of David. The work was named after the prophet Samuel (b. B. Bat. 14b), because the story of his birth opens the book and he is the principal figure in the first part. He greatly influenced events during his life and even after his death, since he anointed the first two kings, whose actions and fate occupy the major part of the book of Samuel.

The book of Samuel consists chiefly of narratives, which are supplemented with a few songs, lists, and brief notices. Its central concern is with the personal life of the leaders. Their aspirations, feelings, and passions are depicted realistically, displaying negative qualities as well as positive ones. Through the events of their lives the main ideas of the book are expressed. As a rule, human beings, not God, occupy the central stage, their lot being determined by their conduct. God acts behind the scenes, usually refraining from direct, supernatural intervention, shaping individual destinies through the natural course of events.

Samuel, the only person in the Bible whose biography begins before his birth and extends after his death, acted as both judge and prophet. Saul, the first king, who led Israel after Samuel, is depicted in most of the book as an unstable character. When he tries to free himself from Samuel's stern tutelage, a break ensues between the two men, and Saul is rejected in favor of David—the focal figure in both books. David, as opposed to Saul, is generally portrayed in a favorable light. His personality is many-faceted and richer than any other figure in the Bible. He is a strong leader, successful in war and peace, a gifted musician and poet, deeply religious, endowed with a strong sense of justice, respectful and loyal towards Saul. Only in his dealings with his children does he appear weak. He sins, abusing his power, but repents wholeheartedly. At the peak of his reign he receives God's promise that his dynasty will reign forever.

Background

THE BOOK OF SAMUEL describes the transition from the rule of the judges to the monarchic system of government. It tells of the foundation of the monarchy and its early struggles, paying special attention to questions concerning the rights, duties, and restrictions of the kings. It depicts how, through clashes between King Saul and the prophet Samuel, and between King David and the prophet Nathan, a type of kingship emerged that radically differed from the absolute kingship prevalent in the ancient Near East. According to the Bible, kings in Israel were not allowed to do whatever they fancied. They were subject to a higher power and to the rule of law and morality, upheld by the prophets.

The book also deals with the transfer of government from the old leaders to the new. Though hereditary succession was not unknown (see esp. Judg. chs 6–9), the three leaders Eli, Samuel, and Saul were not succeeded by their sons, but by others—each of whom had initially been under the patronage of his predecessor. The transfer was effected smoothly in the case of Eli and Samuel, with difficulty in the case of Samuel and Saul, and with bitter conflict in the case of Saul and David, culminating in Saul's recurring attempts to kill David.

Literary Form

THE BOOK OF SAMUEL is a work of literary art and is best read as such. Though only partly visible in translation, the literary and stylistic features are unmistakable, bearing witness to the book's artistry. The narratives excel in dramatic force and human appeal. Almost all contain a large amount of direct speech, which gives them their vivid character. Some are made up almost exclusively of direct speech; for instance, the narrative of Saul, who went to look for his father's asses and was anointed king of Israel (9.1–10.16). Conversations are usually brief, including only what is essential for the development of the plot. The same holds true for descriptions. Unlike conversations, however, descriptions of people, places, and objects are relatively rare and in many narratives wholly absent. The literary features play an important role in expressing or highlighting the narratives' ideas and values and impressing them on the readers. The book's literary character has no bearing on the question of its historical veracity, since both fact and fiction may be cast in an aesthetic mold. The book, however, should not be understood as a straightforward history of the early monarchic period.

Text

IN THE TRADITIONAL HEBREW TEXT of Samuel a considerable number of corruptions are found, generally resulting from scribal errors. For instance, 13.1 reads "Saul was a year old when he became king and he reigned over Israel two years." It is clear that a number was accidentally omitted before the word "year" ("a" is not expressed in Heb). The number “two” at the end of the sentence is also implausible because it seems quite impossible to accommodate all the events of Saul’s kingship within a span of two years (see, e.g., 27.7). In some cases it is possible to correct the Masoretic Text of Samuel with the help of alternative texts. Parallel passages to Samuel, containing partly divergent readings, are found in the book of Psalms and the book of Chronicles. Among the Dead Sea Scrolls fragments of four different manuscripts of Samuel have been discovered, which contain pre-Masoretic texts. The Septuagint and other ancient translations also testify to different readings. In some cases even Antiquities of the Jews by Josephus, whose readings are often similar to those of the Septuagint and one of the Dead Sea manuscripts, may be helpful. The following annotations will be based on the Hebrew Masoretic Text and the NJPS translation, but whenever the text seems corrupt, attention will be paid to alternative readings.

Composition

SEVERAL STORIES IN THE BOOK OF SAMUEL occur twice, though in different versions. Cases in point include the stories about the election of Saul (9.15–10.9; 10.20–24), his rejection by Samuel (13.8–14; 15.9–33), David’s first meeting with Saul (16.14–23; 17.31–37, 55–58), the killing of Goliath (in one case by David, in the other by Elhanan, 17.40–51; 2 Sam. 21.19), Saul’s attempt to kill David by throwing his spear at him (18.10–11; 19.9–10), David’s escape from Saul (19.11–12; 20.1–21.1), his taking refuge with Achish (21.11–16; 27.1–28.2; 29.1–11), and his refusal to kill Saul when he had the opportunity to do so (24.1–22; 26.1–25). The origin of the saying, “Is Saul too among the prophets?” is explained twice and in different ways (10.10–12; 19.18–24), and there are two divergent accounts of Saul’s death (31.1–7; 2 Sam. 1.3–10).

Different versions of the same story, which are often met with in folk tales, arose, in all likelihood, when these stories were transmitted orally, before they were written down. The double, and sometimes contradictory, stories were probably included in the book of Samuel because they were not seen as different versions of the same story, but as accounts of different events, or because of the light they shed on the protagonists. As for contradictions, these were looked at in a different way from today: Consistency was not considered essential. Besides, the contradictions could always be resolved in one way or another (see, for instance, how the two differing accounts of the killing of Goliath are reconciled in 1 Chron. 20.5).

Jewish sources ascribe the composition of the book of Samuel to Samuel himself (b. B. Bat. 14b). But since his death is already recorded in ch 25, the prophets Gad and Nathan, who are mentioned together with Samuel as the authors of a history of David (1 Chron. 29.29), are said to have finished the work (b. B. Bat. 15a). In the book of Samuel itself one source is mentioned: the Book of Jashar, from which David’s elegy for Saul and Jonathan was taken (2 Sam. 1.18).

Biblical scholarship has posited a plurality of sources. In this respect three main theories have been put forward. First, the book of Samuel is composed of two or three parallel and continuous narrative strands, which run through the whole length of the book (this view was current in the 19th and the beginning of the 20th centuries). Second, the book of Samuel consists of many single, independent narratives. Third, the book of Samuel is a compilation of large thematic units—such as the Ark narrative, the Saul cycle, the history of David's rise, the so-called succession narrative (which continues into the first chapters of Kings)—which are not parallel, but arranged one after the other. Most scholars hold that the book of Samuel was also subjected to a Deuteronomistic redaction (that is, based on the tenets of the book of Deuteronomy), but it is generally agreed that this redaction was much slighter than in the book of Judges or the book of Kings. Some scholars assume a prophetic stratum between the older narrative material and the Deuteronomistic redaction. In any case, many hands have contributed to the formation of the book of Samuel, as is also borne out by the differences in style and narrative method—yet the different elements have generally been integrated into one unified whole.

In its final form the book of Samuel, and particularly the figures of David and Saul, have had a great impact on Jewish and Western thought and art. Many compositions—religious, moral, and political—as well as innumerable works of poetry, drama, narrative prose, painting, sculpture, and music have been influenced by them, and they continue to be a source of inspiration even today.

[SHIMON BAR-EFRAT]

1 There was a man from ^aRamathaim of the Zuphites,^a in the hill country of Ephraim, whose name was Elkanah son of Jeroham son of Elihu son of Tohu son of Zuph, an Ephraimite. ²He had two wives, one named Hannah and the other Peninnah; Peninnah had children, but Hannah was childless. ³This man used to go up from his town every year to worship and to offer sacrifice to the LORD of Hosts at Shiloh.—Hophni and Phinehas, the two sons of Eli, were priests of the LORD there.

⁴One such day, Elkanah offered a sacrifice. He used to give portions to his wife Peninnah and to all her sons and daughters; ⁵but to Hannah he would give one portion ^bonly—though ^bHannah was his favorite—for the LORD had closed her womb. ⁶Moreover, her rival, to make her miserable, would taunt her that the LORD had closed her sition, which gives details about the persons, the background, and relevant customs, and three parts. The first part takes place at Shiloh, the second at Ramah, and the third at Shiloh again; a final section, which rounds off the story, is embedded within the next narrative, 2.18–21. 1: The list of Elkanah's ancestors shows that he was of distinguished lineage. 2: Bigamy was allowed and not uncommon. 3: The Ark of the LORD was housed in the sanctuary at Shiloh. The information concerning the worship every year at Shiloh links the beginning of the book of Samuel with the end of the book of Judges, where a feast of God is mentioned, celebrated every year at Shiloh (Judg. 21.19). Though not figuring in the present story, the two sons of Eli are mentioned because the stories about Samuel are intertwined with those about Eli and his sons (see ch 2). 5: One portion only—though: The Heb may also be interpreted, "one twofold portion—for" (cf. the fivefold portion Joseph gave to Benjamin, Gen. 43.34); this interpretation better explains Peninnah's reaction. 6: Fertility is understood throughout the a-a Heb. "Ramathaim-zophim." In 1.19, 2.11, 7.17, 15.34, 19.18, etc., the town is called Ramah; and 9.5 ff. shows that it was in the district of Zuph.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

1.1–2.11a: The vow. The book of Samuel begins with the story of the remarkable birth of Samuel. The story focuses on Samuel's mother, who was barren and so desperate for a child that she vowed to part from it and dedicate it to God, if her prayer for a son were answered. The motif of formerly barren women who give birth to national leaders or ancestors is well attested in the Bible (Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, Samson's mother; see Gen. 21.1–8; 25.19–26; 30.1–2, 22–24; Judg. 13.2–3, 24), the exceptional birth hinting at divine concern and purpose for the child. The narrative consists of an expo-womb. ^{7a}This happened ^a year after year: Every time she went up to the House of the LORD, the other would taunt her, so that she wept and would not eat. ⁸Her husband Elkanah said to her, "Hannah, why are you crying and why aren't you eating? Why are you so sad? Am I not more devoted to you than ten sons?"

⁹After they had eaten and drunk at Shiloh, Hannah rose. ^b—The priest Eli was sitting on the seat near the doorpost of the temple of the LORD.—¹⁰In her wretchedness, she prayed to the LORD, weeping all the while. ¹¹And she made this vow: "O LORD of Hosts, if You will look upon the suffering of Your maidservant and will remember me and not forget Your maidservant, and if You will grant Your maidservant a male child, I will dedicate him to the LORD for all the days of his life; and no razor shall ever touch his head."

¹²As she kept on praying before the LORD, Eli watched her mouth. ¹³Now Hannah was praying in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice could not be heard. So Eli thought she was drunk. ¹⁴Eli said to her, "How long will you make a drunken spectacle of yourself? 'Sober up!'" ^c¹⁵And Hannah replied, "Oh no, my lord! I am a very unhappy woman. I have drunk no wine or other strong drink, but I have been pouring out my heart to the LORD. ¹⁶Do not take your maidservant for a worthless woman; I have only been speaking all this time out of my great anguish and distress." ¹⁷"Then go in peace," said Eli, "and may the God of Israel grant you what you have asked of Him." ¹⁸She answered, "You are most kind to your handmaid." So the woman left, and she ate, and was no longer downcast. ¹⁹Early next morning they bowed low before the LORD, and they went back home to Ramah.

Elkanah knew ^dhis wife Hannah and the LORD remembered her. ²⁰Hannah conceived, and at the turn of the year bore a son. She named him Samuel, ^e meaning, "I asked the LORD for him." ²¹And when the man Elkanah and all his household were going up to offer to the LORD the annual sacrifice and his votive sacrifice, ²²Hannah did not go up. She said to her husband, "When the child is weaned, I will bring him. For when he has appeared before the LORD, he must remain there for good." ²³Her husband Elkanah said to her, "Do as you think best. Stay

Bible as a divine gift. Barrenness was considered a disgrace, causing great distress to the woman concerned (e.g., Gen. 30.1, 22-23).

7: Peninnah is the opposite of Hannah. Not only does Peninnah have many children, whereas Hannah has none, but Peninnah deliberately hurts her rival, while Hannah refrains from paying back, weeping in silence. 8: Am I not more devoted to you than ten sons, cf. Ruth 4.15. 9: Though Hannah does not eat, she waits until all have finished their meal. 11: The structure of Hannah's vow is typical of vows in the Bible: First a condition is stated, and this is followed by a commitment if the condition is fulfilled (cf. Gen.

28.20-22; Judg. 11.30-31). Here the vow is preceded by an invocation of God. Long hair was characteristic of Nazirites, who devoted themselves to God (Num. 6.5). The word "Nazirite" is actually used by the Septuagint in the present v. and by the Dead Sea manuscript 4QSam^a in v. 22. Samuel is also called a Nazirite in the postbiblical book of Sirach (46.13).

13: Silent prayer was uncommon.

19: They went back home: This phrase often serves to mark the end of a story or an episode (e.g., 2.11). The LORD remembered her: This is shown when Hannah's womb is opened (see v. 11), enabling her to conceive. 20: The verb "sha'al" (= ask) recurs in the narrative several times, more than is expressed in the translation (see also 2.20). 22: Weaning used to take place after several years; according to 2 Macc. 7.27 after three years. 24: One ephah, about 23 liters (21 quarts). 27: Hannah uses the same words as Eli did before (v. 17), to indicate to the priest that his blessing has materialized.

a-a Lit. "Thus he did."

b Septuagint adds "and stood before the LORD."

c-c Lit. "Remove your wine from you."

d Cf. note at Gen. 4.1.

e Connected with sha'ul me'el "asked of God"; cf. vv. 17, 27-28.

home until you have weaned him. May the LORD fulfill ^aHis word."^a So the woman stayed home and nursed her son until she weaned him.

²⁴When she had weaned him, she took him up with her, along with ^bthree bulls,^b one ephah of flour, and a jar of wine. And ^cthough the boy was still very young,^c she brought him to the House of the LORD at Shiloh. ²⁵After slaughtering the bull, they brought the boy to Eli. ²⁶She said, "Please, my lord! As you live, my lord, I am the woman who stood here beside you and prayed to the LORD. ²⁷It was this boy I prayed for; and the LORD has granted me what I asked of Him. ²⁸I, in turn, hereby lend^d him to the LORD. For as long as he lives he is lent to the LORD." And they^e bowed low there before the LORD.

2 And Hannah prayed:

My heart exults in the LORD;
^fI have triumphed^f through the LORD.
^gI gloat^g over my enemies;
 I rejoice in Your deliverance.

2 There is no holy one like the LORD,
 Truly, there is none beside You;
 There is no rock like our God.

3 Talk no more with lofty pride,
 Let no arrogance cross your lips!
 For the LORD is an all-knowing God;
 By Him actions are measured.

4 The bows of the mighty are broken,
 And the faltering are girded with strength.
 5 Men once sated must hire out for bread;
 Men once hungry hunger no more.
 While the barren woman bears seven,
 The mother of many is forlorn.

6 The LORD deals death and gives life,
 Casts down into Sheol and raises up.

a-a Septuagint and 4QSam^a (a Samuel fragment from Qumran) read "the utterance of your mouth." The translators express their thanks b Professor Frank M. Cross, Jr., for graciously making available to them copies of his unpublished Samuel fragments.

b-b Septuagint and 4QSam^a read "a three-year-old [cf. Gen. 15.9] bull and bread": cf. v. 25.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d From the same root as that of the verb rendered "asked for" in v. 20.

e Heb. "he"; cf. 2.11. A reading in the Talmud (Berakhot 61a) implies that Elkanah was there.

f-f Lit. "My horn is high." g-g Lit. "My mouth is wide."

2.1-10: Hannah's song, which is similar in style and content to certain psalms (cf. v. 8 with Ps. 113.7-8), expresses thanks and praise to God for a victory over an enemy. It fits neither Hannah's situation nor her personality. Moreover, a king is mentioned in v. 10, whereas at Hannah's time the monarchy had not yet been established in Israel. The song was put in Hannah's mouth because of v. 5, while the barren woman bears seven, and because of its general idea, that God often completely reverses the fortunes of human beings, in accordance with their conduct. The idea of reversal is underscored by the contrasts between or within the lines of the parallelisms in the central part of the song. 1: The horn (see translators' note f-f), a symbol of strength (Deut. 33.17), is mentioned in the Heb text both at the beginning and the end of the song, thus stressing the idea of triumph. 2: The second line prevents understanding the first and third lines as if other gods existed. 3: Here the enemies are addressed. For the thought that God is all-knowing and that He measures the actions of human beings (and pays them accordingly) see also Prov. 24.12, where the same Heb roots are used as here. 5: The number seven denotes multiplicity, and also has the connotation of perfection. 6-8a: The LORD is the cause of all changes in life. 6: Sheol, the place beneath the earth, where, according to biblical belief, all people go after death. Sheol differs from the "'olam haba'" (the next world), the belief in which developed in Judaism in the Second Temple period, because in Sheol there is no retribution and all its inhabitants are equal, without regard to their former status or behavior in life. Raising up from Sheol does not refer to resurrection from death—a later belief as well—but to deliverance from near death (see Ps. 30.3-4).

7 The LORD makes poor and makes rich;
 He casts down, He also lifts high.
 8 He raises the poor from the dust,
 Lifts up the needy from the dunghill,
 Setting them with nobles,
 Granting them seats of honor.
 For the pillars of the earth are the LORD'S;
 He has set the world upon them.
 9 He guards the steps of His faithful,
 But the wicked perish in darkness—
 For not by strength shall man prevail.

10 The foes of the LORD shall be shattered;
 He will thunder against them in the heavens.

8: Dust and dunghill are metaphorical for utter degradation. The earth was believed to be flat and resting upon pillars. 9: Not by strength, but by the LORD's providence. 10: The ends of the earth, all peoples, even the most remote ones. His anointed one (Heb "mashiah," from which comes the English word "messiah") denotes the king, since kings were anointed with oil. 11a: See 1.19 n.

2.11b-36: Ascent versus descent. Samuel's ascent is contrasted with the descent of the house of Eli, both processes taking place simultaneously at the sanctuary of

The activity of Samuel according to First Samuel

The LORD will judge the ends of the earth.
 He will give power to His king,
^aAnd triumph to^a His anointed one.

¹¹Then Elkanah^b [and Hannah] went home to Ramah; and the boy entered the service of the LORD under the priest Eli.

¹²Now Eli's sons were scoundrels; they paid no heed to the LORD. ¹³This is how the priests used to deal with the people: When anyone brought a sacrifice, the priest's boy would come along with a three-pronged fork while the meat was boiling, ¹⁴and he would thrust it into "the cauldron, or the kettle, or the great pot, or the small cooking-pot;" and whatever the fork brought up, the priest would take away ^don it.^d This was the practice at Shiloh with all the Israelites who came there. ¹⁵[But now] even before the suet was turned into smoke, the priest's boy would come and say to the man who was sacrificing, "Hand over some meat to roast for the priest; for he won't accept boiled meat from you, only raw." ¹⁶And if the man said to him, "Let them first turn the suet into smoke, and then take as much as you want," he would reply, "No, hand it over at once or I'll take it by force." ¹⁷The sin of the young men against the LORD was very great, for the men treated the LORD's offerings impiously.

¹⁸Samuel was engaged in the service of the LORD as an attendant, girded with a linen ephod. ¹⁹His mother would also make a little robe for him and bring it up to him every year, when she made the pilgrimage with her husband to offer the annual sacrifice. ²⁰Eli would bless Elkanah and his wife, and say, "May the LORD grant^e you offspring by this woman in place of the loan she made to the LORD." Then they would return home. ²¹For^f the LORD took note of Hannah; she conceived and bore three sons and two daughters. Young Samuel meanwhile grew up in the service of the LORD.

²²Now Eli was very old. When he heard all that his sons were doing to all Israel, and how they lay with the women who ^gperformed tasks^g at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, ²³he said to them, "Why do you do such things? I get evil reports about you from the people on all hands.

Shiloh. Most of the space is allotted to the house of Eli, so as to make it clear that leaders who abuse their office and exploit their people will not escape punishment. In the first part (vv. 12-17) the recurring sins of Eli's sons are described; the second part (vv. 22-25) tells of Eli's reprimands to them, which they ignore; and the third part (vv. 27-36) specifies the future punishment to the House of Eli. These parts alternate with short pieces of information about Samuel. 12: The names of Eli's sons were mentioned at 1.3. It is unusual for a biblical narrator to judge the characters explicitly; here he does so because of the graveness of their sins (see also v. 17). They paid no heed, lit. "they did not know." 13-14: These vv. can be interpreted as describing either an accepted, legitimate custom or sinful and greedy behavior (cf. Lev. 7.34; Deut. 18.3). 15-16: The priest's boy would demand (raw) meat even before the suet was sacrificed to the LORD. He would also threaten to use force. 18-21: The conclusion of the previous narrative (1.1-2.11a). An ephod is a garment worn by priests and fastened around the waist (see 22.18; 2 Sam. 6.14). 19: The little robe Hannah made every year for Samuel symbolizes her enduring love for him. 20: By this woman, excluding Peninnah. 22: And how they lay: The sin of lying with these women (cf. Exod. 38.8) is mentioned neither before in the narrative nor afterwards by the man of God; in the Dead Sea manuscript 4QSam^a and Septuagint this part of the verse does not occur. The Tent of Meeting was so called because God used to meet there with Israel (see Exod. 29.42).

a-a Lit. "And will raise the horn of."

b See note e at 1.28.

c-c These vessels have not been distinguished precisely.

d-d Targum and Septuagint add "for himself."

e 4QSam^a and Septuagint read "repay."

f 4QSam^a reads "And." g-g Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

24 Don't, my sons! It is no favorable report I hear the people of the LORD spreading about. 25 If a man sins against a man, the LORD may pardon^a him; but if a man offends against God, who can "obtain pardon" for him?" But they ignored their father's plea; for the LORD was resolved that they should die. 26 Young Samuel, meanwhile, grew in esteem and favor both with God and with men.

27 A man of God came to Eli and said to him, "Thus said the LORD: Lo, I revealed Myself to your father's house in Egypt when they were subject to the House of Pharaoh, 28 and I chose them from among all the tribes of Israel to be My priests—to ascend My altar, to burn incense, [and] to carry an ephod^b before Me—and I assigned to your father's house all offerings by fire of the Israelites. 29 Why, then, do you "maliciously trample upon the sacrifices and offerings that I have commanded?"^c You have honored your sons more than Me, feeding on the first portions of every offering of My people Israel.^d 30 Assuredly—declares the LORD, the God of Israel—I intended for you and your father's house to remain in My service forever. But now—declares the LORD—far be it from Me! For I honor those who honor Me, but those who spurn Me shall be dishonored. 31 A time is coming when I will break your power and that of your father's house, and there shall be no elder in your house. 32 You will gaze grudgingly^e at all the bounty that will be bestowed on Israel, but there shall never be an elder in your house. 33^a I shall not cut off all your offspring from My altar; [but,] to make your eyes pine and your spirit languish, all the increase in your house shall die as [ordinary] men."^a 34 And this shall be a sign for you: The fate of your two sons Hophni and Phinehas—they shall both die on the same day. 35 And I will raise up for Myself a faithful priest, who will act in accordance with My wishes and My purposes. I will build for him an enduring house, and he shall walk before My anointed evermore. 36 And all the survivors of your house shall come and bow low to him for the sake of a money fee and a loaf of bread, and shall say, 'Please, assign me to one of the priestly duties, that I may have a morsel of bread to eat.' "

23–25: Eli's rebuke is concerned with the reports the people spread about and the punishment threatening his sons rather than with their sins. The LORD was resolved that they should die, because they were confirmed in their sins (cf. God's hardening of Pharaoh's heart, Exod. 7:3–5).

26: Samuel's reputation with both God and men is contrasted with that of Eli's sons. 27–36: The prophecy about the downfall of the house of Eli contains three parts: the election of the house to the priesthood in the past; the abuse of its office in the present; the rejection of the house and the election of a new and faithful house in the future. The word "house," denoting family or dynasty, recurs ten times. It is not stated who will replace the house of Eli. 28: For the three priestly duties enumerated here see Deut. 33:8–10. 31: And there shall be no elder in your house is repeated in the next v.; in the Dead Sea manuscript 4QSam^a and Septuagint these words do not occur in the present v. 33: Shall die as . . . men: The Dead Sea manuscript 4QSam^a and Septuagint read "shall fall by the sword of men." This may refer to the massacre of the priests of Nob (ch 22). 35: Faithful and enduring: The Heb uses the same word, indicating that because the priest will be faithful, his house shall be enduring. Possibly the priest meant is Zadok, who replaced Abiathar, a descendant of Eli (1 Kings 2.26–27). My anointed, see v. 10 n.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Here a device for obtaining oracles (cf. 14.3; 23.6, 9–12), not a garment as in v. 18 above.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "gaze [cf. Septuagint] grudgingly upon the sacrifices and offerings which I have commanded" (connecting ma'on with 'oyen, "keeping a jealous eye"; see 1 Sam. 18.9); cf. v. 32 and note e below.

d See vv. 15–16.

e Cf. note c-above.

3 Young Samuel was in the service of the LORD under Eli. In those days the word of the LORD was rare; prophecy was not widespread. ²One day, Eli was asleep in his usual place; his eyes had begun to fail and he could barely see. ³The lamp of God had not yet gone out, and Samuel was sleeping in the temple of the LORD where the Ark of God was. ⁴The LORD called out to Samuel, and he answered, "I'm coming." ⁵He ran to Eli and said, "Here I am; you called me." But he replied, "I didn't call you; go back to sleep." So he went back and lay down. ⁶Again the LORD called, "Samuel!" Samuel rose and went to Eli and said, "Here I am; you called me." But he replied, "I didn't call, my son; go back to sleep."—⁷Now Samuel had not yet experienced the LORD; the word of the LORD had not yet been revealed to him.—⁸The LORD called Samuel again, a third time, and he rose and went to Eli and said, "Here I am; you called me." Then Eli understood that the LORD was calling the boy. ⁹And Eli said to Samuel, "Go lie down. If you are called again, say, 'Speak, LORD, for Your servant is listening.'" And Samuel went to his place and lay down.

¹⁰The LORD came, and stood there, and He called as before: "Samuel! Samuel!" And Samuel answered, "Speak, for Your servant is listening." ¹¹The LORD said to Samuel: "I am going to do in Israel such a thing that both ears of anyone who hears about it will tingle. ¹²In that day I will fulfill against Eli all that I spoke concerning his house, from beginning to end. ¹³And I declare to him that I sentence his house to endless punishment for the iniquity he knew about—how his sons committed sacrilege ^aat will^a—and he did not rebuke them. ¹⁴Assuredly, I swear concerning the house of Eli that the iniquity of the house of Eli will never be expiated by sacrifice or offering."

¹⁵Samuel lay there until morning; and then he opened the doors of the House of the LORD. Samuel was afraid to report the vision to Eli, ¹⁶but Eli summoned Samuel and said, "Samuel, my son"; and he answered, "Here." ¹⁷And a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads "against God."

3.1-4.1a: Revelation. God's revelation to Samuel, which elevates him to the rank of prophet, contains a second message of calamity to the house of Eli. The narrative consists of five parts: an introduction, dialogues between Eli and Samuel, the revelation (in the center), again dialogue between Eli and Samuel, and a conclusion.

1-3: The exposition supplies the background information. Because the word of the LORD was rare and prophecy (i.e., revelations) was not widespread, neither Samuel nor Eli recognizes at first who is calling. In this way an ironic situation is created (dramatic irony). Samuel, who waits upon the almost blind Eli, sleeps near the Ark of God

(from where God's voice is heard, see Exod. 25.22; Num. 7.89). The lamp of God, which used to burn from evening to morning (Exod. 27.20-21), had not yet gone out—so it is still night. The Ark of God, see 4.4 n. 4-9: In his innocence and humility, it does not enter Samuel's mind that it is God who is calling to him. Though aware that he was mistaken before, he again and again gets up and goes to Eli. By repeating the situation with slight changes, the narrative builds dramatic tension. 6: To reassure Samuel, Eli fondly adds my son. 7: The v. is inserted at this particular point in order to explain why at the third call the inexperienced Samuel still does not understand who is calling, whereas Eli now realizes that it is the LORD. 10: Samuel's state of awe causes him not to add "LORD" in his response, as Eli has instructed him to do. 11-14: In the first half of the revelation God announces His intention to inflict dreadful calamities upon Israel and the house of Eli; in the second half He states the reason why He will do so and will not forgive them. Though repentance is a major theme in the Bible, not all sins may be forgiven. 11: Both ears . . . will tingle. The figure refers to the shock felt at learning of a terrible disaster (see 2 Kings 21.12; Jer. 19.3). 12: All that I spoke, through the man of God (2.27-36). 13: According to Jewish tradition at will is a "scribes' emendation." Initially the Heb text read, "against God" (like Septuagint), but this was changed by the ancient scribes to avoid affronting His dignity. Not rebuke, rather, "not restrain." Eli did rebuke his sons (see 2.23-25), though insufficiently. 14: Sacrifice or offering will not atone, as they were trampled upon (2.29). 15: He opened the doors: In spite of his tremendous experience Samuel continues to carry out his daily duties as usual. He does not report the vision to Eli so as not to distress him. 16: My son . . . here: Eli's address and Samuel's response are the same as in the previous night. 17: Thus and more in a formula of adjuration refers to

[Eli] asked, "What did He say to you? Keep nothing from me. ^aThus and more may God do to you^a if you keep from me a single word of all that He said to you!" ¹⁸Samuel then told him everything, withholding nothing from him. And [Eli] said, "He is the LORD; He will do what He deems right."

¹⁹Samuel grew up and the LORD was with him: He did not leave any of Samuel's^b predictions unfulfilled. ²⁰All Israel, from Dan to Beer-sheba, knew that Samuel was trustworthy as a prophet of the LORD. ²¹And the LORD continued to appear at Shiloh: the LORD revealed Himself 4 to Samuel at Shiloh with the word of the LORD; ¹ and Samuel's word went forth to all Israel.

Israel marched out to engage the Philistines in battle; they encamped near Eben-ezer, while the Philistines encamped at Aphek. ²The Philistines arrayed themselves against Israel; and when the battle was fought,^d Israel was routed by the Philistines, who slew about four thousand men on the field of battle. ³When the [Israelite] troops returned to the camp, the elders of Israel asked, "Why did the LORD put us to rout today before the Philistines? Let us fetch the Ark of the Covenant of the LORD from Shiloh; thus He will be present among us and will deliver us from the hands of our enemies." ⁴So the troops sent men to Shiloh; there Eli's two sons, Hophni and Phinehas, were in charge of the Ark of the Covenant of God, and they brought down from there the Ark of the Covenant of the LORD of Hosts Enthroned on the Cherubim.

⁵When the Ark of the Covenant of the LORD entered the camp, all Israel burst into a great shout, so that the earth resounded. ⁶The Philistines heard the noise of the shouting and they wondered, "Why is there such a loud shouting in the camp of the Hebrews?" And when they learned that the Ark of the LORD had come to the camp, ⁷the Philistines were frightened; for they said, "God has come to the camp." And they cried, "Woe to us! Nothing like this a-a A formula of adjuration.

b Heb. "his."

c Preceding this, Septuagint has "In those days, the Philistines gathered for war against Israel."

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

harmful occurrences, which the adjurer shrinks from mentioning explicitly. 19–21; 4.1a: These verses conclude the story. After the first revelation Samuel had many more, and since all his predictions came true, he was recognized as a trustworthy prophet (the Heb uses the same adjective rendered as "faithful" at 2.35), in accordance with the criterion of a true prophet in Deut. 18.22. 20: The expression from Dan to Beer-sheba means from the northern to the southern limit of Israel (see Judg. 20.1). 21a: The situation at the end of the story is opposed to that at the beginning (v. 1).

4.1b–22: Disaster. In chs 4–6 the Ark of the Covenant is the main subject, and Samuel is not mentioned at all. Ch 4 relates the capture of the Ark by the Philistines, the death of Eli's sons on one day (as predicted in 2.34), and the death of Eli himself. It consists of two parts: the first, located at Eben-ezer, tells of the battles between Israel and the Philistines; the second, at Shiloh, describes the events in the wake of the defeat.

1b: The Philistines—from which the name Palestine was derived in the Hellenistic-Roman period—came from the area of the Aegean Sea and settled on the eastern Mediterranean coast about 1200 BCE. According to the Bible their origin was from Caphtor (Jer. 47.4; Amos 9.7), which is identified with Crete. Archeological excavations in the coastal cities have brought their material culture to light, but little is known of their spiritual culture. Having better fighting equipment, including chariots, they were militarily superior to Israel. 3: It was not unusual to bring the Ark of the Covenant to the battlefield, as a physical sign of the presence of the LORD (see 2 Samuel 11.11). 4: The Ark of the Covenant was a chest containing the Tablets of the Covenant between the LORD and Israel (Deut. 9.11; 10.5). It was the holiest object in the First Temple, but was absent from the Second Temple. The Ark served as a throne for the LORD of Hosts (= armies). On its cover were two Cherubim, probably creatures with the body of a lion or bull, the head of a human, and the wings of an eagle. In the ancient Near East such creatures used to flank royal thrones. 6: Hebrews is the designation of the Israelites by foreigners and by themselves when talking to foreigners (e.g., Exod. 1.15–16, 19). 7–9: Several voices are cited, mainly expressing fear and de-has ever happened before. ⁸Woe to us! Who will save us from the power of this mighty God? He is the same God who struck the Egyptians with every kind of plague in the wilderness! ⁹Brace yourselves and be men, O Philistines! Or you will become slaves to the Hebrews as they were slaves to you. Be men and fight!" ¹⁰The Philistines fought; Israel was routed, and they all fled to their homes. The defeat was very great, thirty thousand foot soldiers of Israel fell there. ¹¹The Ark of God was captured, and Eli's two sons, Hophni and Phinehas, were slain.

¹²A Benjaminite ran from the battlefield and reached Shiloh the same day; his clothes were rent and there was earth on his head.^a ¹³When he arrived, he found Eli sitting on a seat, waiting beside the road—his heart trembling for the Ark of God. The man entered the city to spread the news, and the whole city broke out in a cry. ¹⁴And when Eli heard the sound of the outcry and asked, "What is the meaning of this uproar?" the man rushed over to tell Eli. ¹⁵Now Eli was ninety-eight years old; his eyes were fixed in a blind stare. ¹⁶The man said to Eli, "I am the one who came from the battlefield; I have just fled from the battlefield." [Eli] asked, "What happened, my son?" ¹⁷The bearer of the news replied, "Israel fled before the Philistines and the troops also suffered a great slaughter. Your two sons, Hophni and Phinehas, are dead, and the Ark of God has been captured." ¹⁸When he mentioned the Ark of God, [Eli] fell backward off the seat beside^b the gate, broke his neck and died; for he was an old man and heavy. He had been a chieftain of Israel for forty years.

a i.e., as a sign of mourning. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

spair, but, finally, also encouragement. 8: God: The Heb reads "gods" in the plural. The Philistines believe that the Hebrews, like themselves, worship many gods. They are also confused as to the location of the plagues of Egypt. 9: Be men, brave (see 1 Kings 2.2). 10: Thirty thousand seems exaggerated, but brings home the magnitude of the defeat. 11: The Ark of God was captured, in keeping with the ancient custom of taking the statue of the god of the defeated people as booty. 12: Rent clothes and earth on the head were signs of mourning (see 2 Samuel 1.2). 13: Trembling for the Ark of God, more than for his sons. 17: The bad news is conveyed in increasing order, seen from Eli's perspective. 18: The Ark of God, see v. 13 n. Forty years, a round number (Judg. 3.11; 5.31; 8.28).

Wanderings of the Ark of the Covenant according to First Samuel

¹⁹His daughter-in-law, the wife of Phinehas, was with child, about to give birth. When she heard the report that the Ark of God was captured and that her father-in-law and her husband were dead, she was seized with labor pains, and she crouched down and gave birth. ²⁰As she lay dying, the women attending her said, "Do not be afraid, for you have borne a son." But she did not respond or pay heed. ²¹She named the boy Ichabod, meaning, "The glory has departed from Israel"—referring to the capture of the Ark of God and to [the death of] her father-in-law and her husband. ²²"The glory is gone from Israel," she said, "for the Ark of God has been captured."

5 When the Philistines captured the Ark of God, they brought it from Eben-ezer to Ashdod. ²The Philistines took the Ark of God and brought it into the temple of Dagon and they set it up beside Dagon. ³Early the next day, the Ashdodites found Dagon lying face down on the ground in front of the Ark of the LORD. They picked Dagon up and put him back in his place; ⁴but early the next morning, Dagon was again lying prone on the ground in front of the Ark of the LORD. The head and both hands of Dagon were cut off, lying on the threshold; only ^a"Dagon's trunk was left intact."^a ⁵That is why, to this day, the priests of Dagon and all who enter the temple of Dagon do not tread on the threshold of Dagon in Ashdod.

⁶The hand of the LORD lay heavy upon the Ashdodites, and He wrought havoc among them: He struck ^bAshdod and its territory^b with hemorrhoids. ⁷When the men of Ashdod saw how matters stood, they said, "The Ark of the God of Israel must not remain with us, for His hand has dealt harshly with us and with our god Dagon." ⁸They sent messengers and assembled all the lords of the

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads differently from our Heb. text; it also mentions mice swarming in the Philistine ships and invading their fields. Cf. the mention of "mice" in 6.4, 18; and the note at 6.1.

19–22: The story of Eli's daughter-in-law shows another outcome of the disaster. The report of the calamities is again arranged in increasing order, but now from her perspective. 19: She crouched down, the customary position for childbirth in ancient times. 21–22: Names were usually given by the mothers. Ichabod means "no-glory," or "where is glory." Glory (Heb "kavod") is elsewhere associated with divine presence and especially with the Ark (e.g., Exod. 24.16–17; Pss. 24.7–10; 79.9). In the explanation of the name the capture of the Ark is emphasized. Instead of departed and gone the Heb reads "exiled."

5.1–12: The hand of the LORD. In spite of Israel's defeat and the capture of the Ark, the LORD's rule over the Philistines and His superiority to their god are evident and recognized by the Philistines themselves. The narrator takes no interest in the political and military consequences of their victory: their penetration into the heart of the country and the destruction of Shiloh and its sanctuary (see Jer. 7.12–14; Ps. 78.60). He is concerned only with their affliction by the hand of the LORD (which is mentioned four times in this ch and three times in the next). The recurrence of the situations in the temple of Dagon and in the Philistine towns shows that the described misfortunes did not happen accidentally. The narrative makes fun of the Philistines. 1: Ashdod, one of the five cities of the Philistines. The others are Gaza, Gath, Ekron, and Ashkelon. 2: Dagon, the Near Eastern god of grain, who was adopted by the Philistines. Placing war trophies in the sanctuary was not uncommon (see 21.10; 31.10). 3–5: The description of Dagon lying face down on the ground before the Ark makes a mockery of the Philistine god; this is even more pronounced when the fallen god has also lost his head and hands. The mockery extends to the custom not to tread on the threshold because parts of the god have lain on it (cf. Zeph. 1.9). To this day: A temple of Dagon stood at Ashdod as late as the Maccabean period (1 Macc. 10.83–84; 11.4). 6: Hemorrhoids: Cf. Ps. 78.66, where "He beat back his foes" is explained in the ancient Aramaic translation of Jonathan: "He beat his foes with hemorrhoids at their back." Some scholars, however, identify the disease as bubonic plague, since instead of hemorrhoids, the Heb "ketiv" ("what is written") reads "tumors," which are characteristic of bubonic plague, and Septuagint mentions mice, which are known to have spread it. In addition, hemorrhoids are neither fatal nor epidemic, whereas according to vv. 11–12 the disease in question was. 8: The lords, Heb "seren" (perhaps cognate to Greek "tyrannos" = tyrant), the title of the five Philistine rulers.

Philistines and asked, "What shall we do with the Ark of the God of Israel?" They answered, "Let the Ark of the God of Israel be removed to Gath." So they moved the Ark of the God of Israel [to Gath].⁹ And after they had moved it, the hand of the LORD came against the city, causing great panic; He struck the people of the city, young and old, so that hemorrhoids "broke out" among them.¹⁰ Then they sent the Ark of God to Ekron. But when the Ark of God came to Ekron, the Ekronites cried out, "They have moved the Ark of the God of Israel to us to slay us and our kindred."¹¹ They too sent messengers and assembled all the lords of the Philistines and said, "Send the Ark of the God of Israel away, and let it return to its own place, that it may not slay us and our kindred." For the panic of death pervaded the whole city, so heavily had the hand of God fallen there;¹² and the men who did not die were stricken with hemorrhoids. The outcry of the city went up to heaven.

6 The Ark of the LORD remained in the territory of the Philistines seven months.^b ² Then the Philistines summoned the priests and the diviners and asked, "What shall we do about the Ark of the LORD? Tell us with what we shall send it off to its own place."³ They answered, "If you are going to send the Ark of the God of Israel away, do not send it away without anything; you must also pay an indemnity to Him. Then you will be healed, and "He will make Himself known to you; otherwise His hand will not turn away from you."^c ⁴ They asked, "What is the indemnity that we should pay to Him?" They answered, "Five golden hemorrhoids and five golden mice, corresponding to the number of lords of the Philistines; for the same plague struck all of you^d and your lords. ⁵ You shall make figures of your hemorrhoids and of the mice that are ravaging your land; thus you shall honor the God of Israel, and perhaps He will lighten the weight of His hand upon you and your gods and your land. ⁶ Don't harden your hearts as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts. As you know, when He made a mockery of them, they had to let Israel^d go, and they departed. ⁷ Therefore, get a new cart ready and two milch cows that have not borne a yoke; harness the cows to the cart, but take back indoors the calves that follow them. ⁸ Take the Ark of the 6.1–7.1: The Ark's return. The first part of the narrative, located at Ekron, tells about the Philistines' decision to return the Ark to its place; the second part, located at Beth-shemesh, describes the reaction of the people there to the Ark's arrival. 2: As experts on matters of ritual and predicting the future, the priests and the diviners will know how to deal with the Ark. Soothsaying was characteristic of the Philistines according to Isa. 2.6. 3: Instead of He will make Himself known to you, the Dead Sea manuscript 4QSam^a and Septuagint read "there will be atonement for you." His hand: See 5.1–12 n. 4–5: The golden hemorrhoids and golden mice correspond to the nature of the plagues; they are a gift to honor the God of Israel and to appease Him. The mice that are ravaging the land by destroying the grain crops are a blow to Dagon, the god of grain (but see also 5.6 n.). Upon you, who are afflicted by disease, and your gods, who are deeply humiliated, and your land, which is ravaged by mice. 6: The precedent of Egypt (see also 4.8) serves to convince those Philistines who, believing that their misfortunes happened by chance (see v. 9), are still unwilling to part with their precious trophy. 7: As a mark of reverence for the Ark, the cart and the cows transporting it should not have been defiled by previous use. Cows were kept for work rather than for milk or meat; milch cows would have young calves and naturally be drawn to them.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Septuagint continues "and mice invaded their fields"; cf. vv. 4, 5, 18, and note at 5.6.

c-c Or "and you will know why His hand would not turn away from you." Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d Heb. "them."

LORD and place it on the cart; and put next to it in a chest the gold objects you are paying Him as indemnity. Send it off, and let it go its own way. ⁹Then watch: If it goes up the road to Beth-shemesh, to His own territory, it was He who has inflicted this great harm on us. But if not, we shall know that it was not His hand that struck us; it just happened to us by chance.”

¹⁰The men did so. They took two milch cows and harnessed them to the cart, and shut up their calves indoors.

¹¹They placed the Ark of the LORD on the cart together with the chest, the golden mice, and the figures of their hemorrhoids. ¹²The cows went straight ahead along the road to Beth-shemesh. They went along a single highroad, lowing as they went, and turning off neither to the right nor to the left; and the lords of the Philistines walked behind them as far as the border of Beth-shemesh.

¹³The people of Beth-shemesh were reaping their wheat harvest in the valley. They looked up and saw the Ark, and they rejoiced ^awhen they saw [it].^a ¹⁴The cart came into the field of Joshua of Beth-shemesh and it stopped there. They split up the wood of the cart and presented the cows as a burnt offering to the LORD. A large stone was there; ¹⁵and the Levites took down the Ark of the LORD and the chest beside it containing the gold objects and placed them on the large stone. Then the men of Beth-shemesh presented burnt offerings and other sacrifices to the LORD that day. ¹⁶The five lords of the Philistines saw this and returned the same day to Ekron.

¹⁷The following were the golden hemorrhoids that the Philistines paid as an indemnity to the LORD: For Ashdod, one; for Gaza, one; for Ashkelon, one; for Gath, one; for Ekron, one. ^{18b}As for the golden mice, their number accorded with all the Philistine towns that belonged to the five lords—both fortified towns and unwall’d villages, as far as^c the great stone^d on which the Ark of the LORD was set down, to this day, in the field of Joshua of Beth-shemesh.

¹⁹[The LORD] struck at the men of Beth-shemesh because ^ethey looked into the Ark of the LORD; He struck down seventy men among the people [and] fifty thousand men.^e The people mourned, for He had inflicted a great slaughter upon the population. ²⁰And the men of Beth-

12: The cows went straight ahead, as if they knew the way. Lowing as they went, better, “lowing continuously.” This seemingly unimportant fact is mentioned in order to show the distress of the cows at being unable to follow their instinctive urge and return to their calves. 13: Here the viewpoint of the narrative switches to Beth-shemesh, which was the nearest Israelite town. 15: Only Levites, who had been consecrated to serve the LORD, were allowed to handle the Ark. 18: Instead of as far as the great stone, read as a new sentence: “There still is the great stone” (requiring a small change in the Heb vocalization). 19: The number fifty thousand is far too big for a little town like Beth-shemesh. Read only seventy, as in Antiquities of the Jews by Josephus. 20: God’s holiness is awesome—approaching the Ark, without being consecrated, involves peril of death (Num. 4.19–20). The Ark cannot return to Shiloh because the town has been destroyed (see 5.1–12 n.).

a-a Septuagint reads “As they met it.”

b Meaning of vv. 18 and 19 uncertain in part.

c-c Emendation yields “villages, as witness there is.”

d Reading ’eben with some Heb. mss., Septuagint, and Targum, most mss. and editions ’abel, “meadow [?].”

e-e Force of Heb. uncertain.

shemesh asked, "Who can stand in attendance on the LORD, this holy God? And to whom shall He go up from us?"²¹ They sent messengers to the inhabitants of Kiriath-jearim to say, "The Philistines have sent back the Ark of the LORD. Come down and take it into your keeping."

7¹The men of Kiriath-jearim came and took up the Ark of the LORD and brought it into the house of Abinadab on the hill; and they consecrated his son Eleazar to have charge of the Ark of the LORD.

²A long time elapsed from the day that the Ark was housed in Kiriath-jearim, twenty years in all; and all the House of Israel "yearned after" the LORD. ³And Samuel said to all the House of Israel, "If you mean to return to the LORD with all your heart, you must remove the alien gods and the Ashtaroth from your midst and direct your heart to the LORD and serve Him alone. Then He will deliver you from the hands of the Philistines."⁴ And the Israelites removed the Baalim and Ashtaroth and they served the LORD alone.

⁵Samuel said, "Assemble all Israel at Mizpah, and I will pray to the LORD for you."⁶ They assembled at Mizpah, and they drew water and poured it out before the LORD; they fasted that day, and there they confessed that they had sinned against the LORD. And Samuel acted as chieftain of the Israelites at Mizpah.

⁷When the Philistines heard that the Israelites had assembled at Mizpah, the lords of the Philistines marched out against Israel. Hearing of this, the Israelites were terrified of the Philistines⁸ and they implored Samuel, "Do not neglect us and do not refrain from crying out to the LORD our God to save us from the hands of the Philistines."⁹ Thereupon Samuel took a suckling lamb and sacrificed it as a whole burnt offering to the LORD; and Samuel cried out to the LORD in behalf of Israel, and the LORD responded to him. ¹⁰For as Samuel was presenting the burnt offering and the Philistines advanced to attack Israel, the LORD thundered mightily against the Philistines that day. He threw them into confusion, and they were routed by Israel. ¹¹The men of Israel sallied out of Mizpah and pursued the Philistines, striking them down to a point below Beth-car.

¹²Samuel took a stone and set it up between Mizpah

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

7.2-17: The spiritual leader. After the Ark narrative, in which Samuel was not mentioned at all, the present narrative again focuses on him.

Samuel is the last of the judges, but unlike most of his predecessors, he does not deliver Israel from its enemies by military means. His leadership is religious and judicial. The narrative demonstrates that if Israel gets rid of its idols and serves the LORD alone, it will overcome its enemies and live in peace. 2: Twenty years, half a generation. This number fits the chronology of the book of Judges, which is based on periods of forty years, but also twenty and eighty years. 3-4: Ashtaroth (plural), images of Ashtoreth, the main Canaanite goddess (of fertility and love). Baalim (plural), images of Baal, the god of heaven and earth, who was the head of the Canaanite pantheon. The removal of foreign deities is also mentioned in Gen. 35.2-4; Josh. 24.23; Judg. 10.16. 5: There was probably a religious center at Mizpah, where the community used to assemble before the LORD (see Judg. 20.1; 1 Sam. 10.17). Samuel, who later became renowned for his success in praying (Jer. 15.1; Ps. 99.6), will beseech the LORD to forgive Israel its sins and deliver them from the Philistines. 6: The ritual of pouring out water is mentioned nowhere else in the Bible. In the Second Temple period water was poured out on the festival of Sukkot, probably as a request for rain. But here it is done as a request for remission of sins, just as are the prayer, fasting, and confession. Instead of acted as chieftain, which suggests a connection to the preceding book of Judges, the Heb may be translated "acted as magistrate" (cf. Moses sitting as magistrate, Exod. 18.13). 9: According to Jewish traditional interpretation sacrifice was permitted everywhere before there was a central sanctuary. Modern scholarship, however, holds that sacrifice outside the central sanctuary became prohibited only when the law of Deuteronomy, demanding centralization of the cult, was introduced during the reign of King Josiah (640-609 BCE). See notes to Deut. ch 12. 10: Thundered: The LORD uses the forces of nature to help Israel (cf. Judg. 5.20-21). 12: The recurrence of the name Eben-ezer (see 4.1) points to the reversal in the situation: then defeat by the

and Shen,^a and named it Eben-ezer:^b “For up to now,” he said, “the LORD has helped us.”¹³ The Philistines were humbled and did not invade the territory of Israel again; and the hand of the LORD was set against the Philistines as long as Samuel lived.¹⁴ The towns which the Philistines had taken from Israel, from Ekron to Gath, were restored to Israel; Israel recovered all her territory from the Philistines. There was also peace between Israel and the Amorites.

¹⁵ Samuel judged Israel as long as he lived.¹⁶ Each year he made the rounds of Bethel, Gilgal, and Mizpah, and acted as judge over Israel at all those places.¹⁷ Then he would return to Ramah, for his home was there, and there too he would judge Israel. He built an altar there to the LORD.

8 When Samuel grew old, he appointed his sons judges over Israel.² The name of his first-born son was Joel, and his second son’s name was Abijah; they sat as judges in Beer-sheba.³ But his sons did not follow in his ways; they were bent on gain, they accepted bribes, and they subverted justice.

⁴ All the elders of Israel assembled and came to Samuel at Ramah,⁵ and they said to him, “You have grown old, and your sons have not followed your ways. Therefore appoint a king for us, to govern us like all other nations.”⁶ Samuel was displeased that they said “Give us a king to govern us.” Samuel prayed to the LORD,⁷ and the LORD replied to Samuel, “Heed the demand of the people in everything they say to you. For it is not you that they have rejected; it is Me they have rejected as their king.⁸ Like everything else they have done ever since I brought them out of Egypt to this day—forsaking Me and worshipping other gods—so they are doing to you.⁹ Heed their demand; but warn them solemnly, and tell them about the practices of any king who will rule over them.”

a Otherwise unknown; perhaps identical with “Jeshanah”; cf. Septuagint; also 2 Chron. 13.19.

b I.e., “Stone of Help.”

Philistines, now victory over them (after Israel’s return to the LORD).

13: The hand of the LORD: See 5.1–12 n. Contrary to the statement here, which aims at glorifying Samuel, in the ensuing narratives Israel is still in the hands of the Philistines, even in Samuel’s lifetime (e.g., 9.16). On the subject of contradictions in the book, see intro. 14: Amorites is a general designation of the inhabitants of Canaan before the Israelite conquest. Many Amorites remained in the country after the conquest.

15–17: In order to facilitate the administration of justice Samuel makes yearly rounds of the towns in the central region of the country, going out to the people instead of requiring them to come to him.

Chs 8–12: The foundation of the monarchy. No less than five chs are devoted to the foundation of the monarchy, which shows the importance attached to the subject. Their attitude towards kingship is not uniform—in chs 8, 10.17–27, and 12 it is negative, in the other chs positive. This reflects ancient controversy concerning the merits of kingship. In biblical scholarship the difference is usually explained by assuming different sources: The pro-monarchic chs 9.1–10.16 and 11 are believed to belong to an older source, the anti-monarchic chs 8, 10.17–27 and 12 to a later one. The materials are arranged artistically: The first and last chs, 8 and 12, contain speeches by Samuel, the second and penultimate ones (9.1–10.16 and 11.1–13) embody narratives having Saul as protagonist, and the middle section (10.17–27) recounts the election of Saul as king.

8.1–22: The request for a king. This narrative is concerned with the advantages and disadvantages of the monarchy. The people desire a strong, centralized government, whereas Samuel warns against the king’s violation of individual rights and liberty. God, though disapproving, yields to the wish of the people. The first part of the narrative recounts the people’s request, Samuel’s appeal to God, and God’s reply; the central part contains the “king’s practice”; and the last part again tells of the people’s request, Samuel’s appeal to God and God’s reply. 1–3: Background information regarding the people’s request. Like Eli, Samuel is old and his sons are corrupt and unworthy to succeed him. 5: Cf. Deut. 17.14. In both places it is the example of the nations that appeals to the people. 7: God’s kingship is presumed to be conflicting with human kingship. For God’s kingship, see Exod. 15.18; Judg. 8.23. 8: Just as the people were always ungrateful to God, so they are now to Samuel.

¹⁰Samuel reported all the words of the LORD to the people, who were asking him for a king. ¹¹He said, "This will be the practice of the king who will rule over you: He will take your sons and appoint them as his charioteers and horsemen, and they will serve as outrunners for his chariots. ¹²He will appoint them as his chiefs of thousands and of fifties; or they will have to plow his fields, reap his harvest, and make his weapons and the equipment for his chariots. ¹³He will take your daughters as perfumers, cooks, and bakers. ¹⁴He will seize your choice fields, vineyards, and olive groves, and give them to his courtiers. ¹⁵He will take a tenth part of your grain and vintage and give it to his eunuchs and courtiers. ¹⁶He will take your male and female slaves, your choice ^ayoung men,^a and your asses, and put them to work for him. ¹⁷He will take a tenth part of your flocks, and you shall become his slaves. ¹⁸The day will come when you cry out because of the king whom you yourselves have chosen; and the LORD will not answer you on that day."

¹⁹But the people would not listen to Samuel's warning. "No," they said. "We must have a king over us, ²⁰that we may be like all the other nations: Let our king rule over us and go out at our head and fight our battles." ²¹When Samuel heard all that the people said, he reported it to the LORD. ²²And the LORD said to Samuel, "Heed their demands and appoint a king for them." Samuel then said to the men of Israel, "All of you go home."

9 There was a man of Benjamin whose name was Kish son of Abiel son of Zeror son of Becorath son of Aphiah, a Benjaminite, a man of substance. ²He had a son whose name was Saul, an excellent young man; no one among the Israelites was handsomer than he; ^bhe was a head taller^b than any of the people.

³Once the asses of Saul's father Kish went astray, and Kish said to his son Saul, "Take along one of the servants and go out and look for the asses." ⁴He passed into the hill country of Ephraim. He crossed the district of Shalishah, but they did not find them. They passed through the a-a Septuagint reads "cattle." b-b Lit. "taller from his shoulders up."

11-17: The "king's practice" is based on the reality of the ancient Near East, in accordance with the people's request to have a king "like all other nations" (v. 5). It is not meant to enumerate the rights of the king in Israel, but to deter the people from desiring one. The king will load a heavy burden upon all individuals—unlike the existing regime, which rarely interfered with personal life. He will take—Samuel repeats this verb many times—their sons to the army, impose corvée (forced labor) upon their sons and daughters, confiscate their lands, levy taxes, and use their property. 11: Outrunners served as bodyguards to the king (see 22.17). 12: Chiefs of thousands and of fifties, cf. Exod. 18.21, 25, where also hundreds and tens are mentioned. 15: The Heb word translated eunuchs can also mean "high officials," which better suits the context. 17: Slaves: As a result of the foregoing the citizens will lose their freedom. 18: Instead of crying out because of their enemies (Judg. 3.9, 15; 6.6-7; 10.10) they will cry out because of their king, and God who answered their cry in the past will then refrain from answering them. 20: The people want a king to rule the country in times of peace and lead the army in times of war. Go out at our head is a military term (see 18.13). 22: Because of Samuel's objection the LORD reiterates His command (v. 7), adding explicitly that Samuel appoint a king. Samuel, however, not eager to execute the order, does not transmit this to the people, but tells them to go home.

9.1-10.16: The anointing. The story of the young man who went to search for lost asses and found a kingdom is told vividly. Everything happens in a natural way, yet, as elsewhere in the Bible (see esp. the Joseph story in Genesis), God's directing the course of events is manifested in the "accidental" occurrences. Only thanks to his persevering servant—and against his own intention—does Saul happen to get to Samuel's town, and only thanks to the chance encounter with some girls does he enter the town at the precise moment when Samuel comes out, thus meeting the prophet who will anoint him. The first part of the narrative describes Saul's journey up to his arrival at Samuel's town, the second part tells of the encounter between the two men and of Saul's anointing, and the third part recounts Saul's way back home. The narrative gives a first glimpse of Saul's character before he becomes king. 1-2: The exposition provides details about the hero. Regarding the list of ances-district of Shaalim, but they were not there. They traversed the [entire] territory of Benjamin, and still they did not find them. ⁵When they reached the district of Zuph, Saul said to the servant who was with him, "Let us turn back, or my father will stop worrying about the asses and begin to worry about us." ⁶But he replied, "There is a man of God in that town, and the man is highly esteemed; everything that he says comes true. Let us go there; perhaps he will tell us about the errand on which we set out." ⁷"But if we go," Saul said to his servant, "what can we bring the man? For the food in our bags is all gone, and there is nothing we can bring to the man of God as a present. What have we got?" ⁸The servant answered Saul again, "I happen to have a quarter-shekel of silver. I can give that to the man of God and he will tell us about our errand."—⁹Formerly in Israel, when a man went to inquire of God, he would say, "Come, let us go to the seer," for the prophet of today was formerly called a seer.—¹⁰Saul said to his servant, "A good idea; let us go." And they went to the town where the man of God lived.

The kingdom of Saul according to the book of Samuel. The dashed line shows the approximate boundary of his kingdom.

¹¹As they were climbing the ascent to the town, they met some girls coming out to draw water, and they asked them, "Is the seer in town?" ¹²"Yes," they replied. "He is up there ahead of you. ^bHurry, for he has just come to the town^b because the people have a sacrifice at the shrine today. ¹³As soon as you enter the town, you will find him before he goes up to the shrine to eat; the people will not eat until he comes; for he must first bless the sacrifice and only then will the guests eat. Go up at once, for you will find him right away." ¹⁴So they went up to the town; and as they were entering the town,^c Samuel came out toward them, on his way up to the shrine.

¹⁵Now the day before Saul came, the LORD had revealed the following to Samuel: ¹⁶"At this time tomorrow, I will send a man to you from the territory of Benjamin, and you shall anoint him ruler of My people Israel. He will deliver My people from the hands of the Philistines; for I have taken note of ^dMy people,^d their outcry has come to Me."

¹⁷As soon as Samuel saw Saul, the LORD declared to him, "This is the man that I told you would govern My people." ¹⁸Saul approached Samuel inside the gate and tors cf. 1.1. Benjamin, the land of the tribe of Benjamin. 5: Zuph, Samuel's home district (1.1).

6: That town, Ramah. 7: It was customary to bring some food or presents when making inquiries of a prophet concerning the future or other hidden matters (see 1 Kings 14.3; 2 Kings 8.8-9; Ezek. 13.19).

8: Were it not for the quarter-shekel (a measure of weight, approximately 2.5 gram or a little less than 0.1 oz.) of silver the servant happened to possess, Saul and Samuel would not have met. 9: This explanatory note, which separates Saul's reply from the servant's proposal, is inserted here in order to explain the term "seer" in v. 11 and to provide the background for the expression "come, let us go" (so in the Heb), used by Saul in v. 10. 11: The source of water was downhill outside the town.

12-13: Several voices of the girls can be distinguished, all eager to supply more information than asked for. Samuel has come to the town from one of his circuits (7.16-17). Regarding the sacrifice, see 7.9 n. 15-16: The revelation shows that the "accidental" occurrences were guided by God. The term ruler ("nagid") designates in the book of Samuel a governor who is appointed by God, whereas "king" ("melekh") connotes nomination by the people. The repetitions of My people here and in v. 17 indicate God's affectionate relationship with Israel. Their outcry has come to Me, cf. Exod. 3.9.

a This verse explains the term "seer" in v. 11.

b-b Emendation yields "Hurry, for he has just reached ('attah kayyom ba, so Septuagint) the gate"; cf. v. 18.

c Emendation yields "gate"; cf. v. 18.

d-d Septuagint and Targum read "the plight of My people"; cf. Exod. 3.7.

said to him, "Tell me, please, where is the house of the seer?"¹⁹ And Samuel answered Saul, "I am the seer. Go up ahead of me to the shrine, for you shall eat with me today; and in the morning I will let you go, after telling you whatever may be on your mind."²⁰ As for your asses that strayed three days ago, do not concern yourself about them, for they have been found. And for whom is all Israel yearning, if not for you and all your ancestral house?"²¹ Saul replied, "But I am only a Benjaminite, from the smallest of the tribes of Israel, and my clan is the least of all the clans of the tribe^a of Benjamin! Why do you say such things to me?"

²²Samuel took Saul and his servant and brought them into the hall, and gave them a place at the head of the guests, who numbered about thirty.²³ And Samuel said to the cook, "Bring the portion which I gave you and told you to set aside."²⁴ The cook lifted up the thigh and^b what was on it,^b and set it before Saul. And [Samuel] said, "What has been reserved is set before you. Eat; it has been kept for you for this occasion, when I said I was inviting the people."^c So Saul ate with Samuel that day.²⁵ They then descended from the shrine to the town, and^d [Samuel] talked with Saul on the roof.

²⁶Early, at^d the break of day, Samuel called to Saul on the roof. He said, "Get up, and I will send you off." Saul arose, and the two of them, Samuel and he, went outside.²⁷ As they were walking toward the end of the town, Samuel said to Saul, "Tell the servant to walk ahead of us"—and he walked ahead—"but you stop here a moment and I will make known to you the word of God."

10 Samuel took a flask of oil and poured some on Saul's^e head and kissed him, and said, "The LORD herewith^f anoints you ruler^f over His own people.² When you leave me today, you will meet two men near the tomb of Rachel in the territory of Benjamin, ^cat Zelzah,^c and they will tell you that the asses you set out to look for have been found, and that your father has stopped being concerned about the asses and is worrying about you, saying:

a Heb. plural.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "the broad tail."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads "They spread a bed for Saul on the roof, and he lay down. At . . ."

e Heb. "his."

f-f Septuagint and Vulgate read "anoints you ruler over His people Israel, and you will govern the people of the LORD and deliver them from the hands of their foes roundabout. And this is the sign for you that the LORD anoints you."

19–20: With each utterance Samuel's answer becomes more astonishing to Saul. For whom is all Israel yearning, "hinting to him concerning the kingship" (Rashi).

21: Saul's reply testifies to his modesty (cf. Gideon's reply, Judg. 6.15). 22–24: Saul and his servant are the guests of honor. The reservation of the thigh (the best part) for Saul shows that he was expected. 25–26: The reading of Septuagint (see translators' note d-d) is preferable. People used to sleep on the flat roofs of their homes because of the heat inside.

27: Saul's anointing must be kept secret because of the Philistines.

10.1: Anointing effected consecration to office in the name of God (initially it symbolized purification). The king was also designated "the LORD's anointed" (e.g., 24.7; 26.9). 2–6: The three signs are to convince Saul of the truth of Samuel's words and to persuade him that he will indeed be king.

2: The tradition that the tomb of Rachel, the ancestress of Saul's tribe Benjamin, was located near Ramah in Benjaminite territory contradicts the tradition that it was near Bethlehem (Gen. 35.19), but is corroborated by Jer. 31.15.

3–4: From the items intended for the sanctuary of Bethel two loaves of bread will be given to Saul, whose food has run out (9.7).

5: The Hill of God (Gibeah of God) is also called Gibeah of Saul, Gibeah of Benjamin, or just Gibeah. Music served to induce a state of ecstasy (see 2 Kings 3.15). The ecstatic, communal prophets were essentially different from the later literary prophets. 6: The spirit of the LORD manifests itself in some exceptional ability, like prophesying or leadership. 8: Samuel informs Saul of their relationship right from the beginning: The king is subordinate to the prophet and must follow his instructions.

9: Another heart, another personality. From a simple, diffident peasant Saul is transformed into a charismatic leader. 10–12: The episode demonstrates that Saul has become another man (v. 6).

11: Here son of Kishi is not necessar-

‘What shall I do about my son?’³ You shall pass on from there until you come to the terebinth of Tabor. There you will be met by three men making a pilgrimage to God at Bethel. One will be carrying three kids, another will be carrying three loaves of bread, and the third will be carrying a jar of wine.⁴ They will greet you and offer you two loaves of bread, which you shall accept.⁵ After that, you are to go on to ^a‘the Hill’ of God, where the Philistine prefects reside. There, as you enter the town, you will encounter a band of prophets coming down from the shrine, preceded by lyres, timbrels, flutes, and harps, and they will be ^b‘speaking in ecstasy.’⁶ The spirit of the LORD will grip you, and you will speak in ecstasy along with them; you will become another man.⁷ And once these signs have happened to you, ^c‘act when the occasion arises,’ for God is with you.⁸ After that, you are to go down to Gilgal ahead of me, and I will come down to you to present burnt offerings and offer sacrifices of well-being. Wait seven days until I come to you and instruct you what you are to do next.”

⁹As [Saul] turned around to leave Samuel, God gave him another heart; and all those signs were fulfilled that same day.¹⁰ And when they came there, to ^a‘the Hill,’ he saw a band of prophets coming toward him. Thereupon the spirit of God gripped him, and he spoke in ecstasy among them.¹¹ When all who knew him previously saw him speaking in ecstasy together with the prophets, the people said to one another, “What’s happened to ^d‘the son of Kish?’” Is Saul too among the prophets?¹² But another person there spoke up and said, “And who are their fathers?” Thus the proverb arose: “Is Saul too among the prophets?”¹³ And when he stopped speaking in ecstasy, he entered the shrine.

¹⁴Saul’s uncle asked him and his servant, “Where did you go?” “To look for the asses,” he replied. “And when we saw that they were not to be found, we went to Samuel.”¹⁵ “Tell me,” said Saul’s uncle, “what did Samuel say to you?”¹⁶ Saul answered his uncle, “He just told us that the asses had been found.” But he did not tell him anything of what Samuel had said about the kingship.

¹⁷Samuel summoned the people to the LORD at Mizpah¹⁸ and said to them, “Thus said the LORD, the God of Is-ily slighting (contrast translators’ note d-d). Kish is a well-known and prosperous citizen, and his son’s conduct arouses astonishment. 12: And who are their fathers, a disdainful rhetorical question. The other prophets do not come from distinguished families like Saul, which makes his affiliation with them even more astonishing. “Is Saul too among the prophets?” The proverb, whose origin is explained differently at 19.24, expresses surprise at a person who engages in something foreign to him or associates with people unlike himself. 16: The last sentence may also be translated: “But he did not tell him anything about the kingship, as Samuel had said.” In compliance with Samuel’s instructions Saul keeps the kingship a secret, even from his close relatives.

10.17–27: The election. The people, convened by Samuel, acclaim—now openly—the king chosen by the LORD. Samuel again expresses his objection to the monarchy, but he does not object to Saul as a person, deeming him most suitable for the office. 17: On Mizpah see 7.5 n. 18–19: The people are ungrateful. In demanding a king they are rejecting their God (cf. 8.7), who has always saved them.

a-a Or “Gibeah.”

b-b Others “prophesying”; cf. Num. 11.25 and note.

c-c See 11.5–13.

d-d To refer to a person merely as “the son (ben) of . . .” is slighting; cf. 20.27, 30, 31; Isa. 7.4.

rael: 'I brought Israel out of Egypt, and I delivered you from the hands of the Egyptians and of all the kingdoms that oppressed you.' ¹⁹But today you have rejected your God who delivered you from all your troubles and calamities. For you said, 'No,^a set up a king over us!' Now station yourselves before the LORD, by your tribes and clans."

²⁰Samuel brought forward each of the tribes of Israel, and the lot indicated the tribe of Benjamin. ²¹Then Samuel brought forward the tribe of Benjamin by its clans, and the clan of the Matrites was indicated; and then^b Saul son of Kish was indicated. But when they looked for him, he was not to be found. ²²They inquired of the LORD again, "Has anyone else come here?"^c And the LORD replied, "Yes; he is hiding among the baggage." ²³So they ran over and brought him from there; and when he took his place among the people, he stood a head taller than all the people. ²⁴And Samuel said to the people, "Do you see the one whom the LORD has chosen? There is none like him among all the people." And all the people acclaimed him, shouting, "Long live the king!"

²⁵Samuel expounded to the people the rules of the monarchy, and recorded them in a document which he deposited before the LORD. Samuel then sent the people back to their homes. ²⁶Saul also went home to Gibeath, accompanied by ^dupstanding men^d whose hearts God had touched. ²⁷But some scoundrels said, "How can this fellow save us?" So they scorned him and brought him no gift. ^eBut he pretended not to mind.^e

11 Nahash the Ammonite marched up and besieged Jabesh-gilead. All the men of Jabesh-gilead said to Nahash, "Make a pact with us, and we will serve you." ²But Nahash the Ammonite answered them, "I will make a pact with you on this condition, that everyone's right eye be gouged out; I will make this a humiliation for all Isa So many Heb. mss. and ancient versions. Other mss. and editions read "to Him."

b Septuagint reads "then he brought up the family of the Matrites by their men and . . ."

c Septuagint reads "Has the man come here?"

d-d In contrast to "scoundrels" (v. 27); understanding Heb. ḥayil as the equivalent of bene ḥayil, as read by Septuagint and 4QSam^a.

e-e Lit. "But he was as one who holds his peace." Septuagint and 4QSam^a read "About a month later," connecting with what follows.

20–21: Finding someone by lot proceeded by narrowing down: First the person's tribe was indicated, then the clan, then the family, and finally the person himself

(cf. Josh. 7.14). 22: According to Radak, Saul is hiding among the baggage, because "he shunned authority." 23: A head taller than all the people, cf. 9.2. 24: The cry "Long live the king" marks the acclamation of the king by the people and was part of the coronation ceremony (cf. 2 Samuel 16.16; 1 Kings 1.25, 39; 2 Kings 11.12). 25: The expression rules of the monarchy is in the Heb almost identical to "practice of the king" (8.11). This probably indicates that Samuel repeats and records his previous account of the practice of the king (8.11–17) as a warning and witness for the future (cf. Deut. 31.19–21). But it is also possible that those rules laid down the rights and duties of the monarch, though in that case the narrator would probably have reproduced them. Before the LORD, in the sanctuary. 26–27: Two extreme reactions to Saul's election are recounted: on the one hand warm support from "upstanding men," on the other, scorn from "scoundrels," who do not believe in his ability to help. This fellow (lit. "this one"), a contemptuous phrase.

11.1–13: Deliverance. This story demonstrates Saul's ability to assume leadership and help his countrymen. Saul is depicted here after the model of the judges: The spirit of God grips him, he gathers the people, leads them to victory, and delivers them from the neighboring people that oppressed them. The first part of the narrative is located east of the Jordan at Jabesh-gilead, the second part west of the Jordan, mainly at Gibeath, and the third part again east of the Jordan at Jabesh-gilead (see map, p. 576). At the beginning of the narrative the Dead Sea manuscript 4QSam^a and Josephus have an additional passage, which supplies the background to the story. The passage relates that Nahash, king of the Ammonites, oppressed the Gadites and the Reubenites, gouging out the right eye of each of them, but 7,000 men escaped and came to Jabesh-gilead. 1: The Ammonites, who lived east of the Jordan, clashed with the Israelite tribes settled there (Judg. 10.6–11.33). 2: Gouging out eyes was considered deeply humiliating (Judg. 16.21; 2 Kings 25.7). 4: Gibeath belonged to Benjamin, and rael.”³ The elders of Jabesh said to him, “Give us seven days’ respite, so that we may send messengers throughout the territory of Israel; if no one comes to our aid, we will surrender to you.”⁴ When the messengers came to Gibeah of Saul and gave this report in the hearing of the people, all the people broke into weeping.

⁵ Saul was just coming from the field driving the cattle; and Saul asked, “Why are the people crying?” And they told him about the situation of the men of Jabesh. ⁶ When he heard these things, the spirit of God gripped Saul and his anger blazed up. ⁷ He took a yoke of oxen and cut them into pieces, which he sent by messengers throughout the territory of Israel, with the warning, “Thus shall be done to the cattle of anyone who does not follow Saul and Samuel into battle!” Terror from the LORD fell upon the people, and they came out as one man. ⁸ [Saul] mustered them in Bezek, and the Israelites numbered 300,000, the men of Judah 30,000. ⁹ The messengers who had come were told, “Thus shall you speak to the men of Jabesh-gilead: Tomorrow, when the sun grows hot, you shall be saved.” When the messengers came and told this to the men of Jabesh-gilead, they rejoiced. ¹⁰ The men of Jabesh then told [the Ammonites], “Tomorrow we will surrender to you, and you can do to us whatever you please.”

¹¹ The next day, Saul divided the troops into three columns; at the morning watch they entered the camp and struck down the Ammonites until the day grew hot. The survivors scattered; no two were left together.

¹² The people then said to Samuel, “Who was it said, ‘Shall Saul be king over us?’ Hand the men over and we will put them to death!”¹³ But Saul replied, “No man shall be put to death this day! For this day the LORD has brought victory to Israel.”

¹⁴ Samuel said to the people, “Come, let us go to Gilgal and there inaugurate the monarchy.”¹⁵ So all the people went to Gilgal, and there at Gilgal they declared Saul king before the LORD. They offered sacrifices of well-being there before the LORD; and Saul and all the men of Israel held a great celebration there.

12 Then Samuel said to all Israel, “I have yielded to you in all you have asked of me and have set a king over you.² Henceforth the king will be your leader.

“As for me, I have grown old and gray—but my sons are still with you—and I have been your leader from my youth to this day.³ Here I am! Testify against me, in the presence of the LORD and in the presence of His anointed members of that tribe were related to the people of Jabesh (Judg. 21.14). 5: Saul, not yet inaugurated king, still works in the field. 6: The spirit of God, see 10.6 n. and cf. Judg. 6.34; 11.29; 14.6, 19; 15.14. 7: Military service was not compulsory, but Saul, with violent threats, manages to recruit the people. For a similar act, also performed at Gibeah, see Judg. 19.29. 8: Israel and Judah are thought of as different entities. David united them, but after Solomon they divided into two separate states. 10: We will surrender to you, lit. “we will come out to you.” This is understood by the Ammonites as “we will surrender,” but meant by the people of Jabesh as “we will fight.” 11: During the morning watch, the last of the three watches into which the night was divided, sleep is deepest. Saul attacks from three directions (cf. Gideon’s tactic, Judg. 7.16ff.). 12–13: Who was it said refers to 10.27. After Saul’s imposing victory opposition is tolerated no more, but Saul himself is prepared to forgive.

11.14–12.25: The prophet’s address. At the inception of the monarchy Samuel addresses the people, denouncing their request for a king and urging them to obey the LORD, but also trying to secure his own position under the new regime as spiritual authority. The address begins with the vindication of Samuel’s past leadership and ends with his continuing task as mediator between God and the people. In its ideas and language it evinces Deuteronomistic influence. 14–15: After Saul’s great achievement the time is fit to inaugurate him as king. Offering sacrifices and holding a great celebration, lit. “great rejoicing,” were part of the royal inauguration ceremony (1 Kings 1.25, 40; 2 Kings 11.14). 12.2–5: Samuel asserts—and his assertion is confirmed by the people—that he never abused his office for his own profit (whereas corruption among leaders is widespread), implying that his rejection is unjustified and an act of ingratitude (cf. Num. 16.15). 3: His one: Whose ox have I taken, or whose ass have I taken? Whom have I defrauded or whom have I robbed? From whom have I taken a bribe ^ato look the other way?^a I will return it to you.” ⁴They responded, “You have not defrauded us, and you have not robbed us, and you have taken nothing from anyone.” ⁵He said to them, “The LORD then is witness, and His anointed is witness, ^bto your admission^b this day that you have found nothing in my possession.” They^c responded, “He is!”

⁶Samuel said to the people, ^d“The LORD [is witness], He who appointed^d Moses and Aaron and who brought your fathers out of the land of Egypt. ⁷Come, stand before the LORD while I cite against you all the kindnesses that the LORD has done to you and your fathers.

⁸“When Jacob came to Egypt,^e . . . your fathers cried out to the LORD, and the LORD sent Moses and Aaron, who brought your fathers out of Egypt and settled them in this place. ⁹But they forgot the LORD their God; so He delivered them into the hands of Sisera the military commander of Hazor, into the hands of the Philistines, and into the hands of the kind of Moab; and these made war upon them. ¹⁰They cried to the LORD, ‘We are guilty, for we have forsaken the LORD and worshiped the Baalim and Ashtaroth. Oh, deliver us from our enemies and we will serve You.’ ¹¹And the LORD sent Jerubbaal and Bedan^f and Jephthah and Samuel, and delivered you from the enemies around you; and you dwelt in security. ¹²But when you saw that Nahash king of the Ammonites was advancing against you, you said to me, ‘No, we must have a king reigning over us’—though the LORD your God is your King.

¹³“Well, the LORD has set a king over you! Here is the king that you have chosen, that you have asked for.

¹⁴“If you will revere the LORD, worship Him, and obey Him, and will not flout the LORD’s command, if both you and the king who reigns over you will follow the LORD your God, [well and good]. ¹⁵But if you do not obey the LORD and you flout the LORD’s command, the hand of the LORD will strike you ^das it did your fathers.^d

¹⁶“Now stand by and see the marvelous thing that the LORD will do before your eyes. ¹⁷It is the season of the wheat harvest.^g I will pray to the LORD and He will send anointed one, see 2.10 n. 7–12: The LORD always delivered Israel from its enemies, even when their plight was caused by their own guilt, so there was no need to ask for a king in order to be delivered. 8: Cried out to the LORD, see Exod. 2.23.

9: The interpretation of the historical events largely conforms to the book of Judges: Deliverance into the hands of the enemies is seen as punishment for forsaking the LORD and worshipping other gods, deliverance from the enemies as the result of returning to Him. Sisera, see Judg. 4.2. Philistines, see Judg. 13.1. Moab, see Judg. 3.12.

10: They cried to the LORD . . ., see Judg. 10.10. The Baalim and Ashtaroth, see 7.3–4 n. 11: Jerubbaal, also called Gideon (see Judg. 7.1). Bedan, no judge by that name is known. The Rabbis tested, “Bedan is Samson” (b. Rosh Hash. 25a), since Bedan means “in Dan,” and Samson belonged to the tribe of Dan. But perhaps Barak should be read (see Judg. 4.6). Alternately, this refers to a judge not mentioned in the extant book of Judges.

12: The advance of Nahash is not mentioned in ch 8 among the reasons for requesting a king. Moreover, according to the order of the narratives, the request for a king (ch 8) preceded the war against Nahash (ch 11). But according to a passage in the Dead Sea manuscript 4QSam^a and in Josephus (see 11.1–13 n.), Nahash troubled Israel already before the war at Jabesh-gilead. These earlier attacks (together with the Philistine occupation; see 9.16) probably inspired the wish for a strong military leader.

a-a Septuagint reads “or a pair of sandals? [cf. Amos 2.6] Testify against me.”

b-b Lit. “against you.” c Heb. “he.”

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e Septuagint adds “the Egyptians oppressed them.”

f Septuagint “Barak.”

g When thunderstorms do not occur in the land of Israel.

thunder and rain; then you will take thought and realize what a wicked thing you did in the sight of the LORD when you asked for a king.”

¹⁸Samuel prayed to the LORD, and the LORD sent thunder and rain that day, and the people stood in awe of the LORD and of Samuel. ¹⁹The people all said to Samuel, “Intercede for your servants with the LORD your God that we may not die, for we have added to all our sins the wickedness of asking for a king.” ²⁰But Samuel said to the people, “Have no fear. You have, indeed, done all those wicked things. Do not, however, turn away from the LORD, but serve the LORD with all your heart. ²¹Do not turn away to follow worthless things, which can neither profit nor save but are worthless. ²²For the sake of His great name, the LORD will never abandon His people, seeing that the LORD undertook to make you His people.

²³“As for me, far be it from me to sin against the LORD and refrain from praying for you; and I will continue to instruct you in the practice of what is good and right. ²⁴Above all, you must revere the LORD and serve Him faithfully with all your heart; and consider how grandly He has dealt with you. ²⁵For if you persist in your wrongdoing, both you and your king shall be swept away.”

13 Saul was . . .^a years old when he became king, and he reigned over Israel two years. ²Saul picked 3,000 Israelites, of whom 2,000 were with Saul in Michmas^b and in the hill country of Bethel, and 1,000 with Jonathan in Gibeah of Benjamin; the rest of the troops he sent back to their homes. ³Jonathan struck down the Philistine prefect in Geba;^c and the Philistines heard about it. ⁴“Saul had the ram’s horn sounded throughout the land, saying, “Let the Hebrews hear.”^{-d}

⁴When all Israel heard that Saul had struck down the Philistine prefect, and that Israel had ^eincurred the wrath of^e the Philistines, all the people rallied to Saul at Gilgal. ⁵The Philistines, in turn, gathered to attack Israel: 30,000^f chariots and 6,000 horsemen, and troops as numerous as the sands of the seashore. They marched up and encamped at Michmas, east of Beth-aven.

a The number is lacking in the Heb. text; also, the precise context of the “two years” is uncertain. The verse is lacking in the Septuagint.

b So in oldest mss.; other mss. and editions read “Michmash” throughout the chapter.

c Apparently identical with Gibeah in v. 2.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e-e Lit. “became malodorous to.”

f Septuagint and other versions read “three thousand.”

18: The miracle demonstrates both the anger of the LORD and the power of Samuel’s prayer. In the land of Israel rain only falls from the late fall to the early spring. Rain during the harvest in the summer would cause the crop to spoil. 22: Abandonment of Israel would damage the LORD’s great name among the nations, who would attribute it to His impotence (cf. Num. 14.15–16; Josh. 7.9). 23: Samuel, whose authority is reconfirmed by the miracle, will continue to represent the people before God by means of prayer and represent God before the people by means of instruction. 25: The fate of the people and the king are intertwined.

13.1–14.52: The king’s failure and the prince’s success. Saul, in his first war against the Philistines, dreads their superior force, whereas Jonathan his son, convinced that God can grant victory “by many or by few” (14.6), takes action and achieves an impressive victory. 1: This formula—here incomplete—often introduces the reign of kings, e.g., 2 Sam. 2.10; 1 Kings 14.21; 22.42. 2: Saul sets up a standing army. Gibeah of Benjamin, see 10.5 n. 3: By killing the Philistine prefect Jonathan initiates the revolt. Sounding the ram’s horn serves to mobilize the Hebrews. To incite the Israelites to arms Saul uses the Philistine designation, “Hebrews” (see 4.6 n.). 4: Saul, as king, is credited with Jonathan’s deed. 5: The Philistine army exceeds the Israelite force by far. Unlike the Israelites, it has chariots, though the numbers mentioned seem greatly exaggerated. The Heb word translated horsemen can also mean “horses”; these were used for pulling the chariots, not for riding. As the sands of the seashore is a common figure (e.g., Gen. 22.17; Josh. 11.4).

6^aWhen the men of Israel saw that they were in trouble—for the troops were hard pressed—the people hid in caves, among thorns, among rocks, in tunnels, and in cisterns. 7Some Hebrews crossed the Jordan, [to] the territory of Gad and Gilead. Saul was still at Gilgal, and the rest of the people rallied to him in alarm.^a 8He waited seven days, the time that Samuel [had set].^b But when Samuel failed to come to Gilgal, and the people began to scatter, 9Saul said, “Bring me the burnt offering and the sacrifice of well-being”; and he presented the burnt offering. 10He had just finished presenting the burnt offering when Samuel arrived; and Saul went out to meet him and welcome him. 11But Samuel said, “What have you done?” Saul replied, “I saw the people leaving me and scattering; you had not come at the appointed time, and the Philistines had gathered at Michmas. 12I thought the Philistines would march down against me at Gilgal before I had entreated the LORD, so I ^aforced myself^a to present the burnt offering.” 13Samuel answered Saul, “You acted foolishly in not keeping the commandments that the LORD your God laid upon you! Otherwise^c the LORD would have established your dynasty over Israel forever. 14But now your dynasty will not endure. The LORD will seek out a man after His own heart, and the LORD will appoint him ruler over His people, because you did not abide by what the LORD had commanded you.”

15^dSamuel arose and went up from Gilgal^d to Gibeah^e of Benjamin. Saul numbered the troops who remained with him—about 600 strong. 16Saul and his son Jonathan, and the troops who remained with them, stayed in Geba of Benjamin, while the Philistines were encamped at Michmas. 17The raiders came out of the Philistine camp in three columns: One column headed for the Ophrah road that leads to the district of Shual, 18another column headed for the Beth-horon road, and the third column headed for the border^f road that overlooks the valley of Zeboim toward the desert.

19No smith was to be found in all the land of Israel, for the Philistines were afraid that the Hebrews would make swords or spears. 20So all the Israelites had to go down to 8–15a: The episode of Samuel’s clash with Saul connects with 10.8, where Samuel explicitly told Saul to wait for him. 9: It was customary to offer a sacrifice before battle (see 7.10). There are several instances of kings sacrificing, e.g., David (2 Sam. 6.17), Solomon (1 Kings 8.62–64), Jeroboam (1 Kings 13.1). 11–12: To Samuel’s short question, Saul, to justify himself, gives a lengthy answer. 13–14: Samuel is angry that Saul did not obey him and offered the sacrifice, a task that Samuel, as religious leader, wished to retain for himself. Samuel acknowledges Saul as the political leader of the people, not as the religious one. The words commandments and commanded are in Heb of the same root as appoint (tz-v-h), thus connecting the punishment with the sin according to the principle of measure for measure. Ruler, see 9.15–16 n. 15: Unlike the Septuagint, the Masoretic version fails to record that Saul goes from Gilgal to Gibeah (see v. 16). The omission is probably due to haplography (the copyist’s eye skipping from the first Gilgal to the second). Samuel refrains from accompanying Saul. 16: Geba and Michmas were across from each other, separated by a ravine with precipitous sides. 17–18: The raiders disperse in different directions in order to devastate the area (cf. 2 Sam. 11.1). 19–22: The Israelites are inferior to the Philistines not only in number, but also in the quality of their weapons. Not being allowed by the Philistines to manufacture or repair iron tools (the period described coincides with the beginning of the Iron Age), they do not have iron weapons, and are also dependent on the Philistines for the (expensive) maintenance of their agricultural implements.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b So some Heb. mss.; other mss., Septuagint, and Targum read “said.” Cf. 10.8.

c-c Change of vocalization yields, “You acted foolishly. If you had kept the commandment the LORD your God laid upon you . . .”

d-d Septuagint reads here, “Samuel rose and left Gilgal and went his way. The rest of the people followed Saul to meet the soldiers, and they went from Gilgal.”

e Sometimes called Geba; cf. vv. 3, 16; 14.5.

f Septuagint reads “Geba.”

the Philistines to have their plowshares, their mattocks, axes, and colters^a sharpened. ²¹^bThe charge for sharpening was a pim^c for plowshares, mattocks, three-pronged forks, and axes, and for setting the goads. ²²Thus on the day of the battle, no sword or spear was to be found in the possession of any of the troops with Saul and Jonathan; only Saul and Jonathan had them.

²³Now the Philistine garrison had marched out to the pass of Michmas.

14 One day, Jonathan son of Saul said to the attendant who carried his arms, "Come, let us cross over to the Philistine garrison on the other side"; but he did not tell his father. ²Now Saul was staying on the outskirts of Gibeah,^d under the pomegranate tree at Migron, and the troops with him numbered about 600. ³Ahijah son of Ahitub brother of Ichabod son of Phinehas son of Eli, the priest of the LORD at Shiloh, was there bearing an ephod.—The troops did not know that Jonathan had gone. ^{4e}At the crossing^e by which Jonathan sought to reach the Philistine garrison, there was a rocky crag on one side, and another rocky crag on the other, the one called Bozez and the other Seneh. ⁵One crag was located on the north, near Michmas, and the other on the south, near Geba.

⁶Jonathan said to the attendant who carried his arms, "Come, let us cross over to the outpost of those uncircumcised fellows. Perhaps the LORD will act in our behalf, for nothing prevents the LORD from winning a victory by many or by few." ⁷His arms-bearer answered him, "Do whatever 'you like. You go first,' I am ^gwith you, whatever you decide."^g ⁸Jonathan said, "We'll cross over to those men and let them see us. ⁹If they say to us, 'Wait until we get to you,' then we'll stay where we are, and not go up to them. ¹⁰But if they say, 'Come up to us,' then we will go up, for the LORD is delivering them into our hands. That shall be our sign." ¹¹They both showed themselves to the Philistine outpost and the Philistines said, "Look, some Hebrews are coming out of the holes where they have been hiding." ¹²The men of the outpost shouted to 21: The word pim occurs only here. Its meaning became clear when stone weights inscribed with this word were unearthed.

22: No sword or spear, made of iron.

14.3: Ichabod, see 4.21. The ephod was a device used by priests for consulting the LORD. 6: The repetition (see 14.1) serves to resume the thread of the story after the interruption depicting the background (vv. 2-5). Uncircumcised fellows, a contemptuous way to refer to the Philistines, who, unlike the Israelites and most peoples in the area, were not circumcised. This was considered a disgrace (cf. Gen. 34.14). 11-12: The presumptuous Philistines belittle the two Israelites. Hebrews, see 4.6 n. The holes, see 13.6.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads "sickle."

b Meaning of several terms in this verse uncertain.

c I.e., two-thirds of a shekel.

d See note e at 13.15.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

f-f Lit. "is in your heart. Incline yourself." Septuagint reads "your heart inclines to."

g-g Lit. "with you, according to your heart." Septuagint reads "with you; my heart is like your heart."

Jonathan and his arms-bearer, "Come up to us, and we'll teach you a lesson." Then Jonathan said to his arms-bearer, "Follow me, for the LORD will deliver them into the hands of Israel."¹³ And Jonathan clambered up on his hands and feet, his arms-bearer behind him; [the Philistines] fell before Jonathan, and his arms-bearer finished them off behind him.¹⁴ The initial attack that Jonathan and his arms-bearer made accounted for some twenty men, ^awithin a space about half a furrow long [in] an acre of land.^a ¹⁵ Terror broke out among all the troops both in the camp [and] in the field; the outposts and the raiders were also terrified. The very earth quaked, and a terror from God ensued.

¹⁶ Saul's scouts in Gibeah of Benjamin saw that the multitude was ^bscattering in all directions.^b ¹⁷ And Saul said to the troops with him, "Take a count and see who has left us." They took a count and found that Jonathan and his arms-bearer were missing.¹⁸ Thereupon Saul said to Ahijah, "Bring the Ark^c of God here"; for the Ark^c of God was at the time among^d the Israelites.¹⁹ But while Saul was speaking to the priest, the confusion in the Philistine camp kept increasing; and Saul said to the priest, "Withdraw your hand."²⁰ Saul and the troops with him assembled and rushed into battle; they found [the Philistines] in very great confusion, every man's sword turned against his fellow.²¹^a And the Hebrews who had previously sided with the Philistines, who had come up with them in the army [from] round about—they too joined the Israelites^a who were with Saul and Jonathan.²² When all the men of Israel who were hiding in the hill country of Ephraim heard that the Philistines were fleeing, they too pursued them in battle.²³ Thus the LORD brought victory to Israel that day.

The fighting passed beyond Beth-aven.²⁴^e The men of Israel were distressed^e that day. For Saul had laid an oath upon the troops: "Cursed be the man who eats any food before night falls and I take revenge on my enemies." So none of the troops ate anything.²⁵ Everybody came to a 'stack of beehives'^f where some honey had spilled on the ground.²⁶ When the troops came to the beehives^f and 13: Jonathan climbs the precipice at a difficult, unexpected site, thus surprising the Philistine outpost.

15: The very earth quaked, lit. "the land trembled," metonymical for "the people trembled." Terror from God, immense terror (cf. 11.7; Gen. 35.5). 19: Withdraw your hand: Do not continue consulting the LORD, because, in view of the confusion, there is neither need nor time for it. 21–22: Israelites who were in the service of the Philistines as well as those who were hiding (13.6) now join Saul's army.

24: Saul does not want the people to pause in the pursuit of the Philistines, but the result of his curse is that they become faint from hunger (cf. the rash vow of Jephthah, which also afflicted his own child, Judg. 11.30–31).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Lit. "shaken and going thither." Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Septuagint reads "ephod," and cf. vv. 3, 23.9, 30.7.

d Heb. "and."

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads "And all the troops, about 10,000 men, were with Saul; and the battle spread into the hill country of Ephraim. Now Saul committed a rash act."

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain; cf. Song of Songs 5.1.

found the flow of honey there, no one put^a his hand to his mouth, for the troops feared the oath. ²⁷Jonathan, however, had not heard his father adjure the troops. So he put out the stick he had with him, dipped it into the beehive of honey, and brought his hand back to his mouth; and his eyes lit up. ²⁸At this one of the soldiers spoke up, "Your father adjured the troops: 'Cursed be the man who eats anything this day.' And so the troops are faint." ²⁹Jonathan answered, "My father has brought trouble on the people. See for yourselves how my eyes lit up when I tasted that bit of honey. ³⁰If only the troops had eaten today of spoil captured from the enemy, the defeat of the Philistines would have been greater still!"

³¹They struck down the Philistines that day from Michmas to Aijalon, and the troops were famished. ³²The troops pounced on the spoil; they took the sheep and cows and calves and slaughtered them on the ground, and the troops ate with the blood.^b ³³When it was reported to Saul that the troops were sinning against the LORD, eating with the blood, he said, "You have acted faithlessly. Roll a large stone over to me today."^c ³⁴And Saul ordered, "Spread out among the troops and tell them that everyone must bring me his ox or his sheep and slaughter it here, and then eat. You must not sin against the LORD and eat with the blood." Every one of the troops brought^d his own ox with him^d that night and slaughtered it there. ³⁵Thus Saul set up an altar to the LORD; it was the first altar he erected to the LORD.

³⁶Saul said, "Let us go down after the Philistines by night and plunder among them until the light of morning; and let us not leave a single survivor among them." "Do whatever you please," they replied. But the priest said, "Let us approach God here." ³⁷So Saul inquired of God, "Shall I go down after the Philistines? Will You deliver them into the hands of Israel?" But this time He did not respond to him. ³⁸Then Saul said, "Come forward, all chief officers of the troops, and find out how this guilt was incurred today. ³⁹For as the LORD lives who brings victory to Israel, even if it was through my son Jonathan, he shall be put to death!" Not one soldier answered him. ⁴⁰And he said to all the Israelites, "You stand on one side, and my son Jonathan and I shall stand on the other." The troops said to Saul, "Do as you please." ⁴¹Saul then said to the 25-27: Beehives, rather "honeycombs." The Heb word may also be translated "forest" (in vv. 25-26). Honey was produced by wild bees (see Judg. 14.8-9) and considered a delicacy. 29-30: Jonathan openly criticizes his father. If the troops had eaten, they would have had more strength to pursue the Philistines. 32-34: It was forbidden to eat meat with the blood, which was considered to be the life (Lev. 19.26; Deut. 12.23). Accordingly, for meat to be kosher, rabbinic law requires that all traces of blood be meticulously removed. By slaughtering on the ground the blood will not drain out properly and will mix with the meat, whereas by slaughtering on a stone the blood can drain out and flow down, leaving the meat fit for consumption. 36-39: It was customary to inquire of God before going to battle (Num. 27.21). The lack of response is an indication of guilt. 40-42: The guilty person was found by means of the Urim and Thummim. These were lots allowing only yes-or-no answers (cf. Saul's questions in v. 37), so the people had to be divided into two groups, one group being indicated at each stage. From the fuller Septuagint reading the method becomes clear: The appearance of Urim meant yes; of Thummim, no (the omission in the Masoretic Text is probably due to haplography, the copyist's eye skipping from the first Israel to the last).

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b I.e., without the proper rites.

c Septuagint reads "here."

d-d Septuagint reads "whatever he had in his possession."

LORD, the God of Israel, ^a“Show Thammim.”^a Jonathan and Saul were indicated by lot, and the troops were cleared. ⁴²And Saul said, “Cast the lots between my son and me”; and Jonathan was indicated.

⁴³Saul said to Jonathan, “Tell me, what have you done?” And Jonathan told him, “I only tasted a bit of honey with the tip of the stick in my hand. I am ready to die.” ⁴⁴Saul said, “Thus and more may God do:^b You shall be put to death, Jonathan!” ⁴⁵But the troops said to Saul, “Shall Jonathan die, after bringing this great victory to Israel? Never! As the LORD lives, not a hair of his head shall fall to the ground! For he brought this day to pass with the help of God.” Thus the troops saved Jonathan and he did not die. ⁴⁶Saul broke off his pursuit of the Philistines, and the Philistines returned to their homes.

⁴⁷After Saul had secured his kingship over Israel, he waged war on every side against all his enemies: against the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, the Philistines, and the kings^c of Zobah; and wherever he turned he worsted [them]. ⁴⁸He was triumphant, defeating the Amalekites and saving Israel from those who plundered it.

⁴⁹Saul’s sons were: Jonathan, Ishvi,^d and Malchishua; and the names of his two daughters were Merab, the older, and Michal, the younger. ⁵⁰The name of Saul’s wife was Ahinoam daughter of Ahimaaz; and the name of his army commander was Abiner^e son of Saul’s uncle Ner. ⁵¹Kish, Saul’s father, and Ner, Abner’s father, were sons of Abiel.

⁵²There was bitter war against the Philistines all the days of Saul; and whenever Saul noticed any stalwart man or warrior, he would take him into his service.

15 Samuel said to Saul, “I am the one the LORD sent to anoint you king over His people Israel. Therefore, listen to the LORD’s command!”

²“Thus said the LORD of Hosts: I am exacting the penalty for what Amalek did to Israel, for the assault he made upon them on the road, on their way up from Egypt. ³Now go, attack Amalek, and proscribe^f all that belongs to him. Spare no one, but kill alike men and women, infants and sucklings, oxen and sheep, camels and asses!”

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads “Why have You not responded to Your servant today? If this iniquity was due to my son Jonathan or to me, O LORD, God of Israel, show Urim; and if You say it was due to Your people Israel, show Thummim.”

b Many mss. and Septuagint add “to me.”

c Septuagint and 4QSam^h read “king.”

d The same as Ishbosheth (2 Sam. 2.8) and Eshbaal (1 Chron. 8.33).

e Usually “Abner.” f See note at Josh. 6.18.

43: The lack of proportion between the “crime” (Jonathan only tasted and just a bit) and the punishment is manifest. Jonathan has broken a vow, however, and vows had to be observed unconditionally (Deut. 23.22–24). 44: Thus and more, see 3.17. 45: Not a hair of his head shall fall to the ground: The same hyperbolic expression occurs in 2 Sam. 14.11; 1 Kings 1.52. Saved, lit. “redeemed.” Although Jonathan did not hear his father’s oath, he is considered formally guilty, and therefore has to be redeemed (cf. Midrash Samuel: “Israel gave his weight in gold and redeemed him”). Biblical law allows in some cases redemption of the offender (see Exod. 21.30). 46: The statement that people returned home usually marks the end of a narrative (e.g., 15.34; 26.25). 47–52: A summary of Saul’s kingship, with regard to his wars and family. The Amalekites are mentioned separately, because the war against them will be the subject of the next story.

15.1–35: Rejection. As in 13.8–14 Saul and Samuel clash over the king’s insubordination to the prophet, and Samuel tells Saul that his kingship will not abide. But whereas in the earlier narrative the rejection referred to his dynasty, here it applies to Saul himself. There the clash occurred in connection with the war against the Philistines, here against Amalek, a nomadic people to the south of Israel. The Amalekites are regarded in the Bible as vicious adversaries of Israel; in later times the name Amalek came to signify “arch-enemy of the Jews.” 1: At the beginning of the narrative—without an introduction—Samuel stresses Saul’s obligation to obey. 2: The Amalekites’ vile attack upon Israel is described in Exod. 17.8–16; Deut. 25.17–19. 3: Proscription, practiced by Israel and other peoples in the ancient Near East, was a way of consecrating the fruits of victory to the deity; it meant exterminating all the people and all their belongings, as emphasized in the present v.

⁴Saul mustered the troops and enrolled them at Telaim: 200,000 men on foot, and 10,000 men of Judah. ⁵Then Saul advanced as far as the city of Amalek and ^alay in wait^a in the wadi. ⁶Saul said to the Kenites, "Come, withdraw at once from among the Amalekites, that I may not destroy you along with them; for you showed kindness to all the Israelites when they left Egypt." So the Kenites withdrew from among the Amalekites.

⁷Saul destroyed Amalek from Havilah all the way to Shur, which is close to Egypt, ⁸and he captured King Agag of Amalek alive. He proscribed all the people, putting them to the sword; ⁹but Saul and the troops spared Agag and the best of the sheep, the oxen, the second-born,^b the lambs, and all else that was of value. They would not proscribe them; they proscribed only ^awhat was cheap and worthless.^a ¹⁰The word of the LORD then came to Samuel: ¹¹"I regret that I made Saul king, for he has turned away from Me and has not carried out My commands." Samuel was distressed and he entreated the LORD all night long. ¹²Early in the morning Samuel went to meet Saul. Samuel was told, "Saul went to Carmel, where he erected a monument for himself; then he left and went on down to Gilgal."

¹³When Samuel came to Saul, Saul said to him, "Blessed are you of the LORD! I have fulfilled the LORD's command." ¹⁴"Then what," demanded Samuel, "is this bleating of sheep in my ears, and the lowing of oxen that I hear?" ¹⁵Saul answered, "They were brought from the Amalekites, for the troops spared the choicest of the sheep and oxen for sacrificing to the LORD your God. And we proscribed the rest." ¹⁶Samuel said to Saul, "Stop! Let me tell you what the LORD said to me last night!" "Speak," he replied. ¹⁷And Samuel said, "You may look small to yourself, but you are the head of the tribes of Israel. The LORD anointed you king over Israel, ¹⁸and the LORD sent you on a mission, saying, 'Go and proscribe the sinful Amalekites; make war on them until you have exterminated them.' ¹⁹Why did you disobey the LORD and swoop down on the spoil ^cin defiance of the LORD's will?"^c ²⁰Saul said to Samuel, "But I did obey the LORD! I performed the mission on which the LORD sent me: I captured King Agag of Amalek, and I proscribed Amalek, ²¹and the troops took from the spoil some sheep and oxen—the best of what had 4: The numbers are exaggerated; however, the Heb word for "thousand" may refer to a much smaller military unit. 5: The city of Amalek, their main settlement. 6: The Kenites were a nomadic tribe in the south of the country. It is unknown wherein their kindness to the Israelites consisted. According to Judg. 1.16; 4.11, Moses' father-in-law was a Kenite, and he extended help to the Israelites (Exod. 18.1-27; Num. 10.29). 8: Agag: In Esth. 3.1 Haman is called the Agagite. 12: Carmel, a town in the south of Judah. 15: Saul shifts the blame for the violation of the proscription to the troops, but in the proscription's execution he includes himself (we). He also contends that though the choicest animals were spared, this was done for a most worthy purpose. He possibly believes that he has in fact performed the LORD's command. 17: You may look small to yourself (cf. 9.21), but as head of Israel you bear responsibility. 18: Sinful, refers to all Amalekites, those at the time of the exodus as well as those living at the time of Saul. 20-21: To Samuel's accusation Saul replies by repeating his previous arguments.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Targum and Syriac read "fatlings."

c-c Lit. "and do what was evil in the sight of the LORD."

been proscribed—to sacrifice to the LORD your God at Gilgal.”²² But Samuel said:

“Does the LORD delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices

As much as in obedience to the LORD’s command?
Surely, obedience is better than sacrifice,
Compliance than the fat of rams.

²³ For rebellion is like the sin of divination,
Defiance, like the iniquity of teraphim.^a
Because you rejected the LORD’s command,
He has rejected you as king.”

²⁴ Saul said to Samuel, “I did wrong to transgress the LORD’s command and your instructions; but I was afraid of the troops and I yielded to them. ²⁵ Please, forgive my offense and come back with me, and I will bow low to the LORD.” ²⁶ But Samuel said to Saul, “I will not go back with you; for you have rejected the LORD’s command, and the LORD has rejected you as king over Israel.”

²⁷ As Samuel turned to leave, Saul seized the corner of his robe, and it tore. ²⁸ And Samuel said to him, “The LORD has this day torn the kingship over Israel away from you and has given it to another who is worthier than you. ²⁹ Moreover, the Glory^b of Israel does not deceive or change His mind, for He is not human that He should change His mind.” ³⁰ But [Saul] pleaded, “I did wrong. Please, honor me in the presence of the elders of my people and in the presence of Israel, and come back with me until I have bowed low to the LORD your God.” ³¹ So Samuel followed Saul back, and Saul bowed low to the LORD.

³² Samuel said, “Bring forward to me King Agag of Amalek.” Agag approached him “with faltering steps;”^c and Agag said, “Ah, bitter death is at hand!”^b

³³ Samuel said:

“As your sword has bereaved women,
So shall your mother be bereaved among women.”
And Samuel “cut Agag down”^d before the LORD at Gilgal.

³⁴ Samuel then departed for Ramah, and Saul went up to his home at Gibeath of Saul.

³⁵ Samuel never saw Saul again to the day of his death. But Samuel grieved over Saul, because the LORD regretted
16 that He had made Saul king over Israel. ¹ And the LORD said to Samuel, “How long will you grieve over Saul, since I have rejected him as king over Israel? Fill your horn with oil and set out; I am sending you to 22–23: The poetic form of these vv. serves to highlight their significance. They convey the message that right is more important than rite. Samuel is the first in the line of prophets such as Amos, Isaiah, and Micah, who do not attribute paramount importance to sacrifices. Most of the literary prophets demand moral behavior along with ritual; only Jeremiah (7.21–23) resembles Samuel in demanding obedience to the LORD. The fat of rams, the best part. Rebellion against the LORD is like the sin of divination (which is a form of idolatry; see Deut. 18.9–14), both involving turning away from Him. The repetition of rejected hints at the principle of measure for measure, the punishment corresponding to the sin. By enthroning Saul the people rejected the LORD as king (8.7); now the LORD rejects Saul as king. 24: Though now admitting his guilt, Saul still shifts the blame to the troops. 25: In asking for forgiveness Saul hopes that his rejection will be revoked. 28: Samuel gives a symbolic interpretation to the tearing of the robe (for a similar interpretation, see 1 Kings 11.30–31; cf. also 1 Sam. 24.5). 29: This verse seems to contradict vv. 11 and 35. The LORD does occasionally regret His previous decisions, for instance when a person’s behavior displeases Him (see Gen. 6.6). Perhaps the sense is that He is not fickle like human beings. 30: This time Saul does not shift the blame to others, but he still accompanies his confession with a personal request to prevent his public humiliation. 31: Samuel’s compliance with Saul’s request does not mean that he has forgiven him. 32: Instead of with faltering steps, the Heb may be translated, “with delight”; and instead of is at hand, “has gone away.” According to this interpretation Agag expects that the prophet will save his life. Ironically, however, the opposite happens. 33: Samuel’s poetic lines justify Agag’s punishment by stressing its correspondence with his sins. 34: See 14.46 n.

a Idols consulted for oracles; see Ezek. 21.26; Zech. 10.2.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c-c From root ma’ad, “to faller”; cf. Septuagint.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Jesse the Bethlehemite, for I have decided on one of his sons to be king." ²Samuel replied, "How can I go? If Saul hears of it, he will kill me." The LORD answered, "Take a heifer with you, and say, 'I have come to sacrifice to the LORD.' ³Invite Jesse to the sacrificial feast, and then I will make known to you what you shall do; you shall anoint for Me the one I point out to you." ⁴Samuel did what the LORD commanded. When he came to Bethlehem, the elders of the city went out in alarm to meet him and said, "Do you come on a peaceful errand?" ⁵"Yes," he replied, "I have come to sacrifice to the LORD. Purify yourselves and join me in the sacrificial feast." He also instructed Jesse and his sons to purify themselves and invited them to the sacrificial feast.

⁶When they arrived and he saw Eliab, he thought: "Surely the LORD's anointed stands before Him." ⁷But the LORD said to Samuel, "Pay no attention to his appearance or his stature, for I have rejected him. For not as man sees [does the LORD see];^a man sees only what is visible, but the LORD sees into the heart." ⁸Then Jesse called Abinadab and had him pass before Samuel; but he said, "The LORD has not chosen this one either." ⁹Next Jesse presented Shammah; and again he said, "The LORD has not chosen this one either." ¹⁰Thus Jesse presented seven of his sons before Samuel, and Samuel said to Jesse, "The LORD has not chosen any of these."

¹¹Then Samuel asked Jesse, "Are these all the boys you have?" He replied, "There is still the youngest; he is tending the flock." And Samuel said to Jesse, "Send someone to bring him, for we will not ^bsit down to eat^b until 16.1-13: Anointing renewed. In this first story about David he still plays a passive role. Even his name is not mentioned until the last v. His being chosen, though the youngest and least esteemed of eight brothers, agrees with the biblical motif of the younger being preferred to the elder: Abel to Cain (Gen. 4.2-5), Isaac to Ishmael (Gen. 21.9-13), Jacob to Esau (Gen. 27.28-40), Joseph to Reuben (Gen. 37.3-11; 49.3-4, 22-26). This indicates that not seniority, but suitability, is the decisive factor.

1: Samuel's grieving over Saul links the beginning of this narrative to the end of the previous one. The verb rejected evokes not only 15.23, but also 8.7; 10.19; 15.26. The hollow ram's horn was used as a vessel. 2: He will kill me, for subversive action. The sacrifice serves to disguise Samuel's mission.

4: In alarm, in fear that the prophet's visit portends evil. 6-7: Eliab's stature reminds Samuel of Saul, who was also tall (9.2; 10.23). But height and outward appearance are unimportant: God, who knows each person from within, has rejected Eliab, just as He rejected Saul. 10: For the names of Jesse's sons, see 1 Chron. 2.13-15; 27.18. 11: The shepherd who tends the flock is the one suited to tend the people (cf. Ps. 78.70-71). Moses is depicted as a shepherd (Exod. 3.1) and "shep-

^a These words are preserved in the Septuagint.

^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

David's early career and his flight from Saul according to the book of Samuel he gets here." ¹²So they sent and brought him. He was "ruddy-cheeked, bright-eyed," and handsome. And the LORD said, "Rise and anoint him, for this is the one." ¹³Samuel took the horn of oil and anointed him in the presence of his brothers; and the spirit of the LORD gripped David from that day on. Samuel then set out for Ramah.

¹⁴Now the spirit of the LORD had departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the LORD began to terrify him. ¹⁵Saul's courtiers said to him, "An evil spirit of God is terrifying you. ¹⁶Let our lord give the order [and] the courtiers in attendance on you will look for someone who is skilled at playing the lyre; whenever the evil spirit of God comes over you, he will play it^a and you will feel better." ¹⁷So Saul said to his courtiers, "Find me someone who can play well and bring him to me." ¹⁸One of the attendants spoke up, "I have observed a son of Jesse the Bethlehemite who is skilled in music; he is a stalwart fellow and a warrior, sensible in speech, and handsome in appearance, and the LORD is with him." ¹⁹Whereupon Saul sent messengers to Jesse to say, "Send me your son David, who is with the flock." ²⁰Jesse took "an ass [laden with]" bread, a skin of wine, and a kid, and sent them to Saul by his son David. ²¹So David came to Saul and entered his service; [Saul] took a strong liking to him and made him one of his arms-bearers. ²²Saul sent word to Jesse, "Let David remain in my service, for I am pleased with him." ²³Whenever the [evil] spirit of God came upon Saul, David would take the lyre and play it;^a Saul would find relief and feel better, and the evil spirit would leave him.

17 The Philistines assembled their forces for battle; they massed at Socoh of Judah, and encamped at Ephes-dammim, between Socoh and Azekah. ²Saul and the men of Israel massed and encamped in the valley of Elah. They drew up their line of battle against the Philis-

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

herd" was a common epithet of the king in the ancient Near East. 13: On anointing, see 10.1 n. In the presence of his brothers, without strangers, to keep the anointing secret. The spirit of the LORD, see 10.6 n.

16.14–23: The king's musician. David, on arriving at the court, immediately wins Saul's affection, and the initial relations between the king and the young musician are most promising. Saul's problem, the subject of the first part of the narrative, is solved by David in the second part. 14: The spirit of the LORD departed from Saul when it gripped David (v. 13), and in its place came an evil spirit, manifested in attacks of mental disorder. 16: Music therapy may be beneficial in relieving mental distress. 18: The person recommended is not only a skilled musician (cf. Amos 6.5), but excels in many other fields as well. The characterization summarizes David's traits, which will emerge in the following narratives (and which make him suitable to be king). David's depiction as a musician contributed to the tradition that he composed the psalms. 20: The presents serve to express Jesse's loyalty and to secure a favorable treatment for his son.

17.1–18.5: The shepherd boy and the giant. The story of David and Goliath demonstrates the triumph of faith over physical strength. The detailed description of Goliath's weapons and the rejection of Saul's armor by David serve, together with David's speech before the battle (vv. 45–47), to underscore this idea. Fairy-tale motifs have been incorporated in the narrative: A giant terrifies the community; riches and the king's daughter are promised to him who slays the giant; three elder brothers are unable to do so; and only the youngest and least esteemed brother achieves success by the use of clever, unconventional means. Several details in the narrative are inconsistent with the preceding ch: David and his family are introduced as new characters (vv. 12–14); David is with his family in Bethlehem and not with Saul (vv. 17–20); and Saul does not know David (vv. 55–58). These discrepancies do not occur in the much shorter Septuagint version (which lacks 17.12–31, 55–58 and 18.1–5). The Masoretic version is most probably a combination of two narratives—one identical with the Septuagint version, the other independent and unaware of the foregoing narratives. (For additional inconsistencies in the narrative, see v. 54 n. and 2 Samuel 21.19 n.) 1–3: The exposition describes the parallel positions of the opposing forces. 4–7: The equilibrium is disturbed by the appear-tines,³ with the Philistines stationed on one hill and Israel stationed on the opposite hill; the ravine was between them.⁴ A champion^a of the Philistine forces stepped forward; his name was Goliath of Gath, and he was six cubits and a span tall.⁵ He had a bronze helmet on his head, and wore a breastplate of scale armor, a bronze breastplate weighing five thousand shekels.⁶ He had bronze greaves on his legs, and a bronze javelin [slung] from his shoulders.⁷ The shaft of his spear was like a weaver's bar, and the iron head of his spear weighed six hundred shekels; and the shield-bearer marched in front of him.

⁸He stopped and called out to the ranks of Israel and he said to them, "Why should you come out to engage in battle? I am the Philistine [champion], and you are Saul's servants. Choose^b one of your men and let him come down against me.⁹ If he bests me in combat and kills me, we will become your slaves; but if I best him and kill him, you shall be our slaves and serve us."¹⁰ And the Philistine ended, "I herewith defy the ranks of Israel. Get me a man and let's fight it out!"¹¹ When Saul and all Israel heard these words of the Philistine, they were dismayed and terror-stricken.

¹²David was the son of a certain Ephrathite of Bethlehem in Judah whose name was Jesse. He had eight sons, and in the days of Saul the man was already old, advanced in years.^b ¹³The three oldest sons of Jesse had left and gone with Saul to the war. The names of his three sons who had gone to the war were Eliab the first-born, the next Abinadab, and the third Shammah;¹⁴ and David was the youngest. The three oldest had followed Saul,¹⁵ and David would go back and forth from attending on Saul to shepherd his father's flock at Bethlehem.

¹⁶The Philistine stepped forward morning and evening and took his stand for forty days.

¹⁷Jesse said to his son David, "Take an ephah of this parched corn and these ten loaves of bread for your brothers, and carry them quickly to your brothers in camp.¹⁸ Take these ten cheeses^b to the captain of their thousand. Find out how your brothers are and bring some token^b from them."¹⁹ Saul and ^cthe brothers^c and all the men of Israel were in the valley of Elah, in the war against the Philistines.

²⁰Early next morning, David left someone in charge of the flock, took [the provisions], and set out, as his father Jesse had instructed him. He reached the barricade^b as the

ance of the Philistine champion, whose height and arms are described in atypical detail. The description of the man's armor and weaponry serves to explain why he caused such great terror among the Israelites and also to contrast him with David, who prevails over him without any military equipment (vv. 39, 45, 50). The custom of champions from both sides fighting each other as representatives of their armies is known from the Bible (2 Samuel 2.14–16) and also from the Iliad (3.85–95; 7.66–91), where Trojan and Greek champions—Paris and Menelaus, Hector and Ajax—oppose each other (the Philistines originated from the area of the Aegean; see 4.1b n.). Its purpose was to prevent large-scale fighting of the entire armies. 4: The name Goliath is mentioned only here and in v. 23. Otherwise the man is always called the Philistine. Perhaps he was initially anonymous, and his name was added later from 2 Samuel 21.19. Six cubits and a span, almost 3 meters (about 9 feet). 5: Five thousand shekels: approximately 60 kg (about 130 pounds). 7: Like a weaver's bar: The comparison refers either to the size of the shaft or to a loop attached to it to facilitate hurling. In the first case, the weaver's bar is the beam to which the warp is fastened in a loom; in the second, it denotes the shaft carrying the eyed strings for separating the threads of the warp. Six hundred shekels, about 7 kg (15 pounds). 12: Instead of certain the Heb has "this," which serves to connect the present narrative to the preceding ones, where Jesse was already mentioned. 15: This v. serves to reconcile this narrative, in which David is at home, with the preceding one, in which he is with Saul. 16: The protraction of the war necessitates sending food to the warriors. 17: Ephah, about 23 liters (21 quarts). 18: Captain of . . . thousand, officer in charge of a large military unit. 19: These are probably still the words of Jesse, instructing David where to go (instead of were, the Heb may be translated "are"). 20: Barricade, army was going out to the battle lines shouting the war cry. ²¹Israel and the Philistines drew up their battle lines opposite each other. ²²David left his baggage with the man in charge of the baggage and ran toward the battle line and went to greet his brothers. ²³While he was talking to them, the champion, whose name was Goliath, the Philistine of Gath, stepped forward from the Philistine ranks and spoke the same words as before; and David heard him.

^a Lit. "the man of the space between," i.e., between the armies.

^b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^{c-c} Heb. "they."

²⁴When the men of Israel saw the man, they fled in terror. ²⁵And the men of Israel were saying [among themselves], "Do you see that man coming out? He comes out to defy Israel! The man who kills him will be rewarded by the king with great riches; he will also give him his daughter in marriage and grant exemption^a to his father's house in Israel." ²⁶David asked the men standing near him, "What will be done for the man who kills that Philistine and removes the disgrace from Israel? Who is that uncircumcised Philistine that he dares defy the ranks of the living God?" ²⁷The troops told him in the same words what would be done for the man who killed him.

²⁸When Eliab, his oldest brother, heard him speaking to the men, Eliab became angry with David and said, "Why did you come down here, and with whom did you leave those few sheep in the wilderness? I know your impudence and your impertinence:^b you came down to watch the fighting!" ²⁹But David replied, "What have I done now? I was only asking!" ³⁰And he turned away from him toward someone else; he asked the same question, and the troops gave him the same answer as before.

³¹The things David said were overheard and were reported to Saul, who had him brought over. ³²David said to Saul, "Let 'no man's' courage fail him. Your servant will go and fight that Philistine!" ³³But Saul said to David, "You cannot go to that Philistine and fight him; you are only a boy, and he has been a warrior from his youth!" ³⁴David replied to Saul, "Your servant has been tending his father's sheep, and if a lion or^d a bear came and carried off an animal from the flock, ³⁵I would go after it and fight it and rescue it from its mouth. And if it attacked me, I would seize it by the beard and strike it down and kill it. ³⁶Your servant has killed both lion and bear; and that uncircumcised Philistine shall end up like one of them, for he has defied the ranks of the living God. ³⁷The LORD," David went on, "who saved me from lion and bear will lit. "circle," the round army camp (cf. 26.5, where the same word is used). 26: Uncircumcised, see 14.6 n. 28: The eldest brother had great authority in the family, and the younger ones had to obey him. Eliab accuses David of irresponsible behavior, vicious intent, and malice (rather than impudence and impertinence), but David, on the contrary, has acted responsibly (v. 20) and carried out his father's mission faithfully. 34-35: If, the Heb expresses "each time that." Having fought wild animals more than once, David is not inexperienced in fighting strong opponents.

a I.e., freedom from royal levies. b Lit. "badness of heart."
c-c Septuagint reads "not my lord's." d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

also save me from that Philistine." "Then go," Saul said to David, "and may the LORD be with you!"

³⁸Saul clothed David in his own garment; he placed a bronze helmet on his head and fastened ^aa breastplate on him.^a ³⁹David girded his sword over his garment. Then he ^btried to walk; but^b he was not used to it. And David said to Saul, "I cannot walk in these, for I am not used to them." So David took them off. ⁴⁰He took his stick, picked a few^c smooth stones from the wadi, put them in the pocket^d of his shepherd's bag and, sling in hand, he went toward the Philistine.

⁴¹The Philistine, meanwhile, was coming closer to David, preceded by his shield-bearer. ⁴²When the Philistine caught sight of David, he scorned him, for he was but a boy, ruddy and handsome. ⁴³And the Philistine called out to David, "Am I a dog that you come against me with sticks?" The Philistine cursed David by his gods; ⁴⁴and the Philistine said to David, "Come here, and I will give your flesh to the birds of the sky and the beasts of the field."

⁴⁵David replied to the Philistine, "You come against me with sword and spear and javelin; but I come against you in the name of the LORD of Hosts, the God of the ranks of Israel, whom you have defied. ⁴⁶This very day the LORD will deliver you into my hands. I will kill you and cut off your head; and I will give ^ethe carcasses^e of the Philistine camp to the birds of the sky and the beasts of the earth. All the earth shall know that there is a God in' Israel. ⁴⁷And this whole assembly shall know that the LORD can give victory without sword or spear. For the battle is the LORD's, and He will deliver you into our hands."

⁴⁸When the Philistine began to advance toward him again, David quickly ran up to the battle line to face the Philistine. ⁴⁹David put his hand into the bag; he took out a stone and slung it. It struck the Philistine in the forehead; the stone sank into his forehead, and he fell face down on the ground. ⁵⁰Thus David bested the Philistine with sling and stone; he struck him down and killed him. David had no sword; ⁵¹so David ran up and stood over the Philistine, grasped his sword and pulled it from its sheath; and with it he dispatched him and cut off his head.

When the Philistines saw that their warrior was dead, they ran. ⁵²The men of Israel and Judah rose up with a war cry and they pursued the Philistines all the way to 38-39: David has no military experience and is not used to wearing armor. 40: David prefers the simple implements of the shepherd. Wadi, a dry streambed. Sling, a strip of cloth or leather folded double, in the center of which a stone is placed. The sling is held at the ends and rotated, and then one end is suddenly released, which causes the stone to fly with great force to its target. Exactly hitting the mark requires considerable dexterity (cf. Judg. 20.16). The sling was used by shepherds, hunters, and soldiers. 42: Cf. 16.12. 43-47: Delivering speeches before the battle, which is also attested in the Iliad (see vv. 4-7 n.), served to strengthen the spirit of one side and demoralize the other. Whereas the Philistine trusts in his arms, David trusts in the LORD of Hosts, the God of the ranks of Israel, who determines the battle. 48: The heavily armed Philistine moves slowly; David runs quickly. 49: While still at a distance, David hurls the stone at the unsuspecting Philistine. 50-51: Though killed by the stone, Goliath is finished off with his own sword.

a-a Heb. "clothed him in a breastplate" (cf. v. 5), because a breastplate was combined with a leather jerkin.

b-b Septuagint reads "was unable to walk, for . . ." c Lit. "five."

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. e-e Septuagint reads "your carcass and the carcasses."

f So many Heb. mss. and ancient versions; other mss. and the editions read "to."

Gai^a and up to the gates of Ekron; the Philistines fell mortally wounded along the road to Shaarim up to Gath and Ekron. ⁵³Then the Israelites returned from chasing the Philistines and looted their camp.

⁵⁴David took the head of the Philistine and brought it to Jerusalem;^b and he put his weapons in his own tent.

⁵⁵When Saul saw David going out to assault the Philistine, he asked his army commander Abner, "Whose son is that boy, Abner?" And Abner replied, "By your life, Your Majesty, I do not know." ⁵⁶"Then find out whose son that young fellow is," the king ordered. ⁵⁷So when David returned after killing the Philistine, Abner took him and brought him to Saul, with the head of the Philistine still in his hand. ⁵⁸Saul said to him, "Whose son are you, my boy?" And David answered, "The son of your servant Jesse the Bethlehemite."

18 When [David] finished speaking with Saul, Jonathan's soul became bound up with the soul of David; Jonathan loved David as himself. ²Saul took him [into his service] that day and would not let him return to his father's house.—³Jonathan and David made a pact, because [Jonathan] loved him as himself. ⁴Jonathan took off the cloak and tunic he was wearing and gave them to David, together with his sword, bow, and belt. ⁵David went out [with the troops], and he was successful in every mission on which Saul sent him, and Saul put him in command of all the soldiers; this pleased all the troops and Saul's courtiers as well. ⁶When the [troops] came home [and] David returned from killing the Philistine, "the women of all the towns of Israel came out singing and dancing to greet King Saul^c with timbrels, shouting, and sistrums."^d ⁷The women sang as they danced, and they chanted:

Saul has slain his thousands;

David, his tens of thousands!

⁸Saul was much distressed and greatly vexed about the matter. For he said, "To David they have given tens of thousands, and to me they have given thousands. All that he lacks is the kingship!" ⁹From that day on Saul kept a jealous eye on David. ¹⁰The next day an evil spirit of God gripped Saul and he began to rave in the house, while David was playing [the lyre], as he did daily. Saul had a a Septuagint reads "Gath"; cf. end of verse.

b I.e., after David's capture of Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5).

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads "the dancing women came out to meet David from all the towns of Israel."

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

54: Since Jerusalem was not yet in Israelite hands and David did not yet have his own tent, the v. must be anticipatory (cf. v. 57). 55–58: Saul inquires about David's father, though in the preceding narrative he is said to have sent a message to Jesse (see 17.1–18.5 n.). In the past a person's identity was mainly determined by his or her ancestry (see Gen. 24.23–24; 1 Sam. 1.1; 9.1; for David's ancestors, see Ruth 4.18–22). 18.1–5: Jonathan's love for David is expressed practically in the pact between them, and symbolically in the bestowal of the garments and arms—which, however, were also of considerable real value. 5: Soldiers, lit. "men of war," i.e., professional soldiers or perhaps raiders.

18.6–30: Jealousy. David, who after his victory over Goliath is successful in all his undertakings and loved by everyone, including the king's son and daughter, arouses the jealousy and enmity of Saul, who schemes to get rid of his (supposed) rival, but his attempts all fail. Three times the narrative states that David is successful (vv. 5, 14, 30), and three times that Saul fears David because the LORD is with him (vv. 12, 14–15, 28–29). The narrative makes Saul completely transparent by repeatedly and explicitly disclosing his feelings and motives. 6: For the custom of women greeting the victors with dance and song, see Exod. 15.20–21; Judg. 11.34; 2 Samuel 1.20. 7–8: Thousands and tens of thousands are regularly paired in the parallelisms of biblical poetry (e.g., Deut. 32.30; Ps. 91.7), the greater number always appearing in the second line. Thus, although a stereotypical phrase is being used, Saul infers from the order of the numbers that the women praise David more than him. 10: The next day: The indication of time hints at a causal relation between Saul's vexation and his fit of mental disorder. Rave, lit. "speak in ecstasy" (see 10.5–6, 10). David was playing, see 16.23.

spear in his hand,¹¹ and Saul threw^a the spear, thinking to pin David to the wall. But David eluded him twice.¹² Saul was afraid of David, for the LORD was with him and had turned away from Saul.¹³ So Saul removed him from his presence and appointed him chief of a thousand,^b to march at the head of the troops.^b ¹⁴David was successful in all his undertakings, for the LORD was with him;¹⁵ and when Saul saw that he was successful, he dreaded him.¹⁶ All Israel and Judah loved David, for he marched at their head.

¹⁷Saul said to David, "Here is my older daughter, Merab; I will give her to you in marriage; in return, you be my warrior and fight the battles of the LORD." Saul thought: "Let not my hand strike him; let the hand of the Philistines strike him."¹⁸ David replied to Saul, "Who am I and ^cwhat is my life?—my father's family in Israel—that I should become Your Majesty's son-in-law?"¹⁹ But at the time that Merab, daughter of Saul, should have been given to David, she was given in marriage to Adriel the Meholathite.²⁰ Now Michal daughter of Saul had fallen in love with David; and when this was reported to Saul, he was pleased.²¹ Saul thought: "I will give her to him, and she can serve as a snare for him, so that the Philistines may kill him." So Saul said to David, ^d"You can become my son-in-law even now through the second one."^d ²²And Saul instructed his courtiers to say to David privately, "The king is fond of you and all his courtiers like you. So why not become the king's son-in-law?"²³ When the king's courtiers repeated these words to David, David replied, "Do you think that becoming the son-in-law of a king is a small matter, when I am but a poor man of no consequence?"²⁴ Saul's courtiers reported to him, "This is what David answered."²⁵ And Saul said, "Say this to David: 'The king desires no other bride-price than the foreskins of a hundred Philistines, as vengeance on the king's enemies.'"²⁶—Saul intended to bring about David's death at the hands of the Philistines.—²⁶When his courtiers told this to David, David was pleased with the idea of becoming the king's son-in-law. ^dBefore the time had expired,^d ²⁷David went out with his men and killed two hundred^e Philistines; David brought their foreskins and ^dthey were counted out^d for the king, that he might become the king's son-in-law. Saul then gave him his 13: Chief of a thousand, 17.18 n.

17: Saul is prepared to give his daughter to David as promised (17.25), but he imposes additional conditions. Warrior, lit. "man of strength," i.e., of courage. Saul wants David to undertake daring and dangerous exploits. The battles of the LORD are in fact the battles of Israel. 18: David's reply shows his humility. 20: Michal is the only woman in all biblical narrative of whom it is said that she loves a man (see also v. 28). 25: Since David is poor (v. 23) he cannot pay the bride-price. Foreskins: This would prove that David has killed Philistines, who were not circumcised (see 14.6 n.), and not men of another group. 27: According to the Masoretic Text David doubles the bride-price, which shows his prowess in battle. He becomes the king's son-in-law at Saul's, not his own, initiative. This position gives him right of succession, though Saul's own sons have precedence.

a Change of vocalization yields "raised."

b-b Lit. "and he went out and came in before the troops."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Change of vocalization yields "who are my kin."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e Septuagint reads "one hundred" and cf. 2 Sam. 3.14.

daughter Michal in marriage. ²⁸When Saul realized that the LORD was with David ^aand that Michal daughter of Saul loved him,^a ²⁹Saul grew still more afraid of David; and Saul was David's enemy ever after.

³⁰The Philistine chiefs marched out [to battle]; and every time they marched out, David was more successful than all the other officers of Saul. His reputation soared.

19 Saul urged his son Jonathan and all his courtiers to kill David. But Saul's son Jonathan was very fond of David, ²and Jonathan told David, "My father Saul is bent on killing you. Be on your guard tomorrow morning; get to a secret place and remain in hiding. ³I will go out and stand next to my father in the field where you will be, and I will speak to my father about you. If I learn anything, I will tell you." ⁴So Jonathan spoke well of David to his father Saul. He said to him, "Let not Your Majesty wrong his servant David, for he has not wronged you; indeed, all his actions have been very much to your advantage. ⁵He took his life in his hands and killed the Philistine, and the LORD wrought a great victory for all Israel. You saw it and rejoiced. Why then should you incur the guilt of shedding the blood of an innocent man, killing David without cause?" ⁶Saul heeded Jonathan's plea, and Saul swore, "As the LORD lives, he shall not be put to death!" ⁷Jonathan called David, and Jonathan told him all this. Then Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he served him as before.

⁸Fighting broke out again. David went out and fought the Philistines. He inflicted a great defeat upon them and they fled before him. ⁹Then an evil spirit of the LORD came upon Saul while he was sitting in his house with his spear in his hand, and David was playing [the lyre]. ¹⁰Saul tried to pin David to the wall with the spear, but he eluded Saul, so that he drove the spear into the wall. David fled and got away.

That night ¹¹Saul sent messengers to David's home to keep watch on him and to kill him in the morning. But David's wife Michal told him, "Unless you run for your life tonight, you will be killed tomorrow." ¹²Michal let David down from the window and he escaped and fled. ¹³Michal then took the household idol, laid it on the bed, and covered it with a cloth; and at its head she put a net of goat's hair. ¹⁴Saul sent messengers to seize David; but she said, "He is sick." ¹⁵Saul, however, sent back the messengers to see David for themselves. "Bring him up to me in the bed,"

19.1-24: Escape. All three stories in this ch deal with Saul's unceasing efforts to kill David. Jonathan and Michal prove their love for David by acting in his behalf, opposing their father. 2: Tomorrow morning, the time fixed for killing David. 4: Wrong, lit. "sin against." Wronged, lit. "sinned against." 5: Incur the guilt of, lit. "sin by." The repetitions of "sin" emphasize that by killing a man without sin Saul will gravely sin himself. This will contrast with David's behavior later in the book, when he refuses to kill the guilty Saul. 8-10: David's success again arouses Saul's jealousy (cf. 18.10-11). 11: To keep watch, so that David cannot escape. 13: Michal risks her life in order to gain time for David and enable him to get farther away. Household idol, see Gen. 31.19, 35.

a-a Septuagint reads "and that all Israel loved him."

he ordered, "that he may be put to death."¹⁶ When the messengers came, they found the household idol in the bed, with the net of goat's hair at its head.¹⁷ Saul said to Michal, "Why did you play that trick on me and let my enemy get away safely?" "Because," Michal answered Saul, "he said to me: 'Help me get away or I'll kill you.'"

¹⁸David made good his escape, and he came to Samuel at Ramah and told him all that Saul had done to him. He and Samuel went and stayed at Naioth.¹⁹ Saul was told that David was at Naioth in Ramah,²⁰ and Saul sent messengers to seize David. They^a saw a band of prophets^b speaking in ecstasy,^b with Samuel standing by^c as their leader;^c and the spirit of God came upon Saul's messengers and they too began to speak in ecstasy.²¹ When Saul was told about this, he sent other messengers; but they too spoke in ecstasy. Saul sent a third group of messengers; and they also spoke in ecstasy.²² So he himself went to Ramah. When he came to^d "the great cistern at Secu,"^d he asked, "Where are Samuel and David?" and was told that they were at Naioth in Ramah.²³ He was on his way there, to Naioth in Ramah, when the spirit of God came upon him too; and he walked on, speaking in ecstasy, until he reached Naioth in Ramah.²⁴ Then he too stripped off his clothes and he too spoke in ecstasy before Samuel; and he lay naked all that day and all night. That is why people say, "Is Saul too among the prophets?"

20 David fled from Naioth in Ramah; he came to Jonathan and said, "What have I done, what is my crime and my guilt against your father, that he seeks my life?"² He replied, "Heaven forbid! You shall not die. My father does not do anything, great or small, without disclosing it to me; why should my father conceal this matter from me? It cannot be!"³ David^e swore further,^e "Your father knows well that you are fond of me and has decided: Jonathan must not learn of this or he will be grieved. But, as the LORD lives and as you live, there is only a step between me and death."⁴ Jonathan said to David, "Whatever you want, I will do it for you."

⁵David said to Jonathan, "Tomorrow is the new moon, and I 'am to sit with the king at the meal. Instead, let^f me go and I will hide in the countryside until the third^g evening.⁶ If your father notes my absence, you say, 'David 17: Michal lies to her father, telling him that self-preservation prompted her to help her husband to escape, while in fact she acted out of love for David. Her explanation does not account for the deception of her father with the household idol. 18: David flees north to Samuel, who has anointed him, and not south to his family in Bethlehem, where Saul would probably look for him. 24: "Is Saul too among the prophets?" The origin of this saying was explained differently at 10.10–12. There, following Saul's election, it referred to him in a positive sense; here, after his rejection, it alludes to his disgraceful, degrading behavior.

20.1–21.1: Friendship. The story demonstrates Jonathan's profound friendship for David, in spite of his knowledge that David's success will be at his expense. The narrative consists of four parts. The first part, in Jonathan's house, and the second part, in the open, deal with planning; the third part, in Saul's house, and the fourth, in the open again, tell of the execution of the plans. Like the previous narrative, it shows Saul being deceived by a member of his own family. 1: The repetitions in David's question express his distress. 2: Jonathan is unaware of Saul's attempts to kill David (see 19.6). 5: The new moon was celebrated as a festival (see Num. 28.11; 2 Kings 4.23; Isa. 1.13; Amos 8.5), which included a festive meal. In postbiblical times the day lost its importance as festival, but great significance was attached to the Rabbis' official proclamation of the new moon since that determined when festivals would be commemorated. The moon's renewal is still marked in Jewish liturgy by special prayers and by the ceremony of Blessing the Moon, which is performed at night, when the new moon can clearly be seen. Third, counting from and including the present day.

^a Heb. "He." ^{b-b} Cf. note at 10.5. ^{c-c} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.
^{d-d} Septuagint reads "the cistern of the threshing floor on the bare height."
^{e-e} Septuagint reads "replied to him."
^{f-f} Septuagint reads "will not sit . . . meal. Let . . ."
^g Septuagint lacks "third."

asked my permission to run down to his home town, Bethlehem, for the whole family has its annual sacrifice there.' ⁷If he says 'Good,' your servant is safe; but if his anger flares up, know that he is resolved to do [me] harm. ⁸Deal faithfully with your servant, since you have taken your servant into a covenant of the LORD with you. And if I am guilty, kill me yourself, but don't make me go back to your father." ⁹Jonathan replied, "Don't talk like that! If I learn that my father has resolved to kill you, I will surely tell you about it." ¹⁰David said to Jonathan, "Who will tell me if^a your father answers you harshly?" ¹¹Jonathan said to David, "Let us go into the open"; and they both went out into the open.

^{12b}Then Jonathan said to David, "By the LORD, the God of Israel! I will sound out my father at this time tomorrow, [or] on the third day; and if [his response] is favorable for David, I will send a message to you at once and disclose it to you. ¹³But if my father intends to do you harm, may the LORD do thus to Jonathan and more if I do [not] disclose it to you and send you off to escape unharmed. May the LORD be with you, as He used to be with my father. ¹⁴Nor shall you fail to show me the LORD's faithfulness,^c while I am alive; nor, when I am dead, ¹⁵shall you ever discontinue your faithfulness to my house—not even after the LORD has wiped out every one of David's enemies from the face of the earth. ¹⁶Thus has Jonathan covenanted with the house of David; and may the LORD requite the enemies of David!"

¹⁷Jonathan, out of his love for David, adjured^d him again, for he loved him as himself. ¹⁸Jonathan said to him, "Tomorrow will be the new moon; and you will be missed when your seat remains vacant.^e ¹⁹So the day after tomorrow, go down 'all the way'^f to the place where you hid^g the other time,^g and stay close to the Ezel stone. ²⁰Now I will shoot three arrows to one side of it, as though I were shooting at a mark, ²¹and I will order the boy to go and find the arrows. If I call to the boy, 'Hey! the arrows are on this side of you,' be reassured^h and come, for you are safe and there is no danger—as the LORD lives! ²²But if, instead, I call to the lad, 'Hey! the arrows are beyond you,' then leave, for the LORD has sent you away. ²³As for the promise we made to each other,ⁱ may the LORD be [witness] between you and me forever."

8: Faithfully, in accordance with the covenant (see 18.3). Don't make me go back, as you did last time (19.7). 11: The open, where one can talk in private (cf. Gen. 31.4). 12: Third, see v. 5 n. 13: Thus . . . and more, see 3.17 n. If Saul's response is favorable, Jonathan will inform David through a messenger; if harmful, Jonathan will come and disclose it himself, because a messenger could reveal David's whereabouts to Saul. As He used to be with my father, a hint that David will be king. 14–16: Jonathan, who deals faithfully with David now, wants David to deal faithfully with him and his offspring in the future. 15: My house: To secure his throne the king of a new dynasty often killed the former king's relatives (1 Kings 15.29; 16.11; 2 Kings 10.11). Jonathan recognizes that David will succeed his father. 17: Jonathan's motive to help David is his deep love for him, not his desire to secure his and his offspring's future destiny. 23: May the LORD be [witness] between you and me: May the LORD watch over each of us that we keep the covenant a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b The meaning of several parts of vv. 12–16 is uncertain.

c-c I.e., the faithfulness pledged in the covenant before the LORD.
d Septuagint reads "swore to." e At the festal meal. ff Lit. "very much."
g-g Lit. "on the day of the incident"; see 19.2 ff. h Lit. "accept it."
i See above, vv. 12–17.

²⁴David hid in the field. The new moon came, and the king sat down to partake of the meal. ²⁵When the king took his usual place on the seat by the wall, Jonathan rose^a and Abner sat down at Saul's side; but David's place remained vacant. ²⁶That day, however, Saul said nothing. "It's accidental," he thought. ^b"He must be unclean and not yet cleansed."^b ²⁷But on the day after the new moon, the second day, David's place was vacant again. So Saul said to his son Jonathan, "Why didn't the son of Jesse come to the meal yesterday or today?" ²⁸Jonathan answered Saul, "David begged leave of me to go to Bethlehem. ²⁹He said, 'Please let me go, for we are going to have a family feast in our town and my brother has summoned me to it. Do me a favor, let me slip away to see my kinsmen.' That is why he has not come to the king's table."

³⁰Saul flew into a rage against Jonathan. "You son of a perverse, rebellious woman!" he shouted. "I know that you side with the son of Jesse—to your shame, and to the shame of your mother's nakedness! ³¹For as long as the son of Jesse lives on earth, neither you nor your kingship will be secure. Now then, have him brought to me, for he is marked for death." ³²But Jonathan spoke up and said to his father, "Why should he be put to death? What has he done?" ³³At that, Saul threw^d his spear at him to strike him down; and Jonathan realized that his father was determined to do away with David. ³⁴Jonathan rose from the table in a rage. He ate no food on the second day of the new moon, because he was grieved about David, and because his father had humiliated him.

³⁵In the morning, Jonathan went out into the open for the meeting with David, accompanied by a young boy. ³⁶He said to the boy, "Run ahead and find the arrows that I shoot." And as the boy ran, he shot the arrows past him. ³⁷When the boy came to the place where the arrows shot by Jonathan had fallen, Jonathan called out to the boy, "Hey, the arrows are beyond you!" ³⁸And Jonathan called after the boy, "Quick, hurry up. Don't stop!" So Jonathan's boy gathered the arrows and came back to his master.—³⁹The boy suspected nothing; only Jonathan and David knew the arrangement.—⁴⁰Jonathan handed the gear to his boy and told him, "Take these back to the town." ⁴¹When the boy got there, David^e emerged from his concealment at^e the Negeb.^f He flung himself face down on a Force of Heb. uncertain; Septuagint "faced him."

(cf. Gen. 31.49). 26: Ritual impurity prevented one from participating in ritual meals. A frequent cause of impurity was the emission of semen, but in that event one could become pure again in the evening according to the legislation in Lev. 15.16–18. 29: My brother has summoned me, probably the eldest brother (see 17.28 n.). Slip away, lit. "escape." 30: It is clear from Jonathan's answer that he sides with David. This infuriates Saul and causes him to use obscene language. Both shame (besides its usual meaning) and nakedness denote the genitals. The insult is directed at the son, not the mother. 33: Saul has no answer to Jonathan's questions, because David has committed no capital crime, so Saul throws his spear at him. 34: Grieved, see v. 3. 38: Jonathan's words are directed at the boy and David at the same time.

b-b Heb. construction unclear.

c See note at 10.11. d See 18.11 and note.

e-e Lit. "rose up from beside." f Identical with the "Ezel Stone." v. 19.

the ground and bowed low three times. They kissed each other and wept together; David wept the longer.

⁴²Jonathan said to David, "Go in peace! For we two have sworn to each other in the name of the LORD: 'May the LORD be [witness] between you and me, and between your offspring and mine, forever!'" ¹ David then went his way, and Jonathan returned to the town.

²David went to the priest Ahimelech at Nob. Ahimelech came out in alarm to meet David, and he said to him, "Why are you alone, and no one with you?" ³David answered the priest Ahimelech, "The king has ordered me on a mission, and he said to me, 'No one must know anything about the mission on which I am sending you and for which I have given you orders.' So I have ^adirected [my] young men to^b such and such a place. ⁴Now then, what have you got on hand? Any^b loaves of bread? Let me have them—or whatever is available."^c ⁵The priest answered David, "I have no ordinary bread on hand; there is only consecrated bread—provided the young men have kept away from women."^d ⁶In reply to the priest, David said, "I assure you that women have been kept from us, as always. Whenever I went on a mission, even if the journey was a common one, the vessels of the young men were consecrated; all the more then ^emay consecrated food be put into their vessels today."^c ⁷So the priest gave him consecrated bread, because there was none there except the bread of display, which had been removed from the presence of the LORD, to be replaced by warm bread as soon as it was taken away.—⁸Now one of Saul's officials was there that day, ^ddetained before the LORD;^d his name was Doeg the Edomite, Saul's ^echief herdsman.^e

⁹David said to Ahimelech, "Haven't you got a spear or sword on hand? I didn't take my sword or any of my weapons with me, because the king's mission was urgent."¹⁰ The priest said, "There is the sword of Goliath the Philistine whom you slew in the valley of Elah; it is over there, wrapped in a cloth, behind the ephod. If you want to take that one, take it, for there is none here but that one." David replied, "There is none like it; give it to me."

¹¹That day David continued on his flight from Saul and 42: See v. 23. 21.1: This v. serves to mark the end of the story (cf. 26.25).

21.2–10: The helpful priest.

David, finding himself, after his hasty flight, without food or weapon, gets consecrated bread and Goliath's sword. 2: Ahimelech was the great-grandson of Eli and brother of Ahijah (see 14.3). In alarm, because David, a high army commander, came unaccompanied. 3: In order to obtain food David lies to Ahimelech. His lie has dire consequences. 5: Consecrated bread, see Leviticus 24.5–9. The bread was renewed once a week, and the old bread was eaten by the priests in the sacred precinct. Provided the young men have kept away from women: According to Lev. 15.18 sexual intercourse entails ritual impurity. Ahimelech respectfully refrains from mentioning David himself, but he is of course included in the provision. 6: Soldiers were prohibited from having sexual relations (as can be inferred from Deut. 23.10–12). Not only the persons but the eating vessels as well are ritually pure. 8: Doeg's presence at the sanctuary is noted because of its importance for the story in the next ch. Foreigners were employed in David's young kingdom (1 Chron. 27.30–31). 10: The sword of Goliath was kept at the sanctuary as a trophy (cf. 5.1–2; 31.10). Its exact place is described because it will play a role in the next ch. Ephod, see 14.3 n.

21.11–16: In Philistia. David flees to the Philistine city of Gath, believing that there he will be out of danger, but he barely succeeds in saving his life. 12: The song of the women (18.7) has spread to the Philistines (see 29.5), and the courtiers infer from it that David, who features in the song together with Saul, is master of the land—a conclusion not far from that of Saul himself (18.8). 13: David, understanding that he has been recognized, fears for his life, because the cited song celebrates his victory over the Philistines and para-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. 4QSam^b (cf. Septuagint) reads "made an appointment with [my] young men at . . ."

b Lit. "five."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain in part.

d-d I.e., excluded from the shrine, perhaps because of ritual impurity.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

he came to King Achish of Gath.¹² The courtiers of Achish said to him, "Why, that's David, king of the land! That's the one of whom they sing as they dance:

Saul has slain his thousands;

David, his tens of thousands."

¹³These words worried David and he became very much afraid of King Achish of Gath. ¹⁴So he concealed his good sense from them; he feigned madness ^afor their benefit.^a He scratched marks on the doors of the gate and let his saliva run down his beard. ¹⁵And Achish said to his courtiers, "You see the man is raving; why bring him to me? ¹⁶Do I lack madmen that you have brought this fellow to rave for me? Should this fellow enter my house?"

22 David departed from there and escaped to the cave^b of Adullam; and when his brothers and all his father's house heard, they joined him down there. ²Everyone who was in straits and everyone who was in debt and everyone who was desperate joined him, and he became their leader; there were about four hundred men with him. ³David went from there to Mizpeh of Moab, and he said to the king of Moab, "Let my father and mother come [and stay] with you, until I know what God will do for me." ⁴So he ^cled them to^c the king of Moab, and they stayed with him as long as David remained in the stronghold.^b ⁵But the prophet Gad said to David, "Do not stay in the stronghold; go at once to the territory of Judah." So David left and went to the forest of Hereth.

⁶When Saul heard that David and the men with him had been located—Saul was then in Gibeah, sitting under the tamarisk tree on the height, spear in hand, with all his courtiers in attendance upon him—⁷Saul said to the courtiers standing about him, "Listen, men of Benjamin! Will the son of Jesse^d give fields and vineyards to every one of you? And will he make all of you captains of thousands or captains of hundreds? ⁸Is that why all of you have conspired against me? For no one informs me when my own son makes a pact with the son of Jesse; no one is concerned^e for me and no one informs me when my own son has set my servant ^fin ambush^f against me, as is now the case."

a-a Lit. "in their hand"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b The "cave" in v. 1 is referred to as "stronghold" in vv. 4–5; cf. the same variation in 2 Sam. 23.13–14; 1 Chron. 11.15–16.

c-c Targum and Syriac read "left them with."

d See note at 10.11.

e For this meaning of holeh, cf. Amos 6.6.

f-f Septuagint reads "as an enemy."

ticularly over Goliath, whose origin was from Gath. 14: For their benefit, the Heb can also be interpreted, "[when] in their control." 15: David's clever ruse succeeds. It is clear that Achish wants David to be expelled (the expulsion is mentioned explicitly at the heading of Ps. 34).

22.1–5: Head of a band. David, as leader of a group of people who fled from the established order, now has a force of his own at his disposal. 1: The members of David's family, who are in danger from Saul, join David at Adullam, situated in the border region between Judah and Philistia. 3: David takes care of his parents, for whom a fugitive's life would be too strenuous. He probably has family relations in Moab, since his great-grandmother was a Moabite, who married into a family from Bethlehem (Ruth 1.1, 4; 4.17). According to the Bible the relations between Israel and Moab were always hostile, this story being the only exception. 4: Stronghold, probably at Adullam. But perhaps all the "strongholds of the wilderness" (23.14) are meant, and the space of time mentioned refers to all the wanderings of David in the wilderness.

22.6–23: The massacre. This narrative continues the narrative of 21.2–10: All priests and inhabitants of Nob are killed because of Ahimelech's help to David. Saul, fearing David, whom he considers a rebel, wants to set a deterring example. He does not even shrink from sacrilege. In his insanity he suspects everyone of conspiring against him. 6: Sitting under the tamarisk tree, cf. 14.2; Judg. 4.5. Spear in hand, as symbol of his rule (see 26.11 n.). 7: Saul's courtiers belong to his tribe, Benjamin. Kings used to distribute fields and vineyards and appoint army officers as signs of personal favor (see 8.12, 14). David, however, is of the tribe of Judah and therefore will not benefit the men of Benjamin. 8: My servant: Saul makes it clear that David is his subordinate.

⁹Doeg the Edomite, who was standing among the courtiers of Saul, spoke up: "I saw the son of Jesse come to Ahimelech son of Ahitub at Nob. ¹⁰He inquired of the LORD on his behalf and gave him provisions; he also gave him the sword of Goliath the Philistine." ¹¹Thereupon the king sent for the priest Ahimelech son of Ahitub and for all the priests belonging to his father's house at Nob. They all came to the king, ¹²and Saul said, "Listen to me, son^a of Ahitub." "Yes, my lord," he replied. ¹³And Saul said to him, "Why have you and the son of Jesse conspired against me? You gave him food and a sword, and inquired of God for him—that he may rise ^bin ambush^b against me, as is now the case."

¹⁴Ahimelech replied to the king, "But who is there among all your courtiers as trusted as David, son-in-law of Your Majesty and ^cobedient to your bidding,^c and esteemed in your household? ¹⁵This is the first time that I inquired of God for him; ^dI have done no wrong.^d Let not Your Majesty find fault with his servant [or] with any of my father's house; for your servant knew nothing whatever about all this." ¹⁶But the king said, "You shall die, Ahimelech, you and all your father's house." ¹⁷And the king commanded the guards standing by, "Turn about and kill the priests of the LORD, for they are in league with David; they knew he was running away and they did not inform me." But the king's servants would not raise a hand to strike down the priests of the LORD. ¹⁸Thereupon the king said to Doeg, "You, Doeg, go and strike down the priests." And Doeg the Edomite went and struck down the priests himself; that day, he killed eighty-five men ^ewho wore the linen ephod.^e ¹⁹He put Nob, the town of the priests, to the sword: men and women, children and infants, oxen, asses, and sheep—[all] to the sword.

²⁰But one son of Ahimelech son of Ahitub escaped—his name was Abiathar—and he fled to David. ²¹When Abiathar told David that Saul had killed the priests of the LORD, ²²David said to Abiathar, "I knew that day, when Doeg the Edomite was there, that he would tell Saul. I 'am to blame for all the deaths'^f in your father's house. ²³Stay with me; do not be afraid; for 'whoever seeks your life must seek my life also.'^f It will be my care to guard you."

a See note at 10.11.

b-b Septuagint reads "as an enemy."

c-c Cf. Isa. 11.14; but meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Lit. "Far be it from me!"

e-e Septuagint reads "bearers of the ephod"; cf. note at 2.28.

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

9: Doeg the Edomite, see 21.8.

10: The giving of provisions and the sword of Goliath to David was reported in 21.7, 10, but no mention was made there of inquiring of the LORD. Either Doeg lied or, more probably, when Ahimelech went behind the ephod to take the sword and unwrap it from its cloth, Doeg imagined that the priest went to inquire of the LORD (see 21.10 n.). 11–13: Saul summons Ahimelech and all the priests to a trial, accusing them of conspiring. 14–15: Ahimelech justifies himself, arguing that he aided David because he knew of the latter's esteemed and trusted position at the court and he was not aware that this had changed. 15: The Heb can also be translated: "Did I begin now to inquire of God for him? Far be it from me!" According to this rendering Ahimelech denies that he inquired of God for David. This seems to be the truth, because otherwise the narrator would not have kept silent on so crucial a fact. 18: Only Doeg, not being Israelite, is prepared to execute the king's order and kill the priests of the LORD. Linen ephod, see 2.18 n. 19: Compare the enumeration here with the one at 15.3. The similarity of the two lists (there camels are also mentioned, because those animals were kept by the Amalekites, who were desert nomads) suggests that what Saul failed to do to Amalek, though commanded by the LORD, he did to his own town of priests of the LORD. This strongly condemns Saul. 20: The massacre of the priests may be the fulfillment of the prophecy of 2.33, and the "offspring" mentioned there may refer to Abiathar. This prophecy-fulfillment pattern is frequent in the Deuteronomistic History.

22–23: David feels responsible for the disaster, and he promises to protect Abiathar's life like his own.

23.1–13: Consulting the LORD. In the preceding narrative Ahimelech was (falsely) accused of having consulted God for David; in the present one Ahimelech's son Abiathar actually and repeatedly con-

23 David was told: "The Philistines are raiding Keilah and plundering the threshing floors."² David consulted the LORD, "Shall I go and attack those Philistines?" And the LORD said to David, "Go; attack the Philistines and you will save Keilah."³ But David's men said to him, "Look, we are afraid here in Judah, how much more if we go to Keilah against the forces of the Philistines!"⁴ So David consulted the LORD again, and the LORD answered him, "March down at once to Keilah, for I am going to deliver the Philistines into your hands."⁵ David and his men went to Keilah and fought against the Philistines; he drove off their cattle and inflicted a severe defeat on them. Thus David saved the inhabitants of Keilah.

⁶When Abiathar son of Ahimelech fled to David at Keilah, ^ahe brought down an ephod with him.^a ⁷Saul was told that David had come to Keilah, and Saul thought, "God has delivered^b him into my hands, for he has shut himself in by entering a town with gates and bars."⁸ Saul summoned all the troops for war, to go down to Keilah and besiege David and his men.⁹ When David learned that Saul was planning^b to harm him, he told the priest Abiathar to bring the ephod forward.¹⁰ And David said, "O LORD, God of Israel, Your servant has heard that Saul intends to come to Keilah and destroy the town because of me.¹¹ Will the citizens of Keilah deliver me into his hands? Will Saul come down, as Your servant has heard? O LORD, God of Israel, tell Your servant!" And the LORD said, "He will."¹² David continued, "Will the citizens of Keilah deliver me and my men into Saul's hands?" And the LORD answered, "They will."¹³ So David and his men, about six hundred in number, left Keilah at once and moved about wherever they could. And when Saul was told that David had got away from Keilah, he did not set out.

¹⁴David was staying ^ain the strongholds of the wilderness [of Judah];^a he stayed in the hill country, in the wilderness of Ziph. Saul searched for him constantly, but God did not deliver him into his hands.¹⁵ David was once at Horesh in the wilderness of Ziph, when David learned that Saul had come out to seek his life.¹⁶ And Saul's son Jonathan came to David at Horesh and encouraged him in [the name of] God.¹⁷ He said to him, "Do not be afraid: the hand of my father Saul will never touch you. You are going to be king over Israel and I shall be second to you; and even my father Saul knows this is so."¹⁸ And the two of them entered into a pact before the LORD. David remained in Horesh, and Jonathan went home.

sults God for David. Consulting God is a recurring theme in the narratives about Saul and David. When successful, it is a sign that God is with David; when unsuccessful, that He is not with Saul. The first part of this narrative tells of David's deliverance of Keilah, the second part of his escape from Keilah. 1: The Philistines came at the end of the harvest to plunder the crops (cf. Judg. 6.3). 2-3: David wants to use his force to help Keilah, but his motley band lacks the courage. 4: The LORD's second reply, explicitly promising to deliver the Philistines into David's hands, aids in instilling confidence in the men. 5: He drove off their cattle: The Philistines had come with their livestock (cf. Judg. 6.5). 6: Abiathar's flight to David was already reported in 22.20, before David's rescue of Keilah. Keilah here may be the result of ditto-graphy. An ephod probably contained Urim and Thummim, the means for consulting the LORD. Regarding the technique of consulting the LORD see 14.40-42 n. 7: The only way to leave the walled town was through the gates, and there David could easily be captured. 11: David asks two questions, but because it was possible to ask only one at a time, he has to repeat his first question. 12: Notwithstanding their rescue by David the citizens of Keilah will deliver him into Saul's hands. They greatly fear Saul after he massacred the whole town of Nob because of the help extended to David. 13: Six hundred: According to 22.2 there were about 400 men with David, so meanwhile the number has increased.

23.14-18: Encouragement. Jonathan comes to David's hiding place to encourage him, assuring his friend that eventually he will become king. 14: Strongholds, table mountains with steep sides, providing natural protection. 17: Saul knows that David will be king, and yet he continues pursuing him, driven by jealousy and enmity. 18: A pact ("berit"), a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

¹⁹Some Ziphites went up to Saul in Gibeah and said, "David is hiding among us in the strongholds of Horesh, at the hill of Hachilah south of Jeshimon. ²⁰So if Your Majesty has the desire to come down, come down, and it will be our task to deliver him into Your Majesty's hands." ²¹And Saul replied, "May you be blessed of the LORD for the compassion you have shown me! ²²Go now and prepare further. Look around and learn what places he sets foot on [and] who has seen him there, for I have been told he is a very cunning fellow. ²³Look around and learn in which of all his hiding places he has been hiding, and return to me when you are certain. I will then go with you, and if he is in the region, I will search him out among all the clans of Judah."

²⁴They left at once for Ziph, ahead of Saul; David and his men were then in the wilderness of Maon, in the Arabah, to the south of Jeshimon. ²⁵When Saul and his men came to search, David was told about it; and he went down to ^bthe rocky region^b and stayed in the wilderness of Maon. On hearing this, Saul pursued David in the wilderness of Maon. ²⁶Saul was making his way along one side of a hill, and David and his men were on the other side of the hill. ^bDavid was trying hard to elude Saul, and Saul and his men were trying to encircle David and his men and capture them,^b ²⁷when a messenger came and told Saul, "Come quickly, for the Philistines have invaded the land." ²⁸Saul gave up his pursuit of David and went to meet the Philistines. That is why that place came to be called the Rock of Separation.^c

24 David went from there and stayed in the wildernesses of En-gedi.

²When Saul returned from pursuing the Philistines, he was told that David was in the wilderness of En-gedi. ³So Saul took three thousand picked men from all Israel and went in search of David and his men ^bin the direction of the rocks of the wild goats;^b ⁴and he came to the sheepfolds along the way. There was a cave there, and Saul went in ^dto relieve himself.^d Now David and his men were sitting in the back of the cave.

⁵David's men said to him, "This is the day of which the LORD said to you, 'I will deliver your enemy into your hands; you can do with him as you please.'" ^eDavid went and stealthily cut off the corner of Saul's cloak. ⁶But after-stipulating that when David will be king, Jonathan shall rank next to him.

23.19–28: Narrow escape. At the last moment, when his capture by Saul seems unavoidable, David is saved. The first part of the narrative contains the dialogue between Saul and the Ziphites concerning David's capture; the second part relates Saul's pursuit and its unexpected outcome. 19–20: The Ziphites, in proving their loyalty to Saul, are probably under the impact of the massacre of Nob, whose priests were accused of failing to inform Saul (22.17). 21: May you be blessed of the LORD, a customary blessing (see 15.13; 2 Sam. 2.5; Ps. 115.15). The king, uttering satisfaction at being pitied, makes a sorry figure. 26: Instead of trying to encircle, read "encircling" (trying is not expressed in the Heb). David is already encircled by Saul's men and on the verge of being captured, when suddenly the messenger appears. This may be seen as directed by God to save David. 28: Rock of Separation, "because there Saul separated and departed from David" (Abravanel).

24.1–23: Magnanimity. David has the opportunity to kill Saul, but refrains from doing so. When the king falls into his hands, David does not take revenge, but shows himself magnanimous and loyal towards him. In the first part of the narrative the event itself is described; the second part contains a speech by David, stating that he never wronged the king; the third part consists of a speech by Saul, who is impressed by David's generosity. The word "hand(s)" recurs frequently (in the Heb even more than in the translation): Though he has Saul in his hands, David will not raise his hand against him. 4: Sheepfolds were often attached to caves, which provided shelter to the animals from heat and cold. 5: The LORD's promise cited by David's men has not been mentioned before. It seems that the men interpret Saul's entering the cave as directed by the LORD, in a The meaning of many parts of 23.19 ff. is uncertain. The events described in 23.19–24.22 are partly paralleled in chapter 26, with variations.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Lit. "to cover his feet." e Vv. 5b–6 read well after 8a.

ward ^aDavid reproached himself^a for cutting off ^bthe corner of Saul's cloak.^b ⁷He said to his men, "The LORD forbid that I should do such a thing to my lord—the LORD's anointed—that I should raise my hand against him; for he is the LORD's anointed."⁸ David rebuked^c his men and did not permit them to attack Saul.

Saul left the cave and started on his way. ⁹Then David also went out of the cave and called after Saul, "My lord king!" Saul looked around and David bowed low in homage, with his face to the ground. ¹⁰And David said to Saul, "Why do you listen to the people who say, 'David is out to do you harm?'" ¹¹You can see for yourself now that the LORD delivered you into my hands in the cave today. And though ^dI was urged^d to kill you, I showed you pity;^e for I said, 'I will not raise a hand against my lord, since he is the LORD's anointed.'¹² Please, sir,^f take a close look at the corner of your cloak in my hand; for when I cut off the corner of your cloak, I did not kill you. You must see plainly that I have done nothing evil or rebellious, and I have never wronged you. Yet you are bent on taking my life.¹³ May the LORD judge between you and me! And may He take vengeance upon you for me, but my hand will never touch you. ¹⁴As the ancient proverb has it: 'Wicked deeds come from wicked men!' My hand will never touch you. ¹⁵Against whom has the king of Israel come out? Whom are you pursuing? A dead dog? A single flea? ¹⁶May the LORD be arbiter and may He judge between you and me! May He take note and uphold my cause, and vindicate me against you."

¹⁷When David finished saying these things to Saul, Saul said, "Is that your voice, my son David?" And Saul broke down and wept. ¹⁸He said to David, "You are right, not I; for you have treated me generously, but I have treated you badly. ¹⁹Yes, you have just revealed how generously you treated me, for the LORD delivered me into your hands and you did not kill me. ²⁰If a man meets his enemy, does he let him go his way unharmed? Surely, the LORD will reward you generously for ^gwhat you have done for me this day.^g ²¹I know now that you will become king, and that the kingship over Israel will remain in your hands. ²²So swear to me by the LORD that you will not destroy my de-order to enable David to strike his pursuer down. David, however, only cuts off the corner of Saul's cloak as proof that he could have killed him. He is not aware that the cutting of the cloak also has symbolic significance, namely, cutting off the kingdom (cf. 15.27–28; 1 Kings 11.29–32). The author may be foreshadowing those later events. 6–7: According to biblical scholars, vv. 5b–6 should be placed after vv. 7–8a. According to Rashi, since the narrator began to talk about the cutting of the cloak, he finishes the subject, remarking that—some time later—David reproached himself even for having cut the cloak; the narrator then returns to the first subject and reports David's reply to his men. The LORD's anointed: Because the king was anointed by a prophet in the name of the LORD, he is inviolable (see 2 Sam. 1.16). 9: Though persecuted by Saul, David honors the king. 14: Wicked deeds come from wicked men, i.e., not from me. 15: David designates Saul here king of Israel to contrast him with himself, who is as insignificant and harmless as a dead dog or (even) a single flea. Such expressions of submissiveness were customary in the ancient Near East. 16: David puts his case in the hands of the LORD. 17: Saul's question expresses his astonishment. My son, in response to "my father" (v. 12, see translators' note), indicates close relationship. 21: Saul acknowledges that David will be king and that his kingship will endure—as opposed to Saul's kingship. 22: See 20.15 n.

a-a Lit. "David's heart struck him."

b-b So several mss. and ancient versions; cf. v. 5. Most mss. and editions read "Saul's corner."

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e Understanding the Heb. as an ellipsis of wattalhos 'eri (cf., e.g., Deut. 7.16).

f Lit. "[my] father," cf. 2 Kings 5.13.

g-g Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "the generosity you have shown me."

scendants or wipe out my name from my father's house."

²³David swore to Saul, Saul went home, and David and his men went up to the strongholds.

25 Samuel died, and all Israel gathered and made lament for him; and they buried him in Ramah, his home.

David went down to the wilderness of Paran.^a ²There was a man in Maon whose possessions were in Carmel. The man was very wealthy; he owned three thousand sheep and a thousand goats. At the time, he was shearing his sheep in Carmel. ³The man's name was Nabal, and his wife's name was Abigail. The woman was intelligent and beautiful, but the man, a Calebite, was a hard man and an evildoer. ⁴David was in the wilderness when he heard that Nabal was shearing his sheep. ⁵David dispatched ten young men, and David instructed the young men, "Go up to Carmel. When you come to Nabal, greet him in my name. ⁶Say ^bas follows: 'To life!^b Greetings to you and to your household and to all that is yours! ⁷I hear that you are now doing your shearing. As you know, your shepherds have been with us; we did not harm them, and nothing of theirs was missing all the time they were in Carmel. ⁸Ask your young men and they will tell you. So receive these young men graciously, for we have come on a festive occasion. Please give your servants and your son David whatever you can.'"

⁹David's young men went and delivered this message to Nabal in the name of David. When they stopped speaking, ¹⁰Nabal answered David's servants, "Who is David? Who is the son of Jesse? There are many slaves nowadays who run away from their masters. ¹¹Should I then take my bread and my water,^c and the meat that I slaughtered for my own shearers, and give them to men who come from I don't know where?" ¹²Thereupon David's young men retraced their steps; and when they got back, they told him all this. ¹³And David said to his men, "Gird on your swords." Each girded on his sword; David too girded on his sword. About four hundred men went up after David, while two hundred remained with the baggage.

¹⁴One of [Nabal's] young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, that David had sent messengers from the wilderness to greet their master, and that he had spurned^b them. ¹⁵"But the men had been very friendly to us; we were not

23: See 14.46 n. Saul abandons the pursuit, yet David and his men go up to the stronghold (in the Heb the word is in the singular), because they do not trust Saul.

25.1–44: The evil husband and the clever wife. The violent clash between David and the boorish, evil, foolish Nabal is prevented by Nabal's clever wife Abigail, who succeeds in persuading David to refrain from spilling blood. She also alludes to David's future kingship, as did Saul in the preceding narrative. 1: The note concerning Samuel's death, which has no connection with the following narrative, may have been placed here because it was thought that the death occurred at this juncture (cf. 28.3). 2–3: The exposition specifies Nabal's wealth even before stating his and his wife's names and qualities. Carmel, see 15.12 n. Calebite: The clan of Caleb was part of Judah, but Kenizzite in origin (Gen. 15.19; Num. 32.12; Josh. 14.14). 4: Sheepshearing was an occasion for celebration (see 2 Sam. 13.23). 5: Ten young men, to carry the generous gift David expects to receive as reward for his services. 6: Before the request itself good wishes are uttered. The Heb may also be translated: "Say: 'So be it (also) next year: May you be well and may your household be well and all that is yours be well!'" 7: Your shepherds have been with us, under our protection. 10: "Who is David?": Nabal's rude reply expresses contempt (cf. Exod. 5.2). By implying that they are runaway slaves he insults both David, who escaped from Saul, and his men, who fled from society. 11: My bread and my water, food and drink in general (Hos. 2.7). 13: David is determined to use force; girding the swords is mentioned three times. 14: The narrative's point of view switches to Abigail. 15–16: The young man (or rather, servant), confirming David's statement (v. 7), specifies the protection Nabal's shepherds received. They were a wall: The metaphor denotes defense against marauders.

^a Septuagint reads "Maon," cf. v. 2 and 23.24, 25.

^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^c Septuagint reads "wine," and cf. v. 18.

harmed, nor did we miss anything all the time that we went about with them while we were in the open. ¹⁶They were a wall about us both by night and by day all the time that we were with them tending the flocks. ¹⁷So consider carefully what you should do, for harm threatens our master and all his household; he is such a nasty fellow that no one can speak to him."

¹⁸Abigail quickly got together two hundred loaves of bread, two jars of wine, five dressed sheep, five seahs of parched corn, one hundred cakes of raisin, and two hundred cakes of pressed figs. She loaded them on asses, ¹⁹and she told her young men, "Go on ahead of me, and I'll follow you"; but she did not tell her husband Nabal. ²⁰She was riding on the ass and going down a trail^a on the hill, when David and his men appeared, coming down toward her; and she met them.—²¹Now David had been saying, "It was all for nothing that I protected that fellow's possessions in the wilderness, and that nothing he owned is missing. He has paid me back evil for good. ²²May God do thus and more to ^bthe enemies of^b David if, by the light of morning, I leave ^ca single male^c of his."—²³When Abigail saw David, she quickly dismounted from the ass and threw herself face down before^a David, bowing to the ground. ²⁴Prostrate at his feet, she pleaded, "Let the blame be mine, my lord, but let your handmaid speak to you; hear your maid's plea. ²⁵Please, my lord, pay no attention to that wretched fellow Nabal. For he is just what his name says: His name means 'boor' and he is a boor.

"Your handmaid did not see the young men whom my lord sent. ²⁶I swear, my lord, as the LORD lives and as you live—the LORD who has kept you from seeking redress by blood with your own hands—let your enemies and all who would harm my lord fare like Nabal! ²⁷Here is the present which your maidservant has brought to my lord; let it be given to the young men who are the followers of my lord. ²⁸Please pardon your maid's boldness. For the LORD will grant my lord an enduring house, because my lord is fighting the battles of the LORD, and no wrong is ever to be found in you. ²⁹And if anyone sets out to pur-on ahead of me: Abigail wants to placate David before she meets him. 22: Thus and more, see 3.17 n. 23: Though a wealthy and distinguished woman, Abigail hastens to display profuse gestures of respect to the runaway chieftain. She begins by taking the blame—either for Nabal's behavior or for addressing David. 24-31: Abigail's speech shows her intelligence and eloquence. She refers throughout to David as my lord and to herself as his handmaid. In the first part she expresses agreement with David as regards Nabal; in the second part she cautions David that by spilling blood now he will do harm to himself in the future. 24: At his feet, a gesture of pleading (see 2 Kings 4.27; Esth. 8.3). 25: Wretched, better, "evil." Nabal's wife uses the same strong term as Nabal's servant (see v. 17 n.), which indicates that she shares his opinion—evidently the common sentiment. For he is just what his name says: In the Bible people are aware of the meaning of names. Some names occur that, like Nabal, have unpleasant meanings, e.g., Mahlon and Chilion in Ruth 1.2, whose names mean "sickness" and "destruction." Boor: According to Isa. 32.6 the Heb word "naval" denotes a villain, who "leaves the hungry unsatisfied and deprives the thirsty of drink," just as Nabal did to David (see also Prov. 17.7, 21). 26: Fare like Nabal, a hint that Nabal is surely going to die (cf. 2 Sam. 18.32)—therefore David need take no action himself. 27: Let it be given to the young men, a polite expression, implying that the present is too humble for David himself. 28: Enduring house: Abigail knows that David will be king and that his dynasty will endure, because he is fighting the battles of the LORD (see 18.17 n.). 29: Anyone, an allusion to Saul, who set out to pursue David (23.25, 28; 24.15) and seek his life (20.1; 22.23; 23.15). The life . . . will be bound up in the bundle of life, a metaphor denoting long life. The LORD's bundle of life was believed to contain the names of the living, similar to His "book of life"

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b The phrase is intended to avoid the imprecation of David against himself; it is lacking in the Septuagint.

c-c Lit. "one who pees against a wall."

17: Nasty, better, "evil" (lit. "good-for-nothing"). Because speaking to Nabal is impossible, the servant appeals to Abigail. 18: The wise Abigail understands that she has to act quickly in order to anticipate David and that first of all his request must be generously satisfied. Seahs: A seah was probably about 7 liters (more than 6 quarts). 19: Go sue you and seek your life, the life of my lord will be bound up in the bundle of life in the care of the LORD; but He will fling away the lives of your enemies as from the hollow of a sling.³⁰ And when the LORD has accomplished for my lord all the good He has promised you, and has appointed you ruler of Israel,³¹ do not let this be a cause of stumbling and of faltering courage to my lord that you have shed blood needlessly and that my lord sought redress with his own hands. And when the LORD has prospered my lord, remember your maid."

³²David said to Abigail, "Praised be the LORD, the God of Israel, who sent you this day to meet me!³³ And blessed be your prudence, and blessed be you yourself for restraining me from seeking redress in blood by my own hands.³⁴ For as sure as the LORD, the God of Israel, lives—who has kept me from harming you—had you not come quickly to meet me, not ^aa single male^a of Nabal's line would have been left by daybreak."³⁵ David then accepted from her what she had brought him, and he said to her, "Go up to your home safely. See, I have heeded your plea and respected your wish."

³⁶When Abigail came home to Nabal, he was having a feast in his house, a feast fit for a king; Nabal was in a merry mood and very drunk, so she did not tell him anything at all until daybreak.³⁷ The next morning, when Nabal had slept off the wine, his wife told him everything that had happened; and his courage died within him, and he became like a stone.³⁸ About ten days later the LORD struck Nabal and he died.³⁹ When David heard that Nabal was dead, he said, "Praised be the LORD who championed my cause against the insults of Nabal and held back His servant from wrongdoing; the LORD has brought Nabal's wrongdoing down on his own head."

David sent messengers ^bto propose marriage to^b Abigail, to take her as his wife.⁴⁰ When David's servants came to Abigail at Carmel and told her that David had sent them to her to make her his wife,⁴¹ she immediately bowed low with her face to the ground and said, "Your handmaid is ready to be your maidservant, to wash the feet of my lord's servants."⁴² Then Abigail rose quickly and mounted an ass, and with five of her maids in attendance she followed David's messengers; and she became his wife.

⁴³Now David had taken Ahinoam of Jezreel; so both of them became his wives.⁴⁴ Saul had given his daughter Michal, David's wife, to Palti son of Laish from Gallim.

(Ps. 69.29). In postbiblical times the bundle of life came to signify eternal life in the next world, and therefore the expression is found regularly on Jewish tombstones. Fling away the lives, a metaphor denoting the opposite of the preceding one. The hollow of a sling, the middle of the sling, where the stone would be placed (see 17.40 n.). 30: The good refers to the enduring house (v. 28). 31: Refraining from bloodshed is in David's own interest. Faltering courage, lit. "faltering of heart," i.e., weakness. Remember your maid, rewarding her. 34: David's present oath annuls his previous one (v. 22). From harming you: David refers to Abigail as representative of Nabal's household. 36: Nabal's feasting shows him to be quite oblivious of any danger. 37: His courage, lit. "his heart." The simile like a stone points to paralysis, which was presumably understood as death of the heart, in accordance with the tendency of the Bible to attribute to the heart not only feelings, but also thoughts, traits, and some physical functions (e.g., eating is often described as strengthening the heart). It seems that when Nabal hears what happened and to what terrible danger he was exposed, he suffers a stroke and becomes paralyzed and ten days later he dies. David then proposes marriage to the widow because of her intelligence, beauty, and wealth. 41: To wash the feet of my lord's servants, an expression of extreme politeness and humility. 42: The five maids are mentioned to show Abigail's economic and social status. 43: Jezreel, near Carmel in southern Judah. 44: Since Michal was David's wife, Saul had no right to give her to someone else. By doing so he intentionally hurt both David and his daughter, who had deceived him in order to help her husband (19.11-17).

a-a Lit. "one who pees against a wall."

b-b Lit. "and spoke for"; cf. Song of Songs 8.8.

26 ^aThe Ziphites came to Saul at Gibeah and said, "David is hiding in the hill of Hachilah facing Jeshimon." ²Saul went down at once to the wilderness of Ziph, together with three thousand picked men of Israel, to search for David in the wilderness of Ziph, ³and Saul encamped on the hill of Hachilah which faces Jeshimon, by the road. When David, who was then living in the wilderness, learned that Saul had come after him into the wilderness, ⁴David sent out scouts and made sure that Saul had come. ⁵David went at once to the place where Saul had encamped, and David saw the spot where Saul and his army commander, Abner son of Ner, lay asleep. Saul lay asleep inside the barricade^b and the troops were posted around him.

⁶David spoke up and asked Ahimelech the Hittite and Abishai son of Zeruah, Joab's brother, "Who will go down with me into the camp to Saul?" And Abishai answered, "I will go down with you." ⁷So David and Abishai approached the troops by night, and found Saul fast asleep inside the barricade,^b his spear stuck in the ground at his head, and Abner and the troops sleeping around him. ⁸And Abishai said to David, "God has delivered your enemy into your hands today. Let me pin him to the ground with a single thrust of the spear. I will not have to strike him twice." ⁹But David said to Abishai, "Don't do him violence! No one can lay hands on the LORD's anointed with impunity." ¹⁰And David went on, "As the LORD lives, the LORD Himself will strike him down, or his time will come and he will die, or he will go down to battle and perish. ¹¹But the LORD forbid that I should lay a hand on the LORD's anointed! Just take the spear and the water jar at his head and let's be off." ¹²So David took away the spear and the water jar at Saul's head, and they left. No one saw or knew or woke up; all remained asleep; a deep sleep from the LORD had fallen upon them.

¹³David crossed over to the other side and stood afar on top of a hill; there was considerable distance between them. ¹⁴And David shouted to the troops and to Abner son of Ner, "Abner, aren't you going to answer?" And Abner shouted back, "Who are you to shout at the king?" ¹⁵And David answered Abner, "You are a man, aren't you? And there is no one like you in Israel! So why didn't you keep watch over your lord the king? For one of [our] troops came to do violence to your lord the king. ¹⁶You have not given a good account of yourself! As the LORD

26.1–25: Magnanimity repeated. The present story is similar to the one in ch 24. In both, David has the opportunity to kill Saul, but though urged by his men to do so, he refuses to harm the LORD's anointed. Instead, he takes one object from him to prove that he could have killed him, and when Saul sees this, he expresses regret at having persecuted David. In addition, there are verbal similarities (e.g., the simile in 24.15 and 26.20, and the question in 24.17 and 26.17). It seems that two variants of the same story have been included in the book—probably because of the differences between them (e.g., in one Saul comes to David in a cave by day and David takes a corner of Saul's coat, in the other David comes to Saul in an army camp by night and takes Saul's spear and water jar). The repetition causes David's magnanimity to emerge as a constant character trait. 5: Barricade, see 17.20 n. Saul is surrounded by his troops. 6: Ahimelech the Hittite is not mentioned elsewhere. The Hittite empire had its center in present-day Turkey, but Hittites are also mentioned in the land of Canaan (Gen. 23.3; 26.34; 27.46; 2 Sam. 11.3). Abishai, who is willing to accompany David on his dangerous exploit, and his more famous brother Joab, David's future army commander, are always designated sons of Zeruah, who was David's sister. 7: His spear: The same spear that Saul used against David can now be used by David against Saul. 9: See 24.6–7 n. 10: Strike him down, by means of an illness (see 25.38). 11: The spear, besides being a useful weapon, was a symbol of Saul's kingship (see 13.22; 18.10; 19.9; 20.33; 22.6; 2 Sam. 1.6). A water jar was vitally important in the desert. 12: In coming close to Saul's head David exposes himself to extreme danger. No one saw or knew or woke up; all remained asleep: The repetitiveness serves to ridicule the defective watch. 15: A man, a hero.

^a Cf. 23.19 and note.

^b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; cf. 17.20.

lives, [all of] you deserve to die, because you did not keep watch over your lord, the LORD's anointed. Look around, where are the king's spear and the water jar that were at his head?"

¹⁷Saul recognized David's voice, and he asked, "Is that your voice, my son David?" And David replied, "It is, my lord king." ¹⁸And he went on, "But why does my lord continue to pursue his servant? What have I done, and what wrong am I guilty of? ¹⁹Now let my lord the king hear his servant out. If the LORD has incited you against me, let Him be appeased^a by an offering; but if it is men, may they be accursed of the LORD! For they have driven me out today, so that I cannot have a share in the LORD's possession, but am told, 'Go and worship other gods.' ²⁰Oh, let my blood not fall to the ground, away from the presence of the LORD! For the king of Israel has come out to seek a single flea—as if he were hunting a partridge in the hills."

²¹And Saul answered, "I am in the wrong. Come back, my son David, for I will never harm you again, seeing how you have held my life precious this day. Yes, I have been a fool, and I have erred so very much." ²²David replied, "Here is Your Majesty's spear. Let one of the young men come over and get it. ²³And the LORD will requite every man for his right conduct and loyalty—for this day the LORD delivered you into my^b hands and I would not raise a hand against the LORD's anointed. ²⁴And just as I valued your life highly this day, so may the LORD value my life and may He rescue me from all trouble." ²⁵Saul answered David, "May you be blessed, my son David. You shall achieve, and you shall prevail."

David then went his way, and Saul returned home.

27 David said to himself, "Some day I shall certainly perish at the hands of Saul. The best thing for me is to flee to the land of the Philistines; Saul will then give up hunting me throughout the territory of Israel, and I will escape him." ²So David and the six hundred men with him went and crossed over to King Achish son of Maoch of Gath. ³David and his men stayed with Achish in Gath, each man with his family, and David with his two wives, Ahinoam the Jezreelite and Abigail wife of Nabal the Carmelite. ⁴And when Saul was told that David had fled to Gath, he did not pursue him any more.

⁵David said to Achish, "If you please, let a place be

17-18: Saul's question aims at achieving certainty, since in the dark he is unable to see David. David, who politely addresses Saul as my lord and calls himself his servant, tries to dissuade Saul from pursuing him. Saul again calls David my son (see 24.17). 19: They have driven me out: They have compelled me to flee from the LORD's possession—i.e., the land of Israel—to a foreign country, where I will be obliged to worship other gods. This probably alludes to David's intention to flee to the Philistines (see ch 27) and to the popular belief that each nation has its own god, who rules over that nation's territory (cf. 2 Kings 5.17; 17.24-28). In the land of Israel the LORD must be worshipped, in other countries the local gods. 20: David begs not to have to die in a foreign country. King of Israel, a single flea, see 24.15 n. 21: Saul, trying to reassure David, again calls him my son (see vv. 17 and 25). 22: David, who does not trust Saul anymore, ignores his invitation and promise. 25: Saul's final words ever to David are a blessing, assuring him of success. The verbs achieve and prevail are emphasized in the Heb. The concluding sentence, which marks the end of the story (cf. 21.1), makes it clear that David rejects Saul's call to return to him.

27.1-28.2: In Philistia again. For the second time David flees to Achish and deceives the Philistine king. But whereas the first time (21.11-16) he came alone and was expelled, now he comes at the head of a useful unit of 600 men and is received favorably. 1: Because David's decision to enter the enemy's service is rather questionable, his considerations are recounted at some length and in his own words. 3: Stayed with Achish, as his vassal. 5: It was customary for a suzerain to give an estate to his vassal in return for his services. David's aim is to get away from Achish's watchful eyes. 6: Ziklag was evidently crown property at the time of the narrator, during the reign of the kings of Judah—i.e., ^a Cf. Amos 5.21.

^b So many mss.; other mss. and editions omit.

granted me in one of the country towns where I can live; why should your servant remain with you in the royal city?"⁶ At that time Achish granted him Ziklag; that is how Ziklag came to belong to the kings of Judah, as is still the case.⁷ The length of time that David lived in Philistine territory was a year and four months.

⁸ David and his men went up and raided the Geshurites, the Gizrites, and the Amalekites—who were the inhabitants of the region of Olam,^a all the way to Shur and to the land of Egypt.—⁹ When David attacked a region, he would leave no man or woman alive; he would take flocks, herds, asses, camels, and clothing. When he returned and came^b to Achish, ¹⁰ Achish would ask, "Where^c did you raid today?" and David would reply, "The Negeb^d of Judah," or "the Negeb of the Jerahmeelites," or "the Negeb of the Kenites."¹¹ David would leave no man or woman alive to be brought to Gath; for he thought, "They might tell about us: David did this." Such was his practice as long as he stayed in the territory of the Philistines. ¹² Achish trusted David. He thought: ^e"He has aroused the wrath of^e his own people Israel, and so he will be my vassal forever."

28 At that time the Philistines mustered their forces for war, to take the field against Israel. Achish said to David, "You know, of course, that you and your men must march out with my forces."² David answered Achish, "You surely know what your servant will do." "In that case," Achish replied to David, "I will appoint you my bodyguard for life."

³ Now Samuel had died and all Israel made lament for him; and he was buried in his own town of Ramah. And Saul had forbidden [recourse to] ghosts and familiar spirits in the land.

⁴ The Philistines mustered and they marched to Shunem and encamped; and Saul gathered all Israel, and they encamped at Gilboa. ⁵ When Saul saw the Philistine force, his heart trembled with fear. ⁶ And Saul inquired of the LORD, but the LORD did not answer him, either by dreams or by Urim^g or by prophets. ⁷ Then Saul said to his courtiers, "Find me a woman who consults ghosts, so that I can go to her and inquire through her." And his courtiers after Solomon and before the Babylonian exile. 8–11: Achish expects David to make raids on Judah. But David refuses to fight his own people, so he raids non-Israelite tribes and clans. After killing their population so as not to leave witnesses, he lies to Achish about the object of his raids. The Negeb, the desert region in the south. The clans of Jerahmeelites and Kenites were attached to Judah. 28.1–2: This time lying cannot solve David's problem: how to reconcile his obligations to his suzerain with his unwillingness to fight against Israel. Meanwhile David gives an ambiguous answer to Achish, who, however, interprets it as expressing loyalty. As a sign of his trust, he appoints David to the sensitive office of bodyguard. Here the narrative breaks off, leaving open the question of what course David will take in the impending war.

28.3–25: Prophecy of doom. This narrative, which explains the reason for Saul's imminent defeat and death in the battle against the Philistines, seems misplaced. It would fit better immediately before ch 31, where that battle is described. Moreover, placed there the break between 28.1–2 and ch 29, which clearly belong together, would be avoided. That position would also solve the difficulty that according to 28.4 the Philistines are already at Shunem in the valley of Jezreel, whereas according to 29.1 they are only at Aphek, close to their territory, and from there they march to Jezreel (29.11). The narrative consists of five parts, arranged concentrically around Samuel's prophecy: narrator's report, dialogue between Saul and the necromancer, dialogue between Samuel and Saul, dialogue between Saul and the necromancer, narrator's report. 3: The exposition mentions two events, which happened previously, but are important for the present story: Samuel's death and Saul's removal of necromancers. 4: Shunem and Mount Gilboa lie on opposite sides of the valley of Jezreel. Saul's fear is an indication of his decline. 7: Since discovering a Septuagint reads "Telam" (cf. "Telaim" in 15.4; and "Telem" in Josh. 15.24).

b Change of vocalization yields "brought it"; cf. v. 11.

c So some mss. and Targum; Septuagint and 4QSam^a read "Whom."

d I.e., the part of the Negeb occupied by these clans.

e-e Cf. note at 13.4.

f The rest of this chapter would read well after chapters 29 and 30.

g A kind of oracle; see note at Exod. 28.30 and 1 Sam. 14.41.

told him that there was a woman in En-dor who consulted ghosts.

⁸ Saul disguised himself; he put on different clothes and set out with two men. They came to the woman by night, and he said, "Please divine for me by a ghost. Bring up for me the one I shall name to you." ⁹ But the woman answered him, "You know what Saul has done, how he has banned [the use of] ghosts and familiar spirits in the land. So why are you laying a trap for me, to get me killed?" ¹⁰ Saul swore to her by the LORD: "As the LORD lives, you won't get into trouble over this." ¹¹ At that, the woman asked, "Whom shall I bring up for you?" He answered, "Bring up Samuel for me." ¹² Then the woman recognized Samuel,^a and she shrieked loudly, and said to Saul, "Why have you deceived me? You are Saul!" ¹³ The king answered her, "Don't be afraid. What do you see?" And the woman said to Saul, "I see a divine being coming up from the earth." ¹⁴ "What does he look like?" he asked her. "It is an old man coming up," she said, "and he is wrapped in a robe." Then Saul knew that it was Samuel; and he bowed low in homage with his face to the ground.

¹⁵ Samuel said to Saul, "Why have you disturbed me and brought me up?" And Saul answered, "I am in great trouble. The Philistines are attacking me and God has turned away from me; He no longer answers me, either by prophets or in dreams. So I have called you to tell me what I am to do." ¹⁶ Samuel said, "Why do you ask me, seeing that the LORD has turned away from you and has become your adversary?"^b ¹⁷ The LORD has done "for Himself" as He foretold through me: The LORD has torn the kingship out of your hands and has given it to your fellow, to David, ¹⁸ because you did not obey the LORD and did not execute His wrath upon the Amalekites. That is why the LORD has done this to you today. ¹⁹ Further, the LORD will deliver the Israelites who are with you into the hands of the Philistines. Tomorrow your sons and you will be with me; and the LORD will also deliver the Israelite forces into the hands of the Philistines."

²⁰ At once Saul flung himself prone on the ground, terrified by Samuel's words. Besides, there was no strength in him, for he had not eaten anything all day and all night. ²¹ The woman went up to Saul and, seeing how greatly disturbed he was, she said to him, "Your handmaid listened to you; I took my life in my hands and heeded the

the future by legitimate means failed—a bad sign in itself—Saul has recourse to an illegitimate one. It is ironic that he who banned necromancers now consults one himself. 8: Sheol, the abode of the dead was believed to be beneath the earth. 11: Though dead, Samuel the prophet is still expected to be able to foretell the future. 12–14: Apparently only the woman could see the ghost, whereas Saul could only hear him. The appearance of Samuel's ghost is considered to be real—not trickery by the woman or imagination of Saul. The Bible believes in the possibility of sorcery, soothsaying and necromancy, but prohibits them as heathen practices (Deut. 18.9–14). Wrapped in a robe: Samuel's robe played a role before; see 2.19; 15.27. 17–18: See 15.18–19, 28. 19: With me, in Sheol, the underworld (see 2.6 n.). 20: He had not eaten, owing to his depression. 21–24: In contrast to the stern Samuel, the woman is depicted as concerned for Saul's well-being. She has compassion for him and urges him to eat (she mentions only a bit of food, but slaughters a stall-fed calf and bakes cakes). She uses the argument that because she listened to Saul, he should listen to her in return. Much urging, by the woman as well as by the courtiers, is needed to persuade Saul to eat. 23: It was customary to sit on the bed (or couch) while eating (Ezek. 23.41; Amos 6.4). 25: Saul and his courtiers leave as soon as they finish eating, before anyone can recognize them.

a Some Septuagint mss. read "Saul."

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Some mss. and Septuagint read "to you."

request you made of me. ²²So now you listen to me: Let me set before you a bit of food. Eat, and then you will have the strength to go on your way." ²³He refused, saying, "I will not eat." But when his courtiers as well as the woman urged him, he listened to them; he got up from the ground and sat on the bed. ²⁴The woman had a stall-fed calf in the house; she hastily slaughtered it, and took flour and kneaded it, and baked some unleavened cakes. ²⁵She set this before Saul and his courtiers, and they ate. Then they rose and left the same night.

29 The Philistines mustered all their forces at Aphek, while Israel was encamping at the spring in Jezreel. ²The Philistine lords came marching, each with his units of hundreds and of thousands; and David and his men came marching last, with Achish. ³The Philistine officers asked, "Who are those Hebrews?" "Why, that's David, the servant of King Saul of Israel," Achish answered the Philistine officers. "He has been with me ^afor a year or more,^a and I have found no fault in him from the day he defected until now." ⁴But the Philistine officers were angry with him; and the Philistine officers said to him, "Send the man back; let him go back to the place you assigned him. He shall not march down with us to the battle, or else he may become our adversary in battle. For with what could that fellow appease his master if not with ^bthe heads of these men?^b" ⁵Remember, he is the David of whom they sang as they danced:

Saul has slain his thousands;
David, his tens of thousands."

⁶Achish summoned David and said to him, "As the LORD lives, you are an honest man, and I would like to have you serve^c in my forces; for I have found no fault with you from the day you joined me until now. But you are not acceptable to the other lords. ⁷So go back in peace, and do nothing to displease the Philistine lords."

⁸David, however, said to Achish, "But what have I done, what fault have you found in your servant from the day I appeared before you to this day, that I should not go and fight against the enemies of my lord the king?" ⁹Achish replied to David, "I know; you are as acceptable to me as an angel of God. But the Philistine officers have decided that you must not march out with us to the battle. ¹⁰So rise early in the morning, you and your lord's ser-

29.1-11: The problem solved.

This narrative continues 28.1-2. It shows again that God is with David: His problem of how to refrain from fighting against his own people without violating his suzerain's order is solved by the Philistine lords, who mistrust David. The narrative is composed of two rounds of dialogues—the first between the Philistine officers and Achish, the second between Achish and David. 2: The Philistine lords, see 5.8 n. 3: Hebrews, see 4.6 n. 4: Angry, because in the officers' opinion, David endangers them. The place you assigned him, Ziklag. That fellow, a disdainful phrase. These men, the Philistines in front of them. 5: Like Achish's courtiers (21.12), the Philistine officers base their argument on the song of the Israelite women (18.7), which celebrated David for his glorious victory over the Philistines. 6-7: Before ordering David back, Achish praises him and stresses his faith in him. It is ironic that Achish has complete confidence in David, who repeatedly deceived him. As the LORD lives: Achish even swears by the God of David. Polytheistic peoples believed in the power of other peoples' gods (see 4.8). The other lords, the Philistine lords adopted the officers' opinion. 8: David, who is happy not to have to participate in the war, pretends to be offended so as to underscore his (feigned) loyalty to Achish. 9: Acceptable to me, lit. "good in my eyes." Achish intensifies his praise of David, even comparing him to an angel of God. The same rather extreme comparison is applied to David—and to no one else—three more times (2 Sam. 14.17, 20; 19.28). 10: Your lord's servants: David's men became Achish's servants together with David himself.

a-a Meaning of phrase uncertain.

b-b A euphemism for "our heads."

c Lit. "go out and come in."

vants who came with you—^arise early in the morning,^a and leave as soon as it is light.”¹¹ Accordingly, David and his men rose early in the morning to leave, to return to the land of the Philistines, while the Philistines marched up to Jezreel.

30 By the time David and his men arrived in Ziklag, on the third day, the Amalekites had made a raid into the Negeb and against Ziklag; they had stormed Ziklag and burned it down.² They had taken the women in it captive, low-born and high-born alike; they did not kill any, but carried them off and went their way.³ When David and his men came to the town and found it burned down, and their wives and sons and daughters taken captive,⁴ David and the troops with him broke into tears, until they had no strength left for weeping.⁵ David's two wives had been taken captive, Ahinoam of Jezreel and Abigail wife of Nabal from Carmel.⁶ David was in great danger, for the troops threatened to stone him; for all the troops were embittered on account of their sons and daughters.

But David sought strength in the LORD his God.⁷ David said to the priest Abiathar son of Ahimelech, “Bring the ephod up to me.” When Abiathar brought up the ephod^b to David,⁸ David inquired of the LORD, “Shall I pursue those raiders? Will I overtake them?” And He answered him, “Pursue, for you shall overtake and you shall rescue.”

⁹So David and the six hundred men with him set out, and they came to the Wadi Besor, where a halt was made by those who were to be left behind.¹⁰ David continued the pursuit with four hundred men; two hundred men had halted, too faint to cross the Wadi Besor.¹¹ They came upon an Egyptian in the open country and brought him to David. They gave him food to eat and water to drink; ¹²he was also given a piece of pressed fig cake and two cakes of raisins. He ate and regained his strength, for he had eaten no food and drunk no water for three days and three nights.¹³ Then David asked him, “To whom do you belong and where are you from?” “I am an Egyptian boy,” he answered, “the slave of an Amalekite. My master abandoned me when I fell ill three days ago.¹⁴ We had raided the Negeb of the Cherethites, and [the Negeb] of Judah, and the Negeb of Caleb; we also burned down Ziklag.”¹⁵ And David said to him, “Can you lead me down to that 11: To Jezreel, where the Israelite army was encamping (v. 1).

30.1–30: Defeat turned into victory. In David's absence the Amalekites raided Ziklag, taking captives and spoil. Thanks to the Philistine lords' distrust, and particularly to Achish's order to leave early in the morning, David arrives home soon enough to be able to overtake the Amalekites and rescue the captives and spoil. The first part of the narrative is devoted to the encounter with the Amalekites, the second part to the distribution of the spoils taken from them. The narrative presents some important contrasts between David and Saul: David successfully consults God, Saul does not; David is victorious in battle, Saul suffers defeat; David rescues all women and children, Saul and his children die, together with many of his troops. The contrasts are highlighted by the fact that David's battle against the Amalekites and Saul's battle against the Philistines took place at approximately the same time (see 2 Sam. 1.1–2). Furthermore, this battle should not have taken place since Saul should have killed all the Amalekites (ch 15). 1: The Amalekites attacked Ziklag (see 27.6), when there were only women and children in the town. 5: See 25.42–43. 6: David, as leader, is held responsible for the disaster. 7: See 23.6 n. 8: In contrast to Saul (28.6), the LORD answers David, telling him that he will surely overtake and rescue (these verbs are emphasized in the Heb.). 10: Too faint: After marching home from Aphek, the men immediately had to set out again and hurry into the desert in pursuit of the Amalekites. 11–15: Thanks to the Egyptian boy, David soon discovers the Amalekites and is able to rescue captives and spoil. Because the boy, being ill, was cruelly abandoned by his master, without food or drink, he is prepared to help David—only concerned that he not be killed or delivered to his Amalekite master. 14: Cherethites, Philistines (cf. v. 16; Ezek. 25.16).

a-a Meaning of parts of verse uncertain. Septuagint reads “and go to the place that I have assigned you; and harbor no evil thought in your heart, for you are acceptable to me.”

b See note at 2.28.

band?" He replied, "Swear to me by God that you will not kill me or deliver me into my master's hands, and I will lead you down to that band." ¹⁶So he led him down, and there they were, scattered all over the ground, eating and drinking and making merry because of all the vast spoil they had taken from the land of the Philistines and from the land of Judah. ¹⁷David attacked them from ^abefore dawn until the evening of the next day;^a none of them escaped, except four hundred young men who mounted camels and got away. ¹⁸David rescued everything the Amalekites had taken; David also rescued his two wives. ¹⁹Nothing of theirs was missing—young or old, sons or daughters, spoil or anything else that had been carried off—David recovered everything. ²⁰David took all the flocks and herds, ^awhich [the troops] drove ahead of the other livestock;^a and they declared, "This is David's spoil."

²¹When David reached the two hundred men who were too faint to follow David and who had been left at the Wadi Besor, they came out to welcome David and the troops with him; David came forward with the troops and greeted them. ²²But all the mean and churlish fellows among the men who had accompanied David spoke up, "Since they did not accompany us,^b we will not give them any of the spoil that we seized—except that each may take his wife and children and go." ²³David, however, spoke up, "You must not do that, ^cmy brothers, in view of^c what the LORD has granted us, guarding us and delivering into our hands the band that attacked us. ²⁴How could anyone agree with you in this matter? The share of those who remain with the baggage shall be the same as the share of those who go down to battle; they shall share alike." ²⁵So from that day on it was made a fixed rule for Israel, continuing to the present day.

²⁶When David reached Ziklag, he sent some of the spoil to the elders of Judah ^a[and] to his friends,^a saying, "This is a present for you from our spoil of the enemies of the LORD." ²⁷[He sent the spoil to the elders] in Bethel,^d Ramoth-negeb, and Jattir; ²⁸in Aroer, Siphmoth, and Esh-temoa; ²⁹in Racal, in the towns of the Jerahmeelites, and in the towns of the Kenites; ³⁰in Hormah, Bor-ashan, and Athach; ³¹and to those in Hebron—all the places where David and his men had roamed.

The name probably points to their origin from the island of Crete (see 4.1b n). Caleb, see 25.2–3 n. Burned down Ziklag, in revenge for David's raid (27.8). 15: The law in the ancient Near East required returning slaves to their masters—Israelite law only being an exception (Deut. 23.16–17). 16: The feasting Amalekites are completely oblivious of a possible attack. 17: The next day after coming there David attacks from before dawn until evening. 20: This is David's spoil, a sign of the men's gratitude, and a radical reversal of their attitude at the beginning of the narrative (v. 6). 24: The men who guard the baggage, thereby allowing the others to move swiftly, have contributed to the victory (cf. 25.13). 25: The narrator explains that a rule existing in his time originated from David's prescription. 26–31: David sends parts of the spoil to the elders of Judah, to express his gratitude for their help when he roamed through their territory, and to gain their support in the future. All places mentioned were situated in the area of Hebron and Beer-sheba.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b So some mss. and versions; most mss. and editions read "me."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads "after."

d Called Bethul in Josh. 19.4.

31^aThe Philistines attacked Israel, and the men of Israel fled before the Philistines and [many] fell on Mount Gilboa. ²The Philistines pursued Saul and his sons, and the Philistines struck down Jonathan, Abinadab, and Malchishua, sons of Saul. ³The battle raged around Saul, and ^bsome of the archers^b hit him, and he ^cwas severely wounded^c by the archers. ⁴Saul said to his arms-bearer, "Draw your sword and run me through, so that the uncircumcised may not run me through and make sport of me." But his arms-bearer, in his great awe, refused; whereupon Saul grasped the sword and fell upon it. ⁵When his arms-bearer saw that Saul was dead, he too fell on his sword and died with him. ⁶Thus Saul and his three sons and his arms-bearer, ^das well as all his men,^d died together on that day. ⁷And when the men of Israel ^eon the other side of the valley and on the other side of the Jordan^e saw that the men of Israel had fled and that Saul and his sons were dead, they abandoned the towns and fled; the Philistines then came and occupied them.

⁸The next day the Philistines came to strip the slain, and they found Saul and his three sons lying on Mount Gilboa. ⁹They cut off his head and stripped him of his armor, and they sent them throughout the land of the Philistines, to spread the news ^fin the temples of their idols^f and among the people. ¹⁰They placed his armor in the temple of Ash-taroth, and they impaled his body on the wall of Beth-shan. ¹¹When ^gthe inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead heard about it—what^g the Philistines had done to Saul—¹²all their stalwart men set out and marched all night; they removed the bodies of Saul and his sons from the wall of Beth-shan and came^h to Jabesh and burned them there. ¹³Then they took the bones and buried them under the tamarisk tree in Jabesh, and they fasted for seven days.

31.1–13: Tragic end. Saul, who was anointed king in order to liberate Israel from the Philistines (9.16), dies while being defeated by the Philistines. Not only did he fail in liberating Israel, but at his death the Philistines gained domination over most of the country. Saul's career began with the rescue of Jabesh-gilead (ch 11), and it ended with the men of Jabesh-gilead rescuing his dead body. The first part of the narrative tells of Israel's defeat and Saul's death, the second part of the treatment of his and his sons' corpses. 1: The narrative takes no interest in the details of the battle, only in its outcome. 4: A few cases of suicide, mostly committed to escape being killed by the enemy, are recorded in the Bible (Judg. 9.54; 16.30; 2 Sam. 17.23; 1 Kings 16.18). The Bible does not view these suicides negatively, in the way later Judaism would. The uncircumcised, a deprecatory designation (see 14.6). Instead of make sport of, the Heb may be translated "abuse." The abuse of enemy corpses springs from feelings of rage and hatred towards them. 6: All his men, those close to him; the others fled (Radak). 7: The people living near the battlefield fled in fear of the Philistines. 10: They placed his armor in the temple, cf. 21.10. Ashtaroth, see 7.3. Impalement of corpses was designed to shame and demoralize the enemy. 12: By their courageous deed, intended to prevent further desecration of the corpses, the men of Jabesh-gilead pay their debt to Saul for the rescue of their city (ch 11). Cremation was not practiced in Israel. In this particular case the flesh was probably burned because it was in a state of decay, and only the bones were buried. 13: They fasted, as an act of mourning. According to the Bible mourning rites were observed for seven days (see Gen. 50.10; Job 2.13), and that is still the case in Judaism today (the mourning period is called "shiv'ah," from the Heb word for seven).

a 1 Chron. 10 reproduces this chapter, with minor variations.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Lit. "the archers, men with the bow."

c-c Construed as hophal form; cf. 1 Kings 2.34.

d-d Lacking in the Septuagint; 1 Chron. 10.6 reads "all his house."

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. 1 Chron. 10.7 reads "in the valley."

f-f Septuagint and 1 Chron. 10.9 read "among their idols."

g-g 1 Chron. 10.11 reads "all [the inhabitants of] Jabesh-gilead heard all that."

h 1 Chron. 10.12 reads "brought them."

2 Samuel

AS STATED IN THE INTRODUCTION to 1 Samuel, the two books of Samuel are actually one work. For information about the background, literary form, text, and composition of 2 Samuel, see the introduction to 1 Samuel.

The reign of King David is the subject of 2 Samuel, which is composed of three parts. The first part (1.1–8.18) tells of David's rise to power, the second (8.19–20.26) of his sin and the ensuing troubles in his family, and the third (chs 21–24) is an appendix consisting of miscellaneous materials. Both the first and the second part end with a list of David's chief officials (8.16–18; 20.23–26).

David is highly successful in his career. He conquers Jerusalem, makes it his administrative and religious center, liberates Israel definitively from Philistine domination, and even creates an empire. In his personal life, however, he makes serious mistakes, and consequently has to undergo great sufferings.

[SHIMON BAR-EFRAT]

1 After the death of Saul—David had already returned from defeating the Amalekites—David stayed two days in Ziklag. ²On the third day, a man came from Saul's camp, with his clothes rent and earth on his head; and as he approached David, he flung himself to the ground and bowed low. ³David said to him, "Where are you coming from?" He answered, "I have just escaped from the camp of Israel." ⁴"What happened?" asked David. "Tell me!" And he told him how the troops had fled the battlefield, and that, moreover, many of the troops had fallen and his sword, begged the Amalekite to finish him off (regarding the statement in 31.6 that Saul died, cf. 1 Sam. 17.50–51). According to this interpretation, Saul, who failed to kill all the Amalekites and particularly their king (1 Sam. ch 15), is now dispatched himself by an Amalekite. David, at any rate, believes the Amalekite, who brings Saul's crown and armlet as evidence. The Amalekite expects to be rewarded by David for liquidating his enemy, but David puts him to death, and mourns over Saul and Jonathan. 1: After the death of Saul, cf. Josh. 1.1; Judg. 1.1. This formula motivated the division of Samuel into two books at this particular point. The Amalekites, see 1 Sam. ch 30. Ziklag, see 1 Sam. 27.6. 2: His clothes rent and earth on his head, conventional signs of mourning. 4: The man's account, conveying the bad news

1.1–16: Message of death. This narrative reports David's reaction to the message of Saul's death. The account of Saul's death here disagrees with the account in 1 Sam. ch 31. There it was told that Saul, after begging his arms-bearer to kill him, committed suicide by falling on his sword; here, that Saul, after requesting an unknown Amalekite to kill him, died by the hand of that Amalekite. Some scholars explain the discrepancy by assuming two different sources; others contend that the Amalekite lied (to find favor with David). It is quite possible, however, that the two accounts complement each other. The Amalekite does not say that he killed Saul, but that he finished him off (v. 10). Perhaps Saul, close to death after falling upon died; also that Saul and his son Jonathan were dead. ⁵“How do you know,” David asked the young man who brought him the news, “that Saul and his son Jonathan are dead?” ⁶The young man who brought him the news answered, “I happened to be at Mount Gilboa, and I saw Saul leaning on his spear, and the chariots and horsemen closing in on him. ⁷He looked around and saw me, and he called to me. When I responded, ‘At your service,’ ⁸he asked me, ‘Who are you?’ And I told him that I was an Amalekite. ⁹Then he said to me, ‘Stand over me, and finish me off, ^afor I am in agony and am barely alive.’^a ¹⁰So I stood over him and finished him off, for I knew that ^ahe would never rise from where he was lying.^a Then I took the crown from his head and the armlet from his arm, and I have brought them here to my lord.”

¹¹David took hold of his clothes and rent them, and so did all the men with him. ¹²They lamented and wept, and they fasted until evening for Saul and his son Jonathan, and for the soldiers of the LORD^b and the House of Israel who had fallen by the sword. ¹³David said to the young man who had brought him the news, “Where are you from?” He replied, “I am the son of a resident alien, an Amalekite.” ¹⁴“How did you dare,” David said to him, “to lift your hand and kill the LORD’s anointed?” ¹⁵Thereupon David called one of the attendants and said to him, “Come over and strike him!” He struck him down and he died. ¹⁶And David said to him, “Your blood be on your own head! Your own mouth testified against you when you said, ‘I put the LORD’s anointed to death.’”

¹⁷And David intoned this dirge over Saul and his son Jonathan—¹⁸^aHe ordered the Judites to be taught [The Song of the] Bow.^a It is recorded in the Book of Jashar.^c

- ¹⁹ Your glory, O Israel,
Lies slain on your heights;
How have the mighty fallen!
- ²⁰ Tell it not in Gath,
Do not proclaim it in the streets of Ashkelon,
Lest the daughters of the Philistine rejoice,
Lest the daughters of the uncircumcised exult.
- ²¹ O hills of Gilboa—
Let there be no dew or rain on you, ^dOr bountiful fields,^d

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Septuagint reads “Judah.”

c See note at Josh. 10.13.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields “springs from the deep” (cf. Ugaritic shr’tthmtm, and Gen. 7.11; 8.2).

in increasing order, is similar to the account given to Eli by the man of Benjamin (1 Sam. 4.16–17). 6: Saul, weak from his mortal wounds, supported himself on his spear, the symbol of his kingship (see 1 Sam. 26.11 n.). The Philistines had chariots, which carried a charioteer and an archer. 10: The Amalekite justifies his deed: Not only did he fulfill Saul’s explicit wish, but he was also sure that Saul had no chance of recovering. He would never rise from where he was lying, lit. “he would not live after his falling” (presumably, upon his sword). Crown, actually a coronet or band worn on the forehead. It was a symbol of kingship (2 Kings 11.12); the armlet here likely serves a similar function. 14: To lift your hand and kill the LORD’s anointed, cf. 1 Sam. 24.7; 26.9, 11. 16: This v. chronologically precedes v. 15. Your blood be on your own head, the guilt for your death is entirely yours. I put the LORD’s anointed to death: David’s formulation of the Amalekite’s confession reflects his own viewpoint.

1.17–27: David’s dirge. Like the first part of the ch, the dirge demonstrates David’s deep sorrow over Saul and Jonathan’s death. The dirge lacks religious or national motifs. It does not mention God, and the expressions of grief relate to the deaths of Saul and Jonathan only, not to Israel’s defeat. Prominent among the dirge’s many poetical features—parallelism, metaphor, synecdoche, etc.—is the frequent use of apostrophe, the direct addressing of Israel, (virtual) messengers, the hills of Gilboa, the daughters of Israel, and Jonathan. This device is particularly impressive, because the addressees are unable to hear and respond. The two lines of v. 19 recur, in different form, in v. 25, and the second line also recurs in v. 26, forming a refrain that underscores the contrast between the leaders’ courage and their fate. 18: The difficult word bow is not in LXX. Regarding David’s instruction that the song be taught, cf. Deut. 31.22 and Ps. 60.1.

For there the shield of warriors lay rejected,
The shield of Saul,
Polished with oil no more.

22 From the blood of slain,
From the fat of warriors—
The bow of Jonathan
Never turned back;
The sword of Saul
Never withdrew empty.

23 Saul and Jonathan,
Beloved and cherished,
Never parted
In life or in death!
They were swifter than eagles,
They were stronger than lions!

24 Daughters of Israel,
Weep over Saul,
Who clothed you in crimson and finery,
Who decked your robes with jewels of gold.

25 How have the mighty fallen
In the thick of battle—
Jonathan, slain on your heights!
26 I grieve for you,
My brother Jonathan,
You were most dear to me.
Your love was wonderful to me
More than the love of women.

27 How have the mighty fallen,
The ^aweapons of war^a perished!

2 Sometime afterward, David inquired of the LORD, "Shall I go up to one of the towns of Judah?" The LORD answered, "Yes." David further asked, "Which one shall I go up to?" And the LORD replied, "To Hebron." ²So David went up there, along with his two wives, Ahinoam of Jezreel and Abigail wife of Nabal the Carmelite. ³David also took the men who were with him, each with his family, and they settled in the towns about Hebron. ⁴The men of Judah came and there they anointed David king over the House of Judah.

David was told about the men of Jabesh-gilead who 19: Glory: The metaphor refers to Saul. 20: The towns Gath and Askelon stand for all Philistia. Daughters: Women used to celebrate victories with song and dance (Judg. 11.34; 1 Sam. 18.6). Uncircumcised, see 1 Sam. 14.6 n. 21: Gilboa, see 1 Sam. 31.1, 8. Instead of bountiful fields, the Heb may be translated "fields of heights" (the same Heb root in Judg. 5.18), which parallels hills of Gilboa. Shields were made of leather, and had to be oiled regularly. 22: From the blood . . . from the fat, i.e., from spilling the blood and the fat. 24: Daughters of Israel: Dirges were conventionally sung by women (Jer. 9.16–19). The clothes and ornaments represent the prosperity brought by Saul. 26: This v., wholly dedicated to Jonathan, and formulated in the first and second person, is the most direct and personal one in the dirge. David's statement that Jonathan's love was wonderful to him more than the love of women (for him) does not hint at homosexual relations, but is an expression of deep friendship (regarding this friendship, see 1 Sam. chs 18–20; 23.15–18).

2.1–11: King of Judah. While David reigns over Judah, Ishbosheth, Saul's son, reigns over parts of Israel, which consisted of the other tribes. 1: After Saul's death David wants to return home from the land of the Philistines, where he fled from Saul's persecutions (1 Sam. ch 27). Inquired, most likely by means of the ephod, which contained the Urim and Thummim (1 Sam. 14.42; 23.6, 11). Hebron was the principal city of Judah. 2: Ahinoam, Abigail, see 1 Sam. 25.42–43. Both Jezreel and Carmel were near Hebron; thus David is related through his wives to the families in the region. 3: The men who were with him, see 1 Sam. 27.2. 4a: Through the initiative of the men of Judah David is made king. The gifts he sent to the elders of Judah (1 Sam. 30.26–31) may have contributed to his being chosen. 4b–7: Besides expressing appreciation for their pious burial of Saul (1 Sam. 31.11–13), David's buried Saul.⁵ So David sent messengers to the men of Jabesh-gilead and said to them, "May you be blessed of the LORD because you performed this act of faithfulness to your lord Saul and buried him.⁶ May the LORD in turn show you true faithfulness; and I too will reward you generously because you performed this act.⁷ Now take courage and be brave men; for your lord Saul is dead and the House of Judah have already anointed me king over them."

a-a I.e., Saul and Jonathan.

⁸ But Abner son of Ner, Saul's army commander, had taken Ish-bosheth^a son of Saul and brought him across to Mahanaim⁹ and made him king over Gilead, the Ashurites,^b Jezreel, Ephraim, and Benjamin—over all Israel.¹⁰ Ish-bosheth^a son of Saul was forty years old when he became king of Israel, and he reigned two years. But the House of Judah supported David.¹¹ The length of time that David reigned in Hebron over the House of Judah was seven years and six months.

¹² Once Abner son of Ner and the soldiers of Ish-bosheth son of Saul marched out from Mahanaim to Gibeon,¹³ and Joab son of Zeruiah and the soldiers of David [also] came out.^c They confronted one another at the pool of Gibeon: one group sat on one side of the pool, and the other group on the other side of the pool.¹⁴ Abner said to Joab, "Let the young men come forward and sport^d before us." "Yes, let them," Joab answered.¹⁵ They came forward and were counted off, twelve for Benjamin and Ish-bosheth son of Saul, and twelve of David's soldiers.¹⁶ Each one grasped his opponent's head^e [and thrust] his dagger into his opponent's side; thus they fell together. That place, which is in Gibeon, was called Helkath-hazzurim.^f blessing of the men of Jabesh-gilead also has the purpose of persuading them to offer him Saul's throne.

¹⁷ A fierce battle ensued that day, and Abner and the men of Israel were routed by David's soldiers.¹⁸ The three sons of Zeruiah^g were there—Joab, Abishai, and Asahel. Asahel was swift of foot, like a gazelle in the open field.¹⁹ And Asahel ran after Abner, swerving neither right nor left in his pursuit of Abner.²⁰ Abner looked back and shouted, "Is that you, Asahel?" "Yes, it is," he called back.²¹ Abner said to him, "Turn to the right or to the left, and seize one of our boys and strip off his tunic." But Asahel would not leave off.²² Abner again begged Asahel, "Stop pursuing me, or I'll have to strike you down. How will I

8: Abner, Saul's cousin (1 Sam. 14.50), is the strong man, who dominates Ish-bosheth. Mahanaim, east of the Jordan. Most of the land west of the Jordan was under Philistine control after their victory at the battle of Mount Gilboa (1 Sam. ch 31). 9: Ish-bosheth first reigns over Gilead, then gradually extends his rule to the west and the south, and in the last two years rules over all Israel (except Judah). Ashurites, probably Asherites (members of the tribe of Asher). 10: See 1 Sam. 13.1 n.

2.12–32: Civil war. David's men gain victory over Ish-bosheth's men, signaling the ascent of David versus the descent of the house of Saul (cf. 3.1). 13: Joab, see 1 Sam. 26.6 n. Archeological excavations at Gibeon have revealed a deep pool, hewn in the rock. 14: Single combat between representatives of two opposing armies was not uncommon (see 1 Sam. 17.4–7 n.). Its purpose was to avoid comprehensive fighting of the entire armies. 15: Benjamin, Ish-bosheth's tribe. 17: Since none of the young men prevailed over his opponent a battle between the armies ensues. 18–24: The account of the battle focuses on two men: Abner and Asahel. Abner does not want to kill Asahel, but sees no alternative. 21: Strip off his tunic, see Judg. 14.19. 23: A backward thrust, rather "the back end." The butt of the spear was fitted with a metal blade, which would be stuck in the ground (1 Sam. 26.7). 26: In order to prevent further bloodshed Abner, who has suffered many more losses than Joab, proposes to end hostilities. Must the sword devour forever: The same metaphor is used in Deut. 32.42; 2 Sam. 18.8, and elsewhere. 28: The sounding of the horn signals the cessation of pursuit. 32: Lying unburied on the battlefield and being a prey to the wild animals was the greatest horror that a warrior could face (cf. 1 Sam. 17.44, 46). Especially great value was attached to burial a Meaning "Man of Shame," deliberately altered from Ish-baal, "man of Baal"; cf. 1 Chron. 8.33; 9.39, and note at 2 Sam. 4.4. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Septuagint adds "from Hebron." d I.e., engage in single combat.

e Septuagint adds "with his hand."

f Meaning perhaps "the Field of the Flints (or Blades)."

g A sister of David, 1 Chron. 2.16.

look your brother Joab in the face?"²³ When he refused to desist, Abner struck him in the belly with ^aa backward thrust^a of his spear and the spear protruded from his back. He fell there and died on the spot. And all who came to the place where Asahel fell and died halted;²⁴ but Joab and Abishai continued to pursue Abner. And the sun was setting as they reached the hill of Ammah, ^awhich faces Giah on the road to the wilderness of Gibeon.^a ²⁵ The Benjaminites rallied behind Abner, forming a single company; and they took up a position on the top of a hill. ²⁶ Abner then called out to Joab, "Must the sword devour forever? You know how bitterly it's going to end! How long will you delay ordering your troops to stop the pursuit of their kinsmen?" ²⁷ And Joab replied, "As God lives, ^bif you hadn't spoken up, the troops would have given up the pursuit of their kinsmen only the next morning."^b ²⁸ Joab then sounded the horn, and all the troops halted; they ceased their pursuit of Israel and stopped the fighting. ²⁹ Abner and his men marched through the Arabah all that night and, after crossing the Jordan, they marched ^athrough all of Bithron^a until they came to Mahanaim. ³⁰ After Joab gave up the pursuit of Abner, he assembled all the troops and found nineteen of David's soldiers missing, besides Asahel. ³¹ David's soldiers, on the other hand, ^adefeated the Benjaminites and the men under Abner and killed three hundred and sixty men.^a ³² They bore Asahel away and buried him in his father's tomb in Bethlehem. Then Joab and his men marched all night; day broke upon them in Hebron.

3 The war between the House of Saul and the House of David was long-drawn-out; but David kept growing stronger, while the House of Saul grew weaker.

^{2c} Sons were born to David in Hebron: His first-born was Amnon, by Ahinoam of Jezreel; ³ his second was Chileab, by Abigail wife of Nabal the Carmelite; the third was Absalom son of Maacah, daughter of King Talmai of Geshur; ⁴ the fourth was Adonijah son of Haggith; the fifth was Shephatiah son of Abital; ⁵ and the sixth was Ithream, by David's wife Eglah. These were born to David in Hebron.

⁶ During the war between the House of Saul and the House of David, Abner supported the House of Saul. ⁷ Now Saul had a concubine named Rizpah, daughter of

in one's father's tomb (see 19:38; 21:14).

3.1-5: Family enlargement, part 1.

Through his marriages David enters into relations with many families, one of them a royal one. Numerous wives and children were considered a sign of status. The list mentions only one son, probably the eldest, for each wife. 1: This v. serves as a link between 2.12-32 and 3.6-39. Only a few details are told concerning the long-drawn-out war. 3: Geshur, a small Aramaic kingdom, east of the Sea of Galilee.

3.6-39: The strong army chief.

The first part of the narrative deals with Abner's efforts to transfer rule over Israel from Ish-bosheth to David; the second part is concerned with Abner's death. Both parts aim at proving that Abner's murder was not by the king's will (v. 37). Thus the first part stresses (three times) that Abner, after being honorably received by David, went away unharmed; the second part, that David intensely mourned Abner's death. Abner's death was disadvantageous to David, because Abner was in the course of making him king over all Israel, whereas it benefitted Joab, who feared that Abner might take his place. 7: Sexual relations with the king's wife or concubine amounted to claiming the throne (see 16.22; 1 Kings 2.22).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Emendation yields "If you had only spoken up, the troops would already have given up the pursuit of their kinsmen this morning."

c The list of David's wives and sons in vv. 2-5 differs somewhat from the parallel list in 1 Chron. 3.1-3. The narrative in v. 1 is resumed in v. 6.

Aiah; and [Ish-bosheth] said to Abner, "Why have you lain with my father's concubine?"⁸ Abner was very upset by what Ish-bosheth said, and he replied, "Am I a dog's head^a from Judah?"^a Here I have been loyally serving the House of your father Saul and his kinsfolk and friends, and I have not betrayed you into the hands of David; yet this day you reproach me over a woman!⁹ May God do thus and more to Abner if I do not do for David as the LORD swore to him—¹⁰to transfer the kingship from the House of Saul, and to establish the throne of David over Israel and Judah from Dan to Beer-sheba."¹¹ [Ish-bosheth] could say nothing more in reply to Abner, because he was afraid of him.

¹²Abner immediately^a sent messengers to David, saying, "To whom shall the land belong?" and to say [further],^a "Make a pact with me, and I will help you and bring all Israel over to your side."¹³ He replied, "Good; I will make a pact with you. But I make one demand upon you: Do not appear before me unless you bring Michal daughter of Saul when you come before me."¹⁴ David also sent messengers to Ish-bosheth son of Saul, to say, "Give me my wife Michal, for whom I paid the bride-price^b of one hundred Philistine foreskins."^c ¹⁵So Ish-bosheth sent and had her taken away from [her] husband, Paltiel son of Laish. ¹⁶Her husband walked with her as far as Bahurim, weeping as he followed her; then Abner ordered him to turn back, and he went back.

¹⁷Abner had conferred with the elders of Israel, saying, "You have wanted David to be king over you all along. ¹⁸Now act! For the LORD has said concerning David: "I will deliver"^d My people Israel from the hands of the Philistines and all its other enemies through My servant David."¹⁹ Abner also talked with the Benjaminites; then Abner went and informed David in Hebron of all the wishes of Israel and of the whole House of Benjamin.

²⁰When Abner came to David in Hebron, accompanied by twenty men, David made a feast for Abner and the men with him. ²¹Abner said to David, "Now I will go and rally all Israel to Your Majesty. They will make a pact with you, and you can reign over all that your heart desires." And David dismissed Abner, who went away unharmed.

²²Just then David's soldiers and Joab returned from a raid, bringing much plunder with them; Abner was no

8–10: Ish-bosheth's reproach infuriates Abner, who swears to deprive the king of his rule. 8: A dog's head: Comparison to a dog was a common way of expressing contempt (see 9.8; 16.9). Dogs lived in human society as scavengers, not as pets. Abner does not deny Ish-bosheth's accusation. 9: Thus and more, see 1 Sam. 3.17 n. 10: From Dan to Beer-sheba, see 1 Sam. 3.19–21 n. 13: Michal daughter of Saul: David's right to succeed Saul as king is based in part on his marriage to Saul's daughter. 14: The official request for Michal is made to the king, who, in spite of its political implications, must concede, because Abner demands it. 15: Michal was given to Paltiel by Saul (1 Sam. 25.44). 16: Paltiel's weeping brings out the fact that nothing is said about Michal's or David's feelings—their reunion being purely political (see 6.20 n.). 17: Abner argues that both the people and God wanted David to be king. Regarding David's popularity, see 1 Sam. 18.16. 18: Since Saul failed to deliver Israel from the hands of the Philistines (see 1 Sam. 9.16), that task passed to David. 19: Abner even succeeds in persuading Benjamin, the tribe of Ish-bosheth (and Abner himself), to replace their king with a non-Benjaminite.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Cf. Exod. 22.15; Deut. 20.7; 22.23–29.

c Cf. 1 Sam. 18.27 (where the number is given as "two hundred").

d-d So many mss. and versions; most mss. and editions have "I-le has delivered."

longer with David in Hebron, for he had been dismissed and had gone away unharmed. ²³When Joab and the whole force with him arrived, Joab was told that Abner son of Ner had come to the king, had been dismissed by him, and had gone away unharmed. ²⁴Joab went to the king and said, "What have you done? Here Abner came to you; why did you let him go? Now he has gotten away! ²⁵Don't you know that Abner son of Ner came only to deceive you, to learn your comings and goings and to find out all that you are planning?" ²⁶Joab left David and sent messengers after Abner, and they brought him back from the cistern of Sirah; but David knew nothing about it. ²⁷When Abner returned to Hebron, Joab took him aside within the gate to talk to him privately;^a there he struck him in the belly. Thus [Abner] died for shedding the blood of Asahel, Joab's^b brother.

²⁸Afterward, when David heard of it, he said, "Both I and my kingdom are forever innocent before the LORD of shedding the blood of Abner son of Ner. ²⁹May [the guilt] fall upon the head of Joab and all his father's house. May the house of Joab never be without someone suffering from a discharge or an eruption, or "a male who handles the spindle,^c or one slain by the sword, or one lacking bread."—³⁰Now Joab and his brother Abishai had killed Abner because he had killed their brother Asahel during the battle at Gibeon.—³¹David then ordered Joab and all the troops with him to rend their clothes, gird on sackcloth, and make lament before^d Abner; and King David himself walked behind the bier. ³²And so they buried Abner at Hebron; the king wept aloud by Abner's grave, and all the troops wept. ³³And the king intoned this dirge over Abner, "Should Abner have died the death of a churl?"

³⁴ Your hands were not bound,
Your feet were not put in fetters;
But you fell as one falls
Before treacherous men!"

And all the troops continued to weep over him.

³⁵All the troops came to urge David to eat something while it was still day; but David swore, "May God do thus to me and more if I eat bread or anything else before sundown." ³⁶All the troops "took note of it" and approved, "just as all the troops approved everything else the king did." ³⁷That day all the troops and all Israel knew that it was not by the king's will that Abner son of Ner was 24-25: Joab accuses both David and Abner: David, that he let the enemy commander go, and Abner, that he came to spy on David. Comings and goings, a military term (cf. translators' note at 1 Sam. 29.6). 27: Instead of privately, the Heb may be translated "misleadingly" (cf. 2 Kings 4.28). Joab strikes Abner in the belly, just as Abner struck Asahel in the belly (2.23). 28-29: Shedding innocent blood entails punishment by heaven. Therefore David declares that responsibility for the murder does not rest with him, but with Joab. A discharge, a venereal disease. An eruption, a skin disease. 30: According to v. 27 Joab alone killed Abner. But instead of the first killed, the Dead Sea manuscript 4QSam^a and Septuagint read "lay in wait for," i.e., both Joab and Abishai watched for an opportunity to kill Abner. Whereas Asahel was killed during the battle, Abner was killed in peacetime (cf. 1 Kings 2.5). 31: Joab, the murderer, is obliged to participate in the mourning. Rending clothes and wearing sackcloth were signs of grief. 33-34: The first line of David's dirge parallels the fourth (died the death/fell as one falls), and the second line parallels the third (your hands/your feet; not bound/not put in fetters).

35: Fasting until evening was an expression of mourning (see 1.12).

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^b Heb. "his."

^{c-c} I.e., a man fit only for woman's work. ^d I.e., in the procession.

^{e-e} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

killed.³⁸ And the king said to his soldiers, "You well know that a prince, a great man in Israel, has fallen this day.³⁹ And today I am weak, even though anointed king; those men, the sons of Zeruiah, are too savage for me. May the LORD requite the wicked for their wickedness!"

4 When [Ish-bosheth] son of Saul heard that Abner had died in Hebron, ^ahe lost heart^a and all Israel was alarmed. ²The son of Saul [had] two company commanders, one named Baanah and the other Rechab, sons of Rimmon the Beerothite—Benjaminites, since Beeroth too was considered part of Benjamin. ³The Beerothites had fled to Gittaim,^b where they have sojourned to this day. (⁴Jonathan son of Saul had a son whose feet were crippled. He was five years old when the news about Saul and Jonathan came from Jezreel, and his nurse picked him up and fled; but as she was fleeing in haste, he fell and was lamed. His name was Mephibosheth.)^c ⁵Rechab and Baanah, sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, started out, and they reached the home of Ish-bosheth at the heat of the day, when he was taking his midday rest. ⁶^dSo they went inside the house, as though fetching wheat, and struck him in the belly.^d Rechab and his brother Baanah slipped by, ⁷and entered the house while he was asleep on his bed in his bedchamber; and they stabbed him to death. They cut off his head and took his head and made their way all night through the Arabah. ⁸They brought the head of Ish-bosheth to David in Hebron. "Here," they said to the king, "is the head of your enemy, Ish-bosheth son of Saul, who sought your life. This day the LORD has avenged my lord the king upon Saul and his offspring."

⁹But David answered Rechab and his brother Baanah, the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, and said to them, "As the LORD lives, who has rescued me from every trouble: ¹⁰The man who told me in Ziklag that Saul was dead thought he was bringing good news. But instead of rewarding him for the news, I seized and killed him. ¹¹How much more, then, when wicked men have killed a blameless man in bed in his own house! I will certainly avenge his blood on you, and I will rid the earth of you."¹² David gave orders to the young men, who killed them; they cut off their hands and feet and hung them up by the pool in 39: David explains why he does not punish Joab and Abishai, leaving that to the LORD.

4.1-12: The weak king. After several introductory remarks the narrative first tells of Ish-bosheth's death, and then of David's reaction to it, which is similar to his reaction to Saul's and Abner's death. Because Ish-bosheth's assassination made the way free for David to become king over all Israel, the narrative aims to clear him of all suspicion of complicity. This continues the theme of the initial chapters of 2 Samuel. David had no hand in the death of Saul and his family. 1-2: Son of Saul: The omission of the personal name may express contempt (cf. 1 Sam. 20.27, 30, 31). Benjaminites, of the tribe of Ish-bosheth. 3: After the original inhabitants of Beeroth (see Josh. 9.17ff.) had fled, Benjaminites settled in the town. 4: Mephibosheth being crippled and therefore considered unfit to be king, no offspring of Saul, except Ish-bosheth, was left who could be king of Israel. 6-7: V. 6 is largely repeated in v. 7 (the Heb verb at its end means "escaped" rather than slipped by). Abravanel explains that either v. 7 adds details about the way Ish-bosheth was murdered or that after striking him in the belly the assassins returned to his house in order to finish him off. It seems, however, that v. 6 is corrupt (cf. the different reading of Septuagint) and superfluous. V. 7 is a perfect continuation of v. 5. 8: The enemy . . . who sought your life is Saul, not Ish-bosheth (in the Heb the word order is "the head of Ish-bosheth son of Saul, your enemy"). Cf. 1 Sam. 20.1; 23.15. 10: See 1.1-16. 12: Cutting off hands and feet as well as hanging in a public place (after the execution) were considered extremely humiliating (Judg. 1.6-7; Deut. 21.22-23).

a-a Lit. "his hands weakened"; and so frequently.

b Gittaim was likewise in Benjamin; cf. Neh. 11.31 ff.

c The original form of the name, Merib-baal, is preserved in 1 Chron. 8.34; 9.40. Cf. Ish-bosheth (Eshibaal) in 2 Sam. 2.8, note a. This subject is resumed in chapter 9.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads, "And behold, the woman who kept the door of the house was cleaning wheat. She became drowsy and fell asleep."

Hebron. And they took the head of Ish-bosheth and buried it in the grave of Abner at Hebron.

5^aAll the tribes of Israel came to David at Hebron and said, "We are your own flesh and blood. ²Long before now, when Saul was king over us, it was you who ^bled Israel in war;^b and the LORD said to you: You shall shepherd My people Israel; you shall be ruler of Israel."^c ³All the elders of Israel came to the king at Hebron, and King David made a pact with them in Hebron before the LORD. And they anointed David king over Israel.

⁴David was thirty years old when he became king, and he reigned forty years. ⁵In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months, and in Jerusalem he reigned over all Israel and Judah thirty-three years.

⁶The king and his men set out for Jerusalem against the Jebusites who inhabited the region. David was told, "You will never get in here! ^cEven the blind and the lame will turn you back." (They meant: David will never enter here.)^c ⁷But David captured the stronghold of Zion; it is now the City of David. ⁸On that occasion David said, "Those who attack the Jebusites ^cshall reach the water channel and [strike down] the lame and the blind, who are hateful to David." That is why they say: "No one who is blind or lame may enter the House."^c a The account in vv. 1–3 and 6–10 is to be found also, with variations, in 1 Chron. 11.1–9.

⁹David occupied the stronghold and renamed it the City of David; David also fortified the surrounding area, from the Millo^d inward. ¹⁰David kept growing stronger, for the LORD, the God of Hosts, was with him.

¹¹^eKing Hiram of Tyre sent envoys to David with cedar logs, carpenters, and stonemasons; and they built a palace for David. ¹²Thus David knew that the LORD had established him as king over Israel and had exalted his kingship for the sake of His people Israel.

¹³After he left Hebron, David took more concubines and wives in Jerusalem, and more sons and daughters were born to David. ¹⁴These are the names of the children born to him in Jerusalem: ^fShammua, Shobab, Nathan, and Solomon; ¹⁵Ibhar, Elishua, Nepheg, and Japhia; ¹⁶Elishama, Eliada, and Eliphelet.

b-b Lit. "led Israel out and in."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d A citadel.

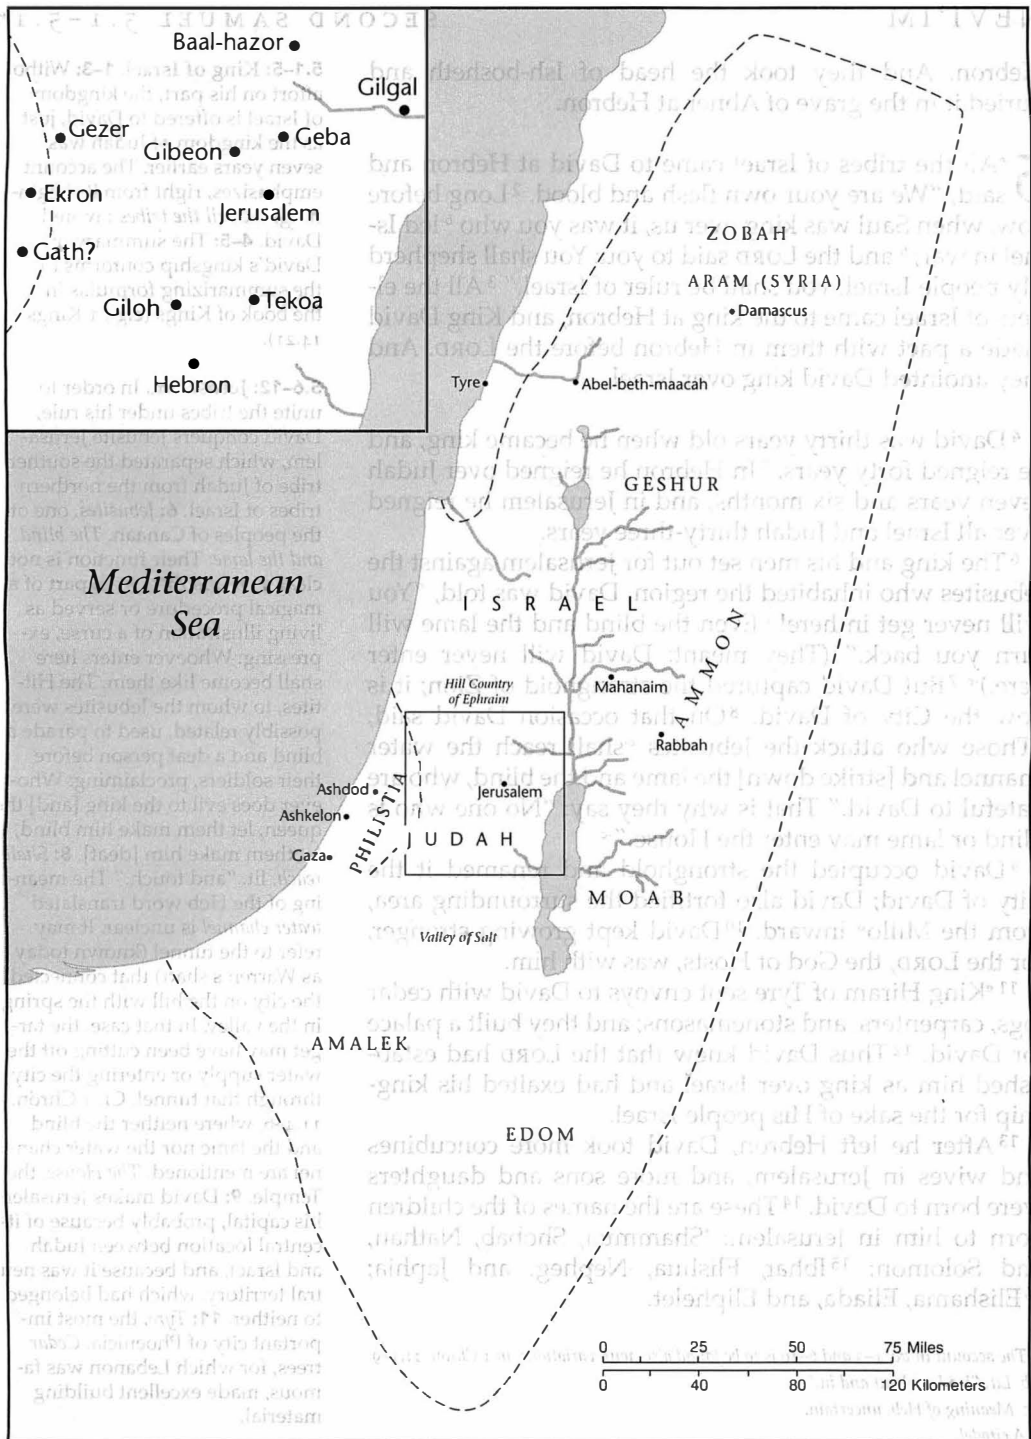

e The account in vv. 11–25 is to be found also, with variations, in 1 Chron. 14.1–16.

f The list in vv. 14–16 is found, in addition to 1 Chron. 14.4–7, in 1 Chron. 3.5–8, with variations.

5.1–5: King of Israel. 1–3: Without effort on his part, the kingdom of Israel is offered to David, just as the kingdom of Judah was seven years earlier. The account emphasizes, right from its beginning, that all the tribes favored David. 4–5: The summary of David's kingship conforms to the summarizing formulas in the book of Kings (e.g., 1 Kings 14.21).

5.6–12: Jerusalem. In order to unite the tribes under his rule, David conquers Jebusite Jerusalem, which separated the southern tribe of Judah from the northern tribes of Israel. 6: Jebusites, one of the peoples of Canaan. The blind and the lame: Their function is not clear. Perhaps they were part of a magical procedure or served as living illustration of a curse, expressing: Whoever enters here shall become like them. The Hitrites, to whom the Jebusites were possibly related, used to parade a blind and a deaf person before their soldiers, proclaiming: Whoever does evil to the king [and] the queen, let them make him blind, let them make him [deaf]. 8: Shall reach, lit. "and touch." The meaning of the Heb word translated water channel is unclear. It may refer to the tunnel (known today as Warren's shaft) that connected the city on the hill with the spring in the valley. In that case, the target may have been cutting off the water supply or entering the city through that tunnel. Cf. 1 Chron. 11.4–6, where neither the blind and the lame nor the water channel are mentioned. The House, the Temple. 9: David makes Jerusalem his capital, probably because of its central location between Judah and Israel, and because it was neutral territory, which had belonged to neither. 11: Tyre, the most important city of Phoenicia. Cedar trees, for which Lebanon was famous, made excellent building material.

5.13–16: Family enlargement, part 2. The list complements 3.2–5 (see there).

The kingdom of David according to Second Samuel. The dashed line shows the approximate boundary of the kingdom at its greatest extent.

17^aWhen the Philistines heard that David had been anointed king over Israel, the Philistines marched up in search of David; but David heard of it, and he went down to the fastness.^b 18The Philistines came and spread out over the Valley of Rephaim. 19David inquired of the LORD, "Shall I go up against the Philistines? Will You deliver them into my hands?" And the LORD answered David, "Go up, and I will deliver the Philistines into your hands." 20Thereupon David marched to Baal-perazim, and David defeated them there. And he said, "The LORD has broken through my enemies before me as waters break through [a dam]." That is why that place was named Baal-perazim.^c 21The Philistines abandoned their idols there, and David and his men carried them off.

22Once again the Philistines marched up and spread out over the Valley of Rephaim. 23David inquired of the LORD, and He answered, "Do not go up, but circle around behind them and confront them at the baca^d trees. 24And when you hear the sound of marching in the tops of the baca trees, then go into action, for the LORD will be going in front of you to attack the Philistine forces." 25David did as the LORD had commanded him; and he routed the Philistines from Geba all the way to Gezer.

6 David again assembled all the picked men of Israel, thirty thousand strong. 2^eThen David and all the troops that were with him set out from Baalim^f of Judah to bring up from there the Ark of God to which the Name was attached, the name LORD of Hosts Enthroned on the Cherubim.

3They loaded the Ark of God onto a new cart and conveyed it from the house of Abinadab, which was on the hill; and Abinadab's sons, Uzza and Ahio, guided the ^gnew cart. 4They conveyed it from Abinadab's house on the hill, [Uzzah walking]^h alongside^g the Ark of God and Ahio walking in front of the Ark. 5Meanwhile, David and all the House of Israel danced before the LORD to ⁱ[the sound of] all kinds of cypress wood [instruments],ⁱ with lyres, harps, timbrels, sistrums, and cymbals.

a Vv. 17-25 continue the narrative of v. 3.

b Probably the stronghold of Adullam (cf. 1 Sam. 22.4-5).

c Interpreted as "Baal of Breaches." Cf. 6.8 below, and the name Perez in Gen. 38.29 and note. d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e Vv. 2-12 are found also in 1 Chron. 13.5-14, with variations.

f Identical with Baalah, another name for Kiriath-jearim, where the Ark had been kept (cf. 1 Sam. 6.21; 1 Chron. 13.6; Josh. 15.9).

g-g Septuagint and 4QSam^a read "cart alongside." h Cf. vv. 6-7.

i-i Cf. Kimhi; the parallel passage 1 Chron. 13.8 reads "with all their might and with songs."

5.17-25: Liberation. David, succeeding where Saul failed, liberates Israel from Philistine domination. 17-18: The fastness may refer to the stronghold mentioned in vv. 7 and 9 (the Heb used the same word in all these vv.), which was close to the Valley of Rephaim. 19: See 2.1 n. 20: The LORD has broken through my enemies: An etiological explanation of the name Baal-perazim. It seems that "Baal," lit. "master," but also the name of the main Canaanite deity, is here an epithet for the Israelite God. 21: It was customary to bring one's gods to the battlefield in order to obtain their help (see 1 Sam. 4.3 n.). David's capture of the Philistine idols is a reversal of the situation of 1 Sam. 4.11, when the Ark of the LORD was captured by the Philistines. 23: Do not go up, to the front. 24: The sound of marching, "when a wind will move the tops of the bacas so that a sound is heard like the footsteps of marching people" (Ralbag). 25: Routing the Philistines to Gezer, on the border between Israel and Philistia, amounts to expelling them from Israelite territory.

6.1-23: Holiness. David brings the Holy Ark to Jerusalem, making the city not only his administrative, but also his religious, center. Thus Jerusalem becomes the holy city, first in Judaism, where it is still the direction of prayer, and later also in Christianity and Islam, though for different reasons. 1: Thirty thousand, see 1 Sam. 15.4 n. 2: The Ark of God, see 1 Sam. 4.4 n. 3-4: A new cart, see 1 Sam. 6.7 n. Abinadab, see 1 Sam. 7.1. The passage from new at the end of v. 3 to hill in v. 4 is a dittography, repeating (in exactly the same words in the Heb) what was said in v. 3a. Read: "Uzza and Ahio guided the cart, [Uzzah walking] alongside the Ark of God and Ahio walking in front of the Ark." 5: To all kinds of cypress wood is a corruption of "with all their might and with songs" (1 Chron. 13.8), which is similar in Heb writing.

⁶But when they came to the threshing floor of Nacon, Uzzah reached out for the Ark of God and grasped it, for the oxen had stumbled.^a ⁷The LORD was incensed at Uzzah. And God struck him down on the spot ^bfor his indiscretion,^b and he died there beside the Ark of God. ⁸David was distressed because the LORD had inflicted a breach upon Uzzah; and that place was named Perez-uzzah,^c as it is still called.

⁹David was afraid of the LORD that day; he said, "How can I let the Ark of the LORD come to me?" ¹⁰So David would not bring the Ark of the LORD to his place in the City of David; instead, David diverted it to the house of Obed-edom the Gittite. ¹¹The Ark of the LORD remained in the house of Obed-edom the Gittite three months, and the LORD blessed Obed-edom and his whole household.

¹²It was reported to King David: "The LORD has blessed Obed-edom's house and all that belongs to him because of the Ark of God." ^dThereupon David went and brought up the Ark of God from the house of Obed-edom to the City of David, amid rejoicing. ¹³When the bearers of the Ark of the LORD had moved forward six paces, he sacrificed ^ean ox and a fatling.^e ¹⁴David whirled with all his might before the LORD; David was girt with a linen ephod. ¹⁵Thus David and all the House of Israel brought up the Ark of the LORD with shouts and with blasts of the horn.

¹⁶As the Ark of the LORD entered the City of David, Michal daughter of Saul looked out of the window and saw King David leaping and whirling before the LORD; and she despised him for it.

¹⁷They brought in the Ark of the LORD and set it up in its place inside the tent which David had pitched for it, and David sacrificed burnt offerings and offerings of well-being before the LORD. ¹⁸When David finished sacrificing the burnt offerings and the offerings of well-being, he blessed the people in the name of the LORD of Hosts. ¹⁹And he distributed among all the people—the entire multitude of Israel, man and woman alike—to each a loaf of bread, ^aa cake made in a pan, and a raisin cake.^a Then all the people left for their homes.

²⁰David went home to greet his household. And Michal daughter of Saul came out to meet David and said,

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b So Targum; 1 Chron. 13.10 reads "because he had laid a hand on the Ark."

c I.e., "the Breach of Uzzah"; cf. 5.20 and note.

d Vv. 12b–14 are found, with variations, in 1 Chron. 15.25–27; vv. 15–19a, with variations, in 1 Chron. 15.28–16.3; vv. 19b–20a, with variations, in 1 Chron. 16.43.

e-e 4QSam^a reads "seven oxen and seven [trans]"; cf. 1 Chron. 15.26.

6–8: Touching the sacred object, loaded with awesome divine power, is fraught with danger (cf. Num. 4.15; 1 Sam. 6.19). David is distressed, because Uzzah only intended to prevent the Ark from slipping down. The fact is, however, that Uzzah came in direct contact with the Ark and therefore he is slain by God. The name Perez-uzzah is explained etiologically. 10: Obed-edom may have been one of the Gittites who accompanied David on his way from the Philistine town of Gath (see 15.18). But there were also several places called Gath (meaning "winepress") in Israel. 12: The report to King David convinces him that the Ark can be a blessing, if only it is handled properly.

13: This time no cart is mentioned. The bearers were probably priests or Levites (see Num. 7.9; 1 Chron. 15.2). The sacrifices are meant to appease God in case another inadvertent mistake is made (cf. Job 1.5).

14: The ephod was a priestly garment (1 Sam. 2.18–21 n.).

16: Michal daughter of Saul (i.e., daughter of a king) despises her husband King David, whose frivolous behavior is unworthy of a king. 17: The Ark had been in a tent since olden times (Exod. ch 40; Josh. 18.1). 18: David, sacrificing and blessing in the name of the LORD, exercises priestly functions (see also vv. 13–14). 20: Honor in Michal's view consists of external dignified behavior; in David's view, of devotion to lofty ideas. But Michal's sarcasm springs from pent-up pain and bitterness. In the past she loved David, helped him to escape, and even deceived her father for his sake (1 Sam. 18.20, 28; 19.11–17). Then Saul gave her to Paltiel, who fervently loved her (2 Sam. 3.15–16). After many years David demanded her back, for utilitarian reasons (see 3.13, 16 n.), and she found herself one of his many wives. There is no hint that David ever loved her. 21: Instead of your father: David taunts Michal in return. 22: Michal's childlessness may be a punishment by God or the result of David's abstaining from sexual relations with her.

“Didn’t the king of Israel do himself honor today—exposing himself today in the sight of the slavegirls of his subjects, as one of the riffraff might expose himself!”²¹ David answered Michal, “It was before the LORD who chose me instead of your father and all his family and appointed me ruler over the LORD’s people Israel! I will dance before the LORD²² and dishonor myself even more, and be low in ‘my own’ esteem; but among the slavegirls that you speak of I will be honored.”²³ So to her dying day Michal daughter of Saul had no children.

7^bWhen the king was settled in his palace and the LORD had granted him safety from all the enemies around him,² the king said to the prophet Nathan: “Here I am dwelling in a house of cedar, while the Ark of the LORD abides in a tent!”³ Nathan said to the king, “Go and do whatever you have in mind, for the LORD is with you.”

⁴But that same night the word of the LORD came to Nathan: ⁵“Go and say to My servant David: Thus said the LORD: Are you the one to build a house for Me to dwell in? ⁶From the day that I brought the people of Israel out of Egypt to this day I have not dwelt in a house, but have moved about in Tent and Tabernacle. ⁷As I moved about wherever the Israelites went, did I ever reproach any of the tribal leaders^c whom I appointed to care for My people Israel: Why have you not built Me a house of cedar?

⁸“Further, say thus to My servant David: Thus said the LORD of Hosts: I took you from the pasture, from following the flock, to be ruler of My people Israel,⁹ and I have been with you wherever you went, and have cut down all your enemies before you. Moreover, I will give you great renown like that of the greatest men on earth. ¹⁰I will establish a home for My people Israel and will plant them firm, so that they shall dwell secure and shall tremble no more. Evil men shall not oppress them any more as in the past, ¹¹ever since I appointed chieftains over My people Israel. I will give you safety from all your enemies.

“The LORD declares to you that He, the LORD, will establish a house^d for you. ¹²When your days are done and you lie with your fathers, I will raise up your offspring after you, one of your own issue, and I will establish his kingship. ¹³He shall build a house for My name, and I will

There is thus no possibility of uniting the house of Saul and the house of David through a child of David and Michal.

7.1–29: The house. The ch contains a short introduction and two long speeches: one by God and one by David. God objects to David’s plan to build Him a house (temple, Heb “bayit”), and announces instead that He will make a house (dynasty, Heb “bayit”) for David and that David’s son will build Him a house (temple). David first thanks the LORD and then requests that his house (dynasty) may endure forever. Biblical scholars have pointed out many Deuteronomistic characteristics in the ch. 1: Palace, lit. “house.” All the enemies around him: Either only the Philistines are meant or the ch is not in its proper chronological place, because in the following chs more wars are reported. 2: House of cedar, paneled with precious cedar. 3–7: Nathan encourages David to carry out his plan, but the LORD objects. Prophets sometimes express their personal feelings, which are not always in accord with God (e.g., Samuel opposed the people’s demand for a king, whereas God consented, 1 Sam. 8.6–7). 5: Thus said the LORD, the messenger formula (cf. Gen. 32.4–5), which assures that the following words, spoken by Nathan, are really the LORD’s. 6: Not dwell in a house: In Shiloh, however, there was a House of the LORD (1 Sam. 1.7, 9). But there was also a Tent (Josh. 18.1; 1 Sam. 2.22), which symbolized the idea that the LORD is not restricted to one fixed place. 12: Your offspring: This undoubtedly refers to Solomon. This v. and the following ones, however, have been interpreted in the postbiblical period as referring to the Messiah, who will be of the house of David and whose reign will last forever. 13: In this verse the two main themes of the ch, the building of the Temple and the establishment of the Davidic dynasty, are joined together. The reason that David’s son, rather than David himself, is to build the a-a Septuagint reads “your.”

b This chapter is found, with variations, also in 1 Chron. 17.

c Understanding shibte as “scepters”; so Kimhi. 1 Chron. 17.6 reads “chieftains”; cf. below, v. 11.

d I.e., a dynasty; play on “house” (i.e., Temple) in v. 5.

establish his royal throne forever. ¹⁴I will be a father to him, and he shall be a son to Me. When he does wrong, I will chastise him ^awith the rod of men and the affliction of mortals;^a ¹⁵but I will never withdraw My favor from him as I withdrew it from Saul, whom I removed ^bto make room for you.^b ¹⁶Your house and your kingship shall ever be secure before you;^c your throne shall be established forever."

¹⁷Nathan spoke to David in accordance with all these words and all this prophecy. ¹⁸Then King David came and sat before the LORD, and he said, "What am I, O Lord GOD, and what is my family, that You have brought me thus far? ¹⁹Yet even this, O Lord GOD, has seemed too little to You; for You have spoken of Your servant's house also for the future. ^dMay that be the law for the people,^d O Lord GOD. ²⁰What more can David say to You? You know Your servant, O Lord GOD. ²¹^dFor Your word's sake and of Your own accord^d You have wrought this great thing, and made it known to Your servant. ²²You are great indeed, O Lord God! There is none like You and there is no other God but You, as we have always heard. ²³And who is like Your people Israel, a unique nation on earth, whom God went and redeemed as His people, winning renown for Himself and doing great and marvelous deeds for them^e [and] for Your land—[driving out]^f nations and their gods before Your people, whom You redeemed for Yourself from Egypt. ²⁴You have established Your people Israel as Your very own people forever; and You, O LORD, have become their God.

²⁵"And now, O LORD God, fulfill Your promise to Your servant and his house forever; and do as You have promised. ²⁶And may Your name be glorified forever, in that men will say, 'The LORD of Hosts is God over Israel'; and may the house of Your servant David be established before You. ²⁷Because You, O LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel, have revealed to Your servant that You will build a house for him, Your servant has ventured to offer this prayer to You. ²⁸And now, O Lord GOD, You are God and Your words will surely come true, and You have made this gracious promise to Your servant. ²⁹Be pleased, therefore, to bless Your servant's house, that it abide before You forever; for You, O Lord GOD, have spoken. May Your servant's house be blessed forever by Your blessing."

a-a I.e., only as a human father would.

b-b Lit. "from before you."

c Septuagint reads "before Me," i.e., "by My favor."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e Heb. "you," apparently denoting Israel. f So 1 Chron. 17.21.

house for the LORD is given in 1 Kings 5.17 and, somewhat differently, in 1 Chron. 22.8–10: David fought many wars and shed much blood, whereas his son enjoyed peace. My name (instead of "Me") serves to exclude the possible misunderstanding that God actually dwells in a house (see Deut. 12.11; 1 Kings 8.27). 14–15: Like a father his son, the LORD will chastise David's successor but never reject him. 15–16: The promise that David's dynasty shall last forever is not accompanied by any conditions (but see 1 Kings 9.4–7). 18: David's humility is shared by other leaders in the Bible, including Moses (Exod. 3.11), Gideon (Judg. 6.15), and Saul (1 Sam. 9.21). Family, lit. "house." The word "house," Heb "bayit," in its various meanings occurs in the ch 15 times (in the Heb). 21: This great thing, the promise of a lasting dynasty. 23: Redeemed, from slavery in Egypt. [Driving out], from the land of Canaan. 24: The idea that Israel is the LORD's people and that He is Israel's God is central in biblical thought (e.g., Exod. 6.7) and in Judaism in general. 25–29: After extolling God and His deeds for Israel, David returns to the subject of his own dynasty and prays that God may fulfill His promise forever (because sometimes He changes His mind, e.g., 1 Sam. 2.30–31).

8^aSome time afterward, David attacked the Philistines and subdued them; and David took Metheg-ammah^b from the Philistines. ²He also defeated the Moabites. He made them lie down on the ground and he measured them off with a cord; he measured out two lengths of cord for those who were to be put to death, and one length for those to be spared.^c And the Moabites became tributary vassals of David.

³David defeated Hadadezer son of Rehob, king of Zobah, who was then on his way to restore his monument^d at the Euphrates River. ⁴David captured 1,700 horsemen and 20,000 foot soldiers of his force; and David hamstringed all the chariot horses, except for 100 which he retained. ⁵And when the Arameans of Damascus came to the aid of King Hadadezer of Zobah, David struck down 22,000 of the Arameans. ⁶David stationed garrisons in Aram of Damascus, and the Arameans became tributary vassals of David. The LORD gave David victory wherever he went. ⁷David took the gold shields^e carried by Hadadezer's retinue and brought them to Jerusalem; ⁸and from Betah and Berothai, towns of Hadadezer, King David took a vast amount of copper.

⁹When King Toi of Hamath heard that David had defeated the entire army of Hadadezer, ¹⁰Toi sent his son Joram to King David to greet him and to congratulate him on his military victory over Hadadezer—for Hadadezer had been at war with Toi. [Joram] brought with him objects of silver, gold, and copper. ¹¹King David dedicated these to the LORD, along with the other silver and gold that he dedicated, [taken] from all the nations he had conquered: ¹²from Edom,^f Moab, and Ammon; from the Philistines and the Amalekites, and from the plunder of Hadadezer son of Rehob, king of Zobah.

¹³David gained fame^g when he returned from defeating^g Edom^f in the Valley of Salt, 18,000 in all. ¹⁴He stationed garrisons in Edom—^hhe stationed garrisons in all of Edom^h—and all the Edomites became vassals of David. The LORD gave David victory wherever he went.

¹⁵David reigned over all Israel, and David executed

8.1-14: Expansion. The summary of David's conquests shows him at the height of his power, ruling over a vast territory, from the Euphrates in the northeast to the Egyptian border in the southwest. His success is attributed to divine help, in recognition of which David consecrates to God the spoils from his wars. This ch is the only one in the book that contains no dialogue. 1: In 5.25 it was told that David expelled the Philistines from Israelite territory; here it is reported that he subjugated them. 2: In order to explain David's cruel act the Midrash (Tanhumta, Buber recension, *Vayera*²⁵) asserts that the king of Moab had killed David's parents, who had been entrusted to his care (1 Sam. 22.4). 3: Hadadezer was David's chief opponent. He not only ruled over the Aramean kingdom of Zobah, but also dominated other Aramean territories (see 10.19). The circumstances of Hadadezer's restoring his monument are unclear (1 Chron. 18.3 reads "set up his monument"). But the Heb may also be translated "turn his hand" (the same expression in Isa. 1.25; Ezek. 38.12; Amos 1.8), though it is not said against whom. 4: The word translated horsemen may also mean "horses" (as regards the numbers, cf. 1 Chron. 18.4). David hamstrung the horses, making them unfit for military use because Israel did not yet employ chariots in its army. 6: Garrisons, rather "prefects," as the Heb word is translated in 1 Sam. 10.5; 13.3-4. 8: Copper was of high value for the production of bronze tools and weapons. 9: Hamath was the capital of a Hittite-Canaanite (i.e., non-Aramean) country, adjacent to Zobah. 10: By sending his son with precious presents King Toi acknowledges David's supremacy. Instead of Joram, the Heb form of the name, 1 Chron. 18.10 reads "Hadoram," which is the Canaanite form. 11: The silver and gold were later deposited in the Temple (1 Kings 7.51). 14: Garrisons, see v. 6 n.

8.15-18: Administration, part 1. After the summary account of a This chapter is reproduced, with some variations, in 1 Chron. 18.

b If not a place name, meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c I.e., he repeatedly doomed twice the number he spared.

d On yad in this sense, cf. 18.18; 1 Chron. 18.3; 1 Sam. 15.12. Others "dominion."

e Or "quivers."

f So several mss., Septuagint, and 1 Chron. 18.11-13; and cf. v. 14 below. Printed editions and most mss. read "Aram."

g-g 1 Chron. 18.12 and Ps. 60.1 read differently.

h-h This phrase is lacking in 1 Chron. 18.13.

true justice among all his people. ¹⁶Joab son of Zeruah was commander of the army; Jehoshaphat son of Ahilud was recorder; ¹⁷Zadok son of Ahitub and ^aAhimelech son of Abiathar^a were priests; Seraiah^b was scribe; ¹⁸Benaiah son of Jehoiada was “commander of” the Cherethites and the Pelethites; and David’s sons were priests.

9 David inquired, “Is there anyone still left of the House of Saul with whom I can keep faith for the sake of Jonathan?” ²There was a servant of the House of Saul named Ziba, and they summoned him to David. “Are you Ziba?” the king asked him. ^d“Yes, sir,”^d he replied. ³The king continued, “Is there anyone at all left of the House of Saul with whom I can keep faith as pledged before God?”^e Ziba answered the king, “Yes, there is still a son of Jonathan whose feet are crippled.” ⁴“Where is he?” the king asked, and Ziba said to the king, “He is in the house of Machir son of Ammiel, in Lo-debar.” ⁵King David had him brought from the house of Machir son of Ammiel, at Lo-debar; ⁶and when Mephibosheth son of Jonathan son of Saul came to David, he flung himself on his face and prostrated himself. David said, “Mephibosheth!” and he replied, “At your service, sir.” ⁷David said to him, “Don’t be afraid, for I will keep faith with you for the sake of your father Jonathan. I will give you back all the land of your grandfather Saul; moreover, you shall always eat at my table.” ⁸[Mephibosheth] prostrated himself again, and said, “What is your servant, that you should show regard for a dead dog like me?”

⁹The king summoned Ziba, Saul’s steward, and said to him, “I give to your master’s grandson everything that belonged to Saul and to his entire family. ¹⁰You and your sons and your slaves shall farm the land for him and shall bring in [its yield] to provide food for your master’s grandson^f to live on; but Mephibosheth, your master’s grandson, shall always eat at my table.”—Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty slaves.—¹¹Ziba said to the king, “Your a-a Emendation yields “Abiathar son of Ahimelech,” cf., e.g., 20.25; 1 Sam. 22.20.

b “Sheva” in 20.25; “Shausha” in 1 Chron. 18.16.

c-c So Targum (cf. 20.23; 1 Chron. 18.17); Heb. “and.” d-d Lit. “Your servant is.”

e See 1 Sam. 20.14 and note. f Septuagint reads “household.”

David’s foreign enterprises, a brief list of his senior officials follows, which shows that he also concerned himself with the organization of his administration at home. The list marks the conclusion of the first part of 2 Samuel. 15: The execution of justice is considered in the Bible to be the king’s foremost duty (1 Kings 10.9; Jer. 22.2–3). David is pictured as the ideal king. 18: The Cherethites and the Pelethites, military units of (Philistine) mercenaries, probably serving as David’s bodyguard. The Cherethites—i.e., Cretans—are mentioned together with the Philistines in Ezek. 25.16; Zeph. 2.5. David’s sons were priests: Apparently David’s sons fulfilled priestly functions at the court (cf. 6.18 n. and 20.26), whereas Zadok and Abiathar were the chief priests.

Chs 9–20. These chs, with the addition of 1 Kings chs 1–2, are known as the succession narrative, because the succession to David’s throne is believed by many biblical scholars to be their principal subject. Only 1 Kings ch 1 is devoted specifically to that subject, however. Most of the other chs (11–19) are concerned with David’s sin and its consequences. The calamities in his family, which are interpreted by the prophet Nathan (12.9–12) as punishment for his crimes, convey the message that kings are not above law and morals. Chs 9–10 provide the background for the main story.

9.1–13: Faithfulness. David, true to his covenant with Jonathan (1 Sam. 20.14–16), shows kindness to Jonathan’s son Mephibosheth. 1: The Heb word “hesed,” translated faith, also means “kindness.” 2: Since the courtiers are unable to answer David’s question, they summon Ziba. 3: Crippled, see 4.4 and n. 4: Machir son of Ammiel, one of the notables of Gilead (17.27). 6: Mephibosheth: The original form of the name was “Merib-baal” (see translators’ note at 4.4). The element “baal” was changed into “bosheth,” meaning “shame” (cf. translators’ notes at 2.8 and 11.21). The names of his father and grandfather are mentioned because of their relevance to David’s treatment of Mephibosheth (v. 7). His excessive expressions of submissiveness testify to his fear that David will put him to death as a potential pretender to the throne (see 1 Sam. 20.15 n.). 7: Eating at the king’s table, i.e., being maintained by the king, was considered a special favor (1 Kings 2.7; 18.19; 2 Kings 25.29–30). 8: A dead dog, see 3.8 n. 10: Though a servant, Ziba is clearly well-to-do, keeping servant will do just as my lord the king has commanded him." ^a"Mephibosheth shall eat at my table^a like one of the king's sons."

¹²Mephibosheth had a young son named Mica; and all the members of Ziba's household worked for Mephibosheth. ¹³Mephibosheth lived in Jerusalem, for he ate regularly at the king's table. He was lame in both feet.

10^bSome time afterward, the king of Ammon died, and his son Hanun succeeded him as king. ²David said, "I will keep faith with Hanun son of Nahash, just as his father kept faith with me." He sent his courtiers with a message of condolence to him over his father. But when David's courtiers came to the land of Ammon, ³the Ammonite officials said to their lord Hanun, "Do you think David is really honoring your father just because he sent you men with condolences? Why, David has sent his courtiers to you to explore and spy out the city, and to overthrow^c it." ⁴So Hanun seized David's courtiers, clipped off one side of their beards and cut away half of their garments at the buttocks, and sent them off. ⁵When David was told of it, he dispatched men to meet them, for the men were greatly embarrassed. And the king gave orders: "Stop in Jericho until your beards grow back; then you can return."

⁶The Ammonites realized that they had ^dincurred the wrath of^d David; so the Ammonites sent agents and hired Arameans of Beth-rehob and Arameans of Zobah—20,000 foot soldiers—the king of Maacah [with] 1,000 men, and 12,000 men from Tob. ⁷On learning this, David sent out Joab and the whole army—[including] the professional fighters. ⁸The Ammonites marched out and took up their battle position at the entrance of the gate, while the Arameans of Zobah and Rehob and the men of Tob and Maacah took their stand separately in the open. ⁹Joab saw that there was a battle line against him both front and rear. So he made a selection from all the picked men of Israel and arrayed them against the Arameans, ¹⁰and the rest of the troops he put under the command of his brother Abishai^e and arrayed them against the Ammonites. ¹¹[Joab] said, "If the Arameans prove too strong for me, you come to my aid; and if the Ammonites prove too strong for you, I will come to your aid. ¹²Let us be strong and resolute for the slaves himself; nevertheless, he now has to work for Mephibosheth. 13: Mephibosheth moves to Jerusalem in order to eat at the king's table.

10.1–19: War. The account of the war with Ammon serves as background to the next story, which deals with David's sin against Bathsheba and Uriah. The first part of the present account explains the cause of the war, the second part tells of its first stage, which involved both the Ammonites and the Arameans, and the third part reports the second stage, which was conducted against the Arameans only (mentioned in ch 8). David did not initiate the war, but through his victory he gained supremacy in the region (the third stage of the war, against the Ammonites only, is related in chs 11–12). 2: Nahash is mentioned in 1 Sam. 11.1–2. It is unknown of what his faith (or "kindness," Heb "hesed") to David consisted. Perhaps there was a treaty between David and Nahash. David's gesture signals that he is willing to continue the good relations with Ammon. 4: Hanun, accepting his officials' opinion, not only expels David's courtiers, but also humiliates them, insulting their dignity. 5: Jericho was on the border between Israel and Ammon. The city had been (almost) empty since Joshua destroyed it; it was rebuilt only during Ahab's reign (1 Kings 16.34). 6: The enumeration of the countries and the numbers of the fighting men hint at the superiority of the enemy's forces, and thus enhance Joab's victory. 8: The gate, of Rabbah, capital of Ammon. 9: Joab's position between the Arameans and the Ammonites is extremely hazardous. 11–12: Joab, in the only speech in the ch, first sets forth his plan of battle based on mutual aid, and then delivers a message of encouragement and faith in God. Let us be strong and resolute, lit. "be strong and let us strengthen ourselves." 16: Hadadezer, see 8.3 n.

a-a Septuagint reads "And Mephibosheth ate at David's table."

b This chapter is found also in 1 Chron. 19.

c Emendation yields "reconnoiter"; cf. Deut. 1.22; Josh. 2.2–3.

d-d See note at 1 Sam. 13.4.

e Heb. "Abshai."

sake of our people and the land^a of our God; and the LORD will do what He deems right.”

¹³Joab and the troops with him marched into battle against the Arameans, who fled before him. ¹⁴And when the Ammonites saw that the Arameans had fled, they fled before Abishai and withdrew into the city. So Joab broke off the attack against the Ammonites, and went to Jerusalem.

¹⁵When the Arameans saw that they had been routed by Israel, they regrouped their forces. ¹⁶Hadadezer^b sent for and brought out the Arameans from across the Euphrates; they came to Helam, led by Shobach, Hadadezer's^b army commander. ¹⁷David was informed of it; he assembled all Israel, crossed the Jordan, and came to Helam. The Arameans drew up their forces against David and attacked him; ¹⁸but the Arameans were put to flight by Israel. David killed 700 Aramean charioteers and 40,000 horsemen;^c he also struck down Shobach, Hadadezer's^d army commander, who died there. ¹⁹And when all the vassal kings of Hadadezer^b saw that they had been routed by Israel, they submitted to Israel and became their vassals. And the Arameans were afraid to help the Ammonites any more.

11 At the turn of the year, the season when kings go out [to battle], David sent Joab with his officers and all Israel with him, and they devastated Ammon and besieged Rabbah; David remained in Jerusalem. ²Late one afternoon, David rose from his couch and strolled on the roof of the royal palace; and from the roof he saw a woman bathing. The woman was very beautiful, ³and the king sent someone to make inquiries about the woman. He reported, “She is Bathsheba daughter of Eliam [and] wife of Uriah the Hittite.” ⁴David sent messengers to fetch her; she came to him and he lay with her—she had just purified herself after her period—and she went back home. ⁵The woman conceived, and she sent word to David, “I am pregnant.” ⁶Thereupon David sent a message to Joab, “Send Uriah the Hittite to me”; and Joab sent Uriah to David.

⁷When Uriah came to him, David asked him how Joab and the troops were faring and how the war was going. ⁸Then David said to Uriah, “Go down to your house and bathe your feet.” When Uriah left the royal palace, a pres-

11.1–27a: Adultery and murder.

The narrative of David's adultery and murder is embedded in the account of the war with Ammon (ch 10; 12.26–31), because the events of the story occur against the background of that war. Uriah's absence from home, which paves the way for the adultery and also necessitates creating an explanation for Bathsheba's pregnancy, is occasioned by the war, as is Uriah's death. The narrative does not try to conceal or mitigate David's sins. The outstanding loyalty of the non-Israelite soldier (Uriah) underscores the perfidy of the Israelite king. It is highly unusual for ancient literature to criticize powerful and successful kings. The way David's behavior is depicted and condemned in the Bible shows the overriding importance it assigns to moral values. Some rabbinic sources tried to clear David from guilt, claiming that he did not commit adultery, since warriors, before setting out to battle, gave their wives (conditional) divorces so that they could remarry in case their husbands should not return; neither was David considered to be guilty of murder, since Uriah was killed in action by the Ammonites (b. Shab. 56a). 1: The season, the spring. An alternative and more literal translation of v. 1a would be: “It happened when a year had passed since the time that the kings went out [to battle],” i.e., a year after the war of ch 10 took place. Rabbah, modern Amman, the capital of ancient Ammon. 2: David strolls on the flat roof of his palace in the evening breeze and sees a woman bathing, perhaps to purify herself after her period (v. 4). 3: Both Bathsheba's father and her husband are mentioned, which is unusual. Uriah was an army officer, and so perhaps was Eliam (see 23.34, 39). David thus commits adultery with the wife of one of his officers and probably the daughter of another. Hittite, see 1 Sam. 26.6 n. 4: She had just purified herself after her period: This indicates that at this juncture Bathsheba is not pregnant. 7: David's questions disguise his real intent.

a Lit. “towns.”

b Many editions read “Hadarezer . . . Hadarezer's.”

c 1 Chron. 19.18 reads “foot soldiers.”

d Heb. “his.”

ent from the king followed him.⁹ But Uriah slept at the entrance of the royal palace, along with the other officers of his lord, and did not go down to his house.¹⁰ When David was told that Uriah had not gone down to his house, he said to Uriah, "You just came from a journey; why didn't you go down to your house?"¹¹ Uriah answered David, "The Ark and Israel and Judah are located at Succoth, and my master Joab and Your Majesty's men are camped in the open; how can I go home and eat and drink and sleep with my wife? ^aAs you live, by your very life,^a I will not do this!"¹² David said to Uriah, "Stay here today also, and tomorrow I will send you off." So Uriah remained in Jerusalem that day. The next day,¹³ David summoned him, and he ate and drank with him until he got him drunk; but in the evening, [Uriah] went out to sleep in the same place, with his lord's officers; he did not go down to his home.

¹⁴In the morning, David wrote a letter to Joab, which he sent with Uriah.¹⁵ He wrote in the letter as follows: "Place Uriah in the front line where the fighting is fiercest; then fall back so that he may be killed."¹⁶ So when Joab was besieging the city, he stationed Uriah at the point where he knew that there were able warriors.¹⁷ The men of the city sallied out and attacked Joab, and some of David's officers among the troops fell; Uriah the Hittite was among those who died.

¹⁸Joab sent a full report of the battle to David.¹⁹ He instructed the messenger as follows: "When you finish reporting to the king all about the battle,²⁰ the king may get angry and say to you, 'Why did you come so close to the city to attack it? Didn't you know that they would shoot from the wall?'²¹ Who struck down Abimelech son of Jerubbesheth?^b Was it not a woman who dropped an upper millstone on him from the wall at Thebez, from which he died? Why did you come so close to the wall?' Then say: 'Your servant Uriah the Hittite was among those killed.'"

²²The messenger set out; he came and told David all that Joab had sent him to say.^c ²³The messenger said to David, "First the men prevailed against us and sallied out against us into the open; then we drove them back up to the entrance to the gate.²⁴ But the archers shot at your men from the wall and some of Your Majesty's men fell;

The narrator omits Joab's answers, thus hinting that David is not really interested in them. 8: David permits Uriah to go to his house, expecting that he will sleep with his wife and thus—unwittingly—cover up the adultery. Bathe your feet, as usual after a journey (cf. Gen. 18.4). A present, victuals.

9: Uriah slept, but not with his wife and not even in his house. 11: The Ark was taken to the battlefield in the belief that God's presence would ensure victory (cf. 1 Sam. 4.3). Succoth, the Heb word means "booths." Probably not the town Succoth is meant, but the simple shelters of the soldiers in the open (lit. "field"), as opposed to the comfortable home of Uriah. Uriah rejects any amenities that are denied his comrades. Located at, lit. "staying in." 13: He got him drunk, hoping that in that state Uriah would sleep with his wife. The expression did not go down to his (your) house (home) occurs four times (vv. 9–13), thus emphasizing Uriah's steadfastness. 14: David trusts Uriah that he will not open the sealed letter. 15: David's order to fall back is not carried out, and other officers are killed along with Uriah. 20–21: Joab knows that he made a fatal mistake, allowing his men to come close to the city wall. In his instructions to the messenger he couches David's anticipated reaction in the form of a series of rhetorical questions. The first and last questions, being similar (ring composition), contain the main argument, whereas the other questions supply the reasons. Joab should have learned from the precedent of Abimelech, who was killed by a (weak) woman. The message that Uriah was one of the killed, however, instead of increasing the king's rage at the unwarranted death of a loyal officer and comrade, will have the (ironic) effect of calming him down.

23–24: In order to forestall David's anger the messenger explains that the men came close to the gate in the course of driving the enemy back; and, without waiting for the king's expected angry reaction, he immediately adds that Uriah also a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "As the LORD lives and as you live" (cf. 1 Sam. 20.3; 25.26; etc.). Lit. "as you live and as your being lives."

b The earlier form is Jerubbaal (another name for Gideon), Judg. 7.1; on -bosheth/besheth for -baal, see note at 2 Sam. 4.4. For the event at Thebez described here, see Judg. 9.35ff.

c Septuagint continues with a recapitulation of vv. 19–21.

your servant Uriah the Hittite also fell.”²⁵ Whereupon David said to the messenger, “Give Joab this message: ‘Do not be distressed about the matter. The sword always takes its toll.’ Press your attack on the city and destroy it! Encourage him!”

²⁶When Uriah’s wife heard that her husband Uriah was dead, she lamented over her husband. ²⁷After the period of mourning was over, David sent and had her brought into his palace; she became his wife and she bore him a son.

12 But the LORD was displeased with what David had done, ¹and the LORD sent Nathan to David. He came to him and said, “There were two men in the same city, one rich and one poor. ²The rich man had very large flocks and herds, ³but the poor man had only one little ewe lamb that he had bought. He tended it and it grew up together with him and his children: it used to share his morsel of bread, drink from his cup, and nestle in his bosom; it was like a daughter to him. ⁴One day, a traveler came to the rich man, but he was loath to take anything from his own flocks or herds to prepare a meal for the guest who had come to him; so he took the poor man’s lamb and prepared it for the man who had come to him.”

⁵David flew into a rage against the man, and said to Nathan, “As the LORD lives, the man who did this deserves to die! ⁶He shall pay for the lamb four times over, because he did such a thing and showed no pity.” ⁷And Nathan said to David, “That man is you! Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: ‘It was I who anointed you king over Israel and it was I who rescued you from the hand of Saul. ⁸I gave you your master’s house and possession of your master’s wives; and I gave you the House of Israel and Judah; and if that were not enough, I would give you twice as much more. ⁹Why then have you flouted the command of the LORD and done what displeases Him? You have put Uriah the Hittite to the sword; you took his wife and made her your wife and had him killed by the sword of the Ammonites. ¹⁰Therefore the sword shall never depart from your House—because you spurned Me by taking the wife of Uriah the Hittite and making her your wife.’ ¹¹Thus said the LORD: ‘I will make a calamity

a-a Lit. “consumes the like and the like.”

died. 25: Because of Uriah’s death, David does not get enraged, and even comforts and encourages Joab. 27a: Period of mourning, see 1 Sam. 31.13 n. Because of Bath-sheba’s pregnancy David cannot wait long.

11.27b–12.25: Repentance. God’s stern condemnation of David’s crimes induces the king to repent. 27b: Explicit judgment of the characters or their actions is rare in the book of Samuel. Here it is attributed to God Himself because of the seriousness of the sins and because the sinner is a king. God’s authority is above that of the king and from Him nothing can be concealed. 1–4: Nathan’s parable, presented as a legal case, aims at getting David to pass verdict on himself unwittingly (kings used to perform judicial functions, see 15.2–6 n.). Therefore it closely corresponds to the actual events, but not completely (cf. Jotham’s parable in Judg. 9): e.g., whereas the rich man represents David, the poor man Uriah, and the lamb Bathsheba, nobody corresponds to the traveler; moreover, the lamb is slaughtered, instead of being added to the herd. The parable stresses the social aspect of the robbery, the rich man taking the scant property of the poor man.

1: The LORD sent, as against David’s frequent sending (11.1, 3, 6, 14, 27). 3: Nathan stresses the emotional angle: the poor man’s touching attachment to his lamb. 5: Deserves to die, an outburst of indignation. Israelite law does not impose the death penalty for robbery. 6: Four times over, in accordance with the law in Exod. 21.37 (Septuagint reads “sevenfold,” cf. Prov. 6.31). Pity: The same Heb word is translated “loath” in v. 4. It seemed a pity to the rich man to take from his own herd, but he showed no pity for the poor man’s only lamb. 7–12: Nathan’s rebuke. 7–9: David has been ungrateful to the LORD, who gave him everything. 7: Thus said the LORD, the messenger formula (see 7.5 n.), assuring that the following statement derives from God. 8: Your master’s wives: Perhaps David took over Saul’s wives, though this is nowhere mentioned. 10–12: The punishments correspond to David’s sins: Because he put Uriah to the sword, the sword will never depart from his house (alluding to the violent deaths of Amnon, Absalom, and Adonijah in the following chs), and because he took rise against you from within your own house; I will take your wives and give them to another man before your very eyes and he shall sleep with your wives under this very sun. ¹²You acted in secret, but I will make this happen in the sight of all Israel and in broad daylight.' "

¹³David said to Nathan, "I stand guilty before the LORD!" And Nathan replied to David, "The LORD has remitted your sin; you shall not die. ¹⁴However, since you have spurned ^athe enemies of ^athe LORD by this deed, even the child about to be born to you shall die."

¹⁵Nathan went home, and the LORD afflicted the child that Uriah's wife had borne to David, and it became critically ill. ¹⁶David entreated God for the boy; David fasted, and he went in and spent the night lying^b on the ground. ¹⁷The senior servants of his household tried to induce him to get up from the ground; but he refused, nor would he partake of food with them. ¹⁸On the seventh day the child died. David's servants were afraid to tell David that the child was dead; for they said, "We spoke to him when the child was alive and he wouldn't listen to us; how can we tell him that the child is dead? He might do something terrible." ¹⁹When David saw his servants talking in whispers, David understood that the child was dead; David asked his servants, "Is the child dead?" "Yes," they replied.

²⁰Thereupon David rose from the ground; he bathed and anointed himself, and he changed his clothes. He went into the House of the LORD and prostrated himself. Then he went home and asked for food, which they set before him, and he ate. ²¹His courtiers asked him, "Why have you acted in this manner? While the child was alive, you fasted and wept; but now that the child is dead, you rise and take food!" ²²He replied, "While the child was still alive, I fasted and wept because I thought: 'Who knows? The LORD may have pity on me, and the child may live.' ²³But now that he is dead, why should I fast? Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he will never come back to me."

²⁴David consoled his wife Bathsheba; he went to her and lay with her. She bore a son and she named him Solomon. The LORD favored him, ²⁵and He sent a message through the prophet Nathan; and he was named Jedidiah^c at the instance of the LORD.

Uriah's wife, his wives will be taken by another man (Absalom). V. 10b gives the reason for the punishment mentioned in vv. 11-12 (see 16.22). 13: David, without arguing, frankly and immediately admits his guilt (contrary to Saul, 1 Sam. ch 15). Remitted, better "transferred," namely to the young child (see Exod. 34.7). 15: The child that Uriah's wife had borne to David: The wording hints at the adultery. 20: The House of the LORD, the tent that housed the Ark. 21-22: The courtiers thought that David's fasting and weeping were signs of grief, but David explains that they expressed repentance and supplication, in the hope that the child would yet be saved. 24: Bathsheba is now designated his (David's) wife, and he is now sensitive to her feelings (contrary to 11.4).

a-a The phrase is intended to avoid saying "spurned the LORD"; cf. note b-b at 1 Sam. 25.22.

b Some Septuagint mss. and 4QSam^a add "in sackcloth"; cf. 1 Kings 21.27.

c I.e., "Beloved of the LORD."

^{26a}Joab attacked Rabbah of Ammon and captured the royal city. ²⁷Joab sent messengers to David and said, "I have attacked Rabbah and I have already captured ^bthe water city.^b ²⁸Now muster the rest of the troops and besiege the city and capture it; otherwise I will capture the city myself, and my name will be connected with it." ²⁹David mustered all the troops and marched on Rabbah, and he attacked it and captured it. ^{30c}The crown was taken from the head of their king^d and it was placed on David's head—it weighed a talent of gold, and [on it]^e were precious stones. He also carried off a vast amount of booty from the city. ³¹He led out the people who lived there and set them to work with saws, iron threshing boards, and iron axes, or assigned them to brickmaking; David did this to all the towns of Ammon. Then David and all the troops returned to Jerusalem.

13 This happened sometime afterward: Absalom son of David had a beautiful sister named Tamar, and Amnon son of David became infatuated with her. ²Amnon was so distraught because of his [half-]sister Tamar that he became sick; for she was a virgin, and it seemed impossible to Amnon to do anything to her. ³Amnon had a friend named Jonadab, the son of David's brother Shimah; Jonadab was a very clever man. ⁴He asked him, "Why are you so dejected, O prince, morning after morning? Tell me!" Amnon replied, "I am in love with Tamar, the sister of my brother Absalom!" ⁵Jonadab said to him, "Lie down in your bed and pretend you are sick. When your father comes to see you, say to him, 'Let my sister Tamar come and give me something to eat. Let her prepare the food in front of me, so that I may look on, and let her serve it to me.' "

⁶Amnon lay down and pretended to be sick. The king came to see him, and Amnon said to the king, "Let my sister Tamar come and prepare a couple of cakes in front of me, and let her bring them to me." ⁷David sent a message to Tamar in the palace, "Please go to the house of your brother Amnon and prepare some food for him." ⁸Tamar went to the house of her brother Amnon, who was in bed. She took dough and kneaded it into cakes in front of him, and cooked the cakes. ⁹She took the 'pan and set out [the cakes],^f but Amnon refused to eat and ordered everyone

12.26–31: Conquest. The passage concludes the account of the Ammonite war (ch 10; 11.1). 26: The royal city, probably the citadel with the palace. 27: Captured the water city, controlling the water supply. The final conquest of the city would now be easy. 30: A talent, more than 34 kg (75 pounds). 31: Setting captives to forced labor was customary in the ancient Near East. Returned to Jerusalem, see 1 Sam. 1.19 n.

13.1–22: Rape. The story of Amnon and Tamar is the first of a trilogy, the other two stories relating Absalom's murder of Amnon and Absalom's return from exile. Tamar's rape is seen as punishment for David, corresponding to his adultery: a sexual offense, followed by murder. 1–3: The exposition supplies the necessary information about the characters. Absalom is the first character introduced, probably because of the central role he has in the following narratives, which describe the developments ensuing from the events in the present story. 1: Tamar was Absalom's full sister and Amnon's half-sister. 2: Impossible: Being a virgin, she was "chaste at home and did not go out" (Rashi). 5: Jonadab advises Amnon how to lure Tamar to his home and keep her there for a while, but he does not mention rape. 7: Apparently each prince had his own house (cf. v. 20).

a Vv. 26–29 are abridged in 1 Chron. 20.1b.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; perhaps the source of the water supply.

c Vv. 30–31 are found also in 1 Chron. 20.2–3.

d Heb. "malkam," perhaps equivalent to "Milcom," the Ammonite deity; cf. 1 Kings 11.5.

e See Targum and 1 Chron. 20.2. ff Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

to withdraw. After everyone had withdrawn, ¹⁰ Amnon said to Tamar, "Bring the food inside and feed me." Tamar took the cakes she had made and brought them to her brother inside. ¹¹ But when she served them to him, he caught hold of her and said to her, "Come lie with me, sister." ¹² But she said to him, "Don't, brother. Don't force me. Such things are not done in Israel! Don't do such a vile thing! ¹³ Where will I carry my shame? And you, you will be like any of the scoundrels in Israel! Please, speak to the king; he will not refuse me to you." ¹⁴ But he would not listen to her; he overpowered her and lay with her by force.

¹⁵ Then Amnon felt a very great loathing for her; indeed, his loathing for her was greater than the passion he had felt for her. And Amnon said to her, "Get out!" ¹⁶ She pleaded with him, "Please don't ^acommit this wrong; to send me away would be even worse^a than the first wrong you committed against me." But he would not listen to her. ¹⁷ He summoned his young attendant and said, "Get that woman out of my presence, and bar the door behind her."—¹⁸ She was wearing an ornamented tunic,^b for maiden princesses were customarily dressed ^cin such garments.^c—His attendant took her outside and barred the door after her. ¹⁹ Tamar put dust on her head and rent the ornamented tunic she was wearing; she put her hands on her head,^d and walked away, screaming loudly as she went. ²⁰ Her brother Absalom said to her, "Was it your brother Amnon^e who did this to you? For the present, sister, keep quiet about it; he is your brother. Don't brood over the matter." And Tamar remained in her brother Absalom's house, forlorn. ²¹ When King David heard about all this, he was greatly upset.^f ²² Absalom didn't utter a word to Amnon, good or bad; but Absalom hated Amnon because he had violated his sister Tamar.

²³ Two years later, when Absalom was having his flocks sheared at Baal-hazor near Ephraim, Absalom invited all the king's sons. ²⁴ And Absalom came to the king and said, "Your servant is having his flocks sheared. Would Your Majesty and your retinue accompany your servant?" ²⁵ But the king answered Absalom, "No, my son. We must not all come, or we'll be a burden to you." He urged him,

11: Amnon tries to persuade Tamar with words, but at the same time he retains his hold of her. 12: Tamar's long reply, her arguments, her alternative proposal, and her repetitions of don't, all attest to her vigorous objection. 13: Tamar states the shameful consequences of rape for each of them, hoping for her good to arouse Amnon's mercy and to deter him for his own good. Marrying one's half-sister, though forbidden in Lev. 20.17, was apparently not impossible at the time (cf. Gen. 20.12). Tamar's suggestion to speak to the king cannot merely be a stratagem to buy time, because it must be plausible in order to serve its end. 15: Get out, lit. "get up, go"—the exact reversal of Amnon's earlier "come, lie" (v. 11). 16: Sending Tamar away is even worse than the rape, because she will be desolate for life. According to Deut. 22.28–29 and ancient Assyrian law, the rapist must marry the raped woman (in order to secure her material and social position). 17: That woman, a contemptuous expression. Amnon's orders are deeply offending. 19: Tamar's gestures are all expressions of grief. The rending of the ornamented tunic signifies that she is no longer a virgin. 21: David is greatly upset, but he does not act. 22: A word, about the matter.

13.23–39: Vengeance. Absalom murders Amnon to avenge his sister's rape. The murder is a punishment not only for Amnon, but also for David for his murder of Uriah. 23: Absalom waits two years for the right opportunity to kill Amnon, and for Amnon's suspicions to abate. Sheepshearing was an occasion for celebration (cf. 1 Sam. 25.4ff.). 24–27: In order to prevent suspicion, Absalom first invites the king, expecting that he will decline, and then asks for the crown prince to come instead. David is weak and yields to Absalom's urging.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b See Gen. 37.3 and note.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "(thus) in olden times," me'olam.

d A gesture of wild grief; cf. Jer. 2.37.

e Heb. "Amnon."

f Septuagint adds "but he did not rebuke his son Amnon, for he favored him, since he was his first-born"; cf. 1 Kings 1.6.

but he would not go, and he said good-bye to him. ²⁶Thereupon Absalom said, "In that case, let my brother Amnon come with us," to which the king replied, "He shall not go with you." ²⁷But Absalom urged him, and he sent with him Amnon and all the other princes.^a ²⁸Now Absalom gave his attendants these orders: "Watch, and when Amnon is merry with wine and I tell you to strike down Amnon, kill him! Don't be afraid, for it is I who give you the order. Act with determination, like brave men!" ²⁹Absalom's attendants did to Amnon as Absalom had ordered; whereupon all the other princes mounted their mules and fled. ³⁰They were still on the road when a rumor reached David that Absalom had killed all the princes, and that not one of them had survived. ³¹At this, David rent his garment and lay down on the ground, ^band all his courtiers stood by with their clothes rent.^b ³²But Jonadab, the son of David's brother Shimah, said, "My lord must not think that all the young princes have been killed. Only Amnon is dead; for this has been ^cdecided by^c Absalom ever since his sister Tamar was violated. ³³So my lord the king must not think for a moment that all the princes are dead; Amnon alone is dead."

³⁴Meanwhile Absalom had fled.

The watchman on duty looked up and saw a large crowd coming ^dfrom the road to his rear,^d from the side of the hill. ³⁵Jonadab said to the king, "See, the princes have come! It is just as your servant said." ³⁶As he finished speaking, the princes came in and broke into weeping; and David and all his courtiers wept bitterly, too.

³⁷Absalom had fled, and he came to Talmi son of Amihud, king of Geshur. And [King David] mourned over his son a long time. ³⁸Absalom, who had fled to Geshur, remained there three years. ³⁹And ^eKing David^e was pining away for Absalom, for [the king] had gotten over Amnon's death.

14 Joab son of Zeruiah could see that the king's mind was on Absalom; ²so Joab sent to Tekoa and brought a clever woman from there. He said to her, "Pretend you are in mourning; put on mourning clothes and don't anoint yourself with oil; and act like a woman who 28: Merry with wine, drunk. 29: Mules were used by the royal family (18.9; 1 Kings 1.33). The other princes fear that Absalom intends to kill them all. 32–33: Jonadab understands that Absalom's purpose was not to put the princes out of the way in order to secure the throne for himself, but to take revenge on Amnon. 37: Talmi, Absalom's maternal grandfather (see 3.3 and n.). 39: Adopting the superior reading of 4QSam^a, the beginning of the v. may also be translated: "and the king's wrath (lit. "spirit," as in Eccl. 10.4) towards Absalom was spent." This translation accords better with the following narrative.

14.1–33: Reconciliation. The first part of the narrative describes the ruse used to persuade David to allow Absalom's return from exile; the second part tells of obtaining David's consent to meeting his son. In both parts it is Joab who endeavors to reconcile father and son. 2–3: The woman is to present a judicial case to David in order to get him, unwittingly, to absolve his son from the death penalty. Like Nathan's parable (12.1–4), the case is similar to the real events, but not identical. The woman must not only describe the case, as Nathan did, but actually perform it—including dressing up. Her cleverness is revealed in her acting as well as her speech, which is submissive, polite, and rich in rhetorical means, such as metaphor and simile. The dialogue between the woman and the king is one of the longest in the Bible.

a Septuagint adds "and Absalom made a feast fit for a king."

b-b Septuagint reads "and all his courtiers who were standing by him rent their clothes."

c-c Lit. "determined by the command of."

d-d Emendation yields "down the slope of the Horonaim road. The watchman came and told the king 'I see men coming from the Horonaim road.'" Cf. Septuagint.

e-e Some Septuagint mss. and 4QSam^a read "the spirit [ruah] of the king."

has grieved a long time over a departed one. ³Go to the king and say to him thus and thus." And Joab told her what to say.^a ⁴The woman of Tekoa came^b to the king, flung herself face down to the ground, and prostrated herself. She cried out, "Help, O king!" ⁵The king asked her, "What troubles you?" And she answered, "Alas, I am a widow, my husband is dead. ⁶Your maidservant had two sons. The two of them came to blows out in the fields where there was no one to stop them, and one of them struck the other and killed him. ⁷Then the whole clan confronted your maidservant and said, 'Hand over the one who killed his brother, that we may put him to death for the slaying of his brother, even though we wipe out the heir.'^c Thus they would quench the last ember remaining to me, and leave my husband without name or remnant upon the earth." ⁸The king said to the woman, "Go home. I will issue an order in your behalf." ⁹And the woman of Tekoa said to the king, "My lord king, may the guilt be on me and on my ancestral house; Your Majesty and his throne are guiltless." ¹⁰The king said, "If anyone says anything more to you, have him brought to me, and he will never trouble you again." ¹¹She replied, "Let Your Majesty be mindful of the LORD your God and restrain the blood avenger bent on destruction, so that my son may not be killed." And he said, "As the LORD lives, not a hair of your son shall fall to the ground."

¹²Then the woman said, "Please let your maidservant say another word to my lord the king." "Speak on," said the king. ¹³And the woman said, "Why then have you planned the like against God's people? In making this pronouncement, Your Majesty condemns himself in that Your Majesty does not bring back his own banished one. ¹⁴We must all die; we are like water that is poured out on the ground and cannot be gathered up. ^dGod will not take away the life of one who makes plans so that no one may be kept banished.^d ¹⁵And the reason I have come to say these things to the king, my lord, is that the people have frightened me. Your maidservant thought I would speak to Your Majesty; perhaps Your Majesty would act on his handmaid's plea. ¹⁶For Your Majesty would surely agree to deliver his handmaid from the hands of anyone [who would seek to] cut off both me and my son from the her-

7: The demand to kill the murderer is rooted in the custom of blood vengeance. But acceding to it would worsen the woman's situation, because instead of one dead son she would have two and be left without an heir. Without name, see Deut. 25.6; Ruth 4.10. 9: The guilt, for not expiating the blood of the slain (see Num. 35.33). The woman strives for an explicit and binding pardon for the murderer.

11: Be mindful of the LORD, i.e., mention the LORD (in an oath). Not a hair . . . shall fall to the ground, see 1 Sam. 14.45 n. 12: The woman's respectful speech contrasts with the king's curtness. 13: Absalom's death would be harmful to God's people, Israel. This pronouncement, pardoning the woman's fictional son. 14: Like water . . .: Death is irreversible; executing Absalom will not bring Amnon back. God will not take away the life, see v. 9 n. 15–17: Because the king might get angry and punish her, the woman now explains why she deceived David and presented a fictional case to him.

a Lit. "and he put words into her mouth."

b So many mss. and printed editions. Most mss. and printed editions read "said."

c-c Emendation yields "Thus they would destroy the [last] heir and . . ."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. The apparent sense is: God will not punish you for bringing back the banished Absalom.

itage^a of God. ¹⁷Your maidservant thought, 'Let the word of my lord the king provide comfort; for my lord the king is like an angel of God, understanding everything, good and bad.' May the LORD your God be with you."

¹⁸In reply, the king said to the woman, "Do not withhold from me anything I ask you!" The woman answered, "Let my lord the king speak." ¹⁹The king asked, "Is Joab in league with you in all this?" The woman replied, "As you live, my lord the king, ^bit is just as my lord the king says. ^bYes, your servant Joab was the one who instructed me, and it was he who ^ctold your maidservant everything she was to say." ²⁰It was to conceal the real purpose of the matter that your servant Joab did this thing. My lord is as wise as an angel of God, and he knows all that goes on in the land."

²¹Then the king said to Joab, "I will do this thing. Go and bring back my boy Absalom." ²²Joab flung himself face down on the ground and prostrated himself. Joab blessed the king and said, "Today your servant knows that he has found favor with you, my lord king, for Your Majesty has granted his servant's request." ²³And Joab went at once to Geshur and brought Absalom to Jerusalem. ²⁴But the king said, "Let him go directly to his house and not present himself to me." So Absalom went directly to his house and did not present himself to the king.

²⁵No one in all Israel was so admired for his beauty as Absalom; from the sole of his foot to the crown of his head he was without blemish. ²⁶When he cut his hair—he had to have it cut every year, for it grew too heavy for him—the hair of his head weighed two hundred shekels by the royal weight. ²⁷Absalom had three sons and a daughter whose name was Tamar; she was a beautiful woman.

²⁸Absalom lived in Jerusalem two years without appearing before the king. ²⁹Then Absalom sent for Joab, in order to send him to the king; but Joab would not come to him. He sent for him a second time, but he would not come. ³⁰So [Absalom] said to his servants, "Look, Joab's field is next to mine, and he has barley there. Go and set it on fire." And Absalom's servants set the field on fire. ³¹Joab came at once to Absalom's house and said to him, "Why did your servants set fire to my field?" ³²Absalom replied to Joab, "I sent for you to come here; I wanted to send you to the king to say [on my behalf]: 'Why did I leave Geshur? I would be better off if I were still there.

17: Like an angel of God, an extreme flattery (see 1 Sam. 29.9 n.). 19: Though the woman was careful not to betray Joab, David understands that it was all his design. 20: The woman repeats the flattering comparison of David to an angel. 21: The woman now leaves the stage, and Joab himself appears. 22: Joab's excessive expressions of gratitude and politeness testify to his fear of punishment for having deceived David. 24: The king allowed Absalom to return, but has not forgiven him. 26: Growing and weighing his hair are signs of Absalom's narcissism. Two hundred shekels, more than two kg (4.5 pounds). 27: Tamar: Her name is probably mentioned, unlike the sons' names, because she bears the same name as Absalom's sister. 28: David's prolonged refusal to see Absalom is humiliating and unbearable to him. 30: Absalom uses violent means to compel Joab to intervene with the king. 32: Absalom considers himself free of guilt, because the killing of Amnon was justified. 33: Though the kiss signifies forgiveness, it should be noted that the verse repeatedly uses the designation the king instead of "David" or "his father." In addition, there is no mention of any verbal exchange between father and son—after five years of separation! This suggests that the enforced reconciliation is purely formal.

a I.e., people.

b-b Lit. "there is no turning to the right or to the left of what my lord the king says."

c-c See note a above.

Now let me appear before the king; and if I am guilty of anything, let him put me to death!"³³ Joab went to the king and reported to him; whereupon he summoned Absalom. He came to the king and flung himself face down to the ground before the king. And the king kissed Absalom.

15 Sometime afterward, Absalom provided himself with a chariot, horses, and fifty outrunners.² Absalom used to rise early and stand by the road to the city gates; and whenever a man had a case that was to come before the king for judgment, Absalom would call out to him, "What town are you from?" And when he answered, "Your servant is from ^asuch and such a tribe^a in Israel,"³ Absalom would say to him, "It is clear that your claim is right and just, but there is no one assigned to you by the king to hear it."⁴ And Absalom went on, "If only I were appointed judge in the land and everyone with a legal dispute came before me, I would see that he got his rights."⁵ And if a man approached to bow to him, [Absalom] would extend his hand and take hold of him and kiss him.⁶ Absalom did this to every Israelite who came to the king for judgment. Thus Absalom won away the hearts of the men of Israel.

⁷After a period of forty^b years had gone by, Absalom said to the king, "Let me go to Hebron and fulfill a vow that I made to the LORD.⁸ For your servant made a vow when I lived in Geshur of Aram: If the LORD ever brings me back to Jerusalem, I will worship the LORD."⁹ The king said to him, "Go in peace"; and so he set out for Hebron.

¹⁰But Absalom sent agents to all the tribes of Israel to say, "When you hear the blast of the horn, announce that Absalom has become king in Hebron."¹¹ Two hundred men of Jerusalem accompanied Absalom; they were invited and went in good faith, suspecting nothing.¹² Absalom also ^csent [to fetch]^d Ahithophel the Gilonite, David's counselor, from his town, Giloh, when the sacrifices were to be offered. The conspiracy gained strength, and the people supported Absalom in increasing numbers.

¹³Someone came and told David, "The loyalty of the men of Israel has veered toward Absalom."¹⁴ Whereupon David said to all the courtiers who were with him in Jerusalem, "Let us flee at once, or none of us will escape from 15.1-12: Rebellion. Absalom prepares his rebellion over several years. 1: The chariot, horses and fifty outrunners were signs of kingship (cf. 1 Sam. 8.11). 2-6: Absalom uses demagogic means to win popular support. Administration of justice was one of the king's main functions (see 12.1-6; 1 Kings 3.16-28; 2 Kings 8.1-6). 7: Hebron, capital of Judah, where David first was king (2.4). Apparently Absalom found among his kinsmen there discontent with David, who became king of all Israel and moved his capital to Jerusalem (cf. 5.9). 8: Even if he really made the vow in Geshur, he could have fulfilled it long since. 9: Go in peace, but Absalom goes for war. David is naively unaware of his son's real intentions. 11-12: A sacrificial meal including many guests was part of the royal inauguration ceremony (1 Kings 1.18-19).

15.13-16.14: Flight. David decides not to fortify himself in Jerusalem, but to leave the city. His flight is depicted in a series of scenes, mainly consisting of dia-

a-a Lit. "one of the tribes."

b Some Septuagint mss. and Syriac read "four."

c Some Septuagint mss. add "in Hebron."

d-d Some Septuagint mss. and 4QSam^a read "sent and summoned."

Absalom. We must get away quickly, or he will soon overtake us and bring down disaster upon us and put the city to the sword.”¹⁵ The king’s courtiers said to the king, “Whatever our lord the king decides, your servants are ready.”¹⁶ So the king left, followed by his entire household, except for ten concubines whom the king left to mind the palace.

¹⁷The king left, followed by ^aall the people,^a and they stopped at ^bthe last house.^b ¹⁸All ^chis followers^c marched past him, including all the Cherethites and all the Pelethites; and ^dall the Gittites, six hundred men who had accompanied him from Gath, also marched by the king.¹⁹ And the king said to Ittai the Gittite, “Why should you too go with us? Go back and stay with the [new] king, for you are a foreigner and you are also an exile from^e your country.” ²⁰You came only yesterday; should I make you wander about with us today, when I myself must go wherever I can? Go back, and take your kinsmen with you, [in]’ true faithfulness.” ²¹Ittai replied to the king, “As the LORD lives and as my lord the king lives, wherever my lord the king may be, there your servant will be, whether for death or for life!” ²²And David said to Ittai, “Then march by.” And Ittai the Gittite and all his men and all the children who were with him marched by.

²³The whole countryside wept aloud as the troops marched by. The king ^gcrossed the Kidron Valley, and all the troops crossed by the road to^g the wilderness. ²⁴Then Zadok appeared, with all the Levites carrying the Ark of the Covenant of God; and they set down the Ark of God until all the people had finished marching out of the city. ^bAbiathar also came up.^b ²⁵But the king said to Zadok, “Take the Ark of God back to the city. If I find favor with the LORD, He will bring me back and let me see it and its abode. ²⁶And if He should say, ‘I do not want you,’ I am ready; let Him do with me as He pleases.” ²⁷And the king said to the priest Zadok, ^h“Do you understand? You return^h to the safety of the city with your two sons, your own son Ahimaaz and Abiathar’s son Jonathan. ²⁸Look, I shall linger in the steppes of the wilderness until word comes from you to inform me.” ²⁹Zadok and Abiathar logues. 16: The fact that David leaves ten concubines behind discloses his intention soon to return. 17: The last house, probably on the boundary of Jerusalem. 18: The repetition of all shows that among his retinue nobody is disloyal. Cherethites and Pelethites, see 8.18 n. Gittites, mercenaries from the Philistine town of Gath, where David stayed sometime in the past (1 Sam. 27.3). 19–20: David, forging his own interest, shows extraordinary consideration for Ittai and his men. 21: The double oath reinforces Ittai’s declaration of unlimited loyalty. 22: The children: The Gittites had come with their families. 23: The Kidron Valley, the eastern boundary of biblical Jerusalem. 24–29: Both Zadok and Abiathar are priests, but Zadok appears here to be the principal one. 25–26: David expresses the idea that God’s favor is not dependent on the presence or veneration of religious objects. 27–28: The priests and their sons will be useful as intelligence agents.

a-a Septuagint reads “his courtiers.” b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Septuagint reads “the people.” d Emendation yields “and Ittai and.”

e So one Heb. ms. and several ancient versions; most mss. and editions read “to.”

f Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads “and may the LORD show you” (cf., e.g., 2.6).

g-g Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields “stopped in the Kidron Valley, while all the people marched on before him by way of the Mount of Olives to . . .”

h-h Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields “Look, you and Abiathar return.”

brought the Ark of God back to Jerusalem, and they stayed there.

³⁰David meanwhile went up the slope of the [Mount of] Olives, weeping as he went; his head was covered and he walked barefoot. And all the people who were with him covered their heads and wept as they went up. ³¹David [was] told that Ahithophel was among the conspirators with Absalom, and he prayed, "Please, O LORD, frustrate Ahithophel's counsel!"

³²When David reached the top, where people would prostrate themselves to God, Hushai the Archite was there to meet him, with his robe torn and with earth on his head. ³³David said to him, "If you march on with me, you will be a burden to me. ³⁴But if you go back to the city and say to Absalom, 'I will be your servant, O king; I was your father's servant formerly, and now I will be yours,' then you can nullify Ahithophel's counsel for me. ³⁵You will have the priests Zadok and Abiathar there, and you can report everything that you hear in the king's palace to the priests Zadok and Abiathar. ³⁶Also, their two sons are there with them, Zadok's son Ahimaaz and Abiathar's son Jonathan; and through them you can report to me everything you hear." ³⁷And so Hushai, the friend of David, reached the city as Absalom was entering Jerusalem.

16 David had passed a little beyond the summit when Ziba the servant of Mephibosheth came toward him with a pair of saddled asses carrying two hundred loaves of bread, one hundred cakes of raisin, one hundred cakes of figs,^a and a jar of wine. ²The king asked Ziba, "What are you doing with these?" Ziba answered, "The asses are for Your Majesty's family to ride on, the bread and figs are for the attendants to eat, and the wine is to be drunk by any who are exhausted in the wilderness." ³"And where is your master's son?" the king asked. "He is staying in Jerusalem," Ziba replied to the king, "for he thinks that the House of Israel will now give him back the throne of his grandfather." ⁴The king said to Ziba, "Then all that belongs to Mephibosheth is now yours!" And Ziba replied, "I bow low. Your Majesty is most gracious to me."

⁵As King David was approaching Bahurim, a member of Saul's clan—a man named Shimei son of Gera—came out from there, hurling insults as he came. ⁶He threw stones at David and all King David's courtiers, while all the troops and all the warriors were at his right and his left. ⁷And these are the insults that Shimei hurled: "Get out, get out, you criminal, you villain! ⁸The LORD is paying you back for all your crimes against the family of Saul, whose throne you seized. The LORD is handing over the throne to your son Absalom; you are in trouble because you are a criminal!"

30: Covering the head and walking barefoot were signs of grief (Jer. 14.3; Esth. 6.12). 31: David, aware of Ahithophel's wisdom, greatly dreads his counsel to Absalom. 32: At the very place where people would prostrate themselves to God David's prayer (v. 31) is answered: Hushai appears, who will counteract Ahithophel's counsel. His robe torn and with earth on his head, see 1.2 n. 33-36: David assigns Hushai a twofold task: to nullify Ahithophel's counsel, and to supply information right from the heart of the uprising to David's secret agents. 37: Friend, or perhaps "companion," an official title (1 Kings 4.5). 16.1: Ziba, see 9.2. The detailed list of supplies underscores Ziba's gesture of support. 2: The attendants, see 1 Sam. 25.27 n. 3: Your master's son, Mephibosheth, Saul's grandson (9.6). 4: David believes Ziba, and, wishing to reward him for his support, gives him all the fields he has previously given to Mephibosheth (9.9).

^a Lit. "summer fruit."

⁹Abishai son of Zeruiah said to the king, "Why let that dead dog abuse my lord the king? Let me go over and cut off his head!" ¹⁰But the king said, "What has this to do with you,^a you sons of Zeruiah? He is abusing [me] only because the LORD told him to abuse David; and who is to say, 'Why did You do that?' " ¹¹David said further to Abishai and all the courtiers, "If my son, my own issue, seeks to kill me, how much more the Benjaminite! Let him go on hurling abuse, for the LORD has told him to. ¹²Perhaps the LORD will look upon my punishment^b and recompense me for the abuse [Shimei] has uttered today." ¹³David and his men continued on their way, while Shimei walked alongside on the slope of the hill, insulting him as he walked, and throwing stones at him and flinging dirt. ¹⁴The king and all who accompanied him arrived^c exhausted, and he rested there.

¹⁵Meanwhile Absalom and all the people, the men of Israel, arrived in Jerusalem, together with Ahithophel. ¹⁶When Hushai the Archite, David's friend, came before Absalom, Hushai said to Absalom, "Long live the king! Long live the king!" ¹⁷But Absalom said to Hushai, "Is this your loyalty to your friend? Why didn't you go with your friend?" ¹⁸"Not at all!" Hushai replied. "I am for the one whom the LORD and this people and all the men of Israel have chosen, and I will stay with him. ¹⁹Furthermore, whom should I serve, if not David's^d son? As I was in your father's service, so I will be in yours."

²⁰Absalom then said to Ahithophel, "What do you advise us to do?" ²¹And Ahithophel said to Absalom, "Have intercourse with your father's concubines, whom he left to mind the palace; and when all Israel hears that you have dared the wrath of your father, all who support you will be encouraged." ²²So they pitched a tent for Absalom on the roof, and Absalom lay with his father's concubines^e "with the full knowledge^e of all Israel.—²³In those days, the advice which Ahithophel gave was accepted like an oracle sought from God; that is how all the advice of Ahithophel was esteemed both by David and by Absalom.

8: Shimei accuses David of having murdered Abner and Ishbaal in order to usurp Saul's throne. The initial chs of 2 Sam. deny this accusation. 9: That dead dog, see 3.8 n. 10: Sons of Zeruiah: David habitually lumps Abishai and Joab, his sister's sons, together (cf. 3.39; 19.23). 11: David accepts his profound humiliation with resignation. What his son, his own issue, is doing to him is much worse than the Benjaminite's abuse. 14: There: According to 17.21–22, David waited near the Jordan.

16.15–17.14: The counselors' contest. The importance of the contest between Ahithophel and Hushai lies in the fact that its outcome will ultimately decide the battle between David and Absalom.

16–19: Hushai, though known to be David's friend (vv. 16–17), tries to win Absalom's confidence. His statements, however, are equivocal. By the king (v. 16) either Absalom or David can be meant, and the same applies to the chosen one (v. 18). Similarly, the answer to the question in v. 19 can be Absalom or David himself. Finally, so (v. 19) can refer to loyal service either to Absalom or to David even while Hushai is in Absalom's employment. Absalom understands that he is meant, but Hushai probably thinks of David. Absalom's answer is not reported, but he turns to Ahithophel for advice. 21: Have intercourse, see 3.7 n. To mind the palace, see 15.16. 22: Absalom's public intercourse with his father's concubines, on the very roof from where David observed Bathsheba, is the fulfillment of Nathan's prophecy (12.11–12).

a-a Lit. "What have I and you."

b So kethib; qere "eye." Ancient versions read "suffering."

c Some Septuagint mss. add "at the Jordan."

d Heb. "his." e-e Lit. "before the eyes."

17 And Ahithophel said to Absalom, "Let me pick twelve thousand men and set out tonight in pursuit of David. ²I will come upon him when he is weary and disheartened, and I will throw him into a panic; and when all the troops with him flee, I will kill the king alone. ³And I will bring back all the people ^ato you; when all have come back [except] the man you are after,^a all the people will be at peace." ⁴The advice pleased Absalom and all the elders of Israel. ⁵But Absalom said, "Summon Hushai the Archite as well, so we can hear what he too has to say." ⁶Hushai came to Absalom, and Absalom said to him, "This is what Ahithophel has advised. Shall we follow his advice? If not, what do you say?"

⁷Hushai said to Absalom, "This time the advice that Ahithophel has given is not good. ⁸You know," Hushai continued, "that your father and his men are courageous fighters, and they are as desperate as a bear in the wild robbed of her whelps. Your father is an experienced soldier, and he will not spend the night with the troops; ⁹even now he must be hiding in one of the pits or in some other place. And if any of them^b fall at the first attack, whoever hears of it will say, 'A disaster has struck the troops that follow Absalom'; ¹⁰and even if he is a brave man with the heart of a lion, he will be shaken—for all Israel knows that your father and the soldiers with him are courageous fighters. ¹¹So I advise that all Israel from Dan to Beer-sheba—as numerous as the sands of the sea—be called up to join you, and that you yourself march ^cinto battle." ¹²When we come upon him in whatever place he may be, we'll descend on him [as thick] as dew falling on the ground; and no one will survive, neither he nor any of the men with him. ¹³And if he withdraws into a city, all Israel will bring ropes to that city and drag ^dits stones^d as far as the riverbed, until not even a pebble of it is left." ¹⁴Absalom and all Israel agreed that the advice of Hushai the Archite was better than that of Ahithophel.—The LORD had decreed that Ahithophel's sound advice be nullified, in order that the LORD might bring ruin upon Absalom.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads "to you as a bride comes back to her husband; you seek the life of but one man, and . . ."

b Some Septuagint mss. read "the troops" (i.e., Absalom's).

c-c Ancient versions read "among them."

d-d Heb. "it."

17.1-3: Ahithophel's second advice is to set out immediately and come upon David while he is weary and not yet organized.

Ahithophel, without battle, will kill the king alone and then all the people will turn to Absalom.

1: Twelve thousand, see 1 Sam.

15.4 n. 3: When all have come back is probably a dittography of and I will bring back all. Read: "and I will bring back all the people to you; for you are after one man, and all the people will be at peace."

5-6: Hushai gets the opportunity to nullify Ahithophel's advice. But achieving this is exceedingly difficult, because Ahithophel's counsel is generally highly esteemed (16.23), his present advice has already been accepted by Absalom and all the elders (v. 4), and Hushai is probably still suspected of allegiance to David. 7: This time: Hushai begins with subscribing to the prevailing opinion concerning Ahithophel's advice—only this piece of advice is an exception.

8-13: Hushai's aim is to buy time for David to rest and organize his defense. In the first part of his speech (vv. 8-10) he shows the shortcomings of Ahithophel's plan: It has no chance of success because of the nature of the opponents, and it is even harmful to Absalom's forces. In the second part (vv. 11-13) he proposes an alternative plan: Thorough preparations must be made, and then Absalom will be able to inflict utter defeat upon David. Hushai's speech excels in the use of rhetorical means, such as metaphor, simile, and hyperbole. 9: He must be hiding, therefore it will be impossible to find him and kill him alone.

10: Not only Absalom knows his father's courage (v. 8), all Israel knows it. 11: Only quantity can overcome quality—i.e., only by assembling a huge army can Absalom prevail over David's courageous men. Contrary to Ahithophel, who stressed his own role (note the repetitions of "I"), Hushai gives prominence to Absalom's leadership. 14: Because rejection of Ahithophel's sound advice seemed unthinkable, the narrator ascribes this to the LORD. On the human level, it was Hushai's outstanding rhetorical skill and psychological insight that achieved the rejection of Ahithophel's plan.

¹⁵Then Hushai told the priests Zadok and Abiathar, "This is what Ahithophel advised Absalom and the elders of Israel; this is what I advised. ¹⁶Now send at once and tell David, 'Do not spend the night at the fords of the wilderness, but cross over at once; otherwise the king and all the troops with him will be annihilated.' " ¹⁷Jonathan and Ahimaaz were staying at En-rogel, and a slave girl would go and bring them word and they in turn would go and inform King David. For they themselves dared not be seen entering the city. ¹⁸But a boy saw them and informed Absalom. They left at once and came to the house of a man in Bahurim who had a well in his courtyard. They got down into it, ¹⁹and the wife took a cloth, spread it over the mouth of the well, and scattered groats on top of it, so that nothing would be noticed. ²⁰When Absalom's servants came to the woman at the house and asked where Ahimaaz and Jonathan were, the woman told them that they had crossed ^aa bit beyond the water.^a They searched, but found nothing; and they returned to Jerusalem.

²¹After they were gone, [Ahimaaz and Jonathan] came up from the well and went and informed King David. They said to David, "Go and cross the water quickly, for Ahithophel has advised thus and thus concerning you." ²²David and all the troops with him promptly crossed the Jordan, and by daybreak not one was left who had not crossed the Jordan.

²³When Ahithophel saw that his advice had not been followed, he saddled his ass and went home to his native town. He set his affairs in order, and then he hanged himself. He was buried in his ancestral tomb.

²⁴David had reached Mahanaim when Absalom and all the men of Israel with him crossed the Jordan. ²⁵Absalom had appointed Amasa army commander in place of Joab; Amasa was the son of a man named Ithra the ^bIsraelite, who had married Abigail, daughter of Nahash and sister of Joab's mother Zeruiah.^b ²⁶The Israelites and Absalom encamped in the district of Gilead. ²⁷When David reached Mahanaim, Shobi son of Nahash from Rabbath-ammon, Machir son of Ammiel from Lo-debar, and Barzillai the Gileadite from Rogelim ²⁸presented^c couches, basins, and earthenware; also wheat, barley, flour, parched grain, beans, lentils, ^dparched grain,^d ²⁹honey, ^ecurds, a flock,^e

17.15-29: Recovery. Hushai's triumph over Ahithophel marks a turning point in David's situation. From now on all developments are in David's favor. 15-17: Using the intelligence chain set up earlier (15.27-28, 35-36), Hushai reports to David and advises him to cross the Jordan immediately, lest the elders after all convince Absalom to adopt Ahithophel's plan. En-Rogel, a well in the Kidron Valley, not far from Jerusalem. 18-20: Bahurim belonged to Benjamin, the tribe of Saul, and there Shimei cursed David a short while ago (16.5-8). Now in the same place a woman, believing in David, helps his agents in the same way Rahab once helped Joshua's agents (Josh. 2.3-7). 23: His advice being rejected, Ahithophel commits suicide (see 1 Sam. 31.4 n.), convinced that David will gain the upper hand and execute him as traitor. Now at least he can set his affairs in order and be buried in his ancestral tomb (see 2.32 n.). 24: Mahanaim, see 2.8. 25: Amasa, like Joab, David's nephew and Absalom's cousin. Nahash: According to 1 Chron. 2.16 Abigail's father was Jesse. "Nahash" probably crept in erroneously from v. 27. 27-29: Shobi son of Nahash is probably the brother of Hanun, who was defeated by David (ch 10), Machir son of Ammiel accommodated Mephibosheth, Saul's grandson, in his home (9.4-5), and Barzillai is presumably the father of Saul's son-in-law (21.8). These men, though close to the royal houses of Ammon and Saul, display their belief in David's kingship. The long list of their gifts demonstrates the extent of their support.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Targum reads "the Jordan."

b-b Some Septuagint mss. and 1 Chron. 2.12-17 read "Ismaelite" and give a somewhat different genealogy.

c Brought up from v. 29 for clarity. d-d Lacking in the Septuagint and Syriac.

e-e Emendation yields "curds from the flock."

and cheese^a from the herd for David and the troops with him to eat. For they knew that the troops must have grown hungry, faint, and thirsty in the wilderness.

18 David mustered the troops who were with him and set over them captains of thousands and captains of hundreds. ²David ^bsent out the troops,^b one-third under the command of Joab, one-third under the command of Joab's brother Abishai son of Zeruah, and one-third under the command of Ittai the Gittite. And David said to the troops, "I myself will march out with you." ³But the troops replied, "No! For if some of us flee, the rest will not be concerned about us; even if half of us should die, the others will not be concerned about us. But ^cyou are worth ten thousand of us. ^cTherefore, it is better for you to support us from the town." ⁴And the king said to them, "I will do whatever you think best."

So the king stood beside the gate as all the troops marched out by their hundreds and thousands. ⁵The king gave orders to Joab, Abishai, and Ittai: "Deal gently with my boy Absalom, for my sake." All the troops heard the king give the order about Absalom to all the officers.

⁶The troops marched out into the open to confront the Israelites,^d and the battle was fought in the forest of Ephraim.^e ⁷The Israelite troops were routed by David's followers, and a great slaughter took place there that day—twenty thousand men. ⁸The battle spread out over that whole region, and the forest devoured more troops that day than the sword.

⁹Absalom encountered some of David's followers. Absalom was riding on a mule, and as the mule passed under the tangled branches of a great terebinth, his hair got caught in the terebinth; he ^fwas held^f between heaven and earth as the mule under him kept going. ¹⁰One of the men saw it and told Joab, "I have just seen Absalom hanging from a terebinth." ¹¹Joab said to the man who told him, "You saw it! Why didn't you kill him ^gthen and there?^g I would have owed you ten^h shekels of silver and a belt." ¹²But the man answered Joab, "Even if I had a

18.1-18: The rebels' downfall.

The battle between the armies of David and Absalom results in Absalom's death. 1: Thousands . . . hundreds, military units (cf. 1 Sam. 29.2). 2: Ittai, see 15.19. 3-4: The army understands—just as Ahithophel did (17.2-3)—that David is the rebels' only target and his death will decide the battle. Ten thousand, see v. 1 n. 5: My boy, notwithstanding his criminal behavior. 9: Unlike David, Absalom participates in the battle himself, as suggested by Hushai (17.11). Mule, see 13.29 n. Absalom, who used to grow his hair and weigh it every year (14.26), is caught by his hair (lit. "his head")—indicating that his pride is his undoing.

10-15: The dialogue between Joab and the man who saw Absalom hanging in the tree underscores Joab's deliberate violation of David's explicit order to deal gently with Absalom. Though Absalom is finally killed by ten arms-bearers, responsibility for his death rests with Joab, who gave the order—just as responsibility for Amnon's death, though carried out by attendants, rested with Absalom (13.28-29). Joab was probably driven by concern for the people and the kingdom, but personal feelings—disappointment and anger at Absalom's ingratitude and violence (14.30-31)—may also have been involved.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Some Septuagint mss. read "divided the troops into three."

c-c So two Heb. mss., Septuagint, and Vulgate; cf. 1 Kings 1.18 and note. Most mss. and the editions read "Now there are ten thousand like us."

d The usual term in this narrative for the supporters of Absalom.

e Some Septuagint mss. read "Mahanaim"; cf. 17.24.

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Ancient versions and 4QSam^a read "was left hanging"; cf. v. 10.

g-g Lit. "to the ground." h Some Septuagint mss. and 4QSam^a read "fifty."

thousand shekels of silver in my hands, I would not raise a hand against the king's son. For the king charged you and Abishai and Ittai in our hearing, 'Watch over my boy Absalom, ^afor my sake.'^a ¹³If I betrayed myself^b—and nothing is hidden from the king—you would have stood aloof."¹⁴ Joab replied, ^c"Then I will not wait for you."^c He took three darts in his hand and drove them into Absalom's chest. [Absalom] was still alive in the thick growth of the terebinth, ¹⁵when ten of Joab's young arms-bearers closed in and struck at Absalom until he died. ¹⁶Then Joab sounded the horn, and the troops gave up their pursuit of the Israelites; for Joab held the troops in check. ¹⁷They took Absalom and flung him into a large pit in the forest, and they piled up a very great heap of stones over it. Then all the Israelites fled to their homes.—¹⁸Now Absalom, in his lifetime, had taken the pillar which is in the Valley of the King and set it up for himself; for he said, "I have no son to keep my name alive." He had named the pillar after himself, and it has been called Absalom's Monument to this day.

¹⁹Ahimaaz son of Zadok said, "Let me run and report to the king that the LORD has vindicated him against his enemies."²⁰ But Joab said to him, "You shall not be the one to bring tidings today. You may bring tidings some other day, but you'll not bring any today; for the king's son is dead!"²¹ And Joab said to a Cushite, "Go, tell the king what you have seen." The Cushite bowed to Joab and ran off. ²²But Ahimaaz son of Zadok again said to Joab, "No matter what, let me run, too, behind the Cushite." Joab asked, "Why should you run, my boy, when you have no news ^dworth telling?"^d ²³"I am going to run anyway." "Then run," he said. So Ahimaaz ran by way of the Plain, and he passed the Cushite.

²⁴David was sitting between the two gates.^e The watchman on the roof of the gate walked over to the city wall. He looked up and saw a man running alone. ²⁵The watchman called down and told the king; and the king said, "If he is alone, he has news to report." As he was coming nearer, ²⁶the watchman saw another man running; and he called out to the gatekeeper, "There is another man running alone." And the king said, "That one, too, brings news." ²⁷The watchman said, "I can see that the first one

16: Sounded the horn, see 2.28 n. Held . . . in check, lit. "spared."

17: Flung him into a large pit, an act of contempt. A heap of stones, a sign of disgrace (see Josh. 7.26; 8.29).

18: The humiliating pile of stones on his grave is an ironic contrast to the glorious memorial that Absalom had set up for himself in the Valley of the King. No son: According to 14.27 Absalom had three sons. Radak resolves the contradiction by assuming that they had died. Absalom's Monument, not to be confused with the Roman-period tomb bearing that designation today.

18.19–19.9: The sad victory. Joy over the victory is overshadowed by David's grief over Absalom's death. In spite of what Absalom did to him, David loved his son dearly. 19–32: The detailed account concerning the two runners focuses attention on David's reaction to their messages.

19: Ahimaaz, see 15.27. 20: Joab fully understands the significance of Absalom's death for David.

21: Cushite, a black person from Cush, the region south of Egypt.

23: The Plain, the Jordan Valley.

24: The narrative's point of view leaps to Mahanaim, where David is anxiously waiting for news from the battlefield. Cities in biblical times often had two gates one after another, which were connected by a short fortified passageway.

27: David's reply reflects the view that messenger and message are of the same nature (cf. 1 Kings 1.42).

a-a So some Heb. mss. and ancient versions. Most mss. and editions read "who"—perhaps meaning "whoever you are."

b I.e., by killing Absalom.

c-c Some Septuagint mss. and Targum read "Therefore, I will begin before you."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e I.e., the inner and outer gateways.

runs like Ahimaaz son of Zadok"; to which the king replied, "He is a good man, and he comes with good news."²⁸ Ahimaaz called out and said to the king, "All is well!" He bowed low with his face to the ground and said, "Praised be the LORD your God, who has delivered up the men who raised their hand against my lord the king."²⁹ The king asked, "Is my boy Absalom safe?" And Ahimaaz answered, "I saw ^aa large crowd when Your Majesty's servant Joab was sending your servant off,^a but I don't know what it was about."³⁰ The king said, "Step aside and stand over there"; he stepped aside and waited.

³¹Just then the Cushite came up; and the Cushite said, "Let my lord the king be informed that the LORD has vindicated you today against all who rebelled against you!"³² The king asked the Cushite, "Is my boy Absalom safe?" And the Cushite replied, "May the enemies of my lord the king and all who rose against you to do you harm fare like 19 that young man!"^{1b} The king was shaken. He went up to the upper chamber of the gateway and wept, moaning these words as he went,^c "My son Absalom! O my son, my son Absalom! If only I had died instead of you! O Absalom, my son, my son!"

²Joab was told that the king was weeping and mourning over Absalom.³ And the victory that day was turned into mourning for all the troops, for that day the troops heard that the king was grieving over his son.⁴ The troops stole into town that day like troops ashamed after running away in battle.⁵ The king covered his face and the king kept crying aloud, "O my son Absalom! O Absalom, my son, my son!"

⁶Joab came to the king in his quarters and said, "Today you have humiliated all your followers, who this day saved your life, and the lives of your sons and daughters, and the lives of your wives and concubines,⁷ by showing love for those who hate you and hate for those who love you. For you have made clear today that the officers and men mean nothing to you. I am sure that if Absalom were alive today and the rest of us dead, you would have preferred it.⁸ Now arise, come out and placate your followers! For I swear by the LORD that if^d you do not come out, not a single man will remain with you overnight; and that would be a greater disaster for you than any disaster that has befallen you from your youth until now."⁹ So the king

28: All is well: Ahimaaz thinks of the battle, whereas David is concerned about Absalom.

29: Ahimaaz evades David's question. 32: The Cushite's reply is indirect, but unambiguous, hinting that Absalom was a rebel.

19.1: David's personal lament, unlike the public laments for Saul and Jonathan (1.19-27) and for Abner (3.33-34), consists mainly of short cries, repeating the beloved's name over and over again. 5: Covered his face, see 15.30 n. 6-9: While David the father succumbs to his personal grief, Joab threateningly orders him to fulfill his public duties as king. 6: Joab accuses David of ingratitude to his loyal followers.

7: Joab's extreme, unjustified accusations are based on half-truths. His aggressive language is probably related to the fact that it was he who killed Absalom. 9: David yields to Joab, but does not forgive him (see v. 14).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Counted as 18.33 in some versions.

c Some Septuagint mss. read "wept."

d So Septuagint, 4QSam^a, and some other Heb. mss., and an ancient masoretic tradition; ordinary texts omit "if."

arose and sat down in the gateway; and when all the troops were told that the king was sitting in the gateway, all the troops presented themselves to the king.

Now the Israelites had fled to their homes.¹⁰ All the people throughout the tribes of Israel were arguing: Some said, "The king saved us from the hands of our enemies, and he delivered us from the hands of the Philistines; and just now he had to flee the country because of Absalom.¹¹ But Absalom, whom we anointed over us, has died in battle; why then do you sit idle instead of escorting the king back?"¹² The talk of all Israel reached the king in his quarters. So King David sent this message to the priests Zadok and Abiathar: "Speak to the elders of Judah and say, 'Why should you be the last to bring the king back to his palace?'¹³ You are my kinsmen, my own flesh and blood! Why should you be the last to escort the king back?"¹⁴ And to Amasa say this, 'You are my own flesh and blood. May God do thus and more to me if you do not become my army commander permanently in place of Joab!' "¹⁵ So [Amasa] swayed the hearts of all the Judites as one man; and they sent a message to the king: "Come back with all your followers."

¹⁶The king started back and arrived at the Jordan; and the Judites went to Gilgal to meet the king and to conduct the king across the Jordan.¹⁷ Shimei son of Gera, the Benjaminite from Bahurim, hurried down with the Judites to meet King David,¹⁸ accompanied by a thousand Benjaminites.^a And Ziba, the servant of the House of Saul, together with his fifteen sons and twenty slaves, rushed down to the Jordan ahead of the king¹⁹ while the crossing was being made, to escort the king's family over, and to do whatever he wished. Shimei son of Gera flung himself before the king as he was about to cross the Jordan.²⁰ He said to the king, "Let not my lord hold me guilty, and do not remember the wrong your servant committed on the day my lord the king left Jerusalem; let Your Majesty give it no thought.²¹ For your servant knows that he has sinned; so here I have come down today, the first of all the House of Joseph, to meet my lord the king."²² Thereupon Abishai son of Zeruiah spoke up, "Shouldn't Shimei be put to death for that—insulting the LORD's anointed?"²³ But David said, ^b"What has this to do with you,^b you sons of Zeruiah, that you should cross me today? Should a single Israelite be put to death today? Don't I know that

19.10–41: Return. On his flight from Jerusalem David first met his loyal supporters the priests and Hushai, then Mephibosheth's servant Ziba, and finally his opponent Shimei the son of Gera; on his way back the order is reversed—he first meets Shimei, then Mephibosheth himself, and finally his staunch supporter Barzillai.

10–11: Only the arguments in favor of David are reported. Israel, excluding Judah. 12: Zadok and Abiathar were left in Jerusalem in order to transmit information (15.27–29). The men of Judah, David's own tribe, probably supported Absalom (see 15.7 n.).

14: Although Amasa was Absalom's army commander (17.25), David appoints him—his nephew—as permanent army commander in place of Joab, because of his anger at Joab for killing Absalom. David knows that Amasa has great influence in Judah. 16: Gilgal, near the Jordan. 17: Shimei, who cursed and insulted David on his flight from Jerusalem (16.5–13), now hurries to make amends and save his life.

18: The thousand Benjaminites are meant to show Shimei's power in his tribe. Ziba, see 16.1ff. 20–21: Shimei couches his plea in most deferential language. House of Joseph, a designation of northern Israel as opposed to Judah (see Josh. 18.5). 22–24: Abishai, Joab's brother. His relentless approach (cf. 1 Sam. 26.8ff.; 2 Sam. 16.9ff.) sets off David's moderate attitude. David swears not to put Shimei to death, probably in order to win the support of Benjamin. He does not, however, forgive Shimei (see 1 Kings 2.8–9).

a Meaning of parts of the rest of vv. 18 and 19 uncertain.

b-b See note at 16.10.

c Some Septuagint mss. read "you."

today I am again king over Israel?"²⁴ Then the king said to Shimei, "You shall not die"; and the king gave him his oath.

²⁵ Mephibosheth, the grandson of Saul, also came down to meet the king. He had not pared his toenails, or trimmed his mustache, or washed his clothes from the day that the king left until the day he returned safe. ²⁶ When he ^acame [from]^a Jerusalem to meet the king, the king asked him, "Why didn't you come with me, Mephibosheth?" ²⁷ He replied, "My lord the king, my own servant^b deceived me. ^cYour servant planned to saddle his ass and ride^c on it and go with Your Majesty—for your servant is lame. ²⁸ [Ziba] has slandered your servant to my lord the king. But my lord the king is like an angel of the LORD; do as you see fit. ²⁹ For all the members of my father's family deserved only death from my lord the king; yet you set your servant among those who ate at your table. What right have I to appeal further to Your Majesty?" ³⁰ The king said to him, "You need not speak further. I decree that you and Ziba shall divide the property." ³¹ And Mephibosheth said to the king, "Let him take it all, as long as my lord the king has come home safe."

³² Barzillai the Gileadite had come down from Rogelin and ^dpassed on to the Jordan with the king, to see him off at^d the Jordan. ³³ Barzillai was very old, eighty years of age; and he had provided the king with food during his stay at Mahanaim, for he was a very wealthy man. ³⁴ The king said to Barzillai, "Cross over with me, and I will provide for you in Jerusalem at my side." ³⁵ But Barzillai said to the king, "How many years are left to me that I should go up with Your Majesty to Jerusalem? ³⁶ I am now eighty years old. Can I tell the difference between good and bad? Can your servant taste what he eats and drinks? Can I still listen to the singing of men and women? Why then should your servant continue to be a burden to my lord the king? ³⁷ ^dYour servant could barely cross the Jordan^d with your Majesty! Why should Your Majesty reward me so generously? ³⁸ Let your servant go back, and let me die in my own town, near the graves of my father and mother. But here is your servant Chimham; let him cross with my lord the king, and do for him as you see fit." ³⁹ And the king said, "Chimham shall cross with me, and I will do for him as you see fit; and anything you want me to do, I will do for you."

25-29: Mephibosheth, addressing David in most polite language, accuses Ziba of failing to bring his ass and slandering him (16.1-4). He acknowledges the favors David has shown to him (ch 9) and even compares David to an angel of God (see 1 Sam. 29.9 n.), but refrains from mentioning directly that David, unjustly, gave his fields to Ziba. 30: David understands Mephibosheth's hint. Without investigating who lied, Ziba or Mephibosheth, he decrees that the fields shall be divided. According to the Talmud (b. Shab. 56a), David's unjust decision will have repercussions in the future: "When David said to Mephibosheth, you and Ziba shall divide the field, a heavenly voice was heard, saying, Rehoboam and Jeroboam will divide the kingdom." (See 1 Kings ch 12.) The narrator's information in v. 25 makes it clear that Mephibosheth spoke the truth. 32: Barzillai, see 17.27. 35-38: Rhetorical questions are characteristic of Barzillai's style. 36: Good and bad, in the material, not the moral, sense. 38: Chimham, probably Barzillai's son. 39: David does not forget his promise (see 1 Kings 2.7).

a-a So Septuagint. Heb. "entered." b I.e., Ziba (cf. v. 30 and 9.2 ff.).

c-c Ancient versions read "Your servant said to him, 'Saddle my ass, that I may ride . . .'"

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

⁴⁰All the troops crossed the Jordan; and when the king was ready to cross, the king kissed Barzillai and bade him farewell; and [Barzillai] returned to his home. ⁴¹The king passed on to Gilgal, with Chimham^b accompanying him; and all the Judite soldiers and part of the Israelite army escorted the king across.

⁴²Then all the men of Israel came to the king and said to the king, "Why did our kinsmen, the men of Judah, steal you away and escort the king and his family across the Jordan, along with all David's men?" ⁴³All the men of Judah replied to the men of Israel, "Because the king is our relative! Why should this upset you? Have we consumed anything that belongs to the king? Has he given us any gifts?" ⁴⁴But the men of Israel answered the men of Judah, "We have ten shares in the king, and 'in David, too, we have more than you.'^c Why then have you slighted us? Were we not the first to propose that our king be brought back?" However, the men of Judah prevailed over the men of Israel.

20 A scoundrel named Sheba son of Bichri, a Benjaminite, happened to be there. He sounded the horn and proclaimed:

"We have no portion in David,
No share in Jesse's son!
Every man to his tent, O Israel!"

²All the men of Israel left David and followed Sheba son of Bichri; but the men of Judah accompanied their king from the Jordan to Jerusalem. ³David went to his palace in Jerusalem, and the king took the ten concubines he had left to mind the palace and put them in a guarded place; he provided for them, but he did not cohabit with them. They remained in seclusion until the day they died, in living widowhood.

⁴The king said to Amasa, "Call up the men of Judah to my standard, and report here three days from now."

⁵Amasa went to call up Judah, but he took longer than the time set for him. ⁶And David said to Abishai, "Now Sheba son of Bichri will cause us more trouble than Absalom. So take your lord's servants and pursue him, before he finds fortified towns and ^deludes us."^d ⁷Joab's men, the Cherethites and Pelethites, and all the warriors, marched out behind him.^e They left Jerusalem in pursuit of Sheba son 41: Soldiers, army, lit. "people" (see vv. 11–12, 16).

19.42–20.22: Rebellion again. Conflict between Israel and Judah leads to Israel's breaking away from David. Civil war and division of the kingdom are prevented by David's swift action, resulting in the rebel's death. 42: See v. 16. 44: Ten shares, ten times as much (Rashi: "for we are ten tribes"). 20.1: A Benjaminite, from the tribe of Saul. His tent, an archaic term for "his home." 2: Only Judah remains loyal to David. 3: The ten concubines, see 15.16. David does not cohabit with them, because Absalom had slept with them (16.22). 4: Amasa, see 19.14 n. 6: Because of Amasa's delay in calling up the men of Judah, David, aware of the urgency of action, appoints Abishai, Joab's brother, as commander of his personal forces, and not Joab himself, because David is angry with him for killing Absalom. 7: The Cherethites and Pelethites, see 8.18 n. Behind him, behind Abishai.

a Meaning of parts of vv. 40–44 uncertain. b Heb. Chimham.

c-c Septuagint reads "we are the first-born, rather than you."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e-e Emendation yields "Joab, the Cherethites and Pelethites, and all the warriors marched out behind Abishai."

of Bichri. ⁸ They were near the great stone in Gibeon when Amasa appeared before them. ^a Joab was wearing his military dress, with his sword girded over it and fastened around his waist in its sheath; and, as he stepped forward, it fell out. ^a ⁹ Joab said to Amasa, "How are you, brother?" and with his right hand Joab took hold of Amasa's beard as if to kiss him. ¹⁰ Amasa was not on his guard against the sword in Joab's [left] hand, and [Joab] drove it into his belly so that his entrails poured out on the ground and he died; he did not need to strike him a second time.

Joab and his brother Abishai then set off in pursuit of Sheba son of Bichri, ¹¹ while one of Joab's henchmen stood by ^bthe corpse^b and called out, "Whoever favors Joab, and whoever is on David's side, follow Joab!" ¹² Amasa lay in the middle of the road, drenched in his blood; and the man saw that everyone stopped. And when he saw that all the people were stopping, he dragged Amasa from the road into the field and covered him with a garment. ¹³ Once he was removed from the road, everybody continued to follow Joab in pursuit of Sheba son of Bichri. ¹⁴ [Sheba] had passed through all the tribes of Israel up to Abel of ^cBeth-maacah; and all the Beerites^d assembled and followed him inside. ¹⁵ [Joab's men] came and besieged him in Abel of Beth-maacah; they threw up a siegemoat against the city ^eand it stood against the rampart.^e

All the troops with Joab were ^fengaged in battering the wall,^f ¹⁶ when a clever woman shouted from the city, "Listen! Listen! Tell Joab to come over here so I can talk to him." ¹⁷ He approached her, and the woman asked, "Are you Joab?" "Yes," he answered; and she said to him, "Listen to what your handmaid has to say." "I'm listening," he replied. ¹⁸ And she continued, "In olden times people used to say, ^a'Let them inquire of Abel,'^a and that was the end of the matter. ¹⁹ I am one of those who seek the welfare of the faithful in Israel. But you seek to bring death upon a mother city in Israel! Why should you destroy the LORD's possession?" ²⁰ Joab replied, "Far be it, far be it from me to destroy or to ruin! ²¹ Not at all! But a certain man from the hill country of Ephraim, named Sheba son of Bichri, has rebelled against King David. Just hand him

10: Usually the sword is held in the right hand. Joab lets it slip out of its sheath and then snatches it with his left hand. He treacherously kills Amasa in the same way he killed Abner, striking him in the belly (3.27). His motive, then and now, was to get rid of a rival. David never forgave him (see 1 Kings 2.5). 11: The henchman urges Amasa's men to go over to Joab, who assumed command over the troops pursuing Sheba. 14: Abel of Beth-maacah, a town in the extreme north of Israel. 16: The clever woman of Abel, like her counterpart of Tekoa (ch 14), is endowed with great power of persuasion. 18: Let them inquire . . . the end of the matter: The town of Abel was apparently famous for its wisdom, and its rulings were invariably accepted. 19: Mother city, metropolis. The LORD's possession, the people of Israel. 21: The hill country of Ephraim included parts of Benjamin.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Heb. "him."

c Heb. "and." Cf. v. 15 (and "Abel-beth-maacah" in 1 Kings 15.20 and 2 Kings 15.29).

d Emendation yields "Bichrites"; cf. Septuagint.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. The phrase would read well in the next verse (" . . . a clever woman stood on the rampart and shouted . . .").

f-f Lit. "destroying, to topple the wall." Septuagint and Targum read "were planning to topple the wall."

alone over to us, and I will withdraw from the city." The woman assured Joab, "His head shall be thrown over the wall to you."²² The woman came to all the people with her clever plan; and they cut off the head of Sheba son of Bichri and threw it down to Joab. He then sounded the horn; all the men dispersed to their homes, and Joab returned to the king in Jerusalem.

²³Joab was commander of the whole army [of] Israel; Benaiah son of Jehoiada was commander of the Cherethites and the Pelethites;²⁴ Adoram^a was in charge of forced labor; Jehoshaphat son of Ahilud was recorder;²⁵ Sheva^b was scribe; and Zadok and Abiathar were priests. ²⁶Ira the Jairite also served David as priest.

21 There was a famine during the reign of David, year after year for three years. David inquired of the LORD, and the LORD replied, "It is because of the blood-guilt of Saul and [his] house, for he put some Gibeonites to death."² The king summoned the Gibeonites and spoke to them.—Now the Gibeonites were not of Israelite stock, but a remnant of the Amorites, to whom the Israelites had given an oath; and Saul had tried to wipe them out in his zeal for the people of Israel and Judah.—³David asked the Gibeonites, "What shall I do for you? How shall I make expiation, so that you may bless the LORD's own people?"⁴ The Gibeonites answered him, "We have no claim for silver or gold against Saul and his household; and we have no claim on the life of any other man in Israel." And [David] responded, "Whatever you say I will do for you."⁵ Thereupon they said to the king, "The man who massacred us and planned to exterminate us, so that we should not survive in all the territory of Israel—⁶let seven of his male issue be handed over to us, and we will impale them before the LORD in Gibeah of Saul, the chosen of the LORD."^d And the king replied, "I will do so."

a So in 1 Kings 12.18 and 2 Chron. 10.18 ("Hadoram"); elsewhere "Adoniram."

b See note b at 8.17.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Emendation yields "at Gibeon, on the mountain of the LORD" (cf. Septuagint and v. 9).

22: Clever plan, lit. "cleverness." The woman persuades her people, thus preventing war. Sounded the horn, see 2.28 n. To the king, to his service.

20.23–26: Administration, part 2. The list of David's senior officials is similar to the list in 8.16–18 (see annotations there), but probably reflects a later stage in David's reign. The list marks the conclusion of the second part of 2 Samuel. 24: Adoram still functions under Solomon (see translators' note). Since forced labor is not mentioned in the first list, it was apparently instituted later. It aroused fierce opposition, culminating in Adoram's murder (see 1 Kings 12.18). 26: Cf. 8.18.

Chs 21–24: Appendix. The last four chapters of Samuel include diverse materials. These are somewhat different in character, theological outlook, and language from the main body of the book, and were added later as an appendix. They are arranged in chiasmic order: (A) a narrative about a national calamity, (B) short accounts of heroic feats, (C) a poem; (C') a poem, (B') short accounts of heroic feats, with a list of David's heroes, and (A') a narrative about a national calamity. The first narrative looks back to the past, to events that occurred before David's reign; the last narrative points to the future, to the period of David's son Solomon.

21.1–14: Vengeance versus charity. The first part of the narrative tells of the Gibeonites' revenge for Saul's violation of the oath promising them preservation of life; the second part describes the acts of charity to the dead performed by Saul's concubine and David. 1: The famine was the result of drought. Rain and drought are regarded in the Bible as divine reward and punishment for good or bad behavior (see esp. Deut. 11.13–17). Put some Gibeonites to death, lit. "killed the Gibeonites." This act of Saul is mentioned nowhere else. 2: The Gibeonites were a remnant of the Amorites, or native Canaanites, who inhabited the country before the Israelite conquest. Joshua swore to them that their lives would be spared (Josh. 9.15). The whole people has to bear, even after many years, the consequences of Saul's sin. In his zeal: The narrator explains why Saul broke the oath and tried to exterminate the Gibeonites (but did not quite succeed). 3: The Gibeonites' blessing will annul the curse of the famine. 4: The Gibeonites, demanding blood vengeance, settle neither for material reparations nor for the death of anyone other than Saul's offspring. 6: Gibeah of Saul, Saul's town (see 1 Sam. 10.5 n.). The cho-

⁷The king spared Mephibosheth son of Jonathan son of Saul, because of the oath before the LORD between the two, between David and Jonathan son of Saul. ⁸Instead, the king took Armoni and Mephibosheth, the two sons that Rizpah daughter of Aiah bore to Saul, and the five sons that Merab^a daughter of Saul bore to Adriel son of Barzillai the Meholathite, ⁹and he handed them over to the Gibeonites. They impaled them on the mountain before the LORD; all seven of them perished at the same time. They were put to death in the first days of the harvest, the beginning of the barley harvest.

¹⁰Then Rizpah daughter of Aiah took sackcloth and spread it on a rock for herself, and she stayed there from the beginning of the harvest until rain from the sky fell on ^bthe bodies;^b she did not let the birds of the sky settle on them by day or the wild beasts [approach] by night. ¹¹David was told what Saul's concubine Rizpah daughter of Aiah had done. ¹²And David went and took the bones of Saul and of his son Jonathan from the citizens of Jabesh-gilead, who had made off with them from the public square of Beth-shan, where the Philistines had hung them up on the day the Philistines killed Saul at Gilboa. ¹³He brought up the bones of Saul and of his son Jonathan from there; and he gathered the bones of those who had been impaled. ¹⁴And they buried the bones of Saul and of his son Jonathan^c in Zela, in the territory of Benjamin, in the tomb of his father Kish. And when all that the king had commanded was done, God responded to the plea of the land thereafter.

¹⁵Again war broke out between the Philistines and Israel, and David and the men with him went down and fought the Philistines; David grew weary, ¹⁶and ^dIshbi-benob^d tried to kill David.—He was a descendant of the Raphah;^e his bronze spear weighed three hundred shekels and he wore new armor.—¹⁷But Abishai son of Zeruah came to his aid; he attacked the Philistine and killed him. It was then that David's men declared to him on oath, "You shall not go with us into battle any more, lest you extinguish the lamp of Israel!"

¹⁸After this, fighting broke out again with the Philistines, at Gob; that was when Sibbecai the Hushathite killed Saph, a descendant of the Raphah.^e ¹⁹Again there sen of the LORD, a sarcastic utterance (but see translators' note). 7: Contrary to Saul, who violated the oath to the Gibeonites, David keeps the oath to Jonathan (1 Sam. 20.14–15, 42). 8: Rizpah, Saul's concubine (3.7). Merab . . . Adriel, see 1 Sam. 18.19. 9: The mountain before the LORD: In Gibeah, on the Hill of God, there was a shrine (1 Sam. 10.5). The barley harvest began in April. 10: Spread it, pitched it as a tent to protect herself from the scorching sun. Until rain from the sky fell, until the beginning of winter. All during the hot summer Rizpah guards the decaying, smelling corpses. 11: The noble deed of the simple concubine provokes David also to perform an act of charity for the dead. 12: See 1 Sam. 31.10–13. 14: In the tomb of his father Kish: Great value was attached to being buried in one's forefathers' grave (see 2.32 n.). God responded to the plea of the land and put an end to the famine.

21.15–22: Heroic feats. The four short accounts of feats performed by David's heroes against Philistine giants resemble each other in content and form. They also show similarities—particularly the third one—with the narrative of David and Goliath (1 Sam. ch 17). All of them tell of single combats. They probably belong to David's early period. 15: Went down, from the mountain region to the plain. 16: Ishbi-benob, a peculiar name, probably resulting from textual corruption. His bronze spear weighed three hundred shekels, about 3.5 kg. Cf. 1 Sam. 17.7. 17: Abishai, see 1 Sam. 26.6 n. Regarding the declaration of David's men, compare 18.3. 19: According to 1 Sam. ch 17 Goliath of Gath (i.e., the Gittite), whose spear had a shaft like a weaver's bar (1 Sam. 17.7), was killed by David, the Bethlehemite. To resolve the contradiction 1 Chron. 20.5 reads "brother of Goliath." Rashi assumes that David and Elhanan were one and the same person. Probably, however, the killing of the giant Goliath was initially attributed to Elhanan (perhaps the hero mentioned in 2.3,24), but later a So two Heb. mss., many Septuagint mss., and Peshitta; and cf. Targum, Sanhedrin 19b, and 1 Sam. 18.19. Most mss. and the printed editions read "Michal."

b-b Heb. "them." c Septuagint adds "and the bones of those impaled."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. e Apparently a race of giants.

f This paragraph is found also in 1 Chron. 20.4–8; in part, also in 1QSam^o, with some variations.

was fighting with the Philistines at Gob; and Elhanan son of Jaare-oregim^a the Bethlehemite killed Goliath the Gittite, whose spear had a shaft like a weaver's bar.²⁰ Once again there was fighting, at Gath. There was a ^bgiant of a man,^b who had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot, twenty-four in all; he too was descended from the Raphah.²¹ When he taunted Israel, Jonathan, the son of David's brother Shimei, killed him.²² Those four were descended from the Raphah in Gath, and they fell by the hands of David and his men.

22 ^cDavid addressed the words of this song to the LORD, after the LORD had saved him from the hands of all his enemies and from the hands of Saul.² He said:

O LORD, my crag, my fastness, my deliverer!
³ O ^dGod, the rock^d wherein I take shelter:
 My shield, my ^emighty champion,^e my fortress and refuge!
 My savior, You who rescue me from violence!

⁴ 'All praise! I called on the LORD,^f
 And I was delivered from my enemies.

⁵ For the breakers of Death encompassed me,
 The torrents of Belial^g terrified me;
⁶ The snares of Sheol encircled me,
 The coils of Death engulfed me.

⁷ In my anguish I called on the LORD,
 Cried out to my God;
 In His Abode^h He heard my voice,
 My cry entered His ears.

⁸ Then the earth rocked and quaked,
 The foundations of heaven' shook—Rocked by His indignation.

a Perhaps a duplicate of 'oregim ("weavers") at the end of the verse; meaning of Heb. uncertain. ¹ Chron. 20.5 reads "And Elhanan son of Jair killed Lalumi, the brother of Goliath the Gittite."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c This poem occurs again as Ps. 18, with a number of variations, some of which are cited in the following notes.

d-d Lit. "the God of my rock"; Ps. 18.3 "my God, my rock."

e-e Lit. "horn of rescue."

f-f Construction of Heb. uncertain.

g I.e., the netherworld, like "Death" and "Sheol."

h Lit. "Temple."

i Ps. 18.8 "mountains."

the more famous David was credited with it. This was facilitated by the fact that the Philistine killed by David was originally anonymous (only in 1 Sam. 17.4, 23, where he is introduced, is his name mentioned; otherwise he is simply designated "the Philistine"). 20: Six fingers . . . six toes, an extraordinary and perhaps frightening phenomenon.

22.1–51: A song of thanksgiving. The song, attributed to David, expresses thanks to the LORD, who delivered the author from mortal danger and granted him victory over his enemies. The song, which abounds in poetical devices, includes the following themes: praise of God (vv. 2–4); the author's plight and cry for help (vv. 5–7); God's appearance (vv. 8–16); God's rescue (vv. 17–20); the reward for the author's righteousness (vv. 21–25); God's ways of requital (vv. 26–28); the power of God's help (vv. 29–32); God's equipping the author for battle (vv. 33–37); the victory over the enemies (vv. 38–43); the author ruler of nations (vv. 44–46); praise of God (vv. 47–51). The song's frame—praise of God—defines its purpose. The same poem, with minor variations, which crept in during the process of transmission, is found in Ps. 18. 1: The superscription resembles headings in the book of Psalms (see, e.g., Pss. 3, 34, 51), which were added to the songs to connect them with the events in David's life that occasioned their composition. 2–3: The metaphors, occurring in a long string of epithets, stress God's strength. 5–6: The author was close to death (see 1 Sam. 2.6 n.). 7: Abode: According to v. 10 God's heavenly abode is meant. 8–16: God's appearance (theophany) is manifested by terrifying natural phenomena: earthquake, volcanic eruption, and thunderstorm (cf. Exod. 19.16–18; Judg. 5.4–5). God is pictured in anthropomorphic terms.

9 Smoke went up from His nostrils,
 From His mouth came devouring fire;
 Live coals blazed forth from Him.
 10 He bent the sky and came down,
 Thick cloud beneath His feet.
 11 He mounted a cherub and flew;
^aHe was seen^a on the wings of the wind.
 12 He made pavilions of darkness about Him,
 Dripping clouds, huge thunderheads;
 13 In the brilliance before Him
 Blazed fiery coals.
 14 The LORD thundered forth from heaven,
 The Most High sent forth His voice;
 15 He let loose bolts, and scattered them;^b
 Lightning, and put them to rout.
 16 The bed of the sea was exposed,
 The foundations of the world were laid bare
 By the mighty roaring of the LORD,
 At the blast of the breath of His nostrils.
 17 He reached down from on high, He took me,
 Drew me out of the mighty waters;^c
 18 He rescued me from my enemy so strong,
 From foes too mighty for me.
 19 They attacked me on my day of calamity,
 But the LORD was my stay.
 20 He brought me out to freedom,
 He rescued me because He was pleased with me.
 21 The LORD rewarded me according to my merit,
 He requited the cleanness of my hands.
 22 For I have kept the ways of the LORD
 And have not been guilty before my God;
 23 I am mindful of all His rules
 And have not departed from His laws.
 24 I have been blameless before Him,
 And have guarded myself against sinning—
 25 And the LORD has requited my merit,
 According to my purity in His sight.
 26 With the loyal You deal loyally;
 With the blameless hero,^d blamelessly.
 27 With the pure You act in purity,
 And with the perverse You are wily.
 28 To humble folk You give victory,
^eAnd You look with scorn on the haughty.^e

11: Cherub, see 1 Sam. 4.4 n.

21, 25: These vv., framing the passage concerning the author's righteousness, convey the idea that the deliverance is a reward for merit.

a-a Ps. 18.11 "Gliding." b I.e., the enemies in v. 4.

c Cf. v. 5. d Ps. 18.26 "man."

e-e Lit. "And lower Your eyes on the haughty"; Ps. 18.28 "But haughty eyes You humble."

29 You, O LORD, are my lamp;
 The LORD lights up my darkness.
 30 With You, I can rush a barrier,^a
 With my God, I can scale a wall.
 31 The way of God is perfect,
 The word of the LORD is pure.
 He is a shield to all who take refuge in Him.
 32 Yea, who is a god except the LORD,
 Who is a rock except God—
 33 The God, ^bmy mighty stronghold,^b
 Who kept^c my path secure;
 34 Who made my legs like a deer's,
 And set me firm on the^d heights;
 35 Who trained my hands for battle,
 So that my arms can bend a bow of bronze!
 36 You have granted me the shield of Your protection
^eAnd Your providence has made me great.^e
 37 You have let me stride on freely,
 And my feet have not slipped.
 38 I pursued my enemies and wiped them out,
 I did not turn back till I destroyed them.
 39 I destroyed them, I struck them down;
 They rose no more, they lay at my feet.
 40 You have girt me with strength for battle,
 Brought low my foes before me,
 41 Made my enemies turn tail before me,
 My foes—and I wiped them out.
 42 They looked,^f but there was none to deliver;
 To the LORD, but He answered them not.
 43 I pounded them like dust of the earth,
 Stamped, crushed them like dirt of the streets.
 44 You have rescued me from the strife of peoples,^g
^hKept me to be^h a ruler of nations;
 Peoples I knew not must serve me.
 45 Aliens have cringed before me,
 Paid me homage at the mere report of me.
 46 Aliens have lost courage
^eAnd come trembling out of their fastnesses.^e
 47 The LORD lives! Blessed is my rock!
 Exalted be God, the rock

29: "The hardship is the darkness and the deliverance is the light" (Radak). 32: A declaration of monotheism (cf. Isa. 44.8). 34: The singular of the word translated the heights also means "my back" and thence in the plural perhaps "my thighs" (parallel to my legs). 46: Lost courage, lit. "wilted." 47: Rock, see vv. 2–3 n.

a Cf. postbiblical gedudiyyo "walls," Aramaic gudda, "wall."

b-b Ps. 18.33 "who girded me with might."

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; Ps. 18.33 "made."

d Taking bamothai as a poetic form of bamoth; cf. Hab. 3.19; others "my."

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. f Ps. 18.42 "cried."

g So some mss. and the Septuagint; most mss. and the printed editions "my people."

h-h Ps. 18.44 "made me."

48 Who gives me victory;
 The God who has vindicated me
 49 And made peoples subject to me,
 Rescued me from my enemies,
 Raised me clear of my foes,
 Saved me from lawless men!
 50 For this I sing Your praise among the nations
 And hymn Your name:
 51 ^a“Tower of victory”^a to His king,
 Who deals graciously with His anointed,
 With David and his offspring evermore.

23 These are the last words of David:

^bThe utterance of David son of Jesse,
 The utterance of the man ^cset on high,^c
 The anointed of the God of Jacob,
^dThe favorite of the songs of Israel:^d
 2 The spirit of the LORD has spoken through me,
 His message is on my tongue;
 3 The God of Israel has spoken,
 The Rock of Israel said concerning me:
 “He who rules men justly,
 He who rules in^e awe of God
 4 Is like the light of morning at sunrise,
 A morning without clouds—
 ‘Through sunshine and rain
 [Bringing]’^f vegetation out of the earth.”
 5 Is not my House established before God?
 For He has granted me an eternal pact,
 Drawn up in full and secured.
 Will He not cause all my success
 And [my] every desire to blossom?
 6 But the wicked shall all
 Be raked aside like thorns;
 For no one will take them in his hand.
 7 Whoever touches them
 Must arm himself with iron
 And the shaft of a spear;
 And they must be burned up on the spot.

51: Tower of victory, cf. Ps. 61.4. But the reading “he accords great victories” (Ps. 18.51) is preferable (in the Heb the difference between the two readings is very slight). His anointed, see 1 Sam. 2.10 n. This v. is part of the prayer Grace after Meals.

23.1-7: Last words. Poems containing last words are also attributed to Jacob (Gen. ch 49) and Moses (Deut. ch 33). The present poem, ascribed to David, contrasts the just ruler, who is likened to light and beneficial rain, to the wicked, who are compared to harmful thorns. 1: Utterance, cf. Num. 24.3-4, 15 (in the Heb the same word is used). The rendering the favorite of the Mighty One of Israel (translators’ note d-d) is preferable because it constitutes a parallel to the anointed of the God of Jacob (note the parallelisms in vv. 1-3). Anointed, see 22.51. 3: Rock, see 22.47. 5: The eternal pact refers to God’s promise of an everlasting dynasty for David (7.16). 6: The wicked, David’s opponents.

a-a Kethib and Ps. 18.51 read “He accords wondrous victories.”

b Meaning of much of this poem (vv. 1-7) uncertain.

c-c 4QSam^a reads “God raised up.”

d-d Or “The favorite of the Mighty One of Israel”; cf. Exod. 15.2. Others “The sweet singer of Israel.”

e So many Heb. mss. Most mss. and the printed editions lack “in.”

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

⁸These are the names^a of David's warriors: Josheb-basshebeth, a Tahchemonite, the chief officer—he is Adino the Eznite; ^b[he wielded his spear]^b against eight hundred ^cand slew them^c on one occasion.

⁹Next to him was Eleazar son of Dodo son of Ahohi. He was one of the three warriors with David when they defied the Philistines gathered there for battle. The Israelite soldiers retreated, ¹⁰but he held his ground. He struck down Philistines until his arm grew tired and his hand stuck to his sword; and the LORD wrought a great victory that day. Then the troops came back to him—but only to strip [the slain].

¹¹Next to him was Shammah son of Age the Ararite. The Philistines had gathered ^din force^d where there was a plot of ground full of lentils; and the troops fled from the Philistines. ¹²But [Shammah] took his stand in the middle of the plot and defended it, and he routed the Philistines. Thus the LORD wrought a great victory.

¹³^dOnce, during the harvest,^d three of the thirty chiefs went down to David at the cave^e of Adullam, while a force of Philistines was encamped in the Valley of Rephaim. ¹⁴David was then in the stronghold,^e and a Philistine garrison was then at Bethlehem. ¹⁵David felt a craving and said, "If only I could get a drink of water from the cistern which is by the gate of Bethlehem!" ¹⁶So the three warriors got through the Philistine camp and drew water from the cistern which is by the gate of Bethlehem, and they carried it back. But when they brought it to David he would not drink it, and he poured it out as a libation to the LORD. ¹⁷For he said, "The LORD forbid that I should do this! Can [I drink]^f the blood of the men who went at the risk of their lives?" So he would not drink it. Such were the exploits of the three warriors.

¹⁸Abishai, the brother of Joab son of Zeruiah, was head of ⁹another three.⁹ He once wielded his spear against three hundred ^cand slew them.^c ¹⁹He won a name among the three;^b since he was the most highly regarded among the three,^b he became their leader. However, he did not attain to the three.

²⁰Benaiah son of Jehoiada, from Kabzeel, was ⁱa brave soldierⁱ who performed great deeds. He killed the two ^d[sons] of Ariel of Moab.^d Once, on a snowy day, he went 23.8–39: The heroes. The first part contains short stories, which are similar to the short accounts of 21.15–22. They also relate heroic feats of individual warriors and refer to David's early period. The second part merely contains the names of David's body of heroes, without their actions. The order is hierarchical: First the exploits of the highest in rank, "the three," are recorded, beginning with the chief officer; then those of two heroes who were prominent among "the thirty"—the main body—but did not attain to "the three"; finally the names of "the thirty" are listed. 8: Josheb-basshebeth, an odd name. Septuagint reads "Ish-bosheth" (or "Ish-baal"). Instead of he is Adino the Eznite, 1 Chron. 11.11 reads "he wielded his spear" (see v. 18). Emendation yields "he wielded his ax" (the Semitic word for "ax" is similar in Heb to "the Eznite"). 9: Instead of when they defied, 1 Chron. 11.13 reads "at Pas Dammim when" (note the following there and see 1 Sam. 17.1). 11: Instead of in force, mss of Septuagint read "to Lehi," which is almost identical in Heb (note the following there and see Judg. 15.9). 13: During the harvest, i.e., in the hot, dry season. Three, probably the three heroes mentioned before. 15: Bethlehem, David's hometown. 17: Drinking the water would be like drinking the blood of the men, who risked their lives. 18: The reading of Syriac is to be preferred (another does not occur in the Heb). 19: The more plausible "thirty" instead of three (twice) is confirmed by v. 23. 20: Benaiah, see 8.18.

a A number of these names, with variations, are found in 1 Chron. 11 and 27.

b-b Preserved in 1 Chron. 11.11; similarly some Septuagint mss. of 2 Sam.

c-c Lit. "slain." d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e See note at 1 Sam. 22.1. f So Septuagint and 1 Chron. 11.19.

g-g Two Heb. mss. and Syriac read "the thirty"; cf. vv. 23–24.

h Emendation yields "thirty." i-i Heb. "the son of a brave soldier."

down into a pit and killed a lion. ²¹He also killed an Egyptian, a huge^a man. The Egyptian had a spear in his hand, yet [Benaiah] went down against him with a club, wrenched the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and killed him with his own spear. ²²Such were the exploits of Benaiah son of Jehoiada; and he won a name among the three^b warriors. ²³He was highly regarded among the thirty, but he did not attain to the three. David put him in charge of his bodyguard.^c

²⁴Among the thirty were Asahel, the brother of Joab; Elhanan son of Dodo [from] Bethlehem, ²⁵Shammah the Harodite, Elika the Harodite, ²⁶Helez the Paltite, Ira son of Ikkesh from Tekoa, ²⁷Abiezer of Anathoth, Mebunnai the Hushathite, ²⁸Zalmon the Ahohite, Maharai the Netophathite, ²⁹Heleb son of Baanah the Netophathite, Ittai son of Ribai from Gibeah of the Benjaminites, ³⁰Benaiah of Pirathon, Hiddai of Nahale-gaash, ³¹Abi-albon the Arbathite, Azmaveth the Barhumite, ³²Eliahba of Shaalbon, sons of ^dJashen, Jonathan,^d ³³Shammah the Ararite, Ahiam son of Sharar the Ararite, ³⁴Eliphelet son of Ahasbai son of the Maacathite, Eliam son of Ahithophel the Gilonite, ³⁵Hezrai the Carmelite, Paarai the Arbite, ³⁶Igal son of Nathan from Zobah, Bani the Gadite, ³⁷Zekek the Ammonite, Naharai the Beerothite—the arms-bearer of Joab son of Zeruiah—³⁸Ira the Ithrite, Gareb the Ithrite, ³⁹Uriah the Hittite: thirty-seven in all.^e

24 ^fThe anger of the LORD again^g flared up against Israel; and He incited David against them, saying, "Go and number Israel and Judah." ²The king said to Joab, ^hhis army commander,^h "Make the rounds of all the tribes of Israel, from Dan to Beer-sheba, and take a census of the people, so that I may know the size of the population." ³Joab answered the king, "May the LORD your God increase the number of the people a hundredfold, while your own eyes see it! But why should my lord king want this?" ⁴However, the king's command to Joab and to the officers of the army remained firm; and Joab and the officers of the army set out, at the instance of the king, to take a census of the people of Israel.

24–39: Most of the heroes are from Judah, and particularly from the region around Bethlehem. Some are from Benjamin and Ephraim, and the last-named are of foreign origin. 34: Ahithophel, see 15.12.

39: Uriah, see ch 11. Thirty-seven: Since only 36 names are mentioned, the name of Joab, who is conspicuous by his absence from the list, should probably be added (both his brothers are included).

24.1–25: Census, plague, and altar. These three topics, which are successively dealt with in the three parts of the narrative, are causally connected. David conducts a census, which is considered a sin. God then punishes Israel with a plague. To put an end to the plague, David erects an altar on the site where later the Temple will be built (2 Chron. 3.1). Though the plague as well as its cessation result from actions by David, they are independently decided upon by God, hinting at both human responsibility and divine sovereignty. 1: It is unknown what caused God's anger. In order to punish Israel He incites David to number the people, which raises the theological problem of God inciting to sin. The author of 1 Chron. 21.1 solves the problem by replacing God with Satan (a relatively late concept). Radak explains that inciting does not mean commanding, but only putting the idea in David's mind; therefore it remained David's decision whether actually to carry the census out. According to ancient belief counting people exposes them to misfortune. Exod. 30.11–16 requires each counted person to pay expiation money, so "that no plague may come upon them" (Rashi: "for the evil eye rules over counting"). 2: The census is conducted for military purposes (see v. 9). From Dan to Beer-sheba, see 1 Sam. 3.20 n. 3: Joab's objection serves as counterweight to God's incitement (cf. 1 Chron. 21.3).

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. 1 Chron. 11.23 reads "a giant of a man."

^b Emendation yields "thirty." ^c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^{d-d} Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^e Septuagint and 1 Chron. 11 differ from the foregoing lists in vv. 8–38, and from each other in the number and forms of the names.

^f This chapter is also found, with some variations, in 1 Chron. 21.1–7.

^g Cf. above 21.1–14.

^{h-h} 1 Chron. 21.2 reads "and to the officers of the army"; cf. below v. 4.

⁵They crossed the Jordan and ^aencamped at Aroer, on the right side of the town, which is in the middle of the wadi of Gad, and ^a[went on] to Jazer. ⁶They continued to Gilead and to the region of ^bTahtim-hodshi, and they came to Dan-jaan and around to ^bSidon. ⁷They went onto the fortress of Tyre and all the towns of the Hivites and Canaanites, and finished at Beer-sheba in southern Judah. ⁸They traversed the whole country, and then they came back to Jerusalem at the end of nine months and twenty days. ⁹Joab reported to the king the number of the people that had been recorded: in Israel there were 800,000 soldiers ready to draw the sword, and the men of Judah numbered 500,000.

¹⁰But afterward David ^creproached himself^c for having numbered the people. And David said to the LORD, "I have sinned grievously in what I have done. Please, O LORD, remit the guilt of Your servant, for I have acted foolishly." ¹¹When David rose in the morning, the word of the LORD had come to the prophet Gad, David's seer: ¹²"Go and tell David, 'Thus said the LORD: I hold three things over you; choose one of them, and I will bring it upon you.'" ¹³Gad came to David and told him; he asked, "Shall a seven-year famine come upon you in the land, or shall you be in flight from your adversaries for three months while they pursue you, or shall there be three days of pestilence in your land? Now consider carefully what reply I shall take back to Him who sent me." ¹⁴David said to Gad, "I am in great distress. Let us fall into the hands of the LORD, for His compassion is great; and let me not fall into the hands of men."^d

¹⁵The LORD sent a pestilence upon Israel from morning ^buntil the set time;^b and 70,000 of the people died, from Dan to Beer-sheba. ¹⁶But when the angel extended his hand against Jerusalem to destroy it, the LORD renounced further punishment and said to the angel who was destroying the people, "Enough! Stay your hand!" The angel of the LORD was then by the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite. ¹⁷When David saw the angel who was striking down the people, he said to the LORD, "I alone am guilty, I alone have done wrong; but these poor sheep, what have they done? Let Your hand fall upon me and my father's house!"

¹⁸Gad came to David the same day and said to him, a-a Some Septuagint mss. read "began at Aroer, and from the town, which is . . . Gad, they."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c See note at 1 Sam. 24.6.

d Septuagint adds "So David chose the pestilence. It was the time of the wheat harvest."

5–7: The census-takers follow the borderline, beginning in the south-east, going up to the north, from there to the west, and finishing in the south. 11: Gad, first mentioned at 1 Sam. 22.5. 12: Thus said the LORD, see 7.5 n. 13: Instead of seven-year, Septuagint and 1 Chron. 21.12 read "three-year" (note the recurrence of the number three). 14: The expression the hands (lit. "hand") of the LORD points to pestilence (cf. Exod. 9.3). 16: The angel is the Destroyer (see Exod. 12.23), who acts on the LORD's orders. The threshing floor, a flat area where the grain was removed from the ears and separated from the chaff. It was usually situated outside the city, near the gate. Araunah, one of the Jebusites, the Canaanite people who inhabited Jerusalem before David's conquest. 17: David saw the destroying angel (the people being struck down) before the LORD ordered him to stop (v. 16). Instead of I alone have done wrong the Dead Sea manuscript 4QSam^a, some mss of Septuagint, and Josephus read: "I the shepherd have caused harm" (cf. 1 Chron. 21.17), in contradistinction to these poor sheep. David's pronouncement thus expresses objection to collective punishment, which is felt to be unjust; though it is clear that wrong, as well as wise, decisions of rulers necessarily have repercussions on their peoples. 19: David went up: This indicates that Araunah's threshing floor was higher than David's residence, namely, on the mountain to the north of biblical Jerusalem (cf. 2 Chron. 3.1). 20: The narrative's point of view switches to Araunah, who receives the king with great respect. 22: Araunah offers the king everything as a present, a customary part of negotiating in the East (cf. Gen. 23.11). Threshing boards, presumably wooden boards, having sharp iron teeth underneath, which were drawn by animals over the ears of grain. 24: The fact that David paid for the threshing floor and the oxen is strongly emphasized, to indicate that the Temple site was acquired by proper transaction and

"Go and set up an altar to the LORD on the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite." ¹⁹David went up, following Gad's instructions, as the LORD had commanded. ²⁰Araunah looked out and saw the king and his courtiers approaching him.^a So Araunah went out and bowed low to the king, with his face to the ground. ²¹And Araunah asked, "Why has my lord the king come to his servant?" David replied, "To buy the threshing floor from you, that I may build an altar to the LORD and that the plague against the people may be checked." ²²And Araunah said to David, "Let my lord the king take it and offer up whatever he sees fit. Here are oxen for a burnt offering, and the threshing boards and the gear of the oxen for wood. ²³All this, ^bO king, ^bAraunah gives to Your Majesty. And may the LORD your God," Araunah added, "respond to you with favor!"

²⁴But the king replied to Araunah, "No, I will buy them from you at a price. I cannot sacrifice to the LORD my God burnt offerings that have cost me nothing." So David bought the threshing floor and the oxen for fifty shekels of silver. ²⁵And David built there an altar to the LORD and sacrificed burnt offerings and offerings of well-being. The LORD responded to the plea for the land, and the plague against Israel was checked.

duly paid for (cf. Gen. 23). Fifty shekels, approximately 0.55 kg (slightly more than 1 pound). ^{1 Chron. 21.25} considerably magnifies that amount. 25: The LORD responded to the plea for the land: According to v. 16 the LORD, acting independently, had already decided to renounce further punishment before David built the altar. Cf. the similar ending of the narrative about the famine (21.14). The book of Samuel concludes with a pious deed of David: the acquisition and sanctification of the site of the Temple.

^a ^{4QSam^a} and ^{1 Chron. 21.20} add "Araunah (Ornan) was threshing wheat."

^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

I Kings

KINGS, THE LAST BOOK of the “Former Prophets,” relates the history of Israel from the declining days of David (10th century) through the beginning of the Babylonian exile. Its last verses describe the release of Jehoiachin, exiled king of Judah, from prison in Babylonia during the reign of Evil-merodach son of Nebuchadnezzar, an event datable through Babylonian sources to 562–561 BCE.

The division of Kings into two books is first attested in the Septuagint, the Greek version of the Bible, where it is combined with Samuel into a single four-part composition, Basileiai (“kingdoms” or “dynasties” or “reigns”). The division of Kings into two books was later followed in the Latin Vulgate version, and was adopted from there to vernacular Bible translations. Classical Jewish sources through the end of the Middle Ages do not make such a division, and it is first attested in Hebrew printed texts from the early 16th century, where it is noted as a division used by foreign translators. In the course of time, however, the division has been universally adopted by Jews as a matter of convention and convenience.

The narrative of Kings falls naturally into three sections followed by two brief appendices. The first section (1 Kings chs 1–11) narrates the circumstances of Solomon’s ascent to the throne and describes the source of his wisdom, his reign over all Israel in a united kingdom, and the building and furnishing of the Temple and other structures; it also evaluates his religious behavior. The second section (1 Kings ch 12–2 Kings ch 17) begins by recounting the circumstances under which the northern tribes rejected the authority of Solomon’s son, Rehoboam, withdrew from his kingdom (henceforth called Judah), and formed another, called Israel, with a king of their choosing. From that point the narrative provides a synchronistic, overlapping history of the kings of Judah and Israel for almost two centuries until the Northern Kingdom was destroyed by Assyria in 722. The third section (2 Kings 18.1–25.21) describes the reigns of Davidic dynasts in Judah, the Southern Kingdom, until Babylonia conquered Judah, ruined Jerusalem, destroyed the Temple, and executed some and exiled others from among its leading citizens in 586. The first brief appendix (2 Kings 25.22–26) tells of the appointment and assassination of Gedaliah, a native Israelite appointed administrator of Judah by the Babylonians; the second

(2 Kings 25.27–30) appends a notice that Jehoiachin, the exiled king of Judah, was released from a Babylonian prison in the thirty-seventh year of exile.

Kings is not a history in the contemporary sense of the word, that is, a factual description of past events and an explanation for their occurrence that a modern reader might expect. It is, in the main, an extended theological essay written by a person or persons with passionately held beliefs, convinced that the destruction of the Northern Kingdom and the fall of the southern one were due to the misguided policies of their kings. The author described past events selectively, commenting or summarizing them as illustrations of the lessons that he believed they taught.

The author maintained that the LORD, the God of history, made His will known to Israel with regard to specific key issues, that punishments are preceded by warnings through prophets, and that people are responsible for the consequences of their choices. He further maintained that kings were responsible for the fate of their people. For him, it was axiomatic that those ruling over the tribes of Israel were obligated to maintain the centrality of the Jerusalem Temple as the unique place where offerings acceptable to God might be made and to eliminate the illegitimate worship of any deity other than the LORD. The author's composition demonstrated how all northern and most southern kings failed to meet their obligations and how all adversity, from minor disasters to the final catastrophe, followed as a consequence of this failure. Somewhat contradictorily, he also took pains to note that despite this, the divine promise of an eternal dynasty to David (2 Sam. 7.11) was maintained out of God's love for David ("for the sake of David," 1 Kings 11.12; 2 Kings 8.19; 19.34).

The author expressed his axiomatic notions, described Josiah (2 Kings chs 22–23)—whom he regarded as best exemplifying what a king should be—and expressed his theme of the uniqueness of the Jerusalem Temple, in language closely tied to that of Deut. ch 12. Deuteronomy is the only book in the Torah to project an image of the ideal king (Deut. 17.14–20), who bears a striking resemblance to Josiah as depicted in Kings. The author's ideas about how God works in history parallel those of Deut. ch 28. For these reasons, contemporary scholarship refers to the author of Kings as a Deuteronomistic historian, i.e., as one who wrote under the influence and reflecting the concerns and ideology of Deuteronomy. In addition to sharing phrases found in Deuteronomy, the author also developed some unique expressions of his own that are repeatedly used throughout Kings: worshiping foreign gods and serving them (1 Kings 9.6; 16.31; 2 Kings 17.35; 21.3, 21); on every high hill and under every leafy tree (1 Kings 14.23; 2 Kings 16.4; 17.10); idolatry as abhorrent (1 Kings 14.24; 2 Kings 16.3; 21.2, 11); detestable things (1 Kings 11.5, 7; 2 Kings 23.24); the city that the LORD has chosen (1 Kings 8.16, 44, 48; 11.13, 32, 36; 14.21; 2 Kings 21.7; 23.27); to build a House for the name of the LORD (1 Kings 3.2; 5.17, 19; 8.17, 18, 19, 20, 44); to sacrifice and offer at the open shrines (1 Kings 3.2, 3; 22.44; 2 Kings 12.4; 14.4; 15.4, 35; 16.4); to revere the LORD, i.e., serve God from a sense of awe (1 Kings 8.40, 43; 2 Kings 17.32, 33, 34, 39, 41).

The author cites by name three sources to which the original readers might refer for additional information about the kings discussed: Annals of Solomon (1 Kings 11.41); Annals of the Kings of Israel (1 Kings 14.19); Annals of the Kings of Judah (1 Kings 14.20). The formula used by the author to introduce individual kings in the second section of Kings most likely draws regularly on information from the second and third of these sources: "In the _____ year of king _____ son of _____ of Israel/Judah, _____ son of _____ became king of Judah/Israel. He was _____ years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for _____ years. He did what was pleasing/displeasing to the LORD." The source also includes the names of the mothers of the kings of Judah (the queen mother).

Although no scholarly consensus exists concerning the nature of these documents, the author, by mentioning them, challenged readers to deny the veracity of the facts that he was evaluating and interpreting. In addition to these, he had access to documents bearing on the Davidic court (1 Kings chs 1–2) and the history of the Temple (1 Kings chs 6–7; 2 Kings ch 23), as well as to some form of edited materials by and about the prophet Isaiah (2 Kings 19.20–20.11), and to collections of prophetic stories that he interspersed in his narratives about the Northern Kingdom: Ahijah (1 Kings 11.29–14.18), Elijah (1 Kings 17.1–2 Kings 2.18), Micaiah (1 Kings 22.1–40), and Elisha (2 Kings 2.1–13.21). Although no copies of these sources survive, documents that match each type or genre of document are known from other ancient Near Eastern sources.

The author's sustained lesson about God's justice in history continues through the untimely death of Josiah in 2 Kings 23.25. This death stilled his voice. According to the author's philosophy, Josiah should not have died as he did. The deeds of that good king should have set things right, but did not.

A second person, writing during the Babylonian exile, completed the book through 2 Kings 25.26. This writer attributed Josiah's death and every bad thing that happened subsequently to the sins of King Manasseh, a 7th-century Judean monarch. Passages expressing this notion, combined with a prophetic idea that Israelites as a people bore responsibility for the fate of their kingdoms, were inserted into earlier parts of the book, contradicting the first author's original axiom of royal responsibility (2 Kings 21.10–15; 22.16–17). The second writer continued the narrative, appending terse notices about the last kings but describing only political events, not religious ones. The Annals of Judah are not cited after 2 Kings 24.5 and were most likely not needed; he was noting current events. This writer made no comments and found no lesson to teach in the destruction of Jerusalem.

The combined efforts of the original author and the second writer produced a document relevant to the post-destruction communities in both Judah and Babylonia. Their situation was explained as the outcome not only of the religious policies of their kings, who had violated ancient revealed teachings, but also of the behavior of their own ancestors. The implication of this didactic text was that the very facts of destruction and exile demonstrated the power of God, the validity of His covenant with Israel, and His meticulousness in maintaining it. Therefore, when the punishment of ruin and exile had run its course, His promises of restoration made in Deut. 30.1–5 and by different prophets could reasonably be expected to come to fruition.

At least 25 years after the destruction of Jerusalem, a third person appended a few sentences to the composition, now the last three verses of the book. This person may have hoped that the event recorded, King Jehoiachin's release from prison, was the harbinger of coming changes in the fortunes of his people.

Jewish tradition has maintained, on the basis of statements in the Babylonian Talmud (b. B. Bat. 14b–15a), that the prophet Jeremiah, who prophesied from the time of Josiah until the exile, but lived beyond that (Jer. 1.2–3; chs 40–41), wrote Kings. This tradition may be based on the similarities between the final chapter of Kings and Jer. chs 25 and 52. As noted above, however, Kings has a much more complex history, and may not be attributed to a single individual; like most ancient Near Eastern compositions, its author is anonymous. [ZIONY ZEVI]

1 King David was now old, advanced in years; and though they covered him with bedclothes, he never felt warm. 2His courtiers said to him, "Let a young virgin be sought for my lord the king, to wait upon Your Majesty and be his attendant;^a and let her lie in your bosom, and my lord the king will be warm." 3So they looked for a beautiful girl throughout the territory of Israel. They found Abishag the Shunammite and brought her to the king. 4The girl was exceedingly beautiful. She became the king's attendant^a and waited upon him; but the king was not intimate with her.

5Now Adonijah son of Haggith ^bwent about boasting, ^b"I will be king!" He provided himself with chariots and horses,^c and an escort of fifty outrunners. 6His father had never scolded him: "Why did you do that?" He was the weakened further by sexual intercourse so they sought a suitable person with whom he would not have intercourse. 3: The Shunammite, from the town of Shunem, in northern Israel. Abishag should not be confused with the woman whose dead son was revived by Elisha in 2 Kings 4.8–37. 4: Attendant, the Heb denotes "caretaker" and nothing more. As a special servant, her presence was ignored by others, e.g., 1.15. Although she was present when David was in undignified circumstances, the author makes a point of indicating that they were not intimate. It is unclear, however, if this was common knowledge.

1.5–53: Adonijah's attempted usurpation of the throne and its aftermath. 5–6: Adonijah outfits himself with royal trappings and embarks on a program modeled after the failed one of his older brother Absalom (see 2 Sam. 15.1), to whom the author compares him, thereby suggesting that he would fail. After the violent deaths of his older brothers Amnon and Absalom, and perhaps the natural death of Chileab, Adonijah was apparently the oldest of David's living sons and the main heir of his personal property (see 2 Sam. 3.2–5). 5: I will be king: There was no tradition of royal primogeni-

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Or "presumed to think."

c Others "horsemen"; meaning of Heb. parash(im) not always certain.

1.1–2.46: How Solomon became king of Israel after David. The first two chapters of Kings detail the turbulent events, most of which transpired in a single day, that resulted in Solomon, one of David's younger sons, ascending the throne of his father. The narrative line continues from 2 Sam. 20.26 and according to many scholars, is the conclusion of the succession narrative.

1.1–4: David weakens with age. David is portrayed as frail and dependent. Others advise him about caring for his essential needs. From 1.1 through 2.10, where his death is mentioned, the narrative implies that David was bedridden; see 1.47. 2: The warmth of a human body could have been provided by any of David's wives or concubines. Malbim suggests that his advisers didn't want him to be one born after Absalom^a and, like him, was very handsome.

⁷He conferred with Joab son of Zeruiah and with the priest Abiathar, and they supported Adonijah; ⁸but the priest Zadok, Benaiah son of Jehoiada, the prophet Nathan, Shimei and Rei, and David's own fighting men did not side with Adonijah. ⁹Adonijah made a sacrificial feast of sheep, oxen, and fatlings at the Zohelth stone which is near En-rogel; he invited all his brother princes^b and all the king's courtiers of the tribe of Judah; ¹⁰but he did not invite the prophet Nathan, or Benaiah, or the fighting men, or his brother Solomon.

¹¹Then Nathan said to Bathsheba, Solomon's mother, "You must have heard that Adonijah son of Haggith has assumed the kingship without the knowledge of our lord David. ¹²Now take my advice, so that you may save your life and the life of your son Solomon. ¹³Go immediately to King David and say to him, 'Did not you, O lord king, swear to your maidservant: "Your son Solomon shall succeed me as king, and he shall sit upon my throne"? Then why has Adonijah become king?' ¹⁴While you are still there talking with the king, I will come in after you and confirm your words."

¹⁵So Bathsheba went to the king in his chamber.—The king was very old, and Abishag the Shunammite was waiting on the king.—¹⁶Bathsheba bowed low in homage to the king; and the king asked, "What troubles you?" ¹⁷She answered him, "My lord, you yourself swore to your maidservant by the LORD your God: 'Your son Solomon shall succeed me as king, and he shall sit upon my throne.' ¹⁸Yet now Adonijah has become king, and you,^c my lord the king, know nothing about it. ¹⁹He has prepared a sacrificial feast of a great many oxen, fatlings, and sheep, and he has invited all the king's sons and Abiathar the priest and Joab commander of the army; but he has not invited your servant Solomon. ²⁰And so the eyes of all Israel are upon you, O lord king, to tell them who shall succeed my lord the king on the throne. ²¹Otherwise, when my lord the king lies down with his fathers, my son Solomon and I will be regarded as traitors."

²²She was still talking to the king when the prophet Nathan arrived. ²³They announced to the king, "The prophet Nathan is here," and he entered the king's presence. Bowing low to the king with his face to the ground, ²⁴Nathan

ture, nor were there laws governing the transmission of royal authority. Adonijah may have acted not only because he thought that the young Abishag could become pregnant and produce an heir that might be named successor, but also because the incapacitated David was not a reigning presence outside of the palace. 7: Joab and Abiathar, supporters of David from his earliest days as an outlaw, may have become disaffected because of the erosion of their influence and prestige as some of their authority was assigned to others. See the list of officials in 2 Sam. 20.23–25. 8: These were the loyalists of David's party. They would do what David directed. 9: En-Rogel, a spring southeast of Jerusalem in the Kidron Valley, out of sight of the city itself (2 Sam. 17.17). The plan calls for Adonijah to be confirmed king by an oligarchy of a priest, a general, princes, and tribal leaders (vv. 19, 25). 11–27: Nathan's response to the plan. Nathan's motivation is not clarified by the author, but since he spurs Bathsheba to action by pointing out that her life and that of Solomon are in danger, he may have perceived that his life was in danger also. 12: Save your life: Abravanel proposes that the danger lay in that Adonijah knew about David's promise to Bathsheba (v. 13) and that should he succeed, he would eliminate potential threats to his rule.

13: The key to Nathan's plan is the oath David swore to her concerning Solomon. There is no earlier mention of this oath. On the basis of 2 Sam. 12.24–25, Radak infers that David swore this oath to Bathsheba after the death of their first child as a way of consoling her. Nathan would subsequently have learned of it from Bathsheba. Some interpreters suggest that Nathan and Bathsheba are taking advantage of David's feebleness to "plant" a memory so that he will act in the manner that they wish. 17–18: Abravanel highlights the rhetorical flourishes of Bathsheba's calculated presentation: (1) She initiates conversation with an hon-

^a Thus, Absalom having died, Adonijah was David's oldest living son.

^b Lit. "all his brothers sons of the king."

^c So many mss. and ancient versions; usual editions "now."

said, "O lord king, ^ayou must have said, ^a'Adonijah shall succeed me as king and he shall sit upon my throne.' ²⁵For he has gone down today and prepared a sacrificial feast of a great many oxen, fatlings, and sheep. He invited all the king's sons and the army officers and Abiathar the priest. At this very moment they are eating and drinking with him, and they are shouting, 'Long live King Adonijah!' ²⁶But he did not invite me your servant, or the priest Zadok, or Benaiah son of Jehoiada, or your servant Solomon. ²⁷Can this decision have come from my lord the king, without your telling your servant who is to succeed to the throne of my lord the king?"

²⁸King David's response was: "Summon Bathsheba!" She entered the king's presence and stood before the king. ²⁹And the king took an oath, saying, "As the LORD lives, who has rescued me from every trouble: ³⁰The oath I swore to you by the LORD, the God of Israel, that your son Solomon should succeed me as king and that he should sit upon my throne in my stead, I will fulfill this very day!" ³¹Bathsheba bowed low in homage to the king with her face to the ground, and she said, "May my lord King David live forever!"

³²Then King David said, "Summon to me the priest Zadok, the prophet Nathan, and Benaiah son of Jehoiada." When they came before the king, ³³the king said to them, "Take ^bmy loyal soldiers,^b and have my son Solomon ride on my mule and bring him down to Gihon. ³⁴Let the priest Zadok and the prophet Nathan anoint him there king over Israel, whereupon you shall sound the horn and shout, 'Long live King Solomon!' ³⁵Then march up after him, and let him come in and sit on my throne. For he shall succeed me as king; him I designate to be ruler of Israel and Judah." ³⁶Benaiah son of Jehoiada spoke up and said to the king, "Amen! And may the LORD, the God of my lord the king, so ordain. ³⁷As the LORD was with my lord the king, so may He be with Solomon; and may He exalt his throne even higher than the throne of my lord King David."

³⁸Then the priest Zadok, and the prophet Nathan, and Benaiah son of Jehoiada went down with the Cherethites and the Pelethites. They had Solomon ride on King David's mule and they led him to Gihon. ³⁹The priest Zadok took the horn of oil from the Tent and anointed Solomon. They sounded the horn and all the people shouted, "Long live King Solomon!" ⁴⁰All the people then orific, my lord. (2) Going beyond Nathan's words (v. 13), she states that David swore . . . by the LORD your God, so that his words must be considered not an idle promise to her but an oath to God. (3) She quotes and does not paraphrase David's promise, making it immediate in a historical present. (4) She emphasizes David's promise that Solomon would reign in the future so that it contrasts with her description of Adonijah reigning in the present. 28: Summon Bathsheba: Since Bathsheba was already there (v. 22), this is an indication that different accounts, one with Nathan taking the lead, the other with Bathsheba, have been combined. 30: In my stead: David repeats the contents of the oath quoted by Bathsheba (v. 17) but purposely misquoted by Nathan (v. 24) to spur David's response. David, however, adds a concluding phrase which, apparently, he remembered but that they had forgotten. Although feeble, he is neither forgetful nor witless. Informed, he proves capable of decisive action. 32-39: At David's command and under the protection of David's personal guard, the Cherethites and the Pelethites (see v. 38 n.), Solomon is confirmed king by an oligarchy of a priest, a general, and a prophet. The anointing ceremony (cf. 1 Sam. 10.1) takes place by the Gihon spring in the Kidron Valley just below the city wall; all the people by their acclamation confirm the choice. 33: My mule: Ancient convention disallowed casual use of royal property. David's provision of his own animal confirms that Solomon's accession to the throne is indeed supported by David and is not a partisan act (see v. 44 and Esth. 6.6-11). 38: Cherethites and the Pelethites, Aegean mercenaries in David's personal service with no ties of loyalty to anybody other than him (see 2 Sam. 8.18; 20.23). The former group may have come from Crete; the origins of the latter are uncertain.

a-a Or (cf. Rashi, Rabbaq, Radak) "Have you said . . . ?"

b-b Lit. "your lord's men."

marched up behind him, playing on flutes and making merry till the earth was split open by the uproar.

⁴¹ Adonijah and all the guests who were with him, who had just finished eating, heard it. When Joab heard the sound of the horn, he said, "Why is the city in such an uproar?" ⁴² He was still speaking when the priest Jonathan son of Abiathar arrived. "Come in," said Adonijah. "You are a worthy man, and you surely bring good news." ⁴³ But Jonathan replied to Adonijah, "Alas, our lord King David has made Solomon king!" ⁴⁴ The king sent with him the priest Zadok and the prophet Nathan and Benaiah son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites and Pelethites. They had him ride on the king's mule, ⁴⁵ and the priest Zadok and the prophet Nathan anointed him king at Gihon. Then they came up from there making merry, and the city went into an uproar. That's the noise you heard. ⁴⁶ Further, Solomon seated himself on the royal throne; ⁴⁷ further, the king's courtiers came to congratulate our lord King David, saying, 'May God make the renown of Solomon even greater than yours, and may He exalt his throne even higher than yours!' And the king bowed low on his couch. ⁴⁸ And further, this is what the king said, 'Praised be the LORD, the God of Israel who has this day provided a successor to my throne, while my own eyes can see it.' " ⁴⁹ Thereupon, all of Adonijah's guests rose in alarm and each went his own way.

⁵⁰ Adonijah, in fear of Solomon, went at once [to the Tent] and grasped the horns of the altar. ⁵¹ It was reported to Solomon: "Adonijah is in fear of King Solomon and has grasped the horns of the altar, saying, 'Let King Solomon first swear to me that he will not put his servant to the sword.' " ⁵² Solomon said, "If he behaves worthily, not a hair of his head shall fall to the ground; but if he is caught in any offense, he shall die." ⁵³ So King Solomon sent and had him taken down from the altar. He came and bowed before King Solomon, and Solomon said to him, "Go home."

2 When David's life was drawing to a close, he instructed his son Solomon as follows: ² "I am going the way of all the earth; be strong and show yourself a man. ³ Keep the charge of the LORD your God, walking in His ways and following His laws, His commandments, His rules, and His admonitions as recorded in the Teaching of Moses, in order that you may succeed in whatever you undertake and wherever you turn. ⁴ Then the LORD will fulfill the promise that He made concerning me: 'If your

50: Horns of the altar, projections from each corner of the top surface. Blood of purification sacrifices was usually daubed on the horns. Taking hold of them was a way for an individual who believed himself innocent of any capital crime to claim sanctuary. 51: Let King Solomon . . . swear: Adonijah acknowledges not only that Solomon is king, but that he, Adonijah, is his servant.

2.1–46: Solomon guarantees the throne for himself. 1–12: David counsels Solomon to follow the norms established by God to maintain the promise of an everlasting dynasty, and asks Solomon to execute David's vengeance on Joab, act kindly toward descendants of a former benefactor, and kill one who had insulted him, all on David's behalf. These actions would eliminate Solomon's potential enemies and protect his supporters. 1–4: The author introduces the theme of a conditional promise to David of a dynasty. There is some tension between this version of the promise and the unconditional promise of 2 Sam. 7.11–16 and the ancient poem in 2 Sam 23.5. The "Teaching ["torah"] of Moses" refers to Deuteronomy (cf. Deut. 4.44–45), which contains instructions about a future king (Deut. 17.14–20).

descendants are scrupulous in their conduct, and walk before Me faithfully, with all their heart and soul, ^ayour line on the throne of Israel shall never end!"^a ⁵"Further, you know what Joab son of Zeruiah did to me, what he did to the two commanders of Israel's forces, Abner son of Ner and Amasa son of Jether: he killed them, shedding^b blood of war in peacetime, staining the girdle of his loins and the sandals on his feet with blood of war.^c ⁶So act in accordance with your wisdom, and see that his white hair does not go down to Sheol in peace.

⁷"But deal graciously with the sons of Barzillai the Gileadite, for they befriended me when I fled from your brother Absalom; let them be among those that eat at your table.^d

⁸"You must also deal with Shimei son of Gera, the Benjaminite from Bahurim. He insulted me outrageously when I was on my way to Mahanaim; but he came down to meet me at the Jordan,^e and I swore to him by the LORD: 'I will not put you to the sword.' ⁹So do not let him go unpunished; for you are a wise man and you will know how to deal with him and send his gray hair down to Sheol in blood."

¹⁰So David slept with his fathers, and he was buried in the City of David. ¹¹The length of David's reign over Israel was forty years: he reigned seven years in Hebron, and he reigned thirty-three years in Jerusalem. ¹²And Solomon sat upon the throne of his father David, and his rule was firmly established.

¹³Adonijah son of Haggith came to see Bathsheba, Solomon's mother. She said, "Do you come with friendly intent?" "Yes," he replied; ¹⁴and he continued, "I would like to have a word with you." "Speak up," she said. ¹⁵Then he said, "You know that the kingship was rightly mine and that all Israel wanted me to reign. But the kingship passed on to my brother; it came to him by the will of the LORD. ¹⁶And now I have one request to make of you; do not refuse me." She said, "Speak up." ¹⁷He replied, "Please ask King Solomon—for he won't refuse you—to give me Abishag the Shunammite as wife." ¹⁸"Very well," said Bathsheba, "I will speak to the king in your behalf."

¹⁹So Bathsheba went to King Solomon to speak to him

5: Joab's self-interested acts could not be addressed at the time (2 Sam. 3.27–39; 20.8–10). 7: Barzillai aided David selflessly during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam. 19.32–40). 8–9: Shimei cursed David during Absalom's revolt (2 Sam. 16.5–8; 19.22–24). 10–12: David dies, and Solomon, having served as co-regent with his father for an undisclosed period of time, ascends his father's throne as sole monarch, his authority firmly established, but only in principle. 11: Forty years: Solomon also reigned forty years (11.42). The number may be typological, indicating an indeterminate but long period of time: The catastrophic rain of the deluge lasted forty days and nights (Gen. 7.12), and Israelites were in the desert forty years. 13–23: Adonijah's incipient insurrection and its aftermath. 17: Adonijah's request is hardly innocent. He plans to take as wife one who, so far as the public knew, may have been intimate with David. This is tantamount to usurping the throne, as is clear from Solomon's response in v. 22. Compare Absalom's action in 2 Sam. 16.21–22.

a-a Lit. "there shall never cease to be a man of yours on the throne of Israel." Cf. 2 Sam. 7.12–16.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c I.e., Joab had thus brought bloodguilt on David's house; see 2 Sam. 3.27 and 20.10.

d I.e., for whose maintenance you provide; see 2 Sam. 19.32 ff.

e See 2 Sam. 16.5 ff; 19.17 ff.

about Adonijah. The king rose to greet her and bowed down to her. He sat on his throne; and he had a throne placed for the queen mother, and she sat on his right. ²⁰She said, "I have one small request to make of you, do not refuse me." He responded, "Ask, Mother; I shall not refuse you." ²¹Then she said, "Let Abishag the Shunammite be given to your brother Adonijah as wife." ²²The king replied to his mother, "Why request Abishag the Shunammite for Adonijah? Request the kingship for him! For he is my older brother, ^aand the priest Abiathar and Joab son of Zeruiah are on his side."^a ²³Thereupon, King Solomon swore by the LORD, saying, "So may God do to me and even more, if broaching this matter does not cost Adonijah his life! ²⁴Now, as the LORD lives, who has established me and set me on the throne of my father David and who has provided him^b with a house, as he promised, Adonijah shall be put to death this very day!" ²⁵And Solomon instructed Benaiah son of Jehoiada, who struck Adonijah^c down; and so he died.

²⁶To the priest Abiathar, the king said, "Go to your estate at Anathoth! You deserve to die, but I shall not put you to death at this time, because you carried the Ark of my Lord God before my father David and because you shared all the hardships that my father endured." ²⁷So Solomon dismissed Abiathar from his office of priest of the LORD—thus fulfilling what the LORD had spoken at Shiloh^d regarding the house of Eli.

²⁸When the news reached Joab, he fled to the Tent of the LORD and grasped the horns of the altar—for Joab had sided with Adonijah, though he had not sided with Absalom. ²⁹King Solomon was told that Joab had fled to the Tent of the LORD and that he was there by the altar; so Solomon sent Benaiah son of Jehoiada, saying, "Go and strike him down." ³⁰Benaiah went to the Tent of the LORD and said to him, "Thus said the king: Come out!" "No!" he replied; "I will die here." Benaiah reported back to the king that Joab had answered thus and thus, ³¹and the king said, "Do just as he said; strike him down and bury him, and remove guilt from me and my father's house for the blood of the innocent that Joab has shed. ³²Thus the LORD will bring his blood guilt down upon his own head, because, unbeknown to my father, he struck down with the sword two men more righteous and honorable than he—Abner son of 22: Solomon sees through the ploy and responds to her ironically at first. Although the meaning of the end of the verse is unclear, Solomon's mention of Abiathar and Joab indicates that he discerns a potential plot against him.

23–25: Solomon goes further than his father's advice and has his main rival, Adonijah, killed.

26–27: Solomon banishes Abiathar to Anathoth, a Levitical city north of Jerusalem. The author interprets Solomon's decision as fulfillment of a prophetic oracle delivered against Abiathar's ancestor (1 Sam. 2.30–36). Prophecy and fulfillment is a major theme of the Deuteronomistic History. For the author, events happen on both the human and divine planes simultaneously. Avranel suggests that Solomon's reason for not executing Abiathar rings hollow; the true reason, unstated in the text, is that Solomon did not want to call down on himself misfortunes such as those that visited Saul after he executed Abiathar's relatives, the priests at Nob (1 Sam. 22.17–19).

28: Horns of the altar, see 1.50 n.

30–31: I will die here: Solomon cleverly misconstrues Joab's intemperate statement as a request which thereby nullifies the sanctuary of the altar. Ostensibly convinced by Solomon's words, Benaiah returns and kills Joab on the spot.

a-a Lit. "And for him and for Abiathar and for Joab son of Zeruiah." Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Heb. "me."

c Heb. "Iim."

d Cf. 1 Sam. 3.14.

Ner, the army commander of Israel, and Amasa son of Jether, the army commander of Judah. ³³May the guilt for their blood come down upon the head of Joab and his descendants forever, and may good fortune from the LORD be granted forever to David and his descendants, his house and his throne." ³⁴So Benaiah son of Jehoiada went up and struck him down. And he was buried at his home in the wilderness. ³⁵In his place, the king appointed Benaiah son of Jehoiada over the army, and in place of Abiathar, the king appointed the priest Zadok.

³⁶Then the king summoned Shimei and said to him, "Build yourself a house in Jerusalem and stay there—do not ever go out from there anywhere else. ³⁷On the very day that you go out and cross the Wadi Kidron, you can be sure that you will die; your blood shall be on your own head." ³⁸"That is fair," said Shimei to the king, "your servant will do just as my lord the king has spoken." And for a long time, Shimei remained in Jerusalem.

³⁹Three years later, two slaves of Shimei ran away to King Achish son of Maacah of Gath. Shimei was told, "Your slaves are in Gath." ⁴⁰Shimei thereupon saddled his ass and went to Achish in Gath to claim his slaves; and Shimei returned from Gath with his slaves. ⁴¹Solomon was told that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath and back, ⁴²and the king summoned Shimei and said to him, "Did I not adjure you by the LORD and warn you, 'On the very day that you leave and go anywhere else, you can be sure that you will die,' and did you not say to me, 'It is fair; I accept'?" ⁴³Why did you not abide by the oath before the LORD and by the orders which I gave you?" ⁴⁴The king said further to Shimei, "You know all the wrong, which you remember very well, that you did to my father David. Now the LORD brings down your wrongdoing upon your own head. ⁴⁵But King Solomon shall be blessed, and the throne of David shall be established before the LORD forever."

⁴⁶The king gave orders to Benaiah son of Jehoiada and he went out and struck Shimei^a down; and so he died.

Thus the kingdom was secured in Solomon's hands.

3 Solomon allied himself by marriage with Pharaoh king of Egypt. He married Pharaoh's daughter and brought her to the City of David [to live there] until he had finished building his palace, and the House of the LORD, and the walls around Jerusalem.

²The people, however, continued to offer sacrifices at 36-46: Shimei, a Benjaminite (Saul's tribe: 1 Sam. 9.1-2), was not only a former enemy of David but also, therefore, a potential enemy of his dynasty in the future.

37: Wadi Kidron, the valley just to the east of the city wall. A wadi is a seasonal watercourse.

46: Through the death and banishment of internal enemies, in partial fulfillment of David's requests, Solomon secured the reins of power over his kingdom.

3.1-4: Introduction. Brief comments introducing themes and ideas developed later in the book.

1: After consolidating authority among his own people, Solomon turned to establishing strategic political alliances with neighboring kingdoms through diplomatic marriages. Since Egyptian sources indicate it is unlikely that the actual daughter of a reigning pharaoh would have been given in marriage to a non-Egyptian, "daughter" may refer to a woman closely related to or descended from the royal family. The names of the pharaoh and the woman are not mentioned. She lived in the City of David only until Solomon built her a palace elsewhere. This brief notice anticipates the more detailed versions of Solomon's construction projects (chs 7-8) and also the problems caused by Solomon's foreign wives (ch 11).

^a Heb. "him."

the open shrines, because up to that time no house had been built for the name of the LORD. ³And Solomon, though he loved the LORD and followed the practices of his father David, also sacrificed and offered at the shrines.

⁴The king went to Gibeon to sacrifice there, for that was the largest shrine; on that altar Solomon presented a thousand burnt offerings. ⁵At Gibeon the LORD appeared to Solomon in a dream by night; and God said, "Ask, what shall I grant you?" ⁶Solomon said, "You dealt most graciously with Your servant my father David, because he walked before You in faithfulness and righteousness and in integrity of heart. You have continued this great kindness to him by giving him a son to occupy his throne, as is now the case. ⁷And now, O LORD my God, You have made Your servant king in place of my father David; but I am a young lad, ^awith no experience in leadership."⁸ ⁸Your servant finds himself in the midst of the people You have chosen, a people too numerous to be numbered or counted. ⁹Grant, then, Your servant an understanding mind to judge Your people, to distinguish between good and bad; for who can judge this vast people of Yours?"

¹⁰The Lord was pleased that Solomon had asked for this. ¹¹And God said to him, "Because you asked for this—you did not ask for long life, you did not ask for riches, you did not ask for the life of your enemies, but you asked for discernment in dispensing justice—¹²I now do as you have spoken. I grant you a wise and discerning mind; there has never been anyone like you before, nor will anyone like you arise again. ¹³And I also grant you what you did not ask for—both riches and glory all your life—the like of which no king has ever had. ¹⁴And I will further grant you long life, if you will walk in My ways and observe My laws and commandments, as did your father David."

¹⁵Then Solomon awoke: it was a dream! He went to Jerusalem, stood before the Ark of the Covenant of the LORD, and sacrificed burnt offerings and presented offerings of well-being; and he made a banquet for all his courtiers.

¹⁶Later two prostitutes came to the king and stood before him. ¹⁷The first woman said, "Please, my lord! This woman and I live in the same house; and I gave birth to a child while she was in the house. ¹⁸On the third day after I was delivered, this woman also gave birth to a child. We were alone; there was no one else with us in the house, just the two of us in the house. ¹⁹During the night this

2-3: Open shrines: The author is apologetic about Solomon's participation in rites at these places (Heb "bamot"), usually translated "high places," even though Deuteronomy did not prohibit their use until after the construction of the Temple (Deut. 12.4–12). In describing events transpiring after the Temple was built, the author condemns worship at such shrines. Their mention here introduces the next section.

3.4-15: The dream at the large open shrine at Gibeon, northwest of Jerusalem, and four divine grants. 4-5: The story may be describing a ritual of incubation attested elsewhere in ancient literature. A person seeking guidance would sleep in a sanctuary or holy spot in the hope of a divine visitation in a dream. 9: Understanding mind, Heb "lev shome'a," "listening heart." Judge, Heb "lishpot," also connotes leading, guiding, administering, or ruling. 10-14: The four grants: wisdom, riches, glory, and a long life. A block of narratives, 3.16–10.29, demonstrates how these promises were fulfilled.

3.16-28: The case of the two prostitutes demonstrates Solomon's judicial wisdom.

a-a Lit. "do not know to go out and come in"; cf. Num. 27.17.

woman's child died, because she lay on it. ²⁰She arose in the night and took my son from my side while your maid-servant was asleep, and laid him in her bosom; and she laid her dead son in my bosom. ²¹When I arose in the morning to nurse my son, there he was, dead; but when I looked at him closely in the morning, it was not the son I had borne."

²²The other woman spoke up, "No, the live one is my son, and the dead one is yours!" But the first insisted, "No, the dead boy is yours; mine is the live one!" And they went on arguing before the king.

²³The king said, "One says, 'This is my son, the live one, and the dead one is yours'; and the other says, 'No, the dead boy is yours, mine is the live one.'" ²⁴So the king gave the order, "Fetch me a sword." A sword was brought before the king, ²⁵and the king said, "Cut the live child in two, and give half to one and half to the other."

²⁶But the woman whose son was the live one pleaded with the king, for she was overcome with compassion for her son. "Please, my lord," she cried, "give her the live child; only don't kill it!" The other insisted, "It shall be neither yours nor mine; cut it in two!" ²⁷Then the king spoke up. "Give the live child to her," he said, "and do not put it to death; she is its mother."

²⁸When all Israel heard the decision that the king had rendered, they stood in awe of the king; for they saw that he possessed divine wisdom to execute justice.

4 King Solomon was now king over all Israel. ²These were his officials:

Azariah son of Zadok—the priest;

³ Elihoreph and Ahijah sons of Shisha—scribes;
Jehoshaphat son of Ahilud—recorder;

⁴ Benaiah son of Jehoiada—over the army;
Zadok and Abiathar—priests;

⁵ Azariah son of Nathan—in charge of the prefects;
Zabud son of Nathan the priest—companion of the king;

⁶ Ahishar—in charge of the palace; and Adoniram son of Abda—in charge of the forced labor.

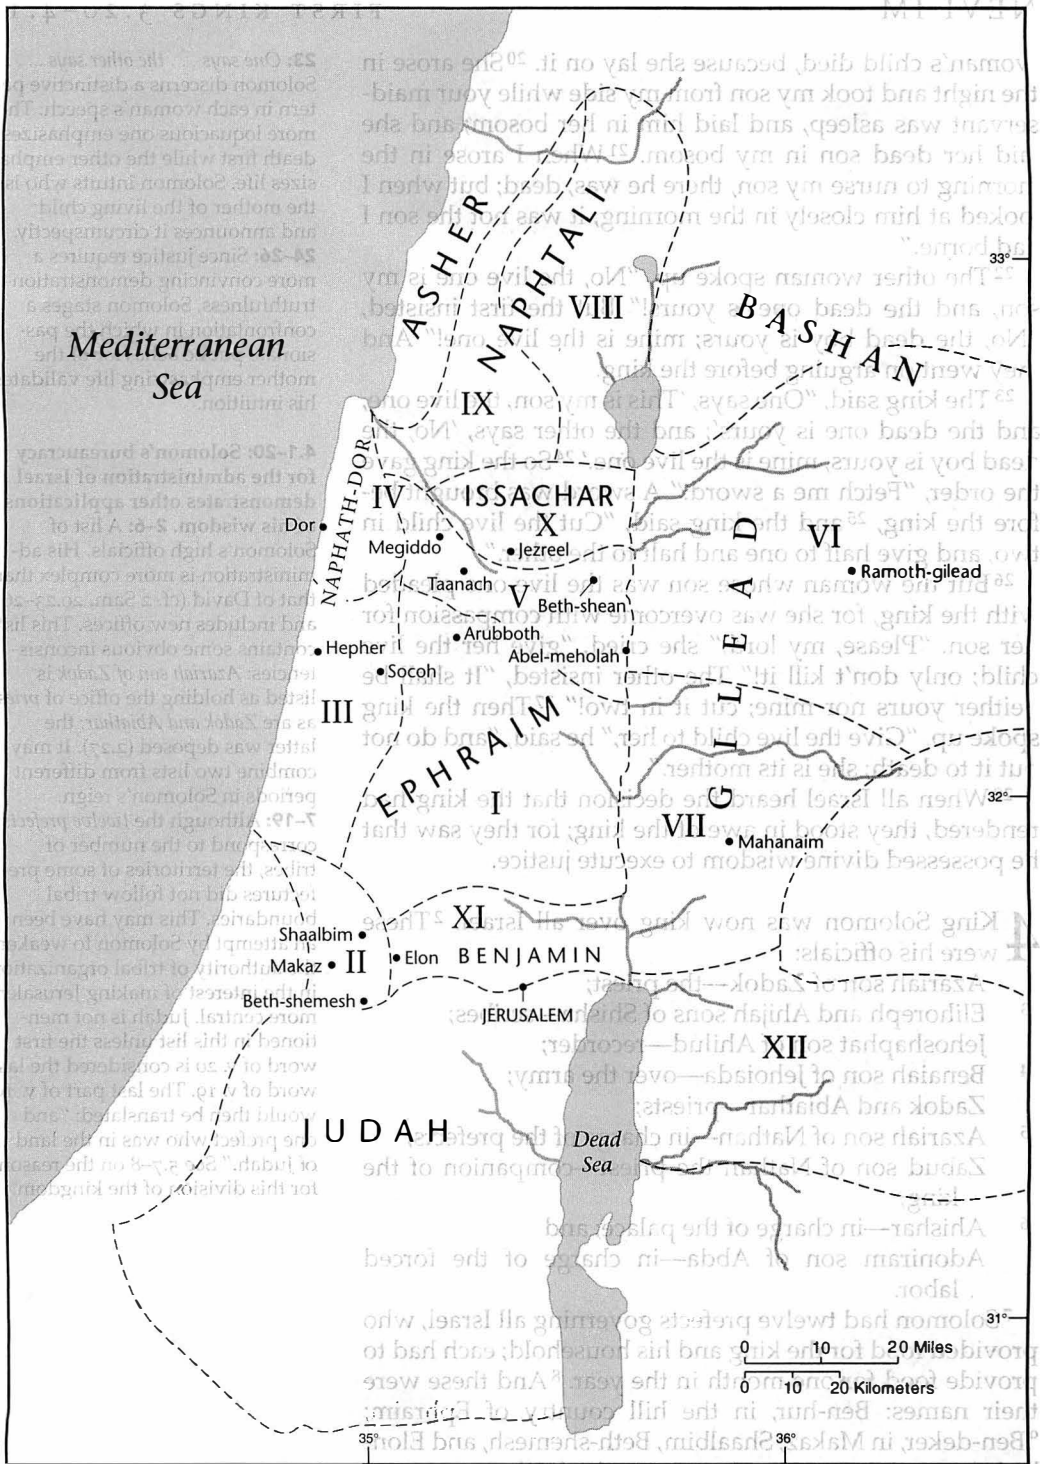

⁷Solomon had twelve prefects governing all Israel, who provided food for the king and his household; each had to provide food for one month in the year. ⁸And these were their names: Ben-hur, in the hill country of Ephraim; ⁹Ben-deker, in Makaz, Shaalbim, Beth-shemesh, and Elon-beth-hanan; ¹⁰Ben-hesed in Arubboth—he governed Socho and all the Hephher area; ¹¹Ben-abinadab, [in] all of

23: One says . . . the other says . . . : Solomon discerns a distinctive pattern in each woman's speech: The more loquacious one emphasizes death first while the other emphasizes life. Solomon intuitively discerns who is the mother of the living child and announces it circumspectly.

24-26: Since justice requires a more convincing demonstration of truthfulness, Solomon stages a confrontation in which the passionate public behavior of the mother emphasizing life validates his intuition.

4.1-20: Solomon's bureaucracy for the administration of Israel demonstrates other applications of his wisdom. 2-6: A list of Solomon's high officials. His administration is more complex than that of David (cf. 2 Sam. 20.23-26) and includes new offices. This list contains some obvious inconsistencies: Azariah son of Zadok is listed as holding the office of priest, as are Zadok and Abiathar; the latter was deposed (2.27). It may combine two lists from different periods in Solomon's reign.

7-19: Although the twelve prefects correspond to the number of tribes, the territories of some prefectures did not follow tribal boundaries. This may have been an attempt by Solomon to weaken the authority of tribal organization in the interest of making Jerusalem more central. Judah is not mentioned in this list unless the first word of v. 20 is considered the last word of v. 19. The last part of v. 19 would then be translated: "and one prefect who was in the land of Judah." See 5.7-8 on the reason for this division of the kingdom.

Solomon's twelve administrative districts according to First Kings 4

Naphath-dor (Solomon's daughter Taphath was his wife);¹² Baana son of Ahilud [in] Taanach and Megiddo and all Beth-shean, which is beside Zarethan, below Jezreel—from Beth-shean to Abel-meholah as far as the other side of Jokmeam; ¹³ Ben-geber, in Ramoth-gilead—he governed the villages of Jair son of Manasseh which are in Gilead, and he also governed the district of Argob which is in Bashan, sixty large towns with walls and bronze bars; ¹⁴ Ahinadab son of Iddo, in Mahanaim; ¹⁵ Ahimaaz, in Naphtali (he too took a daughter of Solomon—Basemath—to wife); ¹⁶ Baanah son of Hushi, in Asher and Bealoth;^a ¹⁷ Jehoshaphat son of Paruah, in Issachar; ¹⁸ Shimei son of Ela, in Benjamin; ¹⁹ Geber son of Uri, in the region of Gilead, the country of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and Og, king of Bashan; ^b and one prefect who was in the land.^b

²⁰ Judah and Israel were as numerous as the sands of the sea; they ate and drank and were content.

5 Solomon's rule extended over all the kingdoms from the Euphrates to the land of the Philistines and the boundary of Egypt. They brought Solomon tribute and were subject to him all his life. ² Solomon's daily provisions consisted of 30 kors of semolina, and 60 kors of [ordinary] flour, ³ 10 fattened oxen, 20 pasture-fed oxen, and 100 sheep and goats, besides deer and gazelles, roebucks and ^c fattened geese.^c ⁴ For he controlled the whole region west of the Euphrates—all the kings west of the Euphrates, from Tiphseh to Gaza—and he had peace on all his borders roundabout. ⁵ All the days of Solomon, Judah and Israel from Dan to Beer-sheba dwelt in safety, everyone under his own vine and under his own fig tree. ⁶ Solomon had 40,000 stalls of horses for his chariotry and 12,000 horsemen.

^{7d} All those prefects, each during his month, would furnish provisions for King Solomon and for all who were admitted to King Solomon's table; they did not fall short in anything. ⁸ They would also, each in his turn, deliver barley and straw for the horses and the swift steeds to the places where they were stationed.

⁹ God endowed Solomon with wisdom and discernment in great measure, with understanding as vast as the 20: The author informs readers that despite the bureaucracy, both Judah—a term used anachronistically here to refer to what would become the Southern Kingdom—and Israel, the tribes north of Judah, lacked nothing and were content.

5.1-8: Solomon's income and requirements for varying luxurious comestibles are described to demonstrate his wealth. This attests to the fulfillment of the grant of riches. 1: In addition to the tribal territories, Solomon controlled two large vassal territories: (1) northeast of Israel, extending from the Bashan and Golan to the Euphrates settled by Aramean groups; (2) the coastland and territories west and southwest of Judah up to the Egyptian border settled by tribes originating in lands bordering the Aegean Sea lumped together under the name of one tribe, Palastu, as Philistines. All paid tribute to Solomon directly. 2-4: Solomon lived lavishly, ate well, had a large chariotry, and maintained peace all his days. These are mentioned here as admirable accomplishments. 5: The author repeats a comment (see 4.20) that Judah and Israel dwelt in safety and contentment. Dan to Beer-sheba, the traditional northern and southern limits of the Land of Israel. 6-8: Only now does the author explain that the prefects were responsible for provisioning the royal household and maintaining chariotry and horsemen. These verses imply that Solomon developed an organized system of taxation in kind and in labor as well as a sophisticated approach to logistics. Nothing pejorative is intended by this information. The author and his readers understood that the institution of the monarchy had to be supported (cf. 1 Sam. 8.10-17).

5.9-7.51: The Temple construction project. The author portrays Solomon using his wisdom, wealth, and glory in a project for his God. 5.9-14: Solomon's great wisdom, his talent in composing a Or "in Aloth."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Exact meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d Resuming the account begun in 4.2.

sands on the seashore. ¹⁰Solomon's wisdom was greater than the wisdom of all the Kedemites and than all the wisdom of the Egyptians. ¹¹He was the wisest of all men: [wiser] than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman, Chalkol, and Darda the sons of Mahol. His fame spread among all the surrounding nations. ¹²He composed three thousand proverbs, and his songs numbered one thousand and five. ¹³He discoursed about trees, from the cedar in Lebanon to the hyssop that grows out of the wall; and he discoursed about beasts, birds, creeping things, and fishes. ¹⁴Men of all peoples came to hear Solomon's wisdom, [sent] by all the kings of the earth who had heard of his wisdom.

¹⁵King Hiram of Tyre sent his officials to Solomon when he heard that he had been anointed king in place of his father; for Hiram had always been a friend of David. ¹⁶Solomon sent this message to Hiram: ¹⁷"You know that my father David could not build a house for the name of the LORD his God because of the enemies^a that encompassed him, until the LORD had placed them under the soles of his feet. ¹⁸But now the LORD my God has given me respite all around; there is no adversary and no mischance. ¹⁹And so I propose to build a house for the name of the LORD my God, as the LORD promised my father David, saying, 'Your son, whom I will set on your throne in your place, shall build the house for My name.' ²⁰Please, then, give orders for cedars to be cut for me in the Lebanon. My servants will work with yours, and I will pay you any wages you may ask for your servants; for as you know, there is none among us who knows how to cut timber like the Sidonians."

²¹When Hiram heard Solomon's message, he was overjoyed. "Praised be the LORD this day," he said, "for granting David a wise son to govern this great people." ²²So Hiram sent word to Solomon: "I have your message; I will supply all the cedar and cypress logs you require. ²³My servants will bring them down to the sea from the Lebanon; and at the sea I will make them into floats and [deliver them] to any place that you designate to me. There I shall break them up for you to carry away. You, in turn, will supply the food I require for my household." ²⁴So Hiram kept Solomon provided with all the cedar and cypress wood he required, ²⁵and Solomon delivered to Hiram 20,000 kors of wheat as provisions for his household and ^b20 kors^b of beaten oil. Such was Solomon's annual payment to Hiram.

proverbs and poetry, and his knowledge were famous throughout the world. This section is offered as a demonstration that the grant of glory was fulfilled. 10: Kedemites, "people of the east," i.e., perhaps the peoples of Mesopotamia, who, along with Egyptians, would represent the great civilizations of the ancient world and their wisdom. 11: Ethan the Ezrahite is mentioned in Ps. 89.1; Heman, referred to also as the Ezrahite, in Ps. 88.1. Chalkol and Darda, sons of Mahol are not known outside of this passage. 13: Trees . . . cedar . . . hyssop, all trees, from the largest to the smallest. Beasts . . . fishes, all animals. Solomon's knowledge was encyclopedic. 15: Hiram of Tyre, who had supplied wood for David's palace (2 Sam. 5.11–12), was king of the two leading Phoenician city-states, Sidon and Tyre, north of Israel. The Phoenicians were important sea traders, exporting lumber from the Lebanese hinterland east to Mesopotamia and down the coast to Egypt. 17: David could not build: According to 2 Sam. 7.5–7, the LORD forbade David to build a Temple. 20–31: International trade in the ancient Near East was a royal monopoly. Solomon guarantees to provide food for Hiram's household annually for an unspecified number of years (vv. 23, 25) in return for cypress and cedar logs, their transport to a Mediterranean landing place, their manufacture on shore into lumber (vv. 19, 22–23), and, apparently, the loan of master masons and stone cutters (vv. 31–32). 25: Kor, the largest dry measure used in Israel, is estimated to have been about 230 liters or 6.5 bushels. The tradition preserved in the Septuagint that Solomon supplied 20,000 "baths" of olive oil, a liquid measure, is preferable to what is found in the MT. A "bath" is estimated to have been 23 liters or 6 gallons.

a Heb. "war"; cf. Targum. b-b Septuagint reads, "20,000 baths."

²⁶The LORD had given Solomon wisdom, as He had promised him. There was friendship between Hiram and Solomon, and the two of them made a treaty.

²⁷King Solomon imposed forced labor on all Israel; the levy came to 30,000 men. ²⁸He sent them to the Lebanon in shifts of 10,000 a month: they would spend one month in the Lebanon and two months at home. Adoniram was in charge of the forced labor. ²⁹Solomon also had 70,000 porters and 80,000 quarriers in the hills, ³⁰apart from Solomon's 3,300 officials who were in charge of the work and supervised the gangs doing the work.

³¹The king ordered huge blocks of choice stone to be quarried, so that the foundations of the house might be laid with hewn stones. ³²Solomon's masons, Hiram's masons, and the men of Gebal shaped them. Thus the timber and the stones for building the house were made ready.

6 In the four hundred and eightieth year after the Israelites left the land of Egypt, in the month of Ziv—that is, the second month—in the fourth year of his reign over Israel, Solomon began to build the House of the LORD. ²The House which King Solomon built for the LORD was 60 cubits long, 20 cubits wide, and 30 cubits high. ³The portico in front of the Great Hall of the House was 20 cubits long—along the width of the House—and 10 cubits deep to the front of the House. ⁴He made windows for the House, recessed and latticed. ⁵Against the outside wall of the House—the outside walls of the House enclosing the Great Hall and the Shrine^b—he built a storied structure; and he made side chambers all around. ⁶The lowest story was 5 cubits wide, the middle one 6 cubits wide, and the third 7 cubits wide; for he had provided recesses around the outside of the House so as not to penetrate the walls of the House.

⁷When the House was built, only finished stones cut at the quarry were used, so that no hammer or ax or any iron tool was heard in the House while it was being built.

⁸The entrance to the middle^c [story of] the side chambers was on the right side of the House; and winding stairs led up to the middle chambers, and from the middle chambers to the third story. ⁹When he finished building the House, ^dhe paneled the House with beams and planks of cedar. ^d¹⁰He built the storied structure against the en-

27: Solomon exploits his prerogative to have Adoniram conscript a labor corps of 30,000 workers for work on a rotational basis as lumberjacks in Lebanon. The remaining 150,000 workers may have been paid.

6.1-7.1: Building the Temple.

6.1: Solomon's fourth year, determined on the basis of the chronology of Tyrian kings provided by Josephus and Assyro-Tyrian synchronisms, was 968 BCE. This would date the exodus to 1448 BCE, a date most scholars consider too early. If, however, 480 years are a figurative way of indicating 12 generations, and an actual generation is 25 years, the exodus would be dated to 1268 BCE. The Canaanite month name, Ziv, is the same as "Iyar," the month name adopted by Jews after the Babylonian exile. The second month on a spring-based calendar, it corresponds to April-May. 2: The cubit, a measure of length equal to 0.5 meter or 18 inches. 2-36: The main building was a tripartite, rectangular structure 20 cubits wide consisting of a portico (v. 3) and a main building entered through a doorway (v. 33) divided into a 40-cubit-long entrance hall (v. 17) and a 20-cubit-square inner shrine blocked by chained doors from the hall (vv. 20-21, 31-32). The tripartite floor plan of Solomon's Temple is paralleled by an 8th-century BCE temple excavated at Tel Tainat, while some of its structural and internal designs have parallels in a temple at Ain Dara, both in Syria. 5-8: A three-story store building enveloped the main Temple on three sides, buttressing and protecting it as well as providing some massiveness to the sparse structure.

a Meaning of parts of vv. 4-6 uncertain.

b I.e., the inner sanctuary, designated in v. 16 and elsewhere as the "Holy of Holies."

c Septuagint and Targum read "lowest."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

ture House—each story 5 cubits high, so that it encased the House with timbers of cedar.

¹¹ Then the word of the LORD came to Solomon, ¹² "With regard to this House you are building—if you follow My laws and observe My rules and faithfully keep My commandments, I will fulfill for you the promise that I gave to your father David: ¹³ I will abide among the children of Israel, and I will never forsake My people Israel."

¹⁴ When Solomon had completed the construction of the House, ¹⁵ he paneled the walls of the House on the inside with planks of cedar. He also overlaid the walls on the inside with wood, from the floor of the House to the ceiling. And he overlaid the floor of the House with planks of cypress. ¹⁶ Twenty cubits from the rear of the House, he built [a partition] of cedar planks from the floor to the walls;^a he furnished its interior to serve as a shrine, as the Holy of Holies. ¹⁷^b The front part of the House, that is, the Great

15-22: The interior of the main building was floored, paneled, decorated, and overlaid . . . with gold (see also vv. 29-30). Although some consider the author to be exaggerating in this description, the study of almost contemporary ancient Near Eastern culture supports the likelihood of the description. In Mesopotamian documents ranging from about 2400 to 539 BCE different rulers proclaim that they covered the walls and doors of their temples with gold and silver, while Egyptian documents indicate that pharaohs living between 1550 and 1152 did likewise.

a Septuagint reads "rafters." b Meaning of vv. 17-22 is unclear in part.

The Temple and palace of Solomon according to First Kings

Hall, measured 40 cubits. ¹⁸The cedar of the interior of the House had carvings of gourds and calyxes; it was all cedar, no stone was exposed. ¹⁹In the innermost part of the House, he fixed a Shrine in which to place the Ark of the LORD's Covenant. ²⁰^aThe interior of the^a Shrine was 20 cubits long, 20 cubits wide, and 20 cubits high. He overlaid it with solid gold; he similarly overlaid [its] cedar altar. ²¹Solomon overlaid the interior of the House with solid gold; and he inserted golden chains ^binto the door of^b the Shrine. He overlaid [the Shrine] with gold, ²²so that the entire House was overlaid with gold; he even overlaid with gold the entire altar of the Shrine. And so the entire House was completed.

²³In the Shrine he made two cherubim of olive wood, each 10 cubits high. ²⁴[One] had a wing measuring 5 cubits and another wing measuring 5 cubits, so that the spread from wingtip to wingtip was 10 cubits; ²⁵and the wing-spread of the other cherub was also 10 cubits. The two cherubim had the same measurements and proportions: ²⁶the height of the one cherub was 10 cubits, and so was that of the other cherub.

²⁷He placed the cherubim inside the ^cinner chamber. ^cSince the wings of the cherubim were extended, a wing of the one touched one wall and a wing of the other touched the other wall, while their wings in the center of the chamber touched each other. ²⁸He overlaid the cherubim with gold. ²⁹All over the walls of the House, of both the inner area and the outer area, he carved reliefs of cherubim, palms, and calyxes, ³⁰and he overlaid the floor of the House with gold, both the inner and the outer areas.

³¹For the entrance of the Shrine he made doors of olive wood, ^dthe pilasters and the doorposts having five sides. ^d³²The double doors were of olive wood, and on them he carved reliefs of cherubim, palms, and calyxes. He overlaid them with gold, hammering the gold onto the cherubim and the palms. ³³For the entrance of the Great Hall, too, he made doorposts of oleaster wood, ^dhaving four sides, ^d³⁴and the double doors of cypress wood, each door consisting of two rounded planks. ³⁵On them he carved cherubim, palms, and calyxes, overlaying them with gold applied evenly over the carvings. ³⁶He built the inner enclosure of three courses of hewn stones and one course of cedar beams.

23: Cherubim: The "im" ending is a Heb plural marker equivalent to English "s" as in "boys." A "cherub" was a mythical, composite animal, often represented with a human face, eagle wings, and a lion's body. Cherubim were considered guardian figures. Solomon not only placed two three-dimensional cherubim in the Holy of Holies, but also had them carved in relief on the two sets of doors in the main building (vv. 32, 35). Cherub images are attested on various ancient Near Eastern artifacts, including carved ivory panels used to decorate furniture from Samaria and on two clay cult stands from excavations at Taanach. They are also known to have been carved into the sides of the throne used by Hiram of Tyre, which is illustrated on his excavated sarcophagus; this may suggest that in the Temple as well the cherubim served as the throne of (the invisible) God. In Jewish tradition they came to symbolize the presence of God. 36: Israeli archeologists have excavated stone structures and fortification walls in which horizontal courses of wood beams were laid intermittently between courses of stones. These would allow the buildings to absorb earthquake shocks without collapsing. (Many parts of Israel are in active earthquake zones.) In Mesopotamia, layers of reeds were placed between every few courses of brick in the construction of the great ziggurats for the same reason.

a-a I.e., the inner sanctuary, designated in v. 16 and elsewhere as the "Holy of Holies."

b-b Heb. "in front of."

c-c I.e., the Shrine.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

³⁷In the fourth year, in the month of Ziv, the foundations of the House were laid; ³⁸and in the eleventh year, in the month of Bul—that is, the eighth month—the House was completed according to all its details and all its specifications. It took him seven years to build it. ¹And it took Solomon thirteen years to build his palace, until his whole palace was completed.

²He built the ^aLebanon Forest House with four rows^a of cedar columns, and with hewn cedar beams above the columns. Its length was 100 cubits, its breadth 50 cubits, and its height 30 cubits. ³It was paneled above with cedar, with the planks^b that were above on the 45 columns—15 in each row. ⁴And there were three rows of window frames, with three tiers of windows facing each other. ⁵All the doorways and doorposts^c had square frames—with three tiers of windows facing each other.

⁶He made the portico of columns 50 cubits long and 30 cubits wide; ^dthe portico was in front of [the columns], and there were columns with a canopy in front of them.^d ⁷He made the throne portico, where he was to pronounce judgment—the Hall of Judgment. It was paneled with cedar from floor to floor.^e a-a So called because of the rows of cedar columns. Septuagint reads “three rows” instead of “four rows”; cf. v. 3.

⁸The house that he used as a residence, in the rear courtyard, back of the portico, was of the same construction. Solomon also constructed a palace like that portico for the daughter of Pharaoh, whom he had married.

⁹All these buildings, from foundation to coping and all the way out to the great courtyard, were of choice stones, hewn according to measure, smooth on all sides.^f ¹⁰The foundations were huge blocks of choice stone, stones of 10 cubits and stones of 8 cubits; ¹¹and above were choice stones, hewn according to measure, and cedar wood. ¹²The large surrounding courtyard had three tiers of hewn stone and a row of cedar beams, the same as for the inner court of the House of the LORD, and for the portico of the House.

¹³King Solomon sent for Hiram and brought him down from Tyre. ¹⁴He was the son of a widow of the tribe of Naphtali, and his father had been a Tyrian, a coppersmith.

b Apparently the “planks” connected the columns longitudinally, and the “beams” (v. 2) connected the planks transversely.

c Septuagint reads “windows.”

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e Syriac reads “rafters.”

f Lit. “sawed with a saw in the inside and outside.”

37: Bul, the eighth month of the Canaanite calendar, was renamed Marheshvan by Jews after the Babylonian exile. It corresponds to October-November.

7.1-12: Solomon's palace complex. Having provided details about the seven-year Temple construction project, the author provides similar details about Solomon's thirteen-year public building and palace projects, undertaken only after the Temple was completed (cf. 9.10): the Lebanon Forest House, a large public building containing many wings including a Hall of Judgment and a private throne room (vv. 7-8) and two palaces. These projects, larger and more complex architecturally than the magnificently endowed Temple, intending to accommodate large numbers of people, necessitated pillars. In combination, both projects attest to Solomon's skill as a designer-contractor.

7.13-51: Furnishing the Temple. The author returns to the main line of his narrative. 13-14: Hiram, not the king of Tyre. This Hiram, a bronzeworker living in Tyre, is accounted to the northern tribe of Naphtali through his deceased father. This artisan plays a role similar to that of Bezalel in the construction of the tent-shrine in the wilderness (Exod. 36.1; 37.1). His specialty appears to have been the ability to cast very large, curved and spherical objects (cf. 7.46). Bronze, an alloy of (usually) copper and tin. As translators' note a points out, Heb makes no distinction between pure copper and copper alloys such as bronze. Pure copper is too soft, however, to make an effective “pillar.”

15-22: The two specially made bronze pillars, manufactured after the Temple's completion, lacked any structural purpose. Their function may have been symbolically decorative. Artistic reconstructions often represent them as freestanding either near the entrance of the Temple or at the front edge of the portico on the basis of 2 Chron.

He was endowed with skill, ability, and talent for executing all work in bronze.^a He came to King Solomon and executed all his work. ¹⁵He cast two columns of bronze; one column was 18 cubits high and measured 12 cubits in circumference, [and similarly] the other column. ¹⁶He made two capitals, cast in bronze, to be set upon the two columns, the height of each of the two capitals being 5 cubits; ¹⁷also nets of meshwork with festoons of chainwork for the capitals that were on the top of the columns, seven for each of the two capitals. ¹⁸He made the columns^b so that there were two rows [of pomegranates] encircling the top of the one network, to cover the capitals that were on the top of the pomegranates;^c and he did the same for [the network on] the second capital. ¹⁹The capitals upon the columns of the portico were of lily design, 4 cubits high; ²⁰so also the capitals upon the two columns extended above and next to the bulge^d that was beside the network. There were 200 pomegranates in rows around the top of the second capital.^e ²¹He set up the columns at the portico of the Great Hall; he set up one column on the right and named it Jachin, and he set up the other column on the left and named it Boaz. ²²Upon the top of the columns there was a lily design. Thus the work of the columns was completed.

²³Then he made the tank^f of cast metal, 10 cubits across from brim to brim, completely round; it was 5 cubits high, and it measured 30 cubits in circumference. ²⁴There were gourds below the brim completely encircling it—ten to a cubit, encircling the tank; the gourds were in two rows, cast in one piece with it. ²⁵It stood upon twelve oxen: three facing north, three facing west, three facing south, and three facing east, with the tank resting upon them; their haunches were all turned inward. ²⁶It was a handbreadth thick, and its brim was made like that of a cup, like the petals of a lily. Its capacity was 2,000 baths.

²⁷He made the ten laver stands of bronze. The length of each laver stand was 4 cubits and the width 4 cubits, and the height was 3 cubits. ²⁸The structure of the laver stands was as follows: They had insets,^g and there were insets within the frames; ²⁹and on the insets within the frames

3.17. The consonants of the Heb names Jachin and Boaz may be read as a sentence meaning "May he establish in strength." The pillars may have comprised a visible prayer asking that God care either for the Temple or for the dynasty. (2 Kings 11.14; 23.3 may support the latter interpretation even though they mention only one pillar.) Shrine models excavated in the Levant show such freestanding pillars. 23–26: The elevated tank provided water under pressure so that the priests could wash conveniently without having to draw water from Temple cisterns (2 Chron. 4.6). The Tanakh does not indicate how water was released from the tank or how it was filled. The tank's design, mounted on the back of twelve oxen, actually bulls, facing the cardinal points of the compass, may have been symbolically meaningful. 23: A comparison of the tank's diameter and circumference indicates that the author used 3 as the value of pi. Assuming the correctness of the diameter, the circumference was almost 31.5 cubits (15 m or 47 ft). 27–39: Hiram also made ten lavens and ten intricately designed rolling stands for the washing of sacrificial parts (cf. 2 Chron. 4.6). The inclusion of mythical cherubs along with bulls and lions in the side frames of the stands suggests that they too conveyed some symbolic message (v. 29). Bronze models of such stands have been found in excavations on Cyprus and in Israel.

a Heb. nehosheth means both copper and bronze. In the translation "copper" is ordinarily used to denote the natural product and "bronze" for the artifacts.

b Two Heb. mss. read "pomegranates."

c About fifty Heb. mss. read "columns."

d Lit. "belly"; exact force of Heb. uncertain.

e I.e., each of the two capitals.

f Lit. "sea."

g Emendation yields "frames."

were lions, oxen, and cherubim. Above the frames was a stand; and both above and below the lions and the oxen were spirals of hammered metal. ³⁰Each laver stand had four bronze wheels and [two] bronze axletrees. Its four legs had brackets; the brackets were under the laver, cast ^awith spirals beyond each.^a ³¹Its funnel, within the crown, rose a cubit above it; this funnel was round, in the fashion of a stand, a cubit and a half in diameter. On the funnel too there were carvings.

But the insets were square, not round. ³²And below the insets were the four wheels. The axletrees of the wheels were [fixed] in the laver stand, and the height of each wheel was a cubit and a half. ³³The structure of the wheels was like the structure of chariot wheels; and their axletrees, their rims, their spokes, and their hubs were all of cast metal. ³⁴Four brackets ran to the four corners of each laver stand; the brackets were of a piece with the laver stand. ³⁵At the top of the laver stand was a round band half a cubit high, and together with the top of the laver stand; its sides and its insets were of one piece with it. ³⁶^aOn its surface—on its sides—and on its insets [Hiram] engraved cherubim, lions, and palms, as the clear space on each allowed,^a with spirals roundabout. ³⁷It was after this manner that he made the ten laver stands, all of them cast alike, of the same measure and the same form. ³⁸Then he made ten bronze lavers, one laver on each of the ten laver stands, each laver measuring 4 cubits and each laver containing forty baths.

³⁹He disposed the laver stands, five at the right side of the House and five at its left side; and the tank he placed on the right side of the House, at the southeast [corner].

⁴⁰Hiram also made the lavers, the scrapers, and the sprinkling bowls.

So Hiram finished all the work that he had been doing for King Solomon on the House of the LORD: ⁴¹the two columns, the two globes of the capitals upon the columns; and the two pieces of network to cover the two globes of the capitals upon the columns; ⁴²the four hundred pomegranates for the two pieces of network, two rows of pomegranates for each network, to cover the two globes of the capitals upon the columns; ⁴³the ten stands and the ten lavers upon the stands; ⁴⁴the one tank with the twelve oxen underneath the tank; ⁴⁵the pails, the scrapers, and the sprinkling bowls. All those vessels in the House of the LORD that Hiram made for King Solomon were of bur-

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

nished bronze. ⁴⁶The king had them cast in earthen molds,^a in the plain of the Jordan between Succoth and Zarethan. ⁴⁷Solomon left all the vessels [unweighed] because of their very great quantity; the weight of the bronze was not reckoned.

⁴⁸And Solomon made all the furnishings that were in the House of the LORD: the altar, of gold; the table for the bread of display, of gold; ⁴⁹the lampstands—five on the right side and five on the left—in front of the Shrine, of solid gold; and the petals, lamps, and tongs, of gold; ⁵⁰the basins, snuffers, sprinkling bowls, ladles, and fire pans, of solid gold; and the hinge sockets for the doors of the innermost part of the House, the Holy of Holies, and for the doors of the Great Hall of the House, of gold.

⁵¹When all the work that King Solomon had done in the House of the LORD was completed, Solomon brought in the sacred donations of his father David—the silver, the gold, and the vessels—and deposited them in the treasury of the House of the LORD.

8 Then Solomon convoked the elders of Israel—all the heads of the tribes and the ancestral chieftains of the Israelites—before King Solomon in Jerusalem, to bring up the Ark of the Covenant of the LORD from the City of David, that is, Zion.

²All the men of Israel gathered before King Solomon at the Feast,^b in the month of Ethanim—that is, the seventh month. ³When all the elders of Israel had come, the priests lifted the Ark ⁴and carried up the Ark of the LORD. Then the priests and the Levites brought the Tent of Meeting and all the holy vessels that were in the Tent. ⁵Meanwhile, King Solomon and the whole community of Israel, who were assembled with him before the Ark, were sacrificing sheep and oxen in such abundance that they could not be numbered or counted.

⁶The priests brought the Ark of the LORD's Covenant to its place underneath the wings of the cherubim, in the Shrine of the House, in the Holy of Holies; ⁷for the cherubim had their wings spread out over the place of the Ark, so that the cherubim shielded the Ark and its poles from above. ⁸The poles projected so that the ends of the poles were visible in the sanctuary in front of the Shrine, but they could not be seen outside; and there they remain to this day. ⁹There was nothing inside the Ark but the two

48–49: In contrast to the bronze vessels and implements manufactured for use in the courtyard and on the altar in front of the Temple, those intended for use within the Temple itself were made from or covered with gold. The metals themselves indicated gradations of holiness.

8.1–66: Dedicating the Temple.

The formal dedication ceremonies consisted of moving the Ark and attendant items from a tent where they had been kept since the days of David, joyful celebration, public sacrifices, prayers, and speeches. The dedication ceremonies took place in the seventh month, Ethanim, called "Tishri" after the Babylonian exile. It corresponds to September–October and is the month when the high holidays, Rosh Ha-Shanah (New Year) and Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement) are observed, followed immediately by Sukkot (Tabernacles or Booths). The dedication, eleven months after the completion of the Temple (see 6.37), was scheduled for the feast of Booths, Sukkot (v. 2). 1: The sacred objects were kept in a tent within the City of David. They had to be carried up to the Temple, which had been constructed on a hill north of the city. A broad consensus among historians and archeologists maintains that Solomon's Temple was built beneath the platform around the Dome of the Rock and in the surrounding area.

a-a Lit. "in the thick of the earth." b I.e., of Booths. Cf. Lev. 23.34.

tablets of stone which Moses placed there at Horeb, when the LORD made [a covenant] with the Israelites after their departure from the land of Egypt.

¹⁰When the priests came out of the sanctuary—for the cloud had filled the House of the LORD ¹¹and the priests were not able to remain and perform the service because of the cloud, for the Presence of the LORD filled the House of the LORD—¹²then Solomon declared:

“The LORD has chosen
To abide in a thick cloud:

¹³ I have now built for You
A stately House,
A place where You
May dwell forever.”

¹⁴Then, with the whole congregation of Israel standing, the king faced about and blessed the whole congregation of Israel. ¹⁵He said:

“Praised be the LORD, the God of Israel, ^awho has fulfilled with deeds the promise He made^a to my father David. For He said, ¹⁶“Ever since I brought My people Israel out of Egypt, I have not chosen a city among all the tribes of Israel for building a House where My name might abide; but I have chosen David to rule My people Israel.”

¹⁷“Now my father David had intended to build a House for the name of the LORD, the God of Israel. ¹⁸But the LORD said to my father David, ‘As regards your intention to build a House for My name, you did right to have that intention. ¹⁹However, you shall not build the House yourself; instead, your son, the issue of your loins, shall build the House for My name.’

²⁰“And the LORD has fulfilled the promise that He made: I have succeeded^b my father David and have ascended the throne of Israel, as the LORD promised. I have built the House for the name of the LORD, the God of Israel; ²¹and I have set a place there for the Ark, containing the covenant which the LORD made with our fathers when He brought them out from the land of Egypt.”

²²Then Solomon stood before the altar of the LORD in the presence of the whole community of Israel; he spread the palms of his hands toward heaven ²³and said, “O LORD God of Israel, in the heavens above and on the earth below there is no god like You, who keep Your gracious covenant with Your servants when they walk before You in wholehearted devotion; ²⁴You who have kept the 10: The cloud, a conventional figure indicating divine presence (Exod. 33.9). The author alludes to earlier traditions about the Tabernacle (Exod. 40.34–35). Part of the ritual within the Temple building consisted of incense offerings on the small, golden altar. 12–13: Since God dwells in a thick cloud, Solomon has provided a proper house. The Temple building was dimly illuminated by light entering through apertures high on the wall and by ten lamps. The square, back chamber, where the Ark was kept, was blocked off from the long hall, so that it was always dim.

8.13–66: The prayer of Solomon is filled with phrases that echo Deuteronomy: v. 23, keep Your gracious covenant (Deut. 7.9, 12); v. 23, in the heavens above and on the earth below (Deut. 4.39); v. 24, as is now the case (Deut. 2.30; 4.20; etc.); vv. 30, 39, 43, 49, Your heavenly abode (Deut. 26.15); vv. 33, 34, 38, 43, 52, Your people Israel (Deut. 21.8; 26.15); v. 36, which You gave . . . as their heritage (Deut. 4.21; 15.4; etc.); v. 40, revere [the LORD] (Deut. 4.10; 5.26; etc.); v. 42, mighty hand . . . outstretched arm (Deut. 4.34; 5.15; etc.); v. 51, iron furnace (Deut. 4.20). 13: I have built for You recurs five additional times in Solomon’s speeches (vv. 20, 27, 43, 44, 48), sounding a message of personal piety. A place where You may dwell forever: The concept expressed here that the Temple is the place where God dwells is qualified by a more abstract conception in v. 29, which portrays the Temple as the place where the divine “name” dwells. This suggests that the prayers in vv. 12–13 and 15–53 are two separate compositions; the latter may have a long history of composition. 22: In the ancient world, the proper posture for petitionary prayer was standing erect with raised hands. In addition to other biblical descriptions (Exod. 9.29; Isa. 1.15) it is represented in drawings from Israel, Assyria, and Egypt. 25–26: Solomon introduces his petition by suggesting that insofar as he has met conditions pre-

a-a Lit. “who spoke with His own mouth . . . and has fulfilled with His own hand.”

b Lit. “risen in place of.”

promises You made to Your servant, my father David, fulfilling with deeds the promise You made—as is now the case. ²⁵And now, O LORD God of Israel, keep the further promise that You made to Your servant, my father David: 'Your line on the throne of Israel shall never end, if only your descendants will look to their way and walk before Me as you have walked before Me.' ²⁶Now, therefore, O God of Israel, let the promise that You made to Your servant my father David be fulfilled.

²⁷"But will God really dwell^a on earth? Even the heavens to their uttermost reaches cannot contain You, how much less this House that I have built! ²⁸Yet turn, O LORD my God, to the prayer and supplication of Your servant, and hear the cry and prayer which Your servant offers before You this day. ²⁹May Your eyes be open day and night toward this House, toward the place of which You have said, 'My name shall abide there'; may You heed the prayers which Your servant will offer toward this place. ³⁰And when You hear the supplications which Your servant and Your people Israel offer toward this place, give heed in Your heavenly abode—give heed and pardon.

³¹"Whenever one man commits an offense against another, and the latter utters an imprecation to bring a curse upon him, and comes with his imprecation before Your altar in this House, ³²oh, hear in heaven and take action to judge Your servants, condemning him who is in the wrong and bringing down the punishment of his conduct on his head, vindicating him who is in the right by rewarding him according to his righteousness.

³³"Should Your people Israel be routed by an enemy because they have sinned against You, and then turn back to You and acknowledge Your name, and they offer prayer and supplication to You in this House, ³⁴oh, hear in heaven and pardon the sin of Your people Israel, and restore them to the land that You gave to their fathers.

³⁵"Should the heavens be shut up and there be no rain, because they have sinned against You, and then they pray toward this place and acknowledge Your name and repent of their sins, when You answer^b them, ³⁶oh, hear in heaven and pardon the sin of Your servants, Your people Israel, after You have shown them the proper way in which they are to walk; and send down rain upon the land which You gave to Your people as their heritage. ³⁷So, too, if there is a famine in the land, if there is pestilence, blight, sent by God in the dream at Gibeon (3.14) by building the Temple, God should fulfill His (conditional) promise to David about his descendants (cf. 2.4) which would include guaranteeing Solomon long life. 27–61: This section begins with a rhetorical question challenging the notion expressed in vv. 12–13 that God now has an actual presence on earth in the Temple (v. 27). Meditative prayers (vv. 28–53) assert that God, truly present in heaven, resides only symbolically on earth in the Temple; nevertheless, prayer should be directed to the Temple (vv. 29, 31, 35, 38, 42). These ideas, couched in phrases and images from Deuteronomy (see Deut. 6.13; 12.4, 11), attempt to harmonize the Deuteronomistic notion of divine immanence in the Temple with the contrasting notion of the universal transcendence of God. The whole section may have been inserted into a text that originally continued seamlessly from v. 26 to 62. V. 54 has Solomon praying on his knees, while v. 22 has him standing. V. 55 has him standing to bless the people, something described already in v. 14. In its present context, the section dilutes the aura of God's immanence cast by the materialistic physicality of Solomon's speech (vv. 12–26). V. 34, calling for the restoration of Israel to the land, is most likely an exilic addition to the text.

^a 2 Chron. 6.18 adds "with man."

^b The Septuagint, with a different vocalization, reads "clastise."

mildew, locusts or caterpillars, or if an enemy oppresses them in any of the settlements of the land.

³⁸In any plague and in any disease, in any prayer or supplication offered by any person among all Your people Israel—each of whom knows his own affliction—when he spreads his palms toward this House, ³⁹oh, hear in Your heavenly abode, and pardon and take action! Render to each man according to his ways as You know his heart to be—for You alone know the hearts of all men—⁴⁰so that they may revere You all the days that they live on the land that You gave to our fathers.

⁴¹“Or if a foreigner who is not of Your people Israel comes from a distant land for the sake of Your name—⁴²for they shall hear about Your great name and Your mighty hand and Your outstretched arm—when he comes to pray toward this House, ⁴³oh, hear in Your heavenly abode and grant all that the foreigner asks You for. Thus all the peoples of the earth will know Your name and revere You, as does Your people Israel; and they will recognize that Your name is attached to this House that I have built.

⁴⁴“When Your people take the field against their enemy by whatever way You send them, and they pray to the LORD in the direction of the city which You have chosen, and of the House which I have built to Your name, ⁴⁵oh, hear in heaven their prayer and supplication and uphold their cause.

⁴⁶“When they sin against You—for there is no man who does not sin—and You are angry with them and deliver them to the enemy, and their captors carry them off to an enemy land, near or far; ⁴⁷and then they take it to heart in the land to which they have been carried off, and they repent and make supplication to You in the land of their captors, saying: ‘We have sinned, we have acted perversely, we have acted wickedly,’ ⁴⁸and they turn back to You with all their heart and soul, in the land of the enemies who have carried them off, and they pray to You in the direction of their land which You gave to their fathers, of the city which You have chosen, and of the House which I have built to Your name—⁴⁹oh, give heed in Your heavenly abode to their prayer and supplication, uphold their cause, ⁵⁰and pardon Your people who have sinned against You for all the transgressions that they have committed against You. Grant them mercy in the sight of their captors that they may be merciful to them. ⁵¹For they are Your very own people that You freed from Egypt, from the midst of the iron furnace. ⁵²May Your eyes be open to the supplication of Your servant and the supplication of Your people Israel, and may You heed them whenever they call upon You. ⁵³ For You, O Lord God, have set them apart for Yourself from all the peoples of the earth as Your very own, as You promised through Moses Your servant when You freed our fathers from Egypt."

⁵⁴ When Solomon finished offering to the LORD all this prayer and supplication, he rose from where he had been kneeling, in front of the altar of the LORD, his hands spread out toward heaven. ⁵⁵ He stood, and in a loud voice blessed the whole congregation of Israel:

⁵⁶ "Praised be the LORD who has granted a haven to His people Israel, just as He promised; not a single word has failed of all the gracious promises that He made through His servant Moses. ⁵⁷ May the LORD our God be with us, as He was with our fathers. May He never abandon or forsake us. ⁵⁸ May He incline our hearts to Him, that we may walk in all His ways and keep the commandments, the laws, and the rules, which He enjoined upon our fathers. ⁵⁹ And may these words of mine, which I have offered in supplication before the LORD, be close to the LORD our God day and night, that He may provide for His servant and for His people Israel, according to each day's needs—⁶⁰ to the end that all the peoples of the earth may know that the LORD alone is God, there is no other. ⁶¹ And may you be wholehearted with the LORD our God, to walk in His ways and keep His commandments, even as now."

⁶² The king and all Israel with him offered sacrifices before the LORD. ⁶³ Solomon offered 22,000 oxen and 120,000 sheep as sacrifices of well-being to the LORD. Thus the king and all the Israelites dedicated the House of the LORD. ⁶⁴ That day the king consecrated the center of the court that was in front of the House of the LORD. For it was there that he presented the burnt offerings, the meal offerings, and the fat parts of the offerings of well-being, because the bronze altar that was before the LORD was too small to hold the burnt offerings, the meal offerings, and the fat parts of the offerings of well-being.

⁶⁵ So Solomon and all Israel with him—a great assemblage, [coming] from Lebo-hamath to the Wadi of Egypt^a—observed the Feast^b at that time before the LORD our God, seven days and again seven days, fourteen days in all.

⁶⁶ On the eighth day^c he let the people go. They bade the king good-bye and went to their homes, joyful and glad of heart over all the goodness that the LORD had shown to His servant David and His people Israel.

8.62–66: Conclusion of the dedication. The attendance of the entire population, and the huge numbers of sacrifices offered, are intended to express the completeness of participation and consecration. Taken literally, they would have required the abandonment of all activity by the entire people for two weeks, and the rate of sacrifice (even assuming non-stop activity) would have been one oxen and six sheep every minute. 64: Burnt offerings (Lev. 1.3–17), those wholly consumed by fire. They are at the initiative of the donor, and serve to expiate any shortcomings not covered by purification or reparatory offerings. Meal offerings (Lev. 2.1–16), portions of grain burnt completely. The meal offering was a burnt offering that even poor people could afford (Lev. Rab. 8.4). Offerings of well-being (Lev. 3.1–16), sacrifice of an animal involving burning its inner organs (entrails, kidney, and liver) and the fat (suet) that is attached to them. These are thanksgiving or celebratory offerings, and the worshipper partakes of the meat that is not burnt.

^a I.e., coming from one end of the country to the other. ^b I.e., of Booths. Cf. Lev. 23.34.
^c I.e., of the second seven-day feast; cf. 2 Chron. 7.8–10.

9 When Solomon had finished building the House of the LORD and the royal palace and everything that Solomon had set his heart on constructing, ²the LORD appeared to Solomon a second time, as He had appeared to him at Gibeon. ³The LORD said to him, "I have heard the prayer and the supplication which you have offered to Me. I consecrate this House which you have built and I set My name there forever. My eyes and My heart shall ever be there. ⁴As for you, if you walk before Me as your father David walked before Me, wholeheartedly and with uprightness, doing all that I have commanded you [and] keeping My laws and My rules, ⁵then I will establish your throne of kingship over Israel forever, as I promised your father David, saying, 'Your line on the throne of Israel shall never end.' ⁶[But] if you and your descendants turn away from Me and do not keep the commandments [and] the laws which I have set before you, and go and serve other gods and worship them, ⁷then I will sweep^a Israel off the land which I gave them; I will reject^b the House which I have consecrated to My name; and Israel shall become a proverb and a byword among all peoples. ⁸And ^cas for this House, once so exalted, ^ceveryone passing by it shall be appalled and shall hiss.^d And when they ask, 'Why did the LORD do thus to the land and to this House?' ⁹they shall be told, 'It is because they forsook the LORD their God who freed them from the land of Egypt, and they embraced other gods and worshiped them and served them; therefore the LORD has brought all this calamity upon them.' "

¹⁰At the end of the twenty years^e during which Solomon constructed the two buildings, the LORD's House and the royal palace—¹¹since King Hiram of Tyre had supplied Solomon with all the cedar and cypress timber and gold that he required—King Solomon in turn gave Hiram twenty towns in the region of Galilee. ¹²But when Hiram came from Tyre to inspect the towns that Solomon had given him, he was not pleased with them. ¹³"My brother," he said, "what sort of towns are these you have given me?" So they were named the land of Cabul,^f as is still the case. ¹⁴However, Hiram sent the king one hundred and twenty talents of gold.

¹⁵This was the purpose of the forced labor which Solo-

9.1–9: The second revelation. This unit harks back to the revelation at Gibeon (ch 3.4–15). God here responds to the dedicatory prayers of Solomon; the narrative leaves unclear when and where this occurred. 2–3: God indicates that He had consecrated the House in response to Solomon's prayers and supplications. This emphasizes that it is His act of will, not Solomon's, that makes the Temple an effective place. 4–9: Reaffirming the conditionality of the promise to David and his dynasty, God denies Solomon's request of 8.25–26 for a guarantee. For emphasis, God states also that the existence of the Temple itself depends on the proper behavior of Israel. Vv. 6–9 are intended to anticipate the exile of all Israel, of both the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, that at this point in the narrative have not yet come into existence as separate kingdoms.

9.10–10.29: The rest of the deeds of Solomon. This section presents truncated information about various financial and administrative arrangements consequent to Solomon's building projects.

9.10–14: A final payment for supplies and for gold—not mentioned in the earlier contractual arrangements (5.20–31)—to king Hiram was made by Solomon in the form of twenty towns. Despite Hiram's disparaging remark that gave rise to the area being called Cabul, he accepted them and remitted a final gold payment to Solomon to cover the difference between the value of the cities and what was owed him.

11: Josephus reports that they were near Tyre, in western Galilee.

13: My brother, "brother" refers to an equal partner in a treaty.

14: Talent, the equivalent of 3,000 shekels (Exod. 38.25–26), weighed approximately 30 kg (66 pounds).

15–23: Solomon's labor force. Solomon conducted construction projects in many parts of his kingdom and depended on a combination of conscripted workers under a labor tax system as well as partially enslaved populations. The location of sites mentioned sug-

a Lit. "cut." b Lit. "dismiss from My presence."

c-c Targum and some other ancient versions read "and this House shall become a ruin."

d An action performed at the sight of ruin to ward off a like fate from the observer; cf. note at Jer. 18.16. e See 6.38–7.1. f Perhaps taken to mean "as nothing."

mon imposed: It was to build the House of the LORD, his own palace, the Millo,^a and the wall of Jerusalem, and [to fortify] Hazor, Megiddo, and Gezer. (16 Pharaoh king of Egypt had come up and captured Gezer; he destroyed it by fire, killed the Canaanites who dwelt in the town, and gave it as dowry to his daughter, Solomon's wife.) 17 So Solomon fortified Gezer, lower Beth-horon, 18 Baalith, and Tamar^b in the wilderness, in the land [of Judah], 19 and all of Solomon's garrison towns, chariot towns, and cavalry towns—everything that Solomon set his heart on building in Jerusalem and in the Lebanon, and throughout the territory that he ruled. 20 All the people that were left of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites who were not of the Israelite stock—²¹ those of their descendants who remained in the land and whom the Israelites were not able to annihilate—of these Solomon made a slave force, as is still the case. 22 But he did not reduce any Israelites to slavery; they served, rather, as warriors and as his attendants, officials, and officers, and as commanders of his chariotry and cavalry.

²³ These were the prefects that were in charge of Solomon's works and were foremen over the people engaged in the work, who numbered 550.^c

²⁴ As soon as Pharaoh's daughter went up from the City of David to the palace that he had built for her, he built the Millo.^a

²⁵ Solomon used to offer burnt offerings and sacrifices of well-being three times a year on the altar that he had built for the LORD, and ^d he used to offer incense on the one that was before the LORD. And he kept the House in repair.^d

²⁶ King Solomon also built a fleet of ships at Ezion-geber, which is near Eloth^e on the shore of the Sea of Reeds in the land of Edom. 27 Hiram sent servants of his with the fleet, mariners who were experienced on the sea, to serve with Solomon's men. 28 They came to Ophir; there they obtained gold in the amount of four hundred and twenty talents, which they delivered to King Solomon.

10 The queen of Sheba heard of Solomon's fame, ^f through the name of the LORD,^f and she came to test him with hard questions. 2 She arrived in Jerusalem with a very large retinue, with camels bearing spices, a gests that he felt threatened by Arameans northeast of the Sea of Galilee, Philistines from the coastal plain, and Egyptians from the southwest. The author drew this information from the same source as 5.27–31. 21: Slave force (Heb "mas'oved") refers to tax paid in labor. V. 22 suggests that the status of non-Israelites under this system differed from that of Israelites; this contradicts 5.27–28. 23: The names of the prefects are not presented. In 2 Chron. 8.10, their number is given as 250.

9.26–10.22: The outcome of Solomon's additional business dealings with Hiram of Tyre.

9.26–28: Solomon and Hiram undertook a joint venture in a combination of land and sea trade. Hiram provided the seafaring know-how and Solomon granted overland access to the port at Ezion-geber on the Gulf of Eilat. From there, both kings had access to the Red Sea and beyond. 28: Ophir, location uncertain. It has been identified with ports or regions in Ethiopia, North Somalia, South Arabia, and even India.

10.1–13: The story of the queen's visit to Solomon continues the theme of wisdom and wealth (3.12–13). It interrupts the report of his trading venture, which continues in 10.14, and was inserted because of its thematic connection to the international business ventures. 1: Sheba, ancient Sabea at the southwest corner of the Arabian peninsula, controlled access into the Sea of Aden from the Red Sea at the Bab el-Mandeb. The story tells that the queen came to meet a potential trading partner. She provided him with her gifts, and he reciprocated.

^a A citadel.

^b So kethib, cf. Ezek. 47.19, 48.28; qere Tadmor.

^c Their names are not listed in the text.

^{d-d} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^e Elsewhere called Elath.

^{f-f} The force of the phrase is uncertain.

great quantity of gold, and precious stones. When she came to Solomon, she asked him all that she had in mind. ³Solomon had answers for all her questions; there was nothing that the king did not know, [nothing] to which he could not give her an answer. ⁴When the queen of Sheba observed all of Solomon's wisdom, and the palace he had built, ⁵the fare of his table, the seating of his courtiers, the service and attire of his attendants, and his wine service, "and the burnt offerings that he offered at" the House of the LORD, she was left breathless.

⁶She said to the king, "The report I heard in my own land about you and your wisdom was true. ⁷But I did not believe the reports until I came and saw with my own eyes that not even the half had been told me; your wisdom and wealth surpass the reports that I heard. ⁸How fortunate are your men and how fortunate are these your courtiers, who are always in attendance on you and can hear your wisdom! ⁹Praised be the LORD your God, who delighted in you and set you on the throne of Israel. It is because of the LORD's everlasting love for Israel that He made you king to administer justice and righteousness."

¹⁰She presented the king with one hundred and twenty talents of gold, and a large quantity of spices, and precious stones. Never again did such a vast quantity of spices arrive as that which the queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon.—¹¹Moreover, Hiram's fleet, which carried gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir a huge quantity of almug wood^b and precious stones. ¹²The king used the almug wood for decorations in the House of the LORD and in the royal palace, and for harps and lyres for the musicians. Such a quantity of almug wood has never arrived or been seen to this day.—¹³King Solomon, in turn, gave the queen of Sheba everything she wanted and asked for, in addition to what King Solomon gave her out of his royal bounty. Then she and her attendants left and returned to her own land.

¹⁴The weight of the gold which Solomon received every year was 666 talents of gold, ¹⁵besides what came from tradesmen, from the traffic of the merchants, and from all the kings of Arabia and the governors of the regions. ¹⁶King Solomon made 200 shields of beaten gold—600 shekels of gold to each shield—¹⁷and 300 bucklers of beaten gold—three minas of gold to each buckler. The king placed them in the Lebanon Forest House.

¹⁸The king also made a large throne of ivory, and he

11–12: Information about almug wood and how it was used dates the Ophir venture to within a few years of Solomon's initial arrangement with Hiram. These verses interrupt the account of the queen's visit.

10.14–29: Solomon's wealth. Extravagant golden furnishings were captured by David from the Aramean king Hadadezer (2 Sam. 8.7). Ancient Near Eastern documents indicate that gold bowls and dishes were given as gifts to royalty while gold shields are mentioned by Assyrian kings as prize spoils of war. Solomon's trade arrangements explain his access to gold. 22: A Tarshish fleet may refer to a type of ship or to the place to which such ships sailed. The fleet was Solomon's, and run independently from ships involved in joint ventures with Hiram. Since the Ophir fleet plied the Red Sea trade, the Tarshish fleet may have competed with Phoenicians around the Mediterranean. Scholars have identified Tarshish with Sardinia or with Tartessus in southern Spain. 23–25: Solomon's wealth and wisdom helped confer great recognition and honor on him. These verses reprise God's grants to Solomon in 3.12–13 and what was already narrated in 5.14. 26–29: Solomon used and traded in chariots from Egypt and horses from two small kingdoms in Anatolia, keeping some (9.19) and reselling others to small Hittite kingdoms in North Syria near the Euphrates and to Aramean kingdoms (cf. 2 Sam. 10.19). Information about his arms trade with Arameans brings to the foreground the brief notice in 11.23–25.

a-a 2 Chron. 9.4 reads "... and the procession with which he went up to ..."

b Others "sandalwood."

overlaid it with refined gold. ¹⁹Six steps led up to the throne, and the throne had a back with a rounded top, and arms on either side of the seat. Two lions stood beside the arms, ²⁰and twelve lions stood on the six steps, six on either side. No such throne was ever made for any other kingdom.^a ²¹All King Solomon's drinking cups were of gold, and all the utensils of the Lebanon Forest House were of pure gold: silver did not count for anything in Solomon's days. ²²For the king had a Tarshish^b fleet on the sea, along with Hiram's fleet. Once every three years, the Tarshish fleet came in, bearing gold and silver, ivory, apes, and peacocks.

²³King Solomon excelled all the kings on earth in wealth and in wisdom. ²⁴All the world came to pay homage to Solomon and to listen to the wisdom with which God had endowed him; ²⁵and each one would bring his tribute—silver and gold objects, robes, weapons and spices, horses and mules—in the amount due each year.

²⁶Solomon assembled chariots and horses. He had 1,400 chariots and 12,000 horses, which he stationed^c in the chariot towns and with the king in Jerusalem. ²⁷The king made silver as plentiful in Jerusalem as stones, and cedars as plentiful as sycamores in the Shephelah. ²⁸Solomon's horses were procured from Mizraim^d and Kue. The king's dealers would buy them from Kue at a fixed price. ²⁹A chariot imported from Mizraim^d cost 600 shekels of silver, and a horse 150; these in turn were exported by them^e to all the kings of the Hittites and the kings of the Arameans.

11 King Solomon loved many foreign women in addition to Pharaoh's daughter—Moabite, Ammonite, Edomite, Phoenician, and Hittite women, ²from the nations of which the LORD had said to the Israelites, "None of you shall join them and none of them shall join you, lest they turn your heart away to follow their gods." Such Solomon clung to and loved. ³He had seven hundred royal wives and three hundred concubines; and his wives turned his heart away. ⁴In his old age, his wives turned away Solomon's heart after other gods, and he was not as wholeheartedly devoted to the LORD his God as his father David had been. ⁵Solomon followed Ashtoreth the god-

11.1–43: The dissolution of Solomon's kingdom. Some of what is narrated here occurred simultaneously with what was presented in chs 1–10. For example, Solomon's marriage to an Ammonite princess occurred while David was alive (14.21). This suggests that the material is arranged theologically rather than chronologically; the first part narrates the successes of Solomon while he observes the law, while ch 11 is part of a section which narrates his failures that result from abrogating the law. 1: Solomon's diplomatic marriages reflect the range of his trading ventures and his attempt to secure alliances with kingdoms on his undefined eastern Transjordanian borders: Ammon, Moab, Edom. Malbim notes that the author's choice of words, loved many foreign women, denotes a child's lust after objects rather than an adult's love for a particular woman. This invites a contrast between David, whose impetuous acts were sins of youth, and Solomon, who sinned in his old age. 1–3: Having many wives violated general instructions to the king (Deut. 17.16–17). Foreign wives would introduce their pagan practices into Judah. The author here combines various biblical texts and extends earlier traditions that prohibit intermarriage with specific nations (Exod. 34.11–16; Deut. 7.1–6; 23.4–9). A similar general ban on intermarriage is found in Ezra-Nehemiah, suggesting that this text in Kings is from the latest, exilic edition of the book. 5–8: Solomon's tolerance of, participation in, and contributions toward foreign worship—corollary activities to his diplomatic marriages—are described and condemned by the author.

^a Or "prince"; like Phoenician mamlakt.

^b Probably a fleet of large ships.

^c So 2 Chron. 1.14; 9.25; Heb. here "led."

^d Usually Egypt, here perhaps Mušru, a neighbor of Kue (Cilicia).

^e I.e., Solomon's dealers.

^f I.e., in marriage; cf. Deut. 7.3–4; 23.4, 8–9.

ness of the Phoenicians, and Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites.

⁶Solomon did what was displeasing to the LORD and did not remain loyal to the LORD like his father David. ⁷At that time, Solomon built a shrine for Chemosh the abomination of Moab on the hill near Jerusalem, and one for Molech the abomination of the Ammonites. ⁸And he did the same for all his foreign wives who offered and sacrificed to their gods.

⁹The LORD was angry with Solomon, because his heart turned away from the LORD, the God of Israel, who had appeared to him twice ¹⁰and had commanded him about this matter, not to follow other gods; he did not obey what the LORD had commanded. ¹¹And the LORD said to Solomon, ^a“Because you are guilty of this^a—you have not kept My covenant and the laws which I enjoined upon you—I will tear the kingdom away from you and give it to one of your servants. ¹²But, for the sake of your father David, I will not do it in your lifetime; I will tear it away from your son. ¹³However, I will not tear away the whole kingdom; I will give your son one tribe, for the sake of My servant David and for the sake of Jerusalem which I have chosen.”

¹⁴So the LORD raised up an adversary against Solomon, the Edomite Hadad, who was of the royal family of Edom. ¹⁵When David ^bwas in^b Edom, Joab the army commander went up to bury the slain, and he killed every male in Edom; ¹⁶for Joab and all Israel stayed there for six months until he had killed off every male in Edom. ¹⁷But Hadad,^c together with some Edomite men, servants of his father, escaped and headed for Egypt; Hadad was then a young boy. ¹⁸Setting out from Midian, they came to Paran and took along with them men from Paran. Thus they came to Egypt, to Pharaoh king of Egypt, who gave him a house, assigned a food allowance to him, and granted him an estate. ¹⁹Pharaoh took a great liking to Hadad and gave him his sister-in-law, the sister of Queen Tahpenes, as wife. ²⁰The sister of Tahpenes bore him a son, Genubath. Tahpenes weaned^d him in Pharaoh's palace, and Genubath remained in Pharaoh's palace among the sons of Pharaoh. ²¹When Hadad heard in Egypt that David had been laid to rest with his fathers and that Joab the army commander was dead, Hadad said to Pharaoh, “Give me leave to go to my own country.” ²²Pharaoh

9–13: God's angry reaction to the actual behavior of a properly informed and warned Solomon (cf. 3.5; 9.2). 10: Alludes to 9.4–7.

11–13: The final judgment compromises God's promises to David (2 Sam. 7.16). The kingdom will be torn away, but not the whole kingdom as it was from Saul (1 Sam. 15.28; 28.17–18). For the sake of. . . David is a major subtheme of the book (11.34; 15.4; 2 Kings 8.19; 19.34; 20.6). 14–22: Adversary, Heb “satan,” related to later English “Satan.” Hadad of Edom, also connected to the Egyptian court through marriage, threatened Solomon from the east. Solomon's overland caravans from Eilat most likely followed routes in the eastern Sinai to avoid Edomite raiders.

a-a Lit. “This is with you.”

b-b Emendation yields “defeated”; cf. 2 Sam. 8.13.

c Heb. Adad. d Septuagint reads “reared.”

replied, "What do you lack with me, that you want to go to your own country?" But he said, "Nevertheless, give me leave to go."

²³Another adversary that God raised up against Solomon^a was Rezon son of Eliada, who had fled from his lord, King Hadadezer of Zobah, ²⁴when David was slaughtering them. He gathered men about him and became captain over a troop; they went to Damascus and settled there, and they established a kingdom in Damascus. ²⁵He was an adversary of Israel all the days of Solomon, adding to the trouble [caused by] Hadad; he repudiated [the authority of] Israel and reigned over Aram.

²⁶Jeroboam son of Nebat, an Ephraimite of Zeredah, the son of a widow whose name was Zeruah, was in Solomon's service; he raised his hand against the king. ²⁷The circumstances under which he raised his hand against the king were as follows: Solomon built the Millo and repaired the breach of the city of his father, David. ²⁸This Jeroboam was an able man, and when Solomon saw that the young man was a capable worker, he appointed him over all the forced labor of the House of Joseph.

²⁹During that time Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem and the prophet Ahijah of Shiloh met him on the way. He had put on a new robe; and when the two were alone in the open country, ³⁰Ahijah took hold of the new robe he was wearing and tore it into twelve pieces. ³¹"Take ten pieces," he said to Jeroboam. "For thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: I am about to tear the kingdom out of Solomon's hands, and I will give you ten tribes. ³²But one tribe shall remain his—for the sake of My servant David and for the sake of Jerusalem, the city that I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel. ³³For they have forsaken Me; they have worshiped Ashtoreth the goddess of the Phoenicians, Chemosh the god of Moab, and Milcom the god of the Ammonites; they have not walked in My ways, or done what is pleasing to Me, or [kept] My laws and rules, as his father David did. ³⁴However, I will not take the entire kingdom away from him, but will keep him as ruler as long as he lives for the sake of My servant David whom I chose, and who kept My commandments and My laws. ³⁵But I will take the kingship out of the hands of his son and give it to you—the ten tribes. ³⁶To his son I will give one tribe, so that there may be a lamp for My servant David forever before Me in Jerusalem—the city where I have chosen to establish My name. ³⁷But you have been chosen by Me; reign^b wherever you wish, and you shall be

23–25: Rezon, a victim of David's victories over the Arameans, eventually wrested Damascus from Israelite control (cf. 2 Sam. 8.6). He may have threatened Israel with the very chariots that had been sold to him by Solomon.

26–40: According to the author, Ahijah's message fomented Jeroboam's action. Jeroboam's defiance of Solomon on behalf of northern tribes—no details are provided and several words seem to be missing in the Heb text—had the support of a prophet. The full measure of Jeroboam's popularity is indicated in 12.1–6.

36: The image of a lamp became a special metaphor for David and for the continuity of his line in the language of the author and like-minded people (2 Sam. 21.17; Ps. 132.17).

^a Heb. "him." ^b I.e., establish your residence.

king over Israel. ³⁸If you heed all that I command you, and walk in My ways, and do what is right in My sight, keeping My laws and commandments as My servant David did, then I will be with you and I will build for you a lasting dynasty as I did for David. I hereby give Israel to you; ³⁹and I will chastise David's descendants for that [sin], though not forever."

⁴⁰Solomon sought to put Jeroboam to death, but Jeroboam promptly fled to King Shishak of Egypt; and he remained in Egypt till the death of Solomon.

⁴¹The other events of Solomon's reign, and all his actions and his wisdom, are recorded in the book of the Annals of Solomon. ⁴²The length of Solomon's reign in Jerusalem, over all Israel, was forty years. ⁴³Solomon slept with his fathers and was buried in the city of his father David; and his son Rehoboam succeeded him as king.

12 Rehoboam went to Shechem, for all Israel had come to Shechem to acclaim him as king. ²Jeroboam son of Nebat learned of it while he was still in Egypt; for Jeroboam had fled from King Solomon, ³and had settled in Egypt. ⁴They sent for him; and Jeroboam and all the assembly of Israel came and spoke to Rehoboam as follows: ⁴"Your father made our yoke heavy. Now lighten the harsh labor and the heavy yoke which your father laid on us, and we will serve you." ⁵He answered them, "Go away for three days and then come back to me." So the people went away.

⁶King Rehoboam took counsel with the elders who had served his father Solomon during his lifetime. He said, "What answer do you advise [me] to give to this people?" ⁷They answered him, "If you will be a servant to those people today and serve them, and if you respond to them with kind words, they will be your servants always." ⁸But he ignored the advice that the elders gave him, and took counsel with the young men who had grown up with him and were serving him. ⁹"What," he asked, "do you advise that we reply to the people who said to me, 'Lighten the yoke that your father placed upon us'?" ¹⁰And the young men who had grown up with him answered, "Speak thus to the people who said to you, 'Your father made our yoke heavy, now you make it lighter for us.' Say to them, 'My little finger is thicker than my father's loins. ¹¹My father imposed a heavy yoke on you, and I will add to your yoke; my father flogged you with whips, but I will flog you with scorpions.'"

40: Shishak (Egyptian Shoshenq) was pharaoh 945–924 BCE. His relationship with Jeroboam bore fruit after the death of Solomon.

41–42: In citing the sources of his information about Solomon and indicating that he has excerpted only part of the information from them, the author suggests the veracity of the descriptions which he has evaluated theologically.

41: The book of the Annals of Solomon is presented as an actual document available to the author and to his readers. It is unknown aside from this reference to it. Whether or not it actually existed, the reference—like a footnote in a scholarly composition—indicates a reliance on written documents as a source of authority.

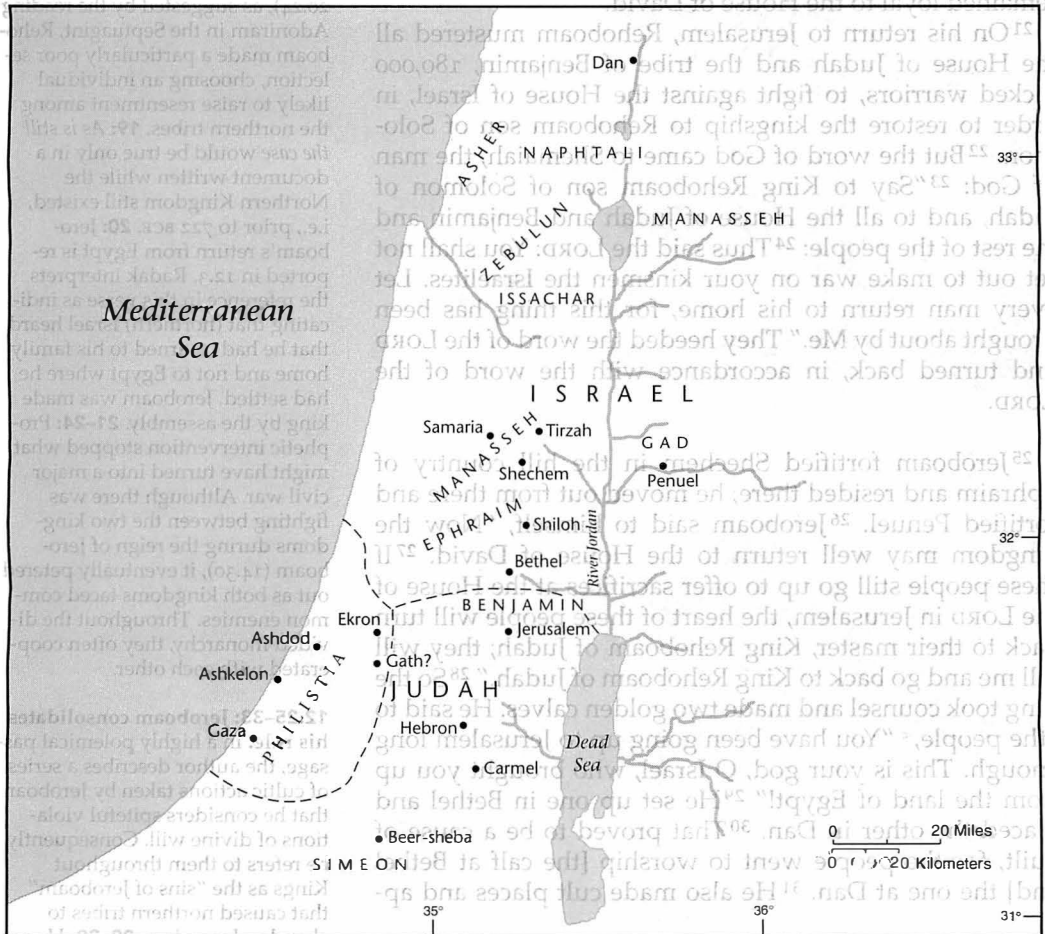

12.1–14.18: The secession of northern tribes from the united kingdom and the creation of the Northern Kingdom of Israel.

12.1–17: The negotiation at Shechem. Although prophets, acting on instructions from God, might anoint individuals as kings, the authority of any persons so anointed had to be publicly acclaimed by those over whom they ruled, as in the case of Saul (1 Sam. 11.14–15), David over Judah (2 Sam. 2.4, 7), David over all the tribes (2 Sam. 5.1–5), and Solomon (1 Kings 1.39–40). The northern tribes were ready to acclaim Rehoboam as their king, but only if he agreed to certain general conditions. The text has a clear polemical slant, and makes Rehoboam look foolish, thereby justifying the establishment of the Northern Kingdom. 1: Shechem, the major city directly north of Jerusalem on the north-south highway, lay near the border of the two largest and most powerful northern tribes, Ephraim and Manasseh. All Israel: The meaning of this phrase changes from 11.42, where it means the entire kingdom, north (Israel) and south (Judah), to 12.16, where it means the north only. 2–3: Jeroboam (11.26–40), summoned to Shechem from Egypt by a group of tribal leaders (the assembly of Israel), takes part in a-a 2 Chron. 10.2 reads "So Jeroboam returned from Egypt."

¹²Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam on the third day, since the king had told them: "Come back on the third day." ¹³The king answered the people harshly, ignoring the advice that the elders had given him. ¹⁴He spoke to them in accordance with the advice of the young men, and said, "My father made your yoke heavy, but I will add to your yoke; my father flogged you with whips, but I will flog you with scorpions." ¹⁵(The king did not listen to the people; for the LORD had brought it about in order to fulfill the promise that the LORD had made through Ahijah the Shilonite to Jeroboam son of Nebat.) ¹⁶When all Israel saw that the king had not listened to them, the people answered the king:

the negotiation. 11: Scorpions, may refer to a particular thorny plant or to some type of whip. 15: The author's theological comment on the illogical turn of events. All that transpired was a fulfillment of what God told Solomon (11.11) and what Ahijah told Jeroboam (11.31-36). 16: Northerners take up the rallying cry of an earlier anti-David rebel, Sheba son of Bichri, whose rebellion had threatened to split the kingdom (2 Sam. 20.1).

The divided monarchy. The dashed line shows the approximate boundaries between Israel, Judah, and Philistia.

"We have no portion in David,
No share in Jesse's son!
To your tents, O Israel!

Now look to your own House, O David."

So the Israelites returned to their homes.^a ¹⁷But Rehoboam continued to reign over the Israelites who lived in the towns of Judah.

¹⁸King Rehoboam sent Adoram,^b who was in charge of the forced labor, but all Israel pelted him to death with stones. Thereupon King Rehoboam hurriedly mounted his chariot and fled to Jerusalem. ¹⁹Thus Israel revolted against the House of David, as is still the case.

²⁰When all Israel heard that Jeroboam had returned, they sent messengers and summoned him to the assembly and made him king over all Israel. Only the tribe of Judah remained loyal to the House of David.

²¹On his return to Jerusalem, Rehoboam mustered all the House of Judah and the tribe of Benjamin, 180,000 picked warriors, to fight against the House of Israel, in order to restore the kingship to Rehoboam son of Solomon. ²²But the word of God came to Shemaiah, the man of God: ²³"Say to King Rehoboam son of Solomon of Judah, and to all the House of Judah and Benjamin and the rest of the people: ²⁴Thus said the LORD: You shall not set out to make war on your kinsmen the Israelites. Let every man return to his home, for this thing has been brought about by Me." They heeded the word of the LORD and turned back, in accordance with the word of the LORD.

²⁵Jeroboam fortified Shechem in the hill country of Ephraim and resided there; he moved out from there and fortified Penuel. ²⁶Jeroboam said to himself, "Now the kingdom may well return to the House of David. ²⁷If these people still go up to offer sacrifices at the House of the LORD in Jerusalem, the heart of these people will turn back to their master, King Rehoboam of Judah; they will kill me and go back to King Rehoboam of Judah." ²⁸So the king took counsel and made two golden calves. He said to "the people,"^c "You have been going up to Jerusalem long enough. This is your god, O Israel, who brought you up from the land of Egypt!" ²⁹He set up one in Bethel and placed the other in Dan. ³⁰That proved to be a cause of guilt, for the people went to worship [the calf at Bethel and] the one at Dan. ³¹He also made cult places and ap-

¹⁷: Benjaminite clans living within view of Jerusalem may have cast their lot with Judah (v. 21); those farther north may have joined the northern confederation. Judah, here, refers not to the tribe but to the kingdom, dominated by the tribe, that also included Simeon, to the south of Judah.

12.18–24: Israel's rebellion and the truce. 18: Noting that the text does not clarify to where or for what Adoram was sent, Josephus suggests that Rehoboam sent him to apologize on the king's behalf. If this individual is identical to Adoniram, who was in charge of the forced labor (4.6; 5.28; see 2 Sam. 20.24), as suggested by the reading Adoniram in the Septuagint, Rehoboam made a particularly poor selection, choosing an individual likely to raise resentment among the northern tribes. 19: As is still the case would be true only in a document written while the Northern Kingdom still existed, i.e., prior to 722 BCE. 20: Jeroboam's return from Egypt is reported in 12.3. Radak interprets the reference in this verse as indicating that (northern) Israel heard that he had returned to his family home and not to Egypt where he had settled. Jeroboam was made king by the assembly. 21–24: Prophetic intervention stopped what might have turned into a major civil war. Although there was fighting between the two kingdoms during the reign of Jeroboam (14.30), it eventually petered out as both kingdoms faced common enemies. Throughout the divided monarchy, they often cooperated with each other.

12.25–33: Jeroboam consolidates his rule. In a highly polemical passage, the author describes a series of cultic actions taken by Jeroboam that he considers spiteful violations of divine will. Consequently, he refers to them throughout Kings as the "sins of Jeroboam" that caused northern tribes to abandon Jerusalem. 28–30: He set up images, one at Dan, the northernmost border city, and one at pointed priests from the ranks of the people who were not of Levite descent.

^a Lit. "tents."

^b Elsewhere called Adoniram; cf. 2 Sam. 20.24 and note. ^{c-c} Heb. "them."

³²He stationed at Bethel the priests of the shrines that he had appointed to sacrifice to the calves that he had made. And Jeroboam established a festival on the fifteenth day of the eighth month; in imitation of the festival in Judah, he established one at Bethel, and he ascended the altar [there]. ³³On the fifteenth day of the eighth month—the month in which he had contrived of his own mind to establish a festival for the Israelites—Jeroboam ascended the altar that he had made in Bethel.

13 As he ascended the altar to present an offering, ¹a man of God arrived at Bethel from Judah at the command of the LORD. While Jeroboam was standing on the altar^a to present the offering, the man of God, at the command of the LORD, cried out against the altar: ²“O altar, altar! Thus said the LORD: A son shall be born to the House of David, Josiah by name; and he shall slaughter upon you the priests of the shrines who bring offerings upon you. And human bones shall be burned upon you.” ³He gave a portent on that day, saying, “Here is the portent that the LORD has decreed: This altar shall break apart, and the ashes on it shall be spilled.” ⁴When the king heard what the man of God had proclaimed against the altar in Bethel, Jeroboam stretched out his arm above the altar and cried, “Seize him!” But the arm that he stretched out against him became rigid, and he could not draw it back. ⁵The altar broke apart and its ashes were spilled—the very portent that the man of God had announced at the LORD’s command. ⁶Then the king spoke up and said to the man of God, “Please entreat the LORD your God and pray for me that I may be able to draw back my arm.” The man of God entreated the LORD and the king was able to draw his arm back; it became as it was before.

⁷The king said to the man of God, “Come with me to my house and have some refreshment; and I shall give you a gift.” ⁸But the man of God replied to the king, “Even if you give me half your wealth, I will not go in with you, nor will I eat bread or drink water in this place; ⁹for so I was commanded by the word of the LORD: You shall eat no bread and drink no water, nor shall you go back by the road by which you came.” ¹⁰So he left by another road and did not go back by the road on which he had come to Bethel.

¹¹There was an old prophet living in Bethel; and his sons^b came and told him all the things that the man of Bethel, the southernmost main center of his kingdom. Calves, most likely small images of bulls such as have been found in excavations, were held to be in violation of Deut. 5:8–9. The story of Jeroboam’s golden calves shares much in common with the episode of fashioning the single golden calf in the wilderness in Exod. ch 32. For example, the phrase “These are your gods, O Israel, who brought you out of the land of Egypt!” is also found though only one calf was made by Aaron (Exod. 32.4 b-b, which translates the Heb accurately). 31: The shrines are held to be in violation of Deut. 12.13–14. 32–33: Jeroboam celebrated Tabernacles, which was to be celebrated on the fifteenth day of the seventh month (Lev. 23.34), on the fifteenth day of the eighth month as determined in Jerusalem, but which was probably what he determined to be the seventh month (cf. 8.2). He may have intercalated a month to align calendared agricultural festivals with the actual harvest patterns of northern tribes, particularly those in Galilee. Tannaitic traditions from the Second Temple period indicate that the year could be intercalated under certain circumstances because of late grain or fruit harvests (b. Sanh. 11a–12b). As Solomon had apparently done (9.25), Jeroboam as king officiated on the altar.

13.1–33: Two prophetic stories connected to Bethel. 1–10: A prophecy against the Bethel altar which is part of a larger miracle story. Specific mention of Josiah connects this to the fulfillment narrative associated with that king in 2 Kings 23.15–16. Proof of the validity of long-range prediction is a short-range prediction in v. 3 fulfilled in v. 5. The story cannot have achieved its current form until after the reforms of Josiah, ca. 620 BCE. Like the following story, this narrative emphasizes the importance of divine obedience. 11–32: A prophetic story in which a Bethel prophet deceptively tests the authenticity of the man of God and validates his long-term

^a i.e., at the top of the steps or ramp. ^b Heb. “son.”

God had done that day in Bethel [and] the words that he had spoken to the king. When they told it to their father, ¹²their father said to them, "Which road did he leave by?" ¹³His sons had seen^a the road taken by the man of God who had come from Judah. ¹³"Saddle the ass for me," he said to his sons. They saddled the ass for him, and he mounted it ¹⁴and rode after the man of God. He came upon him sitting under a terebinth and said to him, "Are you the man of God who came from Judah?" "Yes, I am," he answered. ¹⁵"Come home with me," he said, "and have something to eat." ¹⁶He replied, "I may not go back with you and enter your home; and I may not eat bread or drink water in this place; ¹⁷the order I received by the word of the LORD was: You shall not eat bread or drink water there; nor shall you return by the road on which you came." ¹⁸"I am a prophet, too," said the other, "and an angel said to me by command of the LORD: Bring him back with you to your house, that he may eat bread and drink water." He was lying to him. ¹⁹So he went back with him, and he ate bread and drank water in his house.

²⁰While they were sitting at the table, the word of the LORD came to the prophet who had brought him back. ²¹He cried out to the man of God who had come from Judah: "Thus said the LORD: Because you have flouted the word of the LORD and have not observed what the LORD your God commanded you, ²²but have gone back and eaten bread and drunk water in the place of which He said to you, 'Do not eat bread or drink water [there], your corpse shall not come to the grave of your fathers.'" ²³After he had eaten bread and had drunk, he saddled the ass for him—for the prophet whom he had brought back. ²⁴He set out, and a lion came upon him on the road and killed him. His corpse lay on the road, with the ass standing beside it, and the lion also standing beside the corpse. ²⁵Some men who passed by saw the corpse lying on the road and the lion standing beside the corpse; they went and told it in the town where the old prophet lived. ²⁶And when the prophet who had brought him back from the road heard it, he said, "That is the man of God who flouted the LORD's command; the LORD gave him over to the lion, which mauled him and killed him in accordance with the word that the LORD had spoken to him." ²⁷He said to his sons, "Saddle the ass for me," and they did so. ²⁸He set out and found the corpse lying on the road, with the ass and the lion standing beside the corpse; the lion prediction. The prophet's prediction that the man of God would not be buried in a family tomb (vv. 21-22) is fulfilled in vv. 29-30.

a-a Septuagint reads "And his sons showed."

had not eaten the corpse nor had it mauled the ass. ²⁹The prophet lifted up the corpse of the man of God, laid it on the ass, and brought it back; it was brought to the town of the old prophet for lamentation and burial. ³⁰He laid the corpse in his own burial place; and they lamented over it, "Alas, my brother!" ³¹After burying him, he said to his sons, "When I die, bury me in the grave where the man of God lies buried; lay my bones beside his. ³²For what he announced by the word of the LORD against the altar in Bethel, and against all the cult places in the towns of Samaria, shall surely come true."

³³Even after this incident, Jeroboam did not turn back from his evil way, but kept on appointing priests for the shrines from the ranks of the people. He ordained as priests of the shrines any who so desired. ³⁴Thereby the House of Jeroboam incurred guilt—to their utter annihilation from the face of the earth.

14 At that time, Abijah, a son of Jeroboam, fell sick. ²Jeroboam said to his wife, "Go and disguise yourself, so that you will not be recognized as Jeroboam's wife, and go to Shiloh. The prophet Ahijah lives there, the one who predicted that I would be king over this people. ³Take with you ten loaves, some wafers, and a jug of honey, and go to him; he will tell you what will happen to the boy." ⁴Jeroboam's wife did so; she left and went to Shiloh and came to the house of Ahijah. Now Ahijah could not see, for his eyes had become sightless with age; ⁵but the LORD had said to Ahijah, "Jeroboam's wife is coming to inquire of you concerning her son, who is sick. Speak to her thus and thus. When she arrives, she will be in disguise."

⁶Ahijah heard the sound of her feet as she came through the door, and he said, "Come in, wife of Jeroboam. Why are you disguised? I have a harsh message for you. ⁷Go tell Jeroboam: Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: I raised you up from among the people and made you a ruler over My people Israel; ⁸I tore away the kingdom from the House of David and gave it to you. But you have not been like My servant David, who kept My commandments and followed Me with all his heart, doing only what was right in My sight. ⁹You have acted worse than all those who preceded you; you have gone and made for yourself other gods and molten images to vex Me; and Me you have cast behind your back. ¹⁰Therefore I will bring disaster upon the House of Jeroboam and will 33: This incident refers to the healing event and its aftermath narrated above in vv. 6–10. The story of vv. 11–32 interrupts the flow between vv. 10 and 33, and may have been inserted by a later editor.

14.1–18: *A second tale about the prophet Ahijah and Jeroboam inculcating the lesson that the divine retribution is worked out through natural and man-made disasters, and emphasizing the extraordinary power of the prophet. 3: *Loaves . . . wafers . . . honey, as a gift (1 Sam. 9.7–8). The wafers (Heb "nikudim," cf. Josh 9.5, "crumbly") were perhaps a kind of biscuit or hardtack, meant to last longer than regular bread. 4: *Could not see . . . sightless, so his identification of Jeroboam's wife is due only to God's revelation. 7–11: A prophetic speech serving as a preamble to a prediction. Ahijah alludes to 11.37–38 where conditions which Jeroboam did not meet were set out. 10–11: A medium-range prediction against Jeroboam's dynasty is fulfilled in 15.29.

cut off from Jeroboam every male, ^a“bond and free,”^a in Israel. I will sweep away the House of Jeroboam utterly, as dung is swept away. ¹¹ Anyone belonging to Jeroboam who dies in the town shall be devoured by dogs; and anyone who dies in the open country shall be eaten by the birds of the air; for the LORD has spoken. ¹² As for you, go back home; as soon as you set foot in the town, the child will die. ¹³ And all Israel shall lament over him and bury him; he alone of Jeroboam’s family shall be brought to burial, for in him alone of the House of Jeroboam has some devotion been found to the LORD, the God of Israel. ¹⁴ Moreover, the LORD will raise up a king over Israel who will destroy the House of Jeroboam, ^b“this day and even now.”^b

¹⁵ “The LORD will strike Israel until it sways like a reed in water. He will uproot Israel from this good land that He gave to their fathers, and will scatter them beyond the Euphrates, because they have provoked the LORD by the sacred posts that they have made for themselves. ¹⁶ He will forsake Israel because of the sins that Jeroboam committed and led Israel to commit.”

¹⁷ Jeroboam’s wife got up and left, and she went to Tirzah. As soon as she stepped over the threshold of her house, the child died. ¹⁸ They buried him and all Israel lamented over him, in accordance with the word that the LORD had spoken through His servant the prophet Ahijah.

¹⁹ The other events of Jeroboam’s reign, how he fought and how he ruled, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. ²⁰ Jeroboam reigned twenty-two years; then he slept with his fathers, and his son Nadab succeeded him as king.

²¹ Meanwhile, Rehoboam son of Solomon had become king in Judah. Rehoboam was forty-one years old when he became king, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem—the city the LORD had chosen out of all the tribes of Israel to establish His name there. His mother’s name was Naamah the Ammonitess. ²² Judah did what was displeasing to the LORD, and angered Him more than their fathers had done by the sins that they committed. ²³ They too built for themselves shrines, pillars, and sacred posts on every high hill and under every leafy tree; ²⁴ there were also male prostitutes in the land. [Judah] imitated all the abhorrent practices of the nations that the LORD had dispossessed before the Israelites.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; possibly “kinsman and friend,” cf. 16.11.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

12–13: A short-range prediction that Jeroboam’s son Abijah will die is fulfilled in 14.17–18. These verses originally continued v. 6 in the narrative. 15: A long-range prediction that Israel will be destroyed and its people scattered across the Euphrates is fulfilled in 2 Kings 17.5–6. Sacred posts, Heb “asherim,” were symbols of the goddess Asherah. In northern Canaanite myths she was the wife of El, but in southern Canaanite traditions she was associated with Baal. Heb inscriptions from the 8th and 7th centuries BCE discovered at Khirbet el-Kom near Lachish and at Kuntillet Ajrud in Sinai provide extrabiblical proof that some people in Judah associated her with the God of Israel.

14.19–20: A concluding summary used throughout Kings. Jeroboam’s reign included other administrative and military accomplishments that the author knows about from the Annals of the Kings of Israel. Nearly twenty-two years’ worth of royal activities are not mentioned here; he cited only what was of interest to him for his purpose.

14.21–31: Rehoboam’s reign in Jerusalem, like all accounts in Kings, is presented only in terms of what is essential to the author.

21: A formula introduces each Judean king: name, age at beginning of reign, years of reign, name of mother, and an evaluation of the reign. These data are followed by some salient facts and sometimes by expansive stories. 22–28: The author first presents a specific summary of what was wrong in the ritual behavior of Judah (vv. 22–24) followed by events that in context are understood as an expression of divine displeasure.

24: Male prostitutes (Heb “kedeshim”), more likely foreign specialists, perhaps poets and musicians, who assisted at rites the author does not approve of. Asa deported them (15.12).

25–26: Shishak raided the ancient Egyptian province of Canaan, leaving a record of 156 captured

²⁵In the fifth year of King Rehoboam, King Shishak of Egypt marched against Jerusalem ²⁶and carried off the treasures of the House of the LORD and the treasures of the royal palace. He carried off everything; he even carried off all the golden shields that Solomon had made. ²⁷King Rehoboam had bronze shields made instead, and he entrusted them to the officers of the guard^a who guarded the entrance to the royal palace. ²⁸Whenever the king went into the House of the LORD, the guards would carry them and then bring them back to the armory of the guards.

²⁹The other events of Rehoboam's reign, and all his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ³⁰There was continual war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam. ³¹Rehoboam slept with his fathers and was buried with his fathers in the City of David; his mother's name was Naamah the Ammonitess. His son Abijam succeeded him as king.

15 In the eighteenth year of King Jeroboam son of Nebat, Abijam became king over Judah. ²He reigned three years in Jerusalem; his mother's name was ^bMaacah daughter of Abishalom. ^b ³He continued in all the sins that his father before him had committed; he was not wholehearted with the LORD his God, like his father David. ⁴Yet, for the sake of David, the LORD his God gave him a lamp in Jerusalem, by raising up his descendant after him and by preserving Jerusalem. ⁵For David had done what was pleasing to the LORD and never turned throughout his life from all that He had commanded him, except in the matter of Uriah the Hittite. ⁶There was war between Abijam^c and Jeroboam all the days of his life. ⁷The other events of Abijam's reign and all his actions are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah; there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam. ⁸Abijam slept with his fathers; he was buried in the City of David, and his son Asa succeeded him as king.

⁹In the twentieth year of King Jeroboam of Israel, Asa became king over Judah. ¹⁰He reigned forty-one years in Jerusalem; his mother's name was Maacah daughter of Abishalom. ¹¹Asa did what was pleasing to the LORD, as his father David had done. ¹²He expelled the male prostitutes from the land, and he removed all the idols that his ancestors had made. ¹³He also deposed his mother Maacah from the rank of queen mother, because she had made cities on the wall of a temple in Karnak. Most cities listed were in Israel, the kingdom of Shishak's former protégé, Jeroboam. Abrahanel suggested in the early 16th century that perhaps Jeroboam invited Shishak to attack Jerusalem on his behalf. Although the text seems to imply that Shishak took the plunder by force, it is more likely that Rehoboam despoiled the Temple and palace of all the treasure introduced by Solomon in order to pay ransom to save Jerusalem. This spoil may also have been a bribe to Shishak to finance raids in Israel. Fragments of an inscription with Shishak's name were excavated in Megiddo.

26: This payment to Shishak despoiled most of the treasure that Solomon had invested in the Temple. Although later generations were able to replace some of the golden decorations of the Temple, later descriptions of the Temple do not refer to its gold plating (2 Kings 14.14; 18.16). 29, 31: A standard concluding summary for kings of Judah. Cf. the information about Solomon (11.41–43) and Asa (15.23–24).

15.1–8: The short, undistinguished reign of Abijam son of Rehoboam. 4: A lamp, cf. 11.36. It is used here in the sense of continuity of the line (Jer. 25.10).

6: Since border skirmishing continued into the reign of Abijam's son Asa (15.16), the reading adopted in NJPS on the basis of Hebrew and Greek manuscripts is preferable to the textual tradition preserved in the MT.

15.9–24: Presentation of the reign of Asa follows the regular pattern of formulaic introductory (vv. 9–11) and concluding (vv. 23–24) materials between which selected stories are provided. 12–13: What earned Asa the author's praise was his abolition of idols, of some wooden object dedicated to Asherah, and what he considered illegitimate places of worship. Male prostitutes, see 14.24 n. 13: The queen mother (Heb "geviraḥ") had some official a Lit. "runners."

b-b 2 Chron. 13.2 reads "Micaiah daughter of Uriel of Gibeah"; cf. v. 10 below, where Maacah, daughter of Abishalom, appears as mother of Asa.

c So several mss.; most mss. and the editions read "Rehoboam."

^aan abominable thing^a for [the goddess] Asherah. Asa cut down her abominable thing and burnt it in the Wadi Kidron. ¹⁴The shrines, indeed, were not abolished; however, Asa was wholehearted with the LORD his God all his life. ¹⁵He brought into the House of the LORD all the consecrated things of his father and ^bhis own consecrated things^b—silver, gold, and utensils.

¹⁶There was war between Asa and King Baasha of Israel all their days. ¹⁷King Baasha of Israel advanced against Judah, and he fortified Ramah to prevent anyone belonging to King Asa from going out or coming in. ¹⁸So Asa took all the silver and gold that remained in the treasuries of the House of the LORD as well as the treasuries of the royal palace, and he entrusted them to his officials. King Asa sent them to King Ben-hadad son of Tabrimmon son of Hezion of Aram, who resided in Damascus, 'with this message: ¹⁹"There is a pact between you and me, and between your father and my father. I herewith send you a gift of silver and gold: Go and break your pact with King Baasha of Israel, so that he may withdraw from me."¹⁹ ²⁰Ben-hadad responded to King Asa's request; he sent his army commanders against the towns of Israel and captured Ijon, Dan, Abel-beth-maacah, and all Chinneroth, as well as all the land of Naphtali. ²¹When Baasha heard about it, he stopped fortifying Ramah and remained in Tirzah.

²²Then King Asa mustered all Judah, with no exemptions; and they carried away the stones and timber with which Baasha had fortified Ramah. With these King Asa fortified Geba of Benjamin, and Mizpah.

²³All the other events of Asa's reign, and all his exploits, and all his actions, and the towns that he fortified, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. However, in his old age he suffered from a foot ailment. ²⁴Asa slept with his fathers and was buried with his fathers in the city of his father David. His son Jehoshaphat succeeded him as king.

²⁵Nadab son of Jeroboam had become king over Israel in the second year of King Asa of Judah, and he reigned over Israel for two years. ²⁶He did what was displeasing to the LORD; he continued in the ways of his father, in the sins which he caused Israel to commit. ²⁷Then Baasha son of Ahijah, of the House of Issachar, conspired against him; and Baasha struck him down at Gibbethon of the Philistines, while Nadab and all Israel were laying siege to Gibstatus and prerogatives; consequently she was accorded respect (2.19, 2 Kings 10.13; Jer. 13.18). Other women mentioned in this role played dominant roles in Israelite history: Jezebel (2 Kings 9.22) and Athaliah (2 Kings 11.1). Asa stripped his mother of her status and prerogatives. 14: Despite the existence of the Temple, the shrines remained popular places of worship. 17: Ramah, a short distance north of Jerusalem, controlled traffic into Jerusalem from the north and from the coast via northwest Benjaminite territories. 20: Asa's bribe to the Arameans cost the Northern Kingdom most of eastern Galilee and all upper Galilee. The tribes of Dan and Naphtali fell under the political domination of Damascus. 22: Exploiting Israel's weakness while Baasha was rushing to protect his northern borders, Asa literally moved his own northern border past Ramah, about 3.5 km (2 mi) deeper into Benjaminite territory, by fortifying Geba and Mizpah, two villages set on the hill abutting and controlling the main north-south approach to Jerusalem. Excavations at Tel en-Nasbeh, ancient Mizpah, uncovered traces of a rapidly constructed wall that was later replaced by a strongly bonded one.

15.25–32: Nadab's reign and Baasha's usurpation. The author considers Nadab of Israel irredeemably unworthy because he followed the way of Jeroboam (vv. 26, 30). The extirpation of Jeroboam's family is interpreted as fulfillment of a prophecy and hence a sign of divine providence. Baasha's usurpation, though not backed by a prophet like Ahijah, is considered divinely sanctioned.

a-a Exact meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b So kethub and 2 Chron. 15.18.

bethon. ²⁸Baasha killed him in the third year of King Asa of Judah and became king in his stead. ²⁹As soon as he became king, he struck down all the House of Jeroboam; he did not spare a single soul belonging to Jeroboam until he destroyed it—in accordance with the word that the LORD had spoken through His servant, the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite—³⁰because of the sins which Jeroboam committed and which he caused Israel to commit thereby vexing the LORD, the God of Israel.

³¹The other events of Nadab's reign and all his actions are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel.

³²There was war between Asa and King Baasha of Israel all their days. ³³In the third year of King Asa of Judah, Baasha son of Ahijah became king in Tirzah over all Israel—for twenty-four years. ³⁴He did what was displeasing to the LORD; he followed the ways of Jeroboam and the sins which he caused Israel to commit.

16 The word of the LORD came to Jehu son of Hanani against Baasha: ²"Because I lifted you up from the dust and made you a ruler over My people Israel, but you followed the way of Jeroboam and caused My people Israel to sin, vexing Me with their sins—³I am going to sweep away Baasha and his house. I will make your house like the House of Jeroboam son of Nebat. ⁴Anyone belonging to Baasha who dies in the town shall be devoured by dogs, and anyone belonging to him who dies in the open country shall be devoured by the birds of the sky."

⁵The other events of Baasha's reign and his actions and his exploits are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. ⁶Baasha slept with his fathers and was buried in Tirzah. His son Elah succeeded him as king.

⁷But the word of the LORD had come through the prophet Jehu son of Hanani against Baasha and against his house, that it would fare like the House of Jeroboam, "which he himself had struck down," because of all the evil he did which was displeasing to the LORD, vexing him with his deeds.

⁸In the twenty-sixth year of King Asa of Judah, Elah son of Baasha became king over Israel, at Tirzah—for two years. ⁹His officer Zimri, commander of half the chariotry, committed treason against him while he was at Tirzah drinking himself drunk in the house of Arza, who was in charge of the palace at Tirzah. ¹⁰Zimri entered, struck him down, and killed him; he succeeded him as king in the 15.33–16.7: Baasha's reign is treated sparsely, significant events having been provided in the sketch of Asa's career (15.17–21). The fact that Baasha continued the way of Jeroboam led to his denunciation by a prophet, Jehu son of Hanani. 4: Devoured . . . dogs . . . birds, the bodies will not receive proper, respectful burial but will be carrion instead. 7: This verse, paraphrasing vv. 3–4, lacks adequate connection to its context. Rashi, perhaps noting the mention of Elah's ascension in v. 6 and the absence of a formulaic condemnation of his reign after v. 8, explains that this verse actually refers to a repetition of Jehu's prophecy during the reign of Elah, already doomed by his father's policies.

16.8–22: The reign of Elah, the usurpation of Zimri, and the struggle between Tibni and Omri. 8–14: The author relates nothing about Elah's brief reign other than the circumstances under which Zimri assassinated him, usurped authority, and murdered his family.

twenty-seventh year of King Asa of Judah. ¹¹No sooner had he become king and ascended the throne than he struck down all the House of Baasha; he did not leave a single male of his, nor any kinsman or friend. ¹²Thus Zimri destroyed all the House of Baasha, in accordance with the word that the LORD had spoken through the prophet Jehu—¹³because of the sinful acts which Baasha and his son Elah committed, and which they caused Israel to commit, vexing the LORD, the God of Israel, with their false gods. ¹⁴The other events of Elah's reign and all his actions are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel.

¹⁵During the twenty-seventh year of King Asa of Judah, Zimri reigned in Tirzah for seven days. At the time, the troops were encamped at Gibbethon of the Philistines. ¹⁶When the troops who were encamped there learned that Zimri had committed treason and had struck down the king, that very day, in the camp, all Israel acclaimed the army commander Omri king over Israel. ¹⁷Omri and all Israel then withdrew from Gibbethon and laid siege to Tirzah. ¹⁸When Zimri saw that the town was taken, he went into the citadel of the royal palace and burned down the royal palace over himself. And so he died—¹⁹because of the sins which he committed and caused Israel to commit, doing what was displeasing to the LORD and following the ways of Jeroboam. ²⁰The other events of Zimri's reign, and the treason which he committed, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel.

²¹Then the people of Israel split into two factions: a part of the people followed Tibni son of Ginath to make him king, and the other part followed Omri. ²²Those who followed Omri proved stronger than those who followed Tibni son of Ginath; Tibni died and Omri became king.

²³In the thirty-first year of King Asa of Judah, Omri became king over Israel—for twelve years. He reigned in Tirzah six years. ²⁴Then he bought the hill of Samaria from Shemer for two talents of silver; he built [a town] on the hill and named the town which he built Samaria, after Shemer, the owner of the hill.

²⁵Omri did what was displeasing to the LORD; he was worse than all who preceded him. ²⁶He followed all the ways of Jeroboam son of Nebat and the sins which he committed and caused Israel to commit, vexing the LORD, the God of Israel, with their futilities. ²⁷The other events of Omri's reign, [and] his actions, and the exploits he performed, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. ²⁸Omri slept with his fathers and was buried in Samaria; and his son Ahab succeeded him as king.

15–18: Zimri lacked any popular support, even from the chariot troops under his command. Omri, acclaimed king by his army (all Israel) while at the Philistine front, withdrew to Tirzah in the heart of Israel and captured it. Zimri, the assassin, committed suicide. 19: The author appends a standard condemnation to his summary of Zimri's seven-day reign. So far as he is concerned, had Zimri reversed some of Jeroboam's cultic policies, he would have been lauded. 21–22: These verses continue the narrative from v. 18. Despite the army's acclamation of Omri as king, the chronological notices suggest that the northern tribes were divided for almost four years (cf. vv. 15, 23) about who should be elected king: Omri or Tibni (possibly another military figure). Tibni's death resolved the matter. The author makes no evaluative comment about Tibni because he was never acknowledged officially as king.

16.23–28: The reign of Omri. Aside from formulaary types of information, the single event reported for Omri is the construction of a new capital city, Samaria. According to an inscription left by Mesha, king of Moab in the mid-9th century (cf. 2 Kings 3.4), Omri was a powerful king, who conquered and colonized northern Moab. He achieved a level of renown for his exploits such that after his dynasty had been supplanted, an Assyrian inscription called Israel "the house of Omri." He established a dynasty that maintained itself through the reigns of three descendants.

16.29–22.40: Stories about the reign of Ahab include a large collection of stories about the charismatic prophet Elijah, who was intimately involved in the religious and political life of the kingdom. 16.29–34: This section introduces the reign of Ahab in typical formulaic fashion. The concluding formulae are found in 22.39–40. The intervening narratives serve to support the author's extremely ²⁹Ahab son of Omri became king over Israel in the thirty-eighth year of King Asa of Judah, and Ahab son of Omri reigned over Israel in Samaria for twenty-two years.

³⁰Ahab son of Omri did what was displeasing to the LORD, more than all who preceded him. ³¹Not content to follow the sins of Jeroboam son of Nebat, he took as wife Jezebel daughter of King Ethbaal of the Phoenicians, and he went and served Baal and worshiped him. ³²He erected an altar to Baal in the temple of Baal which he built in Samaria. ³³Ahab also made a sacred post. Ahab did more to vex the LORD, the God of Israel, than all the kings of Israel who preceded him.

³⁴During his reign, Hiel the Bethelite fortified Jericho. He laid its foundations at the cost of Abiram his first-born, and set its gates in place at the cost of Segub his youngest, in accordance with the words that the LORD had spoken through Joshua son of Nun.^a

17 Elijah the Tishbite, an inhabitant of Gilead, said to Ahab, "As the LORD lives, the God of Israel whom I serve, there will be no dew or rain except at my bidding."

²The word of the LORD came to him: ³"Leave this place; turn eastward and go into hiding by the Wadi Cherith, which is east of the Jordan. ⁴You will drink from the wadi, and I have commanded the ravens to feed you there." ⁵He proceeded to do as the LORD had bidden: he went, and he

a Cf. Josh. 6.26.

negative evaluation of Ahab's reign. 31: Jezebel daughter of King Ethbaal of the Phoenicians (lit. "Sidonians"): Jezebel's name consists of two components, "'iy + zebel," which in Phoenician, the language of Tyre and Sidon, mean "where is glory/dominion." Compare Ichabod, Heb "'iy + kabod," meaning "where is honor/glory" (1 Sam. 4.21). In Ugaritic mythology, "zebul" is a title of Baal, god of rain and sweet water. Ethbaal's name means "with Baal." His title "king of the Sidonians" indicates that he was king of both Sidon and Tyre. Hiram in the time of David and Solomon held the same authority but used a different title (5.15). Following a common biblical topos, in this passage and elsewhere in the Ahab stories, the wife is blamed for leading the husband astray. 32–33: In addition to worshipping Baal, Ahab constructed a temple for him in Samaria with a special altar, and he also established an "asherah," a sacred post, the symbol of the goddess Asherah, somewhere in the city, but not in the Baal temple itself (cf. 2 Kings 13.6). 33: Vex the LORD (Heb "lehakh'is," expressing causality). The author, not believing that anybody could take idolatry seriously, explained that Ahab continued doing such things out of spite in order to anger God. 34: Tragic events in the life of a certain Hiel from Bethel are presented as the actualization of Joshua's curse (Josh. 6.26). Ralbag interprets the placement of this verse as indicating that although Ahab should have understood what happened to Hiel as a warning of what might happen to him, he persisted in his ways.

17.1–19.21: Elijah stories occupy a significant place in the author's composition about the Northern Kingdom. The author, who uses a prediction-fulfillment pattern as a leitmotif in Kings, held prophets in high regard and had access to stores of prophetic tales. Some of these presented Elijah as being in contact and conflict with Ahab and Jezebel over religious matters. A zealous champion of God, a radical monotheist, Elijah, whose name means "my God is Yahu (the LORD)," fought for his cause fearlessly and at such personal risk that even Ahab held him in regard. The four major stories about him (17.1–18.46; 19.1–21; 21.1–29; 2 Kings 2.2–2.12) and similar prophets (20.1–43; 22.1–40) are presented because their heroes taught what the author believed and they acted in ways he thought appropriate. These stories, which do not assume the centrality of worship of God in Jerusalem (see esp. ch 18), comprise a source which became incorporated into Kings. Ch 17 seems to begin in the middle of the Elijah story, suggesting that not all of this source was used.

17.1–18.46: The drought.

17.1: Elijah predicts a drought. The mention of dew and rain challenges Ahab's notion that Baal, celebrated as god of fresh water, is responsible for them. Subsequent events suggest that the drought, limited to only Israelite territory and persisting for a long while, came to be seen as unnatural. At a theological level, the author presents this story because Elijah's prediction resonates with Deut. 11.13–17. 2–24: Miracle stories about Elijah illustrate that God protected and provided for his sustenance and that he in turn provided sustenance for others. They also show that God responded to his prayers. 2: Wadi Cherith in Transjordan may have been in Israelite territory but outside of Ahab's jurisdiction. Later, when the severity of the drought dried up local water, God directed Elijah to Zarephath in Phoenician territory (vv. 7–8).

stayed by the Wadi Cherith, which is east of the Jordan.
 6 The ravens brought him bread and meat every morning and every evening, and he drank from the wadi.

7 After some time the wadi dried up, because there was no rain in the land. 8 And the word of the LORD came to him: 9 "Go at once to Zarephath of Sidon, and stay there; I have designated a widow there to feed you." 10 So he went at once to Zarephath. When he came to the entrance of the town, a widow was there gathering wood. He called out to her, "Please bring me a little water in your pitcher, and let me drink." 11 As she went to fetch it, he called out to her, "Please bring along a piece of bread for me." 12 "As

10: A widow: The story presupposes that there was some external sign that differentiated widows, who were typically poor, from other women, perhaps some item of dress (Gen. 38.14). The widow remains nameless in the two stories about her that follow because the point of the stories is to celebrate the power of the named prophet. Rashi, noting the similarity between Elijah's request for water and that of Abraham's servant in Gen. 24.12-20, suggests that like the servant, Elijah had the LORD your God lives," she replied, "I have nothing baked, nothing but a handful of flour in a jar and a little oil in a jug. I am just gathering a couple of sticks, so that I can go home and prepare it for me and my son; we shall eat it and then we shall die." ¹³"Don't be afraid," said Elijah to her. "Go and do as you have said; but first make me a small cake from what you have there, and bring it out to me; then make some for yourself and your son. ¹⁴For thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: The jar of flour shall not give out and the jug of oil shall not fail until the day that the LORD sends rain upon the ground." ¹⁵She went and did as Elijah had spoken, and she and he and her household had food for a long time. ¹⁶The jar of flour did not give out, nor did the jug of oil fail, just as the LORD had spoken through Elijah.

Places associated with the Elijah narratives. The dashed line shows the approximate boundaries between Israel, Judah, and Philistia.

¹⁷After a while, the son of the mistress of the house fell sick, and his illness grew worse, until he had no breath left in him. ¹⁸She said to Elijah, "What harm have I done you, O man of God, that you should come here to recall my sin and cause the death of my son?" ¹⁹"Give me the boy," he said to her; and taking him from her arms, he carried him to the upper chamber where he was staying, and laid him down on his own bed. ²⁰He cried out to the LORD and said, "O LORD my God, will You bring calamity upon this widow whose guest I am, and let her son die?" ²¹Then he stretched out over the child three times, and cried out to the LORD, saying, "O LORD my God, let this child's life return to his body!" ²²The LORD heard Elijah's plea; the child's life returned to his body, and he revived. ²³Elijah picked up the child and brought him down from the upper room into the main room, and gave him to his mother. "See," said Elijah, "your son is alive." ²⁴And the woman answered Elijah, "Now I know that you are a man of God and that the word of the LORD is truly in your mouth."

18 Much later, in the third year,^a the word of the LORD came to Elijah: "Go, appear before Ahab; then I will send rain upon the earth." ²Thereupon Elijah set out to appear before Ahab.

The famine was severe in Samaria. ³Ahab had summoned Obadiah, the steward of the palace. (Obadiah revered the LORD greatly. ⁴When Jezebel was killing off the prophets of the LORD, Obadiah had taken a hundred prophets and hidden them, fifty to a cave, and provided them with food and drink.) ⁵And Ahab had said to Oba-proposed a test to determine if this particular widow was the one designated by God. 14–16: Elijah's prediction that the jars would have an unending supply of flour and oil (staple foodstuffs) is fulfilled immediately. 21: Elijah attempted what is sometimes described as the first recorded case of artificial respiration on the child, who was critically ill but not dead; then he prayed on the child's behalf. A healing procedure in some Mesopotamian incantations against demons instructs the healer to superimpose his body over that of the patient, head to head, hand to hand, foot to foot. 24: His success as a wonder-worker is what convinced the widow that he was indeed a prophet. In Israel, the power to intercede with God was considered a prophetic gift (cf. Gen. 20.7). Elijah is here called a man of God, a term which in these narratives often emphasizes the prophet's superhuman powers. 18.4: The author's parenthetical remark provides important information for this and subsequent narratives: (1) Elijah was not the only prophet in Israel during this time. (2) Jezebel had been persecuting and killing off prophets, most likely holding them culpable for the drought. (3) Obadiah was part of a coterie of devout people who followed, supported, and protected prophets like Elijah (cf. vv. 12–13).

^a i.e., of the drought; see 17.1.

diah, "Go through the land, to all the springs of water and to all the wadis. Perhaps we shall find some grass to keep horses and mules alive, so that we are not left without beasts."

⁶They divided the country between them to explore it, Ahab going alone in one direction and Obadiah going alone in another direction. ⁷Obadiah was on the road, when Elijah suddenly confronted him. [Obadiah] recognized him and flung himself on his face, saying, "Is that you, my lord Elijah?" ⁸"Yes, it is I," he answered. "Go tell your lord: Elijah is here!" ⁹But he said, "What wrong have I done, that you should hand your servant over to Ahab to be killed? ¹⁰As the LORD your God lives, there is no nation or kingdom to which my lord has not sent to look for you; and when they said, 'He is not here,' he made that kingdom or nation swear that you could not be found. ¹¹And now you say, 'Go tell your lord: Elijah is here!' ¹²When I leave you, the spirit of the LORD will carry you off I don't know where; and when I come and tell Ahab and he does not find you, he will kill me. Yet your servant has revered the LORD from my youth. ¹³My lord has surely been told what I did when Jezebel was killing the prophets of the LORD, how I hid a hundred of the prophets of the LORD, fifty men to a cave, and provided them with food and drink. ¹⁴And now you say, 'Go tell your lord: Elijah is here.' Why, he will kill me!"

¹⁵Elijah replied, "As the LORD of Hosts lives, whom I serve, I will appear before him this very day."

¹⁶Obadiah went to find Ahab, and informed him; and Ahab went to meet Elijah. ¹⁷When Ahab caught sight of Elijah, Ahab said to him, "Is that you, you troubler of Israel?" ¹⁸He retorted, "It is not I who have brought trouble on Israel, but you and your father's House, by forsaking the commandments of the LORD and going after the Baalim. ¹⁹Now summon all Israel to join me at Mount Carmel, together with the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal and the four hundred prophets of Asherah, ^awho eat at Jezebel's table."^a ²⁰Ahab sent orders to all the Israelites and gathered the prophets at Mount Carmel. ²¹Elijah approached all the people and said, "How long will you keep hopping ^bbetween two opinions?^b If the LORD is God, follow Him; and if Baal, follow him!" But the people answered him not a word. ²²Then Elijah said to the people, "I am the only prophet of the LORD left, while the prophets of Baal are 12: The spirit of the LORD will carry you off: One of the supernatural abilities that was attributed to Elijah as a man of God was the ability to travel large distances suddenly. 19–46: The contest between Elijah and the Baal prophets on Mount Carmel pits the Israelite, in the presence of all Israel, against four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal and four hundred prophets of Asherah (18.19–20). 19: Mount Carmel, at the south end of modern Haifa, is at the seaward end of a range that rises to 530 m (1,600 ft). 21: Elijah's rhetorical question indicates that Israelites supported both Baal and God. (In 19.18, the author provides a statistic indicating this clearly.) In polytheistic pluralism, this was a valid position. Elijah, however, a radical monotheist, was intolerant of the "both . . . and" situation; he recasts Israelite options into an "either . . . or" choice for which they will have to bear consequences. 22–25: Since Elijah seems to have determined the nature of the contest, he proposes that the Baal prophets select whichever bull they wish, perhaps to eliminate any suspicion of fraud.

a-a I.e., who are maintained by Jezebel.

b-b Lit. "on the two boughs."

four hundred and fifty men. ²³Let two young bulls be given to us. Let them choose one bull, cut it up, and lay it on the wood, but let them not apply fire; I will prepare the other bull, and lay it on the wood, and will not apply fire. ²⁴You will then invoke your god by name, and I will invoke the LORD by name; "and let us agree:" the god who responds with fire, that one is God." And all the people answered, "Very good!"

²⁵Elijah said to the prophets of Baal, "Choose one bull and prepare it first, for you are the majority; invoke your god by name, but apply no fire." ²⁶They took the bull that was given them; they prepared it, and invoked Baal by name from morning until noon, shouting, "O Baal, answer us!" But there was no sound, and none who responded; so they performed a hopping dance about the altar that had been set up. ²⁷When noon came, Elijah mocked them, saying, "Shout louder! After all, he is a god. ^bBut he may be in conversation, he may be detained, or he may be on a journey,^b or perhaps he is asleep and will wake up." ²⁸So they shouted louder, and gashed themselves with knives and spears, according to their practice, until the blood streamed over them. ²⁹When noon passed, they "kept raving"^c until the hour of presenting the meal offering. Still there was no sound, and none who responded or heeded.

³⁰Then Elijah said to all the people, "Come closer to me"; and all the people came closer to him. He repaired the damaged altar of the LORD. ³¹Then Elijah took twelve stones, corresponding to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob—to whom the word of the LORD had come: "Israel shall be your name"^d—³²and with the stones he built an altar in the name of the LORD. Around the altar he made a trench large enough for two seahs of seed.^e ³³He laid out the wood, and he cut up the bull and laid it on the wood. ³⁴And he said, "Fill four jars with water and pour it over the burnt offering and the wood." Then he said, "Do it a second time"; and they did it a second time. "Do it a third time," he said; and they did it a third time. ³⁵The water ran down around the altar, and even the trench was filled with water.

³⁶When it was time to present the meal offering, the prophet Elijah came forward and said, "O LORD, God of 27: The sarcastic comments, ostensibly directed to the Baal prophets, are intended for the ears of the audience. 32-35: In dousing the ground around and under the altar, and drenching the sacrifice with water, the substance associated with Baal, Elijah indicates that even though Baal failed to ignite his own sacrifice he might be powerful enough to stop God. God's power is also heightened, as God ignites the soaking wet altar and sacrifice.

a-a Lit. "and it shall be."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Others "prophesied"; see Num. 11.25-26.

d See Gen. 35.10.

e I.e., of an area which would require two seahs of seed if sown. Cf. Lev. 27.16; Isa. 5.10.

Abraham, Isaac, and Israel! Let it be known today that You are God in Israel and that I am Your servant, and that I have done all these things at Your bidding. ³⁷ Answer me, O LORD, answer me, that this people may know that You, O LORD, are God; ^afor You have turned their hearts backward."^a

³⁸ Then fire from the LORD descended and consumed the burnt offering, the wood, the stones, and the earth; and it licked up the water that was in the trench. ³⁹ When they saw this, all the people flung themselves on their faces and cried out: "The LORD alone is God, The LORD alone is God!"

⁴⁰ Then Elijah said to them, "Seize the prophets of Baal, let not a single one of them get away." They seized them, and Elijah took them down to the Wadi Kishon and slaughtered them there.

⁴¹ Elijah said to Ahab, "Go up, eat and drink, for there is a rumbling of [approaching] rain," ⁴² and Ahab went up to eat and drink. Elijah meanwhile climbed to the top of Mount Carmel, crouched on the ground, and put his face between his knees. ⁴³ And he said to his servant, "Go up and look toward the Sea." He went up and looked and reported, "There is nothing." Seven times [Elijah] said, "Go back," ⁴⁴ and the seventh time, [the servant] reported, "A cloud as small as a man's hand is rising in the west." Then [Elijah] said, "Go say to Ahab, 'Hitch up [your chariot] and go down before the rain stops you.'" ⁴⁵ Meanwhile the sky grew black with clouds; there was wind, and a heavy downpour fell; Ahab mounted his chariot and drove off to Jezreel. ⁴⁶ The hand of the LORD had come upon Elijah. ^bHe tied up his skirts^b and ran in front of Ahab all the way to Jezreel.

19 When Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done and how he had put all the prophets^c to the sword, ² Jezebel sent a messenger to Elijah, saying, ^d"Thus and more may the gods do^d if by this time tomorrow I have not made you like one of them."

³ Frightened,^e he fled at once for his life. He came to Beer-sheba, which is in Judah, and left his servant there; ⁴ he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness. He came to a broom bush and sat down under it, and prayed

38: When the divine fire consumed everything, including the water, the message was clear. 39-40: This cry indicates that they opted for God and monotheism. The same words are found elsewhere in the Bible (e.g., Deut. 4.35, 39), and were later used as the culminating confession of faith at the conclusion of Yom Kippur. Ahab, present through all this (v. 41; 19.1), says and does nothing. The author presents no information about the prophets of Asherah. 42-43: Although the narrative is opaque, it appears that Elijah's posture is somehow responsible for bringing the cloud and the following rain. It is usually assumed that he was praying, but the fetal position is not known to have been adopted for prayer, and no word for prayer appears in the narrative. 46: The strength and stamina for Elijah's long run came by virtue of the hand of the LORD. Since running before the royal chariot was both an honor and a way of honoring the king (1 Sam. 8.11; 1 Kings 1.5), Elijah's motivation for doing so may have been to show respect to Ahab who he thought had been won over to radical monotheism. Elijah did not enter Jezreel.

19.1-18: Elijah's flight from Jezreel into Judah, and the revelation at Mt. Horeb. 2: Jezebel acts imperiously, warning Elijah of her plan to avenge the deaths of her countrymen. 3: Frightened, he flees south, across Judah and into the wilderness beyond. 4-7: Again, though Elijah is hiding far from food sources, his needs are provided for (cf. 17.6). The theme of a prophet's wishing for death out of a sense of isolation and failure in v. 4 are mimicked by the request and circumstances of Jonah in Jonah 4.3; that of being provisioned in the wilderness in vv. 5-6 parallels the story of Hagar in Gen. 21.14-19. 8: Horeb, meaning "dry place," is the name preferred by Deuteronomy for the mountain designated Sinai in Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers. Information in this verse contributes nothing toward determining its location.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Lit. "He bound up his loins."

c Of Baal; see 18.40.

d-d A formula of imprecation. Many Heb. mss. and Septuagint add "to me."

e So many Heb. mss. and Septuagint; most mss., and the editions, read "And he saw, and."

that he might die. "Enough!" he cried. "Now, O LORD, take my life, for I am no better than my fathers."

⁵He lay down and fell asleep under a broom bush. Suddenly an angel touched him and said to him, "Arise and eat." ⁶He looked about; and there, beside his head, was a cake baked on hot stones and a jar of water! He ate and drank, and lay down again. ⁷The angel of the LORD came a second time and touched him and said, "Arise and eat, or the journey will be too much for you." ⁸He arose and ate and drank; and with the strength from that meal he walked forty days and forty nights as far as the mountain of God at Horeb. ⁹There he went into a cave, and there he spent the night.

Then the word of the LORD came to him. He said to him, "Why are you here, Elijah?" ¹⁰He replied, "I am moved by zeal for the LORD, the God of Hosts, for the Israelites have forsaken Your covenant, torn down Your altars, and put Your prophets to the sword. I alone am left, and they are out to take my life." ¹¹"Come out," He called, "and stand on the mountain before the LORD."

And lo, the LORD passed by. There was a great and mighty wind, splitting mountains and shattering rocks by the power of the LORD; but the LORD was not in the wind. After the wind—an earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake. ¹²After the earthquake—fire; but the LORD was not in the fire. And after the fire—a soft murmuring sound.^a ¹³When Elijah heard it, he wrapped his mantle about his face and went out and stood at the entrance of the cave. Then a voice addressed him: "Why are you here, Elijah?" ¹⁴He answered, "I am moved by zeal for the LORD, the God of Hosts; for the Israelites have forsaken Your covenant, torn down Your altars, and have put Your prophets to the sword. I alone am left, and they are out to take my life."

¹⁵The LORD said to him, "Go back by the way you came, [and] on to the wilderness of Damascus. When you get there, anoint Hazael as king of Aram. ¹⁶Also anoint Jehu son of Nimshi as king of Israel, and anoint Elisha son of Shaphat of Abel-meholah to succeed you as prophet. ¹⁷Whoever escapes the sword of Hazael shall be slain by Jehu, and whoever escapes the sword of Jehu shall be slain by Elisha. ¹⁸I will leave in Israel only seven thousand—every knee that has not knelt to Baal and every mouth that has not kissed him."

¹⁹He set out from there and came upon Elisha son of Shaphat as he was plowing. There were twelve yoke of

Since an unencumbered person used to walking can cover 15–25 miles a day, depending on the terrain, and Elijah is said to have traveled 40 days, the mountain could be 600–1,000 miles in any direction except north from some point south of Beer-sheba. Cf. Deut. 1.1–2. The forty days may suggest Moses, who spent forty days and nights atop Sinai (Exod. 24.18). In both cases, forty may be understood as a formulaic number, not to be taken literally. 9–14: The combination of a cave and the divine revelation to the dispirited Elijah at Horeb/Sinai parallels thematically the cleft in the rock where God sheltered the overwhelmed Moses when He passed before him (Exod. 33.13–23), and helps to establish Elijah as a new Moses or a prophet like Moses (Deut. 18.15, 18). Elijah repeats in v. 14, after the revelation, what he said in v. 9, but the words ring less urgently. The revelation demonstrated that Elijah was not alone and restored a sense of proportion. 15–17: Malbim suggests that each person to be anointed was in response to one of Elijah's complaints: Hazael would punish those who broke down the altars, Jehu would punish those responsible for killing prophets, and Elisha would be a prophet with and after him. No other prophet is recorded to have designated his own prophetic replacement, though here too there may be some echo of Moses choosing Joshua as a replacement in his own lifetime (Num. 27.15–23).

19.19–21: The choice of Elisha. Reassured, Elijah first attends to his third assigned task, appointing Elisha. (The account does not mention completing the first two tasks.) Elijah's call to Elisha consists of the apparently casual but symbolically rich act of throwing his mantle over him and walking on without a word.

^a Others "a still, small voice."

oxen ahead of him, and he was with the twelfth. Elijah came over to him and threw his mantle over him. ²⁰He left the oxen and ran after Elijah, saying: "Let me kiss my father and mother good-by, and I will follow you." And he answered him, "Go back. What have I done to you?"^a ²¹He turned back from him and took the yoke of oxen and slaughtered them; he boiled ^btheir meat^b with the gear^c of the oxen and gave it to the people, and they ate. Then he arose and followed Elijah and became his attendant.

20 King Ben-hadad of Aram gathered his whole army; thirty-two kings accompanied him with horses and chariots. He advanced against Samaria, laid siege to it, and attacked it. ²And he sent messengers to Ahab inside the city ³to say to him, "Thus said Ben-hadad: Your silver and gold are mine, and your beautiful wives and children are mine." ⁴The king of Israel replied, "As you say, my lord king: I and all I have are yours." ⁵Then the messengers came again and said, "Thus said Ben-hadad: When I sent you the order to give me your silver and gold, and your wives and children, ⁶I meant that tomorrow at this time I will send my servants to you and they will search your house and the houses of your courtiers and seize everything you^d prize and take it away."

⁷Then the king of Israel summoned all the elders of the land, and he said, "See for yourselves how that man is bent on evil! For when he demanded my wives and my children, my silver and my gold, I did not refuse him." ⁸All the elders and all the people said, "Do not obey and do not submit!" ⁹So he said to Ben-hadad's messengers, "Tell my lord the king: All that you first demanded of your servant I shall do, but this thing I cannot do." The messengers went and reported this to him. ¹⁰Thereupon Ben-hadad sent him this message: ^e"May the gods do thus to me and even more,^e if the dust of Samaria will provide even a handful for each of the men who follow me!"

¹¹The king of Israel replied, "Tell him: Let not him who girds on his sword boast like him who ungirds it!"

¹²On hearing this reply—while he and the other kings were drinking together at Succoth—he^f commanded his followers, "Advance!" And they advanced against the city. ¹³Then a certain prophet went up to King Ahab of Israel and said, "Thus said the LORD: Do you see that great host? I will deliver it into your hands today, and you shall 20: The meaning of Elijah's response to Elisha's reasonable request is unclear. Perhaps it means that should he turn back from Elijah, the symbolic act will have lost its significance.

20.1–22.40: Narratives of the life and times of Ahab in which the king is the prime focus of attention and Elijah as well as other prophets appear in significant roles.

20.1–43: Ahab's war with Ben-hadad of Aram originally concerned the city of Samaria alone. Ben-hadad's aggression may have been precipitated after Ahab's closing of Aramean bazaars in the city, an international trade concession granted by Omri to Ben-hadad's father (v. 34). Although his whole army may have been mustered (v. 1), he first threatened the city with a small force, not anticipating a hostile response (vv. 15–20). The anonymous prophet who is the protagonist of the story has many thematic similarities to Elijah and to the nameless prophets earlier in the book. 2–4: Ben-hadad demands payment from Ahab alone and Ahab accedes. 5–9: Hearing Ahab's quick, docile response, Ben-hadad changes the terms and demands the right to loot property from Ahab's courtiers. Ahab, lacking any right to give away what is not his, consults with the elders of the land, who instruct him not to comply with the demand. 13: An anonymous prophet counsels Ahab on military tactics. The reappearance of the figure bearing messages to Ahab throughout this story (vv. 28, 41) turns the historical narrative into a theological story about how an ungrateful Ahab turned a divinely orchestrated victory—the second battle—into a business opportunity.

a I.e., I am not stopping you. b-b Lit. "them, the flesh."

c I.e., using it as firewood; cf. 2 Sam. 24.22. d Several ancient versions read "they."

e-e See note at 19.2. f I.e., Ben-hadad.

know that I am the LORD." ¹⁴"Through whom?" asked Ahab. He answered, "Thus said the LORD: Through the aides of the provincial governors." He asked, "Who shall begin the battle?" And he answered, "You."

¹⁵So he mustered the aides of the provincial governors, 232 strong, and then he mustered all the troops—all the Israelites—7,000 strong. ¹⁶They marched out at noon, while Ben-hadad was drinking himself drunk at Succoth together with the thirty-two kings allied with him. ¹⁷The aides of the provincial governors rushed out first. Ben-hadad sent [scouts], who told him, "Some men have come out from Samaria." ¹⁸He said, "If they have come out to surrender, take them alive; and if they have come out for battle, take them alive anyhow." ¹⁹But the others—the aides of the provincial governors, with the army behind them—had already rushed out of the city, ²⁰and each of them struck down his opponent. The Arameans fled, and Israel pursued them; but King Ben-hadad of Aram escaped on a horse with other horsemen. ²¹The king of Israel came out and attacked the horses and chariots, and inflicted a great defeat on the Arameans. ²²Then the prophet approached the king of Israel and said to him, "Go, keep up your efforts, and consider well what you must do; for the king of Aram will attack you at the turn of the year."

²³Now the ministers of the king of Aram said to him, "Their God is a God of mountains; that is why they got the better of us. But if we fight them in the plain, we will surely get the better of them." ²⁴Do this: Remove all the kings from their posts and appoint governors in their place. ²⁵Then muster for yourself an army equal to the army you lost, horse for horse and chariot for chariot. And let us fight them in the plain, and we will surely get the better of them." He took their advice and acted accordingly.

²⁶At the turn of the year, Ben-hadad mustered the Arameans and advanced on Aphek to fight Israel. ²⁷Now the Israelites had been mustered and provisioned, and they went out against them; but when the Israelites encamped against them, they looked like two flocks^a of goats, while the Arameans covered the land. ²⁸Then the man of God approached and spoke to the king of Israel, "Thus said the LORD: Because the Arameans have said, 'The LORD is a God of mountains, but He is not a God of lowlands,' I will deliver that great host into your hands; and you shall know that I am the LORD."

²⁹For seven days they were encamped opposite each other. On the seventh day, the battle was joined and the Is-

14: Aides (Heb "na'ar"), youths who functioned as fighters (cf. Gen 14.24, where it is translated "servants"; 2 Sam 2.14, where it is translated "young men"). The prophet counsels him to initiate an attack using the aides as shock troops.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

raelites struck down 100,000 Aramean foot soldiers in one day.³⁰ The survivors fled to Aphek, inside the town, and the wall fell on the 27,000 survivors.

Ben-hadad also fled and took refuge inside the town, in an inner chamber.³¹ His ministers said to him, "We have heard that the kings of the House of Israel are magnanimous kings. Let us put sackcloth on our loins and ropes on our heads, and surrender to the king of Israel; perhaps he will spare your life."³² So they girded sackcloth on their loins and wound ropes around their heads, and came to the king of Israel and said, "Your servant Ben-hadad says, 'I beg you, spare my life.'" He replied, "Is he still alive? He is my brother."³³ The men divined his meaning and quickly "caught the word from him,"^a saying, "Yes, Ben-hadad is your brother." "Go, bring him," he said. Ben-hadad came out to him, and he invited him into his chariot.³⁴ Ben-hadad said to him, "I will give back the towns that my father took from your father, and you may set up bazaars for yourself in Damascus as my father did in Samaria." "And I, for my part," [said Ahab,] "will let you go home under these terms." So he made a treaty with him and dismissed him.

³⁵ A certain man, a disciple of the prophets, said to another, at the word of the LORD, "Strike me"; but the man refused to strike him.³⁶ He said to him, "Because you have not obeyed the LORD, a lion will strike you dead as soon as you leave me." And when he left, a lion came upon him and killed him.³⁷ Then he met another man and said, "Come, strike me." So the man struck him and wounded him.³⁸ Then the prophet, disguised by a cloth over his eyes, went and waited for the king by the road.³⁹ As the king passed by, he cried out to the king and said, "Your servant went out into the thick of the battle. Suddenly a man came over and brought a man to me, saying, 'Guard this man! If he is missing, it will be your life for his, or you will have to pay a talent of silver.'" ⁴⁰ While your servant was busy here and there, [the man] got away." The king of Israel responded, "You have your verdict; you pronounced it yourself."⁴¹ Quickly he removed the cloth from his eyes, and the king recognized him as one of the prophets.⁴² He said to him, "Thus said the LORD: Because you have set free the man whom I doomed, your life shall be forfeit for his life and your people for his people."⁴³ Dispirited and sullen, the king left for home and came to Samaria.

31–34: Ben-hadad capitulates totally to Ahab. Following his servants' advice, he humbled himself and referred to himself as Ahab's servant. Ahab, however, refers to him by the term brother, signaling that he regards the defeated Aramean as an equal partner and inviting him into his chariot where terms for Ben-hadad's freedom must have been discussed. Ahab is given cities lost by his father to the Arameans and market concessions in Damascus. Although victorious in the battle of Aphek, Ahab's negotiating position was weak. Since the days of Baasha, Arameans had retained control of northern Israelite tribal territories in upper Galilee and the eastern part of lower Galilee (cf. 15.20). 35–42: Ahab had no right to spare those whom he had not defeated. According to the oracle of v. 28, God, not Ahab, defeated Ben-hadad. Consequently, Ben-hadad fell into the category of one doomed (v. 42), i.e., dedicated by God to destruction (see 1 Sam. ch 15). The prophet's use of a parable to get the king to pronounce judgment on himself is similar to Nathan's ploy in the case of Uriah and David (2 Sam. 12:1–12).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

21 [The following events] occurred sometime afterward: Naboth the Jezreelite owned a vineyard in Jezreel, adjoining the palace of King Ahab of Samaria. ²Ahab said to Naboth, "Give me your vineyard, so that I may have it as a vegetable garden, since it is right next to my palace. I will give you a better vineyard in exchange; or, if you prefer, I will pay you the price in money." ³But Naboth replied, "The LORD forbid that I should give up to you what I have inherited from my fathers!" ⁴Ahab went home dispirited and sullen because of the answer that Naboth the Jezreelite had given him: "I will not give up to you what I have inherited from my fathers!" He lay down on his bed and turned away his face, and he would not eat. ⁵His wife Jezebel came to him and asked him, "Why are you so dispirited that you won't eat?" ⁶So he told her, "I spoke to Naboth the Jezreelite and proposed to him, 'Sell me your vineyard for money, or if you prefer, I'll give you another vineyard in exchange'; but he answered, 'I will not give my vineyard to you.'" ⁷His wife Jezebel said to him, "Now is the time to show yourself king over Israel. Rise and eat something, and be cheerful; I will get the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite for you."

⁸So she wrote letters in Ahab's name and sealed them with his seal, and sent the letters to the elders and the nobles who lived in the same town with Naboth. ⁹In the letters she wrote as follows: "Proclaim a fast and seat Naboth at the front of the assembly. ¹⁰And seat two scoundrels opposite him, and let them testify against him: 'You have reviled God and king!' Then take him out and stone him to death."

¹¹His townsmen—the elders and nobles who lived in his town—did as Jezebel had instructed them, just as was written in the letters she had sent them: ¹²They proclaimed a fast and seated Naboth at the front of the assembly. ¹³Then the two scoundrels came and sat down opposite him; and the scoundrels testified against Naboth publicly as follows: "Naboth has reviled God and king." Then they took him outside the town and stoned him to death. ¹⁴Word was sent to Jezebel: "Naboth has been stoned to death." ¹⁵As soon as Jezebel heard that Naboth had been stoned to death, she said to Ahab, "Go and take possession of the vineyard which Naboth the Jezreelite refused to sell you for money; for Naboth is no longer alive, he is dead." ¹⁶When Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, Ahab set out for the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite to take possession of it.

¹⁷Then the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite: ¹⁸"Go down and confront King Ahab of Israel who [re-

21.1–29: Naboth's vineyard. This story reintroduces Elijah into the narrative. In contrast to the preceding story, in which Ahab profited by not putting to death one who had been doomed by God, here he profits by passively allowing corrupt courts acting in the name of God and king to execute an innocent person. 1–3: Ahab's request to purchase or trade for Naboth's vineyard next to his palace was neither unreasonable nor illegal (Lev. 25.29–30), but Naboth may have refused because he did not wish to sell his inherited land (v. 3). 8–13: Here too, Jezebel is blamed (16.31). In relating how Jezebel corrupted the legal system using two corroborating witnesses (cf. Deut. 17.6; 19.15), the prophetic story reveals that Israel did have a legal system with defined laws and procedures, some of which are found in the Torah. The crime of which Naboth is accused, and its prescribed punishment, is only partially known from the Torah (Lev. 24.15–16). No Torah legislation explicitly criminalizes cursing the king (but see Exod. 22.27).

sides] in Samaria. He is now in Naboth's vineyard; he has gone down there to take possession of it. ¹⁹Say to him, 'Thus said the LORD: Would you murder and take possession? Thus said the LORD: In the very place where the dogs lapped up Naboth's blood, the dogs will lap up your blood too.' "

²⁰Ahab said to Elijah, "So you have found me, my enemy?" "Yes, I have found you," he replied. "Because you have committed yourself to doing what is evil in the sight of the LORD, ²¹I will bring disaster upon you. I will make a clean sweep of you, I will cut off from Israel every male belonging to Ahab,^a bond and free.^a ²²And I will make your house like the House of Jeroboam son of Nebat and like the House of Baasha son of Ahijah, because of the provocation you have caused by leading Israel to sin. ²³And the LORD has also spoken concerning Jezebel: 'The dogs shall devour Jezebel in the field^b of Jezreel. ²⁴All of Ahab's line who die in the town shall be devoured by dogs, and all who die in the open country shall be devoured by the birds of the sky.' "

(²⁵Indeed, there never was anyone like Ahab, who committed himself to doing what was displeasing to the LORD, at the instigation of his wife Jezebel. ²⁶He acted most abominably, straying after the fetishes just like the Amorites, whom the LORD had dispossessed before the Israelites.)

²⁷When Ahab heard these words, he rent his clothes and put sackcloth on his body. He fasted and lay in sackcloth and walked about subdued. ²⁸Then the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite: ²⁹"Have you seen how Ahab has humbled himself before Me? Because he has humbled himself before Me, I will not bring the disaster in his lifetime; I will bring the disaster upon his house in his son's time."

22^cThere was a lull of^c three years, with no war between Aram and Israel. ²In the third year, King Jehoshaphat of Judah came to visit the king of Israel. ³The king of Israel said to his courtiers, "You know that Ramoth-gilead belongs to us, and yet we do nothing to recover it from the hands of the king of Aram." ⁴And he said to Jehoshaphat, "Will you come with me to battle at Ramoth-gilead?" Jehoshaphat answered the king of Israel, "I will do what you do; my troops shall be your troops, a-a See note at 14.10.

b So nine Heb. mss. and the parallel 2 Kings 9.36, as well as Targum and other ancient versions. Most texts read here "rampart."

c-c Lit. "They remained."

19–24: Elijah's denunciation of Ahab flows into a doom-laden series of predictions: dogs will lap up Ahab's blood (fulfilled in 22.38); dogs will devour Jezebel (fulfilled in 2 Kings 9.33–36); Ahab's dynasty will be destroyed (cf. 20.42; fulfilled in 2 Kings 10.11, 17). 24: Devoured . . . dogs . . . birds, see 16.4 n. 25–26: The author's comment about Ahab is not anchored in the context of the Naboth story. It addresses Ahab's idolatrous behavior and attributes part of it, at least, to the instigation of his foreign wife. The author used the same device, intended to ameliorate but not forgive the offensive activities, in commenting on Solomon (11.4–5). 27–28: In view of Ahab's sincere contrition, God tells Elijah—who does not tell Ahab—that the destruction of his dynasty, announced to Ahab in vv. 21–22, will not occur in his lifetime. This qualification of the earlier pronouncement allows the author to maintain congruency between a prediction that was part of an early prophetic story and recorded events. It highlights the power of repentance while emphasizing that misdeeds must at some point be punished.

22.1–40: The battle for Ramoth-gilead. This ch resumes the historical narrative about the Aramean wars from ch 20. Ahab's final war against the Arameans was conducted as a joint undertaking with Jehoshaphat of Judah, with whom he was linked through the marriage of their children (2 Kings 8.18). Possibly their common interest was in weakening the Arameans so that Israel could reassert its authority in Galilee and north Transjordan while Judah could strengthen its influence in Edom and other parts of southern Transjordan. 1: According to Assyrian sources, Ahab joined a coalition of thirteen kings against Shalmaneser III of Assyria, who planned to conquer territories west of the Euphrates. Shalmaneser's Monolith Inscription, which covers his early western campaigns, notes that Ahab's contribution of 2,000 chari-my horses shall be your horses.”⁵ But Jehoshaphat said further to the king of Israel, “Please, first inquire of the LORD.”

⁶So the king of Israel gathered the prophets, about four hundred men, and asked them, “Shall I march upon Ramoth-gilead for battle, or shall I not?” “March,” they said, “and the Lord will deliver [it] into Your Majesty’s hands.”⁷ Then Jehoshaphat asked, “Isn’t there another prophet of the LORD here through whom we can inquire?”⁸ And the king of Israel answered Jehoshaphat, “There is one more man through whom we can inquire of the LORD; but I hate him, because he never prophesies anything good for me, but only misfortune—Micaiah son of Imlah.” But King Jehoshaphat said, “Don’t say that, Your Majesty.”⁹ So the king of Israel summoned an officer and said, “Bring Micaiah son of Imlah at once.”

¹⁰The king of Israel and King Jehoshaphat of Judah were seated on their thrones, arrayed in their robes, on the threshing floor at the entrance of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets were prophesying before them.¹¹ Zedekiah son of Chenaanah had provided himself with iron horns; and he said, “Thus said the LORD: With these you shall gore the Arameans till you make an end of them.”¹² And all the other prophets were prophesying similarly, “March upon Ramoth-gilead and triumph! The LORD will deliver it into Your Majesty’s hands.”

¹³The messenger who had gone to summon Micaiah said to him: “Look, the words of the prophets are with one accord favorable to the king. Let your word be like that of the rest of them; speak a favorable word.”¹⁴ “As the LORD lives,” Micaiah answered, “I will speak only what the LORD tells me.”¹⁵ When he came before the king, the king said to him, “Micaiah, shall we march upon Ramoth-gilead for battle, or shall we not?” He answered him, “March and triumph! The LORD will deliver [it] into Your Majesty’s hands.”¹⁶ The king said to him, “How many times must I adjure you to tell me nothing but the truth in the name of the LORD?”¹⁷ Then he said, “I saw all Israel scattered over the hills like sheep without a shepherd; and the LORD said, ‘These have no master; let everyone return to his home in safety.’”¹⁸ “Didn’t I tell you,” said the king of Israel to Jehoshaphat, “that he would not prophesy good fortune for me, but only misfortune?”¹⁹ But [Micaiah] said, “I call upon you to hear the word of the LORD! I saw the LORD seated upon His throne, with all the host of heaven standing in attendance to the right and to the left of Him.²⁰ The LORD asked, ‘Who will entice Ahab so that he will march and fall at Ramoth-gilead?’ Then one said ots and 10,000 infantrymen comprised the largest single contingent. At the Battle of Qarqar, near the Orontes River, in 853 BCE, the coalition successfully halted Assyria’s advance into western Asia. The author of Kings makes no mention of Ahab’s crucial role or of his success at Qarqar. Since the Arameans faced a continual threat from Assyria to their northeast, Ahab may have thought that circumstances afforded him a unique opportunity to reassert his authority easily in territories to which he had claim. 3: Ramoth-gilead in Transjordan had been a central city in one of Solomon’s prefectures (4.13), a Levitical city (Josh. 21.36), and a city of refuge (Deut. 4.43; Josh. 20.8). 5–28: The prophetic consultation. 5–6: Despite the impression left by the Elijah stories that most of the prophets had been killed in Jezebel’s pogrom, in this prophetic story the king of Israel—whose name has been suppressed to keep the focus on the prophets and good king Jehoshaphat—had no problem arranging a consultation with 400 prophets. 13: Micaiah, who has clashed with the king of Israel, most likely Ahab, in the past (v. 8), is coached to deliver a favorable oracle. 19–23: A similar scene of the divine retinue is found in Job chs 1–2. Micaiah does not doubt the integrity of the prophets who predicted victory. He explains that they uttered what God wanted the king to hear, a lie intended to lead Ahab to his downfall. Thus, these are true prophets espousing falsehoods so that Ahab will be punished according to God’s will. Divine spirit (“ruah”) is frequently associated with prophecy.

thus and another said thus, ²¹until a certain spirit came forward and stood before the LORD and said, 'I will entice him.' 'How?' the LORD asked him. ²²And he replied, 'I will go out and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets.' Then He said, 'You will entice and you will prevail. Go out and do it.' ²³So the LORD has put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these prophets of yours; for the LORD has decreed disaster upon you."

²⁴Thereupon Zedekiah son of Chenaanah stepped up and struck Micaiah on the cheek, and demanded, "Which way did the spirit of the LORD pass from me to speak with you?" ²⁵And Micaiah replied, "You'll find out on the day when you try to hide in the innermost room." ²⁶Then the king of Israel said, "Take Micaiah and turn him over to Amon, the city's governor, and to Prince Joash, ²⁷and say, 'The king's orders are: Put this fellow in prison, and let his fare be scant bread and scant water until I come home safe.' " ²⁸To which Micaiah retorted, "If you ever come home safe, the LORD has not spoken through me." ^aHe said further, "Listen, all you peoples!"^a ²⁹So the king of Israel and King Jehoshaphat of Judah marched upon Ramoth-gilead. ³⁰The king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, ^b"Disguise yourself and go^b into the battle; but you, wear your robes." So the king of Israel went into the battle disguised. ³¹Now the king of Aram had instructed his thirty-two chariot officers: "Don't attack anyone, small or great, except the king of Israel." ³²So when the chariot officers saw Jehoshaphat, whom they took for the king of Israel, they turned upon him to attack him, and Jehoshaphat cried out. ³³And when the chariot officers became aware that he was not the king of Israel, they turned back from pursuing him. ³⁴Then a man drew his bow at random and he hit the king of Israel between ^cthe plates of^c the armor; and he said to his charioteer, "Turn ^dthe horses^d around and get me ^ebehind the lines;^e I'm wounded." ³⁵The battle ^craged all day long,^c and the king remained propped up in the chariot facing Aram; the blood from the wound ran down into the hollow of the chariot, and at dusk he died. ³⁶As the sun was going down, a shout went through the army: "Every man to his own town! Every man to his own district."

a-a Perhaps a notation suggesting that Micaiah was identical with Micah, whose prophecies begin, "Listen, all you peoples," Mic. 1.2.

b-b Targum and Septuagint read, "I will disguise myself and go."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Lit. "your hand," because horses are guided by a pull on the appropriate rein; cf. 2 Kings 9.23.

e-e Lit. "outside the camp."

29: Jehoshaphat joins Ahab. On the one hand, 400 prophets had predicted success; on the other, nothing Micaiah said threatened him personally. 34: Ahab was killed by a random arrow, not by the Aramean charioteers searching to kill him. The author includes this piece of information to demonstrate the role of Providence in the fall of an arrow.

39: A standard concluding summary to the reigns of Israelite kings. Ivory palace, one with a room containing rich ivory inlays, such as were found in wood panels and furniture excavated at Samaria (cf. Amos 3.15; 6.4).

22.41–51: The reign of Jehoshaphat is presented briefly, omitting details of the Aramean campaign, while inserting a small list of other events into the standard formula. Chronicles contains an extensive account of Jehoshaphat's judicial initiatives (2 Chron. ch 19), but the historicity of this account is debated. 44: There was no abatement in the popular practice of sacrificing and offering incense at the shrines. It continued even though the Temple was a well-established institution. The author mentions this as a blemish on the record but not as a fault of the king, who did not promote the open shrines. 45: Submitted (Heb "yashlem") is better translated "made peace" or "caused peace." Rashi thinks that it was necessary for the author to mention it because his father Asa had been at war with Baasha, king of Israel. Radak opines that the author intended this to be understood as a second blemish on Jehoshaphat's record, coming, as it does, after the first. 47: Male prostitutes, see 14.24 n. 48–51: Mention is made of Judah's control over Edom because Ezion-geber, from which Jehoshaphat had planned to launch his Tarshish ships, was an Edomite port (9.26). Apparently the Red Sea trade had stopped sometime after the death of Solomon.

³⁷So the king died ^aand was brought^a to Samaria. They buried the king in Samaria, ³⁸and they flushed out the chariot at the pool of Samaria. Thus the dogs lapped up his blood and the whores bathed [in it], in accordance with the word that the LORD had spoken.^b

³⁹The other events of Ahab's reign, and all his actions—the ivory palace that he built and all the towns that he fortified—are all recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. ⁴⁰Ahab slept with his fathers, and his son Ahaziah succeeded him as king.

⁴¹Jehoshaphat son of Asa had become king of Judah in the fourth year of King Ahab of Israel. ⁴²Jehoshaphat was thirty-five years old when he became king, and he reigned in Jerusalem for twenty-five years. His mother's name was Azubah daughter of Shilhi. ⁴³He followed closely the course of his father Asa and did not deviate from it, doing what was pleasing to the LORD. ⁴⁴However, the shrines did not cease to function; the people still sacrificed and offered at the shrines. ⁴⁵And further, Jehoshaphat submitted to the king of Israel. ⁴⁶As for the other events of Jehoshaphat's reign and the valor he displayed in battle, they are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. (⁴⁷He also stamped out the remaining male prostitutes who had survived in the land from the time of his father Asa.)

⁴⁸There was no king in Edom; ^ca viceroy acted as king. ⁴⁹Jehoshaphat^c constructed Tarshish^d ships to sail to Ophir for gold. But he did not sail because the ships were wrecked at Ezion-geber. ⁵⁰Then Ahaziah son of Ahab proposed to Jehoshaphat, "Let my servants sail on the ships with your servants"; but Jehoshaphat would not agree. ⁵¹Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers and was buried with his fathers in the city of his father David, and his son Jehoram succeeded him as king.

⁵²[Meanwhile,] Ahaziah son of Ahab had become king of Israel, in Samaria, in the seventeenth year of King Jehoshaphat of Judah; he reigned over Israel two years. ⁵³He did what was displeasing to the LORD, following in the footsteps of his father and his mother, and in those of Jeroboam son of Nebat who had caused Israel to sin. ⁵⁴He worshiped Baal and bowed down to him; he vexed the LORD, the God of Israel, just as his father had done.

22.52–54: Ahaziah's reign.

Though Ahaziah is ostensibly credited with a two-year reign, the chronological information likely means that he reigned for several months in two different calendar years. Radak notes that v. 52 states that he ascended the throne in Jehoshaphat's seventeenth year while 2 Kings 3.1 indicates that Jehoram, Ahaziah's brother, came to power in Jehoshaphat's eighteenth year. Despite this, the author evaluates his reign negatively not only because he followed in the footsteps of Jeroboam, but also because he adopted the practices of his own parents, Ahab and Jezebel, serving and worshipping Baal. His story continues in 2 Kings 1.

a-a Lit. "he came."

b Cf. 21.19.

c-c Emendation yields "the viceroy of King Jehoshaphat."

d See note at 10.22.

2 Kings

FIRST AND SECOND KINGS were originally one book. For information about 2 Kings, see the introduction preceding 1 Kings.

[ZIONY ZEVI]

1 After Ahab's death, Moab rebelled against Israel. ²Ahaziah fell through the lattice in his upper chamber at Samaria and was injured. So he sent messengers, whom he instructed: "Go inquire of Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron, whether I shall recover from this injury." ³But an angel of the LORD said to Elijah the Tishbite, "Go and confront the messengers of the king of Samaria and say to them, 'Is there no God in Israel that you go to inquire of Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron? ⁴Assuredly, thus said the LORD: You shall not ^arise from the bed you are lying on,^a but you shall die.'" And Elijah went.

⁵The messengers returned to Ahaziah,^b and he asked, "Why have you come back?" ⁶They answered him, "A man came toward us and said to us, 'Go back to the king who sent you, and say to him: Thus said the LORD: Is there no God in Israel that you must send to inquire of Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron? Assuredly, you shall not rise from the bed you are lying on, but shall die.'" ⁷"What sort of man was it," he asked them, "who came toward you and said these things to you?" ⁸"A hairy man," they replied, "with a leather belt tied around his waist." "That's Elijah the Tishbite!" he said.

⁹Then he sent to him a captain of fifty with his fifty men. He climbed up to him, and found him sitting at the top of a hill. "Man of God," he said to him, "by order of the king, come down!" ¹⁰Elijah replied to the captain of the fifty, "If I am a man of God, let fire come down from

1.1–2.12: The final cycle of Elijah stories. 1.1: Moab's rebellion after Ahab's death in the reign of Jehoram (see 3.4–5). It is mentioned here because Ahaziah died, Jehoram came to power, and Moab rebelled in the same calendar year (see 1 Kings 22.52).

1.2–18: The death of Ahaziah. Ahaziah, after being critically injured in Samaria, solicits a prognosis from Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron. This evolves into a confrontation with Elijah like the one between Elijah and Ahab (1 Kings 18.16–18). 2: The lattice was probably a window covering made of thin strips of wood or reeds in a loose net in order to let in light and air while still providing some privacy; there were no glass windows in this period. Baal-zebub, "Lord of the flies," a god worshipped at Ekron, may have been known as a healer. This form of the name, however, may be the author's purposeful corruption of a likely original "Baal-zevul," "Lord of glory/dominion/majesty," understood as a reference to Baal. The word meaning "prince/glory," "zevul," is found as a personal name in Judg. 9.30 and is part of the name of Ahaziah's mother, Jezebel. In the New Testament, Jesus denies that he casts out demons, i.e., heals, in the a-a Lit. "descend from the bed you have mounted."

b Heb. "him."

heaven and consume you with your fifty men!" And fire came down from heaven and consumed him and his fifty men. ¹¹ The king then sent to him another captain with his fifty men; and he "addressed him" as follows: "Man of God, by order of the king, come down at once!" ¹² But Elijah answered him, "If I am a man of God, let fire come down from heaven and consume you with your fifty men!" And fire of God came down from heaven and consumed him and his fifty men. ¹³ Then he sent a third captain of fifty with his fifty men. The third captain of fifty climbed to the top, knelt before Elijah, and implored him, saying, "Oh, man of God, please have regard for my life and the lives of these fifty servants of yours! ¹⁴ Already fire has come from heaven and consumed the first two captains of fifty and their men;^a I beg you, have regard for my life!"

¹⁵ Then the angel of the LORD said to Elijah, "Go down with him, do not be afraid of him." So he rose and went down with him to the king. ¹⁶ He said to him, "Because you sent messengers to inquire of Baal-zebul the god of Ekron—as if there were no God in Israel whose word you could seek—assuredly, you shall not rise from the bed which you are lying on; but you shall die."

¹⁷ And [Ahaziah] died, according to the word of the LORD that Elijah had spoken. Jehoram^c succeeded him as king, in the second year of King Jehoram son of Jehoshaphat of Judah, for he had no son. ¹⁸ The other events of Ahaziah's reign [and] his actions are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel.

2 When the LORD was about to take Elijah up to heaven in a whirlwind, Elijah and Elisha had set out from Gilgal. ² Elijah said to Elisha, "Stay here, for the LORD has sent me on to Bethel." "As the LORD lives and as you live," said Elisha, "I will not leave you." So they went down to Bethel. ³ Disciples of the prophets at Bethel came out to a-a Emendation yields "went up and said to him." cf. v. 9.

b Lit. "fifties." c Brother of Ahaziah.

name of Baal-zevul (see Matt. 12.24–27). The reason that the author or later scribe may have changed the name is because in Solomon's prayer, the Temple is called a "house of zevul" ("A stately House") (1 Kings 8.13). Ekron, the northernmost city of the Philistine pentapolis, about 37 km (22 mi) west of Jerusalem, may have been under Judah's control at this time. Excavations at the site indicate that its material culture mixed Aegean with local elements. 8: The identifying physical characteristic of Elijah was most likely his hair. The leather belt around his garment may have been atypical, but was not a rare accoutrement. Ahaziah recognized him not only by the physical description but also through the indictment in the message. 9–15: The first two groups are destroyed miraculously because their captains failed to respect the man of God commanding him imperiously in the name of the king. The third captain humbled himself and made no request. In this story, Elijah does not pray for a miraculous fire; it comes, as if at his bidding. The Heb text is built around the pun between man of God, "ish 'elohim," and fire of God, "esh 'elohim." 9–10: The captain ordered that he come down. Elijah had punishing fire come down instead. 17: The fulfillment statement here indicates that the author did not connect Ahaziah's death automatically with his critically injured condition. Had Ahaziah sought forgiveness and healing from the God of Israel, he would not have died. At one and the same time, physical and metaphysical laws of causation were operating in nature. Ahaziah was the third generation of the Omri dynasty. The notice that, in the absence of a son, rule passed to a brother, indicates that in the Northern Kingdom at this time kings were acclaimed according to the customs governing the inheritance of property.

2.1–12: Stories about the death of Elijah show the smooth transition of authority from one prophet to another, and with it, responsibility for groups of disciples living in different communities. Introductory v. 1 mentions the whirlwind, which appears in v. 11. 1: Elijah did not die. See also the notation about Enoch in Gen 5.24. His heavenly assumption became the stuff of many legends in Judaism and traditions about him in prophetic circles. These legends, which suggest that Elijah periodically returns to the earth, and is especially associated with the arrival of the Messiah, already have a late biblical precedent (Mal. 3.23–24). 3: The disciples of the prophets were radical monotheists following the teachings of prophets like Elijah, but were not necessarily prophets

Elisha and said to him, "Do you know that the LORD will take your master ^aaway from you^a today?" He replied, "I know it, too; be silent."

⁴Then Elijah said to him, "Elisha, stay here, for the LORD has sent me on to Jericho." "As the LORD lives and as you live," said Elisha, "I will not leave you." So they went on to Jericho. ⁵The disciples of the prophets who were at Jericho came over to Elisha and said to him, "Do you know that the LORD will take your master ^aaway from you^a today?" He replied, "I know it, too; be silent."

⁶Elijah said to him, "Stay here, for the LORD has sent me on to the Jordan." "As the LORD lives and as you live, I will not leave you," he said, and the two of them went on. ⁷Fifty men of the disciples of the prophets followed and stood by at a distance from them as the two of them stopped at the Jordan. ⁸Thereupon Elijah took his mantle and, rolling it up, he struck the water; it divided to the right and left, so that the two of them crossed over on dry land. ⁹As they were crossing, Elijah said to Elisha, "Tell me, what can I do for you before I am taken from you?" Elisha answered, "Let a ^bdouble portion^b of your spirit pass on to me." ¹⁰"You have asked a difficult thing," he said. "If you see me as I am being taken from you, this will be granted to you; if not, it will not." ¹¹As they kept on walking and talking, a fiery chariot with fiery horses suddenly appeared and separated one from the other; and Elijah went up to heaven in a whirlwind. ¹²Elisha saw it, and he cried out, "Oh, father, father! Israel's chariots and horsemen!" When he could no longer see him, he grasped his garments and rent them in two.

¹³He picked up Elijah's mantle, which had dropped from him; and he went back and stood on the bank of the Jordan. ¹⁴Taking the mantle which had dropped from Elijah, he struck the water and said, "Where is the LORD, the God of Elijah?" As he too struck the water, it parted to the name of his father) points out that, according to Deut. 21.17, the eldest son inherits a portion twice that of other brothers dividing their father's property. Elisha, therefore, is not asking for twice the spirit of Elijah, but for the larger amount due the eldest. (For the division of the spirit, cf. Num 11.17, 24–26.) Several rabbinic sources, however, understand double as literal, and suggest that Elijah performed eight miracles, and Elisha sixteen. Many of the miracles performed by Elijah and Elisha are similar, indicating that they shared the same spirit (see 1 Kings 22.19–33 n.). 12: In addition to indicating a biological relationship, father indicates a tutorial one: "instructor, counselor, teacher, leader" (Gen. 45.8; Judg. 17.10; Jer. 31.9). Israel's chariots and horsemen: The same title, possibly an epithet of Elijah as Israel's defender, is addressed to Elisha when he is about to die in 13.14. In the case of Elisha, it may have been based on the incident recorded in 6.17–18. No similar story is recorded about Elijah.

2.13–13.20: The Elisha stories are presented in cycles and interspersed between historical and prophetic narratives, citations from chronicles, and remarks of the author. In contrast to the four major Elijah stories and the story of his death, there are fifteen Elisha stories of varying length. Though many of their activities are similar, Elisha is generally much more sympathetic to the Israelite king than his mentor, Elijah.

2.13–25: The first cycle of stories indicates how Elisha demonstrated that he was a prophet like Elijah and his spiritual heir. 13–14: Elisha tests himself to determine if he inherited spirit from Elijah. Using his teacher's mantle he smites the water, invokes the God of Elijah, and smites the water again. The Jordan splits and he crosses on dry land towards Jericho. 15: The disciples of the prophets at Jericho see and declare him heir of Elijah's spirit. He received more than the double portion that he requested (v. 9).

a-a Lit. "from your head." b-b Lit. "two-thirds"; cf. Zecl. 13.8.

themselves. Many joined to live together in small communities. Somehow the groups at Bethel and Jericho (v. 5) knew that the LORD was about to take Elijah. They do not use words indicating death. 4: In view of 1 Kings 16.34 and Josh. 6.26, the author must have understood that Jericho was not a cursed city after its rebuilding. Excavations at Tel es-Sultan, identified with Jericho of the biblical period, have discovered only sparse finds from the 9th through 7th centuries BCE. 8: Elijah uses his mantle to perform a miracle at the Jordan similar to Moses' parting of the waters (Exod. 14.21–22). Crossing the Jordan east of Jericho indicates that the place of Elijah's assumption was near Mt. Nebo, where Moses had died (Deut. 34.1–6). Thus, in his death, as in earlier texts, Elijah is patterned after Moses. 9: A double portion, see translators' note b-b. Radak (in the right and to the left, and Elisha crossed over. ¹⁵When the disciples of the prophets at Jericho saw him from a distance, they exclaimed, "The spirit of Elijah has settled on Elisha!" And they went to meet him and bowed low before him to the ground.

¹⁶They said to him, "Your servants have fifty able men with them. Let them go and look for your master; perhaps the spirit of the LORD has carried him off and cast him upon some mountain or into some valley." "Do not send them," he replied. ¹⁷But they kept pressing him for a long time, until he said, "Send them." So they sent out fifty men, who searched for three days but did not find him. ¹⁸They came back to him while he was still in Jericho; and he said to them, "I told you not to go."

Places associated with the Elisha narratives. The dashed line shows the approximate boundaries between Israel, Judah, and Philistia.

¹⁹The men of the town said to Elisha, "Look, the town is a pleasant place to live in, as my lord can see; but the water is bad and the land causes bereavement." ²⁰He responded, "Bring me a new dish and put salt in it." They brought it to him; ²¹he went to the spring and threw salt into it. And he said, "Thus said the LORD: I heal this water; no longer shall death and bereavement come from it!" ²²The water has remained wholesome to this day, in accordance with the word spoken by Elisha.

²³From there he went up to Bethel. As he was going up the road, some little boys came out of the town and jeered at him, saying, "Go away, baldhead! Go away, baldhead!" ²⁴He turned around and looked at them and cursed them in the name of the LORD. Thereupon, two she-bears came out of the woods and mangled forty-two of the children. ²⁵He went on from there to Mount Carmel, and from there he returned to Samaria.

3 Jehoram son of Ahab became king of Israel in Samaria in the eighteenth year of King Jehoshaphat of Judah; and he reigned twelve years. ²He did what was displeasing to the LORD, yet not like his father and mother, for he removed the pillars of Baal that his father had made. ³However, he clung to the sins which Jeroboam son of Nebat caused Israel to commit; he did not depart from them.

⁴Now King Mesha of Moab was a sheep breeder; and he used to pay as tribute to the king of Israel a hundred thousand lambs and the wool of a hundred thousand rams. ⁵But when Ahab died, the king of Moab rebelled against the king of Israel. ⁶So King Jehoram promptly set out from Samaria and mustered all Israel. ⁷At the same time, he sent this message to King Jehoshaphat of Judah: "The king of Moab has rebelled against me; will you come with me to make war on Moab?" He replied, "I will go. I will do what you do: my troops shall be your troops, my horses shall be your horses." ⁸And he asked, "Which route shall we take?" [Jehoram] replied, "The road through the wilderness of Edom."

⁹So the king of Israel, the king of Judah, and the king of Edom set out, and they marched for seven days until they

a-a Or "the wool of 100,000 lambs and of 100,000 rams."

19–22: A magical "healing" story in which Elisha does and says things that, in combination, produce the desired result. All is done on his own authority, with no prayer for healing. Cf. 1.5–14. A long tradition points to Ein es-Sultan in contemporary Jericho as Elisha's spring. In its present form, the story is etiological, explaining the origin of the freshwater spring in Jericho that makes the whole region agriculturally rich. 23: In calling Elisha baldhead, the boys seem to be mocking him; they may actually, however, be insulting him as a prophet by comparing him derogatorily to Elijah, who was hairy (1.8). Local tradition places the site of this story near the town of Deir Dibwan, "Lair of the two bears," about 1.5 km (1 mile) east of Bethel. 24: Here, as in vv. 19–22, Elisha does and says something to produce the desired result. First he turns and looks at the boys, then curses them in the name of the LORD. He does not pray that they be punished, although he himself calls down the punishment. The bears did not kill and eat. The large carnage is mentioned as an indication that their behavior was not natural. This story, like the Elijah story in 1.9–16, emphasizes that the man of God must be treated with proper respect.

3.1–27: The Moabite war and Elisha's prophecy initiate the complex of Elisha stories in which the author mixed prophetic tales with archival materials.

3.1–3: Introduction to the reign of Jehoram son of Ahab. The author notes to the king's credit his removal of the pillars of Baal made by his father. This is the first notice that such pillars had been constructed. See also 10.26.

3.4–27: The rebellion of Mesha. The Mesha stele, found in 1868, provides a summary of this king's various achievements arranged in a rough chronological order. It notes the occupation of Moab in the days of Omri and his son, i.e., rounded [the tip of the Dead Sea]; and there was no water left for the army or for the animals that were with them. ¹⁰ "Alas!" cried the king of Israel. "The LORD has brought these three kings together only to deliver them into the hands of Moab." ¹¹ But Jehoshaphat said, "Isn't there a prophet of the LORD here, through whom we may inquire of the LORD?" One of the courtiers of the king of Israel spoke up and said, "Elisha son of Shaphat, who ^apoured water on the hands of ^aElijah, is here." ¹² "The word of the LORD is with him," said Jehoshaphat. So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom went down to him. ¹³ Elisha said to the king of Israel, "What have you to do with me? Go to your father's prophets or your mother's prophets." But the king of Israel said, "Don't [say that], for the LORD has brought these three kings together only to deliver them into the hands of Moab." ¹⁴ "As the LORD of Hosts lives, whom I serve," Elisha answered, "were it not that I respect King Jehoshaphat of Judah, I wouldn't look at you or notice you. ¹⁵ Now then, get me a musician."

As the musician played, the hand of the LORD came upon him, ¹⁶ and he said, "Thus said the LORD: This wadi shall be full of pools. ¹⁷ For thus said the LORD: You shall see no wind, you shall see no rain, and yet the wadi shall be filled with water; and you and your cattle and your pack animals shall drink. ¹⁸ And this is but a slight thing in the sight of the LORD, for He will also deliver Moab into your hands. ¹⁹ You shall conquer every fortified town and every splendid city; you shall fell every good tree and stop up all wells of water; and every fertile field you shall ruin with stones." ²⁰ And in the morning, when it was time to present the meal offering, water suddenly came from the direction of Edom and the land was covered by the water.

²¹ Meanwhile, all the Moabites had heard that the kings were advancing to make war on them; ^bevery man old enough to bear arms^b rallied, and they stationed themselves at the border. ²² Next morning, when they rose, the sun was shining over the water, and from the distance the water appeared to the Moabites as red as blood. ²³ "That's blood!" they said. "The kings must have fought among themselves and killed each other. Now to the spoil, Moab!"

²⁴ They entered the Israelite camp, and the Israelites arose and attacked the Moabites, who fled before them.

a-a I.e., personally attended.

b-b Lit. "from all those old enough to gird on a sword."

Ahab. It indicates that Mesha undertook actions against Israelites in occupied northern Moab before the death of Ahab. It may have been only after the death of Ahab that Mesha withheld tribute (1.1; 3.5), slaughtered people from the tribe of Gad in the city of Ataroth (noted on the stele), and moved aggressively north of the Arnon river. 7: King Jehoshaphat's interest in assisting Jehoram may have been to discourage Judah's vassal, Edom, from seeking its own independence (cf. 1 Kings 22.48). In addition to national interests, Jehoshaphat had married his son Joram to Ahab's daughter (2 Kings 8.18). 8: Jehoram's strategy was to march through Judah around the southern edge of the Dead Sea and approach Moab from the south. All of Mesha's activities, and presumably the majority of his forces, were north of the Arnon, but the core of his kingdom was south of the river up to the Edomite border. 9-10: The success of Jehoram's strategy was dependent on an adequate supply of local water. The inadequate supply leads him to think that it is part of a divine plan against his coalition. 11-14: Jehoshaphat, who wished to consult a prophet (cf. 1 Kings 22.7), knows of Elisha by reputation. Elisha, impolite and rude to the king of Israel (vv. 13-14), responds to the request for an oracle only because Jehoshaphat is also endangered by what may occur. 15: The musician helps produce the atmosphere conducive for a divine visitation (cf. 1 Sam 10.5-6). 16: The pools (Heb "gevim") are natural sinkholes and fissures in the limestone floor of the wadis that retain large amounts of water after a runoff (cf. Jer. 14.3). 22: In the morning, the reflection of red sandstone mountains off the pooled waters is interpreted by the Moabites as blood. 24-25: The three armies pursue Moabites north from the border, destroying fields, stopping wells, and uprooting fruit trees in fulfillment of Elisha's prediction (v. 19). The Moabites take shelter in Kir-hareseth, identified with modern el-Kerak, a site on a high hill with ^aThey advanced, constantly attacking^a the Moabites, ²⁵and they destroyed the towns. Every man threw a stone into each fertile field, so that it was covered over; and they stopped up every spring and felled every fruit tree. ^bOnly the walls of^b Kir-hareseth were left, and then the slingers surrounded it and attacked it. ²⁶Seeing that the battle was going against him, the king of Moab led an attempt of seven hundred swordsmen to break a way through to the king of Edom;^c but they failed. ²⁷So he took his first-born son, who was to succeed him as king, and offered him up on the wall as a burnt offering. A great wrath came upon Israel, so they withdrew from him and went back to [their own] land.

4 A certain woman, the wife of one of the disciples of the prophets, cried out to Elisha: "Your servant my husband is dead, and you know how your servant revered the LORD. And now a creditor is coming to seize my two children as slaves." ²Elisha said to her, "What can I do for you? Tell me, what have you in the house?" She replied, "Your maidservant has nothing at all in the house, except a jug of oil." ³"Go," he said, "and borrow vessels outside, from all your neighbors, empty vessels, as many as you can. ⁴Then go in and shut the door behind you and your children, and pour [oil] into all those vessels, removing each one as it is filled."

⁵She went away and shut the door behind her and her children. They kept bringing [vessels] to her and she kept pouring. ⁶When the vessels were full, she said to her son, "Bring me another vessel." He answered her, "There are no more vessels"; and the oil stopped. ⁷She came and told the man of God, and he said, "Go sell the oil and pay your debt, and you and your children can live on the rest."

⁸One day Elisha visited Shunem. A wealthy woman lived there, and she urged him to have a meal; and whenever he passed by, he would stop there for a meal. ⁹Once she said to her husband, "I am sure it is a holy man of God

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Lit. "Until the stones in"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Emendation yields "Aram."

deep gorges around its salient.

27: Mesha sacrifices his first-born son in an extreme, powerful act. Perhaps Mesha interpreted his losses as punishment for some offense that angered his national deity Chemosh, an offense that could be atoned for through the offering of his son (cf. Mic. 6.7). Although interpreters are unsure what the author meant by a great wrath came upon Israel, it suggests that Mesha achieved his objective, and the human sacrifice was efficacious. The coalition abandoned the field and returned home.

4.1-6.23: The second cycle of Elisha stories. Perhaps the author inserts them at this point because Elisha was mentioned in the context of the Moabite campaign. The motifs of inadequate provisions and death recur in this cycle of stories, but the main theme is Elisha as a healer.

4.1-7: The miraculous provision of oil. A prophetic story whose central miracle parallels that of Elijah in 1 Kings 17.14-16. This story is atypical of the simple miracle stories in that it provides extraneous details about why the woman had some claim to Elisha's help. The story lacks any mention of prayer or divine presence. The sense of wonderment is thereby focused completely on the only named person in the narrative, Elisha. This story in particular shows signs of remnants of Israelite Hebrew, suggesting that many of these prophetic stories were composed in the north, and later incorporated into the Judean Book of Kings. 1: The woman does not complain about social injustice but about her financial straits. Seize my two children as slaves: This was a long-established legal norm; see Exod. 21.2-11; Lev. 25.39-55; Deut. 15.12-15; Neh. 5.1-5. 2: The fact that the seizure of the children is legal explains why Elisha's first reaction to her statement and implied request for help was to inquire what he could do.

4.8-37: The birth and revivification of the Shunammite's son. The narrative combines prediction and miracle stories in a tale whose chronology spans five to ten years. It is suffused with sufficient background to understand what motivates the actions of all main characters. The expression "one day" introduces each major part of the narrative: In v. 8 it introduces the who comes this way regularly. ¹⁰Let us make a small "enclosed upper chamber"^a and place a bed, a table, a chair, and a lampstand there for him, so that he can stop there whenever he comes to us." ¹¹One day he came there; he retired to the upper chamber and lay down there. ¹²He said to his servant Gehazi, "Call that Shunammite woman." He called her, and she stood before him. ¹³He said to him, "Tell her, 'You have gone to all this trouble for us. What can we do for you? Can we speak in your behalf to the king or to the army commander?'" She replied, "I live among my own people." ¹⁴"What then can be done for her?" he asked. "The fact is," said Gehazi, "she has no son, and her husband is old." ¹⁵"Call her," he said. He called her, and she stood in the doorway. ¹⁶And Elisha said, "At this season next year, you will be embracing a son." She replied, "Please, my lord, man of God, do not delude your maidservant."

¹⁷The woman conceived and bore a son at the same season the following year, as Elisha had assured her. ¹⁸The child grew up. One day, he went out to his father among the reapers. ¹⁹[Suddenly] he cried to his father, "Oh, my head, my head!" He said to a servant, "Carry him to his mother." ²⁰He picked him up and brought him to his mother. And the child sat on her lap until noon; and he died. ²¹She took him up and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and left him and closed the door. ²²Then she called to her husband: "Please, send me one of the servants and one of the she-asses, so I can hurry to the man of God and back." ²³But he said, "Why are you going to him today? It is neither new moon nor sabbath." She answered, ^b"It's all right." ^b main characters in the house of the Shunammite; in v. 11 the promise/prediction of the child; in v. 18, the story of the death and revivification of the child. 9: Elisha traveled a regular circuit, possibly visiting groups of disciples of the prophets (cf. Samuel in 1 Sam. 7.15-17).

²⁴She had the ass saddled, and said to her servant, "Urge [the beast] on;^c see that I don't slow down unless I tell you." ²⁵She went on until she came to the man of God on Mount Carmel. When the man of God saw her from afar, he said to his servant Gehazi, "There is that Shunammite woman. ²⁶Go, hurry toward her and ask her, 'How are you? How is your husband? How is the child?'" "We are well," she replied. ²⁷But when she came up to the man of God on the mountain, she clasped his feet. Gehazi stepped forward to push her away; but the man of God said, "Let her alone, for she is in bitter distress; and the LORD has hidden it from me and has not told me." ²⁸Then she said, "Did I ask my lord for a son? Didn't I say: 'Don't mislead me?'"

12-16: Elisha begins by speaking to the woman indirectly, through Gehazi, but ends by addressing her directly (see also vv. 26-28, 36).

20-22: The narrator informs readers that the child died; the Shunammite, however, may not have perceived that he was dead, only very ill. She did not tell her husband that the child was dead but proceeded to rush to the person who she believed could heal her child.

23: Her husband's question assumes that when the Shunammite visited Elisha it was typically for the celebration of either a new month or a Sabbath.

a-a Or "upper wall-chamber"; lit. "an upper chamber of wall(s)."

b-b Heb. Shalom.

c The servant runs behind the donkey and urges it on with a stick.

²⁹He said to Gehazi, ^a“Tie up your skirts,^a take my staff in your hand, and go. If you meet anyone, do not greet him; and if anyone greets you, do not answer him. And place my staff on the face of the boy.” ³⁰But the boy’s mother said, “As the LORD lives and as you live, I will not leave you!” So he arose and followed her.

³¹Gehazi had gone on before them and had placed the staff on the boy’s face; but there was no sound or response. He turned back to meet him and told him, “The boy has not awakened.” ³²Elisha came into the house, and there was the boy, laid out dead on his couch. ³³He went in, shut the door behind the two of them, and prayed to the LORD. ³⁴Then he mounted [the bed] and placed himself over the child. He put his mouth on its mouth, his eyes on its eyes, and his hands on its hands, as he bent over it. And the body of the child became warm. ³⁵He stepped down, walked once up and down the room, then mounted and bent over him. Thereupon, the boy sneezed seven times, and the boy opened his eyes. ³⁶[Elisha] called Gehazi and said, “Call the Shunammite woman,” and he called her. When she came to him, he said, “Pick up your son.” ³⁷She came and fell at his feet and bowed low to the ground; then she picked up her son and left.

³⁸Elisha returned to Gilgal. There was a famine in the land, and the disciples of the prophets were sitting before him. He said to his servant, “Set the large pot [on the fire] and cook a stew for the disciples of the prophets.” ³⁹So one of them went out into the fields to gather sprouts. He came across a wild vine and picked from it wild gourds, as many as his garment would hold. Then he came back and sliced them into the pot of stew, for they did not know [what they were]; ⁴⁰and they served it for the men to eat. While they were still eating of the stew, they began to cry out: “O man of God, there is death in the pot!”^b And they could not eat it. ⁴¹“Fetch some flour,” [Elisha] said. He threw it into the pot and said, “Serve it to the people and let them eat.” And there was no longer anything harmful in the pot.

⁴²A man came from Baal-shalishah and he brought the man of God some bread of the first reaping—twenty loaves of barley bread, and some fresh grain ^cin his sack.^c And [Elisha] said, “Give it to the people and let them eat.” ⁴³His attendant replied, “How can I set this before a hun-

29–32: Gehazi was dispatched to perform a healing using Elisha’s staff. Elisha thought that his presence was not actually needed for a healing to occur (cf. 4.5–6). Elisha’s initial plan, executed by Gehazi, failed. Malbim suggests that from Gehazi’s remark to Elisha in v. 31, it appears that Elisha misdiagnosed the problem on the basis of the Shunammite’s information; God had not revealed anything of the matter to him (v. 27). The child was truly dead. 34–35: The revivification performed here by Elisha is similar to what is described with fewer details about Elijah in 1 Kings 17.21–22.

4.38–41: Elisha neutralizes a poison. 39: Sprouts: Radak’s opinion that Heb “orot” refers to herbs, on the basis of Isa. 26.19, is reflected in the translation. Others suggest that it refers to Eruca sativa, a radish-like plant whose bitter leaves are edible. Wild gourds (Heb “paku’ot”): Citrullus colocynthis, a melon-like plant, contains seeds in which there is a poisonous substance.

4.42–44: Elisha feeds a multitude.

a-a Lit. “Gird your loins”; cf. 1 Kings 18.46.

b The wild gourds cause severe cramps.

c-c Or “ou the stalk”; perhaps connected with Ugaritic bšql.

dred men?" But he said, "Give it to the people and let them eat. For thus said the LORD: They shall eat and have some left over." ⁴⁴So he set it before them; and when they had eaten, they had some left over, as the LORD had said.

5 Naaman, commander of the army of the king of Aram, was important to his lord and high in his favor, for through him the LORD had granted victory to Aram. But the man, though a great warrior, was a leper.^a ²Once, when the Arameans were out raiding, they carried off a young girl from the land of Israel, and she became an attendant to Naaman's wife. ³She said to her mistress, "I wish Master could come before the prophet in Samaria; he would cure him of his leprosy." ⁴[Naaman] went and told his lord just what the girl from the land of Israel had said. ⁵And the king of Aram said, "Go to the king of Israel, and I will send along a letter."

He set out, taking with him ten talents of silver, six thousand shekels of gold, and ten changes of clothing. ⁶He brought the letter to the king of Israel. It read: "Now, when this letter reaches you, know that I have sent my courtier Naaman to you, that you may cure him of his leprosy." ⁷When the king of Israel read the letter, he rent his clothes and cried, "Am I God, to deal death or give life, that this fellow writes to me to cure a man of leprosy? Just see for yourselves that he is seeking a pretext against me!"

⁸When Elisha, the man of God, heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, he sent a message to the king: "Why have you rent your clothes? Let him come to me, and he will learn that there is a prophet in Israel."

⁹So Naaman came with his horses and chariots and halted at the door of Elisha's house. ¹⁰Elisha sent a messenger to say to him, "Go and bathe seven times in the Jordan, and your flesh shall be restored and you shall be clean." ¹¹But Naaman was angered and walked away. "I thought," he said, "he would surely come out to me, and would stand and invoke the LORD his God by name, and would wave his hand toward the spot, and cure the affected part. ¹²Are not the Amanah and the Pharpar, the rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? I could bathe in them and be clean!" And he stalked off in a rage.

¹³But his servants came forward and spoke to him. "Sir,"^b they said, "if the prophet told you to do something difficult, would you not do it? How much more when he has only said to you, 'Bathe and be clean.'" ¹⁴So he went down and immersed himself in the Jordan seven times, as

5.1-27: The healing of Naaman the leper. The story of Naaman the Aramean leper is a complex legend. Since only a few main characters are presented by name, the anonymity of the kings of Aram and Israel makes it impossible to attribute the story to a particular period in the life of Elisha. One motif of the story is that people of higher social status are dependent on people of lower status: Naaman on counsel from his wife reporting information from an Israelite slave girl (vv. 2-3); the king of Aram on the king of Israel, and the latter on Elisha (vv. 5-8); Naaman on the advice of his own servants and Elisha (vv. 13-15). 1: The leprosy of Naaman was some sort of dermatological problem (see annotations on Lev. ch 13) that did not disfigure him or disqualify him from military office or entering temples in his homeland (see v. 18). 7-8: In this story, the king of Israel is unaware of Elisha's healing powers although a little girl captured by the Arameans is (vv. 2-3).

10: Elisha's prescription does not involve divine guidance or prayer.

a Cf. note on Lev. 13.3. b Lit. "[My]father."

the man of God had bidden; and his flesh became like a little boy's, and he was clean. ¹⁵ Returning with his entire retinue to the man of God, he stood before him and exclaimed, "Now I know that there is no God in the whole world except in Israel! So please accept a gift from your servant." ¹⁶ But he replied, "As the LORD lives, whom I serve, I will not accept anything." He pressed him to accept, but he refused. ¹⁷ And Naaman said, "Then at least let your servant be given two mule-loads of earth; for your servant will never again offer up burnt offering or sacrifice to any god, except the LORD. ¹⁸ But may the LORD pardon your servant for this: When my master enters the temple of Rimmon to bow low in worship there, and he is leaning on my arm so that I must bow low in the temple of Rimmon—when I bow low in the temple of Rimmon, may the LORD pardon your servant in this." ¹⁹ And he said to him, "Go in peace."

When he had gone some distance from him, ²⁰ Gehazi, the attendant of Elisha the man of God, thought: "My master ^ahas let that Aramean Naaman off without accepting what he brought!^a As the LORD lives, I will run after him and get something from him." ²¹ So Gehazi hurried after Naaman. When Naaman saw someone running after him, he alighted from his chariot to meet him and said, "Is all well?" ²² "All is well," he replied. "My master has sent me to say: Two youths, disciples of the prophets, have just come to me from the hill country of Ephraim. Please give them a talent of silver and two changes of clothing." ²³ Naaman said, "Please take two talents." He urged him, and he wrapped the two talents of silver in two bags and gave them, along with two changes of clothes, to two of his servants, who carried them ahead of him. ²⁴ When [Gehazi] arrived at the citadel, he took [the things] from them and deposited them in the house. Then he dismissed the men and they went their way.

²⁵ He entered and stood before his master; and Elisha said to him, "Where have you been, Gehazi?" He replied, "Your servant has not gone anywhere." ²⁶ Then [Elisha] said to him, "Did not my spirit^b go along when a man got down from his chariot to meet you? Is this a time to take money in order to buy clothing and olive groves and vineyards, sheep and oxen, and male and female slaves? ²⁷ Surely, the leprosy of Naaman shall cling to you and to your descendants forever." And as [Gehazi] left his presence, he was snow-white with leprosy.

15-17: Naaman's experience convinces him of the radical monotheism of Elisha and of the author, but he concludes that though God is universal, He may be worshipped only on the soil of His chosen land. A main point of this story, then, is the sanctity of the land of Israel. 18: Rimmon, an alternative name for the Aramean storm-god, Hadad (Zech. 12.11).

26: Elisha had clairvoyant abilities.

27: Gehazi's solicitation had made Elisha appear to be a fee-for-service healer, reducing the miraculous cure to a matter of arcane knowledge. Gehazi's leprosy demonstrated its divine nature.

a-a Lit. "has prevented that Aramean Naaman from having what he brought accepted."

b Lit. "heart."

6 The disciples of the prophets said to Elisha, "See, the place where we live under your direction is too cramped for us. ²Let us go to the Jordan, and let us each get a log there and build quarters there for ourselves to live in." "Do so," he replied. ³Then one of them said, "Will you please come along with your servants?" "Yes, I will come," he said; ⁴and he accompanied them. So they went to the Jordan and cut timber. ⁵As one of them was felling a trunk, the iron ax head fell into the water. And he cried aloud, "Alas, master, it was a borrowed one!" ⁶"Where did it fall?" asked the man of God. He showed him the spot; and he cut off a stick and threw it in, and he made the ax head float. ⁷"Pick it up," he said; so he reached out and took it.

⁸While the king of Aram was waging war against Israel, he took counsel with his officers and said, ^a"I will encamp^a in such and such a place." ⁹But the man of God sent word to the king of Israel, "Take care not to pass through that place, for the Arameans are encamped there." ¹⁰So the king of Israel sent word to the place of which the man of God had told him. ^bTime and again^b he alerted ^csuch a place^c and took precautions there. ¹¹Greatly agitated about this matter, the king of Aram summoned his officers and said to them, "Tell me! Who of us is on the side of the king of Israel?" ¹²"No one, my lord king," said one of the officers. "Elisha, that prophet in Israel, tells the king of Israel the very words you speak in your bedroom." ¹³"Go find out where he is," he said, "so that I can have him seized." It was reported to him that [Elisha] was in Dothan; ¹⁴so he sent horses and chariots there and a strong force. They arrived at night and encircled the town.

¹⁵When the attendant of the man of God rose early and went outside, he saw a force, with horses and chariots, surrounding the town. "Alas, master, what shall we do?" his servant asked him. ¹⁶"Have no fear," he replied. "There are more on our side than on theirs." ¹⁷Then Elisha prayed: "LORD, open his eyes and let him see." And the LORD opened the servant's eyes and he saw the hills all around Elisha covered with horses and chariots of fire. ¹⁸[The Arameans] came down against him, and Elisha prayed to the LORD: "Please strike this people with a blinding light." And He struck them with a blinding light, as Elisha had asked.

¹⁹Elisha said to them, "This is not the road, and that is not the town; follow me, and I will lead you to the man you want." And he led them to Samaria. ²⁰When they en-

6.1-7: Elisha makes an ax head float. 1: Disciples of the prophets: Elisha much more than Elijah is associated with a prophetic company. Place where we live: This seems to imply a regular community under Elisha's direction. 2: Trees, and therefore a log, would be more readily found near the Jordan.

6.8-23: The Aramean raiders are foiled. A prophetic story celebrating how the clairvoyant Elisha, whose skill is known within court circles of the Arameans, captured a contingent of the Aramean army and delivered it to the king of Israel. The names of the Aramean and Israelite kings are not provided in this story either (cf. 5.1-27). This story concludes the second cycle (see 4.1). 8-13: The story is set in a period when Aramean troops regularly made incursions deep into Israel, south of the Jezreel Valley, and were even able to attack the city of Dothan. The details, however, are insufficient to place them into a specific chronological setting. 17-18: Elisha prays twice, once that his servant will see that his master is surrounded and protected by an invisible force and once that the Arameans will be blinded by light so that they cannot see. When Elisha requires miraculous intervention for himself, he prays for it.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Lit. "not once or twice." c-c Heb. "it."

tered Samaria, Elisha said, "O LORD, open the eyes of these men so that they may see." The LORD opened their eyes and they saw that they were inside Samaria.²¹ When the king of Israel saw them, he said to Elisha, "Father, shall I strike them down?"²² "No, do not," he replied. "Did you take them captive with your sword and bow that you would strike them down? Rather, set food and drink before them, and let them eat and drink and return to their master."²³ So he prepared a lavish feast for them and, after they had eaten and drunk, he let them go, and they returned to their master. And the Aramean bands stopped invading the land of Israel.

²⁴Sometime later, King Ben-hadad of Aram mustered his entire army and marched upon Samaria and besieged it.²⁵ There was a great famine in Samaria, and the siege continued until a donkey's head sold for eighty [shekels] of silver and a quarter of a kab of ^a'doves' dung^a for five shekels.²⁶ Once, when the king of Israel was walking on the city wall, a woman cried out to him: "Help me, Your Majesty!"²⁷ "Don't [ask me]," he replied. "Let the LORD help you! Where could I get help for you, from the threshing floor or from the winepress?"²⁸ But what troubles you?" the king asked her. The woman answered, "That woman said to me, 'Give up your son and we will eat him today; and tomorrow we'll eat my son.'²⁹ So we cooked my son and we ate him. The next day I said to her, 'Give up your son and let's eat him'; but she hid her son."³⁰ When the king heard what the woman said, he rent his clothes; and as he walked along the wall, the people could see that he was wearing sackcloth underneath.

³¹He said, "Thus and more may God do to me if the head of Elisha son of Shaphat remains on ^bhis shoulders^b today."³² Now Elisha was sitting at home and the elders were sitting with him. The king had sent ahead one of his men; but before the messenger arrived, [Elisha] said to the elders, "Do you see—that murderer has sent someone to cut off my head! Watch when the messenger comes, and shut the door and hold the door fast against him. No doubt the sound of his master's footsteps will follow."

³³While he was still talking to them, the messenger^c came to him and said, "This calamity is from the LORD. 7 What more can I hope for from the LORD?"¹ And Elisha replied, "Hear the word of the LORD. Thus said the LORD: This time tomorrow, a seah of choice flour shall sell

6.24-7.20: The siege of Samaria.

6.24: This introduction, contradicting v. 23, indicates these stories have not been combined in historical order. This siege story may have originally followed the story of the Moabite campaign (3.27). Ralbag's comment on v. 23 suggests how the author may have interpreted the two verses in a non-contradictory manner. Ralbag interprets vv. 23-24 as meaning that the Arameans stopped sending in contingents of soldiers and amassed a single army that besieged Samaria. 25: Even the least desirable of foods are sold for a high price. 28: The motif of cannibalism is associated with sieges also in Deut. 28.53-57; Ezek. 5.10; Lam. 2.20; 4.10. 30: The king had been wearing sackcloth beneath his normal clothing as a sign of mourning or contrition. 31: This oath against Elisha indicates that somehow the king held the prophet responsible for the siege. Rashi, Radak, and Joseph Kara suggest that it was because the king thought that Elisha could request relief from God. Ralbag, however, assumes that Elisha provided fair warning of the siege and starvation, just as Elijah had of the drought in 1 Kings 17.1, and that the king thought that it had gone on long enough. 6.33-7.1: The king had a revolutionary change of heart. His messengers, in his name, acknowledge that God is the source of the calamity, and Elisha rewards the confession with a prediction that the famine would end the next day. 7.2: The cynical aide next to the king challenges Elisha. In response Elisha predicts his death, a prediction fulfilled in vv. 17-20. 5-7: These verses are a parenthetical explanation of how it happened that the lepers found the Aramean camp empty. 6: Only Arameans encamped around Samaria heard sounds of the chariots and army. Cf. 6.16-17 that describe the invisible chariots protecting Elisha and 2 Sam. 5.24 that refers to the sounds of an invisible army of God.

a-a Apparently a popular term for "carob pods," as in Akkadian.

b-b Lit. "him." c Emendation yields "king."

for a shekel at the gate of Samaria, and two seahs of barley for a shekel." ²The aide on whose arm the king was leaning spoke up and said to the man of God, "Even if the LORD were to make windows in the sky, could this come to pass?" And he retorted, "You shall see it with your own eyes, but you shall not eat of it."

³There were four men, lepers, outside the gate. They said to one another, "Why should we sit here waiting for death? ⁴If we decide to go into the town, what with the famine in the town, we shall die there; and if we just sit here, still we die. Come, let us desert to the Aramean camp. If they let us live, we shall live; and if they put us to death, we shall but die."

⁵They set out at twilight for the Aramean camp; but when they came to the edge of the Aramean camp, there was no one there. ⁶For the Lord had caused the Aramean camp to hear a sound of chariots, a sound of horses—the din of a huge army. They said to one another, "The king of Israel must have hired the kings of the Hittites and the kings of Mizraim^a to attack us!" ⁷And they fled headlong in the twilight, abandoning their tents and horses and asses—the [entire] camp just as it was—as they fled for their lives.

⁸When those lepers came to the edge of the camp, they went into one of the tents and ate and drank; then they carried off silver and gold and clothing from there and buried it. They came back and went into another tent, and they carried off what was there and buried it. ⁹Then they said to one another, "We are not doing right. This is a day of good news, and we are keeping silent! If we wait until the light of morning, we shall incur guilt. Come, let us go and inform the king's palace." ¹⁰They went and called out to the gatekeepers of the city and told them, "We have been to the Aramean camp. There is not a soul there, nor any human sound; but the horses are tethered and the asses are tethered and the tents are undisturbed."

¹¹The gatekeepers called out, and the news was passed on into the king's palace. ¹²The king rose in the night and said to his courtiers, "I will tell you what the Arameans have done to us. They know that we are starving, so they have gone out of camp and hidden in the fields, thinking: When they come out of the town, we will take them alive and get into the town." ¹³But one of the courtiers spoke up, "Let a few^b of the remaining horses that are still here be taken—^athey are like those that are left here of the whole multitude of Israel, out of the whole multitude of Israel that have perished^a—and let us send and find out.”

^a Cf. 1 Kings 10.28 and note d there.

^b Lit. "five."

¹⁴They took two teams^a of horses and the king sent them after the Aramean army, saying, “Go and find out.”
¹⁵They followed them as far as the Jordan, and found the entire road full of clothing and gear which the Arameans had thrown away in their haste; and the messengers returned and told the king. ¹⁶The people then went out and plundered the Aramean camp. So a seah of choice flour sold for a shekel, and two seahs of barley for a shekel—as the LORD had spoken.

¹⁷Now the king had put the aide on whose arm he leaned in charge of the gate; and he was trampled to death in the gate by the people—just as the man of God had spoken, as he had spoken when the king came down to him. ¹⁸For when the man of God said to the king, “This time tomorrow two seahs of barley shall sell at the gate of Samaria for a shekel, and a seah of choice flour for a shekel,” ¹⁹the aide answered the man of God and said, “Even if the LORD made windows in the sky, could this come to pass?” And he retorted, “You shall see it with your own eyes, but you shall not eat of it.” ²⁰That is exactly what happened to him: The people trampled him to death in the gate.

8 Elisha had said to the woman whose son he revived,
^a“Leave immediately with your family and go sojourn^b somewhere else;^b for the LORD has decreed a seven-year famine upon the land, and it has already begun.” ²The woman had done as the man of God had spoken; she left with her family and sojourned in the land of the Philistines for seven years. ³At the end of the seven years, the woman returned from the land of the Philistines and went to the king to complain about her house and farm. ⁴Now the king was talking to Gehazi, the servant of the man of God, and he said, “Tell me all the wonderful things that Elisha has done.” ⁵While he was telling the king how [Elisha] had revived a dead person, in came the woman whose son he had revived, complaining to the king about her house and farm. “My lord king,” said Gehazi, “this is the woman and this is her son whom Elisha revived.”
⁶The king questioned the woman, and she told him [the story]; so the king assigned a eunuch to her and instructed him: “Restore all her property, and all the revenue from her farm from the time she left the country until now.”

8.1-6: A story about Gehazi telling Elisha stories to the king of Israel. The brief tale most likely describes something that occurred after the death of Elisha: (1) the king asks to be told such stories (v. 4) and (2) the woman whose son had been revived petitions the king on her own, indicating that her husband is dead and that Elisha, who could act on her behalf, is not available (4.13). 1: The seven-year famine may have been a period prior to and during the siege of Samaria narrated in the preceding section.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Lit. “wherever you may sojourn.”

⁷Elisha arrived in Damascus at a time when King Ben-hadad of Aram was ill. ^aThe king^a was told, "The man of God is on his way here," ⁸and he said to Hazael, "Take a gift with you and go meet the man of God, and through him inquire of the LORD: Will I recover from this illness?" ⁹Hazael went to meet him, taking with him as a gift forty camel-loads of all the bounty of Damascus. He came and stood before him and said, "Your son, King Ben-hadad of Aram, has sent me to you to ask: Will I recover from this illness?" ¹⁰Elisha said to him, "Go and say to him, 'You will recover.' However, the LORD has revealed to me that he will die." ¹¹The man of God ^bkept his face expressionless^b for a long time; and then he wept. ¹²"Why does my lord weep?" asked Hazael. "Because I know," he replied, "what harm you will do to the Israelite people: you will set their fortresses on fire, put their young men to the sword, dash their little ones in pieces, and rip open their pregnant women." ¹³"But how," asked Hazael, "can your servant, who is a mere dog, perform such a mighty deed?" Elisha replied, "The LORD has shown me a vision of you as king of Aram." ¹⁴He left Elisha and returned to his master, who asked him, "What did Elisha say to you?" He replied, "He told me that you would recover." ¹⁵The next day, [Hazael] took ^ba piece of netting,^b dipped it in water, and spread it over his face. So [Ben-hadad] died, and Hazael succeeded him as king.

¹⁶In the fifth year of King Joram^c son of Ahab of Israel—Jehoshaphat had been king of Judah—Joram son of King Jehoshaphat of Judah became king. ¹⁷He was thirty-two years old when he became king, and he reigned in Jerusalem eight years. ¹⁸He followed the practices of the kings of Israel—whatever the House of Ahab did, for he had married a daughter^d of Ahab—and he did what was displeasing to the LORD. ¹⁹However, the LORD refrained from destroying Judah, for the sake of His servant David, in accordance with His promise to maintain a lamp for his descendants for all time. ²⁰During his reign, the Edomites rebelled against Judah's rule and set up a king of their own. ²¹Joram crossed over to Zair with all his chariotry. ^bHe arose by night and attacked the Edomites, who were surrounding him and the chariot commanders; but^b his troops fled to their homes. ²²Thus Edom fell away from 8.7–15: The prophecy to Hazael, delivered by Elisha, was originally a task assigned to Elijah (1 Kings 19.15–17). 7–9: Elisha's reputation as a prognosticator was well known among the Arameans, and Hazael addresses him in the name of Ben-hadad with great respect. Ben-hadad's inquiry of Elisha has no religious implications. As a simple consultation with an acknowledged expert, it was similar to Ahaziah's of Baal-zebub (2 Kings 1.2). 10–13: Elisha does not lie, but instructs Hazael to do so. He proceeds to inform Hazael that God has foreordained his rise and even his victories over Israel. 15: According to what may be gleaned from inscriptions of the Assyrian king Shalmaneser III, Hazael usurped the throne in Damascus after 845 but before 841 BCE.

8.16–24: The reign of Joram (Jehoram), king of Judah, paralleled that of his brother-in-law Joram, king of Israel. The author's negative evaluation of his reign cites behaviors modeled after Ahab's dynasty and attributes them directly to the king's wife. 22: The growing strength of Edom can be discerned by comparing the terminology in this v. with 1 Kings 22.48, where Edomites were controlled through an acting king, and 3.9, where an independent king who was nonetheless a vassal of Judah reigned. The independence of Edom signaled Judah's final loss of control over the central Negev and all trade through it. The rebellion of Libnah, a Levitical city on the western fringe of Judah's territory (Josh. 10.29; 21.13), lacks an adequate explanation.

a-a Brought up from v. 8 for clarity.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Throughout this chapter, the name Joram is sometimes written Jehoram.

d Emendation yields "sister"; cf. v. 26.

Judah, as is still the case. Libnah likewise fell away at that time.

²³The other events of Joram's reign, and all his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ²⁴Joram slept with his fathers and was buried with his fathers in the City of David; his son Ahaziah succeeded him as king.

²⁵In the twelfth year of King Joram son of Ahab of Israel, Ahaziah son of Joram became king of Judah. ²⁶Ahaziah was twenty-two years old when he became king, and he reigned in Jerusalem one year; his mother's name was Athaliah daughter of King Omri of Israel. ²⁷He walked in the ways of the House of Ahab and did what was displeasing to the LORD, like the House of Ahab, for he was related by marriage to the House of Ahab. ²⁸He marched with Joram son of Ahab to battle against King Hazael of Aram at Ramoth-gilead, but the Arameans wounded Joram. ²⁹King Joram retired to Jezreel to recover from the wounds which the Arameans had inflicted upon him at Ramah, when he fought against King Hazael of Aram. And King Ahaziah son of Joram of Judah went down to Jezreel to visit Joram son of Ahab while he was ill.

9 Then the prophet Elisha summoned one of the disciples of the prophets and said to him, "Tie up your skirts,^a and take along this flask of oil, and go to Ramoth-gilead. ²When you arrive there, go and see Jehu son of Jehoshaphat son of Nimshi; get him to leave his comrades, and take him into an inner room. ³Then take the flask of oil and pour some on his head, and say, 'Thus said the LORD: I anoint you king over Israel.' Then open the door and flee without delay."

⁴The young man, the servant of the prophet, went to Ramoth-gilead. ⁵When he arrived, the army commanders were sitting together. He said, "Commander, I have a message for you." "For which one of us?" Jehu asked. He answered, "For you, commander." ⁶So [Jehu] arose and went inside; and [the disciple] poured the oil on his head, and said to him, "Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: I anoint you king over the people of the LORD, over Israel. ⁷You shall strike down the House of Ahab your master; thus will I avenge on Jezebel the blood of My servants the prophets, and the blood of the other servants of the LORD. ⁸The whole House of Ahab shall perish, and I will cut off every male belonging to Ahab, ^bbond and free^b in Israel. ⁹I will make the House of Ahab like the House of Jeroboam son of 8.25–29: The short reign of Ahaziah of Judah (not his dead uncle, Ahaziah of Israel) is linked to the fortunes of his living uncle Joram king of Israel. Ahaziah involved Judah in Israel's battle against the Arameans at Ramoth-gilead in Transjordan. His death and burial are noted without the usual formulae in the middle of the account of Jehu's revolt (9.27–29). 26: In v. 18, Athaliah is referred to as the daughter of Ahab, which would make her Omri's granddaughter. It is possible that the Omrides fashioned all royal descendants as "sons/daughters of Omri," making Omri into something like what David was for the Southern Kingdom. Jehu, who killed off the Omrides, was identified as "son of Omri" on the Black Obelisk of Shalmaneser III. See also Solomon's wife, "the daughter of Pharaoh" in 1 Kings 3.1.

9.1–14a: The anointing of Jehu was the last unfinished task of Elijah left for Elisha to carry out (1 Kings 19.15–16). He dispatches one of the disciples of the prophets to carry it out. 3–4: Elisha gives specific instructions about what the messenger is to do and say, but in fulfilling the instructions, the messenger deviates considerably from his charge (vv. 6–10). A rationale for doing so is provided in v. 4 which when translated literally yields: "And he went, the young man, the young man, the prophet, to Ramoth-gilead." Usually interpreted or explained by both classical and contemporary commentators as "the servant/young man of the prophet," the text indicates that he was a prophet in his own right. Furthermore, Jehu's comment (v. 11) indicates that he was a well-known figure and that people were familiar with his pet concerns. 6: The anointing is a private affair, as was that of Saul (1 Sam. 10.1). 7–9: The charge to Jehu is delivered as an oracle of God, not a repetition of something that Elisha said. The prophecy contains an instruction that Jehu become the agent through which the prophecies of a See note at 4.29. b-b See note at 1 Kings 14.10.

Nebat, and like the House of Baasha son of Ahijah. ¹⁰The dogs shall devour Jezebel in the field of Jezreel, with none to bury her." Then he opened the door and fled.

¹¹Jehu went out to the other officers of his master, and they asked him, "Is all well? What did that madman come to you for?" He said to them, "You know the man and his ranting!" ¹²"You're lying," they said. "Tell us [the truth]." Then he replied, "Thus and thus he said: Thus said the LORD: I anoint you king over Israel!" ¹³Quickly each man took his cloak and placed it under him,^a on ^bthe top step.^b They sounded the horn and proclaimed, "Jehu is king!" ¹⁴Thus Jehu son of Jehoshaphat son of Nimshi conspired against Joram.

Joram and all Israel had been defending Ramoth-gilead against King Hazael of Aram, ¹⁵but King Joram had gone back to Jezreel to recover from the wounds which the Arameans had inflicted on him in his battle with King Hazael of Aram.

Jehu said, "If such is your wish, allow no one to slip out of the town to go and report this in Jezreel." ¹⁶Then Jehu mounted his chariot and drove to Jezreel; for Joram was lying ill there, and King Ahaziah of Judah had gone down to visit Joram. ¹⁷The lookout was stationed on the tower in Jezreel, and he saw the troop of Jehu as he approached. He called out, "I see a troop!" Joram said, "Dispatch a horseman to meet them and let him ask: Is all well?" ¹⁸The horseman went to meet him, and he said, "The king inquires: Is all well?" Jehu replied, "What concern of yours is it whether all is well? Fall in behind me." The lookout reported: "The messenger has reached them, but has not turned back." ¹⁹So he sent out a second horseman. He came to them and said, "Thus says the king: Is all well?" Jehu answered, "What concern of yours is it whether all is well? Fall in behind me." ²⁰And the lookout reported, "The messenger has reached them, but has not turned back. And it looks like the driving of Jehu son of Nimshi, who drives wildly."

²¹Joram ordered, "Hitch up [the chariot]!" They hitched up his chariot; and King Joram of Israel and King Ahaziah a i.e., Jehu. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Elijah in 1 Kings 21.21-23 are fulfilled. V. 7 also indicates that Jezebel had not only persecuted prophets of God, but other servants of the LORD as well (see 1 Kings 18.4, 22). Years later, long after the period of the persecutions, there were most likely many descendants of those who had suffered under her hand willing to take revenge. 12: Thus and thus, a conventional expression indicating that

Jehu repeated everything exactly (see 5.4 where the same Heb expression is translated "just what"). 13: Other officers acclaim Jehu king, and make noise, typical parts of the coronation ritual (see 1 Kings 1.39-40).

9.14b-15a: An interpolation. Excavations at Jezreel indicate that it was primarily a fortified administrative center with remains of what may have been a large palace. Two fragments of a victory stele in the Aramaic language found in the excavations of Dan attest to Aramean control of the area in the 9th century as well as to Aramean victories over Israel and success in battle against someone from the Davidic dynasty. One fragment mentions two kings, one whose name ended "-rm" and another whose name ended "-yhw." Historians speculate that these are Jehoram and Ahazyahuw. The only king successful against both Israel and Judah whose respective kings' names match the letters on the fragment was Hazael.

9.15b-37: The battle with Joram of Israel and the death of Jezebel.

15b: This verse appears to pick up from 14a. The interpolation may have been inserted in order to explain why the news of Jehu's anointing as king should not be reported in Jezreel. 17-20: The image created by the author is of a large force moving slowly, even ominously, toward Jezreel. Jehu apparently drives his chariot wildly, perhaps in a zig-zag in front of the advancing troop. The rate of advance is so slow two different riders are sent out to them and Joram and Ahaziah in their chariots go out to them before they enter Jezreel. The events in this chapter, as well as the rise of Hazael in Damascus, are dated to 842 BCE on the basis of correlations between biblical chronological notations, the Mesha stele, references to Ahab, Jehu, Hazael, and Joash in Assyrian inscriptions, and Aramaic inscriptions mentioning Hazael and Ben-hadad. 17: Well, Heb "shalom," is repeated like a dissoof Judah went out, each in his own chariot, to meet Jehu. They met him at the field of Naboth the Jezreelite.²² When Joram saw Jehu, he asked, "Is all well, Jehu?" But Jehu replied, "How can all be well as long as your mother Jezebel carries on her countless harlotries and sorceries?"²³ Thereupon Joram turned his horses^a around and fled, crying out to Ahaziah, "Treason, Ahaziah!"²⁴ But Jehu drew his bow and hit Joram between the shoulders,^b so that the arrow pierced his heart; and he collapsed in his chariot.

²⁵ Jehu thereupon ordered his officer Bidkar, "Pick him up and throw him into the field of Naboth the Jezreelite. Remember how you and I were riding side by side behind his father Ahab, when the LORD made this pronouncement about him: ²⁶ 'I swear, I have taken note of the blood of Naboth and the blood of his sons yesterday—declares the LORD. And I will requite you in this plot—declares the LORD.' So pick him up and throw him unto the plot in accordance with the word of the LORD."

²⁷ On seeing this, King Ahaziah of Judah fled along the road to Beth-haggan. Jehu pursued him and said, "Shoot him down too!" [And they shot him] in his chariot at the ascent of Gur, which is near Ibleam. He fled to Megiddo and died there.²⁸ His servants conveyed him in a chariot to Jerusalem, and they buried him in his grave with his fathers, in the City of David. (²⁹ Ahaziah had become king over Judah in the eleventh year of Joram son of Ahab.)

³⁰ Jehu went on to Jezreel. When Jezebel heard of it, she painted her eyes with kohl and dressed her hair, and she looked out of the window.³¹ As Jehu entered the gate, she called out, "Is all well, Zimri, murderer of your master?"³² He looked up toward the window and said, "Who is on my side, who?" And two or three eunuchs leaned out toward him.³³ "Throw her down," he said. They threw her down; and her blood spattered on the wall and on the horses, and they trampled her.

³⁴ Then he went inside and ate and drank. And he said, "Attend to that cursed woman and bury her, for she was a king's daughter."³⁵ So they went to bury her; but all they found of her were the skull, the feet, and the hands.³⁶ They came back and reported to him; and he said, "It is just as the LORD spoke through His servant Elijah the Tishbite: The dogs shall devour the flesh of Jezebel in the field of Jezreel;³⁷ and the carcass of Jezebel shall be like dung on the ground, in the field of Jezreel, so that none will be able to say: 'This was Jezebel.'" nant note throughout the scenes of the revolt as death is plotted and executed in vv. 18, 19, 22, 30. 28: Although it is mentioned here, Ahaziah's body could only have been removed to Jerusalem later, after the revolt was over. 30–31: Jezebel is portrayed as a proud, cold, noble woman. After hearing of the death of her son and son-in-law, she neither mourns nor tries to flee while Jehu and part of the troop are elsewhere. She pretties herself for a final scene and addresses a perfect barb to Jehu when he enters the palace grounds. 30: Kohl: If the same as Arabic "kuhl," it is a sulphide of antimony, ground into powder, mixed with oil and applied to the eyelashes, an ancient mascara. Zimri, the assassin of Elah son of Baasha (1 Kings 16.8–14). Zimri eliminated all of the descendants of Baasha, as Baasha had eliminated all of the descendants of Jeroboam (1 Kings 15.27–30). Jehu has eliminated the house of Omri, but if he follows in the footsteps of Zimri his reign will be short (1 Kings 16.15).

^a Lit. "hands"; see note at 1 Kings 22.34. ^b Lit. "arms." ^c See 1 Kings 16.8–10.

10 Ahab had seventy descendants in Samaria. Jehu wrote letters and sent them to Samaria, to the elders and officials of Jezreel^a and to the guardians of [the children] of Ahab, as follows: ²"Now, when this letter reaches you—since your master's sons are with you and you also have chariots and horses, and a fortified city and weapons—³select the best and the most suitable of your master's sons and set him on his father's throne, and fight for your master's house." ⁴But they were overcome by fear, for they thought, "If the two kings could not stand up to him, how can we?" ⁵The steward of the palace and the governor of the city and the elders and the guardians sent this message to Jehu: "We are your subjects, and we shall do whatever you tell us to. We shall not proclaim anyone king; do whatever you like."

⁶He wrote them a second time: "If you are on my side and are ready to obey me, take the heads of the attendants of your master's sons and come^b to me in Jezreel tomorrow at this time." Now the princes, seventy in number, were with the notables of the town, who were rearing them. ⁷But when the letter reached them, they took the princes and slaughtered all seventy of them; they put their heads in baskets and sent them to him in Jezreel. ⁸A messenger came and reported to him: "They have brought the heads of the princes." He said, "Pile them up in two heaps at the entrance of the gate before morning." ⁹In the morning he went out and stood there; and he said to all the people, "Are you blameless?^c True, I conspired against my master and killed him; but who struck down all of these? ¹⁰Know, then, that nothing that the LORD has spoken concerning the House of Ahab shall remain unfulfilled, for the LORD has done what he announced through His servant Elijah." ¹¹And Jehu struck down all that were left of the House of Ahab in Jezreel—and all his notables, intimates, and priests—till he left him no survivor.

¹²He then set out for Samaria. On the way, when he was at Beth-eked of the shepherds, ¹³Jehu came upon the kinsmen of King Ahaziah of Judah. "Who are you?" he asked. They replied, "We are the kinsmen of Ahaziah, and we have come to pay our respects to the sons of the king and the sons of the queen mother." ¹⁴"Take them alive!" he said. They took them alive and then slaughtered them at the pit of Beth-eked, forty-two of them; he did not spare a single one.

¹⁵He went on from there, and he met Jehonadab son of 10.1-17: The purge of the house of Ahab. 2-5: These verses illustrate that even after the many internal revolutions, the right to proclaim someone king remained vested with certain groups of people or their representatives. Jehu's message affirms the right even as his threat subverts it. 8-9: Besides being a potent threat, the heads of Ahab's sons arrayed at the entrance of Jezreel proved silently that there was no Ahabite around whom anti-Jehu forces might rally. Jehu used them at Jezreel to argue that he was supported by the people of Samaria, the capital city constructed by Omri, Ahab's father.

11: The killing extends to include those whose position and authority were based on their association with the royal house. The priests in this group may have served at the open shrines or the worship of Baal, or they may have been minor bureaucrats. Priests appear in the lists of royal officials in 2 Sam. 8.18; 20.26; 1 Kings 4.5, and as impoverished appointees (1 Sam. 2.36). These killings go beyond the prophetic charge to Jehu.

12-14: Jehu extends the purge to a group of men from Judah claiming kinship with the (dead) Ahaziah. However related to Ahaziah, they were also connected to Athaliah, his mother, and through her to Ahab's family. 15-16: Jehonadab, son of Rechab, founded a small traditionalist group within his clan that adopted a way of life similar to that of the Israelites before their settlement in the land. Rechabites abstained from wine, did not engage in any form of agriculture, and lived in tents (Jer 35.6-10). Jehu's invitation that Jehonadab join him to see his zeal for the LORD indicates that the Rechabites were also among the radical monotheists. The presence of Jehonadab in Jehu's chariots would have helped rally like-minded people to his support. Their combined zeal for the LORD is viewed positively as a continuation of the radical monotheism of Elijah (1 Kings 19.10, 14).

^a Emendation yields "of the city."

^b Targum and Septuagint read "and bring them."

^c Or "You are blameless."

Rechab coming toward him. He greeted him and said to him, "Are you as wholehearted with me as I am with you?" "I am," Jehonadab replied. "If so," [said Jehu,] "give me your hand." He gave him his hand and [Jehu] helped him into the chariot. ¹⁶"Come with me," he said, "and see my zeal for the LORD." And he was taken along in the chariot. ¹⁷Arriving in Samaria, [Jehu] struck down all the survivors of [the House of] Ahab in Samaria, until he wiped it out, fulfilling the word that the LORD had spoken to Elijah.

¹⁸Jehu assembled all the people and said to them, "Ahab served Baal little; Jehu shall serve him much! ¹⁹Therefore, summon to me all the prophets of Baal, all his worshipers, and all his priests: let no one fail to come, for I am going to hold a great sacrifice for Baal. Whoever fails to come shall forfeit his life." Jehu was acting with guile in order to exterminate the worshipers of Baal. ²⁰Jehu gave orders to convoke a solemn assembly for Baal, and one was proclaimed. ²¹Jehu sent word throughout Israel, and all the worshipers of Baal came, not a single one remained behind. They came into the temple of Baal, and the temple of Baal was filled from end to end. ²²He said to the man in charge of the wardrobe,^a "Bring out the vestments for all the worshipers of Baal"; and he brought vestments out for them. ²³Then Jehu and Jehonadab son of Rechab came into the temple of Baal, and they said to the worshipers of Baal, "Search and make sure that there are no worshipers of the LORD among you, but only worshipers of Baal." ²⁴So they went in to offer sacrifices and burnt offerings. But Jehu had stationed eighty of his men outside and had said, "Whoever permits the escape of a single one of the men I commit to your charge shall forfeit life for life."

²⁵When Jehu had finished presenting the burnt offering, he said to the guards and to the officers, "Come in and strike them down; let no man get away!" The guards and the officers struck them down with the sword and left them lying where they were; then they proceeded to the interior^b of the temple of Baal. ²⁶They brought out the pillars^c of the temple of Baal and burned them. ²⁷They destroyed the pillar^d of Baal, and they tore down the temple of Baal and turned it into latrines, as is still the case. ²⁸Thus Jehu eradicated the Baal from Israel. ²⁹However, Jehu did not turn away from the sinful objects by which Jeroboam son of Nebat had caused Israel to sin, namely, the golden calves at Bethel and at Dan.

10.18–28: The purge of Baalists from Israel. 18: It is unclear why Baalists believed Jehu's proclamation, and why they didn't become suspicious later when Jehonadab appeared with Jehu in the temple (v. 23). The narrative considers it sufficient that he promised to worship Baal more than Ahab. 22: Some special item of clothing kept in the Temple was apparently necessary for the proper worship of Baal.

10.29–36: The rest of Jehu's reign. 29: Jehu's commitments did not go so far as to eliminate the institutions established by Jeroboam. No matter what the historical Jehu may have thought, the author considered this sinful.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Lit. "city."

c Emendation yields "sacred posts"; cf. Deut. 12.3.

d Emendation yields "altar."

³⁰The LORD said to Jehu, "Because you have acted well and done what was pleasing to Me, having carried out all that I desired upon the House of Ahab, four generations of your descendants shall occupy the throne of Israel." ³¹But Jehu was not careful to follow the Teaching of the LORD, the God of Israel, with all his heart; he did not turn away from the sins that Jeroboam had caused Israel to commit.

³²In those days the LORD began to reduce Israel; and Hazael harassed them throughout the territory of Israel ³³east of the Jordan, all the land of Gilead—the Gadites, the Reubenites, and the Manassites—from Aroer, by the Wadi Arnon, up to Gilead and Bashan.

³⁴The other events of Jehu's reign, and all his actions, and all his exploits, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. ³⁵Jehu slept with his fathers and he was buried in Samaria; he was succeeded as king by his son Jehoahaz. ³⁶Jehu reigned over Israel for twenty-eight years in Samaria.

11 When Athaliah, the mother of Ahaziah, learned that her son was dead, she promptly killed off all who were of royal stock. ²But Jehosheba, daughter of King Joram and sister of Ahaziah, secretly took Ahaziah's son Joash away from among the princes who were being slain, and [put]^a him and his nurse in a bedroom. And they^b kept him hidden from Athaliah so that he was not put to death. ³He stayed with her for six years, hidden in the House of the LORD,^c while Athaliah reigned over the land.

⁴In the seventh year, Jehoiada sent for the chiefs of the hundreds of the Carites^d and of the guards, and had them come to him in the House of the LORD. He made a pact with them, exacting an oath from them in the House of the LORD, and he showed them the king's son. ⁵He instructed them: "This is what you must do: One-third of those who are on duty for the week ^eshall maintain guard^e over the royal palace; ⁶another third shall be [stationed] at the ^fSur Gate;^f and the other third shall be at the gate behind ^gthe guards; you shall keep guard over the House on every side.^g ⁷The two divisions of yours who are off duty this

11.1-20: Athaliah's interregnum (842-836 BCE). 1-3: Athaliah, with influence and power as queen mother, exploited the death of her son to have all males of royal stock killed, then assumed power. The author did not provide her with the usual opening or closing summary since he does not view her as a legitimate ruler. Jehosheba, who saved Joash's life, was spared since she could not claim the throne. According to the parallel account in 2 Chron. 22.11 she was the wife of Jehoiada the priest. 2: Joash (cf. also 12.19, 20; 13.1) is also called Jehoash (12.1, 5). The difference in the form of the name is due to peculiarities in regional pronunciations of Heb during the biblical period. Both forms are found in Kings because the author tended to write names as he found them in his sources. Joash was the son of Ahaziah by a wife from Beer-sheba (12.2).

a Cf. 2 Chron. 22.11. b 2 Chron. 22.11 reads "she."

c Jehosheba was the wife of the high priest Jehoiada; cf. 2 Chron. 22.11.

d Perhaps the Cherethites (cf. 2 Sam. 20.23) or the Carians. They were members of the king's bodyguard.

e-e Heb. "and who keep guard."

f-f 2 Chron. 23.5 reads "Foundation Gate."

g-g Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

week shall keep guard over the House of the LORD for the protection of the king. ⁸You shall surround the king on every side, every man with his weapons at the ready; and whoever breaks through the ranks shall be killed. Stay close to the king in his comings and goings.”

⁹The chiefs of hundreds did just as Jehoiada ordered: Each took his men—those who were on duty that week and those who were off duty that week—and they presented themselves to Jehoiada the priest. ¹⁰The priest gave the chiefs of hundreds King David’s spears^a and quivers that were kept in the House of the LORD. ¹¹The guards, each with his weapons at the ready, stationed themselves—from the south end of the House to the north end of the House, at the altar and the House—to guard the king on every side. ¹²[Jehoiada] then brought out the king’s son, and placed upon him the crown and the insignia.^b They anointed him and proclaimed him king; they clapped their hands and shouted, “Long live the king!”

¹³When Athaliah heard the shouting of the guards [and] the people, she came out to the people in the House of the LORD. ¹⁴She looked about and saw the king standing by the pillar, as was the custom, the chiefs with their trumpets beside the king, and all the people of the land rejoicing and blowing trumpets. Athaliah rent her garments and cried out, “Treason, treason!” ¹⁵Then the priest Jehoiada gave the command to the army officers, the chiefs of hundreds, and said to them, “Take her out ‘between the ranks’^c and, if anyone follows her, put him to the sword.” For the priest thought: “Let her not be put to death in the House of the LORD.” ¹⁶They cleared a passageway for her and she entered the royal palace through the horses’ entrance: there she was put to death.

¹⁷And Jehoiada solemnized the covenant between the LORD, on the one hand, and the king and the people, on the other—as well as between the king and the people—that they should be the people of the LORD. ¹⁸Thereupon all the people of the land went to the temple of Baal. They tore it down and smashed its altars and images to bits, and they slew Mattan, the priest of Baal, in front of the altars. [Jehoiada] the priest then placed guards over the House of the LORD. ¹⁹He took the chiefs of hundreds, the Carites,^d the guards, and all the people of the land, and they escorted the king from the House of the LORD into 12: Insignia (Heb “‘edut”) may refer to an identifying object, such as the armband of Saul (2 Sam. 1.10), that marked its wearer as king; these are seen on royal reliefs of Mesopotamian kings. Most medieval and modern commentators interpret the word as “testimony/covenant/teaching” and understand that a document spelling out royal rights and obligations is intended by the word. 14: The pillar may have been one of the two on the porch before the Temple that may have been symbolic of dynastic succession (1 Kings 7.15–22). The people of the land is often a technical term in Jeremiah and Ezekiel, prophetic books from the end of the monarchic period, and in 2 Kings and 2 Chronicles, historical books dealing with the late monarchy. It refers to an informal coalition of powerbrokers from important clans in Judah concerned with preserving the Davidic dynasty on the throne in Jerusalem (cf. 21.24; 25.19). The significance of their presence at the secret convocation was clear to Athaliah, who cried out “Treason!” 17: After the anointing and public acclamation Jehoiada formalized two covenants. The first, a three-party covenant between the LORD, the people, and the king; the second, between the people and the king. The word “‘edut” in v. 12 may refer to these. 18: The temple of Baal in Jerusalem, mentioned here for the first time, may have been established by Athaliah during the interregnum, or earlier. This passage interrupts the natural flow from v. 17 to 19.

a 2 Chron. 23.9 adds “and shields.” b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d Perhaps the Cherethites (cf. 2 Sam. 20.23) or the Carians. They were members of the king’s bodyguard.

the royal palace by the gate of the guards. And he ascended the royal throne. ²⁰All the people of the land rejoiced, and the city was quiet. As for Athaliah, she had been put to the sword in the royal palace.

12 Jehoash was seven years old when he became king. ²Jehoash began his reign in the seventh year of Jehu, and he reigned in Jerusalem forty years. His mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-sheba. ³All his days Jehoash did what was pleasing to the LORD, as the priest Jehoiada instructed him. ⁴The shrines, however, were not removed; the people continued to sacrifice and offer at the shrines.

⁵Jehoash said to the priests, "All the money, current money, brought into the House of the LORD as sacred donations—"any money a man may pay as the money equivalent of persons,"^a or any other money that a man may be minded to bring to the House of the LORD—⁶let the priests receive it, each from his benefactor; they, in turn, shall make repairs on the House, wherever damage may be found."

⁷But in the twenty-third year of King Jehoash, [it was found that] the priests had not made the repairs on the House. ⁸So King Jehoash summoned the priest Jehoiada and the other priests and said to them, "Why have you not kept the House in repair? Now do not accept money from your benefactors any more, but have it donated for the repair of the House." ⁹The priests agreed that they would neither accept money from the people nor make repairs on the House.

¹⁰And the priest Jehoiada took a chest and bored a hole in its lid. He placed it at the right side of the altar as one entered the House of the LORD, and the priestly guards of the threshold deposited there all the money that was brought into the House of the LORD. ¹¹Whenever they saw that there was much money in the chest, the royal scribe and the high priest would come up and put the money accumulated in the House of the LORD into bags, and they would count it. ¹²Then they would deliver the money ^bthat was weighed out^b to the overseers of the work, who were in charge of the House of the LORD. These, in turn, used to pay the carpenters and the laborers who worked on the House of the LORD, ¹³and the masons and the stonecutters. They also paid for wood and for quarried stone with which to make the repairs on the House of the LORD, and for every other expenditure that 12.1–22: The reign of Jehoash/Joash began in 836–835 BCE. Both forms of the name are used by the author. 1: The 40-year reign attributed to him includes the interregnum years of Athaliah, who officially had no reign. Counting his reign as beginning at the death of his father (842), he reigned until 802, though he may have reigned for a few more years. In Judah, at this time, the regnal year was counted from the seventh month, Tishri. 5: Over 140 years had passed since Solomon had completed the Temple, and no major repairs had been undertaken. Jehoash, as royal patron of the Temple, not the priests, launches the project. Sacred donations were funds donated to the Temple for use by the clergy (Num. 18.19). These most likely included obligatory offerings of the half-shekel and freewill offerings made in a spirit of generosity. Joash orders that they be collected by the priests, be applied for repairs, and that the priests undertake the repairs themselves. 10–16: A new system devised by Jehoash removes the priests from all responsibility and labor. Sacred donations are deposited directly into a coffer, counted by two officials, and distributed to special contractors for labor and materials. None of the funds can be used to enhance the Temple treasure and no accounting is demanded from the contractors. Funds deriving from the purification (NJPS sin) and guilt offerings could not be used for Temple repair, but remained priestly income. Income associated with positive feelings and spontaneous acts of kindness went into Temple repair; that associated with negative feelings born out of a sense of obligation or guilt went to the priests.

a-a See Lev. 27.2–8. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

had to be made in repairing the House. ¹⁴However, no silver bowls and no snuffers, basins, or trumpets—no vessels of gold or silver—were made at the House of the LORD from the money brought into the House of the LORD; ¹⁵this was given only to the overseers of the work for the repair of the House of the LORD. ¹⁶No check was kept on the men to whom the money was delivered to pay the workers; for they dealt honestly.

¹⁷Money brought ^aas a guilt offering or as a sin offering^a was not deposited in the House of the LORD; it went to the priests.

¹⁸At that time, King Hazael of Aram came up and attacked Gath and captured it; and Hazael proceeded to march on Jerusalem. ¹⁹Thereupon King Joash of Judah took all the objects that had been consecrated by his fathers, Kings Jehoshaphat, Jehoram, and Ahaziah of Judah, and by himself, and all the gold that there was in the treasuries of the Temple of the LORD and in the royal palace, and he sent them to King Hazael of Aram, who then turned back from his march on Jerusalem.

²⁰The other events of Joash's reign, and all his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ²¹His courtiers formed a conspiracy against Joash and assassinated him at Beth-millo ^bthat leads down to Silla.^b ²²The courtiers who assassinated him were Jozacar son of Shim-eath and Jehozabad son of Shomer. He died and was buried with his fathers in the City of David; and his son Amaziah succeeded him as king.

13 In the twenty-third year of King Joash son of Ahaziah of Judah, Jehoahaz son of Jehu became king over Israel in Samaria—for seventeen years. ²He did what was displeasing to the LORD. He persisted in the sins which Jeroboam son of Nebat had caused Israel to commit; he did not depart from them. ³The LORD was angry with Israel and He repeatedly delivered them into the hands of King Hazael of Aram and into the hands of Benhadad son of Hazael. ⁴But Jehoahaz pleaded with the LORD; and the LORD listened to him, for He saw the suffering that the king of Aram inflicted upon Israel. ⁵So the LORD granted Israel a deliverer, and they gained their freedom from Aram; and Israel dwelt in its homes as before. ⁶However, they did not depart from the sins which the House of Jeroboam had caused Israel to commit; they persisted in them. Even the sacred post stood in Samaria.

18–19: Hazael's threat to Jerusalem forced Joash to raid the Temple treasury. This provides the background for the author's notation in v. 14 that donated funds were not used for Temple vessels. People donating to the Temple were not obligated to restore treasure withdrawn by the king. Hazael could only have penetrated Judah so deeply because he was in control of Transjordan up to the Jabbok (modern Nahr es-Zerqa) and traversed parts of the kingdom of Israel without fear (see 13.3–7). 21: The reasons for Joash's assassination are not given. The act was most likely not directed against his family or against the monarchy, but against him directly, perhaps because of his dismal handling of Hazael's incursions deep into the territory of Judah. The two men who killed him did not flee (14.5–6) and apparently had no interest in usurping the authority of the Davidic king.

13.1–9: The reign of Jehoahaz. The structure of this section has close parallels to that of the book of Judges, where Israel sins, a foreign nation punishes them, and God sends a savior to help them. Here, however, the additional element of divine prayer to God (v. 4), largely absent in Judges, is added.

a-a See Lev. 5.15. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^{7a}In fact, Jehoahaz was left with a force of only fifty horsemen, ten chariots, and ten thousand foot soldiers; for the king of Aram had decimated them and trampled them like the dust under his feet.

⁸The other events of Jehoahaz's reign, and all his actions and his exploits, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. ⁹Jehoahaz slept with his fathers and he was buried in Samaria; his son Joash succeeded him as king.

¹⁰In the thirty-seventh year of King Joash of Judah, Jehoash son of Jehoahaz became king of Israel in Samaria—for sixteen years. ¹¹He did what was displeasing to the LORD; he did not depart from any of the sins which Jeroboam son of Nebat had caused Israel to commit; he persisted in them.

¹²The other events of Joash's reign, and all his actions, and his exploits in his war with King Amaziah of Judah, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. ¹³Joash slept with his fathers and Jeroboam occupied his throne; Joash was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel.

¹⁴Elisha had been stricken with the illness of which he was to die, and King Joash of Israel went down to see him. He wept over him and cried, "Father, father! ^bIsrael's chariots and horsemen!"^b ¹⁵Elisha said to him, "Get a bow and arrows"; and he brought him a bow and arrows. ¹⁶Then he said to the king of Israel, "Grasp the bow!" And when he had grasped it, Elisha put his hands over the king's hands. ¹⁷"Open the window toward the east," he said; and he opened it. Elisha said, "Shoot!" and he shot. Then he said, "An arrow of victory for the LORD! An arrow of victory over Aram! You shall rout Aram completely at Aphek." ¹⁸He said, "Now pick up the arrows." And he picked them up. "Strike the ground!" he said to the king of Israel; and he struck three times and stopped. ¹⁹The man of God was angry with him and said to him, "If only you had struck^c five or six times! Then you would have annihilated Aram; as it is, you shall defeat Aram only three times."

²⁰Elisha died and he was buried. Now bands of Moabites used to invade the land ^dat the coming of every year.^d ²¹Once a man was being buried, when the people caught sight of such a band; so they threw the corpse^e into Elisha's

13.10-13: The reign of Joash/Jehoash of Israel. The highly stereotypical nature of this account of a king who reigned for sixteen years emphasizes that the historian of Kings only included information that fit his theological and ideological interests.

13.14-21: The death of Elisha.

14: Israel's chariots and horsemen: Elisha used this title at the assumption of Elijah (2.12).

17-18: Although both the shooting of the arrows and the hitting of the ground are presented as symbolic prophecies, a closer examination indicates that to be true only of the shooting. According to the prophetic story, Joash's decision on how many times to hit the ground actually determined the future and constituted an act of imitative magic. Elisha could only watch and interpret the significance of Joash's act. 20-21: The prophetic story of Elisha's final miracle does not refer to something that happened when he was being buried in the ground or in an open grave. Elisha was most likely laid out in a typical Israelite burial cave on a stone bench where his body decomposed. Sometime later, under duress of circumstances, people in the midst of burying a man tossed his body unceremoniously into Elisha's cave where it touched that of Elisha. Elisha's power as a man of God lay not only in his prophetic abilities, but also in his person. Just as his inanimate staff could heal by contact (4.29), so could his bones.

a This verse would read well after v. 3.

b-b On Elisha as defender of Israel, see chapters 6-8.

c-c Lit. "to strike."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "year by year."

e Heb. "the man."

grave and ^amade off.^a When the [dead] man came in contact with Elisha's bones, he came to life and stood up.

²²King Hazael of Aram had oppressed the Israelites throughout the reign of Jehoahaz. ²³But the LORD was gracious and merciful to them, and He turned back to them for the sake of His covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. He refrained from destroying them, and He still did not cast them out from His presence. ²⁴When King Hazael of Aram died, his son Ben-hadad succeeded him as king; ²⁵and then Jehoash son of Jehoahaz recovered from Ben-hadad son of Hazael the towns which had been taken from his father Jehoahaz in war. Three times Joash defeated him, and he recovered the towns of Israel.

14 In the second year of King Joash son of Joahaz of Israel, Amaziah son of King Joash of Judah became king. ²He was twenty-five years old when he became king, and he reigned twenty-nine years in Jerusalem; his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem. ³He did what was pleasing to the LORD, but not like his ancestor David; he did just as his father Joash had done. ⁴However, the shrines were not removed; the people continued to sacrifice and make offerings at the shrines. ⁵Once he had the kingdom firmly in his grasp, he put to death the courtiers who had assassinated his father the king. ⁶But he did not put to death the children of the assassins, in accordance with what is written in the Book of the Teaching of Moses, where the LORD commanded, "Parents shall not be put to death for children, nor children be put to death for parents; a person shall be put to death only for his own crime."^b

⁷He defeated ten thousand Edomites in the Valley of Salt, and he captured Sela in battle and renamed it Joktheel, as is still the case. ⁸Then Amaziah sent envoys to King Jehoash son of Jehoahaz son of Jehu of Israel, with this message: "Come, let us confront^c each other." ⁹King Jehoash of Israel sent back this message to King Amaziah of Judah: "The thistle in Lebanon sent this message to the cedar in Lebanon, 'Give your daughter to my son in marriage.' But a wild beast in Lebanon went by and trampled down the thistle. ¹⁰Because you have defeated Edom, you have become arrogant. Stay home and enjoy your glory, rather than provoke disaster and fall, dragging Judah down with you."

¹¹But Amaziah paid no heed; so King Jehoash of Israel

13.22-25: Victory over Aram. 25: Joash of Israel's minor successes against Ben-hadad were possible because Assyrian victory over the Arameans weakened them and drew forces away from Aram's southern front with Israel to the north. Joash is mentioned on a stele of the Assyrian king Adad-nirari as one who paid him tribute. The author has a narrower theological perspective, and does not attribute the Israelite victories to these international events.

14.1-22: The reign of Amaziah son of Joash in Judah overlapped that of Joash son of Jehoahaz of Israel. 5-6: Amaziah restricted his revenge to his father's assassins alone. The author explains that he did so in accordance with a law cited from Deut. 24.16 identified as coming from the Book of the Teaching ("torah") of Moses. This is a rare case in the Deuteronomistic History where a Torah law (not surprisingly from Deuteronomy), is explicitly cited. Even though it is listed as the first order of his business, avenging his father could not have been the first act of his reign. Since his father had left Judah weak and vulnerable to Aramean attack, the kingdom could not have been firmly in his grasp until that threat disappeared thanks to the Assyrians and Joash of Israel. 7-8: His defeat of the Edomites in the Valley of Salt indicates that he was successful in limiting or eliminating their presence in the central Negev. There is a consensus that the sites mentioned are in or near the northern Arava. He did not, however, reestablish control of Edom. 11: That Joash/Jehoash of Israel met his army at Beth-shemesh, by the foothills east of Jerusalem, indicates just how weak and unprepared Amaziah was for battle. 13: The Ephraim Gate through which people went toward the territory of Ephraim was in the north wall of the city. Joash broke the wall here because Jerusalem, surrounded by gorges on its east, south, and west, is most vulnerable from the north. According to 2 Chron. 26.9, the breach advanced, and he and King Amaziah of Judah confronted each other at Beth-shemesh in Judah.¹² The Judites were routed by Israel, and they all fled to their homes.¹³ King Jehoash of Israel captured King Amaziah son of Jehoash son of Ahaziah of Judah at Beth-shemesh. He marched on Jerusalem, and he made a breach of four hundred cubits in the wall of Jerusalem, from^a the Ephraim Gate to the Corner Gate.¹⁴ He carried off all the gold and silver and all the vessels that there were in the House of the LORD and in the treasuries of the royal palace, as well as hostages; and he returned to Samaria.

a-a Heb. "he made off." b Deut. 24.16. c I.e., in battle.

¹⁵The other events of Jehoash's reign, and all his actions and exploits, and his war with King Amaziah of Judah, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel.¹⁶ Jehoash slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel; his son Jeroboam succeeded him as king.

¹⁷King Amaziah son of Joash of Judah lived fifteen years after the death of King Jehoash son of Jehoahaz of Israel.¹⁸ The other events of Amaziah's reign are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah.¹⁹ A conspiracy was formed against him in Jerusalem and he fled to Lachish; but they sent men after him to Lachish, and they killed him there.²⁰ They brought back his body on horses, and he was buried with his fathers in Jerusalem, in the City of David.

²¹Then all the people of Judah took Azariah, who was sixteen years old, and proclaimed him king to succeed his father Amaziah.²² It was he who rebuilt Elath and restored it to Judah, after King [Amaziah] slept with his fathers.

²³In the fifteenth year of King Amaziah son of Joash of Judah, King Jeroboam son of Joash of Israel became king in Samaria—for forty-one years.²⁴ He did what was displeasing to the LORD; he did not depart from all the sins that Jeroboam son of Nebat had caused Israel to commit.²⁵ It was he who restored the territory of Israel from Lebohamath to the sea of the Arabah, in accordance with the promise that the LORD, the God of Israel, had made through His servant, the prophet Jonah son of Amittai from Gath-hepher.²⁶ For the LORD saw the very bitter plight of Israel, with neither ^bbond nor free^b left, and with none to help Israel.²⁷ And the LORD resolved not to blot out the name of Israel from under heaven; and he delivered them through Jeroboam son of Joash.

²⁸The other events of Jeroboam's reign, and all his actions and exploits, how he fought and recovered Damascus and Hamath ^cfor Judah in Israel,^c are recorded in the was repaired by Amaziah's son.

17: If Amaziah reigned 29 years (v. 2), and if he reigned 15 years after the death of Joash/Jehoash of Israel, then their reigns must have overlapped 14 years, not 2 as stated in v. 1. Furthermore, the conspiracy described in vv. 19–20 could not then have taken place immediately after the despoiling of Jerusalem. 21–22: The people of Judah, perhaps the same group as the "people of the land" (11.14), placed Azariah on the throne. (Azariah is also referred to as Uziah; see 15.13, 30, 32, 34. Both names combine a word meaning "strength" with a short form of the LORD's name, -iah. This is the same form as in "hallelujah," "hallelu + iah" meaning "praise + the LORD.") Some of Azariah's accomplishments are listed here.

14.23–28: The reign of Jeroboam II (788–747 BCE) was a long and prosperous one. The author of Kings indicates that, despite doing what displeased the LORD, in the course of his long reign he attained control in the north and in Transjordan of territories lost to the Arameans beginning in the days of Solomon. A somewhat one-sided view of the prosperity and self-confidence that characterized his reign is found in Amos. 25: The author describes Jeroboam II's military accomplishments as fulfillment of God's promises through a prophet, Jonah son of Amittai. Jeroboam was able to extend Israel's borders deep into the territories once controlled by Arameans and into their kingdoms (v. 28) because the Assyrians had severely weakened them. This connection between Israel and Assyria helped set the scene for someone in the 5th century to cast Jeroboam II's prophet as the protagonist in the book of Jonah. 26–27: The author, who apparently knew the content of Jonah's proclamations in the days of Jeroboam II, suggests that sinful kingdom of the north was saved because of God's grace, rather than the people's repentance.

^a Heb. "at." ^{b-b} See note at 1 Kings 14.10. ^{c-c} Emendation yields "for Israel."

Annals of the Kings of Israel. ²⁹Jeroboam slept with his fathers, the kings of Israel, and his son Zechariah succeeded him as king.

15 In the twenty-seventh year of King Jeroboam of Israel, Azariah son of King Amaziah of Judah became king. ²He was sixteen years old when he became king, and he reigned fifty-two years in Jerusalem; his mother's name was Jecoliah of Jerusalem. ³He did what was pleasing to the LORD, just as his father Amaziah had done. ⁴However, the shrines were not removed; the people continued to sacrifice and make offerings at the shrines. ⁵The LORD struck the king with a plague, and he was a leper until the day of his death; he lived ^ain isolated quarters,^a while Jotham, the king's son, was in charge of the palace and governed the people of the land.

⁶The other events of Azariah's reign, and all his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ⁷Azariah slept with his fathers, and he was buried with his fathers in the City of David; his son Jotham succeeded him as king.

⁸In the thirty-eighth year of King Azariah of Judah, Zechariah son of Jeroboam became king over Israel in Samaria—for six months. ⁹He did what was displeasing to the LORD, as his fathers had done; he did not depart from the sins which Jeroboam son of Nebat had caused Israel to commit. ¹⁰Shallum son of Jabesh conspired against him and struck him down ^bbefore the people^b and killed him, and succeeded him as king. ¹¹The other events of Zechariah's reign are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. ¹²This was in accord with the word that the LORD had spoken to Jehu: "Four generations of your descendants shall occupy the throne of Israel." And so it came about.^c ¹³Shallum son of Jabesh became king in the thirty-ninth year of King Uzziah of Judah, and he reigned in Samaria one month. ¹⁴Then Menahem son of Gadi set out from Tirzah and came to Samaria; he attacked Shallum son of Jabesh in Samaria and killed him, and he succeeded him as king. ¹⁵The other events of Shallum's reign, and the conspiracy that he formed, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel.

¹⁶At that time, ^a[marching] from Tirzah,^a Menahem

15.1–7: The reign of Azariah (Uzziah). Of all that transpired during Azariah's long reign, the author cares to mention only that he became a leper. By juxtaposing this fact to his notice that Azariah did nothing about the open shrines, the author may be implying that the leprosy was a punishment. (2 Chron. 26.16–21 provides a different and more explicit explanation for his punishment.) Azariah led successful campaigns against Philistia and established control of areas up to the Egyptian border, collected tribute from the Transjordanian Ammonites (and most likely reestablished influence in Edom; see 14.22), fortified Jerusalem, built towers and excavated cisterns in the wilderness, and undertook varied agricultural projects that increased royal wealth (2 Chron. 26.3–15). His sphere of influence in the south was similar to that of Solomon in his day.

1: Radak, Ralbag, and modern commentators point out that based on this verse and 14.2, 17, 23, the synchronisms between the reigns of kings in Judah and Israel and the years of reign for each king do not work out. The numbers can be reconciled if it is assumed—the Tanakh does not say so explicitly—that Azariah became co-regent with his father at the age of 16 and these years were accounted to both his and his father's credit. 5: Azariah's particular type of leprosy disqualified him from performing royal duties, so he was retired. (Naaman's leprosy did not disqualify him; cf. 5.1–2.) While he remained king in name, his son Jotham became a co-regent and king in fact. Both Azariah and Jotham were credited with the same years of reign. 7: An inscribed Aramaic marble plaque from the Second Temple period, now in the Israel Museum, reads: "Here were brought the bones of Uzziah, King of Judah. Don't open." The wording suggests that although buried in the City of David, he was buried separately from other kings—perhaps because of the leprosy—whose bones were not reburied during the Sec-

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Some Septuagint mss. read "at Ibleam." c Cf. 10.30.

subdued Tiphshah and all who were in it, and its territory; and because it did not surrender, he massacred [its people] and ripped open all its pregnant women.

¹⁷In the thirty-ninth year of King Azariah of Judah, Menahem son of Gadi became king over Israel in Samaria—for ten years. ¹⁸He did what was displeasing to the LORD; throughout his days he did not depart from the sins which Jeroboam son of Nebat had caused Israel to commit. ¹⁹King Pul of Assyria invaded the land, and Menahem gave Pul a thousand talents of silver that he might support him and strengthen his hold on the kingdom. ²⁰Menahem exacted the money from Israel: every man of means had to pay fifty shekels of silver for the king of Assyria. The king of Assyria withdrew and did not remain in the land. ²¹The other events of Menahem's reign, and all his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. ²²Menahem slept with his fathers, and his son Pekahiah succeeded him as king.

²³In the fiftieth year of King Azariah of Judah, Pekahiah son of Menahem became king over Israel in Samaria—for two years. ²⁴He did what was displeasing to the LORD; he did not depart from the sins which Jeroboam son of Nebat had caused Israel to commit. ²⁵His aide, Pekah son of Remaliah, conspired against him and struck him down in the royal palace in Samaria; with him were fifty Gileadites, ^awith men from Argob and Arieih;^a and he killed him and succeeded him as king.

²⁶The other events of Pekahiah's reign, and all his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel.

²⁷In the fifty-second year of King Azariah of Judah, Pekah son of Remaliah became king over Israel and Samaria—for twenty years. ²⁸He did what was displeasing to the LORD; he did not depart from the sins which Jeroboam son of Nebat had caused Israel to commit. ²⁹In the days of King Pekah of Israel, King Tiglath-pileser of Assyria came and captured Ijon, Abel-beth-maacah, Janoah, Kedesh, Hazor—Gilead, Galilee, the entire region of Naphtali; and he deported ^bthe inhabitants^b to Assyria.

³⁰Hoshea son of Elah conspired against Pekah son of Remaliah, attacked him, and killed him. He succeeded him as king in the twentieth year of Jotham son of Uzziah. ³¹The other events of Pekah's reign, and all his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Israel.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Heb. "them."

ond Temple period. There is no knowledge about where the plaque was originally found.

15.8–12: The reign of Zechariah. Zechariah of Israel was the fourth and final ruler of the Jehu dynasty in accordance with the prophecy of 10.30. He was assassinated by Shallum son of Jabesh. Jabesh most likely refers to the city of Jabesh in Transjordanian Gilead.

15.13: The reign of Shallum.

15.14–22: Menahem son of Gadi, most likely from the Transjordanian tribe of Gad, assassinated Shallum. 16: Tiphshah was the northernmost city under Solomon's control near the Euphrates (1 Kings 5.4). The location of the city makes it unlikely that Menahem attacked it while engaged in an activity near Tirzah. His brutal reprisal against the people of Tiphshah was not unique (cf. 8.12; Hos. 14.1; Amos 1.13). The incident reported may be connected to the invasion of the Assyrians reported in v. 19. 19: Pul is the Assyrian nickname of King Tiglath-pileser III of Assyria, mentioned by his longer name in v. 29. See 1 Chron. 5.26. Menahem paid tribute for Pul's support in helping him gain control over the kingdom. The tribute is mentioned in the annals of Tiglath-pileser from 738 BCE. The Assyrian may have entered territories claimed by Israel in northern Syria, but not the heartland. In retreating south, Israel effectively gave up control over the Aramean kingdoms.

15.23–26: The reign of Pekahiah. Menahem's son, Pekahiah, is assassinated by Pekah, supported by Transjordanian Gileadites. Argob in the Bashan was adjacent to Gilead (Deut. 3.4, 14–15). The catalyst may have been the breakaway of Arameans from Israelite control and a sense among Transjordanian Israelites that the monarch, safe in Samaria, had abandoned them.

15.27–31: The reign of Pekah. 29: In his campaigns of 733–32 BCE, Tiglath-pileser conquered the same

³²In the second year of King Pekah son of Remaliah of Israel, Jotham son of King Uzziah of Judah became king. ³³He was twenty-five years old when he became king, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem; his mother's name was Jerusha daughter of Zadok. ³⁴He did what was pleasing to the LORD, just as his father Uzziah had done. ³⁵However, the shrines were not removed; the people continued to sacrifice and make offerings at the shrines. It was he who built the Upper Gate of the House of the LORD. ³⁶The other events of Jotham's reign, and all his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ³⁷In those days, the LORD began to incite King Rezin of Aram and Pekah son of Remaliah against Judah. ³⁸Jotham block of territories taken by Arameans from Israel in the days of Baasha (1 Kings 15.20) along with Transjordanian Gilead. His annals mention that he took 13,520 people to Assyria. This marks the beginning of the Diaspora of the ten northern tribes.

15.32-38: The reign of Jotham. Little is told about the reign of Jotham in Judah. 2 Chron. 27.1-6 suggests that he maintained the borders of his father's kingdom, extending its control and influence into Ammonite territory. 37: Rezin

Assyria and Israel and Judah in the book of Kings slept with his fathers, and he was buried with his fathers in the city of his ancestor David; his son Ahaz succeeded him as king.

16 In the seventeenth year of Pekah son of Remaliah, Ahaz son of King Jotham of Judah became king. ²Ahaz was twenty years old when he became king, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. He did not do what was pleasing to the LORD his God, as his ancestor David had done, ³but followed the ways of the kings of Israel. He even consigned his son to the fire, in the abhorrent fashion of the nations which the LORD had dispossessed before the Israelites. ⁴He sacrificed and made offerings at the shrines, on the hills, and under every leafy tree.

⁵Then King Rezin of Aram and King Pekah son of Remaliah of Israel advanced on Jerusalem for battle. They besieged Ahaz, but could not overcome [him]. ⁶At that time King Rezin of Aram recovered Elath for Aram;^a he drove out the Judites from Elath, and Edomites came to Elath and settled there, as is still the case.

⁷Ahaz sent messengers to King Tiglath-pileser of Assyria to say, "I am your servant and your son; come and deliver me from the hands of the king of Aram and from the hands of the king of Israel, who are attacking me."

⁸Ahaz took the gold and silver that were on hand in the House of the LORD and in the treasuries of the royal palace and sent them as a gift to the king of Assyria. ⁹The king of Assyria responded to his request; the king of Assyria marched against Damascus and captured it. He deported ^bits inhabitants^b to Kir and put Rezin to death.

¹⁰When King Ahaz went to Damascus to greet King Tiglath-pileser of Assyria, he saw the altar in Damascus. King Ahaz sent the priest Uriah a sketch of the altar and a detailed plan of its construction. ¹¹The priest Uriah did just as King Ahaz had instructed him from Damascus; the priest Uriah built the altar before King Ahaz returned from Damascus. ¹²When the king returned from Damascus, and when the king saw the altar, the king drew near the altar, ascended it, ¹³and offered his burnt offering and meal offering; he poured his libation, and he dashed the blood of his offering of well-being against the altar. ¹⁴As for the bronze altar which had been before the LORD, he moved it from its place in front of the Temple, ^cbetween the [new] altar and the House of the LORD,^c and placed it and Pekah formed a coalition against Jotham, planning to force him into an anti-Assyrian coalition.

16.1-20: The reign of Ahaz. Although the author does not evaluate Ahaz highly, his narrative indicates that Ahaz was an astute politician. 3: Consigned his son to the fire: Although usually taken to mean that he sacrificed his son (cf. 3.27), the regular words of sacrifice are not used. It may mean that he had his son undergo some sort of fire ritual, perhaps a ritual singeing. 5-9: The plan of Rezin and Pekah (15.37) gave rise to a brief Syro-Ephraimitic war (cf. Isa. chs 7-8) in 733-732 BCE. According to Isa. 7.6, they planned to replace Ahaz with a ruler willing to join their coalition. Ahaz, learning from the statecraft of Asa (1 Kings 15.18) and Menahem (2 Kings 15.19), bribed the enemy of his enemies to rescue him. 7: Your servant and your son: In the diplomatic context of the ancient Near East, these phrases indicated Ahaz's friendly and voluntary submission to the authority of Tiglath-pileser III. 9: The Assyrians responded by eliminating the threat from Damascus. Kir, location not known, but according to Amos 9.7, it was the original home of the Arameans. 10-16: The Damascene type of altar introduced by Ahaz into the Jerusalem Temple was acceptable to the author. Ahaz, as Davidic patron of the Jerusalem Temple, could initiate these changes, to which Uriah the priest agreed. The altar that Ezek. 43.13-17 describes and prescribes for a future temple may be a copy of the Ahaz altar that Ezekiel saw in his youth.

a Emendation yields "Edom."

b-b Heb. "it."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

on the north side of the [new] altar. ¹⁵ And King Ahaz commanded the priest Uriah: "On the great^a altar you shall offer the morning burnt offering and the evening meal offering and the king's burnt offering and his meal offering, with the burnt offerings of all the people of the land, their meal offerings and their libations. And against it you shall dash the blood of all the burnt offerings and all the blood of the sacrifices. And I will decide^b about the bronze altar."^c ¹⁶ Uriah did just as King Ahaz commanded.

¹⁷ King Ahaz cut off the insets—the laver stands—and removed the lavers from them. He also removed the tank from the bronze oxen that supported it and set it on a stone pavement—¹⁸ on account of the king of Assyria.^d He also extended to the House of the LORD ^ethe sabbath passage that had been built in the palace and the king's outer entrance.^e

¹⁹ The other events of Ahaz's reign, and his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ²⁰ Ahaz slept with his fathers and was buried with his fathers in the City of David; his son Hezekiah succeeded him as king.

17 In the twelfth year of King Ahaz of Judah, Hoshea son of Elah became king over Israel in Samaria—for nine years. ² He did what was displeasing to the LORD, though not as much as the kings of Israel who preceded him. ³ King Shalmaneser marched against him, and Hoshea became his vassal and paid him tribute. ⁴ But the king of Assyria caught Hoshea in an act of treachery: he had sent envoys to King So of Egypt, and he had not paid the tribute to the king of Assyria, as in previous years. And the king of Assyria arrested him and put him in prison. ⁵ Then the king of Assyria marched against the whole land; he came to Samaria and besieged it for three years. ⁶ In the ninth year of Hoshea, the king of Assyria captured Samaria. He deported the Israelites to Assyria and settled them in Halah, at the [River] Habor, at the River Gozan, and in the towns of Media.

⁷ This happened because the Israelites sinned against the LORD their God, who had freed them from the land of Egypt, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt. They worshiped other gods ⁸ and followed the customs of the nations which the LORD had dispossessed before the Israelites and the customs which the kings of Israel had prac-

17–18: The removal of the various Temple furnishings was perhaps necessitated in order to meet the required payments to Assyria.

17.1–23: The end of the Northern Kingdom and the major exile of northern tribes. This ch appears confusing because the author (or a later editor) spliced together several documents in bringing this part of the history to a stirring finish and in driving home some didactic points. 1–3: Hoshea (see 15.30), whose territorially reduced kingdom no longer included Galilee and Transjordan, submitted to Tiglath-pileser's son, Shalmaneser V. 4: There was no pharaoh named So. Some historians consider it an Egyptian word for a high officer of the king; others consider So a reference to the delta city Sais whose kings of the 24th dynasty in the 720s were not friends of Assyria. In any case, the king of Assyria believed that Hoshea . . . had sent envoys to Egypt in order to enlist Egyptian aid in throwing off Assyrian domination. 6: Cuneiform documents attribute the conquest of Samaria to both Shalmaneser V and Sargon II. Possibly, Shalmaneser died just before the capitulation of the city. The author of Kings, however, knows only Shalmaneser (see 18.9–12). Assyrian policy called for dispersing hostile populations throughout its empire. Israelites from Samaria were sent to Gozan on the Upper Habor river, to Halah, beyond the Tigris northeast of ancient Nineveh (see 15.29), and to towns on the Persian plateau. Large Jewish communities, descendants of these exiles, lived continuously in these or adjacent regions of Syria, Iraq, and Iran until the end of the 20th century. 7–23: These verses summarize explicitly the philosophy of sin, covenant violation, and retribution by which the author evaluated all the kings of Israel. Nobody but Israel was responsible for the major calamities that befell the kingdom. This philosophical justification, however, differs from the typical remarks scattered throughout the book in that it holds the a I.e., the new one. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain

c I.e., the old one, cf. v. 14.

d I.e., because of the metal given him in tribute.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

ticed. ⁹The Israelites committed^a against the LORD their God acts which were not right: They built for themselves shrines in all their settlements, from watchtowers to fortified cities; ¹⁰they set up pillars and sacred posts for themselves on every lofty hill and under every leafy tree; ¹¹and they offered sacrifices there, at all the shrines, like the nations whom the LORD had driven into exile before them. They committed wicked acts to vex the LORD, ¹²and they worshiped fetishes concerning which the LORD had said to them, "You must not do this thing."

¹³The LORD warned Israel and Judah by every prophet [and] every seer, saying: "Turn back from your wicked ways, and observe My commandments and My laws, according to all the Teaching that I commanded your fathers and that I transmitted to you through My servants the prophets." ¹⁴But they did not obey; they stiffened their necks, like their fathers who did not have faith in the LORD their God; ¹⁵they spurned His laws and the covenant that He had made with their fathers, and the warnings He had given them. They went after delusion and were deluded; [they imitated] the nations that were about them, which the LORD had forbidden them to emulate. ¹⁶They rejected all the commandments of the LORD their God; they made molten idols for themselves—two calves—and they made a sacred post and they bowed down to all the host of heaven, and they worshiped Baal. ¹⁷They consigned their sons and daughters to the fire; they practiced augury and divination, and gave themselves over to what was displeasing to the LORD and vexed Him. ¹⁸The LORD was incensed at Israel and He banished them from His presence; none was left but the tribe of Judah alone.

¹⁹Nor did Judah keep the commandments of the LORD their God; they followed the customs that Israel had practiced. ²⁰So the LORD spurned all the offspring of Israel, and He afflicted them and delivered them into the hands of plunderers, and finally He cast them out from His presence.

²¹For Israel broke away from the House of David, and they made Jeroboam son of Nebat king. Jeroboam caused Israel to stray from the LORD and to commit great sin, ²²and the Israelites persisted in all the sins which Jeroboam had committed; they did not depart from them. ²³In the end, the LORD removed Israel from His presence, as He had warned them through all His servants the prophets. So the Israelites were deported from their land to Assyria, as is still the case.

people—considered as a collective body—culpable, along with rulers, for the consequences of their choice of religious practices.

7–18: One explanation for the destruction of Israel is that under the influence of Canaanites and despite warnings, the people—not their rulers—persisted in doing wrong. The author does not agree with this view, regularly condemning the kings for following the ways of Jeroboam son of Nebat.

16: The worship instituted in Bethel was illegitimate in the eyes of the Deuteronomistic historian, and is perceived as a continuation of earlier idolatrous practice.

19–20: A comment indicating that the contents of vv. 7–18 were applicable also to Judah. 21–23: A second explanation sketches a brief history of the Northern Kingdom, emphasizing its ignominious beginning and its deserved end. This is in harmony with the running comments and evaluations of the author, and assigns responsibility to Jeroboam's religious policies that were maintained by subsequent rulers.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

²⁴The king of Assyria brought [people] from Babylon, Cuthah, Avva, Hamath, and Sephar-vaim, and he settled them in the towns of Samaria in place of the Israelites; they took possession of Samaria and dwelt in its towns. ²⁵When they first settled there, they did not worship the LORD; so the LORD sent lions against them which killed some of them. ²⁶They said to the king of Assyria: "The nations which you deported and resettled in the towns of Samaria do not know the rules of the God of the land; therefore He has let lions loose against them which are killing them—for they do not know the rules of the God of the land."

²⁷The king of Assyria gave an order: "Send there one of the priests whom you have deported; let him^a go and dwell there, and let him teach them the practices of the God of the land." ²⁸So one of the priests whom they had exiled from Samaria came and settled in Bethel; he taught them how to worship the LORD. ²⁹However, each nation continued to make its own gods and to set them up in the cult places which had been made by the people of Samaria; each nation [set them up] in the towns in which it lived. ³⁰The Babylonians made Succoth-benoth, and the men of Cuth made Nergal, and the men of Hamath made Ashima, ³¹and the Avvites made Nibhaz and Tartak; and the Sepharvites burned their children [as offerings] to Adrammelech and Anamelech, the gods of Sepharvaim. ³²They worshiped the LORD, but they also appointed from their own ranks priests of the shrines, who officiated for them in the cult places. ³³They worshiped the LORD, while serving their own gods according to the practices of the nations from which they had been deported. ³⁴To this day, they follow their former practices. They do not worship the LORD [properly]. They do not follow the laws and practices, the Teaching and Instruction that the LORD enjoined upon the descendants of Jacob—who was given the name Israel—³⁵with whom He made a covenant and whom He commanded: "You shall worship no other gods; you shall not bow down to them nor serve them nor sacrifice to them. ³⁶You must worship only the LORD your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt with great might and with an outstretched arm: to Him alone shall you bow down and to Him alone shall you sacrifice. ³⁷You shall observe faithfully, all your days, the laws and the practices; the Teaching and Instruction that I^b wrote down for you; do not worship other gods. ³⁸Do not forget the covenant that I made with you; do not worship other gods. ³⁹Worship only the LORD your God, and He will save you from the hands of all your enemies.” ⁴⁰But they did not obey; they continued their former practices. ⁴¹Those nations worshiped the LORD, but they also served their idols. To this day their children and their children’s children do as their ancestors did.

17.24–41: The practices of the people who were settled in Samaria. 24: This verse was originally part of the document used by the author for vv. 1–6. The emptied cities of Samaria were settled by people exiled there from northern Syria and from southern Mesopotamia. 25–33: The new immigrants brought with them their own religions, which they tried to accommodate with local practices in order to appease the God of the land. In v. 41, which originally continued this section, the author notes that they never got it quite right and that the hybrid religious practices that they evolved persisted. 34–40: Ralbag correctly suggests that these verses address the behavior of Israelites who had been left in the land; even the experience of exile did not chasten them to return to God. In either case, they most likely originally continued v. 23.

^a Heb. "them." ^b Heb. "He."

18 In the third year of King Hoshea son of Elah of Israel, Hezekiah son of King Ahaz of Judah became king. ²He was twenty-five years old when he became king, and he reigned in Jerusalem twenty-nine years; his mother’s name was Abi^a daughter of Zechariah. ³He did what was pleasing to the LORD, just as his father David had done. ⁴He abolished the shrines and smashed the pillars and cut down the sacred post. He also broke into pieces the bronze serpent that Moses had made, for until that time the Israelites had been offering sacrifices to it; it was called Nehushtan. ⁵He trusted only in the LORD the God of Israel; there was none like him among all the kings of Judah after him, nor among those before him. ⁶He clung to the LORD; he did not turn away from following Him, but kept the commandments that the LORD had given to Moses. ⁷And the LORD was always with him; he was successful wherever he turned. He rebelled against the king of Assyria and would not serve him. ⁸He overran Philistia as far as Gaza and its border areas, from watchtower to fortified town.

⁹In the fourth year of King Hezekiah, which was the seventh year of King Hoshea son of Elah of Israel, King Shalmaneser of Assyria marched against Samaria and besieged it, ¹⁰and he^b captured it at the end of three years. In the sixth year of Hezekiah, which was the ninth year of King Hoshea of Israel, Samaria was captured; ¹¹and the king of Assyria deported the Israelites to Assyria. He “settled them in” Halah, along the Habor [and] the River Gozan, and in the towns of Media. ¹²[This happened] because they did not obey the LORD their God; they transgressed His covenant—all that Moses the servant of the met. V. 5, which contradicts 23.25, might suggest that an edition of the history originally ended with Hezekiah; this might explain why this section is so long and laudatory. The various sources used by the author to describe Hezekiah’s reign are arranged only in a rough chronological order, and the author’s thematic interests override the chronology, creating some confusion. 2 Kings 18.9–20.19 is paralleled with variations in 2 Chron. ch 29 and Isa. ch 36–39.

18.1–8: Hezekiah’s reforms.

3: What was pleasing . . . as . . .

David: Hezekiah is the first king evaluated so positively by the author. The phrase his father David is applied also to Asa (1 Kings 15.11) and Josiah (22.2, where NJPS properly renders “father” by “ancestor”). 4: Elimination of the open shrines concentrated worship in Jerusalem (see v. 22). The author describes Nehushtan, a form of the word for serpent, as an ancient relic associated with the miraculous healings in the wilderness (Num. 21.8–9) held sacred by Israelites. Noting that the Heb actually says “he called it” (and not it was called), Rashi suggests that Hezekiah, the active subject of the sentence, labeled it “bronze serpent-thing,” “nehushtan” in Heb, as a pejorative. 7–8: Hezekiah planned to revolt against Assyrian control early in his reign, but waited until the opportunity was ripe. The campaign in Philistia was intended to bring all coastal cities into an anti-Assyrian coalition. Similarly, his fortification and enhancements around the Gihon spring, the main source of Jerusalem’s water, were intended to help the city survive an extended siege (20.20). 2 Chron. 32 provides additional information about his preparation of storage facilities, weapons, and fortifications.

a 2 Chron. 29.1 reads “Abijah.”

b So some mss. and ancient versions; most mss. and editions read “they.”

c-c Lit. “led them to.”

18.1–20.21: The reign of Hezekiah. The author dedicates three chapters to selected events from the reign of Hezekiah. He allots as much attention to this king as he did to the house of Ahab, and highlights Isaiah in these narratives as he did Elijah in the earlier ones. Hezekiah is important to the author because he demonstrated that the high standard expected of a king could be and was indeed 18.9–12: The Assyrian invasion of the Northern Kingdom. Cf. 17.1–6. The author abridges information given earlier so as to drive home the lesson learned from history in v. 12.

LORD had commanded. They did not obey and they did not fulfill it.

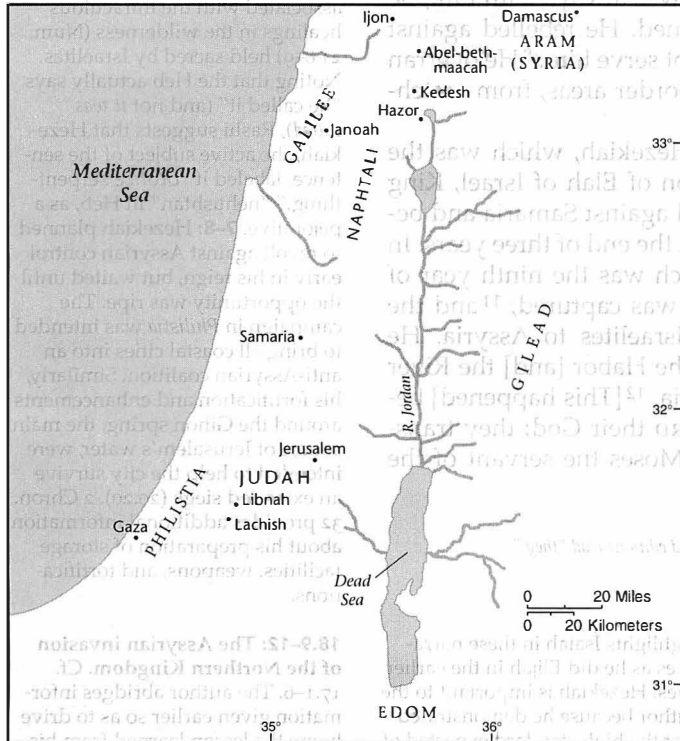

¹³In the fourteenth year of King Hezekiah, King Sennacherib of Assyria marched against all the fortified towns of Judah and seized them. ¹⁴King Hezekiah sent this message to the king of Assyria at Lachish: "I have done wrong; withdraw from me; and I shall bear whatever you impose on me." So the king of Assyria imposed upon King Hezekiah of Judah a payment of three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold. ¹⁵Hezekiah gave him all the silver that was on hand in the House of the LORD and in the treasuries of the palace. ¹⁶At that time Hezekiah cut down the doors and the doorposts^a of the Temple of the LORD, which King Hezekiah had overlaid [with gold], and gave them to the king of Assyria.

¹⁷But the king of Assyria sent ^bthe Tartan, the Rabсарis, and the Rabshakeh^b from Lachish with a large force to 18.13–37: Assyria threatens Judah. 13–16: A brief straightforward description of what happened in Jerusalem. The author may have cited it from a chronicle. Sennacherib's armies swept through Judah in 701 BCE, wreaking great havoc. The author focuses only on what happened at Jerusalem and hints that Hezekiah precipitated the Assyrian response (v. 14). Sennacherib's own accounts mention that he conquered 46 strong cities and forts, that he captured over 200,000 people, that he made "Hezekiah a prisoner in Jerusalem, like a bird in a cage," and that Hezekiah paid him a large tribute, including his daughters, palace women, and male and female singers. 14: Assyrian headquarters were located near Lachish, about 45 km (30 mi)

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Assyrian titles.

Places associated with Sennacherib's invasion of Judah

King Hezekiah in Jerusalem. They marched up to Jerusalem; and when they arrived, they took up a position near the conduit of the Upper Pool, by the road of the Fuller's Field. ¹⁸They summoned the king; and Eliakim son of Hilkiah, who was in charge of the palace, Shebna the scribe, and Joah son of Asaph the recorder went out to them.

¹⁹The Rabshakeh said to them, "You tell Hezekiah: Thus said the Great King, the King of Assyria: What makes you so confident? ²⁰You must think that mere talk is counsel and valor for war! Look, on whom are you relying, that you have rebelled against me? ²¹You rely, of all things, on Egypt, that splintered reed of a staff, which enters and punctures the palm of anyone who leans on it! That's what Pharaoh king of Egypt is like to all who rely on him. ²²And if you tell me that you are relying on the LORD your God, He is the very one whose shrines and altars Hezekiah did away with, telling Judah and Jerusalem, 'You must worship only at this altar in Jerusalem.' ²³Come now, make this wager with my master, the king of Assyria: I'll give you two thousand horses if you can produce riders to mount them. ²⁴So how could you refuse anything even to the deputy of one of my master's lesser servants, relying on Egypt for chariots and horsemen? ²⁵And do you think I have marched against this land to destroy it without the LORD? The LORD Himself told me: Go up against that land and destroy it."

²⁶Eliakim son of Hilkiah, Shebna, and Joah replied to the Rabshakeh, "Please, speak to your servants in Aramaic, for we understand it; do not speak to us in Judean in the hearing of the people on the wall." ²⁷But the Rabshakeh answered them, "Was it to your master and to you that my master sent me to speak those words? It was precisely to the men who are sitting on the wall—who will have to eat their dung and drink their urine with you." ²⁸And the Rabshakeh stood and called out in a loud voice in Judean: "Hear the words of the Great King, the King of Assyria. ²⁹Thus said the king: Don't let Hezekiah deceive southwest of Jerusalem. Wall reliefs from Sennacherib's palace in Nineveh, now in the British Museum, illustrate the siege and fall of Lachish in great detail. These suggest what Hezekiah wished to avoid in Jerusalem. 17: This is the beginning of the expansive narratives that conclude at 19.37. They feature prophetic stories about Isaiah concerning the events treated tersely in vv. 13–16; they incorporate legends, and are likely written after the events they describe to show how the God of Israel protected his city, Jerusalem, from the Assyrians. This theme of the inviolability of Jerusalem plays a major role in the work of the prophet Isaiah. Chronologically, the speeches presented in vv. 17–35, along with some story material in ch 19, belong between the narrative of vv. 13 and 14 above. The three Assyrian titles mean roughly "field marshal," "chief officer" (lit. "chief eunuch"), and "chief administrator" (lit. "chief butler"). The Rabshakeh was a highly placed Assyrian official. He was obviously well informed about Hezekiah's political alliances (v. 21), religious activities (v. 22), able to speak "Judean" (v. 26), and knowledgeable about Israelite religion (v. 25). His speech, although formally directed to the leaders, was intended for the ears of the common folk so that they would pressure their king to give in to Assyria. 19: The Great King, the King of Assyria are actual titles found in the Assyrian annals.

21–25: Judah's political ally will not save her. Judah's God will not save her either, for Judah has not, says the Rabshakeh, served God properly. The Rabshakeh speaks of Hezekiah's reforms as an affront to God, in his attempt to arouse opposition to Hezekiah's policy of opposing Assyria. 26: Aramaic was the diplomatic language in the southwestern parts of the Assyrian empire. Assyrian reliefs depict two scribes recording events, one in cuneiform and one in Aramaic. Judean refers to the local dialect of Hebrew. Hebrew remained a spoken language, albeit in different dialectal forms, along with Aramaic until the 3rd century CE. Then it evolved into a liturgical language and a language of learned discourse and writing, like Classical Arabic and Latin. After 1,600 years, Hebrew was conscientiously revived as a mother tongue during the 19th and 20th centuries CE among Jews living in Israel. Aramaic remained an important language in the Middle East until displaced by Arabic in the 7th to 8th centuries CE. Aramaic remains a liturgical language in some Eastern tradition churches. At the end of the 20th century, it was spoken by some Jews in Kurdistan (northern Iraq) and in dialect form by Jews in other parts of Iraq, in Iran, and in a few places in Lebanon. 27: Eat . . . dung . . . urine, a threat of famine brought about by a you, for he will not be able to deliver you from my^a hands.

³⁰Don't let Hezekiah make you rely on the LORD, saying: The LORD will surely save us: this city will not fall into the hands of the king of Assyria. ³¹Don't listen to Hezekiah. For thus said the king of Assyria: Make your peace with me and come out to me,^b so that you may all eat from your vines and your fig trees and drink water from your cisterns, ³²until I come and take you away to a land like your own, a land of grain [fields] and vineyards, of bread and wine, of olive oil and honey, so that you may live and not die. Don't listen to Hezekiah, who misleads you by saying, 'The LORD will save us.' ³³Did any of the gods of other nations save his land from the king of Assyria? ³⁴Where were the gods of Hamath and Arpad? Where were the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivvah? [And] did they^c save Samaria from me? ³⁵Which among all the gods of [those] countries saved their countries from me, that the LORD should save Jerusalem from me?" ³⁶But the people were silent and did not say a word in reply; for the king's order was: "Do not answer him." ³⁷And so Eliakim son of Hilkiah, who was in charge of the palace, Shebna the scribe, and Joah son of Asaph the recorder came to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and they reported to him what the Rabshakeh had said.

19When King Hezekiah heard this, he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the House of the LORD. ²He also sent Eliakim, who was in charge of the palace, Shebna the scribe, and the senior priests, covered with sackcloth, to the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz. ³They said to him, "Thus said Hezekiah: This day is a day of distress, of chastisement, and of disgrace. ⁴The babes have reached the birthstool, but the strength to give birth is lacking."^d ⁴Perhaps the LORD your God will take note of all the words of the Rabshakeh, whom his master the king of Assyria has sent to blaspheme the living God, and will mete out judgment for the words that the LORD your God has heard—if you will offer up prayer for the surviving remnant."

⁵When King Hezekiah's ministers came to Isaiah, ⁶Isaiah said to them, "Tell your master as follows: Thus said the LORD: Do not be frightened by the words of blasphemy against Me that you have heard from the minions siege. 31–32: As an inducement to surrender, the Rabshakeh offers peace and resettlement in some land of exile described as a wonderful place. 34: Hamath . . . Ivvah, cities that the Assyrians had previously conquered.

19.1–37: Hezekiah consults Isaiah. 1–4: Hezekiah goes directly to the Temple and also sends messengers to Isaiah, attempting to stimulate him to action by emphasizing the words of the Rabshakeh against the LORD your God.

a So several mss. and ancient versions; most mss. and editions read "his."

b I.e., to my representative the Rabshakeh.

c I.e., the gods of Samaria.

d-d I.e., the situation is desperate and we are at a loss.

of the king of Assyria. ⁷I will delude^a him; he will hear a rumor and return to his land, and I will make him fall by the sword in his land."

⁸The Rabshakeh, meanwhile, heard that [the king] had left Lachish; he turned back and found the king of Assyria attacking Libnah. ⁹But [the king of Assyria] learned that King Tirhakah of Nubia had come out to fight him; so he again sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying, ¹⁰"Tell this to King Hezekiah of Judah: Do not let your God, on whom you are relying, mislead you into thinking that Jerusalem will not be delivered into the hands of the king of Assyria. ¹¹You yourself have heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all the lands, how they have annihilated them; and can you escape? ¹²Were the nations that my predecessors^b destroyed—Gozan, Haran, Rezeph, and the Bethedenites in Telassar—saved by their gods? ¹³Where is the king of Hamath? And the king of Arpad? And the kings of Lair, Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivvah?"

¹⁴Hezekiah took the letter from the messengers and read it. Hezekiah then went up to the House of the LORD and spread it out before the LORD. ¹⁵And Hezekiah prayed to the LORD and said, "O LORD of Hosts, Enthroned on the Cherubim! You alone are God of all the kingdoms of the earth. You made the heavens and the earth. ¹⁶O LORD, incline Your ear and hear; open Your eyes and see. Hear the words that Sennacherib has sent to blaspheme the living God! ¹⁷True, O LORD, the kings of Assyria have annihilated the nations and their lands, ¹⁸and have committed their gods to the flames and have destroyed them; for they are not gods, but man's handiwork of wood and stone. ¹⁹But now, O LORD our God, deliver us from his hands, and let all the kingdoms of the earth know that You alone, O LORD, are God."

²⁰Then Isaiah son of Amoz sent this message to Hezekiah: "Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: I have heard the prayer you have offered to Me concerning King Sennacherib of Assyria. ²¹This is the word that the LORD has spoken concerning him:

"Fair Maiden Zion despises you,
She mocks at you;
Fair Jerusalem shakes
Her head at you.

²² Whom have you blasphemed and reviled?
Against whom made loud your voice

7: Isaiah's prophecy that the king of Assyria would hear a rumor, return to Assyria and be killed there are reported fulfilled in vv. 36–37. 9: King Tirhakah was the last pharaoh of the twenty-fifth (Ethiopian) dynasty. Although he reigned 690–664 BCE, he was active militarily or had armies led in his name years before. He was not a king in 701 when Sennacherib besieged Jerusalem, but was known to have been one when the author wrote. 10–19: A delegation from Sennacherib, now at Libnah north of Lachish, arrived with essentially the same message as that delivered by the Rabshakeh. 20–28: These verses are not present in the book of Isaiah, but similar anti-Assyrian passages occur in Isa. 10.12–19; 14.24–27.

^a Lit. "put a spirit in."

^b Lit. "fathers."

And haughtily raised your eyes?
 Against the Holy One of Israel!
 23 Through your envoys you have blasphemed my Lord.

Because you thought,
 "Thanks to my vast chariotry,
 It is I who have climbed the highest mountains,
 To the remotest parts of the Lebanon,
 And have cut down its loftiest cedars,
 Its choicest cypresses,
 And have reached its ^aremotest lodge,^a ^bIts densest forest.^b

24 It is I who have drawn^c and drunk the waters of strangers;

I have dried up with the soles of my feet
 All the streams of Egypt.^c

25 Have you not heard? Of old
 I planned that very thing,
 I designed it long ago,
 And now have fulfilled it.

And it has come to pass,
 Laying waste fortified towns
 In desolate heaps.

26 Their inhabitants are helpless,
 Dismayed and shamed.
 They were but grass of the field
 And green herbage,
 Grass of the roofs that is blasted
 Before the ^dstanding grain.^d

27 I know your stayings
 And your goings and comings,
 And how you have raged against Me.

28 Because you have raged against Me,
 And your tumult has reached My ears,
 I will place My hook in your nose
 And My bit between your jaws;
 And I will make you go back by the road
 By which you came.

29 "And this is the sign for you:^e This year you eat what grows of itself, and the next year what springs from that;
 and in the third year, sow and reap, and plant vineyards and eat their fruit. ³⁰And the survivors of the House of 29: It will take two years for life to return to normal after the invasion and siege. 32–34: Known prophecies about the protected status of Jerusalem, combined with the fact that Sennacherib withdrew his forces, gave rise to a sense that the city was inviolable (Isa. 33.20; Zech. 12.8; Ps. 46.5–8).

a-a Isa. 37.24 reads "highest peak."

b-b Lit. "Its farmland forest"; exact meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Or "dug"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Emendation yields "east wind"; see note at Isa. 37.27.

e I.e., Hezekiah.

Judah that have escaped shall regenerate its stock below and produce boughs above.

³¹ For a remnant shall come forth from Jerusalem,
Survivors from Mount Zion.
The zeal of the LORD of Hosts
Shall bring this to pass.

³² Assuredly, thus said the LORD concerning the king of Assyria:

He shall not enter this city:
He shall not shoot an arrow at it,
Or advance upon it with a shield,
Or pile up a siege mound against it.

³³ He shall go back
By the way he came;
He shall not enter this city

—declares the LORD.

³⁴ I will protect and save this city for My sake,
And for the sake of My servant David.”

³⁵ That night an angel of the LORD went out and struck down one hundred and eighty-five thousand in the Assyrian camp, and the following morning they were all dead corpses.

³⁶ So King Sennacherib of Assyria broke camp and retreated, and stayed in Nineveh. ³⁷ While he was worshipping in the temple of his god Nisroch, his sons Adrammelech and Sarezer struck him down with the sword. They fled to the land of Ararat, and his son Esarhaddon succeeded him as king.

20 In those days Hezekiah fell dangerously ill. The prophet Isaiah son of Amoz came and said to him, “Thus said the LORD: Set your affairs in order, for you are going to die; you will not get well.” ² Thereupon Hezekiah turned his face to the wall and prayed to the LORD. He said, ³ “Please, O LORD, remember how I have walked before You sincerely and wholeheartedly, and have done what is pleasing to You.” And Hezekiah wept profusely.

⁴ Before Isaiah had gone out of the middle court, the word of the LORD came to him: ⁵ “Go back and say to Hezekiah, the ruler of My people: Thus said the LORD, the God of your father David: I have heard your prayer, I have seen your tears. I am going to heal you; on the third day you shall go up to the House of the LORD. ⁶ And I will add fifteen years to your life. I will also rescue you and this city from the hands of the king of Assyria. I will protect this city for My sake and for the sake of My servant

35: There is no tradition of such a plague other than here and in Isa. 37.36. 36: This verse may have originally followed 18.16, concluding a short summary of the siege of 701, or after the prediction of this event in 19.7. In its present context, the verse leaves the impression that events occurring over many decades actually took place in a short while in fulfillment of the prophecy of 19.7. Sennacherib did hear a rumor (about Tirhakah [v. 9]) and did return to his land (from which he ventured forth in the following years many times on campaigns, primarily against Babylonia), and died by the sword in 681 BCE. 37: We now know from Assyrian sources that Sennacherib was killed by Arad-Ninlil, rather than his sons Adrammelech and Sarezer; Sennacherib was, however, as stated in the Bible, succeeded by his son Esarhaddon.

20.1–12: The story of Hezekiah's illness is loosely connected to its context, and is out of chronological order. Ralbag argues that it is not connected to the Sennacherib story. On the basis of v. 6 (= 19.34), with its reference to an Assyrian threat, he proposes that it addresses new threats by Esarhaddon, Sennacherib's son. Merodach-baladan—reading the name correctly as in Isa. 39.1—however, was an anti-Assyrian ruler who usurped the throne of Babylonia twice: the first time, for eleven years after the death of Shalmaneser V in 721 BCE and the second, for nine months in 703 after the death of Sargon II. The time of his envoys' visit in v. 12, then, most likely coincided with his planning to revolt against Assyria in the east, around 705, while Hezekiah was making his own preparations to revolt in the west. 4: Contrition accompanied by prayer can effect a change in God's decision.

David."—⁷Then Isaiah said, "Get a cake of figs." And they got one, and they applied it to the rash, and he recovered.—⁸Hezekiah asked Isaiah, "What is the sign that the LORD will heal me and that I shall go up to the House of the LORD on the third day?" ⁹Isaiah replied, "This is the sign for you from the LORD that the LORD will do the thing that He has promised: Shall^a the shadow advance ten steps or recede ten steps?" ¹⁰Hezekiah said, "It is easy for the shadow to lengthen ten steps, but not for the shadow to recede ten steps." ¹¹So the prophet Isaiah called to the LORD, and He made the shadow which had descended on the dial^b of Ahaz recede ten steps.

¹²At that time, King Berodach-^cbaladan son of Balandan of Babylon sent [envoys with] a letter and a gift to Hezekiah, for he had heard about Hezekiah's illness. ¹³^dHezekiah heard about them^d and he showed them all his treasurehouse—the silver, the gold, the spices, and the fragrant oil—and his armory, and everything that was to be found in his storehouses. There was nothing in his palace or in all his realm that Hezekiah did not show them. ¹⁴Then the prophet Isaiah came to King Hezekiah. "What," he demanded of him, "did those men say to you? Where have they come to you from?" "They have come," Hezekiah replied, "from a far country, from Babylon." ¹⁵Next he asked, "What have they seen in your palace?" And Hezekiah replied, "They have seen everything that is in my palace. There was nothing in my storehouses that I did not show them."

¹⁶Then Isaiah said to Hezekiah, "Hear the word of the LORD: ¹⁷A time is coming when everything in your palace which your ancestors have stored up to this day will be carried off to Babylon; nothing will remain behind, said the LORD. ¹⁸And some of your sons, your own issue, whom you will have fathered, will be taken to serve as eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon." ¹⁹Hezekiah declared to Isaiah, "The word of the LORD that you have spoken is good." For he thought, "It means that ^esafety is assured for^e my time."

²⁰The other events of Hezekiah's reign, and all his exploits, and how he made the pool and the conduit and brought the water into the city, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ²¹Hezekiah slept with his fathers, and his son Manasseh succeeded him as king.

a Cf. Targum.

b Heb. "steps." A model of a dial with steps has been discovered in Egypt.

c Several mss. and the parallel Isa. 39.1 read "Merodach."

d-d Isa. 39.2 reads "Hezekiah was pleased by their coming."

e-e Lit. "there shall be safety and faithfulness in."

7: The cake of figs was applied as a poultice. The same medication is prescribed for horses in a text from Ugarit. 9–11: The sign itself is unclear, but likely refers to the shadow of the sundial moving in an unnatural direction.

20.13–21: The prediction of Babylonian conquest and the end of Hezekiah's reign. 19: The word of the LORD . . . is good expresses a fatalistic acceptance of what will be in the light of some acknowledged misconduct (cf. 1 Sam. 3.18; 2 Sam. 15.26). 20: In 1880, the Siloam Tunnel inscription commemorating the completion of the tunneling project was found on the tunnel's wall. This tunnel conveyed water from outside Jerusalem into the city, assuring a water supply even in the time of siege.

21 Manasseh was twelve years old when he became king, and he reigned fifty-five years in Jerusalem; his mother's name was Hephzibah. ²He did what was displeasing to the LORD, following the abhorrent practices of the nations that the LORD had dispossessed before the Israelites. ³He rebuilt the shrines that his father Hezekiah had destroyed; he erected altars for Baal and made a sacred post, as King Ahab of Israel had done. He bowed down to all the host of heaven and worshiped them, ⁴and he built altars for them in the House of the LORD, of which the LORD had said, "I will establish My name in Jerusalem." ⁵He built altars for all the hosts of heaven in the two courts of the House of the LORD. ⁶He consigned his son to the fire; he practiced soothsaying and divination, and consulted ghosts and familiar spirits; he did much that was displeasing to the LORD, to vex Him. ⁷The sculptured image of Asherah that he made he placed in the House concerning which the LORD had said to David and to his son Solomon, "In this House and in Jerusalem, which I chose out of all the tribes of Israel, I will establish My name forever. ⁸And I will not again cause the feet of Israel to wander from the land that I gave to their fathers, if they will but faithfully observe all that I have commanded them—all the Teachings with which My servant Moses charged them." ⁹But they did not obey, and Manasseh led them astray to do greater evil than the nations that the LORD had destroyed before the Israelites. ¹⁰Therefore the LORD spoke through His servants the prophets: ¹¹"Because King Manasseh of Judah has done these abhorrent things—he has outdone in wickedness all that the Amorites did before his time—and because he led Judah to sin with his fetishes, ¹²assuredly, thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: I am going to bring such a disaster on Jerusalem and Judah that both ears of everyone who hears about it will tingle. ¹³I will ^aapply to Jerusalem the measuring line of Samaria and the weights of the House of Ahab;^a I will wipe Jerusalem clean as one wipes a dish and turns it upside down. ¹⁴And I will cast off the remnant of My own people and deliver them into the hands of their enemies. They shall be plunder and prey to all their enemies ¹⁵because they have done what is displeasing to Me and have been vexing Me from the day that their fathers came out of Egypt to this day."

¹⁶Moreover, Manasseh put so many innocent persons to death that he filled Jerusalem [with blood] from end to end—besides the sin he committed in causing Judah to do what was displeasing to the LORD.

21.1–18: Manasseh's long and peaceful reign (698–642 BCE) overlapped those of the three most powerful Assyrian kings: Sennacherib, Esarhaddon, and Ashurbanipal. These absolutely controlled Mesopotamia and, after Esarhaddon defeated Tirhakah in 671, Egypt and everything in between. Manasseh is mentioned as a loyal vassal in Assyrian inscriptions; this explains his peaceful reign.

3–9: A list of all that Manasseh did wrong (v. 17). According to the author, Manasseh's reign was the worst period of apostasy in Israelite history. Not only did he sin, but he caused others to sin and he introduced illegal cults into the Temple itself. From the author's perspective, Manasseh undid everything that Hezekiah and Asa had achieved and then pressed beyond them to do wrong out of spite (v. 6). The destruction of Jerusalem is blamed on the heinous acts of Manasseh; this author, in contrast to the Chronicler, seems undisturbed that this destruction did not take place during the reign of Manasseh, who benefited from a long reign. 4: Establish My name in Jerusalem: The quotation here and in v. 7 is from God's speech to Solomon in 1 Kings 9.3; cf. also 1 Kings 8.16. 8–15: An insertion into the description of Manasseh's culpable acts. These vv. focus attention on the culpability of the king as one who causes others to sin. The emphasis on what the people of Israel did wrong reflects an exilic perspective. 10–15: According to the author, these vv. are a collage of prophetic pronouncements, but he did not identify any prophet by name. None of the statements are found in any of the canonical prophetic books. They may have been added by the second author. 11: Amorites, a term referring to pre-Israelite inhabitants of the land who could only be expelled after the measure of their iniquity reached a certain limit (Gen. 15.16 and cf. the imagery in Lev. 18.24–28). 16: This v. concludes the inventory of Manasseh's wrongs from v. 7. Additional information about Manasseh's a-a I.e., I will bring the same fate upon it.

¹⁷The other events of Manasseh's reign, and all his actions, and the sins he committed, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ¹⁸Manasseh slept with his fathers and was buried in the garden of his palace, in the garden of Uzza; and his son Amon succeeded him as king.

¹⁹Amon was twenty-two years old when he became king, and he reigned two years in Jerusalem; his mother's name was Meshullemeth daughter of Haruz of Jotbah. ²⁰He did what was displeasing to the LORD, as his father Manasseh had done. ²¹He walked in all the ways of his father, worshiping the fetishes which his father had worshiped and bowing down to them. ²²He forsook the LORD, the God of his fathers, and did not follow the way of the LORD.

²³Amon's courtiers conspired against him; and they killed the king in his palace. ²⁴But the people of the land put to death all who had conspired against King Amon, and the people of the land made his son Josiah king in his stead. ²⁵The other events of Amon's reign [and] his actions are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ²⁶He was buried in his tomb in the garden of Uzza; and his son Josiah succeeded him as king.

22 Josiah was eight years old when he became king, and he reigned thirty-one years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Jedidah daughter of Adaiah of Bozath. ²He did what was pleasing to the LORD and he followed all the ways of his ancestor David; he did not deviate to the right or to the left.

³In the eighteenth year of King Josiah, the king sent the scribe Shaphan son of Azaliah son of Meshullam to the House of the LORD, saying, ⁴"Go to the high priest Hilkiyah and let him weigh^a the silver that has been deposited in the House of the LORD, which the guards of the threshold have collected from the people. ⁵And let it be delivered to the overseers of the work who are in charge at the House of the LORD, that they in turn may pay it out to the workmen that are in the House of the LORD, for the repair of the House: ⁶to the carpenters, the laborers, and the masons, and for the purchase of wood and quarried stones for rea Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "melt down," cf. v. 9.

religious activities may be inferred from the author's description of Josiah's activities in ch 23. 18: Manasseh was not buried with his fathers in the City of David as were the kings of Judah before him but in the garden of Uzza located on the grounds of his palace. Possibly the traditional cave tombs of the Davidic kings were filled and new ones were excavated elsewhere in the city.

21.19–26: The reign of Amon.

The author indicates that Amon's short reign (641–640 BCE) did not differ from that of his father with regard to religious policies.

23: The reason for the conspiracy is not mentioned. If political, he may have been killed by an anti-Assyrian group; if religious, by an anti-polytheistic group.

24: The people of the land again stepped into the breach and guaranteed the continuity of the Davidic dynasty; cf. 11.14.

22.1–23.30: The reign of Josiah.

In the author's evaluation, Josiah (640–609 BCE) was the most outstanding of all the kings who ruled Judah, with no qualification. His personal piety and righteous zealotness were almost sufficient to avert the disaster which the most heinous of sinners, Manasseh, had sealed for Judah.

22.1–20: The discovery of a scroll.

The author's narrative about the discovery of a book in the Temple and the prophetic authentication of its contents is an artfully constructed narrative that emphasizes characteristics in Josiah's personality that the author wished to present to his readers. Unlike the staid narratives in Kings about individuals who lived after Solomon, this contains details in the manner of narratives in Samuel and 2 Kings which holds information to create slight tensions in order to achieve its objective: admiration for Josiah.

Most, but not all, modern scholars consider this account to be largely historical, reflecting the "(re)discovery" of Deuteronomy in this period. 3: Josiah was 26 years old in 622 BCE when he instituted a project for the refurbishing of the Temple, approximately 90 years after that of Jehoash (cf. 12.1–7).

4–7: Josiah's instructions for the administration of the project and his instructions that contractors and suppliers are to be trusted are similar to those of Jehoash in 12.11–16. 4: Instructions to collect silver for the refurbishing must have been given much earlier. Josiah's order here assumes that pairing the House. ⁷However, no check is to be kept on them for the silver that is delivered to them, for they deal honestly.”

⁸Then the high priest Hilkiyah said to the scribe Shaphan, “I have found a scroll of the Teaching in the House of the LORD.” And Hilkiyah gave the scroll to Shaphan, who read it. ⁹The scribe Shaphan then went to the king and reported to the king: “Your servants have melted down the silver that was deposited in the House, and they have delivered it to the overseers of the work who are in charge at the House of the LORD.” ¹⁰The scribe Shaphan also told the king, “The high priest Hilkiyah has given me a scroll”; and Shaphan read it to the king.

¹¹When the king heard the words of the scroll of the Teaching, he rent his clothes. ¹²And the king gave orders to the priest Hilkiyah, and to Ahikam son of Shaphan, Achbor son of Michaiyah, the scribe Shaphan, and Asaiah the king’s minister: ¹³“Go, inquire of the LORD on my behalf, and on behalf of the people, and on behalf of all Judah, concerning the words of this scroll that has been found. For great indeed must be the wrath of the LORD that has been kindled against us, because our fathers did not obey the words of this scroll to do all that has been prescribed for us.”

¹⁴So the priest Hilkiyah, and Ahikam, Achbor, Shaphan, and Asaiah went to the prophetess Huldah—the wife of Shallum son of Tikvah son of Harhas, the keeper of the wardrobe—who was living in Jerusalem in the Mishneh,^a and they spoke to her. ¹⁵She responded: “Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: Say to the man who sent you to me: ¹⁶Thus said the LORD: I am going to bring disaster upon this place and its inhabitants, in accordance with all the words of the scroll which the king of Judah has read. ¹⁷Because they have forsaken Me and have made offerings to other gods and vexed Me with all their deeds, My wrath is kindled against this place and it shall not be quenched. ¹⁸But say this to the king of Judah, who sent you to inquire of the LORD: Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: As for the words which you have heard—¹⁹because your heart was softened and you humbled yourself before the LORD when you heard what I decreed against this place and its inhabitants—that it will become a desolation and a curse—and because you rent your clothes and wept before Me, I for My part have listened—declares the LORD. ²⁰Assuredly, I will gather you to your fathers and you will be laid in your tomb in peace. Your eyes shall not what has been deposited suffices to complete the project. 8: The scroll of the Teaching is referred to simply as a scroll in v. 10, but in 23.2 as “the covenant scroll” and in 2 Chron. 34.14 as “a scroll of the LORD’s teaching given by Moses.” Scroll, Heb “sefer,” indicates that it was a longish document; Teaching, Heb “torah,” that it contained instruction; “covenant,” Heb “berit,” that it contained a contract/agreement. Hilkiyah’s description suggests that what is novel about the find is that the Teaching—marked by the definite article as something already known—was found written in a scroll. The contents of this scroll and Josiah’s and the people’s reaction to it suggest that it was some form of the book of Deuteronomy. Most medieval Jewish exegetes posit variously that it was unique because either Ahaz or Manasseh had burnt all known scrolls, or—considering the notation in Chronicles—because it was the scroll written by Moses himself (Deut. 31.24–26). Abravanel, however, observing the author’s description of Josiah’s reaction in v. 11, cites a rabbinic tradition that the scroll was found open to the threat of exile directed against the people and the king in Deut. 28.36. 11: Josiah’s reaction to the contents of the scroll is described as a conventional response to hearing bad news (Gen. 37.34; 2 Sam. 1.11; 3.31; 2 Kings 5.7; 19.1). 13: The message indicates that the scroll taught behaviors which Josiah knows had not been followed and spelled out dire consequences which he knew were about to befall him and his kingdom. 14: Huldah, one of four named women prophets in the Tanakh; the others are Miriam (Exod. 15.20), Deborah (Judg. 4.4), and Noadiah (Neh. 6.14). Huldah lived in the Mishneh (cf. Zeph. 1.10), an area of the Old City of Jerusalem now covered by the Jewish and Armenian quarters. 16: Although addressing only the punishments listed in the scroll, Huldah’s pronouncement also authenticated the divine source of its teachings. 19–20: Josiah’s remorse postpones see all the disaster which I will bring upon this place." So they brought back the reply to the king.

^a A quarter in Jerusalem; cf. Zeph. 1.10.

23 At the king's summons, all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem assembled before him. ²The king went up to the House of the LORD, together with all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests and prophets—all the people, young and old. And he read to them the entire text of the covenant scroll which had been found in the House of the LORD. ³The king stood ^aby the pillar^a and solemnized the covenant before the LORD: that they would follow the LORD and observe His commandments, His injunctions, and His laws with all their heart and soul; that they would fulfill all the terms of this covenant as inscribed upon the scroll. And all the people ^bentered into^b the covenant.

⁴Then the king ordered the high priest Hilkiah, the priests of the second rank, and the guards of the threshold to bring out of the Temple of the LORD all the objects made for Baal and Asherah^c and all the host of heaven. He burned them outside Jerusalem in the fields^d of Kidron, and he removed the ashes to Bethel. ⁵He suppressed the idolatrous priests whom the kings of Judah had appointed ^eto make offerings^e at the shrines in the towns of Judah and in the environs of Jerusalem, and those who made offerings to Baal, to the sun and moon and constellations—all the host of heaven. ⁶He brought out the [image of] Asherah from the House of the LORD to the Kidron Valley outside Jerusalem, and burned it in the Kidron Valley; he beat it to dust and scattered its dust over the burial ground of the common people. ⁷He tore down the cubicles of the male prostitutes in the House of the LORD, at the place where the women wove coverings^d for Asherah.

⁸He brought all the priests from the towns of Judah [to Jerusalem] and defiled the shrines where the priests had been making offerings—from Geba to Beer-sheba. He also demolished the shrines of the gates, which were at the ena-a Or "on a platform," cf. Targum.

b-b Cf. Targum.

c For this goddess, cf. 1 Kings 18.19; ordinarily asherah is rendered "sacred post," e.g., 2 Kings 17.16.

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. e-e Lit. "and he offered."

the inevitable punishment until after his death. Compare the similar response to the contrite prayers of Ahab (1 Kings 21.27–29) and Hezekiah (2 Kings 20.2–6). Josiah died in battle in 609 BCE (cf.

23.29–30). Huldah's prophecy is mostly fulfilled by the events reported in 25.9–11, 18–21. Rashi and Radak, followed by others, consider the phrase in peace applied to Josiah fulfilled in that he did not see the destruction of the Temple implied by the words your eyes shall not see all the disaster.

23.1–25: The reforms of Josiah were instituted in response to Huldah's authentication of the scroll. Initially he mediated a covenant between the people and God and then instituted a course of action to fulfill the conditions of the agreement. 3: His stand by the pillar may have been a symbol of dynastic authority; cf. 11.14. Josiah's role as mediator of the covenant is similar to that of Jehoiada in the days of Jehoash of Judah (11.17), Joshua at Shechem (Josh. 24.14–25), and particularly Moses at Sinai. Idioms in this verse echo those in Deuteronomy: follow the LORD (Deut. 13.5); observe His commandments, His injunctions, and His laws (Deut. 4.45 and 40 other verses); all their heart and soul (Deut. 4.29; 6.5); entered into a covenant (Deut. 29.11). Cf. 1 Kings 8.22–53. 4–7: Josiah's purification of the Temple and elimination of shrines outside of Jerusalem illuminate the drastic changes that Manasseh introduced into Judah during his long reign. 4: Baal, Asherah, and the host of heaven form a polytheistic triad worshipped in Judah in the days of Ahaz and Manasseh (17.16; 21.3 [NJPS translates Asherah by "sacred post"]). Manasseh must have instituted their worship in the Temple itself. See v. 6. Josiah acts in accord with Deut. 12.2. 5: Idolatrous priests (Heb "kemarim") may refer to foreign-born specialists. Although their activities were discontinued, no action was taken against them. No mention is made of what was done to the native-born priests who served in the Temple. 8: Shrines outside of Jerusalem where God was worshipped were defiled, restricting all worship to Jerusalem in accord with Deut. 12.4–7. Geba to Beer-sheba: These cities designated the northern and southern borders of his kingdom. Shrines of the gates have been excavated at Dan, Tirzah, and Geshur (an Aramean city near the northeast shore of the Sea of Galilee). They con-trance of the gate of Joshua, the city prefect—^a which were on a person's left [upon entering] the city gate.^a ⁹^bThe priests of the shrines, however, did not ascend the altar of the LORD in Jerusalem, but they ate unleavened bread along with their kinsmen.^b ¹⁰He also defiled Topheth, which is in the Valley of Ben-hinnom, so that no one might consign his son or daughter to the fire of Molech. ¹¹He did away with the horses that the kings of Judah had dedicated to the sun, “at the entrance^c of the House of the LORD, near the chamber of the eunuch Nathan-melech, which was in the precincts.^c He burned the chariots of the sun. ¹²And the king tore down the altars made by the kings of Judah on the roof by the upper chamber of Ahaz, and the altars made by Manasseh in the two courts of the House of the LORD. He “removed them quickly from there^d and scattered their rubble in the Kidron Valley. ¹³The king also defiled the shrines facing Jerusalem, to the south of the “Mount of the Destroyer,^e which King Solomon of Israel had built for Ashtoreth, the abomination of the Sidonians, for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, and for Milcom, the detestable thing of the Ammonites.^f ¹⁴He shattered their pillars and cut down their sacred posts and covered their sites with human bones.

¹⁵As for the altar in Bethel [and] the shrine made by Jeroboam son of Nebat who caused Israel to sin—that altar, too, and the shrine as well, he tore down. He burned down the shrine and beat it to dust, and he burned the sacred post.

¹⁶Josiah turned and saw the graves that were there on the hill; and he had the bones taken out of the graves and burned on the altar. Thus he defiled it, in fulfillment of the word of the LORD foretold by the man of God who foretold these happenings. ¹⁷He asked, “What is the marker I see there?” And the men of the town replied, “That is the grave of the man of God who came from Judah and foretold these things that you have done to the altar of Bethel.”^g ¹⁸“Let him be,” he said, “let no one disturb his bones.” So they left his bones undisturbed together with the bones of the prophet^h who came from Samaria.ⁱ

sisted of a small area in which one or more standing stones were set up. ⁹: The priests brought in from the open shrines were denied the right to serve at the altar in Jerusalem, in contrast to the teaching of Deut. 18.6–7. This denial was legitimated about 50 years later by Ezekiel (Ezek. 44.10–14). With this exception, all the other parts of this reform, with their emphasis on cultic purity and centralization in Jerusalem, closely mirror Deuteronomy. ¹³: Josiah even eliminates monuments attesting the apostasy of Solomon (see 1 Kings 11.1–13). Neither Asa nor Hezekiah, both considered good kings by the author, had done so. ^{15–18}: Josiah eliminates structures attesting to the great tragedy of the sundering of Solomon's kingdom at the shrine developed by Jeroboam (1 Kings 12.29). The author relates his activities to the story of an anonymous prophet at Bethel (1 Kings 13.1–2). Josiah's presence in Bethel, north of his political border, indicates that he extended his authority into the former territory of Israel that Assyria had turned into a province, and that Assyrian authority in territories of the former Northern Kingdom had declined considerably. After 629 BCE Assyria's heartland was threatened by a newly powerful Babylonia from the south and by Medes descending from the Persian plateau from the northeast. Some therefore suggest that Josiah's reforms were both political and religious in nature.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b This verse may be understood in connection with vv. 21–23.

c-c Heb. “from entering.”

d-d Heb. “ran from there.” Emendation yields “smashed them there.”

e-e Heb. har ha-mashhith: a derogatory play on har ha-mishhah (“Mount of Ointment”); Mishnah Middoth 2.4. f Cf. 1 Kings 11.5, 7.

g Cf. 1 Kings 13.2–3. h See 1 Kings 13.31–32 and note i below.

i The prophet lived in Bethel, which, in Josiah's time, was part of the Assyrian province of Samaria.

¹⁹Josiah also abolished all the cult places in the towns of Samaria, which the kings of Israel had built, vexing [the LORD]. He dealt with them just as he had done to Bethel: ²⁰He slew on the altars all the priests of the shrines who were there, and he burned human bones on them. Then he returned to Jerusalem.

²¹The king commanded all the people, "Offer the passover sacrifice to the LORD your God as prescribed in this scroll of the covenant." ²²Now the passover sacrifice had not been offered in that manner in the days of the chieftains who ruled Israel, or during the days of the kings of Israel and the kings of Judah. ²³Only in the eighteenth year of King Josiah was such a passover sacrifice offered in that manner to the LORD in Jerusalem. ²⁴Josiah also did away with "the necromancers and the mediums," the idols and the fetishes—all the detestable things that were to be seen in the land of Judah and Jerusalem. Thus he fulfilled the terms of the Teaching recorded in the scroll that the priest Hilkiah had found in the House of the LORD. ²⁵There was no king like him before who turned back to the LORD with all his heart and soul and might, in full accord with the Teaching of Moses; nor did any like him arise after him.

²⁶However, the LORD did not turn away from His awesome wrath which had blazed up against Judah because of all the things Manasseh did to vex Him. ²⁷The LORD said, "I will also banish Judah from My presence as I banished Israel; and I will reject the city of Jerusalem which I chose and the House where I said My name would abide."

²⁸The other events of Josiah's reign, and all his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ²⁹In his days, Pharaoh Neco, king of Egypt, marched against the king of Assyria^b to the River Euphrates; King Josiah marched toward him, but when he confronted him at Megiddo, [Pharaoh Neco] slew him. ³⁰His servants conveyed a-a Lit. "the ghosts and the familiar spirits."

b I.e., the Chaldean Empire; cf. Isa. 52.4 and note.

19–20: Josiah's drive north reaches the towns of Samaria where Assyrians had settled exiles from Syria and Babylonia (17.24). The author's silence about the campaigns themselves indicates that they were successful and that he considered them legitimate. Josiah was acting like a Davidic monarch prior to the formation of the breakaway northern confederacy.

20: Priests who served at northern shrines are killed, unlike those who served at southern ones (cf. vv. 8–9). The northern priests may have been descendants of the non-Levitical priests appointed by Jeroboam I (1 Kings 12.31). 21–23: The celebration of Passover in Jerusalem exclusively in accord with the prescription of Deut. 16.5 as understood by the author is possible only because no legitimate clergy and no purified shrine exist anywhere between the cities of Samaria and Beer-sheba except at Jerusalem. 22: The author may mean that the last such Passover was celebrated in the days before the chieftains/judges, since Judg. 2.7 depicts that period as beginning a time when God was not worshipped properly. Radak considers the point of the author's comment to be that not since the time of the chieftains, among whom he includes Samuel, had the tribes been so dedicated to the LORD (1 Sam. 7.2), rid themselves of idolatrous practices, and served the LORD (1 Sam. 7.4). The Passover celebration of Hezekiah described in 2 Chron. 30.12–27 was not attended by all tribes (2 Chron. 30.10). 24: This continues the list of Josiah's campaign against illegitimate personnel and activities from v. 20. Necromancers . . . mediums, see Deut. 18.9–14, which formulates compactly legislation found also in Lev. 19.26, 31; 20.27.

23.26–27: The inevitability of the end. This remark qualifies the high praise lavished on Josiah in the author's evaluation of v. 25. All of his accomplishments were of no avail to his kingdom. A later writer, someone other than the author, focuses the reader's attention back to Huldah's declaration (22.17–20) about the inevitability of Judah's end and introduces the twilight of Judah's history. Proper punishment for Manasseh's sins may be delayed (see Exod. 20.5 n.), but not postponed.

23.28–30: The death of Josiah.

29: It is uncertain why Josiah confronted Neco at Megiddo. Nineveh had fallen in 612 BCE to Babylonia, but Assyrians were still fighting in northwest Assyria. Some historians speculate on the basis of 2 Chron. 35.20–24 and a cuneiform document, the Babylonian Chronicle, that Neco was actually moving north to support Assyrian forces against Babylonia and that Josiah acted as part of a Babylonian strategy that would have helped him his body in a chariot from Megiddo to Jerusalem, and they buried him in his tomb. Then the people of the land took Jehoahaz; they anointed him and made him king in place of his father.

³¹ Jehoahaz was twenty-three years old when he became king, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem; his mother's name was Hamutal daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah. ³² He did what was displeasing to the LORD, just as his fathers had done. ³³ Pharaoh Neco imprisoned him in Riblah in the region of Hamath, to keep him from reigning in Jerusalem. And he imposed on the land an indemnity of one hundred talents of silver and a talent of gold. ³⁴ Then Pharaoh Neco appointed Eliakim son of Josiah king in place of his father Josiah, changing his name to Jehoiakim. He took Jehoahaz and ^abrought him^a to Egypt, where he died. ³⁵ Jehoikim gave Pharaoh the silver and the gold, and he made an assessment on the land to pay the money demanded by Pharaoh. He exacted from the people of the land the silver and gold to be paid Pharaoh Neco, according to each man's assessment.

³⁶ Jehoikim was twenty-five years old when he became king, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem; his mother's name was Zebudah daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah. ³⁷ He did what was displeasing to the LORD, just as his ancestors had done.

24 In his days, King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon came up, and Jehoiakim became his vassal for three years. Then he turned and rebelled against him. ² The LORD let loose against him the raiding bands of the Chaldeans, Arameans, Moabites, and Ammonites; He let them loose against Judah to destroy it, in accordance with the word that the LORD had spoken through His servants the prophets. ³ All this befell Judah at the command of the LORD, who banished [them] from His presence because of all the sins that Manasseh had committed, ⁴ and also because of the a-a So 2 Chron. 36.4; Heb. here "he came."

maintain control over his enlarged kingdom. For the author, this death made no sense and remained unexplained. A later generation told the story in a way that provided some theological justification for Josiah's death: He was interfering with a divinely ordained plan (2 Chron. 35.20-27). 30: The people of the land again assure a smooth transition to a legiti-mate descendant in a period of uncertainty. Cf. 11.14; 14.21-22; 21.24. They decide, however, to skip Josiah's oldest son in favor of a brother at least two years younger (compare the ages at accession in vv. 31, 36).

23.31-33: The brief reign of Jehoahaz son of Josiah. Jeremiah refers to him by the name of Shallum

(Jer. 22.11), so Jehoahaz must be a throne name. 33: Jehoahaz traveled to Riblah in northern Syria, most likely to submit formally to Neco as a vassal. Neco arrested him, had him taken to Egypt as a royal hostage, and imposed tribute on Judah. Jehoahaz and the people of the land may have been too closely identified with Josiah's expansionist ambitions for Neco's comfort.

23.34-24.7: Jehoiakim's reign and the collapse of Judah. Jehoiakim's foreign policy assumed that Egypt could be the instrument through which Judah might regain its former glory. 23.34-35: Eliakim was placed on the throne by Neco, not the people of the land, and provided by the Egyptian with the throne name Jehoiakim. Cf. also 24.17. Eliakim fulfilled his fiscal obligation to Neco, delivering the tribute. 24.1: According to the Babylonian Chronicle, Babylonians under Nebuchadnezzar defeated Neco's Egyptian forces in Syria in 605 BCE (cf. Jer. 46.1-2). Nebuchadnezzar's first move against Jerusalem would have happened around the same time (cf. Dan. 1.1), and Jehoiakim became a vassal of Babylonia around 604/3. 2: Events encouraging rebellion may have developed in 601 after Nebuchadnezzar, unable to conquer Egypt in earlier campaigns, was subsequently forced by local conditions to remain in Babylonia in 600. Jer. 26.22 indicates that Jehoiakim colluded with Egypt and, expecting Egyptian support, may have rebelled. The author's mention that the attacks of Chaldeans, Arameans, Moabites, and Ammonites came in fulfillment of words spoken through his servants the prophets is problematic. No such predictions are extant. 3-7: The author interprets the political reduction of Judah as the consequence of people reading political maps incompetently as well as the result of God's will after Manasseh's sins.

blood of the innocent that he shed. For he filled Jerusalem with the blood of the innocent, and the LORD would not forgive.

⁵The other events of Jehoiakim's reign, and all of his actions, are recorded in the Annals of the Kings of Judah. ⁶Jehoiakim slept with his fathers, and his son Jehoiachin succeeded him as king. ⁷The king of Egypt did not venture out of his country again, for the king of Babylon had seized all the land that had belonged to the king of Egypt, from the Wadi of Egypt to the River Euphrates.

⁸Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he became king, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem; his mother's name was Nehushta daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem. ⁹He did what was displeasing to the LORD, just as his father had done. ¹⁰At that time, the troops^a of King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon marched against Jerusalem, and the city came under siege. ¹¹King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon advanced against the city while his troops were besieging it. ¹²Thereupon King Jehoiachin of Judah, along with his mother, and his courtiers, commanders, and officers, surrendered to the king of Babylon. The king of Babylon took him captive in the eighth year of his reign. ¹³He

5: Annals of the Kings of Judah: This last reference to this source in Kings raises the question of what sources were used by the author for descriptions of the final years of Judah. 7: The author notes that the Babylonians controlled the area that had once comprised the Davidic-Solomonic empire.

24.8-17: Jehoiachin assumed the throne as the Babylonians were positioning themselves to destroy Jerusalem, all that was effectively left of Judah. His surrender in 597 BCE saved the city and led to the first exile from Judah. (The Babylonian Chronicle refers to it as the city of Judah.) 12-16: The objective of the exile was to demilitarize, not punish, Judah by removing the court, high officials, administrators, military officials, and professional soldiers, as well as craftsmen who could manufacture new arms. Unlike the Assyrians, who dispersed populations, the Babylonians allowed them to resettle in exile as organic commu-

^a Heb. "servants."

Babylonia and Judah ca. 600 BCE

carried off ^afrom Jerusalem ^a all the treasures of the House of the LORD and the treasures of the royal palace; he stripped off all the golden decorations in the Temple of the LORD—which King Solomon of Israel had made—as the LORD had warned. ¹⁴He exiled all of Jerusalem: all the commanders and all the warriors—ten thousand exiles—as well as all the craftsmen and smiths; only the poorest people in the land were left. ¹⁵He deported Jehoiachin to Babylon; and the king's wives and officers and the notables of the land were brought as exiles from Jerusalem to Babylon. ¹⁶All the able men, to the number of seven thousand—all of them warriors, trained for battle—and a thousand craftsmen and smiths were brought to Babylon as exiles by the king of Babylon. ¹⁷And the king of Babylon appointed Mattaniah, Jehoiachin's ^buncle, king in his place, changing his name to Zedekiah.

¹⁸ ^cZedekiah was twenty-one years old when he became king, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem; his mother's name was Hamutal daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah. ¹⁹He did what was displeasing to the LORD, just as Jehoiakim had done. ²⁰Indeed, Jerusalem and Judah ^dwere a cause of anger for the LORD, so that ^dHe cast them out of His presence.

25 Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon. ¹And in the ninth year of his ^ereign, on the tenth day of the tenth month, Nebuchadnezzar moved against Jerusalem with his whole army. He besieged it; and they built towers against it all around. ²The city continued in a state of siege until the eleventh year of King Zedekiah. ³By the ninth day [of the fourth month]^f the famine had become acute in the city; there was no food left for the common people.

⁴Then [the wall of] the city was breached. All the soldiers [left the city] by night through the gate between the double walls, which is near the king's garden—the Chaldeans were all around the city; and [the king] set out for the Arabah.^g ⁵But the Chaldean troops pursued the king, and they overtook him in the steppes of Jericho as his entire force left him and scattered. ⁶They captured the king and brought him before the king of Babylon at Riblah; and they put him on trial. ⁷They slaughtered Zedekiah's sons before his eyes; then Zedekiah's eyes were put out. He was chained in bronze fetters and he was brought to Babylon.

nities. The extent of the exile is probably exaggerated here; had all of these people been exiled, Judea could not have had the manpower to rebel against the Babylonians again a decade later. 17: Mattaniah, provided with a throne name by Nebuchadnezzar, was the full brother of Jehoahaz (23.31) and the third son of Josiah to rule Judah.

24.18–25.21: The reign of Zedekiah (597–586 BCE) and destruction of the Temple. Much of this material is paralleled in Jer. 39.1–4, Jer. ch 52, and 2 Chron. ch 36. The writer's interest in this king concerns his international politics, not his religious policies.

24.19–20: The writer again provides a negative assessment and comment, preparing readers for the inevitable (cf. 24.3–7). Zedekiah's acts are likened to those of his half-brother Jehoiakim (23.36). The writer skips over the first nine years of the reign to what interests him. On the basis of remarks in Jeremiah and Ezekiel, it is apparent that Zedekiah joined a coalition that included coastal Phoenicians and Transjordanian kingdoms in planning a revolt. Nebuchadnezzar managed to abort it, but then, in 589/8, set out to punish Zedekiah. V. 20, though unclear, is a refrain, echoing v. 3. 25.1–3: The siege of Jerusalem lasted 17 months. Ultimately, starvation led to the fall of the city.

Jer. 34.7 indicates that a few other cities that might have supported Jerusalem were also besieged. 3–4: The walls of the city, most likely in the northwest, were breached on the ninth of the month of Tamuz, the fourth month (v. 4 and see Jer. 39.2–4; 52.6). Jewish tradition observes the seventeenth of Tamuz as a fast day marking the breaching of the walls. The difference between the day of the breach and the fast is explained by claiming that it was only on the seventeenth that the Babylonians exploited the breach to enter the city. Events narrated in vv. 4–5 occupied them during the intervening days. The fast of the fourth month was known as an old observance a-a Heb. "from there." b Heb. "his."

c For the rest of this book cf. Jer. 39 and 52. d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e I.e., Zedekiah's. f Cf. Jer. 52.6. g Hoping to escape across the Jordan.

⁸On the seventh day of the fifth month—that was the nineteenth year of King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon—Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, an officer of the king of Babylon, came to Jerusalem. ⁹He burned the House of the LORD, the king's palace, and all the houses of Jerusalem; he burned down the house of every notable person. ¹⁰The entire Chaldean force that was with the chief of the guard tore down the walls of Jerusalem on every side. ¹¹The remnant of the people that was left in the city, the defectors who had gone over to the king of Babylon—and the remnant of the population—were taken into exile by Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards. ¹²But some of the poorest in the land were left by the chief of the guards, to be vinedressers and field hands.

¹³The Chaldeans broke up the bronze columns of the House of the LORD, the stands, and the bronze tank that was in the House of the LORD; and they carried the bronze away to Babylon. ¹⁴They also took all the pails, scrapers, snuffers, ladles, and all the other bronze vessels used in the service. ¹⁵The chief of the guards took whatever was of gold and whatever was of silver: firepans and sprinkling bowls. ¹⁶The two columns, the one tank, and the stands that Solomon provided for the House of the LORD—all these objects contained bronze beyond weighing. ¹⁷The one column was eighteen cubits high. It had a bronze capital above it; the height of the capital was three cubits, and there was a meshwork [decorated] with pomegranates about the capital, all made of bronze. And the like was true of the other column with its meshwork.

¹⁸The chief of the guards also took Seraiah, the chief priest, Zephaniah, the deputy priest, and the three guardians of the threshold. ¹⁹And from the city he took a eunuch who was in command of the soldiers; five royal privy councillors who were present in the city; the scribe of the army commander, who was in charge of mustering the people of the land; and sixty of the common people who were inside the city. ²⁰Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, took them and brought them to the king of Babylon at Riblah. ²¹The king of Babylon had them struck down and put to death at Riblah, in the region of Hamath.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

two generations after the Temple's destruction (Zech. 7.3; 8.19). 9: Babylonians only gained access to the old part of Jerusalem where the Temple stood in the fifth month, the month of Av, 586 BCE. The Temple, palaces, and a large part of the city were set ablaze on the seventh day of the month, corresponding to August 16, 586. Ac-

ording to Jer. 52.12, they were burnt on the tenth of Av. In the talmudic tractate Ta'anit that deals with fasts, the dates were reconciled by explaining that on the seventh, the Babylonians gained access to the Temple, but they only set it afire late on the ninth, just before nightfall, and it burned through the tenth. Jewish tradition and contemporary practice maintains the ninth of Av as a 25-hour fast day commemorating the destruction of both the First Temple by the Babylonians and the Second Temple by the Romans. The fast itself was established early and is mentioned by Zechariah, a prophet who spoke about 60 years after the destruction, referring to the "fast of the fifth month" (Zech. 7.3; 8.19).

11–12: A second group was taken into exile (see 24.12–16). This one consisted of Jerusalemites who had not fled, people who had defected to the Babylonians during the course of the siege, and a third group not clearly identifiable. Archeological evidence, however, as well as evidence from Ezra, which depicts significant antagonism between the Judeans who were exiled and those who remained behind in Judah, suggests that the exiles were not as extensive as these verses suggest.

18–21: All official perpetrators of the ill-conceived revolt and resistance were executed.

25.22–26: The first appendix. The last administrative overseer of the people of Judah in the land was Gedaliah. His grandfather had been a high official in Josiah's cabinet (22.3), while his father had been in Josiah's court (22.12) and Jehoia-kim's and had supported Jeremiah in counseling nonresistance to the Babylonians (Jer. 26.24). This was the same counsel he provided refuge bands of fighters and their leaders (v. 24). The writer of this appendix simply reported events without commenting on their meaning. 23: Mizpah, the contemporary Tel en-Nasbeh, north of Jerusalem on the north-south highway, became the new administra-

Thus Judah was exiled from its land. ²²King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon put Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan in charge of the people whom he left in the land of Judah. ²³When the officers of the troops and their men heard that the king of Babylon had put Gedaliah in charge, they came to Gedaliah at Mizpah with Ishmael son of Nethaniah, Johanan son of Kareah, Seraiah son of Tanhumeth the Netophathite, and Jaazaniah son of the Maachite, together with their men. ²⁴Gedaliah reassured^a them and their men, saying, "Do not be afraid ^bof the servants of the Chaldeans.^b Stay in the land and serve the king of Babylon, and it will go well with you."

²⁵In the seventh month, Ishmael son of Nethaniah son of Elishama, who was of royal descent, came with ten men, and they struck down Gedaliah and he died; [they also killed] the Judeans and the Chaldeans who were present with him at Mizpah. ²⁶And all the people, young and old, and the officers of the troops set out and went to Egypt because they were afraid of the Chaldeans.

²⁷In the thirty-seventh year of the exile of King Jehoiachin of Judah, on the twenty-seventh day of the twelfth month, King Evil-merodach of Babylon, in the year he became king, ^ctook note of^c King Jehoiachin of Judah and released him from prison. ²⁸He spoke kindly to him, and gave him a throne above those of other kings who were with him in Babylon. ²⁹His prison garments were removed, and [Jehoiachin] received regular rations by his favor for the rest of his life. ³⁰A regular allotment of food was given him at the instance of the king—an allotment for each day—all the days of his life.

tive center (see 1 Kings 15.22). This is, ironically, the home territory of the House of Saul. The end of the monarchy is located near its beginning. 25: The reasons for his assassination are not given in Kings. They were irrelevant to the work of the author. Jer. 40.13–41.18 makes clear that the assassin, Ishmael, was sent by Baalis, king of Ammon. Ishmael, of royal descent and dissatisfied over the Babylonian appointment of a non-Davidic ruler, may have formed a pact with Baalis, who was still fighting the Babylonians, that would have helped him to achieve rule over whatever remained of Judah. The seventh month is Tishri. The death of Gedaliah came to be seen as the final blow and the end of the commonwealth. It is marked by Jewish tradition as a fast on the day following Rosh Ha-Shanah (New Year). It is most likely the "fast of the seventh month" referred to in Zech. 7.5; 8.19.

25.27–30: The second appendix. Jehoiachin, son of Josiah, safe in exile since 597 BCE, was elevated in status by Evil-merodach, the son of Nebuchadnezzar who reigned 562–560 BCE. 28: Spoke kindly: The Heb translates a technical expression in Babylonian that means to "reach an agreement, conclude a negotiation." The narrative refers to a legal grant recognizing a change in status that had far-reaching implications for Jehoiachin and the exiles. 30: Lack of any death notice may suggest that this final note was appended before the death of Jehoiachin. The book appears to end with a glimmer of hope for the continuation of the Davidic dynasty. The detail is reported matter-of-factly, without comment. The author, perhaps living too close to the event itself, had no way of determining what significance, if any, it had.

a Lit. "took an oath to them."

b-b Jer. 40.9 reads "to serve the Chaldeans."

c-c Lit. "raised the head of."

Isaiah

ISAIAH IS PERHAPS THE BEST-LOVED of the prophetic books. It is cited more than any other prophetic text in rabbinic literature, and more haftarot are taken from Isaiah than from any other prophetic book. (Haftarot are the prophetic readings chanted in synagogue on the Sabbath, holidays, and fast days.) In Ashkenazic practice outside the land of Israel, nineteen haftarot are from Isaiah (twenty, if one follows Reform practice by assigning Isaiah 60.1–22 as the haftarah for Yom Ha-‘atzma’ut [Israeli Independence Day] in the Diaspora); by contrast, only nine are from Jeremiah and ten from Ezekiel. Second place goes to the books of Kings, which contributes sixteen haftarot. Isaiah is a major source of prooftexts for some of Judaism’s main tenets, such as messianism, the centrality of Jerusalem, and economic and social justice. Not only rabbinic Judaism but also Christianity and Western culture have emphasized the book of Isaiah. First-time readers of Isaiah are often surprised to find that a well-known expression, a famous quotation, or even a favorite song comes from or is based on Isaiah. See, for example, 2.2–4; 6.3; 9.1; 9.5; 11.6–9; 12.3; 22.13; 32.17; 35.10; 40.1; 40.3; 52.2; 53.1–13; 56.7; 60.1; 62.5; 62.6; 66.10. (Some of these verses will be more familiar to people who attend synagogue, some to people who attend Sabbath meals, some to people who attend performances of Handel’s Messiah.)

Most of the texts in this book are poetry, often of a highly complex and elusive sort. It is sometimes not clear where a particular prophecy begins and ends, and, especially in the first half of the book, one can sometimes debate whether a passage intends to comfort or castigate the nation. In many cases, verb forms are ambiguous, and we cannot be sure whether the passage predicts crucial events that will take place in the future or meditates on events that have already come to pass. As a result of all this, one cannot read quickly through Isaiah the way one might read a biblical book that tells a story, or even a book whose poems or sermons are demarcated in a fairly clear manner (such as the book of Psalms or Jeremiah). A reader will need to read slowly, and as a rule it will be necessary to read a text several times before one can even begin to understand it. It will probably not be helpful to read the whole book from beginning to end the way one reads, say, a novel. Rather, it is best to approach the book as a collection of texts or an anthology, in which each passage demands careful attention, thinking, rereading, and contemplation. Keeping in mind the historical setting of each prophecy will also aid the reader greatly.

The book of Isaiah is one of the most complex prophetic books. It contains at least two distinct sections, dating from two entirely different eras. Chs 1–39 are, in large part, the product of a prophet who lived in Jerusalem during the 8th century BCE. As early as the Middle Ages, however, the great rabbinic commentator Abraham Ibn Ezra recognized that chs 40 and following reflect another setting altogether, which he identified as the Babylonian exile of the 6th century. Similarly, Shadal (Samuel David Luzzato, a rabbinic exegete who lived during the 19th century) maintained that chs 40–66 were addressed to the Judean exiles in Babylonia and were not published until some time after 586 BCE (though Shadal still claimed that the 8th-century Isaiah had written them). All modern scholars share a perspective similar to Ibn Ezra's and believe that chs 40–66 (and also 34–35) were composed during and after the Babylonian exile in the 6th century. It will be necessary to address chs 1–39 and 40–66 separately in the introductory comments below.

Isaiah 1–39

THE PROPHET ISAIAH, the son of Amoz, lived in Jerusalem during the last half of the 8th century BCE. His prophecies are deeply rooted in his time and place, and many of them address current events of his day. Unfortunately, only rarely does he tell us what these events are (his audience, of course, would have known immediately, since they were living through them as well). As a result, scholars frequently need to reconstruct the political or historical settings of his prophecies. It will be helpful to review some major events of Isaiah's time, since these serve as the backdrop to his prophecies. During the 8th century, the Assyrian empire (located in what we know today as northern Iraq and southeastern Turkey) began to grow in power and influence. It put more and more pressure on the small kingdoms along the eastern coast of the Mediterranean Sea, including Judah and Israel. These countries sometimes accepted Assyria as their overlord, paying the Assyrian king tribute and relying on him for defense. At other times, these nations attempted to revolt against Assyria, often relying on Egypt as an ally. Usually, these revolts ended disastrously. In fact, the Northern Kingdom of Israel was destroyed by the Assyrians after one such revolt in 722 BCE, and much of its population was deported. For Isaiah, the rise of Assyria presented a pressing religious question: To what extent should the Judeans attempt to confront their enemies using the usual military and diplomatic means (which entailed entering into alliances with other nations), and to what extent should the Judeans stay free of alliances and rely solely on God to protect them? Unlike most of his contemporaries, Isaiah strongly preferred the latter option. A second major trend in Isaiah's day was the growth of large estates owned by aristocrats and the consequent impoverishment of the peasantry. Isaiah, like his contemporaries Micah and Amos, spoke out strongly against the accumulation of great wealth and the haughtiness of the rich.

Several main themes emerge from Isaiah's prophecies. Isaiah believed that Jerusalem, the holy city, would never fall to Judah's enemies. He emphasized social and economic justice. He referred repeatedly to the remnant of Israel, who would survive an enormous catastrophe that God would send to punish the nation for its lack of faith and hypocrisy.

This remnant would serve as the kernel from which a purified Israel would be renewed. (By definition, Jerusalem would be part of the remnant, since it would never fall.) He anticipated the dawn of a new era in which all nations would recognize the one true God. Each nation would be satisfied with its own land and would not covet other lands. Consequently empires—and warfare—would exist no more. During this new era the Judean king, a descendant of David, would rule all Israel in perfect justice. (From this set of ideas, later Judaism would construct the idea of the Messiah and the messianic era, though Isaiah never calls him Messiah.) Common to all these ideas is Isaiah's stress that only God can be great; all other haughty things (whether rich people, large empires, or high mountains) would be reduced to their proper place at the end of days. All sin, for Isaiah, stems from the failure to recognize that God alone can be exalted. Isaiah's prophecies are remarkable for their fairly consistent lack of oracles of vengeance against Judah's enemies. Assyria and Egypt would be punished in the future for their haughtiness and idolatry, but not for their treatment of Israel and Judah. After all, it was God who sent them to attack Israel and Judah in the first place. Once they had been taken to account for their haughtiness, they would be restored and live in peace, recognizing the one true God. Thus their fate, for worse and then for better, is identical to that of Israel.

Many modern scholars believe that large sections of Isaiah chs 1–33 were written by additional prophets and scribes who lived later than the historical Isaiah—that is, later than the 8th century. Others, including many leading Jewish biblical critics, attribute most or all of these chs to Isaiah himself. The annotations treat this material as largely dating to the 8th century, with a few possible exceptions (in particular, chs 13, 24–27, and 30.18–26). Chs 34–35 belong to the same time period as chs 40–66. Chs 36–39 narrate certain events in which Isaiah played an important role. They were not written by Isaiah but are taken, in a modified form, from the book of Kings.

Isaiah chs 1–39 contains the following subsections: Ch 1: Introductory prophecy, covering Isaiah's main themes. Chs 2–12: Prophecies concerning Judah and Jerusalem. Chs 13–23: Prophecies concerning many nations, including Judah but focusing on foreign peoples. Chs 24–27: Prophecies concerning the end of days, in an apocalyptic style. Chs 28–33: Prophecies concerning the end of days. Chs 34–35: Redemption for Judah. Chs 36–39: Narratives concerning the Assyrian invasion of Judah in 701 BCE and Isaiah's role in the events of that time. The book does not follow a chronological order; the same event is often treated in many different chs at a wide remove from one another.

Isaiah 40–66

THESE CHS, ALONG WITH CHS 34–35, were composed at the end of the Babylonian exile and during the early postexilic period. Because the name of this prophet is unknown, scholars refer to him (or perhaps her; women served as prophets in ancient Israel, as the examples of Miriam [Exod. 15.20], Deborah [Judg. 4.4–10; 5.1], and Huldah [2 Kings 22.14] show) as Deutero-Isaiah or Second Isaiah. This prophet lived in Babylonia a generation after the Babylonian empire destroyed the Judean state and sent much of its population into exile. Deutero-Isaiah promised the Judean exiles that the Persians would allow them to return to their homeland and to rebuild their Temple there. Deutero-Isaiah anticipated the victory of the Persian king, Cyrus, over the Babylonian empire. From ch 49 on, the prophet seems to be living in the land of Israel; it is likely that Deutero-Isaiah moved there as soon as the Persians allowed Judean exiles to do so after Cyrus took control of Babylonia. Many scholars believe that chs 56–66 or (more likely) 54–66 were written by yet another prophet, or perhaps a group of prophets, whom they call Trito-Isaiah or Third Isaiah. According to these scholars, Trito-Isaiah was a disciple of Deutero-Isaiah, and in many respects these prophecies resemble those in chs 40–53. These prophecies are set in the land of Israel shortly after the end of the exile, and they often display a sense of disappointment or frustration with the realities of the restoration, rather than the exuberant hope that marks the prophecies in chs 40–53. It is impossible to be sure whether chs 54–66 were written by Deutero-Isaiah, a disciple, or a group of disciples, but it seems clear that chs 34–35 and 40–66 as a whole are a single literary unit: They share many features of poetic style and theological outlook. Because we can analyze them as a block, it will be simplest to refer to their anonymous author or authors as Deutero-Isaiah.

Chs 34–35 and 40–66 are first and foremost persuasive in character. Addressed to a despondent exilic and postexilic audience who have experienced a catastrophe, they attempt to convince the Judeans that the God of Israel is still powerful and still loyal to the people Israel. Deutero-Isaiah (that is, the author or authors of chs 34–35 and 40–66) proclaims in an especially insistent manner that only one God exists; this deity alone created the world and brings redemption. Alone among biblical texts, the author refers to God using not only masculine metaphors but feminine ones as well (see 42.13–14; 45.10; 49.14–15; 66.13). Deutero-Isaiah is an allusive poet: In every single chapter of this work, save ch 34, the prophet borrows vocabulary from earlier biblical texts and reworks it in a very intricate manner, using complex and delightful wordplays, repeating similar-sounding words, or employing alliteration. (This feature, of course, is lost in translation.) Like Isaiah, Deutero-Isaiah looks forward to the dawn of a new era, but one no longer senses any expectation that a descendant of King David (or any other human being, for that matter) will reign as king in the rebuilt Jerusalem. Rather, God alone will rule over all creation in that day. Thus Deutero-Isaiah believes in a messianic era, but not in a personal Messiah. Initially, Deutero-Isaiah predicted that the return to Zion at the time of the Persian king Cyrus would usher in the renewal of the Judean commonwealth, the era of peace among all nations, and the end of paganism the world over. In fact, the restoration did not have these far-reaching effects: Judah became not an independent kingdom directly ruled by God but a poor and insignificant province of Persia; relatively few exiles availed themselves of the opportunity to return to Zion; and the world as a whole remained unchanged. Still, Deutero-Isaiah continued to predict in chs 49 and following that a larger-scale ingathering of exiles would occur and that the new world order would eventually materialize.

These chs contain the following subsections: Chs 40–48: Prophecies delivered to the exiles in Babylonia, predicting the restoration of Zion and the downfall of Babylon; the tone of these is excited and hopeful. Chs 49–57: Prophecies concerning Zion and the renewal of the community there. Their tone remains hopeful, but some disappointment becomes evident. Chs 58–66 and 34–35: Further prophecies concerning the coming of a new age, expressed with a greater sense of frustration at the failure of the earlier prophecies to materialize but with enduring hope in the older predictions (see, e.g., chs 60–62), and also with a notable emphasis on the distinction between faithful Judeans and impious or corrupt ones.

It is not clear to us when, or why, the prophecies of Deutero-Isaiah were combined with those of Isaiah son of Amoz. The strong emphasis in both literary corpora on God's universal kingship, the messianic era, and the future exaltation of Zion may have suggested that these texts belonged together. Already at the beginning of the 2nd century BCE, the Jewish sage Ben Sirach (whose writings are preserved in the Apocrypha, but not in the Jewish Bible) knew a version of the book of Isaiah that combined both blocks of material (see Sirach [Ecclesiasticus] 48.20, 24–25). The great scroll of Isaiah from the Dead Sea Scrolls (dating to the late 2nd century BCE) also contains the entire book of Isaiah as we know it today.

[BENJAMIN D. SOMMER]

1 The prophecies of Isaiah son of Amoz, who prophesied concerning Judah and Jerusalem in the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah.

2 Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth,
For the LORD has spoken:
"I reared children and brought them up—
And they have rebelled against Me!"

3 An ox knows its owner,
An ass its master's crib:
Israel does not know,
My people takes no thought."

4 Ah, sinful nation!
People laden with iniquity!
Brood of evildoers!
Depraved children!
They have forsaken the LORD,
Spurned the Holy One of Israel,
Turned their backs [on Him].

5 Why do you seek further beatings,
That you continue to offend?
Every head is ailing,
And every heart is sick.

6 From head to foot

1.1: Superscription. Like most prophetic books, this one begins with a title written by an editor indicating the author and the time during which the author works; cf. Jer. 1.1–3, Hos. 1.1, Amos 1.1, Mic. 1.1. Isaiah prophesied between about 740 and 700 BCE.

1.2–31: A poem of indictment and hope. Some view this ch as a single speech that is especially comprehensive in subject matter and biting in tone. Alternatively, it may be a summary of the contents of the book as a whole, written specifically to be an introduction, probably to chs 1–33, but perhaps to the final form of the book (cf. 1.28–31 with 66.24). Much of this chapter (vv. 1–27) is read as the haftarah, or prophetic reading, on the Sabbath preceding Tish'ah be'av, which commemorates the destruction of the Temple. This section is thus seen as offering the theological justification for that event.

1.2–20: The indictment: complaint, threats, call for repentance. This section is framed by the words, "For the LORD has spoken," which appear in vv. 2 and

No spot is sound:
 All bruises, and welts,
 And festering sores—
 Not pressed out, not bound up,
 Not softened with oil.
 7 Your land is a waste,
 Your cities burnt down;
 Before your eyes, the yield of your soil
 Is consumed by strangers—
 A wasteland ^aas overthrown by strangers!^a 8 Fair^b Zion is left
 Like a booth in a vineyard,
 Like a hut in a cucumber field,
 Like a city beleaguered.
 9 Had not the LORD of Hosts
 Left us some survivors,
 We should be like Sodom,
 Another Gomorrah.

10 Hear the word of the LORD,
 You chieftains of Sodom;
 Give ear to our God's instruction,
 You folk of Gomorrah!
 11 "What need have I of all your sacrifices?"
 Says the LORD.
 "I am sated with burnt offerings of rams,
 And suet of fatlings,
 And blood of bulls;
 And I have no delight
 In lambs and he-goats.
 12 That you come to appear before Me—
 Who asked that ^cof you?
 Trample My courts¹³ no more;
 Bringing oblations is futile,^c
 Incense is offensive to Me.
 New moon and sabbath,
 Proclaiming of solemnities,
^dAssemblies with iniquity;^d
 I cannot abide.
 14 Your new moons and fixed seasons
 Fill Me with loathing;
 They are become a burden to Me,
 I cannot endure them.
 15 And when you lift up your hands,

(with a slight variation) 20. Such framing devices often indicate the extent of a literary unit in biblical literature. 2–4: The poem consists of a legal complaint concerning covenant violation by the Israelites, who are depicted as ungrateful and also less intelligent than farm animals. In ancient Israelite thinking, heaven and earth serve as witnesses to the covenant between God and Israel (see Deut. 4:26; 32:1); hence God calls on them to hear the charges against Israel. 5–9: A metaphorical description of Israel's punishment (vv. 5–6) leads to a more specific description (vv. 7–8): Judah will be invaded and Jerusalem put under siege (indeed, Assyrians devastated Judah and surrounded Jerusalem in 701; see introductory annotations to chs 36–37 and to ch 29). The phrasing in v. 7 borrows quite precisely from the rhetoric of the Assyrian kings who invaded Judah, which is known from Akkadian documents. 8–9: Zion's inviolability. Here this topic, which will play a large role in chs 1–39, is introduced: Though Judah will be devastated and Jerusalem (also known as Zion) threatened, the city will never fall, according to Isaiah. The same idea also appears in several of the Psalms (e.g., 46, 48, 87). Jeremiah, who lived in a later period, objected to this idea (see, e.g., Jer. 7.1–20). Later biblical and Jewish writers respond in various ways to the failure of Isaiah's prophecies regarding Jerusalem's eternal status. 10–20: Rite and right. The sacrifices and prayers offered by Isaiah's contemporaries are useless because they are not accompanied by ethical action. This is a frequent prophetic theme; see esp. Amos 5.21–25; Isa. 58.1–9. 10–15: God's attitude toward ritual. According to the translation of vv. 12–13 above, God rejects sacrifice altogether; but according to the alternative in the translators' note, God rejects only the vain rituals of unethical people. Both renderings are linguistically defensible; rabbinic commentators prefer the latter (cf. Prov. 21.27). 10: Sodom . . . Gomorrah: Isaiah a-a Emendation yields "like Sodom overthrown." b Lit. "Daughter."

 c-c Others "To trample My courts? / ¹³Bring no more vain oblations."
 d-d Septuagint "Fast and assembly"; cf. Joel 1.14.

- I will turn My eyes away from you;
 Though you pray at length,
 I will not listen.
 Your hands are stained with crime—
 16 Wash yourselves clean;
 Put your evil doings
 Away from My sight.
 Cease to do evil;
 17 Learn to do good.
 Devote yourselves to justice;
^a“Aid the wronged.”
 Uphold the rights of the orphan;
 Defend the cause of the widow.
- 18 “Come, ^alet us reach an understanding,[”] ^a
 —says the LORD.
 “Be your sins like crimson,
 They can turn snow-white;
 Be they red as dyed wool,
 They can become like fleece.”
 19 If, then, you agree and give heed,
 You will eat the good things of the earth;
 20 But if you refuse and disobey,
^bYou will be devoured [by] the sword.^b—
 For it was the LORD who spoke.
- 21 Alas, she has become a harlot,
 The faithful city
 That was filled with justice,
 Where righteousness dwelt—
 But now murderers.
 22 Your ^c silver has turned to dross;
^aYour wine is cut with water.^a
 23 Your rulers are rogues
 And cronies of thieves,
 Every one avid for presents
 And greedy for gifts;
 They do not judge the case of the orphan,
 And the widow’s cause never reaches them.
- 24 Assuredly, this is the declaration
 Of the Sovereign, the LORD of Hosts,
 The Mighty One of Israel:
 “Ah, I will get satisfaction from My foes;
 I will wreak vengeance on My enemies!

compares Jerusalem’s inhabitants to those of the most notorious and sinful Canaanite cities, which were completely destroyed, according to biblical tradition. See Gen. ch 19. 15: Lift up your hands: People lifted their hands when praying in ancient Israel; cf. Exod. 9.29, 33; 1 Kings 8.38, 54. 16–20: The unit does not confine itself to complaint but ends with an invitation to repentance and ethical action. Calls to repentance are rare in Isaiah, especially compared with the work of other prophets; they never appear from ch 6 through 31.6.

1.21–27: Lament and hope. Like the last unit, this unit is defined by a framing device involving repeated vocabulary. In both vv. 21 and 26–27 we hear faithful city, righteousness and the root “sh-p-t,” meaning justice (Heb “mishpat”) in v. 21 and both magistrates (better, “judges,” Heb “shofetayikh”) and justice in 26–27. 21–25: In the ancient Near East, laments for a city typically mourn a destruction that has already occurred, but this lament mourns the city’s sinfulness, which will lead to a disaster in the future. 26–27: Having been punished, Zion will again know justice and faithfulness. A new name is given to the reformed Jerusalem; cf. 62.2–4; Ezek. 48.35.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Or “you will be fed the sword.” c I.e., Jerusalem’s.

25 I will turn My hand against you,
 And smelt out your dross ^aas with lye,^a
 And remove all your slag:
 26 I will restore your magistrates as of old,
 And your counselors as of yore.
 After that you shall be called
 City of Righteousness, Faithful City."
 27^b Zion shall be saved in the judgment;
 Her repentant ones, in the retribution.^c
 28 But rebels and sinners shall all be crushed,
 And those who forsake the LORD shall perish.
 29 Truly, you^d shall be shamed
 Because of the terebinths you desired,
 And you shall be confounded
 Because of the gardens you coveted.
 30 For you shall be like a terebinth
 Wilted of leaf,
 And like a garden
 That has no water,
 31 ^eStored wealth^e shall become as tow,
 And he who amassed it a spark;
 And the two shall burn together,
 With none to quench.

2 The word that Isaiah son of Amoz prophesied concerning Judah and Jerusalem.

2 In the days to come,
 The Mount of the LORD's House
 Shall stand firm above the mountains
 And tower above the hills;
 And all the nations
 Shall gaze on it with joy.
 3 And the many peoples shall go and say:
 "Come,
 Let us go up to the Mount of the LORD,
 To the House of the God of Jacob;
 That He may instruct us in His ways,
 And that we may walk in His paths."
 For instruction shall come forth^f from Zion,
 The word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

a-a Emendation yields "in a crucible"; cf. 48.10.

b Others "Zion shall be saved by justice, / Her repentant ones by righteousness."

c For this meaning cf. 5.16; 10.22. d Heb. "they."

e-e Connecting ḥason with ḥasan, "to store" (23.18), and ḥosen, "treasure" (33.6).
 f I.e., oracles will be obtainable.

1.28-31: The fiery punishment. Are the sinners whose end is described contrasted with the reformed Zion described in the preceding vv., which will be spared their fate? Or are residents of the sinful city as a whole the subject of these vv.? The prophet leaves the answer unclear, perhaps intentionally; it will be given by the inhabitants of Jerusalem themselves; through their behavior, they will lead God to decide whom to punish.

2.1: Another superscription (cf. 1.1), whose presence suggests that the following texts (chs 2-4 or 2-5) were once an independent collection of Isaiah's prophecies. The present book may be built from discrete documents, often several chs long, which preserved Isaiah's speeches. These documents are not organized in chronological order, since the same event is often treated in more than one document.

2.2-4.6: The Jerusalem of the future and of the present. This long section begins (2.2-4) and ends (4.2-6) with a description of Jerusalem as it should and will be: a city of peace, equity, and divine presence. The long middle section (2.6-4.1) focuses on the sinfulness of the current inhabitants and their grim fate. Running throughout this section is imagery relating to height: All that is elevated is brought low, since the LORD alone deserves to be exalted. One modest hill is raised up in 2.2, and that hill is the location of the LORD's own Temple.

2.2-4: An eschatological poem. One of the most famous texts in the Bible, this poem is also found, with minor variations, in Mic. 4.1-4. 2-3: The Mount of the LORD's House is the Temple Mount (which today is bordered on the west by the Western Wall). Gaze, alternatively, "flow towards." Instruction, alternatively, "law" (Heb "torah"). The term Zion in the Bible refers to the Temple Mount (and, by extension, more broadly

4 Thus He will judge among the nations
 And arbitrate for the many peoples,
 And they shall beat their swords into plowshares^a
 And their spears into pruning hooks:
 Nation shall not take up
 Sword against nation;
 They shall never again know^b war.

5 O House of Jacob!
 Come, let us walk
 By the light of the LORD.
 6 For you have forsaken [the ways of] your people,
 O House of Jacob!
 “For they are full [of practices] from the East,
 And of soothsaying like the Philistines;
 They abound in customs^d of the aliens.”
 7 Their land is full of silver and gold,
 There is no limit to their treasures;
 Their land is full of horses,
 There is no limit to their chariots.
 8 And their land is full of idols;
 They bow down to the work of their hands,
 To what their own fingers have wrought.
 9 But man shall be humbled,
 And mortal brought low—
 “Oh, do not forgive them!”^e

10 Go deep into the rock,
 Bury yourselves in the ground,
 Before the terror of the LORD
 And His dread majesty!
 11 Man’s haughty look shall be brought low,
 And the pride of mortals shall be humbled.
 None but the LORD shall be
 Exalted in that day.

12 For the LORD of Hosts has ready a day
 Against all that is proud and arrogant,
 Against all that is lofty—so that it is brought low:
 13 Against all the cedars of Lebanon,
 Tall and stately,

to the whole city of Jerusalem). But its narrow sense does not refer to the hill currently called by that name, which is located immediately south of the present-day Armenian quarter, southwest of the biblical Mount Zion. 4: The prophet does not imagine a future without borders or distinct nationalities. International conflicts will still occur, but nations will no longer resolve them through warfare. Instead, nations will submit to arbitration at Mount Zion. The Temple will become the headquarters of a divine Security Council with a membership of one and unsurpassed ability to ensure compliance.

2.5–22: The current situation and its results. This passage seems to be a warning regarding the future; alternatively, it may be an attempt to explain the reason for an event that has already occurred, namely the devastating earthquake during the reign of King Uzziah early in Isaiah’s career (cf. Amos 1.1 and Zech. 14.5). The tense of the verbs in v. 17 is ambiguous; what NJPS renders as the future tense could, linguistically, be the past. 5–9: Criticism of the nation’s sins: magic; amassing extraordinary amounts of wealth; pursuing military power; and idolatry. All these vices embody inappropriate confidence in humanity’s own powers. This confidence is not only mistaken, but offensive to God. 10–22: The fate of the proud. Both in nature and in culture, the high will be brought low, the great will be humbled, and vanity will perish. 17: A summary of this section and, arguably, of the message of Isaiah as a whole.

a More exactly, the iron points with which wooden plows were tipped.

b Cf. Judg. 3.2.

c-c Emendation yields “For they are full of divination / and have abundance of soothsaying, / Like Philistines / And like alien folk.”

d Cf. Targum; lit. “children.”

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields “And their idols with them”; cf. vv. 17–21.

14 And all the oaks of Bashan;
 Against all the high mountains
 And all the lofty hills;
 15 Against every soaring tower
 And every mighty wall;
 16 Against all the ^aships of Tarshish^a
 And all the gallant barks.
 17 Then man's haughtiness shall be humbled
 And the pride of man brought low.
 None but the LORD shall be
 Exalted in that day.

18 As for idols, they shall vanish completely.
 19 And men shall enter caverns in the rock
 And hollows in the ground—
 Before the terror of the LORD
 And His dread majesty,
 When He comes forth to overawe the earth.
 20 On that day, men shall fling away,
 To the ^bflying foxes^b and the bats,
 The idols of silver
 And the idols of gold
 Which they made for worshipping.
 21 And they shall enter the clefts in the rocks
 And the crevices in the cliffs,
 Before the terror of the LORD
 And His dread majesty,
 When He comes forth to overawe the earth.

22 Oh, cease to glorify man,
 Who has only a breath in his nostrils!
 For by what does he merit esteem?

3 For lo!
 The Sovereign LORD of Hosts
 Will remove from Jerusalem and from Judah
 Prop and stay,
 Every prop of food
 And every prop of water:^c
 2 Soldier and warrior,
 Magistrate and prophet,
 Augur and elder;
 3 Captain of fifty,
 Magnate and counselor,
 Skilled artisan and expert enchanter;^d

3.1-4.1: Wealth and woe. 3.1-15: Unworthy leaders and a society in ruins. As in other passages, it is difficult to be sure whether the prophet predicts the future or describes the present. 1-7: If this is a prediction, then the prophet announces that God will remove Judah's food and its leaders; in their place inexperienced and immature people will rule, and the nation will be desperate for the stability that legitimate authorities bring. If this is a description of the present, then he criticizes the current leadership, asserting that they are like children. 1: Will remove might refer to an action God is already taking or one that God will take in the near future.

a-a Probably a type of large ship. b-b Exact meaning of Heb. uncertain.
c Emendation yields "clothing"; cf. v. 7; 4.1. d Emendation yields "craftsman."

- 4 And He^a will make boys their rulers,
And babes shall govern them.
- 5 So the people shall oppress one another—
Each oppressing his fellow:
The young shall bully the old;
And the despised [shall bully] the honored.
- 6 For should a man seize his brother,
^bIn whose father's house there is clothing:^b
"Come, be a chief over us,
And let this ruin^c be under your care,"
- 7 The other will thereupon protest,
"I will not be a dresser of wounds,
With no food or clothing in my own house.
You shall not make me chief of a people!"
- 8 Ah, Jerusalem has stumbled,
And Judah has fallen,
Because by word and deed
They insult the LORD,
Defying His majestic glance.
- 9 Their partiality in judgment^d accuses them;
They avow their sins like Sodom,
They do not conceal them.
Woe to them! For ill
Have they served themselves.
- 10 (Hail^e the just man, for he shall fare well;
He shall eat the fruit of his works.
- 11 Woe to the wicked man, for he shall fare ill;
As his hands have dealt, so shall it be done to him.)
- 12 My people's rulers are babes,
It is governed by women.^f
O my people!
Your leaders are misleaders;
They have confused the course of your paths.
- 13 The LORD stands up to plead a cause,
He rises to champion peoples.^g
- 14 The LORD will bring this charge
Against the elders and officers of His people:

8-15: The reasons for the crisis: Judah's leaders are corrupt. Here again the theme of hubris appears; rather than depending on divinely ordained standards of equity, they give judgments that magnify their own positions and wealth.

^a Heb. "I."

^{b-b} Emendation yields "His father's son, saying . . ."

^c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "wound."

^d So Targum; cf. Deut. 1.17; 16.19.

^e Emendation yields "Happy is."

^f Emendation yields "boys"; cf. v. 4 (and v. 5).

^g Septuagint "His people"; cf. vv. 14, 15.

"It is you who have ravaged the vineyard;
That which was robbed from the poor is in your houses.

15 How dare you crush My people
And grind the faces of the poor?"
—says my Lord God of Hosts.

16 The LORD said:
"Because the daughters of Zion
Are so vain
And walk with ^aheads thrown back,^a
With roving eyes,
And with mincing gait,
Making a tinkling with their feet"—
17 My Lord will bare^b the pates
Of the daughters of Zion,
The LORD will uncover their heads.

¹⁸In that day, my LORD will strip off the finery^c of the anklets, the fillets, and the crescents; ¹⁹of the eardrops, the bracelets, and the veils; ²⁰the turbans, the armlets, and the sashes; of the talismans and the amulets; ²¹the signet rings and the nose rings; ²²of the festive robes, the mantles, and the shawls; the purses, ²³the lace gowns, and the linen vests; and the kerchiefs and the capes.

24 And then—
Instead of perfume, there shall be rot;
And instead of an apron, a rope;
Instead of a diadem of beaten-work,
A shorn head;
Instead of a rich robe,
A girding of sackcloth;
^dA burn instead of beauty.^d

25 Her^e men shall fall by the sword,
Her fighting manhood in battle;
26 And her gates shall lament and mourn,
And ^fshe shall be emptied,^f
Shall sit on the ground.

3.16–4.1: The haughtiness of wealthy women, and their downfall. The vertical imagery is significant: Women who are metaphorically too high (i.e., too wealthy and too eager to display their wealth) will be brought low. While in vv. 1–15 the prophet starts with punishment and then describes the reason for it, in this passage he describes the ostentatious affluence first (vv. 16–23) and then the punishment (v. 24). 3.25–4.1: The punishment. The two themes of 3.1–23—corrupt and unworthy male leaders and immoral women—combine in a description of a single punishment suitable to both. The men are killed, leaving the women bereaved and impoverished.

a-a Lit. "throats bent back."

b So Saadia. To bare a woman's head in public was an intolerable humiliation; cf. Mishnah Baba Kamma 8.6.

c Many of the articles named in vv. 18–24 cannot be identified with certainty.

d-d The complete Isaiah scroll from Qumran, hereafter 1QIs^a, reads "For shame shall take the place of beauty"; cf. note b.

e I.e., Zion's; cf. vv. 16, 17; Heb. "your."

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "her wall"; cf. Lam. 2.8.

4 In that day, seven women shall take hold of one man, saying,

"We will eat our own food
And wear our own clothes;
Only let us be called by your name—
Take away our disgrace!"

2^a In that day,
The radiance of the LORD
Will lend beauty and glory,
And the splendor of ^bthe land ^b
[Will give] dignity and majesty,
To the survivors of Israel.

3 And those who remain in Zion
And are left in Jerusalem—
All who are inscribed for life in Jerusalem—
Shall be called holy.

4 When my Lord has washed away
The filth of ^cthe daughters of Zion,^c
And from Jerusalem's midst
Has rinsed out her infamy—
In a spirit of judgment
And in a spirit of purging—

5 the LORD will create^d over the whole shrine and meeting place of Mount Zion cloud by day and smoke with a glow of flaming fire by night. Indeed, over ^eall the glory^e shall hang a canopy, ⁶which shall serve as a pavilion for shade from heat by day and as a shelter for protection against drenching rain.

5 Let me sing for my beloved
A song of my lover about his vineyard.

My beloved had a vineyard
^f'On a fruitful hill.^f

2 He broke the ground, cleared it of stones,
And planted it with choice vines.
He built a watchtower inside it,
He even hewed a wine press in it;
For he hoped it would yield grapes.
Instead, it yielded wild grapes.

a For the interpretation of this verse, cf. 28.5. For "radiance," cf. Septuagint and the Syriac sem̄ha, and for "splendor," cf. the meaning of peri in 10.12.

b-b Emendation yields "my Lord"; cf. the parallelism (in reverse order) in 3.17.

c-c Emendation yields "Daughter Zion," i.e., Zion personified; cf. 1.8 and note.

d Emendation yields "spread"; cf. Ps. 10.5.39.

e-e Emendation yields "His whole shrine." f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

4.2-6: Another eschatological poem: redemption in Zion. Very abruptly, the tone changes, and the prophet describes the outcome of the cleansing punishment. The passage closely resembles 2.2-4 in outlook, but it focuses on Israel and Zion rather than on the universal aspect of God's reign. 2: In that day: Redemption will come at the same time as, or immediately after, the disaster that will threaten Zion. Radiance . . . splendor, lit. "branch . . . fruit." The former term alludes to the royal line, as indicated by its use elsewhere in the Bible (Jer. 23.5; 33.15; Zech. 3.8; 6.12) and also in Phoenician. Following this sense, the Targum translates it as "Messiah." Some rabbinic commentators interpret it as a reference to King Hezekiah, who reigned at the very end of the 8th century. In the latter interpretation the passage does not deal with the far-away future but with political conditions of the 8th century. 3: If the passage is closely focused on the situation in the late 8th century, this v. may refer to refugees from northern Israel. They settled in Jerusalem to escape the Assyrians, who destroyed the Northern Kingdom in 722 BCE (translate: "those who survived are in Zion, those who remained, in Jerusalem"). 4-6: Cloud and smoke with fire indicate the LORD's presence at the sanctuary; cf. Exod. 40.34-38; Num. 9.15-23; 1 Kings 8.20-12.

5.1-30: A poem of rebuke.

1-7. The song of the vineyard.

A parable, in which God is the farmer and Israel the vineyard. At first, the identity of the characters is not evident, and only gradually does the audience realize that it is they themselves who are being rebuked. Nathan's parable and its explanation in 2 Sam. 12.1-12 are structured similarly.

8-24: A series of divine complaints, each introduced by the word Ah (Heb "hoy"). The term may simply be a call for attention ("Hey!"), or it may be an exclamation of woe concerning a punishment that will soon take place

- 3 "Now, then,
Dwellers of Jerusalem
And men of Judah,
You be the judges
Between Me and My vineyard:
4 What more could have been done for My vineyard
That I failed to do in it?
Why, when I hoped it would yield grapes,
Did it yield wild grapes?
- 5 "Now I am going to tell you
What I will do to My vineyard:
I will remove its hedge,
That it may be ravaged;
I will break down its wall,
That it may be trampled.
6 And I will ^amake it a desolation;^a
It shall not be pruned or hoed,
And it shall be overgrown with briars and thistles.
And I will command the clouds
To drop no rain on it."
- 7 For the vineyard of the LORD of Hosts
Is the House of Israel,
And the seedlings he lovingly tended
Are the men of Judah.
^bAnd He hoped for justice,
But behold, injustice;
For equity,
But behold, iniquity!
- 8 Ah,
Those who add house to house
And join field to field,
Till there is room for none but you
To dwell in the land!
- 9 In my hearing [said] the LORD of Hosts:
Surely, great houses
Shall lie forlorn,
Spacious and splendid ones
Without occupants.
10 For ten acres of vineyard
Shall yield just one bath,^c

("Warning!"). 8-10: The first complaint is directed against wealthy landowners who expand their own property at the expense of farmers of modest means. The eviction of peasants and the growth of massive estates was a major problem in the 8th century (cf. Amos ch 2; Mic. ch 2). In Israelite thought (as reflected in both prophetic literature and the Torah), land was ideally supposed to remain in the hands of a family in perpetuity, so that both tremendous wealth and penury would become unlikely. The Torah includes several laws to prevent poor or modest families from losing their land; see Lev. 25.8; Num. 27.1-11, 35; Deut. 27.17.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b This sentence contains two word-plays: "And He hoped for mishpat, And there is mishpat [exact meaning uncertain]; / For śedaqah, But there is še'aqah [lit. 'outcry']."

c I.e., of wine. The bath was the liquid equivalent of the ephah; and the homer was ten baths or ephahs (Ezek. 45.11).

And a field sown with a homer of seed
Shall yield a mere ephah.

- 11 Ah,
Those who chase liquor
From early in the morning,
And till late in the evening
Are inflamed by wine!
- 12 ^aWho, at their banquets,
Have ^a lyre and lute,
Timbrel, flute, and wine;
But who never give a thought
To the plan of the LORD,
And take no note
Of what He is designing.
- 13 Assuredly,
My people will suffer exile
For not giving heed,
Its multitude victims of hunger
And its masses parched with thirst.
- 14 Assuredly,
Sheol has opened wide its gullet
And parted its jaws in a measureless gape;
And down into it shall go,
That splendor and tumult,
That din and revelry.
- 15 Yea, man is bowed,
And mortal brought low;
Brought low is the pride of the haughty.
- 16 And the LORD of Hosts is exalted by judgment,
The Holy God proved holy by retribution.
- 17^b Then lambs shall graze
As in their meadows,
And strangers shall feed
On the ruins of the stout.
- 18 Ah,
Those who haul sin with cords of falsehood
And iniquity as with cart ropes!
- 19 Who say,^c
“Let Him speed, let Him hasten His purpose,
If we are to give thought;

11–17: The second complaint: parties instead of piety. Appropriately, the people whose appetite is insatiable will feed the insatiable appetite of Sheol, the underworld (v. 14). Sheol is not comparable to later Jewish and Christian notions of hell; all humans, not just evil ones, go to Sheol when they die. See further 14.9–11 n. and 26.19 n.

13: Suffer exile may refer to the fate of northern Israelites in the late 8th century (especially if the verb is in fact a past tense, which is likely); or it may predict the fate of the southern Judeans, some of whom will be exiled even though Zion will not fall. 18–19: The third complaint. The people in v. 19 are guilty in one of two ways. The sinners quoted speak sarcastically and do not believe that God will in fact fulfill His purpose (so according to the translators' note c). Or the v. quotes faithful Israelites who impatiently demand that God act immediately.

a-a Emendation yields “whose interests are” (mish'ehem, from sha'ah “to turn to,” 17:7, 8; 31.1).

b Meaning of verse uncertain. Emendation yields “The lambs shall graze / In the pasture of the fat [rams], / And the kids shall feed / On the ranges of the stout [bucks].” The lambs and the kids are the poor and the rams and bucks are the rich oppressors (cf. Ezek. 34.17–22).

c By way of retort to v. 12.

Let the plans of the Holy One of Israel
Be quickly fulfilled,
If we are to give heed.”

- 20 Ah,
Those who call evil good
And good evil;
Who present darkness as light
And light as darkness;
Who present bitter as sweet
And sweet as bitter!
- 21 Ah,
Those who are so wise—
In their own opinion;
So clever—
In their own judgment!
- 22 Ah,
Those who are so doughty—
As drinkers of wine,
And so valiant—
As mixers of drink!
- 23 Who vindicate him who is in the wrong
In return for a bribe,
And withhold vindication
From him who is in the right.
- 24 Assuredly,
As straw is consumed by a tongue of fire
And hay ^ashrivels as it burns,^a
Their stock shall become like rot,
And their buds shall blow away like dust.
For they have rejected the instruction of the LORD of Hosts,
Spurned the word of the Holy One of Israel.
- 25 That is why
The LORD's anger was roused
Against His people,
Why He stretched out His arm against it
And struck it,
So that the mountains quaked,^b
And its corpses lay
Like refuse in the streets.
Yet his anger has not turned back,
And His arm is outstretched still.

20–21: Two brief complaints dealing with sophistry. 22–24: The last complaint mixes the themes of vv. 8–10 and 11–17. Misplaced abilities are focused on fine tasting wine; officials pervert justice for money. 22: Doughty, or “mighty, heroic” (Heb “gibor”). 25–30: The coming disaster. God is portrayed as bludgeoning the nation, both through an earthquake that has already taken place (v. 25) and—in greater detail—a foreign invasion yet to come.

a-a Emendation yields “is burned by flame”; cf. 33.11–12; 47.14.

b An allusion to the destructive earthquake in the reign of King Uzziah: Amos 1.1; Zech. 14.5; cf. Isa. 9.18a.

26 He will raise an ensign to a nation^a afar,
Whistle to one at the end of the earth.
There it comes with lightning speed!
27 In its ranks, none is weary or stumbles,
They never sleep or slumber;
The belts on their waists do not come loose,
Nor do the thongs of their sandals break.
28 Their arrows are sharpened,
And all their bows are drawn.
Their horses' hoofs are like flint,
Their chariot wheels like the whirlwind.
29 Their roaring is like a lion's,
They roar like the great beasts;
When they growl and seize a prey,
They carry it off and none can recover it.

³⁰ But in that day, a roaring shall resound over him like that of the sea;^b and then he shall look below and, behold, Distressing darkness, with light; Darkness, ^cin its lowering clouds.^c

6 In the year that King Uzziah died, I beheld my Lord seated on a high and lofty throne; and the skirts of His robe filled the Temple. ²Seraphs stood in attendance on Him. Each of them had six wings: with two he covered his face, with two he covered his legs, and with two he would fly.

³ And one would call to the other,
"Holy, holy, holy!
The LORD of Hosts!
His presence fills all the earth!"

⁴ The doorposts^d would shake at the sound of the one who called, and the House kept filling with smoke. ⁵I cried, "Woe is me; I am lost!

For I am a man ^eof unclean lips^e
And I live among a people
Of unclean lips;
Yet my own eyes have beheld
The King LORD of Hosts."

a Heb. "nations."

b I.e., the LORD will intervene and come to his aid. Cf. 29.6–7; 30.27. This verse may constitute a transition between chaps. 8 and 9.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e-e I.e., speaking impiety; cf. 9.16, and contrast "pure of speech [lit. 'lip']" in Zeph. 3.9.

26: Ensign: God acts as commander of the foreign army, showing them the way to Israel. 30: This seems to belong to the description of the punishment. Elsewhere in Isaiah, however, the portrayal of a devastating invasion suddenly switches to a report of the invaders' defeat (see 28.16 n.; 29.1–14 n.; 31.5 n.; 31.15–20 n.). If translators' note b is correct, this v. may have originally functioned this way. Some have suggested that this passage originally belonged after 10.1–4, with which it has much in common.

6.1–13: Prophetic commissioning. Many read this passage as a description of Isaiah's initiation into prophecy and hence view it as the earliest text of Isaiah's career. They note similarities between this text and others describing the inauguration of prophets (Exod. chs 3–4; Exod. ch 6; Jer. ch 1; Ezek. chs 1–3). According to others, it depicts the beginning of a new stage in Isaiah's career; he receives a new assignment that differs from earlier ones. These scholars point out that the ch does not appear at the beginning of the book. Further, the first five chs call on the Judeans to repent, but from this ch until the last prophecy of Isaiah son of Amoz, the prophet does not call on the Israelites to repent; 6.9–10 may account for this difference.

1–4: The vision of the divine court. Isaiah sees God and the deity's retinue (see also 1 Kings 22.19–23; Job chs 1–2). This is one of many passages indicating that some biblical authors conceive of God as a physical being whom a few people can see (cf. Exod. 24.11; 33.11; Num. 12.8). 3: Along with a v. from Ezekiel's inaugural vision (3.12), this v. serves as the centerpiece of the "kedushah" prayer, in which worshippers praise God using angelic liturgy. The "kedushah" appears in the communal recitation of the "amidah" (the main statutory prayer in Judaism), which requires a prayer quorum ("minyan") of ten. It is also found in services for all mornings, Sabbath afternoons, and Saturday

⁶Then one of the seraphs flew over to me with a live coal, which he had taken from the altar with a pair of tongs. ⁷He touched it to my lips and declared,

“Now that this has touched your lips,
Your guilt shall depart
And your sin be purged away.”

⁸Then I heard the voice of my Lord saying, “Whom shall I send? Who will go for us?” And I said, “Here am I; send me.” ⁹And He said, “Go, say to that people:

‘Hear, indeed, but do not understand;
See, indeed, but do not grasp.’

¹⁰ Dull that people’s mind,
Stop its ears,
And seal its eyes—
Lest, seeing with its eyes
And hearing with its ears,
It also grasp with its mind,
And repent and save^a itself.”

¹¹I asked, “How long, my Lord?” And He replied:

“Till towns lie waste without inhabitants
And houses without people,
And the ground lies waste and desolate—

¹² For the LORD will banish the population—
And deserted sites are many
In the midst of the land.

¹³“But while a tenth part yet remains in it, it shall repent. It shall be ravaged like the terebinth and the oak, of which stumps are left even when they are felled: its stump shall be a holy seed.”

7In the reign of Ahaz son of Jotham son of Uzziah, king of Judah, King Rezin of Aram and King Pekah son of Remaliah of Israel marched upon Jerusalem to attack it; but they were not able to attack it.

a Lit. “heal.”

nights in sections that can be recited in private. 5–7: Isaiah’s reaction and purification. Isaiah fears that he will die, because he is not worthy to see God. A seraph or angelic being purifies him and reassures him that he is safe. 8–13: The commissioning: repentance is no longer an option. Isaiah is told of his mission. 8–10: Shockingly, the prophet is not supposed to help the people understand the danger to which their sinfulness exposes them. Cf. 29.9–12. God no longer desires repentance; rather, God wants to vent divine anger on the nation. Some rabbinic commentators, unable to imagine such an interpretation, argue that the imperative verbs must be taken as future-tense verbs. Hence God does not order Isaiah to cause the people to misunderstand; rather, God predicts that they will not achieve understanding in spite of Isaiah’s speeches, because the people do not want to acknowledge the truth. 11–12: The divine judgment will involve the exile of most of the nation. 13: According to the NJPS translation (which reads against the cantillation, the signs in the Masoretic biblical text which serve as punctuation marks as well as musical notations), a small remnant will repent after the disaster; from this kernel the nation will be renewed. The renewal involves not exiles who return from afar but survivors who remain in the land. Thus Isaiah’s notion of renewal differs from the vision of renewal in Ezekiel, Jeremiah, and Second Isaiah. Alternatively (and in accordance with the cantillation), the first half of the v. can be translated much more negatively: “And when a tenth are left, they will again be burned.” In this rendering, the few survivors are subject to additional disaster. The second half is also obscure, but it seems to refer to the fact that renewed life can come out of the stump of terebinth and oak trees. Here the notion of the remnant that is saved from a devastating calamity does appear, however subtly.

7.1–8.23: Prophecies delivered during the Syro-Ephraimite crisis.

These passages, and perhaps some of the passages following them, deal with a series of events known from both biblical texts (2 Kings ch 16; 2 Chron. ch 28) and ancient Assyrian records. In 735 BCE the leaders of the kingdom of Damascus in Syria (or Aram) and of the northern Israelite kingdom (also known as Ephraim) attempted to create a coalition of small states to oppose the Assyrian empire. King Ahaz of Judah did not join their conspiracy, and the Arameans (Syrians) and Israelites (Ephraimites) marched against Judah, intending to depose Ahaz and replace him with an ally of their own, the son of Tabeel (his first ²Now, when it was reported to the House of David that Aram had allied itself with Ephraim, their hearts and the hearts of their people trembled as trees of the forest sway before a wind. ³But the LORD said to Isaiah, "Go out with your son Shear-jashub^a to meet Ahaz at the end of the conduit of the Upper Pool, by the road of the Fuller's Field. ⁴And say to him: Be firm and be calm. Do not be afraid and do not lose heart on account of those two smoking stubs of firebrands, on account of the raging of Rezin and his Arameans and the son of Remaliah.^b ⁵Because the Arameans—with Ephraim and the son of Remaliah—have plotted against you, saying, ⁶"We will march against Judah and invade and conquer it, and we will set up as king in it the son of Tabeel,"^b ⁷thus said my Lord God:

It shall not succeed,

It shall not come to pass.

⁸ For the chief city of Aram is Damascus,

And the chief of Damascus is Rezin;

⁹ The chief city of Ephraim is Samaria,

And the chief of Samaria is the son of Remaliah.^c

^dAnd in another sixty-five years,

Ephraim shall be shattered as a people.^d

If you will not believe, for you ^ecannot be trusted^e. . ."

¹⁰The LORD spoke further to Ahaz: ¹¹"Ask for a sign from the LORD your God, anywhere down to Sheol or up to the sky." ¹²But Ahaz replied, "I will not ask, and I will not test the LORD." ¹³"Listen, House of David," [Isaiah] retorted, "is it not enough for you to treat men as helpless that you also treat my God as helpless?" ¹⁴Assuredly, my Lord will give you a sign of His own accord! Look, the young woman is with child and about to give birth to a son. Let her name him Immanuel.^g ¹⁵(By the time he learns to reject the bad and choose the good, people will be feeding on curds and honey.) ¹⁶For before the lad knows to reject the bad and choose the good, the ground whose two kings you dread shall be abandoned. ¹⁷The LORD will cause to come upon you and your people and your ancestral house such days as never have come since name is not given, probably to slight him). Ahaz appealed to the Assyrian king, Tiglath-Pileser, for help. The Arameans and Ephraimites did not succeed in their efforts; Damascus was conquered entirely in 732, while Israel lost considerable territory to Assyria. Judah was saved, but it became dependent on Assyria.

7.1-17: A narrative about Isaiah and King Ahaz. 1: A brief introduction sets the scene by paraphrasing 2 Kings 16.5. 2-9: Isaiah is sent to reassure Ahaz that the Syro-Ephraimite threat will not succeed. Isaiah's commitment to the Davidic dynasty and his belief in the inviolability of Zion play a crucial role here (see 1.8-9 n.).

3: The notion of the remnant that will return is expressed by the name Isaiah gave to his son.

8b (printed here at the end of 9): An especially obscure verse. Why does Isaiah attempt to reassure Ahaz by referring to an event relatively far in the future? One might view the v. as an addition by a later scribe, but in fact Damascus fell to the Assyrians in 733, only three years after the Syro-Ephraimite crisis; a later scribe would not have inserted an inaccurate "prediction." 10-17: Apparently Ahaz chooses to rely on the intervention of the Assyrian king (cf. 2 Kings 16.7-9) rather than on God. 14-17: The Immanuel passage. Isaiah provides a sign, the point of which is either to clarify his message (cf. his sign in ch 20) or to verify it (cf. the sign in Judg. 6.17-23). It is not clear whether the sign is the woman's pregnancy, the child's birth, his name, or his diet; nor is it clear when the sign comes to pass—immediately (if the sign is his name), soon (birth), or several years into the future. Similarly ambiguities occur in the case of other biblical signs; cf. Exod. 3.12.

14: Young woman (Heb "'almah"). The Septuagint translates as "virgin," leading ancient and medieval Christians to connect this verse with the New Testament figure of Mary. All modern scholars, however, agree that the Heb merely dea Meaning "[only] a remnant will turn back," i.e., repent; cf. 6.13; 10.21.

b To refer to a person only as "the son of—" is slighting; cf. note at 1 Sam. 10.11.

c The thought is continued by 8.8b-10; cf. 2 Chron. 13.8-12.

d-d Brought down from v. 8 for clarity.

e-e Others "surely, you shall not be established."

f By insisting on soliciting the aid of Assyria (see 2 Kings 16.7 ff.; cf. below, v. 20). "Treat as helpless" follows the translation of Saadia; cf. Gen. 19.11.

g Meaning "with us is God."

Ephraim turned away from Judah—that selfsame king of Assyria!^a ¹⁸“In that day, the LORD will whistle to the flies at the ends of the water channels of Egypt and to the bees in the land of Assyria; ¹⁹and they shall all come and alight in the rugged wadis, and in the clefts of the rocks, and in all the thornbrakes, and in all the watering places.

²⁰“In that day, my Lord will cut away with the razor that is hired beyond the Euphrates—with the king of Assyria^b—the hair of the head and ^cthe hair of the legs,^c and it shall clip off the beard as well. ²¹And in that day, each man shall save alive a heifer of the herd and two animals of the flock. ²²(And he shall obtain so much milk that he shall eat curds.) Thus everyone who is left in the land shall feed on curds and honey.

²³“For in that day, every spot where there could stand a thousand vines worth a thousand shekels of silver^d shall become a wilderness of thornbush and thistle. ²⁴One will have to go there with bow and arrows,^e for the country shall be all thornbushes and thistles. ²⁵But the perils of thornbush and thistle shall not spread to any of the hills that could only be tilled with a hoe;^f and here cattle shall be let loose, and ^gsheep and goats^g shall tramp about.”

8 The LORD said to me, “Get yourself a large sheet and write on it ^hin common script^h ‘For Maher-shalal-hash-baz’;ⁱ ²and call reliable witnesses, the priest Uriah and Zechariah son of Jeberechiah, to witness for Me.” ³I was intimate with the prophetess,^j and she conceived and bore a son; and the LORD said to me, “Name him Maher-shalal-hash-baz.ⁱ ⁴For before the boy learns to call ‘Father’ and ‘Mother,’ the wealth of Damascus and the spoils of Samaria, ^kand the delights of Rezin and of the son of Remaliah,^k shall be carried off before the king of Assyria.”

a Cf. note on v. 13.

b Who was hired by Ahaz; cf. notes on vv. 13 and 17.

c-c I.e., the pubic hair.

d I.e., all the best farm land, corresponding to the hairiest parts of the body; v. 20.

e Because of dangerous beasts.

f Marginal farm land, too rocky for the plow, corresponding to areas of the body with scant hair.

g-g See note at Exod. 12.3.

h-h Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

i I.e., “Pillage hastens, looting speeds,” indicating that two cities are to be pillaged at an early date; see v. 4.

j I.e., Isaiah’s wife.

k-k Brought up from v. 6 for clarity.

notes a young woman of marriageable age, whether married or unmarried, whether a virgin or not. 15–17: The message the sign represents is two-fold: God is with Judah, both to protect it (v. 16) and to punish it (v. 17).

7.18–25: Predictions of disaster for Judah. Ahaz has refused to rely solely on God’s promises of enduring kingship for David (cf. 2 Sam. 7.8–16; Ps. 89.20–37) and of Jerusalem’s eternal safety (cf. Pss. 46; 48). Consequently (or perhaps as a result of support among Judeans for the attempt to enthroned the son of Tabeel and for the Syro-Ephraimite alliance?), God will use the Assyrians not to rescue Judah but to decimate it. The disaster will not be total, however. Isaiah makes no reference to Jerusalem’s capitulation. Agriculture will be curtailed and wild animals will roam in what had been farmland, but those who survive (v. 22) will have food to eat. The reference to curds and honey (vv. 15, 22) is unclear: They are either delicacies the survivors are privileged to enjoy (so several rabbinic commentators) or meager provisions left after the punishment. The passage exemplifies the ambivalent tone of Isaiah’s doctrine of the surviving remnant: One is not sure whether the description of this future is to be viewed negatively (since only a remnant endure) or positively (since they do in fact endure). The final v. may be a description of the poverty-stricken circumstances after the disaster or of agricultural—hence national—rebirth. In fact the Assyrian invasion Isaiah predicts did not occur during Ahaz’s reign, but it did take place during the reign of his son, Hezekiah.

8.1–22: Further predictions concerning the Syro-Ephraimite crisis. In the oracles collected here, Isaiah refers to himself in the first person (unlike those in the previous ch, which refer to Isaiah in the third person). They consist of oracles dating from the beginning of the crisis through its aftermath.

5 Again the LORD spoke to me, thus:

6 "Because that people has spurned
The gently flowing waters of Siloam"^a—
7 Assuredly,
My Lord will bring up against them
The mighty, massive waters of the Euphrates,
The king of Assyria and all his multitude.
It shall rise above all its channels,
And flow over all its beds,
8 And swirl through Judah like a flash flood Reaching up to the neck.^b

"But with us is God,
Whose wings are spread
As wide as your land is broad!
9 Band together, O peoples—you shall be broken!
Listen to this, you remotest parts of the earth:
Gird yourselves—you shall be broken;
Gird yourselves—you shall be broken!
10 Hatch a plot—it shall be foiled;
Agree on action—it shall not succeed.
For with us is God!

11 For this is what the LORD said to me, when He took me by the hand^d and charged me not to walk in the path of that people:

12^e "You must not call conspiracy^f
All that that people calls conspiracy,^f
Nor revere what it reveres,
Nor hold it in awe.
13 None but the LORD of Hosts
Shall you account holy;
Give reverence to Him alone,
Hold Him alone in awe.
14 He shall be ^gfor a sanctuary,
A stone^g men strike against:
A rock men stumble over
For the two Houses of Israel, a The conduit—and later the tunnel—of Siloam conveyed into Jerusalem the waters of Gihon, which symbolize "the LORD of Hosts who dwells on Mount Zion" (v. 18). For the nature of the rejection see note at 7.13.

b I.e., Judah shall be imperiled, but, in contrast to Aram and Ephraim (v. 4), not destroyed.

c See note c at 7.9.

d I.e., singled me out; cf. 41.9, 13; 42.6; 45.1; Jer. 31.32 [31].

e The Heb. forms here and in vv. 13 and 19 are plural to include the disciples (v. 16) and the children (v. 18).

f Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "holy"; cf. v. 13.

g-g Emendation yields "... for His holy domain [cf. Ps. 114.2] / A stone . . ."

1–4: A sign concerning the imminent destruction of Judah's enemies. The thrust of Isaiah's argument, as in ch 7 (with which it is likely to be contemporaneous) is that Ahaz need not rely on Assyrian aid. 5–8: Isaiah's reaction to Ahaz's lack of faith. Ahaz rejected the God of Zion (symbolized by the waters of the Siloam which flow from the Gihon spring immediately below the Temple Mount) and chose the Assyrians; therefore God will bring Assyrians (represented by the river Euphrates) to punish him. Alternatively, it is possible that v. 6b (printed in NJPS as part of v. 4) should be translated, "And because you rejoiced in Rezin and the son of Remaliah." In this case, these vv. are addressed not to Ahaz but to Judeans who conspire against him on behalf of the Arameans and Israelites; God will punish their infidelity to the Davidic monarch by sending the Assyrians. 7–8: The comparison of the Assyrian king to a devastating flood appears in Assyrian documents. Multitude could be translated "glory," a term also used in Assyrian descriptions of their king's terrifying power. 8: Isaiah expresses the doctrine of Zion's inviolability poetically: The Assyrians will decimate the land of Judah but not Judah's head, which is Jerusalem. 9–10: Failure awaits the plotters. The identity of the plotters is enigmatic: Are they (1) the Arameans and Israelites who attack Judah, (2) Judeans who support them against King Ahaz, (3) King Ahaz, who creates a conspiracy with the Assyrians against the Arameans and Israelites, or (4) the Assyrians who plan to take over the land of their new Judean ally—or all of these? 11–15: These vv. are linguistically and interpretively very difficult. They seem to reflect the fact that Isaiah's advice opposes all his contemporaries' perspectives: He advocates joining neither the anti-Assyrian coalition nor the Assyrians themselves. 16–18: Another obscure passage, perhaps from the end of the crisis. Isaiah's predictions had not come true in the short run: The Assy-

And a trap and a snare for those Who dwell in Jerusalem.

15 The masses shall trip over these
And shall fall and be injured,
Shall be snared and be caught.

16 Bind up the message,
Seal the instruction with My disciples."

17 So I will wait for the LORD, who is hiding His face from the House of Jacob, and I will trust in Him. 18 Here stand I and the children the LORD has given me as signs and portents in Israel from the LORD of Hosts, who dwells on Mount Zion.

19 Now, should people say to you, "Inquire of the ghosts and familiar spirits that chirp and moan; for a people may inquire of its divine beings^a—of the dead on behalf of the living—²⁰ for instruction and message," surely, for one who speaks thus there shall be no dawn. 21^b And he shall go about in it wretched and hungry; and when he is hungry, he shall rage and revolt against his king and his divine beings.^b He may turn his face upward ²² or he may look below, but behold,

Distress and darkness, ^cwith no daybreak;^c
Straitness and gloom, ^cwith no dawn.^c

23 For ^dif there were to be^d any break of day for that [land] which is in straits, only the former [king] would have brought abasement to the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali—while the later one would have brought honor to the Way of the Sea, the other side of the Jordan, and Galilee of the Nations.^e

9 The people that walked in darkness
Have seen a brilliant light;
On those who dwelt in a land of gloom
Light has dawned.

2 You have magnified that nation,
Have given it great joy;
They have rejoiced before You
As they rejoice at reaping time,
As they exult
When dividing spoil.

a i.e., the shades of the dead; cf. 1 Sam. 28.13.

b-b This sentence would read well after v. 22.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d-d So 1QIs^b; the others have "there is not."

e Meaning of verse uncertain. The rendering here assumes that "the former [king]" refers to Pekah (cf. 2 Kings 15.29) and "the later" to Hoshea (ibid. 30). For the construction lu . . .

ka'eth, see Judg. 13-23.

f See note b at 5.30.

ians did not invade Judah in Ahaz's day, and Ahaz's policy of turning to them for protection seems to have worked. Nonetheless, the prophet insists that his words would prove valid; he has them written down, bound up, and placed with his disciples for safekeeping. Ultimately it would become clear that the LORD's prophet spoke truly. During the Assyrian invasion three decades later (in the reign of Ahaz's son, Hezekiah), Isaiah's perspective was vindicated, since the Assyrians devastated Judah but did not capture Jerusalem. 19-21: A polemic against other forms of divination. It may date to the period of the Syro-Ephraimite crisis, but it could also fit many other periods. Ghosts and familiar spirits are the demigods and deified ancestors to whom some Judeans, following Canaanite and Mesopotamian religious models, turned for guidance. Cf. Lev. 20.27; Deut. 18.9-15; 1 Sam. ch 28.

8.23: An unusually obscure verse. The Assyrian king Tiglath-pileser seized lands belonging to the tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali, along with parts of Galilee and Transjordan, from the Israelite king Pekah son of Remaliah in the aftermath of the Syro-Ephraimite crisis.

9.1-6: The ideal Davidic king. Isaiah describes liberation from some form of adversity (perhaps the Assyrian conquests of Israelite territory described in the previous vv., or Syro-Ephraimite pressures on Judah). The verbs are in the past tense. Some interpreters view them as examples of the "prophetic past," which predicts future events using the past tense because they are as good as done. Thus it is not clear whether the Davidic king whose birth and rule are described (vv. 5-6) has already been born (if the verbs are a regular past tense) or will be born in the future (prophetic past). If the former, the v. probably refers to Ahaz's son Hezekiah, as many modern and rabbinic commenta-

3 For the yoke that they bore
 And the stick on their back—
 The rod of their taskmaster—
 You have broken as on the day of Midian.^a

4 Truly, all the boots put on^b to stamp with^b
 And all the garments donned in infamy
 Have been fed to the flames,
 Devoured by fire.

5 For a child has been born to us,
 A son has been given us.
 And authority has settled on his shoulders.
 He has been named
 "The Mighty God is planning grace;^c
 The Eternal Father, a peaceable ruler"^c—

6 In token of abundant authority
 And of peace without limit
 Upon David's throne and kingdom,
 That it may be firmly established
 In justice and in equity
 Now and evermore.
 The zeal of the LORD of Hosts
 Shall bring this to pass.

7 My Lord
^dLet loose a word^d against Jacob
 And it fell upon Israel.

8 But all the people noted^e—
 Ephraim and the inhabitants of Samaria—
 In arrogance and haughtiness:
 "Bricks have fallen—
 We'll rebuild with dressed stone;
 Sycamores have been felled—
 We'll grow cedars instead!"

10 So the LORD let^f the enemies of Rezin^f
 Triumph over it
 And stirred up its foes—
 Aram from the east
 And Philistia from the west—
 Who devoured Israel
 With greedy mouths.

tors believe (though other possibilities exist depending on the date of the passage). Most later readers (both Jewish and Christian) understood the passage to describe an ideal future ruler, i.e., the Messiah. 5: "The Mighty God . . . ruler": This long sentence is the throne name of the royal child. Semitic names often consist of sentences that describe God; thus the name Isaiah in Hebrew means "The LORD saves"; Hezekiah, "The LORD strengthens"; in Akkadian, the name of the Babylonian king Merodach-baladan (Isa. 39.1) means "the god Marduk has provided an heir." These names do not describe that person who holds them but the god whom the parents worship. Similarly, the name given to the child in this v. does not describe that child or attribute divinity to him, contrary to classical Christian readings of this messianic verse.

9.7–10.4: The fate of the Northern Kingdom, Israel. A repeated refrain in 9.11, 16, 21, and 10.4 structures this poem into four sections. The same refrain is found in 5.25, and scholars speculate that 5.25–30 may originally have been the poem's fifth and final section. The verbs here are in the past tense, but their significance is unclear. They may predict disasters to come (in which case the verbs exemplify "the prophetic past" described in 9.1–6 n.); alternatively they may review disasters that God already sent in an unsuccessful attempt to chasten the Northern Kingdom (in which case the prophet does not predict coming events but presents an interpretation of recent history). The verbs in 5.26–30 clearly have a future tense and represent a prediction of Assyrian invasion which ends the poem. The following remarks assume the verbs in the first four sections refer to the past and are interpretations of recent events, not predictions of upcoming ones. 7–11: The first section may refer to the earthquake that shook Israel and Judah early in Isaiah's career; cf. Amos 1.1; Zech. 14.5.

a See Judg. 7–8.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "in wickedness"; cf. Targum.

c As in 25.1.

d-d Septuagint reads "Let loose pestilence"; cf. Amos 4.10. In vv. 7–20 Isaiah alludes to and builds upon Amos 4.10–12.

e 1QIs^a reads "shouted."

f-f Emendation yields "its enemies."

Yet His anger has not turned back,
And His arm is outstretched still.

- 12 For the people has not turned back
To Him who struck it
And has not sought
The LORD of Hosts.
- 13 So the LORD will cut off from Israel
Head and tail,
Palm branch and reed,
In a single day.
- 14 Elders ^aand magnates ^a—
Such are the heads;
Prophets who give false instruction,
Such are the tails ^b
- 15 That people's leaders have been misleaders,
So they that are led have been confused.
- 16 That is why my Lord
Will not spare ^ctheir youths,
Nor show compassion
To their orphans and widows;
For all are ungodly and wicked,
And every mouth speaks impiety.
- 17 Already wickedness has blazed forth like a fire
Devouring thorn and thistle.
It has kindled the thickets of the wood,
^dWhich have turned into billowing smoke. ^d
- ^eYet His anger has not turned back,
And His arm is outstretched still. ^e

- 18 By the fury of the LORD of Hosts,
The earth was shaken. ^f
Next, the people became like devouring' fire:
No man spared his countryman.
- 19 They snatched on the right, but remained hungry,
And consumed on the left without being sated.
Each devoured the flesh of his ^gown kindred ^g—
- 20 Manasseh Ephraim's, and Ephraim Manasseh's, ^h
And both of them against Judah! ⁱ

12-17: The second section refers to the chaos in the Northern Kingdom during the coups and massacres described in the mid-740s (see 2 Kings ch 15). 18-20: The third section recalls the earthquake, political chaos, and Israel's anti-Judean policies during the Syro-Ephraimite crisis.

a-a Emendation yields "who practice partiality."

b Emendation yields "palm branches"; the elders and the prophets are the leaders, the people are the led; cf. 3.1-2, 12.

c Cf. Arabic samuḥa. 1QIs^a reads yḥmw. d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e-e Moved down from v. 16 for clarity. f Cf. note at 5.25.

g-g Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "fellow"; cf. Targum.

h Alludes to the civil wars of 2 Kings 15.10, 14-16, 25. i Cf. 7.1-9.

Yet His anger has not turned back,
And His arm is outstretched still.

10 Ha!
Those who write out evil writs
And compose iniquitous documents,
2 To subvert the cause of the poor,
To rob of their rights the needy of My people;
That widows may be their spoil,
And fatherless children their booty!
3 What will you do on the day of punishment,
When the calamity comes from afar?
To whom will you flee for help,
And how will you save your carcasses^a 4 From collapsing under [fellow] prisoners,
From falling beneath the slain?

Yet His anger has not turned back,
And his arm is outstretched still.

5 Ha!
Assyria, rod of My anger,
^bIn whose hand, as a staff, is My fury!^b
6 I send him against an ungodly nation,
I charge him against a people that provokes Me,
To take its spoil and to seize its booty
And to make it a thing trampled
Like the mire of the streets.
7 But he has evil plans,
His mind harbors evil designs;
For he means to destroy,
To wipe out nations, not a few.
8 For he thinks,
“After all, ^cI have kings as my captains!^c
9 Was Calno any different from Carchemish?
Or Hamath from Arpad?
Or Samaria from Damascus?
10 ^dSince I was able to seize
The insignificant kingdoms,
Whose images exceeded
Jerusalem’s and Samaria’s,^d

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; for “carcasses,” compare the rendering of kabod in v. 16; 22.18.

b-b Emendation yields “Who is a staff in the hand of my fury.”

c-c Emendation yields “all the kingdoms fared alike!”

d-d Emendation yields “Since I was able to seize / those kingdoms and their images, / Why is Jerusalem better than Samaria?”

10.1–4: The fourth section. As he comes to the climax of his indictment against the Northern Kingdom, the prophet returns to the theme of the rich who mistreat the poor and pervert justice for their own gain; cf. 1.17; 3.8–15; 5.8–10; 32.7.

10.5–12.6: The earth is the LORD’s: from Assyrian conquest through Assyrian collapse to universal peace. The idea of universal history guided by one God comes to the fore in this three-part composition, which describes a divine plan that affects not only Israel but all the world. This plan will manifest itself in three stages. Assyria will serve as God’s agent to punish Israel. Assyria’s self-promotion will then arouse God’s anger, so that Assyria will be punished. Finally, the peaceful era will emerge, in which an ideal Davidic king will reign justly. Repeated images connect the three sections, and each section leads directly into the next. The poem moves between specific geopolitical concerns of the 8th century and timeless ideals.

Part I. 10.5–27: The Assyrian emperor: lord of lords or pawn of the LORD? This section harkens back to the names of children earlier in the book: cf. v. 6 with 8.2–4; vv. 20–21 with 7.3 and 9.5. 5–6: God uses the Assyrian king to punish Israel. 7–15: The king arrogantly and ignorantly attributes his success to his own might. His boasting here recalls inscriptions of the Assyrian kings, with which Isaiah was familiar. Assyrian kings claimed to achieve their conquests with the aid of Ashur, the Assyrian high god, and other gods, but to Isaiah these were human creations, and thus the inscriptions glorified human inventions rather than the God whose bidding Assyrians unknowingly performed. 8: Captains is a bilingual pun: Heb “sar” is cognate to the Akkadian word for king. Vassal kings did serve the Assyrian king as military commanders or captains. 12, 16–19: The Assyrians’ hubris (and not

11 Shall I not do to Jerusalem and her images
What I did to Samaria and her idols?"

12 But when my Lord has carried out all his purpose on Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, He^a will punish the majestic pride and overbearing arrogance of the king of Assyria.

13 For he thought,

"By the might of my hand have I wrought it,
By my skill, for I am clever:
I have erased the borders of peoples;
I have plundered their treasures,
And exiled their vast populations.^b

14 I was able to seize, like a nest,
The wealth of peoples;
As one gathers abandoned eggs,
So I gathered all the earth:
Nothing so much as flapped a wing
Or opened a mouth to peep."

15 Does an ax boast over him who hews with it,
Or a saw magnify itself above him who wields it?
As though the rod raised him who lifts it,
As though the staff lifted the man!^c

16 Assuredly,
The Sovereign LORD of Hosts will send
A wasting away in its^d fatness;
And under its body^e shall burn
A burning like that of fire, ^fDestroying frame and flesh.
It shall be like a sick man who pines away.^f

17 The Light of Israel will be fire
And its Holy One flame.
It will burn and consume its thorns
And its thistles in a single day,
18 And the mass of its scrub and its farm land.
19 What trees remain of its scrub
Shall be so few that a boy may record them.

20 And in that day,
The remnant of Israel
And the escaped of the House of Jacob their attack on Israel) lead to their downfall. 19: The remnant motif is applied here to Assyria rather than to Israel. God treats Assyria like God treats Israel (here, negatively). The implication of this phenomenon is fully spelled out in 19.23-25. 20-27: Although the Assyrian defeat follows Israel's downfall, it will lead to repentance among those who survive.

^a Heb. "I."

^b According to vv. 6-7, Assyria was to plunder, but not to exile.

^c Lit. "not-wood."

^d Presumably Israel's. These verses would read well after 9.16.

^e Cf. note at v. 3.

^{f-f} Brought up from v. 18 for clarity.

Shall lean no more upon him that beats it,^a
 But shall lean sincerely
 On the LORD, the Holy One of Israel.
 21 Only a remnant shall return,
 Only a remnant of Jacob,
 To Mighty God.
 22 Even if your people, O Israel,
 Should be as the sands of the sea,
 Only a remnant of it shall return.
 Destruction is decreed;
 Retribution comes like a flood!
 23 For my Lord GOD of Hosts is carrying out
 A decree of destruction upon all the land.

²⁴ Assuredly, thus said my Lord God of Hosts: "O My people that dwells in Zion, have no fear of Assyria, who beats you with a rod and wields his staff over you as did the Egyptians. ²⁵For very soon My wrath will have spent itself, and ^bMy anger that was bent on wasting them."^b ²⁶The LORD of Hosts will brandish a scourge over him as when He beat Midian at the Rock of Oreb,^c and will wield His staff as He did over the Egyptians by the sea.

27 And in that day,
 His burden shall drop from your back,
^dAnd his yoke from your neck;
 The yoke shall be destroyed because of fatness.

28 He advanced upon Aiath,
 He proceeded to Migron,
 At Michmas he deposited his baggage.

29 They made the crossing;
 "Geba is to be our night quarters!"^d
 Ramah was alarmed;
 Gibeah of Saul took to flight.

30 "Give a shrill cry, O Bath-gallim!
 Hearken, Laishah!
 Take up the cry, Anathoth!"

31 Madmenah ran away;

26: The prophet alludes to earlier events in which God saved Israel from more powerful and numerous nations.

Part II. 10.28–34: Assyria's near-victory. Isaiah returned constantly to the theme of Jerusalem sorely threatened and suddenly saved. He predicted an event like the one described here for decades. It finally came true when Sennacherib invaded in 701. (In this passage, however, Isaiah predicts the invader will come from the north, but in fact Sennacherib approached Jerusalem from the southwest; see chs 36–39; 2 Kings chs 18–19; 2 Chron. ch 32.) The events that should follow the defeat of the arrogant empire (see the following ch) have still not come to fruition, even though Isaiah probably thought they would happen in his own lifetime.

28–32: The invader's route. He refers to the leader of the army (probably Assyrian, perhaps Syro-Ephraimite) who comes toward Jerusalem from the north. The locations that are identifiable are all within a few miles of the Old City. Anathoth is directly across a wadi from today's French Hill neighborhood. Nob is probably Mount Scopus, overlooking the Old City. 33–34: Just as the invader is about to achieve his goal, he is cut down. Cf. 29.1–8. The prophet uses the term Lebanon trees ironically: Assyrian kings boasted in inscriptions that they cut down these mighty cedars, but here Assyrians themselves become the ax's victim.

a I.e., upon Assyria (see v. 24). Ahaz's reliance on Assyria was interpreted by Isaiah as lack of faith in the LORD; see 7.13 with note.

b-b Presumably Assyria; meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "My anger against the world shall cease."

c See Judg. 7.25.

d-d Emendation yields "And his yoke shall leave your neck. / He came up from Jeshimon / ²⁸By the ascent of Aiath, / He proceeded to Migron; / At Michmas he commanded his forces: / ²⁹'Make the crossing; / Geba is to be our night quarters!'" Jeshimon is the southeast corner of the Jordan Valley, Num. 21.20; 23.28; Aiath is elsewhere called Ai.

32 The dwellers of Gebim sought refuge.
This same day at Nob
He shall stand and wave his hand.^a

O mount of Fair Zion!
O hill of Jerusalem!
33 Lo! The Sovereign LORD of Hosts
Will hew off the tree-crowns with an ax:
The tall ones shall be felled,
The lofty ones cut down:
34 The thickets of the forest shall be hacked away with iron,
And the Lebanon trees shall fall ^bin their majesty.^b

11 But a shoot shall grow out of the stump of Jesse,
A twig shall sprout from his stock.
2 The spirit of the LORD shall alight upon him:
A spirit of wisdom and insight,
A spirit of counsel and valor,
A spirit of devotion and reverence for the LORD.
3 ^cHe shall sense the truth^c by his reverence for the LORD:
He shall not judge by what his eyes behold,
Nor decide by what his ears perceive.
4 Thus he shall judge the poor with equity
And decide with justice for the lowly of the land.
He shall strike down a land^d with the rod of his mouth
And slay the wicked with the breath of his lips.
5 Justice shall be the girdle of his loins,
And faithfulness the girdle of his waist.
6 The wolf shall dwell with the lamb,
The leopard lie down with the kid;
^eThe calf, the beast of prey, and the fatling^e together,
With a little boy to herd them.
7 The cow and the bear shall graze,
Their young shall lie down together;
And the lion, like the ox, shall eat straw.
8 A babe shall play
Over a viper's hole,

Part III. 11.1-12.10. The ideal king in the peaceful future: The poem's final section is a messianic and eschatological prophecy comparable to 2.1-4 and 9.1-6. Once vain human striving for empire ends (section II), a perfect Davidic king will reign in Jerusalem, and all the world will enjoy peace and equity. 1-5: The ideal age as manifested in jurisprudence. The king will be endowed with prophetic insight. 1: Jesse was King David's father; the shoot . . . out of the stump of Jesse is a king from David's dynasty. The imagery of the previous section continues here, linking the second and third sections of the poem. Whereas the high trees representing Assyria's imperial haughtiness will be cut down to size (10.33-34), real strength will emerge from the lowest part—the stock (lit. "roots")—of the humble tree representing David's dynasty. Isaiah's insistence on humility and displeasure with human conceit determine the contrast between the images of trees in 11.1 and 10.33-34; cf. 2.2-4.6. If the translation stump is correct, then this passage may presume that the Davidic dynasty will (or has) come to an end; this reading would deviate significantly from Isaiah's notion that Davidic kings will reign eternally (cf. 2 Sam. 7.8-16; Ps. 89.20-37). But the Heb "geza" refers not only to a stump of a tree that has been cut down but also to the trunk of a living tree. The latter translation does not presuppose the dynasty's downfall. 4: The messianic age will not be perfect; some people will still be poor, others ruthless or wicked. The difference from the current age will lie, rather, in the king's response to these problems: He will always render accurate and fair judgments. Cf. 2.2-4, where conflicts among nations continue but are settled nonviolently. 6-9: The ideal age as manifested in nature.

a i.e., the Assyrian king, arriving at Nob (close to Jerusalem), shall beckon his army onward; cf. 13.2.

b-b Or "by the bronze," connecting Heb. 'addir with Akkadian urudu, "bronze."

c-c Lit. "His sensing [shall be]"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d Emendation yields "the ruthless."

e-e 1QIs^a reads: "The calf and the beast of prey shall feed"; so too the Septuagint.

And an infant pass^a his hand
Over an adder's den.

9 In all of ^bMy sacred mount^b
Nothing evil or vile shall be done;
For the land shall be filled with devotion to the LORD
As water covers the sea.

10 In that day,
The stock of Jesse that has remained standing
Shall become a standard to peoples—
Nations shall seek his counsel
And his abode shall be honored.

¹¹In that day, my Lord will apply His hand again to redeeming the other part^c of His people from Assyria—as also from Egypt, Pathros, Nubia, Elam, Shinar, Hamath, and the coastlands.

12 He will hold up a signal to the nations
And assemble the banished of Israel,
And gather the dispersed of Judah
From the four corners of the earth.

13 Then Ephraim's envy shall cease
And Judah's harassment shall end;
Ephraim shall not envy Judah,
And Judah shall not harass Ephraim.

14 They shall pounce on the back of Philistia to the west,
And together plunder the peoples of the east;
Edom and Moab shall be subject to them
And the children of Ammon shall obey them.

¹⁵The LORD will dry up the tongue of the Egyptian sea.—He will raise His hand over the Euphrates with the might^a of His wind and break it into seven wadis, so that it can be trodden dry-shod. ¹⁶Thus there shall be a highway for the other part^c of His people out of Assyria, such as there was for Israel when it left the land of Egypt.

12 In that day, you shall say:
"I give thanks to You, O LORD!
Although You were wroth with me,
Your wrath has turned back and You comfort me,
2 Behold the God who gives me triumph!

10–16: The ideal age as manifested in Israel's relationship to other nations. 10: As in 2.2–4, nations come to Jerusalem to receive instructions. The Davidic king will act as the prophetic conduit through whom responses to the nations' inquiries will come. 11–16: The ingathering of exiles, which is compared to the exodus from Egypt. Some view this passage as dating to the Babylonian exile (which began in 597, long after Isaiah's death) or thereafter. Northern Israelites had already been exiled in Isaiah's lifetime, however, and Isaiah predicted that many Judeans outside Jerusalem would be exiled by the Assyrians. 11: The list of nations is found in Assyrian texts much earlier than 597. Thus some see no reason to deny Isaiah's authorship of vv. 11–16. The other part, or "remnant." Elsewhere in Isaiah this term refers to Judeans who, having survived Assyrian invasion, remain in the land of Israel. Its use here to refer to exiles who return to the land of Israel is unique and may support the suggestion that these vv. are a later addition. 13: Ephraim and Judah refer to the Northern and Southern Kingdoms, whose relationship reached a low point during the Syro-Ephraimite crisis (see 7.1–8.23 n.). 14: This is one of the only verses in First Isaiah that anticipates the Israelites and Judeans taking vengeance on their enemies. It contradicts not only the prediction of a nonviolent messianic age earlier in this ch but the consistent rejection of national revenge in Isaiah's prophecies. It may shed additional doubt on Isaianic authorship of vv. 11–16. 12.1–6: A song of thanksgiving to the ideal age. Many of these phrases occur in other songs of thanksgiving, especially those associated with the exodus from Egypt. Cf. v. 2 with Exod. 15.2 and Ps. 118.14; cf. v. 4 with Ps. 105.1 and 148.13. Isaiah or a later editor may have capped this section with quotations from these and other well-known hymns.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b I.e., the Holy Land; cf. Exod. 15.17; Ps. 78.54.
c I.e., the part outside the Holy Land; lit. "the rest that will remain."

I am confident, unafraid;
For Yah the LORD is my strength and might,^a
And He has been my deliverance."

- 3 Joyfully shall you draw water
From the fountains of triumph,
4 And you shall say on that day:
"Praise the LORD, proclaim His name.
Make His deeds known among the peoples;
Declare that His name is exalted.
5 Hymn the LORD,
For He has done gloriously;
Let this be made known
In all the world!
6 Oh, shout for joy,
You who dwell in Zion!
For great in your midst
Is the Holy One of Israel."

13 The "Babylon" Pronouncement, a prophecy of Isaiah son of Amoz.

- 2 "Raise a standard upon a bare hill,
Cry aloud to them;
Wave a hand, and let them enter
The gates of the nobles!
3 I have summoned My purified guests
To execute My wrath;
Behold, I have called My stalwarts,
My proudly exultant ones."^b
4 Hark! a tumult on the mountains—
As of^c a mighty force;
Hark! an uproar of kingdoms,
Nations assembling!
The LORD of Hosts is mustering
A host for war.
5 They come from a distant land,
From the end of the sky—
The LORD with the weapons of His wrath—
To ravage all the earth!
6 How!
For the day of the LORD is near;

Chs 13–23: Oracles concerning various nations. Most of the individual oracles within this section begin with the word "masa'," meaning "oracle" or "pronouncement" (others, "burden"). This section includes prophecies by Isaiah supplemented by later texts. Similar collections that draw together prophecies of many nations' downfall appear in other prophetic books, and are often called "oracles against the nations." See Jer. chs 46–51; Ezek. chs 25–32; Amos 1.3–2.6; Zeph. 2.4–15; and Obadiah.

13.1–22: An oracle concerning the destruction of Babylonia. This oracle assumes that Babylonia, rather than Assyria, is the world power. Hence it is addressed to an exilic audience in the mid-6th century, not to the 8th-century audience of Isaiah son of Amoz.

13.1: Superscription. The oracle, and hence chs 13–23 as a whole, begins with its own superscription; cf. the superscriptions in 1.1 and 2.1.

13.2–22: The oracle. 2–5: The gathering of the armies that will defeat Babylonia. 6–16: The Day of the LORD. The upcoming defeat of the Babylonians will be a cosmic event, which Israel's prophets have long anticipated, involving the punishment of God's enemies. Cf., for example, Isa. chs 22 and 34; Ezek. chs 7 and 30; Joel chs 2–3; Amos 5.18–20; Zeph. ch 1. In this oracle, the enemy is Babylonia, while in other Day of the LORD texts Israel is punished.

^a Others "song."

^b The impending slaughter is spoken of as a sacrificial meal, for which the guests were notified to purify themselves ritually; cf. Zeph. 1.7.

^c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

It shall come like havoc from Shaddai.^a 7 Therefore all hands shall grow limp,
 And all men's hearts shall sink;
 8 And, overcome by terror,
 They shall be seized by pangs and throes,
 Writhe like a woman in travail.
 They shall gaze at each other in horror,
 Their faces ^blivid with fright.^b
 9 Lo! The day of the LORD is coming
 With pitiless fury and wrath,
 To make the earth a desolation,
 To wipe out the sinners upon it.
 10 The stars and constellations of heaven
 Shall not give off their light;
 The sun shall be dark when it rises,
 And the moon shall diffuse no glow.
 11 "And I will requite to the world its evil,
 And to the wicked their iniquity;
 I will put an end to the pride of the arrogant
 And humble the haughtiness of tyrants.
 12 I will make people scarcer than fine gold,
 And men than gold of Ophir."
 13 Therefore ^cshall heaven be shaken,^c
 And earth leap out of its place,
 At the fury of the LORD of Hosts
 On the day of His burning wrath.
 14 Then like gazelles that are chased,
 And like sheep that no man gathers,
 Each man shall turn back to his people,
 They shall flee every one to his land.
 15 All who remain shall be pierced through,
 All who ^dare caught^d
 Shall fall by the sword.
 16 And their babes shall be dashed to pieces in their sight,
 Their homes shall be plundered,
 And their wives shall be raped.
 17 "Behold,
 I stir up the Medes against them,
 Who do not value silver

17-22: The text becomes more specific, attributing the coming destruction of Babylonia to the Medes (v. 17), a people who lived east of Babylonia in today's Iran. The kingdom of the Medes was conquered by the Persian king Cyrus, who was hence known as king of the Persians and Medes. He conquered Babylon in 539 BCE, but contrary to what vv. 19-22 anticipate, he did not destroy the city.
19: The Chaldeans were a tribe who became increasingly influential in Babylonia starting in the 8th century; consequently the Bible often uses the term Chaldean as a synonym for Babylonian.

a Traditionally rendered "the Almighty."

b-b Taking the root lhb as a variant of bhl: others "shall be faces of flame."

c-c Lit. "I will shake heaven."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "flee."

Or delight in gold.

18 Their bows shall shatter the young;
They shall show no pity to infants,
They shall not spare the children."

19 And Babylon, glory of kingdoms,
Proud splendor of the Chaldeans,
Shall become like Sodom and Gomorrah
Overturned by God.

20 Nevermore shall it be settled
Nor dwelt in through all the ages.
No Arab shall pitch his tent there,
No shepherds make flocks lie down there.

21 But beasts^a shall lie down there,
And the houses be filled with owls;^a
There shall ostriches make their home,
And there shall satyrs dance.

22 And jackals^a shall abide in its castles
And dragons^a in the palaces of pleasure.
Her hour is close at hand;
Her days will not be long.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Places mentioned in the oracles against the nations

14 But the LORD will pardon Jacob, and will again choose Israel, and will settle them on their own soil. And strangers shall join them and shall cleave to the House of Jacob. ²For peoples shall take them^a and bring them to their homeland; and the House of Israel shall possess them^b as slaves and handmaids on the soil of the LORD. They shall be captors of their captors and masters to their taskmasters.

³And when the LORD has given you rest from your sorrow and trouble, and from the hard service that you were made to serve, ⁴you shall recite this song of scorn over the king of Babylon:

How is the taskmaster vanished,
How is oppression^c ended!

⁵ The LORD has broken the staff of the wicked,
The rod of tyrants,

⁶ That smote peoples in wrath
With stroke unceasing,
That belabored nations in fury
In relentless pursuit.

⁷ All the earth is calm, untroubled;
Loudly it cheers.

⁸ Even pines rejoice at your fate,
And cedars of Lebanon:
"Now that you have lain down,
None shall come up to fell us."

⁹ Sheol below was astir
To greet your coming—
Rousing for you the shades
Of all earth's chieftains,
Raising from their thrones
All the kings of nations.

¹⁰ All speak up and say to you,
"So you have been stricken as we were,
You have become like us!

¹¹ Your pomp is brought down to Sheol,
And the strains of your lutes!
Worms are to be your bed,
Maggots your blanket!"

¹² How are you fallen from heaven,
O Shining One, son of Dawn!^d

a I.e., the House of Jacob. b I.e., the peoples.

c Reading marhebah with 1QIs^a (cf. Septuagint). The traditional reading madhebah is of unknown meaning. d A character in some lost myth.

14.1–23: A mock lament concerning Israel's oppressor. The poem in vv. 4b–21 describes the ignominious death of an Assyrian monarch of Isaiah's time, probably Sargon II, who was killed in battle in 705. It was later reinterpreted as predicting the death of a Babylonian monarch. 1–4a: This introduction to Isaiah's poem was added by an editor during the time of the Babylonian exile (597–539).

4a–23: Each Heb line in this poem divides into two halves, the first with three main beats, the second with two. This meter, often called qinah (dirge) meter, is typical of dirges (such as 1.21–27 and the poems in the book of Lamentations); it also occurs, as here, in mock laments (another such mock lament is found in Isa. ch 47).

4b–8: The whole world is relieved at the death of the Assyrian king, whose brutality was renowned.

8: In their inscriptions Assyrian kings often boast of their expeditions to cut down *pin*es and cedars in Lebanon. Here, as in 10.7–15 and 10.33–34, Isaiah turns the Assyrians' own rhetoric against them.

9–11: The king arrives in Sheol, or the underworld, and his pretensions to power are mocked by the other kings there; he had ruled over kings, but now he is stuck beneath the earth just as they are.

Many ancient Semites and pre-classical Greeks believed that the dead dwelt in unpleasant conditions underground; the fate of the dead there depended in large part on whether the corpse received a proper burial. Whether Isaiah shared this conception of a shadowy life after death or merely uses the well-known motif as a literary convention is unclear. On notions of life after death in the Tanakh and ancient Judaism, see 26.19 n.

12–15: The king's vain aspirations to god-like status are mocked. Isaiah refers ironically to the king as Shining One, son of Dawn, applying to him the name of a character from ancient Canaanite myth. (The term Shining One is not known from Canaanite texts, but his father, Dawn, is described in Canaanite myth as a son of the high

How are you felled to earth,
O vanquisher of nations!

- 13 Once you thought in your heart,
"I will climb to the sky;
Higher than the stars of God
I will set my throne.
I will sit in the mount of assembly,^a
On the summit of Zaphon:^b
14 I will mount the back of a cloud—
I will match the Most High."
15 Instead, you are brought down to Sheol,
To "the bottom of the Pit."^c
16 They who behold you stare;
They peer at you closely:
"Is this the man
Who shook the earth,
Who made realms tremble,
17 Who made the world like a waste
And wrecked its towns,
"Who never released his prisoners to their homes?"
18 All the kings of nations
Were laid, every one, in honor^d
Each in his tomb;
19 While you were left lying unburied,
Like loathsome carrion,^e
Like a trampled corpse
[In] the clothing of slain gashed by the sword
Who sink to the very stones of the Pit.
20 You shall not have a burial like them;
Because you destroyed "your country,
Murdered your people."^f

Let the breed of evildoers
Nevermore be named!
21 Prepare a slaughtering block for his sons
Because of the guilt of their father.^g
Let them not arise to possess the earth!
Then the world's face shall be covered with towns.

god El. The name closely recalls Phaethon son of Eos [or "radiant one" son of "Dawn"] in Greek mythology. Phaethon, a presumptuous young god, was thrown down to earth by Zeus.) This character seems to have attempted to join the head of the pantheon, whether this was El (who was known in Canaanite texts as Most High) or Baal (whose palace was located on the summit of Mount Zaphon); Isaiah seems to mix the characteristics of these two Canaanite deities in his allusion to the myth. Similar references to a Canaanite myth in which an overreaching god is expelled from heaven occur in Ezek. ch 28 and Ps. 82, and possibly in Gen. 6.1–4. Rabbinic commentators identify the term Shining One with the morning star (the planet Venus, which is sometimes visible on the horizon at dawn). Indeed, the mythological figure to whom this poem refers may have been associated with the morning star in ancient Canaanite myth. 16–21: The fate of the king's body. Denied a proper burial, he is condemned to the most miserable fate in the underworld.

a I.e., the assembly of the gods in council. b The abode of the gods; cf. Ps. 48.3.

c-c A region of the netherworld reserved for those who have not received decent burial; cf. Ezek. 32.21 ff.

d-d Emendation yields "Who chained to his palace gate / All the kings of nations? / Yet they were all laid in honor . . ." The practice of chaining captive chieftains to gates is attested in Mesopotamia.

e So several ancient versions; cf. postbiblical nešel, "putrefying flesh or blood."

f-f Emendation yields ". . . countries, / Murdered peoples." g Heb. "fathers."

²²I will rise up against them—declares the LORD of Hosts—and will wipe out from Babylon name and remnant, kith and kin—declares the LORD—²³and I will make it a home of bitterns,^a pools of water. I will sweep it with a broom of extermination—declares the LORD of Hosts.

²⁴ The LORD of Hosts has sworn this oath:
 “As I have designed, so shall it happen;
 What I have planned, that shall come to pass:
²⁵ To break Assyria in My land,
 To crush him on My mountain.”^b
 And his yoke shall drop off them,
 And his burden shall drop from their^c backs.
²⁶ That is the plan that is planned
 For all the earth;
 That is why an arm is poised
 Over all the nations.
²⁷ For the LORD of Hosts has planned,
 Who then can foil it?
 It is His arm that is poised,
 And who can stay it?

²⁸This pronouncement was made in the year that King Ahaz died:

²⁹ Rejoice not, all Philistia,
 Because the staff of him that beat you is broken.
 For from the stock of a snake there sprouts an asp,
 A flying seraph^d branches out from it.
³⁰ *The first-born of the poor shall graze^e
 And the destitute lie down secure.
 ‘I will kill your stock by famine,^f
 And it shall slay the very last of you.
³¹ Howl, O gate; cry out, O city;
 Quake, all Philistia!
 *For a stout one is coming from the north
 And there is no straggler in his ranks.^g ³² And what will he answer the messengers of any nation?

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Heb. “mountains”; for the designation of the entire land of Israel as the LORD’s mountain, cf. 11.9.

c Heb. “his.” The last two lines of this verse would read well after v. 26.

d Others “fiery serpent”; cf. Num. 21.6, 8.

e-e Emendation yields “The poor shall graze in his pasture.” This line and the next would read well after v. 32.

f-f Emendation yields “It shall kill your offspring with its venom (zar’ekh berosho).”

g-g Meaning of Heb. uncertain; the rendering “stout one” is suggested by the Syriac ‘ashshin.

22–23: A later editor added these lines to the original poem by Isaiah to connect it to the hoped-for destruction of Babylon.

14.24–27: A short prophecy on the downfall of Assyria, which Isaiah predicts (wrongly, as it turned out) will occur in a climactic battle to take place in the land of Israel. Cf. the similar prophecies in 10.5–15.

14.28–32: A short oracle concerning the Philistines. The sad and surprising fate of the Philistines after the death of an Assyrian ruler is contrasted with the security Zion will enjoy.

That Zion has been established by the LORD:
In it, the needy of His people shall find shelter.

15 The "Moab" Pronouncement.

Ah, in the night Ar was sacked,
Moab was ruined;
Ah, in the night Kir was sacked,
Moab was ruined.

2 He went up to the temple to weep,
Dibon^a [went] to the outdoor shrines.
Over Nebo and Medeba
Moab is wailing;
On every head is baldness,
Every beard is shorn.

3 In its streets, they are girt with sackcloth;
On its roofs, in its squares,
Everyone is wailing,
Streaming with tears.

4 Heshbon and Elealeh cry out,
Their voice carries to Jahaz.
Therefore,
^bThe shock troops of Moab shout,^b
His body is convulsed.

5 My heart cries out for Moab—
His fugitives flee down to Zoar,
To Eglath-shelishiyah.
For the ascent of Luhith
They ascend with weeping;
On the road to Horonaim
They raise a cry of anguish.

6 Ah, the waters of Nimrim
Are become a desolation;
The grass is sear,
The herbage is gone,
Vegetation is vanished.

7 Therefore,
The gains they have made, and their stores,
They carry to the Wadi of Willows.

8 Ah, the cry has compassed
The country of Moab:

15.1–16.14: An oracle concerning Moab, with an addendum. Moab was the land immediately east of the Dead Sea. The Moabites, according to Gen. 19.36–37, were descended from Abraham's nephew Lot and are thus related to the Israelites, but relations between the two nations were usually tense (see, e.g., Num. 22.1–6; Judg. ch 3; 2 Kings ch 3). 15.1–16.12: A prediction of Moab's imminent defeat. The prediction is expressed in a lament: The author "mourns" over an event that will soon occur. (Alternatively, the poem may have been composed as a real lament after Moab was defeated by some invader.)

15.1–4: The suffering of Moab. Ar, Kir, Dibon, Nebo, and Medeba are locations in Moab. 5–9: More descriptions of the distress of the Moabites, who flee toward Edom, the land immediately south of Moab. Zoar, Luhith, Horonaim, and Nimrim are located in southwestern Moab, near the Edomite border. These vv. seem to trace the path of the Moabite refugees on their way to Edom.

^a Regarded as the principal city of Moab.

^{b-b} Change of vocalization yields "The loins of Moab are trembling."

All the way to Eglaim her wailing,
Even at Beer-elim her wailing!

9 Ah, the waters of Dimon are full of blood^a
For I pour added [water] on Dimon;
I drench^b it—for Moab's refugees—
With soil^c for its remnant.

16^d Dispatch as messenger
The ruler of the land,
From Sela in the wilderness
To the mount of Fair Zion:
2 "Like fugitive birds,
Like nestlings driven away,
Moab's villagers linger
By the fords of the Arnon.
3 Give advice,
^eOffer counsel.^e
At high noon make
Your shadow like night:
Conceal the outcasts,
Betray not the fugitives.
4 Let ^fMoab's outcasts^f
Find asylum in you;
Be a shelter for them
Against the despoiler."^g

For violence has vanished,
Rapine is ended,
And marauders have perished from this land.
5 And a throne shall be established in goodness
In the tent of David,
And on it shall sit in faithfulness
A ruler devoted to justice
And zealous for equity.^g

6 "We have heard of Moab's pride—
Most haughty is he—
Of his pride and haughtiness and arrogance,
And of the iniquity in him."^h

16.1–5: The Moabite refugees in Edom send a message to the Judean king, seeking haven or aid. Sela (which means "rock") is an Edomite city, perhaps the city now known as Petra (which is Greek for "rock"). 2: This v. may belong after 15.9; it describes the Moabite refugees lingering at the river Arnon while they were still in Moab on their way to Edom. 6: The Judeans respond to the Moabites' request. 16.13–14: A later addition; apparently the event predicted in 15.1–16.12 did not come to pass, and Isaiah asserts that the expected defeat of Moab will in fact occur soon. It is possible that 15.1–16.12 were written before Isaiah's time, and that Isaiah reused the text, adding 16.13–14 to relate the older lament or prediction to his own time. Jer. ch 48 is based on 15.1–16.12; there this oracle is expanded and reworked.

^a Emendation yields "tears." ^b Cf. 16.9.

^c Emendation yields "tears"; cf. Ugaritic 'dm't.

^d Meaning of vv. 1 and 2 uncertain.

^{e-e} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^{f-f} Heb. "my outcasts, Moab."

^g 14.32, above, would read well here.

^h Baddaw is a suffixed form of the preposition bede: Nah. 2.13; Hab. 2.13; Job 39.25; with suffixes, Job 11.3, 41.4.

- 7 Ah, let Moab howl;
Let all in Moab howl!
For the raisin-cakes^a of Kir-hareseth
You shall moan most pitifully.
- 8 The vineyards of Heshbon are withered,
And the vines of Sibmah;
^bTheir tendrils spread
To Baale-goiim,^b
And reached to Jazer,
And strayed to the desert;
Their shoots spread out
And crossed the sea.
- 9 Therefore,
As I weep for Jazer,
So I weep for Sibmah's vines;
O Heshbon and Elealeh,
I drench you with my tears.
^cEnded are the shouts
Over your fig and grain harvests.^c
- 10 Rejoicing and gladness
Are gone from the farm land;
In the vineyards no shouting
Or cheering is heard.
No more does the treader
Tread wine in the presses—
The shouts ^dhave been silenced.^d
- 11 Therefore,
Like a lyre my heart moans for Moab,
And my very soul for Kir-heres.

7-11: The lament for the Moabites continues; here as in ch 15 the genuine sympathy of the Judean author (in contrast to the official Judean response in 16.6) is evident. Heshbon, Jazer, and Elealah are places in Moab; the other locations are not known, but they must lie within Moab as well. 12: This line may be part of the lament that begins in 16.7; or it may be the writer's suggestion regarding the refuge the Moabites request: Allow them to enter Judah, but not to pray at the Temple in Jerusalem (translating: "When Moab appears at the high place, and they weary themselves [there], they will come to His Temple to pray, but they shall not be allowed"). 13-14: The older text in 15.1-16.12 is applied to Isaiah's present situation: Moab will be destroyed within three years. Long ago means merely "in the past," whether recent or distant. It is even possible that Isaiah himself authored the older text, and that he subsequently composed this addendum when his original prophecy did not come to pass. Cf. 8.16-18, which seems to reflect Isaiah's reaction to the apparent failure of his predictions earlier in chs 7-8.

¹²And when it has become apparent that Moab has gained nothing in the outdoor shrine, he shall come to pray in his temple—but to no avail.

¹³That is the word that the LORD spoke concerning Moab long ago. ¹⁴And now the LORD has spoken: In three years, fixed like the years of a hired laborer, Moab's population, with all its huge multitude, shall shrink. Only a remnant shall be left, of no consequence.

a Jer. 48.36 has "men."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Jer. 48.32 reads "A ravager has come down / Upon your fig and grape harvests."

d-d Lit. "I have silenced."

17 The “Damascus” Pronouncement.

Behold,
Damascus shall cease to be a city;
It shall become a heap of ruins.

2 ^aThe towns of Aroer shall be deserted;^a
They shall be a place for flocks
To lie down, with none disturbing.

3 Fortresses shall cease from Ephraim,^b
And sovereignty from Damascus;
The remnant of Aram shall become Like the mass of Israelites —declares the LORD of Hosts.

4 In that day,
The mass of Jacob shall dwindle,
And the fatness of his body become lean:
5 After being like the standing grain
Harvested by the reaper—
Who reaps ears by the armful—
He shall be like the ears that are gleaned
In the Valley of Rephaim.
6 Only gleanings shall be left of him,
As when one beats an olive tree:
Two berries or three on the topmost branch,
Four or five ^con the boughs of the crown^c
—declares the LORD, the God of Israel.

7 In that day, men shall turn to their Maker, their eyes look to the Holy One of Israel; ⁸they shall not turn to the altars that their own hands made, or look to the sacred posts and incense stands that their own fingers wrought.

⁹In that day, their fortress cities shall be like the deserted sites which ^dthe Horesh and the Amir^d abandoned because of the Israelites; and there shall be desolation.

10 Truly, you have forgotten the God who saves you
And have not remembered the Rock who shelters
you;
That is why, though you plant a delightful^e
sapling,
What you sow proves a disappointing slip.

a-a Emendation yields (cf. Septuagint) “Its towns shall be deserted forevermore.”

b Emendation yields “Aram.”

c-c Lit. “on her boughs, the many-branched one.”

d-d Septuagint reads “the Amorites and the Hivites.”

e Emendation yields “true.” So Vulgate (cf. Septuagint); cf. Jer. 2.21.

17.1–14: An oracle concerning Damascus and the Northern Kingdom. This ch addresses the Syro-Ephraimite crisis, which took place in 735 BCE. This crisis is described in 7.1–8.23, and the background provided concerning those chs above should be consulted when reading this ch as well. This ch concerns not only Damascus (capital of Syria or Aram) but also their allies, the northern Israelites or Ephraimites, and the Assyrian empire against whom the Arameans (or Syrians) and Ephraimites revolted. 1–6: As in chs 7–8, the downfalls of Damascus and Ephraim are predicted. The instrument of their destruction, the Assyrian empire, is not specified here. 2: Several cities called Aroer are known in the Bible, but none are located in Aram, which is the main focus of vv. 1–3. Hence the emendation mentioned in translators’ note b seems likely. 7–8: A reflection on the effect these events will have on humanity generally; as elsewhere (2.1–4; 19.19–25), Isaiah maintains that God’s intervention in political events will lead to an era in which humans universally acknowledge the one God. The Heb word translated here as men is “ha-’adam,” which refers to human beings generally, not necessarily limited to Israelites or males. 9: A continuation of the prophecy in vv.1–6 concerning the downfall of Israel and Aram, which will be emptied of their populations. 10–11: A rebuke specifically directed toward the Israelites, who ally with Arameans rather than depending on God. Interestingly, these vv. also could be directed against Ahaz, the Judean king at the time of the Syro-Ephraimite crisis: He, too, relied on human saviors (the Assyrians) rather than God. Cf. Isaiah’s criticism of Ahaz in 8.5–8. 10: Delightful sapling, alternatively, “gardens for Adonis” or “gardens for the Delightful One.” Some believe that this v. describes gardens planted in honor of a Semitic deity of vegetation (variously known as Dumuzi, Tammuz, or Baal, and called Adonis by the Greeks). Semites be-

11 On the day that you plant, you see it grow;
 On the morning you sow, you see it bud—
 But the branches wither away
 On a day of sickness and mortal agony.

12 Ah, the roar of many peoples
 That roar as roars the sea,
 The rage of nations that rage
 As rage the mighty waters—

13 Nations raging like massive waters!
 But He shouts at them, and they flee far away,
 Driven like chaff before winds in the hills,
 And like tumbleweed before a gale.

14 At eventide, lo, terror!
 By morning, it is no more.
 Such is the lot of our despoilers,
 The portion of them that plunder us.

18 Ah,
^aland in the deep shadow of wings,^a
 Beyond the rivers of Nubia!

2 Go, swift messengers,
 To a nation ^bfar and remote,
 To a people thrust forth and away^b—
 A nation of gibber and chatter^c—
 Whose land is cut off by streams;
^dWhich sends out envoys by sea,
 In papyrus vessels upon the water!^d

3 [Say this:]
 "All you who live in the world
 And inhabit the earth,
 When a flag is raised in the hills, take note!
 When a ram's horn is blown, give heed!"

4 For thus the LORD said to me:
 "I rest calm and confident^e in My habitation—
 Like a scorching heat upon sprouts, ^fLike a rain-cloud in the heat of reaping time."^f

a-a Or "Most sheltered land"; cf., e.g., 30.2, 3; Ps. 36.8; 57.2; 61.5.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; cf. 28.10. Biblical writers often characterize distant nations by their unintelligible speech; cf. 33.19; Deut. 28.49; Jer. 5.15.

d-d Brought down from beginning of verse for clarity. The Hebrew verb for "sends" agrees in gender with "nation," not with "land."

e Cf. hibbit "to rely" (Job 6.19). The related noun mabbaṭ occurs with similar meaning in Isa. 20.5, 6.

f-f I.e., like a threat of disaster; cf. Eccl. 11.4.

lieved that this god, like the grass or flowers in the desert, springs to life each year during the rainy season and dies during the summer. The Israelites were both unfaithful and self-defeating in their reliance on this false deity. 12–14: The terrifying arrival and sudden defeat of the enemy. These vv. may refer to the coming arrival of the Syro-Ephraimite forces in Jerusalem; they may also (or alternatively) be intended to predict the arrival of Assyrian forces there. Cf. 8.5–8; 29.1–8. The description matches the surprising withdrawal of Assyrian forces in 701 BCE, three decades after the Syro-Ephraimite crisis (see 10.28–34 n.). Isaiah may have issued the prediction as early as the Syro-Ephraimite crisis in 735, thinking (mistakenly) that the Assyrians would overrun Judah then, even though it did not come true until 701. The comparison of an invading army to raging waters appears frequently in Assyrian propaganda of Isaiah's day.

18.1–7: An oracle concerning the Ethiopians. The setting, background, and meaning of this passage are not clear. Nubia (Heb "Kush") is the area south of Egypt, sometimes referred to as Ethiopia. In the late 700s and early 600s Egypt was ruled by Ethiopian pharaohs. This ch probably refers to diplomatic and military moves in which these Ethiopian pharaohs play the central role. 1–3: Judah sends messengers to the Ethiopians, responding to ambassadors who had been sent to Judah. The Ethiopian ruler of Egypt may have been encouraging a revolt against the Assyrians. 3–6: Isaiah encourages the Judeans to send a negative response to the anti-Assyrian overtures: Judah is safe, since the LORD is calm and confident in (His) habitation, the Temple Mount in Jerusalem. This passage reflects on the Isaianic notion of the inviolability of Zion. Because the LORD is present in His Temple, Jerusalem will never fall, and therefore the Judeans need not depend on alliances with other nations for their safety. Cf. 1.8–9; 7.2–9; 8.8.

- 5 For before the harvest,^a yet after the budding,
When the blossom has hardened into berries,
He will trim away the twigs with pruning hooks,
And lop off the trailing branches.^b
- 6 They shall all be left
To the kites of the hills
And to the beasts of the earth;
The kites shall summer on them
And all the beasts of the earth shall winter on them.
- 7 In that time,
Tribute shall be brought to the LORD of Hosts
[From] a people far and remote,
From a people thrust forth and away—
A nation of gibber and chatter,
Whose land is cut off by streams—
At the place where the name of the LORD of Hosts abides,
At Mount Zion.

19 The “Egypt” Pronouncement.

- Mounted on a swift cloud,
The LORD will come to Egypt;
Egypt’s idols shall tremble before Him,
And the heart of the Egyptians shall sink within
them.
- 2 “I will incite Egyptian against Egyptian:
They shall war with each other,
Every man with his fellow,
City with city
And kingdom with kingdom.^c
- 3 Egypt shall be drained of spirit,
And I will confound its plans;
So they will consult the idols and the shades
And the ghosts and the familiar spirits.
- 4 And I will place the Egyptians
At the mercy of a harsh master,
And a ruthless king shall rule them”
—declares the Sovereign, the LORD of Hosts.
- 5 Water shall fail from the seas,
Rivers dry up and be parched,

4–6: The imagery describes the defeat of what had seemed a strong and promising empire, probably the Assyrians. Kites, a bird of prey; a better translation might be “vultures” or “carrion eaters,” since the birds will be devouring the corpses littering the hills. 7: The defeat of the enemy will lead to worldwide recognition of the God of Mount Zion.

19.1–24: A universalist oracle concerning Egypt. Like other oracles concerning the nations, this ch begins by describing the troubles with which God will afflict Egypt. It continues, however, by viewing these troubles as identical to the troubles with which God afflicts Israel: They will lead the Egyptians to recognize the one true God. The ch ends with a remarkably universalist perspective.

1–18: Divine judgment against Egypt. The first section of the ch is negative in tone and poetic in structure. 1–10: These vv. describe the collapse of Egypt’s gods (vv. 1, 3), political stability (vv. 2–4), physical environment (vv. 5–7), and economy (vv. 8–10). 4: The divine punishment will involve a foreigner coming to rule over Egypt; this v. may refer to the Ethiopian dynasty that took control of Egypt in the late 8th century (which is described in the previous ch) or, more likely, to an Assyrian invasion (which is also described in the next ch). 5–6: The seas: Heb is singular and refers to the Nile, which is wide enough to be called a sea during the flood season. In Egypt, agriculture, transportation, and hence life in general depended on the Nile and its canals.

a Emendation yields “vintage.” b A figure of speech for the defeated enemy.
c I.e., the various districts of Egypt, which in Isaiah’s time were governed by hereditary princes.

6 Channels turn foul as they ebb,
And Egypt's canals run dry.
Reed and rush shall decay,
7 *And the Nile papyrus by the Nile-side^a
And everything sown by the Nile
Shall wither, blow away, and vanish.
8 The fishermen shall lament;
All who cast lines in the Nile shall mourn,
And those who spread nets on the water shall languish.
9 The flax workers, too, shall be dismayed,
Both carders and weavers chagrined.^b
10^c Her foundations shall be crushed,
And all who make dams shall be despondent.

11 Utter fools are the nobles of Tanis;
The sage of Pharaoh's advisers
[Have made] absurd predictions.
How can you say to Pharaoh,
"I am a scion of sages,
A scion of Kedemite kings"?^d
12 Where, indeed, are your sages?
Let them tell you, let them discover
What the LORD of Hosts has planned against Egypt.
13 The nobles of Tanis have been fools,
The nobles of Memphis deluded;
Egypt has been led astray
By the chiefs of her tribes.
14 The LORD has mixed within her
A spirit of distortion,
Which shall lead Egypt astray in all her undertakings
As a vomiting drunkard goes astray;
15 Nothing shall be achieved in Egypt
By either head or tail,
Palm branch or reed.^e

10–15: The Egyptians rely on their traditional wisdom. Consequently, they fail to understand the cause of their troubles, which come directly from the one God of Israel. Tanis and Memphis were leading cities in ancient Egypt. 16–17: The Egyptians come to realize that the God of Israel is the source of their troubles, and hence also of their salvation. 18–25: Divine grace toward Egypt. This section describes the outcome of the inducements to change with which God afflicted the Egyptians. The style of this section differs from the first one, moving from poetry of rebuke to a series of prose oracles that are positive in nature. 18–22: These vv. describe how the Egyptians will accept the one God and become His servants, just as the Israelites are. Thus they link up with texts such as 2.1–4 and 11.10. These passages share a vision of a new world order: Ethnicities will remain distinct, but all nations will adopt monotheism and will worship the God of Israel. Some, however, believe these vv. were added by later scribes, and that they refer to Jewish communities in Egypt during the postexilic period, when several Jewish temples existed in Egyptian cities such as Elephantine and Leontopolis. Similarly, the Talmud (b. Menah. 109b) understands this section to predict the founding of the Jewish temple in Leontopolis in the 160s BCE, rather than foretelling a temple in which Egyptians worship the LORD.

¹⁶In that day, the Egyptians shall be like women, trembling and terrified because the LORD of Hosts will raise His hand against them. ¹⁷And the land of Judah shall also be the dread of the Egyptians; they shall quake whenever anybody mentions it to them, because of what the LORD of a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Meaning of verse uncertain; emendation yields "Her drinkers shall be dejected, / And all her brewers despondent."

d Or "advisers." The wisdom of the Kedemites was proverbial; cf. 1 Kings 5.10.

e I.e., a man of either high or low station; cf. 9.13, 14.

Hosts is planning against them. ¹⁸In that day, there shall be several^a towns in the land of Egypt speaking the language of Canaan and swearing loyalty to the LORD of Hosts; one^b shall be called Town of Heres.^c

¹⁹In that day, there shall be an altar to the LORD inside the land of Egypt and a pillar to the LORD at its border.^d

²⁰They shall serve as a symbol and reminder of the LORD of Hosts in the land of Egypt, so that when [the Egyptians] cry out to the LORD against oppressors, He will send them a savior and champion to deliver them. ²¹For the LORD will make Himself known to the Egyptians, and the Egyptians shall acknowledge the LORD in that day, and they shall serve [Him] with sacrifice and oblation and shall make vows to the LORD and fulfill them. ²²The LORD will first afflict and then heal the Egyptians; when they turn back to the LORD, He will respond to their entreaties and heal them.

²³In that day, there shall be a highway from Egypt to Assyria. The Assyrians shall join with the Egyptians and Egyptians with the Assyrians, and then the Egyptians together with the Assyrians shall serve [the LORD].

²⁴In that day, Israel shall be a third partner with Egypt and Assyria as a blessing^e on earth; ²⁵for the LORD of Hosts will bless them, saying, "Blessed be My people Egypt, My handiwork Assyria, and My very own Israel."

20 It was the year that the Tartan^f came to Ashdod—being sent by King Sargon of Assyria—and attacked Ashdod and took it. ²Previously,^g the LORD had spoken to Isaiah son of Amoz, saying, "Go, untie the sackcloth from your loins and take your sandals off your feet," which he had done, going naked and barefoot. ³And now the LORD said, "It is a sign and a portent for Egypt and Nubia. Just as My servant Isaiah has gone naked and barefoot for three years, ⁴so shall the king of Assyria drive off the captives of Egypt and the exiles of Nubia, young and old, naked and barefoot and with bared buttocks—to the shame of Egypt! ⁵And they shall be dismayed and chagrined because of Nubia their hope and Egypt their boast. ⁶In that day, the dwellers of this coastland shall say, 'If this 18: The language of Canaan was the language spoken by the Israelites; Hebrew, a term never found in Tanakh, is a Canaanite dialect.

Heres in Heb means "destruction."

23–25: The universal kingdom of God. Even the archenemies of the Israelites will recognize the one God. Consequently, two empires that perennially fought each other (Egypt and Assyria) and a small nation variously attacked by either one (Israel) will be at peace with each other. Some rabbinic commentators (Targum, Rashi) were troubled by v. 25, which puts Israel's enemies on an equal spiritual footing with Israel. They paraphrase as follows: "Blessed be My people Israel, who came out of Egypt and saw My handiwork, which I performed against Assyria." This far-reaching reinterpretation is rejected by other rabbinic authorities (such as Radak), who insist the v. carries the strong universal message it so clearly presents.

20.1–6: A prophetic sign concerning the Egyptians. In 713, the king of the coastal city-state of Ashdod organized a revolt against the Assyrian empire, to whom the various states along the Mediterranean, including Judah, were obliged to send tribute. Assyrian records tell us that Judah participated in the rebellion. The rebellious states seem to have appealed to the pharaoh ruling over Egypt (who came from Nubia, i.e., Ethiopia) for help at the early stages of the rebellion. In 711, the Assyrian king, Sargon, sent his chief-of-staff or Tartan to subdue Ashdod. Ashdod and two other cities were besieged, and the Assyrians imprisoned the king of Ashdod. According to this ch, Isaiah argued vigorously against relying on Egyptian help in 713–711, just as he had argued against relying on the Assyrians in 735 (see 7.1–8.23). Isaiah made his point by means of a symbolic action: He imitated the fate that would await the Egyptians (and most likely many Judeans as well) if the situation developed into a full-fledged war a Lit. "five." b Or "each one."

c Meaning uncertain. Many Heb. mss. read heres, "sun," which may refer to Heliopolis, i.e., Sun City, in Egypt. Targum's "Beth Shemesl" (cf. Jer. 43.13) has the same meaning.

d As a symbol of the LORD's sovereignty over Egypt.

e I.e., a standard by which blessing is invoked; cf. Gen. 12.2 with note.

f An Assyrian title meaning "General"; cf. 2 Kings 18.17 and note.

g Lit. "At that time."

could happen to those we looked to, to whom we fled for help and rescue from the king of Assyria, how can we ourselves escape?" "

21 ^aThe "Desert of the Sea" Pronouncement.^a

Like the gales
That race through the Negeb,
It comes from the desert,
The terrible land.

2 A harsh prophecy
Has been announced to me:
"The betrayer is ^bbetraying,
The ravager ravaging.^b
Advance, Elam!
Lay siege, Media!
^cI have put an end
To all her sighing."^c

3 Therefore my loins
Are seized with trembling;
I am gripped by pangs
Like a woman in travail,
Too anguished to hear,
Too frightened to see.
4 My mind is confused,
I shudder in panic.
My night of pleasure
He has turned to terror:
5 "Set the table!"
To "Let the watchman watch!"
"Eat and drink!"
To "Up, officers! Grease^d the shields!"

6 For thus my Lord said to me:
"Go, set up a sentry;
Let him announce what he sees.

a-a Emendation yields "The 'From the Desert' Pronouncement," agreeing with the phrase farther on in the verse.

b-b Emendation yields "betrayed . . . ravaged"; cf. 33.1.

c-c Emendation yields "Put an end to all her merrymaking!"

d Emendation yields "Grasp."

against Assyria. Other prophets also used symbolic actions to get their points across; see, for example, Jer. 13.1-14; Ezek. 4.1-5.17. 6: Dwellers of this coastland refers most likely to the Ashdodites, who instigated the revolt against Assyria; the Philistine city of Ashdod is located on the coast. Many rabbinic commentators suggest, however, that "coastland" refers to the whole land of Israel, including the hill country where the Judeans lived.

21.1-10: An oracle concerning Babylonia. This oracle may date from Isaiah's day, during the reign of the Babylonian king, Merodach-baladan, at the end of the 8th century. At that time the relatively small kingdom of Babylonia attempted to defeat the larger Assyrian empire. This ultimately futile attempt was relevant to the Judeans, because the Babylonians endeavored to persuade the Judean king, Hezekiah, to join the anti-Assyrian coalition. See ch 39, and also 2 Kings ch 20. If this is the setting of the passage, Isaiah predicts defeat for the Babylonians, in spite of their attempt to create a unified front with the Judeans. Alternatively, this text may date to a century after Isaiah, to a time in which the Babylonians had in fact become the great power of the ancient Near East. In that case, an unnamed prophet predicts the downfall of the Babylonians. The language of this oracle is unusually obscure. 1: Desert of the Sea, i.e., Babylon. The term may be a Heb translation of an Akkadian term used to refer to southern Mesopotamia, where Babylon was located. (Akkadian was the language of Babylonia and Assyria.) 2: Elam, Media: These two nations were located to the north of Assyria. Elam joined Merodach-baladan's doomed campaign against Assyria. If this text dates from the 8th century (that is, the era of Isaiah son of Amoz), then this v. calls on Elam and Media to defend themselves from the coming Assyrian onslaught. Elam and Media eventually became part of the Persian empire, and some late biblical writers seem to equate Elam and Media with Persia. If this text dates from the 6th century (and is thus much later than Isaiah son of Amoz's prophecies), then these vv. call on Elam and Media to wage war against Babylonia. They thus anticipate the fall of Babylonia to the Persians in 539 BCE, and resemble the prophecies of Deutero-Isaiah (see introduction). 6-9: A description of prophetic inspiration: The prophet is like the sentry in a watchtower,

7 He will see mounted men,
Horsemen in pairs—
Riders on asses,
Riders on camels—
And he will listen closely,
Most attentively.”
8 And ^a[like] a lion he ^acalled out:
^b“On my Lord’s lookout-^b I stand
Ever by day,
And at my post I watch
Every night.
9 And there they come, mounted men—
Horsemen in pairs!”
Then he spoke up and said,
“Fallen, fallen is Babylon,
And all the images of her gods
Have crashed to the ground!”
10 ^cMy threshing, the product of my threshing floor:^c
What I have heard from the LORD of Hosts,
The God of Israel—
That I have told to you.

11 The “Dumah”^d Pronouncement.

A call comes to me from Seir:
“Watchman, what of the night?
Watchman, what of the night?”
12 The watchman replied,
“Morning came, and so did night.
If you would inquire, inquire.
Come back again.”

13 The “In the Steppe” Pronouncement.

In the scrub, in the steppe, you will lodge,
O caravans of the Dedanites!
14 Meet the thirsty with water,
You who dwell in the land of Tema;
Greet the fugitive with bread.
15 For they have fled before swords:
Before the whetted sword,
Before the bow that was drawn,
Before the stress of war.

¹⁶For thus my Lord has said to me: “In another year, fixed like the years of a hired laborer, all the multitude of who sees the invading armies before anyone else can.

21.11–12: An oracle concerning Edom or northern Arabia. This oracle is as obscure as it is brief; it is not even clear to whom it is addressed. Dumah may be a poetic, short form of the word “Edom,” which was a nation located south-east of Judah. Seir was another name for Edom. Alternatively, Dumah may refer to a city in northern Arabia. These two explanations are not necessarily exclusive, since the Arabian city in question is due east of Edom. Thus the oracle may address both the Edomites and the Arab tribes with whom they traded. Finally, Dumah may be a noun meaning “silence”—an apt title for this oracle, whose meaning is not spoken clearly to us. In all likelihood, the oracle predicts that Edom and/or the northern Arabs will be defeated in the upcoming upheaval described in the previous ten vv. 12: This v. may be taken to refer to a real watchman, who is asked whether his watch has passed peacefully; or it may be metaphorical, referring to the night of oppression (of the Edomites and/or the Arabs? or of the Judeans?) at the hands of the conquerors.

21.13–17: An oracle concerning Arabia. Like the previous oracle, these vv. probably describe the defeat of various tribes who were either allied with Babylonia against Assyria (if the oracle dates to the 8th century) or who were allied with the Babylonian empire that is about to fall (if the oracle dates to the 6th century). 13: In the Steppe: A more likely translation is “Arabia.” Dedanites, a nomadic Arab tribe of northern Arabia; they are often mentioned in the Bible along with the Edomites, with whom they seem to have had extensive trade relations. 14: Tema, a city located south of Dumah in Arabia. These vv. seem to assume that the defeated Dedanites will flee south to Tema, where they will have to seek refuge. 16: Kedar, a tribe of nomads who traded with the a-a 1QIs^a reads “The watcher.”

b-b Or “On a lookout, my lord.”

c-c Connection of Heb. uncertain.

d Name of a people; cf. Gen. 25.14.

Kedar shall vanish;¹⁷ the remaining bows of Kedar's warriors shall be few in number; for the LORD, the God of Israel, has spoken.

22 The ^a“Valley of Vision”^a Pronouncement.

^bWhat can have happened to you
That you have gone, all of you, up on the roofs,
2 O you who were full of tumult,
You clamorous town,
You city so gay?
Your slain are not the slain of the sword
Nor the dead of battle.^c
3 Your officers have all departed,
They fled far away;
Your survivors were all taken captive,
^aTaken captive without their bows.^a 4 That is why I say, “Let me be,
I will weep bitterly.
Press not to comfort me
For the ruin of ^dmy poor people.”^d
5 For my Lord GOD of Hosts had a day
Of tumult and din and confusion—
^eKir raged in the Valley of Vision,
And Shoa on the hill;^e
6 While Elam bore the quiver
In troops of mounted men,
And Kir bared the shield—
7 And your choicest lowlands
Were filled with chariots and horsemen:
They stormed at Judah's^f gateway
8 And pressed beyond its screen.^g
You gave thought on that day
To the arms in the Forest House,^h
9 And you took note of the many breaches
In the City of David.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Vv. 1–3 describe a scene of mourning to take place in Jerusalem in the near future. In the ancient Near East, public weeping took place on the low flat roofs as well as in the streets and squares; cf. above, 15.3; Jer. 48.38.

c I.e., executed, instead of dying in battle.

d-d Lit. “the young woman, my people.”

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. On Kir see 2 Kings 16.9; Amos 1.5; 9.7; on Shoa see Ezek. 23.23.

f Brought up from 8a for clarity.

g Judah's gateway is the upper course of the Valley of Elah. The screen is the fortress Azekah, at the mouth of the gateway, which was captured by the Assyrians.

h See 1 Kings 7.2–5; 10.16–17.

Edomites and other settled peoples; they were located in the extreme north of the Arabian desert.

22.1–14: An oracle concerning Judah and Jerusalem. This oracle was written, in all likelihood, before the Assyrian invasion in 705–701 BCE. Hezekiah, king of Judah, joined a revolt against the Assyrian king, Sennacherib. Sennacherib's army devastated most of Judah and surrounded Jerusalem but did not conquer it. See 2 Kings 18.13–20.21; Isa. chs 36–39; 2 Chron. ch 32. (Some, however, believe that the ch relates to the events of 713, described in 20.1–6 n.) Isaiah seems to have disapproved of the actions taken to fortify Jerusalem (see 2 Kings 20.20; 2 Chron. 32.2–5), perhaps because they betrayed a lack of confidence in the LORD. Alternatively, this ch may have been written after the surprising deliverance of Jerusalem. In that case, the ch expresses Isaiah's disapproval of the tone of the celebrations, which fail to recognize the divine source of deliverance sufficiently. 1: The “Valley of Vision” Pronouncement: The title is taken from the phrase in v. 5. Jerusalem (or perhaps one particular valley within the hilly city) is referred to as the valley of vision. 1–4: Isaiah foresees a dramatic turnabout: The city that is festive as it prepares for siege will be surrounded by ruin. 5–7: The coming calamity. On the theme of the “Day of the LORD,” see also Isa. chs 13, 34; Ezek. ch 7; Joel chs 2–3; Amos 5.18–20; Zeph. ch 1. Amos 5.18–20 is especially comparable, since there, as here, the Judeans believe the day will be one of celebration, but it turns out to be one of calamity. 8–14: The preparations for the upcoming battle, which fail to attend to God's role in salvation. 8: The Forest House, the building housing the royal treasury and weaponry. See 1 Kings 7.2–6; 10.17. 9: Breaches, gaps or weak spots in the wall surrounding the main sector of the city; cf. 2 Kings 32.5.

^aAnd you collected the water of the Lower Pool;^a ¹⁰and you counted the houses of Jerusalem and pulled houses down to fortify the wall; ¹¹and you constructed a basin between the two walls for the water of the old pool.

But you gave no thought to Him who planned it,
You took no note of Him who designed it long before.

¹² My Lord GOD of Hosts summoned on that day
To weeping and lamenting,

To tonsuring and girding with sackcloth.

¹³ Instead, there was rejoicing and merriment,
Killing of cattle and slaughtering of sheep,
Eating of meat and drinking of wine:

“Eat and drink, for tomorrow we die!”

¹⁴ Then the LORD of Hosts revealed Himself to my ears:

“This iniquity shall never be forgiven you Until you die,” said my Lord GOD of Hosts.

¹⁵ Thus said my Lord GOD of Hosts: Go in to see that steward, that Shebna, in charge of the palace:

¹⁶ What have you here, and whom have you here,
That you have hewn out a tomb for yourself
here?—

O you who have hewn your^b tomb on high;
O you who have hollowed out for yourself^b an abode in the cliff!

¹⁷ The LORD is about to shake you “Severely, fellow,^c and then wrap you around Himself.^d”

¹⁸ Indeed, He will wind you about Him ^eas a headdress, a turban.^e

Off to a broad land!

There shall you die, and there shall be the “chariots bearing your body,^f”

O shame of your master’s house!

¹⁹ For I will hurl you from your station
And you shall be torn down from your stand.

²⁰ And in that day, I will summon My servant Eliakim son of Hilkiah, ²¹and I will invest him with your tunic, gird him with your sash, and deliver your authority into 10–11: A reference to the water-works project also mentioned in 2 Kings 20.20. Hezekiah directed workers to build a tunnel (now known as the Siloam Tunnel) to bring water from a spring outside the walls of the city, on the slopes south of the Temple Mount, into a pool known as the Siloam Pool inside the city. The tunnel ensured Jerusalem a safe water supply in the event of a siege. Rediscovered in the 19th century, the tunnel is now accessible to tourists. An inscription found inside the tunnel is perhaps the most famous ancient Heb text outside the Bible; it describes how workmen dug the tunnel from two sides and met in the middle.

22.15–25: An oracle concerning a royal official. Unique among biblical oracles, this text condemns a particular non-royal individual: Shebna, who was the royal steward, in charge of the palace. These titles are known from other biblical texts and also from ancient Heb inscriptions; they probably denote an office comparable to that of Prime Minister. Isaiah calls for Shebna to be deposed and replaced by a man named Eliakim son of Hilkiah (v. 20). In Isa. 36.3; 37.2 and 2 Kings 18.18 Eliakim does in fact have the positions described here, and Shebna has apparently been assigned to a lower-ranking position. Isaiah presumes his audience knows the political background of the conflict at hand, leaving modern readers to speculate as to the reasons that Isaiah objected to Shebna’s policies.

16: A large tomb belonging to a royal official with Shebna’s title has been excavated on the eastern edge of the valley of Kidron across from the City of David (in today’s Silwan neighborhood), but the inscription in the tomb is damaged, and we do not know the official’s name. Archeological evidence points to an 8th-century date for the tomb, suggesting the possibility that it is the tomb described here. If so, Isaiah’s prediction that Shebna would never enjoy his magnificent tomb is either incorrect or merely rhetorical, for the a-a This clause would read well after the prose part of v. 11a.

b Heb. “his,” “himself.”

c-c Emendation yields “as a garment is shaken out.”

d I.e., and walk off with you; cf. Jer. 43.12.

e-e Emendation yields “as a turban is wound about.”

f-f Emendation yields “abode [cf. v. 16] of your body” [cf. 10.3, 16].

his hand; and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem and the men of Judah. ²²I will place the keys of David's palace on his shoulders; and what he unlocks none may shut, and what he locks none may open. ²³He shall be a seat of honor to his father's^a household. I will fix him as a peg in a firm place, ²⁴on which all the substance of his father's^a household shall be hung: ^bthe sprouts and the leaves^b—all the small vessels, from bowls to all sorts of jars.

²⁵In that day—declares the LORD of Hosts—the peg fixed in a firm place shall give way: it shall be cut down and shall fall, and the weight it supports shall be destroyed. For it is the LORD who has spoken.

23 The "Tyre" Pronouncement.

Howl, you ^dships of Tarshish!^d
For havoc has been wrought, not a house is left;
As they came from the land of Kittim,
This was revealed to them.

- 2 Moan, you coastland dwellers,
You traders of Sidon,
Once thronged by seafarers,
3 Over many waters
Your^e revenue came:
From the trade of nations,
From the grain of Shihor,
The harvest of the Nile.
4 Be ashamed, O Sidon!
For the sea—this stronghold of the sea—declares,
^f"I am as one who has^f never labored,
Never given birth,

a Emendation yields "master's"; cf. v. 18 end.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Apparently continues v. 19.

d-d See note at 2.16. e Heb. "her." ff Lit. "I have."

owner of that tomb was in fact interred there. 23–24: The metaphor here depicts Eliakim as a tent peg, ensuring a secure place for his family (the sprouts and the leaves and various vessels of the metaphor), just as vessels and other objects in a tent would be hung from a rope firmly anchored in the ground. 25: The peg of this v. seems to refer back to Shebna. Alternatively, if it is the same peg referred to in v. 23, then Eliakim is ultimately subject to the same criticism as the man he replaces.

23.1–18: Oracles concerning the Phoenicians. This passage is a mock lament for Tyre. It is not clear whether the mock lament was composed as historical reflection after Tyre was attacked by the Assyrian army or as a prophecy beforehand. Throughout the 8th century, the Phoenician city of Tyre (located in southern Lebanon) was the capital of a city-state that extended from Acre to Sidon and also included colonies elsewhere in the Mediterranean, notably in Cyprus (Heb "Kittim"). Tyre was renowned for its mighty ships; Tyrians grew wealthy from their role as traders and merchants. Indeed the term "Phoenician" or "Canaanite" became a synonym in Heb for "merchant"; see Prov. 31.24. Although Tyre retained some independence from the Assyrian empire, Tyre was required to pay tribute to the Assyrians from the middle of the 8th century. It joined the revolt against Assyria in 705–701. In 701 the Assyrian king Sennacherib defeated the Tyrians. Tyre's king fled to Cyprus; Sidon and other cities along the coast of Lebanon were removed from Tyrian control; and the Assyrians may have gained some control over parts of Cyprus. Isaiah regards this event favorably, for Tyre, like all wealthy and powerful nations, had grown too great. On the central theme of humility in Isaiah (relevant both for individuals and for nations), cf. 2.5–22; 3.8–15; 10.5–27; 11.1–12.10. Here as in these other passages, Isaiah contrasts the impious self-confidence of human beings with the true grandeur that must be recognized as belonging to God alone. Tyre was located on an island about one-half mile off the coast of Lebanon, and it was never actually conquered during the biblical period, even though its mainland territories were often overrun and its leadership was at times forced to capitulate. Thus it resembles Jerusalem in Isaiah's day: Judah was sorely pressed by the Assyrians (and the Arameans and Ephraimites before them), but the capital never fell. Isaiah may have viewed Tyre as parallel to inviolable Zion and Tyre's experience as especially instructive to the Judeans. 1–14: A lament over the Tyrian empire. 1–5: Phoenician merchant ships, various Tyrian colonies, and Tyre's allies and trading partners learn that Tyre has been subjected to an enemy. 1: Tarshish was a Tyrian trading colony in the western Mediter-

- Never raised youths
Or reared maidens!"
- 5 When the Egyptians heard it, they quailed
As when they heard about Tyre.
- 6 Pass on to Tarshish—
Howl, you coastland dwellers!
- 7 Was such your merry city
In former times, of yore?
Did her feet carry her off
To sojourn far away?
- 8 Who was it that planned this
For crown-wearing Tyre,
Whose merchants were nobles,
Whose traders the world honored?
- 9 The LORD of Hosts planned it—
To defile all glorious beauty,
To shame all the honored of the world.
- 10 ^a Traverse your land like the Nile,
Fair Tarshish;^a
This is a harbor^b no more.
- 11 The LORD poised His arm o'er the sea
And made kingdoms quake;
It was He decreed destruction
For Phoenicia's^c strongholds,
And said,
"You shall be gay no more,
O plundered one, Fair Maiden Sidon.
Up, cross over to Kittim—
Even there you shall have no rest."
- 13^d Behold the land of Chaldea—
This is the people that has ceased to be.
Assyria, which founded it for ships,
Which raised its watchtowers,
Erected its ramparts,
Has turned it into a ruin.
- 14 Howl, O ships of Tarshish,
For your stronghold is destroyed!

ranean, perhaps located in today's Spain. 6–10: The Phoenicians are urged to flee to their colonies elsewhere in the Mediterranean, for God is bringing destruction on the Phoenician coastlands. 11–12: But God's power extends over the seas as well, so that even in exile the Phoenicians will find no rest. Cf. the fate of Israelites and Judeans sent into exile by God in texts such as Deut. 28.64–68. 13: A very obscure verse. Because it mentions the Chaldeans, who took control of Babylonia a century after Isaiah's day, it is most likely a later gloss, but its meaning is unclear. 14: The conclusion to the lament marks the end of the literary unit by repeating the opening words, "Howl, you ships of Tarshish" from v. 1. Such framing devices often indicate the extent of a literary unit in biblical literature. 15–18: A prophecy of restoration. After a period of subjugation, Tyre will be both religiously purified and politically restored. Its fate closely resembles that of Egypt and Assyria in 19.18–25, as well as that of Israel throughout the Bible. God treats the Phoenicians precisely as God treats the Israelites: They are severely punished, then saved. 15: Seventy years: Cf. the length of Jerusalem's punishment in Jer. 25.11; 29.10.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "Pass on to the land of Kittim, / You ships of Tarshish."

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; taking mezah as a by-form of mahoz: cf. Ps. 107.30.

c Heb. "Canaan's."

d Meaning of verse uncertain. Emendation yields "The land of Kittim itself—/ Which the Sidonian people founded, / Whose watchtowers they raised, / Whose citadels they erected—/ Exists no more; / Assyria has turned it into a ruin."

¹⁵In that day, Tyre shall remain forgotten for seventy years, equaling the lifetime of one king. After a lapse of seventy years, it shall go with Tyre as with the harlot in the ditty:

¹⁶ Take a lyre, go about the town,
Harlot long forgotten;
Sweetly play, make much music,
To bring you back to mind.

¹⁷For after a lapse of seventy years, the LORD will take note of Tyre, and she shall resume her ^a“fee-taking” and “play the harlot”^a with all the kingdoms of the world, on the face of the earth. ¹⁸But her profits and “hire” shall be consecrated to the LORD. They shall not be treasured or stored; rather shall her profits go to those who abide before the LORD, that they may eat their fill and clothe themselves elegantly.

24 Behold,
The LORD will strip the earth bare,
And lay it waste,
And twist its surface,
And scatter its inhabitants.

² Layman and priest shall fare alike,
Slave and master,
Handmaid and mistress,
Buyer and seller,
Lender and borrower,
Creditor and debtor.

³ The earth shall be bare, bare;
It shall be plundered, plundered;
For it is the LORD who spoke this word.

⁴ The earth is withered, sear;
The world languishes, it is sear;
^bThe most exalted people of the earth^b languish.

⁵ For the earth was defiled
Under its inhabitants;
Because they transgressed teachings,
Violated laws,
Broke the ancient covenant.^c

⁶ That is why a curse consumes the earth,
And its inhabitants pay the penalty;

a-a I.e., “trading . . . trade.”

b-b Change of vocalization yields “both sky and earth.”

c I.e., the moral law, which is binding on all men (cf. Gen. 9.4–6).

Chs 24–27: Prophecies concerning the end of days. These chs form a distinct section within the book of Isaiah. They refer to no specific historical situation but are concerned instead with a future time in which the world will undergo sweeping devastation, after which redemption will come to survivors from all the nations. They describe humanity as deeply sinful in general terms, but, unlike other Isaianic passages, they do not specify what humanity’s sins are, in contrast, for example, to chs 1–3. Like 2.1–4; 4.2–6; 11.1–12.10, they portray the ultimate and lasting divine judgment of the world, but they focus to a greater extent on the break between the end of the old age and the creation of the new world order. These chs share some features with later apocalyptic literature, which is best represented in the Tanakh by the book of Daniel. Consequently, many date chs 24–27 to the Persian or even the Hellenistic period. On the other hand, they also share many features with prophecies of Isaiah, such as the doctrine of the remnant and a thoroughgoing universalism. Whether these Isaianic features result from Isaiah’s own authorship of these chs, and they should be considered protoapocalyptic, or from the influence of Isaiah’s genuine writings on them cannot be determined, but most modern scholars opt for the latter explanation.

24.1–23: Cosmic chaos and divine judgment at the end of time.

1–3: A summary of the ch as a whole: In the coming destruction God will destroy the social and natural orders. 4–13: The reason for the upheaval: Humanity is depraved. 4–5: The earth could also be translated as “the land” (i.e., the land of Israel), in which case this section would refer to the Israelites and Judeans, not all humanity. In that case, the ancient covenant (or “everlasting commitment”) refers to the laws given to Israel through Moses, especially the laws of the Sabbath and sacrifice (cf. Exod. 31.16; Lev. 24.8; Num. 18.19, where

That is why earth's dwellers have dwindled,
 And but few men are left.
 7 The new wine fails,
 The vine languishes;
 And all the merry-hearted sigh.
 8 Stilled is the merriment of timbrels,
 Ended the clamor of revelers,
 Stilled the merriment of lyres.
 9 They drink their wine without song;
 Liquor tastes bitter to the drinker.
 10 Towns are broken,^a empty;
 Every house is shut, none enters;
 11 Even over wine, a cry goes up in the streets:
 The sun has set on all joy,
 The gladness of the earth is banished.
 12 Desolation is left in the town
 And the gate is battered to ruins.
 13 For thus shall it be among the peoples
 In the midst of the earth:
 As when the olive tree is beaten out,
 Like gleanings when the vintage is over.
 14 These shall lift up their voices,
 Exult in the majesty of the LORD.
 They shall shout from the sea:
 15 Therefore, honor the LORD with lights
 In the coastlands of the sea—
 The name of the LORD, the God of Israel.
 16 From the end of the earth
 We hear singing:
 Glory to the righteous!
^bAnd I said:^b
^cI waste away! I waste away! Woe is me!
 The faithless have acted faithlessly;
 The faithless have broken faith!^c
 17 ^dTerror, and pit, and trap^d
 Upon you who dwell on earth!
 18 He who flees at the report of the terror
 Shall fall into the pit;
 And he who climbs out of the pit
 Shall be caught in the trap.
 For sluices are opened on high,
 And earth's foundations tremble.

the same phrase appears in the Heb). But the reference to the peoples in v. 13 suggests that this ch is in fact concerned with all humanity and the whole earth, not just Israel and its land. 10: Towns, lit. "the town" (singular). Various proposals regarding the identification of this town (e.g., Jerusalem) have been offered, but it probably refers not to a specific town but to towns as a collective. Hence the NJPS translation. This v. echoes 17.6 and broadens its meaning, the earlier v. referred to the punishment of Israel and this v. (more likely) to the punishment of all humanity. 14–16: Some group (Judeans who have been saved? human beings generally?) begins to rejoice, thinking the destruction has ended. The prophet laments, however, realizing that the judgment will continue for some time. 16: I waste away: Other commentators, especially rabbinic ones, understand the Heb to mean "I know a secret," i.e., the painful truth about the extent of the coming disaster. 17–23: A vivid description of the inescapable terror that will overtake all creation. God will mete out punishments that affect not only the mighty among humanity but even nature itself.

a Emendation yields "left." b-b Change of vocalization yields "They shall say."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "Villain [Arabic razil], foolish villain! / The faithless who acted faithlessly / Have been betrayed in turn."

d-d Heb. paḥad wa-paḥath, wa-paḥ.

19 The earth is breaking, breaking;
 The earth is crumbling, crumbling.
 The earth is tottering, tottering;
 20 The earth is swaying like a drunkard;
 It is rocking to and fro like a hut.
 Its iniquity shall weigh it down,
 And it shall fall, to rise no more.

21 In that day, the LORD will punish
 The host of heaven in heaven
 And the kings of the earth on earth.
 22 They shall be gathered in a dungeon
 As captives are gathered;
 And shall be locked up in a prison.
 But after many days they shall be remembered.

23 Then the moon shall be ashamed,
 And the sun shall be abashed.
 For the LORD of Hosts will reign
 On Mount Zion and in Jerusalem,
 And the Presence will be revealed to His elders.

25 O LORD, You are my God;
 I will extol You, I will praise Your name.
 For You planned graciousness^a of old,
 Counsels of steadfast faithfulness.

2 For You have turned a city into a stone heap,
 A walled town into a ruin,
 The citadel of strangers^b into rubble,^c
 Never to be rebuilt.

3 Therefore a fierce people must honor You,
 A city of cruel nations must fear You.

4 For You have been a refuge for the poor man,
 A shelter for the needy man in his distress—
 Shelter from rainstorm, shade from heat.
 When the fury of tyrants was like a winter^d
 rainstorm,

5 The rage of strangers^b like heat in the desert,
 You subdued the heat with the shade of clouds,
 The singing^d of the tyrants was vanquished.

6 The LORD of Hosts will make on this mount^e
 For all the peoples

21: The host of heaven, the stars above, or the angels, or both, since the stars were viewed by many ancient peoples as divinities. Cf. Jer. 33.22; 1 Kings 22.19; Neh. 9.6. Because the stars were worshipped by many peoples (including misguided Israelites), they too feel the brunt of God's anger.

25.1–12: The end of evil. This ch brings together two or three texts describing God's victory over evil and sorrow. 1–5: A song of thanksgiving. These vv. seem to refer to some historical event in the past and to have a particular city in mind, though they give no indication whatsoever regarding the identity of the arrogant city that has been overthrown. In both respects this short song differs from most of chs 24–27. It is possible that these vv. originated as a song of triumph after the downfall of some major city such as the Assyrian capital and were later reused here as an example of the song that will be sung by the faithful remnant that endures after the end of days. 6–9: The rejoicing of the faithful remnant and the end of sorrow in the future.

^a See 9.5. ^b Emendation yields "arrogant men." ^c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.
^d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "rainstorm"; cf. 4d.
^e I.e., the Holy Land, as in 11.9; 14.25; 57.13.

A banquet of ^arich viands,
 A banquet of choice wines—
 Of rich viands seasoned with marrow,
 Of choice wines^a well refined.
 7 And He will destroy on this mount^b the shroud
 That is drawn over the faces of all the peoples
 And the covering that is spread
 Over all the nations:
 8 He will destroy death^c forever.
 My Lord God will wipe the tears away
 From all faces
 And will put an end to the reproach of ^dHis people^d
 Over all the earth—
 For it is the LORD who has spoken.
 9 In that day they shall say:
 This is our God;
 We trusted in Him, and He delivered us.
 This is the LORD, in whom we trusted;
 Let us rejoice and exult in His deliverance!
 10 For the hand of the LORD shall descend
 Upon this mount,^b
 And Moab^e shall be trampled under Him
 As straw is threshed to bits at Madmenah.^f 11 Then He will spread out His hands in their homeland,^g
 As a swimmer spreads his hands out to swim,
 And He will humble their pride
 Along with ^hthe emblems of their power.^h
 12 Yea, the secure fortification of theirⁱ walls
 He will lay low and humble,
 Will raze to the ground, to the very dust.

7: Covering: When the new cosmic order emerges, the illusions that befuddle the nations will disappear, and the survivors from all nations will enjoy access to true teachings, which emanate from the God of Zion. Cf. 2.1-4; 19.18-25; 23.15-18. 8: He will destroy death forever: See 26.19 n. 10-12: The destruction of Moab. These are the only vv. in chs 24-27 that refer to a specific nation, and they may have originally belonged in the oracles against the nations in chs 13-24. 10: Madmenah: This may refer to a village in Moab; see Jer. 48.2 (where it is called Madmen). Alternatively, the word may be a noun meaning "muddy pit" or "manure pit," with a punning reference to the Moabite village.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b i.e., the Holy Land, as in 11.9; 14.25; 57.13.

c Perhaps an allusion to the mass killings committed by the Assyrians; cf. 10.7; 14.20.

d-d Emendation yields "peoples."

e Emendation yields "Assyria"; cf. 14.25.

f A village near Jerusalem; see 10.31. Emendation yields "As straw gets shredded in the threshing."

g Lit. "midst."

h-h Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "their citadels"; cf. the next verse.

i Heb. "your."

26 In that day, this song shall be sung
 In the land of Judah:
 Ours is a mighty city;
 He makes victory our inner and outer wall.
 2 Open the gates, and let
 A righteous nation enter,
 [A nation] that keeps faith.
 3 The confident mind You guard in safety,
 In safety because it trusts in You.
 4 Trust in the LORD for ever and ever,
 For in Yah the LORD you have an everlasting Rock.
 5 For He has brought low those who dwelt high up,
 Has humbled the secure city,
 Humbled it to the ground,
 Leveled it with the dust—
 6 To be trampled underfoot,
 By the feet of the needy,
 By the soles of the poor.
 7 The path is level for the righteous man;
 O Just One, You make smooth the course of the righteous.
 8 For Your just ways, O LORD, we look to You;
 We long for the name by which You are called.
 9 At night I yearn for You with all my being,
 I seek You with all ^athe spirit within me.^a
 For when Your judgments are wrought on earth,
 The inhabitants of the world learn righteousness.
 10 But when the scoundrel is spared, he learns not righteousness;
 In a place of integrity, he does wrong—
 He ignores the majesty of the LORD.
 11 O LORD!
 They see not Your hand exalted.
 Let them be shamed as they behold
 Your zeal for Your people
 And fire consuming Your adversaries.
 12^b O LORD!
 May You appoint well-being for us,
 Since You have also requited all our misdeeds.
 13 O LORD our God!
 Lords other than You possessed us,
 But only Your name shall we utter.

26.1–21: A song of thanksgiving and supplication. This ch is highly varied: It begins with a song describing a future act of salvation, moves on to entreaties, and ends with a surprising prediction of triumph over death. 1–7: The thanksgiving song that will be sung in the future. This text resembles psalms of thanksgiving and praise in the book of Psalms, such as Pss. 117; 118. The song contrasts the security of a mighty city (v. 1), presumably Jerusalem, and the downfall of a secure city (v. 5; better, “exalted city”), which is not identified and is likely to be symbolic of oppressive nations generally. 8–10: A reflection on divine judgment, whose lessons the evil fail to accept. 11–19: A petition for salvation to the righteous and punishment to the wicked. These vv. move back and forth between confident expectations regarding the future and depressed reflections on the past or present plight of the nation. 11: The wicked have not yet been shown divine justice and thus do not respect God’s power. 12–13: The Israelites confess their misdeeds, but they claim they have already suffered sufficiently for them.

a-a Emendation yields “my spirit in the morning.”

b Meaning of verse uncertain.

14 They are dead, they can never live;
 Shades, they can never rise;
 Of a truth, You have dealt with them and wiped them out,
 Have put an end to all mention of them.

15^a When You added to the nation, O LORD,
 When You added to the nation,
 Extending all the boundaries of the land,
 You were honored.

16 O LORD! In their distress, they sought You;
 Your chastisement reduced them
 To anguished^b whispered prayer.

17 Like a woman with child
 Approaching childbirth,
 Writhing and screaming in her pangs,
 So are we become because of You, O LORD.

18 We were with child, we writhed—
 It is as though we had given birth to wind;
 We have won no victory on earth;
 The inhabitants of the world have not ‘come to life!’^c

19 Oh, let Your dead revive!
 Let corpses^d arise!
 Awake and shout for joy,
 You who dwell in the dust!—
 For Your dew is like the dew on fresh growth;
 You make the land of the shades ‘come to life.’^c

20 Go, my people, enter your chambers,
 And lock your doors behind you.
 Hide but a little moment,
 Until the indignation passes.

21 For lo!
 The LORD shall come forth from His place
 To punish the dwellers of the earth
 For their iniquity;
 And the earth shall disclose its bloodshed
 And shall no longer conceal its slain.

a Meaning of vv. 15–16 uncertain.

b Lit. “anguish”; taking šaḡun as a noun formed like zadon and sason.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d Grammar of Heb. unclear.

19: Life after death? This v. and also 25.8 refer to God’s triumph over death. Some understand these vv. as metaphors: They portray the surprising vindication of the downtrodden, who are figuratively compared to the dead. According to others, these vv. assert that at least some dead people will return to earth at the end of time, their bodies and spirits restored. Rabbinic Judaism emphasizes the belief in bodily resurrection for all humanity. Indeed, this belief is highlighted in the second paragraph of the “Amidah” prayer, which is recited three times each day in traditional rabbinic liturgy and provides a succinct summary of the main points of rabbinic theology. The Tanakh, however, is much more circumspect regarding the possibility of life after death, avoiding discussions of the issue and in some passages apparently denying the possibility (Ps. 115.7; cf. Isa. 38.18–19). Some biblical passages refer to Sheol, where the spirits of the dead abide (e.g., Gen. 37.35; 42.38; Deut. 32.22; 1 Sam. 2.6; Ps. 88.4; Prov. 15.24), but they do not describe what happens to the spirits there or whether they can be regarded as truly alive. (An exception may be Isa. 14.9–11, 16–21, but that passage is more likely a poetic fantasy. See the comments on these vv.) In Ezek. ch 37 dry bones receive bodies and come back to life, but that text presents itself explicitly as a metaphor for national renewal (37.11): The Judeans, having “died” when they lost their land and kingdom, will “come back to life” as they return to their land to reestablish a commonwealth. Only in Daniel 12.2–3, 12 does the Tanakh unambiguously endorse the idea that humans will be given life after death. Belief in life after death became central to apocalyptic forms of Judaism (attested to in the book of Daniel and various postbiblical, pre-rabbinic documents). Those modern scholars who emphasize the apocalyptic elements in Isa. chs 24–27 understand 25.8 and 26.19 as a typical apocalyptic statement endorsing the notion of resurrection of the dead. Medieval Jewish philosophers and commentators point to this v. (not implausibly) as a biblical warrant for the rabbinic doctrine of life after death. Concerning this whole issue, see 66.24 n.

26.20–27.13: Additional descriptions of the future. The prayer in 26.1–19 has ended, and now the prophet addresses the people. As elsewhere in chs 24–27, the structure of this series of verses is often

27 In that day the LORD will punish,
With His great, cruel, mighty sword
Leviathan the Elusive^a Serpent—
Leviathan the Twisting^a Serpent;
He will slay the Dragon of the sea.^b

2 In that day,
They shall sing of it:^c
“Vineyard of Delight.”^d

3 I the LORD keep watch over it,
I water it every moment;
“That no harm may befall it,”^e
I watch it night and day.

4 There is no anger in Me:
“If one offers Me thorns and thistles,
I will march to battle against him,
And set all of them on fire.”^f

5 But if he holds fast to My refuge,
“He makes Me his friend;
He makes Me his friend.”^f

6 [In days] to come Jacob shall strike root,
Israel shall sprout and blossom,
And the face of the world
Shall be covered with fruit.

7 Was he beaten as his beater has been?
Did he suffer such slaughter as his slayers?

8 “Assailing them”^g with fury unchained,
His pitiless blast bore them off
On a day of gale.

9^h Assuredly, by this alone
Shall Jacob’s sin be purged away;
This is the only price
For removing his guilt:
That he make all the altar-stones
Like shattered blocks of chalk—
With no sacred post left standing,

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b The monster which the Lord vanquished of old (cf. 51.9; Ps. 74.13–14) was the embodiment of chaos; here it stands for the forces of evil in the present world.

c Apparently the earth; cf. 26.21.

d So some mss. (cf. Amos 5.11); other mss. and the editions have “Wine.”

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields “My eye is open upon it.”

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

g-g Lit. “Striving with her”; meaning of verse uncertain.

h This verse would read well before v. 6; the thought of vv. 7–8, dealing with the punishment of Israel’s enemies, is continued in vv. 10–11.

loose, and one notes abrupt changes of focus and tone.

26.20–21: The faithful are instructed to wait patiently and safely until the divine wrath directed against the wicked finishes.

27.1: Forces of chaos will finally be destroyed at the end of time. Leviathan . . . Dragon: All these terms occur in Canaanite mythology and elsewhere in the Bible (e.g., Pss. 74.13–15; 89.6–14; Job 26.5–13), where the sea-monsters are destroyed at the beginning of time, when the world is created. This text moves the event in which chaos is vanquished to the end of time, when the new world order emerges. 2–6: A song of the vineyard. Israel is compared to a vineyard belonging to God, who will tend and protect it at the end of days. This text is based on 5.1–7, whose negative thrust it systematically reverses: The earlier text is a song of judgment against Israel, and this text is a song of restoration. 7–11: The purpose of punishment. Israel’s suffering and the reasons for it are described. The suffering purges Israel’s sins. But those who refuse to repent (the text does not make clear whether this group consists of Jews, Gentiles, or both) will continue suffering.

Nor any incense altar.
 10 Thus fortified cities lie desolate,
 Homesteads deserted, forsaken like a wilderness;
 There calves graze, there they lie down
^aAnd consume its boughs.
 11 When its crown is withered, they break;^a Women come and make fires with them.
 For they are a people without understanding;
 That is why
 Their Maker will show them no mercy,
 Their Creator will deny them grace.

¹² And in that day, the LORD will beat out [the peoples like grain] from the channel of the Euphrates to the Wadi of Egypt; and you shall be picked up one by one, O children of Israel!

¹³ And in that day, a great ram's horn shall be sounded; and the strayed who are in the land of Assyria and the expelled who are in the land of Egypt shall come and worship the LORD on the holy mount, in Jerusalem.

28 Ah, the proud crowns of the drunkards of Ephraim,
 Whose glorious beauty is but wilted flowers
 On the heads of men bloated^b with rich food,
 Who are overcome by wine!

2 Lo, my Lord has something strong and mighty,
 Like a storm of hail,
 A shower of pestilence.
 Something like a storm of massive, torrential rain^c
 Shall be hurled with force to the ground.
 3 Trampled underfoot shall be
 The proud crowns of the drunkards of Ephraim,
 4 The wilted flowers—
 On the heads of men bloated^b with rich food—
 That are his glorious beauty.
 They shall be like an early fig
 Before the fruit harvest;
 Whoever sees it devours it
 While it is still ^din his hand.^d

⁵ In that day, the LORD of Hosts shall become a crown of beauty and a diadem of glory for the remnant of His people.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "Or like a terebinth whose boughs / Break when its crown is withered."

b Ge is contracted from ge'e; cf. Ibn Ezra.

c Lit. "water."

d-d Emendation yields "on the bough."

12–13: Two final prophecies. The end of days will bring terror for God's enemies, restoration for the exiled Israelites, and worship on the Temple Mount in Jerusalem.

28.1–29: Judgment against Samaria and against Jerusalem. The various sections of this ch share the theme of haughtiness, which is expressed in the rejection of divine counsel and leads to foolishness and drunkenness. God responds to this haughtiness by sending an enemy to punish Israel and Judah.

1–6: The downfall of Samaria. These vv. are directed against Ephraim, or the northern Israelite kingdom, whose capital was located in Samaria. Thus they must date to some time before the final destruction of Samaria by the Assyrians in 722. The wealthy northerners are described as self-indulgent drunkards. Like all humans who are too proud, they will experience a brutal downfall.

1: On the heads of men . . . overcome by wine, alternatively, this might be rendered: "Those above the fertile valley are overcome with wine."

This sentence refers to the drunken inhabitants of the city of Samaria, which was located on a hill above a valley. 2: Something strong and mighty, the Assyrians, who will come to punish the Northern Kingdom. 4: The wilted flowers—on the heads of men bloated with rich food: This might be rendered, "The wilted flowers that are above the fertile valley"; the wilted flower refers to the ephemeral glory of Samaria. 5–6: The fate of Samaria is contrasted to the fate of the remnant of His people, who will enjoy the glory that the northerners haughtily took as their own. Initially one may think that the favored groups described in these vv. consist of the Judeans in Jerusalem, which is the true place of divine manifestation, in contrast to Samaria. Jerusalem, too, however, will be subject to judgment, as the rest of the ch makes clear.

7–22: The judgment against Jerusalem. Surprisingly, Jerusalem is not contrasted with Samaria but compared to it, for the fate of ple,⁶ and a spirit of judgment for him who sits in judgment and of valor for those who repel attacks at the gate.

- 7 But these are also muddled by wine
 And dazed by liquor:
 Priest and prophet
 Are muddled by liquor;
 They are confused by wine,
 They are dazed by liquor;
 They are muddled in their visions,
 They stumble in judgment.
- 8 Yea, all tables are covered
 With vomit and filth,
 So that no space is left.
- 9 “To whom would he give instruction?
 To whom expound a message?
 To those newly weaned from milk,
 Just taken away from the breast?
- 10 That same mutter upon mutter,
 Murmur upon murmur,
 Now here, now there!”

¹¹Truly, as one who speaks to that people in a stammering jargon and an alien tongue ¹²is he who declares to them, “This is the resting place, let the weary rest;^b this is the place of repose.” They refuse to listen. ¹³To them the word of the LORD is:

“Mutter upon mutter,
 Murmur upon murmur,
 Now here, now there.”
 And so they will march,^c
 But they shall fall backward,
 And be injured and snared and captured.

- 14 Hear now the word of the LORD,
 You men of mockery,
 “Who govern that people^d
 In Jerusalem!
- 15 For you have said,
 “We have made a covenant with Death,
 Concluded a pact with Sheol.
 When the sweeping flood passes through,
 It shall not reach us;

drunken Samaria provides the model for the fate of drunken Jerusalem. 7: These are also muddled: Not only those people (miles away in Samaria) but our people (here in Jerusalem) are guilty of drunken excess. It is not clear whether drunkenness here refers to the effects of liquor literally or the effects of the self-deluding policies with which the Judeans have become inebriated. 9–10: In these vv. Isaiah summarizes the reaction of the priests and prophets in Jerusalem to his message. He in these vv., then, refers to Isaiah himself. 10: Murmur . . . now there: The Heb consists of repetitive gibberish; Isaiah’s audience disregards his poetic warnings as monotonous nonsense. 11–13: Isaiah’s response to those who mock him. 14–22: The judgment oracle, directed especially against Jerusalem’s leaders. 15: Isaiah again summarizes his opponents, this time sarcastically putting into their mouths words that uncover the folly of their thinking: They believe that their covenants (their treaties with foreign powers such as Egypt or Assyria) will protect them. In fact, those covenants will be no more effective than an attempt to defy death, which inevitably comes to all humans.

a This is the drunkards’ reaction to Isaiah’s reproof.

b I.e., do not embark on any political adventure at this time.

c I.e., embark on the political adventure.

d-d Or “composers of taunt-verses for that people.”

For we have made falsehood our refuge,
 Taken shelter in treachery."
 16 Assuredly,
 Thus said the Lord God:
 "Behold, I will found in Zion,
 Stone by stone,
^aA tower of precious cornerstones,^a
 Exceedingly firm;
 He who trusts need not fear.
 17 But I will apply judgment as a measuring line
 And retribution^b as weights;^c
 Hail shall sweep away the refuge of falsehood,
 And flood-waters engulf your shelter.
 18 Your covenant with Death shall be annulled,
 Your pact with Sheol shall not endure;
 When the sweeping flood passes through,
 You shall be its victims.
 19 It shall catch you
 Every time it passes through;
 It shall pass through every morning,
 Every day and every night.
 And it shall be sheer horror
 To grasp the message."
 20 The couch is too short for stretching out,
 And the cover too narrow for curling up!
 21 For the LORD will arise
 As on the hill of Perazim,
 He will rouse Himself
 As in the vale of Gibeon,
 To do His work—
 Strange is His work!
 And to perform His task—
 Astounding is His task!^d
 22 Therefore, refrain from mockery,
 Lest your bonds be tightened.
 For I have heard a decree of destruction
 From my Lord God of Hosts
 Against all the land.
 23 Give diligent ear to my words,
 Attend carefully to what I say.
 24 Does he who plows to sow

16: An oracle of promise suddenly changes the tone in the midst of the oracle of judgment. In spite of the harsh words against the Judeans, Isaiah reiterates the notion of Zion's inviolability (see 1.8–9 n.), which provides a measure of hope even in the midst of this prophecy of divine retribution. 20: When the disaster comes, no rest will be possible for the weary nation. This line ironically comments on v. 12. 21: Perazim . . . vale of Gibeon, an allusion to the victory God gave to David over the Philistines at two locations near Jerusalem; see 2 Sam. 5.20–25. This time, however, God's might will work against the Judeans. 23–29: A parable concerning God's plan in history. The style and content of this complex passage resemble that of wisdom literature, particularly the book of Proverbs; like many texts in Proverbs and Job, this poem focuses on the depth of divine wisdom. (Wisdom influence has been suggested for Isaiah and a variety of non-wisdom texts.) When a farmer breaks up soil, overturns it, and levels it, his activities seem destructive but are in fact wise and ultimately life-giving. So too God has a purpose as He breaks up and levels nations. Further, God treats Israel and Judah in different ways, just as the farmer uses different techniques when planting and harvesting various types of grain. The fates of Israel and Judah seem similar, but Jerusalem will never suffer the degree of defeat meted out to Samaria.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b As in 1.27; 5.16; 10.22.

c I.e., I will make judgment and retribution My plan of action; cf. 34.11; 2 Kings 21.13.

d Instead of giving victory, as at Baal-perazim and Gibeon (cf. 2 Sam. 5.19–25; 1 Chron. 14.9–16), He will inflict punishment.

Plow all the time,
 Breaking up and furrowing his land?
 25 When he has smoothed its surface,
 Does he not rather broadcast black cumin
 And scatter cumin,
 Or set wheat in a row,^a
 Barley in a strip,
 And emmer in a patch?
 26 For He teaches him the right manner,
 His God instructs him.
 27 So, too, black cumin is not threshed with a threshing board,
 Nor is the wheel of a threshing sledge rolled over cumin;
 But black cumin is beaten out with a stick
 And cumin with a rod.
 28 It is cereal that is crushed.^b
 For "even if" he threshes it thoroughly,
 And the wheel of his sledge^d and his horses overwhelm it,^d
 He does not crush it.
 29 That, too, is ordered by the LORD of Hosts;
 His counsel is unfathomable,
 His wisdom marvelous.

29 "Ah, Ariel,^e Ariel,
 City where David camped!
 Add year to year,
 Let festivals come in their cycles!
 2 And I will harass Ariel,
 And there shall be sorrow and sighing.
^dShe shall be to Me like Ariel.^d
 3 And I will camp against you^f round about;^f
 I will lay siege to you^d with a mound,^d
 And I will set up siegeworks against you.
 4 And you shall speak from lower than the ground,
 Your speech shall be humbler than the sod;
 Your speech shall sound like a ghost's from the
 ground,
 Your voice shall chirp from the sod.
 5 And like fine dust shall be

29.1-24: Three poems on God's surprising treatment of Jerusalem. This ch contains brief poems that share several characteristics. Each suggests that Jerusalem deserves punishment, but each ultimately predicts salvation. 1-8: The first poem: Jerusalem surrounded, Jerusalem saved. In this short poem, God first announces that He will bring an army to put David's city under siege. Just when disaster seems inevitable, however, the foreign army disappears. Similar predictions of destruction that leads not to defeat but to a sudden and surprising rescue appear often in Isaiah; cf. 3.25-5.6; 8.6-8; 8.22-9.1. The event described here closely resembles the sudden departure of the Assyrian army of Sennacherib during the reign of King Hezekiah in the year 701, which is narrated in chs 36-39; 2 Kings chs 18-19; 2 Chron. ch 32. The same event may form the basis for the prophecy in 22.1-14; see the comments on that passage. A crucial notion underlying this poem is the doctrine of the inviolability of Zion; see 1.8-9 n. 1: Ariel: This poetic name for Jerusalem either means "hearth of God" (i.e., altar) or "lion of God."

a In some Near Eastern countries, wheat is actually planted rather than scattered.

b Emendation yields "threshed."

c-c Taking lo as equivalent to lu.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e A poetic name of Jerusalem; cf. 33.7.

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Septuagint reads "like David"; cf. v. 1.

The multitude of "your strangers;"^a
 And like flying chaff,
 The multitude of tyrants."

6 And suddenly, in an instant,
 She shall be remembered of the LORD of Hosts
 With roaring, and shaking, and deafening noise,
 Storm, and tempest, and blaze of consuming fire.
 7 Then, like a dream, a vision of the night,
 Shall be the multitude of nations
 That war upon Ariel,
 And all her besiegers, and the siegeworks against her,
 And those who harass her.
 8 Like one who is hungry
 And dreams he is eating,
 But wakes to find himself empty;
 And like one who is thirsty
 And dreams he is drinking,
 But wakes to find himself faint
 And utterly parched—
 So shall be all the multitude of nations
 That war upon Mount Zion.

9 Act stupid and be stupefied!
 Act blind and be blinded!
 (They are drunk, but not from wine,
 They stagger, but not from liquor.)
 10 For the LORD has spread over you
 A spirit of deep sleep,
 And has shut your eyes, the prophets,
 And covered your heads, the seers;
 11 So that all prophecy has been to you
 Like the words of a sealed document.

If it is handed to one who can read and he is asked to read it, he will say, "I can't, because it is sealed";¹² and if the document is handed to one who cannot read and he is asked to read it, he will say, "I can't read."

13 My Lord said:
 Because that people has approached [Me] with its mouth
 And honored Me with its lips,
 But has kept its heart far from Me,
 And its worship of Me has been

9–14: The second poem: A stubborn people, a surprising God.

9–12: The people fail to understand God's will, because God deliberately misleads them. Cf. 6.8–10. 13: The Judeans' hypocritical and useless rituals. Cf. Hos. 7.14; 8.2; 10.1–2; Mic. 3.11; 6.6; Isa. 58.2. 14: A surprising outcome is predicted, but not described. This may refer to either a punishment that goes beyond what even the wise can imagine in their worst nightmares or a sudden act of forgiveness, or both. 15–24: The third poem: Condemnation and redemption. 15–16: The people's haughtiness: They presume to act as if God were unaware of their actions and to second-guess God's plans. 17–21: Consequently, evildoers are punished, but the humble will be made glad. 18: Deaf . . . blind may refer to the nation as a whole. In the previous poem (vv. 9–12) the people were deaf and blind because God removed their ability to perceive, but now God reverses His earlier action.

a-a Manuscript 1QIs^a reads "haughty men."

14 A commandment of men, learned by rote—
 Truly, I shall further baffle that people
 With bafflement upon bafflement;
 And the wisdom of its wise shall fail,
 And the prudence of its prudent shall vanish.

15 Ha! Those who would hide their plans
 Deep from the LORD!
 Who do their work in dark places
 And say, "Who sees us, who takes note of us?"
 16 ^aHow perverse of you!
 Should the potter be accounted as the clay?^a Should what is made say of its Maker,
 "He did not make me,"
 And what is formed say of Him who formed it,
^b"He did not understand"?^b

17 Surely, in a little while,
 Lebanon will be transformed into farm land,
 And farm land accounted as mere brush.

18 In that day, the deaf shall hear even written words,
 And the eyes of the blind shall see
 Even in darkness and obscurity.

19 Then the humble shall have increasing joy through the LORD,
 And the neediest of men shall exult
 In the Holy One of Israel.

20 For the tyrant shall be no more,
 The scoffer shall cease to be;
 And those diligent for evil shall be wiped out,

21 Who cause men to lose their lawsuits,
 Laying a snare for the arbiter at the gate,
 And wronging by falsehood
 Him who was in the right.

²² Assuredly, thus said the LORD to the House of Jacob, ^cWho redeemed Abraham:^c

No more shall Jacob be shamed,
 No longer his face grow pale.

²³ For when he—that is, his children—behold what My hands have wrought in his midst, they will hallow My name.

a-a Meaning of first line uncertain; emendation yields "Should the potter be accounted / Like the jugs or like the clay?"

b-b Emendation yields "He did not fashion me."

c-c Emendation yields "Whose fathers He redeemed."

Men will hallow the Holy One of Jacob
 And stand in awe of the God of Israel.
 24 And the confused shall acquire insight
 And grumblers accept instruction.

30 Oh, disloyal sons!
 —declares the LORD—

Making plans
 Against My wishes,
 Weaving schemes
 Against My will,
 Thereby piling
 Guilt on guilt—
 2 Who set out to go down to Egypt
 Without asking Me,
 To seek refuge with Pharaoh,
 To seek shelter under the protection of Egypt.
 3 The refuge with Pharaoh shall result in your shame;
 The shelter under Egypt's protection, in your chagrin.
 4 Though his officers are present in Zoan,^a
 And his messengers^b reach as far as Hanes,
 5 They all shall come to shame
 Because of a people that does not avail them,
 That is of no help or avail,
 But [brings] only chagrin and disgrace.

6^cThe "Beasts of the Negeb" Pronouncement.

Through a^c land of distress and hardship,
 Of lion and roaring^d king-beast,
 Of viper and flying seraph,^e
 They convey their wealth on the backs of asses,
 Their treasures on camels' humps,
 To a people of no avail.
 7 For the help of Egypt
 Shall be vain and empty.
 Truly, I call this,
 f^f"They are a threat that has ceased."^f

a Or "Tanis."

b Emendation yields "kings"; cf. 19.2 with note.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "Through the wasteland of the Negeb / Through a . . ."

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e See note on 14.29.

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "Disgrace and chagrin"; cf. v. 5.

30.1-17: Reliance on humanity, disloyalty toward God. Several related poems address the Judeans' reliance on human helpers, which Isaiah sees as a lack of faith in God. Similar prophecies appear in chs 7-8. A similar idea is found in Ps. 118.6-9. 1-7: Oracles concerning Judah's diplomatic overtures toward Egypt. At some point, perhaps during the reign of Hezekiah (probably in either 714 or 701), the king of Judah sent an embassy to the Egyptians as a potential ally against Assyria. As the other major power of the era, the Egyptians were a natural counterweight to the Assyrian threat. Isaiah opposes this strategy. He insists that Judah take an independent path, neither capitulating to Assyria nor depending on Egyptian aid. 1-5: The first oracle, apparently composed when the overture to the Egyptians was being considered. 4: Zoan . . . Hanes, cities in northern and southern Egypt, respectively. 6-7: The second oracle, apparently composed after the ambassadors set out toward Egypt through the Negeb desert. 8-17: The rebellious nation. This poem also stresses that depending on humanity amounts to rejection of God. It is phrased in more general terms than the previous one, not mentioning Egypt specifically.

8 Now,
 Go, write it down on a tablet
 And inscribe it in a record,
 That it may be with them for future days,
 A witness^a forever.

9 For it is a rebellious people,
 Faithless children,
 Children who refused to heed
 The instruction of the LORD;
 10 Who said to the seers,
 "Do not see,"
 To the prophets, "Do not prophesy truth to us;
 Speak to us falsehoods,
 Prophecy delusions.

11 Leave the way!
 Get off the path!
 Let us hear no more
 About the Holy One of Israel!"

12 Assuredly,
 Thus said the Holy One of Israel:
 Because you have rejected this word,
 And have put your trust and reliance
 In that which is fraudulent and tortuous—
 13 Of a surety,
 This iniquity shall work on you
 Like a spreading breach that occurs in a lofty wall,
 Whose crash comes sudden and swift.

14 It is smashed as one smashes an earthen jug,
 Ruthlessly shattered
 So that no shard is left in its breakage
 To scoop coals from a brazier,
 Or ladle water from a puddle.

15 For thus said my Lord GOD,
 The Holy One of Israel,
 "You shall triumph by stillness and quiet;
 Your victory shall come about
 Through calm and confidence."
 But you refused.

16 "No," you declared.
 "We shall flee on steeds"—
 Therefore you shall flee!
 "We shall ride on swift mounts"—
 Therefore your pursuers shall prove swift!

17 One thousand before the shout of one—

8-11: Isaiah is commanded to write his prophecy down, so that when it proves correct, God will be on record as having warned the nation against the Egyptian alliance. That Isaiah is commanded to write this prophecy specifically suggests that he often delivered prophecies as speeches without writing them down. Cf. 8.16.
12-17: Punishment will result from the people's refusal to rely exclusively on God.

^a Understanding 'ad, with Targum, as a variant of 'ed.

You shall flee at the shout of five;
Till what is left of you
Is like a mast on a hilltop,
Like a pole upon a mountain.

18 Truly, the LORD is waiting to show you grace,
Truly, He will arise to pardon you.
For the LORD is a God of justice;
Happy are all who wait for Him.

¹⁹Indeed, O people in Zion, dwellers of Jerusalem, you shall not have cause to weep. He will grant you His favor at the sound of your cry; He will respond as soon as He hears it. ²⁰My Lord will provide for you meager bread and scant water. Then your Guide will no more ^abe ignored,^a but your eyes will watch your Guide; ²¹and, whenever you deviate to the right or to the left, your ears will heed the command from behind you: "This is the road; follow it!" ²²And you will treat as unclean the silver overlay of your images and the golden plating of your idols. You will cast^b them away like a menstruous woman. "Out!" you will call to them.

²³So rain shall be provided for the seed with which you sow the ground, and the bread that the ground brings forth shall be rich and fat. Your livestock, in that day, shall graze in broad pastures; ²⁴as for the cattle and the asses that till the soil, they shall partake of salted fodder that has been winnowed with shovel and fan.

²⁵And on every high mountain and on every lofty hill, there shall appear brooks and watercourses—on a day of heavy slaughter, when towers topple. ²⁶And the light of the moon shall become like the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall become sevenfold, like the light of the seven days, when the LORD binds up His people's wounds and heals the injuries it has suffered.

27 Behold the ^cLORD Himself^c
Comes from afar
In blazing wrath,
^dWith a heavy burden^d—
His lips full of fury,
His tongue like devouring fire,
28 And his breath like a raging torrent
Reaching halfway up the neck—

30.18–33: God's justice and grace at the end of days. Two short passages of an eschatological nature. 18–26: Guidance and grace. The first of the passages is similar in outlook and language to chs 24–27, and in all likelihood these vv., like those chs, were written in the post-exilic era, several centuries after the life of Isaiah himself. The remarkable change in nature itself (v. 26) is typical of postexilic apocalyptic literature. See intro. to chs 24–27. These vv. are noteworthy for their lack of specific historical reference. They rely heavily on passages from the Torah, especially Deuteronomy. 18–21: In the end of days, the nation will finally be fully receptive of divine teaching. Cf. Jer. 31.31–36, a postexilic text with a similar perspective. 22–26: Idolatry will cease and nature will be gloriously transformed, to humanity's advantage. 27–33: The defeat of God's enemies at the end of days. Like the preceding vv., this passage is concerned with the end of days. It has a specific historical setting, however, referring to Assyria in v. 31. Further, the literary styles of the passages differ markedly. 27–28: God arrives on earth to punish the nations who oppressed

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Change of vocalization yields "keep."

c-c Lit. "The name of the LORD."

d-d Presumably with a heavy load of punishment. Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

To set a misguiding yoke^a upon nations
And a misleading bridle upon the jaws of peoples,

- 29 For you, there shall be singing
As on a night when a festival is hallowed;
There shall be rejoicing as when they march
With flute, ^bwith timbrels, and with lyres^b
To the Rock of Israel on the Mount of the LORD.
- 30 For the LORD will make His majestic voice heard
And display the sweep of His arm
In raging wrath,
In a devouring blaze of fire,
In tempest, and rainstorm, and hailstones.
- 31 Truly, Assyria, who beats with the rod,
Shall be cowed by the voice of the LORD;
32 ^cAnd each time the appointed staff passes by,
The LORD will bring down [His arm] upon him
And will do battle with him as he waves it.^c
- 33 The Topheth^d has long been ready for him;
He too is destined for Melech^e—
His firepit has been made both wide and deep,
With plenty of fire and firewood,
And with the breath of the LORD
Burning in it like a stream of sulfur.

31 Ha!
Those who go down to Egypt for help
And rely upon horses!
They have put their trust in abundance of chariots,
In vast numbers of riders,
And they have not turned to the Holy One of Israel,
They have not sought the LORD.

- 2 But He too is wise!
He has brought on misfortune,
And has not canceled His word.
So He shall rise against the house of evildoers,
And the allies^f of the workers of iniquity.
- 3 For the Egyptians are man, not God,
And their horses are flesh, not spirit;
And when the LORD stretches out His arm,

Judah. 29: But the Judeans will enjoy a festival of liberation, comparable to Passover. 30–33: The downfall of Assyria. 33: Topheth . . . Melech, see translators' notes d, e.

31.1–32.8: Rebuke, threat, and salvation. Like 30.1–17, this poem begins with a specific historical situation, the Judean strategy of relying on the Egyptians to counter Assyrian hegemony (see 30.1–17 n.). The poem moves on to broader issues, ending with a messianic passage concerning the end of days. 31.1–9: Human help, divine protection. 1–3: The folly of relying on the Egyptians rather than God.

a Interpreting naphath like Arabic nāf; meaning of line uncertain.

b-b Brought from v. 32 for clarity. c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d A site near Jerusalem at which human beings were sacrificed by fire in periods of paganizing; see 2 Kings 23.10.

e Cf. Molech, Lev. 18.21; 20.2–5. f Lit. "help."

The helper shall trip
And the helped one shall fall,
And both shall perish together.

4 For thus the LORD has said to me:
As a lion—a great beast—
Growls over its prey
And, when the shepherds gather
In force against him,
Is not dismayed by their cries
Nor cowed by their noise—
So the LORD of Hosts will descend to make war Against the mount and the hill of Zion.

5 Like the birds that fly, even so will the LORD of Hosts shield Jerusalem, shielding and saving, protecting and rescuing.

6^a Return, O children of Israel,^a to Him to whom they have been so shamefully false; ⁷ for in that day everyone will reject his idols of silver and idols of gold, which your hands have made for your guilt.

8 Then Assyria shall fall,
Not by the sword of man;
A sword not of humans shall devour him.
He shall shrivel^b before the sword,
And his young men ^cpine away.^c
9 His rock shall melt with terror,
And his officers shall ^dcollapse from weakness^d—
Declares the LORD, who has a fire in Zion,
Who has an oven in Jerusalem.^e

32 Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness,
And ministers shall govern with justice;
2 Every one of them shall be
Like a refuge from gales,
A shelter from rainstorms;
Like brooks of water in a desert,
Like the shade of a massive rock
In a languishing land.

3 Then the eyes of those who have sight shall not be sealed,

4: As translated in the NJPS, this v. contains the oracle of judgment threat that concludes the divine complaint in vv. 1–3: It is God, not Assyria, who really threatens Jerusalem, and the Egyptians will be as useless to defend Zion against God as shepherds are against a lion. Some rabbinic commentators, however, read as follows: “So the LORD . . . will descend to make war at Mount Zion” (against the Assyrians who attack Zion). In that case, this v. marks the move from rebuke to consolation. 5: God defends Zion, saving it suddenly. Cf. 29.1–8. Protecting (Heb “pesoah”): The same verb describes God’s protection of Israel in Egypt (Exod. 12.13, 23). The noun “pesah” (Passover) is from the same root, and originally meant “to protect,” not “to pass over” (see Exod. 12.11 n.). 6–7: This is the first passage in which Isaiah calls on the nation to repent since 6.9, where God ordered Isaiah not to engender penitence among the Judeans (see 6.9–10 n.). As the prophecies of Isaiah draw to their close (ch 33 or 34 is the last ch of the collection of Isaiah’s own prophecies), this order in ch 6 seems to be rescinded. The reversal of 6.9–10 is made even more clear later in this poem, in 32.3–4. 8–9: The fall of Assyria and salvation of Judah, which come due to God’s intervention, not Egypt’s. 32.1–8: The final salvation. 1–2: The ideal ruler in the end of days. Cf. 9.1–6; 11.1–5. 3: The nation was blind to God’s message, initially because they refused to listen to it, and subsequently because God compounded their inability to hear; see 6.9–10. That fateful decision will be reversed in the end of days.

a-a Emendation yields “Then the children of Israel shall return.”

b From root nss; cf. 10.18; others “flee.”

c-c From root mss; cf. 10.18; others “become tributary.”

d-d Cf. note b; meaning of Heb. uncertain. e Cf. 30.33.

And the ears of those who have hearing shall listen;

4 And the minds of the thoughtless shall attend and note,

And the tongues of mumblers shall speak with fluent eloquence.

5 No more shall a villain be called noble,
Nor shall "gentleman" be said of a knave.

6 For the villain speaks villainy
And plots treachery;

To act impiously
And to preach disloyalty against the LORD;
To leave the hungry unsatisfied
And deprive the thirsty of drink.

7 As for the knave, his tools are knavish.
He forges plots

To destroy the poor with falsehoods
And the needy when they plead their cause.

8 But the noble has noble intentions
And is constant in noble acts.

9 You carefree women,
Attend, hear my words!

You confident ladies,
Give ear to my speech!

10 ^aIn little more than a year,^a
You shall be troubled, O confident ones,
When the vintage is over
And no ingathering takes place.

11 Tremble, you carefree ones!
Quake, O confident ones!

Strip yourselves naked,
Put the cloth about your loins!

12 Lament ^bupon the breasts,^b
For the pleasant fields,

For the spreading grapevines,
For my people's soil—

It shall be overgrown with briars and thistles—
Aye, and for all the houses of delight,

For the city of mirth.

14 For the castle shall be abandoned,
The noisy city forsaken;

Citadel and tower shall become ^cBare places^c forever,

A stamping ground for wild asses,

4-8: True nobility of character will be the mark of the aristocracy of the future.

32.9-20: Another poem of rebuke followed by encouragement.

9-14: The corrupt women of Jerusalem and their downfall.

9-13: The women of Jerusalem are condemned. This passage is a counterpart to the condemnation of the (male) political leadership in Jerusalem in 30.1-17; 31.1-3.
Cf. 3.16-26, a rebuke of wealthy women which immediately follows a rebuke of political leaders in 3.8-15. 12-14: The downfall of Judah. 14: Citadel (Heb "'ophel"), the neighborhood just south of the Temple Mount (today's Silwan neighborhood), which was the oldest section of the city.
Uniquely in Isa. chs 1-33, this
v. foresees the destruction of Jerusalem itself. It contradicts the doctrine of the inviolability of Zion, which is everywhere else central to Isaiah's beliefs. See 1.8-9 n.; 8.8 n.; 18.3-6 n.; 28.16 n.; 29.1-8 n.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Emendation yields "for the fields."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "Brushland, desert."

A pasture for flocks^a—

- 15 Till a spirit from on high is poured out on us,
And wilderness is transformed into farm land,
While farm land rates as mere brush.^b
- 16 Then justice shall abide in the wilderness
And righteousness shall dwell on the farm land.
- 17 For the work of righteousness shall be peace,
And the effect of righteousness, calm and confidence forever.
- 18 Then my people shall dwell in peaceful homes,
In secure dwellings,
In untroubled places of rest.
- 19^c And the brush shall sink and vanish,
Even as the city is laid low.

- 20 Happy shall you be who sow by all waters,
Who ^dsend out cattle and asses to pasture.^d

33 Ha, you ravager who are not ravaged,
You betrayer who have not been betrayed!
When you have done ravaging, you shall be ravaged;
When you have finished betraying, you shall be betrayed.

- 2 O LORD, be gracious to us!
It is to You we have looked;
^eBe their arm^e every morning,
Also our deliverance in time of stress.
- 3 At [Your] roaring, peoples have fled,
Before Your majesty nations have scattered;
4 And spoil^f was gathered as locusts are gathered,
It^g was amassed^h as grasshoppers are amassed.ⁱ
- 5 The LORD is exalted,
He dwells on high!
[Of old] He filled Zion
With justice and righteousness.
- 6 Faithfulness to^jYour charge^j was [her] wealth,
Wisdom and devotion [her] triumph,
Reverence for the LORD—that was her^k treasure.

a Emendation yields “onagers”; cf. Job 39.5.

b I.e., the transformed wilderness will surpass in fertility what is now used as farm land.

c Meaning of verse uncertain.

d-d Lit. “let loose the feet of cattle and asses”; cf. 7.25 end.

e-e Emendation yields “You have been our help.” f Heb. “your spoil.”

g Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields “booty”; cf. v. 23.

h Taking šqq as a cognate of qšš. i Apparently for food; cf. Lev. 11.22.

j-j Meaning of Heb. uncertain. k Heb. “his.”

15–20: From destruction to renewal. Quite abruptly, the tone changes to one of salvation and comfort. Sudden and surprising changes of tone recur especially frequently in chs 28–33. 15: Nature itself will be changed in the end of days, ending hunger and reducing toil. 17: The work of righteousness shall be peace, alternatively: “The outcome of justice will be peace.” This v. is the source of our contemporary saying, “If you want peace, work for justice.”

33.1–24: A prayer and a prophecy. This ch includes sections that initially seem unrelated: Some vv. are spoken to God by the Judeans or by Isaiah on the Judeans’ behalf, others are descriptions of a disaster, and some include prophecies of salvation. Many of the prayers in the book of Psalms are similarly diverse; see, e.g., Ps. 89. Thus this text is probably a prayer or psalm composed by Isaiah. 1: A denunciation of an enemy. The enemy is not identified, perhaps because in Isaiah’s historical context the enemy was obviously Assyria. On the theme of the destruction meted out to the destroyer, cf. chs 13–14. 2–9: The heart of the prayer: the petition. The speakers call out for God’s attention, make their request for divine intervention (v. 2), express their confidence in God’s ability to save (vv. 3–6), and describe their current lamentable state (vv. 7–9). The combination of these four elements is very common in psalms; cf. Ps. 44.2, 24–27, 4–8, 10–17; Ps. 74.1, 2–3, 12–17, 4–9. 2: Arm, or, “strength.” 5: Zion . . . justice and righteousness: This v. echoes 1.21, 27. Ch 33 may be the last ch of the original collection of Isaiah’s prophecies (see intro.), and hence the reversal of a complaint from ch 1 may be intended to create a literary frame around the entire collection. 7: Arielites, the inhabitants of Jerusalem; cf. 29.1, 2, 7–8. Alternative understandings of this term abound. According to many rabbinic texts, it refers to a class of angels, who are described here as weeping for Zion. (Messengers later in this v.

7 Hark! The Arielites^a cry aloud;
 Shalom's^b messengers weep bitterly.
 8 Highways are desolate,
 Wayfarers have ceased.
 A covenant has been renounced,
 Cities^c rejected
^dMortal man^d despised.
 9 The land is wilted and withered;
 Lebanon disgraced and moldering,
 Sharon is become like a desert,
 And Bashan and Carmel are stripped bare.
 10 "Now I will arise," says the LORD,
 "Now I will exalt Myself, now raise Myself high.
 11 You shall conceive hay,
 Give birth to straw;
 My^e breath will devour you like fire.
 12 Peoples shall be burnings of lime,^f
 Thorns cut down that are set on fire.
 13 Hear, you who are far, what I have done;
 You who are near, note My might."

14 Sinners in Zion are frightened,
 The godless are seized with trembling:
 "Who of us can dwell with the devouring fire:
 Who of us can dwell with the never-dying blaze?"
 15 He who walks in righteousness,
 Speaks uprightly,
 Spurns profit from fraudulent dealings,
 Waves away a bribe instead of grasping it,
 Stops his ears against listening to infamy,
 Shuts his eyes against looking at evil—
 16 Such a one shall dwell in lofty security,
 With inaccessible cliffs for his stronghold,
 With his food supplied
 And his drink assured.

17 When your eyes behold ^ga king in his beauty,^g
 When they contemplate the land round about, 18 Your throat^h shall murmur in awe,
 "Where is one who could count? Where is one who could weigh?
 Where is one who could count [all these] towers?"
 19 No more shall you see the barbarian folk, could also be translated as "angels.") Other possibilities include "valiant men" and "the altar of the Temple." Shalom's messengers, see the translators' note b. Alternatively, "angels of peace," or, most likely, "messengers of peace," "peace envoys," perhaps referring to ambassadors sent by Hezekiah to the Assyrians at some point before the siege of Jerusalem in 701. (Concerning the events of 701, see 22.1-14 n. and chs 36-39 n.) Apparently, the diplomatic overture was rejected, and the Judeans reacted with dismay. This phrase is one of the sources for the wording of the hymn sung before dinner on Friday nights, "Shalom Aleikhem." 8: Covenant, or, "treaty." The text may refer to an agreement between Judah and some other nation that has been discarded. 10-16: God's response to the prayer. Responses to a prayer are sometimes found in the text of a psalm. 10-13: God announces that God will take action. It is not initially clear, however, whether the doomed people are the sinful Judeans or their enemies. 14-16: The effect of God's announcement. The ambiguity in the previous vv. is resolved: The doomed will include not only the enemies, but also sinners in Zion. On the question of who may dwell in Zion, cf. Ps. 24.3-10. 17-24: Conclusion: Zion at the end of days. Cf. 2.1-4; 4.2-6; 9.1-6; 11.1-12.10. 17: King: Scholars debate whether the passage refers to the future Davidic monarch (as in chs 9, 11, and 32.1-8) or to the LORD (as in v. 22 of this ch).

a So a few manuscripts; cf. 29.1. b I.e., Jerusalem's; cf. Salem (Heb. Shalem), Ps. 76.3.

c 1QIs^a reads "A pact." d-d Emendation yields "an obligation."

e Heb. "your." f Emendation yields "brambles"; cf. 32.13.

g-g Emendation yields "perfection of beauty"; cf. Ps. 50.2.

h As in 59.13 and elsewhere; others "heart."

The people of speech too obscure to comprehend,
So stammering of tongue that they are not understood.

- 20 When you gaze upon Zion, our city of assembly,
Your eyes shall behold Jerusalem
As a secure homestead,
A tent not to be transported,
Whose pegs shall never be pulled up,
And none of whose ropes shall break.
- 21 For there the LORD in His greatness shall be for us
Like a region of rivers, of broad streams,
Where no floating vessels can sail
And no mighty craft can travel—
^aTheir^b ropes are slack,
They cannot steady the sockets of their masts,
They cannot spread a sail.^c
- 22 For the LORD shall be our ruler,
The LORD shall be our prince,
The LORD shall be our king:
He shall deliver us.
- 23 Then ^cshall indeed much spoil be divided,^c
Even the lame shall seize booty.
- 24 And none who lives there shall say, "I am sick";
It shall be inhabited by folk whose sin has been forgiven.

- 34 Approach, O nations, and listen,
Give heed, O peoples!
Let the earth and those in it hear;
The world, and what it brings forth.
- 2 For the LORD is angry at all the nations,
Furious at all their host;
He has doomed them, consigned them to slaughter.
- 3 Their slain shall be left lying,
And the stench of their corpses shall mount;
And the hills shall be drenched with their blood,
- 4 ^dAll the host of heaven shall molder.^d
The heavens shall be rolled up like a scroll,
And all their host shall wither
Like a leaf withering on the vine,
Or shriveled fruit on a fig tree.

a-a Brought up from v. 23 for clarity. The passage means that the LORD will render Jerusalem as inaccessible to enemies as if it were surrounded by an impassable sea.

b Heb. "your."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "even a blind man shall divide much spoil."

d-d 1QIs^a reads "And the valleys shall be cleft, / And all the host of heaven shall wither."

20–24: The notion of the inviolability of Zion is repeated. This passage reverses but also echoes ch 1, which bitterly condemns Jerusalem's leaders yet describes the city's inviolability. These vv. form a fitting end to the prophecies of Isaiah son of Amoz.

Chs 34–35: Vengeance on Edom and the restoration of Israel. According to most modern scholars, these chs were written after the Babylonian exile, which ended in 538 BCE, probably by the same author responsible for chs 40–66 or 54–66. (On the authorship of Isa. chs 40–66 and 34–35, see intro.) Alternatively, these chs may have been written in the postexilic period as a bridge linking the prophecies of Isaiah in chs 1–33 with the exilic and postexilic prophecies in chs 40–66. 34.1–17: Judgment against the nations and against the Edomites in particular. A disturbing ch, full of bitterness and anger, this text portrays the LORD as wreaking vengeance against the nations, apparently because they opposed Zion. It focuses in particular on Edom, a nation located southeast of Judah between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Aqaba or Eilat. Relations between Edom and Judah during the preexilic period were often hostile (e.g., 2 Sam. 8.13–14). This hostility had deep roots: According to Genesis, the Edomites were descended from Esau, Jacob's brother and rival (see Gen. 25.20–34; 27.1–28.9; 33.1–20; Mal. 1.1–5). The Edomites were especially antagonistic towards the Judeans when the Babylonians conquered Judah at the end of the 6th century BCE, and Judean anger towards the Edomites was severe (see Ps. 137.7; Ezek. 25.12; 35.5–10; Obad. vv. 10–16). This ch predicts an utter disaster overcoming the Edomites in the strongest possible terms. This is ironic in light of later Jewish history, since the Edomites converted to Judaism en masse during the late 2nd century BCE, and were among the most zealous Jews during the conflict with Rome in the 1st century CE. Rabbinic literature understands Edom

5 For My sword shall ^abe drunk^a in the sky;
 Lo, it shall come down upon Edom,
 Upon the people I have doomed,
 To wreak judgment.
 6 The LORD has a sword; it is sated with blood,
 It is gorged with fat—
 The blood of lambs and he-goats,
 The kidney fat of rams.
 For the LORD holds a sacrifice in Bozrah,
 A great slaughter in the land of Edom.
 7 Wild oxen shall fall ^bwith them,^b
 Young bulls with mighty steers;
 And their land shall be drunk with blood,
 Their soil shall be saturated with fat.
 8 For it is the LORD's day of retribution,
 The year of vindication for Zion's cause.
 9 Its^c streams shall be turned to pitch
 And its soil to sulfur.
 Its land shall become burning pitch,
 Night and day it shall never go out;
 Its smoke shall rise for all time.
 Through the ages it shall lie in ruins;
 Through the aeons none shall traverse it.
 11 ^dJackdaws and owls^d shall possess it;
 Great owls and ravens shall dwell there.
 He shall measure it with a line of chaos
 And with weights of emptiness.^e
 12 ^dIt shall be called, "No kingdom is there,"^d
 Its nobles and all its lords shall be nothing.
 13 Thorns shall grow up in its palaces,
 Nettles and briers in its strongholds.
 It shall be a home of jackals,
 An abode of ostriches.
 14^f Wildcats shall meet hyenas,
 Goat-demons shall greet each other;
 There too the lilit^g shall repose
 And find herself a resting place.
 15 There the arrow-snake shall nest and lay eggs,
 And shall brood and hatch in its shade.
 There too the buzzards shall gather
 With one another.
 16 Search and read it in the scroll of the LORD:
 Not one of these shall be absent,

in prophetic texts as a symbolic reference to the Roman empire and Christianity, rather than to the historical Edomites, who were in fact Jewish by the time rabbinic literature was composed. See, for example, Targum to v. 9. 1-4: Judgment against the nations of the world. 5-8: The slaughter of the Edomites. 9-17: The everlasting destruction of Edom is depicted through two somewhat contradictory figures: In vv. 9-10, Edom becomes the site of an eternal fire (cf. 66.24); in vv. 11-17, Edom becomes a deserted wasteland, inhabited only by wild beasts. 14: Lilit: In ancient Semitic folklore contemporaneous with the Bible (and also in rabbinic literature), this term referred to a group of female demons. They seduced and then killed single men, and they were especially dangerous to nursing mothers and infants. In later rabbinic and kabbalistic folklore, a character with this name was said to be the first wife of Adam. Their parting was not amicable; he later married Eve, and she embarked on a career killing young children. These legends about Adam and Lilit are post-biblical, however, and have no bearing on the term used here.

a-a 1QIs^a reads "be seen"; cf. Targum. b-b Emendation yields "with fattened calves."

c I.e., Edom's. d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e I.e., He shall plan chaos and emptiness for it; cf. 28.17; Lam. 2.8.

f Most of the creatures in vv. 14-15 cannot be identified with certainty.

g A kind of demon.

Not one shall miss its fellow.
 For His^a mouth has spoken,
 It is His spirit that has assembled them,
 17 And it is He who apportioned it to them by lot,
 Whose hand divided it for them with the line.
 They shall possess it for all time,
 They shall dwell there through the ages.

35 The arid desert shall be glad,
 The wilderness shall rejoice
 And shall blossom like a rose.^b
 2 It shall blossom abundantly,
 It shall also exult and shout.
 It shall receive the glory of Lebanon,
 The splendor of Carmel and Sharon.
 They shall behold the glory of the LORD,
 The splendor of our God.

3 Strengthen the hands that are slack;
 Make firm the tottering knees!
 4 Say to the anxious of heart,
 "Be strong, fear not;
 Behold your God!
 Requital is coming,
 The recompense of God—
 He Himself is coming to give you triumph."

5 Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened,
 And the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped.
 6 Then the lame shall leap like a deer,
 And the tongue of the dumb shall shout aloud;
 For waters shall burst forth in the desert,
 Streams in the wilderness.

7 Torrid earth shall become a pool;
 Parched land, fountains of water;
 The home of jackals, a pasture;^c
 The abode [of ostriches],^d reeds and rushes.

8 And a highway shall appear there,
 Which shall be called the Sacred Way.
 No one unclean shall pass along it,
 But it shall be for them.^e
^fNo traveler, not even fools, shall go astray.^f
 9 No lion shall be there,

35.1–10: The renewal of Israel and the return of the exiles. This ch is the converse of the previous one: In ch 34, a land inhabited by Judah's enemies becomes a desert; in ch 35, the desert is transformed so that Judean exiles in Babylonia can pass through it with ease on their journey to Zion. Normally, travelers from Babylonia to the land of Israel would move northwest along the Euphrates, then southwest through Syria, avoiding the route that went directly west through the impassable desert. But this prophecy insists that the exiles will be able to go directly and quickly through the desert, because the LORD will provide water and safety for them there. This passage borrows extensively from Jeremiah's prediction of the exiles' return in Jer. 31.7–9. It amplifies that prediction, while changing its historical referent from northern (Israelite) exiles in Assyria to southern (Judean) exiles in Babylonia. It also deliberately recalls the vocabulary of Isaiah 32.1–6. 6–10: The return to Zion is portrayed as a new exodus, a major theme in Deutero-Isaiah: Like the Israelites fleeing slavery in Egypt, the returning exiles will receive water and protection in the desert as they go to the land of Israel. 8: No one unclean: Since God would personally accompany the exiles (v. 4), they would have to be in a state of ritual purity.

a Heb. "My." b Lit. "crocus."

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "a marsh." d Cf. 34.13.

e Emendation yields "for His people." f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

No ferocious beast shall set foot on it—

These shall not be found there.

But the redeemed shall walk it;

10 And the ransomed of the LORD shall return,

And come with shouting to Zion,

Crowned with joy everlasting.

They shall attain joy and gladness,

While sorrow and sighing flee.

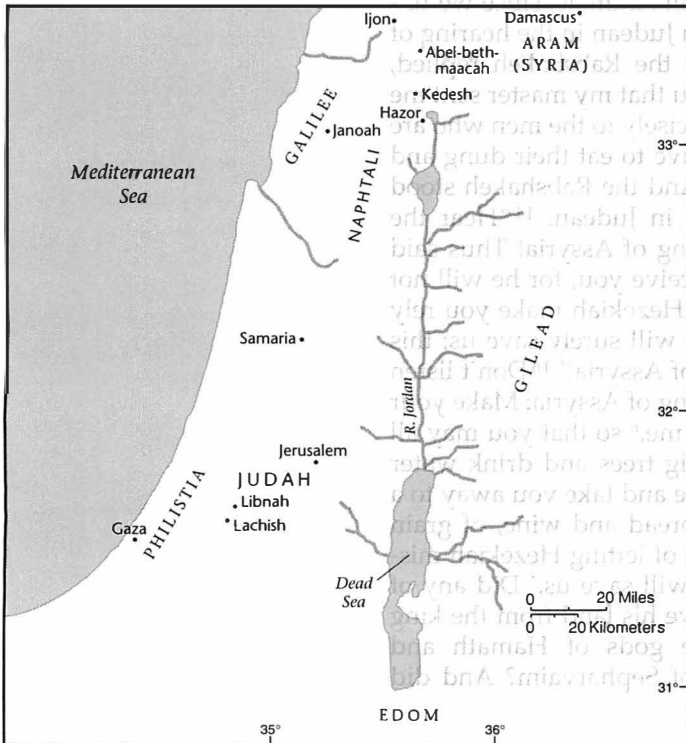

36^aIn the fourteenth year of King Hezekiah, King Sennacherib of Assyria marched against all the fortified towns of Judah and seized them. ²From Lachish, the king of Assyria sent the Rabshakeh,^b with a large force, to King Hezekiah in Jerusalem. [The Rabshakeh] took up a position near the conduit of the Upper Pool, by the road of the Fuller's Field; ³and Eliakim son of Hilkiyah who was in ^a Chaps. 36-39 occur also as 2 Kings 18.13-20.19, with a number of variants, some of which will be cited here in the footnotes.

^b An Assyrian title; cf. "Tartan," 20.1.

Chs 36-39: Historical appendices to the prophecies of Isaiah son of Amoz. These chs closely resemble 2 Kings 18.13-20.19. It seems likely that they were originally part of 2 Kings, since they consist of historical narratives of the sort found throughout the books of Kings, rather than prophetic pronouncements of the sort found throughout the book of Isaiah. They were probably taken from 2 Kings and inserted into Isaiah (with several variations) because the prophet Isaiah plays an important role in these narratives. For detailed notes, see the relevant section in 2 Kings.

Chs 36-37: The invasion of Sennacherib in 701 BCE. The Assyrian king Sennacherib invaded the western edge of Asia to put down revolts there by his vassals, who were supported by the king of Egypt. This event serves as the backdrop of many prophecies of Isaiah, such as 1.5-9; 10.28-34; 22.1-14; 23.1-18; 29.1-24; 33.1-24, among others. The account here portrays the event as a disaster for Assyria and an impressive victory for Judah, as does 2 Chron. ch 32. The account in 2 Kings is largely identical, but it adds several vv. (2 Kings 18.14-16) which differ considerably, portraying the event as a partial Assyrian victory.
36.1-37.8: The arrival of Assyrian messengers and negotiations between them and the leadership of Judah. 1-3: The arrival of the Assyrians. Assyrian records indicate that Assyrian troops vanquished forty-six Judean cities, but not Jerusalem. Isaiah had been predicting an invasion which would devastate Judah but spare Jerusalem since early in his career; cf. 1.5-9; 8.8; 29.1-24.

Places associated with Sennacherib's invasion of Judah

charge of the palace, Shebna the scribe, and Joah son of Asaph the recorder went out to him.

⁴The Rabshakeh said to them, "You tell Hezekiah: Thus said the Great King, the king of Assyria: What makes you so confident? ⁵I suppose^a mere talk makes counsel and valor for war! Look, on whom are you relying, that you have rebelled against me? ⁶You are relying on Egypt, that splintered reed of a staff, which enters and punctures the palm of anyone who leans on it. That's what Pharaoh king of Egypt is like to all who rely on him. ⁷And if you tell me that you are relying on the LORD your God, He is the very one whose shrines and altars Hezekiah did away with, telling Judah and Jerusalem, 'You must worship only at this altar!' ⁸Come now, make this wager with my master, the king of Assyria: I'll give you two thousand horses, if you can produce riders to mount them. ⁹So how could you refuse anything, even to the deputy of one of my master's lesser servants, relying on Egypt for chariots and horsemen? ¹⁰And do you think I have marched against this land to destroy it without the LORD? The LORD Himself told me: Go up against that land and destroy it."

¹¹Eliakim, Shebna, and Joah replied to the Rabshakeh, "Please, speak to your servants in Aramaic, since we understand it; do not speak to us in Judean in the hearing of the people on the wall." ¹²But the Rabshakeh replied, "Was it to your master and to you that my master sent me to speak those words? It was precisely to the men who are sitting on the wall—who will have to eat their dung and drink their urine with you." ¹³And the Rabshakeh stood and called out in a loud voice in Judean: ¹⁴"Hear the words of the Great King, the king of Assyria! Thus said the king: Don't let Hezekiah deceive you, for he will not be able to save you. ¹⁵Don't let Hezekiah make you rely on the LORD, saying, 'The LORD will surely save us; this city will not fall into the hands of Assyria!' ¹⁶Don't listen to Hezekiah. For thus said the king of Assyria: Make your peace with me and come out to me,^b so that you may all eat from your vines and your fig trees and drink water from your cisterns, ¹⁷until I come and take you away to a land like your own, a land of bread and wine, of grain [fields] and vineyards. ¹⁸Beware of letting Hezekiah mislead you by saying, 'The LORD will save us.' Did any of the gods of the other nations save his land from the king of Assyria? ¹⁹Where were the gods of Hamath and Arpad? Where were the gods of Sepharvaim? And did

4–10: The Assyrian official's speech to the Judeans. The Rabshakeh, or Assyrian general, urges the Judeans to surrender. 6: Isaiah disapproved of the Judean policy of relying on the Egyptians as a counterbalance against Assyria. See 30.1–11; 31.1–9. 7: Hezekiah had centralized sacrificial worship in Jerusalem, closing many local temples and shrines throughout Judah. See 2 Kings 18.4–6; 2 Chron. 29.3–31.21. His actions were based on laws of centralization like those found in Deut. ch 12, but the Rabshakeh misinterprets them as blasphemous. 11–22: The dialogue between the Assyrian official and the Judeans. 19–20: Cf. the similar speech put into the mouth of the Assyrian king in 10.8–11.

^a 2 Kings 18.20 "You must think."

^b I.e., to my representative the Rabshakeh.

they^a save Samaria from me? ²⁰Which among all the gods of those countries saved their countries from me, that the LORD should save Jerusalem from me?" ²¹But they were silent and did not answer him with a single word; for the king's order was: "Do not answer him."

²²And so Eliakim son of Hilkiyah who was in charge of the palace, Shebna the scribe, and Joah son of Asaph the recorder came to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and they reported to him what the Rabshakeh had said.

37 When King Hezekiah heard this, he rent his clothes and covered himself with sackcloth and went into the House of the LORD. ²He also sent Eliakim, who was in charge of the palace, Shebna, the scribe, and the senior priests, covered with sackcloth, to the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz. ³They said to him, "Thus said Hezekiah: This day is a day of distress, of chastisement, and of disgrace. ^bThe babes have reached the birthstool, but the strength to give birth is lacking." ⁴Perhaps the LORD your God will take note of the words of the Rabshakeh, whom his master the king of Assyria has sent to blaspheme the living God, and will mete out judgment for the words that the LORD your God has heard—if you will offer up prayer for the surviving remnant."

⁵When King Hezekiah's ministers came to Isaiah, ⁶Isaiah said to them, "Tell your master as follows: Thus said the LORD: Do not be frightened by the words of blasphemy against Me that you have heard from the minions of the king of Assyria. ⁷I will delude^c him: He will hear a rumor and return to his land, and I will make him fall by the sword in his land."

⁸The Rabshakeh, meanwhile, heard that [the King] had left Lachish; he turned back and found the king of Assyria attacking Libnah. ⁹But [the king of Assyria] learned that King Tirhakah of Nubia had come out to fight him; and when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying, ¹⁰"Tell this to King Hezekiah of Judah: Do not let your God, on whom you are relying, mislead you into thinking that Jerusalem will not be delivered into the hands of the king of Assyria. ¹¹You yourself have heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all the lands, how they have annihilated them; and can you escape? ¹²Were the nations that my predecessors^d destroyed—Gozan, Haran, Rezeph, and the Bethedenites in Telassar—saved by their gods?

37.1-7: The reaction of the Judeans. Hezekiah, the king of Judah, is dismayed. He seeks advice from Isaiah, who emphasizes that God has vowed to protect Jerusalem. 8: The Assyrian general leaves. 37.9-36: Assyrian messengers to the Judeans, and Judean reactions. The narrative sequence of vv. resembles that of the preceding ones, and they may present another version of the same events rather than a second series of negotiations between the Assyrians and Judeans. 9-13: The Assyrians' message to the Judeans. Cf. 36.4-22. 11-13: Cf. 36.11-22; 10.8-11.

a I.e., the gods of Samaria.

b-b I.e., the situation is desperate, and we are at a loss.

c Lit. "put a spirit in." d Lit. "fathers."

13 Where is the king of Hamath? and the king of Arpad? and the kings of Lair, Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivvah?"

14 Hezekiah received the letter from the messengers and read it. Hezekiah then went up to the House of the LORD and spread it out before the LORD. 15 And Hezekiah prayed to the LORD: 16 "O LORD of Hosts, enthroned on the Cherubim! You alone are God of all the kingdoms of the earth. You made the heavens and the earth. 17 O LORD, incline Your ear and hear, open Your eye and see. Hear all the words that Sennacherib has sent to blaspheme the living God! 18 True, O LORD, the kings of Assyria have annihilated all the nations^a and their lands 19 and have committed their gods to the flames and have destroyed them; for they are not gods, but man's handwork of wood and stone. 20 But now, O LORD our God, deliver us from his hands, and let all the kingdoms of the earth know that You, O LORD, alone [are God]."^b

21 Then Isaiah son of Amoz sent this message to Hezekiah: "Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel, to whom you have prayed, concerning King Sennacherib of Assyria— 22 this is the word that the LORD has spoken concerning him:

Fair Maiden Zion despises you,
 She mocks at you;
 Fair Jerusalem shakes
 Her head at you.
 23 Whom have you blasphemed and reviled?
 Against whom made loud your voice
 And haughtily raised your eyes?
 Against the Holy One of Israel!
 24 Through your servants you have blasphemed my Lord.
 Because you thought,
 "Thanks to my vast chariotry,
 It is I who have climbed the highest mountains,
 To the remotest parts of the Lebanon,
 And have cut down its loftiest cedars,
 Its choicest cypresses,
 And have reached its highest peak,
 "Its densest forest."
 25 It is I who have drawn^d
 And drunk water.

14–20: King Hezekiah's reaction is portrayed as more faithful and less lacking in confidence than it was in 37.1–7. 21–35: Isaiah's reaction. The poem attributed to Isaiah here resembles his prophecies throughout chs 1–33. Note especially the emphasis on Zion (v. 22), the criticism of haughtiness of the foreign empire (v. 23), the phrase Holy One of Israel (v. 23; cf., e.g., 1.4; 5.19; 10.20), the use of imagery taken from Assyrian propaganda (vv. 24–25; cf. 10.7–15; 10.33–24; 14.8; 17.12–14), the notion of the remnant of Judah from whom Israel will be renewed (vv. 31–32; cf. 6.13; 7.3) and especially the doctrine of the inviolability of Zion (vv. 33–35).

a So 2 Kings 19.17, and 13 mss. here; most mss. and editions read "lands."

b Supplied from 2 Kings 19.19.

c-c Lit. "Its farmland forest"; exact meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d Or "dug"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

I have dried up with the soles of my feet
 All the streams of Egypt.^a
 26 Have you not heard? Of old
 I planned that very thing,
 I designed it long ago,
 And now have fulfilled it.
 And it has come to pass,
 Laying fortified towns waste in desolate heaps.
 27 Their inhabitants are helpless,
 Dismayed and shamed.
 They were but grass of the field
 And green herbage,
 Grass of the roofs ^athat is blasted
 Before the east wind.^a
 28 I know your stayings
 And your goings and comings,
 And how you have raged against Me,
 29 Because you have raged against Me,
 And your tumult has reached My ears,
 I will place My hook in your nose
 And My bit between your jaws;
 And I will make you go back by the road
 By which you came.

³⁰“And this is the sign for you:^b This year you eat what grows of itself, and the next year what springs from that,
 and in the third year sow and reap and plant vineyards and eat their fruit. ³¹And the survivors of the House of Judah that have escaped shall renew its trunk below and produce boughs above.

32 For a remnant shall come forth from Jerusalem,
 Survivors from Mount Zion.
 The zeal of the LORD of Hosts
 Shall bring this to pass.

³³“Assuredly, thus said the LORD concerning the king of Assyria:

He shall not enter this city;
 He shall not shoot an arrow at it,
 Or advance upon it with a shield,
 Or pile up a siegemound against it.
 34 He shall go back

a-a So ms. 1QIs^a; cf. 2 Kings 19.26. The usual reading in our passage means, literally, “and a field [?] before standing grain.”

b I.e., Hezekiah.

By the way he came,
He shall not enter this city
—declares the LORD;

35 I will protect and save this city for My sake
And for the sake of My servant David.”

³⁶[That night]^a an angel of the LORD went out and struck down one hundred and eighty-five thousand in the Assyrian camp, and the following morning they were all dead corpses.

³⁷So King Sennacherib of Assyria broke camp and retreated, and stayed in Nineveh. ³⁸While he was worshipping in the temple of his god Nisroch, he was struck down with the sword by his sons Adrammelech and Sarezer. They fled to the land of Ararat, and his son Esarhaddon succeeded him as king.

38 In those days Hezekiah fell dangerously ill. The prophet Isaiah son of Amoz came and said to him, “Thus said the LORD: Set your affairs in order, for you are going to die; you will not get well.” ²Thereupon Hezekiah turned his face to the wall and prayed to the LORD. ³“Please, O LORD,” he said, “remember how I have walked before You sincerely and wholeheartedly, and have done what is pleasing to You.” And Hezekiah wept profusely.

⁴Then the word of the LORD came to Isaiah: ⁵“Go and tell Hezekiah: Thus said the LORD, the God of your father David: I have heard your prayer, I have seen your tears. I hereby add fifteen years to your life. ⁶I will also rescue you and this city from the hands of the king of Assyria. I will protect this city. ⁷And this is the sign for you from the LORD that the LORD will do the thing that He has promised: ⁸I am going to make the shadow on the steps, which has descended on the dial^b of Ahaz because of the sun, recede ten steps.” And the sun[’s shadow] receded ten steps, the same steps as it had descended.

⁹A poem by King Hezekiah of Judah when he recovered from the illness he had suffered:

10^c I had thought:
I must depart in the middle of my days;
I have been consigned to the gates of Sheol
For the rest of my years.

36: The miraculous disappearance of the army that threatened Zion. Cf. 2 Chron. 32.21–23. In 2 Kings 18.14–16, the Assyrians leave only after having been offered tribute. 37–38: The withdrawal of the Assyrians and the death of Sennacherib. According to Assyrian records, Sennacherib was assassinated in 681 BCE, two decades after the events described here.

Chs 38–39: The illness of Hezekiah and the overtures of the Babylonian empire. The events described in chs 38–39 preceded the events described in chs 36–37 by at least ten years. Because chs 38–39 end with a prediction of the Babylonian exile, however, they were placed after chs 36–37, so that the prediction of the Babylonian exile would immediately precede ch 40, whose subject is the return from that exile. 38.1–8: Hezekiah’s illness and prayer. 9–20: Hezekiah’s psalm of thanksgiving. This text does not appear in the parallel version in 2 Kings 20. It is typical of psalms of thanksgiving found in the book of Psalms. Similar elements appear, for example, in the psalms of thanksgiving in Psalm 118 and in Jonah ch 2. 10–13: A description of the crisis that the speaker overcame. Cf. Ps. 118.5–7; 10–16; Jonah 2.4–7.

a Supplied from 2 Kings 19.35.

b Heb. “steps.” A model of a dial with steps has been discovered in Egypt.

c Meaning of verse uncertain. in part.

11 I thought, I shall never see Yah,^a Yah in the land of the living,
 Or ever behold men again
 Among those who inhabit the earth.
 12 My dwelling is pulled up and removed from me
 Like a tent of shepherds;
 My life is rolled up like a web
 And cut from the thrum.

^bOnly from daybreak to nightfall
 Was I kept whole,

13 Then it was as though a lion
 Were breaking all my bones;
 I cried out until morning.
 (Only from daybreak to nightfall
 Was I kept whole.)^b

14 I piped like a swift or a swallow,
 I moaned like a dove,
 As my eyes, all worn, looked to heaven:
 "My Lord, I am in straits;
 Be my surety!"

15 What can I say? ^bHe promised me,^b
 And He it is who has wrought it.
^bAll my sleep had fled
 Because of the bitterness of my soul.
 16 My Lord, for all that and despite it
 My life-breath is revived;^b
 You have restored me to health and revived me.
 17 Truly, it was for my own good
 That I had such great bitterness:
 You saved my life
 From the pit of destruction,
 For You have cast behind Your back
 All my offenses.

18 For it is not Sheol that praises You,
 Not [the Land of] Death that extols You;
 Nor do they who descend into the Pit
 Hope for Your grace.

19 The living, only the living
 Can give thanks to You
 As I do this day;
 Fathers^c relate to children
 Your acts of grace:

20 "[It has pleased] the LORD to deliver us,^c

14: A reference to a lament or petition the speaker uttered during the crisis. Cf. Ps. 118.5; Jonah 2.3.

15-20: God's faithfulness: The speaker has been saved. Cf. Ps. 118.8-9; Jonah 2.7-8.

a I.e., visit His Temple. For "Yah" see 12.2; 26.4.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Heb. singular.

That is why we offer up music^a
 All the days of our lives
 At the House of the LORD.”

²¹When Isaiah said, “Let them take a cake of figs and apply it to the rash, and he will recover,” ²²Hezekiah asked, “What will be the sign that I shall go up to the House of the LORD?”

39 At that time, Merodach-baladan son of Baladan, the king of Babylon, sent [envoys with] a letter and a gift to Hezekiah, for he had heard about his illness and recovery. ²Hezekiah was pleased by their coming, and he showed them his treasure house—the silver, the gold, the spices, and the fragrant oil—and all his armory, and everything that was to be found in his storehouses. There was nothing in his palace or in all his realm that Hezekiah did not show them. ³Then the prophet Isaiah came to King Hezekiah. “What,” he demanded of him, “did those men say to you? Where have they come to you from?” “They have come to me,” replied Hezekiah, “from a far country, from Babylon.” ⁴Next he asked, “What have they seen in your palace?” And Hezekiah replied, “They have seen everything there is in my palace. There was nothing in my storehouses that I did not show them.”

⁵Then Isaiah said to Hezekiah, “Hear the word of the LORD of Hosts: ⁶A time is coming when everything in your palace, which your ancestors have stored up to this day, will be carried off to Babylon; nothing will be left behind, said the LORD. ⁷And some of your sons, your own issue, whom you will have fathered, will be taken to serve as eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.” ⁸Hezekiah declared to Isaiah, “The word of the LORD that you have spoken is good.” For he thought, “It means that ^bsafety is assured for^b my time.”

40 Comfort, oh comfort My people,
 Says your God.
² Speak tenderly to Jerusalem,
 And declare to her
 That her term of service is over,
 That her iniquity is expiated;
 For she has received at the hand of the LORD
 Double for all her sins.

^a Neginothai is a poetic form of neginoth.

^{b-b} Lit. “there shall be safety and faithfulness in.”

21–22: The healing of Hezekiah. In 2 Kings 20.6–7, these vv. follow immediately on the prediction that God will add fifteen years to Hezekiah’s life and protect him from the Assyrians in Isa. 38.5–6. Thus in 2 Kings ch 20, these vv. lead naturally into the sign oracle, which appears here in 38.7–8.

39.1–4: The ambassadors from Babylon. Merodach-baladan was king of Babylonia in the 710s BCE. He attempted to lead a revolt against the Assyrians, and his messengers tried to entice Hezekiah to join the revolt. Ultimately, the revolt did not succeed; see the n. to ch 21. Here as in 21.1–10 Isaiah counsels against relying on the Babylonians. 5–8: A prediction of the Babylonian exile. It is unlikely that this prophecy was in fact uttered by the historical Isaiah son of Amoz. Isaiah believed that Jerusalem would never fall, and he does not seem to have anticipated any break in the reign of Davidic kings, even though he predicted that Judah would be punished and the Davidic family sorely pressed. This prediction was probably attributed to Isaiah by the author of 2 Kings, and the whole passage was added to the book of Isaiah from Kings. It provides a link with the next section of the book of Isaiah, the prophecies of an anonymous prophet who lived in the Babylonian exile. See introduction.

Chs 40–48: The first prophecies of Deutero-Isaiah. On the authorship of chs 40–66, see intro. The first of the three sections within chs 40–66 was written by the anonymous exilic prophet in Babylonia, shortly before or immediately after the fall of Babylonia to the Persians led by Cyrus, but before Cyrus issued his decree allowing the Judean exiles to return to Zion (see Ezra 6.3–5; 2 Chron. 36.22–23). Chs 40–48 consist of several long speeches. In each, Deutero-Isaiah marshals evidence to show the depressed exiles that (1) God is genuinely powerful, and the Babylonian conquest does not indicate that God was defeated by some other alleged god or some other force; (2) God con-

- 3 A voice rings out:
 "Clear in the desert
 A road for the LORD!
 Level in the wilderness
 A highway for our God!"
- 4 Let every valley be raised,
 Every hill and mount made low.
 Let the rugged ground become level
 And the ridges become a plain.
- 5 The Presence of the LORD shall appear,
 And all flesh, as one, shall behold—
 For the LORD Himself has spoken."
- 6 A voice rings out: "Proclaim!"
 "Another asks," "What shall I proclaim?"
 "All flesh is grass,
 All its goodness like flowers of the field:

a-a 1QIs^a and Septuagint read "And I asked."

tinues to love the nation Israel, and the Babylonian conquest does not indicate that God has abandoned Israel; (3) God is reliable, and what God promises God does; and therefore (4) the exiles can be sure that they will soon return to their land. The prophet frequently seems to be responding to specific complaints, doubts, and expressions of hopelessness among the exiles. A few of these statements made by Deutero-Isaiah's listeners are cited explicitly (e.g., 40.27; 49.14; 50.1; 50.2). Each speech appearing in these chs moves through several types of reasoning to support these assertions; then the speech ends, and another one begins. It is often difficult (and, ultimately, unimportant) to delineate the precise beginning and end of each speech, since each one presents the same argument using the same types of evidence. This first section of Deutero-Isaiah's prophecies focuses on several themes that are absent in chs 49–66: They emphasize the uniqueness of the LORD, who is the only God; they identify the Persian king Cyrus as the individual through whom God brings salvation to Israel; and they compare "former things" that God had done with "new things" that God is about to do. Since the major message of this prophet is reconciliation and comfort, eight sections from these chapters are read as the haftarah, or prophetic readings, in the summer, on the Sabbaths following Tish'ah be'av, which commemorates the destruction of the Temple.

40.1–11: An introduction to the prophecies of Deutero-Isaiah. Vv. 1–11 introduce the main themes and motifs of the following chs: God comforts the nation, assures them that their term of punishment in the Babylonian exile has ended, and promises that they will soon return to Zion. This introductory passage echoes elements of the prophetic initiation scene (see n. to ch 6): God announces that God has a message that the prophet should convey to the nation Israel (vv. 1–5); the prophet objects and is reassured (vv. 6–9). This section also introduces a special feature of Deutero-Isaiah's work: This prophet frequently borrows and revises material from older biblical texts. This tendency to allude to earlier compositions is especially evident in these eleven vv., which use terms and images from ch 6;

28.1–2; Jer. 16.16–18; 31.15; Ezek. 21.2–12; Exod. 32.14–15; Lam. 1.2, 9, 16, 21. 1–2: God's initial message of consolation. These initial two vv. summarize the main themes of chs 40–66 in their entirety. The verbs (comfort, speak, declare) are in the plural, indicating that God addresses not only Deutero-Isaiah but other messengers as well, probably angelic messengers in the heavenly court. As in ch 6 and 2 Kings ch 22, the prophet overhears and to some extent participates in the deliberations of God's angelic staff. 3–5: God's highway. The Presence of God left the land of Israel along with the exiles (cf. Ezek. chs 8–11); now it will return with them (cf. Ezek. 43.1–5). On the motif of the road through the desert, see 35.1–10 n. (Chs 34 and 35 were written by Deutero-Isaiah.) Double for all her sins: The exiles may feel that they deserve punishment, and therefore salvation is remote. The prophet assures them that the punishment they have suffered is enough—indeed, more than enough—and there is no impediment to their salvation. Cf. Jer. 16.18 and Isa. 61.7. 6–8: Objection and reassurance. A heavenly voice gives an order to issue a proclamation; another voice (probably that of the prophet, especially if the alternate version in translators' note a-a is correct) asks what should be proclaimed, and the first voice answers this question. According to the quotation marks added by the NJPS translation, the prophet's question is brief, and the answer takes up most of v. 6 and all of vv. 7–8. Thus the prophet must proclaim that humans are weak (and therefore the Babylonian conquerors will disappear), but God's strength is enduring. It is also possible, however, that the prophet's question continues all the way through the end of v. 7. In that case, these vv. are an objection to acting as conduit for the divine word: As a mere human, the prophet fears that he will be overcome by the powerful and destructive breath of the LORD (lit. "wind" or "Spirit" of the LORD, which is a

- 7 Grass withers, flowers fade
When the breath of the LORD blows on them.
Indeed, man is but grass:
- 8 Grass withers, flowers fade—
But the word of our God is always fulfilled!"
- 9 Ascend a lofty mountain,
O herald of joy to Zion;
Raise your voice with power,
O herald of joy to Jerusalem—
Raise it, have no fear;
Announce to the cities of Judah:
Behold your God!
- 10 Behold, the Lord GOD comes in might,
And His arm wins triumph for Him;
See, His reward^a is with Him,
His recompense before Him.
- 11 Like a shepherd He pastures His flock:
He gathers the lambs in His arms
And carries them in His bosom;
Gently He drives the mother sheep.
- 12 Who measured the waters with the hollow of His hand,
And gauged the skies with a span,
And meted earth's dust with a measure,^b
And weighed the mountains with a scale
And the hills with a balance?
- 13 Who has plumbed the mind of the LORD,
What man could tell Him His plan?
- 14 Whom did He consult, and who taught Him,
Guided Him in the way of right?
Who guided Him in knowledge
And showed Him the path of wisdom?
- 15 The nations are but a drop in a bucket,
Reckoned as dust on a balance;
The very coastlands He lifts like motes.
- 16 Lebanon is not fuel enough,
Nor its beasts enough for sacrifice.
- 17 All nations are as naught in His sight;
He accounts them as less than nothing.
- 18 To whom, then, can you liken God,
What form compare to Him?

technical term denoting the God-given capability to serve as a prophet). V. 8 contains the divine response: Even though the task of conveying God's words is frightening, it must be completed. 6: Goodness, or, "loyalty, reliability." 9-11: God's arrival in Jerusalem. Messengers are told to announce to Jerusalem that the LORD will soon arrive. Normally, a herald would inform a city that an army was arriving, but here God arrives as a gentle shepherd, not to destroy but to protect.

40.12-31: The incomparable God. In this speech, Deutero-Isaiah focuses on God's unique power. Because the LORD is the only true God and the creator of the world, the LORD will be able to defeat the Babylonians and restore Zion. Some Judeans probably believed that Babylon's gods defeated their God, but the prophet insists that in fact no other being in the universe could do so. 12-17: Divine grandeur. No entity in heaven or earth compares to God, and therefore none can prevent God from acting. 18-20: A brief argument against idolatry: Certainly the God who created the world is mightier than the gods worshipped by most humans. Those gods, after all, are created, not creators.

^a The reward and recompense to the cities of Judah; cf. Jer. 31.14, 16.

^b Heb. shalish "third," probably a third of an ephah.

- 19 The idol? A woodworker shaped it,
And a smith overlaid it with gold, ^aForging links of silver.^a
- 20 As a gift, he chooses the mulberry^b—
A wood that does not rot—
Then seeks a skillful woodworker
To make a firm idol,
That will not topple.
- 21 Do you not know?
Have you not heard?
Have you not been told
From the very first?
Have you not discerned
^aHow the earth was founded?^a
- 22 It is He who is enthroned above the vault of the earth,
So that its inhabitants seem as grasshoppers;
Who spread out the skies like gauze,
Stretched them out like a tent to dwell in.
- 23 He brings potentates to naught,
Makes rulers of the earth as nothing.
- 24 Hardly are they planted,
Hardly are they sown,
Hardly has their stem
Taken root in earth,
When He blows upon them and they dry up,
And the storm bears them off like straw.
- 25 To whom, then, can you liken Me,
To whom can I be compared?
—says the Holy One.
- 26 Lift high your eyes and see:
Who created these?
He who sends out their host by count,
Who calls them each by name:
Because of His great might and vast power,
Not one fails to appear.
- 27 Why do you say, O Jacob,
Why declare, O Israel,
“My way is hid from the LORD,
My cause is ignored by my God”?
- 28 Do you not know?

21–26: God’s incomparable might as manifest in nature and in history. 27–31: Deutero-Isaiah arrives at the point of the arguments marshalled in vv. 12–26. The Judean exiles have lamented that God no longer pays attention to them (v. 27). But God is still able to listen to them, for God never grows tired (vv. 28–31).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Heb. mesukkan; according to a Jewish tradition, preserved by Jerome, a kind of wood; a similar word denotes a kind of wood in Akkadian.

Have you not heard?
 The LORD is God from of old,
 Creator of the earth from end to end,
 He never grows faint or weary,
 His wisdom cannot be fathomed.
 29 He gives strength to the weary,
 Fresh vigor to the spent.
 30 Youths may grow faint and weary,
 And young men stumble and fall;
 31 But they who trust in the LORD shall renew their strength
 As eagles grow new plumes:^a
 They shall run and not grow weary,
 They shall march and not grow faint.

41 Stand silent before Me, coastlands,
 And let nations^b renew their strength.^b
 Let them approach to state their case;
 Let us come forward together for argument.
 2 Who has roused a victor^c from the East,
 Summoned him to His service?
 Has delivered up nations to him,
 And trodden sovereigns down?
 Has rendered their^d swords like dust,
 Their^d bows like wind-blown straw?
 3 He pursues them, he goes on unscathed;
 No shackle^e is placed on his feet.
 4 Who has wrought and achieved this?
 He who announced the generations from the start—
 I, the LORD, who was first
 And will be with the last as well.
 5 The coastlands look on in fear,
 The ends of earth tremble.
 They draw near and come;
 6 Each one helps the other,
 Saying to his fellow, "Take courage!"
 7 The woodworker encourages the smith;
 He who flattens with the hammer
 [Encourages] him who pounds the anvil.
 He says of the riveting, "It is good!"
 And he fixes it with nails,
 That it may not topple.

a Alluding to a popular belief that eagles regain their youth when they molt; cf. Ps. 103.5.

b-b Connection of Heb. uncertain. c Lit. "victory."

d Heb. "his." e 'rḥ has this meaning in Old Aramaic.

31: Trust, or, "wait with patience and hope."

41.1-42.17: The divine ruler and His servants. A lengthy speech that moves through several lines of reasoning to persuade the audience that God can and will redeem Israel. A theme uniting the whole passage is service to God: Cyrus acts as God's servant by defeating Babylonia (41.2, 25); Israel is God's servant and hence enjoys divine protection (41.8; 42.1).

41.1-7: A mock dialogue with the nations. God calls on the nations to show whether they and their gods can match the true deity's power. Unable to respond, they are terrified. 1-4: God asks whether any other nation or its gods has accomplished what the LORD has. 2: A victor from the East, alternatively, "A righteous one from the east." This refers to Cyrus, king of the Persians, who lived east of Babylonia and achieved great victories over all the nations and sovereigns of the ancient Near East. The Targum takes this to refer to Abraham, the righteous man (see Gen. 15.6), whom God brought from Mesopotamia in the east to Canaan; in this case, it alludes to Abraham's military victory in Gen. ch 14. 4: The LORD takes responsibility for Cyrus's (and perhaps also Abraham's) victories. The prophet refers especially to Cyrus's defeat of the Babylonian empire. This v. recalls earlier prophecies according to which the great Mesopotamian empire that defeated Judah would itself fall; see Isa. 10.5-27; 13.1-14.27; 21.1-10; Jer. 29.10; 30.11; Zeph. 2.15. Because the God of Israel correctly predicted the downfall of Babylonia in these prophetic passages, which were written years earlier, the God of Israel is clearly the true lord of history. 5-7: The nations are unable to rely on their gods, who have not demonstrated such mastery over events as the God of Israel. Consequently, they are frightened, but rather than acknowledge the one true God, they foolishly rush to construct a new idol to save themselves.

8 But you, Israel, My servant,
 Jacob, whom I have chosen,
 Seed of Abraham My friend—
 9 You whom I drew from the ends of the earth
 And called from its far corners,
 To whom I said: You are My servant;
 I chose you, I have not rejected you—
 10 Fear not, for I am with you,
 Be not frightened, for I am your God;
 I strengthen you and I help you,
 I uphold you with My victorious right hand.
 11 Shamed and chagrined shall be
 All who contend with you;
 They who strive with you
 Shall become as naught and shall perish.
 12 You may seek, but shall not find
 Those who struggle with you;
 Less than nothing shall be
 The men who battle against you.
 13 For I the LORD am your God,
 Who grasped your right hand,
 Who say to you: Have no fear;
 I will be your help.
 14 Fear not, O worm Jacob,
 O ^amen of ^aIsrael:
 I will help you

—declares the LORD—

I your Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel.
 15 I will make of you a threshing board,
 A new thresher, with many spikes;
 You shall thresh mountains to dust,
 And make hills like chaff.
 16 You shall winnow them
 And the wind shall carry them off;
 The whirlwind shall scatter them.
 But you shall rejoice in the LORD,
 And glory in the Holy One of Israel.

17 The poor and the needy
 Seek water,^b and there is none;
 Their tongue is parched with thirst.
 I the LORD will respond to them.
 I, the God of Israel, will not forsake them.
 18 I will open up streams on the bare hills
 And fountains amid the valleys;

8–20: Encouragement to Israel, God's servant. The nations in vv. 5–7 are frightened, but the Israelites are told that they should fear no more. 8–16: Israel's fortunes are reversed. The defeated nation will be able to defeat its enemies; the great nations that tormented Israel will lose power. 9: I have not rejected you: a direct address to the exiles, who wonder whether the covenant between God and Israel came to an end with the destruction of the Temple in 586 BCE.

15: Mighty nations are compared to mountains, which Israel will be able to destroy. On the theme of the haughty mountains and empires that will disappear at the end of days, cf. 2.10–22.

17–20: Return from exile. The poor and thirsty nation will march through the desert, where God will fulfill all their needs. Here as in ch 35 Deutero-Isaiah compares the upcoming return to Zion with the exodus from Egypt, for God provided water and food for the Israelites as they traversed the Sinai desert to the land of Canaan.

a-a Emendation yields "maggot."

b I.e., on the homeward march through the desert.

I will turn the desert into ponds,
 The arid land into springs of water.
 19 I will plant cedars in the wilderness,
 Acacias and myrtles and oleasters;
 I will set cypresses in the desert,
 Box trees and elms as well—
 20 That men may see and know,
 Consider and comprehend
 That the LORD's hand has done this,
 That the Holy One of Israel has wrought it.
 21 Submit your case, says the LORD;
 Offer your pleas, says the King of Jacob.
 22 Let them approach^a and tell us what will happen.
 Tell us what has occurred,^b
 And we will take note of it;
 Or announce to us what will occur,
 That we may know the outcome.
 23 Foretell what is yet to happen,
 That we may know that you are gods!
 Do anything, good or bad,
 That we may be awed and see.^c
 24 Why, you are less than nothing,
 Your effect is less than nullity;
 One who chooses you is an abomination.
 25 I have roused him from the north, and he has come,
 From the sunrise, one who invokes My name;
 And he has trampled rulers like mud,
 Like a potter treading clay.
 26 Who foretold this from the start, that we may note it;
 From aforetime, that we might say, "He is right"?
 Not one foretold, not one announced;
 No one has heard your utterance!
 27 ^dThe things once predicted to Zion—
 Behold, here they are!^d
 And again I send a herald to Jerusalem.
 28 But I look and there is not a man;
 Not one of them can predict
 Or can respond when I question him.
 29 See, they are all nothingness,
 Their works are nullity,
 Their statues are naught and nil.

21–29: Another mock debate emphasizing God's sovereignty. As in vv. 1–4, the setting is a courtroom or contest; God speaks, but the other side in the debate simply has nothing to say in its defense and remains silent. 21–23a: The LORD argues against other gods and their believers, asking them to step forward and announce what great acts they have committed or what predictions they have successfully made. 23b: God asks the other gods to do anything at all, so that at least their mere existence will be made clear. 24: The inevitable conclusion: The other gods simply do not exist. 25–26: The LORD, by contrast, has raised up Cyrus (him from the north—Persia is northeast of Babylonia) to defeat Babylonia, just as in the past the LORD brought the Mesopotamian rulers from the north to defeat Israel and Judah and predicted the downfall of Babylonia successfully. Cf. v. 4 in this ch. 27: The things once predicted to Zion refers both to predictions of Zion's defeat (e.g., in prophecies throughout the book of Jeremiah) and also the predictions of Zion's renewal (e.g., Jer. chs 29–33). Because the former prophecies came true, one can be sure that the latter will come true as well—the LORD is reliable. 28–29: And there is not a man, better: "and there is no one." God has asked other gods to come stake their claims to divinity, but none has come forward. This compels the conclusion that they are all nothingness. 29: See, or, "Here is" (Heb "hen").

^a Taking yaggishu intransitively; cf. hiqriv. Exod. 14.10.

^b I.e., former prophecies by your gods which have been fulfilled.

^c Change of vocalization yields "fear"; cf. v. 10. ^{d-d} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

42 This is My servant, whom I uphold,
 My chosen one, in whom I delight.
 I have put My spirit upon him,
 He shall teach the true way to the nations.
 2 He shall not cry out or shout aloud,
 Or make his voice heard in the streets.
 3 ^aHe shall not break even a bruised reed,
 Or snuff out even a dim wick.^a
 He shall bring forth the true way.
 4 He shall not grow dim or be bruised
 Till he has established the true way on earth;
 And the coastlands shall await his teaching.
 5 Thus said God the LORD,
 Who created the heavens and stretched them out,
 Who spread out the earth and what it brings forth,
 Who gave breath to the people upon it
 And life to those who walk thereon:
 6 I the LORD, in My grace, have summoned you,
 And I have grasped you by the hand.
 I created you, and appointed you
 A ^bcovenant people,^b ^ca light of nations^c—
 7 ^dOpening eyes deprived of light,^d
 Rescuing prisoners from confinement,
 From the dungeon those who sit in darkness.
 8 I am the LORD, that is My name;
 I will not yield My glory to another,
 Nor My renown to idols.
 9 See, the things once predicted have come,
 And now I foretell new things,
 Announce to you ere they sprout up.
 10 Sing to the LORD a new song,
 His praise from the ends of the earth—
^eYou who sail the sea and you creatures in it,
 You coastlands^e and their inhabitants!

a-a Or "A bruised reed, he shall not be broken; / A dim wick, he shall not be snuffed out."

b-b Lit. "covenants of a people"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c See 49.6 and note.

d-d An idiom meaning "freeing the imprisoned"; cf. 61.1.

e-e Emendation yields "Let the sea roar and its creatures, / The coastlands . . ." Cf. Ps. 98.7.

42.1-9: God's servant. The identification of the servant in these vv. is hotly debated. Possibilities include Cyrus (according to Saadia Gaon), the prophet himself (so Ibn Ezra), the Messiah (so Targum and Radak), and the Israelite nation as a whole (so Septuagint and Rashi).

See 52.13-53.12 n. The term "servant" in most other passages in chs 40-66 clearly refers to the nation Israel or to the faithful within Israel, and that is the most likely explanation here as well. This passage borrows vocabulary and ideas from both ch 11 and Jer.

31.31-36. Like those passages, this text looks forward to the ideal world of the future, in which justice will reign and the covenant between Israel and God will be observed perfectly. The servant in this passage is parallel to, though not identical with, the ideal Davidic king described in ch 11; promises made to the king there are transferred to the whole nation here. Cf. 55.3 n.; 60.1-22 n.; 65.25 n. 1-4: God introduces the servant, whose gentle nature is emphasized. In these lines God addresses the nations of the world while pointing to the servant, the nation Israel. 1: This, or, "Here is" (Heb "hen"). The term deliberately contrasts God's servant with the pagan gods and their worshippers introduced with the same term in the previous v. (see 41.29 n.). 4: Coastlands: Even nations far away will know God as a result of God's treatment of Israel. This idea is further developed in v. 6. His teaching, or, "his law" (Heb "torah"). 5-7: God addresses the servant directly and describes the reason that the servant has been chosen. 6: Created, or "guarded." A covenant people, i.e., a nation that continues to exist by virtue of the covenant God formed with their ancestors long ago. In spite of their sins and in spite of the exile, the people Israel is assured of restoration because of the covenant. A light of nations: The nations of the world will witness God's faithfulness to the covenant when Israel is redeemed. Consequently, the people will be the tool through which God becomes known to all nations as mighty, just, and reliable. In this passage, the Israelites are a light to the nations by virtue of what happens to them, not because of what they do. 7: Opening . . . Rescuing: The subject of the verbs may be either the people or God. 8-9: God's guarantee to the servant. The servant is guaranteed salvation because his sponsor is the creator. 9: Things once predicted, lit. "the former things." Cf. 41.4. 42.10-17: A concluding hymn. The speech that began in 41.1 concludes with a song describing

11 Let the desert and its towns cry aloud,
The villages where Kedar dwells;
Let Sela's inhabitants shout,
Call out from the peaks of the mountains.

12 Let them do honor to the LORD,
And tell His glory in the coastlands.

13 The LORD goes forth like a warrior,
Like a fighter He whips up His rage.
He yells, He roars aloud,
He charges upon His enemies.

14 "I have kept silent ^afar too long,^a
Kept still and restrained Myself;
Now I will scream like a woman in labor,
I will pant and I will gasp.

15 Hills and heights will I scorch,
Cause all their green to wither;
I will turn rivers into isles,^b
And dry the marshes up.

16 I will lead the blind
By a road they did not know,
And I will make them walk
By paths they never knew.
I will turn darkness before them to light,
Rough places into level ground.
These are the promises—
I will keep them without fail.

17 Driven back and utterly shamed
Shall be those who trust in an image,
Those who say to idols,
'You are our gods!' "

18 Listen, you who are deaf;
You blind ones, look up and see!
19 Who is so blind as My servant,
So deaf as the messenger I send?
Who is so blind as the chosen^c one,
So blind as the servant of the LORD?
20 Seeing many things, ^dhe gives^d no heed;
With ears open, he hears nothing.

21^e The LORD desires His [servant's] vindication,
That he may magnify and glorify [His] Teaching.

a-a Lit. "from of old."

b Emendation yields "desert."

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Heb. "you give."

e Meaning of verse uncertain; cf. 43.9–12.

God's might and Israel's restoration. 10–12: As in 42.1–4, the whole world witnesses God's saving power. 11: Kedar, an area in the north of the Arabian desert, inhabited by nomads. Sela, an Edomite city, probably the city now known as Petra in the kingdom of Jordan. 13–17: God goes to war on behalf of Israel. This passage deliberately mixes two types of images of God, as warrior fighting enemies and as mother giving birth, which are united by the extraordinary energy each involves. A bloody process ends with new creation.

42.18–44.5: God's loyalty, which is unshaken even by Israel's sins.

This long speech comforts the exiles, assuring them that God is able and willing to redeem them, regardless of the sins they and their forebears committed.

42.18–43.8: The servant, who deserves punishment, will ultimately be redeemed. 18–21: The nation Israel will serve God by becoming an object lesson for God's loyalty and ability to save (cf. 42.1–9 n.). Thus Israel is a messenger; through Israel's experiences, the world will come to know the one God. Israel is blind, however, and has not yet understood its own purpose in history.

21: His vindication: This might refer to the vindication of the servant Israel or of God, or perhaps both; the former brings about the latter. Teaching, Heb "torah."

22 Yet it is a people plundered and despoiled:
 All of them are trapped in holes,
 Imprisoned in dungeons.
 They are given over to plunder, with none to rescue them;
 To despoilment, with none to say "Give back!"
 23 If only you would listen to this,
 Attend and give heed from now on!
 24 Who was it gave Jacob over to despoilment
 And Israel to plunderers?
 Surely, the LORD against whom they^a sinned
 In whose ways they would not walk
 And whose Teaching they would not obey.
 25 So He poured out wrath upon them,
 His anger and the fury of war.
 It blazed upon them all about, but they heeded not;
 It burned among them, but they gave it no thought.

43 But now thus said the LORD—
 Who created you, O Jacob,
 Who formed you, O Israel:
 Fear not, for I will redeem you;
 I have singled you out by name,
 You are Mine.
 2 When you pass through water,
 I will be with you;
 Through streams,
 They shall not overwhelm you.
 When you walk through fire,
 You shall not be scorched;
 Through flame,
 It shall not burn you.
 3 For I the LORD am your God,
 The Holy One of Israel, your Savior.
 I give Egypt as a ransom for you,
 Ethiopia and Saba in exchange for you.
 4 Because you are precious to Me,
 And honored, and I love you,
 I give men in exchange for you
 And peoples in your stead.
 5 Fear not, for I am with you:
 I will bring your folk from the East,
 Will gather you out of the West;

22-25: The tone of these vv. seems bleak, but they in fact comfort the exiles. Deutero-Isaiah recalls Israel's sins (e.g., those described in 30.9-14, whose vocabulary is repeated here) in order to explain to the people why they are in their current state. They need not doubt the LORD's attention or power to save; the nation's plight is fully understandable and justifiable. Hence the exile gives no reason for despair. 43.1-7: Just as the negative prophecies of the past were fulfilled, so too the people can have confidence that the new, positive ones will come true. 1-2: Israel belongs to God, and therefore God will not abandon her, even though God punishes her. 3-4: God will reward Cyrus with the conquest of far-off lands including Egypt, because his work allows the exiles to return home. In fact, Cyrus never conquered Egypt, but his son, Cambyses, did. 5-8: The ingathering of the exiles, not only from Babylonia (which was East of the land of Israel) but from other areas as well. Some Judean refugees fled to Egypt and other areas after the Babylonian conquest; see Jer. chs 43-44.

^a Heb. "we."

6 I will say to the North, "Give back!"
 And to the South, "Do not withhold!
 Bring My sons from afar,
 And My daughters from the end of the earth—
 7 All who are linked to My name,
 Whom I have created,
 Formed, and made for My glory—
 8 Setting free that people,
 Blind though it has eyes
 And deaf though it has ears."

9 All the nations assemble as one,
 The peoples gather.
 Who among them declared this,
 Foretold to us the things that have happened?
 Let them produce their witnesses and be vindicated,
 That men, hearing them, may say, "It is true!"^a 10 My witnesses are you

—declares the LORD—

My servant, whom I have chosen.
 To the end that you^b may take thought,
 And believe in Me,
 And understand that I am He:
 Before Me no god was formed,
 And after Me none shall exist—
 11 None but me, the LORD;
 Beside Me, none can grant triumph.
 12 I alone foretold the triumph
 And I brought it to pass;
 I announced it,
 And no strange god was among you.
 So you are My witnesses

—declares the LORD—

And I am God.
 13 Ever since day was, I am He;
 None can deliver from My hand.
 When I act, who can reverse it?

14 Thus said the LORD,
 Your Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel:
 For your sake ^cI send to Babylon;
 I will bring down all [her] bars,
 And the Chaldeans shall raise their voice in lamentation.^c

43.9–21: The arguments from prophecy and from history.

9–15: The fulfillment of prophecies concerning Babylonia. As in other speeches (41.4, 27; 42.9; 44.6–8, 24–26; 45.21; 46.10–11; 48.3), Deutero-Isaiah argues that one should believe in the God of Israel because God's predictions come true. Long ago the LORD foretold the downfall of the Mesopotamian empire that defeated Judah; see 10.5–27; 13.1–14.27; 21.1–10; Jer. 29.10; 30.11. Now that Babylonia has indeed fallen (or perhaps is about to fall), it is clear that the God of Israel alone rules time and space. 14: I send Cyrus to Babylon to conquer it. Chaldeans: The Chaldeans were a leading tribe in Babylonia from the 7th century on, and the last kings of Babylonia stemmed from this group. As a result the term "Chaldean" became a synonym for Babylonian.

^a I.e., that the other nations' gods are real.

^b Emendation yields "they." ^{c-c} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

15 I am your Holy One, the LORD,
Your King, the Creator of Israel.

16 Thus said the LORD,
Who made a road through the sea
And a path through mighty waters,
17 Who destroyed^a chariots and horses,
And all the mighty host—
They lay down to rise no more,
They were extinguished, quenched like a wick:
18 Do not recall what happened of old,
Or ponder what happened of yore!
19 I am about to do something new;
Even now it shall come to pass,
Suddenly you shall perceive it:
I will make a road through the wilderness
And rivers^b in the desert.
20 The wild beasts shall honor Me,
Jackals and ostriches,
For I provide water in the wilderness,
Rivers in the desert,
To give drink to My chosen people,
21 The people I formed for Myself
That they might declare My praise.

22 But you have not worshiped Me, O Jacob,
That you should be weary of Me, O Israel.
23 You have not brought Me your sheep for burnt offerings,
Nor honored Me with your sacrifices.
I have not burdened you with meal offerings,
Nor wearied you about frankincense.
24 You have not bought Me fragrant reed with money,
Nor sated Me with the fat of your sacrifices.
Instead, you have burdened Me with your sins,
You have wearied Me with your iniquities.
25 It is I, I who—for My own sake^c—
Wipe your transgressions away
And remember your sins no more.
26 Help me remember!
Let us join in argument,
Tell your version,
That you may be vindicated.

16-21: Long ago God took Israel out of slavery and defeated the mighty Egyptians. The liberation from Babylonian exile will prove even more impressive than the exodus from Egypt. 16-17: A reference to the parting of the Reed Sea and the defeat of Pharaoh's army there; see Exodus chs 14-15. 43.22-44.5: Israel's sin and redemption. As in 42.22-25, God recalls the sins of the Israelites (especially of the exiles' ancestors), focusing on their failure to conduct proper sacrifices. The passage underscores the justice of their punishment and hence emphasizes that God is neither uncaring toward Israel nor too weak to save it. Once the punishment has been completed, there is no impediment to Israel's restoration. 22-24: The passage is obscure. Deutero-Isaiah may maintain that the Israelites' sacrifices to the LORD were not accompanied by the proper intentions, and hence they really did not constitute worship of the LORD at all. (Cf. this prophet's criticism of the Israelites' fasts in 58.3-7; and see also other prophetic critiques of sacrifice as the Israelites practiced it, such as Isa. 1.11-13; Jer. 7.21-22; Amos 5.21-25.) Alternatively, the prophet may accuse them of neglecting the sacrificial cult and of worshipping other gods instead. Finally, this passage may simply take note of the fact that the exiles did not offer sacrifices, since they no longer had a legitimate Temple in which they could do so. 22: But you have not worshipped Me, better: "It is not Me whom you have worshipped." The Heb emphasizes the word Me. 25: The Israelites' failure or inability to offer proper sacrifices to the LORD is inconsequential; the LORD will redeem them not due to their righteousness but for the sake of God's own reputation. 43.26-44.5: The Israelites' forebears were sinful, and hence they deserved punishment. But the punishment has run its course, and redemption is now called for.

^a Understanding hosî, here, as equivalent to Aramaic shesi.

^b QIs^a reads "paths"; cf. v. 16.

^c I.e., in order to put an end to the profanation of My holy name; cf. 48.9-11.

27 Your earliest ancestor sinned,
And your spokesmen transgressed against Me.
28 So I profaned ^athe holy princes;^a
I abandoned Jacob to proscription^b
And Israel to mockery.

44 But hear, now, O Jacob My servant,
Israel whom I have chosen!

2 Thus said the LORD, your Maker,
Your Creator who has helped you since birth:
Fear not, My servant Jacob,
Jeshurun^c whom I have chosen,
3 Even as I pour water on thirsty soil,
And rain upon dry ground,
So will I pour My spirit on your offspring,
My blessing upon your posterity.
4 And they shall sprout like^d grass,
Like willows by watercourses.
5 One shall say, "I am the LORD's,"
Another shall use the name of "Jacob,"
Another shall mark his arm "of the LORD"^e
And adopt the name of "Israel."

6 Thus said the LORD, the King of Israel,
Their Redeemer, the LORD of Hosts:
I am the first and I am the last,
And there is no god but Me.
7^f Who like Me can announce,
Can foretell it—and match Me thereby?
Even as I told the future to an ancient people,
So let him foretell coming events to them.
8 Do not be frightened, do not be shaken!
Have I not from of old predicted to you?
I foretold, and you are My witnesses.
Is there any god, then, but Me?
"There is no other rock; I know none!"

9 The makers of idols
All work to no purpose;
And the things they treasure
Can do no good,
As they themselves can testify.

a-a Emendation yields "My holy name"; see preceding note.

b Emendation yields "insult."

c A name for Israel; see note on Num. 23.10; cf. Deut. 32.15; 33.5, 26.

d Lit. "in among."

e It was customary to mark a slave with the owner's name.

f Meaning of verse uncertain.

27: Your earliest ancestor, Jacob. Spokesmen, the priests and Levites; or, the kings of Israel and Judah and their advisers. 44.1: See 43.1–2 n., which applies here as well. 3–4: In the land of Israel, plants wither and remain brown for long periods until they are revived by rainfall. Israel in exile resembles these plants, which had looked dead but in fact were merely dormant. 5: Possibly a reference to non-Jews who would adopt Jewish beliefs, practices, and ethnicity, which in fact did occur during the exilic and postexilic periods. This phenomenon is one of Deutero-Isaiah's particular concerns; see 56.3–6 n.; 56.7 n.

44.6–28: The persuasive power of monotheism and the folly of idolatry. This shorter speech focuses on the argument from prophecy and the ridiculous nature of idolatry. It gives particular emphasis to one of Deutero-Isaiah's main themes: the insistence that no other gods in fact exist. As with all of the speeches in chs 40–66, the main point is that the one true God can and will redeem Israel. The speech reaches its climax with the identification of the person through whom God brings redemption, the Persian king Cyrus. 6–8: The argument from prophecy. The LORD is clearly unique, since only the LORD predicted so far in advance events that in fact came to be. Cf. 43.9–15. 9–20: A comic portrayal of an idolater. The prophet mercilessly lampoons people who make their own gods to worship, implicitly contrasting them with people who worship the true God. The former worship their own creation; the latter, much more sensibly, worship their creator. Deutero-Isaiah to some extent misrepresents, or misunderstands, the actual nature of idolatry as practiced in the ancient Near East, however. Pagans did not believe that idols really were gods, but they believed that the presence of the god entered the idol as the result of complex rituals used to activate the idol after it had been made. 9–11: The pointlessness of

They neither look nor think,
 And so they shall be shamed.
 10 Who would fashion a god
 Or cast a statue
 That can do no good?
 11 Lo, all its adherents shall be shamed;
 They are craftsmen, are merely human.
 Let them all assemble and stand up!
 They shall be cowed, and they shall be shamed.

12^a The craftsman in iron, with his tools,
 Works it^b over charcoal
 And fashions it by hammering,
 Working with the strength of his arm.
 Should he go hungry, his strength would ebb;
 Should he drink no water, he would grow faint.

13 The craftsman in wood measures with a line
 And marks out a shape with a stylus;
 He forms it with scraping tools,
 Marking it out with a compass.
 He gives it a human form,
 The beauty of a man, to dwell in a shrine.
 14 For his use he cuts down cedars;
 He chooses plane trees and oaks.
 He sets aside trees of the forest;
 Or plants firs, and the rain makes them grow.
 15 All this serves man for fuel:
 He takes some to warm himself,
 And he builds a fire and bakes bread.
 He also makes a god of it and worships it,
 Fashions an idol and bows down to it!
 16 Part of it he burns in a fire:
 On that part he roasts^c meat,
 He eats^c the roast and is sated;
 He also warms himself and cries, "Ah,
 I am warm! I can feel^d the heat!"
 17 Of the rest he makes a god—his own carving!
 He bows down to it, worships it;
 He prays to it and cries,
 "Save me, for you are my god!"

18 They have no wit or judgment:
 Their eyes are besmeared, and they see not;
 Their minds, and they cannot think.

idol-worship. 12-13: This description of how idols are made shows detailed familiarity with this ancient Near Eastern industry. Some idols were made of metal (v. 12), some of wood (v. 13). 14-20: The most biting, and humorous, section of the passage. For Deutero-Isaiah, the fact that the same piece of wood can be put to practical and idolatrous uses shows the idiosyncrasy of idolatry.

^a The meaning of parts of vv. 12-13 is uncertain. ^b I.e., the image he is making.
^c Transposing the Heb. verbs for clarity. ^d Lit. "see."

- 19 They do not give thought,
They lack the wit and judgment to say:
"Part of it I burned in a fire;
I also baked bread on the coals,
I roasted meat and ate it—
Should I make the rest an abhorrence?
Should I bow to a block of wood?"
- 20 He pursues ashes!^a
A deluded mind has led him astray,
And he cannot save himself;
He never says to himself,
"The thing in my hand is a fraud!"
- 21 Remember these things, O Jacob
For you, O Israel, are My servant:
I fashioned you, you are My servant—
O Israel, never forget Me.^b
- 22 I wipe away your sins like a cloud,
Your transgressions like mist—
Come back to Me, for I redeem you.
- 23 Shout, O heavens, for the LORD has acted;
Shout aloud, O depths of the earth!
Shout for joy, O mountains,
O forests with all your trees!
For the LORD has redeemed Jacob,
Has glorified Himself through Israel.
- 24 Thus said the LORD, your Redeemer,
Who formed you in the womb:
It is I, the LORD, who made everything,
Who alone stretched out the heavens
And unaided^c spread out the earth;
- 25 Who annul the omens of diviners,
And make fools of the augurs;
Who turn sages back
And make nonsense of their knowledge;
- 26 But confirm the word of My^d servant
And fulfill the prediction of My^d messengers.
It is I who say of Jerusalem, "It shall be inhabited,"
And of the towns of Judah, "They shall be rebuilt;
And I will restore their ruined places."
- 27 [I,] who said to the deep, "Be dry;
I will dry up your floods,"

21-28: The result of rejecting idolatry. The recognition that idolatry is false leads to several practical conclusions. 21-22: God formed Israel; in contrast pagans form their gods. Therefore Israel should serve, and trust, its God. Further it follows that God will forgive Israel. 23-28: God tells the heaven to announce that God takes specific action to save Israel: God brings Cyrus, the Persian king who conquered Babylonia, to rebuild Jerusalem and its Temple. 24-26: The monotheistic theme, with its argument from prophecy, is repeated; cf. vv. 6-8. God had earlier predicted the rebuilding of Jerusalem and the Temple in Jer. 30.18; 31.6-40; 33.10-18; Ezek. chs 40-48.

^a Lit. "He shepherds ashes."

^b Emendation yields "them." these things.

^c Lit. "with none beside me," or (following many Heb. mss., kethib, and ancient versions) "who was with me?"

^d Heb. "His."

28 Am the same who says of Cyrus, "He is My shepherd;^a
He shall fulfill all My purposes!
He shall say of Jerusalem, 'She shall be rebuilt,'
And to the Temple: 'You shall be founded again.' "

45 Thus said the LORD to Cyrus, His anointed one—Whose right hand ^bHe has^b grasped,
Treading down nations before him,
^cUngirding the loins of kings,^c
Opening doors before him
And letting no gate stay shut:
2 I will march before you
And level ^dthe hills that loom up;^d
I will shatter doors of bronze
And cut down iron bars.
3 I will give you treasures concealed in the dark
And secret hoards—
So that you may know that it is I the LORD,
The God of Israel, who call you by name.
4 For the sake of My servant Jacob,
Israel My chosen one,
I call you by name,
I hail you by title, though you have not known
Me.
5 I am the LORD and there is none else;
Beside Me, there is no god.
I engird you, though you have not known Me,
6 So that they may know, from east to west,
That there is none but Me.
I am the LORD and there is none else,
7 I form light and create darkness,
I make weal and create woe—
I the LORD do all these things.
8 Pour down, O skies, from above!
Let the heavens rain down victory!
Let the earth open up and triumph sprout,
Yes, let vindication spring up:
I the LORD have created it.
9 Shame on him who argues with his Maker,
Though naught but a potsherd of earth!
Shall the clay say to the potter, "What are you doing?"

45.1-25: The universal God. This speech focuses on the Persian king Cyrus as the tool through whom God brings salvation not only to Israel but to the whole world. After Cyrus allows the exiles to return to Jerusalem, peoples the world over will recognize the LORD's faithfulness to the covenant made with Israel, and consequently they will join Israel in worshipping the one true God. 1-8: An address to Cyrus, the liberator. God speaks directly to Cyrus, who does not understand the true nature of his role. 1-3: Cyrus's victories are summarized. 1: His anointed one, Heb "mashiah," often translated as "Messiah." It is striking that this term is used of Cyrus, and not of the ideal Davidic king, but according to Deutero-Isaiah, a Davidic king does not play a significant role in the expected restoration (see 55.3 n.). 4-8: God did not give Cyrus these great victories for Cyrus's sake. Rather, the purpose of Cyrus's rise to power is twofold: to liberate Israel, and thus to spread the fame of the one true God of Israel throughout the world. 7: This v. is quoted at the beginning of the morning service (immediately after the Berekhu or call to prayer), where the word woe (or "evil") is replaced with the euphemism, "everything." 9-13: Objection and response. People (either the Judeans themselves or perhaps the nations of the world) are surprised by God's plan to bring salvation to the exiles by means of a Persian king. God rebukes them for their chutzpah in questioning the means through whom God chose to work. Cf. Isa. 10.15; 29.14-21.

a I.e., the king whom I have designated. b-b Heb. "I have." Cf. note at 8.11.

c-c I.e., I made them helpless; one who wished to move freely belted his garment around the waist; cf. "engird," v. 5.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

10 *Your work has no handles"?^a Shame on him who asks his father, "What are you begetting?"
 Or a woman, "What are you bearing?"

11 Thus said the LORD,
 Israel's Holy One and Maker:
^bWill you question Me^b on the destiny of My children,
 Will you instruct Me about the work of My hands?
 12 It was I who made the earth
 And created man upon it;
 My own hands stretched out the heavens,
 And I marshaled all their host.
 13 It was I who roused him^c for victory
 And who level all roads for him.
 He shall rebuild My city
 And let My exiled people go Without price and without payment
 —said the LORD of Hosts.

14 Thus said the LORD:
 Egypt's wealth and Nubia's gains
 And Sabaites, ^dlong of limb,^d
 Shall pass over to you and be yours,
 Pass over and follow you in fetters,
 Bow low to you
 And reverently address you:
 "Only among you is God,
 There is no other god at all!
 15 You are indeed a God who concealed Himself,
 O God of Israel, who bring victory!
 16 Those who fabricate idols,
 All are shamed and disgraced;
 To a man, they slink away in disgrace.
 17 But Israel has won through the LORD
 Triumph everlasting.
 You shall not be shamed or disgraced
 In all the ages to come!"

18 For thus said the LORD,
 The Creator of heaven who alone is God,
 Who formed the earth and made it,
 Who alone established it—

13: The exiles will not have to pay any price to Cyrus to gain their liberation. Rather (as the next v. makes clear) God will personally reward the Persian king.
14-17: Cyrus's reward. God again addresses Cyrus (so Ibn Ezra), describing the vast territories he will receive for restoring Zion. Cf. 43.3.
14: Nubia is the area south of Egypt, often referred to as Ethiopia in most Bible translations (it was probably closer to today's Sudan). Sabaites were residents of an area south of Egypt. Only among you is God, better, "Indeed, through you God [has worked]." Even far-off nations realize that the God who worked through Cyrus, the God of Israel, is the one true deity. Alternatively (and contrary to the quotation marks in NJPS), these words may be spoken by God to Cyrus, rather than by the African nations.
18-25: Universal recognition of the LORD. The vv. again rely on the argument from prophecy, which Deutero-Isaiah uses to show the whole world that the LORD is the true master of history. The predictions made to earlier Israelite prophets were not secret, but were made public long ago.

a-a Emendation yields "To its maker, 'You have no hands'?"

b-b Heb. imperative. c I.e., Cyrus.

d-d Emendation yields "bearing tribute." For "tribute" cf. Ezra 4.20; 6.8; Neh. 5.4.

He did not create it a waste,
 But formed it for habitation:
 I am the LORD, and there is none else.
 19 I did not speak in secret,
 At a site in a land of darkness;
 I did not say to the stock of Jacob,
 "Seek Me out in a wasteland"—
 I the LORD, who foretell reliably,
 Who announce what is true.

20 Come, gather together,
 Draw nigh, you remnants of the nations!
 No foreknowledge had they who carry their wooden images

And pray to a god who cannot give success.

21 Speak up, compare testimony—
 Let them even take counsel together!
 Who announced this aforetime,
 Foretold it of old?

Was it not I the LORD?
 Then there is no god beside Me,
 No God exists beside Me
 Who foretells truly and grants success.

22 Turn to Me and gain success,
 All the ends of earth!
 For I am God, and there is none else.

23 By Myself have I sworn,
 From My mouth has issued truth,
 A word that shall not turn back:
 To Me every knee shall bend,
 Every tongue swear loyalty.

24 ^aThey shall say: "Only through the LORD
 Can I find victory and might."^a

When people ^btrust in ^bHim,
 All their adversaries are put to shame.

25 It is through the LORD that all the offspring of Israel

Have vindication and glory."

23: The nations of the world are invited to share in the worship of the true God and the benefits it brings. 25: Israel's vindication leads other nations to worship the LORD as well. The mixture of nationalism and universalism here is noteworthy: A universalist outcome results from a particularist victory.

46.1-15: The gods of Babylonia vs. the God of Israel. This short speech contrasts the LORD, who is capable of mighty acts, and the gods of Babylonia, who are shown to be illusions. 1-4: The essential contrast between a God who carries His faithful and gods who must be carried by theirs. 1: Bel is another name for Marduk, the chief deity of Babylon. His son, Nebo (Akkadian Nabû), became an increasingly important deity during the last century of Babylonian independence. Carry [in procession]: The Babylonians paraded the statues of their gods through the city on major holidays, such as the Akitu or New Year festival.

46 Bel^c is bowed, Nebo^c is cowering,
 Their images are a burden for beasts and cattle;
 The things you^d would carry [in procession]
 Are now piled as a burden
 On tired [beasts].

a-a Emendation yields "Only in the LORD / Are there victory and might for man."

b-b Lit. "come to"; for this idiom cf. Ps. 65.3; Job 6.20.

c Babylonian deities. d Emendation yields "they."

- 2 They cowered, they bowed as well,
They could not rescue the burden,^a
And they themselves went into captivity.
- 3 Listen to Me, O House of Jacob,
All that are left of the House of Israel,
Who have been carried since birth,
Supported since leaving the womb:
4 Till you grow old, I will still be the same;
When you turn gray, it is I who will carry;
I was the Maker, and I will be the Bearer;
And I will carry and rescue [you].
- 5 To whom can you compare Me
Or declare Me similar?
To whom can you liken Me,
So that we seem comparable?
- 6 Those who squander gold from the purse
And weigh out silver on the balance,^b
They hire a metal worker to make it into a god,
To which they bow down and prostrate themselves.
- 7 They must carry it on their backs and transport it;
When they put it down, it stands,
It does not budge from its place.
If they cry out to it, it does not answer;
It cannot save them from their distress.
- 8 Keep this in mind, and “stand firm!”^c
Take this to heart, you sinners!
9 Bear in mind what happened of old;
For I am God, and there is none else,
I am divine, and there is none like Me.
- 10 I foretell the end from the beginning,
And from the start, things that had not occurred.
I say: My plan shall be fulfilled;
I will do all I have purposed.
- 11 I summoned that swooping bird from the East;^d
From a distant land, the man for My purpose.
I have spoken, so I will bring it to pass;
I have designed it, so I will complete it.
- 12 Listen to Me, you “stubborn of heart,”^e
Who are far from victory:
13 I am bringing My victory close;

3-4: The maternal image of the LORD is significant here. Cf.

42.13-14; 45.10; 49.14-15; 66.13.

5-7: The folly of idolatry. Cf. 40.18-20; 44.9-20; Ps. 115.4-8.

8-13: The former and latter things. The listeners are urged to recall what God did in the past (specifically, God saved and made accurate predictions). These demonstrate the salvation that God will bring in the near future. The reliability of earlier prophets also demonstrates the trustworthiness of Deutero-Isaiah himself.

8: Sinners: God addresses the exiles as rebellious because their forebears' misdeeds caused the exile, but perhaps also because many of them failed to believe in Deutero-Isaiah's message.

10-11: The argument from prophecy.

a Emendation yields “him who carried [them]”; cf. Targum.

b Lit. “beam [of the balance].”

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d I.e., Cyrus; cf. 41.2-3; 44.28-45.1.

e-e Septuagint reads, “who have lost heart.”

It shall not be far,
 And My triumph shall not be delayed.
 I will grant triumph in Zion
 To Israel, in whom I glory.

47 Get down, sit in the dust,
 Fair Maiden Babylon;
 Sit, dethroned, on the ground,
 O Fair Chaldea;
 Nevermore shall they call you
 The tender and dainty one.
 2 Grasp the handmill and grind meal.
 Remove your veil,
 Strip off your train, bare your leg,
 Wade through the rivers.
 3 Your nakedness shall be uncovered,
 And your shame shall be exposed.
 I will take vengeance,
 *And let no man intercede.
 4 Our Redeemer—LORD of Hosts is His name—
 Is the Holy One of Israel.^a 5 Sit silent; retire into darkness,
 O Fair Chaldea;
 Nevermore shall they call you
 Mistress of Kingdoms.
 6 I was angry at My people,
 I defiled My heritage;
 I put them into your hands,
 But you showed them no mercy.
 Even upon the aged you made
 Your yoke exceedingly heavy.
 7 You thought, "I shall always be
 The mistress still."
 You did not take these things to heart,
 You gave no thought to the end of it.
 8 And now hear this, O pampered one—
 Who dwell in security,
 Who think to yourself,
 "I am, and there is none but me;
 I shall not become a widow
 Or know loss of children"—
 9 These two things shall come upon you,
 Suddenly, in one day:

47.1-15: A mock lament over Babylon, or Babylonia (the Heb term "bavel" is used for Babylon, the capital city, and for Babylonia, the country). This poem personifies Babylon as a haughty young woman of great wealth and prestige who has suddenly lost everything. It focuses on the surprising reversal of fortune meted out to the seemingly invincible empire that tormented the Judeans. Taunting songs directed against enemies appear several times in the Bible; see Isa. ch 14; Ezek. chs 27-28.
1-5: Babylon's reversal of fortune. Once a princess, Babylon now must work as a lowly slave-girl. 1: Chaldea, a synonym for Babylonia; see 43.14 n. 6-7: Babylonia's hubris. Babylonia never was as strong and self-sufficient as she believed. Her victory resulted only from the LORD's decision to punish Judah. Babylonia took this commission too far, however, and now she must be punished as well. On the hubris of the foreign conqueror who unknowingly does God's work, cf. 10.5-15. 8-15: Babylon is sentenced. God speaks directly to Babylon, informing her of her fate. 8: The line spoken here by Babylon is a precise quotation of a line spoken by Nineveh, the capital of Assyria, in Zeph. 2.13. For Deutero-Isaiah, statements that earlier prophets made concerning Assyria should be understood as referring to the Babylonians, who inherited the Assyrians' empire and their role as Israel's oppressors.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "And not be appeased, / Says our Redeemer, whose name is LORD of Hosts, / The Holy One of Israel."

Loss of children and widowhood
 Shall come upon you in full measure,
 Despite your many enchantments
 And all your countless spells.
 10 You were secure in your wickedness;
 You thought, "No one can see me."
 It was your skill and your science
 That led you astray.
 And you thought to yourself,
 "I am, and there is none but me."
 11 Evil is coming upon you
 Which you will not know how to ^acharm away;^a
 Disaster is falling upon you
 Which you will not be able to appease;
 Coming upon you suddenly
 Is ruin of which you know nothing.
 12 Stand up, with your spells and your many enchantments
 On which you labored since youth!
 Perhaps you'll be able to profit,
 Perhaps you ^bwill find strength.^b
 13 You are helpless, despite all your art.
 Let them stand up and help you now,
 The scanners^c of heaven, the star-gazers,
 Who announce, month by month,
 Whatever will come upon you.
 14 See, they are become like straw,
 Fire consumes them;
 They cannot save themselves
 From the power of the flame;
 This is no coal for warming oneself,
 No fire to sit by!
 15 This is what they have profited you—
 The traders you dealt with since youth—
 Each has wandered off his own way,
 There is none to save you.

48 Listen to this, O House of Jacob,
 Who bear the name Israel
 And have issued from the waters^d of Judah,
 Who swear by the name of the LORD
 And invoke the God of Israel—
 Though not in truth and sincerity—

9–13: Deutero-Isaiah makes frequent reference to the famed magicians and soothsayers of Babylonia, whose skills turn out to be illusions.

48.1–22: Rebuke and consolation. The concluding speech in the first section of Deutero-Isaiah's prophecies (see chs 40–48 n.). It focuses attention on the sins that Israel had committed in the past. By reviewing the reasons Israel deserved punishment, the prophet explains why the exile had to occur and hence reassures the people that the LORD is neither weak nor fickle. The passage may also criticize the faithlessness of the Judean exiles in Babylonia, who were not as receptive to Deutero-Isaiah's message as they should have been. 1–16: The argument from prophecy. In previous passages (43.9–15; 44.6–8, 24–26; 45.18–25; 46.10–11) the prophet directed this argument (at least rhetorically) to foreigners or their gods; Deutero-Isaiah contrasted the illusion in which the Babylonians believed with the reliable LORD of the Israelites and thus rebuked the former. But here the rebuke is directed against the Israelites, who have prayed to idols and have failed to recognize their own God's power.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "bribe."

b-b Taking 'aras as a variant of 'asar; cf. 2 Chron. 20.37.

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d Emendation yields "loins."

2 For you^a are called after ^bthe Holy City^b
 And you^a do lean on the God of Israel,
 Whose name is LORD of Hosts:

3 Long ago, I foretold things that happened,
 From My mouth they issued, and I announced
 them;

Suddenly I acted, and they came to pass.

4 Because I know how stubborn you are (Your neck is like an iron sinew
 And your forehead bronze),

5 Therefore I told you long beforehand,
 Announced things to you ere they happened—
 That you might not say, "My idol caused them,
 My carved and molten images ordained them."

6 You have ^cheard all this; look, must you not acknowledge it?^c

As of now, I announce to you new things,
 Well-guarded secrets you did not know.

7 Only now are they created, and not of old;

^cBefore today^c you had not heard them;

You cannot say, "I knew them already."

8 You had never heard, you had never known,
 Your ears were not opened of old.

Though I know that you are treacherous,

That you were called a rebel from birth,

9 For the sake of My name I control My wrath;

To My own glory, ^cI am patient^c with you,

And I will not destroy you.

10 See, I refine you, but not as silver;

I test you in the furnace of affliction.

11 For My sake, My own sake, do I act—

Lest [My name]^d be dishonored!

I will not give My glory to another.

12 Listen to Me, O Jacob,

Israel, whom I have called:

I am He—I am the first,

And I am the last as well.

13 My own hand founded the earth,

My right hand spread out the skies.

I call unto them, let them stand up.

14 Assemble, all of you, and listen!

9-11: In light of the people's sins, one may wonder why God wants to save them. The prophet answers this potential question: God will save the people for God's own sake, for the nation Israel is linked to God's reputation. Deutero-Isaiah lists several different reasons that the exiles are sure to be saved (see 40.1; 43.4), some of which contradict each other on a strictly literal level. The prophet's goal, however, is not to present a philosophical argument but to convince the exiles of their imminent return to Zion, using various lines of reasoning. These vv. utilize language from Jer. 9.6, and they confirm the accuracy of Jeremiah's predictions. 10: Refined, alternatively, "purchased." Not as silver, better, "not for the silver." Test, or, "I choose."

a Heb. "they." b-b Emendation yields "the holy people."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d These words are supplied in some ancient versions; cf. v. 9.

Who among you^a foretold these things:

^b“He whom the LORD loves

Shall work His will against Babylon,

And, with His might, against Chaldea”?^b

15 I, I predicted, and I called him;

I have brought him and he shall succeed in his mission.

16 Draw near to Me and hear this:

From the beginning, I did not speak in secret;

From the time anything existed, I was there.^c

“And now the Lord God has sent me, ^dendowed with His spirit.”^d

17 Thus said the LORD your Redeemer,

The Holy One of Israel:

I the LORD am your God,

Instructing you for your own benefit.

Guiding you in the way you should go.

18 If only you would heed My commands!

Then your prosperity would be like a river,

Your triumph like the waves of the sea.

19 Your offspring would be as many as the sand,

Their issue as many as its grains.^e

Their name would never be cut off

Or obliterated from before Me.

20 Go forth from Babylon,

Flee from Chaldea!

Declare this with loud shouting,

Announce this,

Bring out the word to the ends of the earth!

Say: “The LORD has redeemed

His servant Jacob!”

21 They have known no thirst,

Though He led them through parched places;

He made water flow for them from the rock;

He cleaved the rock and water gushed forth.

22 There is no safety—said the LORD—for the wicked.

49 Listen, O coastlands, to me,
And give heed, O nations afar:

The LORD appointed me before I was born,

He named me while I was in my mother's womb.

^a Heb. “them.” ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^c I.e., I foretold it through prophets. ^{d-d} Lit. “and His spirit.”

^e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

14: A reference to Cyrus, the Persian king. Chaldea, a synonym for Babylonia; see 43.14 n. 17–19: An explanation for the exile. Language used to described the exodus from Egypt in Ps. 81.6–17 is applied to the upcoming exodus from Babylonia. 20–22: Conclusion: The return to Zion is at hand. Deutero-Isaiah calls on the exiles to leave Babylonia. The prophet took this exhortation seriously: From the beginning of the next ch on, Deutero-Isaiah seems no longer to be located in Babylonia but in Jerusalem. 22: The same words appear—and make more sense—in 57.21, which marks the end of the second section within Deutero-Isaiah's prophecies. They have been copied here to indicate that this v. also marks the end of a section.

Chs 49–57: Prophecies of Zion.

The second of the three sections within chs 40–66 seems to have been written in Jerusalem after the first wave of exiles returned there from Babylonia. Like chs 40–48, it consists of several long speeches, each of which attempts to convince the city of Jerusalem (usually referred to as Zion) or the returned exiles that their current wretched state will be transformed to a glorious one. Many of the arguments the prophet sets forth resemble those found in chs 40–48, but several characteristic themes of that first section no longer appear: Cyrus, Babylonia, the new exodus, and the theme of the former and latter things are never mentioned in chs 49–57. In their place one finds a stronger emphasis on Zion and the servant of the LORD, and one can sense disappointment at the reality of conditions in the restored Zion (cf. Ezra chs 1–3; Haggai; Zech. chs 1–8). This sense of disappointment leads the prophet to condemn the people for certain misdeeds toward the end of this section, in language somewhat harsher than the rebukes found in chs 40–48.

49.1–26: The role of the servant and encouragement for Zion. The

2 He made my mouth like a sharpened blade,
 He hid me in the shadow of His hand,
 And He made me like a polished arrow;
 He concealed me in His quiver.

3 And He said to me, "You are My servant,
 Israel in whom I glory."

4 I thought, "I have labored in vain,
 I have spent my strength for empty breath."
 But my case rested with the LORD,
 My recompense was in the hands of my God.

5 And now the LORD has resolved—
 He who formed me in the womb to be His servant—
 To bring back Jacob to Himself,
 That Israel may be restored to Him.
 And I have been honored in the sight of the LORD,
 My God has been my strength.

6 For He has said:
 "It is too little that you should be My servant
 In that I raise up the tribes of Jacob
 And restore the survivors of Israel:
 I will also make you a light^a of nations,
 That My salvation may reach the ends of the earth."

7 Thus said the LORD,
 The Redeemer of Israel, his Holy One,
^bTo the despised one,
 To the abhorred nations,^b
 To the slave of rulers:
 Kings shall see and stand up;
 Nobles, and they shall prostrate themselves—
 To the honor of the LORD, who is faithful,
 To the Holy One of Israel who chose you.

8 Thus said the LORD:
 In an hour of favor I answer you,
 And on a day of salvation I help you—
 I created you and appointed you "a covenant people"^c—
 Restoring the land,
 Allotting anew the desolate holdings,
 Saying to the prisoners, "Go free,"
 To those who are in darkness, "Show yourselves."

first speech in this section divides into two parts, each of which comforts the people and assures them that Zion's full restoration is not far off. 1–13: The servant of the LORD and universal recognition of God. The motif of God's servant or servants appeared briefly in chs 40–48, especially in 42.1–9. 1–6: The servant speaks to the nations of the world as well as the Israelites. The identity of the servant has generated much debate. Most rabbinic commentators and some modern scholars argue that Deutero-Isaiah speaks here in the first person and that these vv. describe the prophet's own mission. Others argue that the whole nation Israel is the servant, and some suggest that an ideal Israel or a faithful subset of the nation is the servant. 5: To bring: The subject of the Heb verb may be either God or the servant. 7–13: The servant announces that all the world will recognize the one God when the whole Israelite nation returns to its land. At this early stage of Cyrus's reign, only a few Judean exiles took the opportunity to return to Zion. See Ezra chs 1–3. 8: A covenant people, see 42.6 n.

a I.e., the agent of good fortune; cf. 42.1–4; 51.4–5.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "Whose being is despised, / Whose body is detested"; cf. 51.23.

c-c See note b-b at 42.6.

They shall pasture along the roads,
 On every bare height shall be their pasture.
 10 They shall not hunger or thirst,
 Hot wind and sun shall not strike them;
 For He who loves them will lead them,
 He will guide them to springs of water.
 11 I will make all My mountains a road,
 And My highways shall be built up.
 12 Look! These are coming from afar,
 These from the north and the west,
 And these from the land of Sinim.^a 13 Shout, O heavens, and rejoice, O earth!
 Break into shouting, O hills!
 For the LORD has comforted His people,
 And has taken back His afflicted ones in love.
 14 Zion says,
 "The LORD has forsaken me,
 My Lord has forgotten me."
 15 Can a woman forget her baby,
 Or disown the child of her womb?
 Though she might forget,
 I never could forget you.
 16 See, I have engraved you
 On the palms of My hands,
 Your walls are ever before Me.
 17 Swiftly your children are coming;
 Those who ravaged and ruined you shall leave
 you.
 18 Look up all around you and see:
 They are all assembled, are come to you!
 As I live
 —declares the LORD—
 You shall don them all like jewels,
 Deck yourself with them like a bride.
 19 As for your ruins and desolate places
 And your land laid waste—
 You shall soon be crowded with settlers,
 While destroyers stay far from you.
 20 The children^b you thought you had lost^b
 Shall yet say in your hearing,
 "The place is too crowded for me;
 Make room for me to settle."
 21 And you will say to yourself,
 "Who bore these for me
 When I was bereaved and barren,

12: Sinim, Aswan, in southern Egypt, where a colony of Israelite soldiers lived during the Persian period and before. 14-26: Conso- lation for Zion. Zion (i.e., Jerusalem) serves as a metaphor for the nation as a whole; the despair she feels (v. 14) is Israel's, and God speaks words of comfort to Israel through her. 14-23: A dialogue between God and Zion, which is personified as a bereaved woman. Her "children"—the Judeans—have died or been sent into exile. Jerusalem's population fell after the Babylonians destroyed the city in 586 BCE, and it remained small even when the Persian king Cyrus allowed exiled Judeans to return there. 14-18: These vv. recall, and reverse, God's complaint in Jer. 2.32. 19-20: A recollection and reversal of the prophecy of doom in 6.10-12. 22-23: The reversal of fortune for Zion and the Israelites. The text repeats the promises found in Isa. 11.10-12.3 and Pss. 2; 72. 24-26: Israel's conqueror must give Israel back to God, and Israel's redemption brings knowledge of the one God to all humanity.

^a 1QIs^a reads "the Syenians"; cf. Ezek. 30.6. ^{b-b} Lit. "of your bereavement."

Exiled and disdained^a—
 By whom, then, were these reared?
 I was left all alone—
 And where have these been?"

- 22 Thus said the Lord God:
 I will raise My hand to nations
 And lift up My ensign to peoples;
 And they shall bring your sons in their bosoms,
 And carry your daughters on their backs.
- 23 Kings shall tend your children,
 Their queens shall serve you as nurses.
 They shall bow to you, face to the ground,
 And lick the dust of your feet.
 And you shall know that I am the LORD—
 Those who trust in Me shall not be shamed.
- 24 Can spoil be taken from a warrior,
 Or captives retrieved from a victor?
- 25 Yet thus said the LORD:
 Captives shall be taken from a warrior
 And spoil shall be retrieved from a tyrant;
 For I will contend with your adversaries,
 And I will deliver your children.
- 26 I will make your oppressors eat their own flesh,
 They shall be drunk with their own blood as with wine.
 And all mankind shall know
 That I the LORD am your Savior,
 The Mighty One of Jacob, your Redeemer.

50 Thus said the LORD:
^bWhere is the bill of divorce
 Of your mother whom I dismissed?
 And which of My creditors was it
 To whom I sold you off?
 You were only sold off for your sins,
 And your mother dismissed for your crimes.

2 Why, when I came, was no one there,
 Why, when I called, would none respond?
 Is my arm, then, too short to rescue,
 Have I not the power to save?
 With a mere rebuke I dry up the sea,
 And turn rivers into desert.

50.1–51.8: A response to the nation's tribulations. God addresses the Israelites' despair at their plight. The previous section described Deutero-Isaiah's own prophetic mission (which is ultimately the mission of the whole nation) and proceeded to relay God's message to the city of Jerusalem. Similarly, this passage describes Deutero-Isaiah's mission (which is a model for all Israel) while relaying a divine message to the nation. 50.1–3: The relationship between God and Israel endures. 1: The Israelites viewed themselves metaphorically as God's wife and also as God's children. If the former, they worry that God has divorced them and therefore cannot take them back (cf. Jer. 3.1; Deut. 24.1–4). If the latter, then God has sold them away (cf. Exod. 21.7–11; 2 Kings 4.1). But God insists that no divorce has taken place, and that the children remain God's own property. 2: Behind God's frustrated words here may lie the failure of the exiles to accept the message of consolation. Only a small number of exiles took the opportunity to return to Zion after Cyrus (the Persian king who conquered Babylonia) allowed them to do so. Dry up the sea, an allusion to the splitting of the Reed Sea (see Exod. chs 14–15) and also to stories of divine combat at the time of the world's creation (see 51.9–11, Hab. 2.8–9; Pss. 74.13–15; 89.6–14; Job 26.5–13).

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^b The mother (the country) has not been formally divorced, nor the children (the people) sold because of poverty. Therefore there is no obstacle to their restoration.

Their fish stink from lack of water;
 They lie dead ^aof thirst.^a
 3 I clothe the skies in blackness
 And make their raiment sackcloth.
 4 ^bThe Lord GOD gave me a skilled tongue,
 To know how to speak timely words to the weary.^b
 Morning by morning, He rouses,
 He rouses my ear
 To give heed like disciples.
 5 The Lord GOD opened my ears,
 And I did not disobey,
 I did not run away.
 6 I offered my back to the floggers,
 And my cheeks to those who tore out my hair.
 I did not hide my face
 From insult and spittle.
 7 But the Lord GOD will help me—
 Therefore I feel no disgrace;
 Therefore I have set my face like flint,
 And I know I shall not be shamed.
 8 My Vindicator is at hand—
 Who dares contend with me?
 Let us stand up together!^c
 Who would be my opponent?
 Let him approach me!
 9 Lo, the Lord GOD will help me—
 Who can get a verdict against me?
 They shall all wear out like a garment,
 The moth shall consume them.
 10 Who among you reveres the LORD
 And heeds the voice of His servant?—
 Though he walk in darkness
 And have no light,
 Let him trust in the name of the LORD
 And rely upon his God.
 11 But you are all kindlers of fire,
^dGirding on^d firebrands.
 Walk by the blaze of your fire,
 By the brands that you have lit!
 This has come to you from My hand:
^bYou shall lie down in pain.^b

4–11: The mission of the prophet and of the nation. As in 49.1–6, Deutero-Isaiah speaks in the first person. By doing so the prophet sets a model that the nation as a whole should follow, since the whole nation has a prophetic role to the world at large. 4–5: The prophet is a disciple of older prophets, constantly borrowing their words and noting how their predictions proved true. 6–9: Deutero-Isaiah, like all Israelites, suffered in the exile. But Deutero-Isaiah knows the punishment meted out to the exiles was just, accepts it, and awaits the vindication that surely follows. 10–11: Israel's response: Some of Deutero-Isaiah's listeners will accept both divine punishment and divine reward, but others will continue to reject God's word, to their own detriment.

a-a Change of vocalization yields "on the parched ground"; cf. 44.3.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c I.e., as opponents in court; cf. Num. 35.12.

d-d Emendation yields "Lighters of."

5 Listen to Me, you who pursue justice,
 You who seek the LORD:
 Look to the rock you were hewn from,
 To the quarry you were dug from.
2 Look back to Abraham your father
 And to Sarah who brought you forth.
 For he was only one when I called him,
 But I blessed him and made him many.
3 Truly the LORD has comforted Zion,
 Comforted all her ruins;
 He has made her wilderness like Eden,
 Her desert like the Garden of the LORD.
 Gladness and joy shall abide there,
 Thanksgiving and the sound of music.
4 Hearken to Me, ^aMy people,^a
 And give ear to Me, O ^aMy nation,^a
 For teaching shall go forth^b from Me,
 My way for the light of peoples.
 In a moment I will bring it:
5 The triumph I grant is near,
 The success I give has gone forth.
 My arms shall ^cprovide for^c the peoples;
 The coastlands shall trust in Me,
 They shall look to My arm.
6 Raise your eyes to the heavens,
 And look upon the earth beneath:
 Though the heavens should melt away like smoke,
 And the earth wear out like a garment,
 And its inhabitants die out ^das well,^d
 My victory shall stand forever,
 My triumph shall remain unbroken.
7 Listen to Me, you who care for the right,
 O people who lay My instruction to heart!
 Fear not the insults of men,
 And be not dismayed at their jeers;
8 For the moth shall eat them up like a garment,
 The worm^e shall eat them up like wool.
 But My triumph shall endure forever,
 My salvation through all the ages.

51.1-8: An exhortation to Israelites who despair. Four brief statements explain why the nation's current state is not a cause for hopelessness. Each statement opens with an imperative verb addressed to the Israelites. 1-3: The example of Abraham and Sarah: they, like the current Israelites, were few in number, yet God multiplied their descendants. 4-5: God is the source of teaching, and thus God can indeed save. 4: Teaching, Heb "torah." Cf. Isa. 2.3. 6-7: Two metaphors emphasize the enduring nature of the salvation that God brings.

a-a Several mss. read "O peoples . . . O nations"; cf. end of this verse and v. 5.

b I.e., through My servant Israel; cf. 42.1-4; 49.6.

c-c Lit. "judge."

d-d Emendation yields "like gnats."

e Heb. sas, another word for "moth."

9 Awake, awake, clothe yourself with splendor.
O arm of the LORD!
Awake as in days of old,
As in former ages!
It was you that hacked Rahab^a in pieces,
That pierced the Dragon.^a 10 It was you that dried up the Sea,

The waters of the great deep;
That made the abysses of the Sea
A road the redeemed might walk.

11 So let the ransomed of the LORD return,
And come with shouting to Zion,
Crowned with joy everlasting.
Let them attain joy and gladness,
While sorrow and sighing flee.

12 I, I am He who comforts you!
What ails you that you fear
Man who must die,
Mortals who fare like grass?

13 You have forgotten the LORD your Maker,
Who stretched out the skies and made firm the
earth!
And you live all day in constant dread
Because of the rage of an oppressor
Who is aiming to cut [you] down.
Yet of what account is the rage of an oppressor?

14^b Quickly the crouching one is freed;
He is not cut down and slain,
And he shall not want for food.

15 For I the LORD your God—
Who stir up the sea into roaring waves,
Whose name is LORD of Hosts—

16 ^cHave put My words in your mouth
And sheltered you with My hand;^c
I, who planted^d the skies and made firm the earth,
Have said to Zion: You are My people!

17 Rouse, rouse yourself!
Arise, O Jerusalem,
You who from the LORD's hand
Have drunk the cup of His wrath,
You who have drained to the dregs
The bowl, the cup of reeling!

a Names of primeval monsters.

b Meaning of verse uncertain. Emendation yields (cf. Jer. 11.19; Job 14.7–9) "Quickly the tree buds anew; / It does not die though cut down, / And its sap does not fail."

c-c I.e., I have chosen you to be a prophet-nation; cf. 49.2; 59.21.

d Emendation yields "stretched out"; cf. Syriac version and v. 13.

51.9–52.12: Lament and response.

In the first part of this composition, the people pray for deliverance, bemoaning God's apparent abandonment of them. In the second part, God responds at length, assuring them that they have not been forgotten. 9–11: The people's entreaty. These vv. contain the people's words to God. As in many psalms of lament, the people recall God's glorious victories in the past in an attempt to goad the LORD to action now. 9: Arm of the LORD, a figure of speech referring to God's strength. 9–10: Rahab . . . Dragon . . . abysses of the Sea: These refer to mythical beings whom God defeated to create the world; cf. 50.2 n. The people argue that the God who defeated the forces of evil at the beginning of time and who split the Reed Sea to liberate the Israelites from Egyptian bondage should use the same divine power to liberate Israel now.

51.12–52.6: God's positive response. The divine answer echoes the language of the request; see esp. 51.17; 52.1, which echo 51.9. This section borrows vocabulary from several older prophecies: Jer. 4.20; 15.2–5; Isa. 29.9–10. Those passages predicted disaster for Zion and her people; now Deutero-Isaiah at once confirms the accuracy of the older predictions and reverses their message, telling Zion that the period of suffering is coming to an end. This passage also reverses the description of Zion's suffering found in Lam. 2.13–19. This highly allusive passage became the source for another highly allusive poem written 2,000 years later: "Lekha Dodi" (the hymn recited in Jewish liturgy at the outset of the Sabbath) borrows phrasing from these vv.

51.12–16: God speaks to the nation Israel. Language that described the prophet Jeremiah in Jer. 1.9–10; 11.19–21 is applied to the nation as a whole here. 17–23: God addresses Jerusalem. Zion, portrayed as a bereaved mother, gets her children back.

18 She has none to guide her
Of all the sons she bore;
None takes her by the hand,
Of all the sons she reared.^a 19 These two things have befallen you:

Wrack and ruin—who can console you?
Famine and sword—^bhow shall I^b comfort you?

20 Your sons lie in a swoon
At the corner of every street—
Like an antelope caught in a net—
Drunk with the wrath of the LORD,
With the rebuke of your God.

21 Therefore,
Listen to this, unhappy one,
Who are drunk, but not with wine!

22 Thus said the LORD, your Lord,
Your God who champions His people:
Herewith I take from your hand
The cup of reeling,^c
The bowl, the cup of My wrath;
You shall never drink it again.

23 I will put it in the hands of your tormentors,
Who have commanded you,
“Get down, that we may walk over you”—
So that you made your back like the ground,
Like a street for passersby.

52 Awake, awake, O Zion!
Clothe yourself in splendor;
Put on your robes of majesty,
Jerusalem, holy city!
For the uncircumcised and the unclean
Shall never enter you again.

2 Arise, shake off the dust,
Sit [on your throne], Jerusalem!
Loose the bonds from your neck,
O captive one, Fair Zion!

3 For thus said the LORD:
You were sold for no price,
And shall be redeemed without money.

4 For thus said the Lord GOD:
Of old, My people went down
To Egypt to sojourn there;

52.1–6: God speaks again to Zion, telling her that her nightmare is over. 2: Shake off the dust: As a captive, the city sat in dirt, humiliated. 3: God did not sell Judah to a creditor (cf. 50.1), and hence Judah still belongs to God. There is no impediment to Judah's redemption.

a To guide a drunken parent home was a recognized filial duty in ancient Canaan and Egypt.

b-b Several ancient versions render "who can."

c A figure of speech for a dire fate; cf. Jer. 25.15 ff.

But Assyria has robbed them,
Giving nothing in return.^a

5 What therefore do I gain here?

—declares the LORD—

For My people has been carried off for nothing,
Their mockers howl

—declares the LORD—

And constantly, unceasingly,
My name is reviled.

6 Assuredly, My people shall learn My name,
Assuredly [they shall learn] on that day
That I, the One who promised,
Am now at hand.

7 How welcome on the mountain
Are the footsteps of the herald
Announcing happiness,
Heralding good fortune,
Announcing victory,
Telling Zion, "Your God is King!"
8 Hark!

Your watchmen raise their voices,
As one they shout for joy;
For every eye shall behold
The LORD's return to Zion.

9 Raise a shout together,
O ruins of Jerusalem!
For the LORD will comfort His people,
Will redeem Jerusalem.

10 The LORD will bare His holy arm
In the sight of all the nations,
And the very ends of earth shall see
The victory of our God.

11 Turn, turn away, touch naught unclean
As you depart from there;
Keep pure, as you go forth from there,
You who bear the vessels of the LORD!^b
12 For you will not depart in haste,
Nor will you leave in flight;
For the LORD is marching before you,
The God of Israel is your rear guard.

13 "Indeed, My servant shall prosper,
Be exalted and raised to great heights.

4: Robbed them, giving nothing in return, or, "oppressed them, gaining nothing." The Assyrians acquired no rights to Israel, who still belong to the LORD. Emendation yields, "oppressed them due to My anger"; cf. 10.5. 5: Therefore, rather, "But now." The current exile in Babylonia is contrasted with the people's earlier exiles in Egypt and in Assyria. My name is reviled: God's own reputation is harmed by the Babylonian exile, and for this reason God is sure to liberate the nation. 6: I . . . am now at hand, Heb "hineru." Elsewhere in the Bible this word is used by human beings responding to a divine call (e.g., Gen. 22.1, 11; Exod. 3.4). Only in Deutero-Isaiah does God call "here I am" to humans (see also 58.9; 65.1). 7–12: A concluding prophecy of restoration.

God's response to the nation's prayer ended in v. 6, and now the prophet sums up the message: Redemption is at hand. 7–10: God's own Presence will return to Jerusalem; the prophet imagines that the lookouts in Jerusalem's higher buildings or fortifications will see God's Presence as it comes toward the city. Cf. 40.3–5 n. This passage was composed after some Judeans had already returned to Jerusalem but before the full-fledged redemption that Deutero-Isaiah anticipated had come to pass.

11–12: An exhortation to exiles still in Babylonia to come to Jerusalem, bearing the Temple vessels that the Babylonians had taken from the Temple. Because they will accompany the divine Presence in its journey, they must maintain ritual purity. 12: The earlier exodus from Egypt is contrasted with the imminent exodus from Babylonia. The former took place in haste and confusion (see Exod. 12.11; Deut. 16.3), but the new exodus will be more stately.

52.13–53.12: The servant. One of the most difficult and contested passages in the Bible, these fifteen vv. have attracted an enormous amount of attention from ancient, medieval, and modern scholars. In particular the identity of the ser-

^a Whereas the Israelites themselves sought hospitality in Egypt, Assyria (i.e., the Chaldean Empire) has exiled them by force.

^b Cf. Ezra 1.7–8; 5.14–15.

14 Just as the many were appalled at him^a—
So marred was his appearance, unlike that of man,
His form, beyond human semblance—
15 Just so he shall startle^b many nations.
Kings shall be silenced because of him,
For they shall see what has not been told them,
Shall behold what they never have heard.”

53 “Who can believe what we have heard?
Upon whom has “the arm of the LORD” been revealed?

2 For he has grown, by His favor, like a tree crown,
Like a tree trunk out of arid ground.
He had no form or beauty, that we should look at him:

No charm, that we should find him pleasing.
3 He was despised, ^d“shunned by men,”^d
A man of suffering, familiar with disease.
^e“As one who hid his face from us,”^e

He was despised, we held him of no account.
4 Yet it was our sickness that he was bearing,
Our suffering that he endured.

We accounted him plagued,
Smitten and afflicted by God;
5 But he was wounded because of our sins,
Crushed because of our iniquities.
He bore the chastisement that made us whole,
And by his bruises we were healed.

6 We all went astray like sheep,
Each going his own way;
And the LORD visited upon him
The guilt of all of us.”

a Heb. “you.” b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c I.e., the vindication which the arm of the LORD effects.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. e-e I.e., as a leper; cf. Lev. 13.45 ff.

vant is vigorously debated. Many argue that the servant symbolizes the entire Jewish people. The passage, then, describes the nation’s unjust tribulations at the hands of the Babylonians (and later oppressors) as well as the nation’s salvific role for the world at large. Others maintain that the passage describes a pious minority within the Jewish people; this minority suffers as a result of the sins committed by the nation at large. (Bolstering these interpretations is the fact that the term “servant” in Deutero-Isaiah generally refers to the nation as a whole or an idealized representation of the nation; cf. 42.1–9 n.; 18–23 n.; 49.1–13 n.) Other scholars argue that the servant in this passage is a specific individual (cf. 50.4–11 n.). Targum and various midrashim identify the servant as the Messiah, but this suggestion is unlikely, since nowhere else does Deutero-Isaiah refer to the Messiah, and the absence of a belief in an individual Messiah is one of the hallmarks of Deutero-Isaiah’s outlook (in contrast to that of First Isaiah). Because of marked similarities between the language describing the servant and Jeremiah’s descriptions of himself (see Jer. 10.18–24; 11.19), Saadia Gaon argued that the text refers to Jeremiah, while the Talmud (b. Sot. 14a) records the opinion that it describes Moses. Both opinions have been echoed by modern scholars. On the other hand, equally impressive parallels between the servant and First Isaiah can be observed (see ch 6). Furthermore, many passages in Deutero-Isaiah view the prophet Jeremiah as a model for the nation as a whole without equating the nation and that prophet. Christians have argued that this passage in fact predicts the coming of Jesus. Medieval rabbinic commentators devoted considerable attention to refuting this interpretation. The passage is deeply allusive, drawing on the texts from Jeremiah and Isaiah noted above and also on Isa. 1.5–6; 2.12–14; 11.1–10; Ps 91.15–16. 52.12–15: God’s first speech. God describes the servant, who will ultimately, and surprisingly, achieve great things. 14: So marred . . . semblance, rather, “His appearance was more disfigured than any man’s, his form, more than any person’s.” 53.1–11a: The surprised observers’ speech. The identity of the speakers who express their shock at the career of the servant is unclear. Are they the kings and nations of the world (cf. 52.15)? If so, then the servant is probably the nation Israel, and the nations are stunned that such an insignificant and lowly group turns out to have been so important to the divine plan. (Cf. Deut. 7.7.) Alternatively, the speakers may be the Judeans themselves, in which case the servant is either a pious minority (the ideal Israel, in contrast to the mass of Judeans whose faith and behavior miss the mark God set for them) or some individual within the Israelite community. 4–6: Either the servant suffered on behalf of the speakers (i.e., the guilty were not punished

- 7 He was maltreated, yet he was submissive,
He did not open his mouth;
Like a sheep being led to slaughter,
Like a ewe, dumb before those who shear her,
He did not open his mouth.
- 8 By oppressive judgment he was taken away, ^aWho could describe his abode?^a
For he was cut off from the land of the living Through the sin of my people, who deserved the punishment.
- 9 And his grave was set among the wicked,
^bAnd with the rich, in his death^b—
Though he had done no injustice
And had spoken no falsehood.
- 10 But the LORD chose to crush him ^aby disease,
That, if he made himself an offering for guilt,^a
He might see offspring^c and have long life,
And that through him the LORD's purpose might prosper.
- 11 Out of his anguish he shall see it;^d
He shall enjoy it to the full through his devotion.^e

"My righteous servant makes the many righteous,
It is their punishment that he bears;
Assuredly, I will give him the many as his portion,
He shall receive the multitude as his spoil.
For he exposed himself to death
And was numbered among the sinners,
Whereas he bore the guilt of the many
And made intercession for sinners."

54 Shout, O barren one,
You who bore no child!
Shout aloud for joy,
You who did not travail!
For the children of the wife forlorn Shall outnumber those of the espoused
—said the LORD.

- 2 Enlarge the site of your tent,
^fExtend the size of your dwelling,^f
Do not stint!
Lengthen the ropes, and drive the pegs firm.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Emendation yields "And his tomb with evildoers."

c Emendation yields "His arm," i.e., His vindication; cf. v. 1 with note.

d I.e., the arm of the LORD; see preceding note.

e For this sense of da'ath see 11.2, 9.

f-f Lit. "Let the cloths of your dwelling extend."

at all), or he suffered along with the guilty, even though he himself did not share in the guilt of his fellow Israelites. The former idea (i.e., the notion of vicarious suffering) would be unusual for the Bible; the latter idea (the idea of corporate guilt) is not. 8-9: Cut off from the land of the living . . . grave: Scholars debate whether these lines describe the literal death of the servant or the severe straits he was in. Exaggerated descriptions of one's plight as equivalent to death are common in the Bible; see Pss. 18.5-6; 30.4; Jonah 2.2, 8. 10b-11a: The servant is vindicated. Either he is saved from a fate like death, or he is actually described as being resurrected. In the latter case, his resurrection is probably a metaphor for the renewal of the nation at the end of the exile. Similarly, in Ezek. ch 37 Israel in exile is described as dead; the nation is brought back to life when the exile ends. 11b-12: God's concluding speech. God describes the vindication of the servant, echoing and confirming the themes of the spectators' speech.

54.1-17: Zion, rebuilt and secure.

As in several earlier speeches, the city of Jerusalem or Zion is portrayed as a woman; cf. 49.14-26; 50.1-3. She is childless (i.e., without inhabitants) and apparently forsaken by her husband (i.e., the LORD). This passage assures her, however, that God remains her husband and protector and that she will soon have abundant children. In other words, the exiles will soon return to Judah. The passage as a whole recalls Hos. ch 1, where similar metaphors convey the message that God will punish but not abandon Israel. Deutero-Isaiah at once confirms the accuracy of Hosea's prophecy of doom while repeating Hosea's assurance that the covenant between God and Israel will endure. 1-5: The prophet comforts Zion. Due to the exile, Zion seemed empty and in ruins. Deutero-Isaiah assures Zion that not only will she have a tent to live in, she will need to enlarge it to accommodate her abundant

3 For you shall spread out to the right and the left;
Your offspring shall dispossess nations^a
And shall people the desolate towns.

4 Fear not, you shall not be shamed;
Do not cringe, you shall not be disgraced.
For you shall forget
The reproach of your youth,
And remember no more
The shame of your widowhood.

5 For He who made you will espouse you—
His name is "LORD of Hosts."
The Holy One of Israel will redeem you—
He is called "God of all the Earth."

6 The LORD has called you back
As a wife forlorn and forsaken.
Can one cast off the wife of his youth?
—said your God.

7 For a little while I forsook you,
But with vast love I will bring you back.

8 In slight anger, for a moment,
I hid My face from you;
But with kindness everlasting
I will take you back in love

—said the LORD your Redeemer.

9 For this to Me is like the waters^b of Noah:
As I swore that the waters of Noah
Nevermore would flood the earth,
So I swear that I will not
Be angry with you or rebuke you.

10 For the mountains may move
And the hills be shaken,
But my loyalty shall never move from you,
Nor My covenant of friendship be shaken
—said the LORD, who takes you back in love.

11 Unhappy, storm-tossed one, uncomforted!
I will lay carbuncles^c as your building stones
And make your foundations of sapphires.

12 I will make your battlements of rubies,
Your gates of precious stones,
The whole encircling wall of gems.

offspring. The theme of Zion abundantly repopulated also appears in 49.17-21. This passage is based on Jer. 10.17-25, where the Judeans who are about to be exiled lament the loss of their children and the destruction of their tent (symbolizing the Temple), their city and kingdom, and their social structures generally. 6-10: God addresses Zion directly. 6-8: God assures Zion that He has not divorced her (cf. 50.1-3). God's anger was brief and brought about a temporary separation; the reconciliation will last forever.

9-10: God switches from a marital metaphor to a simile based on the story of Noah (Gen. chs 8-9). The former metaphor implied that the covenant between God and Israel is one of mutual obligation; the allusion to Noah recalls the notion of a covenant of grace, which God unilaterally grants to human beings. Deutero-Isaiah often moves back and forth between portrayals of Israel as God's spouse and God's child, hence insisting that both covenant models are valid; see 49.14-21; 50.1-3. 10: On the steadfast nature of the covenant, see also Jer. 31.33-35, whose vocabulary and ideas Deutero-Isaiah borrows here. Friendship, or, "peace." 11-17: An eternal structure. God promises that Zion will be rebuilt as a beautiful and enduring city, secure due to God's incomparable protection.

^a I.e., the foreigners who had occupied regions from which Israelites had been exiled; cf.

² Kings 17.24.

^b Other Heb. mss. and the ancient versions read "days."

^c Taking pukh as a byform of nophekh; so already Rashi.

13 And all your children shall be disciples of the LORD,
And great shall be the happiness of your children;
14 You shall be established through righteousness.
You shall be safe from oppression,
And shall have no fear;
From ruin, and it shall not come near you.
15^a Surely no harm can be done
Without My consent:
Whoever would harm you
Shall fall because of you.
16 It is I who created the smith
To fan the charcoal fire
And produce the tools for his work;
So it is I who create
The instruments of havoc.
17 No weapon formed against you Shall succeed,
And every tongue that contends with you at law
You shall defeat.
Such is the lot of the servants of the LORD,
Such their triumph through Me
—declares the LORD.

55 Ho, all who are thirsty,
Come for water,
Even if you have no money;
Come, buy food and eat:
Buy food without money,
Wine and milk without cost.
2 Why do you spend money for what is not bread,
Your earnings for what does not satisfy?
Give heed to Me,
And you shall eat choice food
And enjoy the richest viands.
3 Incline your ear and come to Me;
Hearken, and you shall be revived.
And I will make with you an everlasting covenant,
The enduring loyalty promised to David.
4 ^bAs I made him a leader^c of peoples,
A prince and commander of peoples,
5 So you shall summon a nation you did not know,
And a nation that did not know you
Shall come running to you^b—

13: As in Jer. 31.33–35, the people in the restored community will learn God's teaching successfully, thus ensuring the eternal nature of the covenant. All your children . . . your children, alternatively: "All those who build you [O Zion] will be learned in the ways of the LORD, and great shall be the well-being of your inhabitants, endowed with understanding." The Heb letters "bnyk" appear twice in this verse, implying at once the idea of "children," "builders," and "those who understand," each of which fits the context of ch 54 (cf. b. Ber. 64a). Deutero-Isaiah frequently puns on various meanings of a single word.

55.1–13: An invitation to redemption. This passage differs from many earlier Deutero-Isaianic speeches because of its general nature. It contains few references to the exile or the trek through the desert to Judah, instead couching its description of the upcoming redemption in broad terms that are less anchored in a specific historical situation. The further one reads in chs 40–66, the more one finds a tendency away from concrete language that reflects the situation of the Babylonian exiles and toward phrasing that could apply to any historical era. Also noteworthy is the plea that people abandon sinful behavior, which is absent in the first division of Deutero-Isaiah's work (chs 40–48) but increasingly common in the second and third divisions (chs 49–57, 58–66).

1–5: God's invitation. It is unclear whether these lines are addressed specifically to Judeans (which is implied by vv. 3–5, 12) or to any human being who wants to recognize the one God (so Ibn Ezra, Radak). Water, understood by rabbinic commentators as a metaphor for Torah. 3: The enduring loyalty promised to David: In 2 Sam. 7.8–16 and Ps. 89.4, 20–37, God promised David that his descendants would rule Israel forever as an enduring royal dynasty. Here, Deutero-Isaiah extends that promise to the nation as a whole. The restored Judean commonwealth will have no

^a Meaning of verse uncertain.

^{b-b} Cf. 2 Sam. 22.44–45 (Ps. 18.44–45).

^c Cf. Targum; others "witness."

For the sake of the LORD your God,
The Holy One of Israel who has glorified you.

- 6 Seek the LORD while He can be found,
Call to Him while He is near.
- 7 Let the wicked give up his ways,
The sinful man his plans;
Let him turn back to the LORD,
And He will pardon him;
To our God,
For he freely forgives.
- 8 For My plans are not your plans,
Nor are My ways^a your ways^a
—declares the LORD.
- 9 But as the heavens are high above the earth,
So are My ways^a high above your ways^a
And My plans above your plans.
- 10 For as the rain or snow drops from heaven
And returns not there,
But soaks the earth
And makes it bring forth vegetation,
Yielding ^bseed for sowing and bread for eating,^b
- 11 So is the word that issues from My mouth:
It does not come back to Me unfulfilled,
But performs what I purpose,
Achieves what I sent it to do.
- 12 Yea, you shall leave^c in joy and be led home secure.
Before you, mount and hill shall shout aloud,
And all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.
- 13 Instead of the brier, a cypress shall rise;
Instead of the nettle, a myrtle shall rise.
These shall stand as a testimony to the LORD,
As an everlasting sign that shall not perish.

56 Thus said the LORD:
Observe what is right and do what is just;
For soon My salvation shall come,
And my deliverance be revealed.

- 2 Happy is the man who does this,
The man who holds fast to it:
Who keeps the sabbath and does not profane it,
And stays his hand from doing any evil.

one human king, for all its members will have royal status. Thus Deutero-Isaiah transforms the older Davidic covenant by democratizing it. (Cf. Deutero-Isaiah's democratizing of the priesthood in 61.5–6 and n.) The prophet also saves the Davidic promise by means of this transformation, for the more natural reading of the Davidic promise in 2 Sam. ch 7 and Ps. 89 proved incorrect in light of the fall of the Davidic dynasty to the Babylonians in 586 BCE. On Deutero-Isaiah's attitude toward the monarchy, see also 42.1–9; 60.1–22; 65.25. 5: Israel's royal status yields benefits for all humanity, who come to recognize, as a result of her redemption, the one true God. 6–7: A call to repentance. 8–11: The trustworthiness of God's words. Deutero-Isaiah picks up the metaphor of water from v. 1 in a new way to emphasize a favorite theme: God's promises and the prophecies God issued through the prophets never fail to come true. Cf. 45.23. The metaphor is significant: God sends rain, which inevitably falls to the ground; then it is absorbed by soil and nourishes vegetation. Humans in turn harvest the vegetation and transform it into food. Similarly, God's word is sure to have a series of effects, the most important of which are indirect and involve human input. 12–13: The exodus from Babylonia. The prophet again calls on the exiles to leave Babylonia. Cf. 48.20–23; 49.13; 52.11–12. The LORD's promise of glorious restoration will be fulfilled, but as the preceding vv. imply, the nature of their fulfillment may be indirect and will depend on human response to God's invitation. The prophet may be responding to the failure of most Judeans to move back to Zion after the Persian king Cyrus allowed them to do so in the 530s BCE.

56.1–8: Covenant and community. The prophet addresses the role that observance of the commandments plays in forming Judean identity. Not only does it bring happiness for Judeans (v. 2), but it a Emendation yields "words"; cf. v. 11 and 40.8.

b-b Lit. "seed for the sower and bread for the eater."

c I.e., leave the Babylonian exile.

- 3 Let not the foreigner say,
Who has attached himself to the LORD,
"The LORD will keep me apart from His people";
And let not the eunuch say,
"I am a withered tree."
- 4 For thus said the LORD:
"As for the eunuchs who keep My sabbaths,
Who have chosen what I desire
And hold fast to My covenant—
- 5 I will give them, in My House
And within My walls,
A monument and a name
Better than sons or daughters.
I will give them an everlasting name
Which shall not perish.
- 6 As for the foreigners
Who attach themselves to the LORD,
To minister to Him,
And to love the name of the LORD,
To be His servants—
All who keep the sabbath and do not profane it,
And who hold fast to My covenant—
- 7 I will bring them to My sacred mount
And let them rejoice in My house of prayer.
Their burnt offerings and sacrifices
Shall be welcome on My altar;
For My House shall be called A house of prayer for all peoples."
- 8 Thus declares the Lord God,
Who gathers the dispersed of Israel:
"I will gather still more to those already gathered."
- 9 All you wild beasts, come and devour,
All you beasts of the forest!
- 10 The^a watchmen are blind, all of them,
They perceive nothing.
They are all dumb dogs

^a Heb. "his."

allows foreigners to become members of the community as well (vv. 6–7). 1–2: The importance of observing the law. The passage focuses in particular on the laws of the Sabbath. Cf. 58.13–14. 3–6: Foreigners and eunuchs. The prophet responds to feelings of exclusion among these groups, emphasizing that Torah observance renders them complete members of the community. Foreigners. During the period of the exile and the return to Zion, some foreigners became attracted to the monotheism of the Judeans. Further, non-Judeans mixed with the Judean population in the land of Israel (a topic that receives a great deal of attention in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah). Deutero-Isaiah assures the foreigners that through full observance of the covenant they can become like members of the Judean community. This passage shows the beginnings of the religious institution that later came to be called conversion, and rabbinic commentators understand the passage as referring to converts. The rhetoric in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah seems less welcoming to foreigners (see Ezra ch 9), but the policy reflected by those books is in fact identical to that advocated by this prophet: Outsiders become insiders if they embrace the covenant (see Ezra 6.21). Eunuchs. Some officials at the Babylonian court (including some exiled Judeans) were castrated. Judeans subject to this fate (and also perhaps foreigners attracted to monotheism) felt cut off from the Judean people in the sense that they would have no descendants; the nation in the future would not include their seed. Further, Lev. 21.16–23 disqualified eunuchs from priestly service; see also Deut. 23.2. Deutero-Isaiah reassures eunuchs that they nonetheless have an enduring future in the sacred community. 5: A monument and a name, a memorial, lit. "a hand and a name" (Heb "yad vashem"). 7: According to the Torah, foreigners' offerings are welcome at the Temple; see Num. 15.14–16; Lev. 22.18–25 (cf. 1 Kings 8.41–43). This text goes a step further, moving toward the institution of conversion. 8: Ingathering of exiles. The first wave of exiles who returned to the land of Israel when the Persian king Cyrus allowed them to do so in the 530s was disappointingly small. The prophet looks forward to further, and more impressive, waves of "aliyah."

56.9–57.21: Castigation and consolation. This section contains Deutero-Isaiah's harshest denunciation of the Judeans' behavior, and in many ways it resembles the rebukes found in First Isaiah, Jere-

That cannot bark;
They lie sprawling,^a
They love to drowse.

- 11 Moreover, the dogs are greedy;
They never know satiety.
^bAs for the shepherds, they know not
What it is to give heed.^b
Everyone has turned his own way,
Every last one seeks his own advantage.
- 12 "Come, I'll get some wine;
Let us swill liquor.
And tomorrow will be just the same,
Or even much grander!"

- 57 The righteous man perishes,
And no one considers;
Pious men are taken away,
And no one gives thought
That because of evil
The righteous was taken away.
- 2 Yet he shall come to peace,
^cHe shall have rest on his couch^c
Who walked straightforward.
- 3 But as for you, come closer,
You sons of a sorceress,
You offspring of an adulterer and a harlot!^d
- 4 With whom do you act so familiarly?
At whom do you open your mouth
And stick out your tongue?
Why, you are children of iniquity,
Offspring of treachery—
- 5 You who inflame^e yourselves
Among the terebinths,
Under every verdant tree;
Who slaughter children in the wadis,
Among^f the clefts of the rocks.
- 6 ^gWith such^h are your share and portion;^g
They, they are your allotment;
To them you have poured out libations,
Presented offerings.
Should I relent in the face of this?

miah, and other preexilic prophets more than the bulk of the prophesies in chs 40–66. It ends, however, on a typically Deutero-Isaianic note, assuring the faithful among the Judean population that peace and salvation will eventually arrive. The description of the Judeans' sins focuses on Canaanite-influenced idolatry of the sort known from the preexilic era. Some suggest that idolatry became common in the period of the restoration as Judeans intermarried with the local population, a practice repeatedly condemned in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah. Others argue that this passage refers in fact to the sins of the exiles' ancestors and thus does not predict a new disaster but explains the reason for the exile that has already occurred. The whole passage is heavily allusive, borrowing vocabulary and literary motifs from 2.6–21; 6.1–10; 30.9–14; Jer. 2.23–25; 3.12–14; 6.13–14; 12.8–12.

56.9–57.2: Denunciation of Israel's corrupt leaders. Wild beasts (v. 9)—i.e., foreign nations—are invited to devour Israel. Some argue that dogs (v. 10) and shepherds (v. 11) refer to false prophets, while others view them as political leaders. 57.3–13a: Idolatry. A condemnation of pagan practices among the Judeans, whether past or present. Sexual imagery pervades this passage, not because the idolatrous worship involved lewd practices but because idolatry among Israelites is compared to adultery: The LORD is Israel's husband, and thus any worship of other gods by Israelites is an act of marital infidelity. 5–7: Israelite pagan cult ceremonies are often depicted as taking place under leafy trees and on hilltops. Cf. 1 Kings 14.13; 2 Kings 17.10; Hos. 4.13; Jer. 2.20; 3.6–13; Ezek. 6.13.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "Neither do the shepherds ever know sufficiency (hon)." Cf. hon in Prov. 30.15, 16.

c-c Heb. "They shall have rest on their couches." d Lit. "she acts the harlot."

e I.e., in some frenzied idolatrous rite. f Heb. "under."

g-g Meaning of Heb. uncertain. h The cult-trees referred to above in v. 5.

7 On a high and lofty hill
 You have set your couch;
 There, too, you have gone up
 To perform sacrifices.

8 Behind the door and doorpost
 You have directed your thoughts;
^aAbandoning Me, you have gone up
 On the couch you made so wide.
 You have made a covenant with them,^b
 You have loved bedding with them;^c
 You have chosen lust.^d

9 You have approached ^athe king^e with oil,
 You have provided many perfumes.
 And you have sent your envoys afar,
 Even down to the netherworld.^f

10 Though wearied by much travel,
 You never said, "I give up!"
 You found gratification for your lust,
 And so you never cared.

11 ^gWhom do you dread and fear,
 That you tell lies?^g
 But you gave no thought to Me,
 You paid no heed.
 It is because I have stood idly by ^hso long^h
 That you have no fear of Me.

12 I hereby pronounce ⁱjudgment upon your deeds:ⁱ
^jYour assorted [idols]^j shall not avail you,
 Shall not save you when you cry out.
 They shall all be borne off by the wind,
 Snatched away by a breeze.
 But those who trust in Me shall inherit the land
 And possess My sacred mount.

14 [The LORD] says:
 Build up, build up a highway!
 Clear a road!
 Remove all obstacles
 From the road of My people!

15 For thus said He who high aloft
 Forever dwells, whose name is holy:
 I dwell on high, in holiness;

13b-21: Salvation. Not all Judeans are guilty of these crimes, however, and God recognizes the Judeans' weaknesses and will help them overcome them. The faithful and the penitent will enjoy well-being, even as the inveterate sinners are punished. 14: Cf. 40.3-5. 15: The highest of all beings desires to dwell among the lowest. Deutero-Isaiah often portrays the LORD as voluntarily accepting human roles out of love for the people. Cf. 52.6; 58.9; 65.1. 19-21: The prophet divides the nation into two groups: the true or faithful Israel for whom it shall be well (or, "there will be peace," Heb "shalom," v. 19), and the wicked, for whom there is no safety (or, "there will be no peace," v. 21). 19: The far and the near, respectively, Israelites who remain in exile and those who already live in the land of Israel.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b The cult-trees referred to above in v. 5.

c I.e., with the objects behind door and doorpost.

d Like Ugaritic yd, from root ydd, "to love." e Or "Molech."

f I.e., you have brought tribute to alien cults as to a king.

g-g Emendation yields "Them you dreaded and feared, / And so you gave them thought."

h-h Emendation yields "and shut My eyes."

i-i Lit. "your retribution and your deeds."

j-j Brought up from v. 13 for clarity.

Yet with the contrite and the lowly in spirit—

Reviving the spirits of the lowly,
Reviving the hearts of the contrite.

16 For I will not always contend,
I will not be angry forever:

Nay, I^a who make spirits flag,^a
Also create the breath of life.

17 For their^b sinful greed I was angry;
I struck them and turned away in My wrath.
‘Though stubborn, they follow the way of their hearts,’^c

18 I note how they fare and will heal them:
I will guide them and mete out solace to them,
And to the mourners among them¹⁹ heartening,^d
comforting^e words:

It shall be well,
Well with the far and the near

—said the LORD—

And I will heal them.

20 But the wicked are like the troubled sea
Which cannot rest,
Whose waters toss up mire and mud.

21 There is no safety
—said my God—

For the wicked.

58 Cry with full throat, without restraint;
Raise your voice like a ram’s horn!
Declare to My people their transgression,
To the House of Jacob their sin.

2 To be sure, they seek Me daily,
Eager to learn My ways.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b I.e., Israel’s. Cf. “My people,” v. 14.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields “When they have walked broken in the contrition of their hearts.”

d Lit. “the vigor of”; cf. Eccl. 12.1 and postbiblical bori.

e The Heb. nib is otherwise unknown; its meaning is inferred from that of nid (cf. the verb nad “to condole”) in the parallel expression in Job 16.5.

Chs 58–66: Further denunciations and promises. The third section of Deutero-Isaiah’s prophetic collection. Chs 34–35 in all likelihood were originally part of this section as well. Like the second section (chs 49–57), these chs were composed in Jerusalem after the initial, somewhat disappointing, restoration had taken place in 538 BCE (see intro. to the book of Isaiah, section on chs 40–66). Several characteristics that begin to emerge in chs 49–57 become more pronounced here. The prophet rebukes the nation for moral and religious shortcomings. Further, Deutero-Isaiah responds to complaints regarding the full redemption’s delay. The theme of the cleavage between faithful and unfaithful Judeans becomes a main focus of attention. On the other hand, several chs, especially 60–62 and parts of 65–66, recall the most exuberant prophecies of chs 40–48; these chs insist that the full redemption predicted in the earliest chs of Deutero-Isaiah’s collection will indeed take place: All the exiles will return to the land of Israel, the nations of the world will join Israel in worshipping the one true God, and the Presence of God will journey back to Jerusalem, bringing great joy to the faithful within Israel and among the nations.

58.1–15: True piety and false piety. The prophet denounces the Judeans, focusing not on pagan practices (as in ch 57) but on apparently proper religious practices that the Judeans perform hypocritically. Lying behind the passage is an implied question: Why have the predictions of glorious restoration found in chs 40–48 not come true? Exiles had indeed returned to Jerusalem, but—contrary to what one expected from the opening chs of Deutero-Isaiah’s work—the land remained under foreign control (the Persians having replaced the Babylonians as overlords), conditions were difficult, and God’s presence was not manifest there. (On the difficulties facing the early postexilic community, see Ezra chs 4–6; Hag. chs 1–2; Zech. chs 1, 3.) Deutero-Isaiah maintains that it is now the people’s sins that prevent the full-fledged restoration from taking place. 1–7: Fasting and justice. The Judeans observe rituals such as fasting, but they do so only for their own benefit, not out of true devotion. Real humility toward God would engender a desire for justice toward the weak, compassion toward the downtrodden, and charity toward the poor. Then fasting would involve a willingness to give up one’s own things rather than the hope to acquire salvation. These vv. borrow ideas and vocabulary from

Like a nation that does what is right,
 That has not abandoned the laws of its God,
 They ask Me for the right way,
 They are eager for the nearness of God:
 3 "Why, when we fasted, did You not see?
 When we starved our bodies, did You pay no heed?"
 Because on your fast day
 You see to your business
 And oppress all your laborers!
 4 Because you fast in strife and contention,
 And you strike with a wicked fist!
 Your fasting today is not such
 As to make your voice heard on high.
 5 Is such the fast I desire,
 A day for men to starve their bodies?
 Is it bowing the head like a bulrush
 And lying in sackcloth and ashes?
 Do you call that a fast,
 A day when the LORD is favorable?
 6 No, this is the fast I desire:
 To unlock fetters of wickedness,
 And untie the cords of ^athe yoke^a
 To let the oppressed go free;
 To break off every yoke.
 7 It is to share your bread with the hungry,
 And to take the wretched poor into your home;
 When you see the naked, to clothe him,
 And not to ignore your own kin.
 8 Then shall your light burst through like the dawn
 And your healing spring up quickly;
 Your Vindicator shall march before you,
 The Presence of the LORD shall be your rear guard.
 9 Then, when you call, the LORD will answer;
 When you cry, He will say: Here I am.
 If you banish ^athe yoke^a from your midst,
^bThe menacing hand,^b and evil speech,
 10 And you offer your compassion^c to the hungry
 And satisfy the famished creature—
 Then shall your light shine in darkness,
 And your gloom shall be like noonday.
 11 The LORD will guide you always;
 He will slake your thirst in ^dparched places^d

Mic. 3.6–12. 2: The right way, alternatively, "victorious judgments." People pray for divine intervention in their quarrels against others; their prayers and fasts have selfish purposes, not sacred ones. 8–9a: The result of true righteousness. Cf. 40.3; 52.12. Deutero-Isaiah repeats the earlier predictions that God's own Presence will return to Zion. Here, however, the prophecy is conditional: Only when the Judeans' behavior warrants divine presence will God arrive. 9a: Here I am, Heb "hineni." See 52.6 n. 9b–12: Righteousness and restoration. Although some exiles returned to Zion after the Persians defeated the Babylonians in 538, the land of Israel remained for the most part in ruins. The prophet attempts to explain why the rebuilding of the cities destroyed by the Babylonians has been delayed. 13–14: The Sabbath. Deutero-Isaiah does not reject ritual in favor of ethical action but calls on the nation to attend to both, and focuses especially on the observance of the Sabbath. Cf. 56.6. These vv. borrow vocabulary from Deut. 32.9–13.

a-a Change of vocalization yields "lawlessness"; cf. mutteḥ, Ezek. 9.9.

b-b Lit. "Extending the finger."

c Some Heb. mss. and ancient versions read "bread." d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

And give strength to your bones.
 You shall be like a watered garden,
 Like a spring whose waters do not fail.
 12 Men from your midst shall rebuild ancient ruins,
 You shall restore foundations laid long ago.
 And you shall be called
 "Repairer of fallen walls,
 Restorer of lanes for habitation."
 13 If you ^arefrain from trampling^a the sabbath,
 From pursuing your affairs on My holy day;
 If you call the sabbath "delight,"
 The LORD's holy day "honored";
 And if you honor it and go not your ways
 Nor look to your affairs, nor strike bargains—
 14 Then you ^bcan seek the favor of the LORD.^b
 I will set you astride the heights of the earth,
 And let you enjoy the heritage of your father
 Jacob—
 For the mouth of the LORD has spoken.

59 No, the LORD's arm is not too short to save,
 Or His ear too dull to hear;
 2 But your iniquities have been a barrier
 Between you and your God,
 Your sins have made Him turn His face away
 And refuse to hear you.
 3 For your hands are defiled with crime^c
 And your fingers with iniquity.
 Your lips speak falsehood,
 Your tongue utters treachery.
 4 No one sues justly
 Or pleads honestly;
 They rely on emptiness and speak falsehood,
 Conceiving wrong and begetting evil.
 5 They hatch adder's eggs
 And weave spider webs;
 He who eats of those eggs will die,
 And if one is crushed, it hatches out a viper.
 6 Their webs will not serve as a garment,
 What they make cannot serve as clothing;
 Their deeds are deeds of mischief,
 Their hands commit lawless acts,
 7 Their feet run after evil,
 They hasten to shed the blood of the innocent.

59.1-21: Rebuke, confession, and reconciliation. This ch presents a three-part dialogue. The prophet reprimands the nation; the nation, or at least the faithful among them, acknowledge their misdeeds; and then the prophet announces that God will bring justice and mercy to the people. God speaks directly to the faithful in the last v. This ch, like the previous one, attributes the delay of the redemption predicted in chs 40-48 to the people's sins. 1-8: Sin and its consequences. 1-2: Here, as in 40.27; 49.14; 50.1-2, Deutero-Isaiah responds to specific complaints uttered by contemporaries. The Babylonians have been defeated, as Deutero-Isaiah and earlier prophets predicted, but the new age has failed to materialize: The exiles have not all returned to Zion, and the land remains mostly desolate. Consequently, some Judeans speculated that the LORD was not able to save them, or that God did not listen to their prayers. The prophet retorts that Israel's sins, not God's abilities, are the root of the problem. Earlier, Deutero-Isaiah seemed to think that sins were only a part of Israel's past, and that God would automatically treat the nation with grace after their punishment in Babylon (40.2; 43.25; 48.11), but now that an imperfect restoration has taken place, the prophet recognizes the continuing existence of sin and its unhappy consequences. 2: Your iniquities . . . Your sins: The Heb word order emphasizes these nouns. Therefore, translate: "It is your iniquities that have been a barrier. . . . It is your sins that have made Him turn. . . ."

a-a Lit. "turn back your foot from." b-b Cf. Ps. 37.4; Job 22.26-27; 27.10.
 c Or "blood."

8 Their plans are plans of mischief,
Destructiveness and injury are on their roads.
They do not care for the way of integrity,
There is no justice on their paths.
They make their courses crooked,
No one who walks in them cares for integrity.

9 “That is why redress is far from us,
And vindication does not reach us.
We hope for light, and lo! there is darkness;
For a gleam, and we must walk in gloom.
10 We grope, like blind men along a wall;
Like those without eyes we grope.
We stumble at noon, as if in darkness;

^aAmong the sturdy, we are^a like the dead.

11 We all growl like bears
And moan like doves.
We hope for redress, and there is none;
For victory, and it is far from us.

12 For our many sins are before You,
Our guilt testifies against us.
We are aware of our sins,
And we know well our iniquities:
13 Rebellion, faithlessness to the LORD,
And turning away from our God,
Planning fraud and treachery, Conceiving lies and uttering them with the throat.^b

14 And so redress is turned back
And vindication stays afar,
Because honesty stumbles in the public square
And uprightness cannot enter.
15 Honesty has been lacking,
He who turns away from evil is despoiled.”

The LORD saw and was displeased
That there was no redress.
16 He saw that there was no man,
He gazed long, but no one intervened.
Then His own arm won Him triumph,
His victorious right hand^c supported Him.
17 He donned victory like a coat of mail,
With a helmet of triumph on His head;
He clothed Himself with garments of retribution,
Wrapped himself in zeal as in a robe.

9–15a: Confession. 9–11: The Judeans lament their fate. They thought that vindication (v. 9) was at hand, only to be disappointed. 11: Hope, or, “anticipate.” 12–15a: The faithful confess their sins. Rather than distancing themselves from those responsible for the misdeeds, they acknowledge that they share culpability for their neighbors’ sins. 15b–20: God’s response. God brings justice, which is good news for the faithful and dreadful news for everyone else. The phrasing here is often used of foreign nations in the Bible; here the guilty among Israel bear the brunt of divine wrath along with evildoers from other nations. 20: Those in Jacob who turn back from sin: It is the penitent Israelites, not the whole nation, who will enjoy the salvation long predicted and thus far delayed. 21: The eternal covenant. God speaks directly to the penitent. Cf. Jer. 31.31.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields “In the daytime . . .”

b Lit. “heart”; see note at 33.18 and frequently elsewhere. c Cf. Ps. 98.1–2.

18 ^aAccording to their deserts,
 So shall He repay^a fury to His foes;
 He shall make requital to His enemies;
 Requital to the distant lands.

19 From the west, they shall revere^b the name of the LORD,
 And from the east, His Presence.
 For He shall come like a hemmed-in stream
 Which the wind of the LORD drives on;

20 He shall come as redeemer to Zion,
 To those in Jacob who turn back from sin
 —declares the LORD.

²¹And this shall be My covenant with them, said the LORD: My spirit^c which is upon you, and the words which I have placed in your mouth, shall not be absent from your mouth, nor from the mouth of your children, nor from the mouth of your children's children—said the LORD—from now on, for all time.^d

60 Arise, shine, for your light has dawned;
 The Presence of the LORD has shone upon you!

2 Behold! Darkness shall cover the earth,
 And thick clouds the peoples;
 But upon you the LORD will shine,
 And His Presence be seen over you.

3 And nations shall walk by your light,
 Kings, by your shining radiance.

4 Raise your eyes and look about:
 They have all gathered and come to you.
 Your sons shall be brought from afar,
 Your daughters like babes on shoulders.

5 As you behold, you will glow;
 Your heart will throb and thrill—
 For the wealth of the sea^e shall pass on to you,
 The riches of nations shall flow to you.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Or (with a number of mss. and editions) "see."

c I.e., the gift of prophecy; cf., e.g., 61.1.

d Israel is to be a prophet-nation; cf. 51.16.

e Emendation yields "coastlands."

Chs 60–62: Encouragement to Zion. This lengthy poem portrays Jerusalem (Zion) as a bereaved woman. In this respect it resembles many passages encountered in the previous section of Deutero-

Isaiah's work, chs 49–57. Its enthusiasm and optimism recall the prophecies in chs 40–48, and like them it heralds the dawn of a new age. The restored Zion will be home for a righteous nation newly returned to its land and its God; universal recognition of the one God will lead all the nations to enrich Zion and her inhabitants. Unlike the prophecies in chs 40–48, however, this passage puts relatively little emphasis on the return from the exile and does not mention the fall of Babylonia. This section of the book was composed after the Persians under Cyrus defeated the Babylonians in 538 BCE. The restoration of Zion that followed proved in most ways disappointing (see chs 49–57 n.). Rather than giving up hope, the prophet repeats the earlier message, insisting that the LORD will become manifest to humanity and that Jerusalem will eventually achieve peace, security, wealth, and glory. The prophet focuses less on the return to Zion, since it has already begun. 60.1–22: Royal city, royal nation. Throughout these vv., the prophet uses vocabulary and motifs associated with royalty in biblical and ancient Near Eastern literature. In particular, Deutero-Isaiah borrows royal vocabulary from texts that are concerned with the Davidic dynasty, including Isa. ch 11; Ps. 72. Here, however, the motifs are not applied to a Davidic king. Instead, they are transferred to the city of Zion and to the Israelite nation as a whole; the text makes no mention of the Davidic family. This prophet does not look forward to the arrival of a human Messiah to liberate the Israelites or a human king to govern them. Rather, God will rule the nation directly in the future, and the whole nation will enjoy royal status. Cf. 55.3 n. and also the democratization of the priesthood in 61.5–6.

60.1–3: Light shines in the darkness. The prophet speaks to Zion, which literally becomes a light to the nations. Cf. 42.6; 49.6.

60.4–16: Zion and the nations. Because the nations of the world will recognize and fear God, they will bring tribute to Zion. This passage deliberately echoes Isa. 2.1–4, but Deutero-Isaiah offers a different picture of what the nations will do: They will transport Judean exiles to Jerusalem and add to the city's

- 6 Dust clouds of camels shall cover you,
Dromedaries of Midian and Ephah.
They all shall come from Sheba;
They shall bear gold and frankincense,
And shall herald the glories of the LORD.
- 7 All the flocks of Kedar shall be assembled for you,
The rams of Nebaioth shall serve your needs;
They shall be welcome offerings on My altar,
And I will add glory to My glorious House.
- 8 Who are these that float like a cloud,
Like doves to their cotes?
9 ^aBehold, the coastlands await me,^a
With ^bships of Tarshish^b in the lead,
To bring your sons from afar,
And their^c silver and gold as well—
For the name of the LORD your God,
For the Holy One of Israel, who has glorified you.
- 10 Aliens shall rebuild your walls,
Their kings shall wait upon you—
For in anger I struck you down,
But in favor I take you back.
- 11 Your gates shall always stay open—
Day and night they shall never be shut—
To let in the wealth of the nations,
With their kings in procession.
- 12 For the nation or the kingdom
That does not serve you shall perish;
Such nations shall be destroyed.
- 13 The majesty of Lebanon shall come to you—
Cypress and pine and box—
To adorn the site of My Sanctuary,
To glorify the place where My feet rest.
- 14 Bowing before you, shall come
The children of those who tormented you;
Prostrate at the soles of your feet
Shall be all those who reviled you;
And you shall be called
“City of the LORD,
Zion of the Holy One of Israel.”
- 15 Whereas you have been forsaken,
Rejected, with none passing through, wealth. Isaiah's universalism gives way to a more national set of concerns. 6. Midian, an area in the Sinai, inhabited by nomadic traders. Ephah, a Midianite tribe. Sheba, Yemen, the southwest corner of the Arabian peninsula, renowned for its wealth and exotic goods. 7: Kedar, a tribe of nomadic traders located in the extreme north of the Arabian desert. Nebaioth, the Nabateans, an Arabian tribe located east of the Dead Sea. Rams: The Heb term could refer to animals or to political leaders. They shall be welcome offerings: If “rams” refers to animals, then translate, “They will go up willingly on My altar.” If “rams” refers to leaders, then translate “They will offer acceptable offerings on My altar.” The latter translation may suggest that foreigners will be able to serve in priestly roles in the Temple of the future. Cf. 54.7; 66.21. The issue is debated in the Babylonian Talmud (b. A. Z. 23b). 11: Jerusalem will be secure and therefore the city gates will be kept open continuously. 13: The rebuilt Temple, like the First Temple, will be constructed with wood from Lebanon; cf. 1 Kings 5.15–25. 14–16: A reversal of fortune.

a-a Emendation yields “The vessels of the coastlands are gathering.”

b-b See note at 2.16. c I.e., of the people of the coastlands.

I will make you a pride everlasting,
 A joy for age after age.
 16 You shall suck the milk of the nations,
 Suckle at royal breasts.^a
 And you shall know
 That I the LORD am your Savior,
 I, The Mighty One of Jacob, am your Redeemer.
 17 Instead of copper I will bring gold,
 Instead of iron I will bring silver;
 Instead of wood, copper;
 And instead of stone, iron.
 And I will appoint Well-being as your government,
 Prosperity as your officials.
 18 The cry "Violence!"
 Shall no more be heard in your land,
 Nor "Wrack and ruin!"
 Within your borders.
 And you shall name your walls "Victory"
 And your gates "Renown."
 19 No longer shall you need the sun
 For light by day,
 Nor the shining of the moon
 For radiance [by night^b];
 For the LORD shall be your light everlasting,
 Your God shall be your glory.
 20 Your sun shall set no more,
 Your moon no more withdraw;
 For the LORD shall be a light to you forever,
 And your days of mourning shall be ended.
 21 And your people, all of them righteous,
 Shall possess the land for all time;
 They are the shoot that I planted,
 My handiwork in which I glory.
 22 The smallest shall become a clan;
 The least, a mighty nation.
 I the LORD will speed it in due time.

61 The spirit of the Lord God is upon me,
 Because the LORD has anointed me;
 He has sent me as a herald of joy to the humble,
 To bind up the wounded of heart,
 To proclaim release to the captives,
 Liberation to the imprisoned;
 2 To proclaim a year of the LORD's favor

60.17-22: The city transformed. Jerusalem and its inhabitants will be secure and prosperous, and God's Presence will dwell in the city once again. 19-20: According to biblical writers, the divine Presence consists of or is surrounded by an extraordinarily bright light (see Exod. 24.16-16; Isa. 4.5; Ezek. 1.26-28; 10.4; 43.2; Ps. 104.2). Because God's Presence will dwell on Zion, neither the sun nor the moon will be visible, much less necessary. 61.1-9: Jubilee for Jerusalem. The identity of the speaker in these vv. is debated. It is possible that Zion speaks, but in the next passage, the speaker addresses Zion. Hence it is more likely that the speaker is the prophet. The text describes the prophet's divine inspiration and God-given mission. 1: Proclaim release: The phrasing comes from Lev. 25.10, which discusses Israelite farmers who lost their land and were forced into indentured servitude. Leviticus rules that they may leave their servitude and regain their land every fifty years. Deutero-Isaiah applies this concept to the nation as a whole: In 586 it lost its land and was forced to live elsewhere. Fifty years later, its period of service ended when the Edict of Cyrus allowed them to leave Babylonia and to regain their ancestral land.

^a Lit. "breasts of kings" or "breasts of kingdoms."

^b So 1QIs^a, Septuagint, and Targum.

And a day of vindication by our God;
 To comfort all who mourn—
 3 *To provide for^a the mourners in Zion—
 To give them a turban instead of ashes,
 The festive ointment instead of mourning,
 A garment of splendor instead of a drooping spirit.
 They shall be called terebinths of victory,
 Planted by the LORD for His glory.
 4 And they shall build the ancient ruins,
 Raise up the desolations of old,
 And renew the ruined cities,
 The desolations of many ages.
 5 Strangers shall stand and pasture your flocks,
 Aliens shall be your plowmen and vine-trimmers;
 6 While you shall be called "Priests of the LORD,"
 And termed "Servants of our God."
 You shall enjoy the wealth of nations
 And revel^b in their riches.
 7 Because your shame was double—cMen cried, "Disgrace is their portion"^c—Assuredly,
 They shall have a double share in their land,
 Joy shall be theirs for all time.
 8 For I the LORD love justice,
 I hate ^drobbery with a burnt offering.^d
 I will pay them their wages faithfully,
 And make a covenant with them for all time.
 9 Their offspring shall be known among the nations,
 Their descendants in the midst of the peoples.
 All who see them shall recognize
 That they are a stock the LORD has blessed.
 10 I greatly rejoice in the LORD,
 My whole being exults in my God.
 For He has clothed me with garments of triumph,
 Wrapped me in a robe of victory,
 Like a bridegroom adorned with a turban,
 Like a bride bedecked with her finery.
 11 For as the earth brings forth her growth
 And a garden makes the seed shoot up,
 So the Lord GOD will make Victory and renown shoot up
 In the presence of all the nations.

5–6: The nations serve the Judeans (cf. 60.4–16), and the Judeans in turn serve the nations as priests. The priestly role that once belonged to the descendants of Aaron alone (i.e., the "Kohanim"; see Num. ch 18) is now extended to the whole nation. Cf. the idea of the democratization of the monarchy, discussed in 55.3 n.; 60.1–22 n. 61.10–62.7: Triumph for Zion. The prophet speaks on behalf of the people. Royal motifs are applied to the prophet, to Zion, and thus to the whole nation; cf. Ps. 132.9–18. 61.10–62.2: The nations witness the surprising vindication of Israel.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Emendation yields "They inherited disgrace as their portion."

d-d Emendation yields "the robbing of wages."

62 For the sake of Zion I will not be silent,
 For the sake of Jerusalem I will not be still,
 Till her victory emerge resplendent
 And her triumph like a flaming torch.
 2 Nations shall see your victory,
 And every king your majesty;
 And you shall be called by a new name
 Which the LORD Himself shall bestow.
 3 You shall be a glorious crown
 In the hand of the LORD,
 And a royal diadem
 In the palm of your God.
 4 Nevermore shall you be called "Forsaken,"
 Nor shall your land be called "Desolate";
 But you shall be called "I delight in her,"
 And your land "Espoused."
 For the LORD takes delight in you,
 And your land shall be espoused.
 5 As a youth espouses a maiden,
^aYour sons^a shall espouse you;
 And as a bridegroom rejoices over his bride,
 So will your God rejoice over you.
 6 Upon your walls, O Jerusalem,
 I have set watchmen,
 Who shall never be silent
 By day or by night.
 O you, the LORD's remembrancers,^b
 Take no rest
 7 And give no rest to Him,
 Until He establish Jerusalem
 And make her renowned on earth.
 8 The LORD has sworn by His right hand,
 By His mighty arm:
 Nevermore will I give your new grain
 To your enemies for food,
 Nor shall foreigners drink the new wine
 For which you have labored.
 9 But those who harvest it shall eat it
 And give praise to the LORD;
 And those who gather it shall drink it
 In My sacred courts.
 10 Pass through, pass through the gates!

62.2-6: The prophet addresses Jerusalem and informs her of the reversal of her sad plight. 6-7: The postexilic setting is crucial for understanding these vv. The full redemption predicted for Zion has not yet arrived, even though some exiles have returned. Therefore the watchmen remind God that Jerusalem still awaits aid, for the city is not yet firmly established.

8-12: God addresses Zion. Responding to the prophet's entreaties in vv. 6-7, God speaks directly to Zion. The LORD confirms the prophet's words, assuring the city that redemption will indeed come. 8-9: Those who farm will enjoy the fruit of their own labor. Contrast Deut. 28.30-34.

a-a Change of vocalization yields "He who rebuilds you."

b I.e., the watchmen just mentioned.

Clear the road for the people;
Build up, build up the highway,
Remove the rocks!

Raise an ensign over the peoples!

11 See, the LORD has proclaimed

To the end of the earth:

Announce to Fair Zion,

Your Deliverer is coming!

See, his reward is with Him,

His recompense before Him.^a 12 And they shall be called, "The Holy People,

The Redeemed of the LORD,"

And you shall be called, "Sought Out,

A City Not Forsaken."

63 Who is this coming from Edom,
In crimsoned garments from Bozrah—
Who is this, majestic in attire, ^bPressing forward^b in His great might?
"It is I, who contend victoriously, Powerful to ^cgive triumph."^c

2 Why is your clothing so red,
Your garments like his who treads grapes?^d

3 "I trod out a vintage alone;
^eOf the peoples^e no man was with Me.

I trod them down in My anger,
Trampled them in My rage;
Their life-blood^f bespattered My garments,
And all My clothing was stained.

4 For I had planned a day of vengeance,
And My year of redemption arrived.

5 Then I looked, but there was none to help;
I stared, but there was none to aid—
So My own arm wrought the triumph,
And ^gMy own rage^g was My aid.

6 I trampled peoples in My anger,
^hI made them drunk with^h My rage,
And I hurled their glory to the ground."

7 I will recount the kind acts of the LORD,
The praises of the LORD—

a See note at 40.10. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "striding."

c-c Change of vocalization yields "Who contest triumphantly"; cf. 19.20.

d Lit. "in a press." e-e Emendation yields "Peoples, and . . ."

f Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

g-g Many mss. read wesiqathi "My victorious [right hand]"; cf. 59.16.

h-h Many mss. and Targum read "I shattered them in"; cf. 14.25.

10: The road is for the use not only of Judeans who remain in exile but also for the divine Presence (v. 11). Cf. 40.3; 49.11. Raise an ensign or flag to guide the exiles back to the land of Israel.

63.1–6: The divine warrior. A short and disturbing passage concerning divine vengeance against God's enemies, symbolized especially by the Edomites. This passage is closely connected with ch 34, which also belongs to the Deutero-Isaianic collection; there, too, the prophet predicted a great slaughter in the land of Edom. On the Edomites and the background of this ch, see 34.1–17 n. 1: God comes from the south, covered with the blood of enemies. A speaker (perhaps the prophet, perhaps the inhabitants or watchmen of Jerusalem) notices a figure approaching from the south and asks who it is; God replies in the second half of the v. Edom is the land southeast of Judah. Botzrah is a city in Edom. 2–6: The speaker asks another question, and God gives a lengthier response.

63.7–64.11: A psalm of lament. A communal complaint, this text is spoken by the nation and addressed to God; it may also include lines spoken by God in response, which is a typical feature of a lament. The lament follows the pattern of similar prayers found in the book of Psalms. The presence of a psalm in prophetic literature is not unusual; see Isa. 33.1–9; Jonah ch 2. As is normal in laments, the description of the nation's current plight and the request for help are preceded by a review of God's mighty acts in the past. Deutero-Isaiah may have composed this prayer, or the prophet may have included (and perhaps modified) a psalm already in use. 63.7–14: God's mighty acts recalled. Before outlining the complaint and the request for divine aid, the prayer calls God's kind deeds to mind. It is because God acted successfully and graciously in the past that the nation expects that God will intervene now. These

For all that the LORD has wrought for us,
 The vast bounty to the House of Israel
 That He bestowed upon them
 According to His mercy and His great kindness.
 8 He thought: Surely they are My people,
 Children who will not play false.
 *So He was their Deliverer.
 9 In all their troubles He was troubled,
 And the angel of His Presence delivered them.^a
 In His love and pity
 He Himself redeemed them,
 Raised them, and exalted them
 All the days of old.
 10 But they rebelled, and grieved
 His holy spirit;
 Then He became their enemy,
 And Himself made war against them.
 11 Then they^b remembered the ancient days,
 *Him, who pulled His people^c out [of the water]:
 "Where is He who brought them up from the Sea
 Along with the shepherd^d of His flock?
 Where is He who put
 In their midst His holy spirit,
 12 Who made His glorious arm
 March at the right hand of Moses,
 Who divided the waters before them
 To make Himself a name for all time,
 13 Who led them through the deeps
 So that they did not stumble—
 As a horse in a desert,
 14 Like a beast descending to the plain?"
 'Twas the spirit of the LORD ^e"gave them rest;"
 Thus did You shepherd Your people
 To win for Yourself a glorious name.
 15 Look down from heaven and see,
 From Your holy and glorious height!
 Where is Your zeal, Your power?
 Your yearning and Your love
 Are being withheld from us!^f

vv. at once bolster the Judeans' confidence and goad the LORD to live up to the divine reputation. 9: As rendered in the NJPS, this v. reflects an important tendency of Deutero-Isaiah's theology: God participates in the suffering of the nation. Cf. 57.15. But many regard the translation in translators' note a-a as more accurate. 10: Here again the prophet mentions God's pain. 11: They (Heb "he") remembered: The subject of this verb is not clear: "He" may refer to God or to the nation as a collective. It is also possible to translate, "He who pulled his people out [of the water] remembered the ancient days," but even then it is not clear whether "He who pulled . . ." refers to God or to Moses. Where is He who brought . . .: The identity of the speaker here through v. 14a is not clear. One possibility is that the Judeans speak, wondering where their savior is (so most rabbinic commentators). Alternatively, God may ask these questions, as if saying, "Long ago I saved Israel—whatever became of that side of Me?" In that case, vv. 11b–14.mark the beginning of God's movement from wrath to grace. Along with, alternatively, "Specifically." Shepherd of His flock: The flock is the nation Israel; the shepherd is either Moses or God. (If the translation "shepherds" found in translators' note d is correct, then this word refers to Moses and Aaron and perhaps also to Miriam.) 63.15–64.11: Complaint and request for help. Having expressed confidence in God's ability to save, the speaker now calls out for God's attention (63.15; 64.8), describes their current lamentable state (63.18–19a; 64.8–10), and requests divine intervention (63.19b–64.1; 64.8; 64.11). The combination of these four elements is very common in psalms of lament; see 33.2–9 n.

a-a Ancient versions read "So He was their Deliverer / ⁹In all their troubles. / No [so kethib] angel or messenger, / His own Presence delivered them." Cf. Deut. 4.37 and note.

b Heb. "he."

c-c Heb. moshe 'ammo, a play on the name Moshe (Moses).

d So many mss. and ancient versions; other texts "shepherds."

e-e Emendation yields "guided them."

f Heb. "me." Emendation yields "[Where are] Your yearning and Your love? / Let them not be restrained!"

16 Surely You are our Father:
 Though Abraham regard us not,
 And Israel recognize us not,
 You, O LORD, are our Father;
 From of old, Your name is "Our Redeemer."
 17 Why, LORD, do You make us stray from Your ways,
 And turn our hearts away from revering You?
 Relent for the sake of Your servants,
 The tribes that are Your very own!
 18 Our foes have trampled Your Sanctuary,
 Which Your holy people ^apossessed but a little while.^a 19 We have become as a people You never ruled,
 To which Your name was never attached.

If You would but tear open the heavens and come down,

64 So that mountains would quake before You—
^bAs when fire kindles brushwood,
 And fire makes water boil—
 To make Your name known to Your adversaries
 So that nations will tremble at Your Presence,
 2 When You did wonders we dared not hope for,
 You came down
 And mountains quaked before You.
 3 Such things had never been heard or noted.
 No eye has seen [them], O God, but You,
 Who act for those who trust in You.^c
 4 Yet you have struck him who would gladly do justice,
 And remember You in Your ways.
 It is because You are angry that we have sinned;
^dWe have been steeped in them from of old,
 And can we be saved?^d
 5 We have all become like an unclean thing,
 And all our virtues like a filthy rag.
 We are all withering like leaves,
 And our iniquities, like a wind, carry us off.
 6 Yet no one invokes Your name,
 Rouses himself to cling to You.
 For You have hidden Your face from us,
 And ^emade us melt because of^e our iniquities.
 7 But now, O LORD, You are our Father;

63.16: Israel: Here this name refers not to the nation as a whole but to the patriarch Jacob; see Gen. 32.29; 35.9. 63.17, 64.4: These vv. are remarkable and rather daring for their assertion that God, too, must accept some responsibility for the Judeans' sins. Their continuing hardships have worn away their hope (so Radak). If the LORD would intervene more quickly on their behalf, they would have clear reason to abandon their misdeeds and adopt a firm belief in God's authority. God's response to the nation's sins has created a cycle: Crime leads to punishment, punishment to disbelief, disbelief to more crime. Some rabbinic commentators reject this interpretation, however, arguing that only Israel is responsible for its sins, and that these vv. do not attribute responsibility to God. 63.18: As this v. indicates, the surrounding passage was written before the Temple was rebuilt in 516 (see also 64.9–10).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Meaning of vv. 1–4 uncertain.

c Heb. "Him."

d-d Emendation yields "Because You have hidden Yourself we have offended." For the thought cf. 63.17.

e-e Emendation yields "delivered us into the hands of . . ."

We are the clay, and You are the Potter,
 We are all the work of Your hands.
 8 Be not implacably angry, O LORD,
 Do not remember iniquity forever.
 Oh, look down to Your people, to us all!
 9 Your holy cities have become a desert:
 Zion has become a desert,
 Jerusalem a desolation.
 10 Our holy Temple, our pride,
 Where our fathers praised You,
 Has been consumed by fire:
 And all that was dear to us is ruined.
 11 At such things will You restrain Yourself, O LORD,
 Will You stand idly by and let us suffer so heavily?

65^a I responded to^a those who did not ask,
 I was at hand to those who did not seek Me;
 I said, "Here I am, here I am,"
 To a nation that did not invoke My name.
 2 I constantly spread out My hands
 To a disloyal people,
 Who walk the way that is not good,
 Following their own designs;
 3 The people who provoke My anger,
 Who continually, to My very face,
 Sacrifice in gardens and burn incense on tiles;
 4 Who sit inside tombs
 And pass the night in secret places;
 Who eat the flesh of swine,
 With broth of unclean things in their bowls;
 5 Who say, "Keep your distance! Don't come closer!
^bFor I would render you consecrated."^b
 Such things make My anger rage,
 Like fire blazing all day long.
 6 See, this is recorded before Me;
 I will not stand idly by, but will repay,
 Deliver ^ctheir^d sins^c into their bosom,
 7 And the sins of their fathers as well
 —said the LORD—
 For they made offerings upon the mountains
 And affronted Me upon the hills.
 I will count out their recompense in full,^e

65.1-66.24: Blessing and doom. Earlier Deutero-Isaiah alluded to a distinction between faithful and sinful Judeans, intimating that the final act of salvation will benefit only the former; see 57.19-21, 59.1-21, and passages which contrast the ideal servant nation and the blind servant, such as 42.1-9, and 42.18-43.8. Here the prophet sharpens this distinction. The nation includes both those who patiently wait for the LORD's salvation and those who have taken up the worship of other deities in addition to or in place of the true God. The latter will suffer the sort of punishment often associated in the Bible with Assyrians, Babylonians, and Edomites. Conversely, the righteous from other nations will enjoy the privilege of worshipping at Zion. 65.1-16: The faithful and the apostates within Israel. The opening vv. set up the contrast at the heart of this unit by describing the behavior and fate of each group. 1-2: God responds to the nation, even though it includes sinners, and even though it may not seek God. 1: This initial v. seems to respond directly to the last v. of the previous ch. Here I am, Heb "hineni"; see 52.6 n. 2: Spread out My hands: Normally, humans pray to God by spreading out their hands (Exod. 9.29, 33; 1 Kings 8.22, 38; Isa. 1.15), but here, in an extraordinary gesture, the LORD stretches hands out to human beings. Cf. 52.6 n.; 57.15 n.; 63.9-10 n. 3-5: A description of pagan practices adopted by some Israelites. 4: Who sit inside tombs: Worship of deceased ancestors was common among Canaanites, and the Bible often warns Israelites against any such rite. See Lev. 19.31; 20.6, 27; Deut. 18.11. 6-7: The punishment for these sins.

a-a Lit. "I let Myself be inquired of . . ."

b-b Taking qedashdikha as equivalent to qiddashtikha, cf. Ezek. 44.19; others "For I am holier than thou."

c-c Brought up from v. 7 for clarity. d Heb. "your."

e Taking rishonah as equivalent to beroshah; cf. Lev. 5.24; Jer. 16.18. Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Into their bosoms.
 8 Thus said the LORD:
 As, when new wine is present in the cluster,
 One says, "Don't destroy it; there's good in it,"
 So will I do for the sake of My servants,
 And not destroy everything.
 9 I will bring forth offspring from Jacob,
 From Judah heirs to My mountains;
 My chosen ones shall take possession,
 My servants shall dwell thereon.
 10 Sharon^a shall become a pasture for flocks,
 And the Valley of Achor a place for cattle to lie
 down,
 For My people who seek Me.
 11 But as for you who forsake the LORD,
 Who ignore My holy mountain,
 Who set a table for Luck^b
 And fill a mixing bowl for Destiny:^b
 12 I will destine you for the sword,
 You will all kneel down, to be slaughtered—
 Because, when I called, you did not answer,
 When I spoke, you would not listen.
 You did what I hold evil,
 And chose what I do not want.
 13 Assuredly, thus said the Lord God:
 My servants shall eat, and you shall hunger;
 My servants shall drink, and you shall thirst;
 My servants shall rejoice, and you shall be shamed;
 14 My servants shall shout in gladness,
 And you shall cry out in anguish,
 Howling in heartbreak.
 15 You shall leave behind a name
 By which My chosen ones shall curse:
 "So may the Lord GOD slay you!"
 But His servants shall be given a "different name."^c
 16 For whoever blesses himself in the land
 Shall bless himself by the true God;
 And whoever swears in the land
 Shall swear by the true God.
 The former troubles shall be forgotten,
 Shall be hidden from My eyes.

8–10: The righteous remnant.
 Some Judeans reject the sins just described, and they will receive the promises of salvation.

10: Sharon, the coastal plain from Jaffa to Haifa, a very fertile area marking the western extreme of the land of Israel. Achor, a valley near Jericho, a desolate area marking the land's eastern extreme.

11–16: The prophet contrasts the fates of loyal and sinful Israelites.

a Emendation yields "Jeshimon," the bleak southeast corner of the Jordan Valley; cf. Num.
 21.20; 23.8.

b Names of heathen deities.

c-c I.e., a name to be used in blessing.

17 For behold! I am creating
 A new heaven and a new earth;
 The former things shall not be remembered,
 They shall never come to mind.

18 Be glad, then, and rejoice forever
 In what I am creating.
 For I shall create Jerusalem as a joy,
 And her people as a delight;

19 And I will rejoice in Jerusalem
 And delight in her people.
 Never again shall be heard there
 The sounds of weeping and wailing.

20 No more shall there be an infant or graybeard
 Who does not live out his days.
 He who dies at a hundred years
 Shall be reckoned a youth,
 And he who fails to reach a hundred
 Shall be reckoned accursed.

21 They shall build houses and dwell in them,
 They shall plant vineyards and enjoy their fruit.

22 They shall not build for others to dwell in,
 Or plant for others to enjoy.
 For the days of My people shall be
 As long as the days of a tree,
 My chosen ones shall outlive^a
 The work of their hands.

23 They shall not toil to no purpose;
 They shall not bear children^b for terror,^b
 But they shall be a people blessed by the LORD,
 And their offspring shall remain with them.

24 Before they pray, I will answer;
 While they are still speaking, I will respond.

25 The wolf and the lamb shall graze together,
 And the lion shall eat straw like the ox,
 And the serpent's food shall be earth.
 In all My sacred mount^c
 Nothing evil or vile shall be done

—said the LORD.

17–25: The renewal of creation. This passage recalls the initial prophecies of Deutero-Isaiah in its exuberant tone and literary style, but the nature of the prediction goes beyond those found in chs 40–48: The world itself will be transformed in the new age that God brings. 20–23: While the new age will be one of extraordinary longevity, these vv. do not predict eternal life or the resurrection of the dead, in contrast to rabbinic notions of the messianic era. 24: In 51.9–11 and chs 63–64, the people wondered whether God listens to their prayers. God answers this question here: In the future, God will answer prayers before the people even utter them. 25: This v. quotes two lines from 11.6–9. In that passage First Isaiah predicted a new era ushered in by an ideal Davidic king, but Deutero-Isaiah leaves the human king out of this re-prediction. Cf. 42.1–9 n.; 55.3 n.; 60.1–22 n. 66.1–4: Temple and sacrifice. Deutero-Isaiah takes up an old prophetic theme. Although God commanded the nation to offer sacrifices, God does not need sacrifices. Neither generous attention to the Temple nor punctilious observance of cultic ritual grants Judeans license to sin. 1: The Temple plays an important role in the prophet's thinking (see 44.28; 56.5–7; 64.10; 66.20). Nonetheless, the prophet recognizes that God hardly needs that particular building; the Temple exists for the sake of humanity, not for the benefit of God. Cf. 1 Kings 8.27.

66 Thus said the LORD:
 The heaven is My throne
 And the earth is My footstool:
 Where could you build a house for Me,
 What place could serve as My abode?

^a Lit. "wear out."

^{b-b} Emendation yields "in vain."

^c See note at 11.9.

2 All this was made by My hand,
And thus it all came into being
—declares the LORD.

Yet to such a one I look:
To the poor and brokenhearted,
Who is concerned about My word.

3^a As for those who slaughter oxen and slay humans,
Who sacrifice sheep and immolate^b dogs,
Who present as oblation the blood of swine,
Who offer^c incense and worship false gods—
Just as they have chosen their ways
And take pleasure in their abominations,
4 So will I choose to mock them,
To bring on them the very thing they dread.
For I called and none responded,
I spoke and none paid heed.
They did what I deem evil
And chose what I do not want.

5 Hear the word of the LORD,
You who are concerned about His word!
Your kinsmen who hate you,
Who spurn you because of Me,^d are saying,
“Let the LORD manifest His Presence,
So that we may look upon your joy.”
But theirs shall be the shame.
6 Hark, tumult from the city,
Thunder from the Temple!
It is the thunder of the LORD
As He deals retribution to His foes.

7 Before she labored, she was delivered;
Before her pangs came, she bore a son.
8 Who ever heard the like?
Who ever witnessed such events?
Can a land pass through travail
In a single day?
Or is a nation born
All at once?
Yet Zion travailed
And at once bore her children!

2: Cf. 57.15. 3: This v. presents four lines in which a legitimate action is paired with an illegitimate one. The prophet condemns people who participate in legitimate or even sacred actions but also commit sins, whether by acting immorally toward other human beings or by practicing idolatrous rites in addition to worshipping the true God. The prophet fights not only outright apostasy but also pious hypocrisy. Cf. 1.10–20; 29.13; 58.1–14. 5–18a: Deliverance and destruction. In highly emotional tones, the prophet lashes out against those disloyal to the LORD and predicts vindication for the faithful. This section passes abruptly from one subject to the other. 5–6: The fate of the foes.

5: Your kinsmen . . . joy: According to the NJPS, the enemies (who reject the LORD) mock the faithful, sarcastically saying, “Let the LORD manifest His Presence. . . .” Another translation, which more closely follows the Heb cantillation (see 6.13 n.), reads, “Your brothers who hate you and reject you say [self-righteously], ‘For my sake the LORD will manifest His presence!’ But we [the truly righteous] will see their joy discomfited.” In this translation both groups, the prophet’s and the enemies’, regard themselves as followers of the LORD, but the other group will be unmasked as hypocritical when the LORD appears. 7–14: Jerusalem consoled. As in previous passages, Jerusalem is portrayed as a bereaved woman (see 49.14–26; 50.1–3; 51.23; 54.1–17; chs 60–62). She will suddenly, without pain, bear children and become a bustling city, full of life.

a Vv. 3–4 refer to practitioners of idolatrous rites; cf. v. 17 and 57.5–8; 65.1–12.

b Lit. “break the necks of.”

c Heb. mazkir refers to giving the “token portion” (‘azkarah); cf. Lev. 2.2, etc.

d Lit. “My name.”

- 9 Shall I who bring on labor not bring about birth?
—says the LORD.
Shall I who cause birth shut the womb?
—said your God.
- 10 Rejoice with Jerusalem and be glad for her,
All you who love her!
Join in her jubilation,
All you who mourned over her—
- 11 That you may suck from her breast
Consolation to the full,
That you may draw from her bosom^a Glory to your delight.
- 12 For thus said the LORD:
I will extend to her
Prosperity like a stream,
The wealth of nations
Like a wadi in flood;
And you shall drink of it.
You shall be carried on shoulders
And dandled upon knees.
- 13 As a mother comforts her son
So I will comfort you;
You shall find comfort in Jerusalem.
- 14 You shall see and your heart shall rejoice,
Your limbs shall flourish like grass.
The power of the LORD shall be revealed
In behalf of His servants;
But He shall rage against His foes.
- 15 See, the LORD is coming with fire—
His chariots are like a whirlwind—
To vent His anger in fury,
His rebuke in flaming fire.
- 16 For with fire will the LORD contend,
With His sword, against all flesh;
And many shall be the slain of the LORD.

¹⁷Those who sanctify and purify themselves to enter the groves, ^bimitating one in the center, ^beating the flesh of the swine, the reptile, and the mouse, shall one and all come to an end—declares the LORD. ¹⁸For I [know] their deeds and purposes.

11: The Israelites, as Zion's children, take consolation from the city's breasts. 13: The metaphor suddenly changes, and God is portrayed as the nation's mother. Cf. the feminine images of God in 42.13–14; 45.10; 49.14–15. 14b–18a: Attention switches to the apostates within Israel, who will be punished rather than comforted. 17: Another description of pagan rites among the Israelites. 18b–21: Universal recognition of the LORD and the ingathering of exiles. All nations will come to know the one God and will travel to the Temple in Jerusalem. This passage repeats the prophecy of First Isaiah and Micah found in Isa. 2.1–4 and Mic. 4.1–4. Deutero-Isaiah adds that the nations of the world will bring exiled Israelites back to the land of Israel. 18: Behold My glory, or "My Presence." This line repeats a prediction with which Deutero-Isaiah began this collection; see 40.5.

^a Cf. Akkadian zīzu, Arabic zīzat, "udder."

^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^c Exact construction of this verse uncertain; for the insertions in brackets, cf. Kimhi.

[The time] has come to gather all the nations and tongues; they shall come and behold My glory. ¹⁹I will set a sign among them, and send from them survivors to the nations: to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud—that draw the bow—to Tubal, Javan, and the distant coasts, that have never heard My fame nor beheld My glory. They shall declare My glory among these nations. ²⁰And out of all the nations, said the LORD, they shall bring all your brothers on horses, in chariots and drays, on mules and dromedaries, to Jerusalem My holy mountain as an offering to the LORD—just as the Israelites bring an offering in a pure vessel to the House of the LORD. ²¹And from them likewise I will take some to be ^alevitical priests,^a said the LORD.

22 For as the new heaven and the new earth
Which I will make Shall endure by My will
—declares the LORD—

So shall your seed and your name endure.
23 And new moon after new moon,
And sabbath after sabbath,
All flesh shall come to worship Me
—said the LORD.

24 They shall go out and gaze
On the corpses of the men who rebelled against Me:
Their worms shall not die,
Nor their fire be quenched;
They shall be a horror
To all flesh.

And new moon after new moon,
And sabbath after sabbath,
All flesh shall come to worship Me
—said the LORD.

a-a Some Heb. mss. read "priests and Levites."

19: Set a sign among them, i.e., God will perform a miracle that will convince them that the LORD is the only true God. Survivors, i.e., of the disaster described in v. 15. Tarshish, possibly an area west of Gibraltar in Spain. Pul, possibly a scribal error for "Put," an area in Libya. Lud, Tubal, areas in Asia minor (present-day Turkey). Javan, Greece. 21: From them likewise . . .

This v. allows two interpretations: (1) members of these other nations, having recognized the true God, will serve as priests in Jerusalem (a radical departure from Num. ch 18, which limits the priesthood to descendants of Moses' brother Aaron); or (2) some of the exiled Israelites whom the nations bring back to the land of Israel will serve as priests alongside the priests who are already in Jerusalem. Cf. 61.5–6. 22–24: Reward and punishment. A final description of the fates awaiting those who accept the LORD and those who reject the LORD. The distinction between Judeans and non-Judeans is not mentioned here; the worshippers of the LORD in v. 23 include all flesh, not just Israelites; and the men who rebelled against God in v. 24 include Israelites, as the preceding two chs make clear. Thus the book ends on a highly universal note. 24: After worshipping (vv. 22–23), the righteous will pass by the Valley of Gei Hinnom, immediately south of the Temple Mount, and there they will see the burning corpses of those who rebelled against God. Many medieval rabbinic commentators take this v. as a reference to Gehinnom or hell, where sinners suffer punishment forever (or, according to Targum, until the righteous take pity on them and ask that the punishment cease). It is not clear, however, that Deutero-Isaiah imagines the sinners as remaining cognizant or in any sense alive; rather, the eternal fire burns but does not consume their corpses as a sign to those who pass by. Nonetheless, the later Jewish belief of punishment after death in a location called Gehinnom developed out of this v. On the idea of life after death in the Bible see 14.9–11 n.; 26.19 n.; Dan. 12.2 n. And new moon . . . the LORD: In Jewish practice, v. 23 is always printed again after v. 24, so that the book ends on a positive note. Cf. the end of Malachi, Ecclesiastes, and Lamentations. Because the new moon and the sabbath are mentioned together in v. 23, this chapter is read as the haftorah when Rosh Hodesh (the beginning of the month) occurs on a Sabbath.

Jeremiah

Character of the Work

THE BOOK OF JEREMIAH presents oracles attributed to the prophet Jeremiah son of Hilkiyah and narratives that depict the major events of his lifetime. Jeremiah lived during one of the most crucial and terrifying periods in the history of the Jewish people in biblical times: the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple of Solomon, followed by the beginning of the Babylonian exile. Because he is one of the key witnesses to the last years of the kingdom of Judah, Jeremiah emerges as one of the major figures who grappled with the theological problems posed by the destruction of the nation, and who laid the foundations for the restoration of Jerusalem and the Temple in the years following the end of the exile. In the course of his struggles to understand the tragic events of his lifetime, he tells the reader more about himself than any other prophet, including his anguish and empathy at the suffering of his people, his outrage at God for forcing him to speak such terrible words of judgment against his own nation, and his firm belief that the people of Israel would return to their land and rebuild Jerusalem once the period of punishment was over.

The introduction to the book in 1.1–3 identifies Jeremiah as a priest from the city of Anathoth in the territory of the tribe of Benjamin. He is therefore a descendant of the priestly line of Eli, who presided as high priest in the sanctuary at Shiloh in the early years of Israel's history in the land (1 Sam. chs 1–4). Elide priests served as Israel's chief priests until the reign of King Solomon, who expelled Abiathar from Jerusalem to Anathoth in favor of Zadok, a high priest under David who founded the Zadokite priestly line in Jerusalem (1 Kings chs 1–2). The introduction further states that Jeremiah spoke from the thirteenth year of the reign of King Josiah son of Amon of Judah (627 BCE), through the reign of King Jehoiakim son of Josiah (608–598), and until the end of the eleventh year of King Zedekiah son of Josiah (597–586) when Jerusalem went into exile.

Thus, like Moses, who was of Levitical descent, Jeremiah is a priest and prophet who guided his people for forty years—often in the face of stiff opposition—but, unlike Moses who led the people from Egypt into the promised land, Jeremiah saw the exile of his people from that same promised land and lived out his own days in Egypt. He was a constant opponent of King Jehoiakim, an Egyptian sympathizer who led his nation into war against Babylonia, and of King Zedekiah, a Babylonian appointee who was unable to prevent a second war against Babylonia. Jeremiah claimed that Judah must submit to Babylonia or suffer the consequences, and he pointed to the destruction of his own ancestral sanctuary at Shiloh to make his point: The people must observe God's teaching (torah), including its moral injunctions and its portrayal of Egypt as Israel's oppressor, rather than rely on the security symbolized by the existence of the Jerusalem Temple. He adhered to earlier traditions, especially Deuteronomy, which reflects a similar viewpoint concerning the necessity of observing torah and the consequences for failing to do so. Indeed, his oracles also frequently cite the earlier words of the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz, who spoke during the 8th century when Assyria threatened Israel, but Jeremiah apparently believed that Isaiah's words of judgment—and restoration—would not be realized until his own time, when the Babylonians would replace the Assyrians as God's agent of punishment. He was repeatedly imprisoned and castigated as a traitor for his views. When the Babylonians offered him a comfortable life in exile in recognition for his efforts, he refused it in order to remain with his people and begin the process of rebuilding even though the exile had just begun. Ultimately, Jeremiah fled to Egypt (ch 43), and he likely died there.

The Composition of Jeremiah

RABBINIC TRADITION MAINTAINS that Jeremiah wrote his own book as well as the books of Kings and Lamentations (b. B. Bat. 15a). The modern view is that, although the book of Jeremiah contains an extensive collection of the prophet's oracles, the present form of the book is not entirely the work of Jeremiah. The prophet's oracles appear in a narrative biographical framework in which other writers provide information about the prophet, the circumstances in which he spoke, and the major events of his life. Thus, the introduction in 1.1–3 provides basic information concerning Jeremiah's identity, home, and the years of his prophetic career; a series of prophetic word formulas ("the word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD" [7.1; 11.1; etc.]) introduce each of the major sections of the book. Jeremiah's oracles appear primarily in chs 2–25, 30–31, and 46–51, but they are interspersed with narratives, especially in chs 26–29, 32–45, and 52, that provide important information concerning the circumstances in which he spoke.

The book itself claims that the prophet's companion, the scribe Baruch ben Neriah, wrote several versions of Jeremiah's oracles (see esp. ch 36), and this may account for many of the narratives about the prophet. Furthermore, the literary style of the narratives and their overall perspective concerning the relationship between God and Israel correspond markedly to the narrative traditions of the books of Kings. Some modern scholars therefore maintain that Jeremiah and perhaps Baruch are associated with circles that composed the Deuteronomistic History (Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings; see p. 453). Nevertheless, these observations do not account for the full compositional history of the book. Jeremiah appears in two versions: the Hebrew Masoretic Text that appears in all Jewish Bibles and that stands as the basis for the book in Protestant Christian circles, and the Greek Septuagint version that originally served as Scripture in the Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox Christian traditions. Although the Greek version contains many of the same oracles and narratives as the Hebrew version, it is approximately one-eighth shorter and its content appears in a markedly different order; for instance, the oracles concerning the nations appear as chs 46–51 in the Hebrew version, but in the Greek version they appear as chs 25–31 with a different sequence of nations. Because the text of the Greek version corresponds with fragments of a Hebrew version of Jeremiah found among the Dead Sea Scrolls, many interpreters argue that the Greek version of the book represents an early edition of Jeremiah that was later expanded and rearranged to form the present Hebrew edition of the book. Other fragments of Jeremiah that correspond to the Hebrew Masoretic Text also appear among the Dead Sea Scrolls, indicating that the two versions of the book circulated among Jews for several centuries following the lifetime of the prophet. This of course points to the likelihood that writers other than Jeremiah or Baruch had a hand in the book's composition. The fact that 51.64 ends "Thus far the words of Jeremiah," but the book contains an additional chapter, is but one reflection of its complicated editorial history. Many modern scholars believe that an original Jeremianic core, largely poetic in nature, was supplemented by prose authors from the school of Deuteronomy, who re-edited the book and brought it more in line with Deuteronomic ideas and terminology. Though this theory has much to commend it, it is very difficult to disentangle the editorial layers of the book.

Guide to Reading

ALTHOUGH THE INTRODUCTION to the book indicates that Jeremiah spoke for a period of forty years from the reign of Josiah to the exile of Jerusalem, the order of the oracles and narratives in the book does not appear in a strictly chronological sequence. (This is not unusual; of the larger prophetic books, only Ezekiel is ordered chronologically.) There is some tendency to organize material topically in sections of the book (a collection of royal oracles begins in 21.11; a collection against false prophets begins in 23.9; the oracles against the nations are collected in chs 46–51). However, the main determinant of the sequence of materials is the concern to reflect upon the significance of the destruction of Jerusalem and the Babylonian exile. The book begins with the early oracles of Jeremiah and continues through the destruction of Jerusalem, but it frequently looks back into earlier periods to provide some perspectives on the later disaster as it proceeds through the prophet's career. Although Jeremiah clearly struggles with God over the nature of his prophetic role and message, the book attempts to defend God's righteousness by arguing that the people themselves brought punishment upon themselves by failing to observe God's torah and that God would act to restore Israel to Jerusalem once the punishment was over. Modern theology might justifiably raise questions about such premises, especially in the aftermath of the Holocaust, but the book of Jeremiah is the product of people who were adamant in their belief in God's righteousness and their adherence to Jewish tradition. Talmudic tradition claims that the book of Jeremiah is primarily a book of destruction (b. B. Bat. 14b), but it clearly points beyond the seventy years of punishment (ch 25) to a time when Jerusalem and the Temple would be rebuilt and the streets of Jerusalem filled with "the sound of mirth and gladness, the voice of bridegroom and bride, the voice of those who cry, 'Give thanks to the LORD of Hosts, for the LORD is good, for His kindness is everlasting!' " (33.11). In the end, the book of Jeremiah is the product of a debate within Jewish circles from the late monarchy and the exilic periods concerning the question of theodicy or the righteousness of God. Although fully aware of the theological problems posed by the destruction of the Temple and the exile of the Jewish people, the book affirms God's existence and righteousness as well as the future of the restored nation Israel on its land.

Summary of Contents

STRUCTURALLY, THE BOOK OF JEREMIAH can be presented as including seventeen sections. With the exception of the concluding narrative concerning the fall of Jerusalem, which appears to be a modified version of 2 Kings 24.18–25.30, each section begins with a form of the prophetic word formula, "the word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD."

I. Jeremiah's early oracles concerning Jerusalem and Judah	1.1–6.30
II. Jeremiah's Temple sermon	7.1–10.25
III. Jeremiah's lament concerning Judah's broken covenant with God	11.1–13.27
IV. The great drought and Judah's coming punishment	14.1–17.27
V. The symbolic action of the potter and the jug	18.1–20.18
VI. Jeremiah's oracles concerning the House of David and the prophets	21.1–24.10
VII. Submission to Babylonia	25.1–29.32
VIII. Jeremiah's book of consolation	30.1–31.40
IX. Symbolic actions and oracles concerning the restoration	32.1–33.26
X. Jeremiah's oracle concerning King Zedekiah	34.1–7
XI. The oracle concerning slaves	34.8–22
XII. The fall of Jerusalem	35.1–39.18
XIII. The assassination of Gedaliah and its consequences	40.1–43.13
XIV. Jeremiah's oracle in Egypt	44.1–40
XV. Jeremiah's oracle to Baruch	45.1–5
XVI. Oracles concerning the nations	46.1–51.64
XVII. Concluding narrative concerning the fall of Jerusalem	52.1–34

[MARVIN A. SWEENEY]

1 The words of Jeremiah son of Hilkiah, one of the priests at Anathoth in the territory of Benjamin. 2 The word of the LORD came to him in the days of King Josiah son of Amon of Judah, in the thirteenth year of his reign, 3 and throughout the days of King Jehoiakim son of Josiah of Judah, and until the end of the eleventh year of King Zedekiah son of Josiah of Judah, when Jerusalem went into exile in the fifth month.

4 The word of the LORD came to me:

5 Before I created you in the womb, I selected you;
Before you were born, I consecrated you;
I appointed you a prophet concerning the nations.

6 I replied:
Ah, Lord God!
I don't know how to speak,
For I am still a boy.
7 And the LORD said to me:
Do not say, "I am still a boy,"
But go wherever I send you
And speak whatever I command you.
8 Have no fear of them,
For I am with you to deliver you
—declares the LORD.

1.1–6.30: Jeremiah's early oracles. The first major unit of the book contains the superscription or introduction to the book as a whole (1.1–3), Jeremiah's account of his commissioning as a prophet by God (1.4–10), his account of the two visions that confirmed his prophetic role and characterized his message (1.11–19), and a lengthy selection of oracles concerning Jerusalem, Judah, and Israel, most of which announced punishment in an effort to persuade them to return to God. Jer. 1.1–2.3 and 2.4–28; 3.4 (or 4.1–2) serve as the first two of the three haftarat of rebuke prior to the 9th of Av, which commemorates the destruction of the Temple. In addition, Sephardi synagogues read 1.1–2.3 as the haftarah for Shemot (Exod. 1.1–6.1) because of the parallels between the life of Moses and the life of Jeremiah; they are the two prophets who attempt to refuse the divine call.

1.1–3: The introduction to the book of Jeremiah. Prophetic books normally begin with a superscription that identifies the prophet and provides historical background (see Isa. 1.1; Ezek. 1.1–3). 1. Hilkiah is one of the priests at Anathoth, which would make him a descendant of the Elide priest Abiathar. King Solomon expelled Abiathar from Jerusalem to Anathoth so that Zadok would serve as the sole high priest in Jerusalem (1 Kings 2.26–27; see also 1 Sam. chs 22–23; 2 Sam. 8.17; 1 Kings ch 1). Jeremiah is therefore descended from the high priest Eli of the Temple at Shiloh (1 Sam. chs 1–4). Rabbinic tradition maintains that Jeremiah is also the descendant of the proselyte Rahab from Jericho (see Josh. chs 2; 6) and Joshua (Sifre Numbers 78; b. Meg. 14b). Anathoth is often identified with the modern village Anata, about 5 km (3 mi) northeast of Jerusalem, although the biblical site is actually about a kilometer (half mile) to the southwest. Josh. 21.18 and 1 Chron. 6.60 identify it as a Levitical town in the territory of Benjamin. 2–3: Jeremiah prophesied for forty years, from the thirteenth year of Josiah (627 BCE) until the eleventh year of Zedekiah (586) when the Temple was destroyed (see 2 Kings ch 25; Jer. ch 52). Rabbinic tradition compares Jeremiah to Moses, a prophet and Levitical priest who led Israel in the wilderness for forty years (Pesik. Rab. xiii. 112a).

1.4–10: The prophet's commission. Prophets often relate the way they were commissioned by God (see Exod. ch 3; Isa. ch 6; Ezek. chs 1–3). The accounts of commissioning share certain commonalities, such as the prophet being "sent" as a divine messenger. Yet each account is different, reflecting the particular role and personality of the individual prophet. The commissioning of Jeremiah is most similar to that of Moses in Exod. ch 3 in that he is reluctant to accept his commission and receives encouragement from God. 4: Jeremiah employs a typical prophetic word formula to introduce statements by God (see 1 Sam. 15.10; 1 Kings 6.11; Jer. 7.1; 11.1; Ezek. 6.1; 7.1; Hos. 1.1; Joel 1.1; Mic. 1.1; Zeph. 1.1). The formula serves as an important marker for the literary subdivisions in prophetic books. 5: Because the book of Jeremiah contains little material attributed to the reign of Josiah (see 3.6; cf. 22.11–17), some suppose that Jeremiah was commissioned as a prophet at his birth in the thirteenth year of Josiah, making him eighteen years old at Josiah's death in 609 BCE. 6–8: Like Moses, Jeremiah contends that he is inadequate to the task of prophecy, but God overcomes his objections with the assurance, I am with you

⁹The LORD put out His hand and touched my mouth, and the LORD said to me: Herewith I put My words into your mouth.

¹⁰ See, I appoint you this day
Over nations and kingdoms:
To uproot and to pull down,
To destroy and to overthrow,
To build and to plant.

¹¹The word of the LORD came to me: What do you see, Jeremiah? I replied: I see a branch of an almond tree.^a

¹² The LORD said to me:
You have seen right,
For I am watchful^b to bring My word to pass.

¹³And the word of the LORD came to me a second time: What do you see? I replied:

I see a steaming pot,
“Tipped away from the north.”^c
¹⁴ And the LORD said to me:
From the north shall disaster break loose
Upon all the inhabitants of the land!
¹⁵ For I am summoning all the peoples
Of the kingdoms of the north

—declares the LORD.

They shall come, and shall each set up a throne
Before the gates of Jerusalem,
Against its walls roundabout,
And against all the towns of Judah.
¹⁶ And I will argue My case against them^d
For all their wickedness:
They have forsaken Me
And sacrificed to other gods
And worshiped the works of their hands.

¹⁷ So you, gird up your loins,
Arise and speak to them
All that I command you.
Do not break down before them,
Lest I break you before them.

¹⁸ I make you this day
A fortified city,
And an iron pillar,
And bronze walls
Against the whole land—

(see Exod. 3.11–12; 4.10–17; cf. Isaiah’s statement in Isa. 6.5–6).
9–10: As with Isaiah, a divine touch of the mouth prepares Jeremiah for prophecy (cf. Isa. 6.6–7; Ezek. 3.1–3). The prophet’s commission to speak includes four verbs of destruction and two of restoration to signify that in terms of the major themes of his message, destruction would predominate (cf. 12.14–17; 18.5–10; 24.6; 31.28, 40; 42.10; 45.4).

1.11–19: Two symbolic visions. Symbolic visions frequently accompany the commissioning of a prophet (see Exod. ch 3; Isa. ch 6; Ezek. chs 1–3) and illustrate aspects of the prophet’s message (see 1 Kings ch 19; Ezek. chs 4–5; 8–11; 37; 40–48; Amos chs 7–9; Zech. 1.7–6.15). Jeremiah’s visions are formulated like those of the chronologically earlier Amos 7.7–9; 8.1–14 and the later Zech. chs 4–5. 11–12: A pun upon the word “shaked,” almond tree, and “shoked,” “watching.” The almond tree is one of the first trees to blossom in the spring, signifying God’s resolve to bring about the divine word concerning Jerusalem and Judah. A recently discovered ivory pomegranate blossom, believed to have come from the excavation of biblical Jerusalem, apparently was formed to fit on the end of a staff. The inscription on the pomegranate, “belonging to the Temple of the Lord, holy to the priests,” indicates that it probably served as the cap for a priest’s or Levite’s staff in the Jerusalem Temple. The image also appears in Num. ch 17, where the sprouting of almond blossoms on Aaron’s and the Levites’ staffs marks them as the divinely chosen priests of Israel. It seems likely that Jeremiah’s vision was based upon the image of a Levitical staff (cf. Zech. ch 11, in which the priest and prophet Zechariah employs a staff for a prophetic vision).

13–19: Another pun: a steaming pot that is tipped and emptied from the north to portray the enemy that will bring judgment to Jerusalem from the north. Perhaps another Le-

^a Heb. shaqed. ^b Heb. shoqed.

^{c-c} Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^d I.e., against Jerusalem and Judah.

Against Judah's kings and officers,
And against its priests and citizens.^a
19 They will attack you,
But they shall not overcome you;
For I am with you—declares the LORD—to save
you.

2 The word of the LORD came to me, saying, ²Go proclaim to Jerusalem: Thus said the LORD:

I accounted to your favor
The devotion of your youth,
Your love as a bride—
How you followed Me in the wilderness,
In a land not sown.

3 Israel was holy to the LORD,
The first fruits of His harvest.
All who ate of it were held guilty;
Disaster befell them —declares the LORD.

4 Hear the word of the LORD, O House of Jacob,
Every clan of the House of Israel!

5 Thus said the LORD:
What wrong did your fathers find in Me
That they abandoned Me
And went after delusion and were deluded?

a Lit. "the people of the land."

vitical image: a pot used in the preparation of sacrificial meat (cf. 1 Sam. 2.12–17; Ezek. 24.1–14). Because biblical Jerusalem was protected by valleys to the east, south, and west, it was most vulnerable to attack from the north where the Temple stood. Since the Arabian desert makes an approach against the land of Israel from the east very difficult, ancient Mesopotamian invaders typically traveled through Aram (modern Syria) to attack Israel from the north. So the north would be the expected direction of attack for any enemy; in the early chs in Jeremiah, this enemy from the north is not yet identified, and takes on near-mythological connotations. The prophet's task is to condemn his own kings, officials, and people for wrongdoing, but God promises to stand by him (cf. 1.8) throughout the ordeal.

2.1–6.30: Jeremiah's summons to repentance directed to Jerusalem and Judah. An early speech by the prophet in which he attempts to persuade his audience to repent from their wrongdoing and worship of foreign gods so that they might return to God. Although these chs are clearly directed to Jerusalem and Judah in their present form (see 2.1–2; 4.3–6.30), many believe that the oracles in 2.2–4.2 were originally addressed by the prophet to the people of the former Northern Kingdom of Israel, destroyed by the Assyrians a century earlier (see 2 Kings ch 17). Jeremiah would have attempted to persuade them to accept the rule of King Josiah and the religious authority of the Jerusalem Temple, thereby reuniting all Israel as in the days of David and Solomon (see 2 Sam. chs 5–24; 1 Kings chs 1–11). The section was expanded with an address to Jerusalem and Judah as well when it became apparent that King Josiah's death at the hands of the Egyptian Pharaoh Neco (2 Kings 23.28–30; 2 Chron. 35.20–27) signaled that Judah, like Israel before it, faced the very real possibility of invasion and exile.

2.1–3.5: God's divorce proceedings against Israel. The prophet begins with a lengthy speech that metaphorically portrays God's intention to "divorce" Israel. The use of the marriage metaphor was common among the prophets to portray the relationship between God and Israel (see Hos. chs 1–3; Isa. chs 40–55, esp. ch 54; Zeph. 3.14–20; Ezek. ch 16; 24.15–17). 2.1–3: The prophet relates God's instructions to Go proclaim to Jerusalem. The reference to Jerusalem is missing in the Septuagint, which may reflect an earlier version of the book. Lacking this reference, the speech is directed to Israel, which is called to return to Zion or Jerusalem (3.14–4.2) in keeping with Josiah's attempts to reunite all Israel. God recalls the early period of the relationship with Israel in the wilderness as an ideal time, much like the northern Israelite prophet Hosea (Hos. 2.16–20). In contrast to the northern prophets Jeremiah and Hosea, the Zadokite priest and prophet Ezekiel and the wilderness traditions of the Torah depict the wilderness period as a time of Israel's rebellion against God. The use of priestly imagery is consistent with Jeremiah's identity as a priest. 2.4–3.5: God's speech to Israel appears in the form of a courtroom statement in which a husband seeks a divorce from his wife. 2.4: The "call to attention" formula typically introduces public presentations, such as songs, diplomatic statements, prophetic oracles, and instructional speeches (cf. Judg. 5.3; 2 Kings 18.28–29; Isa. 1.10; Ezek. 3.6; Hos. 4.1; Amos 3.1; Prov. 7.24). 5–11: God claims to have been abandoned by the people, despite having led them out of Egypt and through the wilderness to the promised land. Biblical tradition maintains that proper moral

6 They never asked themselves, "Where is the LORD,
 Who brought us up from the land of Egypt,
 Who led us through the wilderness,
 A land of deserts and pits,
 A land of drought and darkness,
 A land no man had traversed,
 Where no human being had dwelt?"

7 I brought you to this country of farm land
 To enjoy its fruit and its bounty;
 But you came and defiled My land,
 You made My possession abhorrent.

8 The priests never asked themselves, "Where is the LORD?"
 The guardians of the Teaching ignored Me;
 The rulers^a rebelled against Me,
 And the prophets prophesied by Baal
 And followed what can do no good.

9 Oh, I will go on accusing you
 —declares the LORD—
 And I will accuse your children's children!
 10 Just cross over to the isles of the Kittim and look,
 Send to Kedar and observe carefully;
 See if aught like this has ever happened:

11 Has any nation changed its gods
 Even though they are no-gods?
 But My people has exchanged its glory
 For what can do no good.

12 Be appalled, O heavens, at this;
 Be horrified, utterly dazed! —says the LORD.
 13 For My people have done a twofold wrong:
 They have forsaken Me, the Fount of living waters,
 And hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns,
 Which cannot even hold water.

14 Is Israel a bondman?
 Is he a home-born slave?
 Then why is he given over to plunder?
 15 Lions have roared over him,
 Have raised their cries.
 They have made his land a waste,
 His cities desolate, without inhabitants.

16 Those, too, in Noph and Tahpanhes^b ^cWill lay bare^c your head.

behavior and ritual observance maintains the purity of the land of Israel, but immorality and apostasy defile it (see Leviticus; Ezek. ch 18; Hos. ch 4). 10: The isles of the Kittim refers to the Greek islands or Cyprus, and Kedar refers to a confederation of Arab tribes in the north Arabian desert (see Gen. 25.13; Isa. 42.11; Jer. 49.28–29; Ezek. 27.21). The point is that even if you look far and wide, no comparable action has transpired. 12–28: God's specific accusations against Israel include both political and religious charges, which are understood as connected: God is abandoned for Egypt. 14: This type of rhetorical question is very typical of Jeremiah (so, e.g., in v. 31). 16: Noph and Tahpanhes refer to the Egyptian cities of Memphis, the ancient capital of Egypt, and Tahpanhes, a northeastern Nile Delta city fortified by Pharaoh Psammetichus I (664–610 BCE). Psammetichus and his son Neco later allied with the Assyrians against Babylonia, and Neco killed King Josiah in 609, putting an end to Judah's attempts to gain independence from the Assyrians. God's speech likens Judah's submission to Egypt and Assyria as a return to Egyptian bondage and pagan gods (cf. Isa. 10.20–26).

a Lit. "shepherds"; cf. 3.15; 23.1 ff.

b Cities in Egypt. The Egyptians, like the Assyrians, will prove a disappointment; cf. v. 36.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

- 17 See, ^athat is the price you have paid
For forsaking the LORD your God^a ^bWhile He led you in the way.^b
- 18 What, then, is the good of your going to Egypt
To drink the waters of the Nile?
And what is the good of your going to Assyria
To drink the waters of the Euphrates?
- 19 Let your misfortune reprove you,
Let your afflictions rebuke you;
Mark well how bad and bitter it is
That you forsake the LORD your God,
That awe for Me is not in you
—declares the Lord God of Hosts.
- 20 For long ago you^c broke your yoke,
Tore off your yoke-bands,
And said, "I will not work!"^d
On every high hill and under every verdant tree,
You recline as a whore.
- 21 I planted you with noble vines,
All with choicest seed;
Alas, I find you changed
Into a base, an alien vine!
- 22 Though you wash with natron
And use much lye,
Your guilt is ingrained before Me
—declares the Lord God.
- 23 How can you say, "I am not defiled,
I have not gone after the Baalim"?
Look at your deeds in the Valley,^e
Consider what you have done!
Like a lustful she-camel,
^bRestlessly running about,^b
- 24 Or like a wild ass used to the desert,
Snuffing the wind in her eagerness,
Whose passion none can restrain,
None that seek her need grow weary—
In her season, they'll find her!
- 25 Save your foot from going bare,
And your throat from thirst.
But you say, "It is no use.
No, I love the strangers,^f

23-24: Images of animals in heat symbolize Israel's eagerness to accept other gods in place of her "husband" the LORD. Throughout his lifetime, Jeremiah called for Judah to ally with Babylonia and to reject alliance with Egypt and Assyria (see chs 27-29).

a-a Lit. "that is what your forsaking the LORD your God is doing to you."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c For the form, cf. shaqqamti, Judg. 5.7; others "I."

d Following the kethib; qere "transgress."

e I.e., of Hinnom; cf. 7.31-32; 32.35.

f I.e., other gods.

Lo, I will bring you to judgment
For saying, "I have not sinned."

- 36 How you cheapen yourself,
By changing your course!
You shall be put to shame through Egypt,
Just as you were put to shame through Assyria.
- 37 From this way, too, you will come out
With your hands on your head;
For the LORD has rejected those you trust,
You will not prosper with them.

3.6-10: Israel's and Judah's "adultery." Jeremiah relates God's earlier conversation with him about northern Israel and Judah during the days of King Josiah. He continues the metaphorical portrayal of Israel and Judah as God's wives. Whereas Israel left God to pursue other "lovers" or gods, Judah is insincere because she still claims to be God's "wife" despite her "adultery."

3 [The word of the LORD came to me] as follows: If a man divorces his wife, and she leaves him and marries another man, can he ever go back to her? Would not such a land be defiled?^b Now you have whored with many lovers: can you return to Me?—says the LORD.

- 2 Look up to the bare heights, and see:
Where have they not lain with you?
You waited for them on the roadside
Like a bandit^c in the wilderness.
And you defiled the land
With your whoring and your debauchery.
- 3 And when showers were withheld
And the late rains did not come,
You had the brazenness^d of a street woman,
You refused to be ashamed.
- 4 Just now you called to Me, "Father!
You are the Companion of my youth.
- 5 Does one hate^e for all time?
Does one rage^e forever?"
That is how you spoke;
You did wrong, and ^fhad your way.^f

⁶The LORD said to me in the days of King Josiah: Have you seen what Rebel Israel did, going to every high mountain and under every leafy tree, and whoring there? ⁷I thought: After she has done all these things, she will come back to Me. But she did not come back; and her sister, Faithless Judah, saw it. ⁸I noted: Because Rebel Israel had committed adultery, I cast her off and handed her a bill of divorce; yet her sister, Faithless Judah, was not afraid—she too went and whored. ⁹Indeed, the land was a-a A gesture of wild grief; cf. 2 Sam. 13.19.

b Cf. Deut. 24.1-4. c Lit. "Arab." d Lit. "forehead."

e Cf. Akkadian parallels nadāru and shamāru. f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

defiled by her casual immorality, as she committed adultery with stone and with wood.^a ¹⁰And after all that, her sister, Faithless Judah, did not return to Me wholeheartedly, but insincerely—declares the LORD.

¹¹And the LORD said to me: Rebel Israel has shown herself more in the right than Faithless Judah. ¹²Go, make this proclamation toward the north, and say: Turn back, O Rebel Israel—declares the LORD. I will not look on you in anger, for I am compassionate—declares the LORD; I do not bear a grudge for all time. ¹³Only recognize your sin; for you have transgressed against the LORD your God, and scattered your favors^b among strangers under every leafy tree, and you have not heeded Me—declares the LORD.

¹⁴Turn back, rebellious children—declares the LORD. Since I have espoused^c you, I will take you, one from a town and two from a clan, and bring you to Zion. ¹⁵And I will give you shepherds^d after My own heart, who will pasture you with knowledge and skill.

¹⁶And when you increase and are fertile in the land, in those days—declares the LORD—men shall no longer speak of the Ark of the Covenant of the LORD, nor shall it come to mind. They shall not mention it, or miss it, or make another. ¹⁷At that time, they shall call Jerusalem “Throne of the LORD,” and all nations shall assemble there, in the name of the LORD, at Jerusalem. They^e shall no longer follow the willfulness of their evil hearts. ¹⁸In those days, the House of Judah shall go with the House of Israel; they shall come together from the land of the north to the land I gave your fathers as a possession.

¹⁹I had resolved to adopt you as My child, and I gave you a desirable land—the fairest heritage of all the nations; and I thought you would surely call Me “Father,” and never cease to be loyal to Me. ²⁰Instead, you have broken faith with Me, as a woman breaks faith with a paramour, O House of Israel—declares the LORD.

21 Hark! On the bare heights is heard
The suppliant weeping of the people of Israel,
For they have gone a crooked way,
Ignoring the LORD their God.

22 Turn back, O rebellious children,
I will heal your afflictions!

a She deserted her God for idols of stone and wood. b Lit. “ways.”

c Meaning of Heb. ba’alti uncertain; compare 31.32.

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. e I.e., Israel and Judah.

3.11–6.30: God’s appeal for the return of Israel and Judah. Notwithstanding the law of divorce in Deut. 24.1–4, God shows mercy by calling upon Israel and Judah to return (cf. Hos. chs 2–3; 14).

3.11–17: Israel’s experience of destruction, exile, and potential restoration to Zion or Jerusalem is a model for the experience of Judah. 12: Turn back is a technical term meaning “to repent.” In the Torah, it is first found in Deut.

4.30, and elsewhere in Deuteronomy. This thus represents one of the many connections between Deuteronomy and Jeremiah.

16: The Ark of the Covenant, constructed in the wilderness at the time of the exodus to hold the tablets of the covenant (Exod. 25.10–22; 37.1–9; Deut. 10.1–5; cf. Num. 10.35–36), symbolized divine presence in Solomon’s Temple (see 1 Kings 8.1–13; 2 Chron. 5.1–14). When the Temple was destroyed, no mention was made of the fate of the Ark (see 2 Kings ch 25; Jer. ch 52), suggesting that it had disappeared earlier. According to 2 Macc. 2.1–8, Jeremiah hid the Ark in a cave on Mt. Nebo or Pisgah in Moab, where Moses was buried (Deut. 32.49–52; 34.1–8). Rabbinic tradition maintains that Josiah hid the Ark so that it would not be taken to Babylon (b. Yoma 53b; y. Shek. 6:1; 49c). The ark that houses Torah scrolls in synagogues symbolizes the ancient Ark of the Covenant. 3.18–6.30: God calls for Judah’s repentance as well.

3.18–25: The reunification of Israel and Judah was a major goal of Josiah’s program of religious reform and national restoration. The return of all twelve tribes of Israel to the restored Jerusalem Temple is the foundation of Jewish thought concerning the days of the Messiah and the world to come (see Ezek. chs 40–48). The ingathering of all the exiles is likewise an important motif in modern Zionism.

"Here we are, we come to You,
For You, O LORD, are our God!

23 ^aSurely, futility comes from the hills,
Confusion from the mountains.^a
Only through the LORD our God
Is there deliverance for Israel.
24 But the Shameful Thing^b has consumed
The possessions of our fathers ever since our youth—
Their flocks and herds,
Their sons and daughters.
25 Let us lie down in our shame,
Let our disgrace cover us;
For we have sinned against the LORD our God,
We and our fathers from our youth to this day,
And we have not heeded the LORD our God."

4 If you return, O Israel —declares the LORD—
If you return to Me,
If you remove your abominations from My presence
And do not waver,
2 And ^cswear, "As the LORD lives,"^c
In sincerity, justice, and righteousness—
Nations shall bless themselves by you^d
And praise themselves by you.^d
3 For thus said the LORD to the men of Judah and to Jerusalem:

Break up the untilled ground,
And do not sow among thorns.
4 Open^e your hearts to the LORD,
Remove the thickening about your hearts—
O men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem—
Lest My wrath break forth like fire,
And burn, with none to quench it,
Because of your wicked acts.

5 Proclaim in Judah,
Announce in Jerusalem,
And say:
"Blow the horn in the land!"
Shout aloud and say:
"Assemble, and let us go

4.1-4: God's call for Judah's repentance is the primary goal of the larger text in chs 2-6. Vv. 1-2 conclude the haftarah reading of 2.4-28; 3.4; 4.1-2 for the parashah of Mase'ei (Num. 33.1-36.13), the second of the three haftarot of rebuke prior to the 9th of Av, to illustrate the principle that restoration will follow punishment. 4: The imagery of circumcision (Open, lit. "circumcise," see translators' note e) symbolizes the rejuvenation of the covenant between God and Israel (see Gen. ch 17). 4.5-6.30: Evil from the north: Although this passage is later read as a reference to the invasions of Judah by the Babylonians—who would have approached from the north in 597, 588 and 582 BCE (see 2 Kings chs 24-25; Jer. 41-43; 52)—some maintain that early in Jeremiah, the enemy from the north was thought to be the Scythians. According to the ancient Greek historian Herodotus (5th century BCE), the Scythians were a horseback-mounted people from the Caucasus (cf. 4.13; 6.22-23) who threatened Philistia and Judah in the 7th century BCE. 4.5-31: The question of theodicy or divine righteousness in the face of evil.

a-a I.e., the pagan rites celebrated on the hills are futile; exact force of Heb. uncertain.

b Heb. Bosheth, a contemptuous substitute for Baal.

c-c I.e., profess the worship of the LORD. d Heb. "him."

e Lit. "circumcise"; cf. Deut. 10.16 and 30.6.

- Into the fortified cities!"
 6 Set up a signpost: To Zion.
 Take refuge, do not delay!
 For I bring evil from the north,
 And great disaster.
- 7 The lion has come up from his thicket:
 The destroyer of nations has set out,
 Has departed from his place,
 To make your land a desolation;
 Your cities shall be ruined,
 Without inhabitants.
- 8 For this, put on sackcloth,
 Mourn and wail;
 For the blazing anger of the LORD
 Has not turned away from us.
- 9 And in that day —declares the LORD—
 The mind of the king
 And the mind of the nobles shall fail,
 The priests shall be appalled,
 And the prophets shall stand aghast.

9: The officials mentioned represent the secular and religious leaders of the late exilic period.
10: Jeremiah suggests that God has deceived the people into thinking that all would be well (cf. Isa. 6.9-10).

^{10a}And I said:^a Ah, Lord GOD! Surely You have deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying:
 It shall be well with you—
 Yet the sword threatens the very life!

¹¹At that time, it shall be said concerning this people and Jerusalem:

The conduct of ^bMy poor people^b is like searing wind wind
 From the bare heights of the desert—
 It will not serve to winnow or to fan.

12 A full blast from them comes against Me:
 Now I in turn will bring charges against them.

13 Lo, he^c ascends like clouds,
 His chariots are like a whirlwind,
 His horses are swifter than eagles.
 Woe to us, we are ruined!

14 Wash your heart clean of wickedness,
 O Jerusalem, that you may be rescued.
 How long will you harbor within you
 Your evil designs?

a-a Septuagint reads "And they shall say."

b-b Lit. "the daughter that is My people"; so, frequently, in poetry.

c I.e., the invader of v. 7.

15 Hark, one proclaims from Dan
And announces calamity from Mount Ephraim!

16 Tell the nations: Here they are!
Announce concerning Jerusalem:
Watchers^a are coming from a distant land,
They raise their voices against the towns of Judah.

17 Like guards of fields, they surround her on every side.
For she has rebelled against Me
—declares the LORD.

18 Your conduct and your acts
Have brought this upon you;
This is your bitter punishment;
It pierces your very heart.

19 Oh, my suffering,^b my suffering!
How I writhe!
Oh, the walls of my heart!
My heart moans within me,
I cannot be silent;
For ^cI hear^c the blare of horns,
Alarms of war.

20 Disaster overtakes disaster,
For all the land has been ravaged.
Suddenly my tents have been ravaged,
In a moment, my tent cloths.

21 How long must I see standards
And hear the blare of horns?

22 For My people are stupid,
They give Me no heed;
They are foolish children,
They are not intelligent.
They are clever at doing wrong,
But unable to do right.

23 I look at the earth,
It is unformed and void;
At the skies,
And their light is gone.

24 I look at the mountains,
They are quaking;
And all the hills are rocking.

25 I look: no man is left,

18: God contends that the suffering of the people is a punishment brought about by their own conduct. 19: Jeremiah's clear pain at the suffering of his own people mirrors God's empathy at the suffering of the people, even if it is brought on by their own actions. These first-person laments by the prophet typify Jeremiah. 23-28: The prophet draws upon Gen. 1.1-2.3 to argue that all creation suffers as a result of human wrongdoing. The suffering of God and all creation is addressed by proper human action throughout rabbinic literature and especially in Lurianic kabbalistic thought.

a I.e., the invader of v. 7. b Lit. "entrails."

c-c Lit. "you, O my being, hear." Change of vocalization yields "I hear the blare of horns, / My inner being, alarms of war."

26 And all the birds of the sky have fled.
 I look: the farm land is desert,
 And all its towns are in ruin—
 Because of the LORD,
 Because of His blazing anger.
 27 (For thus said the LORD:
 The whole land shall be desolate,
 But I will not make an end of it.)
 28 For this the earth mourns,
 And skies are dark above—
 Because I have spoken, I have planned,
 And I will not relent or turn back from it.

29 At the shout of horseman and bowman
 The whole city flees.
 They enter the thickets,
 They clamber up the rocks.
 The whole city is deserted,
 Not a man remains there.
 30 And you, who are doomed to ruin,
 What do you accomplish by wearing crimson,
 By decking yourself in jewels of gold,
 By enlarging your eyes with kohl?
 You beautify yourself in vain:
 Lovers despise you,
 They seek your life!
 31 I hear a voice as of one in travail,
 Anguish as of a woman bearing her first child,
 The voice of Fair Zion
 Panting, stretching out her hands:
 "Alas for me! I faint
 Before the killers!"

5 Roam the streets of Jerusalem,
 Search its squares,
 Look about and take note:
 You will not find a man,
 There is none who acts justly,
 Who seeks integrity—
 That I should pardon her.
 2 Even when they say, "As the LORD lives,"
 They are sure to be swearing falsely.
 3 O LORD, Your eyes look for integrity.
 You have struck them, but they sensed no pain;
 You have consumed them, but they would accept no discipline.
 They made their faces harder than rock,
 They refused to turn back.

5.1–31: In a series of oracles that share some similarities with the debate between God and Abraham over the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. ch 18), God attempts to persuade Jeremiah that the decision to punish Jerusalem is justified. 1–5: God begins by challenging Jeremiah to find one righteous man in the city (cf. Gen. Rab. 49.13), but the prophet is unable to find anyone.

4 Then I thought: These are just poor folk;
They act foolishly;
For they do not know the way of the LORD,
The rules of their God.

5 So I will go to the wealthy
And speak with them:
Surely they know the way of the LORD,
The rules of their God.
But they as well had broken the yoke,
Had snapped the bonds.

6 Therefore,
The lion of the forest strikes them down,
The wolf of the desert ravages them.
A leopard lies in wait by their towns;
Whoever leaves them will be torn in pieces.
For their transgressions are many,
Their rebellious acts unnumbered.

7 Why should I forgive you?
Your children have forsaken Me
And sworn by no-gods.
When I fed them their fill,
They committed adultery
And went trooping to the harlot's house.
8 They were ^awell-fed, lusty^a stallions,
Each neighing at another's wife.
9 Shall I not punish such deeds?

—says the LORD—

Shall I not bring retribution
On a nation such as this?
10 Go up among her vines^b and destroy;
Lop off her trailing branches,
For they are not of the LORD.
(But do not make an end.)
11 For the House of Israel and the House of Judah
Have betrayed Me —declares the LORD.
12 They have been false to the LORD
And said: "It is not so!^c
No trouble shall come upon us,
We shall not see sword or famine.
13 The prophets shall prove mere wind
For the Word is not in them;
Thus-and-thus shall be done to them!"

13: Jeremiah complains about false prophets. (The Heb uses the term "prophets," which the context shows to mean false prophets. In many cases like this in Jeremiah, the Greek Septuagint translates Hebrew "prophets" as "false prophets.") This is an important theme in Jeremiah (cf. ch 23), especially after the death of Josiah ended hopes for a Judean restoration that had been supported by prophetic tradition. Jeremiah challenges prophets who represent the older tradition of Isaiah that Jerusalem was inviolable, and would be delivered (see chs 27-28; cf. Isa. chs 5-12; 36-37; Zephaniah).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Lit. "rows."

c-c Or "Not He"; cf. Deut. 32.39; Isa. 43.13.

14 Assuredly, thus said the LORD,
The God of Hosts:
Because they^a said that,
I am putting My words into your mouth as fire,
And this people shall be firewood,
Which it will consume.

15 Lo, I am bringing against you, O House of Israel,
A nation from afar —declares the LORD;
It is an enduring nation,
It is an ancient nation;
A nation whose language you do not know—
You will not understand what they say.

16 ^bTheir quivers^b are like a yawning grave—
They are all mighty men.

17 They will devour your harvest and food,
They will devour your sons and daughters,
They will devour your flocks and herds,
They will devour your vines and fig trees.
They will batter down with the sword
The fortified towns on which you rely.

¹⁸But even in those days—declares the LORD—I will not make an end of you. ¹⁹And when they^a ask, “Because of what did the LORD our God do all these things?” you shall answer them, “Because you forsook Me and served alien gods on your own land, you will have to serve foreigners in a land not your own.”

20 Proclaim this to the House of Jacob
And announce it in Judah:
21 Hear this, O foolish people,
Devoid of intelligence,
That have eyes but can't see,
That have ears but can't hear!

22 Should you not revere Me —says the LORD—
Should you not tremble before Me,
Who set the sand as a boundary to the sea,
As a limit for all time, not to be transgressed?
Though its waves toss, they cannot prevail;
Though they roar, they cannot pass it.

23 Yet this people has a wayward and defiant heart;
They have turned aside and gone their way.

24 They have not said to themselves,
“Let us revere the LORD our God,
Who gives the rain,
The early and late rain in season,

15–17: By pointing to a nation from afar . . . whose language you do not know that will devour the land, Jeremiah draws upon the prophecies of judgment from the Isaian tradition (e.g., Isa. 5.26–30) to argue that the time of punishment did not conclude with the Assyrian empire. 18–19: Although God will not make a full end of the people, a new, unnamed enemy from the north will force the people to serve alien gods on their own land and foreigners in a land not their own.

a Heb. “you.” b-b Emendation yields “Whose mouths.”

Who keeps for our benefit
The weeks appointed for harvest."

25 It is your iniquities that have diverted these things,

Your sins that have withheld the bounty from you.

26 For among My people are found wicked men,

^aWho lurk, like fowlers lying in wait;^a

They set up a trap to catch men.

27 As a cage is full of birds,

So their houses are full of guile;

That is why they have grown so wealthy.

28 They have become fat and sleek;

They ^bpass beyond the bounds of wickedness;^b

And they prosper.

They will not judge the case of the orphan,

Nor give a hearing to the plea of the needy.

29 Shall I not punish such deeds

—says the LORD—

Shall I not bring retribution

On a nation such as this?

30 An appalling, horrible thing

Has happened in the land:

31 The prophets prophesy falsely,

And the priests ^arule accordingly;^a

And My people like it so.

But what will you do at the end of it?

6 Flee for refuge, O people of Benjamin,
Out of the midst of Jerusalem!

Blow the horn in Tekoa,

Set up a signal at Beth-haccerem!

For evil is appearing from the north,

And great disaster.

2 ^aFair Zion, the lovely and delicate,

I will destroy.^a

3 Against her come shepherds with their flocks,

They pitch tents all around her;

Each grazes ^cthe sheep under his care.^c

4 ^dPrepare for ^dbattle against her:

"Up! we will attack at noon."

"Alas for us! for day is declining,

The shadows of evening grow long."

5 "Up! let us attack by night,

And wreck her fortresses."

28: By charging that the people do not judge properly the cases of the poor and the needy, Jeremiah draws upon the traditions of social justice found both in the Torah (Exod. 22.21-26; Lev. 19.13-16; Deut.

14.27-29) and in the earlier prophets (Isa. 1.16-17; 3.13-15; Amos 2.6-7; 8.4-7). 6.1-30: Having despaired of finding anyone righteous in the city, the prophet prepares for the coming punishment.

1: He begins by calling upon the people of Benjamin to flee. The territory of the tribe of Benjamin lies immediately to the north of Jerusalem, the most likely approach for an enemy invasion (cf. Isa. 10.27-32; Hos. 5.8-9). According to Josh. 18.11-28, Jerusalem is included within the territory of Benjamin (cf. Judg. 1.21; contrast Josh. 16.63). Lighting of hilltop signal fires is to warn all Judah of the approaching enemy. Tekoa is the hometown of the prophet Amos (Amos 1.1), located in Judah, about 20 km (12 mi) south of Jerusalem and 10 km (6 mi) south of Bethlehem. The prophet is punning here, using the verb "tik'u" which plays on the place Tekoa. Puns are especially prevalent in Jeremiah. Beth-haccerem has been identified as either the village 'Ain Karim to the west of modern Jerusalem or more likely as Ramat Raḥel on the southern edges of the city. 3-15: The enemy brings tents and sheep to prepare for a long siege and cuts down trees to prepare siegeworks for an assault (cf. Deut. 20.19-20, which forbids Israelite soldiers to cut down fruit trees to besiege a city).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Some ancient versions read "have transgressed My words for evil."

c-c Understanding yado as in Ps. 95.7. d-d Lit. "Consecrate."

6 For thus said the LORD of Hosts:
 Hew down her trees,
 And raise a siegemound against Jerusalem.
^aShe is the city destined for punishment;^a
 Only fraud is found in her midst.

7 As a well flows with water,
 So she flows with wickedness.
 Lawlessness and rapine are heard in her;
 Before Me constantly are sickness and wounds.

8 Accept rebuke, O Jerusalem,
 Lest I come to loathe you,
 Lest I make you a desolation,
 An uninhabited land.

9 Thus said the LORD of Hosts:
^bLet them glean^b over and over, as a vine,
 The remnant of Israel.
 Pass your hand again,
 Like a vintager,
 Over its branches.

10^c To whom shall I speak,
 Give warning that they may hear?
 Their ears are blocked
 And they cannot listen.
 See, the word of the LORD has become for them
 An object of scorn; they will have none of it.

11 But I am filled with the wrath of the LORD,
 I cannot hold it in.

Pour it on the infant in the street,
 And on the company of youths gathered together!
 Yes, men and women alike shall be captured,
 Elders and those of advanced years.

12 Their houses shall pass to others,
 Fields and wives as well,
 For I will stretch out My arm
 Against the inhabitants of the country
 —declares the LORD.

13 For from the smallest to the greatest,
 They are all greedy for gain;
 Priest and prophet alike,
 They all act falsely.

14 They offer healing offhand

11–15: Although the prophet warns of danger, not even the priests or prophets who are responsible for the people's welfare heed his warning; in fact, they inappropriately reassure the people.

a-a Emendation yields "She is the city of falseness."

b-b Emendation yields "Glean" (singular).

c The prophet speaks.

For the wounds of My people,
Saying, "All is well, all is well,"
When nothing is well.

15 They have acted shamefully;
They have done abhorrent things—
Yet they do not feel shame,
And they cannot be made to blush.
Assuredly, they shall fall among the falling,
They shall stumble at the time when I punish them
—said the LORD.

16 Thus said the LORD:
Stand by the roads and consider,
Inquire about ancient paths:
Which is the road to happiness?
Travel it, and find tranquility for yourselves.
But they said, "We will not."
17 And I raised up watchmen^a for you:
"Hearken to the sound of the horn!"
But they said, "We will not."
18 Hear well, O nations,
And know, ^bO community, what is in store for them.^b
19 Hear, O earth!
I am going to bring disaster upon this people,
The outcome of their own schemes;
For they would not hearken to My words,
And they rejected My Instruction.
20 What need have I of frankincense
That comes from Sheba,
Or fragrant cane from a distant land?
Your burnt offerings are not acceptable
And your sacrifices are not pleasing to Me.
21 Assuredly, thus said the LORD:
I shall put before this people stumbling blocks
Over which they shall stumble—
Fathers and children alike,
Neighbor and friend shall perish.

22 Thus said the LORD:
See, a people comes from the northland,
A great nation is roused
From the remotest parts of the earth.
23 They grasp the bow and javelin;
They are cruel, they show no mercy;
The sound of them is like the roaring sea.

16-21: Although the leaders could have chosen the ancient paths or "torah," they did not and therefore bring punishment upon themselves. 17: The watchmen are the prophets who were to guide the people. This image is developed in detail in Ezek. 3.17-21. 19: The prophet continues to draw upon the Isaian tradition; the statement that they rejected My Instruction, Heb "torah," echoes Isa. 5.24 (cf. Isa. 1.10). He charges that they were more concerned with their own wealth. 20: Sheba, identified with modern Yemen in southwest Arabia, was a well-known source for frankincense, other spices, gold, and precious stones (1 Kings ch 10; Isa. 60.6; Ezek. 27.25). Again, the prophet's statements concerning God's rejection of sacrifices recalls Isa. 1.10-17. 21: As in Isa. 8.14, God will place stumbling blocks before the people (cf. Isa. 3.8). 22-26: The description of the approaching northern enemy from the remotest parts of the earth with weapons in hand and roaring like the sea once again recalls the description of the Assyrians in Isa. 5.26-30.

^a I.e., prophets. ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

They ride upon horses,
Accoutered like a man for battle,
Against you, O Fair Zion!

24 "We have heard the report of them,
Our hands fail;
Pain seizes us,
Agony like a woman in childbirth.
25 Do not go out into the country,
Do not walk the roads!
For the sword of the enemy is there,
Terror on every side."

26 ^aMy poor people,^a
Put on sackcloth
And strew dust on yourselves!
Mourn, as for an only child;
Wail bitterly,
For suddenly the destroyer
Is coming upon us.

27 I have made you an assayer of My people
—A refiner^b—
You are to note and assay their ways.
28 They are copper and iron:
They are all stubbornly defiant;
They ^cdeal basely^c
All of them act corruptly.
29 ^dThe bellows puff;
The lead is consumed by fire.^d
Yet the smelter smelts to no purpose—
The dross^b is not separated out.
30 They are called "rejected silver,"
For the LORD has rejected them.

7 The word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD:
²Stand at the gate of the House of the LORD, and there proclaim this word: Hear the word of the LORD, all you of Judah who enter these gates to worship the LORD!

a-a Lit. "Daughter that is My people"; so, frequently, in poetry. See 4.11 and note.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c-c See note at Lev. 19.16.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

24: The image of a woman in childbirth also appears in Isa. 13.8; 26.17–18. 25: The reference to terror on every side is characteristic of Jeremiah (20.3, 10; 46.5; 49.29). 27–30: The portrayal of the enemy as an assayer of My people—a refiner who smelts and does not separate out the dross likewise draws on Isaiah's metaphorical portrayal of the purification of Jerusalem as a smelting process (Isa. 1.21–26). Throughout this passage, Jeremiah draws an analogy between the situation of his own time and that of the prophet Isaiah in an effort to warn the people of approaching danger and convince them to change their course of action. The way in which Jeremiah reuses Isaiah's oracles is behind the (chronologically impossible) suggestion that Isaiah was Jeremiah's teacher (Lam. Rab. 1.18).

7.1–10.25: Jeremiah's Temple sermon. A narrative account of the prophet's delivery of (a shortened version of) this sermon in the Temple and his subsequent trial for sedition appears in ch. 26. The prophetic word formula introduces the entire section. According to 26.1, Jeremiah delivered this sermon at the beginning of King Jehoiakim's reign, which would have begun some three months after his father Josiah's death (609 BCE) at the hands of the Egyptian Pharaoh Neco. Although the people of Judah placed Josiah's son, Jehoahaz, on the throne following his father's death, 2 Kings 23.28–37 reports that Neco deposed Jehoahaz and replaced him with his brother Jehoiakim, who would presumably be more receptive to Egyptian control. Jeremiah's sermon questions the protective role of the Temple in Jerusalem, the centerpiece of Josiah's program of religious reform and national restoration. It therefore seems likely that the prophet deemed Josiah's reform a failure and likened Judah to northern Israel in failing to observe divine Torah. In the prophet's view, Judah would suffer punishment like that of the Northern Kingdom of Israel unless it returned to the observance of Torah. Jer. 7.21–8.3; 9.22–23 constitutes the haftarah for the parashah of Tsav (Lev. 6.1–8.36), which outlines procedures for the presentation of sacrifices in the Temple as well as the ordination of priests. Jeremiah is understood as complementing the Torah reading by noting that ritual action alone is insufficient for assuring the divine Presence at the Temple, since he here speaks to the responsibility to observe both the moral and the rit-

³Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: Mend your ways and your actions, and I will ^alet you dwell^a in this place. ⁴Don't put your trust in illusions and say, "The Temple of the LORD, the Temple of the LORD, the Temple of the LORD are these [buildings]." ⁵No, if you really mend your ways and your actions; if you execute justice between one man and another; ⁶if you do not oppress the stranger, the orphan, and the widow; if you do not shed the blood of the innocent in this place; if you do not follow other gods, to your own hurt—⁷then only will I ^alet you dwell^a in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers for all time. ⁸See, you are relying on illusions that are of no avail. ⁹Will you steal and murder and commit adultery and swear falsely, and sacrifice to Baal, and follow other gods whom you have not experienced,^b ¹⁰and then come and stand before Me in this House which bears My name and say, "We are safe"?—[Safe] to do all these abhorrent things! ¹¹Do you consider this House, which bears My name, to be a den of thieves? As for Me, I have been watching—declares the LORD.

¹²Just go to My place at Shiloh, where I had established My name formerly, and see what I did to it because of the wickedness of My people Israel. ¹³And now, because you do all these things—declares the LORD—and though I spoke to you persistently, you would not listen; and though I called to you, you would not respond—¹⁴therefore I will do to the House which bears My name, on which you rely, and to the place which I gave you and your fathers, just what I did to Shiloh. ¹⁵And I will cast you out of My presence as I cast out your brothers, the whole brood of Ephraim.

¹⁶As for you, do not pray for this people, do not raise a cry of prayer on their behalf, do not plead with Me; for I will not listen to you. ¹⁷Don't you see what they are doing in the towns of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem? ¹⁸The children gather sticks, the fathers build the fire, and the mothers knead dough, to make cakes for the Queen of Heaven,^c and they pour libations to other gods, to vex Me.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Change of vocalization yields "dwell with you"; so Aquila and Vulgate.

b See note at Deut. 11.28.

c I.e., the mother goddess (Ishtar, Astarte) in whose honor these cakes were baked.

ual aspects of Torah. Jer. 8.13–9.23 serves as the haftarah for the morning service on the 9th of Av, because it expresses the prophet's grief at the coming loss of the Temple.

7.1–8.3: God's instructions to Jeremiah to preach the Temple sermon. This passage is formulated as God's instructions to Jeremiah to demonstrate the divine origin of his speech. Although this passage is not labeled a "sermon," its frequent references to and quotations of Torah texts might make this label appropriate here. This then foreshadows the classical rabbinic sermon or "derashah" that was based on an exposition of biblical texts. 7.2: Jeremiah must position himself where he can speak to the crowds as they enter the Temple grounds for worship. Prophets like Jeremiah sought as large an audience as they could, in order to influence public opinion. Moreover, in this instance the Temple location is especially meaningful, since the message is about the Temple. 3–11: Jeremiah calls upon the people to mend their ways so that God will allow them to dwell in the land. The prophet does not simply announce punishment, but attempts to persuade the people to observe God's will. This presupposes the so-called "blessings and curses" that appear in Deut. chs 28–30 to encourage the people to observe Torah. Jeremiah clearly attacks the popular notion that the Temple alone will guarantee the security of the nation. Such an idea reflects God's eternal promise of a dynasty for King David in Jerusalem (2 Sam. ch 7) that is symbolized by the presence of God's Temple in the city (see 1 Kings ch 8). Jeremiah contends that moral action is also necessary, and he specifically cites part of the Decalogue (see Exod. ch 20; Deut. ch 5). 12–15: Jeremiah notes that the Temple at Shiloh was destroyed long ago because the people failed to observe God's will, and the Jerusalem Temple could be destroyed for the same reason. It is unknown exactly when the Shiloh sanctuary was destroyed. 16–20: God instructs Jeremiah not to plead for the people; they must take responsibility for their own actions. This remarkable request reflects the efficacy of prophetic prayer, a common theme of the Torah narratives in reference to Moses. 18: The Queen of Heaven is most likely some form of the Mesopotamian goddess Ishtar, symbolized by the Morning Star or Venus, who represented both war

¹⁹Is it Me they are vexing?—says the LORD. It is rather themselves, to their own disgrace. ²⁰Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: My wrath and My fury will be poured out upon this place, on man and on beast, on the trees of the field and the fruit of the soil. It shall burn, with none to quench it.

²¹Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: Add your burnt offerings to your other sacrifices and eat the meat! ²²For when I freed your fathers from the land of Egypt, I did not speak with them or command them concerning burnt offerings or sacrifice. ²³But this is what I commanded them: Do My bidding, that I may be your God and you may be My people; walk only in the way that I enjoin upon you, that it may go well with you. ²⁴Yet they did not listen or give ear; they followed their own counsels, the willfulness of their evil hearts. They have gone backward, not forward, ²⁵from the day your fathers left the land of Egypt until today. And though I kept sending all My servants, the prophets, to them^a daily and persistently, ²⁶they would not listen to Me or give ear. They stiffened their necks, they acted worse than their fathers.

²⁷You shall say all these things to them, but they will not listen to you; you shall call to them, but they will not respond to you. ²⁸Then say to them: This is the nation that would not obey the LORD their God, that would not accept rebuke. Faithfulness has perished, vanished from their mouths.

²⁹ Shear your locks and cast them away,
Take up a lament on the heights,
For the LORD has spurned and cast off
The brood that provoked His wrath.

³⁰For the people of Judah have done what displeases Me—declares the LORD. They have set up their abominations in the House which is called by My name, and they have defiled it. ³¹And they have built the shrines of Topheth in the Valley of Ben-hinnom to burn their sons and daughters in fire—which I never commanded, which never came to My mind.

³²Assuredly, a time is coming—declares the LORD—when men shall no longer speak of Topheth or the Valley of Ben-hinnom, but of the Valley of Slaughter; and they shall bury in Topheth until no room is left. ³³The carcasses and fertility (see also Jer. 44.15–30). 7.21–8.3: God recounts the people's stubbornness in the wilderness to show that they will not listen to Jeremiah. 7.29: Shear your locks: Shaving the head is a sign of mourning (Lev. 21.5; Mic. 1.16; cf. Jer. 16.6). 31: Topheth or the Valley of Ben-hinnom runs along the southwest borders of the biblical city of Jerusalem as it was expanded in the time of Hezekiah. It was an area known for tombs and the sacrifice of children to the pagan gods Baal and Molech (see Isa. 30.33; Jer. 19.6, 11–14; 2 Chron. 28.3; 33.6). King Josiah attempted to stop the practice (2 Kings 23.10), but it apparently continued after his death. The Heb expression, "gei hinnom," "valley of Hinnom," underlies the terms "geihinom" or "gehenna," which designates Hell in Jewish tradition (see b. Eruv. 19a; b. Tamid 32b). 32: The phrase Assuredly, a time is coming is very common in the prophets for introducing either punishment or restoration. Often tradition understands this as referring to a time in the distant future, "the end of days," but passages such as this suggest that the reference is more typically to the near future.

^a Heb. "you."

of this people shall be food for the birds of the sky and the beasts of the earth, with none to frighten them off.
 34 And I will silence in the towns of Judah and the streets of Jerusalem the sound of mirth and gladness, the voice of bridegroom and bride. For the whole land shall fall to ruin.

8 At that time—declares the LORD—the bones of the kings of Judah, of its officers, of the priests, of the prophets, and of the inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be taken out of their graves ²and exposed to the sun, the moon, and all the host of heaven which they loved and served and followed, to which they turned and bowed down. They shall not be gathered for reburial; they shall become dung upon the face of the earth. ³And death shall be preferable to life for all that are left of this wicked folk, in all the other places to which I shall banish them—declares the LORD of Hosts.

- 4 Say to them: Thus said the LORD:
 When men fall, do they not get up again?
 If they turn aside, do they not turn back?
 5 Why is this people—Jerusalem—rebellious
 With a persistent rebellion?
 They cling to deceit,
 They refuse to return.
 6 I have listened and heard:
 They do not speak honestly.
 No one regrets his wickedness
 And says, "What have I done!"
 They all persist in their wayward course
 Like a steed dashing forward in the fray.
 7 Even the stork in the sky knows her seasons,
 And the turtledove, swift, and crane
 Keep the time of their coming;
 But My people pay no heed
 To the law of the LORD.
 8 How can you say, "We are wise,
 And we possess the Instruction of the LORD"?
 Assuredly, for naught has the pen labored,
 For naught the scribes!
 9 The wise shall be put to shame,
 Shall be dismayed and caught;
 See, they reject the word of the LORD,
 So their wisdom amounts to nothing.
 10 Assuredly, I will give their wives to others,
 And their fields to dispossessors;

8.4–9.25: God's continued instruction and dialogue with Jeremiah. It is unlikely that this material was a part of Jeremiah's Temple sermon; it is probably placed here because it expresses similar concerns. 8.4–12: God expresses frustration over the people's behavior. 7: Even though animals, such as the stork, turtledove, swift, and crane, know their own times for proper action, God maintains that the people of Jerusalem do not. This observation (see Isa. 1.3) involves the traditions of wisdom literature, in which observation of the natural order of the world or the conduct of its creatures also serves as a source for the revelation of divine wisdom (see Prov. 8.22–36; 30.24–28; cf. Isa. 28.23–29). Indeed, wise men and women are mentioned frequently in the following unit, and much of the larger unit is addressed to this group. Biblical wisdom is typically equated with practical, rather than religious, knowledge, though in later Jewish tradition, wisdom is equated with Torah (see intro. to Proverbs).

For from the smallest to the greatest,
They are all greedy for gain;
Priest and prophet alike,
They all act falsely.

11 They offer healing offhand
For the wounds of My poor people,
Saying, "All is well, all is well,"
When nothing is well.
12 They have acted shamefully;
They have done abhorrent things—
Yet they do not feel shame,
They cannot be made to blush.
Assuredly, they shall fall among the falling,
They shall stumble at the time of their doom
—said the LORD.

13 ^aI will make an end of them^a
—declares the LORD:

No grapes left on the vine,
No figs on the fig tree,
The leaves all withered;

14 ^bWhatever I have given them is gone.^b
Why are we sitting by?
Let us gather into the fortified cities
And meet our doom there.
For the LORD our God has doomed us,
He has made us drink a bitter draft,
Because we sinned against the LORD.
15 We hoped for good fortune, but no happiness came;
For a time of relief—instead there is terror!
16 The snorting of their horses was heard from Dan;
At the loud neighing of their steeds
The whole land quaked.
They came and devoured the land and what was in it,
The towns and those who dwelt in them.

17 Lo, I will send serpents against you,
Adders that cannot be charmed,
And they shall bite you —declares the LORD.

18 ^bWhen in grief I would seek comfort,^b
My heart is sick within me.

13–17: God informs Jeremiah of the decision to "gather" the people, translated here as make an end of them. See Zeph. 1.2 for a similar Heb phrase. The verb "'asaf," "to gather," is often employed for the gathering of a harvest (Exod. 23.20, 16; Lev. 23.39; Deut. 16.13). Compare the name for the festival of Sukkot, "Iḥag ha'asif," "the festival of the harvest" (lit. ingathering). Jeremiah takes the positive image of harvest and reverses it as a metaphor for the punishment of the people, who do not fully appreciate their obligations to God for what He has done for them (cf. Deut. 26.1–15). 18–23: The prophet laments over the fate of his people. In this remarkable first-person passage (see 4.19 n.) the prophet imagines the people already in exile (v. 19) and creates a complex dialogue.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; change of vocalization yields "Their fruit harvest has been gathered in."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

19^a "Is not the LORD in Zion?
Is not her King within her?
Why then did they anger Me with their images,
With alien futilities?"

Hark! The outcry of my poor people
From the land far and wide:

20 "Harvest is past,
Summer is gone,
But we have not been saved."
21 Because my people is shattered I am shattered;
I am dejected, seized by desolation.
22 Is there no balm in Gilead?
Can no physician be found?
Why has healing not yet
Come to my poor people?
23 Oh, that my head were water,
My eyes a fount of tears!
Then would I weep day and night
For the slain of my poor people.

9 Oh, to be in the desert,
At an encampment for wayfarers!
Oh, to leave my people,
To go away from them—
For they are all adulterers,
A band of rogues.

2 They bend their tongues like bows;
They are valorous in the land
For treachery, not for honesty;
They advance from evil to evil.
And they do not heed Me

—declares the LORD.

3 Beware, every man of his friend!
Trust not even a brother!
For every brother takes advantage,
Every friend ^bis base in his dealings.^b
4 One man cheats the other,
They will not speak truth;
They have trained their tongues to speak falsely;
^cThey wear themselves out working iniquity.

5 You dwell in the midst of deceit.
In their deceit,^c they refuse to heed Me
—declares the LORD.

22: Gilead is the part of Israel located to the east of the Jordan River, south of Bashan (Golan Heights) and north of Moab. It was apparently a site where balm and other healing substances could be extracted from local plants (see Gen. 37.25).
9.1-10: God expresses a desire to abandon Israel out in the desert, which recalls earlier traditions in which God proposed to destroy Israel in the wilderness and make a great people out of Moses (see Exod. chs 32-34; Num. ch 14). In both cases, Moses persuaded God to desist from destroying Israel. Instead, God determines to destroy Jerusalem and Judah (cf. Mic. 3.12). This unit begins with the same phrase "oh" (Heb "mi yiten") that concluded the previous unit. This type of editing, where units are combined based on common phrases ("catchwords"), is frequent in the prophets.

^a Here God is speaking. ^{b-b} See note at Lev. 19.16.

^{c-c} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

6 Assuredly, thus said the LORD of Hosts:
 Lo, I shall smelt and assay them—
 *For what else can I do because of My poor people?^a

7 Their tongue is a sharpened arrow,
 They use their mouths to deceive.
 One speaks to his fellow in friendship,
 But lays an ambush for him in his heart.
 8 Shall I not punish them for such deeds?
 —says the LORD—
 Shall I not bring retribution
 On such a nation as this?

9 For the mountains I take up weeping and wailing,
 For the pastures in the wilderness, a dirge.
 They are laid waste; no man passes through,
 And no sound of cattle is heard.
 Birds of the sky and beasts as well
 Have fled and are gone.

10 I will turn Jerusalem into rubble,
 Into dens for jackals;
 And I will make the towns of Judah
 A desolation without inhabitants.

11 What man is so wise
 That he understands this?
 To whom has the LORD's mouth spoken,
 So that he can explain it:
 Why is the land in ruins,
 Laid waste like a wilderness,
 With none passing through?

¹²The LORD replied: Because they forsook the Teaching I had set before them. They did not obey Me and they did not follow it, ¹³but followed their own willful heart and followed the Baalim, as their fathers had taught them. ¹⁴Assuredly, thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: I am going to feed that people wormwood and make them drink a bitter draft. ¹⁵I will scatter them among nations which they and their fathers never knew; and I will dispatch the sword after them until I have consumed them.

16 Thus said the LORD of Hosts:
 Listen!

11: Continuing the wisdom themes seen earlier in the larger unit, Jeremiah responds with perplexity over God's ways, much as Job responds to his own afflictions. 12–24: This passage reiterates that the people are to be punished for their failure to observe Torah and their continued pursuit of foreign gods, such as Baal, the Canaanite god of rain and fertility. This explanation recalls the wilderness traditions in which Israel worshipped the golden calf (Exod. ch 32) or Baal-peor (Num. ch 25). Women were known for performing rituals of mourning in the ancient world, especially since Mesopotamian mythology depicted Ishtar's descent to the underworld to bring her dead lover Tammuz (or Baal in some traditions) back to life at springtime. The image of death climbing through the windows to kill babes and young men recalls Mot, the Canaanite god of death, as well as the tradition of the slaying of the first-born in Egypt (Exod. chs 11–12).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

- Summon the dirge-singers, let them come;
Send for the skilled women, let them come.
- 17 Let them quickly start a wailing for us,
That our eyes may run with tears,
Our pupils flow with water.
- 18 For the sound of wailing
Is heard from Zion:
How we are despoiled!
How greatly we are shamed!
Ah, we must leave our land,
Abandon^a our dwellings!
- 19 Hear, O women, the word of the LORD,
Let your ears receive the word of His mouth,
And teach your daughters wailing,
And one another lamentation.
- 20 For death has climbed through our windows,
Has entered our fortresses,
To cut off babes from the streets,
Young men from the squares.
- 21 Speak thus—says the LORD:
The carcasses of men shall lie
Like dung upon the fields,
Like sheaves behind the reaper,
With none to pick them up.
- 22 Thus said the LORD:
Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom;
Let not the strong man glory in his strength;
Let not the rich man glory in his riches.
- 23 But only in this should one glory:
In his earnest devotion to Me.
For I the LORD act with kindness,
Justice, and equity in the world;
For in these I delight —declares the LORD.

24: Israel, although physically circumcised, is “uncircumcised of heart”—they are not prepared to accept God’s teachings (cf. Ezek. 44:7, 9). As in many prophetic texts, the emphasis is that physical ritual actions alone do not assure divine blessing.

²⁴Lo, days are coming—declares the LORD—when I will take note of everyone ^bcircumcised in the foreskin:^b ²⁵of Egypt, Judah, Edom, the Ammonites, Moab, and all the desert dwellers who have the hair of their temples clipped. For all these nations are uncircumcised, but all the House of Israel are ^cuncircumcised of heart.^c a Lit. “They abandoned.”

b-b Force of Heb. uncertain.

c-c I.e., their minds are blocked to God’s commandments.

10 Hear the word which the LORD has spoken to you,
O House of Israel!

2 Thus said the LORD:
Do not learn to go the way of the nations,
And do not be dismayed by portents in the sky;
Let the nations be dismayed by them!
3 For ^athe laws of the nations^a are delusions:
For it is the work of a craftsman's hands.
He cuts down a tree in the forest with an ax,
4 He adorns it with silver and gold,
He fastens it^b with nails and hammer,
So that it does not totter.
5 They are like a scarecrow in a cucumber patch,
They cannot speak.
They have to be carried,
For they cannot walk.
Be not afraid of them, for they can do no harm;
Nor is it in them to do any good.

6 O LORD, there is none like You!
You are great and Your name is great in power.
7 Who would not revere You, O King of the nations?
For that is Your due,
Since among all the wise of the nations
And among all their royalty
There is none like You.
8 But they are both dull and foolish;
c-[Their] doctrine is but delusion;^c
It is a piece of wood,
9 Silver beaten flat, that is brought from Tarshish,
And gold from Uphaz,
The work of a craftsman and the goldsmith's
hands;
Their clothing is blue and purple,
All of them are the work of skilled men.
10 But the LORD is truly God:
He is a living God,
The everlasting King.
At His wrath, the earth quakes,
And nations cannot endure His rage.

11^d Thus shall you say to them: Let the gods, who did not make heaven and earth, perish from the earth and from under these heavens.

10.1–25: God's concluding condemnation of the nations that oppress Israel. The prophet's account of the Temple sermon concludes with God's condemnation of those who oppress Israel. Although no texts from Isaiah ben Amoz are cited, this section reflects Isaian thinking in which nations are first brought by God to punish Israel and then condemned for their cruelty and failure to acknowledge God (cf. Isa. chs 5–12; 13–14). This section has many affinities with the exilic Second Isaiah (Isa. chs 40–55). 1–16: Jeremiah conveys God's satirical assessment of the idols worshipped by the nations. The parallels with Second Isaiah's polemics against idols suggest that Second Isaiah may have drawn on the Jeremian tradition (see Isa. 40.18–20; 41.6–7; 44.9–20; cf. Ps. 115.3–8). 3–4: Because idols are made by craftsmen from wood, silver, gold, nails, etc., they have no power to do either good or evil. As is typical in biblical rhetoric, the physical representations of the deities (idols) are intentionally confused, for polemical purposes, with the deities that they represent. 6: The absolute incomparability of the LORD goes beyond the statement in the Song of the Sea (Exod. 15.11): "Who is like You, O LORD, among the celestials," reflecting a movement toward more radical monotheism by this period. 9: The location of Tarshish is uncertain, though various biblical texts suggest that it was located somewhere in the Mediterranean, reachable by ship, and was far away from Israel (see 1 Kings 10.22; Isa. 23.1; Ezek. 27.25; Jonah 1.3). Uphaz is unknown (cf. Dan. 10.5). Some claim that the text should read Ophir, which was known as a source for gold (1 Kings 9.28). Royal garments were dyed blue and purple, and could be used to dress idols in antiquity. The condemnation of other gods appears also in Ps. 82 and Zeph. 2.11. 11: This v. is the only one in Jeremiah written in Aramaic; this suggests that it is a later gloss. Aramaic was becoming the a-a Emendation yields "the objects that the nations fear." b Heb. "them."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d This verse is in Aramaic.

12 He made the earth by His might,
 Established the world by His wisdom,
 And by His understanding stretched out the skies.

13 ^aWhen He makes His voice heard,^a
 There is a rumbling of water in the skies;
 He makes vapors rise from the end of the earth,
 He makes lightning for the rain,
 And brings forth wind from His treasures.

14 Every man is proved dull, without knowledge;
 Every goldsmith is put to shame because of the idol,
 For his molten image is a deceit—
 There is no breath in them.

15 They are delusion, a work of mockery;
 In their hour of doom, they shall perish.

16 Not like these is the Portion of Jacob;
 For it is He who formed all things,
 And Israel is His very own tribe:
 LORD of Hosts is His name.

17 Gather up your bundle^b from the ground,
 You who dwell under siege!

¹⁸For thus said the LORD: I will fling away the inhabitants of the land this time: I will harass them so that they shall ^cfeel it.^c

19 Woe unto me for my hurt,
 My wound is severe!
 I thought, "This is but a sickness
 And I must bear it."

20 My tents are ravaged,
 All my tent cords are broken.
 My children have gone forth from me
 And are no more;
 No one is left to stretch out my tents
 And hang my tent cloths.

21 For the shepherds^d are dull
 And did not seek the LORD;
 Therefore they have not prospered
 And all their flock is scattered.

22 Hark, a noise! It is coming,
 A great commotion out of the north,
 That the towns of Judah may be made a desolation,
 A haunt of jackals.

lingua franca of the Near Eastern world at this time, and the editor likely means to suggest that this verse may be quoted directly to non-Israelites, who would not understand Hebrew. The theme, God's role as creator, is a basic one in Second Isaiah (Isa. 40.12-31; 42.5) and in the Psalms (Ps. 29; 33; 104). 17-25: The second portion of the ch focuses on the prophet's response to God's words. 20-21: The portrayal of his ravaged tents, fleeing children, and scattered flocks contrasts with the portrayal of Mother Zion in Isa. ch 54, whose tents are stretched out to receive her returning children.

a-a Lit. "At the sound of His making."
c-c Emendation yields "have to leave."

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.
d I.e., rulers; cf. note at 2.8.

23 I know, O LORD, that man's road is not his [to choose],
That man, as he walks, cannot direct his own steps.
24 Chastise me, O LORD, but in measure;
Not in Your wrath, lest You reduce me to naught.
25 Pour out Your wrath on the nations who have not heeded You,
Upon the clans that have not invoked Your name.
For they have devoured Jacob,
Have devoured and consumed him,
And have laid desolate his homesteads.

11 The word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD:

²"Hear the terms of this covenant, and recite them to the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem! ³And say to them, Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: Cursed be the man who will not obey the terms of this covenant, ⁴which I enjoined upon your fathers when I freed them from the land of Egypt, the iron crucible, saying, 'Obey Me and observe them,' just as I command you, that you may be My people and I may be your God'—⁵in order to fulfill the oath which I swore to your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as is now the case." And I responded, "Amen, LORD."

⁶And the LORD said to me, "Proclaim all these things through the towns of Judah and the streets of Jerusalem: Hear the terms of this covenant, and perform them. ⁷For I have repeatedly and persistently warned your fathers from^b the time I brought them out of Egypt to this day, saying: Obey My commands. ⁸But they would not listen a I.e., the terms of the covenant. b Lit. "at."

23–25: The prophet concludes by acknowledging God's sovereignty and by asking for mercy and justice. 25: This v., which likely reflects the destruction of Jerusalem, appears in Ps. 79.6–7 with slightly different wording, and is likely copied from the psalm to this context. This reflects the nature of the growth of Jeremiah, and of prophetic texts in general, where the words of the original author are often supplemented for a variety of reasons by many hands. After the Christian persecution of Jews in the medieval period, this v. has been recited during the Passover Seder when the door is opened to admit the prophet Elijah. It expresses the hope for ultimate divine justice in the world.

11.1–13.27: Jeremiah's lament concerning Judah's broken covenant with God. The prophetic word formula in Jeremiah 11.1 marks the beginning of this unit, which presents a dialogue between God and Jeremiah concerning Judah's breaking of its covenant. Whereas God instructs Jeremiah to announce punishment against Judah and to perform symbolic actions to illustrate the nation's guilt, Jeremiah laments the situation and demands that God act justly. 11.1–17: Jeremiah relates how God instructed him to announce to the people of Jerusalem and Judah that they have broken the covenant made between God and their ancestors. Many interpreters speculate that this text may have been composed to call upon the people of Jerusalem and Judah to support Josiah's reform, but that it was later reworked to account for Judah's subjugation to Egypt or Babylonia in the years following Josiah's death or perhaps to explain the Babylonian exile. The centrality of the notion of "covenant" as well as much of the terminology of this prose suggest clear affinities with Deuteronomy. 2: Hear and recite are in the plural because, according to traditional interpretation, this statement is addressed to the three prophets active at this time. According to Pesikta Rabbati, the prophetess Huldah (2 Kings 22.14–20; 2 Chron. 34.22–28), a relative of Jeremiah, spoke to the women, while Jeremiah spoke to the men on the streets (see v. 6). Jeremiah's teacher, Zephaniah (Zeph. 1.1), preached in the synagogue. 3–5: The reference to the curses that will overtake those who do not obey the covenant recalls the curses directed against those who disregard God's expectations in Deut. ch 27. God's statement, that you may be My people and I may be your God, is a typical expression of the covenant relationship between God and Israel (Gen. 17.7–8; Exod. 6.7; Deut. 26.17–19; 29.12; Jer. 7.23; 31.1, 33). Jeremiah's response, Amen, LORD, echoes Israel's affirmation of the curses in Deut. ch 27. Amen, from a root meaning "true," is an exclamation meaning "surely!" that signifies the acceptance and endorsement of what has just been said. 6–8: God's instructions revert to the singular as they are now addressed only to Jeremiah. The terms (lit. "the words") of this covenant refers to laws found in the "torah" and the curses imposed if they are or give ear; they all followed the willfulness of their evil hearts. So I have brought upon them all the terms^a of this covenant, because they did not do what I commanded them to do.”

⁹The LORD said to me, “A conspiracy exists among the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem. ¹⁰They have returned to the iniquities of their fathers of old, who refused to heed My words. They, too, have followed other gods and served them. The House of Israel and the House of Judah have broken the covenant that I made with their fathers.”

¹¹Assuredly, thus said the LORD: I am going to bring upon them disaster from which they will not be able to escape. Then they will cry out to me, but I will not listen to them. ¹²And the townsmen^b of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem will go and cry out to the gods to which they sacrifice; but they will not be able to rescue them in their time of disaster. ¹³For your gods have become as many as your towns, O Judah, and you have set up as many altars to Shame^c as there are streets in Jerusalem—altars for sacrifice to Baal.

¹⁴As for you, do not pray for this people, do not raise a cry of prayer on their behalf; for I will not listen when they call to Me on account of their disaster.

¹⁵ Why should My beloved be in My House,
 “Who executes so many vile designs?
 The sacral flesh will pass away from you,
 For you exult while performing your evil deeds.”^d

¹⁶ The LORD named you
 “Verdant olive tree,
 Fair, with choice fruit.”
 But with a great roaring sound
 He has set it on fire,
 And its boughs are broken.^e

¹⁷The LORD of Hosts, who planted you, has decreed disaster for you, because of the evil wrought by the House of Israel and the House of Judah, who angered Me by sacrificing to Baal.

¹⁸ The LORD informed me, and I knew—
 Then You let me see their deeds.

not obeyed (Deut. chs 28–30). 9–13: God’s refusal to listen to the cries of the people presents theological problems, especially in light of the modern experience of the Shoah (Holocaust). The Talmud maintains that “the gates of tears are never shut” (b. Ber. 32b), but only for the truly penitent. The statement that your gods have become as many as your towns, O Judah appears also in Jer. 2.28. The word Shame (Heb “boshet”) is sometimes substituted for Baal in proper names (e.g., Ish-bosheth, the son of Saul, in 2 Sam. 2.8, but Eshbaal in 1 Chron. 8.33). 14–17: God refers to Judah as My beloved, which draws upon Isaiah’s vineyard allegory (Isa. 5.1–7). Whereas Isaiah characterizes Israel and Judah as a vineyard, the passage in Jeremiah employs the image of an olive tree. Plant and flower imagery to depict lovers is typical (see Song 4.12–16; 6.1–3; 7.11–14; Hos. 14.6–9) and builds upon the portrayal of Israel as God’s bride in 2.1–3. 14: A variant of 7.16, reflecting the editorial complexity of the book.

11.18–23: Jeremiah’s first lament. The first of the seven laments or complaints of Jeremiah (11.18–23; 12.1–6; 15.10–21; 17.14–18; 18.18–23; 20.7–13; 20.14–18), in which he complains to God concerning his own suffering for announcing divine judgment to the people. The language is typical of complaint language of the Psalms (e.g., Ps. 7) and Lamentations, but it nevertheless provides an intimate glimpse of the prophet’s own feelings. These laments, sometimes called “confessions,” typify Jeremiah, in whose book there is more biographical information than in those of all of the other prophets combined.

a I.e., the punishments prescribed for violation.

b Lit. “towns.”

c See note at 3.24.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields “Who does such vile deeds? / Can your treacheries be canceled by sacral flesh / That you exult while performing your evil deeds?”

e Emendation yields “burned.”

19 For I was like a docile lamb
 Led to the slaughter;
 I did not realize
 That it was against me
 They fashioned their plots:
 "Let us destroy the tree with its fruit,^a
 Let us cut him off from the land of the living.
 That his name be remembered no more!"

20 O LORD of Hosts, O just Judge,
 Who test the thoughts and the mind,
 Let me see Your retribution upon them,
 For I lay my case before You.

²¹ Assuredly, thus said the LORD of Hosts concerning the men of Anathoth who seek your life and say, "You must not prophesy any more in the name of the LORD, or you will die by our hand"—²² Assuredly, thus said the LORD of Hosts: "I am going to deal with them: the young men shall die by the sword, their boys and girls shall die by famine. ²³No remnant shall be left of them, for I will bring disaster on the men of Anathoth, the year of their doom."

12 You will win,^b O LORD, if I make claim against You,
 Yet I shall present charges against You:
 Why does the way of the wicked prosper?
 Why are the workers of treachery at ease?

2 You have planted them, and they have taken root,
 They spread, they even bear fruit.
 You are present in their mouths,
 But far from their thoughts.

3 Yet You, LORD, have noted and observed me;
 You have tested my heart, and found it with You.
 Drive them out like sheep to the slaughter,
 Prepare them for the day of slaying!

4 How long must the land languish,
 And the grass of all the countryside dry up?
 Must beasts and birds perish,
 Because of the evil of its inhabitants,
 Who say, "He will not look upon our future"?^c

5^d If you race with the foot-runners and they exhaust
 you,
 How then can you compete with horses?

19: Jeremiah portrays himself as a lamb led to slaughter, the victim of a conspiracy, a tree that is cut down. 20: He pleads directly to God as though he were in a court of law to demand that God bring those who persecute him to justice. 21–23: Although his oppressors demand that he no longer prophesy in the name of God, God as judge responds that his oppressors will die by the sword. Apparently, those who sought to kill Jeremiah are from his home town of Anathoth.

12.1–6: Jeremiah's second lament. The prophet employs legal language to charge that God has failed to do justice. 1: Jeremiah's question, Why does the way of the wicked prosper?, is also voiced in Hab. 1.13 and Job 21.7 (cf. Ps. 70; Eccl. (5.7). 2: The prophet employs a common biblical and Near Eastern metaphor of trees that grow and take root (see Ps. 1.3) to portray the wicked, in contrast to his own misfortune (see 11.16–17, 19). 5–6: God's response suggests that even greater hardships are ahead, and that Jeremiah must prepare to meet them.

^a Or "sap." ^b Lit. "be in the right." ^c Septuagint reads "ways."

^d God here replies to Jeremiah's plea in vv. 1–3.

If you are ^asecure only^a in a tranquil land,
 How will you fare in the jungle of the Jordan?
 6 For even your kinsmen and your father's house,
 Even they are treacherous toward you,
 They cry after you as a mob.
 Do not believe them
 When they speak cordially to you.

7 I have abandoned My House,
 I have deserted My possession,
 I have given over My dearly beloved
 Into the hands of her enemies.

8 My own people^b acted toward Me
 Like a lion in the forest;
 She raised her voice against Me—
 Therefore I have rejected her.

9 ^cMy own people acts toward Me
 Like a bird of prey [or] a hyena;
 Let the birds of prey surround her!^c
 Go, gather all the wild beasts,
 Bring them to devour!

10 Many shepherds have destroyed My vineyard,
 Have trampled My field,
 Have made My delightful field
 A desolate wilderness.

11 ^dThey have^d made her a desolation;
 Desolate, she pours out grief to Me.
 The whole land is laid desolate,
 But no man gives it thought.

12 Spoilers have come
 Upon all the bare heights of the wilderness.
 For a sword of the LORD devours
 From one end of the land to the other;
 No flesh is safe.

13 They have sown wheat and reaped thorns,
 They have endured pain to no avail.
 Be shamed, then, by your harvest—
 By the blazing wrath of the LORD!

¹⁴Thus said the LORD: As for My wicked neighbors who encroach on the heritage that I gave to My people Israel—I am going to uproot them from their soil, and I will uproot the House of Judah out of the midst of them. ¹⁵Then, after I have uprooted them, I will take them back into 12.7-17: God's lament over the destruction of Judah. God continues the dialogue with Jeremiah by offering a lament over the fate of Judah. My house refers to the Temple, and My possession to the nation of Judah. God continues to employ the metaphor of My dearly beloved for the people (cf. 11.15), which again draws on Isaiah's vineyard allegory (Isa. 5.1-7). God's vineyard is trampled in Isa. 5.5 (cf. Isa. 3.14) after God breaks down the protective hedges as a punishment. In the present context, God's own shepherds, i.e., the people of Jerusalem and Judah and their leaders, have trampled the vineyard themselves and left it exposed to those who would despoil it. 14-17: A concluding oracle outlines God's plans to punish the nations that border Judah as well as Judah itself. The purpose is to provide them the opportunity to swear allegiance to God, though unlike Israel, they are not expected to follow the entire Torah.

a-a Some Septuagint mss. read "not secure."

b Lit. "possession"; the land as well as the people, as is clear in v. 14.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Heb. "He has."

favor, and restore them each to his own inheritance and his own land. ¹⁶ And if they learn the ways of My people, to swear by My name—"As the LORD lives"—just as they once taught My people to swear by Baal, then they shall be "built up in the midst of" My people. ¹⁷ But if they do not give heed, I will tear out that nation, tear it out and destroy it—declares the LORD.

13 Thus the LORD said to me: "Go buy yourself a loincloth of linen, and put it around your loins, but do not dip it into water." ² So I bought the loincloth in accordance with the LORD's command, and put it about my loins. ³ And the word of the LORD came to me a second time: ⁴ "Take the loincloth which you bought, which is about your loins, and go at once to Perath^b and cover it up there in a cleft of the rock." ⁵ I went and buried it at Perath, as the LORD had commanded me. ⁶ Then, after a long time, the LORD said to me, "Go at once to Perath and take there the loincloth which I commanded you to bury there." ⁷ So I went to Perath and dug up the loincloth from the place where I had buried it; and found the loincloth ruined; it was not good for anything.

⁸ The word of the LORD came to me: ⁹ Thus said the LORD: Even so will I ruin the overweening pride of Judah and Jerusalem. ¹⁰ This wicked people who refuse to heed My bidding, who follow the willfulness of their own hearts, who follow other gods and serve them and worship them, shall become like that loincloth, which is not good for anything. ¹¹ For as the loincloth clings close to the loins of a man, so I brought close to Me the whole House of Israel and the whole House of Judah—declares the LORD—that they might be My people, for fame, and praise, and splendor. But they would not obey.

¹² And speak this word to them: Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: "Every jar should be filled with wine." And when they say to you, "Don't we know that every jar should be filled with wine?" ¹³ say to them, "Thus said the LORD: I am going to fill with drunkenness all the inhabitants of this land, and the kings who sit on the throne of tering one-third to the wind to symbolize the fate of the people at the destruction of Jerusalem (Ezek. ch 5). The actions of these classical prophets differ fundamentally from the more "magical" type of actions of the earlier prophets such as Elijah and Elisha, though in some cases, including this chapter, it is unclear if the actions are merely symbolizing what will happen, or are helping to effect the future. 1–11: Jeremiah relates God's instructions to buy a loincloth of linen. As an Elide priest, Jeremiah would dress entirely in linen, including any undergarments, as a symbol of Levitical purity and fitness to officiate in the Temple. In the priestly ordination ceremony, priests are washed and dressed in clean garments (Exod. 29.1–9; Lev. 8.1–9; cf. Zech. 3.1–5) as part of the procedure by which they are prepared for divine service at the Temple altar. 1: Because God commands him to wear the loincloth without dipping it into water, it will of course become soiled to symbolize Jerusalem's and Judah's (and Jeremiah's) impurity. The priestly ordination also requires observance of God's commandments (Zech. 3.6–10), so that Jeremiah's impurity symbolizes the people's refusal to heed God's bidding. The closeness of the loincloth to Jeremiah also draws upon the marriage metaphor used to depict the relationship between God and the people. 4: Placing the loincloth in a cleft of rock by the Perath, i.e., the Euphrates River in Mesopotamia, makes the loincloth filthy and symbolizes exile to Babylonia. Interpreters debate whether Jeremiah actually traveled to the Euphrates for this act or chose a location close to Jerusalem with a similar name. 12–14: God instructs Jeremiah to perform a second symbolic act in which he will fill jars of wine. This apparently mundane action suggests that God will fill the leaders of the nation with wine so that they will become drunk and act without good judgment. The result will be disaster for the nation, symbolized by the jars of wine that will be smashed a-a Or "incorporated into."

b Or "the Euphrates"; cf. "Parah," Josh. 18.23.

13.1–27: Jeremiah's symbolic acts. Prophets in the ancient world sometimes performed symbolic actions to dramatize their messages. Zedekiah son of Chenaanah employed iron horns to demonstrate that Ahab and Jehoshaphat would defeat the Arameans (1 Kings ch 22). Isaiah walked about naked and barefoot to symbolize the Assyrian defeat of the Egyptians at Ashdod (Isa. ch 20). Ezekiel cut off his hair, burning one-third, cutting one-third with a sword, and scat-

David, and the priests and the prophets, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem. ¹⁴ And I will smash them one against the other, parents and children alike—declares the LORD; no pity, compassion, or mercy will stop Me from destroying them.”

- ¹⁵ Attend and give ear; be not haughty,
For the LORD has spoken.
- ¹⁶ Give honor to the LORD your God
Before He brings darkness,
Before your feet stumble
On the mountains in shadow—
When you hope for light,
And it is turned to darkness
And becomes deep gloom.
- ¹⁷ For if you will not give heed,
My inmost self must weep,
Because of your arrogance;
My eye must stream and flow
With copious tears,
Because the flock of the LORD
Is taken captive.
- ¹⁸ Say to the king and the queen mother, “Sit in a lowly spot;
For your diadems are abased,
Your glorious crowns.”
- ¹⁹ The cities of the Negeb are shut,
There is no one to open them;
*Judah is exiled completely,
All of it exiled.*
- ²⁰ Raise your eyes and behold
Those who come from the north:
Where are the sheep entrusted to you,
The flock you took pride in?
- ²¹ ^bWhat will you say when they appoint as your heads
Those among you whom you trained to be tame?^b
Shall not pangs seize you
Like a woman in childbirth?
And when you ask yourself,
“Why have these things befallen me?”
It is because of your great iniquity
That your skirts are lifted up,
Your limbs exposed.
- ²²

against each other and destroyed. 15–27: The meaning of the symbolic actions is further clarified by the following oracles. 15–17: The first takes up the images of light and darkness found in Isaiah’s oracle concerning the darkness that will overtake the land prior to the emergence of the righteous Davidic monarch (Isa. 8.16–9.6). Isaiah had stated that he would wait for God who hides the divine face from Israel until the people walking in darkness see a great light (Isa. 8.17; 9.1). According to Jeremiah, the time of darkness and punishment has arrived in his own time. The prophet weeps because the time of the righteous Davidic monarch has not yet come. 18–22: Instead, the king and queen mother are humbled, their crowns and diadems abased, and Judah is exiled or annexed by an alien people from the north. Notably, Isa. ch 28 points to the proud crowns worn by the drunkards of Ephraim. Jeremiah’s symbolic actions pertaining to exile and drunkenness indicate that the judgment announced for Israel in Isa. ch 28 has now come upon Judah. 19: A string of fortresses was built in the Negev desert in the southern part of Judah during the 7th century BCE, indicating that it had become a major Judean population and trade center. 21: Jeremiah returns to the marriage metaphor and the symbol of the loincloth close to God, portraying Judah’s pain like that of a woman in childbirth.

a-a I.e., most of Judah has been annexed by an alien people.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

23 Can the Cushite change his skin,
Or the leopard his spots?
Just as much can you do good,
Who are practiced in doing evil!
24 So I will scatter you^a like straw that flies
Before the desert wind.
25 This shall be your lot,
Your measured portion from Me
—declares the LORD.
Because you forgot Me
And trusted in falsehood,
26 I in turn will lift your skirts over your face
And your shame shall be seen.
27 I behold your adulteries,
Your lustful neighing,
Your unbridled depravity, your vile acts
On the hills of the countryside.
Woe to you, O Jerusalem,
Who will not be clean!
How much longer shall it be?

14 The word of the LORD which came to Jeremiah concerning the droughts.

2 Judah is in mourning,
Her settlements languish.
Men are bowed to the ground,
And the outcry of Jerusalem rises.
3 Their nobles sent their servants for water;
They came to the cisterns, they found no water.
They returned, their vessels empty.
They are shamed and humiliated,
They cover their heads.
4 ^bBecause of the ground there is dismay,^b
For there has been no rain on the earth.
The plowmen are shamed,
They cover their heads.
5 Even the hind in the field
Forsakes her new-born fawn,
Because there is no grass.
6 And the wild asses stand on the bare heights,
Snuffing the air like jackals;
Their eyes pine,
Because there is no herbage.

23–27: By asking rhetorically whether the Cushite can change his skin or a leopard his spots, he suggests that Judah never changes. Judah, who lifted her skirts in wantonness, will have her skirts lifted in order to shame her.

14.1–17.27: The great drought and Judah's coming punishment. The prophetic word formula introduces a new section that begins with an oracle concerning drought in Judah. It continues by developing various nuances of suffering due to drought, such as the (false) prophets who claim no calamity is forthcoming, the coming plague, sword, famine, and captivity, Jeremiah's own celibacy, and the parched desert in which Judah will dwell.

14.1–22: The great drought. Judah apparently suffered a great drought that Jeremiah understood to symbolize divine judgment against the nation. Throughout the Bible, the LORD was portrayed as a God who controlled the cosmos and thus would bring rain to the people each year so that they would be able to grow crops and raise cattle to provide themselves with food (see, e.g., Deut. 11.13–17; 28.1–14; 1 Kings 17.1). In an ancient subsistence economy based upon agriculture, a drought frequently meant starvation for many (cf. 1 Kings chs 17–18). This was especially so in Israel, where rain was seasonal, falling in the fall and winter only. In later Judaism, various rites were performed to assure that rain would fall during the rainy season (m. Sukkah 4.9–10; cf. b. Sukkah 53a; m. Ta'an. 1.1–7). The oracle notes the fasting of the people, which begins in rabbinic tradition on the 17th of Marḥeshvan (typically in November) if no rain has fallen by then (m. Ta'an. 1.4–7).

^a Heb. "them."

^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

7 Though our iniquities testify against us,
Act, O LORD, for the sake of Your name;
Though our rebellions are many
And we have sinned against You.

8 O Hope of Israel,
Its deliverer in time of trouble,
Why are You like a stranger in the land,
Like a traveler who stops only for the night?

9 Why are You like a man who is stunned,
Like a warrior who cannot give victory?
Yet You are in our midst, O LORD,
And Your name is attached to us—
Do not forsake us!

¹⁰Thus said the LORD concerning this people: "Truly, they love to stray, they have not restrained their feet; so the LORD has no pleasure in them. Now He will recall their iniquity and punish their sin."

¹¹And the LORD said to me, "Do not pray for the benefit of this people. ¹²When they fast, I will not listen to their outcry; and when they present burnt offering and meal offering, I will not accept them. I will exterminate them by war, famine, and disease."

¹³I said, "Ah, Lord God! The prophets are saying to them, 'You shall not see the sword, famine shall not come upon you, but I will give you unfailing security in this place.'"

¹⁴The LORD replied: It is a lie that the prophets utter in My name. I have not sent them or commanded them. I have not spoken to them. A lying vision, an empty divination, the deceit of their own contriving—that is what they prophesy to you! ¹⁵Assuredly, thus said the LORD concerning the prophets who prophesy in My name though I have not sent them, and who say, "Sword and famine shall not befall this land"; those very prophets shall perish by sword and famine. ¹⁶And the people to whom they prophesy shall be left lying in the streets of Jerusalem because of the famine and the sword, with none to bury them—they, their wives, their sons, and their daughters. I will pour out upon them [the requital of] their wickedness.

¹⁷ And do you speak to them thus:
Let my eyes run with tears,
Day and night let them not cease,
For "my hapless people" has suffered

11-12: These vv. suggest that prophetic prayer would be efficacious, but the ritual actions of the people are not effective unless they are accompanied by changed behaviors—a typical prophetic message. 13-22: Jeremiah challenges the prophets who promise security to the people, just as he challenged the belief that the presence of the Temple in Jerusalem would protect the nation (7.1-8.3). Jeremiah frequently cites the prophet Isaiah, who represents the Davidic tradition (see esp. Isa. 7.1-17, esp. v. 9b) that promises God's protection of Zion (see Isa. chs 36-37). Many in Jeremiah's time would have read Isaiah's prophecies as signs of divine protection since the Assyrian oppressors had fallen. Jeremiah condemns such hopes as false prophecies (see chs 23; 27-28) as the time of punishment envisioned by Isaiah was about to be realized in Jeremiah's own time. Deut. 18.9-22 cautions against false prophets, i.e., prophets who speak in God's name but whose words do not come to pass. For Jeremiah, those who spoke of security for the nation, whether based on Isaiah or their own observations, were false prophets. The predicted death of these prophets (v. 15) follows the legislation of Deut. 18.20, and the story in Jer. 28.17. The book of Jeremiah as a whole suggests that Jeremiah was prophesying in an atmosphere where many prophets suggested that the Babylonians would not conquer Jerusalem and destroy the Temple. This explains the unpopularity of Jeremiah in his period.

a-a Lit. "the maiden daughter, My people."

- 18 A grievous injury, a very painful wound.
If I go out to the country—
Lo, the slain of the sword.
If I enter the city—
Lo, ^athose who are sick with ^afamine.
Both priest and prophet roam ^bthe land,
They know not where.
- 19 Have You, then, rejected Judah?
Have You spurned Zion?
Why have You smitten us
So that there is no cure?
Why do we hope for happiness,
But find no good;
For a time of healing,
And meet terror instead?
- 20 We acknowledge our wickedness, O LORD—
The iniquity of our fathers—
For we have sinned against You.
- 21 For Your name's sake, do not disown us;
Do not dishonor Your glorious throne.
Remember, do not annul Your covenant with us.
- 22 Can any of the false gods of the nations give rain?
Can the skies of themselves give showers?
Only You can, O LORD our God!
So we hope in You,
For only You made all these things.

15 The LORD said to me, “Even if Moses and Samuel were to ^cintercede with Me,^c I would not be won over to that people. Dismiss them from My presence, and let them go forth! ²And if they ask you, “To what shall we go forth?” answer them, “Thus said the LORD:

Those destined for the plague, to the plague;
Those destined for the sword, to the sword;
Those destined for famine, to famine;
Those destined for captivity, to captivity.

³And I will appoint over them four kinds^b [of punishment]—declares the LORD—the sword to slay, the dogs to drag, the birds of the sky, and the beasts of the earth to devour and destroy. ⁴I will make them a horror to all the kingdoms of the earth, on account of King Manasseh son of Hezekiah of Judah, and of what he did in Jerusalem.’”

- 5 But who will pity you, O Jerusalem,
Who will console you?

15.1–21: Jeremiah's lament over Jerusalem's inevitable punishment. The theme of Jerusalem's punishment continues, and Jeremiah laments his task and the city's fate. 1–9: Jerusalem's punishment is inevitable; not even Moses and Samuel, the great earlier prophetic intercessors, could convince God to reverse the decision. 1: The mention of Moses and Samuel indicates Jeremiah's Elide background, as Samuel was raised in the Shiloh sanctuary where Eli served as high priest (1 Sam. chs 1–4). Insofar as both figures were revered prophets, their mention here confirms God's resolve to punish the city. 2–3: The four punishments—plague, sword, famine, and captivity—represent a comprehensive catalogue of punishments not unlike those mentioned in Ezek. ch 5. Even animals participate in the judgment. 4: By making them a horror (“za'avah”) to all the kingdoms of the earth, God cites the curses of Deut. 28.25. This v. follows the tradition of the book of Kings that King Manasseh of Judah was so evil that God decided to destroy Jerusalem because of him (2 Kings 21.1–18; 23.26–27; 24.3–4).

a-a Lit. “the sicknesses of.” b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.
c-c Lit. “stand before Me,” as Jeremiah is doing now; cf. 18.20.

Who will turn aside to inquire
 About your welfare?
 6 You cast Me off —declares the LORD—
 You go ever backward.
 So I have stretched out My hand to destroy you;
 I cannot relent.
 7 I will scatter them as with a winnowing fork
 Through the settlements of the earth.
 I will bereave, I will destroy My people,
 For they would not turn back from their ways.
 8 Their widows shall be more numerous
 Than the sands of the seas.
 I will bring against them—
^aYoung men and mothers together^a—
 A destroyer at noonday.
 I will bring down suddenly upon them
 Alarm^b and terror.
 9 She who bore seven is forlorn,
 Utterly disconsolate;
 Her sun has set while it is still day,
 She is shamed and humiliated.
 The remnant of them I will deliver to the sword,
 To the power of their enemies
 —declares the LORD.
 10 Woe is me, my mother, that you ever bore me—
 A man of conflict and strife with all the land!
 I have not lent,
 And I have not borrowed;
 Yet everyone curses me.
 11 The LORD said:
^aSurely, a mere remnant of you
 Will I spare for a better fate!^a
 By the enemy ^cfrom the north^c
 In a time of distress and a time of disaster,
 Surely, I will have you struck down!
 12 ^dCan iron break iron and bronze?^d
 13 ^aI will hand over your wealth and your treasures
 As a spoil, free of charge,
 Because of all your sins throughout your territory.
 14 And I will bring your enemies
 By way of a land you have not known.^a
 For a fire has flared in My wrath,
 It blazes against you.

6: The formula, I have stretched out My hand to destroy you, draws on the traditions of the Exodus plague tradition (Exod. 9.22, 23; 10.12, 13, 21, 22; etc.) and Isaiah (Isa. 5.25; 9.11, 16, 20; 10.4; 14.27).
8: The statement that their widows shall be more numerous than the sands of the seas is an ironic reference to God's promise of many descendants to Abraham (Gen. 22.17) and Jacob (Gen. 32.13; cf. 1 Kings 4.20; Isa. 10.22; Hos. 2.1). The image of the forlorn mother who loses her sons draws upon Isa. 3.25–4.1. The theme is later developed in 2 Macc. ch 7 in relation to the martyrs of the Maccabean period. 10–21: Jeremiah's third lament takes the form of the prophet's dialogue with God. Upon hearing God's decision, Jeremiah mourns his own birth, an idea expanded in a later text (20.14–18; cf. Job 3.11–19). 11–14: God responds by claiming that a remnant will survive, a central prophetic idea that is especially prominent in Isaiah (cf. Isa. 4.2–6; 6.1–13; 7.1–9; 10.20–26; 37.30–32).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Moved up from v. 12 for clarity.

d-d Emendation yields "He shall shatter iron—iron and bronze!"

- 15 O LORD, you know—
Remember me and take thought of me,
Avenge me on those who persecute me;
Do not yield to Your patience,
^aDo not let me perish!^a
Consider how I have borne insult
On Your account.
- 16 When Your words were offered, I devoured them;
Your word brought me the delight and joy
Of knowing that Your name is attached to me,
O LORD, God of Hosts.
- 17 I have not sat in the company of revelers
And made merry!
I have sat lonely because of Your hand upon me,
For You have filled me with gloom.
- 18 Why must my pain be endless,
My wound incurable,
Resistant to healing?
You have been to me like a spring that fails,
Like waters that cannot be relied on.
- 19 Assuredly, thus said the LORD:
If you turn back, I shall take you back
And you shall stand before Me;
If you produce what is noble
Out of the worthless,
You shall be My spokesman.
They shall come back to you,
Not you to them.
- 20 Against this people I will make you
As a fortified wall of bronze:
They will attack you,
But they shall not overcome you,
For I am with you to deliver and save you
—declares the LORD.
- 21 I will save you from the hands of the wicked
And rescue you from the clutches of the violent.

16 The word of the LORD came to me:
²You are not to marry and not to have sons and daughters in this place. ³For thus said the LORD concerning any sons and daughters that may be born in this place, and concerning the mothers who bear them, and concerning the fathers who beget them in this land: ⁴They shall die gruesome deaths. They shall not be lamented or buried; they shall be like dung on the surface of the ground. They

15–18: Jeremiah recounts his suffering and anguish to God as his own life becomes a model of Jerusalem's and Judah's suffering. He metaphorically devoured God's words just as Ezekiel would later eat the scroll with God's words to become a prophet (Ezek. 3.1–11). 19–21: God's response further draws the parallel in a measure-for-measure fashion between Jeremiah and Jerusalem/Judah, i.e., if he turns back (repents), God will take him back. V. 19 is somewhat unclear, but the phrase I shall take you back And you shall stand before Me seems to suggest that Jeremiah at some point was stripped of his prophetic status, perhaps because he protested too strongly against God, siding with the people. V. 20, which reflects the language of 1.18–19, may then be viewed as a recommissioning of Jeremiah as a prophet.

16.1–17.27: Jeremiah's celibacy as a model for Judah's punishment by drought. Jeremiah's failure to produce children serves as a model for Judah's inability to sustain life due to the drought that punishes the nation. 16.1–19: God's instructions to Jeremiah not to marry or have children represents a reversal of the marriage motif that frequently portrays the relationship between God, the husband, and Israel, the bride (Hos. chs 1–3; Jer. ch 2; Zeph. 3.14–20; Isa. chs 49–54; Ezek. ch 16). According to rabbinic tradition, the command to “be fertile and increase, fill the earth and master it” (Gen. 1.28) is the first of the 613 commandments that all Jewish men are obliged to fulfill (b. Mak. 23b).

a-a Lit. “Do not take me away.”

shall be consumed by the sword and by famine, and their corpses shall be food for the birds of the sky and the beasts of the earth.

5 For thus said the LORD:
Do not enter a house of mourning,^a
Do not go to lament and to condole with them;
For I have withdrawn My favor from that people
—declares the LORD—
My kindness and compassion.
6 Great and small alike shall die in this land,
They shall not be buried; men shall not lament
them,
Nor gash and tonsure themselves for them.
7 They shall not break bread^b for a mourner^c
To comfort him for a bereavement,
Nor offer one a cup of consolation
For the loss of his father or mother.
8 Nor shall you enter a house of feasting,
To sit down with them to eat and drink.

⁹For thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: I am going to banish from this place, in your days and before your eyes, the sound of mirth and gladness, the voice of bridegroom and bride.

¹⁰And when you announce all these things to that people, and they ask you, "Why has the LORD decreed upon us all this fearful evil? What is the iniquity and what the sin that we have committed against the LORD our God?"
¹¹say to them, "Because your fathers deserted Me—declares the LORD—and followed other gods and served them and worshiped them; they deserted Me and did not keep My Instruction. ¹²And you have acted worse than your fathers, every one of you following the willfulness of his evil heart and paying no heed to Me. ¹³Therefore I will hurl you out of this land to a land that neither you nor your fathers have known, and there you will serve other gods, day and night; for I will show you no mercy."

¹⁴Assuredly, a time is coming—declares the LORD—when it shall no more be said, "As the LORD lives who brought the Israelites out of the land of Egypt," ¹⁵but rather, "As the LORD lives who brought the Israelites out of the northland, and out of all the lands to which He had banished them." For I will bring them back to their land, which I gave to their fathers.

5–8: God's refusal to allow mourning further reinforces the severity of the judgment; the notion seems to be that the calamity will be so extensive, there will be no opportunity for individual mourning.

5: The reference to a house of mourning ("bet marzeah") refers to Israel's adoption of a pagan ritual of mourning coupled with feasting and drinking on behalf of the dead (cf. Isa. ch 28, in which Isaiah satirizes such practice). According to Mesopotamian mythology, the world mourns and the rains stop when the god Tammuz dies at the end of the rainy season in the spring. The goddess Ishtar must travel to the underworld to bring him back to life and thus restore the rains and fertility to the world. Similar traditions are known for Dumuzi and Inanna (in Sumer) and Baal and Anath (in Canaan). The ritual is known from the Ugaritic texts, and was clearly part of broader Canaanite practices which Israel adopted, and to some extent adapted. 9: The sound of mirth and gladness, the voice of bridegroom and bride: This phrase is unique to Jeremiah and serves as a refrain through the book (7.34; 25.10; 33.11). 10–15: This passage, which concludes by stating that ultimately Israel will be restored just as God redeemed Israel from Egyptian bondage, is full of language that typifies Deuteronomy.

^a Lit. "religious gathering."

^b So a few mss. Most mss. and editions read "to them." ^c Lit. "mourning."

The inheritance I have given you;
I will make you a slave to your enemies
In a land you have never known.
For you have kindled the flame of My wrath
Which shall burn for all time.

5 Thus said the LORD:
Cursed is he who trusts in man,
Who makes mere flesh his strength,
And turns his thoughts from the LORD.
6 He shall be like a bush^a in the desert,
Which does not sense the coming of good:
It is set in the scorched places of the wilderness,
In a barren land without inhabitant.
7 Blessed is he who trusts in the LORD,
Whose trust is the LORD alone.
8 He shall be like a tree planted by waters,
Sending forth its roots by a stream:
It does not sense the coming of heat,
Its leaves are ever fresh;
It has no care in a year of drought,
It does not cease to yield fruit.

9 Most devious is the heart;
It is perverse—who can fathom it?
10 I the LORD probe the heart,
Search the mind—
To repay every man according to his ways,
With the proper fruit of his deeds.

11 ^bLike a partridge hatching what she did not lay,^b
So is one who amasses wealth by unjust means;
In the middle of his life it will leave him,
And in the end he will be proved a fool.

12 O Throne of Glory exalted from of old,
Our Sacred Shrine!
13 O Hope of Israel! O LORD!
All who forsake You shall be put to shame,
Those in the land who turn from You^c
Shall be doomed^d men,
For they have forsaken the LORD,
The Fount of living waters.

5–8: A person who relies on idols is like a bush in a parched land that knows nothing, but those who trust in God are like well-watered trees that produce fruit (see Ps. 1.3). The purpose of this metaphor is to point to worship of other gods as the cause of the drought. 11: Amassing wealth dishonestly is presented here as the consequence of idolatry.

12–18: Jeremiah praises God as Israel's hope and continues the metaphor of drought by comparing God to a fountain of living waters (see 2.13). The initial statement of his fourth lament in vv. 14–18, Heal me, O LORD, and let me be healed, is rewritten in the plural as "Heal us, O LORD, and let us be healed" in the daily "Amidah" of the Prayer Book. Jeremiah appeals to God for support by pointing out how steadfastly he has resisted his enemies who challenge his prophecies.

a Or "tamarisk"; exact meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Lit. "Me."

d Lit. "inscribed"; meaning of line uncertain.

14 Heal me, O LORD, and let me be healed;
 Save me, and let me be saved;
 For You are my glory.
 15 See, they say to me:
 "Where is the prediction of the LORD?
 Let it come to pass!"
 16 But I have not ^aevaded
 Being a shepherd in your service,^a
 Nor have I longed for the fatal day.
 You know the utterances of my lips,
 They were ever before You.
 17 Do not be a cause of dismay to me;
 You are my refuge in a day of calamity.
 18 Let my persecutors be shamed,
 And let not me be shamed;
 Let them be dismayed,
 And let not me be dismayed.
 Bring on them the day of disaster,
 And shatter them with double destruction.

¹⁹Thus said the LORD to me: Go and stand in the People's Gate, by which the kings of Judah enter and by which they go forth, and in all the gates of Jerusalem, ²⁰and say to them: Hear the word of the LORD, O kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem who enter by these gates!

²¹Thus said the LORD: Guard yourselves for your own sake against carrying burdens^b on the sabbath day, and bringing them through the gates of Jerusalem. ²²Nor shall you carry out burdens from your houses on the sabbath day, or do any work, but you shall hallow the sabbath day, as I commanded your fathers. (²³But they would not listen or turn their ear; they stiffened their necks and would not pay heed or accept discipline.) ²⁴If you obey Me—declares the LORD—and do not bring in burdens through the gates of this city on the sabbath day, but hallow the sabbath day and do no work on it, ²⁵then through the gates of this city shall enter kings who sit upon the throne of David, with their officers—riding on chariots and horses, they and their officers—and the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem. And this city shall be inhabited for all time. ²⁶And people shall come from the towns of Judah and from the environs of Jerusalem, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the Shephelah, and from the hill country, and from the Negeb, bringing burnt offerings

19–27: God instructs Jeremiah to stand by the people's entrance to the Temple and announce that they should observe the Shabbat, i.e., the seventh day of rest and holy service to God which constitutes one of the fundamental signs of the covenant between God and Israel especially in the Priestly tradition (see Gen. 2.1–3; Exod. 20.8–11; 23.12; 31.12–17; 35.2–3; Lev. 23.3; Deut. 5.12–15). Although many modern interpreters consider this passage (and the emphasis on Shabbat) to be exilic or post-exilic, Shabbat observance is mentioned in preexilic prophetic texts (Amos 8.5; Isa. 1.13). It is likely, however, that the Shabbat took on new significance in the exilic period, as holy space (the destroyed Temple) was replaced with holy time. 21: The emphasis on carrying burdens is somewhat surprising. Perhaps the reference is to doing work, which was prohibited (Amos 8.5). The Torah is very general, stating that "whoever does work on it" is punished (Exod. 31.14–15). In specifying what types of work are prohibited on the Sabbath, carrying, the focus of Jeremiah, is mentioned prominently in early rabbinic texts (e.g., m. Shab. 1.1–3; 6.1–10). 26: The passage describes people coming from places surrounding Jerusalem, including Benjamin to the north, the Shephelah (low-lying hill country) to the southwest, the hill country around Jerusalem itself, and the Negeb desert to the south. The "olah," burnt offerings, the "zebah" (shelamim), sacrifices (of well-being), "minhah," meal offerings, and "levonah," frankincense, are discussed in detail in Lev. chs 1–3.

a-a Exact force of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "urged you to [bring] misfortune."

b Or "merchandise."

and sacrifices, meal offerings and frankincense, and bringing offerings of thanksgiving to the House of the LORD. ²⁷But if you do not obey My command to hallow the sabbath day and to carry in no burdens through the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath day, then I will set fire to its gates; it shall consume the fortresses of Jerusalem and it shall not be extinguished.

18 The word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD: ²"Go down to the house of a potter, and there I will impart My words to you." ³So I went down to the house of a potter, and found him working at the wheel. ^{4a}And if the vessel he was making was spoiled, as happens to clay in the potter's hands,^a he would make it into another vessel, such as the potter saw fit to make.

⁵Then the word of the LORD came to me: ⁶O House of Israel, can I not deal with you like this potter?—says the LORD. Just like clay in the hands of the potter, so are you in My hands, O House of Israel! ⁷At one moment I may decree that a nation or a kingdom shall be uprooted and pulled down and destroyed; ⁸but if that nation against which I made the decree turns back from its wickedness, I change My mind concerning the punishment I planned to bring on it. ⁹At another moment I may decree that a nation or a kingdom shall be built and planted; ¹⁰but if it does what is displeasing to Me and does not obey Me, then I change My mind concerning the good I planned to bestow upon it.

¹¹And now, say to the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem: Thus said the LORD: I am devising^b disaster for you and laying plans against you. Turn back, each of you, from your wicked ways, and mend your ways and your actions! ¹²But they will say, "It is no use. We will keep on following our own plans; each of us will act in the willfulness of his evil heart."

¹³ Assuredly, thus said the LORD:
Inquire among the nations:
Who has heard anything like this?
Maiden Israel has done
A most horrible thing.
^{14c} Does one forsake Lebanon snow
From the mountainous rocks?
Does one abandon cool water

18.1-20.18: The symbolic action of the potter and the jug. A new section that takes up Jeremiah's dialogue with God concerning the potter, the shattered jug, and the prophet's conflict with the priest Pashhur. Again, the prophet's experience prompts his lament to God.

18.1-23: Jeremiah's symbolic interpretation of the potter. 2: Potter. Heb "yotzer," is based on the verb "yatzar," "to form, fashion, create," and appears frequently in reference to God (Gen. 2.7, 8, 19; Isa. 43.1, 21; 44.21; 45.9, 11, 18; Ps 95.5; 104.26; etc.). 4: God's statement draws an analogy with the work of the potter, i.e., if God makes a mistake in decreeing punishment, why cannot God reverse that decree if the nation repents? The opposite is also true, i.e., if God presumes that a nation is righteous and it then demonstrates an evil character, why should it not be punished? The analogy heightens the tremendous power of God vis-à-vis Israel: God is the master craftsman while Israel is the inanimate clay! This passage serves as the basis for a medieval liturgical poem ("piyyut") recited on the high holidays, which extends the metaphor to include the stone in the hand of the stoneworker, the ax in the hand of the smith, the tiller in the hand of the sailor, and other images. 7: Uprooted, pulled down, destroyed. The same verbs are employed for punishment in Jeremiah's call narrative (1.10). 9: Be built, planted: The same verbs express restoration in 1.10. 11-17: God now turns to an announcement of the decision to punish Judah and Jerusalem despite a covenant relationship with the nation. In Heb, this picks up on the previous vv. (see v. 2 n.), since the word devising, "yotzer" (v. 11), is derived from the same root as "potter." 13-15: Rhetorical questions and analogies typical of wisdom literature are used to make the case against Maiden Israel, i.e., God's metaphorical "wife." A series of accusations then follows in which God claims a-a So some mss. and one early edition. Most mss. and editions read "And if the vessel that he was making with clay in the potter's hands was spoiled."

b The same Hebrew word as is used above for "potter."

c Meaning of verse uncertain; cf. 2.13, 17.13.

Flowing from afar?
 15 Yet My people have forgotten Me:
 They sacrifice to a delusion:
 They are made to stumble in their ways—
 The ancient paths—
 And to walk instead on byways,
 On a road not built up.
 16 So their land will become a desolation,
 An object of hissing^a for all time.
 Every passerby will be appalled
 And will shake his head.^a 17 Like the east wind, I will scatter them
 Before the enemy.
^bI will look upon their back, not their face,^b
 In their day of disaster.

¹⁸They said,^c “Come let us devise a plot against Jeremiah—for instruction shall not fail from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor oracle from the prophet. Come, let us strike him with the tongue, and we shall no longer have to listen to all those words of his.”

19 Listen to me, O LORD—
 And take note of ^dwhat my enemies say!^d
 20 Should good be repaid with evil?
 Yet they have dug a pit for me.
 Remember how I stood before You
 To plead in their behalf,
 To turn Your anger away from them!
 21 Oh, give their children over to famine,
 Mow them down by the sword.
 Let their wives be bereaved
 Of children and husbands,
 Let their men be struck down by the plague,
 And their young men be slain in battle by the sword.
 22 Let an outcry be heard from their houses
 When You bring sudden marauders against them;
 For they have dug a pit to trap me,
 And laid snares for my feet.
 23 O LORD, You know
 All their plots to kill me.
 Do not pardon their iniquity, to have been abandoned by Israel.

17: The east wind expresses God’s power (e.g., at the Re[e]d Sea, Exod. 14.21; see also Exod. 10.13; Jonah 4.8; Ps. 48.8; Hos. 12.2; Isa. 27.8; Ps. 78.26). Called the “Sharav” in Heb or the “Hamsin” in Arabic, it is a dry desert wind that appears at the transitions from the dry to wet seasons and vice versa, often blowing a great deal of dust that blocks visibility and causes much damage.
18–23: Jeremiah contends that his enemies are plotting against him.
19–23: The prophet’s fifth lament. He portrays himself as one who has stood up on behalf of God and consequently suffered at the hands of his (and God’s) enemies. Whereas he once pleaded for divine mercy, he now asks for divine justice so that his enemies will suffer plagues much like the Egyptians at the time of the exodus.

a These actions were performed at the sight of ruin to ward off a like fate from the observer; cf. Lam. 2.15.

b-b Change of vocalization yields “I will show them [My] back and not [My] face.”

c Cf. 20.10.

d-d Emendation yields “my case.”

Do not blot out their guilt from Your presence.
Let them be made to stumble before You—
Act against them in Your hour of wrath!

19 Thus said the LORD: Go buy a jug of potter's ware. And [take] some of the elders of the people and the priests,² and go out to the Valley of Ben-hinnom—^a at the entrance of the Harsith Gate^a—and proclaim there the words which I will speak to you.

³Say: "Hear the word of the LORD, O kings of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem! Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: I am going to bring such disaster upon this place that the ears of all who hear about it will tingle. ⁴For they and their fathers and the kings of Judah have forsaken Me, and have made this place alien [to Me]; they have sacrificed in it to other gods whom they have not experienced,^b and they have filled this place with the blood of the innocent. ⁵They have built shrines to Baal, to put their children to the fire as burnt offerings to Baal—which I never commanded, never decreed, and which never came to My mind. ⁶Assuredly, a time is coming—declares the LORD—when this place shall no longer be called Topheth or Valley of Ben-hinnom, but Valley of Slaughter.

⁷"And I will frustrate^c the plans of Judah and Jerusalem in this place. I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, by the hand of those who seek their lives; and I will give their carcasses as food to the birds of the sky and the beasts of the earth. ⁸And I will make this city an object of horror and hissing;^d everyone who passes by it will be appalled and will hiss over all its wounds. ⁹And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall devour one another's flesh—because of the desperate straits to which they will be reduced by their enemies, who seek their life."

¹⁰Then you shall smash the jug in the sight of the men who go with you, ¹¹and say to them: "Thus said the LORD of Hosts: So will I smash this people and this city, as one smashes a potter's vessel, which can never be mended. And they shall bury in Topheth until no room is left for burying. ¹²That is what I will do to this place and its inhabitants—declares the LORD. I will make this city like Topheth: ¹³the houses of Jerusalem and the houses of the kings of Judah shall be unclean, like that place Topheth—all the houses on the roofs of which offerings were made 19.1–15: The symbolic act of the broken jug. 2: The Valley of Ben-hinnom, see 7.31 n. The Harsith Gate, "Potsherd gate," is otherwise unknown. The Targum identifies it with the "Dung Gate" (Neh. 2.13; 3.13–14; 12.31), presumably because it refers to a place where refuse is thrown outside the city. The location of the Dung Gate in biblical times is unknown, but today it stands on the south side of the Old City of Jerusalem where it provides access to the Western Wall plaza and the Temple Mount. 3–6: God's threat to bring disaster against Jerusalem resembles the threat to punish the city because of King Manasseh's actions (2 Kings 21.12). Topheth, see 7.31. Valley of Slaughter: Jeremiah's contemporary Zephaniah claimed that Jerusalem would become a place of slaughter on the day of the LORD because of the idolatry of its inhabitants (Zeph. 1.7). 7–9: I will frustrate, lit. "I will empty" ("ubakoti"), draws upon the analogy between the jug ("bakbuk") and the people. The punishments rehearse the curses of Deut. chs 28–30. 10–13: God instructs Jeremiah to smash the jug in front of the elders and priests who accompanied him as witnesses. His action symbolizes God's intention to smash or destroy the city of Jerusalem so that it becomes an unclean place of destruction like Topheth. 14–15: Jeremiah returned to the Temple to announce his deed, so that it would be publicly known.

a-a Others "by way of the Potsherd Gate"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b See note at Deut. 11.28.

c Lit. "empty," Heb. u-baqqothi, a play on baqbuq, "jug" in v. 1.

d See note at 18.16.

to the whole host of heaven and libations were poured out to other gods.”

¹⁴When Jeremiah returned from Topheth, where the LORD had sent him to prophesy, he stood in the court of the House of the LORD and said to all the people: ¹⁵“Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: I am going to bring upon this city and upon all its villages all the disaster which I have decreed against it, for they have stiffened their necks and refused to heed My words.”

20 Pashhur son of Immer, the priest who was chief officer of the House of the LORD, heard Jeremiah prophesy these things. ²Pashhur thereupon had Jeremiah flogged and put in the cell^a at the Upper Benjamin Gate in the House of the LORD. ³The next day, Pashhur released Jeremiah from the cell.

But Jeremiah said to him, “The LORD has named you not Pashhur, but Magor-missabib.^b ⁴For thus said the LORD: I am going to deliver you and all your friends over to terror: they will fall by the sword of their enemies while you look on. I will deliver all Judah into the hands of the king of Babylon; he will exile them to Babylon or put them to the sword. ⁵And I will deliver all the wealth, all the riches, and all the prized possessions of this city, and I will also deliver all the treasures of the kings of Judah into the hands of their enemies: they shall seize them as plunder and carry them off to Babylon. ⁶As for you, Pashhur, and all who live in your house, you shall go into captivity. You shall come to Babylon; there you shall die and there you shall be buried, and so shall all your friends to whom you prophesied falsely.”

⁷ You enticed me, O LORD, and I was enticed;
You overpowered me and You prevailed.
I have become a constant laughingstock,
Everyone jeers at me.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b I.e., “Terror all around”; cf. v. 10.

20.1–18: Jeremiah’s persecution and further laments. A narrative concerning Jeremiah’s persecution in the Temple introduces the prophet’s final laments. The third-person narrative form contrasts with the first-person autobiographical accounts of the prophet’s actions. It corresponds to the editorial framework of the book, particularly the prophetic word formulas that introduce each major section of the book, as well as to the narrative forms that appear throughout chs 26–45. 1–6: Pashhur son of Immer is otherwise unknown. Curiously, his name is derived from an Egyptian term, “psh-hr,” “portion of (the god) Horus,” suggesting that Judah was open to Egyptian influence at this period; given its military alliances with Egypt, this is not surprising. Gedaliah son of Pashhur, who is part of a group in 38.1 that attempts to have Jeremiah put to death for sedition, may be this Pashhur’s son. 2: The Upper Benjamin Gate in the House of the LORD is likely not the same as the city gate called the Benjamin Gate (37.13; 38.7). Instead, it seems to be an entryway into the Temple complex. The name “Benjamin” suggests that both the city gate and the Temple gate were located on the north, since the territory of Benjamin is located immediately to the north of Jerusalem (Josh. 18.11–28, esp. 16; cf. Judg. 1.21; 1.8–10). Pashhur is himself a priest, apparently appointed to keep order at the Temple Mount. His flogging and imprisonment of Jeremiah illustrates the prophet’s complaints that he is persecuted by enemies (cf. 18.18–23). 3–4: He renames Pashhur as Magor-missabib, “terror all around” (see also 6.25; 46.5; 49.29; Ps. 31.14), to illustrate his prophecy that Pashhur and his friends (lit. “all who love you”) will be killed by Judah’s enemies. The prophecy that he and his house will go into exile resembles Isaiah’s prophecy concerning the sons of Hezekiah (Isa. ch 39) and Amos’s prophecy concerning Amaziah the high priest at Bethel (Amos 7.10–17). 6: Although the narrative presents no statement by Pashhur, Jeremiah accuses him of prophesying falsely (cf. 14.14–16). 7–13: Jeremiah’s sixth lament. It is placed here associatively, because it uses the phrase “terror all around” (v. 10; see v. 3). 7: The prophet employs strong language to characterize God’s deceptive character. Enticed: Heb “patah,” “to lure, entice,” is employed in Exod. 22.16; Hos. 2.16 to describe a man’s seduction of a woman, and in Judg. 14.15; 16.5 to describe a woman’s seduction of a man. The following verbs, You overpowered me and You prevailed, suggest rape. Jeremiah continues to employ this metaphor when he describes the pain and humiliation caused him by the word of the LORD, i.e., al-

8 For every time I speak, I must cry out,
Must shout, "Lawlessness and rapine!"
For the word of the LORD causes me
Constant disgrace and contempt.

9 I thought, "I will not mention Him,
No more will I speak in His name"—
But [His word] was like a raging fire in my heart,
Shut up in my bones;
I could not hold it in, I was helpless.

10 I heard the whispers of the crowd—
Terror all around:
"Inform! Let us inform against him!"
All my [supposed] friends
Are waiting for me to stumble:
"Perhaps he can be entrapped,
And we can prevail against him
And take our vengeance on him."

11 But the LORD is with me like a mighty warrior;
Therefore my persecutors shall stumble;
They shall not prevail and shall not succeed.
They shall be utterly shamed
With a humiliation for all time,
Which shall not be forgotten.

12 O LORD of Hosts, You who test the righteous,
Who examine the heart and the mind,
Let me see Your retribution upon them,
For I lay my case before You.

13 Sing unto the LORD,
Praise the LORD,
For He has rescued the needy
From the hands of evildoers!

14 Accursed be the day
That I was born!
Let not the day be blessed
When my mother bore me!

15 Accursed be the man
Who brought my father the news
And said, "A boy
Is born to you,"
And gave him such joy!

16 Let that man^a become like the cities
Which the LORD overthrew without relenting!
Let him hear shrieks in the morning
And battle shouts at noontide—though he does not want to be a prophet, he cannot resist God (cf. 1.6–8). 10: The name that he applied to Pashhur, Terror all around, is now derisively applied to him by the watching crowd of people. Although his friends await his downfall, Jeremiah expresses his confidence that God will remain with him and that his enemies will eventually fall. 13: The concluding statement, sing unto the LORD, Praise the LORD, recalls the formulaic language of the Song of the Sea (Exod. 15.21) and other psalms (Pss. 33.3; 68.5; 96.1; 98.1; cf. Isa. 42.10; Pss. 113.1; 135.1; 117.1; 148.1; 150.1). It is unclear why Jeremiah's mood shifts so suddenly here. 14–18: Jeremiah's seventh and final lament. This passage is similar in content and vocabulary to Job ch 3, though the Jeremiah passage uses rather formulaic poetry, and Job ch 3 is far superior poetically, using much more vivid and less stereotypic imagery.

^a Emendation yields "day."

17 Because he did not kill me before birth
 So that my mother might be my grave,
 And her womb big [with me] for all time.
 18 Why did I ever issue from the womb,
 To see misery and woe,
 To spend all my days in shame!

21 The word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD, when King Zedekiah sent to him Pashhur son of Malchiah and the priest Zephaniah, son of Maaseiah, to say, ²“Please inquire of the LORD on our behalf, for King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon is attacking us. Perhaps the LORD will act for our sake in accordance with all His wonders, so that [Nebuchadrezzar] will withdraw from us.”

³Jeremiah answered them, “Thus shall you say to Zedekiah: ⁴Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: I am going to turn around the weapons in your hands with which you are battling outside the wall against those who are besieging you—the king of Babylon and the Chaldeans—and I will take them into the midst of this city; ⁵and I Myself will battle against you with an outstretched mighty arm, with anger and rage and great wrath. ⁶I will strike the inhabitants of this city, man and beast: they shall die by a terrible pestilence. ⁷And then—declares the LORD—I will deliver King Zedekiah of Judah and his courtiers and the people—those in this city who survive the pestilence, the sword, and the famine—into the hands of King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon, into the hands of their enemies, into the hands of those who seek their lives. He will put them to the sword without pity, without compassion, without mercy.

⁸“And to this people you shall say: Thus said the LORD: I set before you the way of life and the way of death. ⁹Whoever remains in this city shall die by the sword, by famine, and by pestilence; but whoever leaves and goes over to the Chaldeans who are besieging you shall live;

21.1–24.10: Jeremiah’s oracles concerning the House of David and the prophets. The prophetic word formula introduces various oracles by the prophet concerning the leadership of Judah, including both the Davidic kings and the prophets. Although the beginning of the unit presupposes the Babylonian assault against Jerusalem that began in 588 BCE during the reign of King Zedekiah (see ch 52; 2 Kings ch 25), the prophet’s oracles address the earlier reigns of Josiah, Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, and Jehoiachin in an effort to point to divine judgment against Judah, due especially to the actions of its leaders, as the reason for the Babylonian assault.

21.1–14: Jeremiah’s oracles to Zedekiah, the people of Judah, and the House of David at the time of the Babylonian assault. King Zedekiah ruled from 597 BCE until the destruction of Jerusalem by the Babylonians in 586 (2 Kings

24.18–25.21; 2 Chron. 36.11–21). He was a Davidic king, a younger son of King Josiah and the uncle of King Jehoiachin, whom the Babylonians placed on the throne and later deported from Jerusalem at the time of their first invasion of Judah in 597 BCE (2 Kings 24.1–17; 2 Chron. 36.5–10). 1: Pashhur son of Malchiah is not the same person mentioned in ch 20, but a grandson of King Zedekiah (38.6). He was part of a group that later had Jeremiah imprisoned for treason (38.1–6). It is possible that this unit was attached here to follow closely the mention of Pashhur in the previous ch (20.1). The priest Zephaniah son of Maaseiah is not the prophet Zephaniah (Zeph. 1.1), but the deputy priest of the Temple (52.24). He was later criticized for not rebuking or imprisoning Jeremiah (29.24–32). Nebuchadrezzar put him to death together with other Judean officials at Riblah following the fall of Jerusalem (52.24–27). 2: King Nebuchadrezzar, son of Nabo-polassar, the founder of the Neo-Babylonian empire, ruled Babylon 605–562 BCE. His defeat of the Egyptians at Carchemish in 605 gave him control of Judah. He invaded Judah following revolts against his rule in the times of Jehoiakim (598), Zedekiah (588), and perhaps following the assassination of the Babylonian-appointed governor Gedaliah (582). (See 2 Kings chs 24–25; 2 Chron. ch 36; Jer. chs 41; 52.) Nebuchadrezzar is a dialectical form of Nebuchadnezzar, by which this king is more commonly known. 3–7: Jeremiah’s response to Pashhur’s and Zephaniah’s appeal to inquire of the LORD indicates that God supports the Babylonian invaders who are attacking Jerusalem. The declaration that Zedekiah would be delivered into the hands of the Babylonians would have been considered treason in ancient Judah (cf. Amos’s condemnation of Jeroboam in Amos 7.10–17), since it contradicts the tradition of God’s protection for Jerusalem and the House of David (see Pss. 2; 46; 47; 48; 110; 132; 2 Sam. ch 7). 8–10: Jeremiah’s urging the people

"he shall at least gain his life."¹⁰ For I have set My face against this city for evil and not for good—declares the LORD. It shall be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon, who will destroy it by fire."

¹¹To the House of the king of Judah: Hear the word of the LORD! ¹²O House of David, thus said the LORD:

Render just verdicts
Morning by morning;
Rescue him who is robbed
From him who defrauded him.
Else My wrath will break forth like fire
And burn, with none to quench it,
Because of your wicked acts.

¹³ I will deal with you, ^bO inhabitants of the valley,
O rock of the plain^b—declares the LORD—
You who say, "Who can come down against us?
Who can get into our lairs?"

¹⁴ I will punish you according to your deeds
—declares the LORD.
I will set fire to its forest;^c
It shall consume all that is around it.

22 Thus said the LORD: Go down to the palace of the king of Judah, where you shall utter this word. ²Say: "Hear the word of the LORD: O king of Judah, you who sit on the throne of David, and your courtiers and your subjects who enter these gates! ³Thus said the LORD: Do what is just and right; rescue from the defrauder him who is robbed; do not wrong the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow; commit no lawless act, and do not shed the blood of the innocent in this place. ⁴For if you fulfill this command, then through the gates of this palace shall enter kings of David's line who sit upon his throne, riding horse-drawn chariots, with their courtiers and their subjects. ⁵But if you do not heed these commands, I swear by Myself—declares the LORD—that this palace shall become a ruin."

⁶For thus said the LORD concerning the royal palace of Judah:

You are as Gilead to Me,
As the summit of Lebanon;
But I will make you a desert,
Uninhabited towns.

to go over to the Babylonians would likewise be considered an act of treason. He was later arrested for his statements (38.1–6).

11–14: A second oracle calls upon the House of David to do justice for those who are robbed in accordance with the laws in Exod. 21.37–22.3. The king was responsible for justice in the land (2 Sam. 12.1–15; 1 Kings 3.16–28; Isa. 11.1–9; Ps. 72). Because of its failure to fill this role, Jeremiah condemns the dynasty despite God's promise that it would rule forever (2 Sam. ch 7; cf. 1 Kings 8.22–26; 9.4–5; Ps. 132). 14: The forest refers to the royal palace, which was called the House of the Forest of Lebanon because it was built with Lebanese cedar (1 Kings 7.2–12; 10.17, 21; Isa. 22.8).

22.1–23.8: Further oracles concerning the kings of Judah.

22.1–9: The first oracle addresses the royal House of David in general without mentioning a specific king. It is thematically related to the previous oracle, focusing on the responsibility of the king to be just. 1–4: The first part of the oracle takes up the themes of 21.11–14 by focusing on the king's responsibility to treat the disadvantaged people of the land justly. Jeremiah follows the view of 1 Kings 8.22–26; 9.4–5; Ps. 132 that the Davidic king will rule if he is righteous. Much like the covenant blessings and curses of Deut. chs 28–30, vv. 5–9 outline the consequences if the king is not righteous. 6: Gilead is the territory of Israel east of the Jordan River from the wadi (river) Arnon in the south to the wadi Yarmuk in the north. Although it is now part of modern Jordan, it was the territory of the tribes of Gad and half of Manasseh in biblical times (Josh. 13.24–31). Gilead and Lebanon were both heavily forested areas in antiquity. The Assyrian and Babylonian kings frequently boasted of the trees from Lebanon for use in their own palaces and other projects.

a-a Lit. "he shall have his life as booty."

b-b Force of Heb. uncertain.

c Perhaps a reference to the royal palace; cf. 1 Kings 7.2.

7 I will appoint destroyers against you,
 Each with his tools;
 They shall cut down your choicest cedars
 And make them fall into the fire.

8 And when many nations pass by this city and one man asks another, "Why did the LORD do thus to that great city?" 9 the reply will be, "Because they forsook the covenant with the LORD their God and bowed down to other gods and served them."

10 Do not weep for the dead^a
 And do not lament for him;
 Weep rather for ^bhim who is leaving,^b
 For he shall never come back
 To see the land of his birth!

11 For thus said the LORD concerning Shallum^b son of King Josiah of Judah, who succeeded his father Josiah as king, but who has gone forth from this place: He shall never come back. 12 He shall die in the place to which he was exiled, and he shall not see this land again.

13 Ha! he who builds his house with unfairness
 And his upper chambers with injustice,
 Who makes his fellow man work without pay
 And does not give him his wages,
 14 Who thinks: I will build me a vast palace
 With spacious upper chambers,
 Provided with windows,
 Paneled in cedar,
 Painted with vermilion!
 15 Do you think you are more a king
 Because you compete in cedar?
 Your father ^cate and drank^c a I.e., Josiah; see 2 Kings 23.29–30.

b-b I.e., the king called by his throne name Jehoahaz in 2 Kings 23.31 ff., and by his private name Shallum here in v. 11 and in 1 Chron. 3.15.

c-c I.e., he was content with the simple necessities of life.

10–12: King Jehoahaz son of Josiah was deposed and exiled to Egypt by Pharaoh Neco three months after Neco killed his father Josiah at Megiddo (see 2 Kings 23.28–35; 2 Chron. 35.20–36.4). His mother was Hamutal daughter of Jeremiah of the city of Libnah, located along the border of Judah and Philistia in the Shephelah. Apparently, Jehoahaz supported Judah's alliance with Babylonia like his father Josiah. This would have been the reason for Neco's removal of Jehoahaz and his replacement with Jehoiakim, who favored alliance with Egypt against Babylonia. Do not weep for the dead refers to Josiah. Weep for him who is leaving refers to Jehoahaz, who died in exile in Egypt. Jehoahaz's personal name was Shallum (cf. 1 Chron.

3.5). The kings of Judah took throne names at their coronations. Thus, Solomon's personal name was Jedidiah (2 Sam. 12.25); Jehoiakim's name was Eliakim (2 Kings 23.34); Jehoiachin's name was Coniah (Jer. 22.24) or Jeconiah (Jer. 24.1); and Zedekiah's name was Mattaniah (2 Kings 24.17). 13–23: Jeremiah's oracle concerning King Jehoiakim. Jehoiakim son of Josiah was placed on the throne by Pharaoh Neco of Egypt after he deposed and exiled Jehoahaz son of Josiah (2 Kings 23.36–24.7; 2 Chron. 36.5–8). His mother was Zebidah daughter of Pedaiah of the city of Rumah. Although Josh. 15.52 places Rumah in the territory of Judah, most interpreters follow the 1st-century CE Jewish historian Flavius Josephus, who identifies Rumah as the home of two Galileans who attacked the Tenth Roman Legion (Jewish War 3.7.21). It is sometimes identified with Abimelech's residence in Arumah (Judg. 9.41), although the exact location in Galilee is uncertain. Jehoiakim is clearly from the pro-Egyptian branch of the Davidic house in contrast to the pro-Babylonian positions of Jehoahaz, Zedekiah, and the family of Shaphan, who served as Josiah's scribe and adviser (2 Kings 22.3). Jeremiah's position is also pro-Babylonian (e.g., chs 27–29), and his supporters include various members of the Shaphan family (see 26.24; 29.3; 36.10; cf. 40.9; 41.1–2). The conflict between the pro-Egyptian Jehoiakim and the pro-Babylonian Jeremiah represents a larger conflict in Jerusalem over the future course of the nation. Although the Babylonians controlled Judah after 605 BCE, the pro-Egyptian elements were able to provoke the revolts against the Babylonians that ultimately led to the destruction of Jerusalem and the Babylonian exile. 13: Ha! ("hoy") is best translated "Woe!" The exclamation frequently appears in prophetic oracles of judgment (e.g., Isa. 5.8–24; chs 28–33; Amos 5.18–20; Nah. 3.1; Hab. 2.6–20; 3.1). It is also employed to signal a warning of coming danger

And dispensed justice and equity—

Then all went well with him.

16 He upheld the rights of the poor and needy—

Then all was well.

^aThat is truly heeding Me^a

—declares the LORD.

17 But your eyes and your mind are only

On ill-gotten gains,

On shedding the blood of the innocent,

On committing fraud and violence.

18 Assuredly, thus said the LORD concerning Jehoiakim son of Josiah, king of Judah:

^bThey shall not mourn for him,

"Ah, brother! Ah, sister!"

They shall not mourn for him,

"Ah, lord! Ah, his majesty!"^b

19 He shall have the burial of an ass,

Dragged out and left lying

Outside the gates of Jerusalem.

20c Climb Lebanon and cry out,

Raise your voice in Bashan,

Cry out from Abarim,

For all your lovers are crushed.

21 I spoke to you when you were prosperous;

You said, "I will not listen."

That was your way ever since your youth,

You would not heed Me.

22 All your shepherds^d shall be devoured by the wind,

And your lovers shall go into captivity.

Then you shall be shamed and humiliated

Because of all your depravity.

23 You who dwell in Lebanon,

Nestled among the cedars,

^eHow much grace will you have^e

When pains come upon you,

Travail as in childbirth!

24 As I live—declares the LORD—^fif you, O King Coniah, son of Jehoiakim, of Judah, were^f a signet on my right

(Zech. 2.10) or an exclamation of mourning (22.18). Jeremiah's critique of Jehoiakim, like the earlier passages, accuses the king of failing to do justice on behalf of the people as his office requires. The charge that he builds his house with unfairness is a pun on the term "bayit," which refers to "house" or "dynasty," and may recall images of Solomon's self-indulgence in taking thirteen years to build his own palace (1 Kings 7.1) and only seven to build the Temple of God (1 Kings 6.37–38). Some have supposed that Jehoiakim refurbished the royal palace. Jeremiah contrasts Jehoiakim with his father Josiah who heeded God by upholding the rights of the people. The prophet calls for an ignominious death and burial for the king, which no doubt characterized the bitterness of his conflict with Jehoiakim (cf. Amos 7.10–17). The circumstances of Jehoiakim's death are not known, although he seems to have died during the first Babylonian invasion of Judah (2 Kings 24.6). 20–23: Jeremiah employs feminine singular verbs to address Judah as a woman or bride of God in these vv., calling upon her to cry out over the loss of her lovers and shepherds. Kings in the ancient world are frequently portrayed as shepherds leading their flock (cf. Ezek. ch 34). 23: The concluding reference to you who dwell in Lebanon, / Nestled among the cedars recalls the image of the royal palace or "House of the Cedars of Lebanon" (1 Kings 7.1), but the pains of childbirth are about to come upon the nation (cf. 30.6; Isa. 13.8). 24–30: Jeremiah's oracle concerning Jehoiachin. Eighteen-year-old Jehoiachin son of Jehoiakim reigned for only three months during the Babylonian siege of Jerusalem before surrendering. Together with his mother and various officials of the kingdom, including the priest and prophet Ezekiel (Ezek. 1.1–3), he was exiled to Babylonia where he remained for the rest of his life (see 2 Kings 24.8–17; 25.27–30; 2 Chron. 36.9–10). 24: Coniah is Jehoiachin. A signet on my right hand (cf. Hag.

a-a Or "That is the reward for heeding Me."

b-b They shall express neither sorrow at the loss of a relative nor grief at the death of a ruler.

c Israel is addressed.

d Change of vocalization yields "paramours."

e-e Septuagint reads "How you will groan."

f-f Heb. "If Coniah . . . were . . ."; Coniah (Jechoniah in 24.1) is identical with Jehoiachin, 2 Kings 24.8 ff.

hand, I would tear you off even from there. ²⁵I will deliver you into the hands of those who seek your life, into the hands of those you dread, into the hands of King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon and into the hands of the Chaldeans. ²⁶I will hurl you and the mother who bore you into another land, where you were not born; there you shall both die. ²⁷They shall not return to the land that they yearn to come back to.

²⁸ Is this man Coniah
A wretched broken pot,
A vessel no one wants?
Why are he and his offspring hurled out,
And cast away in a land they knew not?
²⁹ O land, land, land,
Hear the word of the LORD!
³⁰ Thus said the LORD:
Record this man as without succession,
One who shall never be found acceptable;
For no man of his offspring shall be accepted
To sit on the throne of David
And to rule again in Judah.

23 Ah, shepherds who let the flock of My pasture stray and scatter!—declares the LORD. ²Assuredly, thus said the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning the shepherds who should tend My people: It is you who let My flock scatter and go astray. You gave no thought to them, but I am going to give thought to you, for your wicked acts—declares the LORD. ³And I Myself will gather the remnant of My flock from all the lands to which I have banished them, and I will bring them back to their pasture, where they shall be fertile and increase. ⁴And I will appoint over them shepherds who will tend them; they shall no longer fear or be dismayed, and none of them shall be missing—declares the LORD.

⁵See, a time is coming—declares the LORD—when I will raise up a true branch of David's line. He shall reign as king and shall prosper, and he shall do what is just and right in the land. ⁶In his days Judah shall be delivered and Israel shall dwell secure. And this is the name by which he shall be called: "The LORD is our Vindicator."

⁷Assuredly, a time is coming—declares the LORD—when it shall no more be said, "As the LORD lives, who brought the Israelites out of the land of Egypt," ⁸but rather, "As the LORD lives, who brought out and led the offspring of the House of Israel from the northland and from all the lands to which I have banished them." And they shall dwell upon their own soil.

2.23) is a symbol of royal authority; this image, in which God wears the king as a signet ring, reflects the tremendous closeness between the Davidic king and God (see 2 Sam. 7:14; Ps. 110:1). 25: Chaldeans, a name for the Neo-Babylonian empire of Nebuchadrezzar. 23.1–8: Jeremiah's "woe" oracle (see 22.13) concerning the shepherds, or the kings of Judah who have allowed God's flock to go astray. "Shepherd" is a frequent title for kings in the ancient Near East; it is used, for example, of Hammurabi in his law collection or Code. Although the oracle begins with reference to judgment against Judah's leaders, it looks forward to the return of Judah's and Israel's exiles and the reestablishment of righteous Davidic rule in which both Israel and Judah will be reunited (cf. Isa. 11.1–16; Hos. 3.1–5). 3: They shall be fertile and increase recalls the divine blessing of humankind at creation (Gen. 1.28). The restoration of Davidic rule over a reunited people was one of the goals of Josiah's reform. The image is developed especially in the works of Second Isaiah, who sees Israel's return from Babylonian exile as a second exodus (see Isa. chs 40–48). 6: The name of the king, the LORD is our Vindicator, in Heb is a play on the name Zedekiah, and might suggest that the ideal future king will be named YHVH Tzidkenu, the same elements in the name Tzidkiyah (Zedekiah) in reverse order.

9 Concerning the prophets.

My heart is crushed within me,
 All my bones are trembling;^a
 I have become like a drunken man,
 Like one overcome by wine—
 Because of the LORD and His holy word.
 10 For the land is full of adulterers,
 The land mourns because of ^ba curse;^b
 The pastures of the wilderness are dried up.
^cFor they run to do evil,
 They strain to do wrong:^c
 11 For both prophet and priest are godless;
 Even in My House I find their wickedness
 —declares the LORD.

12 Assuredly,
 Their path shall become
 Like slippery ground;
 They shall be thrust into darkness
 And there they shall fall;
 For I will bring disaster upon them,
 The year of their doom —declares the LORD.
 13 In the prophets of Samaria
 I saw a repulsive thing:
 They prophesied by Baal
 And led My people Israel astray.
 14 But what I see in the prophets of Jerusalem
 Is something horrifying:
 Adultery and false dealing.
 They encourage evildoers,
 So that no one turns back from his wickedness.
 To Me they are all like Sodom,
 And [all] its inhabitants like Gomorrah.

15 Assuredly, thus said the LORD of Hosts concerning the prophets:

I am going to make them eat wormwood
 And drink a bitter draft;
 For from the prophets of Jerusalem
 Godlessness has gone forth to the whole land.

16 Thus said the LORD of Hosts:
 Do not listen to the words of the prophets

23.9–40: Jeremiah's oracles concerning false prophets. Concern with false prophecy is an important theme in Jeremiah, as he is frequently in conflict with other prophets about the future course of the nation (see chs 20; 27–28; 29). Such conflicts among prophets' competing claims were common (see 1 Kings chs 13; 18; 22). Deut. 18.9–22 warns against following false prophets, but one may know a true or false prophet only by whether the prophet's words come true. Therefore, ancient Judeans would have to wait for the fulfillment—or the lack thereof—of the prophet's words. 9: Concerning the prophets is a rare example of a title, indicating the topic of the group of oracles that follows. The charge that the false prophets are drunk is frequently employed by prophets to characterize their opponents (see Isa. 5.11–12, 22; Hab. 2.5; Zeph. 1.12–13). Jeremiah's words, however, seem to imply that he himself is as if drunk because of the falsity of the priests and prophets. 10: The charge of adultery is also a frequent prophetic theme (Hos. chs 1–3; Ezek. ch 16) that builds upon Jeremiah's previous use of the marriage motif (2.1–3). 13–14: The corruption of the prophets of Judah is as bad as or worse than the false prophecies of the prophets of Samaria, the capital of the former Northern Kingdom of Israel that was destroyed by the Assyrians in 722 BCE (see 2 Kings ch 17). Because of the false prophets, the people of Jerusalem have become as evil as those of Sodom and Gomorrah, the biblical image of excessive corruption (Gen. chs 18–19; Isa. 1.10; Jer. 20.16). 16–18: Jeremiah demands that the people not listen to false prophets because they do not speak on behalf of the LORD. He claims to have stood in the council of the LORD, where he heard the divine word, proof that he is a true prophet (cf. 1 Kings 22.19–23; Isa. ch 6; cf. Ps. 82).

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^{b-b} A few Heb. mss. and Septuagint read "these."

^{c-c} Lit. "Their running is wickedness, / Their straining is iniquity."

Who prophesy to you.
 They are deluding you,
 The prophecies they speak are from their own minds,
 Not from the mouth of the LORD.
 17 They declare to men who despise Me:
 The LORD has said:
 "All shall be well with you";
 And to all who follow their willful hearts they say:
 "No evil shall befall you."
 18 But he who has stood in the council of the LORD,
 And seen, and heard His word—
 He who has listened to His word must obey.^a 19 ^bLo, the storm of the LORD goes forth in fury,
 A whirling storm,
 It shall whirl down upon the heads of the wicked.
 20 The anger of the LORD shall not turn back
 Till it has fulfilled and completed His purposes.^b
 In the days to come
 You shall clearly perceive it.
 21 I did not send those prophets,
 But they rushed in;
 I did not speak to them,
 Yet they prophesied.
 22 If they have stood in My council,
 Let them announce My words to My people
 And make them turn back
 From their evil ways and wicked acts.
 23 Am I only a God near at hand
 —says the LORD—
 And not a God far away?
 24 If a man enters a hiding place,
 Do I not see him? —says the LORD.
 For I fill both heaven and earth
 —declares the LORD.

²⁵I have heard what the prophets say, who prophesy falsely in My name: "I had a dream, I had a dream."
²⁶c-How long will there be^c in the minds of the prophets who prophesy falsehood—the prophets of their own deceitful minds—²⁷the plan to make My people forget My name, by means of the dreams which they tell each other, just as their fathers forgot My name because of Baal? ²⁸ Let a Change of vocalization yields "announce it"; cf. vv. 22, 28.

b-b This section constitutes the word of God to which Jeremiah refers.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

19–20: The use of storm imagery to portray God draws upon the theophanic tradition in which storm, clouds, lightning, etc., depict divine power (see Exod. ch 19; Job 38.1; 40.6; Hab. ch 3; Ps. 68). His contention that the anger of the LORD shall not turn back draws upon the Isaian tradition (see Isa. 5.25; 9.11, 16, 20; 10.4). Second Isaiah takes up the statement that God's anger will fulfill its purposes to point to the fulfillment of prophecy in the exilic period (Isa. 40.8; 55.11). 22: Jeremiah challenges the false prophets to make the people repent, and contends that God will know what they have done because God sees all (cf. Amos 9.2–4). 25–40: A speech by God which addresses the problem of false prophecy. 25–32: Dreams were a standard means for receiving divine revelation, but these false prophets only claim to have dreamed; they speak whatever their own minds devise. 29: And like a hammer that shatters rock! refers to the tremendous power and danger of biblical prophecy. In rabbinic tradition, however, this is a central phrase, suggesting that God's words may be interpreted in a wide variety of legitimate ways (b. Sanh. 34a). 31: Oracular utterances: Heb "ne'um" is a technical expression for prophetic oracles, as in the expression declares ["ne'um"] the LORD. 33–40: The second portion of the speech takes up the technical expression, "masa'," burden or "pronouncement." The English translation, burden, which can mean both a literal load that is carried and a metaphorical purport of one's message, embodies the ambiguities of the Heb term, which refers both to something that must be carried and to a type of prophetic oracle. In essence, a "masa'" is a prophetic responsibility that must be borne, although Jeremiah sometimes states that he does not want to do so (1.6–8; 20.8–9). When asked "What is the burden of the LORD?" Jeremiah is to respond that the burden is that you will be cast off ("natashta"), which employs the first verb from his initial the prophet who has a dream tell the dream; and let him who has received My word report My word faithfully! How can straw be compared to grain?—says the LORD. ²⁹Behold, My word is like fire—declares the LORD—and like a hammer that shatters rock!

³⁰Assuredly, I am going to deal with the prophets—declares the LORD—who steal My words from one another. ³¹I am going to deal with the prophets—declares the LORD—who wag^a their tongues and make oracular utterances. ³²I am going to deal with those who prophesy lying dreams—declares the LORD—who relate them to lead My people astray with their reckless lies, when I did not send them or command them. They do this people no good—declares the LORD.

³³And when this people—or a prophet or a priest—asks you, “What is the burden^b of the LORD?” you shall answer them, ^c“What is the burden?^c I will cast you off”—declares the LORD.

³⁴As for the prophet or priest or layman who shall say “the burden of the LORD,” I will punish that person and his house. ³⁵Thus you shall speak to each other, every one to his fellow, “What has the LORD answered?” or “What has the LORD spoken?” ³⁶But do not mention “the burden of the LORD” any more. ^d“Does a man regard his own word as a “burden,”^d that you pervert the words of the living God, the LORD of Hosts, our God? ³⁷Thus you shall speak to the prophet: “What did the LORD answer you?” or “What did the LORD speak?” ³⁸But if you say “the burden of the LORD”—assuredly, thus said the LORD: Because you said this thing, “the burden of the LORD,” whereas I sent word to you not to say “the burden of the LORD,” ³⁹I will utterly ^e“forget you^e and I will cast you away from My presence, together with the city that I gave to you and your fathers. ⁴⁰And I will lay upon you a disgrace for all time, shame for all time, which shall never be forgotten.

prophetic commission (“lintosh,” “to uproot”) (1.10). Whereas the speech attempts to present Jeremiah as a true prophet, it argues that God will cast away those who falsely claim to speak a prophetic “masa’.”

24.1–10: Jeremiah’s vision of the good and the bad figs. Another symbolic action (see also 1.11–19; ch 19). This action takes place shortly after the exile of King Jehoiachin, when the Babylonians left his uncle Zedekiah in control of the country (2 Kings 24.8–25.30; 2 Chron. 36.9–21). The great rhetorical power of the chapter derives from its counterintuitive message: The good figs are the ones who were exiled! 1: Figs were commonly offered at the Temple at Sukkot following the conclusion of the fruit harvest (see Deut. 26.1–15; Amos 8.1–3). Jeconiah is a shortened form of the name Jehoiachin.

24 The LORD showed me two baskets of figs, placed in front of the Temple of the LORD. This was after King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon had exiled King Jeconiah son of Jehoiakim of Judah, and the officials of Judah, and the craftsmen and smiths, from Jerusalem, and had

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b I.e., pronouncement; cf. Isa. 13.1, 15.1, etc., where the word rendered “pronouncement” can also mean “burden.”

c-c Septuagint and other versions read “You are the burden!”

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. e-e Some Heb. mss., Septuagint, and other versions read “lift you up,” a word from the same root as “burden.”

brought them to Babylon. ²One basket contained very good figs, like first-ripened figs, and the other basket contained very bad figs, so bad that they could not be eaten.

³And the LORD said to me, "What do you see, Jeremiah?" I answered, "Figs—the good ones are very good, and the bad ones very bad, so bad that they cannot be eaten."

⁴Then the word of the LORD came to me:

⁵Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: As with these good figs, so will I single out for good the Judean exiles whom I have driven out from this place to the land of the Chaldeans. ⁶I will look upon them favorably, and I will bring them back to this land; I will build them and not overthrow them; I will plant them and not uproot them. ⁷And I will give them the understanding to acknowledge Me, for I am the LORD. And they shall be My people and I will be their God, when they turn back to Me with all their heart.

⁸And like the bad figs, which are so bad that they cannot be eaten—thus said the Lord—so will I treat King Zedekiah of Judah and his officials and the remnant of Jerusalem that is left in this land, and those who are living in the land of Egypt: ⁹I will make them a horror—an evil—to all the kingdoms of the earth, a disgrace and a proverb, a byword and a curse^a in all the places to which I banish them. ¹⁰I will send the sword, famine, and pestilence against them until they are exterminated from the land that I gave to them and their fathers.

25 The word which came to Jeremiah concerning all the people of Judah, in the fourth year of King Jehoiakim son of Josiah of Judah, which was the first year of King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon. ²This is what the prophet Jeremiah said to all the people of Judah and to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem:

³From the thirteenth year of King Josiah son of Amon of Judah, to this day—these twenty-three years—the word of the LORD has come to me. I have spoken to you persistently, but you would not listen. ⁴Moreover, the LORD constantly sent all his servants the prophets to you, but you a I.e., a standard by which men curse; cf. Gen. 12.2 and note; Zech. 8.13.

2-10: By use of the contrasting images of a basket of good figs and a basket of bad or rotten figs, the symbolic act distinguishes the fate of those taken into Babylonian captivity with Jehoiachin and those left in the land under the rule of Zedekiah. 6: The oracle concerning those exiled to Babylonian employs the verbs "banah," build, and "nata'," plant, to characterize the good that will befall them. The verbs "haras," overthrow, and "natash," uproot, apparently refer to the fate of those left behind. All four verbs appear in Jeremiah's initial call narrative (1.10). 7: God promises to give the exiles understanding to acknowledge Me, lit. "a heart to know Me." This is further developed in 31.33–34. The mutual covenant formula, they shall be My people and I will be their God, expresses the restoration of the covenant relationship (7.23; 11.4; 30.22; 31.1, 33; 32.38). 8-10: All those left in Judah with Zedekiah as well as those in Egypt will be destroyed. Ironically, Jeremiah was taken to Egypt after the fall of Jerusalem (ch 43).

25.1-29.32: Submission to Babylonia. The prophetic word formula introduces material in chs 25–29 which expresses the prophet's view that Judah must submit to Babylonia. The unit contains four major components: the oracle that Judah and the nations must accept Babylonia's rule as the will of God (ch 25); a narrative concerning the prophet's trial for delivering the Temple sermon (ch 26); Jeremiah's confrontation with the prophet Hananiah (chs 27–28); and Jeremiah's letter to the Babylonian exiles (ch 29).

25.1-38: Jeremiah's oracle calling upon Judah and the nations to submit to Babylonia. Both in terms of literary placement and message, this is the central chapter of Jeremiah. 1-14: The punishment of Judah. 1: The fourth year of . . . Jehoiakim and the first year of . . . Nebuchadrezzar is 605 BCE, the year that Nebuchadrezzar defeated Egypt at Carchemish and took control of Judah. 3-7: The thirteenth year of . . . Josiah, 627 BCE, is the beginning of the prophet's career (1.1-3). According to 2 Chron. 34.3, Josiah began to purge Jerusalem and Judah of pagan religious practice in his twelfth year. The twenty-three years of the prophet's activity would extend from 627 to 605. In his view, the people failed to ob-would not listen or incline your ears to hear⁵ when they said, "Turn back, every one, from your evil ways and your wicked acts, that you may remain throughout the ages on the soil which the LORD gave to you and your fathers.⁶ Do not follow other gods, to serve them and worship them. Do not vex Me with what your own hands have made,^a and I will not bring disaster upon you."⁷ But you would not listen to Me—declares the LORD—but vexed Me with what your hands made, to your own hurt.

⁸ Assuredly, thus said the LORD of Hosts: Because you would not listen to My words, ⁹ I am going to send for all the peoples of the north—declares the LORD—and for My servant, King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon, and bring them against this land and its inhabitants, and against all those nations roundabout. I will exterminate them and make them a desolation, an object of hissing^b—ruins for all time.¹⁰ And I will banish from them the sound of mirth and gladness, the voice of bridegroom and bride, and the sound of the mill and the light of the lamp.¹¹ This whole land shall be a desolate ruin.

And those nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.¹² When the seventy years are over, I will punish the king of Babylon and that nation and the land of the Chaldeans for their sins—declares the LORD—and I will make it a desolation for all time.¹³ And I will bring upon that land all that I have decreed against it, all that is recorded in this book—that which Jeremiah prophesied against all the nations.¹⁴ For they too shall be enslaved by many nations and great kings; and I will requite them according to their acts and according to their conduct.

¹⁵ For thus said the LORD, the God of Israel, to me: "Take from My hand this cup of wine—of wrath—and make all the nations to whom I send you drink of it.¹⁶ Let them drink and retch and act crazy, because of the sword that I am sending among them."

¹⁷ So I took the cup from the hand of the LORD and gave drink to all the nations to whom the LORD had sent me:¹⁸ Jerusalem and the towns of Judah, and its kings and officials, to make them a desolate ruin, an object of hissing and a curse^c—as is now the case;¹⁹ Pharaoh king of Egypt, his courtiers, his officials, and all his people;²⁰ all ^dthe mixed peoples;^d all the kings of the land of Uz; all the kings of the land of the Philistines—Ashkelon, Gaza, Ekron, and what is left of Ashdod;²¹ Edom, Moab, and Ammon;²² all the serve Josiah's reforms from the outset. 5: According to Jeremiah, a main function of prophecy is to cause the people to repent. This is about to change, and the prophet's new role will be more similar to that of (First) Isaiah, explaining the calamities and emphasizing that they derive from God. 9: It is here that the peoples of the north are first identified as Babylon. This fits the historical background of the chapter (see v. 1 n.). 10: The cessation of marriages is particularly pertinent in view of Jeremiah's decision not to marry (ch 16), but the continuation of the v. emphasizes that even much more basic, mundane activity will cease. 11: The nations will serve Babylonia for the seventy years of Judah's punishment. The significance of the period is uncertain, though it likely reflects the human life span (Ps. 90.10). A period of seventy years of divine displeasure is also found in a Mesopotamian text. 12: Like Assyria in the book of Isaiah (Isa. 10.5–34; 14.24–27), Babylonia will be punished after Judah's punishment is complete. 13: V. 13a introduces the oracles against the nations in the Greek Septuagint version of the book of Jeremiah. 15–29: For the metaphorical portrayal of punishment as drinking from a cup, see 49.12; 51.7; Pss. 11.6; 75.8; Isa. 51.17, 22; Lam. 4.21; Ezek. 23.31–34; Hab. 2.15–16. 18–26: The nations listed were all part of the Persian empire following the end of the Babylonian exile. Many appear in Jeremiah's oracles concerning the nations: Egypt (46.2–28); Uz, the Arabian desert east of Israel (cf. Lam. 4.21), the home of Job (Job 1.1); Edom, Moab, and Ammon, in the Transjordan east of modern Israel (48.1–49.22); Ashkelon . . . Ashdod, the four cities of Philistia (ch 47); Tyre and Sidon, in Phoenicia (modern Lebanon); Dedan, a desert tribe located southeast of Edom (Gen. 25.3); Tema, a tribe from the Syrian desert (Gen. 25.15); Buz, a tribe descended from Nahor, Abraham's brother (Gen. 22.21); Arabia, the desert peoples (49.28–33); Zimri, unknown; Elam and Media, in ^a I.e., idols. ^b Cf. note at 18.16. ^c Cf. note at 24.9.

^{d-d} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

kings of Tyre and all the kings of Sidon, and all the kings of the coastland across the sea;²³ Dedan, Tema, and Buz, and all those who have their hair clipped;²⁴ all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of ^athe mixed peoples^a who live in the desert;²⁵ all the kings of Zimri^b and all the kings of Elam and all the kings of Media;²⁶ all the kings of the north, whether far from or close to each other—all the ^aroyal lands which are on the earth.^a And last of all, the king of Sheshach^c shall drink.

²⁷Say to them: "Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: Drink and get drunk and vomit; fall and never rise again, because of the sword that I send among you."

²⁸And if they refuse to take the cup from your hand and drink, say to them, "Thus said the LORD of Hosts: You must drink!" ²⁹If I am bringing the punishment first on the city that bears My name, do you expect to go unpunished? You will not go unpunished, for I am summoning the sword against all the inhabitants of the earth—declares the LORD of Hosts."

³⁰You are to prophesy all those things to them, and then say to them:

The LORD roars from on high,
He makes His voice heard from His holy dwelling;
He roars aloud over His [earthly] abode;
He utters shouts like the grape-treaders,
Against all the dwellers on earth.

³¹ Tumult has reached the ends of the earth,
For the LORD has a case against the nations,
He contends with all flesh.

He delivers the wicked to the sword
—declares the LORD.

³² Thus said the LORD of Hosts:
Disaster goes forth
From nation to nation;
A great storm is unleashed
From the remotest parts of earth.

³³In that day, the earth shall be strewn with the slain of the LORD from one end to the other. They shall not be mourned, or gathered and buried; they shall become dung upon the face of the earth.

³⁴ Howl, you shepherds, and yell,
Strew [dust] on yourselves, you lords of the flock!

modern Iran and Afghanistan (49:34-49). 26: Sheshach is a coded reference to Babylonia. It employs a technique called "atbash," in which the last letter of the alphabet is substituted for the first, the penultimate letter for the second, and so forth. (Thus "b-b-l," "Babylonia" becomes "sh-sh-kh," Sheshach, because "shin" = "bet" and "kaf" = "lamed.") (Cf. 51:41.) Interpreters conjecture that it may have been unsafe to speak directly against Babylonia during the exile. 30-38: God is portrayed as a lion roaring in judgment against the nations (cf. Amos 1:2).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c A cipher for Babel, Babylon.

For the day of your slaughter draws near.

^a“I will break you in pieces;”

And you shall fall like a precious vessel.

35 Flight shall fail the shepherds,

And escape, the lords of the flock.

36 Hark, the outcry of the shepherds,

And the howls of the lords of the flock!

For the LORD is ravaging their pasture.

37 The peaceful meadows shall be wiped out

By the fierce wrath of the LORD.

38 Like a lion, He has gone forth from His lair;

The land has become a desolation,

Because of the oppressive^b wrath,

Because of His fierce anger.

26 At the beginning of the reign of King Jehoiakim son of Josiah of Judah, this word came from the LORD:

²“Thus said the LORD: Stand in the court of the House of the LORD, and speak to [the men of] all the towns of Judah, who are coming to worship in the House of the LORD, all the words which I command you to speak to them. Do not omit anything. ³Perhaps they will listen and turn back, each from his evil way, that I may renounce the punishment I am planning to bring upon them for their wicked acts.

⁴“Say to them: Thus said the LORD: If you do not obey Me, abiding by the Teaching that I have set before you, ⁵heeding the words of My servants the prophets whom I have been sending to you persistently—but you have not heeded—⁶then I will make this House like Shiloh, and I will make this city a curse^c for all the nations of earth.”

⁷The priests and prophets and all the people heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the House of the LORD. ⁸And when Jeremiah finished speaking all that the LORD had commanded him to speak to all the people, the priests and the prophets and all the people seized him, shouting, “You shall die! ⁹How dare you prophesy in the name of the LORD that this House shall become like Shiloh and this city be made desolate, without inhabitants?” And all the people crowded about Jeremiah in the House of the LORD.

¹⁰When the officials of Judah heard about this, they went up from the king’s palace to the House of the LORD and held a session at the entrance of the New Gate of ^dthe House of ^dthe LORD. ¹¹The priests and prophets said to 26.1–24: Jeremiah’s trial for sedition. Jeremiah’s trial for sedition as a result of his Temple sermon (7.1–8.3). 1: The trial takes place at the beginning of the reign of . . . Jehoiakim in 608 BCE, four years prior to Jeremiah’s oracle concerning the acceptance of Babylonian rule in ch 25. This explains why the prophet can still envision repentance (v. 3). 2–9: God’s instructions to Jeremiah to deliver the Temple sermon. The basic message of the speech emphasizes God’s call for repentance on the part of the people in order to save the city. 6: On Shiloh, see 7.12–15. 8: The people react by calling for Jeremiah’s death, the punishment for a false prophet (Deut. 18.20). The priests are upset because Jeremiah is threatening the Temple, their central institution and the basis of their livelihood, while the prophets feel that Jeremiah is an illegitimate competitor. 10–11: Jeremiah’s trial takes place at the New Gate of the House of the LORD, lit. “the new gate of the LORD.” The location of the new gate is unknown.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Cf. note at 24.9.

d-d So many mss. and ancient versions; other mss. and the editions omit these words.

the officials and to all the people, "This man deserves the death penalty, for he has prophesied against this city, as you yourselves have heard."

¹²Jeremiah said to the officials and to all the people, "It was the LORD who sent me to prophesy against this House and this city all the words you heard. ¹³Therefore mend your ways and your acts, and heed the LORD your God, that the LORD may renounce the punishment He has decreed for you. ¹⁴As for me, I am in your hands: do to me what seems good and right to you. ¹⁵But know that if you put me to death, you and this city and its inhabitants will be guilty of shedding the blood of an innocent man. For in truth the LORD has sent me to you, to speak all these words to you."

¹⁶Then the officials and all the people said to the priests and prophets, "This man does not deserve the death penalty, for he spoke to us in the name of the LORD our God."

¹⁷And some of the elders of the land arose and said to the entire assemblage of the people, ¹⁸"Micah the Morashtite, who prophesied in the days of King Hezekiah of Judah, said to all the people of Judah: 'Thus said the LORD of Hosts:

Zion shall be plowed as a field,

Jerusalem shall become heaps of ruins

And the Temple Mount a shrine in the woods.'^a

¹⁹"Did King Hezekiah of Judah, and all Judah, put him to death? Did he not rather fear the LORD and implore the LORD, so that the LORD renounced the punishment He had decreed against them? We are about to do great injury to ourselves!"

²⁰There was also a man prophesying in the name of the LORD, Uriah son of Shemaiah from Kiriath-jearim, who prophesied against this city and this land the same things as Jeremiah. ²¹King Jehoiakim and all his warriors and all the officials heard about his address, and the king wanted to put him to death. Uriah heard of this and fled in fear, and came to Egypt. ²²But King Jehoiakim sent men to Egypt, Elnathan son of Achbor and men with him to Egypt. ²³They took Uriah out of Egypt and brought him to King Jehoiakim, who had him put to the sword and his body thrown into the burial place of the common people.

²⁴However, Ahikam son of Shaphan protected Jeremiah, so that he was not handed over to the people for execution.

12–15: Jeremiah's defense is that he speaks as a true prophet of God. The priests and prophets calling for his death would therefore be false. 16–19: The officials and the people defend Jeremiah by pointing to the prophecy of Micah the Morashtite (Mic. 1.1), who prophesied in the time of Hezekiah that Jerusalem would be destroyed. Micah's condemnation of Jerusalem appears in Mic. 3.12 with slightly different wording. They argue that because Hezekiah repented as a result of Micah's threat, the city was saved (cf. Isa. chs 36–37; 2 Kings chs 18–20, which portrays Isaiah's role in the deliverance of Jerusalem in Hezekiah's time). Jeremiah therefore should not be killed because he acts like Micah to save the city, and prophesying against Jerusalem should not be viewed as either false prophecy or treasonous.

20–23: The priests and prophets call on the precedent of the prophet Uriah son of Shemaiah of the town of Kiriath-jearim. (He is not otherwise known.) Because Uriah was killed by King Jehoiakim for prophesying against Jerusalem, the priests and prophets claim that Jeremiah should also be killed. Elnathan son of Achbor is one of the officials who later attempt to persuade Jehoiakim against burning Jeremiah's scroll (36.12, 25). He also supported Josiah's reform (2 Kings 22.12). Some think he may be the maternal grandfather of Jehoiachin (2 Kings 24.8).

24: Jeremiah is finally saved by Ahikam son of Shaphan, the son of Josiah's scribe. Both father and son supported Josiah's reform (2 Kings 22.3, 12). The Shaphan family were important allies of Jeremiah (29.3; 36.10; 40.9; 41.1–2).

^a Cf. Mic. 3.12.

27 At the beginning of the reign of King Jehoiakim^a son of Josiah of Judah, this word came to Jeremiah from the LORD:

²Thus said the LORD to me: Make for yourself thongs and bars of a yoke, and put them on your neck. ^{3b}And send them^b to the king of Edom, the king of Moab, the king of the Ammonites, the king of Tyre, and the king of Sidon, by envoys who have come to King Zedekiah of Judah in Jerusalem; ⁴and give them this charge to their masters: Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: Say this to your masters:

⁵"It is I who made the earth, and the men and beasts who are on the earth, by My great might and My outstretched arm; and I give it to whomever I deem proper. ⁶I herewith deliver all these lands to My servant, King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon; I even give him the wild beasts to serve him. ⁷All nations shall serve him, his son and his grandson—until the turn of his own land comes, when many nations and great kings shall subjugate him. ⁸The nation or kingdom that does not serve him—King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon—and does not put its neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation I will visit—declares the LORD—with sword, famine, and pestilence, until I have destroyed it by his hands. ⁹As for you, give no heed to your prophets, augurs, dreamers,^c diviners, and sorcerers, who say to you, 'Do not serve the king of Babylon.' ¹⁰For they prophesy falsely to you—with the result that you shall be banished from your land; I will drive you out and you shall perish. ¹¹But the nation that puts its neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serves him, will be left by Me on its own soil—declares the LORD—to till it and dwell on it."

¹²I also spoke to King Zedekiah of Judah in just the same way: "Put your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon; serve him and his people, and live! ¹³Otherwise you will die together with your people, by sword, famine, and pestilence, as the LORD has decreed against any nation that does not serve the king of Babylon. ¹⁴Give no heed to the words of the prophets who say to you, 'Do not serve the king of Babylon,' for they prophesy falsely to you. ¹⁵I have not sent them—declares the LORD—and they prophesy falsely in My name, with the result that I will drive you out and you shall perish, together with the prophets who prophesy to you."

^a Emendation yields "Zedekiah"; so a few mss. and Syriac; cf. vv. 3 and 12.

^{b-b} Emendation yields "And send," i.e., a message. ^c Lit. "dreams."

27.1–28.17: Jeremiah's prophecy of Nebuchadnezzar's conquest and the confrontation with the prophet Hananiah son of Azzur. 27.2–4: The yoke with thongs and bars (cf. 1 Kings 12.9–11; 22.11) symbolizes God's will that Judah submit to the rule of Babylonia (cf. ch. 25). Zedekiah had apparently gathered the envoys of his neighbors to discuss the possibility of revolt against Babylonia. The conference would have taken place in the fourth year of Zedekiah (593 BCE), about five years before the revolt began. 5–11: God's first statements are directed to the envoys from Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, and Sidon. The argument contends that God is creator of all the world, and has the authority to give the world to whomever He chooses. 6: By designating Nebuchadnezzar as servant, God indicates the divine will that all the nations submit to Babylonia. 9–10: The reference to false prophecy is a key concern of the whole unit. 12–15: God's statement to Zedekiah likewise demands that he submit to Babylonia. If he refuses, he will die with his people.

¹⁶And to the priests and to all that people I said: "Thus said the LORD: Give no heed to the words of the prophets who prophesy to you, 'The vessels of the House of the LORD shall shortly be brought back from Babylon,' for they prophesy falsely to you. ¹⁷Give them no heed. Serve the king of Babylon, and live! Otherwise this city shall become a ruin. ¹⁸If they are really prophets and the word of the LORD is with them, let them intercede with the LORD of Hosts not to let the vessels remaining in the House of the LORD, in the royal palace of Judah, and in Jerusalem, go to Babylon!

¹⁹"For thus said the LORD of Hosts concerning the columns, the tank,^a the stands, and the rest of the vessels remaining in this city, ²⁰which King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon did not take when he exiled King Jeconiah son of Jehoiakim of Judah, from Jerusalem to Babylon, with all the nobles of Judah and Jerusalem; ²¹for thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel, concerning the vessels remaining in the House of the LORD, in the royal palace of Judah, and in Jerusalem: ²²They shall be brought to Babylon, and there they shall remain, until I take note of them—declares the LORD of Hosts—and bring them up and restore them to this place."

28 That year, early in the reign of King Zedekiah of Judah, in the fifth month of the fourth year, the prophet Hananiah son of Azzur, who was from Gibeon, spoke to me in the House of the LORD, in the presence of the priests and all the people. He said: ²"Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: I hereby break the yoke of the king of Babylon. ³In two years, I will restore to this place all the vessels of the House of the LORD which King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon took from this place and brought to Babylon. ⁴And I will bring back to this place King Jeconiah son of Jehoiakim of Judah, and all the Judean exiles who went to Babylon—declares the LORD. Yes, I will break the yoke of the king of Babylon."

⁵Then the prophet Jeremiah answered the prophet Hananiah in the presence of the priests and of all the people who were standing in the House of the LORD. ⁶The prophet Jeremiah said: "Amen! May the LORD do so! May the LORD fulfill what you have prophesied and bring back from Babylon to this place the vessels of the House of the LORD and all the exiles! ⁷But just listen to this word which I address to you and to all the people: ⁸The prophets who lived before you and me from ancient times prophesied

16–18: The statement to the priests and people expresses similar concerns with submission to Babylonian and false prophecy. 2 Kings 24.13 reports that Nebuchadnezzar carried away the treasures of the Temple when he took Jehoiachin into exile to Babylon. 19–22: God states that the remaining vessels of the Temple and royal palace will be taken if the people do not submit to Babylonia. The columns are named Jachin and Boaz, and flank the entrance to the great hall of the Temple (1 Kings 7.21–22). The tank is the "sea" or basin of water before Solomon's Temple that would have served to purify the priests for service at the Temple altar (1 Kings 7.23–26). The stands are the ten bronze laver stands inside the Temple (1 Kings 7.27–39). 2 Kings 25.13–17 reports that these and other items were broken up and taken to Babylon when Nebuchadnezzar destroyed Jerusalem. Ezra 1.7–8 describes the return of these vessels. 28.1: The fifth month is Av, and the fourth year of Zedekiah is 593 BCE. Hananiah son of Azzur, who is otherwise unknown, provides an example of the false prophecy that is of grave concern throughout the book of Jeremiah. 2–4: By breaking Jeremiah's yoke, Hananiah performs a symbolic act to illustrate his message that God would deliver Jerusalem and return King Jehoiachin in two years. His message of divine deliverance for the city and king is similar to that of Isaiah (Isa. 7.1–9.6). Rabbinic tradition maintains that Hananiah heard Jeremiah's prophecy that God would break the bow of Elam (49.35), and mistakenly concluded that God would break the yoke of Babylonia (b. Sanh. 89a). 5–9: Jeremiah's response expresses his wish that Hananiah's prophecy would indeed come true. 6: Amen, see 11.5 n. Jeremiah repeats in a modified form the principle of Deut. 18.9–22 that a prophecy may be recognized as true only when it comes to pass. 7–9: Jeremiah here advances the definition of true prophecy by accepting all prophecy of doom as true, ipso facto.

^a Lit. "sea"; cf. 1 Kings 7.23ff.

war, disaster, and pestilence against many lands and great kingdoms. ⁹So if a prophet prophesies good fortune, then only when the word of the prophet comes true can it be known that the LORD really sent him."

¹⁰But the prophet Hananiah removed the bar from the neck of the prophet Jeremiah, and broke it; ¹¹and Hananiah said in the presence of all the people, "Thus said the LORD: So will I break the yoke of King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon from off the necks of all the nations, in two years." And the prophet Jeremiah went on his way.

¹²After the prophet Hananiah had broken the bar from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah, the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah: ¹³"Go say to Hananiah: Thus said the LORD: You broke bars of wood, but "you shall" make bars of iron instead. ¹⁴For thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: I have put an iron yoke upon the necks of all those nations, that they may serve King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon—and serve him they shall! I have even given the wild beasts to him."

¹⁵And the prophet Jeremiah said to the prophet Hananiah, "Listen, Hananiah! The LORD did not send you, and you have given this people lying assurances. ¹⁶Assuredly, thus said the LORD: I am going to banish you from off the earth. This year you shall die, for you have urged disloyalty to the LORD."

¹⁷And the prophet Hananiah died that year, in the seventh month.

29 This is the text of the letter which the prophet Jeremiah sent from Jerusalem to the priests, the prophets, the rest of the elders of the exile community, and to all the people whom Nebuchadnezzar had exiled from Jerusalem to Babylon—²after King Jeconiah, the queen mother, the eunuchs, the officials of Judah and Jerusalem, and the craftsmen and smiths had left Jerusalem. ³[The letter was sent] through Elasah son of Shaphan and Gemariah son of Hilkiah, whom King Zedekiah of Judah had dispatched to Babylon, to King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon.

⁴Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel, to the whole community which I exiled from Jerusalem to Babylon: ⁵Build houses and live in them, plant gardens and eat their fruit. ⁶Take wives and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters. Multiply there, do not decrease. ⁷And seek the welfare of the

The audience could not afford to wait to see if a prophecy of doom would come true. 10–11: Hananiah breaks Jeremiah's yoke to symbolize that his own message of deliverance takes precedence over Jeremiah's message. The contest reaches a "tie" at this point; there is nothing more for Jeremiah to do, so he leaves. He returns when he receives a new oracle in v. 12. 12–17: Jeremiah returns with an iron yoke to symbolize his message that submission to Babylonia is inevitable. The symbol is reinforced by Jeremiah's prediction that Hananiah will die (cf. Amos 7:10–17; Isa. chs 36–39). The seventh month is Tishri, two months later.

29.1–33: Jeremiah's letter to the exiles. Jeremiah's letter to those deported by Nebuchadnezzar to Babylon with Jehoiachin in 597 BCE (see 2 Kings 24:8–17; 2 Chron. 36:9–10). 2: The queen mother, an important official in Judah, was Nehushta daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem (2 Kings 24:8). 3: Elasah son of Shaphan was the brother of Ahikam son of Shaphan (26.24) and the son of Josiah's scribe (2 Kings 22.3, 12). Gemariah son of Hilkiah may be the son of Josiah's high priest (2 Kings 22.4). 4–7: Jeremiah's letter begins with God's instructions to accept life in Babylonia and to build lives and families there. The activities enumerated in vv. 5–6 are those of establishing a new home, indicating that for at least two generations Babylonia should be treated as home. 7: The command to seek the welfare of the city and to pray to the LORD in its behalf anticipates the prayer for the government that appears as part of the Torah service for Shabbat and the festivals. The rhetoric of this verse is intended to shock—most people would have expected the words "And seek the welfare of the city" to refer to Jerusalem, not to Babylon.

a-a Septuagint reads "I will."

city to which I have exiled you and pray to the LORD in its behalf; for in its prosperity you shall prosper.

⁸For thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: Let not the prophets and diviners in your midst deceive you, and pay no heed to the dreams they^a dream. ⁹For they prophesy to you in My name falsely; I did not send them—declares the LORD.

¹⁰For thus said the LORD: When Babylon's seventy years are over, I will take note of you, and I will fulfill to you My promise of favor—to bring you back to this place.

¹¹For I am mindful of the plans I have made concerning you—declares the LORD—plans for your welfare, not for disaster, to give you a hopeful future. ¹²When you call Me, and come and pray to Me, I will give heed to you.

¹³You will search for Me and find Me, if only you seek Me wholeheartedly. ¹⁴I will be at hand for you—declares the LORD—and I will restore your fortunes. And I will gather you from all the nations and from all the places to which I have banished you—declares the LORD—and I will bring you back to the place from which I have exiled you.

¹⁵But you say, "The LORD has raised up prophets for us in Babylon."^b

¹⁶Thus said the LORD concerning the king who sits on the throne of David, and concerning all the people who dwell in this city, your brothers who did not go out with you into exile—¹⁷thus said the LORD of Hosts: I am going to let loose sword, famine, and pestilence against them and I will treat them as loathsome figs, so bad that they cannot be eaten.^c ¹⁸I will pursue them with the sword, with famine, and with pestilence; and I will make them a horror to all the kingdoms of the earth, a curse and an object of horror and hissing^d and scorn among all the nations to which I shall banish them, ¹⁹because they did not heed My words—declares the LORD—when I persistently sent to them My servants, the prophets, and they^a did not heed—declares the LORD.

²⁰But you, the whole exile community which I banished from Jerusalem to Babylon, hear the word of the LORD!

²¹Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel, concerning Ahab son of Kolaiah and Zedekiah son of Maaseiah, who prophesy falsely to you in My name: I am going to deliver them into the hands of King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon, and he shall put them to death before your eyes.

²²And the whole community of Judah in Babylonia shall use a curse derived from their fate: "May God make you

8–9: The letter raises the issue of false prophets, a major theme of the preceding chs. 10–14: Cf. 25.11 for the announcement that the nations would serve Babylonia for seventy years. 11: God's promise of a hopeful future means lit. "future and hope" ("alharit vetikvah"). 12: God's promise to heed the people when they call, come, and pray to God, reverses the statement in Isa. 1.12–15 that God will not listen. Jeremiah again anticipates that Isaiah's scenario of judgment and restoration is to be realized in his own time (see also Isa. ch 11). 13: A quotation of Deut. 4.29. 15: Jeremiah cites the counter-argument that prophets in Babylon have apparently announced that God will overthrow Babylonia. 16–23: Jeremiah portrays a scenario in which the king (Zedekiah) and the people left in the land of Judah will suffer further punishment from God at the hands of the Babylonians because they did not listen to the prophets. 21: He then condemns the false prophets in Babylon, Ahab son of Kolaiah and Zedekiah son of Maaseiah. Both are otherwise unknown. The latter prophet may be the brother of Zephaniah son of Maaseiah, the deputy priest of the Temple (see vv. 24–28). Talmudic tradition maintains that both men were put to death for their attempt to commit adultery with Nebuchadrezzar's daughter, falsely claiming that God told them to do so (b. Sanh. 93a).

^a Heb. "you." ^b This verse is continued in vv. 20 ff.

^c Cf. 24.1 ff. ^d Cf. note at 18.16.

like Zedekiah and Ahab, whom the king of Babylon consigned to the flames!"—²³because they did vile things in Israel, committing adultery with the wives of their fellows and speaking in My name false words which I had not commanded them. I am He who knows and bears witness—declares the LORD.

²⁴Concerning Shemaiah the Nehelamite you^a shall say: ²⁵Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: Because you sent letters in your own name to all the people in Jerusalem, to Zephaniah son of Maaseiah and to the rest of the priests, as follows, ²⁶"The LORD appointed you priest in place of the priest Jehoiada, ^bto exercise authority^b in the House of the LORD over every madman who wants to play the prophet, to put him into the stocks^c and into the pillory.^c ²⁷Now why have you not rebuked Jeremiah the Anathothite, who plays the prophet among you? ²⁸For he has actually sent a message to us in Babylon to this effect: It will be a long time. Build houses and live in them, plant gardens and enjoy their fruit."—

²⁹When the priest Zephaniah read this letter in the hearing of the prophet Jeremiah, ³⁰the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah: ³¹Send a message to the entire exile community: "Thus said the LORD concerning Shemaiah the Nehelamite: Because Shemaiah prophesied to you, though I did not send him, and made you false promises, ³²assuredly, thus said the LORD: I am going to punish Shemaiah the Nehelamite and his offspring. There shall be no man of his line dwelling among this people or seeing the good things I am going to do for My people—declares the LORD—for he has urged disloyalty toward the LORD."

30 The word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD: ²Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: Write down in a scroll all the words that I have spoken to you. ³For days are coming—declares the LORD—when I will restore a I.e., Jeremiah.

b-b Lit. "that there might be officials."

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

24–28: Shemaiah the Nehelamite is apparently a prominent member of the exile who wrote to Zephaniah son of Maaseiah to demand that Jeremiah be rebuked. He is otherwise unknown. Zephaniah son of Maaseiah is the deputy priest of the Temple, who was later put to death after the fall of Jerusalem (52.24–26; cf. 21.1; 37.3). Jehoiada was the high priest in Jerusalem who restored the seven-year-old Joash on the throne after the attempted coup of Athaliah (2 Kings ch 11). 29–32: Jeremiah condemns Shemaiah as a false prophet who has urged disloyalty, a violation of Deut 13.6, and contends that he and his descendants will therefore never see the time of restoration.

30.1–31.40: Jeremiah's book of consolation. The poetic composition in chs 30–31 appears within the narrative material of the second half of the book; perhaps at an earlier stage it was the end of the book, following a tradition found in some prophetic books (Amos, Ezekiel), and continued in rabbinic tradition, that books should begin with rebuke and end with consolation. Because it looks forward to the return of Israel to the land, many interpreters maintain that it is an exilic or postexilic composition, but there is no reason to assume that all prophetic consolations were written after the restoration and falsely ascribed to prophets of rebuke. The emphasis on the return of Israel, Jacob, and Rachel to Jerusalem and Zion, however, suggests a plausible context of Josiah's efforts in the late 7th century to reunite northern Israel and Judah; these were later adapted to anticipate restoration after the exile. In its present position following chs 26–29, which focus on Babylonia as the instrument of divine action, chs 30–31 illustrate the prophet's message of consolation once the period of the exile concludes. Jer. 31.2–20 is the haftarah for the second day of Rosh Ha-Shanah. Its focus on the restoration of Rachel's lost children as a metaphor for the restoration of Israel corresponds to the deliverance of Isaac in the Torah portion (Gen. 22.1–24) and the continuance of creation and covenant for the coming year. 30.1–2: The initial prophetic word formula introduces the passage, but the repeated appearances of the so-called prophetic messenger formula, "koh 'amar YHWH," thus said the LORD, marks the individual oracles which comprise the text. God's instruction to write these words in a scroll suggests that they may have once functioned as a separate "booklet." Their ultimate purpose will be to fully vindicate Jeremiah as a true prophet, whose words have been fulfilled (28.9). 3: The initial oracle sets the theme for the whole, i.e., to restore and reunite Israel and Judah and rethe fortunes of My people Israel and Judah, said the LORD; and I will bring them back to the land that I gave their fathers, and they shall possess it. ⁴And these are the words that the LORD spoke concerning Israel and Judah:

5 Thus said the LORD:
We have heard cries of panic,
Terror without relief.
6 Ask and see:
Surely males do not bear young!
Why then do I see every man
With his hands on his loins
Like a woman in labor?
Why have all faces turned pale?
7 Ah, that day is awesome;
There is none like it!
It is a time of trouble for Jacob,
But he shall be delivered from it.

⁸In that day—declares the LORD of Hosts—I will break the yoke from off your neck and I will rip off your bonds. Strangers shall no longer make slaves of them; ⁹instead, they shall serve the LORD their God and David, the king whom I will raise up for them.

10 But you,
Have no fear, My servant Jacob
—declares the LORD—
Be not dismayed, O Israel!
I will deliver you from far away,
Your folk from their land of captivity.
And Jacob shall again have calm
And quiet with none to trouble him;
11 For I am with you to deliver you
—declares the LORD.
I will make an end of all the nations
Among which I have dispersed you;
But I will not make an end of you!
I will not leave you unpunished,
But will chastise you in measure.

12 For thus said the LORD:
Your injury is incurable,
Your wound severe;
13 ^aNo one pleads for the healing of your sickness;^a
There is no remedy, no recovery for you.
14 All your lovers have forgotten you, turn them to the land of Israel. The passage employs the formula, for days are coming, that appears at the beginning and end of these chs to point to the future (see 31.27, 31, 38). 4: This v. introduces the following oracles. 5-11: The oracle portrays a general scenario of panic and terror for the people, but promises that Jacob will be delivered. 7: Although the name Jacob has come to designate all Israel and Judah, it is especially associated with the Northern Kingdom of Israel (see Gen. chs 25-35; Hosea). The portrayal of men suffering in pain as if they were women giving birth illustrates the cataclysmic nature of the nation's distress. 8: The oracle alludes to the exodus tradition by promising that God will restore Israel from its oppressive slavery to other nations so that it might serve God and its Davidic king. 10-11: The statements, have no fear and I am with you to deliver you are typical features of the prophetic oracle of reassurance in Israel (cf. Gen. 15.1; 2 Kings 6.16; Isa. 7.4-9; 10.24-37; 37.6-7; 40.9; 41.10) and Mesopotamia. The designation of Jacob as God's servant anticipates the so-called "servant songs" of Second Isaiah (Isa. 42.1-4; 49.1-6; 50.4-11; 52.13-53.12). The oracle indicates that Israel will be punished, but not destroyed, following the typical prophetic idea of a remnant. 12-17: This oracle employs the metaphors of sickness and wounds to portray Israel's suffering, reversing the image of 8.21-22. As would be expected, a significant source for prophecies of consolation would be prophecies of destruction, which are overturned. Again, the image is crucial to Second Isaiah's servant songs (see Isa. 52.13-53.12). 14: Radak claims that all your lovers refers to the nations to whom Israel appealed for aid.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

They do not seek you out;
 For I have struck you as an enemy strikes,
 With cruel chastisement,
 Because your iniquity was so great
 And your sins so many.
 15 Why cry out over your injury,
 That your wound is incurable?
 I did these things to you
 Because your iniquity was so great
 And your sins so many.

16 Assuredly,
 All who wanted to devour you shall be devoured,
 And every one of your foes shall go into captivity;
 Those who despoiled you shall be despoiled,
 And all who pillaged you I will give up to pillage.
 17 But I will bring healing to you
 And cure you of your wounds
 —declares the LORD.

Though they called you "Outcast,
 That Zion whom no one seeks out,"
 18 Thus said the LORD:
 I will restore the fortunes of Jacob's tents
 And have compassion upon his dwellings.
 The city shall be rebuilt on its mound,^a
 And the fortress in its proper place.
 19 From them shall issue thanksgiving
 And the sound of dancers.
 I will multiply them,
 And they shall not be few;
 I will make them honored,
 And they shall not be humbled.
 20 His children shall be as of old,
 And his community shall be established by My grace;
 And I will deal with all his oppressors.
 21 His chieftain shall be one of his own,
 His ruler shall come from his midst;
 I will bring him near, that he may approach Me
 —declares the LORD—
 For who would otherwise dare approach Me?
 22 You shall be My people,
 And I will be your God.

30.18–31.1: The third oracle focuses on the rebuilding of the city of Jerusalem. 18: The initial statement, I will restore the fortunes of Jacob's tents / And have compassion upon his dwellings, may recall the blessing of Israel by the pagan prophet Balaam at the time of the wilderness wanderings, "How fair are your tents, O Jacob, Your dwellings, O Israel" (Num. 24.5). The mound ("tel") on which a city is built refers to the artificial hill of buried debris that accumulates as ancient cities are built, destroyed, and rebuilt on top of the remains of the old. 22: The covenant formula, you shall be My people, and I will be your God, marks the restoration of the relationship between God and Israel (see 7.23; 11.4; 31.33; 32.38).

^a i.e., on the mound of ruins left after its previous destruction.

23 Lo, the storm of the LORD goes forth in fury,
A raging tempest;
It shall whirl down upon the head of the wicked.

24 The anger of the LORD shall not turn back
Till it has fulfilled and completed His purposes.
In the days to come
You shall perceive it.

31 ^aAt that time—declares the LORD—I will be God to all the clans of Israel, and they shall be My people.

2 Thus said the LORD:
The people escaped from the sword,
Found favor in the wilderness;
When Israel was marching homeward
3 The LORD revealed Himself to me^b of old.
Eternal love I conceived for you then;
Therefore I continue My grace to you.
4 I will build you firmly again,
O Maiden Israel!
Again you shall take up your timbrels
And go forth to the rhythm of the dancers.
5 Again you shall plant vineyards
On the hills of Samaria;
Men shall plant and live to enjoy them.
6 For the day is coming when watchmen
Shall proclaim on the heights of Ephraim:
Come, let us go up to Zion,
To the LORD our God!

7 For thus said the LORD:
Cry out in joy for Jacob,
Shout at the crossroads^c of the nations!
Sing aloud in praise, and say:
^dSave, O LORD, Your people,^d
The remnant of Israel.
8 I will bring them in from the northland,
Gather them from the ends of the earth—
The blind and the lame among them,
Those with child and those in labor—
In a vast throng they shall return here.
9 They shall come with weeping,
And with compassion^e will I guide them.
I will lead them to streams of water,

24: The statement that the anger of the LORD shall not turn back/Till it has fulfilled and completed His purposes recalls Isaiah's earlier prophecies (Isa. 5.25; 9.11, 16, 20; 10.4) and anticipates Second Isaiah (Isa. 40.8; 55.11). 31.2–6: This oracle draws upon the wilderness traditions and the portrayal of Israel as God's bride (cf. ch 2; Hos. chs 1–3). It draws especially on the image of Miriam leading the women of Israel in dancing with timbrels at the Red Sea (Exod. 15.20–21). 5–6: The references to the hills of Samaria and Ephraim (the central tribe of northern Israel) suggest that this oracle originally addressed the Northern Kingdom of Israel in a call to return to Zion or the Jerusalem Temple in the south. The phrase, come, let us go up to Zion, recalls Isa. 2.3, 5; Mic. 4.2 (cf. Zech. 8.21). 7–14: This oracle continues to employ the imagery of the wilderness tradition to portray Israel's restoration and return to the land. 7: The remnant of Israel appears as a characteristic theme in Isaiah to portray the decimated people of Israel who will form the basis of the restoration (Isa. 4.2–6; 6.12–13; 7.4–9; 10.20–26; 37.30–32). 8: The reference to gathering Israel from the northland recalls both the exile of northern Israel to Mesopotamia, which requires travel to the north, and Jeremiah's warnings of an enemy kingdom from the north (chs 2–6).

a In some editions this verse is 30.25.

b Emendation yields "him." c Lit. "head."

d-d Emendation yields "The LORD has saved His people."

e For this meaning, cf. Zech. 12.10.

By a level road where they will not stumble.
For I am ever a Father to Israel,
Ephraim is My first-born.

10 Hear the word of the LORD, O nations,
And tell it in the isles afar.
Say:
He who scattered Israel will gather them,
And will guard them as a shepherd his flock.
11 For the LORD will ransom Jacob,
Redeem him from one too strong for him.
12 They shall come and shout on the heights of Zion,
Radiant over the bounty of the LORD—
Over new grain and wine and oil,
And over sheep and cattle.
They shall fare like a watered garden,
They shall never languish again.
13 Then shall maidens dance gaily,
Young men and old alike.
I will turn their mourning to joy,
I will comfort them and cheer them in their grief.
14 I will give the priests their fill of fatness,
And My people shall enjoy My full bounty
—declares the LORD.

15 Thus said the LORD:
A cry is heard ^ain Ramah^a—
Wailing, bitter weeping—
Rachel weeping for her children.
She refuses to be comforted
For her children, who are gone.
16 Thus said the LORD:
Restrain your voice from weeping,
Your eyes from shedding tears;
For there is a reward for your labor
—declares the LORD:
They shall return from the enemy's land.
17 And there is hope for your future
—declares the LORD:
Your children shall return to their country.

18 I can hear Ephraim lamenting:
You have chastised me, and I am chastised
Like a calf that has not been broken.
Receive me back, let me return,
For You, O LORD, are my God.

12: The portrayal of the land as a watered garden full of bounty contrasts with the arid wilderness and draws on traditions of God as creator and provider of rain and agricultural produce. 15: The portrayal of Israel as Rachel weeping for her lost children draws upon the tragic tradition of Rachel, Jacob's beloved wife, who died while giving birth to Benjamin. Although Gen. 35.16–21 places her tomb on the road to Bethlehem, where the current structure stands, 1 Sam. 10.2 suggests that her tomb was on the road to Ramah, near modern Ramallah. The present text portrays Rachel weeping not for herself, but for her lost children who have gone into exile. According to 40.1, 4, the Babylonians assembled Judeans destined for exile to Babylon at Ramah. The portrayal of Rachel weeping and bereft of children is reversed in Isa. ch 54, which employs the metaphor of a mother whose children are restored. According to Rab. Gen. 82.10, Jacob deliberately buried Rachel by the road because he knew that his descendants would pass by as they went into exile. She would then weep and intercede for their return. 16–22: This oracle provides an answer for Rachel's weeping by promising the return of her children. 18–19: Ephraim, a son of Joseph and the main tribe of northern Israel, symbolizes the Northern Kingdom.

a-a Or "on a height."

19 Now that I have turned back, I am filled with remorse;
Now that I am made aware, I strike my thigh.^a
I am ashamed and humiliated,
For I bear the disgrace of my youth.
20 Truly, Ephraim is a dear son to Me,
A child that is dandled!
Whenever I have turned^b against him,
My thoughts would dwell on him still.
That is why My heart yearns for him;
I will receive him back in love
—declares the LORD.

21 Erect markers,
Set up signposts;^c
Keep in mind the highway,
The road that you traveled.
Return, Maiden Israel!
Return to these towns of yours!
22 How long will you waver,
O rebellious daughter?
(For the LORD has created something new on earth:
A woman courts^d a man.)

²³Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: They shall again say this in the land of Judah and in its towns, when I restore their fortunes:
"The LORD bless you,
Abode of righteousness,
O holy mountain!"

²⁴Judah and all its towns alike shall be inhabited by the farmers and ^esuch as move about^d with the flocks. ²⁵For I will give the thirsty abundant drink, and satisfy all who languish.

²⁶At this I awoke and looked about, and my sleep^e had been pleasant to me.

²⁷See, a time is coming—declares the LORD—when I will sow the House of Israel and the House of Judah with seed of men and seed of cattle; ²⁸and just as I was watchful over them to uproot and to pull down, to overthrow and to destroy and to bring disaster, so I will be watchful over them to build and to plant—declares the LORD. ²⁹In

20: The return of the previously exiled Northern Kingdom is envisioned. 21–22: The image shifts to Israel, the bride who will return to God. The problematic phrase, a woman courts a man, lit. "a woman surrounds a man," apparently employs the imagery of gender reversal (cf. 30.6) to portray the highly unusual nature of the restoration. The Bible elsewhere presents brides who are brought to the man (Gen. 2.22; ch 24; 29.23). The statement provides a basis for the practice of a bride circling the groom seven times at a Jewish wedding. 23–34: This oracle portrays the restoration of Israel to its land and cities as part of a new covenant with God. As in the consolation prophecy in Ezek. 48.35, a new name reflects the changed status of the place. 26: The prophet awakens from a deep sleep in which he has seen a vision much like that of Abraham (cf. Gen. 15.12–21), who also saw the future captivity and exodus of his people while making a covenant with God. 28: The prophet's depiction of the future employs the verbs uproot, pull down, overthrow, destroy, build, and plant from his call narrative in 1.10 to portray both the punishment and the restoration of the people. 29: He quotes the proverb, Parents have eaten sour grapes and children's teeth are blunted (v. 29) to illustrate his view that only the guilty should be punished for their own sins (cf. Ezek. 18.2–4, which employs the proverb to make the same point). Unlike Ezekiel, however, who sees this principle of every person being punished for his sin as operative already in his own time, for Jeremiah, it will only be true in the future ("In those days").

a I.e., as a gesture of self-reproach. b Lit. "spoken."
c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d-d Lit. "they shall travel."
e I.e., the vision in the preceding verses.

those days, they shall no longer say, "Parents have eaten sour grapes and children's teeth are blunted."^a ³⁰But every one shall die for his own sins: whosoever eats sour grapes, his teeth shall be blunted.

³¹See, a time is coming—declares the LORD—when I will make a new covenant with the House of Israel and the House of Judah. ³²It will not be like the covenant I made with their fathers, when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt, a covenant which they broke, though I espoused^b them—declares the LORD. ³³But such is the covenant I will make with the House of Israel after these days—declares the LORD: I will put My Teaching into their inmost being and inscribe it upon their hearts. Then I will be their God, and they shall be My people. ³⁴No longer will they need to teach one another and say to one another, "Heed the LORD"; for all of them, from the least of them to the greatest, shall heed Me—declares the LORD.

For I will forgive their iniquities,
And remember their sins no more.

³⁵ Thus said the LORD,
Who established the sun for light by day,
The laws of moon and stars for light by night,
Who stirs up the sea into roaring waves,
Whose name is LORD of Hosts:
³⁶ If these laws should ever be annulled by Me
—declares the LORD—
Only then would the offspring of Israel cease
To be a nation before Me for all time.

³⁷Thus said the LORD: If the heavens above could be measured, and the foundations of the earth below could be fathomed, only then would I reject all the offspring of Israel for all that they have done—declares the LORD.

³⁸See, a time is coming—declares the LORD—when the city shall be rebuilt for the LORD from the Tower of Hanel to the Corner Gate; ³⁹and the measuring line shall go straight out to the Gareb Hill, and then turn toward Goah. ⁴⁰And the entire Valley of the Corpses and Ashes, and all the fields as far as the Wadi Kidron, and the corner of the Horse Gate on the east, shall be holy to the LORD. They shall never again be uprooted or overthrown.

31: The new covenant has been interpreted by Christians as a prophecy of the new covenant through Jesus (New Testament means new covenant), but here it refers to the restoration of Israel after the Babylonian exile and the reconstruction of the Temple. According to this passage, it is not the content of the new covenant which will be different, but how it is learned.

33–34: God places the Teaching, i.e., the Torah, in the inmost being or heart of the people so that the covenant cannot be broken again. This idea is developed in later Lurianic kabbalah, which maintains that all persons have a divine spark within. Since it is so inscribed, there will be no need for the Torah to be taught. 35–36: This oracle draws upon God's role as creator to promise that Israel's covenant assures its existence as a nation for the duration of all creation. 37–40: This oracle elaborates upon the preceding oracle. It portrays the rebuilding of Jerusalem. 38: The Tower of Hanel was located on the north wall of the city near the northeast corner (Neh. 3.1; 12.39; Zech. 14.10). The Corner Gate was located on the northwest wall (2 Kings 14.13; 2 Chron. 25.23; 26.9). 39: Gareb Hill and Goah are unknown. 40: The Valley of the Corpses and Ashes would refer to the Valley of Ben-Hinnom on the southwest side of the city where child sacrifice was practiced (7.31–32; 19.2, 6; 32.35; 2 Kings 23.10). The Wadi Kidron defines the eastern border of the biblical city of Jerusalem. The Horse Gate is located on the southeast corner (Neh. 3.28). As the site of the Temple, the city is holy to the LORD, never to be destroyed again.

^a Others "set on edge."

^b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; compare 3.14.

32 The word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD in the tenth year of King Zedekiah of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar. ²At that time the army of the king of Babylon was besieging Jerusalem, and the prophet Jeremiah was confined in the prison compound attached to the palace of the king of Judah. ³For King Zedekiah of Judah had confined him, saying, "How dare you prophesy: 'Thus said the LORD: I am delivering this city into the hands of the king of Babylon, and he shall capture it.' ⁴And King Zedekiah of Judah shall not escape from the Chaldeans; he shall be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon, and he shall speak to him face to face and see him in person." ⁵And Zedekiah shall be brought to Babylon, there to remain until I take note of him—declares the LORD. When you wage war against the Chaldeans, you shall not be successful. "

⁶Jeremiah said: The word of the LORD came to me: ⁷Hanamel, the son of your uncle Shallum, will come to you and say, "Buy my land in Anathoth, for you are next in succession to redeem it by purchase." ⁸And just as the LORD had said, my cousin Hanamel came to me in the prison compound and said to me, "Please buy my land in Anathoth, in the territory of Benjamin; for the right of succession is yours, and you have the duty of redemption. Buy it." Then I knew that it was indeed the word of the LORD.

⁹So I bought the land in Anathoth from my cousin Hanamel. I weighed out the money to him, seventeen shekels of silver. ¹⁰I wrote a deed, sealed it, and had it witnessed; and I weighed out the silver on a balance. ¹¹I took the deed of purchase, the sealed text and the open one according to rule and law, ¹²and gave the deed to Baruch son of Neriah son of Mahseiah in the presence of my kinsman Hanamel, of the witnesses who were named in the deed, and all the Judeans who were sitting in the prison compound. ¹³In their presence I charged Baruch as follows: ¹⁴Thus said the a-a Lit. "and his mouth shall speak with his mouth, and his eyes shall see his eyes."

b-b Lit. "for yours is the procedure of redemption by purchase."

c-c Force of Heb. uncertain.

d-d With many mss. and ancient versions; so ancient Near Eastern practice. Other mss. and the editions read "who wrote" (i.e., signed their names).

32.1–33.26: Jeremiah's symbolic actions and oracles concerning the restoration. The prophetic word formula in v. 1 introduces a new section in which Jeremiah's attempt to redeem his family's land in Anathoth becomes a metaphor for God's promise to restore Jerusalem, the house of David, and the Levitical priesthood once the punishment is over. It thus continues in prose form the poetry of the previous two chs.

32.1–44: Jeremiah's attempt to redeem family property in Anathoth. The tenth year of King Zedekiah would be 588 BCE when the Babylonian army invaded Judah a second time to put down the Judean revolt. Zedekiah imprisoned Jeremiah for treason because of his claims that God had given Jerusalem into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar. He was apparently arrested when he attempted to leave the city during a lull in the fighting to redeem family property in Anathoth (see 37.11–21). Jer. 32.6–27 is the haftarah for the parashah of Be-har (Lev. 25.1–26.2), which relates the laws concerning the redemption of property in sabbatical and jubilee years. 6–15: Jeremiah relates God's instructions concerning the request of his cousin Hanamel to redeem the property of his father, Shallum (Jeremiah's uncle), in Anathoth. Although Jeremiah is imprisoned, he is able to complete the transaction. Lev. 25.25–28 indicates that a person might sell property to pay a debt, but family members had the first right to redeem the land. The details offered in these vv. add to the limited material we have from elsewhere to explain how property was transferred. 9: The price of seventeen shekels, lit. "seven shekels and ten pieces of silver," could not have been very high since the annual Temple tax for an adult male was fifty shekels (Lev. 27.2) and the field of Ephron in Machpelah, where Abraham buried Sarah, was sold for 400 shekels (Gen. ch 23). The low price may be explained by the fact that the sale takes place during a siege. 12: The sale is documented by Jeremiah's scribe, Baruch son of Neriah son of Mahseiah. The name Baruch son of Neriah appears on a clay bulla found inside a house in the city of Jerusalem that was destroyed during the Babylonian siege, and many believe that this bulla, which was originally used in ancient Israel to seal a document, belonged to the same individual. The role of Baruch in Jeremiah is greater than the role of a scribe in any other prophetic work

LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: "Take these documents, this deed of purchase, the sealed text and the open one, and put them into an earthen jar, so that they may last a long time."¹⁵ For thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: "Houses, fields, and vineyards shall again be purchased in this land."

¹⁶ But after I had given the deed to Baruch son of Neriah, I prayed to the LORD: ¹⁷ "Ah, Lord GOD! You made heaven and earth with Your great might and outstretched arm. Nothing is too wondrous for You! ¹⁸ You show kindness to the thousandth generation, but visit the guilt of the fathers upon their children after them. O great and mighty God whose name is LORD of Hosts, ¹⁹ wondrous in purpose and mighty in deed, whose eyes observe all the ways of men, so as to repay every man according to his ways, and with the proper fruit of his deeds! ²⁰ You displayed signs and marvels in the land of Egypt^a with lasting effect,^a and won renown in Israel and among mankind to this very day. ²¹ You freed Your people Israel from the land of Egypt with signs and marvels, with a strong hand and an outstretched arm, and with great terror. ²² You gave them this land that You had sworn to their fathers to give them, a land flowing with milk and honey, ²³ and they came and took possession of it. But they did not listen to You or follow Your Teaching; they did nothing of what You commanded them to do. Therefore you have caused all this misfortune to befall them. ²⁴ Here are the siegemounds, raised against the city to storm it; and the city, because of sword and famine and pestilence, is at the mercy of the Chaldeans who are attacking it. What You threatened has come to pass—as You see. ²⁵ Yet You, Lord GOD, said to me: Buy the land for money and call in witnesses—when the city is at the mercy of the Chaldeans!"

²⁶ Then the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah:

²⁷ "Behold I am the LORD, the God of all flesh. Is anything too wondrous for Me? ²⁸ Assuredly, thus said the LORD: I am delivering this city into the hands of the Chaldeans and of King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon, and he shall capture it. ²⁹ And the Chaldeans who have been attacking this city shall come and set this city on fire and burn it down—with the houses on whose roofs they made offerings to Baal and poured out libations to other gods, so as to vex Me. ³⁰ For the people of Israel and Judah have done nothing but evil in My sight since their youth; the (see esp. ch 36), leading some to suggest that Jeremiah was illiterate. 15: Jeremiah clearly understands his purchase to be a sign of his confidence in the future of Judah once the punishment is over. 16–25: Jeremiah's prayer to God provides the basic outlines of God's relationship with Israel from the time of the exodus (cf. Deut. ch 26—as in that chapter, Sinai is not mentioned) and articulates his view that the Babylonian invasion and siege is a divinely ordained punishment for Israel's disobedience of God's Teaching (v. 23). The same Heb word, "torah," may refer to the Torah or to teaching(s) in general, and it is very difficult to know when it should be translated as Torah, namely the five books of Moses, more or less in the form they now exist, or a more amorphous set of teachings.

26–44: God's answer to Jeremiah elaborates upon the prophet's attempt to explain the reasons for Judah's current plight, but it also points to future restoration once the punishment is over.

a-a Lit. "to this day."

people of Israel have done nothing but vex Me by their conduct—declares the LORD. ³¹This city has aroused My anger and My wrath from the day it was built until this day; so that it must be removed from My sight ³²because of all the wickedness of the people of Israel and Judah who have so acted as to vex Me—they, their kings, their officials, their priests and prophets, and the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem. ³³They turned their backs to Me, not their faces; though I have taught them persistently, they do not give heed or accept rebuke. ³⁴They placed their abominations in the House which bears My name and defiled it; ³⁵and they built the shrines of Baal which are in the Valley of Ben-hinnom, where they offered up their sons and daughters to Molech—when I had never commanded, or even thought [of commanding], that they should do such an abominable thing, and so bring guilt on Judah.

³⁶But now, assuredly, thus said the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning this city of which you say, “It is being delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon through the sword, through famine, and through pestilence”: ³⁷See, I will gather them from all the lands to which I have banished them in My anger and wrath, and in great rage; and I will bring them back to this place and let them dwell secure. ³⁸They shall be My people, and I will be their God. ³⁹I will give them a single heart and a single nature to revere Me for all time, and it shall be well with them and their children after them. ⁴⁰And I will make an everlasting covenant with them that I will not turn away from them and that I will treat them graciously; and I will put into their hearts reverence for Me, so that they do not turn away from Me. ⁴¹I will delight in treating them graciously, and I will plant them in this land faithfully, with all My heart and soul.

⁴²For thus said the LORD: As I have brought this terrible disaster upon this people, so I am going to bring upon them the vast good fortune which I have promised for them. ⁴³And fields shall again be purchased in this land of which you say, “It is a desolation, without man or beast; it is delivered into the hands of the Chaldeans.”

⁴⁴Fields shall be purchased, and deeds written and sealed, and witnesses called in the land of Benjamin and in the environs of Jerusalem, and in the towns of Judah; the towns of the hill country, the towns of the Shephelah, and the towns of the Negeb. For I will restore their fortunes—declares the LORD.

40: God promises an everlasting covenant in which the people will look to God and God will ensure their security in the land. Everlasting covenants were made with Noah (Gen. 9.16; cf. Isa. 24.5 in which it is broken); Abraham (Gen. 17.7, 19); Israel (Exod. 31.16; Lev. 24.8, for the Shabbat); Phineas the priest (Num. 25.13); David (2 Sam. 23.5); Israel (Isa. 55.3, after the pattern of David); and Jerusalem (Ezek. 16.60). Obedience is placed into their hearts, as in 31.33.

44: Jeremiah's hometown of Anathoth is located in the territory of Benjamin.

33 The word of the LORD came to Jeremiah a second time, while he was still confined in the prison compound, as follows:

² Thus said the LORD who is planning it,
The LORD who is shaping it to bring it about,
Whose name is LORD:

³ Call to Me, and I will answer you,
And I will tell you wondrous things,
Secrets you have not known.

⁴For thus said the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning the houses of this city and the palaces of the kings of Judah that were torn down ^afor [defense] against the siegemounds and against the sword, ⁵and were filled by those who went to fight the Chaldeans,^a—with the corpses of the men whom I struck down in My anger and rage, hiding My face from this city because of all their wickedness: ⁶I am going to bring her relief and healing. I will heal them and reveal to them abundance^a of true favor. ⁷And I will restore the fortunes of Judah and Israel, and I will rebuild them as of old. ⁸And I will purge them of all the sins which they committed against Me, and I will pardon all the sins which they committed against Me, by which they rebelled against Me. ⁹And she shall gain through Me renown, joy, fame, and glory above all the nations on earth, when they hear of all the good fortune I provide for them.^b They will thrill and quiver because of all the good fortune and all the prosperity that I provide for her.

¹⁰Thus said the LORD: Again there shall be heard in this place, which you say is ruined, without man or beast—in the towns of Judah and the streets of Jerusalem that are desolate, without man, without inhabitants, without beast—¹¹the sound of mirth and gladness, the voice of bridegroom and bride, the voice of those who cry, “Give thanks to the LORD of Hosts, for the LORD is good, for His kindness is everlasting!” as they bring thanksgiving offerings to the House of the LORD. For I will restore the fortunes of the land as of old—said the LORD.

¹²Thus said the LORD of Hosts: In this ruined place, without man and beast, and in all its towns, there shall again be a pasture for shepherds, where they can rest their flocks. ¹³In the towns of the hill country, in the towns of the Shephelah, and in the towns of the Negeb, in the land of Benjamin and in the environs of Jerusalem and in the 33.1–26: Oracles concerning the restoration. A second set of oracles continues the focus on the coming restoration, but emphasizes that the House of David and the Levitical priesthood will also be a part of God’s everlasting covenant with Israel. 2–9: The divine oracle begins with a hymnic passage that relates God’s role as creator. The interest in God’s plans appears frequently in Isaiah as a means to explain disaster by asserting that God plans from the beginning to bring deliverance after a period of punishment (Isa. 10.13; 14.27; 28.23–29; 55.11). 3: God’s assurance of an answer when the people appeal reverses the statements of Isa. 1.15. 5–6: God elaborates on this statement by claiming to bring relief for all the destruction that was visited upon the city and the palaces of the kings. Jeremiah’s oracle here presupposes that God will no longer hide His face from Israel (contra Isa. 8.17). 10–11: The celebration of weddings in the restored land is a reversal of earlier prophecies in 7.34; 16.9; 25.10. The refrain, Give thanks to the LORD of Hosts, for the LORD is good, for His kindness is everlasting (v. 11), appears in Pss. 106.1; 118.1; 136.1; Ezra 3.11, and in many contemporary liturgical settings. 12–18: The restoration will also include farms and husbandry. 13: The Shephelah refers to the low hills of southwestern Judah that border Philistia. The Negeb is the desert region to the south of the Judean hill country. Benjamin is the tribal territory to the north and east of Jerusalem.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b I.e., for Judah and Israel.

towns of Judah, sheep shall pass again under the hands of one who counts them—said the LORD. ¹⁴See, days are coming—declares the LORD—when I will fulfill the promise that I made concerning the House of Israel and the House of Judah. ¹⁵In those days and at that time, I will raise up a true branch of David's line, and he shall do what is just and right in the land. ¹⁶In those days Judah shall be delivered and Israel shall dwell secure. And this is what she shall be called: "The LORD is our Vindicator." ¹⁷For thus said the LORD: There shall never be an end to men of David's line who sit upon the throne of the House of Israel. ¹⁸Nor shall there ever be an end to the line of the levitical priests before Me, of those who present burnt offerings and turn the meal offering to smoke and perform sacrifices.

¹⁹The word of the LORD came to Jeremiah: ²⁰Thus said the LORD: If you could break My covenant with the day and My covenant with the night, so that day and night should not come at their proper time, ²¹only then could My covenant with My servant David be broken—so that he would not have a descendant reigning upon his throne—or with My ministrants, the levitical priests. ²²Like the host of heaven which cannot be counted, and the sand of the sea which cannot be measured, so will I multiply the offspring of My servant David, and of the Levites who minister to Me.

²³The word of the LORD came to Jeremiah: ²⁴You see what this people said: "The two families which the LORD chose have now been rejected by Him." Thus they despise My people, and regard them as no longer a nation. ²⁵Thus said the LORD: As surely as I have established My covenant with day and night—the laws of heaven and earth—²⁶so I will never reject the offspring of Jacob and My servant David; I will never fail to take from his offspring rulers for the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Indeed, I will restore their fortunes and take them back in love.

34 The word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD, when King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon and all his army, and all the kingdoms of the earth and all the peoples under his sway, were waging war against Jerusalem and all its towns:

²Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: Go speak to a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

15: The prophet states that the House of David will be included in the restoration, i.e., Davidic kingship will be restored as well. The reference to the true branch of David's line draws on Isa. 11.1–16, which portrays the righteous Davidic monarch as a branch ("tsemah") from the root of Jesse, language which is at home in the agriculturally centered world of ancient Israel, and is reused in the blessing of the "'Amidah" requesting the restoration of the Davidic monarchy. David was promised an eternal dynasty (2 Sam. ch 7) and eternal covenant (2 Sam. 23.5). Narratives concerning Solomon's prayer qualify the promise, however, by stating that the Davidic line will rule forever if it is righteous (1 Kings 8.22–26; 9.3–9; cf. Ps. 132.11–12). 16: Note a similar renaming in 31.23. 17: Jeremiah's version of the Davidic promise reverts to the unconditioned model of 2 Sam. chs 7, 23. 18: It adds an eternal promise to the Levitical priesthood, perhaps building on the priestly eternal covenant promised to Phineas son of Eleazar son of Aaron (Num. 25.13). The promise of a righteous Davidic branch was read as a reference to the priesthood in Zechariah, where the high priest and king seem to rule in tandem in the early postexilic period (Zech. 6.9–15; cf. 3.8). 19–22: The covenant with David and the Levites is equated with the covenant that ensures the stability of the cosmos (Gen. 9.8–17; cf. Exod. 31.16–17; Ps. 89.20–38). 23–26: This oracle is designed to counter arguments that God had abandoned the families of Jacob and David.

34.1–7: Jeremiah's oracle concerning King Zedekiah. 1: The initial v. sets the passage in the time of Nebuchadrezzar's siege of Jerusalem in 588 BCE. 5: The promise of a peaceful death for Zedekiah resembles the oracle of the prophetess Huldah to Zedekiah's father Josiah (2 Kings 22.14–20; 2 Chron. 34.22–28) and contrasts markedly with Jeremiah's oracle for Jehoia-kim (36.27–31; cf. 22.24–30). Jer.

King Zedekiah of Judah, and say to him: "Thus said the LORD: I am going to deliver this city into the hands of the king of Babylon, and he will destroy it by fire.³ And you will not escape from him; you will be captured and handed over to him.^a And you will see the king of Babylon face to face and speak to him in person;^a and you will be brought to Babylon. ⁴But hear the word of the LORD, O King Zedekiah of Judah! Thus said the LORD concerning you: You will not die by the sword.⁵ You will die a peaceful death; and as incense^b was burned for your ancestors, the earlier kings who preceded you, so they will burn incense^b for you, and they will lament for you 'Ah, lord!' For I Myself have made the promise—declares the LORD."

⁶The prophet Jeremiah spoke all these words to King Zedekiah of Judah in Jerusalem, ⁷when the army of the king of Babylon was waging war against Jerusalem and against the remaining towns of Judah—against Lachish and Azekah, for they were the only fortified towns of Judah that were left.

⁸The word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD after King Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people in Jerusalem to proclaim a release^c among them—⁹that everyone should set free his Hebrew slaves, both male and female, and that no one should keep his fellow Judean enslaved.

¹⁰Everyone, officials and people, who had entered into the covenant agreed to set their male and female slaves free and not keep them enslaved any longer; they complied and let them go. ¹¹But afterward they turned about and brought back the men and women they had set free, and forced them into slavery again. ¹²Then it was that the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah from the LORD:

¹³Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: I made a covenant with your fathers when I brought them out of the land of Egypt, the house of bondage, saying: ¹⁴"In the seventh year^d each of you must let go any fellow Hebrew^e who may be sold^e to you; when he has served you six years, you must set him free." But your fathers would not obey Me or give ear. ¹⁵Lately you turned about and did what is proper in My sight, and each of you proclaimed a release to his countrymen; and you made a covenant ac-

52.7–11 (cf. 2 Kings 25.4–7) states that Zedekiah is in a Babylonian prison, having seen his sons slaughtered before his own eyes were put out, thus this is likely an unfulfilled prophecy of Jeremiah. It is quite remarkable that such prophecies were preserved. 7: Lachish and Azekah were fortified Judean cities located respectively 60 km (35 mi) and 25 km (15 mi) southwest of Jerusalem in the Shephelah.

34.8–22: The oracle concerning slaves. This oracle attempts to provide justification for Zedekiah's punishment by accusing him of renegeing on an agreement to release slaves during the siege of Jerusalem. 14: According to the slave laws of Deut. 15.1–18; Exod. 21.1–11 (cf. Lev. 25.39–55), a person could become a slave to repay a debt. The laws specify six years as the period of time for such service. A man goes free in the seventh year, unless he formally and publicly declares his willingness to remain a slave forever (the laws for women differ between the two texts). According to Lev. ch 25, a "release" or "jubilee" is proclaimed every fiftieth year (seven weeks of years) so that property that was sold to pay a debt reverts to its original owner (the sale actually functions as a sort of loan in which the creditor gains use of the property for the specified period of time). This text in Jeremiah generally follows the law as it appears in Deut. ch 15, which is not surprising given the affinities of Jeremiah to Deuteronomy. The Deuteronomy text, however, seems to suggest that the slave is released at the beginning of the seventh year of service, while Jeremiah seems to understand this, perhaps based on the broader context of Deut. ch 15 (see esp. vv. 1–6), as meaning that all slaves are released at each sabbatical (seventh) year. 15–16: Perhaps Zedekiah entered into an agreement to declare a release for all slaves in the city, so that they would be free to participate in Jerusalem's defense, and when the Babylonians lifted the siege of the a-a For the idiom see note at 32.4. b Lit. "burnings." c Others "liberty."

d I.e., of servitude. Lit. "After a period of seven years"; cf. Deut. 14.28 and 15.1.
e-e Or "who sells himself."

ingly before Me in the House which bears My name. ¹⁶But now you have turned back and have profaned My name; each of you has brought back the men and women whom you had given their freedom, and forced them to be your slaves again.

¹⁷Assuredly, thus said the LORD: You would not obey Me and proclaim a release, each to his kinsman and countryman. Lo! I proclaim your release—declares the LORD—to the sword, to pestilence, and to famine; and I will make you a horror to all the kingdoms of the earth. ¹⁸I will make the men who violated My covenant, who did not fulfill the terms of the covenant which they made before Me, [like] the calf which they cut in two so as to pass between the halves:^a ¹⁹The officers of Judah and Jerusalem, the officials, the priests, and all the people of the land who passed between the halves of the calf ²⁰shall be handed over to their enemies, to those who seek to kill them. Their carcasses shall become food for the birds of the sky and the beasts of the earth. ²¹I will hand over King Zedekiah of Judah and his officers to their enemies, who seek to kill them—to the army of the king of Babylon which has withdrawn from you. ²²I hereby give the command—declares the LORD—by which I will bring them back against this city. They shall attack it and capture it, and burn it down. I will make the towns of Judah a desolation, without inhabitant.

35 The word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD in the days of King Jehoiakim son of Josiah of Judah:

²Go to the house of the Rechabites and speak to them, and bring them to the House of the LORD, to one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink.

³So I took Jaazaniah son of Jeremiah son of Habazziah, and his brothers, all his sons, and the whole household of the Rechabites; ⁴and I brought them to the House of the LORD, to the chamber of the sons of Hanan son of Igdaliah, the man of God, which is next to the chamber of the officials and above the chamber of Maaseiah son of Shallum, the guardian of the threshold. ⁵I set bowls full of wine and cups before the men of the house of the Rechabites, and said to them, "Have some wine."

⁶They replied, "We will not drink wine, for our ances-

^a Cf. Gen. 15.9–10, 17–21.

city to fight a relief force sent by Egypt (see ch 37), Zedekiah and the creditors reneged, forcing those freed to return to their slave status. 17: God invokes a type of measure for measure: The Judeans did not release slaves, so God will release destruction. Measure for measure is very common in the Bible, especially in prophetic punishments. 18: Jeremiah cites the practice of passing between the halves of a slaughtered calf to make (lit. "cut") a covenant. The practice is attested in the Bible (Gen. 15.7–21) and in ancient Near Eastern treaties. The parties to an agreement pass between the two halves of slaughtered animals that represent what will happen to them if they violate the terms of the agreement. The practice functions as a formal ratification of an agreement. 21: Because Zedekiah violated the covenant or agreement that he had made, Jeremiah contends that he is now subject to punishment at the hands of the Babylonians. Jer. 34.8–22; 33.35, 26 is the haftarah for the parashah of Mishpatim (Exod. 21.1–24.18), which contains the first collection of law from Sinai, beginning with the slave law.

35.1–39.18: The fall of Jerusalem. The prophetic word formula introduces a block of text that culminates in the fall of Jerusalem to the Babylonian army in 586 BCE (ch 39). The preceding chs illustrate why Jerusalem fell, beginning with the example of the Rechabites who were faithful to their own tradition (ch 35), King Jehoiakim's rejection of Jeremiah's oracles (ch 36), and the prophet's subsequent imprisonment for treason during the siege of the city (chs 37–38).

35.1–19: The example of the Rechabites. The prophetic word formula places this narrative in the reign of Jehoiakim, in an effort to demonstrate that the reasons for Jerusalem's punishment go back at least to his reign. The Rechabites were an ancient religious group founded by Jonadab son of Rechab, who assisted Jehu in his successful revolt against the house of Omri in 842 BCE (2 Kings 10.15–28). Biblical tradition identifies the Rechabites as Kenites (1 Chron. 2.55), who would be descended from Moses' Kenite father-in-law, Jethro (Judg. 1.16; Exod. 3.1; 18.1), who in turn would be descended from Cain, after whom the Kenites are named (Gen. 4.1–16). 6–8: Their prohibi-

tor, Jonadab son of Rechab, commanded us: 'You shall never drink wine, either you or your children. ⁷Nor shall you build houses or sow fields^a or plant vineyards, nor shall you own such things; but you shall live in tents all your days, so that you may live long upon the land where you sojourn.' ⁸And we have obeyed our ancestor Jonadab son of Rechab in all that he commanded us: we never drink wine, neither we nor our wives nor our sons and daughters. ⁹Nor do we build houses to live in, and we do not own vineyards or fields for sowing; ¹⁰but we live in tents. We have obeyed and done all that our ancestor Jonadab commanded us. ¹¹But when King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon invaded the country, we said, 'Come, let us go into Jerusalem because of the army of the Chaldeans and the army of Aram.' And so we are living in Jerusalem."

¹²Then the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah:

¹³Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: Go say to the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem: "You can learn a lesson [here] about obeying My commands—declares the LORD. ¹⁴The commands of Jonadab son of Rechab have been fulfilled: he charged his children not to drink wine, and to this day they have not drunk, in obedience to the charge of their ancestor. But I spoke to you persistently, and you did not listen to Me. ¹⁵I persistently sent you all My servants, the prophets, to say: 'Turn back, every one of you, from your wicked ways and mend your deeds; do not follow other gods or serve them. Then you may remain on the land that I gave to you and your fathers.' But you did not give ear or listen to Me. ¹⁶The family of Jonadab son of Rechab have indeed fulfilled the charge which their ancestor gave them; but this people has not listened to Me. ¹⁷Assuredly, thus said the LORD, the God of Hosts, the God of Israel: I am going to bring upon Judah and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem all the disaster with which I have threatened them; for I spoke to them, but they would not listen; I called to them, but they would not respond."

¹⁸And to the family of the Rechabites Jeremiah said: "Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: Because you have obeyed the charge of your ancestor Jonadab and kept all his commandments, and done all that he enjoined upon you, ¹⁹assuredly, thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: There shall never cease to be a man of the line of Jonadab son of Rechab standing before Me."

tion against drinking wine resembles a part of the Nazirite vow by which a person sanctifies him- or herself for divine service like a priest for the duration of the vow by refraining from wine, contact with the dead, and cutting the hair (Num. 6.1–21; cf. Judg. chs 13–16; 1 Sam. ch 1; iii. Naz.; b. Naz.).

7: The exact reasons for these prohibitions are unclear, though possibly the Rechabites are to live as a bedouin group after the manner of their ancestor Jethro, priest of Midian. 9: They are neither Nazirites nor priests, although the concluding expression, standing before Me (v. 19), suggests a priestly role much like Jethro's. God instructs Jeremiah to use the Rechabites as an example of faithfulness to a religious tradition in order to emphasize the charges that Judah has not been faithful to its own tradition. 18–19: Although punishment in Jeremiah is generally viewed as corporate, i.e., all Israel is to be punished for the sins of any of its members, these vv. exempt the extremely righteous Rechabites from the full fury of the impending disaster.

^a Lit. "seed."

36 In the fourth year of King Jehoiakim son of Josiah of Judah, this word came to Jeremiah from the LORD:

²Get a scroll and write upon it all the words that I have spoken to you—concerning Israel and Judah and all the nations—from the time I first spoke to you in the days of Josiah to this day. ³Perhaps when the House of Judah hear of all the disasters I intend to bring upon them, they will turn back from their wicked ways, and I will pardon their iniquity and their sin. ⁴So Jeremiah called Baruch son of Neriah; and Baruch wrote down in the scroll, at Jeremiah's dictation, all the words which the LORD had spoken to him.

⁵Jeremiah instructed Baruch, "I am in hiding; I cannot go to the House of the LORD. ⁶But you go and read aloud the words of the LORD from the scroll which you wrote at my dictation, to all the people in the House of the LORD on a fast day; thus you will also be reading them to all the Judeans who come in from the towns. ⁷Perhaps their entreaty will be accepted by the LORD, if they turn back from their wicked ways. For great is the anger and wrath with which the LORD has threatened this people."

⁸Baruch son of Neriah did just as the prophet Jeremiah had instructed him, about reading the words of the LORD from the scroll in the House of the LORD. ⁹In the ninth month of the fifth year of King Jehoiakim son of Josiah of Judah, all the people in Jerusalem and all the people coming from Judah proclaimed a fast before the LORD in Jerusalem. ¹⁰It was then that Baruch—in the chamber of Gemariah son of Shaphan the scribe, in the upper court, near the new gateway of the House of the LORD—read the words of Jeremiah from the scroll to all the people in the House of the LORD.

¹¹Micaiah son of Gemariah son of Shaphan heard all the words of the LORD [read] from the scroll, ¹²and he went down to the king's palace, to the chamber of the scribe. There he found all the officials in session: Elishama the scribe, Delaiah son of Shemaiah, Elnathan son of Achbor, Gemariah son of Shaphan, Zedekiah son of Hananiah, and all the other officials. ¹³And Micaiah told them all

36.1–32: Jehoiakim's burning of Jeremiah's scroll. This ch offers remarkably important evidence for the writing and re-editing of prophetic books. 1: The fourth year of . . . Jehoiakim is 605 BCE, the year that the Babylonians defeated

Egypt at Carchemish and took control of Judah. The date suggests that this narrative coincides with Jeremiah's oracle that calls for a seventy-year period of Babylonian rule (25.1). 2–3: God instructs Jeremiah to record his prophecies from the time . . . of Josiah to the present on a scroll. Many interpreters maintain that this would be an early edition of the book of Jeremiah, comprising elements from chs 1–20 or 1–25. The reference to the nations suggests that elements from the oracles concerning the nations in chs 46–51 would also have been included. The Septuagint version of Jeremiah, thought by many to be based on an earlier Hebrew edition of the book, places the oracles concerning the nations immediately after ch 25. 4–8: Jeremiah instructs the scribe, Baruch son of Neriah (cf. 32.12), to prepare the scroll so that he might read it publicly. This suggests to some that Jeremiah was illiterate, unable to write his own scroll. 5: Jeremiah is in hiding presumably because he is subject to arrest as a result of his support for Babylonia. 8: Many interpreters maintain that Baruch is the final compiler of the book of Jeremiah and author of its narratives concerning the prophet's life. Several apocryphal and pseudepigraphical books are attributed to him (Baruch; 2–4 Baruch). His name appears on a clay bulla found in the excavations of the scribe's house in Jerusalem (see 32.12 n.). His brother Seraiah was also a royal official (51.59). 9–18: Following his compliance with Jeremiah's instructions, Baruch is summoned by the royal scribes to read the scroll to them. 10: Gemariah son of Shaphan is a son of Josiah's secretary (2 Kings 24.3) and brother of Ahikam son of Shaphan who interceded on the prophet's behalf at his sedition trial (26.24). The scroll would have been read to him first as a potential ally among the scribes. 11–12: His son, Micaiah son of Gemariah son of Shaphan, reports the matter to the scribes in session at the royal palace. Elishama is otherwise unknown in the Bible, although his name appears in bullae from the scribe's house (see 32.12 n.). Delaiah son of Shemaiah is otherwise unknown. Elnathan son of Achbor would presumably be hostile to Jeremiah since he was sent to Egypt to fetch the prophet that he had heard as Baruch read from the scroll in the hearing of the people.

¹⁴Then all the officials sent Jehudi son of Nethaniah son of Shelemiah son of Cushi to say to Baruch, "Take that scroll from which you read to the people, and come along!" And Baruch took the scroll and came to them.

¹⁵They said, ^a"Sit down and read it^a to us." And Baruch read it to them. ¹⁶When they heard all these words, they turned to each other in fear; and they said to Baruch, "We must report all this to the king."

¹⁷And they questioned Baruch further, "Tell us how you wrote down all these words ^bthat he spoke."^b ¹⁸He answered them, "He himself recited all those words to me, and I would write them down in the scroll in ink."

¹⁹The officials said to Baruch, "Go into hiding, you and Jeremiah. Let no man know where you are!" ²⁰And they went to the king in the court, after leaving the scroll in the chamber of the scribe Elishama. And they reported all these matters to the king.

²¹The king sent Jehudi to get the scroll and he fetched it from the chamber of the scribe Elishama. Jehudi read it to the king and to all the officials who were in attendance on the king. ²²Since it was the ninth month, the king was sitting in the winter house, with a fire burning in the brazier before him. ²³And every time Jehudi read three or four columns, [the king] would cut it up with a scribe's knife and throw it into the fire in the brazier, until the entire scroll was consumed by the fire in the brazier. ²⁴Yet the king and all his courtiers who heard all these words showed no fear and did not tear their garments; ²⁵moreover, Elnathan, Delaiah, and Gemariah begged the king not to burn the scroll, but he would not listen to them.

²⁶The king ordered Jerahmeel, the king's son, and Seraiah son of Azriel, and Shelemiah son of Abdeel to arrest the scribe Baruch and the prophet Jeremiah. But the LORD hid them.

²⁷The word of the LORD came to Jeremiah after the king had burned the scroll containing the words that Baruch had written at Jeremiah's dictation: ²⁸Get yourself another scroll, and write upon it the same words that were in the first scroll that was burned by King Jehoiakim of Judah. ²⁹And concerning King Jehoiakim of Judah you shall say: Thus said the LORD: You burned that scroll, say-

Uriah who was executed for sedition (26.25). He may also have been Jehoiachin's maternal grandfather (2 Kings 24.8). The name Achbor also appears on a bullae. Zedekiah son of Hananiah is otherwise unknown, although he could be the son of the prophet Hananiah (ch 28). 14: Jehudi son of Nethaniah son of Shelemiah son of Cushi is otherwise unknown. 19-26: The king's reaction is then described. The scene shows the bit-by-bit destruction of the scroll, vividly dramatizing how offensive its message was to the king and how intent he was on getting rid of it. 19: Because the prophet's message is considered seditious, the scribes advise Baruch to go into hiding with Jeremiah. 22: The ninth month is Kislev (November/December). The king's response upon hearing the scroll expresses his contempt for or fear of Jeremiah's message. 25: Although Elnathan, Delaiah, and Gemariah intercede for Jeremiah and Baruch, Jehoiakim orders their arrest. 26: Jerahmeel, Seraiah son of Azriel, and Shelemiah son of Abdeel are otherwise unknown. Versions of the names Jerahmeel, Seraiah, Azriel, and Abdeel appear among the bullae from Jerusalem. 27-32: God's instructs Jeremiah to write another scroll, which many also see as an early edition of the book. The final words of the v., "and more of the like was added," clearly reflect the fact that the book went through subsequent editions.

a-a Change of vocalization yields "Read it again"; cf. Targum and Septuagint.

b-b Force of Heb. uncertain.

ing, "How dare you write in it that the king of Babylon will come and destroy this land and cause man and beast to cease from it?" ³⁰Assuredly, thus said the LORD concerning King Jehoiakim of Judah: He shall not have any of his line sitting on the throne of David; and his own corpse shall be left exposed to the heat by day and the cold by night. ³¹And I will punish him and his offspring and his courtiers for their iniquity; I will bring on them and on the inhabitants of Jerusalem and on all the men of Judah all the disasters of which I have warned them—but they would not listen.

³²So Jeremiah got another scroll and gave it to the scribe Baruch son of Neriah. And at Jeremiah's dictation, he wrote in it the whole text of the scroll that King Jehoiakim of Judah had burned; and more of the like was added.

37 Zedekiah son of Josiah became king instead of Coniah son of Jehoiakim, for King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon set him up as king over the land of Judah. ²Neither he nor his courtiers nor the people of the land gave heed to the words which the LORD spoke through the prophet Jeremiah.

³Yet King Zedekiah sent Jehucal son of Shelemiah and Zephaniah son of the priest Maaseiah to the prophet Jeremiah, to say, "Please pray on our behalf to the LORD our God." ⁴(Jeremiah could still go in and out among the people, for they had not yet put him in prison. ⁵The army of Pharaoh had set out from Egypt; and when the Chaldeans who were besieging Jerusalem heard the report, they raised the siege of Jerusalem.)

⁶Then the word of the LORD came to the prophet Jeremiah: ⁷Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel: Thus shall you say to the king of Judah who sent you to Me to inquire of Me: "The army of Pharaoh, which set out to help you, will return to its own land, to Egypt. ⁸And the Chaldeans will come back and attack this city and they will capture it and destroy it by fire."

⁹Thus said the LORD: Do not delude yourselves into thinking, "The Chaldeans will go away from us." They will not. ¹⁰Even if you defeated the whole army of the Chaldeans that are fighting against you, and only wounded men were left lying in their tents, they would get up and burn this city down!

¹¹When the army of the Chaldeans raised the siege of Jerusalem on account of the army of Pharaoh, ¹²Jeremiah was going to leave Jerusalem and go to the territory of 37.1-38.28: Jeremiah's imprisonment during the Babylonian siege. Having established Jehoiakim's unwillingness to listen to Jeremiah, the next two chs focus on Jeremiah's imprisonment during the Babylonian assault against Jerusalem. 1-2: King Zedekiah, his officials, and the people refuse to listen to Jeremiah. Coniah is a shortened form of Jehoiachin. When the Babylonians deported him, they placed his uncle Mattaniah on the throne and renamed him Zedekiah (2 Kings 24.8-20). 3-5: Although the Egyptians lost control of Judah when they were defeated by the Babylonians at Carchemesh in 605 BCE, Jehoiakim had been their ally. Under Pharaoh Hophra (also known as Apries; 589-570 BCE; cf. Jer. 44.30), they apparently sent a force to Judah in an attempt to lift the Babylonian siege of Jerusalem. The Egyptians were defeated and forced to withdraw. Jehucal son of Shelemiah is called Jucal in 38.1. Zephaniah son of the priest Maaseiah was the deputy priest of the Temple who was executed by the Babylonians (52.24). He had earlier read a letter from the exiles demanding that Jeremiah be rebuked (29.24-28). Jer. 21.1 reports that Zephaniah was sent earlier to seek an oracle of the prophet during the siege of Jerusalem (21.1). 6-10: Jeremiah's response conveys two oracles. The first indicates that the Egyptians will be forced to withdraw and the Chaldeans, i.e., Babylonians, will return to resume the siege. The second indicates the inevitability of the Babylonian victory. 11-21: Jeremiah attempts to leave the city during the lull in the Babylonian siege to redeem family property in Anathoth, located in the tribal territory of Benjamin (see also ch 32).

Benjamin ^ato share in some property there^a among the people. ¹³When he got to the Benjamin Gate, there was a guard officer there named Irijah son of Shelemiah son of Hananiah; and he arrested the prophet Jeremiah, saying, “You are defecting to the Chaldeans!” ¹⁴Jeremiah answered, “That’s a lie! I’m not defecting to the Chaldeans!” But Irijah would not listen to him; he arrested Jeremiah and brought him to the officials. ¹⁵The officials were furious with Jeremiah; they beat him and put him into prison, in the house of the scribe Jonathan—for it had been made into a jail. ¹⁶Thus Jeremiah came to the ^apit and the cells,^a and Jeremiah remained there a long time.

¹⁷Then King Zedekiah sent for him, and the king questioned him secretly in his palace. He asked, “Is there any word from the LORD?” “There is!” Jeremiah answered, and he continued, “You will be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon.” ¹⁸And Jeremiah said to King Zedekiah, “What wrong have I done to you, to your courtiers, and to this people, that you have put me in jail? ¹⁹And where are those prophets of yours who prophesied to you that the king of Babylon would never move against you and against this land? ²⁰Now, please hear me, O lord king, and grant my plea: Don’t send me back to the house of the scribe Jonathan ^bto die there.”^b

²¹So King Zedekiah gave instructions to lodge Jeremiah in the prison compound and to supply him daily with a loaf of bread from the Bakers’ Street—until all the bread in the city was gone. Jeremiah remained in the prison compound.

38 Shephatiah son of Mattan, Gedaliah son of Pashhur, Jucal son of Shelemiah, and Pashhur son of Malchiah heard what Jeremiah was saying to all the people: ²“Thus said the LORD: Whoever remains in this city shall die by the sword, by famine, and by pestilence; but whoever surrenders to the Chaldeans shall live; ^che shall at least gain his life^c and shall live. ³Thus said the LORD: This city shall be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon’s army, and he shall capture it.”

⁴Then the officials said to the king, “Let that man be put to death, for he disheartens^d the soldiers, and all the people who are left in this city, by speaking such things to them. That man is not seeking the welfare of this people, but their harm!” ⁵King Zedekiah replied, “He is in your hands; the king cannot oppose you in anything!”

13: He is charged with treason by Irijah son of Shelemiah son of Hananiah, apparently the grandson of the prophet Hananiah (ch 28). The Benjamin Gate would have been on the north side of the city where the territory of Benjamin was located. 14–16: Although Jeremiah denied the charge, he was harshly imprisoned in the house of the scribe Jonathan in a pit, a cistern or tank in which water would collect during the rainy season. 17: Despite his imprisonment, Zedekiah continues to ask him for prophetic oracles. In contrast to his brother Jehoiakim, Zedekiah was apparently a supporter of alliance with Babylonia, but his weak position as a regent appointed by the Babylonians in place of the legitimate king Jehoiachin prevented him from stopping the revolt. 21: Zedekiah grants Jeremiah’s request for mercy by placing him in the prison compound and giving him a daily loaf of bread. In a situation of siege, food supplies would eventually be exhausted. 38.1–2: Shephatiah son of Mattan and Gedaliah son of Pashhur are otherwise unknown, although the latter may be the son of Pashhur who placed Jeremiah in stocks (21.1). Jucal son of Shelemiah, see 37.3. Pashhur son of Malchiah, see 21.1. 3–6: Jeremiah is arrested for treason. Malchiah is Pashhur’s father. His designation as the king’s son indicates that he is a royal official (cf. Zeph. 1.8).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Lit. “and let me not die there.”

c-c Lit. “he shall have his life as booty”; cf. 21.9. d Lit. “weakens the hands of.”

⁶So they took Jeremiah and put him down in the pit of Malchiah, the king's son, which was in the prison compound; they let Jeremiah down by ropes. There was no water in the pit, only mud, and Jeremiah sank into the mud.

⁷Ebed-melech the Cushite, a eunuch who was in the king's palace, heard that they had put Jeremiah in the pit. The king was then sitting at the Benjamin Gate; ⁸so Ebed-melech left the king's palace, and spoke to the king: ⁹"O lord king, those men have acted wickedly in all they did to the prophet Jeremiah; they have put him down in the pit, to die there of hunger." For there was no more bread in the city.

¹⁰Then the king instructed Ebed-melech the Cushite, "Take with you thirty^a men from here, and pull the prophet Jeremiah up from the pit before he dies." ¹¹So Ebed-melech took the men with him, and went to the king's palace, to ^ba place below^b the treasury. There they got worn cloths and rags, which they let down to Jeremiah in the pit by ropes. ¹²And Ebed-melech the Cushite called to Jeremiah, "Put the worn cloths and rags under your armpits, inside the ropes." Jeremiah did so, ¹³and they pulled Jeremiah up by the ropes and got him out of the pit. And Jeremiah remained in the prison compound.

¹⁴King Zedekiah sent for the prophet Jeremiah, and had him brought to him at the third entrance of the House of the LORD. And the king said to Jeremiah, "I want to ask you something; don't conceal anything from me."

¹⁵Jeremiah answered the king, "If I tell you, you'll surely kill me; and if I give you advice, you won't listen to me."

¹⁶Thereupon King Zedekiah secretly promised Jeremiah on oath: "As the LORD lives who has ^cgiven us this life,^c I will not put you to death or leave you in the hands of those men who seek your life."

¹⁷Then Jeremiah said to Zedekiah, "Thus said the LORD, the God of Hosts, the God of Israel: If you surrender to the officers of the king of Babylon, your life will be spared and this city will not be burned down. You and your household will live. ¹⁸But if you do not surrender to the officers of the king of Babylon, this city will be delivered into the hands of the Chaldeans, who will burn it down; and you will not escape from them."

7-13: Ebed-melech: The name means "servant of the king." He is called the Cushite, "Ethiopian."

14-28: Zedekiah clearly lacks the power to protect Jeremiah fully, but he continues to consult him. Nevertheless, Jeremiah must conceal the topics of their conversation. 14: The third entrance to the Temple is unknown, although Radak speculates that it was an entrance by which the people could go from the king's palace to the Temple. 17-18: Jeremiah's advice to surrender to the Babylonians is consistent with his earlier position (chs 25-29). 22-23: Jeremiah outlines the consequences of continued resistance; i.e., the men will be killed, the women taken by the Babylonians, and the city destroyed.

a One ms. reads "three."

b-b Emendation yields "the wardrobe of."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

¹⁹King Zedekiah said to Jeremiah, "I am worried about the Judeans who have defected to the Chaldeans; that they [the Chaldeans] might hand me over to them to abuse me."

²⁰"They will not hand you over," Jeremiah replied. "Listen to the voice of the LORD, to what I tell you, that it may go well with you and your life be spared. ²¹For this is what the LORD has shown me if you refuse to surrender: ²²All the women who are left in the palace of the king of Judah shall be brought out to the officers of the king of Babylon; and they shall say:

The men who were your friends
Have seduced you and vanquished you.
Now that your feet are sunk in the mire,
They have turned their backs [on you].

²³They will bring out all your wives and children to the Chaldeans, and you yourself will not escape from them. You will be captured by the king of Babylon, and ^athis city shall be burned down."^a

²⁴Zedekiah said to Jeremiah, "Don't let anyone know about this conversation, ^bor you will die."^b ²⁵If the officials should hear that I have spoken with you, and they should come and say to you, 'Tell us what you said to the king; hide nothing from us, ^cor we'll kill you.'^c And what did the king say to you?' ²⁶say to them, 'I was presenting my petition to the king not to send me back to the house of Jonathan to die there.'^c

²⁷All the officials did come to Jeremiah to question him; and he replied to them just as the king had instructed him. So they stopped questioning him, for the conversation had not been overheard. ²⁸Jeremiah remained in the prison compound until the day Jerusalem was captured.

When Jerusalem was captured . . .^d

39 In the ninth year of King Zedekiah of Judah, in the tenth month, King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon moved against Jerusalem with his whole army, and they laid siege to it. ²And in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, on the ninth day of the fourth month, the [walls of] the city were breached. ³All the officers of the king of Babylon entered, and took up quarters at the middle gate—Nergal-sarezer, Samgar-nebo, Sarsechim the Rab-saris,^e Nergal-sarezer the Rab-mag,^e and all the rest of the officers of the king of Babylon.

39.1-18: The fall of Jerusalem. The Babylonian capture and destruction of Jerusalem appears also in ch 52 and 2 Kings ch 25. (There are minor variations among these three sources.) It is related here to demonstrate that Jeremiah's words to Zedekiah came true, thereby affirming Jeremiah's status as a true prophet. 1-3: Jer. 38.28b is the introduction to 39.1. The ninth year of King Zedekiah is 588 BCE. The tenth month is Tevet. The eleventh year is 586, and the fourth month is Tamuz. 3: The Babylonian terms are a combination of names and titles that have also been read as Nergal-sarezer (Neriglissar) the Simmagir (known in Babylonian records as Nebuchadnezzar's son-in-law, who ruled Babylonia 560-556 BCE), Nebushazban (see v. 13) the chief court official (Rab-saris, "chief eunuch"), and Nergal-sarezer, the Rab-mag.

a-a So Targum and Septuagint and some mss. Most mss. and the editions read "you will burn down this city by fire."

b-b Lit. "that you may not die." c-c Lit. "that we may not kill you."

d This clause would read well before 39.3. e Titles of officers.

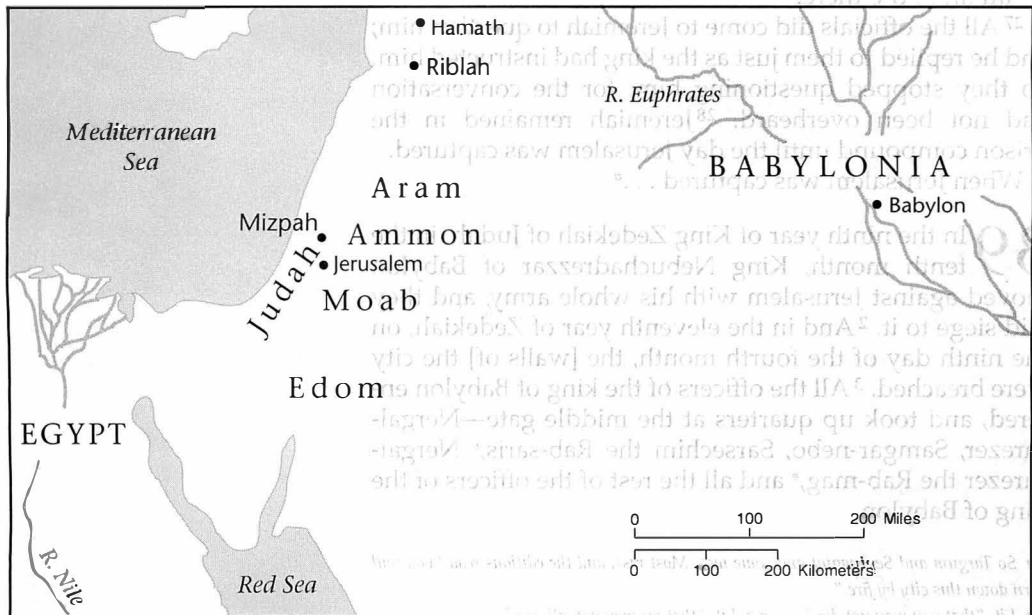

⁴When King Zedekiah of Judah saw them, he and all the soldiers fled. They left the city at night, by way of the king's garden, through the gate between the double walls; and he set out toward the Arabah.^a ⁵But the Chaldean troops pursued them, and they overtook Zedekiah in the steppes of Jericho. They captured him and brought him before King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon at Riblah in the region of Hamath; and he put him on trial. ⁶The king of Babylon had Zedekiah's children slaughtered at Riblah before his eyes; the king of Babylon had all the nobles of Judah slaughtered. ⁷Then the eyes of Zedekiah were put out and he was chained in bronze fetters, that he might be brought to Babylon.

⁸The Chaldeans burned down the king's palace and the houses^b of the people by fire, and they tore down the walls of Jerusalem. ⁹The remnant of the people that was left in the city, and the defectors who had gone over to him—the remnant of the people that was left—were exiled by Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, to Babylon. ¹⁰But some of the poorest people who owned nothing were left in the land of Judah by Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, and he gave them vineyards and fields at that time.

a Hoping to escape across the Jordan.

b Taking Heb. singular as collective, with Kimhi.

4-7: The Arabah is the Jordan rift that extends south to the Gulf of Aqabah. Riblah is a city in the Beqa' Valley (modern Lebanon). Hamath (modern Hama in Syria) was a key city in ancient Aram. Rabbinic sources claim that Nebuchadnezzar did not come to Jerusalem for fear of suffering Sennacherib's fate (b. Sanh. 96b; Lev. Rab. 19.6; cf. Isa. 10.5-34; chs 36-37). For Zedekiah's blinding, see also Ezek. 12.13. 8-14: Jerusalem falls. 9: Nebuzaradan, the captain of the king's bodyguard, entered Jerusalem on the 10th of Av (52.12). 11-12: Nebuchadnezzar apparently intended to protect Jeremiah as a Babylonian sympathizer. 14: Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan is the son of one of Jeremiah's key allies (26.24). The Shaphan family apparently supported alliance with Babylon. Gedaliah was appointed governor of Judah by the Babylonians, but was assassinated in an attempted revolt (chs 40-41). 15-18: See 38.7-13 n. Even in the midst of the great national tragedy, individuals may be judged on their own mer-

Babylonia and Judah ca. 600 BCE

¹¹King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon had given orders to Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, concerning Jeremiah: ¹²“Take him and look after him; do him no harm, but grant whatever he asks of you.” ¹³So Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, and Nebushazban the Rab-saris, and Nergal-sarezar the Rab-mag, and all the commanders of the king of Babylon sent ¹⁴and had Jeremiah brought from the prison compound. They committed him to the care of Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan, ^athat he might be left at liberty in a house. ^a So he dwelt among the people.

¹⁵The word of the LORD had come to Jeremiah while he was still confined in the prison compound: ¹⁶Go and say to Ebed-melech the Ethiopian: “Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: I am going to fulfill My words concerning this city—for disaster, not for good—and they shall come true on that day in your presence. ¹⁷But I will save you on that day—declares the LORD; you shall not be delivered into the hands of the men you dread. ¹⁸I will rescue you, and you shall not fall by the sword. ^bYou shall escape with your life, ^b because you trusted Me—declares the LORD.”

40 The word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, after Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, set him free at Ramah, to which he had taken him, chained in fetters, among those from Jerusalem and Judah who were being exiled to Babylon.

²The chief of the guards took charge of Jeremiah, and he said to him, “The LORD your God threatened this place with this disaster; ³and now the LORD has brought it about. He has acted as He threatened, because you sinned against the LORD and did not obey Him. That is why this has happened to you. ⁴Now, I release you this day from the fetters which were on your hands. If you would like to go with me to Babylon, come, and I will look after you. And if you don’t want to come with me to Babylon, you need not. See, the whole land is before you: go wherever seems good and right to you.”—^{5a}But [Jeremiah] still did not turn back. ^a—“Or go to Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon has put in charge of the towns of Judah, and stay with him among the people, or go wherever you want to go.”

its (see ch 35 as well, on the Rechabites). Trust in God is a major theme of some parts of the Deuteronomistic History, such as 2 Kings ch 18.

40.1–43.13: The assassination of Gedaliah and its consequences. A third attempt at revolt took place in 582 BCE with the assassination of Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan, whom the Babylonians had appointed as governor of Judah. Although the revolt was quickly put down by Judeans, fear of the Babylonians was so great that the officers who survived the revolt fled to Egypt, taking Jeremiah and Baruch with them.

40.1–16: Gedaliah installed as governor of Judah. 1–5: Nebuzaradan offers Jeremiah the opportunity to live in Babylon under Babylonian protection. 1: Ramah (near modern Ramallah) is an early Israelite city associated with the prophet Samuel (1 Sam. 9.1–10.16). 5: Jeremiah’s decision to remain in the land is consistent with the last two verbs employed in his prophetic commission, “to build” and “to plant.”

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b See note at 38.2.

The chief of the guards gave him an allowance of food, and dismissed him. ⁶So Jeremiah came to Gedaliah son of Ahikam at Mizpah, and stayed with him among the people who were left in the land.

⁷The officers of the troops in the open country, and their men with them, heard that the king of Babylon had put Gedaliah son of Ahikam in charge of the region, and that he had put in his charge the men, women, and children—of the poorest in the land—those who had not been exiled to Babylon. ⁸So they with their men came to Gedaliah at Mizpah—Ishmael son of Nethaniah; Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah; Seraiah son of Tanhumeth; the sons of Ephai the Netophathite; and Jezaniah son of the Maacathite. ⁹Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan reassured^a them and their men, saying, “Do not be afraid to serve the Chaldeans. Stay in the land and serve the king of Babylon, and it will go well with you. ¹⁰I am going to stay in Mizpah to attend upon the Chaldeans who will come to us. But you may gather wine and figs^b and oil and put them in your own vessels, and settle in the towns you have occupied.”

¹¹Likewise, all the Judeans who were in Moab, Ammon, and Edom, or who were in other lands, heard that the king of Babylon had let a remnant stay in Judah, and that he had put Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan in charge of them. ¹²All these Judeans returned from all the places to which they had scattered. They came to the land of Judah, to Gedaliah at Mizpah, and they gathered large quantities of wine and figs.^b

¹³Johanan son of Kareah, and all the officers of the troops in the open country, came to Gedaliah at Mizpah ¹⁴and said to him, “Do you know that King Baalis of Ammon has sent Ishmael son of Nethaniah to kill you?” But Gedaliah son of Ahikam would not believe them. ¹⁵Johanan son of Kareah also said secretly to Gedaliah at Mizpah, “Let me go and strike down Ishmael son of Nethaniah before anyone knows about it; otherwise he will kill you, and all the Judeans who have gathered about you will be dispersed, and the remnant of Judah will perish!”

¹⁶But Gedaliah son of Ahikam answered Johanan son of Kareah, “Do not do such a thing: what you are saying about Ishmael is not true!”

6: The Babylonians installed Gedaliah as governor in Mizpah (cf. 2 Kings 25.22–26), located in Benjamin, about 13 km (8 mi) north of Jerusalem (probably Tel en-Nasbeh). According to b. Gittin 57a, Nebuzaradan’s statements indicate that he converted to Judaism in remorse for the suffering he caused. 7–16: A court forms around Gedaliah. 8: Ishmael son of Nethaniah son of Elishama is identified as a member of the royal family in 41.1. His grandfather may have been Jehoiakim’s scribe (36.12). Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah are otherwise unknown. The name Jezeniah son of the Maacathite may employ an ethnic or place name in reference to his father (Maacah is a small state in the northern Golan; see Josh. 13.11, 13; 2 Sam. 10.6, 8; 1 Chron. 19.7). If so, he could be identified with Jezeniah son of Hoshaiiah in Jer. 42.1. The use of the gentile name could be an attempt to call the reader’s attention to the succession narrative (2 Sam. chs 9–20) in which Maacah first opposed David, and then submitted to his rule (2 Sam. 10.19). The following narrative appears to contrast Ishmael’s defeat in Benjaminite territory with David’s victories in the same region. 13–16: Johanan (v. 8) informed Gedaliah of Ishmael’s intent to assassinate him, but the warning was rebuffed. The Ammonites apparently saw an opportunity to take control of Judah now that it was virtually powerless. 14: Ishmael would likely cooperate with Baalis out of his own ambitions to claim the Davidic throne based on his own royal descent (cf. Rashi, Radak, Abravanel). The Ammonites did support David much earlier, during Absalom’s revolt (see 2 Sam. 17.27–29). Perhaps this was another attempt to support the House of David, as Gedaliah was not of royal blood. Baalis is probably to be identified with “ba’alyasha,” whose name is found on a 6th-century Ammonite seal impression.

^a Lit. “swore to.”

^b Lit. “summer fruit.”

41 In the seventh month, Ishmael son of Nethaniah son of Elishama, who was of royal descent and one of the king's commanders, came with ten men to Gedaliah son of Ahikam at Mizpah; and they ate together there at Mizpah.² Then Ishmael son of Nethaniah and the ten men who were with him arose and struck down Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan with the sword and killed him, because the king of Babylon had put him in charge of the land.³ Ishmael also killed all the Judeans who were with him—with Gedaliah in Mizpah—and the Chaldean soldiers who were stationed there.

⁴The second day after Gedaliah was killed, when no one yet knew about it,⁵ eighty men came from Shechem, Shiloh, and Samaria, their beards shaved, their garments torn, and their bodies gashed, carrying meal offerings and frankincense to present at the House of the LORD.⁶ Ishmael son of Nethaniah went out from Mizpah to meet them, weeping as he walked. As he met them, he said to them, "Come to Gedaliah son of Ahikam."⁷ When they came inside the town, Ishmael son of Nethaniah and the men who were with him slaughtered them [and threw their bodies] into a cistern.

⁸But there were ten men among them who said to Ishmael, "Don't kill us! We have stores hidden in a field—wheat, barley, oil, and honey." So he stopped, and did not kill them along with their fellows.—⁹The cistern into which Ishmael threw all the corpses of the men he had killed *in the affair of Gedaliah was the one that^a King Asa had constructed on account of King Baasha of Israel. That was the one which Ishmael son of Nethaniah filled with corpses.—¹⁰Ishmael carried off all the rest of the people who were in Mizpah, including the daughters of the king—all the people left in Mizpah, over whom Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, had appointed Gedaliah son of Ahikam. Ishmael son of Nethaniah carried them off, and set out to cross over to the Ammonites.

¹¹Johanan son of Kareah, and all the army officers with him, heard of all the crimes committed by Ishmael son of Nethaniah.¹² They took all their men and went to fight against Ishmael son of Nethaniah; and they encountered him by the great pool in Gibeon.¹³ When all the people held by Ishmael saw Johanan son of Kareah and all the army officers with him, they were glad;¹⁴ all the people whom Ishmael had carried off from Mizpah turned back and went over to Johanan son of Kareah.¹⁵ But Ishmael

41.1-18: The assassination of Gedaliah. 1: The seventh month is Tishri. The 3rd of Tishri is now observed as the Fast of Gedaliah, immediately following the two days of Rosh Ha-Shanah, and it is likely that this fast is "the fast of the seventh month" mentioned in Zech. 8.19. The assassination of Gedaliah was commemorated since it represented the end of even limited Judean autonomy in the land, and is the culmination of the events associated with the destruction of the Temple and the exile. 2-3: Because the king of Babylon . . . in charge of the land . . . killed . . . the Chaldean soldiers: It seems unlikely that Ishmael intended to revolt against Babylonia, but the killing of Babylonian soldiers together with Gedaliah indicates that perhaps the situation got out of control. 4-10: Ishmael's subsequent actions appear to be unnecessarily brutal and desperate. 5: Shechem, Shiloh, and Samaria are all cities in the territory of the former Northern Kingdom of Israel. The shaved beards, torn garments, and gashed bodies are clear signs of mourning for the destroyed Temple (see also Zech. 7.1-7). Although the Temple has been destroyed, non-animal sacrifices were still offered at the holy site of the Temple. The loyalty of these northern Israelite men to the Jerusalem Temple may indicate that Josiah's reforms and attempts to reunite Israel and Judah had been somewhat successful. 6-7: Ishmael's killing of these men appears rash. He may have killed them in an attempt to keep the assassination of Gedaliah quiet, although his motives may have been pure robbery. 9: King Asa's cistern is not mentioned elsewhere, although he did build up Geba and Mizpah (1 Kings 15.22; 2 Chron. 16.6). 10: The daughters of the king would have been Ishmael's own relatives as members of the House of David. 11-18: Gedaliah's followers fight back, but Ishmael escapes. 11-12: Johanan son of Kareah defeated Ishmael son of Nethaniah at the pool of Gibeon, a key site in David's and Joab's defeat of a largely Benjaminite army led by a-a Septuagint reads "was a large cistern, which . . ."

son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, and went to the Ammonites.

¹⁶Johanan son of Kareah and all the army officers with him took all the rest of the people whom ^ahe had rescued from Ishmael son of Nethaniah^a from Mizpah after he had murdered Gedaliah son of Ahikam—the men, soldiers, women, children, and eunuchs whom [Johanan] had brought back from Gibeon. ¹⁷They set out, and they stopped at Geruth^b Chimham, near Bethlehem, on their way to go to Egypt ¹⁸because of the Chaldeans. For they were afraid of them, because Ishmael son of Nethaniah had killed Gedaliah son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon had put in charge of the land.

42 Then all the army officers, with Johanan son of Kareah, Jezaniah son of Hoshaiiah, and all the rest of the people, great and small, approached ²the prophet Jeremiah and said, “Grant our plea, and pray for us to the LORD your God, for all this remnant! For we remain but a few out of many, as you can see. ³Let the LORD your God tell us where we should go and what we should do.”

⁴The prophet Jeremiah answered them, “Agreed: I will pray to the LORD your God as you request, and I will tell you whatever response the LORD gives for you. I will withhold nothing from you.”

⁵Thereupon they said to Jeremiah, “Let the LORD be a true and faithful witness against us! We swear that we will do exactly as the LORD your God instructs us through you—⁶Whether it is pleasant or unpleasant, we will obey the LORD our God to whom we send you, in order that it may go well with us when we obey the LORD our God.”

⁷After ten days, the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah. ⁸He called Johanan son of Kareah and all the army officers, and the rest of the people, great and small, ⁹and said to them, “Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel, to whom you sent me to present your supplication before Him: ¹⁰If you remain in this land, I will build you and not overthrow, I will plant you and not uproot; for I regret the a-a Emendation yields “Ishmael son of Nethaniah had carried off.”

b Aquila reads “the sheepfolds of.”

