Begin therefore in words like these : ' O Being of all beings, ' Fountain of all light and glory, gracious Father of men and ' angels, whose universal Spirit is everywhere present, giving life, ' and light, and joy, to all angels in heaven, and all creatures ' upon earth,' &c.

For these representations of the divine Attributes, which show us in some degree the majesty and greatness of God, are an excellent means of raising our hearts, into lively acts of worship and adoration.

What is the reason, that most people are so much affected with this petition in the Burial Service of our Church : ' Yet, O ' Lord God most holy, O Lord most mighty, O holy and most ' merciful Saviour, deliver us not into the bitter pains of eternal ' death? ' It is, because the joining together so many great expressions, gives such a description of the greatness of the Divine Majesty, as naturally affects every sensible mind.

Although therefore prayer does not consist in fine words, or studied expressions ; yet as words speak to the soul, as they have a certain power of raising thoughts in the soul ; so those words which speak of God in the highest manner, which most fully express the power and presence of God, which raise thoughts in the soul most suitable to the greatness and providence of God, are the most useful, and most edifying in our prayers.

When you direct any of your petitions to our blessed Lord, let it be in some expressions of this kind : ' O Saviour of the ' world, God of God, Light of Light ; thou that art the Bright- ' ness of thy Father's Glory, and the express Image of his ' Person ; thou that art the Alpha and Omega, the Beginning ' and End of all things ; thou that hast destroyed the power of ' the devil, that hast overcome death ; thou that art entered into ' the Holy of Holies, that sittest at the right hand of the Father, ' that art high above all thrones and principalities, that makest ' intercession for all the world ; thou that art the judge of the ' quick and dead ; thou that wilt speedily come down in thy ' Father's glory, to reward all men according to their works, be ' thou my light and my peace,' &c.

For such representations, which describe so many characters of our Saviour's nature and power, are not only proper acts of adoration, but will, if they are repeated with any attention, fill our hearts with the highest fervours of true devotion.

Again, if you ask any particular grace of our blessed Lord, let it be in some manner like this :

' O holy Jesus, Son of the most high God, thou that wert ' scourged at a pillar, stretched and nailed upon a cross, for the ' sins of the world, unite me to thy cross, and fill my soul with

'thy holy, humble, and suffering spirit. O Fountain of mercy, thou that didst save the thief upon the cross, save me from the guilt of a sinful life; thou that didst cast seven devils out of Mary Magdalene, cast out of my heart all evil thoughts, and wicked tempers. O Giver of life, thou that didst raise Lazarus from the dead, raise up my soul from the death and darkness of sin. Thou that didst give to thy Apostles power over unclean spirits, give me power over my own heart. Thou that didst appear unto thy disciples when the doors were shut, do thou appear unto me in the secret apartment of my heart. Thou that didst cleanse the lepers, heal the sick, and give sight to the blind, cleanse my heart, heal the disorders of my soul, and fill me with heavenly light.'

Now these kinds of appeals have a double advantage; first, as they are so many proper acts of our faith, whereby we not only show our belief of the miracles of Christ, but turn them at the same time into so many instances of worship and adoration.

Secondly, As they strengthen and increase the faith of our prayers, by presenting to our minds so many instances of that power and goodness, which we call upon for our own assistance.

For he that appeals to Christ, as casting out devils, and raising the dead, has then a powerful motive in his mind to pray earnestly, and depend faithfully upon his assistance.

Again; in order to fill your prayers with excellent strains of devotion, it may be of use to you to observe this further rule:

When at any time either in reading the Scripture, or any book of Piety, you meet with a passage, that more than ordinarily affects your mind, and seems as it were to give your heart a new motion towards God, you should try to turn it into the form of a petition, and then give it a place in your prayers. By this means, you would be often improving your prayers, and storing yourself with proper forms, of making the desires of your heart known unto God.

At all the stated hours of prayer, it will be of great benefit to you, to have something fixed, and something at liberty, in your devotions.

You should have some fixed subject, which is constantly to be the chief matter of your prayer at that particular time; and yet have liberty to add such other petitions, as your condition may then require.

For instance; As the morning is to you the beginning of a new life; as God has then given you a new enjoyment of yourself, and a fresh entrance into the world, it is highly proper, that your first devotions should be a praise and thanksgiving to God, as for a new creation; and that you should offer and devote body and soul, all that you are, and all that you have, to his service and glory.

Receive therefore every day, as a resurrection from death, as a new enjoyment of life; meet every rising sun with such sentiments of God's goodness, as if you had seen it, and all things new created upon your account; and under the sense of so great a blessing, let your joyful heart praise and magnify so good and glorious a Creator.

Let therefore praise and thanksgiving, and oblation of yourself unto God, be always the fixed and certain subject of your first prayers in the morning; and then take the liberty of adding such other devotions, as the accidental difference of your state, or the accidental difference of your heart, shall then make most needful and expedient for you.

For one of the greatest benefits of private devotion, consists in rightly adapting our prayers to these two conditions, the difference of our state, and the difference of our hearts.

By the difference of our state, is meant the difference of our external state or condition, as of sickness, health, pains, losses, disappointments, troubles, particular mercies, or judgments from God; all sorts of kindnesses, injuries or reproaches from other people.

Now as these are great parts of our state of life, as they make great difference in it, by continually changing; so our devotion will be made doubly beneficial to us, when it watches to receive and sanctify all these changes of our state, and turns them all into so many occasions, of a more particular application to God, of such thanksgivings, such resignation, such petitions, as our present state more especially requires.

And he that makes every change in his state, a reason of presenting unto God some particular petitions suitable to that change, will soon find, that he has taken an excellent means, not only of praying with fervour, but of living as he prays.

The next condition, to which we are always to adapt some part of our prayers, is the difference of our hearts; by which is meant the different state of the tempers of our hearts, as of love, joy, peace, tranquillity; dulness and dryness of spirit, anxiety, discontent, motions of envy and ambition, dark and disconsolate thoughts, resentments, fretfulness, and peevish tempers.

Now as these tempers, through the weakness of our nature, will have their succession more or less, even in pious minds; so we should constantly make the present state of our heart, the reason of some particular application to God.

If we are in the delightful calm of sweet and easy passions, of love and joy in God, we should then offer the grateful tribute of thanksgiving to God, for the possession of so much happiness, thankfully owning and acknowledging him as the bountiful Giver of it all.

If, on the other hand, we feel ourselves laden with heavy passions, with dulness of spirit, anxiety and uneasiness, we must then look up to God in acts of humility, confessing our unworthiness, opening our troubles to him, beseeching him in his good time to lessen the weight of our infirmities, and to deliver us from such passions as oppose the purity and perfection of our souls.

Now by thus watching, and attending to the present state of our hearts, and suiting some of our petitions exactly to their wants, we shall not only be well acquainted with the disorders of our souls, but also be well exercised in the method of curing them.

By this prudent and wise application of our prayers, we shall get all the relief from them that is possible; and the very changeableness of our hearts, will prove a means of exercising a greater variety of holy tempers.

Now by all that has here been said, you will easily perceive, that persons careful of the greatest benefit of prayer, ought to have a great share in the forming and composing their own devotions.

As to that part of their prayers, which is always fixed to one certain subject, in that they may use the help of forms composed by other persons; but in that part of their prayers, which they are always to suit to the present state of their life, and the present state of their heart, there they must let the sense of their own condition help them to such kinds of petition, thanksgiving, or resignation, as their present state more especially requires.

Happy are they, who have this business and employment upon their hands!

And now, if people of leisure, whether men, or women, who are so much at a loss how to dispose of their time, who are forced into poor contrivances, idle visits, and ridiculous diversions, merely to get rid of hours that hang heavily upon their hands; if such were to appoint some certain spaces of their time, to the study of devotion, searching after all the means and helps to attain a devout spirit; if they were to collect the best forms of devotion, to use themselves to transcribe the finest passages of scripture-prayers; if they were to collect the devotions, confessions, petitions, praises, resignations, and thanksgivings, which are scattered up and down in the Psalms, and range them under proper heads, as so much proper fuel for the flame of their own devotion; if their minds were often thus employed, sometimes meditating upon them, sometimes getting them by heart, and making them as habitual as their own thoughts, how fervently would they pray, who came thus prepared to prayer?

And how much better would it be, to make this benefit of leisure-time, than to be dully and idly lost in the poor impertinences of a playing, visiting, wandering life?

How much better would it be, to be thus furnished with hymns and anthems of the saints, and teach their souls to ascend to God, than to corrupt, bewilder, and confound their hearts, with the wild fancies, the lustful thoughts of a lewd Poet?

Now though people of leisure seem called more particularly to this study of devotion, yet persons of much business or labour, must not think themselves excused from this, or some better method of improving their devotion.

For the greater their business is, the more need they have of some such method as this, to prevent its power over their hearts; to secure them from sinking into worldly tempers, and preserve a sense and taste of heavenly things in their minds. And a little time regularly and constantly employed to any one use or end, will do great things, and produce mighty effects.

And it is for want of considering devotion in this light, as something that is to be nursed and cherished with care, as something that is to be made part of our business, that is to be improved with care and contrivance, by art and method, and a diligent use of the best helps; it is for want of considering it in this light, that so many people are so little benefited by it, and live and die strangers to that spirit of devotion, which by a prudent use of proper means, they might have enjoyed in a high degree.

For though the spirit of devotion is the gift of God, and not attainable by any mere power of our own, yet it is mostly given, and never withheld, from those, who by a wise and diligent use of proper means, prepare themselves for the reception of it.

And it is amazing to see, how eagerly men employ their parts, their sagacity, time, study, application and exercise; how all helps are called to their assistance, when anything is intended and desired in worldly matters; and how dull, negligent, and unimproved they are, how little they use their parts, sagacity, and abilities, to raise and increase their devotion!

Mundanus is a man of excellent parts, and clear apprehension. He is well advanced in age, and has made a great figure in business. Every part of trade and business that has fallen in his way, has had some improvement from him; and he is always contriving to carry every method of doing anything well, to its greatest height. Mundanus aims at the greatest perfection in everything. The soundness and strength of his mind, and his just way of thinking upon things, makes him intent upon removing all imperfections.

He can tell you all the defects and errors in all the common methods, whether of trade, building, or improving land, or manufactures. The clearness and strength of his understanding, which he is constantly improving, by continual exercise in these matters, by often digesting his thoughts in writing, and trying everything every way, has rendered him a great master of most concerns in human life.

Thus has Mundanus gone on, increasing his knowledge and judgment, as fast as his years came upon him.

The one only thing which has not fallen under his improvement, nor received any benefit from his judicious mind, is his devotion: This is just in the same poor state it was, when he was only six years of age, and the old man prays now, in that little form of words, which his mother used to hear him repeat night and morning.

This Mundanus, that hardly ever saw the poorest utensil, or ever took the meanest trifle into his hand, without considering how it might be made, or used to better advantage, has gone all his life long praying in the same manner, as when he was a child; without ever considering how much better or oftener he might pray; without considering how improvable the spirit of devotion is, how many helps a wise and reasonable man may call to his assistance, and how necessary it is, that our prayers should be enlarged, varied and suited to the particular state and condition of our lives.

If Mundanus sees a book of devotion, he passes it by, as he does a spelling-book, because he remembers that he learned to pray, so many years ago under his mother, when he learned to spell.

Now how poor and pitiable is the conduct of this man of sense, who has so much judgment and understanding in everything, but that which is the whole wisdom of man?

And how miserably do many people, more or less, imitate this conduct?

All which seems to be owing to a strange infatuated state of negligence, which keeps people from considering what devotion is. For if they did but once proceed so far, as to reflect about it, or ask themselves any questions concerning it, they would soon see, that the spirit of devotion was like any other sense or understanding, that is only to be improved by study, care, application, and the use of such means and helps, as are necessary to make a man a proficient in any art or science.

Classicus is a man of learning and well versed in all the best authors of antiquity. He has read them so much, that he has entered into their spirit, and can very ingeniously imitate the manner of any of them. All their thoughts are his thoughts, and he can express himself in their language. He is so great a friend to this improvement of the mind, that if he lights on a young scholar, he never fails to advise him concerning his studies.

Classicus tells this young man, he must not think that he has done enough, when he has only learned languages; but that he must be daily conversant with the best authors, read them again and again, catch their spirit by living with them, and that there is no other way of becoming like them, or of making himself a man of taste and judgment.

How wise might Classicus have been, and how much good might he have done in the world, if he had but thought as justly of devotion, as he does of learning?

He never, indeed, says anything shocking or offensive about devotion, because he never thinks, or talks about it. It suffers nothing from him, but neglect and disregard.

The two Testaments would not have had so much as a place amongst his Books, but that they are both to be had in Greek.

Classicus thinks that he sufficiently shows his regard for the Holy Scripture, when he tells you, that he has no other Books of piety besides them.

It is very well, Classicus, that you prefer the Bible to all other Books of piety; he has no judgment, that is not thus far of your opinion.

But if you will have no other book of piety besides the Bible, because it is the best, How comes it, Classicus, that you do not content yourself with one of the best Books amongst the Greeks and Romans? How comes it that you are so greedy and eager after all of them? How comes it that you think the knowledge of one is a necessary help to the knowledge of the other? How comes it that you are so earnest, so laborious, so expensive of your time and money, to restore broken periods, and scraps of the ancients?

How comes it that you read so many Commentators upon Cicero, Horace, and Homer, and not one upon the Gospel? How comes it that your love of Cicero, and Ovid, makes you love to read an author that writes like them; and yet your esteem for the Gospel gives you no desire, nay, prevents your reading such Books, as breathe the very spirit of the Gospel?

How comes it that you tell your young scholar, he must not content himself with barely understanding his authors, but must be continually reading them all, as the only means of entering into their spirit, and forming his own judgment according to them ?

Why then must the Bible lie alone in your study ? Is not the spirit of the saints, the piety of the holy followers of Jesus Christ, as good and necessary a means of entering into the spirit and taste of the Gospel, as the reading of the ancients is of entering into the spirit of antiquity ?

Is the spirit of poetry only to be got by much reading of Poets and Orators ? And is not the spirit of devotion to be got in the same way, by frequently reading the holy thoughts, and pious strains of devout men ?

Is your young Poet to search after every line, that may give new wings to his fancy, or direct his imagination ? And is it not as reasonable for him, who desires to improve in the divine life, that is, in the love of heavenly things, to search after every strain of devotion, that may move, kindle, and inflame the holy ardour of his soul ?

Do you advise your Orator to translate the best Oration, to commit much of them to memory, to be frequently exercising his talent in this manner, that habits of thinking and speaking justly may be formed in his mind ? And is there not the same benefit and advantage to be made by books of devotion ? Should not a man use them in the same way, that habits of devotion, and aspiring to God in holy thoughts, may be well formed in his soul ?

Now the reason why Classicus does not think and judge thus reasonably of devotion, is owing to his never thinking of it in any other manner, than as the repeating a form of words. It never in his life entered into his head, to think of devotion as a state of the heart, as an improvable talent of the mind, as a temper that is to grow and increase like our reason and judgment, and to be formed in us by such a regular diligent use of proper means, as are necessary to form any other wise habit of mind.

And it is for want of this, that he has been content all his life, with the bare letter of Prayer, and eagerly bent upon entering into the spirit of heathen poets and orators.

And it is much to be lamented, that numbers of scholars are more or less chargeable with this excessive folly ; so negligent of improving their devotion, and so desirous of other poor accomplishments, as if they thought it a nobler talent, to be able to write an epigram in the turn of Martial, than to live, and think, and pray to God, in the spirit of St. Austin.

And yet, to correct this temper, and fill a man with a quite contrary spirit, there seems to be no more required, than the bare belief of the truth of Christianity.

And if you were to ask Mundanus, and Classicus, or any man of business, or learning, whether piety is not the highest perfection of man, or devotion the greatest attainment in the world, they must both be forced to answer in the affirmative, or else give up the truth of the Gospel.

For to set any accomplishment against devotion, or to think anything, or all things in the world, can bear any proportion to its excellency ; is the same absurdity in a Christian, as it would be in a Philosopher to prefer a meal's meat, to the greatest improvement in knowledge.

For as Philosophy professes purely the search and enquiry after knowledge, so Christianity supposes, intends, desires, and aims at nothing else, but the raising fallen man to a divine life, to such habits of holiness, such degrees of devotion, as may fit him to enter among the holy inhabitants of the kingdom of heaven.

He that does not believe this of Christianity, may be reckoned an infidel ; and he that believes thus much, has faith enough to give him a right judgment of the value of things, to support him in a sound mind, and enable him to conquer all the temptations which the world shall lay in his way.

To conclude this Chapter, Devotion is nothing else but right apprehensions and right affections towards God.

All practices therefore that heighten and improve our true apprehensions of God, all ways of life that tend to nourish, raise, and fix our affections upon him, are to be reckoned so many helps and means to fill us with devotion.

As Prayer is the proper fuel of this holy flame, so we must use all our care and contrivance to give prayer its full power ; as by alms, self-denial, frequent retirements, and holy readings, composing forms for ourselves, or using the best we can get, adding length of time, and observing hours of Prayer ; changing, improving, and suiting our devotions to the condition of our lives, and the state of our hearts.

Those who have most leisure, seem more especially called to a more eminent observance of these holy rules of a devout life. And they who by the necessity of their state, and not through their own choice, have but little time to employ thus, must make the best use of that little they have.

For this is the certain way of making devotion produce a devout life.

Chapter XV.

Of chanting, or singing of Psalms in our private devotions. Of the excellency and benefit of this kind of devotion. Of the great effects it hath upon our hearts. Of the means of performing it in the best manner.

YOU have seen in the foregoing Chapter, what means and methods you are to use, to raise and improve your devotion. How early you are to begin your prayers, and what is to be the subject of your first devotions in the morning.

There is one thing still remaining, that you must be required to observe, not only as fit and proper to be done, but as such as cannot be neglected, without great prejudice to your devotions. And that is, to begin all your Prayers with a Psalm.

This is so right, is so beneficial to devotion, has so much effect upon our hearts, that it may be insisted upon as a common rule for all persons.

I do not mean, that you should read over a Psalm, but that you should chant or sing one of those Psalms, which we commonly call the reading Psalms. For singing is as much the proper use of a Psalm, as devout supplication is the proper use of a form of Prayer. And a Psalm only read, is very much like a Prayer that is only looked over.

Now the method of chanting a Psalm, such as is used in the Colleges in the Universities, and in some Churches, is such as all Persons are capable of. The change of the voice in thus chanting of a Psalm is so small and natural, that everybody is able to do it, and yet sufficient to raise and keep up the gladness of our hearts.

You are therefore to consider this chanting of a Psalm, as a necessary beginning of your devotions, as something that is to awaken all that is good and holy within you, that is to call your spirits to their proper duty, to set you in your best posture towards heaven, and tune all the powers of your soul to worship and adoration.

For there is nothing that so clears a way for your prayers, nothing that so disperses dulness of heart, nothing that so purifies the soul from poor and little passions, nothing that so opens heaven, or carries your heart so near it, as these songs of praise.

They create a sense and delight in God, they awaken holy desires, they teach you how to ask, and they prevail with God to give. They kindle an holy flame, they turn your heart into an altar, your prayers into incense, and carry them as a sweet-smelling savour to the throne of Grace.

The difference between singing and reading a Psalm, will easily be understood, if you consider the difference between reading and singing a common song that you like. Whilst you only read it, you only like it, and that is all ; but as soon as you sing it, then you enjoy it, you feel the delight of it, it has got hold of you, your passions keep pace with it, and you feel the same spirit within you, that seems to be in the words.

If you were to tell a person that has such a song, that he need not sing it, that it was sufficient to peruse it, he would wonder what you mean ; and would think you as absurd, as if you were to tell him, that he should only look at his food, to see whether it was good, but need not eat it : For a song of praise not sung, is very like any other good thing not made use of.

You will perhaps say, that singing is a particular talent, that belongs only to particular people, and that you have neither voice nor ear to make any music.

If you had said that singing is a general talent, and that people differ in that as they do in all other things, you had said something much truer.

For how vastly do people differ in the talent of thinking, which is not only common to all men, but seems to be the very essence of human nature ? How readily do some people reason upon everything ? and how hardly do others reason upon anything ? How clearly do some people discourse upon the most abstruse matters ? and how confusedly do others talk upon the plainest subjects ?

Yet no one desires to be excused from thought, or reason, or discourse, because he has not these talents, as some people have them. But it is full as just, for a person to think himself excused from thinking upon God, from reasoning about his duty to him, or discoursing about the means of salvation, because he has not these talents in any fine degree ; this is full as just, as for a person to think himself excused from singing the praises of God, because he has not a fine ear, or a musical voice.

For as it is speaking, and not graceful speaking, that is a required part of prayer ; as it is bowing, and not genteel bowing, that is a proper part of adoration ; so it is singing, and not artful fine singing, that is a required way of praising God.

If a person were to forbear praying, because he had an odd tone in his voice, he would have as good an excuse as he has, that forbears from singing Psalms, because he has but little management of his voice. And as a man's speaking his prayers, though in an odd tone, may yet sufficiently answer all the ends of his own devotion ; so a man's singing of a Psalm, though not in a very musical way, may yet sufficiently answer all the ends of rejoicing in, and praising God.

Secondly, This objection might be of some weight, if you were desired to sing, to entertain other people ; but is not to be admitted in the present case ; where you are only required to sing the praises of God, as a part of your private devotion.

If a person that had a very ill voice, and a bad way of speaking, were desired to be the mouth of a congregation, it would be a very proper excuse for him, to say that he had not a voice, or a way of speaking that was proper for prayer. But he would be very absurd, if for the same reason he should neglect his own private devotions.

Now this is exactly the case of singing Psalms ; you may not have the talent of singing, so as to be able to entertain other people, and therefore it is reasonable to excuse yourself from it ; but if for that reason you should excuse yourself from this way of praising God, you would be guilty of a great absurdity : Because singing is no more required for the music that is made by it, than prayer is required for the fine words that it contains, but as it is the natural and proper expression of a heart rejoicing in God.

Our blessed Saviour and his apostles sung an hymn ; but it may reasonably be supposed, that they rather rejoiced in God, than made fine music.

Do but so live, that your heart may truly rejoice in God, that it may feel itself affected with the praises of God, and then you will find, that this state of your heart will neither want a voice, nor ear to find a tune for a Psalm. Everyone, at some time or other, finds himself able to sing in some degree ; there are some times and occasions of joy, that make all people ready to express their sense of it in some sort of harmony. The joy that they feel, forces them to let their voice have a part in it.

He therefore that saith he wants a voice, or an ear, to sing a Psalm, mistakes the case ; he wants that spirit that really rejoices in God ; the dulness is in his heart, and not in his ear ; and when his heart feels a true joy in God, when it has a full relish of what is expressed in the Psalms, he will find it very pleasant, to make the motions of his voice express the motions of his heart.

Singing indeed, as it is improved into an art, as it signifies the running of the voice through such or such a compass of notes, and keeping time with a studied variety of changes, is not natural, nor the effect of any natural state of the mind; so in this sense, it is not common to all people, any more than those antic and invented motions which make fine dancing, are common to all people.

But singing, as it signifies a motion of the voice suitable to the motions of the heart, and the changing of its tone according to the meaning of the words which we utter, is as natural and common to all men, as it is to speak high, when they threaten in anger, or to speak low, when they are dejected and ask for a pardon.

All men therefore are singers, in the same manner as all men think, speak, laugh, and lament. For singing is no more an invention, than grief or joy are inventions.

Every state of the heart naturally puts the body into some state that is suitable to it, and is proper to show it to other people. If a man is angry, or disdainful, no one need instruct him how to express these passions by the tone of his voice. The state of his heart disposes him to a proper use of his voice.

If therefore there are but few singers of divine songs, if people want to be exhorted to this part of devotion; it is because there are but few, whose hearts are raised to that height of piety, as to feel any motions of joy and delight in the praises of God.

Imagine to yourself, that you had been with Moses when he was led through the Red Sea; that you had seen the waters divide themselves, and stand on an heap on both sides; that you had seen them held up till you had passed through, then let fall upon your enemies; do you think that you should then have wanted a voice or an ear to have sung with Moses, 'The Lord is my strength, and my song, and he is become my salvation,' &c.? I know, your own heart tells you, that all people must have been singers upon such an occasion. Let this therefore teach you, that it is the heart that tunes a voice to sing the praises of God; and that if you cannot sing these same words now with joy, it is because you are not so affected with the salvation of the world by Jesus Christ, as the Jews were, or you yourself would have been, with their deliverance at the Red Sea.

That it is the state of the heart, that disposes us to rejoice in any particular kind of singing, may be easily proved from variety of observations upon human nature. An old debauchee may, according to the language of the world, have neither voice nor ear, if you only sing a Psalm, or a song in praise of virtue to him ; but yet, if in some easy tune you sing something that celebrates his former debauches, he will then, though he has no teeth in his head, show you, that he has both a voice and an ear to join such music. You then awaken his heart, and he as naturally sings to such words, as he laughs when he is pleased. And this will be the case in every song that touches the heart ; if you celebrate the ruling passion of any man's heart, you put his voice in tune to join with you.

Thus if you can find a man, whose ruling temper is devotion, whose heart is full of God, his voice will rejoice in those songs of praise, which glorify that God who is the joy of his heart, though he has neither voice nor ear for other music. Would you therefore delightfully perform this part of devotion, it is not so necessary to learn a tune, or practise upon notes, as to prepare your heart ; for as our blessed Lord saith, out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, &c., so it is equally true, that out of the heart proceed holy joys, thanksgiving and praise. If you can once say with David, ' My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed ; ' it will be very easy and natural to add, as he did, ' I will sing and ' give praise, ' &c.

Secondly, Let us now consider another reason for this kind of devotion. As singing is a natural effect of joy in the heart, so it has also a natural power of rendering the heart joyful.

The soul and body are so united, that they have each of them power over one another in their actions. Certain thoughts and sentiments in the soul, produce such and such motions or actions in the body ; and on the other hand, certain motions and actions of the body, have the same power of raising such and such thoughts and sentiments in the soul. So that as singing is the natural effect of joy in the mind, so it is as truly a natural cause of raising joy in the mind.

As devotion of the heart naturally breaks out into outward acts of prayer, so outward acts of prayer are natural means of raising the devotion of the heart.

It is thus in all states and tempers of the mind ; as the inward state of the mind produces outward actions suitable to it, so those outward actions, have the like power of raising an inward state of mind suitable to them.

As anger produces angry words, so angry words increase anger.

So that if we barely consider human nature, we shall find, that singing or chanting the Psalms, is as proper and necessary to raise our hearts to a delight in God, as prayer is proper and necessary to excite in us the spirit of devotion. Every reason for one, is in all respects as strong a reason for the other.

If therefore you would know the reason and necessity of singing Psalms, you must consider the reason and necessity of praising and rejoicing in God; because singing of Psalms is as much the true exercise and support of this spirit of thanksgiving, as prayer is the true exercise and support of the spirit of devotion. And you may as well think, that you can be devout as you ought, without the use of prayer, as that you can rejoice in God as you ought, without the practice of singing Psalms. Because this singing is as much the natural language of praise and thanksgiving, as prayer is the natural language of devotion.

The union of soul and body is not a mixture of their substances, as we see bodies united and mixed together, but consists solely in the mutual power that they have of acting upon one another.

If two persons were in such a state of dependance upon one another, that neither of them could act, or move, or think, or feel, or suffer, or desire anything, without putting the other into the same condition, one might properly say, that they were in a state of strict union, although their substances were not united together.

Now this is the union of the soul and body; the substance of the one cannot be mixed, or united with the other; but they are held together in such a state of union, that all the actions and sufferings of the one, are at the same time the actions and sufferings of the other. The soul has no thought or passion, but the body is concerned in it; the body has no action or motion, but what in some degree affects the soul.

Now as it is the sole will of God, that is the reason and cause of all the powers and effects which you see in the world; as the Sun gives light and heat, not because it has any natural power of so doing; as it is fixed in a certain place, and other bodies moving about it, not because it is in the nature of the Sun to stand still, and in the nature of other bodies to move about it; but merely because it is the will of God, that they should be in such a state. As the eye is the organ, or instrument of seeing, not because the skins, and coats, and humours of the eye, have a natural power of giving sight: As the ears are the organs, or instruments of hearing; not because the make of the ear has any natural power over sounds, but merely because it is the will of God, that seeing and hearing should be thus received: So in like manner it is the sole will of God, and not the nature of a human soul or body, that is the cause of this union betwixt the soul and the body.

Now if you rightly apprehend this short account of the union of the soul and body, you will see a great deal into the reason and necessity of all the outward parts of Religion.

This union of our souls and bodies, is the reason both why we have so little, and so much power over ourselves. It is owing to this union, that we have so little power over our souls; for as we cannot prevent the effects of external objects upon our bodies, as we cannot command outward causes, so we cannot always command the inward state of our minds; because, as outward objects act upon our bodies without our leave, so our bodies act upon our minds by the laws of the union of the soul and the body: And thus you see it is owing to this union, that we have so little power over ourselves.

On the other hand, it is owing to this union, that we have so much power over ourselves. For as our souls, in a great measure, depend upon our bodies, and as we have great power over our bodies, as we can command our outward actions, and oblige ourselves to such habits of life, as naturally produce habits in the soul, as we can mortify our bodies, and remove ourselves, from objects that inflame our passions, so we have a great power over the inward state of our souls. Again, as we are masters of our outward actions, as we can force ourselves to outward acts of reading, praying, singing, and the like, and as all these bodily actions have an effect upon the soul, as they naturally tend to form such and such tempers in our hearts; so by being masters of these outward, bodily actions, we have great power over the inward state of the heart.

And thus it is owing to this union, that we have so much power over ourselves.

Now from this you may also see the necessity and benefit of singing Psalms, and of all the outward acts of Religion? for if the body has so much power over the soul, it is certain that all such bodily actions as affect the soul, are of great weight in Religion. Not as if there were any true worship, or piety in the actions themselves, but because they are proper to raise and support that spirit, which is the true worship of God.

Though therefore the seat of Religion is in the heart, yet since our bodies have a power over our hearts, since outward actions both proceed from, and enter into the heart, it is plain, that outward actions have a great power over that Religion which is seated in the heart.

We are therefore as well to use outward helps, as inward meditation, in order to beget and fix habits of piety in our hearts.

This doctrine may easily be carried too far; for by calling in too many outward means of worship, it may degenerate into superstition: as on the other hand, some have fallen into the contrary extreme. For because Religion is justly placed in the heart, some have pursued that notion so far, as to renounce vocal prayer, and other outward acts of worship, and have resolved all religion into a quietism, or mystic intercourse with God in silence.

Now these are two extremes equally prejudicial to true Religion; and ought not to be objected either against internal, or external worship. As you ought not to say, that I encourage that quietism by placing religion in the heart: so neither ought you to say, that I encourage superstition, by showing the benefit of outward acts of worship.

For since we are neither all soul, nor all body; seeing none of our actions are either separately of the soul, or separately of the body; seeing we have no habits but such as are produced by the actions both of our souls and bodies; it is certain, that if we would arrive at habits of devotion, or delight in God, we must not only meditate and exercise our souls, but we must practise and exercise our bodies to all such outward actions, as are conformable to these inward tempers.

If we would truly prostrate our souls before God, we must use our bodies to postures of lowliness: if we desire true fervours of devotion, we must make prayer the frequent labour of our lips. If we would banish all pride and passion from our hearts, we must force ourselves to all outward actions of patience and meekness. If we would feel inward motions of joy and delight in God, we must practise all the outward acts of it, and make our voices call upon our hearts.

Now therefore, you may plainly see the reason and necessity of singing of Psalms; it is because outward actions are necessary to support inward tempers; and therefore the outward act of joy is necessary to raise and support the inward joy of the mind.

If any People were to leave off prayer, because they seldom find the motions of their heart answering the words which they speak, you would charge them with great absurdity. You would think it very reasonable, that they should continue their prayers, and be strict in observing all times of prayer, as the most likely means of removing the dulness and indevotion of their hearts.

Now this is very much the case as to singing of Psalms; people often sing without finding any inward joy suitable to the words which they speak; therefore they are careless of it, or wholly neglect it; not considering, that they act as absurdly, as he that should neglect prayer, because his heart was not enough affected with it. For it is certain, that this singing is as much the natural means of raising motions of joy in the mind, as prayer is the natural means of raising devotion.

I have been the longer upon this head, because of its great importance to true religion. For there is no state of mind so holy, so excellent, and so truly perfect, as that of thankfulness to God, and consequently nothing is of more importance in Religion, than that which exercises and improves this habit of mind.

A dull, uneasy, complaining spirit, which is sometimes the spirit of those that seem careful of Religion, is yet, of all tempers, the most contrary to Religion, for it disowns that God which it pretends to adore. For he sufficiently disowns God, who does not adore him as a Being of infinite goodness.

If a man does not believe that all the world is as God's family, where nothing happens by chance, but all is guided and directed by the care and providence of a Being, that is all love and goodness to all his creatures; if a man do not believe this from his heart, he cannot be said truly to believe in God. And yet he that has this faith, has faith enough to overcome the world, and always be thankful to God. For he that believes that everything happens to him for the best, cannot possibly complain for the want of something that is better.

If therefore you live in murmurings and complaints, accusing all the accidents of life, it is not because you are a weak, infirm creature, but it is because you want the first principle of religion, a right belief in God. For as thankfulness is an express acknowledgment of the goodness of God towards you, so repinings and complaints, are as plain accusations of God's want of goodness towards you.

On the other hand, would you know who is the greatest Saint in the world: It is not he who prays most, or fasts most; it is not he who gives most alms, or is most eminent for temperance, chastity, or justice; but it is he who is always thankful to God, who wills everything that God willeth, who receives everything as an instance of God's goodness, and has a heart always ready to praise God for it.

All prayer and devotion, fastings and repentance, meditation and retirement, all sacraments and ordinances, are but so many means to render the soul thus divine, and conformable to the will of God, and to fill it with thankfulness and praise for everything that comes from God. This is the perfection of all virtues; and all virtues that do not tend to it, or proceed from it, are but so many false ornaments of a soul not converted unto God.

You need not therefore now wonder, that I lay so much stress upon singing a Psalm at all your devotions, since you see it is to form your spirit to such joy and thankfulness to God, as is the highest perfection of a divine and holy life.

If anyone would tell you the shortest, surest way to all happiness, and all perfection, he must tell you to make a rule to yourself, to thank and praise God for everything that happens to you. For it is certain, that whatever seeming calamity happens to you, if you thank and praise God for it, you turn it into a blessing. Could you therefore work miracles, you could not do more for yourself, than by this thankful spirit, for it heals with a word speaking, and turns all that it touches into happiness.

If therefore you would be so true to your eternal interest, as to propose this thankfulness as the end of all your Religion ; if you would but settle it in your mind, that this was the state that you were to aim at by all your devotions, you would then have something plain and visible to walk by in all your actions, you would then easily see the effect of your virtues, and might safely judge of your improvement in piety. For so far as you renounce all selfish tempers, and motions of your own will, and seek for no other happiness, but in the thankful reception of everything that happens to you, so far you may be safely reckoned to have advanced in piety.

And although this be the highest temper that you can aim at, though it be the noblest sacrifice that the greatest saint can offer unto God, yet is it not tied to any time, or place, or great occasion, but is always in your power, and may be the exercise of every day. For the common events of every day are sufficient to discover and exercise this temper, and may plainly show you how far you are governed in all your actions by this thankful spirit.

And for this reason, I exhort you to this method in your devotion, that every day may be made a day of thanksgiving, and that the spirit of murmur and discontent may be unable to enter into the heart, which is so often employed in singing the praises of God.

It may perhaps, after all, be objected, that although the great benefit, and excellent effects of this practice are very apparent, yet it seems not altogether so fit for private devotions ; since it can hardly be performed without making our devotions public to other people, and seems also liable to the charge of sounding a trumpet at our prayers.

It is therefore answered ; First, That great numbers of people have it in their power to be as private as they please : such persons therefore are excluded from this excuse, which however it may be so to others, is none to them. Therefore let such take the benefit of this excellent devotion.

Secondly, Numbers of people are by the necessity of their state, as servants, apprentices, prisoners, and families in small houses, forced to be continually in the presence or sight of somebody or other.

Now, are such persons to neglect their prayers, because they cannot pray without being seen? Are they not rather obliged to be more exact in them, that others may not be witnesses of their neglect, and so corrupted by their example?

Now what is here said of devotion, may surely be said of this chanting a Psalm, which is only a part of devotion. *

The rule is this; Do not pray that you may be seen of men, but if your confinement obliges you to be always in the sight of others, be more afraid of being seen to neglect, than of being seen to have recourse to prayer.

Thirdly, The short of the matter is this. Either people can use such privacy in this practice as to have no hearers, or they cannot. If they can, then this objection vanishes as to them: and if they cannot, they should consider their confinement, and the necessities of their state, as the confinement of a prison; and then they have an excellent pattern to follow, they may imitate St. Paul and Silas, who sung praises to God in prison, though we are expressly told, that the prisoners heard them. They therefore did not refrain from this kind of devotion for fear of being heard by others. If therefore anyone is in the same necessity, either in prison, or out of prison, what can he do better than to follow this example?

I cannot pass by this place of Scripture, without desiring the pious reader to observe, how strongly we are here called upon to this use of Psalms, and what a mighty recommendation of it, the practice of these two great Saints is.

In this their great distress, in prison, in chains, under the soreness of stripes, in the horror of night, the divinest, holiest thing they could do, was to sing praises unto God.

And shall we, after this, need any exhortation to this holy practice? Shall we let the day pass without such thanksgivings, as they would not neglect in the night? Shall a prison, chains, and darkness furnish them with songs of praise, and shall we have no singings in our closets?

Further let it also be observed, that while these two holy men were thus employed in the most exalted part of devotion, doing that on earth, which Angels do in Heaven, that 'the foundations of the prison were shaken, all the doors were opened, and everyone's bands were loosed.'*

And shall we now ask for motives to this divine exercise, when instead of arguments, we have here such miracles to convince us of its mighty power with God?

Could God by a voice from Heaven more expressly call us to these songs of praise, than by thus showing us, how he hears, delivers, and rewards those that use them ?

But this by the way. I now return to the objection in hand ; and answer Fourthly, That the privacy of our prayers is not destroyed by our having, but by our seeking witnesses of them.

If therefore nobody hears you but those you cannot separate yourself from, you are as much in secret, and 'your Father who 'seeth in secret,' will as truly reward your secrecy, as if you were seen by him alone.

Fifthly, Private prayer, as it is opposed to prayer in public, does not suppose that no one is to have any witness of it. For husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, parents and children, masters and servants, tutors and pupils, are to be witnesses to one another of such devotion, as may truly and properly be called private. It is far from being a duty to conceal such devotion from such near relations.

In all these cases therefore, where such relations sometimes pray together in private, and sometimes apart by themselves, the chanting of a Psalm can have nothing objected against it.

Our blessed Lord commands us, when we fast, to 'anoint our 'heads, and wash our faces, that we appear not unto men to fast, 'but unto our Father which is in secret.'

But this only means, that we must not make public ostentation to the world of our fasting.

For if no one was to fast in private, or could be said to fast in private, but he that had no witnesses of it, no one could keep a private fast, but he that lived by himself : For every family must know who fasts in it. Therefore the privacy of fasting does not suppose such a privacy as excludes everybody from knowing it, but such a privacy as does not seek to be known abroad.

Cornelius the devout Centurion, of whom the Scripture saith, that he 'gave much,' and 'prayed to God alway,' saith unto St. Peter, 'four days ago, I was fasting until this hour.'*

Now that this fasting was sufficiently private and acceptable to God, appears from the vision of an Angel, with which the holy man was blessed at that time.

But that it was not so private, as to be entirely unknown to others, appears, as from the relation of it here, so from what is said in another place, that he 'called two of his household 'servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited upon him 'continually.† So that Cornelius's fasting was so far from being unknown to his family, that the soldiers and they of his household were made devout themselves, by continually wait- ing upon him, that is, by seeing and partaking of his good works.

As therefore the privacy or excellency of fasting, is not destroyed by being known to some particular persons, neither would the privacy or excellency of your devotions be hurt, though by chanting a Psalm, you should be heard by some of your family.

The whole of the matter is this. Great part of the world can be as private as they please, therefore let them use this excellent devotion between God and themselves.

Another great part of the world must, and ought to have witnesses of several of their devotions; let them therefore not neglect the use of a Psalm at such times as it ought to be known to those with whom they live, that they do not neglect their prayers. For surely there can be no harm in being known to be singing a Psalm, at such times as it ought to be known that you are at your prayers.

And if at other times, you desire to be in such secrecy at your devotions, as to have nobody suspect it, and for that reason forbear your psalm; I have nothing to object against it: Provided, that at the known hours of prayer, you never omit this practice.

For who would not be often doing that in the day, which St. Paul and Silas would not neglect in the middle of the night? And if when you are thus singing, it should come into your head, how the prison shaked, and the doors opened, when St. Paul sung, it would do your devotion no harm.

Lastly, seeing our *imagination*s have great power over our hearts, and can mightily affect us with their representations, it would be of great use to you, if, at the beginning of your devotions, you were to imagine to yourself some such representations, as might heat and warm your heart into a temper suitable to those prayers that you are then about to offer unto God.

As thus: before you begin your psalm of praise and rejoicing in God, make this use of your imagination.

Be still, and imagine to yourself, that you saw the heavens open, and the glorious Choirs of Cherubims and Seraphims about the throne of God. Imagine that you hear the music of those Angelic voices, that cease not day and night to sing the glories of him that is, and was, and is to come.

Help your imagination with such passages of Scripture as these: 'I beheld, and lo, in heaven a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, standing before the throne, and before the lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands. And they cried 'with a loud voice, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the lamb.

'And all the angels stood round about the throne, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, saying, 'Amen : Blessing and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and strength, be unto God, for ever and ever. 'Amen.'*

Think upon this till your imagination has carried you above the clouds, till it has placed you amongst those heavenly beings, and made you long to bear a part in their eternal music.

If you will but use yourself to this method, and let your imagination dwell upon such representations as these, you will soon find it to be an excellent means of raising the spirit of devotion within you.

Always therefore begin your Psalm, or Song of praise, with these imaginations ; and at every verse of it, imagine yourself amongst those heavenly companions, that your voice is added to theirs, and that Angels join with you, and you with them ; and that you with a poor and low voice are singing that on earth, which they are singing in heaven.

Again, Sometimes imagine that you had been one of those that joined with our blessed Saviour when he sung an Hymn. Strive to imagine to yourself, with what majesty he looked ; fancy that you had stood close by him surrounded with his glory. Think how your heart would have been inflamed, what ecstasies of joy you would have then felt, when singing with the Son of God. Think again and again, with what joy and devotion you would then have sung, had this been really your happy state, and what a punishment you should have thought it, to have been then silent ; and let this teach you how to be affected with Psalms and Hymns of thanksgiving.

Again, Sometimes imagine to yourself, that you saw holy David with his hands upon his harp, and his eyes fixed upon heaven, calling in transport upon all the Creation, Sun and Moon, light and darkness, day and night, men and angels, to join with his rapturous soul in praising the Lord of Heaven.

Dwell upon this imagination, till you think you are singing with this divine musician, and let such a companion teach you to exalt your heart unto God in the following Psalm ; which you may use constantly first in the morning.

Psalm cxlv. 'I will magnify thee, O God my king : and I will praise thy name for ever and ever,' &c.

These following Psalms, as the 34th, 96th, 103rd, 111th, 146th, 147th, are such as wonderfully set forth the glory of God ; and therefore you may keep to any one of them, at any particular hour, as you like : Or you may take the finest parts of any Psalms, and so adding them together, may make them fitter for your own devotion.

Chapter XVI.

Recommending devotion at nine o'clock in the morning, called in Scripture the third hour of the day. The subject of these prayers is humility.

I AM now come to another hour of prayer, which in Scripture is called the third hour of the day ; but according to our way of numbering the hours, it is called the ninth hour of the morning.

The devout Christian must at this time look upon himself, as called upon by God to renew his acts of prayer, and address himself again to the throne of grace.

There is indeed no express command in Scripture to repeat our devotions at this hour. But then it is to be considered also, that neither is there any express command to begin and end the day with prayer. So that if that be looked upon as a reason for neglecting devotion at this hour, it may as well be urged as a reason, for neglecting devotion both at the beginning and end of the day.

But if the practice of the saints in all ages of the world, if the customs of the pious Jews and primitive Christians be of any force with us, we have authority enough to persuade us, to make this hour a constant season of devotion.

The Scriptures show us, how this hour was consecrated to devotion both by Jews and Christians ; so that if we desire to number ourselves amongst those whose hearts were devoted unto God, we must not let this hour pass, without presenting us to him in some solemnities of devotion. And besides this authority for this practice, the reasonableness of it, is sufficient to invite us to the observance of it.

For if you were up at a good time in the morning, your first devotions will have been at a proper distance from this hour ; you will have been long enough at other business, to make it proper for you to return to this greatest of all business, the raising your soul and affections unto God.

But if you have risen so late, as to be hardly able to begin your first devotions at this hour, which is proper for your second, you may thence learn, that the indulging yourself in the morning sleep is no small matter; since it sets you so far back in your devotions, and robs you of those graces and blessings, which are obtained by frequent prayers.

For if prayer has power with God, if it looses the bands of sin, if it purifies the soul, reforms our hearts, and draws down the aids of divine grace; how can that be reckoned a small matter, which robs us of an hour of prayer?

Imagine yourself somewhere placed in the air, as a spectator of all that passes in the world; and that you saw in one view, the devotions which all Christian people offer unto God every day. Imagine, that you saw some piously dividing the day and night, as the primitive Christians did, and constant at all hours of devotion, singing Psalms, and calling upon God, at all those times, that Saints and Martyrs received their gifts and graces from God.

Imagine that you saw others living without any rules, as to times and frequency of prayer, and only at their devotions sooner or later, as sleep and laziness happens to permit them.

Now if you were to see this, as God sees it, how do you suppose you should be affected with this sight? What judgment do you imagine, you should pass upon these different sorts of people? Could you think, that those who were thus exact in their rules of devotion, got nothing by their exactness? Could you think, that their prayers were received just in the same manner, and procured them no more blessings, than theirs do, who prefer laziness and indulgence to times and rules of devotion?

Could you take the one to be as true servants of God, as the other? Could you imagine, that those who were thus different in their lives, would find no difference in their states after death? Could you think it a matter of indifferency, to which of these people you were most like?

If not, let it be now your care, to join yourself to that number of devout people, to that society of saints, amongst whom you desire to be found, when you leave the world.

And although the bare number and repetition of our prayers is of little value, yet since prayer rightly and attentively performed, is the most natural means of amending and purifying our hearts; since importunity and frequency in prayer is as much pressed upon us by Scripture, as prayer itself; we may be sure, that when we are frequent and importunate in our prayers, we are taking the best means, of obtaining the highest benefits of a devout life.

And on the other hand, they, who through negligence, laziness, or any other indulgence, render themselves either unable, or uninclined to observe rules and hours of devotion, we may be sure, that they deprive themselves of those graces and blessings, which an exact and fervent devotion procures from God.

Now as this frequency of prayer, is founded in the doctrines of Scripture, and recommended to us by the practice of the true worshippers of God; so we ought not to think ourselves excused from it, but where we can show, that we are spending our time in such business, as is more acceptable to God, than these returns of prayer.

Least of all must we imagine, that dulness, negligence, indulgence, or diversions, can be any pardonable excuses, for our not observing an exact and frequent method of devotion.

If you are of a devout spirit, you will rejoice at these returns of prayer, which keep your soul in an holy enjoyment of God; which change your passions into divine love, and fill your heart with stronger joys and consolations, than you can possibly meet with in anything else.

And if you are not of a devout spirit, then you are moreover obliged to this frequency of prayer, to train and exercise your heart into a true sense and feeling of devotion.

Now seeing the holy spirit of the Christian Religion, and the example of the saints of all ages, calls upon you thus to divide the day into hours of prayer; so it will be highly beneficial to you, to make a right choice of those matters, which are to be the subject of your prayers, and to keep every hour of prayer appropriated to some particular subject, which you may alter, or enlarge, according as the state you are in requires.

By this means, you will have an opportunity of being large and particular in all the parts of any virtue or grace, which you then make the subject of your prayers. And by asking for it in all its parts, and making it the substance of a whole prayer once every day, you will soon find a mighty change in your heart; and that you cannot thus constantly pray, for all the parts of any virtue every day of your life, and yet live the rest of the day contrary to it.

If a worldly-minded man, was to pray every day against all the instances of a worldly temper: If he should make a large description of the temptations of covetousness, and desire God to assist him to reject them all, and to disappoint him in all his covetous designs, he would find his conscience so much awakened, that he would be forced either to forsake such prayers, or to forsake a worldly life.

The same will hold true in any other instance. And if we ask, and have not, 'tis because we ask amiss. Because we ask in cold and general forms, such as only name the virtues, without describing their particular parts, such as are not enough particular to our condition, and therefore make no change in our hearts. Whereas, when a man enumerates all the parts of any virtue in his prayers, his conscience is thereby awakened, and he is frightened at seeing how far short he is of it. And this stirs him up to an ardour in devotion, when he sees how much he wants of that virtue, which he is praying for.

I have, in the last chapter, laid before you the excellency of praise and thanksgiving, and recommended that as the subject of your first devotions in the morning.

And because an humble state of soul, is the very state of Religion, because humility is the life and soul of piety, the foundation and support of every virtue and good work, the best guard and security of all holy affections; I shall recommend humility to you, as highly proper to be made the constant subject of your devotions, at this third hour of the day; earnestly desiring you to think no day safe, or likely to end well, in which you have not thus early put yourself in this posture of humility, and called upon God to carry you through the day, in the exercise of a meek and lowly spirit.

This virtue is so essential to the right state of our souls, that there is no pretending to a reasonable or pious life without it. We may as well think to see without eyes, or live without breath, as to live in the spirit of religion, without the spirit of humility.

And although it is thus the soul and essence of all religious duties, yet is it, generally speaking, the least understood, the least regarded, the least intended, the least desired and sought after, of all other virtues, amongst all sorts of Christians.

No people have more occasion to be afraid of the approaches of pride, than those who have made some advances in a pious life. For pride can grow as well upon our virtues, as our vices, and steals upon us on all occasions.

Every good thought that we have, every good action that we do, lays us open to pride, and exposes us to the assaults of vanity and self-satisfaction.

It is not only the beauty of our persons, the gifts of fortune, our natural talents, and the distinctions of life; but even our devotions and alms, our fastings and humiliations, expose us to fresh and strong temptations of this evil spirit.

And it is for this reason, that I so earnestly advise every devout person to begin every day in this exercise of humility, that he may go on in safety under the protection of this good guide, and not fall a sacrifice to his own progress in those virtues, which are to save mankind from destruction.

Humility does not consist, in having a worse opinion of ourselves than we deserve, or in abasing ourselves lower than we really are. But as all virtue is founded in truth, so humility is founded in a true and just sense of our weakness, misery, and sin. He that rightly feels and lives in this sense of his condition, lives in humility.

The weakness of our state appears from our inability to do anything, as of ourselves. In our natural state we are entirely without any power; we are indeed active beings, but can only act by a power, that is every moment lent us from God.

We have no more power of our own to move a hand, or stir a foot, than to move the sun, or stop the clouds.

When we speak a word, we feel no more power in ourselves to do it, than we feel ourselves able to raise the dead. For we act no more within our own power, or by our own strength, when we speak a word, or make a sound, than the Apostles acted within their own power, or by their own strength, when a word from their mouth cast out devils, and cured diseases.

As it was solely the power of God, that enabled them to speak to such purposes, so it is solely the power of God that enables us to speak at all.

We indeed find that we can speak, as we find that we are alive; but the actual exercise of speaking is no more in our own power, than the actual enjoyment of life.

This is the dependent, helpless poverty of our state; which is a great reason for humility. For since we neither are, nor can do anything of ourselves, to be proud of anything that we are, or of anything that we can do, and to ascribe glory to ourselves for these things, as our own ornaments, has the guilt both of stealing and lying. It has the guilt of stealing, as it gives to ourselves those things which only belong to God. It has the guilt of lying, as it is the denying the truth of our state, and pretending to be something that we are not.

Secondly, Another argument for humility, is founded in the misery of our condition.

Now the misery of our condition appears in this, that we use these borrowed powers of our nature, to the torment and vexation of ourselves, and our fellow-creatures.

God Almighty has entrusted us with the use of reason, and we use it to the disorder and corruption of our nature. We reason ourselves into all kinds of folly and misery, and make our lives the sport of foolish and extravagant passions: Seeking after imaginary happiness in all kinds of shapes, creating to ourselves a thousand wants, amusing our hearts with false hopes and fears, using the world worse than irrational animals, envying, vexing, and tormenting one another with restless passions, and unreasonable contentions.

Let any man but look back upon his own life, and see what use he has made of his reason, how little he has consulted it, and how less he has followed it. What foolish passions, what vain thoughts, what needless labours, what extravagant projects, have taken up the greatest part of his life. How foolish he has been in his words and conversation; how seldom he has done well with judgment, and how often he has been kept from doing ill by accident; how seldom he has been able to please himself, and how often he has displeased others; how often he has changed his counsels, hated what he loved, and loved what he hated; how often he has been enraged and transported at trifles, pleased and displeased with the very same things, and constantly changing from one vanity to another. Let a man but take this view of his own life, and he will see reason enough to confess, that pride was not made for man.

Let him but consider, that if the world knew all that of him, which he knows of himself; if they saw what vanity and passions govern his inside, and what secret tempers sully and corrupt his best actions, he would have no more pretence to be honoured and admired for his goodness and wisdom, than a rotten and distempered body, to be loved and admired for its beauty and comeliness.

This is so true, and so known to the hearts of almost all people, that nothing would appear more dreadful to them, than to have their hearts thus fully discovered to the eyes of all beholders.

And perhaps there are very few people in the world, who would not rather choose to die, than to have all their secret follies, the errors of their judgments, the vanity of their minds, the falseness of their pretences, the frequency of their vain and disorderly passions, their uneasiness, hatreds, envies, and vexations, made known unto the world.

And shall pride be entertained in a heart, thus conscious of its own miserable behaviour?

Shall a creature in such a condition, that he could not support himself under the shame of being known to the world in his real state; shall such a creature, because his shame is only known to God, to holy Angels, and his own conscience; shall he, in the sight of God and holy angels, dare to be vain and proud of himself?

Thirdly, If to this we add the shame and guilt of sin, we shall find a still greater reason for humility.

No creature that had lived in innocence, would have thereby got any pretence for self-honour and esteem; because as a creature, all that it is, or has, or does, is from God, and therefore the honour of all that belongs to it is only due to God.

But if a creature that is a sinner, and under the displeasure of the great governor of all the world, and deserving nothing from him, but pains and punishments for the shameful abuse of his powers; if such a creature pretends to self-glory for anything that he is, or does, he can only be said to glory in his shame.

Now how monstrous and shameful the nature of sin is, is sufficiently apparent from that great atonement, that is necessary to cleanse us from the guilt of it.

Nothing less has been required to take away the guilt of our sins, than the sufferings and death of the Son of God. Had he not taken our nature upon him, our nature had been for ever separated from God, and incapable of ever appearing before him.

And is there any room for pride, or self-glory, whilst we are partakers of such a nature as this?

Have our sins rendered us so abominable and odious to him that made us, that he could not so much as receive our prayers, or admit our repentance, till the Son of God made himself man, and became a suffering advocate for our whole race; and can we in this state, pretend to high thoughts of ourselves? Shall we presume to take delight in our own worth, who are not worthy so much as to ask pardon for our sins, without the mediation and intercession of the Son of God?

Thus deep is the foundation of humility laid, in these deplorable circumstances of our condition; which show, that it is as great an offence against truth, and the reason of things, for a man in this state of things, to lay claim to any degrees of glory, as to pretend to the honour of creating himself. If man will boast of anything as his own, he must boast of his misery and sin; for there is nothing else but this, that is his own property.

Turn your eyes towards heaven, and fancy that you saw what is doing there; that you saw cherubims and seraphims, and all the glorious inhabitants of that place, all united in one work; not seeking glory from one another, not labouring their own advancement, not contemplating their own perfections, not singing their own praises, not valuing themselves, and despising others, but all employed in one and the same work, all happy in one and the same joy; 'casting down their crowns before the throne of God, giving glory, and honour, and power to him alone.'^{*}

Then turn your eyes to the fallen world, and consider how unreasonable and odious it must be, for such poor worms, such miserable *sinner*s, to take delight in their own fancied glories, whilst the highest and most glorious sons of heaven, seek for no other greatness and honour, but that of ascribing all honour and greatness, and glory to God alone?

Pride is only the disorder of the fallen world, it has no place amongst other beings; it can only subsist where ignorance and sensuality, lies and falsehood, lusts and impurity reign.

Let a man, when he is most delighted with his own figure, look upon a crucifix, and contemplate our blessed Lord stretched out, and nailed upon a Cross; and then let him consider, how absurd it must be, for a heart full of pride and vanity, to pray to God, through the sufferings of such a meek and crucified Saviour?

These are the reflections that you are often to meditate upon, that you may thereby be disposed to walk before God and man, in such a spirit of humility, as becomes the weak, miserable, sinful state of all that are descended from fallen Adam.

When you have by such general reflections as these, convinced your mind of the reasonableness of humility, you must not content yourself with this, as if you were therefore humble, because your mind acknowledges the reasonableness of humility, and declares against pride. But you must immediately enter yourself into the practice of this virtue, like a young beginner, that has all of it to learn, that can learn but little at a time, and with great difficulty. You must consider, that you have not only this virtue to learn, but that you must be content to proceed as a learner in it all your time, endeavouring after greater degrees of it, and practising every day acts of humility, as you every day practise acts of devotion.

You would not imagine yourself to be devout, because in your judgment you approved of prayers, and often declared your mind in favour of devotion. Yet how many people imagine themselves humble enough, for no other reason, but because they often commend humility, and make vehement declarations against pride?

Cæcus is a rich man, of good birth, and very fine parts. He is fond of dress, curious in the smallest matters that can add any ornament to his person. He is haughty and imperious to all his inferiors, is very full of everything that he says, or does, and never imagines it possible, for such a judgment as his to be mistaken. He can bear no contradiction, and discovers the weakness of your understanding, as soon as ever you oppose him. He changes everything in his house, his habit, and his equipage, as often as anything more elegant comes in his way. Cæcus would have been very religious, but that he always thought he was so.

There is nothing so odious to Cæcus as a proud man ; and the misfortune is, that in this he is so very quick-sighted, that he discovers in almost everybody, some strokes of vanity.

On the other hand, he is exceeding fond of humble and modest persons. Humility, says he, is so amiable a quality, that it forces our esteem wherever we meet with it. There is no possibility of despising the meanest person that has it, or of esteeming the greatest man that wants it.

Cæcus no more suspects himself to be proud, than he suspects his want of sense. And the reason of it is, because he always finds himself so in love with humility, and so enraged at pride.

It is very true, Cæcus, you speak sincerely, when you say you love humility, and abhor pride. You are no hypocrite, you speak the true sentiments of your mind ; but then take this along with you, Cæcus, that you only love humility, and hate pride, in other people. You never once in your life thought of any other humility, or of any other pride, than that which you have seen in other people.

The case of Cæcus is a common case ; many people live in all the instances of pride, and indulge every vanity that can enter into their minds, and yet never suspect themselves to be governed by pride and vanity, because they know how much they dislike proud people, and how mightily they are pleased with humility and modesty, wherever they find them.

All their speeches in favour of humility, and all their railings against pride, are looked upon as so many true exercises, and effects of their own humble spirit.

Whereas in truth, these are so far from being proper acts, or proofs of humility, that they are great arguments of the want of it.

For the fuller of pride anyone is himself, the more impatient will he be at the smallest instances of it in other people. And the less humility anyone has in his own mind, the more will he demand, and be delighted with it in other people.

You must therefore act by a quite contrary measure, and reckon yourself only so far humble, as you impose every instance of humility upon yourself, and never call for it in other people.

a Devout and Holy Life. 169

So far an enemy to pride, as you never spare it in yourself, nor ever censure it in other persons.

Now in order to do this, you need only consider, that pride and humility signify nothing to you, but so far as they are your own ; that they do you neither good nor harm, but as they are the tempers of your heart.

The loving therefore of humility is of no benefit or advantage to you, but so far as you love to see all your own thoughts, words, and actions governed by it. And the hating of pride does you no good, is no perfection in you, but so far as you hate to harbour any degree of it in your own heart.

Now in order to begin, and set out well in the practice of humility, you must take it for granted that you are proud, that you have all your life been more or less infected with this unreasonable temper.

You should believe also, that it is your greatest weakness, that your heart is most subject to it, that it is so constantly stealing upon you, that you have reason to watch and suspect its approaches in all your actions.

For this is what most people, especially new beginners in a pious life, may with great truth think of themselves.

For there is no one vice, that is more deeply rooted in our nature, or that receives such constant nourishment from almost everything that we think or do. There being hardly anything in the world that we want or use, or any action or duty of life, but pride finds some means or other to take hold of it. So that at what time soever we begin to offer ourselves to God, we can hardly be surer of anything than that we have a great deal of pride to repent of.

If therefore you find it disagreeable to your mind, to entertain this opinion of yourself, and that you cannot put yourself amongst those that want to be cured of pride, you may be as sure, as if an Angel from heaven had told you, that you have not only much, but all your humility to seek.

For you can have no greater sign of a more confirmed pride, than when you think that you are humble enough. He that thinks he loves God enough, shows himself to be an entire stranger to that holy passion ; so he that thinks he has humility enough, shows that he is not so much as a beginner in the practice of true humility.

Chapter XVII.

Showing how difficult the practice of humility is made, by the general spirit and temper of the world. How Christianity requireth us to live contrary to the world.

EVERY person, when he first applies himself to the exercise of this virtue of humility, must, as I said before, consider himself as a learner, that is to learn something that is contrary to former tempers and habits of mind, and which can only be got by daily and constant practice.

He has not only as much to do, as he that has some new art, or science to learn, but he has also a great deal to unlearn: He is to forget, and lay aside his own spirit, which has been a long while fixing and forming itself; he must forget, and depart from abundance of passions and opinions, which the fashion and vogue, and spirit of the world, have made natural to him.

He must lay aside his own spirit; because as we are born in sin, so in pride, which is as natural to us as self-love, and continually springs from it. And this is the reason, why Christianity is so often represented as a new birth, and a new spirit.

He must lay aside the opinions and passions which he has received from the world; because the vogue and fashion of the world, by which we have been carried away, as in a torrent, before we could pass right judgments of the value of things, is, in many respects, contrary to humility: so that we must unlearn what the spirit of the world has taught us, before we can be governed by the spirit of humility.

The Devil is called in Scripture the prince of this world, because he has great power in it, because many of its rules and principles are invented by this evil spirit, the father of all lies and falsehood, to separate us from God, and prevent our return to happiness.

Now according to the spirit and vogue of this world, whose corrupt air we have all breathed, there are many things that pass for great and honourable, and most desirable, which yet are so far from being so, that the true greatness and honour of our nature consist in the not desiring them.

To abound in wealth, to have fine houses, and rich clothes, to be beautiful in our persons, to have titles of dignity, to be above our fellow-creatures, to command the bows and obeisance of other people, to be looked on with admiration, to overcome our enemies with power, to subdue all that oppose us, to set out ourselves in as much splendour as we can, to live highly and magnificently, to eat and drink, and delight ourselves in the most costly manner, these are the great, the honourable, the desirable things, to which the spirit of the world turns the eyes of all people. And many a man is afraid of standing still, and not engaging in the pursuit of these things, lest the same world should take him for a fool.

The history of the Gospel, is chiefly the history of Christ's conquest over this spirit of the world. And the number of true Christians, is only the number of those, who following the Spirit of Christ, have lived contrary to this spirit of the world.

'If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.' Again, 'Whosoever is born of God, overcometh the world. Set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth; for ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.' This is the language of the whole New Testament. This is the mark of Christianity; you are to be dead, that is, dead to the spirit and temper of the world, and live a new life in the Spirit of Jesus Christ.

But notwithstanding the clearness and plainness of these doctrines which thus renounce the world, yet great part of Christians live and die slaves to the customs and temper of the world.

How many people swell with pride and vanity, for such things as they would not know how to value at all, but that they are admired in the world?

Would a man take ten years more drudgery in business to add two horses more to his coach, but that he knows, that the world most of all admires a coach and six? How fearful are many people of having their houses poorly furnished, or themselves meanly clothed, for this only reason, lest the world should make no account of them, and place them amongst low and mean people?

How often would a man have yielded to the haughtiness and ill-nature of others, and shown a submissive temper, but that he dares not pass for such a poor-spirited man in the opinion of the world?

Many a man would often drop a resentment, and forgive an affront, but that he is afraid, if he should, the world would not forgive him?

How many would practise Christian temperance and sobriety in its utmost perfection, were it not for the censure which the world passes upon such a life?

Others have frequent intentions of living up to the rules of Christian perfection, which they are frightened from, by considering what the world would say of them.

Thus do the impressions which we have received from living in the world enslave our minds, that we dare not attempt to be eminent in the sight of God, and holy Angels, for fear of being little in the eyes of the world.

From this quarter arises the greatest difficulty of humility, because it cannot subsist in any mind, but so far as it is dead to the world, and has parted with all desires of enjoying its greatness and honours. So that in order to be truly humble, you must unlearn all those notions, which you have been all your life learning from this corrupt spirit of the world.

You can make no stand against the assaults of pride, the meek affections of humility can have no place in your soul, till you stop the power of the world over you, and resolve against a blind obedience to its laws.

And when you are once advanced thus far, as to be able to stand still in the torrent of worldly fashions and opinions, and, examine the worth and value of things which are most admired and valued in the world, you have gone a great way in the gaining of your freedom, and have laid a good foundation for the amendment of your heart.

For as great as the power of the world is, it is all built upon a blind obedience, and we need only open our eyes, to get rid of its power.

Ask who you will, learned or unlearned, everyone seems to know and confess, that the general temper and spirit of the world, is nothing else but humour, folly, and extravagance.

Who will not own, that the wisdom of Philosophy, the piety of Religion, were always confined to a small number? And is not this expressly owning and confessing, that the common spirit and temper of the world, is neither according to the wisdom of Philosophy, nor the piety of Religion.

The world therefore seems enough condemned, even by itself, to make it very easy for a thinking man to be of the same judgment.

And therefore I hope, you will not think it a hard saying, that in order to be humble, you must withdraw your obedience from that vulgar spirit, which gives laws to Fops and Coquettes, and form your judgments according to the wisdom of Philosophy, and the piety of Religion. Who would be afraid of making such a change as this?

Again, To lessen your fear and regard to the opinion of the world, think how soon the world will disregard you, and have no more thought or concern about you, than about the poorest animal that died in a ditch.

Your friends, if they can, may bury you with some distinction, and set up a monument, to let posterity see that your dust lies under such a Stone; and when that is done, all is done. Your place is filled up by another, the world is just in the same state it was, you are blotted out of its sight, and as much forgotten by the world, as if you had never belonged to it.

Think upon the rich, the great, and the learned persons, that have made great figures, and been high in the esteem of the world; many of them died in your time, and yet they are sunk, and lost, and gone, and as much disregarded by the world, as if they had been only so many bubbles of water.

Think again, how many poor souls see heaven lost, and lie now expecting a miserable eternity, for their service and homage to a world, that thinks itself every whit as well without them, and is just as merry as it was, when they were in it.

Is it therefore worth your while to lose the smallest degree of virtue, for the sake of pleasing so bad a master, and so false a friend as the world is?

Is it worth your while to bow the knee to such an idol as this, that so soon will have neither eyes, nor ears, nor a heart to regard you, instead of serving that great, and holy, and mighty God, that will make all his servants partakers of his own eternity?

Will you let the fear of a false world, that has no love for you, keep you from the fear of that God who has only created you, that he may love and bless you to all eternity?

Lastly, you must consider what behaviour the profession of Christianity requireth of you, with regard to the world.

Now this is plainly delivered in these words: 'Who gave 'himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present 'evil world.* Christianity therefore implieth a deliverance from this world; and he that professeth it, professeth to live contrary to everything, and every temper, that is peculiar to this evil world.

St. John declareth this opposition to the world in this manner, 'They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and 'the world heareth them. We are of God.† This is the description of the followers of Christ; and it is proof enough, that no people are to be reckoned Christians in reality, who in their hearts and tempers belong to this world. 'We know,' saith the same Apostle, 'that we are of God, and the whole world 'lieth in wickedness.‡ Christians therefore can no further know that they are of God, than so far as they know they are not of the world ; that is, that they do not live according to the ways and spirit of the world. For all the ways, and maxims, and politics, and tempers of the world, lie in wickedness. And he is only of God, or born of God in Christ Jesus, who has overcome this world, that is, who has chosen to live by faith, and govern his actions by the principles of a wisdom, revealed from God by Christ Jesus.

* Gal. i. 4.

St. Paul takes it for a certainty, so well known to Christians, that they are no longer to be considered as living in this world, that he thus argues from it, as from an undeniable principle, concerning the abolishing the rites of the Jewish law : ' Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances ? '* Here could be no argument in this, but in the Apostle's taking it for undeniable, that Christians knew, that their profession required them to have done with all the tempers, and passions of this world, to live as citizens of the new Jerusalem, and to have their conversations in heaven.

Our blessed Lord himself, has fully determined this point, in these words : ' They are not of this world, as I am not of this world.' This is the state of Christianity with regard to this world. If you are not thus out of, and contrary to the world, you want the distinguishing mark of Christianity ; you do not belong to Christ, but by being out of the world, as he was out of it.

We may deceive ourselves, if we please, with vain and softening comments upon these words, but they are, and will be understood in their first simplicity and plainness, by everyone that reads them in the same spirit that our blessed Lord spoke them. And to understand them in any lower, less significant meaning, is to let carnal wisdom explain away that doctrine, by which itself was to be destroyed.

The Christian's great conquest over the world, is all contained in the mystery of Christ upon the Cross. It was there, and from thence, that he taught all Christians how they were to come out of, and conquer the world, and what they were to do in order to be his Disciples. And all the doctrines, sacraments, and institutions of the Gospel, are only so many explications of the meaning, and applications of the benefit of this great mystery.

And the state of Christianity implieth nothing else, but an entire, absolute conformity to that spirit, which Christ showed in the mysterious sacrifice of himself upon the cross.

Every man therefore is only so far a Christian, as he partakes of this spirit of Christ. It was this that made St. Paul so passionately express himself, 'God forbid that I should glory, 'save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ:' But why does he glory? Is it because Christ had suffered in his stead, and had excused him from suffering? No, by no means. But it was because his Christian profession had called him to the honour of suffering with Christ, and of dying to the world under reproach and contempt, as he had done upon the cross. For he immediately adds, 'by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I 'unto the world.* This you see was the reason of his glorying in the cross of Christ, because it had called him to a like state of death and crucifixion to the world.

Thus was the cross of Christ, in St. Paul's days, the glory of Christians; not as it signified their not being ashamed to own a Master that was crucified, but as it signified their glorying in a Religion, which was nothing else but a doctrine of the Cross, that called them to the same suffering spirit, the same sacrifice of themselves, the same renunciation of the world, the same humility and weakness, the same patient bearing of injuries, reproaches, and contempts, and the same dying to all the greatness, honours, and happiness of this world, which Christ showed upon the Cross.

To have a true idea of Christianity, we must not consider our blessed Lord, as suffering in our stead, but as our representative, acting in our name, and with such particular merit, as to make our joining with him acceptable unto God.

He suffered, and was a sacrifice, to make our sufferings and sacrifice of ourselves fit to be received by God. And we are to suffer, to be crucified, to die, and rise with Christ, or else his crucifixion, death, and resurrection will profit us nothing.

The necessity of this conformity to all that Christ did, and suffered upon our account, is very plain from the whole tenor of Scripture.

First, as to his sufferings, this is the only condition of our being saved by them, 'if we suffer with him, we shall also reign 'with him.'

Secondly, as to his Crucifixion: 'Knowing this, that our old 'man is crucified with him,† &c. Here you see, Christ is not crucified in our stead; but unless our old man be really crucified with him, the cross of Christ will profit us nothing.

Thirdly, as to the death of Christ, the condition is this: 'If we 'be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with 'him.' If therefore Christ be dead alone, if we are not dead with him, we are as sure from this Scripture, that we shall not live with him.

* Gal. vi. 14.

Lastly, as to the resurrection of Christ, the Scripture showeth us how we are to partake of the benefit of it: 'If ye be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.'*

Thus you see, how plainly the Scripture sets forth our blessed Lord, as our representative acting and suffering in our name, binding and obliging us to conform to all that he did and suffered for us.

It was for this reason, that the holy Jesus said of his disciples, and in them of all true believers, 'They are not of this world, as I am not of this world.' Because all true believers conforming to the sufferings, crucifixion, death, and resurrection of Christ, live no longer after the spirit and temper of this world, but their life is hid with Christ in God.

This is the state of separation from the world, to which all orders of Christians are called. They must so far renounce all worldly tempers, be so far governed by the things of another life, as to show, that they are truly and really crucified, dead, and risen with Christ. And it is as necessary for all Christians, to conform to this great change of spirit, to be thus in Christ new creatures, as it was necessary that Christ should suffer, die, and rise again for our salvation.

How high the Christian life is placed above the ways of this world, is wonderfully described by St. Paul in these words: 'Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh; yet henceforth know we him no more. Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.'†

He that feels the force and spirit of these words, can hardly bear any human interpretation of them. Henceforth, says he, that is, since the death and resurrection of Christ, the state of Christianity is become so glorious a state, that we do not even consider Christ himself as in the flesh upon earth, but as a God of glory in heaven; we know and consider ourselves not as men in the flesh, but as fellow-members of a new society, that are to have all our hearts, our tempers, and conversation in heaven.

Thus is it that Christianity has placed us out of, and above the world; and we fall from our calling, as soon as we fall into the tempers of the world.

Now as it was the spirit of the world that nailed our blessed

* Col. iii. 1.

† 2 Cor. v. 16.

Lord to the cross; so every man that has the spirit of Christ that opposes the world as he did, will certainly be crucified by the world some way or other.

For Christianity still lives in the same world that Christ did; and these two will be utter enemies, till the kingdom of darkness is entirely at an end.

Had you lived with our Saviour as his true disciple, you had then been hated as he was; and if you now live in his spirit, the world will be the same enemy to you now, that it was to him then.

'If ye were of the world,' saith our blessed Lord, 'the world would love its own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.'*

We are apt to lose the true meaning of these words, by considering them only as an historical description, of something that was the state of our Saviour and his disciples at that time. But this is reading the Scripture as a dead letter; for they exactly describe the state of true Christians at this, and all other times, to the end of the world.

For as true Christianity is nothing else but the spirit of Christ, so whether that spirit appear in the person of Christ himself, or his Apostles, or followers in any age, it is the same thing; whoever hath his spirit, will be hated, despised, and condemned by the world, as he was.

For the world will always love its own, and none but its own: this is as certain and unchangeable, as the contrariety betwixt light and darkness.

When the holy Jesus saith, 'If the world hate you,' he does not add by way of consolation, that it may some time or other cease its hatred, or that it will not always hate them; but he only gives this as a reason for their hearing it, 'You know that 'it hated me, before it hated you:' signifying, that it was he, that is, his spirit, that by reason of its contrariety to the world, was then, and always would be hated by it.

You will perhaps say, that the world is now become Christian, at least that part of it where we live; and therefore the world is not now to be considered in that state of opposition to Christianity, as when it was heathen.

It is granted, the world now professeth Christianity. But will anyone say, that this Christian world is of the spirit of Christ? Are its general tempers the tempers of Christ? Are the passions of sensuality, self-love, pride, covetousness, ambition, and vain-glory, less contrary to the spirit of the Gospel, now they are amongst Christians, than when they were amongst heathens? Or will you say, that the tempers and passions of the heathen world are lost and gone?

Consider, secondly, what you are to mean by the world. Now this is fully described to our hands by St. John. 'All that is in 'the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the 'pride of life,* &c. This is an exact and full description of the world. Now will you say, that this world is become Christian? But if all this still subsists, then the same world is now in being, and the same enemy to Christianity, that was in St. John's days.

It was this world that St. John condemned, as being not of the Father; whether therefore it outwardly professeth, or openly persecuteth Christianity, it is still in the same state of contrariety to the true spirit and holiness of the Gospel.

And indeed the world by professing Christianity, is so far from being a less dangerous enemy than it was before, that it has by its favours destroyed more Christians, than ever it did by the most violent persecution.

We must therefore be so far from considering the world as in a state of less enmity and opposition to Christianity, than it was in the first times of the gospel, that we must guard against it as a greater and more dangerous enemy now, than it was in those times.

It is a greater enemy, because it has greater power over Christians by its favours, riches, honours, rewards and protections, than it had by the fire and fury of its persecutions.

It is a more dangerous enemy, by having lost its appearance of enmity. Its outward profession of Christianity makes it no longer considered as an enemy, and therefore the generality of people are easily persuaded, to resign themselves up to be governed and directed by it.

How many consciences are kept at quiet, upon no other foundation, but because they sin under the authority of the Christian world?

How many directions of the Gospel lie by unregarded, and how unconcernedly do particular persons read them, for no other reason, but because they seem unregarded by the Christian world?

How many compliances do people make to the Christian world, without any hesitation, or remorse; which if they had been required of them only by heathens, would have been refused, as contrary to the holiness of Christianity.

* 1 John ii. 16.

Who could be content with seeing how contrary his life is to the Gospel, but because he sees, that he lives as the Christian world doth ?

Who that reads the Gospel, would want to be persuaded of the necessity of great self-denial, humility, and poverty of spirit, but that the authority of the world has banished this doctrine of the cross ?

There is nothing therefore, that a good Christian ought to be more suspicious of, or more constantly guard against, than the authority of the Christian world.

And all the passages of Scripture, which represent the world as contrary to Christianity, which require our separation from it, as from a Mammon of unrighteousness, a monster of iniquity, are all to be taken in the same strict sense, in relation to the present world.

For the change that the world has undergone, has only altered its methods, but not lessened its power of destroying Religion.

Christians had nothing to fear from the heathen world, but the loss of their lives ; but the world become a friend, makes it difficult for them to save their Religion.

Whilst pride, sensuality, covetousness, and ambition, had only the authority of the heathen world, Christians were thereby made more intent upon the contrary virtues. But when pride, sensuality, covetousness, and ambition, have the authority of the Christian world, then private Christians are in the utmost danger, not only of being shamed out of the practice, but of losing the very notion of the piety of the Gospel.

There is therefore hardly any possibility of saving yourself from the present world, but by considering it as the same wicked enemy, to all true holiness, as it is represented in the Scriptures ; and by assuring yourself, that it is as dangerous to conform to its tempers and passions, now it is Christian, as when it was heathen.

For only ask yourself, Is the piety, the humility, the sobriety of the Christian world, the piety, the humility, and sobriety of the Christian spirit ? If not, how can you be more undone by any world, than by conforming to that which is Christian ?

Need a man do more to make his soul unfit for the mercy of God, than by being greedy and ambitious of honour ? Yet how can a man renounce this temper, without renouncing the spirit and temper of the world, in which you now live.

How can a man be made more incapable of the spirit of Christ, than by a wrong value for money ; and yet how can he be more wrong in his value of it, than by following the authority of the Christian world ?

Nay, in every order and station of life, whether of learning or business, either in Church or State, you cannot act up to the spirit of Religion, without renouncing the most general temper and behaviour of those, who are of the same order and business as yourself.

And though human prudence seems to talk mighty wisely about the necessity of avoiding particularities, yet he that dares not be so weak as to be particular, will be often obliged to avoid the most substantial duties of Christian piety.

These reflections will, I hope, help you to break through those difficulties, and resist those temptations, which the authority and fashion of the world have raised against the practice of Christian humility.

Chapter XVIII.

Showing how the education which men generally receive in their youth, makes the doctrines of humility difficult to be practised. The spirit of a better education, represented in the character of Paternus.

ANOTHER difficulty in the practice of humility, arises from our education. We are all of us, for the most part corruptly educated, and then committed to take our course in a corrupt world; so that it is no wonder, if examples of great piety are so seldom seen.

Great part of the world are undone, by being born and bred in families that have no Religion; where they are made vicious and irregular, by being like those with whom they first lived.

But this is not the thing I now mean; the education that I here intend, is such as children generally receive from virtuous and sober parents, and learned tutors and governors.

Had we continued perfect, as God created the first man, perhaps the perfection of our nature had been a sufficient self-instruction for everyone. But as sickness and diseases have created the necessity of medicines and physicians, so the change and disorder of our rational nature, have introduced the necessity of education and tutors.

And as the only end of the physician is, to restore nature to its own state, so the only end of education is, to restore our rational nature to its proper state. Education therefore is to be considered as reason borrowed at second hand, which is, as far as it can, to supply the loss of original perfection. And as physic may justly be called the art of restoring health, so education should be considered in no other light, than as the art of recovering to man the use of his reason.

Now as the instruction of every art or science is founded upon the discoveries, the wisdom, experience, and maxims of the several great men that have laboured in it; so human wisdom, or right use of our reason, which young people should be called to by their education, is nothing else but the best experience, and finest reasonings of men, that have devoted themselves to the study of wisdom, and the improvement of human nature.

All therefore that great saints, and dying men, when the fullest of light and conviction, and after the highest improvement of their reason, all that they have said of the necessity of piety, of the excellency of virtue, of their duty to God, of the emptiness of riches, of the vanity of the world; all the sentences, judgments, reasonings, and maxims of the wisest of philosophers, when in their highest state of wisdom, should constitute the common lessons of instruction for youthful minds.

This is the only way to make the young and ignorant part of the world the better for the wisdom, and knowledge of the wise and ancient.

An education which is not wholly intent upon this, is as much beside the point, as an art of Physic, that had little or no regard to the restoration of health.

The youths that attended upon Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, and Epictetus, were thus educated. Their everyday lessons and instructions were so many lectures upon the nature of man, his true end, and the right use of his faculties; upon the immortality of the soul, its relation to God, the beauty of virtue, and its agreeableness to the divine nature; upon the dignity of reason, the necessity of temperance, fortitude and generosity, and the shame and folly of indulging our passions.

Now as Christianity has, as it were, new created the moral and religious world, and set everything that is reasonable, wise, holy, and desirable, in its true point of light; so one would expect, that the education of youth should be as much bettered and amended by Christianity, as the faith and doctrines of Religion are amended by it.

As it has introduced such a new state of things, and so fully informed us of the nature of man, the ends of his creation, the state of his condition; as it has fixed all our goods and evils, taught us the means of purifying our souls, pleasing God, and becoming eternally happy ; one might naturally suppose, that every Christian Country abounded with schools for the teaching, not only a few questions and answers of a Catechism, but for the forming, training, and practising youths in such an outward course of life, as the highest precepts, the strictest rules, and the sublimest doctrines of Christianity require.

An education under Pythagoras, or Socrates, had no other end, but to teach youth to think, judge, act, and follow such rules of life as Pythagoras and Socrates used.

And is it not as reasonable to suppose, that a Christian education should have no other end, but to teach youth how to think, and judge, and act, and live according to the strictest laws of Christianity ?

At least, one would suppose, that in all Christian schools, the teaching youth to begin their lives in the spirit of Christianity, in such severity of behaviour, such abstinence, sobriety, humility, and devotion, as Christianity requires, should not only be more, but an hundred times more regarded, than any, or all things else.

For our education should imitate our guardian angels, suggest nothing to our minds but what is wise and holy ; help us to discover and subdue every vain passion of our hearts, and every false judgment of our minds.

And it is as sober and reasonable, to expect and require all this benefit of a Christian education, as to require that physic should strengthen all that is right in our nature, and remove that which is sickly and diseased.

But alas, our modern education is not of this kind.

The first temper that we try to awaken in children, is pride ; as dangerous a passion as that of lust. We stir them up to vain thoughts of themselves, and do everything we can, to puff up their minds with a sense of their own abilities.

Whatever way of life we intend them for, we apply to the fire and vanity of their minds, and exhort them to everything from corrupt motives : We stir them up to action from principles of strife and ambition, from glory, envy, and a desire of distinction, that they may excel others, and shine in the eyes of the world.

We repeat and inculcate these motives upon them, till they think it a part of their duty to be proud, envious, and vain-glorious of their own accomplishments.

And when we have taught them to scorn to be outdone by any, to bear no rival, to thirst after every instance of applause, to be content with nothing but the highest distinctions ; then we begin to take comfort in them, and promise the world some mighty things from youths of such a glorious spirit.

If children are intended for holy orders, we set before them some eminent orator, whose fine preaching has made him the admiration of the age, and carried him through all the dignities and preferments of the Church.

We encourage them to have these honours in their eye, and to expect the reward of their studies from them.

If the youth is intended for a trade; we bid him look at all the rich men of the same trade, and consider how many now are carried about in their stately coaches, who began in the same low degree as he now does. We awaken his ambition, and endeavour to give his mind a right turn, by often telling him how very rich such and such a tradesman died.

If he is to be a lawyer, then we set great Counsellors, Lords Judges, and Chancellors, before his eyes. We tell him what fees, and great applause attend fine pleading. We exhort him to take fire at these things, to raise a spirit of emulation in himself, and to be content with nothing less than the highest honours of the long Robe.

That this is the nature of our best education, is too plain to need any proof; and I believe there are few parents, but would be glad to see these instructions daily given to their children.

And after all this, we complain of the effects of pride; we wonder to see grown men acted and governed by ambition, envy, scorn, and a desire of glory; not considering that they were all the time of their youth called upon, to all their action and industry upon the same principles.

You teach a child to scorn to be outdone, to thirst for distinction and applause; and is it any wonder that he continues to act all his life in the same manner?

Now if a youth is ever to be so far a Christian, as to govern his heart by the doctrines of humility, I would fain know at what time he is to begin it; or if he is ever to begin it at all, why we train him up in tempers quite contrary to it?

How dry and poor must the doctrine of humility sound to a youth, that has been spurred up to all his industry by ambition, envy, emulation, and a desire of glory and distinction? And if he is not to act by these principles when he is a man, why do we call him to act by them in his youth?

Envy is acknowledged by all people to be the most ungenerous, base and wicked passion, that can enter into the heart of man.

And is this a temper to be instilled, nourished and established in the minds of young people?

I know it is said, that it is not envy, but emulation, that is intended to be awakened in the minds of young men.

But this is vainly said. For when children are taught to bear no rival, and to scorn to be outdone by any of their age, they are plainly and directly taught to be envious. For it is impossible for anyone to have this scorn of being outdone, and this contention with rivals, without burning with envy against all those that seem to excel him, or get any distinction from him. So that what children are taught is rank envy, and only covered with a name of a less odious sound.

Secondly, if envy is thus confessedly bad, and it be only emulation that is endeavoured to be awakened in children, surely there ought to be great care taken, that children may know the one from the other. That they may abominate the one as a great crime, whilst they give the other admission into their minds.

But if this were to be attempted, the fineness of the distinction betwixt envy and emulation, would show that it was easier to divide them in words, than to separate them in action.

For emulation, when it is defined in its best manner, is nothing else but a refinement upon envy, or rather the most plausible part of that black and venomous passion.

And though it is easy to separate them in the notion, yet the most acute Philosopher, that understands the art of distinguishing ever so well, if he gives himself up to emulation, will certainly find himself deep in envy.

For envy is not an original temper, but the natural, necessary, and unavoidable effect of emulation, or a desire of glory.

So that he who establishes the one in the minds of people, necessarily fixes the other there. And there is no other possible way of destroying envy, but by destroying emulation, or a desire of glory. For the one always rises and falls in proportion to the other.

I know it is said in defence of this method of education, that ambition, and a desire of glory, are necessary to excite young people to industry; and that if we were to press upon them the doctrines of humility, we should deject their minds, and sink them into dulness and idleness.

But these people who say this, do not consider, that this reason, if it has any strength, is full as strong against pressing the doctrines of humility upon grown men, lest we should deject their minds, and sink them into dulness and idleness.

For who does not see, that middle-aged men want as much the assistance of pride, ambition, and vain-glory, to spur them up to action and industry, as children do? And it is very certain, that the precepts of humility are more contrary to the designs of such men, and more grievous to their minds, when they are pressed upon them, than they are to the minds of young persons.

This reason therefore that is given, why children should not be trained up in the principles of true humility, is as good a reason why the same humility should never be required of grown men.

Thirdly, Let those people, who think that children would be spoiled, if they were not thus educated, consider this.

Could they think, that if any children had been educated by our blessed Lord, or his holy Apostles, that their minds would have been sunk into dulness and idleness?

Or could they think, that such children would not have been trained up in the profoundest principles of a strict and true humility? Can they say that our blessed Lord, who was the meekest and humblest man that ever was on earth, was hindered by his humility from being the greatest example of worthy and glorious actions, that ever was done by man?

Can they say that his Apostles, who lived in the humble spirit of their master, did therefore cease to be laborious and active instruments of doing good to all the world?

A few such reflections as these, are sufficient to expose all the poor pretences for an education in pride and ambition.

Paternus lived about two hundred years ago; he had but one son, whom he educated himself in his own house. As they were sitting together in the Garden, when the child was ten years old, Paternus thus began to him.

The little time that you have been in the world, my child, you have spent wholly with me; and my love and tenderness to you, has made you look upon me as your only friend and benefactor, and the cause of all the comfort and pleasure that you enjoy: Your heart, I know, would be ready to break with grief, if you thought this was the last day that I should live with you.

But, my child, though you now think yourself mighty happy, because you have hold of my hand, you are now in the hands, and under the tender care of a much greater father and friend than I am, whose love to you is far greater than mine, and from whom you receive such blessings as no mortal can give.

That God whom you have seen me daily worship, whom I daily call upon to bless both you and me, and all mankind, whose wondrous acts are recorded in those Scriptures which you constantly read; that God who created the heavens and the earth, who brought a flood upon the old world, who saved Noah in the Ark, who was the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, whom Job blessed and praised in the greatest afflictions, who delivered the Israelites out of the hands of the Egyptians, who was the protector of righteous Joseph, Moses, Joshua, and holy Daniel, who sent so many Prophets into the world, who sent his Son Jesus Christ to redeem mankind; this God who has done all these great things, who has created so many millions of men, who lived and died before you were born, with whom the spirits of good men that are departed this life, now live, whom infinite numbers of Angels now worship in Heaven; this great God who is the creator of worlds, of angels, and men, is your loving father and friend, your good creator and nourisher, from whom, and not from me, you received your being ten years ago, at the time that I planted that little tender Elm which you there see.

I myself am not half the age of this shady Oak, under which we sit; many of our fathers have sat under its boughs, we have all of us called it ours in our turn, though it stands, and drops its masters, as it drops its leaves.

You see, my son, this wide and large Firmament over our heads, where the Sun and Moon, and all the Stars appear in their turns. If you were to be carried up to any of these bodies at this vast distance from us, you would still discover others, as much above you, as the Stars that you see here are above the Earth. Were you to go up or down, East or West, North or South, you would find the same height without any top, and the same depth without any bottom.

And yet, my child, so great is God, that all these bodies added together, are but as a grain of sand in his sight. And yet you are as much the care of this great God and Father of all worlds, and all spirits, as if he had no son but you, or there were no creature for him to love and protect but you alone. He numbers the hairs of your head, watches over you sleeping and waking, and has preserved you from a thousand dangers, which neither you, nor I, know anything of.

How poor my power is, and how little I am able to do for you, you have often seen. Your late sickness has shown you, how little I could do for you in that state; and the frequent pains of your head are plain proofs, that I have no power to remove them.

I can bring you food and medicines, but have no power to turn them into your relief and nourishment. It is God alone that can do this for you.

Therefore, my child, fear, and worship, and love God. Your eyes indeed cannot yet see him. But every thing you see, are so many marks of his power and presence, and he is nearer to you, than anything that you can see.

Take him for your Lord, and Father, and Friend; look up unto him as the fountain and cause of all the good that you have received through my hands; and reverence me only as the bearer and minister of God's good things unto you. And he that blessed my father before I was born, will bless you when I am dead.

Your youth and little mind is only yet acquainted with my family, and therefore you think there is no happiness out of it.

a Devout and Holy Life. 187

But, my child, you belong to a greater Family than mine, you are a young member of the family of this Almighty Father of all Nations, who has created infinite order of Angels, and numberless generations of men, to be fellow-members of one and the same society in Heaven.

You do well to reverence and obey my authority, because God has given me power over you, to bring you up in his fear, and to do for you, as the holy fathers recorded in Scripture did for their children, who are now in rest and peace with God.

I shall in a short time die, and leave you to God, and yourself, and if God forgiveth my sins, I shall go to his Son Jesus Christ, and live amongst Patriarchs and Prophets, Saints and Martyrs, where I shall pray for you, and hope for your safe arrival at the same place.

Therefore, my child, meditate on these great things, and your soul will soon grow great and noble by so meditating upon them.

Let your thoughts often leave these gardens, these fields and farms, to contemplate upon God and Heaven, to consider upon Angels, and the spirits of good men living in light and glory.

As you have been used to look to me in all your actions, and have been afraid to do anything, unless you first knew my will, so let it now be a rule of your life, to look up to God in all your actions, to do everything in his fear, and to abstain from everything that is not according to his will.

Bear him always in your mind, teach your thoughts to reverence him in every place, for there is no place where he is not.

God keepeth a book of life, wherein all the actions of all men are written; your name is there, my child, and when you die, this book will be laid open before men and angels, and according as your actions are there found, you will either be received to the happiness of those holy men who have died before you, or be turned away amongst wicked spirits, that are never to see God any more.

Never forget this book, my son, for it is written, it must be opened, you must see it, and you must be tried by it. Strive therefore to fill it with your good deeds, that the handwriting of God may not appear against you.

God, my child, is all love, and wisdom, and goodness; and everything that he has made, and every action that he does, is the effect of them all. Therefore you cannot please God, but so far as you strive to walk in love, wisdom, and goodness. As all wisdom, love, and goodness proceed from God, so nothing but love, wisdom, and goodness, can lead to God.

When you love that which God loves, you act with him, you join yourself to him; and when you love what he dislikes, then you oppose him, and separate yourself from him. This is the true and the right way ; think what God loves, and do you love it with all your heart.

First of all, my child, worship and adore God, think of him magnificently, speak of him reverently, magnify his providence, adore his power, frequent his service, and pray unto him frequently and constantly.

Next to this, love your neighbour, which is all mankind, with such tenderness and affection, as you love yourself. Think how God loves all mankind, how merciful he is to them, how tender he is of them, how carefully he preserves them, and then strive to love the world, as God loves it.

God would have all men to be happy, therefore do you will, and desire the same. All men are great instances of divine love, therefore let all men be instances of your love.

But above all, my son, mark this, never do anything through strife, or envy, or emulation, or vain-glory. Never do anything in order to excel other people, but in order to please God, and because it is his will, that you should do everything in the best manner that you can.

For if it is once a pleasure to you to excel other people, it will by degrees be a pleasure to you, to see other people not so good as yourself.

Banish therefore every thought of self-pride, and self-distinction, and accustom yourself to rejoice in all the excellencies and perfections of your fellow-creatures, and be as glad to see any of their good actions, as your own.

For as God is as well pleased with their well doings, as with yours, so you ought to desire, that everything that is wise, and holy, and good, may be performed in as high a manner by other people, as by yourself.

Let this therefore be your only motive and spur to all good actions, honest industry, and business, to do everything in as perfect and excellent a manner as you can, for this only reason, because it is pleasing to God, who desires your perfection, and writes all your actions in a book. When I am dead, my son, you will be master of all my estate, which will be a great deal more than the necessities of one family require. Therefore as you are to be charitable to the souls of men, and wish them the same happiness with you in heaven, so be charitable to their bodies, and endeavour to make them as happy as you upon earth.

As God has created all things for the common good of all men, so let that part of them which is fallen to your share, be employed as God would have all employed, for the common good of all.

Do good, my son, first of all to those that most deserve it, but remember to do good to all. The greatest sinners receive daily instances of God's goodness towards them, he nourishes and preserves them, that they may repent and return to him ; do you therefore imitate God, and think no one too bad to receive your relief and kindness, when you see that he wants it.

I am teaching you Latin and Greek, not that you should desire to be a great Critic, a fine Poet, or an eloquent Orator ; I would not have your heart feel any of these desires ; for the desire of these accomplishments is a vanity of the mind, and the masters of them are generally vain men. For the desire of anything that is not a real good, lessens the application of the mind after that which is so.

But I teach you these languages, that at proper times you may look into the history of past ages, and learn the methods of God's providence over the world : that reading the writings of the ancient Sages, you may see how wisdom and virtue have been the praise of great men of all ages, and fortify your mind by these wise sayings.

Let truth and plainness therefore be the only ornament of your language, and study nothing but how to think of all things as they deserve, to choose everything that is best, to live according to reason and order, and to act in every part of your life in conformity to the will of God.

Study how to fill your heart full of the love of God, and the love of your neighbour, and then be content to be no deeper a scholar, no finer a gentleman, than these tempers will make you. As true Religion is nothing else but simple Nature governed by right reason, so it loves and requires great plainness and simplicity of life. Therefore avoid all superfluous shows of finery and equipage, and let your house be plainly furnished with moderate conveniences. Do not consider what your estate can afford, but what right reason requires.

Let your dress be sober, clean, and modest, not to set out the beauty of your person, but to declare the sobriety of your mind, that your outward garb may resemble the inward plainness and simplicity of your heart. For it is highly reasonable, that you should be one man, all of a piece, and appear outwardly such as you are inwardly.

As to your meat and drink, in them observe the highest rules of Christian temperance and sobriety ; consider your body only as the servant and minister of your soul ; and only so nourish it, as may best perform an humble and obedient service to it.

But, my son, observe this as a most principal thing, which I shall remember you of as long as I live with you.

Hate and despise all human glory, for it is nothing else but human folly. It is the greatest snare, and the greatest betrayer that you can possibly admit into your heart.

Love humility in all its instances, practise it in all its parts, for it is the noblest state of the soul of man ; it will set your heart and affections right towards God, and fill you with every temper that is tender and affectionate towards men.

Let every day therefore be a day of humility, condescend to all the weakness, and infirmities of your fellow-creatures, cover their frailties, love their excellencies, encourage their virtues, relieve their wants, rejoice in their prosperities, compassionate their distress, receive their friendship, overlook their unkindness, forgive their malice, be a servant of servants, and condescend to do the lowest offices to the lowest of mankind.

Aspire after nothing but your own purity and perfection, and have no ambition, but to do everything in so reasonable and religious a manner, that you may be glad that God is everywhere present, and sees and observes all your actions. The greatest trial of humility, is an humble behaviour towards your equals in age, estate, and condition of life. Therefore be careful of all the motions of your heart towards these people. Let all your behaviour towards them be governed by unfeigned love. Have no desire to put any of your equals below you, nor any anger at those that would put themselves above you. If they are proud, they are ill of a very bad distemper, let them therefore have your tender pity ; and perhaps your meekness may prove an occasion of their cure. But if your humility should do them no good, it will however be the greatest good that you can do to yourself.

Remember that there is but one man in the world, with whom you are to have perpetual contention, and be always striving to exceed him, and that is yourself.

The time of practising these precepts, my child, will soon be over with you, the world will soon slip through your hands, or rather you will soon slip through it ; it seems but the other day since I received these same instructions from my dear Father, that I am now leaving with you. And the God that gave me ears to hear, and a heart to receive what my Father said unto me, will, I hope, give you grace to love and follow the same instructions.

Thus did Paternus educate his son.

Can anyone now think that such an education as this, would weaken and deject the minds of young people, and deprive the world of any worthy and reasonable labours ?

It is so far from that, that there is nothing so likely to ennoble, and exalt the mind, and prepare it for the most heroic exercise of all virtues.

For who will say, that a love of God, a desire of pleasing him, a love of our neighbour, a love of truth, of reason, and virtue, a contemplation of eternity, and the rewards of piety, are not stronger motives to great and good actions, than a little uncertain popular praise.

On the other hand, there is nothing in reality that more weakens the mind, and reduces it to meanness and slavery, nothing that makes it less master of its own actions, or less capable of following reason, than a love of praise and honour.

For as praise and honour are often given to things and persons, where they are not due, as that is generally most praised and honoured, that most gratifies the humours, fashions, and vicious tempers of the world; so he that acts upon the desire of praise and applause, must part with every other principle; he must say black is white, put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter, and do the meanest, basest things, in order to be applauded.

For in a corrupt world, as this is, worthy actions are only to be supported by their own worth, where instead of being praised and honoured, they are most often reproached, and persecuted.

So that to educate children upon a motive of emulation, or a desire of glory, in a world where glory itself is false, and most commonly given wrong, is to destroy the natural integrity and fortitude of their minds, and give them a bias, which will oftener carry them to base and mean, than great and worthy actions.

Chapter XIX.

Showing how the method of educating daughters, makes it difficult for them to enter into the spirit of Christian humility. How miserably they are injured and abused by such an education. The spirit of a better education, represented in the character of Eusebia.

THAT turn of mind which is taught and encouraged in the education of daughters, makes it exceeding difficult for them to enter into such a sense and practice of humility, as the spirit of Christianity requires.

The right education of this sex, is of the utmost importance to human life. There is nothing that is more desirable for the common good of all the world. For though women do not carry on the trade and business of the world, yet as they are mothers, and mistresses of families, that have for some time the care of the education of their children of both sorts, they are entrusted with that which is of the greatest consequence to human life. For this reason, good or bad women are likely to do as much good or harm in the world, as good or bad men in the greatest business of life.

For as the health and strength, or weakness of our bodies, is very much owing to their methods of treating us when we were young; so the soundness or folly of our minds, are not less owing to those first tempers and ways of thinking, which we eagerly received from the love, tenderness, authority, and constant conversation of our mothers.

As we call our first language our mother-tongue, so we may as justly call our first tempers our mother-tempers; and perhaps it may be found more easy to forget the language, than to part entirely with those tempers which we learnt in the nursery.

It is therefore much to be lamented, that this sex, on whom so much depends, who have the first forming both of our bodies and our minds, are not only educated in pride, but in the silliest and most contemptible part of it.

They are not indeed suffered to dispute with us the proud prizes of arts and sciences, of learning and eloquence, in which I have much suspicion they would often prove our superiors; but we turn them over to the study of beauty and dress, and the whole world conspires to make them think of nothing else. Fathers and mothers, friends, and relations, seem to have no other wish towards the little girl, but that she may have a fair skin, a fine shape, dress well, and dance to admiration.

Now if a fondness for our persons, a desire of beauty, a love of dress, be a part of pride (as surely it is a most contemptible part of it) the first step towards a woman's humility, seems to require a repentance of her education.

For it must be owned, that, generally speaking, good parents are never more fond of their daughters, than when they see them too fond of themselves, and dressed in such a manner, as is a great reproach to the gravity and sobriety of the Christian life.

And what makes this matter still more to be lamented, is this, That women are not only spoiled by this education, but we spoil that part of the world, which would otherwise furnish most instances of an eminent and exalted piety.

For I believe it may be affirmed, that for the most part there is a finer sense, a clearer mind, a readier apprehension, and gentler dispositions in that sex, than in the other.

All which tempers, if they were truly improved by proper studies, and sober methods of education, would in all probability carry them to greater heights of piety, than are to be found amongst the generality of men.

For this reason, I speak to this matter with so much openness and plainness, because it is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity.

The Church has formerly had eminent saints in that sex, and it may reasonably be thought, that it is purely owing to their poor and vain education, that this honour of their sex is for the most part confined to former ages.

The corruption of the world indulges them in great vanity, and mankind seem to consider them in no other view, than as so many painted idols, that are to allure and gratify their passions ; so that if many women are vain, light, gewgaw creatures, they have this to excuse themselves, that they are not only such as their education has made them, but such as the generality of the world allows them to be.

But then they should consider, that the friends to their vanity are no friends of theirs ; they should consider, that they are to live for themselves, that they have as great a share in the rational nature as men have ; that they have as much reason to pretend, and as much necessity to aspire after the highest accomplishments of a Christian and solid virtue, as the gravest and wisest among Christian Philosophers.

They should consider, that they are abused and injured, and betrayed from their only perfection, whenever they are taught, that anything is an ornament in them, that is not an ornament in the wisest amongst mankind.

It is generally said, that women are naturally of little and vain minds ; but this I look upon to be as false and unreasonable, as to say, that butchers are naturally cruel ; for as their cruelty is not owing to their nature, but to their way of life, which has changed their nature ; so whatever littleness and vanity is to be observed in the minds of women, it is like the cruelty of butchers, a temper that is wrought into them by that life which they are taught and accustomed to lead.

At least thus much must be said, that we cannot charge anything upon their nature, till we take care that it is not perverted by their education.

And on the other hand, if it were true that they were thus naturally vain and light, then how much more blamable is that education, which seems contrived to strengthen and increase this folly and weakness of their minds ?

For if it were a virtue in a woman to be proud and vain in herself, we could hardly take better means to raise this passion in her, than those that are now used in her education.

Matilda is a fine woman, of good breeding, great sense, and much religion. She has three daughters that are educated by herself. She will not trust them with anyone else, or at any school, for fear they should learn anything ill. She stays with the dancing-master all the time he is with them, because she will hear everything that is said to them. She has heard them read the Scriptures so often, that they can repeat great part of it without book : And there is scarce a good book of devotion, but you may find it in their closets.

Had Matilda lived in the first ages of Christianity, when it was practised in the fulness and plainness of its doctrines, she had in all probability been one of its greatest saints.

But as she was born in corrupt times, where she wants examples of Christian perfection, and hardly ever saw a piety higher than her own ; so she has many defects, and communicates them all to her daughters.

Matilda never was meanly dressed in her life ; and nothing pleases her in dress, but that which is very rich and beautiful to the eye.

Her daughters see her great zeal for religion, but then they see an equal earnestness for all sorts of finery. They see she is not negligent of her devotion, but then they see her more careful to preserve her complexion, and to prevent those changes, which time and age threaten her with.

They are afraid to meet her, if they have missed the Church ; but then they are more afraid to see her, if they are not laced as strait as they can possibly be.

She often shows them her own picture, which was taken when their father fell in love with her. She tells them, how distracted he was with passion at the first sight of her, and that she had never had so fine a complexion, but for the diligence of her good mother, who took exceeding care of it.

Matilda is so intent upon all the arts of improving their dress, that she has some new fancy almost every day, and leaves no ornament untried, from the richest jewel to the poorest flower. She is so nice and critical in her judgment, so sensible of the smallest error, that the maid is often forced to dress and undress her daughters three or four times in a day, before she can be satisfied with it.

As to the patching, she reserves that to herself ; for, she says, if they are not stuck on with judgment, they are rather a prejudice, than an advantage to the face.

a Devout and Holy Life. 195

The children see so plainly the temper of their mother, that they even affect to be more pleased with dress, and to be more fond of every little ornament, than they really are, merely to gain her favour.

They saw their eldest sister once brought to her tears, and her perverseness severely reprimanded, for presuming to say, that she thought it was better to cover the neck, than to go so far naked as the modern dress requires.

She stints them in their meals, and is very scrupulous of what they eat and drink, and tells them how many fine shapes she has seen spoiled in her time, for want of such care. If a pimple rises in their faces, she is in a great fright, and they themselves are as afraid to see her with it, as if they had committed some great sin.

Whenever they begin to look too sanguine and healthful, she calls in the assistance of the doctor; and if physic, or issues, will keep the complexion from inclining to coarse or ruddy, she thinks them well employed.

By this means they are poor, pale, sickly, infirm creatures, vapoured through want of spirits, crying at the smallest accidents, swooning away at anything that frights them, and hardly able to bear the weight of their best clothes.

The eldest daughter lived as long as she could under this discipline, and died in the twentieth year of her age.

When her body was opened, it appeared that her ribs had grown into her liver, and that her other entrails were much hurt, by being crushed together with her stays, which her mother had ordered to be twitched so strait, that it often brought tears into her eyes, whilst the maid was dressing her.

Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no superior.

Matilda says, she should die with grief at this accident, but that her conscience tells her, she has contributed nothing to it herself. She appeals to their closets, to their books of devotion, to testify what care she has taken, to establish her children in a life of solid piety and devotion.

Now though I do not intend to say, that no daughters are brought up in a better way than this, for I hope there are many that are: yet thus much I believe may be said, that the much greater part of them, are not brought up so well, or accustomed to so much Religion, as in the present instance.

Their minds are turned as much to the care of their beauty and dress, and the indulgence of vain desires, as in the present case, without having such rules of devotion to stand against it. So that if solid piety, humility, and a sober sense of themselves, is much wanted in that sex, it is the plain and natural consequence of a vain and corrupt education.

And if they are often too ready to receive the first fops, beaux, and fine dancers, for their husbands; it is no wonder they should like that in men, which they have been taught to admire in themselves.

And if they are often seen to lose that little Religion they were taught in their youth, it is no more to be wondered at, than to see a little flower choked and killed amongst rank weeds.

For personal pride, and affectation, a delight in beauty, and fondness of finery, are tempers that must either kill all Religion in the soul, or be themselves killed by it; they can no more thrive together, than health and sickness.

Some people that judge hastily, will perhaps here say, that I am exercising too great a severity against the sex.

But more reasonable persons will easily observe, that I entirely spare the sex, and only arraign their education; that I not only spare them, but plead their interest, assert their honour, set forth their perfections, commend their natural tempers, and only condemn that education, which is so injurious, to their interests, so debases their honour, and deprives them of the benefit of their excellent natures and tempers.

Their education, I profess, I cannot spare; but the only reason is, because it is their greatest enemy, because it deprives the world of so many blessings, and the Church of so many saints, as might reasonably be expected from persons, so formed by their natural tempers to all goodness and tenderness, and so fitted by the clearness and brightness of their minds, to contemplate, love, and admire everything that is holy, virtuous, and divine.

If it should here be said, that I even charge too high upon their education, and that they are not so much hurt by it, as I imagine:

It may be answered, that though I do not pretend to state the exact degree of mischief that is done by it, yet its plain and natural tendency to do no harm, is sufficient to justify the most absolute condemnation of it.

But if anyone would know, how generally women are hurt by this education; if he imagines there may be no personal pride, or vain fondness of themselves, in those that are patched and dressed out with so much glitter of art and ornament:

Let him only make the following experiment wherever he pleases.

Let him only acquaint any such woman with his opinion of her: I do not mean that he should tell her to her face, or do it in any rude public manner ; but let him contrive the most civil, secret, friendly way that he can think of, only to let her know his opinion, that he thinks she is neither handsome, nor dresses well, nor becomes her finery ; and I dare say, he will find there are but very few fine dressed women that will like him never the worse for his bare opinion, though known to none but themselves ; and that he will not be long without seeing the effects of her resentment.

But if such an experiment would show him, that there are but few such women that could bear with his friendship, after they knew he had such an opinion of them, surely it is time to complain of, and accuse that education, which so generally corrupts their hearts.

For though it is hard to judge of the hearts of people, yet where they declare their resentment, and uneasiness at anything, there they pass the judgment upon themselves. If a woman cannot forgive a man who thinks she has no beauty, nor any ornament from her dress, there she infallibly discovers the state of her own heart, and is condemned by her own, and not another's judgment.

For we never are angry at others, but when their opinions of us are contrary to that which we have of ourselves.

A man that makes no pretences to scholarship, is never angry at those that do not take him to be a scholar ; so if a woman had no opinion of her own person and dress, she would never be angry at those, who are of the same opinion with herself.

So that the general bad effects of this education, are too much known to admit of any reasonable doubt.

But how possible it is to bring up daughters in a more excellent way, let the following character declare.

Eusebia is a pious widow, well born, and well bred, and has a good estate for five daughters, whom she brings up as one entrusted by God, to fit five virgins for the kingdom of Heaven. Her family has the same regulation as a religious house, and all its orders tend to the support of a constant regular devotion.

She, her daughters, and her maids, meet together at all the hours of prayer in the day, and chant Psalms, and other devotions, and spend the rest of their time in such good works, and innocent diversions, as render them fit to return to their Psalms and Prayers.

She loves them as her spiritual children, and they reverence her as their spiritual mother, with an affection far above that of the fondest friends.

She has divided part of her estate amongst them, that every one may be charitable out of their own stock, and each of them take it in their turns to provide for the poor and sick of the Parish.

Eusebia brings them up to all kinds of labour that are proper for women, as sewing, knitting, spinning, and all other parts of housewifery; not for their amusement, but that they may be serviceable to themselves and others, and be saved from those temptations which attend an idle life.

She tells them, she had rather see them reduced to the necessity of maintaining themselves by their own work, than to have riches to excuse themselves from labour. For though, says she, you may be able to assist the poor without your labour, yet by your labour you will be able to assist them more.

If Eusebia has lived as free from sin as it is possible for human nature, it is because she is always watching and guarding against all instances of pride. And if her virtues are stronger and higher than other people's, it is because they are all founded in a deep humility.

My children, says she, when your father died, I was much pitied by my friends, as having all the care of a family, and the management of an estate fallen upon me.

But my own grief was founded upon another principle; I was grieved to see myself deprived of so faithful a friend, and that such an eminent example of Christian virtues, should be taken from the eyes of his children, before they were of an age to love and follow it.

But as to worldly cares, which my friends thought so heavy upon me, they are most of them of our own making, and fall away as soon as we know ourselves.

If a person in a dream is disturbed with strange appearances, his trouble is over as soon as he is awake, and sees that it was the folly of a dream.

Now when a right knowledge of ourselves enters into our minds, it makes as great change in all our thoughts and apprehensions, as when we awake from the wanderings of a dream.

We acknowledge a man to be mad, or melancholy, who fancies himself to be a glass, and so is afraid of stirring; or taking himself to be wax, dare not let the Sun shine upon him.

But, my children, there are things in the world which pass for wisdom, politeness, grandeur, happiness, and fine breeding, which show as great ignorance of ourselves, and might as justly pass for thorough madness, as when a man fancies himself to be glass, or ice.

A woman that dares not appear in the world without fine clothes, that thinks it a happiness to have a face finely coloured, to have a skin delicately fair, that had rather die than be reduced to poverty, and be forced to work for a poor maintenance, is as ignorant of herself to the full, as he that fancies himself to be glass.

For this reason, all my discourse with you, has been to acquaint you with yourselves, and to accustom you to such books and devotions, as may best instruct you in this greatest of all knowledge.

You would think it hard, not to know the family into which you were born, what ancestors you were descended from, and what estate was to come to you. But, my children, you may know all this with exactness, and yet be as ignorant of yourselves, as he that takes himself to be wax.

For though you were all of you born of my body, and bear your father's name, yet you are all of you pure spirits. I do not mean that you have not bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep, and clothing, but that all that deserves to be called you, is nothing else but spirit. A being spiritual and rational in its nature, that is as contrary to all fleshly or corporeal beings, as life is contrary to death; that is made in the image of God, to live for ever, never to cease any more, but to enjoy life, and reason, and knowledge, and happiness in the presence of God, and the society of Angels, and glorious Spirits, to all eternity.

Everything that you call yours, besides this spirit, is but like your clothing; something that is only to be used for awhile, and then to end, and die, and wear away, and to signify no more to you, than the clothing and bodies of other people.

But, my children, you are not only in this manner spirits, but you are fallen spirits, that began your life in a state of corruption and disorder, full of tempers and passions, that blind and darken the reason of your mind, and incline you to that which is hurtful.

Your bodies are not only poor and perishing like your clothes, but they are like infected clothes, that fill you with ill diseases and distempers, which oppress the soul with sickly appetites, and vain cravings.

So that all of us are like two beings, that have, as it were, two hearts within us; with the one we see, and taste, and admire reason, purity and holiness; with the other we incline to pride, and vanity, and sensual delights.

This internal war we always feel within us more or less; and if you would know the one thing necessary to all the world, it is this: to preserve and perfect all that is rational, holy and divine in our nature, and to mortify, remove, and destroy all that vanity, pride, and sensuality, which springs from the corruption of our state.

Could you think, my children, when you look at the world, and see what customs, and fashions, and pleasures, and troubles, and projects, and tempers, employ the hearts and time of mankind, that things were thus, as I have told you?

But do not you be affected at these things, the world is in a great dream, and but few people are awake in it.

We fancy that we fall into darkness, when we die; but alas, we are most of us in the dark till then; and the eyes of our souls only then begin to see, when our bodily eyes are closing.

You see then your state, my children; you are to honour, improve, and perfect the spirit that is within you, you are to prepare it for the kingdom of Heaven, to nourish it with the love of God, and of virtue, to adorn it with good works, and to make it as holy and heavenly as you can. You are to preserve it from the errors and vanities of the world; to save it from the corruptions of the body, from those false delights, and sensual tempers, which the body tempts it with.

You are to nourish your spirits with pious readings, and holy meditations, with watchings, fastings, and prayers, that you may taste, and relish, and desire that eternal state, which is to begin when this life ends.

As to your bodies, you are to consider them as poor, perishing things, that are sickly and corrupt at present, and will soon drop into common dust. You are to watch over them as enemies, that are always trying to tempt and betray you, and so never follow their advice and counsel; you are to consider them as the place and habitation of your souls, and so keep them pure and clean, and decent; you are to consider them as the servants and instruments of action, and so give them food, and rest, and raiment, that they may be strong and healthful to do the duties of a charitable, useful, pious life.

Whilst you live thus, you live like yourselves; and whenever you have less regard to your souls, or more regard to your bodies, than this comes to; whenever you are more intent upon adorning your persons, than upon the perfecting of your souls, you are much more beside yourselves, than he, that had rather have a laced coat, than an healthful body.

For this reason, my children, I have taught you nothing that was dangerous for you to learn; I have kept you from everything that might betray you into weakness and folly; or make you think anything fine, but a fine mind; anything happy but the favour of God; or anything desirable, but to do all the good you possibly can.

Instead of the vain, immodest entertainment of Plays, and Operas, I have taught you to delight in visiting the sick and poor. What music, and dancing, and diversions are to many in the world, that prayers and devotions, and Psalms are to you. Your hands have not been employed in plaiting the hair, and adorning your persons; but in making clothes for the naked. You have not wasted your fortunes upon yourselves, but have added your labour to them, for to do more good to other people.

Instead of forced shapes, patched faces, genteel airs, and affected motions, I have taught you to conceal your bodies with modest garments, and let the world have nothing to view of you, but the plainness, the sincerity, and humility of all your behaviour.

You know, my children, the high perfection, and the great rewards of virginity; you know how it frees from worldly cares and troubles, and furnishes means and opportunities of higher advancements in a divine life; therefore love, and esteem, and honour virginity: bless God for all that glorious company of holy virgins, that from the beginning of Christianity have, in the several ages of the Church, renounced the cares and pleasures of matrimony, to be perpetual examples of solitude, contemplation, and prayer.

But as everyone has their proper gift from God, as I look upon you all to be so many great blessings of a married state; so I leave it to your choice, either to do as I have done, or to aspire after higher degrees of perfection in a virgin state of life.

I desire nothing, I press nothing upon you, but to make the most of human life, and to aspire after perfection in whatever state of life you choose.

Never therefore consider yourselves as persons that are to be seen, admired, and courted by men; but as poor sinners, that are to save yourselves from the vanities and follies of a miserable world, by humility, devotion, and self-denial. Learn to live for your own sakes, and the service of God; and let nothing in the world be of any value with you, but that which you can turn into a service to God, and a means of your future happiness.

Consider often how powerfully you are called to a virtuous life, and what great and glorious things God has done for you, to make you in love with everything that can promote his glory.

Think upon the vanity and shortness of human life, and let death and eternity be often in your minds; for these thoughts will strengthen and exalt your minds, make you wise and judicious, and truly sensible of the littleness of all human things.

Think of the happiness of prophets and apostles, saints and martyrs, who are now rejoicing in the presence of God, and see themselves possessors of eternal glory. And then think how desirable a thing it is, to watch and pray, and do good as they did, that when you die you may have your lot amongst them.

Whether married therefore, or unmarried, consider yourselves as mothers and sisters, as friends and relations to all that want your assistance; and never allow yourselves to be idle, whilst others are in want of anything that your hands can make for them.

This useful, charitable, humble employment of yourselves, is what I recommend to you with great earnestness, as being a substantial part of a wise and pious life. And besides the good you will thereby do to other people, every virtue of your own heart will be very much improved by it.

For next to reading, meditation, and prayer, there is nothing that so secures our hearts from foolish passions, nothing that preserves so holy and wise a frame of mind, as some useful, humble employment of ourselves.

Never therefore consider your labour as an amusement, that is to get rid of your time, and so may be as trifling as you please; but consider it as something that is to be serviceable to yourselves and others, that is to serve some sober ends of life, to save and redeem your time, and make it turn to your account when the works of all people shall be tried by fire.

When you were little, I left you to little amusements, to please yourselves in any things that were free from harm; but as you are now grown up to a knowledge of God, and yourselves; as your minds are now acquainted with the worth and value of virtue, and exalted with the great doctrines of Religion, you are now to do nothing as children, but despise everything that is poor, or vain, and impertinent; you are now to make the labours of your hands suitable to the piety of your hearts, and employ yourselves for the same ends, and with the same spirit, as you watch and pray.

For if there is any good to be done by your labour, if you can possibly employ yourselves usefully to other people, how silly is it, how contrary to the wisdom of Religion, to make that a mere amusement, which might as easily be made an exercise of the greatest charity?

What would you think of the wisdom of him, that should employ his time in distilling of waters, and making liquors which nobody could use, merely to amuse himself with the variety of their colour and clearness, when with less labour and expense he might satisfy the wants of those, who have nothing to drink?

Yet he would be as wisely employed, as those that are amusing themselves with such tedious works, as they neither need, nor hardly know how to use when they are finished; when with less labour and expense they might be doing as much good, as he that is clothing the naked, or visiting the sick.

Be glad therefore to know the wants of the poorest people, and let your hands be employed in making such mean and ordinary things for them, as their necessities require. But thus making your labour a gift and service to the poor, your ordinary work will be changed into a holy service, and made as acceptable to God, as your devotions.

And charity is the greatest of all virtues, as it always was the chief temper of the greatest saints; so nothing can make your own charity more amiable in the sight of God, than this method of adding your labour to it.

The humility also of this employment will be as beneficial to you, as the charity of it. It will keep you from all vain and proud thoughts of your own state and distinction in life, and from treating the poor as creatures of a different species. By accustoming yourselves to this labour and service for the poor, as the representatives of Jesus Christ, you will soon find your heart softened into the greatest meekness, and lowliness towards them. You will reverence their estate and condition, think it an honour to serve them, and never be so pleased with yourself, as when you are most humbly employed in their service.

This will make you true disciples of your meek Lord and Master, 'who came into the world, not to be ministered unto, 'but to minister;' and though he was Lord of all, and amongst the creatures of his own making, yet was amongst them, 'as one 'that serveth.'

Christianity has then had its most glorious effects upon your hearts, when it has thus changed your spirit, removed all the pride of life from you, and made you delight in humbling yourselves, beneath the lowest of all your fellow-creatures.

Live therefore, my children, as you have begun your lives, in humble labour for the good of others; and let ceremonious visits, and vain acquaintances, have as little of your time as you possibly can. Contract no foolish friendships, or vain fondnesses for particular persons; but love them most, that most turn your love towards God, and your compassion towards all the world.

But above all, avoid the conversation of fine-bred fops and beaux, and hate nothing more than the idle discourse, the flattery, and compliments of that sort of men; for they are the shame of their own sex, and ought to be the abhorrence of yours.

When you go abroad, let humility, modesty, and a decent carriage, be all the state that you take upon you ; and let tenderness, compassion, and good nature, be all the fine breeding that you show in any place.

If evil speaking, scandal, or backbiting, be the conversation where you happen to be, keep your heart and your tongue to yourself ; be as much grieved, as if you were amongst cursing and swearing, and retire as soon as you can.

Though you intend to marry, yet let the time never come, till you find a man that has those perfections, which you have been labouring after yourselves ; who is likely to be a friend to all your virtues, and with whom it is better to live, than to want the benefit of his example.

Love poverty, and reverence poor people ; as for many reasons, so particularly for this, because our blessed Saviour was one of the number, and because you may make them all so many friends and advocates with God for you.

Visit and converse with them frequently ; you will often find simplicity, innocence, patience, fortitude, and great piety among them ; and where they are not so, your good example may amend them.

Rejoice at every opportunity of doing an humble action, and exercising the meekness of your minds, whether it be, as the Scripture expresses it, in washing the saints' feet, that is, in waiting upon, and serving those that are below you ; or in bearing with the haughtiness and ill-manners of those that are your equals, or above you. For there is nothing better than humility ; it is the fruitful soil of all virtues ; and everything that is kind and good, naturally grows from it.

Therefore, my children, pray for, and practise humility, and reject everything in dress, or carriage, or conversation, that has any appearance of pride.

Strive to do everything that is praiseworthy, but do nothing in order to be praised ; nor think of any reward, for all your labours of love and virtue, till Christ cometh with all his holy angels.

And above all, my children, have a care of vain and proud thoughts of your own virtues. For as soon as ever people live different from the common way of the world, and despise its vanities, the devil represents to their minds the height of their own perfections ; and is content they should excel in good works, provided that he can but make them proud of them.

Therefore watch over your virtues with a jealous eye, and reject every vain thought, as you would reject the most wicked imaginations ; and think what a loss it would be to you, to have the fruit of all your good works, devoured by the vanity of your own minds.

Never therefore allow yourselves to despise those, who do not follow your rules of life ; but force your hearts to love them, and pray to God for them ; and let humility be always whispering it into your ears, that you yourselves will fall from those rules to-morrow, if God should leave you to your own strength and wisdom.

When, therefore, you have spent days and weeks well, do not suffer your hearts to contemplate anything as your own, but give all the glory to the goodness of God, who has carried you through such rules of holy living, as you were not able to observe by your own strength ; and take care to begin the next day, not as proficients in virtue, that can do great matters, but as poor beginners, that want the daily assistance of God, to save you from the grossest sins.

Your dear father was an humble, watchful, pious, wise man. Whilst his sickness would suffer him to talk with me, his discourse was chiefly about your education. He knew the benefits of humility, he saw the ruins which pride made in our sex ; and therefore he conjured me with the tenderest expressions, to renounce the fashionable ways of educating daughters in pride and softness, in the care of their beauty and dress ; and to bring you all up in the plainest, simplest instances of an humble, holy, and industrious life.

He taught me an admirable rule of humility, which he practised all the days of his life ; which was this ; to let no morning pass, without thinking upon some frailty and infirmity of our own, that may put us to confusion, make us blush inwardly, and entertain a mean opinion of ourselves.

Think therefore, my children, that the soul of your good father, who is now with God, speaks to you through my mouth ; and let the double desire of your father, who is gone, and of me, who am with you, prevail upon you to love God, to study your own perfection, to practise humility, and with innocent labour and charity, to do all the good that you can to all your fellow-creatures, till God calls you to another life.

Thus did the pious widow educate her daughters.

The spirit of this education speaks so plainly for itself, that, I hope, I need say nothing in its justification. If we could see it in life, as well as read of it in books, the world would soon find the happy effects of it.

A daughter thus educated, would be a blessing to any family that she came into ; a fit companion for a wise man, and make him happy in the government of his family, and the education of his children.

And she that either was not inclined, or could not dispose of herself well in marriage, would know how to live to great and excellent ends in a state of virginity.

A very ordinary knowledge of the spirit of Christianity, seems to be enough to convince us, that no education can be of true advantage to young women, but that which trains them up in humble industry, in great plainness of life, in exact modesty of dress, manners, and carriage, and in strict devotion. For what should a Christian woman be, but a plain, unaffected, modest, humble creature, averse to everything in her dress and carriage, that can draw the eyes of beholders, or gratify the passions of lewd and amorous persons?

How great a stranger must he be to the Gospel, who does not know, that it requires this to be the spirit of a pious woman?

Our blessed Saviour saith, 'Whosoever looketh upon a woman 'to lust after her, hath already committed adultery with her in 'his heart.'*

Need an education, which turns women's minds to the arts and ornaments of dress and beauty, be more strongly condemned, than by these words? For surely, if the eye is so easily and dangerously betrayed, every art and ornament is sufficiently condemned, that naturally tends to betray it.

And how can a woman of piety more justly abhor and avoid anything, than that which makes her person more a snare and temptation to other people? If lust, and wanton eyes are the death of the soul, can any women think themselves innocent, who with naked breasts, patched faces, and every ornament of dress, invite the eye to offend?

And as there is no pretence for innocence in such a behaviour, so neither can they tell how to set any bounds to their guilt. For as they can never know how much, or how often they have occasioned sin in other people, so they can never know how much guilt will be placed to their own account.

This, one would think, should sufficiently deter every pious woman from everything, that might render her the occasion of loose passions in other people.

St. Paul, speaking of a thing entirely innocent, reasons after this manner: 'But take heed lest by any means this liberty of 'yours, become a stumbling-block to those that are weak.— 'And through thy knowledge thy weak brother perish, for whom 'Christ died. But when ye sin so against the brethren, and 'wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore, 'if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the 'world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.'†

† 1 Cor. viii. 9, 11.

Now if this is the spirit of Christianity ; if it requires us to abstain from things thus lawful, innocent, and useful, when there is any danger of betraying our weak brethren into any error thereby : Surely it cannot be reckoned too nice or needless a point of conscience, for women to avoid such things, as are neither innocent nor useful, but naturally tend to corrupt their own hearts, and raise ill passions in other people.

Surely every woman of Christian piety ought to say, in the spirit of the Apostle, if patching and paint, or any vain adorning of my person, be a natural means of making weak, unwary eyes to offend, I will renounce all these arts as long as I live, lest I should make my fellow-creatures to offend.

I shall now leave this subject of humility ; having said enough, as I hope, to recommend the necessity of making it the constant, chief subject of your devotion, at this hour of prayer.

I have considered the nature and necessity of humility, and its great importance to a religious life. I have shown you how many difficulties are formed against it from our natural tempers, the spirit of the world, and the common education of both sexes.

These considerations will, I hope, instruct you how to form your prayers for it to the best advantage ; and teach you the necessity of letting no day pass, without a serious, earnest application to God, for the whole spirit of humility. Fervently beseeching him to fill every part of your soul with it, to make it the ruling, constant habit of your mind, that you may not only feel it, but feel all your other tempers arising from it ; that you may have no thoughts, no desires, no designs, but such as are the true fruits of an humble, meek, and lowly heart.

That you may always appear poor, and little, and mean in your own eyes, and fully content that others should have the same opinion of you.

That the whole course of your life, your expense, your house, your dress, your manner of eating, drinking, conversing, and doing everything, may be so many continual proofs of the true, unfeigned humility of your heart.

That you may look for nothing, claim nothing, resent nothing ; that you may go through all the actions and accidents of life, calmly and quietly, as in the presence of God, looking wholly unto him, acting wholly for him ; neither seeking vain applause, nor resenting neglects, or affronts, but doing and receiving everything in the meek and lowly spirit of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Chapter XX.

Recommending Devotion at twelve o'Clock, called in Scripture the sixth hour of the day. This frequency of Devotion equally desirable by all orders of people. Universal love is here recommended to be the subject of prayer at this hour. Of intercession, as an act of universal love.

IT will perhaps be thought by some people, that these hours of prayer come too thick ; that they can only be observed by people of great leisure, and ought not to be pressed upon the generality of men, who have the cares of families, trades and employments ; nor upon the gentry, whose state and figure in the world cannot admit of this frequency of Devotion. And that it is only fit for Monasteries and Nunneries, or such people as have no more to do in the world than they have.

To this it is answered,

First, that this method of Devotion is not pressed upon any sort of people, as absolutely necessary, but recommended to all people, as the best, the happiest, and most perfect way of life.

And if a great and exemplary Devotion, is as much the greatest happiness and perfection of a Merchant, a Soldier, or a man of Quality, as it is the greatest happiness and perfection of the most retired contemplative life, then it is as proper to recommend it without any abatements to one order of men, as to another. Because happiness and perfection are of the same worth and value to all people.

The Gentleman and Tradesman may, and must spend much of their time differently from the pious Monk in the cloister, or the contemplative Hermit in the désert : But then, as the Monk and Hermit lose the ends of retirement, unless they make it all serviceable to Devotion ; so the Gentleman and Merchant fail of the greatest ends of a social life, and live to their loss in the world, unless Devotion be their chief and governing temper.

It is certainly very honest and creditable for people to engage in trades and employments ; it is reasonable for Gentlemen to manage well their estates and families, and take such recreations

as are proper to their state. But then every Gentleman and Tradesman, loses the greatest happiness of his creation, is robbed of something that is greater than all employments, distinctions and pleasures of the world, if he does not live more to Piety and Devotion, than to anything else in the world.

Here are therefore no excuses made for men of business and figure in the world. First, Because it would be to excuse them from that which is the greatest end of living; and be only finding so many reasons for making them less beneficial to themselves, and less serviceable to God and the world.

Secondly, Because most men of business and figure engage too far in worldly matters; much further than the reasons of human life, or the necessities of the world require.

Merchants and Tradesmen, for instance, are generally ten times further engaged in business than they need; which is so far from being a reasonable excuse for their want of time for Devotion, that it is their crime, and must be censured as a blamable instance of covetousness and ambition.

The Gentry and people of Figure, either give themselves up to State-employments, or to the gratifications of their passions, in a life of gaiety and debauchery; and if these things might be admitted as allowable avocations from Devotion, Devotion must be reckoned a poor circumstance of life.

Unless Gentlemen can show that they have another God, than the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; another Nature, than that which is derived from Adam; another Religion than the Christian, it is in vain to plead their state, and dignity, and pleasures, as reasons for not preparing their souls for God, by a strict and regular Devotion.

For since Piety and Devotion are the common unchangeable means, of saving all the souls in the world that shall be saved, there is nothing left for the Gentleman, the Soldier, and the Tradesman, but to take care that their several states be, by care and watchfulness, by meditation and prayer, made states of an exact and solid piety.

If a Merchant, having forborn from too great business, that he might quietly attend on the service of God, should therefore die worth twenty, instead of fifty thousand pounds, could anyone say that he had mistaken his calling, or gone a loser out of the world?

If a Gentleman should have killed fewer foxes, been less frequent at balls, gaming, and merry-meetings, because stated parts of his time had been given to retirement, to meditation and devotion, could it be thought, that when he left the world, he would regret the loss of those hours, that he had given to the care and improvement of his soul?

If a Tradesman by aspiring after Christian perfection, and retiring himself often from his business, should instead of leaving his children fortunes to spend in luxury and idleness, leave them to live by their own honest labour; could it be said, that he had made a wrong use of the world, because he had shown his children, that he had more regard to that which is eternal, than to this which is so soon to be at an end?

Since therefore devotion, is not only the best and most desirable practice in a Cloister, but the best and most desirable practice of men, as men, and in every state of life, they that desire to be excused from it, because they are men of figure, and estates, and business, are no wiser than those, that should desire to be excused from health and happiness, because they were men of figure and estates.

I cannot see why every Gentleman, Merchant, or Soldier, should not put these questions seriously to himself:

What is the best thing for me to intend and drive at in all my actions? How shall I do to make the most of human life? What ways shall I wish that I had taken, when I am leaving the world?

Now to be thus wise, and to make thus much use of our reason, seems to be but a small and necessary piece of wisdom. For how can we pretend to sense and judgment, if we dare not seriously consider, and answer, and govern our lives by that which such questions require of us?

Shall a Nobleman think his birth too high a dignity to condescend to such questions as these? Or a Tradesman think his business too great, to take any care about himself?

Now here is desired no more devotion in anyone's life, than the answering these few questions, requires.

Any devotion that is not to the greater advantage of him that uses it, than anything that he can do in the room of it; any devotion that does not procure an infinitely greater good, than can be got by neglecting it, is freely yielded up; here is no demand of it.

But if people will live in so much ignorance, as never to put these questions to themselves, but push on a blind life at all chances, in quest of they know not what, nor why; without ever considering the worth, or value, or tendency of their actions, without considering what God, reason, eternity, and their own happiness require of them; it is for the honour of devotion, that none can neglect it, but those who are thus inconsiderate, who dare not enquire after that which is the best, and most worthy of their choice.

It is true, Claudius, you are a man of figure and estate, and are to act the part of such a station in human life ; you are not called, as Elijah was, to be a Prophet, or as St. Paul, to be an Apostle.

But will you therefore not love yourself? Will you not seek and study your own happiness, because you are not called to preach up the same things to other people?

You would think it very absurd, for a man not to value his own health, because he was not a Physician ; or the preservation of his limbs, because he was not a Bone-setter. Yet it is more absurd for you Claudius, to neglect the improvement of your soul in piety, because you are not an Apostle, or a Bishop.

Consider this text of Scripture, 'If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die ; but if through the spirit, ye do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the Sons of God.*' Do you think that this Scripture does not equally relate to all mankind? Can you find any exception here for men of figure and estates? Is not a spiritual and devout life here made the common condition, on which all men are to become sons of God? Will you leave hours of prayer, and rules of devotion, to particular states of life, when nothing but the same spirit of devotion can save you, or any man, from eternal death?

Consider again this text: 'For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that everyone may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.†' Now if your estate would excuse you from appearing before this judgment-seat ; if your figure could protect you from receiving according to your works, there would be some pretence for your leaving devotion to other people. But if you, who are now thus distinguished, must then appear naked amongst common souls, without any other distinction from others, but such as your virtues or sins give you ; does it not as much concern you, as any Prophet, or Apostle, to make the best provision for the best rewards at that great day?

Again, consider this doctrine of the Apostle: 'For none of us,' that is, of us Christians, 'liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself: For whether we live, we live unto the Lord, and whether we die, we die unto the Lord. For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living.‡'

Now are you, Claudius, excepted out of the doctrine of this text? Will you, because of your condition, leave it to any particular sort of people, to live and die unto Christ? If so, you must leave it to them, to be redeemed by the death and resurrection of Christ. For it is the express doctrine of the text, that for this end Christ died and rose again, that none of us should live to himself. It is not that Priests, or Apostles, or Monks, or Hermits, should live no longer to themselves; but that none of us, that is, no Christian of what state soever, should live unto himself.

* Rom. viii. 13, 14.

† 2 Cor. v. 10.

If therefore there be any instances of piety, any rules of devotion, which you can neglect, and yet live as truly unto Christ, as if you observed them, this text calls you to no such devotion. But if you forsake such devotion, as you yourself know is expected from some particular sorts of people; such devotion as you know becomes people that live wholly unto Christ, that aspire after great piety; if you neglect such devotion for any worldly consideration, that you may live more to your own temper and taste, more to the fashions and ways of the world, you forsake the terms on which all Christians are to receive the benefit of Christ's death and resurrection.

Observe further how the same doctrine is taught by St. Peter; 'As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in 'all manner of conversation.'*

If, therefore, Claudius, you are one of those that are here called, you see what it is that you are called to. It is not to have so much religion as suits with your temper, your business, or your pleasures, it is not to a particular sort of piety, that may be sufficient for Gentlemen of figure and estates; but it is first, to be 'holy, as He which hath called you is holy'; secondly, it is to be thus holy in all manner of conversation; that is, to carry this spirit and degree of holiness into every part, and through the whole form of your life.

And the reason the Apostle immediately gives, why this spirit of holiness must be the common spirit of Christians, as such, is very affecting, and such as equally calls upon all sorts of Christians. 'Forasmuch as ye know,' says he, 'that ye were 'not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, 'from your vain conversation,—but with the precious blood 'of Christ,' &c.

As if he had said, Forasmuch as ye know ye were made capable of this state of holiness, entered into a society with Christ, and made heirs of his glory, not by any human means, but by such a mysterious instance of love, as infinitely exceeds everything that can be thought of in this world; since God has redeemed you to himself, and your own happiness, at so great a price, how base and shameful must it be, if you do not henceforth devote yourselves wholly to the glory of God, and become holy, as he who hath called you is holy?

If, therefore, Claudius, you consider your figure and estate; or if, in the words of the text, you consider your gold and silver, and the corruptible things of this life, as any reason why you may live to your own humour and fancy, why you may neglect a life of strict piety and great devotion; if you think anything in the world can be an excuse for you, not imitating the holiness of Christ in the whole course and form of your life, you make yourself as guilty, as if you should neglect the holiness of Christianity, for the sake of picking straws.

For the greatness of this new state of life, to which we are called in Christ Jesus, to be for ever as the Angels of God in heaven, and the greatness of the price by which we are made capable of this state of glory, has turned everything that is worldly, temporal, and corruptible, into an equal littleness; and made it as great baseness and folly, as great a contempt of the blood of Christ, to neglect any degrees of holiness, because you are a man of some estate and quality, as it would be to neglect it, because you had a fancy to pick straws.

Again; the same Apostle saith, 'Know ye not, that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.'*

How poorly, therefore, Claudius, have you read the Scripture, how little do you know of Christianity, if you can yet talk of your estate and condition, as a pretence for a freer kind of life?

Are you any more your own, than he that has no estate or dignity in the world? Must mean and little people preserve their bodies as temples of the Holy Ghost, by watching, fasting, and prayer; but may you indulge yours in idleness, in lusts, and sensuality, because you have so much rent, or such a title of distinction? How poor and ignorant are such thoughts as these?

And yet you must either think thus, or else acknowledge, that the holiness of Saints, Prophets, and Apostles, is the holiness that you are to labour after, with all the diligence and care that you can.

And if you leave it to others, to live in such piety and devotion, in such self-denial, humility, and temperance, as may render them able to glorify God in their body, and in their spirit; you must leave it to them also, to have the benefit of the blood of Christ.

Again; the Apostle saith, 'You know how we exhorted, com-

* 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20.

‘forted, and charged every one of you, that you would walk ‘worthy of God, who hath called you to his kingdom and ‘glory.’*

You perhaps, Claudius, have often heard these words, without ever thinking how much they required of you. And yet you cannot consider them, without perceiving to what an eminent state of holiness they call you.

For how can the holiness of the Christian life be set before you in higher terms, than when it is represented to you as walking worthy of God? Can you think of any abatements of virtue, any neglects of Devotion, that are well consistent with a life, that is to be made worthy of God? Can you suppose that any man walks in this manner, but he that watches over all his steps; and considers how everything he does, may be done in the spirit of holiness? and yet as high as these expressions carry this holiness, it is here plainly made the necessary holiness of all Christians. For the Apostle does not here exhort his fellow Apostles and Saints to this holiness, but he commands all Christians to endeavour after it. ‘We charged,’ says he, ‘every ‘one of you, that you would walk worthy of God, who hath ‘called you to his kingdom and glory.’

Again, St. Peter saith, ‘If any man speak, let him speak ‘as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of ‘the ability that God giveth; that God in all things may be ‘glorified in Jesus Christ.’†

Do you not here, Claudius, plainly perceive your high calling? Is he that speaketh, to have such regard to his words, that he appear to speak as by the direction of God? Is he that giveth, to take care that he so giveth, that what he disposeth of may appear to be a gift that he hath of God? And is all this to be done, that God may be glorified in all things?

Must it not then be said, Has any man Nobility, dignity, of State, or figure in the world? Let him so use his Nobility, or figure of life, that it may appear he uses these as the gifts of God, for the greater setting forth of his Glory. Is there now, Claudius, anything forced or far-fetched in this conclusion? Is it not the plain sense of the words, that everything in life is to be made a matter of holiness unto God? If so, then your estate and dignity is so far from excusing you from great piety and holiness of life, that it lays you under a greater necessity of living more to the glory of God, because you have more of his gifts that may be made serviceable to it.

For people, therefore, of figure, or business, or dignity in the world, to leave great piety and eminent devotion to any particular orders of men, or such as they think have little else to do in the world, is to leave the kingdom of God to them.

* 1 Thess. ii. 11, 12.

† 1 Peter iv. 11.

For it is the very end of Christianity, to redeem all orders of men into one holy society, that rich and poor, high and low, masters and servants, may in one and the same spirit of piety, become a 'chosen generation,' a 'royal Priesthood, an holy 'Nation, a peculiar people, that are to show forth the praises 'of him, who hath called them out of darkness, into his marvellous light.'*

Thus much being said to show, that great Devotion and Holiness is not to be left to any particular sort of people, but to be the common spirit of all that desire to live up to the terms of common Christianity; I now proceed to consider the nature and necessity of universal love, which is here recommended to be the subject of your Devotion at this hour. You are here also called to Intercession, as the most proper exercise to raise and preserve that love.

By intercession, is meant a praying to God, and interceding with him for our fellow-creatures.

Our blessed Lord hath recommended his love to us, as the pattern and example of our love to one another. As therefore he is continually making intercession for us all, so ought we to intercede and pray for one another.

'A new commandment,' saith he, 'I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. By this shall all men know that ye are my Disciples, if ye love one another.'

The newness of this precept did not consist in this, that men were commanded to love one another; for this was an old precept, both of the law of Moses, and of nature. But it was new in this respect, that it was to imitate a new, and till then unheard-of example of love; it was to love one another, as Christ had loved us.

And if men are to know that we are Disciples of Christ, by thus loving one another, according to his new example of love, then it is certain, that if we are void of this love, we make it as plainly known unto men, that we are none of his Disciples.

There is no principle of the heart that is more acceptable to God, than an universal fervent love to all mankind, wishing and praying for their happiness; because there is no principle of the heart that makes us more like God, who is love and goodness itself, and created all beings for their enjoyment of happiness.

The greatest Idea that we can frame of God is, when we conceive him to be a Being of infinite love and goodness; using an infinite wisdom and power, for the common good and happiness of all his creatures.

The highest notion therefore, that we can form of man is, when we conceive him as like to God in this respect as he can be; using all his finite faculties, whether of wisdom, power, or prayers, for the common good of all his fellow-creatures: Heartily desiring they may have all the happiness they are capable of, and as many benefits and assistances from him, as his state and condition in the world will permit him to give them.

And on the other hand, what a baseness and iniquity is there in all instances of hatred, envy, spite, and ill-will; if we consider that every instance of them is so far acting in opposition to God, and intending mischief and harm to those creatures, which God favours, and protects, and preserves, in order to their happiness? An ill-natured man amongst God's creatures, is the most perverse creature in the world, acting contrary to that love, by which himself subsists, and which alone gives subsistence to all that variety of beings, that enjoy life in any part of the creation.

'Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do unto them.'

Now though this is a doctrine of strict justice, yet it is only an universal love that can comply with it. For as love is the measure of our acting towards ourselves, so we can never act in the same manner towards other people, till we look upon them with that love, with which we look upon ourselves.

As we have no degrees of spite, or envy, or ill-will to ourselves, so we cannot be disposed towards others as we are towards ourselves, till we universally renounce all instances of spite, and envy, and ill-will, even in the smallest degrees.

If we had any imperfection in our eyes, that made us see any one thing wrong, for the same reason they would show us an hundred things wrong.

So that if we have any temper of our hearts, that makes us envious, or spiteful, or ill-natured towards any one man, the same temper will make us envious, and spiteful, and ill-natured towards a great many more.

If therefore we desire this divine virtue of love, we must exercise and practise our hearts in the love of all, because it is not Christian love, till it is the love of all.

If a man could keep this whole law of love, and yet offend in one point, he would be guilty of all. For as one allowed instance of injustice, destroys the justice of all our other actions, so one allowed instance of envy, spite, and ill-will, renders all our other acts of benevolence and affection nothing worth.

Acts of love, that proceed not from a principle of universal love, are but like acts of justice, that proceed from a heart not disposed to universal justice.

A love which is not universal, may indeed have tenderness and affection, but it hath nothing of righteousness, or piety in it : It is but humour, and temper, or interest, or such a love as Publicans and Heathens practise.

All particular envies and spite, are as plain departures from the spirit of Christianity, as any particular acts of injustice. For it is as much a law of Christ, to treat everybody as your neighbour, and to love your neighbour as yourself, as it is a law of Christianity, to abstain from theft.

Now the noblest motive to this universal tenderness and affection, is founded in this Doctrine, 'God is love, and he 'that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God.'

Who therefore, whose heart has any tendency towards God, would not aspire after this divine temper, which so changes and exalts our nature into an union with him ?

How should we rejoice in the exercise and practice of this love, which so often as we feel it, is so often an assurance to us, that God is in us, that we act according to his spirit, and is love itself ? But we must observe, that love has then only this mighty power of uniting us to God, when it is so pure and universal, as to imitate that love, which God beareth to all his creatures.

God willeth the happiness of all beings, though it is no happiness to himself. Therefore we must desire the happiness of all beings, though no happiness cometh to us from it.

God equally delighteth in the perfections of all his creatures, therefore we should rejoice in those perfections, wherever we see them, and be as glad to have other people perfect as ourselves.

As God forgiveth all, and giveth grace to all, so we should forgive all those injuries and affronts which we receive from others, and do all the good that we can to them.

God Almighty, besides his own great example of love, which ought to draw all his creatures after it, has so provided for us, and made our happiness so common to us all, that we have no occasion to envy, or hate one another.

For we cannot stand in one another's way, or by enjoying any particular good, keep another from his full share of it.

As we cannot be happy, but in the enjoyment of God, so we cannot rival, or rob one another of this happiness.

And as to other things, the enjoyments and prosperities of this life, they are so little in themselves, so foreign to our happiness, and, generally speaking, so contrary to that which they appear to be, that they are no foundation for envy, or spite, or hatred.

How silly would it be to envy a man, that was drinking poison out of a golden cup? And yet who can say, that he is acting wiser than thus, when he is envying any instance of worldly greatness?

How many saints has adversity sent to Heaven? And how many poor sinners has prosperity plunged into everlasting misery? A man seems then to be in the most glorious state, when he has conquered, disgraced, and humbled his enemy; though it may be, that same conquest has saved his adversary, and undone himself.

This man had perhaps never been debauched, but for his fortune and advancement; that had never been pious, but through his poverty and disgrace.

She that is envied for her beauty, may perchance owe all her misery to it; and another may be for ever happy, for having had no admirers of her person.

One man succeeds in everything, and so loses all: Another meets with nothing but crosses and disappointments, and thereby gains more than all the world is worth.

This Clergyman may be undone by his being made a Bishop; and that may save both himself and others, by being fixed to his first poor vicarage.

How envied was Alexander when, conquering the world, he built towns, set up his statues, and left marks of his glory in so many kingdoms!

And how despised was the poor preacher St. Paul, when he was beaten with rods! And yet how strangely was the world mistaken in their judgment! How much to be envied was St. Paul! How much to be pitied was Alexander!

These few reflections sufficiently show us, that the different conditions of this life, have nothing in them to excite our uneasy passions, nothing that can reasonably interrupt our love and affection to one another.

To proceed now to another motive to this universal love.

Our power of doing external acts of love and goodness, is often very narrow and restrained. There are, it may be, but few people to whom we can contribute any worldly relief.

But though our outward means of doing good are often thus limited, yet if our hearts are but full of love and goodness, we get, as it were, an infinite power; because God will attribute to us those good works, those acts of love, and tender charities, which we sincerely desired, and would gladly have performed, had it been in our power.

You cannot heal all the sick, relieve all the poor; you cannot comfort all in distress, nor be a father to all the fatherless. You cannot, it may be, deliver many from their misfortunes, or teach them to find comfort in God.

But if there is a love and tenderness in your heart, that delight in these good works, and excites you to do all that you can: If your love has no bounds, but continually wishes and prays for the relief and happiness of all that are in distress, you will be received by God as a benefactor to those, who have had nothing from you but your goodwill, and tender affections.

You cannot build hospitals for the incurable; you cannot erect monasteries for the education of persons in holy solitude, continual prayer, and mortification; but if you join in your heart with those that do, and thank God for their pious designs; if you are a friend to these great friends to mankind, and rejoice in their eminent virtues, you will be received by God as a sharer of such good works as, though they had none of your hands, yet had all your heart.

This consideration surely is sufficient to make us look to, and watch over our hearts, with all diligence; to study the improvement of our inward tempers, and aspire after every height and perfection of a loving, charitable and benevolent mind.

And on the other hand, we may hence learn the great evil and mischief of all wrong turns of mind, of envy, spite, hatred, and ill-will. For if the goodness of our hearts will entitle us to the reward of good actions, which we never performed; it is certain that the badness of our hearts, our envy, ill-nature, and hatred, will bring us under the guilt of actions that we have never committed.

As he that lusteth after a woman shall be reckoned an adulterer, though he has only committed the crime in his heart; so the malicious, spiteful, ill-natured man, that only secretly rejoices at evil, shall be reckoned a murderer, though he has shed no blood.

Since therefore our hearts, which are always naked and open to the eyes of God, give such an exceeding extent and increase, either to our virtues or vices, it is our best and greatest business to govern the motions of our hearts, to watch, correct, and improve the inward state and temper of our souls.

Now there is nothing that so much exalts our souls, as this heavenly love: it cleanses and purifies like a holy fire, and all ill tempers fall away before it. It makes room for all virtues, and carries them to their greatest height. Everything that is good and holy grows out of it, and it becomes a continual source of all holy desires, and pious practices. By love, I do not mean any natural tenderness, which is more or less in people, according to their constitutions; but I mean a larger principle of the soul, founded in reason and piety, which makes us tender, kind, and benevolent to all our fellow-creatures, as creatures of God, and for his sake.

It is this love, that loves all things in God, as his creatures, as the images of his power, as the creatures of his goodness, as parts of his family, as members of his society, that becomes a holy principle of all great and good actions.

The love therefore of our neighbour, is only a branch of our love to God. For when we love God with all our hearts, and with all our souls, and with all our strength, we shall necessarily love those beings that are so nearly related to God, that have everything from him, and are created by him, to be objects of his own eternal love. If I hate or despise any one man in the world, I hate something that God cannot hate, and despise that which he loves.

And can I think that I love God with all my heart, whilst I hate that which belongs only to God, which has no other master but him, which bears his image, is part of his family, and exists only by the continuance of his love towards it?

It was the impossibility of this, that made St. John say, 'That if any man saith, he loveth God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar.'

These reasons sufficiently show us, that no love is holy, or religious, till it becomes universal.

For if Religion requires me to love all persons, as God's creatures, that belong to him, that bear his image, enjoy his protection, and make parts of his family and household; if these are the great and necessary reasons, why I should live in love and friendship with any one man in the world, they are the same great and necessary reasons, why I should live in love and friendship with every man in the world; and consequently, I offend against all these reasons, and break through all these ties, and obligations, whenever I want love towards any one man. The sin therefore of hating, or despising any one man, is like the sin of hating all God's creation; and the necessity of loving any one man, is the same necessity of loving every man in the world. And though many people may appear to us ever so sinful, odious, or extravagant in their conduct, we must never look upon that, as the least motive for any contempt or disregard of them; but look upon them with the greater compassion, as being in the most pitiable condition that can be.

As it was the Sins of the world, that made the Son of God become a compassionate suffering Advocate for all mankind, so no one is of the Spirit of Christ, but he that has the utmost com- passion for sinners. Nor is there any greater sign of your own perfection, than when you find yourself all love and compassion towards them that are very weak and defective. And on the other hand, you have never less reason to be pleased with yourself, than when you find yourself most angry and offended at the behaviour of others. All sin is certainly to be hated and abhorred, wherever it is ; but then we must set ourselves against sin, as we do against sickness and diseases, by showing ourselves tender and compassionate to the sick and diseased.

All other hatred of sin, which does not fill the heart with the softest, tenderest affections towards persons miserable in it, is the servant of sin, at the same time that it seems to be hating it.

And there is no temper, which even good men ought more carefully to watch and guard against, than this. For it is a temper that lurks and hides itself under the cover of many virtues, and by being unsuspected, does the more mischief.

A man naturally fancies, that it is his own exceeding love of virtue, that makes him not able to bear with those that want it. And when he abhors one man, despises another, and cannot bear the name of a third, he supposes it all to be a proof of his own high sense of virtue, and just hatred of sin.

And yet, one would think, that a man needed no other cure for this temper, than this one reflection :

That if this had been the Spirit of the Son of God, if he had hated sin in this manner, there had been no redemption of the World : That if God had hated sinners in this manner, day and night, the world itself had ceased long ago.

This therefore we may take for a certain rule, that the more we partake of the divine nature, the more improved we are ourselves, and the higher our sense of virtue is, the more we shall pity and compassionate those that want it. The sight of such people will then, instead of raising in us a haughty contempt, or peevish indignation towards them, fill us with such bowels of compassion, as when we see the miseries of an hospital.

That the follies therefore, crimes, and ill-behaviour of our fellow-creatures, may not lessen that love and tenderness which we are to have for all mankind, we should often consider the reasons, on which this duty of love is founded.

Now we are to love our neighbour, that is, all mankind, not because they are wise, holy, virtuous, or well-behaved ; for all mankind neither ever was, nor ever will be so ; therefore it is certain, that the reason of our being obliged to love them, cannot be founded in their virtue.

Again ; if their virtue or goodness were the reason of our being obliged to love people, we should have no rule to proceed by ; because though some people's virtues or vices are very notorious, yet, generally speaking, we are but very ill judges of the virtue and merit of other people.

Thirdly, We are sure that the virtue or merit of persons, is not the reason of our being obliged to love them, because we are commanded to pay the highest instances of love to our worst enemies ; we are to love, and bless, and pray for those that most injuriously treat us. This therefore is demonstration, that the merit of persons is not the reason, on which our obligation to love them is founded.

Let us further consider, what that love is, which we owe to our neighbour. It is to love him as ourselves, that is, to have all those sentiments towards him, which we have towards ourselves ; to wish him everything that we may lawfully wish to ourselves ; to be glad of every good, and sorry for every evil, that happens to him ; and to be ready to do him all such acts of kindness, as we are always ready to do to ourselves.

This love therefore, you see, is nothing else but a love of benevolence ; it requires nothing of us but such good wishes, tender affections, and such acts of kindness, as we show to ourselves.

This is all the love that we owe to the best of men ; and we are never to want any degree of this love to the worst, or most unreasonable man in the world.

Now what is the reason why we are to love every man in this manner ? It is answered, that our obligation to love all men in this manner, is founded upon many reasons.

First, Upon a reason of equity ; for if it is just, to love ourselves in this manner, it must be unjust to deny any degree of this love to others, because every man is so exactly of the same nature, and in the same condition as ourselves.

If therefore your own crimes and follies, do not lessen your obligation to seek your own good, and wish well to yourself ; neither do the follies and crimes of your neighbour, lessen your obligation to wish and seek the good of your neighbour.

Another reason for this love, is founded in the authority of God, who has commanded us to love every man as ourself.

Thirdly, We are obliged to this love, in imitation of God's goodness, that we may be children of our Father which is in Heaven, who willeth the happiness of all his creatures, and maketh his Sun to rise on the evil, and on the good.

Fourthly, Our redemption by Jesus Christ, calleth us to the exercise of this love, who came from Heaven, and laid down his life, out of love to the whole sinful world.

Fifthly, By the command of our Lord and Saviour, who has required us to love one another, as he has loved us.

a Devout and Holy Life. 223

These are the great, perpetual reasons, on which our obligation to love all mankind as ourselves, is founded.

These reasons never vary or change, they always continue in their full force ; and therefore equally oblige at all times, and in regard to all persons.

God loves us, not because we are wise, and good, and holy, but in pity to us, because we want this happiness : He loves us, in order to make us good. Our love therefore must take this course ; not looking for, or requiring the merit of our brethren, but pitying their disorders, and wishing them all the good that they want, and are capable of receiving.

It appears now plainly, from what has been said, that the love which we owe to our brethren, is only a love of benevolence. Secondly, That this duty of benevolence, is founded upon such reasons as never vary or change, such as have no dependence upon the qualities of persons. From whence it follows, that it is the same great sin, to want this love to a bad man, as to want it to a good man. Because he that denies any of this benevolence to a bad man, offends against all the same reasons of love, as he does that denies any benevolence to a good man : And consequently it is the same sin.

When therefore, you let loose any ill-natured passion, either of hatred, or contempt towards (as you suppose) an ill man, consider what you would think of another, that was doing the same towards a good man, and be assured that you are committing the same sin.

You will perhaps say, How is it possible to love a good and a bad man, in the same degree ?

Just as it is possible to be as just and faithful to a good man, as to an evil man. Now are you in any difficulty about performing justice and faithfulness to a bad man ? Are you in any doubts, whether you need be so just and faithful to him, as you need be to a good man ? Now why is it, that you are in no doubt about it ? It is because you know, that justice and faithfulness are founded upon reasons that never vary or change, that have no dependence upon the merits of men, but are founded in the nature of things, in the laws of God, and therefore are to be observed with an equal exactness towards good and bad men.

Now do but think thus justly of charity, or love to your neighbour, that it is founded upon reasons, that vary not, that have no dependence upon the merits of men, and then you will find it as possible to perform the same exact charity, as the same exact justice, to all men, whether good or bad.

You will perhaps further ask, if you are not to have a particular esteem, veneration, and reverence for good men ? It is answered ;

Yes. But then this high esteem and veneration, is a thing very different from that love of benevolence which we owe to our neighbour.

The high esteem and veneration which you have for a man of eminent piety, is no act of charity to him ; it is not out of pity and compassion, that you so reverence him, but it is rather an act of charity to yourself, that such esteem and veneration, may excite you to follow his example.

You may, and ought to love, like, and approve the life which the good man leads ; but then this is only the loving of virtue, wherever we see it. And we do not love virtue with the love of benevolence, as anything that wants our good wishes, but as something that is our proper good.

The whole of the matter is this. The actions which you are to love, esteem, and admire, are the actions of good and pious men ; but the persons to whom you are to do all the good you can, in all sorts of kindness and compassion, are all persons, whether good or bad.

This distinction betwixt love and benevolence, and esteem or veneration, is very plain and obvious. And you may perhaps still better see the plainness and necessity of it, by this following instance.

No man is to have a high esteem or honour, for his own accomplishments, or behaviour ; yet every man is to love himself, that is, to wish well to himself ; therefore this distinction betwixt love and esteem, is not only plain, but very necessary to be observed.

Again, if you think it hardly possible to dislike the actions of unreasonable men, and yet have a true love for them : Consider this with relation to yourself.

It is very possible, I hope, for you not only to dislike, but to detest and abhor a great many of your own past actions, and to accuse yourself of great folly for them. But do you then lose any of those tender sentiments towards yourself, which you used to have ? Do you then cease to wish well to yourself ? Is not the love of yourself as strong then, as at any other time ?

Now what is thus possible with relation to ourselves, is in the same manner possible with relation to others. We may have the highest good wishes towards them, desiring for them, every good that we desire for ourselves, and yet at the same time, dislike their way of life.

To proceed ; all that love which we may justly have for ourselves, we are in strict justice obliged to exercise towards all other men ; and we offend against the great law of our nature, and the greatest laws of God, when our tempers towards others, are different from those which we have towards ourselves.

Now that self-love which is just and reasonable, keeps us constantly tender, compassionate, and well-affected towards ourselves ; if therefore you do not feel these kind dispositions towards all other people, you may be assured, that you are not in that state of charity, which is the very life and soul of Christian piety.

You know how it hurts you, to be made the jest and ridicule of other people ; how it grieves you to be robbed of your reputation, and deprived of the favourable opinion of your neighbours : If therefore you expose others to scorn and contempt in any degree ; if it pleases you to see or hear of their frailties and infirmities ; or if you are only loath to conceal their faults, you are so far from loving such people as yourself, that you may be justly supposed to have as much hatred for them, as you have love for yourself. For such tempers are as truly the proper fruits of hatred, as the contrary tempers are the proper fruits of love.

And as it is a certain sign that you love yourself, because you are tender of everything that concerns you ; so it is as certain a sign that you hate your neighbour, when you are pleased with anything that hurts him.

But now, if the want of a true and exact charity, be so great a want, that, as St. Paul saith, it renders our greatest virtues but empty sounds, and tinkling cymbals, how highly does it concern us to study every art, and practise every method of raising our souls to this state of charity ? It is for this reason, that you are here desired, not to let this hour of prayer pass, without a full and solemn supplication to God, for all the instances of an universal love and benevolence to all mankind.

Such daily constant devotion, being the only likely means of preserving you in such a state of love, as is necessary to prove you to be a true follower of Jesus Christ.

Chapter XXI.

Of the necessity and benefit of Intercession, considered as an exercise of universal love. How all orders of men are to pray and intercede with God for one another. How naturally such intercession, amends and reforms the hearts of those that use it.

THAT intercession is a great and necessary part of Christian Devotion, is very evident from Scripture. The first followers of Christ, seem to support all their love, and to maintain all their intercourse and correspondence, by mutual prayers for one another.

St. Paul, whether he writes to churches, or particular persons, shows his intercession to be perpetual for them, that they are the constant subject of his prayers.

Thus to the Philippians, 'I thank my God upon every remembrance of you. Always in every prayer of mine for you all, making request with joy.* Here we see, not only a continual intercession, but performed with so much gladness, as shows that it was an exercise of love, in which he highly rejoiced.

His Devotion had also the same care for particular persons; as appears by the following passage. 'I thank my God, whom I serve from my forefathers, with a pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day.† How holy an acquaintance and friendship was this, how worthy of persons that were raised above the world, and related to one another, as new members of a kingdom of Heaven!

Apostles and great Saints did not only thus benefit, and bless particular Churches, and private persons; but they themselves also received graces from God by the prayers of others. Thus saith St. Paul to the Corinthians, 'You also helping together by prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons, thanks may be given by many on our behalf.‡

This was the ancient friendship of Christians, uniting and

* Phil. i. 4, 5.

† 2 Tim. i. 3.

‡ 2 Cor. i. 11.

cementing their hearts, not by worldly considerations, or human passions, but by the mutual communication of spiritual blessings, by prayers and thanksgivings to God for one another.

It was this holy intercession, that raised Christians to such a state of mutual love, as far exceeded all that had been praised and admired in human friendship. And when the same spirit of intercession is again in the world, when Christianity has the same power over the hearts of people, that it then had, this holy friendship will be again in fashion, and Christians will be again the wonder of the world, for that exceeding love which they bear to one another.

For a frequent intercession with God, earnestly beseeching him to forgive the sins of all mankind, to bless them with his providence, enlighten them with his Spirit, and bring them to everlasting happiness, is the divinest exercise that the heart of man can be engaged in.

Be daily therefore on your knees, in a solemn, deliberate performance of this devotion, praying for others in such forms, with such length, importunity, and earnestness, as you use for yourself; and you will find all little, ill-natured passions die away, your heart grow great and generous, delighting in the common happiness of others, as you used only to delight in your own.

For he that daily prays to God, that all men may be happy in heaven, takes the likeliest way to make him wish for, and delight in their happiness on earth. And it is hardly possible for you, to beseech and entreat God to make anyone happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life.

For how strange and unnatural would it be, to pray to God to grant health and a longer life to a sick man, and at the same time to envy him the poor pleasure of agreeable medicines?

Yet this would be no more strange, or unnatural, than to pray to God that your neighbour may enjoy the highest degrees of his mercy and favour, and yet at the same time envy him the little credit and figure, he hath amongst his fellow-creatures.

When therefore you have once habituated your heart to a serious performance of this holy intercession, you have done a great deal, to render it incapable of spite and envy, and to make it naturally delight in the happiness of all mankind.

This is the natural effect of a general intercession for all mankind. But the greatest benefits of it are then received, when it descends to such particular instances, as our state and condition in life more particularly require of us.

Though we are to treat all mankind as neighbours and brethren, as any occasion offers ; yet as we can only live in the actual society of a few, and are by our state and condition more particularly related to some than others ; so when our intercession is made an exercise of love and care, for those amongst whom our lot is fallen, or who belong to us in a nearer relation, it then becomes the greatest benefit to ourselves, and produces its best effects in our own hearts.

If therefore you should always change and alter your intercessions, according as the needs and necessities of your neighbours or acquaintance seem to require ; beseeching God to deliver them from such or such particular evils, or to grant them this or that particular gift, or blessing ; such intercessions, besides the great charity of them, would have a mighty effect upon your own heart, as disposing you to every other good office, and to the exercise of every other virtue towards such persons, as have so often a place in your prayers.

This would make it pleasant to you, to be courteous, civil, and condescending to all about you ; and make you unable to say, or do a rude, or hard thing to those, for whom you had used yourself to be so kind and compassionate in your prayers.

For there is nothing that makes us love a man so much, as praying for him ; and when you can once do this sincerely for any man, you have fitted your soul for the performance of everything that is kind and civil towards him. This will fill your heart with a generosity and tenderness, that will give you a better and sweeter behaviour, than anything that is called fine breeding and good manners.

By considering yourself as an advocate with God, for your neighbours and acquaintance, you would never find it hard to be at peace with them yourself. It would be easy to you to bear with, and forgive those, for whom you particularly implored the divine mercy and forgiveness.

Such prayers as these, amongst neighbours and acquaintance, would unite them to one another in the strongest bonds of love and tenderness. It would exalt and ennoble their souls, and teach them to consider one another in a higher state, as members of a spiritual society, that are created for the enjoyment of the common blessings of God and fellow-heirs of the same future glory.

And by being thus desirous, that everyone should have their full share of the favours of God, they would not only be content, but glad to see one another happy, in the little enjoyments of this transitory life.

These would be the natural effects of such an intercession, amongst people of the same town or neighbourhood, or that were acquainted with one another's state and condition.

Ouranius is a holy Priest, full of the spirit of the Gospel, watching, labouring, and praying for a poor country village. Every soul in it, is as dear to him as himself; and he loves them all, as he loves himself; because he prays for them all, as often as he prays for himself.

If his whole life is one continual exercise of great zeal and labour, hardly ever satisfied with any degrees of care and watchfulness, it is because he has learned the great value of souls, by so often appearing before God, as an intercessor for them.

He never thinks he can love, or do enough for his flock; because he never considers them in any other view, than as so many persons, that by receiving the gifts and graces of God, are to become his hope, his joy, and his crown of rejoicing.

He goes about his Parish, and visits everybody in it; but visits in the same spirit of piety, that he preaches to them; he visits them, to encourage their virtues, to assist them with his advice and counsel, to discover their manner of life, and to know the state of their souls, that he may intercede with God for them, according to their particular necessities.

When Ouranius first entered into holy orders, he had a haughtiness in his temper, a great contempt and disregard for all foolish and unreasonable people; but he has prayed away this spirit, and has now the greatest tenderness for the most obstinate sinners; because he is always hoping, that God will sooner or later hear those prayers that he makes for their repentance.

The rudeness, ill-nature, or perverse behaviour of any of his flock, used at first to betray him into impatience; but now it raises no other passion in him, than a desire of being upon his knees in prayer to God for them.

Thus have his prayers for others, altered and amended the state of his own heart.

It would strangely delight you to see, with what spirit he converses, with what tenderness he reproveth, with what affection he exhorts, and with what vigour he preaches; and it is all owing to this, because he reproveth, exhorts, and preaches to those, for whom he first prays to God.

This devotion softens his heart, enlightens his mind, sweetens his temper, and makes everything that comes from him, instructive, amiable, and affecting.

At his first coming to his little Village, it was as disagreeable to him as a prison, and every day seemed too tedious to be endured in so retired a place. He thought his Parish was too full of poor and mean people, that were none of them fit for the conversation of a Gentleman.

This put him upon a close application to his studies. He kept much at home, writ notes upon Homer and Plautus, and sometimes thought it hard to be called to pray by any poor body, when he was just in the midst of one of Homer's battles.

This was his polite, or I may rather say, poor, ignorant turn of mind, before devotion had got the government of his heart.

But now his days are so far from being tedious, or his Parish too great a retirement, that he now only wants more time to do that variety of good, which his soul thirsts after. The solitude of his little Parish is become matter of great comfort to him, because he hopes that God has placed him and his flock there, to make it their way to Heaven.

He can now not only converse with, but gladly attend and wait upon the poorest kind of people. He is now daily watching over the weak and infirm, humbling himself to perverse, rude, ignorant people, wherever he can find them; and is so far from desiring to be considered as a Gentleman, that he desires to be used as the servant of all; and in the spirit of his Lord and Master girds himself, and is glad to kneel down and wash any of their feet.

He now thinks the poorest creature in his Parish good enough, and great enough, to deserve the humblest attendances, the kindest friendships, the tenderest offices, he can possibly show them.

He is so far now from wanting agreeable company, that he thinks there is no better conversation in the world, than to be talking with poor and mean people about the kingdom of Heaven.

All these noble thoughts, and divine sentiments, are the effects of his great devotion; he presents everyone so often before God, in his prayers, that he never thinks he can esteem, reverence, or serve those enough, for whom he implores so many mercies from God.

Ouranius is mightily affected with this passage of Holy Scripture, 'The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.'^{*}

This makes him practise all the arts of holy living, and aspire after every instance of piety and righteousness, that his prayers for his flock may have their full force, and avail much with God.

For this reason, he has sold a small estate that he had, and has erected a charitable retirement for ancient, poor people, to live in prayer and piety, that his prayers being assisted by such good works, may pierce the clouds, and bring down blessings upon those souls committed to his care.

Ouranius reads how God himself said unto Abimelech, concerning Abraham, 'He is a Prophet; he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live.'*

* James v. 16.

And again, how he said of Job, 'And my servant Job shall pray for you; for him will I accept.'†

From these passages Ouranius justly concludes, that the prayers of men eminent for holiness of life, have an extraordinary power with God; that he grants to other people such pardons, reliefs and blessings, through their prayers, as would not be granted to men of less piety and perfection. This makes Ouranius exceeding studious of Christian perfection, searching after every grace and holy temper, purifying his heart all manner of ways, fearful of every error and defect in his life, lest his prayers for his flock should be less availing with God, through his own defects in holiness.

This makes him careful of every temper of his heart, give alms of all that he hath, watch, and fast, and mortify, and live according to the strictest rules of temperance, meekness, and humility, that he may be in some degree like an Abraham, or a Job in his Parish, and make such prayers for them, as God will hear and accept.

These are the happy effects, which a devout intercession hath produced in the life of Ouranius.

And if other people, in their several stations, were to imitate his example, in such a manner as suited their particular state of life, they would certainly find the same happy effects from it.

If Masters, for instance, were thus to remember their servants in their prayers, beseeching God to bless them, and suiting their petitions to the particular wants and necessities of their servants; letting no day pass, without a full performance of this part of Devotion, the benefit would be as great to themselves, as to their servants.

No way so likely as this, to inspire them with a true sense of that power which they have in their hands, to make them delight in doing good, and becoming exemplary in all the parts of a wise and good master.

The presenting their servants so often before God, as equally related to God, and entitled to the same expectations of Heaven, as themselves, would naturally incline them to treat them, not only with such humanity as became fellow-creatures, but with such tenderness, care, and generosity, as became fellow-heirs of the same glory. This Devotion would make masters inclined to everything that was good towards their servants; be watchful of their behaviour, and as ready to require of them an exact observance of the duties of Christianity, as of the duties of their service.

* Gen xx. 7.

This would teach them to consider their servants as God's servants, to desire their perfection, to do nothing before them that might corrupt their minds, to impose no business upon them that should lessen their sense of Religion, or hinder them from their full share of Devotion, both public and private. This praying for them, would make them as glad to see their servants eminent in piety as themselves, and contrive that they should have all the opportunities and encouragements, both to know, and perform all the duties of the Christian life.

How natural would it be for such a Master, to perform every part of Family Devotion; to have constant prayers, to excuse no one's absence from them; to have the Scriptures, and books of piety often read amongst his servants; to take all opportunities of instructing them, of raising their minds to God, and teaching them to do all their business, as a service to God, and upon the hopes and expectations of another life?

How natural would it be for such a one to pity their weakness and ignorance, to bear with the dulness of their understandings, or the perverseness of their tempers; to reprove them with tenderness, exhort them with affection, as hoping that God would hear his prayers for them?

How impossible would it be for a Master, that thus interceded with God for his servants, to use any unkind threatenings towards them, to damn and curse them as dogs and scoundrels, and treat them only as the dregs of the creation?

This Devotion would give them another spirit, and make them consider how to make proper returns of care, kindness, and protection to those, who had spent their strength and time in service and attendance upon them.

Now if Gentlemen think it too low an employment for their state and dignity, to exercise such a Devotion as this for their servants, let them consider how far they are from the spirit of Christ, who made Himself not only an intercessor, but a sacrifice for the whole race of sinful mankind.

Let them consider how miserable their greatness would be, if the Son of God should think it as much below Him to pray for them, as they do to pray for their fellow-creatures.

Let them consider how far they are from that spirit, which prays for its most unjust enemies, if they have not kindness enough to pray for those, by whose labours and service they live in ease themselves.

Again, If Parents should thus make themselves advocates and intercessors with God for their children, constantly applying to Heaven in behalf of them, nothing would be more likely, not only to bless their children, but also to form and dispose their own minds, to the performance of everything that was excellent and praiseworthy.

I do not suppose, but that the generality of parents remember their children in their prayers, and call upon God to bless them. But the thing here intended, is not a general remembrance of them, but a regular method of recommending all their particular needs and necessities unto God; and of praying for every such particular grace and virtue for them, as their state and condition of life shall seem to require.

The state of parents is a holy state, in some degree like that of the Priesthood, and calls upon them to bless their children with their prayers and sacrifices to God. Thus it was that holy Job watched over, and blessed his children, he 'sanctified them, 'he rose up early in the morning, and offered burnt-offerings, 'according to the number of them all.'*

If parents therefore, considering themselves in this light, should be daily calling upon God, in a solemn, deliberate manner, altering and extending their intercessions, as the state and growth of their children required, such Devotion would have a mighty influence upon the rest of their lives; it would make them very circumspect in the government of themselves; prudent and careful of everything they said or did, lest their example should hinder that, which they so constantly desired in their prayers.

If a father was daily making particular prayers to God, that he would please to inspire his children with true piety, great humility, and strict temperance, what could be more likely to make the father himself become exemplary in these virtues? How naturally would he grow ashamed of wanting such virtues, as he thought necessary for his children? So that his prayers for their piety, would be a certain means of exalting his own, to its greatest height.

If a father thus considered himself as an intercessor with God for his children, to bless them with his prayers, what more likely means to make him aspire after every degree of holiness, that he might thereby be fitter to obtain blessings from Heaven for them? How would such thoughts make him avoid everything that was sinful and displeasing to God, lest when he prayed for his children, God should reject his prayers?

How tenderly, how religiously would such a father converse with his children, whom he considered as his little spiritual flock, whose virtues he was to form by his example, encourage by his authority, nourish by his counsel, and prosper by his prayers to God for them ?

How fearful would he be of all greedy and unjust ways of raising their fortune, of bringing them up in pride and indulgence, or of making them too fond of the world, lest he should thereby render them incapable of those graces, which he was so often beseeching God to grant them ?

These being the plain, natural, happy effects of this intercession, all parents, I hope, who have the real welfare of their children at heart, who desire to be their true friends and benefactors, and to live amongst them in the spirit of wisdom and piety, will not neglect so great a means, both of raising their own virtue, and doing an eternal good to those, who are so near and dear to them, by the strongest ties of nature.

Lastly, If all people, when they feel the first approaches of resentment, envy, or contempt, towards others; or if in all little disagreements, and misunderstandings whatever, they should, instead of indulging their minds with little low reflections, have recourse, at such times, to a more particular and extraordinary intercession with God, for such persons as had raised their envy, resentment, or discontent ; this would be a certain way to prevent the growth of all uncharitable tempers.

If you were also to form your prayer, or intercession at that time, to the greatest degree of contrariety to that temper which you were then in, it would be an excellent means of raising your heart to the greatest state of perfection.

As for instance, when at any time you find in your heart motions of envy towards any person, whether on account of his riches, power, reputation, learning, or advancement, if you should immediately betake yourself at that time to your prayers, and pray to God to bless and prosper him in that very thing, which raised your envy ; if you should express and repeat your petitions in the strongest terms, beseeching God to grant him all the happiness from the enjoyment of it, that can possibly be received, you would soon find it to be the best antidote in the world, to expel the venom of that poisonous passion.

This would be such a triumph over yourself, would so humble and reduce your heart into obedience and order, that the Devil would even be afraid of tempting you again in the same manner, when he saw the temptation turned into so great a means of amending and reforming the state of your heart.

Again, If in any little difference, or misunderstandings that you happened to have at any time, with a relation, a neighbour, or anyone else, you should then pray for them in a more extraordinary manner, than you ever did before ; beseeching God to give them every grace, and blessing, and happiness you can think of, you would have taken the speediest method that can be, of reconciling all differences, and clearing up all misunderstandings. You would then think nothing too great to be forgiven; stay for no condescensions, need no mediation of a third person, but be glad to testify your love and good-will to him, who had so high a place in your secret prayers.

This would be the mighty power of such Christian devotion; it would remove all peevish passions, soften your heart into the most tender condescensions, and be the best arbitrator of all differences that happened betwixt you and any of your acquaintance.

The greatest resentments amongst friends and neighbours, most often arise from poor punctilios, and little mistakes in conduct. A certain sign that their friendship is merely human, not founded upon religious considerations, or supported by such a course of mutual prayer for one another, as the first Christians used.

For such devotion must necessarily either destroy such tempers, or be itself destroyed by them.

You cannot possibly have any ill-temper, or show any unkind behaviour to a man, for whose welfare you are so much concerned, as to be his advocate with God in private.

Hence we may also learn the odious nature and exceeding guilt of all spite, hatred, contempt, and angry passions; they are not to be considered as defects in good-nature, and sweetness of temper, not as failings in civility of manners, or good-breeding, but as such base tempers, as are entirely inconsistent with the charity of intercession.

You think it a small matter to be peevish or ill-natured, to such or such a man; but you should consider whether it be a small matter to do that, which you could not do, if you had but so much charity, as to be able to recommend him to God in your prayers.

You think it a small matter to ridicule one man, and despise another; but you should consider, whether it be a small matter to want that charity towards these people, which Christians are not allowed to want towards their most inveterate enemies.

For be but as charitable to these men, do but bless and pray for them, as you are obliged to bless and pray for your enemies, and then you will find that you have charity enough, to make it impossible for you to treat them with any degree of scorn or contempt.

For you cannot possibly despise and ridicule that man, whom your private prayers recommend to the love and favour of God.

When you despise and ridicule a man, it is with no other end, but to make him ridiculous and contemptible in the eyes of other men, and in order to prevent their esteem of him. How therefore can it be possible for you, sincerely to beseech God to bless that man with the honour of his love and favour, whom you desire men to treat as worthy of their contempt?

Could you, out of love to a neighbour, desire your Prince to honour him with every mark of his esteem and favour, and yet at the same time expose him to the scorn and derision of your own servants?

Yet this is as possible, as to expose that man to the scorn and contempt of your fellow-creatures, whom you recommend to the favour of God in your secret prayers.

From these considerations, we may plainly discover the reasonableness and justice of this doctrine of the Gospel, 'Who-soever shall say unto his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council; but whosoever shall say, Thou Fool, shall be in danger of hell-fire.'*

We are not, I suppose, to believe that every hasty word, or unreasonable expression, that slips from us by chance or surprise and is contrary to our intention and tempers, is the great sin here signified.

But he that says, Raca, or thou Fool, must chiefly mean him that allows himself in deliberate, designed acts of scorn and contempt towards his brother, and in that temper speak to him, and of him, in reproachful language.

Now since it appears, that these tempers are at the bottom, the most rank uncharitableness, since no one can be guilty of them, but because he has not charity enough to pray to God for his brother; it cannot be thought hard or rigorous justice, that such tempers should endanger the salvation of Christians. For who would think it hard, that a Christian cannot obtain the favour of God for himself, unless he reverence and esteem his brother Christian, as one that bears the image of God, as one for whom Christ died, as a member of Christ's body, as a member of that holy society on earth, which is in union with that triumphant Church in Heaven?

Yet all these considerations must be forgot, all these glorious privileges disregarded, before a man can treat him that has them, as an object of scorn and contempt.

So that to scorn, or despise a brother, or, as our blessed Lord says, to call him Raca, or Fool, must be looked upon, as amongst the most odious, unjust, and guilty tempers, that can be supported in the heart of a Christian, and justly excluding him from all his hopes in the salvation of Jesus Christ.

For to despise one for whom Christ died, is to be as contrary to Christ, as he that despises anything that Christ has said, or done.

If a Christian that had lived with the holy Virgin Mary, should, after the death of our Lord, have taken any occasion to treat her with contempt, you would certainly say, that he had lost his piety towards our blessed Lord. For a true reverence for Christ must have forced him to treat her with respect, who was so nearly related to him.

I dare appeal to any man's mind, whether it does not tell him, that this relation of the Virgin Mary to our blessed Lord, must have obliged all those that lived and conversed with her, to treat her with great respect and esteem. Might not a man have justly dreaded the vengeance of God upon him, for any scorn or contempt that he had shown to her?

Now if this be plain and obvious reasoning, if a contempt offered to the Virgin Mary, must have been interpreted a contempt of Christ, because of her near relation to him, then let the same reasoning show you the great impiety of despising any brother.

You cannot despise a brother, without despising him that stands in a high relation to God, to his Son Jesus Christ, and to the Holy Trinity.

You would certainly think it a mighty impiety to treat a writing with great contempt, that had been written by the finger of God; and can you think it a less impiety to contemn and vilify a brother, who is not only the workmanship, but the image of God?

You would justly think it great profaneness, to contemn and trample upon an Altar, because it was appropriated to holy uses, and had had the body of Christ so often placed upon it; and can you suppose it to be less profaneness to scorn and trample upon a brother, who so belongs to God, that his very body is to be considered as the 'temple of the Holy Ghost'?

Had you despised and ill-treated the Virgin Mary, you had been chargeable with the impiety of despising her, of whom Christ was born. And if you scorn and despise a brother, you are chargeable with the impiety of despising him, for whom Christ laid down his life.

And now if this scornful temper is founded upon a disregard of all these relations, which every Christian bears to God, and Christ, and the Holy Trinity, can you wonder, or think it hard, that a Christian who thus allows himself to despise a brother, should be in danger of hell-fire ?

Secondly, It must here be observed, that though in these words, 'whosoever shall say, Thou Fool,' &c., the great sin there condemned is an allowed temper of despising a brother ; yet we are also to believe, that all hasty expressions, and words of contempt, though spoken by surprise or accident, are by this text condemned as great sins, and notorious breaches of Christian charity.

They proceed from great want of Christian love and meekness, and call for great repentance. They are only little sins, when compared with habits and settled tempers of treating a brother despitefully, and fall as directly under the condemnation of this text, as the grossest habits of uncharitableness.

And the reason why we are always to apprehend great guilt, and call ourselves to a strict repentance for these hasty expressions of anger and contempt, is this ; because they seldom are what they seem to be, that is, mere starts of temper, that were occasioned purely by surprise or accident, but are much more our own proper acts, than we generally imagine.

A man says a great many bitter things ; he presently forgives himself, because he supposes it was only the suddenness of the occasion, or something accidental, that carried him so far beyond himself.

But he should consider, that perhaps the accident, or surprise, was not the occasion of his angry expressions, but might only be the occasion of his angry temper showing itself.

Now as this is, generally speaking, the case, as all haughty, angry language generally proceeds from some secret habits of pride in the heart ; so people that are subject to it, though only now and then as accidents happen, have great reason to repent of more than their present behaviour, to charge themselves with greater guilt than accidental passion, and to bring themselves to such penance and mortification, as is proper to destroy habits of a haughty spirit.

And this may be the reason, why the text looks no further than the outward language ; why it only says, 'Whosoever shall say, Thou Fool' ; because few can proceed so far, as to the accidental use of haughty, disdainful language, but they whose hearts are more or less possessed with habits, and settled tempers of pride and haughtiness.

But to return, Intercession is not only the best arbitrator of all differences, the best promoter of true friendship, the best cure and preservative against all unkind tempers, all angry and haughty passions, but is also of great use to discover to us the true state of our own hearts.

There are many tempers which we think lawful and innocent, which we never suspect of any harm ; which if they were to be tried by this devotion, would soon show us how we have deceived ourselves.

Susurrus is a pious, temperate, good man, remarkable for abundance of excellent qualities. No one more constant at the service of the Church, or whose heart is more affected with it. His charity is so great, that he almost starves himself, to be able to give greater alms to the poor.

Yet Susurrus had a prodigious failing, along with these great virtues.

He had a mighty inclination to hear and discover, all the defects and infirmities of all about him. You were welcome to tell him anything of anybody, provided that you did not do it in the style of an enemy. He never disliked an evil-speaker, but when his language was rough and passionate. If you would but whisper anything gently, though it was ever so bad in itself, Susurrus was ready to receive it.

When he visits, you generally hear him relating, how sorry he is for the defects and failings of such a neighbour. He is always letting you know, how tender he is of the reputation of his neighbour ; how loath to say that which he is forced to say ; and how gladly he would conceal it, if it could be concealed.

Susurrus had such a tender, compassionate manner of relating things the most prejudicial to his neighbour, that he even seemed, both to himself and others, to be exercising a Christian charity, at the same time that he was indulging a whispering, evil-speaking temper.

Susurrus once whispered to a particular friend in great secrecy, something too bad to be spoken of publicly. He ended with saying, how glad he was, that it had not yet took wind, and that he had some hopes it might not be true, though the suspicions were very strong. His friend made him this reply :

You say, Susurrus, that you are glad it has not yet taken wind ; and that you have some hopes it may not prove true. Go home therefore to your closet, and pray to God for this man, in such a manner, and with such earnestness, as you would pray for yourself on the like occasion.

Beseech God to interpose in his favour, to save him from false accusers, and bring all those to shame, who by uncharitable whispers, and secret stories, wound him, like those that stab in the dark. And when you have made this prayer, then you may, if you please, go tell the same secret to some other friend, that you have told to me.

Susurrus was exceedingly affected with this rebuke, and felt the force of it upon his conscience, in as lively a manner, as if he had seen the books opened at the day of Judgment.

All other arguments might have been resisted; but it was impossible for Susurrus, either to reject, or to follow this advice, without being equally self-condemned in the highest degree.

From that time to this, he has constantly used himself to this method of intercession; and his heart is so entirely changed by it, that he can now no more privately whisper anything to the prejudice of another, than he can openly pray to God to do people hurt.

Whisperings and evil-speakings now hurt his ears, like oaths and curses; and he has appointed one day in the week, to be a day of penance as long as he lives, to humble himself before God, in the sorrowful confession of his former guilt.

It may well be wondered, how a man of so much piety as Susurrus, could be so long deceived in himself, as to live in such a state of scandal and evil-speaking, without suspecting himself to be guilty of it. But it was the tenderness and seeming compassion, with which he heard and related everything, that deceived both himself and others.

This was a falseness of heart, which was only to be fully discovered, by the true charity of intercession.

And if people of virtue, who think as little harm of themselves, as Susurrus did, were often to try their spirit by such an intercession, they would often find themselves to be such, as they least of all suspected.

I have laid before you, the many and great advantages of intercession. You have seen what a divine friendship it must needs beget amongst Christians, how dear it would render all relations and neighbours to one another; how it tends to make Clergymen, Masters, and Parents, exemplary and perfect in all the duties of their station; how certainly it destroys all envy, spite, and ill-natured passions; how speedily it reconciles all differences, and with what a piercing light it discovers to a man the true state of his heart.

These considerations will, I hope, persuade you to make such intercession as is proper for your state, the constant, chief matter of your devotion, at this hour of prayer.

Chapter XXII.

Recommending Devotion at three o'clock, called in Scripture the ninth hour of the day. The subject of prayer at this hour, is resignation to the divine pleasure. The nature and duty of conformity to the will of God, in all our actions and designs.

I HAVE recommended certain subjects, to be made the fixed and chief matter of your Devotions, at all the hours of prayer that have been already considered.

As thanksgiving, and oblation of yourself to God, at your first prayers in the morning. At nine, the great virtue of Christian humility is to be the chief part of your petitions. At twelve, you are called upon to pray for all the graces of universal love, and to raise it in your heart by such general and particular intercessions, as your own state, and relation to other people, seem more particularly to require of you.

At this hour of the afternoon, you are desired to consider the necessity of resignation and conformity to the will of God, and to make this great virtue the principal matter of your prayers.

There is nothing wise, or holy, or just, but the great will of God. This is as strictly true in the most rigid sense, as to say, that nothing is infinite and eternal but God.

No beings therefore, whether in Heaven, or on earth, can be wise, or holy, or just, but so far as they conform to this will of God. It is conformity to this will, that gives virtue and perfection to the highest services of angels in Heaven; and it is conformity to the same will, that makes the ordinary actions of men on earth, become an acceptable service unto God.

The whole nature of virtue consists in conforming, and the whole nature of vice in declining from the will of God. All God's creatures are created to fulfil his will; the Sun and Moon obey his will, by the necessity of their nature; Angels conform to his will, by the perfection of their nature: If therefore you would show yourself, not to be a rebel and apostate from the order of the creation, you must act like beings both above and below you; it must be the great desire of your soul, that God's will may be done by you on earth, as it is done in heaven. It must be the settled purpose and intention of your heart, to will nothing, design nothing, do nothing, but so far as you have reason to believe, that it is the will of God, that you should so desire, design, and do.

'Tis as just and necessary to live in this state of heart, to think thus of God and yourself, as to think that you have any dependence upon him. And it is as great a rebellion against God, to think that your will may ever differ from his, as to think that you have not received the power of willing for him.

You are therefore to consider yourself as a being, that has no other business in the world, but to be that which God requires you to be; to have no tempers, no rules of your own, to seek no self-designs, or self ends, but to fill some place, and act some part in strict conformity, and thankful resignation to the divine pleasure.

To think that you are your own, or at your own disposal, is as absurd, as to think that you created, and can preserve yourself. It is as plain and necessary a first principle, to believe you are thus God's, that you thus belong to him, and are to act and suffer all in a thankful resignation to his pleasure, as to believe, that in him you live, and move, and have your being.

Resignation to the divine will, signifies a cheerful approbation, and thankful acceptance of everything that comes from God. It is not enough patiently to submit, but we must thankfully receive, and fully approve of everything, that by the order of God's providence happens to us.

For there is no reason why we should be patient, but what is as good and strong a reason why we should be thankful. If we were under the hands of a wise and good Physician, that could not mistake, or do anything to us, but what certainly tended to our benefit; it would not be enough to be patient, and abstain from murmurings against such a Physician; but it would be as great a breach of duty and gratitude to him, not to be pleased and thankful for what he did, as it would be to murmur at him.

Now this is our true state with relation to God; we cannot be said so much as to believe in him, unless we believe him to be of infinite wisdom. Every argument therefore for patience under his disposal to us, is as strong an argument for approbation and thankfulness, for everything that he does to us. And there needs no more to dispose us to this gratitude towards God, than a full belief in him, that he is this being of infinite wisdom, love, and goodness.

Do but assent to this truth, in the same manner as you assent to things of which you have no doubt, and then you will cheerfully approve of everything, that God has already approved for you.

For as you cannot possibly be pleased with the behaviour of any person towards you, but because it is for your good, is wise in itself, and the effect of his love and goodness towards you ; so when you are satisfied that God does not only do that which is wise, and good, and kind, but that which is the effect of an infinite wisdom and love in the care of you ; it will be as necessary, whilst you have this faith, to be thankful and pleased with everything which God chooses for you, as to wish your own happiness.

Whenever therefore you find yourself disposed to uneasiness, or murmuring, at anything that is the effect of God's providence over you, you must look upon yourself as denying, either the wisdom, or goodness of God. For every complaint necessarily supposes this. You would never complain of your neighbour, but that you suppose you can show either his unwise, unjust, or unkind behaviour towards you.

Now every murmuring, impatient reflection, under the providence of God, is the same accusation of God. A complaint always supposes ill-usage.

Hence also you may see the great necessity and piety of this thankful state of heart, because the want of it, implies an accusation of God's want, either of wisdom, or goodness, in his disposal of us. It is not therefore any high degree of perfection, founded in any uncommon nicety of thinking, or refined notions, but a plain principle, founded in this plain belief, that God is a being of infinite wisdom and goodness.

Now this resignation to the divine will, may be considered in two respects ; First, As it signifies a thankful approbation of God's general providence over the world : Secondly, As it signifies a thankful acceptance of his particular providence over us.

First, Every man is by the law of his creation, by the first article of his creed, obliged to consent to, and acknowledge the wisdom and goodness of God in his general providence over the whole world. He is to believe, that it is the effect of God's great wisdom and goodness, that the world itself was formed at such a particular time, and in such a manner : That the general order of nature, the whole frame of things, is contrived and formed in the best manner. He is to believe that God's providence over states and kingdoms, times and seasons, is all for the best : That the revolutions of state, and changes of empire, the rise and fall of monarchies, persecutions, wars, famines, and plagues, are all permitted, and conducted by God's providence, to the general good of man in this state of trial.

A good man is to believe all this, with the same fulness of assent, as he believes that God is in every place, though he neither sees, nor can comprehend the manner of his presence.

This is a noble magnificence of thought, a true religious greatness of mind, to be thus affected with God's general providence, admiring and magnifying his wisdom in all things; never murmuring at the course of the world, or the state of things, but looking upon all around, at heaven and earth, as a pleased spectator; and adoring that invisible hand, which gives laws to all motions, and overrules all events, to ends suitable to the highest wisdom and goodness.

It is very common for people, to allow themselves great liberty in finding fault with such things, as have only God for their cause.

Everyone thinks he may justly say, what a wretched, abominable climate he lives in. This man is frequently telling you, what a dismal, cursed day it is, and what intolerable seasons we have. Another thinks he has very little to thank God for, that it is hardly worth his while to live in a world so full of changes and revolutions. But these are tempers of great impiety, and show that religion has not yet its seat in the heart of those that have them.

It sounds indeed much better to murmur at the course of the world, or the state of things, than to murmur at Providence; to complain of the seasons and weather, than to complain of God; but if these have no other cause but God and His providence, it is a poor distinction to say, that you are only angry at the things, but not at the cause and director of them.

How sacred the whole frame of the world is, how all things are to be considered as God's, and referred to him, is fully taught by our blessed Lord in the case of oaths: 'But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King; neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black';* that is, because the whiteness or blackness of thy hair is not thine, but God's.

Here you see all things in the whole order of nature; from the highest heavens to the smallest hair, are always to be considered, not separately as they are in themselves, but as in some relation to God. And if this be good reasoning, thou shalt not swear by the earth, a city, or thy hair, because these things are God's, and in a certain manner belong to him; is it not exactly the same reasoning to say, Thou shalt not murmur at the seasons of the earth, the states of cities, and the change of times, because all these things are in the hands of God, have him for their

* Matt. v. 36.

Author, are directed and governed by him to such ends, as are most suitable to his wise Providence?

If you think you can murmur at the state of things, without murmuring at Providence, or complain of seasons without complaining of God; hear what our blessed Lord says further upon oaths: 'Whoso shall swear by the altar, sweareth by it, and by 'all things thereon: And whoso shall swear by the temple, 'sweareth by him that dwelleth therein: And he that shall 'swear by heaven, sweareth by the throne of God, and by him 'that sitteth thereon.*

Now does not this Scripture plainly oblige us to reason after this manner, Whoso murmurs at the course of the world, murmurs at God that governs the course of the world. Whoso repines at seasons and weather, and speaks impatiently of times and events, repines and speaketh impatiently of God, who is the sole Lord and Governor of times, seasons, and events.

As therefore when we think of God himself, we are to have no sentiments but of praise and thanksgiving; so when we look at those things which are under the direction of God, and governed by his Providence, we are to receive them with the same tempers of praise and gratitude.

And though we are not to think all things right, and just, and lawful, which the Providence of God permits; for then nothing could be unjust, because nothing is without his permission; yet we must adore God in the greatest public calamities, the most grievous persecutions, as things that are suffered by God, like plagues and famines, for ends suitable to his wisdom and glory in the government of the world.

There is nothing more suitable to the piety of a reasonable creature, or the spirit of a Christian, than thus to approve, admire, and glorify God in all the acts of his general Providence; considering the whole world as his particular family, and all events as directed by his wisdom.

Everyone seems to consent to this, as an undeniable truth, That all things must be as God pleases; and is not this enough to make every man pleased with them himself? And how can a man be a peevish complainer of anything that is the effect of Providence, but by showing that his own self-will and self-wisdom, is of more weight with him, than the will and wisdom of God? And what can Religion be said to have done for a man, whose heart is in this state?

For if he cannot thank and praise God, as well in calamities and sufferings, as in prosperity and happiness, he is as far from the piety of a Christian, as he that only loves them that love him, is from the charity of a Christian. For to thank God only for such things as you like, is no more a proper act of piety, than to believe only what you see, is an act of faith.

Resignation and thanksgiving to God are only acts of piety, when they are acts of faith, trust, and confidence in the divine Goodness.

The faith of Abraham was an act of true piety, because it stopped at no difficulties, was not altered or lessened by any human appearances. It first of all carried him, against all show of happiness, from his own kindred and country, into a strange land, not knowing whither he went. It afterwards made him, against all appearances of nature, when his 'body was dead,' when he was about an hundred years old, depend upon the promise of God, 'being fully persuaded, that what God had promised, he was able to perform.' It was this same faith, that against so many pleas of nature, so many appearances of reason, prevailed upon him to 'offer up Isaac — accounting 'that God was able to raise him up from the dead.'*

Now this faith is the true pattern of Christian resignation to the divine pleasure; you are to thank and praise God, not only for things agreeable to you, that have the appearance of happiness and comfort; but when you are like Abraham, called from all appearances of comfort, to be a pilgrim in a strange land, to part with an only son; being as fully persuaded of the divine Goodness in all things that happen to you, as Abraham was of the divine promise, when there was the least appearance of its being performed.

This is true Christian resignation to God, which requires no more to the support of it, than such a plain assurance of the goodness of God, as Abraham had of his veracity. And if you ask yourself, what greater reason Abraham had to depend upon the divine Veracity, than you have to depend upon the divine Goodness, you will find that none can be given.

You cannot therefore look upon this as an unnecessary, high pitch of perfection, since the want of it implies the want, not of any high notions, but of a plain and ordinary faith in the most certain doctrines, both of natural and revealed religion.

Thus much concerning resignation to the divine Will, as it signifies a thankful approbation of God's general providence: It is now to be considered, as it signifies a thankful acceptance of God's particular providence over us.

Every man is to consider himself as a particular object of

* Heb xi. 17, 19.

God's providence ; under the same care and protection of God, as if the world had been made for him alone. It is not by chance that any man is born at such a time, of such parents, and in such a place and condition. It is as certain, that every soul comes into the body at such a time, and in such circumstances, by the express designment of God, according to some purposes of his will, and for some particular ends ; this is as certain, as that it is by the express designment of God, that some beings are Angels, and others are men.

It is as much by the counsel and eternal purpose of God, that you should be born in your particular state, and that Isaac should be the son of Abraham, as that Gabriel should be an Angel, and Isaac a man.

The Scriptures assure us, that it was by divine appointment, that our blessed Saviour was born at Bethlehem, and at such a time. Now although it was owing to the dignity of his person, and the great importance of his birth, that thus much of the divine counsel was declared to the world, concerning the time and manner of it ; yet we are as sure from the same Scriptures, that the time and manner of every man's coming into the world, is according to some eternal purposes and direction of Divine Providence, and in such time, and place, and circumstances, as are directed and governed by God, for particular ends of his wisdom and goodness.

This we are as certain of from plain revelation, as we can be of anything. For if we are told, that not a sparrow falleth to the ground without our heavenly Father ; can anything more strongly teach us, that much greater beings, such as human souls, come not into the world without the care and direction of our heavenly Father ? If it is said, the very hairs of your head are all numbered ; is it not to teach us, that nothing, not the smallest things imaginable, happen to us by chance ? But if the smallest things we can conceive, are declared to be under the divine direction, need we, or can we, be more plainly taught, that the greatest things of life, such as the manner of our coming into the world, our parents, the time, and other circumstances of our birth and condition, are all according to the eternal purposes, direction, and appointment of Divine Providence ?

When the disciples put this question to our blessed Lord, concerning the blind man, saying, 'Master, who did sin, this 'man, or his parents, that he was born blind ?' He that was the eternal wisdom of God, made this answer, 'Neither hath this 'man sinned, nor his parents ; but that the works of God should 'be made manifest in him.* Plainly declaring, that the particular circumstances of every man's birth, the body that he receives, and the condition and state of life into which he is born, are appointed by a secret Providence, which directs all things to their particular times and seasons, and manner of existence, that the wisdom and works of God may be made manifest in them all.

As therefore it is thus certain, that we are what we are, as to birth, time, and condition of entering into the world; since all that is particular in our state, is the effect of God's particular providence over us, and intended for some particular ends both of his glory and our own happiness, we are by the greatest obligations of gratitude, called upon to conform, and resign our will to the will of God in all these respects; thankfully approving and accepting everything that is particular in our state; praising and glorifying his name for our birth of such parents, and in such circumstances of state and condition; being fully assured, that it was for some reasons of infinite wisdom and goodness, that we were so born into such particular states of life.

If the man above-mentioned, was born blind, that the works of God might be manifested in him, had he not great reason to praise God, for appointing him in such a particular manner, to be the instrument of his Glory? And if one person is born here, and another there; if one falls amongst riches, and another into poverty; if one receives his flesh and blood from these parents, and another from those, for as particular ends, as the man was born blind; have not all people the greatest reason to bless God, and to be thankful for their particular state and condition, because all that is particular in it, is as directly intended for the glory of God, and their own good, as the particular blindness of that man, who was so born, that 'the works of God might be manifested in him'?

How noble an idea does this give us of the divine Omniscience presiding over the whole world, and governing such a long chain and combination of seeming accidents and chances, to the common and particular advantage of all beings? So that all persons, in such a wonderful variety of causes, accidents, and events, should all fall into such particular states, as were foreseen, and fore-ordained to their best advantage, and so as to be most serviceable to the wise and glorious ends of God's government of all the world.

Had you been anything else than what you are, you had, all things considered, been less wisely provided for than you are now; you had wanted some circumstances and conditions, that are best fitted to make you happy yourself, and serviceable to the glory of God.

Could you see all that which God sees, all that happy chain of causes and motives, which are to move and invite you to a right course of life, you would see something to make you like that state you are in, as fitter for you than any other.

But as you cannot see this, so it is here that your Christian faith and trust in God, is to exercise itself, and render you as grateful and thankful for the happiness of your state, as if you saw everything that contributes to it with your own eyes.

But now if this is the case of every man in the world, thus blessed with some particular state that is most convenient for him, how reasonable is it for every man, to will that which God has already willed for him ; and by a pious faith and trust in the divine goodness, thankfully adore and magnify that wise providence, which he is sure has made the best choice for him of those things, which he could not choose for himself.

Every uneasiness at our own state, is founded upon comparing it with that of other people. Which is full as unreasonable, as if a man in a dropsy should be angry at those that prescribe different things to him, from those which are prescribed to people in health. For all the different states of life, are like the different states of diseases, what is a remedy to one man in his state, may be poison to another.

So that to murmur because you are not as some others are, is as if a man in one disease, should murmur that he is not treated like him that is in another. Whereas if he was to have his will, he would be killed by that, which will prove the cure of another.

It is just thus in the various conditions of life ; if you give yourself up to uneasiness, or complain at anything in your state, you may, for aught you know, be so ungrateful to God, as to murmur at that very thing, which is to prove the cause of your salvation.

Had you it in your power to get that which you think is so grievous to want, it might perhaps be that very thing, which of all others, would most expose you to eternal damnation.

So that whether we consider the infinite goodness of God, that cannot choose amiss for us, or our own great ignorance of what is most advantageous to us, there can be nothing so reasonable and pious, as to have no will but that of God's, and desire nothing for ourselves, in our persons, our state, and condition, but that which the good providence of God appoints us.

Further, as the good providence of God thus introduces us into the world, into such states and conditions of life, as are most convenient for us, so the same unerring wisdom, orders all events and changes in the whole course of our lives, in such a manner, as to render them the fittest means to exercise and improve our virtue.

Nothing hurts us, nothing destroys us, but the ill-use of that liberty, with which God has entrusted us.

We are as sure that nothing happens to us by chance, as that the world itself was not made by chance ; we are as certain that all things happen, and work together for our good, as that God is goodness itself. So that a man has as much reason to will everything that happens to him, because God wills it, as to think that is wisest, which is directed by infinite wisdom.

This is not cheating, or soothing ourselves into any false content, or imaginary happiness ; but is a satisfaction grounded upon as great a certainty, as the being and attributes of God.

For if we are right in believing God to act over us with infinite wisdom and goodness, we cannot carry our notions of conformity and resignation to the divine will too high ; nor can we ever be deceived, by thinking that to be best for us, which God has brought upon us.

For the providence of God is not more concerned in the government of night and day, and the variety of seasons, than in the common course of events, that seem most to depend upon the mere wills of men. So that it is as strictly right, to look upon all worldly accidents and changes, all the various turns and alterations in your own life, to be as truly the effects of Divine Providence, as the rising and setting of the Sun, or the alterations of the seasons of the year. As you are therefore always to adore the wisdom of God in the direction of these things ; so it is the same reasonable duty, always to magnify God, as an equal Director of everything that happens to you in the course of your own life.

This holy resignation and conformity of your will to the will of God, being so much the true state of piety, I hope you will think it proper to make this hour of prayer, a constant season of applying to God for so great a gift : That by thus constantly praying for it, your heart may be habitually disposed towards it, and always in a state of readiness to look at everything as God's, and to consider him in everything ; that so everything that befalls you, may be received in the spirit of piety, and made a means of exercising some virtue.

There is nothing that so powerfully governs the heart, that so strongly excites us to wise and reasonable actions, as a true sense of God's presence. But as we cannot see, or apprehend the essence of God, so nothing will so constantly keep us under a lively sense of the presence of God, as this holy resignation, which attributes everything to him, and receives everything as from him.

Could we see a miracle from God, how would our thoughts be affected with an holy awe and veneration of his presence! But if we consider everything as God's doing, either by order or permission, we shall then be affected with common things, as they would be who saw a miracle.

For as there is nothing to affect you in a miracle, but as it is the action of God, and bespeaks his presence; so when you consider God, as acting in all things, and all events, then all things will become venerable to you, like miracles, and fill you with the same awful sentiments of the divine presence.

Now you must not reserve the exercise of this pious temper, to any particular times or occasions, or fancy how resigned you will be to God, if such or such trials should happen. For this is amusing yourself with the notion or idea of resignation, instead of the virtue itself.

Do not therefore please yourself with thinking, how piously you would act and submit to God in a plague, a famine, or persecution, but be intent upon the perfection of the present day; and be assured, that the best way of showing a true zeal, is to make little things the occasion of great piety.

Begin therefore in the smallest matters, and most ordinary occasions, and accustom your mind to the daily exercise of this pious temper, in the lowest occurrences of life. And when a contempt, an affront, a little injury, loss, or disappointment, or the smallest events of every day, continually raise your mind to God in proper acts of resignation, then you may justly hope, that you shall be numbered amongst those that are resigned and thankful to God in the greatest trials and afflictions.

Chapter XXIII.

Of Evening prayer. Of the nature and necessity of examination. How we are to be particular in the confession of all our sins. How we are to fill our minds with a just horror and dread of all sin.

I AM now come to six o'clock in the evening, which, according to the Scripture account, is called the twelfth, or last hour of the day. This is a time so proper for Devotion, that I suppose nothing need be said to recommend it, as a season of prayer to all people that profess any regard to piety.

As the labour and action of every state of life, is generally over at this hour, so this is the proper time for everyone to call himself to account, and review all his behaviour, from the first action of the day. The necessity of this examination, is founded upon the necessity of repentance. For if it be necessary to repent of all our sins, if the guilt of unrepented sins still continue upon us, then it is necessary, not only that all our sins, but the particular circumstances and aggravations of them, be known and recollected, and brought to repentance.

The Scripture saith, 'If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.*' Which is as much as to say, that then only our sins are forgiven, and we cleansed from the guilt and unrighteousness of them, when they are thus confessed, and repented of.

There seems therefore to be the greatest necessity, that all our daily actions be constantly observed, and brought to account, lest by a negligence we load ourselves with the guilt of unrepented sins.

This examination therefore of ourselves every evening, is not only to be considered as a commendable rule, and fit for a wise man to observe, but as something that is as necessary, as a daily confession and repentance of our sins; because this daily repentance is of very little significancy, and loses all its chief benefit, unless it be a particular confession and repentance of the sins of that day. This examination is necessary to repentance, in the same manner as time is necessary; you cannot repent or express your sorrow, unless you allow some time for it; nor can you repent, but so far as you know what it is that you are repenting of. So that when it is said, that it is necessary to examine and call your actions to account; it is only saying, that it is necessary to know what, and how many things you are to repent of.

You perhaps have hitherto only used yourself to confess yourself a sinner in general, and ask forgiveness in the gross, without any particular remembrance, or contrition for the particular sins of that day. And by this practice you are brought to believe, that the same short, general form of confession of sin in general, is a sufficient repentance for every day.

Suppose another person should hold, that a confession of our sins in general once at the end of every week was sufficient; and that it was as well to confess the sins of seven days altogether, as to have a particular repentance at the end of every day.

I know you sufficiently see the unreasonableness and impiety of this opinion, and that you think it is easy enough so show the danger and folly of it.

* 1 John i. 9.

Yet you cannot bring one argument against such an opinion, but what will be as good an argument against such a daily repentance, as does not call the particular sins of that day to a strict account.

For as you can bring no express text or Scripture against such an opinion, but must take all your arguments, from the nature of repentance, and the necessity of a particular repentance for particular sins, so every argument of that kind, must as fully prove the necessity, of being very particular in our repentance of the sins of every day. Since nothing can be justly said against leaving the sins of the whole week to be repented for in the gross, but what may as justly be said against a daily repentance, which considers the sins of that day only in the gross.

Would you tell such a man, that a daily confession was necessary to keep up an abhorrence of sin, that the mind would grow hardened and senseless of the guilt of sin without it? And is not this as good a reason for requiring, that your daily repentance be very express and particular for your daily sins? For if confession is to raise an abhorrence of sin, surely that confession which considers and lays open your particular sins, that brings them to light with all their circumstances and aggravations, that requires a particular sorrowful acknowledgment of every sin, must in a much greater degree fill the mind with an abhorrence of sin, than that which only, in one and the same form of words, confesses you only to be a sinner in general. For as this is nothing but what the greatest Saint may justly say of himself, so the daily repeating of only such a confession, has nothing in it to make you truly ashamed of your own way of life.

Again; must you not tell such a man, that by leaving himself to such a weekly, general confession, he would be in great danger of forgetting a great many of his sins? But is there any sense or force in this argument, unless you suppose that our sins are all to be remembered, and brought to a particular repentance? And is it not necessary, that our particular sins be not forgotten, but particularly remembered in our daily, as in a repentance at any other time?

So that every argument for a daily confession and repentance, is the same argument for the confession and repentance of the particular sins of every day.

Because daily confession has no other reason or necessity, but our daily sins; and therefore is nothing of what it should be, but so far as it is a repentance and sorrowful acknowledgment of the sins of the day.

You would, I suppose, think yourself chargeable with great impiety, if you were to go to bed without confessing yourself to be a sinner and asking pardon of God ; you would not think it sufficient that you did so yesterday. And yet if without any regard to the present day, you only repeat the same form of words that you used yesterday, the sins of the present day may justly be looked upon to have had no repentance. For if the sins of the present day require a new confession, it must be such a new confession as is proper to itself. For it is the state and condition of every day, that is to determine the state and manner of your repentance in the evening ; otherwise the same general form of words is rather an empty formality, that has the appearance of a duty, than such a true performance of it, as is necessary to make it truly useful to you.

Let it be supposed, that on a certain day you have been guilty of these sins ; that you have told a vain lie upon yourself, ascribing something falsely to yourself through pride ; that you have been guilty of detraction, and indulged yourself in some degree of intemperance. Let it be supposed, that on the next day you have lived in a contrary manner ; that you have neglected no duty of devotion, and been the rest of the day innocently employed, in your proper business. Let it be supposed, that on the evening of both these days you only use the same confession in general, considering it rather as a duty that is to be performed every night, than as a repentance that is to be suited to the particular state of the day.

Can it with any reason be said, that each day has had its proper repentance ? Is it not as good sense to say, there is no difference in the guilt of these days, as to say that there need be no different repentance at the end of them ? Or how can each of them have its proper repentance, but by its having a repentance as large and extensive, and particular as the guilt of each day ?

Again, let it be supposed, that in that day, when you had been guilty of the three notorious sins above-mentioned, that in your evening repentance, you had only called one of them to mind. Is it not plain, that the other two are unrepented of, and that therefore their guilt still abides upon you ? So that you are then in the state of him, who commits himself to the night without the repentance for such a day, as had betrayed him into two such great sins.

Now these are not needless particulars, or such scrupulous niceties, as a man need not trouble himself about ; but are such plain truths, as essentially concern the very life of piety. For if repentance is necessary, it is full as necessary that it be rightly performed, and in due manner.

And I have entered into all these particulars, only to show you in the plainest manner, that examination, and a careful review of all the actions of the Day, is not only to be looked upon as a good rule, but as something as necessary as repentance itself.

If a man is to account for his expenses at night, can it be thought a needless exactness in him, to take notice of every particular expense in the Day?

And if a man is to repent of his sins at night, can it be thought too great a piece of scrupulosity in him, to know and call to mind what sins he is to repent of?

Further; though it should be granted, that a confession in general may be a sufficient repentance for the end of such days, as have only the unavoidable frailties of our nature to lament; yet even this fully proves the absolute necessity of this self-examination: for without this examination, who can know that he has gone through any day in this manner?

Again: An evening repentance, which thus brings all the actions of the day to account, is not only necessary to wipe off the guilt of sin, but is also the most certain way to amend and perfect our lives.

For it is only such a repentance as this, that touches the heart, awakens the conscience, and leaves an horror and detestation of sin upon the mind.

For instance, If it should happen, that upon any particular evening, all that you could charge yourself with should be this, viz., a hasty, negligent performance of your devotions, or too much time spent in an impertinent conversation; if the unreasonableness of these things were fully reflected upon, and acknowledged; if you were then to condemn yourself before God for them, and implore his pardon and assisting grace, what could be so likely a means, to prevent your falling into the same faults the next day?

Or if you should fall into them again the next day; yet if they were again brought to the same examination, and condemnation in the presence of God, their happening again, would be such a proof to you of your own folly and weakness, would cause such a pain and remorse in your mind, and fill you with such shame and confusion at yourself, as would, in all probability, make you exceedingly desirous of greater perfection.

Now in the case of repeated sins, this would be the certain benefit, that we should receive from this examination and confession; the mind would thereby be made humble, full of sorrow and deep compunction, and, by degrees, forced into amendment.

Whereas a formal, general confession, that is only considered as an evening duty, that overlooks the particular mistakes of the day, and is the same, whether the day be spent ill or well, has little or no effect upon the mind; a man may use such a daily confession, and yet go on sinning and confessing all his life, without any remorse of mind, or true desire of amendment.

For if your own particular sins are left out of your confession, your confessing of sin in general, has no more effect upon your mind, than if you had only confessed, that all men in general are *sinner*s. And there is nothing in any confession to show that it is yours, but so far as it is a self-accusation, not of sin in general, or such as is common to all others, but of such particular sins, as are your own proper shame and reproach.

No other confession, but such as thus discovers and accuses your own particular guilt, can be an act of true sorrow, or real concern at your own condition. And a confession that is without this sorrow and compunction of heart, has nothing in it, either to atone for past sins, or to produce in us any true reformation and amendment of life.

To proceed: In order to make this examination still further beneficial, every man should oblige himself to a certain method in it. As every man has something particular in his nature, stronger inclinations to some vices than others, some infirmities that stick closer to him, and harder to be conquered than others; and as it is as easy for every man to know this of himself, as to know whom he likes or dislikes; so it is highly necessary, that these particularities of our natures and tempers, should never escape a severe trial at our evening repentance: I say, a severe trial, because nothing but a rigorous severity against these natural tempers, is sufficient to conquer them.

They are the right eyes, that are not to be spared; but to be plucked out and cast from us. For as they are the infirmities of nature, so they have the strength of nature, and must be treated with great opposition, or they will soon be too strong for us.

He therefore who knows himself most of all subject to anger and passion, must be very exact and constant in his examination of this temper every evening. He must find out every slip that he has made of that kind, whether in thought, or word, or action; he must shame, and reproach, and accuse himself before God, for everything that he has said or done in obedience to his passion. He must no more allow himself to forget the examination of this temper, than to forget his whole prayers.

Again: If you find that vanity is your prevailing temper, that is always putting you upon the adornment of your person, and catching after everything that compliments or flatters your abilities, never spare or forget this temper in your evening examination; but confess to God every vanity of thought, or word, or action, that you have been guilty of, and put yourself to all the shame and confusion for it that you can.

In this manner, should all people act with regard to their chief frailty, to which their nature most inclines them. And though it should not immediately do all that they would wish, yet by a constant practice, it would certainly in a short time produce its desired effect.

Further: As all states and employments of life have their particular dangers and temptations, and expose people more to some sins than others, so every man that wishes his own improvement, should make it a necessary part of his evening examination, to consider how he has avoided, or fallen into such sins, as are most common to his state of life.

For as our business and condition of life has great power over us, so nothing but such watchfulness at this, can secure us from those temptations to which it daily exposes us.

The poor man, from his condition of life, is always in danger of repining and uneasiness; the rich man is most exposed to sensuality and indulgence; the tradesman to lying and unreasonable gains; the scholar to pride and vanity; so that in every state of life, a man should always, in his examination of himself, have a strict eye upon those faults, to which his state of life most of all exposes him.

Again: As it is reasonable to suppose, that every good man has entered into, or at least proposed to himself some method of holy living, and set himself some such rules to observe, as are not common to other people, and only known to himself: so it should be a constant part of his night recollection, to examine how, and in what degree, he has observed them, and to reproach himself before God, for every neglect of them.

By rules, I here mean, such rules as relate to the well-ordering of our time, and the business of our common life: Such rules as prescribe a certain order to all that we are to do, our business, devotion, mortifications, readings, retirements, conversation, meals, refreshments, sleep, and the like.

Now as good rules relating to all these things, are certain means of great improvement, and such as all serious Christians must needs propose to themselves, so they will hardly ever be observed to any purpose, unless they are made the constant subject of our evening examination.

Lastly, You are not to content yourself with a hasty general review of the day, but you must enter upon it with deliberation; begin with the first action of the day, and proceed step by step, through every particular matter that you have been concerned in, and so let no time, place, or action be overlooked.

An examination thus managed, will in a little time make you as different from yourself, as a wise man is different from an idiot. It will give you such a newness of mind, such a spirit of wisdom, and desire of perfection, as you were an entire stranger to before.

Thus much concerning the evening examination.

I proceed now to lay before you such considerations, as may fill your mind with a just dread and horror of all sin, and help you to confess your own, in the most passionate contrition and sorrow of heart.

Consider first, how odious all sin is to God, what a mighty baseness it is, and how abominable it renders sinners in the sight of God. That it is sin alone that makes the great difference betwixt an angel, and the devil; and that every sinner is, so far as he sins, a friend of the devil's, and carrying on his work against God. That sin is a greater blemish and defilement of the soul, than any filth or disease is a defilement of the body. And to be content to live in sin, is a much greater baseness, than to desire to wallow in the mire, or love any bodily impurity.

Consider how you must abhor a creature, that delighted in nothing but filth and nastiness, that hated everything that was decent and clean; and let this teach you to apprehend, how odious that soul that delights in nothing but the impurity of sin, must appear unto God.

For all sins, whether of sensuality, pride, or falseness, or any other irregular passion, are nothing else but the filth, and impure diseases of the rational soul. And all righteousness is nothing else but the purity, the decency, the beauty and perfection of that spirit, which is made in the image of God.

Again: Learn what horror you ought to have for the guilt of sin, from the greatness of that atonement which has been made for it.

God made the world by the breath of his mouth, by a word speaking, but the redemption of the world has been a work of longer labour.

How easily God can create beings, we learn from the first chapter of Genesis; but how difficult it is for infinite mercy to forgive sins, we learn from that costly atonement, those bloody sacrifices, those pains and penances, those sicknesses and deaths, which all must be undergone, before the guilty sinner is fit to appear in the presence of God.

Ponder these great truths: That the Son of God was forced to become man, to be partaker of all our infirmities, to undergo a poor, painful, miserable, and contemptible life, to be persecuted, hated, and at last nailed to a Cross, that by such sufferings, he might render God propitious to that nature in which he suffered.

That all the bloody sacrifices and atonements of the Jewish Law, were to represent the necessity of this great sacrifice, and the great Displeasure God bore to sinners.

That the world is still under the curse of sin, and certain marks of God's displeasure at it; such as famines, plagues, tempests, sickness, diseases and death.

Consider that all the sons of Adam are to go through a painful, sickly life, denying and mortifying their natural appetites, and crucifying the lusts of the flesh, in order to have a share in the atonement of our Saviour's death.

That all their penances and self-denials, all their tears and repentance, are only made available by that great Intercession, which is still making for them at the right hand of God.

Consider these great truths; that this mysterious redemption, all these sacrifices and sufferings, both of God and man, are only to remove the guilt of sin; and then let this teach you, with what tears and contrition, you ought to purge yourself from it.

After this general consideration of the guilt of sin, which has done so much mischief to your nature, and exposed it to so great punishment, and made it so odious to God, that nothing less than so great an atonement of the Son of God, and so great repentance of our own, can restore us to the divine favour.

Consider next your own particular share in the guilt of sin. And if you would know with what zeal you ought to repent yourself, consider how you would exhort another sinner to repentance; and what repentance and amendment you would expect from him, whom you judged to be the greatest sinner in the world.

Now this case, every man may justly reckon to be his own. And you may fairly look upon yourself to be the greatest sinner that you know in the world.

For though you may know abundance of people to be guilty of some gross sins, with which you cannot charge yourself, yet you may justly condemn yourself, as the greatest sinner that you know. And that for these following reasons:

First, Because you know more of the folly of your own heart, than you do of other people's; and can charge yourself with various sins, that you only know of yourself, and cannot be sure that other sinners are guilty of them. So that as you know more of the folly, the baseness, the pride, the deceitfulness and negligence of your own heart, than you do of anyone's else, so you have just reason to consider yourself as the greatest sinner that you know: Because you know more of the greatness of your own sins, than you do of other people's.

Secondly, The greatness of our guilt arises chiefly, from the greatness of God's goodness towards us, from the particular graces and blessings, the favours, the lights, and instructions, that we have received from him.

Now as these graces and blessings, and the multitude of God's favours towards us, are the great aggravations of our sins against God, so they are only known to ourselves. And therefore every sinner knows more of the aggravations of his own guilt, than he does of other people's; and consequently may justly look upon himself to be the greatest sinner that he knows.

How good God has been to other sinners, what light and instruction he has vouchsafed to them; what blessings and graces they have received from him; how often he has touched their hearts with holy inspirations, you cannot tell. But all this you know of yourself, therefore you know greater aggravations of your own guilt, and are able to charge yourself with greater ingratitude, than you can charge upon other people.

And this is the reason, why the greatest saints have in all ages condemned themselves as the greatest sinners, because they knew some aggravations of their own sins, which they could not know of other people's.

The right way therefore to fill your heart with true contrition, and a deep sense of your own sins, is this: You are not to consider, or compare the outward form, or course of your life, with that of other people's, and then think yourself to be less sinful than they, because the outward course of your life is less sinful than theirs.

But in order to know your own guilt, you must consider your own particular circumstances, your health, your sickness, your youth, or age, your particular calling, the happiness of your education, the degrees of light and instruction that you have received, the good men that you have conversed with, the admonitions that you have had, the good books that you have read, the numberless multitude of divine blessings, graces, and favours that you have received, the good motions of grace that you have resisted, the resolutions of amendment that you have often broken, and the checks of conscience that you have disregarded.

For it is from these circumstances, that everyone is to state the measure and greatness of his own guilt. And as you know only these circumstances of your own sins, so you must necessarily know how to charge yourself with higher degrees of guilt, than you can charge upon other people.

God Almighty knows greater sinners, it may be, than you are; because he sees and knows the circumstances of all men's sins: But your own heart, if it is faithful to you, can discover no guilt so great as your own; because it can only see in you those circumstances, on which great part of the guilt of sin is founded.

You may see sins in other people, that you cannot charge upon yourself; but then you know a number of circumstances of your own guilt, that you cannot lay to their Charge.

And perhaps that person that appears at such a distance from your virtue, and so odious in your eyes, would have been much better than you are, had he been altogether in your circumstances, and received all the same favours and graces from God that you have.

This is a very humbling reflection, and very proper for those people to make, who measure their virtue, by comparing the outward course of their lives with that of other people's.

For look at whom you will, however different from you in his way of life, yet you can never know, that he has resisted so much divine grace as you have, or that in all your circumstances, he would not have been much truer to his duty than you are.

Now this is the reason why I desired you to consider, how you would exhort that man to confess and bewail his sins, whom you looked upon to be one of the greatest sinners.

Because if you will deal justly, you must fix the charge at home, and look no further than yourself. For God has given no one any power of knowing the true greatness of any sins, but his own: and therefore the greatest sinner that everyone knows, is himself.

You may easily see, how such a one in the outward course of his life breaks the laws of God; but then you can never say, that had you been exactly in all his circumstances, that you should not have broken them more than he has done.

A serious and frequent reflection upon these things, will mightily tend to humble us in our own eyes, make us very apprehensive of the greatness of our own guilt, and very tender in censuring and condemning other people.

For who would dare to be severe against other people, when, for ought he can tell, the severity of God may be more due to him, than to them? Who would exclaim against the guilt of others, when he considers that he knows more of the greatness of his own guilt, than he does of theirs?

How often you have resisted God's holy Spirit; how many motives to goodness you have disregarded; how many particular blessings you have sinned against; how many good resolutions you have broken; how many checks and admonitions of conscience you have stifled, you very well know: But how often this has been the case of other sinners, you know not. And therefore the greatest sinner that you know, must be yourself.

Whenever therefore you are angry at sin or sinners, whenever you read or think of God's indignation and wrath at wicked men, let this teach you to be the most severe in your censure, and most humble and contrite in the acknowledgment and confession of your own sins, because you know of no sinner equal to yourself.

Lastly, to conclude this chapter : Having thus examined and confessed your sins at this hour of the evening, you must afterwards look upon yourself, as still obliged to betake yourself to prayer again, just before you go to bed.

The subject that is most proper for your prayers at that time, is death. Let your prayers therefore, then be wholly upon it, reckoning up all the dangers, uncertainties, and terrors of death ; let them contain everything, that can affect and awaken your mind into just apprehensions of it. Let your petitions be all for right sentiments of the approach and importance of death ; and beg of God, that your mind may be possessed with such a sense of its nearness, that you may have it always in your thoughts, do everything as in sight of it, and make every day, a day of preparation for it.

Represent to your imagination, that your bed is your grave ; that all things are ready for your interment ; that you are to have no more to do with this world ; and that it will be owing to God's great Mercy, if you ever see the light of the Sun again, or have another day to add to your works of piety.

And then commit yourself to sleep, as into the hands of God ; as one that is to have no more opportunities of doing good ; but is to awake amongst spirits that are separate from the body, and waiting for the judgment of the last great day.

Such a solemn resignation of yourself into the hands of God every evening, and parting with all the world, as if you were never to see it any more, and all this in the silence and darkness of the night, is a practice that will soon have excellent effects upon your spirit.

For this time of the night is exceeding proper for such prayers, and meditations ; and the likeness which sleep and darkness have to death, will contribute very much, to make your thoughts about it the more deep and affecting. So that I hope, you will not let a time, so proper for such prayers, be ever passed over without them.

Chapter XXIV.

The Conclusion. Of the Excellency and Greatness of a devout Spirit.

I HAVE now finished what I intended in this Treatise. I have explained the nature of devotion, both as it signifies a life devoted to God, and as it signifies a regular method of daily prayer. I have now only to add a word or two, in recommendation of a life governed by this spirit of devotion.

For though it is as reasonable to suppose it the desire of all Christians to arrive at Christian Perfection, as to suppose, that all sick men desire to be restored to perfect health; yet experience shows us, that nothing wants more to be pressed, repeated, and forced upon our minds, than the plainest rules of Christianity.

Voluntary poverty, virginity, and devout retirement, have been here recommended, as things not necessary, yet highly beneficial to those that would make the way to perfection the most easy and certain. But Christian perfection itself is tied to no particular form of life; but is to be attained, though not with the same ease, in every state of life.

This has been fully asserted in another place; where it has been shown, that Christian perfection calls no one (necessarily) *to a Cloister, but to the full performance of those duties, which are necessary for all Christians, and common to all states of life.

So that the whole of the matter is plainly this: Virginity, voluntary poverty, and such other restraints of lawful things, are not necessary to Christian perfection; but are much to be commended in those, who choose them as helps and means of a more safe and speedy arrival at it.

It is only in this manner, and in this sense, that I would recommend any particularity of life; not as if perfection consisted in it, but because of its great tendency to produce and support the true spirit of Christian perfection.

But the thing which is here pressed upon all, is a life of great and strict devotion; which, I think, has been sufficiently shown to be equally the duty and happiness of all orders of men. Neither is there anything in any particular state of life, that can be justly pleaded as a reason for any abatements of a devout spirit.

But because in this polite age of ours, we have so lived away the spirit of devotion, that many seem afraid even to be suspected of it, imagining great devotion to be great bigotry; that it is founded in ignorance and poorness of spirit, and that little, weak, and dejected minds, are generally the greatest proficient in it:

It shall here be fully shown, that great devotion is the noblest temper of the greatest and noblest souls; and that they who think it receives any advantage from ignorance and poorness of spirit, are themselves not a little, but entirely ignorant of the nature of devotion, the nature of God, and the nature of themselves.

People of fine parts and learning or of great knowledge in worldly matters, may perhaps think it hard to have their want of devotion charged upon their ignorance. But if they will be content to be tried by Reason and Scripture, it may soon be made appear, that a want of devotion, wherever it is, either amongst the learned or unlearned, is founded in gross ignorance, and the greatest blindness and insensibility that can happen to a rational creature.

And that devotion is so far from being the effect of a little and dejected mind, that it must and will be always highest in the most perfect natures.

And first, Who reckons it a sign of a poor, little mind, for a man to be full of reverence and duty to his parents, to have the truest love and honour for his friend, or to excel in the highest instances of gratitude to his benefactor?

Are not these tempers in the highest degree, in the most exalted and perfect minds?

And yet what is high devotion, but the highest exercise of these tempers, of duty, reverence, love, honour, and gratitude to the amiable, glorious parent, friend, and benefactor of all mankind?

Is it a true greatness of mind, to reverence the authority of your parents, to fear the displeasure of your friend, to dread the reproaches of your benefactor? and must not this fear, and dread, and reverence, be much more just, and reasonable, and honourable, when they are in the highest degree towards God?

Now as the higher these tempers are, the more are they esteemed amongst men, and are allowed to be so much the greater proofs of a true greatness of mind; so the higher and greater these same tempers are towards God, so much the more do they prove the nobility, excellence, and greatness of the mind.

So that so long as duty to parents, love to friends, and gratitude to benefactors, are thought great and honourable tempers; devotion, which is nothing else but duty, love, and gratitude to God, must have the highest place amongst our highest virtues.

If a Prince, out of his mere goodness, should send you a pardon by one of his slaves, would you think it a part of your duty to receive the slave with marks of love, esteem, and gratitude for his great kindness, in bringing you so great a gift ; and at the same time think it a meanness and poorness of spirit, to show love, esteem, and gratitude to the Prince, who of his own goodness freely sent you the pardon ?

And yet this would be as reasonable, as to suppose, that love, esteem, honour, and gratitude, are noble tempers, and instances of a great soul, when they are paid to our fellow-creatures ; but the effects of a poor, ignorant, dejected mind, when they are paid to God.

Further ; that part of devotion which expresses itself in sorrowful confessions, and penitential tears of a broken and contrite heart, is very far from being any sign of a little and ignorant mind.

For who does not acknowledge it an instance of an ingenuous, generous, and brave mind, to acknowledge a fault, and ask pardon for any offence ? And are not the finest and most improved minds, the most remarkable for this excellent temper ?

Is it not also allowed, that the ingenuity and excellence of a man's spirit is much shown, when his sorrow and indignation at himself rises in proportion to the folly of his crime, and the goodness and greatness of the person he has offended ?

Now if things are thus, then the greater any man's mind is, the more he knows of God and himself, the more will he be disposed to prostrate himself before God, in all the humblest acts and expressions of repentance.

And the greater the ingenuity, the generosity, judgment, and penetration of his mind is, the more will he exercise and indulge a passionate, tender sense of God's just displeasure ; and the more he knows of the greatness, the goodness, and perfection of the divine nature, the fuller of shame and confusion will he be at his own sins and ingratitude.

And on the other hand, the more dull and ignorant any soul is, the more base and ungenerous it naturally is, the more senseless it is of the goodness and purity of God ; so much the more averse will it be to all acts of humble confession and repentance.

Devotion therefore is so far from being best suited to little ignorant minds, that a true elevation of soul, a lively sense of honour, and great knowledge of God and ourselves, are the greatest natural helps that our devotion hath.

And on the other hand, it shall here be made appear by variety of arguments, that indevoition is founded in the most excessive ignorance.

And, First, Our blessed Lord, and his Apostles, were eminent instances of great and frequent devotion. Now if we will grant, (as all Christians must grant) that their great devotion was founded in a true knowledge of the nature of devotion, the nature of God, and the nature of man; then it is plain, that all those that are insensible of the duty of devotion, are in this excessive state of ignorance, they neither know God, nor themselves, nor devotion.

For if a right knowledge in these three respects, produces great devotion, as in the case of our Saviour and his Apostles, then a neglect of devotion must be chargeable upon ignorance.

Again; how comes it that most people have recourse to devotion, when they are in sickness, distress, or fear of death? Is it not because this state shows them more of the want of God, and their own weakness, than they perceive at other times? Is it not because their infirmities, their approaching end, convince them of something, which they did not half perceive before?

Now if devotion at these seasons, is the effect of a better knowledge of God, and ourselves, then the neglect of devotion at other times, is always owing to great ignorance of God, and ourselves.

Further; as indevotion is ignorance, so it is the most shameful ignorance, and such as is to be charged with the greatest folly.

This will fully appear to anyone that considers, by what rules we are to judge of the excellency of any knowledge, or the shamefulness of any ignorance.

Now knowledge itself would be no excellence, nor ignorance any reproach to us, but that we are rational creatures.

But if this be true, then it follows plainly, that that knowledge which is most suitable to our rational nature, and which most concerns us, as such, to know, is our highest, finest knowledge; and that ignorance which relates to things that are most essential to us, as rational creatures, and which we are most concerned to know, is, of all others, the most gross and shameful ignorance.

If therefore there be any things that concern us more than others, if there be any truths that are more to us than all others, he that has the fullest knowledge of these things, that sees these truths in the clearest, strongest light, has, of all others, as a rational creature, the clearest understanding, and the strongest parts.

If therefore our relation to God be our greatest relation, if our advancement in his favour be our highest advancement, he that has the highest notions of the excellency of this relation, he that most strongly perceives the highest worth, and great value of holiness and virtue, that judges everything little, when compared with it, proves himself to be master of the best, and most excellent knowledge.

If a Judge had fine skill in painting, architecture, and music, but at the same time had gross and confused notions of equity, and a poor, dull apprehension of the value of justice, who would scruple to reckon him a poor ignorant Judge?

If a Bishop should be a man of great address and skill in the arts of preferment, and understanding how to raise and enrich his family in the world, but should have no taste or sense of the maxims and principles of the saints and fathers of the Church; if he did not conceive the holy nature, and great obligations of his calling, and judge it better to be crucified to the world, than to live idly in pomp and splendour, who would scruple to charge such a Bishop with want of understanding?

If we do not judge, and pronounce after this manner, our reason and judgment are but empty sounds.

But now, if a Judge is to be reckoned ignorant, if he does not feel and perceive the value, and worth of justice; if a Bishop is to be looked upon as void of understanding, if he is more experienced in other things, than in the exalted virtues of his Apostolical calling; then all common Christians are to be looked upon as more or less knowing, accordingly as they know more or less of those great things, which are the common and greatest concern of all Christians.

If a Gentleman should fancy that the Moon is no bigger than it appears to the eye, that it shines with its own light, that all the Stars are only so many spots of light; if after reading books of Astronomy, he should still continue in the same opinion, most people would think he had but a poor apprehension.

But if the same person should think it better to provide for a short life here, than to prepare for a glorious eternity hereafter, that it was better to be rich, than to be eminent in piety, his ignorance and dulness would be too great to be compared to anything else.

There is no knowledge that deserves so much as the name of it, but that which we call judgment.

And that is the most clear and improved understanding, which judges best of the value and worth of things. All the rest is but the capacity of an animal, it is but mere seeing and hearing.

And there is no excellence of any knowledge in us, till we exercise our judgment, and judge well of the value and worth of things.

If a man had eyes that could see beyond the Stars, or pierce into the heart of the earth, but could not see the things that were before him, or discern anything that was serviceable to him, we should reckon that he had but a very bad sight.

If another had ears that received sounds from the world in the Moon, but could hear nothing that was said or done upon earth, we should look upon him as bad as deaf.

In like manner, if a man has a memory that can retain a great many things; if he has a wit that is sharp and acute in arts and sciences, or an imagination that can wander agreeably in fictions, but has a dull, poor apprehension of his duty and relation to God, of the value of piety, or the worth of moral virtue, he may very justly be reckoned to have a bad understanding. He is but like the man, that can only see and hear such things as are of no benefit to him.

As certain therefore as piety, virtue, and eternal happiness are of the most concern to man, as certain as the immortality of our nature, and relation to God, are the most glorious circumstances of our nature, so certain is it, that he who dwells most in contemplation of them, whose heart is most affected with them, who sees furthest into them, who best comprehends the value and excellency of them, who judges all worldly attainments to be mere bubbles and shadows, in comparison of them, proves himself to have of all others, the finest understanding, and the strongest judgment.

And if we do not reason after this manner, or allow this method of reasoning, we have no arguments to prove, that there is any such thing as a wise man, or a fool.

For a man is proved to be a natural, not because he wants any of his senses, or is incapable of everything, but because he has no judgment, and is entirely ignorant of the worth and value of things. He will perhaps choose a fine coat rather than a large estate.

And as the essence of stupidity consists in the entire want of judgment, in an ignorance of the value of things, so on the other hand, the essence of wisdom and knowledge must consist in the excellency of our judgment, or in the knowledge of the worth and value of things.

This therefore is an undeniable proof, that he who knows most of the value of the best things, who judges, most rightly of the things which are of most concern to him, who had rather have his soul in a state of Christian perfection, than the greatest share of worldly happiness, has the highest wisdom, and is at the furthest distance from men that are naturals, than any knowledge can place him.

On the other hand, he that can talk the learned languages, and repeat a great deal of History, but prefers the indulgence of his body to the purity and perfection of his soul, who is more concerned to get a name, or an estate here, than to live in eternal glory hereafter, is in the nearest state to that natural, who chooses a painted coat, rather than a large estate.

He is not called a natural by men, but he must appear to God, and heavenly Beings, as in a more excessive state of stupidity, and will sooner or later certainly appear so to himself.

But now if this be undeniably plain, that we cannot prove a man to be a fool, but by showing that he has no knowledge of things that are good and evil to himself, then it is undeniably plain, that we cannot prove a man to be wise, but by showing that he has the fullest knowledge of things, that are his greatest good, and his greatest evil.

If therefore God be our greatest good; if there can be no good but in his favour, nor any evil but in departing from him, then it is plain, that he who judges it the best thing he can do to please God to the utmost of his power, who worships and adores him with all his heart and soul, who had rather have a pious mind, than all the dignities and honours in the world, shows himself to be in the highest state of human wisdom.

To proceed; we know how our blessed Lord acted in an human body; it was 'his meat and drink, to do the will of his Father 'which is in heaven.'

And if any number of heavenly spirits, were to leave their habitations in the light of God, and be for a while united to human bodies, they would certainly tend towards God in all their actions, and be as heavenly as they could, in a state of flesh and blood.

They would certainly act in this manner, because they would know that God was the only good of all spirits; and that whether they were in the body, or out of the body, in heaven, or on earth, they must have every degree of their greatness and happiness from God alone.

All human spirits, therefore, the more exalted they are, the more they know their divine Original, the nearer they come to heavenly spirits; by so much the more will they live to God in all their actions, and make their whole life a state of devotion.

Devotion, therefore, is the greatest sign of a great and noble genius, it supposes a soul in its highest state of knowledge; and none but little and blinded minds, that are sunk into ignorance and vanity, are destitute of it.

If an human spirit, should imagine some mighty Prince to be greater than God, we should take it for a poor, ignorant creature; all people would acknowledge such an imagination to be the height of stupidity.

But if this same human spirit, should think it better to be devoted to some mighty Prince, than to be devoted to God, would not this still be a greater proof of a poor, ignorant, and blinded nature?

Yet this is what all people do, who think anything better, greater, or wiser, than a devout life.

So that which way soever we consider this matter, it plainly appears, that devotion is an instance of great judgment, of an elevated nature; and the want of devotion is a certain proof of the want of understanding.

The greatest spirits of the heathen world, such as Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Epictetus, Marcus Antoninus, &c., owed all their greatness to the spirit of devotion.

They were full of God; their wisdom and deep contemplations tended only to deliver men from the vanity of the world, the slavery of bodily passions, that they might act as spirits that came from God, and were soon to return to him.

Again; To see the dignity and greatness of a devout spirit, we need only compare it with other tempers, that are chosen in the room of it.

St. John tells us, that 'all in the world' (that is, all the tempers of a worldly life) 'is the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life.'

Let us therefore consider, what wisdom or excellency of mind there is required, to qualify a man for these delights.

Let us suppose a man given up to the pleasures of the body; surely this can be no sign of a fine mind, or an excellent spirit: For if he has but the temper of an animal, he is great enough for these enjoyments.

Let us suppose him to be devoted to honours and splendours, to be fond of glitter and equipage; now if this temper required any great parts or fine understanding, to make a man capable of it, it would prove the world to abound with great wits.

Let us suppose him to be in love with riches, and to be so eager in the pursuit of them, as never to think he has enough; now this passion is so far from supposing any excellent sense, or great understanding, that blindness and folly are the best supports that it hath.

Let us lastly suppose him in another light, not singly devoted to any of these passions, but, as it mostly happens, governed by all of them in their turns; does this show a more exalted nature, than to spend his days in the service of any one of them?

For to have a taste for these things, and to be devoted to them, is so far from arguing any tolerable parts or understanding, that they are suited to the dullest, weakest minds, and require only a great deal of pride and folly to be greatly admired.

But now let Libertines bring any such charge as this, if they can, against devotion. They may as well endeavour to charge light, with everything that belongs to darkness.

Let them but grant that there is a God, and Providence, and then they have granted enough to justify the wisdom, and support the honour of devotiou.

For if there is an infinitely wise and good Creator, in whom we live, move, and have our being, whose Providence governs all things in all places, surely it must be the highest act of our understanding to conceive rightly of him; it must be the noblest instance of judgment, the most exalted temper of our nature, to worship and adore this universal Providence, to conform to its laws, to study its wisdom, and to live and act everywhere, as in the presence of this infinitely good and wise Creator.

Now he that lives thus, lives in the spirit of devotion.

And what can show such great parts, and so fine an understanding, as to live in this temper?

For if God is wisdom, surely he must be the wisest man in the world, who most conforms to the wisdom of God, who best obeys his Providence, who enters furthest into his designs, and does all he can, that God's will may be done on earth, as it is done in heaven.

A devout man makes a true use of his reason; he sees through the vanity of the world, discovers the corruption of his nature, and the blindness of his passions. He lives by a law which is not visible to vulgar eyes; he enters into the world of spirits; he compares the greatest things, sets eternity against time; and chooses rather to be for ever great in the presence of God when he dies, than to have the greatest share of worldly pleasure whilst he lives.

He that is devout, is full of these great thoughts; he lives upon these noble reflections, and conducts himself by rules and principles, which can only be apprehended, admired, and loved by reason.

There is nothing therefore that shows so great a genius, nothing that so raises us above vulgar spirits, nothing that so plainly declares an heroic greatness of mind, as great devotion.

When you suppose a man to be a saint, or all devotion, you have raised him as much above all other conditions of life, as a Philosopher is above an animal.

Lastly, Courage and bravery are words of a great sound, and seem to signify an heroic spirit; but yet humility, which seems to be the lowest, meanest part of devotion, is a more certain argument of a noble and courageous mind.

For humility contends with greater enemies, is more constantly engaged, more violently assaulted, bears more, suffers more, and requires greater courage to support itself, than any instances of worldly bravery.

A man who dares be poor and contemptible in the eyes of the world, to approve himself to God ; who resists and rejects all human glory, who opposes the clamour of his passions, who meekly puts up with all injuries and wrongs, and dares stay for his reward till the invisible hand of God gives to everyone their proper places ; endures a much greater trial, and exerts a nobler fortitude, than he that is bold and daring in the fire of battle.

For the boldness of a soldier, if he is a stranger to the spirit of devotion, is rather weakness than fortitude ; it is at best but mad passion, and heated spirits, and has no more true valour in it than the fury of a tiger.

For as we cannot lift up a hand, or stir a foot, but by a power that is lent us from God ; so bold actions that are not directed by the laws of God, as so many executions of his will, are no more true bravery, than sedate malice is Christian patience.

Reason is our universal law, that obliges us in all places, and at all times ; and no actions have any honour, but so far as they are instances of our obedience to reason.

And it is as base and cowardly, to be bold and daring against the principle of reason and justice, as to be bold and daring in lying and perjury.

Would we therefore exercise a true fortitude, we must do all in the spirit of devotion, be valiant against the corruptions of the world, and the lusts of the flesh, and the temptations of the devil: For to be daring and courageous against these enemies, is the noblest bravery that an human mind is capable of.

I have made this digression, for the sake of those, who think a great devotion to be bigotry and poorness of spirit ; that by these considerations they may see, how poor and mean all other tempers are, if compared to it ; that they may see, that all worldly attainments, whether of greatness, wisdom, or bravery, are but empty sounds ; and there is nothing wise, or great, or noble in an human spirit, but rightly to know, and heartily worship and adore the great God, that is the support and life of all spirits, whether in heaven or on earth.

A Demonstration of the Errors of a late Book, &c.

BETWEEN the publication of the 'Serious Call' and this Demonstration, WILLIAM LAW wrote his Reply to DR. TINDAL'S 'Case of Reason,' which appears in the second volume of this re-issue of Law's Works. He also wrote, during the years 1731-2, three Letters to a Lady inclined to enter into the Romish Communion. These Letters were not published until after his decease, nor with the collected edition of his Works, but separately: they will be found in the last Volume of this Edition.

The Demonstration was published in the year 1737, when William Law had left the Gibbon family; and was living in his late father's house at King's Cliffe. It was written—after WILLIAM LAW had become greatly influenced by the writings of JACOB BEHMEN—in repudiation of 'A Plain Account of the Nature and End of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper' of which BISHOP HOADLY is supposed to have been the Author. The Demonstration, like all WILLIAM LAW'S works, contains many excellent and deeply instructive passages—that upon the Names or Titles given to the Sacrament being capable of very general application:

WHATEVER Names or Titles this Institution is 'signified to you by, whether it be called a Sacrifice 'propitiatory or commemorative; whether it be 'called an holy Oblation, the Eucharist, the 'Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, the Sacrament 'of the Lord's Supper, the Heavenly Banquet, the Food of Im- 'mortality, or the Holy Communion, and the like, matters not 'much. For all these Words or Names are right and good, and vi Prefatory Advertisement.

‘there is nothing wrong in them, but the striving and contention about them. For they all express something that is true of the Sacrament, and therefore are every one of them, in a good Sense, rightly applicable to it ; but all of them are far short of expressing the whole Nature of the Sacrament, and therefore, the Help of all of them is wanted. He therefore that contends for one Name, as the only proper one in Exclusion of the rest, is in the same Mistake, as he that should contend for one Name and Character of our Saviour, as the only proper one, in Exclusion of all the rest. For as all the Names and Titles by which Christ is described, from the Seed of the Woman in Genesis, to the Alpha and Omega in the last Chapter of the Revelation, are only to help us to know, believe, and experience more of him as our Saviour, than can be expressed by all these different Characters of him : So all the various Names and Titles given to the Sacrament, are only to teach us to know, believe, and find more of our Redemption and Salvation in the Sacrament, than can be pointed out to us by any or all of these Expressions.’

To those who require Evidence of the Truth of the Gospel the following passage is commended :

BUT it may be you will say, you would believe the Gospel if you could, but that its Evidence cannot have that Effect upon your Mind. You may say also, the Gospel is a Matter of Fact ; you must examine into the Truth of it, as you do into the Truth of other Matters of History ; and as both the internal and external Evidence of the Gospel is much defended and opposed by learned Men, its Evidence is so perplexed, and made a Matter of such laborious and intricate Enquiry, that your Mind cannot come at any Certainty of what you ought to believe concerning the Truth of it. I will therefore propose to you the shortest, and at the same time the surest of all Methods. . . . I don't recommend to you to lay aside Prejudice, and begin again the Controversy from the Bottom, and read all on both Sides with all the Impartiality that you can. I would as soon send you on a Pilgrimage, to be a Penitent, as propose to you this Travel to be a Christian. The Truth of the Gospel lies much nearer to us than we imagine, and we only dispute and wrangle ourselves into a Distance from it. Do you think that you need many Books to show you that you are a Sinner, that you have the Disorder of almost all the Beasts within you ; that you have besides this, such Passions and Tempers of Pride, Envy, Selfish'ness and Malice, as would make you shun the Sight of other 'People, if they could see all that passes within you? Need any

'Learning instruct you, that at the same time that you have all
'these Disorders, both of the Beasts and evil Spirits within you,
'you have a great Desire to seem to be without them, and are 'affecting continually to have, and appear in those very Virtues
'which you feel the Want of? When you are full of Hatred
'and Envy, you affect to be thought good and good-natured,
'when proud, to appear as humble. Now I desire you to know
'no Books, but this Book of your own Heart, nor to be well read
'in any Controversy but in that which passes within you, in order 'to know the Gospel to be the greatest of all Truths, and the 'infallible Voice of God speaking the Way of Salvation to you.'

II.—The Grounds and Reasons of Christian Regeneration.

THIS remarkable Treatise, written by WILLIAM LAW and published in the year 1739, is based upon the teaching or revelation of JACOB BEHMEN. The influence of JACOB BEHMEN'S writings with WILLIAM LAW has proved fatal to Law's reputation as a Religious Teacher with many persons; and a great stumbling-block to those to whom the 'Christian Perfection' and the 'Serious Call' have been most convincing and productive of eternal benefit.

The general and erroneous supposition, that WILLIAM LAW, after leading from his youth upwards, not only an irreproachable, but a sanctified life; and having written such books as the 'Christian Perfection' and the 'Serious Call'—the most perfect religious guides, considered merely as such, that have ever appeared and a world-enduring honour to poor aspiring human nature—and after having displayed so strong and penetrating an understanding, free from any kind of error, in the detection and exposure of such fallacies as are set forth in the 'Bangorian Letters': 'Fable of the Bees': 'Case of Reason,' &c., should—with all his deep insight, intellectual power, and life's-devotion to the Truth—have become the victim of a delusion in adopting the ideas of Jacob Behmen, is a supposition which is perfectly incredible* to, and to be rejected by, an earnest Reader, who is possessed of any 'divine idea.'

* This appears to be the silent conviction of so able an Authority as the Rev. Dr. WHYTE upon this portion of WILLIAM LAW'S life.

viii Prefatory Advertisement.

'The Grounds and Reasons of Christian Regeneration' represents WILLIAM LAW'S earliest exposition and elucidation of JACOB BEHMEN'S ideas; and as an Introduction to the exalted sphere of thought and devotion upon which WILLIAM LAW was then entering, it is admirable.

Perhaps the most impressive idea that WILLIAM LAW sets before us in these new Studies, is that in which he approaches the subject of 'Universalism' and doctrine of 'Free Will.' BISHOP BUTLER has demonstrated almost to a certainty that we are 'Free Agents'; but WILLIAM LAW goes further and deepens that tremendous responsibility in a truly awful manner in the following passage:

I WILL grant you all that you can suppose, of the Goodness of God and that no Creature will be finally lost, but what Infinite Love cannot save. But still, here is no Shadow of Security for Infidelity; and your refusing to be saved through the Son of God, whilst the Soul is in the redeemable State of this Life, may at the Separation of the Body, for aught you know, leave it in such a Hell, as the infinite Love of God cannot deliver it from. For, first, you have no Kind, or Degree of Proof, that your Soul is not that dark, self-tormenting, anguishing and imperishable Fire, above-mentioned, which has lost its own proper Light, and is only comforted by the Light of the Sun, till its Redemption be effected. Secondly, You have no Kind, or Degree of Proof, that God himself can redeem, or save, or enlighten this dark Fire-Soul, any other Way than, as the Gospel proposes, by the Birth of the Son of God in it. Therefore your own Hearts must tell you, that for aught you know, Infidelity, or the refusing of this Birth of the Son of God, may, at the End of Life, leave you in such a State of Self-torment, as the infinite Love of God can no way deliver you from.'

DEMONSTRATION

Gross and Fundamental ERRORS

Of a late BOOK, called

A Plain Account of the Nature and End of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, &c.

Wherein also the Nature and Extent of the Redemption of all Mankind by JESUS CHRIST is stated and explained; and the Pretences of the Deists, for a Religion of Natural Reason instead of it, are examined to the Bottom. The whole humbly, earnestly, and affectionately addressed to all Orders of Men, and more especially to all the Younger CLERGY.

ERRORS of a LATE BOOK.

MY Design (worthy Reader) is not to lay before you all the Errors and false Reasonings of this Author throughout his whole Treatise. This would lead you into too much Wrangle, and the Multiplicity of Things disputed, would take your Eye from the chief Point in Question, and so make the Matter less edifying to you.

Many therefore of his lesser Mistakes I shall pass over, and only endeavour to discover such gross and fundamental Errors, as may justly pass for an entire Confutation of his whole Book.

The Foundation on which he proceeds, and the principal Matters of his Discourse, are not only notoriously against the Truth of the Sacrament, but plainly destructive of the principal Doctrines of the Christian Religion.

And if this Key of Knowledge, put into your Hands by this Author, is accepted by you, you will not only lose all the right Knowledge of this Sacrament, but be rendered a blind, deaf, and even dead Reader of all the other Doctrines of Scripture. For the Way he points out to find the Truth of the Doctrine of the Sacrament, is the only Way to lose the Truth of all the most important Parts of the Gospel.

Who this Nameless Author is, neither concerns the Truth, nor You, nor Me, and therefore I leave that Matter as he has left it.

He begins with giving us this Account of the Principles on which he proceeds. 'I have endeavoured to establish and 'explain the true Nature, End, and Effect of the Sacrament of 'the Lord's Supper. And this in such a manner, that all who 'are concerned may, I hope, be led into the right way of judging 'about it.* To this I have endeavoured to guide them, by 'directing and confining their Attention to all that is said about 'this Duty, by those who alone had any Authority to declare the ‘ Nature of it : Neither on the one hand diminishing, nor on the other augmenting, what is declared by them to belong to it.—If therefore the Manner in which I have chosen to treat this Subject, should appear to some to stand in need of any Apology ; this is the only one I can persuade myself to make, That I have no Authority to add to the Words of Christ and his Apostles upon this Subject ; nor to put any Meaning or Interpretation upon these Words, but what is agreeable to the common Rules of speaking in like Cases, and to the declared Design of the Institution itself.*—All who (in the Apostle’s Phrase) love our Lord Jesus Christ in Sincerity, and who desire to be no wiser about his Appointments, than he himself was ; and are content to expect no more from his Institution than he himself put into it, will join with me at least in the one only Method of examining into the Nature and Extent of it.†

Here he has given us a short, but full Account of the Principles on which he proceeds, which I shall reduce into the following Propositions.

First, That the Nature, End, and Effects of the Holy Sacrament can only be so far known, and apprehended by us, as the bare Words of Christ in the Institution of the Sacrament, related by the Apostles and Evangelists, have made them known to us.

Secondly, That no other Meaning or Interpretation is to be put upon these Words, but what is agreeable to the common Rules of speaking on the like Occasions.

Thirdly, That this Examination into the Meaning of the Words, according to the common Rules of speaking on the like Occasions, is the one only Method of Knowing what is meant by them.

Fourthly, That this Knowledge thus acquired from such a Consideration of the Words, is all the Knowledge that we can have of the Nature, End, and Effects of this Holy Sacrament.

Everyone must see that these Propositions are fairly taken from his own Words, and that they are the Foundation of his whole Discourse. He builds upon them as upon so many Axioms, or first Principles ; and all he says from the Beginning to the End of his Treatise, is founded upon the supposed incontestable Truth of them.

Here therefore let me desire you to fix your Eye, for here I will place the Merits of the Cause with him : If this Foundation cannot be shaken, I will dispute nothing that he has built upon it.

But then let it be observed, that if these Propositions are proved to be absolutely false, and most evidently repugnant to the repeated Letter, constant Spirit, and whole Tenor of Scripture, then all this whole Treatise, from the Beginning to the End, so far as he proceeds upon his own avowed Principles, is mere Fiction and Fable, a Castle in the Air.

I shall therefore in the plainest Manner show the Falseness of these Propositions, and that they are so far from being what He takes them to be, viz., the only Means of arriving at the Fulness of Scripture Truths, that whoever entertains them as Truths, and abides by them in his Search after Scripture Truths, is, and must be, so long as he continues in that Sentiment and Practice, Stone-Blind to all the Mysteries of the Kingdom of God, as related in Scripture.

And that, if it were anyone's Desire to do exactly what our Blessed Lord charges upon the Pharisees and Lawyers, 'That they shut up the Kingdom of Heaven, took away the Key of Knowledge, entered not in themselves, and those that were entering in, they hindered': Were this the deepest Desire of anyone's Heart, the one only effectual Way of doing it, must be the Way that this Author has taken in this Treatise. For, it shall also be made appear, that these Principles of his are that very Veil which the Apostle says was upon the Hearts of the Jews; and that the Scriptures have never been useless to, misunderstood, or rejected by any People of any Age, but for this Reason, because their Hearts were blinded and hardened by this very Method of knowing Scripture Truths, which he proposes to us. All the Characters of 'stiff-necked, hardened, blind, carnal, and uncircumcised in Heart and Spirit,' which are in the Scriptures given to the unbelieving Jews, are only so many various Ways of describing that State of Heart, which these very Principles had produced in them.

Had they thought of any other Method of knowing their Messiah, but that of the bare Letter of Scripture, interpreted according to the common Rules of speaking, the greatest Occasion of their Infidelity had been removed.

But to begin in my proposed Method. The Holy Sacrament was instituted in these Words: 'And as they were eating, Jesus took Bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the Disciples, and said, Take, eat, this is my Body. And He took the Cup, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it: For this is my Blood of the new Testament, which is shed for many, for the Remission of Sins,' Matth. xxvi. 26. In St. Luke the Words of Institution are: 'And he took Bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave it unto them, saying, This is my Body which is given for you: This do in remembrance 'of me. Likewise also the Cup after Supper, saying, This Cup 'is the new Testament in my Blood, which is shed for you,' Luke xxii. 19.

Let us now apply the Doctrine contained in the fore-mentioned Propositions to these Words of the Institution of the Sacrament. According to the Doctrine of those Propositions, the one only Method of understanding what is meant by these Words of the Institution, is to consider and interpret them 'according to the common Rules of speaking in like Cases.' But, pray Sir, where must a Man look for a like Case? Does the World afford us any Case like it? Have the Speaker, or the Things spoken, any Things in common Life that are alike to either of them? How vain is it therefore to refer us to the common Rules of speaking on the like Cases, when the whole World affords us neither any Person like him that spoke, nor any Thing, or Case, like the Things and Case here spoken of.

The Scripture saith, 'He spake the Word, and they were 'made; He commanded, and they were created.'* Has this Way of speaking any Parallel in the Language of Men? Do human Things and Transactions furnish us with anything like this?

Now the Word which thus speaking created all things, is not more extraordinary, more above the common Rules of speaking, or more without human Example, than that Word which, in the Institution of the Sacrament, spake, and it was done; commanded, and it was created. For it is the same Omnipotent Word that here speaketh, that spoke the Creation into Being; and the Effects of his speaking in the Institution of the Sacrament, are as extraordinary, and as much above the Effects of human speaking, as when the same Word spake, and they were made; commanded, and they were created. And it is impossible for anyone to show, that there is less of Divine Power and Greatness, less of Mystery and Miracle implied in these Words spoken by the Eternal Word in the Institution of the Sacrament, than when the same Eternal Word said, 'Let there be 'Light, and there was Light.'

All Words have a Meaning, a Significancy and Effect, according to the Nature of him, whose they are. The Words of God are of the Nature of God, Divine, Living and Powerful; the Words of an Angel are, as that Angel is in Power and Perfection; the Words of a Devil have only his Nature and Power, and therefore they can only and solely tempt to Evil; the Words of Man are, as Men are, weak, vain, earthly, and of a poor and narrow Signification. To direct us therefore to the common Rules of speaking amongst Men, as the only Means of truly knowing all that the Son of God spoke, when he spoke of himself, and on such an Occasion, and in such Circumstances as never did, nor ever can happen or belong to anyone but himself, is surely no small Mistake. The common Rules of speaking are like other things that are common amongst Men, viz., poor, empty, and superficial, hardly touching the Outside of the mere human Things we talk about. If therefore what the Son of God said of himself in the Institution of this Holy Sacrament, must necessarily be supposed to have no higher Meaning or deeper Sense, than such as is according to the common Rules of speaking amongst Men; it must necessarily follow, that he spoke as meanly, as imperfectly, and as superficially in what he said of himself, and the Matter he was upon, as when Men speak of themselves and human Things. For if there were not the same weak, empty, and superficial Meaning in his Words, as there is in the common Discourse of Men; then the common Rules of speaking amongst Men cannot be a proper, much less the only Means of understanding all the Truth that is contained in them.

* Psalm cxlviii. 5.

the Errors of a late Book. 7

This Author seems to be in the same mistake concerning Jesus Christ and his Kingdom, as his Disciples were in, before they had received Power from on high. They had till then heard him only with their outward Ears; conceived what he said, only according to the common Rules of speaking amongst Men, and so continued perfect Strangers to all the Mysteries and great Truths of the Gospel. But after the Descent of the Holy Ghost upon them, their Understandings were opened, and they saw all things with new Eyes, and in a new Light; they then fully apprehended what their Lord meant by these remarkable Words, 'My Kingdom is not of this World.' Which is the same thing as if he had said, I speak not as a Person of this World, nor of the Things of this World, and therefore the Things which I say, can neither be understood by a worldly Mind, nor according to the common Ways of speaking amongst Men. And had this Author sufficiently attended to the Sense of these Words, and felt the Truth of them in his own Heart, it seems next to impossible for him to have fallen into his present way of Reasoning. For he that truly and fully believes that the Kingdom of Christ is not of this World, and that therefore worldly Powers and Privileges are not a proper Part of it, can hardly be so inconsistent with himself, as to affirm, that worldly Language, spoken on worldly Matters, is the only proper Key to the right Understanding the Truths and Doctrines of this Kingdom, that is so out of, above, and contrary to this World.

And if he has but one just and good Argument to prove, that worldly Power is not the proper and only Power that belongs to this Kingdom, the same Argument will as fully prove, that worldly Language understood according to the common Rules of speaking, cannot be the proper and only Means of rightly apprehending the Truths of this Kingdom.

To proceed ; he refers and confines us to the bare Words of the Institution, for the right and full understanding of all that is to be understood of the Nature, End, and Effects of the Holy Sacrament.

Here he throws an easy Deception into the Mind of His Reader, who because he may justly think he is right in declaring the Words of the Institution to be the only true and full Account of the Sacrament, as to the outward Form and Matter of it, suspects him not to be wrong, when he concludes from thence, that the Words are also the only true and full Account of the Nature, End and Effects of the Holy Sacrament. Whereas this is as false, as the other is true ; for the Nature, and End, and Effects of the Holy Sacrament, neither are, nor possibly can be taught us (as shall be shown hereafter) from the bare Words of the Institution, considered by themselves.

Let us suppose that one of this Author's rational Men, of clear Ideas, but an absolute Stranger to the Scriptures, and to our Saviour's Doctrines, had been present only when he spoke the Words of the Institution ; would his Knowledge of the Meaning of Words, according to the common Rules of speaking, have directed him to the true Sense of all that was implied by this Sacrament and the Observation of it ? To say that such a Person thus qualified could have known the true Nature, End, and Effects of the Holy Sacrament, is surely too absurd to be imagined. And to say that he could not, is fully giving up this Author's whole Doctrine, namely, that the bare understanding the Words of the Institution according to the common Rules of speaking, is the only Way to understand all that is certain and true as to the Nature, End, and Effects of the Sacrament. For if this were so, it would evidently follow, that a perfect Stranger to all the other Doctrines and Institutions both of the Old and New Testament, would be as well qualified to understand all that was implied in the Words of the Institution, as he that had the fullest Knowledge of everything that ever had been revealed or appointed by God, either before or since the Birth of Christ.

But if some Knowledge of what God has revealed both in the Old and New Testament be required, for a right understanding what is implied in the Words of the Institution, then it is absolutely false, and highly blamable, to say, that the bare Words of the Institution, considered in themselves only, according to the common Rules of speaking, are the only Means or Method of understanding all that is implied in them.

Either this Sacrament has some relation to some other Doctrines of the Old and New Testament, or it has not; if it has no Relation to them, then it must be said to have no Agreement with any other Part of Scripture: But if it has some Relation to other Doctrines of Scripture, then it demonstratively follows, that this Institution must be interpreted, not according to the bare Meaning of the Words in the common Ways of speaking, but according to that Relation which it has to some other Doctrines of Scripture. This, I think, is incontestable, and entirely overthrows his only Method of understanding the Nature of the Sacrament.

Again, another Argument of still greater Force against him may be taken from the Apostles themselves. He confines us to the bare Words of the Institution related by the Apostles and Evangelists, as the only Means of knowing all that can be known of the Nature, End, and Effects of the Sacrament; and yet it is certain, beyond all Doubt, that the Apostles and Evangelists neither had, nor could possibly have this Design in relating and recording the Words of the Institution, namely, that we might thereby have the one only Means of knowing all that is to be understood by it.

For they very well knew, that they had received no such Knowledge themselves from the bare Words of the Institution, and therefore they could not relate them as the only Means of Instruction in that Matter to others. They very well knew, that if they had received no other Light, besides that which those Words conveyed, they had died in a total Ignorance of the whole Matter.

They very well knew, that though they had personally conversed with Christ, had heard from his own Mouth, Mysteries preparatory to their right Knowledge of their Saviour, that notwithstanding all this, when they heard and saw him institute the Sacrament in its outward Form and Matter, as they relate it, by the help of the bare Words of the Institution, they then neither did, nor could rightly understand the Nature, End, and Effects of the Holy Sacrament. And therefore it may be said to be certain beyond all Doubt, that they neither did nor could relate and record these Words of the Institution, as the only Means of rightly understanding all that is implied in the Sacrament, as to the Nature, End, and Effects of it. And yet this Author takes all this for granted, and supposes that the Apostles had all their Knowledge of the Sacrament from the Words of the Institution, and that they have recorded the Institution for this End, and with this Design, that we might know all that they knew, and all that could be known concerning it.

That the Apostles themselves did not comprehend the Nature, End, and Effects of the Sacrament from the Words of the Institution, is plain; for they did not then know what Person their Saviour was, or how he was to save them, or what their Salvation in itself implied. They knew nothing of the Nature or Merit of his Sufferings, but thought all to be lost, when he suffered Death. They knew not how to believe in his Resurrection, and when they did believe it, they knew nothing of the Consequences of it; which is a plain Proof that they did not at all see into the Meaning of the Holy Sacrament, for had they known what was implied in it, they must have known their Saviour, and the Nature of their Salvation. And yet (what is well to be observed) it is also plain, that in this State of gross Ignorance and Infidelity, knowing nothing of their Salvation, they had all that Knowledge of the Holy Sacrament which this Author is recommending to the Christian World, as the only true Knowledge of it. For they must have understood the Words according to the common Rules of speaking, which is all that he allows to be understood by them. For any other Sense or Meaning, that is not literally expressed in the Words taken according to the common Rules of speaking, is by him called a being Wiser than Christ in his own Appointments, an adding to the Institution, or a putting something into it, which he has not put in. So that it is evidently plain, that this Purity of Knowledge concerning the Sacrament, which this Author has writ so large a Volume in Recommendation of, is that very Knowledge of the Sacrament which the Apostles had, when they had no Faith in Christ as their Saviour, nor any Knowledge of the Nature of Christian Salvation. Everyone must see that this Charge is justly brought against him, and that he cannot possibly avoid it. For if that is the only right Knowledge of the Nature, End, and Effects of the Holy Sacrament, which the bare Words of the Institution, understood only according to the common Rules of speaking, declare; if every other Sense and Meaning is to be rejected as a Criminal adding, or putting something into Christ's Institution, and a presuming to be wiser than he was; then it undeniably follows, that that simple and sure Knowledge of the Sacrament, which he lays so great Claim to, and so much contends for, is that very gross Ignorance of it which the Apostles were in, when they had no Light but from the bare Words of the Institution, and had all the Articles of the Christian Faith to learn.

Further, as the Apostles did not, so they could not possibly know the Nature, End, and Effects of the Holy Sacrament, from the bare Words of the Institution, nor is it possible for any one since their Time to know it by that Help alone.

The outward Matter and Form indeed, or that wherein the positive Institution consists (as I have already said) is sufficiently plain and intelligible from the bare Words of the Institution, and is by them made unalterable. This is the only Plainness of the Institution. But what Mysteries or Doctrines of Christian Faith are to be acknowledged or confessed by the Words, the Form, and the Matter of it, and what are not, cannot be known from the bare Words of the Institution, but are to be learnt by that Light which brought the Apostles and the Church after them into a true and full Knowledge of the fundamental Articles of the Christian Faith.

Take the Words of the Institution alone as the Apostles first heard them, understood only according to the common Rules of speaking, and then there is nothing in them, but that poor Conception which they had of them at that time, and such as did them no good; and then also we have that Knowledge of this Institution, which this Author pleads for. But, take the same Words of the Institution, understood and interpreted according to the Articles of the Christian Faith, and seen in that Light in which the Apostles afterwards saw them, when they knew their Saviour; and then everything that is great and adorable in the Redemption of Mankind, everything that can delight, comfort and support the Heart of a Christian, is found to be centred in this Holy Sacrament. There then wants nothing but the Wedding Garment to make this Holy Supper the Marriage Feast of the Lamb: And it is this Holy Solemnity, this Author is taking so much Pains to wrangle us out of, by so many dry Subtleties of a superficial Logic.

But I proceed to show, that neither the Apostles, nor any other Persons since them, could possibly know the Nature, End and Effects of the Holy Sacrament, from the bare Words of the Institution considered only in themselves, according to the common Rules of speaking. And this may be demonstrated from every Part of the Institution.

I shall begin with these Words, which are only a Command to observe the Institution, 'Do this in Remembrance of me': That is, let this be done as your Confession and Acknowledgment of the Salvation that is received through me. Does not every common Christian, that has any Knowledge of Scripture, know, that this is the plain Meaning of these Words? And that as often as he does this, he does it in Remembrance of his Saviour, in Acknowledgment and Confession of that Salvation which Mankind received through him? But now, that which is thus plain and intelligible in the Words of the Institution to a common Christian, knowing only the chief Articles of his Salvation, is altogether unintelligible to any Man that is left solely to the bare Words of the Institution; for unless he was instructed in the other Parts of Scripture, so as to know what he was to understand by the Words, they would signify no more to him than they would to a Heathen, who had by Chance found a bit of Paper in the Fields with the same Words writ upon it.

Now a Heathen, ignorant of all Divine Revelation, if he found such a Paper, could not know what it related to, nor what any of the Words signified; he could not know when he was nearer, or when he was further from a right understanding of them; the common Rules of speaking amongst Men, would be of no use to teach him, whether there was any Truth in such a Paper, or what kind of Truths were declared by it.

Now this is exactly the Case of him that renounces all other Means of knowing what is contained in the Institution, but that of the Words themselves, understood only according to the common Rules of speaking amongst Men. Such a one is only in the State of this Heathen, the Words of the Institution are as unintelligible and useless to him, as if he had found them by chance; they relate to he knows not what, they may be all Fiction and Invention for aught he knows, they cannot possibly be understood as having any Truth or Reality in them, till he that reads them, knows more than is related by them, till he knows the chief Articles of the Christian Salvation. For the bare Words of the Institution, considered by themselves, do not at all prove, justify, or explain, even that which they literally express; they are all but empty, unmeaning Words, till the Proof, the Justification and Explication of them, is learned from some other Parts of Scripture. They do not at all prove, justify, or explain, either that we want a Saviour, or why we want him, or that a Saviour is given us, and how he effects our Salvation; and yet all these things are absolutely necessary to a right understanding of this Institution; and as soon as these things are proved, justified and explained, as soon as we know that we want a Saviour, and that one is given to us; as soon as we know who this Saviour is, how he saves us, and the Nature and Manner of our Salvation, then, and not till then, all these Words of the Institution become clearly intelligible after a new Manner; then all the great Articles of our Salvation appear to be finely remembered, acknowledged, and set forth by them.

The short of the Matter is this ; to understand these Words only by themselves, knowing no more in them or by them, than what the common Use of Words teaches us, is to understand them only in such a Degree as a Heathen may understand them, who knows nothing of the Scripture besides ; and this is the Knowledge, or rather the total Ignorance of the Sacrament, that this Author is contending for.

But if these Words are but a Part of the Christian Religion, if they are to be understood according to that Religion of which they are a Part, if the Articles of our Christian Salvation have any Concern in them, and we are to receive them as Christians in such a Sense as our Christianity requires of us ; then it is undeniably certain, that this Author refers us to an Absurdity, and Impossibility, when he refers and confines us to the bare Words of the Institution, understood only according to the common Rules of speaking, in order to have a Christian Knowledge of the Holy Sacrament.

Again, 'Do this in Remembrance of me': Now take these Words in what Sense you please, is it not equally and absolutely necessary for the right understanding of them, to know who and what kind of Person this ME is, who is here to be remembered ? For if this is to be done in Remembrance of him, how can he be remembered, or acknowledged, unless it be known what Qualities and Characters of him are to be remembered and acknowledged ?

But this is not done in the Words of the Institution ; the State, Nature, and Characters of the Person to be remembered are not there declared, nor proved, and explained ; therefore something of the greatest Importance to the Words, and that must have the greatest Effect upon the Sense of them, and that is absolutely necessary to the right understanding of them, is necessarily to be learnt elsewhere ; and therefore it is again proved that he refers us to an Absurdity and Impossibility, when he refers and confines us to the bare Words of the Institution, to know all that a Christian can rightly know of them.

For if all that is done in this Sacrament, is to be done for the sake of remembering and acknowledging him as our Saviour, then surely it requires us to remember, and acknowledge him, according to what he is, with regard to our Salvation, and according to those Characters which are so plainly ascribed to him in Scripture, and on which our whole Religion is founded ; and therefore it is also necessary, that we rightly know (what cannot possibly be known from the bare Words of the Institution) in what Respects and on how many Accounts he is our Saviour, before we can rightly make this Remembrance and Acknowledgment of him as such.

It was the want of this Knowledge, that made the Institution of the Sacrament useless to the Apostles when they first heard it; but when they had got this Knowledge, and knew all the Characters of their Saviour, and in how many Respects he stood as the Mediator and Redeemer betwixt God and Man, then the Institution became highly intelligible to them, and every Part of it plainly declared the Mystery that in a certain Sense was both concealed and expressed by it. Now the Addition of this Knowledge of the Nature, Condition, and Characters of the Person to be remembered and acknowledged by the Institution, is adding nothing to the Institution, but the right Use of it; it is bringing nothing to it, but a Mind capable of knowing and observing it.

He that is to understand a Proposition written in Hebrew, cannot be charged with adding to that Proposition, because he holds it necessary to learn the Hebrew Language, before he pretends to understand a Proposition written in Hebrew.

Now a Scripture-Christian Institution must as necessarily be understood according to Scripture and Christian Doctrine, as an Hebrew Proposition must be understood according to the Hebrew Language: And the making use of Scripture and Christian Doctrine, in order to understand a Scripture and Christian Institution, is no more an adding of something to the Institution, that need not, or ought not to be done, than the interpreting an Hebrew Proposition by the Hebrew Language, is an adding of something to it, that need not, or ought not to be done.

And, on the other hand, to confine us to the bare Words of the Institution, as they are in themselves, as they sound only in common Language, in order to understand a Scripture-Christian Institution, is exactly the same thing as to confine us to the bare Words of a Proposition written in Hebrew, considered only according to the common Rules of speaking, and not according to that Meaning they have in the Hebrew Language to which they belong, and of which they are a Part.

For a Scripture-Christian Institution must in the same manner have its Dependence upon, Foundation in, and Interpretation from Scripture and Christian Doctrine, of which it is a Part, and to which it belongs, as an Hebrew Proposition hath Dependence upon, Foundation in, and Interpretation from the Hebrew Language, to which it belongs, and of which it is a Part.

This Scripture-Christian Institution being thus interpreted, according to the Scripture and Christian Doctrine, of which it is a Part, is, when thus interpreted, left and kept in that State, in which Christ left it to be kept. Nay, the Institution itself cannot even literally be observed according to the bare Words of it, unless it be observed according to this Knowledge and Acknowledgment of all the Characters of Christ.

For though the bare Words of the Institution do not express or teach these Characters, yet the bare Words or Letter of it requires thus much: For since the Letter of the Institution requires us to do this in Remembrance and Acknowledgment of Christ, the bare Letter requires us in doing this, to acknowledge and remember all the Characters of Christ; therefore he that in doing this does not remember and acknowledge all the Characters of Christ, must be said not to observe the very Letter of the Institution. Hence therefore there arises another plain Demonstration against his Doctrine, viz., that we are to know no more of the Nature or right Observation of the Sacrament, than what is expressly taught us in the bare Words of the Institution. For the very Letter itself of the Institution contradicts this; and if he will not directly refuse what the bare Words expressly command, he must seek for something towards the right Observation of this Sacrament, which is only required, but not taught in the Words of the Institution. For by the Letter of the Institution you are commanded to remember and acknowledge a Person, whose Characters, Condition and Offices to be acknowledged, are not taught in the Institution, but only to be found in other Parts of Scripture; and therefore the bare Letter of the Institution is grossly violated, if we look no further than to the Words of the Institution for a right Knowledge and Observation of the Sacrament.

Again, If the Scriptures teach and prove Christ to be the Sacrifice, Atonement and Propitiation for our Sins, as expressly as they teach us the Institution of the Sacrament, does not the Remembrance and Acknowledgment of him as the Sacrifice, Atonement and Propitiation for Sin, become a necessary Part of our right Observation of the Sacrament? For if the Sacrament is appointed for the Remembrance and Acknowledgment of Christ as our Saviour, and if as our Saviour he is the Atonement, the Sacrifice, and Propitiation for our Sins, is not the Remembrance and Acknowledgment of him as our Sacrifice and Atonement, essential to the Remembrance of him as our Saviour? If these Characters were mentioned in the Institution, I suppose they would be allowed to be an essential Part of it. But if the Letter of the Institution directly points to, and calls for the Acknowledgment of these Characters, then they are as essential to it, as if they were expressly mentioned in it.

Jesus Christ is not mentioned in the Institution as our Saviour, but I suppose it will not be denied that he is there by way of necessary Implication, since the Person there to be remembered, is declared by the Scripture to be our Saviour. But if we may be allowed thus to take our Saviour to be the Person that is to be remembered and acknowledged by the Sacrament, if this may be done without adding anything to the Institution, if it must be done as absolutely essential to it, then the Addition of Sacrifice, Atonement, and Propitiation for our Sins, may be added without adding anything to the Institution, and must be done as absolutely essential to it; because the Scriptures teach and prove, that Jesus Christ, as our Saviour, is the Sacrifice, Atonement, and Propitiation for our Sins. Therefore if the Remembrance of him as our Saviour is essential to the Sacrament, the Remembrance and Acknowledgment of him as the Sacrifice and Atonement, and Propitiation for Sin, is essential to the Sacrament.

And therefore it follows again, that the very Words of the Institution direct us to a further Knowledge of the Sacrament, than that which is expressly taught by them.

To proceed: Take, eat; this is my Body. Now what signifies it what anyone can make of these Words, understood according to the common Ways of speaking? For the Way itself is singular and uncommon, and has no certain Meaning according to the common Rules of speaking. He may as well read a Discourse upon Truth, to know whether these Words have any Truth in them, as consult the common Forms of speaking, to know what is meant by them. For if the things mentioned and expressed in these Words, were not made significant and important to us by something not mentioned in the Sacrament, if they were not asserted and explained in other Parts of Scripture, it could never be known from the Words themselves, that they were of any Significancy to us, or that there was any Truth and Reality in them. The short of the Matter is this: Either these Words are only a great Impropriety of Speech, darkly expressing only a common thing; or they are a figurative Form of Words, which by the Particularity of the Expression are to raise the Mind to a Faith and Apprehension of such Things, as cannot be plainly and nakedly represented by human Language. Now one of these two must necessarily be true, that is, they must necessarily be either a dark Form of Words with only a plain common Meaning of an ordinary Thing at the bottom, or they must be a mysterious Form of Words signifying something more than human. But now which of these two they are, cannot possibly be known from the Words of the Institution. For the Words in themselves prove nothing at all of this; from aught that appears in the Words themselves, they may be mere Fiction and Impropriety about a Trifle, or the greatest and most important of all Truths may be taught by them. But this can no other possible way be known, but by other Parts of Scripture. And if the Scriptures were as silent about the Truth, Nature, and Extent of the Things barely mentioned in the Sacrament, as the Institution itself is, it must be the same useless, unintelligible Form of Words to us, that it was to the Apostles when they first heard them, and had no Knowledge of their Saviour.

But, on the other hand, if the Things barely mentioned in the Words of the Institution, are openly asserted, and variously explained in other Parts of Scripture; if we are often told what the Body of Christ is in several Respects, of the Necessity and Possibility of Eating his Flesh, and Drinking his Blood; if the Scriptures abound with Instruction, showing us how we have our Life in him and from him, how we must be born again in him and through him, how he must be formed in us, and we new Creatures in him; then it follows, that to separate the Institution from these Scriptures that variously unfold its Nature, and to confine us to the bare Words of the Institution itself, in order to understand it fully, is the same Absurdity, the same Offence against Scripture and Reason, as it would be to confine us to the bare Words of the first Promise of a Saviour made in the third Chapter of Genesis, in order to know fully our Christian Saviour, and what our Christian Salvation is. For as that first Promise of a Seed of the Woman that should bruise the Serpent's Head, contained the whole Character of our Saviour, and all that related to him as such, and yet contained nothing of it intelligible enough, till further Revelations, Doctrines and Facts explained all that was short and figurative in that first Promise, and showed how every Part of our Salvation was promised by it; so the Institution of the Sacrament contained every thing relating to Christ as our Saviour, and yet contained nothing of it intelligible enough, till further Revelations, new Light, Doctrines and Facts explained all that was short and figurative in it, and plainly showed what it was in its real Nature, how it stood in the Heart of our Religion, fully attesting and representing the chief Characters of Christ, as he was our Saviour and Redeemer.

Therefore it is the same gross Error to confine the Words of the Institution to their own literal Meaning, and to understand them only according to the common Rules of speaking, as it would be to confine that first Promise of a Saviour to the literal Meaning of the Words in which it was expressed, understood only according to the common Rules of speaking. For as it was by the Scriptures speaking a Language different from the Expressions of the first Promise of a Seed to bruise the Serpent's Head, and giving further Revelations concerning the promised Saviour in other Words, that the Words of the first Promise itself came rightly to be understood and believed; so it is by the Scriptures speaking a Language different from that of the Sacrament, and by revealing Doctrines on which it is founded, that the Sacrament itself came rightly to be known and understood. And if the Scripture may and must be allowed to explain, confirm, and establish the true Meaning of the first Promise of a Seed to destroy the Serpent's Head, even where the Words of it are not mentioned, or expressly said to be explained; then the Scriptures may and must be allowed to explain, confirm, and establish the true Nature of the Sacrament, even where the Words of it are not mentioned, or expressly said to be explained.

Yet this Author poorly and vainly supposes, that the Nature of the Sacrament, and the Things meant by it, are nowhere to be looked for in Scripture, but where the Sacramental Words, or the Manner of the outward Institution is repeated, or expressly said to be explained: Which is as just and solid, as if a Jew should from the same Skill in Words suppose, that the Explication of the first Promise of a Woman's Seed to bruise the Serpent's Head, was nowhere to be looked for in Scripture, but in such Places as spoke strictly the Language of the first Promise, and mentioned the express Words, Seed, and Bruise, and the Serpent's Head.

And indeed herein, in this poor literal Exactness lay all the Infidelity of the Jews, the Blindness and Hardness of their Hearts, and their Incapacity to receive their Saviour. Look at every Folly, Grossness, and erroneous Principle of the Scribes and Pharisees; look through the whole of their false Religion, and you will find, that they fell into it all, because they had this Author's Method of finding the Truth. They placed all in the Letter of Scripture, as this Author does; they understood that Letter only according to the common Rules of speaking amongst Men, as this Author does; they looked upon and understood all the Institutions of their Religion, as this Author looks upon and understands the Sacrament; they saw just so far into the Law, as he does into the Gospel; they had his Degree of Knowledge, and he has their Degree of Ignorance. For take but away from the Scribe and Pharisee the Letter of Scripture, understood according to the common Rules of speaking, and you take away all their Religion; they see no more of an inward Mystery, Spirit, or Doctrine in it, than this Author sees in the Sacrament.

Again, leave them but the Letter of Scripture, understood according to the common Rules of speaking, as this Author would have the Sacrament left, and then you leave them all that they would have; and the Religion of the Scribes and Pharisees is in its full Perfection, and has exactly the Perfection of this Author's plain Account of the Sacrament.

This made me say above, that it would appear, that this Author's Method of understanding the Scripture Doctrine of the Sacrament, was that very Veil which the Apostle said was upon the Hearts of the Jews; and that he was labouring to draw Skins over our Eyes, and to make our Ears gross and dull of hearing, that the New Testament might be as useless to us, as the Old Testament was to the unbelieving Letter-learned Scribes and Pharisees. For his excellent Method of understanding the Nature of the Sacrament, is to a tittle that very Method which kept them totally ignorant of the Nature of their Religion.

Every Prophecy of our Saviour, whether in the Law, or the Psalms, or the Prophets, served only to keep him more out of their Knowledge; because looking only upon it, as this Author looks upon the Words of the Institution, they were under a Necessity of understanding it wrong, and so the more Prophecies they had of him, the further they were carried from the true Knowledge of their promised Saviour. Circumcision, Sacrifices, Washings, Feasts and Fasts, &c., which were intended and appointed as so many School-masters or Guides to Christ, were by them turned into dead, carnal, earthly Ordinances, that left them in their Sins, and incapable of acknowledging their Saviour, or so much as feeling any want of one; for this very Reason, because they saw no further into their Sacrifices, than this Author sees into the Sacrament; but thought that the whole Nature and End of a Sacrifice was fully observed, when they had slain an Ox, and not changed it into the cutting off of a Dog's Head. This was their Great Point in Sacrifice, just as this Author has found out the Great Point, as he calls it, of the Sacrament, which consists in a bare Act of the Memory, remembering Christ as a Teacher of Religion at the Instant you take the Bread or the Cup, and not remembering Aristotle or Socinus, &c., as Teachers of Logic and Criticism.

When you have by this sole Act of your Memory thus separated and distinguished what is done in the Sacrament, from that which is done for Food, or Mirth, or in Memory of your Friends, then you have secured the great Point in the Sacrament, and are to look for nothing further as to the peculiar Nature, End, and Effects of it. Just as the Letter-learned Pharisee thought that the whole Nature and End of the Sacrifice was fully observed when he had slain an Ox, and not cut off a Dog's Head.

And if you are for adding anything to the Sacrament besides this distinguishing Act of the Memory, you are as blamable in the Sight of this Author, as the Apostles were in the Eyes of the unbelieving Pharisee, when they taught that the Blood of slain Beasts was, as to its Nature and End, a Type and Application of the Atonement of Christ's Blood. Thus does this Author stand in the very State and Place of the unbelieving Pharisee, teaching Christians the Gospel, as he taught the Jews the Law, and excluding the true Knowledge of Christ from Christian Institutions, just as the Pharisee excluded it from the Jewish.

And if you ask, or search ever so much into the true Reason why the Religion of the Scribes and Pharisees was so odious in the Sight of our Blessed Saviour, why he cast so many Reproaches upon it, why he denounced so many Woes against it; the one true genuine Cause was this, it was because they stood on the Outside of the Law, just as this Author stands on the Outside of the Gospel, and were content with such a plain Account of their Sacrifices and Circumcision, as he has given us of the Sacrament; it was because they stuck to the bare Letter of Scripture, only understood according to the common Rules of speaking amongst Men; it was this Fulness of a false, empty, and dead Knowledge, that made the Scriptures useless to them, that fixed them in a State of blind Self-sufficiency, and made it harder for the Rational, Letter-learned Pharisee, than for a gross Sinner to see the Kingdom of God, or to acknowledge him that preached it.

And here we may see the true and solid Meaning of the Apostle, when he saith, God had 'made them able Ministers of 'the New Testament, not of the Letter, but of the Spirit; for 'the Letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth Life.*'

For the Letter of Scripture, understood only according to the common Rules of speaking, is the Letter that killeth, the Letter that made the Jews Unbelievers in Christ, that makes speculative Christians, Idealists, Critics and Grammarians fall into Infidelity; but Scripture, interpreted not by Lexicons and Dictionaries, but by Doctrines revealed by God, and by an inward Teaching and Uction of the Holy Ghost, is that Spirit which giveth Life.

But this Author, according to his own Principles, is obliged to own himself to be an Anti-Apostle, and to declare, that not God, but Logic, and much Attention to human Words and Ways of Reasoning, have made him an able Minister of the New Testament, not of the Spirit, but of the Letter; and has convinced him, that it is the Letter alone that giveth Life. For he cannot allow the smallest Degree of sound Doctrine to be in the Apostle's Words; had he but dropped an Expression like it, or made the least Acknowledgment of a killing Letter of Scripture, till the Spirit gave Life to it, it must have passed for a full Recantation of all his Plain Account.

But to return to the further Consideration of the Words of the

* 2 Cor. iii. 6.

Institution : ' This is my Body, which is given for you ; this is ' my Blood, which is shed for many, for the Remission of Sins.' Who can know what is right or wrong in these Expressions, or in what Sense they are to be received, if he look only to the Sound of the Words according to the common Rules of speaking ? Or supposing he could guess out some tolerable Meaning ; yet if the Scripture has Doctrines concerning these things, teaching, asserting, and explaining how, and in what Sense his Body is given for us, and his Blood the Atonement for our Sins, in a Way and Manner above all human Thought and Conception ; then it follows, that no Meaning of the Words can be admitted, but that which is according to the Scripture Explication of the things mentioned by them.

Nothing therefore can be more unjustifiable and impracticable, than this Author's only Method of understanding the Nature of the Sacrament from the Words considered in themselves. For as this cannot be the Way of understanding the Truth of any Doctrines of Scripture, so least of all can it be the Way of understanding the true Meaning of the Words of the Institution ; for these Words have a more than ordinary Relation to, and Dependence upon all the Scriptures. For as Christ is in some respect or other represented, and made further known what he is to us, in almost every Page of Scripture ; so the Sacrament, which is to be done in Remembrance and Acknowledgment of what he is to us, must have its Relation to, and Dependence upon all those Places and Doctrines of Scripture, which teach what he is to us, and what we are to remember and acknowledge him to be. Therefore, all those Passages of Scripture, which teach and explain the Nature, Office, and Condition of Christ, directly and immediately teach and explain what we are to do, remember, and acknowledge in the Sacrament, and are in the same Degree true and proper Comments upon the Nature of the Sacrament, in which they are true Accounts and Descriptions of our Saviour. And that which we are to believe of our Saviour according to the Scriptures, that we are to remember and acknowledge of him in the Sacrament ; and therefore the Scripture Explication of the Sacrament is not, as this Author extravagantly supposes, confined to those Texts that mention expressly the Sacrament, or the Words of the Institution, but is as large and extensive as the Scripture Explication of the Nature, Office, and Condition of Christ as our Saviour. Wherever we are taught anything concerning him as such, there we are directly taught something of the true Nature and End of the Sacrament, and what we are to remember and acknowledge of him in the doing it.

'Search the Scriptures,' saith our Blessed Saviour, 'for they are they which testify of me.' Is not this in the plainest Manner referring us to all the Scriptures that speak of him as our Saviour, to know what we are to remember and acknowledge of him in the Sacrament? For since he saith, Search the Scriptures, for they are they that testify of me; and in the Sacrament, Do this in Remembrance or Acknowledgment of me; is it not directly as full to the Purpose, as if he had said, Search the Scriptures, for they are they which testify what you are to remember and acknowledge concerning me in the Sacrament? For that which they testify of him, that they must testify of the Nature and End of the Sacrament, which is to be done in Remembrance and Acknowledgment of that which is so testified of him. Since therefore every Scripture that testifies anything concerning Christ, as our Saviour, testifies so much of that which is to be acknowledged of him in the Sacrament, it plainly follows, that the Nature and End of the Sacrament can only be so far known, as the Nature, Character, Office and Condition of Christ is known; and that all those Scriptures which teach us the one, in the same Degree teach us the other, and are as necessary to teach us the Nature of the Sacrament, as the Nature of Christ; for this plain Reason, because the Sacrament is to remember and acknowledge that which is taught us concerning the Nature of Christ.

Hence again it appears with how little Judgment and less Truth this Author affirms, that the Nature and End of the Sacrament is only to be known from the bare Words of the Institution, understood according to the common Rules of speaking.

Again, another Argument which will make the Absurdity of this same Error still further apparent, may be taken from the following Passage of Scripture. When our Saviour said in the 6th of St. John, that his 'Flesh was Meat indeed, and his Blood was Drink indeed;' and that unless a 'Man did eat his Flesh, and drink his Blood, he had no Life in him; his Disciples were astonished at his Discourse, and said, How can this Man give us his Flesh to eat?' To which, by way of Answer, he said, 'The Words that I say unto you, they are Spirit, and they are Life.' For if our Saviour had thought at all like this Author, and had intended to be understood according to the common Rules of speaking, he would have spoken only common Language; and upon their not understanding what he said, he must have directed them to the right Way, and have said, Consider my Words only according to the common Rules of speaking, and then you will know all that is to be known by them.

Least of all could he have said, to help their understanding of them in a common Way, 'The Words that I speak unto you, they are Spirit, and they are Life;' for surely such a Way of speaking could not be a directing them to the common Rules of speaking amongst Men. For if he had intended to show them in the strongest Manner, how much what he said was different from, and superior to all the common Meaning of human Words; how could he have done this in a higher Degree, than by saying as he did, 'The Words that I speak unto you, they are Spirit, and they are Life.'

Now, the Question put by his Disciples, 'How can this Man give us his Flesh to eat?' comes as naturally in the Case of the Sacrament, where we are to eat his Body, and drink his Blood, as in the forementioned Place of St. John; and as there is the same Foundation for the same Question, so there is strictly the same Foundation for the same Answer, viz., 'The Words that I speak unto you, they are Spirit, and they are Life.'

And it is absolutely impossible for anyone to show, that the Words of the Institution are not as truly to be looked upon as Spirit and Life, as the other Words about eating his Flesh, and drinking his Blood. For surely, he that is obliged to own, that the Words in St. John, of eating his Flesh, and drinking his Blood, are Spirit and Life, cannot have any Proof that the Words in the Sacrament, of eating his Body and drinking his Blood, have nothing of that Spirit and Life in them. For if it be asked, Why the Words in St. John are Spirit and Life? The one only Reason is this, because they speak of eating Christ's Flesh and drinking his Blood, which is such a spiritual, living Participation of the Nature of Christ, or, in Scripture Words, such a putting on of Christ, as cannot be understood or obtained by outward and dead Words. And yet if the Words in the Sacrament must be said, not to be Spirit and Life, the one only Reason must be this, because they only speak of eating Christ's Body, and drinking his Blood.

But surely this is too great an Absurdity for anyone to hold; for it is saying, that the drinking his Blood, when joined with eating his Body, is only an human Expression, to be understood according to the common Rules of speaking; but that the drinking his Blood, when joined with eating his Flesh, is so great a Mystery, so above our common Ways of conceiving, that the Words expressing it, are said to be Spirit and Life.

But now if the Case be thus, if the Words in the Sacrament must be allowed to be Spirit and Life, for the same Reason that the Words in St. John are said to be Spirit and Life; then there is an End of this Author's poor Contrivance to enter into the whole Truth contained in the Sacrament, by only considering the Words according to the common Rules of speaking. It is a Contrivance as unfit for the Purpose, as weakly and improperly thought of, as an Iron Key to open the Kingdom of Heaven.

Again, If a Person hearing the Words of our Saviour, as recorded in St. John, had said to him, There is no more Spirit and Life in your Words than in the Words of anyone else, and they can mean no more than our Words according to the common Rules of speaking, such a Person might have been reckoned amongst those that blasphemed the Son of God.

Now if this Author will say the same thing concerning the Words of the Institution, of eating his Body and drinking his Blood, that they are no more Spirit and Life, than the Words of Men speaking of human things, and that nothing more is to be understood in them and by them, than according to the common Rules of speaking; I desire to know, how this could be a lesser Degree of Blasphemy, or a smaller Offence against the Son of God, than in the former Case? Or why it was not as right and justifiable for a Person to say, there was no Spirit and Life in the Words of our Saviour, speaking of eating his Flesh and drinking his Blood, as to say, there is no Spirit and Life in his Words, speaking in the Sacrament of eating his Body and drinking his Blood?

Lastly, Either therefore this Author must say with those that blaspheme the Son of God, that the Words of the Institution are not the Words of him, whose Words were Spirit and Life, or he must give up his only Method of understanding the true Meaning of them. For if they are Spirit and Life, then to seek for the Sense of such Words in the common Forms of speaking, is truly to seek the Living amongst the Dead.

From what has been said of the Words of the Institution, of their not being understood by the Apostles, of the Impossibility of their being understood according to the Sound of the Words in the common Ways of speaking; of the Impossibility of their being understood, till the great Doctrines and Articles of the Christian Faith were first known, and so became the plain and visible Explication of them; from these things we may sufficiently see the Falseness of this Author's chief Propositions concerning the Sacrament.

These Propositions are printed in a pompous Manner, with great Show of Significancy, as so many Pillars of Truth. The four first are the chief; if therefore they are removed, the others must go with them.

I shall begin with the fourth Proposition, because it is the chief; both those that are before, and those that follow it, depend entirely upon the Truth of it; and yet it has already appeared, and shall be made still more apparent, that there is not the least glimpse of Truth in it.

Speaking of our Saviour's instituting the Sacrament, he says as follows.

Proposition IV. 'It cannot be doubted, that he himself sufficiently declared to his first and immediate Followers, the whole of what he designed should be understood by it, or implied in it.'

And yet it has been fully shown to be out of all doubt, by a Variety of Arguments, that the first Followers of Christ, neither did, nor possibly could understand the whole Nature of the Sacrament from the Words of the Institution; which is all that our Saviour himself declared to them about it, and also all that this Author appeals to, as a Proof of his having sufficiently declared the whole Matter to them.

Further, what is asserted in this Proposition, is as directly contrary to Truth, Scripture, Fact, and our Saviour's own Declarations; as if it had been asserted, that our Saviour did that sufficiently himself, which he declared he had not done sufficiently; and also should not be done, till after his leaving the World. For at the time that he was about to depart from them, he expressly says unto them, 'I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit, when he the Spirit of Truth is come, he shall guide you into all Truth.'

From this Declaration of our Saviour, as well as from plain Facts recorded in the History of the Apostles, it is out of all doubt, that he left the Apostles in great Ignorance of the Christian Religion, and that it was not his Intention to deliver them out of this Ignorance by his own personal Instruction of them; but that they were to continue in this Ignorance till further Revelations, new Light, and certain Facts which were about to happen, should open to them a clear and full View of the Nature of the Christian Religion.

For first, here are many things that they were yet to be taught, which they then had not been taught, and of which they were then to continue ignorant; therefore it is plain, that they could not sufficiently know all that they were to know, or all that our Saviour designed they should know of any Article or Institution of the Christian Religion; that is, they were so far from knowing the whole Nature and End of the Sacrament, that they knew the whole Nature of nothing else in the Christian Religion, but knew everything that they did know, in the most imperfect Manner. For surely, if many things relating to the Christian

Salvation were yet to be kept secret from them, the Christian Salvation was imperfectly made known unto them; and therefore they could only have been taught in Part, and had only seen as it were some first Sketches, or beginning Lines of what they were afterwards to see in its true Fulness.

And that these many things, of which they were kept thus ignorant, were many things of the greatest Importance and Signification to the right Knowledge of the Christian Salvation, is evident from the Reason given by our Saviour, why they were not then taught by him, viz., 'But ye cannot bear them now.' For surely, if those many things were then not taught them, for this reason, because they were not able to bear them then; they must have been things of the greatest Importance, and most uncommon in their Nature; such things as were the hardest to be comprehended, the most difficult to be believed, and the most contrary to the common Conceptions of Men, and consequently such as were most necessary and essential to a right Knowledge of the Christian Salvation.

From this also it appears, how low a State of Knowledge the Apostles were in at the time of the Institution of the Sacrament, since they were not only ignorant of so many things of the greatest Importance to be known, but were in a State so contrary to this Knowledge, so full of Dispositions contrary to it, that they were then incapable of being taught it.

And though all this be declared by our Saviour himself, at the End of all his Instructions, when he was upon the Point of going from them; yet this Author, in direct and full Contradiction to Scripture Facts, and this express Declaration of our Saviour, says, 'It cannot be doubted, that he sufficiently declared 'to his Disciples the whole of what he designed should be understood by it.'

Whereas, the contrary to this is as plainly declared by our Saviour himself, as if he had said in express Words, I have instituted a Sacrament to be observed by you hereafter; but what is to be understood by it, and implied in it, can only be known by you now, in that poor, low, and ignorant Manner, in which you know other things at present concerning me. But when the many things which ye now cannot bear to be taught, shall by my Death, Resurrection, and Ascension, and the coming of the Holy Ghost, be made truly intelligible to you, and become the real Light of your Minds, then shall ye clearly see and know the whole of that which I designed to be understood by, and implied in this Sacrament of my Body and Blood.

For what our Saviour has said concerning the Imperfection of their Knowledge then, and their Unfitness to be instructed further, and of their Necessity of being taught in another Manner, is as plain a Proof of this, as if it had in express Words been applied to the Sacrament.

For though it is too much for anyone to pretend to say exactly what or how many these Things were, that they were then not in a Condition and Capacity to understand; yet this may with great Assurance be affirmed, that the Doctrines concerning Christ's Death, the Nature, Necessity, and Merits of his Sacrifice and Atonement for the Sins of the World, the Possibility and Necessity of eating his Flesh, and drinking his Blood, were certainly amongst those many things; and therefore this Holy Sacrament, which hath its Foundation in this Atonement for Sins, and is itself instituted for the eating his Flesh, and drinking his Blood must of all necessity be amongst those many things, of which they were then greatly ignorant, because they were not in a Condition to receive a right and full Knowledge of them. Therefore there is the fullest Proof that can be desired, that our Saviour did not, and could not intend sufficiently to declare to them the whole of what he intended should be understood and implied in the Sacrament of his Body and Blood.

And for this reason also He saith unto them, 'It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come. But if I depart, I will send him unto you.' Again, 'These things have I said, being yet present with you; but the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my Name, He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your Remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.'

As if he had said, 'It is expedient for you that I go away, because so long as I thus stay with you in the Flesh, ye cannot know, nor believe, nor enter into the true Nature, End, Merits and Effects of my Death, Resurrection and Ascension; neither can the Holy Ghost come upon you in my Name, till my Kingdom is thus set up, and these things are accomplished in me. Therefore these things I have said, being yet present with you; that is, I have spoken thus far of these things in a way suited to your present State; not that they should be the Matter of your present Knowledge, whilst you know nothing rightly, nor apply anything that I say, to its proper Object; but I have said these things to you, that they may be laid up in your Minds, then and then only to be truly understood, rightly remembered in their proper Place, and duly applied to their proper Objects, when the Holy Ghost shall come in my Name, that is, upon the Foundation of my Death, Resurrection and ‘Ascension, and shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your Remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.’

From all these things it appears sufficiently, that this Author’s fourth and fundamental Proposition is absolutely false, and grossly contradictory to Scripture, Facts, and the express Declaration of our Saviour; and that our Saviour himself, in his own Person, before he left the World, did not, could not intend sufficiently to declare to his Disciples the whole of what he intended should be understood by, and implied in the Sacrament.

And here I must observe to you, that the Confutation of this fourth Proposition, is not to be considered as the Discovery of a single Error in this Author, but as a full Detection of the general Falseness, and erroneous Procedure of his whole Book; for everything, and every other Proposition of any moment, throughout his whole Book, is founded upon the supposed Truth of this fourth Proposition. He cannot take one Step, in the way he is in, without it. He has not an Argument but what is built upon it. And all his Treatise, from the Beginning to the End, is as idle and wandering as a sick Man’s Dream, unless you grant him these two bulky Errors; 1st, That our Saviour himself, in the Words of the Institution, sufficiently declared to his Disciples the whole of what he intended should be understood by, and implied in the Sacrament. 2^{dly}, That the only Method of understanding the whole of what he so sufficiently declared to them, is to interpret the same bare Words of the Institution, according to the common Rules of speaking.

But as both these Positions have, as I think, been already shown to be gross Errors, directly contrary to Reason, Sense, Scripture, Facts, and the express Declaration of our Saviour himself, so the whole of his Treatise is already in the fullest Manner confuted.

But I shall now proceed to consider some poor, little Pretences of Argument, which this Author brings in Support of this false Proposition. Which are as follow: ‘For this being,’ says he, ‘a Positive Institution, depending entirely upon his Will; and not designed to contain anything in it, but what he himself should please to affix to it, it must follow, that he declared his Mind about it, fully and plainly,’ p. 4.

This is his whole Proof, that our Saviour himself sufficiently taught his Disciples the whole Nature and Meaning of the Sacrament, and that they wholly understood it.

The thing that he would here speak to, is very improperly expressed, and ought to have proceeded thus: ‘This being a ‘positive Institution, by his Will and Pleasure introduced into a Religion, which contains the Means and Method of the Salvation of Mankind by himself the Institutor, cannot be designed by him to be any ways understood, or to have any other Nature, Meaning, and End in it, than such as is truly and fully according to the Doctrines of that Religion into which he has introduced it, and more especially according to that Part of Religion in which he has placed it.’

Whereas instead of this, this Author poorly says, it was not designed to contain anything in it, but what he should please to affix to it. For he put nothing to be contained in it, he affixed nothing to it, but only placed it in the Heart, or midst of a Religion; which Religion, as soon as it was truly known by his Disciples, would sufficiently declare and explain to them the whole Nature and End of this positive Institution. In consequence of what he had just now erroneously said, he proceeds thus: ‘Because otherwise he must be supposed to institute a Duty, of which none could have any Notion without his Institution; and at the same time not to instruct his Followers sufficiently what that Duty was to be.’ Whereas instead of this, it ought to have been expressed thus: ‘Because otherwise, if he had not so instituted this Sacrament, as to have its Nature, End, and Effects explained and determined by that Religion, and chiefly by that Part of Religion, in which it was placed, it could never have appeared to any of his Followers, what they were to do in it, or that there was any Reason in its Institution, or any Benefit to be had from the Observance of it.’

As for instance; If the Religion, of which the Sacrament is a Part, did not teach us how his Body is given and his Blood shed for us, if it did not teach us something concerning the eating his Flesh, and drinking his Blood, what could the mentioning of these two strange things in the Sacrament signify to us, or how could we have any Notion of what was to be done or acknowledged by the Sacrament? For if the Sacrament speaks of anything that the Religion in which it is placed speaks nothing of; if it represents anything that that Religion has not to be represented, then it can signify no more in that Religion after its Institution, than it did before. But if to be a Part of that Religion in which it is appointed, it must speak the Language of that Religion; if the things that it represents, must be the Things of that Religion, then it plainly follows, 1st, That our Saviour himself in Person, at the Time, and by the Words of the Institution, did not, could not fully and plainly declare the whole Nature of the Sacrament; because the Language which it spoke, and the Things that it represented, were the Language and Things of a Religion, which was not, and could not then be known by his Disciples. 2dly, It follows also, that our Saviour had fully and sufficiently provided for their right Knowledge of this Sacrament, because it was so worded and so placed in their Religion, that the first true Knowledge of their Religion would become the full and clear Explication of it.

This Sacrament was instituted before the Religion, of which it was to be a Part, was known; is it therefore any wonder in itself, or any Matter of Accusation of our Saviour, that when he appointed this Institution, he left it to be then only understood, when the Religion, of which it was to be a Part, should be known? And if he left his Disciples in the same Ignorance of the Sacrament, as of the Nature, Merits, and End of his Death, Resurrection and Ascension, is there any more to find fault with in the one, than in the other?

And this Author might with the same show of Argument prove, that he did declare unto them, fully and plainly, the whole Nature, Merits, and End of his Death. For it may as well be said of that, as of the Sacrament, that he must have fully and plainly declared his Mind about it; otherwise he must be supposed to have instructed them of a Matter of Faith, which, without his Instruction, they could have no Notion of, and at the same time not to instruct them fully about it.

Now if anything may be said in defence of what our Saviour did to his Disciples with regard to that imperfect State in which he left them, as to the Knowledge of the Nature, Merits, and End of his Death; if he might justly leave the true and full Knowledge of it, to its only proper Time, and only proper Manner of being fully known; namely, till the Consequences of his Death, till his Resurrection, Ascension, and coming of the Holy Ghost, should prove the Nature, Power, Merits, and End of it; then the same may and must be said in defence of our Saviour's leaving his Disciples so ignorant of the Nature, End, and Effects of the Holy Sacrament. It was not because he was deficient in instructing them, but because he instructed them with the greatest Wisdom; not giving them verbal Explications of Things which could not so be understood by them, but leaving them to be informed in the one only proper Time, and the only proper Manner; namely, when by the Knowledge of his Death, Resurrection, and Ascension, and by the coming of the Holy Ghost, they should truly and fully know the whole of that Religion, of which this Sacrament was appointed to be a Part.

All therefore which this Author saith of the Necessity of their knowing sufficiently at first from the Words of the Institution, the whole Nature of it, because it was a Positive Institution, and could have no more in it than he intended should be in it, are mere empty Words; for it is granted on all Sides, that the Institution can be only that which Christ intended it should be, and can imply no more than he designed should be implied in it. But the Question is, how we are to know all that he designed should be understood by, and implied in it.

This Author says, this can only be known from the bare Words of the Institution considered in themselves, according to the common Rules of speaking. Therefore, according to this Author, had Socrates said the same Things that Christ said, the Institution had been just the same thing as it is; it had had the same Meaning, and there had been neither more or less in it. This cannot be denied: For if the Words of the Institution are only to be understood according to the common Meaning or Sound of Words in common Life; then they must have the same Meaning, and signify neither more or less, whether they be applied to Christ, or Socrates.

On the other hand, we say, since Christ appointed this Institution to stand in a certain Place, to be a certain Part, and to have Relation to certain Doctrines of a Religion not known, when this Institution was appointed; that therefore what Christ meant by it, and would have implied in it, can then only be fully known, and when that Religion in which it was to have a certain Place, and of which it was to be a certain Part, and to whose Doctrines it was to be related, came to be fully known and understood. In short, that a Christian Institution, ingrafted into the Christian Religion, and connected with its chief Doctrines, could then only be fully known, when the Christian Religion was fully known.

Thus for Instance: Let it be supposed that at the Time of instituting the Sacrament, the Apostles had no other Way of knowing what was meant by it, but by considering the Words in themselves, according to the common Sound of the Words. Yet, if after the Death, and Resurrection, and Ascension of our Saviour, and the coming of the Holy Ghost, they knew a Religion, which they knew nothing of before, and saw this Sacrament to be a Part of that Religion; had they not then got a new and sure Way of understanding what our Saviour meant by it? And had they not this very new Means of understanding it from our Saviour himself? Did not he teach them all that they were taught by his Death, Resurrection, and Ascension, and by the coming of the Holy Ghost? And was not that which he thus taught them in this manner, to be as sacred with them, and as much to be adhered to, as when he only taught them the Words, outward Form, and Matter of the Sacrament? And if he thus led them into the Possession and Knowledge of every Truth and Doctrine upon which this Sacrament was founded, and to which it was related; is he not still the Teacher of the Sacrament, as well as he was the Teacher of it in the Words of the Institution?

Vainly therefore doth this Author thus further argue, that seeing 'no one can be a Judge, but the Institutor himself, of what he designed should be contained in it; therefore, supposing him 'not to have spoken his Mind plainly about it, it is impossible 'that any other Person should make up the Defect,' p. 5.

Vainly, I say, is all this argued, because here is no Defect charged upon the Words of the Institution, nor any other Person appointed or appealed to, to make up the Defect. The Words of the Institution are allowed to be full and plain, as to all that is positive in this Institution, both as to the Matter and Form of the Sacrament: They were as plain at the first as they are now, or ever can be. But that Part which is not positive in this Institution, which is the greatest and chiefest Part of it, namely, the Truths signified and represented, and acknowledged by the outward Form and Matter of the Sacrament; as the Body of Christ given, and his Blood shed for the Sins of the World, and the Eating his Flesh and drinking his Blood were not then, are not now, nor ever can be truly and rightly known from the Plainness of the Words of the Institution alone. Yet here is not the smallest Defect either in the Institutor or the Institution. For since the Institution was not an independent thing, made for itself, and on its own Account, nor to be practised at the Time it was appointed; it was no Defect in it, that it did not explain itself, or was not then known, when it was not to be practised. And seeing the Institution was appointed for the Sake of a Religion, that then was not, but soon should be, it could be no Defect in the Institutor, that it was not known sooner than it was wanted, or till the Time came, that everything else that was to be practised with it, or for the Sake of it, were fully and truly known.

It was no Defect in our Saviour as a Teacher of Religion, that his Religion was not known nor understood, till after his Ascension into Heaven, and the Coming of the Holy Ghost; because his Ascension, and the coming of the Holy Ghost, were to be fundamental Articles and principal Parts of his Religion.

So also it was no Defect in him, as an Institutor of the Sacrament, that the true Nature and End of it was not known, when he first instituted it, or from the bare Words of the Institution; or that it was not to be known, till such things as were to be the principal Parts of it came to be known.

And as that which was further and fully known of the Christian Religion, after our Saviour's Death, was not by anyone's making up the Defect of his teaching, but was solely done by his own Power, and in his own Name; so all that which was further and fully known of the Sacrament after the Death of Christ, was not by anyone's making up the Defect of his Institution, but was his own further teaching them by his Death, Resurrection, and Ascension, and by the coming of the Holy Ghost. For as he thus by his own Power set up his own Kingdom, so all that which was plainly shown and declared by his Kingdom, was strictly shown and declared by himself.

And as it necessarily followed, that they must know more of Christ as their Saviour, and the Manner of their Salvation, after his Death, Resurrection, and Ascension, and Mission of the Holy Ghost, than they did before; so also it necessarily follows, that they must have exactly the same Increase of Knowledge at that Time, concerning the Nature of the Sacrament, which they had concerning their Saviour; because the Sacrament is expressly appointed to do that which it does, in Remembrance and Acknowledgment of that Saviour so made known. And therefore the more they knew of him as their Saviour, the more they must know of that which was to be remembered and acknowledged of him in the Holy Sacrament.

All therefore which this Author says, of the making up the Defect, if Christ did not at first make the whole of the Institution plain, is of no Significancy; for what they further knew rightly of it, when they knew their Religion, and saw how and in what manner it was a Part of it; all this further true and real Knowledge of it, came as plainly and undeniably from him, as the Words of the Institution did; and what they were taught by his Death and Resurrection, and the Consequences of them, was as truly from him, as what they were taught by his Birth and Incarnation, and miraculous Conversation with them.

Having thus despatched this Author's Fourth and chiefest Proposition, and his Proof of it; I shall now go back to his First, which stands thus.

Proposition I. 'The partaking of the Lord's Supper, is not a 'Duty of itself, or a Duty apparent to us from the Nature of the 'thing; but a Duty made such to Christians, by the positive 'Institution of Jesus Christ,' p. 2.

There is a great deal of Error and Deceit proposed to the Reader in this Proposition. For it is to make him believe, that the Nature and End of the Sacrament is wholly positive, and that all that we are to mean, and intend, and do by it, is something that we are only obliged to do by virtue of the Institution: All which is absolutely false.

For the Institution, as to its Nature and End, is so far from being wholly positive, that its Nature and End hath nothing positive in it. And all that which it is our Duty to intend and do by the Sacrament, is to be intended and done for itself, on its own Account; and that which is positive in the Sacrament, is only as a Means, or Mark, or Sign of our doing it. That which is positive in this Institution, and not to be done but because of the Will of the Institutor, is something entirely distinct, and different from the Nature, End and Intent of the Institution. And that in which the whole Reason, Meaning, End and Intent of this Institution essentially consists; is something that is to be done for itself, and does not take its Reason of being done from the Institution.

Now if all that is to be done, implied and intended by our celebrating the Lord's Supper, was, and is absolutely necessary to be done, though the Way of doing it by the Sacrament had never been instituted; then the Meaning, End and Intent of the Sacrament cannot be positive; and if our Obligation to do all that is contained in this Meaning and Intent of the Sacrament, is an Obligation arising from the Thing itself, then this is not a positive Duty.

Now the Meaning, End and Intent of the Sacrament, is to remember, acknowledge and profess Christ to be our Saviour, and the Manner in which he is our Saviour; but all this is to be done on its own Account, from the Nature of the Thing itself, and must have been done, though the Sacrament had not been instituted; therefore the Meaning, End and Intent of the Sacrament has nothing positive in it, and contains only our natural Duty to Christ, arising from the Relation between him and us. For to acknowledge and profess Christ to be our Saviour, and in all the Respects in which he is our Saviour, is no more a positive Duty, than it is a positive Duty to acknowledge and profess the Goodness of God towards us; but is a Duty of itself, of the same Nature, and of the same Obligation, as Faith and Love, and Adoration of our Creator and Redeemer are.

But to show still more plainly, that the Nature, End and Intent of the Sacrament, is not positive, but entirely distinct and different from that which is positive in the Sacrament; take the following Instance.

Let it be supposed, that God by a positive Command enjoined the People of one Age to build an Altar for his Honour and Worship; the People of another Age to set up a Tabernacle, and a third to build a Temple for the same End and Intent; namely, for his Honour and Worship.

Now here are three positive Appointments, and three positive Duties; and all that is positive in the one, is very different from that which is positive in the other ; yet the Meaning, End and Intent of all three is the same, namely, the Honour and Worship of God ; therefore the Meaning, End and Intent of positive Appointments, is something not positive, but entirely different and distinct from that which is the positive Part of it.

Now this is exactly the Case of the Sacrament : Bread and Wine appointed to be used in acknowledgment of Jesus Christ as our Saviour, is as the Altar or Tabernacle, appointed to be built for the Honour and Worship of God. And as it was purely depending upon the Will of God, whether it should be an Altar or a Tabernacle, or a Temple, that should be built for his Honour and Worship ; so it was solely depending upon the Will of Jesus Christ, whether it should be Bread and Wine, or any other thing else that was to be used in Remembrance and Acknowledgment of him. And as the Honour and Worship of God, which was the sole Meaning, End and Intent of building either Altar or Tabernacle, was a natural Duty, founded in the Relation between God and his Creatures, and was something that was to be done, though no Altar or Tabernacle had ever been built ; so the Remembrance and Acknowledgment of Jesus Christ as our Saviour, which is the End and Intent of our using Bread and Wine in the Sacrament, was a natural Duty, founded in the Relation between Christ and us, and was something that was to be done for itself, though the Use of Bread and Wine in the Sacrament had never been appointed. It is therefore an unpardonable Error in this Author, to represent the Sacrament, as containing nothing in its Meaning, End and Intent, that was a Duty itself, or to be done upon its own Account ; but that everything implied by it, was only a Duty by virtue of the Institution. For the Reverse of all this is the very Truth ; for all that is meant, implied and intended by the Sacrament, is as much our Duty to do on its own Account, as it is our Duty to believe in God ; and the positive Part, the Use of Bread and Wine in this Sacrament, is only an appointed Way of our expressing, acknowledging and doing that, which it was our Duty to express, acknowledge and do, though we had never been taught to use Bread and Wine for that End.

And indeed this is the Case of all positive Appointments and Institutions of Revealed Religion ; the Meaning, End and Intent of them, was always something entirely different from that which was positive in them ; for the same Reason, that an Idea or Sentiment is entirely different from that English or Latin Word by which you are to express it, or to put yourself, or another Person in mind of it. For the positive Part of an Institution has much of the Nature of Language in it, and is to express and teach something by Symbols and outward Things, better than it could be expressed or taught by mere Words; but that which is meant, implied, and intended by the Symbol, is as different from it in its whole Nature, as the Idea of Sentiment meant and intended by an English or Latin Word, is different from it in its whole Nature. To look therefore, as this Author doth, for the whole Nature, End and Intent of the Sacrament, in the positive Part of this Institution, is as absurd, as to look for the true Knowledge of God and the Divine Attributes from the English Word, God. For the Things meant and intended by the Sacrament, are as entirely and wholly different from that Use of Bread and Wine by which they are expressed, as the Divine Nature is entirely and wholly different from that English or Latin Word, which is to express or remind us of that Divine Nature.

Great Part of the Jewish Religion consisted in positive Appointments and Institutions; but the Meaning, End and Intent of them was entirely of another Nature, and consisted of such things as were Duties of themselves, and of the highest Necessity to be done. For the End and Intent of their Institutions were either to keep up and exercise their Faith and Hope of a Redeemer, or to set forth the Characters and Marks by which they should know him, or to represent to them the Nature and Manner of their expected Redemption, or to teach them some inward dying unto Sin, and inward living unto God, or some other Truth, Doctrine or Practice, that was to be acknowledged and done for itself, though no positive Institution had ever been made on its Account. And the one only Reason why the greatest Part of the Jews lived in such a total Ignorance of their Religion, was, because they had learned it in the same Manner as this Author has learned Christianity; they would see nothing in their Institutions but what a Heathen might as well have seen, nothing but what could be seen in the Outside of them; just as this Author will see no more in the Sacrament, than what a Heathen that knows only the Words of the Institution may see in it. They were too learned and rational to allow of any Mysteries at the Bottom of their Services, as this Author is too sober a Critic to allow of any Mystery in the Institution of the Sacrament. And as they, through a blind Zeal for the Letter, and to show their Fidelity to them, lost all that which was truly meant and intended by them; so this Author, full of the same Zeal for the Letter and Plainness of this Christian Institution, is doing all that he can to make us lose all that is truly meant and intended by it.

The Sacrifices of the Jews were at the bottom, only so many Representations and Applications of that great Sacrifice for the Sins of the World, first promised to all Mankind, in these Words: 'The Seed of the Woman shall bruise the Serpent's Head;' but because this was not expressly said in the Institution of any of their Sacrifices, this is done in consequence of that first Promise, or this is to show you how and in what manner you are to seek and find your Redeemer, because the Letter was not thus adapted to these carnal Men, they contented themselves with the Religion of slaying Beasts. Just as this Author is only a bare Eater of Bread and Wine in the Sacrament, because it is not there expressly said, what great Mysteries of Christ as our Saviour are represented by it. The Jews had many Passages in their Scriptures that called them to the Spirituality of their Religion, and showed them the inward Meaning, Spirit and Intent of all their Institutions; but because it was not expressly said, This is an Explication of such an Ordinance, or this that is here said, relates to the true Meaning and Intent of such an Institution, all these Passages of Scripture were neglected by them, and not applied to their proper Objects. It is just thus with this Author; the New Testament abounds with Passages that prove, teach and explain the true Meaning, End and Intent of the Holy Sacrament; but because those Passages don't expressly say, This is the Proof or Explication of what is said in the Institution, they are by him overlooked and rejected, as having nothing to do with it. The learned Pharisee, in order to know the Meaning and Intent of killing a Heifer in Sacrifice, or of circumcising the Flesh, would only look for such Places of Scripture, as appoint the killing of an Heifer, and the circumcising the Flesh; just so this Author, to know the true Meaning and Intent of the Institution of the Sacrament, only searches the Scripture in the same manner. He seeks only such Places as expressly mention the Institution, or repeat the Words of it.

The Jews neither expected nor allowed any Benefits and Merits of Christ to be obtained by means of their Sacrifices; because such Benefits were not literally mentioned in the Institution of their Sacrifices; just so this Author, neither expects nor allows the Merits and Benefits of Christ's Passion to be applied to us by the Holy Sacrament, because the Application of such Benefits and Merits is not expressly mentioned in the Words of the Institution. Thus was it that the Jews never found their Saviour in the Old Testament; and thus it is, that this Author has lost him in the New.

And indeed, upon his Principles, it is impossible that anyone should ever know anything of the real Nature and Truth of the Jewish or Christian Religion. For let anyone but search into the Nature, Meaning and Intent of the Jewish Institutions, as this Author doth into the Nature and Intent of the Sacrament ; and he must, as I said above, be rendered stone-blind to all the Mysteries of the Old Testament as well as of the New.

For as Christ was the Substance, the Heart, and true Meaning of all their Ordinances, though not mentioned expressly in the Letter of their positive Institutions, they were obliged by this Author's Principles, not to acknowledge him to be in them, and to reject all such Interpretations as led to him ; and to allow nothing to be meant by their positive Institutions, but that which the Words of them understood, according to the common Rules of speaking, declared to be in them : Therefore every Jew that had this Author's Principles, was under a Necessity of being stone-blind, or totally ignorant of the real Nature and Truth of the Jewish Religion.

Again, the Apostle saith, ' He is not a Jew which is one outwardly, neither is that Circumcision which is outward in the Flesh ; but he is a Jew which is one inwardly, and Circumcision 'is that of the Heart, in the Spirit, and not in the Letter.'*

But according to this Author's Principles, you are to maintain, that he only is a Jew, which is one outwardly, and that only is Circumcision which is outward in the Flesh ; for to allow Judaism to have anything inwardly more than is in the outward Letter, or Circumcision to be anything else than that which is expressed in the Words of the Institution, is a thing not lawful to be done upon this Author's Principles. This I think may sufficiently show you the Truth of what I said to you in the Beginning, that if you accept of this Author's Key of Knowledge, for the right understanding the Nature of the Sacrament ; you will not only lose all the right Knowledge of the Sacrament, but be rendered a Blind, Deaf and Dead Reader of all the other most important Doctrines of Scripture. For, according to his Principles, you are to see no more Spirit, Life, or Mystery in any other Sayings of our Saviour, than in that of the Sacrament ; and low as he had reduced that, it is full as high and mysterious, and deep in its Meaning, as anything in the whole Nature of the Christian Religion can be allowed to be by this Author.

But to return ; There are plainly two distinct and essential Parts of the Sacrament, which constitute its whole Nature. The first is in these Words, ' This is my Body which is given for you, ' this is my Blood which is shed for the Remission of Sins.'

What is here said by our Lord Christ, we are to acknowledge to be true ; therefore we are to own and acknowledge this great Truth, that this Bread and Wine are made Symbols and Memorials of, viz., that his Body is given for us, and his Blood shed for the Remission of Sins; and consequently all that the Scripture teaches concerning the Truth, Reality and Manner in which he is the Sacrifice, Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, is in this Sacrament to be of all necessity acknowledged and confessed by us. And we cannot perform this Sacrament according to what it is, unless we see and own all that to be in it, which Christ saw and owned to be in it; unless we present it to him in the same Meaning, as he presented it to his Disciples. For if Christ has declared this Nature and Meaning to be in it, we cannot perform this Sacrament according to Christ's Declaration, unless we also in our Performance of it, declare that same Nature and Meaning to be in it. Therefore the Acknowledgment of Christ's being the Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, is an essential and important Part of the Sacrament. If we were to mistake or neglect something in the right Use of Bread and Wine in the Sacrament, such Mistake would only relate to the outward positive Part of this Institution, which has no Obligation upon us but from Divine Appointment; but if we refuse to own and confess Christ to be the Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, we sin against God and the Nature of things, as those Atheists do, who refuse to own that it was the Goodness of God that created them.

Secondly, The other essential, and no less important Part of the Sacrament is, the eating the Body, and drinking the Blood of Christ. This is plainly another essential Part of the Sacrament, entirely distinct from the other. The one respects Christ, as he is the Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins; the other shows that he is to be owned and received as a Principle of Life to us.

The other Words, 'Do this in Remembrance of me,' relate equally to both these Parts, and are only as if our Saviour had said after the Institution; Let this, which I have thus appointed to be done, be your Acknowledgment of that Salvation which is received through me, both as I am the Atonement and Satisfaction for Sin, and a Principle of Life to all that lay hold of me.

You cannot help seeing that all this is plain, easy and natural in this Explication of the Words of the Institution, and that I have used no Art or Force to come at it, and that no one can find any fault with it; but he that is unwilling to own these two great Truths of Scripture, that Christ as our Saviour is the Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, and a Principle of Life to us. The short of the Matter is this; the Scriptures are full of Proofs of these two great and fundamental Characters, that he is in one respect the Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, and in another, a Principle of a new Life to us ; if therefore these two essential Characters of our Saviour, which contain all that is said of him as such, are not to be acknowledged by us in the Sacrament ; then the Sacrament must be said to be instituted for the Denial of Christ ; and the Words, ‘ Do this in ‘ Remembrance of me,’ must have this Meaning, Do this in Denial of me : For if he is not to be remembered, as the Atonement and Satisfaction for Sin, and as a Principle of new Life to us ; then he is not to be remembered and acknowledged as he is, and therefore in the strictest Sense is to be denied.

Hence it appears, that this Author’s Plain Account can have no Truth or Reasonableness in it, but upon this Supposition, that Christ Jesus is not a real Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, nor a real Principle of Life to us. For if these things were true of Christ as our Saviour, then the Sacrament, which is done in Acknowledgment of him, as such, must also of necessity acknowledge these Truths. Therefore this Author’s Plain Account, which does not acknowledge these things of Christ, can have no Truth or Reasonableness in it, but upon this Supposition, that these things are not true of Christ.

For if these things were real Doctrines of Scripture, it must follow, that they were to be acknowledged in the Sacrament, even though they were not expressly mentioned or pointed at in the Words of the Institution. For since the Sacrament is to be done in Remembrance and Acknowledgment of Christ, it necessarily follows, that that which the Scriptures teach us concerning the Nature and Character of Christ, is to be remembered and acknowledged of him in and by the Sacrament, because the Sacrament is appointed for that End. And therefore, since this Author will not allow our Saviour to be thus acknowledged in the Sacrament, he must deny that he is thus described in Scripture.

Now deny either of these Characters of our Saviour, and you deny all the Christian Religion ; the Words, Saviour, Salvation, Redemption, and such like, have no proper Meaning, Truth or Reality in them.

But if you allow these Characters of our Saviour, that he really is, what he said he was, and what all the Scriptures affirm of him ; namely, the Atonement for Sins, and a Principle of a new Life to us ; then the Sacrament, which is the Representation and Acknowledgment of these two great Truths, has all that is great, mysterious, and adorable in the Christian Religion, centred in it. And had this Author believed these two great Doctrines concerning our Saviour, it had been as impossible for him to have his present poor Notion of the Sacrament, as it was impossible for St. John, who knew that the Word was God, and that the same Word was made Flesh, to have had so poor a Notion of Jesus Christ, as those Jews had, who took him to be only the Carpenter's Son.

Hence also it plainly appears, that seeing these two great Truths are the essential Parts of the Sacrament, and that it is appointed to express our Faith of them ; that the Nature and End of the Sacrament is not, as this Author teaches, to turn an Act of our Memory upon Christ ; but that it is to exercise our Faith in Christ, and to be our open Profession of these two great Truths ; and also that our Faith is thereby exercised in this twofold Manner ; 1st, In believing Christ to be the true Atonement for our Sins, and a real Principle of Life to us : 2dly, In believing that this Atonement, and his being a Principle of Life to us, is made certain and confirmed to us, by taking the Bread and Wine to be the true Significations of them.

For when our Saviour says, Do this, it is the same thing as if he had said, Do these two Things appointed in the Sacrament, as your Act of Faith, that I am both the Atonement for your Sins, and a Principle of Life to you. Don't say bare and empty outward Words, when you say, ' This is my Body which is given 'for you, and this my Blood which is shed for the Remission of 'Sins ;' but let Faith say them, and acknowledge the Truth of them : When you eat my Body, and drink my Blood, don't let your Mouth only eat, or perform the outward Action ; but let Faith, which is the true Mouth of the inward Man, believe that it really partakes of me, and that I enter in by Faith ; and when you thus by Faith perform these two essential Parts of the Sacrament, then, and then only may what you do be said to be done in Remembrance of me, and of what I am to you. For nothing remembers me but Faith, nothing acknowledges me but Faith, nothing finds me, nothing knows me but Faith.

I appeal to the most ordinary Understanding for the Truth of all this ; for it is so plain and visible, that nothing but Art or Prejudice can avoid it. For since our Saviour says, This is my Body which is given for you, this is my Blood which is shed for the Remission of Sins, what he says, that we are to say ; and what we say, that we are to believe ; and therefore what we are here to do, is an Act or Exercise of Faith. And since in these Words he says two Things, the one, that he is the Atonement for our Sins ; the other, that this Bread and this Wine are the Signification or Application of that Atonement, or that which we are to take for it ; therefore we in doing this, are by Faith to say and believe these two Things ; and therefore all that we here do, is Faith, and Faith manifested in this twofold manner.

Again, seeing our Saviour commands us to eat his Body, and drink his Blood, we are to say and believe, that his Body and Blood are there signified and exhibited to us; and that his Body and Blood may be eaten and drank, as a Principle of Life to us; and therefore Faith is all, or all is Faith in this other essential Part of the Sacrament; and we cannot possibly do that which our Saviour commands us to do, unless it be done by Faith.

But now this Author, in his Plain Account, takes no more notice of these two great essential Parts of the Sacrament, than if there was not one Word about them: And yet they are so much there, that in the whole Institution, there is not a Word about anything else. For the Words, 'Do this in Remembrance of me,' are as entirely distinct from the Institution, as a Command to do a thing, is distinct from the thing that is to be done. They enter no more into the Nature of the Institution, nor any more teach us what is to be done in it, than if Christ had only said, 'Do this as your Duty to me.' Had he said thus, it would easily have been seen, that the Institution must be entirely distinct from such a Command to observe it. And yet his saying, 'Do this in Remembrance of me,' has neither more nor less in it, than if he had said, 'Do this as your Duty to me.'

The plain Truth is this; The Institution consists of those two essential Parts just mentioned; that is, in offering, presenting, and pleading before God, by Faith, the Atonement of Christ's Body and Blood, and in owning him to be a Principle of Life to us, by our eating his Body and Blood: This is the entire, whole Institution. The words, 'Do this in Remembrance of me,' are only the Command to observe the Institution. Do this, is a Command to do all that had been mentioned in the Institution; and the Words, in Remembrance of me, don't show what the Institution is, or what is to be done in it, but only the Reason, why such an Institution, whatever it is, was commanded to be observed.

The Words therefore, in Remembrance of me, are not a Part of the Institution, but are only a Part of the Command to observe the Institution, and only show the Reason why such an Institution is commanded to be observed.

And yet this Poor Man (for so I must call one so miserably insensible of the Greatness of the Subject he is upon) can find nothing in the Institution, but, first, Bread and Wine, not placed and offered before God, as first signifying and pleading the Atonement of his Son's Body and Blood, and then eaten and drank in Signification of having our Life from him: But Bread and Wine set upon a Table, to put the People, that see it, in mind, that by and by they are to exercise an Act of the Memory. And then, secondly, this same Bread and Wine afterwards brought to every-one in particular, not for them to know, or believe that they are receiving anything of Christ, or partaking of anything from him; but only to let them know, that the very instant they take the Bread and Wine into their Mouth, is the very time for them actually to excite that Act of the Memory, for the exciting of which, Bread and Wine had been before set upon a Table.

This is this Author's Great Point in the Observance of the Sacrament, and what he calls the peculiar Nature of this Duty. And this he teaches, not because the Church, or Saint, or Father of any Age since Christ, has taught him so; but because being a serious Man, and of great Exactness in weighing of Words, he has found out, that the Words, in Remembrance of me, which are only a Part of the Command to observe the Institution, are the whole of the Institution itself; and that therefore nothing is to be admitted into it but an Act of the Memory, and Bread and Wine taken into the Mouth to excite that Act of the Memory; because Remembrance which is the whole of this Duty, neither is nor can be anything else but an Act of the Memory.

Thus by making first the Words, in Remembrance of me, the whole Essence of the Institution, when they are as distinct from it, as they are from these Words, 'This is my Body which is given for you;' and teach us only the reason why we are commanded to do that which is to be done in the Institution:

And then, 2dly, By limiting the Word Remembrance, and allowing nothing to be meant by it, but an Act of the Memory: By the help of these two equally false and shameful Steps, this Author has stripped the Institution of every Mystery of our Salvation, which the Words of Christ show to be in it, and which every Christian that has any true Faith, though but as a Grain of Mustard Seed, is sure of finding in it.

God, we know, made a certain great Promise to Abraham; now let it be supposed, that God, after the making of this Promise to him, had enjoined him to come frequently to that Place where the Promise was made to him in Remembrance of it: Could it be supposed, that the Remembrance here spoken of, could signify anything else, but an Exercise of his Faith in that Promise; and as an outward Sign of his declaring to God his full Belief of it? Or could anything be more extravagant, than to say that God here only required of Abraham an Act of his Memory, because the word Remembrance relates only to the Memory?

Now this is strictly the Case of the Sacrament. In the Institution our Saviour has said, 'This is my Body and Blood, which 'is given and shed for you, for the Remission of Sins;' in the Institution he has bidden us to eat his Body, and drink his Blood. All this is proposed to our Faith, just as the Promise was proposed to Abraham's Faith. When therefore he bids us to do this, that is, do these two things in Remembrance of him; can it be supposed, that the Remembrance of him can be anything else but an Act of Faith in him, believing and owning all that concerning him, which we say and do in and by the Sacrament? For nothing but Faith can see, or hear, or understand, or do that which is to be done in the Sacrament: Nothing but Faith can say, that this his Body and Blood are the Atonement of our Sins: Nothing but Faith can say, that the Bread and Wine are his Body and Blood: Nothing but Faith can eat his Body, and drink his Blood: Nothing but Faith can say, that his Body and Blood are a Principle of Life to us: Therefore the Command to do these Things, is a Command to exercise so many Acts of Faith; because the Things commanded can only be done by Faith; and the Person, in Remembrance of whom these Things are to be done, can only be remembered by Faith. For to remember him, neither is nor can be anything else, but to have Faith in him.

And therefore it is out of all doubt, that when he said, 'Do 'this in Remembrance of me,' nothing more nor less can possibly be meant by it, than if he had said, Do all this, as your Act of Faith in me.

Since therefore this is so plainly the Nature of the Institution, which is solely appointed to express our Faith in these two great Characters of our Saviour, both as he is the Atonement for our Sins, and a Principle of Life to us; you may well ask how it was possible for this Author, with his Eyes open, and the Scriptures before him, to give us so false and so poor an Account of it.

Now the one only Reason why the Scriptures are thus useless to him, and why he is forced to find out a Doctrine that is not in them, is this, it is because he is blinded with a Philosophy, and Science falsely so called, which will not allow him to believe, that Jesus Christ was truly and essentially God, as well as a perfect Man: For the Foundation and Possibility of Christ's being a real Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, and a real Principle of Life to us, was his Divine Nature; but as this Author cannot be suspected to believe this great Foundation Doctrine, that Christ was truly and essentially God, very God of very God, so he could not believe him to be a true and real Atonement for Sins, or a true and real Principle of Life to us, and therefore could admit nothing of these Truths into his Account of the Sacrament.

The way therefore that this Author came by his Plain Account of the Sacrament, was not, as he would have you believe, from a bare impartial Consideration of the Words of the Institution, but from his wrong Knowledge of the Christian Faith. He had first lost and renounced all the right and true Knowledge of our Saviour in the Scriptures, and therefore was obliged not to find it in the Sacrament. And because it would be openly confessing to the World, that he was in the Sense of the Scripture an Antichrist, if he should plainly have told you, that he did not believe Christ to be truly and essentially God, or the Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, or a Principle of Life to us; therefore he only tells you, that he has been led into this Account of the Sacrament, by a bare Consideration of the Words of the Institution, according to the common Rules of speaking.

Now if this Author will declare, that he sincerely believes Jesus Christ to be truly and really God by Nature, and the true real Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, and a true and real Principle of Life to us; I shall be glad, and he ought to be glad, that I have been the Occasion of his declaring Things so important to himself, and to the Matter in hand. But this I may still say, that he could not have had this Faith, when he wrote his Plain Account, unless he may be supposed to have had it, but would not write of the Sacrament conformably to it.

And, Secondly, If he will now declare, that without any Equivocation or mental Reserve, he fully believes these great Truths, no further a Recantation of his whole Book need to be desired.

For if these Things are true and undeniable Characters of our Saviour; then it follows, that the Nature and End of the Sacrament must be essentially concerned with them, since it is the confessed Nature and End of the Sacrament, to remember and acknowledge Christ to be that which the Scriptures testify him to be.

The short of the Matter is this; either this Author will plainly own a sincere Belief of these Doctrines, or he will not: If he will not own the Belief of them, you have no reason to consider him as a Christian Writer upon this Subject; and so ought no more to learn from him, than from a Jew, the Nature of the Sacrament. But if he will declare his full Belief of these Doctrines, then you have the fullest Assurance from himself, that his Plain Account cannot be Christian: Because if these Things are true of Christ, they must be remembered and acknowledged in that Sacrament, which is appointed for the Remembrance and Acknowledgment of him.

Now these two essential Parts of the Sacrament, relating to this twofold Character of our Saviour, as he is the Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, and as he is a Principle of Life to us, contain the whole Nature, End, and Effects of the Sacrament. You are to look nowhere, nor in anything else, for the right Knowledge of this Sacrament, but in the right Faith and Knowledge of these two great Points. And everything that they teach you, and everything that the Scripture teaches you of these two great Points, is the only true Doctrine of the Sacrament.

All that you know of Christ, as the Atonement for our Sins, all that you know of him, as a Principle of Life to us, is neither more nor less than that which you are to know, and confess, and appeal to, in and by the Use of the Sacrament. And indeed these two great Points do so plainly show themselves, at first Sight, to be in the Words of the Institution, that any Man upon the bare reading of them, without any further Knowledge, might justly say, If Christ is not an Atonement for our Sins, why is his Body said to be given, and his Blood shed for our Sins? If he is not a Food to our Souls, or a Principle of Life to us, why are we commanded to eat his Body, and drink his Blood?

So that though a Man could not say, that these Things were certainly true, or in what Sense they were true, merely from the mention of them in the Sacrament, yet he might justly say, that the Words of the Institution pointed at such Truths, and could have no Foundation, unless these Things barely mentioned in it, were in the Scriptures proved and declared to be true Doctrines of the Christian Religion.

And as these two great Points are so visibly plain in the Sacrament, and constitute its whole Nature; so as soon as we rightly understand what the Scripture has taught concerning these Points, they make known to us, in the shortest and plainest Way, all the Merit, Dignity, and Value of this Sacrament, all the Blessings and Advantages derived to us from it, and all the pious Dispositions with which we are to approach it. Hence it was that the Apostles, after the Day of Pentecost, when they had all their Ignorance dispelled, yet gave us no further or particular Explications of the Nature of the Sacrament; because as soon as it was known, that Christ was a real Atonement and Satisfaction for Sins, and a real Principle of Life to us; as soon as these two great Doctrines were known, the Sacrament had all the Explication it could possibly have.

For no more can be known of the Sacrament, than is signified by them. All that is great, mysterious, and adorable in these Doctrines, as found in the Scriptures, is equally great, mysterious and adorable in them as they are found in the Sacrament.

Needless therefore would all Books be upon the Nature of the Sacrament, and the right Preparation for it, did we but truly know and believe Christ to be the Atonement and Satisfaction for our Sins, and a Principle of Life to us; for the Belief of these things in the Sacrament, would like the Uction, spoken of by St. John, teach us all things concerning it; and we should have no need of other teaching.

No one need then, as this Author vainly does, enquire for some Promise of Scripture annexing a Benefit to this Sacrament, to know what Good we receive by it. For the Knowledge of these two great Parts of the Sacrament, would sufficiently show us the inestimable Benefit that we receive by it.

For if this Sacrament is appointed by Jesus Christ, as the Acknowledgment of his being the Atonement of our Sins, and a Principle of Life to us; if it is appointed to stand between him and us, as a declared Proof on his Side, that he is thus our Atonement and Life; and as a declared Proof on our Side, that we own, seek, and apply to him as such; and if this is not set as a Mark once for all, but as a Proof that is to be repeated continually, and that is to be made good to us, not by our once having done it, or he once owned it, but to be perpetually owned and done, both on his Side and ours, can we want any other Assurance of the Benefit and Advantage of observing this Sacrament, than the thing itself by its own Nature declares?

For if we are in Covenant with Christ, and have an Interest in him, as our Atonement and Life; not because he once said, That this was his Body and Blood, given and shed for our Sins, or because we once owned it, and pleaded it before him; but because he continues to say the same thing in the Sacrament, and to present himself there to us as our Atonement and Life, and because we continue to own and apply to him as such; it necessarily follows, that the Sacrament rightly used, is the highest Means of finishing our Salvation, and puts us in the fullest Possession of all the Benefits of our Saviour, both as he is our Atonement and Life, that we are then at that time capable of.

For if the Atonement of our Sins by Christ, and that Life which he communicates to us, is not to be considered as a transient Matter, as something that is done and past, but as something that on the Side of Christ is always doing, and never will be done, till the Consummation of all Things; if our applying to, and receiving Christ as our Atonement and Life, is not to be considered as a transient Act, as something that is done and past, but as something that is always doing, and never will be done, till we depart out of a State of Trial; then it follows, that that which is the appointed Means or Proof of Christ's continuing to communicate himself to us, as our Atonement and Life, and of our continuing to apply to, and receive him as such, is in its own Nature, and unless hindered by us, a certain Means and Instrument of conveying and imparting to us all the Benefits of Christ, both as he is our Atonement and Life. To ask therefore for a particular Promise annexed to this Institution, which in its Nature communicates to us all that ever was promised to us in a Saviour, is highly absurd.

But after all, it can be truly said, that the Scriptures are very full and particular in setting forth the Benefits and Advantages of the Holy Communion, to all those that have Eyes that see, and Ears that hear. For do not the Scriptures plainly enough tell us of the Benefit of believing, seeking, and applying to Christ as the Atonement for our Sins? And is not the Benefit of this Faith the Benefit of the Sacrament, if Christ is there believed, sought and applied to as our Atonement?

And is it not the sole End of the Sacrament to continue, confirm and exercise this Faith, to which all the Blessings of our Salvation are annexed? Therefore, all that the Scriptures say of the Riches and Blessings, and Treasures, which Faith in Christ as our Redeemer, can procure to us, all that they say of the Benefit of that Faith, which is absolutely required and exercised by this Sacrament.

Again, do not the Scriptures plainly and frequently enough tell us of the Benefit of the New Birth in Christ, of the putting on Christ, of having Christ formed in us, of Christ's being our Life, of our having Life in him, of his being that Bread from Heaven, that Bread of Life, of which the Manna was only a Type; of his Flesh being Meat indeed, and his Blood Drink indeed; of our eating his Flesh, and drinking his Blood, and that without it we have no Life in us; and are not all these things so many plain and open Declarations of that which we seek and obtain, 'by eating the Body and Blood of Christ?'

For we eat the sacramental Body and Blood of Christ, to show that we want and desire, and by Faith lay hold of the real, spiritual Nature and Being of Christ; to show that we want and desire, the Progress of the New Birth in Christ; to put on Christ, to have Christ formed and revealed in us, to have him our Life, to partake of him our second Adam, in the same Fulness and Reality, as we partake of the Nature of the first Adam: And therefore all that the Scripture says of the Benefits and Blessings of these things, so much it says of the Benefits and Blessings that are sought and obtained by the eating the Body and Blood of Christ in the Lord's Supper. For to eat the Body and Blood of Christ, is neither more nor less than to put on Christ, to receive Birth and Life, and Nourishment and Growth from him; as the Branch receives its Being and Life, and Nourishment and Growth from the Vine. And because Christ is that to us, which the Vine is to the Branches, therefore there is a strict Truth and Reality in these Expressions; and the same Truth and Reality, whether it be expressed, by saying, that we eat the Flesh and Blood of Christ, or that we put on Christ, or that Christ is formed, manifested or revealed in us.

For if you could bid the Branch to eat the Substance and Juice of the Vine, the same must be intended, as if you had said, that the Vine must be formed in the Branch, or must manifest itself in the Branch. So when it is said, that we must eat the Flesh and Blood of Christ, it is the same thing as saying, that Christ must be formed in us, or manifested in us.

But you will perhaps say, How does it appear, that these Expressions of putting on Christ, of Christ's being formed in us, of his being our Life, the Bread of Life, and his Flesh Meat indeed, and his Blood Drink indeed; How does it appear, that these and the like Places of Scripture are to be understood Sacramentally?

I answer, it does not appear. And the Question itself is as absurd, as if it was asked, How does it appear, that the Scriptures are to be understood Sacramentally? Whereas, if the Question began at the right End, it should proceed thus, How does it appear, that the Sacrament is to be understood Scripturally, or according to the plain Doctrines of Scripture? Was the Question thus put, as it ought to be, it would fall of itself. For surely it need not be proved, that the things spoken of Christ in the Sacrament, are to be understood according to that which is spoken of Christ in the Scripture. When our Saviour said in the sixth of St. John, 'That his Flesh was Meat indeed, and his Blood Drink indeed, and that except a Man eat his Flesh, and drink his Blood, he hath no Life in him; and that he who eateth his Flesh, and drinketh his Blood, dwelleth in him, and he in him;' he did not speak of the Sacrament, nor could possibly speak of it, for this plain Reason, because he spoke of the Truth, the Reality, and the Thing itself; for the sake of which, and for the Application of which to ourselves, he afterwards instituted the Sacrament.

But if the Sacrament was instituted for the sake of that Truth and Reality, of which he then spake; then the Sacrament must be essentially related to that which he then said, and must have its Meaning and End according to it.

And if what he then said, was that Truth and Reality of the Thing itself, and the Sacrament was instituted as an outward Sign, Proof or Declaration of it; then what he said in St. John, he spoke not of the Sacrament; and yet what he instituted in the Sacrament, has all its Meaning according to that which he said in St. John.

To ask, whether our Saviour meant the Sacramental Bread and Wine, when he said, my Flesh is Meat indeed, and my Blood is Drink indeed, is as absurd as to ask, whether he did not mean the Flesh and Blood of some other Person, when he said, my Flesh and my Blood?

And, on the other hand, to ask, whether the Sacramental Bread and Wine does not signify to us that Flesh and Blood which is our Meat indeed, and Drink indeed, is as absurd, as to ask, whether the appointed Sign of a thing, does not signify that which it is appointed to signify?

These two things therefore are evidently plain: First, That our Saviour in the sixth of St. John did not, could not possibly speak of his Sacramental Body and Blood, or Bread and Wine, because he spoke of himself, of his real, natural, and true Life, of which we must partake: Secondly, That what he calls his Body and Blood in the Sacrament, or has appointed to be the Signs of his Body and Blood, must be understood according to that which he has said in St. John, of his Flesh which is Meat indeed, and his Blood which is Drink indeed; for this plain Reason, because the appointed Sign of a thing must signify that which it is appointed to signify.

Therefore in St. John there is nothing said of the Sacrament; and yet what is said in the Sacrament, is to be necessarily understood of that very thing which is said in St. John. And the Reason is plain; for the Thing is essentially different from that which is appointed to be a Sign of it; therefore, he that speaks of the Thing, cannot in speaking of that, speak of the Sign. But the Sign, as such, has all its Nature from the Thing that it is to signify; and therefore the Thing itself must be meant by that which the Sign speaks of.

To say, as some do, that our Saviour could not speak of that in St. John, which is intended by the Sacrament, because the Sacrament was not then instituted, is very weak and unreasonable; for it is saying, that he could not then speak of a Thing or Doctrine, because he afterwards appointed something to be a Sign or outward Declaration of it. For if he had appointed an Institution, or positive Rite, which related to nothing that he had before taught, it must have been very unaccountable. Thus to command us to eat his Body and Blood in the Sacrament, if he had not beforehand taught that we had our Life from him, and that his Flesh was our Meat indeed, and his Blood our Drink indeed, had been very unaccountable. But seeing he had in the openest, plainest Manner declared, that he was the Life of Men, and that except we eat his Flesh and drink his Blood we have no Life in us; the Command to eat Bread and Wine as his Body and Blood, is plain and intelligible; and we have the fullest Assurance of the Meaning of it, for this reason, because Christ had often, and long beforehand taught that Truth, of which he afterwards appointed the Sacrament to be an outward Sign, and an outward Means of our owning, confessing, and embracing it. Thus all the Controversy about this Place in St. John, and other like Passages of Scripture, is at an end, and has the most plain and satisfactory Solution; such Passages do not speak of the Sacrament, because they speak of the thing itself, of which the Sacrament is an appointed outward Signification; but the Sacrament directly speaks of, and points to those Passages, because they contain that Truth and Reality which the Sacrament is appointed to signify.

For were not Christ our real Life, there had not been any outward Figure or Declaration of it appointed; was there not a real Eating the Flesh and Drinking the Blood of Christ, was there not a true substantial putting on of Christ, or partaking of the Nature of Christ, the Sacramental Eating and Drinking of his Body and Blood, had not been appointed; there could have been no Foundation for it; or if appointed, it could have had no Meaning suitable to the Words. But since That which is Sacramentally figured or signified, by the Eating and Drinking the Sacramental Body and Blood of Christ, is in the Scriptures declared to be a real Truth, since its Reality is taught, declared and explained by various Ways and Manners of Speech, it is undeniable, that the Sacrament, which is an appointed Figure, must be explained and asserted according to that Truth and Reality, of which it is the appointed Figure.

When our Saviour said, 'he that eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him': When he said, 'I am the Life'; and again, 'I am the true Vine, and ye are the Branches,' &c., he spake as much strict and real Truth, and as much according to the Letter, as when he said of himself, he came down from Heaven, or that he is in the Father, and the Father in him. What is there said, is no more to be considered as a Metaphor, or Figure of Speech, than when it is said, that God is our Father, or that in God we live, move, and have our Being.

For what is said of Christ, as our Life, is as strictly true, as when it is said, that in God we live, and move, and have our Being; and what is said of Christ's being the true Vine, has the same real Truth in it, as when God is said to be our Father.

Had Christ indeed said, This Vine is me, and these Branches are ye, what he said must then have been as figurative, as when he said of the Bread, 'This is my Body;' and his speaking so of a Vine, must have been only a Sign to us, that he was in Truth and Reality that to us, which the Vine is in a poor, earthly, perishable Manner to its Branches. But seeing he does not speak of a Vine, but speaks directly of himself, and says, that I am the true Vine; it is as if he had said, I am the Vine in Truth and Reality, as God is the Father of you all in Truth and Reality, because I am that in a true and real, and living Manner to you, which the Vine is in a poor, earthly, perishable Manner to its Branches.

Therefore all that is here said, is the real Truth, as far as human Words can set it forth; and when it is said, that we must put on Christ, or that Christ must be formed in us, or that he is the true Vine, and we are the Branches, there is the same literal, real, immutable and eternal Truth in these Expressions, as when it is said, that 'in God we live and move, and have our being,' or that God is our Father, and we his Children.

Now to deny that Christ is thus our Life, is as great a Denial of him, as to deny him to be the eternal Word, or the Son of God, or the Light that lighteth every Man that cometh into the World. And to deny that we receive our Life from him, or eat his Flesh and Blood in the same Reality as the Branch eateth of the Substance and Juice of the Vine, and receiveth what it hath from it, is as great a Denial of him, as if we deny that he came from Heaven, and was in Heaven, even when he was upon Earth.

But if we own these great Truths, which are the very Heart and Substance of Christianity, if we know and acknowledge that we are thus of him, and by him, that our inward Man, which is all that is Christian within us, has all its Birth, Life, and Growth from Christ, as its Principle, eating, drinking, and drawing in Life from him, as the Branch eats, drinks, and draws its Life and Substance from the Vine; then we cannot be at a Loss either to know what is meant by the Sacrament, and the Benefits we receive thereby, or to know what Parts of Scripture explain those Benefits to us. Since it must appear to us beyond all doubt, that all that which the Scriptures speak to us of Christ, as the Atonement for our Sins, and our Peace with God, and all that they speak to us of our Life in Christ, of his forming and manifesting himself in the Birth and Growth of our inward new Man; is that which it speaks to us of the Meaning and Benefits of this Holy Sacrament, which is solely appointed as the Figure of all this, as the Application of all this to us, and as an established Means of exercising, increasing and strengthening our Faith in him, as he is all this to us.

Here therefore is full room for all our Devotion, and at the same time a full Security against all Delusion. For whilst we believe nothing of the Sacrament, seek nothing in it, nor plead anything by it, but such Scripture Truths and Benefits as we are obliged to believe, own and plead, though the Sacrament had not been appointed, all the Devotion which the Sacrament thus raises in us, is as secure from Delusion, has as much the Stamp of Truth upon it, and is as proper an Exercise of solid Piety, as when any Thing or Occasion excites us to an Act of loving God with all our Mind, and Heart, and Strength. For as we cannot too much esteem, love and adore our Saviour, both as he is the Atonement for our Sins, and a Principle of Life to us; so if the Use of the Sacrament quickens, nourishes, keeps up, and increases this Esteem, Love and Adoration of him, as such, it cannot do this too much.

For as we do nothing in the Sacrament, but what is our natural Duty, and good and right in itself; as we seek to Christ, trust in Christ, rely upon his Merits, desire to have Life in and from him, only in such a Manner as we ought to do, though we were not assisted in it by the Sacrament; so all this Faith and Hope, and Love and Desire, and Devotion which we practise by means of the Sacrament, has everything in it, that can prove it to be right, and just, and good. And the want of this Faith, Hope, Love, Desire, Adoration and Devotion, is more blamable in the Use of the Sacrament than anywhere else, because it is there more properly required, and has the most proper Object and Occasion to excite it.

You must therefore consider the Sacrament purely as an Object of your Devotion, that is to exercise all your Faith, that is to raise, exercise, and inflame every holy Ardour of your Soul that tends to God. It is an Abstract, or Sum of all the Mysteries that have been revealed concerning our Saviour, from the first Promise of a Seed of the Woman to bruise the Serpent's Head, to the Day of Pentecost.

As you can receive or believe nothing higher of our Saviour, than that he is the Atonement for our Sins, and a real Principle of Life to us; so every Height and Depth of Devotion, Faith, Love, and Adoration, which is due to God as your Creator, is due to God as your Redeemer.

Jacob's Ladder that reached from Earth to Heaven, and was filled with Angels ascending and descending between Heaven and Earth, is but a small Signification of that Communion between God and Man, which this holy Sacrament is the Means and Instrument of.

Now here it may be proper for you to observe, that whatever Names or Titles this Institution is signified to you by, whether it be called a Sacrifice propitiatory, or commemorative ; whether it be called an holy Oblation, the Eucharist, the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the Heavenly Banquet, the Food of Immortality, or the Holy Communion, and the like, matters not much. For all these Words or Names are right and good, and there is nothing wrong in them, but the striving and contention about them.

For they all express something that is true of the Sacrament, and therefore are every one of them, in a good Sense, rightly applicable to it ; but all of them are far short of expressing the whole Nature of the Sacrament, and therefore the Help of all of them is wanted.

He therefore that contends for one Name, as the only proper one in Exclusion of the rest, is in the same Mistake, as he that should contend for one Name and Character of our Saviour, as the only proper one, in Exclusion of all the rest. For as all the Names and Titles by which Christ is described, from the Seed of the Woman in Genesis, to the Alpha and Omega in the last Chapter of the Revelation, are only to help us to know, believe, and experience more of him as our Saviour, than can be expressed by all these different Characters of him : So all the various Names and Titles given to the Sacrament, are only to teach us to know, believe, and find more of our Redemption and Salvation in the Sacrament, than can be pointed out to us by any or all these Expressions.

If you have yet known Christ in any true Degree, what must you think of him, who should contend that the Lamb of God was the only proper Character of our Saviour, and that therefore those other Names, Seed of the Woman, Root of David, Bright and Morning Star, Bread of Life, Tree of Life, Son of Man, First-born of all the Creatures, Word of God, could not belong to him as our Saviour, because of the Disagreement there is between a Lamb, and the Bread of Life, or a Tree of Life ?

Now this is the Learning this Author is full of ; from this scrupulous Attention to Words, and the Ideas annexed to them, he rejects almost all the Names by which the Sacrament has ever been expressed.

He is able to prove, that the Sacrament is not a Commemorative Sacrifice, because it is the Supper of the Lord ; just as another by the same Skill in Words, might prove, that the Lamb of God is not the Tree of Life, or the Bread that came down from Heaven, because of the great Difference there is between a Tree, Bread, and a Lamb.

Now the Reason why our Saviour is described under this vast Variety of Characters, is this, because no one Phrase or particular Form of Expression can truly describe him to us ; therefore that is to be done as well as it can, by different and seemingly contrary Characters.

Thus he is called the Seed of the Woman that was to bruise the Serpent's Head, in another respect the Lamb of God, in another the Desire of all Nations, in another the Son of Man, in another the Brightness of his Father's Glory, in another the Bread that came down from Heaven, in another the Tree of Life, the Alpha and Omega. Now it is the exceeding Difference, and even literal Contrariety of these Expressions, that makes them proper and useful to us ; and we have the more true Knowledge of our Saviour because of these Characters, which, considered in themselves, seem to have no Agreement with each other.

Thus the Lamb of God, and the Bread of Life, are Characters of our Saviour, that have no Connection with each other, and yet they teach us the greatest Truths concerning our Saviour, because they are thus without Connection, and so unrelated to each other.

It is just thus with the Sacrament ; the different and seemingly incoherent Characters and Expressions by which it is signified to us, help us to know more Truth of it, merely because of their Difference, than could be taught us by such Expressions as had a literal Agreement and Connection with each other.

Do you therefore reject this Author's Wisdom of Words which he proposes to you, and be content to be devout without it. Be glad to know, that as the Nature, Office, and Condition of our Saviour could not be made known to us, but by a Variety of different Names and Titles ascribed to him ; so the Nature and End and Effects of this Holy Sacrament could not be made known to us, but by a Variety of different Names and Titles ascribed to it ; that in one respect it is a Propitiatory Sacrifice, in another a Commemorative Sacrifice ; in one respect it is the Seal and Renewal of the Covenant between God and Man, in another the Food of Immortality, the Life of the Soul, the Bread that came down from Heaven, the Tree of Life ; that in one respect it is the Holy Eucharist, in another the Holy Communion.

And be assured, that he who tries to set these Expressions at Variance with each other, and would persuade you that if one is a true Account of the Sacrament, the others cannot be so, is as vain a Disputer of this World, as he that would persuade you, that if our Saviour be the Seed of the Woman, he cannot be essentially the Son of God ; or that if he be the Lamb of God, he cannot be the Bread of Life.

The reason why this Sacrament is said in one respect to be a Propitiatory, or Commemorative Sacrifice, is only this, because you there offer, present, and plead before God, such Things as are by Christ himself said to be his Body and Blood given for you : But if that which is thus offered, presented, and pleaded before God, is offered, presented, and pleaded before him only for this Reason, because it signifies and represents both to God, and Angels, and Men, the great Sacrifice for all the World, is there not sufficient Reason to consider this Service as truly a Sacrifice ? Or even supposing, that the calling this Service a Sacrifice, is no more according to a certain literal Exactness of some Critics, that when our Saviour says of himself, ' I am the ' Resurrection ;' or that a Quibbler in Words may be able to object as much against it, as against our Saviour's saying of himself, ' I am the Resurrection and the Life,' have you any reason to dislike it on that Account, or to wish that such little Critics might find more of their empty, superficial, worthless Niceties in the Language of the Church, than in the Language of Scripture ?

The miserable Use which this Author makes of this Kind of Learning may be sufficiently seen by the following Instances : ' To say,' says he, ' that this Communion is the actual partaking ' of all the Benefits of Christ's Body broken and Blood shed for ' us, or of his Living and Dying for our Good, has this peculiar ' Absurdity in it, that in this Rite, which was instituted for the ' Remembrance of Christ, it destroys that very Notion of Remem- ' brance, which is the Essence of it. The great Design of this ' Institution is to call to mind the Remembrance of Christ, and to ' commemorate the Benefits accruing to Christians from it. To ' make it therefore the actual partaking of these Benefits, is ' altering the Nature of it, as much as actual partaking of any- ' thing is different from remembering it.* Many other Passages like this are to be found in this Author.

Now to see the Truth and Sense of this Doctrine in its proper Light : Let it be supposed, that our Saviour, after the Institution, had thus added, ' Observe well what it is that I have taught ' you to understand and do by this Rite : I have indeed said, ' This is my Body which is given for you ; but the Meaning ' of my Institution does not lie in these Words, nor are you to ' think that I am any way present in that which I call my Body, or ' that you are to present, and show, and plead it before God as ' my Body, which is given for you ; for this is not my Intent, ' though I thus speak. I have also said, This is my Blood ' which is shed for the Remission of Sins, and have ordered ' you to say so of it before God, and Angels, and Men in the ' Church ; but what I have taught has nothing to do with this ‘ Institution, nor is it any Part of it; there is no Remission of ‘ Sins to be thought of in it, or pleaded by it. I have also bid you

‘ to eat that which I have declared to be my Body, and to drink
‘ that which I have declared to be my Blood; but you must not ‘ therefore imagine, that you receive anything of me, or of my ‘ Nature, into yourselves, or that I am a Principle of Life to you.
‘ For though I thus speak so fully and plainly of eating my very ‘ Body and Blood, yet nothing is meant of any real partaking of ‘ anything from me. For this is no Part of my Institution, nor ‘ is it appointed for you to receive anything from me, nor for me
‘ to communicate anything to you. And to prevent your Appre‘ hension of anything of this kind, and to secure you from ‘ the dangerous Error of supposing that any Benefits and Bless‘ ings are received by your receiving my Body and Blood; I
‘ have added, Do this in Remembrance of me; which Words ‘ sufficiently show, that neither Me, nor the Benefits of me, as ‘ your Saviour, can here be received, because that which is ‘ appointed here to be remembered, cannot, without great ‘ Absurdity, be supposed to be present. Had I indeed said, Do
‘ this in Acknowledgment of me, or of that Salvation which is ‘ received through me; or had I said, Do this as an Act of Faith
‘ in me as your Saviour, then indeed you must have believed ‘ that there were great Benefits and Blessings presented to you by ‘ this Institution; for ye could not by Faith appeal to this my ‘ Body and Blood as given for you, and by Faith eat this as my ‘ Body and Blood, without the actual partaking of my Benefits
‘ and Blessings, both as I am the Atonement for your Sins, and
‘ a Principle of Life to you: But as I have chosen the Word ‘ Remembrance, you must see that it is only an Act of your ‘ Memory that is required of you; for this is the great Point
‘ in this Institution, perform but this and you have performed all ‘ that the Nature and End of this Institution requires of you.
‘ Take care therefore that you keep strictly to this bare Act of
‘ the Memory, and that you don’t add anything to it; for the ‘ Essence of this Institution consists in this simple Act of the ‘ Memory. But above all, take heed of such Faith, Devotion,
‘ and Desire of me, as may lead you to hope or believe that you ‘ partake of my Benefits by the partaking of this holy Rite; for ‘ such a Faith and Hope are so inconsistent with this Institution, ‘ that they would destroy the very Nature and Essence of it, which ‘ is to be the Remembrance of my Benefits, and therefore cannot ‘ possibly be the actual partaking of them. Nor can you think of ‘ partaking of them by this holy Institution, but by making it
‘ an Institution of your own, directly contrary to that which I ‘ designed it to be.’

Everyone, I believe, must at first Sight perceive, that to put this Paraphrase upon the Sacrament into the Mouth of our Saviour, would be Profaneness and Blasphemy; and yet everyone must plainly see, that profane and blasphemous as it would be, there is not a Thought or Word in it, but what is strictly according to this Author's Doctrine.

Secondly, Let it be supposed that instead of 'Do this in Remembrance of me,' our Saviour had said, Do this as a Means of partaking of all my Benefits to Mankind: This Author's Criticism would prove it absurd to make the Sacrament even then an actual partaking of those Benefits. For he must say, that the great Design of it, was to be a Means of partaking of those Benefits. To make it therefore the actual partaking of those Benefits, is altering the Nature of it, as much as actual partaking of anything is different from the Means of partaking of it. Such is his Wisdom of Words!

Thirdly, If it were true, that the actual partaking of Christ's Benefits was not only not intended by, but also inconsistent with the right Observance of this Institution, so as to destroy its Essence, and alter its Nature, if such actual partaking was thought of by it; then it would follow, that no good Christian ought to observe this Institution, or act according to the Nature and Intent of it.

For it is as unlawful and even atheistical for any Christian to think himself not an actual Partaker of the Benefits and Blessings of Christ, as to think himself not an actual Partaker of the Benefits and Blessings of a God and Providence. 'Without me,' says our Blessed Lord, 'ye can do nothing.'^{*} But, according to this Author, we not only can, but must do all that is done in this Sacrament without him, and must look upon the Sacrament as instituted for this very End, to keep up a Sense and Belief of our being without him, and to assure us, that we are not actual Partakers of him, that he is not present with us, nor acting in us. Again, saith our blessed Lord, 'Abide in me, and I in you; as 'the Branch cannot bear Fruit, except it abide in the Vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me.'

But, according to this Author, he that would rightly perform this Institution, must, every time he performs it, come out of Christ as perfectly as he can, and make himself as separate from Christ, as the withered Branch that is separated from the Vine; that having no actual Possession of the Benefits and Blessings of Christ, he may be qualified to do this in Remembrance of them.

Further, no one can believe in Christ, love Christ, adore him, and hope and trust in him, without being an actual Partaker of the Benefits of Christ by so doing ; if therefore to the due Observation of the Sacrament, and to preserve its Nature and Essence, there must be no actual partaking of the Benefits of Christ allowed in it, or by it ; then it must be performed without Faith or Love of Christ, and without any Devotion towards him, or Adoration of him ; for if these accompany that which we do in the Sacrament, and attend our reception of it, the Benefits of Christ must be actually received by it.

Fourthly, To see still more of the Absurdity and Impiety of this Author's Observation on the Remembrance in the Sacrament, we need only apply it to this parallel Text of Scripture, 'Remember thy Creator in the Days of thy Youth.* For, according to our Author, he that would not alter and destroy the Nature and Essence of this Duty of remembering God, must not pretend, or hope, or believe, that by the Observance of this Duty, he is made an actual Partaker or Sharer of the Goodness, Perfections, and Attributes of his Creator, or of anything that belongs to his Creator, or that can be remembered of him : Because so long as he keeps strictly to the true Nature of this Duty, and continues to remember his Creator, so long every Thing, or Attribute, or Perfection that belongs to his Creator, must be considered as at a Distance from him, as unenjoyed and unpossessed by him, because that which is to be remembered, cannot be present. And therefore the Command to remember our Creator, is, according to this Doctrine, a Command to look upon our Creator as at a Distance and far from us, and is inconsistent with our believing, that 'in him we live, move, and have our Being' ; because we cannot remember a Creator so present with us, and of whose Perfections we are actual Partakers.

If therefore this Author has found out the right Way of remembering God as our Redeemer, he ought to have told us, that the same Way of remembering God as our Creator was wrong, and tended to Atheism. For to remember God as absent, is but a very little way from Atheism.

Lastly, If, as this Author teaches, the actual partaking of the Benefits of Christ's living and dying for us, by means of this Sacrament, is an Absurdity that cannot be supposed, without destroying the Nature and Essence of the Sacrament, for this Reason, because that which is possessed as present, and actually partaken of, cannot be remembered ; then it follows, that no Man can fully perform this Duty, that is, make it a Remembrance of all the Benefits of Christ, but he that is actually dispossessed of all of them. Because he cannot remember all, if any of them are then present with him, and enjoyed by him.

Secondly, It follows, that he who daily grows in the Gifts and Graces of Christ, and in whom Christ is every Day more and more formed, must, in proportion as the Strength, and Spirit, and Power of Christ is revealed in him, daily be less qualified to do perfectly that which is to be done in the Sacrament; because being daily more and more possessed of the Benefits and Blessings of Christ, he has every Day less and less to commemorate in and by the Sacrament.

Thirdly, It follows, that he who falls from his State of Grace in Christ, who becomes every Day more and more empty and destitute of his Gifts and Graces, who daily loses something of the Sense and Taste of the heavenly Gifts, and the Powers of the World to come, and finds himself less animated, assisted and strengthened by the Power and Spirit of Christ, must in proportion, as he becomes every Day more earthly, sensual, carnal, blind and weak, and wretched, and dead, and fallen from Christ, be more and more qualified to do that, which, according to this Author, is to be done in the Sacrament; for losing every Day something of the Benefits of Christ, and being daily a less Partaker of them, he is daily qualified to commemorate more of them, and so to perform that which is to be performed in this Sacrament in a more perfect manner.

Again, the Apostle saith, 'Know ye not that Christ Jesus is in you, except ye be Reprobates'*? But this Author must say, Know ye not that Christ Jesus is not in you, nor can be in you, if the Sacrament is to be observed in Remembrance of him? For how can ye without Absurdity commemorate that which is not absent from you?

Lastly, He who can say with the Apostle, 'the Life that I now live is not mine, but Christ that liveth in me, is utterly incapable of remembering Christ in the Sacrament; for he cannot commemorate an absent Christ, and therefore cannot commemorate him, till Christ has done living in him.

But there is no end of exposing all the impious Consequences of this Author's learned Account of the Word Remembrance. Which, monstrous as it is, is only founded upon a little Criticism, that the word Remembrance can only signify an Act of the Memory upon something that is absent. And yet it is certain that it does not, cannot signify so, when you are to remember your Creator, and therefore need not signify so, when you are to remember your Redeemer. And if you do but suppose it possible, that 'Do this in Remembrance of me,' may only signify, do this in regard of me, as your Act of Faith in me; then all this extraordinary Doctrine of the Impossibility and Absurdity of partaking of the Benefits of Christ by partaking of the Sacrament, has not so much as one of his Quibbles to support it.

Further, this Author's absurd Interpretation of the word Remembrance in the Sacrament is founded on this gross Error, that the things to be remembered, are things done and past, and therefore only capable of being remembered by an Act of the Memory. This he expressly says in many places. Thus, They, says he, *could not do the Actions here named, in remembrance of anything which was not done and past. And in other Places, that the Benefits cannot be present that are to be commemorated.

And therefore the whole Support of this arguing is founded on this Error, that the things to be remembered, are done and past. Which is an Error, that he could not have fallen into, if he had but moderately understood the Nature either of the Jewish or Christian Religion.

Now that which is to be remembered in the Sacrament is Christ, or the Benefits and Blessings of Christ as the Saviour of Mankind; but neither Christ, nor his Benefits and Blessings have the Nature of things done, or gone, and past, but are always present, always in being, always doing, and never done.

'Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever,' always was, now is, and ever will be present as the Saviour of the World. He is the Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End, and therefore equally present in and through all from the Beginning to the End. 'Behold,' saith he, 'I stand at the Door, and knock; if any Man hear my Voice, and open the Door, I will come into him, and will sup with him.'† Thus he stood at the Door of Adam's Heart, as near as he stood to the Apostles'; and thus he stands, and will stand knocking at the Door of every Man's Heart, till Time shall be no more. Happy he that does not consider this Christ as absent, and is only for such a Supper of the Lord, as will not admit of his Presence.

The Benefits and Blessings of Christ as the Saviour of Mankind, began with the first Promise of a Seed of the Woman to bruise the Serpent's Head; they have continued with this Promise, they are the Benefits of every Age, they will never be at an End, till all that was implied in that Promise shall have its full Completion in the utter Destruction of the Serpent. Jesus Christ was the Lamb slain from the Foundation of the World; and the first

† Rev. iii. 20.

Sacrifice of the first Man, and every Sacrifice since, that hath been accepted of God, has been made solely acceptable through the Benefits and Blessings of Christ.

All the Shadows and Types, Sacrifices and Ceremonies of the Jewish Religion were only so many Ways of applying the Benefits of Jesus Christ to that People. 'Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever,' is the same in and through all Ages; he was the Saviour of Adam, the Patriarchs, and the Jews, just as he is our Saviour. His Body and Blood, offered in their Sacrifices, was their Atonement, as it is ours, offered upon the Cross. His Flesh and Blood was Meat and Drink, or a Principle of Life to them, as it is to us.

Jesus Christ was theirs, as he is ours; he was the Life, and Substance, and Spirit of the Law, as he is the Life, and Substance, and Spirit of the Gospel; only with this Difference, that then Christ was covered, and received under more outward Figures and Ceremonies than he is now; we do that more openly, which was then done more covertly by the Israel of God.

His Atonement for our Sins is not a transitory Thing, that began and ended with his Passion and Death, but it began with the Lamb that was slain from the Foundation of the World; for he was the Lamb of God slain in all their Types and Sacrifices through every Age, till he became the real expiatory Sacrifice on the Cross for the Sins of the World.

When he died upon the Cross, his Atonement did not then become a thing that was over, or past, and done, that was only to be remembered by an Act of the Memory, but continued increasing in its Power and Virtue.

As Christ by his Death put an end to nothing in Religion but Types and Prefigurations; so by his Death he put an end to nothing of his Atonement, but that which was typical and prefigurative of it. And as he arose from the Grave with greater Power and Strength, and became instead of a meek and suffering Lamb, a powerful Conqueror over Death, a Royal Priest over the House of God, so his Atonement went on increasing in Strength and Virtue.

His Atonement was so far from being a Thing then done and past, when his Blood was shed upon the Cross, that it was shed for this very End, that he might for ever do that in the Reality, which the High Priest did in the Type, when with the Blood of the Sacrifice he entered once a Year into the Holiest of all, to make the highest Atonement for the People.

Thus Christ, to perform, and to continue for ever the most powerful Way of atoning for us, by his own Blood he entered once into the Holy Place—now to appear in the Presence of God for us.* Where he continueth for ever, and hath an unchangeable Priesthood; † and therefore our Atonement is never done and past, but is just as perpetual and unchangeable as his Priesthood. For he can be no longer a Priest, than while he maketh an Atonement and Intercession for us. And from this his unchangeable Priesthood, the Apostle thus argues, 'wherefore he is able also 'to save them to the uttermost, who come unto God by him, ‡ 'seeing he ever liveth to make Intercession for us.'

But if he is 'able to save them to the uttermost, who come 'unto God by him;' then his Atonement is not something done and past, but always in being, always present, always doing, and always presenting itself everywhere, and to every Man; and if he is ever living to make Intercession for us, then we have a Propitiation that never ceases, that is as near to us as it was to the Apostles, and will be as present to those that shall be born two thousand Years after Christ, as it was to those who stood by his Cross when he died. Agreeable to this, St. John saith, 'We have 'an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous: And 'he is the Propitiation for our Sins.' He does not say, we have had an Advocate in this World, but that we have one with the Father, nor that Christ was our Propitiation some time ago, but that he is the Propitiation for our Sins.

And indeed Jesus Christ is the Atonement for our Sins, in that same unlimited universal and omnipresent Manner, in which he is the Life and Light of the World. And as he is the Light which lighteth every Man that cometh into the World, and is not an actual present Light to some, and a distant unpossessed Light to others, only to be remembered by an Act of their Memory; so he is the Atonement for every Man that cometh into the World, and is not an actual, present Atonement to some, and a distant Atonement to others, only to be remembered by an Act of their Memory; but is an Atonement actually and really present to all, as he is a Light actually and really present to all, and every Man that cometh into the World.

Therefore this Author's Account of the Remembrance in the Sacrament, has not only those Absurdities in it demonstrated above, but is also solely founded upon this grossest of all Errors, that the Benefits and Blessings of Christ, as the Saviour of Mankind, are something done and past; which is an Error that no one could have fallen into, that had but a common Knowledge of the first and plainest Principles either of the Jewish or Christian Religion. For both these Religions are founded upon this great Truth, and suppose it in every Part, that the Benefits and ‡ Heb. vii. 25.

Blessings of Christ were always in being, always doing, always present in and to every Age, as well before as since the Incarnation and Death of Christ.

And as this Author has been forced to assert, they were things absent, done, and past, in order to make the Sacrament to consist of an Action of the Memory upon those absent things; so seeing it is an undeniable Truth, that they are not things absent, done, and past, but are as actually present, as ever they were, or ever could be, it follows, according to his own Principles, that the Remembrance spoken of in the Sacrament, cannot possibly signify only an Action of the Memory, but must necessarily signify such Faith and Acknowledgment of Christ, as when we are bid to remember our Creator, or believe in God.

Further, this Author proceeds thus: 'To say that the Communion is the actual partaking of all the Benefits of Christ's living and dying for us, is to put that upon one single Act of Obedience, which is by our blessed Lord made to depend upon the whole System of all Virtues united.* And again, 'Such a Doctrine as this would, in my Opinion, be not only inconsistent with the plainest Declarations of the Gospel, but directly contradictory and destructive to the main Design of it.†

What this Author calls here a single Act, and a single Instance of Obedience, is true only of his own Sacrament, which consists only of a single Action of the Memory cast upon Christ at a certain Instant of Time, and to which single Action, this Author expressly says, that no Prayer is necessary,‡ not even necessary to attend upon it, either as going before, or following after it. That in its own proper and peculiar Nature, it has nothing to do with Prayer or Devotion of any kind, can have no Perfection from it, nor be in any Degree imperfect as to its Nature and Essence, for want of any Prayer, because its Essence is entirely distinct from Prayer.

And therefore all Prayers, Thanksgivings and Devotions, are to be considered as things distinct from this Sacrament, that have no Relation to the peculiar Nature and proper Essence of it.§

Hence it is plain, that we do not overcharge this Author, when we say, that he places the whole Nature of the Sacrament in a bare single Action of the Memory. For if, as he says, no kind of Prayer, Devotion or Thanksgiving, is of the Essence of this Sacrament, or can be an essential Part of it; then it has all its Perfection within itself, as it is a bare Act of the Memory, and

cannot, as to its own proper Nature or Essence, have anything added to it by Prayer, or taken from it by the want of Prayer. Hence it is also undeniable, that this Author's Sacrament is not so much as a bare Act of Religion, nor can have any more Religion in it, than if it was the Act of a Parrot. For no Act can be a religious Act, but so far, and in such Degree, as it is an Act of Faith, and Love, and Devotion to God. But this Author's Sacrament will not, as it is a Sacrament, allow Faith, or Love, or Devotion to be any Part of it, therefore it cannot be so much as a bare Act of Religion.

Nay, it may and must be said, that the right Observation of this Author's Sacrament is directly an Act of Atheism. For if it is an Act, that in its own Nature, and according to its peculiar Essence, cannot be performed according to what it is, unless it be done without Faith, and Love, and Devotion towards God ; then it is directly an Act of Atheism, because Atheism is nothing else but a Cessation of Faith, Love and Devotion towards God. But the Essence of this Author's Sacrament cannot be preserved, unless you keep Prayer, Devotion and Thanksgiving out of it. Therefore to perform it rightly according to what it is, is to perform an Act of Atheism.

And if at the taking of the Bread and Wine, you should suffer Faith, or Love, or Adoration of God, or Thanksgiving, to take up your Mind, you might as well have let the Sacrament alone, for you have neglected all that in which its whole Nature consists ; and have only been in such a State of Devotion, as has nothing to do with it, nor can possibly be a Part of it. And therefore, if you will perform this Sacrament rightly according to this Author, you must perform it Atheistically ; you must excite such a Remembrance as excludes Faith, Love, Devotion and Thanksgiving, from being a Part of it. And your Remembrance is not performed, unless it be such a Remembrance as these things cannot be a Part of.

The Devils are said to believe a God ; but why is it that their Faith is no religious Act, nor of any Benefit to them? It is because their Faith is only a bare Act of believing, just as this Author's Sacrament has only a bare Act of remembering ; and that which is the Perfection of his Sacrament, is their Wretchedness.

If you ask this Author, why Faith, and Prayer, and Adoration, and Thanksgiving, are not of the Essence, or cannot be essential Parts of the Sacrament : All he has to say is this, that the Duty of Prayer is a Duty absolutely distinct from the Participation of the Lord's Supper.*

It may and must be granted, that Prayer, Humility, Faith, Hope, Charity, &c., are absolutely distinct from each other; that Humility is not Prayer, nor Faith in its proper Idea Prayer, and so of the rest. Yet notwithstanding this Distinction between them, they are all of them essential to each other. Faith is of the Essence of Prayer, Hope is of the Essence of Faith, and all of them are essential Parts of Prayer. Therefore when this Author asserts that Prayer is not an essential Part of the Communion, he is just as much in the right, and has as much Truth on his Side, as he who says, that Humility, Faith and Hope are not essential to Prayer, because Prayer is distinct from Humility, Faith and Hope.

What this Author saith of the Sacrament, that it is one single Act, or one single Instance of Obedience, is only true of his own Fiction of a Sacrament, which he makes to consist in a single Act of the Memory; and indeed it would be highly inconsistent with the Gospel, to make such a Sacrament a Means of obtaining the Benefits of Christ. But this is not the Sacrament of Christ, nor the Sacrament which the Church of Christ observes.

For all that relates to our Salvation, either on the Part of Christ, or on our own Part, is plainly united in that Sacrament which Christ has instituted. All that relates to our Salvation on the Part of Christ, is in the Sacrament, because he has said, that his Body and Blood are there for the Remission of our Sins, and that his Body and Blood are there to be eaten and drank, as the Food and Life of our Souls, therefore Christ as our Saviour is wholly there.

And all that relates to our Salvation on our own Part, is there; because we cannot come to Christ, or find him to be there, as he has said he is, unless we come to him with all those Qualities and pious Dispositions that correspond to him, as he is an Atonement for our Sins, and a Principle of Life to us; therefore all that relates to our Salvation, either on the Part of Christ, or on our own Part, is plainly united in the Sacrament. And to call such a Communion one single Act of Obedience, is just the same Absurdity, as to say, that the Baptism of a Heathen converted to Christianity, is but one single Instance of Obedience. For everything that is implied in such a Conversion and Baptism, whether it be on the Part of Christ, or on the Part of the Person baptized, is implied in this Communion.

And as the Baptism of such a Person contains all in it that relates to his Salvation, either on the Part of Christ, or on his own Part, and therefore cannot without great Ignorance be called a single Instance or Act of Obedience: So it is with the Sacrament, it is all that to the pious Communicant, both on the

Part of Christ, and on his own Part, that Baptism is to the true converted Heathen; and he is made an actual Partaker of all the Benefits of Christ by it, as the Convert is made so by Baptism; and therefore it is the same Absurdity to call it a single Act, or Instance of Obedience.

And as it would be vain and groundless to say, that it was inconsistent with the main Design of the Gospel, to make such Baptism the actual partaking of all the Benefits of Christ; so it is equally, if not more so, to say the same thing of Communion; because every pious and holy Disposition is to be supposed to be in an higher State, in the pious Communicant, than in the pious Desirer of Baptism; and therefore, it cannot without much Absurdity be supposed, that the Sacrament is not as beneficial to the pious Communicant, as Baptism is to the pious Convert.

For if Christ has appointed this Institution, to assure us, that he is there, both as the Atonement for our Sins, and a Principle of Life to us, and we come to it with such pious Dispositions as correspond and answer to him in both these Respects, and make us capable of him; it must be great Absurdity to say, that we find him not there as our Atonement, nor receive him as a Principle of Life to us, nor are made Partakers of these Benefits of him.

If we stand before this Atonement, without such Dispositions as correspond to it, we are as absent from the Sacrament of Christ, as they are that refuse to come to it; if we eat that which is before us in the Sacrament, without such Faith and Purity as qualify us to receive the Flesh and Blood of Christ, we are only eating that, which might have been the Bread of Life to our Souls.

But if we, according to the Condition of our Humanity, are that which these two essential Parts of the Sacrament require us to be, then we may and ought as firmly to believe, that we are by this Sacrament made actual Partakers of all the Benefits of Christ, as that we are saved through Christ, and not by ourselves.

This Author makes great Complaint of ascribing these Benefits to the Reception of the Communion, because it is, as he says, to put that upon a single Instance of Obedience, which our blessed Lord has made to depend upon the whole System of all Virtues united in us: That is, Christ has made the System of all Virtues united in us, to be the only Qualification for the actual partaking of his Benefits; which is not only utterly inconsistent with the Gospel, but nonsensical in itself; for it is saying that we are then only qualified for the Benefits of our Saviour, when we have no need of them; for if all Virtues were so united in us, all that our Saviour could do for us, would be done beforehand.

But let us take an Instance or two from our Saviour's own Words, and then we shall best see how truly this Author has said, that he has made the actual partaking of his Benefits, to depend upon the whole System of all Virtues united. When our blessed Lord stood by Jacob's Well, talking with the Woman of Samaria, he said to her, 'If thou knewest the Gift of God, and 'who it is that saith to thee, give me to drink, thou wouldst have 'asked of him, and he would have given thee living Water; a 'Water which shall be in him that drinketh it, a Well of Water 'springing up into everlasting Life.'*

Here, I suppose, are offered to this poor Woman all the Benefits of the Saviour of Mankind. Our Lord does not say to her, If thou hadst the whole System of all Virtues united in thee, then thou mightest be made a Partaker of all my Benefits; I could make the Water of eternal Life perpetually spring up within thee.

No, there is no such Jargon as this in the Gospel: But as he came as a compassionate Saviour, to make the Blind to see, the Deaf to hear, and the Dumb to speak, and the Dead to awake; as he came as a good Shepherd to seek that which was lost, and as a Physician to heal the Sick; so he only says to the Woman, if she had asked, that is, if she had felt the Want of a Saviour, as the Blind feel the want of Sight, and her Heart had only desired this Gift of God, he would then have bestowed this greatest of all Gifts upon her.

But surely, if this Desire in the Woman would have made her thus capable of all the Benefits of our Saviour, it cannot be inconsistent with the Gospel, to make the same Desire as beneficial to a true and pious Christian, as it would have been to an unbaptized Samaritan.

Again, our Lord saith, 'All things whatsoever ye shall ask in 'Prayer, believing, ye shall receive.† Here you see, all things, and therefore all the Benefits of Christ, are ascribed to Faith, and we have everything that we can desire or pray for, by virtue of it. Does not our Lord here ascribe as much Benefit to Faith, as ever anyone ascribed to the holy Communion? Or who ever said that of the Power, or Benefit, or Efficacy of the Sacrament, which our Lord here says of the Benefit of Faith?

Is not this as inconsistent with the Gospel, as the actual partaking of Christ's Benefits, by the single Duty of receiving the

* John iv. 10.

† Matt. xxi. 22.

the Errors of a late Book. 69

Sacrament? Is not this Benefit of the Prayer of Faith as contrary to this Author's whole System of Virtues united in us, as the other Benefit of the Sacrament? Is it not as just to say, that this Prayer of Faith is only a single Instance of Obedience, as to say so of the Sacrament? And is not the main Design of the Gospel as much destroyed by making Faith to be thus beneficial, as by making the Communion to be so beneficial?

Or can it be supposed, that when our Lord, who ascribes thus much to the Prayer of Faith, when it is alone, would think it too much to be ascribed to it, when the Holy Sacrament is united with it? Or must it be supposed, that this Prayer of Faith loses its Virtue and Power, is deprived of its excellent Effects, only then, when it is a Part of the Communion of Christ's Body and Blood.

Again, our Lord saith, 'Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my Name, he will give it you.' Must not this Author have as much to complain of in this Doctrine, that ascribes so much to Prayer in the Name of Christ, as in that Doctrine, that ascribes so much to the Sacrament? Must he not say, that the praying in the Name of Christ, is but one single Instance of Obedience; and that to say, we are thereby made Partakers of all the Benefits of Christ, is putting that upon one single Act of Obedience, which our blessed Lord has made to depend upon the whole System of all Virtues united in us? Must he not say, that this Account of the Power and Efficacy of Prayer in Christ's Name, is a Doctrine destructive of the main Design of the Gospel?

For everything that this Author objects against this Doctrine of the Sacrament, must with the same Strength be objected against these, and many other the like express Declarations of our Saviour.

Everyone must know that it would be very easy to produce various Passages of the Gospel, that teach the same Doctrine, as these do that I have quoted; and that when this Author said, our Saviour made the partaking of his Benefits to depend upon the whole System of all Virtues united in us, he had just the same Reason and Authority from the Gospel to say so, as he has to say, that Christ declared he came to seek that which was not lost, to heal those which were not sick, and save those who stood in no need of a Saviour.

But now, seeing this is the Nature, Power, and Efficacy of the Prayer of Faith, and of Prayer in the Name of Christ; seeing he himself has assured us, that they make us actual Partakers of everything that we can ask of the Father, or that he through Christ can give us, we have the fullest Assurance, that if we do that which the Sacrament requires to be done; if we don't separate Faith and Prayer in the Name of Christ from it, but perform it in this Faith and Prayer, or make it as it ought to be, a real Exercise of this Faith and Prayer, then we receive in and by it all the Benefits of our Saviour.

But because this Author seems entirely out of his Element, when speaking of the Benefits of Jesus Christ, and not to be able to speak an intelligible Word about it, as to the true Grounds and Nature of it, but only to puzzle himself and the Reader with an empty superficial Way of arguing from the Sound of Words: I shall therefore, in a word or two, endeavour to lay before you the true Grounds of the Benefits of Jesus Christ, as he is the Saviour of all Mankind.

It is the fundamental Doctrine, or rather the known Foundation of all revealed Religion, and the known Foundation of all natural Piety and Goodness, that Jesus Christ is the second Adam: That he is a common Head, or Parent, or Person to all Mankind, in the same manner as Adam is the common Head, or Parent, or Person to all Mankind.

That a real Birth, Life, Nature, and true Man, is in the same Truth and Reality derived to us from this our second Adam, as a real Birth, and Life, and Nature is derived to us from our first Adam. And that as without any Figure or Metaphor of Speech we are all said to be born of Adam, and descended from him; so we are all in the same Dependence upon our second Adam, really and not figuratively born of him, and have our Descent from him; Spirit of his Spirit, Life of his Life, in the same Truth and Reality, as every Man has the Nature of the first Adam.

And herein is seen the infinite Depth of Divine Love and Goodness to Mankind, who though they were by the Condition of their Creation to be derived from one Head or Parent, and to take his State of Perfection or Imperfection; yet were by the Goodness and Care of God for them, provided from the very Beginning with a second Parent, or common Head, who after the Fall of the first, and the fallen State that he had brought upon his Posterity, should be a common Restorer, and put it in every Man's Power to have the same Choice of Life and Death, as the first Man had; that so, they who were lost before they were born, and were made Inheritors of a miserable Nature without their Choice, might have a Divine Life restored to them in a second Parent, which should not be in the Power of anyone to lose for them, but should depend entirely upon their own Will and Desire of it, upon their own Faith, and Hope, and Hungering after it.

This eternal and immutable Truth, worthy of being written in capital Letters of Gold, is the Foundation of all revealed and natural Religion: and a standing Monument of God's universal Goodness and Love to all Mankind, and such as is sufficient to make all Men rejoice and give praise to God.

For by this Truth, all that seems hard and cruel to human Reason, that the Posterity of Adam should be involved in the Consequences of their first Father's Fall, (yet how could it be otherwise?) all this, I say, is made a wonderful Scene of Love, as soon as we consider, that all Mankind were redeemed as soon as they were lost, and that their Redemption was as early, as universal, and as extensive in its Effects, as the Fall was. And that no Son of Adam is left to inherit a poor, earthy, perishable, corrupt Nature from him, without having it in his Choice to be born again of a second Adam, and restored, with Advantage, to all the Riches, and Treasures, and Blessings of a divine and paradisiacal Nature, which were lost without his Consent.

There is something so amazingly loving and merciful in this Conduct of divine Providence over Mankind, that I cannot help thinking, no one can calmly consider it in the Quiet of his Mind, without having all his Infidelity melted down by it. And that such an Act of general Pardon, as early as the first Sin, and a new Parent provided for us, to be our Parent by Choice and Faith, as soon as our first Parent had undone us without our Consent: Such an Act of Pardon being the Beginning and Foundation of all revealed Religion, and of everything that is afterwards revealed in it, has surely enough in it, if once known, to make revealed Religion the Joy, and Comfort, and Desire of every Man's Heart. What would I give that I could but dart one Ray of this Truth into every Unbeliever's Heart; for the smallest Ray of it would do to everyone as the Light that fell from Heaven did to St. Paul, it would make as it were Scales fall from his Eyes: And he would find that all Books and Systems of Infidelity were as unreasonable in themselves, and as hurtful to him, as those Commissions were which Paul had from the High Priest to bind all that called on the Name of Christ.

But to proceed: That Jesus Christ is thus the Saviour and universal Redeemer of all Mankind, that he is this second Adam or Parent, giving a new Birth and Life to all that which was extinguished and lost by Adam; restoring Adam himself, and in him all Mankind to a Possibility of being born again, by their own Will, Choice, Faith, and Desire; and that revealed Religion began with the Declaration of this Redemption, and has revealed nothing but for the Sake and Support of it, is a Truth sufficiently attested by Scripture.

The Declaration which God made to Adam immediately after his Fall, of a Seed of the Woman to bruise the Serpent's Head, was a Declaration of Pardon and Redemption to Adam, and in him to all Mankind; for what he said to Adam, that he said to all that were in the Loins of Adam; who, as they fell in his Fall before they were born, without the Possibility of any one Man's being exempted from it; so were they all put into his State of Pardon and Redemption before they were born, without the Possibility of any one Man's being excluded, or left out of it.

Thus revealed Religion begins with an Offer of a second Adam, and upon the Foot of an universal Pardon and Redemption to all Mankind. Every Son of Adam is in the same Covenant with God that Adam was, and has the same Bruiser of the Serpent as near to him, as he was to Adam, and declared to be his Redeemer, in the same Degree as he was declared to be the Redeemer of Adam.

And who would seek for Arguments against such a Saviour? Or who would cavil at a revealed Religion, that has no other Beginning or End, but to reveal an universal Redemption? Or who can enough call upon all the Creation, Heaven and Earth, Angels and Men, and everything that hath Breath, to praise the Lord for such Salvation? You must forgive these little Digressions; for I want so much to touch the Heart of my Reader, and make him in love with God, and his own Salvation in Christ Jesus, that I know not how to content myself with bare Arguments.

Now this Declaration of God to Adam, of his pardon and Redemption by the Seed of the Woman, is not to be considered, as we consider the Declaration of a Pardon made by some great Prince to an offending Subject, which is only a Declaration of Words, that are heard only with our outward Ears, and of a Person that is entirely distinct from us.

God's pardoning a Sinner, or redeeming fallen Man, has nothing like this in it. If this offending Subject had his Life, and Breath, and Being in and from this great Prince, or could be said to live, and move, and have his Being in him; it would be easy, nay, necessary to believe, that his Declaration of Pardon to him, must be something very different from a Pardon of Words, and must signify some inward Effect, or Change, or new State of Existence in his Prince.

Now this Declaration of God's Pardon and Reconciliation to Adam, and in him to all Mankind, is not the Declaration of a Being that is out of, or separate from us, but of a God in whom we live, and move, and have our Being; who is the Centre of that which is most Central in us, the Life of our Life, the Spirit of our Spirit: His Declaration therefore of Pardon is not a Declaration of Words, or of a Being that is separate from us ; but must signify some inward Change, or new State of our Existence in him, or that he is to us, and in us, that which he was not before he pardoned us. For his Words are Power, and what he speaks he acts ; and what he acts, he acts not out of us, but in the inmost Essence of our Being, because so we exist in him, and he in us.

If God at the Fall had said, Let us save Man, the same had been effected, as when he said, 'Let us make Man.' When therefore God said to Adam and Eve, 'The Seed of the Woman shall bruise the Head of the Serpent,' what was said, was done ; and it was the same Thing, had the same Meaning and Effect, as if he had said, 'Be ye henceforth in a State of Salvation, and let the redeeming, conquering Seed of the Woman from this time begin to have Power in you, and to be in you a Strength and 'Might against the Serpent.' And what he said was done, as when he said, 'Let there be Light, and there was Light.'

Thus this Declaration of Pardon and Redemption made by God to Adam, and, in him, to all his Posterity, was not solely a Promise of something to come, or of a Pardon that was at a Distance, no more than it was the Promise of a God that was at a Distance from him ; but the Declaration of something then inwardly done and given, by a God inwardly present in him, and signified no less than God's seeking and manifesting himself again to a Creature, that had lost him as his God and only Good.

For how can the Anger of that Being, 'in whom we live, and 'move, and have our Being,' be only an Anger of Words, or made known to us only by Words ? Or how can it be anything else, but some inward Loss of that which is our Good in him ?

Or how can his Pardon be only a Pardon of Words, or something heard only with our Ears ? Or how can it be anything else, but his restoring that to us, or his reviving that in us, which makes us again capable of finding him our God and only Good ?

Therefore God's Declaration of Pardon to Adam, was not barely a Promise of something to come, but the Pardon itself ; and was the real Communication of something to Adam, which made him capable of enjoying God as his Good, which he had not when he wanted to be pardoned, and which he could not have, if God was in a State of Anger with him.

Now had not God spoken this Pardon and Reconciliation to Adam after his Fall, he had been in the Condition of the Deep, when it was said, Darkness was upon the Face of the Deep.

Nay, it had been much worse with him ; for had not God made this Declaration of Pardon and Redemption to him at that time, that is, had he not done inwardly in the Depth of his Soul, something like that which he did to the Darkness of the Deep, when he spoke Light into it, Adam and Eve, and all their Posterity, had been inwardly mere Devils, and outwardly mere Beasts, a motley Mixture of both, till the Beast fell into the Earth, and the Soul to the State of Devils.

For had not God thus in the Beginning of the Fall, before any Man was born into the World of Adam and Eve, had he not spoken Pardon and Redemption unto Adam and Eve; neither they, nor any of their Posterity had been capable of any Faith, or Hope, or Desire of God, but had lived as much without all Conscience, or Instinct of Goodness, as the Beasts of the Earth and Devils do.

Therefore God redeemed Man, that is, restored to him a Power of being again his Creature, or a Power of knowing and finding him to be his God, when he said, the 'Seed of the Woman shall 'bruise the Serpent's Head.' He redeemed him by communicating to him a Sense, a Feeling, and a Desire of God, by communicating to him a Capacity to enjoy him as his only Good, by sowing into him a Seed of the Woman, a Spark of Life, an Instinct of Goodness, a Taste of Heaven, a Principle of Holiness, a Touch of Love, the Pearl of the Gospel, the Pledge of Immortality, the hidden Kingdom of God.

For all these Expressions of a Seed, a Spark, an Instinct, a Principle, a Pearl and Kingdom, are insufficient to express that inward Treasure of the Soul, and Fund of everlasting Happiness, which God in the Beginning of the Redemption, or as his Act of Redemption, communicated to Man.

Now in this Degree of Redemption is every Creature that is born of Adam; he has this Kingdom of God in his Soul, as a Grain of Mustard Seed, as a Spark of Life, as a Pledge of Immortality, as his Attraction to God: If he tramples this Pearl under his Feet, if he will choke this Word, if he will put out this Spark, if he will resist this Attraction, then his Destruction is from himself; and when the Carcass of Flesh and Blood falls off from him, he must find himself in his own Hell, and must have the Misery of a darkened, anxious, fiery, self-tormented Nature for ever, that would not suffer itself to be redeemed.

But if he will consent to his Redemption, and co-operate with that inward Redeemer which God has put into his Soul; if he will suffer his Spark to kindle, his Instinct of Goodness to spread itself, the Light of the Life to arise in him, the Voice of God to be heard in him; then will the Divine Life, the inward Man, be brought forth in him; and when his Body breaks off, Heaven will be made manifest in his Soul, and he will fall into all the Fulness of God. The Son of God will be his Light, the Holy Spirit will breathe in him, and the Power and Omnipotency of the Father will be Life and Strength in him; and thus, in the completest Sense of the Words, shall he ever live, and move, and have his Being in God.

And now, my dear Reader, what shall I say to you? How shall I do that, which I most of all desire to do, touch your Heart? Or how can your Heart be untouched with this affecting View of the Mercies of God in Christ Jesus, and of the Riches and Treasures which lie hid in your own Soul, wanting nothing but your own Consent and good Wishes to be manifested in you?

But it may be, modern Infidelity has stolen into your Heart, and so you lie starving in the midst of Plenty, choosing rather to famish on the dry Husks of Reason, Dispute, and Infidelity, than to have this Divine Life, this Riches of your own Soul, discovered to you on the Terms of the Gospel. It may be you have buried this Spark of Life, this inward Man, and have heaped all the Earth upon him that you can get, that you have sealed the Stone of his Sepulchre, and have set your greatest Enemy, a reasoning Infidelity, upon the Watch, to dispute, wrangle, and deny every Doctrine of Scripture, that as a good Angel would roll away the Stone of the Sepulchre, and let your inward Redeemer arise in you.

If this is your Case, if you have let a reasoning Infidelity into your Heart, you know not what Mischief you have let into it; for the Denial of the Gospel reaches much further, and is more extensive than you imagine.

For to deny Jesus Christ, is to deny your Share in the first Pardon of God to Man; it is returning into the first State of the Fall, and refusing to be a Partner with Adam in his State of Forgiveness; it is going over to the Side of the Serpent, and declaring that you will not enter into Peace with God on the Terms of bruising his Head; for Jesus Christ that calls upon you in the Gospel, is that same Christ which became Adam's Pardon; and if you reject him in the Gospel, it is rejecting him from the Beginning: and is saying, that you will have no Share in that Salvation which was granted to Adam, and in him to all Mankind. Nay, what is still more, if you reject the Saviour offered to you in the Gospel, you reject all that which makes you differ from a Devil; for that Saviour which speaks to you in the Gospel, is that very same inward Light of your Mind, which makes you now differ from a Devil; for had you nothing of that Jesus Christ in you, whom you reject in the Gospel, you would be in the same dark Malignity, and self-tormenting Wretchedness, in which every diabolical Nature is.

To refuse him that speaketh to you in the Gospel, is not barely to renounce a certain particular Religion revealed by God at a certain Time, it is not barely to reject Christ as come in the Flesh; but it is rejecting all that God has ever transacted with Man, it is renouncing all that is Divine and Good within you, all that God inwardly speaks and teaches in the Depth of your Soul; it is saying that you will have no Benefit from the good Workings or Motions of your own Heart, or the Instincts of Goodness that are stirring in it; for Jesus Christ that calls you to Repentance in the Gospel, is the very same blessed Saviour, that warns, reproveth, and preaches Repentance in the inmost Essence of your Spirit. For it is a Deceit of the grossest Kind, to think that Christ came only as our Saviour, when he came in the Flesh, or that he only speaks to us that which is outwardly spoken in the Gospel; for he always was that in every Man that saved him from being entirely a diabolical Nature, and was as really the Teacher and Mover of all that is good within you, as he was the Teacher of the Gospel. Therefore to reject him as your Saviour, to refuse him as such, and to desire to be without him, is in reality to desire to be in Hell, to have the Darkness and Distress of diabolical Beings; it is desiring to be without any Light of God upon your Mind, or any Instincts of Goodness stirring in your Heart.

And if this is not the immediate Effect of your Infidelity, if you don't immediately find that the Denial of Christ is putting out all the Light within you; 'tis because Christ is Love, and will be so good towards you, as to continue his inward Light to you, though you reject his outward Light of the Gospel.

But, my Friend, be wise in time, for this Goodness will continue but a Time; don't let a poor worthless Infidelity beguile you to eat the Dust of the Earth with the Serpent, when God has provided for you the Bread of Life. For this Time of Goodness and Forbearance will soon be over; and if the End of it finds you in your Infidelity, rejecting the Benefits of Christ, you will then see the whole of all you desired, you will be without Christ, you will find that all is gone with him, and that you will have nothing left, but that Nature which is the Torment of Hell.

You now think, that because you can frame Ideas of Virtue, and exert some Acts of Goodness, though you reject all Faith in Christ, that therefore he is not necessary to your Virtue and Happiness; but your miserable Mistake lies here, that you think Christ is only he that preached the Gospel, and that it is not him that speaks and moves every good Thought or Word that is spoken in you, but that you have a Light and Goodness of your own. But when this Time is over, and you have spent your Hour of Grace, Christ will no longer stand knocking at the Door of your Heart; and then you will find, that you are as empty of all inward Light, as you are of the Gospel, and that by rejecting him as your Saviour, you have rejected all that was Divine and Good within you.

Infidelity therefore is a much deeper Evil than you may imagine, it denies and rejects more than you think of; you may intend by it only to change the Light of the Gospel for the Light of Reason, but Christ will not be divided by your Intention; he is the one only Light of Men, the same in the Heart that he is in the Gospel; and though you may now think that you have two Teachers, because he teaches in two Places, and therefore may adhere to one, and reject the other; yet this is a Deceit that can last no longer than the Disputings of this World last with you.

When the Veil of Flesh and Blood is pulled off, and you must stand in the Nakedness of your Soul before God; then you will know, that these two Lights are only one, and that neither of them can be rejected by itself. These Lights appear now as two, only because God is so good as to leave no Part of you untried, but presses the Kingdom of Heaven upon you, both from within, and from without.

The eternal Word, the Son of God, took human Nature upon him, worked all his Miracles, taught all his Doctrines, underwent all his Sufferings, to make that Light of the Mind, which every Man that cometh into the World had received from him, effectual to their Salvation; therefore the Light of the Gospel, and the Light of the Mind, are one, as Christ is one, whether he speaks to you inwardly or outwardly. If therefore you reject Christ in the utmost Efforts of his Goodness to save you, you will find that the renouncing of Christ, is renouncing all that you have from him, and that all the good Light of your Mind, call it what you will, as it was his, is all rejected with him, and that nothing is left in that Soul, where he is not, but mere Darkness.

But to return to my Subject; what I have said above of God's Covenant with Adam, and the Redemption granted to him, is God's Covenant with all Mankind, and therefore thus far all Mankind are the redeemed of Jesus. There is no Partiality in God, no Election of one People to Salvation, and Dereliction of another to their own Misery. As all fell and died in Adam, so all were restored in his Restoration.

Thus says the Apostle, 'As by the Offence of one, Judgment came upon all to Condemnation; even so by the Righteousness

‘of one, the free Gift came upon all Men unto Justification of Life.’*

But you will perhaps say, how does it appear, that this first Covenant of God with Mankind, or Redemption of all Men in the Redemption of Adam, is the Redemption in and by Jesus Christ.

I may better ask you, Where you can have the smallest Reason even to suspect the contrary? For is not the Seed of the Woman, Jesus Christ? And if our Salvation then began, when God made Declaration of the saving Power of this Seed, it is plain, that Christ’s Redemption then began in Mankind, that he was thenceforward in every Man as a Spark of Life, that as a secret Power, should bruise the Serpent, and support us against him, till he, in the Fulness of Time, should, in the Fulness of the Promise, become such a Seed of the Woman, as should openly triumph over Death and Hell, and all the Kingdom of the Serpent. For if it were Christ that became Adam’s Redeemer in the promised Seed; if he had actually the Power of that Salvation manifested in his Soul, and was in a State of Redemption, because Christ was become the Ransom and Life of his Soul; then all the Sons of Adam, from the first to the last, are in Adam’s state of Covenant with God through Jesus Christ, and have the Seed of the Woman doing all that for them, which it did for Adam.

Again, Does not the Gospel expressly say, that Jesus Christ is the True Light, which lighteth every Man that cometh into the World? Therefore Jesus Christ is in every Man that cometh into the World, and every Son of Adam is in a State of Redemption in and by Jesus Christ, and every Son of Adam has received that same from Jesus Christ, which Adam received from him, viz., an inward Light of Life, a Beginning of his Salvation, an actual Power or Strength to resist the Serpent; therefore Jesus Christ, as he is the Light and Life of Men, as he is the Bruiser of the Serpent, as he is the Power of Salvation, is and ever was the Free Gift of God unto all Men.

Again, does not the Scripture teach us, that God is as well the God of the Gentiles, as the God of the Jews? But if he is their God, then they are his People. And as we know that God is not the Creator of any Beings, but in and by Jesus Christ, by whom everything was made, that was made; so he is not the God of any People, but in and by Jesus Christ, who is the Reconciler of all Things unto God, by whom alone all Things and Persons are made acceptable to him; therefore if he is the God and Father of the Gentiles, then the Gentiles have an Interest in Jesus Christ, have all their Access to God, as their Father and Creator, in and by the Benefits and Merits of Jesus Christ; or, in other Words, are actual Partakers of the Benefits of Jesus Christ, as he is the Saviour of Mankind.

the Errors of a late Book. 79

Which is a Privilege or Blessing that this Author will not allow Christians to have, even when eating the Flesh and drinking the Blood of Christ; so little does he know what he speaks of, when he speaks of the partaking of the Benefits of Christ.

But you will perhaps further ask, How can the Gentiles have an Interest in the Benefits of Jesus Christ, since they know him not, nor ask anything in his Name. May you not as well ask me, How they can be said to live, and move, and have their Being in God, who know not what it is to have Life, and Motion, and Being in him, nor ever confessed it in a true Manner, or under a right Sense of it? For if they can have the Benefit of a Life in God, and be blessed by it, who are either totally, or much ignorant of it; then Christ, as he is the Atonement and Life of Adam and his Posterity, may be a Benefit and Blessing to those who are totally ignorant of it, or at least know nothing of him, as he is Christ, or the Son of God manifest in the Flesh.

Again, the Scripture says of Jesus Christ, that he came unto his own, and his own received him not, that is, they knew him not: Now if he could come unto his own, though they knew him not, then it is plain, that they may be his, who know him not, that is, they may have some Interest in him, be purchased by him, have received much from him, be greatly related to him, who yet are insensible of it.

Lastly, You might much better ask me, How can they, who never knew anything of Christ, as their Mediator and Atonement, be judged by him at the last Day? For if they were altogether Strangers to Christ, had no Relation to him, had received nothing from him, or by means of him, he could not be their Judge. For Jesus Christ cannot do anything as a Judge, till he has done everything as a Saviour; nor be anywhere a Judge, but where he has first appeared as a Saviour.

Therefore it is an evident Truth, that had not all Nations, and every individual Man, received a certain Means of Salvation through him, he could not be the Judge of all.

Heathens, Jews, and Christians differ not thus, that the one have a Saviour and are in a redeemed State, and the other are not; or that the one have one Saviour, and the other have another; for the one Judge of all, is the one Saviour of all: but they only differ in this, that one and the same Saviour is differently made known to them, and differently to be obtained by them. The Heathens knew him not as he was in the numerous Types of the Jewish Law, they knew him not as he is gloriously manifested in the Gospel; but they knew him as he was the God of their Hearts, manifesting himself by a Light of the Mind, by Instincts of Goodness, by a Sensibility of Guilt, by Awakenings and Warnings of Conscience; and this was their Gospel, which they received as truly and really in, and by, and through Jesus Christ as the Law and Gospel were received through him.

Therefore it is a great and glorious Truth, enough to turn every Voice into a Trumpet, and make Heaven and Earth ring with Praises and Hallelujahs to God, that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of all the World, and of every Man of every Nation, Kindred, and Language. Therefore saith St. John, 'They sung a new Song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the Book, and to open the Seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy Blood, out of every Kindred, and Tongue, and People, and Nation.* And again, 'After this I beheld, says he, and lo, a great Multitude, which no Man could number, of all Nations, and Kindreds, and People, and Tongues, stood before the Throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white Robes, and with Palms in their Hands, and cried with a loud Voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb.†

I must, before I proceed further, put in here a Word of Caution to two Sorts of Readers. If you are in such a State, as I supposed one to be above, touched with modern Infidelity, having your Reason set upon the watch to guard you against the Gospel, it may here do its Office, and will perhaps tell you, that what I have here said in favour of the general Light, or Seed of Life that is in all Men, is much the same thing that you say in Defence of natural Reason, or Religion, only with this Difference, that I mention it as coming from Christ, and you consider it as the bare Light of Nature.

Now if this were all the Difference, is not this enough to show you, that my Opinion is the very Denial of yours; for if I proved that what you called the natural Light of Men, was wholly derived from the divine Revelation, would not that be a sufficient Proof that I denied and disproved your Religion of natural Reason? And have I not done the same thing, if I have asserted the Light of Men to be a Light derived from Christ? And how can such an Assertion be made in the least favourable to your Opinion, that such a Light is natural?

† Rev. vii. 9, 10.

But to prevent all Misapprehension, I now declare to you, and will show you in the most explicit manner, that that which I call the Light of Men, or the Seed of Life sown into all Men by Jesus Christ, is as wholly different from that which you call natural Reason, as Light is different from Darkness; and that they stand in that same State of Contrariety to each other, both as to their Original, their Nature and Qualities, as our Saviour and Pontius Pilate did.

I must therefore assure you, that as I fear God, and wish your Salvation, so I can no more say a word in favour of what is now called the Religion of natural Reason, than I would recommend to you the ancient Idolatry of Heathens. And yet at the same time, I am no more an Enemy to Reason, than I am an Enemy to the Light of the Sun, and as freely wish you all the Benefits of the one, as of the other.

But if you do by Reason, as they did by the Sun, who thought it to be divine, fell down before it, and expected all from it; then I must speak as plainly to you of the Inability of Reason to do you this Good, as I must have spoken of the Inability of the Sun to such Idolaters of it.

And if I should have told them, that the Sun was no more their God, than the poorest Worm upon Earth, and that it could no more make those to be divine that worshipped it, than a Storm of Hail could make those to be divine that it fell upon, I should have told them a great Truth. So if I say to you, that Reason, or the Faculty of Reasoning, is no more the Religion of Man, than the Faculty of doubting or erring is; and that it can no more make those to be divine who place their Trust in it, than a great Error can make those to be divine who abide by it, I should tell you a great and useful Truth.

For Reason, or a Faculty of Reasoning upon the moral Habitues and Relations of Things and Persons, or upon the moral Proportion of Actions, has no more of the Nature and Power of Religion in it, than so much Reasoning upon the Relations of Squares and Triangles. And if a Man had this Religion of Reason only when he was dreaming in Sleep, it would be the same good thing to him, as it is to those who make it their Religion when they are awake.

For the Good of Religion, is like the Good of Food and Drink to an hungry and thirsty Creature; and if instead of giving such a one Bread and Wine, or Water, you should teach him to seek for Relief, by attending to clear Ideas of the Nature of Bread, of different Ways of making it, and the Relation it hath to Water; he would be left to die in the Want of Sustenance, just as your Religion of Reasoning leaves the Soul to perish in the Want of Religion. And as such a Man would have no more Benefit from such Reasoning about the Relation that Bread had to Water, whether it was the Reasoning of a Dream, or the Reasoning of a Man awake, because either Way he was kept under the same Want of that which was to preserve his Life ; so whether a Man has your Religion of Reasoning only when he is asleep, or when he is awake, is the same thing ; because either Way he is kept under the same Want of that which can alone preserve the Life of the Soul. For the Good that is in Religion, or the Good that we want to receive by it, is no more within the reach of our Reason, or to be communicated to us by it, than the Good of Food is in the reach of our Reason, or can be communicated to us by it. And yet as a Man may have the Good of Food much assisted and secured to him, by the right Use of his Reason, though Reason has not the Good of Food in it ; so a Man may have the Good of Religion much assisted and secured to him by the right Use of Reason, though Reason has not the Good of Religion in it.

And as a Man ought not to be accused as an Enemy to the true Use of Reasoning about Food, because he declares that Reason is not Food, nor can supply the Place of it ; so a Man ought not to be accused as an Enemy to the Use of Reasoning in Religion, because he declares that Reason is not Religion, nor can supply the Place of it.

But to show you the Bottom of this whole Matter, pray consider with me as follows : We have no Want of Religion, but so far as we want to better our State in God, or so far as we are unpossessed of God, or less possessed of him than we might be. This is the true Ground of Religion, to alter our State of Existence in God, and to have more of the Divine Nature or Perfections communicated to us. Nothing therefore is our Good in Religion, but that which alters our State of Existence in God for the better, and puts us in Possession of something of God, or makes us Partakers of the Divine Nature in such a Manner and Degree as we wanted it.

Everything that is in Life, has its Degree of Life in and from God, it lives, and moves, and has its Being in God. This is as true of Devils themselves, as of the highest and most perfect Angels. Therefore all the Happiness or Misery of all Creatures consists only in this, as they are more or less possessed of God, or as they differently partake of the Divine Nature, or according to their different State of Existence in God.

But if this be the Truth of the Matter, (and who can deny it?) then we have the Certainty of Demonstration, that nothing can be our Good in Religion, but that which communicates to us something of God, or the Divine Nature, or that which *better*s our State and Manner of Existence in God.

For if Devils are what they are, because of their State and Manner of Existence in God ; if blessed Angels are what they are, because of their State and Manner of Existence in God ; then it undeniably follows, that all that is betwixt Angels and Devils, all Beings from the Happiness of the one to the Misery of the other, must and can have no other Happiness or Misery, but according to their State and Manner of Existence in God, or according as they have more or less of the State of Angels, or the State of Devils in them. Therefore nothing can be our Good in Religion, but that which alters our State and Manner of Existence in God, and renders us possessed of him in a different and better Manner.

Now if you were to send to the fallen Spirits of Darkness, all the Systems of your Religion of Reason, that have been published here, to let them know that they have the Power of their own Restoration and Happiness within themselves, that they need seek to nothing, but their own natural Reason and Understanding, and the Strength and Activity of their own Powers, to raise them to all the Happiness they are capable of ; such a Religion would be so far from altering or mending their State of Existence in God, or doing them any good, that it would add Strength to all their Chains ; and the more firmly they believed and relied upon it, the more would they be confirmed and fixed in their Separation from God.

And yet, a Religion that must necessarily keep them in Hell, is the only Religion that you will have to carry you to Heaven. May God deliver you from this Error !

On the other hand, if you could infuse into those dark Spirits a Glimpse of that Light of the Mind, or Instinct of Goodness, which I have said all Mankind have received from Jesus Christ, as their second Adam, their Salvation would be so far begun, and Hell would become a State of Trial for their Redemption. Therefore that Light of the Mind, or Instinct of Goodness, which I have spoken of, has the utmost Contrariety to your Religion of Reason, that can possibly be imagined.

The one is the Beginning of the new Birth in Christ, and the Foundation of Heaven ; the other is the Growth of Death, and the very Essence of Hell in the Soul. Now that here is no Aggravation of the Matter, but the plain and naked Truth, you may easily see from a Consideration of the Articles of your Religion of Reason. Your Religion of Reason, is a Religion of natural Strength and Power, that rejects the Necessity of a Saviour, that feels no Want of him, that rejects the Necessity of Divine Grace, the Guidance of the Holy Spirit, and feels no Want of it ; these are the essential Parts of your Religion of Reason, which are in Truth and Reality the Religion of Hell, or that very State of Mind which reigns and governs there.

For could those miserable Spirits renounce these Articles of your Religion, their Chains of Darkness would break off from them. Could they cast themselves down before God, humbly confessing, that of themselves they are not able to save themselves, or even to think a good Thought: Could they in Humility and Penitence beg of the Mercy of God, to do something in them and for them, which they cannot do to themselves: Could they acknowledge the Want of a Saviour, ask God to find one for them: Could they feel and own the Want of his Holy Spirit, and humbly beg of God to be assisted by it, a Door of Salvation would be opened to them. And yet you see that nothing opens this Door, but the plain and full Renunciation of every Part of your Religion of Reason.

And if it be asked, Why they cannot be saved? no other Reason can be given, but because they will not; they cannot renounce your Religion of Reason, that is, they cannot humbly acknowledge their own Inability to do themselves good; they will not admit the Thought of a Saviour, they will not be assisted by the Spirit of God, or own the Want of his Life in them, and therefore they are and must be what they are, Prisoners in Chains of Darkness.

Awake therefore, my dear Friend, and cast away this Religion from you, with more Earnestness than you would cast burning Coals out of your Bosom: For could it only destroy your Body, I should have been less earnest in giving you notice of it. But as I have the fullest Conviction, that it is the Death and Darkness of your Soul, and is bringing the Essence of Hell secretly and invisibly into it; you must forgive me, if I use all the Expressions and Descriptions I can think of, to prevent your giving into it. Had I a superficial Charity for you, or a slight View of the Hurt you are doing to yourself, I should speak to you accordingly; but the Depth and Earnestness of my Desire to do you good, must have expressions suitable to it. Study not therefore how to find fault with me, or to dislike the Words, or Manner of my Style, for it is the Style of Love and Zeal for your Salvation; and if you condemn anything but Love in it, you condemn something that is not there.

I have shown you, that the Religion of Reason is the very State of hellish Minds, and that they are what they are, because they will do all for themselves, place all in their own Strength, because they cannot be humble, cannot own the Want of a Saviour; and I have only appealed to this Instance of the Nature and Power of your Religion of Reason, to show you in the most undeniable Manner, that it must, and can have no other Effect upon you, than it has upon them ; that it must produce the same Hell in your Soul, the same Separation from God, and cannot possibly be any more the Way of Salvation for you, than it is for them.

What is the Reason that the Faith of the Devils, or their Belief of a God, does them no good? It is because there is nothing in it but their own Act, a mere Product of their own ; it is because it is an Act of your Religion of Reason, that will have no Virtue but by its own Strength, and of its own Growth. But if they could have so much of the Religion of the Gospel, as to say in the Language of it, Lord, help our Unbelief, their Faith would be changed, and be beneficial to them, only for this Reason, because they had renounced your Religion of doing good to themselves by their own natural Powers.

Hence it sufficiently appears, that your Way of natural Reason cannot be the Way of Salvation ; 1st, Because the Want of Salvation is nothing else, but the wanting to have our State, or Manner of Existence in God, altered for the better ; or to have something of God communicated to us, which we want and are capable of receiving. But if this is the Nature of Salvation, then no Religion can save us, can do us our proper Good, or supply our proper Want, but that which has Power to alter our State of Existence in God, or to communicate to us that of God which we want, and are capable of. Therefore it follows, that nothing but that same God which created us, which gave us our State and Manner of Existence in him, and communicated to us that which we possess of him ; nothing but that same God can redeem us, or help us to that State or Manner of Existence in him, which we have lost, or are in want of.

But if God alone can redeem us, and for the same Reason that he alone can create ; if Creation and Redemption necessarily require the same Power, and must for the same Reason be necessarily appropriated to God, because each of them equally imply the Communication of something of God to us ; then I suppose it may be granted, that the Religion of Reason, which is for saving ourselves by our own natural Powers, is the greatest of all Absurdities ; as absurd as to suppose, that we can create by our own natural Powers, because Creation and Redemption both of them equally imply a Communication of something of the Divine Nature ; and therefore he that cannot do the one, cannot do the other.

And if a Man was to ask himself, why he cannot be the Saviour of other People, as well as of himself? He could say nothing against the one, but what must for the same Reason be said against the other. For if Salvation is a Communication of something of God to the Person saved, then it is plain, that a Man can no more do this for himself, than he can do it for another.

There never could have been any Dispute about the Possibility of saving ourselves, nor any Pretence to save ourselves by our own natural Faculties, had not Men lost all true Knowledge both of God and themselves. For this Dispute cannot happen, till Men suppose that God is some outward Being, that our Relation to him is an outward Relation, that Religion is an outward Thing that passes between God and us, like Terms of Behaviour between Man and Man; that Sin hurts and separates us from God, only as a Misdemeanour hurts and separates us from our Prince; that an offended or angry God either gives or refuses Pardon to us, as an angry Prince does to his Subjects; and that what he gives us, or forgives us, is something as distinct and different from himself, as when a Prince sitting upon his Throne gives or forgives something to an Offender, that is an hundred Miles from him.

Now all this is the same total Ignorance of God, of what he is, of the Relation we have to him, and the Manner of his being our Good, as when the old Idolaters took Men to be Gods. And yet nothing is more plain, than that your Religion of Reason is wholly founded upon these gross and false Notions of God. You have not an Argument in its Defence, but what supposes all these Errors just mentioned; that our Relation to God is an outward Relation, like that of Subjects to their Prince, and that what we do to, and for God, as our Service to him, is and must be done by our own Power, as that which we do to, and for our Prince, must be by our own Power. And here lies the Foundation of all your Religion of Reason and Natural Power, that if it was not sufficient to obtain for us all that we want of God, he must be less good than a good earthly Prince, who requires no more of us, than that which we have a natural Strength to do, or can do by our own Power.

And yet this Error appears to have all the Grossness of Idolatry, as soon as you suppose, that God is no outward separate Being, but that we are what we are, have what we have, can do that which we can do, because he has brought us to this State of Life, Power and Existence in himself, because he has made us, so far as we are made Partakers or Possessors of his own Nature, and has communicated to us so much of himself; or, in the Words of Scripture, because in him we live, move, and have our Being, and consequently have no Life, Motion or Being out of him. For from this State of our Existence in God, it necessarily follows, first, that by the Nature of our Creation we are only put into a Capacity of receiving Good : A Creature as such, can be in no other State ; it is as impossible for him to enrich himself, or communicate more Good to himself, as it was to create himself. 2dly, That nothing but God himself can do us any good. 3dly, That God cannot do us good, but by the Communication of himself in some manner to us.

For hence it evidently follows, that your Religion of Reason, which supposes that we have natural Powers that can put us in Possession of that, which we want to be possessed of in God, or that we need no more Divine Assistance to recover what we have lost of God, than to obtain a Pardon from a Prince ; or that God need communicate no more of himself to us in our Salvation, than a Prince communicates of himself to his pardoned Subject, has all the Mistakes, Error and Ignorance of God that is in Idolatry, when it takes God to be something that he is not ; and has all the false Devotion that is in Idolatry, when it puts the same Trust in, and expects the same Help from its own Powers and Faculties, which Idolaters did in and from their Idols.

Therefore your Religion of Reason, which you esteem as the modern Refinement of an human Mind, and more excellent and rational than the Faith and Humility of the Gospel, has all the Dregs of the Heathen Idolatry in it, and has changed nothing in Idolatry, but the Idol ; but has the same Mistakes of the Nature of God, and of the Manner in which he is our God, and our Good, as those Idolaters had ; and only differs from them in such a Degree of Philosophy, as the Religion of worshipping the Sun differs from the Religion of worshipping an Onion.

And if you expect that divine Assistance from your Reason, which one did from the Sun, and another from an Onion ; ye are all equally Idolaters, though ye may not be equally Philosophers.

For as soon as it is known and confessed, that God is all in all, that in him we live, move, and have our Being ; that we can have nothing separately or out of him, but everything in him ; that we can have no Being, nor any Degree of Being, nor any Degree of Good but in him ; and that he can give us nothing but himself, nor any Degree of Salvation, but in such Degree as he communicates something more of himself ; as soon as this is known, then it is known with the utmost Evidence, that to put our Trust in the Sun, an Onion, or our own Reason, if not equally absurd, is yet equally idolatrous, and equally prejudicial to our Salvation.

This I think, my dear Friend, may sufficiently show you both the Nature and Danger of your Religion of Reason ; and that it can no more supply the Needs and Necessities of your Soul, than an Idol can save them that worshipped it ; that in this respect it has the Insignificancy of an Idol, the Vanity of an Idol, and the Sin of an Idol ; that it is that same Self-confidence, Self-acquiescence, that same Refusal of a Saviour and all divine Assistance, that keeps lost Spirits the Prisoners of Hell. Could they touch the Spirit of the Gospel, their Freedom would be begun ; and because they will not, cannot depart in the smallest Tittle from your Religion of natural Strength, their Chains are unmovable.

For no Soul can be lost, that can truly humble itself before God, and apply to his Mercy to be helped, saved, and redeemed in such a Manner as it shall please him. Let it be hid, or buried, or imprisoned where it will, Hell and Earth, Death and Darkness, and everything must give way to the Soul thus converted to God, that has no Confidence in itself, that sees nothing of its own but Sin, and that desires and calls upon God to save it by some Miracle of his own Mercy and Goodness. By this Sensibility of the Want of a Saviour, and by this humble Conversion and Application to God for him, all Chains are broken off, all Wounds are healed, and the Soul must infallibly find, if it thus continues to seek, its Salvation in the unknown Depths and Riches of the Divine Mercy.

On the other hand, no Soul, however refined and speculative, however lofty and aspiring in its Imaginations, spiritual in its Conceptions, or deep in its Penetration, can possibly be saved, that trusts in its own Strength and Ability, and will have no other Saviour or Redeemer, but its own natural Reason and Faculties.

The whole Universe has not two Truths of greater Certainty than these. And yet if they are Truths, and Truths of the utmost Certainty, then the absolute Necessity of the Gospel Salvation, and utter Impossibility of being saved by your Religion of Reason, has its final Decision.

Further, that Principle of Life, or Light of the Mind, which I have said that every Man receives from Jesus Christ, as the Beginning of his Salvation, is entirely different from your magnified Light of Reason, as that signifies a Faculty of viewing the Relations of the Ideas of Things, and drawing Consequences from them. For that Light I speak of, is Goodness itself, a Seed or Degree of so much of the heavenly Life in the Soul ; but this Faculty of Speculating and Reasoning has nothing of the Nature of Goodness or Religion ; it has not so much as the Shadow of it, and is in its own Nature as foreign from Religion, when it is speculating upon it, as when it is speculating upon anything else. Just as our Faculty of seeing has no more of Goodness, or the Nature of an Angel in it, when it sees the Picture of an Angel, than when it sees the Picture of a Beast.

And as a blind Man has no more Light in him, when he reasons about Light and Colours, than when he discourses about Weights and Measures; so this Ratiocination, or Reasoning of the Mind, has no more of Religion in it, when it speculates its Ideas of God, Goodness and Morality, than when it speculates its Ideas of Trees and Houses.

And the Reason is plain, because this Faculty of speculating and arguing, is only the Activity of the Mind upon its own Images and Ideas, and is only the same bare Activity, whatever the Images be that exercise it; it has nothing of the Nature of the Images that it views, nor gets the Nature of them, because it views them; as it does not become dark when it considers the Nature, Causes, and Effects of Darkness, nor becomes Light when it reasons about it; so neither is it Religion, nor gets anything of the Nature of Religion, when it is wholly taken up in making Descriptions and Definitions of it.

If the Needle touched with the Loadstone was an intelligent Being, it could reason and make Definitions of itself, of Attraction, and of the Loadstone; but it would be easy to see, that the Attraction in the Needle, or the Virtue of the Loadstone that was left in it, was something in its whole Nature really different from this reasoning about it; and that this reasoning and defining had no Relation to this Attraction, nor would ever be the more like it, for its reasoning upon it, though it continued ever so long, or improved ever so much in its Descriptions of it, but would always be at the same Distance from it, and could have nothing of its Nature in it. But now if this reasoning Faculty in the Needle should pretend, that the Needle need not be drawn by an inward Attraction, that it need not be unfixed, or delivered from any outward Impediments of its turning to the Loadstone, because this reasoning Faculty was its true and proper Attraction, being full of Ideas and Definitions of it; you would then have a plain Example of your Practice, in taking natural Reason to be true Religion, and to have the Nature and Power of something that carries the Soul to God.

For this Instance is a clear Explication of the whole Matter; for that which I have called the first Redemption of Christ in the Soul, a Seed of Life, an Instinct of Good, a Stirring of Conscience, an Attraction to God, is that to the Soul, which Attraction is to the Needle that is touched, and is as different from your Religion of Reason, as a reasoning Faculty in the Needle would be different from its Attraction, and never could be Attraction, or have the Nature of it.

If the Needle loses its Attraction, its Communication with the Loadstone is at an end; and though it reasons never so long about it, it is still at the same Distance from it. So if the Soul loses its Instinct of Goodness, its Seed of a Divine Life, its Attraction to God, all its Reasonings and Definitions about God and Goodness are of no Use to carry it to God, but it must lie in an absolute State of Separation from him, if its Attraction, its inward Tendency to God, is lost.

And let me tell you, my dear Friend, for so I must call you and think of you, that there is much more in this Instance than you imagine. For all is Magnetism, all is Sentiment, Instinct, and Attraction, and the Freedom of the Will has the Government of it. There is nothing in the Universe but Magnetism, and the Impediments of it. For as all things come from God, and all things have something of God and Goodness in them, so all things have magnetical Effects and Instincts both towards God and one another. This is the Life, the Force, the Power, the Nature of everything, and hence everything has all that is really Good or Evil in it; Reason stands only as a Busybody, as an idle Spectator of all this, and has only an imaginary Power over it.

We discover this Magnetism in some things, where it breaks out sensibly; but it is everywhere, for the same Reason that it is anywhere, though we are too busy with the Fictions of our own Minds to see it, or too much employed in such things as resist and suppress its Force.

But because this Magnetism is a secret Life, that wants to increase its Strength before it can sensibly show its Power; and because we have an Activity of Reason within us, that is soon in Action, and concerns itself with everything, and takes all upon it, as if it did all; because it can look at all, and dispute about all, therefore it is, that this Magnetism, or Instinct towards God and Goodness, has much Difficulty to show itself sufficiently, and only stirs now and then within us, or when Sickness, Distress, or some great outward Shock has so dashed in pieces all Images of Reason, and stopped the Activity of our Minds, that this secret Power of the Soul has Liberty to awake in it.

This is that Trumpet of God which will raise and separate the Dead, and then all Impediments being removed, everything will take its place, not according to the Images and Ideas it has here played with, but according to the inward Tendency and Attraction of its Nature, and Heaven and Hell will each take its own.

And even whilst we are in this Life, this Magnetism is the Mark within us, to what Part we belong; and that which has its Attraction in us, has the Right to us, and Power over us, though for a while Flesh and Blood, and the Nature of our temporal State, hinders this from being visibly and sensibly known.

Nothing however is more plain, than that our Goodness bears no Proportion to our intellectual Abilities of Reason ; everyone sees this, and yet no more than this need be seen, to give us the fullest Demonstration, that natural Reason has no Connection with Virtue and Goodness, and therefore surely can have no Connection with our Salvation, or be the proper Cause of it.

Hence we see, that learned, acute, rational Philosophers are often Atheists ; and those that can demonstrate the Foundation of Virtue, and paint every Office of it, are Rakes and Debauchees, and will sell every Appearance of practical Virtue for a Salary of so much a Year ; whilst those that seem to have little of intellectual Accomplishments, are Virtuous and Honest, have a taste and Relish for every practical Virtue.

The natural Love or Affection of Relations, bears no Proportion to our rational Abilities to speak or write of them. A Parent that is of too refined an Understanding to content himself with the Morals of the Gospel, or its low Way of making Men good, and that wants to be entertained with a Virtue of more Mathematical Exactness, is often content with the Demonstration, and so remains deficient in the plainest Duties of domestic Affection : when the poor Labourer or Mechanic, that knows not what you mean by a Definition, has all the solid Love and Affection that becomes a good Relation. All this, and much more, which you and everyone may think for himself of the same Kind, is a sufficient Proof, that the Ground of Goodness in every Man, is something entirely distinct from our natural Faculties of Reason and Speculation.

And therefore, when you place the Power of your Salvation in your intellectual Light, or the Strength of your own Reason, you place it in your weakest Part, in the poorest, most trifling and insignificant Thing that belongs to you, and upon that which has the least Effect in human Life.

The only Good that Reason can do to you, is to remove the Impediments of Virtue, and to give room to that inward Instinct or Attraction to God and Goodness to display itself ; that the inmost Spirit of your Mind may receive its Strength and Assistance from the Spirit of God, from which, as the Needle from the Loadstone, it has all its Instinct of Goodness and Tendency towards God.

For this inward Instinct of Goodness, or Life of God in the Soul, is all the real and living Goodness that is in you, and is as different and distinct from natural Reason, as the Light, and Heat, and Power and Virtue of the Sun, is different from a Picture of it upon a Piece of Canvas, and has as different Effects upon the Mind.

For this Light of bare Reason, or the reasoning Faculty of the Mind, has no Contrariety to the Vices of the Heart, it neither kills them, nor is killed by them. As Pride, Vanity, Hypocrisy, Envy or Malice, don't take away from the Mind its Geometrical Skill; so a Man may be most Mathematical in his Demonstrations of the Religion of Reason, when he has extinguished every good Sentiment of his Heart, and be the most zealous for its Excellency and Sufficiency, when he has his Passions in the most disordered State.

But in that Light of the Heart, or Attraction to God, which I have said is common to all Mankind in and through Jesus Christ, all is contrary. As it is a Gift and Grace of God, so it is a real Life, a living Thing, a Sentiment of the Heart, and so far as it grows and increases in us, so far it destroys all that is bad and corrupt within us. It has the same Contrariety to all Vices of the Heart, that Light has to Darkness, and must either suppress or be suppressed by them.

Now when I speak of this Light, or Instinct of the Heart, or Attraction to God, I have not only the Authority of Scripture, but every Man's own Experience on my side; that Distinction between the Head and the Heart, which everyone knows how to make, plainly declares for all that I have said. It shows that the State, and Manner, and Tendency of our Heart, is all that is good within us; and that the Reasonings and Speculations of the Head, are only an empty Show and Noise that is made in the Outside of us.

For that which we mean by the Heart, plainly speaks thus much; it is a kind of Life and Motion within us, which every one knows contains all that is good or bad in us; that we are that which our Hearts are, let us talk, and reason, and dispute what we will about Goodness and Virtue; and that this State of our Heart is as distinct from, and independent of all Speculations of our reasoning Faculties, as it is distinct from, and independent of all the Languages in which a Scholar can reason and speculate upon it. And if a Man should say, that the Excellency and Sufficiency of natural Religion consisted in knowing all the Languages in which Virtue, Goodness and Religion are expressed by different Sounds and Characters, he would have said as much Truth, and as well grounded, as he who places the Excellency and Sufficiency of natural Religion in the many Arguments and Demonstrations which Reason can raise about it. For all Reasoning and Speculation stand on the Outside of the Heart, in the same superficial Manner as all Languages do.

For our Heart is our Manner of Existence, or the State in which we feel ourselves to be ; it is an inward Life, a vital Sensibility, which contains our Manner of feeling what and how we are ; it is the State of our Desires and Tendencies, of inwardly seeing, hearing, tasting, relishing and feeling that which passes within us : it is that to us inwardly with regard to ourselves, which our Senses of seeing, hearing, feeling, &c., are, with regard to Things that are without, or external to us.

Now as Reason is a poor, superficial, and insignificant Thing with respect to our outward Senses, unable to add anything to our hearing and seeing, &c., or to be the true Power and Life of them, by all its Speculations and Reasonings upon them ; so it is much more a poor, and superficial, and insignificant Thing with respect to the inward Sensibility of the Heart, or its seeing, feeling, &c., and much more unable to add to, or amend the State of the Heart, or become the Life and Power of its Motions, by its Arguings about them.

And therefore, to seek for the Religion or Perfection of the Heart in the Power of our Reason, is more groundless and absurd, and against the Nature of Things, than to seek for the Perfection and Strength of our Senses in the Power of our Reason.

Now I appeal to every Man in the World for the Truth of all this ; for every Man has the fullest inward Conviction, that his Heart is not his Reason, nor his Reason his Heart, but that the one is as different from the other in its whole Nature, as Pain, and Joy, and Desire, are different from Definitions of them ; and that as a thousand Definitions of Joy and Desire, will not become that Desire and Joy itself ; so a thousand Definitions of Religion will not become Religion itself, but be always in the same State of Distance from it ; and that all Reasoning and Speculations upon Religion, are at the same State of Distance from the Nature and Power of Religion, as Speculations upon our Passions are from the Nature and Power of them.

You know, not by Hearsay, Reasoning, or Books, but by an inward Sentiment, that your Reason can be very nicely religious, very strict in its Descriptions of Goodness, at the same time that the Heart is a mere Libertine, sunk into the very Dregs of Corruption : On the other hand, you know, that when your Reason is debauched with Arguments, is contending for Profaneness, and seems full of Proof that Piety is Superstition, your Heart at the same time has a Virtue in it, that secretly dissents from all that you say.

Now all this Proof that the State of Reason is not the State of your Heart, is the same Proof that Reason is not the Power or Strength of our Religion, because what our Heart is, that is our Religion; what belongs to our Heart, that belongs to our Religion; which never had nor can have any other Nature, Power, or Perfection, than that which is the Nature, Power, and Perfection of our Heart.

You are forced to know and feel, whether you will or no, that God has a certain secret Power within you, which is watching every Opportunity of saying something to you, either of yourself, the Vanity of the World, or the Guilt and Consequences of Sin.

This is that Instinct of Goodness, Attraction of God, or Witness of himself in the Soul of every Man, which without Arguments and Reasonings rises up in the Soul, and would be doing some good to it, if not quenched and resisted by the Noise and Hurry either of Pleasures or Business.

And this is everyone's natural Religion, or Call to God and Goodness, which is faithful to every Man, and is the only Foundation of all the Virtue and Goodness that shall be brought forth in him. And the least Stirring of this inward Principle, or Power of Life, is of more Value than all the Activity of our Reason, which is only as it were a Painter of dead Images, which leave the Heart in the same State of Death, and Emptiness of all Goodness in which they find it.

Therefore, my dear Friend, know the Place of your Religion, turn inwards, listen to the Voice of Grace, the Instinct of God that speaks and moves within you; and instead of forming dead and lifeless Images, let your Heart pray to God, that all that is Good and Holy in him, may touch, and stir, and revive all that is capable of Goodness and Holiness in you. Your Heart wants nothing but God, and nothing but your Heart can receive him. This is the only Place and Seat of Religion, and of all Communication between God and you.

We are apt to consider Conscience only as some working of our Heart, that checks us, and so we are rather afraid, than fond of it. But if we looked upon it as it really is, so much of God within us, revealing himself within us, so much of a heavenly Life, that is striving to raise us from the dead, we should love and adhere to it, as our happy Guide to Heaven.

For this Reason, I have called this Spark of Life, or Instinct of Goodness, our inward Redeemer; not only because it is the only Thing within, that helps forward our Salvation, but also because it is the first Beginning of Christ's Redemption in the Souls of all Men, by his becoming the Atonement for all.

And as it is the first Step of Christ's Redemption in the Soul, and that which became their Capacity of Salvation; so the Progress of their Redemption consists in the Increase and Growth of this first seed of Life, till the new Man be wholly raised up by it.

Lastly, Another real Difference between this Instinct of Goodness, or Piety of the Heart, and your Religion of Reason, is this, that natural Reason in itself is incapable of Jesus Christ; it cannot comprehend him, it is at Enmity with him, and sets itself up against him. For it feels no Want of a Saviour, and therefore is unwilling to receive one. Or if it were to admit of a Saviour, it must be only such a one as came to increase the Number of its Images and Ideas, or to help it to be more active and artful in the ranging, dividing and distinguishing them. And for this Reason it is, that a Book of Ideas and Distinctions is more valued by some People, than all the Salvation that is offered in the Gospel.

But this natural Religion or Instinct of Goodness, of which I have spoken, as God's free Gift to all Men in Jesus Christ, has that natural Fitness for the receiving of Christ, as the Eye has for receiving the Light; it wants him, it desires him, it is for him, it knows him, it rejoices in him, as the Eye wants, desires, knows, and rejoices in the Light. And of this natural Religion, or Religion of the Heart, does our Saviour plainly speak, when he saith, He that is of God heareth God's Word, — and again, My Sheep hear my Voice. Therefore this Instinct of Goodness, or Piety of the Heart, though it is God's Gift to Man before his hearing the outward Word, is yet a certain Preparation for it; and if it be brought forth in us, is a never-failing Fitness to receive it. Therefore he that has this natural Religion of the Heart, of which I have spoken, has the greatest Fitness to receive the Gospel, he is so of God, that he heareth God's Word, such a Sheep of Christ as knoweth his Voice. And therefore the receiving, or not receiving the Gospel, is the greatest of all Demonstrations, whether a Man hath, or hath not that right Religion that is antecedent to it.

Natural Religion, when rightly understood, is a real Thing, and of the same Truth as revealed Religion. But the Mistake lies here, in our taking natural Religion to be the Work or Effect of natural Reason; whereas Reason, or our Faculty of reasoning upon our Ideas, is not a Part of natural or revealed Religion, but only a bare Spectator of its own Images of natural and revealed Religion, just as it is not a Part of our hearing and seeing; nor can come any nearer to them, than as it is a bare Spectator of its own Images of them.

All Men, by virtue of God's first Pardon to Adam, are put into a State of Salvation; and as this State, though it is the free Gift of God, is common to all Men, as Men, or born of Adam; so it may in a good Sense be called their natural State, and the Religion of this State, their natural Religion.

Now the Question is, What is the natural Religion of this State? It is that which his State and Condition speaks to him. Now his Condition and State in the World plainly speaks thus much to him, that he is a Sinner, and yet in a State of Favour with God, or in a Possibility of being accepted of him. Every Man's Nature teaches him thus much, with the same Certainty that it teaches him, that he is weak and mortal. That he is a Sinner, and at the same time an Object of Divine Mercy, are things that are made known to him, not by Arguments or Speculation, but by his own being what he is.

Therefore the whole of natural Religion consists in a Man's following this Voice of Nature, and acting conformably to it; in acknowledging the Sinfulness of his State, and in imploping and relying upon the divine Mercy to be delivered from it. This is the whole Truth of natural Religion; an humble penitent Sense of Sin, and an humble Faith and Trust in the Mercy of God to be delivered from it; though it is not known by what Name to call that Deliverance, or what kind of Saviour is wanted to effect it. But he that thus according to the Direction of his natural State lives before God, in Penitence, and in Faith in his Mercy, is sure of having the Benefit of all the Mercy of God, though he does not know the Method, or the Means, by which the Mercy of God will save him.

So that true, natural Religion and revealed Religion agree in these two great and essential Points, that Man is in a State of Sin, and yet in a State of Acceptance with God through his Mercy; therefore the Piety of the one, is the Piety of the other, viz., a penitent Sense of Sin, and a humble Faith and Trust in God to be delivered from it by his Mercy.

And here you may again see, why this Natural Religion is to be considered, not as a Matter of Reason, but as an Instinct of Goodness, or Piety of the Heart; because it is nothing else but so much Goodness, not in Idea, but in the very inward Essence of the Soul, as distinguishes and preserves it both from Beasts and fallen Spirits.

Had a Man no Sense of Shame for his Sins, he would be in the very State of the Beasts; had he no Faith and Hope in the Mercy of God, he would be in the State of the Devils. Therefore that internal Sentiment of Heart, that Instinct of Goodness, is his only true Religion of Nature, because it is thus the Preservation of his Nature, and the saving him from being like to Beasts and fallen Spirits.

Reason therefore, as it is a Faculty of speculating and com-

paring Ideas, has no more Share in this Religion of Nature, than it has a Share in our natural Powers of hearing and seeing; and as it can only in a little Way, and in certain Circumstances, do some outward Service to these Senses, so it can only in the same little and low Way help and assist this Religion of Nature by some outward Services.

And as this Instinct of Goodness, or inward Sentiment of the Heart, is that alone which preserves our Nature, and therefore is alone the true Religion, or Salvation of Nature; so the whole of all revealed Religion is to improve this true Religion of Nature in its two Essential Parts, Penitence for Sin, and Faith and Trust in the Mercy of God. For all revealed Religion has only this End, it teaches nothing, intends nothing, but to give us more Reasons for Penitence, and more Reasons for Faith and Trust in the Mercy of God.

And therefore it was that I said, this Instinct of Good, or true Religion of Nature, is the very Preparation of the Heart for the Reception of the Gospel. For so much as there is of this Penitence and Faith living in the Soul, so much it has of Eyes to see, of Ears to hear, and of a Heart to understand all the Truths of Divine Revelation. The Humility and Penitence of the Gospel, the Mercies of God in and through Jesus Christ, are as agreeable to a Man in this State of Heart, as Food and Water to the hungry and thirsty Soul. The Gospel presents everything to him that he wants; and God is thereby become all that to him, which the miserable State of his Soul stood in need of. And so when he finds the Gospel, he finds the Pearl, for which he gladly sells all that he hath.

Therefore a Man can have no greater Proof that the Religion of Nature is suppressed in him, that he has not the Religion of Penitence and Faith, than by his Refusal of the Gospel; for the Gospel as naturally agrees with such a State of Heart, as Light mixes with Light, and Darkness with Darkness.

Lay the Cause of Infidelity where you will, it is a certain Truth, that it lies only in this Insensibility of Heart, in this Extinction of the Religion of Nature. And if the least Sentiment of Penitence arises in your Heart, or a Sensibility of the Need of Divine Mercy, the Gospel has got so far an Entrance into you, and it cannot lose its hold of you, but by your losing this State of Heart.

Let your Reason pretend what it will, and fancy it has ever so many Objections of Speculation and Argument against the Gospel, they are all Objections of the Heart. For the Gospel speaks only to the Heart, and nothing but the Heart can either receive or reject it. For this is an eternal Truth, which you cannot too much reflect upon, that Reason always follows the State of the Heart, and what your Heart is, that is your Reason. If your Heart is full of Sentiments of Penitence, and of Faith in the divine Mercy, your Reason will take part with your Heart, and will entertain itself with all Arguments, Ideas, and Discourses, that can exercise this Religion of the Heart.

But if your Heart is shut up in Death and Dryness, your Reason will be according to it, a poor Quibbler in Words, and dead Images, and will delight in nothing but such dry Objections and Speculations as answer to the Deadness and Insensibility of your Heart.

So that what you imagine, of your having a Religion of pure Reason, is the merest Fiction of Deceit that can be imposed upon you; for Reason has nothing of its own, it acts nothing of itself, it barely reflects that which comes from the Heart, as the Moon barely reflects that which comes from the Sun; it is the Servant of the Heart, and must act or not act in Obedience to it; what the Heart loves, that Reason contends for; and what the Heart has no Inclination to, that Reason objects against. Therefore there neither is, nor was, nor ever can be any other Religion but the Religion of the Heart, and Reason is only its Servant, in the same Manner, and in the same Degree, whatever the Religion of the Heart be, whether true or false.

And to imagine that Natural Religion is the Effect of pure Reason and Speculation, is as great an Error against the Nature of Things, and more hurtful to you, than to imagine that natural hearing and seeing is the Effect of Reason and Speculation.

Natural Religion, if you understand it rightly, is a most excellent Thing, it is a right Sentiment of Heart, it is so much Goodness in the Heart, it is its Sensibility both of its Separation from, and its Relation to God; and therefore it shows itself in nothing but in a penitential Sentiment of the Weight of its Sins, and in an humble Recourse by Faith to the Mercy of God. Call but this the Religion of Nature, and then the more you esteem it, the better; for you cannot wish well to it, without bringing it to the Gospel State of Perfection.

For the Religion of the Gospel is this Religion of Penitence, and Faith in the Mercy of God, brought forth into its full Perfection. For the Gospel calls you to nothing, but to know, and understand, and practise a full and real Penitence, and to know by Faith, such Heights and Depths of the divine Mercy towards you, as the Religion of Nature had only some little uncertain Glimmerings of. Therefore there is the same Agreement, and the same Difference between the true Religion of Nature, and the Religion of the Gospel, that there is between the Breaking of the Day, and the Rising of the Sun to its meridian Height; the one is the Beginning, and the other is the Perfection of the same Thing. And as the Light of the Day-break, and the Light of the Noon-day, are both the same Light, and from the same Producer of Light; so the Light of the Religion of Nature, and the Light of the Gospel, are the same Light, and from the same Producer of Light in the Mind.

If you only stood for some time in the first Break of Day, sensible of the Misery of Darkness, and only feeling some Hope and Expectation of the Light, yet knowing nothing of that Globe of Fire that afterwards was to appear, and bless you with so many unknown and un hoped for Joys and Comforts of the Noon-day Light, you would then resemble one standing for some time in the Day-break of Natural Religion, sensible of the Weight of his Sins, and only hoping in God for some kind of Mercy towards him; yet knowing nothing of that Globe of Fire, that Mystery of divine Love that was by degrees to discover itself, and bless him with so many unknown, un hoped-for Joys and Comforts of the divine Mercy towards him.

The original Instinct of Goodness in the Soul, which I have shown to be the only Religion of Nature, is the Light of Day-break in the Soul, and is that Light which lighteth every Man that cometh into the World. The Light of the Gospel is that Noon-day Light, which discovers such Joys and Comforts as no one could have thought of, that had only stood in the Break of Day.

And as no one, when the Day arises, can reject or dispute the Coming or Goodness of the Rising Sun, but because he has lost that Sense which was to distinguish Light from Darkness; so no one can reject or dislike, or dispute against the Light of the Gospel, but he that has extinguished that Instinct of Goodness in his Soul, which alone can distinguish Good from Evil, and make him love the one, and reject the other.

Don't therefore, my dear Friend, deceive yourself, nor let any one else deceive you. The Matter is of infinite Consequence that you have before you. You come into the World but once, and have but one Trial, but the Effects of it are to last for ever. The Time of disputing and speculating upon Ideas is short; it can last no longer than whilst the Sun of this World can refresh your Flesh and Blood, and so keep the Soul from knowing its own Depth, or what has been growing in it. But when this is over, then you must know and feel what it is to have a Nature as deep, and strong, and large as Eternity.

If you have lived upon the Amusements of Reason and Speculation, your Life has been worse than a Dream, and your Soul will, at the End of such a Life, be left to itself in its own Darkness, Hunger, Thirst, and Anxiety, to be for ever devoured by its own Fire. But if you have watched over that Instinct of Goodness which God planted in your Soul, and have exercised yourself in that Penitence for your Sins, and humble Faith in the Mercy of God, that the Gospel proposes to you; then when your Body falls off from you, you will feel and know what a Kingdom of God lay hid in your Soul, you will see that you have a Life and Strength like that of Eternity, and the Fulness of God himself will be your everlasting Enjoyment.

For Heaven and Hell stand ready to awake and be revealed in you, and can no longer be hid from you, than whilst you are under the Cover of Flesh and Blood. And then will be fully verified in you that Saying of Scripture, he that seeketh findeth: For you will find that which you have sought, and according to your Faith, so will it eternally be done unto you. Your Soul will have nothing taken from it, but it will have all that Good which you sought after, and provided for it. You chose to be saved only by the Powers of your own Reason, and refused the Mercy of God that was to have saved you, and therefore you will have that very Salvation you have chosen, you will be entirely without the Mercy of God, and left wholly to your own Nature: And that Salvation is the Misery of Hell.

You are now your own Carver, and must be that which you shall have made of yourself. If the Depth of your Heart has not in this Lifetime its proper Cure; if it has not something done to it, which your Reason can no more do, than it can create the Light, your Heart will become your Hell. And if you let the Light of the Gospel shine into it, and revive the good Seed of Life in it, then it will become the Seat and Habitation of your Heaven.

You may perhaps imagine, that because you practise Sobriety and Justice, and are a Friend to moral Behaviour, both in yourself and other People, that therefore your Disbelief of the Gospel cannot proceed from the Disorder of your Heart, or a Want of Piety. But this, Sir, is all Mistake. For you may have all this moral Behaviour, and yet have nothing at all of that Sentiment of Penitence, and Faith in the divine Mercy, which I have shown to be the only true Religion of Nature. It is as easy to have all this kind of Goodness which you appeal to, as it is to be civil, well-bred, and a Friend to the Peace and Order of that Society of which one is a Member. Even an Atheist may find his Ends, and act suitably to his own Principles of Self-love, Ease and Reputation, by this moral Behaviour.

But the Preaching of the Gospel discovers all, and shows

from what Principle all this Morality proceeds. If there was this Sentiment of Penitence and Faith in the Mercy of God at the Bottom, then this Morality would want and rejoice at the Precepts and Doctrines of the Gospel, because they raise a Morality upon the Foundation of Penitence and Faith. But when this Morality is only a worldly Wisdom, a Convenience of Life, a political Conformity, and as mere a Gratification of Selfishness, as any other worldly Accomplishments are, then this Morality is in the greatest Enmity with the Gospel, because the Gospel takes away its Worth, and all the Self-accomplishment that was placed in it.

Therefore it is not the mere moral Man that has that Goodness of the Heart, that is a Qualification to receive the Gospel: For an Atheist may be such a moral Man; but it is he, whose Heart is in a State of Penitence for his Sins, and humbly looking to the Mercy of God to be some way or other delivered from them.

This is the only Foundation of a religious Morality, and this is that State of Heart which must be wanting in every Moralist that refuses the Gospel.

Hence therefore it is plain, that you may have a great deal of Morality in your Behaviour, and yet nothing of the Religion of Nature in your Heart, and so be entirely unqualified to receive the Gospel, because of the Disorder of your Heart. For the Morality of an unreformed Heart, adds no more Goodness to it, than whited Sepulchres do to the Rottenness of dead Men's Bones.

What I say I say not to reproach you, but from a sincere Desire of doing you all the good that I can. For I have too much Experience myself of the Weakness and Mistakes of human Nature, to reproach any Degree of them in other People. But if you will take in good Part what is well meant, I hope you will find that I have been your Friend in discovering the Bottom of your Disorder.

But it may be you will say, you would believe the Gospel if you could, but that its Evidence cannot have that Effect upon your Mind. You may say also, the Gospel is a Matter of Fact; you must examine into the Truth of it, as you do into the Truth of other Matters of History; and as both the internal and external Evidence of the Gospel is much defended and opposed by learned Men, its Evidence is so perplexed, and made a Matter of such laborious and intricate Enquiry, that your Mind cannot come at any Certainty of what you ought to believe concerning the Truth of it.

I will therefore propose to you the shortest, and at the same time the surest of all Methods, and such as you shall either be obliged to acquiesce in as sufficient, or to own that you have suppressed that Instinct of Goodness within you, which I have shown to be the original Birthright of all Mankind, and to be the only State of Heart that saves us from being a mere Mixture of the Beasts and the Devils.

I don't recommend to you to lay aside Prejudice, and begin again the Controversy from the Bottom, and read all on both Sides with all the Impartiality that you can. I would as soon send you on a Pilgrimage, to be a Penitent, as propose to you this Travel to be a Christian. The Truth of the Gospel lies much nearer to us than we imagine, and we only dispute and wrangle ourselves into a Distance from it.

Do you think that you need many Books to show you that you are a Sinner, that you have the Disorder of almost all the Beasts within you; that you have besides this, such Passions and Tempers of Pride, Envy, Selfishness and Malice, as would make you shun the Sight of other People, if they could see all that passes within you? Need any Learning instruct you, that at the same time that you have all these Disorders, both of the Beasts and evil Spirits within you, you have a great Desire to seem to be without them, and are affecting continually to have, and appear in those very Virtues which you feel the Want of? When you are full of Hatred and Envy, you affect to be thought good and good-natured, when proud, to appear as humble.

Now I desire you to know no Books, but this Book of your own Heart, nor to be well read in any Controversy but in that which passes within you, in order to know the Gospel to be the greatest of all Truths, and the infallible Voice of God speaking the Way of Salvation to you. No Echo answers to the Voice that raises it, so certainly and agreeably as the Voice of Nature, or the State of your own Heart answers to that which the Gospel preaches unto you. And this I will show you to be the shortest and surest of all Methods to discover the Truth of the Gospel.

The Gospel is built on these two Pillars, First, That you are a fallen: Secondly, That you are a redeemed Creature. Now every Man's own Soul, and what daily passes within him, speaks these two great Truths to him, with a Conviction and Sensibility that cannot be avoided.

You have seen, and you feel, and know that you are a Sinner, that you have the Disorders of the Beasts, and the Depravity of evil Spirits within you. Is not this saying to you, not in the Sound of Words, but by the Frame and Voice of your Nature that you are a fallen Creature, and not in that State in which a good Being must have created you? For I appeal to yourself, in your own Degree of Goodness, if you could create your own Children, whether you would not create them in a better State, and with less Evil, both of the Beast and the Devil, in them, than that in which you were born yourself?

Therefore, only supposing God to have your Degree of Goodness, he could not have created the first Man, from whom your Nature is derived, in the State that you are; and therefore supposing him only to be good, you have a sufficient Proof; but supposing him to be infinitely good, or Goodness itself, you have an infallible Demonstration written in the Frame of your Nature, that you are a fallen Creature, or not in that State in which God created you.

Again, Do you want any Learning, or Books, or Reasoning, to show you, that every Man, as well as yourself, affects to appear virtuous, to have good Qualities, and is ashamed of every beastly and diabolical Disorder; and would seem to have Virtues and Goodness that he has not, because of an innate Love that he has for them, and from a Sense of their being proper for him? And is not this saying again with the same Fulness of Certainty, that you are a redeemed Creature, that there is in you an inward Redeemer, a Light of the Mind, a Seed of Goodness, an Instinct to Virtue, given you by God, though without Revelation you don't know when nor how?

And is not this such an Evidence of the Truth of the Christian Religion, and of its Fitness to save your Soul, as not only needs not the Assistance of foreign Books and Learning, but is also sufficient to support itself against all the Books and Learning in the World that should oppose it? Can any Echo answer better to the Voice that raises it, than the Voice of your Nature answers to the Sound of the Gospel? And do you not hereby plainly see, that you stand nearer to the Truth of the Christian Religion, than you do to anything else? It is only the Description of that which passes within you. It is the Book of yourself, it talks of nothing out of you, it speaks but that which is written within you, and therefore you have a sufficient Help to understand it. To look for outward Testimonies, is like looking for yourself abroad; turn but your Eyes inward, and you have no need of Miracles to show you, that Jesus Christ came from that God that made you, and that he teaches you the only Way to find that Perfection and Happiness for which he made you.

What can the Gospel say to you of the Fall of Man, that your Heart does not feel to be true? What can it say to you of your Redemption, that is not at the same time said to you by the State of your own Soul?

For if you were not fallen, how could you labour under so much Corruption? A sinful Creature cannot come from God in its sinful State. And, on the other hand, if you were not redeemed, how could you feel a Dislike of Sin, an Inclination to Goodness, and a Desire of appearing virtuous? For what else is this Desire of Goodness, but a certain inward Principle that has begun your Redemption, and is trying to carry it on?

Now the Christian Religion says nothing to you; it has not one Doctrine, or Practice, or Institution, but what has its immediate Relation to these two great Truths, and is, for the sake of them, either to convince you of your Fall, or to assist your Redemption.

Now if a Revelation from God had only told you, that you had a Mixture of Evil and Good in you, could you have any doubt about the Truth of such a Revelation? Or if it told you that the Evil came from the Fault of your first Parents, and the Good was God's free Gift to you at their Fall, that the Evil might be resisted and suppressed; if it told you, that God had a Desire, and a Design in the Depths of his Mercy, to assist the Good that was in you, that it might conquer and put an entire End to all the Evil of your Nature, would you ask for Proofs of the Goodness of such a Revelation, or of its being worthy of God, and suitable to your own Needs?

Now the Christian Religion is this Revelation. It tells you only this great Truth, that you are fallen and redeemed, that is, that you have a Mixture of Evil and Good in you; it tells you that God, as early as the Fall, redeemed you, when the Seed of the Woman became the Enemy of the Serpent; that is, as soon as the Evil came into you, he of his free Gift put a good Power into you to withstand it; it tells you, that from the Beginning of the World, it has been God's gracious Desire and Design in and by Jesus Christ to render your Redemption effectual, that is, to make the Good that is in you perfectly overcome all your Evil.

Complain therefore no more of want of Evidence; neither Books, nor Study, nor Learning is wanted; the Gospel is within you, and you are its Evidence; it is preached unto you in your own Bosom, and everything within you is a Proof of the Truth of it.

Ask how you shall know there is such a thing as Day and Night; for the Fall and Redemption are as manifest within you, as Day and Night are Manifest without you.

Here, Sir, in this intimate and true Knowledge of yourself lies the most precious Evidence of the Gospel, and is as near to you, as you are to yourself; because all that is said and declared, and recorded in the Gospel, is only a plain Record of that which is said and done, and doing in yourself.

And when you once feel it thus proved to you, by its Agreement with the State of your own Nature, then it becomes a Pearl that is dearer to you than your Life; and what is best, it is then a Pearl which no one can rob you of. You are then in such Assurance and Possession of the Power and Goodness of Christ, as those blind Men were, whose Eyes he had opened to see the Light.

Then all the Wrangle and Dispute of Learned Men against the Truth of the Gospel, will signify no more to you, nor raise any more Doubt in you, than if by History and Criticism they would prove, that you never had any Benefit from the Light of the Sun.

If you go only outwardly to work, and seek only for an outward Proof of the Truth of the Gospel, you can only know it by such Labours, and in such Uncertainty as you know other Matters of History, and must be always balancing what is said for, and against it. And if you come to believe it this way, your Faith will be held by an uncertain Tenure, you will be alarmed at every new Attack, and frightened at every new Enemy that pretends to lessen the Evidence of the Gospel.

But these, Sir, are Difficulties that we make to ourselves, by neglecting the proper Evidence of the Gospel, and choosing only to know it, as we know other Histories that have no Relation to us, or Connection with our own State.

The Gospel is not a History of something that was done and past 1700 Years ago, or of a Redemption that was then present, and only to be transmitted to Posterity as a Matter of History; but it is the Declaration of a Redeemer, and a redeeming Power that is always in its redeeming State, and equally present to every Man.

We all stand as near to the Reasons and Motives for receiving the Gospel, as they did to whom it was first preached. No one then did, or could receive Jesus Christ when he was on Earth, but for the same Reasons, that the Sick, the Lame, and the Blind, sought to him to be cured, namely, because they felt their Infirmities, and wanted to be relieved from them. But if this State of Heart, or their Sensibility of their Condition, of what they were, and what they wanted, was then the only possible Reason they could have for receiving Christ; then it follows, that every Man of every Age, has all the Reasons for receiving or not receiving the Gospel within himself, and stands just as near to and just as far from the Evidence of it, as those did who first heard it.

If you know of no Burden or Weight of Sin, nor want any Assistance to overcome it, the Gospel has no Evidence for you ; and though you had stood by our Saviour, you had been never the nearer to it. But if you know your State, as the Sick, the Lame, and the Blind knew their State ; if you groan under the Power of Sin, and are looking towards God for some Assistance to overcome it, then you have all the Reasons for receiving the Gospel written in your Heart, and you stand as near all its proper Evidence, whether you were born the last Age, or 1700 Years ago.

Now if you don't know and feel, that the Gospel has this Foundation in you, that you have that Fall and Redemption in you that it teaches, then all external Evidence of it can be of no use to you, because you are not the Person that wants such a Salvation.

But if you know that these two things are written in the Frame of your Nature, that Evil and Good, or the Fall and the Redemption, are at Strife within you, and that you want some Divine Assistance to help you to overcome the Evil that is in you ; then the Gospel needs no external Evidence, because your Heart is a Witness of all the Truth of it. For you are then only doing that in a lower Degree, which the Gospel teaches and enables you to do in a more perfect and prevailing Manner.

Further, if you have only that Instinct of Goodness in you, which I have shown to be the only Religion of Nature ; if you have a Desire to act suitably to this State of your Heart, this Struggle of Evil and Good that is in you, and are weary of your Sins, and desirous to be delivered from them, then you are fully prepared to love, admire, and receive all the Precepts of the Gospel, because they have no End, but to do that which you want and desire to have done in you ; that is, to suppress the Power of Evil in you, to destroy the old Man, or the first Life of your corrupt Nature, and to raise the new Man, or Principle of Goodness that is in you, to its full State of Strength and Perfection.

And here you have the shortest and surest of all Methods, to find both the Truth and Excellency, and Necessity of the Gospel Method of Salvation.

I put no Labour or deep Enquiry upon your Hands : I desire you only to know, what you cannot help knowing, that you have Good and Evil alive, and at work in you. For this is the whole of the Fall of Adam, and of the Redemption of Jesus Christ. Say that you have no Evil in you, and I will not desire you to believe the Fall of Adam. Say that you have no Sense of Goodness in you, and I will not desire you to acknowledge the Redemption through Jesus Christ. But if neither of these can be denied to be in you, if your own Heart confesses these two things ; how can you want a Proof of the Truth of that Religion, which only tells you that which your own Heart is a Witness of?

Again, Say that you have no Instinct of Goodness in you, that you have no Dislike of the Corruption of your Nature, nor the smallest Desire to be free from it, and then I will excuse your Ignorance of the Truth and Fitness of the Precepts of the Gospel.

But if you will but own so much of natural Religion, as to be at all troubled at your Sins, or but secretly wish that God would some way or other help you to get the better of them ; then you are under a Necessity of seeing and knowing that the Precepts of the Gospel are highly suited to the State of your Soul, to assist this Degree of natural Religion in you, and to help you to that Conquest over Sin which you want.

So that from this plain and easy Knowledge of yourself, you are absolutely obliged either to deny the most known State of your Heart, and to deny that you have any Degree, or Desire of Goodness in you ; or to own the Gospel to have everything in it, both as to Doctrine and Precept, that strictly answers to the State and Necessities, and good Inclinations of your Heart.

And therefore the Proof of the Gospel is at no Distance from you, requires no Labour of Learning, or Search of History, but arises from the most obvious Knowledge of yourself, what you are, and what you want. And you may have the utmost assurance, that you cannot hurt or deceive yourself in this short Method that I have recommended. For if you cannot be hurt or deceived in believing yourself to be a Sinner, and yet to be in a State that admits of the divine Mercy to you, then you are sure that you cannot have any Hurt or Deceit put upon you by the Gospel ; because it is to do nothing to you, you are to receive nothing from it, but a Confirmation of your Penitence, and a Strengthening your Faith in the Mercy of God.

Understand all the Gospel in this Manner, and then you understand it according to the Truth, as it is in itself. For there is not a Doctrine or Precept of the Gospel, but is given you for this End ; to perfect your Penitence, to show you all the Grounds, and Reasons, and Extent of it, and to confirm, increase, and exercise your Faith in the Mercy of God, by such a Discovery of God, and his Goodness towards you, as without the Gospel could not have been known.

So then, if you know the Religion of Nature, the Religion of Penitence and Faith, to be a true and good Religion ; if the Proof of the Truth and Goodness of this Religion lies within you, then the Proof of the Truth and Goodness of the Gospel is in the same Degree of Nearness to you, and you cannot but know it in the same Manner and Degree as you know yourself, what you are, and what you want.

Thus much may serve to convince my unbelieving Reader, if I have such a one, whom I would fain lead to God, that I have said nothing in favour of a modern Religion of Reason; which I have shown to have the Vanity, Insignificancy, and Sin of the ancient Idolatry in it, and to be that very Confidence in natural Strength, and Hardness of Heart, which keeps fallen Angels Prisoners of Darkness.

I must now say a word to the zealous Christian, who may perhaps imagine, from what I have said of that inward Light, which is the Gift of God to all Men in Jesus Christ, that I have brought this Light too near to the advantageous State of revealed Religion, whether Jewish or Christian.

To such a one I say, first, that what I have said of this Light of the Mind, or Instinct of Goodness common to all Men, is so much said of the Light and of the Benefit of Divine Revelation. Because this Light of the Mind, or Instinct of Goodness, is not something independent of, and antecedent to all divine Revelation, but was the Effect of God's revealing himself as reconciled to Adam through the Seed of the Woman. God's pardoning Adam as the Head and Representative of all Mankind, and giving him a Mediator and Redeemer, was putting him into a State and Capacity of being renewed in his Mind; and this renewing Power, which God then by pardoning him bestowed upon him, is that Instinct of Goodness, or Light of the Mind, of which I have spoken. And therefore all the Possibility of Religion, and all that is good in it, is to be ascribed to divine Revelation.

Secondly, What I have said of this common Light, or Piety of the Heart, is only to signify, that they have a Possibility of such good Dispositions as belong to those, of whom it is said, 'He that is of God, heareth God's Word'; and of such as Christ spoke, when he said, 'My Sheep hear my Voice.'

Now if there were not a Possibility or Capacity of this Degree of Goodness in Men, distinct from all outward Revelation, How could Mankind be fit for God to make a Revelation to? For if Men could not be in this State of Goodness, so as to be prepared or qualified Hearers of the Word of God, why should God speak to them? Or why should the Voice of Christ be sounded, if there were no Sheep that could know it? Therefore what I have said of this Light of Men, is only so much said of their Capacity to receive divine Revelation; it is only a Glimmering of Light, a Seed of Goodness, a Possibility of Piety, which lies only in the

Soul, as the Beginning of its Salvation, and therefore is in great want of, and must be much benefited by further Revelations from God.

I have not considered it as a Species of Religion that may trust in itself, or set up itself against Divine Revelation, as having no Need of it. When it is thus, it is not the Religion that I speak of, it is so far from being then the Light of Christ in the Soul, or the Instinct of Goodness that it had from him, that it is the Darkness and Depravity of the Heart, and the Foundation of that Hell which will be at last manifested in it.

Lastly, If my zealous Christian should find it a disagreeable Thought to him, to think that all Mankind have had some Benefit from Christ, and that the Seed of the Woman from the Beginning has helped, and will to the End of the World help and call every Man to resist and make War against the Serpent; I must tell him, he need have no greater Proof than this, that his own Heart is not yet truly Christian, that he is not a true Disciple of that Lord who would have all Men to be saved.

Having said this much to guard against all Misapprehension, either by the Unbeliever, or the Christian, I now return to my Subject, concerning the Benefits of Christ, as he is the Saviour of Mankind.

Now this great Truth that I have already declared, namely, that all Mankind were pardoned and redeemed in Adam's Pardon and Redemption; that at the Fall, Jesus Christ became the second Adam, or Parent of all Mankind, who from him received a Principle or Seed of Life, an Instinct of Goodness, which was to be in every Man a Beginning of a new Birth, a Possibility of his Salvation, or receiving a new Man from this second Adam, in the same Reality as he received a natural Life from the first Adam; this great and glorious Truth is of great Importance when rightly known, and is the Key to all the Mysteries of Scripture; it leads you into the Fulness of the greatest Truths, and disperses all Difficulties.

This free Gift of God to all Men, in thus making all Men Partakers of Christ's Redemption, by a Seed of Life, which all Men, as Men, receive from Christ, is the true and solid Meaning of that which is called Preventing Grace, and which, when rightly spoken of, is said to be common to all Men. It is Grace, because it is God's free Gift; we could not lay hold of it by any Power of our own, nor had any Right to claim it. It is Preventing Grace, because it prevents, or goes before, and is not given us for anything that we have done. And therefore it has its plain Distinction from God's assisting Grace, which always is in Proportion to the Nature of our Actions, and only works as they work. Hence there is a full End of all the wretched Disputes of an abominable Election and Reprobation, and of other Disputes concerning the Grace of God.

For if all Men, as Sons of Adam, are by the free Gift of God made Sons of the second Adam, and, as such, have a Principle or Seed of Life in them from him, in order to be raised up to a Perfection of the new Man in Jesus Christ; and if this Seed of Life, or Instinct of Goodness, or Light of the Mind, is the General Preventing Grace of all Men, that enables them so to act as to obtain God's assisting Grace in the Renewal of their Minds; then you must easily see, that all Men have a general Call and a general Capacity to obtain their Salvation, and that the Doctrine of particular absolute Election and Reprobation is plucked up by the Roots, and most of the Difficulties of God's Dispensations fairly solved. But this by the by.

Now you must have observed that this general Grace, or Redemption, or Life given to all Men in Christ as their second Adam, is not done only by an outward teaching, as when one teaches another the Way of a new Life, or by an outward Adoption, as when a Person takes a Stranger to be his Son; but by the Communication of an essential Seed or Principle of Life from the second Adam to all the Sons of the first Adam. From which Seed or Principle of Life, every Son of Adam has Christ for his spiritual Father and Parent in the same Reality, as he had the first Adam for his natural Parent.

For this Reason, the Change that Religion aims at, is constantly represented as a New Birth, and our Progress in Religion as our Progress in Regeneration, or being born again. We are not called upon only to change our Notions, or to receive such an Alteration, as Scholars may receive from their Teachers, but to die to ourselves, that a new Life may be raised up in us; or to suffer something to be revived in us that is not of our own Growth, or any Change that we can make upon ourselves.

Thus says our Lord, 'Except a Man be born of Water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.*' And to show that this new Birth is to be understood according to the literal Truth of the Expression, there is added, 'That which is born of the Flesh is Flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit.' Therefore the Birth of the Spirit is as real as the Birth of the Flesh, and Christ is a Principle of Life to us, as surely as we derive our Flesh from Adam.

Again, 'The first Adam was made a living Soul, the last Adam was made a quickening Spirit.†' That is, the first Adam was

* John iii. 5.

† 1 Cor. xv. 45.

the Errors of a late Book. III made to be a Fountain, or Original, of a natural Life to Men, the second Adam was made a Reviver or Parent of a spiritual Life in Men. Therefore the spiritual Life derived from the second Adam, is in the same Degree of Reality, as the natural Life derived from the first Adam. The Apostle adds, 'The first 'is of the Earth, earthy: the second is the Lord from Heaven. 'And as is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: And 'as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly.'

Therefore those that are related to Christ, have his heavenly Life and Nature in them, in the same Reality as those that are related to Adam have his earthy Nature in them. 'And as we 'have borne the Image of the earthy, so we shall also bear the 'Image of the heavenly.' Therefore, as we bear the Image of the first Adam, by having his Nature and Life in us, derived, from him; so we can only bear the Image of the second, by having his Nature and Life in us, derived from him.

So that it is an undoubted Truth, that Christ is our second Adam, or a Raiser of a new Birth and Life in us, in the same Reality as we have our natural Birth and Life from Adam. Hence it is that you see so much mention in Scripture of Christ's being in us, formed in us, revealed in us, of our putting on Christ, of our receiving Life from him, as the Branches from the Vine. Hence also so much mention of a new and old Man that is in us, and the whole of Religion represented as a Contest betwixt this twofold Man that is in us, the one from the first, the other from the second Adam.

The Knowledge of this great Truth, that Christ is our second Adam, as mentioned above, renders all the most mysterious, and seemingly hard Passages of Scripture, not only plainly intelligible, but full of a most affecting Sense. Thus when it is said, that Christ must be formed in us, and that 'we are Members of 'his Body, of his Flesh, and of his Bones,' &c.* All this, and the like, is highly intelligible, as soon as it is known, that Christ is the Parent of a spiritual Man in us, in the same Reality, as Adam is the Parent of our natural Life.

Thus also when Christ saith, 'Except ye eat the Flesh of the 'Son of Man, and drink his Blood, ye have no Life in you.' And again, 'I am the Bread of Life, he that cometh to me shall never 'hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.†' And again, 'Whosoever shall drink the Water that I shall give him, 'shall never thirst: But the Water that I shall give him, shall be 'in him a Well of Water springing up into everlasting Life.‡' And again, 'I am the Resurrection and the Life.—Whosoever 'liveth and believeth in me, shall never die.‡

Now if Jesus Christ had been only a Teacher of Morality, how unaccountable must all this Language have been? But as soon as it is known that he is a spiritual Parent, or Principle of Life to us, in the same Reality as we derive our Flesh and Blood from Adam, and that this Life lieth in us as a Seed, which is to be brought forth to the Fulness of its Stature by Faith in Christ, then all these Passages have a Meaning that is plainly intelligible, yet never to be exhausted, but is always suited to the State and Progress of the Reader.

For if Christ is a Principle of Life to us, and this Life is drawn into, or formed in us by means of our Faith; then how justly are we said to eat Christ as the Bread of Life, to eat his Flesh, and drink his Blood, &c., when by Faith we draw him into us, as our Principle of Life? For what can express the Nature of this Faith, so well as Hunger and Thirst? Or how can it be a real Faith, unless it have much of the Nature of Hunger, of a strong Desire, and ardent Thirst?

Therefore all these Expressions are as literally suited to the Nature of the Thing, to that which Christ is to us, as human Words can be, and are not a Language adapted to our Reason, to increase its Ideas; but are the Language of Heaven to the heavenly Part of us, and are only to excite, direct, and confirm our Faith in Christ, or to raise, increase, and exercise our Hunger, Thirst, and Desire of the new Birth of Christ in our Soul.

But this Author knowing nothing of this Doctrine, is forced to deny the most precious Truths of Scripture. Thus all that our Saviour says of himself in the sixth of St. John, of his Flesh being 'Meat indeed, and his Blood Drink indeed,' and of the Necessity of eating and drinking it, to have eternal Life in us; all this, says this Author, 'was only a very high figurative Representation to the Jews then about him, of their Duty and Obligation to receive into their Hearts, and Digest his whole Doctrine, 'as the Food and Life of their Souls.'*

Therefore, according to this Author, Christ is our Life, in no other Meaning or Sense, than any other Person who teaches us any Doctrine that may do us good, and we have no Life from him any other way, than we may have from any Teacher of useful Truths. And therefore what he says of himself, of his being the Life of the World, has just as much Truth in it, as if any of the Apostles had said the same things of themselves. Nay, had Socrates or Plato, or anybody else, preached the same Gospel that our Saviour has done, there had been just the same Meaning, and neither more nor less in it than in the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

St. John saith, 'Who is a Liar, but he that denieth that Jesus 'is the Christ? He is Antichrist that denieth the Father and 'the Son.'*

Now surely the Son could not be mentioned with the Father, as an equal Object of our Faith and Acknowledgment, if he could not in Reality be said to be our Life in such a Sense, as the Father may be said to be our God, not by a very high or strong Figure of Speech, but in Truth and Reality.

The Scriptures tell us, that Jesus Christ is the 'Word that was 'with God,' and 'was that God by whom all things were made.'† 'That by him all things were created that are in Heaven and in 'Earth, visible and invisible,—and that in him all things consist.‡

Must not this Author be here obliged to have recourse to much higher and stronger Figures of Speech, to account for the Meaning of these Expressions? For if there is anything in the Nature of our Saviour, to support the literal Meaning and Truth of these Expressions, then it must not only be groundless, but absolutely false, to say, that we can only be said to dwell in him, or have our Life from him, by a very high or strong Figure of Speech.

For surely, if all things both in Heaven and Earth are created by him, if 'in him all things consist,' then it may be said without any strong Figure, that he is our Life, and that we 'dwell in 'him, and he in us,' in the same Reality, as we are said to 'live, 'and move, and have our Being in God.' For if this Creator becomes our Redeemer, we may be said to receive Life from him, to be new-born, or created again by him, in the same Reality and Fulness of Truth, as we can be said to be created by him at first.

When therefore this Author saith, 'We may be said (by a 'strong Figure of Speech) to dwell in him, and he in us; to be 'one with Christ, and Christ with us,' that is, that 'Christ and 'we, to all the Intents and Purposes of true Religion, shall be 'in perfect Friendship and Union together'§: It is the same barefaced Denial of the Gospel, the same direct Blasphemy against God, as to affirm, that God can only by a strong Figure of Speech, be said to be our Life, our 'Creator, in whom we live, 'and move, and have our Being.' It is the same Blasphemy as to affirm, that we have no Relation to, or Dependence upon God, or Existence in him, but such as any Party of People, whether at Court, or the Exchange, have with one another, when they are to all the Intents and Purposes of their Party Interest, in perfect Friendship and Union together.

But to return : From this Doctrine of Christ's being a Principle of Life, or Parent of a new Birth in us, we may see the plain Reason, why the Scripture describes a Christian as a Creature or Instrument of the Holy Spirit, and entirely animated by it, so far as he is truly Christian. Because as Christianity consists in the Birth of a new Man within us, it must needs have a Spirit and Breath as suitable to it, as the Spirit and Air of this World is suitable to a Life of Flesh and Blood. And as every Thought and Motion of our outward Man must be in, and by the Assistance of the Spirit, and Air of this outward World : so every Thought, and Motion, and Desire of our inward spiritual Man, must be in, and by the Assistance of the Spirit, and Air of that World, whose Creature it is.

Now, was there not as really this new spiritual Man within us, in the same Reality of Existence, as our outward rational Nature, there could be no Foundation for this Doctrine of the Necessity of God's Holy Spirit. Nor could the Scripture Account of the Guidance of that Holy Spirit be at all intelligible, upon this Supposition, that we had nothing more in us, but our outward rational Nature.

Thus when it is said, No one can call Jesus the Lord, but by the Holy Spirit : How could this be intelligible, or have any Truth in it, if there were not a Principle in us, a spiritual Man, distinct from our rational Nature ? For our rational Nature can as well call Jesus Lord, as it can call anyone else Lord, or as Judas said, 'Hail Master.'

Therefore since Man in his natural State, and by his Powers as a rational Man, cannot truly call Jesus Lord, it follows, that he has a spiritual Nature or Principle in him, entirely distinct from his rational Nature, and which receiving its Life and Power from the Spirit of God, has alone the Power of owning, knowing, and receiving Jesus Christ as Lord.

St. Paul saith, 'Ye are not in the Flesh, but in the Spirit, if 'so be the Spirit of God dwelleth in you. Now if any Man hath 'not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.* And again ; 'Now 'we have received not the Spirit of this World, but the Spirit 'which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely 'given to us of God. But the natural Man receiveth not the 'things of the Spirit of God ; for they are Foolishness unto him, 'neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.†

Therefore there is a spiritual Life, or Man within us, by which alone we have our Communication with God, and which is so

* Rom. viii. 9.

† 1 Cor. ii. 12.

the Errors of a late Book. 115

distinct and different from our natural, rational Man, that they are of a Nature contrary to each other. The one is by Nature fitted to receive, and know the things of the Spirit of God; the other has a Nature that cannot know, nor receive them.

This is not to be understood, as if the natural Man could not understand the Words of Scripture, as other Words are to be understood, for he can reason and discourse as well upon Scripture, and the things of the Spirit of God, as upon other Matters.

Neither are we to take him that is able to discern things spiritually, to be only such a one whose Faculty of Reasoning is assisted by the Holy Spirit. For this does not make the spiritual Man here spoken of. No, the Subject of the Holy Spirit, or that which operates upon in us, is not our reasoning Faculty, it no more assists our Reason in this manner, than it assists our Eyes to read a difficult Print, or our Ears to hear Sounds more distinctly.

For as the Holy Spirit is Holiness itself, or the Life and Power of Holiness, so it operates only in the manner of itself, and only upon that Part of us, which has its own Nature, or a real Agreement with it. Therefore the spiritual Man that is animated, enlightened and guided by the Holy Spirit, is that vital Instinct of Goodness, that Spark of Life, of which I have spoken so much, and which shows itself in an inward Sentiment of the Weight of Sin, and in an inward Sentiment of Hope and Conversion to the Mercy of God.

This is the Beginning, or Foundation, or Seed of that spiritual Man, for whom the Scriptures are written, to whom they speak, and who alone has a Capacity to hear and receive them, because he alone has a Capacity to be animated, moved, and governed by the Holy Spirit.

And therefore it is, that our Saviour saith so often, 'He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.' Meaning only this inward State of Sensibility of the Heart. He is so far from saying, according to modern Learning, he that hath clear Ideas, that has accustomed himself to Reason, and distinguish about them; he that can speculate impartially, and search into the Nature of Things, Actions and Persons, by comparing the Ideas of them; let such a one so prepared, draw near to the Kingdom of Heaven; he is so far from saying anything like this, that he rejects it all as the Burden and Darkness of the Heart, and says, 'Except ye be converted, and become as little Children, ye cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.'

But you will perhaps say, If the Scriptures are not proposed to our Reason, if Reason is not the Subject or Faculty of Religion in us; is not this the same as to say, that the Scriptures and Religion are proposed to the unreasonable Part of us; Is it not saying, that we must neglect or suppress that which is most excellent in us, in order to be religious?

You shall see Reason possessed of all that belongs to it, and yet Religion set up in a better Place.

I will grant you much more than you imagine in respect of Reason; I will grant it to have as great a Share in the good Things of Religion, as it has in the good Things of this Life; that it can assist the Soul, just as it can assist the Body; that it has the same Power and Virtue in the spiritual World that it has in the natural World; that it can communicate to us as much of the one as of the other, and is of the same Use and Importance in the one as in the other. Can you ask more?

Now Man considered as a Member of this World, that is to have his Share in the Good that is in it, is a sensible and a rational Creature; that is, he has a certain Number of Senses, as Seeing, Hearing, Tasting, Smelling and Touching, by which he is sensible of that which the outward World, in which he is placed, can do to him, or communicate to him, he is sensible of what Kind and Degree of Happiness he can have from it; besides these Organs of Sense, he has a Power or Faculty of reasoning upon the Ideas which he has received by these Senses.

Now how is it, that this World, or the good things of this World are communicated to Man? How is he put in Possession of them? To what Part of him are they proposed? Are his Senses or his Reason the Means of his having so much as he has, or can have from this World?

Now here you must degrade Reason, just as much as it is degraded by Religion. And as we say, that the good Things of Scripture and Religion are not proposed to our Reason; so you must say, that the good Things of this World are not proposed to our Reason. And as St. Paul says, the natural Man cannot receive the Things of the Spirit of God, because they are spiritually discerned; so you must also say, the rational Man cannot receive the Things of this World, because they are to be sensibly received, that is, by the Organs of Sense.

Thus must you necessarily set Reason as low, with respect to the Things of this World, as it is set with respect to the Things of the spiritual World. It is no more the Means of communicating the good Things of the one, than of communicating the good Things of the other.

It stands in the same Incapacity in one World, as in the other.

For everyone knows, that we know no more, can receive no more, can possess no more of anything that is communicable to us from this World, than what we know, receive and possess by our Senses, or that sensible Capacity that is in us, of having something communicated to us by the World. Sounds are only proposed to our Ears, Light to our Eyes; nothing is communicated to our Reason; no Part of the World hath any Communication with it. Reason therefore has no higher Office or Power in the Things of this World, than in the Things of Religion. The World is only so far known, received and possessed, as we receive and possess it by our Senses. And Reason stands by, as an impotent Spectator, only beholding and speculating upon its own Ideas and Notions of what has passed between the World and the sensible Part of the Soul.

And as this is the State of Man in this World, where he receives all the Good he can receive from it, by a Sensibility of his Nature, entirely distinct from his Faculty of reasoning; so is it his State with regard to the spiritual World, where he stands only capable of receiving the invisible good Things of it, by a Sensibility of his Nature, or such a Capacity as lets the spiritual World into him, in the manner as the natural is let into him in this Life. Religion therefore does no more violence to your Reason, or rejects it in any other way, than as all the good Things of this Life reject it. It is not Seeing, it is not Hearing, it is not Tasting and Feeling the Things of this Life, it can supply the Place of no one of these Senses. Now it is only thus helpless and useless in Religion; it is neither Seeing, nor Hearing, Tasting nor Feeling of spiritual Things; therefore in the Things of Religion, and in the Things of this World, it has one and the same Insignificancy. So that the Things of the Spirit of God belong not to Reason, cannot be known and received by it, for the same Reason, that the good Things of this World belong not to Reason, and cannot be known and received by it.

It is the Sensibility of the Soul that must receive what this World can communicate to it; it is the Sensibility of the Soul that must receive what God can communicate to it. Reason may follow after in either Case, and view through its own Glass what is done, but it can do no more.

Now the Sensibility of the Soul, which is its Capacity for Divine Communications, or for the Operation of God's Holy Spirit upon it, consists in an inward Sentiment of the Weight and Disorder of Sin, and in an inward Sentiment of Hope and Conversion to the Mercy of God. This is the first Seed of Life, sown into the Soul when Adam was redeemed; and it is this Seed of Life, or Sensibility, that the Holy Spirit of God acts upon, moves and quickens, and enlightens; and to this it is, that all that is said in the Scripture is addressed. Nothing but this Sensibility, or State of Heart, has Eyes to see, or Ears to hear the Things of the Spirit of God.

Reason may be here of the same Service to us, as it may be when we want any of the Enjoyments of this Life. It may take away a Cover from our Eyes, or open our Window-shutters, when we want the Light, but it can do no more towards seeing, than to make way for the Light to act upon our Eyes. This is all its Office and Ability in the good Things of Religion, it may remove that which hinders the Sensibility of the Soul, or prevents the Divine Light's acting upon it, but it can do no more.

Hence you may judge of the following Passage of the Plain Account, 'We may be sure we are pleasing God, whilst we are 'obeying the Command of his Son.'—'But in this particular Instance of our Duty, we can with Reason go further, I say with Reason; because the Benefits received from all such Performances by reasonable Creatures, cannot possibly be received but in a reasonable way. These duties, how well soever performed, cannot be supposed to operate as Charms; nor to influence us, as if we were only Clock-Work, or Machines, to be acted upon by the arbitrary Force of a superior Being.*

Now all this is in direct Contradiction to the Nature and State of Man in this World. For no good thing of this World, no Power or Virtue in the whole System of Beings that surround us, can possibly be communicated to our Reason, or by the Way of our Reason. Whatever the World communicates to us of its Power and Virtue must be communicated to the Sensibility of our Nature, to that Part of us which is as distinct from our reasoning Faculty, as seeing the Light is distinct from a Conjecture about the Nature of it.

Now let us suppose a Man to stand in this World, only with his rational Nature, or Faculty of reasoning, but destitute of the Sensibility of his Nature, or the Organs of Sense; What would all this World, or all the Good of it signify to him? If he was to receive nothing but by the way of Reason, would it not be the same thing as to say, that he was to receive nothing from it?

Now this is the State that this Author would have you be in, with relation to God, and the spiritual World. No Power, or Virtue, or Influence of God, or the spiritual World, is to be communicated to you, but by the way of Reason, and you are to stand with relation to all the Riches and Powers, and Virtues of God, and the spiritual World, in the same State as he stands in this World, who is to know and feel, and possess no more of it, than he can know, and feel, and possess by the way of Reason, without any one Sense. Therefore it is plain, that this Author desires all Communication from God to you, to be as much at an end, as all Communication from this World must be at an end, if you had not one Sense left.

I have just supposed a Man to stand in this World, without all Sensibility of Nature, endued only with a Faculty of reasoning; let it now be supposed, that you had a Power to awaken a Sensibility of Nature in him, and to help him to all those Senses that are common to Man. Would you say, this must by no means be done? Would you say, that you must keep off this Sensibility of Nature, that you might preserve him a free Agent? And that if the Light and Heat of the Sun, the Virtues and Powers of the World, should operate upon him in any other manner than by the way of Reason, he would be turned from a rational Creature, into a mere Machine and Clock-work.

Now this is the Way that this Author would preserve you a Free Agent, with relation to God, and the spiritual World: He will not allow you to have any Senses, that he may preserve your Reason. For if God, or the spiritual World, could do that to you, which this outward World can do to a Man that has his Senses; if God should communicate any Good to you, as the Sun communicates its Light and good Influence without the Assistance of your Reason, and only by making you sensible of them, you are undone, the Freedom and Rationality of your Nature is lost, and you are turned into Clock-work.

Let me ask this rational Man, who is so great an Enemy to all that is not done in a rational Way, whether he feels no Attachment to the World, and his Interest in it; whether he pursues it no further, and has no Sensibility of its Power over him, but just so much as pure Reason and the Light of the Gospel raise in him; whether he has no Self-love, no Family-love, no Party-love, no Ambition, no Pride, no Sensuality, but what is weighed out to him by Arguments and Motives of pure Reason, enlightened by the Letter of the Gospel? Now if there is something of those Tempers in him, arising from some secret Power that is working in him, that has not all its Life and Working from pure Reason, will he therefore say, that he is a mere Machine, that he has no Liberty left, that he is no longer a rational Creature; Now if a Degree of Goodness should steal upon him this way, without consulting his Reason, if he should find a heavenly Love, a Purity of Heart, an Attraction to God, a Desire of Holiness, a Poverty of Spirit, a Contempt of the World, a Sensibility of the Greatness of eternal Things, stirring and awakened in him in a greater degree than ever he intended to have them by his own Reason, would he be obliged to cry out, that his reasonable Soul was undone, that he had lost the Rationality of his Nature, was become a Machine, because such a Sense of God and Goodness had got Entrance into him without consulting his Reason?

And if God is as ready to operate upon our Souls, and to manifest his Power and Presence in them, when we give way to it, as the World and the Devil are when we leave an entrance for them, has a Preacher of the Gospel any Authority from thence, to reproach this divine Assistance, as 'Communications 'and Impressions from above, which leave the Mind in a State 'satisfied with what carries no rational Satisfaction in it?'

For however this Author may please himself with thinking that his Mind is free from Communications and Impressions from above, and satisfied only with such Things as carry a rational Satisfaction in them; yet it is an eternal immutable Truth, founded in the Nature of Things, that no Soul can enjoy any Degree of Good whatever, but by a Communication or Impression of something upon it.

Every Creature, as such, is by the Necessity of its Nature, in a State of Poverty and Want, and may be defined to be only a Capacity to receive so much Good as shall be communicated to it, or impressed upon it. Were not this the State of our Souls, it would not be the State of our Bodies; and as the Body stands in this World in Poverty and Want, only capable of being fed, nourished, comforted and blessed by Communications and Impressions from the Things that surround it, so the Soul stands in the same Poverty and Want in the spiritual World, and only capable of being nourished, comforted, and blessed by Communications and Impressions from God.

So that this Author's Satisfaction which he has chosen for himself, a Satisfaction purely rational, or by way of his Reason, instead of divine Impressions, is the Choice of a Man in a Dream, that knows nothing of the Nature of God, or of his Soul, or of the State and Nature of Things. For the Satisfaction of every Being, from the highest Angel to the lowest of human Creatures, is all sensible, and wholly seated in the Sensibility of their Nature.

This is as certain, as that a Child has no rational Satisfaction; for no Man ever was satisfied or dissatisfied for any other Reason, or upon any other Account, than as a Child is satisfied or dissatisfied, namely, according as its Senses, or the Sensibility of its Nature, has or has not that which is agreeable to it. For Nature shows what it is in a Child, and does not become another thing in a grown Man. The Child has no Cunning or Fraud, and therefore he plainly owns what he wants and cries for it.

Grown Men are under the same Sensibility of Nature, want only what the Child wanted, viz., to have their Senses gratified, but they have the Cunning not to own it, and the Fraud to pretend something else.

And thus it must be with every human Creature. He must be governed by this Sensibility of his Nature, must be happy or unhappy, according as his Senses are gratified, till such time as he is born again from above, till the new Birth has awakened another Sensibility in him, and opened a way for divine Communications and Impressions to have more Effect upon him, than the Things of this World have upon his natural Senses. For no created Being whatever, can any Moment of Time be free from Communications and Impressions of some kind or other; if it is not governed by Communications and Impressions from above, it is certainly governed by Communications and Impressions from below.

The Needle that is touched with the Loadstone, does not then begin to be under the Power of Attraction, for it was under the Power of Attraction from the Earth before. And if it loses the Attraction of the Loadstone, it does not cease to be attracted by something else.

The Soul that is touched with an Impression from God, does not then begin to be under the Power of something that acts upon it, for the World and the Devil, or the Nature of those Things that surround it, attract it, and act upon it. For as it has something of the Nature of everything in it, so the whole Nature of Things as continually act upon it by Impressions, as the Sun acts upon everything that has anything of the Nature of the Sun in it.

Now the Freedom of the Will, is not a Freedom from Communications and Impressions, but is only a Liberty of choosing to be made happy, either by yielding ourselves up to the Attraction or Operation of God upon us, or to be miserable, by yielding ourselves up to the Impressions of the World, and sensible Things.

There is no middle way; if we reject or make ourselves incapable of Impressions from God, we are the Machines and Clockwork of this sensible World.

Two Men born blind may talk and dispute about receiving Light in a rational way, and think it ought only to be received by their Reason, or in Conformity to its Power of speculating; as soon as their Eyes are opened, they both see that Reason was a Fool, and that Light can only act upon them by way of Impression upon the Sensibility of their Nature.

It is so far therefore from being a dangerous Delusion to expect, desire, believe, and pray for Communications and Impressions from above, by means of the holy Sacrament, that it is as right and sound a Faith, and as beneficial to the Soul, as to believe that the Goodness of God's Providence is in everything, and that everything is blessed by his Power and Presence in it to the faithful Receiver.

All the Perfections of God have some kind of Similitude or Resemblance of their Power in the Perfections of the Sun, which refresh our animal and rational Nature by continual Communications and Impressions upon it, as the Perfections of God communicate and impress themselves upon the inmost Spirit of our Souls.

And he that would have his animal rational Nature comforted and refreshed only in a rational way, without Communications and Impressions from the Sun, would be just such a Pleader for Reason, as he that would have religious Satisfaction only in a rational way, without Communications and Impressions from above.

For the Impressions from God are more necessary and essential to the pious Life of the Soul, than the Impressions of the Sun are to the comfortable Life of our outward rational Man.

And he that prays for nothing else but these divine Communications and Impressions, who thinks of nothing else, desires nothing else, trusts in nothing else, as able to comfort, strengthen, and enrich his Soul: He that is thus, all Prayer, all Love, all Desire, and all Faith, in these Communications and Impressions from above, is just in the same State of Sobriety, as he that only prays that God would not leave him to himself.

For he that is without anything of these Communications and Impressions of God upon him, is in the same State of Death and Separation from God as the Devils are. And to turn Men from the Faith and Love, and Desire of these divine Impressions, is to lay the Axe to the Root of Religion, and is as direct a way to Atheism, as to teach them, as Epicurus did, that God is afar off. For a God without any Communications and Impressions upon us, and a God afar off, are equally atheistical Tenets, equally destructive of all Piety.

The one Opinion is the same Denial of God as the other.

And when Men have once lost all Sense of the Necessity of being inwardly, invisibly, and secretly supported, assisted, guided, and blessed by Communications and Impressions of God upon their Souls, it signifies not much what Religion they profess, or for what Reason they profess it, whether they have the Reason of Epicurus, or Hobbs, or this Author. For a Religion has no good of Religion in it, but so far as it introduces the Life, Power, and Presence of God into the Soul.

the Errors of a late Book. 123

For there is nothing good even in Heaven itself, but the Fulness of divine Communications and Impressions; no Wretchedness in Hell, but what arises from an entire Cessation of them; and this Life has no Possibility of being changed into a heavenly Life, but so far as it is capable of divine Communications and Impressions.

For as the Sun is the Light of this World, only by Communications and Impressions of his Light upon all Objects, according to their Capacity to receive it; so God is the God of all his Creatures, only by Communications and Impressions of his Life, and Power, and Presence upon all his Creatures, according to their Capacity to receive them. And therefore to discredit and ridicule the Desire, Hunger, Faith, and Expectation of divine Communications and Impressions in all Acts and Parts of Religion, is to teach Men to unite Religion with Atheism, and to make their very Acts of Religion, a Renunciation of, and Departure from God.

Had this Author openly and plainly said with Epicurus, God is afar off, the Atheism had been plain and apparent, and confessed by all; and yet he has said more than this; for to say that we are without all Communications and Impressions of God upon us, for this Reason, because they would make us Machines and Clock-work, and could give us no rational Satisfaction, is not only saying that God is afar off, but that he ought and must continue to be so, if we are not to be Machines, and lose the Rationality of our Nature. So that according to this Author's Doctrine, rational and free Agents are not only to believe with Epicurus, but also ought to rejoice that God is afar off, and to desire, for the sake of the Rationality of their Nature, that he may always be at the same Distance from them.

Hence it is, that this Author is, as Epicurus was, forced to invent a summum bonum, or chief Good for Man, exclusive of the Enjoyment of God. Thus says he, 'The highest Good of mortal Man, is the uniform Practice of Morality, chosen by ourselves, as our Happiness here, and our unspeakable Reward hereafter.*'

For as Epicurus was forced to place the highest Good of Man in his Philosophical Garden, because he had separated the Gods from Men, and placed them apart by themselves; so this Author having rejected all divine Communications and Impressions upon us, as having no rational Satisfaction in them, as making us Machines and Clock-work, was forced to invent a highest

Good for mortal Man, both here and hereafter, that has nothing of Good in it.

Epicurus therefore and this Parochial Minister of the Gospel agree in this; First, that they place the highest Good, or Happiness of Man, in something that is exclusive of God. Secondly, that they place it in something that they can do for themselves.

The Church, of which this Author says he is a Minister, sings every Day, 'Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God, Heaven and Earth 'are full of thy Majesty and Glory;' but according to him, it sings of something that is no Part of its Happiness, either here or hereafter.

The Gospel, of which he pretends to be a Preacher, brings the glad Tidings of a Saviour, and Salvation to all Mankind; but he preaches a highest Good of mortal Man, that has nothing of this Saviour or Salvation in it.

Jesus Christ says, 'Except a Man be born again of the Water 'and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.' That 'as the Father raises up the dead, and quickeneth them, 'even so the Son quickeneth whom he will.* And 'that to as 'many as received him, to them gave he Power to become the 'Sons of God.' Who 'were born, not of Blood, nor of the Will 'of the Flesh, nor of the Will of Man, but of God.† Again, 'If 'ye abide in me, and my Words abide in you, ye shall ask what 'ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Ask and ye shall 'receive, that your Joy may be full. If any Man love me, my 'Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make 'our abode with him.' The Apostle saith, 'Giving thanks unto 'the Father, who hath delivered us from the Power of Darkness, 'and hath translated us into the Kingdom of his dear Son, in 'whom we have Redemption through his Blood.'

Now had a Celsus, or a Porphyry, or any modern Adversary of the Gospel, a mind to show their utmost Detestation and Abhorrence of these Doctrines, of a Birth of the Spirit, a Birth of God, a quickenig Saviour, a Life in him and through him, a Redemption through his Blood, a Translation into his Kingdom, of our asking and receiving all through him, of his Father's and his Abode in us, had they the greatest Desire to persuade all People that all this was a groundless Fiction, without the least Truth or Reasonableness in it, need they declare any more, or desire any more to be believed than this, 'That the highest Good of Man, 'is the uniform Practice of Morality, chosen by ourselves, as 'our 'Happiness here, and our unspeakable Reward hereafter?' For is not this the same thing as to say, all the Doctrines of the Gospel Saviour and Salvation, of a new Birth, of the Spirit of God, of Redemption through Christ, of Righteousness in him of entering into his Kingdom, are absolutely false? For it is the same total Denial of all the Christian Method of Salvation, as to say, that we have our Happiness or highest Good both here and hereafter from Epicurus. For the Salvation, and Happiness, and eternal Life which we receive through Jesus Christ, is equally denied and rejected as false, whether you place our highest Good in what we can do for ourselves, or in what Epicurus can do for us.

The Scripture saith, 'The Gift of God is eternal Life, through 'Jesus Christ our Lord.* And again, 'He that hath the Son, 'hath Life; and he who hath not the Son, hath not Life.† Again, 'By Grace ye are saved through Faith; and that not of 'yourselves, it is the Gift of God.‡ And again, 'If Christ be 'not raised, ye are yet in your Sins:§ And, 'as in Adam all died, 'so in Christ shall all be made alive.' And again, 'Your Life is 'hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our Life shall 'appear, then shall ye also appear with him in Glory:§

Now this Author does not expressly say all this is absolutely false, and not fit to be believed, but he only desires you to believe something, that will show it to be impossible to be true.

For if our own Morality, chosen by ourselves, is our highest Good and Reward both here and hereafter, it is impossible to be true, that we have no Life but in the Son of God, or that eternal Life is the Gift of God to us through Jesus Christ, or that we are saved by Grace, through Faith, and not of ourselves.

So that this Author is not to be considered as one that has barely mistaken something in the Nature of the Sacrament, but as one that rejects the whole Method of Salvation through Jesus Christ, and will have no Happiness or Redemption from him here, or eternal Life hereafter.

When therefore he saith, 'Do we not partake of the Benefit of 'Remission of our Sins, by partaking of the Lord's Supper 'worthily? I must answer, No; if the Gospel be true.¶

This ought to have no more Weight with you, than if Celsus or Porphyry, or Hobbs, had said the same thing. For since he makes our own Morality, chosen by ourselves, to be our highest Good, both here and hereafter, he as absolutely rejects our Salvation through Jesus Christ, and denies the Love and Goodness of God towards us in Christ Jesus, to be our highest Good, both here and hereafter, as ever Celsus or Porphyry did: And therefore can have no more Right or Pretence to explain any Part of that Salvation, which he has so totally denied, than they had. In the Gospel, says he, No Pardon of past Sins is promised or given, unless to those just converted, renouncing their Sins, and baptized into the Christian Faith; or to those, who having sinned after Baptism, actually amend their Lives. This is to show you, that there is no Remission of Sins obtained by the worthy partaking of the Sacrament, if the Gospel be true.

Now in the Gospel, our Blessed Lord seeing their Faith, 'saith 'to the Sick of the Palsy, Son, be of good cheer, thy Sins are 'forgiven thee.'

Now here Pardon of Sins is given, directly contrary to this Author's Assertion, to one not converted and baptized into the Christian Faith, but because of his and their Faith that brought him on a Bed.

Again, of Magdalen, our Lord saith, 'Her Sins, which are 'many, are forgiven; for she loved much. But to whom little is 'forgiven, the same loveth little.'

Here you see again a plain Confutation of this Author's Doctrine; for here Remission of Sins is actually given and declared to be due to Love, and Love is affirmed to be the Measure of it.

Therefore it is an undeniable Doctrine of the Gospel, that Faith and Love are certain Means of obtaining Remission of our Sins; if therefore the Sacrament is an Exercise of our Faith and Love, then we have the utmost Assurance from our Saviour's own Words, that we thereby obtain Remission of our Sins.

But this Author has another Argument against it, taken from our Liturgy. In our Public Office, says he, 'it is not supposed 'that the worthy partaking of the Lord's Supper does itself 'operate this Forgiveness; but it is made part of a Prayer to God, 'that they who have partaken of it, may obtain Remission of their 'Sins, &c. They are taught to pray thus, after the Act of Com'munion is over, which supposes that it is not already obtained.*

Now if there was any Truth or Reason in this Argument, it would follow, that our Saviour's Apostles had obtained no Remission of Sins from him; and though he had chosen them out of the World, called them his Friends, and declared his extraordinary Love for them, and though they left all and followed him, yet he had not done that for them, which he had done for the sick of the Palsy, and many others; for this Reason, because he had taught and enjoined them a Form of Prayer, in which they were to pray for the Forgiveness of their Sins.

For if it is rightly argued, that there is no Remission of Sins obtained by the Use of the Sacrament, because afterwards there is Prayer made for the Forgiveness of Sins; then it must follow, that our Saviour's Apostles could not have received any Remission of Sins, when he taught them to pray for it. It must follow also, that he never intended that they should be in the State of new Converts, baptized for the Remission of their Sins, because then they could not without great Absurdity have used that Form of Prayer which he gave them.

It follows also, that the Apostles could not have taught this Form of Prayer, or enjoined the Use of it to their new baptized Converts, because it would have been, according to this Author, a proving to them, that they had not received the Pardon of their Sins by Baptism.

Now the Inconsistency which this Author finds in praying for the Forgiveness of Sins, and all other Benefits of Christ's Passion, after the Reception of the Sacrament, if the Sacrament itself was a means of obtaining them, all this Inconsistency and Difficulty had been removed, if he had only known or acknowledged, that the Christian Life is a progressive State, and that Forgiveness of Sins is a Grace and Benefit of Jesus Christ, bestowed upon us in the same manner as every other Grace or degree of Holiness, as a Talent to be improved, as a Seed to be nourished up by us to its full Growth. And for this Reason it is, that we are obliged to pray for every Grace, and every Virtue, that we have already received, because we had received it to grow up in us, and Prayer or Desire of it is the only Soil in which it can grow.

Thus he to whom God has already given the Grace of Penitence, for that reason prays for Penitence; he that has already received of God the Gift of Faith, for that reason prays, Lord, help thou my Unbelief; and he that is the fullest of Righteousness, feels the greatest Hunger and Thirst after it.

But according to this Author's Religion, he that has received the Spirit of God, cannot be supposed to pray for it; and yet according to the Religion of the Gospel, no one can pray for it, but because he has received it.

I shall now only add a word or two on what this Author says in Defence of the Safety of his Doctrine of the Sacrament; though it should be erroneous.

It ought certainly,' says he, 'to be far from the Thoughts of every Christian to lessen any Privileges, or undervalue any Promises, annexed by Christ to any Duty or Institution of his Religion. It is an inexcusable Carelessness to do it for want of due Consideration.—But this, I think, may with Truth be said,

‘that an Error of this sort (should it be supposed) does not really ‘hurt any Christian, nor alter the Effect of the Duty at all.’*’

The Safety therefore of his Doctrine of the Sacrament, supposing it to lessen and undervalue the Benefits of it, is grounded upon this general Proposition, which he takes to be a great Truth, viz., ‘That to lessen or undervalue the Privileges and Promises ‘annexed to any Duty or Institution by Jesus Christ, does not ‘really hurt any Christian, or alter the Effect of the Duty at all.’

Now this Doctrine directly leads to Infidelity, for Infidelity is nothing else but a lessening and undervaluing the Privileges and Promises annexed to Faith in Christ.

The Scripture saith, ‘In this was manifested the Love of God ‘toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into ‘the World, that we might live through him;’ and again, He sent his Son to be the Propitiation for our Sins.† ‘God so loved ‘the World, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever ‘believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal Life.’ Here the Privilege and Promise of Life, and Atonement for our Sins, is annexed to Faith in Christ; but according to this Author, it does you no real Hurt, nor alters the Effect of your Faith at all, though you lessen and undervalue this Privilege and Promise of Life, and Atonement for your Sins, offered to your Faith in Christ Jesus.

Is not this directly saying, that Infidelity is as safe and beneficial to you, as a Belief of the Privileges and Promises of the Gospel? Is it not saying, that it is as beneficial to you to esteem Christ only as a Carpenter’s Son, as to expect Atonement and Life from him, as the only begotten Son of God?

It is said of our blessed Lord, that among those of his own Country he did no mighty Works, because of their Unbelief. Now what was their Unbelief? It was nothing but the Infidelity which this Author would prove to be harmless; it was only a lessening and undervaluing all those Privileges and Promises which our Saviour offered to those that would have a just Sense of the Value of them. Now if we lessen or undervalue any Privileges and Promises annexed to Faith in Christ, or any other Duty, such Unbelief will certainly have the same Effect upon us that it had upon those amongst whom Christ lived, it will hinder him from doing any mighty Works among us, or in other Words, render our Knowledge and Profession of him ineffectual to our Salvation.

Prayer and Faith are amongst the greatest Duties of the Christian Life, and are the most powerful Means of obtaining all the Blessings of our Salvation. Now to these two Duties the greatest Privileges and Promises are annexed by Christ. The Promise of the Holy Spirit is made to Prayer. Now, according to this Author, if you lessen and undervalue this Privilege and Promise annexed to Prayer, if you grow indifferent about the Necessity or Benefit of the Holy Spirit, and fancy that you are sufficient of yourself for all the Virtue that you want, all this does you no real Hurt, nor alters at all the Effect of your Prayer.

† 1 John iv. 9.

Again, another Privilege annexed to Prayer, is that of being heard in and through the Name of Christ.

'Hitherto,' says our blessed Lord, 'ye have asked nothing in my Name; ask and ye shall receive, that your Joy may be full.'—'Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my Name, he will give it you.'*

Now if any Infidel, to abate your Zeal for, and Confidence in this kind of Prayer, should teach you, that no one can suffer any real Hurt by lessening and undervaluing Prayer in the Name of Christ, and that it would have the same Effect upon you, though you expected little or no Good from it, the Gospel would be preached to you, just as it is by this Author.

Again, 'All things whatsoever ye shall ask in Prayer, believing, ye shall receive.' Now what is this believing, but an entire Faith in the Privileges and Promises annexed to Prayer?

But if Prayer is effectual because of this Faith in the Promises made to Prayer, then everyone suffers a real Hurt, and the Effect of his Prayer is altogether hindered by this want of Faith, or by a lessening and undervaluing the Privileges and Promises annexed to it.

But if this Author's Doctrine was true, it might then be said, in Contradiction to the Gospel, Prayer does you as much real good when you have little or no Faith in it, as when you have ever so much, and your believing is no help to your receiving.

The Scriptures attribute a kind of Omnipotency to Faith; thus, 'All things are possible to him that believeth.' Again, 'According to thy Faith, so be it done unto thee.—Thy Faith hath saved thee.—Thy Faith hath made thee whole.' But according to this Author, it must be said, that the Want of Faith does you no real Hurt, that you will be healed and saved, and have all things done to you, in the same manner, whether you be faithless or believing.

And on this Foundation it is that he grounds your Safety in receiving his Doctrine of the Sacrament, though he should have lessened and undervalued the Benefits annexed to it. But you ought to observe, that you can have no Safety in receiving his Doctrine of the Sacrament, unless it be safe for you to receive another Gospel.

Had the Sick, the Lame, the Blind, and the Deaf believed that which this Author would have you believe, as safe Doctrine, viz., that to lessen and undervalue the Promises and Privileges made to Faith, could do them no real Hurt, they had continued in their Infirmities, merely for knowing Jesus Christ and the Gospel as this Author would have you know them.

When two blind Men ran crying after our Saviour to have Mercy on them, 'He saith unto them, Believe ye that I am able 'to do this? They said unto him, yea, Lord. Then touched he 'their Eyes, saying, according to your Faith be it unto you. And 'their Eyes were opened.*' The poor Woman that wanted to be healed of her Infirmity, said, 'If I may but touch his Clothes 'I shall be whole:' Upon this Faith of the Woman, our Saviour said, 'I perceive that Virtue is gone out of me;' and turning him about, and seeing the Woman, 'he said unto her, Daughter, be 'of good comfort, thy Faith hath made thee whole.†'

Now, had the blind Men answered to our Saviour's Question, No, Lord, we do not believe that thou canst give us Sight; had the diseased Woman said, I am so far from expecting to be healed by touching his Clothes, that I don't believe he has the Power of healing in himself; according to this Author, their Infidelity must have helped them to just the same Benefit from Christ, as their Faith did, notwithstanding that Christ himself ascribes it to their Faith. For unless it be true, that their want of Faith had helped them to the same Benefit from Christ that their Faith did, it cannot be true, that to lessen and undervalue the Privileges and Promises annexed to any Duty, does you no real Hurt, nor alters the Effect of it at all.

And therefore the Safety which this Author proposes to you, in lessening and undervaluing the Privileges and Promises annexed to the Sacrament, is only the Safety of Infidelity, and such a Safety as they are in, who lessen and undervalue the Privileges and Promises annexed to Faith in Jesus Christ.

And indeed herein he is, though inconsistent with the Gospel, very consistent with himself. For if, as he has said, an uniform Morality chosen by ourselves, is our highest Good both here and hereafter; our highest Good makes Christ as needless to us as the Sacrament; for if this is true, you can no more need the Benefits of a Saviour, than the Benefits of a Sacrament, and it can signify nothing to your Happiness, whatever Privileges and Promises are offered to you in the Gospel, because you want none, can receive none as a Part of your Happiness, because you have it all from yourself, both here and hereafter.

* Matt. ix. 30.

† Matt. ix. 22.

So that if this Minister of the Gospel carries his Point with you, if you believe his Doctrine of the Sacrament, upon the Principles on which he teaches it, you may indeed retain something of the outward Form of the Sacrament, but must reject the whole Salvation of the Gospel.

The Introduction.

I SHOULD reckon it a Matter of great Importance, if I knew how to bespeak the serious Attention of the Reader to one of the greatest Articles of the Christian Religion, and of the greatest Concern to himself.

And though the Subject is particular, and seems only to relate to one Point, yet the Things which will here come under Consideration, will extend to Matters of the most general Moment, and contain the most affecting Reasons to awaken and convert the Heart both of the Deist, and the Christian.

For it is my Intent so to search and lay open the true Grounds and Reasons of the Christian New-Birth, that the Things said, may equally reach both these sorts of Readers.

For the Deists, and Unbelievers, have a great Share of my compassionate Affections, and I never can think, or write of the infinite Blessings of the Christian Redemption, without feeling in my Heart, an impatient Longing to see them the happy Partakers of them. And as one naturally believes, what one strongly wishes; so I cannot help hoping, that both Christians and Deists will here find Truths of such a Nature, as must in some Degree touch their Hearts, if not read with Prejudice and Aversion.

OF THE Nature and Necessity OF
OR, THE NEW-BIRTH.

MAN was created by God after his own Image, and in his own Likeness, a living Mirror of the Divine Nature: where Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, each brought forth their own Nature in a creaturely Manner.

(2.) As the Son, who is begotten of the Father, is the Brightness of the Father's Glory, and the Holy Ghost proceedeth from the Father and the Son, as an amiable, moving Life of both; so it was in this created Image of the Holy Trinity. In it, the Father's Nature generated the Nature of the Son, and the Holy Ghost proceeded from them both, as an amiable, moving Life of both.* This was the Likeness or Image of God, in which the first Man was created, a true Offspring of God, in whom the Divine Birth sprung up as in the Deity, where Father, Son, and Holy Ghost saw themselves in a creaturely Manner.

(3.) In the Divine Nature the Father cannot possibly be separated from the Son, nor the Holy Ghost from both, or either of them. But such Separation could come to pass in the Trinity, become creaturely, or in the created living Image of the Trinity.

(4.) If such Separation could not have happened, Man could not have fallen out of Paradise; for so long as this Image of the Holy Trinity continued unbroken, so long it must be in Paradise, Heaven, or the Kingdom of Divine Joy.

(5.) But that this Separation could happen in this created Image of the Trinity, viz., that the Birth of the Son, and the Arising or Proceeding of the Holy Ghost, could be separated or lost, is also certain ; because Man is actually fallen out of Paradise into this poor, wretched, perishable World.

* See An Appeal to Deists, Arians, &c., c. i., pp. 45-58.

138 The Grounds and Reasons

(6.) Whilst Man continued an unbroken Image of the holy Trinity, he was necessarily in Paradise, in the open Enjoyment of the Kingdom of God. He stood indeed upon the Earth, and with the same outward World about him, as we do now ; but Paradise was over all, the Cover of all ; and therefore he neither saw nor felt either his own outward Body, or the Things of this outward World, in the manner, as we now see, and feel them. His own dark, gross, heavy, fleshy Body, which appeared after the Fall, and the naked Grossness, Heaviness, Darkness, Discord, Contrariety, and Enmity, of the Elements of this outward World, the Strife of Heat and Cold, of Storms and Tempests, were Things suppressed in Paradise, and as entirely hid from his Eyes, as the Darkness of the Night is hid from our Eyes by the Light of the Day.

(7.) This is plainly taught us in the holy Scripture, where it is said of our first Parents in Paradise, before the Fall, that 'they were naked, and were not ashamed.' And again, after the Fall, it is said, 'their Eyes were opened,' and 'they saw they were naked,' and through Shame sought for a Covering. It is not said, they saw their Nakedness in Paradise, but that though they were naked, that is, had such Bodies as afterwards appeared to be naked, yet they were not ashamed, And the Reason of their not being ashamed, was because that Nakedness was not then visible, could not then show itself, but was concealed and covered from them by their paradisiacal Glory ; but as soon as by Sin, they died to the paradisiacal Life and Glory, then they saw their Nakedness, which Sight filled them with Shame and Confusion.

(8.) From these two Passages of Scripture it is most plain, first, that another sort of Seeing, or another Sight of Things, was opened in Adam after the Fall, than that which he had before it : For he then first saw his own Nakedness, and therefore first also then saw the outward World, with such Eyes as he saw his own Body, that is, in the same State of Nakedness, as he saw himself, destitute of its paradisiacal Glory. Secondly, That before his Fall, his Seeing was divine, by means of a divine Light, shining forth from the Kingdom of God, that was then not hid, but powerfully opened within him. It was then with him, as with the heavenly City, of which St. John says, 'It had 'no need of the Sun, neither of the Moon to shine in it ; for the 'Glory of God did enlighten it, and the Lamb is the Light 'thereof.' Rev. xxi. 23. Thirdly, That after the Fall, when the Image of the holy Trinity was broken in him, this divine Light departed from him, and he was left to the firmamental Light of this World, to the Light of Beasts, to see himself, and all other outward Things, in no other Light and Glory, but such as the Sun, Stars, and Elements, cast upon one another. Thus he stood with regard to this outward World, a poor Prisoner of this earthly Life, as much under the Power and Slavery of the Elements, as his Fellow-creatures the Beasts.

(9.) Paradise being departed from the Earth (which before kept all in harmony) now Discord and Contrariety broke forth in all the Elements, and Animals upon it. The Elementary Nature in Man, and Beasts, was in the same Disorder with the outward Elements and Stars. From this time Storms and Tempests, Thunders and Lightnings, Earthquakes, and all sorts of Strife and Contrarieties through all temporal Nature; and in Man, and other Animals, arose the same Disquiet; for the Elements in and without man, were of the same Nature, and therefore acted upon one another. Hence, Heat, Cold, Pain, Sorrow, Fear, Disquiet, Diseases, Sickness and Death, came upon Man, fallen out of Paradise into this World.

(10.) This was the State of the World, and of Man in it, after that Paradise was retired from it; when, instead of the Light and Glory of Paradise, which before made it all Peace and Unity, and a sweet Habitation of Divine Joy, it had now only the Light of the Sun, which could only keep the Elements in such Harmony, and Discord, as we now see in the World. Thus stood Man in this outward World; let us now look at the inward State of his Soul, and see what Condition he was of, in the inward, and spiritual World.

(11.) We have before shown, that Man was created a living Image of the holy Trinity in Unity, that the Divine Birth arose in him, and that Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, saw themselves in him, in a creaturely Manner.

Now by his Transgression this Image of the Holy Trinity was broken; the Generation of the Son, or Word, and the Proceeding of the Holy Ghost in him, were at an End; in the Day that he sinned, in that Day he died this Death. And therefore what was he as to his Soul? What must be said of it? It was something, that was deprived of that Birth, which was the Brightness of its Glory, and which should be that to it, which the Son of God is to the Father; it wanted that Spirit, which was its amiable Life, and which was to be that to it, which the Holy Ghost is to the Father, and the Son.

Yet the Soul was still a Life, an imperishable Life, that could not be dissolved, or cease to be. Now seeing every Life, whether spiritual or corporeal, consists in Fire, or rather is Fire; therefore we may say of the Soul in this State, that it is a spiritual dark Fire-breath, an Anger-Fire, that must heat, and torment itself with its own inward burning Strife, and yet be unable to reach, touch, or obtain any Spark of Light and Love, to make its Fire-Life sweet and amiable, or such a Flame of Fire, as Angels are said to be.

(12.) This was the State of the Soul after the Fall, when the Birth of the Son of God, and the Proceeding of the Holy Ghost, were no more to be found, or felt in it. It was in the State and Condition of the Devils, who in their fallen Nature, are from Flames of Love, become this spiritual, dark, raging, aching Fire-breath, that can draw no Light of Love into it.

And the Reason why, even the most profligate Persons do not fully know, and perceive their Souls to be in this miserable State, a dark Root of self-tormenting Fire, is this, because the Soul, though thus fallen, was still united to the Blood of an human Body, and therefore the sweet, and cheering Light of the Sun, could reach the Soul, and do that for it in some Degree, and for some Time, which it does to the Darkness, Sharpness, Sourness, Bitterness, and Wrath that is in outward Nature, that is, it could enlighten, sweeten, and cheer it in a certain Degree.

But as this is not its own Light, that is, does not arise in the Soul itself, but only reaches it by means of the Body ; so if the Soul hath in this time got no Light of its own, then, when the Death of the Body breaks off its Communion with the Light of this World, the Soul is left a mere dark, raging Fire, in the State of Devils.

And if all the Light of this World was to be immediately at once extinguished, all human Souls that were not in some real Degree of Regeneration, would immediately find themselves to be nothing but the rage of Fire, and the Horror of Darkness.

(13.) Now, though the Light and Comfort of this outward World, keeps even the worst of Men from any constant, strong Sensibility of that wrathful, fiery, dark, and self-tormenting Nature, that is the very Essence of every fallen, unregenerate Soul ; yet every Man in the World has, more or less, frequent and strong Intimations given him, that so it is with him, in the inmost Ground of his Soul.

How many Inventions are some People forced to have recourse to, to keep off a certain inward Uneasiness, which they are afraid of, and know not whence it comes? Alas, it is because there is a fallen Spirit, a dark aching Fire within them, which has never had its proper Relief, and is trying to discover itself, and calling out for Help, at every Cessation of worldly Joy.

Why are some People, when under heavy Disappointments, or some great worldly Shame, at the very Brink of Distraction, unable to bear themselves, and desirous of Death of any kind? 'Tis because worldly Light and Comforts, no longer acting sweetly upon the Blood, the soul is left to its own dark, fiery raging Nature, and would destroy the Body at any rate, rather than continue under such a Sensibility of its own wrathful, self-tormenting Fire.

Who has not at one time or other felt a Sourness, Wrath, Selfishness, Envy, and Pride, which he could not tell what to do with, or how to bear, rising up in him without his Consent, casting a Blackness over all his Thoughts, and then as suddenly going off again, either by the Cheerfulness of the Sun, or Air, or some agreeable Accident, and again, at times, as suddenly returning upon him? Sufficient Indications are these to every Man, that there is a dark Guest within him, concealed under the Cover of Flesh and Blood, often lulled asleep by worldly Light and Amusements, yet such as will, in spite of everything, show itself, which if it has not its proper Relief in this Life, must be his Torment in Eternity. And it was for the sake of this hidden Hell within us, that our Blessed Lord said when on Earth, and says now to every Soul, 'Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you Rest.'

For as the Soul is become this Self-tormenting Fire, only because the Birth of the Son of God was extinguished in it by our first Parents; so there is no other possible Remedy for it, either in Heaven or Earth, but by its coming to this Son of God, to be born again of him.

Oh, poor Unbelievers, that content yourselves with this Foundation of Hell in your Nature, and either seek for no Salvation, or, what is worse, turn your Backs with Disregard on the one only Saviour, that God himself can help you to!

Think not of saving yourselves. It is no more in your Power, than to save the fallen Spirits that are in Hell; you can no more do the one than the other. Talk not of the Mercy and Goodness of God; his Mercy is indeed infinite, and his Goodness above all Conception; but then the Infiniteness of it consists in this, that he of his own mere Mercy found out, and offered this Saviour to all Mankind, because in the Nature of Things, nothing less than this Saviour could redeem them.

Therefore to rely upon a Mercy of God, that is not within the Christian Scheme of it, is to rely upon a Fiction of our own Minds; because all the Mercy that God can show to Mankind, all that his omnipotent Love can do for them, is done and offered to them in, and through the Redemption of Jesus Christ.

If either Devils, or lost Souls could possibly be annihilated, neither of them would by the Goodness of God, be suffered to exist in Misery, for Misery's sake. But a Man may as well expect that his Soul shall be annihilated through the Goodness of God, though Annihilation is impossible, and what cannot be done, as to expect to be saved through the Divine Goodness, without the Mediation of the Son of God, when the Birth of the Son of God in the Soul, is the one only Salvation, that the Omnipotence of God can bestow upon him.

Therefore to choose or rely upon some other Goodness of God besides that, which he has offered to us in Jesus Christ, is the most dreadful Mistake that can befall any Man, and must, if persevered in, leave him out of the Possibility of any Kind, or Degree of Salvation. For as the Son of God is the Brightness and Glory of the Father, so no Soul made in the Likeness of God is capable of any Degree of Brightness and Glory, but so far as the Birth of the Son of God is in it; therefore to reject this Birth, to refuse this Method of Redemption, is to reject all the Goodness, that the Divine Nature itself hath for us.

➤ (14.) But to return. I have shown in few Words the original Dignity and Glory of Man's Creation and State in Paradise, and the lamentable Change, that the Fall has brought upon him.

From a divine and heavenly Creature, he is so wretchedly changed, as to have inwardly the Nature, and dark Fire of the Devils, and outwardly the Nature of all the Beasts, a Slave of this outward World, living at all Uncertainties, amongst Pains, Fears, Sorrows, and Diseases, till his Body is forced to be removed from our Sight, and hid in the Earth.

Now from this short View of what Man is fallen from, and what he is fallen into, we may see at once in the strongest Light the divine Excellency and absolute Necessity of those Doctrines of our blessed Lord, calling us to all Kinds of renouncing the World, to so many Ways of denying all the Passions and inclinations of Flesh and Blood.

Were the World, as it now is, and we, as we now are, in the very first State in which God made it and us, there would be some Foundation for saying, as some do, 'What are all these 'Things for, if they are not to be enjoyed? Why have we these 'Passions and Inclinations, if they may not be gratified?' But all these Questions are fully answered, as soon as it is known, that the first State of Things is quite altered; that we were not created to be in this World in the Manner we are now in it; that Paradise was our first State, where we should have stood in divine Strength and Ability, insensible of any Evil from outward Nature; that Sin destroyed this first State of Things, destroyed the Divine Life in the Soul, and removed Paradise from off the Earth;—that Man, cast out of Paradise, came as a Malefactor into this outward World, to be punished and scourged by all its divided, warring Elements; that by his falling into this World, it got the same Power over him, as over the Beasts, that are its proper Inhabitants, and of the same Nature with itself; that thus fallen under its Dominion, it continually breathes its own corrupt Nature into him, feeds him with such Husks as the Swine eat, and proposes such Pleasures to him, as make him unwilling, and unable to regain his first Divine Life.

Now, as soon as this is known to be the Condition of Man, thus fallen from a Divine Life under the Dominion of this World, then all the renouncing, self-denying Doctrines of the Gospel, appear to have the utmost Reason and Necessity in them; then it appears to be as much our Happiness, to deny the Tempers and Inclinations of this earthly Nature, and to be delivered from the Power of its Pleasures over us, as to be delivered from the Power of Death and Hell.

And the most sober Reason thus acquainted with the Nature of our Fall, must be forced to consider this World as having merely the Nature of an Hospital, where People only are, because they are distempered, and where no Happiness is sought for, but that of being healed, and made fit to leave it.

(15.) To proceed: That I have not stated Man's first Dignity too high, is evidently plain from the Scripture Account of it. It is a fundamental Truth of our Religion, that he was created in Paradise for a Life suitable to it. But Paradise is a Divine Habitation, still existing where it was at the first, though not visible to Eyes which see only by the Light of the Sun, and is the Habitation of such as have attained their first paradisiacal Nature; it was in this Paradise, that our Saviour, through a Miracle of Love, promised to be with the Thief on the Cross.

It is also a fundamental Truth of Scripture, that Man was created to be immortal, incapable of Death, and of everything that had any Likeness to it, so long as he continued in the Perfection of his State. That it was Sin alone which brought Sorrow, Pain, Evil, Distress, Sickness and Death upon him.

But if this be a Truth that cannot be denied, then it must be equally true, that before he sinned, he must have stood in such a Paradise, as kept everything in the outward World entirely under him, so that neither Fire nor Water, nor any other Element, could have the least Power over him. But if Fire, the fiercest of the Elements, had not the least Power of touching his Body in any hurtful Manner, or of causing any Pain to it; then it must be granted, that Paradise covered, and governed the Power of all the Elements of this outward World; that Man lived in it as an absolute Lord over it; and therefore it undeniably follows, that the Manner, in which he now is under the Power of the Elements, capable of receiving Pain and Evil from them, is a State that he was not in, till Sin took Paradise from him, and left him in the same poor Condition, that we now are in, capable of receiving Pain and Death, from almost everything that is about us.

That Man in Paradise lived in this World insensible, and also incapable of any Evil from it, superior to all its Elements, is plain from the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil.

For how could it be more plainly told us, that outward Things, the Stars and Elements could not affect his State, or make any Impression upon him, than by telling us, that he had no Knowledge of Good and Evil in this World, till he had eaten of that Tree? Is not this directly telling us, that before such eating, he was above the Nature of this World, that it had not Power to operate upon him, or give him any Sense or Feeling, of what there was of Good or Evil in it.

Now that he was created to be, and to continue thus a Lord over all temporal Nature, superior to all the influences and Effects of the Stars and Elements, is also plain from the Prohibition given him, not to eat of this Tree of Knowledge.

But he was not content with this happy Superiority above the Evil and Good of outward Nature. His Imagination, helped on by the Devil, longed to look into, to know and feel the secret working Powers of that outward Nature, which it was his Happiness, and Paradise to be insensible of.

When God forbade his eating of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, it was the same thing as if he had said, Fall not into the outward World, under the Dominion of its Stars and Elements, but keep thy State in Paradise.

When Man disobeyed God, and took the Fruit of the Tree into his Body, which brought the Nature and Power of the Stars and Elements into it; this is not to be considered, as that single Act of eating, but it signifies as much as if he had said; By eating this Fruit, I desire to come within the Influences of the Stars and Elements, and to be made sensible, and feeling of the Good and Evil that is in them.

Therefore, small as the Action seems to be at the first View, and of a very limited Nature, it was his refusing to be that, which God created him to be; it was his express, open, voluntary Act and Deed, by which he chose to fall into this outward World, in the Manner we now are in it.

Therefore it was not the mere eating of a Fruit, that brought Adam's Misery upon him, but it was the eating a Fruit, as his chosen Means of entering into this World.

God himself was not angry at all, or at a small Act of eating a Fruit, and so in Anger turned Man out of Paradise, into a World cursed for that Sin. But Man freely and voluntarily chose, against the Will, and Command of God, to be in the World in its cursed State, unblessed by Paradise: For he chose to enter into a Sensibility and Feeling of its Good and Evil, which is directly choosing to be, where Paradise is not; for nothing that is in Paradise, can be touched, or hurt by anything of the outward World. Therefore the first State of Man was a state of such Glory, and heavenly Prerogatives, as I have above related; and his Fall, was a Fall into, or under the Power of this outward World.

(16.) If it be also further asked, What sufficient Proof there is, first, that the Likeness and Image of God, in which Man was created, signified thus much, that Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, each brought forth their own Nature in him, and in him saw themselves in a creaturely manner? And then, secondly, that by the first Sin, this Birth of the Son of God, and Proceeding of the Holy Ghost was extinguished and lost in the Soul of Man? It may be answered, that these great Truths stand attested by undeniable Evidence of Scripture.

First, from the Means and Manner of our Redemption. For there is nothing that can so fully, and justly show us the true Nature of our Fall, as the Nature and Manner of our Redemption. And it seems highly suitable to the Wisdom of God to let the first, be but in part discovered, till the latter showed and proved itself in an undeniable manner. And this, no doubt, is the Reason why Moses is suffered to write no more of the Nature of the Fall of Man, or what it implied, than he has done. Because the Time for a plain Insight into that Matter, was not then come, and it was to lie as much a Secret, as to the true Nature of it, as the Nature and Manner of our Redemption then did; which was then only obscurely declared, by an Enmity between the Seed of the Woman, and the Seed of the Serpent.

But when the Seed of the Woman showed itself to be the Son of God, the Second Person of the holy Trinity, united to our human Nature; then the Nature of our Fall, and what we fell from, and what was the Seed of the Serpent in us, manifested themselves in the same Degree of Certainty. And therefore it is very unreasonable to hold, that we ought to say no more of our first State before the Fall, of its Dignity and Perfection, and what was lost by the Fall, than what is openly and expressly declared by Moses. For as it seemed good to the Divine Wisdom to conceal the Mystery of our Redemption and Salvation for many Ages, and to let Moses only discover it under a Declaration of a Serpent-destroyer; so there was a Fitness, and even Necessity, that the Nature and Degree of our Fall should be kept in the same Degree of Secrecy, then only to be discovered with a sufficient Degree of Plainness and Certainty, when our Redemption and Salvation came plainly to be laid open. The Religion of the Jews was suited to that State of Things and Times in which they lived; neither the Mysteries of the Creation, nor Redemption, were then discovered; Things past, and Things to come, had then only their Figures, Shadows, and Types.

But when the Son of God became incarnate, and showed forth in the plainest Manner, the Nature, Manner, and Necessity of our Redemption through his Blood, and a Life received from him, then the Nature and Degree of our Fall became equally plain and manifest; and everything that he has told us of the Nature and Necessity of a new or second Birth from him, was so much told us of our first Birth in Paradise.

For the Nature and Greatness of our Redemption, must show the Nature and Greatness of our Fall. These Things have such a necessary Correspondence, as cannot be denied, but by a Mind utterly indisposed to receive Conviction.

If our Redemption proposed to restore to us a Divine Sight, would not this be a sufficient Proof, that by the Fall we had lost some Divine Manner of seeing? So, if God himself takes our Nature upon him to redeem us, and it be declared that nothing, but this uniting the Divine Nature to the human, can be our Redemption, can we want a Proof, that the Divine Nature existed in some manner in us, before the Fall?

Now it is a plain, manifest Doctrine of the holy Scriptures, that Man by the Fall is in such a Condition, that there was no help or Remedy for him, either in the Height above, or in the Depth below, but by the Son of God's becoming incarnate, and taking the fallen Nature upon him. If this alone could be the Remedy, does not this enough show us the Disease? Does not this speak plainly enough, what it was that Man had lost by his Fall, namely, the Birth of the Son of God in his Soul; and therefore it was, that only the Son of God in so mysterious a manner, could be his Redeemer?

If he had lost less, a less Power could have redeemed him. If he had lost something else, the Restoration of that something, would have been his Redemption.

But since it is an open, undeniable Doctrine of the Gospel, that there can be no Salvation for Mankind but in the Name, and by the Power of the Son of God, by his being united to the fallen Nature, and so raising his own Birth and Life in it, is it not sufficiently declared to us, that what was lost by the Fall, was the Birth of the Son of God in the Soul?

Secondly, This same Doctrine is not left to be drawn from any Consequences of Things, but is in express Words taught us, when it is said, that we must be born again from above, born of God; for this is expressly telling us what Birth we have lost, and is only saying, that the first Birth is to be restored, or that the Divine Birth is to arise, or to be brought again into us, as at the first, when the living Image of the Holy Trinity was brought forth in us.

What this new regained Birth is, we are plainly told by St. Peter, that is a being born again of an incorruptible Seed by the Word, that is, the eternal Word, or Son of God. Which Divine Word being only in the Soul as a Seed, is to restore by degrees the first Birth of the Word, or Son of God in the Soul. Which is Proof enough that this was the State of the Soul in its Creation, that this Birth was then in it, and so was an Image of the Holy Trinity; and that the Death which Adam died in the Day that he sinned, was the losing this holy Birth from his Soul. And on this Account it was, that nothing could restore him, but that which was able to restore this Birth again to his Soul, and make it again such an Image of God, as that Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, might therein see themselves again in a creaturely Manner, and dwell in it, and it in them.

Thirdly, The Holy Ghost is in the Scriptures declared to be the Sanctifier, or Renewer of Holiness in the Soul, and this in such a manner, that all the Motions and Operations of the Soul, so far as they are without it, and unmoved by it, are so far unholy, and unable even for a good Thought.

Now how could our Thoughts or Operations be unholy in themselves, and want the Sanctification and Renewing of the Holy Ghost, unless this Holy Spirit had first existed in us, and by our Fall had been separated from us?

Had not the Birth of the Holy Ghost arisen in us at our Creation, we could no more be unholy for want of it, than the Beasts are, nor any more now have wanted to be renewed by it, than the Beasts that never had it. But since there is now no Sanctification or Redemption for us, but by having the Holy Ghost as a free Gift of God breathed again into us, it is no less than a Demonstration, that we had before we fell, this Holiness by the Nature which God gave us at first; and that the Holiness of our Creation consisted in this, that the Holy Spirit then proceeded, or arose forth in our Soul, as the Birth of the Son of God did; and that it might for the same Reason be then called the Holiness of our Nature, as it is now after the Fall, called a Holiness by Gift or Grace. For if we are now to be born again of the Spirit by Grace, does not this tell us, that we had this

Birth of the Spirit in us at the first, and that then it was the Birth of our Nature by Creation?

Fourthly, These same great Truths are evidently signified to us in the fullest manner by our Baptism, and the Form of it. Our Baptism is to signify our seeking and obtaining a new Birth. And our being baptized in, or into the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, tells us in the plainest manner, what Birth it is that we seek, namely, such a new Birth as may make us again what we were at first, a living real Image or Offspring of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

It is owned on all hands, that we are baptized into a Renovation of some Divine Birth that we had lost? and that we may not be at a loss to know what that Divine Birth is, the Form in Baptism openly declares to us, that it is to regain that first Birth of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost in our Souls, which at the first made us to be truly and really Images of the Nature of the Holy Trinity in Unity. The Form in Baptism is but very imperfectly apprehended, till it is understood to have this great Meaning in it. And it must be owned, that the Scriptures tend wholly to guide us to this understanding of it. For since they teach us, a Birth of God, a Birth of the Spirit, that we must obtain, and that Baptism, the appointed Sacrament of this New Birth, is to be done into the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, can there be any doubt, that this Sacrament is to signify the Renovation of the Birth of the Holy Trinity in our Souls? And that therefore this was the holy Image born or created at first, when God said, 'Let us make Man in our Image, after our own Likeness,' that is, so make him, that we may see ourselves, our own Nature in him, in a creaturely Manner.

What an harmonious Agreement does there thus appear, between our Creation and Redemption? and how finely, how surprisingly do our first and our second Birth answer to, and illustrate one another?

At our first Birth it is said thus, 'Let us make Man in our Image, after our own Likeness'; when the Divine Birth was lost, and Man was to receive it again, it is said, 'Be thou baptized into the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost': Which is saying, Let the Divine Birth, be brought forth again in thee, or be thou born again such an Image of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as thou wast at first.

These Considerations all taken from the plain Words, and acknowledged Doctrines of Scripture, do, I think, sufficiently declare and prove to us, these great Truths of the last Importance, namely, that the Image in which Man was created, was such, as in which, the Holy Trinity saw itself, or its own Nature in a

creaturally Manner, in which the Father's Nature generated the Nature of the Son, and the Holy Ghost proceeded from them both, as the amiable moving Life of both.

That by Adam's Sin, this holy Image of the Holy Trinity was broken, and in such a Manner, that the Birth of the Son of God, and of the Holy Spirit, was no more in it, and that therefore in a stupendous Mystery of Love, the Son of God united himself to our fallen Nature, to recover, and restore to it, all that it had lost, and in such a Manner, that it might never be lost again to all Eternity.

As soon as it is observed and known, that our Fall consisted in the losing of the Birth of the Son of God in our Soul, and consequently the proceeding forth of the Holy Spirit in it, there appears a surprising Agreeableness and Fitness, in the Means of our Redemption, namely, that we could only be saved by the eternal Son of God; that he only could save us, by taking our Nature upon him, and so uniting it with him, that his Life, or Birth might again arise in us, as at the first, and so we become again a perfect living Image of the Holy Trinity.

(17.) Now the Reason why I have gone thus far in inquiring into the Dignity of Man's original State, and searched thus deep into his lamentable Fall, is this, to point out to the Reader the true Nature of the Christian Religion, and the infinite Importance of it; which Religion is administered by God, as our only Relief from our sad Condition; and that he may at one View see the Height and Depth of Divine Love, which has had so great Care of Mankind.

I persuade myself, no one can see these Truths, in the Manner that I have represented them, without being in some degree inclined to believe them; and in the same degree stirred up to act in Conformity to them.

We know nothing truly of the Nature of the Christian Religion, and our deep Concern in it, but so far as we see into the Nature of our first State in the Creation, and our present State by the Fall. And as this Knowledge is in some degree necessary, so is it also in some degree obvious to every Man.

Every Man has a Consciousness within himself, that a Perfection in all Kinds of Virtue becomes him; this Consciousness obliges him to set the best Foot forwards, and to put on the Appearance of all the Virtue that he can. Now what else is this, but an inward strong Testimony of his own Mind, declaring to him, that Perfection was his first State, and that because his Nature once had it, he can neither lose the agreeable Idea of it, nor quit his Pretences to it; so that every Man carries in his own Breast, in the Depth of his own Frame and Constitution, a strong

Proof of all those Truths, that I have deduced from Scripture. For I have not been speaking of things foreign or strange to us, but of things sensible felt within us, and spoken to us, by the whole Form of our Nature.

(18.) The Condition in which I have represented our Soul to be by the Fall, a mere dark Fire-breath, of an hellish Nature, showing itself in every Man more or less by its Fruits, by such Eruptions and Breakings forth of dark Passions, but hiding itself under an outward Appearance of Good, and a feigned Civility or Rectitude of Manners, is what every Man must be forced to own to be more or less in himself.

For this is the State of every Man's Soul, because it has lost the Birth of the Son of God in it, and so is only as a strong Root of a fiery Life, unenlightened, and unblessed by that holy Word, which is the Brightness of the Father's Glory.

This dark Root of a fiery, self-tormenting Life, which is the whole Nature of the fallen Soul, destitute of the Birth of the Son of God in it, is a Life that subsists in four Elements, as the Life of this World hath its four Elements.

Now the four Elements of this dark, fiery Soul, or fallen Nature, are, (1.) A restless Selfishness; (2.) A restless Envy; (3.) A restless Pride; and, (4.) A restless Wrath or Anger. I call them the Elements of the fallen Soul, because they are that to it, which the four Elements of this World are to the Life of the Body.

Now these four Elements which nourish and keep up the Life of the fallen Soul, are also the four Elements of Hell, in which the Devils dwell; they can no more depart from, or exist out of these Elements, than an earthly Life can depart from, or exist without the four Elements of this World, Fire, Air, Water, and Earth.

Now, as the Soul, by the losing of the Birth of the Son of God in it, is become an aching dark Root of Fire, that has this restless Selfishness, restless Envy, restless Pride, and restless Wrath in it, which are the four Elements of Hell; so by its being in these, or having them in it, it is come to pass, that evil Spirits have such Communion with it, and so great Power over it.

Every stirring of the Soul in the Element of Pride, is a moving in the Devil's Element, where he is, and has Power to join and act with it; every Motion in the Element of Envy or Wrath, is so far impowering him to enter into the Breath of our Life, and settle his fiery Kingdom in us.

And thus in every one of these four Elements, so far as we willingly are in their Sphere of Activity, and act and stir according to them, so far we become Members of the Devil's Kingdom, and have him for our Leader, and Guide. How watchful therefore ought we to be of our Hearts, how fearful of consenting to, or not enough resisting every Motion of these Elements within us, since every voluntary yielding to them, is opening the Kingdom of Darkness in our Souls, and giving the Devil Power to infuse his wretched Nature into us. And we have still further Reason for this Fear and Watchfulness, if it be considered, that as no one of the Elements of this outward World could be, or subsist, if the other three were not, because they are the mutual Cause of one another; so it is in these other Elements, if we live in one, we live in all; Selfishness cannot be, or subsist without Envy, nor Pride without Wrath and Selfishness, nor any one of the four, without carrying the other three in its Bosom; therefore we must have the same Fear of any one, as of them all, for the Name of every one is Legion.

Could we see, as we see outward Objects, what a dreadful Misery these four Elements bring upon our Souls, we should shun and fly from everything that gave Life and Strength to them, with more Earnestness, than from the most violent Evils that could threaten our Bodies; we should choose to burn in any Fire, rather than in that of our own Wrath and Pride, any Poverty of outward Life, rather than that of our own pinching Envy, any Prison, rather than to be shut up in our own dark Selfishness. For all outward Fires, Chains, Torments, Slaveries, Poverties, are but transient Shadows, of the tormenting, fiery, dark Slavery of an unredeemed Soul, left, and given up to these four Elements of Hell.

And the Reason why they are not a Hell to profligate Men now upon Earth, is, as has been said, because we now live in Flesh and Blood, under the cheering Influences of the Sun, and the Diversion and Amusement of outward Things, and in several Forms of Happiness, which our Imaginations play with in time. This Wandering of the Imagination through its own Inventions of Delight, hinders the poor Soul from feeling what it is, in its own Nature; and therefore, though ever so much a Slave of these Elements, it only feels or perceives the Torment of them by Fits, and on certain Occasions. And yet sometimes it is seen, that one or other of these Elements awakens so violently, as to become intolerable, and to give a true and plain Foretaste of the Condition and Nature of Hell in the Soul that feels it.

Here again, I cannot help observing by-the-by, the wondrous Excellency and Divine Nature of the Gospel Religion, which knowing our Fall to consist in this darkened Fire of the Soul, dwelling in these Elements of Hell, has set before us such amazing Representations of Humility, Meekness, and Universal Love, as the Imagination of Man could never have thought of; namely, the Humility, Meekness, and Lowliness of the Son of God, who left his Glory, to take upon him the Form of a Servant for our Sakes; the great Love of God towards us Sinners, in giving his only begotten Son to redeem us, and the Love of God the Son, in laying his Life down for us, that we might imitate this amazing Humility, Meekness, and Divine Love, and love one another as he has loved us. These are Mysteries of Love and Mercy that are set before us, to quench the fiery Wrath of our fallen Nature, and to compel us, if possible, to abhor our own dark Passions, and in Humility and Meekness become Lovers of God, and one another.

(19.) Now so far as we, by true Resignation to God, die to the Element of Selfishness and own Will, so far as by universal Love, we die to the Element of Envy, so far as by Humility we die to the Element of Pride, so far as by Meekness we die to the Element of Wrath, so far we get away from the Devil, enter into another Kingdom, and leave him to dwell without us in his own Elements.

These are not Fictions of a visionary Imagination, but sober Truths, spoken by the Word of God in Scripture, and written and engraven in the Book of every Man's own Nature.

No Man since the Fall, but is a living Witness to these Truths; to deny them, is to own and prove them: for we could not tell a Lie, or resist the Truth, but because we have this dark Enemy to Truth hidden in our Bosom.

(20.) Now the greatest Good that any Man can do to himself, is to give leave to this inward Deformity to show itself, and not to strive by any Art or Management, either of Negligence or Amusement, to conceal it from him. First, Because this Root of a dark Fire-life within us, which is of the Nature of Hell, with all its Elements of Selfishness, Envy, Pride, and Wrath, must be in some sort discovered to us, and felt by us, before we can enough feel, and enough groan under the Weight of our Disorder. Repentance is but a kind of Table-Talk, till we see so much of the Deformity of our inward Nature, as to be in some degree frightened and terrified at the Sight of it. There must be some kind of an Earthquake within us, something that must rend and shake us to the bottom, before we can be enough sensible, either of the State of Death we are in, or enough desirous of that Saviour, who alone can raise us from it.

A plausible Form of an outward Life, that has only learned Rules and Modes of Religion by Use and Custom, often keeps the Soul for some time at ease, though all its inward Root and Ground of Sin has never been shaken or molested, though it has never tasted of the bitter Waters of Repentance, and has only known the Want of a Saviour by Hearsay.

But Things cannot pass thus : Sooner or later, Repentance must have a broken, and a contrite Heart ; we must with our blessed Lord go over the Brook Cedron, and with him sweat great Drops of Sorrow, before he can say for us, as he said for himself, ' It is finished.'

Now, though this Sensibility of the Sinfulness of our inward Ground, is not to be expected to be the same in all, yet the Truth and Reality of it must, and will be in all, that do but give way to the Discovery of it ; and our Sinfulness would ever be in our Sight, if we did not industriously turn our Eyes from it. If we used but half the Pains, to find out the Evil that is hidden in us, as we do to hide the Appearance of it from others, we should soon find, that in the midst of our most orderly Life, we are in Death, and want a Saviour, to make our most apparent Virtues to be virtuous.

It is therefore exceeding good and beneficial to us, to discover this dark, disordered Fire of our Soul ; because when rightly known, and rightly dealt with, it can as well be made the Foundation of Heaven, as it is of Hell.

For when the Fire and Strength of the Soul, is sprinkled with the Blood of the Lamb, then its Fire, becomes a Fire of Light, and its Strength is changed into a Strength of triumphing Love, and will be fitted to have a Place amongst those Flames of Love, that wait about the Throne of God.

The Reason why we know so little of Jesus Christ, as our Saviour, Atonement, and Justification, why we are so destitute of that Faith in him, which alone can change, rectify, and redeem our Souls, why we live starving in the Coldness and Deadness of a formal, historical, hearsay-Religion, is this ; we are Strangers to our own inward Misery and Wants, we know not that we lie in the Jaws of Death and Hell ; we keep all things quiet within us, partly by outward Forms, and Modes of Religion and Morality, and partly by the Comforts, Cares and Delights of this World. Hence it is that we consent to receive a Saviour, as we consent to admit of the Four Gospels, because only Four are received by the Church. We believe in a Saviour, not because we feel an absolute want of one, but because we have been told there is one, and that it would be a Rebellion against God to reject him. We believe in Christ as our Atonement, just as we believe, that he cast seven Devils out of Mary Magdalene, and so are no more helped, delivered, and justified by believing that he is our Atonement, than by believing that he cured Mary Magdalene.

True Faith, is a coming to Jesus Christ to be saved, and delivered from a sinful Nature, as the Canaanitish Woman came to him, and would not be denied. It is a Faith of Love, a Faith of Hunger, a Faith of Thirst, a Faith of Certainty and firm Assurance, that in Love and Longing, and Hunger, and Thirst, and full Assurance, will lay hold on Christ, as its loving, assured, certain and infallible Saviour and Atonement.

It is this Faith, that breaks off all the Bars and Chains of Death and Hell in the Soul; it is to this Faith, that Christ always says, what he said in the Gospel, 'Thy Faith hath saved thee, thy Sins are forgiven thee; go in Peace.' Nothing can be denied to this Faith; all things are possible to it; and he that thus seeks Christ, must find him to be his Salvation.

On the other hand, all things will be dull and heavy, difficult and impossible to us, we shall toil all the Night and take nothing, we shall be tired with resisting Temptations, grow old and stiff in our Sins and Infirmities, if we do not with a strong, full, loving, and joyful Assurance, seek and come to Christ for every Kind, and Degree of Strength, Salvation and Redemption. We must come unto Christ, as the Blind, the Sick, and the Leprous came to him, expecting all from him, and nothing from themselves. When we have this Faith, then it is, that Christ can do all his mighty Works in us.

(21.) From the foregoing Account anyone may be supposed already to see the Nature and Necessity of Regeneration, or the New Birth. It is as necessary as our Salvation. By our Fall, our Soul has lost the Birth of the Son of God in it; by this Loss it is become a dark, wrathful, self-tormenting Root of Fire, shut up in the four hellish Elements of Selfishness, Envy, Pride, and Wrath; considered as a fallen Soul, it cannot stir one Step, or exert one Motion but in, and according to these Elements; therefore it is as necessary to have this Nature itself changed, and to be born again from above, as it is necessary to be delivered from Hell, and eternal Death.

For these Elements are Hell, and eternal Death itself, and not without, or standing at a distance from us, but Hell and Death springing up in the Forms, and Essences of our fallen Nature; they are the Serpent that is in us, and constitute that gnawing Worm which never dieth; for they mutually beget, and mutually torment each other, and so constitute a Worm, or worming Pain, that never dieth.

Now as this Hell, Serpent, Worm, and Death, are all within us, rising up in the Forms and Essences of our fallen Soul; so our Redeemer, or Regenerator, whatever it be, must be also equally within us, and spring up from as great a Depth in our Nature. Now the Scripture sufficiently tells us, that it is only the promised Seed of the Woman, the eternal Word, or Son of God made Man, that can bruise this Head, or kill this Life of the Serpent in us; therefore this Seed of the Woman must have its Dwelling in the Ground and Essence of our Nature, because the Serpent is there, that a new Life of a new Nature may arise from this Seed within us; and therefore it is plain, that Regeneration, or the New Birth, is, and can be no other thing, but the recovering of the Birth of the Son of God in the fallen Soul.

And this is what the Scripture means by the Necessity of our being born of God, born again from above, born of the Spirit. Hence also we see in the clearest Light, the Meaning of all those Passages of Scripture, where we are said to be in Christ, that Christ is in us;—that we must put on Christ;—that he must be formed in us;—that he is our Life;—that we must eat his Flesh and drink his Blood;—that he is our Atonement, that his Blood alone cleanseth us from all our Sins; that we have Life from him, as the Branches have Life from the Vine;—that he is our Justification, or Righteousness; that in him we are created again to good Works; that without him we can do nothing, and have no Life in us: All these, I say, and the like Sayings of Scripture, have a wonderful Congruity and Plainness in them, and fill the Mind with the most excellent and solid Truths, as soon as it is known, that Regeneration is absolutely necessary, and that this Regeneration signifies, the recovering of the Birth of the Son of God in the Soul.

(22.) And as it does this Justice to so great and concerning a Part of Scripture, so it sets the whole Scheme of the Christian Salvation in the most agreeable and engaging Light, and such as is enough even to compel everyone, to embrace it with the utmost Earnestness. The Mystery of this Salvation is still preserved, and yet hereby so unfolded, that every Man has as much Reason to desire to be born again, and to believe that the Son of God can only bring forth this Birth in him, as to believe that God made him, and can alone make him happy.

A Mediator, an Atonement, Regenerator, thus understood, must be as agreeable and desirable to every human Mind, and as much according to his own Wishes, as to be delivered from the Uneasiness and Disquiets of a Nature, which he finds himself not Master of, nor able to fix it in a State of better Enjoyment.

What is it that any thoughtful, serious Man could wish for, but to have a new Heart, and a new Spirit, free from the hellish, self-tormenting Elements of Selfishness, Envy, Pride, and Wrath? His own Experience has shown him, that nothing human can do this for him; can take away the Root of Evil that is in him; and it is so natural to him to think, that God alone can do it, that he has often been tempted to accuse God, for suffering it to be so with him.

Therefore to have the Son of God come from Heaven to redeem him by a Birth of his own Divine Nature in him, must be a way of Salvation, highly suited to his own Sense, Wants and Experience; because he finds, that his Evil lies deep in the very Essence and Forms of his Nature, and therefore can only be removed by the arising of a New Birth, or Life in the first Essences of it.

Therefore an inward Saviour, a Saviour, that is God himself, raising his own Divine Birth in the fallen Soul, has such an Agreeableness and Fitness in it, to do for him all that he wants, as must make every sober Man, with open Arms, ready and willing to receive such a Salvation.

(23.) Some People have an Idea, or Notion of the Christian Religion, as if God was thereby declared so full of Wrath against fallen Man, that nothing but the Blood of his only begotten Son could satisfy his Vengeance.

Nay, some have gone such Lengths of Wickedness, as to assert, that God had by immutable Decrees reprobated, and rejected a great Part of the Race of Adam, to an inevitable Damnation, to show forth and magnify the Glory of his Justice.

But these are miserable Mistakers of the Divine Nature, and miserable Reproachers of his great Love, and Goodness in the Christian Dispensation.

For God is Love, yea, all Love, and so all Love, that nothing but Love can come from him; and the Christian Religion, is nothing else but an open, full Manifestation of his universal Love towards all Mankind.*

As the Light of the Sun has only one common Nature towards all Objects that can receive it, so God has only one common Nature of Goodness, towards all created Nature, breaking forth in infinite Flames of Love, upon every Part of the Creation, and calling everything to the highest Happiness it is capable of.

God so loved Man, when his Fall was foreseen, that he chose him to Salvation in Christ Jesus, before the Foundation of the World. When Man was actually fallen, God was so without all Wrath towards him, so full of Love for him, that he sent his only begotten Son into the World to redeem him. Therefore God has no Nature towards Man, but Love, and all that he does to Man, is Love.

(24.) There is no Wrath that stands between God and us, but what is awakened in the dark Fire of our own fallen Nature; and ^{to} quench this Wrath, and not his own, God gave his only begotten Son to be made Man. God has no more Wrath in himself now, than he had before the Creation, when he had only himself to love. The precious Blood of his Son was not poured out to pacify himself (who in himself had no Nature towards Man but Love), but it was poured out, to quench the Wrath, and Fire of the fallen Soul, and kindle in it a Birth of Light, and Love.*

As Man lives, and moves, and has his Being in the Divine Nature, and is supported by it, whether his Nature be good or bad; so the Wrath of Man, which was awakened in the dark Fire of his fallen Nature, may, in a certain Sense, be called the Wrath of God, as Hell itself may be said to be in God, because nothing can be out of his Immensity; yet this Hell, is not God, but the dark Habitation of the Devil. And this Wrath which may be called the Wrath of God, is not God, but the fiery Wrath of the fallen Soul.

And it was solely to quench this Wrath, awakened in the human Soul, that the Blood of the Son of God was necessary, because nothing but a Life and Birth, derived from him into the human Soul, could change this darkened Root of a self-tormenting Fire, into an amiable Image of the holy Trinity, as it was at first created.

This was the Wrath, Vengeance, and vindictive Justice that wanted to be satisfied, in order to our Salvation; it was the Wrath and Fire of Nature and Creature kindled only in itself, by its departing from due Resignation, and Obedience to God.

When Adam and Eve went trembling behind the Trees, through Fear and Dread of God, it was only this Wrath of God awakened in them; it was a Terror, and Horror, and Shivering of Nature, that arose up in themselves, because the Divine Life, the Birth of the Son of God, which is the Brightness and Joy of the Soul, was departed from it, and had left it, to feel its own poor miserable State without it. And this may well enough be called the Wrath, and Justice of God upon them, because it was a Punishment, or painful State of the Soul, that necessarily followed their revolting from God.

But still there was no Wrath, or painful Sensation, that wanted to be appeased, or satisfied, but in Nature and Creature; it was only the Wrath of fallen Nature, that wanted to be changed, into its first State of Peace and Love. When God spoke to them, he spoke only Love; Adam, where art thou? And he called him, only to comfort him with a promised Redemption, through a Seed of the Woman, a Spark of the WORD of Life which should reign in him, and his Posterity, till all Enemies were under their Feet.

* See Spirit of Love, part ii., p. 50, &c.

God therefore is all Love, and nothing but Love and Goodness can come from him. He is as far from Anger in himself, as from Pain and Darkness. But when the fallen Soul of Man, had awakened in itself, a wrathful, self-tormenting Fire, which could never be put out by itself, which could never be relieved by the natural Power of any Creature whatsoever, then the Son of God, by a Love, greater than that which created the World, became Man, and gave his own Blood, and Life into the fallen Soul, that it might through his Life in it, be raised, quickened, and born again into its first State of inward Peace and Delight, Glory and Perfection, never to be lost any more. O inestimable Truths! precious Mysteries, of the Love of God, enough to split the hardest Rock of the most obdurate Heart, that is but able to receive one Glimpse of them! Can the World resist such Love as this? Or can any Man doubt, whether he should open all that is within him, to receive such a Salvation?

O unhappy Unbelievers, this Mystery of Love compels me in Love, to call upon you, to beseech and entreat you, to look upon the Christian Redemption in this amiable Light. All the Ideas that your own Minds can form of Love and Goodness, must sink into nothing, as soon as compared with God's Love and Goodness in the Redemption of Mankind.

I appeal to nothing but the State of your own Hearts and Consciences, to prove the Necessity of your embracing this Mystery of Divine Love. I will grant you all that you can suppose, of the Goodness of God, and that no Creature will be finally lost, but what Infinite Love cannot save.

But still, here is no Shadow of Security for Infidelity; and your refusing to be saved through the Son of God, whilst the Soul is in the redeemable State of this Life, may at the Separation of the Body, for aught you know, leave it in such a Hell, as the infinite Love of God cannot deliver it from. For, first, you have no Kind, or Degree of Proof, that your Soul is not that dark, self-tormenting, anguishing and imperishable Fire, above-mentioned, which has lost its own proper Light, and is only comforted by the Light of the Sun, till its Redemption be effected. Secondly, You have no Kind, or Degree of Proof, that God himself can redeem, or save, or enlighten this dark Fire-Soul, any other Way than, as the Gospel proposes, by the Birth of the Son of God in it. Therefore your own Hearts must tell you, that for aught you know, Infidelity, or the refusing of this Birth of the Son of God, may, at the End of Life, leave you in such a State of Self-torment, as the infinite Love of God can no way deliver you from.

You build much upon certain clear Ideas, founded in the Nature and Fitness of Things; but I beseech you to consider, that here in this great Point, on which all depends, you have no Ideas at all ; for you have not one clear, or even obscure Idea, that your Souls cannot be in this disordered State, or that they can be set into a right Order, without the Birth of the Son of God brought forth in them.

But to return.

(25.) What has been already said of the Nature of Regeneration, may sufficiently show us, how greatly it is mistaken, when it is said to signify only a moral Change of our Tempers and Inclinations.

Tempers and Inclinations are the Fruits of the new-born Nature, and not the Nature itself ; and as Fruits and Flowers are entirely distinct, and different from the Root and the Tree, and necessarily suppose the Root and the Tree, before they can be brought forth ; so good Tempers and Inclinations are as distinct from, and posterior to that Nature, which is to produce them, as its Fruits.

And if good Tempers rightly purified, could really arise, or be brought forth in us, without a Change first made in the Root, or Nature, that is to bring them forth, it would be no Absurdity to say, that Men may gather Grapes of Thorns, or Figs of Thistles.

But if our blessed Lord has declared this, to be contrary to the Nature of Things, and has further said, that the Tree must first be made good, before it can bring forth good Fruit ; then we can with sufficient ground of Assurance say, that our Nature must first be made good, its Root and Stock must be new made, or regenerated again, before it can bring forth good Fruits of moral Behaviour.

(26.) Angels are justly represented to us, as Flames of Love ; now every Flame must have a hidden Fire for its Root, from which it has its Subsistence ; and the spiritual flaming angelical Nature, must have a spiritual Fire concealed under it. Now let it be supposed, that in an Angel this Flame of Love was extinguished, and that there then only remained that inward Root of a spiritual Fire. Let it be supposed, that this spiritual Fire that has lost its Flame of Love cannot cease to be, and to be a fiery Spirit ; that it cannot, by any Properties of its Fire kindle itself in its first Flame of Love ; that all its own Stirrings can produce no one Thought, Motion or Desire, but what solely tends either to Selfishness, Envy, Pride, or Wrath ; that it can of itself no more come out of this State, than Fire locked up in a Flint, can of itself become a Flame ; could it be said, that this Angel had only lost some moral good Dispositions ? Must it not be said, to have lost that Nature, from which alone, its good

Tempers could proceed? Let it be further supposed, that God, by a Miracle of Love entered into the fiery Root, or Essence of this fallen Angel, and by a new Birth made it again to be a Flame of Love; could it be said, that it had gained nothing by this new Birth, but only a Change of some moral Tempers? Must it not be said to have gained a new Nature, a Flame of Love, instead of a dark Fire? and from this new Nature, its angelical and good Tempers can alone proceed.

(27.) But the representing the New-Birth, as signifying only a Change of moral Behaviour, is not only thus false and absurd in itself, but is also exceeding prejudicial to true Conversion, and saps the Foundation of our Redemption.

That it is highly prejudicial to true Conversion, is most evident from this, that it hides and suppresses the real Nature of our fallen State, and the true Greatness of the Love and Mercy of God in our Redemption. Now these two things it inevitably does in a great Degree, and therefore the Hurt that it does us, is more than can be well imagined.

And it is owing to this Cause more than to any other, that even amongst People of sober Behaviour, Religion is only a superficial thing, that has no true Depth in them, because they have never understood the true Depth of Religion, nor conceived, in how deep a manner, their Nature is concerned in it.

A Heathen may say, that by going to such a Neighbourhood, or marrying into such a Family, or falling into Acquaintance with such a Man, he obtained an entire Change in his moral Behaviour. Now if Christians are told, that this is the true, and only Meaning of their new Birth in Christ Jesus, namely, a great Change in their moral Behaviour, a thing that happens to Heathens, by the ordinary Occurrences of human Life, it is no wonder, that they live all their Lives, Strangers to true Humility, and Penitence, are never truly converted to God, or have any just Sense of his infinite Mercy, in the manner of their Salvation.

For if they are to believe, that to be born of God, born from above, born of the Spirit, born of an incorruptible Seed of the Word of God, signifies no more than this now mentioned, must not this naturally lead them, to take everything that is said of God and Christ, in the Mysteries of their Redemption, in a Sense as much below the Expression, as this of the New Birth? Must it not naturally lead them to think, that all Scripture-Doctrines, have more of Height and Mystery in the Expression, than in the thing itself? and that there is no need to fear, or hope, or believe, or trust, or resign, or love, or seek, or do, or bear, or give, or suffer according to the apparent Language, and plain Expression of the Gospel? And thus, the Words of him that spoke as never Man spoke, have all their Spirit and Life taken from them ; and we may be said to have the Words of Christ, as though we had them not.

(28.) The whole Nature of the Christian Religion, stands upon these two great Pillars, namely, the Greatness of our Fall, and the Greatness of our Redemption. In the full and true Knowledge of these Truths, lie all the Reasons of a deep Humility, Penitence, and Self-denial, and also all the Motives and Incitements, to a most hearty, sincere, and total Conversion to God. And everyone is necessarily more or less of a true Penitent, and more or less truly converted to God, according as he is more or less deeply, and inwardly sensible of these Truths.

And till these two great Truths, have awakened, and opened our Minds for the full Reception of the Divine Light ; all Reformation and Pretence to Amendment, is but a dead, and superficial thing, a mere Garment of Hypocrisy, to hide us from ourselves, and others.

Nothing can truly awaken a Sinner, but a true Sense, of the deep inward Possession, and Power that Sin has in him. When he sees, that Sin begins with his Being, that it rises up in the Essences of his Nature, and lives in the first Forms of his Life, and that he lies thus chained, and barred up in the very Jaws of Death and Hell, as unable to alter his own State, as to create another Creature ; when along with this Knowledge he sees that the free Grace of God, has provided him a Remedy equal to his Distress, that he has given him the holy Blood and Life of Jesus Christ, the true Son of God, to enter as deep into his Soul, as Sin has entered, to change the first Forms, and Essences of his Life, and bring forth in them a New Birth of a Divine Nature, which is to be an immortal Image of the Holy Trinity, everlastingly safe, blessed, and enriched in the Bosom of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost ; when a Man once truly knows, and feels these two Truths, he may be said, truly to know, and feel so much of the Power of Christ brought to Life in him. And there seems to be no more, that you need do outwardly for him. The Voice of his inward Teacher is so ever speaking, so ever heard, and loved within him, that you can say nothing to him outwardly of any Humility, Penitence, or Self-abasement, but what is less, than his own wounded Heart suggests to him. Humility can only be feigned or false, before this Conviction. He can now, no more take any Degree of Good to himself, than assume any Share in the Creation of Angels ; and all Pride or Self-esteem of any kind, seems to him to contain as great a Lie in it, as if he was to say, that he helped to create himself.

You need not tell him that he must turn unto God with all his Strength, with all his Heart, all his Soul, and all his Spirit ; for all that he can offer unto God, seems to him already less than the least of his Mercies towards him. He has so seen the exceeding Love of God, in the Manner and Degree of his Redemption, that it would be the greatest of Pain to him, to do anything, but upon a Motive of Divine Love. As his Soul has found God to be all Love, so it has but one Desire, and that is, to be itself all Love of God. This is the Conviction and Conversion, that necessarily arises from a full, inward Sensibility of these Truths ; the Soul is thereby wholly consecrated to God, and can like, or love, or do nothing, but what it can, some way or other, turn into a Service of Love towards him. But where the Weight and Power of these Truths is not livingly felt in the Heart, there it is not to be wondered at, if Religion has no Root, that is able to bring forth its proper Fruits.

And if the Generality of Christians, are a Number of dead, superficial Consenters to the History of Scripture-Doctrines, as unwilling to have the Spirit, as to part with the Form of their Religion ; loath to hear of any kind of Self-denial, fond of worldly Ease, Indulgence, and Riches, unwilling to be called to the Perfection of the Gospel, professing and practising Religion, merely as the Fashion and Custom of the Place they are in, require ; if some rest in outward Forms of Religion, others in certain Orthodoxy of Opinions ; if some expect to be saved by the Goodness of the Sect they are of, others by a certain Change of their outward Behaviour ; if some content themselves with a lukewarm Spirit, and others depend upon their own Works, these are Delusions, that must happen to those, who do not know and feel, in some good Degree, the true Nature of their own fallen Soul, and what a Kind of Regeneration can alone save them.

But all these Errors, Delusions, and false Rests, are cut up by the Root, as soon as a Man knows the true Reason and Necessity of his wanting so great a Saviour.

For he that knows the Ground and Essences of his Soul to be so many Essences of Sin, which form Sin as they form his Life, entirely incapable of producing any Good, till a Birth from God has arisen in them ; such a one can neither place his Redemption, where it is not, nor seek it coolly and negligently, where it is.

For knowing, that it is the Hell within his own Nature, that only wants to be destroyed, he is intent only upon bringing Destruction upon that ; and this secures him from false Religion.

And knowing, that this inward Hell cannot be destroyed, unless God becomes his Redeemer, or Regenerator in the Ground of his Soul ; this makes him believe all, expect all, and hope all from his Saviour Jesus Christ alone.

of Christian Regeneration. 163

And knowing that all this Redemption, or Salvation, is to be brought about in the inmost Ground and Depth of his Heart, this makes him always apply to God, as the God of his Heart; and therefore what he offers to God is his own Heart; and this keeps him always spiritually alive, wholly employed and intent upon the true Work of Religion, the fitting and preparing his Heart for all the Operations of God's Holy Spirit upon it. And so he is a true inward Christian, who, as our blessed Lord speaks, has the Kingdom of God within him, where the State and Habit of his Heart continually, thankfully, worships the Father in Spirit and in Truth.

(29.) Having sufficiently shown the Nature and Necessity of Regeneration, that it consists solely in the Restoration of the Birth of the Son of God in the human Soul, it must be plain from thence, that it is solely the Work of God, he being alone able to effect it; and that Man can have no other Share in it, but that of complying with the Terms, on which it is to be received of God.

It may be proper to inquire, When, and how this great Work is done in the Soul? ←

The Mercy and infinite Goodness of God, has chosen all Mankind to Salvation in Jesus Christ, before the Foundation of the World. Now this eternal Decree of God, took place upon the Fall of Adam; and as he was admitted into the Terms of Christian Salvation immediately after his Transgression, so all Mankind, as being in his Loins, were taken into the same Covenant of Grace, and what was then done to Adam, was done to him, as the common Parent of Mankind.

The Bruiser of the Serpent given to Adam, as his Saviour, was not a verbal Promise of something only, that should come to pass in future Ages to redeem him, and which left his Soul in the same State of inward Darkness, Disorder, and Weakness in which it found him; but it was a redeeming Power, which by the Mercy of God, was treasured up in his fallen Nature, which was to resist and overcome the Wrath and Death, and awakened Nature of Hell, that was in his Soul; and from that Time of God's accepting him to a Salvation, through the Seed of the Woman, he was saved by the Power of Christ within him, as really, as those that lived, and believed in Christ, after he had been incarnate. As nothing can save the last Man, or become his Righteousness, or Redemption, but the Divine Nature of Jesus Christ, derived into his Soul, so nothing else could be Righteousness, Redemption, or Salvation to the first Man.

All Men therefore that ever were, or shall be descended from Adam, have Jesus Christ for their Saviour, as Adam had, they receive the Promise made to him, and receive by that Promise, that which he received by it, they have a Seed of the Woman, an incorruptible Seed of Life, springing up in the first Essences of their Life, which is to oppose and resist the Seed of the Serpent, or the diabolical Nature that is in them also. And therefore no Son of Adam is without a Saviour, or can be lost, or entirely overcome by the Evil, that the Fall has brought upon him, but by his own turning away from this Saviour within him, and giving himself up to the Suggestions, and Workings of the evil Nature, that is in him.

(30.) This Mystery of an inward Power of a Salvation hidden in all Men, has had just such degrees of Obscurity and Manifestation, as the Nature, and Birth, and Person of the Messiah have had; that is, as the Nature and Person of Jesus Christ, as an Atonement, Saviour and Redeemer of Mankind, were for several Ages of the World only obscurely pointed at, and typified by the Religion of the Jews; so this Seed of a New Birth, or saving Power of Christ hidden in the Souls of all Men, was, through the same Ages, under the same Veil, and Obscurity.

But when the eternal Son of God became incarnate, and manifested to the World the Mysteries of his Nature, Person, and Office, when it was publicly declared, that he was the Life and Light of the World, the only Source of Goodness in every Creature, the 'Light that lighteth every Man that cometh into the World'; that we must all be born again of him, be born again from above, be born of the Spirit, and that everyone was to profess the owning, seeking and desiring this Divine Birth, by a Baptism into the Name, or Nature, of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; then it became plainly manifest, what Christianity was from the Beginning, and in what Manner Jesus Christ was the Saviour of Adam, and what it was that he received, by receiving a Bruiser of the Serpent, into the first Essences of his Life.

Therefore when Jesus Christ came into the World, declaring the Necessity of a New Birth, to be owned, and sought, by a Baptism into the Name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; this was not a new Kind, or Power of Salvation, but only an open Declaration of the same Salvation, that had been till then, only typified, and veiled under certain Figures and Shadows, as he himself had been. And Men were called not to a new Faith in him, as then first become their inward Life, and Light, but to a more open and plain Acknowledgment of him, who from the Beginning, had been the one Life and Light, and only Salvation of the first Man, and all that were to descend from him.

(31.) Now the Things required on our Part, towards the raising and bringing forth this new Birth in us, are Repentance, and

of Christian Regeneration. 165

Faith. These are to be the continual Support of our Regeneration, carrying it on to the End of our Lives.

But now though Repentance and Faith are to bring forth, and carry on our Regeneration; yet they are themselves the Effect and Fruit of it, viz., of that first Seed or Light of Life, which God willed to be in Adam.

For had not God of his own free Grace, chosen Adam and Eve to Salvation in Jesus Christ, by doing inwardly in the deep, and darkened Essences of their fallen Souls, something like that, which he did to the 'Darkness which was upon the Face of the 'Deep,' when he said, 'Let there be Light' in it; Adam and Eve, and all their Posterity, had been inwardly, as to their Souls, only of the Nature of the Devils, full of their dark and fiery Dispositions, shut up in their Elements, incapable of any Thought or Motion, but what tended to Selfishness, Envy, Pride, and Wrath.

Neither they, nor any of their Posterity, could have brought forth any Degree of Humility, Resignation, Love, Faith, Hope, or Desire of God; but had lived hardened and fixed, in the abovenamed Elements of Hell, full of their own perverse Will, without all Conscience, or Instinct of Goodness.

And therefore when God of free Grace, provided that falling Man should fall into a State of Redemption, that is, into a Possibility of being God's Creature again; this was effected by God's treasuring up, or preserving in him a Seed of the Woman, a remaining Spark of his first Divine Life; which first Divine Life, was then, Christ in him, his full Birth of Glory, as certainly, as Christ in us, is now our Hope of Glory.

St. Paul says, 'God hath chosen us in Christ Jesus, before the 'Foundation of the World.' Now from this eternal, foreseeing Goodness of God towards Mankind, it is, that a Root or Remains of the first Divine Life, called a Seed of the Woman, the ingrafted WORD, a Kingdom of God, a Pearl of great Price, a Treasure hid in a Field, was fore-ordained to be preserved, and treasured up, though hidden under that Death, which Adam died in Paradise. And thence it was, that the Goodness of God, could direct distressed Adam to this Comfort, viz., 'The Seed of 'the Woman shall bruise the Head of the Serpent'; not a foreign Seed, to be sown into thee from without, but a remaining, preserved Seed of thy first Life of Christ, which through the Divine Love, for thee, is hidden, and securely treasured up under thy own fallen earthly Nature, as a Pearl hidden in thy own Field, a Principle of Holiness, a Touch of Love, the Pledge of Immortality, and Fund of everlasting Happiness. For this heavenly Pearl, called by St. Peter, 'the incorruptible Seed of

'the WORD,' shall surely come forth again out of its state of hiddenness and Death; shall quicken and revive into its first Glory, through Christ, who is, and ever shall be, the RESURRECTION, and LIFE of all that, which was hid and lost in the Death, that Adam died.

(32.) And here it is, that we see again how 'God is Love,' universal Love towards all Mankind, having put all into a State of Redemption. For if all Men, as Sons of Adam, are by the free Grace of God made Sons of the second Adam, and, as such, have a Seed of Life in them from him, in order to be raised up to a Perfection of the new Man in Christ Jesus; and if this Seed of a New Birth, or Light of Life, is the general, and preventing Grace of all Men, that enables them so to act, as to obtain God's assisting Grace, in the Renewal of their Hearts and Minds, then it is a glorious and undeniable Truth, that there is no Partiality in God, no Election of one People to Mercy in Christ Jesus, and Dereliction of another to their own helpless Misery, but that all Men, have a general Call, and a general Capacity to obtain their Salvation; and that as certainly as all fell and died in Adam, so all were restored in his Restoration.

(33.) Now as the first Power and Ability of our having one good Thought, or Desire of turning to God in Penitence and Faith, is the Effect of this first Seed of a New Birth in all Men; so this Seed of a New Birth is *quicken*ed, *strengthen*ed, and brought forth to its full Stature or highest Degree of Perfection, by Acts, or rather Habits of Repentance and Faith.

So that Faith and Repentance are the Life of the new Man, or the Acts by which it grows, and is brought forth into its proper State of Perfection. There is no Difference between Faith and Works, in this inward new-born Man. Its Faith is its Works, and its Works are its Faith. For Faith is its turning to God, and its turning to God, is its Aversion, or turning from all Evil; so that Faith and good Works, are only two Considerations of one and the same thing, or of one and the same State of mind, in the new-born Man.

(34.) This Seed of the New Birth, that is God's free, and fore-ordained Gift to Man, as the Power that is to redeem him, is the Reason and Foundation of that Language in Scripture, of a new, inward and spiritual Man, and of an old, natural, and outward rational Man, and of the Enmity between the one and the other; in which Enmity, the whole Warfare, and Trial of the Christian Life, consist.

The Seed of the New Birth, is the inward and new Man, which is to grow up into that spiritual and holy Man, which was first created in Paradise.

of Christian Regeneration. 167

This inward Man, is alone the Subject of Religion and Divine Grace; he only is of God, and heareth God's Word; he only hath Eyes to see, and Ears to hear, and a Heart to conceive the Things of God.

This is he alone, that is born of God, and cannot sin, because he has no Sin in his Nature. This is he alone, that overcometh the World, because he is of a Divine Nature, and is both contrary to the World, and above it. This is he alone, that can love his Brother as himself, because the Love of God is alone alive, and abideth in him.

The old, natural Man, or the rational Man of this World, is the dark fallen Nature, enlightened only, and solely with the Light of this outward World; it is the diabolical Nature, only softened with Flesh and Blood, quieted and comforted with the Light of the Sun, by this Light, he can only see the outward Images of Things, whether Divine or human, and can only reason, dispute, and wrangle about his own shadowy Images, but can know no more of God, and the Things of God, than such dead Images can represent unto him.

The old or natural Man, may be an Historian, a Poet, an Orator, a Critic, a Politician, or worldly wise Man, &c., all this Skill and Art lies within his reach; the Fire of his Soul, kindled only by the Light of the Sun, may do all this. But notwithstanding all these Trappings and Endowments, he is wholly shut up in his own dark Prison of Selfishness, Envy, Pride, and Wrath; his Virtues, Piety, and Goodness can be only such, as give no Disturbance to these four Elements of the fallen Nature.

He is an Animal, full of earthly, sensual Passions and Tempers, and can only favour such things as can gratify their Nature.

Here, and here only, lies the true, solid, and immutable Distinction, between the old and the new Man, and the plain Reason, why the Life of the one, is the Death of the other.

(35.) Now in this essential Difference, between the old and the new Man, we may at one View, see a clear and solid Ground of Distinction, between what is called a bare historical, and superficial Faith, which cannot save the Soul, but leaves it a Slave to Sin, and that living and real Faith, which effecteth our Salvation, and sets us in the glorious Liberty of the Sons of God.

Human Reason, or the natural Man of this Life, can believe and assent to this Truth, that Christ is our Saviour, and that we are to be saved by a Righteousness from him, as easily, as it can assent to any other Relation, or Matter of Fact. But whilst it is human Reason only, that assents to this Truth, little or nothing is done to the Soul by it; the Soul is under much the same Power of Sin as before, because only the Notion, or Image, or

History of the Truth is taken in by it; and Reason of itself can take in no more.

But when the Seed of the New Birth, called the inward Man, has Faith awakened in it, its Faith is not a Notion, but a real, strong, essential Hunger, an attracting, or magnetic Desire of Christ, which as it proceeds from a Seed of the Divine Nature in us, so it attracts and unites with its Like, it lays hold on Christ, puts on the Divine Nature, and in a living and real Manner, grows powerful over all Sins, and effectually works out our Salvation.

And therefore it is justly called a Divine Faith, not only because of its Divine Effects, but chiefly because it arises from that, which is Divine within us, and by its attracting Hunger, and Thirst after that Fountain of Life, from whence it came, becomes essentially united with it; breathes by that SPIRIT, and lives by that WORD which eternally proceeds out of the Mouth of God. Of this Faith alone it is, that our Lord speaks, when he says, 'whoso eateth my Flesh and drinketh my Blood, hath eternal Life.'

When this Faith is thus awakened, and sprung up in the inward Man, then we may be said to have a saving Faith, or a saving Knowledge of Jesus Christ.

(36.) From these two Sorts of Faith here mentioned, we may very plainly see and perceive, why there is such a Misunderstanding between two Sorts of Believers, and why they speak a Language so unsatisfactory, and disgustful to one another.

Busy inquisitive Reason, learned enough in its own Sphere, grammatically skilled in Scripture-Knowledge, looking no further, or deeper into the Things of God, than a Dictionary can guide it, cannot bear the Language of the regenerate, inward Man, but condemns it as fanatical, and enthusiastic; not considering, that this rational Man, which is made the Judge of Salvation, is that very individual old Man with his Deeds, that we are by the Religion of the Gospel, to be saved, and delivered from; and that we should have no occasion for a new Seed of a Divine Life in us, no occasion to be born again of God, but because this natural Man of human Reason, can neither see nor hear, nor feel, nor taste, nor understand the Things of God, as they are in themselves.

(37.) From this Difference between the new, and the old Man, which is a Difference as real, as that between Heaven and Earth, several Lessons of great Instruction may be learnt.

When Religion is in the Hands of the mere natural Man, he is always the worse for it; it adds a bad Heat to his own dark Fire, and helps to inflame his four Elements of Selfishness, Envy, Pride, and Wrath. And hence it is, that worse Passions, or a worse Degree of them, are to be found in Persons of great religious Zeal, than in others that make no Pretences to it. History also furnishes us with Instances of Persons of great Piety and Devotion, who have fallen into great Delusions, and deceived both themselves and others. The Occasion of their Fall was this; it was, because they made a Saint of the natural Man. My Meaning is, they considered their whole Nature, as the Subject of Religion, and Divine Graces; and therefore their Religion was according to the Workings of their whole Nature, and the old Man was as busy, and as much delighted in it, as the New. And hence it was, that Persons of this Stamp, all inflamed, as they seemed to be, with Piety, yet overlooked in their own Lives, such Errors of moral Behaviour, as the first Beginners in Religion, dare not allow themselves in.

Others again, perhaps truly awakened by the Spirit of God, to devote themselves wholly to Piety, and the Service of God, yet making too much haste to have the Glory of Saints, the Elements of fallen Nature, Selfishness, Envy, Pride and Wrath, could secretly go along with them. For to seek for Eminence, and Significancy in Grace, is but like seeking for Eminence and Significancy in Nature. And the old Man can relish Glory, and Distinction in Religion, as well as in common Life, and will be content to undergo as many Labours, Pains, and Self-denials, for the sake of religious, as for the sake of secular Glory. There is nothing safe in Religion, but in such a Course of Behaviour, as leaves nothing for corrupt Nature to feed, or live upon; which can only then be done, when every Degree of Perfection we aim at, is a Degree of Death to the Passions of the natural Man.

(38.) It may now perhaps be said, if Regeneration is so great a Matter, if it signifies the Restoring to the Soul its first paradisaical Light, or the Renewing of the Birth of the Son of God in it; surely so great a Thing, and transacted within us, must not only be known and felt, when it is brought about, but must be known and felt in some strange, and extraordinary Manner.

It may be answered, first, That all Mankind may in a certain and good Sense, be said to be in some degree Sharers of this Regeneration, as having in them a Seed of Life, that is contrary to their corrupt Nature; which Seed they partake of, as Heirs of the first Grace, granted to Adam in the ingrafted Word. This first Seed, or Light of Life, which lighteth every Man that cometh into the World, is the first Seed of the New Birth; which Birth stands in this Life, as a Tree or Plant in the Soil, and is only in a State of growing during this Life. For was the New Birth, with regard both to Soul and Body, ever totally finished in anyone, he would be as certainly in Paradise, as Adam was, and be as much above the Power of the Elements of this World, as Adam was at his Creation. Secondly, All Christians are in a higher and further State of Regeneration, by the Grace of Baptism into the Name of the Holy Trinity. By Baptism, they profess themselves Disciples of Jesus Christ, in his Kingdom of Grace, to seek for Life, Righteousness, and Sanctification in him; to live by his Spirit, in Conformity to his Doctrine, Life, Sufferings and Death, in a continual Resistance of the Corruptions of their Nature, the Temptations of the World and the Devil.

This Profession faithfully kept, is their Progress in the Way of Regeneration. Some only outwardly make this Profession, and so only have the Name of Christians. Some make it in a much better manner; yet being very defective in their Conformity to the Life and Doctrines of Jesus, live and die far short of that Purification, or Renewal of the inward Man, which the Religion of the Gospel proposes.

Others renouncing all for Christ, and following his Counsels, as well as his Precepts, arrive at high Degrees of Regeneration, and experience such a Life in Christ, or such a Manifestation of Christ in them, as others less faithful to their Master, must be Strangers to.

To ask therefore by what strange or extraordinary Effects, the Work of the New Birth is to be known, and felt to be done in the Soul, is a very improper, and useless Question. Because Regeneration is not to be considered as a Thing, done, but as a State that is progressive, or as a Thing, that is continually doing.

(39.) If it be further asked, What are then the certain Marks, or Effects of a highly advanced Degree of Regeneration, which Christians are to look for?

It may be answered, This Question is not useful: First, Because there is no Obligation upon anyone, to know and feel the Height, or Advancement of his State. Secondly, Because the Inquiry after such Knowledge, and inward Feeling of it, is very dangerous. Thirdly, Because it can be no hurt to anyone's Piety and Holiness, to take it to be lower than it really is. Fourthly, Because nothing keeps up our Progress in the Way of Regeneration, let it be in what Degree it will in us, but our constant Fidelity in conforming to the Doctrines, Life, and Death of Jesus Christ. Fifthly, Because this Question directs, and turns People's Minds to the seeking after certain Effects, merely from Ideas and Descriptions of them, when their Minds should only be set upon the Causes that are to produce them.

Thus, supposing it to be true, that an Assurance of Salvation, or Continuance in Grace, was a genuine Effect of a certain Degree of Regeneration; Christians should not be directed to seek for this Assurance, as a certain Mark or Effect of such a Degree of Regeneration, for this is directing them to seek for this Effect from their ownelves, and not from the State of their Regeneration.

For their Minds and Imaginations will be naturally upon the Stretch, how to work themselves up into this Pitch of Assurance, and so it will be something, that they have seized upon by their own Will, and not received as the genuine Effects of their State in Grace. Whereas, supposing (but not granting) this Assurance to be the proper Effect of a certain Degree of the New Birth, yet it is an Effect that is not to be sought for beforehand, but only to be received when its proper Cause has produced it.

(40.) It is a great Error, to fix any certain Marks or Effects to such a Degree of Regeneration; for its Effects will be various in different Persons, from a Variety of Causes, both on the Part of God, and Man.

The truly pious Christian, in whom the Holy Ghost dwelleth as in his Temple, is indeed in a State of high Acquiescence in God; but he wants no more to have this Acquiescence turned into an Assurance of his own Mind, that he cannot fall from his State of Grace, than he wants to have the Promises of God made sure to him, by the Promise of some mortal Man.

And if it pleases God to impress strongly and plainly upon his Mind, that his Salvation is secured, he receives it, as he does everything from God, with a grateful Mind; yet will he not rest in it, or receive it as a Sign of his high Regeneration, but rather as a Sign that God saw his Weakness stood in need of it; and so will pass over it, and return to an humble, total Resignation of his whole Soul, Spirit, and Body, both for Time and Eternity, into the Hands of God, through Faith in the Merits of his Saviour Jesus Christ.

Least of all can such a one call peremptorily upon others, for such an Assurance as he has had, or condemn their Resignation and Peace in the want of it; he will be more afraid of thus meddling with the Things of God, than of being a Busy-body in other Men's Matters.

(41.) The only useful Question in this Matter, is this, How a Man may know that he is in the Way of Regeneration, that he is spiritually alive, and growing in the inward and new Man?

It may be answered, Just as the State, Nature, and Life of the natural Man makes itself to be known, and felt. The Soul of Man, or that which is the Subject both of the old and new Nature, is not two, but one Soul. The Fire of the Soul, or that spiritual Fire which is the Soul itself, is kindled or enlightened by the Light of the Sun; this makes the natural Man, and from whence the Imagination, Will, Desires, Thoughts, and Inclinations of the natural Life arise.

172 The Grounds and Reasons

The same individual Fire-soul, enlightened by the Son of God, makes the true new Man, from which Soul thus enlightened, the Imagination, Will, Desires, Thoughts, and Inclinations of the New Man arise. So that the same Proofs are to be expected in both Cases, the spiritual Man is to know that he is alive in the same manner, as the natural Man knows and feels his Life. In these things, in the Imagination, Will, Desires, Thoughts, and Inclinations, consists the Life of each Nature; and what are more than these, are to be considered as the outward Fruits and Effects of each Nature.

(42.) Now though the natural Life in all Men is one and the same, yet there are under it Variety of Complexions, which makes Men of the same Nature, almost infinitely different from one another. Now the Matter is just thus with the spiritual Man, or in the inward World. As many different Complexions arise in the Soul, enlightened by the Son of God, as in the Soul, enlightened by the outward Light of this World.

For the outward World is but a Glass, or Representation of the inward; and everything and Variety of things in temporal Nature, must have its Root, or hidden Cause, in something that is more inward.

It is therefore a well-grounded, and undeniable Truth, that the new spiritual Man hath his particular Complexion, as sure as the outward and natural Man hath. Hence it is, that there has been so great a Difference, in the Form and Character of the most eminent and faithful Servants of God; one could think of nothing but Penitence and penitential Austerities; another all inflamed with the Love of God, could think or speak of nothing else; some have been driven into a holy Solitude, living as John the Baptist; others have been wholly taken up in Works of Charity, loving their Neighbour even more than themselves. A great Variety of this kind, has been always found amongst those, who were most truly devoted to God, whose Variety, is not only not hurtful in itself, nor displeasing to God, but is as much according to his Will, and the Designs of his Wisdom, as the Difference between Cherubims and Seraphims, or the Variety of the Stars in the Firmament.

Every Complexion of the inward Man, when sanctified by Humility, and suffering itself to be tuned, and struck, and moved by the Holy Spirit of God, according to its particular Frame and Turn, helps mightily to increase that Harmony of Divine Praise, Thanksgiving, and Adoration, which must arise from different Instruments, Sounds, and Voices. To condemn this Variety in the Servants of God, or to be angry at those who have not served him, in the Way that we have chosen for ourselves, is but too plain a Sign, that we have not enough renounced the Elements of Selfishness, Pride, and Anger.

(43.) From this Variety of Complexions both in the inward and outward Man, we may make some useful Observations. And the first may be this, that every Man whose Complexion is strong in him, as to one particular Kind, is vehemently inclined to imprint the same upon others, and that others of the same Kind, are naturally disposed to catch and receive it from him. But I shall consider this Matter only with regard to Religion. Let it be supposed that Men of a certain Complexion, have taken upon them to try the religious State of others by these Questions: Are you sure that you should be able to die a Martyr? Do you find certain strong Resolutions, not in your Head, or your Brain, but in your inward Man, that you would not refuse a Martyrdom of any kind? Have you the Witness of the Spirit within you, bearing witness with your Spirit, that you are in this State?

Now, it is beyond all Question, that an Examination of this Kind, or a Demand of such a Faith, can have no better Foundation than Complexion. Who do you think would be most likely to come into this Faith? First, It would be those that were most unlikely to keep it. It would be those who knew the least of themselves, and whose Piety had more of Heat than of Light in it. It would be those, whose outward Man was of the same Complexion, that was Sanguine, capable of a false Fire, and willing to have the Glory of Resolutions, and fine Persuasions at so easy a Rate. Let it now be supposed, that People of another Complexion should put such Questions as these: Do you know and feel that all your Sins are forgiven you? Do you know when and where, or at what Time, and in what Place, you received this Forgiveness? Do you know when and where you ceased to be one of those Sinners called to Repentance? And became one of those Whole, that need not a Physician? Have you an absolute Assurance of your Salvation, and that you cannot possibly fall from your State of Grace? Now who may be thought to be the most likely to come into this Religion?

First, Not he who is deeply humble, that abhors Self-justification, and truly knows the Free Grace of God. Such a one would say, I believe the Forgiveness of Sins, with as much Assurance, as I believe there is a God; I believe that Jesus Christ does now to all those who have a true, and full Faith in him, that which he did to those who so believed in him, when he was upon Earth. That he forgives their Sins, as immediately, as certainly, as fully, as when he said by an outward Voice, 'Thy Sins are forgiven thee.' I believe that in this Faith lies all our Strength, and Possibility of growing up in the inward Man, and recovering that Image and Likeness of God, in which we were created; that to this Faith all things are possible, and that by this Faith, every Enemy we have, whether he be within us, or without us, may, and must be entirely overcome. I believe, that to Repentance and Faith in Christ, Salvation is made as secure, and as absolutely assured, as Paradise was made secure to the Thief upon the Cross, by the express Word of our Saviour. I believe that my own Sins, were they greater, and more than the Sins of the whole World, would be wholly expiated, and taken away by my Faith, in the Blood and Life of my blessed Saviour.

But if I now want to add something of my own to this Faith, if this great and glorious Faith is defective, and saves me not, till I can add my own Sense, and my own Feeling to it, at such a Time or Place, is not this saying in the plainest Manner, that Faith alone cannot justify me? Is not this making this Faith in the Blood of Christ defective, and insufficient to my Salvation, till a Self-Satisfaction, an own-Pleasure, an own-Taste, are joined with it? Might it not better be said, that Faith could not justify me till it had Works, than that it cannot justify me without these inward Workings, Feelings, Witnessings, of my own Mind, Sense, and Imagination? Is there not likely to be a more hurtful Self-seeking, a more hurtful Self-Confidence, a more hurtful Self-Trust, a more dangerous Self-Deceit, in making Faith to depend upon these inward Workings and Feelings, than in making it depend upon outward good Works of our own?

Secondly, No one who was truly resigned unto God in all things, would come into these Questions; for to be resigned unto God in all things, and yet seek to be not resigned to him, in these great Matters above mentioned, is a Contradiction.

Such a one would say, I seek not to have an inward Sense and Feeling of the Certainty of these things, because that would be departing from that pure, entire, full, and naked Faith in God, and Resignation of myself to him, which alone can justify me in his Sight, and make me capable of the Operations of his Holy Spirit. He can only then, do all his good Pleasure in me, when I have no own Will, no Self-seeking; this total Resignation of myself to him, is the one only immediate Disposition, or Capability of enjoying God himself with all his infinite Treasures. Particular Impressions, sensible Convictions, strong Tastes, high Satisfactions, though they may be often the good Gifts of God, yet if they are much sought for, or rested in, they minister Food to a spiritual Self-love, and Self-seeking, and lay the Foundation of spiritual Pride; and so become a Wall of Partition between God and the Soul. For the Soul may be as fully fixed in Selfish- ness, through a Fondness of Sensible Sweetness, pious Motions, and delightful Enjoyments in spiritual things, as by a Fondness for earthly Satisfactions.

of Christian Regeneration. 175

Thirdly, No one, whose Heart was truly touched by a pure and perfect Love of God, could come into these Questions. For this Love cannot seek for Self-comfort in the Answer of such Questions as these.

Such a Person would say, My Religion consists in living wholly to my Beloved, according to his Satisfaction, and not my own. What God wills, that I will; what God loves, that I love; what pleases God, that pleases me. I have no desire to know anything of myself, or to feel anything in myself, but that I am an Instrument in the Hands of God, to be, to do, and suffer, according to his good Pleasure. I am content to know that I love and rejoice in God alone, that he is what he is, and that I am what he pleases to make of me, and do with me.

(44.) Seeing then it appears that the truly humble Man, the Man that is wholly resigned to God, and the pure Lover of him, are not likely to come into the Religion of these Questions, let us now see who may be supposed ready to receive it.

First, All young Persons, whose Passions had not yet been much awakened, or spent their Fire; who had but little Experience of themselves, and the Deceitfulness of their own Hearts; for everything in their Nature, would help them to like, love, and obtain such an Assurance, Strength of Conviction, inward Feeling, as is here required.

Secondly, All restless Self-Lovers, who were uneasy with themselves, and everything else, who could find nothing in Religion, or common Life, that enough pleased them; these would be easily persuaded to work themselves up into a Belief, that their Sins were forgiven them at such a Time, or that Christ took an entire Possession of them at such a Place. For hearing that true Religion consisted solely in this, and that they only wanted it, because of their want of Faith in it, they would naturally embrace this, as the shortest Way to Comfort and Rest in themselves, in their own Self-convictions.

Thirdly, All Persons of a sanguine, tender, and imaginary Complexion, would be likely to strike in with the Religion of these Questions. For such Persons receiving everything strongly, and having a Power of believing and imagining almost in any degree, as they please, they would not find it hard, to comply with Doctrines so suited to their Nature, and which indulged that in them, which wanted most to be indulged, a sanguine Imagination.

Fourthly, All those who so blaspheme God, as to make him

from all Eternity absolutely to elect some to an irresistible Salvation, and absolutely to reprobate others to an unavoidable Damnation. For there could be no subsisting under such an horrid Belief as this, but by those, who through a blind Partiality, strong Bias of Self-love, and Self-esteem, can work themselves up into a full Assurance, inward infallible Feeling, that they are in the Number of the absolutely elected from all Eternity.

Lastly, These Questions are a great Bait to all kinds of Hypocrites, who must find themselves much inclined to enter into a Religion, where they may pass immediately for Saints, upon their own Testimony, and stand in the highest Rank of Piety, and of Interest in Christ, merely by their own laying Claim to it.

(45.) Suppose it was to be asked Christians, as necessary to their Salvation, Do you believe and know that you have the Self-denial and Mortification of John the Baptist? Have you an inward Conviction that you have a Zeal equal to that of St. Paul? Have you an Assurance that your Love is full as high as that of John the Evangelist? That your Penitence is equal to that of Mary Magdalene?

Could these Questions, with any Warrant from Scripture, be put to all Christians, as Terms of their Salvation?

Yet there is as much Foundation in the Gospel, for putting such Questions as these, and making the Salvation of Christians to depend upon them, as for asking them, on the same Account, When, and where, they felt their Sins were forgiven them? When and where they felt Christ to take an entire Possession of them? When and where they felt themselves made sure of their Salvation, and incapable of falling from their State of Grace?

For what is all this but calling, hastening, and stirring up People to seek for Self-Justification, and compelling them to think highly, and affirm rashly of themselves, in order to be saved? Why might it not be as well to call upon them to say, I feel myself as good as St. Paul, as pious as St. John, as to say, I feel that my Salvation is secure, and that I cannot fall from my State of Grace? Is not this making Faith in one's self, as good, as necessary, and as beneficial to us, as Faith in Christ?

Would it not be as well, nay better, to make good Works of our own, necessary to true Faith, than to make Self-Justification, which is not a good Work, to be the very Essence and Perfection of it?

The Matter will not be much mended by saying, that this Feeling and Assurance is acknowledged to be the pure Gift of God, and so cannot be called our own, or our own Justification. For if I have not this Gift of God, till I pronounce it myself, till my own Feeling and Assurance confirms it to me, I am self-justified, because my Justification arises, from what I feel and declare of myself.

(46.) How strangely must they have read the Gospel, who can take a naked implicit Faith, and an humble total Resignation of our Spirit, State, and Life, into the Mercy and Goodness of God, to be not only a poor and imperfect, but a reprobate State; or that a Man has no true and saving Faith, till it is an infallible own-Feeling, and Self-Assurance? What must such People think of our Saviour dying upon the Cross, with these Words in his Mouth; 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!' Will they say that this is a dangerous State? Is the Spirit of Christ here to be renounced? Will they say, that no new-born Christian can die in this Manner? Or that if he does, he is not in a State of Salvation?

To know no more, and to seek to know no more of our Salvation, than we can know by an implicit Faith, and absolute Resignation of ourselves to God in Christ Jesus, is the true saving Knowledge of Christ, and such as keeps us in the highest Degree of Fitness to receive our perfect Salvation.

(47.) I hope it will here be observed, that I no way depreciate, undervalue, or reject any particular Impressions, strong Influences, delightful Sensations, or heavenly Foretastes in the inward Man, which the holy Spirit of God may at times bestow upon good Souls; I leave them their just Worth, I acknowledge them to be the good Gifts of God, as special Calls, and Awakenings to forsake our Sins, as great Incitements to deny ourselves, and take up our Cross, and follow Christ with greater Courage, and Resolution.

They may be as beneficial, and useful to us in our spiritual Life, as other Blessings of God, such as Prosperity, Health, happy Complexion, and the like. But then, as outward Blessings, remarkable Providences, religious Complexion, and the like, may be very serviceable to awaken us, and excite our Conversion to God, and much assist the spiritual Life; so they may very easily have a contrary Effect, serve to fill us with Pride, and Self-satisfaction, and make us esteem ourselves, as greater Favourites of God, than those that want them. Who may yet be led to a higher Degree of Goodness, be in a more purified State, and stand nearer to God in their poor, naked, and destitute Condition, than we in the midst of great Blessings.

It is just thus with regard to those inward Blessings of the spiritual Life. They are so many Spurs, Motives, and Incitements to live wholly unto God; yet they may instead of that, fill us with Self-satisfaction and Self-esteem, and prompt us to despise others that want them, as in a poor, mean, and reprobate

State; who yet may be higher advanced, and stand in a nearer Degree of Union with God, by Humility, Faith, Resignation, and pure Love, in their inward Poverty and Emptiness, than we who live high upon spiritual Satisfactions, and can talk of nothing, but our Feasts of fat Things.

All that I would here say of these inward Delights and Enjoyments, is only this, They are not Holiness, they are not Piety, they are not Perfection, but they are God's gracious Allurements, and Calls to seek after Holiness and spiritual Perfection. They are not to be sought for, for their own sakes; they are not to be prayed for, but with such a perfect Indifference and Resignation, as we must pray for any earthly Blessings; they are not to be rested in, as the Perfection of our Souls, but to be received as Cordials, that suppose us to be sick, faint, and languishing; and ought rather to convince us, that we are as yet, but Babes, than that we are really Men of God.

But to demand them in others, to make them uneasy under the Want of them, full of Search and Endeavour how to come at them, and satisfied in the Enjoyment of them, is as great a Mistake in itself, and as prejudicial to true Piety, as to make outward Blessings of Providence, Marks of Salvation, or worldly Poverty, Pains, and Distress, to be Proofs, that we are not born of God.

‘There are indeed Impressions and Communications from God, ‘which are more necessary and essential to the pious Life of the ‘Soul, than the Impressions of the Sun are to the comfortable ‘Life of our outward Man. And he that prays for nothing else ‘but these Divine Communications and Impressions, who thinks ‘of nothing else, trusts in nothing else, as able to comfort, ‘strengthen, and enrich his Soul; he that is thus all Prayer, ‘all Love, all Desire, and all Faith, in these Communications and ‘Impressions from above, is just in the same State of Sobriety, ‘as he that only prays that God would not leave him to himself. ‘For he that is without anything of these Communications and ‘Impressions of God upon him, is in the same State of Death ‘and Separation from God, as the Devils are.’*

These Impressions or Operations of God upon our Souls, are of the Essence of Religion, which has no Goodness in it, but so far as it introduces the Life, Power, and Presence of God into the Soul. The praying therefore for Impressions of this kind from God, is only praying that we may not be left to ourselves; to pray always for these with Faith, and hunger and thirst after them, is only praying earnestly, that the Kingdom of God may come, and his Will be done in us.

* Demonstration of the gross Errors, &c., in the Plain Account of the Sacrament, p. 287.

For the Soul is only so far cleansed from its Corruption, so far delivered from the Power of Sin, and so far purified, as it has renounced all own Will, and own Desire, to have nothing, receive nothing, and be nothing, but what the one Will of God chooses for it, and does to it.

This, and this alone is the true Kingdom of God opened in the Soul, when stripped of all Selfishness, it has only one Love, and one Will in it, when it has no Motion or Desire, but what branches from the Love of God, and resigns itself wholly to the Will of God.

There is nothing Evil, or the Cause of Evil to either Man, or Devil, but his own Will; there is nothing Good in itself, but the Will of God: he therefore who wholly renounces his own Will, turns away from all Evil; and he who gives himself up wholly to the Will of God, puts himself in the Possession of all that is good.

(48.) It may freely be granted, that Conversion to God, is often very sudden and instantaneous, unexpectedly raised from Variety of Occasions. Thus, one by seeing only a withered Tree,* another by reading the Lives and Deaths of the Antediluvian Fathers, one by hearing of Heaven, another Hell, one by reading of the Love, or Wrath of God, another of the Sufferings of Christ, may find himself, as it were, melted into Penitence all on a sudden. It may be granted also, that the greatest Sinner, may in a Moment be converted to God, and feel himself wounded in such a Degree, as perhaps those never were, who had been turning to God all their Lives.

But then it is to be observed, that this Suddenness of Change, or Flash of Conviction, is by no means of the Essence of true Conversion, and is no more to be demanded in ourselves, or others, than such a Light from Heaven, as shone round St. Paul, and cast him to the Ground. Secondly, That no one is to expect, or require, that another should receive his Conversion, or Awakening, from the same Cause, or in the same Manner, as he has done, that is, that Heaven, or Hell, or the Justice, or Love of God, or Faith in Christ, either as our Light, or our Atonement, must needs be the first Awakening of the Soul, because it has been so with him. Thirdly, That this Stroke of Conversion, is not to be considered, as signifying our high State of a New Birth in Christ, or a Proof that we are on a sudden made New Creatures, but that we are thus suddenly called, and stirred up to look after a

* Frere Laurent.

Newness of Nature. Fourthly, That this Sensibility, or manifest Feeling of the Operations of God upon our Souls, which we have experienced in these first Awakenings, is not to be expected, or desired, to go along with us, through the Course of our Purification. Fifthly, That Regeneration, or the Renewal of our first Birth and State, is something entirely distinct, from this first sudden Conversion, or Call to Repentance; that it is not a Thing done in an Instant, but is a certain Process, a gradual Release from our Captivity and Disorder, consisting of several Stages and Degrees, both of Death and Life, which the Soul must go through, before it can have thoroughly put off the old Man. I will not say that this must needs be in the same Degree in all, or that there cannot be any Exception to this. But thus much is true and certain, that Jesus Christ is our Pattern, that what he did for us, that we are also to do for ourselves, or, in other Words, we must follow him in the Regeneration. For what he did, he did, both as our Atonement, and Example, his Process, or Course of Life, Temptations, Sufferings, denying his own Will, Death, and Resurrection, all done, and gone through, on our Account, because the human Soul wanted such a Process of Regeneration and Redemption; because, only in such a gradual Process, all that was lost in Adam, could be restored to us again. And therefore it is beyond all doubt, that this Process is to be looked upon, as the stated Method of our Purification.

It is well worth observing, that our Saviour's greatest Trials, were near the End of his Process or Life, that he then experienced the sharpest Part of our Redemption. This might sufficiently show us, that our first Awakenings have carried us but a little way; that we should not then begin to be self-assured of our own Salvation, but remember, that we stand at a great Distance from, and in great Ignorance of our severest Trials.

To sum up all in a Word: Nothing hath separated us from God but our own Will, or rather our own Will is our Separation from God. All the Disorder, and Corruption, and Malady of our Nature, lies in a certain Fixedness of our own Will, Imagination, and Desire, wherein we live to ourselves, are our own Centre and Circumference, act wholly from ourselves, according to our own Will, Imagination, and Desires. There is not the smallest Degree of Evil in us, but what arises from this Selfishness, because we are thus, All in All to ourselves.

It is this Self, that our Saviour calls upon us to deny; it is this Life of Self, that we are to hate and to lose, that the Kingdom of God may arise in us, that is, that God's Will may be done in us. All other Sacrifices that we make, whether of worldly Goods, Honours, or Pleasures, are but small Matters, compared to that Sacrifice and Destruction of all Selfishness, as well spiritual, as natural, that must be made, before our Regeneration hath its perfect Work.

There is a Denial of our own Will, and certain Degrees even of self-denying Virtues, which yet give no Disturbance to this Selfishness. To be humble, mortified, devout, patient in a certain Degree, and to be persecuted for our Virtues, is no Hurt to this Selfishness; nay, spiritual-self must have all these Virtues to subsist upon; and his Life consists, in seeing, knowing and feeling the Bulk, Strength, and Reality of them. But still in all this Show, and Glitter of Virtue, there is an unpurified Bottom on which they stand, there is a Selfishness, which can no more enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, than the Grossness of Flesh and Blood can enter into it.

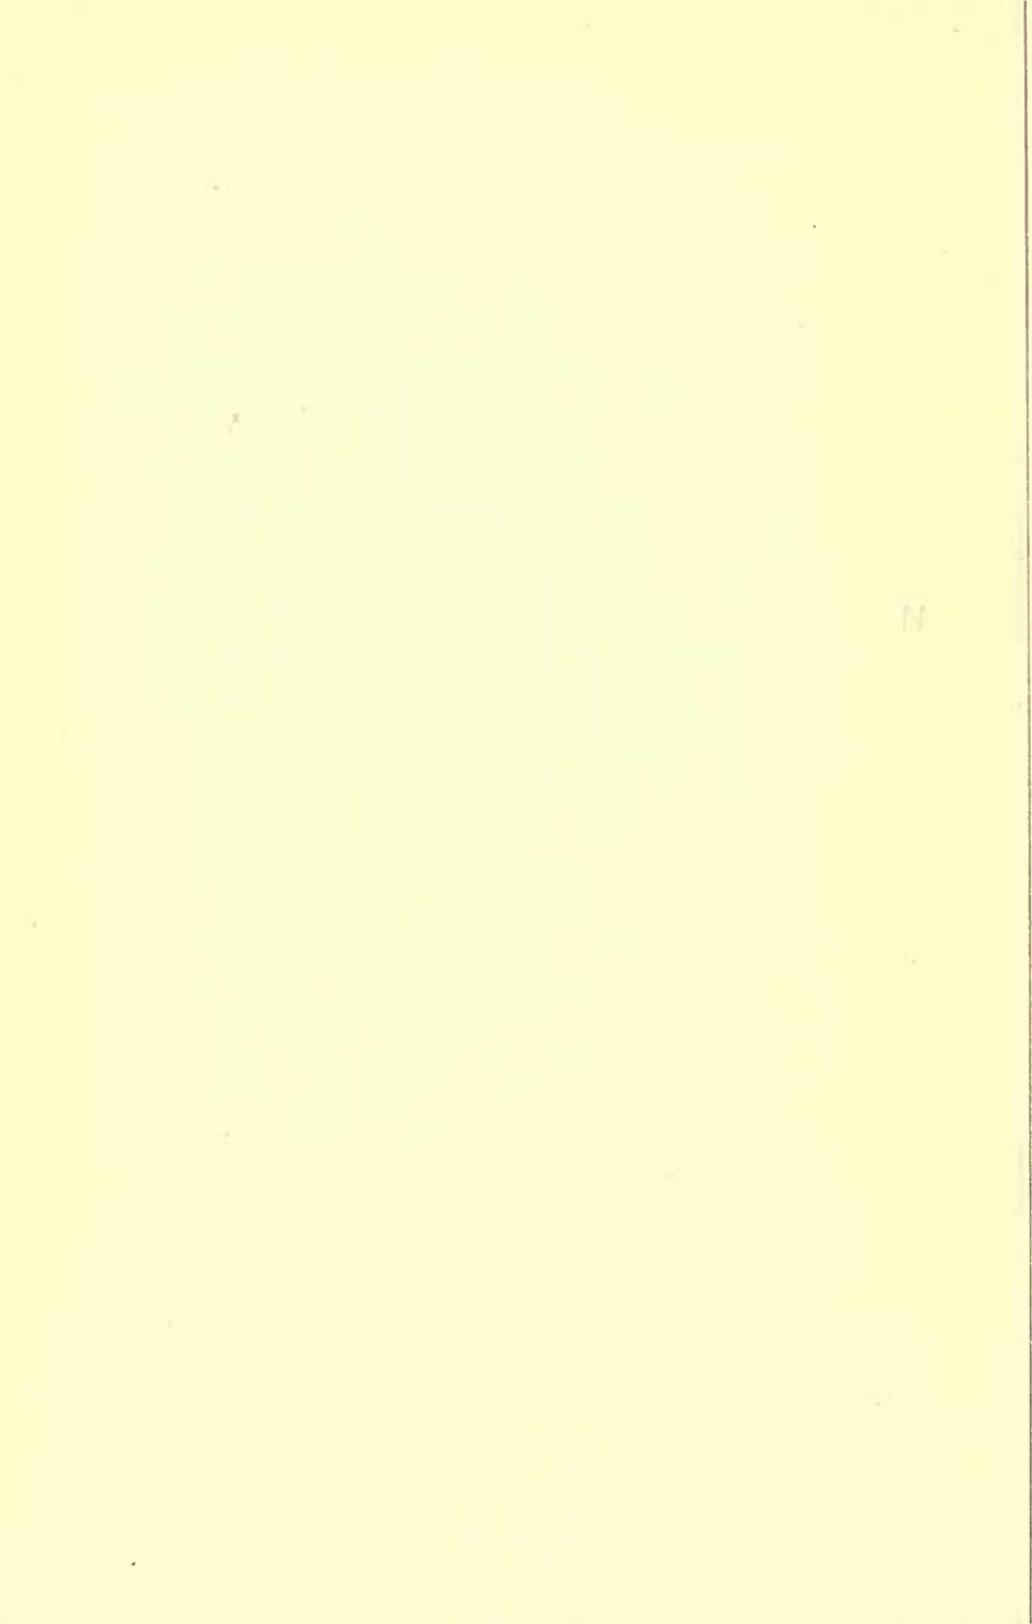

What we are to feel, and undergo in these last Purifications, when the deepest Root of all Selfishness, as well spiritual as natural, is to be plucked up, and torn from us, or how we shall be able to stand in that Trial, are both of them equally impossible to be known by us beforehand.

It is enough for us to know, that we hunger and thirst after the Righteousness which is in Christ Jesus; that by Faith we desire, and hope to be in him new Creatures; to know, that the greatest Humility, the most absolute Resignation of our whole selves unto God, is our greatest and highest Fitness, to receive our greatest and highest Purification, from the Hands of God.

An Earnest and Serious
ANSWER TO
Dr. Trapp's Discourse, &c.

MIGHT I follow the Bent of my own Mind, my Pen, such as it is, should be wholly employed in setting forth the infinite Love of God to Mankind in Christ Jesus, and in endeavouring to draw all Men to the Belief and Acknowledgment of it. This one great Mercy of God, which makes the one only Happiness of all Mankind, so justly deserves all our Thoughts and Meditations, so highly enlightens, and improves every Mind that is attentive to it, so removes all the Evils of this present World, so sweetens every State of Life, so inflames the Heart with the Love of every Divine and human Virtue, that he is no small Loser, whose Mind is, either by Writing or Reading, detained from the View and Contemplation of it.

When this Mystery of Divine Love was first manifested to the World, it produced its proper Effects, it put an End to all Selfishness and Division; for all that believed were of one heart, and one spirit, and had all things common.^{*} And indeed under the real Influence, and full Belief of this great Mystery of Divine Love, there seems to be no Room left for anything else amongst Christians, but Returns of Love to God, and Flowings out of Love towards one another.

But now it is so difficult to enter into Controversy without being, or at least seeming in some Degree unkind to the Person that one opposes, that it is with great Reluctance that I have entered upon my present Undertaking; having nothing more deeply riveted in my Heart, than an universal Love and Kindness for all Mankind, and more especially for those whom God has called to be my Fellow-Labourers in promoting the Salvation of Mankind. But however unwilling, yet I find myself obliged to consider, and lay open many grievous Faults in the Doctor's Discourse; and to show to all Christians, that the dearest Interests of their Souls are much endangered by it.

And this I must do with great Plainness and Sincerity, in the Love of Truth, and under the Direction of Charity, saying nothing in the Spirit of an Adversary, sparing nothing through Respect of Persons, sacrificing nothing to the Taste or Temper of the World, but setting forth every Thing in that naked Light, in which the Spirit of God represents it to my own Mind.

The Doctor undertakes to stir up, and alarm Mankind with the Sin, Folly, and Danger, of being righteous over-much. The Text from which he has the Title of his Discourse is very unhappily chosen, and must be looked upon rather as a severe Reproach, than any kind of Justification of it. The Text is indeed in the Writings of Solomon, and as it stands there, has no Hurt in it; because as the Royal Preacher sometimes introduces Fools, and sometimes Infidels, making their Speeches, so there is a Necessity of supposing that to be the Case in the Doctor's Text; not only from the Context, which plainly shows there are Two Persons introduced, the one for, the other against Righteousness; but because the Words, unless stripped of all their proper Meaning, cannot be taken in a Sense that is tolerable, or consistent with the common Notions of Piety.

Is it not therefore strange, that the Doctor should choose to have a Discourse and Title to it, conformable to a Text of this kind? For if his Discourse is of a Piece with his Text, must not all sensible People find it as hard to reconcile his Discourse, as to reconcile the Text with the common Notions of Piety? Is it not strange, that he should think it right and just, to limit, explain, and model, both the Letter and Spirit of the Gospel by such a Saying in the Writings of Solomon, as must be ascribed to the Spirit and Mouth of an Infidel? Is it not still stranger, that such a Text, so offensive to Piety, should have not only been so long dwelt upon in the Doctor's Three Churches, but sent abroad into the Christian World, as a proper Key to all the practical Sayings, Parables, and Doctrines, of Jesus Christ?

Supported by this Text, the Doctor endeavours to deter and frighten Christians from the Sin, Folly, and Danger, of being righteous over-much, and from what he calls the baneful Plague of Enthusiasm. But then it is Matter of just Complaint, that he does all this, without ever showing in any Part of his Discourse, wherein true Righteousness, or the right and sober Spirit of Piety consists. If he supposed his Readers to be already well acquainted with the Nature and Extent of Christian Holiness, and to have just and distinct Ideas of Religion, what it is in itself, what Change, Purification, and Perfection, it aims at in human Nature, how, and by what Means, a Man may make himself a full Partaker of all that Benefit, Change, and Perfection, that is intended by it, there would then have been little Occasion for his present Undertaking.

For if they may be supposed thus to know what is right in Religion, they would by such Knowledge be in the best State of Security against that which is wrong.

But the Doctor overlooks this important Matter. He neither supposes them to have this Knowledge, nor endeavours to help them to it ; but in a Flow of Zeal, in a loose, declamatory Style, reflects at large upon all Attempts towards a Piety, that is not modern, common, and according to the present Power and Fashion of Religion in the World. Thus, you everywhere find hard and severe Reflections cast upon Pretenders to Piety, pretended Spiritualists, and Righteous over-much ; great Accusation of Excesses, Extraordinaries, and By-paths ; but nowhere a Word, or a Hint, in Favour of those, who would only be so excessive, so extraordinary, and so much out of the common Paths, as the blessed Saints, and Martyrs of the Primitive Church were ; nowhere are such People told, that he wishes them God speed, that their Zeal is much wanted both amongst Clergy and Laity, and that the Gospel suffers, because we know not where to find living Examples of its Purity and Perfection. Nowhere are such People told, that he writes not against them, that He loves their Spirit, and should be glad to add new Fervours to it ; nowhere are they told, what Christian Perfection is, what a Holiness of Body, Soul and Spirit it requires, and what Blessedness of Life it gives ; how powerfully all are called to it ; how earnestly all ought to aspire after it ; and how sadly they are mistaken, what Enemies to themselves, who for the Sake of any, or all the Things in the World, die less purified and perfect, than they might have been.

If we had to do only with one single Person, sincerely good, yet seeming to carry Matters too high in some Parts of his Duty, if we intended privately to dissuade him from such Heights ; yet even this, thus privately done, and to a Person of Piety, would be exceeding dangerous, and very unjustifiable ; unless we took the utmost Care at the same Time, to keep up the pious Zeal of his Mind, to show him wherein the true Point of Perfection consisted, and to encourage his utmost Endeavours after it.

But if this Caution, Instruction, and Encouragement, cannot be omitted without great Hurt to Religion, when we speak only to a Person of Piety, and in private, about any religious Extremes, what must be said of the Doctor's Conduct? who to the World dead in Trespases and Sin, preaches up the Sin, Folly, and Danger, of being Righteous over-much. To the World Eating and Drinking, and rising up to Play, he harangues upon the Madness, Danger, and Folly, of too much Temperance, Abstinence, Mortification, and Severity of Life. To the World asleep, insensible, and careless, not only of the Purity and Perfection, but of the First Principles of the Gospel, he boldly, rashly reproaches all Appearances of Holiness, that are uncommon and extraordinary. To no Part of the World does he represent or propose the Perfection of the Gospel, or recommend it as that, which deserves all that they can do, or suffer for Sake of it.

This, therefore, I am obliged to point out, as a fundamental Defect in the Doctor's Discourse, and such as renders it an evil Temptation, a dangerous Snare, and fatal Delusion, to all those, who do not read it with a full and thorough Dislike.

Coldness, Indifference, and a lifeless outward Compliance with all the Duties of Religion; a Slavery to Ease, Softness, and sensible Pleasures; a criminal Conformity to the Spirit, Fashions, and Corruptions, of the World; unmortified Passions; a coniving at favourite Sins; deep roots of Pride, Partiality, and Self-Love; an unawakened Conscience; an Insensibility of their corrupt, unreformed, unregenerate State; a Proneness to be content and satisfied with poor Beginnings, Names and Appearances of Virtue; is perhaps the State of more than Two-thirds of those that are looked upon to be the Religious amongst us.

Now the Doctor's Discourse has a direct and natural Fitness to lull all these People asleep, to suppress all Stirrings and Intentions of Amendment, to keep up and nourish every Disorder of their Hearts, to increase their Blindness, and awaken nothing in them, but a hurtful Zeal to censure and condemn all those, that are endeavouring to practise the uncommon Piety of the Gospel.

There is scarce a Reader amongst this Number of People, whether he be Layman or Clergyman, but will find this Effect from the Doctor's Instructions; he will begin to take fresh Comfort in his State, to think himself happy for having had no aspirings after high Improvements in Piety; he will not only be content with his Corruptions, but be fixed, and hardened against all inward and outward Calls to a solid Piety; he will approve of the Deadness and Insensibility of his own Heart, and acquiesce in it, as his true and just Security, from the Sin and Folly and Danger of being Righteous over-much.

Again, others there are, I make no doubt, in all Parts of this Kingdom, both amongst Clergy and Laity, Men and Women, rich and poor, whose Consciences are greatly awakened, who see the general Apostacy from the Religion of the Gospel, whose Souls are wanting, and wishing nothing so much, as to know how, all that they are, all that they have, and all that they do, may be one continual Sacrifice, and Service of Love unto God; to know how, and in what Manner, and to what Extent, and by what Means, they may and ought to 'be perfect, even as their 'Father which is in Heaven is perfect.'

Now who can help looking with Love, Pity, and Compassion, upon these poor Souls, longing for that, which has been so long lost; asking after that, which scarce anyone will tell them anything of, and wanting to enter upon Paths, where there are few or no Footsteps to be seen, nor any Travellers in Motion!

Now had these awakened Souls lived in the First Ages of the Church, nay, I may say in almost any till these very last Ages of it, their Zeal had not been in vain; they could have been at no Loss to know how they were to proceed in their heavenly Purpose; because they could have always been immediately directed to some living Examples of the perfect Spirit of the Gospel, who were publicly known and acknowledged by all to be such, and who had the same undisputed Right to point out every Degree of Christian Perfection, as John the Baptist had to preach up Mortification and Self-denial. Every Age, and every Sex, consecrated Virgins, holy Widows, Converts, and Penitents, Priests and People of all Conditions, had their open, known and public Standards to resort to, where everyone was sure to be guided and directed, assisted and encouraged to live up to that Height of Holiness and Perfection, which was proper to their State and Condition.

But now how does the Doctor deal with this Sort of People? What Love, Instruction, Assistance, and Encouragement, does he reach out to them? Why, truly, he considers them as a deluded, weak, or hypocritical, or half-thinking People, that disturb the Christian Church with their Projects about Perfection, who are to be set right by returning to the Instruction of common Sense. He ridicules and exposes every Step they must take in their intended Progress, by adding Absurdities of his own Invention to it. There is nothing for such People throughout his whole Discourse, but Reproaches, Ridicule, and Discouragement.

Are they desirous of all that Self-denial, all that Mortification of bodily Appetites and sensual Passions, as may best fit them to be Temples of the Holy Spirit, he ridicules them as holding the Sinfulness of smelling a Rose?*

Do they begin to discover the deep Corruption of their Nature, the Superficialness and Weakness of their Virtues, and to fear they have as yet scarce come up to the Righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees? He tells them, 'The great Enemy of Souls adapts his Temptations to all Sorts of Tempers and Dispositions.—Those who are disposed to be good and virtuous, if he cannot prevail with them to be vicious, commonly so-called, he labours to make them over-virtuous, that is vicious, though not commonly so-called; and so involves them in Dangers and Mischiefs.*

Are they such as are only desirous of reforming their own Lives, by bringing all their Actions to the Standard of the Gospel, and wholly intent upon their own Advancement in merely practical Piety?

To these he shows, that they are in the very Paths that lead, and always did lead, to Fanatic Madness. Thus, says he, 'To what a Height of Fanatic Madness in Doctrine, as well as Practice are some advanced, who set out at first with an Appearance of more than ordinary Sanctity in Practice only? And again, 'I do say, that in all Ages Enthusiasts have been Righteous over-much; they began with the last mentioned, and ended with the other. And is it not so now?†

Further, Are there others, who begin to feel the Mystery of their Redemption discovered in their own Souls, so that they hunger and thirst after the Manifestation of the Divine Life in them, desiring that Christ may be wholly formed and revealed in them, that they may put on Christ, be in him new Creatures, led by his Spirit, growing in him as Branches in the Vine, hearing the Word of God written and spoken in their Hearts, in his Light seeing Light, and tasting in the inward Man the Powers of the World to come.

For such as these, the Doctor has this Instruction: 'That there is,' says he, 'such a Thing as the Operation and Influence of the Holy Spirit upon our Souls, though we cannot distinguish it from the Operations of our own Minds, is not only granted, but insisted upon, by all sincere and sober Christians. But what Reason, what Scripture, is there for this inward Seeing, Hearing, Feeling?‡

According therefore to the Doctor's Divinity, both Reason and Scripture require, that the true Christian be inwardly blind, inwardly deaf, and void of all inward Feeling. For if neither Scripture nor Reason will allow of any inward Senses, then they must both of them require an inward Insensibility. But Scripture, from Genesis to the Revelation, is full of Proof of these inward Senses. I shall not now produce them. I shall here only observe, that Hardness of Heart is a common and well-known Phrase of Scripture, and everywhere signifies some Degree of Blindness, Deafness, and Loss of Feeling.* I suppose it will not be said, that it signifies Blindness, or Loss of outward Eyes and Ears, or Feeling: Neither does it signify a Want of human Reason, or natural Sagacity; for learned, polite, and ingenious Men are full as subject as others are, to this Hardness of Heart. Therefore the Scripture is as open, as plain and express, in declaring for inward Senses, as it is in declaring against such a Thing as Hardness of Heart.

Hardness of Heart is that to the inward Senses which a deep, or, as we call it, a dead Sleep, is to the outward. It keeps our inward Eyes and Ears closed and stopped, just as Sleep does our outward Eyes, and Ears, and Feeling. A broken and a contrite Heart unlocks all our inward Senses, and makes us see, and hear, and feel the Things, which could no more be seen, heard, or felt before, than a Man in a deep Sleep can hear, and see, and feel the Things that are said and done about him.

Water violently frozen into a Rock of Ice, is very different from the same Water melted, rarified, warmed, and moving under the Influences of the Sun and the Air. Now if this Water was a sensible Being, we might well suppose, that when it was a soft, yielding, transparent, flowing Substance, full of Light and Air, that it had certain Senses in that State; which Senses were lost, and locked up, as soon as it became a hard, rough, thick, dark, immovable Rock of Ice, made so by Coldness, or for the Want of the Motion of Light and Air in it. And that the Ice must of all Necessity be first melted, before these Senses could be found again.

Now this Difference between Water flowing full of Light and Air, and the same Water frozen into a dark hard Rock of Ice, is but a small Resemblance of the Difference between a hardened Heart, and the same Heart become broken. And a Lump of Ice would be as well qualified to deny that sweet Sensibility of Water flowing full of Light and Air, as the natural Man is to dispute those Senses, which arise in the Heart, that is broken and penetrated by the Light, and Spirit of God in it.

But no more of this at present. I now return to the Doctor. His further Instruction to this Sort of People stands thus: They are told by him, that their high Notions of Spiritual Improvements have this Effect: On the one Hand, they lead to Presumption; on the other, to Desperation. 'He has been told,' he says, 'that some have been actually thrown into Despair. They have been made stark mad, and received into Bedlam, as such.'

* Matt.

And then he cries out, 'Was the Religion of Jesus Christ intended 'to make People mad? Is this for the Honour of Christianity?''* I shall not here question the Doctor's Information. I shall only observe, that when our Saviour was upon Earth, there were Two Sorts of mad People about him. The one Sort ran about in Disorder, tore their Clothes, and cut their own Flesh; the other Sort raved in Malice, threw Dust into the Air, stopped their Ears, and cried out, Crucify him, crucify him.

Now it may be asked, which of these Two Sorts of People were in the most disordered and distempered State? Whose Madness was the most shocking, that of the Lunatics, or that of the High Priests, Scribes, and Pharisees? Those who only mangled their own Bodies, or those that thirsted after the Blood of Christ, and would have no Rest, till they saw his Body nailed to the Cross? To me the Lunatics seem to be in a less Degree of Disorder; and the Reason is this; because I see that our Saviour could heal them, but not the Priests, Scribes, and Pharisees.

Now is it reasonable, on the account of the Madness of these Priests, Scribes, and Doctors of the Law, to say, 'Is this for the 'Honour of the Jewish Law? Was the Law and the Prophets 'intended to make People mad?' Now if the Doctor knows how to excuse the Law and the Prophets, though these great Students of them were in such a desperate State of Frenzy and Madness, then Christianity may be blameless; though here and there a Christian may be fit for Bedlam.

Again, there are others, who desire to bring the whole Form of their Lives under Rules of Religion, to let the Spirit of the Gospel give Laws to the most ordinary, indifferent, innocent and lawful Things and Enjoyments, so that as the Apostle speaks, 'whether they eat or drink, or whatever they do, they may do all 'to the Glory of God.'

These People are told by the Doctor, That 'wholly abstaining 'from Things indifferent and innocent in themselves, as forbidden 'and unlawful, is a signal Instance of being Righteous over-much; 'and so, on the other hand, is making Things indifferent to be 'necessary, and Matters of Duty.'†

What is here said has some Truth in it, and might be useful in its proper Place, and under right Limitations. But as it here stands in the Discourse, it is a grievous Snare and Deceit to the Reader. For it is to signify to him, that wholly abstaining from Things in themselves indifferent and innocent cannot be made a Matter of true religious Advancement; but is a blamable Instance of a Piety in Excess. If the Doctor had meant only to teach, that we should not wholly abstain from Things indifferent and innocent, as if they were in themselves unlawful, he should have told his Readers that he meant no more; he should have told them, that such Things might be abstained from justly, and piously upon a better Principle, and so become very expedient and edifying; and that he did not condemn the abstaining wholly from such Things, when it was done upon a Motive of Piety, for the better fulfilling any Duty; but only when it was done from a superstitious Notion, of the Things being in themselves sinful.

Had he done this, he had prevented the Snare and Deceit that is now in his Assertion; but then he would, at the same time, have made it useless and insignificant to the Design of his Discourse, and would have left a Door open for such Advances of Piety as he is here opposing.

It might easily be shown, if this was the Place for it, that no one can truly fulfil, or live up to the Two First and greatest of all Laws, that of loving God with all our Heart, all our Strength, and all our Mind; and that of loving our Neighbour as ourselves; unless he be willing and glad, in many Instances, wholly to abstain from Things in themselves indifferent and innocent; and also to make Things that in themselves are indifferent, to be Matters of Duty.

St. Paul's Doctrine is this: 'All Things are lawful for me, but 'all Things are not expedient.' This sets the Matter right on both Sides. It leaves Things in their own State of Indifference and Lawfulness, and yet carries us to a higher Rule of acting. It directs us wholly to abstain from some Things innocent in themselves, and to do some Things to which the Law calls us not, because they are expedient; because by so doing, we show a higher Love of God, and a greater Desire of doing everything to his Honour and Glory; because we thereby attain a greater Purity and Perfection of Heart, a greater Conquest over all our inward and outward Enemies, and in a greater Degree help forward the Edification of our Neighbour.

Let us look at St. Paul's Doctrine and Example in the Two following remarkable Instances. First, where he declares it to be lawful for those that preach the Gospel to live by the Gospel, and yet makes it Matter of the greatest Comfort and Joy to himself, that he had wholly abstained from this lawful Thing. And declares, it were better for him to die, than that this Rejoicing should be taken from him. He appeals to his daily and nightly labouring with his own Hands, that so he might preach the Gospel freely, and not be chargeable to those that heard him. And this he said he did, not for want of Authority to do otherwise, but that he might make himself an Ensample unto them to follow him.

What fine and awakening Instructions are here given to us of the Clergy, in a practical Matter of the greatest Moment! How ought everyone to be frightened at the Thought of desiring or seeking a Second Living, or of rejoicing at great Pay where there is but little Duty, when the Apostle's Rejoicing consisted in this, that he had passed through all the Fatigues and Perils of preaching the Gospel without any Pay at all! How cautious, nay, how fearful ought we to be, of going so far as the secular Laws permit us, when the Apostle thought it more desirable to lose his Life, than to go so far as the very Laws of the Gospel would have suffered him!

It is lawful to receive more for doing the Work of the Ministry in any Parish, and to spend more upon ourselves than our bare Subsistence requires.—It is looked upon as lawful to get several Preferments, and to make a Gain of the Gospel, by hiring others to do Duty for us at a lower Rate.—It is looked upon as lawful to quit a Cure of Souls of a small Income, for no other Reason but because we can get another of a greater.—It is looked upon as lawful for a Clergyman to take the Revenue of the Church, which he serves, to his own Use, though he has more than a sufficient Competency of his own, and much more than the Apostle could get by his Labour.—It is looked upon as lawful for the Clergy to live in State and Equipage, to buy Purple and fine Linen, out of the Revenues of the Church.—It is looked upon as lawful for Clergymen to enrich their Families, and bring up their Children in the fashionable Vanities, and corrupting Methods of a worldly and expensive Life, by Money got by preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

But now supposing all this to be lawful, what Comfort and Joy might we treasure up for ourselves, what Glory and Honour might we bring to Religion, what Force and Power might we give to the Gospel, what Benefit and Edification should we do to our Neighbour, if we wholly abstained from all these Things, not by working Day and Night with our own Hands, as the great Apostle did, but by limiting our Wants and Desires according to the plain Demands of Nature, and a religious Self-Denial?

The other Instance of the Apostle's, I appeal to, is that, where he says, it is good neither to eat 'flesh, nor to drink wine, nor 'anything whereby thy Brother stumbleth and is offended.* And again, 'If meat make my Brother to offend, I will eat no 'flesh while the world standeth, that I may not offend my ‘Brother.’* Hence it appears, that to abstain from Things indifferent, as if they were in themselves sinful, is wrong; but wholly to abstain from them upon other Motives, may be the highest Piety, and oftentimes Matter of necessary Duty and Edification. But since the Doctor has not looked at this Matter in this twofold View, in which it can only be justly apprehended, he can’t well be excused from that Half-Thinking, which he so much reproaches in others.

* Rom. xiv. 23.

But I must further observe, that there is yet more of Snare and Deception, in what the Doctor has here said of this Matter. For the Reader may thereby be easily brought into a Belief, that Things in themselves indifferent and innocent, &c., are not the proper Subjects of Religion, or Means of advancing in Piety, and that he need not bring himself under any Laws of Religion concerning such Things. Whereas nothing can be more contrary to Truth, or more hurtful to his Piety, than such a Belief.

Eating, Drinking, Sleeping, Dressing, Resting, Labour, Conversation, Trade, Diversion, and Money, are in themselves indifferent, innocent, and useful. But it is in the religious, or irreligious Use of these Things, that some People live up to the Spirit of the Gospel, and others wholly die to it. And it is from strict Laws of Religion made concerning these indifferent and innocent Things, that the spiritual Life of everyone is to be built up.

And it is for want of religious Laws in the Use of innocent and lawful Things that the Spirit of the Gospel cannot get Possession of our Hearts. For our Souls may receive an infinite Hurt, and be rendered incapable of all true Virtue, merely by the Use of innocent and lawful Things.

What is more innocent than Rest and Retirement? And yet what more dangerous than Sloth and Idleness? How lawful and praiseworthy is the Care of a Family? And yet how certainly are many People rendered incapable of all Virtue, and dead to all the Calls of God, by a worldly solicitous Temper? How lawful and beneficial is it to us, to eat and drink in such Quantity and Quality, as may render the Body healthful, subservient and useful to the Soul? And yet, what Danger is there in eating and drinking, if we are not under this strict Law of Religion, to seek only Health, and not the Pleasure of various Tastes in our Food. What Sensuality of Discourse shall we not every Day fall into, unless it be a fixed Law to us, to speak of no other Joy in our Food, but that which is expressed by our Grace before and after our Meals.

* 1 Cor. viii. 13.

14 An Earnest and Serious

How indifferent a Thing, and innocent in itself, is Dress. And yet what more hurtful and abounding with Sin? It reaches and infects the Heart and Soul, both of the Wearer and Beholder. Its Evils are innumerable. It has destroyed, and does destroy, like a Pestilence.

If the lustful Eye is in the Scripture deemed to be an Adultery, we may see plainly the Reason why the Apostle requires Women to be covered, not to beautify their outward Person with costly Ornaments of Dress, or curled Hair, but to be adorned with Shamefacedness and Modesty. For it is only saying, in other Words, that it becomes not the Piety of Christian Women, to carry and hold out Snares and Temptations to the unwary Eye, that can so easily be betrayed into so great a Sin.

Now how can all these Evils, which arise from the Use of these Things indifferent and lawful in themselves, be avoided, but by making every Thing in our common and ordinary Life to be Matter of Conscience; which is, to have its Rule, and Measure, and End, from the Spirit of Religion. And indeed what other End or Intent is there in Religion, but to govern every Motion and Desire of our Hearts, to make all the Actions of our common Life pure and holy, by being done in strict Conformity to the Will of God, and under the Light and Guidance of his Holy Spirit? So that every outward Form of our Lives, and the whole Manner of our living in the World, whether in Estates, Titles, Shops, or Farms, whether in Eating, Drinking, Dressing, &c., may make it known to all the World, that we do everything in the Name of Jesus Christ, suitably to that high Vocation wherewith we are called.

The Apostle directs Servants to this Degree of Piety; that is, 'to be obedient to their masters, in singleness of heart, as unto Christ. Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. With goodwill doing service, as unto the Lord, and not to men.*' Surely, if poor Slaves, by reason of their Christian Profession, are not to comply with their Business, as Men-pleasers, if they are to look wholly unto God in all their Actions, and serve in Singleness of Heart, as unto the Lord, surely all Christians of other Employments and Conditions, must be as much obliged to go through their Business with the same Singleness of Heart, not as pleasing the Vanity of their own Minds, not as gratifying their own selfish, worldly Passions, but as the Servants of God, that are to live wholly unto him in everything that they do. It is therefore absolutely certain, that no Christian is to enter any further into Business, nor seek any worldly Profit, nor do anything in any other Measure, nor for any other End, than such as he can in Singleness of Heart do unto God, as a reasonable Service.

No Folly of Life whatever can be rightly removed, but by being thus wholly cut up by the Roots, by making everything subject to the Spirit of Religion. That which is to direct our Prayers, and govern us at Church, must, with the same Strictness, direct our Conversation, and govern our Dealings in common Life. We must Dress with the same Spirit that we give Alms, or go to Prayers; that is, we must no more Dress to be seen and admired by others, than we must give Alms, or make Prayers for the same Reasons. And when Religion has its Seat in our Hearts, and is the Work of God's Spirit in us, this acting according to its Direction in all Things, will be so far from seeming to be a hard Lesson, that it would be a Pain to act otherwise. It is no Hardship to a Miser, to do every thing suitable to the greedy Desires of his Heart. The ambitious Man is not troubled with acting always agreeably to his Ambition. If these Persons are in Trouble or Distress, or under any Dejection, you can only comfort the one with Honour and Power, and the other with filthy Lucre and Gain.

Yet the Doctor complains of the Treatise upon Christian Perfection, because Christians in Sickness, Distress, and Dejection of Spirit, are there solely directed to seek for Comfort and Refreshment in God alone. Our Blessed Lord is very short, and yet very full, upon this Article; he only says, 'Be of good Comfort, I have overcome the World.' And the Doctor might as well be angry at the Gospel for having made no mention of worldly Amusements proper for sick and distressed Christians, as at the Treatise of Christian Perfection, for not having done the same.

If I should see a sick Man smelling a Rose, eating an agreeable Fruit, or diverting himself with a Child, I should not call him from such sinful Indulgences. But if he wanted Comfort in his State, I would no more direct him to anything, but the great and solid Comforts, that are to be found in the Love and Goodness of God, than I would direct him to another Saviour than Jesus Christ.

For to tell Christians, that in some kinds of Trouble, they might justly seek for Relief, by reading a Play, or wanton Bucolic, instead of the Gospel, would be the same Absurdity, as to have told People in our Saviour's Time, that, in some Sorts of Distress, they might justly have Recourse to Simon Magus, instead of Jesus Christ.

But now to look back a little. I have considered the Bulk of those Christians that are the most likely to be the Doctor's Readers, under Two Characters. The one, as living some Way or other in a partial, false, superficial, or half State of Piety ; the other as an awakened People, called by the Spirit of God to come out of the common Corruptions of the Times. I have shown, that the Doctor's Discourse (where it is not disliked) must do great Hurt, and have dreadful Effects upon those Two Sorts of People ; the one Sort it seals up in a false Security, sleeping in the Chambers of Death, without any Oil in their Vessels ; the other it frightens, and discourages from their pious Intentions of trimming their Lamps with all Diligence, and living upon the Watch for the midnight Call of the Bridegroom's Voice.

That I may therefore do all the Good that I can to both these Sorts of People, that I may awaken the one from their false Security in their half Form of Godliness, and assist and encourage the other to proceed wth all Earnestness, after every Degree of Christian Holiness ; I shall, before I proceed any further, lay down a short, but plain Account of the whole Nature and Ground of the Christian Religion, that everyone may clearly see, why we want the Christian Religion to save us : What it is to do for us ; and how it is done. By this Means everyone will best judge of the Importance of this Enquiry, and how he ought to be affected with what is said on either Side of the Matter.

(1.) Man was created a living, real, perfect Image of the Holy Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. This I have largely explained, and proved elsewhere.*

(2.) This whole visible World, as far as the Stars and Elements, or any corporeal Being reaches, stands in the Place, or takes up that Extent of Space, where Lucifer and his Angels, before their Fall, had their glorious Kingdom. So far as this visible Frame of Nature extends itself, so far was the Extent of their Kingdom.

(3.) That the Place or Extent of this World, was the Place or Extent of their Kingdom, is plain, from the Two following Reasons : First, Because the Place of this World is now their Habitation. For we must by no Means suppose, that God brought them from some other Region into this World only to tempt Man, and make his Life dangerous ; but they are here now, because they were created to dwell here. For fallen Angels cannot possibly leave the Place of their Sin and Fall, they must live in the Defilements and Disorders of their spoiled Kingdom; and in that Place they must find their Hell and Torment, where they extinguished their Light and Joy. Secondly, Because the whole Extent of this World, everything in it, Sun, Moon, Stars, Fire, Air, Water, and Earth, Stones, Minerals, must all be dissolved, and pass through a purifying Fire. Therefore all these Things are polluted, and have in them some Grossness and Disorder from the Fall of the Angels. Therefore we may see where they have lived, and how far the Place of their Kingdom extended, by the Extent of those Things that are to be dissolved and purified.

(4.) When the Angels had, by their Rebellion against God, lost the Divine Life within themselves, and brought their whole outward Kingdom into Darkness, Grossness, Wrath, and Disorder, so that, as Moses speaketh, 'Darkness was upon the Face of the Deep,' that is, the whole Deep, or Extent of the Place of this World; then, at the Fall of the Angels, and in the Place where they were fallen, and out of the Materials of their ruined angelical Kingdom, did God begin the Creation of this present, material, temporary, visible World.

(5.) 'In the beginning,' saith Moses, 'God created the Heaven and the Earth'; here, at this Instant, ended the Devil's Power over the Place or Kingdom in which he was created: As soon as the whole of his outward, disordered Kingdom was thus divided into a created Heaven and Earth, all was taken out of his Hands, he was shut out of everything, and he and all his Hosts became only poor Prisoners in their lost Kingdom, that could only wander about in Chains of Darkness, looking with impotent Rage and Anger at the created Heaven and Earth, which was sprung up in their own Place of Habitation, and which they could not rule over, because their Nature had no Communion with this new created Heaven and Earth.

(6.) Thus was this outward Kingdom, of the whole Extent of this World, taken out of the Hands of Lucifer and his Angels; all its Wrath, Darkness, Grossness, Disharmony, Fire, and Disorder, was, by the Six Days' Creation, changed into a temporary State, restored to a certain, but low Resemblance of its first State, and put into that Form and Order of Sun, Stars, Fire, Air, Light, Water, and Earth, in which we now see it.

(7.) Into this World, thus created out of the Ruins of the Kingdom of the fallen Angels, and made paradisical, by the Goodness of God, was Man introduced on the Sixth Day of the Creation, to take his Place, as Lord and Prince of it, to have Power over all outward Things, to discover and manifest the Wonders of this new created World, and to bring forth such an holy Offspring, as might fill up the Places of the fallen Angels. And when that was done, and certain Periods of Time had produced these great Effects, then this whole Frame of Things was, by the last purifying Fire, to have been raised from its paradisaical State, into which it was put at the Creation, into that first heavenly Brightness, and high Degree of Glory, in which it stood before the Fall of Lucifer.

(8.) But the first Man, thus created to be a Prince and Father, of a new angelical Kingdom, stood not out his Trial for this glorious State.

(9.) He came into this World in that same glorious Body, in which, after the Resurrection, he shall be like the Angels in Heaven. For no other Body, but that which was at first created, and died in Adam's Sin, shall rise in Jesus Christ. He only saves and restores that which was lost. The Resurrection will only take away what Sin, and Death, and Earth, had added to the first created Body.

(10.) In this Body, which shall rise Triumphant over Death and Hell, did the first created Man stand in this World, incapable of receiving any Hurt, or knowing Evil from outward Nature. The Holy Ghost was the Breath of his Life, and the Son of God was the Light, that illuminated all both within and without him.

(11.) Had he fixed his Will to be absolutely and eternally what he was, had he desired only to eat of the Tree of Life, to live by the Word of God, he had been established, and confirmed to be an eternal Angel, or Divine Man.

(12.) But his Imagination wandered after the Secrets of this outward World, after the Fruit and Knowledge of such Good and Evil, as wrought an entire Change in his Nature. For everything must have the Nature of that which it chooses for its Food.

His own strong Will (a Spark of the Divine Omnipotence) was to be his Maker; for he could not be an Angel of Light with less Freedom. What he desired, that he had: as his Imagination worked, so he became to be. He turned from the Tree and Light of Life, and took in the Fruit and Darkness of the earthly Nature. And so he fell from his Height of Glory as deep into an earthly Life, and the Miseries of the Earth, as the Devil fell into a hellish Life, and the Miseries of Hell.

(13.) Imagine a most precious Pearl, infinitely more bright, infinitely more transparent, infinitely more illuminated, than any that mortal Eyes ever saw. Imagine this Pearl to be in a Moment penetrated, thickened, darkened, deformed in every Part, and through every Pore, with something as hard as Iron, as heavy as Lead, as rough as Earth, as dark as Soot, and then you have but a Shadow of that which happened only to the Body of Adam, when, by desiring and eating the earthly Fruit, he drew in the earthly Nature of this World into his pearly, paradisaical Body. And here, by-the-by, we may see as in a Glass, what it is that earthly Desires now do to every Son of Adam; they do all that which they did to the first Man, they carry on, keep up, and continue, that same Death in us, which he died in Paradise.

(14.) Here it was that his eternal Soul, the immortal Fire of Life in him, being swallowed up, and smothered by an earthly dark Body, lost the Light of the Son of God, and the Breath of the Holy Spirit. And this was the great and immediate Death that he died in Paradise, before he became the Father of Mankind, a Death much more grievous than that which is to bring us all to our Graves. It was a Death that extinguished all that was Divine and Holy in the Human Nature, just as the Sin of Angels had turned them into Devils. Now in looking at this Death, or the Extinction of this first Divine Life, we have the clearest, fullest View, of what we are to understand by our Regeneration by the Second Adam. For what can it possibly be, but the Restoration of that same Divine Life which was lost in Adam the First, and to which he absolutely died in Paradise? Must not that which is re-generated in the Human Nature, be something that has been generated in it before? If we want to be redeemed, or regenerated only, because Adam died in Paradise, and lost the First Birth of Human Nature, must not Regeneration be only and solely the bringing forth again that First Birth in the Human Nature? Or will anyone say, that Christ is not in as high a Degree the Restorer of our First Birth, as Adam was the Destroyer of it? Now, though this great Truth, seated in the very Heart of the Christian Religion, speaks at once the whole Nature of Regeneration, and leaves no room to mistake about it; yet many learned Men, either not seeing, or not loving, or being afraid to own it, have been forced, not only to mistake, but wholly to sink the most solid, substantial, edifying, and glorious Article of the Christian Faith; and, instead of telling us the Height and Depth of the Benefit and Blessing of having the Nature and Life of Christ derived into, or regenerated in us, they can only teach us, what Kind of Word Regeneration is—that it is a Figurative Expression—and that our Saviour may be justified for having made use of it. What learned Pains do some People take to root up the Belief of our having a Life and Birth from Jesus Christ, in the same Truth and Reality, that we had lost a Life and Birth in Adam? They run from Book to Book, from Language to Language, they call upon every Disputant, consult all Critics, search all Lexicons, to show us, that according to Scripture, and Antiquity, and the Rules of true Criticism, Regeneration need signify no more, than what is meant by the federal Rite of Baptism. Nay, what is still worse, they appeal to the poor Notions of the blind, infatuated Jews; they produce the Opinions which they had of a Regeneration talked of, and a Baptism used amongst them, when they rejected and crucified our Saviour, to teach us, what we are to understand by our Divine Birth in Christ Jesus. But if this be the Use of Learning amongst ourselves, we need not look at Rome or Geneva, or the ancient Rabbis of the Jewish Sanhedrim, to see what miserable Work Learning can make with the Holy Scriptures. For it must be said, that the true Messiah is not rightly owned, the Christian Religion is not truly known, nor its Benefits rightly sought, till the Soul is all Love, and Faith, and Hunger, and Thirst, after this new Life, Birth, and real Formation of Jesus Christ in it, till without Fear of Enthusiasm it seeks and expects all its Redemption from it. But to return.

(15.) Man, thus dead to the Divine Life, thus destitute of the Son, and Holy Spirit of God, thus fallen into an earthly Nature, under the Dominion of an earthly World, which would afford him for a while a miserable Life, and then leave him to a more miserable Death, thus fallen, he could do no more to replace himself in Paradise, or to regain his first Nature, than the Devil could do, to restore to himself his lost Glory.

(16.) But in this State the infinite Mercy of God met him. That Love which at the first breathed, or spoke out of the Mouth of God, a living, holy and Divine Soul and Spirit into him, now again breathed, or inspoke a Spark, or Seed, or Ray of Divine Light into him, in the Declaration of a Serpent-Treader; which Seed or Spark of Life should in Time do all that, which Adam should have done; that is, should raise up and bring forth a Generation of Men, that should become Sons of God, and take Possession of that Kingdom from which the Angels had fallen.

(17.) Here now began the merciful Mystery of Man's Redemption; for this Seed of a Divine Life, or inspoken Word of Grace, or Treader of the Serpent, was the Holy Jesus, the Second Adam, who from that Time, stood in the Place of the First Man, and became the Father and Regenerator of Adam himself, and all his Posterity. And from that Time it may be said in a certain and true Sense, that the Incarnation of the Son of God began; because he was from that Time entered again into the human Nature, as a Seed, or Beginning of its Salvation, hidden under the Veil of the Law, and not made manifest, till he was born in the Holy, and highly Blessed Virgin Mary. And in this Sense it is, that our Blessed Lord said of himself, that he was the Light of the World, as Adam might have said of himself, that he was the Sin and Death of the World; because, as Sin and Death came wholly from him upon all Men, so the Light of Life came as wholly and universally from Jesus Christ. And in this Sense also St. John says of him, 'that he was the true Light 'which lighteth every Man that cometh into the World.' Because every Man, wherever born, has from him this Light of Life, this inward Saviour, or Seed of his Salvation, in the Birth of his own Life, which is to overcome the Darkness, resist the Evil, and bruise the Serpent that is in his fallen Nature. This Beginning of the Divine Birth in our Souls, if it is not stifled and suppressed by us, but inwardly revered, and attended to, as the Voice and Call of God within us, is our certain Guide and Leader to Christ, born in the Fulness of Time, and sacrificed for us upon the Cross.

(18.) What we want from Jesus Christ, as our Redeemer, is manifest by that which he offers and gives to us, namely, a Birth from Himself, a Birth from the Holy Spirit, a Redemption from the Hell that is in our Souls, and from the Death and Corruption that is in our Bodies.

(19.) We were no more created to be in the Sorrows, Burdens, and Anguish, of an earthly Life, than the Angels were created to be in the Wrath and Darkness of Hell. It is as contrary to the Will and Goodness of God towards us, that we are out of Paradise, as it is contrary to the Designs and Goodness of God towards the Angels, that some of them are out of Heaven, Prisoners of Darkness.

The Grossness, Impurity, Sickness, Pain and Corruption of our Bodies, is brought upon us by ourselves in the same Manner as the dark, hideous serpentine Forms of the Devils are brought upon them. How absurd, and even blasphemous, would it be, to say with the Scripture and the Church, that we are by Nature Children of Wrath, and born in Sin, if we had that Nature which God at first gave us? What a Reproach upon God to say, that this World is a Valley of Misery, a Shadow of Death, an Habitation of Disorders, Snares, Evils, and Temptations, if this was an original Creation, or that State of Things for which God created us? Is it not as consistent with the Goodness and Perfections of God, to speak of the Misery and Disorder that holy Angels find above, and of the Vanity, Emptiness and Sorrow of the heavenly State, as to speak of the Misery of Men, and the Sorrows of this World, if Men and the World were in that Order in which God at first had placed them? If God could make any Place poor, and vain, and miserable, or create any Beings into a State of Vanity and Vexation of Spirit, he might do so in all Places, and to all Beings.

(20.) But by the Mercy of God in Christ Jesus, this Prison of an earthly Life is turned into a State of Purification, it is made a Time and Place of putting off our filthy and defiled Garments, and of slaying and sacrificing that corrupt old Man of Sin that is hid under them. And God suffers the Sun to shine upon us, and the Elements to afford us Nourishment, for no other End, but that we may all have Time and Opportunity to hear the Call of the Son of God, to embrace a second Adam, to be born again of him, to be renewed by the Holy Spirit, and be made capable of that Kingdom from which Lucifer and his Angels fell.

(21.) Look at our Saviour's Sermon on the Mount, and indeed at all his Instructions, and you will find them pointing at nothing else on our Side, but a Denial of ourselves, and a Renunciation of the World. And indeed how could it be otherwise? For if we are ourselves something which we were not created to be, and if this is our Misery, that we have raised and awakened a Nature and Life in us, which is not our first, that we had from God; must not the First Step towards our Salvation be, a denying and departing with our whole Will and Inclination from that which we have made ourselves to be, from that Life which we have awakened in us? If Self is our Misery and Captivity, must not our Deliverance require a total, continual Self-denial? If we want a Redeemer, only because we have wandered out of Paradise, and could not get back to it ourselves; if we are overcome by this World, only because the Will and Desire of our first Father sought after it, what Wonder is it that he who is to replace us in Paradise should call us to a Renunciation of the World? If this World has got its Dominion over us, merely because the Will and Desire of Man turned itself towards the Earth; how can its Dominion over us be destroyed, but by our turning our whole Will and Desire towards Heaven?

(22.) Vain Man, taken with the Sound of heavenly Things, and Prospects of future Glory, yet at the same Time a fast Friend to all the Interests and Passions of Flesh and Blood, would fain compound Matters between God and Mammon. He is very willing to acknowledge a Saviour, that died on the Cross to save him; he is ready to receive outward Ordinances, and Forms of Divine Worship, and to contend with Zeal for the Observance of them. He likes Heaven, and future Glory, on these Conditions. He is also ready to put on an outward Morality of Behaviour, to let Religion polish his Manners, that he may have the Credit and Ornament of a prudential Piety, well-ordered Passions, and a Decency of outward Life; this gives no Hurt, or at least no Death's-Blow to the old Man. But to lay the Axe to the whole Root of our Disease, to cut all those silken Cords asunder, which tie us to the World, and the World to us, to deny every Temper and Passion that cannot be made Holy, Wise, and Heavenly; to die to every Gratification which keeps up, and strengthens the Folly, Vanity, Pride and Blindness of our fallen Nature; to leave no little Morsels of Sensuality, Avarice and Ambition, for the old Man to feed upon, however well covered under his Mantle; this, though it be the very Essence of Religion on our Part, is what he flies from with as much Aversion as from Heresy and Schism. Here he makes learned Appeals to Reason and Common Sense to judge betwixt him and the Gospel; which is just as wise, as to ask the learned Greek, and the worldly Jew, whether the Cross of Christ be not Foolishness, and a just Rock of Offence; or to appeal to Flesh and Blood about the narrow Way to that Kingdom of Heaven, into which itself cannot possibly have any Entrance.

(23.) To seek for anything in Religion, but a new Nature fitted for a new World, is knowing neither it, nor ourselves. To be born again, is to be fit for Paradise, in whatever Part of the Universe we live. Not to be born again, is continuing where the Sin and Death of Adam left us, whatever Church, or Sect of Religion we have Fellowship with. All Ways and Opinions, all Forms and Modes of Divine Worship, stand on the Outside of Religion. They may be, and certainly are, great and desirable Helps to the Kingdom of God, when we consider them only as the Gate, or Guide to that inward Life, which wants to be raised, and brought forth in us. But this is unquestionably true, that our Salvation consists wholly and solely in the Birth of the Son of God, and the Renewal of the Holy Ghost, in our Souls. When this begins, our Salvation begins; as this goes on, our Salvation goes on; when this is finished, our Salvation is finished. This alone saves the Soul; because this alone restores the First Paradisaical, Divine Nature, which is the true Image of God, and which alone can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

(24.) If we had only a notional Knowledge that our First Father had sinned, and knew no more of his sinful Condition than History tells us of it; if we had only certain instituted Types and Figures to keep up the Remembrance of it in our Minds, we should never be the worse for his Sins; we should have no Hurt by owning ourselves to be Children of a sinful Father, if his Nature, Life and Spirit was not propagated in us: So, if we have only a notional Belief that Jesus is become the Second Adam, to redeem or regenerate the fallen Nature; if we know this only in the Notion and History kept up in our Minds by outward Figures and Ordinances, though we contend ever so much for this Belief of a Saviour, and write Volumes in Defence of it; yet he is not our Saviour, till his Nature, Life, and Spirit, be born in us. If there be any Man in the World, in whom the Nature of Adam is not, he has no Sin from Adam. If there be any Man, in whom the Life of Jesus is not, he has no Righteousness from him. We must have Life and Righteousness in the same Truth and Reality in us from the Second Adam, as we have Sin and Death in us from the First.

(25.) The Whole of the Matter is this: This World is our Curse and Separation from God; by the Mystery of our Redemption it is turned into a short State of Purification, and can only be made so, by our going with our whole Will and Desire out of it, and away from it, as Adam by his Will and Desire sought after, and fell into it. The Second Adam must take us out, as the First Adam brought us into this World. Our Bodies are our Burdens which Sin has laid upon us: Our stinging, wounding Passions are the Nails which must fasten our Hands and Feet to the Cross on which we are to die, and commend our Spirit into the Hands of God, as our Lord did. But yet, all this Turning with our whole Will, and Desire towards God, and Paradise, all this Bearing our Cross, and passing through the fiery Trials of this Life, is still but preparatory to our Salvation, which wholly consists in the Incarnation of the Son of God in the Soul, or Life of Man. That must be done, and born in us, which was done, and born in the Virgin Mary. As our Sin and Death is, Adam in us, so our Life and Salvation is, Christ in us. This is it alone that saves us, that delivers us from the Fall, that restores all that was lost in Adam; by this alone what died in Adam, is brought to Life again in us; by this alone we can be taken out of an earthly Life, Nature, and World, and translated into a heavenly Life, Nature, and World.

(26.) Christ, by the overshadowing of the Holy Spirit, became in the Body of the holy Virgin Mary, of the same Nature with that First Man, which was created in Paradise, who, according to the Purpose of God, was to have been the Father of an holy, paradisaical Race of Men. Now the First Purpose of God must stand, and that which God designed must come to pass. But seeing the First Adam failed in this Design of God, and was not the Generator of such a Race of Men, therefore the Wisdom of God provided a Second Adam, who was born of the Virgin Mary in the same Degree of Perfection, in which the first Man was created. To this holy, paradisaical, human Nature, the Son of God was personally united ; and thus Christ, the Second Adam, took the Place of the First, and stands as the Regenerator, Redeemer, Second Father of all the Sons of Adam. Now as we are earthly, corrupt, and worldly Men, by having the Nature and Life of the First Adam propagated in us, so we must become holy, paradisaical, and heavenly Men, by having the Life and Nature of the Second Adam derived into, or regenerated in us ; or, as the Scripture speaks, by being born again of him. Therefore if we are to have the Nature of Christ regenerated in us, as the Life of Adam is born in us ; if we are to be like him in Nature, as we are like to Adam in Nature ; if we are to be the heavenly Sons of the one, as we are the earthly Sons of the other, then there is an absolute Necessity, that That which was done and born in the Virgin Mary, be also by the same Power of the Holy Ghost done and born in us, by a Seed of Life derived into us from Christ our Regenerator. The Mystery of Christ's Birth must be the Mystery of our Birth ; we cannot be his Sons, but by having the Birth of his Life derived into us ; for the new paradisaical Man must be brought forth in the same manner in every individual Person ; that which brought forth this holy Birth in the First Adam at his Creation, and in the Second Adam in the Virgin Mary, that alone can bring it forth in any one of their Offspring. Jesus Christ therefore stands as our Regenerator, to help us by a Second Birth from him, to such an holy, pure, and undefiled Nature, as he himself received in the Blessed Virgin, and which we should have received in Paradise from our First Father.

From the Time of the Fall of Adam, the incorruptible Seed of Christ is in us all, in the whole human Nature ; he has Power, as the Son of God, to quicken and raise it up, till it comes to be that First holy Image of the Blessed Trinity. And when a Divine Faith arises in this Seed of Life, by which it lays hold on Christ as the Author, Preserver, and Finisher of its Life, as the Atonement, Saviour and Deliverer from the Death and Hell that surrounds it, then it grows up into a new, inward Man, of the same Nature with that which appeared in Paradise, and with that which was born in the Virgin Mary. Then the Birth of the Son of God, the Birth of the Spirit, and that First holy Humanity which Adam lost, are all restored to us, but in a Mystery in the inward Man hid in God, till the Resurrection shall separate everything that is earthly, dark, and corruptible, from it. Thus by Faith in Christ we put on Christ, he becomes formed in us, we eat his Flesh, and drink his Blood, and have his Nature and Life in us ; that is, we have a Flesh and Blood, a holy Humanity, derived into us from Christ, in the same Reality as we have Flesh and Blood, a corrupt Humanity from Adam, our First Father. Thus we are real Members, living Branches, and new-born Children, of Christ, our Regenerator; he is our Father, and as such, as certainly brings us into the Kingdom of Heaven, Heirs of all his Glory, as Adam brought us into the Prison of this World, Heirs of all his Sin and Misery. This is the Whole of the Christian Redemption. Let us look where we will, and talk of what we will, there is no Possibility of Salvation for any one Son of Adam, but in this Divine Birth, nor can this Birth be had any other way. And to this great Truth all the Writings of the New Testament bear undeniable Witness. For the further and full View of this important Matter, I refer the Reader to another little Book,* which, if I could afford it, should be sent gratis into all Parts of the Kingdom. Look now at yourselves, at the World, at Religion, in this true Light, and surely you must enough see and feel the desirable Nature of every Virtue, and every Degree of it, which the Gospel sets before you. Surely you must awaken into a strong Abhorrence of everything, that the Fall has brought upon you, whether it be in your Souls, your Bodies, or the State of the World into which you are fallen. To renounce the poor Interests of a worldly Life, to be content with a Pilgrim's Fare in it, to live looking and longing after that which you have lost; to have no more of Covetousness, of Pride, of Vanity, and Ambition, than John the Baptist had; to live unto God in your Shops, your Employments and Estates, with such Thoughts and Desires of going to your heavenly Father, as the lost Son had when he saw his poor Condition, eating Husks among Swine, is only a Proof that you are, like him, come to yourselves, that you begin to see what, and how, and where you are. Surely you can need no Exhortations to hasten and run to your Redeemer, to ask and beseech him in Faith and Love to do everything in you and for you, that your darkened corrupted Heart, and polluted Body, stands in need of. He now stands as near you, as full of Love over you, as he did to Lazarus when he raised him from the Dead. He is no further from your Call, than he was from the Call of blind Bartimæus, whose Eyes he immediately opened. Surely it should now be more needless to exhort you to look earnestly and diligently after every Means of recovering your first glorious State, than to exhort the Blind to receive their Sight, the Sick to accept of Health, or the Captive to suffer his Chains to be taken off. For when you thus see your Misery and your Redemption in this strong Light, both of them so exceeding great, you see something that must needs penetrate and awaken the inmost Depth of your Soul, that leaves you no room to doubt about the Nature of any Virtue, no Liberty to indulge one vain Passion, or to think it any Hardship that the Gospel calls you to be perfect. For in this Light every Virtue of the Gospel stands known and recommended to us, just as Health, Purity and Sight, stand recommended to a sickly, noisome, blind Leper, who was shut up in a Place that continually increased all his Evils. It strips us of nothing but the Uncleanness of Leprosies, the Miseries of Sores, Pains, and Blindness. It takes nothing from the World which is about us, but its Poison and Power of infecting us. So that to be called to the Height of all Virtue attainable in this Life, however excessive it may seem to the Reasonings of Flesh and Blood, is only being called away from every Misery and Evil that can be avoided by us. Jesus Christ is become our Regenerator, that we may again be made like unto God, have the Purity and Perfection of an angelic Nature, and be made capable of enjoying the infinite Riches and Treasures of the Divine Nature to all Eternity. No Virtue therefore has any blamable Extreme in it, till it contradicts this general End of Religion, till it hinders the Restoration of the Divine Image in us, or make us less fit to appear amongst the Inhabitants of Heaven. Abstinence, Temperance, Mortification of the Senses and Passions, can have no Excess till they hinder the Purification of the Soul, and make the Body less useful and subservient to it. Charity can have no Excess till it contradicts that Love which we are to have in Heaven, till it is more than that which would lay down its Life even for an Enemy, till it exceeds that which the first Christians practised, when they had all things common ; till it exceeds that of St. John, who requires him that has Two Coats, to give to him that has none, and he that has Meat to do likewise ; till it is loving our poor Brethren more than Christ has loved us ; till it goes beyond the Command of loving our Neighbour as we love ourselves ; till it forgets that our own Life is to be preserved.

See now how the Doctor instructs and enlightens his Readers on these Two great Articles, Christian Temperance, and Charity. To remove the Restraints of the First, he says, ' Our Blessed ' Saviour came eating and drinking, was present at Weddings, ' and other Entertainments ; nay, at one of them worked a ' Miracle to make Wine, when it is plain, there had been more ' drank than was absolutely necessary for the Support of Nature, ' and consequently something had been indulged to Pleasure ' and Cheerfulness.*

O Holy Jesus, that thy Divine Life should, by a Preacher of thy Gospel, be made a Plea for Liberties of Indulgence! The Doctor's Argument lies in this; that our Saviour worked a Miracle to help them to more Wine, when they had already drank to the Indulgence of Pleasure and Cheerfulness, therefore he could be no Enemy to such pleasant Indulgences; therefore it is lawful for us Christians to delight in them. Now if this Lawfulness is well proved, the Doctor may go on and prove these Indulgences to be good and pious; because what our Saviour worked a Miracle to promote, must needs be esteemed to be so. And so the adding another Bottle, when Friends are rejoicing, may be made to be a Christian Duty. But the Doctor should have remembered, that the Wine here spoken of, was not common Wine, and therefore has not the least Relation to our common Drinking—that it was not Wine from the Juice of the Grape—that it had nothing in it, but what came from a heavenly Hand—that it must have in it the Purity and Virtue of him that made it—that it had as good Qualities in it, and was fitted to have the same Effects upon some that drank it, as the Clay, which he moistened with his Spittle, had upon the Eyes of the Blind. He should have remembered, that it was Water, only so altered, and endued with such Qualities, as he pleased to put into it; and therefore we may be sure, it was Water as highly blessed for their Use, as they were capable of; we may be sure it was fitter to allay the Heat and Disorder of their Drinking, than if it had been Water unaltered by our Saviour. How suitable was this Miracle to a Feast! How worthy of so Divine a Person! To make them cooler, by giving them Water made fitter for that Purpose, and to raise their Faith by its miraculously seeming to be turned into the best of Wine. Well might it be said of this Miracle, that he thereby manifested forth his Glory, and his Disciples believed on him. But according to the Doctor's horrid Account of this Miracle, it must be said, that he thereby showed his Approbation of continuing such Pleasures of Drinking, and has left us a Proof, that we may do the same. But I must further vindicate the Life and Example of our Blessed Lord from the Indignity and Irreverence done to it by the Doctor. Our Blessed Lord came indeed, as he says of himself, eating and drinking. But how, or in what Manner, or in what Sense, did he say this of himself? Why, it was in Opposition to, and Distinction from, John the Baptist, who came eating only one Sort of Food. And it was to show the Jews their great Guilt in this respect, that nothing could do them any good. For the Mortification of the Baptist they condemned, as coming from the Devil; and the Condescension of the Holy Jesus in coming to their Tables, they accused as Gluttony and Wine-bibbing. Now the Doctor is plainly doing what our Lord accused the Jews of; he with them condemns the Mortification of the Baptist, as coming from the Devil. But he differs from the Jews in this, that he does not condemn, but approves of our Lord, as a Friend to Feasts, and merry Meetings.

Our Saviour, suitable to his gracious Love, in coming into the World, sought the Conversation of Sinners and Publicans; because he came to save that which was lost, and because he knew that some amongst such Sinners were more movable, than the proud Sanctity of the learned Pharisees. But may we thence conclude, that the Lives of such Sinners were not blamable in his Sight? Is not this as well, as to imagine he favoured the Indulgences of Feasting and good Fellowship, because he was found there? The Holy Jesus conversed more freely, spoke of himself, and of the Kingdom of God, more divinely to a wicked Woman of Samaria, than he appears to have done to his Disciples. May we thence conclude, that he approved of a Woman of that Character, or that he thereby set his Seal to the Goodness and Lawfulness of her Way of living? Is not this as well, as to make his Presence at a Wedding, an Approbation of the Freedom and Indulgences of such Feasts?

O Holy Jesus, thou didst nothing of thyself, thou soughtest only the Glory of thy Father, from the Beginning to the End of thy Life; thou spentest whole Nights in Prayer in Mountains and Desert Places; thou hadst not where to lay thy Head; thy common poor Fare with thy Disciples was barely Bread and dried Fish; thy miraculous Power never helped thee to any Dainties of Refreshment, though ever so much fatigued, and fainted with Labour. But yet, because this Holy Jesus came into the World to save all Sorts of Sinners, and to show that every Kind and Degree of Sin could be taken away, and forgiven by him, therefore he came into all Places, and entered into all Sorts of Companies. He did not, as the Baptist, tie himself to one Sort of Food, but he came eating and drinking. But why did he so? It was, that he might reprove and convert Sinners at their own Tables. He came, not to indulge himself, or to find such Gratifications as the Baptist abstained from, but to work Miracles, to awaken and astonish Sinners in the Midst of their Indulgences.

It is said, that wherever the King is, there is the Court. But with much more Reason may it be said, that wherever our Saviour came, there was the Temple, or the Church. He came to Feasts and Entertainments with the same Spirit, for the same End and in the same Divine Power, as he went to raise a dead

Corpse; namely, to show forth the Glory of God. Wherever he came, it was in the Spirit and Power of the Redeemer of Mankind; everything he did, was only to destroy the Works of the Devil, to deliver Men from his Power, raise the Dead, and give Sight to the Blind, and Ears to the Deaf; it made no Difference to him, whether he did this in the Temple, or in the Streets, at a Feast, or at a Funeral. As he was everywhere God, so every Place became Holy to him. Lastly, If our Saviour came Eating and Drinking, and was present, as is pretended, at cheerful Entertainments, to show his Approbation of such Indulgences, and to leave us a Proof, that we may do so too; how came John the Baptist, that severe Master of Mortification, to be a fit Preparer of the Way to the Kingdom of Heaven? Surely his Voice must cry wrong, if such Mortification was not right. And if our Saviour disapproved of the Severity of his Life and Manners, how came he to point him out to the Jews, as a burning and shining Light? Thus much may serve to vindicate our Saviour's holy Life and Example from the shocking Misapplication the Doctor has made of it.

Let us now see how he treats and instructs the charitable Christian in these Words: 'What! says the Half-Thinker, is 'not Charity to the Poor, a most excellent Thing? And can I 'be too charitable? Can I therefore bestow too much upon the 'Poor? I answer, Would you consider the other Side, you 'would perceive, that though you cannot be too charitable, yet 'you may bestow too much upon the Poor, to the Ruin of your 'Wife and Children, which is not Charity, but Madness, and a 'great and most grievous Sin. Did you never hear, that 'Charity begins at Home? Did you never read that of St. 'Paul? If any provide not for his own, and especially those 'of his own House; he hath denied the Faith, and is worse 'than an Infidel.'*

The Doctor's Proverb I shall leave to himself. But the Text of St. Paul, which he has as grossly mistaken and misapplied, as he did our Saviour's Miracle, I must take out of his Hands. St. Paul's Words are quoted to prove, that it is Madness, a great and grievous Sin, for anyone, through Charity to the Poor, to render himself unable to provide for his Wife and Children. Now the Apostle in this Place speaks no more about this Sin, than he speaks against the Sin of Watching and Prayer. Nay, what is more, there is not in all his Writings, or in the whole New Testament, the least Supposition or Hint that such a Sin ever was, or would be committed by any charitable

Man. The Apostle was singly speaking of such Women as were to be taken into the Order of Widows, for the Service of the Church, and to be maintained by it.* Verse 4, he says, that such Widows as had Children or Nephews that could support them, such were not to be maintained by the Church. And to such Sons and Nephews who have Mothers and Aunts that thus want their Assistance, he says, 'If anyone provide not for his 'own, especially for those of his own House,' i.e. If any Sons or Nephews, having Mothers or Aunts become desolate Widows, and take not care to assist them, especially if they live with them, such have renounced the Piety of the Gospel, and have not so much Humanity as Infidels. This alone is the Plain Doctrine of the Apostle, which the Doctor has grossly perverted, to the condemning of that which he never thought of, either there, or in any Part of Scripture. On the contrary, the Scripture abounds with Passages that might persuade us, that no Family could ever be ruined by the Alms and Charity of its Father. 'I have been young, and now am old,' saith the Psalmist, 'yet never saw I the Righteous forsaken, or their Seed 'begging their Bread. The liberal Soul shall be made fat, and 'he that watereth, shall be watered again.' They that cannot believe this, want the Faith of Christians. Had anyone in the Apostle's Time reduced his Wife and Children to Want, by his great Charity to the Poor, the Apostle would have been so far from rebuking him, as a half-thinking Fool, or exposing him to others, as guilty of Madness, and grievous Sin, that he would have told them, that he had consecrated himself and Family to the Church, that he and they were thereby become the dear Objects of the Church's Care and Love, since their present Distress was brought upon them by a boundless Love and Compassion for the Poor. I will now suppose that the Apostle had condemned a Charity in a Father that was to the Detriment of his Wife and Children; I will put the following Case in as high Terms as the Doctor can well desire. Let it be supposed that some good Bishop, possessed of as rich a Bishopric as that of Winchester, should through his extensive Love and Charity for the Poor throughout his whole Diocese, be forced to use the utmost Frugality in Family Expense, and to bring up his Children in Employments of Labour, to help themselves to Food and Raiment; one a Carpenter, in which Business our Saviour is said to have laboured in his Youth; another a Maker of Tents, the Trade of the great Apostle; and the rest in the like manner. Let it be supposed, that when he died, he left only

1 Tim. v. 5, 8.

Twenty Pounds a Year amongst them, not to be possessed by any one of them, but only to be used by everyone, as Sickness or Age made them stand in need of it, with this Injunction, that it should be given to other sick and helpless People, when there was no such amongst themselves. Let it be supposed that by his Life and Conversation, he had filled his Wife and Children with the true and perfect Spirit of the Gospel, that they loved and rejoiced in his Memory for all the Good that he had done to them, desiring nothing but to go through the World in that same Humility, Piety, Charity, Love of God, and Renunciation of the World, as he had done. Will the Doctor say, that this Bishop had ruined his Wife and Children? that half-thinking had betrayed him into a most grievous Sin, that he had by this Life denied the Faith, and become worse than an Infidel? I will venture to say, that if such a Bishop should ever appear in this Kingdom, he would bid fair to put an End to Infidelity through all his Diocese, though it were the largest in the Nation. Now if the Doctor does not know of anyone, either amongst the Laity or Clergy, who is ruining his Wife and Children by a greater and more blamable Charity than that of this Bishop, it must be said, that he has been in too much Haste; that his Zeal has not proceeded from Knowledge; and that he has been throwing cold Water upon Charity, before there was any Flame in it.

I now proceed to show in a more general Way, the blamable Nature and Design of the Doctor's Discourse. The whole Christian World, from the Time of our Saviour to this Day, has been praying, 'Thy Kingdom come, thy Will be done on Earth 'as it is in Heaven.' Sacraments, Divine Worship, and the Order of the Clergy, are appointed as ministerial Helps for this End, to raise, set up, and establish, this Kingdom of God on Earth. The Fall of Man brought forth the Kingdom of this World; Sin in all Shapes is nothing else but the Will of Man driving on in a State of Self-Motion, and Self-Government, following the Workings of a Nature broken off from its Dependency upon, and Union with, the Divine Will. All the Evil and Misery in the Creation arises only and solely from this one Cause. There is not the smallest Degree of Distraction, Pain, or Punishment, either within us, or without us, but what is owing to this. viz., that Man stands out of his Place, is not in, and under, and united to God as he should be, as the Nature of Things require. God created everything to partake of his own Nature, to have some Degree and Share of his own Life and Happiness. Nothing can be good or evil, happy or unhappy, but as it does or does not stand in the same Degree of Divine Life in which it was created, receiving in God, and from God, all that Good that it is capable of, and co-operating with, and under him, according to the Nature of its Powers and Perfections. As soon as it turns to itself, and would, as it were, have a Sound of its own, it breaks off from the Divine Harmony, and falls into the Misery of its own Discord; and all its Workings then are only so many Sorts of Torment, or Ways of feeling its own Poverty. The Redemption of Mankind can then only be effected, the Harmony of the Creation can only then be restored, when the Will of God is the Will of every Creature. For this Reason our Blessed Lord having taken upon him a created Nature, so continually declares against the doing anything of himself and always appeals to the Will of God, as the only Motive and End of everything he did, saying, that it was his Meat and Drink to do the Will of him that sent him.

What now can be so desirable to a sober, sensible Man, as to have the vain, disorderly Passions of his own corrupted Heart removed from him, to be filled with such Unity, Love, and Concord, as flows from God, to stand united to, and co-operating with the Divine Goodness, willing nothing, but what God wills, loving nothing, but what God loves, and doing all the Good that he can to every Creature, from a Principle of Love and Conformity to God. Then the Kingdom of God is come, and his Will is done in that Soul, as it is done in Heaven. Then Heaven itself is in the Soul, and the Life, and Conversation of the Soul is in Heaven. From such a Man the Curse of this World is removed; he walks upon consecrated Ground, and everything he meets, everything that happens to him, helps forward his Union, and Communion with God. For it is the State of our Will, that makes the State of our Life; when we receive everything from God, and do everything for God, everything does us the same Good, and helps us to the same Degree of Happiness. Sickness and Health, Prosperity and Adversity, bless and purify such a Soul in the same Degree; as it turns everything towards God, so every Thing becomes Divine to it. For he that seeks God in everything, is sure to find God in everything. When we thus live wholly unto God, God is wholly ours, and we are then happy in all the Happiness of God; for by uniting with him in Heart, and Will, and Spirit, we are united to all that he is, and has in himself. This is the Purity and Perfection of Life, that we pray for in the Lord's Prayer, that God's Kingdom may come, and his Will be done in us, as it is in Heaven. And this we may be sure is not only necessary, but attainable by us, or our Saviour would not have made it a Part of our daily Prayer. It may now then justly be asked, have we yet obtained that, which we have been so long, and so universally praying for? Can we look upon the Church of this Nation, as drawing near, or even tending to this State of Perfection? Can we be carried to any one Parish, either in Town or Country, where it can with Truth be said of any one Pastor and his Flock, that there the Kingdom of God is coming, and his Will begins to be done on Earth, as it is done in Heaven? Can we therefore find any one Parish, where the Pastor has not great Reason to reject the Doctor's Discourse, and to pray both for himself and his Flock, that they may enter much further into the Spirit and Practice of Christianity, than they have yet entered, that the Gospel may have much greater Power over them than it hath yet had, and that they all may, with a most awakening Conviction, see and understand what it is, that has made so Divine and powerful a Religion, so without its proper Effect upon them? For if the Case be thus, if we stand at this amazing Distance from that State of Perfection to which Christ has called us, though we have his infallible Promise to be with us to the End of the World, to assist us with such Power and Strength from above, as to obtain, and do everything that we pray for, through a right Faith in him, and Conformity to his Laws and Example; if the Case be thus, does not Heaven and Earth seem to call upon every Minister of the Gospel, to take some Share to himself of this miserable State of Things, and to endeavour to convince both himself and his Flock, that they have not yet been Christians in true earnest, that they have professed Christ with the Tempers of Jews and Heathens, that they have not yet entered into the narrow Way that leads to Life; that they have not yet enough renounced the World; not enough denied themselves; not enough emptied their Hearts of Passions hurtful to Piety; not enough offered and devoted themselves to God; not enough made the Spirit of Religion the Spirit of their Lives; not enough sought for Strength and Deliverance from Sin by a firm and living Faith in Jesus Christ, who is made Righteousness and Sanctification to every Sinner that turns to God through Faith in him; not enough prayed, and desired that they might be born again of God by the awakening and quickening the incorruptible Seed of Divine Life in their Souls, so that Christ may be truly said to be formed in them; not enough prayed, and desired to be everywhere, and on all Occasions, under the perpetual Influence and Guidance of the Holy Spirit, that they may think, and say, and do everything by his Holy Inspiration; not enough looked to that first and great Commandment, of loving God with our whole Heart and whole Strength; not enough endeavoured to keep the next, which is like unto it, that of loving our Neighbour, as we love ourselves; not enough renounced such

Fashions, Customs, and Conformities, to the World, as greatly corrupt the Heart, and grieve and separate the Holy Spirit from it. Now which way soever we consider the lamentable State of Religion amongst us, whether they be Evils within or without the Church, no Evil can be removed, nor any Remedy be procured by us of the Clergy, but in this one Way, That every Individual of the Order, from the highest to the lowest, begin in right Earnest with himself, open the Book of his own Heart and Life, and consider seriously in the Presence of God, whether, according to his Degree in the Ecclesiastical Function, the World has had its due Share of Salt and Light from him ; whether all that is in the World, the Lust of the Flesh, the Lust of the Eyes, and the Pride of Life, have been so openly, so constantly discouraged and renounced by him, that the whole Form of his Life has been one loud, continual Call to all Orders of Christians, to set their Affections on Things above, to mind only the one Thing needful ; to have nothing at Heart, but to be in Christ new Creatures, seeking, intending, desiring nothing through the Pilgrimage of this Life, but to live unspotted from the World, and to obtain every Height of Holiness, and heavenly Affection, which becomes those who are to be called Sons and Heirs of God with Christ Jesus. If Religion was at this Time in a most flourishing State amongst us, abounding with such Congregations as made up the primitive Church, it would be great Injustice to suppose that the Clergy had not, under God, been the chief Instruments of building it up to such a State of Perfection, since they are considered by our Saviour himself, as the Salt and Light of the World, which are to preserve it both from Darkness and Corruption. Seeing then that an universal Corruption of Manners is on all hands confessed to have overspread this Christian Nation, and the true Spirit of Religion hardly anywhere to be seen, nothing can be more reasonable in itself, more suitable to the present State of Things, than for every Clergyman, wherever his Lot is fallen, to suspect himself to have, in some Degree or other, contributed to this common Calamity, and to be more or less chargeable with the Guilt of it, and to try to discover his own State, by such like Questions as these, laid home to his Conscience. If Christianity has not done that to my Flock which is the only End and Intent of it, is there nothing of this Failure chargeable upon my Conduct over it ? Can my righteous Judge lay nothing grievous to my Charge on that Account ? Can my own Heart bear me Witness that I did not run in my own Will, was not driven by human Passions, but stayed and waited till the Holy Spirit called me to this Office ? Have I not undertaken the Care of other's Souls, before I had ever any true and real Care of my own? Have I not presumed to convert and strengthen others, before I was converted myself? To preach by hearsay of the Grace, and Mercy, and Salvation, of the Gospel, whilst I myself was an obedient Slave to Sin? Have I not taken upon me to explain and lay open the Mysteries of God's Love in Christ Jesus, before they had had their proper Entrance into my own Soul? Has my own Repentance, Compunction, deep Sensibility of the Burden of Sin, and want of a Saviour, taught me how to make the Terrors of the Lord known in the Deep of every Man's Heart, and to awaken and pierce the Consciences of Sinners? Has my own true and living Faith in Christ my Saviour, my own Experience of the atoning, cleansing, sanctifying Power of his precious Blood, enabled me with great Boldness to tell all Sinners, that to the Faith which worketh by Love, Christ always and infallibly saith, what he said in the Gospel, 'Thy Sins are forgiven: thy Faith hath saved thee; go in Peace'?

Can my own Heart, and God, who is greater than our Hearts, bear me Witness that in my sacred Office I have not sought myself, or my own Things, but the Things of Jesus Christ? If I have changed one Flock or Station for another, or added one Cure to another, have I done it in Singleness of Heart, as unto the Lord, and not for myself? Has all that I have sought or done of this Kind, been only from this Motive, and in this View, that I might be more truly faithful to him that hath called me, and be more and more spent and sacrificed for the Salvation of Souls? Have I neglected no Means of fitting and preparing myself for the Illuminations of God's Holy Spirit, which alone can enable me in any Measure to speak to, and work upon, the Hearts and Consciences of Men? Have I earnestly longed, and laboured after every Kind and Degree of inward and outward Holiness, and Purity of Body, Soul, and Spirit, that my standing at the Altar may be acceptable to God, and my Prayers and Intercessions for my Flock avail much before him? Has my own Self-denial, Renunciation of the World, and Love of the Cross of Christ, enabled me to preach up those Duties in their full Extent? Has my own strictly pious Use of the Things of this World, my own Readiness to relieve and assist every Creature to the utmost Extent of my Ability, fitted me to call others to these Things with Power and Authority? Have all Ages and Conditions of People under my Care had their proper Instruction and Warning from me, so that I have spared no Folly, Vanity, Indulgence, or Conformity to the World, that hurts Men's Souls, and hinders their Progress in Piety? Have I done all that by my Prayers and Preaching, Life and

Example, which Christ expects from those whom he has enjoined to feed his Sheep? Can my Flock by looking at me see what Virtues they want? Can they by following me, be led to every Kind and Degree of Christian Perfection? Lastly, has the Will of God and the Spirit of the Gospel been the Beginning and End, the Reason and Motive, the Rule and Measure, of my liking or disliking, doing or not doing, every thing among those People with whom I have lived as their Minister? These are a few of such Questions as the present State of Religion in this Island calls upon every Minister of the Gospel to sift and try himself by. For as the Order of the Clergy is instituted for no other End, but for the preserving of Religion and true Piety in the World; so when any Age is more than ordinarily sunk in Vice and Impiety, the whole Order of the Clergy, and every Member of it, have great reason not only to be deeply afflicted, but greatly affrighted at it, and to suspect and fear their own Conduct, since that which is their particular Work, has had so little Success. They have great reason to apprehend, that it is some Degeneracy of Spirit, some common Misbehaviour, some general Negligence, some want of Example, some Failure in Doctrine, some Defect in Zeal and Care of their particular Flocks, that too much contributes to so general a Corruption of Manners. This does not suppose, that it is in the Power of our Order to regulate the Manners of People as we please; it only supposes, that of all human Means it has the greatest Effect; and that when any Nation or People are either very good or very bad, the Behaviour of the Clergy may reasonably be reckoned to have greatly contributed to it. Let us all therefore of the Clergy, who have any right Sense of the Nature of our Order, any true Love for our Brethren of it, awaken and stir up one another to a faithful Diligence in our Callings, not such as may secure us from public Scandal, and the Laws of the Land, but such a faithful Diligence as the Nature of our Office, the Spirit of the Gospel, and the present Decay of Religion, calls for. Let us beseech and entreat one another deeply to consider the great Need that this poor Nation hath of a zealous, pious, exemplary, disinterested and laborious Clergy; to consider the dreadful Judgments of God, that may justly be expected to fall first upon our own Heads, if this true, only Relief and Remedy is not procured by all of us, according to the utmost of our Ability. It is now no time for Ease, Indulgence, or worldly Repose; all is to be renounced, all is to be sacrificed; and we must in the Spirit of Martyrdom awaken the World into a Faith and Love of the Gospel. Now is the Time that we must give up all our worldly Regards, 'forsake all that we have; that we must hate Father 'and Mother, Wife and Children, and Brothers and Sisters, yea, 'and our own Lives also,' or we cannot be faithful Ministers of Jesus Christ. The same Spirit which first planted the Gospel, is now required to recover and restore it amongst us. We must break off our Chains of worldly Prudence, and come forth in the Spirit and Power of the Gospel; so live, and speak, and act, whether in the Pulpit or out of it, that all who see and hear us may be forced to confess that God is in us of a Truth, and that his Holy Spirit hath sent us. A Ministry that hath not this Power, that have not full Proof, both to themselves and others, that the Holy Spirit is thus with them, opening the Kingdom of God in their own Souls, and enabling them to preach it to others with Spirit and Power, are to answer to God for their Want of it.

To ask whether the Assistance of the Holy Spirit is to be ordinary or extraordinary, is as needless and groundless a Distinction, as to ask whether a Minister of the Gospel ought to be an ordinary or extraordinary good Man. The Operation of the Holy Spirit in us since the Fall, is a supernatural Power, and therefore in a just Sense always extraordinary, because enabling us to be and do that, which the ordinary Power of fallen Nature is insufficient for; but it is more or less restored to us, as we are more or less fitted to receive it. And all that Assistance or Renovation of the Holy Spirit which an Apostle might expect, for the raising his own personal Holiness to its greatest Height, or for enabling him with Spirit and Power to move, affect, and convert the Hearts of Men to the Faith of the Gospel, may be justly expected now by such Ministers of the Gospel, as do all that which an Apostle did to obtain and receive it. Our Religion is founded on this Doctrine,—that we are to be born again of the Holy Spirit,—that it is to be the Breath and Life of our new-born, inward Man,—that there is no Sanctification of the Heart, no Illumination of the Mind, no Knowledge of Divine Mysteries, no Love of holy Things, possible to be had, but in and by the Motion and Life of this Holy Spirit renewed or born again in us;—that its Life, Motion, and Power, in us, increaseth according to our Faith, Prayers, and Desires of it.

Is it not now a flat Denial of all this to say, as is said by some, that the Establishment of the Gospel in the World, together with the Assistances of human Learning and Languages, has been the Occasion why the Assistance of the Holy Ghost is abated, and become only such as may be called ordinary? For if we consult either Scripture or Experience, must it not be said, that worldly Peace and Prosperity want as much to be sanctified by the Holy Spirit, as Persecution and Distress? That human Learning and Knowledge need as high Degrees of Divine Grace and Help, as human Ignorance? Is not the Blindness, the Infatuation and Corruption of Men of Letters, as notorious as that of unlearned Men? Does an Editor of Terence, Horace, or Virgil, receive such Illumination from Plays and Poetry? Do Cardinals and Pluralists receive so much Uction and Assistance from human Establishments, as to need less to be led and governed by the Holy Spirit of God? Or will we say, that a critical Study of divided Languages, and a Religion established in worldly Ease and Peace, are not only in themselves free from Danger and Corruption, but have so much of the Nature of the Holy Spirit of God in them, that they can be to us in his Stead, and make his sanctifying Operations upon us needed in a less Degree?

On the Part of God, our Redemption in Jesus Christ, and our Sanctification by the Holy Ghost, stand always in the same Degree of Nearness and Fulness to all of us; there is hardly a Chapter in the New Testament that can be understood, or its Doctrines observed, but upon the Supposition of this great Truth. If Christ is less formed in us than he was in the first Saints of the Church, if we come not to the perfect Man, to the Measure of the Stature of the Fulness of Christ, it is not because Christ is now become only our Redeemer in an ordinary Way or Degree, but it is because we have not so turned to him, not so turned from ourselves, not so counted all Things but Dung, that we might win Christ, and be found in him, as the first Saints did. If the Holy Spirit does not now in such a Degree renew, quicken, move, and sanctify our Hearts, and fill us with such Degrees of Divine Light and Love, as was done in the first Age of the Church, it is not because this sanctifying Spirit has committed some Part of his Work to human Learning, and so is become only our Sanctifier in a lesser and ordinary Degree, but it is because we ourselves have forsaken this Fountain of living Waters, and hewed out broken Cisterns for ourselves; it is because we have grieved this holy Spirit, resisted his Motions, quenched his holy Fire, and under an outward Profession of Christ have kept up that Old Man, with his Deeds, which cannot be the Temple and Habitation of the Holy Spirit.

If therefore we have any true Sense of the Nature and Weight of our Ecclesiastical Calling, any Desire to do the full Work of the Ministry, to satisfy the Wants and Necessities of our Flocks, if we have any Fear of being condemned as useless, insignificant Labourers in Christ's Vineyard, it is high time to awake from this Dream of an ordinary and extraordinary Sanctification of the Holy Spirit; it serves only to keep us unsanctified, shut up in Death, in the dead Workings of our own corrupted Nature, to keep us learnedly content with our State, as if we were rich, and increased in Goods, and had Need of nothing,* and hinders us from knowing that we are wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked.

Several of the Clergy, whose Lot is fallen in this corrupt Age, may be supposed to have taken upon them the sacred Office, and to have lived in it, not enough according to the Nature and Spirit of it, merely through the Degeneracy of the Times, and from a Consideration that they are well enough, according to the Measure of Religion that now passes in the World. And perhaps there are few, if any, of the Order, however eminent for good Works, whose Virtues have not received some Abatement from the same Cause. This therefore may be added as another Reason why all the Clergy of this Land should search into their Lives and Conduct with the utmost Severity, and bring everything to the Test of the Letter and Spirit of the Gospel.

The Christian Religion has not had its proper Effect, nor obtained its intended End, till it has so set up the Kingdom of God amongst us, that 'his Will is done on Earth, as it is done 'in Heaven.' This is the Perfection that every Christian, when advancing forward in the several Degrees of Holiness and Purification, is to tend to, and aspire after. And if they who are to be taught, are to be thus separated from an earthly Nature, thus emptied of all worldly Passions, thus dead to the Workings of Self-will, and Self-love, that the Spirit of God may be all in all in them, what Manner of Men ought they to be, who are to teach, promote, advance, and lead the Way to this Purity and Perfection? What a Distance ought he to be from every Appearance of Pride, that is to draw others to love and practise the profound Humility of the Blessed Jesus? How ought he to deny his Appetites, to humble his Body, and be steady in all Kinds of Self-Denial, who would convince his Flock that they who sow to the Flesh, shall of the Flesh reap Destruction? How heavenly-minded, how devoted to God, how attentive to the one Thing needful, how unspotted from the World ought he to be, who is to persuade others that they cannot possibly serve God and Mammon? How empty ought he to be of all selfish Cunning, all worldly Policy, all Arts and Methods of Ambition, who is to fix it deep in the Hearts of his Hearers, that unless they become as little Children, they cannot see, nor enter into the Kingdom of God? What open Hands, and open Heart ought he to have, what an Extent of Charity ought to be visible in him, who is to bring his Flock to this Faith, that 'it is more blessed 'to give than to receive?' How remarkably, undeniably plain, open, sincere, undesigning, and faithful, should he be, who is to recommend, plant, and establish sincerity, Plainness, Simplicity, Truth, and Innocence, amongst his Flock? There is such a necessary Fitness in these Things, that the Force and Power of Religion must be much prevented, when its Precepts are recommended to the World by such as excuse themselves from the plain and open Practice of them?

The Office of the Ministry is of the highest Nature; it is a Trust which no Language can sufficiently express; and the unfaithful Discharge of it is, of all Conditions in Life, the most dreadful. To be charged with the Death and Blood of Souls, by that God who laid down his Life to redeem them, is a Condemnation that will carry more of Guilt and Punishment in it than any other. Would you know the Office of a Christian Pastor, you must look at the Office of Christ; would you know what Manner of Spirit he ought to be of, you must look at the Spirit of Christ. For the Work of the Ministry is only the Work of Christ committed to other Hands, who are to supply his Absence, to be here in his Stead, to be doing the same Things, and with the same Spirit that he did, till the End of the World.

Nothing is so highly honourable as to bear a Part in the Priesthood of Christ, and be employed in the Work of the Ministry; but then it should be well considered, that it is only honourable in the same Sense as it may be said that nothing is more honourable than to suffer as a Martyr. It is an Honour that is as different from all worldly Figure and Distinction, as the Glory of Christ upon the Cross is different from the Triumph of an earthly Prince. When therefore we think of the Honour and Dignity of the Pastoral Function, we should be careful to remember, that it is only the Honour of dying a Martyr, an Honour of humbling, abasing, and sacrificing ourselves with Christ, and continuing the Exercise of his suffering Priesthood for the Salvation of the World. The holy Function is often considered only as an authoritative Commission to minister in holy Things; but it is much more than this; it is a Call and Command to act with the Spirit of Christ, to represent his Purity, to continue his Holiness, to bear a Part of his Sacrifice, and devote themselves for the Good of others, as he did. A Priest that has only his Ordination to distinguish him, wants as much to make him a true Priest, as Judas wanted to make him a true Apostle. For though Holiness gives no Man a Commission to exercise the Pastoral Office, yet all who are called to it, are as much ordained and appointed to a peculiar Holiness of Life, as to the Administration of the Sacraments; and when they cease to be as Light and Salt to the rest of the World, they sin against the Pastoral Office in as high a degree as they that enter upon it without any Authority.

For the sacred Office is God's Appointment, to continue through all Ages of the World, the Spirit and Power of Christ, for reconciling Men to God, in the same Manner, and by the same Means of Holiness, Sacrifice, and Devotion, which Christ exercised when he was upon Earth. We need no other Proof of this, than this one Saying of our Blessed Lord: 'As my Father hath sent me, so send I you.' That is, for all the Ends for which I am come into the World, for all the same Ends I send you into it, to be there in my stead, to supply my Absence, to carry on the Work that I have begun, to exercise my Power, to act with my Spirit, to continue the Exercise of my Love, and Labour, and Suffering, for the Salvation of Mankind. To be sent by our Blessed Lord for the same Ends as he was sent into the World, is such an Appointment of us to all Kinds and Degrees of Holiness, as can never be rightly discharged, but by our giving and devoting ourselves wholly and absolutely unto God.

Imagine that you had lived with our Blessed Lord when he was upon Earth, that you had learned the Dignity and Divinity of his Person, that you had seen the Love which he bore to Mankind, that you had entered into the glorious Designs of his Kingdom; which were, to convert the Inhabitants of the Earth, poor Creatures of Flesh and Blood, into Sons of God, and Heirs of eternal Glory.

Imagine that you had seen him after his Resurrection, when he had redeemed the World, conquered Sin, Death, and Hell, and was about to take Possession of his Throne; imagine that then, in that State, you had seen him commission some of his Followers to be Priests and Intercessors with God on Earth, as he had been, to feed, and nourish, and watch over his Flock, as he had done, to go before them in such exemplary Holiness, such Love of God, such Compassion for Sinners, such Contempt of the World, such Poverty of Spirit, such Obedience and Resignation, as they had him for an Ensamble; had you been present at all this, how would you then have heard and felt these Words: 'As my Father hath sent me, so send I you'?

What Sentiments of Piety, what Magnificence of Spirit, what exalted Holiness, would you have expected of those, who were called to succeed so great a Master in so great a Work? Could you think they could be fit for this Office, or were enough like him that had called them to it, unless they had renounced and sacrificed everything for the Sake of it? Could you think that any Care but that of the Church of God was proper for them? Would you not own that the Conversion of Sinners to God, ought to have been their one only Labour and Pains? that they were to seek for no other Happiness in this World, than such as their Lord and Master had done, but consider themselves as called from the common Affairs, Ease and Pleasures of Life, to be in Christ's Stead towards the rest of Mankind, to conduct them safely to eternal Happiness? Now when we consider the Apostles in this Light, as being the first that were entrusted with the Care of Souls, and from Christ himself, we can see no Degree of Zeal, no Height of Piety, no Compassion for Sinners, no Concern for the Honour of God, no Contempt of Sufferings, no Disregard of worldly Interest, no Watchings or Mortifications, no Fervours of Devotion, to which we of the Clergy are not equally obliged. For the Salvation of Mankind is still the same glorious, great and necessary Work that it was in their Days, is still to be carried on by the same Means, and is now in the Hands of the Clergy, as it was then in theirs. If it was their Happiness and Glory to be faithful to him that called them, to forget the little Interests of Flesh and Blood, and have nothing at Heart, but the Advancement of God's Kingdom, we shall fail both of Happiness and Glory, if we seek it any other way. If an Apostle, considering the Weight of reconciling Souls unto God, is forced to cry out, 'Who is sufficient for these things?' shall we think any Care but that which is the greatest, sufficient to make us stand uncondemned before God? It is a fatal Deception to imagine, that the Life of a Minister of God is ever to be a Life of Ease or worldly Repose. For though the temporal Sword be not always drawn against them, nor they forced to flee from one City to another, yet the World, the Flesh, and the Devil, have perhaps never so much Difficulty to be resisted, as in temporal Prosperity, nor have the Ministers of Christ ever more Occasion to put on all their Armour, than when the World is given up to Ease, and Peace, and Plenty. Swarms of Vice steal upon us in these Seasons, the Spirit and Life of Religion is in danger of being lost, and the Salvation of Souls is made more difficult, than in the most perilous Times. And how is such a State of Temptation to be resisted, such a Torrent of Vice to be opposed, but by the Clergy's showing themselves visible and notorious Examples of all the contrary Virtues. When Mankind are wallowing in Debauchery, wantoning in Pleasures, and given up to Vanity and Luxury in all Shapes, it is then the Duty of the faithful Minister, by his being crucified to the World, to proclaim himself the Messenger of a crucified Saviour, and to make his own self-denying, mortified, and heavenly Life, a plain, open, and constant Reproof of all vain Indulgences. For to yield to, or fall in with the Softness, Vanity, Luxury, Indulgence, or Avarice of the World, is the same Infidelity and Breach of Trust in the sacred Office, as to depart from the true Faith, and fall in with some abominable Heresy.

I believe I need not now help the Reader to observe, that the Doctor's Undertaking is further liable to these great Objections against it: First, That it calls us from the Sin and Danger of being Righteous over-much, when we are always to own, that we are not yet Righteous enough. Secondly, That it proposes to stir us up against this Sin and Danger, at a time, when this Nation is in Danger of the severest Judgments of God upon it, for a general Irreligion and Profaneness. Thirdly, That it tends to lead the Clergy from a just Sense of what the Nature of their Office, the Nature of Religion, and the present State of this Nation, requires of them. That it tends to raise an ill Spirit in them, not only to be content with an ordinary common Degree of Piety in themselves, and their Flocks, but, with a watchful, and jealous Eye to guard against all the Beginnings of an uncommon, or more than ordinary Sanctity of Life, either in themselves or others.

Thus, says he, 'To what a Height of Fanatic Madness in 'Doctrine, as well as Practice, are some advanced, who set out 'at first with an Appearance of more than ordinary Sanctity in 'Practice only?'* Is not this calling upon the Clergy to beware, how they admit these Beginnings of a more than ordinary Sanctity of Life, either in themselves, or those committed to their Care? Is it not plainly telling them, that they must stick closely and steadily to such Sanctity of Practice, as may be called ordinary, or else they will be in Fanatic Madness? Here is no Force put upon his Words, 'a more than ordinary Sanctity in 'Practice only,' is marked out as the genuine natural Cause of Fanatic Madness; and therefore the Cause is equally condemned with the Effect. Had he meant that his Reader should not have the same Dislike of the one, as of the other, or had he been afraid of his doing so, would he not have put in a Word in Favour of a more than ordinary Sanctity of Life? would he not have said, that he did not intend to blame that, or at least not so much as the other? But not a Word of this, a more than ordinary Sanctity in Practice only, and Fanatic Madness, are considered as Cause and Effect, and left in the same State of Condemnation, to be equally guarded against, and avoided by the Reader. So that in a Nation over-run with all manner of Corruption both of Principle and Practice, where the ordinary State of Religion has hardly the Form of Godliness, People are in this State of Things to content themselves with such a Sanctity of Life, as may be deemed to be ordinary.

And here I can't help addressing myself with great Affection to all my younger Brethren of the Clergy. According to the Course of Nature, you are likely to have the Care of the Church wholly upon your Hands in a short time; and therefore it is chiefly from you that the Restoration of true Piety is to be expected in this Nation. I beseech you, therefore, for your own Sakes, for the Gospel's Sake, for the Sake of Mankind, to devote yourselves wholly to the Love and Service of God. As you are yet but Beginners in this great Office, you have it in your Power to make your Lives the greatest Happiness, both to yourselves, and the whole Nation. You are entered into Holy Orders in degenerate Times, where Trade and Traffic have seized upon all holy Things; and it will be easy for you, without Fear, to swim along with the corrupt Stream, and to look upon him as an Enemy, or Enthusiast, that would save you from being lost in it. But think, my dear Brethren, think in time, what Remorse you are treasuring up for yourselves, if you live to look back upon a loose, negligent, corrupt, disorderly, worldly, unedifying Life, spent amongst those whose Blood will be required at your Hands. Think, on the other Hand, how blessedly your Employment will end, if by your Voices, your Lives, and Labours, you put a Stop to the Overflowings of Iniquity, restore the Spirit of the Primitive Clergy, and make all your Flock bless and praise God, for having sent you amongst them. Lay this down as an infallible Principle, that an entire, absolute Renunciation of all worldly Interest, is the only possible Foundation of that exalted Virtue which your Station requires. Without this, all Attempts after an exemplary Piety are in vain. If you want anything from the World by way of Figure and Exaltation, you shut the Power of your Redeemer out of your own Souls; and instead of converting, you corrupt the Hearts of those that are about you. Detest therefore, with the utmost Abhorrence, all Desires of making your Fortunes, either by Preferments or rich Marriages, and let it be your only Ambition to stand at the Top of every Virtue, as visible Guides and Patterns to all that aspire after the Perfection of Holiness. Consider yourselves merely as the Messengers of God, that are solely sent into the World on his Errand, and think it Happiness enough, that you are called to the same Business, for which the Son of God was born into the World. I don't call you from a sober Use of human Learning, but I would fain persuade you to think nothing worthy of your Notice in Books and Study, but that which directly applies to the Amendment of the Heart, which makes you more holy, more Divine, more heavenly, than you would be without it. You want nothing, but to have the Corruption of your natural Birth removed, to have the Nature, Life and Spirit of Jesus Christ derived into you; as this is all that you want, so let this be all that you seek from Books, Study, or Men. This is the only, certain Way to become eminent Divines, instructed to the Kingdom of Heaven. And above all, let me tell you, that the Book of all Books is your own Heart, in which are written and engraven the deepest Lessons of Divine Instruction; learn, therefore, to be deeply attentive to the Presence of God in your Hearts, who is always speaking, always instructing, always illuminating that Heart that is attentive to him. Here you will meet the Divine Light in its proper Place, in that Depth of your Souls, where the Birth of the Son of God, and the Proceeding of the Holy Ghost, are always ready to spring up in you: And be assured of this, that so much as you have of inward Attention to God in your Hearts, of inward Love and Adherence to his holy Light and Spirit within you, so much as you have of real, unaffected Humility and Meeekness, so much as you are dead to your own Will and Self-love, so much as you have of Purity of Heart, so much, and no more, nor any further, do you see and know the Truths of God. These Virtues are the only Eyes, and Ears, and Senses, and Heart, by which you will know and understand everything in Scripture, in that Manner, and in that Degree, in which God would have it understood, both for your own Good, and the Good of other People. It was owing to this Purity of Heart, and Attendance upon God, that an ancient Widow, named Anna,* knew him to be the true Messiah, whom the Rulers, Chief Priests, and Doctors of the Law, condemned as an Impostor. Had they, instead of their Adherence to critical Knowledge, and rabbinical Learning, been devoted to God in such Purity of Heart as she was, they had known as much of the Kingdom of God as she did. Place therefore all your Hope and Confidence, all your learned Help and Skill, in the ardent Love and Practice of these Virtues, and then, and then only, you will be able Ministers, holy Priests, and Messengers of God; your cleansed Hearts, like so many purified Mirrors, will be always penetrated, always illuminated, by the Rays of Divine Light, and you will no more need the Critics, to tell you what God speaks to you in the Scriptures, than to tell you what God speaks to you in your own Hearts. There are indeed in the Scriptures Secrets and Mysteries, only fully to be known in God's own Time, and not a Minute sooner; but of all Men in the World, the critical Dealers in Words and Particles, know the least of them, and make the vainest Attempts to understand them. But Scripture, considered as a Doctrine of Life, Faith, and Salvation in Jesus Christ, is a sealed or unsealed, an open or shut up Book to every Heart, in the same Proportion as it stands turned to the World, or turned to God. Nothing understands God, but the Spirit of God; nothing brings the Spirit of God into any Mind, but the renouncing all for it, the turning wholly to it, and the depending wholly upon it. Human Learning is by no means to be rejected from Religion; for it is of the same good Use and Service, and affords the same Assistance to Religion, that the Alphabet, Writing and Printing does. But if it is raised from this Kind and Degree of Assistance, if it is considered as a Key, or the Key, to the Mysteries of our Redemption in Jesus Christ, instead of opening to us the Kingdom of God, it locks us up in our own Darkness. It is a Truth confessed on all Hands, that the Kingdom of Grace is the Beginning of the Kingdom of Glory, and that they differ only in degree. Is not this plainly confessing, that the Light of the Kingdom of Grace must be one and the same with that of the Kingdom of Glory? How else can one be the Beginning of the other? And must not that, which is to be our one only Light in Heaven in a full Degree, be now our one only Light of all heavenly Things in a lower Degree? Therefore all that we see and know of the Kingdom of God now, must be by that same Light by which we shall see and know the Kingdom of God hereafter. God is an all-speaking, all-working, all-illuminating Essence, possessing the Depth, and bringing forth the Life of every Creature according to its Nature. Our Life is out of this Divine Essence, and is itself a creaturely Similitude of it; and when we turn from all Impediments, this Divine Essence becomes as certainly the true Light of our Minds here, as it will be hereafter. This is not Enthusiasm, but the Words of Truth and Soberness; and it is the running away from this Enthusiasm, that has made so many great Scholars as useless to the Church as tinkling Cymbals, and all Christendom a mere Babel of learned Confusion. I shall now only add one Word more: A composed Gravity of Life, a suitable Decency of outward Behaviour, is not the Thing that is demanded of you; your Piety must be solid, your Lives exemplary, the Perfection of your Virtues must shine before Men, or you will all of you in your several Degrees, stand chargeable with the ill State of Religion, that is about you.

I must now take Notice of an injurious Quotation or two that the Doctor has made from the Treatise of Christian Perfection. The Doctor quotes me as affirming, 'That not only the Wickedness and Vanity of this World, but even its most lawful and allowed Concerns, render Men unable to enter, and unworthy to be received into the true State of Christianity.' And again that 'the Wisdom from above condemns all Labour as equally fruitless, but that which labours after everlasting Life.' Then the Doctor affirms thus: 'Here's an utter Condemnation of all Trades, and of all Professions, of all Business, and secular Concerns whatever.'* Does the Doctor then believe that I bought Pen, Ink, and Paper, and wrote that Book, to show that no Christian ought to make, buy or sell Pen, Ink, and Paper? And that I published that Book to prove that it was my Opinion that it was utterly unlawful for a Christian to be a Printer, a Bookbinder, or a Bookseller? Does not the Doctor know, that the Christian Perfection in the Two first Pages, to prevent all Mistake, openly declares for the Continuance of Mankind in their several States and Conditions, openly declares against a Cloister, or any singular State of Life, openly asserts Christian Perfection to consist in the holy and religious Conduct of ourselves in every State of Life?† Does he not know that in the Serious Call to a Devout Life, &c., which presently followed the other Book, the very Title declares solely for a Piety adapted to the State and Condition of all Orders of Men? But there is something still more wonderful, more regardless of Right and Wrong in the Doctor's Charge against me; for in this very Passage quoted by him, secular Business is expressly affirmed to be most lawful and allowed Concerns. And yet from this Passage affirming the Lawfulness of worldly Business, and proceeding upon it as a certain Truth, the Doctor has extracted the Unlawfulness of all secular Concerns whatever. Again, Does not the Doctor know that he designedly mangled the Words he quoted, and left out that Part which showed the Reason of my so expressing myself? That I was there speaking to that Parable of our Lord's, where all that were bidden to the Feast, refused to come. The First, because he had bought a Piece of Ground; the other, because he must try his Oxen; the Third, because he had married a Wife. Then the Master in Anger said, 'None of these Men shall taste of my Supper.' Whence I thus observed 'This Parable teaches us, that not only the

'Vices and the Vanity of the World, but its most lawful and 'allowed Concerns, render Men unable to enter, and unworthy to 'be received into the true State of Christianity.' And does not everyone see this to be the plain, necessary, and inoffensive Sense of the Parable? Had I not made Nonsense of it, if I had said, that lawful Business could not become a Hindrance of Men's Salvation? For are there not here Three lawful Concerns become Three Hindrances of their coming to the Feast, and Three Reasons of their being declared unworthy of it? Then I go on to show, that it is not the Employment itself that is condemned, but its being made a Reason, or Excuse, as in the Parable, for not living wholly unto God, adding these Words, the 'true Wisdom from above condemns all Labour as equally 'fruitless, but that which labours after everlasting Life.' Let but Religion determine the Point, and what can it signify, whether a Man forgets God in his Farm, or a Shop, or at a Gaming Table? Now what is there here condemned, but the forgetting God? Or will anyone say, that a Shop, and a Farm, are here condemned, because God is to be remembered in them, or because they are to be made Employments of Piety, that labour after everlasting Life? The Doctor proceeds to charge me with 'positively asserting, that all Christians are, in all Ages, obliged 'to sell all that they have, and give it to the Poor.' I have been so far from asserting this, that I have with all my Might said, and proved the direct contrary, that no Christians of any Age are obliged to it. Speaking of the Command of our Saviour's to the young Man, 'to sell all, and give it to the Poor,' I have shown, by Variety of Arguments, and Texts of Scripture, that that Command calls no rich Man to sell what he has; that it calls him only to do that with his Estate, which he is called to, by the whole Tenour of Scripture, as having Riches, that are not his own, of which he is only a Steward, and not a Proprietor, as being obliged to love his Neighbour as himself in the Use of them. That the Command of selling all, implies only such heavenly Affection, such 'Disregard of Riches, as is expressed, 'by being dead to the World, having our Conversation in 'Heaven, being born again from above, and having overcome the 'World.' From the Beginning to the End of this Matter, I have utterly rejected all feeling, and shown, that it means only a perfect Charity, a parting with the Self-Enjoyment of our Estates, to make them, as far as we are able, the common Support of those People whom we are to love, as we love ourselves, and as Christ has loved us. The Doctor, therefore, in this Accusation, must be allowed to have stuck closely to his Text; he has not been Righteous over-much. The Doctor makes now an Inference or two from this Doctrine of Charity. 'According to this Divinity,' says he, 'it is a Sin to be rich.' Here he is just as wrong as he could possibly be. For, according to the Divinity in the Book of Christian Perfection, and the Serious Call, &c., the Blessedness, the Piety, the Happiness arising from the Possession of Riches, is demonstrated from Chapter to Chapter, and visibly painted in a great Variety of Characters. Those Two Books were published chiefly to show to rich Men their exceeding Happiness. And I can consistently say, that I should reckon it a Happiness to myself, to be one of the Number, supported only by this one Saying of our Lord's; that 'it is more blessed 'to give, than to receive.' Another Inference the Doctor makes, is this; that according to this Divinity, 'if a Man sues you for 'your House or Land, without the least Pretence of Right, you 'are bound to recede from your Right, and let him have it, rather 'than defend it.* There had been as much Truth, and more Wit, if he had said, when Thieves have any Design of entering into your House, you are obliged to have no Locks or Bolts upon your Doors. For I have said no more of the Unlawfulness of appealing to Courts of Justice, to secure us in the just Possession of our House and Land, than of the Unlawfulness of going to a Smith for Locks and Bolts, when Thieves want to have our Goods. I take it to be as lawful to live under human Government, and to enjoy the Benefit of it, as to live under the Light and Benefit of the Sun. And I look upon Courts of Justice, which are to protect People in the Enjoyment of their Property, to be the first and chief Benefit of Government. And if they were absolutely unlawful, for the same Reason would all Locks, and Doors, and Fences be so too. On the other hand, I have said, that the abstaining from Contentions at Law, choosing to suffer, and bear with Variety of Injuries, where we might legally defend ourselves, and bring Punishment upon those that injure us, is a proper Part of Christian Self-denial, a just Conformity to the Meekness, and suffering Spirit of our Blessed Lord, and highly beneficial to our own spiritual Advancement. And must not everyone, that owns the Gospel, say the same? Has not our Saviour himself first said so? But does it therefore follow, that a Man has no Rights, or none that he may own; because it may be often, and in many Cases, a Matter of great Piety to suffer wrongfully with Patience? The short of the Matter is this: All Things that are lawful, are not expedient, nor edifying. Of Contentions at Law, most of them are very apt to do us great Hurt, many of them are piously to be avoided, through Patience and Meek-suffering of Wrong; but some may be necessary, even as Parts of our Duty. Is there anything more plain, or self-evident, than this? The Doctor might have observed, that I spoke of Law-Suits only under the Article of Self-denial, and therefore was only to speak of the Duty, Piety and Benefit, of forbearing from them; that there was great Necessity that this Doctrine of Meekness, and patient Suffering of ill Usage, should be fully set forth, both to Clergy and Laity; that I had no more Reason to tell People that Courts of Justice were in themselves lawful, and such as might justly be appealed to in some Cases, than to tell them that it was lawful to live in this Island, and that they need not seek for a Country where there was no Laws nor Government to protect them. The Doctor has something like an excuse for the Weakness and Injustice of all the foregoing Remarks and Censures; they are to be considered only as little Dashes of his Pen upon Books, which he says 'are not considerable enough to be formally refuted.*' Something like this I remember was formerly said by the Bishop of Bangor, now Lord Bishop of Winchester, concerning my Letters to him. But his Lordship had the Prudence and Equity not to make inconsiderate Remarks upon Books, that he thought not inconsiderable enough to be formerly refuted by him. Into whose Head could it enter to think of formally confuting Thomas à Kempis, Taylor's Life of Christ, or his Holy Living and Dying? Or what must we think of his Piety, who should say, that he only forbore such a Work, because the Reasonings in those Books were too inconsiderable to be formally refuted? I desire no Authority for what I have written, but the Gospel, or I could soon show that everything in my Books that offends the Doctor, is again and again to be found, not only in these pious Authors, but in the Writings of the most eminent Saints through all Ages of the Church.

I Have Nothing to say by way of Preface or Introduction. I only ask this Favour of the Reader, that he would not pass any Censure upon this Book, from only dipping into this, or that particular Part of it, but give it one fair Perusal in the Order it is written, and then I shall have neither Right, nor Inclination to complain of any Judgment he shall think fit to pass upon it.

An Appeal to all who Doubt the Truths of the Gospel.

Chapter I.

Of Creation in general. Of the Origin of the Soul. Whence Will and Thought are in the Creature. Why the Will is free. The Origin of Evil solely from the Creature. This World not a first, immediate Creation of God. How the World comes to be in its present State. The first Perfection of Man. All Things prove a Trinity in God. Man hath the triune Nature of God in Him. Arianism and Deism confuted by Nature. That Life is uniform through all Creatures. That there is but one kind of Death to be found in all Nature. The fallen Soul hath the Nature of Hell in it. Regeneration is a real Birth of a Divine Life in the Soul. That there is but one Salvation possible in Nature. This Salvation only to be had from Jesus Christ. All the Deist's Faith and Hope proved to be false.

IT has been an Opinion commonly received, though without any Foundation in the Light of Nature, or Scripture, that God created this whole visible World, and all Things in it, out of Nothing. Nay, that the Souls of Men, and the highest Orders of Beings, were created in the same Manner. The Scripture is very decisive against this Original of the Souls of Men. For Moses saith, 'God breathed

58 An Appeal to all who doubt

'into Man (Spiraculum Vitarum) the Breath of Lives, and Man 'became a Living Soul.' Here the Notion of a Soul created out of Nothing, is in the plainest, strongest Manner rejected, by the first Written Word of God ; and no Jew or Christian can have the least Excuse for falling into such an Error ; here the highest and most Divine Original is not darkly, but openly, absolutely, and in the strongest Form of Expression ascribed to the Soul ; it came forth as a Breath of Life, or Lives, out from the Mouth of God, and therefore did not come out of the Womb of Nothing, but is what it is, and has what it has in itself, from, and out of the first and highest of all Beings.

For to say that God breathed forth into Man the Breath of Lives, by which He became a Living Soul, is directly saying, that That which was Life, Light, and Spirit in the living God, was breathed forth from Him to become the Life, Light and Spirit of a Creature. The Soul therefore being declared to be an Effluence from God, a Breath of God, must have the Nature and Likeness of God in it, and is, and can be nothing else, but something, or so much of the Divine Nature, become creaturely existing, or breathed forth from God, to stand before Him in the Form of a Creature.

When the Animals of this World were to be created, it was only said, Let the Earth, the Air, the Water bring forth Creatures after their kinds ; but when Man was to be brought forth, it was said, 'Let us make Man in our own Image and 'Likeness.' Is not this directly saying, Let Man have his Beginning and Being out of us, that He may be so related to us in his Soul and Spirit, as the Animals of this World are related to the Elements from which they are produced. Let Him so come forth from us, be so breathed out of us, that our triune, Divine Nature may be manifested in Him, that he may stand before us as a creaturely Image, Likeness, and Representative of that which we are in ourselves.

Now, from this original Doctrine of the Creation of Man, known to all the first Inhabitants of the World, and published in the Front of the first Written Word of God ; these great Truths have been more or less declared to all the Nations of the World. First, That all Mankind are the created Offspring of the One God. Secondly, That in all Men there is a Spirit or Breath of Lives, that did not begin to be out of Nothing, or was created out of Nothing ; but came from the true God into Man, as his own Breath of Life breathed into Him. Thirdly, That therefore there is in all Men, wherever dispersed over the Earth, a Divine, immortal, never-ending Spirit, that can have nothing of Death in it, but must live for ever, because it is the Breath of the ever- living God. Fourthly, That by this immortal Breath, or Spirit of God in Man, all Mankind stand in the same Nearness of Relation to God, are all equally his Children, are all under the same Necessity of paying the same Homage of Love and Obedience to Him, all fitted to receive the same Blessing and Happiness from Him, all created for the same eternal Enjoyment of his Love and Presence with them, all equally called to worship and adore Him in Spirit and Truth, all equally capable of seeking and finding Him, of having a Blessed Union and Communion with Him.

These great Truths, the first Pillars of all true and Spiritual Religion, on which the Holy and Divine Lives of the ancient Patriarchs was supported, by which they worshipped God in a true and right Faith; these Truths, I say, were most eminently and plainly declared in the express Letter of the Mosaic Writings, here quoted. And no Writer, whether Jewish or Christian, has so plainly, so fully, so deeply laid open the true Ground, and Necessity of an Eternal, never-ceasing Relation between God, and all the Human Nature; no one has so incontestably asserted the Immortality of the Soul, or Spirit of Man; or so deeply laid open, and proved the Necessity of one Religion, common to all Human Nature, as the Legislator of the Jewish Theocracy has done. Life and Immortality are indeed justly said to be brought to Light by the Gospel; not only because they there stand in a new Degree of Light, largely explained, and much appealed to, and absolutely promised by the Son of God Himself, but chiefly because the precious Means and Mysteries of obtaining a blessed Life, and a blessed Immortality, were only revealed, or brought to Light by the Gospel.

But the incontestable Ground and Reason of an immortal Life, and eternal Relation between God, and the whole Human Nature, and which lays all Mankind under the same Obligations to the same true Worship of God, is most fully set forth by Moses, who alone tells us the true Fact; How, and Why Man is immortal in his Nature, viz., because the Beginning of his Life was a Breath, breathed into Him from God; and for this End, that he might be a living Image and Likeness of God, created to partake of the Nature and Immortality of God.

This is the great Doctrine of the Jewish Legislator, and which justly places Him amongst the greatest Preachers of true Religion. St. Paul used a very powerful Argument to persuade the Athenians to own the true God, and the true Religion, when he told them, 'that God made the World and all Things therein; that He giveth Life and Breath, and all Things; that he hath made of one Blood, all Nations of Men to dwell on the Earth;

‘that they should all seek the Lord, if haply they might feel ‘after, and find Him, seeing He is not far from any of us, because ‘in Him we live, move, and have our Being.’* And yet this Doctrine, which St. Paul preaches to the Athenians, is nothing else, but that same Divine and Heavenly Instruction, which He had learnt from Moses, which Moses openly and plainly taught all the Jews. The Jewish Theocracy therefore was by no means an Intimation to that People, that they had no Concern with the true God, but as Children of this World, under his temporal Protection or Punishment ; for their Lawgiver left them no room for such a Thought, because He had as plainly taught them their eternal Nature and eternal Relation, which they had to God in common with all Mankind ; as St. Paul did to the Athenians, who only set before them that very Doctrine that Moses taught all the Jews. The great End of the Jewish Theocracy was to show, both to Jew and Gentile, the absolute, uncontrollable Power of the one God, by such a Covenanted Interposition of his Providence, that all the World might know, that the one God, from whom both Jew and Gentile were fallen away, by departing from the Faith and Religion of their First Fathers, was the only God, from whom all Mankind could receive either Blessing or Cursing.

This was the great Thing intended to be proclaimed to all the World by this Theocracy, viz., that only the God of Israel had Power to save or destroy, to punish or reward, according to his Pleasure ; and that therefore all the Gods of the Heathens, were mere Vanity. If therefore any Jews, by reason of those extraordinary Temporal Blessings and Cursings which they received under their Theocracy, grew grossly ignorant, or dully senseless of their eternal Nature, and eternal Relation to God, and of that one true Religion, which by Nature they were obliged to observe in common with all Mankind ; if they took God only to be their local or tutelary Deity, and themselves to be only Animals of this World ; such a Grossness of Belief was no more to be charged upon their great Lawgiver, Moses, than if they had believed, that a Golden Calf was their true God. But to return to the Creation.

2. It is the same Impossibility for a Thing to be created out of Nothing, as to be created by Nothing.† It is no more a Part, or Prerogative of God’s Omnipotence to create a Being out of Nothing, than to make a Thing to be, without any one Quality of Being in it ; or to make, that there should be Three, where there is neither Two, nor One. Every Creature is nothing else, but Nature put into a certain Form of Existence ; and therefore a Creature not formed out of Nature, is a Contradiction. A Circle, or a Square cannot be made out of Nothing, nor could any Power bring them into Existence, but because there is an Extension in Nature, that can be put into the Form of a Circle, or a Square : But if dead Figures cannot by any Power be made out of Nothing, who sees not the Impossibility of making Living Creatures, Angels, and the Souls of Men out of Nothing ?

3. Thinking and Willing are Eternal, they never began to be. Nothing can think, or will now, in which there was not Will and Thought from all Eternity. For it is as possible for Thought in General to begin to be, as for That which thinks in a particular Creature to begin to be of a Thinking Nature : therefore the Soul, which is a Thinking, Willing Being is come forth, or created out of That which hath Willed and Thought in God, from all Eternity. The created Soul is a Creature of Time, and had its Beginning on the Sixth Day of the Creation ; but the Essences of the Soul, which were then formed into a Creature, and into a State of Distinction from God, had been in God from all Eternity, or they could not have been breathed forth from God into the Form of a living Creature.

And herein lies the true Ground and Depth of the uncontrollable Freedom of our Will and Thoughts : They must have a Self-motion, and Self-direction, because they came out of the Self-existent God. They are eternal, Divine Powers, that never began to be, and therefore cannot begin to be in Subjection to any Thing. That which thinks and wills in the Soul, is That very same unbeginning Breath which thought and willed in God, before it was breathed into the Form of an human Soul ; and therefore it is, that Will and Thought cannot be bounded or constrained.

Herein also appears the high Dignity, and never-ceasing Perpetuity of our Nature. The Essences of our Souls can never cease to be, because they never began to be : and nothing can live eternally, but that which hath lived from all Eternity. The Essences of our Soul were a Breath in God before they became a Living Soul, they lived in God before they lived in the created Soul, and therefore the Soul is a Partaker of the Eternity of God, and can never cease to be. Here, O Man, behold the great Original, and the high State of thy Birth ; Here let all that is within thee praise thy God, who has brought Thee into so high a State of Being, who has given Thee Powers as eternal, and boundless as his own Attributes, that there might be no End or Limits of thy Happiness in Him. Thou beganest as Time began, but as Time was in Eternity before it became Days and Years, so Thou wast in God before Thou wast brought into the Creation: And as Time is neither a Part of Eternity, nor broken off from it, yet come out of it; so thou art not a Part of God, nor broken off from Him, yet born out of Him. Thou shouldst only will that which God willeth, only love that which He loveth, co-operate, and unite with Him in the whole Form of thy Life; because all that Thou art, all that Thou hast, is only a Spark of his own Life and Spirit derived into Thee. If thou desirest, inclinest, and turnest to God, as the Flowers of the Field desire, and turn towards the Sun, all the Blessings of the Deity will spring up in Thee; Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, will make their Abode with Thee. If thou turnest in towards thyself, to live to thyself, to be happy in the Workings of an own Will, to be rich in the Sharpness and Acuteness of thy own Reason, thou chooseth to be a Weed, and canst only have such a Life, Spirit and Blessing from God, as a Thistle has from the Sun. But to return.

4. To suppose a Willing, Understanding Being, created out of Nothing, is a great Absurdity. For as Thinking and Willing must have always been from all Eternity, or they could never have been either in Eternity, or Time; so, wherever they are found in any particular, finite Beings, they must of all Necessity, be direct Communications, or Propagations of that Thinking and Willing, which never could begin to be.

The Creation therefore of a Soul, is not the Creation of Thinking and Willing, or the making That to be, and to think, which before had Nothing of Being, or Thought; but it is the Bringing the Powers of Thinking and Willing out of their Eternal State in the One God, into a Beginning State of a Self-conscious Life, distinct from God. And this is God's omnipotent, creating Ability, that He can make the Powers of his own Nature become Creatural, Living, Personal Images of what He is in Himself, in a State of distinct Personality from Him: So that the Creature is one, in its finite, limited State, as God is one, and yet hath nothing in it, but that which was in God before it came into it: For the Creature, be it what it will, high or low, can be Nothing else, but a limited Participation of the Nature of the Creator. Nothing can be in the Creature, but what came from the Creator, and the Creator can give nothing to the Creature, but that which it hath in itself to give. And if Beings could be created out of Nothing, the Whole Creation could be no more a Proof of the Being of God, than if it had sprung up of itself out of Nothing: For if they are brought into Being out of Nothing, then they can have Nothing of God in them ; and so can bear no Testimony of God ; but are as good a Proof, that there is no God, as that there is one. But if they have any Thing of God in them, then they cannot be said to be created out of Nothing.

5. That the Souls of Men were not created out of Nothing, but are born out of an Eternal Original, is plain from hence ; from that Delight in, and Desire of Eternal Existence, which is so strong and natural to the Soul of Man. For nothing can delight in, or desire Eternity, or so much as form a Notion of it, or think upon it, or any way reach after it, but that alone which is generated from it, and come out of it. For it is a Self-evident Truth, that Nothing can look higher, or further back, than into its own Original ; and therefore, Nothing can look or reach back into Eternity, but that which came out of it. This is as certain, as that a Line reaches, and can reach no further back, than to that Point from whence it arose.

Our bodily Eyes are born out of the firmamental Light of this World, and therefore they can look no further than the Firmament : But our Thoughts know no Bounds ; therefore they are come out of that which is boundless. The Eyes of our Minds can look as easily backwards into that Eternity which always hath been, as into that which ever shall be ; and therefore it is plain, that That which Thinks and Wills in us, which so easily, so delightfully, so naturally penetrates into all Eternity, has always had an Eternal Existence, and is only a Ray or Spark of the Divine Nature, brought out into the Form of a Creature, or a limited, personal Existence, by the Creating Power of God.

6. Again. Every Soul shrinks back, and is frightened at the very Thought of falling into Nothing. Now this undeniably proves, that the Soul was not created out of Nothing. For it is an Eternal Truth, spoken by all Nature, that every Thing strongly aspires after, and cannot be easy, till it finds and enjoys that Original out of which it arose. If the Soul therefore was brought forth out of Nothing, all its Being would be a Burden to it ; it would want to be dissolved, and to be delivered from every kind and Degree of Sensibility ; and nothing could be so sweet and agreeable to it, as to think of falling back into That Nothingness, out of which it was called forth by its Creation. Thus is the Eternal, immortal, Divine Nature of the Soul, which the Schools prove with so much Difficulty one of the most obvious, self-evident Truths in all Nature. For Nothing but that which is Eternal in its own Nature, can have the least Thought about Eternity.

If a Beast had not the Nature of the Earth in it, Nothing that is on the Earth, or springs out of it, could be in the least Degree agreeable to it, or desired by it. If the Soul had not the Nature of Eternity in it, Nothing that is eternal could give it the smallest Pleasure, or be able to make any kind of Impression upon it. For as Nothing can taste, or relish, or enter into the agreeable Sensations of this World, but that which hath the Nature of this World in it; so Nothing can taste, or relish, or look into Eternity with any kind of Pleasure, but that which hath the Nature of Eternity in it.

7. If the Soul was not born, or created out of God, it could have no Happiness in God, no Desire, nor any Possibility of enjoying Him. If it had nothing of God in it, it must stand in the utmost Distance of Contrariety to him, and be utterly incapable of living, moving, and having its Being in God: For every Thing must have the Nature of That, out of which it was created, and must live, and have its Being in that Root or Ground from whence it sprung. If therefore there was nothing of God in the Soul, nothing that is in God could do the Soul any Good, or have any kind of Communication with it; but the Gulf of Separation between God and the Soul, would be even greater than that which is between Heaven and Hell.

8. But let us rejoice, that our Soul is a Thinking, Willing Being, full of Thoughts, Cares, Longings, and Desires of Eternity; for this is our full Proof, that our Descent is from God Himself, that we are born out of Him, breathed forth from him; that our Soul is of an Eternal Nature, made a Thinking, Willing, Understanding Creature out of That which hath Willed and Thought in God from all Eternity; and therefore must, for ever and ever, be a Partaker of the Eternity of God.

And here you may behold the sure Ground of the absolute Impossibility of the Annihilation of the Soul. Its Essences never began to be, and therefore can never cease to be; they had an Eternal Reality before they were in, or became a distinct Soul, and therefore they must have the same Eternal Reality in it. It was the Eternal Breath of God before it came into Man, and therefore the Eternity of God must be inseparable from it. It is no more a Property of the Divine Omnipotence to be able to annihilate a Soul, than to be able to make an Eternal Truth become a Fiction of Yesterday: And to think it a Lessening of the Power of God, to say, that he cannot annihilate the Soul, is as absurd, as to say, that it is a Lessening of the Light of the Sun, if it cannot destroy, or darken its own Rays of Light.

O, dear Reader, stay a while in this important Place, and learn to know thyself: All thy Senses make Thee to know and feel, that thou standest in the Vanity of Time; but every Motion, Stirring, Imagination, and Thought of thy Mind, whether in fancying, fearing, or loving Everlasting Life, is the same infallible Proof, that Thou standest in the Midst of Eternity, art an Offspring and Inhabitant of it, and must be for ever inseparable from it. Ask when the first Thought sprung up, find out the Birth-Day of Truth, and then thou wilt have found out, when the Essences of thy Soul first began to be. Were not the Essences of thy Soul as old, as Unbeginning, as unchangeable, as Everlasting as Truth itself, Truth would be at the same Distance from Thee, as absolutely unfit for Thee, as utterly unable to have any Communion with Thee, as to be the Food of a Worm.

The Ox could not feed upon the Grass, or receive any Delight or Nourishment from it, unless Grass and the Ox had one and the same Earthly Nature and Original; Thy Mind could receive no Truth, feel no Delight and Satisfaction in the Certainty, Beauty, and Harmony of it, unless Truth and the Mind stood both in the same Place, had one and the same unchangeable Nature, Unbeginning Original. If there will come a Time, when Thought itself shall cease, when all the Relations and Connections of Truth shall be untied; then, but not till then, shall the Knot, or Band of thy Soul's Life be unloosed. It is a Spark of the Deity, and therefore has the Unbeginning, Unending Life of God in it. It knows nothing of Youth, or Age, because it is born Eternal. It is a Life that must burn for ever, either as a Flame of Light and Love in the Glory of the Divine Majesty, or as a miserable Firebrand in that God, which is a Consuming Fire.

9. It is impossible, that this World, in the State and Condition it is now in, should have been an immediate and Original Creation of God: This is as impossible, as that God should create Evil, either Natural or Moral. That this World hath Evil in all its Parts; that its Matter is in a corrupt, disordered State, full of Grossness, Disease, Impurity, Wrath, Death and Darkness, is as evident, as that there is Light, Beauty, Order and Harmony everywhere to be found in it. Therefore it is as impossible, that this outward State and Condition of Things, should be a first and immediate Work of God, as that there should be Good and Evil in God Himself. All Storms and Tempests, every Fierceness of Heat, every Wrath of Cold proves with the same Certainty, that outward Nature is not a first Work of God, as the Selfishness, Envy, Pride, Wrath, and Malice of Devils, and Men proves, that they are not in the first State of their Creation. As no Kind or Degree of Moral Evil could possibly have its Cause in, or from God, so there cannot be the least Shadow of Imperfection and Disorder in outward

Nature, but what must have sprung up in the same manner, and from the same Causes, as Sickness and corrupt Flesh is come into the Human Body, namely, from the Sin of the Creature. Storms, Tempests, Gravel, Stone, sour and dead Earth are the same Things, the same Diseases, the same Effects of Sin, produced in the same manner in the outward Body of Nature, as corrupt Flesh, Fevers, Dropsies, Plagues, Gravel, Stone, and Gout, are produced in the outward Body of Man. For That, and That only which produces Stone in the Body of Man, did produce Stone in the outward Nature, as shall plainly appear by and by. For Nature within, and without Man, is one and the same, and has but one and the same way of Working; a Stone in the Body, and a Stone out of the Body of Man, proceeds from one and the same Disorder of Nature.

When therefore you see a diseased, gouty, leprous, asthmatical, scorbutic Man, you can with the utmost Certainty say, this is not that Human Body which God first created in Paradise; so, when you see the Disorders of Heat and Cold, the poisonous Earth, unfruitful Seasons, and malignant Qualities of outward Nature, you can with the same Certainty affirm, this State of Nature is not a first Creation of God, but that same must have happened to it, which has happened to the Body of Man. For dark, sour, hard, dead Earth, can no more be a first, immediate Creation of God, than a Wrathful Devil, as such, can be created by Him. For dark, sour, dead Earth is as disordered in its kind, as the Devils are, and has as certainly lost its first heavenly Condition and Nature, as the Devils have lost theirs. But now, as in Man, the little World, there is Excellency and Perfection enough to prove, that Human Nature is the Work of an all-perfect Being, yet, so much Impurity and Disease of corrupt Flesh and Blood, as undeniably shows, that Sin has almost quite spoiled the Work of God. So, in the great World, the Footsteps of an infinite Wisdom in the Order and Harmony of the Whole, sufficiently appears; yet, the Disorders, Tumults, and Evils of Nature, plainly demonstrate, that the present Condition of this World is only the Remains or Ruins, first, of a Heaven spoiled by the Fall of Angels, and then of a Paradise lost by the Sin of Man. So that Man, and the World in which He lives, lie both in the same State of Disorder and Impurity, have both the same Marks of Life and Death in them, both bring forth the same sort of Evils, both want a Redeemer, and have need of the same kind of Death and Resurrection, before they can come to their first State of Purity and Perfection.

10. That this outward World was not created out of Nothing, is plainly taught by St. Paul, who declares, Rom. i. 20, that the

the Truths of the Gospel. 67

Creation of the World is out of the Invisible Things of God; so that the outward Condition and Frame of Visible Nature, is a plain Manifestation of that Spiritual World from whence it is descended. For as every Outside necessarily supposes an Inside, and as temporal Light and Darkness must be the Product of Eternal Light and Darkness, so this outward, visible State of Things necessarily supposes some inward, invisible State, from whence it is come into this Degree of Outwardness. Thus all that is on Earth is only a Change or Alteration of something that was in Heaven: And Heaven itself is Nothing else but the first glorious Out-birth, the Majestic Manifestation, the beatific Visibility of the One God in Trinity. And thus we find out, how this temporal Nature is related to God; it is only a gross Out-birth of that which is an Eternal Nature, or a blessed Heaven, and stands only in such a Degree of Distance from it, as Water does to Air; and this is the Reason why the last Fire will, and must turn this gross, Temporal Nature into its first, heavenly State. But to suppose the gross Matter of this World to be made out of Nothing, or to be a Grossness that has proceeded from Nothing, or compacted Nothing, is more absurd, than to suppose Ice that has congealed Nothing, a Yard that is not made up of Inches, or a Pound that is not the Product of Ounces.

11. And indeed to suppose this, or any other material World to be made out of Nothing, has all the same Absurdities in it, as the supposing Angels and Spirits, to be created out of Nothing.

All the Qualities of all Beings are Eternal; no real Quality or Power can appear in any Creature, but what has its eternal Root, or generating Cause in the Creator. If a Quality could begin to be in a Creature, which did not always exist in the Creator, it would be no Absurdity to say, that a Thing might begin to be, without any Cause either of its Beginning, or Being. All Qualities, Properties, or whatever can be affirmed of God, are self-existent, and necessary existent. Self and necessary Existence is not a particular Attribute of God, but is the general Nature of every Thing that can be affirmed of God. All Qualities and Properties are self-existent in God: Now, they cannot change their Nature when they are derived, or formed into Creatures, but must have the same Self-birth, and necessary Existence in the Creature, which they had in the Creator. The Creature begins to be, when, and as it pleased God; but the Qualities which are become Creaturely, and which constitute the Creature, are self-existent, just as the same Qualities are in God. Thus, Thinking, Willing, and Desire can have no outward Maker, their Maker is in themselves, they are self-existent Powers wherever they are, whether in God, or in the Creature, and as they form themselves in God, so they form themselves in the Creature. But now, if no Quality can begin to be, if all the Qualities and Powers of Creatures must be eternal and necessary existent in God, before they can have any Existence in any Creature; then it undeniably follows, that every created Thing must have its whole Nature from, and out of the Divine Nature.

All Qualities are not only good, but infinitely perfect, as they are in God; and it is absolutely impossible, that they should have any Evil or Defect in them, as they are in the One God, who is the great and Universal All. Because, where all Properties are, there must necessarily be an all possible perfection: And that which must always have All in itself, must, by an absolute Necessity, be always all perfect. But the same Qualities, thus infinitely good and perfect in God, may become imperfect and evil in the Creature; because in the Creature, being limited and finite, they may be divided and separated from one another by the Creature itself. Thus Strength and Fire in the Divine Nature, are Nothing else but the Strength and Flame of Love, and never can be anything else; but in the Creature, Strength and Fire may be separated from Love, and then they are become an Evil, they are Wrath and Darkness, and all Mischief: And thus that same Strength and Quality, which in Creatures making a right Use of their own Will, or Self-motion, becomes their Goodness and Perfection, doth in Creatures making a wrong Use of their Will, become their evil and mischievous Nature: And it is a Truth that deserves well to be considered, that there is no Goodness in any Creature, from the highest to the lowest, but in its continuing to be such an Union of Qualities and Powers, as God has brought together in its Creation.

In the highest Order of created Beings, this is their standing in their first Perfection, this is their Fulfilling the whole Will or Law of God, this is their Piety, their Song of Praise, their Eternal Adoration of their great Creator. On the other hand, there is no Evil, no Guilt, no Deformity in any Creature, but in its dividing and separating itself from something which God had given to be in Union with it. This, and This alone, is the Whole Nature of all Good, and all Evil in the Creature, both in the moral and natural World, in Spiritual and Material Things. For Instance, dark, fiery Wrath in the Soul, is not only very like, but it is the very self-same Thing in the Soul which a Wrathful Poison is in the Flesh. Now, the Qualities of Poison are in themselves, all of them good Qualities, and necessary to every Life; but they are become a Poisonous Evil, because they are separated from some other Qualities. Thus also the Qualities of Fire and Strength that constitute an Evil Wrath in the Soul, are in themselves very good Qualities, and necessary to every good Life ; but they are become an evil Wrath, because separated from some other Qualities with which they should be united.

The Qualities of the Devil and all fallen Angels, are good Qualities ; they are the very same which they received from their infinitely perfect Creator, the very same which are, and must be in all heavenly Angels ; but they are an hellish, abominable Malignity in them now, because they have, by their own Self-motion, separated them from the Light and Love which should have kept them glorious Angels.

And here may be seen at once, in the clearest Light, the true Origin of all Evil in the Creation, without the least Imputation upon the Creator. God could not possibly create a Creature to be an infinite All, like Himself: God could not bring any Creature into Existence, but by deriving into it the self-existent, self-generating, self-moving Qualities of his own Nature : For the Qualities must be in the Creature, that which they were in the Creator, only in a State of Limitation ; and therefore, every Creature must be finite, and must have a Self-motion, and so must be capable of moving right and wrong, of uniting or dividing from what it will, or of falling from that State in which it ought to stand : But as every Quality, in every Creature, both within and without itself, is equally good, and equally necessary to the Perfection of the Creature, since there is nothing that is evil in it, nor can become evil to the Creature, but from itself, by its separating That from itself, with which it can, and ought to be united, it plainly follows, that Evil can no more be charged upon God, than Darkness can be charged upon the Sun ; because every Quality is equally good, every Quality of Fire is as good as every Quality of Light, and only becomes an Evil to that Creature, who, by his own Self-motion, has separated Fire from the Light in his own Nature.

12. If a delicious, fragrant Fruit had a Power of separating itself from that rich Spirit, fine Taste, Smell, and Colour which it receives from the Virtue of the Sun, and the Spirit of the Air ; or if it could in the Beginning of its Growth, turn away from the Sun, and receive no Virtue from it, then it would stand in its own first Birth of Wrath, Sourness, Bitterness, and Astringency, just as the Devils do, who have turned back into their own dark Root, and rejected the Light and Spirit of God : So that the hellish Nature of a Devil is Nothing else, but its own first Forms of Life, withdrawn, or separated from the heavenly Light and Love ; just as the Sourness, Astringency, and Bitterness of a Fruit, are Nothing else but the first Forms of its own vegetable Life before it has reached the Virtue of the Sun, and the Spirit of the Air.

And as a Fruit, if it had a Sensibility of itself, would be full of Torment, as soon as it was shut up in the first Forms of its Life, in its own Astringency, Sourness, and Stinging Bitterness : So the Angels, when they had turned back into these very same first Forms of their own Life, and broken off from the Heavenly Light and Love of God, they became their own Hell. No Hell was made for them, no new Qualities came into them, no Vengeance or Pains from the God of Love fell upon them ; they only stood in that State of Division and Separation from the Son, and Holy Spirit of God, which, by their own Motion, they had made for themselves. They had nothing in them, but what they had from God, the first Forms of an Heavenly Life, Nothing but what the most heavenly Beings have, and must have, to all Eternity ; but they had them in a State of Self-torment, because they had separated them from that Birth of Light and Love, which alone could make them glorious Sons, and blessed Images of the Holy Trinity.

The same strong Desire, fiery Wrath, and Stinging Motion is in Holy Angels, that is in Devils, just as the same Sourness, Astringency, and biting Bitterness is in a full ripened Fruit, which was there before it received the Riches of the Light and Spirit of the Air. In a ripened Fruit, its first Sourness, Astringency, and Bitterness is not lost, nor destroyed, but becomes the real Cause of all its rich Spirit, fine Taste, fragrant Smell, and beautiful Colour ; take away the working, contending Nature of these first Qualities, and you annihilate the Spirit, Taste, Smell, and Virtue of the Fruit, and there would be nothing left for the Sun and Spirit of the Air to enrich.

Just in the same manner, that which in a Devil is an evil Selfishness, a wrathful Fire, a Stinging Motion, is in an Holy Angel, the everlasting Kindling of a Divine Life, the strong Birth of an Heavenly Love, it is a real Cause of an ever-springing, ever-triumphing Joyfulness, an ever-increasing Sensibility of Bliss.

Take away the working, contending Nature of these first Qualities, which in a Devil, are only a Serpentine Selfishness, Wrath, Fire, and Stinging Motion ; take away these, I say, from Holy Angels, and you leave them neither Light, nor Love, nor heavenly Glory, Nothing for the Birth of the Son, and Holy Spirit of God to rise up in.

So that here you may see this glorious Truth, that the Love and Goodness of God is as plain and undeniable in having given to the fallen Angels, those very Qualities and Powers which are now their Hell, as in giving the first Sourness, Astringency and Bitterness to Fruits, which alone makes them capable of their delicious Spirit, Taste, Colour, and Smell.

13. And thus you see the uniform Life of all the Creatures of God; how they are all raised, enriched, and blessed by the same Life of God, derived into different Kingdoms of Creatures. For the Beginnings and Progress of a perfect Life in Fruits, and the Beginnings and Progress of a perfect Life in Angels, are not only like to one another, but are the very same Thing, or the working of the very same Qualities, only in different Kingdoms. Astringency in a Fruit, is the very same Quality, and does the same Work in a Fruit, that attracting Desire does in a Spiritual Being; it is the same Beginner, Former, and Supporter of a Creaturely Life in the one, as in the other. No Creature in Heaven, or Earth, can begin to be, but by this Astringency, or Desire, being made the Ground of it: And yet this Astringency kept from the Virtue of the Sun, can only produce a poisonous Fruit, and this astringent Desire in an Angel, turned from the Light of God, can only make a Devil. The biting, stinging Bitterness of a Fruit, if you could add Thought to it, would be the very gnawing Envy of the Devil: And the envious Motion in the Devil's Nature, would be Nothing else but that Stinging Bitterness which is in a Fruit, if you could take Thought from the Devil's Motion.

14. From this Attraction, Astringency, or Desire, which is one and the same Quality in every individual Thing, which is the first Form of Being and Life, the very Ground of every Creature, from the highest Angel to the lowest Vegetable, we are led by an unerring Thread to the first Desire, or that Desire which is in the Divine Nature. For as this Attraction, or astringent Desire is in Spiritual and corporeal Things, one and the same Quality, working in the same Manner, so is it one and the same Quality with that first, unbeginning Desire, which is in the Divine Nature.

That there is an attracting Desire in the Divine Nature, is undeniable, because Attraction is essential to all Bodies; and Desire, which is the same Quality, is absolutely inseparable from all intelligible Beings; therefore, that which is necessarily existent in the Creature, upon the Supposition of its Creation, must necessarily be in the Creator; because no inherent, operative Quality can be in the Creature, unless the same kind of Quality had always been in the Creator: Therefore, Attraction or Desire, which are inseparable from every created Being and Life, are only various Participations of the Divine Desire; or Emanations from it, formed into different Kingdoms of

Creatures, and working in all of them according to their respective Natures.

In Vegetables, it is that Attraction, or Desire, which brings every growing Thing to its highest Perfection: In Angels, it is that blessed Hunger, by which they are filled with the Divine Nature: In Devils, it is turned into that Serpentine Selfishness, or crooked Desire, which makes them a Hell and Torment to themselves.

15. On the other hand, as we thus prove a posteriori, from a View of the Creature, that there must be an attracting Desire in the Divine Nature; so we can prove a priori also, from a Consideration of God, that there must be an attracting Desire in every Thing that ever was, or can be created by God: For nothing can come into Being, but because God wills and desires it; therefore the Desire of God is the Creator, the Original of every Thing. The Creating Will, or Desire of God, is not a distant, or separate Thing, as when a Man wills or desires something to be done, or removed at a Distance from him; but it is an Omnipresent, working Will and Desire, which is itself, the Beginning and Forming of the Thing desired. Our own Will, and desirous Imagination, when they work and create in us a settled Aversion, or fixed Love of anything, resemble in some Degree, the Creating Power of God, which makes Things out of itself, or its own working Desire. And our Will, and working Imagination could not have the Power that it has now even after the Fall, but because it is a Product, or Spark of that first Divine Will or Desire which is omnipotent.

16. Here therefore we have plainly found the true Original, or first Source of all Things. The Desire in God is the first Former, Generator, and Creator of all Things; they are all the Births of this omnipotent, working Desire; for every Thing that comes into Being, must have the Nature of that Power that formed it, and therefore the Nature of every Creature must stand in an attractive Desire, that is, every Thing must be a Created, attractive Power; because it is the Birth, or Product of a Desire, or attractive Power, and could neither come into, nor continue in Being, but because it was generated not only by, but out of an attracting Desire. And herein lies the Band, or Knot of all created Being and Life.

17. Will or Desire in the Deity, is justly considered as God the Father, who from Eternity to Eternity, wills or generates only the Son, from which eternal Generating, the Holy Spirit eternally proceeds: And this is the infinite Perfection or Fulness of Beatitude of the Life of the Triune God.

Now, as the unbeginning, eternal Desire is in God, so is the created Desire in the Creature ; it stands in the same Tendency, hath the Nature of the Divine Desire, because it is a Branch out of it, or created from it. In the Deity, the Eternal Will or Desire, is a Desiring, or Generating the Son, whence the Holy Spirit proceeds ; the Desire that is come out of God into the Form of a Creature, has the same Tendency, it is a Desire of the Son and Holy Spirit. And every created Thing in Heaven and Earth attains its Perfection, by its Gaining in some Degree, the Birth of the Son and Holy Spirit of God in it : For all Attraction and Desire in the Creature, generates in them as it did in God ; and so the Birth of the Son and Holy Spirit of God arises in some Degree, or other, in all Creatures that are in their proper State of Perfection.

18. And here lies the Ground of that plain, and most fundamental Doctrine of Scripture, that the Father is the Creator, the Son the Regenerator, and the Holy Spirit the Sanctifier. For what is this but saying in the plainest manner, that as there are Three in God, so there must be Three in the Creature, that as the Three stand related to one another in God, so must they stand in the same Relation in the Creature. For if a threefold Life of God must have distinct Shares in the Creation, Blessing, and Perfection of Man, is it not a Demonstration, that the Life of Man must stand in the same threefold State, and have such a Trinity in it, as has its true Likeness to that Trinity which is in God ?

That which generates in God, must generate in the Creature ; and that which is generated in God, must be generated in the Creature ; and that which proceeds from this Generation in the Deity, must proceed from this Generation in the Creature : And therefore, the same threefold Life must be in the Creature in the same manner as it is in God. For a Creature that can only exist, and be blessed by the distinct Operation of a Triune God upon it, must have the same Triune Nature that is answerable to it. And herein lies our true, and easy, and sound, and edifying Knowledge and Belief of the Mystery of a Trinity in Unity : And this is all that the Scripture teaches us concerning it. It is not a Doctrine that requires learned or nice Speculations, in order to be rightly apprehended by us. But when with the Scriptures, we believe the Father to be our Creator, the Son our Regenerator, and the Holy Spirit the Sanctifier ; then we are learned enough in this Mystery, and begin to know the Triune God in the same Manner in Time, that we shall know him in Eternity.

And the Reason why this great Mystery of a Trinity in the Deity is thus revealed to us, and the Necessity of a Baptism in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, laid upon us, is this ; it is to show us, that the Divine, Triune Life of God is lost in us, and that nothing less than a Birth from the Son and Holy Spirit of God in us, can restore us to our first Likeness to that Triune God, who at first created us. This I have fully shown in the little Treatise upon Regeneration.

74 An Appeal to all who doubt

19. When Man was created in his Original Perfection, the Holy Trinity was his Creator ; the Breath of Lives, which became a Living Soul, was the Breath of the Triune God : But when Man began to will, and desire, that is, to generate contrary to the Deity, then the Life of the Triune God extinguished in him.

The Desire in Man being turned from God, lost the Birth of the Son, and the Proceeding of the Holy Spirit ; and so fell into, or under the Light and Spirit of this World : That is, of a Paradisaical Man, enjoying Union and Communion with Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and living on Earth in such Enjoyment of God, as the Angels live in Heaven, he became an Earthly Creature, subject to the Dominion of this outward World, capable of all its evil Influences, subject to its Vanity and Mortality ; and as to his outward Life, stood only in the highest Rank of Animals. This and This alone, is the true Nature and Degree of the Fall of Man ; it was neither more nor less than this. It was a Falling out of one World, or Kingdom, into another, it was changing the Life, Light and Spirit of God, for the Light and Spirit of this World. Thus it was that Adam died the very Day of his Transgression, he died to all the Influences and Operations of the Kingdom of God upon him, as we die to the Influences of this World, when the Soul leaves the Body ; and, on the other hand, all the Influences, Operations and Powers of the Elements of this Life became opened in him, as they are in every Animal at its Birth into this World.

All other Accounts of that Fall, which only suppose the Loss of some Moral Perfection, or Natural Acuteness of his Rational Powers, are not only senseless Fictions, but are an express Denial of the Old and New Testament Account of it ; for the Old Testament expressly says, that Adam was to die the Day of his Transgression, and therefore it is certain, that He then did die, and that the Fall was his losing his first Life : And to say that he did not die to that first Life in which he was created, is the same Denial of Scripture, as to say, that he did not eat of the forbidden Tree.

Again, the same Scripture assures us, that after the Fall, his Eyes were opened ; I suppose this is a Proof, that before the Fall, they were shut. And what is this, but saying in the plainest manner, that before the Fall, the Life, Light and Spirit of this World, were shut out of him? and that the Opening of his Eyes, was only another way of saying, that the Life and Light of this World were opened in him?

If an Angel, or any Inhabitant of Heaven, was to be sent of a Message into this World, it must be supposed, that neither the Darkness, nor Light of this World could act according to their Nature upon him; and therefore, though he was here, he must be said not to have the opened Eyes of this World: But if this Heavenly Messenger should be taken with our Manner of Life, should be in Doubts about returning to Heaven, and long to have such Flesh and Blood as ours is, as earnestly as Adam longed to eat of the earthly Tree; and if by this Longing, he should actually obtain that which he desired; must it not then be said of him, when he had got this new Nature, his Eyes were opened, to see Light and Darkness; and that only for this Reason, because the Heavenly Life was departed from him, and the Earthly Life of this World was opened in Him? And thus it was that Adam died, and thus his Eyes were opened.

Again, when his Eyes were thus opened, or the Light and Life of this World thus opened in him, he was immediately ashamed and shocked at the Sight of his own Body, and wanted to hide it from himself, and from the Sight of the Sun. Now, how could this have happened to him, if his Body had not undergone some very extraordinary Change, from a State of Glory and Perfection, to a lamentable Degree of Vileness and Impurity?

All the Terror at his fallen State, seems to arise from the sad Condition, in which he saw and felt his outward Body. This made him ashamed of himself; this made him tremble, at hearing the Voice of God; this made him creep behind the Trees, and endeavour to hide and cover his Body with Leaves.

And is not all this the same Thing, as if Adam had said, 'All my Sin, my Guilt, my Misery, and Shame, is published before Heaven and Earth, by this sad State and Condition in which my Body now appears.'

But now, what was this sad State and Condition of his Body? What did Adam see in the Manner and Form of it that filled him with such Confusion? Why, he only saw that he was fallen from his Paraisaical Glory, to have the same gross Flesh and Blood as the Beasts and Animals of this World have; which was, to bring forth an Offspring in the same earthly Manner, as they did. He could see, and be ashamed of no other Deformity in his Body, but that which he had in common with the Animals of this World; and therefore there was nothing else in his outward Form that He could be ashamed of; and yet it was his outward Form that filled him with Confusion. And is not this the greatest of all Proofs, that before his Fall, his Body had not this Nature and Condition of the Beasts in it? Is it not the same Thing, as if he had said, 'this Body which now makes me 'ashamed, and which I want to hide, though it be only with 'thin Leaves, because it brings me down amongst the Animals 'of this World, is not that first Body of Glory into which God at 'first breathed the Breath of Lives, and in which I became a 'Living Soul.'

Again, if Adam's Body had been of the same kind of Flesh and Blood as ours is now, only in a better State of Health and Vigour, How could he have been created Immortal? If he was not created Immortal, how can it be said, that Sin alone brought Mortality, or Death into human Nature? But if he had Immortality in his first created State, then he must have such a Body as none of the Elements, or Elementary Things of this World could act upon; for there is no Death in any Creature of this World, but what is brought upon it by that Strife and Destruction which the four Elements bring upon one another. But if Sin alone gave the Elements, and all Elementary Things their first Power of acting upon the Body of Adam; then it is plain, that before his Sin, he had not, could not have a Body of such Flesh and Blood as we now have, but that he stood, as to the State, Nature, and Condition of his outward Body, at as great a Distance and Difference from the Animals of this World, as Heaven does from Earth, and was created with Flesh and Blood as much exalted above, and superior to the Nature and Power of all the Elements, as the Beasts of this World are under them.

And herein plainly appears the true Sense of that saying, 'God made not Death,' that is, he made not That which is mortal, or dying in the Human Nature, but Sin alone formed and produced That in Man, which could, and must die like the Bodies of Beasts. Death, and the Grave, and the Resurrection, are all three, standing Proofs, that the Body of bestial Flesh and Blood, which we now have, at the Sight of which Adam was ashamed, which must die, which can rot in the Grave, which must not be seen after the Resurrection, was not that first Body, in which Adam appeared before God in Paradise: For if it is an undeniable Truth of Scripture, that this Flesh and Blood cannot enter into the Kingdom of God; it must be a Truth of the same Certainty, that this Flesh and Blood could not by God Himself be brought into Paradise; but that it must have the same Original with every other polluted Thing that is an Abomination in his Sight, or incapable of entering into the Kingdom of God.

20. That the Gospel also plainly shows, that Man was created in the Dignity and glorious Enjoyment of the Triune Life of God, and that his Fall, was a falling into the earthly Life of the Light and Spirit of this World, I have sufficiently proved from the greatest Articles of our Christian Faith, concerning the Necessity, Nature, and Manner of our Redemption, in the Book of Christian Regeneration. I have there shown, that Baptism in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, signifies Nothing but our being born again into this Triune Life of God.—That the Necessity of being born again of the Word or Son of God, of being born of the Spirit, or receiving Him as a Sanctifier of our newly raised Nature, plainly proves that what we lost by the Fall, was this Triune Life of God : He that denies this, denies the whole of the Christian Redemption.*

21. It has been already observed, that when Man was created in his Original Perfection, the Holy Trinity was his Creator ; but when Man was fallen, or had lost his first Divine Life, then there began a new Language of a Redeeming Religion. Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were now to be considered, not as creating every Man as they created the Frst, but as differently concerned in raising the fallen Race of Mankind, to that first Likeness of the Holy Trinity in which their first Father was created : Hence it is, that the Scriptures speak of the Father, as Drawing, and Calling Men ; because the Desire which is from the Father's Nature, must be the first Mover, Stirrer, and Beginner. This Desire must be moved and brought into an anguishing State, and have the Agitation of a Fire that is kindling ; and then Men are truly drawn by the Father.

The Son of God is now considered as the Regenerator or Raiser of a new Birth in us ; because he enters a second Time into the Life of the Soul, that his own Nature and Likeness may be again generated in it, and that he may be That to the Soul in its State, which he is to the Father in the Deity.

The Holy Ghost is represented as the Sanctifier, or Finisher of the Divine Life restored in us ; because as in the Deity, the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son, as the amiable, blessed Finisher of the Triune Life of God ; so the fallen Nature of Man cannot be raised out of its unholy State, cannot be blessed and sanctified with its true Degree of the Divine Life, till the Holy Spirit arises up in it.

Since then the Triune God, or the three Persons in the one God, must have this Difference of Shares, must reach out this different Help to the Raising up of fallen Man, it is undeniable, that the first created Man stood in the Image and real Likeness of the one God, not only representing, but really having in his Birth and Life, the Birth and Life of the Holy Trinity. God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost had such a Unity in Trinity in Man, as they had in the Deity itself: How else could Man be the Image and Likeness of the Holy Trinity, if it was not such a Birth in Man, as it was in itself? Or, how could the Holy Trinity dwell and operate in Man, each Person according to its respective Nature, unless there was the same threefold Life in Man as there is in God? How could the Holy Trinity be an Object of Man's Worship and Adoration, if the Holy Trinity had not produced itself in Man? The Creature is only to own and worship its Creator; therefore Father, Son, and Holy Ghost must have each of them their Creaturely Offspring, or Product in Man, if Man is to worship Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. If therefore you deny Angels, and the Souls of perfect Men to have the triune Nature, or Life of God in them: If you deny that Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, have such Union and Relation in the Soul, as they have out of it, you are guilty of as great Heresy and Apostacy from the Gospel, as if you denied the Father to be the Creator or Him that calleth and draweth, the Son to be the Redeemer, or Him that regenerateth, and the Holy Spirit to be Him that sanctifieth Human Nature.

* See Spirit of Prayer, Part II., page 63, &c., page 91. Way to Divine Knowledge, pages 39-53.

78 An Appeal to all who doubt

22. Again: Consider this great Truth, which will much illustrate this Matter; you can be an Inhabitant of no World, or a Partaker of its Life, but by its being inwardly the Birth of your own Life, or by having the Nature and Condition of that World born in you. As thus, Hell must be inwardly born in the Soul, it must arise up within it, as it does without it, before the Soul can become an Inhabitant of it.

Again: That which is the Life of this outward World, viz., its Fire, and Light, and Air, must have such a State and Birth within you, as they have without you, before you can be an Inhabitant or Partaker of the Life of this World; that is, Fire must be in you, must be the same Fire, have the same Place and Nature within you, have the same Relation to the Light and Air that is within you, as it has without you, or else the Fire of the outward World, cannot keep up, or have any Communion with your own Life.

The Light of this World can signify nothing to you, cannot reach or enrich you with its Powers and Virtues, if the same Light is not arisen in the same Manner in the kindling of your own Life, as it arises in the outward World.

The Air also of this World can do you no Good, can be no

Blower up and Preserver of your Life, but because it has the same Birth in you, that it has in outward Nature. And therefore it must be a Truth of the greatest Certainty, that so it must of all Necessity be with Respect to the Kingdom of God, or that Life which is to be had in the Beatific Presence of God; it must, by an absolute Necessity, have the same Birth within you, as it has without you, before you can enter into it, or become an Inhabitant of it: If you are to live, and be eternally blessed in the triune Life, or Beatific Presence of God, that Triune Life, must, of the utmost Necessity, first make itself creaturely in you; it must be and arise in you, as it does without you, before you can possibly enter into any Communion with it.

Now is there any Thing more plain and Scriptural, more easy to be conceived, more pious to be believed, and more impossible to be denied, than all this? And yet this is all that I have said, in two Propositions in the Treatise upon Christian Regeneration: It is there said, 'Man was created by God after his own Image, 'and in his own Likeness, a Living Mirror of the Divine Nature; 'where Father, Son, and Holy Ghost each brought forth their 'own Nature in a Creaturely Manner.' Now, what is this, but saying, That the Holy Trinity brought forth a Creature in its own Likeness, standing in a creaturely Birth of the Divine, triune Life? If it did not stand thus, how could it have a Likeness of the Holy Trinity? Or how could it have its Form or Creation from the Holy Trinity? Or how could it without this triune Life in itself, enter into, or be a Partaker of the triune Life or Presence of God? In the next Proposition it is said; 'In it, 'that is, in this created Image of the Holy Trinity, the Father's 'Nature generated the Divine Word, or Son of God, and the 'Holy Ghost proceeded from them both as an amiable, moving 'Life of both. This was the Likeness or Image of God, in which 'the first Man was created, a true Offspring of God, in whom 'the Divine Birth sprung up as in the Deity, where Father, Son, 'and Holy Ghost, saw themselves in a creaturely manner.'

Now, what is this, but saying in the plainest Manner, only thus much, that the triune, creaturely Life stood in the same Birth and Generation of its threefold Life, as the Deity doth, whose Image, Likeness, and Offspring it is? And can it possibly be otherwise; for if the Creature cometh from the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as their created Image and Likeness, must not That which it hath from the Father, be of the Nature of the Father, That which it hath from the Son, be of the Nature of the Son, and That which it hath from the Holy Ghost, be of the Nature of the Holy Ghost? And must they not therefore stand in the Creature in such Relation to one another, as they do in the Creator? If it is the Nature of the Father to generate, if it is the Nature of the Son to be generated, if it is the Nature of the Holy Ghost to proceed from both, must not That which you have from the Father generate in you, That which you have from the Son be generated in you, and that which you have from the Holy Ghost, proceed from both in you? All which is only saying this plain and obvious Truth, that That Being, or created Life, which you have from Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, must stand in such a triune Relation within you as it does without you; that having this threefold Likeness of God, you may be capable of entering into an Enjoyment of his triune, beatific Life or Presence.

For, consider again this Instance, with regard to the Life of this World. The Fire, and Light, and Air, of outward Nature, must become creaturely in you; that is, you must have a Fire that is your own creaturely Fire, you must have a Light that is generated by, or from your own Fire, a Breath that proceeds from your own Fire and Light, as the Air of outward Nature proceeds from its Fire and Light: You must have all this Nature and Birth of Fire, and Light, and Air in your own creaturely Being, or you cannot possibly live in, or have a Life from the Fire, and Light, and Air of outward Nature: No Omnipotence can make you a Partaker of the Life of this outward World, without having the Life of this outward World born in your own creaturely Being. And therefore, no Omnipotence can make you a Partaker of the Beatific Life or Presence of the Holy Trinity, unless that Life stands in the same triune State within you, as it does without you.

The Nature of this World must become creatural in you, before you can live, or have a Share in the Life of this World; the triune Nature of God must breathe forth itself to stand creaturely in you, before you can live, or have a Share in the Beatific Life or Presence of the triune God.

Now, is not all this strictly according to the very outward Letter, and inward Truth of the most important Articles of the Christian Religion? For what else can be meant by the Necessity of our being born again of the Word, or Son of God, being born of the Spirit of God, in order to our Entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven? Is not this saying, that the triune Life of God must first have its Birth in us, before we can enter into the triune, beatific Life, or Presence of God? What else is taught us by that new Birth sought for by a Baptism, in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost? Does it not plainly tell us, that the triune Nature of the Deity is That which wants to be born in us, and that our Redemption consists in Nothing else but in the Bringing forth this new Birth in us, and that, being thus born again in the Likeness of the Holy Trinity, we may be capable of its threefold Blessing and Happiness? The New Testament tells us of the Impossibility of our being redeemed, but by the Son of God, of the Impossibility of our being made holy, but by the Holy Spirit of God : Now, how could we want any distinct Thing particularly from the Son of God, any distinct Thing, particularly from the Holy Ghost, in order to raise and repair our fallen Nature, how could this Particularity be thus absolutely necessary, but because the holy threefold Life of the Deity must stand within us, in the Birth of our own Life, as it does without us, that so we may be capable of living in God, and God in us.

Search to Eternity, why no Devil, or Beast can possibly be a Partaker of the Kingdom of Heaven, and there can only this one Reason be assigned for it, because neither of them have the triune, holy Life of God in them : For every created Thing does, and must, and can only want, seek, unite with, and enjoy That outwardly, which is of the same Nature with itself. Remove a Devil where you will, he is still in Hell, and always at the same Distance from Heaven ; he can touch, or taste, or reach Nothing but what is in Hell. Carry a Beast where you please, either to Court, or to Church, he is yet at the same infinite Distance from the Joys and Fears either of Church, or Court, as the Beasts that never saw any Thing else but their own Kind : And all this is grounded solely on this Eternal Truth ; namely, That no Being can rise higher than its own Life reaches. The Circle of the Birth of Life in every Creature is its necessary Circumference, and it cannot possibly reach any further ; and therefore it is a joyful Truth, that Beings created to worship and adore the Holy Trinity, and to enter into the beatific Life and Presence of the triune God, must, of all Necessity, have the same triune Life in their own Creaturely Being. And now, what can be so glorious, so edifying, so ravishing, as this Knowledge of God and ourselves? The very Thought of our standing in this Likeness and Relation to the Infinite Creator and Being of all Beings, is enough to kindle the Divine Life within us, and melt us into a continual Love and Adoration : For how can we enough love and adore that Holy Trinity which has created us in its own Likeness, that we might live in an Eternal Union and Communion with it? Will anyone call this an irreverent Familiarity, or bold Looking into the Holy Trinity, which is nothing else but a thankful Adoration of it, as our Glorious Father and Creator? It is our best and only Acknowledgment of the greatest Truths of the Holy Scriptures ; it is the Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity kept in its own Simplicity, separated from Scholastic Speculations, where the three in God, are only distinguished by that threefold Share that they have in the Creation and Redemption of Man. When we thus know the Trinity in ourselves, and adore its high Original in the Deity, we are possessed of a Truth of the greatest Moment, that enlightens the Mind with the most solid and edifying Knowledge, and opens to us the fullest Understanding of all that concerns the Creation, Fall, and Redemption of Man.

Without this Knowledge, all the Scripture will be used as a dead Letter, and formed only into a figurative, historical System of Things, that has no Ground in Nature; and learned Divines can only be learned in the Explication of Phrases, and verbal Distinctions.

The first Chapters of Genesis will be a Knot that cannot be untied; the Mysteries of the Gospel will only be called fæderal Rites, and their inward Ground reproached as enthusiastic Dreams; but when it is known, that the triune Nature of God was brought forth in the Creation of Man, that it was lost in his Fall, that it is restored in his Redemption, a never-failing Light arises in all Scripture, from Genesis to the Revelation. Every Thing that is said of God, as Father, Regenerator, or Sanctifier of Man; every Thing that is said of Jesus Christ, as Redeeming, forming, dwelling in, and quickening; and of the Holy Spirit, as moving and sanctifying us: Every Thing that is said of the Holy Sacraments, or promised in and by them, has its deep and inward Ground fully discovered; and the whole Christian Religion is built upon a Rock, and that Rock is Nature, and God will appear to be doing every Good to us, that the God of all Nature can possibly do. The Doctrine of the Holy Trinity is wholly practical; it is revealed to us, to discover our high Original, and the Greatness of our Fall, to show us the deep and profound Operation of the triune God in the Recovery of the Divine Life in our Souls; that by the Means of this Mystery thus discovered, our Piety may be rightly directed, our Faith and Prayer have their proper Objects, that the Workings and Aspirings of our own Hearts may co-operate, and correspond with that triune Life in the Deity, which is always desiring to manifest itself in us; for as every Thing that is in us, whether it be Heaven, or Hell, rises up in us by a Birth, and is generated in us by the Will-spirit of our Souls, which kindles itself either in Heaven, or Hell; so this Mystery of a triune Deity manifesting itself, as a Father creating, as a Son, or Word, regenerating, as a Holy Spirit sanctifying us, is not to entertain our Speculation with dry, metaphysical Distinctions of the Deity, but to show us from what a Height and Depth we are fallen, and to excite such a Prayer and Faith, such a Hungering and Thirsting after this triune Fountain of all Good, as may help to generate and bring forth in us that first Image of the Holy Trinity in which we were created, and which must be born in us before we can enter into the State of the Blessed: Here we may see the Reason, why the Learned World has had so many fruitless Disputes about this Mystery, and why it has been so often a Stone of Stumbling to Philosophers and Critics; it is because they began to reason about that, which never was proposed to their Reason, and which no more belongs to human Learning and Philosophy, than Light belongs to our Ears, or Sounds to our Eyes. No Person has any Fitness, nor any Pretence, nor any Ground from Scripture, to think, or say any Thing of the Trinity, till such Time as he stands in the State of the Penitent Returning Prodigal, weary of his own sinful, shameful Nature; and desiring to renounce the World, the Flesh, and the Devil, and then is he first permitted to be baptized into the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost: This is the first Time the Gospel teaches, or calls anyone to the Acknowledgment of the Holy Trinity. Now, as this Knowledge is first given in Baptism, and there only as a Signification of a triune Life of the Deity, which must be regenerated in the Soul; so the Scriptures say Nothing afterwards to this Baptized Penitent concerning the Trinity, but only with Regard to Regeneration, everywhere only showing him how Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, all equally Divine, must draw, awaken, quicken, enlighten, move, guide, cleanse, and sanctify the new-born Christian: Is it not therefore undeniably plain, that all abstract Speculations of this Mystery, how it is in itself, how it is to be ideally conceived, or Scholastically expressed by us, are a Wandering from that true Light, in which the Trinity of God is set before us, which is only revealed as a Key, or Direction to the true Depths of that Regeneration, which is to be sought for from the triune Deity? But to go on in a further Account of the Creation.

23. Now, as all Creatures, whether intellectual, animate, or inanimate, are Products, or Emanations of the Divine Desire, created out of the Father, who from Eternity to Eternity generates the Son, whence the Holy Spirit eternally proceeds; so every intelligent, created Being, not fallen from its State, stands in the same Birth, or generating Desire, it generates in its Degree, as God the Father generates eternally the Son, and is blessed and perfected in the Divine Life, by having the Holy Spirit arise up in it.

Hence it is, that those Angels which stood, and continued in the same Will and Desire in which they came out from God, willing and desiring as God from all Eternity had willed and desired, were by the Rising up of the Holy Spirit in them, confirmed and established in the Divine Life, and so became eternally and inseparably united with the ever-blessed triune Deity.

On the other hand, those Angels which did not keep their Will and Desire in its first created Tendency, but raised up an own Will and Desire, which own Will and Desire was their direct, full choosing and desiring to be, and do something which they could not be, and do in God, and is therefore properly called their aspiring to be above God, or to be without any Dependence upon him; these Angels, by thus going backwards with their Will and Desire out of, or from God and the Divine Truth, could only find, or generate That which had the utmost Contrariety to God and the Divine Birth, and so became under a Necessity of finding themselves in an Eternal State, Spirit and Life that was directly contrary to all that is good, holy, amiable, blessed and Divine.

Now, the Will and Desire in every Creature is generating, and efficacious, strictly according to the State and Nature of that Creature;* therefore, Eternal Beings in an Eternal State, must have an Eternal Power and Efficacy in the Working of their Wills and Desires: When therefore those Angels, with all the Strength of their Eternal Desires, turned away from, and contrary to God and the Divine Birth, they could become Nothing else, but Beings eternally separated and broken off from all that was God and Goodness: For Eternal Beings that stood only in an eternal State, acting with all their Vigour, not doubting, but strongly willing, could not do anything that had only a Temporal Nature and Effect, because they stood not in such a Nature or such a World, and therefore what they willed and generated with all their Nature, (which was a Contrariety to God) that became the Eternal State of their Nature. And this is the Birth and Origin of Hellish Beings.

God had done all to them and for them, that he had done to and for the Angels that stood; he had given them the same holy Beginning of their Lives, had brought them forth out of himself in the same Tendency, that which was the Nature of other Angels, was theirs; he could not make any established, fixed, and unchangeable Angels, because the Life of every Thing must be a Birth, and willing Beings must have a Birth of their Wills; he could not make them fixed, because every Thing that comes from God, must so come from him, as it was in him, a self-existent and self-moving Power, and therefore no Goodness of God could hinder their having a Self-motion, because they were, and could be Nothing else but Creatures brought forth by, and out of his own self-existent and self-moving Nature.

God is all Good, and every Thing that comes out from him, as his Creature, Product, or Offspring, must come forth in that State of Goodness, which it had in Him; and every Creature, however high in its Birth from God, must in the Beginning of its Life, have a Power of joining with or departing from God, because the Beginning of its Life is nothing else but the Beginning of its own Self-motion as a Creature; and therefore no Creature can have its State or Condition fixed, till it gives itself up either wholly unto God, or turns wholly from him; for if it is an Intelligent Creature, it can only be so, by having the Intelligent Will of God derived into it, or made creaturely in it; but the Intelligent Will brought into a creaturely Form, must be That which it was in the Creator, and therefore must be the same self-existent and self-moving Power that it was before it became creaturely in any Angel or Spirit. And thus the Cause and Origin of Evil, wherever it is, is absolutely and eternally separated from God.

24. Again: As all Intelligent Beings can no way attain their Happiness and Perfection, but by standing with their Will and Desire united to God, in the same Tendency in which the Father eternally generateth the Son, from whence the Holy Spirit proceedeth as the Finisher of the triune, beatific Life, so the same Thing is manifestly proved to us by the lowest kind of Beings that are in this visible World; for all Vegetables, by their Attraction or Astringency, which is their Desire, and is an Out-birth of the Divine Desire, reach their utmost Perfection by the same Progress, that is, by getting a Birth of the Light and Spirit of this outward World into them, and so become infallible, though remote Proofs that no Life can be brought to its proper Perfection in the Creature, till the Image of the triune Life of God, is, according to the State and Capacity of the Creature, formed in it: Look where you will, every Thing proclaims and proves this great Truth. The Christian Doctrine of the Salvation of Mankind by a Birth of the Son, and Holy Spirit of God in them, is not only written in Scripture, but in the whole State and Frame of Nature, and of every Life in this World; for every perfect Fruit openly declares, that it can have no Goodness in it, till the Light and Spirit of this World has done that to it and in it, which the Light and Spirit of God must do to the Soul of Man, and therefore is a full Proof, that it is as absolutely necessary for every Human Creature to desire, believe, and receive the Birth of the Son and Holy Spirit of God to save it from its own Wrath and Darkness, as it is necessary for every Fruit of the Earth to be raised and regenerated from its own Bitterness and Sourness, by receiving the Light and Spirit of this World into it.

25. Some Learned Men, willing to discover the Image of the Holy Trinity in the Creation, have observed three Properties both in Body and Spirit, which they supposed to be a proper Likeness of the Trinity. But all this is Nothing to the Matter.

For as the Holy Trinity is a threefold Life in God, so the Image of the Trinity is only found in a threefold Life in the Creature; for it is the whole Birth, or Generation of the Thing itself, whether it be corporeal or spiritual, that stands in such a threefold State as the Holy Trinity doth, that is the proper Likeness or Image of the Trinity. As there is one infinitely perfect Deity, because this one Deity is Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, so every Creature that is an original Production of the Deity, or in its proper State of Perfection, stands in its whole Being, or generating as the Deity doth, and neither hath, nor ever can have any Perfection, but because the Triune Nature of God is manifested and brought forth in it; for Perfection of Life in God, and a Perfection of Life derived from God, must stand in the same threefold State, and that which is a Life from the Deity, must have a Life of the Trinity in it.

26. Take away Attraction, or Desire from the Creature of this World, and you annihilate the Creature; for where there is no Attraction or Desire, there can be no Nature or Being; and therefore Attraction or Desire shows the Work of the Creator in every Thing, or what is meant by the Divine Fiat, or Creating Power. Now, what is it which this Attraction or Desire wants, hungers, draws and reaches after? Nothing else but the Light and Spirit of this World. What is the true, deep, and infallible Ground of this? Why does this Desire thus work in every Life of this World? It is because the Eternal Will in the Deity, is a Desiring or Generating the Son, from whence the Holy Spirit of God proceeds: And therefore Attraction, which is an Out-birth of the Divine Desire, stands in a perpetual Desiring of the Light and Spirit of this World, because they are the two Out-births of the Light and Holy Spirit of God. What rational Mind can help being charmed with this wonderful Harmony and Relation betwixt God, Nature, and Creature?

27. And now, my dear Reader, if you are either Arian, or Deist, be so no longer: The Ground is dug up from under you, and neither Opinion has any Thing left to stand upon ; you may wrangle and wrest the Doctrine of Scripture, because it is only taught in Words ; but the Veil is now taken off from Nature, and every Plant and Fruit will teach you with the Clearness of a Noon-day Sun, these two great Truths ; First, That Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are one Being, one Life, one God : Secondly, That the Soul, which is dead to the Paraisaical Life, must be made alive again by the Birth of the Son and Holy Spirit of God in it, in the same Manner as a dead Seed is, and only can be brought to Life in this World, by the Light and Spirit of this World.

If you are an Arian, don't content yourself with the Numbers that are with you, or with a Learned Name or two that are on your Side : Arianism has never yet been recommended by the Genius and Learning of a Baronious, or Bellarmin ; and nothing but a poor, groping, purblind Philosophy, that is not able to look either at God, Nature, or Creature, hath ever led any Man into it : For it is a Truth proclaimed by all Nature and Creature, that there is a threefold Life in God, and every Thing that is, whether it be happy, or miserable, perfect or imperfect, is only so, because it has, or has not the triune Nature of God in it.

A beginning Fruit is like a Poison ; a Seed, for a while, is shut up in a hard Death. Why are they both at first in this State ? It is because each of them stands as yet only in that first Birth of Nature, which is but a Beginning Manifestation of the Deity. Let the Light of the Sun, and the Spirit of this World be born in them, and then the sour, astringent Fruit, and the dead Seed becomes a perfect, vegetable Life, and is in its kind perfect, for this one only Reason, because the triune Life of the Deity is truly manifested in it.

28. If you are a Deist, made so, either by the disorderly State of your own Heart, or by Prejudices taken from the Corruptions and Divisions of Christians, or from a Dislike of the Language of Scripture, or from an Opinion of the Sufficiency of a Religion of Human Reason, or from whatever else it may be, look well to yourself, Christianity is no Fiction of Enthusiasm, or Invention of Priests.

If you can show, that the Gospel proposes to bring Men into the Kingdom of Heaven by any other Method, than that, which Nature requires to make any Creature a living Member of this World, then I will acknowledge the Gospel not to be founded in Nature.

But if what the Gospel saith of the absolute Necessity, that the fallen Soul be born again of the Son and Holy Spirit of God, is the very same which all temporal Nature saith of every Thing that is to enter into the Life of this World, viz., that it cannot partake of the Life of this World, till the Light and Spirit of this World is born in it; then does not all Nature in this World, and every Life in it, declare, that the Christian Method of Salvation is as necessary to raise fallen Man, as the Sun and Spirit of this World is, to bring a Creature alive into it?

Now, as there is but one God, so there is but one Nature, as unalterable as that God from whom it arises, and whose Manifestation it is; so also there is but one Religion founded in Nature, and but one Salvation possible in Nature. Revealed Religion is nothing else but a Revelation of the Mysteries of Nature, for God cannot reveal, or require any Thing by a spoken or written Word, but that which he reveals and requires by Nature; for Nature is his great Book of Revelation, and he that can only read its Capital Letters, will have found so many Demonstrations of the Truth of the written Revelation of God.*

But to show, that there is but one Salvation possible in Nature, and that Possibility solely contained in the Christian Method: Look from the Top to the Bottom of all Creatures, from the highest to the lowest Beings, and you will find, that Death has but one Nature in all Worlds, and in all Creatures: Look at Life in an Angel, and Life in a Vegetable, and you will find, that Life has but one and the same Form, one and the same Ground in the whole Scale of Beings: No Omnipotence of God can make that to be Life, which is not Life, or that to be Death, which is not Death, according to Nature; and the Reason is, because Nature is nothing else but God's own outward Manifestation of what he inwardly is, and can do; and therefore no Revelation from God can teach, or require any Thing but that which is taught and required by God in, and through Nature. The Mysteries of Religion therefore, are no higher, nor deeper than the Mysteries of Nature, and all the Rites, Laws, Ceremonies, Types, Institutions and Ordinances given by God from Adam to the Apostles, are only typical of something that is to be done, or instrumental to the doing of that, which the unchangeable Working of Nature requires to be done. As sure therefore as there is but one and the same Thing that is Death, and one and the same Thing that is Life throughout all Nature, whether temporal or eternal, so sure is it, that there is but one Way to Life or Salvation for fallen Man. And this Way, let it be what it will, must and can be only that, which has its Reason and Foundation in that one Universal Nature, which is the one unchangeable Manifestation of the Deity. For if there is but one Thing that is Life, and one thing that is Death throughout all Nature, from the highest Angel to the hardest Flint upon Earth, then it must be plain, that the Life which is to be raised or restored by Religion, must, and can only be restored according to Nature: And therefore, true Religion can only be the Religion of Nature, and Divine Revelation can do nothing else, but reveal and manifest the Demands and Workings of Nature.

29. Now, the one great Doctrine of the Christian Religion, and which includes all the rest, is this, that Adam, by his Sin, died to the Kingdom of Heaven, or that the Divine Life extinguished in him; That he cannot be redeemed, or restored to this first Divine Life, but by having it kindled or regenerated in him by the Son and Holy Spirit of God: Now, that which is here called Death, his losing the Light and Spirit of the Kingdom of Heaven, and that which is here made necessary to make him alive again to the Kingdom of Heaven, is that very same which is called, and is Death and Life throughout all Nature, both temporal and eternal: And therefore, the Christian Religion requiring this Method of raising Man to a Divine Life, has its infallible Proof from all Nature.* Consider Death, or the Deadness that is in a hard Flint, and you will see what is the Eternal Death of a fallen Angel: The Flint is dead, or in a State of Death, because its Fire is bound, compacted, shut up, and imprisoned; this is its Chains and Bands of Death: A Steel struck against a Flint will show you, that every Particle of the Flint consists of this compacted Fire.

Now, a fallen Angel is in no other State of Death, knows no other Death than this: It is in its whole Spiritual, Intelligent Being, nothing else, but that very same which the Flint is, in its insensible Materiality, viz., an imprisoned compacted, darkened Fire-spirit, shut up, and tied in its own Chains of Darkness, as the Fire of the Flint; and you shall see by and by, that the Flint is changed from its first State into its present Hardness of Death, in the same Manner, and by the same Means, as the Heavenly Angel is become a fiery Serpent in the State of Eternal Death.

Now, look at every Death that can be found betwixt that of a fallen Angel, and that of a hard Flint, and you will find that Death enters nowhere, into no kind of Vegetable, Plant, or Animal, but as it has entered into the Angel, and the Flint, and stands in the same manner in every Thing wherever it is.

Now, that a fallen Angel, is nothing else but a Fire-spirit imprisoned in the same manner as a Flint is an imprisoned Fire, is plain from the Scripture Account of them ; not only because all the wrathful Properties of a Fire without Light, are ascribed to them as their essential Qualities, but because the Place of their Habitation, or the State of their Life, is a Fire of Hell. For how could it be possible, that a hellish Fire should be the Eternal State of their Life, unless their Nature was such a Fire? Must not their painful Condition arise from their Nature, and their Misery be only a Sensibility of themselves, of that which they have made themselves to be? Therefore, if Fire shut up in Darkness, is the Nature of Hell, it can only be so, because such a darkened Fire is the very Nature of a fallen Angel. Or how again could the Human Soul, which has withstood its Salvation in this Life, be said to fall into Eternal Death, or the Fire of Hell, if the Soul itself did not become that Fire of Hell? For when you say the Soul enters into Hell, you say neither more nor less, than if you had said, that Hell enters into the Soul ; therefore, the State of Hell, and the State of the Soul in Hell, is one and the same Thing. If therefore Hell is a State of Fire shut up, and imprisoned from all Communion with Light, then the same dark, imprisoned Fire must be the Nature of the fallen Angel and lost Soul ; and thus, what your Eyes see to be the Death or Deadness of a Flint, is that same Thing, or that same State of the Thing, which the Scripture assures you, to be the Eternal Death of a fallen Angel, and a lost Soul. Here also you may see a plain Proof of what I have elsewhere declared concerning the fallen Soul ; that considered without its Redeemer in it, or the in-spoken Word of Life given to Adam at his Fall, it is in itself, as a fallen Soul, the same dark, fiery Spirit, as the Devils are ; and that the Reason why Men wholly given up to Wickedness, and who have suppressed the Redeeming Power of God in their Souls, do not become fully sensible of this State of their Souls, is this, because the Soul, while it is in this Flesh and Blood, is capable of being softened, assuaged, and comforted in some Degree or other, by the Influences of the Sun and Spirit of this World, as all other Creatures and Beings are. And if it was not thus, how could it be a plain, constant Doctrine of Scripture, that when the Unredeemed Soul departs this Life, it is incapable of anything but Hell? Is not this directly saying, that Hell, or the Sensibility of Hell was only hid and suppressed in such a Soul, by the Life and Light of this World shining upon it.

Now what I have said of the sad Condition of the Soul at the Fall, that it lost the Divine Life, or the Birth of the Son and Holy Spirit of God in it, and so became of the same dark, fiery Nature, as the Devils, is not possible to be denied, without denying the most universally received Doctrine of Scripture.

Is it not a fundamental Doctrine of Scripture, that Adam and all his Posterity had been left in a State of Eternal Death, or Damnation, unless Jesus Christ had become their Redeemer, and taken them out of their natural State? But how can you believe, or own they had been left in this State, without believing and owning that they were in it? Or, how can you with the Scripture believe, that by the Fall they became Heirs of Eternal Death and Damnation with the Devils, unless you believe and affirm, that by the Fall they became of a hellish, diabolical Nature? Or how can you hold, that by the Fall they wanted to be delivered from the State of the Devils, and yet not allow, that by the Fall, they got the Nature of the Devils? Can any Thing be more absurd and inconsistent? Is it not the same Thing as saying, that God made them Heirs of Eternal Death and Hell, before they were by Nature fit for it, or before they had extinguished in themselves the Divine Life which was at first brought forth in them.

Again : It is a Scripture Doctrine of the utmost Certainty and Importance, that those Souls which have totally resisted and withstood all that God has done in them and for them by his Son Jesus Christ, will, at their Departure from the Body, be incapable of any Thing but Eternal Death, or a hellish Condition. Now, how can you possibly hold this Doctrine of Scripture, without holding at the same Time, that the Soul was in that State by the Fall, before it had received its Redeemer, as it is then in, when it has refused to receive him ; for all that you can say of a lost Soul is only this, that it has lost its Redeemer, and therefore is only in the Condition of that Soul which has not received him : And therefore, if a lost Soul is only an unredeemed Soul, it must be plain, that the Soul, before it had received its Redeemer, was in the miserable Condition, and had the miserable Nature of a Lost Soul ; and therefore, the only Difference between the fallen Soul, and the lost Soul is this, they are both in the same need of a Saviour, both have the same miserable Nature, because they have him not ; but the one has the Offer of him, and the other has refused to accept of Him : But his final Refusal of him, has only left him in Possession of that fallen State of a hellish Condition, which it had before a Saviour was given to it ; and therefore, it is a Truth of the utmost Certainty, that Adam, by his Fall, died to the Divine Life, and that by this Death, his Soul became of the same Nature and Condition with the fallen Angels ; and that therefore that new Birth or Regeneration, which he is to obtain by his Redeemer Jesus Christ, is nothing else but the bringing back his Soul into the Kingdom of Heaven, by a Birth of the Son and Holy Spirit of God brought forth in it, that so the Life of the triune God may be in him again, as it was at his Creation, when his Soul was first breathed forth from the triune God. Is there any Thing more great, more glorious, or more consistent than these Truths? Or is there any Possibility of denying any Part of them, without giving up the whole? Or is there any Reason, why a Christian should be loath to believe this, and this alone, to be the true State of that Regeneration which is so absolutely required by the Gospel? Is it an unreasonable or uncomfortable Thing to be told, that our Regeneration is a true and real Regaining that heavenly, Divine, immortal Life which at first came forth from God, and which alone can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven?

Say that Adam did not die a real Death at his Transgression, that he did not lose a Divine, immortal Life, Light and Spirit, that he did not then first become a mere earthly, mortal, Diabolical Animal in the true and proper Sense of the Words, but that these Things could only be affirmed of him in a figurative Form of Speech; say this, and then tell me what Reality you have left in any Article of our Salvation?

But if all these Things must be said of fallen Man according to the strictest Truth of the Expression, then the Gospel Regeneration, by a Birth of the Son and Holy Spirit of God, arising a second Time, in the Soul of Man, must mean such a real Birth of a new heavenly Life, as the proper Sense of the Words denote.

30. But to return now to my Argumentation with the Deist.

I have plainly shown you, that there is, and can be but one kind of Death through all Nature, whether temporal or eternal; and this I have done, by showing that Eternal Death in an Angel, is the same Thing, and has the same Nature, as the hard Death that is in a senseless Flint. But if it be a certain Truth, that Death has but one Way of entering into, or possessing any Being from the highest of spiritual to the lowest of material Creatures, then, though nothing else could be offered, it must be an infallible Consequence, that Life has but one Way of being kindled throughout all Nature, and that therefore there can be but one true Religion, and that only can be it, which hath the one only way of kindling the heavenly Life in the Soul.

Now, look where you will, the Birth or kindling of Life through all Nature shows you, that the Way of Gospel Regeneration, or Raising the Divine Life again in the fallen Soul, is that one and the same Way, by which every kind of Life is, and must be raised, wherever it is found. The Gospel saith, unless the fallen Soul be born again from above, be born again of the Word, or Son, and the Spirit of God, it cannot see, or enter into the Kingdom of Heaven: Now here it says a Truth, as much confirmed and ratified by all Nature, as when it is said, except a Creature hath the Light and Spirit of this World born in it, it cannot become a living Animal of this World: Or, except a Seed have the Light and Spirit of this World incorporated in it, it cannot become a Vegetable of this World, either as Plant, Fruit, or Flower. Ask now wherein lies the absolute Impossibility, that the fallen Soul should be raised to its Divine Life, without a Birth of the Son and Holy Spirit of God in it, and the true Ground of this Impossibility is only this, because a Seed shut up in its own cold hardness, cannot possibly be raised into its highest Vegetable Life, but by a Birth of the Light and Spirit of this World rising up in it.

On the other hand, ask why a Seed cannot possibly become a Vegetable Life, till the Light and Spirit of this World has been incorporated, or generated in it; and the only true Ground of it is, because a fallen Soul can only be raised to a Divine Life, or become a Plant of the Kingdom of Heaven, by receiving the Birth of the Light and Spirit of God into it. For the true Reason, why Life is in such a Form, and rises in such a Manner in the lowest Creature living, is because it does, and must arise in the same manner, and stand in the same Form in the highest of Living Creatures: For Nature does, and must always act and generate in one and the same unchangeable Manner, because it is nothing else but the Manifestation of one unchangeable God.

It is one and the same Operation of Light and Spirit, that turns Fire into every Degree and kind of Life that can be found either in temporal or eternal Nature: It is one and the same Operation of Light and Spirit, that upon one State of Fire, raises only a vegetable Life, upon another State of Fire, raises an animal Life, upon another State of Fire, raises an intellectual and angelical Life.

There is no State or Form of Death in any Creature, but where some kind of Fire is shut up from Light and Spirit, nor is there any kind of Life but what is kindled by the same Operation of Light and Spirit upon some sort of Fire.

A Fruit must first stand in a poisonous, sour, astringent, bitter, and fiery Agitation of all its Parts, before the Light and Spirit of this World can be generated in it. And thus Light and Spirit operate upon one sort of Fire in the Production of a vegetable Life.

94 An Appeal to all who doubt

An Animal must be conceived in the same manner, it must begin in the same Poison, and when Nature is in its fiery Strife, the Light and Spirit of this World kindles up the true animal Life.

Thus also there is but one kind, or State of Death that can fall upon any Creature, which is nothing else, but its losing the Birth of Light and Spirit in itself, by which it becomes an imprisoned, dark Fire. In an Animal, Vegetable, or mere Matter, it is a senseless State of imprisoned Fire; in an Angel, or intellectual Being, as the Soul of Man, it is a self-tormenting, self-generating, fiery Worm, that cannot lose its Sensibility, but is in a State of Eternal Death, because it is separated eternally from that Light and Spirit, which alone can raise a Divine Life in any intellectual Creature.

And thus it is plain, beyond all Possibility of Doubt, that there is neither Life nor Death to be found in any Part of the Creation but what sets its infallible Seal to this Gospel Truth, that fallen Man cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven any other Way, than by being born again of the Son and Holy Spirit of God.

31. And here, my Friend, you may with Certainty see what a poor, groundless Fiction, your Religion of Human Reason is; its Insignificancy and Emptiness is shown you by every Thing you can look upon.

Salvation is a Birth of Life, but Reason can no more bring forth this Birth, than it can kindle Life in a Plant, or Animal: You might as well write the Word Flame, upon the outside of a Flint, and then expect that its imprisoned Fire should be kindled by it, as to imagine, that any Images, or Ideal Speculations of Reason painted in your Brain, should raise your Soul out of its State of Death, and kindle the Divine Life in it. No: Would you have Fire from a Flint; its House of Death must be shaken, and its Chains of Darkness broken off by the Strokes of a Steel upon it. This must of all Necessity be done to your Soul, its imprisoned Fire must be awakened by the sharp Strokes of Steel, or no true Light of Life can arise in it: All Nature and Creature tells you, that the Heavenly Life must begin in you from the same Causes, and the same Operation as every earthly Life, whether vegetable, or animal, does in this World.*

Now, look where you will, all Life must be generated in this Manner: First, an Attraction, or an astringing Desire, must work itself into an anguishing Agitation, or painful Strife; this Attraction become restless, and highly agitated, is that first Poison, or

Strife of the Properties of Nature, which is and must be the Beginning of every Vegetable or Animal Life; it is by this Strife, or inward Agitation, that it reaches and gets a Birth of the Light and Spirit of this World into it, and so becomes a Living Member, either of the animal or vegetable World.

Now, this must be your Process, a Desire brought into an anguishing State; or the bitter Sorrows and fiery Agitations of Repentance, must be the Beginning of a Divine Life in your Soul; 'tis by this awakened Fire, or inward Agitation, that it becomes capable of being regenerated, or turned into an heavenly Life, by the Light and Holy Spirit of God.

Nothing is, or can possibly be Salvation, but this regenerated Life of the Soul: How vain and absurd would it be, to talk of a Creature's being made a Member of a vegetable or animal Kingdom, through an outward Grace or Favour? or by any outward Thing of any kind? For does not Sense, Reason, and all Nature force you to confess, that it is absolutely impossible for any Thing to become a Living Member of the animal or vegetable Kingdom, but by having the animal or vegetable Life raised or brought forth in it? Therefore, does not Sense and Reason, and all Nature join with the Gospel in affirming, that no Man can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, till the Heavenly Life, or that which is the Life in Heaven, be born in him?

The Gospel says to the fallen, earthly Man, that he must be born again from above, before he can see, enter into, or become a Living Member of the Kingdom that is above.

Now, he that understands this to be a figurative Saying, that requires no real Birth of a real Life that is only above, but that an earthly Man may enter into the Life of Heaven, by only carrying this figurative Saying along with him, is as absurd, as ignorant, and offends as much against Sense, Reason, and all Nature, as he who holds, that it is a figurative Expression, when we say that nothing can enter into the vegetable Kingdom, till it has the vegetable Life in it, or be a Member of the Animal Kingdom, till it hath the Animal Life born in it.*

And if some Learned Men will say, that it is Religious Enthusiasm to place our Salvation, or Capacity for the Kingdom of Heaven in the inward Life or Birth of Heaven derived into our Souls, they are only as learned as those who should call it Philosophical Enthusiasm to place the true Nature of a Vegetable, or Animal, in its getting the inward, real Birth of a Vegetable and Animal Life. But to return to the Deist.

You act as if God was a Being that had an arbitrary, discre- tionary Will, or Wisdom, like that of a great Prince over his Subjects, who will reward Mankind according as their Services appeared to him. And so you fancy, that your Religion of Reason may appear as valuable as a Religion that consists of Forms, and Modes, Ordinances, and Doctrines of Revelation ; but your Idea of the last Judgment is a Fiction of Reason that knows nothing rightly of God. God's last rewarding, is only his last separating every Thing into its own Eternal Place ; it is only putting an end to all temporary Nature, to the Mixture of Good and Evil that is in Time, and leaving every Thing to be That in Eternity, which it has made itself to be in Time. Thus it is that our Works follow us, and thus God rewards every Man according to his Deeds.*

During the Time of this World, God may be considered as the good Husbandman ; he sows the Seed, the End of the World is the Harvest, the Angels are the Reapers ; if you are Wheat, you are to be gathered into the Barn, if you are Tares, it signifies nothing, whence, or how, or by what Means you are become so ; Tares are to be rejected, because they are Tares, and Wheat to be gathered by the Angels, because it is Wheat : This is the Mercy, and Goodness, and Discretionary Justice of God that you are to expect at the last Day. If you are not Wheat, that is, if the heavenly Life, or the Kingdom of God, is not grown up in you, it signifies nothing what you have chosen in the stead of it, or why you have chosen it, you are not That, which alone can help you to a Place in the Divine Granary.

God wants no Services of Men to reward, he only wants to have such a Life quickened and raised up in you, as may make it possible for you to enter into, and live in Heaven.

He has created you out of his own Eternal Nature, and therefore you must have either an Eternal Life, or Eternal Death according to it. If eternal Nature standeth in you, as it doth without you, then you are born again to the Kingdom of Heaven ; but if Nature works contrary in you to what it does in Heaven, then you are in Eternal Death : And here lies the Necessity of our being born again of the Word and Spirit of God, in order to the Kingdom of Heaven. It is because we are created out of that eternal Nature which is the Kingdom of Heaven ; 'tis because we are fallen out of it into a Life of temporal Nature, and therefore must have the Life of eternal Nature re-kindled in us, before we can possibly enter into the Kingdom of Heaven : Therefore, look where you will, or at what you will, there is only one Thing to be done, we want

* Way to Divine Knowledge, pages 169-183.

the Truths of the Gospel. 97

Nothing else, but to have the Light World, or the life of Eternal Nature kindled again in our Souls, that Life, and Light, and Spirit may be That in our Souls, which they are in Eternal Nature, out of which our Souls were created ; that so we may be heavenly Plants growing up to the Kingdom of Heaven.*

You deceive yourself with fancied Notions of the Goodness of God ; you imagine, that so perfect a Being cannot damn you for so small a Matter, as choosing a Religion according to your own Notions, or for not joining yourself with this, or that Religious Society.

But all this is great Ignorance of God, and Nature, and Religion. God has appointed a Religion, by which Salvation is to be had according to the Possibility of Nature, where no Creature will be saved, or lost, but as it works with, or contrary to Nature. For as the God of Nature cannot himself act contrary to Nature, because Nature is the Manifestation of himself, so every Creature having its Life in, and from Nature, can have only such a Life, or such a Death as is according to the Possibility of Nature : And therefore, no Creature will be saved, by an arbitrary Goodness of God, but because of its Conformity to Nature, nor any Creature lost by a Want of Compassion in God, but because of its Salvation being impossible, according to the whole State of Nature.

It is not for Notional, or Speculative Mistakes, that Man will be rejected by God at the last Day, or for any Crimes that God could over-look, if he was so pleased ; but because Man has continued in his unregenerate State, and has resisted and suppressed that Birth of Life, by which alone he could become a Member of the Kingdom of Heaven. The Goodness and Love of God have no Limits or Bounds, but such as his Omnipotence hath : And every Thing that hath a Possibility of partaking of the Kingdom of Heaven, will infallibly find a Place in it.

God comes not to Judgment to display any Wrath of his own, or to inflict any Punishment as from Himself upon Man : He only comes to declare, that all temporary Nature is at an End, and that therefore, all Things must be, and stand in their own Places in Eternal Nature : His Sentence of Condemnation, is only a leaving them that are lost, in such a Misery of their own Nature, as has finally rejected all that was possible to relieve it.

You fancy that God will not reject you at the last Day, for having not received this, or that Mode, or Kind of Religion : But here all is Mistake again. You might as well imagine, that no particular kind of Element was necessary to extinguish

* Way to Divine Knowledge, pages 186-195.

98 An Appeal to all who doubt

Fire, or that Water can supply the Place of Air in kindling it, as suppose that no particular kind of Religion is absolutely necessary to raise up such a Divine Life in the Soul as can only be its Salvation ; for Nature is the Ground of all Creatures, it is God's Manifestation of himself, it is his Instrument in, and by which he acts in the Production and Government of every Life ; and therefore a Life that is to belong to this World, must be raised according to temporal Nature, and a Life that is to live in the next World, must be raised according to Eternal Nature.

Therefore, all the particular Doctrines, Institutions, Mysteries, and Ordinances of a revealed Religion that comes from the God of Nature, must have their Reason, Foundation, and Necessity in Nature ; and then your renouncing such a revealed Religion, is renouncing all that the God of Nature can do to save you.

When I speak of Nature as the true Ground and Foundation of Religion, I mean nothing like that which you call the Religion of Human Reason, or Nature ; for I speak here of Eternal Nature, which is the Nature of the Kingdom of Heaven, or that Eternal State, where all redeemed Souls must have their Eternal Life, and live in Eternal Nature by a Life derived from it, as Men and Animals live in temporal Nature, by a Life derived from it ; for, seeing Man stands with his Soul in Eternal Nature, as certainly as he lives outwardly in temporal Nature, and seeing Man can have nothing in this World, neither Happiness, nor Misery from it, but what is according to temporal Nature, so he can with his Soul, attain nothing, nor suffer nothing in the next World, but what is according to the Eternal Nature of that World ; and therefore, it is an infallible Truth, that that particular Religion can alone do us any Good, or help us to the Happiness of the next World, which works with, and according to Eternal Nature, and is able to generate that Eternal Life in us. But your Notion of a Goodness of God that may be expected at the last Day, is as groundless, as if you imagined, that God would then stand over his Creatures in a compassionate kind of weighing or considering who should be saved, and who damned, because a good-natured Prince might do so towards Variety of Offenders.

But hear how the God of Nature himself speaks of this Matter : Behold, I have set before thee, Life and Death, Fire and Water,—choose whither thou wilt. Here lies the Whole of the Divine Mercy ; 'tis all on this side the Day of Judgment : Till the End of Time, God is compassionate and long-suffering, and continues to every Creature a Power of choosing Life or Death, Water or Fire ; but when the End of Time is come, there is an End of Choice, and the last Judgment is only a putting everyone into the full and sole Possession of That which he has chosen.

But your Notion of a Goodness of God at the last Day supposes, that if a Man has erroneously chosen Death instead of Life, Fire instead of Water, that God will not suffer such a Creature to be deprived of Salvation through a mistaken Choice; but that in such a Creature, he will make Death to be Life, and Fire to be Water. But you might as well expect, that God should make a Thing to be, and not to be at the same Time; for this is as possible as to make Hell to be Heaven, or Death to be Life: For Darkness can no more be Light, Death can no more be Life, Fire can no more be Water in any Being through a Compassion of God towards it, than a Circle could be a Square, a Falsehood a Truth, or two to be more than three, by God's looking upon them.

32. Our Salvation is an Entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven; now, the Life, Light and Spirit of Heaven must as necessarily be in a Creature before it can live in Heaven, as the Life, Light and Spirit of this World must be in a Creature before it can live in this World: Therefore the one only Religion that can save any one Son of fallen Adam, must be that which can raise or generate the Life, Light and Spirit of Heaven in his Soul, that when the Light and Spirit of this World leaves him, he may not find himself in eternal Death and Darkness.

Now if this Light and Spirit of Heaven is generated in your Soul as it is generated in Heaven, if it arises up in your Nature within you, as it does in eternal Nature without you, (which is the Christian new Birth, or Regeneration) then you are become capable of the Kingdom of Heaven, and nothing can keep you out of it; but if you die without this Birth of the Eternal Light and Spirit of God, then your Soul stands in the same Distance from, and Contrariety to the Kingdom of Heaven, as Hell does: If you die in this unregenerate State, it signifies nothing how you have lived, or what Religion you have owned, all is left undone that was to have saved you: It matters not what Form of Life you have appeared in, what a Number of decent, engaging or glorious Exploits you have done either as a Scholar, a Statesman, or a Philosopher; if they have proceeded only from the Light and Spirit of this World, they must die with it, and leave your Soul in that Eternal Darkness, which it must have, so long as the Light and Spirit of Eternity is not generated in it.

And this is the true Ground and Reason, why an outward Morality, a Decency and Beauty of Life and Conduct with respect to this World, arising only from a Worldly Spirit, has nothing of Salvation in it: He that has his Virtue only from this World, is only a Trader of this World, and can only have a Worldly Benefit from it. For it is an undoubted Truth, that every Thing is necessarily bounded by, or kept within the Sphere of its own Activity; and therefore, to expect Heavenly Effects from a Worldly Spirit, is Nonsense: As Water cannot rise higher in its Streams, than the Spring from whence it cometh, so no Actions can ascend further in their Efficacy, or rise higher in their Value, than the Spirit from whence they proceed. The Spirit that comes from Heaven is always in Heaven, and whatsoever it does, tends to, and reaches Heaven: The Spirit that arises from this World, is always in it; it is as worldly when it gives Alms, or prays in the Church, as when it makes Bargains in the Market. When therefore the Gospel saith, He that gives Alms to be seen of Men, hath his Reward; it is grounded on this general Truth, That every Thing, every Shape, or kind or degree of Virtue that arises from the Spirit of this World, has nothing to expect but That which it can receive from this World: For every Action must have its Nature, and Efficacy according to the Spirit from whence it proceeds. He that loves to see a Crucifix, a worthless Image, solely from this Principle, because from his Heart he embraces Christ as his suffering Lord and Pattern, does an Action poor, and needless in itself, which yet by the Spirit from whence it proceeds, reaches Heaven, and helps to kindle the heavenly Life in the Soul. On the other hand, he that from a selfish Heart, a Worldly Spirit, a Love of Esteem, distinguishes himself by the most rational Virtues of an exemplary Life, has only a Piety that may be reckoned amongst the perishable Things of this World.

33. You (the Deist) think it a Partiality unworthy of God, when you hear that the Salvation of Mankind is attributed and appropriated to Faith and Prayer in the Name of Jesus Christ. It must be answered, First, That there is no Partiality of any kind in God; every Thing is accepted by him according to its own Nature, and receives all the Good from him that it can possibly receive: Secondly, That a Morality of Life, not arising from the Power and Spirit of Jesus Christ, but brought forth by the Spirit of this World, is the same Thing, has the same Nature and Efficacy in a Heathen, as a Christian, does only the same worldly Good to the one, as it does to the other; therefore, there is not the least Partiality in God, with respect to the Moral Works of Mankind, considered as arising from, and directed by the Spirit of this World.

Now, were these the only Works that Man could do, could he only act from the Spirit of this World, no Flesh could be saved, that is, no earthly Creature, such as Man is, could possibly begin to be of a heavenly Nature, or have a heavenly Life brought forth in him; so it is only a Spirit from Heaven derived into the fallen Nature, that makes any Beginning of a heavenly Life in it, that can lay the Possibility of its having the least Ability, Tendency, and Disposition towards the Kingdom of Heaven. This Spirit derived from Heaven, is the Birth of the Son of God, given to the Soul as its Saviour, Regenerator, or Beginner of its Return to Heaven; it is that Word of Life, or Bruiser of the Serpent, that was in-spoken into the first fallen Father of Men; 'tis this alone that gives to all the Race of Adam their Capacity for Salvation, their Power of being again Sons of God; and therefore, Faith and Prayer in the Name of Jesus Christ, or Works done in the Spirit and Power of Jesus Christ can alone save the Soul, because the Soul can have no Relation to Heaven, no Communion with it, no Beginning or Power of Growth in the heavenly Life, but solely by the Nature and Name of Jesus Christ derived into it. God's Redemption of Mankind is as universal as the Fall: It was the one Father of all Men that fell, therefore, all his Children were born into his fallen State: It was the one Father of all Men that was redeemed by the in-spoken Word of Life into him; therefore, all his Children are born into his State of Redemption, and have as certainly the same Bruiser of the Serpent in the Birth of their Life from him, as they have from him a Serpentine Nature that is to be bruised.

Hence it was, that this Bruiser of the Serpent, when born of a Virgin, and come to die for the World, saith of himself, 'I am 'the Way, the Truth, and the Life; no Man cometh unto the 'Father but by me.' Hence also the Apostle saith, 'There is 'no other Name under Heaven given among Men, whereby we 'must be saved,'—because he is that same saving Name, or Power of Salvation which from the Beginning was given to Adam, as an in-spoken Word of Life, or Bruiser of the Serpent: And therefore, as sure as Adam had any Power of Salvation derived into him from Jesus Christ, so sure was it, that the Apostle must tell both Jews and Heathens, that there was no Salvation in any other.

Therefore, though Jesus Christ is the one only Saviour of all that can anywhere, or at any Time be saved, yet there is no Partiality in God, because, this same Jesus Christ, who came in Human Flesh to the Jews in a certain Age, was that same Saviour who was given to Adam, when all Mankind were in his Loins; and who, through all Ages, and in all Countries, from the first Patriarchs to the End of the World, is the common Saviour, as he is the common Light that lighteth every Man that cometh into the World, and that Principle of Life both in Jews and Heathens, by which they had any Relation to God, or any Power, or Right, or Ability to call him Father. When therefore you look upon the Gospel as narrowing the Way of Salvation, or limiting it to those, who only know and believe in Jesus Christ, since his Appearance in the Flesh, you mistake the whole Nature of the Christian Redemption.

And when you reject this Saviour that then appeared, and died as a Sacrifice upon the Cross, you don't renounce a particular kind of Religion, that was given only at a certain Time to one Part of the World, but you renounce the one Source and Fountain of all the Grace and Mercy that God can bestow upon Mankind, you renounce your Share of that first Covenant which God made with all Men in Adam, you go back into his first fallen State, and so put yourself into that Condition of Eternal Death, from which there is no Possibility of Deliverance, but by that one Saviour whom you have renounced.

And now, my dear Friend, beware of Prejudice, or Hardness of Heart: One careless, or one relenting Thought upon all that is here laid before you, may either quite shut out, or quite open an Entrance for true Conviction. I have shown you what is meant by Christian Redemption, and the absolute Necessity of a new and heavenly Birth, in order to obtain your Share of a heavenly Life in the next World: I have confirmed the Truths of the Gospel, by Proofs taken from what is undeniable in Nature: And I readily grant you that nothing can be true in revealed Religion, but what has its Foundation in Nature; because a Religion coming from the God of Nature, can have no other End but to reform, and set right the Failings, Transgressions, and Violations of Nature. When the Gospel saith that Man fallen from the State of his Creation, and become an earthly Animal of this temporal World, must be born again of the Son and Holy Spirit of God, in order to be a heavenly Creature; 'tis because all Nature saith, that an immortal, eternal Soul, must have an immortal, eternal Light and Spirit, to make it live in Eternal Nature, as every Animal must have a temporal Light and Spirit, in order to live in temporary Nature. Must you not therefore either deny the Immortality of the Soul, or acknowledge the Necessity of its having an Eternal Light and Spirit? When the Gospel saith, that nothing can kindle or generate the heavenly Life, but the Operation of the Light and Spirit of Heaven, it is because all Nature saith, that no temporal Life can be raised but in the same manner in temporary Nature. Must you not therefore be forced to confess, that Nature and the Gospel both preach the same Truths.

Light and Spirit must be wherever there are living Beings: And there must be the same Difference betwixt the Light and Spirit of different Worlds, as there is betwixt the Worlds themselves. Hell must have its Light, or it could have no living Inhabitants, but its Light is not so refreshing, not so gentle, not so delightful, not so comfortable as flashing Points of Fire in the thickest Darkness of Night; and therefore their Light is called an Eternal Darkness, because it can never disperse, but only horribly discover Darkness: Hell also must have its Spirit; but it is only an incessant Sensibility of wrathful Agitations, of which the Thunder and Rage of a Tempest is but a low, shadowy Resemblance, as being only a little outward Eruption of That Wrath, which is the inward, restless Essence of the Spirit of Hell; and therefore that Life, though it be a living Spirit, is justly called an Eternal Death.

The Light and Spirit of God admit of no Delineation or Comparison, they are only so far known to anyone, as they are brought into the Soul by a Birth of themselves in it.

Now consider, I pray you: The Light and Spirit of this World can no more be the Light and Spirit of immortal Souls, than Grass and Hay can be the Food of Angels; but is as different from the Light and Spirit of Heaven, as an Angel is different from a Beast of the Field. When therefore the Soul of a Man departs from his Body, and is eternally cut off from all temporal Light and Spirit, what is it that can keep such a Soul from falling into Eternal Darkness, unless it have in itself, that Light and Spirit, which is of the same Nature with the Light and Spirit of Eternity, so that it may be in the Light of Heaven or Eternal Nature, as it was in the Light of this World in temporary Nature.

Light and Spirit there must be in every Thing that lives, but the Death of the Body takes away the Light and Spirit of this World; if therefore the Light and Spirit of Heaven be not born in the Soul when it loses the Body, it can only have that Light and Spirit, which is the very Death and Darkness of Hell.

When Man lost the Light and Spirit of his Creation, he lost it by turning the Will and Desire of his Soul into an Earthly Life; this was his Desire of knowing Good and Evil in this World. His Fall therefore consisted in this, his Soul lost its first innate, in-breathed Light and Spirit of Heaven, and instead of it, had only the Light and Spirit of Temporary Nature, to keep up for a Time such a Life in him from this World, as the proper Creatures of this World have: And this is the Reason, why Man, the noblest Creature that is in this World, has yet various Circumstances of Necessity, Poverty, Distress and Shame, that are not common to other Animals of this World. 'Tis because the Creatures of this Life are here at home, are the proper Inhabitants of this World, and therefore that Womb out of which they are born, has provided them with all that they want; but Man being only fallen into it, and as a Transgressor, must in many Respects find himself in such Wants as other Creatures have not. Transitory Time has brought them forth, and therefore they can have no Pain, nor Concern, nor Danger in passing away; because it is the very Form of their Nature, to begin, and to have an End: And therefore the God of Nature has no outward Laws, or Directions for the Creatures of this World.

But the Soul of Man being not born of the Light and Spirit of this transitory World, but only standing a while as a Stranger upon Earth, and being under a Necessity of having either the Nature of an Angel, or a Devil, when it leaves this World, is met by the Mercy and Goodness of the God of Nature, is inwardly and outwardly called, warned, directed, and assisted how to regain that Light and Spirit of Heaven which it lost, when it fell under the temporary Light and Spirit of this World. And this is the whole Ground and End of revealed Religion, viz., to kindle such a Beginning or Birth of the Divine Light and Spirit in the Soul, that when Man must take an Eternal Leave of the Light and Spirit of this World, he may not be in a State of Eternal Death and Darkness.

Now, seeing the Light and Spirit of Heaven or Eternal Nature, is as different from the Light and Spirit of this World, as an Angel is from an Animal of the Field, if you have lived here only to the Spirit and Temper of this World, governed by its Goods and Evils, and only wise according to its Wisdom, you must die as destitute of the Light and Spirit of Heaven, as the Beasts that perish. You have now an Aversion and Dislike, or at least, a Disbelief of the Doctrines of Christian Regeneration, you struggle against this Kind of Redemption, you would have no Salvation from the Light and Spirit of Eternity regenerated in your Soul; where then must you be, when the Light and Spirit of this World leaves you?

Do you think that the Light and Spirit of God will then seize upon you, shine up in you by an outward Force, though they never could be born in you? Or do you think, that the Light and Spirit of God can now be generating themselves in you, and ready to appear, as soon as you have ended a Life, that has continually resisted them, and would have no new Birth from them? Or that God, by a compassionate Goodness, will not suffer you to be in that Condition, into which your own Will has brought you? No, my Friend, the Will that is in you, must do That for you, which the Will that was in Angels did for those that stood, and for those that fell.

God's Goodness or Compassion is always in the same infinite State, always flowing forth, in and through all Nature in the same infinite Manner, and nothing wants it, but that which cannot receive it: Whilst the Angels stood, they stood encompassed with the infinite Source of all Goodness and Compassion, God was communicated to them in as high a Degree as their Nature could receive; and they fell, not because he ceased to be an infinite, open Fountain of all Good to them, but because they had a Will which must direct itself.

For the Will, at its first arising in the Creature, can be subject to no outward Power, because it has no outward Maker; as it stands in a creaturely Form, God is its true Creator; but as a Will, it has no outward Maker, but is a Ray, or Spark, derived from the Unbeginning Will of the Creator, and is of the same Nature in the Creature, as it was in the Creator, self-existent, self-generating, self-moving, and uncontrollable from without; and there could not possibly be a free Will in the Creature, but by its being directly derived, or propagated from the same Will in the Creator, for Nothing can be free now, but that which always was so.

But if the free Will of God, which is above and superior to Nature, be communicated to the Creature, then the Creature's free Will must have the same Power over its one Nature, that the Will of God has over that Eternal Nature, which is his own Manifestation: And therefore, every free Creature must have, and find its own Nature in this, or that State, as a Birth from the free Working of its own Will. And here appears the true Reason, why no Creatures of this World can commit Sin; 'tis because they have no Will that is superior to Nature: Their Will in every one of them, is only the Will of Nature; and therefore let them do what they will, they are always doing that which is natural, and consequently, not sinful. But the Will of Angels and Men being an Offspring, or Ray, derived from the Will of God, which is superior to Nature, stands chargeable with the State and Condition of their Nature; and therefore it is, that the Nature of the Devil, and the Nature of fallen Man is imputed to both of them, as their Sin, which could not be, but because their Will was uncontrollable, and gave Birth and Being to that State and Condition of Nature, which is called, and is their Sin.

106 An Appeal to all who doubt

Therefore, O Man! look well to thyself, and see what Birth thou art bringing forth, what Nature is growing up in Thee, and be assured, that stand thou must, in that State in Nature, which the Working of thy own Will has brought forth in Thee, whether it be happy or miserable. Expect no Arbitrary Goodness, of God towards Thee, when thou leavest this World; for that must grow for ever which hath grown here. God hath created thee in Nature, his Mercy hath shown Thee all the Laws and Necessities of Nature, and how Thou mayest rise from Thy Corruption, according to the Possibilities of Nature, and He can only save Thee by thy conforming to the Demands of Nature: The Greatness of the Divine Mercy and Favour towards all Men appears in this, that when all Nature had failed, and Mankind could from Nature have nothing but Eternal Death, that God brought such a Second Adam into the World, as being God and Man, could make Nature begin its Work again, where it failed in the first Adam.

The free Grace and Mercy by which we are said in the Scripture to be saved, is not an arbitrary Good Will in God, which saves whom he pleases; as a Prince may forgive some, and not forgive others, merely through his own Sovereign Grace and Favour: Nothing of this Kind hath any Place in God, or in the Mystery of our Redemption; but the Mercy and Grace, by which we are saved, is therefore free, because God hath freely, and from his own Goodness, put us into a State and Possibility of Salvation, by freely giving us Jesus Christ, (the Divine and Human Nature united in one Person) as the only Means of regenerating that first Divine and Human Life, which the whole Race of Mankind had lost. In this sense alone it is, that all our Salvation is wholly owing to the free Grace of God, that is, our State, and Possibility, and Means of attaining Salvation is wholly owing to his free Grace in giving us Jesus Christ; but our Salvation, considered as a finished Thing, is not, cannot be found by any Act of God's free Grace towards us, but because all That is done, altered, removed, suppressed, quickened, and recovered by us in the State of our Nature, which the free Grace of God had furnished us with the Possibility and Means of doing. If Nature and Creature had no Share in working out our Salvation; if it was all free Grace, effected against, and without the Powers of Nature, how comes it, that the fallen Angels are not to be redeemed as well as Man? Must we say that God is less good to them than he is to us? Or if they are not redeemed, can there be any other Reason for it, but because it is an Impossibility in Nature? Must not an infinite Good do all the Good that is wanted, and is possible to be done? If free Grace can do what it pleases, if it wants no Concurrence of Nature and Creature, how can any Being, whether Man or Angel, be eternally miserable, but through an Eternal Defect in the Goodness of God towards it? Shall we call that infinite Goodness, which sets Bounds and Limits to itself, and which could do more Good, but will not?

The Truth of the Matter is this, God is as infinite and boundless in Love and Goodness, as he is in Power, but his Omnipotence can only do that which is possible, and nothing is possible but that which hath its Possibility in Nature; because Nature is God's first Power, his great, universal Manifestation of his Deity, in and through, and by which all his infinite Attributes break forth, and display themselves: So that to expect, that God should do any Thing that is above, or contrary to this Nature, is as absurd as to expect that God should act above, or contrary to himself: As God can only make a Creature to be in, and through, and by Nature; so the Reason why he cannot make a Creature to be, and not to be at the same Time, is only this, because it is contrary to Nature. Let no Man therefore trust to be saved at the last Day, by any arbitrary Goodness, or free Grace of God; for Salvation is, and can be nothing else, but the having put off all that is damnable and hellish in our Nature, which Salvation can be found by no Creature but by its own full conforming to, and concurring with those Mysterious Means, which the free Grace of God hath afforded for the Recovery of our first, perfect, glorious State in Nature.

Chapter II.

Of Eternal and Temporal Nature. How Nature is from God, and the Scene of his Action. How the Creatures are out of it. Temporal Nature created out of that which is eternal. The fallen Angels brought the first Disorders into Nature. This World created to repair those Disorders. Whence Good and Evil is in every Thing of this World. How Heaven and Hell make up the Whole of this World. How the Fire of this World differs from eternal Fire; and the Matter of this World from the Materiality of Heaven. Eternal Nature is the Kingdom of Heaven, the beatific Manifestation of the triune God. God is mere Love and Goodness. How Wrath and Anger come to be ascribed to him. Of Fire in general. Of the Unbeginning Fire. Of the Spirituality of Fire. How Fire comes to be in material Things. Whence the Possibility of kindling Fire in the Things of this World. Every Man is, and must be the Kindler of his own Eternal Fire, &c.

1. WAS there no Nature, there could be no Creature, because the Life of every Creature is, and can be nothing else, but the Life of that Nature out of which it was created, and in which it has its Being. Eternal Beings must have their Qualities, Nature, Form and Manner of Existence out of Eternal Nature, and temporal Beings out of temporary Nature: Was there no Eternity, there could be no Time, was there nothing infinite, there could be nothing finite; therefore we have here two great fundamental Truths that cannot be shaken; First, That there is, and must be, an Eternal Nature; because there is a Nature that is temporary, and that it must be that to Eternal Creatures, which temporal Nature is to temporal Creatures: Secondly, That everywhere, and in all Worlds, Nature must stand between God and the Creature, as the Foundation of all mutual Intercourse; God can transact nothing with the Creature, nor the Creature have any Communion with God, but in, and by that Nature, in which it stands.

I hope no one will here ask me for Scripture Proofs of this, or call these Truths Nostrums, because they are not to be found in the same Form of Expression in some particular Text of Scripture. Where do the Holy Writings tell us, that a Thing cannot be, and not be at the same Time? Or that every Consequence must arise from Premises? And yet the Scripture is continually supposing both these Truths, and there could be no Truth in the Scripture, or anywhere else, if these Things were not undeniable.

There is nothing said of Man throughout all Scripture, but what supposes him to stand in Nature, under a necessity of choosing something that is natural, either Life or Death, Fire or Water. There is nothing said of God with relation to Creatures, but what supposes him to be the God of Nature, manifesting himself in and through Nature, calling, assisting and directing every Thing to its highest natural State. Nature is the Scene of his Providence, and all the Variety of his governing Attributes display themselves by his various Operations in and through Nature: Therefore it is equally certain, that what God does to any Creature, must be done through the Medium of Nature, and also what the Creature does toward God, must be done in and through the Powers of that Nature in which it stands. No temporary Creature can turn to God, or reach after him, or have any Communion with him, but in, and according to that Relation which temporary Nature bears to God; nor can any Eternal Beings draw near to, or unite with God in any other manner, than that in which Eternal Nature is united with him. Would you know, why no Omnipotence of God can create Temporal Animals but out of temporary Nature, nor eternal Animals but out of Eternal Nature; it is because no Omnipotence of God can produce a visible Triangle, but out of, and by three visible Lines; for, as Lines must be before there can be any lineal Figures, so Nature must be before there can be natural Creatures.

2. Every Thing that is in Being, is either God, or Nature, or Creature; and every Thing that is not God, is only a Manifestation of God; for as there is nothing, neither Nature, nor Creature, but what must have its Being in, and from God, so every Thing is, and must be according to its Nature, more or less a Manifestation of God. Everything therefore, by its Form and Condition, speaks so much of God, and God in every Thing, speaks and manifests so much of himself. Temporary Nature is this beginning, created System of Sun, Stars, and Elements; 'tis temporary Nature, because it begins and hath an End, and therefore is only a temporary Manifestation of God, or God manifested according to transitory Things.

3. Properly and strictly speaking, nothing can begin to be: The Beginning of every Thing is nothing more, than its beginning to be in a new State. Thus Time itself does not begin to be, but Duration, which always was, began to be measured by the Earth's turning round, or the rising and setting of the Sun, and that is called the Beginning of Time, which is, properly speaking, only the Beginning of the Measure of Duration: Thus it is with all temporal Nature, and all the Qualities and Powers of temporal Beings that live in it: No Quality or Power of Nature then began to be, but such Qualities and Powers as had been from all Eternity, began then to be in a new State. Ask what Time is, it is nothing else but something of Eternal Duration become finite, measurable, and transitory? Ask what Fire, Light, Darkness, Air, Water, and Earth are; they are, and can be nothing else, but some eternal Things become gross, finite, measurable, divisible, and transitory? For if there could be a temporal Fire that did not spring out of Eternal Fire, then there might be Time that did not come out of Eternity.

'Tis thus with every temporary Thing, and the Qualities of it; 'tis the Beginning of Nothing, but only of a new State of something that existed before: Therefore all temporary Nature is a Product, Offspring, or Out-birth of Eternal Nature, and is nothing else but so much of Eternal Nature changed from its eternal to a temporal Condition. Fire did not begin to be, Darkness did not begin to be, Light did not begin to be, Water and Earth did not begin to be, when this temporary World first appeared, but all these Things came out of their Eternal State, into a lower, divided, compacted, created and transitory State. Hearing, Seeing, Tasting, Smelling, Feeling, did not then begin to be, when God first created the Creatures of this World, they only came to be Qualities and Powers of a lower, and more imperfect Order of Beings than they had been before.

Figures, and their Relations, did not then begin to be, when Material Circles and Squares, &c., were first made, but these Figures and Relations began then to appear in a lower State than they had done before: And so it must be said of all temporal Nature, and every Thing in it. It is only something of Eternal Nature separated, changed, or created into a new, temporary State and Condition.

4. Now it may be asked, why was Eternal Nature thus degraded, debased, and changed from its Eternal State of Perfection? Will anyone say, that God of his own Will changed Eternal Nature, which is the Glorious Manifestation of his Power and Godhead, the Seat of his holy Residence, his Majestic Kingdom of Heaven, into this poor, miserable Mixture of Good and Evil, into this impure State of Division, Grossness, Death, and Darkness? No. It is the highest of all Absurdities, to say so. Now, we sufficiently know from Scripture, that a whole Hierarchy, or Host of Angels, renounced their Heavenly Life, and thereby raised up a Kingdom that was not Heavenly. Could they not have inflamed and disordered outward Nature in which they lived, they could not have destroyed the Heavenly Nature in themselves: For every Thing must be according to the State of that World in which it lives; and therefore, the State of outward Nature, and the State of inward Nature in the Angels must stand and fall together; and as sure as a whole Kingdom of Angels lost their heavenly Life, so sure it is, that their whole Kingdom lost its heavenly State and Condition: And therefore, it is an undeniable Truth, founded on Scripture Evidence, that same Part of Eternal Nature was changed from its first State of Glory and Perfection, before the Creation of Temporary Nature; therefore, in the Creation of this poor, gross, disordered, perishable, material World, one of these two Things was done, either God took the spoiled Part of Heaven or Eternal Nature, and created it into this Temporary State of Good and Evil; or he degraded, and brought down some Part of the Kingdom of Heaven from its Glory and Perfection, into this Mixture of Good and Evil, Order and Disorder in which the World stands. He could not do this latter, without bringing Evil into Nature, as the Devil had done, and therefore we may be sure he did not do it; but if he did the former, then the Creation of this lower World, was a glorious Act, and worthy of the infinite Goodness of God, it was putting an End to the Devil's working Evil in Nature, and it was putting the Evil that was brought into Nature, in a way of being finally overcome, and turned into Good again. Will anyone now call these Things whimsical Speculations? Can any Thing be thought of more worthy of God, more conformable to Nature, or more consonant to all revealed Religion? But perhaps you will say, how could the Angels spoil or destroy that glorious Kingdom of Eternal Nature in which they dwelt. It may be answered, how could it possibly be otherwise? How could they live in Eternal Nature, unless Nature without them, and Nature within them, mutually mixed and qualified with each other? Would you have such mighty Spirits, with their eternal Energies, have less Power in that Nature, or Kingdom in which they dwelt, than a kindled Piece of Coal hath in this World? For every Piece of Coal set on Fire, adds so much Heat to outward Nature, and so far alters and changes the State of it.

5. Now, let it be supposed, not only that a Piece of Coal, but that the Whole of every Thing in this World, that could either give or receive Fire was made to burn, what Effect would it have upon the whole Frame of Nature? Would not the whole State of Things, the Regions, Places, and Divisions of the Elements, and all the Order of temporal Nature be quite destroyed?

When therefore every Angelical Life kindled itself in Wrath, and became thereby divided, darkened, and separated from God, the same Kindling, Darkening, Dividing and Confusion must be brought forth in their Natural Kingdom, because they lived in Nature, and could have neither Love, nor Wrath, but such as they could exert in and by the Powers of Nature.

Now, all Fire, wherever it is, is either a Fire of Wrath, or a Fire of Love: Fire not overcome or governed by Light, is the Fire of Wrath, which only tears in Pieces, consumes and devours all that it can lay hold of, and it wills nothing else: But Light is the Fire of Love, it is meek, amiable, full of kind Embraces, lovingly spreading itself, and giving itself with all its Riches into every Thing that can receive it. These are the two Fires of Eternal Nature, which were but one in Heaven, and can be only one wherever Heaven is; and it was the Separation of these two Fires that changed the Angels into Devils, and made their Kingdom a Beginning of Hell.

Now, either of these two Fires, wherever it is kindled in animate or lifeless Things, communicates its own kind of Heat in some Degree to outward Nature, and so far alters and changes the State of it: The Wrath of a Man, and the Wrath of a Tempest do one and the same Thing to outward Nature, alter its State in the same Manner, and only differ in their Degree of doing it.

Fire kindled in a material Thing, can only communicate with the Materiality of Nature; but the Fire of a wrathfully-inflamed Man, being a Fire both of Body and Soul, communicates a two-fold Heat, it stirs up the Fire of outward Nature, as Fire does in a Coal, and it stirs up the Wrath of Hell as the Devils do.

The Fire of Love kindled by the Light and Spirit of God in a truly regenerated Man, communicates a twofold Blessing, it outwardly joins with the meek Light of the Sun, and helps to overcome the Wrath of outward Nature; it inwardly co-operates with the Power of Good Angels, in resisting the Wrath and Darkness of Hell: And it would be no Folly to suppose, that if all human Breath was become a mere, unmixed Wrath, that all the Fire in outward Nature would immediately break forth, and bring that Dissolution upon outward Nature, which will arise from the last Fire. Therefore it is necessary, that a whole Kingdom of Angels should kindle the same Wrath and Disorder in outward Nature that was in themselves; for being in eternal Nature, and communicating with it, as temporal Beings do in temporal Nature, what they did in themselves, must be done in that Nature or Kingdom in which they lived, and moved, and had their Being.

What a powerful Fire there is in the Wrath of a Spirit, may be seen by the Effects of human Wrath; one sudden Thought shall in a Moment discolour, poison, inflame, swell, distort and agitate the whole Body of a Man. Whence also is it, that a diseased Body infects the Air, or that malignant Air infects a healthful Body? Is it not because there is, and must be an inseparable Qualifying, Mixing and Uniting betwixt Nature and those Creatures that live in it? Now, all Diseases and Malignties, whether in Nature or Creature, all proceed from the sinful Motions of the Will and Desires of the Creature. This is as certain, as that Death and all that leads to it, is the sole Product of Sin; therefore it is a certain Truth, that all the Disorder that ever was, or can be in Nature, arises from that Power which the Creature hath in and upon Nature; and therefore, as sure as a whole Host of Heavenly Beings raised up a fiery, wrathful, dark Nature in themselves, so sure is it, that the same wrathful, fiery, dark Disorder was raised up in that Kingdom, or Nature, in which they had their Being.

6. Now the Scriptures nowhere say in express Words, that the Place of this World was the Place of the Angels that fell, and that their fallen, spoiled and disordered Kingdom, was by the Power of God, changed or created into this temporary State of Things in which we live; this is not expressly said, because it is plainly implied and fully signified to us by the most general Doctrines of Scripture; for if we know, both from Nature and Scripture, that this World is a Mixture of Good and Evil, do not we enough know, that it could only be created out of That which was Good and Evil? And if we know that Evil cannot come from God, if we know that the Devil had actually brought it forth before the Creation of this World; are we not enough told, that the Evil which is in this World, is the Evil that was brought forth into Nature by the Devil? And that therefore the Matter of this World, is that very Materiality which was spoiled by the fallen Angels? How can we need a particular Text of Scripture to tell us, that the Place of this World was the Place of the Angels before their Fall, when the whole Tenor of Scripture tells us, that it is the Place of their Habitation now? For how could they have, or find Darkness, but in that very Place, where they had extinguished the Light? What could they have to do with us, or we with them, but that we are entered into their Possessions, and have their Kingdom made over to us? How could they go about amongst us as roaring Lions, seeking whom they may devour, but that our Creation has brought us amongst them? They cannot possibly be anywhere, but where they fell, because they can live nowhere but in the Evil which they have brought forth; they can have no Wrath and Darkness but where they broke off from Light and Love; they can communicate with no outward Nature but that which fell with them, and underwent the same Change as they did: Therefore, though St. Jude saith with great Truth, that they left their own Habitation, yet, it is only as they left their own Angelical Nature, not departed from it into a distant Place, but deformed and changed it; so that the Heaven that was within them, and without them, is equally left, because both within them, and without them, they have no Habitation but a fiery Darkness broken off from the Light of God.

And therefore, as Man by his Creation is brought into a Power of Commerce with those fallen Angels, who must live, and could only act in that Part of Nature which they had deformed, it is plain, that this Creation placed him in that System of Things, which was formed and created out of their fallen Kingdom, because they can act, or be acted upon nowhere else.

7. And this is the one true, and only Reason, why there is Good and Evil throughout all temporal Nature and Creature; 'tis because all this temporary Nature is a Creation out of that Strife of Evil against Good which the fallen Angels had brought into their Kingdom. No subtle, evil Serpent could have been generated, no Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil could have sprung out of the Earth, but because Nature in this World was that Part of Eternal Nature which the fallen Angels had corrupted; and therefore, a Life made up of Good and Evil could be brought forth by it. Evil and Good was in the Angelical Kingdom as soon as they set their Wills and Desires contrary to God, and the Divine Life. Had God permitted them to go on, their whole Kingdom had been like themselves, all over one unmix'd Evil, and so had been incapable of being created into a redeemable State: But God put a Stop to the Progress of Evil in their Kingdom, he came upon it whilst it was in Strife, and compact'd or created it all into a new, temporary, material State and Condition; whence these two Things followed: First, That the fallen Angels lost their Power over it, and could no further kindle their own Fire in it, but were as chained Prisoners, in an Extent of Darkness which they could neither get out of, nor extend any further: Secondly, This new Creation being created out of this begun Strife, stood as yet in the Birth of Life, and so became capable of being assisted and blessed by God ; and finally, at the End of Time, restored to its first heavenly State.

Now, the Good and Evil that is in this World is that same Good and Evil, and in the same Strife that it was in the Kingdom of the fallen Angels, only with this happy Difference, there it was under the Devil's Power, and in a Way to be wholly evil ; here it is in a new compacted, or created State under the Providence and Blessing of God, appointed to bring forth a new kind of Life, and display the Wonders of Divine Love, till such Time as a new Race of Angelical Creatures born in this Mixture of Good and Evil, shall be fit to receive the Kingdom of Lucifer, restored to its first Glory ?

Is there any Part of the Christian Religion that does not either suppose or speak this great Truth, any Part of outward Nature that does not confirm it ? Is there any Part of the Christian Religion that is not made more intelligible, more beautiful and edifying by it ? Is there any Difficulty of outward Nature that is not totally removed and satisfied by it ?

How was the Philosophy of the Ancient Sages perplexed with the State of Nature ? They knew God to be all Goodness, Love, and Perfection, and so knew not what to do with the Misery of Human Life, and the Disorders of outward Nature, because they knew not how this Nature came into its present State, or from whence it was descended. But had they known, that temporal Nature, all that we see in this whole Frame of Things, was only the sickly, defiled State of Eternal Things put into a temporary State of Recovery, that Time and all transitory Things were only in this War and Strife, to be finally delivered from all the Evil that was brought into Eternal Nature, their Hearts must have praised God for this Creation of Things as those Morning Stars did, that shouted for Joy when it was first brought forth.

8. From this true Knowledge of the State, and Nature, and Place of this Creation, what a Reasonableness, Wisdom, and Necessity does there appear in the hardest Sayings, Precepts and Doctrines of the Gospel ? He that thus knows what this World is, has great Reason to be glad that he is born into it, and yet still greater Reason to rejoice, in being called out of it, preserved from it, and shown how to escape with the Preservation of his Soul. The Evils that are in this World, are the Evils of Hell, that are tending to be nothing else but Hell ; they are the Remains of the Sin and Poison of the fallen Angels : The Good that is in this World are the Sparks of Life that are to generate Heaven, and gain the Restoration of the first Kingdom of

Lucifer. Who therefore would think of any Thing, desire any Thing, endeavour any Thing, but to resist Evil in every Kind, under every Shape and Colour? Who would have any Views, Desires and Prayers after any Thing, but that the Life and Light of Heaven may rise up in Himself, and that God's Kingdom may come, and his Will be done in all Nature and Creature?

Darkness, Light, Fire and Air, Water and Earth, stand in their temporary, created Distinction and Strife, for no other End, with no other View, but that they may obtain the one Thing needful, their first Condition in Heaven: And shall Man that is born into Time for no other End, on no other Errand, but that he may be an Angel in Eternity, think it hard to live as if there were but one Thing needful for him? What was the poor Politics, the earthly Wisdom, the Ease, Sensuality, and Advancements of this World for us, but such Fruits as must be eaten in Hell? To be swelled with Pride, to be fattened with Sensuality, to grow great through Craft, and load ourselves with earthly Goods, is only living the Life of Beasts, that we may die the Death of Devils. On the other hand, to go starved out of this World, rich in nothing but heavenly Tempers and Desires, is taking from Time all that we came for, and all that can go with us into Eternity.

9. But to return to the further Consideration of Nature. As all temporary Nature is nothing else but eternal Nature brought out of its kindled, disordered Strife, into a created or compacted Distinction of its several Parts, so it is plain, that the Whole of this World, in all its working Powers, is nothing else but a Mixture of Heaven and Hell. There cannot be the smallest Thing, or the smallest Quality of any Thing in this World, but what is a Quality of Heaven or Hell, discovered under a temporal Form: Every Thing that is disagreeable to the Taste, to the Sight, to our Hearing, Smelling or Feeling, has its Root and Ground, and Cause, in and from Hell, and is as surely in its Degree the Working or Manifestation of Hell in this World, as the most diabolical Malice and Wickedness is: The Stink of Weeds, of Mire, of all poisonous, corrupted Things, Shrieks, horrible Sounds, wrathful Fire, Rage of Tempests, and thick Darkness, are all of them Things, that had no Possibility of Existence, till the fallen Angels disordered the State of their Kingdom; therefore, every Thing, that is disagreeable and horrible in this Life, every Thing that can afflict and terrify our Senses, all the Kinds of natural and moral Evil, are only so much of the Nature, Effects, and Manifestation of Hell: For Hell and Evil are only two Words for one and the same Thing: The Extent of one is the Extent of the other, and all that can be ascribed to the one, must be ascribed to the other. On the other hand, all that is sweet, delightful and amiable in this World, in the Serenity of the Air, the Fineness of Seasons, the Joy of Light, the Melody of Sounds, the Beauty of Colours, the Fragrancy of Smells, the Splendour of precious Stones, is nothing else but Heaven breaking through the Veil of this World, manifesting itself in such a Degree, and darting forth in such Variety so much of its own Nature. So that Heaven and Hell are not only as near you, as constantly showing and proving themselves to all your Senses, as Day and Night, but Night itself is nothing else but Hell breaking forth in such a Degree, and the Day is nothing else but a certain Opening of Heaven, to save us from the Darkness that arises from Hell.

O Man! consider thyself, here thou standest in the earnest, perpetual Strife of Good and Evil, all Nature is continually at work to bring about the great Redemption; the whole Creation is travelling in Pain, and laborious Working, to be delivered from the Vanity of Time, and will thou be asleep? Everything thou hearest, or seest, says nothing, shows nothing to Thee, but what either eternal Light, or eternal Darkness hath brought forth; for as Day and Night divide the whole of our Time, so Heaven and Hell divide the whole of our Thoughts, Words and Actions. Stir which way thou wilt, do, or design what thou wilt, thou must be an Agent with the one or with the other. Thou canst not stand still, because thou livest in the perpetual Workings of temporal and eternal Nature; if thou workest not with the Good, the Evil that is in Nature carries thee along with it: Thou hast the Height and Depth of Eternity in Thee, and therefore be doing what thou wilt, either in the Closet, the Field, the Shop, or the Church, thou art sowing That which grows, and must be reaped in Eternity. Nothing of thine can vanish away, but every Thought, Motion, and Desire of thy Heart, has its Effect either in the Height of Heaven, or the Depth of Hell: And as Time is upon the Wing, to put an End to the Strife of Good and Evil, and bring about the last great Separation of all Things into their Eternal State, with such Speed art Thou making Haste either to be wholly an Angel, or wholly a Devil: O! therefore awake, watch and pray, and join with all thy Force with that Goodness of God, which has created Time and all Things in it, to have a happy End in Eternity.

10. Temporal Nature opened to us by the Spirit of God, becomes a Volume of holy Instruction to us, and leads us into all the Mysteries and Secrets of Eternity: For as every Thing in temporal Nature is descended out of that which is eternal, and stands as a palpable, visible Out-birth of it; so when we know how to separate the Grossness, Death, and Darkness of Time from it, we find what it is in its eternal State. Fire, and Light, and Air in this World are not only a true Resemblance of the Holy Trinity in Unity, but are the Trinity itself in its most outward, lowest kind of Existence or Manifestation ; for there could be no Fire, Fire could not generate Light, Air could not proceed from both, these three could not be thus united, and thus divided, but because they have their Root and Original in the Triunity of the Deity. Fire compacted, created, separated from Light and Air, is the Elemental Fire of this World : Fire uncreated, uncompact, unseparated from Light and Air, is the heavenly Fire of Eternity : Fire kindled in any material Thing is only Fire breaking out of its created, compacted State ; it is nothing else but the awakening the Spiritual Properties of that Thing, which being thus stirred up, strive to get rid of that material Creation under which they are imprisoned : Thus every kindled Fire, with all its Rage and Fierceness, tears and divides, scatters and consumes that Materiality under which it is imprisoned ; and were not these Spiritual Properties imprisoned in Matter, no material Thing could be made to burn. And this is another Proof, that the Materiality of this World is come out of a higher, and spiritual State, because every Matter upon Earth can be made to discover Spiritual Properties concealed in it, and is indeed a Compaction of nothing else. Fire is not, cannot be a material Thing, it only makes itself visible and sensible by the Destruction of Matter : Matter is its Death and Imprisonment, and it comes to Life but by being able to agitate, divide, shake off, and consume that Matter which held it in Death and Bondage ; so that every Time you see a Fire kindled, you see Nature striving in a low degree to get rid of the Grossness of this material Creation, and to do that which can alone be done by the last Fire, when all the inward, spiritual Properties hid in every Thing, in Rocks, and Stones, and Earth, in Sun, and Stars, and Elements, shall by the last Trumpet be awakened and called forth : And this is a certain Truth, that Fire could nowhere now be kindled in any material Thing, but for this Reason, because all material Nature was created to be restored, and stands by Divine Appointment in a Fitness and Tendency to have its Deliverance from this created State, by Fire ; so that every Time you see a Piece of Matter dissolved by Fire, you have a full Proof, that all the Materiality of this World is appointed to a Dissolution by Fire ; and that then, (O glorious Day !) Sun and Stars, and all the Elements will be delivered from Vanity, will be again that one eternal, harmonious, glorious Thing which they were, before they were compacted into material Distinctions and Separations.

11. The Elements of this World stand in great Strife and Contrariety, and yet in great Desire of mixing and uniting with each other; and hence arises both the Life and Death of all Temporal Things: And hereby we plainly know that the Elements of this World were once one undivided Thing; for Union can nowhere be desired, but where there has first been a Separation; as sure therefore as the Elements desire each other, so sure is it, that they have been parted from each other, and are only Parts of some one Thing that has been divided. When the Elements come to such a Degree of Union, a Life is produced; but because they have still a Contrariety to each other, they soon destroy again that same Life which they had built, and therefore every four-elementary Life is short and transitory.

Now, from this undeniable State of Nature, we are told these following great Truths: 1. That the four Elements are only four Parts of That, which before the Creation of this World, was only a one Element, or one undivided Power of Life. 2. That the Mortality of this Life is wholly and solely owing to the divided State of the Elements. 3. That the true, immortal Life of Nature, is only there to be found, where the four Elements are only one Thing, mere Unity and Harmony; where Fire and Air, Water and Earth, have a much more glorious Union than they have in Diamonds and precious Stones: For in the brightest Diamonds the four Elements still partake of their divided State, though to our Eye they appear as only one glorious Thing; but the Beauty of the Diamond is but a Shadow, a low Specimen of that Glory which will shine through all Nature, when Fire and Air, Water and Earth shall be again that one Thing which they were, before the Fall of Angels and the Creation of this World. 4. That the Body of Adam (being formed for Immortality) could not possibly have the Nature, or be made out of the divided State of the Elements. The Letter of Scripture absolutely demonstrates this; for if Sickness, Sorrow, Pain, the Trouble of Heat and Cold, all so many Forerunners of Death, can only be where the Elements are in Division and Contrariety; and if, according to Scripture, these Calamities did not, could not possibly touch Adam till he fell, then it is plain from Scripture, that before his Fall, the Division and Contrariety of the Elements was not in him: And that was his Paradisaical Nature, in and by which he stood in a State of Superiority over all the Elements of this World. 5. That the Body of Adam lost its one Elementary Glory and Immortality, and then first became gross, dark, heavy Flesh and Blood, under the Power of the four Elements, when he lusted to eat, and actually did eat of that Tree, which had its Good and Evil from the divided State of the Elements. 6.

Hence we also know, with the greatest Certainty, the Mystery of the Resurrection of the Body, that it consists wholly and solely in the reducing the four-Elementary Body of this World, to its first, one Elementary State, and then everyone has that same Body raised again that died, and all that Adam lost is restored. For if the Body is mortal, and dies because it is become a Body of the four Elements, it can only be raised immortal, by having its four Elements reduced again into one: And here lies the true Sameness of the Body that died, and that which rises again. But to proceed :

12. As all the four Elements, by their Desiring, and wanting to be united together, prove that they are only four grossly divided Out-births of That which before was only one heavenly, harmonious Element, so every single Element fully demonstrates the same Thing; for every single Element, though standing in its created Contrariety to every other, has yet in its own divided State, all the four Elements in itself: Thus the Air has every Thing in it that is in the Earth, and the Earth has in itself every Thing that is in Fire, Water and Air, only in a different Mixture and Compaction; were it not so, had not every Element in some Degree the whole Nature of them all, they could not possibly mix, and qualify with one another; and this may well pass for a Demonstration, that That out of which the four Elements are descended, was one harmonious Union of them all, because every one of the four, has now, and must have in its divided State, all the four in itself, though not in Equality; for if the four must be together, though unequally lodged in every single Element, it is plain, the four must have been one harmonious Thing, before they were brought into four unequal Separations: And therefore, as sure as there are four warring, disagreeing Elements in Time, so sure is it, that That which is now in this fourfold Division, was and is in Eternity, one, in an heavenly, harmonious Union, keeping up an Eternal, joyful, glorious Life in Eternal Nature, as its four broken Parts bring forth a poor, miserable, transitory Life in temporal Nature.

13. All Matter in this World is only the Materiality of Heaven thus altered. The Difference between Matter in this World and Matter in the other World, lies wholly and solely in this; in the one it is dead, in the other it is living Materiality. It is dead Materiality in this World, because it is gross, dark, hard, heavy, divisible, &c. It is in this State of Death, because it is separated, or broken off from the Eternal Light, which is the true Life, or the Power of Life in every Thing.

In eternal Nature or the Kingdom of Heaven, Materiality stands in Life and Light; it is the Light's glorious Body, or that

the Truths of the Gospel. 121

Garment wherewith Light is clothed, and therefore has all the Properties of Light in it, and only differs from Light, as it is its Brightness and Beauty, as the Holder and Displayer of all its Colours, Powers and Virtues. But the same Materiality in this World, being created or compacted into a Separation from Fire united with Light, is become the Body of Death and Darkness, and is therefore gross, thick, dark, heavy, divisible, &c., for Death is nothing else but the shutting up, or shutting out the united Power of Fire and Light: This is the only Death that ever did, or can happen to any Thing, whether earthly or heavenly. Therefore, every Degree of Hardness, Darkness, Stiffness, &c., is a Degree of Death; and herein consists the Deadness of the Materiality of this World. When it shall be raised to Life, that is, when the United Power of Fire and Light shall kindle itself through all temporal Nature, then Hardness, Darkness, Divisibility, &c., will be all extinguished together.

That the Deadness of the Earth may, and certainly will be brought to Life by the united Power of Fire and Light, is sufficiently shown us by the Nature and Office of the Sun. The Sun is the united Power of Fire and Light, and therefore the Sun is the Raiser of Life out of the Deadness of the Earth; but because Fire and Light as united in the Sun, is only the Virtue of temporary Fire and Light, so it can only raise a short and fading, transitory Life. But as sure as you see, that Fire and Light united in the Sun, can change the Deadness of the Earth, into such a beautiful Variety of a Vegetable Life, so sure are you, that this dark, gross Earth, is in its State of Death and Darkness, only for this Reason, because it is broken off from the united Power of Fire and Light: For as sure as the outward Operation of the Fire and Light of the Sun can change the Deadness of the Earth into a Degree of Life, so sure is it, that the Earth lies in its present Deadness, because it is separated from its own Eternal Fire and Light: And as sure as you see, that the Fire and Light of the Sun can raise a temporal Life out of the Earth, so sure is it, that the united Power of Eternal Fire and Light can, and will turn all that is earthly, into its first State of Life and Beauty. For the Sun of this World, as it is the Union of temporary Fire and Light, has no Power, but as it is the outward Agent, or Temporary Representative of Eternal Fire and Light, and therefore it can only do that in part, and imperfectly in Time, which by the Eternal Fire and Light will be wholly and perfectly done in Eternity. And therefore every Vegetable Life, every Beauty, Power, and Virtue which the Sun calls forth out of the Earth, tells us, with a Divine Certainty, that there will come a Time, when all that is hid in the Deadness, Grossness, and Darkness of the Earth, will be again called up to a Perfection of Life and Glory of Beauty.

14. How has the Philosophy of the Schools been puzzled with the Divisibility of Matter! It is because human Reason, the Mistress of the Schools, partakes of the Deadness of the Earth; and the Soul of Man must first have the Light of Eternal Life rise up in him, before he can see or find out the Truths of Nature. Human Reason knew nothing of the Death of the Matter, or the Nature and Reason of its temporary Creation, and so thought Death and Divisibility to be essential to Matter; but the Light of God tells every Man this infallible Truth, that God made not Death in any Thing, that he is a God of Life, and therefore, every Thing that comes from him, comes into a State of Life. Matter is thick, hard, heavy, divisible, and the like, only for a Time, because it is compacted or created into Thickness, Hardness, and Divisibility only for a Time: These are only the Properties of its temporal, created State, and therefore are no more essential to it than the Hardness of Ice is essential to Water. Now, that the Creation of the Matter of this World is nothing else but a Compaction, that all the Elements are separated Compactions of That which before was free from such a Compaction, is plain from Scripture. For we are told, that all the Material Things and Elements of this World, are to have their created State and Nature taken from them, by being dissolved or melted: But if this be a Scripture Truth, then it is equally true from Scripture, that their Creation was only a Compaction; and a Compaction of something that stood before according to its own Nature, absolutely free from it. Mortality, Corruptibility, and Divisibility, are not essential Properties, but temporary Accidents, they are in Things, as Diseases and Sickness are, and are as separable from them; and that is the true Reason, why this Mortal can put on Immortality, this Corruptible can put on Incorruptibility, and this Divisible put on Indivisibility: For when the four Elements shall be dissolved and loosed from their separate Compaction from one another, when Fire and Air, Water and Earth, shall be a one much more glorious and harmonious Thing than they are now in the brightest Diamond, then the Divisibility of this redeemed Materiality will be more impossible to be conceived, than the Distance between Fire and Water in a Diamond.

15. The Reason why all inanimate Things of this World tend towards their utmost Perfection in their Kind, lieth wholly and solely in this Ground; it is because the four Elements of this World were once the one Element of the Kingdom of the fallen Angels; and therefore, Nature in this World is always labouring after its first Perfection of Life, or as the Scripture speaks, the 'whole Creation travaileth in Pain, and groaneth to 'be delivered from its present Vanity:' And therefore it is, that all Vegetables and Fruits naturally grasp after every Kind and Degree of Perfection they can take in; endeavouring with all their Power, after that first Perfection of Life which was before the Fall of the Angels. Every Taste and Colour, and Power and Virtue, would be what it was before Lucifer kindled his dark, fiery, wrathful Kingdom; but as this cannot be, so when every Fruit and Flower has worked itself as far towards a heavenly Perfection as it can, it is forced to wither and rot, and become a Witness to this Truth, that neither Flesh nor Blood, nor Fruit, nor Flower, can reach the Kingdom of God.

16. All the Misery and Imperfection that is in Temporary Nature, arises from the divided State of the Elements: Their Division is that which brings all Kinds and Degrees of Death and Hell into this World, and yet their being in a certain Degree in one another, and always endeavouring after their first Union, is so much of the Nature and Perfection of Heaven still in them. The Death that is in this World, consists in the Grossness, Hardness and Darkness of its Materiality. The Wrath that is in this World consists in the kindled Division of its Qualities, whence there arises a contrary Motion and Fermentation in all its Parts, in which consists both the Life and Death of all its Creatures. This Death and this Wrath is the Nature of Hell in this World, and is the Manifestation of the Disorders which the fallen Angels have occasioned in Nature. The Heaven in this World began when God said, Let there be Light, for so far as Light is in any Thing, so much it has of Heaven in it, and of the Beginning of a heavenly Life: This shows itself in all Things of this World, chiefly in the Life-giving Power of the Sun, in the Sweetness and Meekness of Qualities and Tempers, in the Softness of Sounds, the Beauty of Colours, the Fragrancy of Smells, and Richness of Tastes and the like; thus far as any Thing is tintured with Light, so far it shows its Descent from Heaven, and its partaking of something heavenly and paradisaical. Again, Love or Desire of Union, is the other Part of Heaven that is visible in this World. In Things without Life, it is a senseless Desire, a friendly mixing and uniting of their Qualities, whereby they strive to be again in that first State of Unity and Harmony in which they existed, before they were kindled into Division by Lucifer. In rational Creatures, it is Meekness, Benevolence, Kindness and Friendship amongst one another: And thus far they have Heaven and the Spirit of God in them, each in their Sphere, being and doing that to one another, which the Divine Love is and does to all.

Again, the Reason why Man is naturally taken with beautiful Objects, why he admires and rejoices at the Sight of lucid and transparent Bodies, and the Splendour of precious Stones, why he is delighted with the Beauty of his own Person, and is fond of his Features when adorned with fine Colours, has this only true Ground, 'tis because he was created in the greatest Perfection of Beauty, to live amongst all the Beauties of a glorious Paradise: And therefore Man, though fallen, has this strong Sensibility and reaching Desire after all the Beauties, that can be picked up in fallen Nature. Had not this been his Case, had not Beauty, and Light, and the Glory of Brightness been his first State by Creation, he would now no more want the Beauty of Objects, than the Ox wants to have his Pasture enclosed with beautiful Walls, and painted Gates. Every Vanity of fallen Man shows our first Dignity, and the Vanity of our Desires are so many Proofs of the Reality of that which we are fallen from. Man wants to see himself in Riches, Greatness and Power, because Human Nature came first into the World in that State; and therefore, what he had in Reality in Paradise, that is he vainly seeking for, where he is only a poor Prisoner in the Valley and Shadow of Death.

17. All Beings that are purely of this World, have their Existence in and Dependence upon temporal Nature. God is no Maker, Creator or Governor of any Being or Creature of this World, immediately, or by himself, but he creates, upholds and governs all Things of this World, by, and through, and with temporal Nature: As temporary Nature is nothing else but Eternal Nature separated, divided, compacted, made visible and changeable for a Time, so Heaven is nothing else but the beatific Visibility, the Majestic Preference of the abyssal, unsearchable, triune God: 'Tis that Light with which the Scripture saith, God is decked as with a Garment, and by which he is manifested and made visible to heavenly Eyes and Beings; for Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as they are the triune God, deeper than the Kingdom of Heaven or Eternal Nature, are invisible to all created Eyes; but that beatific Visibility and outward Glory which is called the Kingdom of Heaven, is the Manifestation of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, in, and by, and through the glorious Union of Eternal Fire, and Light, and Spirit. In the Kingdom of Heaven, these are three and one, because their Original, the Holy Trinity, is so, and we must call them by the Names of Fire, and Light, and Spirit; because all that we have of Fire, and Light, and Spirit in this World, has its whole Nature directly from them, and is indeed nothing else but the Fire, and Light, and Spirit of Eternity, brought into a separated, compacted, temporal State. So that to speak of a heavenly Fire, has no more Grossness and Offence in it, than when we speak of a heavenly Life, a heavenly Light, or heavenly Spirit; for if there is a heavenly Light and Spirit, there must of all necessity be a heavenly Fire; and if these Things were not in Heaven in a glorious State of Union, they never could have been here in this gross State of a temporal Compaction and Division: So that as sure as there are Fire, and Light, and Air in this World, in a divided, compacted, imperfect State, in which consists the Life of temporary Nature and Creatures, so sure is it, that Fire, and Light, and Spirit are in the Kingdom of Heaven, united in one Perfection of Glory, in which consists the beatific Visibility of God, the Divine Nature, as communicable to heavenly Beings.

18. The Kingdom of Heaven stands in this threefold Life, where three are one, because it is a Manifestation of the Deity, which is three and one; the Father has his distinct Manifestation in the Fire, which is always generating the Light; the Son has his distinct Manifestation of the Light, which is always generated from the Fire; the Holy Ghost has his Manifestation in the Spirit, that always proceeds from both, and is always united with them.

It is this Eternal Unbeginning Trinity in Unity of Fire, Light, and Spirit, that constitutes Eternal Nature, the Kingdom of Heaven, the heavenly Jerusalem, the Divine Life, the beatific Visibility, the Majestic Glory and Presence of God. Through this Kingdom of Heaven, or Eternal Nature, is the invisible God, the incomprehensible Trinity eternally breaking forth, and manifesting itself in a boundless Height and Depth of blissful Wonders, opening and displaying itself to all its Creatures as in an infinite Variation and endless Multiplicity of its Powers, Beauties, Joys and Glories. So that all the Inhabitants of Heaven are for ever Knowing, Seeing, Hearing, Feeling, and variously enjoying all that is great, amiable, infinite and glorious in the Divine Nature.

Nothing ascends, or comes into this Kingdom of Heaven, but that which descended, or came out of it, all its Inhabitants must be innate Guests, and born out of it.

19. God considered in himself, as distinct from this Eternal Nature, or Kingdom of Heaven, is not the immediate Creator of any Angels, Spirits, or Divine Beings; but as he creates and governs all temporal Beings in, and by, and out of temporal Nature, so he creates and governs all Spiritual and Heavenly Beings in, and by, and out of Eternal Nature: This is as absolutely true, as that no Being can be temporal, but by partaking of temporal Nature, nor any Being eternal, but by partaking of the eternal, Divine Nature; and therefore, whatever God creates is not created immediately by himself, but in and by, and out of that Nature, in which it is to live, and move, and have its Being, temporal Beings out of temporal Nature, and eternal Beings out of the heavenly Kingdom of Eternal Nature: And hence it is, that all Angels, and the Souls of Men are said to be born of God, Sons of God, and Partakers of the Divine Nature, because they are formed out of that Eternal Nature, which is the unbeginning Majesty of God, the Kingdom of Heaven, or Visible Glory of the Deity. In this Eternal Nature, which is the Majestic Clothing, or Glory of the triune God, manifested in the glorious Unity of Divine Fire, Light, and Spirit, have all the created Images of God, whether they be Angels or Men, their Existence, Union and Communion with God; because Fire, and Light, and Spirit have the same Union and Birth in the Creature, as in the Creator: And hence it is, that they are so many various Mirrors of the Deity, penetrated with the Majesty of God, receiving and returning back Communications of the Life of God. Now, in this Ground, that is, in this Consideration of God, as manifesting his Holy Trinity through Nature and Creature, lieth the solid and true Understanding of all that is so variously said of God, both in the Old and New Testament with Relation to Mankind, both as to their Creation, Fall, and Redemption. God is to be considered throughout, as the God of Nature, only manifesting himself to all his Creatures in a Variety of Attributes in and by Nature; creating, governing, blessing, punishing, and redeeming them according to the Powers, Workings, and Possibilities of Nature. Fire, Light, and Spirit in harmonious Union, is the substantial Glory, the beatific Manifestation of the triune God, visible and communicable to Creatures formed out of it. All intelligent, holy Beings were by God formed and created out of, and for the Enjoyment of this Kingdom of Glory, and had Fire, and Light, and Spirit, as the triune Glory of their created Being: And herein consisted the infinite Love, Goodness and Bounty of God to all his Creatures: It was their being made Creatures of this Fire, Light, and Spirit, Partakers of that same Nature in which the Holy Trinity had stood from all Eternity gloriously manifested. And thus they were Creatures, Subjects, and Objects of the Divine Love; they came into the nearest, highest Relation to God; they stood in, and partook of his own manifested Nature, so that the outward Glory and Majesty of the triune God, was the very Form, and Beauty, and Brightness of their own created Nature. Every Creature which thankfully, joyfully, and absolutely gave itself up to this blessed Union with God, became absolutely fixed in its first created Glory, and incapable of knowing anything but Love, and Joy, and Happiness in God to all Eternity: Thus in this State, all Angels and Men came first out of the Hands of God. But seeing Light proceeds from Fire by a Birth, and the Spirit from both, and seeing the Will must be the Leader of the Birth, Lucifer and Adam could both do as they did, Lucifer could will strong Might and Power, to be greater than the Light of God made him, and so he brought forth a Birth of Might and Power, that was only mighty Wrath and Darkness, a Fire of Nature broken off from its Light. Adam could will the Knowledge of temporal Nature, and so he lost the Light and Spirit of Heaven for the Light and Spirit of this World: And had Man been left in this State of temporary Nature, without a Redeemer, he must, when the Light of this World had left him, have found himself in the same absolute Wrath and Darkness of Nature, which the fallen Angels are in.

20. Now, after these two Falls of two Orders of Creatures, the Deity itself came to have new and strange Names, new and unheard of Tempers and Inclinations of Wrath, Fury, and Vengeance ascribed to it. I call them new, because they began at the Fall; I call them strange, because they were foreign to the Deity, and could not belong to God in himself: Thus God is in the Scriptures said to be a Consuming Fire. But to whom? To the fallen Angels, and lost Souls. But why, and how is he so to them? It is because those Creatures have lost all that they had from God, but Fire; and therefore God can only be found and manifested in them, as a Consuming Fire. Now, is it not justly said, that God, who is nothing but infinite Love, is yet in such Creatures only a Consuming Fire, and that though God be nothing but Love, yet they are under the Wrath and Vengeance of God, because they have only that Fire in them, which is broken off from the Light and Love of God, and so can know, or feel nothing of God, but his Fire in them? As Creatures they can have no Life, but what they have in and from God; and therefore, that wrathful Life which they have, is truly said to be a Wrath of God upon them. And yet it is as strictly true, that there is no Wrath in God himself, that he is not changed in his Temper towards the Creatures, that he does not cease to be one and the same infinite Fountain of Goodness, infinitely flowing forth in the Riches of his Love upon all and every Life; but the Creatures have changed their State in Nature, and so the God of Nature can only be manifested in and to them, according to their own State in Nature: And this is the true Ground of rightly understanding all that is said of the Wrath and Vengeance of God in and upon the Creatures. It is only in such a Sense as the Curse or Unhappiness of God may be said to be upon them, not because any Thing cursed, or unhappy can be in, or come from God, but because they have made that Life which they must have in God, to be mere Curse and Unhappiness to them: For every Creature that lives, must have its Life in and from God, and therefore God must be in every Creature; this is as true of Devils, as of Holy Angels: But how is God in them? Why only as he is manifested in Nature. Holy Angels have the triune Life of God in them, therefore God is in them all Love, Goodness, Majesty and Glory, and theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. Devils have nothing of this triune Life left in them, but the Fire of Eternal Nature broken off from all Light and Joy; and therefore the Life that they can have in and from God, is only a Life of Wrath and Darkness, and theirs is the Kingdom of Hell: And because this Life is a Strength of Life which they must have in and from God, and which they cannot take out of his Hands; therefore, is their cursed, miserable, wrathful Life truly and justly said to be the Curse, and Wrath, and Vengeance of God in and upon them, though God himself can no more have Wrath and Vengeance, than he can have Mischief and Malice in him: For this is a glorious, twofold Truth, that from God considered as in himself, nothing can come from Eternity to Eternity, but infinite Love, Goodness, Happiness, and Glory; and also that infinite Love, Goodness, Happiness and Glory are, and will be for ever and ever flowing forth from him in the same boundless, universal, infinite manner; he is the same infinitely overflowing Fountain of Love, Goodness and Glory after, as before the Fall of any Creatures; his Love, and the infinite Workings of it can no more be lessened, than his Power can be increased by any outward Thing; no Creature, or Number of Creatures can raise any Anger in him, 'tis as impossible as to cast Terror, or Darkness, and Pain into him, for nothing can come into God from the Creature, nothing can be in him, but that which the Holy Trinity in Unity is in itself. All Creatures are Products of the infinite, triune Love of God; nothing willed, and desired, and formed them, but infinite Love, and they have all of them all the Happiness, Beauty and Excellency that an infinitely powerful Love can reach out to them: The same infinite Love continues still in its first creating Goodness, willing, desiring, working, and doing nothing with regard to all Creatures, but what it willed, did, and desired in the Creation of them: This God over Nature and Creature, darts no more Anger at Angels when fallen, than he did in the Creation of them: They are not in Hell, because Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are angry at them, and so cast them into a Punishment, which their Wrath had contrived for them; but they are in Wrath and Darkness, because they have done to the Light which infinitely flows forth from God, as that Man does to the Light of the Sun, who puts out his own Eyes: He is in Darkness, not because the Sun is darkened towards him, has less Light for him, or has lost all Inclination to enlighten him, but because he has put out that Birth of Light in himself, which alone made him capable of seeing in the Light of the Sun. It is thus with fallen Angels, they have extinguished in themselves that Birth of Light and Love, which was their only Capacity for that Happiness, which infinitely, and everywhere flows forth from God; and they no more have their Punishment from God himself than the Man who puts out his Eyes, has his Darkness from the Sun itself.

21. God, considered in himself, as the holy, triune God, is not the immediate Fountain and Original of Creatures; but God considered as manifesting himself in and through Nature, is the Creator, Father and Producer of all Things. The hidden Deity of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, is from Eternity to Eternity, manifested, made visible, perceivable, sensible in the united Glory of Fire, Light and Spirit; this is the beatific Presence, the glorious Out-birth of the Holy Trinity; this is that eternal, universal Nature, which brings God into all Creatures, and all Creatures into God, according to that Degree and Manner of Life which they have in Nature: For the Life of Creatures must stand in Nature, and Nature is nothing else but God made manifest, visible, and perceptible; and therefore the Life of every Creature, be it what it will, a Life of Joy or Wrath, is only so much of God made manifest in it, and perceptible by it, and thus is God in some Creatures only a God of Wrath, and in others, only a God of Glory and Goodness.

No Creature can have Life, or live, and move, and have its Being in God, but by being formed out of, and living in this Manifestation of Nature. Thus far Hell and Heaven, Angels and Devils are equally in God, that is, they equally live, move, and have their Being in that Eternal Nature, which is the Eternal Manifestation of God: The one have a Life of Glory, Majesty, and Love, and Bliss, the other a Life of Horror, Fire, Wrath, Misery, and Darkness. Now, all this could not possibly be, there could be no Room for this Distinction between Creatures standing in Nature, the one could not possibly have a Life of Majestic Bliss and Glory, the other of fiery Horror and Darkness, but because the Holy, triune God is manifested in the united Glory and Bliss of Fire, Light, and Spirit. For the Creatures could only divide That, which there was in Nature to be divided, they could only divide That, which was united, and divisible; and therefore, as sure as Heaven is a splendrous Light of blissful Majesty, as sure as Hell is a Place of fiery Wrath and Darkness, so sure is it from the Scriptures, that Eternal Nature, which is from God, or a Manifestation of God, is a Nature of united Fire, Light, and Spirit, otherwise, some Creatures could not have the blissful Glory of Light, and others, a horrible, fiery Darkness for their separate Portions.

All therefore that has been said of an Eternal Nature, or Kingdom of Heaven, consisting of united Fire, Light, and Spirit, is not only to be looked upon as an Opinion well grounded, and sufficiently discovered by the Light of Nature, but as a fundamental Truth of revealed Religion, fully established by all that is said in the Scriptures both of Heaven and Hell. For if God was not manifested, visible, perceptible and communicable, in and by this united Fire, and Light, and Spirit, how could there be a Heaven of glorious Majesty? If this Fire of Heaven could not be separated, or broken off from its heavenly Light, how could there be a Hell in Nature? Or, how could those Angels which lost the Light of Heaven, have thereby fallen into a State of hellish Darkness, or Fire? Is not all this the greatest of Demonstrations, that the holy Triunity of God is, and must be manifested in Nature, by the Union of Fire, Light, and Spirit? And is not this Demonstration wholly taken from the very Letter of the most plain Doctrines of Scripture?

Hell and Wrath could have no Possibility of Existence, but because the Light, and Majesty, and Glory of Heaven, must of all necessity have its Birth in and from the Fire of Nature. An Angel could not have become a Devil, but because the Angelic Light and Glory had, and must have its Birth in and from the Fire of Life. And thus as a Devil was found, where angelic Light and Glory had its Existence, so a Hell was found, where heavenly Glory was before; and as the Devil is nothing but a Fire-spirit broken off from its Angelical Light and Glory, so Hell is nothing but the Fire of Heaven separated from its first Light and Majesty.

And here we have plainly found two Worlds in Eternity; not possible to be two, nor ever known to be two, but by such Creatures, as have in their own Natures, by their own Self-motion, separated the Fire of Eternal Nature from its Eternal Light, Spirit and Majesty. And this is also the Beginning, or first Opening of the Wrath of God in the Creature; which is, in other Words, only the Beginning, or first Opening of Pain and Misery in the Creature, or the Origin of a hellish, tormenting State of Life.

22. And here, in this dark wrathful Fire of the fallen Creature, do we truly find that Wrath and Anger and Vengeance of God, that cleaves to Sin, that must be quenched, atoned, and satisfied before the Sinner can be reconciled to God; that is, before it can have again that triune Life of God in it, which is its Union with the holy Trinity of God, or its regaining the Kingdom of Heaven in itself.

Some have objected, that by thus considering the fallen Soul, as a dark, wrathful Fire-Spirit, for this Reason, because it has lost the Birth of the Son and holy Spirit of God in it, that this casts Reproach upon God the Father, as having the Nature of such a Soul in Him. But this is a groundless Objection, for this State of the Soul casts no more Reproach upon the first, than upon the second and third Persons of the holy Trinity. The fallen Soul, that has lost the Birth of the Son and holy Spirit of God in it, cannot be said to have the Nature of the Father left in it. This would be blasphemous Nonsense, and is no way founded on this Doctrine. But such a Soul must be said to have a Nature from the Father left in it, though a spoiled one, and this because the Father is the Origin, Fountain and Creator of all kind of Existence: Hell, and the Devils have their Nature from Him, because every Kind of Creature must have what it has of Life and Being from its Creator; but Hell and the Devils have not therefore the Nature of the Father in them. If it be asked what the Father is, as he is the first Person in the sacred Trinity, the Answer must be, that as such, He is the Generator of the Son and holy Spirit: This is the Nature of the Father; where this generating is not, there is not the Nature of the Father. Is it not therefore highly absurd to charge this Doctrine with ascribing the Nature of the Father to the fallen Soul, which asserts the Soul to be fallen, for this Reason, because it has quite lost and extinguished all Power and Ability for the Birth of the Son and holy Spirit in it? How could it be more roundly affirmed, or more fully proved, that the fallen Soul hath not the Nature of the Father left in it. But to proceed:

The Reader ought not to wonder, or be offended at the frequent mention of the Word Fire, which is here used to denote the true Nature, and State of the Soul. For both Nature and Scripture speak continually the same Language. For wherever there is mention of Life, Light, or Love in the Scriptures, there Fire is necessarily supposed, as being that in which all Life, and Light, and Love must necessarily arise; and therefore the Scriptures speak as often of Fire, as they do of Life, and Light, and Love, because the one necessarily includes the other: For all Life, whether it be vegetable, sensitive, animal, or intellectual, is only a kindled Fire of Life in such a Variety of States; and every dead, insentive Thing is only so, because its Fire is quenched, or shut up in a hard Compaction. If therefore we will speak of the true Ground of the fallen State of Men and Angels, we are not at Liberty to think of it under any other Idea, or speak of it in any other manner, than as the darkened Fire of their Life, or the Fire of their Life unable to kindle itself into Light and Love. Do not the Scriptures strictly confine us to this Idea of Hell? So that it is not any particular Philosophy, or affected Singularity of Expression, that makes me speak in this manner of the Soul, but because all Nature and Scripture forces us to confess, that the Root of all and every Life stands, and must necessarily stand in the Properties of Fire.

The holy Scriptures also speak much of Fire, in the Ideas which they give us, both of the Divine Nature, and of created Spirits, whether they be saved, or lost; the former as becoming Flames of heavenly Light and Love, the latter as dark Fire-brands of Hell.*

No Description is, or can be given us either of Heaven or Hell, but where Fire is necessarily signified to be the Ground and Foundation both of the one and of the other. Why do all Languages, however distant, and different from one another, all speak of the Coldness of Death, the Coldness of Insensibility?

Why do they all agree in speaking of the Warmth of Life, the Heat of Passions, the Burnings of Wrath, the Flames of Love? It is because it is the Voice or Dictate of universal Nature, that Fire is the Root or Seat of Life, and that every Variety of human Tempers is only the various Workings of the Fire of Life.—It ought to be no Reason why we should think grossly of Fire, because it is seen in so many gross Things of this World? For how is it seen in them? Why only as a Destroyer, a Consumer, and Refiner of all Grossness; as a Kindler of Life, and Light out of Death and Darkness. So that in all the Appearances of Fire, even in earthly Things, we have Reason to look upon it as something of a heavenly, exalting, and glorious Nature; as that which disperses Death, Darkness, and Grossness, and raises up the Power and Glory of every Life.

If you ask what Fire is in its first, true, and unbeginning State, not yet entered into any Creature, It is the Power and Strength, the Glory and Majesty of eternal Nature; it is that which generates, enriches, brightens, strengthens and displays the Light of Heaven. It is that which makes the eternal Light to be majestic, the eternal Love to be flaming: For the Strength and Vivacity of Fire, must be both the Majesty of Light, and the Ardour of Love. It is the glorious Out-birth, the true Representative of God the Father eternally generating his only Son, Light and Word.

If you ask what Fire is in its own spiritual Nature, it is merely a Desire, and has no other Nature than that of a working Desire, which is continually its own Kindler. For every Desire is nothing else, but its own striking up, or its own kindling itself into some Kind and Degree of Fire. And hence it is that Nature (though reduced to great Ignorance of itself) has yet forced all Nations and Languages to speak of its Desires, as cool, warm, or burning, &c., because every Desire is, so far as it goes, a kindled Fire. And it is to be observed, that Fire could have no Existence or Operation in material Things, but because all the Matter of this World has in it more or less of spiritual and heavenly Properties compacted in it, which continually desire to be delivered from their material Imprisonment. And the stirring up the Desire of these spiritual Properties, is the kindling of that Heat, and Glance, and Light, in material Things, which we call Fire, and is nothing else but their gloriously breaking, and triumphantly dispersing that hard Compaction in which they were imprisoned. And thus does every kindled Fire, as a Flash or transitory opening of heavenly Glory, show us in little and daily, but true Instances, the Triumph of the last Fire, when all that is spiritual and heavenly in this World, shall kindle and separate itself from that, which must be the Death and Darkness of Hell.

Now the Reason, why there are spiritual Properties in all the material Things of this World, is only this, it is because the Matter of this World is the Materiality of the Kingdom of Heaven, brought down into a created State of Grossness, Death, and Imprisonment, by occasion of the Sin of those Angels, who first inhabited the Place, or Extent of this material World.

Now these heavenly Properties, which were brought into this created Compaction, lie in a continual Desire to return to their first State of Glory; and this is the groaning of the whole Creation to be delivered from Vanity, which the Apostle speaks of. And in this continual Desire lieth the kindling, and all the Possibility of kindling any Fire in the Things of this World. Quench this Desire, and suppose there is nothing in the Matter of this World that desires to be restored to its first Glory, and then all the breaking forth of Fire, Light, Brightness, and Glance in the Things of this World, is utterly quenched with it, and it would be the same Impossibility to strike Fire, as to strike Sense and Reason out of a Flint.

24. But you will perhaps say, though this be a Truth, yet it is more speculative than edifying, more fitted to entertain the Curiosity, than to assist the Devotion of Christians. But stay awhile, and you shall see it is a Truth full of the most edifying Instruction, and directly speaking to the Heart.

For if every Desire is in itself, in its own Essence, the kindling of Fire, then we are taught this great practical Lesson, that our own Desire is the Kindler of our own Fire, the Former and Raiser of that Life which leads us. What our Desire kindles, that becomes the Fire of our Life, and fits us either for the majestic Glories of the Kingdom of God, or the dark Horrors of Hell: So that our Desire is all, it does all, and governs all, and all that we have and are, must arise from it, and therefore it is, that the Scripture saith, 'Keep thy Heart with all Diligence, for 'out of it are the Issues of Life.'

We are apt to think that our Imaginations and Desires may be played with, that they rise and fall away as nothing, because they do not always bring forth outward and visible Effects. But indeed they are the greatest Reality we have, and are the true Formers and Raisers of all that is real and solid in us. All outward Power that we exercise in the Things about us, is but as a Shadow in Comparison of that inward Power, that resides in our Will, Imagination, and Desires; these communicate with Eternity, and kindle a Life which always reaches either Heaven or Hell. This Strength of the inward Man makes all that is the Angel, and all that is the Devil in us, and we are neither good nor bad, but according to the Working of that which is spiritual and invisible in us. Now our Desire is not only thus powerful and productive of real Effects, but it is always alive, always working and creating in us, I say creating, for it has no less Power, it perpetually generates either Life or Death in us: And here lies the Ground of the great Efficacy of Prayer, which when it is the Prayer of the Heart, the Prayer of Faith, has a kindling and creating Power, and forms and transforms the Soul into every Thing that its Desires reach after: It has the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven, and unlocks all its Treasures, it opens, extends, and moves that in us, which has its Being and Motion in and with the Divine Nature, and so brings us into a real Union and Communion with God.

Long Offices of Prayer sounded only from the Mouth, or impure Hearts, may Year after Year be repeated to no Advantage, they leave us to grow old in our own poor, weak State: These are only the poor Prayers of Heathens, who, as our Lord said, 'think to be heard by their much speaking.' But when the Eternal Springs of the purified Heart are stirred, when they stretch after that God from whence they came; then it is, that what we ask, we receive, and what we seek, we find. Hence it is, that all those great Things are by the Scriptures attributed to Faith, that to it all Things are possible; that it heals the Sick, saves the Sinner, can remove Mountains, and that all Things are possible to him that believeth; 'tis because the Working of Will and Desire is the first Eternal Source of all Power, that from which every Thing is kindled into that Degree of Life in which it standeth; 'tis because Will and Desire in us are Creaturely Offsprings of that first Will and Desire which formed and governed all Things; and therefore, when the Creaturely Power of our Will, Imagination and Desire leaves off its Working in Vanity, and gives itself wholly unto God in a naked and implicit Faith in the Divine Operation upon it, then it is, that it does nothing in vain, it rises out of Time into Eternity, is in Union and Communion with God, and so all Things are possible to it. Thus is this Doctrine so far from being vainly speculative, that it opens to us the Ground, and shows us the Necessity and Excellency of the greatest Duties of the Gospel.

25. Now, as all Desire throughout Nature and Creature is but one and the same Thing, branching itself out into various Kinds and Degrees of Existence and Operation, so there is but one Fire throughout all Nature and Creature, standing only in different States and Conditions. The Fire that is in the Light of the Sun, is the same Fire that is in the Darkness of the Flint: That Fire which is the Life of our Bodies, is the Life of our Souls; that which tears Wood in Pieces, is the same which upholds the beauteous Forms of Angels: It is the same Fire that burns Straw, that will at last melt the Sun, the same Fire that brightens a Diamond, is darkened in a Flint: It is the same Fire that kindles Life in an Animal, that kindled it in Angels: In an Angel it is an Eternal Fire of an Eternal Life, in an Animal it is the same Fire brought into a temporary Condition, and therefore can only kindle a Life that is temporary: The same Fire that is mere Wrath in a Devil, is the Sweetness of flaming Love in an Angel; and the same Fire which is the Majestic Glory of Heaven, makes the Horror of Hell.

Chapter III.

The true Ground of all the Doctrines of the Gospel discovered. Why Adam could make no Atonement for his Sins. Why, and how Jesus Christ alone could make this Atonement. Whence the Shedding of Blood for the Remission of Sins. What Wrath and Anger it is, that is quenched and atoned by the Blood of Christ. Of the last Sufferings of Christ. Why, and how we must eat the Flesh and drink the Blood of Jesus Christ.

WE have now, Worthy Reader, so far cleared the Way, that we have nothing to do, but to rejoice in the most open Illustration, and full Proof of all the great Doctrines of the Gospel, and to see all the Objections, which Deists, Arians, and Socinians have brought against the first Articles of our Faith, dashed to Pieces: For as soon as we but begin to know, that the holy, triune Deity from Eternity to Eternity manifests itself in Nature, by the triune Birth of Fire, Light and Spirit, and that all Angels and Men must have been created out of this Nature;

there is not a Doctrine in Scripture concerning the Creation, Fall, and Redemption of Man, but becomes the most plainly intelligible, and all the Mysteries of our Redemption are proved and confirmed to us, by all that is visible and perceptible in all Nature and Creature.

Here we have the plain Foundation of the whole Economy of all Religion from the Beginning to the End of Time, why the Incarnation of the Son of God, who is the Light of the World, must have before it the fiery Dispensation of the Father delivered from Mount Sinai; and after it, the pouring out, or proceeding forth of the Holy Spirit upon all Flesh; it is because the triune Life of the fallen race must be restored according to the triune Manifestation of the Holy Deity in Nature.

Here we know what the Love, and what the Anger of God is, what Heaven and Hell, an Angel and a Devil, a lost and a redeemed Soul are. The Love, and Goodness, and Blessing of God known, found, and enjoyed by any Creature, is nothing else but the Holy Trinity of God known, found, and enjoyed in the blissful, glorious, triune Life of Fire, Light and Spirit, where Father, Son, and Holy Ghost perpetually communicate their own nameless, numberless, boundless Powers, Riches and Glories to the created Image of their own Nature. The Hell in Nature, and the hellish Life in the Creature, the Wrath of God in Nature and Creature, is nothing else but the triune, holy Life broken and destroyed in some Order of Creatures, it is only the Fire of Heaven separated from its heavenly Light and Spirit. This is that Eternal Anger, and Wrath, and Vengeance, that must be atoned, satisfied, and removed, that eternal Fire that must be quenched, that eternal Darkness that must be changed into Light, or there is no Possibility in Nature, that the Soul of fallen Man should ever see the Kingdom of God: And here all the Doctrines of the Socinians are quite torn up by the Roots. For in this Ground appeareth the absolute Necessity of the Incarnation, Life, Sufferings, Death, Resurrection and Ascension of the Son of God. Here lieth the full Proof, that through all Nature there could no Redeemer of Man be found, but only in the Second Person of the adorable Trinity become Man. For as the Light and Spirit of Eternal Life, is the Light and Spirit of the Son and Holy Ghost manifested in Heaven, so the Light of Eternal Life could never come again into the fallen Soul, but from him alone, who is the Light of Heaven. He must be again in the Soul, as he was in it, when it was first breathed forth from the Holy Trinity, he must be manifested in the Soul, as he is in Heaven, or it can never have the Life of Heaven in it.

The Socinians therefore, or others, who think they pay a just Deference to the Wisdom and Omnipotence of God, when they suppose there was no absolute Necessity for the Incarnation of the Son of God ; but that God, if he had so pleased, could as well have saved Man some other Way, show as great Ignorance both of God and Nature, as if they should have said, that when God makes a blind Man to see by opening or giving him Eyes, there was no Necessity in the Thing itself, that Sight should be given in that particular Way, but that God, if he had so pleased, could have made him become a seeing Man in this World without Eyes, or Light of this World.

For if the Son of God is the Light of Heaven, and Man only wants to be redeemed, because he has lost the Light of Heaven ; is it not absolutely impossible for Him to be redeemed any other Way, or by any other Thing, than by a Birth of this Son of God in him. Is not this Particularity the one only Thing that can raise fallen Man, as seeing Eyes are the one only Thing that can take away Blindness from the Man ?

If Adam had been able to undo in himself all that he had done, if he could have gone back into that State from whence he was fallen, if he could have raised up again in himself that Birth of the Holy Trinity, in which he was created, no Saviour had been wanted for him ; but because he could not do any Thing of this, but must be That which he had made himself to be, therefore the Wrath of Nature, or the Wrath of God manifested in Nature, abode upon him, and this Wrath must of all necessity be appeased, atoned, and satisfied, that is, it must be kindled into Light and Love, before he could again find, and enjoy the God of Nature, as a God of Light and Love.

Could Adam himself have done all that which I have just now mentioned, then his own Actions had atoned and satisfied the Divine Wrath, and had reconciled him to God : For nothing lost him the Love of God, but That which separated him from God ; and nothing did, or ever can separate him from God, but the Loss of that triune Life, in which alone the Holy Trinity of Divine Love can dwell. If therefore Adam could have raised again in himself that triune Life, then his Sin, and the Wrath of God upon him, had been only transitory ; but because he did That, which according to all the Possibilities of Nature, was unalterable ; therefore he became a Prisoner of an eternal Wrath, an Heir of an everlasting, painful Life, till the Love of God, who is greater than Nature, should do That for him and in him, which he could by no Powers of Nature do for himself, nor the highest of Creatures do for him.

3. And here we see in the plainest Light, that there was no Anger in God himself towards the fallen Creature, because it was purely and solely the infinite Love of God towards him, that did, and alone could raise him out of his fallen State: All Scripture, as well as Nature, obliges us to think thus of God. Thus it is the whole Tenor of Scripture, that 'God so loved the World, 'that he sent his only-begotten Son into it, that the World, 'through him, might be saved.' Is not this saying more than if it had been said, that there was no Anger in God himself towards fallen Man? Is he not expressly declared to be infinitely flowing forth in Love towards him? Could God be more infinite in Love, or more infinitely distant from all Possibility of Anger towards Man, when he first created him, than when he thus redeemed him? God out of pure and free Love gave his Son to be the Life of the World, first, as an inspoken and ingrafted Word of Life, as the Bruiser of the Serpent given to all Mankind in their Father Adam. This Word of Life, and Bruiser of the Serpent, was the Extinguisher of that Wrath of God that lay upon fallen Man. Now, will the Scriptures, which tell us that the Love of God sent his Son into the World, to redeem Man from that hellish Wrath that had seized him, allow us to say, that it was to extinguish a Wrath that was got into God himself, or that the Bruiser of the Serpent was to bruise, suppress, or remove something that Sin had raised in the Holy Deity itself? No surely, but to bruise, alter, and overcome an Evil in Nature and the Creature, that was become Man's Separation from the Enjoyment of the God of Love, whose Love still existed in its own State, and still followed him, and gave his only Son to make him capable of it. Do not the Holy Scriptures continually teach us, that the Holy Jesus became incarnate to destroy the Works of the Devil, to overcome Death and Hell that had taken Man captive? And is not this sufficiently telling us, what that Wrath was, and where it existed, which must be atoned, satisfied, and extinguished, before Man could again be alive unto God, or reconciled unto him, so as to have the triune Life of Light and Love in him? It was a Wrath of Death, a Wrath of Hell, a Wrath of Sin, and which only the precious, powerful Blood of Christ could change into a Life of Joy and Love: And when this Wrath of Death and Hell are removed from Human Nature, there neither is, nor can be any other Wrath of God abiding on it. Are not the Devils and all lost Souls justly said to be under the eternal Wrath of God, and yet in no Wrath but that which exists in Hell, and in their own Hellish Nature.

4. They therefore, who suppose the Wrath and Anger of God upon fallen Man, to be a State of Mind in God himself, to be a political kind of just Indignation, a Point of Honourable Resentment, which the Sovereign Deity, as Governor of the World, ought not to recede from, but must have a sufficient Satisfaction done to his offended Authority, before he can, consistently with his Sovereign Honour, receive the Sinner into his Favour, hold the Doctrine of the Necessity of Christ's atoning Life and Death in a mistaken Sense. That many good Souls may hold this Doctrine in this Simplicity of Belief, without any more Hurt to themselves, than others have held the Reality of Christ's Flesh and Blood in the Sacrament under the Notion of the Transubstantiation of the Bread and Wine, I make no Manner of Doubt: But when Books are written to impose and require this Belief of others, as the only saving Faith in the Life and Death of Christ, it is then an Error that ceases to be innocent: For neither Reason nor Scripture will allow us to bring Wrath into God himself, as a Temper of his Mind, who is only infinite, unalterable, overflowing Love, as unchangeable in Love, as he is in Power and Goodness. The Wrath that was awakened at the Fall of Man, that then seized upon him, as its Captive, was only a Plague, or Evil, or Curse that Sin had brought forth in Nature and Creature: it was only the beginning of Hell: It was such a Wrath as God himself pitied Man's lying under it; it was such a Wrath as God himself furnished Man with a Power of overcoming and extinguishing, and therefore it was not a Wrath that was according to the Mind, Will, and Liking, or Wisdom of God; and therefore it was not a Wrath that was in God himself, or which was exercised by his Sovereign Wisdom over his disobedient Creatures: It was not such a Wrath, as when Sovereign Princes are angry at Offenders, and will not cease from their Resentment, until some political Satisfaction, or valuable Amends be made to their slighted Authority. No, no; it was such a Wrath as God himself hated, as he hates Sin and Hell, a Wrath that the God of all Nature and Creature so willed to be removed and extinguished, that seeing nothing less could do it, he sent his only begotten Son into the World, that all Mankind might be saved and delivered from it. For seeing the Wrath that was awakened and brought forth by the Fall, and which wanted to be appeased, atoned, and quenched, was the Wrath of eternal Death, and eternal Hell, that had taken Man captive; therefore God spared not the precious, powerful, efficacious Blood of the Holy Jesus, because that alone could extinguish this eternal Wrath of Death and Hell, and re-kindle Heaven and Eternal Life again in the Soul. And thus all that the Scriptures speak of the Necessity and powerful Atonement of the Life and Death of Christ, all that they say of the infinite Love of God towards fallen Man, and all that they say of the Eternal Wrath and Vengeance to which Man was become a Prey, have the most solid Foundation, and are all of them proved to be consistent, harmonious Truths of the greatest Certainty, according to the plain Letter of Scripture.

5. It is the Foundation of the Law and the Gospel, that without shedding of Blood, there is no Remission of Sins; and that the precious Blood of Christ could alone do this, could alone reconcile us to God, and deliver us from the Wrath to come. How, and why Blood, and only the Blood of Jesus Christ could do this, will appear as follows: Adam was created with a two-fold Respect, to be himself a glorious, living, eternal Image of the Holy, triune God, and to be a Father of a new World of like Beings, all descended from himself: When Adam fell, he lost both these Conditions of his created State; the Holy Image of God was extinguished, his Soul lost the Light and Spirit of Heaven, and his Body became earthly, bestial, corruptible Flesh and Blood, and he could only be a Father of a Posterity partly diabolical, and partly bestial.

Now, if the first Purpose of God was to stand, and to take Effect; if Adam was still to be the Father of a Race that were to become Sons of God, then there was an absolute Necessity that all that Adam had done in and to himself, and his Posterity, by the Fall, should be undone again; the Serpent and the Beast, that is, the Serpentine Life, and the bestial Life in Human Nature, must both of them be overcome, and driven out of it. This was the one only, possible Salvation for Adam, and every Individual of his Posterity.

Adam had killed that which was to have been immortal in him, he had raised that into a Life which never should have been alive in him, and therefore that which was to be undone and altered both in himself and his Posterity, was this, it was to part with a Life that he had raised up into Being, and to get another Life, which he had quite extinguished.

And here appears the true, infallible Ground of all the Sacrifice, and all the Blood-shedding that is necessary to redeem and reconcile Man to God. 'Tis because the earthly, fleshly, bestial, corruptible Life under the Elements of this World, is a Life raised and brought into Man by the Fall, is not that Life which God created, but is an Impurity in the Sight of God, and therefore cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; 'tis a Life, or Body of Sin, brought forth by Sin, and the Habitation of Sin, and therefore it is a Life that must be given up, its Blood must be poured out, before Man can be released from his Sins: This is the one only Ground of all the Shedding of Blood in Religion. Had not a Life foreign to the Kingdom of God, and utterly incapable of it, been introduced by the Fall, there had been no possible Room for the Death of any Creature, or the pouring out any Blood, as serviceable and instrumental to the raising fallen Man.

6. But now, this bestial, animal Life which is thus to be given up, and its Blood poured out, is but the half, and lesser half of that which is required to deliver Man from all that the Fall has brought upon him. For the heavenly Life, the Birth of the Light and Holy Spirit of God which Adam had quite extinguished, was to be kindled or regenerated again; also his first, glorious, immortal Body was to be regained, before he could become an Inhabitant of the Kingdom of Heaven: But for all this Adam had no Power. See here again the true and dreadful State of the Fall, it was the Fall into such a Life, as must be slain and sacrificed before the fallen Soul could come to God; and yet this Death and Sacrifice of the Body, which was thus absolutely necessary, was the most dreadful Thing that could happen to Man, because his own Death, come when it would, would only remove him from the Light of this World into the Eternal Darkness, and hellish State of fallen Angels: And here we find the true Reason, why Man's own Death, though a Sacrifice necessary to be made, had yet nothing of Atonement or Satisfaction in it; it was because it left the eternal Wrath of Nature, and the Hell that was therein, unquenched and unextinguished in the Soul, and therefore made no Reconciliation to God, no Restoration to the Creature of its first State and Life in God, but left the Soul in its dark, wrathful Separation from the Kingdom of Light and Love.

But here the amazing Infinity of Divine Love appeared, such a Mystery of Love as will be the universal Song of Praise to all Eternity. Here God, the second Person in the holy Trinity, took human Nature upon him, became a suffering, dying Man, that there might be found a Man, whose Sufferings, Blood and Death had Power to extinguish the Wrath and Hell that Sin had brought forth, and to be a Fountain of the first heavenly Life to the whole Race of Mankind.

It was human Nature that was fallen, that had lost its first heavenly Life, and got a bestial, diabolical Life in the stead of it. Now if this human Nature was to be restored, there was but one possible Way, it must go back to the State from whence it came, it must put off all that it had put on, it must regain all that it had lost: But the human Nature that fell, could do nothing of this, and yet all this must be done in and by that human Nature which is fallen, or it could never, to all Eternity, come out of the State of its Fall; for it could not possibly come out of the State of its Fall, but by putting off all that, which the Fall had brought upon it. And thus stood Man, as to all the Powers of Nature and Creature, in an utter Impossibility of Salvation, and had only a short Life of this World betwixt him and Hell.

7. But let us now change the Scene, and behold the Wonders of a new Creation, where all Things are called out of the Curse and Death of Sin, and created again to Life in Christ Jesus; where all Mankind are chosen and appointed to the Recovery of their first glorious Life, by a new Birth from a second Adam, who, as an universal Redeemer, takes the Place of the first fallen Father of Mankind, and so gives Life and Immortality, and Heaven to all that lost them in Adam.

God, according to the Riches of his Love, raised a Man out of the Loins of Adam, in whose mysterious Person, the whole Humanity, and the Word of God was personally united; that same Word which had been inspoken into Adam at his Fall, as a secret Bruiser of the Serpent, and real Beginning of his Salvation; so that in this second Adam, God and Man was one Person. And in this Union of the Divine and human Nature lies the Foundation and Possibility of our Recovery. For thus the holy Jesus became qualified to be the second Adam, or universal Regenerator of all that are born of Adam the first. For being himself that Deity, which as a Spark or Seed of Life was given to Adam, thus all that were born of Adam had also a Birth from him, and so stood under him, as their common Father and Regenerator of a heavenly Life in them. And it was this first inspoken Word of Life which was given to Adam, that makes all Mankind to be the spiritual Children of the second Adam, though he was not born into the World till so many Years after the Fall. For seeing the same Word that became their perfect Redeemer in the Fulness of Time, was in them from the Beginning, as a Beginning of their Redemption, therefore he stood related to all Mankind as a Fountain and Deriver of an heavenly Life into them, in the same universal manner as Adam was the Fountain and Deriver of a miserable Mortality into them.

And seeing also this great and glorious Redeemer had in himself the whole Humanity, both as it was before and after the Fall, viz., in his inward Man the Perfection of the first Adam, and in his outward the Weakness and Mortality of the fallen Nature; and seeing he had all this, as the Undoer of all that Adam had done, as the Overcomer of Death, as the Former and Raiser of our heavenly Life, therefore it was, that all his Conquests over this World, Sin, Death, and Hell, were not the Conquests of a single Person that terminated in himself, but had their real Effect and efficacious Merit through all human Nature, because he was the appointed Father and Regenerator of the whole human Nature, and as such, had that same Relation to it all as Adam had : And therefore as Adam's Fall, Sin and Death, did not, could not terminate in himself, because he was our appointed Father, from whom we must have such a State and Condition of Life as he had ; so the Righteousness, Death, Resurrection and Ascension of Christ into the Kingdom of Heaven did not terminate in himself, but became ours, because he is our appointed second Adam, from whom we are to derive such a State and Condition of Life as he had ; and therefore all that are born again of him, are certainly born into his State of Victory and Triumph over the World, Sin, Death and Hell.

8. Now here is opened to us the true Reason of the whole Process of our Saviour's Incarnation, Passion, Death, Resurrection and Ascension into Heaven : It was because fallen Man was to go through all these Stages as necessary Parts of his Return to God ; and therefore, if Man was to go out of his fallen State, there must be a Son of this fallen Man, who, as a Head and Fountain of the whole Race, could do all this, could go back through all these Gates, and so make it possible for all the Individuals of human Nature, as being born of him, to inherit his conquering Nature, and follow him through all these Passages to eternal Life. And thus we see, in the strongest and clearest Light, both why and how the holy Jesus is become our great Redeemer.

Had he failed in any of these Things, had he not been all that he was, and did all that he did, he could not have made one full, perfect, sufficient Atonement and Satisfaction for the Sins of the whole World, that is, he could not have been and done that, which in the Nature of the Thing was absolutely necessary, and fully sufficient to take the whole human Race out of the Bondage and Captivity of their fallen State. Thus, had he not really had the Divine Nature in his Person, he could not have begun to be our second Adam from the Time of the Fall, nor could we have stood related to him as Children, that had received a new Birth from him. Neither could he have made a Beginning of a Divine Life in our fallen Nature, but that he was that God who could make Nature begin again where it had failed in our first Father. Without this Divinity in his Person, the Perfection of his Humanity would have been as helpless to us as the Perfection of an Angel. Again, had he not been Man, and in human Nature overcome Sin and Temptation, he could have been no Saviour of fallen Man, because nothing that he had done had been done in and to the fallen Nature. Adam might as well have derived Sin into the Angels by his Fall, as Christ had derived Righteousness into us by his Life, if he had not stood both in our Nature, and as the common Father and Regenerator of it; therefore his Incarnation was necessary to deliver us from our Sins, and accordingly the Scripture saith, 'he was manifest 'in the Flesh to destroy the Works of the Devil.' Again, if Christ had not renounced this Life, as heartily and thoroughly as Adam chose it, and declared absolutely for another Kingdom in another World; if he had not sacrificed the Life he took up in and from this World, he could not have been our Redeemer, and therefore the Scripture continually ascribes Atonement, Satisfaction, Redemption, and Remission of Sins to his Sufferings and Death. Again, had not our Lord entered into that State of eternal Death which fallen Man was eternally to inherit; had he not broken from it as its Conqueror, and rose again from the Dead, he could not have delivered us from the Effects of our Sins, and therefore the Apostle saith, 'If Christ be not risen, ye 'are yet in your Sins.' But I must enlarge a little upon the Nature and Merits of our Saviour's last Sufferings. It is plain from Scripture that that Death, which our blessed Lord died on the Cross, was absolutely necessary for our Salvation; that he, as our Saviour, was to taste Death for every Man—that as the Captain of our Salvation, he was to be made perfect through Sufferings—that there was no Entrance for fallen Man into Paradise till Christ had overcome that Death and Hell, or that first and second Death which stood between us and it.

Now the absolute Necessity of our Saviour's doing and suffering all this, plainly appears, as soon as we consider him as the second Adam, who, as such, is to undo all the Evil that the first Adam had done in human Nature; and therefore must enter into every State that belonged to this fallen Nature, restoring in every State that which was lost, *quicken*ing that which was extinguished, and overcoming in every State that by which Man was overcome. And therefore as eternal Death was as certainly brought forth in our Souls, as temporal Death in our Bodies, as this Death was a State that belonged to fallen Man, therefore our Lord was obliged to taste this dreadful Death, to enter into the Realities of it, that he might carry our Nature victoriously through it. And as fallen Man was to have entered into this eternal Death at his giving up the Ghost in this World, so the second Adam, as reversing all that the first had done, was to stand in this second Death upon the Cross, and die from it into that Paradise out of which Adam the first died into this World.

Now when the Time drew near that our blessed Lord was to enter upon his last great Sufferings, viz., the Realities of that second Death through which he was to pass, then it was that all the anguishing Terrors of a lost Soul began to open themselves in him ; then all that eternal Death which Adam had brought into his Soul, when it lost the Light and Spirit of Heaven, began to be awakened, and stirring in the second Adam, who was come to stand in the last State of the fallen Soul, to be encompassed with that eternal Death and Sensibility of Hell, which must have been the everlasting State of fallen Man.

The Beginning of our Lord's Entrance into the terrible Jaws of this second Death, may be justly dated from those affecting Words, 'My Soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto Death, tarry 'ye here with me and watch.' See here the Lord of Life reduced to such Distress as to beg the Prayers, Watching, and Assistance of his poor Disciples! A plain Proof that it was not the Sufferings of this World, but a State of dreadful Dereliction that was coming upon him. O holy Redeemer, that I knew how to describe the anguishing Terrors of thy Soul, when thou wast entering into eternal Death, that no other Son of Man might fall into it.

The Progress of these Terrors are plainly shown us in our Lord's Agony in the Garden, when the Reality of this eternal Death so broke in upon him, so awakened and stirred itself in him, as to force great Drops of Blood to sweat from his Body. This was that bitter Cup which made him withdraw himself, prostrate himself, and thrice repeat an earnest Prayer, that if it were possible, it might pass from him, but at the same Time heartily prayed to drink it according to the Divine Will.

This was that Cup he was drinking from the sixth to the ninth Hour on the Cross, nailed to the Terrors of a two-fold Death, when he cried out 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?'

We are not to suppose that our Lord's Agony was the Terrors of a Person that was going to be murdered, or the Fears of that Death which Men could inflict upon him ; for he had told his Disciples, not to fear them that could only kill the Body, and therefore we may be sure he had no such Fears himself. No, his Agony was his Entrance into the last, eternal Terrors of the lost Soul, into the real Horrors of that dreadful, eternal Death, which Man unredeemed must have died into when he left this World. We are therefore not to consider our Lord's Death upon the Cross, as only the Death of that mortal Body which was nailed to it, but we are to look upon him with wounded Hearts, as fixed and fastened in the State of that two-fold Death, which was due to the fallen Nature, out of which he could not come till he could say, 'It is finished ; Father, into thy Hands I commend my Spirit.'

the Truths of the Gospel. 147

In that Instant he gave up the Ghost of this earthly Life; and as a Proof of his having overcome all the Bars and Chains of Death and Hell, he rent the Rocks, opened the Graves, and brought the Dead to Life, and triumphantly entered into that long shut up Paradise, out of which Adam died, and in which he promised the Thief, he should that Day be with him.

When therefore thou beholdest the Crucifix, which finely represents to thy Senses the Saviour of the World hanging on the Cross, let not thy Thoughts stay on any Sufferings, or Death, that the Malice of Men can cause; for he hung there in greater Distress than any human Power can inflict, forsaken of God, feeling, bearing, and overcoming the Pains and Darkness of that eternal Death which the fallen Soul of Adam had brought into it. For as Adam by his Fall, or Death in Paradise, had nothing left in his Soul, but the Nature, Properties and Life of Hell, all which must have awakened in him in their full Strength, as soon as he had lost the Flesh, and Blood, and Light of this World, as this eternal Death was a State that belonged to Man by the Fall, so there was an absolute Necessity that the Saviour of Man should enter into all these awakened Realities of the last eternal Death, and come victoriously out of them, or Man had never been redeemed from them. For the fallen Nature could no way possibly be saved, but by its own coming victoriously out of every Part of its fallen State; and therefore all this was to be done by that Son of Man, from whom we had a Power of deriving into us his victorious Nature.

Lastly, if our blessed Lord was not ascended into Heaven, and set on the Right Hand of God, he could not deliver us from our Sins; and therefore the Scripture ascribes to him, as ascended, a perpetual Priesthood in Heaven: 'If any Man Sin,' saith St. John, 'we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous, and he is the Propitiation for our Sins.'

All these Things therefore are so many equally essential Parts of our Saviour's Character, and he is the one Atonement, the full Satisfaction for Sin, the Saviour and Deliverer from the Bondage, Power, and Effects of Sin. And to ascribe our Deliverance from Sin, or the Remission of our Sins more to the Life and Actions, than to the Death of Christ, or to his Death more than to his Resurrection and Ascension, is directly contrary to the plain Letter and Tenor of the Scripture, which speaks of all these Things as jointly qualifying our Lord to be the all-sufficient Redeemer of Mankind; and when speaking separately of any of them, ascribes the same Power, Efficacy, and redeeming Virtue to one as to the other.

And all this is very plain from the Nature of the Thing; for since all these Things are necessary Parts or Stages of our Return to God, every one of them must have the same necessary Share in delivering us from our sinful State ; and therefore what our Saviour did, as living, dying, rising from the Dead, and ascending into Heaven, are Things that he did as equally necessary, and equally efficacious to our full Deliverance from all the Power, Effects, and Consequences of our Sins.

And here we may see, in the plainest Light, how Christ is said to bear our Iniquities, to be made Sin for us, and how his Sufferings have delivered us from the Guilt and Sufferings due to our Sins, and how we are saved by him. It is not by an arbitrary, discretionary Pleasure of God, accepting the Sufferings of an innocent Person, as a sufficient Amends or Satisfaction for the Sins of Criminals. This is by no means the true Ground of this Matter. In this View we neither think rightly of our Saviour, nor rightly of God's receiving us to Salvation through him. God is reconciled to us through Jesus Christ in no other Sense than as we are new born, new created in Christ Jesus. This is the only Merit we have from him. Jesus Christ was made Sin for us, he bore our Iniquities, he saved us, not by giving the Merit of his innocent unjust Sufferings as a full Payment for our Demerits, but he saved us because he made himself one of us, became a Member of our Nature, and such a Member of our Nature, as had Power to heal, remove, and overcome all the Evils that were brought into our Nature by the Fall. He bore our Iniquities and saved us, because he stood in our Nature as our common Father, as one that had the same Relation to all Mankind as Adam had, and from whom we can derive all the conquering Power of his Nature, and so are enabled to come out of our Guilt and Iniquities by having his Nature derived into us. This is the whole of what is meant by having our guilty Condition transferred upon him, and his Merit transferred upon us: Our Guilt is transferred upon him in no other Sense than as he took upon him the State and Condition of our fallen Nature, to bear all its Troubles, undergo all its Sufferings, till he had healed and overcome all the Effects of Sin. His Merit or Righteousness is imputed or derived into us in no other Sense, than as we receive from him a Birth, a Nature, a Power to become the Sons of God. Hence it appears, what vain Disputes the World has had upon this Subject, and how this edifying, glorious Part of Religion has been perplexed and lost in the Fictions and Difficulties of scholastic Learning. Some People have much puzzled themselves and others with this Question, How it is consistent with the Goodness and Equity of God to permit, or accept the Sufferings of an innocent Person as a Satisfaction for the Guilt and Punishment of criminal Offenders ? But this Question can only be put by those, who have not yet known the most fundamental Doctrine of the Gospel Salvation ; for according to the Gospel, the Question should proceed thus, How it is consistent with the Goodness and Equity of God, to raise such an innocent, mysterious Person out of the Loins of fallen Man, as was able to remove all the Evil and Disorder that was brought into the fallen Nature ? This is the only Question that is according to the true Ground of our Redemption, and at once disperses all those Difficulties which are the mere Products of Human Invention. The Short of the Matter is this :

Man considered as created, or fallen, or redeemed, is That which he is, because of his State in Nature ; he can have no Goodness in him when created, but because he is brought into such a Participation of a Goodness that there is in Nature ; he can have no Evil in him when fallen, but because he is fallen from his good State in Nature ; he can no way be redeemed, but by being brought into his first State of Perfection in Nature ; and therefore, this is an eternal, immutable Truth, that he can be redeemed by the God of Nature, only according to the Possibilities of Nature : And here lies the true Ground, the whole Reason of all that our Saviour was, and did, and suffered on our Account : It was because in and through all Nature there could be no other Relief found for us : It was because nothing less than such a Process of such a Mysterious Person could have Power to undo all the Evils that were done in and to the Human Nature ; and therefore it is not only consistent with the Goodness and Equity of God to bring such a Mysterious Person into the World, but is the most infinite Instance of his most Infinite Love to all Mankind, that can possibly be conceived and adored by us. To proceed :

9. By the Fall of our first Father we have lost our first, glorious Bodies, that eternal, celestial Flesh and Blood which had as truly the Nature of Paradise and Heaven in it, as our present Bodies have the Nature, Mortality and Corruption of this World in them : If therefore we are to be redeemed, there is an absolute Necessity that our Souls be clothed again with this first paradisaical, or heavenly Flesh and Blood, or we can never enter into the Kingdom of God. Now, this is the Reason, why the Scriptures speak so particularly, so frequently, and so emphatically of the powerful Blood of Christ, of the great Benefit it is to us, of its Redeeming, Quickening, Life-giving Virtue ; it is because our first Life, or heavenly Flesh and Blood is born again in us, or derived again into us from this Blood of Christ.

Our Blessed Lord, who died for us, had not only that outward

Flesh and Blood, which he received from the Virgin Mary, and which died upon the Cross, but he had also an holy Humanity of heavenly Flesh and Blood veiled under it, which was appointed by God to quicken, generate, and bring forth from itself, such an holy Offspring of immortal Flesh and Blood, as Adam the first should have brought forth before his Fall.

If our Lord Christ had not had a heavenly Humanity, consisting of such Flesh and Blood as is not of this World, he had not been so perfect as Adam was, nor could our Birth from him, raise us to that Perfection, which we had lost, nor could his Blood be said to purchase, ransom, redeem, and restore us; because, as it is heavenly Flesh and Blood that we have lost, so we can only have it ransomed and restored to us, by that Blood which is of the same heavenly and immortal Nature with that which we have quite lost. Our common Faith, therefore, obliges us to hold, that our Lord had the Perfection of the first Adam's Flesh and Blood united with, and veiled under that fallen Nature, which he took upon him from the Blessed Virgin Mary. Had he not taken our fallen Nature upon him, nothing that he had done, could have been of any Advantage to us, or brought any Ransom or Redemption to our fallen Nature; and had he not taken our Nature as it was before the Fall, he could not have been our second Adam, or a Restorer to us of that Nature, which we should have had from Adam if he had not fallen.

Now, what our Common Faith thus fully teaches, concerning a heavenly, as well as earthly Humanity, which our Lord had, is also plainly signified to us by several clear Texts of Scripture; as where he saith of himself, 'I am from above, ye are from beneath;' again, 'I am not of this World;' and further, 'No one ascends into Heaven, but he that came down from Heaven, even the Son of Man, who is in Heaven:'. These and other Texts of the like Nature, which plainly speak of something in our Blessed Lord, which can neither be understood of his Divinity, nor of that Flesh and Blood which he received from the Virgin Mary, has forced some Scholastic Divines to hold the Pre-existence of our Saviour's Soul, which is an Opinion utterly inconsistent with our Redemption; for it is as necessary that our Lord should have a Soul as well as a Body derived from Adam, in order to be the Redeemer of Adam's Offspring: But all these Texts, which a Learning, merely literal, has thus mistaken, do only prove this great, necessary, and edifying Truth, that our Blessed Lord had a heavenly Humanity, which clothed itself with the Flesh and Blood of this World in the Womb of the Virgin; and from that heavenly Humanity, or Life-giving Blood it is, that our first heavenly, immortal Flesh and Blood is generated and formed in us again ; and therefore his Blood is truly the Atonement, the Ransom, the Redemption, the Life of the World ; because it brings forth, and generates from itself the paradisaical, immortal Flesh and Blood, as certainly, as really, as the Blood of fallen Adam brings forth and generates from itself the sinful, vile, corruptible Flesh and Blood of this Life.

Would you further know, what Blood this is, that has this atoning, Life-giving Quality in it ? It is that Blood which is to be received in the Holy Sacrament. Would you know, why it quickens, raises and restores the inward Man that died in Paradise ? The Answer is from Christ himself, ' He that eateth ' my Flesh and drinketh my Blood, dwelleth in me, and I in ' him, that is, he is born of my Flesh and Blood.' Would you know, why the Apostle saith, ' That he hath purchased us by ' his Blood,' Acts xx. 28. ' That we have Redemption through ' his Blood,' Ephes. i. 7. Why he prays ' the God of Peace— ' through the Blood of the Everlasting Covenant, to make us ' perfect in every good Work to do his Will ; ' 'tis because the Holy Jesus saith, ' except we drink his Blood, we have no Life ' in us,' and therefore the drinking his Blood, is the same Thing as receiving a Life of heavenly Flesh and Blood from him : And all this is only saying, that our Saviour, the second Adam, must do that for us and in us, which the first Adam should have done ; his Blood must be that to us by way of Descent, or Birth from him, which the Blood of our first Father, if he had not fallen, would have been to us ; and as this Blood of an immortal Life is lost by the Fall, so he from whom we receive it again by a secondary Way, is justly and truly said, to purchase, to redeem, and ransom us by his Blood.

Now, there is but one redeeming, sanctifying, Life-giving Blood of Christ, and it is that which gave and shed itself under the Veil of that outward Flesh and Blood that was sacrificed upon the Cross ; it is that Holy and Heavenly Flesh and Blood which is to be received in the Holy Sacrament ; it is that holy, immortal Flesh and Blood which Adam had before the Fall, of which Blood, if we had drank, that is, if we had been born of it, we had not wanted a Saviour, but had had such Flesh and Blood as could have entered into the Kingdom of Heaven ; had we received this holy, immortal Flesh and Blood from Adam before his Fall, it had been called our being born of his Flesh and Blood ; but because we receive that same Flesh and Blood from Jesus Christ, our second Adam, by our Faith, our Hunger and Desire of it ; therefore it is justly called our eating and drinking his Flesh and Blood.

And here we have another strong Scripture Proof, that our Saviour had heavenly Flesh and Blood veiled under that which he received from the Virgin Mary. For does not the Holy Sacrament undeniably prove to us, that he had a heavenly Flesh entirely different from that which was seen nailed to the Cross, and which was to be a heavenly, substantial Food to us ; that he had a Blood entirely different from that which was seen to run out of his mortal Body, which Blood we are to drink of, and live for ever ?

Now, that Flesh and Blood cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, is a Scripture Truth ; and yet it must be affirmed to be a Truth according to the same Scriptures, that Flesh and Blood can, and must enter into the Kingdom of God, or else, neither Adam, nor any of his Posterity could enter in thither ; therefore, it is a Scripture Truth, that there is a Flesh and Blood that has the Nature, the Likeness, and Qualities of Heaven in it, that is as wholly different from the Flesh and Blood of this World, as Heaven is different from the Earth. For if the Flesh and Blood that we now have, cannot possibly enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, and yet we must be Flesh and Blood, and Christ our Lord must be Flesh and Blood, for ever in Heaven ; then it follows, that there is a real Flesh and Blood that has nothing of this World in it, that neither arises from it, nor is nourished by it, but will subsist eternally, when this World is dissolved and gone. Now, if this Flesh and Blood is lost by the Fall of our first Father, and if the Blood which we derive from him is the Cause, the Seat, and Principle of our mortal, corruptible, impure Life ; if from the Blood of this first Father, all our Unholiness, Impurity and Misery is derived into us, then we may clearly understand what is meant by our being redeemed by the Blood of Christ, and why the Scriptures speak so much of his atoning, *quicken*ing, Life-giving, cleansing, *sanctify*ing Blood ; it is because it is to us the Reverse of the Blood of Adam, it is the Cause, the Seat, the Principle of our Holiness and Purity of Life ; it is that from which we derive an immortal, holy Flesh and Blood in the same Reality from this second Adam, as we inherit a corrupt, impure, and earthly Flesh and Blood from our first Adam : And therefore that which would have been done to us by our Birth, if we had been born of the holy Blood of Adam unfallen, that we are to understand to be done to us, in and by the Holy Blood of Christ. For the Blood of Christ is that to us in the Way of Redemption, which the Blood of our first Father should have been to us in the Order of the Creation ; for the Redemption has no other End, but to raise us from our Fall, to do that for us, which we should have had by the Condition of our Creation, if our Father had kept his State of Glory and Immortality ; and this is a certain Truth, that there would have been no eating the Flesh, and drinking the Blood of Christ in the Christian Scheme of Redemption, but that the Flesh and Blood which we should have had from Adam, must of all necessity be had, before we can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

10. Here therefore is plainly discovered to us, the true Nature, Necessity and Benefit of the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper ; both why, and how, and for what End, we must of all necessity, eat the Flesh, and drink the Blood of Christ. No figurative Meaning of the Words is here to be sought for, we must eat Christ's Flesh, and drink his Blood in the same Reality, as he took upon him the real Flesh and Blood of the Blessed Virgin : We can have no real Relation to Christ, can be no true Members of his mystical Body, but by being real Partakers of that same kind of Flesh and Blood, which was truly his, and was his, for this very End, that through him, the same might be brought forth in us : All this is strictly true of the Holy Sacrament, according to the plain Letter of the Expression ; which Sacrament was thus instituted, that the great Service of the Church might continually show us, that the whole of our Redemption consisted in the receiving the Birth, Spirit, Life and Nature of Jesus Christ into us, in being born of him, and clothed with a heavenly Flesh and Blood from him, just as the whole of our Fall consists in our being born of Adam's sinful Nature and Spirit, and in having a vile, corrupt and impure Flesh and Blood from him.

But what Flesh and Blood are we to eat and drink ? Not such as we have already, not such as any Offspring of Adam hath, not such as can have its Life and Death by, and from the Elements of this World ; and therefore, not that outward, visible, mortal Flesh and Blood of Christ, which he took from the Virgin Mary, and was seen on the Cross, but a heavenly, immortal Flesh and Blood, which came down from Heaven, which hath the Nature, Qualities, and Life of Heaven in it, according to which our Lord said of himself, that he was a 'Son of Man come down from Heaven,' that 'he was not of this World,' that 'he was from Above,' &c., that very Flesh and Blood which we should have received from Adam, if we had kept his first glorious and immortal Nature. For as the Flesh and Blood which we lost by his Fall, was the Flesh and Blood of Eternal Life, so it is the same Flesh and Blood of Eternal Life which is offered to us in the Holy Sacrament, that we may eat, and live for ever : This is the adorable Height and Depth of this Divine Mystery, which brings Heaven and Immortality again into us, and gives us Power to become Sons of God. Woe be to those who come to it with the Mouths of Beasts, and the Minds of Serpents! who, with impenitent Hearts, devoted to the Lusts of the Flesh, the Lusts of the Eyes, and the Pride of Life, for worldly Ends, outward Appearances, and secular Conformity, boldly meddle with those Mysteries that are only to be approached by those that are of a pure Heart, and who worship God in Spirit and in Truth. Justly may it be said of such, that they eat and drink Damnation to themselves, not discerning, that is, not regarding, not reverencing, not humbly adoring the Mysteries of the Lord's Body.

If you ask how the eating and drinking the Body and Blood of Christ, is the receiving that Flesh and Blood of Eternal Life, which we should have had from Adam himself, it is for this plain Reason, because the same kind of Flesh and Blood is in Christ, that was in Adam, and is in Christ as it was in Adam, for this very End, that it might be derived into all his Offspring: So that we come to the Sacrament of the Blessed Body and Blood of Christ, because he is our Second Adam, from whom we must now receive that eternal, celestial Flesh and Blood which we should have had from our first Father; and therefore it is, that the Apostle saith, the 'first Adam was made a living Soul,' that is, had a Life in himself, which could have brought forth an eternal, ever-living Offspring; but having brought forth a dead Race, the last Adam, as the Restorer of the Life that was lost, was made a quickening Spirit, because quickening again that Life which Adam as a living Soul, should have brought forth.

And thus we have the plain and full Truth of the most mysterious Part of this Holy Sacrament, delivered from the tedious Strife of Words, and that Thickness of Darkness which learned Contenders on all Sides have brought into it. The Letter and Spirit of Scripture are here both preserved, and the Mystery appears so amiable, so intelligible, and so beneficial, as must needs raise a true and earnest Devotion in everyone that is capable of hungering and thirsting after Eternal Life. And this true and sound Knowledge of the Holy Sacrament could never have been lost, if this Scripture Truth had not been overlooked; namely, that Christ is our second Adam, that he is to do that for us, which Adam should have done; that we are to have that Life from him, as a Quickening Spirit, which we should have had from Adam as a living Soul; and that our Redemption is only doing a second Time, or in a second Way, that which should have been done by the first Order of our Creation: This plain Doctrine attended to, would sufficiently show us, that the Flesh and Blood of Eternal Life, which we are to receive from Christ, must be that Flesh and Blood of Eternal Life which we lost in Adam. Now, if we had received this immortal Flesh and Blood by our Descent from Adam, we must in the Strictness of the Expression have been said to partake of the Flesh and Blood of Adam; so seeing we now receive it from Christ, we must in the same Strictness of the Expression, be said to be real Partakers of the Flesh and Blood of Christ, because he hath the same heavenly Flesh and Blood which Adam had, and for the same End that Adam had it; namely, that it may come by and through him into us. And thus is this great Sacrament, which is a continual Part of our Christian Worship, a continual Communication to us of all the Benefits of our Second Adam; for in and by the Body and Blood of Christ, to which the Divine Nature is united, we receive all that Life, Immortality, and Redemption, which Christ, as living, suffering, dying, rising from the Dead, and ascending into Heaven, brought to Human Nature; so that this great Mystery is that, in which all the Blessings of our Redemption and new Life in Christ are centred. And they that hold a Sacrament short of this Reality of the true Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, cannot be said to hold that Sacrament of Eternal Life, which was instituted by our Blessed Lord and Saviour.

UPON
Dr. Trapp's late REPLY.

HAD I the Spirit of an Adversary, or were inclined to find Entertainment for the Satirical Reader, it would not be easy for me to overlook the Opportunity which Dr. Trapp's Reply has put into my Hands ; but as I don't want to lessen any Appearance of Ability which the Doctor has shown on this Occasion, or have any Wish that his Pen had not all its Advantages ; so whatever personally concerns him, either as a Writer, a Scholar, a Disputant, a Divine, or a Christian, shall have no Reflection from me ; and though by this means, some sort of Readers may be less pleased, yet, the more Christian Reader will be glad to find, that thus I must leave two Thirds of his Reply untouched ; and as I neither have, nor (by the Grace of God) ever will have any personal Contention with any Man whatever, so all the Triumph which the Doctor has gained over me by that Flow of Wrath and Contempt which he has let loose upon me, I shall leave him quietly to enjoy.

It would be no Pleasure to me, nor Benefit to the World, to discover that Malignity of Spirit, that undistinguishing Head, that diabolical Calumny, that shameful Ignorance, that unthinking Temper, that blundering Mind, that perverse Disposition, that indecent Sufficiency, that unbecoming Presumption, that nauseous Dulness, that Ignorance of Logic, that Insensibility of Argument, that Want of Grammar, which he has so heartily laid to my Charge ; and if he has any Readers that thank him for this, I shall make no Attempt to lessen their Number.

As I desire nothing for myself, or the Reader, but good Eyes, and a good Heart, seriously attentive to Things useful and edifying, and always open to the Light and Influence of the Holy Spirit of God, so I shall endeavour to say nothing but what is suitable to such a State of Mind, both in myself and the Reader.

The Doctor, by way of Plea for a certain Freedom in Drinking, had appealed to our Saviour's Miracle at the Marriage Feast, where he turned Water into Wine, at a Time when the Guests had already drunk enough, and had indulged something to Pleasure and Cheerfulness. Therefore more Wine, or a Continuance of Drinking, when Man have already indulged something to Pleasure and Cheerfulness, has Authority from our Saviour's Conduct at the Feast.

One would imagine no one need be helped to look with a just Indignation at this Abuse and Profanation of our Lord's Miracle. Did the Saviour of the World mean, or intend to teach any Thing like this in what he did? Was this the Spirit of his Mind when he thus timed this Miracle, did he intend to convey this Instruction to them? Now, if our Lord had not this Spirit, did not mean thus to instruct the Feasters by thus timing his Miracle, Is it not a great Profanation of it to appeal to it for that Instruction, which was not meant or intended by it? Had any one of those Guests then present, come up to our Lord and said, Sir, we have heard indeed a Report that you require a Man to deny himself, to hate even his own Life in this World, and to forsake all that he hath in order to be your Disciple, but now we perceive, not by Words, but by your miraculous Actions, that you are no Enemy to these kind of Pleasures and Indulgences, since you have worked a Miracle to help us to more Wine, when we had already drunk enough, and had indulged something to Pleasure and Cheerfulness. What would our Lord have said to so sagacious an Observer? Would he have told him, that Flesh and Blood had not revealed so great a Truth unto him? Would he have acquiesced in the Propriety and Justness of his Observation, and pronounced him rightly disposed to by one of his Disciples? But if such an Observation could not have been approved by our Lord as a Sign of a good Mind, how is the Doctor to be excused, who not only looks thus at it himself, but proposes it to the World to be considered in that View? In order to vindicate our Saviour's Conduct in this Matter, I ventured, without any Help from Commentators or Schoolmen, to tell the Doctor, 'That the Wine here spoken 'of, was not common Wine, and therefore had no Relation to 'our common Drinking—that it was not Wine from the Juice of 'the Grape—that it had nothing in it but what came from a 'heavenly Hand—that it must have in it the Purity and Virtue 'of him that made it—that it had as good Qualities in it, and 'was fitted to have the same Effect upon some that drank it as 'the Clay which he moistened with his Spittle had upon the 'Eyes of the Blind—that it was Water only so altered, and 'endued with such Qualities, as he pleased to put into it; and

' therefore we may be sure it was Water as highly blessed for their Use as they were capable of; we may be sure it was fitter to allay the Heat and Disorder of their Drinking, than if it had been Water unaltered by our Saviour. How suitable was this Miracle to a Feast? How worthy of so Divine a Person! to make them cooler by giving them Water made fitter for that Purpose, and to raise their Faith by its miraculously seeming to be the best of Wine.*

Now how can it be proved that this Interpretation is not a true one, not a safe one, not a good one? That our Saviour could do all this which is here mentioned, that he could convert Water into a Wine of this Nature, is undeniable; therefore if it had not this Nature and Qualities in it, it could only be because he chose to make it as bad as that Wine, which has the Curse of the Earth in it. But who will undertake to prove that Wine thus brought forth by a Divine Power, must have the Nature of Wine that is squeezed from the Grape under the Curse of Sin?

The Doctor confutes my Interpretation, by calling it a senseless, impious, profane, ridiculous Nostrum, a Whimsy of my own Brain, diluting the glorious Miracle into nothing. He has also accepted the Help of a learned Assistant, one Philoclericus, who backs this Confutation by saying, that it has evaporated the Miracle into nothing. They both agree that I have brought it to nothing, and only differ in my manner of doing it. The one holds it to be by Dilution, and the other by Evaporation.

To set this Matter therefore in a clear Light, let it be supposed, that the Ruler of the Feast should have come to our Saviour, and said, Sir, having been surpris'd at the extraordinary Difference between the last Cup of Wine that was brought to me, and that which had been used in the Feast before, I called the Bridegroom to tell him my Wonder at that extraordinary Wine which he had kept to the last; but being since informed by them that drew it, that this Wine was by thy Word of Power drawn from Vessels brim full of Water, I now come to fall down before thee, and confess that thou art come from God, and hast given me a Wine that has not the Nature of the earthly Grape in it: But as God gave our Fathers Manna to eat, which was justly called Angels' Food, and Bread from Heaven, so this Wine, which thou by a Divine Power has given us, must be looked upon, not as the poor Juice of the Grape, but as Wine given us from Heaven.

Now had the Doctor and his learned Assistant been there, and had been such Christians as they are now, they must both have fallen upon the Ruler of the Feast, as a senseless, impious, profane, ridiculous Wretch, that had diluted and evaporated our Lord's glorious Miracle into nothing: Though it was impossible in the Nature of the Thing, for all the Disciples of our Lord, though ever so full of Faith in him, to make higher Profession of the Reality of this glorious Miracle than the Ruler here has done; and yet he has said nothing but what is said in the Account which I have given of the Wine. And indeed it must be strangely absurd for any one to suggest, that the Reality of the Miracle is hurt by this Account of the Wine. For is not as great a Divine Power required to change Water into a Wine, that has a better Nature and Qualities than common Wine, as to make it have no more Goodness and Virtue in it than is in the ordinary Juice from the Grape? Or is it not rightly called Wine by those that drew it, or by him that drank it, because it was Wine in Perfection, in such Perfection, as the Grape could never give since Adam brought the Curse into the World.

The Doctor says, he believes it was just the same sort of Wine as if it had been from the Juice of the Grape, and his Reason is, 'because it is a Part of his Faith that our Saviour had the Power 'of creating,' p. 56. Now this is the very worst Reason the Doctor could possibly have thought of. For the Doctor, I will venture to say, is so orthodox a Schoolman as to hold the common Notion of Creating, viz., that it is a Power of making something to be out of nothing. But Wine thus created is the last Thing the Doctor should have had Recourse to; first, because it is directly contrary to the Letter of the Text, which expressly saith, the Water was made Wine, therefore not a created Wine. Secondly, because Wine so created, could not possibly be just the same Sort of Wine, as if it had been from the Juice of the Grape, because as the Grape and every earthly Thing stands in a State of Evil, Corruption, and Curse through the Sin of the fallen Creatures, it is absolutely impossible that any Thing immediately created by God out of Nothing, should have any Thing of that Evil, Corruption, or Curse in it which Sin alone has brought into the Creatures.

The Truth of the Matter is, here was no more a Creation of Wine in this Miracle, than Wine is created every Time the Vine has ripe Grapes upon it. Water, together with Earth, is every Year turned into the Juice of the Grape by the Power of the Sun, from God's eternal Word, first saying, 'Let the Earth bring forth, 'the Fruit-tree yielding Fruit,' &c.

This same eternal, ever speaking, ever operating Word of God, being become Man, could as well turn Water into Wine in a quicker Way by his own Power, as by the Help of the Vine once in a Year. Seeing therefore this Wine was not raised from Water and Earth, according to the common Course of Vegetation in fallen Nature, but by the immediate Agency of the God of Nature upon Water alone, it is reasonable and absolutely necessary to suppose, that it was Wine very much freed from all that Evil, Wrath, and Curse, which is inseparable from the ordinary Workings of the present State of Nature. Hence it appears, that the Interpretation here given, is so far from being a profane, impious, senseless Nostrum, is so far from having any Thing of Force, or Fiction in it, that it is the first, most easy, natural, and direct Sense, in which the Miracle can be justly understood. And therefore every sober Christian ought to reject the Doctor's Use of this Miracle as inconsistent with Piety. Great Intemperance, we all know, is carried on by such as pretend not to exceed the lawful Bounds of Pleasure and Indulgence. And is it consistent with Christian Piety, or Prudence, to furnish such People with a Pretext for what they do, from our Saviour's Example and Conduct? Or is he to be blamed, who by a just, innocent, and safe Interpretation of the Miracle, leaves such People no Claim to its Authority? Surely it is a sad Mistake to draw Arguments for sensual Indulgence from him, who came to teach and save the World by every Kind and Degree of possible Self-denial.

But I shall add but one Argument more, which is sufficient of itself to show how unjustly the Doctor draws an Argument from our Saviour's turning Water into Wine, when more than was necessary had been already drank, and something, as he says, had been indulged to Pleasure and Cheerfulness; and my Argument is this: It is undeniably plain from the whole Story of this Matter, that there was no more Water turned into Wine than that one Cup, which was carried to the Ruler of the Feast, and therefore neither Foundation nor Excuse for the Doctor's Argument from it.

When the Vessels were empty, our Lord ordered them to be filled, and to be filled up to the Brim with Water. Such an Order as this must, at least in the Execution of it, draw the Eyes and Attention of many that were present. Not a Syllable is ever mentioned of any Wine in the Vessels; they are only represented to us as standing brimful of Water. Our Lord only bids a Servant to draw from these Pots thus full of Water, and what he drew and carried to the Ruler from Vessels full of Water, was such Wine as strangely surprised him with its peculiar Excellency. The Wine was only found in that Cup into which our Saviour ordered the Servant to draw, and bear to the Ruler, and as he gave this Command but once, so it is certain there was but this one Cup of miraculous Wine. A hasty Reader, that has his Eye upon the Increase of the Liquor, and wants to have an Argument for his Purpose from it, may hurry himself into a Fancy, that our Saviour made all the Water Pots stand brimful of Wine. But the Story itself plainly represents quite another Matter, and is only a Relation of one Cup of miraculous Wine. The Care that our Lord took, that all the Vessels should be filled with Water up to the Top, was not, that the Guests might have all the Wine these Vessels could hold, but that all the Vessels being filled up to the Top, and made visible to all Beholders, might be so many plain Proofs that the Wine which he ordered to be drawn, could only be drawn from one of those Vessels which so many Beholders saw to be brimful of Water, both before and after the Drawing of the Cup of Wine. And herein lay the Strength, and Certainty, and Glory of the Miracle; that so many Witnesses were forced to see and own, that by the Word of our Lord, Wine was drawn from Pots just filled, and still remaining full to the Top with Water. And when this Miracle had thus incontestably manifested itself, the whole Affair was over, and the Guests were left, not to rejoice over full Pots of Water turned into Wine, but to make sober Reflections upon the Divinity of that Person, who had put such an astonishing End to their Drinking. Great and holy Jesus! How like thyself, the Saviour of the World, hast thou acted at this Feast! How couldst thou more sink the Value, extinguish the Desire, suppress all Thoughts of Pleasure and Indulgence in earthly Wine, than by showing the Feasters, that from the poorest of the Elements thou couldst call forth such Wine as no Grape could give? How couldst thou more effectually take from them their sensual Joy, or more powerfully call them to deny themselves and come after thee, than by thus miraculously showing them, that the richest Delights of sensual Gratifications were far short of what thou couldst give to those, that would leave all earthly Delights for thee.

The next Thing of Importance which I shall speak to, shall be with Regard to what I have said to the Clergy. The miserable State of Religion, and the great Corruption of Manners, so incontestably apparent in this Island, gave me a just Occasion to desire all the Clergy, from the highest to the lowest in the Order, to consider their Conduct, and see how free they were from the common Corruption, and how justly every one could clear himself from having any Share in this general Depravity of Manners. I was not insensible that this was a dangerous Attempt, that would expose me to the Resentment of not a few of my Brethren : But as I wrote for no other End but to do as much Good as I could to those who were capable of it, so I had no Care but how to speak disagreeable Truths, in as Christian and inoffensive a manner as I could ; how I have succeeded in this, is left to the World to judge. And as it is but too apparent, that the Root of all the Evil, which but too much spreads itself through the whole Body of the Clergy, is owing to a worldly, trading Spirit, too visible from the Top to the Bottom of the Order, so I pointed at it in the softest and most affecting manner that I could, in the following Words, grounded on a plain Apostolical Doctrine and Practice.

St. Paul, I had observed, had said, it was lawful for those that preach the Gospel to live by the Gospel, and yet makes it Matter of the greatest Joy and Comfort to himself that he had wholly abstained from this lawful Thing; and declares, it were better for him to die than that this Rejoicing should be taken from him. He appeals to his daily and nightly working with his own Hands, that so he might preach the Gospel freely, and not be chargeable to those that heard him. And this he said he did, not for want of Authority to do otherwise, but that he might make himself an Example unto them to follow him. Here, I say, 'What fine and awakening Instructions are here 'given to us of the Clergy, in a practical Matter of the greatest 'Moment? How ought every one to be frightened at the Thoughts 'of desiring or seeking a second Living, or of rejoicing at great 'Pay where there is but little Duty, when the Apostle's rejoicing 'consisted in this, that he had passed through all the Fatigues 'and Perils of preaching the Gospel without any Pay at all? 'How cautious, nay, how fearful ought we to be, of going so far 'as the secular Laws permit us, when the Apostle thought it 'more desirable to lose his Life, than to go so far as the very 'Law of the Gospel would have suffered him?

'It is looked upon as lawful to get several Preferments, and 'to make a Gain of the Gospel, by hiring others to do Duty for 'us at a lower Rate.—It is looked upon as lawful to quit a Cure 'of Souls of a small Income, for no other Reason, but because we 'can get another of a greater.—It is looked upon as lawful for a 'Clergyman to take the Revenues of the Church, which he 'serves, to his own Use, though he has more than a sufficient 'Competency of his own, and much more than the Apostle could 'get by his Labour.—It is looked upon as lawful for the Clergy 'to live in State and Equipage, to buy Purple and fine Linen 'out of the Revenues of the Church.—It is looked upon as 'lawful for Clergymen to enrich their Families, to bring up their 'Children in the fashionable Vanities, and corrupting Methods

'of a worldly and expensive Life, by Money got by preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ. But now, supposing all this to be lawful, what Comfort and Joy might we treasure up to ourselves, what Glory and Honour might we bring to Religion, what Force and Power might we give to the Gospel, what Benefit and Edification should we do to our Neighbour, if we wholly abstained from all these lawful Things? Not by working Day and Night with our own Hands, as the great Apostle did, but by limiting our Wants and Desires according to the plain Demands of Nature, and a religious Self-Denial.'

Now, there are but two possible ways of justly replying to this; first, either by showing that these Observations are falsely drawn from the Apostle's Doctrine and Practice, that I have mistaken the Spirit of St. Paul, and the Genius of the Gospel, that I am here doing what the Apostle would not do, was he here in Person, and representing such Things as Corruptions, which the Apostle would be glad to see flourishing in the Church of Christ: Or, secondly, that though these Things are plainly condemnably from the Apostle's Doctrine and Practice, yet they are not chargeable upon the Spirit, Temper and Practice of the Clergy of this Land. Now, though not a Word to the Purpose could possibly be said, but by one of these two Ways, yet the Doctor shuts his Eyes to both of them, and then pronounced the following Sentence upon Me, That a Quaker, or Infidel, could not well have reflected with more Virulency upon the Clergy of our Church, than I have done in these Expressions.

Must I then suppose, that the Doctor in his Sermons, never mentions any Failings that concerns his Auditors, or lays before them any of their unchristian Ways of Life? If he does, I desire to know how he clears himself from virulently reflecting upon them and their Christianity? The Quakers, and Infidels, are ready enough, and able enough to show, that most Congregations of Christians are sadly fallen away from the Religion of the Gospel; and does the Doctor forbear this Charge, is he ashamed to call his Flock to a more Christian Life, or afraid to remind them of their Departure from the Gospel, lest he should seem to join with Quakers and Infidels, who make great Complaints of the Corruptions of Christians? Or, how can the Doctor desire to be thought to have any true Love or just Esteem for those Christians, whom he is so often reminding of the Corruption and Depravity of their Manners, so contrary to the Religion of Jesus Christ? Now, if the Doctor knows how to untie this Knot, and to extricate himself from the Charge of virulent reflecting upon his Parishioners, as Quakers and Infidels do, then he has dissolved his Charge against me into a mere nothing.

If it was a Thing required of me I know no more how to raise in myself the least Spark of Rancour, or Ill-will towards the Clergy, as such, than I know how to work myself up into a Hatred of the Light of the Sun. It is as natural to me, to wish them all their Perfection, as to wish Peace and Happiness to myself both here and hereafter; and when I point at any Failings in their Conduct, it is only with such a Spirit as I would pluck a Brother out of the Fire.

In that Part of my Answer, which is addressed to the younger Clergy, I said, 'Lay this down for an infallible Principle; that an entire, absolute Renunciation of all worldly interest, is the only possible Foundation of that exalted Virtue, which your Station requires; without this, all Attempts after an exemplary Piety are in vain: (and then, by way of Limitation and Explication of this, it thus immediately follows:) If you want any Thing from the World by way of Figure and Exaltation, you shut the Power of your Redeemer out of your own Souls, and instead of converting, you corrupt the Hearts of those that are about you. Detest therefore, with the utmost Abhorrence, all Desires of making your fortunes, either by Perferments, or rich Marriages, and let it be your only Ambition, to stand at the Top of every Virtue, as visible Guides and Patterns to all that aspire after the Perfection of Holiness,' p. 61.

Now, one would imagine there was no Part of the Christian World, however corrupted by Division, where this Doctrine would not be admitted at least in Theory; or, that the Gospel of Christ should be thought to be reproached, where such Advice as this was given to young Divines: And yet it is of this very Advice, that Dr. Trapp says, 'he hopes they will have more Grace and Sense than to follow it: That it is false Doctrine, tending to the Reproach and Scandal of the Christian Religion,' p. 87.

Is it then come to this, that unless young Divines choose to serve Mammon as well as God, their Profession is a renouncing of Grace and Sense, and a Reproach to Religion? And must they that pretend to act in Christ's Name, as Successors in his Office, take Care that they renounce not the Politics of the Kingdom of this World? For my part, I thought it as safe, as Christian, as consistent with the Honour of the Gospel, to give this Advice thus to suppress all worldly Views, as to resist all the Temptations of the Devil.

Had Martin Luther, when he gave his Reasons and Motives for withdrawing from Communion with the Pope, been able to have added this: that the Advice here given, had been formally condemned by the Pope in a great Council, the Defenders of that Church would have found it as hard to have made such a Decree consistent with the Gospel, as the selling of Indulgencies: And it may well be supposed, that no Protestant writer, when setting forth the Marks of Antichrist, and the Beast in that Church, would have forgot to have made this Condemnation to be one of them.

For who can show it to be so contrary to the whole Spirit of the Gospel, to call in the Assistance of the Saints, or to deny the Cup to the Laity in the Manner the Church of Rome does, who can show this to put so entire a Stop to the Salvation by the Gospel, as to condemn the Advice here given to young Divines as a Scandal and Reproach to Christianity? For all the Ends and Designs of the Gospel may be pursued, and Men may arise out of the Corruption of their Nature, notwithstanding these two Mistakes: But to condemn it as an Error inconsistent with Grace and Sense, a Scandal and Reproach to Christianity, for young Divines to renounce worldly Views, and devote themselves wholly to God, is striking at the whole Root of all Holiness of Life, and no less than a Denial of the whole Spirit of the Gospel.

Our Church requires all its Candidates for Holy Orders, to make Profession of their being moved and called by the Holy Ghost to enter into the Service of the Church: This, I should think, is Proof enough, that the Spirit of this World ought not to be alive in them, when they make this Profession; and yet, if any young Persons should come to be ordained, thus dead to all worldly Views, thus wholly devoted to God, as I have here recommended, they ought, according to the Doctor, to be rejected by the Bishop, of being led by a Spirit that has lost all Grace and Sense, and is a Scandal and Reproach to the Christian Religion.

It is needless to quote particular Texts of Scripture, teaching the same that I have here taught; as, that our Saviour assures us, that we 'cannot serve God and Mammon': That St. Paul requires us, having Food and Raiment, to be therewith content, for this Reason, because they that will be rich, fall into divers Temptations of the Devil: That St. John forbids us to 'love the World, 'or the Things of the World,' for this Reason, because all that is in the World, the 'Lust of the Flesh, the Lust of the Eyes, and 'the Pride of Life, is not of the Father, but is of the World.' It is needless to have Recourse to particular Texts of this kind, because the whole Nature and Reason of our Redemption is a standing, plain Proof of the same Thing; for we want to be redeemed for no other Reason, but because we are born Children of this World, and have by Nature only the Life, Spirit and

Temper of this World in us : This is our Fall, our Curse, our Separation from God ; and therefore we can have no Redemption, but by a Renunciation of all the Workings of the Life of this World in us, by a total dying to, and denying ourselves ; because all that we are, as to our State, Spirit and Life in this World, is a Life that carries us from God, a Life that should not have been raised up in us ; 'tis a Life begun by the Fall, a Life of Sin and Corruption, which cannot enter into Heaven. The Life that we have in this World, from the Fall of Adam, is not to be naturally destroyed or murdered, nor are the Necessaries and Conveniences of Life to be rejected, nor is anyone to renounce his Share in the Employments that are necessary and useful to Social Life : The Renunciation of this World reaches no further than the renouncing the Spirit, Temper, and Inclinations of this worldly Life : We may stand in our Stations, when we stand in them as the Servants of God, as Citizens of the new Jerusalem, who have amongst earthly Things, our Conversation in Heaven : We may keep our Possessions, when we possess them as the Things of God, and use them not as Nature, but as the Spirit directs us ; when we do thus, we have the Poverty of Spirit, which the Gospel requires, and come up to the very Letter of that Command given to the young Man, 'to sell all that he 'had, and give to the Poor.'

But now, if our natural Life in this World, is a corrupt, impure, disorderly, bestial, diabolical Life brought forth by the Fall, if we want to be redeemed because we have this State of Life in and from this World, if we want to be born again of the Son of God, born again of the Holy Spirit, because our natural Birth is according to the Spirit of this World ; if nothing of the Beast, or the Devil, no kind or degree of Selfishness, Envy, Pride and Vanity can enter into the Kingdom of God, then it is plain from the Nature of the Thing, that all religion which leaves this Nature alive and unrenounced, which lets Selfishness, Pride, Wrath, and Vanity subsist in us, which bring us to our Graves in the same Nature in which we were born, is not the Religion that can save us. If this Nature in all its most secret Workings is not renounced and denied, it matters not what we are, or what we have been doing, it signifies little in what Chair we have sat, whether in Italy, or England, how long we have been Preachers, how many heretics and Schismatics we have opposed, or how many Books we have written in Defence of Orthodoxy ; it is as vain to appeal to this, as to our having preached and prophesied in the Name of Christ, in the Streets and Fields : For if this Nature is allowed to live in us, all our good Works have been governed by it, they have sprung from Selfishness, are animated with Pride, and only serve to gratify our own natural Passions. When therefore the Doctor calls upon young Divines to have more Grace and Sense than to be driven from Thoughts of advancing themselves by Preferments and rich Marriages, he would do well to consider, how little short this is of calling them to break their very Baptismal Vow, of renouncing the Poms and Vanities of the World. And if young Candidates for Holy Orders, looking only at their Baptismal Vow, should be led into this Degree of Self-denial and Detachment from the World, does the Doctor think, that the Apostles, from whom this Baptismal Vow is descended, will rise up in the Day of Judgment, and condemn such gross Ignorance and Abuse of it? Does he think, that there are any departed Saints that will join with him in saying, that such a Spirit is a Scandal and Reproach to the Gospel? What more favourable Disposition could the Adversary of Mankind wish to see, either in young or old Divines, than a wanting and desiring to have Figure in the World, either by Preferments or rich Marriages? Would he find it difficult to enter into those Hearts, where the Lust of the Flesh, the Lust of the Eyes, and the Pride of Life had thus entered? Or would he look upon such as but half fitted for him, in Comparison of those who entered into holy Orders in a Spirit of Self-denial, and Renunciation of the Poms and Vanities of the World? Does the Doctor think that these gross Instances of worldly Ambition have no Affinity with those Poms and Vanities, which must be renounced in Baptism?

John the Baptist was but the Preparer of the Way for evangelical Purity of Life; but does the Doctor think that if the Baptist was now to come amongst us, as some have thought he will come again before the End of the Church, that he would look at Things as the Doctor does, that he would see such Perfections and such Corruptions, such Orthodoxy and such Enthusiasm as the Doctor sees; that this burning and shining Light would see no Generation of Vipers but where the Doctor sees them; that he would preach nowhere but in Churches; that he would spare no Clergy, nor any Church, but that which is established in this Island; that he would complain of the Hardships of our Clergy, and the suffering Spirit which they are forced to practise, as the Doctor does; that he would plead for a priestly Liberty of coveting Preferments and rich Marriages, as the Doctor doth; that he would condemn the Treatise upon Christian Perfection amongst the most pernicious Books of the Age, that he would recommend Wharton's Defence of Pluralities, and the Doctor's Discourse of the Folly, Sin, and Danger of being righteous over-much, as the true Fruits of that Spirit which first preached the Gospel? He that can believe this, must believe that the Baptist was come to confess the Errors and Mistakes of his first Appearance in the World.

I shall therefore proceed to tell young Divines, that a total Renunciation of the Spirit, Temper, and Inclinations of this Life, is the one Thing necessary to consecrate them to their holy Office; that as sure as the Church of Christ is not a Kingdom of this World, as sure as Jesus Christ came to deliver us from this evil World, as sure as he requires us to be born again from above, to hate even our own Life in this World, and to forsake all and follow him, so sure is it that no one has the Call of the Holy Spirit to the Ministry of the Gospel, nor the least Ground of hoping to be led and governed by it in his Ministry, till he at least prays, desires, and heartily endeavours to have all that Disregard of worldly Prosperity, Figure, and Distinction, which the Spirit of Jesus Christ, the Maxims of the Gospel, and the Practice of the Apostles set before him. Till this Renunciation of the World is made, we cannot enter into the Ministry at its own Door, but, like Thieves and Robbers, climb over its Walls; and then it will be no Wonder if we do no more Good to the Church than Thieves do the House they break open and plunder. If a young Minister wants to act the Part, and have the Appearance of a fine Gentleman, to go on in the common Spirit of the World, to cover a secular Spirit with an ecclesiastic Garb, and make his Fortunes in the Church, he must be told, that it is much safer to be a Publican and a Sinner, than to be a Trader in spiritual Things; that he who with unsanctified Hands attends at the Altar, is further from the Kingdom of God, than he who has not yet made one Step towards it.

Covetousness is Idolatry; it is a heathenish, Anti-Christian Vice, though only trafficking in worldly Matters; but when it takes Possession of the Altar, and makes a Trade of the Mysteries of Salvation, and turns Godliness into Gain, it has a Blackness of Vice and Depravity which much exceeds that of the worldly Miser. The Spirit of an Ecclesiastic should be the Spirit of Heaven, knowing nothing of this World, but how to escape its Snares and Temptations, burning in the Love of God, and holding out Life and Direction to all that aspire after every Perfection of the Christian Life.

'Tis too commonly thought, that when a young Student has taken his Degree, and shown some Signs of a Genius for Learning, that he is well prepared to enter into the Service of the Church. But alas! all the Accomplishments of human Learning are but the Ornaments of the Old Man, which leave the Soul in its Slavery to Sin, full of all the Disorders and Corruptions of the fallen Nature, and under the Blindness and Perverseness of some of its Passions. If it were not thus, how could the Errors of all Churches have the greatest Scholars for their Champions? All the learned Catholic World is amazed at the Prejudice, the Blindness, the Perverseness, the Partiality, the Weakness, the Sophistry, the Unfairness of Protestant Critics. All the Protestant World is in the same Degree of Wonder at the same Disorders in Catholic Disputants. Is not this a Demonstration of the Nature, Power, and Place of human Learning? Of its great Usefulness and Benefit to Religion? Does not this enough show, that it is the Effect and Offspring of the old Man, has his Nature and Qualities, dwells in him, and is governed by him? Is not this a Demonstration, that the greatest Degrees of historical, verbal, critical Knowledge are no real Hindrance of spiritual Blindness? Is not this a Demonstration, that human Learning is as different from Divine Light as Heaven is from Earth, the new from the old Man; and that considered in itself, it leaves us in our first State of Slavery to blind and corrupt Passions? Now nothing can deliver a Man from this State, but a Spirit born into him from above, a Light from the Spirit of God derived into his Soul, which alone can bring forth a new Man created in Christ Jesus. Nothing can make way for this new Birth from above, but a total Renunciation and Dying to all that we are by our natural Birth in this World. 'Tis only this Separation from Things below, that can make us Partakers of the Truth and Light that comes from above. Take away all Selfishness from the Papist and the Protestant, or let them both be dead to the Workings of this Spirit, and then they will be as fully agreed about Gospel Truths, as they are in the Form of a Square and a Circle. For nothing stands in the way of Divine Truths, or hinders its plain and full Entrance into us, but this Partiality or Selfishness, which adheres to everyone who does not make it his first Maxim, Prayer, and Endeavour to die to, and deny himself in all the Tempers and Inclinations of our fallen Nature. This Self-denial is the continual Doctrine of our Lord; it is by him made the Beginning of all Conversion to God, and he that cannot, or will not begin there, can make no Beginning of that Life, Light, and Salvation to which he is called in Christ Jesus: Therefore he that offers himself for holy Orders, without this Spirit of Self-denial, is a miserable Intruder into the Mysteries of Salvation; he only hardens and fixes himself in the Corruptions of his own Nature, and instead of becoming an Instrument of saving others, his very Office makes his own Salvation more dangerous.

I doubt not but some will here charge me with pleading for Poverty in the Ministry, and with Enmity to that Maintenance which they have both from the Law and the Gospel. But this is so far from being true, that I wish every good Minister, whom the Spirit of God has called to his Office, and governs in it, had much more of this World's Goods than are needful for his own reasonable subsistence; because it is certain, that such a one's Money would all be put into the Poor's Bag, and he would as gladly and liberally administer to their temporal as to their spiritual Necessities. I write against nothing but Avarice, Selfishness, Pride, and Ambition, and the making the Provisions of the Church subservient to these Tempers. A Provision arising from the Gospel, is consecrated by the Gospel, and is profaned by being touched and used by a worldly Spirit. And he who turns this Provision of the Gospel into a Support and Gratification of worldly Passions, sins against the Nature and Law of the Gospel more than he that pays his Tithes with Reluctance.

I can easily believe there are Clergy in this Land, who labour in the Gospel, without having a sufficient Subsistence from it; but if much of this Evil was to be charged upon Pluralities, Commendams, and such like spiritual Trading, there would be no Injustice in it. And if the inferior Clergy had their Labours only undervalued by the Laity, they would be in much better Condition than they are.

When it is complained by what shameful Qualifications, empty Titles, and unworthy Pretences, Numbers of Persons get loaded and dignified with Variety of Preferments; it is answered, in Excuse of this great Evil, That if Preferments might not be thus crowded together, great Learning, distinguished Abilities, and eminent Labours for the Service of Religion, must go unrewarded.

As this Answer is not fetched from the Gospel, or the Primitive Church, so I shall show, that it is a little supported by Reason. For if this great Learning is truly Gospel Learning, if this eminent Labour is truly pious Labour, what State of Life can so little want to be rewarded? How can Imagination itself place a Man more above the Thoughts and Desires of worldly Advancement? If such a one is full of the Light and Spirit of the Gospel, if his Labours have been like those of an Apostle, must he not like an Apostle be dead to the World? Can such a one look upon his Labour as a Hardship, because it has left him as low, and as far from the Pomp of the World as it found him? Can he repine because the Gospel has not proved a good worldly Bargain to him? If the Spirit of God has begun, and directed all his Labours, animated all his Studies and Designs, can such a one think it hard, that he has not by such Labours purchased to himself a Share in the State and Pride of Human Life?

If by a great Divine, is only meant a Person well skilled in Critical Contention, who can artfully, plausibly, scholastically defend a Set of Notions, amongst which he happened to be born, and bred, such a Divine, I own, may be very impatient, and much cooled in his Zeal, unless he finds himself well rewarded; but if an eminent Divine is to be understood in a Sense suitable to the Gospel, he is that particular Person that must needs have the greatest Contempt and Dislike of every Thing, that has but the Appearance of the Pomp and Vanity of this World in it. If therefore it was urged, that this Conjunction of Preferments and dignifying Rewards was necessary to bring ambitious Scholars into the Church, or to keep them in it, there would be some Sense, though no Gospel in the Pretence; but to talk of them as necessary to be the Rewards of eminent Piety and Apostolic Labour, is as absurd, as to say, that those who have truly put on Christ, who stand in the highest Degree of a renewed Nature, who best know and feel the Blessing of a mortified, heavenly Spirit, have less Reason to be content with Food and Raiment, than those who stand in a lower Degree of the Christian Life; 'tis saying, that a Bishop, because having most of the Spirit and Office of an Apostle in him, may well desire more of the Pride and Figure of this World, than the lower Clergy, who have less of the Apostolical Spirit and Perfection in them.

To want to stand in some Degree of worldly Figure, is the State of a Babe in the Christian Life, that hath hardly tasted the Milk of Evangelical Nourishment, and therefore can no way become those, who are to lead and compel others to the Perfection and Fulness of the Stature in Christ Jesus.

A great Divine is but a cant Expression, unless it signifies a Man greatly advanced in the Divine Life, whose Experience and Example is a Demonstration of the Reality of all the Graces and Virtues of the Gospel. No Divine has any more of the Gospel in him, than that which proves itself by the Spirit, Actions, and Form of his Life, the rest is but Hypocrisy, not Theology: If therefore Poverty of Spirit, a Disregard of worldly Figure, a total Self-denial is any Part of the Gospel, an eminent Divine, or one advanced in the Spirit and Life of Jesus, can have no Wish with regard to the Figure, Pride and Pomp of this Life, but to be placed out of every Appearance of it: And if the first and highest in Divine Knowledge are not the foremost in Poverty of Spirit, and the outward Humility of Christ and his Apostles; if eminent Divines want and desire to have a Dignity of worldly Figure, to have Respect by any other Means than by the Divine Virtues and Graces of an Evangelical Spirit and Conversation, and are not content with all the Contempt that such a Life can expose them to, they may be great Scholars, but they are little Divines, and must be thought to be much wanting in that which is the chief Part of the Ministers of Jesus Christ. But to proceed :

The next Thing I said to the young Clergy, was this ; ‘ Consider yourselves merely as the Messengers of God, that are sent ‘ into the World solely on his Errand ; and think it Happiness ‘ enough that you are called to the same Business for which the ‘ Son of God was born into the World,’ p. 81.

Now, I thought what I here said, was as unexceptionable, as pious, as unfit to be condemned by a Professor of Christian Theology, as if I had only recommended the loving of God with all our Heart and Soul, and Mind and Strength ; and that if any Clergyman disliked it, he would be forced to keep his Dislike to himself : But the Doctor is very open in his Indignation at it ; the same Answer, he says, is to be given here, as before, viz., ‘ that it is false Doctrine, tending to the Scandal and ‘ Reproach of the Christian Religion.’

Our Blessed Lord, when he sent the first Preachers of the Gospel into the World, said unto them, ‘ As my Father hath sent ‘ me, so send I you—go ye and teach all Nations—and lo ‘ I am with you to the End of the World.’ Now let it be supposed, that these first Preachers of the Gospel fully believed, that from the Time of their Appointment to this high Office, they were to consider themselves merely as the Messengers of God, sent into the World solely on his Errand, and that it was Happiness enough for them to be called to that Business, for which the Son of God was born into the World ; if they had this Belief, what follows ? Why, according to the Doctor, it follows, that they set out from the very first in one of the greatest Errors, had mistaken the Nature and Intent of their Mission, and had gone into the World upon a Principle that was false in itself, and scandalous and reproachful to the Christian Religion.

But if this Belief is not to be condemned in the first Clergy, as a false Opinion of their Office, scandalous and reproachful to the Christian Religion, I desire to know why those Clergy, who claim their Succession from the first, and expect the Presence of Christ in and with their Ministry, are not to be called upon to be of the same Spirit and Belief with the first of their Order ; or how it can be a Scandal to the Gospel, for the modern Clergy to be as wholly devoted to the Service of God, as the Apostles were : Surely there is something so extravagant in the Doctor’s Condemnation of the Advice here given to young Divines, as must shock even the common Reader; and if it could be supposed, that there are others amongst the learned Clergy, who are in this like minded with the Doctor, and glad to see this Advice condemned in this manner, if it could be supposed, that there are not Numbers amongst them of Rank and Eminence that want and desire to bear their Testimony against it, have we not too much Reason to fear that, which God threatened to the Angel of the Church at Ephesus, namely, the Removal of our Candlestick out of its Place?

The Doctor sets it out as an extraordinary Presumption in such a Man as I am, to pretend to give advice to young Divines, when it is so sufficiently done already by the 'Offices of our Church, the Charges, Instructions and Exhortations of our Bishops at their Visitation, and so many excellent Ordination 'and Visitation Sermons,' p. 87. Now, granting the Plenty and Excellency of all these, yet I have some hope, that my Presumption may be found to be only like that of the poor Widow, who after so many rich Oblations of great People, presumed to put her little Mite into the Treasury. And if it be true, that the Things here suggested by me, are only such as have been already fully set forth by so many great Bishops and excellent Preachers, how will the Doctor come off for condemning it, as false Doctrine, scandalous, and reproachful to the Christian Religion?

Dr. Trapp gives a Reason for his condemning this Advice, which is thus expressed: 'It is,' says he, 'false to say, that Clergymen ought to mind nothing, in any Degree, but their Profession and Duty, as Clergymen; they are Husbands, Parents, Men, as well as Clergymen, and must in some measure 'be concerned in the Affairs of the World,' p. 88.

Part of this I own to be very true, viz., that they are Men, and have the Wants of Human Nature which must be supplied; and for a full Proof of this, the Doctor might have justly appealed to St. Paul, who, though miraculously called to be an Apostle, and separated from the World to be merely a Messenger and Apostle of Jesus Christ; yet, after this high Apostleship, worked at his Trade, and often spent some Part of the Day and the Night in making Tents: Therefore, if all those whom I have exhorted to consider themselves as so highly set apart for the sole Service of God, should show such a Degree of worldly Care as St. Paul did, when he worked at his Trade, they might yet justly be said to act suitably to their Station, as the Ministers of God, that are wholly devoted to his Service; for if they should refuse to live, how could it be their Desire to live wholly to the Service of God; or, who can say that St. Paul departed from his Character, as a Minister of God, when he laboured with his own Hands, that he might gloriously and freely preach the Gospel? For it was for the Sake of the Gospel, to promote and recommend the Gospel, to make his Preaching the more successful; it was to show that he had fully renounced the World, desired nothing from it, but for the Glory and Love of God, would preach Salvation freely to the World: And thus have all the Ministers of the Gospel an Example in St. Paul, how they may make their Care of a Livelihood a Part of their Service to God.

But when the Doctor says, that Clergymen are Husbands and Parents, I must object a little; because no Scripture, or Antiquity shows me, that these Characters must belong to a Preacher of the Gospel; and therefore, when a Clergyman excuses himself from any Heights of the Ministerial Service, by saying, he has married a Wife, and therefore cannot come up to them; it seems to be no better an Excuse, than if he had said, he had hired a Farm, or bought five Yoke of Oxen.

I know very well, that the Reformation has allowed Priests and Bishops not only to look out for Wives, but to have as many as they please, one after another: But this is only to be considered as a bare Allowance, and perhaps granted upon such a Motive, as Moses of old made one to the Jews, for the Hardness of their Hearts, though from the Beginning it was not so; and therefore when Elogiums are sometimes made from the Pulpit on this Matter, I think they had better been spared; an Allowance granted to Weakness, is but an indifferent Subject to be made a Matter of Glory.

The Doctor should also have observed, that my Address was made to the young Clergy, and such as are only upon entering into holy Orders, nine in ten of which, may be supposed to be neither Husbands nor Fathers. He should also have remembered that our Universities are full of Clergy, who are obliged to live unmarried, that they may have proper Leisure and Freedom to attend their Studies without Impediment from worldly Cares. And therefore if I pointed at such a Dedication of the Clergy to the Service of God, as Husbands and Fathers cannot enter into, yet the Matter is not blamable, because there are so many that have not yet entered into this State of Subjection to the World, but are at Liberty to devote themselves wholly to the Service of the Gospel. And therefore if to such as these, I can so represent the Weight, the Duties, the heavenly Nature of the Priesthood, as to prevent or extinguish in them all Thoughts and Desires of being thus married to the World, what hurt have I done them, or the married Clergy, or the Gospel of Jesus Christ?

Virginity or Celibacy, when entered into from a Principle of divine Love, from a Heart burning with the Desire of living wholly and solely to God, is a State that gives Wings to all our Endeavours, and truly fits the Soul for the highest Growth of every heavenly Virtue: And if he that is consecrated to the Service of the Altar, desires not to keep his Heart from carnal Love; if he feels not such an Ascent of his Soul towards Heaven, as to have no Wish, but that his whole Body, Soul, and Spirit, may be presented to God in its utmost Degree of Purity, he must be said to have his Lamp much less kindled, than many of the Laity, both Men and Women have had, in all Ages of the Church. Custom and common Practice has too great a Power over our Judgments, and reconciles us to any Thing; but if a Christian, who lived when Christianity was in its Glory, when the first Apologists for it, appealed to the Numbers of both Sexes, devoted to the Chastity of the single Life, as an invincible Proof of the Power, and Divinity of the Gospel; if a Christian of those Days was now to come into the World, he must needs be much more shocked at Reverend Doctors in Sacerdotal Robes, making Love to Women, than at seeing a Monk in his Cell, kissing a wooden Crucifix.

The Knowledge and Love of the Virgin State began with Christianity, when the Nature of our Corruption, and the Nature of our Redemption were so fully discovered by the Light of the Gospel. Then it was, that a new Degree of heavenly Love was kindled in the human Nature, and brought forth a State of Life that had not been desired, till the Son of the Virgin came into the World. John the Baptist may be looked upon as the Beginner of the Gospel Dispensation; this burning and shining Light was in his Person, the Figure of Judaism ending in Christianity. In his outward Birth and State he was a Jew, in his inward Spirit and Character he belonged to the Gospel. He came out of the Wilderness burning and shining, to preach the Kingdom of Heaven at Hand. This may show us that Heat and Light from above, kindled in a State of great Self-denial are necessary to make us able Ministers of the Gospel; and that if we pretend to the Ministry with these Qualifications, and come only burning and shining with the Spirit of this World, we are only as well fitted to hinder, as the Baptist was to prepare the Way to the Kingdom of Heaven. Look at this great Saint, all ye that desire to preach the Gospel. He came forth in the highest Degrees of Mortification and Chastity of Life. But why did he so come? It was to show the World that these two great Virtues must form the Spirit of every Preacher of the Gospel. His Character does not call you to a Wilderness beyond Jordan, or to be clothed with Camels' Hair, &c. Such Circumstances are particular to himself; but it calls you to his inward Spirit of Self-denial, to stand in his State of Death to the World, and all carnal Love, if you would not only preach, but prove the Perfection of the Gospel: For if the Baptist was to be thus dead to the Flesh and the World, that he might only preach thus much, that the Kingdom of heaven was at Hand; can a less Self-denial be required of those, who are to preach that which is much more, namely, that the Kingdom of Heaven is come?

Now if this holy Baptist, when he came to Jerusalem, and had preached awhile upon Penitence, and the Kingdom of Heaven at hand, had made an Offering of his Heart to some fine young Lady of great Accomplishments, had not this put an End to all that was burning and shining in his Character? And if those Clergy who date their Mission from Jesus Christ himself, who claim being sent by him as he was by his Father, to stand as his Representatives, applying the Means and Mysteries of Salvation to all that desire to be born again from above, if they, whether they be Vicars, Rectors, Arch-Deacons, Deans, or Bishops, should look upon their Office to be as sacred, and their Station as high, in the Kingdom of God, as the Baptist's was; if they should look upon Love-Addresses to the Sex, as unbecoming, as foreign, as opposite to their Character, as to the Baptist's; could anyone say, that they took too much upon them, or paid too great a Reverence to the Holiness and Purity of that Priesthood, which they derived from the very Person and Office of Jesus Christ?

Our blessed Lord improved upon these two Articles of Mortification and Chastity, and sets them before every Preacher of the Gospel in a yet fuller Light. It is needless to show how much he speaks of the Nature and Necessity of a total Self-denial; but what he says of the Virgin-Life, as to be chosen by those who are able to choose it, for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake, Matt. xix. 12, is more than a Volume of human Eloquence in Praise of it. What Wonder is it, if after this great Numbers both of Men and Women were found in the first Ages of the Church, that chose to know no Love, but that of God in a single Life?

St. Paul has done everything to hinder a Minister of Jesus Christ from entering into Marriage, except calling it a sinful State, when he says: 'He that is married, careth for the Things 'of the World, how he may please his Wife;' and how could he more powerfully press the Virgin Life upon the Clergy, than when he says, 'He that is unmarried, careth for the Things that 'belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord'? Now, who would imagine, that after this Determination of the Matter, by so great an Apostle, there should be any need of Church Authority to restrain anyone in Holy Orders, from seeking after a Wife? Yet it must be supposed, that even in the primitive Church there was some Fear at least, that such a Restraint would soon be needful; because the twenty-seventh Apostolical Canon orders, that none amongst the Clergy be permitted to enter into Wedlock, except those, who have no higher an Office in the Church, than that of mere Singers and Readers.

When our Blessed Lord sent the first Preachers of the Gospel into the World, he took them from amongst married Men, Fishermen, Publicans, and Tentmakers; and there was no more Reason to look upon a Person as unfit to be an Apostle, because he had a Wife, than because he had a Trade: And therefore, St. Paul does not tell Timothy and Titus to ordain no married Person, for then no Elders could have been ordained in the Church, but he only enjoins them to lay Hands only on such as were in the most perfect Condition of the married Life, who had been the Husbands but of one Wife, and whose whole Family was a Proof of their Wisdom and Piety.

Hence it was, that the primitive Church made so great a Difference between a married Clergyman, and a Clergyman that married; the former was allowed for the Reasons above-mentioned, but the latter always censured as a thing highly reproachful, as a departing from that Self-denial, Devotion and Consecration to God, in which everyone in Holy Orders ought to live: But when Christianity had breathed a while in the World, there soon became less Occasion to ordain Persons that were married; for the Apologists appeal to the Numbers of both Sexes consecrated to God in a Virgin Life, as one great Proof of the Divinity of the Christian Religion. But when such Arguments as these were used, to set forth the Glory of the Gospel, need anyone be told, that it must have been highly shameful in those Days, for a Priest of such a Religion, to be looking out for a Wife? There is scarce a Saint, or eminent Father of the first Ages, who did not write set Discourses, and preach entire Homilies in Praise of this Virgin Perfection of Life; but surely this was enough telling the World, that that Order of Men who officiated in the Mysteries of this Divine Religion, and were Teachers of its Perfection, were Persons devoted to God in a Holy Virginity of Life: And if it be asked, why amongst all our modern fine Sermons, we have none upon the Perfection and Advantage of a holy Virginity; the Reason can be only this, because our Priests and Bishops marry as often, as the Common People of the World. In the Primitive Church, if a Subdeacon married a Widow, he was degraded from his Office; and the Reason was, because he who tempted a Woman to marry a second Time, was looked upon to be a Corrupter of Human Nature: These were the Sentiments of the Church, when it might be truly called the Spouse of Jesus Christ.

I shall conclude this Matter with a Passage taken from the 'Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life'; it is a Quotation from the great and learned Eusebius, who lived at the time of the first general Council, when the Faith of our Nicene Creed was established: His Words are these, 'There hath been, saith he, 'instituted in the Church of Christ, two ways or Manners of 'Living; the one raised above the ordinary State of Nature, 'and common Ways of Living, rejects Wedlock, Possessions, and 'Worldly Goods, and being wholly separated and removed from 'the ordinary Conversation of Common Life, is appropriated 'and devoted solely to the Worship and Service of God, through 'an exceeding Degree of heavenly Love: They who are of this 'Order of People, seem dead to the Life of this World, and 'having their Bodies only upon Earth, are in their Minds and 'Contemplations dwelling in Heaven; from whence, like so many 'heavenly Inhabitants, they look down upon Human Life, 'making Intercessions and Oblations for the whole Race of Man- 'kind; and this, not with the Blood of Beasts, or the Fat, or 'Smoke and burning of Bodies, but with the highest Exercises 'of true Piety, with cleansed and purified Hearts, and with a 'whole Form of Life strictly devoted to Virtue: These are their 'Sacrifices, which they are continually offering unto God, and 'implore his Mercy and Favour for themselves and their fellow 'Creatures. Christianity receives this as the perfect Manner of 'Life.

'The other is of a lower Form, and suiting itself more to the 'Condition of Human Nature, admits of chaste Wedlock, the 'Care of Children and Families, of Trade and Business, and 'goes through all the Employments of Life, under a Sense of 'Piety and Fear of God: Now, they who have chosen this 'Manner of Life, have their set Times for Retirement and 'Spiritual Exercises, and particular Days are set apart for their 'hearing and learning the Word of God: And this Order of 'People are considered as in the second State of Piety.* Here you see the Perfection of the Christian Life plainly set out, and how it was, that Numbers of private Persons, Men and Women, who had no Share in the Ecclesiastical Office, yet, by this Perfection of Life, made themselves holy and heavenly Intercessors for the whole Race of Mankind. Now, are we not here obliged to suppose, that in this Father's Days, the Clergy were in this Number of People, that were thus heavenly in the whole Form of their Life, thus devoted to God and the Edification of the Church, by embracing the perfect Life of Christianity? If they were not, do they not stand plainly condemned by the Religion of the Gospel, since this Father assures us, that Christianity held this to be the perfect Manner of Life? I shall only add thus much here, that till such a Degree of heavenly Love, such a Sense of the Purity, Holiness and heavenly Nature of the sacred Calling, till such a Desire of Perfection is awakened in the Clergy, as shuts out all carnal Love and worldly Tempers from their Hearts, they cannot be such Priests and Intercessors with God, such Patterns of Purity and Holiness, such Kindlers of Divine Love and heavenly Desires amongst Men, as the Nature of their Office both intends and requires of them.

If a Candidate for Holy Orders dares not make this total Donation of himself to God, to be an Instrument of his good Pleasure only in the Service of the Gospel, if it is not the real State of his Heart, to wish nothing for himself in this World, but the most perfect Purification of his Nature, the highest Advancement in all Divine Virtues; if he desires anything in and by his Office, but a Concurrence with Jesus Christ in the Salvation of Souls; if he has any Reserves of Self-seeking, or Self-advancement in the World, any fleshly Passions which he hopes to make consistent with the Duties of his Profession; if he is not separated in Will and Desire from all that is not God, and the Service of God, he must be said to want the best Proofs of his being called by the Holy Ghost.

Dr. Trapp's violent Condemnation of what I said to the young Clergy, and Candidates for Holy Orders, made it necessary for me to enter thus far into this subject. If anything that I have said to these Persons, concerning the Excellency, the Advantage, the Purity, the Necessity of a Virgin Life, in order to their own Perfection, and the full Edification of the Church, gives Offence to any of the married Clergy, it can only be to those, who don't wish to see the Church in a better State, than that, in which they found it; and to such there need no Apology be made.

But to turn to another Matter; I had said, that 'Salvation wholly consists in the Incarnation of the Son of God in the Soul or Life of Man; that that which was done and born in the Virgin Mary, must be done, and born in us: As our Sin and Death is Adam in us, so our Life and Salvation is Christ in us— As we are earthly, corrupt Men, by having the Nature and Life

'of Adam the first propagated in us, so we must become new and 'heavenly Men, by having the Life and Nature of Adam the 'second regenerated in us: But if we are to be like him in 'Nature, as we are like to Adam in Nature, then there is an 'absolute Necessity, that that which was done and born in the 'Virgin Mary, be also by the same Power of the Holy Ghost, 'done and born in us. The Mystery of Christ's Birth must be 'the Mystery of our Birth, we cannot be his Sons but by having 'the Birth of his Life derived into us: The new Paradaisaical Man 'must be brought forth in the same Manner in every individual 'Person. That which brought forth this Holy Birth in the first 'Adam at his Creation, and in the second Adam in the Virgin 'Mary, that alone can bring it forth in any one of their Offspring.* Now, there seems to be nothing in all this, but what is easily to be apprehended, and fully believed by everyone, that knows anything of the Christian Life; but the Doctor makes two Replies to this Doctrine: The first is this, 'Were such Words,' says he, 'ever heard amongst Christians before?† Yes, good Sir, they have often been heard before, by such as have Ears to hear; for they are the very Words which Christ, and his Apostles have as plainly spoken, as they have spoken any one Article of the Apostles' Creed: They are only as different from the Words of Christ and his Apostles, as the English Words of the Bible, are different from those Greek Words, in which the Gospels were written. When the Scripture saith, that Christ must be formed in us, doth it not say, that Christ must be born, or become incarnate to us? When it saith, Christ was born of the Virgin Mary, does it not say, that Christ was incarnate of the Virgin Mary? Or is there anything to fright a learned Divine, who has for forty Years been told, that Christ must be formed in us, revealed in us, that he must put on Christ, to be told, that Christ must become incarnate in us, that he must bring forth himself in us, and have such a Birth in our Soul and Life, as he had in the Virgin Mary? For wherever he is born, must he not be born in the same Manner? Was it not the Word of God, that by the Power of the Holy Ghost became Man in the Virgin Mary? And is there any Thing in this Birth on this wise that is inconsistent with the Birth of our new Man in Christ Jesus? Must not the same Word of God, by the same Operation of the Holy Spirit, bring forth that in us, which is the new Man in Christ Jesus, or Christ formed in us? When our Lord saith, that we must be born again from Above, of the Word of God, is it more or less than saying, that that Word which was born in the Virgin

* Serious Answer, page 41.

Mary, and was incarnate in her, must be born and incarnate in us? When the Apostle saith, that we must be born again of the incorruptible Seed of the Word, is not this expressly saying, that that must be done and born in us, which was done and born in the Virgin Mary? If he says, that Christ must be formed in us, does he not say, that he must have such a Birth and Form in us, as he had in the Virgin Mary; only with this Difference, that in the Birth of Christ, the Fulness of the Deity, or eternal Word became Man, and dwelt personally in him; but in us, only a Spark, or Seed of the Word is formed and raised up into a new, heavenly Man. Is there now any Thing in all this, but the most comfortable, substantial Part of our Redemption set out in the plainest Words of Scripture? Reject this Doctrine, say that you cannot, you will not, you desire not to have Christ thus born and formed in you, and then you reject all that Salvation, which the Word of God, born of a Virgin, hath brought into the World. For the Scripture is absolutely plain in telling us, that lost Man cannot be made alive again unto God, but solely by this way, by being born again of the Word and holy Spirit of God; if therefore we desire not, but reject such a Birth, as was brought forth by the Word and holy Spirit of God in the Virgin Mary; do we not plainly reject that Birth in which all our Salvation consists? And therefore to say that that must be done and born in us, which was done and born in the Virgin Mary, is as plain, as scriptural, as to say, that we must be born again of the Word and holy Spirit of God. And on this Ground it is, that Christ in us, is said to be our Hope of Glory.—And that the Kingdom of Heaven is within us—that we must be in Christ new Creatures—that we must put on Christ—that he must be formed in us, revealed, manifested in us—that he is our Life—that he brings us forth out of himself, as the Vine does its Branches—that unless we eat his Flesh and drink his Blood we have no Life in us. These, and many other the like Sayings of Scripture, which are the strongest, deepest Expressions of the Nature and Manner of our Salvation, are all grounded on this Truth, viz., That the Mystery of Christ's Birth is the Mystery of our New Birth; that that must be done and born in us, which was done and born in the Virgin Mary, namely a New Man brought forth in the Likeness of Christ, by a Birth from the Word, and holy Spirit of God.

But the Doctor has a second Reply to this Matter, which stands thus expressed. Whether, says he, you consider the Divinity, or the Sense of this, could George Fox himself have outdone it? p. 48. This Reply, considered in itself, might have its Place amongst those algebraic Quantities, that are some Degrees less than nothing ; but with Regard to the Doctor's Purpose it has something in it, for it is an Appeal to that which is very powerful, which has suppressed many a good Truth ; it is an Appeal to vulgar Prejudice, and shows that the Doctor is not without his Expectations from that Quarter. And thus it is, that the Catholic Artist in his Country, plays a Martin Luther, when he wants to reproach that, which he knows not how to confute. What Degree of Sense, or Divinity George Fox was possessed of, I cannot pretend to say, having never read any of his Writings ; but if he has said any good and Divine Truths, I should be as well pleased in seeing them in his Books, as in any of the Fathers of the primitive Church. For as the Gospel requires me to be as glad to see, Piety, Equity, strict Sobriety, and extensive Charity in a Jew, or a Gentile, as in a Christian ; as it obliges me to look with Pleasure upon their Virtues, and be thankful to God, that such Persons have so much of true and sound Christianity in them ; so it cannot be an unchristian Spirit, to be as glad to see Truths in one Party of Christians, as in another ; and to look with Pleasure upon any good Doctrines, that are held by any Sect of Christian People, and be thankful to God, that they have so much of the genuine, saving Truths of the Gospel amongst them. For if we have no Anger or Complaint against those that are divided from us, but what proceeds from a Christian Fear, that what they hold and practise will not be so beneficial to them, as our Religion will be to us, must we not have the utmost Readiness and Willingness to find, own, and rejoice in those good Doctrines and Practices which they still retain and profess ? If a poor Pilgrim, under a Necessity of travelling a dangerous and difficult Road by himself, had through his own Perverseness lost the Use of a Leg, and the Sight of one Eye, could we be said to have any charitable Concern for his Perverseness and Misfortune, unless we were glad to see, that he had one good Leg, and one good Eye still left, and unless we hoped and desired they would bring him at last to his Journey's End. Now let every Part of the Church which takes itself to be sound and good, and is only angry at every other Part, because they have lessened the Means of their own Salvation ; let her but have thus much Charity in her Anger, and then she will be glad to see, in every perverse Division, something like the one good Leg, and the one good Eye of the Pilgrim, and which she will hope and wish may do them the same Good.

Selfishness and Partiality are very inhuman and base Qualities, even in the Things of this World, but in the Doctrines of Religion they are of a baser Nature. Now this is the greatest Evil that the Division of the Church has brought forth ; it raises in every Communion a selfish, partial Orthodoxy, which consists in courageously defending all that it has, and condemning all that it has not. And thus every Champion is trained up in Defence of their own Truth, their own Learning, and their own Church, and he has the most Merit, the most Honour, who likes every Thing, defends every Thing amongst themselves, and leaves nothing uncensured in those that are of a different Communion. Now how can Truth, and Goodness, and Union, and Religion be more struck at, than by such Defenders of it? If you ask why the great Bishop of Meaux wrote so many learned Books against all Parts of the Reformation, it is because he was born in France, and bred up in the Bosom of Mother Church. Had he been born in England, had Oxford, or Cambridge been his Alma Mater, he might have rivalled our great Bishop Stillfleet, and would have wrote as many learned Folios against the Church of Rome as he has done. And yet I will venture to say, that if each Church could produce but one Man apiece that had the Piety of an Apostle, and the impartial Love of the first Christians, in the first Church at Jerusalem, that a Protestant and a Papist of this Stamp, would not want half a Sheet of Paper to hold their Articles of Union, nor be half an Hour before they were of one Religion. If therefore it should be said, that Churches are divided, estranged, and made unfriendly to one another, by a Learning, a Logic, a History, a Criticism in the Hands of Partiality, it would be saying that, which every particular Church too much proves to be true. Ask why even the best amongst the Catholics are very shy of owning the Validity of the Orders of our Church, it is because they are afraid of removing any Oodium from the Reformation? Ask why no Protestants anywhere touch upon the Benefit or Necessity of Celibacy in those, who are separated from worldly Business to preach the Gospel, 'tis because that would be seeming to lessen the Romish Error of not suffering Marriage in her Clergy? Ask why even the most worthy and pious amongst the Clergy of the established Church, are afraid to assert the Sufficiency of the Divine Light, the Necessity of seeking only to the Guidance and Inspiration of the holy Spirit, 'tis because the Quakers, who have broken off from the Church, have made this Doctrine their Corner Stone.

If we loved Truth as such; if we sought it for its own Sake; if we loved our Neighbour as ourselves; if we desired nothing by our Religion but to be acceptable to God; if we equally desired the Salvation of all Men; if we were afraid of Error only because of its hurtful Nature to us, and our Fellow-Churches, then nothing of this Spirit could have any Place in us.

There is therefore a Catholic Spirit, a Communion of Saints in the Love of God and all Goodness, which no one can learn from that which is called Orthodoxy in particular Churches, but is only to be had by a total Dying to all worldly Views, by a pure Love of God, and by such an Unction from above, as delivers the Mind from all Selfishness, and makes it love Truth and Goodness with an Equality of Affection in every Man, whether he be Christian, Jew, or Gentile. He that would obtain this Divine and Catholic Spirit in this disordered, divided State of Things, and live in a divided Part of the Church without partaking of its Division, must have these three Truths deeply fixed in his Mind: First, that universal Love, which gives the whole Strength of the Heart to God, and make us love every Man as we love ourselves, is the Noblest, the most Divine, the God-like State of the Soul, and is the utmost Perfection to which the most perfect Religion can raise us; and that no Religion does any Man any Good, but so far as it brings this Perfection of Love into him. This Truth will show us, that true Orthodoxy can nowhere be found, but in a pure disinterested Love of God, and our Neighbour. Secondly, That in the present divided State of the Church, Truth itself is torn and divided asunder; and that therefore he can be the only true Catholic, who has more of Truth, and less of Error, than is hedged in by any divided Part. This Truth will enable us to live in a divided Part, unhurt by its Division, and keep us in a true Liberty and Fitness to be edified and assisted by all the Good that we hear or see in any other Part of the Church. And thus uniting in Heart and Spirit with all that is holy and good in all Churches, we enter into the true Communion of Saints, and become real Members of the holy Catholic Church, though we are confined to the outward Worship of only one particular Part of it. It is thus, that the Angels, as ministering Spirits, assist, join, unite, and co-operate with every Thing that is holy and good, in every Division of Mankind. Thirdly, he must always have in Mind this great Truth, that it is the Glory of the Divine Justice to have no Respect of Parties or Persons, but to stand equally disposed to that which is right and wrong, as well in the Jew as in the Gentile. He therefore that would like as God likes, and condemn as God condemns, must have neither the Eyes of the Papist nor the Protestant; he must like no Truth the less because Ignatius Loyola, or John Bunyan were very zealous for it; nor have the less Aversion to any Error, because Dr. Trapp or George Fox had brought it forth. Now if this universal Love, and impartial Justice, is the Spirit which will judge the World at the last Day, how can this Spirit be too soon, or too much in us; Or what can do us more Hurt than that which is an Hindrance of it? When I was a young Scholar of the University, I heard a great Religionist say in my Father's House, that if he could believe the late King of France to be in Heaven, he could not tell how to wish to go thither himself. This was exceeding shocking to all that heard it: Yet something of this kind of Temper must be supposed to be more or less in those, who have, as a Point of Orthodoxy, worked themselves up into a hearty Contempt and Hatred of those that are divided from them. He that has been all his Life long used to look with great Abhorrence upon those whom he has called superstitious Bigots, dreaming Visionaries, false Saints, canting Enthusiasts, &c., must naturally expect they will be treated by God as they have been by him; and if he had the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, such People would find it hard to get a Place in it. But it stands us greatly in Hand to get rid of this Temper before we die; for if nothing but universal Love can enter into the Kingdom of God, what can be more necessary for us, than to be full of this Love before we die?

We often hear of People of great Zeal and Orthodoxy, declaring on their Death-beds their strict Attachment to the Church of England, and making solemn Protestations against all other Churches; but how much better would it be, if such a Person was to say, 'In this divided State of Christendom, I must conform to some outwardly divided Part of it, and therefore I have chosen to live and die in outward Communion with the Church of England; fully believing, that if I worship God in Spirit and in Truth in this divided Part of the Church, I shall be as acceptable to him, as if I had been a faithful Member of the one whole Church, before it was broken into separate Parts.' But 'as I am now going out of this disordered Division into a more universal State of Things, as I am now falling into the Hands of the great Creator and Lover of all Souls; as I am going to the God of all Churches, to a Kingdom of universal Love, which must have its Inhabitants from all People, Nations, and Languages of the Earth; so in this Spirit of universal Love, I desire to perform my last Act of Communion in this divided Church, uniting and joining in Heart and Spirit with all that is Christian, Holy, Good, and Acceptable to God in all other Churches; praying, from the Bottom of my Soul, that every Church may have its Saints; that God's Kingdom may come, his Will be done in every Division of Christians and Men, and that every Thing that hath Breath may praise the Lord.'

Need anyone now be told of the superior Excellency of this

Spirit, or its Fitness to be admitted into the Kingdom of universal Love? Need we any Proof that nothing but this Catholic Spirit will carry us unhurt by Schism, through all those Divisions which the Devil, the World, and fleshly Wisdom have brought into the Church? Again, We have often seen learned Protestants very zealous in pulling to Pieces the Lives of the Saints of the Romish Church, and casting all the Reproach and Ridicule they can, upon their wondrous Spirit; though the Lives of the Saints of the primitive Church, written by the Fathers of the greatest Name and Authority, are as fit for to be exposed in the same Manner. Now, whence does this proceed? Why, from a secret Touch of that Spirit which could not bear to have the late King of France in Heaven; it proceeds from a partial, selfish Orthodoxy, which cannot bear to hear, or own, that the Spirit and Blessing of God are so visible in a Church from which it is divided, and against which it has so much preached: But if a Person be of this Spirit, what does it signify where he has his outward Church? If a Romish Priest in the North of England could not bear the Splendour of a Life so devoted to God, so fruitful in all the Works of Piety and Goodness, as was that of the late Lady Elizabeth Hastings, if he should want to sully the Brightness of her Christian Graces, and prove her to have been no Saint, lest it should appear, that the Spirit of God was not confined to the Romish Church, would not such a Zeal show a worse Spirit, than that of Superstition, a greater Depravity of Heart, than the saying now and then an Ave Mary.

The more we believe, or know of the Corruptions and Hindrances of true Piety in the Church of Rome, the more we should rejoice to hear, that in every Age so many eminent Spirits, great Saints, have appeared in it, whom we should thankfully behold as so many great Lights hung out by God, to show the true Way to Heaven, as so many joyful Proofs that Christ is still present in that Church, as well as in other Churches, and that the Gates of Hell have not prevailed, or quite overcome it? Who that has the least Spark of Heaven in his Soul, can help thinking and rejoicing in this manner at the Appearance of a St. Bernard, a Teresa, a Francis de Sales, &c., in that Church? Who can help praising God, that her invented Devotions, superstitious Use of Images, Invocation of Saints, &c., have not so suppressed any of the Graces and Virtues of an Evangelical Perfection of Life, but that amongst Cardinals, Jesuits, Priests, Friars, Monks and Nuns, Numbers have been found, who seemed to live for no other End, but to give Glory to God and Edification to Men, and whose Writings have every Thing in them, that can guide the Soul out of the Corruption of this Life into the highest Union with God. And he who through a partial Orthodoxy is diverted from feeding in these green Pastures of Life, whose just Abhorrence of Jesuitical Craft and worldly Policy keeps him from knowing and reading the Works of an Alvares du Pas, a Rodrigues, a Du Pont, a Guilloree, a Pere Surin, and such like Jesuits, has a greater Loss than he can easily imagine: And if any Clergyman can read the Life of Bartholomeus a Martyribis, a Spanish Archbishop, who sat with great Influence at the very Council of Trent, without being edified by it, and desiring to read it again, I know not why he should like the Lives of the best of the Apostolical Fathers: And if any Protestant Bishop should read the Stimulus Pastorum wrote by this Popish Prelate, he must be forced to confess it to be a Book, that would have done Honour to the best Archbishop, that the Reformation has to boast of. O my God, how shall I unlock this Mystery of Things; in the Land of Darkness, overrun with Superstition, where Divine Worship seems to be all Show and Ceremony, there both amongst Priests and People, thou hast those, who are fired with the pure Love of thee, who renounce everything for thee, who are devoted wholly and solely to thee, who think of nothing, write of nothing, desire nothing but the Honour, and Praise, and Adoration that is due to thee, and who call all the World to the Maxims of the Gospel, the Holiness and Perfection of the Life of Christ. But in the Regions where Light is sprung up, whence Superstition is fled, where all that is outward in Religion seems to be pruned, dressed, and put in its true Order; there a cleansed Shell, a whited Sepulchre, seems too generally to cover a dead Christianity.

The Error of all Errors, and that which makes the blackest Charge against the Romish Church, is Persecution, a religious Sword drawn against the Liberty and Freedom of serving God according to our best Light, that is, against our worshipping the Father in Spirit and in Truth: This is the great Whore, the Beast, the Dragon, the Antichrist. Now, though this is the frightful Monster of that Church, yet, even here, who, except it be the Church of England, can throw the first Stone at her? Where must we look for a Church that has so renounced this persecuting Beast, as they have renounced the Use of Incense, the Sprinklings of Holy Water, or the extreme Unction of dying Persons? What Part of the Reformation abroad has not practised and defended Persecution? What Sect of Dissenters at home have not, in their Day of Power, dreadfully condemned Toleration?

When it shall please God to dispose the Hearts of all Princes in the Christian World entirely to destroy this Antichristian

188 Some Animadversions upon

Beast, and leave all their Subjects in that religious Freedom which they have from God; then the Light of the Gospel, the Benefit of its Faith, the Power of its Ministers, the Usefulness of its Rites, the Benediction of its Sacraments will have proper Time and Place to show themselves; and that Religion which has the most of a Divine Power in it, whose Offices and Services do most good to the Heart, whose Ministers are most of all devoted to God, and have the most Proof of the Power and Presence of Christ with them, will become, as it ought to be, the most universal; and by this Destruction of the Beast, nothing but the Errors, Delusions, Corruptions and Fictions of every Religion, will be left in a helpless State. All that I have said on this Matter, has been occasioned by the Doctor's Appeal to vulgar Prejudice; and all that I have said is only to intimate this much, that the greatest Evil which the Division of the Church brings forth, is a Sectarian, selfish Spirit, that with the Orthodoxy of the Old Jews, would have God to be only their God, and themselves only, his chosen People. If therefore we would be true Christians of the Catholic Church, we must put off this Selfishness and Partiality of the carnal Jew, we must enter into a Catholic Affection for all Men, love the Spirit of the Gospel wherever we see it; not work ourselves up into an Abhorrence of a George Fox, or an Ignatius Loyola; but be equally glad of the Light of the Gospel wherever it shines, or from what Quarter it comes; and give the same Thanks and Praise to God for an eminent Example of Piety, wherever it appears, either in Papist or Protestant.

To return. Dr. Trapp supposing the World running into a Charity that would ruin Wife and Family, asks his charitable Half-thinker thus: 'Did you never hear that Charity begins at home? Did you never read that of St. Paul, If any provide 'not for his own, and especially those of his own House, he hath 'denied the Faith, and is worse than an Infidel.' The Doctor's Proverb I meddled not with, but the Text of St. Paul I rescued from his gross Misapplication of it. That Text has no more Relation to an excessive Charity, the Sin the Doctor was opposing, than to an excessive Fasting. The Apostle neither thought of this Sin in this Place, nor in any other Part of his Writings; nor does he ever give the smallest Hint of the Danger of falling into it. The one Thing in Question was this, whether poor Widows, who had near Relations, that could supply their Wants, should be maintained by the Charity of the Church: The Apostle determines the Matter thus; that if such Persons, who were thus able, did not thus provide for, that is, supply the Wants of their poor Kindred, they were so far from having the Faith of Christians, that they wanted a Goodness that was to be found amongst Infidels : This is the whole of the Apostle's Doctrine in this Text. He speaks of providing for those of our own House or Family, in no other Sense, than as it signifies our Charity to them, when they fall into Distress : But the Doctor, either led away with, or trusting to the Sound of the English Word, provide, grafts all these following Errors upon this plain Text. When it is said, a Person has provided well for his Family, everyone supposes that he has laid up well in Store, or got an Estate to be divided amongst them for their future Subsistence, from this Use of the English Word, provide, in the Text, the Doctor would have it believed, that the Apostle teaches every Head of a Family to be carefully and continually laying up in Store, and making some fixed Provision for the future Maintenance of his Kindred. But the Apostle is as infinitely distant from this Thought or Direction, as from teaching them to get their Cellars well filled with strong Liquors : When he here says, provide, he says only this, Shut not your Eyes to the Wants of your poor Kindred, but provide them with what they have need of, and don't let them fall to the Charge of the Church. The Doctor's second Error is this ; that, according to this Text, a Christian ought not to hinder himself from thus laying up in Store for his Family, or leave them to live by their Labour and Industry, through an Extent of Charity to his poor Neighbours. Though the Apostle has not one single Syllable about this Matter ; and is as far from saying any Thing like it, as from saying, that a Christian, when he makes a Feast, should only invite his rich Kindred and Acquaintance. The one has as much of the Apostle and the Gospel for it, as the other. The Doctor's third Error is this ; that, according to this Text, he, who by a daily, continual Charity, has incapacitated himself to lay up in Store, a fixed Provision for the future Maintenance of his Family, is condemned by the Apostle, as denying the Faith, and worse than an Infidel : Though the Apostle speaks no more here of such a Person, or any more condemns him, than he speaks in the Praise of Ananias and Saphira, who kept back Part of the Price of the Land they had sold.

The Person here condemned, is not he, who through a continual Charity, or loving his Neighbour as himself, is hindered from laying up in Store ; not he, who, through a Christian Love of relieving the distressed Members of Christ, is content with helping his own Family to Food and Raiment, such a Person is not thought of, much less condemned by the Apostle ; but it is that Christian, who being able, is yet unwilling to support his near Relations, that are fallen into Poverty, but through a sordid Selfishness, leaves them to be maintained by the Church ; this is the only Christian the Apostle here condemns, as having put off the Piety of the Gospel, and wanting even the Virtue of good-natured Infidels.

I said further, Had the Apostle known a Parent in his Days, who, through his great Charity for others, had reduced his own Family to a want of Relief, he would have been so far from rebuking him as an half-thinking Fool, or exposing him to others, as guilty of Madness, that he would have told them, that such a one had consecrated himself and Family to the Church, as the proper Objects of their Care. To which the Doctor gives this Answer, This he affirms, and this I deny ; and as he produces no other Proof, so I give no other Answer, p. 69. Had the Doctor said, as his Affirmation has no Sense in it, so there need be no Sense in my Denial of it, he had answered as well as he has here done. What I affirmed, did not consist, as the Doctor's Denial doth, only of two Words ; but was, a large Proposition that carried its own Proof along with it, because I said nothing of the Apostle, but what the Nature of the Thing obliged me to say of every sober Christian. For if any Christian could be supposed to want Compassion and Affection for such a Sufferer, from his own Charity to others, he must be such a one as the Apostle affirms to have denied the Faith, and to be worse than an Infidel. But to show the Doctor what I said, has its Proof from the common Voice of Christianity in the Apostle's Days, may sufficiently appear from the following Passage of St. Clement, who was a Companion and Fellow-labourer of the Apostle, and Bishop of no less a Church than that of Rome. 'We have 'known many amongst us, (says St. Clement) who have delivered 'themselves into Bonds and Slavery, that they might restore 'others to their Liberty ; many who have hired out themselves 'Servants unto others, that by their Wages they might feed and 'sustain them that wanted.'*

Will the Doctor now say, that this is no Proof of that which I affirmed of the Apostle, that he would have had a Love for those who were become Sufferers by their own Charity to others ? Does not this Apostolical Bishop make it his Boast, and the Glory of Christianity ; not that they had some, but many such amongst them ?

It was not only in the first Church at Jerusalem, that the Christians had all things common. For St. Barnabas writing to some converted Jews, teaches them to have all Things common, to call nothing their own in this World, because they were called to the common Enjoyment of the Things of Eternity. 'Communicabis in omnibus rebus proximo tuo; nihil dices quicquam tibi proprium, si enim Communicatis in Vicem, in bonis, incorruptibilibus, quanto magis in corruptibilibus.*'

An Age after this, Justin Martyr thus glories of the Power of the Gospel-Faith; 'We,' says he, 'who before were become Christians, loved our Wealth and Possessions above all Things, now give up all Property in them, that they may be in common for all that want them. Qui Pecuniarum & Possessionum Fructus ac Proventus præ rebus omnibus adamabamus, nunc etiam quæ habemus in Commune conferimus, & cum indigentibus quibuscunque communicamus.†' What a lean, heathenish Figure must the Doctor's Proverb of Charity beginning at home, have made in the Days of St. Barnabas, Clement, or Justin Martyr? Or who durst then have made such a Use of the Text of St. Paul, as the Doctor has done, or coupled it with such a Proverb? Were any of these first Saints to judge of this Matter, the Doctor might, for aught I know, have a worse Reprimand from them for so doing, than if he had only coupled Cardinals with Pluralists.

In order to show the Doctor that he was very unseasonably preaching against the Sin and Folly of an excessive Charity, when yet every Part of the Church wanted to be shown how they were fallen from the Gospel-degree of it, I set before him an imaginary Bishop of Winchester, yet drawn according to the Model of the Holy Bishops of the first Ages. I supposed this Bishop so born again from Above, so filled with the Spirit of Jesus Christ, that he looked upon all the Revenues of his See, with no other Eyes, than as our Saviour looked at that Bag that was carried along with him by his Disciples, as so much for his own Necessities, and the Necessities of others. I supposed that in this Spirit, he so expended his yearly Income, that he chose to bring up his Children as much Strangers to all worldly Figure, and in as low a State of Labour as that to which our Lord and his Apostles had been used. I supposed, that by a Piety of Life and Conversation, equal to this exalted Charity, he had instilled such a heavenly Spirit into his Wife and Children, as made them highly thankful for their Condition, and full of Praise to God for the Blessing of such a Relation. Dr. Trapp, though an ancient Divine, seems to start back with Fright, at the Sight of this Apostolical Bishop, and supposes, that if such a Monster of a Man was now to get into a Bishopric, he must needs make his Children extraordinary wicked, fill them with Abhorrence of his Memory, and spread Infidelity in the World, by making Christianity a Jest to Infidels, p. 71.

‘I say,’ says the Doctor, very clearly and plainly, that ‘such a Bishop must be a Madman,’ p. 70. Now, if the Doctor will prove from the Scriptures this Bishop to be a Madman, it must be for the following Reasons; First, because he had so mean a Spirit, as to suffer the Son of a Bishop to work under a Carpenter, as the Redeemer of Mankind had done. Secondly, because he taught himself and his Family to believe that which St. Paul believed, that ‘having Food and Raiment, we ought to be there‘with content.’ Thirdly, because he came up to the very Letter of the great Commandment, of ‘loving our Neighbour as our‘selves.’ Fourthly, because he seemed to imitate the Spirit of the first Christians at Jerusalem, who accounted ‘nothing to be
‘their own that they possessed.’ Fifthly, because he had turned himself and Family from all the Vanity of this World, the Lust of the Flesh, the Lust of the Eyes, and the Pride of Life. Sixthly, because he seemed to have this of the Apostle fixed in his mind. ‘He that saith, he abideth in Christ, ought so to walk,
‘as he walked.’ Seventhly, because his Life was fashioned according to this Doctrine of the Holy Jesus, ‘Learn of me, for
‘I am meek, and lowly of Heart: I am among you, as he that ‘serveth: Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your ‘Minister; even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered ‘unto, but to minister.’ For it may be said with the greatest Certainty, that if the Doctor will have any Proof from the Scripture of the Madness of this Bishop, it must be as absurd as the Reasons here alleged.

Come we now to consider this Bishop according to the Spirit, Practice and Laws of the Church in all Ages. Anyone versed ever so little in the History of the Church, must see at the first Sight, that this supposed Bishop is a true Copy of the first Apostolical Fathers. And if this Bishop was to be accounted a Madman, because of the Manner of his Life, we must come down several Ages after Constantine, to the Mitre and Triple Crown, before we could find a Bishop in his Senses. The Clements, the Polycarps, the Ignatius's, the Irenæus's, the Cyprians, the Gregorys, the Basils, the Ambroses, the Chrystostoms, the Hillarys, the Augustins, and a Number that have long graced our Calendars, as Saints, must take their Place among Bedlamites; for they were all of them to a Tittle, the very Man I have supposed at Winchester. They considered every Penny that was brought in by the Gospel, as a Provision for the Poor, and themselves as only entitled to their common Share out of it. They durst no more raise any of their Relations into a Splendour of Life, or give them any Figure from the Revenues of the Church, than commit Sacrilege. They gloried as much in their own strict Poverty and Want of worldly Figure, as in their having totally renounced Idols.

But we have much more than primitive Example for our Bishop of Winchester; the Doctrine and Laws of the Church have unanimously from Age to Age, to the very Council of Trent, required every Bishop to be of the same Spirit of which we have supposed him. The Church, both by the Doctrine of Fathers, and the Canons of Councils constantly maintains; First, that the Clergy are not Proprietors, but barely Stewards of the Benefices they enjoy; having them for no other End, but for their own necessary, frugal Subsistence, and the Relief of the Poor. Secondly, that a Clergyman using his Benefice for his own Indulgence, or the enriching his own Family, is guilty of Sacrilege, and is a Robber and Murderer of the Poor. Thirdly, that if a Clergyman has a reasonable Subsistence of his own, and is not in the State of the Poor, that then, let his Benefice be what it will, he has no Right to use any Part of it for himself, nor for his Kindred, unless they be fit to be considered amongst those Poor that are to be relieved by the Church. Fourthly, that every Bishop and Clergyman is to live in an humble, lowly, frugal, outward State of Life, seeking for no Honour or Dignity in the World, but that which arises from the Distinction and Lustre of his Virtues. Fifthly, that a Beneficed Clergyman using the Goods of the Church for his own Indulgence, or raising Fortunes for his Children, or their expensive Education, is sacrilegious, and a Robber of the Poor. Sixthly, that every Clergyman is to die out of the Church as poor as he entered into it. Seventhly, that a Clergyman dying, cannot leave or bequeath any Thing to his Children or Friends, but barely that which he had independently of the Church.*

May it not therefore well be wondered what could provoke Dr. Trapp to censure our Bishop as a Madman, whose whole Form of Life, and Use of his Bishopric, is not only after the Model of the first and greatest Saints that ever were Bishops, but also such as the whole Church from the Beginning, both in Council and out of Council, from Age to Age, hath absolutely required of every beneficed Clergyman, who would not be condemned by her, as sacrilegious, and a Robber of the Poor? They who would see the whole of this Matter set in a clear Light, may read an excellent Treatise of the learned Dupin, wrote near the End of his Life, where this Truth is by him asserted and incontestably proved, viz., That whatever Changes have been made in the Nature and Tenure of the Goods and Revenues of the Church, or however they have been variously divided amongst Ecclesiastics, yet this has remained always unchangeable and undeniable, That a Clergyman was no Proprietor of his Benefice; that he could only take so much of it to his own Use, as was necessary to his Subsistence, and then the Remainder, be it what it would, belonged to the Poor. This, says he, is strictly maintained by the Canons of Councils, both before and after the Division of ecclesiastical Revenues. 'C'est ce que portent précisément les Canons, & avant, & après la Partition des Biens ecclésiastiques.'*

But now if this be the Case, if this be an incontestable Doctrine, supported by every Authority that can be brought for any one Doctrine of the Gospel, have we not here an utter Condemnation of Pluralities? Is it not an Affront to the Gospel, to the plainest Maxims of Right and Wrong, the whole Authority of the Church, to offer one single Word in Defence of them? Logical, scholastic Distinctions and Definitions of the Nature of Parishes and Residence, can signify no more here, where the whole Nature of the Thing is to be avoided, than the same Art of Words, when used by Jesuitical Casuists, can justify the Violation of moral Duties. And if Dr. Trapp was only to look at this one Doctrine, he would have no reason to think it so sad a Thing, to see Pluralists coupled with Cardinals. 'See,' says the learned Dupin, 'Rules which appear hard to many of the beneficed Clergy, but yet,' says he, 'they are true, conformable to natural Equity, the Laws, Custom, and Tradition of the Church, and the Practice of the most holy Bishops; and woe be to those that observe them not.' Malheur a Ceux qui ne les suivent pas.† And therefore he concludes thus, 'There may be many amongst the beneficed Clergy who err in this Matter, through an Ignorance of that which is required of them; therefore what I have said ought to be taken in good Part, as proceeding from Charity, and a sincere Love of Truth.'

I come now to that which the Doctor says of Enthusiasm and Enthusiasts. Speaking to the younger Clergy of the Means of attaining Divine Knowledge, I had these Words, 'The Book of all Books is your own Heart, in which are written the deepest Lessons of Divine Instruction; learn therefore to be deeply attentive to the Presence of God in your Hearts, who is always speaking, always instructing, always illuminating that Heart that is attentive to him.' Now can any Thing be conceived more scriptural, or more inoffensive than all this? Is there anything to suppress or hurt the Piety and Devotion of that Heart, which would place its all in God? Which desires to be moved and guided in all Things by his holy Spirit. How can we worship God in Spirit and in Truth, how can we pray unto him, turn to him, how can we raise any Act of Faith or Hope in him, Resignation unto him, or Dependence upon him, but by thus thinking of him? Take any Thing from God that I have here ascribed to him, suppose him not to be thus inwardly speaking, instructing, illuminating, and then tell me why my Heart should seek him, or how it can find him? A Page or two after this, to show the deep and intimate Union the Soul has with its Creator, I said, 'God is an all-speaking, all-working, all-illuminating Essence, possessing the Depth, and bringing forth 'the Life of every Creature according to its Nature. Our Life is 'out of this Divine Essence, and is itself a creaturely Similitude 'of it; and when we turn from all Impediments, this Divine 'Essence becomes as certainly the true Light of our Minds here, 'as it will be hereafter.' Now is there any Thing here to shock, or fright, or delude the Piety of any Christian? Is it a monstrous Thing to be told, that the Light of Heaven reaches us in this World, that we have this Communion with God; that when we turn rightly to him, he dwells in us and we in him; that we receive his Operation and Light upon us in this Life, as we shall do in the next, only with this Difference, that now what is done in Faith will then be in open Vision? How can we believe anything that is said of the Light and holy Spirit of God in the Scripture, without believing this? If this be not true, how can we believe that Jesus Christ is the Light which lighteth every Man that cometh into the World? Or is there any Thing here more said of God, than when the Apostle saith, that 'in him we live, move, and have our Being'? If the Word of God was not an ever-speaking Word, how could Nature and Creature speak forth any Thing? If God was ever silent could any Thing else speak? Again, if Nature is constantly at Work; if there could be no Nature but because there is a continual stirring and working which cannot cease; is not this a sufficient Proof that there is an all-working Deity? And if we are told, that, in the Kingdom of Heaven, there shall be no Sun, nor Moon, but the Lamb shall be the Light thereof, is not this telling us, that God himself is the uncreated Light, always in the same State of Infinity, and therefore an all-illuminating Being? And if there is always Light in Nature, a Light that cannot be extinguished, must it not come from the all-illuminating Being? Yet Dr. Trapp says, all this 'is Enthusiasm, if ever there was any 'in the World'; that they are the 'Words of Falsehood and 'Frenzy.'* If the Doctor had been clear in this Matter, it had been very easy for him to have shown his Reader wherein this Enthusiasm and Frenzy lay; and it was also very necessary for him to have here said something very plain and clear concerning the Nature and Ground of Enthusiasm: For if his Reader, without any clear and distinct Notion of Enthusiasm, is taught to cry out against a Doctrine, which only teaches, that God is always speaking, instructing, and illuminating that Heart that is in great Purity turned to him ; if he is taught boldly and blindly to condemn this as Enthusiasm and Frenzy, how shall such a one be able to defend himself, when he is told by others, that two Thirds of the New Testament is Enthusiasm? As where it is said, 'I am the Light and Life of the World : The Kingdom of Heaven is within you : Except ye eat my Flesh and drink my Blood, ye have no Life in you : If any Man love me, my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our Abode with him : No Man can come unto me, except the Father draweth him : The natural Man cannot receive and know the Things of the Spirit of God : He breathed on them, and said, Receive ye the Holy Ghost : The Spirit of Truth, he dwelleth in you, and shall be with you : No Man can say, Abba Father, or that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost : As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the Sons of God.' In our Liturgy we pray that God would prevent us in all our Doings, and further us with his continual Help : That we may obey the godly Motions of the Spirit in Righteousness and true Holiness : That by his holy Inspiration we may think those Things that be good, and by his merciful Guiding may perform the same : That his holy Spirit may in all Things direct and rule our Hearts, &c. Now what must the unlearned Reader, or the learned Doctor himself do with these and the like Places of Scripture, and Prayers of the Church, if it be Enthusiasm, Falsehood, and Frenzy to say, that God is intimately present in the Depth of our Souls, always speaking, instructing, enlightening that Heart, which is truly turned to him? Or how can these Scriptures and Prayers have the least Truth or Reasonableness in them, but upon this Supposition, that God is an all-speaking, all-knowing, all-illuminating Being, out of whom we are born, and in whom we live, and move, and have our Being. But I shall here speak a Word or two of the true Ground, and Nature of Enthusiasm.

In Will, Imagination, and Desire, consists the Life, or fiery Driving of every intelligent Creature. And as every intelligent Creature is its own Self-mover, so every intelligent Creature has Power of kindling and inflaming its Will, Imagination and Desire as it pleases, with Shadows, Fictions, or Realities ; with Things carnal or spiritual, temporal or eternal. And this kindling of the Will, Imagination, and Desire, when raised into a ruling Degree of Life, is properly that which is to be understood by Enthusiasm : And therefore Enthusiasm is, and must be of as many Kinds as those Objects are, which can kindle and inflame the Wills, Imaginations, and Desires of Men. And to appropriate Enthusiasm to Religion, is the same Ignorance of Nature, as to appropriate Love to Religion; for Enthusiasm, a kindled, inflamed Spirit of Life, is as common, as universal, as essential to human Nature, as Love is; it goes into every Kind of Life as Love does, and has only such a Variety of Degrees in Mankind as Love hath. And here we may see the Reason, why no People are so angry at Religious Enthusiasts, as those that are the deepest in some Enthusiasm of another Kind.

He whose Fire is kindled from the Divinity of Tully's Rhetoric, who travels over high Mountains to salute the dear Ground that Marcus Tullius Cicero walked upon; whose noble Soul would be ready to break out of his Body, if he could see a Desk, a Rostrum from whence Cicero had poured forth his Thunder of Words, may well be unable to bear the Dulness of those, who go on Pilgrimages only to visit the Sepulchre, whence the Redeemer of the World rose from the dead, or who grow devout at the Sight of a Crucifix, because the Son of God hung as a Sacrifice thereon.

He whose heated Brain is all over painted with the ancient Hieroglyphics; who knows how and why they were this and that, better than he can find out the Customs and Usages of his own Parish; who can clear up every Thing that is doubtful in Antiquity, and yet be forced to live in Doubt about that which passes in his own Neighbourhood; who has found out the Sentiments of the first Philosophers with such Certainty, as he cannot find out the real Opinion of any of his Contemporaries; he that has gone thus high into the Clouds, and dug thus deep into the Dark for these glorious Discoveries, may well despise those Christians, as brain-sick Visionaries, who are sometimes finding a moral and spiritual Sense in the bare Letter and History of Scripture-Facts.

It matters not what our Wills and Imaginations are employed about; wherever they fall and love to dwell, there they kindle a Fire, and that becomes the Flame of Life, to which every Thing else appears as dead, and insipid, and unworthy of Regard. Hence it is that even the poor Species of Fops and Beaux have a right to be placed among Enthusiasts, though capable of no other Flame than that, which is kindled by Tailors and Peruke-Makers. All refined Speculatists, as such, are great Enthusiasts; for being devoted to the Exercise of their Imaginations, they are so heated into a Love of their own Ideas, that they seek no other summum bonum. The Grammarian, the Critic, the Poet, the Connoisseur, the Antiquary, the Philosopher, the Politician, are all violent Enthusiasts, though their Heat is only a Flame from Straw, and therefore they all agree in appropriating Enthusiasm to Religion. All ambitious, proud, self-conceited Persons, especially if they are Scholars, are violent Enthusiasts, and their Enthusiasm is an inflamed Self-Love, Self-Esteem, and Self-Seeking. This Fire is so kindled in them, that every Thing is nauseous and disgusting to them, that does not offer Incense to that Idol, which their Imagination has set up in themselves. All Atheists are dark Enthusiasts; their Fire is kindled by a Will and Imagination turned from God into a gloomy Depth of Nothingness, and therefore their Enthusiasm is a dull burning Fire, that goes in and out, through Hopes and Fears of they know not what that is to come. All professed Infidels are remarkable Enthusiasts, they have kindled a bold Fire from a few faint Ideas, and therefore they are all Zeal, and Courage, and Industry to be constantly blowing it up. A Tyndal and a Collins are as inflamed with the Notions of Infidelity, as a St. Bennet and St. Francis with the Doctrines of the Gospel.

Enthusiasts therefore we all are, as certainly as we are Men; and consequently, Enthusiasm is not a Thing blamable in itself, but is the common Condition of human Life in all its States; and every Man that lives either well or ill, is that which he is, from that prevailing Fire of Life, or driving of our Wills and Desires, which is properly called Enthusiasm. You need not then go to a Cloister, the Cell of a Monk, or to a Field Preacher, to see Enthusiasts, they are everywhere, at Balls and Masquerades, at Court and the Exchange: They sit in all Coffee-houses, and cant in all Assemblies. The Beau and the Coquette have no Magic, but where they meet Enthusiasts. The Mercer, the Tailor, the Bookseller have all their Wealth from them; the Works of a Bayle, a Shaftesbury, and Cicero, would lose four Fifths of their astonishing Beauties, had they not keen Enthusiasts for their Readers.

That which concerns us therefore, is only to see with what Materials our prevailing Fire of Life is kindled, and in what Species of Enthusiasts it truly places us. For either the Flesh or the Spirit; either the Wisdom from above, or the Wisdom of this World, will have its Fire in us; and we must have a Life that governs us either according to the Sensuality of the Beast, the Subtlety of the Serpent, or the Holiness of the Angel. Enthusiasm is not blamable in Religion, when it is true Religion that kindles it. We are created with Wills and Desires for no other End, but to love, adore, desire, serve, and co-operate with God; and therefore the more we are inflamed in this Motion of our Wills and Desires, the more we have of a God-like, Divine Nature, and Perfection in us. Religious Enthusiasm is not blamable, when it is a strong Persuasion, a firm Belief of a continual Operation, Impression, and Influence from above, when it is a total Resignation to, and Dependence upon the immediate Inspiration, and Guidance of the holy Spirit in the whole Course of our Lives; this is as sober, and rational a Belief, as to believe that we always live, and move, and have our Being in God. Both Nature and Scripture demonstrate this to be the true Spirit of a Religious Man. Nature tells everyone, that we can only be heavenly by a Spirit derived from Heaven, as plainly as it tells us, that we can only be earthly, by having the Spirit of this World breathing in us. The Gospel teaches no Truth so constantly, so universally as this, that every good Thought and good Desire is the Work of the holy Spirit. And therefore both Nature and Scripture demonstrate, that the one only Way to Piety, Virtue and Holiness, is to prepare, expect, and resign ourselves up wholly to the Influence and Guidance of the holy Spirit, in every Thing that we think, or say, or do. The moment anyone departs from this Faith, or loses this Direction of his Will and Desire, so far, and so long he goes out of the one only Element of all Holiness of Life. There is nothing that so sanctifies the Heart of Man, that keeps us in such habitual Love, Prayer, and Delight in God; nothing that so kills all the Roots of Evil in our Nature, that so renews and perfects all our Virtues, that fills us with so much Love, Goodness, and good Wishes to every Creature, as this Faith, That God is always present in us with his Light and Holy Spirit. When the Heart has once learnt thus to find God, and knows how to live everywhere, and in all Things in this immediate Intercourse with him, seeing him, loving him, and adoring him in every Thing, trusting in him, depending upon him for his continual Light and holy Spirit; when it knows that this Faith is infallible; that by thus believing, it thus possesses all that it believes of God; then it begins to have the Nature of God in it, and can do nothing but flow forth in Love, Benevolence, and good Will towards every Creature; it can have no Wish towards any Man, but that he might thus know, and love, and find God in himself, as the true Beginning of Heaven, and the heavenly Life in the Soul.

On the other hand, no Error so hurtful to the Soul, so destructive of all the Ends of the Gospel, as to be led from this Faith and entire Dependence upon the holy Spirit of God, or to place our Recovery in any Thing else, but in the Operation of the Light and holy Spirit of God upon the Soul. It is withdrawing Men not only from the earliest, the most natural, the most fruitful, but the only possible Source of all Light and Life. For every Man, as such, has an open Gate to God in his Soul, he is always in that Temple, where he can worship God in Spirit and Truth: Every Christian, as such, has the first Fruits of the Spirit, a Seed of Life, which is his Call and Qualification to be always in a State of inward Prayer, Faith, and holy Intercourse with God. All the Ordinances of the Gospel, the daily sacramental Service of the Church, is to keep up, and exercise, and strengthen this Faith; to raise us to such an habitual Faith and Dependence upon the Light and holy Spirit of God, that by thus seeking and finding God in the Institutions of the Church, we may be habituated to seek him and find him; to live in his Light, and walk by his Spirit in all the Actions of our ordinary Life. This is the Enthusiasm in which every good Christian ought to endeavour to live and die.

I come now to an Enthusiast, which the Doctor has accidentally met with, from whom, it seems, 'I have borrowed some 'of my strange Notions, and would put them off as my own,' p. 119. The Doctor has this Intelligence from his trusty Assistant, who says, 'what else can be expected from those, Who 'read Jacob Behmen, Dr. Pordage, and Mrs. Lead, with almost 'the same Veneration and implicit Faith, that other People read 'the Scripture,' ibid. Two of these Writers I know very little of, yet as much as I desire to know; but J. Behmen, called the Teutonic Theosopher, I have read much, and much esteem: But the Design of putting off some of his strange Notions, as my own, is as well grounded, as if the Doctor had charged me with a Design of picking his Pocket.

The illustrious Sir Isaac Newton, when he wrote his Principia, and published to the World his great Doctrine of Attraction, and those Laws of Nature by which the Planets began, and continue to move in their Orbits, could have told the World, that the true and infallible Ground of what he there advanced, was to be found in the Teutonic Theosopher, in his three first Properties of Eternal Nature; he could have told them, that he had been a diligent Reader of that wonderful Author, that he had made large Extracts out of him, and could have referred to him for the Ground of what he had observed of the Number Seven. Now why did not this great Man do thus? Must we suppose that he was loth to have it thought, that he had been helped by any Thing that he had read? No: It is an unworthy Thought. But Sir Isaac well knew, that Prejudice and Partiality had such Power over many People's Judgments, that Doctrines, though ever so deeply founded in, and proved by all the Appearances of Nature, would be suspected by some as dangerous, and condemned by others, even as false and Wicked, had he made any References to an Author that was only called an Enthusiast.

Dr. Trapp may take himself for an eminent Example and Proof of this. He has here shown with what Speed Matters may be determined by Prejudice. For here a Stranger, a Layman, not so much as known to the Doctor by Name, who, for aught he can tell, may be some small Retailer of Infidelity, or Snuff-Candle in the Playhouse, who has gained upon the Doctor by no other Marks of Ability and Judgment, but his Compliments to him, and his Scurrility upon me; from the Authority of this Informer, the Doctor immediately puts J. B. into his List of Enthusiasts. Is not this a Proof of what Sir Isaac Newton must have met with from some great Scholars, and to what a speedy Confutation he must have exposed himself, and the plainest Appearances of Nature, had he ever referred to the Teutonic Theosopher? Now am I here to suppose, that this Censure of the Doctor's relating to J. B. is a Rashness that has here first seized upon him by Chance, that he never before in his Life allowed himself to treat any Man, or any Book in this manner; that if he took the Judgment of another, it was of somebody that he knew; if he condemned an Author, he always stayed till he had read something of him, at least an Index, or a Title Page or two of his Works? Or am I to suppose, that this has been the Doctor's Method upwards of thirty-seven Years; calling one Man an Enthusiast, another a Fanatic, this a monstrous, that the most pernicious Book of the Age, as rashly, as hastily, regarding no more of Right or Wrong in that which he affirms of these Matters, than he has here done with regard to J. B.? But I hope the Doctor is singular in this Spirit; for if it could be supposed, that it was common amongst learned Men, to get their Knowledge of ancient and modern, foreign and domestic Enthusiasts, as hastily and slightly as the Doctor here doth; must it not be very dangerous for the Unlearned to take any Opinions of this kind from them? Must it not be said, that one Grain of Equity, good Sense, and real Knowledge, is more to be desired, than an hundred Weight of such Learning?

When I considered the fallen Soul, as a Fire-Spirit, deprived of its proper Light, and therefore become of a Diabolical Nature, I could have directed to J. B. for the deep and infallible Ground of it; but what need was there for that, when I could make the plainest Principles of Nature, the plainest Doctrines of Scripture, everything that was said of the Fall, of Heaven, of Hell, and the like, to be undeniable Proofs of it? What I said in the Second Proposition of the Discourse upon Regeneration, concerning the Holy Trinity of God in Man, stands not in that Form of Expression anywhere that I know of; but for the true Ground and Certainty of it, I could have referred to the Teutonic Theosopher, to many ancient and modern Writers of the greatest Name, and to a venerable Record of Antiquity, ascribed even to St. Peter himself; where he asserts, even upon the same Ground as I have done, that because we were created in the Image and Likeness of God, therefore the triune Life arises in us, as it does in God, and we have in us, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.*

But what Occasion was there for these References, when I had so much better Proof, when I could show, that all which the Scriptures say of the whole Nature and Manner of our Redemption, of the whole Nature and Form of Baptism, all that they say of the Necessity of the Word, and Holy Spirit of God having again a Birth in us, are absolute, decisive Proofs of it?† I knew also very well, that the most essential, fundamental, and joyful Doctrines of the Gospel would be questioned, or received with Difficulty, had I referred to a poor Shoemaker for any Proof of them: And it may well be believed, that the Doctor would have been amongst the first and loudest of those, who would have cried out at my Folly and Presumption in directing to an Author, whom all the World knew to be an illiterate Enthusiast; and yet, if all the World knows it as the Doctor knows it, all the World may be said to know nothing about it.

Dr. Trapp has a Fling at my Want of Taste for his Virgil's, Horace's, and Terence's: I own, when I was about Eighteen, I was as fond of these Books as the Doctor can well be now, and should then have been glad to have translated the Sublime Milton, if I had found myself able; but this Ardour soon went off, and I think it as good a Proof of the Sublime, to desire the Death of all that is Diabolical and Serpentine in my own Nature, as to be charmed with those Speeches which the Devils make in Milton. Had the Doctor been more conversant in the Writings of a Set of Men called Mystical Divines, than he appears to have been, he had been better able to have charged me with humble Plagiary than he is at present, and might have done more Service to what he calls the Noble Science of Theology, than by all that Light which he has got from his Poets, which he acknowledges to have somewhat of Wantonness in them, p. 38. Of these Mystical Divines, I thank God, I have been a diligent Reader, through all Ages of the Church, from the Apostolical Dionisius the Arcopagite, down to the great Fenelon Archbishop of Cambray, the illuminated Guion, and M. Bertot. Had the Doctor read St. Cassian, a Recorder of the Lives, Spirit and Doctrine of the Holy Fathers of the Desarts, as often as he had read the Story of Æneas and Dido, he had been less astonished at many Things in my Writings: But I apprehend the Doctor to be as great a Stranger to the Writers of this kind, with which every Age of the Church has been blessed, and to know no more of the Divine Rusbrochius, Thaulerus, Suso, Harphius, Johannes de Cruce, &c., than he does of J. B. For had he known any Thing of them, he had known that I am as chargeable with the Sentiments of all of them, as with those of J. Behmen. For though I never wrote upon any Subject till I could call it my own, till I was so fully possessed of the Truth of it, that I could sufficiently prove it in my own Way, without borrowed Arguments; yet, Doctrines of Religion I have none, but what the Scriptures and the first-rate Saints of the Church are my Vouchers for.

Writers, like those I have mentioned, there have been in all Ages of the Church, but as they served not the Ends of Popular Learning, as they helped no People to Figure and Preferment in the World, and were useless to scholastic, controversial Writers, so they dropped out of public Use, and were only known, or rather unknown, under the Name of Mystical Writers, till at last some People have hardly heard of that very Name. Though if a Man was to be told what is meant by a Mystical Divine, he must be told of something as heavenly, as great, as desirable, as if he was told, what is meant by a real, regenerate, living Member of the Mystical Body of Christ. For they were thus called, for no other Reason, than as Moses and the Prophets, and the Saints of the Old Testament may be called the Spiritual Israel, or the true Mystical Jews. These Writers began their Office of Teaching, as John the Baptist did, after they had passed through every kind of Mortification and Self-denial, every kind of Trial and Purification, both inward and outward. They were deeply learned in all the Mysteries of the Kingdom of God, not through the Use of Lexicons, or meditating upon Critics, but because they had passed from Death unto Life. They highly reverence and excellently direct the true Use of everything that is outward in Religion, but like the Psalmist's King's Daughter, they are all glorious within: They are truly Sons of Thunder, and Sons of Consolation; they break open the whited Sepulchres; they awaken the Heart, and show it its Filth and Rottenness of Death, but they leave it not, till the Kingdom of Heaven is raised up within it. If a Man have no Desire but to be of the Spirit of the Gospel, to obtain all that Renovation of Life and Spirit, which alone can make him to be in Christ a new Creature, it is a great Unhappiness to him to be unacquainted with these Writers, or to pass a Day without reading something of what they have written. For though the Scriptures are an inexhaustible Source of Spiritual Instruction, leading the Heart to the deepest Knowledge of all the Mysteries of the inward, new Life in God, with the greatest Plainness and Openness of Expression, yet a worldly Spirit, the Schools, Criticism, and Controversy have so dried, and deadened every Thing into an outward Letter and figurative Expression, that much of their Use is lost, till these Holy Writers, who interpret them by the same Spirit which wrote them, guide us to the true Use and Understanding of them; for in these Writers, the Spirit of God speaks a second Time, and every Thing that can awaken, convert, instruct and inflame the Heart with the Love of God, and all Holiness and Purity of Life, is to be found in the most irresistible Degree of Conviction. You will perhaps say, Do I then call all the World to these Spiritual Books? No, by no means. But I call all those, whom our Saviour called to himself in these Words: 'Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will refresh you.'

But to return to the Doctor's Enthusiast.

Jacob Behmen, in his natural Capacity and outward Condition of Life, was as mean and illiterate as anyone that our Lord called to be an Apostle, but as a chosen Servant of God, he may be placed amongst those who had received the highest Measures of Light, Wisdom and Knowledge from Above. He was no more a human Writer, spoke no more from Opinion, Conjecture, or Reason, in what he published to the World, than St. John did, when he put his Revelation into Writing. He has no Right to be placed amongst the inspired Penmen of the New Testament, he was no Messenger from God of any Thing new in Religion, but the Mystery of all that was old and true both in Religion and Nature was opened in him. This is the Particularity of his Character, by which he stands fully distinguished from all the Prophets, Apostles, and extraordinary Messengers of God. They were sent with occasional Messages, or to make such Alterations in the Economy of Religion as pleased God; but this Man came on no particular Errand, he had nothing to alter, or add, either in the Form, or Doctrine of Religion; he had no new Truths of Religion to propose to the World, but all that lay in Religion and Nature, as a Mystery unsearchable, was in its deepest Ground opened in this Instrument of God. And all his Works are nothing else but a deep Manifestation of the Grounds and Reasons of that which is done, that which is doing, and is to be done, both in the Kingdom of Nature, and the Kingdom of Grace, from the Beginning to the End of Time. His Works therefore, though immediately from God, have not at all the Nature of the Holy Scriptures, they are not offered to the World, as necessary to be received, or as a Rule of Faith and Manners? and therefore no one has any Right to complain, either of the Depths of his Matter, or the Peculiarity of his Style: They are just as they should be, for those that are fit for them; and he that likes them not, or finds himself unqualified for them, has no Obligation to read them.

The whole System of Christianity has generally been looked upon as a Mystery of Salvation, solely founded in the Divine Pleasure; and to be such a Scheme of Redemption, as is wholly to be resolved into the Contrivance of the Will and Wisdom of God; and therefore Men can think as differently of it, can fall into as many Opinions about it, as they can of the Will and Wisdom of God. Hence has arisen all the speculative Opposition to the Gospel: It is because Reason, human Speculation, and Conjecture, is always imagining it can form a Religion more worthy of the Wisdom and Designs of the Supreme Being than the Christian is; and would be thought to oppose the Gospel only for the Honour of God, and the Divine Attributes. This is the great, prevailing Idolatry of the present Heathen World, or that Part of Mankind who are Infidels, or Deists. Hence also is risen another Species of Idolatry, even amongst Christians of all Denominations; who, though receiving and professing the Religion of the Gospel, yet worship God not in Spirit and in Truth, but either in the Deadness of an outward Form, or in a Pharisaical, carnal Trust and Confidence in their own Opinions and Doctrines. This Body of People, whether they be Clergy or Laity, are but nominal Christians; because they have little more than the Name of every Mystery of the Gospel: Historical Christians, because satisfied with the History of Gospel-Salvation: Literal Christians, because looking only to, and contending only for, the Letter of the Institutions and Mysteries of Jesus Christ. For the Letter, for the federal Rite, and the figurative Expression of Regeneration, they are all Zeal and Industry; but the Reality of it, the true Life of the New Birth, they oppose and reject as heartily as the Deist does the outward Form and Letter. Now this twofold Idolatry of the present Heathen and Christian World has its full Discovery and Confutation in the Mystery opened in J. B. which, when understood, leaves no Room for any Man either to disbelieve the Gospel, or to content himself with the Letter of it. For, in the Revelation made to this Man, the first Beginning of all Things is opened, the whole State, the Rise, the Workings, and the Progress of all Nature is revealed, and every Doctrine, Mystery, and Precept of the Gospel is found, not to have sprung from any arbitrary Appointment, but to have its eternal, unalterable Ground and Reason in Nature; and God appears to save us by the Methods of the Gospel, because there was no other possible Way to save us in all the Possibility of Nature. And therefore the idolatrous Confidence of the Deist in his own Reason, and of the nominal Christian in the outward Letter of their Religion, have equally their full Confutation.

To those who confine Idolatry to the Worship of such Idols as the old Heathens and Jews worshipped, it may seem a Paradox, to talk of the Idolatry of the present World, either amongst Deists or Christians. But if we consider Things more than Words, we shall find, that Idolatry is nowhere, but where the Heart has set up Something in the Place of God; and therefore is everywhere, and in every Thing, where the Heart places that Repose, Trust, and Delight, which should be placed in God alone. For God is only owned, and confessed to be our God, by these Acknowledgments and Dispositions of our Hearts towards Him. It is an infallible Truth, That all Sin has its Beginning and Continuance in and from Idolatry: This alone debauched the former and the later Ages of the World, and is the one Source of all the Corruption of Manners, from the Beginning to the End of Time. You don't make a Golden Calf, as the Jews did, to worship it; but if Mammon is your God, if your Life is devoted to Pride, Ambition, and Sensuality, your Idolatry is not so sensible, but it is as real as theirs, who danced about a Golden Calf. You fancy that Venus is not your Goddess, because you are not worshipping a figured Image of her, in a Temple called by her Name; but if you look at the Odes, the Hymns, the Songs, which you love, which Lust has inspired, then you may know that Venus is the Goddess of your Heart. It is thus with every Object, and in every Course of Life, that which possesses and governs our Heart, has usurped the Right and Place of God in it, and has that Worship, Trust, and Devotion of the Heart, which is due to God alone: And therefore the Idolatry of the present World, is only of a different Kind from that of the ancient, it is less seen, and less confessed, but not less real, than when carved Images, and figured Idols were adored.

Deism, or the Religion of human Reason, set up in Opposition to the Gospel, is direct Idolatry, and has every Grossness and Vanity of Image Worship. For to put our Trust in our own Reason, to be content with its Light, to resign ourselves up to it, and depend upon it as our Guide, is a Mistake that has every Grossness and Vanity of the Adoration of an Idol. Now this Kind of Idolatry has overrun all the last Ages of the World; it is the last Effort of human Vanity; it is the utmost that Idolatry can do, both to hide and propagate itself, and is the Devil under the Appearance of an Angel of Light. The Gospel has no Enemy but this Idolatry, and it is as visible in the Church, as out of it: Hence it is, that the State of the Church is so sadly described in the Revelation of St. John, for so many Ages, as a spiritual Whoredom. When the old Jews left off the Idols of the Heathens, they fell into an Idolatry of another kind, which was this, they idolized the Rites and Ceremonies of their own true Religion; they placed that Confidence in the outward Letter, and expected that Good from their outward Rites, which they should have placed, sought, expected from God alone. This is the Idolatry of the rational Deist, and the nominal Christian. But when the Mystery of all Nature and Grace, which by the Mercy of God has opened itself in the Writings of J. B. shall find its Children, every Idolatry, both within and without the Church, will be ashamed to show itself.

But it may be asked by some, what warrant I have for all that I have said of J. B. or how I can prove to the World, that his Writings are the Work of the holy Spirit? It is answered, I neither intend, nor desire to prove this to the World. And if anyone will dispute or deny every Thing that I have said of him, he will meet with no Opposition from me. I have given notice of a Pearl, if anyone takes it to be otherwise, or has neither Skill or Value for Pearls, he is at Liberty to trample it under his Feet. Nothing passes with the World for Proof of a divinely inspired Writer, but Miracles; if People can see no other Proof but this, it is not in my Power to give them better Eyes. I suppose the Gospel, and all the Writings of the New Testament, have internal Characters of their Divine Original, for those that can see them; but if they had been left to those internal Characters, I am apt to think, that the Sons of Cicero, the Disciples of a Bayle, or those who stand the highest in such like Literature, would, of all Men, be the most indisposed and unwilling to see and own them.

Had we no Miracles for Proof of the Inspiration of the Scriptures, they would be still what they are, the true Word, and Wisdom of God, and there would be the same Benefit in believing and receiving them as such. But to whom could they be proved to come from the Spirit of God? Not to a Ciceronian, because it is the Character, the Genius, the Greatness of Cicero, to dissemble and personate ; and as an Orator, a Statesman, and a Philosopher, to affirm or deny as he pleases, without any Regard to his own Sentiments. And therefore to the Sons of Cicero nothing can be proved, because they depart from his Character, if they discover their own Sentiments, and don't either, as Philosophers, Orators, or Statesmen, affirm and deny as they please, or as suits the Character which they choose to act under.

Again ; It cannot be proved to a Disciple of Bayle ; because, though he was a Man, 'whose Strength and Clearness of Reasoning can be equalled only by the Gaiety, Easiness, and Delicacy of his Wit ; who, pervading human Nature with a Glance, struck into the Province of Paradox, —— and had 'not enough of real Greatness, to overcome the last Foible of 'superior Geniuses, the Temptation of Honour, which the 'Academic Exercise of Wit is supposed to bring to its Professors.*

And therefore to a true Disciple of Bayle, nothing that is just, sober, or true, can be sufficiently proved ; because it is his Genius, his Honour, his Ambition, to maintain the Paradox.

The next Question is, How this can be proved, viz., That the Scriptures have internal Characters of their Divinity. Now this can only be, by an honest Simplicity, and Love of Truth, by Humility and Prayer, and Conversion of the Heart to God in the reading of them. These are the only Dispositions that could possibly bring any Man into a Sense and Belief of their Divine Original : and therefore, all those critical Scholars, and rationally wise Men, whose Enquiries are animated with a Love of Glory and personal Distinction, and who looked into those Writings for such Ends, and with such Views as they read other Books, would be of all Men the most unable to see, and unwilling to own the very best Truths of the Holy Scriptures ; because it is the very Nature and End of the Scriptures, to discover the Vanity and Falseness of that Light and Knowledge, which is got from human Reasoning, and to subdue that Self-sufficiency, which is so inseparable from certain Kinds and Degrees of human Learning.

THE SPIRIT OF PRAYER.

Chapter I.

Treating of some Matters preparatory to the Spirit of Prayer.

THE greatest Part of Mankind, nay of Christians, may be said to be asleep; and that particular Way of Life, which takes up each Man's Mind, Thoughts, and Actions, may be very well called his particular Dream. This Degree of Vanity is equally visible in every Form and Order of Life. The Learned and the Ignorant, the Rich and the Poor, are all in the same State of Slumber, only passing away a short Life in a different kind of Dream. But why so? It is because Man has an Eternity within him, is born into this World, not for the Sake of living here, not for any Thing this World can give him, but only to have Time and Place, to become either an eternal Partaker of a Divine Life with God, or to have an hellish Eternity among fallen Angels: And therefore, every Man who has not his Eye, his Heart, and his Hands, continually governed by this twofold Eternity, may be justly said to be fast asleep, to have no awakened Sensibility of Himself. And a Life devoted to the Interests and Enjoyments of this World, spent and wasted in the Slavery of earthly Desires, may be truly called a Dream, as having all the Shortness, Vanity, and Delusion of a Dream; only with this great Difference, that when a Dream is over, nothing is lost but Fictions and Fancies; but when the Dream of Life is ended only by Death, all that Eternity is lost for which we were brought into Being. Now there is no Misery in this World, nothing that makes either the Life or Death of Man to be full of Calamity, but this Blindness and Insensibility of his State, into which he so willingly, nay obstinately plunges himself. Every Thing that has the Nature of Evil and Distress in it takes its Rise from hence. Do but suppose a Man to know himself, that he comes into this World on no other Errand, but to rise out of the Vanity of Time into the Riches of Eternity; do but suppose him to govern his inward Thoughts and outward Actions by this View of himself, and then to him every Day has lost all its Evil; Prosperity and Adversity have no Difference, because he receives and uses them both in the same Spirit; Life and Death are equally welcome, because equally Parts of his Way to Eternity. For poor and miserable as this Life is, we have all of us free Access to all that is Great, and Good, and Happy, and carry within ourselves a Key to all the Treasures that Heaven has to bestow upon us.—We starve in the midst of Plenty, groan under Infirmities, with the Remedy in our own Hand; live and die without knowing and feeling any Thing of the One, only Good, whilst we have it in our Power to know and enjoy it in as great a Reality, as we know and feel the Power of this World over us: For Heaven is as near to our Souls, as this World is to our Bodies; and we are created, we are redeemed, to have our Conversation in it. God, the only Good of all intelligent Natures, is not an absent or distant God, but is more present in and to our Souls, than our own Bodies; and we are Strangers to Heaven, and without God in the World, for this only Reason, because we are void of that Spirit of Prayer, which alone can, and never fails to unite us with the One, only Good, and to open Heaven and the Kingdom of God within us. A Root set in the finest Soil, in the best Climate, and blessed with all that Sun, and Air, and Rain can do for it, is not in so sure a Way of its Growth to Perfection, as every Man may be, whose Spirit aspires after all that, which God is ready and infinitely desirous to give him. For the Sun meets not the springing Bud that stretches towards him with half that Certainty, as God, the Source of all Good, communicates himself to the Soul that longs to partake of Him.

We are all of us, by Birth, the Offspring of God, more nearly related to him than we are to one another; for in him we live, and move, and have our Being. The first Man that was brought forth from God had the Breath and Spirit of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, breathed into him, and so he became a living Soul. Thus was our first Father born of God, descended from Him, and stood in Paradise in the Image and Likeness of God. He was the Image and Likeness of God, not with any Regard to his outward Shape or Form, for no Shape has any Likeness to God; but he was in the Image and Likeness of God, because the Holy Trinity had breathed their own Nature and Spirit into him. And as the Deity, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are always in Heaven, and make Heaven to be everywhere, so this Spirit, breathed by them into Man, brought Heaven into Man along with it; and so Man was in Heaven, as well as on Earth, that is, in Paradise, which signifies an heavenly State, or Birth of Life.*

* Spirit of Prayer, Part II., page 61.

Adam had all that Divine Nature, both as to an heavenly Spirit, and heavenly Body, which the Angels have: But as he was brought forth to be a Lord and Ruler of a new World, created out of the Chaos or Ruins of the Kingdom of fallen Angels; so it was necessary that he should also have the Nature of this new created World in himself, both as to its Spirit and Materiality. Hence it was, that he had a Body taken from this new created Earth, not such dead Earth as we now make Bricks of, but the blessed Earth of Paradise, that had the Powers of Heaven in it, out of which the Tree of Life itself could grow. Into the Nostrils of this outward Body, was the Breath or Spirit of this World breathed; and in this Spirit and Body of this World, did the inward celestial Spirit and Body of Adam dwell: It was the Medium or Means through which he was to have Commerce with this World, become visible to its Creatures, and rule over it and them. Thus stood our first Father; an Angel both as to Body and Spirit (as he will be again after the Resurrection) yet dwelling in a Body and Spirit taken from this new created World, which however was as inferior to him, as subject to him, as the Earth and all its Creatures were. It was no more alive in him, no more brought forth its Nature within him, than Satan and the Serpent were alive in him at his first Creation. And herein lay the Ground of Adam's Ignorance of Good and Evil; it was because his outward Body, and the outward World (in which alone was Good and Evil) could not discover their own Nature, or open their own Life within him, but were kept inactive by the Power and Life of the celestial Man within it. And this was Man's first and great Trial; a Trial, not imposed upon him by the mere Will of God, or by Way of Experiment; but a Trial necessarily implied in the Nature of his State: He was created an Angel, both as to Body and Spirit; and this Angel stood in an outward Body, of the Nature of the outward World; and therefore, by the Nature of his State, he had his Trial, or Power of choosing, whether he would live as an Angel, using only his outward Body as a Means of opening the Wonders of the outward World to the Glory of his Creator; or whether he would turn his Desire to the opening of the bestial Life of the outward Worldling himself, for the Sake of knowing the Good and Evil that was in it. The Fact is certain, that he lusted after the Knowledge of this Good and Evil, and made use of the Means to obtain it. No sooner had he got this Knowledge, by the opening the bestial Life and Sensibility within him, but in that Day, nay, in that Instant, he died; that is, his heavenly Spirit with its heavenly Body were both extinguished in him; but his Soul, an immortal Fire that could not die, became a poor Slave in Prison of bestial Flesh and Blood. See here the Nature and Necessity of our Redemption ; it is to redeem the first Angelic Nature that departed from Adam ; it is to make that heavenly Spirit and Body which Adam lost, to be alive again in all the human Nature ; and this is called Regeneration. See also the true Reason why only the Son, or eternal Word of God, could be our Redeemer ; it is because He alone, by whom all Things were at first made, could be able to bring to Life again that celestial Spirit and Body which had departed from Adam. See also why our blessed Redeemer said, 'Except a Man be born again, of Water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.' He must be born again of the Spirit, because Adam's first heavenly Spirit was lost : He must be born again of Water, because that heavenly Body which Adam lost, was formed out of the heavenly Materiality, which is called Water. Thus in the Revelation of St. John, the heavenly Materiality, out of which the Bodies of the Angels and also of Adam were formed, is called a glassy Sea, as being the nearest and truest Representation of it that can be made to our Minds. The Necessity of our regaining our first heavenly Body, is the Necessity of our eating the Body and Blood of Christ. The Necessity of having again our first heavenly Spirit, is declared by the Necessity of our being baptized by the Holy Ghost. Our Fall is nothing else, but the Falling of our Soul from this celestial Body and Spirit into a bestial Body and Spirit of this World. Our rising out of our fallen State, or Redemption, is nothing else but the regaining our first angelic Spirit and Body, which in Scripture is called our inward, or new Man, created again in Christ Jesus. See here, lastly, the true Ground of all the Mortifications of Flesh and Blood, required in the Gospel ; it is because this bestial Life of this outward World should not have been opened in Man ; it is his Separation from God, and Death to the Kingdom of Heaven ; and therefore, all its Workings, Appetites, and Desires, are to be restrained and kept under, that the first heavenly Life, to which Adam died, may have Room to rise up in us.

But to return. That Adam was thus an Angel at his first Creation, dwelling in an outward Body and outward World, incapable of receiving any Impressions from them, and able to rule them at his Pleasure ; that all outward Nature was a State of Life below him, in Subjection to him ; that neither Sun, nor Stars, nor Fire, nor Water, nor Earth, nor Stones, could act upon him, or hurt him, is undeniably plain from hence ; because his first and great Sin, which cost him his angelical Life, and took from him his Crown of Glory, consisted in this, that he lusted to know, and took the Means of knowing, what Good and Evil are in the bestial Life of this World : For this plainly demonstrates, that before his Sin, whilst he stood in the first State of his Creation, that he was an Angel in Nature and Power, that neither his own outward Body, nor any Part of outward Nature, had any Power in him or upon him ; for had his own outward Body, or any Element of outward Nature, had any Power to act upon him, to make any Impressions, or raise any Sensations in him, he could not have been ignorant of Good and Evil in this World. Therefore, seeing that his eating of the forbidden Tree, was that alone which opened this Knowledge in him, it is a Demonstration, that in his first State he was in this World as an Angel, that was put into the Possession of it only to rule as a superior Being over it ; that he was to have no Share of its Life and Nature, no Feeling of Good or Evil from it, but to act in it as a heavenly Artist, that had Power and Skill to open the Wonders of God in every Power of outward Nature. An Angel, we read, used at a certain Time to come down into a Pool at Jerusalem ; the Water stirred by the Angel gave forth its Virtues, but the Angel felt no Impressions of Weight, or Cold from the Water. This is an Image of Adam's first Freedom from, and Power over all outward Nature. He could wherever he went, do as this Angel did, make every Element, and elementary Thing, discover all the Riches of God that were hidden in it, without feeling any Impressions of any kind from it. This was to have been the Work both of Adam and his Offspring, to make all the Creation show forth the Glory of God, to spread Paradise over all the Earth, till the Time came, that all the Good in this World was to be called back to its first State, and all the Evil in every Part left to be possessed by the Devil and his Angels. But since He fell from this first State into an Animal of this World, his Work is changed, and he must now labour with Sweat to till the cursed Earth, both for Himself and the Beasts upon it.

Let us now consider some plain and important Truths, that follow from what has been said above.

First, It is plain that the Sin and fall of Adam did not consist in this, viz., that he had only committed a single Act of Disobedience, and so might have been just as He was before, if God had pleased to overlook this single Act of Disobedience, and not to have brought a Curse upon him and his Posterity for it.— Nothing of this is the Truth of the Matter, either on the Part of God, or on the Part of Man.

Secondly, It is plain also, that the Command of God, not to lust after, and eat of the forbidden Tree, was not an arbitrary

Command of God, given at Pleasure, or as a mere Trial of Man's Obedience ; but was a most kind and loving Information given by the God of Love to his new-born Offspring, concerning the State He was in, with Regard to the outward World : Warning him to withdraw all Desire of entering into a Sensibility of its Good and Evil ; because such Sensibility could not be had, without his immediate dying to that Divine and heavenly Life which he then enjoyed. ' Eat not,' says the God of Love, ' of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, for in the Day thou eatest thereof thou wilt surely die.'

As if it had been said, ' I have brought Thee into this Paradise, with such a Nature as the Angels have in Heaven. By the Order and Dignity of thy Creation, every Thing that lives and moves in this World is made subject to Thee, as to their Ruler. I have made Thee in thy outward Body of this World, to be for a Time a little lower than the Angels, till Thou hast brought forth a numerous Offspring, fit for that Kingdom which They have lost. The World around Thee, and the Life which is newly awakened in it, is much lower than Thou art ; of a Nature quite inferior to thine. It is a gross, corruptible State of Things, that cannot stand long before me ; but must for awhile bear the Marks of those Creatures, which first made Evil to be known in the Creation. The Angels, that first inhabited this Region, where Thou art to bring forth a new Order of Beings, were great and powerful Spirits, highly endowed with the Riches and Powers of their Creator. Whilst they stood (as the Order of Creation requires) in Meekness and Resignation, under their Creator, nothing was impossible to them ; there was no End of their glorious Powers throughout their whole Kingdom. Perpetual Scenes of Light, and Glory, and Beauty, were rising and changing through all the Height and Depth of their glassy Sea, merely at their Will and Pleasure. But finding what Wonders of Light and Glory they could perpetually bring forth ; how all the Powers of Eternity, treasured up in their glassy Sea, unfolded themselves, and broke forth in ravishing Forms of Wonder and Delight, merely in Obedience to their Call ; they began to admire and even adore themselves, and to fancy that there was some Infinity of Power hidden in themselves, which they supposed was kept under, and suppressed, by that Meekness, and Subjection to God, under which they acted. Fired and intoxicated with this proud Imagination, they boldly resolved, with all their eternal Energy and Strength, to take their Kingdom, with all its Glories, to themselves, by eternally abjuring all Meekness and Submission to God. No sooner did their eternal potent Desires fly in this Direction of a Revolt

‘ from God, but in the Swiftness of a Thought Heaven was lost ;
‘ and they found themselves dark Spirits, stripped of all their ‘ Light and Glory. Instead of Rising up above God (as they ‘ hoped) by breaking off from Him, there was no End of their ‘ eternal Sinking into new Depths of Slavery, under their own ‘ self-tormenting Natures. As a Wheel going down a Mountain, ‘ that has no bottom, must continually keep on its Turning, so
‘ are they whirled down by the Impetuosity of their own wrong
‘ turned Wills, in a continual Descent from the Fountain of all ‘ Glory, into the bottomless Depths of their own dark, fiery, ‘ working Powers. In no Hell, but what their own natural ‘ Strength had awakened ; bound in no Chains, but their own ‘ unbending, hardened Spirits ; made such, by their renouncing, ‘ with all their eternal Strength, all Meekness, and Subjection to ‘ God. In that Moment, the beautiful Materiality of their King‘ dom, their glassy Sea in which they dwelt, was by the wrathful ‘ rebellious Workings of these apostate Spirits broken all into ‘ Pieces, and became a black Lake, a horrible Chaos of Fire and ‘ Wrath, Thickness and Darkness, a Height and Depth of the ‘ confused, divided, fighting Properties of Nature. My creating ‘ Fiat stopped the Workings of these rebellious Spirits, by divid‘ ing the Ruins of their wasted Kingdom, into an Earth, a Sun, ‘ Stars, and separated Elements. Had not this Revolt of Angels ‘ brought forth that disordered Chaos, no such Materiality as this ‘ outward World is made of had ever been known. Gross com‘ pacted Earth, Stones, Rocks, wrathful Fire here, dead Water
‘ there, fighting Elements, with all their gross Vegetables and ‘ Animals, are Things not known in Eternity, and will be only ‘ seen in Time, till the great Designs are finished, for which Thou ‘ art brought forth in Paradise. And then, as a Fire awakened
‘ by the Rebel Creature, began all the Disorders of Nature, and ‘ turned that glassy Sea into a Chaos, so a last Fire, kindled at ‘ my Word, shall thoroughly purge the Floor of this World. In ‘ those purifying Flames, the Sun, the Stars, the Air, the Earth
‘ and Water, shall part with all their Dross, Deadness, and Divi‘ sion, and all become again that first, heavenly Materiality, a ‘ glassy Sea of everlasting Light and Glory, in which Thou and ‘ thy Offspring shall sing Hallelujahs to all Eternity. Look not ‘ therefore, thou Child of Paradise, thou Son of Eternity, look ‘ not with a longing Eye after any Thing in this outward World.
‘ There are the Remains of the fallen Angels in it ; Thou hast
‘ nothing to do in it, but as a Ruler over it. It stands before ‘ Thee, as a Mystery big with Wonders ; and Thou, whilst an ‘ Angel in Paradise, hast Power to open and display them all.
‘ It stands not in thy Sphere of Existence ; it is, as it were, but a ‘ Picture, and transitory Figure of Things ; for all that is not ‘ Eternal, is but as an Image in a Glass, that seems to have a ‘ Reality, which it has not. The Life which springs up in this ‘ Figure of a World, in such an infinite Variety of Kinds and ‘ Degrees, is but as a Shadow ; it is a Life of such Days and Years,

 ‘ as in Eternity have no Distinction from a Moment. It is a life
 ‘ of such Animals and Insects, as are without any Divine Sense, ‘ Capacity, or Feeling. Their Natures have nothing in them,
 ‘ but what I commanded this new modelled Chaos, this Order of ‘ Stars and fighting Elements, to bring forth.

‘ Now Adam, observe, I will open to Thee a great Mystery.
 ‘ The heavenly Materiality of the Angels’ Kingdom before their ‘ Revolt was a glassy Sea, a Mirror of beauteous Forms, Figures, ‘ Virtues, Powers, Colours, and Sounds, which were perpetually ‘ springing up, appearing and changing in an infinite Variety, to
 ‘ the Manifestation of the Wonders of the Divine Nature, and ‘ to the Joy of all the Angelical Kingdom. This heavenly ‘ Materiality had its Fruits and Vegetables, much more real
 ‘ than any that grow in Time, but as different from the Grossness
 ‘ of the Fruits of this World, as the heavenly Body of an Angel
 ‘ is different from the Body of the grossest Beast upon Earth.
 ‘ In this angelical Kingdom, the one Element (which is now in ‘ four Parts) was then a fruitful Mother of Wonders, continually ‘ bringing forth new Forms and Figures of Life ; not Animals, ‘ Beasts, or Insects, but beautiful Figures, and ideal Forms of ‘ the endless Divisibility, and Degrees of Life, which only broke ‘ forth as delightful Wonders of the Depth of the Riches of the ‘ Divine Nature, and to tune the Voices of Angels with Songs of ‘ Praise to the infinite Source of Life. And hence, O Adam, is ‘ that endless infinite Variety both of the animal and vegetable ‘ Life in this perishable World. For no Fruits of Vegetables ‘ could have sprung up in the divided Elements, but because ‘ they are the divided Parts of that one heavenly Materiality, or ‘ glassy Sea, in which angelical Fruits had formerly grown forth.
 ‘ No animal Life could have arose from Stars, Air, and Water,
 ‘ but because they are all of them the gross Remains of that one ‘ Element, in which the Figures and Images of Life had once ‘ risen up in such an infinite Variety of Degrees and Kinds.
 ‘ Hence it was, that when my creating Fiat spoke to these new ‘ ranged Stars, and Elements, and bid Life awake in them all
 ‘ according to its Kind, they all obeyed my Word, and every ‘ Property of Nature strove to bring forth, after the Kind and ‘ Manner as it had done in the Region of Eternity. This, my ‘ Son, is the Source and Original of all that infinite Variety, and ‘ Degrees of Life, both of Animals and Vegetables, in this

The Spirit of Prayer. 11

‘World. It is because all outward Nature, being fallen from Heaven, must yet, as well as it can, do and work as it had done in Heaven.

‘In Heaven, all Births and Growths, all Figures and spiritual Forms of Life, though infinite in Variety, are yet all of a heavenly Kind, and only so many Manifestations of the Goodness, Wisdom, Beauty, and Riches of the Divine Nature. But in this new modelled Chaos, where the Disorders that were raised by Lucifer are not wholly removed, but Evil and Good must stand in Strife, till the last purifying Fire, here every Kind and Degree of Life, like the World from whence it springs, is a Mixture of Good and Evil in its Birth.

‘Therefore, my Son, be content with thy angelical Nature, be content, as an Angel in Paradise, to eat Angels’ Food, and to rule over this mixed, imperfect, and perishing World, without partaking of its corruptible, impure, and perishing Nature. Lust not to know how the Animals feel the Evil and Good which this Life affords them; for if Thou couldst feel what they feel, Thou must be as they are; Thou canst not have their Sensibility, unless Thou hast their Nature: Thou canst not at once be an Angel and an earthly Animal. If the bestial Life is raised up in Thee, the same Instant the heavenly Birth of thy Nature must die in Thee. Therefore turn away thy Lust and Imagination from a Tree, that can only help Thee to the Knowledge of such Good and Evil, as belongs only to the Animals of this outward World; for nothing but the bestial Nature can receive Good or Evil from the Stars and Elements; they have no Power, but over that Life which proceeds from them. Eat therefore only the Food of Paradise; be content with Angels’ Bread; for if Thou eatest of this Tree, it will unavoidably awaken and open the bestial Life within Thee; and in that Moment, all that is heavenly must die, and cease to have any Power in Thee. And Thou must fall into a Slavery for Life, under the divided fighting Powers of Stars and Elements. Stripped of thy angelical Garment, that hid thy outward Body under its Glory, Thou wilt become more naked than any Beast upon Earth, be forced to seek from Beasts a Covering, to hide Thee from the Sight of thine own Eyes. A shameful, fearful, sickly, wanting, suffering, and distressed Heir of the same speedy Death in the Dust of the Earth, as the poor Beasts, whom Thou wilt thus have made to be thy Brethren.’

This Paraphrase I leave to the Reflection of the Reader, and proceed to show, Thirdly, That the Misery, Distress, and woeful Condition, which Adam by his Transgression brought upon Himself, and all his Posterity, was not the Effect of any severe vindictive Wrath in God, calling for Justice to his offended Sovereignty, and inflicting Pains and Punishments suitable to the Greatness of his just Indignation, and Anger at the disobedient Creature.

If Adam, contrary to the Will of God, and for the Sake of some new-fancied Knowledge, had broken both his own Legs, and put out both his Eyes, could it with any Show of Truth and Reason have been said, that God, in the Severity of his Wrath at so heinous an Offence, had punished Adam with Lameness and Blindness? And if it be further supposed, that God seeing Adam lying in this lame and blind Condition, came and spoke kindly to him, informing him of a Secret of Love, which He had in Heaven, which He promised to send him immediately by his highest Messenger of Love; assuring him, that by the Use of this heavenly Secret or Divine Power, his Legs and Eyes should, in some Course of Time, be infallibly restored to him, even in a better State than they were in at the first; must it not be still more unreasonable and absurd, to charge anything of this Lameness and Blindness upon a Wrath in God kindled against Adam? Nay, is it not clear, in the Highest Degree, that in all this Matter Adam had nothing from God, but the Overflowings of mere Love and Goodness, and that he had no Lameness and Blindness, but from his own voluntary Acts upon himself?

This is a simple, but clear Representation of the Case, how Matters stood betwixt God and our first Father, when by his own Act and Deed he extinguished that Divine Life, in which God had created him. Adam had no more Hurt, no more Evil done to Him, at his Fall, than the very Nature of his own Action brought along with it upon himself. He lusted to have the Sensibility of that Good and Evil, which the Beasts of this World have. He was told, that it could not be had without the Loss of his heavenly Life; because such Loss was as necessarily implied in the Nature of the Thing itself, as Blindness is implied in the Extinction of Eyes. However, he ventured to make the Trial, and chose to eat of That, which could and did open this Sensibility of earthly Good and Evil in him. No sooner was this Sensibility opened in him, but he found it to be a Subjection and Slavery to all outward Nature, to Heat and Cold, to Pains and Sickness, Horror of Mind, disturbed Passions, Misery, and Fears of Death. Which is in other Words only saying, that he found it to be an Extinction of that Divine, angelical Nature, which till then had kept him insensible, and incapable of any hurtful Impressions, from any or all the Powers of this World. Therefore, to charge his miserable State, as a Punishment inflicted upon him by the severe Wrath of an incensed God, is the same Absurdity, as in the former supposed Lameness and Blindness. Because the whole Nature of all that miserable Change, both as to Body and Soul, which then came upon him, was neither more, nor less, than what was necessarily implied in that which he chose to do to himself. And therefore it had nothing of the Nature of a Punishment inflicted from without, but was only that which his own Action had done in and to himself: Just as the Man that puts out his own Eyes, has only that Darkness and Blindness, which his own Action has brought forth in himself.

From this short, yet plain and true Account of this Matter, we are at once delivered from a Load of Difficulties that have been raised about the Fall of Man, and Original Sin. It has been a great Question, How the Goodness of God could punish so small and single an Act of Disobedience in Adam, with so great a Punishment? Here the Sovereignty of God has been appealed to, and has set the Matter right; and from this Sovereignty, thus asserted, came forth the Systems of absolute Election, and absolute Reprobation. But for our Comfort it appears, that the Question here put concerns neither God nor Man, that it relates not at all to the Matter, and has no Existence, but in the Brains of those that formed it. For the Action in which Adam's Sin consisted, was such an Act, as in itself implied all that miserable Change that came upon him, and so was not a small, or single Act of Disobedience, nor had the least Punishment, of any kind, inflicted by God upon it. All that God did on this Transgression was mere Love, Compassion, and Relief administered to it. All the Sovereignty that God here showed, was a Sovereignty of Love to the fallen Creature. So that all the Volumes on this Question may be laid aside, as quite beside the Point. Another, and the greatest Question of all, and which Divines of all Sorts have been ever solving, and yet never have solved, is this; How it can consist with the Goodness of God, to impute the Sin of Adam to all his Posterity? But here, to our Comfort again, it may be said, that this Question is equally a vain Fiction with the other, and has nothing to do with the Procedure of God towards Mankind. For there is no Imputation of the Sin of Adam to his Posterity, and so no Foundation for a Dispute upon it. How absurd would it be to say, that God imputes the Nature, or the Body and Soul of Adam to his Posterity? for have they not the Nature of Adam by a natural Birth from him, and not by Imputation from God? Now this is all the Sin that Adam's Posterity have from him, they have only their Flesh and Blood, their Body and Soul from him, by a Birth from him, and not imputed to them from God. Instead therefore of the former Question, which is quite beside the Matter, it should have been asked thus, How it was consistent with the Goodness of God, that Adam could not generate Children of a Nature and Kind quite superior to himself? This is the only Question that can be asked with relation to God; and yet it is a Question whose Absurdity confutes itself. For the only Reason why Sin is found in all the Sons of Adam, is this, it is because Adam of earthly Flesh and Blood, cannot bring forth a holy Angel out of himself, but must beget children of the same Nature and Condition with himself. And therefore here again it may be truly said, that all the laborious Volumes on God's imputing Adam's Sin to his Posterity, ought to be considered as waste Paper.*

But further, As it is thus evident from the Nature of Adam's Transgression, that all his Misery came from the Nature of his own Action, and that nothing was inflicted upon him, from a Wrath or Anger in God at him, so is it still much more so, from a Consideration of the Divine Nature. For it is a glorious and joyful Truth, (however suppressed in various Systems of Divinity) that from Eternity to Eternity, no Spark of Wrath ever was, or ever will be in the holy Triune God. If a Wrath of God was anywhere, it must be everywhere, if it burned once, it must burn to all Eternity. For everything that is in God himself is boundless, incapable of any Increase or Diminution, without Beginning, and without End. It is as good Sense, as consistent with the Divine Nature, to say that God, moved by a Wrath in and from Himself, began the Creation, as that a Wrath in God ever punished any Part of it. Nature and Creature is the only Source from whence, and the Seat in which, Wrath, Pain, and Vexation can dwell. Nor can they ever break forth either in Nature or Creature, but so far as either this, or that, has lost its State in God. This is as certain, as that Storms and Tempests, Thunder and Lightnings, have no Existence in Heaven. God, considered in Himself, is as infinitely separate from all Possibility of doing Hurt, or willing Pain to any Creature, as He is from a Possibility of suffering Pain or Hurt from the Hand of a Man. And this, for this plain Reason, because He is in himself, in his holy Trinity, nothing else but the boundless Abyss of all that is Good, and Sweet, and Amiable, and therefore stands in the utmost Contrariety to every Thing that is not a Blessing, in an eternal Impossibility of willing and intending a Moment's Pain or Hurt to any Creature. For from this unbounded Source of Goodness and Perfection, nothing but infinite Streams of Blessing are perpetually flowing forth upon all Nature and Creature, in a more incessant Plenty, than Rays of Light stream from the Sun. And as the Sun has but one Nature, and can give forth nothing but the Blessings of Light, so the holy Triune God has but one Nature and Intent towards all the Creation, which is, to pour forth the Riches and Sweetness of his Divine Perfections, upon every Thing that is capable of them, and according to its Capacity to receive them.

The Goodness of God breaking forth into a Desire to communicate Good, was the Cause and the Beginning of the Creation. Hence it follows, that to all Eternity, God can have no Thought, or Intent towards the Creature, but to communicate Good; because He made the Creature for this sole End, to receive Good. The first Motive towards the Creature is unchangeable; it takes its Rise from God's Desire to communicate Good; and it is an eternal Impossibility, that anything can ever come from God, as his Will and Purpose towards the Creature, but that same Love and Goodness, which first created it: He must always will that to it, which He willed at the Creation of it. This is the amiable Nature of God, He is the Good, the unchangeable, overflowing Fountain of Good, that sends forth nothing but Good to all Eternity. He is the Love itself, the unmixed, unmeasurable Love, doing nothing but from Love, giving nothing but Gifts of Love, to every Thing that He has made; requiring nothing of all his Creatures, but the Spirit and Fruits of that Love, which brought them into Being. Oh, how sweet is this Contemplation of the Height and Depth of the Riches of Divine Love! With what Attraction must it draw every thoughtful Man, to return Love for Love to this overflowing Fountain of boundless Goodness? What Charms has that Religion, which discovers to us our Existence in, Relation to, and Dependence upon this Ocean of Divine Love! View every Part of our Redemption, from Adam's first Sin, to the Resurrection of the Dead, and you will find nothing but successive Mysteries of that first Love, which created Angels and Men. All the Mysteries of the Gospel are only so many Marks and Proofs of God's desiring to make his Love triumph, in the Removal of Sin and Disorder from all Nature and Creature.*

But to return, and consider further the Nature of Adam's Fall, We have seen that it consisted of no arbitrary Punishment inflicted on him by a Wrath raised in God, but was only such a State of Misery, as his own Action necessarily brought upon him. Let us now see what happened to his Soul, a little more distinctly, and how it differed from what it was before his Fall, in its heavenly State.

The Angels that kept their State, and those that fell from it, were at first of one and the same Nature ; the Angels that fell, did not lose all their Nature, for then they must have fallen into nothing ; they only lost the heavenly and Divine Part of it, and therefore there is something still remaining in them, that is also in the holy Angels, and which is common to both of them. Now this which they did not lose, because it cannot be lost, is a certain Root of Life, or Ground of their Existence, which when once in Being, cannot be broken, and in which the unceasing Eternity, or Immortality of their Nature consists, a Root or first Ground of Life, equally capable of a Heavenly Birth, or of a Birth and Growth into Hell. Now that there is this Root of Life in Angels, and that it is something quite distinct from their heavenly Nature, is very plain from hence, that the Devils have lost their heavenly, and yet have kept their eternal and immortal Nature ; therefore that in which their Eternity and Immortality consists, must be something entirely distinct from their heavenly Nature, and must be also the same with that, in which the Eternity and Immortality of the holy Angels consists. For the fallen Angels have no other eternal Root in them, but that which they had before their Fall, and which they brought from Heaven ; and therefore that which is, and must be eternal and undying in their Nature, is the same eternal Root of Life, which is in the Angels that kept their State. And consequently, the only Difference betwixt an Angel and a Devil, is this, that in the Angel its eternal Root of Life generates a Birth of the Light and holy Spirit of God in it ; and in a Devil, this eternal Root of Life has lost this Birth, and the Power of bringing it forth again. Now here is to be truly seen the real Difference betwixt the Soul of Adam before, and after his Fall. Before his Fall, it had the Nature of an Angel of God, in which the Divine Birth of the Light and holy Spirit of God sprung up, but when contrary to the Will, and Command of God, a bestial Life was awakened in him, the heavenly Life was necessarily extinguished. The Soul therefore having lost that heavenly Birth which made it like an Angel of God, had nothing remaining in it, but that eternal and immortal Root of Life, which is the very Essence of a fallen Angel. But here we must observe a great and happy Difference, betwixt the Soul of Adam, though dead to all that was heavenly, and the Soul of a Devil. The Angels that extinguished the Birth of Heaven in themselves, fell directly into the horrible Depths of their own strong self-tormenting Nature, or their own Hell, and that for these two Reasons.

First, Because there was nowhere else for them to fall into, but into this tormenting Sensibility of their own fiery, wrathful, darkened Nature.

Secondly, Because their Revolt from God was an Attempt, and Intent to be higher and greater by awakening, and trusting to their own natural Powers, than they had hitherto been by Submission to God. They would have a Greatness that sprung only from themselves, and therefore they found That which they sought, they found themselves left to all the Greatness that was in themselves, and that was their Hell, viz., a fiery Strength of a self-tormenting Nature, because separate from the one Source of Light and Love, of Peace and Joy.

But Adam, though his Soul was as entirely dead to Heaven, as the Souls of the Devils were, yet fell not into their Hell, for these two Reasons.

First, Because his Angelical Man dwelt in a Body taken from this outward World, which Body did not die at his Transgression, therefore his Soul that had lost his Heavenly Light, did not fall directly into the Devil's Hell, but it fell into a Body of Earthly Flesh and Blood, which being capable of the Enjoyments and Satisfaction of this Life, could, whilst it lasted, keep the Soul insensible of its own fallen State, and hellish Condition.

Secondly, because Adam not aspiring to be above, or without God by his own proud Strength, but only lusting to enter in a Sensibility of the Good and Evil of the bestial Life of this World, he found only That which he sought, and fell into no other State or Misery, than that bestial Life, which his own Actions and Desires had opened in him. And therefore this outward World stood him in great Stead, it prevented his immediate Falling into the State of Fallen Angels.

But then, as there was nothing that kept him out of the Hell of Fallen Angels, but his Body of Earthly Flesh and Blood, and as this was now as mortal in him, as it was in the Beasts, and lay at the Mercy of a thousand Accidents, that could every Moment take it from him, so he was in his fallen State, standing as it were on the Brink of Hell, liable every Moment to be pushed into it.*

See here the deep Ground and absolute Necessity of that new Birth, of Word, Son, and Spirit of God, which the Scripture speaks so much of. It is because our Soul, as fallen, is quite dead to, and separate from the Kingdom of Heaven, by having lost the Light and Spirit of God in itself; and therefore it is, and must be incapable of entering into Heaven, till by this new Birth, the Soul gets again its first Heavenly Nature.

* See Grounds and Reasons of Regeneration, pages 6—12, 39—48.

If thou hast nothing of this Birth when thy Body dies, then thou hast only that Root of Life in Thee, which the Devils have, thou art as far from Heaven, and as incapable of it, as they are; thy Nature is their Nature, and therefore their Habitation must be thine. For nothing can possibly hinder thy Union with Fallen Angels, when thou diest, but a Birth of That in thy Soul, which the Fallen Angels have lost.

How pitiable therefore, or rather how hurtful is that Learning, which uses all its Art of Words, to avoid and lose the true Sense of our Saviour's Doctrine concerning the new Birth, which is necessary to fallen Man, by holding, that the Passages asserting the new Birth, are only a figurative, strong Form of Words concerning something, that is not really a Birth, or Growth of a new Nature, but may, according to the best Rules of Criticism, signify, either our Entrance into the Society of Christians, by the Rite of Baptism, or such a new Relation, as a Scholar may have with his Master, who by a Conformity to Terms of Union, or by copying his Ways and Manners, may, by a Figure of Speech, be said to be born again of him.

Now let it here be observed, that no Passage of Scripture is to be called, or esteemed as a figurative Expression, but where the literal Meaning cannot be allowed, as implying something that is either bad in itself, or impossible, or inconsistent with some plain and undeniable Doctrines of Scripture. Now that this is not the Case here, is very evident. For who will presume to say, that for the Soul of fallen Man to be born again of the Son, or Light, and Holy Spirit of God, is in the literal Sense of the Words, a Thing bad in itself, or impossible, or inconsistent with any plain and undeniable Doctrines of Scripture? The Critics therefore, who, in this Matter, leave the literal Meaning of the Words, and have Recourse to a figurative Sense, are without Excuse, and have nothing they can urge as a Reason for so doing, but their own Skill in Words. But it may be further added as a just Charge against these Critics, that their fixing these Passages to a figurative Meaning, is not only without any Ground, or Reason for so doing, but is also a bad Meaning, impossible to be true, and utterly inconsistent with the most plain, and fundamental Doctrines of Scripture. Now that this is the Case here, may in Part be seen by the following Instance.

Let it be supposed, that a human Body had lost the Light, and Air of this World, and was in a State of Death, because both these were quite extinguished in it. Must it not be said, that this human Body cannot see, or enter again into the Life of this World, unless the Light and Air of this World get again a new Birth in it: Is there here any Occasion, or any Room to form a Doubt, how these Words are to be understood, or any Possibility to mistake the Meaning of them? What a Philosopher would he be, who for fear of being called an Enthusiast, should here deny the literal Meaning of a new Birth of Light and Air, and think himself sufficiently justified in flying from it, because in his great Reading, he had seen the Words, Birth, Light and Air, sometimes, and upon some Occasions, used only in a figurative Sense?

Now this is exactly, and to a Tittle the Case of the Soul, as fallen, and lying in the same State of Death to the Kingdom of God, till a new Birth of the Light and Spirit of God be again brought forth in it. And therefore the Necessity of understanding these Words in their literal Meaning, the Absurdity of flying to a figurative Sense of the new Birth, and the Impossibility of that being the true one, is equally plain, and certain in both these Cases.

Now that the Soul, as fallen, is in this real State of Death, is a Doctrine not only plain from the whole Tenor of Scripture, but affirmed in all Systems of Divinity. For all hold, and teach, that Man unredeemed, must at the Death of his Body have fallen into a State of Misery, like that of the fallen Angels. But how can this be true, unless it be true, that the Life of Heaven was extinguished in the Soul, and that Man had really lost that Light, and Spirit of God, which alone can make any Being capable of living in Heaven? All therefore that I have here, and elsewhere said, concerning the Death of the Soul by its Fall, and its wanting a real new Birth of the Son, and Holy Spirit of God in it, in order to its Salvation, cannot be denied, but by giving up this great, fundamental Doctrine, namely, 'That Man in his fallen State, and unredeemed, must have been 'eternally lost.' For it cannot be true, that the Fall of Man unredeemed, would have kept him for ever out of Heaven, but because his Fall had absolutely put an End to the Life of Heaven in his Soul.

On the other Hand, it cannot be true that Jesus Christ is his Redeemer, and does deliver him from his fallen State, unless it be true, that Jesus Christ helps him to a new Birth of that Light and Spirit of God, which was extinguished by his Fall. For nothing could possibly be the Redemption, or Recovery of Man, but Regeneration alone. His Misery was his having lost the Life and Light of Heaven from his Soul, and therefore nothing in all the Universe of Nature, but a new Birth of that which he had lost, could be his Deliverance from his fallen State.

And therefore if Angels after Angels had come down from Heaven to assure him, that God had no Anger at him, he would still have been in the same helpless State; nay, had they told him, that God had Pity and Compassion towards him, he had yet been unhelped; because in the Nature of the Thing, nothing could make so much as a Beginning of his Deliverance, but that which made a Beginning of a new Birth in him, and nothing could fully effect his Recovery, but which perfectly finished the new Birth of all that heavenly Life which he had lost.

The Gospel tells us of a certain Man who fell among Thieves, who stripped him, and wounded him, and left him half dead; that first a Priest, then a Levite coming that Way, both of them avoided the poor Man, by passing on the other Side.

Here it is plain, that this Priest and Levite left the poor Man in the same helpless State in which they found him. Let it now be supposed, that instead of going on the other Side of the Road, they had come up to him, and poured Oil and Wine into his Wounds, only in a figurative Sense of the Words, that is, that they had spoken such Words to him, Words so soft, so oily, and reviving, that in a just Figure of Speech, they might be called a pouring of Wine and Oil into his Wounds. Now had they done this, must it not still be said, that the poor Man's Wounds and Nakedness were still left in their first helpless State? And all for this plain Reason, because the poor Man was naked, and wounded, not in a figurative Sense of the Words, but really and truly, and therefore could have no Help or Benefit, but from real Oil and Wine really poured into his Wounds. And for the same plain Reason, the fallen Soul, really dead to the Kingdom of Heaven, can have no Help but by a new Birth of the Light and Spirit of Heaven, really brought forth again in it. When Adam lay in his Death Wounds to the Kingdom of God, had the highest Order of Archangels, or Seraphims come by that Way, they could only have done as the Priest and Levite did, go on the other Side; or if they had come up to him, and done all they could for him, it could only have been such a Good or Relief to him, as by a Figure of Speech might be so called.

For as Adam had extinguished the Light and Spirit of God in himself, so no one could be the good Samaritan to him, or pour that Wine and Oil into his Wounds, which they wanted, but He who was the Author and Source of Light and Life to every Being that lives in Heaven.

One would wonder how any Persons, that believe the great Mystery of our Redemption, who adore the Depths of the Divine Goodness, in that the Son of God, the second Person in the Trinity, became a Man himself, in order to make it possible for Man by a Birth from him to enter again into the Kingdom of God, should yet seek to, and contend for, not a real, but a figurative Sense of a new Birth in Jesus Christ. Is there any Thing more inconsistent than this? Or can any Thing strike more directly at the Heart of the whole Nature of our Redemption? God became Man, took upon him a Birth from the fallen Nature. But why was this done? Or wherein lies the adorable Depth of this Mystery? How does all this manifest the Infinity of the Divine Love towards Man? It is because nothing less than this mysterious Incarnation (which astonishes Angels) could open a Way, or begin a Possibility, for fallen Man to be born again from above, and made again a Partaker of the Divine Nature. It was because Man was become so dead to the Kingdom of Heaven, that there was no Help for him through all Nature. No Powers, no Abilities of the highest Order of Creatures, could kindle the least Spark of Life in him, or help him to the least Glimpse of that heavenly Light which he had lost. Now when all Nature and Creature stood round about Adam as unable to help him, as he was to help himself, and all of them unable to help him, for this Reason, because that which he had lost, was the Life and Light of Heaven, how glorious, how adorable is that Mystery, which enables us to say, that when Man laid thus incapable of any Relief from all the Powers and Possibilities of Nature, that then the Son, the Word of God, entered by a Birth into this fallen Nature, that by this mysterious Incarnation all the fallen Nature might be born again of him according to the Spirit, in the same Reality, as they were born of Adam according to the Flesh? Look at this Mystery in this true Light, in this plain Sense of Scripture, and then you must be forced to fall down before it, in Adoration of it. For all that is great and astonishing in the Goodness of God, all that is glorious and happy with Regard to Man, is manifestly contained in it.

But tell me, I pray, what becomes of all this, what is there left in any Part of this Mystery, if this new Birth, for the Sake of which God became Man, is not really a new Birth in the Thing itself, is not, as the Scripture affirms, a real Birth of the Son and Spirit of God in the Soul, but something or other, this or that, which the Critics say, may be called a new Birth, by a certain Figure of Speech? Is not this to give up all our Redemption at once, and a turning all the Mysteries of our Salvation into mere empty, unmeaning Terms of Speech? He that should deny the Reality of the Resurrection, upon Pretence, that by the Rules of Criticism, it needs not signify a real coming out of a State of Natural Death, might have more to say for himself both from Reason and Scripture, than he that denies the Reality of the new Birth in Christ Jesus. For this new Birth is not a Part, but the Whole of our Salvation. Every Thing in Religion, from the Beginning to the End of Time, is only for the Sake of it. Nothing does us any Good, but either as it helps forward our Regeneration, or as it is a true Fruit or Effect of it.

All the glad Tidings of the Gospel, all the Benefits of our Saviour, however variously expressed in Scripture, all centre in this one Point, that He is become our Light, our Life, our Resurrection, our Holiness and Salvation; that we are in Him new Creatures, created again unto Righteousness, born again of Him, from above, of the Spirit of God. Every Thing in the Gospel is for the Sake of this new Creature, this new Man in Christ Jesus, and nothing is regarded without it. What Excuse therefore can be made for that Learning, which, robbing us of the true Fruits of the Tree of Life, leaves us nothing to feed upon, but the dry Dust of Words?

'I am the Vine, Ye are the Branches.' Here Christ, our second Adam, uses this Similitude to teach us, that the new Birth that we are to have from Him is real, in the most strict and literal Sense of the Words, and that there is the same Nearness of Relation, betwixt Him and his true Disciples, that there is betwixt the Vine and its Branches, that He does all that in us, and for us, which the Vine does to its Branches. Now the Life of the Vine must be really derived into the Branches, they cannot be Branches, till the Birth of the Vine is brought forth in them. And therefore as sure as the Birth of the Vine must be brought forth in the Branches, so sure is it, that we must be born again of our second Adam. And that unless the Life of the Holy Jesus be in us by a Birth from Him, we are as dead to Him, and the Kingdom of God, as the Branch is dead to the Vine, from which it is broken off.

Again our Blessed Saviour says, 'Without me, ye can do Nothing.' The Question is, when, or how a Man may be said to be without Christ? Consider again the Vine and its Branches: A Branch can then only be said to be without its Vine, when the Vegetable Life of the Vine is no longer in it. This is the only Sense, in which we can be said to be without Christ; when He is no longer in us, as a Principle of a heavenly Life, we are then without Him, and so can do Nothing, that is, Nothing that is good or holy. A Christ not in us, is the same Thing as a Christ not ours. If we are only so far with Christ, as to own and receive the History of his Birth, Person, and Character, if this is all that we have of Him, we are as much without Him, as much left to ourselves, as little helped by Him, as those evil Spirits which cried out, 'We know Thee, who thou art, the Holy 'One of God.' For those evil Spirits, and all the fallen Angels, are totally without Christ, have no Benefit from Him, for this one and only Reason, because Christ is not in Them; Nothing of the Son of God is generated, or born in them. Therefore every Son of Adam, that has not something of the Son of God generated, or born within Him, is as much without Christ, as destitute of all Help from Him, as those evil Spirits who could only make an outward Confession of Him.

It is the Language of Scripture, that Christ in us is our Hope of Glory? that Christ formed in us, living, growing, and raising his own Life and Spirit in us, is our only Salvation. And indeed all this is plain from the Nature of the Thing; for since the Serpent, Sin, Death and Hell, are all essentially within us, the very Growth of our Nature, must not our Redemption be equally inward, an inward essential Death to this State of our Souls, and an inward Growth of a contrary Life within us? If Adam was only an outward Person, if his whole Nature was not our Nature, born in us, and derived from Him into us, it would be Nonsense to say, that his Fall is our Fall. So in like manner, if Christ, our second Adam, was only an outward Person, if He entered not as deeply into our Nature as the first Adam does, if we have not as really from Him a new inward, spiritual Man, as we have outward Flesh and Blood from Adam, what Ground could there be to say, that our Righteousness is from Him, as our Sin is from Adam?

Let no one here think to charge me with Disregard to the Holy Jesus, who was born of the Virgin Mary, or with setting up an inward Saviour in Opposition to that outward Christ, whose History is recorded in the Gospel. No: It is with the utmost Fulness of Faith and Assurance, that I ascribe all our Redemption to that blessed and mysterious Person, that was then born of the Virgin Mary, and will assert no inward Redemption but what wholly proceeds from, and is effected by that Life-giving Redeemer, who died on the Cross for our Redemption.

Was I to say, that a Plant or Vegetable must have the Sun within it, must have the Life, Light, and Virtues of the Sun incorporated in it, that it has no Benefit from the Sun, till the Sun is thus inwardly forming, generating, quickening, and raising up a Life of the Sun's Virtues in it, would this be setting up an inward Sun, in Opposition to the outward one? Could any Thing be more ridiculous than such a Charge? For is not all that is here said of an inward Sun in the Vegetable, so much said of a Power and Virtue derived from the Sun in the Firmament? So in like manner, all that is said of an inward Christ, inwardly formed, and generated in the Root of the Soul, is only so much said of an inward Life, brought forth by the Power and Efficacy of that Blessed Christ, that was born of the Virgin Mary.

Chapter II.

Discovering the true Way of turning to God, and of finding the Kingdom of Heaven, the Riches of Eternity in our Souls.

THOU hast seen, dear Reader, the Nature and Necessity of Regeneration, be persuaded therefore fully to believe, and firmly to settle in thy Mind this most certain Truth, that all our Salvation consists in the Manifestation of the Nature, Life, and Spirit of Jesus Christ, in our inward new Man. This alone is Christian Redemption, this alone delivers from the Guilt and Power of Sin, this alone redeems, renews, and regains the first Life of God in the Soul of Man. Every Thing besides this, is Self, is Fiction, is Propriety, is own Will, and however coloured, is only thy old Man, with all his Deeds. Enter therefore with all thy Heart into this Truth, let thy Eye be always upon it, do every Thing in View of it, try every Thing by the Truth of it, love Nothing but for the Sake of it. Wherever thou goest, whatever thou dost, at Home, or Abroad, in the Field, or at Church, do all in a Desire of Union with Christ, in Imitation of his Tempers and Inclinations, and look upon all as Nothing, but that which exercises, and increases the Spirit and Life of Christ in thy Soul. From Morning to Night keep Jesus in thy Heart, long for Nothing, desire Nothing, hope for Nothing, but to have all that is within Thee changed into the Spirit and Temper of the Holy Jesus. Let this be thy Christianity, thy Church, and thy Religion. For this new Birth in Christ thus firmly believed, and continually desired, will do every Thing that thou wantest to have done in Thee, it will dry up all the Springs of Vice, stop all the Workings of Evil in thy Nature, it will bring all that is Good into Thee, it will open all the Gospel within Thee, and thou wilt know what it is to be taught of God. This longing Desire of thy Heart to be one with Christ will soon put a stop to all the Vanity of thy Life, and nothing will be admitted to enter into thy Heart, or proceed from it, but what comes from God and returns to God: thou wilt soon be, as it were, tied and bound in the Chains of all holy Affections and Desires, thy Mouth will have a Watch set upon it, thy Ears would willingly hear nothing that does not tend to God, nor thy Eyes be open, but to see, and find Occasions of doing Good. In a Word, when this Faith has got both thy Head and thy Heart, it will then be with thee, as it was with the Merchant who found a Pearl of great Price, it will make thee gladly to sell all that thou hast, and buy it. For all that had seized and possessed the Heart of any Man, whatever the Merchant of this World had got together, whether of Riches, Power, Honour, Learning, or Reputation, loses all its Value, is counted but as Dung, and willingly parted with, as soon as this glorious Pearl, the new Birth in Christ Jesus, is discovered and found by him. This therefore may serve as a Touchstone, whereby every one may try the Truth of his State; if the old Man is still a Merchant within thee, trading in all sorts of worldly Honour, Power, or Learning, if the Wisdom of this World is not Foolishness to thee, if earthly Interests, and sensual Pleasures, are still the Desire of thy Heart, and only covered under a Form of Godliness, a Cloak of Creeds, Observances, and Institutions of Religion, thou mayest be assured, that the Pearl of great Price is not yet found by thee. For where Christ is born, or his Spirit rises up in the Soul, there all Self is denied, and obliged to turn out; there all carnal Wisdom, Arts of Advancement, with every Pride and Glory of this Life, are as so many heathen Idols all willingly renounced, and the Man is not only content, but rejoices to say, that his Kingdom is not of this World.

But thou wilt perhaps say, How shall this great Work, the Birth of Christ, be effected in me? It might rather be said, since Christ has an infinite Power, and also an infinite Desire to save Mankind, how can anyone miss of this Salvation, but through his own unwillingness to be saved by Him? Consider, how was it, that the Lame and Blind, the Lunatic and Leper, the Publican and Sinner, found Christ to be their Saviour, and to do all That for them, which they wanted to be done to them? It was because they had a real Desire of having That which they asked for, and therefore in true Faith and Prayer applied to Christ, that his Spirit and Power might enter into them, and heal That which they wanted, and desired to be healed in them. Every one of these said in Faith and Desire, 'Lord, if thou wilt, 'thou canst make me whole.' And the Answer was always this, 'According to thy Faith, so be it done unto Thee.' This is Christ's Answer now, and thus it is done to every one of us at this Day, as our Faith is, so is it done unto us. And here lies the whole Reason of our falling short of the Salvation of Christ, it is because we have No Will to it.

But you will say, Do not all Christians desire to have Christ to be their Saviour? Yes. But here is the Deceit; all would have Christ to be their Saviour in the next World, and to help them into Heaven when they die, by his Power, and Merits with God. But this is not willing Christ to be thy Saviour; for his Salvation, if it is had, must be had in this World; if He saves Thee, it must be done in this Life, by changing and altering all that is within Thee, by helping thee to a new Heart, as He helped the Blind to see, the Lame to walk, and the Dumb to speak. For to have Salvation from Christ, is nothing else but to be made like unto Him; it is to have his Humility and Meekness, his Mortification and Self-denial, his Renunciation of the Spirit, Wisdom, and Honours of this World, his Love of God, his Desire of doing God's Will, and seeking only his Honour. To have these Tempers formed and begotten in thy Heart, is to have Salvation from Christ. But if thou willest not to have these Tempers brought forth in thee, if thy Faith and Desire does not seek, and cry to Christ for them in the same Reality, as the Lame asked to walk, and the Blind to see, then thou must be said to be unwilling to have Christ to be thy Saviour.

Again, Consider, How was it, that the carnal Jew, the deep-read Scribe, the learned Rabbi, the Religious Pharisee, not only did not receive, but crucified their Saviour? It was because they willed, and desired no such Saviour as He was, no such inward Salvation as He offered to them. They desired no Change of their own Nature, no inward Destruction of their own natural Tempers, no Deliverance from the Love of themselves, and the Enjoyments of their Passions; they liked their Sate, the Gratifications of their Old Man, their long Robes, their broad Phylacteries, and Greetings in the Markets. They wanted not to have their Pride and Self-love dethroned, their Covetousness and Sensuality to be subdued by a new Nature from Heaven derived into them. Their only Desire was the Success of Judaism, to have an outward Saviour, a temporal Prince, that should establish their Law and Ceremonies over all the Earth. And therefore they crucified their Dear Redeemer, and would have none of his Salvation, because it all consisted in a Change of their Nature, in a new Birth from above, and a Kingdom of Heaven to be opened within them by the Spirit of God.

Oh Christendom, look not only at the old Jews, but see thyself in this Glass. For at this Day (Oh sad Truth to be told!) at this Day, a Christ within us, an inward Saviour raising a Birth of his own Nature, Life, and Spirit within us, is rejected as gross Enthusiasm, the learned Rabbies take Counsel against it. The Propagation of Popery, the Propagation of Protestantism, the Success of some particular Church, is the Salvation which Priests and People are chiefly concerned about.

But to return. It is manifest, that no one can fail of the Benefit of Christ's Salvation, but through an unwillingness to have it, and from the same Spirit and Tempers which made the Jews unwilling to receive it. But if thou wouldst still further know, how this great Work, the Birth of Christ, is to be effected in thee, then let this joyful Truth be told thee, that this great Work is already begun in every one of us. For this Holy Jesus, that is to be formed in thee, that is to be the Saviour and new Life of thy Soul, that is to raise thee out of the Darkness of Death into the Light of Life, and give thee Power to become a Son of God, is already within thee, living, stirring, calling, knocking at the Door of thy Heart, and wanting nothing but thy own Faith and good Will, to have as real a Birth and Form in thee, as He had in the Virgin Mary. For the eternal Word, or Son of God, did not then first begin to be the Saviour of the World, when He was Born in Bethlehem of Judea; but that Word which became Man in the Virgin Mary, did, from the Beginning of the World, enter as a Word of Life, a Seed of Salvation, into the first Father of Mankind, was inspoken into him, as an ingrafted Word, under the Name and Character of a Bruiser of the Serpent's Head. Hence it is, that Christ said to his Disciples, 'the Kingdom of God is within you'; that is, the Divine Nature is within you, given unto your first Father, into the Light of his Life, and from him, rising up in the Life of every Son of Adam. Hence also the holy Jesus is said to be the 'Light, which lighteth every Man that cometh into the World.' Not as He was born at Bethlehem, not as He had an human Form upon Earth; in these Respects he could not be said to have been the Light of every Man that cometh into the World; but as He was that eternal Word, by which all Things were created, which was the Life and Light of all Things, and which had as a second Creator entered again into fallen Man, as a Bruiser of the Serpent; in this respect it was truly said of our Lord, when on Earth, that 'He was that Light which lighteth every Man, that cometh into 'the World.' For He was really and truly all this, as He was the Immanuel, the God with us, given unto Adam, and in him to all his Offspring. See here the Beginning and glorious Extent of the Catholic Church of Christ, it takes in all the World. It is God's unlimited, universal Mercy to all Mankind; and every human Creature, as sure as he is born of Adam, has a Birth of the Bruiser of the Serpent within him, and so is infallibly in Covenant with God through Jesus Christ. Hence also it is, that the Holy Jesus is appointed to be Judge of all the World, it is because all Mankind, all Nations and Languages have in him, and through him been put into Covenant with God, and made capable of resisting the Evil of their fallen Nature.

When our blessed Lord conversed with the Woman at Jacob's Well, he said unto her, 'If thou knewest the Gift of God, and 'who it is that talketh with thee, thou wouldest have asked of 'Him, and He would have given Thee living Water.' How happy (may anyone well say) was this Woman of Samaria, to stand so near this Gift of God, from whom she might have had living water, had she but vouchsafed to have asked for it! But, dear Christian, this Happiness is thine; for this Holy Jesus, the Gift of God, first given unto Adam, and in him to all that are descended from him, is the Gift of God to Thee, as sure as thou art born of Adam; nay, hast thou never yet owned him, art thou wandered from him, as far as the Prodigal Son from his Father's House, yet is he still with Thee, he is the Gift of God to Thee, and if thou wilt turn to Him, and ask of Him, he has living Water for Thee.

Poor Sinner! consider the Treasure thou hast within Thee, the Saviour of the World, the eternal Word of God lies hid in Thee, as a Spark of the Divine Nature, which is to overcome Sin and Death, and Hell within Thee, and generate the Life of Heaven again in thy Soul. Turn to thy Heart, and thy Heart will find its Saviour, its God within itself. Thou seest, hearest, and feelest nothing of God, because thou seekest for Him abroad with thy outward Eyes, thou seekest for Him in Books, in Controversies, in the Church, and outward Exercises, but there thou wilt not find Him, till thou hast first found Him in thy Heart. Seek for Him in thy Heart, and thou wilt never seek in vain, for there He dwells, there is the Seat of his Light and Holy Spirit.

For this turning to the Light and Spirit of God within Thee, is thy only true turning unto God, there is no other Way of finding Him, but in that Place where he dwelleth in Thee. For though God be everywhere present, yet He is only present to Thee in the deepest, and most central Part of thy Soul. Thy natural Senses cannot possess God, or unite Thee to Him, nay thy inward Faculties of Understanding, Will, and Memory, can only reach after God, but cannot be the Place of his Habitation in Thee. But there is a Root, or Depth in Thee, from whence all these Faculties come forth, as Lines from a Centre, or as Branches from the Body of the Tree. This Depth is called the Centre, the Fund or Bottom of the Soul. This Depth is the Unity, the Eternity, I had almost said, the Infinity of thy Soul ; for it is so infinite, that nothing can satisfy it, or give it any Rest, but the infinity of God. In this Depth of the Soul, the Holy Trinity brought forth its own living Image in the first created Man, bearing in Himself a living Representation of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and this was his Dwelling in God and God in him. This was the Kingdom of God within Him, and made Paradise without Him. But the Day that Adam did eat of the forbidden earthly Tree, in that Day he absolutely died to this Kingdom of God within Him. This Depth or Centre of his Soul having lost its God, was shut up in Death and Darkness, and became a Prisoner in an earthly Animal, that only excelled its Brethren, the Beasts, in an upright Form, and serpentine Subtilty. Thus ended the Fall of Man. But from that Moment that the God of Mercy inspoke into Adam the Bruiser of the Serpent, from that Moment all the Riches and Treasures of the Divine Nature came again into Man, as a Seed of Salvation sown into the Centre of the Soul, and only lies hidden there in every Man, till he desires to rise from his fallen State, and to be born again from above.

Awake then, thou that Sleepest, and Christ, who from all Eternity has been espoused to thy Soul, shall give Thee Light. Begin to search and dig in thine own Field for this Pearl of Eternity, that lies hidden in it ; it cannot cost Thee too much, nor canst thou buy it too dear, for it is All, and when thou hast found it, thou wilt know, that all which thou hast sold or given away for it, is as mere a Nothing, as a Bubble upon the Water.

But if thou turnest from this heavenly Pearl, or tramplest it under thy Feet, for the sake of being Rich, or Great, either in Church or State, if Death finds Thee in this Success, thou canst not then say, that though the Pearl is lost, yet something has been gained instead of it. For in that parting Moment, the Things, and the Sounds of this World, will be exactly alike ; to have had an Estate, or only to have heard of it, to have lived at Lambeth twenty Years, or only to have twenty Times passed by the Palace, will be the same Good, or the same Nothing to Thee.

But I will now show a little more distinctly, what this Pearl of Eternity is. First, It is the Light and Spirit of God within Thee, which has hitherto done Thee but little Good, because all the Desire of thy Heart has been after the Light and Spirit of this World. Thy Reason, and Senses, thy Heart and Passions, have turned all their Attention to the poor Concerns of this Life, and therefore thou art a Stranger to this Principle of Heaven, this Riches of Eternity within Thee. For as God is not, cannot be truly found by any Worshipers, but those who worship Him in Spirit and in Truth, so this Light and Spirit, though always within us, is not, cannot be found, felt, or enjoyed, but by those whose whole Spirit is turned to it.

When Man first came into Being, and stood before God as his own Image and Likeness, this Light and Spirit of God was as natural to him, as truly the Light of his Nature, as the Light and Air of this World is natural to the Creatures that have their Birth in it. But when Man, not content with the Food of Eternity, did eat of the earthly Tree, this Light and Spirit of Heaven was no more natural to him, no more rose up as a Birth of his Nature, but instead thereof, he was left solely to the Light and Spirit of this World. And this is that Death, which God told Adam, he should surely die, in the Day that he should eat of the forbidden Tree.

But the Goodness of God would not leave Man in this Condition. A Redemption from it was immediately granted, and the Brusier of the Serpent brought the Light and Spirit of Heaven once more into the human Nature, not as it was in its first State, when Man was in Paradise, but as a Treasure hidden in the Centre of our Souls, which should discover, and open itself by Degrees, in such Proportion, as the Faith and Desires of our Hearts were turned to it. This Light and Spirit of God thus freely restored again to the Soul, and lying in it as a secret Source of Heaven, is called Grace, Free Grace, or the Supernatural Gift, or Power of God in the Soul, because it was something that the Natural Powers of the Soul could no more obtain. Hence it is, that in the greatest Truth, and highest Reality, every stirring of the Soul, every Tendency of the Heart towards God and Goodness, is justly and necessarily ascribed to the Holy Spirit, or the Grace of God. It is because this first Seed of Life, which is sown into the Soul, as the Gift or Grace of God to fallen Man, is itself the Light and Spirit of God, and therefore every Stirring, or Opening of this Seed of Life, every awakened Thought or Desire that arises from it, must be called the Moving, or the Quickening of the Spirit of God; and therefore that new Man which arises from it, must of all Necessity be said to be solely the Work and Operation of God. Hence also we have an easy and plain Declaration of the true Meaning, solid Sense, and certain Truth, of all those Scriptures, which speak of the Inspiration of God, the Operation of the Holy Spirit, the Power of the Divine Light, as the sole and necessary Agents in the Renewal and Sanctification of our Souls, and also as being Things common to all Men. It is because this Seed of Life, or Bruiser of the Serpent, is common to all Men, and has in all Men a Degree of Life, which is in itself so much of the Inspiration, or Life of God, the Spirit of God, the Light of God, which is in every Soul, and is its Power of becoming born again of God. Hence also it is, that all Men are exhorted not to quench, or resist, or grieve the Spirit, that is, this Seed of the Spirit and Light of God that is in all Men, as the only Source of Good. Again, the Flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the Flesh. By the Flesh and its Lustings, are meant the mere human Nature, or the natural Man, as He is by the Fall; by the Spirit is meant the Bruiser of the Serpent, that Seed of the Light and Spirit of God, which lies as a Treasure hidden in the Soul, in order to bring forth the Life that was lost in Adam. Now as the Flesh has its Life, its Lustings, whence all sorts of Evil are truly said to be inspired, quickened, and stirred up in us, so the Spirit being a Living Principle within us, has its Inspiration, its Breathing, its Moving, its Quickening, from which alone the Divine Life, or the Angel that died in Adam, can be born in us.

When this Seed of the Spirit, common to all Men, is not resisted, grieved, and quenched, but its Inspirations and Motions suffered to grow and increase in us, to unite with God, and get Power over all the Lusts of the Flesh, then we are born again, the Nature, Spirit, and Tempers of Jesus Christ are opened in our Souls, the Kingdom of God is come, and is found within us. On the other Hand, when the Flesh, or the Natural Man has resisted and quenched this Spirit or Seed of Life within us, then the works of the Flesh, Adultery, Fornication, Murders, Lying, Hatred, Envy, Wrath, Pride, Foolishness, worldly Wisdom, carnal Prudence, false Religion, hypocritical Holiness, and serpentine Subtilty, have set up their Kingdom within us.

See here in short, the State of Man as redeemed. He has a Spark of the Light and Spirit of God, as a Supernatural Gift of God given into the Birth of his Soul, to bring forth by Degrees a New Birth of that Life which was Lost in Paradise. This Holy Spark of the Divine Nature within Him, has a natural, strong, and almost infinite Tendency, or Reaching after that eternal Light and Spirit of God, from whence it came forth. It came forth from God, it came out of God, it partaketh of the Divine Nature, and therefore it is always in a State of Tendency and Return to God. And all this is called the Breathing, the Moving, the Quickening of the Holy Spirit within us, which are so many Operations of this Spark of Life tending towards God. On the other Hand, The Deity as considered in itself, and without the Soul of Man, has an infinite, unchangeable Tendency of Love, and Desire towards the Soul of Man, to unite and communicate its own Riches and Glories to it, just as the Spirit of the Air without Man, unites and communicates its Riches and Virtues to the Spirit of the Air that is within Man. This Love, or Desire of God towards the Soul of Man, is so great, that He gave his only begotten Son, the Brightness of his Glory, to take the human Nature upon Him, in its fallen State, that by this mysterious Union of God and Man, all the Enemies of the Soul of Man might be overcome, and every human Creature might have a Power of being born again according to that Image of God, in which he was first created. The Gospel is the History of this Love of God to Man. Inwardly he has a Seed of the Divine Life given into the Birth of his Soul, a Seed that has all the Riches of Eternity in it, and is always wanting to come to the Birth in him, and be alive in God. Outwardly he has Jesus Christ, who as a Sun of Righteousness, is always casting forth his enlivening Beams on this inward Seed, to kindle and call it forth to the Birth, doing that to this Seed of Heaven in Man, which the Sun in the Firmament is always doing to the vegetable Seeds in the Earth.

Consider this Matter in the following Similitude. A Grain of Wheat has the Air and Light of this World inclosed, or incorporated in it: This is the Mystery of its Life, this is its Power of Growing, by this it has a strong continual Tendency of uniting again with that Ocean of Light and Air, from whence it came forth, and so it helps to kindle its own Vegetable Life.

On the other Hand, That great Ocean of Light and Air, having its own Offspring hidden in the Heart of the Grain, has a perpetual strong Tendency to unite, and communicate with it again. From this Desire of Union on both Sides, the Vegetable Life arises, and all the Virtues and Powers contained in it.

But here let it be well observed, that this Desire on both Sides cannot have its Effect, till the Husk and gross Part of the Grain falls into a State of Corruption and Death, till this begins, the Mystery of Life hidden in it, cannot come forth. The Application here may be left to the Reader. I shall only observe, that we may here see the true Ground, and absolute Necessity, of that dying to ourselves, and to the World, to which our Blessed Lord so constantly calls all his Followers. An universal Self-Denial, a perpetual Mortification of the Lust of the Flesh, the Lust of the Eyes, and the Pride of Life, is not a Thing imposed upon us by the mere Will of God, is not required as a Punishment, is not an Invention of dull and monkish Spirits, but has its Ground and Reason in the Nature of the Thing, and is as absolutely necessary to make Way for the New Birth, as the Death of the Husk and gross Part of the Grain, is necessary to make Way for its Vegetable Life.

But Secondly, This Pearl of Eternity is the Wisdom and Love of God within Thee. In this Pearl of thy Serpent Bruiser, all the Holy Nature, Spirit, Tempers, and Inclinations of Christ, lie as in a Seed in the Centre of thy Soul, and Divine Wisdom and heavenly Love will grow up in Thee, if thou givest but true Attention to God present in thy Soul. On the other Hand, There is hidden also in the Depth of thy Nature the Root, or Possibility of all the hellish Nature, Spirit, and Tempers of the fallen Angels. For Heaven and Hell have each of them their Foundation within us, they come not into us from without, but spring up in us, according as our Will and Heart is turned either to the Light of God, or the Kingdom of Darkness. But when this Life, which is in the midst of these two Eternities, is at an End, either an Angel, or a Devil will be found to have a Birth in us.

Thou needest not therefore run here, or there, saying, Where is Christ? Thou needest not say, Who shall ascend into Heaven, that is, to bring down Christ from above? Or who shall descend into the Deep, to bring up Christ from the Dead? For behold the Word, which is the Wisdom of God, is in thy Heart, it is there as a Bruiser of thy Serpent, as a Light unto thy Feet and Lanthorn unto thy Paths. It is there as an Holy Oil, to soften and overcome the wrathful fiery Properties of thy Nature, and change them into the humble Meekness of Light and Love. It is there as a speaking Word of God in thy Soul; and as soon as thou art ready to hear, this eternal speaking Word will speak Wisdom and Love in thy inward Parts, and bring forth the Birth of Christ, with all his Holy Nature, Spirit, and Tempers, within Thee. Hence it was (that is, from this Principle of Heaven, or Christ in the Soul) hence I say it was, that so many eminent Spirits, Partakers of a Divine Life, have appeared in so many Parts of the heathen World; glorious Names, Sons of Wisdom, that shone, as Lights hung out by God, in the midst of idolatrous Darkness. These were the Apostles of a Christ within, that were awakened and commissioned by the inward Bruiser of the Serpent, to call Mankind from the blind Pursuits of Flesh and Blood, to know themselves, the Dignity of their Nature, the Immortality of their Souls, and the Necessity of Virtue to avoid eternal Shame and Misery. These Apostles, though they had not the Law, or written Gospel to urge upon their Hearers, yet having turned to God, they found, and preached the Gospel, that was written in their Hearts. Hence one of them could say this Divine Truth, viz., That such only are Priests and Prophets, who have God in themselves. Hence also it is, that in the Christian Church, there have been in all Ages, amongst the most illiterate, both Men and Women, who have attained to a deep Understanding of the Mysteries of the Wisdom and Love of God in Christ Jesus. And what wonder? Since it is not Art or Science, or Skill in Grammar or Logic, but the Opening of the Divine Life in the Soul, that can give true Understanding of the Things of God. This Life of God in the Soul, which for its Smallness at first, and Capacity for great Growth, is by our Lord compared to a Grain of Mustard Seed, may be, and too generally is suppressed and kept under, either by worldly Cares, or Pleasures, by vain Learning, Sensuality, or Ambition. And all this while, whatever Church, or Profession any Man is of, he is a mere Natural Man, unregenerate, unenlightened by the Spirit of God, because this Seed of Heaven is choked, and not suffered to grow up in him. And therefore his Religion is no more from Heaven than his fine Breeding; his Cares have no more Goodness in them than his Pleasures; his Love is worth no more than his Hatred; his Zeal for this, or against that Form of Religion, has only the Nature of any other worldly Contention in it. And thus it is, and must be with every mere natural Man, whatever Appearances he may put on, he may, if he pleases, know himself to be the Slave, and Machine of his own corrupt Tempers and Inclinations, to be enlightened, inspired, quickened and animated by Self-love, Self-esteem, and Self-seeking, which is the only Life, and Spirit of the mere natural Man, whether he be Heathen, Jew, or Christian.

On the other Hand, Wherever this Seed of Heaven is suffered to take Root, to get Life and Breath in the Soul, whether it be in Man, or Woman, young or old, there this new born inward Man is justly said to be inspired, enlightened, and moved by the Spirit of God, because his whole Birth and Life is a Birth from above, of the Light and Spirit of God; and therefore all that is in him, has the Nature, Spirit, and Tempers of Heaven in it. As this regenerate Life grows up in any Man, so there grows up a true and real Knowledge of the whole Mystery of Godliness in himself. All that the Gospel teaches of Sin and Grace, of Life and Death, of Heaven and Hell, of the New and Old Man, of the Light and Spirit of God, are Things not got by Hearsay, but inwardly known, felt and experienced in the Growth of his own new born Life. He has then an Uction from above which teaches him all Things, a Spirit that knows what it ought to pray for, a Spirit that prays without ceasing, that is risen with Christ from the Dead, and has all its Conversation in Heaven, a Spirit that has Groans and Sighs that cannot be uttered, that travaileth and groaneth with the whole Creation, to be delivered from Vanity, and have its glorious Liberty in that God, from whom it came forth.

Again, Thirdly, This Pearl of Eternity is the Church, or Temple of God within Thee, the consecrated Place of Divine Worship, where alone thou canst worship God in Spirit, and in Truth. In Spirit, because thy Spirit is that alone in Thee, which can unite, and cleave unto God, and receive the Workings of his Divine Spirit upon Thee. In Truth, because this Adoration in Spirit, is that Truth and Reality, of which all outward Forms and Rites, though instituted by God, are only the Figure for a Time, but this Worship is Eternal. Accustom thyself to the Holy Service of this inward Temple. In the midst of it is the Fountain of Living Water, of which thou mayest drink, and live for ever. There the Mysteries of thy Redemption are celebrated, or rather opened in Life and Power. There the Supper of the Lamb is kept; the Bread that came down from Heaven, that giveth Life to the World, is thy true Nourishment: all is done, and known in real Experience, in a living Sensibility of the Work of God on the Soul. There the Birth, the Life, the Sufferings, the Death, the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ, are not merely remembered, but inwardly found, and enjoyed as the real States of thy Soul, which has followed Christ in the Regeneration. When once thou art well grounded in this inward Worship, thou wilt have learnt to live unto God above Time, and Place. For every Day will be Sunday to thee, and wherever thou goest, thou wilt have a Priest, a Church, and an Altar along with Thee. For when God has all that He should have of thy Heart, when renouncing the Will, Judgment, Tempers and Inclinations of thy old Man, thou art wholly given up to the Obedience of the Light and Spirit of God within Thee, to Will only in his Will, to Love only in his Love, to be Wise only in his Wisdom, then it is, that every Thing thou doest is as a Song of Praise, and the common Business of thy Life is a conforming to God's Will on Earth, as Angels do in Heaven.

Fourthly, and Lastly, This Pearl of Eternity is the Peace and Joy of God within Thee, but can only be found by the Manifestation of the Life and Power of Jesus Christ in thy Soul. But Christ cannot be thy Power and thy Life, till in Obedience to his Call, thou deniest thyself, takest up thy daily Cross, and followest Him, in the Regeneration. This is peremptory, it admits of no Reserve or Evasion, it is the one Way to Christ and Eternal Life. But be where thou wilt, either here, or at Rome, or Genova, if Self is undenied, if thou livest to thine own Will, to the Pleasures of thy natural Lust and Appetites, Senses and Passions, and in Conformity to the vain Customs, and Spirit of this World, thou art dead whilst thou livest, the Seed of the Woman is crucified within Thee, Christ can profit thee Nothing, thou art a Stranger to all that is holy and heavenly within Thee, and utterly incapable of finding the Peace and Joy of God in thy Soul. And thus thou art Poor, and Blind, and Naked, and Empty, and livest a miserable Life in the Vanity of Time ; whilst all the Riches of Eternity, the Light and Spirit, the Wisdom and Love, the Peace and Joy of God are within Thee. And thus it will always be with Thee, there is no Remedy, go where thou wilt, do what thou wilt, all is shut up, there is no open Door of Salvation, no Awakening out of the Sleep of Sin, no Deliverance from the Power of thy corrupt Nature, no Overcoming of the World, no Revelation of Jesus Christ, no Joy of the New Birth from above, till dying to thy Self and the World, thou turnest to the Light, and Spirit, and Power of God in thy Soul. All is fruitless, and insignificant, all the Means of thy Redemption are at a Stand, all outward Forms are but a dead Formality, till this Fountain of Living Water is found within Thee.

But thou wilt perhaps say, How shall I discover this Riches of Eternity, this Light, and Spirit, and Wisdom, and Peace of God, treasured up within me ? Thy first Thought of Repentance, or Desire of turning to God, is thy first Discovery of this Light and Spirit of God within Thee. It is the Voice and Language of the Word of God within Thee, though thou knowest it not. It is the Bruiser of thy Serpent's Head, thy Dear Inmanuel, who is beginning to preach within Thee, that same which He first preached in public, saying, 'Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven 'is at Hand.' When therefore but the smallest Instinct or Desire of thy Heart calls Thee towards God, and a newness of Life, give it Time and Leave to speak ; and take care thou refuse not Him that speaketh. For it is not an Angel from Heaven that speaks to Thee, but it is the eternal speaking Word of God in thy Heart, that Word which at first created Thee, is thus beginning to create Thee a second Time unto Righteousness, that a new Man may be formed again in Thee in the Image and Likeness of God. But above all Things, beware of taking this Desire of Repentance to be the Effect of thy own Natural Sense and Reason, for in so doing thou lovest the Key of all the Heavenly Treasure that is in Thee, thou shuttest the Door against God, turnest away from Him, and thy Repentance (if thou hast any) will be only a vain, unprofitable Work of thy own Hands, that will do Thee no more Good, than a Well that is without Water. But if thou takest this awakened Desire of turning to God, to be, as in Truth it is, the coming of Christ in thy Soul, the Working, Redeeming Power of the Light and Spirit of the Holy Jesus within Thee, if thou dost reverence and adhere to it, as such, this Faith will save Thee, will make Thee whole ; and by thus believing in Christ, though thou wert dead, yet shalt thou live.

Now all depends upon thy right Submission and Obedience to this speaking of God in thy Soul. Stop therefore all Self-activity, listen not to the Suggestions of thy own Reason, run not on in thy own Will, but be retired, silent, passive, and humbly attentive to this new risen Light within Thee. Open thy Heart, thy Eyes, and Ears, to all its Impressions. Let it enlighten, teach, frighten, torment, judge, and condemn Thee, as it pleases, turn not away from it, hear all it says, seek for no Relief out of it, consult not with Flesh and Blood, but with a Heart full of Faith and Resignation to God, pray only this Prayer, that God's Kingdom may come, and his Will be done in thy Soul. Stand faithfully in this State of Preparation, thus given up to the Spirit of God, and then the Work of thy Repentance will be wrought in God, and thou wilt soon find, that He that is in Thee, is much greater than all that are against Thee.

But that thou mayest do all this the better, and be more firmly assured, that this Resignation to, and Dependence upon the working of God's Spirit within Thee, is right and sound, I shall lay before Thee two great, and infallible, and fundamental Truths, which will be as a Rock for thy Faith to stand upon.

First, That through all the whole Nature of Things, nothing can do, or be a real Good to thy Soul, but the Operation of God upon it. Secondly, That all the Dispensations of God to Mankind, from the Fall of Adam, to the Preaching of the Gospel, were only for this one End, to fit, prepare, and dispose the Soul for the Operation of the Spirit of God upon it. These two great Truths well and deeply apprehended, put the Soul in its right State, in a continual Dependence upon God, in a Readiness to receive all Good from Him, and will be a continual Source of Light in thy Mind. They will keep Thee safe from all Errors, and false Zeal in Things, and Forms of Religion, from a Sectarian Spirit, from Bigotry, and Superstition ; they will teach Thee the true Difference between the Means and End of Religion ; and the Regard thou showest to the Shell, will be only so far, as the Kernel is to be found in it.

Man, by his Fall, had broken off from his true Centre, his proper Place in God, and therefore the Life and Operation of God was no more in Him. He was fallen from a Life in God into a Life of Self, into an animal Life of Self-love, Self-esteem, and Self-seeking in the poor perishing Enjoyments of this World. This was the Natural State of Man by the Fall. He was an Apostate from God, and his natural Life was all Idolatry, where Self was the great Idol that was worshipped instead of God. See here the whole Truth in short. All Sin, Death, Damnation, and Hell, is nothing else but this Kingdom of Self, or the various Operations of Self-love, Self-esteem, and Self-seeking, which separate the Soul from God, and end in eternal Death and Hell.

On the other Hand, All that is Grace, Redemption, Salvation, Sanctification, Spiritual Life, and the New Birth, is nothing else but so much of the Life, and Operation of God found again in the Soul. It is Man come back again into his Centre or Place in God, from whence he had broken off. The Beginning again of the Life of God in the Soul, was then first made, when the Mercy of God inspoke into Adam a Seed of the Divine Life, which should bruise the Head of the Serpent, which had wrought itself into the human Nature. Here the Kingdom of God was again within us, though only as a Seed, yet small as it was, it was yet a Degree of the Divine Life, which if rightly cultivated, would overcome all the Evil that was in us, and make of every fallen Man a new-born Son of God.

All the Sacrifices and Institutions of the ancient Patriarchs, the Law of Moses, with all its Types, and Rites, and Ceremonies, had this only End; they were the Methods of Divine Wisdom for a Time, to keep the Hearts of Men from the Wanderings of Idolatry, in a State of Holy Expectation upon God, they were to keep the first Seed of Life in a State of Growth, and make Way for the further Operation of God upon the Soul; or, as the Apostle speaks, to be as a Schoolmaster unto Christ, that is, till the Birth, the Death, the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ, should conquer Death and Hell, open a new Dispensation of God, and baptize Mankind afresh with the Holy Ghost, and Fire of Heaven. Then, that is, on the Day of Pentecost, a new Dispensation of God came forth; which on God's Part, was the Operation of the Holy Spirit in Gifts and Graces upon the whole Church; and on Man's Part, it was the Adoration of God in Spirit and in Truth. Thus all that was done by God, from the Bruiser of the Serpent given to Adam, to Christ's sitting down on the right Hand of God, was all for this End, to remove all that stood between God and Man, and to make Way for the immediate and continual Operation of God upon the Soul; and that Man, baptized with the Holy Spirit, and born again from Above, should absolutely renounce Self, and wholly give up his Soul to the Operation of God's Spirit, to know, to love, to will, to pray, to worship, to preach, to exhort, to use all the Faculties of his Mind, and all the outward Things of this World, as enlightened, inspired, moved and guided by the Holy Ghost, who by this last Dispensation of God, was given to be a Comforter, a Teacher, and Guide to the Church, who should abide with it for ever.

This is Christianity, a spiritual Society, not because it has no worldly Concerns, but because all its Members, as such, are born of the Spirit, kept alive, animated and governed by the Spirit of God. It is constantly called by our Lord the Kingdom of God, or Heaven, because all its Ministry and Service, all that is done in it, is done in Obedience and Subjection to that Spirit, by which Angels live, and are governed in Heaven.* Hence our blessed Lord taught his Disciples to pray, that this Kingdom might come, that so God's Will might be done on Earth, as it is in Heaven; which could not be, but by that same Spirit, by which it is done in Heaven. The short is this: The Kingdom of Self is the Fall of Man, or the great Apostasy from the Life of God in the Soul; and everyone wherever he be, that lives unto Self, is still under the Fall and great Apostasy from God. The Kingdom of Christ is the Spirit and Power of God dwelling and manifesting itself in the Birth of a new inward Man; and no one is a Member of this Kingdom, but so far as a true Birth of the Spirit is brought forth in him. These two Kingdoms take in all Mankind, he that is not of one, is certainly in the other; Dying to one is Living to the other.

Hence we may gather these following Truths: First, Here is shown the true Ground and Reason of what was said above, namely, That when the Call of God to Repentance first arises in thy Soul, thou art to be retired, silent, passive, and humbly attentive to this new risen Light within thee, by wholly stopping, or disregarding the Workings of thy own Will, Reason, and Judgment. It is because all these are false Counsellors, the sworn Servants, bribed Slaves of thy fallen Nature, they are all Born and Bred in the Kingdom of Self; and therefore if a new Kingdom is to be set up in thee, if the Operation of God is to have its Effect in thee, all these natural Powers of Self are to be silenced and suppressed, till they have learned Obedience and Subjection to the Spirit of God. Now this is not requiring thee to become a Fool, or to give up thy Claim to Sense and Reason, but is the shortest Way to have thy Sense and Reason delivered from Folly, and thy whole rational Nature strengthened, enlightened, and guided by that Light, which is Wisdom itself.

A Child that obediently denies his own Will, and own Reason, to be guided by the Will and Reason of a truly wise and understanding Tutor, cannot be said to make himself a Fool, and give up the Benefit of his rational Nature, but to have taken the shortest Way to have his own Will and Reason made truly a Blessing to him.

Secondly, Hence is to be seen the true Ground and Necessity of that universal Mortification and Self-denial with regard to all our Senses, Appetites, Tempers, Passions and Judgments. It is because all our whole Nature, as fallen from the Life of God, is in a State of Contrariety to the Order and End of our Creation, a continual Source of disorderly Appetites, corrupt Tempers, and false Judgments. And therefore every Motion of it is to be mortified, changed and purified from its natural State, before we can enter into the Kingdom of God. Thus when our Lord says, 'Except a Man hateth his Father and Mother, yea, and his own Life, he cannot be my Disciple'; it is because our best Tempers are yet carnal, and full of the Imperfections of our fallen Nature. The Doctrine is just and good; not as if Father and Mother were to be hated; but that Love, which an unregenerate Person, or natural Man, has towards them, is to be hated, as being a blind Self-love, full of all the Weakness and Partiality, with which fallen Man loves, honours, esteems, and cleaves to himself. This Love, born from corrupt Flesh and Blood, and polluted with Self, is to be hated and parted with, that we may love them with a Love born of God, with such a Love, and on such a Motive, as Christ has loved us. And then the Disciple of Christ far exceeds all others in the Love of Parents. Again, Our own Life is to be hated; and the Reason is plain, it is because there is nothing lovely in it. It is a Legion of Evil, a monstrous Birth of the Serpent, the World, and the Flesh; it is an Apostasy from the Life and Power of God in the Soul, a Life that is Death to Heaven, that is pure unmixed Idolatry, that lives wholly to Self, and not to God; and therefore all this own Life is to be absolutely hated, all this Self is to be denied and mortified, if the Nature, Spirit, Tempers and Inclinations of Christ are to be brought to Life in us. For it is as impossible to live to both these Lives at once, as for a Body to move two contrary Ways at the same Time. And therefore all these Mortifications and Self-denials have an absolute Necessity in the Nature of the Thing itself.

Thus when our Lord further says, unless a Man forsaketh all that he hath, he cannot be my Disciple; the Reason is plain, and the Necessity absolute. It is because all that the natural Man has, is in the Possession of Self-love, and therefore this Possession is to be absolutely forsaken, and parted with. All that he has, is to be put into other Hands, to be given to Divine Love, or this natural Man cannot be changed into a Disciple of Christ. For Self-love in all that it has, is earthly, sensual, and devilish, and therefore must have all taken away from it ; and then to the natural Man all is lost, he has nothing left, all is laid down at the Feet of Jesus. And then all Things are common, as soon as Self-love has lost the Possession of them. And then the Disciple of Christ, though having nothing, yet possesseth all Things, all that the natural Man has forsaken, is restored to the Disciple of Christ an hundred-fold. For Self-love, the greatest of all Thieves, being now cast out, and all that he had stolen and hidden, thus taken from him, and put into the Hands of Divine Love, every Mite becomes a large Treasure, and Mammon opens the Door into everlasting Habitations. This was the Spirit of the first Draught of a Christian Church at Jerusalem, a Church made truly after the Pattern of Heaven, where the Love that reigns in Heaven reigned in it, where Divine Love broke down all the selfish Fences, the Locks and Bolts of me, mine, my own, &c., and laid all Things common to the Members of this new Kingdom of God on Earth.

Now though many Years did not pass after the Age of the Apostles, before Satan and Self got footing in the Church, and set up Merchandize in the House of God, yet this one Heart, and one Spirit, which then first appeared in the Jerusalem Church, is that one Heart and Spirit of Divine Love, to which all are called, that would be true Disciples of Christ. And though the Practice of it is lost as to the Church in general, yet it ought not to have been lost ; and therefore every Christian ought to make it his great Care and Prayer, to have it restored in himself. And then, though born in the Dregs of Time, or living in Babylon, he will be as truly a Member of the first heavenly Church at Jerusalem, as if he had lived in it, in the Days of the Apostles. This Spirit of Love, born of that celestial Fire, with which Christ baptizes his true Disciples, is alone that Spirit, which can enter into Heaven, and therefore is that Spirit which is to be born in us, whilst we are on Earth. For no one can enter into Heaven, till he is made heavenly, till the Spirit of Heaven is entered into him. And therefore all that our Lord has said of denying and dying to Self, and of his parting with all that he has, are Practices absolutely necessary from the Nature of the Thing.

Because all turning to Self is so far turning from God, and so much as we have of Self-love, so much we have of a hellish, earthly Weight, that must be taken off, or there can be no Ascension into Heaven. But thou wilt perhaps say, If all Self- love is to be renounced, then all Love of our Neighbour is renounced along with it, because the Commandment is, only to love our Neighbour as ourselves. The Answer here is easy, and yet no Quarter given to Self-love. There is but one only Love in Heaven, and yet the Angels of God love one another in the same manner, as they love themselves. The Matter is thus: The one supreme, unchangeable Rule of Love, which is a Law to all intelligent Beings of all Worlds, and will be a Law to all Eternity, is this, viz., That God alone is to be loved for himself, and all other Beings only in Him, and for Him. Whatever intelligent Creature lives not under this Rule of Love, is so far fallen from the Order of his Creation, and is, till He returns to this eternal Law of Love, an Apostate from God, and incapable of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Now if God alone is to be loved for Himself, then no Creature is to be loved for itself; and so all Self-love in every Creature is absolutely condemned.

And if all created Beings are only to be loved in and for God, then my Neighbour is to be loved, as I love myself, and I am only to love myself, as I love my Neighbour, or any other created Being, that is, only in and for God. And thus the Command of loving our Neighbour as ourselves, stands firm, and yet all Self-love is plucked up by the Roots. But what is loving any Creature, only in, and for God? It is when we love it only as it is God's Work, Image, and Delight, when we love it merely as it is God's, and belongs to him, this is loving it in God, and when all that we wish, intend, or do to it, is done from a Love of God, for the Honour of God, and in Conformity to the Will of God, this is loving it for God. This is the one Love that is, and must be the Spirit of all Creatures that live united to God. Now this is no speculative Refinement, or fine-spun Fiction of the Brain, but the simple Truth, a first Law of Nature, and a necessary Band of Union between God and the Creature. The Creature is not in God, is a Stranger to Him, has lost the Life of God in itself, whenever its Love does not thus begin and end in God.

The Loss of this Love, was the Fall of Man, as it opened in him a Kingdom of Self, in which Satan, the World, and the Flesh, could all of them bring forth their own Works.* If therefore Man is to rise from his Fall, and return to his Life in God, there is an absolute Necessity that Self, with all his Brood of gross Affections, be deposed, that his first Love in and for which he was created, may be born again in him. Christ came into the World to save Sinners, to destroy the Works of the Devil. Now Self is not only the Seat and Habitation, but the very Life of Sin. The Works of the Devil are all wrought in Self, it is his peculiar Workhouse, and therefore Christ is not come as a Saviour from Sin, as a Destroyer of the Works of the Devil in any of us, but so far as Self is beaten down, and overcome in us. If it is literally true, what our Lord said, That his Kingdom was not of this World, then it is a Truth of the same Certainty, that no one is a Member of this Kingdom, but he that in the literal Sense of the Words renounces the Spirit of this World. Christians might as well part with half the Articles of their Creed, or but half believe them, as really to refuse, or but by halves enter into these Self-denials.

For all that is in the Creed, is only to bring forth this Dying and Death to all and every Part of the old Man, that the Life and Spirit of Christ may be formed in us.

Our Redemption is this new Birth; if this is not done, or doing in us, we are still unredeemed. And though the Saviour of the World is come, He is not come in us, He is not received by us, is a Stranger to us, is not ours, if his Life is not within us. His Life is not, cannot be within us, but so far as the Spirit of the World, Self-love, Self-esteem, and Self-seeking, are renounced, and driven out of us.

Thirdly, Hence we may also learn the true Nature and Worth of all Self-denials and Mortifications. As to their Nature, considered in themselves, they have nothing of Goodness or Holiness, nor are any real Parts of our Sanctification, they are not the true Food or Nourishment of the Divine Life in our Souls, they have no Quickening, Sanctifying Power in them; their only Worth consists in this, that they remove the Impediments of Holiness, break down that which stands between God and us, and make Way for the Quickening, Sanctifying Spirit of God to operate on our Souls. Which Operation of God is the one only Thing that can raise the Divine Life in the Soul, or help it to the smallest Degree of real Holiness, or Spiritual Life. As in our Creation, we had only that Degree of a Divine Life, which the Power of God derived into us; as then all that we had, and were, was the sole Operation of God in the Creation of us; so in our Redemption, or regaining that first Perfection, which we have lost, all must be again the Operation of God; every Degree of the Divine Life restored in us, be it ever so small, must and can be nothing else but so much of the Life and Operation of God found again in the Soul. All the Activity of Man in the Works of Self-denial has no Good in itself, but is only to open an Entrance for the one only Good, the Light of God, to operate upon us.

Hence also we may learn the Reason, why many People not only lose the Benefit, but are even the worse for all their Mortifications. It is because they mistake the whole Nature and Worth of them. They practise them for their own Sakes, as Things good in themselves, they think them to be real Parts of Holiness, and so rest in them, and look no further, but grow full of Self-esteem, and Self-admiration, for their own Progress in them. This makes them Self-sufficient, morose, severe Judges of all those that fall short of their Mortifications.

And thus their Self-denials do only that for them, which Indulgences do for other People, they withstand and hinder the Operation of God upon their Souls, and instead of being really Self-denials, they strengthen and keep up the Kingdom of Self.

There is no avoiding this fatal Error, but by deeply entering into this great Truth, that all our own Activity and Working has no Good in it, can do no Good to us, but as it leads and turns us in the best Manner to the Light and Spirit of God, which alone brings Life and Salvation into the Soul. 'Stretch forth thy Hand,' said our Lord to the Man 'that had a withered Hand;' he did so, and 'it was immediately made whole as the other.'

Now had this Man any Ground for Pride, or a high Opinion of himself, for the Share he had in the Restoring of his Hand? Yet just such is our Share in the Raising up of the Spiritual Life within us. All that we can do by our own Activity, is only like this Man's stretching out his Hand; the rest is the Work of Christ, the only Giver of Life to the withered Hand, or the dead Soul. We can only then do living Works, when we are so far born again, as to be able to say with the Apostle, 'Yet not I, but Christ that liveth in me.' But to return, and further show, how the Soul that feels the Call of God to Repentance is to behave under it, that this stirring of the Divine Power in the Soul may have its full Effect, and bring forth the Birth of the new Man in Christ Jesus. We are to consider it (as in Truth it is) as the Seed of the Divine Nature within us, that can only grow by its own Strength, and Union with God. It is a Divine Life, and therefore can grow from nothing but Divine Power. When the Virgin Mary conceived the Birth of the holy Jesus, all that she did towards it herself, was only this single Act of Faith and Resignation to God; 'Behold the Handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy Word.' This is all that we can do towards the Conception of that new Man that is to be born in ourselves. Now this Truth is easily consented to, and a Man thinks he believes it, because he consents to it, or rather, does not deny it. But this is not enough, it is to be apprehended in a deep, full, and practical Assurance, in such a Manner as a Man knows and believes that he did not create the Stars, or cause Life to rise up in himself. And then it is a Belief, that puts the Soul into a right State, that makes room for the Operation of God upon it. His Light then enters with full Power into the Soul, and his holy Spirit moves and directs all that is done in it, and so Man lives again in God as a new Creature. For this Truth thus firmly believed, will have these two most excellent Effects: First, It will keep the Soul fixed, and continually turned towards God, in Faith, Prayer, Desire, Confidence, and Resignation to Him, for all that it wants to have done in it, and to it; which will be a continual Source of all Divine Virtues and Graces. The Soul thus turned to God must be always receiving from Him. It stands at the true Door of all Divine Communications, and the Light of God as freely enters into it, as the Light of the Sun enters into the Air. Secondly, It will fix and ground the Soul in a true and lasting Self-denial. For by thus knowing and owning our own Nothingness and Inability, that we have no other Capacity for Good, but that of receiving it from God alone, Self is wholly denied, its Kingdom is destroyed; no room is left for spiritual Pride and Self-esteem; we are saved from a Phari-saical Holiness, from wrong Opinions of our own Works and good Deeds, and from a Multitude of Errors, the most dangerous to our Souls, all which arise from the Something that we take ourselves to be either in Nature or Grace. But when we once apprehend but in some good Degree, the All of God, and the Nothingness of ourselves, we have got a Truth, whose Usefulness and Benefit no Words can express. It brings a Kind of Infallibility into the Soul in which it dwells; all that is vain, and false, and deceitful, is forced to vanish and fly before it. When our Religion is founded on this Rock, it has the Firmness of a Rock, and its Height reaches unto Heaven. The World, the Flesh, and the Devil, can do no hurt to it; all Enemies are known, and all disarmed by this great Truth dwelling in our Souls. It is the Knowledge of the All of God, that makes Cherubims and Seraphims to be Flames of Divine Love. For where this All of God is truly known, and felt in any Creature, there its whole Breath and Spirit is a Fire of Love, nothing but a pure disinterested Love can arise up in it, or come from it, a Love that begins and ends in God. And where this Love is born in any Creature, there a Seraphic Life is born along with it. For this pure Love introduces the Creature into the All of God; all that is in God is opened in the Creature, it is united with God, and has the Life of God manifested in it.

There is but one Salvation for all Mankind, and that is the Life of God in the Soul. God has but one Design or Intent towards all Mankind, and that is to introduce or generate his own Life, Light, and Spirit in them, that all may be as so many Images, Temples, and Habitations of the Holy Trinity. This is God's good Will to all Christians, Jews, and Heathens. They are all equally the Desire of his Heart, his Light continually waits for an Entrance into all of them, his Wisdom crieth, she putteth forth her Voice, not here, or there, but everywhere, in all the Streets of all the Parts of the World.

Now there is but one possible Way for Man to attain this Salvation, or Life of God in the Soul. There is not one for the Jew, another for a Christian, and a Third for the Heathen. No; God is one, human Nature is one, Salvation is one, and the Way to it is one; and that is, the Desire of the Soul turned to God. When this Desire is alive and breaks forth in any Creature under Heaven, then the lost Sheep is found, and the Shepherd has it upon his Shoulders. Through this Desire the Poor prodigal Son leaves his Husks and Swine, and hastes to his Father: it is because of this Desire, that the Father sees the Son, while yet afar off, that he runs out to meet him, falls on his Neck, and kisses him. See here how plainly we are taught, that no sooner is this Desire arisen, and in Motion towards God, but the Operation of God's Spirit answers to it, cherishes and welcomes its first Beginnings, signified by the Father's seeing, and having Compassion on his Son, whilst yet afar off, that is, in the first Beginnings of his Desire. Thus does this Desire do all, it brings the Soul to God, and God into the Soul, it unites with God, it co-operates with God, and is one Life with God. Suppose this Desire not to be alive, not in Motion either in a Jew, or a Christian, and then all the Sacrifices, the Service, the Worship either of the Law, or the Gospel, are but dead Works, that bring no Life into the Soul, nor beget any Union between God and it. Suppose this Desire to be awakened, and fixed upon God, though in Souls that never heard either of the Law or Gospel, and then the Divine Life, or Operation of God, enters into them, and the new Birth in Christ is formed in those who never heard of his Name. And these are they 'that shall come 'from the East, and from the West, and sit down with Abraham, 'and Isaac, in the Kingdom of God.'

Oh my God, just and good, how great is thy Love and Mercy to Mankind, that Heaven is thus everywhere open, and Christ thus the common Saviour to all that turn the Desire of their Hearts to thee! Oh sweet Power of the Bruiser of the Serpent, born in every Son of Man, that stirs and works in every Man, and gives every Man a Power, and Desire, to find his Happiness in God! O holy Jesus, heavenly Light, that lightest every Man that cometh into the World, that redeemest every Soul that follows thy Light, which is always within Him! O holy Trinity, immense Ocean of Divine Love in which all Mankind live, and move, and have their Being! None are separated from Thee, none live out of thy Love, but all are embraced in the Arms of thy Mercy, all are Partakers of thy Divine Life, the Operation of thy holy Spirit, as soon as their Heart is turned to Thee! Oh plain, and easy, and simple Way of Salvation, wanting no Subtleties of Art or Science, no borrowed Learning, no Refinements of Reason, but all done by the simple natural Motion of every Heart, that truly longs after God. For no sooner is the finite Desire of the Creature in motion towards God, but the infinite Desire of God is united with it, co-operates with it. And in this united Desire of God and the Creature, is the Salvation and Life of the Soul brought forth. For the Soul is shut out of God, and imprisoned in its own dark Workings of Flesh and Blood, merely and solely, because it desires to live to the Vanity of this World. This Desire is its Darkness, its Death, its Imprisonment, and Separation from God.

When therefore the first Spark of a Desire after God arises in thy Soul, cherish it with all thy Care, give all thy Heart into it, it is nothing less than a Touch of the Divine Loadstone, that is to draw Thee out of the Vanity of Time into the Riches of Eternity. Get up therefore and follow it as gladly, as the Wise men of the East followed the Star from Heaven that appeared to them. It will do for Thee, as the Star did for them, it will lead Thee to the Birth of Jesus, not in a Stable at Bethlehem in Judea, but to the Birth of Jesus in the dark Centre of thy own fallen Soul.

I shall conclude this first Part, with the Words of the heavenly Illuminated, and blessed Jacob Behmen.

‘It is much to be lamented, that we are so blindly led, and the ‘Truth withheld from us through imaginary Conceptions; for if ‘the Divine Power in the inward Ground of the Soul was ‘manifest, and working with its Lustre in us, then is the whole ‘Triune God present in the Life and Will of the Soul; and the ‘Heaven, wherein God dwells, is opened in the Soul, and There, ‘in the Soul, is the Place where the Father begets his Son, and ‘where the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son.

‘Christ says, “I am the Light of the World, he that followeth ‘me, walketh not in Darkness.” He directs us only to himself, ‘He is the Morning Star, and is generated and rises in us, and ‘shines in the Darkness of our Nature. O how great a Triumph ‘is there in the Soul, when he arises in it! then a Man knows, ‘as he never knew before, that he is a Stranger in a foreign Land.’

A PRAYER.

OH heavenly Father, infinite, fathomless Depth of never-ceasing Love, save me from myself, from the disorderly Workings of my fallen, long corrupted Nature, and let my Eyes see, my Heart and Spirit feel and find, thy Salvation in Christ Jesus.

O God, who madest me for thyself, to show forth thy Goodness in me, manifest, I humbly beseech Thee, the Life-giving Power of thy holy Nature within me; help me to such a true and living Faith in Thee, such Strength of Hunger and Thirst after the Birth, Life, and Spirit of thy Holy Jesus in my Soul, that all that is within me, may be turned from every inward Thought, or outward Work, that is not Thee, thy Holy Jesus, and heavenly working in my Soul. Amen.

BETWEEN

Academicus, Rusticus, and Theophilus.

At which Humanus was present.

A*CAD.* Well met, honest Rusticus. I can now tell you with much Pleasure, that we shall soon see a Second Part of the Spirit of Prayer. And as soon as I get it, I will come and read it to you.

Rust. I have often told you, Academicus, that I wondered at your Eagerness and Impatience to see more of this Matter. As to my Part, I have no such Thrift within me, and should make no Complaint, if it never came out.

Acad. My Friend Rusticus, you cannot read; and that is the Reason, that you are not in my State of Impatience, to see another Book.

Rust. Indeed, Academicus, you quite mistake the Matter. The First Part of the Spirit of Prayer you read to me more than three or four times, and that is the Reason, why I am in no State of Eagerness after a Second Part. I have found in the First Part, all that I need to know of God, of Christ, of myself, of Heaven, of Hell, of Sin, of Grace, of Death, and of Salvation: That all these Things have their Being, their Life, and their Working, in my own Heart: That God is always in me, that Christ is always within me; that he is the inward Light and Life of my Soul, a Bread from Heaven, of which I may always eat; a Water of eternal Life springing up in my Soul, of which I may always drink. O my Friend, these Truths have opened a new Life in my Soul: I am brought home to myself; the Veil is taken off from my Heart; I have found my God; I know that his Dwelling-place, his Kingdom, is within me. What need we then call out for Books written only with Pen and Ink, when such a Book as this, so full of Wonders, is once opened in our own Hearts? My Eyes, my Ears, my Thoughts, are all turned inwards, because all that God, and Christ, and Grace, are doing for me, all that the Devil, the World, and the Flesh, are working against me, are only to be known, and found there. What need then of so much News from abroad, since all that concerns either Life or Death, are all transacting, and all at work, within me?

How could I be said to have felt these great Truths, to be sensible of these Riches of Eternity treasured up in my Soul, to know what a great Good the Divine Nature is in me, and to me, if instead of turning all the Desire and Delight of my Heart towards them, I only felt a Longing and Desire to read more concerning the Spirit of Prayer? No, Academicus, another, and a better Fire is kindled within me; my Heart is in motion, and all that is within me tends towards God; and I find that nothing concerns me more, than to keep my Heart from wandering after anything else. I now know to what it is that I am daily to die, and to what it is that I am daily to live; and therefore look upon every Day as lost, that does not help forwards both this Death, and this Life, in me. I have not yet done half, what the First Part of the Spirit of Prayer directs me to do, and therefore have but little Occasion to call out for a Second.

Theop. Indeed, Academicus, I must own, that honest Rusticus, as you called him, has spoken well. Your Education has so accustomed you to the Pleasure of reading Variety of Books, that you hardly propose any other End in reading, than the Entertainment of your Mind: Thus the Spirit of Prayer has only awakened in you a Desire to see another Part upon the same Subject. This Fault is very common to others, as well as Scholars, and even to those who only delight in reading good Books.

Philo for this twenty Years has been collecting and reading all the spiritual Books he can hear of. He reads them, as the Critics read Commentators and Lexicons, to be nice and exact in telling you the Style, Spirit, and Intent of this or that spiritual Writer, how one is more accurate in this, and the other in that. Philo will ride you forty Miles in Winter to have a Conversation about spiritual Books, or to see a Collection larger than his own. Philo is amazed at the Deadness and Insensibility of the Christian World, that they are such Strangers to the inward Life and spiritual Nature of the Christian Salvation; he wonders how they can be so zealous for the outward Letter and Form of Ordinances, and so averse to that spiritual Life, that they all point at, as the one thing needful. But Philo never thinks how wonderful it is, that a Man who knows Regeneration to be the Whole, should yet content himself with the Love of Books upon the new Birth, instead of being born again himself. For all that is changed in Philo, is his Taste for Books. He is no more dead to the World, no more delivered from himself, is as fearful of Adversity, as fond of Prosperity, as easily provoked, and pleased with Trifles, as much governed by his own Will, Tempers, and Passions, as unwilling to deny his Appetites, or enter into War with himself, as he was twenty Years ago. Yet all is well with Philo; he has no Suspicion of himself; he dates the Newness of his Life, and the Fulness of his Light, from the time that he discovered the Pearl of Eternity in spiritual Authors.

All this, Academicus, is said on your Account, that you may not lose the Benefit of this Spark of the Divine Life that is kindled in your Soul, but may conform yourself suitably to so great a Gift of God.

It demands at present an Eagerness of another Kind, than that of much reading, even upon the most spiritual Matters.

Acad. I thank you, Theophilus, for your good Will towards me; but did not imagine my Eagerness after such Books to be so great and dangerous a Mistake. And if I do not yet entirely give into what you say, it is because a Friend of yours has told us (and as I thought by way of Direction) that he has been a diligent Reader of all the spiritual Authors, from the apostolical Dionysius down to the illuminated Guion, and celebrated Fenelon of Cambray: And therefore it would never have come into my Head, to suspect it to be a Fault, or dangerous, to follow his Example.

Theoph. I have said nothing, my Friend, with a Design of hindering your Acquaintance with all the truly spiritual Writers. I would rather in a right Way help you to a true Intimacy with them: For they are Friends of God, entrusted with his Secrets, and Partakers of the Divine Nature: And he that converses rightly with them, has a Happiness, that can hardly be over-valued.

My Intention is only to abate, for a time, a Spirit of Eagerness after much reading, which in your State has more of Nature than Grace in it; which seeks Delight in a Variety of new Notions, and rather gratifies Curiosity, than reforms the Heart.

Suppose you had seen an Angel from Heaven, who had discovered to you a Glimpse of its own internal Brightness, and of that glorious Union in which it lived with God, opening more of itself to the inward Sight of your Mind, than you could either forget or relate. Suppose it had told you with a piercing Word, and living Impression, that all its own angelic and heavenly Brightness was hid in yourself, concealed from you under a bestial Covering of Flesh and Blood; that this Flesh and Blood was become the Master of it, would not suffer it to breathe, or stir, or come to Life in you. Suppose it had told you, that all your Life had been spent in helping this Flesh and Blood to more and more Power over you, to hinder you from knowing and feeling this Divine Life within you. Suppose it had told you, that to this Day you had lived in the grossest Self-idolatry, loving, serving, honouring, and adoring yourself instead of loving, serving, and adoring God with all your Heart, and Soul, and Spirit : That all your Intentions, Projects, Cares, Pleasures, and Indulgences, had been only so much Labour to bring you to the Grave in a total Ignorance of that great Work, for which alone you were born into the World.

Suppose it had told you, that all this Blindness and Insensibility of your State, was obstinately and wilfully brought upon yourself, because you had boldly slighted and resisted all the daily inward and outward Calls of God to your Soul, all the Teachings, Doings, and Sufferings, of a Son of God to redeem you. Suppose it left you with this Farewell, O Man awake ; thy Work is great, thy Time is short, I am thy last Trumpet ; the Grave calls for thy Flesh and Blood, thy Soul must enter into a new Lodging. To be born again, is to be an Angel : Not to be born again is to become a Devil.

Tell me now, Academicus, what would you expect from a Man who had been thus awakened, and pierced by the Voice of an Angel ? Could you think he had any Sense left, if he was not cast into the deepest Depth of Humility, Self-dejection, and Self-abhorrence ? Casting himself, with a broken Heart, at the Feet of the Divine Mercy, desiring nothing but that, from that Time, every Moment of his Life might be given unto God, in the most perfect Denial of every Temper, Will, and Inclination, that nourished the Corruption of his Nature : Wishing and praying from the Bottom of his Heart, that God would lead him into and through everything inwardly and outwardly, that might destroy the evil Workings of his Nature, and awaken all that was holy and heavenly within him ; that the Seed of Eternity, the Spark of Life, that he had so long quenched and smothered under earthly Rubbish, might breathe, and come to Life, in him.

Or would you think he was enough affected with this angelic Visit, if all that it had awakened in him, was only a Longing and eager Desire to hear the same, or another Angel talk again ?

Acad. Oh Thcophilus, you have said enough : For all that is within me consents to the Truth and Justness of what you have said. I now feel in the strongest Manner, that I have been rather amused, than edified, by what I have read.

Theoph. A spiritual Book, Academicus, is a Call to as real and total a Death to the Life of corrupt Nature, as that which Adam died in Paradise, was to the Life of Heaven. He indeed died at once totally to the Divine Life in which he was created: But as our Body of Earth is to last to the End of our Lives; so to the End of our earthly Life, every Step we take, every Inch of our Road, is to be made up of Denial, and dying to ourselves; because all our Redemption consists in our regaining that first Life of Heaven in the Soul, to which Adam died in Paradise. And therefore the one single Work of Redemption, is the one single Work of Regeneration, or the raising up of a Life, and Spirit, and Tempers, and Inclinations, contrary to that Life and Spirit which we derive from our earthly fallen Parents. To think therefore of anything, but the continual, total Denial of our earthly Nature, is to overlook the very one thing on which all depends. And to hope for anything, to trust or pray for anything, but the Life of God, or a Birth of Heaven, in our Souls, is as useless to us, as placing our Hope and Trust in a graven Image. Thus saith the Christ of God the one Pattern, and Author of our Salvation: 'If any Man will be my Disciple, let him deny himself, hate his own Life, take up his daily Cross, and follow me.' And again: 'Unless a Man be born again from above, of Water and the Spirit, he cannot see, or enter into, the Kingdom of God.'

Now is your time, Academicus, to enter deeply into this great Truth. You are just come out of the Slumber of Life, and begin to see with new Eyes the Nature of your Salvation. You are charmed with the Discovery of a Kingdom of Heaven hidden within you, and long to be entertained more and more with the Nature, Progress, and Perfection of the new Birth, or the Opening of the Kingdom of God in your Soul.

But my Friend, stop a little. It is indeed great Joy, that the Pearl of great Price is found; but take notice, that it is not yours, you can have no Possession of it, till, as the Merchant did, you sell all that you have, and buy it. Now Self is all that you have, it is your sole Possession; you have no Goods of your own, nothing is yours but this Self. The Riches of Self are your own Riches; but all this Self is to be parted with before the Pearl is yours. Think of a lower Price, or be unwilling to give thus much for it, plead in your Excuse, that you keep the Commandments, and then you are that very rich young Man in the Gospel, who went away sorrowful from our Lord, when he had said, 'If thou wilt be perfect,' that is, if thou wilt obtain the Pearl, 'sell all that thou hast, and give to the Poor'; that is, die to all thy Possession of Self, and then thou hast given all that thou hast to the Poor ; all that thou hast is devoted and used for the Love of God and thy Neighbour. This selling all, Academicus, is the Measure of your dying to Self ; all of it is to be given up ; it is an apostate Nature, a stolen Life, brought forth in Rebellion against God : it is a continual Departure from him. It corrupts everything it touches ; it defiles everything it receives ; it turns all the Gifts and Blessings of God into Covetousness, Partiality, Pride, Hatred, and Envy. All these Tempers are born, and bred, and nourished, in Self ; they have no other Place to live in, no Possibility of Existence, but in that Creature which is fallen from a Life in God, into a Life in Self.

Acad. Pray, Sir, tell me more plainly, what this Self is, since so much depends upon it.

Theoph. It is Hell, it is the Devil, it is Darkness, Pain, and Disquiet. It is the one only Enemy of Christ, the great Antichrist. It is the Scarlet Whore, the fiery Dragon, the old Serpent, the devouring Beast, that is mentioned in the Revelation of St. John.

Acad. You rather terrify than instruct me, by this Description.

Theoph. It is indeed a very frightful Matter ; it contains everything that Man has to dread and hate, to resist and avoid. Yet be assured, my Friend, that, careless and merry as the World is, every Man that is born into it, has all these Enemies to overcome within himself. And every Man, till he is in the Way of Regeneration, is more or less governed by them. No Hell in any remote Place, no Devil that is separate from you, no Darkness or Pain that is not within you, no Antichrist either at Rome or England, no furious Beast, no fiery Dragon, without, or apart from you, can do you any Hurt. It is your own Hell, your own Devil, your own Beast, your own Antichrist, your own Dragon, that lives in your own Heart's Blood, that alone can hurt you.

Die to this Self, to this inward Nature ; and then all outward Enemies are overcome. Live to this Self, and then, when this Life is out, all that is within you, and all that is without you, will be nothing else but a mere seeing and feeling this Hell, Serpent, Beast, and fiery Dragon.

See here, Academicus, the twofold Nature of every Man. He has within him a redeeming Power, the Meekness of the heavenly Life, called the Lamb of God. This seed is surrounded, or encompassed, with the Beast of fleshly Lusts, the Serpent of Guile and Subtlety, and the Dragon of fiery Wrath. This is the great Trial, or Strife of human Life, whether a Man will live to the Lusts of the Beast, the Guile of the Serpent, the Pride and Wrath of the fiery Dragon, or give himself up to the Meekness, the Patience, the Sweetness, the Simplicity, the Humility, of the Lamb of God.

This is the Whole of the Matter between God and the Creature. On one Side, Fire and Wrath, awakened first by the rebellious Angels; and on the other Side, the Meekness of the Lamb of God, the Patience of Divine Love coming down from Heaven, to stop and overcome the Fire and Wrath that is broken out in Nature and Creature. Your Father Adam has introduced you into the Fire and Wrath of the fallen Angels, into a World from whence Paradise is departed. Your Flesh and Blood is kindled in that Sin, which first brought forth a murdering Cain. But, dear Soul, be of good Comfort, for the Meekness, the Love, the Heart, the Lamb of God, is become Man, has set himself in the Birth of thy own Life, that in him, and with him, and by a Birth from him, Heaven and Paradise may be again opened both within thee, and without thee, not for a Time, but to all Eternity.

Once more, Academicus. Every Man in this World stands essentially in Heaven, and in Hell, both as to that which is within him and that which is without him: For Man and the World are both in the same fallen State. The Curse in the Earth is that same thing in outward Nature, that the Loss of the Divine Life was to the Soul of Adam. The whole World, in all its Nature, is nothing else but a real Mixture of Heaven and Hell. The Sun and the Water of this World, are what keep under and overcome the Darkness, Wrath, and Fire of Hell, and carry on the vegetable and animal Life that are in it. The Light of the Sun blesses all the Workings of the Elements, and the cool softening Essence of the Water, keeps under the Fire and Wrath of Nature. In all animal Creatures, the Birth of Light in their own Life, and the Water of their own Blood, both produced by the Light of the Sun, and the Water of outward Nature, bring forth an Order of earthly Creatures, that can enjoy the Good that is in this World, in Spite of the Wrath of Hell, and the Malice of Devils.

But Man has more than all this; for being at first created an Angel, and intended by the Mercy of God to be an Angel again, he has the Light of Heaven, and the Water of eternal Life, both given to Adam in that Seed of the Woman, which was to bruise the Head of the Serpent that is, to overcome the Curse, the Fire, and Wrath, or Hell, that was awakened in the fallen Soul. So that Man has not only, in common with the other Animals, the Light and Water of outward Nature, to quench the Wrath of his own Life in this mixed World, but he has the Meekness, the Light, the Love, the Humility of the Holy Jesus, as a Seed of Life born in his Soul, to bring forth that first Image of God, in which Adam was created. This, my Friend, is the true Ground of all true Religion: It means nothing, it intends nothing, but to overcome that earthly Life, which overcame Adam in the Fall, that made him a Prisoner of Hell, and a Slave to the corrupt Workings of earthly Flesh and Blood. And therefore you may see, and know with a mathematical Certainty, that the one thing necessary for every fallen Soul, is to die to all the Life that we have from this World, and the Life of Heaven may be born again in him. The Life of this World is the Life of the Beast, the Scarlet Whore, the old Serpent and the fiery Dragon.

Hence it is that Sin rides in Triumph over Church and State, and from the Court to the Cottage all is over-run with Sensuality, Guile, Falseness, Pride, Wrath, Envy, Selfishness, and every form of Corruption. Everyone swims away in this Torrent, but he who hears and attends to the Voice of the Son of God within him, calling him to die to this Life, to take up his Cross, and follow him. Much learned Pains has been often taken to prove Rome, or Constantinople, to be the Seat of the Beast, the Antichrist, the Scarlet Whore, &c. But, alas! they are not at such a Distance from us, they are the Properties of fallen human Nature, and are all of them alive in our own Selves, till we are dead or dying to all the Spirit and Tempers of this World. They are everywhere, in every Soul, where the heavenly Nature, and Spirit of the Holy Jesus is not. But when the human Soul turns from itself, and turns to God, dies to itself, and lives to God in the Spirit, Tempers, and Inclinations of the Holy Jesus, loving, pitying, suffering, and praying for all its Enemies, and overcoming all Evil with Good, as this Christ of God did; then, but not till then, are these Monsters separate from it. For Covetousness and Sensuality of all kinds, are the very devouring Beast; Religion governed by a worldly, trading Spirit, and gratifying the partial Interest of Flesh and Blood, is nothing else but the Scarlet Whore; Guile, and Craft, and Cunning, are the very Essence of the old Serpent; Self-Interest and Self-Exaltation are the whole Nature of Antichrist. Pride, Persecution, Wrath, Hatred and Envy, are the very Essence of the fiery Dragon.

This, Academicus, is the fallen human Nature, and this is the old Man, which is alive in everyone, though in various Manners, till he is born again from above. To think therefore of anything in Religion, or to pretend to real Holiness, without totally dying to this old Man, is building Castles in the Air, and can bring forth nothing, but Satan in the Form of an Angel of Light. Would you know, Academicus, whence it is, that so many false Spirits have appeared in the World, who have deceived themselves and others with false Fire, and false Light, laying Claim to Inspirations, Illuminations, and Openings of the Divine Life, pretending to do Wonders under extraordinary Calls from God? It is this; they have turned to God without turning from themselves; would be alive in God, before they were dead to their own Nature; a thing as impossible in itself, as for a Grain of Wheat to be alive before it dies.

Now Religion in the Hands of Self, or corrupt Nature, serves only to discover Vices of a worse kind, than in Nature left to itself. Hence are all the disorderly Passions of religious Men, which burn in a worse Flame than Passions only employed about worldly Matters: Pride, Self-Exaltation, Hatred, and Persecution, under a Cloak of religious Zeal, will sanctify Actions, which Nature, left to itself, would be ashamed to own.

You may now see, Academicus, with what great Reason I have called you, at your first setting out, to this great Point, the total dying to Self, as the only Foundation of a solid Piety. All the fine Things you hear or read of an inward and spiritual Life in God, all your Expectations of the Light and Holy Spirit of God, will become a false Food to your Soul, till you only seek for them through Death to Self.

Observe, Sir, the Difference which Clothes make in those, who have it in their Power to dress as they please: Some are all for Show, Colours, and Glitter; others are quite fantastical and affected in their Dress; Some have a grave and solemn Habit; others are quite simple and plain in their whole manner. Now all this Difference of Dress, is only an outward Difference, that covers the same poor Carcase, and leaves it full of all its own Infirmities. Now all the Truths of the Gospel, when only embraced and possessed by the old Man, make only such superficial Difference, as is made by Clothes. Some put on a solemn, formal, prudent, outside Carriage; others appear in all the Glitter and Show of religious Colouring, and spiritual Attainments; but under all this outside Difference, there lies the poor fallen Soul, imprisoned, unhelped, in its own fallen State. And thus it must be, it is not possible to be otherwise, till the spiritual Life begins at the true Root, grows out of Death, and is born in a broken Heart, a Heart broken off from all its own natural Life. Then Self-hatred, Self-contempt, and Self-denial, are as suitable to this new-born Spirit, as Self-love, Self-esteem, and Self-seeking, are to the unregenerate Man. Let me, therefore, my Friend, conjure you, not to look forward, or cast about for spiritual Advancement, till you have rightly taken this first Step in the spiritual Life. All your future Progress depends upon it: For this Depth of Religion goes no deeper than the Depth of your Malady : For Sin has its Root in the Bottom of your Soul, it comes to Life with your Flesh and Blood, and breathes in the Breath of your natural Life ; and therefore, till you die to Nature, you live to Sin ; and whilst this Root of Sin is alive in you, all the Virtues you put on, are only like fine painted Fruit hung upon a bad Tree.

Acad. Indeed, Theophilus, you have made the Difference between true and false Religion as plain to me, as the Difference between Light and Darkness. But all that you have said, at the same time, is as new to me, as if I had lived in a Land, where Religion had never been named. But pray, Sir, tell me how I am to take this first Step, which you so much insist upon.

Thop. You are to turn wholly from yourself, and to give up yourself wholly unto God, in this or the like twofold Form of Words or Thoughts :

‘ Oh my God, with all the Strength of my Soul, assisted by thy Grace, I desire and resolve to resist and deny all my own Will, earthly Tempers, selfish Views, and Inclinations ; every thing that the Spirit of this World, and the Vanity of fallen Nature, prompts me to. I give myself up wholly and solely unto Thee, to be all thine, to have, and do, and be, inwardly and outwardly, according to thy good Pleasure. I desire to live for no other Ends, with no other Designs, but to accomplish the Work which thou requirest of me, an humble, obedient, faithful, thankful Instrument in thy Hands to be used as thou pleasest.’

You are not to content yourself, my Friend, with now and then, or even many times, making this Oblation of yourself to God. It must be the daily, the hourly Exercise of your Mind ; till it is wrought into your very Nature, and becomes an essential State and Habit of your Mind, till you feel yourself as habitually turned from all your own Will, selfish Ends, and earthly Desires, as you are from Stealing and Murder ; till the whole Turn and Bent of your Spirit points as constantly to God, as the Needle touched with the Loadstone does to the North. This, Sir, is your first and necessary Step in the spiritual Life ; this is the Key to all the Treasures of Heaven ; this unlocks the sealed Book of your Soul, and makes room for the Light and Spirit of God to arise up in it. Without this, the spiritual Life is but spiritual Talk, and only assists Nature to be pleased with an Holiness that it has not.

The Necessity of this first Step, and the Folly of pretending to succeed without it, is thus represented by our blessed Lord : ‘ What Man intending to build a house,’ &c.

All our Ability and Preparation to succeed in this great Affair, lie in this first Step. You may perhaps think this an hard Saying. But do not go away sorrowful, like the young Man in the Gospel, because he had great Possessions. For, my Friend, you little think what a Deliverance you will have from all Hardships, and what a Flow of Happiness is found even in this Life, as soon as the Soul is thus dead to Self, freed from its own Passions, and wholly given up to God ; of which I shall speak to you by and by. I have told you the Price of the new Birth. I shall now leave you to consider, whether you will be so wise a Merchant, as to give up all the Wealth of the old Man for this heavenly Pearl. I do not expect your Answer now, but will stay for it till To-morrow.

But pray, Gentlemen, who is this Humanus? I do not remember to have seen him before: He seems not willing to speak, yet is often biting his Lips at what is said.

Rust. This Humanus, Sir, is my Neighbour ; but so ignorant of the Nature of the Gospel, that he is often trying to persuade me into a Disbelief of it. I say ignorant (though he is a learned man) because I am well assured, that no Man ever did, or can oppose the Gospel, but through a total Ignorance of what it is in itself: For the Gospel, when rightly understood, is irresistible; it brings more good News to the human Nature, than Sight to the Blind, Limbs to the Lame, Health to the Sick, or Liberty to the condemned Slave. But this Neighbour of mine has never yet been in Sight of the Truth, as it is in the Gospel ; he knows nothing of the Grounds and Reason of it, but what he has picked up out of Books, that have been written against it, and for it. He often makes use of one Maxim of the Gospel, to overthrow it, and wonders that so plain and honest a Man as I am, will not submit to it. He says, if it be a Truth, as the Gospel saith, ' That the Tree must be known by its Fruit, and that a good Tree ' cannot bring forth corrupt Fruit,' we need only look at the Lives of Christians, the Craft of Priests, the Wars, Contentions, Hatreds, Sects, Parties, Heresies, Divisions, Outrages, and Persecutions, which Christianity has brought forth, we need only look at this, to have all our Senses and Reason assure us, that the Gospel must be a bad Tree.

But this is enough concerning the Man. He comes with me at his own earnest Desire, which has lately seized him, and upon his own strict Promise, not to interrupt our Conversation ; but to be a silent Hearer, till it is all over. And therefore, if you please, Sir, I beg our Conversation may for awhile turn upon the chief Points asserted in the Spirit of Prayer, for two Reasons ; first, that Academicus may see what Reasons I had for saying, that Book had given me a sufficient Instruction ; and also that

Humanus, hearing these great Points, may hear the whole Ground and Nature, the Necessity and Blessedness of the Christian Redemption, set forth in such a Degree of Light, and Truth, and Amiableness, as he had no Notion of before.

Theoph. Your Neighbour is welcome, and I pray God to give him an Heart attentive to those Truths, which have made so good an Impression upon you. The first Point that you desire us to speak to, is concerning the Original of this temporal World. How God was moved to create it, upon the Fall of a whole Host, or Kingdom of Angels, who, by their Revolt from God, lost the Divine Light, and awakened in themselves, and the Region in which they dwelt, the dark, wrathful Fire of Hell: For Hell is nothing else, but Nature departed, or excluded, from the Beams of Divine Light. The Materiality of their Kingdom was spiritual, and the Light that glanced through it, that filled its Transparency with an Infinity of glorious Wonders, was the Son of God, the Brightness of the Father's Glory. The Spirit that animated the inward Life of those glorious Angels, and that moved with its sweet Breath, through all this glassy Sea, opening and changing new Scenes in the Mirror of Divine Wisdom, was the Holy Spirit of God, that eternally proceeds from the Father and the Son. Thus did these celestial Spirits live, move, and have their Being, in God. All was Heaven, and they all were so many created Gods, eternally sinking down, and rising up, into new Heights and Depths of the Riches of the Divine Nature. With this Degree of Glory and Happiness was the whole Extent of the Place of this World filled, before the Angels fell: and to this Degree of Happiness, and heavenly Glory, will the whole Place of this World be again raised, when the Love of God shall have finished the great Work of the Redemption of Mankind. Heaven again, and Angels again, raised out of the Misery of Time, to sing eternal Praises to the Holy Trinity, and to the Lamb that has overcome Sin, and Death, and Hell, and turned all the Wrath, and Misery and Darkness of this World, into an Heaven never more to be changed. Oh Rusticus, what Sentiments do these Things raise in you?

Rust. Indeed, Sir, they almost make me to forget, that I am in the Body. You have set me upon a Mountain, from which, whether I look backwards, or forwards, or downwards, all is equally surprising: backwards, a Breach made in Heaven, the first Opening of Hell and Darkness, and a new Creation out of the Ruins of the fallen Angels; forwards, Time and all temporal Nature rising again into its first Eternity; downwards, a Globe of Earth, the Seat of War between Heaven and Hell, where Men are born to partake of the dreadful Strife, and have only the little Span of Life, either to overcome with God, or be overcome by the Devil. Oh, Sir, what great things are these? I wish that all the World, as well as my Neighbour Humanus, were forced to be silent Hearers of them. But pray, Sir, go on.

Theoph. When God saw the Darkness that was upon the Face of the Deep, and the whole angelic Habitation become a Chaos of Confusion, the Spirit of God moved upon the Face of the Waters; that is, the Spirit of God began to operate again in this outward Darkness, that covered this once transparent glassy Sea; for from a glassy Sea it was become a Deep covered with Darkness, which was soon to take another Nature; to have its Fire and Wrath converted into Sun and Stars; its Dross and Darkness into a Globe of Earth; its Mobility and Moisture into Air and Water; when the Spirit of God began to move and operate in it. But before this Chaos had entered into this new Order, God said, 'Let there be Light; and there was Light.' This Light, my Friend, was not the present Light of this World, which now governs the Night and the Day; for the Sun, the Moon, and Stars, were not created till the fourth Day. But the Light which God then spoke forth, was a Degree of Heaven, that was commanded to glance into the darkened Deep, which penetrated through all the Depth of the Chaos, and intermixed itself through every Part; not turning the Whole into a Region of Light, but only by its quickening Virtue fitting, disposing, and preparing every Part to take that Change, which every following Day of the Creation was to bring forth, in and out of this darkened Deep: For Darkness is Death, and Light is Life. This was the Nature and Work of that first Light, which God called forth on the first Day: It was God's baptizing the dead Chaos with the Spirit of Life, that it might be capable of a Resurrection into a new Creation.

See here the Uniformity of the Divine Procedure, with regard both to fallen Nature and Creature. When the Creature (Man) was fallen, his Redemption was begun by God's speaking a Seed of Light, called the Seed of the Woman, into the Birth of his Life. This alone could qualify him for the new Creation in Christ Jesus. When Nature was fallen, its Restoration was begun in the same Manner: Light was commanded to enter into it, or rather to rise up in it: This was its Power or Possibility of coming out of its fallen State.

Marvel not, Rusticus, that I call this first Light of the first Day, a Degree of Heaven: For Light is natural, essential, and inseparable from heaven; it belongs only to Heaven; and wherever else it is, it is only there as a Gift from Heaven. And therefore so much as there is of Light in this World, so much there is of Heaven in it. Darkness is natural, essential, and inseparable from Hell; and can be nowhere else, but where Hell can in some Degree open and discover itself. And wherever, and in what Degree, Darkness can show itself; there, and in the same Degree, is the Nature of Hell known and felt. This World is made up of Light and Darkness, not only as it consists of Day and Night, but because every earthly thing is itself a Mixture of Light and Darkness. The Darkness is the Evil, and the Light is the Good, that is in everything. If the Darkness was predominant in Vegetables, they would all be rank Poison; if in Animals, they would be all as so many wrathful venomous Serpents of Hell. If the Light did quite suppress the Darkness in Vegetables, they would be like the Fruits which were to have been Man's Food in Paradise.

Rust. These Things, Theophilus, strike a most amazing Light into all the Mysteries both of Nature and Grace. But they do not more enlighten, than they edify the Mind. They are all reforming Truths; they have the Nature of Alteratives, they purge the Heart of all its Dross; they force it to drop all its Pretensions to earthly things, as the poor deceitful Baits of fallen Nature; and to long for nothing, but to have That first Heaven and Life in God, for which Angels and Men were at first created. But I want to show to my Friend Humanus, as it were in one View, that Chain of Truths, which follows from what you have said: Though I had rather you would do it.

Theoph. Agreed: And I will set them in order thus. First, That the Place of this World is the very Place, or Region, which belonged to Lucifer, and his Angels. Secondly, That everything that we see in this World, all its Elements, the Stars, the Firmament, &c., are nothing else but the invisible Things of the fallen World, made visible in a new and lower State of Existence. Thirdly, That before the Rebellion of the Angels there was nothing but God, and Heaven, and heavenly Beings. Light, and Love, and Joy, and Glory, with all the Wonders thereof, were the only things seen and felt by the Angels. Darkness and Fire, with every Quality thereof, were absolutely unknown to the Angels; they had no more Suspicion of them, than of the Possibility of Sickness, Pains, Heat, and Cold. All they aimed at, was at being higher in the Glories, and Powers, and Light, of that Heaven in which they lived. But their turning to their own Strength to effect this, was their whole turning from God, and a falling into Nature without God, which was the first Discovery of Darkness, Wrath, and Fire, and Pain, and Torment. Fourthly, Hence it appears, that Darkness is the Ground of the Substance, or Materiality of Nature; Fire is its Life; and Light is its glorious Transmutation into the Kingdom of Heaven ; and Spirit is the Opener of all its Wonders. All that can be conceived, is either God, or Nature, or Creature ; God is the Holy Trinity without, or before Nature ; but Nature is the Manifestation of the Holy Trinity in a triune Life of Fire, Light, and Spirit.

Fifthly. Here we see the plain and true Original of all Evil, without any Perplexity, or Imputation upon God : That Evil is nothing else but the Wrath, and Fire, and Darkness of Nature broken off from God : That the Punishment, the Pain, or the Hell of Sin, is no designedly prepared, or arbitrary Penalty inflicted by God, but the natural and necessary State of the Creature, that leaves, or turns from God. Sixthly, That the Will of the Creature is the only Opener of all Evil or Good in the Creature ; the Will stands between God and Nature, and must in all its Workings unite either with God, or Nature : The Will totally resigned, and given up to God, is one Spirit with God, and God dwelleth in it ; the Will turned from God, is taken Prisoner in the Wrath, Fire, and Darkness of Nature.

Seventhly. Here we see, how and why a Creature can lose, and die to all its Happiness and Perfection, and, from a beauteous Angel become a deformed Devil. It is because Nature has no Beauty, Happiness, or Perfection, but solely from the Manifestation or Birth of the Holy Trinity in it. God manifested in Nature, is the only Blessing, Happiness, and Perfection of Nature. Therefore the Creature, that in the Working of its Will is turned from God, must have as great a Change brought forth in it, as that of Heaven into Hell, forced to live, but to have no other Life, but that of its own gnawing Worm left to itself.

Eighthly. Hence we see the deep Ground, and absolute Necessity, of the Christian Redemption, by a Birth from above, of the Light and Spirit of God, demonstrated in the most absolute Degree of Certainty. It is because all Nature is in itself nothing, but an hungry wrathful Fire of Life, a tormenting Darkness, unless the Light and Spirit of God kindle it into a Kingdom of Heaven. And therefore the fallen Soul can have no possible Relief, or Redemption, it must be, to all Eternity, an hungry, dark, fiery, tormenting Spirit of Life, unless the Light, or Son, and Spirit of God, be born again in it.

Hence also it follows, that in all the Possibility of Things, there is and can be but one Happiness, and one Misery. The one Misery, is Nature and Creature left to itself ; the one Happiness, is the Life, the Light, and Spirit of God, manifested in Nature and Creature. This is the true Meaning of those Words of our Lord, 'There is but one that is good, and that is 'God.'

Ninthly. Hence it is also seen, that there is and can be but one true Religion for the fallen Soul, and that is, the Dying to Self, to Nature and Creature; and a turning with all the Will, the Desire, and Delight of the Soul to God. Sacrifices, Oblations, Prayers, Praises, Rites, and Ceremonies, without this, are but as sounding Brass, and tinkling Cymbals. Nay, Zeal, and Constancy, and Warmth, and Fervour, in the Performance of these religious Practices, is not the Matter; for Nature and Self-love can do all this. But these religious Practices are then only Parts of true Religion, when they mean nothing, seek nothing, but to keep up a continual Dying to Self, and all worldly things, and turn all the Will, Desire, and Delight of the Soul to God alone. Lastly, There is and can be only one Salvation for the fallen Soul, and that is Heaven opened again in the Soul, by the Birth of such a Life, Light, and Spirit, as is born in Angels. For Adam was created to possess that Heaven from which the Angels fell; but nothing can enter into Heaven, but the angelic Life, which is born of Heaven. The Loss of this angelic Life was the Fall of Adam, or that Death which he died, on the Day he did eat of the earthly Fruit; therefore the Regeneration, or new Birth of his first angelic Life, is the one only Salvation of the fallen Soul. Ask not therefore, whether we are saved by Faith, or by Works? for we are saved by neither of them. Faith and Works are at first only preparatory to the new Birth; afterwards they are the true genuine Fruits and Effects of it. But the new Birth, a Life from Heaven, the new Creature, called Christ in us, is the one only Salvation of the fallen Soul. Nothing can enter into Heaven, but this Life which is born of, and comes from Heaven.

Rust. I thank you, Theophilus, for setting these awakening Truths in so strong a Light. And I think it is not possible for my Friend Humanus to be unaffected with them.

They must needs open in him a new Way of thinking about Religion, and show him the deep and solid Ground of the absolute Necessity of the Christian Redemption, and incline him to be a willing Hearer of that which follows.

Theoph. I hope it will be so, Rusticus; and what I would here, and through every Point we speak of, observe to your Friend Humanus, is this: That the Christian Religion is the one only true Religion of Nature, deeply and necessarily founded in the Nature of Things; that its Doctrines are not founded in an arbitrary Appointment of God, but have their natural and necessary Reason, why they cannot be otherwise, as has here been shown in the one great Point of Regeneration, which is the Whole of Man's Salvation, and the one only thing intended by all Revelation, from the Fall of Man to the End of the World. Now the true Ground of the one true Religion of Nature cannot be known, or seen into, but by going back to the Beginning of Things, and showing how they came into their present State. We must find out, why and how Religion came to be necessary, and on what its Necessity is founded. Now this cannot be done, unless we find out, what Sin, and Evil, and Death, and Darkness, are in themselves; and how they came into Nature and Creature. For this alone can show us, what Religion is true, is natural, is necessary, and alone sufficient to remove all Evil, Sin, and Disorder, out of the Creation. For this Reason, we began with the Grounds and Reasons of the Creation of this World, showing how it came to be as it is. But this could not be done, but by going so far back as the Fall of Angels. For it was their Revolting from God, that brought Wrath, and Fire, and Thickenss, and Darkness, and Death, into Nature and Creature; and so gave occasion to this new Creation, and to its being in such a State, and of such a Nature, as it is.

For who does not see, that this first Deadness, Thickenss, Wrath, Fire, and Darkness, caused by the Angels' Sin, are the very Materials out of which this World is made? For are not the Fire, the Air, the Water, the Earth, the Rocks and Stones of this World, the Rage of Heat and Cold, the Succession of Day and Night, the Wrath of Storms and Tempests, an undeniable and daily Proof of all this? Now when we thus see what Sin, and Evil, and Death, and Darkness, are in Nature, and how they came into it, then we see also, how and what they are, and how they came into the Creature; because the Creature has its Form, its Being, in and out of Nature. They came into Nature, or rose up in it, by Nature's being broken off from God, and so losing the Light and Spirit of God, which made it to be a Kingdom of Heaven; we see also, that when this disordered Nature was to be taken out of its fallen State by a new Creation, that, to do this, the Spirit of God moved, or entered again into the Darkness of the Waters, and the Light of God was called into it. A plain Proof, that the Malady of Nature, was nothing else but its Loss of the Light and Spirit of God working in it. This shows us also, that the fallen Creature is to be restored, or put into a Way of Recovery, in one and the same Way as fallen Nature; viz., by the Spirit, and Light of God entering into it again, and bringing forth a new Birth, or Creation in Christ Jesus. Just as the Spirit and Light entering into the Chaos, created or turned the Angels' ruined Kingdom into a Paradise on Earth. God help him, who can see no Light or Truth here! Your Friend Humanus lays claim to a Religion of Nature and Reason: I join with him, with all my Heart. No other Religion can be right, but that which has its Foundation in Nature. For the God of Nature can require nothing of his Creatures, but what the State of their Nature calls them to. Nature is his great Law, that speaks his whole Will both in Heaven and on Earth; and to obey Nature, is to obey the God of Nature, to please him, and live to him, in the highest Perfection. God indeed has many After-laws; but it is after his Creatures have fallen from Nature, and lost its Perfection. But all these After-laws have no other End or Intention, but to repair Nature, and bring Men back to their first natural State of Perfection. What say you now, Academicus, to all these Matters?

Acad. You, Sir, and Rusticus, both of you know, how these Matters have affected me, ever since I read the Book called The Appeal to all that Doubt, &c. From that Time, I have stood upon new Ground; I have seen things in such a Newness of Light and Reality, as makes me take my former Knowledge for a Dream. A Dream I may justly call it, since all my Labour was taken up in searching into a Seventeen hundred Years History of Doctrines, Disputes, Decrees, Heresies, Schisms, and Sects, wherever to be found, in Europe, Asia, and Africa. From this goodly Heap of Stuff crowded into my Mind, I have been settling Matters betwixt all the present Christian Divisions both at home and abroad, according to the best Rules of Criticism; having little or no other Idea of a religious Man, than that of a stiff Maintainer of certain Points against all those that oppose them. And in this respect, I believe I may say, that I only swam away in the common Torrent.

And in this laborious Dream I had in all Likelihood ended my Days, had not that Book, and some others of the like kind, shown me, that Religion lay nearer home, was not to be dug out of Disputes, but lay hid in myself, like a Seed, which, for want of its proper Nourishment, could not come to the Birth. But however, though Matters stand thus with myself, and I seem to be entered into a Region of Light, yet I must not forget to tell you, what some of my learned Friends object to all this. They say, that in those Books, there are many Things asserted, which have not the plain Letter of Scripture to support them; and therefore Men of sober Learning, are cautious of giving into Opinions, not strictly grounded on the plain Letter of Scripture, however fine and plausible they may seem to be.

Theoph. Is there not some Reason, Academicus, to take this Objection of your learned Friends to be a mere Pretence? For what is more fully grounded upon the plain Letter of Scripture, than the Doctrine of a real Regeneration, a new Birth of the Word, the Son, and Holy Spirit of God, really brought forth in the Soul? And yet this plain Letter of Scripture, upon the most important of all Points, the very Life, and Essence, and whole Nature of our Redemption, is not only overlooked, but openly opposed, by the Generality of Men of sober Learning. But this Point, has not only the plain Letter of Scripture for it, but what the Letter asserts, is absolutely required by the whole Spirit and Tenor of the New Testament. All the Epistles of the Apostles proceed upon the supposed Certainty of this one great Point.

A Son of God, united with, and born in our Nature, that his Nature may have a Birth in us; an Holy Spirit, breathing in the Birth and Life of our Souls, quickening the dead Life of fallen Adam, is the Letter and Spirit of the Apostles' Writings; grounded upon the plain Letter of our Lord's own Words, that unless we are born again from above, of the Son, Word, Water, and Spirit of God, we cannot enter or see the Kingdom of Heaven.

Again: Is it not the plain Letter of Scripture, that Adam died the Day that he did eat of the earthly Tree? Have we not the most solemn Asseveration of God for the Truth of this? Was not the Change which Adam found in himself a Demonstration of the Truth of this Fact? Instead of the Image and Likeness of God in which he was created, the Beauty of Paradise, he was stripped of all his Glory, confounded in the shameful Deformity of his own Body, afraid of being seen, and unable to see himself uncovered; delivered up a Slave to a Rage of all the Stars and Elements of this World, not knowing which Way to look, or what to do in a World, where he was dead to all that he formerly felt, and alive only to a new and dreadful Feeling of Heat and Cold, Shame and Fear, and horrible Remorse of Mind, at his sad Entrance into a World, whence Paradise, and God, and his own Glory, were departed. Death enough surely!

Death in its highest Reality, much greater in its Change, than when an Animal of earthly Flesh and Blood is only changed into a cold lifeless Carcase.

A Death, that in all Nature had none like it, none equal to it, none of the same Nature with it, but that which the Angels died, when, from Angels of God, they became living Devils, serpentine, hideous Forms, and Slaves to Darkness. Say that the Angels lost no Life, that they did not die a real Death, because they are yet alive in the Horrors of Darkness, and then you may say, with the same Truth, that Adam did not die, when he lost God, and Paradise, and the first Glory of his Creation, because he afterwards lived and breathed in a World which was outwardly, in all its Parts, full of the same Curse that was within himself. But further, not only the plain Letter of the Text, and the Change of State, which Adam found in himself, demonstrated a real Death to his former State; but the whole Tenor of Scripture absolutely requires it; all the System of our Redemption proceeds upon it. For tell me, I pray, What need of a Redemption, if Adam had not lost his first State of Life? What Need of the Deity to enter again into the human Nature, not only as acting, but taking a Birth in it, and from it? What need of all this mysterious Method, to bring the Life from above again into Man, if the Life from above had not been lost? Say that Adam did not die, and then tell me, what Sense or Reason there is in saying, that the Son of God became Man, and died on the Cross to restore to him the Life that he had lost? It is true indeed, that Adam, in his Death to the Divine Life, was left in the Possession of an earthly Life. And the Reason is plain why he was so: For his great Sin consisted in his Desire and Longing to enter into the Life of this World, to know its Good and Evil, as the Animals of this World do; it was his choosing to have a Life of this World after this new Manner, and his entering upon the Means of attaining it, that was his Death to the Divine Life. And therefore it is no Wonder, that after his Death to Heaven and Paradise, he found himself still alive as an earthly Animal. For the Desire of this earthly Life was his great Sin, and the Possession of this earthly Life was the proper Punishment and Misery that belonged to his Sin; and therefore it is no Wonder that that Life, which was the proper Punishment, and real Discovery of the Fruits of his Sin, should subsist, after his Sin had put an End to the Life of Paradise and God in him. But wonderful it is to a great Degree, that any Man should imagine, that Adam did not die on the Day of his Sin, because he had as good a Life left in him, as the Beasts of the Field have.

For is this the Life or is the Death that such Animals die, the Life and Death with which our Redemption is concerned? Are not all the Scriptures full of a Life and Death of a much higher Kind and Nature? And do not the Scriptures make Man the perpetual Subject to whom this higher Life and Death belong? What Ground or Reason therefore can there be to think of the Death of an Animal of this World, when we read of the Death, that Adam was assuredly to die the Day of his Sin? For does not all that befel him on the Day of his Sin, show that he lost a much greater Life, suffered a more dreadful Change, than that of giving up the Breath of this World? For in the Day of his Sin, this Angel of Paradise, this Lord of the new Creation, fell from the Throne of his Glory (like Lucifer from Heaven) into the State of a poor, darkened, naked, distressed Animal of gross Flesh and Blood, unable to bear the odious Sight of that which his new-opened Eyes forced him to see; inwardly and outwardly feeling the Curse awakened in himself, and all the Creation, and reduced to have only the Faith of the Devils, to believe and tremble. Proof enough, surely, that Adam was dead to the Life, and Light, and Spirit of God; and that, with this Death, all that was Divine and heavenly in his Soul, his Body, his Eyes, his Mind, and Thoughts, was quite at an End. Now this Life to which Adam then died, is that Life which all his Posterity are in want of, and cannot come out of that State of that Death into which he fell, but by having this first Life of Heaven born again in them. Now is there any Reason to say, that Mankind, in their Natural State, are not dead to that first Life in which Adam was created, because they are alive to this World? Yet this is as well as to say, that Adam did not die a real Death, because he had afterwards an earthly Life in him. How comes our Lord to say, that 'unless ye eat the Flesh, and drink the Blood, of the Son of Man, ye have no Life in you?' Did he mean, ye have no earthly Life in you? How comes the Apostle to say, 'He that hath the Son of God has Life, but he that hath not the Son of God hath not Life?' Does he mean the Life of this World? No. But both Christ and his Apostle assert this great Truth, that all Mankind are in the State of Adam's first Death, till they are made alive again, by a Birth of the Son, and Holy Spirit of God brought forth in them. So plain is it, both from the express Letter, and Spirit of Scripture, that Adam died a real Death to the Kingdom of God in the Day of his Sin. Take away this Death, and all the Scheme of our Redemption has no Ground left to stand upon.

Judge now, Academicus, Who leaves the Letter of Scripture, your learned Friends, or the Author of the Appeal? They leave it, they oppose it, in that which is the very Life of Christianity.

For without the Reality of a new Birth, founded on the Certainty of a real Death in the Fall of Adam, the Christian Scheme is but a Skeleton of empty Words, a Detail of strange Mysteries between God and Man, that do nothing, and have nothing to do.

On the other hand, look now at the things set forth in the Appeal, concerning the Fall of Angels, the Nature and Effects of their Revolt, and the Creation of this World as deduced therefrom. They neither leave, nor oppose any Letter, or Doctrine of Scripture. They add nothing to Religion, but the full Proof of all its Articles; they intend nothing but to open the original Ground, and true Reason, of the Christian Redemption, and the absolute Necessity of its being such, as the Gospel declares. Now the Letter of Scripture does not do this in open Words; it sets not forth the why, and how things are, either in Nature or Grace; it teaches not the Ground or Philosophy of the Christian Faith; it contents itself with bare Facts and Doctrines, and calls for simple Faith and Obedience. No Wonder therefore, that when the natural and necessary Ground of the Christian Redemption is opened, that the Letter of Scripture is not Step by Step appealed to, for everything that is said. And yet many things may be sufficiently grounded on Scripture, that are not so expressed in the Letter. The Sadducees denied, that there was any Resurrection at all; and this they did, because they could not find it in the express Letter of the Five Books of Moses. And yet it seems, that the Resurrection was plainly and strongly taught there: For thus saith our Lord,—That the Dead shall rise again, Moses showed at the Bush, when he said, ‘The Lord ‘is the God of Abraham, Isaac, &c. For he is not the God of ‘the Dead, but of the Living.’* This shows us that a thing may be fully and sufficiently proved from Scripture, which is not plainly expressed in the Letter. And thus stands the Matter with regard to those great, and edifying Truths set forth in the Appeal. They are truly scriptural, they have their Ground and Authority from Scripture, though not so open and express in the Letter, as Matters of Faith and necessary Doctrine are. For is not the Fall of Angels a Scripture-Truth? Is not the Desolation which their Fall brought into Nature, and the very Place of this World a Scripture-Truth? What else can be meant by Darkness upon the Face of the Deep? What Darkness, or what Deep, but in the Place of this World? What Darkness, or State of the Deep, but that, which God was about to raise out of its disordered State? And does not the Letter of Scripture show, that out of this Darkness and Waters, and State of the Deep, the Spirit and Light of God entering into them, brought forth the Earth, the Stars, the Sun, and all the Elements, into a Form of a new World?

To ask for a particular Text of Scripture, saying in so many express Words, that the Place of this World is the very Place and Extent of the Kingdom of the fallen Angels, is quite ridiculous, and without the least Ground in Reason, as is enough shown in the Appeal. For does not our Lord expressly call the Devil,

* Luke xx. 37, 38.

a Prince of this World? But how could this Name belong to him, but because he is here in his own first Region and Territories, and has still some Power, till all the Evil that he has raised in it, shall be entirely separated from it? For was not this World raised out of the Materials of the fallen Angels' Kingdom, and was not the Wrath, and Fire, and Darkness of their Fall, still in some Degree remaining in every Part of this World, they could have no more Power in it, than they have in Heaven; they must be as entirely incapable of seeing or entering into it, as they are of seeing or entering into the Kingdom of Heaven: For they have nothing but Evil in their Nature; they can touch nothing, move nothing, see nothing, feel nothing, taste nothing, act in nothing, but that very Evil, Darkness, Fire, and Wrath, and Disorder, which they first awakened and kindled both in themselves, and their Kingdom. And therefore it is a Truth of the utmost Certainty, that they can be nowhere, but where there is something of that Evil still subsisting which they brought forth. And this may pass for Demonstration (if there be any such thing) that the Scriptures themselves demonstrate the Place of this World, to be the very Place and Region in which the Angels fell. And they still are here, because their Kingdom is not wholly delivered from all the Evil they had raised in it, but is to stand for a Time, only in a State of Recovery, where they themselves must see, in spite of all the Rage and Malice of their fiery Darts, that the Mystery of a Lamb of God, born upon Earth, will raise Creatures of Flesh and Blood, amidst the Ruins of their spoiled Kingdom, to be an Host of Angels in Heaven restored, and themselves plunged into an Hell, that is cut off from everything, but their own Wrath, Fire, and Darkness. And all this, Academicus, to make it known through all the Regions of Eternity, that Pride can degrade the highest Angels into Devils, and Humility raise fallen Flesh and Blood to the Thrones of Angels. This, this is the great End of God's raising a new Creation, out of a fallen Kingdom of Angels; for this End it stands in its State of War, a War betwixt the Fire and Pride of fallen Angels, and the Meekness and Humility of the Lamb of God: It stands its Thousands of Years in this Strife, that the last Trumpet may sound this great Truth, through all Heights and Depths of Eternity, 'That Evil can have no Beginning, but from Pride; 'nor any End, but from Humility.'

Oh Academicus, what a Blindness there is in the World! What a Stir is there amongst Mankind about Religion, and yet almost all seem to be afraid of That, in which alone is Salvation!

Poor Mortals! What is the one Wish and Desire of your Hearts? What is it that you call Happiness, and matter of Rejoicing? Is it not when everything about you helps you to stand upon higher Ground, gives full Nourishment to Self-esteem, and gratifies every Pride of Life? And yet Life itself is the Loss of everything, unless Pride be overcome. Oh stop awhile in Contemplation of this great Truth. It is a Truth as unchangeable as God; it is written and spoken through all Nature; Heaven and Earth, fallen Angels, and redeemed Men, all bear Witness to it. The Truth is this: Pride must die in you, or nothing of Heaven can live in you. Under the Banner of this Truth, give up yourselves to the meek and humble Spirit of the Holy Jesus, the Overcomer of all Fire, and Pride, and Wrath. This is the one Way, the one Truth, and the one Life. There is no other open Door into the Sheepfold of God. Everything else is the Working of the Devil in the fallen Nature of Man. Humility must sow the Seed, or there can be no Reaping in Heaven. Look not at Pride only as an unbecoming Temper; not at Humility only as a decent Virtue; for the one is Death, and the other is Life; the one is all Hell, and the other is all Heaven.

So much as you have of Pride, so much you have of the fallen Angel alive in you; so much as you have of true Humility, so much you have of the Lamb of God within you. Could you see with your Eyes what every Stirring of Pride does to your Soul, you would beg of everything you meet, to tear the Viper from you, though with the Loss of an Hand, or an Eye. Could you see what a sweet, Divine, transforming Power there is in Humility, what an heavenly Water of Life it gives to the fiery Breath of your Soul, how it expels the Poison of your fallen Nature, and makes room for the Spirit of God to live in you, you would rather wish to be the Footstool of all the World, than to want the smallest Degree of it. Excuse, Academicus, this little Digression, if it be such, for the Subject we were upon, forced me into it.

Acad. Indeed, Sir, the Lesson you have here given, is the same that the whole Nature of the Fall of Angels, and the whole Nature of the Redemption of Man, daily reads to every Creature; and he, who alone can redeem the World, has plainly shown us, wherein the Life and Spirit of our Redemption must consist, when he saith, 'Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of Heart.' Now if this Lesson is unlearnt, we must be said to have left our Master, as those Disciples did, 'who went back, and walked no more with him.*' But if you please, Theophilus, we will now break off till the Afternoon.

Theoph. Give me Leave first, Academicus, but just to mention one Point more, to show you still further, how unreasonably your Friends object to the Appeal the Want of the plain Letter of Scripture. Now let it be supposed, that the Account of the Fall of Angels, the Creation, &c., given in the Appeal, has not Scripture enough;—Take then the contrary Opinion, which is that of your Friends; viz., That all Worlds, and all Things, are created out of nothing.

Show me now, Academicus, I do not say a Text, but the least Hint of Scripture, that by all the Art of commenting, can so much as be drawn to look that way. It is a Fiction, big with the grossest Absurdities, and contrary to everything that we know, either from Nature or Scripture, concerning the Rise and Birth, and Nature of Things, that have begun to be. Adam was not created out of nothing; for the Letter of Moses tells us in the plainest Words, out of what he was created or formed, both as to his inward, and his outward Nature. It tells us also as expressly out of what, Eve, the next Creature, was created. But from the Time of Adam and Eve, the Creation of every human Creature is a Birth out of its Parents' Body and Soul, or whole Nature. And to show us how all things, or Worlds, as well as all living Creatures, are not created out of nothing, St. Paul appeals to this very Account, that Moses gives of the Woman's being formed out of the Man; But 'all things' (says he) 'are out of God.*' Here this Fiction of a Creation out of nothing, is by the plain and open Letter of Scripture, absolutely removed from the whole System of created things, or things which begin to be; for St. Paul's Doctrine is, that all things come into Being, out of God, in the same Reality, as the Woman was formed or created out of Man. So again, 'There is to us 'but one God, out of whom are all things;† for so you know the Greek should be translated, not of, but out of God; not of, but out of the Man. The Fiction therefore, which I speak of, is not only without, but expressly contrary to, the plain Letter of Scripture. For everything that we see, every Creature that has Life, is by the Scripture-account, a Birth from something else. And here, Sir, you are to take Notice of a Maxim that is not deniable, that the Reason why any thing proceeds from a Birth, is the Reason why every thing must do so. For a Birth would not be in Nature, but because Birth is the only Procedure of Nature. Nature itself is a Birth from God, the first Manifestation of the hidden, inconceivable God, and is so far from being out of nothing, that it is the Manifestation of all that in God, which was before unmanifest. As Nature is the first

* 1 Cor. ix. 12.

† 1 Cor. viii. 6.

Birth, or Manifestation of God, or Discovery of the Divine Powers, so all Creatures are the Manifestation of the Powers of Nature, brought into a Variety of Births, by the Will of God, out of Nature. The first Creatures that are the nearest to the Deity, are out of the highest Powers of Nature, by the Will of God, willing that Nature should be manifested in the Rise and Birth of Creatures out of it. Nature, directed and governed by the Wisdom of God, goes on in the Birth of one thing out of another. The spiritual Materiality of Heaven brings forth the Bodies, or heavenly Flesh and Blood of Angels, as the Materiality of this World brings forth the Birth of gross Flesh and Blood. The spiritual Materiality of Heaven, so far as the Extent of the Kingdom of fallen Angels reached, has by various Changes occasioned by their Fall, gone through a Variety of Births, or Creations, till some of it came down to the Thickness of Air and Water, and the Hardness of Earth and Stones. But when things have stood in this State their appointed Time, the last purifying Fire, kindled by God, will take away all Thickness, Hardness, and Darkness, and bring all the divided Things and Elements of this World back again, to be that first glassy Sea, or heavenly Materiality, in which the Throne of God is set, as was seen by St. John, in the Revelation made to him.

But the Fiction of the Creation out of nothing, is not only contrary to the Letter and Spirit of the Scripture-account of the Rise and Birth of Things, but is in itself full of the grossest Absurdities, and horrid Consequences. It separates everything from God, it leaves no Relation between God and the Creature, nor any Possibility for any Power, Virtue, Quality, or Perfection of God, to be in the Creature : For if it is created out of nothing, it cannot have something of God in it. But I here stop : For, as you know, we have agreed, if God permit, to have hereafter one Day's entire Conversation on the Nature and End of the Writings of Jacob Behmen, and the right Use and Manner of reading them, as preparatory to a New Edition of his Works, so this and some other Points shall be adjourned to that Time. In the Afternoon, we will proceed only on such Matters, as may further set the Christian Redemption in its true and proper Light before your Friend Humanus.

Acad. I am very glad, Theophilus, that I have mentioned these Objections to you, though they were of no Weight with me, since you have thereby had an Occasion of giving so full an Answer to them. The Master stands now in this plain and easy Point of Light.

In the Appeal we have a System of uniform Truths, concerning the Fall of Angels, their spoiled and darkened Kingdom, and the Creation of this World as raised out of it. We have the Creation and Fall of Man, his Regeneration, and the Manner of it, all opened and explained according to the Letter and Tenor of Scripture, from their deepest Ground, in such a manner, as to give Light and Clearness into all the Articles of the Christian Faith; to expel all Difficulties and Absurdities that had crept into it; and the whole Scheme of our Redemption is proved to be absolutely necessary, both from Scripture, and all that is seen and known in Nature and Creature.

On the other hand, the Opinion which is, and must be received, if the Account in the Appeal is rejected, appears to be a Fiction, that has no Sense, no Reason, no Fact, no Appearance in Nature, nor one single Letter of Scripture, to support it, but stands in the utmost Contrariety to all that the Scripture saith of the Creation of everything, and is in itself full of the grossest Absurdities, raising Darkness and Difficulties in all Parts of Religion, that can never be removed from it. For a Creation that has nothing of God in it, can explain nothing that relates to God: For a Creation out of nothing, has no better Sense in it, than a Creation into nothing. My Friends, for this time, Adieu.

The End of the First DIALOGUE.

THE SECOND DIALOGUE.

THEOPH. Let us now speak of Adam in his first Perfection, created by God to be a Lord and Ruler of this new-created World, to people it with an Host of angelic Men, till Time had finished its Course, and all things were fitted to be restored to that State, from which they were fallen by the Revolt of Angels.

For the Restoration of all things to their first glorious State, by making the Good to overcome the Evil, was the End which God proposed by the State and Manner of this new Creation.

Adam was the chosen Instrument of God, to conduct this whole Affair, to keep up this new-made World in the State in which God had created it, not to till the Earth, which we now plough, but to keep That, which is now called the Curse of the Earth, covered, hid, and overcome, by that Paradise in which he was created. For this End, he was created in a twofold Nature, of the Powers of Heaven, and the Powers of this World. Inwardly, he had the celestial Body and Soul of an Angel, and he had this angelic Nature united to a Life and Body taken from the Stars and Elements of this outward World. As Paradise overcame, and concealed all the Wrath of the Stars and Elements, and kept that Evil, which is called the Curse, from being known or felt, so Adam's angelic, heavenly Nature, which was the Paradise of God within him, kept him quite ignorant of the Properties of that earthly Nature that was under it. He knew, and saw, and felt nothing in himself, but a Birth of Paradise, that is, a Life, Light, and Spirit of Heaven: For he had no Difference from an Angel in Heaven, but that this World was joined to him, and put under his Feet. And this was done, because he was created by God to be the restoring Angel, to do all that in this outward World, which God would have to be done in it, before it could be restored to its first State. And therefore he must have the Nature of all this World in him, because he was to act in it, and upon it, as its restoring Angel; and yet with such Distinction from it, with such Power upon it, and over it, as the Light has upon and over Darkness. Does not now the whole Spirit of the Scriptures consent to this Account of Adam's first Perfection? Do not all the chief Points of our Redemption demand this Perfection in Adam unfallen? How else could his Fall bring on the Necessity of the Gospel-Redemption of a new Birth from above, of the Word and Holy Spirit of God? For had he not had this Perfection of Nature at first, his Redemption could not have consisted in the Revival of this Birth and Perfection in him. For had it been something less than the Loss of an angelic and heavenly Life, that had happened to him by his Fall, had it been only some Evil, that related to a Life of this World, nothing else but some Remedy from this World, could have been his Redemption. But since it is the Corner-stone of the Gospel, that nothing less than the eternal Word, which was Man's Creator, could be his Redeemer, and that by a new Birth from above, it is a Demonstration, that he was at first created an Angel, born from above, and such a Partaker of the Divine Life, as the Angels are; and that his Fall was a real Death or Extinction of his angelic Life.

Now the Letter of Moses is express for this first Perfection of Adam. God said, 'Let us make Man in our own Image, 'after our Likeness.' How different is this from the Creation of the Animals of this World? What can you think or say higher of an Angel? Or what Perfection can an Angel have, but that of being in the Image and after the Likeness of God? But now what an Absurdity would it be, to hold that Adam was created in the Image and Likeness of God, and yet had not in him so much as the Image and Likeness of an Angel? Again, was not Paradise lost, was not Evil and the Curse awakened in all the Elements, as soon as Adam fell? And does not this prove, beyond all Contradiction, that Adam was created by God, as I said above, to be the restoring Angel; to have Power over all the outward World; to keep all its Evil from being known or felt; till the Fall of Angels from Heaven had been repaired by a Race of angelic Men born on Earth? But how could he do, and be all this, for which he was created by God, how could he keep up the Life of Heaven and Paradise in himself, and this new World, unless the Life of Heaven had been his own Life? Or how could he be the Father of an Offspring that were to have no Evil, nor so much as the Knowledge of what was Good and Evil in this World? Could anything but an heavenly Man bring forth an heavenly Offspring? Or could he be said to have the Life of this World opened in him in his Creation, who was to bring forth a Race of Beings, insensible of the Good and Evil in this World? For everything that has the Life of this World opened in it, is under an absolute Necessity of knowing and feeling its Good and Evil.

Secondly, That Adam, when he first entered into the World, had the Nature and Perfection of an Angel, is further plain from Moses, who tells us, that he was made at first both Male and Female in one Person ; and that Eve, or the Female Part of him, was afterwards taken out of him. Now this Union of the Male and Female in him, was the Purity, or Virgin Perfection of his Life, and is the very Perfection of the angelic Nature. This we are assured of from our Lord himself, who, in Answer to the Question of the Sadducees, said unto them ; ‘Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, and the Power of God ; for in the Resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in Marriage, but are as the Angels in Heaven.’* Or, as in St. Luke, ‘for they are equal to the Angels of God.’ Here we have a twofold Proof of the angelic Perfection of Adam : (1.) Because we are told, that that State in which he was created, neither Male nor Female, but with both Natures in his one Person, is the very Nature and Perfection of the Angels of God in Heaven. (2.) Because everyone who shall have a Part in this Resurrection, shall then have this angelic Perfection again ; to be no more Male or Female, or a Part of the Humanity, but such perfect, complete, undivided Creatures, as the Angels of God are. But now this Perfection could not belong to the Humanity after the Resurrection, but because it belonged to the first Man before his Fall : For nothing will be restored, but that which was first lost ; nothing rise again, but that which should not have died ; nor anything be united, but that which should not have been parted. The short is this : Man is at last to have a Nature equal to that of the Angels. This Equality consists in this, that as they have, so the Humanity will have, both Male and Female Nature in one Person.

But the Humanity was thus created at first, Male and Female in one Person, therefore the Humanity had at first a Nature and Perfection equal to that of the Angels. Thus is the Letter of Moses much more plain for the angelic Perfection of Adam in his Creation, than it is for the Resurrection of the Dead ; and yet we have our Lord’s Word for it, that Moses sufficiently proved the Resurrection of the Dead. What say you, Academicus, to this Matter ?

Acad. I will here just mention what my good old Tutor says : The Author of the Appeal, says he, founds all his Scheme of Regeneration or Redemption on a supposed threefold Life, in which Adam was created. His sole Proof of this threefold Life is taken from this Text of Moses : ‘God breathed into Man the

* Matt. xxii. 29, 30.

‘Breath of Lives, and Man became a living Soul.’ From this Phrase, The Breath of Lives, the Appeal, without any Authority from the Text, observes thus; ‘Here the highest, and most ‘Divine Original is not darkly, but openly, absolutely, and in the ‘strongest Form of Expression, ascribed to the Soul,’ &c. A vain Assertion, says my Tutor; for the Breath of Life or Lives is used by Moses only as a Phrase for animal Life. This is plainly seen, Gen. vii. ver. 21. ‘And all Flesh died,—all in ‘whose Nostrils was the Breath of Lives.’

Behold, says he, the very Phrase, which the Appeal takes to be so full a Proof of the high Dignity, and threefold Life of God in the Soul, here made use of to denote the Life of every kind of Animal.—And therefore, says he, if this Phrase proves the Soul of Adam to be a Mirror of the Holy Trinity, it proves the same of every Breath in the Nostrils of every Creature.

Theoph. To make short work, Academicus, with your Tutor’s Confutation, as he thinks, of the capital Doctrine of the Appeal, I shall only quote the whole Period, as it stands in the Appeal. ‘God breathed into him the Breath of Lives (Spiraculum vitarum) ‘and Man became a living Soul. Here, says the Appeal, the ‘Notion of a Soul, created out of nothing, is in the plainest, ‘strongest Manner, rejected by the first written Word of God; ‘and no Jew or Christian can have the least Excuse for falling ‘into such an Error: Here the highest and most Divine Original ‘is not darkly, but openly, absolutely ascribed to the Soul. It ‘came forth as a Breath of Life, or Lives, out of, and from the ‘Mouth of God; and therefore did not come out of the Womb ‘of nothing, but is what it is, and has what it has in itself, ‘from, and out of, the first and highest of all Beings.’* Here, Academicus, behold the Falseness and Weakness of your Tutor’s Observation.—The Appeal, you plainly see, proves only from the Text of Moses, the high Original of the Soul; and only for this Reason, because it is the Breath of God, breathed into Man. The Appeal makes no Use of the Expression, the Breath of Lives, takes no Notice of it, deduces nothing from it, but solely considers the Act of God, as breathing the Spirit of the Soul from himself; and from this Act of God, the high Birth and Dignity of the Soul is most justly affirmed. And the Appeal makes this Observation solely to prove, that the Soul is not created out of nothing. This is the one, sole, open, and declared Intent of the Appeal, in all this Paragraph. But your Tutor, overlooking all this, though nothing else is there, makes the Author of the Appeal to affirm the threefold Life of God in the Soul, merely from the Phrase of the Breath of Lives, when there is not one single Word about it. For the Appeal not only has not the least Hint in this Place of any such Matter, to be proved from the Breath of Lives, but through the whole Book there is not the smallest Regard paid to this Expression, nor any Argument ever deduced from it. How strange is all this in your good old Tutor!

The Matter is plainly this; the Author of the Appeal looks wholly to the Action of God, breathing his own Spirit into Adam; and from this Breathing, he justly affirms the Divine Nature of the Soul; all his Argument is deduced from thence. Now if your Tutor, or anyone else, could show, that God breathed his own Spirit into every Animal, and with this Intent, that it might come forth in his own Image and Likeness, then the Distinction and high Birth of the Soul, pleaded for by the Appeal, would indeed be lost. But till then, the Appeal must, and therefore will for ever, stand unconfuted in its Assertion of the Dignity and Divine Birth of the Soul.

Again; behold, Academicus, a still further Weakness chargeable upon your Tutor. You have seen, that his Reasoning upon the Breath of Lives, is meddling with something that the Appeal meddles not with, makes no Account of: But your Tutor has conjured it up for his own Use; and yet see what a poor Use he makes of it. He affirms that Moses uses only the Breath of Lives, as a Phrase for animal Life. How does he prove this? Why, truly from this Reason, because Moses uses the same Phrase when he speaks of the Lives of all Animals.

Now does not every Englishman know, that we make use of the same four Letters of the Alphabet, when we say the Life of a Man, the Life of a Beast, and the Life of a Plant? That we use the same five Letters, when we say the Death of a Man, the Death of a Beast, and the Death of a Plant? But will it thence follow, that the Life and Death of Men, and Beasts, and Plants, are of the same Nature and Degree, and have the same Good and Evil in them? Yet this is full as well, as to conclude, that the Breath of Life in Man, and the Breath of Life in Animals, is of the same Nature and Degree, has the same Goodness and Excellence in it, because the same Words, made up of the same Letters, express them both. Your Tutor therefore, Academicus, and not the Author of the Appeal, is the Person that reasons weakly from the Phrase of the Breath of Lives: For that Author never so much as offers to argue from it. His Proof of the threefold Life of God in the Soul, so far as it is deduced from the Text of Moses, lies wholly in this; that it is the Breath and Spirit of the triune God, breathed forth from this triune Deity into Man. This, sure, is no small Proof of its having the triune Nature of God in it. And this threefold Life of the Soul, thus plainly deducible from the Letter of Moses, is shown to be absolutely certain, from every chief Doctrine and Institution, nay, from the whole Nature of our Redemption: And all the Gospel is shown to set its Seal to this great Truth, the threefold Life of God in the Soul. Nay, everything in Nature, Fire, and Light, and Air; everything that we know of Angels, of Devils, of the animal Life of this World; are all in the plainest and strongest manner, from the Beginning to the End of the Appeal, made so many Proofs of the threefold Life of the triune God in the Soul. Thus says the Appeal; No Omnipotence can make you a Partaker of the Life of this outward World, without having the Life of this outward World born in your own creaturely Being; the Fire, and Light, and Air of this World, must have their Birth in your own creaturely Being, or you cannot possibly live in, or have a Life from outward Nature. And therefore no Omnipotence can make you a Partaker of the beatific Life, or Presence of the Holy Trinity, unless that Life stands in the same triune State within you, as it does without you.* Again: Search to Eternity, says the Appeal, why no Devil or Beast can possibly enter into Heaven, and there can only this one Reason be assigned for it, because neither of them have the triune holy Life of God in them.† But enough of this Mistake of your good old Tutor. Rusticus will I am afraid chide you for being the Occasion of this long Digression from the Point we were speaking to.

Rust. Truly, Sir, I do not know what to make of these great Scholars; they seem to have more Love for the Shadow of an Objection, than for the most substantial Truths. I think I here see a great Reason, why our Saviour chose poor and illiterate Fishermen to be his Apostles. St. Paul was the only Man that had some Learning, and he was a Persecutor of Christ, till such time as God made as it were Scales to fall from his Eyes;—And then he became a powerful Apostle. But let us return to your Account of the first created Perfection of Man, and the Degree of his falling from it. It is one of the best Doctrines that I ever heard in my Life. It not only stirs up everything that is good, and makes me hate everything that is evil, in me; but it gives so good a Sense, so sound a Meaning to every Mystery of the Gospel, that it makes everything our Saviour has done for us, and everything he requires of us, to be equally necessary and beneficial to us. But suppose now our Fall not to be a Change of Nature, not a Death to our first Life, but only a single Sin or Mistake in the first Man; What a Difficulty is there in supposing so great a Scheme of Redemption to set right a single Mistake in one single Creature? Again, What could Man have to do with Angels and Heaven, if he had not, at his Creation, had the Nature of Heaven and Angels in him? But pray, Sir, begin again just where you left off.

Theoph. I was indeed, Rusticus, at that Time just going to say, that Adam had lost much of his first Perfection before his Eve was taken out of him; which was done to prevent worse Effects of his Fall, and to prepare a means for his Recovery, when his Fall should become total, as it afterwards was, upon the eating of the earthly Tree of Good and Evil.

'It is not good that Man should be alone,' saith the Scripture: This shows, that Adam had altered his first State, had brought some Beginning of Evil into it, and had made that not to be good, which God saw to be good, when he created him. And therefore as a less Evil, and to prevent a greater, God divided the first perfect human Nature into two Parts, into a Male and a Female Creature; and this, as you shall see by and by, was a wonderful Instance of the Love and Care of God towards this new Humanity. It was at first, the total Humanity in one Creature, who should in that State of Perfection, have brought forth his own Likeness out of himself, in such Purity of Love, and such Divine Power, as he himself was brought forth by God: The Manner of his own Birth from God, was the Manner that his own Offspring should have had a Birth from him; all done by the pure Power of a Divine Love. Man stood no longer in the Perfection of his first State, as a birth of Divine Love, than whilst he loved himself only as God loved him, as in the Image, and after the Likeness of God. This Purity of Love, and Delight in the Image of God, would have carried on the Birth of the Humanity, in the same manner, and by the same Divine Power, as the first Man was brought forth: For it was only a Continuation of the same generating Love that gave Birth to the first Man. But Adam turned away his Love from the Divine Image, which he should only have loved, and desired to propagate out of himself. He gazed upon this outward World, and let in an adulterate Love into his Heart, which desired to know the Life that was in this World. This impure Desire brought the Nature of this World into him. His first Love and Divine Power, had no Strength left in it; it was no longer a Power of bringing forth a Divine Birth from himself. His first Virginity was lost by an adulterate Love, which had turned its desire into this World. This State of Inability, is that which is called his falling into a deep Sleep: And in this Sleep, God divides this overcome Humanity into a Male and Female.

The first Step therefore towards the Redemption or Recovery of Man, beginning to fall, was the taking his Eve out of him, that so he might have a second Trial in Paradise ; in which if he failed, another effectual Redeemer might arise out of the Seed of the Woman. Oh my Friends, what a wonderful Procedure is there to be seen in the Divine Providence, turning all Evil, as soon as it appears, into a further Display and Opening of new Wonders of the Wisdom and Love of God ! Look back to the first Evil, which the Fall of Angels brought forth. The Darkness, Wrath, and Fire, of fallen Nature, were immediately taken from them, and turned into a new Creation, where those apostate Angels were to see all the Evil that they had raised in their Kingdom, turned against them, and made the Ground of a new Race of Beings, which were to possess those Thrones which they had lost. Look now at Adam brought into the World in such angelic Nature, as he, and all his redeemed Sons, will have after the Resurrection ; an Angel at first, and an Angel at last ; with Time, and Misery, and Sin, and Death, and Hell, all of them felt, and all overcome betwixt the two glorious Extremes. When this first human Angel, through a false, impure Love, lost the Divine Power of generating his own Likeness out of himself, God took Part of his Nature from him, that so the Eye of his Desire, which was turned to the Life of this World, might be directed to that Part of his Nature which was taken from him. And this is the Reason of my saying before, that this was chosen as a less Evil, and to avoid a greater ; for it was a less Degree of falling from his first Perfection, to love the Female Part of his own divided Nature, than to turn his Love towards that, which was so much lower than his own Nature. And thus, at that Time, Eve was an Help, that was truly and properly meet for him, since he had lost his first Power of being himself the Parent of an angelic Offspring, and stood with a longing Eye, looking towards the Life of this World.

But the most glorious Effect of this Division into Male and Female is yet to come. For when Adam and Eve had joined in the eating of the Tree of Good and Evil, and so were totally fallen from God and Paradise, into the Misery and Slavery of the bestial Life of this World ; when this greatest of all Evils had thus happened to these two divided Parts of the Humanity ; when all the Angel was lost, and nothing but a shameful, frightened Animal of this World, was to be seen in this divided Male and Female ; then in, and by, and through this Division, did God open and establish the glorious Scheme of an universal Redemption to these fallen Creatures, and all their Offspring, by the mysterious Seed of the Woman.

Had Adam stood in his first State of Perfection, as a Birth of Divine Love, and loving only the Divine Image and Likeness in himself, this Love would have been itself the fruitful Parent of an holy Offspring ; no Eve had been taken out of him, nor any Male or Female ever known in human Nature : All his Posterity had been in him secured, and the earthly Tree of Good and Evil had never been seen in Paradise. But though he lost this first generating Power of Divine Love, and stood as a barren Tree, yet seeing God's Purpose of raising an Offspring from Adam, to possess the Thrones of fallen Angels, must go on and succeed, therefore that Adam might yet have an Offspring, God took from him that, which is called the Female Part of his Nature, that by this means, both a Posterity, and a Saviour, might proceed from him : For through this Division of Man, God would, in a wonderful Manner, do that which Adam should have done, before he was divided.

For out of this Female Part, and after the Fall, God would raise, without the Help of Adam, that same glorious angelic Man, which Adam should have brought forth before and without his Eve ; which glorious Man is therefore called the Second Adam : 1. As having in his Humanity that very Perfection, which the First Adam had in his Creation. 2. Because he was to do all that for Mankind, by a Birth of Redemption from him, which they should have had by a Birth of Nature from Adam, had he kept his first State of Perfection. What say you, Academicus, to all this ?

Acad. Truly, Sir, there seems to be so much Light, and Truth, and Scripture, for all this Account that you have given of these Matters, as must even force one to consent to it. But then all our Systems of Divinity, to which learned Men are chained, are quite silent of these Matters. I never before heard of this gradual Fall of Adam, nor this angelic State of his first Creation, and Power of bringing forth his own Offspring, and therefore can hardly believe it so strongly as I would, and as the Truth seems to demand of me.

Rust. Pray, Sir, let me speak to Academicus : He seems to be so hampered with Learning, that I can hardly be sorry, that I am not a great Scholar.

Can anything be more punctually related in Scripture than the gradual Fall of Adam ? Do not you see, that he was created first with both Natures in him ? Is it not expressly told you, that Eve was not taken out of him, till such Time as it was not good for him to be as he then was, and yet God saw that it was good when he created him ? Is it not plain therefore, that he had fallen from the Goodness of his first Creation, and therefore his Fall was not at once, nor total, till his eating of the earthly Tree ? Again, as to his being an Angel at his first Creation, because of both Natures in him, is it not sufficiently plain from his being designed to be an Angel of the same Nature at last, in the Resurrection? For this is an Axiom that cannot be shaken, that Nothing can rise higher, than its first created Nature; and therefore an Angel at last, must have been an Angel at first. Do you think it possible for an Ox in Tract of Time to be changed into a rational Philosopher? Yet this is as possible, as for a Man that has only by his Creation the Life of this World in him, to be changed into an Angel of Heaven. The Life of this World can reach no further than this World; no Omnipotence of God can carry it further; and therefore, if Man is to be an Angel at the last, and have the Life of Heaven in him, he must of all Necessity, in his Creation, have been created an Angel, and had his Life kindled from Heaven; because no Creature can possibly have any other Life, or higher Degree of Life, than that which his Creation brought forth in him.

Theoph. Marvel not, Academicus, at that which has been said of the first Power of Adam, to generate in a Divine Manner an holy Offspring, by the Power of that Divine Love which gave Birth to himself; for he was born of that Love for no other End, than to multiply Births of it; and whilst his Love continued to be one with that Love, which brought him into Being, nothing was impossible to it. For Love is the great Creating Fiat that brought forth every Thing, that is distinct from God, and is the only working Principle that stirs, and effects every Thing that is done in Nature and Creature. Love is the Principle of Generation from the highest to the lowest of Creatures; it is the first Beginning of every Seed of Life; every Thing has its Form from it; every Thing that is born is born in the Likeness, and with the Fruitfulness, of that same Love that generates and bears it; and this is its own Seed of Love within itself, and is its Power of fructifying in its Kind.

Love is the holy, heavenly, magic Power of the Deity, the first Fiat of God; and all Angels, and eternal Beings, are the first Births of it. The Deity delights in beholding the ideal Images, which rise up and appear in the Mirror of his own eternal Wisdom. This Delight becomes a loving Desire to have living Creatures in the Form of these Ideas; and this loving Desire is the generating heavenly Parent, out of which Angels, and all eternal Beings are born. Every Birth in Nature is a Consequence of this first prolific Love of the Deity, and generates from that which began the first Birth. Hence it is, that through all the Scale of Beings, from the Top to the Bottom of Nature, Love is the one Principle of Generation of every Life; and every Thing generates from the same Principle, and by the same Power, by which itself was generated. Marvel not therefore, my Friend, that Adam, standing in the Power of his first Birth, should have a Divine Power of bringing forth his own Likeness. But I must now tell you, that the greatest Proof of this glorious Truth is yet to come: For I will show you that all the Gospel bears Witness to that heavenly Birth, which we should have had from Adam alone.—This Birth from Adam is still the one Purpose of God, and must be the one Way of all those, that are to rise with Christ to an Equality with the Angels of God. All must be Children of Adam; for ail that are born of Man and Woman, must lay aside this polluted Birth, and be born again of a second Adam, in that same Perfection of an holy angelic Nature, which they should have had from the first Adam, before his Eve was separated from him. For it is an undeniable Truth of the Gospel, that we are called to a new Birth, different in its whole Nature, from that which we have from Man and Woman, or there is no Salvation; and therefore it is certain from the Gospel, that the Birth which we have from Adam, divided into Male and Female, is not the Birth that we should have had, because it is the one Reason, why we are under a Necessity of being born again of a Birth from a second Adam, who is to generate us again in that Purity and Divine Power, in and by which we should have been born of the first angelic Adam.

A Divine Love in the first pure and holy Adam, united with the Love of God, willing him to be the Father of an holy Offspring, was to have given Birth to a Race of Creatures from him. But Adam fulfilled not this Purpose of God; he awakened in himself a false Love, and so all his Offspring were forced to be born of Man and Woman, and thereby to have such impure Flesh and Blood as cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Is not this Proof enough, that this Birth from Adam and Eve is not the first Birth that we should have had? Will anyone say, How could Adam have such a Power to bring from a Birth in such a Spiritual Way, and so contrary to the present State of Nature? The whole Nature of the Gospel is a full Answer to this Question. For are we not all to be born again in the same Spiritual Way, and are we not, merely by a Spiritual Power, to have a Birth of heavenly Flesh and Blood? The Strangeness of such a Power in the first Adam, is only just so strange, and hard to be believed, as the same Power in the second Adam; who is called the second Adam for no other Reason, but because he stands in the Place of the first, and is to do That, which the first should have done. And therefore our having from him a new heavenly Flesh and Blood raised in us by a Spiritual Power, superior to the common Way of Birth in this World, is the strongest of Proofs, that we should have been born of Adam in the same Spiritual Power, and so contrary to the Birth of Animals into this World. For all that we have from the second Adam, is a Proof that we should have had the same from Adam the first:—A Divine Love in Adam the first, was to have brought forth an holy Offspring. A Divine Faith now takes its Place, in the second Birth, and is to generate a new Birth from the second Adam, is to eat his Flesh, and drink his Blood, by the same Divine Power, by which we should have had a Birth of the angelic Flesh and Blood of our first Parent. Thus, Academicus, is this Birth from Adam alone no Whimsy, or Fiction, or fine-spun Notion, but the very Birth that the Gospel absolutely requires, as the Substance of our Redemption. There is no Room to deny it, without denying the whole Nature of our Redemption. On the other hand, the Birth that we have from Adam divided into Male and Female, is through all Scripture declared to be the Birth of Misery, of Shame, of Pollution, of sinful Flesh and Blood; and is only a Ground and Reason, why we must be born again of other Flesh and Blood, before we can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. This Truth therefore, that we were to have had an heavenly Birth from Adam, depends not upon this, or that particular Text of Scripture, but is affirmed by the whole Nature of our Redemption, and the whole Spirit of Scripture, representing our Birth from this World as shameful, as that of the wild Ass's Colt, and calling for a new Birth from above, as absolutely necessary, if Man is to have a Place among the Angels of God. And therefore it may be affirmed, that so sure as it is from Scripture, that Christ is become our second Adam, to help us to such a Birth, so sure is it from Scripture, that we should have had the same Birth from our first Parent, who, if not fallen, could have wanted no Redeemer of his Offspring, and therefore must have brought forth that same Birth, which we have from Christ, but could not have from the Birth of Man and Woman. I shall now only just mention to you a Passage much to the Matter in Hand, taken from the second Epistle of St. Clemens, a Bishop of Rome, who lived in the very Time of the Apostles. He relates, that Christ being asked, when his Kingdom should come, gave this Answer: 'When two Things shall become one, and that which is outward be as that which is inward, the Male with the Female, and neither Man nor Woman.' There wants no Comment here: I shall only observe, that the Meaning of the Words, When that which is outward shall be as that which is inward, seems plainly to be this, when the outward Life or Birth is come to be as the inward angelic Life is, then the Birth will be one, the Male and Female in one, and then the Kingdom of God is come. These Words were in the next Century quoted by Clemens of Alexandria, though with some Alteration. The same Author also relates another Answer given by our Lord, to much the same Question, put by Salome, where our Lord's Answer was thus: 'When ye shall have put off, or away, the Garment of Shame and Ignominy, and when two shall become one, the Male and the Female united, and neither Man nor Woman.' The Garment of Shame and Ignominy, is plainly that Clothing of Flesh and Blood, at the Sight of which both Adam and Eve were ashamed.

Acad. I am fully satisfied, Theophilus, with the Account you have given of the first Perfection, and Divine State of our first Parent. And I think nothing can be plainer, than that we were to have been born of him to the same heavenly Birth, which we now are to receive from Christ, our second Adam. But I must still say, that I am afraid, your critical Adversaries will here find some Pretence, to charge you with a Tendency, at least, to that Heresy, which held Marriage to be unlawful, since you here hold that it came in by Adam's falling from his first Perfection.

Theoph. I own, my Friend, that there is no knowing when one is safe from Men of that Stamp. But as for me, my Eye is only upon Truth; and wherever that leads, there I follow; they, if they please, may persecute it with Objections. Here is not the least Pretence for the Charge you speak of: For here is no more Condemnation of Marriage, as unlawful, than there is a Condemnation of God, for keeping up the State, and Life of this World. The Continuation of the World, though fallen, is a glorious Proof and Instance of the Goodness of God, that so a Race of new-born Angels may be brought forth in it. Happy therefore is it, that we have such a World as this to be born into, since we are only born, to be born again to the Life of Heaven. Now Marriage has the Nature of this fallen World; but it is God's appointed Means of raising the Seed of Adam to its full Number. Honourable therefore is Marriage in our fallen State, and happy is it for Man to derive his Life from it, as it helps him to a Power of being eternally a Son of God.

Nor does this Original of Marriage cast the smallest Reflection upon the Sex, as if they brought all, or any Impurity into the human Nature. No, by no means. The Impurity lies in the Division, and that which caused it, and not in either of the divided Parts. And the female Part has this Distinction, though not to boast of, yet to take Comfort in, that the Saviour of the World is called the Seed of the Woman, and had his Birth only from the female Part of our divided Nature. But Rusticus, I see, wants to speak.

Rust. Indeed, Sir, I do. But it is only to observe to you, what a System of solid, harmonious, and great Truths are here opened to our View, by this Consideration of the first angelic State of Adam, and his falling from it into an earthly animal Life of this World; created at first an human Angel, with an Host of Angels in his Loins, and then falling from this State, with this particular Circumstance, that he had not only undone himself, but had also involved an innocent, and almost numberless Posterity in the same Misery, who now must all be born of him in his fallen Condition. Thus looking at this Creation of so noble and high a Creature, and his Fall, as introducing so extensive a Train of Misery, how worthy of God, how becoming a Love and Wisdom that are infinite, does all the stupendous Mystery of our Redemption appear! It was to restore an Angel, big with an angelic Offspring, an Angel that God had created to carry on the great Work of this new Creation, to bring Time with all its Conquests back into Eternity, an Angel in whom, and with whom, were fallen an innocent, numberless Posterity, that had not yet begun to breathe.

What a Sense and Reasonableness does this State of Things give to all those Passages of Scripture, which bring a God incarnate from Heaven, to remedy this sad Scene of Misery, that was opened on Earth! What less than God, could awaken again the dead angelic Life? What less than God's entering into the human Birth itself, and becoming one of it, and with it, could generate again the Life of God in every human Birth? The Scripture saith, 'God so loved the World;'—'God spared 'not his only Son;''—'Christ laid down his Life for us;' &c. How glorious a Sense is there in all these Sayings, when it is considered, that all this was done for so high and Divine a Creature, created by God for such great Ends, and full of a Posterity, that was to have filled an Heaven restored? In this Light, every Part of our Redemption gives a Glory, a Wisdom, and Goodness to God, which far surpasses every other View we can possibly take of them: Whereas if you lessen this angelic Dignity of the first Man, if you suppose his Fall to be less than that of falling, with all his Posterity, from an angelic Life, into the earthly, animal Life of this World, Slaves to Sin and Misery, all the Fabric of our Redemption is full of such Wonders, as can only be wondered at. Thus, if you consider this World, and Man its highest Inhabitant made out of nothing, and with only the Breath of this earthly Life breathed into his Nostrils, what is there to call for this great Redemption from Heaven?

Again, if you consider the Fall of Man, only as a single Act of Disobedience to a positive, arbitrary Command of God, this is to make all the Consequences of his Fall inexplicable. For had the first Sin been only a single Act of Disobedience, it had been more worthy of Pardon, than any other Sin, merely because it was the first, and by a Creature that had as yet no Experience. But to make the first single Act of Disobedience, not only unpardonable, but the Cause of such a Curse and Variety of Misery entailed upon all his Posterity, from the Beginning to the End of Time; and to suppose, that so much Wrath was raised in God at this single Act of Disobedience, that nothing could make an Atonement for it, but the stupendous Mystery of the Birth, Sufferings, and Death, of the Son of God; is yet further impossible to be accounted for. In this Case, the supposed Wrath, and Goodness of God, are equally inexplicable.—And from hence alone, have sprung up the detestable Doctrines, about the Guilt and Imputation of the first Sin, and the several Sorts of partial, absolute Elections, and Reprobations, of some to eternal Happiness, and others to be Firebrands of Hell to all Eternity. Detestable may they well be called, since if Lucifer could truly say, that God from all Eternity determined, and created him to be that wicked hellish Creature that he is, he might then add, Not unto him, but unto his Creator, must all his Wickedness be ascribed. How innocent, how tolerable is the Error of Transubstantiation, when compared with this absolute Election and Reprobation! It indeed cannot be reconciled to our Senses and Reason, but then it leaves God, and Heaven, possessed of all that is holy and good; but this Reprobation-Doctrine, not only overlooks all Sense and Reason, but confounds Heaven and Hell, takes all Goodness from the Deity, and leaves us nothing to detest in the Sinner, but God's eternal irresistible Contrivance to make him to be such.

But now, when we take this Matter of the Creation, and Fall of Man, as Truth, and Fact, and Scripture, plainly represent it, every Thing that can awaken in ourselves a Love, and Desire to be like unto God, is to be found in it. Whilst Man stood in his first Perfection, unturned from God, this World was under his Feet; Paradise was the Element in which he lived; the Spirit of God was his Life; the Son of God was his Light; he was in the World, as much above it, and with as full Distinction from it, as incapable of being hurt by it, as an Angel, that only comes with a Divine Commission into it. The whole World was a Gift, put into his Hands; the Standing, or Fall of it was left to him; as his Will and Mind should work, so should either Paradise, or a cursed Earth overcome. God, by this new Creation, had so altered the wrathful State of Lucifer's fallen Kingdom, that the Evil that had been raised in it, was hid and overcome by the Good. It was thus created, and put into this new State, for this sole End, that a human Angel might keep Paradise alive, and bring forth a paradisaical Host of Angels, in the very Place, where the fallen Angels had brought forth their Evil. But all these great Things, depended upon Adam's conforming to the Designs of God, and living in this World in such a State, as God had created him in. He could not conform to the Designs of God any other Way, than by the Rectitude of his Will, willing that which God willed, both in the Creation of him, and the World.

Whilst his Will stood thus inclined, the new Creation was preserved, himself was an Angel, and the World a Paradise. No Evil would have been known either in Plant, or Fruit, or Animal, nor could have been known, but by the declining Will, and Desire of Man calling it forth. His first longing Look towards the Knowledge of the Life of this World, was the first loosening of the Reins of Evil.—It began to have Life, and a Power of stirring, as soon as his Desire began to be earthly; hence the Curse, or Evil, hid in the Earth, could begin to show itself, and got a Power of giving forth an evil Tree, whose Fruit was the Key to the Knowledge of Good and Evil; a Tree which could not have grown, had he willed nothing, but that which God willed in the Creation of him.

He was not the Creator of this bad Tree, no more than he was the Creator of the good Trees, that grew in Paradise. But as the heavenly Rectitude of his Will kept up the heavenly Powers of Paradise in the Earth, so when his Will began to be earthly, it opened a Passage for the natural Evil; that was hid in the Earth, to bring forth a Tree in its own Likeness. The Earth as now, had then a natural Power of bringing forth a Tree of its own Nature, viz., Good and Evil, but Paradise was that heavenly Power, which hindered it from bringing forth such Productions: But when the Keeper of Paradise turned a Wish from God, and Paradise, after a bad Knowledge, then Paradise lost some of its Power, and the Curse, or Evil, hid in the Earth, could give forth a bad Tree. But see now the Goodness, and Compassion of God towards this mistaken Creature; for no sooner had Adam, by the abuse of his Power and Freedom, given occasion to the Birth of this evil Tree, but the God of Love informs him of the dreadful Nature of it, commands him not to eat of it, assuring him, that Death was hid in it, that Death to his angelic Life, would be found in the Day that he should eat of it. A plain Proof, if anything can be plain, that this Tree came not from God, was not according to his own Will and Purpose towards Adam, but from such a natural Power in the Earth, as could not show itself, till the strong Will and Desire of Adam, beginning to be earthly, worked with That, which was the Evil hid in the Earth. But pray, Theophilus, do you now speak again.

Theoph. The short of the Matter then, my Friend, is this: Neither Adam, nor any other Creature, has at its Creation, or Entrance into Life, any arbitrary Trial imposed upon it by God. The natural State of every intelligent Creature is its one only Trial; and it cannot sin, but by departing from that Nature, or falling from that State in which it was created. Adam was created an human Angel in Paradise, and he had no other Trial but this, whether he would live in Paradise, as an Angel of God, insensible of the Life, or the Good and Evil, of this earthly World. This was the Tree of Life, and the Tree of Death, that must stand before him; and the Necessity of his choosing either the one, or the other, was a Necessity founded in his own happy Nature.

The true Account therefore of the Fall of Adam, is a gradual Declension, or Tendency of his Will, from the Life of Paradise into the Life of this World, till he was at last wholly fallen into it, and swallowed up by it. The first Beginning of his Lust towards this World, was the first Beginning of his Fall, or Departure from the Life of Heaven and Paradise; and his eating of the earthly Tree, was his last and finishing Step of his Entrance into, and under the full Power of this World. This was the true Nature of his Fall. On the other hand, all that we see on the Part of God, is a gradual Help, administered by God to this falling Creature, suitable to every Degree of his falling, till at last, in the Fulness of his Fall, an universal Redeemer of him, and his Posterity, was given by a Second Adam, to regenerate again the whole Seed of Adam the First.

Thus, the first Degree of his Lust towards this World had some Stop put to it, by the taking his Eve out of him; that so his Desire into the Life of this World, might be in some measure lessened. When his Lust into this World still went on, and gave Occasion to the Birth of the evil Tree, a suitable Remedy was here given by God; for God laid a Prohibition upon it, and declared the Death that must be received from it. When he was further so overcome by his lusting Desire, as to eat of the Tree that had the Nature of this World in it, and so lost his first Life, and angelic Clothing, then God, even then all Goodness and Mercy to him, only told him of the Curse and Misery that was opened in Nature; that himself and Posterity must be sweating, labouring Animals, in a fallen World, till their sickly, shameful, naked, new-gotten Bodies mixed and mouldered in the Corruption of that Earth, whose Fruits they had chosen to know, instead of those of Paradise.

Now all this is nothing of a Penalty wrathfully inflicted by God, but was the natural State of Adam, as soon as his own Lust had led him out of an heavenly Paradise, into the earthly Life of this World. God brings no Misery upon him, but only shows the Misery that he had opened in himself, by not keeping to the State in which he was created. And no sooner had God informed this miserable Pair of the State they had brought upon themselves, but, in that Moment, his eternal Love begins a Covenant of Redemption, that was to begin in them, and in and through them extend itself to all their Posterity. A Beginning of a new Birth, called the Seed of the Woman, as the Remains of the first Breath of Life, was treasured up, or preserved in the Light of their Life, which, as an Immanuel, or God with them, should be born in all their Posterity, and be their Power of becoming again such Sons of God, as should fulfil the first Designs of the Creation of Adam, and fill Heaven again with that Host of Angels which it had lost. Thus from the Creation of Adam, through all the Degrees of his Fall to the Mystery of his Redemption, everything tells you, that God is Love. Nay the very Possibility of his having so great a Fall, gives great Glory to the Goodness and Love of God towards him. He was created an Angel, and therefore had the highest Perfection of an Angel, which is a Freedom of Willing. Secondly. He was created to be the restoring Angel of this new Creation. Now these two Things, which were his highest Glory, and greatest Marks of the Divine Favour, were the only Possibility of his falling. Had he not had an angelic Freedom of Will, he could not have had a false Will; had he not had all Power given unto him over this World, he could not have fallen into it? It was this Divine and high Power over it, that opened a Way for his Entrance, or falling into it.— Thus, Academicus, from this View of Man, we come to the utmost Certainty of a threefold Nature or Life in him. 1. He is the Son of a fallen Angel. 2. He is the Son of a Male and Female of this bestial World. 3. He is a Son of the Lamb of God, and has a Birth of Heaven again in his Soul. Hence we see also, that all that we have to fear, to hate, and renounce; all that we have to love, to desire, and pray for; is all within ourselves. No Man can be miserable, but by falling a Sacrifice to his own inward Passions and Tempers; nor anyone happy, but by overcoming himself. How ridiculous would a Man seem to you, who should torment himself, because the Land in America was not well tilled? Now everything that is not within you, that has not its Birth and Growth in your own Life, is at the same Distance from you, is as foreign to your own Happiness or Misery, as an American Story. Your Life is all that you have ; and nothing is a Part of it, or makes any Alteration in it, but the Good or Evil that is in the Workings of your own Life. Hence you may see why our Saviour, who, though he had all Wisdom, and came to be the Light of the World, is yet so short in his Instructions, and gives so small a Number of Doctrines to Mankind, whilst every Moral Teacher, writes Volumes upon every single Virtue. It is because he knew what they knew not, that our whole Malady lies in this, that the Will of our Mind, the Lust of our Life, is turned into this World ; and that nothing can relieve us, or set us right, but the turning the Will of our Mind, and the Desire of our Hearts to God, and that Heaven which we had lost. And hence it is, that he calls us to nothing, but a total Denial of ourselves, and the Life of this World, and to a Faith in him, as the Worker of a new Birth and Life in us. Did we but receive his short Instructions with true Faith, and Simplicity of Heart, as the Truth of God, we should not want anyone to comment or enlarge upon them. A Traveller that has taken a wrong Road, does not want an Orator to discourse to him on the Nature of Roads, but to be told, in short, which is his right Way. Now this is our Case ; it was not a Number of things that brought about our Fall ; Adam only took up a wrong Will ; that Will brought him, and us into our present State, or Road of Life ; and therefore our Saviour uses not a Number of Instructions to set us right ; he only tells us to renounce the false Will, which brought Adam into the Life of this World, and to take up that Will, which should have kept him in Paradise. Observe now, my Friend, the great Benefit that we have from the foregoing Account of Man's original Perfection, and the Nature of his Fall. It opens the true Ground of our Religion, and the absolute Necessity of it ; it forces us to know, that our whole natural Life is a mistaken Road, and that Christ is alone our true Guide out of it. It teaches us every Reason for renouncing ourselves, and loving the whole Nature of our Redemption, as the greatest Joy and Desire of our Hearts. We are not only compelled, as it were, to hunger after it, to run with Eagerness into its Arms, but are also delivered from all Mistakes about it, from all the Difficulties and Perplexities, which divided Sects and Churches have brought into it. For, from this View of things, we see, not uncertainly, but with the fullest Assurance, that our Will, and our Heart is all ; that nothing else either finds or loses God ; and that all our Religion is only the Religion of the Heart. We see with open Eyes, that as a Spirit of Longing after the Life of this World, made Adam and us to be the poor Pilgrims on Earth that we are, so the Spirit of Prayer, or the longing Desire of the Heart after Christ, and God, and Heaven, breaks all our Bonds asunder, casts all our Cords from us, and raises us out of the Miseries of Time, into the Riches of Eternity. Thus seeing and knowing our first and our present State, everything calls us to Prayer; and the Desire of our Heart becomes the Spirit of Prayer. And when the Spirit of Prayer is born in us, then Prayer is no longer considered, as only the Business of this or that Hour, but is the continual Panting or Breathing of the Heart after God. Its Petitions are not picked out of Manuals of Devotion; it loves its own Language, it speaks most when it says least. If you ask what its Words are, they are Spirit, they are Life, they are Love, that unite with God.

Acad. I apprehend, Sir, that what you here say of the Spirit of Prayer, will be taken by some People for a Censure upon Hours and Forms of Prayer; though I know you have no such Meaning.

Rust. Pray let me speak again to Academicus: His Learning seems to be always upon the Watch, to find out some Excuse for not receiving the whole Truth. Does not Theophilus here speak of the Spirit of Prayer, as a State of the Heart, which is become the governing Principle of the Soul's Life? And if it is a living State of the Heart, must it not have its Life in itself, independent of every outward Time and Occasion? And yet must it not, at the same time, be that alone which disposes and fits the Heart to rejoice and delight in Hours, and Times, and Occasions of Prayer? Suppose he had said, that Honesty is an inward living Principle of the Heart, a Rectitude of the Mind, that has all its Life and Strength within itself: Could this be thought to censure all Times and Occasions of performing outward Acts of Honesty? Now the Spirit of Prayer differs from all outward Acts and Forms of Prayer, just as the Honesty of the Heart, or a living Rectitude of Mind, differs from outward and occasional Acts of Honesty. And yet should a Man overlook, or disregard Times and Occasions of outward Acts of Honesty, on Pretence that true Honesty was an inward living Principle of the Heart, who would not see, that such a one had as little of the inward Spirit, as of the outward Acts of Honesty? St. John saith, 'If any Man hath this World's Goods, and seeth 'his Brother hath need, and shutteth up his Bowels of Compassion to him, how dwelleth the Love of God in him?' Just so, and with the same Truth, it may be said, If a Man overlooks, neglects, or refuses, Times and Hours of Prayer, how dwelleth the Spirit of Prayer in him? And yet, its own Life and Spirit is vastly superior to, independent of, and stays for no particular Hours, or Forms of Words. And in this Sense it is truly said, that it has its own Language, that it wants not to pick Words out of Manuals of Devotion, but is always speaking forth Spirit and Life, and Love towards God. But pray, Theophilus, do you go on, as you intended.

Theoph. I shall only add, before we pass on to another Point, that, from what has been said of the first State and Fall of Man, it plainly follows, that the Sin of all Sins, or the Heresy of all Heresies, is a worldly Spirit. We are apt to consider this Temper only as an Infirmary, or pardonable Failure; but it is indeed the great Apostasy from God and the Divine Life. It is not a single Sin, but the whole Nature of all Sin, that leaves no Possibility of coming out of our fallen State, till it be totally renounced with all the Strength of our Hearts. Every Sin, be it of what kind it will, is only a Branch of the worldly Spirit that lives in us. 'There is but one that is good,' saith our Lord, 'and that is God.' In the same Strictness of Expression it must be said, there is but one Life that is good, and that is the Life of God and Heaven. Depart in the least Degree from the Goodness of God, and you depart into Evil; because nothing is good but his Goodness.

Choose any Life, but the Life of God and Heaven, and you choose Death; for Death is nothing else but the Loss of the Life of God. The Creatures of this World have but one Life, and that is the Life of this World: This is their one Life, and one Good. Eternal Beings have but one Life, and one Good, and that is the Life of God. The Spirit of the Soul is in itself nothing else but a Spirit breathed forth from the Life of God, and for this only End, that the Life of God, the Nature of God, the Working of God, the Tempers of God, might be manifested in it. God could not create Man to have a Will of his own, and a Life of his own, different from the Life and Will that is in himself; this is more impossible than for a good Tree to bring forth corrupt Fruit. God can only delight in his own Life, his own Goodness, and his own Perfections; and therefore cannot love or delight, or dwell, in any Creatures, but where his own Goodness and Perfections are to be found. Like can only unite with Like, Heaven with Heaven, and Hell with Hell; and therefore the Life of God must be the Life of the Soul, if the Soul is to unite with God. Hence it is, that all the Religion of fallen Man, all the Methods of our Redemption, have only this one End, to take from us that strange and earthly Life we have gotten by the Fall, and to kindle again the Life of God and Heaven in our Souls: Not to deliver us from that gross and sordid Vice called Covetousness, which Heathens can condemn, but to take the whole Spirit of this World entirely from us, and that for this necessary Reason, because 'All that is in the World, the Lust of the Flesh, the 'Lust of the Eyes, and the Pride of Life, is not of the Father,' that is, is not that Life, or Spirit of Life, which we had from God by our Creation, 'but is of this World,' is brought into us by our Fall from God into the Life of this World. And therefore a worldly Spirit is not to be considered, as a single Sin, or as something that may consist with some real Degrees of Christian Goodness, but as a State of real Death to the Kingdom and Life of God in our Souls. Management, Prudence, or an artful Trimming betwixt God and Mammon, are here all in vain; it is not only the Grossness of an outward, visible, worldly Behaviour, but the Spirit, the Prudence, the Subtlety, the Wisdom of this World, that is our Separation from the Life of God.

Hold this therefore, Academicus, as a certain Truth, that the Heresy of all Heresies is a worldly Spirit. It is the whole Nature and Misery of our Fall; it keeps up the Death of our Souls, and, so long as it lasts, makes it impossible for us to be born again from above. It is the greatest Blindness and Darkness of our Nature, and keeps us in the grossest Ignorance both of Heaven and Hell. For though they are both of them within us, yet we feel neither the one, nor the other, so long as the Spirit of this World reigns in us. Light, and Truth, and the Gospel, so far as they concern Eternity, are all empty Sounds to the worldly Spirit. His own Good, and his own Evil, govern all his Hopes and Fears; and therefore he can have no Religion, or be further concerned in it, than so far as it can be made serviceable to the Life of this World. Publicans and Harlots are all born of the Spirit of this World; but its highest Birth, are the Scribes, and Pharisees, and Hypocrites, who turn Godliness into Gain, and serve God for the Sake of Mammon; these live, and move, and have their Being, in and from the Spirit of this World.—Of all Things therefore, my Friend, detest the Spirit of this World, or there is no Help; you must live and die an utter Stranger to all that is Divine and heavenly. You will go out of the World in the same Poverty and Death to the Divine Life, in which you entered into it. For a worldly, earthly Spirit can know nothing of God; it can know nothing, feel nothing, taste nothing, delight in nothing, but with earthly Senses, and after an earthly Manner. 'The natural Man,' saith the Apostle, 'receiveth not the Things of the Spirit of God, 'they are Foolishness unto him. He cannot know them, 'because they are spiritually discerned'; that is, they can only be discerned by that Spirit, which he has not. Now the true

Ground and Reason of this, and the absolute Impossibility for the natural Man to receive and know them, how polite, and learned, and acute soever he be, is this; it is because all real Knowledge is Life, or a living Sensibility of the Thing that is known. There is no Light in the Mind, but what is the Light of Life; so far as our Life reaches, so far we understand, and feel, and know, and no further. All after this, is only the Play of our Imagination, amusing itself with the dead Pictures of its own Ideas. Now this is all that the natural Man, who has not the Life of God in him, can possibly do with the Things of God. He can only contemplate them, as Things foreign to himself, as so many dead Ideas, that he receives from Books, or Hearsay; and so can learnedly dispute and quarrel about them, and laugh at those as Enthusiasts, who have a living Sensibility of them. He is only the worse for his hearsay, dead Ideas of Divine Truths; they become a bad Nourishment of all his natural Tempers: He is proud of his Ability to discourse about them, and loses all Humility, all Love of God and Man, through a vain and haughty Contention for them. His Zeal for Religion is Envy and Wrath; his Orthodoxy is Pride and Obstinacy; his Love of the Truth is Hatred and Ill-will to those who dare to dissent from him. This is the constant Effect of the Religion of the natural Man, who is under the Dominion of the Spirit of this World. He cannot know more of Religion, nor make a better Use of his Knowledge, than this comes to; and all for this plain Reason, because he stands at the same Distance from a living Sensibility of the Truth, as the Man that is born blind, does from a living Sensibility of Light. Light must first be the Birth of his own Life, before he can enter into a real Knowledge of it. Yet so ignorant is the natural Man with all his learned Acuteness, that he does not so much as know, that there is, and must be, this great Difference between real Knowledge, and dead Ideas of Things; and that a Man cannot know anything, any further than as his own Life opens the Knowledge of it in himself.

The Measure of our Life is the Measure of our Knowledge; and as the Spirit of our Life works, so the Spirit of our Understanding conceives. If our Will works with God, though our natural Capacity be ever so mean and narrow, we get a real Knowledge of God, and heavenly Truths; for everything must feel that in which it lives.

But if our Will works with Satan, and the Spirit of this World, let our Parts be ever so bright, our Imaginations ever so soaring, yet all our living Knowledge, or real Sensibility, can go no higher or deeper, than the Mysteries of Iniquity, and the Lusts of Flesh and Blood. For where our Life is, there, and there only, is our Understanding; and that for this plain Reason, because as Life is the Beginning of all Sensibility, so it is and must be the Bounds of it; and no Sensibility can go any further than the Life goes, or have any other Manner of Knowledge, than as the Manner of its Life is. If you ask what Life is, or what is to be understood by it? It is in itself nothing else but a working Will; and no Life could be either good or evil, but for this Reason, because it is a working Will: Every Life, from the highest Angel to the lowest Animal, consists in a working Will; and therefore as the Will works, as that is with which it unites, so has every Creature its Degree, and Kind, and Manner of Life; and consequently as the Will of its Life works, so it has its Degree, and Kind, and Manner of Conceiving and Understanding, of Liking and Disliking. For nothing feels, or tastes, or understands, or likes, or dislikes, but the Life that is in us. The Spirit that leads our Life, is the Spirit that forms our Understanding. The Mind is our Eye, and all the Faculties of the Mind see everything according to the State the Mind is in. If selfish Pride is the Spirit of our Life, everything is only seen, and felt, and known, through this Glass. Everything is dark, senseless, and absurd to the proud Man, but that which brings Food to this Spirit. He understands nothing, he feels nothing, he tastes nothing, but as his Pride is made sensible of it, or capable of being affected with it. His working Will, which is the Life of his Soul, lives and works only in the Element of Pride; and therefore what suits his Pride, is his only Good; and what contradicts his Pride, is all the Evil that he can feel or know. His Wit, his Parts, his Learning, his Advancement, his Friends, his Admirers, his Successes, his Conquests, all these are the only God and Heaven, that he has any living Sensibility of. He indeed can talk of a Scripture-God, a Scripture-Christ, and Heaven; but these are only the ornamental Furniture of his Brain, whilst Pride is the God of his Heart. We are told, that 'God resisteth the Proud, and giveth Grace to the Humble.' This is not to be understood, as if God, by an arbitrary Will, only chose to deal thus with the proud and humble Man. Oh no. The true Ground is this, The Resistance is on the Part of Man. Pride resisteth God, it rejects him, it turns from him, and chooses to worship and adore something else instead of him; whereas Humility leaves all for God, falls down before him, and opens all the Doors of the Heart for his Entrance into it. This is the only Sense, in which God resisteth the Proud, and giveth Grace to the Humble. And thus it is in the true Ground and Reason of every Good and Evil that rises up in us;

we have neither Good nor Evil, but as it is the natural Effect of the Workings of our own Will, either with, or against God ; and God only interposes with his Threatenings and Instructions, to direct us to the right Use of our Wills, that we may not blindly work ourselves into Death, instead of Life. But take now another Instance like that already mentioned. Look at a Man whose working Will is under the Power of Wrath. He sees, and hears, and feels, and understands, and talks wholly from the Light and Sense of Wrath. All his Faculties are only so many Faculties of Wrath ; and he knows of no Sense or Reason, but that which his enlightened Wrath discovers to him. I have appealed, Academicus, to these Instances, only to illustrate and confirm that great Truth, which I before asserted, namely, that the working of our Will, or the State of our Life, governs the State of our Mind, and forms the Degree and Manner of our Understanding and Knowledge ; and that as the Fire of our Life burns, so is the Light of our Life kindled : And all this only to show you the utter Impossibility of knowing God, and Divine Truths, till your Life is Divine, and wholly dead to the Life and Spirit of this World ; since our Light and Knowledge can be no better, or higher, than the State of our Life and Heart is. Tell me now, do you feel the Truth of all this ? I say feel, because no Truth is possessed, till you have a feeling and living Sensibility of it.

Acad. Oh ! Sir, you have touched every String of my Heart ; and I now wish, with the Psalmist, that I had the Wings of a Dove, that I might fly away, and be at Rest ; fly away from the Spirit of this World, to be at Rest in the sweet Tranquillity of a Life born again of God. You know, Sir, that in the Morning you told me of a certain first Step, that all Necessity must be the Beginning of a spiritual Life ; you gave me till To-morrow to speak my Mind and Resolution about it. But you have now extorted my Answer from me, I cannot stay a Moment longer : With all the Strength that I have, I turn from every Thing that is not God, and his holy Will ; with all the Desire, Delight, and Longing of my Heart, I give up myself wholly to the Life, Light, and Holy Spirit of God ; pleased with nothing in this World, but as it gives Time, and Place, and Occasions, of doing and being that, which my heavenly Father would have me to do, and be ; seeking for no Happiness from this earthly fallen Life, but that of overcoming all its Spirit and Tempers. But I believe, Theophilus, that you had something further to say.

Theoph. Indeed, Academicus, there is hardly any knowing, when one has said enough of the evil Effects of a worldly Spirit. It is the Canker that eats up all the Fruits of our other good Tempers ; it leaves no Degree of Goodness in them, but transforms all that we are, or do, into its own earthly Nature. The Philosophers of old, began all their Virtue in a total Renunciation of the Spirit of this World. They saw with the Eyes of Heaven, that Darkness was not more contrary to Light, than the Wisdom of this World was contrary to the Spirit of Virtue ; therefore they allowed of no Progress in Virtue, but so far as a Man had overcome himself, and the Spirit of this World.

This gave a Divine Solidity to all their Instructions, and proved them to be Masters of true Wisdom. But the Doctrine of the Cross of Christ, the last, the highest, the most finishing Stroke given to the Spirit of this World, that speaks more in one Word than all the Philosophy of voluminous Writers, is yet professed by those, who are in more Friendship with the World, than was allowed to the Disciples of Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, or Epictetus.

Nay, if those ancient Sages were to start up amongst us with their Divine Wisdom, they would bid fair to be treated by the Sons of the Gospel, if not by some Fathers of the Church, as dreaming Enthusiasts.

But, Academicus, this is a standing Truth, The World can only love its own, and Wisdom can only be justified of her Children. The Heaven-born Epictetus told one of his Scholars, That then he might first look upon himself, as having made some true Proficiency in Virtue, when the World took him for a Fool ; an Oracle like that, which said, The Wisdom of this World is Foolishness with God.

If you were to ask me, What is the Apostasy of these last Times, or whence is all the Degeneracy of the present Christian Church ? I should place it all in a worldly Spirit. If here you see open Wickedness, there only Forms of Godliness ; if here superficial Holiness, political Piety, crafty Prudence, there haughty Sanctity, partial Zeal, envious Orthodoxy ; if almost everywhere you see a Jewish Blindness, and Hardness of Heart, and the Church trading with the Gospel, as the old Jews bought and sold Beasts in their Temple ; all these are only so many Forms and proper Fruits of the worldly Spirit. This is the great Net, with which the Devil becomes a Fisher of Men ; and be assured of this, my Friend, that every Son of Man is in this Net, till through and by the Spirit of Christ, he breaks out of it.

I say the Spirit of Christ, for nothing else can deliver him from it. Trust now to any Kind, or Form of religious Observances, to any Number of the most plausible Virtues, to any Kinds of Learning, or Efforts of human Prudence, and then I will tell you what your Case will be ; you will overcome one Temper of the World, only and merely by cleaving to another. For nothing leaves the World, nothing renounces it, nothing can possibly overcome it, but singly and solely the Spirit of Christ. Hence it is, that many learned Men, with all the rich Furniture of their Brain, live and die Slaves to the Spirit of this World; and can only differ from gross Worldlings, as the Scribes and Pharisees differ from Publicans and Sinners: It is because the Spirit of Christ, is not the one only thing that is the Desire of their Hearts; and therefore their Learning only works in, and with the Spirit of this World, and becomes itself, no small Part of the Vanity of Vanities. Would you further know, Academicus, the evil Nature and Effects of a worldly Spirit, you need only look at the blessed Power and Effects of the Spirit of Prayer; for the one goes downwards with the same Strength, as the other goes upwards; the one betroths and weds you to an earthly Nature, with the same Certainty, as the other espouses, and unites you to Christ, and God, and Heaven. The Spirit of Prayer, is a pressing forth of the Soul out of this earthly Life; it is a stretching with all its Desire after the Life of God; it is a leaving, as far as it can, all its own Spirit, to receive a Spirit from above, to be one Life, one Love, one Spirit with Christ in God. This Prayer, which is an emptying itself of all its own Lusts, and natural Tempers, and an opening itself for the Light and Love of God to enter into it, is the Prayer in the Name of Christ, to which nothing is denied. For the Love which God bears to the Soul, his eternal, never-ceasing Desire to enter into it, to dwell in it, and open the Birth of his Holy Word, and Spirit in it, stays no longer, than till the Door of the Heart opens for him. For nothing does, or can keep God out of the Soul, or hinder his holy Union with it, but the Desire of the Heart turned from him. And the Reason of it is this; it is because the Life of the Soul is in itself nothing else but a working Will; and therefore wherever the Will works or goes, there, and there only, the Soul lives, whether it be in God, or the Creature.

Whatever it desires, that is the Fuel of its Fire; and as its Fuel is, so is the Flame of its Life. A Will, given up to earthly Goods, is at Grass with Nebuchadnezzar, and has one Life with the Beasts of the Field: For earthly Desires keep up the same Life in a Man and an Ox. For the one only Reason, why the Animals of this World have no Sense or Knowledge of God, is this; it is because they cannot form any other than earthly Desires, and so can only have an earthly Life. When therefore a Man wholly turns his working Will to earthly Desires, he dies to the Excellence of his natural State, and may be said only to live, and move, and have his Being, in the Life of this World, as the Beasts have.—Earthly Food, &c., only desired and used for the Support of the earthly Body, is suitable to Man's present Condition, and the Order of Nature: But when the Desire, the Delight, and Longing of the Soul is set upon earthly Things, then the Humanity is degraded, is fallen from God; and the Life of the Soul is made as earthly and bestial, as the Life of the Body: For the Creature can be neither higher nor lower, neither better nor worse, than as the Will worketh: For you are to observe, that the Will has a Divine and magic Power; what it desires, that it takes, and of that it eateth and liveth. Wherever, and in whatever, the working Will chooses to dwell and delight, that becomes the Soul's Food, its Condition, its Body, its Clothing, and Habitation: For all these are the true and certain Effects and Powers of the working Will.

Nothing does, or can go with a Man into Heaven, nothing follows him into Hell, but that in which the Will dwelt, with which it was fed, nourished, and clothed, in this Life. And this is to be noted well, that Death can make no Alteration of this State of the Will; it only takes off the outward, worldly Covering of Flesh and Blood, and forces the Soul to see, and feel, and know, what a Life, what a State, Food, Body, and Habitation, its own working Will has brought forth for it. Oh Academicus, stop awhile, and let your Hearing be turned into Feeling. Tell me, is there anything in Life that deserves a Thought, but how to keep this Working of our Will in a right State, and to get that Purity of Heart, which alone can see, and know, and find, and possess God? Is there anything so frightful as this worldly Spirit, which turns the Soul from God, makes it an House of Darkness, and feeds it with the Food of Time, at the Expense of all the Riches of Eternity?

On the other hand, what can be so desirable a Good as the Spirit of Prayer, which empties the Soul of all its own Evil, separates Death and Darkness from it, leaves Self, Time, and the World, and becomes one Life, one Light, one Love, one Spirit with Christ, and God, and Heaven?

Think, my Friends, of these Things, with something more than Thoughts; let your hungry Souls eat of the Nourishment of them as a Bread of Heaven; and desire only to live, that with all the Working of your Wills, and the whole Spirit of your Minds, you may live and die united to God: And thus let this Conversation end, till God gives us another Meeting.

The End of the Second DIALOGUE.

THE THIRD DIALOGUE.

RUST. I have brought again with me, Gentlemen, my silent Friend, Humanus, and upon the same Condition of being silent still. But though his Silence is the same, yet he is quite altered. For this twenty Years I have known him to be of an even cheerful Temper, full of Good-nature, and even quite calm and dispassionate in his Attacks upon Christianity, never provoked by what was said either against his Infidelity, or in Defence of the Gospel. He used to boast of his being free from those four Passions and Resentments, which, he said, were so easy to be seen, in many or most Defenders of the Gospel-Meekness. But now he is morose, peevish, and full of Chagrin, and seems to be as uneasy with himself, as with every Body else: whatever he says, is rash, satirical, and wrathful. I tell him, but he will not own it, that his Case is this: The Truth has touched him; but it is only so far, as to be his Tormentor. It is only as welcome to him, as a Thief that has taken from him all his Riches, Goods, and Armour, wherein he trusted. The Christianity he used to oppose is vanished; and therefore all the Weapons he had against it, are dropped out of his Hands. It now appears to stand upon another Ground, to have a deeper Bottom, and better Nature, than what he imagined; and therefore he, and his Scheme of Infidelity, are quite disconcerted. But though his Arguments have thus lost all their Strength, yet his Heart is left in the State it was; it stands in the same Opposition to Christianity as it did before, and yet without any Ideas of his Brain to support it. And this is the true Ground of his present, uneasy, peevish State of Mind. He has nothing now to subsist upon, but the resolute Hardness of his Heart, his Pride and Obstinacy. These he cannot give up by the Force of his Reason; his Heart cannot bear the Thoughts of such a Sacrifice; and yet he feels and knows, that he has no Strength left, but in a settled Hardness, Pride, and Obstinacy, to continue as he is.—These, I own, are severe and hard Words: But, hard as they are, I am sure Humanus knows, that they proceed from the Softness and Affection of my Heart towards him, from a compassionate Zeal to show him where his Malady lies, and the Necessity of overcoming himself, before he can have the Blessing of Light, and Truth, and Peace. Though it is with some Reluctance, yet I have chosen thus to make my Neighbour known both to himself, and to you, that you may speak of such Matters as may give the best Relief to the State he is in.

Theoph. Indeed, Rusticus, I much approve of the Spirit you have here shown, with regard to your Friend, and hope he will take in good Part all that you have said. As for me, I embrace him with the utmost Tenderness of Affection. I feel and compassionate the trying State of his Heart, and have only this one Wish, that I could pour the heavenly Water of Meekness, and the Oil of Divine Love, into it. Let us force him to know, that we are the Messengers of Divine Love to him ; that we seek not ourselves, nor our own Victory, but to make him victorious over his own Evil, and become possessed of a new Life in God. His Trial is the greatest and hardest that belongs to human Nature : And yet it is absolutely necessary to be undergone.

Nature must become a Torment and Burden to itself, before it can willingly give itself up to that Death, through which alone it can pass into Life. There is no true and real Conversion, whether it be from Infidelity, or any other Life of Sin, till a Man comes to know, and feel, that nothing less than his whole Nature is to be parted with, and yet finds in himself no Possibility of doing it. This is the Inability that can bring us at last to say, with the Apostle, 'When I am weak, then am I strong.' This is the Distress that stands near to the Gate of Life ; this is the Despair by which we lose all our own Life, to find a new one in God. For here, in this Place it is, that Faith, and Hope, and true Seeking to God and Christ, are born.—But till all is Despair in ourselves, till all is lost that we had any Trust in as our own ; till then, Faith and Hope, and turning to God in Prayer, are only things learnt and practised by Rule and Method ; but they are not born in us, are not living Qualities of a new Birth, till we have done feeling any Trust or Confidence in ourselves. Happy therefore is it for your Friend Humanus, that he is come thus far, that everything is taken from him on which he trusted, and found Content in himself. In this State, one Sigh or Look, or the least Turning of his Heart to God for Help, would be the Beginning of his Salvation. Let us therefore try to improve this happy Moment to him, not so much by Arguments of Reason, as by the Arrows of that Divine Love which overflows all Nature and Creature.

For Humanus, though hitherto without Christ, is still within the Reach of Divine Love : He belongs to God ; God created him for himself, to be an Habitation of his own Life, Light, and Holy Spirit ; and God has brought him and us together, that the lost Sheep may be found, and brought back to its heavenly Shepherd.

Oh Humanus, Love is my Bait; you must be caught by it; it will put its Hook into your Heart, and force you to know, that of all strong Things, nothing is so strong, so irresistible, as Divine Love.

It brought forth all the Creation; it kindles all the Life of Heaven; it is the Song of all the Angels of God. It has redeemed all the World; it seeks for every Sinner upon Earth; it embraces all the Enemies of God; and from the Beginning to the End of Time, the one Work of Providence, is the one Work of Love.

Moses and the Prophets, Christ and his Apostles, were all of them Messengers of Divine Love. They came to kindle a Fire on Earth, and that Fire was the Love which burns in Heaven. Ask what God is? His Name is Love; he is the Good, the Perfection, the Peace, the Joy, the Glory, and Blessing, of every Life. Ask what Christ is? He is the universal Remedy of all Evil broken forth in Nature and Creature. He is the Destruction of Misery, Sin, Darkness, Death, and Hell. He is the Resurrection and Life of all fallen Nature. He is the unwearied Compassion, the long-suffering Pity, the never-ceasing Mercifulness of God to every Want and Infirmity of human Nature.

He is the Breathing forth of the Heart, Life, and Spirit of God, into all the dead Race of Adam. He is the Seeker, the Finder, the Restorer, of all that was lost and dead to the Life of God. He is the Love, that, from Cain to the End of Time, prays for all its Murderers; the Love that willingly suffers and dies among Thieves, that Thieves may have a Life with him in Paradise; the Love that visits Publicans, Harlots, and Sinners, and wants and seeks to forgive, where most is to be forgiven.

Oh, my Friends, let us surround and encompass Humanus with these Flames of Love, till he cannot make his Escape from them, but must become a willing Victim to their Power. For the universal God is universal Love; all is Love, but that which is hellish and earthly. All Religion is the Spirit of Love; all its Gifts and Graces are the Gifts and Graces of Love; it has no Breath, no Life, but the Life of Love. Nothing exalts, nothing purifies, but the Fire of Love; nothing changes Death into Life, Earth into Heaven, Men into Angels, but Love alone. Love breathes the Spirit of God; its Words and Works are the Inspiration of God. It speaketh not of itself, but the Word, the eternal Word of God speaketh in it; for all that Love speaketh, that God speaketh, because Love is God. Love is Heaven revealed in the Soul; it is Light, and Truth; it is infallible; it has no Errors, for all Errors are the Want of Love. Love has no more of Pride, than Light has of Darkness ; it stands and bears all its Fruits from a Depth, and Root of Humility. Love is of no Sect or Party ; it neither makes, nor admits of any Bounds ; you may as easily inclose the Light, or shut up the Air of the World into one Place, as confine Love to a Sect or Party. It lives in the Liberty, the Universality, the Impartiality of Heaven. It believes in one, holy, catholic God, the God of all Spirits ; it unites and joins with the catholic Spirit of the one God, who unites with all that is good, and is meek, patient, well-wishing, and long-suffering over all the Evil that is in Nature and Creature. Love, like the Spirit of God, rideth upon the Wings of the Wind ; and is in Union and Communion with all the Saints that are in Heaven and on Earth. Love is quite pure ; it has no By-ends ; it seeks not its own ; it has but one Will, and that is, to give itself into everything, and overcome all Evil with Good. Lastly, Love is the Christ of God ; it comes down from Heaven ; it regenerates the Soul from above ; it blots out all Transgressions ; it takes from Death its Sting, from the Devil his Power, and from the Serpent his Poison. It heals all the Infirmities of our earthly Birth ; it gives Eyes to the Blind, Ears to the Deaf, and makes the Dumb to speak ; it cleanses the Lepers, and casts out Devils, and puts Man in Paradise before he dies. It lives wholly to the Will of him, of whom it is born ; its Meat and Drink is, to do the Will of God. It is the Resurrection and Life of every Divine Virtue, a fruitful Mother of true Humility, boundless Benevolence, unwearied Patience, and Bowels of Compassion. This, Rusticus, is the Christ, the Salvation, the Religion of Divine Love, the true Church of God, where the Life of God is found, and lived, and to which your Friend Humanus is called by us. We direct him to nothing but the inward Life of Christ, to the Working of the Holy Spirit of God, which alone can deliver him from the Evil that is in his own Nature, and give him a Power to become a Son of God.

Rust. My Neighbour has infinite Reason to thank you, for this lovely Draught you have given of the Spirit of Religion ; he cannot avoid being affected with it. But pray let us now hear, how we are to enter into this Religion of Divine Love, or rather what God has done to introduce us into it, and make us Partakers again of his Divine Nature.

Theoph. The first Work, or Beginning of this redeeming Love of God, is in that Immanuel, or God with us, treasured up, or preserved in the first Adam, as the Seed of the Woman, which in him, and all his Posterity, should bruise the Head, and overcome the Life of the Serpent in our fallen Nature. This is Love indeed, because it is universal, and reaches every Branch of the human Tree, from the first to the last Man, that grows from it. Miserably as Mankind are divided, and all at War with one another, everyone appropriating God to themselves, yet they all have but one God, who is the Spirit of all, the Life of all, and the Lover of all. Men may divide themselves, to have God to themselves; they may hate and persecute one another for God's sake; but this is a blessed Truth, that neither the Hater, nor the Hated, can be divided from the one, holy, catholic God, who with an unalterable Meekness, Sweetness, Patience, and Good-will towards all, waits for all, calls them all, redeems them all, and comprehends all in the outstretched Arms of his catholic Love. Ask not therefore how we shall enter into this Religion of Love and Salvation? for it is itself entered into us, it has taken Possession of us from the Beginning. It is Immanuel in every human Soul; it lies as a Treasure of Heaven, and Eternity in us; it cannot be divided from us by the Power of Man; we cannot lose it ourselves; it will never leave us nor forsake us, till with our last Breath we die in the Refusal of it. This is the open Gate of our Redemption; we have not far to go to find it. It is every Man's own Treasure; it is a Root of Heaven, a Seed of God, sown into our Souls by the Word of God; and, like a small Grain of Mustard-seed, has a Power of growing to be a Tree of Life. Here, my Friend, you should, once for all, mark and observe, where and what the true Nature of Religion is; for here it is plainly shown you, that its Place is within; its Work and Effect is within; its Glory, its Life, its Perfection, is all within; it is merely and solely the raising a new Life, new Love, and a new Birth, in the inward Spirit of our Hearts. Religion (which is solely to restore Man to his first and right State in God) had its Beginning, and first Power, from the Seed of the Woman, the Treader on the Serpent's Head; and therefore all its Progress, from its Beginning to its last finished Work, is, and can be nothing else, but the growing Power and Victory of the Seed of the Woman, over all the Evil brought by the Serpent into human Nature. For the Seed of the Woman is the Spirit, and Power, and Life of God, given or breathed again into Man, to be the Raiser and Redeemer of that first Life, which he had lost. This was the spiritual Nature of Religion in its first Beginning, and this alone is its whole Nature to the End of Time; it is nothing else, but the Power, and Life, and Spirit of God, as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, working, creating, and reviving Life in the fallen Soul, and driving all its Evil out of it. This is the true Rock, on which the Church of Christ is built; this is the one Church out of which there is no Salvation, and against which the Gates of Hell can never prevail.

The Spirit of Prayer. I I I

Here therefore we are come to this firm Conclusion, that let Religion have ever so many Shapes, Forms, or Reformations, it is no true Divine Service, no proper Worship of God, has no Good in it, can do no Good to Man, can remove no Evil out of him, raise no Divine Life in him, but so far as it serves, worships, conforms, and gives itself up to this Operation of the holy, triune God, as living and dwelling in the Soul. Keep close to this Idea of Religion, as an inward, spiritual Life in the Soul; observe all its Works within you, the Death and Life that are found there; seek for no Good, no Comfort, but in the inward Awakening of all that is holy and heavenly in your Heart; and then, so much as you have of this inward Religion, so much you have of a real Salvation. For Salvation is only a Victory over Nature; so far as you resist and renounce your own vain, selfish, and earthly Nature, so far as you overcome all your own natural Tempers of the old Man, so far God enters into you, lives, and operates in you, he is in you the Light, the Life, and the Spirit, of your Soul; and you are in him that new Creature, that worships him in Spirit, and in Truth. For Divine Worship or Service is, and can be only performed by being like-minded with Christ; nothing worships God, but the Spirit of Christ his beloved Son, in whom he is well pleased. This is as true, as that 'no Man hath known 'the Father, but the Son, and he to whom the Son revealeth 'him.' Look now at anything as Religion, or Divine Service, but a strict, unerring Conformity to the Life and Spirit of Christ, and then, though every Day was full of Burnt-offerings, and Sacrifices, yet you would be only like those Religionists, who 'drew near to God with their Lips, but their Hearts were far 'from him.'

For the Heart is always far from God, unless the Spirit of Christ be alive in it. But no one has the living Spirit of Christ, but he who in all his Conversation walketh, as he walked. Consider these Words of the Apostle, 'My little Children, of whom 'I travail in Birth, till Christ be formed in you.' This is the Sum total of all, and, if this is wanting, all is wanting. Again, says he, 'He is not a Jew, which is one outwardly.—Circumcision is 'nothing, and Uncircumcision is nothing, but the new Creature 'is all.' Nay, see how much further he carries this Point, in the following Words: 'Though I speak with the Tongues of Men 'and Angels, though I have the Gift of Prophecy, though I have 'all Faith, so that I could remove Mountains,' &c., 'and have not 'Charity' (that is, have not the Spirit of Christ) 'it profiteth me 'nothing.' For by Charity here, the Apostle means neither more nor less, but strictly that same Thing, which, in other Places, he calls the new Creature, Christ formed in us, and our being led by the Spirit of Christ. According to the Apostle, nothing avails but the new Creature, nothing avails but the Spirit of Charity here described; therefore this Charity, and the new Creature, are only two different Expressions of one and the same Thing, viz., the Birth, and Formation of Christ in us. Thus saith he, 'If any Man has not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his;' nay, though he could say of himself (as our Lord says many will) Have I not prophesied in the Name of Christ, cast out Devils, and done many wonderful Works? yet such a one not being led by the Spirit of Christ, is that very Man, whose high State the Apostle makes to be a mere Nothing, because he has not that Spirit of Charity, which is the Spirit of Christ. Again, 'There is no Condemnation to those, who are in Christ Jesus;' therefore to be in Christ Jesus, is to have that Spirit of Charity, which is the Spirit, and Life, and Goodness of all Virtues. Now here you are to observe, that the Apostle no more rejects all outward Religion, when he says Circumcision is nothing, than he rejects Prophesying, and Faith, and Alms-giving, when he says they profit nothing; he only teaches this solid Truth, that the Kingdom of God is within us, and that it all consists in the State of our Heart; and that therefore all outward Observances, all the most specious Virtues, profit nothing, are of no Value, unless the hidden Man of the Heart, the new Creature, led by the Spirit of Christ, be the Doer of them.

Thus, says he, 'They who are led by the Spirit of God, are the Sons of God.' And therefore none else, be they who, or where, or what they will, Clergy, or Laity, none are, or can be, Sons of God, but they who give up themselves entirely to the Leading and Guidance of the Spirit of God, desiring to be moved, inspired, and governed solely by it.

Again, 'We are of the Circumcision, who worship God in Spirit'; and to show, that this is not a vain Pretence, he says in another Place, 'The Manifestation of the Spirit is given to every Man to profit withal.' Therefore no Profit from anything else; all Preaching and Hearing is vain, and all Preachers and Hearers stand chargeable with the Vanity of their religious Performances, who think of Preaching or Hearing profitably, any other Way, or by any other Power, than in and by the Holy Spirit of God dwelling and working in them. Thus again, 'If the Spirit of him, who raised Jesus from the Dead, dwell in you, he also shall quicken your mortal Bodies by his Spirit, which dwelleth in you.' In vain therefore is Life expected, either for Body or Soul, but by the Holy Spirit dwelling in them. Again, ‘Through him we both have Access by one Spirit to the Father’; therefore this one Spirit is the one only Way to God, and Salvation. Thus does all Scripture bring us to this Conclusion, that all Religion is but a dead Work, unless it be the Work of the Spirit of God; and that Sacraments, Prayers, Singing, Preaching, Hearing, are only so many Ways of being fervent in the Spirit, and of giving up ourselves more and more to the inward working, enlightening, quickening, sanctifying Spirit of God within us; and all for this End, that the Curse of the Fall may be taken from us, that Death may be swallowed up in Victory, and a true, real, Christ-like Nature formed in us, by the same Spirit, by which it was formed in the Holy Virgin Mary. Now for the true Ground, and absolute Necessity, of this turning wholly and solely to the Spirit of God, you need only know this plain Truth; namely, that the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Satan, or the Spirit of this World, are, and must be, the one or the other of them, the continual Leader, Guide, and Inspirer, of everything that lives in Nature. There is no going out from some one of these; the Moment you cease to be moved, quickened, and inspired by God, you are infallibly moved and directed by the Spirit of Satan, or the World, or by both of them. And the Reason is, because the Soul of Man is a Spirit, and a Life, that in its whole Being is nothing else but a Birth both of God and Nature; and therefore, every Moment of its Life, it must live in some Union and Conjunction, either with the Spirit of God governing Nature, or with the Spirit of Nature fallen from God, and working in itself. As Creatures therefore, we are under an absolute Necessity of being under the Motion, Guidance, and Inspiration, of some Spirit, that is more and greater than our own. All that is put in our own Power, is only the Choice of our Leader; but led and moved we must be, and by that Spirit, to which we give up ourselves, whether it be to the Spirit of God, or the Spirit of fallen Nature. To seek therefore to be always under the Inspiration and Guidance of God’s Holy Spirit, and to act by an immediate Power from it, is not proud Enthusiasm, but as sober and humble a Thought, as suitable to our State, as to think of renouncing the World, and the Devil: For they never are, or can be, renounced by us, but so far as the Spirit of God is living, breathing, and moving in us: And that for this plain Reason, because nothing is contrary to the Spirit of Satan, and the World, nothing works, or can work, contrary to it, but the Spirit of Heaven.

The Spirit of Prayer. 113

Hence our Lord said, ‘He that is not with me, is against me; and ‘he that gathereth not with me, scattereth;’ plainly declaring, that not to be with him, and led by his Spirit is to be led by the Spirit of Satan, and the World. Ask now, what Hell is? It is Nature destitute of the Light and Spirit of God, and full only of its own Darkness; nothing else can make it to be Hell. Ask what Heaven is? It is Nature quickened, enlightened, blessed, and glorified, by the Light and Spirit of God dwelling in it. What Possibility therefore can there be, of our dividing from Hell, or parting with all that is hellish in us, but by having the Life, Light, and Spirit of God living and working in us? And here again, my Friends, you may see in the greatest Clearness, why nothing is available, nothing is Salvation, but the new Birth of a Christlike Nature; it is because everything else but this Birth, and Life of the Spirit, is only the Spirit of Satan, or the Spirit of this World. Have you anything to object to these things?

Acad. Truly, Sir, all Objections are over with me; you have taken from me every Difficulty or Perplexity that I had, either about Religion, or the Providence of God. I can now look back into the first Origin of Things with Satisfaction: I have seen how the World and Man began to be, in a Way highly worthy of the Divine Wisdom, and how they both came into their present Condition, and how they both are to rise out of it, and return back to their first State in a glorious Eternity. It now appears to me with the utmost Clearness, that to look for Salvation in anything else, but the Light of God within us, the Spirit of God working in us, the Birth of Christ really brought forth in us, is to be as carnally minded, as ignorant of God, and Man, and Salvation, as the Jews were, when their Hearts were wholly set upon the Glory of their Temple-service, and a temporal Saviour to defend it, by a temporal Power. For everything but the Light and Spirit of God bringing forth a Birth of Christ in the Soul, everything else, be it what it will, has and can have no more of Salvation in it, than a temporal fighting Saviour. For what is said of the Impossibility of the Blood of Bulls and of Goats to take away Sins, must with the same Truth be said of all other outward creaturely Things; they are all at the same Distance from being the Salvation of the Soul, and in the same Degree of Inability to take away Sins, as the Blood of Bulls and Goats.

And all this for this plain Reason, because the Soul is a Spirit breathed forth from God himself, which therefore cannot be blessed but by having the Life of God in it; and nothing can bring the Life of God into it, but only the Light and Spirit of God. Upon this Ground I stand in the utmost Certainty, looking wholly to the Light and Spirit of God for an inward Redemption from all the inward Evil that is in my fallen Nature. All that I now want to know is this, what I am to do, to procure this continual Operation of the Spirit of God within me. For I seem to myself, not to know this enough ; and I am also afraid of certain Delusions, which I have heard many have fallen into, under Pretences of being led by the Spirit of God. Pray therefore, Theophilus, give me some Instructions on this Head.

Rust. Pray, Gentlemen, let an unlearned Man speak a Word here. Suppose, Academicus, you had a longing earnest Desire, to be governed by a Spirit of Plainness and Sincerity in your whole Conversation. Would this put you upon asking for Art, and Rules, and Methods, or consulting some learned Man, or Book, to direct you, and keep you from Delusion? Would you not know and feel in yourself, that your own earnest Desire, and Love of Sincerity and Plainness, and your own inward Aversion to everything that was contrary to it, must be the one only possible Way of attaining it, and that you must have it in that Degree, as you loved and liked to act by it? Now there is no more of Art, or any Secret required to bring and keep you under the Direction of the Spirit of God, than under the Spirit of Plainness and Sincerity. The longing earnest Desire of the Heart, brings you into the safe Possession of the one, as it does of the other. For it has been enough proved, that the Spirit of Prayer forms the Spirit of our Lives, and every Man lives as the Spirit of Prayer leads him. Nay every Prayer for the Holy Spirit, is the Spirit itself praying in you. For nothing can turn to God, desire to be united to him, and governed by him, but the Spirit of God. The Impossibility of praying for the Spirit of God in vain, is thus shown by our blessed Lord: 'If ye, being evil, know how to give good Gifts unto your Children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to those that ask for it?' But I here stop.

Acad. I do not know how to understand what Rusticus has said. For do not all good Christians daily pray for the Spirit of God? yet how few are led by it? Pray, Theophilus, do you speak here.

Theoph. People may be daily at the Service of the Church, and read long Prayers at home, in which are many Petitions for the Holy Spirit, and yet live and die, led and governed by the Spirit of the World; because all these Prayers, whether we hear them read by others, or read them ourselves, may be done in Compliance only to Duties, Rules, and Forms of Religion, as Things we are taught not to neglect; but, being only done thus, they are not the true, real Working of the Spirit of the Heart, nor make any real Alteration in it. But you are to observe, that Rusticus spoke of the Spirit of Prayer, which is the Heart's own Prayer, and which has all the Strength of the Heart in it. And this is the Prayer that must be affirmed to be always effectual ; it never returns empty ; it eats and drinks that, after which it hungers and thirsts ; and nothing can possibly hinder it from having that, which it prays for. This we are assured of from these Words of Truth itself ; ‘Blessed are they that hunger and ‘thirst after Righteousness, for they shall be filled.’ But this Blessedness could not belong to Hungering, if the truly Hungry and Thirsty, could ever be sent empty away. Every Spirit necessarily reaps that which it sows, it cannot possibly be otherwise, it is the unalterable Procedure of Nature. Spirit is the first Power of Nature, everything proceeds from it, is born of it, yields to it, and is governed by it. If the Spirit soweth to the Flesh, it reapeth that Corruption which belongs to the Flesh ; if it soweth to the Spirit, it reapeth the Fruits of the Spirit, which are eternal Life. The Spirit of Prayer therefore is the Opener of all that is good within us, and the Receiver of all that is good without us ; it unites with God, is one Power with him ; it works with him, and drives all that is not God, out of the Soul. The Soul is no longer a Slave to its natural Impurity and Corruption, no longer imprisoned in its own Death and Darkness, but till the Fire from Heaven, the Spirit of Prayer, is kindled in it.

Then begins the Resurrection, and the Life ; and all that which died in Adam comes to Life in Christ. Ask not therefore, Academicus, what you are to do to obtain the Spirit of God, to live in it, and be led by it ? For your Power of having it, and your Measure of receiving it, are just according to that Faith and Earnestness with which you desire to be led by it. For the hungry Spirit of Prayer is that Faith, to which all Things are possible, to which all Nature, though as high as Mountains, and as stiff as Oaks, must yield and obey. It heals all Diseases, breaks the Bands of Death, and calls the Dead out of their Graves. Look at the small Seeds of Plants, shut up in their own dead Husks, and covered with thick Earth, and see how they grow. What do they do ? They hunger and thirst after the Light and Air of this World. Their Hunger eats that which they hunger after, and this is their Vegetation. If the Plant ceases to hunger, it withers and dies, though surrounded with the Air and Light of this World.

This is the true Nature of the spiritual Life ; it is as truly a Growth or Vegetation, as that of Plants ; and nothing but its own Hunger can help it to the true Food of its Life. If this hunger of the Soul ceases, it withers and dies, though in the midst of Divine Plenty. Our Lord, to show us that the new Birth is really a State of spiritual Vegetation, compares it to a small Grain of Mustard-seed, from whence a great Plant arises. Now every Seed has a Life in itself, or else it could not grow. What is this Life? It is nothing else but an Hunger in the Seed, after the Air and Light of this World; which Hunger, being met and fed by the Light and Air of Nature, changes the Seed into a living Plant. Thus it is with the Seed of Heaven in the Soul? it has a Life in itself, or else no Life could arise from it. What is this Life? It is nothing else but Faith, or an Hunger after God and Heaven; which no sooner stirs, or is suffered to stir, but it is met, embraced, and quickened, by the Light and Spirit of God and Heaven; and so a new Man in Christ, is formed from the Seed of Heaven, as a new Plant from a Seed in the Earth. Let us suppose now, that the Seed of a Plant had Sense and Reason, and that, instead of continually hungering after, and drawing in the Virtue of the Light and Air of our outward Nature, it should amuse, and content its Hunger with reasoning about the Nature of Hunger, and the different Powers and Virtues of Light and Air; must not such a Seed of all Necessity wither away, without ever becoming a living Plant? Now this is no false Similitude of the Seed of Life in Man: Man has a Power of drawing all the Virtue of Heaven into himself, because the Seed of Heaven is the Gift of God in his Soul, which wants the Light and Spirit of God to bring it to the Birth, just as the Seed of the Plant wants the Light and Air of this World; it cannot possibly grow up in God, but by taking in Light, Life, and Spirit from Heaven, as the Creatures of Time take in the Light, and Life, and Spirit of this World. If therefore the Soul, instead of hungering after Heaven, instead of eating the Flesh and Blood of the Christ of God, contents and amuses this Seed of Life with Ideas, and Notions, and Sounds, must not such a Soul of Necessity wither, and die, without ever becoming a living Creature of Heaven? Wonder not therefore, Academicus, that all the Work of our Salvation and Regeneration is, by the Scripture, wholly confined to the Operation of the Light and Spirit of God, living and working in us. It is for the same Reason, and on the same Necessity, that the Life and Growth of the Creatures of this World, must be wholly ascribed to the Powers of this World, living and working in them. Nor does all this, in the least Degree, make a Man a Machine, or without any Power with regard to his Salvation. He must grow in God, as the Plants grow in this World, from a Power that is not his own, as they grow from the Powers of outward Nature. But he differs entirely from the Plants in this, that an uncontrollable Will, which is his own, must be the Leader and Beginner of his Growth either in God, or Nature. It is strictly true, that all Man's Salvation depends upon himself ; and it is as strictly true, that all the Work of his Salvation, is solely the Work of God in his Soul. All his Salvation depends upon himself, because his Will-Spirit has its Power of Motion in itself. As a Will, it can only receive that which it willeth ; everything else is absolutely shut out of it. For it is the unalterable Nature of the Will, that it cannot possibly receive anything into it, but that which it willeth ; its Willing is its only Power of receiving ; and therefore there can be no possible Entrance for God or Heaven into the Soul, till the Will-Spirit of the Soul desires it ; and thus all Man's Salvation depends upon himself. On the other hand, nothing can create, effect, or bring forth, a Birth or Growth of the Divine Life in the Soul, but that Light and Spirit of God, which brings forth the Divine Life in Heaven, and all heavenly Beings. And thus the Work of our Salvation is wholly and solely the Work of the Light and Spirit of God, dwelling and operating in us. Thus, Academicus, you see that God is all ; that nothing but his Life and working Power in us, can be our Salvation ; and yet that nothing but the Spirit of Prayer can make it possible for us to have it, or be capable of it. And therefore neither you, nor any other human Soul, can be without the Operation of the Light and Spirit of God in it, but because its Will-Spirit, or its Spirit of Prayer, is turned towards something else ; for we are always in Union with that, with which our Will is united. Again : Look, Academicus, at the Light and Air of this World, you see with what a Freedom of Communication they overflow, enrich, and enliven every Thing ; they enter everywhere, if not hindered by something that withstands their Entrance. This may represent to you the ever-overflowing free Communication of the Light and Spirit of God, to every human Soul. They are everywhere ; we are encompassed with them ; our Souls are as near to them, as our Bodies are to the Light and Air of this World ; nothing shuts them out of us, but the Will and Desire of our Souls, turned from them, and praying for something else. I say, praying for something else ; for you are to notice this, as a certain Truth, that every Man's Life is a continual State of Prayer ; he is no Moment free from it, nor can possibly be so. For all our natural Tempers, be they what they will, Ambition, Covetousness, Selfishness, Worldly-mindedness, Pride, Envy, Hatred, Malice, or any other Lust whatever, are all of them in reality, only so many different Kinds, and Forms of a Spirit of Prayer, which is as inseparable from the Heart, as Weight is from the Body. For every natural Temper is nothing else, but a Manifestation of the Desire and Prayer of the Heart, and shows us, how it works and wills. And as the Heart worketh, and willeth, such, and no other, is its Prayer. All else is only Form, and Fiction, and empty beating of the Air. If therefore the working Desire of the Heart is not habitually turned towards God, if this is not our Spirit of Prayer, we are necessarily in a State of Prayer towards something else, that carries us from God, and brings all kind of Evil into us. For this is the Necessity of our Nature; pray we must, as sure as our Heart is alive; and therefore when the State of our Heart is not a Spirit of Prayer to God, we pray without ceasing to some, or other Part of the Creation. The Man whose Heart habitually tends towards the Riches, Honours, Powers, or Pleasures of this Life, is in a continual State of Prayer towards all these Things. His Spirit stands always bent towards them; they have his Hope, his Love, his Faith, and are the many Gods that he worships: And though when he is upon his Knees, and uses Forms of Prayer, he directs them to the God of Heaven; yet these are in Reality the God of his Heart, and, in a sad Sense of the Words, he really worships them in Spirit, and in Truth. Hence you may see, Academicus, how it comes to pass, that there is so much Praying, and yet so little of true Piety amongst us. The Bells are daily calling us to Church, our Closets abound with Manuels of Devotion, yet how little Fruit! It is all for this Reason, because our Prayers are not our own; they are not the Abundance of our own Heart; are not found and felt within us, as we feel our own Hunger and Thirst; but are only so many borrowed Forms of Speech, which we use at certain Times and Occasions. And therefore it is no Wonder that little Good comes of it. What Benefit could it have been to the Pharisee, if, with an Heart inwardly full of its own Pride and Self-exaltation, he had outwardly hung down his Head, smote upon his Breast, and borrowed the Publican's Words, 'God 'be merciful to me a Sinner?' What greater Good can be expected from our Praying in the Words of David, or Singing his Psalms seven times a Day, if our Heart has no more of the Spirit of David in it, than the Heart of the Pharisee had of the Spirit of the humble Publican?

118 The Spirit of Prayer.

Acad. O Theophilus, Truth and Reason force me to consent to what you say; and yet I am afraid of following you: For you here seem to condemn Forms of Prayer in public, and Manuels of Devotion in private. What will become of Religion, if these are set aside or disregarded?

Theoph. Dear Academicus, abate your Fright. Can you think, that I am against your praying in the Words of David, or breathing his Spirit in your Prayers, or that I would censure your singing his Psalms seven times a Day? Remember how very lately I put into your Hands the Book called, A Serious Call to a Devout Life, &c., and then think how unlikely it is, that I should be against Times and Methods of Devotion. At three several Times, we are told, our Lord prayed, repeating the same Form of Words; and therefore a set Form of Words are not only consistent with, but may be highly suitable to, the most Divine Spirit of Prayer. If your own Heart, for Days and Weeks, was unable to alter, or break off from inwardly thinking and saying, 'Hallowed be thy Name, thy Kingdom come, thy Will be done;' if at other times, for Weeks and Months, it stood always inwardly in another Form of Prayer, unable to vary, or depart from saying, 'Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly, with all thy holy Nature, Spirit, and Tempers, into my Soul, that I may be born again of Thee, a new Creature;' I should be so far from censuring such a Formality of Prayer, that I should say, Blessed and happy are they, whose Hearts are tied to such a Form of Words. It is not therefore, Sir, a set Form of Words that is spoken against, but an heartless Form, a Form that has no Relation to, or Correspondence with, the State of the Heart that uses it. All that I have said is only to teach you the true Nature of Prayer, that it is only the Work of the Heart. and that the Heart only prays in Reality (whatever its Words are) for that which it habitually wills, likes, loves, and longs to have. It is not therefore the using the Words of David, or any other Saint, in your Prayers, that is censured, but the using them without that State of Heart, which first spoke them forth, and the trusting to them, because they are a good Form, though in our Hearts we have nothing that is like them. It would be good to say incessantly with holy David, 'My Heart is athirst for God. — As the Hart desireth the Water-brooks, so longeth my Soul after Thee, O God.' But there is no Goodness in saying daily these Words, if no such Thirst is felt, or desired in the Heart. And, my Friend, you may easily know, that dead Forms of Religion, and Numbers of repeated Prayers, keep Men content with their State of Devotion, because they make use of such holy Prayers; though their Hearts, from Morning to Night, are in a State quite contrary to them, and join no further in them, than in liking to use them at certain times.

Acad. I acquiesce, Theophilus, in the Truth of what you have said, and plainly see the Necessity of condemning what you have condemned; which is not the Form, but the heartless Form. But still I have a Scruple upon me: I shall be almost afraid of going to Church, where there are so many good Prayers offered up to God, as suspecting they may not be the Prayers or Language of my own Heart, and so become only a Lip-labour, or, what is worse, an Hypocrisy before God.

Theoph. I do not, Academicus, dislike your Scruple at all ; for you do well to be afraid of saying anything of yourself, or to God, in your Prayers, which your Heart does not truly say. It is also good for you to think, that many of the Prayers of the Church may go faster, and higher, than your Heart can in Truth go along with them. For this will put you upon a right Care over yourself, and so to live, that, as a true Son of your Mother the Church, your Heart may be able to speak her Language, conform to her Service, and find the Delight of your Soul in the Spirit of her Prayers. But this will only then come to pass, when the Spirit of Prayer is the Spirit of your Heart ; then every good Word, whether in a Form, or out of a Form, whether heard, or read, or thought, will be as suitable to your Heart, as gratifying to it, as Food is to the hungry, and Drink to the thirsty Soul. But till the Spirit of the Heart is thus renewed, till it is emptied of all earthly Desires, and stands in an habitual Hunger and Thirst after God (which is the true Spirit of Prayer) till then, all our Forms of Prayer will be, more or less, but too much like Lessons that are given to Scholars ; and we shall mostly say them, only because we dare not neglect them. But be not discouraged, Academicus ; take the following Advice, and then you may go to Church without any Danger of a mere Lip-labour or Hypocrisy, although there should be an Hymn, or a Psalm, or a Prayer, whose Language is higher than that of your own Heart. Do this : Go to the Church, as the Publican went into the Temple ; stand inwardly in the Spirit of your Mind, in that Form which he outwardly expressed, when he cast down his Eyes, smote upon his Breast, and could only say, God be merciful to me a Sinner ! Stand unchangeably (at least in your Desire) in this Form and State of Heart ; it will sanctify every Petition that comes out of your Mouth ; and when anything is read, or sung, or prayed, that is more exalted and fervent than your Heart is, if you make this an Occasion of a further sinking down in the Spirit of the Publican, you will then be helped, and highly blessed, by those Prayers and Praises, which seem only to fit, and belong to, a better Heart than yours.

This, my Friend, is a Secret of Secrets ; it will help you to reap where you have not sown, and be a continual Source of Grace in your Soul. This will not only help you to receive Good from those Prayers, which seem too good for the State of your Heart, but will help you to find Good from everything else : For everything that inwardly stirs in you, or outwardly happens to you, becomes a real Good to you, if it either finds or excites in you this humble Form of Mind : For nothing is in vain, or without Profit, to the humble Soul ; like the Bee, it takes its

Honey even from bitter Herbs ; it stands always in a State of Divine Growth ; and everything that falls upon it, is like a Dew of Heaven to it. Shut up yourself therefore in this Form of Humility, all Good is enclosed in it ; it is a Water of Heaven, that turns the Fire of the fallen Soul, into the Meekness of the Divine Life, and creates that Oil, out of which the Love to God and Man gets its Flame. Be inclosed therefore always in it ; let it be as a Garment wherewith you are always covered, and the Girdle with which you are girt ; breathe nothing but in and from its Spirit ; see nothing but with its Eyes ; hear nothing but with its Ears ; And then, whether your are in the Church, or out of the Church ; hearing the Praises of God, or receiving Wrongs from Men, and the World, all will be Edification, and every Thing will help forward your Growth in the Life of God.

Acad. Indeed, Theophilus, this Answer to my Scruple is quite Good : I not only like, but I love it much : it gives as well an Unction to my Heart, as a Light to my Mind. All my Desire now is, to live no longer to the World, to myself, my own natural Tempers and Passions, but wholly to the Will of the blessed and adorable God, moved and guided by his Holy Spirit.

Theoph. This Resolution, Academicus, only shows that you are just come to yourself ; for everything short of this earnest Desire to live wholly unto God, may be called a most dreadful Infatuation or Madness, an Insensibility that cannot be described. For what else is our Life, but a Trial for the greatest Evil, or Good, that an Eternity can give us ? What can be so dreadful, as to die possessed of a wicked immortal Nature, or to go out of this World with Tempers, that must keep us for ever burning in our own Fire, and Brimstone ? What has God not done to prevent this ? His redeeming Love began with our Fall, and kindles itself as a Spark of Heaven in every fallen Soul. It calls every Man to Salvation, and every Man is forced to hear, though he will not obey his Voice. God has so loved the World, that his only Son hung and expired, bleeding on the Cross, not to atone his own Wrath against us, but to extinguish our own Hell within us, to pour his heavenly Love into us, to show us that Meekness, Suffering, and Dying to our own Fallen Nature, is the one, only possible Way, for fallen Man to be alive again in God. Are we yet Sons of Pride, and led away with Vanity ? Do the Powers of Darkness rule over us ? Do impure evil Spirits possess and drive on our Lives ? Has Sin lost all its Power of frightening us ? Is Remorse of Conscience no longer felt ? Are Falsehood, Guile, Debauchery, Profaneness, Perjury, Bribery, Corruption, and Adultery, no longer seeking to hide themselves in Corners, but openly entering all our high Places, giving Battle to every Virtue, and laying Claim to the Government of the World? Are we thus near being swallowed up by a Deluge of Vice and Impiety? All this is not come upon us, because God has left us too much without Help from Heaven, or too much exposed us to the Powers of Hell; but it is because we have rejected and despised the whole Mystery of our Salvation, and trampled under Foot the precious Blood of Christ, which alone has that omnipotence, that can either bring Heaven into us, or drive Hell out of us. O Britain, Britain, think that the Son of God saith unto thee, as he said, 'O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy Children, as a Hen gathereth her Chickens under her Wings, and ye would not! Behold, your House is left unto you desolate.' And now let me say, What aileth thee, O British Earth, that thou quakest, and the Foundations of thy Churches that they totter? Just that same aileth thee, as ailed Judah's Earth, when the Divine Saviour of the World, dying on the Cross, was reviled, scorned, and mocked, by the inhabitants of Jerusalem; then the Earth quaked, the Rocks rent, and the Sun refused to give its Light. Nature again declares for God; the Earth, and the Elements can no longer bear our Sins: Jerusalem's Doom for Jerusalem's Sin, may well be feared by us. Oh ye miserable Pens dipped in Satan's Ink, that dare to publish the Folly of believing in Jesus Christ, where will you hide your guilty Heads, when Nature dissolved, shall show you the Rainbow, on which the crucified Saviour shall sit in Judgment, and every Work receive its Reward? O tremble! ye apostate Sons that come out of the Schools of Christ, to fight Lucifer's Battles, and do that for him, which neither he, nor his Legions can do for themselves. Their inward Pride, Spite, Wrath, Malice and Rage against God, and Christ, and human Nature, have no Pens but yours, no Apostles but you. They must be forced to work in the Dark, to steal privately into impure Hearts, could they not beguile you into a fond Belief, that you are Lovers of Truth, Friends of Reason, Detectors of Fraud, great Geniuses, and Moral Philosophers, merely, and solely, because ye blaspheme Christ, and the Gospel of God. Poor deluded Souls, rescued from Hell by the Blood of Christ, called by God to possess the Thrones of fallen Angels, permitted to live only by the Mercy of God, that ye may be born again from above! my Heart bleeds for you. Think, I beseech you, in time, what Mercies ye are trampling under your Feet. Say not that Reason, and your intellectual Faculties, stand in your Way; that these are the best Gifts, that God has given you, and that these suffer you not to come to Christ. For all this is as vain a Pretence, and as gross a Mistake, as if ye were to say, that you had nothing but your Feet to carry you to Heaven. For your Heart is the best and greatest Gift of God to you ; it is the highest, greatest, strongest, and noblest Power of your Nature ; it forms your whole Life, be it what it will ; all Evil, and all Good, comes from it ; your Heart alone has the Key of Life and Death ; it does all that it will ; Reason is but its Plaything, and whether in Time or Eternity, can only be a mere Beholder of the Wonders of Happiness, or Forms of Misery, which the right, or wrong Working of the Heart is entered into.

I will here give you an infallible Touch-stone, that will try all to the Truth. It is this : Retire from the World, and all Conversation, only for one Month ; neither write, nor read, nor debate anything in private with yourself ; stop all the former Workings of your Heart and Mind ; and, with all the Strength of your Heart, stand all this Month as continually as you can, in this following Form of Prayer to God. Offer it frequently on your Knees ; but, whether sitting, standing, or walking, be always inwardly longing, and earnestly praying this one Prayer to God : ‘ That, of his great Goodness, he would make known to you, and ‘ take from your Heart, every Kind, and Form, and Degree of ‘ Pride, whether it be from evil Spirits, or your own corrupt ‘ Nature ; and that he would awaken in you the deepest Depth ‘ and Truth of all that Humility, which can make you capable of ‘ his Light, and Holy Spirit.’ Reject every Thought, but that of wishing, and praying in this Manner from the Bottom of your Heart, with such Truth and Earnestness, as People in Torment, wish and pray to be delivered from it. Now if you dare not, if your Hearts will not, cannot give themselves up in this manner to the Spirit of this Prayer, then the Touch-stone has done its Work, and you may be as fully assured, both what your Infidelity is, and from what it proceeds, as you can be of the plainest Truth in Nature. This will show you, how vainly you appeal to your Reason, and Speculation, as the Cause of your Infidelity ; that it is full as false and absurd, as if Thieves and Adulterers should say, that their Theft and Adultery was entirely owing to their bodily Eyes, which showed them external Objects, and not to anything that was wrong or bad in their Hearts. On the other hand, if you can, and will give yourselves up in Truth and Sincerity to this Spirit of Prayer, I will venture to affirm, that if you had twice as many evil Spirits in you, as Mary Magdalen had, they will all be cast out of you, and you will be forced with her, to weep with Tears of Love, at the feet of the holy Jesus.

But here, my Friends, I stop, that we may return to the Matter we had in hand.

Rust. You have made no Digression, Theophilus, from our main Point, which was to recommend Christianity to poor Humanus. He must, I am sure, have felt the Death-blows, that you have here given to the Infidel Scheme. Their Idol of Reason, which is the vain God, that they worship in vain, is here like Dagon fallen to the Ground, never to rise up again. Humanus is caught by your Bait of Love, and I daresay he wants only to have this Conversation ended, that he may try himself to the Truth, by this Divine Touch-stone, which you have put into his Hands.

Acad. Give me leave, Gentlemen, to add one Word to this Matter. Theophilus has here fairly pulled Reason out of its usurped Throne, and shown it to be a powerless, idle Toy, when compared to the royal Strength of the Heart, which is the kingly Power, that has all the Government of Life in its Hands. But if Humanus, or anyone else, would see Reason fully maintained in all its just Rights, and yet entirely disarmed of all its Pretences to a Religion of its own, and the Truth of the Gospel fully proved to every Man, learned, or unlearned, from the known State of his own Heart; if he would see all this set forth in the strongest, clearest Light, he need only read about an hundred Pages of a *Book published about twelve Years ago, to which no Answer has, nor, it may be, ever will be given by any Patron of Reason, and Infidelity. And if Part of that Book (as I have often wished) beginning at Page 70 to 117, was printed by itself, and known and read in every Part of the Kingdom, all Christians, though no Scholars, would have Learning enough both to see the deep, true, and comfortable Foundation of their Gospel Faith, and the miserable Folly, and Ignorance of those, who would set up a Religion of human Reason instead of it. But now, Theophilus, I beg we may return to that very Point concerning Prayer, where we left off. I think my Heart is entirely devoted to God, and that I desire nothing but to live in such a State of Prayer, as may best keep me under the Guidance and Direction of the Holy Spirit. Assist me therefore, my dear Friend, in this important Matter; give me the fullest Directions, that you can; and if you have any Manual of Devotion, that you prefer, or any Method that you would put me in, pray let me know it.

Rust. I beg leave to speak a Word to Academicus. I am glad, Sir, to see this Fire of Heaven, thus far kindled in your Soul; but wonder that you should want to know, how you are to keep up its Flame, which is like wanting to know, how you are to love and desire that, which you do love and desire. Does a blind, or sick, or lame Man want to know, how he shall wish and desire Sight, Health, and Limbs? or would he be at a Loss, till some Form of Words taught him how to long for them? Now you can have no Desire or Prayer for any Grace, or Help from God, till you in some Degree as surely feel the Want of them, and desire the Good of them, as the sick Man feels the Want, and desires the Good of Health. But when this is your Case, you want no more to be told how to pray, than the thirsty Man wants to be told, what he shall ask for. Have you not fully consented to this Truth, that the Heart only can pray, and that it prays for nothing but that, which it loves, wills, and wishes to have? But can Love or Desire want Art, or Method, to teach it to be, that which it is? If from the Bottom of your Heart you have a sincere, warm Love for your most valuable Friend, would you want to buy a Book, to tell you, what Sentiments you feel in your Heart towards this Friend, what Comfort, what Joy, what Gratitude, what Trust, what Honour, what Confidence, what Faith, are all alive, and stirring in your Heart towards him? Ask not therefore, Academicus, for a Book of Prayers; but ask your Heart what is within it, what it feels, how it stirs, what it wants, what it would have altered, what it desires? and then, instead of calling upon Theophilus for Assistance, stand in the same Form of Petition to God.

* A Demonstration of the Gross and Fundamental Errors of a late Book, called, A Plain Account of the Nature, &c., of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

126 The Spirit of Prayer.

For this turning to God according to the inward Feeling, Want, and Motion of your own Heart, in Love, in Trust, in Faith of having from him all that you want, and wish to have, this turning thus unto God, whether it be with, or without Words, is the best Form of Prayer in the World.—Now no Man can be ignorant of the State of his own Heart, or a Stranger to those Tempers, that are alive and stirring in him, and therefore no Man can want a Form of Prayer; for what should be the Form of his Prayer, but that which the Condition, and State of his Heart demands? If you know of no Trouble, feel no Burden, want nothing to be altered, or removed, nothing to be increased or strengthened in you, how can you pray for anything of this Kind? But if your Heart knows its own Plague, feels its inward Evil, knows what it wants to have removed, will you not let your Distress form the Manner of your Prayer? or will you pray in a Form of Words, that have no more Agreement with your State, than if a Man walking above-ground, should beg every Man he met, to pull him out of a deep Pit. For Prayers not formed according to the real State of your Heart, are but like a Prayer to be pulled out of a deep Well, when you are not in it. Hence you may see, how unreasonable it is to make a Mystery of Prayer, or an Art, that needs so much Instruction; since every Man is, and only can be, directed by his own inward State and Condition, when, and how, and what he is to pray for, as every Man's outward State shows him what he outwardly wants. And yet it should seem, as if a Prayer-Book was highly necessary, and ought to be the Performance of great Learning and Abilities, since only our learned Men and Scholars make our Prayer-Books.

Acad. I did not imagine, Rusticus, that you would have so openly declared against Manuals of Devotion, since you cannot but know, that not only the most learned, but the most pious Doctors of the Church, consider them as necessary Helps to Devotion.

Rust. If you, Academicus, were obliged to go a long Journey on Foot, and yet through a Weakness in your Legs could not set one Foot before another, you would do well to get the best travelling Crutches that you could.

But if, with sound and good Legs, you would not stir one Step, till you had got Crutches to hop with, surely a Man might show you the Folly of not walking with your own Legs, without being thought a declared Enemy to Crutches, or the Makers of them. Now a Manual is not so good an Help, as Crutches, and yet you see Crutches are only proper, when our Legs cannot do their Office. It is, I say, not so good an Help as Crutches, because that which you do with the Crutches, is that very same Thing, that you should have done with your Legs; you really travel; but when the Heart cannot take one Step in Prayer, and you therefore read your Manual, you do not do that very same Thing, which your Heart should have done, that is, really pray. A fine Manual therefore is not to be considered as a Means of praying, or as something that puts you in a State of Prayer, as Crutches help you to travel; but its chief Use, as a Book of Prayers to a dead and hardened Heart that has no Prayer of its own, is to show it, what a State and Spirit of Prayer it wants, and at what a sad Distance it is from feeling all that Variety of humble, penitent, grateful, fervent, resigned, loving Sentiments, which are described in the Manual, that so, being touched with a View of its own miserable State, it may begin its own Prayer to God for Help. But I have done. Theophilus may now answer your earnest Request.

Theoph. Your earnest Desire, Academicus, to live in the Spirit of Prayer, and be truly governed by it, is a most excellent Desire; for to be a Man of Prayer is that which the Apostle means by living in the Spirit, and having our Conversation in Heaven. It is to have done, not only with the confessed Vices, but with the allowed Follies and Vanities of this World. To tell such a soul of the Innocence of Levity, that it needs not run away from idle Discourse, vain Gaiety, and trifling Mirth, as being the harmless Relief of our heavy Natures, is like telling the Flame, that it needs not always be ascending upwards. But here you are to observe, that this Spirit of Prayer is not to be taught you by a Book, or brought into you by an Art from without, but must be an inward Birth, that must arise from your own Fire and Light within you, as the Air arises from the Fire and Light of this World. For the Spirit of every Being, be it what or where it will, or be its Spirit of what Kind it will, is only the Breath or Spirit that proceeds from its own Fire and Light. In vegetative, sensitive, and intellectual Creatures, it is all in the same Manner; Spirit is the third Form of its Life, and is the Birth that proceeds from the other two; and is the Manifestation of their Nature and Qualities. For such as the Fire and Light are, such and no other, neither higher nor lower, neither better nor worse, is the Spirit that proceeds from them. Now the Reason why all, and every Life does, and must stand in this Form, is wholly and solely from hence, because the Deity, the one Source and Fountain of all life, is a triune God, whose third Form is, and is called, the Spirit of God, proceeding from the Father, and the Son.

The painful Sense and Feeling of what you are, kindled into a working State of Sensibility by the Light of God within you, is the Fire and Light from whence your Spirit of Prayer proceeds. In its first kindling nothing is found or felt, but Pain, Wrath, and Darkness, as is to be seen in the first kindling of every Heat or Fire. And therefore its first Prayer is nothing else but a Sense of Penitence, Self-condemnation, Confession, and Humility. It feels nothing but its own Misery, and so is all Humility. This Prayer of Humility is met by the Divine Love, the Mercifulness of God embraces it; and then its Prayer is changed into Hymns, and Songs, and Thanksgivings. When this State of Fervour has done its Work, has melted away all earthly Passions and Affections, and left no Inclination in the Soul, but to delight in God alone, then its Prayer changes again. It is now come so near to God, has found such Union with him, that it does not so much pray as live in God. Its Prayer is not any particular Action, is not the Work of any particular Faculty, not confined to Times, or Words, or Place, but is the Work of his whole Being, which continually stands in Fulness of Faith, in Purity of Love, in absolute Resignation, to do, and be, what and how his Beloved pleases. This is the last State of the Spirit of Prayer, and is its highest Union with God in this Life.

Each of these foregoing States has its Time, its Variety of Workings, its Trials, Temptations, and Purifications, which can only be known by Experience in the Passage through them. The one only and infallible Way to go safely through all the Difficulties, Trials, Temptations, Dryness, or Opposition, of our own evil Tempers, is this: It is to expect nothing from ourselves, to trust to nothing in ourselves, but in everything expect, and depend upon God for Relief. Keep fast Hold of this Thread, and then let your Way be what it will, Darkness, Temptation, or the Rebellion of Nature, you will be led through all, to an Union with God: For nothing hurts us in any State, but an Expectation of something in it, and from it, which we should only expect from God. We are looking for our own Virtue, our own Piety, our own Goodness, and so live on and on in our own Poverty and Weakness; To-day pleased and comforted with the seeming Strength and Firmness of our own pious Tempers, and fancying ourselves to be somewhat; To-morrow, fallen into our own Mire, we are dejected, but not humbled; we grieve, but it is only the Grief of Pride, at the seeing our Perfection not to be such as we vainly imagined. And thus it will be, till the whole Turn of our Minds is so changed, that we as fully see and know our Inability to have any Goodness of our own, as to have a Life of our own.

For since nothing is, or can be, good in us, but the Life of God manifested in us, how can this be had but from God alone? When we are happily brought to this Conviction, then we have done with all Thought of being our own Builders; the whole Spirit of our Mind is become a mere Faith, and Hope, and Trust in the sole Operation of God's Spirit, looking no more to any other Power, to be formed in Christ new Creatures, than we look to any other Power for the Resurrection of our Bodies at the last Day. Hence may be seen, that the Trials of every State are its greatest Blessings; they do that for us, which we most of all want to have done, they force us to know our own Nothingness, and the All of God.

People who have long dwelt in the Fervours of Devotion, in an high Sensibility of Divine Affections, practising every Virtue with a kind of Greediness, are frightened, when Coldness seizes upon them, when their Hymns give no Transport, and their Hearts, instead of flaming with the Love of every Virtue, seem ready to be overcome by every Vice. But here, keep fast Hold of the Thread I mentioned before, and all is well. For this Coldness is the Divine Offspring, or genuine Birth, of the former Fervour; it comes from it as a good Fruit, and brings the Soul nearer to God, than the Fervour did. The Fervour was good, and did a good Work in the Soul; it overcame the earthly Nature, and made the Soul delight in God, and spiritual Things; but its Delight was too much an own Delight, a fancied Self-holiness, and occasioned Rest and Satisfaction in Self, which if it had continued uninterrupted, undiscovered, an earthly Self had only been changed into a spiritual Self. Therefore I called this Coldness, or Loss of Fervour, its Divine Offspring, because it brings a Divine Effect, or more fruitful Progress in the Divine Life. For this Coldness overcomes, and delivers us from spiritual Self, as Fervour overcame the earthly Nature. It does the Work that Fervour did, but in an higher Degree, because it gives up more, sacrifices more, and brings forth more Resignation to God, than Fervour did; and therefore it is more in God, and receives more from him. The devout Soul therefore is always safe in every State, if it makes everything an Occasion either of rising up, or falling down into the Hands of God, and exercising Faith, and Trust, and Resignation to him. Fervour is good, and ought to be loved; but Tribulation, Distress, and Coldness, in their Season are better, because they give Means and Power of exercising an higher Faith, a purer Love, and more perfect Resignation to God, which are the best State of the Soul. And therefore the pious Soul that eyes only God, that means nothing but being his alone, can have no Stop put to its Progress; Light and Darkness equally assist him; in the Light he looks up to God; in the Darkness he lays hold on God; and so they both do him the same Good.

This little Sketch, Academicus, of the Nature and Progress of the Spirit of Prayer, may show you, that a Manual is not so great a Matter as you imagined.

The best Instruction that I can give you, as helpful, or preparatory to the Spirit of Prayer, is already fully given, where we have set forth the original Perfection, the miserable Fall, and the glorious Redemption of Man. It is the true Knowledge of these great Things that can do all for you, which human Instruction can do. These Things must fill you with a Dislike of your present State, drive all earthly Desires out of your Soul, and create an earnest Longing after your first Perfection. For Prayer cannot be taught you, by giving you a Book of Prayers, but by awakening in you a true Sense and Knowledge of what you are, and what you should be; that so you may see, and know, and feel, what Things you want, and are to pray for. For a Man does not, cannot pray for anything, because a fine Petition for it is put into his Hands, but because his own Condition is a Reason and Motive for his asking for it. And therefore it is, that the Spirit of Prayer, in the First Part, began with a full Discovery and Proof of these high and important Matters, at the Sight of which the World, and all that is in it, shrinks into nothing, and everything past, present, and to come, awakens in our Hearts a continual Prayer, and longing Desire, after God, Christ, and Eternity.

Acad. I perceive then, Theophilus, that you direct me entirely to my own Prayer in my private Devotions, and not to the Use of any Book. But surely you do not take this to be right in general, that the common People, who are unlearned, and mostly of low Understandings, should kneel down in private, without any borrowed Form of Prayer, saying only what comes then into their own Heads.

Theoph. It would be very wrong, Academicus, to condemn a Manual as such, or to tell any People, learned or unlearned, that they ought not to make any Use of it. This would be quite rash and silly: But it cannot be wrong, or hurtful to anybody, to show, that Prayer is the natural Language of the Heart, and, as such, does not want any Form, or borrowed Words. Now all that has been said of Manuals of Prayers, only amounts to thus much; that they are not necessary, nor the most natural and excellent Way of praying. If they happen to be necessary to any Person, or to be his most excellent Way, it is because the natural, real Prayer of his Heart is already engaged, loving, wishing, and longing after, the Things of this Life; which makes him so insensible of his spiritual Wants, so blind and dead as to the Things of God, that he cannot pray for them, but so far as the Words of other People are put into his Mouth. If a Man is blind, and knows it not, he may be told to pray for Sight; if he is sick, and knows nothing of it, he may be told to pray for Health: So if the Soul is in this State, with regard to its spiritual Wants, a Manual may be of good Use to it, not so much by helping it to pray, as by showing it, at what a miserable Distance it is from those Tempers which belong to Prayer.

But when a Man has had so much Benefit from the Gospel, as to know his own Misery, his want of a Redeemer, who he is, and how is he to be found; there everything seems to be done, both to awaken and direct his Prayer, and make it a true Praying in and by the Spirit. For when the Heart really pants and longs after God, its Prayer is a Praying, as moved and animated by the Spirit of God; it is the Breach or Inspiration of God, stirring, moving and opening itself in the Heart. For though the earthly Nature, our old Man, can oblige or accustom himself to take heavenly Words at certain Times into his Mouth, yet this is a certain Truth, that nothing ever did, or can have the least Desire or Tendency to ascend to Heaven, but that which came down from Heaven ; and therefore nothing in the Heart can pray, aspire, and long after God, but the Spirit of God moving and stirring in it. Every Breath therefore of the true Spirit of Prayer, can be nothing else but the Breath of the Spirit of God, breathing, inspiring, and moving the Heart, in all its Variety of Motions and Affections, towards God. And therefore every time a good Desire stirs in the Heart, a good Prayer goes out of it, that reaches God as being the Fruit and Work of his Holy Spirit. When any Man, feeling his Corruption, and the Power of Sin in his Soul, looks up to God, with true Earnestness of Faith and Desire to be delivered from it, whether with Words, or without Words, how can he pray better ? What need of any Change of Thoughts, or Words, or any Variety of Expressions, when the one Faith and Desire of his Heart made known to God, and continued in, is not only all, but the most perfect Prayer he can make ? Again, suppose the Soul in another State, feeling with Joy its offered Redeemer, and opening its Heart for the full Reception of him ; if it stands in this State of Wishing and Longing for the Birth of Christ, how can its Prayer be in an higher Degree of Request ? Or if it breaks out frequently in these Words, 'Come, Lord Jesus, 'come quickly, with all thy holy Nature, Spirit, and Tempers 'into my Soul,' is there any Occasion to enlarge, or alter these Words into another Form of Expression ? Can he do better, or pray more, than by continually standing from time to time in this State of wishing to have Christ formed in him ? Nay, is it not more likely, that his Heart should be more divided and dissipated by a numerous Change of Expressions, than by keeping united to one Expression that sets forth all that he wants ? For it is the Reality, the Steadiness, and Continuity of the Desire, that is the Goodness of Prayer, and its Qualification to receive all that it wants. Our Lord said to one that came to him, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee ? He answered, 'Lord, 'that I may receive my Sight' : And he received it. Another said, 'Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean' : And he was cleansed. Tell me what Learning, or fine Parts, are required to make such Prayers as these ? and yet what Wonders of Relief are recorded in Scripture, as given to such short Prayers as these ! Or tell me what Blessing of Prayer, or Faith, or Love, may not now be obtained in the same Way, and with as few Words, as then was done ? Every Man therefore that has any Feeling of the Weight of his Sin, or any true Desire to be delivered from it by Christ, has Learning and Capacity enough to make his own Prayer. For Praying is not speaking forth eloquently, but simply, the true Desire of the Heart ; and the Heart, simple and plain in good Desires, is in the truest State of Preparation for all the Gifts and Graces of God. And this I must tell you, that the most simple Souls, that have accustomed themselves to speak their own Desires and Wants to God, in such short, but true Breathings of their Hearts to him, will soon know more of Prayer, and the Mysteries of it, than any Persons who have only their Knowledge from Learning, and learned Books.

Acad. You seem to me, Theophilus, to have much Truth in what you say, and yet to be in a Way by yourself. I cannot take you to be with those who place all in many and long Forms; and now I take you to be even more against those, who make much Account of what they call a gifted Man, and make that to be the true Gift of Prayer, when anyone is able to pray extempore, or with his own Words, for an Hour or two at a Time.

Theoph. I have shown you, Academicus, that Prayer is purely the Desire of the Heart; that it has not the Nature of praying, but so far as it is the true Language of the Heart. I have shown you the great Benefit that all People must receive from this true Prayer of the Heart. And to remove all Pretence of Want of Ability in the lowest Sort of People to pray from their own Hearts, I have shown, that the most simple, short Petitions, when truly spoken by the Heart, have all the Perfection that Prayer can have.

But mark, Sir, why or when I ascribe this Perfection to it. It is when the Heart stands continually in this State of wishing to have that, which is expressed in so few Words. It is then, that I said, there was no Occasion to enlarge, or alter the Words into another or longer Form, because the Reality, the Steadiness, and the Continuity of the Desire, is the Goodness and Perfection of the Prayer. Now, Sir, let us suppose two Men; the one is frequently an Hour, or two, or a whole Night, on his Knees, in silent Prayer, in high Acts of Love, and Faith, and Resignation to God, not outwardly spoken by his Mouth; the other is as long a Time pouring forth the Devotion of his Heart in a Variety of fervent Expressions. May not both these Men justly appeal to me, not only as not condemning, but as asserting, the Goodness of their Length and Manner of Prayer, since I make a short simple Petition to be only then a good Prayer, when it proceeds from a steady, continued Desire of the Heart? It is not therefore Silence, or a simple Petition, or a great Variety of outward Expressions, that alters the Nature of Prayer, or makes it to be good, or better, but only and solely the Reality, Steadiness, and Continuity of the Desire; and therefore whether a Man offers this Desire to God in the silent Longing of the Heart, or in simple short Petitions, or in a great Variety of Words, is of no Consequence ; but all of them are equally good, when the true and right State of the Heart is with them.

Thus you see, Academicus, that I am so far from being, as you said, in a Way by myself, that I am with every Man in every Way, whose Heart stands right towards God. But if you would know what I would call a true and great Gift of Prayer, and what I most of all wish for to myself, it is a good Heart, that stands continually inclined towards God.

Acad. I am not sorry, Theophilus, that I have made so unreasonable an Observation upon what you said, since it has occasioned you to give so good and just an Answer to it. But yet this silent Prayer you speak of, is what I never read nor heard anything of before ; and it seems to me but like a ceasing to pray ; and yet you seem to like it in its Turn, as well as any other Way of praying.

Theoph. All that I have said of Prayer, Academicus, has been only to this End, to show you its true and real Nature, whence it is to arise, where it is to be found, and how you are to begin, and become a true Proficient in it. If, therefore, you were at present to look no further, than how to put yourself in a State of beginning to practise a Prayer proceeding from your own Heart, and continuing in it, leaving all that you are further to know of Prayer, to be known in its own Time by Experience, which alone can open any true Knowledge in you, this would be much better for you, than to be asking beforehand about such things, as are not your immediate Concern.

Begin to be a Man of Prayer, in this easy, simple, and natural Manner, that has been set before you ; and when you are faithful to this Method, you will then need no other Instructor in the Art of Prayer. Your own Heart thus turned to God, will want no one to tell it, when it should be simple in its Petitions, or various in its Expressions, or prostrate itself in Silence before God. But this Hastiness of knowing Things, before they become our Concern, or belong to us, is very common. Thus a Man that has but just entered upon the Reformation of his Life, shall want to read or hear a Discourse upon Perfection, whether it be absolutely attainable or not ; and shall be more eager after what he can hear of this Matter, though at such a Distance from himself, than of such Things as concern the next Step that he is to take in his own proper State.

You, my Friend, have already rightly taken the first Step in the spiritual Life ; you have devoted yourself absolutely to God, to live wholly to his Will, under the Light and Guidance of his Holy Spirit, intending, seeking nothing in this World, but such a Passage through it, as may tend to the Glory of God, and the Recovery of your own fallen Soul. Your next Step is this, it is a looking to the Continuance of this first Resolution, and Donation of yourself to God, to see that it be kept alive, that everything you do may be animated and directed by it, and all the Occurrences of every Day, from Morning to Night, be received by you, as becomes a Spirit that is devoted to God. Now this second Step cannot be taken, but purely by Prayer; nothing else has the least Power here but Prayer: I do not mean you must frequently read or say a Number of Prayers (though this in its Turn may be good and useful to you) but the Prayer I mean, and which you must practise, if you would take this second Step in the spiritual Life, is Prayer of the Heart, or a Prayer of your own, proceeding from the State of your Heart, and its own Tendency to God. Of all things therefore look to this Prayer of the Heart; consider it as your infallible Guide to Heaven; turn from everything that is an Hindrance of it, that quenches or abates its Fervour; love and like nothing but that which is suitable to it; and let every Day begin, go on, and end, in the Spirit of it. Consider yourself as always wrong, as having gone aside, and lost your right Path, when any Delight, Desire, or Trouble, is suffered to live in you, that cannot be made a Part of this Prayer of the Heart to God. For nothing so infallibly shows us the true State of our Heart, as that which gives us either Delight or Trouble; for as our Delight and Trouble is, so is the State of our Heart: If therefore you are carried away with any Trouble or Delight, that has not an immediate Relation to your Progress in the Divine Life, you may be assured your Heart is not in its right State of Prayer to God. Look at a Man who is devoted to some one Thing, or has some one great worldly Matter at Heart, he stands turned from everything that has not some Relation to it; he has no Joy or Trouble but what arises from it; he has no Eyes nor Ears, but to see or hear something about it. All else is a Trifle, but that which some way or other concerns this great Matter. You need not tell him of any Rules or Methods to keep it in his Thoughts; it goes with him into all Places and Companies; it has his first Thoughts in the Morning; and every Day is good or bad, as this great Matter seems to succeed or not. This may show you how easily, how naturally, how constantly, our Heart will carry on its own State of Prayer, as soon as God is its great Object, or it is wholly given up to him, as its one great Good. This may also show you, that the Heart cannot enter into a State of the Spirit of Prayer to God, till that which I called the first Step in the spiritual Life is taken, which is the taking God for its All, or the giving itself up wholly to God. But when this Foundation is laid, the Seed of Prayer is sown, and the Heart is in a continual State of Tendency to God; having no other Delight or Trouble in Things of any kind, but as they help or hinder its Union with God. Therefore, Academicus, the Way to be a Man of Prayer, and be governed by its Spirit, is not to get a Book full of Prayers; but the best Help you can have from a Book, is to read one full of such Truths, Instructions, and awakening Informations, as force you to see and know who, and what, and where, you are; that God is your All; and that all is Misery, but a Heart and Life devoted to him. This is the best outward Prayer-Book you can have, as it will turn you to an inward Book, and Spirit of Prayer in your Heart, which is a continual longing Desire of the Heart after God, his Divine Life, and Holy Spirit. When, for the Sake of this inward Prayer, you retire at any time of the Day, never begin till you know and feel, why and wherefore you are going to pray; and let this why and wherefore, form and direct everything that comes from you, whether it be in Thought or Word. As you cannot but know your own State, so it must be the easiest Thing in the World to look up to God, with such Desires as suit the State you are in; and praying in this Manner, whether it be in one, or more, or no Words, your Prayer will be always sincere, and good, and highly beneficial to you.—Thus praying, you can never pray in vain; but one Month in the Practice of it, will do you more Good, make a greater Change in your Soul, than twenty Years of Prayer only by Books, and Forms of other People's making.

No Vice can harbour in you, no Infirmary take any Root, no good Desire can languish, when once your Heart is in this Method of Prayer; never beginning to pray, till you first see how Matters stand with you; asking your Heart what it wants, and having nothing in your Prayers, but what the known State of your Heart puts you upon demanding, saying, or offering, unto God. A Quarter of an Hour of this Prayer, brings you out of your Closet a new Man; your Heart feels the Good of it; and every Return of such a Prayer, gives new Life and Growth to all your Virtues, with more Certainty, than the Dew refreshes the Herbs of the Field: Whereas, overlooking this true Prayer of your own Heart, and only at certain Times taking a Prayer that you find in a Book, you have nothing to wonder at, if you are every Day praying, and yet every Day sinking further and further under all your Infirmities. For your Heart is your Life, and your Life can only be altered by that which is the real Working of your Heart. And if your Prayer is only a Form of Words, made by the Skill of other People, such a Prayer can no more change you into a good Man, than an Actor upon the Stage, who speaks kingly Language, is thereby made to be a King: Whereas one Thought, or Word, or Look, towards God, proceeding from your own Heart, can never be without its proper Fruit, or fail of doing a real Good to your Soul. Again, another great and infallible Benefit of this kind of Prayer is this; it is the only Way to be delivered from the Deceitfulness of your own Hearts.

Our Hearts deceive us, because we leave them to themselves, are absent from them, taken up in outward Things, in outward Rules and Forms of Living and Praying. But this kind of Praying, which takes all its Thoughts and Words only from the State of our Hearts, makes it impossible for us to be Strangers to ourselves. The Strength of every Sin, the Power of every evil Temper, the most secret Workings of our Hearts, the Weakness of any or all our Virtues, is with a Noonday Clearness forced to be seen, as soon as the Heart is made our Prayer-Book, and we pray for nothing, but according to what we read, and find there.

Acad. O Theophilus, you have shown me, that it is almost as easy and natural a Thing to pray, as to breathe; and that the best Prayer in the World, is that which the Heart can thus easily send forth from itself, untaught by anything, but its own Sense of God and itself. And yet I am almost afraid of loving this kind of Prayer too much. I am not free from suspicions about it: I apprehend it to be that very praying by the Spirit, or as moved by the Spirit, or from a Light within, which is condemned as Quakerism.

Theoph. There is but one good Prayer that you can possibly make, and that is a Prayer in and from the Spirit, or as the Spirit of God moves you in it, or to it. This, this alone, is a Divine Prayer; no other Prayer has, or can possibly have any Communion with God. Take the Matter thus: Man is a threefold Being; he has three Natures; he partakes of the Divine, the elementary, and the diabolical Nature. Had he not these three Natures in a certain Degree in him, he could have no Communion with God, he could not enjoy the Elements, nor could the evil Spirits have the least Power of Access to him.

Now the astral, elementary Nature of Man, in this World, cannot have a Longing after the pure Deity; it cannot hunger, and thirst after the Divine Image, nor desire to be perfect as God is perfect; this is as impossible, as for the Beasts of the Field to long to be Angels. Therefore Flesh and Blood in us, can no more make a Divine Prayer, than in any other Animal of this World.

The diabolical Nature which is in us, can do nothing but that which the Devils do : It can only rise up in its own Pride, Envy, and Self-Exaltation, and only hate all the Goodness that is either in Heaven, or on Earth. And therefore it is a Truth of the greatest Certainty, that no Man ever did, or can send up a Divine and heavenly Prayer to God, or such a Prayer as can reach God, but in and by the Spirit of God in him. Our astral, elementary Man, and our proud, subtle, serpentine Nature, can read, or say a Prayer full of good Words and Wishes, as easily as Satan could use Scripture-Language in the Temptation of Christ ; but nothing can wish to be like God, or to unite with his Goodness and Holiness, but that Spirit in us, which partakes of his Divine Nature. Therefore to ridicule praying by the Spirit, or as moved by the Spirit, is ridiculing the one only Prayer that is Divine, or can do us any Divine Good ; and to reject and oppose it, as a vain Conceit, is to quench, and suppress all that is holy, heavenly, and Divine, within us. For if this Holy Spirit does not live, and move in us, and bring forth all the praying Affections of our Souls, we may as well think of reaching Heaven with our Hands, as with our Prayers.

Acad. I know not, Theophilus, how to deny anything that you have here said : Yet this Account seems to make no Distinction between our own good Spirit, and the Holy Spirit of God. I took the Inspirations, and Graces of the Holy Spirit to be something, that came into us from without, and to be as distinct from our own Good Spirit, as God is distinct from the Creature.

Theoph. The Holy Spirit of God is as necessary to our Divine Life, or the Life of Grace, as the Air of this World is necessary to our animal Life ; and is as distinct from us, and as much without us, as the Air of this World is distinct from, and without, the Creatures that live in it. And yet our own good Spirit is the very Spirit of God, moving and stirring in us. No Animal can unite with, or breathe the Air of this World, till it has first the Air of this World brought forth, as the true Birth of its own Life in itself ; this is its only Capacity to live in the Spirit of this World ; and the Breath or Spirit that thus arises in its own Life, is the very same Breath, that is in outward Nature, in which it lives. It is strictly thus, with the Spirit of God in our Souls ; it must first have a Birth within us, arising from the Life of our Souls, and as such, is our only Capacity to have Life, and live in the Spirit of God himself, and is the very Breath of the Spirit of God, who is yet as distinct from us, as the Breath of our animal Life, that arises from our own Fire, is distinct from the Air of the World in which it lives. And thus, Academicus, our own good Spirit is the very Spirit of the Deity, and yet not God, but the Spirit of God, breathed or kindled into a creaturely Form ; and this good Spirit, Divine in its Origin, and Divine in its Nature, is that alone in us, that can reach God, unite with him, co-operate with him, be moved, and blessed by him, as our earthly Spirit is, by the outward Spirit of this elementary World.

Acad. Indeed, Theophilus, you have, in few Words, so gone to the Bottom of this Matter, that nothing is left either for any further Doubt, or Inquiry about it. My own good Spirit is the Breath of God in me, and so related to God, as the Breath of my animal Life is related to the Air, or Spirit of this outward World. It is from God, has the Nature, the Eternity, the Spirituality of God, as the Breath of my Flesh and Blood, has the Grossness, the earthly, transitory Nature of the Spirit of this World. And as all my Communication with this World arises from the Breath of this World, kindled in my own Life, so all my possibility of Communication with God, arises solely from the Breath of his Holy Spirit brought forth in the Life of my Soul ; and I can only live in God, by his Spirit having a Birth in me, as I can only live in this World, by having its Spirit born in me. This plain Truth sets all the Scripture-Doctrine, concerning the Necessity, Power, and Operation of the Holy Spirit, in the greatest and most edifying Degree of Clearness. Thus, what can be a more plain, sober, and palpable Truth, than when the Apostle says, ' They only are the Sons of ' God, who are led by the Spirit of God ' ? It is only like saying, that those Creatures only belong to this World, who live in, and by its Spirit. I shall here, Sir, only add, that my Gospel-Faith stands now upon a most solid, and comfortable Foundation ; my Heart is all delight, and Devotion to God, when I consider, First, That Christ my Redeemer is the first Seed of the Woman, or Power of Salvation preserved in fallen Adam ; the Immanuel ; the God within every Man ; ' the Light that lighteth every Man ' that cometh into the World.' Secondly, That the Holy Spirit of God, the Breath of Eternity, has also its Seed of Life in my Soul ; for where the Word, or Son of God is, there is the Spirit of God in the same State ; if one is only a Seed of Life, a Spark of Heaven, the other is so also ; and these two, thus considered, are the glorious Pearl of Eternity, hidden in every Man's Soul, and so often spoken of before. And thus we understand, how the Whole of our Redemption (according to the plain Language of Scripture) is inwardly and outwardly solely the Work of the Light and Spirit of God, a Kingdom of God both within and without us, and to which we do not, cannot live, but so far as we are inspired, moved, and led, by the Spirit of God. Earnestly, therefore, to pray, humbly to hope, and faithfully to expect, to be continually inspired, and animated by the Holy Spirit of God has no more of Vanity, Fanaticism, or enthusiastic Wildness in it, than to hope and pray, to act in everything from and by a good Spirit. For as sure as the Lip of Truth hath told us, that there is but One that is good, so sure is it, that not a Spark of Goodness, nor a Breath of Piety, can be in any Creature, either in Heaven, or on Earth, but by that Divine Spirit, which is the Breath of God, breathed from himself into the Creature. The Matter is not about Appearances of Goodness, Forms of Virtue, Rules of Religion, or a prudential Piety, suited to Time, and Place, and Character; all these are Degrees of Goodness, that our old Man can as easily trade in, as in any other Matters of this World. But so much as we have of an heavenly and Divine Goodness, or of a Goodness that belongs to Heaven, and has the Nature of Heaven in it, so much we must have of a Divine Inspiration in us. For as nothing can fall to the Earth, but because it has the Nature of the Earth in it; so it is a Truth of the utmost Certainty, that nothing can ascend towards Heaven, or have the least Power to unite with it, but that very Spirit which came down from Heaven, and has the Nature of Heaven in it. This Truth, therefore, that the Kingdom of God is within us, that its Light is solely the Lamb of God, its Spirit solely the Spirit of God, stands upon a Rock, against which all Attempts are in vain. All that I now further desire to know, is only this; how I may keep free from all Delusions in this Matter, and not take my own natural Abilities, Tempers, and Passions, or the Suggestions of evil Spirits, to be the Working of the Spirit of God in me. Pray, Sir, tell me how I shall safely know when, and how far, I am led and governed by the Spirit of God?

Theoph. You may know this, Academicus, just as you know, when you are governed by the Spirit of Wrath, Envy, Guile, Craft, or Covetousness. Every Man knows this of himself, as easily, and as certainly, as he knows when he is hungry, pleased, or displeased. Now it is the same Thing with regard to the Spirit of God; the Knowledge of it is as perceptible in yourself, and liable to no more delusion. For the Spirit of God, is more distinguishable from all other Spirits and Tempers, than any of your natural Affections or Tempers are, from one another; as I will here plainly show you.

‘God is unwearied Patience, a Meekness that cannot be provoked; he is an ever-enduring Mercifulness; he is unmixed Goodness, impartial, universal Love; his Delight is in the Communication of himself, his own Happiness, to everything, according to its Capacity. He does everything that is good, righteous, and lovely, for its own sake, because it is good, righteous, and lovely. He is the Good from which nothing but

‘ Good comes, and resisteth all Evil, only with Goodness.’ This, Sir, is the Nature and Spirit of God, and here you have your infallible Proof, whether you are moved, and led by the Spirit of God. Here is a Proof that never can fail you; is always at hand; and is liable to no Mistake or Delusion. If it be the earnest Desire, and Longing of your Heart, to be merciful as he is merciful; to be full of his unwearied Patience, to dwell in his unalterable Meekness; if you long to be like him in universal, impartial Love; if you desire to communicate every Good, to every Creature that you are able; if you love and practise everything that is good, righteous, and lovely, for its own sake, because it is good, righteous, and lovely; and resist no Evil, but with Goodness; then you have the utmost Certainty, that the Spirit of God lives, dwells, and governs in you. Now all these Tempers are as capable of being known to every Man, as his own Love and Hatred; and therefore no Man can be deceived as to the Possession of them, but he that chooses to deceive himself. Now if you want any of these Tempers, if the whole Bent of your Heart and Mind is not set upon them, all Pretences to an immediate Inspiration, and continual Operation of the Spirit of God in your Soul, are vain and groundless. For the Spirit of God is that which I have here described; and where his Spirit dwells and governs, there all these Tempers are brought forth, or springing up, as the certain Fruits of it. What room, therefore, Academicus, for so much Uncertainty, or Fear of Delusion, in this Matter? Keep but within the Bounds here set you; call nothing a Proof of the Spirit or Work of God in your Soul, but these Tempers, and the Works which they produce; and then, but not till then, you may safely and infallibly say, with St. John, ‘ Hereby we know that he abideth ‘in us by the Spirit which he hath given us.’

Acad. Indeed, Theophilus, you have given me a short, but very full and satisfactory Answer to my Question. I now perceive, that, as a spiritual Man, or one devoted to the Spirit of God, I am not to look after any Extraordinaries, any new Openings, Illuminations, Visions, or Voices, inward or outward, from God, as Proofs of the Spirit of God dwelling and working in me; but that all my Proof and Security of being governed by the Spirit of God, is to be grounded on other Matters: That the boundless Humility and Resignation of the Holy Jesus; the unwearied Patience, the unalterable Meekness, the impartial, universal Love of God, manifested in my Soul; are its only Proofs, that God is in me of a Truth. Thus far all is right and good.

But yet, Sir, surely it must be said with Truth, that the Spirit of God often discovers itself, and operates in good Souls in very extraordinary Ways, in uncommon Illuminations, and Openings of Divine Light and Knowledge, in the Revelation of Mysteries, in strong Impulses and Sallies of a wonderful Zeal, full of the highest Gifts and Graces of God : And that these have frequently been God's gracious Methods of awakening a sinful World.

Theoph. What you say, Academicus, is very true ; and almost every Age of the Church is a sufficient Proof of it. By the Goodness of God, the Church has always had its extraordinary Persons, highly gifted from above, made burning, and shining Lights, and carried into as uncommon Ways of Life, by the same Spirit, and for the same Ends, as John the Baptist was ; and as different from common Christians, as he was from the common Jews. But, my Friend, these extraordinary Operations of God's Holy Spirit, and the Wonders of his Gifts and Graces showing themselves at certain Times, and upon certain Persons, through all the Ages of the Church, are not Matters of common Instruction ; they belong not to our Subject ; it would be Ignorance and Vanity in me, to pretend to let you into the Secret of them ; it would be the same Thing in you, to think yourself ready for it.

Would you know the Sublime, the Exalted, the Angelic, in the Christian Life, see what the Son of God saith : ' Thou shalt love ' the Lord thy God with all thy Heart, with all thy Soul, with ' all thy Mind, and with all thy Strength ; and thy Neighbour ' as thyself. On these two, saith he, hang all the Law and the ' Prophets.' And without these two Things, no good Light ever can arise, or enter into your Soul. Take all the Sciences, shine in all the Accomplishments of the lettered World, they will only lead you from one vain Passion to another ; everything you send out from within you is selfish, vain, and bad ; everything you see or receive from without, will be received with a bad Spirit ; till these two heavenly Tempers have overcome the natural Perverseness of fallen Nature. Till then, nothing pure can proceed from within, nor anything be received in Purity from without.

Think yourself therefore unfit, incapable of judging rightly, or acting virtuously, till these two Tempers have the Government of your Heart. Then every Truth will meet you ; no hurtful Error can get Entrance into your Heart ; you will neither deceive, nor be deceived ; but will have a better Knowledge of all Divine Matters, than all the human Learning in the World can help you to.

Would you know what it is to love God with all your Heart and Soul, &c., you need only look back to that, which has been said of the Nature and Spirit of God.* For when with all your

The Spirit of Prayer. 143

Heart and Soul you love, and long to have, that Nature and Spirit, to be wholly united to it, possessed and governed by it, then you love God with all your Heart and Soul, &c. And then you are first capable of loving yourself and your Neighbour rightly. For so much as you have of the Divine Nature and Spirit in you, just so much Power have you of loving yourself and your Neighbour aright; that is, of loving only and equally, that in yourself and your Neighbour, which the Deity only and equally loves, both in you, and him. But it is time to part, when we have only told our silent Friend, Humanus, that if we live to meet again, we shall, with all our Hearts, receive him as a Speaker among us.—And so, Gentlemen, once more, Adieu.

THE FIRST DIALOGUE

BETWEEN

Humanus, Academicus, Rusticus and Theophilus.

HUMANUS. Oh! Theophilus, I must yield, and it is with great Pleasure that I now enter into Conversation with you. You have taken from me all Power of cavilling and disputing. I have no Opinions that I choose to maintain, but have the utmost Desire of entering further into this Field of Light, which you have so clearly opened to my View. I shall not trouble you with the relation of what has passed in my Soul, nor what Struggles I have had, with that Variety of heathenish Notions which have had their Turn in my Mind. It is better to tell you, that they are dead and buried, or rather consumed to nothing by that new Light, which you have opened in so many great Points, that I was quite a Stranger to before. To reject all that you have said concerning the Fall of Angels, the Original of this World, the Creation and Fall of Man, and the Necessity of a Redemption, as great as that of the Gospel, is impossible; nothing can do it, or stand out against it, but the most wilful and blind Obstinacy.

But these great Points cannot be received in any true Degree without seeing the vain Contention of all those, who either defend, or oppose the Gospel, without any true and real Knowledge of them. The one contend for, and the other oppose, not the Gospel, but a System of empty words, and historical Facts, branched into Forms and Modes of dividing one Church from another; whereas the Gospel is no History of any absent, distant, or foreign Thing, but is a Manifestation of an essential, inherent, real Life and Death in every Son of Adam; grounded on the Certainty of his first angelical Nature, on the Certainty of his real Fall from that, into an animal earthly Life of impure bestial Flesh and Blood, and on the Certainty of an inward Redemption from it, by the Divine Nature given again into him. These three great Points, with all the Doctrines, Duties, and Consequences, that are essentially contained in, or flow from them, are the Gospel of Jesus Christ, to which, by your means, I am become a Convert. I am now, dear Theophilus, strongly drawn Two different Ways. First, I am all Hunger and Thirst after this new Light, a Glimpse of which has already raised me, as it were, from the Dead: and I am in the utmost Impatience to hear more and more of this Divine Philosophy, which, I so plainly see, opens all the Mysteries both of Nature and Grace, from the Beginning to the End of Time. What I have heard from you, when I was obliged to be silent, and what I have since found and felt by much reading the Appeal, and that Dialogue, obliges me to speak in this ardent Manner. They have awakened something in me which I never felt before, something much deeper than my Reason, and over which I have no Power; it glows in my Soul, like a Fire, or Hunger, which nothing can satisfy, but a further View of those great Truths, which I this Day expect from your opening to us the Mysteries of Heaven revealed to that wonderful Man, Jacob Behmen.

On the other hand, I find in myself a vehement impulse to turn Preacher amongst my former Infidel Brethren; which Impulse I know not how to resist: For being just converted myself, I seem to know, and feel the true Place, from whence Conversion is to arise in others; and by the Reluctance which I have felt in my Passage from one Side to the other, I seem also to know the true Ground on which Infidelity supports itself. And he only is able to declare with Spirit and Power any Truths, or bear a faithful Testimony of the Reality of them, who preaches nothing but what he has first seen, and felt, and found to be true, by a living Sensibility and true Experience of their Reality and Power in his own Soul. All other Preaching, whether from Art, Hearsay, Books, or Education, is, at best, but playing with Words, and mere trifling with sacred Things. Being thus divided in myself, I hope to have your Direction.

Theophilus. Dear Humanus, my Heart embraces you with great Joy, and I am much pleased with what you say of yourself. This Hunger of your Soul is all that I wish for; it is the Fire of God, the Opening of Eternity, the Beginning of your Redemption, the Awakener of the angelic Life, the Root of an omnipotent Faith, and the true Seeker of all that is lost. For all these Things, and much more, are the blessed Powers which will soon break forth, and show themselves to be the true Workings of this celestial Fire, that has begun to glow within you.

Your Business is now to give Way to this heavenly Working of the Spirit of God in your Soul, and turn from everything either within you, or without you, that may hinder the further Awakening of all that is holy and heavenly within you. For within you is that heavenly Angel that died in Paradise, and died no other Death, than that of being hid a while from your Sight and Sensibility.

For be assured of this, as a certain Truth, that corrupt, fallen, and earthly as human Nature is, there is nevertheless in the Soul of every Man, the Fire, and Light, and Love of God, though lodged in a State of Hiddenness, Inactivity, and Death, till something or other, human or Divine, Moses and the Prophets, Christ or his Apostles, discover its Life within us.

For the Soul of every Man is the Breath and Life of the Triune God, and as such, a Partaker of the Divine Nature ; but all this Divinity is unfelt, because overpowered by the Workings of Flesh and Blood, till such time as Distress, or Grace, or both, give Flesh and Blood a Shock, open the long shut-up Eyes, and force a Man to find something in himself, that Sense and Reason, whilst at quiet, were not aware of. Wonder not therefore at this Conflict in your Soul, that you are eager after more Light, and impatient to communicate that which you have. For you must be thus driven ; and both these Desires are only Two Witnesses to this Truth, that a heaven-born Spirit is come to Life in you.

Only remember this ; Look well to the Ground on which you stand, keep a watchful Eye upon every Working of Nature, and take care that nothing human, earthly, private, or selfish, mix with this heavenly Fire : That is, see that your Mind be free, universal, impartial, without Regard to here or there, this or that, but loving all Goodness, practising every Virtue, for itself, on its own Account, because it is so much of God ; neither coveting Light, nor longing to communicate it to others, but merely and solely for this Reason, that the Will of God may be done, and the Goodness of God brought to Life, both in you and them. For there is no Goodness but God's ; and his Goodness is not alive, or fruitful in you, but so far, and in such a Degree, as the Good that you mean, and do, is done in and by that Spirit, by which God himself is good. For as there is but One that is good, so there is, and can be but One Goodness. And therefore it is, that we are called not to an human, worldly, prudential, partial Goodness, suitable to our selfish Reason, and natural Tempers, but to ' be perfect, as our Father in Heaven is 'perfect.' And the full Reason is expressed in the Words ; for if our Father is in heaven, we must be there too in Spirit and Life, or we are not his Children ; if Heaven is that for which we are made, and that which we have lost, it is not any human Goodness, but a heavenly Birth and Spirit of God's own Goodness, working in us, as it does in God, that can make us the heavenly Children of our Father in Heaven. You must love the Light of God, as God loves it ; you must desire that others may enjoy it, as God desires it. Now God is a free, universal, impartial Love, loving and doing every kind of Good, for its own Sake, because that is the highest and most perfect Working of Life ; and because everything else but Goodness, for its own Sake, is imperfect, and a Degree of Evil, Misery, and Death. And no Creature can come out of its Imperfection, Misery, and Death, but by the pure, free, unmixed Goodness of God, being born in it. Though you had outwardly all Virtues, and seemed doing all that the Saints of God have done, yet unless the same Spirit, by which God himself is Good, brought forth your Goodness, all would be only an earthly Labour, that could have no Communication with Heaven.

Therefore, my Friend, set out right, and be assured of this Truth, that Nature, and Self, and every particular View, must be totally renounced ; or else, be your Zeal what it will, ever so pleasing to yourself, or astonishing to the World, you are not working with God.

Here now you have the Test of Truth, by which you may always know, whether it be the Spirit of God, and the Love of God, that drives you. If your Zeal is after this pure, free, universal Goodness of God, then of a Truth the Spirit of God breatheth in you ; but if you feel not the Love of this pure, free, universal Goodness, and yet think that you love God, you deceive yourself ; for there is no other true Love of God, but the loving that, which God is.

But if you please, Humanus, pray tell me, in what manner you would attempt to make Converts to Christianity.

Humanus. I would not take the Method generally practised by the modern Defenders of Christianity. I would not attempt to show from Reason and Antiquity, the Necessity and Reasonableness of a Divine Revelation in general, or of the Mosaic and Christian in particular. Nor enlarge upon the Arguments for the Credibility of the Gospel-History, the Reasonableness of its Creeds, Institutions, and Usages ; or the Duty of Man to receive Things above, but not contrary to, his Reason. I would avoid all this, because it is wandering from the true Point in Question, and only helping the Deist to oppose the Gospel with a Show of Argument, which he must necessarily want, was the Gospel left to stand upon its own Bottom.

And, on the other hand, should the Deist yield up such a Cause as this, and change Sides, he could only be said to have changed his Opinion about Facts, with any more altering or bettering his State in God, than if he had only altered his Opinion about Things in Dispute amongst the ancient Philosophers.

For since the Fall of Man, implying a real Change from his first State, or a total Death to his first created Life, since the Necessity of a new Birth of that lost Life, by the Life of God again restored to, or born in the Soul, are two Points, quite overlooked by those who defend the Truth and Reasonableness of the Christian Scheme, it may truly be said, that the only Ground, and whole Nature of the Gospel is quite dropped, and given up by those who thus defend it.

For the Gospel has but one Ground, or Reason, and that is the Fall of Man, it has but one Nature, and that is to help Man again to all that he had lost.

How unreasonable would it be, to offer the Christian Redemption to glorious Angels in Heaven? Could anything be more inconsistent with their heavenly, unfallen State? Yet just so unreasonable would it be to offer it to Man unfallen from his first created State.—For Man standing in that first Perfection of Life, which God breathed into him, and in that very outward State, or World, into which God himself brought him, wants no more Redemption, than the most glorious Angels do; and to preach to such a Man, in order to be reconciled to God, the Necessity of dying to himself, and the World he is in, would be as contrary to all Sense and Reason as to preach to Angels the Necessity of dying to themselves, their Divine Life and the Kingdom of Heaven, for which God had created them.

Thus does it appear, that the Fall of Man into the Life of this earthly World, is the sole Ground of his wanting the Redemption, which the Gospel offers.

Hence it is that the Gospel has only one simple Proposal of certain Life, or certain Death to Man; of Life, if he will take the Means of entering into the Kingdom of God, of death if he chooses to take up his Rest in the Kingdom of this World. This is the simple Nature, and sole Drift of the Gospel; it means no more, than making known to Man that this World, and the Life of it, is his Fall, and Separation from God, and Happiness, both here and hereafter: And that to be saved or restored to God and Happiness, can only be obtained, by renouncing all Love, and Adherence to the Things of this World. Look at all the Precepts, Threatenings, and Doctrines of the Gospel, they mean nothing, but to drive all Earthly-mindedness and carnal Affections out of the Soul, to call Man from the Life, Spirit and Goods of this World, to a Life of Hope, and Faith, and trust, and Love and Desire of a new Birth from Heaven.

To embrace the Gospel, is to enter with all our Hearts into its Terms of dying to all that is earthly both within us, and without us ; and on the other hand to place our faith, and Hope, and Trust, and Satisfaction in the Things of this World, is to reject the Gospel with our whole Heart, Spirit and Strength, as much as any Infidel can do, notwithstanding we made ever so many verbal Assents and Consents to everything that is recorded in the New Testament.

This therefore is the one true essential Distinction between the Christian and the Infidel. The Infidel is a Man of this World, wholly devoted to it, his Hope and Faith are set upon it ; for where our Heart is, there, and there only is our Hope and Faith. He has only such Virtue, such Goodness, and such a Religion, as entirely suits with the Interest of Flesh and Blood, and keeps the Soul happy in the Lust of the Flesh, the Lust of the Eyes, and the Pride of Life : This, and this alone, is Infidelity, a total Separation from God, and a Removal of all Faith, and Hope from him, into the Life of this World. It matters not, whether this Infidel be a Professor of the Gospel, a Disciple of Zoroaster, a Follower of Plato, a Jew, a Turk, or an Opposer of the Gospel-History : This Difference of Opinions or Professions alters not the Matter, it is the Love of the World instead of God, that constitutes the whole Nature of the Infidel.

On the other hand, the Christian renounces the World, as his horrid Prison ; he dies to the Will of Flesh and Blood, because it is Darkness, Corruption, and Separation from God ; he turns from all that is earthly, animal, and temporal, and stands in a continual Tendency of Faith, and Hope, and Prayer to God, to have a better Nature, a better Life and Spirit born again into him from above.

Where this Faith is, there is the Christian, the new Creature in Christ, born of the Word and Spirit of God : neither Time nor Place, nor any outward Condition of Birth, and Life, can hinder his Entrance into the Kingdom of God.

But where this Faith is not, there is the true, complete Infidel, the Man of the Earth, the Unredeemed, the Rejector of the Gospel, the Son of Perdition, that is dead in Trespasses and Sins, without Christ, an Alien from the Commonwealth of Israel, a Stranger from the Covenants of Promise, having no Hope, and without God in the World.

Here therefore I fix my true Ground of converting Men to Christianity ; and how miserably, may I say, do they err, who place Christianity and Infidelity in anything else, but in the Heart either devoted to this World, or devoted to God !

He therefore that opens a Field of Controversy to the Deist, about Revelation in general, or the History of Facts, Creeds, and Doctrines of Churches, not only leads him from the Merits of the Gospel, but brings him into a Field of Battle, where he may stand his Ground as long as he pleases. This I can truly say from my own Experience, who have been twenty Years in this Dust of Debate; and have always found that the more Books there were written in this Way of defending the Gospel, the more I was furnished with new Objections to it, and the less apprehensive of any Danger from my not receiving it.

For I had frequently a Consciousness rising up within me, that the Debate was equally vain on both Sides, doing no more real Good to the one than to the other, not being able to imagine, that a Set of scholastic, logical Opinions about History, Facts, Doctrines, and Institutions of the Church, or a Set of logical Objections against them, were of any Significancy towards making the Soul of Man either an eternal Angel of Heaven, or an eternal Devil of Hell. And therefore it was, that I was often tempted rather to think, there was neither Heaven, nor Hell, than to believe that such a Variety of Churches, and Systems of Opinion, all condemning, and all condemned by one another, were to find the Heaven of God opened to receive them, but he who was equally led by Opinion to reject them all, was doomed to Hell. But you, Sir, (and how can I enough thank you for it?) have put a full End to all this vain Strife of Opinions floating in the Brain; You have dispersed the Clouds that surrounded my bewildered Mind; You have brought me home to myself, where I find Heaven and Hell, Life and Death, Salvation and Damnation at Strife within me; You have shown me the infinite Worth of Christianity, and the dreadful Nature of Infidelity, not by helping me to a new Opinion, for my Reason to maintain, but by proving to me this great and decisive Truth, that Christianity is neither more nor less, than the Goodness of the Divine Life, Light and Love, living and working in my Soul; and that Infidelity in its whole Nature, is purely and solely the Heart of Man living in, governed by, and contented with the evil Workings of the earthly Life, Spirit, and Nature.

This is the Infidelity that you have forced me to fly from, and renounce, and that is the Christianity, to which I am converted with all the Strength of my Heart and Spirit. Away then with all the Fictions and Workings of Reason, either for, or against Christianity! They are only the wanton Sport of the Mind, whilst ignorant of God, and insensible of its own Nature and Condition. Death and Life are the only Things in Question; Life is God, living and working in the Soul; Death is the Soul living and working according to the Sense and Reason of bestial Flesh and Blood. Both this Life, and this Death are of their own Growth, growing from their own Seed within us, not as busy Reason talks or directs, but as our Heart turns either to the one or the other.

But, dear Theophilus, I must now tell you, that I want to make haste in this new Road you have put me in. Time is short, I am afraid of leaving the World, before I have left all worldly Tempers, and before the first holy and heavenly Birth be quickened, and brought to Life in me.

An Angel my first Father was created, and therefore nothing but the Angel belongs to Man, and nothing but the Angel can enter into Heaven. Angelic Goodness, therefore, is the one Thing that Man must look up to God for, because it is the one Goodness that he has lost. Everything else, Flesh and Blood, Earth and all earthly Tempers, everything that had its Rise from the Fall of Adam, must be renounced, and given up to Death, and the first angelic Glory of the Life of God in Man may be again found in him.

Theophilus. Indeed, Humanus, you have made great Haste already ; for all the Haste that we can make, consists in a total dying to all the Tempers and Passions which we have received from the Spirit of this World, by our Fall into it. And the more watchfully, earnestly, and constantly, we do this, the more Haste we make to our lost Country, and heavenly Glory.

It is no Extravagance, or overstraining the Matter, when we say, that our Goodness must be angelic ; for no Goodness less than that, can be Divine and heavenly, or help us to a Life in Heaven. It is often said, that we are poor, infirm Men, and not Angels ; and therefore must be content with the Poverty and Infirmary of human Virtues. That we are poor, infirm Men, is undeniable ; but this is the one infallible Reason, why a Virtue that is according to our Nature, or of its own Growth, can do us no Good. We were not created poor and infirm Men by God, but have lost him, are separated from him ; full of Misery, because we have changed our first State, and brought all this Poverty, Corruption, and Infirmary, upon ourselves. And therefore, as this Infirmary is from ourselves, so we must intend nothing less, or short of the total Removal of it, nor think that we have our proper Goodness, till we stand in that Degree of it, in which God created us. For, be assured of this great Truth, that nothing in us can be the Delight of God, but that very Creature, which he created. All therefore must be parted with, that God hath not created and brought to Life in us. And no Goodness but that of an Angel, can overcome the Evil that is in us, or do the Will of God on Earth, as it is done in Heaven, which is the only Goodness in and for which God created us.

Academicus. Pray, Theophilus, give me leave to say, that I should think it better, not to insist so much upon the Word Angelic, when you speak of the Goodness, that ought to be ours. For it seems to me too liable to Objection. We have not the high Faculties, and exalted Powers of Angels; and therefore our Goodness cannot rise up to an Equality with theirs.

Rusticus. Pray, Academicus, give me leave also to say, that if your Learning did not lead you to mind Words, more than Things, you could not have fallen into this critical Scruple. For our Call to angelic Goodness, does not suppose or require any high Stretch, or refined Elevation, of our intellectual Faculties and Powers. A Shepherd watching over his Flock, a poor Slave digging in the Mines, may each of them, though so employed to the End of their Lives, stand before God in a Degree of Goodness truly angelic. On the other hand, you may spend all your Time in high Speculations, writing and preaching upon Christian Perfection, composing Seraphic Hymns of heavenly Matters, with a Strength of Thought and Genius that delights both yourself and others, and yet, so doing to the Day of your Death, have only a Goodness like that of eating and drinking that which most pleases your Palate.

Would you know the true Nature of angelic Goodness, see how the Spirit of Christ speaks, 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy Heart, Soul, and Strength, and thy Neighbour as thyself. I came into the World, not to do my own Will, not to seek my own Glory or Honour, not to have a Kingdom in this World, but to promote the Kingdom of God, and do the Will of my Father in Heaven. My Meat and Drink is to do the Will of him that sent me. When thou makest a Feast, call not thy rich Friends and Acquaintance, but the poor, the lame, and blind,' &c. 'Whether you eat or drink, or whatever you do, do all to the Glory and Praise of God.' Thus speaks the Spirit of Christ; and he that in this Spirit thus lives, is an Angel, whether he be in Heaven, or enclosed in Flesh and Blood. And all of us are in the Way of attaining to this angelic Goodness, as soon as we hate the selfish Tempers of our own earthly Life, and earnestly long, in the Spirit of Prayer, to have the Life of God brought forth in us. Now this Goodness we must have, or we have none at all; for there is but one God, one Good, and one Goodness; and it is rightly called Angelic, because nothing is capable of it, but the heavenly angelic Nature; nor can it have any Existence in Man, till the Workings of our earthly Nature are overcome, and brought into Subjection to that Spirit, which is not of Man, but from Heaven. For Flesh and Blood, in all its Workings, can work only for itself; Darkness can only be dark, it has no other Nature; Coldness can only be cold; Earth can only be earthly; and the Works of Light can only proceed from Light. Flesh and Blood, or that Life which is only from the Stars and Elements of this World, can only work as the Stars and Elements work, only for Time, and a corruptible Life; it can only be bestial, and serve the Ends of a bestial Life; it is insensible and incapable of Divine Virtue, and is, and can be of no higher a Nature in a Man, than in a Beast, and must have the same End in both. It is quite incapable of entering into the Kingdom of God; and only for this Reason, because it is absolutely incapable of having any true and heavenly Goodness. It has then only its proper Goodness, when it has lost its Power of acting, and is governed by a Spirit superior to it; whilst it lives and rules, it can only live to itself; is nothing but an earthly own Will, own Love, own Honour, own Interest, never rising higher, doing better, or coming any nearer to Goodness, than its own Pride or Covetousness, Envy or Wrath, can carry it. For these Tempers, with all their lesser Subdivisions, are the Atmosphere that sets Bounds to the Breath of the earthly Life; they are essential to it, and as inseparable from it, as Hardness and Darkness are inseparable from a Rock of Stone. So long as the stony Rock lasts, so long is it hard and dark. And so long as earthly Flesh and Blood lives and acts, it can only live and act for itself; it can seek, love, like, or do no manner of Thing, but as its own Will, own Love, own Interest, is some way or other felt, and found in it. Would you know the true Ground and Reason of this? It is because no Life can go out of, or further than itself; nor can it will anything, but what its own Life is. This is absolutely true of every Life, whether it be Divine, earthly, or hellish; it can seek, love, and delight in nothing, but that which is according to its own Life.

See here, Academicus, the Folly of your quarrelling with the Word Angelic, since the Thing itself, angelic Goodness, is absolutely necessary; it is the Goodness of our first Creation, and must be the Goodness of our Redemption. The falling from it has brought forth all the Evils that we are surrounded with, and nothing can deliver us from the Death of our fallen State, but a true and full Resurrection of all that Purity and Goodness, which was living in the first Creation of Man. To be content with our Infirmities, is to be content with our Separation from God; and not to aspire after the one angelic Goodness, is to be Carnally-minded, which we are told, is Death; that is, Death to the one Divine Life.

A Virtue that is only according to the State of this earthly Life, is a Virtue of Art, and human Contrivance, a Fiction of Behaviour, modelled according to Rule and Custom, or Education, that can go no deeper, nor rise higher, nor reach further, than the Sense and Reason, and Interests of Flesh and Blood, can carry it. But this can have no Communication with God and Heaven, because it is not born of them, but is a lower, separate State of Life, that at best can only bring forth a Civility of outward Manners, little better than such a new Birth as may be had from a Dancing-master. But the Goodness which we want, and which we were created to have, is the one holy blessed Life of God, and Christ, and Heaven, living in the Soul. For from Eternity to Eternity, there never was, or ever can be, any other heavenly Goodness in any Creature, but the Life, and Spirit, and Word of God, speaking, living, and breathing in it.

Bid the Anatomist, that can skilfully dissect an human Body, that can tell you the Names, Nature, and Offices of most of its Parts, that can show you how they all conspire to give Life, Strength, and Motion, to the living Machine: Bid him, I say, put Life into the dead Carcase.

Now learned Reason, when pretending to be a Master of Morality, is just as powerful as this very Anatomist. It can skilfully dissect a dead System of Morality, can separate all its Parts, tell you the Names, Nature, Distinctions, and Connections, of most kinds of Good and Evil. But when this is done, learned Reason, with all its Dictates, Distinctions, and Definitions, can do just as much Good to the Soul, that has lost its Goodness, as the Anatomist can do the Carcase that has lost its Life.

It is wonderfully astonishing, that you Men of Learning seldom come thus far, as to see and feel this glaring Truth, that Goodness must be a living Thing; but, blinded with the empty Sounds of Words in Variety of Languages, are as content and happy with a Religion of Nature delineated, or a Book of Axioms, Maxims, and Deductions, mathematically placed one after another, as if you had really found the Tree of Life. Whereas, in Truth, all this is no better than the Reading a Lecture upon the Use of the Heart, Liver, and Lungs, to a dead Carcase: For the Life of Goodness can no more be raised, or brought into the Soul, by this Art of Reasoning, than Life can be brought into the Carcase, by a Discourse upon the Heart, Liver, and Lungs, made over it.

Oh! Academicus, forget your Scholarship, give up your Art and Criticism, be a plain Man, and then the first Rudiments of Sense may teach you, that there, and there only, can Goodness be, where it comes forth as a Birth of Life, and is the free natural Work and Fruit of that which lives within us. For till Goodness thus comes from a Life within us, we have in Truth none at all. For Reason, with all its Doctrine, Discipline, and Rules, can only help us to be so good, so changed, and amended, as a wild Beast may be, that by Restraints and Methods is taught to put on a Sort of Tameness, though its wild Nature is all the Time only restrained, and in a Readiness to break forth again as Occasion shall offer.

Thus far the Masters of Morality and human Discipline may go; they may tame and reform the outward Man, clothe him with the Appearance of many Images of Virtue, which will, some or all of them, be put off, just as Time, Occasion, and Flesh and Blood, require it. For the Goodness of a living Creature must be its own Life; it must arise up in it as its own Love, or any Passion doth; just as the Fierceness of the Tiger, and the Meekness of the Lamb, are the Birth of their own Life. And if Goodness is not our natural Birth from our natural Parents, we must of all Necessity be born again from a Principle above Nature, or no Goodness can be living in us. Now since Goodness is a Life, we have a Twofold Proof, that no Goodness can be living in us, till we are born again of the Word and Spirit of God: For Nature, as well as Scripture, assures us, that God is originally the One Good, and the One Life; and therefore no good Life can possibly be in us, but by the Word, Life, and Spirit of God, having a Birth in us. And from this Birth alone it is, that the free genuine Works of Goodness flow forth with the Freedom of the Divine Life, wherewith the Spirit of God has made us free; loving and doing all manner of Good, merely for Goodness-sake; virtuous in all kind of Virtue, purely for Virtue-sake: Then we are the natural true Children of our heavenly Father, and do the Works of Heaven with a cheerful and willing Mind. Then it is, that we are good in the Manner as God is good, because it is his Goodness that is born in us; we are perfect as he is perfect, we love as he loves, are patient as he is patient, we give as he gives, we forgive as he forgives, and resist Evil only with Good as he does.

This, Academicus, is angelic Goodness; and is the Goodness of those who are born again of the Word, and become new Creatures in the Spirit of Christ. This Goodness our first Father lost, when he chose to have the Eyes of Flesh and Blood, and the Spirit of this World, opened in him; and therefore our Redeemer, who well knew what we had lost, and must have again, has taught us in our daily Prayer, to ask for angelic Goodness in these Words; viz., 'Thy Kingdom come; thy Will be done on Earth, as it is in Heaven.' But I have done, and I think you must have done, with your learned Scruple about the Word angelic. And now, Theophilus, if you please, return to your Subject with Humanus.

Theophilus. Let me then tell you, Humanus, that I much approve of the Way that you intend to proceed in. You are come directly to the Truth and Heart of the Matter, and have hit upon the One only Method of putting Deism to a full Stand, by reducing Christianity to this One single great Point, which so evidently contains the whole Ground and Nature of it.

Now this One great Point consists of Two essential Parts; 1st, the Fall of Man from a Divine angelic Life, into an earthly, bestial, corruptible, miserable Life of this World. 2dly, The Redemption of Man, or his regaining his first angelic Perfection, by a new Birth of the Divine Nature, by the Word and Spirit of God. Stand steadily upon this true Christian Ground; and then you will not only stand safely yourself, but you will have left the Deist no Ground to stand upon. For here all the laboured Volumes of Infidelity, with which these last Ages have swarmed, are at once rendered useless, and cannot put so much as a little Finger into this Debate. Consult all, from Hobbes to the Moral Philosopher, and you consult in vain; their Works are as dead as themselves, and unable to give forth one Word against this Christianity. They had a much easier Task upon their Hands; for nothing can be easier than for Reason to object, and continue objecting, to the extraordinary Matters of the Old and New Testament. I do not mention this as an Accusation of the Deist, or to charge them with the crafty Contrivance of placing the Merits of the Cause where it is not. No, the Learning of the Christian World must bear the Blame of these fruitless Disputes: The Demonstrators of the truth and Reasonableness of Christianity have betrayed their own Cause, and left true Christianity unmentioned in their Defences of it. What a Reasonableness of Christianity have some great Names helped us to? Just as useful, and good to our fallen Souls, as the Reasonableness of consenting to the Death of Pharaoh and his Host in the Red Sea. But you, my Friend, being rightly converted to a Christianity that began before the Scriptures were written, and is as old as the Creation and Fall of Man, keep close to its true and real Ground; and, instead of showing the Reasonableness of believing a long History of Things, show the absolute Necessity of Man's dying to his present Life, in order to have a better from God. This is the Christianity that began with the Fall, and has been preached ever since to every Son of fallen Man, in every Corner of the World; and by the same Preacher that tells every Man, that he ought to be better than he is. For was not Man fallen from a better State than that he is now in, he could no more be ashamed or offended at anything that his Nature prompts him to do, than the Ox is ashamed at breaking into a good Pasture. Every Man therefore, from the Beginning of the World, has had Christianity and the Gospel written and preached within him ; as it contains the Fall of Man, and his Want of being raised to a better State. But as we see, that the Truth and Reality of his Fall, and the Truth and Reality of his Redemption by a real Birth from above, can be lost, nay disowned, amongst those that are daily reading and expounding the Scriptures ; so it is no wonder that the same should have happened to those, who had no Scriptures to read. Justly therefore, Humanus, are Churches and Creeds, Doctrines above and contrary to Reason, Miracles of the Old and New Testament, and all historical Facts and Matters, which are so great an Harvest to the Deists, justly, I say, are they removed by you out of the Debate ; and the One great Point above-mentioned only insisted upon as the Whole of the Matter. For this One Point gained, all is gained ; and, till this Point is cleared up, all the rest is but a Debate about nothing.

For if Man is fallen from a Divine Life, no one need to be told, that he can only be redeemed or saved from his Fall by having the same Divine Life born in him again, or a Second time. Nothing therefore touches the Truth of the Debate betwixt the Christian and the Infidel, but that which proves with Certainty, that Man has, or has not lost a Divine Life.

If he is thus fallen, has died this Death to a Divine Life, then the Nature and Necessity of the Christian New-birth sufficiently proves itself. But if it can be proved, that he is not thus fallen, but stands in that State and Degree of Life in which God created him ; the Deists have reason enough to reject the Christian Scheme of Redemption.

Strange it is therefore beyond Expression, that every Man, whether Christian or Infidel, should not see, that here lies the Whole of the Matter ; or that any learned Defender of Christianity should think of beginning anywhere, or in anything, but where the Redemption itself begins ; or imagine there can be the least Ground to propose a Redemption to Man, till he shows Why, and from What, he is to be redeemed. Stranger is it still, if you consider, that Christians have nothing to excuse their wandering from this One great Point, since both the Testaments bear so open a Witness to it. ‘ In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die ;’ says the Old Testament. ‘ Except a Man be born again from above, of the Word and Spirit of God, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven ;’ says the New Testament.

Thus do these Two Testaments begin with the most open Declarations of these Two Things; viz., The Death of Man to his First created Life: 2dly, His Redemption only and solely by a real Birth of the Divine Life, received again from above. What Excuse therefore can be made for those who read the Scripture, and yet overlook that very One Point; not only so plainly declared, but which, in itself, is the One only Ground and Foundation upon which all the Scripture stands? For had not Man died, neither Moses, nor the Prophets, had ever been in Being. For Man not fallen, but abiding in his first created Perfection of Life, had been as free from any outward Law, as the Light is from Darkness. The keeping his own Nature, had been the keeping, and doing, and seeing, and knowing all that God required of him. So that neither Law, nor Prophecy, has any Ground or Reason, but because Man is dead to his first Life.

But seeing Man is dead to his first Life, and living only in an earthly bestial World, under the Power and Slavery of the evil Motions and Tempers of gross Flesh and Blood; therefore Moses must come with his Law, to set Sin before him, and give him Precepts of resisting and dying to all the Lusts of this new earthly Life, which he is fallen into: Therefore, to seek for any other Learning in or from Moses, than that of learning to resist and die to the Tempers and Passions of this earthly Life, is knowing nothing right of Moses, nor of ourselves.

Next after Moses came the Prophets, or the Spirit of Prophecy, with its far-seeing Sight, and Declaration of Glories to come. Now the Ground of Prophecy is this, it is because Man is to be restored to his first glorious State; and therefore the Spirit of Prophecy comes forth from God to awaken Hope and Faith, Expectation and Desire in Man; because these are the only Powers that can draw him out of the Mire of the earthly Life, in which he sticks, and carry him up to his first heavenly State again. Nothing therefore is to be sought for in or from the Prophets, but the Increase of our Hope, Faith, and Desire of the New Birth of that glorious Life which we have lost, and they foretold was to be had again.

Thus, my Friend, you see the Importance of this One Point; Moses and the Prophets have no Ground or Reason but this, that Man has lost his Divine Life; and that this same Divine Life is to be born again in him. Now seeing this is the Ground and Reason of the Scriptures, therefore is it the one unerring Key to the right Use of them. They have only this one Intent, to make Man know, resist, and abhor the Working of his fallen earthly Nature; and to turn the Faith, Hope, and longing Desire of his Heart to God: And therefore we are only to read them with this View, and to learn this one Lesson from them. Whatever therefore occurs, that cannot be turned to this general End, but relates only to some temporal, occasional, or private Matter, is of no more Importance to us, than the Cloak and Parchments which St. Paul speaks of.

How many hundred Barns must there be, to hold all the learned Volumes, that had never been written, had Man looked upon the Scriptures as having no other View or End, but to teach him to renounce the Tempers of his fallen earthly Nature, and live unto God in Faith and Prayer; to be born again of the Divine Nature! But this one End being overlooked by learned Reason, Hebrew and Syriac, Arabic, Greek, and Latin, have been called in, to torture the Scriptures into a Chaos of confused Opinions, that has covered the Christian World with Darkness, and lost the only Good that was to be had from the written Word of God. Whereas, standing upon the Ground on which you stand, with only this one great Point at Heart, the Scriptures are a plain, easy, and certain Instruction; and no honest unlearned Heart stands in need of any Commentator, to help him to all the Benefit that can be had from Scripture, or secure him from any hurtful Error.

Humanus. Indeed, Theophilus, my own Experience can bear a full Testimony to the Truth of all that you have said. For upon my reading now the New Testament, with this Key in my Hand; viz., of Man thus fallen, and thus called to a new Birth from Heaven; everything I read in it has Spirit and Life, and overflows my Soul with such an Unction, and Sensibility of sweet Doctrine, as I am not able to express. For whilst I consider it only as written to drive all earthly Tempers and Passions out of the Soul, and inflame the Heart with Love and Desire of the Grace, the Spirit, the Light and Life of the heavenly Nature, I can say, as the Jewish Officers did, Never Man spoke like Christ and his Apostles.

Why was the Son of God made Man? It was because Man was to be made again a Divine Creature. Why did Man want such a Saviour? It was because he was become earthly, mortal, gross Flesh and Blood. Now take Christ in this Light, and consider Man in this State, and then all that is said in the Gospel stands in the fullest Light.

Thus, 'Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will refresh you.' How poor, how mean, and uncertain a Sense is there in this, till you know, that Man has lost his Divine Nature, and is fallen into a World that is all Labour, Burden, and Misery! But as soon as this is known, then how easy, how plain, is the full and highest Sense of these Words,

'Come unto me, all that labour, are weary and heavy laden, and 'I will refresh you!'—I will bring to Life that first happy State which you have lost. This is the Note, the Paraphrase, the Expositor, the Key to the true Sense of every Doctrine of Christ; which, though variously expressed to awaken the Heart, is only one and the same Thing. Thus, 'Blessed are they that mourn, 'for they shall be comforted.' But why so? Because he that is troubled at the Corruption, Vanity, and Impurity of his fallen earthly State, has the Comfort of the heavenly Life ready for him. Again, 'Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after 'Righteousness, for they shall be filled.' How plain and great is the Sense here, as soon as we know, that Christ is our Righteousness: and that the righteous Life of Christ in the Soul, is that Life which our first Father lost! Therefore, to hunger and thirst after this Righteousness, is the one Way to be filled with that Divine Life, that we had lost. Again, 'If any Man thirst, let 'him come unto me and drink: And out of his Belly shall flow 'Rivers of living Water.' What can the Latin or Greek Critic do here? Nothing at all. He will only try to make some Excuse for the Strangeness of the Phrase. But when these Words are read by one who knows that he and all Mankind, have lost the Divine Nature, he tastes and feels the glad Tidings which they bring; and is in Love with these sweet Sounds, which promise such an overflowing Return of Heaven into his Soul. Again, 'I beseech you,' says the Apostle, 'as Strangers and Pilgrims, 'abstain from fleshly Lusts, which war against the Soul,' &c. The Critic looks into his Books, to see how Latin and Greek Authors have used the Words Stranger and Pilgrim, and so some Sense or other is given to the Apostle; but the Christian, who knows that Man, wandering out of Paradise, a Colony of Heaven, was taken Captive by the Stars and Elements, to live in Labour and Toil, in Sickness and Pain, in Hunger and Thirst, in Heat and Cold, amongst the Beasts of the Field; where evil Spirits, like roaring Lions, seek to devour him; he only knows in what Truth and Reality Man is a poor Stranger, and distressed Pilgrim upon Earth. Again, 'To the Poor,' saith Christ, 'the Gospel is 'preached.' The Critic only considers the several kinds of worldly Poverty. But the Christian, who knows that the real great Poverty of Man consists in his having lost the Riches and Greatness of his first Life, knows, that to this poor Man the Gospel is preached, because he only, who is sensible in this Poverty, can hear and receive it. For to Man, insensible of his fallen State, the glad Tidings of the Gospel are but like News from Fairy Land; and the Cross of Christ can only be a Stumbling-block and Foolishness to him, whether he be a Christian, a Jew, or a Greek. Thus does it appear, that all the Doctrines and Sayings of Christ and his Apostles are full of a comfortable, Divine, and exalted Sense, or mere empty Words, just as the Fall of Man from a Divine Life, is either owned or disowned. But I have done.

Theophilus. Thus far then, Humanus, we are agreed, that the Fall of Man into the Life and State of this World, is the whole Ground of his Redemption; and that a real Birth of Christ in the Soul, is the whole Nature of it. Let me now only ask you, How you would endeavour to convince a Man of his fallen State?

Humanus. I would not begin with the Account that Moses gives of it, for several Reasons; but chiefly for these Two: First, Because the Fall is not an historical Matter; nor would a mere historical Knowledge of it be of any Use, or do any real Good to him. Secondly, Because Moses's Account is not the Proof of the Fall, and therefore not to be appealed to as such.

Moses is the first Historian of natural Death, and has recorded the Death of the First Man, and of many others who were born of him: But the Proof that Man is mortal, lies not in Moses's History of the Death of the First Man, but in the known Nature of Man, and the World from which he has his Life. Again, we do not want Moses to assure us, that there was a First Man; that he had something from Heaven, and something from the Earth in him; and must have come into the World in another Manner than all those who have descended from him. For every Man is himself the infallible Proof of this; Moses is only the Historian that has recorded the When, and Where, and How this First Man came into the World, and what was his Name. But the Proof and Certainty of the Fact, that such a First Man there must have been, lies not in Moses's Account, but stands proved to every Man from his own Nature and State in this World.

Thus it is with the Fall; we have no more Occasion to go to Moses, to prove that Man and the World are in a fallen State, than to prove that Man is a poor, miserable, weak, vain, distressed, corrupt, depraved, selfish, self-tormenting, perishing Creature; and that the World is a sad Mixture of false Goods, and real Evils; a mere Scene of all Sorts of Trials, Vexations, and Miseries; all arising from the Frame, and Nature, and Condition both of Man and the World. This is the full infallible Proof of the Fall of Man; which is not a Thing learnt from any History, but shows itself everywhere, and every Day, with such Clearness as we see the Sun. Moses is not the Prover of the Fact, that Man is fallen; but the Recorder of the When and How, and the Manner in which the Fall hath happened.

My First Attempt therefore, upon any Man, to convince him of the Fall, as the Ground of the Redemption, should be an Attempt to do that for him, which Affliction, Disappointments, Sickness, Pain, and the Approach of Death, have a natural Tendency to do; viz., to convince him of the Vanity, Poverty, and Misery of his Life and Condition in this World. For as this is the true Proof of the fallen State of Man, so Man can only be convinced of it, by having this Proof truly set before him. I would therefore appeal at first to nothing but his own Nature and Condition in the World; and show him how unreasonable, nay, impossible it is, that a God, who has nothing in himself but infinite Goodness and infinite Happiness, should bring forth a Race of intelligent Creatures, that have neither natural Goodness, nor natural Happiness. The inspired Saints of God say thus, 'Man that is born of a Woman hath but a short Time to live, and is full of Misery.' Again, 'Man walketh in a vain Shadow, and disquieteth himself in vain.' Now if what is here truly said of Mankind, could be truly said of any Order of the Beasts and Animals of the Field, who could defend the Goodness of God in bringing such Creatures into such a State of Life? Now though the Deist rejects the Scriptures, considered as a Volume of Divine Revelation, yet everything that he outwardly sees, and inwardly feels, demonstrates this capital Truth of Scripture, that Man is in this poor and miserable State of Life. And therefore, everything that we know of God, and everything that we know of Man, is a daily irresistible Proof, that Man is in a fallen State. Look at the human Infant just come out of the Womb, you can hardly bear the Sight; it is a Picture of such Deformity, Nakedness, Weakness, and helpless Distress, as is not to be seen amongst the home-born Animals of this World: The Chicken has its Birth from no Sin, and therefore it comes forth in Beauty; it runs and pecks as soon as its Shell is broken; The Pig and the Calf go both to play, as soon as the Dam is delivered of them; they are pleased with themselves, and please the Eye that beholds their frolic State and beauteous Clothing; whilst the new-born Babe of a Woman, that is to have an upright Form, that is to view the Heavens, and worship the God that made them, lies for Months in gross Ignorance, Weakness, and Impurity; as sad a Spectacle when he first begins to breathe the Life of this World, as when in the Agonies of Death he breathes his last.

What is all this, but the strongest Proof, that Man is the only Creature that belongs not to this World, but is fallen into it through Sin? And therefore his Birth, in such Distress, bears all these Marks of Shame and Weakness. Had he been originally of this World, it is necessary to suppose, that this World had done the highest Honour to its highest Creature; and that he had begun his Life in greater Perfection than any other Animal, and brought with him a more beautiful Clothing than the finest Lilies of the Field have. But, to go on: When the human Infant is set upon his Legs, and begins to act for himself, he soon becomes a more pitiable Object than when crying in the Cradle. The Strength of his Life is a mere Strength of wild Passions; his Reason is Craft, and selfish Subtlety; he loves and hates only as Flesh and Blood prompt him, Jails and Gibbets cannot keep him from Theft and Murder. If he is rich, he is tormented with Pride and Ambition; if poor, with Murmuring and Discontent: Be he which he will, sooner or later, disordered Passions, disappointed Lusts, fruitless Labour, Pains and Sickness, will tear him from this World in such Travail as his Mother felt, when she brought forth the sinful Animal.

Now all this Evil and Misery, are purely the natural and necessary Effects of his Birth in the bestial Flesh and Blood of this World, and there is nothing in his natural State that can put a Stop to it; he must be evil and miserable so long as he has only the Life of this World in him. Therefore the absolute Certainty of the Fall, and the absolute Necessity of a New Birth, are Truths, independently of Scripture, plain to a Demonstration. Thus, God is in himself infinite Goodness, and infinite Happiness; but Man, in his present earthly Birth and Life, can neither have Goodness or Happiness; therefore his present State of Life could not be brought forth by a God who is all Goodness and Happiness. Thus every Man, that believes in a Creator infinitely perfect, is under a Necessity of believing the whole Ground of Christian Redemption, namely, that Man hath some way or other lost that Perfection of Life, which he had at first from his Creator.

But the Christian has yet an additional Proof of this Matter, because the Scriptures, which with him are infallible, so frequently and openly bear Witness to it.

Thus, 'Let us make Man in our Image, according to our Likeness.' How great, how Divine, is this Beginning of Man? How can there be any Evil or Misery, any Vanity or Weakness, in a Creature so brought forth? But now what is become of this Man? For if you look at Man just coming out of the Womb, the pitiable Object above described, what can be so absurd, as to call this Birth, his Creation in the Likeness and after the Image of God? Now what is said of the first Man, is not spoken of one Person, but of the human Nature; for the first Man, was only the first Instance of that which Mankind were to be. He had no Perfection peculiar to himself, but that of being the first Man; and had he stood, all that came from him, had come to Life as he did, in the same Strength and Glory of Perfection, and not been born of a bestial Womb, like the wild Ass's Colt. Again, set the following Text against Moses's Perfection of the first Image of God, 'Man that is born of a Woman hath 'but a short time to live, and is full of Misery.'

Is not this a full Proof, that the first created Life of Man is quite dead, and that an earthly Life of Misery is risen up instead of it? Again, the Apostle saith, 'The natural Man knoweth 'not the Things of God; they are Foolishness unto him.' Can this natural Man, the Man of earthly Flesh and Blood, that can have no Acquaintance with, or Knowledge of God, to whom the Things of God are Foolishness; can this be the Man first created in the Image and Likeness of God? What can be more absurd than such a Thought? Or what Excuse can be made for that Learning, which cannot see from so plain a Scripture, that human Nature, now, is not that human Nature, which it was at first created; but is dead to that first Life, which it had in the Image and Likeness of God, or the Things of God could not possibly be Foolishness to it? But I will end this Matter with these borrowed Words, 'We were no more created to be in the 'Sorrows, Burdens, and Anguish of an earthly Life, than the 'Angels were created to be in the Wrath and Darkness of Hell. 'It is as contrary to the Will and Goodness of God towards us, 'that we are out of Paradise, as it is contrary to the Designs and 'Goodness of God towards the Angels, and some of them are 'out of Heaven, Prisoners of Darkness.

'The Grossness, Impurity, Sickness, Pain and Corruption of 'our Bodies, is brought upon us by ourselves, in the same manner, 'as the hideous, serpentine Forms of the Devils are brought 'upon them. How absurd, and even blasphemous would it be, 'to say with the Scripture and the Church, That we are the 'Children of Wrath, and born in Sin, if we had that Nature, 'which God at first gave us? What a reproach upon God, to 'say, that this World is a Valley of Misery, a Shadow of 'Death, full of Disorders, Snares, Evils, and Temptations, if this 'was an original Creation, or that State of Things for which God 'created us? Is it not as consistent with the Goodness and 'Perfection of God, to speak of the Misery and Disorder that 'unfallen holy Angels find above, and of the Vanity, Emptiness, 'and Sorrow of their heavenly State, as to speak of the Misery 'of Men, and the Sorrows of this World, if Men and the World 'were in that Order, in which God at first had placed them? 'If God could make any Place poor and vain, and create any ‘ Beings into a State of Vanity and Vexation of Spirit, he might ‘ do so in all Places, and to all Beings.’*

Theophilus. You have put the Fall, Humanus, upon its right Proof, and shown great Judgment in your intended Method of converting anyone to the Belief of it. You have set the whole Matter in so just a Light, that I have nothing that I would add to it.

Humanus. Give me leave, Gentlemen, just to put in a Word or two concerning another plain Indication, that Man has lost that Life and Nature, in which he was first created. Reason has been my God, and is the vain Idol of modern Deism, and modern Christianity; and yet human Reason has no higher a Birth, than human Ignorance, Infirmity, and Mortality; they all began together; they are inseparable; they generate and are generated from one another; they are the Life of each other; and they must live and die together, and all bear the same Witness to the fallen State of Man. For no Creature can come from the Hands of God into a State of any Ignorance of anything, that is fit and proper to be known by it. This is as impossible, as for God to have an envious, evil Will. Now all right and natural Knowledge, in whatever Creature it is, is sensible, intuitive, and its own Evidence. But Opinion, Reasoning, or Doubting (for they are all but one Thing) can only then begin, when the Creature has lost its first right and natural State, and is got somewhere, and become somewhat, that it cannot tell what to make of. Then begins Doubting, from thence Reasoning, from thence Debating; and this is the high Birth of our magnified Reason, as nobly born, as Groping is, which has its Beginning in and from Darkness, or the Loss of Light. Hence we have a full Proof, that Man has lost his first natural State in which God created him. For Reasoning, Doubt, and Perplexity in any Creature, is the Effect of some Fall, or Departure from its first State of Nature, and shows, that it wants, and is seeking, something that its Nature would have, but knows not how to come at it. The Beasts seek not after Truth; a plain Proof, that it has no Relation to them; has no Suitableness to their Nature, nor ever belonged to them. Man is in Quest of it, in Perplexity about it, cannot come at it; takes Lies to be Truth, and Truth to be Lies; a plain Proof, both that he has it not, and yet has had it, was created in it, and for it; for nothing can seek for anything, but that which is lost, and is wanted; nor could it form the least Idea of it, but because it has belonged to it, and ought to be his.

* Serious Answer to Dr. Trapp, on the Sin, &c., of being Righteous over-much.

The Beasts have no Ignorance of anything, that concerns them; but have all the sensible, intuitive Knowledge of every thing that is the Good of their Nature. But man left to his Reason, is all over Ignorance, Doubt, Conjecture, and Perplexity in Matters of the highest Moment, about what he himself is, what is his chief Good, where he is to seek it, and how to obtain it. For to ask your Reason, how God is your God, how you are in him and from him, what he is in himself, and what he is in you, is but like asking your Hands to feel out the Thickness, or the Thinness, of the Light. To ask your Reason, whether the Soul of Man is immortal in its Nature, is to as good Purpose, is going no further out of the Way, than if you were to ask your Eyes to show you, where Extension begins, and where it ends. To ask your Reason, whether Man has anything of God, or the Divine Nature in him, is just as suitable to the Nature and Power of your Reason, as if you were to ask your Nose, whether this or that sweet, aromatic Smell in the Garden, has any heavenly Power mixed with, and opening itself in it.

Reason therefore, is so far from being able to help Man to that Knowledge, which his Nature and Condition want, that it can only help his Ignorance to increase and fructify in Doubts, Fictions, and absurd Debates. And the Thing cannot be otherwise; Man must walk in a vain Shadow, so long as Reason is his Oracle. For nothing can act suitably to Nature, find its true State in Nature, or answer the End of its Creation by the Power of Reason; because Reason is not the Life, the Power, or Former of Nature; and therefore has no more Power over Nature, than over the Powers and Principles of Vegetation, either in the Body of Man, or any other Creature. He therefore who turns to his Reason, as the true Power and Light of his Nature, betrays the same Ignorance of the whole Nature, Power, and Office of Reason, as if he were to try to smell with his Eyes, or see with his Nose. For as each of these Senses has only its one Work or Power which it cannot alter, or exceed; so Reason has only its one Work or Power, which it cannot alter, or exceed; and that one Work is, to be a bare Observer and Comparer of Things that manifest themselves to it by the Senses. This is as much its one only Power, as Seeing is the only Power of the Eyes. When therefore Reason takes upon it to determine on Things not manifested to it by the Senses, as to judge about a Divine new Birth, a Divine Faith; or how the Soul wants, or does not want God, &c., it is then as much out of its Place and Office, as the Eye that takes upon it to smell; and its true Name and Nature is, Whim, Humour, Caprice, Conjecture, Opinion, Fancy, and every other Species of Blindness, and Passion.

Now suppose a Man to come thus into the World, with this chief Difference from other Creatures; that he is at a Loss to find out what he is, how he is to live, and what he is to seek, as his chief Happiness; what he is to own of a God, of Providence, Religion, &c. Suppose him to have Faculties that put him upon this Search, and no Faculties, that can satisfy his Inquiry; and what can you suppose more miserable to himself, or more unworthy of a good Creator? Therefore, if you will not suppose a God, that has been good to all Creatures, and given every Animal its proper Light of Nature, except Man, you must be forced to own, that Man has certainly lost the true Light and Perfection of his Nature, which God at first gave him.

But I believe Academicus wants to say something, and therefore I have done.

Academicus. I was only going to say, that every Attribute of God, everything that Sense and Reason force us to see, and know, and feel, both of ourselves, and the World, join with the Letter and Spirit of all Scripture in attesting, that Man has certainly had a Divine Life, to which he has certainly died. But yet I must own it is very difficult to conceive, how a Creature brought forth in so high Perfection, in such Enjoyment of the Life, Light, and Spirit of God, could either deceive himself, or be deceived by another.

Theophilus. All that we want to know, my Friend, is the Certainty of the Fact, and this is of the greatest Moment to us: For this is it, that takes us from the Herd of earthly Animals, and lays the Foundation of Religion, and Divine Virtue. For had not a Divine Life at first been in us, we should be now at the same Distance from all true Virtue and Goodness, and as incapable of forming the least Thought or Desire of it, as other Animals; and should have nothing to do, but to look to ourselves, live to our earthly Nature, and make the most of this World. For this is the only Wisdom and Goodness, that an earthly Nature is capable of, whether it be a Man, or a Fox. The Certainty therefore of the Fact, of our first Divine Birth, is all; nothing more need be inquired after. For on this Ground stands all our Comfort; hence it is, that, in Faith and Hope, we can look up to God as our Father, to Heaven as our native Country, and have the Honour to be accounted only as Strangers and Pilgrims upon Earth.

But however, to remove your Difficulty, I shall give you a little Sketch of the Possibility of Man's Falling, although created in the Perfection above-mentioned.

Now supposing God to have brought a new intelligent Creature into a new World, all the Attributes of God oblige us to suppose this Creature to be created in a perfect State both inwardly and outwardly. As intelligent, it must partake of the Divine Understanding; as living, it must have a Degree of the Divine Life in it; as good, it must have a Birth of the Divine Goodness in it; as an Offspring of Divine Love, it must have a Divine Happiness, for the Enjoyment of which the Love of God created it. Now there is but one possible Way for this intelligent Creature, thus endowed, to fall from, or lose the Happiness of its first created State. It cannot knowingly choose Misery, or the loss of its Happiness: Therefore it can only fall by such an Ignorance, or Power of falling, as is consistent with its perfect State. Now this Power lay wholly in the Newness of its Life: It only began to find itself an intelligent Being; and yet had a Power of Looking with the Eyes of its Understanding either inwards, or outwards; upwards, or downwards. It had a Power of acquiescing and rejoicing in that, which it found itself to be, and adoring that Power and Goodness which had brought it into the Possession of such a Nature: And it had a Power of wandering into Conjectures, and Reasons about that, which it was not. Now as a free, intelligent Creature, it could not be without this Power of thus turning its intelligent Eye; and yet as a beginning Creature that had no Experience, this Power could not be free from a Possibility of wandering; and therefore its Power of wandering was not a Defect, but a necessary Part of its first perfect State. Now in this Possibility of wandering with its intelligent Eye, looking where it ought not, and entering into Conjectures about that, which it was not, may be clearly seen the Possibility of its falling from a State of high Perfection.

This is the one only possible Way for a good, intelligent, new Creature, to lose its Happiness. And I think it may justly be affirmed, that the Mosaic Account of the Fall of Man is exactly this very Case; namely, how the Eye of his new unexperienced Understanding, beginning to cast a wandering Look into that which he was not, was by an unsuspected Subtlety, or Serpent, drawn into a Reasoning and Conjecturing about a certain Good and Evil, which were no Part of his own created State.

Which Inquiry, being given into, ended in the real Knowledge of this Good and Evil, the Sensibility of which became an immediate Death to his first Divine Life, destroyed the angelic Image in the Likeness of God, and set a gross, earthly, naked, ashamed, frightened, wretched Animal of bestial Flesh and Blood in its Place, the only Animal to which this new Knowledge of Good and Evil could belong.

Supposing therefore the Fall of Man, which is a Fact attested, and proved by every Thing we know of God, Ourselves, and the World ; the Mosaic Account of it has every Mark of Truth, Sobriety, and Justness, as being a plain and easy Description of the one only Way, by which a Creature so endowed could change or lose its first happy State.

Academicus. Truly, Theophilus, you have given a most natural and full Solution of my Difficulty, by which, I suppose, you mean as well to explain the Fall of Angels, as of Men. But, Sir, if that Pride, to which their Fall is charged, must have stolen upon them, in that same unsuspected Way, in which the Longing after the Tree of Good and Evil insinuated itself into Man ; viz., from a wandering Look into that, which they were not, occasioned by the Newness of their untried Life, in which they had but just began to be ; suffer me then, to ask, Why the fallen Angels were not, at first, the immediate Objects of Divine Mercy and Goodness ? Why they are to be for ever Prisoners of a never-ending Hell ? Or, are you of Opinion, that Angels, as well as Men, will be at last brought back to their first State ?

Theophilus. Your Questions, Academicus, seem to have too much of Curiosity in them : But, as I hope you will not give way to this Temper, so I will, for once, comply with your Demands.

The Fall of Angels must be supposed to have been as soon after their Creation, as that of Adam. Had they stood any time in their new-created State, they had been in one and the same impossibility of Falling, as the Angels that are now in Heaven. For no pure, intelligent, good, and holy created Being, can possibly lose this Divine State of Perfection, but through the first Use of its untried State and Powers. The Manner of Adam's falling into the Life of this World, plainly shows the Manner how the Angels fell into Hell, namely, at first only by looking and conjecturing with their intelligent Eye into that, which they were not, which was not opened in them, but was hid in God. This Looking went on till it became a Lust and strong Longing after that somewhat ; just as it had done in Adam, who so gazed upon the earthly Good and Evil, till it opened itself in him. Adam looked only at that which was Creaturely, and in a Life below him ; and therefore only that lower, creaturely, bestial Life, was brought forth in him. But the Angel turning his wandering Look into that Height and Depth which was not Creaturely, but hid in God ; namely, into the Might and Strength of Eternity, that he might know how the creaturely Life was kindled by it ; and thinking himself by his exalted Nature, to be as near to this great Power, and as capable of entering into it, as Adam thought himself near to, and capable of knowing the Good and Evil of the earthly Life ; and as Adam thought to be like God in this new Knowledge, so the Angels imagined to be like God, could he enter into this Knowledge, how the Might of God kindled the creaturely Life, for then he himself should have the Power of creating or kindling the creaturely Life; and as Adam's Imagination brought forth a Lust and longing, which could not be stopped, till the earthly Knowledge, and earthly Life, had opened itself in him; so the Angel's Imagination begot such a Lust and Longing to know the Ground and Original of Life, as would not be stopped till the Ground and Original of Life, namely, that Depth of Darkness and Fire, in and from which every creaturely Life must begin, was totally opened in him, and he as much swallowed up by Hell, as Adam was by the earthly Life. Thus you may see, how the same aspiring Imagination (but with regard to different Matters) rising in the same Manner, and from the same Cause in both these Creatures, and working itself up into a Lust and Longing, brought the one from Heaven into Hell, and the other from Paradise into a bestial World.

Now as the Lust of Adam, when it had obtained its Desire, opened all the Properties and Tempers of the bestial Life in him; so the Lust of the Angel, when it got what it wanted, viz., the Ground and Original of the creaturely Life, which is Darkness and Fire; immediately opened all the dreadful Properties of Darkness and Fire in him, which at once swallowed up or extinguished the angelic Nature. Hence Wrath, Hatred, Pride, Envy, Malice, and every Enmity to Light and Love, are the only Life of the fallen Angel; and he can will and act nothing else, but as these Properties of Darkness and Fire drive him.

To ask therefore, Why the fallen Angels continue in their State, is to ask, why Darkness is not made to be Light? For the Root and Ground of Nature is unchangeable; it keeps its own Nature, or it could not be the Ground; it must stand always in its own Place, and be only the Ground and Root; it cannot rise higher than the Root, no more than the Root of the Tree can be its Branches and Fruit. The Angels, therefore, being fallen into the Ground and Root of Nature, have only the working Life of the Ground and Root of Nature in them; and therefore seem to be as unchangeable, and incapable of having any other, as the Root itself is.

To ask therefore, why the fallen Angels were not helped by the Mercy and Goodness of God, as fallen Man was; is like asking, why the refreshing Dew of Heaven does not do that to Flint, which is does to the vegetable Plant? For as the Nature of the Flint is too hard, and too much compacted, to receive any Alteration from the sweet Softness of refreshing Water; so the fallen Angel, like the Flint, being shut up in the wrathful Working of its own hard Darkness and Fire, the Goodness of God can have no Entrance into it.

For what are we to understand by the Mercy and Goodness of God? His Mercy is his Patience. And his Goodness, is his Light, and Word, and Holy Spirit. Now every Creature has the Benefit of Divine Patience; but no Creature can have his Goodness, but that which is capable of receiving his Light, and Holy Spirit.

And his Light, and Holy Spirit, cannot enter into a Creature, as an external, additional Thing, that may be given to it, whether it will, or not, but must be brought forth as a Birth in it. For the Light, and Spirit of God, can be nowhere, but as a Birth, whether it be in God, or the Creature. And therefore the Goodness of God can be imparted to no Creature, but that which is capable of a Birth of the Light and Spirit of God, or, in the Words of Scripture, unless it be born of the Word and Spirit of God.

This therefore you may rest upon, as a certain Truth, that the one only Reason, why the fallen Angels have as yet had nothing of the Spirit or Light of God breathed into, or born in them, is, because they are as yet utterly incapable of such a Birth, or of being helped by the Divine Goodness. For as Flame cannot communicate itself to Flint, nor the Spirit of God to a Beast; because the Flint stands in the utmost Contrariety to Flame, and the Beast in a total Incapacity of Holiness; so the fallen Angel is in its working Life altogether incapable of receiving the Spirit and Life of God into it. Were it not thus, Angels had been helped, as early as Man: For the Goodness, or the Light and Spirit of God, loses no Time, but stands always in the same Fulness of Communication of itself to every Creature, that is capable of receiving it.

And therefore it is, that fallen Man was immediately helped, because he fell only into earthly Flesh and Blood, in which the Light of this World is kindled, which Light has something of Heaven in it, and was kindled by the Light of Heaven.

And therefore the Goodness of God, or his Light and holy Spirit, could come to Man's Assistance in the Light of his Life, and therein begin a Covenant of Redemption with him. For in this Light of his Life, which is a Ray of Heaven, the inspoken Word in Paradise could enter, and have Communion with it, and make itself to be a Beginning of Salvation to all those, who by Faith and Hope would lay hold of it, and endeavour after a new Birth from it. Thus stands the Ground and Reason why Men, and not Angels, were immediately helped at their Fall.

As to your last Question, whether I believe the final Restora- tion of all the fallen Angels? I shall only say, that neither ancient nor modern Writers, on either Side of the Question, have touched the true Merits of the Cause, or spoken to that Point, on which the Decision of the Matter wholly rests.

For it can neither be sufficiently affirmed, nor sufficiently denied, by any Arguments drawn either from the Divine Attributes, or Texts of Scripture; for they cannot come up to the Point in Question. But the true Ground and Merit of the Cause, lies solely in the Possibility of the Thing, which no one has attempted to prove, nor perhaps is anyone able to do it; namely, to show from a true Ground, that the diabolical Nature is possible to be altered. Darkness can by no Omnipotence be made to be Light; it can only be suppressed, or overcome by it, or forced to be hid under it, as Heaven hides or overcomes Hell; but still the Darkness has its first Nature, never to be changed.

Now if anyone can show, that the Devils are not essentially evil, as Darkness is essentially dark, but have only such an accidental Difference from Goodness, as Ice has from Water, or a Flint from transparent Glass; then their Restoration is possible, and they will infallibly have all their Evil removed out of them by the Goodness of God.

But unless it could be shown from a true Ground in Nature, that the fallen Angels must have something of the heavenly Life in them, though shut up in a thousand times harder Death, than Fire is in the dark Flint, no Length of Time, or anything else, can produce any Alteration, or Cessation of their evil Nature.

For Time cannot alter the Nature or Essence of Things; it only suffers that to come to pass which is possible, and consistent with the Nature of Things. No Length of Time can make a Circle to have, or give forth, the Properties of a right Line.

Now if the fallen Angels have nothing heavenly in them, but stand in as full a Contrariety to all that is heavenly, as the Circle does to the Properties of the right Line; then Goodness is as impossible to be ever awakened in them, as in a Beast. The Beast must always be what it was at first; and for this Reason, because nothing but the bestial Nature is in it: If therefore the fallen Angel is totally hellish, as the Beast is bestial, it must always be what it is.

But we have launched far enough in a Deep that does not belong unto us; and which cannot be sufficiently affirmed, or denied, but from the known Possibility, or the known Impossibility of the Thing, which does not yet appear. If it is possible, I am heartily glad of it; and am also sure enough, that it will then come to pass in its own Time. For if he could not be thought to be a good Man, who did not do all that he could to make Sinners become holy and happy in Goodness, we may be sure enough that the boundless Goodness of God, will set no Bounds to itself, but remove every Misery from every Creature that is capable of it. But let me now return to Humanus, and ask him, That supposing he could not convince a Man of the Certainty of his fallen State, how he would further proceed with him.

Humanas. Truly, Theophilus, I would proceed no further at all; and for this good Reason, Because I should then have nothing to proceed upon. Did I certainly know of an infallible Remedy for every Disorder of the Eyes, only to be had by going to China for it, I should not attempt to persuade a Man, who believed his Eyes to be sound and good, to leave all that he had, and go to China for this infallible Remedy for bad Eyes.

Now to press a Man to deny himself, and to leave all that he hath in the Enjoyments of Flesh and Blood, in order to be reconciled to God, who believes himself to be in the same good State, in which God created him, seems to be as wild a Project, as to desire him who is well pleased with the Goodness of his Sight, to go to the Indies to be helped to see.

And indeed, I very well know, from former Experience, that all Discourses about the Reasonableness of Christianity, the Doctrine of the Cross, the exceeding Love of God in giving so great a Saviour, with many more Things of the Like Nature, were mere empty Sounds, heard with the greatest Indifference, and incapable of raising the least Seriousness in me, merely because I had not the least Notion or Suspicion of the Truth and Greatness of my fallen State, and therefore was not the Man who had any Fitness to be affected with these Matters. And thence it was that Christ said, 'Come unto me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will refresh you'; as plain as if he said, No one else can come to me, nor anyone else be refreshed by me.

Here therefore, in my humble Opinion, should all begin, who would propagate Christianity, or make true Converts to it, and here stop, as Christ did. It is only the weary and heavy laden, that are fitted to be Converts, or refreshed; and therefore we can no way help a Man to be a Christian, or fit him to be refreshed by Christ, but by bringing him into a full Sensibility of the Evil, and Burden, and Vanity of his natural State. And if he cannot be made sensible of this, we are to leave him to himself in his natural State, till some good Providence awakens him out of it; and not make Proposals to him of the Reasonableness of believing the Holy Trinity, the Incarnation of the Son of God, and the Necessity of his Sufferings and Death, &c., for this Method is full as absurd, as to enter into solemn Debate with a confessed Atheist, about the Reasonableness of worshipping God in Spirit and Truth ; for, as the Existence of a God is the only Ground of proving that he ought to be worshipped in Spirit and in Truth, so the Certainty and belief of our fallen State, is the only Ground for showing the Reasonableness of the Mysteries of Redemption. And he that disowns the fall of Man from a Divine Life, has all the same Reasons for rejecting the Mysteries of our Salvation, as the Atheist has to reject the Doctrines of a spiritual Worship of God. Therefore, to expose the Mysteries of our Salvation, to the Wrangle of a Debate with an Unbeliever of the Fall of Man, which Mysteries have no other Ground to stand upon, is not only helping him to an easy Triumph over you, but is the most likely Method to prevent his ever being a Christian. For seeing how easily he can ridicule Mysteries, which, to him in his present State, can have no Reasonableness in them, he is put into the most likely Way of living and dying in a hardened Contempt of them. Whereas if you stick close to the One true Ground of Christianity, and only proceed as that proceeds, and make the Unbeliever no Offers of any other Christianity, but that which is to begin with the acknowledged Sensibility of the Fall of human Nature from its first Divine Life ; you stop where you ought to stop, and rob him of all Power and Pretence of meddling with the other Mysteries of Salvation.

The One Business then upon his Hands, if he will hold out against you, must be to deny his Reason and Senses, and maintain, in spite of both, that Man is not fallen, but is by Nature holy, just, good, and happy both in Body and Soul ; and that Mankind, and the World they are in, have all that Goodness and Happiness, which they could be supposed to have from an infinitely good and happy God ; and who can will nothing in the Creature but Goodness and Happiness. Here you bring the Deist to his proper Work, and all the Contradiction to Sense and Reason will lie on his Side : You set Christianity upon its true Ground ; and whoever thus defends it, as it ought to be defended, not only does Justice to the Christian Cause, but acts the most kind and friendly Part towards those who oppose it, merely through a Misunderstanding of its true Ground and Nature ; which I will venture to say is the Case of all the sober well-meaning Deists. For Deism has no natural Foundation, or Ground of its own, to stand upon ; it does not grow from any Root or Strength within itself, but is what it is merely from the bad State of Christendom, and the miserable Use that heathenish Learning, and worldly Policy, have made of the Gospel. If it (Deism) seems to itself to be strong and well-grounded, it is merely because it can so easily object to Church-doctrines, and scholastic Opinions: If it seems to itself to be good, it is because it can so easily lay open the Evils which Christians and Churches bring upon one another: If it seems to itself to be highly rational, its Reason is, because it is free from that Number of Absurdities and Contradictions, which Christian Churches lay to the Charge of one another. Lastly, if it keeps off all fearful Forebodings of the Consequences of not receiving the Gospel, it is because it so plainly sees, that Christians say, Hail, Master, kiss the Gospel, and then break every Part of it.

This is the true Height, and Depth, and total Strength of Deism or Infidelity, it never had any other Support in myself but this; nor did I ever converse with a Deist, who carried the Matter higher or further than this, to support the Cause. Hence it is, that you made so speedy a Convert of me, by showing me such a Christianity as I never heard of before; and stripped of every Thing that gave me Power to oppose it. Had you proceeded in the Way practised by most Defenders of the Gospel, you had left me just as you found me, if not more confirmed in my old Way. But as you have justly removed all Controversy about Doctrines from the Merits of the Cause, and shown that it all lies in this one short, plain, and decisive Point, namely the Fall of Man; a Fall proved and demonstrated to all my Senses and Reason, by every Height and Depth of Nature, by every kind of Misery, Evil, and Sin in the World, by everything we know of God, Ourselves, and the World we live in; the Ground and Foundation of Christianity is undeniable, and no one can be too speedy a Convert to the Belief of it. And as you have also shown, that the whole Nature of the Gospel Redemption means nothing but the one, true, and only possible Way of delivering Man from his miserable State in this World; Christianity is shown to be the most intelligible and desirable Thing that the Heart of Man can think of. And thus, contrary to all Expectation, the Tables are quite turned; Deism can no longer be founded on Argument, and Christianity is as self-evident as our Senses; All Learning on both Sides, either for or against it, is insignificant; Christianity stands upon a Bottom quite superior to it, and may be the sure Possession of every plain Man, who has Sense enough to know whether he is happy or unhappy, good or evil. For this natural Knowledge, if adhered to, is every Man's sure Guide to that one Salvation preached by the Gospel. Which Gospel stands in no more need of Learning and critical Art now, than it did when Christ was preaching it upon Earth. How absurd would it have been for any Critics in Greek and Hebrew, to have followed Christ and his Apostles, as necessary Explainers of their hard Words, which called for nothing in the Hearers but penitent Hearts turned to God; and declared, that they only who were of God, could hear the Word of God! How strange, that Christ should choose only illiterate Men to preach the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, if only great Scholars could rightly understand what they said! Again, supposing learned Men to have only the true Fitness to understand the Word of Scripture, and that the plain Man is to receive it from them, How must he know which are the Scholars that have the right Knowledge? From whence is he to have this Information? For no one need be told, that ever since Learning has borne Rule in the Church, learned Doctors have contradicted and condemned one another in every essential Point of the Christian Doctrine. Thousands of learned Men tell the Illiterate, they are lost in this or that Church; and Thousands of learned Men tell them, they are lost, if they leave it.

If therefore Christianity is in the Hands of Scholars, how must the plain Man come at it? Must he, though unable to understand Scripture, for want of Learning, tell which learned Man is in the right, and which is not? If so, the unlearned Man has much the greatest Ability, since he is to do that for Scholars, which they cannot do for themselves.

But the Truth of the Matter is this; Christian Redemption is God's Mercy to all Mankind; but it could not be so, if every fallen Man, as such, had not some Fitness and Capacity to lay hold of it. It must have no Dependence upon Times and Places, or the Ages and several Conditions of the World, or any outward Circumstance of Life; as the First Man partook of it, so must the last; the learned Linguist, and the Blind, the Deaf and Dumb, have but one and the same common Way of finding Life in it. And he that writes large Commentaries upon the whole Bible, must be saved by something full as different from Book-knowledge, as they were, who lived when there was neither Book nor any Alphabet in the World.

For this Salvation, which is God's Mercy to the fallen Soul of Man, merely as fallen, must be something that meets every Man; and which every Man, as fallen, has something that directs him to turn to it. For as the Fall of Man is the Reason of this Mercy, so the Fall must be the Guide to it; the Want must show the Thing that is wanted. And therefore the Manifestation of this one Salvation, or Mercy to Man, must have a Nature suitable, not to this or that great Reader of History, or able Critic in Hebrew Roots and Greck Phrases, but suitable to the common State and Condition of every Son of Adam. It must be something as grounded in human Nature, as the Fall itself is, which wants no Art to make it known; but to which the common Nature of Man is the only Guide in one Man, as well as another. Now this something, which is thus obvious to every Man, and which opens the Way to Christian Redemption in every Soul, is a sense of the Vanity and Misery of this World; and a Prayer of Faith and Hope to God, to be raised to a better State.

Now in this Sensibility, which every Man's own Nature leads him into, lies the Whole of Man's Salvation; here the Mercy of God and the Misery of Man are met together; here the Fall and the Redemption kiss each other. This is the Christianity which is as old as the Fall; which alone saved the First Man, and can alone save the last. This is it, on which hang all the Law and the Prophets, and which fulfils them both; for they have only this End, to turn Man from the Lusts of this Life, to a Desire, and Faith, and Hope of a better. Thus does the whole of Christian Redemption, considered on the Part of Man, stand in this Degree of Nearness and Plainness to all Mankind; it is as simple and plain as the feeling our own Evil and Misery, and as natural as the Desire of being saved and delivered from it.

This is the Christianity which every Man must first be made sensible of, not from Hearsay, but as a Growth or Degree of Life within himself, before he can have any Fitness, or the least Pretence to judge or speak a Word about the further Mysteries of the Gospel. But here I stop.

Theophilus. Well, Humanus, I have now pushed the Matter with you, as far as I intended; and you have given me full Proof of the Truth and Solidity of your own Conversion, and your Ability to do good amongst your old Brethren. You must now enter the Lists with them; not to charge them with Ignorance, Ill-will, or Profaneness of Spirit, but only to try, in the Spirit of Love and Meekness, to undeceive them, in the Manner you have been undeceived; and to show them, that Christianity is by no means that Thing, which you and they have so long disliked.

Nothing can be more right than your Resolution not to enter into Debate about the Gospel Doctrines, or propose the Reasonableness of them to anyone, till he owns himself sensibly convinced of the forementioned Fall of Man; and stands in a full Desire to be saved, or delivered from it. And if that Time never comes, you must leave him, as in the same Incapacity to hear or judge of the Doctrines of the Holy Trinity, the Incarnation of the Son of God, the Operation of the Holy Spirit, as Epicurus would be. For every Man that cleaves to this World, that is in Love with it, and its earthly Enjoyments, is a disciple of Epicurus, and sticks in the same Mire of Atheism, as he did, whether he be a modern Deist, a Popish or Protestant Christian, an Arian, or an orthodox Teacher. For all these Distinctions are without any Difference, if this World has the Possession and Government of his Heart. For the Whole of the Matter lies solely in this, whether Heaven, or Earth, hath the Heart and Government of Man. Nothing divides the Worshippers of the true God from Idolaters but this: Where Earth possesses and rules the Heart, there all are of one and the same Religion, and worship one and the same God, however they may be distinguished by Sect or Party.

And wherever the Heart is weary of the Evil and Vanity of the earthly Life, and looking up to God for an heavenly Nature, there all are of the one true Religion, and Worshippers of the true God, however distant they may be from one another, as to Time or Place. But enough has been said of this Matter.

Let me now only, before we break up, observe to you the true Ground and Nature of Gospel Christianity: I call it so, by way of Distinction from that original universal Christianity, which began with Adam; was the Religion of the Patriarchs, of Moses and the Prophets, and of every penitent Man in every Part of the World, that had Faith and Hope towards God, to be delivered from the Evil of this World.

But when the Son of God had taken a Birth in and from the human Nature, had finished all the Wonders that belonged to our Redemption, and was sat down at the Right Hand of God in Heaven, then a heavenly Kingdom was set up on Earth, and the Holy Spirit came down from Heaven, or was given to the Flock of Christ in such a Degree of Birth and Life, as never was, nor could be given to the human Nature, till Christ, the Redeemer of the human Nature, was glorified. But when the Humanity of Christ, our Second Adam, was glorified, and become all heavenly, then the heavenly Life, the Comfort, and Power, and Presence of the holy Spirit, was the Gift which he gave to his Brethren, his Friends and Followers, which he had left upon Earth.

The Holy Ghost descended in the Shape of cloven Tongues of Fire on the Heads of those, that were to begin and open the new Powers of a Divine Life set up amongst Men. This was the Beginning and Manifestation of the whole Nature and Power of Gospel Christianity, a Thing as different from what was Christianity before, as the Possession of the Thing hoped for, is different from Hope, or Deliverance different from the Desire or Expectation of it. Hence the Apostles were new Men, entered into a new Kingdom come down from Heaven, enlightened with new Light, inflamed with new Love, and preached not any absent or distant Thing, but Jesus Christ, as the Wisdom and Power of God, felt and found within them, and as a Power of God ready to be communicated in the same Manner, as a new Birth from above, to all that would repent and believe in him. It was to this Change of Nature, of Life and Spirit, to this certain, immediate Deliverance from the Power of Sin, to be possessed and governed by Gifts and Graces of an heavenly Life, that Men were then called to, as true Christianity. And the Preachers of it bore Witness, not to a Thing that they had heard, but to a Power of Salvation, a Renewal of Nature, a Birth of Heaven, a Sanctification of the Spirit, which they themselves had received. Gospel Christianity then stood upon its own true Ground; it appeared to be what it was. And what was it? Why, it was an awakened Divine Life set up amongst Men; itself was its own Proof; it appealed to its proper Judge, to the Heart and Conscience of Man, which was alone capable of being touched with these Offers of a new Life.

Hence it was, that Sinners of all Sorts, that felt the Burden of their evil Natures, were in a State of Fitness to receive these glad Tidings. Whilst the rigid Pharisee, the orthodox Priest, and the rational Heathen, though at Enmity with one another, and each proud of his own Distinction, yet all agreed in rejecting and abhorring a Spiritual Saviour, that was to save them from their carnal selves, and the Vanity of their own rational Selfish Virtues. But when, after a while, Christianity had lost its first Glory, appeared no longer as a Divine Life awakened amongst Men, and itself was no longer its own Proof of the Power and Spirit of God manifested in it; then heathenish Learning, and temporal Power, was from Age to Age forced to be called the Glory and Prosperity of the Church of Christ; although in the Revelation of St. John, its Figure is that of a scarlet Whore riding upon the Beast.

Here therefore, my Friend, you are to place the true Distinction of Gospel Christianity from all that went before it, or that is come up after it. It is purely and solely a Divine Life awakened, and set up amongst Men, as the Effect and Fruit of Christ's Glorification in Heaven; and has no other Promise from him but that of his Holy Spirit, to be with it, as its Light, its Guide, its Strength, its Comfort, and Protection, to the End of the World. Therefore as Gospel Christians, we belong to the new Covenant of the Holy Spirit, which is the Kingdom of God come down from Heaven on the Day of Pentecost; and therefore it is, that there is no Possibility of seeing or entering into this new Kingdom, but by being born again of the Spirit. The Apostles and Disciples of Christ, though they had been baptized with Water, had followed Christ, heard his Doctrines, and done Wonders in his Name; yet as then, stood only near to the Kingdom of God, and preached it to be at hand. They had only seen and known Christ according to the Flesh; had followed him with great Zeal, but with little and very low Knowledge either of him or his Kingdom; and therefore it was, that they were commanded to stand still, and not act as his Ministers in his new glorified State, till they were endued with Power from on high: Which Power they then received, when the Holy Ghost with his cloven Tongues of Fire came down upon them, by which they became the illuminated Instruments, that were to diffuse the Light of an heavenly Kingdom over all the World. From that Day began Gospel Christianity, with its true Distinction from every thing that was before it; which was the Ministration of the Spirit; and the Ministers of it called the World to nothing but Gifts and Graces of the same Spirit, to look for nothing but Spiritual Blessings, to trust, and hope, and pray for nothing but the Power of that Spirit, which was to be the one Life and ruling Spirit of this newly-opened Kingdom of God. No one could join himself to them, or have any Part with them, but by dying to the Wisdom and Light of the Flesh, that he might live by the Spirit, through Faith in Jesus Christ, who had thus called him to his Kingdom and Glory. Now this Christianity is its own Proof; it can be proved from nothing but itself; it wants neither Miracles, nor outward Witness; but, like the Sun, is only its own Discoverer.

He that adheres only to the History of the Facts, Doctrines, and Institutions of the Gospel, without being born of its Spirit, is only such a Christian, and is no nearer to Christ, than the Jew, who carnally adhered to the Letter of the Law. They both stand in the same Distance from Gospel Christianity.

It is in vain therefore for the modern Christian, to appeal to Antiquity, to History, and ancient Churches, to prove that he belongs to Christ; for he can only belong to him, by having the Power of Christ, and the Spirit of God living and dwelling in his renewed inward Man.

But a learned Christianity, supported and governed by Reason, Dispute, and Criticism, that is forced to appeal to Canons, and Councils, and ancient Usages, to defend itself, has lost its Place, stands upon a fictitious Ground, and shows, that it cannot appeal to itself, to its own Works, which alone are the certain and only Proofs, either of a true, or a false Christianity.

For the Truth of Christianity is the Spirit of God living and working in it; and where this Spirit is not the Life of it, there the outward Form is but like the outward Carcase of a departed Soul.

184 Way to Divine Knowledge.

For the Spiritual Life is as much its own Proof, as the natural Life, and needs no outward, or foreign Thing to bear Witness to it. But if you please, Gentlemen, we will end for this time, and refer what remains to the Afternoon.

The End of the First DIALOGUE.

THE SECOND DIALOGUE.

ACADEMICUS. I Must take the Liberty, Gentlemen, of speaking first this Afternoon; for though I have been much pleased with what passed betwixt Humanus and Theophilus in the Morning, yet I must own to you all, that I was quite disappointed; for I came in full Expectation of hearing everything, that I wish, and want to know concerning Jacob Behmen, and his Works. For though I have been reading, for more than two Years, some one or other of his Books, with the utmost Attention, and I everywhere find the greatest Truths of the Gospel most fundamentally asserted, yet presently I am led into such Depths, as I know not where I am, and talked to in such new, intricate, and unintelligible Language, as seems quite impossible to be comprehended. Sometimes I almost suspect, that the Author understood not himself: For I think, if I knew any Truths, though ever so deep or uncommon; yet, if I understand them plainly myself, I could set them before others in the same Plainness, that they appeared to me.

All my Acquaintance have the same Complaint that I here make; but some hope, and others say, that if you live to publish any of his Books, you will remove most of his strange and unintelligible Words; and give us Notes and Explications of such as you do not alter. Surely a kind of Commentary upon him, would reconcile many to the reading of him, who in the State he is in, cannot have Patience to puzzle their Heads about him.

Rusticus. Oh this impatient Scholar! How many Troubles do I escape, through the want of his Learning? How much better does my old Neighbour John the Shepherd proceed? In Winter Evenings, when he comes out of the Field, his own Eyes being bad, the old Woman his Wife puts on her Spectacles, and reads about an Hour to him, sometimes out of the Scriptures, and sometimes out of Jacob Behmen; for he has had two or three of his Books some Years. I sat by one Evening, when my old Dame, reading Jacob, had much ado to get on: John, said I, do you understand all this? Ah, says he, God bless the Heart of the dear Man, I sometimes understand but little of him; and mayhap Betty does not always read right; but that little which I often do understand, does me so much Good, that I love him where I do not understand him.

John, said I, shall I bring a Man to you, that knows the Meaning of all Jacob's hard Words, and can make all his high Matters as plain to you, as the plainest Things in the World? No, no, replied John, I do not want such a Man, to make a talking about Jacob's Words; I had rather have but a little of his own, as it comes from him, than twenty times as much at second-hand. Madam, the Squire's Wife, of our Town, hearing how Betty and I loved the Scriptures, brought us, one Day, a huge expounding Book upon the New Testament; and told us, that we should understand the Scripture a deal better, by reading it in that Book, than the Testament alone.—The next Lord's Day, when two or three Neighbours, according to Custom, came to sit with us in the Evening; Betty, said I, bring out Madam's great Book, and read the fifth Chapter of St. Matthew. When she had done that, I bid her read the fifteenth Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. The next Morning, said I to Betty, carry this expounding Book again to my Mistress, and tell her, that the Words of Christ, and his Apostles, are best by themselves, and just as they left them.

And, as I was that Morning going to my Sheep, thought I to myself, This great expounding Book seems to have done just as much Good to this little Book of the Testament, by being added to it, and mixed with it, as a Gallon of Water would do to a little Cup of true Wine, by being added to it, or mixed with it. The Wine indeed would be all there; but its fine Taste, and cordial Spirit, which it had, when drank by itself, would be all lost and drowned in the Coldness and Deadness of the Water.

When my Betty used to read this, or some such Words of Christ, 'Blessed are the Poor in Spirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven;' she used to stop a little, that my Heart might have time to be affected with them, to love the blessed Thing there spoken of, and lift up itself to God in Desire of it. But this great Book takes this good Work from my Heart; and only calls upon my Mind, to behold the many Parts which the Text may be split into, and the many Meanings, some better and some worse, some higher and some lower, that every Part has, and may be taken in by some Doctor of some Church or other. Therefore, Rusticus, I sent the great Book to Madam again; and am, for the same Reason, utterly against hearing your Expounder of Jacob Behmen. If Jacob has more Truths than other Folks, he is the best able to tell me what they are; and if he has some Matters too high for me, I do not desire any lesser Man to make them lower.

When he, like an Elijah, in his Fiery Chariot, is caught up into such Heights, and sees and relates such Things, as I cannot yet comprehend ; I love and reverence him for having been where I never was ; and seeing such Things as he cannot make me see : Just as I love and reverence St. Paul for having been caught up into the third Heaven, and hearing and seeing Things not possible to be uttered in human Words.

As I have but one End in hearing the Scriptures read to me, to fill me with the Love of God, and every Kind of Goodness ; so every Part of Scripture, whether plain or mysterious, does me the same Good, is alike good to me, and kindles the same heavenly Flame in my Soul. Thus these plain Words, ‘Learn of me, for ‘I am meek and lowly of Heart ; and ye shall find Rest unto your ‘Souls ;’ give me, without any Expounder of their Meaning, such an Aversion and Dislike of all Vanity and Pride, fill me with such sweet Contentment in every Lowliness of Life, that I long to be the Servant of every human Creature. On the other hand, these lofty Words of Scripture,—‘Behold, a Throne was set in Heaven ; ‘and he that sat thereon, was, to look upon, like a Jasper-stone ; ‘and there was a Rainbow round about the Throne ; and four- ‘and-twenty Seats ; and upon the Seats, four-and-twenty Elders ‘in white Raiment, and Crowns of Gold upon their Heads : And ‘out of the Throne proceeded Lightnings, and Thunders, and ‘Voices : And before the Throne were seven Lamps of Fire, which ‘are the seven Spirits of God : And before the Throne there was ‘a Sea of Glass like unto Crystal : And in the midst of the Throne, ‘and round about it, were four Beasts full of Eyes before and ‘behind : And the first Beast was like a Lion, the second like a ‘Calf, the third had a Face as a Man, and the fourth was like ‘a flying Eagle : And the four Beasts had each of them six Wings, ‘and were full of Eyes ; and they rest not Day and Night, saying, ‘Holy, holy, holy Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is ‘to come. And when these Beasts give Glory, and Honour, and ‘Thanks, to him that sat on the Throne, the four-and-twenty ‘Elders fall down before him that sat on the Throne, and cast their ‘Crowns before the Throne, saying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to ‘receive Glory and Honour, for thou hast created all Things,’ &c.*

Now these lofty and mysterious Words, instead of puzzling my Head, lay hold of my Heart, which, all inflamed with them, rises up with the Eyes and Wings of the Beasts in their Song of Praise and Honour ; and bows down with the Elders that worship the high and mighty Lord of Heaven and Earth. And thus I want no Hebrew or Greek Scholar to tell me this or that, what are the seven Spirits of God, why four Kinds of Beasts, why neither more nor less than six Wings, who were the Elders, and why twenty-four; but the whole Matter, as if a Glance of the Majesty of Heaven had just passed by me, strikes my Heart with such good Transports of Wonder and Joy, as make me all Longing and Desire to be one of those, who are always singing the Praises and Wonders of the Majesty of God. And thus, Rusticus, all that the Scriptures give me to drink, whether high or low, is equally a Cup of Blessing to me, and equally helps forward the Growth of Heaven in my Soul.

Bring not therefore your cunning Man, that has Skill in Words, to me; for Words are but Words; and though they be spoken even by the Messengers of God, as Angels, or Prophets, or Apostles; when they do their best, they can only do, as John the Baptist did bear Witness to the Light: But the Light itself, which can only give Light to the Soul, is God himself. And therefore not he that can best speak with the Tongues of Men and Angels, but he that most loves God, that is, that most loves the Goodness of the Divine Nature, he has most of God, and the Light of God within him.

Thus ended honest old John the Shepherd. And now, Academicus, if your learned Curiosity could be as much affected with what he has said, as my ignorant Simplicity is, you would drop all that you had said, as the Effect of such Impatience, as is much fitter to bring Darkness than Light into your Soul. You own, that, in the Works of Behmen, the greatest Points of Christianity are most fundamentally opened. And how can you be more self-condemned, than by desiring more?

But the Truth is, you have only heard these fundamental Matters; you have only received them as good Notions; are content with the Hearsay of them; and are therefore impatient to have more of this hearsay Knowledge, that you may become more learned in high Matters; and more able to talk about the Ground and Depth of Christian Doctrines. You know, as well as I can tell you, that this is your Joy in Jacob Behmen; and thence it is, that you have no Patience, when you cannot come at his Meaning, so as to add it to your Number of Notions. And thus you forget how often he tells you, and how fundamentally he proves to you, that this notional Knowledge, the Treasure of human Reason, is the very Builder of Babel. Whilst you are under the Guidance of our own Babylonian Reason, you can have no Good either from the Scriptures, or the Writings of Jacob Behmen; but will be hunting after Notes and Commentaries to help you to Notions, which only delude your Mind with the empty Shadows of Knowledge. Would you know the Truths of Jacob Behmen, you must see that you stand where he stood; you must begin where he began, and seek only, as he tells you he did, the 'Heart of God, that he might be saved from the Wrath 'of Sin and Satan'; and then it was, that the Light of God broke in upon him. But you, full of Power of your own Reason, want to stand upon the Top of his Ladder, without the Trouble of beginning at the Bottom, and going up Step by Step. But I believe you had rather have Theophilus speak than me; and therefore I shall now leave you to him.

Theophilus. Truly, Academicus, I am much of the same Mind with honest Rusticus, though perhaps I might not have spoken it so bluntly as he has done. You seem to be in the same Error, that most of my learned Friends are in, with regard to Jacob Behmen, who, though they greatly admire him, yet, of all People, receive the least true Benefit from him. They have been trained up in Dispute and Controversy, accustomed to determine everything by the Light of their own Reason, and know no other Guide to Truth. And therefore, till, sooner or later, they come to know the Falseness of this Guide, they can have no Entrance into the Region of Divine Light; but must be forced to take their Part, not of Truth, but of some such System of Opinions, as their Birth and Education has placed them in. Thus, a learned Papist has one Creed, and the learned Protestant has another; not because Truth and Light have helped him to it; but because Birth and Education have given to the one Popish, to the other Protestant Eyes. For Reason, which is the Eye or Light of both, finds as much to its Purpose, and as many good Tools to work with, in Popish, as in Protestant Opinions. Learning and Criticism are an open Field to both; and he only has the greatest Harvest, who is best skilled in Reaping.

Academicus. I perceive then, that I must renounce all my Learning and Reason, if I am to understand Jacob Behmen. I cannot say, that I am resolved to purchase it at so great a Price. I hope the Knowledge to be had from the Scriptures, will be sufficient for me, without his deep Matters. I did not expect to find you so great an Enemy to Learning.

Theophilus. Dear Academicus, be not so uneasy; I am no more an Enemy to Learning, than I am to that Art which builds Mills to grind our Corn, and Houses for ourselves to dwell in. I esteem the liberal Arts and Sciences as the noblest of human Things; I desire no Man to dislike or renounce his Skill in ancient or modern Languages; his Knowledge of Medals, Pictures, Paintings, History, Geography, or Chronology; I have no more Dislike of these Things in themselves, than of the Art of Throwing Silk, or making Lace. But then, all these Things are to stand in their proper Places, and everyone kept within its own Sphere.

Now all this Circle of Science and Arts, whether liberal or mechanic, belongs solely to the natural Man; they are the Work of his natural Powers and Faculties; and the most wicked, sensual, unjust Person, who regards neither God, nor Man, may yet be one of the ablest Proficients in any or all of them. But now Christian Redemption is quite of another Nature; it has no Affinity to any of these Arts or Sciences? it belongs not to the outward natural Man, but is purely for the Sake of an inward, heavenly Nature, that was lost, or put to Death, in Paradise, and buried under the Flesh and Blood of the earthly, natural Man. It breathes a Spark of Life into this inward, hidden, or lost Man; by which it feels and finds itself, and rises up in new awakened Desires after its lost Father, and native Country.

This is Christian Redemption; on the one side, it is the Heavenly Divine Life offering itself again to the inward Man, that had lost it. On the other side, it is the Hope, the Faith, and Desire of this inward Man, hungering, and thirsting, stretching after, and calling upon this Divine and Heavenly Life.

Now, whether this awakened, new Man, breathes forth his Faith and Hope towards this Divine Life, in Hebrew, Greek, or English Sounds, or in no one of them, can be of no Significancy: A Man that can do it only in one, or in all these Languages, is neither further from, nor nearer to, this redeeming Life of God. Or can you think, that the heavenly Life must more willingly enter into, and open itself in, a Man that has many Languages, than in him, who knows only one? Or, that a Man, who can make High Dutch, Welsh, or Greek Grammars, must have a stronger Faith, a more lively Hope, and a more continual Thirst after God, than he who can but poorly spell in his Mother Tongue? But now, if this is too absurd to be supposed; then, my Friend, without the least Injury done, or the least Enmity shown to Learning, Science, Reason, and Criticism, you must place them just where I have done, amongst the Things and Ornaments of this earthly Life, and such Things as, in their own Nature, are as easy to be had, and as highly enjoyed, by Men that despise all Goodness, as by those who fear God, and eschew Evil.

And therefore, Sir, no Truths concerning the Divine and Heavenly Life are to be brought for Trial before this learned Bar, where both Jury and Judges are born and bred, live and move and have their Being in another World, which have no more Power of feeling the Divine Life, than an Eagle's Eyes can look into the Kingdom of God. If you, my Friend, having read many old Greek and Latin Books, should intend to publish Homer, or Cæsar's Commentaries, with critical Notes, I should have nothing to object to your Ability; you might be as well qualified by such Means for such a Work, as one Man is to make Baskets, or another Traps to catch Flies. But if, because of this Skill in old Greek and Latin, you should seem to yourself, or others, to be well qualified to write Notes upon the Spirit and Meaning of the Words of Christ, I should tell you, that your Undertaking was quite unnatural, and as impossible to be free from Error, as when a blind Man undertakes to set forth the Beauty of different Colours.

For the Doctrines of Redemption belong no more to the natural Man, than the Beauty of Colours to him, that never saw the Light. And from this unnatural Procedure it is, that the Scriptures are as useful to the Socinian or Arian, the Papist or the Protestant; and they can as easily, by the Light of Reason, charge one another with Absurdities, and confute each other's Opinion, as two blind Men can quarrel, and reject each other's Notions of Red and Green.

Jesus Christ is the Light of that heavenly Man that died in Paradise; and therefore nothing in Man, but that awakened Seed of Life, that died in Paradise, can have the least Sensibility or Capacity for receiving the redeeming Power of Jesus Christ. But Light and Life have no Dependence upon Words or Phrases; they both can only proceed from a Birth, whether it be the Light and Life of God, or the Light and Life of this World. How absurd would it be, to suppose, that a Man, naturally blind, must be taught Grammar or Logic, to fit him for the Reception of the Light of the Sun, and the Knowledge of Colours? Yet not less absurd, than to think, that Skill in Hebrew and Greek Words can open the Light of God and Heaven in the Soul. If you now, Academicus, can set this Matter in a juster Light, I am ready to hear you.

Academicus. Standing upon the Ground, that you, Theophilus, stand upon, all that you have said of Reason, Science, historical Knowledge, or critical Skill in Words, is unanswerable. For what can all these Things avail, if Redemption is purely a Birth of the Divine Nature, Light, and Spirit of God, offered to fallen Man; which Birth can only be received by the Faith, Hope, and Desire of that inward Man, which is Divine in us? For nothing else can have any Hunger or Thirst after the Divine Nature, but that which is itself born of it.

Now this true Ground of the Christian Redemption, gives the greatest Glory to God, and Comfort to Man. It explains the Fact, why plain and simple Souls, having their inward Man kindled into Love, Hope, and Faith in God, are capable of the highest Divine Illumination; whilst learned Students, full of Art and Science, can live and die without the least true Knowledge of God and Christ, and Slaves to all the Lusts of the Flesh.

For thus, this Redemption belongs only to one Sort of People, and yet is common to all. It is equally near, and equally open, to every Son of Man. There is no Difference between Learned and Unlearned, between Jew or Greek, Male or Female, Scythian or Barbarian, Bond or Free; but the same Lord is God over all, and equally nigh to all that call upon him. It is told us, as the Glory of the Divine Goodness, that it giveth Fodder to the Cattle; and feedeth the young Ravens that cry unto it. What Cattle? Surely not only to the Cattle of Jacob; or only to the young Ravens that cry in the Land of Judah. Yet this would be much more consistent with the Goodness of the One universal God, than to hold, that only the Sons of Jacob, or the Children of the Circumcision, were in the Covenant of God's Redemption.

But now, though this one Ground of Christian Redemption stands in the highest Degree of Plainness from Scripture, and is absolutely certain from the very Nature of the Thing; yet, till I met with honest Rusticus, I never conversed with any Man, or read any Book, that gave me the least Hint of it. When I had taken my Degrees, I consulted several great Divines, to put me in a Method of studying Divinity. Had I said to them, 'Sirs, 'What must I do to be saved?' they would have prescribed Hellebore to me, or directed me to the Physician as a vapoured Enthusiast. And yet I am now fully satisfied, that this one Question ought to be the sole Inquiry of him, who desires to be a true Divine. And was our Saviour himself on Earth, who surely could do more for me than all the Libraries in the World, yet I need have asked no more Divinity-Knowledge of him, than is contained in this one Question.

It would take up near half a Day, to tell you the Work which my learned Friends have cut out for me. One told me, that Hebrew Words are all; that they must be read without Points; and then the old Testament is an opened Book. He recommended to me a Cart-load of Lexicons, Critics, and Commentators, upon the Hebrew Bible. Another tells me, the Greek Bible is the best; that it corrects the Hebrew in many Places; and refers me to a large Number of Books learnedly writ in the Defence of it. Another tells me, that Church-History is the main Matter; that I must begin with the first Fathers, and follow them through every Age of the Church, not forgetting to take the Lives of the Roman Emperors along with me, as striking great Light into the State of the Church in their Times. Then I must have recourse to all the Councils held, and the Canons made, in every age; which would enable me to see with my own Eyes the great Corruptions of the Council of Trent. Another, who is not very fond of ancient Matters, but wholly bent upon rational Christianity, tells me, I need go no higher than the Reformation; that Calvin and Cranmer were very great Men; that Chillingworth and Locke ought always to lie upon my Table; that I must get an entire Set of those learned Volumes wrote against Popery in King James's Reign; and also be well versed in all the Discourses which Mr. Boyle's and Lady Moyer's Lectures have produced: And then, says he, you will be a Match for our greatest Enemies, which are the Popish Priests, and modern Deists. My Tutor is very Liturgical; he desires me, of all Things, to get all the Collections that I can of the ancient Liturgies, and all the Authors that treat of such Matters; who, he says, are very learned, and very numerous. He has been many years making Observations upon them, and is now clear, as to the Time, when certain little Particles got Entrance into the Liturgies, and others were by Degrees dropped. He has a Friend abroad, in Search of ancient Manuscript Liturgies; for, by the by, said he, at parting, I have some Suspicion that our Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is essentially defective, for want of having a little Water in the Wine, &c. Another learned Friend tells me, the Clementine Constitutions is the Book of Books; and that all that lies loose and scattered in the New Testament, stands there in its true Order and Form; and though he will not say, that Dr. Clarke and Mr. Whiston are in the right; yet it might be useful to me to read all the Arian and Socinian Writers, provided I stood upon my Guard, and did it with Caution. The last Person I consulted, advised me to get all the Histories of the Rise and Progress of Heresies, and of the Lives and Characters of Heretics. These Histories, he said, contract the Matter; bring Truth and Error close in View; and I should find all that collected in a few Pages, which would have cost me some Years to have got together. He also desired me to be well versed in all the casuistical Writers, and chief Schoolmen; for they debate Matters to the Bottom; dissect every Virtue, and every Vice, into its many Degrees and Parts; and show, how near they can come to one another without touching. And this Knowledge, he said, might be useful to me, when I came to be a Parish-Priest.

Following the Advice of all these Counsellors, as well as I could, I lighted my Candle early in the Morning, and put it out late at Night. In this Labour I had been sweating for some Years, till Rusticus, at my first Acquaintance with him, seeing my Way of Life, said to me, Had you lived about Seventeen hundred Years ago, you had stood just in the same Place as I stand now. I cannot read; and therefore, says he, all these Hundreds of Thousands of disputed Books, and Doctrine-Books, which these Seventeen hundred Years have produced, stand not in my Way; they are the same thing to me, as if they had never been. And, had you lived at the Time mentioned, you had just escaped them all, as I do now; because, though you are a very good Reader, there were then none of them to be read.

Could you, therefore, be content to be one of the primitive Christians, who were as good as any that have been since, you may spare all this Labour. Take only the Gospel into your Hands; deny yourself; renounce the Lusts of the Flesh; set your Affections on Things above; call upon God for his Holy Spirit; walk by Faith, and not by Sight; adore the holy Deity of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, in whose Image and Likeness you were at first created, and in whose Name and Power you have been baptized, to be again the living Likeness, and holy Habitation, of his Life, and Light, and Holy Spirit.

Look up to Christ, as your Redeemer, your Regenerator, your second Adam; look at him, as truly he is, the Wisdom and Power of God, sitting at his Right Hand in Heaven, giving forth Gifts unto Men; governing, sanctifying, teaching, and enlightening with his Holy Spirit, all those that are spiritually-minded; who live in Faith, and Hope, and Prayer, to be redeemed from the Nature and Power of this evil World. Follow but this simple, plain Spirit of the Gospel, loving God with all your Heart, and your Neighbour as yourself, and then you are Christ's Disciple, and have his Authority to 'let the Dead bury their Dead.'

God is a Spirit, in whom you live and move and have your Being; and he stays not till you are a great Scholar, but till you turn from Evil, and love Goodness, to manifest his holy Presence, Power, and Life, within you. It is the Love of Goodness, that must do all for you; this is the Art of Arts; and when this is the ruling Spirit of your Heart, then Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, will come unto you, and make their Abode with you, and lead you into all Truth, though you knew no more of Books than I do.

So ended Rusticus. It is not easy for me, Theophilus, to tell you, how much Good I received from this simple Instruction of honest Master Rusticus; for so I may well call him, since he, in so few Words, taught me a better Lesson of Wisdom, than ever I had heard before.

What a Project was it, to be grasping after the Knowledge of all the Opinions, Doctrines, Disputes, Heresies, Schisms, Councils, Canons, Alterations, Additions, Inventions, Corruptions, Reformation, Sects, and Churches, which 1,700 Years had brought forth through all the Extent of the Christian World! What a Project is this, in order to be a Divine, that is, in order to bear true

Witness to the Power of Christ, as a Deliverer from the Evil of Flesh and Blood, and Hell, and Death, and a Raiser of a New Birth and Life from above! For as this is the Divine Work of Christ, so he only is a true and able Divine, that can bear a faithful Testimony to this Divine Work of Christ.

How easy was it for me to have seen with Rusticus, that all this Labyrinth of learned Inquiry into such a dark, thorny Wilderness of Notions, Facts, and Opinions, could signify no more to me now, to my own Salvation, to my Interest in Christ, and obtaining the Holy Spirit of God, than if I had lived before it had any Beginning! But the blind Appetite of Learning gave me no Leisure to apprehend so plain a Truth. Books of Divinity indeed I have not done with; but I will esteem none to be such, but those that make known to my Heart the inward Power and Redemption of Jesus Christ. Nor will I seek for anything even from such Books, but that which I ask of God in Prayer; viz., how better to know, more to abhor and resist the Evil that is in my own Nature; and how to attain a supernatural Birth of the Divine Life brought forth in me: All besides this is Pushpin. The shipwrecked Man wants only to get to Shore. Did we see the Truth of our State as he does, we should have but one Want, and that would be, to get Possession of our first created State. There is no Misery but in the Evil that is in our own fallen State; this is our Shipwreck, and great Distress; nor is there any Happiness, but in having the first Life of God, and all Goodness, opened again in the Soul. He that is not intent upon this one Thing needful, is not a wise Christian, much less a Divine, or one qualified to make known to others the Mystery of the Power of Christ in the Work of Redemption.

But I now go back to that which I first spoke of; and though I give up all that I said of putting out Jacob Behmen in new Language, with Comments, &c., yet I must still desire, that, some way or other, he may be made more plain and intelligible; call it by what Name you please.

Theophilus. Jacob Behmen may be considered, (1.) As a Teacher of the true Ground of the Christian Religion. (2.) As a Discoverer of the false Antichristian Church, from its first Rise in Cain, through every Age of the World, to its present State in all, and every Sect of the present divided Christendom. (3.) As a Guide to the Truth of all the Mysteries of the Kingdom of God. In these Three respects, which contain all that anyone can possibly want to know or learn from any Teacher; he is the strongest, the plainest, the most open, intelligible, awakening, convincing Writer, that ever was. As to all these Three Matters, he speaks to everyone, as himself saith, in the Sound of a Trumpet. And here to pretend to be an Explainer of him, or make him fitter for our Apprehension, in these great Matters, is as vain, as if a Man should pipe through a Straw, to make the Sound of a Trumpet better heard by us.

Further, he may be considered, (4.) As a Relater of Depths opened in himself, of Wonders which his Spirit had seen and felt in his Ternario sancto. Now in this respect he is no Teacher, nor his Reader a Learner; But all that he saith is only for the same End, as St. Paul spoke of his having been in the Third Heaven, and hearing Things not possible to be spoken in human Words. And yet in these Matters it is, that most of his Readers, especially if they are Scholars, are chiefly employed; everyone in his way trying to become Masters of them. Thus, when he first appeared in English, many Persons of this Nation, of the greatest Wit and Abilities, became his Readers; who, instead of entering into his one only Design, which was their own Regeneration from an earthly to an heavenly Life, turned Chemists, and set up Furnaces to regenerate Metals, in Search of the Philosopher's Stone. And yet, of all Men in the World, no one has so deeply, and from so true a Ground, laid open the exceeding Vanity of such Labour, and utter Impossibility of Success in it from any Art or Skill in the Use of Fire. And this must with Truth be affirmed of him, that there is not any possible Error, that you can fall into in the Use of his Books, but what he gives you Notice of beforehand, and warns you against it in the most solemn Manner; and tells you, that the Blame must be yours, if you fall into it. Neither is there any Question that you can put, nor Advice or Direction that you can ask, but what he has over and over spoken to; telling you, in the plainest Manner, what the Mystery is which his Books contain; how, and by whom, and for what End, they are to be read.

There are Two Sorts of People to whom he forbids the Use of his Books, as incapable of any Benefit from them, and who will rather receive Hurt, than any Good from them. The First Sort he shows in these Words: 'Loving Reader, if thou lovest 'the Vanity of the Flesh still, and art not in earnest Purpose on 'the Way to the New Birth, intending to be a New Man, then 'leave the above-written Words in these Prayers unnamed, or 'else they will turn to a Judgment of God in thee.'* Again, 'Reader, I admonish you sincerely, if you be not in the Way of 'the Prodigal, or lost Son, returning to his Father again, that 'you leave my Book, and read it not; it will do you Harm.—

* Repentance, page 42.

‘But if you will not take Warning, I will be guiltless; blame ‘Nobody but yourself.’*

In this Advice, so different from that of other Writers, he shows the Truth and Reality of his own regenerated State; and that the very same Spirit speaks in him, as formerly said, ‘Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand.’—‘Unless a man deny himself, and forsake all that he hath, he cannot be my ‘Disciple.’—‘No Man can come unto me, except the Father draweth him.’—‘Except a Man be born again from above, he cannot see the Kingdom of God.’—‘He that is of God, heareth ‘God’s Word.’—‘Come unto me, all ye that labour, are weary ‘and heavy-laden.’ For all these Texts of Scripture say that very self-same thing that Jacob Behmen doth, when he absolutely requires his Reader to be in the Way of the returning Prodigal. It is not Rules of Morality observed, or an outward blameless Form of Life, that will do: For Pride, Vanity, Envy, Self-love, and Love of the World, can be, and often are, the Heart of such a Morality of Life. But the State of the lost Son is quite another thing; and must be the State of every Man: As soon as he comes to himself and has seeing Eyes, he will then, like him, see himself far from home; that he has lost his first Paradise, his heavenly Father, and the Dignity of his first Birth; that he is a poor, beggarly Slave in a foreign Land, hungry, ragged, and starving, amongst the lowest Kind of Beasts, not so well fed and clothed as they are: When thus finding himself, he saith, ‘I will arise, and go to my Father,’ &c., then has he his first Fitness for the Mysteries opened in Jacob Behmen’s Writings; for they are addressed to Man only in this supposed State; they have no Fitness to him but in this State; and therefore no one, whether Jew, Christian, or Deist, who does not find and feel himself to be the very lost Son described in the Parable, has any Capacity to receive Benefit from them; but they will be a continual Stumbling-block to him. And it is just thus with the Gospel itself; wherever it is received and professed, without something of this Preparation of Heart, without this Sensibility of the lost Son, there it can only be a Stone of stumbling, and help the earthly Man to form a Religion of Notions and Opinions, from the unfelt Meaning of the Letter of the Gospel.

Secondly, The other Sort of People, whom he excludes from his Books, and for whom he has writ nothing, are the Men of Reason, who give themselves up to the Light of Reason, as the true Touchstone of Divine Truths. To these he declares over and over, that he has not his Light from Reason ; and that he writes nothing to Reason. ‘The rational Man,’ saith he, ‘understands nothing in reference to God ; for it is without, and not in God.’ Again, ‘The true Understanding must flow from the inward Ground, out of the living Word of God. In which inward Ground, all my Knowledge concerning the Divine and natural Ground, hath taken its Rise, Beginning, and Understanding. I am not born of the School of this World, and am a plain simple Man ; but by God’s Spirit and Will am brought, without my own Purpose and Desire, into Divine Knowledge in high natural Searchings.’* Again, ‘He that will learn to understand the true Way, let him depart from and forsake his own Reason.’† ‘If my Writings,’ says he, ‘come into your Hands, I would that you should look upon them as of a Child’s, in whom the Highest has driven his Work ; for there is that couched therein, which no Reason may understand or comprehend.’‡ Again, ‘Reason must be blinded, kept under, and not allowed to stir.’§ Again, ‘Reason must yield up its own Hearing and Life, and give itself up to God, that God may live in the Understanding of Man, else there is no Finding in the Divine Wisdom. All that is taught and spoken concerning God, without the Spirit of God, is but Babel.’|| Again, ‘We must wholly reject our own Reason ; it is not available to help us to the Light, but is a mere leading astray, and keeping us back. This we intimate to the Reader, that he may know what he reads. Let none account it for a Work of outward Reason.’ Again, ‘Speaking of the Mystery,’¶ he saith, ‘Pray to God, the most High, that he would be pleased to open the Door of Knowledge, without which no Man will understand my Writings ; for they surpass the astral Reason ; they apprehend and comprehend the Divine Birth ; and therefore only the like Spirit can understand them aright. No Reasoning or Speculating reacheth them, unless the Mind be illuminated from God, to the finding of which the Way is faithfully shown to the seeking Reader.’

And now, Academicus, you may see how needless it is to ask me, or anyone else, to help you to understand his Works : He himself has given you all the Assistance that can be given : He has laid open before you, in the utmost Plainness, both the Nature of the Mystery, and the one only possible Way that you can partake of it.

Academicus. You speak often of the Mystery: Pray, What am I to understand by it?

Theophilus. You are to understand by it, the deep and true Ground of all Things. A Mystery, in which the Birth and Beginning of eternal Nature, or the first Workings of the inconceivable God, opening and manifesting his hidden Triune Deity in an outward State of Glory, in the Splendour of united Fire, Light, and Spirit, all kindled and distinguished, all united and beatified by the hidden Three. In this eternal Nature, all inward Powers, all the hidden Riches of the incomprehensible Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, are from Eternity to Eternity brought forth into outward Majesty, and visible Glory. In which Triune Opening of heavenly Glory, Power, and Majesty, the Triune God beholdeth himself as in his own Manifestation, is clothed as with his own Garment, dwelleth as in his own Habitation, and worketh all his Wonders of Wisdom and Omnipotence, in and by, and according to, the possible Powers of this eternal Nature. For this eternal Nature is the first Possibility of all After-beings and Things; for before, or without this eternal Nature, all is an eternal, silent, still, unmovable, unperceivable Nothingness; and this eternal Nature is the first Manifestation, the first Opening of the Divine Omnipotence: and in it are included, in its own infinite Bounds all the Height and Depth, and Extent, of the Divine Wisdom and Powers. All that God is, and can do, or bring forth from himself, is done in and by the Working of his Triune Spirit in this eternal Nature.

This is the great Scene of his eternal Wisdom and Omnipotence, in which new Wonders are eternally rising up, and declaring the fathomless Depths of the Riches of the invisible Triune Deity. And to say, that God can do no more, than what he can do through and by the possible Powers of this eternal Nature, is only saying, that he can do no more than what he can do by himself, because this eternal Nature is the eternal Manifestation of the total God, or an Out-birth of that which the Deity is, in its invisible Power and Deity.

Out of this transcendent eternal Nature, which is as universal and immense as the Deity itself, do all the highest Beings, Cherubims and Seraphims, all the Hosts of Angels, and all intelligent Spirits, receive their Birth, Existence, Substance, and Form. They are all so many different, finite, bounded Forms of the heavenly Fire and Light of eternal Nature, into which creaturely Beings, the invisible Triune God breathes his invisible Spirit, by which they become both the true Children and Likeness of the invisible Deity, and also the true Offspring of his eternal Nature; and are fitted to rejoice with God, to live in the Life of God, and live and work, and have their Being, in that eternal Nature, or Kingdom of Heaven, in which the Deity itself liveth and worketh. And they are one, and united in one, God in them, and they in God, according to the Prayer of Christ for his Disciples ; ‘ That they, and he, and his Holy Father, might be united in one.’*

This is in Part, what you are first to understand concerning the Mystery.

But, Secondly, It is a Mystery, in which the Creation and Fall of Angels, with all its Consequences in them, and their Kingdom ; in which the System of this visible Universe, why, and from what, and how it came to be as it is ; the Birth of the Sun and the Planets, why and how they come to have such Difference in Nature, Place, and Office, and also of all the Stars ; the Nature of every creaturely Life, and Ground of its vast Variety ; the Cause of every inanimate dead Thing ; a Mystery in which the Creation, Dignity, and Perfection, of the first angelic Man in Paradise ; the whole Kingdom of Nature, and Kingdom of Grace ; their Connection, Difference, and mutually affecting and working upon one another under the Providence of the invisible Spirit of God, from the Beginning to the End of Time ; are all unfolded from their first Root and Cause.

Thirdly, It is a Mystery, in which the Ground of Christian Redemption, its whole Nature, absolute Necessity, and the working of all its Parts both in the Redeemer and in the Redeemed, are set forth in the utmost Degree of Clearness ; where the whole Process of Christ, as incarnate, living, suffering, dying, rising from the Dead, ascending into Heaven, and sitting at the Right Hand of God, and governing his Church on Earth by his Holy Spirit ; and all the practical Duties of the Gospel, whether of Faith and Hope, or of Self-denial ; dying to this World, and strict Conformity to the Life and Spirit of Christ ; are all demonstrated, from the deepest Ground of the Nature of Things, to be absolutely necessary to the Recovery and Redemption of the fallen human Nature.

This, Sir, is, in some Degree, the Mystery which it has pleased the Spirit of God to open in this plain and unlearned Man.

Academicus. Well, Theophilus, I entirely consent to this Account you have given of it, and think it is sufficiently supported by what is to be found in his Books ; they seem to mean all these great Matters which you mentioned. But then, Sir, give me Leave to tell you, that I think it is impossible for you to defend what you have said above concerning Reason, or to show the

* John xvii.

Unreasonableness of my demanding rational Illustrations and Comments. For if this is the Truth, that his Works contain the Ground and Philosophy of all Nature, and all Creatures; surely they must not only allow the Use of our Reason, but call for the highest and most acute Exercise of it. For what can enter into the Reasons and Philosophy of Things, but Reason? Or what do all these great Matters appeal to, but to our Reason? I see no Possibility of denying this; and if this be granted, all that has been said about silencing our Reason, must be given up.

Theophilus. The Conclusion, my Friend, that you here think to be so just and strong, as not possible to be denied, is so far from being so, that it is a glaring Absurdity; and the quite contrary to that one only true Conclusion, which you should have made, and which so easily and naturally flowed from what was said. For if the Mystery is the deep Ground of all Things, of all Nature, and all Creatures, &c., then the one Conclusion that infallibly flows from it, is this, that no Acuteness or Ability of natural Reason can so much as look into it. For natural Reason is no older than Flesh and Blood; it has no higher a Nature or Birth than natural Doubting; it had no Existence when Nature begun its first Workings, and therefore can bear no Witness to them. It was not present, had no Eyes, when Things first came forth; it never stood in the Centre, from whence the Birth of everything must arise; it never saw the Forming of the first Seeds of every Life: And yet the Mystery, you see, contains all this: And therefore the one plain and necessary Conclusion is this; That natural Reason is, and must be, as incapable of entering into this Mystery, as Flesh and Blood is incapable of entering into the Kingdom of Heaven.

Behold, now, what a flagrant Proof you have given of the Vanity, Weakness, and Blindness of natural Reason in Divine Matters. Your Reason saw, with the utmost Certainty, that the Mystery must be an Appeal to Reason, merely because it contained such an Height and Depth of a Divine Philosophy; and yet the Height and Depth of its Matters is the one full Proof, that Reason can have nothing to do with it. This may show you, by what means Babel has built itself all over the Christian World. For, by the Light of this Babylonian Reason, the Defenders and Opposers of Doctrines, confute one another with such a Certainty and Strength of Reason, as you saw, that Reason must be the only Judge of the Mystery, from which it is just as much excluded by its own Nature, as the Mole under ground is, by its Nature, excluded from the Flight and Sight of the towering Eagle.

Academicus. Pray then tell me, How a Man is to attain the Knowledge of the Mystery, or have any Share in the Light of it.

Theophilus. There is but one possible Way, and that is this : It must be born in you. All true Knowledge, either of God or Nature, must be born in you. You cannot possibly know anything of God, but so far as God is manifested in you ; so far as his Light and Holy Spirit is born in you, as it is born in him, and liveth and worketh in you, as it liveth and worketh in him. A distant, absent, separate God, is an unknown God. For God can only manifest God, as Light can only manifest Light, and Darkness make Darkness to be known.

Again, you can have no real Knowledge of Nature, and its inward working Power, but so far as the Workings of Nature, and the Birth of Things, are Working and a Birth in yourself. Natural Reason may trade in the Outside of Things ; it may measure, and make Draughts of Magnitude, Height, and Distance of Things on the Earth, and above the Earth ; it may make many and fine Experiments of the Powers of every Element : But then this is going no further into the Ground of Nature, than when the Potter makes curious Vessels with his Clay and Fire.

To count the Stars, to observe their Places or Motions, is just the same Height of natural Knowledge, as when the Shepherd counts his Sheep, and observes their Time of Breeding.

This World, with all its Stars, Elements, and Creatures, is come out of the invisible World ; it has not the smallest Thing, or the smallest Quality of anything, but what is come forth from thence ; and therefore every Quality of everything, is what it is, and worketh that which worketh, by a secret Power and Nature in and from the invisible World. Bitter, sweet, sour, hard, soft, hot, cold, &c., have all of them their first Seed and Birth in the invisible World, called eternal Nature. The irrational Animals of this World feel all these Things : The rational Man goes further ; he can reason and dispute about their outward Causes and Effects : But the Mystery of eternal Nature must first be opened in Man, before he can give the Divine Philosophy of them. For as they all come from thence, have their Nature, Birth, and Growth, from thence ; so no Philosophy, but that which comes from thence, can give the true Ground of them.

If Man himself was not all these Three Things ; viz. (1) A Birth of the holy Deity ; (2) A Birth of eternal Nature ; and (3) Also a Microcosm of all this great outward World ; that is, of everything in it, its Stars and Elements ; and if the Properties of every creaturely Life were not in an hidden Birth in him ; no Omnipotence of God could open the Knowledge of Divine and natural Things in him.

For God can only manifest that, which there is to be manifested ; and therefore only open that, which before lay unopened, and as in a State of Hiddenness or Death. Nothing can come forth from Man, or any Creature, but that which first had its Seed in him ; and to think, that any Knowledge can be put into him, but that which is a Birth of his own Life, is as absurd as to think, that the Tree and its Branches may first grow, and then be brought to the Root.

We are led into Mistakes about this Matter, from the common Practice of the World, which calls everything Knowledge, that the Reason, Wit, or Humour of Man, prompts him to discourse about ; whether it be Fiction, Conjecture, Report, History, Criticism, Rhetoric, or Oratory : All this passes for Sterling Knowledge ; whereas it is only the Activity of Reason, playing with its own empty Notions.

From this Idea of Knowledge it is, that when this rational Man turns his Thoughts to the Study of Divinity, he is content with the same Knowledge of Divine Matters, as he had in these Exercises of his Reason ; and he proceeds in the same Manner, as when he studied History and Rhetoric.

He turns his Mind to Hearsay, to Conjecture, to Criticism, and great Names ; and thinks he is then a Member of the true Church, when he knows it as plainly, as he knows the ancient Commonwealth of Rome. His Knowledge of the Being of God stands upon the same Bottom, and is made known to him by the same Means and Methods of Proof, as he comes to be assured, that once upon a Time there was a First Man, and his Name was Adam. His Knowledge of the Kingdom of Heaven is looked upon to be sufficient, as soon as he knows it, as he knows that there is such a Place as Constantinople. When he turns his Inquiries into the Mysteries of Christian Redemption, he looks as much out of himself, as when he is searching into the Antiquities of Greece ; and appeals to the same Helps for this Knowledge, as when he wants to know the inward Structure of Solomon's Temple, and all its Services, &c.

This is the great Delusion which has long overspread the Christian World ; and all Countries, and all Libraries, are the Proof of it. It is this Power and Dominion of Reason in religious Matters, that Jacob Behmen so justly calls the Antichrist in Babel ; for it leads Men from the Life and Truth of the Mysteries of Christ, to put a carnal Trust in a confused Multitude of contrary Notions, Inventions, and Opinions. And the thing is unavoidable, it cannot be otherwise with Reason ; it cannot do more Good with, or make a better Use of Gospel Doctrines ; it is Antichrist, as soon as ever it is admitted to debate and state the Nature of any Divine Truth. And that for these Two great Reasons: First, Because it has absolutely the same Incapacity for it, as the Man that is born blind hath for the Light. Wherein now lieth the Incapacity of the blind Man, to speak or think anything truly about Light? It is because he is born and bred in another World, where nothing of Light ever did or can enter; it is because there is the Gulf of a whole Birth betwixt him and the Light of this World; and therefore, though he lives ever so long, reasons ever so much, or hears ever so many Speeches about the Light, all that he gets by it is only more false Ideas of the unknown Thing.

Now this is strictly the Incapacity of Reason, to speak, or think anything truly of the Divine Life. It is because it is born and bred in another World, in the Darkness of Flesh and Blood, into which no Perception or Sensibility of God and Heaven can enter; it is because there is the Gulf of a whole Birth betwixt it, and the Light of God and Heaven; and therefore, let Reason, from Age to Age, hear, read, and dispute ever so much about the Light of God and Heaven, all that it can get by it, is only to be enriched with more and more Fictions and Falsities about the unknown Thing.

Secondly, Natural Reason, whenever judging, or ruling in Divine Matters, must be Antichrist, because it cannot make any other Use of the Mysteries of Religion, or do anything else with them, but in the same Spirit, and for the same Ends, that it receiveth and useth the Things of this World. It matters not, what are the Names or Natures of the Things, whether you call them spiritual or temporal: Natural Reason can make but one and the same Use of them; it can only turn them to an earthly Use, to worldly Prosperity, to private Interest, Honour, Power, or Distinction. And the Thing is unavoidable, it is impossible to be otherwise; it is not a Fault that Reason might amend, if it would: but is as much its own Nature, as it is natural to Flame to ascend. Now everything must act according to its Nature; every Kind of Life must be for itself, for its own Good. Now Reason has no higher a Birth and Nature, than the Spirit of this World; it must be as worldly as its Birth is, and cannot possibly have anything else but worldly Views, and the Interests of its own Flesh and Blood, in everything that it can make any use of. This is as essential to the natural Reason of Man, as to the natural Subtlety of every Beast; for they have both the same Original from the Light and Life of this World, have both the same earthly Nature, and can act only in an earthly Manner, to serve the same Ends of an earthly Life. The Reason of the one has no more of God and the Divine Nature in it, than the Subtlety of the other. And hence it is, that Man, following only the Cunning of his natural Reason, is often more mischievous than the worst of Beasts. And thus, you see how Reason, ruling in Divine Things, is, and must be Antichrist: First, As it turns the living Mysteries of God into lifeless Ideas, and vain Opinions: and, Secondly, As it sets up a worldly Kingdom of Strife, Hatred, Envy, Division, and Persecution, in Defence of them. And therefore it is a fundamental Truth, that Man has no Capacity for Divine Knowledge, till the Particle of Divine Life, lost in the Fall, is awakened; in which alone, the Mystery of God and the Divine Nature can have a Birth.

Academicus. You have carried your Point, Theophilus, with a high Hand, and I rejoice in seeing this Matter so well proved.—But still I would ask you something, that I know not how to express; I would fain understand more clearly, how this Mystery of God, and eternal Nature, is to be born in me.

Theophilus. Everything, Academicus, is, and must be, its own Proof; and can only be known from and by itself. There is no Knowledge of anything, but where the Thing itself is, and is found, and possessed. Life, and every Kind and Degree of Life, is only known by Life; and so far as Life reaches, so far is there Knowledge, and no further. Whatever Knowledge you can get by the Searching and Working of your own active Reason, is only like that Knowledge, which you may be said to have got, when you have searched for a Needle in a Load of Straw, till you have found it.

For nothing that is brought into the Mind from without, or is only an Idea beheld by our reasoning Faculty, is any more our Knowledge, than the seeing our natural Face in a Glass, is seeing our own Selves. And all the Ideas or Images that your Reason can form of any absent, unpossessed Thing, is no more a Part of your own Knowledge, than your drawing a Picture of your own Hand is making a Member of your own Body. It is therefore a vain and fruitless Inquiry, to be asking beforehand for the Knowledge of any unpossessed Matters; for Knowledge can only be yours, as Sickness and Health is yours, not conveyed into you by a Hearsay Notion, but the Fruit of your own Perception and Sensibility of that which you are, and that which you have in yourself. How often have you been warned against this Procedure, in Words like these? ‘Therefore let the Reader be warned, not to dive further into these very deep Writings, nor Plunge his Will deeper, than so far as he apprehendeth: He should always rest satisfied with his Apprehension; for in his Apprehension, he standeth yet in that which hath its Reality; and therefore he erreth not, how deep soever the Spirit leadeth him: For to one more will be given than to another. And this is the only Mark to be observed, that everyone continue steadfast in Humility towards God, and submit himself, that he may make the Will and the Deed as he pleaseth. When you do that, you are in yourself as dead; for you desire nothing but God's Will, and the Will of God is your Life, which goeth inward even to the Opening of the highest Mysteries.*

One would have thought, Academicus, that this Advice, if only from the uncommon Nature of it, should have had more Effect upon you. For it is not only new to you, but to every Reader; there being nothing like it, either for the Sense, the Sobriety, or the Depth of its Matter, ever given by the wisest of Philosophers to their Readers.

Truth, my Friend, whatever you may think of it, is no less than the Saviour and Redeemer of the World.

Hear therefore its own Language: 'If any Man will be my Disciple, let him deny himself, and take up his Cross, and come after me.' He does not say, Let him get a clear and distinct Idea of me, what, and how I am God and Man in the Unity of my Person; he only tells him what he is to part with, what he must put off, to be made a Child of the Light. Search and look where you will, this Denial of Self is the one only possible Way to the Truth. For nothing has separated us from Truth, nothing stands betwixt us and Truth, but this Self of an earthly Life, which is not from God, but from our wandering out of our first created State.

God created us in and for the Light; and had Adam kept his first State, he had not been an ignorant, blind Pilgrim in the Darkness of this World, but the illustrious Opener of all its Wonders in the Light of God. But as this Light and Knowledge was lost in Adam, so it can only be recovered by him who came to restore all that was lost, and who justly called himself the Light of the World. Would you therefore be a Disciple of Truth you must not, with Pilate, ask, What is Truth? or consult the Schools, how you shall form an Idea of it: But you must alter your Life, put a Stop to all earthly Lusts, renounce all that you are, and have from Self; give up all the Workings of your own Reason, and your own Will; and then, and then only, are you fitted for that Unction from above, which can teach you all Things. But till Christ, who is the one Fountain of Life and Light, be opened in you; it is in vain, that you rise up early, and late take Rest, in Quest of Truth; for he himself hath said, 'Without me, ye can do nothing.' And every Son of earthly Adam, however naturally enriched with the Spirit, and Light, and Arts of this World, is born, and must remain, a Spirit in Prison, till Christ is found to be an inward Preacher, and Light within him. As he is the one Resurrection from the Dead, so is he the one Deliverer from everything that has the nature of Death, Darkness, and Ignorance. And to expect seeing Eyes, hearing Ears, and Sensibility of Heart, from anything but that eternal Word, by which we were at first made, is robbing God and Christ of more Honour, is a more idolatrous Departure from the true Worship and Dependence upon him, than if we sometimes hoped to have Good from this or that Saint's praying for us. For this is a Truth, that admits of no Restriction, but reaches from one End of the Earth to the other, that as no Man can come unto the Father, but through the Son; so no one can come at any Divine Knowledge, either in Grace or Nature, but through him alone.

The Schools of this World are of no higher a Nature, than the Markets of this World; and when rightly used, serve only to the Ends of this earthly Life. But as Markets and Traffic seldom keep within their just Bounds, but become serviceable to Vanity, earthly Lusts, and all the Luxury of Life; so it mostly happens in our learned Labours; we grow old and blear-eyed, in Studies that nourish Pride and Envy, Division and Contention; and only help our old Man to be content with the Riches of his fallen Nature, and feel no Necessity of being born again.

Would you therefore be a Divine Philosopher, you must be a true Christian; for Darkness is everywhere, but in the Kingdom of God; and Truth nowhere to be found by Man, but in a New Birth from above. Man was created in and for the Truth; that is, he was created in the Truth of the Divine Light, to see and hear, to taste and feel, to find and enjoy, all Things in the Truth of the Divine Life brought forth in him. And therefore it is, that for fallen Man there is but one Remedy; it is only the Truth that can make him free. Truth is the only Resting-place of the Soul; it is its Atonement and Peace with God; all is, and must be Disquiet, a Succession of lying Vanities, till the Soul is again in the Truth, in which God at first created it. And therefore said the Truth, Learn of me; for I am meek, and lowly of Heart; and ye shall find Rest unto your Souls.

Academicus. Pray Theophilus, stop a while: Surely your Zeal carries you too far. All Ages of the World have seemed to agree in this, that the Gospel teaches purely the Simplicity of a godly Life; calls no Man to be a Philosopher, nor gives the smallest Instruction in Matters that relate to Philosophy.

Theophilus. All this, Academicus, is very true; but then, this very Simplicity and Plainness of the Gospel, turning Man only from this World, to a Faith, and Hope, and Desire of God, is the one Reason, and full Proof, that it alone is a true Guide into the highest School of Divine Wisdom and Philosophy ; not only because Goodness is our greatest Wisdom, but because the Mysteries of God, of Grace, of Nature, of Time and Eternity, can no other possible way be opened in Man, but by this Simplicity of a godly Life taught in the Gospel ; because only the godly Life hath Knowledge of God ; just as the creaturely Life hath only Knowledge of the Creature, and the painful Life hath Knowledge of Pain. The Scripture saith, that only the Spirit of God knoweth the Things of God. And indeed, how can it possibly be otherwise ? For since the Spirit of God is the Spirit and Life that goeth through all Nature and Creature, and only openeth its own hidden Powers therein ; since it is that which is the Former of everything ; that which makes everything to have the Life that it hath, and to work as it worketh ; nothing but the Spirit of God, can possibly know the Things of God : And therefore, of Necessity, this Spirit of God must be in Man, and work in Man, as it is in Nature, and worketh in Nature, before Man can enter into the Knowledge and Working of God in Nature. And therefore here you have two immutable, and fundamental Truths : (1) That all our Ignorance of God and Nature is, and must be, purely and solely, the Want of the Spirit and Life of God in us : And, (2) That therefore the one only Way to Divine Knowledge, is the Way of the Gospel, which calls and leads us to a New Birth of the Divine Nature brought forth in us.

Academicus. I have nothing that I can, or would object to what you have said. But still I must say, that I do not enough apprehend, how the Spirit and Life of God must thus, of all Necessity, be born in us ; nor indeed, do I entirely comprehend how it is done. Human Reason, or human Instruction, I see plain enough, cannot help me to any Divine Light. But suppose God should send an Angel to instruct me, and that frequently, would not Divine Knowledge be then imparted to me ? And yet this would not be a Birth of God in me. Or, will you say, that God cannot sufficiently instruct me, even by the highest of his Angels ?

Theophilus. An Angel, Sir, may instruct you, as the Scriptures instruct you ; but it is only such an Instruction, as may direct you where and how to obtain that Light, which neither the Letter of Scripture, nor the Voice of an Angel, can bring forth in you. The highest Angel neither hath, nor ever can have, any more of a redeeming Power in it, than the dead Paper on which the Scriptures are written. But you are to observe, and mark it well, that you cannot have Divine Light from any other Thing, but that which hath full Power to redeem you: For Light is not only Life, but the Perfection, and highest State of it; and therefore nothing can bring forth Light, but that which can bring forth the Truth and Perfection of Life.

Every other Thing, besides the Life and Light of God, stands only in a State of ministerial Service towards you: Whether it be Words of a Message from God, written on paper, engraven on tables of Stone, or spoken by the Mouth of an Angel, a Prophet or Apostle; be it which it will, it is only a creaturely Thing; and its creaturely Service can rise no higher, nor go any further, than to show the true Way to Him, who only himself can be the Truth, the Life, and the Light in you. For the Light of God cannot, even by God himself, be communicated to you by any Creature; and the Reason is, because the Light of God is God himself: It is the Light of his own Life: And therefore only himself can bring it forth wherever it is; and no Creature can possibly partake of his Light, but by having a Birth in and from the Divine Nature: For the Light of God can never be separate from the Divine Nature, or be anywhere but where the Divine Birth is. And thus you fully see, that all that can be divinely known, either in Heaven, or on earth, can only be known in that one Way, and by that one Means, by which fallen Man can be saved; namely, by a New Birth of the Light and Spirit of God within us. And therefore the simple Way of the Gospel, is the one only Way to attain all the Knowledge of all that, which can be known of God and Nature: For nothing can manifest God and Nature, but the Spirit of God working in Man, as he worketh in Nature, which can only be done by a New Birth of the Divine Nature, brought forth in Man: But when Man is thus born again of God, then the Life and Spirit of God is in him, and worketh in him, as it doth in Nature. And thus it is, that Man can only be a Divine Philosopher, when Christ, who is the Light of God, and the Light of Nature, is revealed in him. Then he is in that living Word, and that living Word is in him, by which all Things were at first made; and which maketh, createth, and worketh in him, as it worketh in all Things, both in Heaven and Earth.

Academicus. I never expected to have seen the Gospel New Birth proved to be the only open Gate to all that Divine Knowledge, which any Son of Adam ever had, or can have. But you have proved it to be so, beyond all Possibility of Denial. And I now only want to have you go on in this Doctrine of the New Birth; for I am persuaded, you can still add something to that, which has already been said upon it, both as to the Ground, and Nature, and Fruits of it.

Theophilus. You must remember, Academicus, that all that I can by Discourse, from the Beginning to the End of this Matter, do for you, amounts only to thus much : It is like giving you a full Assurance of a wonderful Pearl of glorious Virtues, hidden in the Ground of a certain Field, and showing you every Step of the Way you must take to find it. Now, if from Month to Month, you should be inquiring and hearing of some new Powers and Virtues of this heavenly Pearl ; what Good does all this Discourse and Hearsay do you ? You are just as far from the Pearl itself, and have no more of it, than when you first heard of it ; and would be in the same Distance from it, though you were always, to the End of your Life, loving to hear and talk about it. I have had no other End in all that is said of the New Birth, but to assure you of the Truth of the Thing, and the true Way to it. Now the Way to the New Birth lies wholly in your Will to it ; and every Step that you can take, consists in a continual Dying to the selfish corrupt Will, which you have from Flesh and Blood. Nothing can make any Change in you, but the Change of your Will. For everything, be it what it will, is a Birth of that Will, which worketh in you. You have nothing therefore to inquire after, nor anything that you can judge of yourself by, but the State of your Mind, the Working of your Will and Desire. These will give you more Light, than all the Men or Books in the World can give you : Where these are, there are you ; and what these are, that are you : There you live, and to that you belong ; and there you must have all the Good or Evil that can be called yours.

For nothing leads or carries you anywhere, nothing generates either Life or Death in you, but the Working of your Mind, Will, and Desire. If your Will is angelic, you are an Angel, and angelic Happiness must be yours. If your Will is with God, you work with God ; God is then the Life of your Soul, and you will have your Life with God to all Eternity. If you follow an earthly Will, every Step you take is a Departure from God, till you become as incapable of God, and the Life of God, as the Animals of this World. If your Will worketh in Pride and Self-exaltation, in Envy and Wrath, in Hatred and Ill-will, in Deceit, Hypocrisy, and Falseness, you work with the Devil, you are generating his Nature within you, and making yourself ready for the Kingdom of Hell. And thus it is, that our Works follow us ; and that everyone will be rewarded according to his Works ; and none can reap anything else but that which he hath sown. And the Seed of everything that can grow in us, is our Will. The Will maketh the Beginning, the Middle, and the End of everything ; it is the only Workman in Nature ; and everything is its Work. It has all Power ; its Works cannot be hindered ; it carries all before it ; it creates as it goes : and all Things are possible to it. It enters wherever it wills, and finds everything that it seeks ; for its seeking is its finding. The Will over-rules all Nature, because Nature is its Offspring, and born of it ; for all the Properties of Nature, whether they be Good or Evil, in Darkness or in Light, in Love or in Hatred, in Wrath or in Meekness, in Pride or Humility, in Trouble or Joy, are all of them the Offspring or Birth of the Will ; as that liveth, so they live ; and as that changeth, so they change. So that whatever you are, or whatever you feel, is all owing to the working and creating Power of your own Will. This is your God or your Devil, your Heaven or your Hell ; and you have only so much of one, or the other, as your Will, which is the first Mover, is either given up to the one, or to the other.

For where the Will of Man is not, there he hath nothing ; and where his Will is, there is all that Something which he hath, be it of what Kind it will ; and it is inseparable from him, till his Will worketh contrary to it.

Academicus. Whence hath the Will of Man this mighty Power that it can have nothing, but that which itself hath willed ?

Theophilus. You might as well ask, why a Circle must be perfectly round, or a straight Line free from every Degree of Crookedness. For as it is not a Circle till it is perfectly round, nor a straight Line till it is free from Crookedness, so the Will is not in Being, but so far as it is free, is its own Mover, and can have nothing but that which it willeth. Secondly, The Will is not a made Thing, which is made out of something, or that came out of some different State, into the State of a Will. But the free Will of Man is a true and real Birth from the free, eternal, uncreated Will of God, which willed to have a creaturely Offspring of itself, or to see itself in a creaturely State. And therefore the Will of Man hath the Nature of Divine Freedom ; hath the Nature of Eternity, and the Nature of Omnipotence in it ; because it is what it is, and hath what it hath, as a Spark, a Ray, a genuine Birth of the eternal, free, omnipotent Will of God. And therefore, as the Will of God is superior to, and ruleth over all Nature ; so the Will of Man, derived from the Will of God, is superior to, and ruleth over all his own Nature. And thence it is, that as to itself, and so far as its own Nature reacheth, it hath the Freedom and Omnipotence of that Will from which it is descended ; and can have or receive nothing, but what itself doth, and worketh, in and to itself.

And herein consisteth the infinite Goodness of God, in the Birth of all intelligent Creatures ; and also the exceeding Height, Perfection, and Happiness of their created State: They are descended from God, full of Divine Power; they can will and work with God, and partake of the Divine Happiness. They can receive no Injustice, Hurt, or Violence, either from Nature or Creature; but must be only that, which they generate, and have no Evil or Hurt, but that which they do in and to themselves. All Things stand in the Will, and everything, animate or inanimate, is the Effect and Produce of that Will, which worketh in it, and formeth it to be that which it is. And every Will, wherever found, is the Birth and Effect of some antecedent Will; for Will can only proceed from Will, till you come to the first working Will, which is God himself.

And here, my Friend, you have an easy Entrance into the true Meaning of many important Passages in the Books of Jacob Behmen, like those that follow: 'All,' says he, 'is magical; the 'Eternity is magical:—Magic is the Mother of all Things.—I 'speak from a magic Ground.—Here the Reader must have 'magical Eyes.—This hath a magical Understanding,' &c. Vulgar Reason is offended at these Expressions, because the Word Magic has, for many Ages, been mostly used in a bad Sense. But do not you be frightened at the Sound of these Words; they are not only innocent, but truly good and wise, and deeply founded on the Truth of Things. They have the most Christian and Divine Meaning; are strictly conformable to the Spirit of the Gospel, as shall be shown by-and-by; and are used for the best of Ends; namely, to open the true Ground of eternal and temporal Nature, and the Birth of Creatures in each of them. They are to show how the hidden, invisible Deity acteth and worketh all its Wonders in both these Worlds, in one and the same uniform Way; as also, how everything in Religion, whether it be a Mystery of God, a Grace of God, or a Duty of Man, hath its whole Ground, and Nature, and Efficacy, therein.

Now magic Power meaneth nothing but the Working of the Will, whether it be the Divine, or the creaturely Will; and everything that is the Work of the Will, and is produced by it, is called its magic Work, which only means, that it is generated by and from the Will, as a Birth brought forth by it. The Will is the Workman, and the Work is that, which it bringeth forth out of itself. So that by these Words, you are always to understand these two Things, the Working, and the Work of the Will. And now, you may already sufficiently see, that their Meaning is not only innocent and good, but as necessarily, and divinely, to be ascribed to God, as the Power of bringing Things into Existence by the Working of his Will. For here you have the true Ground and Original of the creating Power of God; how everything that is not God, is yet come from him, and out of him, as so many Births of his invisible Power, breaking forth into Visibility, and sensible Qualities of an outward Life.

The first Manifestation of the invisible God is that which is called, and is, Eternal Nature; which is the Eternity of all possible Powers and Qualities of Life, the first Source of every natural Power that can be in any Creature. All these Qualities of Life, in their eternal Birth, and rising from one another by the working Will of God, are the Out-birth, or outward Glory of God, in which he manifests his Triune, invisible Deity in a threefold Life of Fire, Light, and Spirit; which are the Ground of all the Qualities of Life, Sensibility, Power, and Spirit, that ever were, or can be found in any Creature. Everything that exists, or thinks, or moves, or finds itself in any Kind or Degree of Sensibility, is from, and out of, this glassy Sea of these united Powers of Life. And this whole Manifestation of all the possible Powers, and Perfection of Life and Glory, is called that Kingdom of Heaven, in which God dwelleth; and is, as it were, his Divine Workhouse, out of which he is perpetually giving forth new Works, and Forms of Wonder.

This Manifestation of God, is a magic Birth from the Triune working Will of the hidden Deity, which willed to see itself in this opened, outward Show of all the possible Powers of Life and Glory; and from whence new Worlds of finite Divine Beings, as so many living Images of God, might have a Possibility of coming forth. For without Nature, God must be by himself, and continue an unmanifested God. For no Form or Creature can be, unless there be something antecedent to it, that can be formed. Life must be, before there can be any finite living Creatures; just as Light must be, before there can be any seeing Eyes. And therefore the Manifestation of God in an outward Glory of all the possible Powers, Qualities, and Perfections of Life, called eternal Nature, must be, or there could be no Possibility for the Existence of any Creature.

Now this same working Will of the Triune Deity, which manifested itself in an eternal Nature, manifesteth itself in creaturely Forms, all generated from, all enlivened and animated with, that same Trinity of Fire, Light, and Spirit, that constitutes eternal Nature. So that all intelligent Creatures are that in their finite Being, which eternal Nature is in its infinite State. And thus all of them are from God, and from Heaven, live in God, and may work with God, as God is in Heaven, and Heaven in him; one Life, one Power, one Will, and one Happiness with God.

Now everything that is not God, but after him, and distinct from him, must be that which it is, from the working Will of the Deity. For since it cometh into Being, only because it is willed to be, it can have nothing in it, or be any other Thing, but that which the working or creating Will brought forth. And as all Things began in and from this working Will, so all Things must go on in it; and there can be no other Creator, Worker, or Former of Things to all Eternity, but the working Will of God, either mediately or immediately. Nor can there be any other Nature in anything, but that which is the Birth, or magic Effect, of a working Will within it. And everything that is done by the Creature, everything which it seeks and likes, or abhors and resists, is all driven on by a working Will, or magic Power, which stirs, and generates, and works within it.

Would you know now the true Ground of all this? It is this: It is because Will is the first Original of all Power, and the Omnipotence of God consisteth in nothing else but his working Will; and therefore no Power ever was, or ever can be, anywhere else, but as it is in God; and if the Creature hath any Power, it must have it, as God hath it, in the working Will. For since all Nature, with all its Qualities, Births, and Creatures, are all brought into Being by the working Will of God, it evidently follows, that every Creature, with every Quality, Power, and Property in it, is magically born, and therefore must have a magic Nature, that is, a Nature that cometh from, and standeth in a working Will.

And now, Sir, you are come into a full View of the most important Matter of the Mystery of all Things; a Matter which, if rightly apprehended in the inward Ground of your Soul, puts an entire End to all the Jargon of a false Philosophy, and to all those Fictions of Doctrines and Disputes, which Reason has built upon the written Word of God.

For nothing is effected by Fiction and Invention, by any contrived Arts or Searchings of rational Inquiries; all this is nothing, because it toucheth not Nature, but leaveth it to itself; which carrieth on its own Works by its own Power, and can only work in its own Way; and must bring forth its own Births, independent of everything but its own working Life. But all lieth in the Will and working Desire of the Soul, because Will began and brought forth all that Nature that lives in the Soul, and is the only Life in it; and this Life can work and grow from nothing else, but that which first brought it forth. Hence you see the full Meaning of these Words of our Author, 'All is magical; and 'that Magic is the Mother of all Things;' and consequently, the only Opener of all Divine Knowledge. All which Expressions only imply thus much, that the Will, whether in God, or the Creature, is the Ground and Seed of every Thing ; is the generating working Power, which maketh and worketh all Things to be in that State and Condition which they are ; and that every Thing begins, goes on, and ends, in the Working of the Will ; and that nothing can be otherwise, than as its Will worketh ; and therefore Eternity and Time are magical ; and Magic is, and must be, the Mother of all Things.

Now here you see, in the utmost Degree of Clearness, how all true and false Religion divide from one another. For if nothing worketh but the Will, if nothing else carries on the Work of Nature, then all is false and vain in Religion, but the Working of the Will ; and nothing is saving, or redeeming the Life of the Soul, but that which helps the Will to work towards God.

Hence it is, that our Author so often tells his Reader, that when he sees and finds this magic Birth of Things, he is delivered from Babel ; not by running from one Place to another, or from one System of Opinions to another, but by inwardly leaving all the Workings of earthly Self, all the Paper-Buildings of natural Reason, and turning to God with the whole Will and working desire of his Heart. This is the right coming out of our own Babel of vain Opinions into the Truth and Reality of Nature, where the living God of Nature is found ; not in Notions, but in the living Working of the Soul, and worshipped in Spirit and in Truth.

I said, into the Truth and Reality of Nature, because Nature is the Standard of Truth, and all is Babel but that which worketh with Nature ; that is, with eternal Nature ; for as eternal Nature is the Manifestation of the unchangeable God, so it must be as unchangeable in itself, and its own Workings, as God is ; because it hath nothing in it, but what is in and from the unchangeable God. And therefore, God cannot be manifest, or work in any Creature, but as he is manifest, and worketh in eternal Nature ; and therefore all that the Creature doth, is Labour lost, and a vain Beating of the Air, but that which it worketh with, and according to eternal Nature. Because God never was, nor ever can be, or be found, anywhere else but in his own Heaven, or eternal Nature. And no Soul can by any one possible thing find, or be found by God, but by standing before him in the same Will and Working as eternal Nature doth. And therefore all is Fiction and Babel but the Working of the Will, because nothing but the Will can work with Nature ; and that for this Reason, because all Life, and all Nature, eternal and temporal, is what it is, merely and solely, from the Working of the Will. All things in Heaven and in Earth stand in this magic Birth ; and nothing can change its State, either for better or worse, but as the Working of its Will changes. Justly therefore is it said, that where this Truth is found, there is a full and true Deliverance from Babel, that is, from all Strife, and Zeal, and Division about Opinions, Sects, and Churches; since the one Thing that works either to Life, or to Death, the one Thing that alone opens Heaven or Hell for us, is with every individual Man, in every Place, and in every Age of the World; and that one Thing is the Working of the Will. And when, in any such Man, his Will is turned from his own earthly Self, and this earthly Life, and worketh with its Desire to God, then all these Sayings of the Scripture are true of him; viz., 'That he is redeemed from this 'evil World—that he has his Conversation in Heaven—that he 'is of God, and heareth God's Word—that he is saved by Faith—that Christ is revealed to him—that he is Christ's, and Christ is 'his—that Christ is in him of a Truth—and that he is led by 'the Spirit of Christ.' All these Texts would be true of him though he had never seen, nor heard, a Syllable of the written Word of God.

For the Word of God which saveth and redeemeth, which giveth Life and Light to the Soul, is not the Word printed on Paper, but is that eternal, ever-speaking Word, which is the Son of God, who in the Beginning was with God, and was the God by whom all Things were made. This is the universal Teacher and Enlightener of all that are in Heaven, and on Earth; who from the Beginning to the End of Time, without Respect of Persons, stands at the Door of every Heart of Man, speaking into it not human Words, but Divine Goodness; calling and knocking, not with outward Sounds, but by the inward Stirring of an awakened Divine Life. And therefore, as sure as that is true, which St. John saith, That this eternal Word 'is the Life of 'Men, and the Light that lighteth every Man that cometh 'into the World,' so sure is it, that our Saviour and Salvation, our Teacher and Enlightener, from whom we have every good Thought, is Christ within us; not within this or that Man, but in every Man wherever born, and in whom the Light of Life ariseth. And indeed how can it be otherwise? For if God is the God of all Men; and the Word of God the Life and Light of all Men; and all Men are capable of Goodness; and all Goodness can only be from God; and no Goodness can belong to Man, but that which is within him, then every Man must have the Word, or Christ of God within him, and can have it nowhere else. All Teachers therefore, who teach Men to look for Life or Salvation in anything but the Word and Spirit of God within them, stand chargeable with the Blood and Death of Souls; because, in all the Possibility of Things, nothing can overcome that Death which is in the Soul, but the Word, or Christ of God, living and working in it. For observe, Man must have Goodness in the same Way as God hath Goodness, that is, from the Divine Nature; for Goodness is nowhere else, neither is anything else capable of it; and therefore, if Goodness is to be in Man, the Divine Nature must, of all Necessity, be first brought to Life within him. But this cannot be, till the working Will of our Heart turns and gives up itself wholly to the Word and Spirit of God within us. For we can have nothing but that, towards which the Earnestness of our Will goeth.

Again, see here in a still higher Degree of Proof, the absolute Necessity, and unspeakable Benefit of the Spirit of Prayer; how it does, and must, in spite of all Opposition, raise the fallen Soul out of the Poverty of Flesh and Blood, into the Riches of an heavenly Nature brought forth in it. For since all Things in Heaven and Earth stand in a magic Birth, or Working of the Will; the Will is that, which hath all Power; it unites all that is united in Heaven or on Earth; it divides and separates all that is divided in Nature; it makes Heaven, and it makes Hell; for there is no Hell, but where the Will of the Creature is turned from God; nor any Heaven, but where the Will of the Creature worketh with God. Therefore, as we pray, so we are; and as our Will-Spirit secretly worketh, so are we either swallowed up in the Vanity of Time, or called forth into the Riches of Eternity. And therefore the Spirit of Prayer is most justly conceived, and most simply expressed, when it is said to be the Rising of the Soul out of the Vanity of Time into the Riches of Eternity: For all the Vanity which the Soul hath, is from its living in, and loving the Things of Time; and therefore it can only come out of the Vanity of its State, by loving and living in the Truths, which are the Riches of Eternity: For the Spirit of Prayer is the Hunger of the Soul; and as every Hunger is, so it eats; it always eateth that which it hungereth after, and hath a Life suitable to the Nature, State, and Condition, both of its Hunger, and its Food. If it hungereth after the Things of Flesh and Blood, it eateth nothing else, and only groweth in the bestial Life; and of the Flesh must reap the Corruption that belongs to Flesh: And if it hungereth after God, it eateth the Food which giveth Life to the Angels; it eateth the Bread that is come down from Heaven; namely, the real heavenly Body and Blood of Christ, which surely may be called the Riches of Eternity.

All the Mysteries of Religion, and the Necessity of the whole Process of Christ in our Redemption, have all of them their Ground, and Necessity, and Efficacy, in this magic Nature of Things, and are all of them only for this one End, to help fallen Man to have a working Will towards that first Life, which he has lost. And therefore no one joins with the Mysteries of Redemption, or can have any Share in them, but he whose Will turns wholly from this World, and hath all its Working towards God and Heaven. And now, Sir, you see the plain, and easy, and certain Deliverance from all Perplexity and vain Labour in the Disputes and Divisions of Religion. It is but opening your natural Eyes, that is, letting simple Nature work with its own Power, and all Difficulties are removed; and the Way to God and Goodness is as natural, and as free from all Perplexity, as the opening our Eyes to see the Light of the Sun. For what is so natural to Man as the Working of the Will; And yet he can have nothing, or be anything, different from that, to which his Will worketh.

Nor does this at all too much exalt the human Will, or make our Salvation not to be the pure Grace and Gift of God to us, but quite the contrary. For the Will here spoken of, is not the Will of Flesh and Blood, but that heavenly Will, which is the only Spark of the Deity in us, given by the free Grace of God to all Mankind, as soon as fallen, and called in Scripture the inspoken Word of God in Paradise; which was the Beginning of the Redemption, when God first entered into a Covenant of Salvation with Adam, and all his Posterity. This inspoken Word is Christ, or the Spark of the Divine Nature, which is the Light that lighteth every Man that cometh into the World. And here, in this Christ in us, lieth the Will that hath the Power of Salvation in it; and all its Salvation is the Salvation of Christ. For it is the Will of this heavenly Nature, hid in every Man, that is the working Will, that bringeth forth the New Birth of Heaven in us; and therefore is the pure free Salvation of Christ, given to be a Redeemer within us. So that all our Salvation, though wrought out by this working Will within us, is, from the Beginning to the End, the pure Grace of God to us, and no Salvation of our own.

And thus, Sir, you see, that every Soul of Man is partly human, and partly Divine; and is united to an earthly and an heavenly Nature; and so not only can, but must, always work either with one or the other, and has nothing else to work with; and must and can be, or have nothing else, but as he followeth or worketh with either of these Wills. So that, infallibly to know both your present and future State, what you are, and to what you belong, you need only to see, what you cannot help seeing, how, and where, and to what, your Will worketh.

And thus, from this Knowledge of the magic Nature of Things, which all are that which they are, solely from the Working of the Will in everything, you are delivered from all vain Labour and Party-Zeal; and are brought back to that true and safe Ground; on which God has placed you to work out your own Salvation, without any Hindrance from any Builders of Babel, of whatever Denomination.

The Short is this: The whole Matter of Religion relates only to Life and Death. But Life and Death are both of them immutable, and founded in the unchangeable Nature of Things. Nothing can alter them, or invent a new Way, either to or from either of them. To what purpose then, is all this dividing into so many Parties? Why all this Strife and Zeal about Opinions? Death and Life go on their own Way, carry on their own Work, and stay for no Opinions. Does the Stone stop, or alter its Tendency towards the Earth? Do the Sparks and Flame cease to fly upwards, because Philosophers dispute and quarrel about the Reasons of one or the other? No; Nature goes on in its own Way, let Reason say what it will. Now Death and Life have their own unchangeable Nature and Working in and from themselves; and are just as distinct from, and independent of, all Opinions of Men about them, as the Things just now mentioned: So that to will and work, as Life willeth and worketh, and to will and work, as Death willeth and worketh, is the one only possible Way to partake either of Life or Death. What a Delusion is it therefore, to grow grey-headed in balancing ancient and modern Opinions; to waste the precious uncertain Fire of Life in critical Zeal, and verbal Animosities; when nothing but the kindling of our working Will into a Faith, that overcometh the World, into a steadfast Hope, and ever-burning Love, and Desire of the Divine Life, can hinder us from falling into eternal Death!

Academicus. Oh! Theophilus, you have led me into a Depth, that I never thought of seeing into.

For this magic Power of everything, that works in all Nature and Creature, shows me everything in a new View. You might well say, that Reason has no Power in this Mystery; that nothing is proposed to it: For since Life and Death have their own Working within themselves, and must at last, when Time is at an End, divide and take Possession of everything, according as its Will has worked either with one or the other, it signifies no more to them what Reason has been all this time discoursing about, than in what Language a Man used to talk. But before you go any further, I beg a Word or Two on these Matters. First, How I am to understand our Author, when he says, 'Here the 'Reader must have magical Eyes;' and, 'This or that hath a 'magical Understanding.' And, Secondly, That you would, as you promised, show, how the speaking thus of this magical Power of Life, is strictly conformable to the Spirit of the Gospel.

Theophilus. As to your First Matter, concerning magical Eyes; I should have thought the Thing plain enough already. But you may understand it thus. When a Carpenter cuts Timber into various Shapes and Forms, and then joins one Piece to another, till it is formed into the Shape of a House; this is no magical Work, because one Part does not grow from the other, till the Whole is brought forth, and therefore there is no need of magical Eyes to see what this Work is. But when an Oak groweth from an Acorn, or a Plant from a Seed in the Ground, here the Work is magical; that is, it is a Birth or Product generated from the working Will in the Acorn and Seed, from whence the Stem, and all its Branches and Fruits, grow forth; which working Will continueth, till the Plant or Tree hath reached its Limit, that is, till the working Will in the seed hath spent itself. Now all this is a magical Work, and therefore can only be seen by such magical Eyes, as can see into the Beginning, and go on with the Working of that which works and generates in the Tree or Plant.

As to your other Matter, How this Language of the magical Working of the Will, is 'entirely conformable to the Spirit of the 'Gospel;' the Answer is easy, because the Thing is plain. For the first possible Beginning of the Christian Life, is, by the Founder of it, expressly laid in a New Birth from above, and therefore plainly declared to be a magical Work, and to have no other Nature; because a generating Work, and a magical Work, are only different Expressions for the same Thing. And as the Beginning, so every following Advancement in the Christian Life, is as really and truly only a Growth of Life, or magical Birth from the Powers of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, upon the working Will in the Soul, as the Plant, from its first Stirring in the Seed, to its last State, is only a Growth from the Powers of the Sun, Stars, and Elements, upon the working Will in the seed.

Everything that is outward in Religion, whether it be Men or Things, planting or watering, is only for the sake of this inward Birth; either to direct Man to it, to help him to work in it, or warn him of that eternal Death, which the Will, working according to Flesh and Blood, must inherit as its own genuine Fruit. And whoever fancies the Christian Life to be anything else than a Birth growing up in God, till it comes to the Perfection of the Divine Life, by the same Way of a gradual Growth, and in the same Reality, as the finished Flower has all its Perfection by way of a gradual Growth from the Seed, has not a Syllable in the Gospel, nor an Instance in Nature, to plead in Excuse of his fanciful Error.

For nothing worketh in all Nature or Grace, but what worketh as a Birth, or magical Growth of Life. For nothing can come from the living God but Life, nor for any other End, but to manifest some Kind or Degree of Life. There are no dead Forms, or lifeless Inventions to be found, till you come to the mechanic Works of Men's Hands, and the cobweb Schemes of dead Knowledge, brought forth by human Reason. For Reason is the old Serpent called Subtlety, the first and the last grand Deceiver of Mankind, that takes them from the powerful Workings of Nature, to follow the Shadows of empty Sounds, till all is swallowed up either by final Life or Death, which will at last reap everything into its own unchangeable Barn.

Again, Faith, and Hope, and Love, and Desire towards God, are the only Gospel Means of bringing forth the New Birth; and therefore all that the Gospel requires, is a magical Working of the Will.

For all these Powers, whether of Faith, Hope, Love, and Desire towards God and the Divine Life, are only so many different Powers of the Working of the Will, and have all their Efficacy, as so many Parts of it; and only alter, raise, and bring forth a New Life, because the Working of the Will is magical, and generates as it works, and unites with that which it willeth. And thus Christ, or the New Man in Christ Jesus, is formed in us, from a Seed of Heaven, which is the Will that can work towards God, till it becomes a godly Birth, as the Seed works towards the Sun, till it is changed into the Birth of a beauteous fragrant Flower.

Again, Hence it is, namely, from this magic Power of the Working of the Will, that our blessed Lord speaks so often of the Omnipotence of Faith; viz., 'That all Things are possible to him that believeth.—Whatsoever ye shall ask in Prayer, believing, ye shall receive.—If ye had Faith but as a Grain of Mustard-seed, ye Might say to this Tree, Be thou plucked up by the Root; and to this Mountain, Be thou cast into the Sea; and it should be done.—Thy Faith hath saved thee.—According to thy Faith, so be it done unto thee.'

Hence all these Truths plainly follow: First, That Faith, which is in itself only the Working of the Will, is the Source of all Power; and that all that is done in Nature is done by it alone; and that therefore all Nature standeth in a magic Working of the Will. For all Things could not be possible to him that believeth, but because Faith, or the Working of the Will, is the true Source of all Power in or over Nature. Secondly, Here is a full Demonstration of the high and powerful State, in which Man was at first created! A Lord over all this outward World; who could, by the Working of his Will, command the Obedience of all things about him.

This was the Dominion he had over all the Creatures on the Earth, in the Sea, and in the Air ; not such a poor power as invented Weapons, or the Strength of his Hands and Feet, could help him to ; but a Power here mentioned, of standing still, and, by the Faith or Will of his Mind, making every Creature to come or go, just as the faithful Disciple of Christ was, by his Faith, to have Power over every outward Thing of this World.

Now all this high State of his first Power, is undeniable from the Words of our Saviour. For it is not to be supposed, that he would turn Men's Thoughts to any such Powers, as to have all Things obedient to their Faith, or the working Will of their Minds, if this had not been Man's first created State, or such Powers as did then belong to it. For no Man or Creature can have any higher Power, than that which belongs to his first created State.

And therefore all Gospel Faith, however wonderful in its Power, can only have somewhat of that first powerful Faith, which Man had when he first came out of the Hands of God. And Faith now in a Redeemer, can only be the Means of obtaining Salvation, for this Reason ; because Faith was then that original high Power in Man, which could have preserved him in his first Perfection and Glory of Life. Thus, when Christ saith, 'Thy Faith hath saved thee,' it is the same thing as if he had said, Faith had always such Power ; that Faith was the Strength and Glory of the First Man, that could have saved him from falling under the Power of the Stars and Elements ; that it was Faith alone which could and did put an End to his first paradisaical Glory, by turning its Strength and Desire into the Life of this World. Again, when our Lord saith, 'According to thy Faith, so be it done unto thee ;' this was no new Thing, or new Operation in the Power of Faith, but was only a Declaration of a Truth as old as Nature and Creature, and was in Reality so much said of the powerful Faith of the First Man ; and infallibly shows, that as now, so then, nothing was done to him in his Fall, but that which was done according to the Faith and Working of his Will. For this is God's immutable righteous Procedure with Man, that nothing but his own Works can follow him ; and that, from first to last, whether standing or falling, according to his Faith, and working Will, so must it be done unto him. And therefore Man's Faith and working Will, was his Divine Power of living superior to, and independent of all the Stars and Elements of this World, in his own angelic Perfection of a Divine Life.

For if the Revival of Faith, in so small a Degree, as to be compared to a Grain of Mustard-seed, could bring forth in Man such a Divine Power over all the Things of this World, is it not a sufficient Proof of the high Power of his first lost Faith, which only thus coming again, as the smallest of Seeds, yet comes with such mighty Power over all outward Nature, the Flesh and the Devil? And thus, all that is said in the Gospel, of the Power of Faith, is, in the strictest Truth, so much said of the Power and Perfection of our first Father, over whom this earthly System had no Power: But whether he stood, or fell, or was to rise again, all was, and is, and must be done, by his Faith, or the Working of his Will.

And thus also, you see, that all that was said of the Nature and Extent of the magic Power of the Will, is not only conformable to, but is the very Spirit of the Gospel, and all the written Word of God. For from the first Promise made to Adam, to the last written Words of Scripture, Man is only called and directed to the true Exercise of these magic, generating Powers of the Will; namely, to believe, to hope, to trust in God; to love, desire, and expect the Renewal of a Divine Life from the Goodness of God.

Humanus. Give me leave only to add, that in these Words of our Saviour, 'According to thy Faith, so be it done unto thee,' and other such like Sayings, he has not only opened the true Nature and Power of Faith, but has discovered more of the true Philosophy of Nature, than ever was told the World before. Faith is generally considered as a speculative Thing, as an Assent of the Mind to the Credibility of Things related. This may sometimes, as well in the Scriptures, as in any other Books, be called Faith, as the same Word may be used in various Senses. But the Faith in Question, about which our Saviour speaks, and to which he ascribes so much Power, and which alone can do a Man any real Good or Harm, is quite of another Nature: I say, Good or Harm; because all that is good or bad proceeds from it, and carries its Power, which way it will: As it can work all Wonders, and overcome the World; so it alone has Power over Life and Heaven in the Soul, can drive them out, and set up the Kingdom of Hell and Death instead of them.

Now this Faith may be thus understood; it is that Power by which a Man gives himself up to anything, seeks, wills, adheres to, and unites with it, so that his Life lives in it, and belongs to it. Now to whatever the Soul gives itself up; whatever it hungereth after; and in which it delights, and seeks to be united; there, and there only, is its Faith; that Faith which can work either Life or Death, and according to which Faith, everything is, and must be done to Man.

Now this Faith is not a Matter of Choice, so that a Man may live without it, if he pleases ; but essential to his Life, and altogether inseparable from it. For whatever the Life drives at, to whatever it is given up, there is its living and powerful Faith. Therefore, be a Man given up to what he will, seeking, delighting, and acquiescing in whatever it be, temporal or eternal, whether it be Christianity, Idolatry, Deism, or Atheism ; this is a certain Conclusion, that every Man in the World is a Man of Faith, lives by Faith, and that equally so ; because every Man's Life is equally given up to the seeking, and delighting in, and uniting itself to, something or other ; and therefore every Man equally lives by Faith, and that in its highest Degree. It matters not, whether a Man delights and acquiesces in the Philosophy of Epicurus, or Spinoza ; whether he be given up to Luxury and Sensuality, or to Syllogisms and Definitions, to Mysteries of Redemption, or Mysteries of Atheism : He is neither more nor less a Man of Faith for all this ; but is equally under the Power of Faith, whether it be Divine, earthly, sensual, or devilish. For which way soever the Life of Man tends, or drives ; to whatever he gives up himself ; there he is, and lives by Faith, and that in its highest Degree ; for no Faith can rise higher than this. Nor can a Man's Faith be anywhere, but where his Life is, and to which it belongs ; nor can he be said to live to anything, but by Faith. For Faith is as much the one working Power of Life, as Thought is the one working Power of the Understanding ; and the Understanding of Man may as easily proceed without being led by Thought, as the Life of Man go on without being led by Faith ; that is, without giving itself up to something, or other, with which it would be united, and to which it would belong, as its desired Good ; which, as I said before, is the highest Degree of the most living Faith.

The Debate therefore, set up by the Deists, about Reason and Faith, as two Principles of Life ; the one appropriated to Christians, and the other to themselves, is founded on the grossest Ignorance of both their Natures ; as great as that of supposing, that there are two Principles of seeing and smelling ; viz., Reason and the Senses. And the Deist, who turns from all Faith, to have a Life of Reason, proceeds as much according to Nature, as if he were to leave it to Christians, to see and smell by their Senses ; but himself and Brethren to see and smell by the Power of Reason. For Reason is no more the Power of Life, than it is the Power of the Senses ; it can no more enter into, mix, or co-operate with Life, than with the Senses ; but must stand below them both, and follow them both, in the same Degree of Inability to alter, increase, or lessen the natural Power of either of them, as the Eye hath to alter the Vegetation, or Colour, or Smell, of the Plant on which it looks. For Reason like the Eye, is only an outward Looker on; and can no more form, or model, or alter the Life of the Soul, than it can alter the Life and Vegetation of the Body. But this Saying, 'According to thy Faith, so 'be it done unto thee,' contains the unchangeable Ground, and true Philosophy of Life, and the Power of Life. And this Saying takes in every Individual of human Nature; and the Deist may as well think of turning Death over to the Christians, and reserving Immortality for himself, as to think of being anything else, either here or hereafter, but purely and solely that, which his Faith has brought to pass in him. He may, indeed, easily enough keep himself free from all Christian Faith; but, whether he will or no, a Faith must do all in him, and for him, just in the same Degree, as it does for the Christian. Let him make ever so many Declarations against the Superstition and Blindness of Faith; ever so many Encomiums upon the Beauty of Axioms, Syllogisms, and Deductions of Reason; his Life is just as far from being a Life of Reason, as the Christian's is, who declares only for a Life of Faith. For as the Eye and the Nose have just the same Nature, Office, and Power, in a Man, whether he be Deist, or Christian; and he cannot, as such, have either more or less from them, or be more or less helped by them; so Reason and Faith have just the same Nature, Office, and Power in a Man, and are always in him, and will always do the same for him, whether he be Christian or Deist. And was the Deist to change Sides, he would be neither more nor less a Man of Faith and Reason, than he was before; nor have got or lost any Power either of Faith or Reason. He would only be under a Divine, instead of an earthly and sensual Faith; and his Reason would not have changed its State, or Office, or Power, but only be the Servant of a better Master; that is, of a Divine Faith.

Now, was not Faith the Power of Life in every Man, no Man could live by Faith, nor could it be the Principle or Power of Life in any Man. But seeing every Man, whether earthly or heavenly, is that which he is, by Faith; and Faith will and must have its Work in every Man; and he cannot live without it, or free from it; hence is the absolute Necessity of the one right Faith, in order to Salvation, and the Impossibility of anything else to avail in the stead of it. Thence also it is, that Christianity applies not to the Reason of any Man, because Reason is not the Principle of Life, or the Former of it; but it calls the Heart to a right Faith, because Man is only lost and separate from God and Heaven, by his Faith in the Things and Powers of this World. And therefore all Salvation does, and only can, arise from a Faith turned to God ; and also all Damnation from Faith in the Things of this World. And no Man can turn either to God, or to this World, but by Faith ; that is, by giving up himself either to the one, or the other ; which is the highest Act or Power of Faith. For there is nothing that works either to Life or Death, in any Man, but that to which he is given up, by Faith in it. And Reason never had, nor ever can have, or do anything else, but one and the same Under-work, or Office, let Faith take which way it will.

The Delusion of the Deist lies here : He refuses an Assent to the History of Facts and Doctrines of the Gospel ; and this is his Proof to himself that he lives by Reason, and that it is the real Principle of his Life. On the other hand, he that assents to the History of Facts and Doctrines of the Gospel, is, by the Deist, reckoned to be a Man of Gospel Faith, and that lives by it. But this is all Mistake on both Sides. For this Assent on one Side, and Dissent on the other, touches not the Matter either of Reason or Faith. For both these Persons, notwithstanding this Difference of assenting, may not only be equally governed by Faith ; but have strictly one and the same Faith. For if the Things of this World have the Heart of both of them, which very easily may be, then they have but one and the same Faith, and are equally governed by it ; for they both equally live by a Faith in this World.

The Deist therefore hath no other possible way of showing, that he is not as much a Man of Faith, as any Christian can be, but by showing that he has no Will, no Desire, no Inclination of Heart left in him ; that his Life drives no way, is given up to no one thing, as its End and Good ; but that Reason, without Affection, carries him only from Syllogism to Syllogism, in Quest of nothing. Then it is, that he may deem himself to be a Man of Reason, but not till then ; for if he has any Heart that hath any Inclination to be united with or belong to anything, then he becomes a Man of Faith, and he lives by Faith in that, to which he is given up, as much as any Christian does, who is given up to the Mysteries of Christian Redemption.

I could not help saying thus much on this Delusion, in which I have been so long ensnared myself, and therefore have the utmost good Will and Earnestness to help others out of it. And, to this End, I shall add the following Passages, taken from a Book, where this whole Matter is justly said to be examined to the Bottom. ‘ We have no Want of Religion, but so far as we ‘ want to better our State in God ; or so far as we are unpossessed ‘ of God, or less possessed of him than we might be, and our ‘ Nature requires. This is the true and only Ground of Religion ;

' viz., to alter our State of Existence in God, and to have more ' of the Divine Nature and Perfections communicated to us.
 ' Nothing therefore is our Good in Religion, but that which alters
 ' our State of Existence in God for the better, and puts us in ' Possession of something of God; or makes us Partakers of the ' Divine Nature, in such a Manner and Degree as we wanted it.
 ' Everything that is in Life, has its Degree of Life in and from ' God; it lives and moves and has its Being in God. This is as ' true of Devils, as of the highest and most perfect Angels.
 ' Therefore, all the Happiness or Misery of all Creatures consist ' only in this; viz., as they are more or less possessed of God, or
 ' as they differently partake of the Divine Nature or according ' to their different State of Existence in God. But if this be a ' Truth (and who can deny it?) then we have the Certainty of ' Demonstration, that nothing can be our Good in Religion, but ' that which communicates to us something of God, or the Divine ' Nature, or that which *better*s our State and Manner of Existence
 ' in God.

' For if Devils are what they are, because of their State and ' Manner of Existence in God; if blessed Angels are what they are,
 ' because of their State, and Manner of Existence in God; then
 ' it undeniably follows, that all that is betwixt Angels and Devils,
 ' all Beings, from the Happiness of the one, to the Misery of the ' other, must and can have no other Happiness or Misery, but ' according to their State and Manner of Existence in God, or
 ' according as they have more or less of the State of Angels, or
 ' the State of Devils, in them. Therefore nothing can be our ' Good in Religion, but that which alters our State and Manner ' of Existence in God, and renders us possessed of him in a ' different and better Manner.

' Now, if you were to send to the fallen Spirits of Darkness all
 ' the Systems of your Religion of Reason, that have been pub' lished, to let them know that they have the Power of their own
 ' Restoration and Happiness within themselves; that they need
 ' seek to nothing, but their own natural Reason and Understand' ing, and the Strength and activity of their own Powers, to raise
 ' them to all the Happiness they are capable of; such a Religion
 ' would be so far from altering or mending their State of Exist' ence in God, or doing them any Good, that it would add Strength
 ' to all their Chains; and the more firmly they believed and relied ' upon it, the more would they be confirmed and fixed in their ' Separation from God. And yet, a Religion that must neces' sarily keep them in Hell, is the only Religion, that you will have ' to carry you to Heaven. May God deliver you from this Error!

' Hence it sufficiently appears, that your Way of natural

‘ Reason, cannot be the Way of Salvation ; because the Want of ‘ Salvation is nothing else, but the wanting to have our State and ‘ Manner of Existence in God altered for the better, or to have ‘ something of God communicated to us, which we want, and are ‘ capable of receiving. But if this is, and must be, the Nature ‘ of Salvation ; then no Religion can save us, or do us our proper ‘ Good, or supply our proper Want, but that which has Power to ‘ alter our State of Existence in God, or to communicate to us
 ‘ that of God, which we want, and are capable of. And there‘ fore, nothing but that same Power of God, which created us, ‘ which gave us our State and Manner of Existence in God, and ‘ communicated to us that which we possess in him, can redeem
 ‘ us, or help us to that State and Manner of Existence in him, ‘ which we have lost, and are in Want of.

‘ There never could have been any Dispute, about the Possi‘ bility of saving ourselves by our own natural Faculties, had not ‘ Men lost all true Knowledge both of God and themselves. For ‘ this Dispute cannot happen, till Men suppose God to be some ‘ outward Being ; that our Relation to him is some outward Rela- ‘ tion ; that Religion is an outward Thing, that passes between ‘ God and us, like Terms of Behaviour between Man and Man ;
 ‘ that Sin hurts, and separates us from God, only as a Misdemeanour
 ‘ hurts, and separates us from our Prince ; that an offended
 ‘ God either gives or refuses Pardon to us, as an angry Prince does ‘ to his Subjects ; and that, what gives or forgives to us, is some‘ thing as distinct or different from himself, as when a Prince, sit‘ ting upon his Throne, gives or forgives something to an Offender, ‘ that is an hundred Miles from him.

‘ Now all this is the same total Ignorance of God, what he is ‘ in himself, and what he is in relation to us, and the Manner of ‘ his being our Good, as when the old Idolaters took Men to be ‘ Gods. And yet nothing is more plain, than that your Religion
 ‘ of Reason is wholly founded upon all these gross and false ‘ Notions of God. You have not an Argument in its Defence,
 ‘ but what supposes, that our Relation to God is an outward ‘ Relation, like that of Subjects to their Prince ; and that what ‘ we do to and for God, as our Service to him, is, and must be ‘ done, by our own Power, as that which we do to and for our ‘ Prince, must be done by our own Power. And from these ‘ Errors it is, that you draw this false Conclusion, that if our own ‘ Reason and natural Power were not sufficient to obtain for us
 ‘ all that we want, and God requires of us ; God must be less ‘ good than a good earthly Prince, who requires no more of us, ‘ than that which we have a natural Strength to do, or can do by ‘ our own Power. And yet all this is pure Absurdity, and has

‘ all the Grossness of Idolatry in it, as soon as you know, that ‘ God is no outward or separate Being ; but that we are what we ‘ are, have what we have, and do that which we can do, because ‘ he has brought us to this State of Life, Power, and Existence
 ‘ in himself ; because he has made us, so far as we are made,
 ‘ Partakers or Possessors of a Life in him, and has communi‘ cated to us, such a Life in himself ; or in the Words of Scrip‘ ture, because, in him we live and move and have our Being, and ‘ consequently have no Life, Motion, or Being, out of him. For
 ‘ from this State of our Existence in God, it necessarily follows ;
 ‘ First, That, by the Nature of our Creation, we are only put ‘ into a Capacity of receiving Good. A Creature, as such, can ‘ be in no other State ; it is impossible for him to enrich himself, ‘ or communicate more Good to himself, as it was to create ‘ himself. Secondly, That nothing but God can do us any Good.
 ‘ Thirdly, That God himself cannot do us any Good, but by the ‘ Communication of himself, in some manner, to us. Hence it is ‘ plain, that your Religion of Reason, which suppose, that we have ‘ natural Powers, that can put us in Possession of that which we ‘ want to be possessed of in God ; or, that we need no more ‘ Divine Assistance to recover what we have lost of God, than
 ‘ to obtain a Pardon from a Prince ; or, that God need communi‘ cate no more of himself to us in our Reconcilement to him,
 ‘ than a Prince communicates of himself to his pardoned Sub‘ ject ; has all the Mistakes, Error, and Ignorance of God, that is ‘ in Idolatry, when it takes God to be something that he is not ;
 ‘ and has all the false Devotion that is in Idolatry, when it puts
 ‘ the same Trust in, and expects the same Benefit from, its own ‘ Powers and Faculties, which Idolaters did in and from their ‘ Idols. Your Religion of Reason, therefore, which you esteem
 ‘ as the modern Refinement of the human Mind, and more excel‘ lent and rational, than the Faith and Humility of the Gospel, ‘ has all the Dregs of the grossest heathen Idolatry in it ; and
 ‘ has changed nothing in Idolatry, but the Idol ; and only differs
 ‘ in such a Degree of Philosophy, as the Religion of worshipping
 ‘ the Sun, differs from the Religion of worshipping an Onion.

‘ For as soon as it is known and confessed, that God is all in ‘ all ; that in him we live and move and have our Being ; that ‘ we have nothing separately, or at a Distance, from him, but ‘ everything in him ; that we have no Degree of Being, nor any ‘ Degree of Good, but in him ; that the Almighty can give us
 ‘ nothing, but that which is something of himself ; nor any De‘ gree of Amendment or Salvation, but in such Degree as he ‘ communicates something more of himself to us ; as soon as this ‘ great immutable Truth is known, then it is known with the ‘ utmost Certainty, that to put our Trust in the Sun, or an Onion,

‘ or our own Reason, if not equally absurd, is yet equally idola‘ trous, and equally prejudicial to our Salvation.’*

And now, Theophilus, if you please, you may proceed in the Matter you were upon.

Theophilus. We have discoursed long enough for this time.
Let Silence, Recollection, inward and outward Retirement, have their Work for a few Days. They purify the Heart; they weaken and disarm Self; they strengthen the Spirit of Prayer, and help us not only to pray, but to find, to love, and live in God. Let us all desire such an Interval as this; and then we shall be fitter to meet again for our mutual Benefit. My Friends, adieu.

The End of the Second DIALOGUE.

THE THIRD DIALOGUE.

ACADEMICUS. If you please, Theophilus, pray go on, just where you left off at our last Meeting. For this Mystery seems to be at Daybreak with me; and the Approach of its Light leaves me no Power to be content without it.

Theophilus. You have seen, that all Nature begins and stands in a magic Birth; and is only a large Display of its working Power in every kind of Creature. You now want to see further into this Mystery, how Eternal Nature begins; and how God, the first, hidden, imperceptible Cause of all After-Things, manifests himself in the Properties of a visible and working Nature. Now I would, to the best of my Power, gladly assist you in this Matter, if I could find out a Way of doing it, by opening in your Heart a Knowledge of God, of Nature, and yourself, without helping you to a mere Opinion, or increasing your Thirst after Ideal Speculation. Tell me, therefore, what you propose by the Gratification of this Desire; or what Effect you expect from such Knowledge, as you here seek.

Academicus. All that I desire by it is, to strengthen and confirm the Ground on which I stand; that, seeing the true Philosophy of Religion, I may have nothing to fear from all that Variety of Attacks which now, more than ever, are made upon it by infidel Reason. I hope, therefore, it is no vain Curiosity, to desire to enter into the Depth of this Mystery, since I only desire thereby Strength to resist all the Enemies of Religion.

Theophilus. All this is right, and very well; provided you do but know who, and what, are the great and powerful Enemies of Religion. But this, perhaps, you do not so well apprehend, as you may imagine. Your own Reason, born, and bred, and governed, by your own Flesh and Blood, is the most powerful Enemy of Religion that you have to do with, and whom you have the most to fear from.

The Men of speculative Reason, whom you seem most to apprehend, are powerless Enemies, that cannot strike at your Religion with the Strength of a Straw. Did you but rightly see what their Power is, you would see it as ridiculous, as that of a few Water-Engines trying to quench the fiery Globe of the Sun: For Reason stands in the same Inability to touch the Truth of Religion, as the Water-Engines to affect the Sun. Nay, its Inability is much greater; for could the Water, thrown from the Engine, be made to reach the Sun, it would have some, though an insignificant Effect upon it; but Reason can no more affect the Truth of Religion, than Nothing can affect Something. If Reason seems to have any Power against Religion, it is only where Religion is become a dead Form, has lost its true State, and is dwindled into Opinion; and when this is the Case, that Religion stands only as a well-grounded Opinion, then indeed it is always liable to be shaken; either by having its own Credibility lessened, or that of a contrary Opinion increased. But when Religion is that which it should be, not a Notion or Opinion, but a real Life growing up in God, then Reason has just as much power to stop its Course, as the barking Dog to stop the Course of the Moon. For true and genuine Religion is Nature, is Life, and the Working of Life; and therefore, wherever it is, Reason has no more Power over it, than over the Roots that grow secretly in the Earth, or the Life that is working in the highest Heavens. If therefore you are afraid of Reason hurting your Religion, it is a Sign, that your Religion is not yet as it should be, is not a self-evident Growth of Nature and Life within you, but has much of mere Opinion in it.

Observe the Word self-evident; for there lies the Truth of the Matter; for you have no more of the Truth of Religion, than what is self-evident in you. A blind Man may be rich in Notions and Opinions about the Nature, Power, and Good of Light; and in this Case, one blind Man may perplex another, and unsettle his Notions; but when the Light manifests itself, and is become self-evident, then he is at once delivered from an Uncertainty about it. Now Religion is Light and Life; but Light and Life can only manifest themselves, and can nowhere be known, but where they are self-evident.

You can know nothing of God, of Nature, of Heaven, or Hell, or yourself, but so far as all these Things are self-evident in you. Neither could any of these Things be of any Concern to you, but because they can all of them be self-evident in you. For the bare History, or Hearsay of any one thing, signifies no more to you, than the Hearsay of any other thing. And if God and Heaven, Hell and the Devil, the World and the Flesh, were not all of them self-evident in you, you could have no more Good or Hurt from any Hearsay about them, than from the Hearsay of pleasant Gardens, and dismal Prisons, in the World of the Moon.

Let it be supposed, that your ingenious Reason should suggest to you, that there are no Devils or Hell, and therefore no Occasion to believe that Revelation that gives an Account of them:

In this Case, do but turn to that which is sensible and self-evident in you, and then you must know, in the same Certainty as you know yourself to be alive, that there is Wrath, Self-torment, Envy, Malice, Evil-will, Pride, Cruelty, Revenge, &c. Now say, if you please, there are no other Devils but these, and that Men have no other Devils to resist; and then you will have said Truth enough, have owned Devils enough, and enough confessed, that you are in the Midst of them; that you are everywhere tempted by them; and that Flesh and Blood is too weak to resist them, and therefore wants some kind of Saviour, of so contrary a Nature, as has Power to destroy these Works of the Devil in you.

Now this is the only Knowledge that you can possibly have of an outward Hell, and outward Devils; and this Knowledge is as self-evident in you as your own Thoughts, and is as near to you as your own Life. But to see and know an outward Hell, or outward Devils, that are outward living Creatures, can never be your own Case, till all that is Divine and human in you is extinguished; and then you will have Knowledge enough, how Hell is a Place, and how the Devils of Rage, Wrath, Envy, and Pride, &c., are living Creatures.

Again, Let it be supposed, that your sceptic Reason had brought you into Doubt about the Being and Providence of God in you: you have no Occasion to consult the Demonstrations which heathen Philosophers, School Divines, Deists, or Atheists, have produced about it, from the Existence of Things; all concluding, as well Christians, as Deists and Atheists, that there must be some eternal first Cause from which all has proceeded.

For what a God is this, that is only proved to be, because something now is, and therefore something must always have been, an infinite, eternal Something, with infinite Power to bring forth all that is come into Being? What a God, I say, is this, which the Arian, the Deist, the Atheist, is as willing to own as the Christian; and which is as serviceable to the Cause of Arianism, Deism, Idolatry, and Atheism, as it is to Christianity? For the Atheist has his omnipotent, eternal, first Cause, as well as all the Disputers for a God.

But now, if you turn from all these idle Debates and Demonstrations of Reason, to that which is sensible and self-evident in you, then you have a sensible, self-evident Proof of the true God of Life, and Light, and Love, and Goodness, as manifest to you as your own Life. For with the same self-evident Certainty, as you know that you think, and are alive, you know that there is Goodness, Love, Benevolence, Meekness, Compassion, Wisdom, Peace, Joy, &c. Now this is the self-evident God, that forces himself to
