or "the most saintly of the learned and most learned of the saints." His emblems are a book or books, chalice, ox, pen, star, or sun. His day is March 7.

Uncumber. See under Saint Wylgeforte.

Uriel. Archangel. Regent of the sun. Portrayed in yellow, holding a sword in his right hand. Flames in his left hand or at his feet. Other attributes are a book and a manuscript roll. See Archangel.

Ursula. Patron of maidens and school mistresses. Legendary 5th century Cornish princess who left for France with 11,000 virgins. Their eleven galleys were storm-driven to Cologne, where the virgins were massacred by Huns. The legend probably is the debris of a fairytale connected with the Great Bear and the myriad stars of her train. In another legend, Ursula was the wife of the English Prince Conon, with whom she was making a pilgrimage to Rome, when they were slain by Huns. Generally shown as a crowned princess with an arrow through her body. She holds a pilgrim's staff, surmounted by a white banner with a red cross. Sometimes shown with many attendants. Her day is October 21.

Valentine. Martyred February 14, 269. A Roman imprisoned for assisting persecuted Christians. He became a convert and, after restoring the sight of his jailer's daughter, he was clubbed to death. He is revered as patron of epileptics and lovers. His feast is celebrated on the day of his martyrdom. According to an ancient belief, birds choose their mates for the year on February 14. Saint Valentine's Day has long been celebrated in England. Formerly the person drawn from lots, as another person's valentine, received a gift, usually a pair of gloves. In modern times sentimental or humorous cards are exchanged. The custom is said to have been borrowed from a rite connected with the worship of Juno on the same day. Saint Valentine is portrayed as a young priest bearing a sword. Other attributes are bow and arrow, Cupid, heart, heart pierced by arrow, knots of red and blue ribbons, roses, spring flowers.

Venere. Venus, Roman goddess of love, Christianized.

Veronica. Patron of laundresses, linen drapers, portrait painters and photographers; protector of statuaries. According to legend, a young woman handed Jesus a handkerchief with which to wipe His brow on His way to Calvary. His face was miraculously impressed on the handkerchief, which was called veronica (true likeness), and the young woman became Saint Veronica. She usually is portrayed between Saints Peter and Paul displaying her handkerchief. Her day is February 4.

Vincent. Martyred 304. Patron of vintners; provider of riches. His body, thrown to wild animals, was protected by ravens. Then it was ordered drowned; although a millstone was tied to it, the body washed ashore, and the waves hollowed a tomb for him in the sands. Years later he was buried in Valencia. He is shown as a youth in the habit of a deacon, being roasted over a fire on a frame of iron bars, the instrument of his martyrdom. Others of his symbols are a chain, millstone, palm, ravens, roses, whip, wild beasts. His day is January 22.

Vitus. Child martyr, 303. Patron of actors, dancers and those who find it difficult to rise in the morning. In 16th century

Germany, a belief prevailed that anyone who danced before the Saint's statue on his feast day remained healthy throughout the year. This led to a confusion with chorea; which became known as Saint Vitus' dance, and against which the saint is invoked. In art portrayed as a boy bearing the palm of martyrdom, and accompanied by a dog, cock, lion or wolf. His day is June 15.

Wylgeforte. According to tradition, one of the seven beautiful daughters of a queen of Portugal. Desiring to remain a virgin, she prayed for a beard. The prayer was answered, and she was no longer cumbered with suitors; but one, the prince of Sicily was so enraged that he had her crucified. If provided with oats, she will provide a horse to take a bad husband to the devil. Sometimes called Saint Uncumber, because she uncumbers women of bad husbands.

Zadkiel. Archangel who stayed the hand of Abraham as he was about to sacrifice Isaac. Shown in angelic robes holding a sacrificial knife. In Greek Church, angel of the Supreme Will. Provided with five aspects, probably related to the four directions and the center. As guardian angel stands on a golden wheel, clothed in crimson feathers with four purple wings; as angel of intercession, kneels, hands clasped, head upturned; as angel of justice, holds a sword upright; as angel of mercy holds a branch with three white flowers; as angel of prayer kneels, hands clasped, head bent.

Zenobius. A 4th century noble of Florence, converted to Christianity by his tutor. According to tradition, he restored life to the dead. Portrayed with a dead child or young man on his arms; his symbol the flowering elm.

SAINT AUSTIN CHAPEL Brythonic otherworld realm of fertility, which Guinevere urged Arthur (sun) to visit, when the king fell into slothful ways. The journey was perilous and Arthur took Chaus (moon's rays) with him. While Arthur slept Chaus went on alone and from the chapel stole a golden candlestick (verdure), which gave to Arthur, who thus recovered his power and valor. Knights (of darkness) calling Chaus a traitor stabbed him in the thigh and he died of the wounds. Chaus resembles Adonis, the legend resembles that of the Fisher King.

SAINT ELMO'S FIRE The corpasant (holy body), a bright light or fire sometimes seen in severe storms at sea on projecting parts of a ship, as at the mast head. Elmo, from the Greek meaning amiable, is probably a corruption of Erasmus, patron saint of sailors, or of Helen, by whose name the fire also is known. One flame portends the worst of the storm is yet to come. When two or more flames appear they are given the names of Helen's twin brothers, Castor and Pollux, and indicate the worst has passed.

SAINT JOHN'S DAY Midsummer Day, relic of solstitial worship. Fire festival.

Saint John's Eve. Fasting watchers on this eve supposedly see the apparitions of those doomed to die during the coming year knock on the church door.

Saint John's wort (Hypericum). June 29 birthday flower symbolizing animosity, simplicity, superstition. In the language of flowers: You are a prophet.

SAINT MARTIN'S DAY See Martinmas, also Martin under Saint.

SAINT PATRICK'S PURGATORY See Patrick under Saint.

SAINT VALENTINE'S DAY February 14, on which day sweethearts are chosen, and anonymous amatory or satirical messages are sent to persons of the opposite sex.

SAIS Burial place of ancient Egyptian kings. Seat of the worship of the goddess Neith.

SAIVO MEN Among the Lapps the souls of the dead who dwelled in holy mountains. That they might not call the souls of kin before their time they were propitiated by sacrifice. Also Saivo maidens.

SAKADONOMAKI Japanese kami of sake. Equates with Dionysus. Also called Toyougonome-no-mikoto.

SAKAKI Shinto sacred tree on Mount Kagu in heaven. Hung with sacred jewels, octagonal mirror, and peace offerings to Amaterasu, the sun goddess. Worshiped as an image of kami (deities). Equates with the Christmas tree.

SA-KALAMA Epithet of the Babylonian god Ea as ruler of the land. An agricultural deity.

SAKASA-BASHIRA (SAKA-BASHIRA) In Japan an upside-down post; post not set according to the original position of the wood in the tree from which hewn. Unlucky post, which moans and groans in the night.

SAKHAVATI In Buddhism, Amitabha's Heaven in the West.

SAKHRAT Moslem sacred stone on which Mount Qaf rests. The mountain is the home of fairies and giants, and anyone who possesses a single grain of the stone has the power of working miracles. It is the color of an emerald reflecting the blue tint of the sky.

SAKIA Ancient Arab god worshiped as rain bringer.

SAKRA (SAKKA) A name of Indra.

SAKRAH (SAKHRA) Sacred rock at Jerusalem on which the Temple was built. Sacrificial stone on which Abraham was about to immolate Isaac. A navel or earth center, under which is the great abyss. According to Moslems it hovers unsupported over the abyss, or well of souls, called Bir-el-arwah. The rock came from Paradise, is the gate of Hell, and from it Mahomet sprang to Heaven on el-Burak.

SAKTI Consort of a Buddhist or Hindu deity; female energy of a god. Commonly portrayed in embrace, with the lingam fully inserted into the yoni, thus the male and female principles which control the universe and are at a point of harmony, although frequently in opposition. The name, meaning force, is identified with wisdom, and is reflected in the proverb, 'knowledge is power.'

Sakta. Worshiper of a sakti.

SAKUNTALA In Hindu legend an apsaras who married King Dushyanta, a mortal. From them sprang the Bharatas, a glorious human race.

SAKURU Pawnee Indian sun lord. Appointed by Tirawa to a station in the east to give light and warmth. By union with Pah, the moon, a son, Closed Man, was born. He mated with the daughter of the morning and evening stars, and became the progenitor of the human race.

SAKUT (SAKKIT, SAKKUT) Epithet of Ninurta as god of sunrise.

SAKYA (SHAKYA) Family name of the Buddha Gautama

Siddartha, who is called Sakya-muni (monk of the Sakyas) or Sakyashina (lion of the Sakyas).

Sakyamuni (Shakyamuni). A prince who renounced wealth and possessions to lead a life of poverty. The third Buddha, the fourth or mortal Manusibuddha, lord of the present world cycle. His asana is dhyana on red lotus; his color is gold; his emblem is a patra; his mount is a lion throne; his mudras are bhumisparsha and dhyana, dharmacakra, or vitarka and varada. Son of Maya, he came to earth in the form of a white elephant. In Tibet called Sakya-t'ub-pa-dam-g-Nas-brtan or Sha-kya-tup-pa.

SAL Buddhist sacred tree. Maya held a branch of it while Buddha was being born.

SALAD DAYS Period of freshness, inexperienced youth, when the blood is still cool.

SALADIN A model of chivalry, in allusion to the sultan of Egypt and Syria, who defended Acre against the crusaders.

SALAMANDER Genius fabled to live in fire, which it quenches with the extreme cold of its body. Its form is that of a lizard. By extension any person who can stand great heat, a lover, a juggler who eats fire, a soldier who is brave under fire; a fire-proof safe. In heraldry a four-footed beast represented passant, breathing or surrounded by flames, typifying immunity to the heat of danger. According to occultists, influences man's sanguine temperament. Christian symbol of baptism and enduring and triumphant faith.

SALAMANNU (SALLIMANNU)
Assyrian fish god.

SALATHIEL (SHEALTIEL)
In the Bible one of the ancestors of Christ. In European literature one of the names given to the Wandering Jew.

SALCAH (SALCHAH) Hebrew name meaning wandering.

SALEM (SOLYMA, URU-SALIM, UR-SALIMU) Literally, peace. An early name of Jerusalem.

SALEMA God of Arabian antiquity. Revered for restoring health.

SALIENT In heraldry, leaping. Hind legs in sinister base and fore paws elevated in dexter chief.

SALII The twelve priests of Mars, whose special duty was to guard the ancilia or sacred shields. While Numa Pompilius was imploring Jupiter to protect the newly formed city of Rome, a bronze shield fell at his feet, and the nymph Egeria predicted that wherever the ancilia was preserved the people would rule the earth. To protect the sacred treasure Numa caused eleven more to be made exactly like it, and gave their care over to the Salii dancers. Twice yearly, in March and October, they bore the ancilia through the city, halting at each altar to perform a war dance. The original college was Salii Palatine, and the March dance was to Mars as a fertilizing spirit. Later the Salii Collini was formed to honor Jupiter and Quirinus. Eventually both merged and the chief aim of the dancers was to placate Mars, the war god. As warrior priests they were a prototype of Grail knights.

SALINA Feminine name from the Latin, meaning the salty.

SALISBURY Masculine name from Old English, meaning the armed stronghold.

SALIVA Life substance. Charm against disease and witchcraft. Used to bind peace treaties and, in many regions, analogous to a blood-covenant. In primitive societies a mother spits into her child's bowl to provide extra nourishment. From the elderly and frail considered injurious.

SALMA Literally, east. Early Semite god of the rising or renewed sun. Probably the first deity to whom the holy city or hill Salem (Jerusalem) was sacred. The willow was his emblem. Absalom, Solmoneus, and Solomon are name variants.

SALMACIS Nymph who controlled a fountain in ancient Caria, which supposedly rendered effeminate all who drank its waters.

SALMAONE Aegean mother goddess, lady of the east. The willow was sacred to her. Her worship is akin to that of Salma.

SALMON (1) Abundance, knowledge, philosophical retirement. Emblem of Nova Scotia. Word related to Salma, sole, Solomon. A belief prevails among Finno-Ugrics and northern American Indians that in its bowels fire is bound. In Irish tradition giver of inspiration, prowess, and wisdom, especially in battle. Emblem of Finn MacCoul. (2) See Rahab 3.

SALMONEUS In Greek mythology king of Elis. Son of Aeolus; husband of Tyro; brother of Sisyphus. His putative sons were Neleus and Pelias, whom he exposed to die, but they returned to destroy Sidero, who had replaced their mother Tyro in the palace.

Arrogant, he wished his subjects to honor him as a deity. When he imitated thunder and lightning by rattling his brazen chariot across the sky, Zeus maimed him with a thunderbolt, and he died of the wounds. Probably an early storm god. He may have been a rain-making magician who belonged to a religion superseded by Olympianism, and the priests of Zeus gave him an odious character.

SALOME (1) Feminine name from the Greek and Hebrew, meaning peace. (2) One who typifies pleasure, wantonness. From the daughter of Herodias, in the Biblical story, who asked the head of John the Baptist in return for her dancing. The gift of the head involves a folk-tale motif exemplifying the irrevocable promise of a king; the severed head hints at a resurrection myth. See Severed Head.

SALOMON (SOLOMON) Legendary king of Brittany, paladin of Charlemagne.

SALT Fruitlessness, good counsel, healing, immortality, incorruptibility, purification, virtue, wisdom, wit. Dream significance: good omen; (if upset) sorrow, squabbles. An article of witchcraft. Thrown into a fire it wards off dangers; thrown toward a person indicates contention. Sprinkled over deity sacrifices. Seasoning, as to season a character or thought. If accidentally spilled bad luck unless counteracted by throwing some over the right shoulder. To add or deceive, thus to place a false deposit in a mine or 'salt an invoice.' Christian symbol of divine wisdom and superiority. A benediction, exorcism of evil spirits. Emblem of Sophia. Hebrew symbol of fidelity, goodness, hospitality. Among Hebrews and Moslems to partake of salt with another represents a sacred bond; thus, "salt is between us." The Japanese scattered at the house door after a guest's departure to counteract any evil he may have brought in. Roman victims were led to the sacrifice with salt on their heads; to shake it off was an ill omen, and the source of the belief that spilling salt is a misfortune.

Attic salt. Wit.

Not worth his salt. Worthless; lacking the means to savor his food.

Old Salt. Sailor.

Put salt on his tail. Attempt to catch an animal or person by foolish methods.

given to the male offspring of a Negro and Mulatto.

SAMBO-KOJIN Japanese kitchen god. He had three faces.

SAME-BITO Japanese denizen of the sea. Shark-man.

SAMEKH (SAMECH) Fifteenth letter of the Hebrew alphabet; equivalent of English S. Its meaning is prop or tent-peg; its numerical value is 60. According to mystics its correspondences are: planetary, Mars; symbolic, fate; tarot deck, Devil; zodiacal, Aquarius or Sagittarius. Its color is blue; its direction on the cube of space is west above, realm of winds, with a vibration of wrath that is blind; its intelligence is tentative, one of probation. In white magic corresponds to the eighth heaven, which is that of the star Mercury governed by Michael.

SAMHAIN (SAMAIN, SAMAN, SAMHAN) Literally, summer's end. Celtic winter solstice festival celebrated about November 1. The entrance to burial caves were left open to allow the spirits to come out for an airing. On oidhche Shamhna omen for the future were extracted from the fairies. The Fomors first oppressed the people of Nemed with their terrible tax on this day, and on it the Mag-Tured battles were fought, thus the day on which winter giants expelled the fertility gods. On the Isle of Man called Sauin, in Wales called Nos Galan-gaeof (Night of the winter calends). Corresponds to Halloween. Compare Beltane.

Samhanach. Goblins which come out on Samhain in Scotland.

SAMIAN LETTER The Greek Y, used by Pythagoras to symbolize the different roads of vice and virtue. The stem represents virtue; once a digression is made the divergence grows wider and wider.

SAMPO In Finnish legend a good-luck talisman forged from magic metals by Ilmarinen. A mill that ground out gold, grain, or salt as demanded. Compare World Mill.

SAMPSEA Finno-Ugric vegetation god. He arrived on a corn ship, asleep, with his mother as wife. Name signifies bulrush and may indicate a spring fodder-grass. Also called Pelleroo.

SAMSARA (SHAMSARA) Buddhist transmigratory existence. See Bhavacakramudra.

SAMSON (SAMPSON) (1) Masculine name from the Hebrew, meaning strong, sunlike. (2) In the Old Testament son of Manoah, his birth was miraculously foretold. He became a judge celebrated for abnormal physical strength, fearlessness, and wonderful exploits. His wife Delilah betrayed him by revealing he was invulnerable unless shorn of his hair, the source of his power. When captured by the Philistines, he was blinded and harnessed to the Gaza corn-mill (revolving heavens), whereupon his hair (rays) grew back, and he pulled down the temple pillars so that the roof (sky) collapsed on everyone. Although his name identifies him as a solar hero, his exploits have lunar characteristics. He started for Gaza (otherworld) at midnight, and did not sleep until morning. In one adventure he killed a lion (sun's unrelenting heat) with his bare hands. He had thirty companions, and thirty, a lunar number, was identified with him in other ways. He typifies man's reliance on his physical being, a victim of hasty passions, the cowardice of friends, and the malice of enemies. He appears in art carrying the Gaza gates, grinding corn, holding an ass's jawbone, pulling down the temple pillars, sleeping with his head on Delilah's lap, turning fiery foxes into corn. He resembles Hercules of Oeta, Kaua, Llew Llaw, Panemerios.

SAMUEL (SAM, SAMMY) (1) Masculine name from the Hebrew, meaning heard of God. (2) In the Old Testament a child of prayer. Son of Elkanah and Hannah. He was placed in the Temple, raised by the high-priest Eli, and became the judge of Israel, administering with vigor and impartiality. He yielded to the people's demand for a king, and anointed Saul. After his death he responded to the summons of the Witch of Endor to answer Saul's questions.

Sammy. Nickname for an American soldier.

SAMUR (SHAMIR) From the Hebrew meaning diamond. Fabulous mountain of diamonds known only to the eagle. In Hebrew lore believed to be a worm capable of boring through the hardest substance.

SAMURAI In feudal Japan a hero, man of honor, stoic, warrior, dedicated to vendetta. One who sought no quarter and gave none. Retainer of a noble, holding land or receiving a stipend of rice as payment. His oath was taken on the spear (male principle symbol), and he remained celibate during the period covered by the oath. When released from his vows he was presented with a cup (female principle). Intercourse during the period covered by the oath was punishable by death.

Samurai woman. A woman who showed joy when informed her husband, son, or lover had fallen in battle. Compare Spartan woman.

SAMVARA (CAKRA-SAMVARA, SHAMVARA) Buddhist tutelary guardian deity of Lamaistic origin. A Yi-dam. Name signifies best happiness. Worshiped for attainment of Siddhi (supernatural powers). Color blue; shown with a four-faced Brahma head, a skull crown on each face, above each crown a cintamani. Emblem, candra. In Tibet called bDe-mchog.

SANBORN Masculine name from Old English, meaning from the sandy brook.

SAN CH-ING (SAN-TSING) Chinese Taoist trinity of the three pure ones, Yu Huang or T'ien Pao, Ling Pao or Tao Chun, Shen Pao or Lao Tzu. All three are considered manifestations of Lao-Tzu or emanations of Buddha, past, present, and future.

SANCHO PANZA In Cervantes' Don Quixote a short pot-bellied, ignorant, but shrewd peasant. Squire of the hero. He is credulous and amusing, a materialist who sees things in their true light. He is full of common sense, and his proverbs have become famous. He rides upon an ass named Dapple. His name is given to any sharp and humorous judge, in allusion to the incident when he is judge of the island Barataria.

SANCUS (SEMO SANCUS) Ancient Italian god of hospitality, marriage, oaths, treaties.

SAND Barrenness, courage, endurance, grit, hope, safety. A great multitude, indefinite number. Dream significance: disappointment, uncertainty.

Build on sand. Build on an insecure foundation, engage in an unstable enterprise; from the parable of the two houses.

Hide one's head in sand. Endeavor to avoid disaster by ridiculous means, as by ignoring its existence, from the supposed behavior of an ostrich when pursued.

One's sands are almost run out. One's death is at hand; in allusion to sand in an hourglass.

Plow the sands. Engage in a futile task.

Rope of sand. Have the appearance of strength, but in reality be useless or worthless.

Sandman. Sleep. In German folklore a bogey who throws sand into the eyes of children who resist sleep.

Sibylline Books. Oracles of mysterious origin consulted by the ancient Roman Senate in times of disaster or emergency. According to tradition nine prophetic books were offered to Tarquinus Superbus, legendary Roman king, by a woman of incredible age who claimed she was Amalthea, the Cumaean sibyl. Disbelieving her Tarquin refused to buy them. She burned three and the next year returned with the remaining six demanding the price she had asked for the nine; again he refused, and she burned three more. When she returned with the last three he paid the price she had asked for the nine, and the sibyl disappeared. The three books were placed in a stone chest in Jupiter's temple on Capitoline Hill, later moved to Apollo's temple on Palatine Hill, and destroyed when Rome burned in Nero's reign. This myth appears to be derived from that of Gunadhya, whose words of wisdom were those of the wind. The cost relates to experience.

SIEGFRIED (SIGFRED, SIGFRID)

(1) Masculine name from the Germanic, meaning peace, victory.
(2) German sun hero. Youngest son of Siegmund and Sieglind, Netherlandic king and queen. He was apprenticed to the wonder smith Mimir who, resenting the prince's arrogance, beauty, and strength, sent him on an errand which involved meeting the dragon Regin (darkness). Instead of succumbing to Regin, he killed the dragon. Eating his victim's flesh, he acquired the power to understand bird language, bathing in the dragon's blood (dawn lights), he became invulnerable except for one spot between his shoulders to which a linden leaf (mark of spring) had clung. Before he killed Mimir (underworld ruler), the smith, in a bargain for his life, gave Siegfried the magic horse Grane (wind) of the race of Sleipner. Siegfried set out in search of adventure and came upon Brunhild, to whom he promised to remain faithful. Later, donning the tarnkappe or mantle of invisibility (clouds) which he had won from the dwarf Alberich, he deceived Brunhild and won her as a wife for Gunther. For the favor Gunther gave the hand of his sister Kriemhild to Siegfried. With the magic sword Balmung (rays) Siegfried conquered the Nibelungen race (mist folk) and took their hoarded treasure (fertility); thereafter he and his followers were called the Nibelungen. He traveled as one of twelve knights (a zodiacal concept). The outraged Brunhild prevailed upon Gunther (darkness) to have Siegfried slain. Hagan (winter), who performed the deed, also robbed Kriemhild of much of the Nibelungen treasure. The legend relates to the yearly vegetation cycle or course of the sun.

The vulnerable spot may also apply to early armor, which left the back unprotected. Parallels Dietrich, Sigurd. See Eating an animal.

SIGMA Eighteenth letter of the Greek alphabet with a numerical value of 200. Previously equivalent of English Z, now the equivalent of S. Resolves into is-igma, i.e. light of mighty mother.

SIGMUND Norse sun hero; youngest son of Volsung. He alone was able to draw the magic sword Gram (rays) from the oak Branstock into which Odin had plunged it (a proof of royalty or divine heritage, and a promise of victory). This aroused the jealousy of Siggeir, husband of Sigmund's twin sister Signy, and Siggeir (winter) caused Volsung and nine of his sons to be slain, and usurped the Volsung throne (barrenness replaced fertility). Sigmund, who had escaped, hid in a subterranean forest dwelling (implying serpent form or the sun in nightly or winter transit). There Signy in disguise came to him, and he fathered Sinfjotli (sun's light). Aided by Signy and his son, he set fire to the palace, and Siggeir burned to death (succumbed to spring sun). By Borghild the father of Hamund and Helgi. When Borghild (evening mist) poisoned Sinfjotli, Sigmund cast her aside. Shortly before he was slain by Lyngé, he married Hjordis, who bore him a posthumous son, Sigurd. Resembles Arthur; counterpart of Siegmund.

SIGURD (SIGIRD) (1) Masculine name from the Scandinavian, meaning war counsel. (2) Norse sun hero, valiant warrior and adventurer. Son of Sigmund and Hjordis; grandson of Volsung. Educated by the dwarf Regin (darkness), who repaired the sword Gram (rays), which he gave to Sigurd, who avenged the death of his father with it. Regin persuaded Sigurd to slay the dragon Fafnir (earth in winter cloak) for the Andvari treasure. Roasting Fafnir's heart, intended for Regin, Sigurd burned his finger, placed it in his mouth, and was able to understand the language of birds (see Eating an animal), who told him Regin had intended that he should be killed by Fafnir's poison (frost), whereupon he killed Regin and retained the treasure, which included the sword Hrotte (rays), helmet of invisibility (clouds), and gold armor (light). The treasure however was cursed to bring disaster (violent death) to its possessor. With the treasures he set out on adventures (traveled across the sky), and found the sleeping Brynhild, to whom he pledged his troth with the ring Andvaranaut (fertility) he had taken from Fafnir. She gave him runes of valor and safety. After he resumed his travels a daughter, Aslog, was born. In the land of the Nibelungs, he was given a potion which caused him to forget Brynhild, and he married Gudrun, by whom he fathered Swanhild. Disguised as Gunnar, Gudrun's brother, Sigurd won the hand of Brynhild for his brother-in-law. When Brynhild discovered she had been deceived she persuaded Gunnar's brother Guttorm to slay Sigurd. In remorse she killed herself on Sigurd's funeral pyre, thus fertile earth died with the sun. SLAUGHTER OF THE INNOCENTS

The massacre of male infants at Bethlehem ordered by Herod when Jesus was born. Warned in a dream, Joseph stole away in the night, taking the child and his mother Mary into Egypt. Feast celebrating the event is called Childermas. Reminiscent of stories of the killing of groups of infants in order to destroy one predicted to become great. The child, usually a sun or fertility hero, escapes the wholesale murder and lives to fulfil the prophecy, a mythological motif suggesting light and verdure replace a sovereignty of darkness and winter. Krishna, Mordred, and Moses escaped a similar fate.

SLAVE Captive of war, debasement, dedication, mental or moral subjection, servility, tyranny.

SLAYING OF A FATHER OR GRANDFATHER BY A SON OR GRANDSON A world-wide mythological incident which typifies the death of the old year, darkness, or winter by the new year, lightness, or spring. Acrisius-Perseus, Balor-Lugh, Laius-Oedipus appear in such tragedies.

SLEEP Carrier of divine messages (dreams), provider of wisdom, refresher.

Sleeper legends. A world-wide motif which deals with a shepherd (sun) who enters a cave (darkness) while tending his flocks (clouds), or a hero who enters a cave to escape a tyrant, and falls into a charmed unbroken slumber, which lasts anywhere from half a century to several centuries. The movements of the sleepers are associated with disaster, sorrow, or seasonal changes, and the seasonal references survive in weather days, such as that of Saint Swithin. The warning that the world will be upset when the sleeper leaves the cave transformed into the popular belief that certain heroes will issue forth in the hour of their country's direst need. In some legends the hero cannot be delivered except by the woman who lured him into the cave, a fertility goddess who appears as the moon or dawn. The number seven, often mystically associated with such tales, suggests the sleepers are the seven brightest stars of Ursa Major. Sleeper legends cluster around Arthur, Boabdil the Moor, Bran, Brian Boroihme, Charlemagne, Endymion, Epimenides, one of the seven sages of Hellas, Frederick of Barbarossa, Harold of England, Helge of Sogn, Mahdi, Merlin, Ogier the Dane, Peter Klaus, Rip Van Winkle, Roderick, Sebastian, Seven Champions of Christendom, Seven Manes of Leinster, Seven Rishis, Seven Sleepers of Ephesus, Thannhauser, Thomas of Ercildoune, William Tell.

Sleeping Beauty. Female counterpart of the male sleeper. She usually personifies the fertile spring maid, who is awakened from her winter sleep by the sun.

SLEIGH Transportation, snow. Laplanders supply a sleigh as a coffin that the dead might have the means of procuring an existence (hunting) in the world of the dead.

Sleigh and reindeers. Christmas.

SOLOMON (SALOMO, SOL, SOOLEMAUN, SULEIMAN)

(1) Masculine name from the Hebrew, meaning peaceful. Each syllable of the name means sun. (2) In Old Testament, son of David and Bathsheba. In popular belief king who symbolizes wisdom as well as human weaknesses. The most wealthy and honored of men, he became proud, plunged into self-indulgence, but finally repented. As a wise legislator compared with Solon. Also interpreted to be the sun, the great fecundator and lover, whose eyes shone impartially upon the just and unjust. In Hebrew lore, he captured Asmodeus and refused to release the demon before he obtained the Schamir (fertility) as a gift, an incident which resembles that of Midas's capture of Silenus. He is assumed to be the mystic Bridegroom of the Song of Solomon. In Moslem tradition he is a dragon slayer, wager of perpetual war against wicked genii, and when summoned from his earthly career, reestablished in the sun to rule a host of radiant fairies.

Solomon's chariot. The assertion that Solomon made it himself expresses the idea that man is the maker of his own destiny. It was of Lebanon wood (incorruptibility); its pillars were of silver (knowledge), its floor of gold (wisdom), its covering of purple (royalty, or blue for truth, red for love). See Carpet for Solomon's Carpet.

Solomon's gift. Prudence, practical wisdom, that which is necessary to a king's office.

Solomon's knot. Complicated form of the swastika without beginning or end; emblematic of Divine inscrutability. Often seen on Celtic crosses.

SOLSTICE DANCES A world-wide practice of agricultural peoples, the summer solstice being a harvest thanksgiving, frequently accompanied by mourning and weeping for the dead or mutilated vegetation deity. See Mutilation. Offerings are made to deities, supernatural beings, or dead ancestors, who are asked to bring back verdure. The winter solstice is celebrated with rejoicing for the birth of the virgin's child (earth's renewal). Fire and round dances are elements of summer and winter solstice rites. Hunters have similar rites at proper seasons for the renewal of animal life.

SOLYMOI (SOLYMANS, SOLYMI) In Greek mythology a fierce tribe (storm vampires) overcome by Bellerophon (sun). Historically the event may allude to a war with the Turks; Solyman (man of Turkey) was a name of Ottoman sultans. Solyma was also the Greek name for Jerusalem. In Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered the name Solyman is given to the Turkish king, one of the bravest of the Pagans slain by Rinaldo.

SOMA Hindu cosmic tree. Its wine, ambrosia of the gods, was offered in libations. A draught of ecstasy, its magic powers cured all ills, provided immortality and poetic inspiration. The archer Krsanu shot at the eagle which carried Soma to earth and knocked off a feather, denoting lightning (eagle) breaking through storm clouds to bring ambrosia (fertilizing waters) to earth. This incident compares with that in which Odin in eagle form steals song-mead. The branch in the eagle's beak parallels the olive leaf in the dove's beak in Genesis. The Soma was one of the two chief Rig-Veda sacrifices, the other being fire. In later myths, personified as an axis god who bears a thousand shafts or as a thousand-eyed (stars) bull who fertilizes the cows (makes rain), gives light, clothes the naked, heals the sick. Also said to be the son of Atri or to have been produced at the churning of the ocean. He married the twenty-seven daughters of Daksha and neglected all except Rohini. For this Daksha cursed him to die of consumption. As Soma weakened all creatures weakened, until Daksha mitigated his curse and decreed the moon, over which Soma ruled, should wane and wax each month. From Soma came the lunar race of kings. In later myths the moon is given a feminine nature although called Soma. Compare Haoma, Manna, Mead, Nectar.

SOMBER WARRIOR In China and Japan one of the four benevolent spirits of the directions. See Kuei Shen.

SOMIN-SHORAI Japanese deity of hospitality. When Buto, the storm god, dressed in rags, asked Kotan, Somin's wealthy brother, for food and shelter, Kotan denied him hospitality. Without recognizing the beggar, Somin, a poor man, welcomed him. To discharge his indebtedness, Buto gave Somin a shimenawa (straw-rope) to hang across his door as a protection against disease. Compare Tsukuba.

SOMMONACODUM Savior god of Siam. Resolves into Is-om-mon-ac-od-um, i.e. essence-of-one-light-of great-hot-sun. Symbolized by a black pyramid.

SOMNUS Roman god of sleep. Son of Nox (night); twin of Mors (death). Shown as a youth asleep in a cave upon an ebony couch ornamented with black feathers or as a pleasant youth carrying a poppy and a horn from which he dispenses sleep. In later times he and Mors became aspects of the same deity, Mors portrayed as vicious and grasping. Identical with the Greek Hypnos.

SOSONDOWAH Literally, great night. In Iroquois legend the hunter.

SOTHIS Same as Sirius.

SOUL Animating life principle, aspiration, conscience, immortality, light within, reason, spiritually, virtue. According to ancients composed of the four elements, air, earth, fire, water, and dwelling in the breath. On earth its purity was impaired; after death its impurities were purged by immersing in water, ventilating in the wind, or refining by fire, whence comes the doctrine that nothing can be annihilated but only changed, the soul by transmigration, matter by transmutation. The Buriats believe each person has three souls, one the Prince of Death captures, one remains a ghost, the other is reborn in another body. Christian soul symbols are dove, small naked figure emerging from a mouth. Egyptian symbols are hawk perched on a mummy, human-headed bird fluttering from a man's mouth, phoenix. Greek symbols are butterfly issuing from the chrysalis, infant, Psyche.

Barely able to keep body and soul together. Try desperately to maintain life; suffer poverty.

External soul. A universal folklore motif. A departing hero leaves his soul with someone who, upon receiving certain signs, as a flower withering, knows that the hero is in danger, and the treatment given the soul revives the hero, thus the soul is a means of resurrection. The soul sometimes hides in an animal, candle, plant, or weapon; if it meets disaster in its temporary abode, the soul's owner suffers a like fate or is warned of danger. Among some peoples the soul leaves the body through the mouth, nose, or in the shadow, causing grave illnesses, especially unconsciousness. Lip and nose ornaments are talismans to keep in the soul as well as keep out evil spirits. Covering the mouth while sneezing or yawning is a soul protection. Veils of Arab women may once have served a similar purpose. Death occurs if a soul does not return. Sometimes it is lured back by a shaman or held for ransom. Thus a soul out of a body may assure the owner's safety or place the owner in danger. See Bata. It is a guardian spirit possessed by everything; earth cannot produce without its soul; if people quarrel in a hut, the hut's soul has left. In the Zohar it is the body's mourner, and for seven days travels back and forth from the grave to the mourning house.

Not able to call one's soul one's own. Entirely dominated by another.

Soul animal. Animal in whom the souls of the dead are reincarnated, or an animal born at a distant place at the same moment as a human child, the fate of one depending on the fate of another. Thus the coexistent double of a mortal, which becomes a totem. Sometimes the doubles represent two phases of nature, such as light and darkness, summer and winter, which depend on each other for existence. See Pryderi.

Soul bell. Tolling intended to be a prayer for a departing soul.

Soul cake. Baked to benefit the dead. Eaten during funeral feasts, offered as a sacrifice during burial rites, placed at graves, shrines, or given to the poor as proxy for the soul. Cannibals eat part of a valorous victim to capture his courage and strength. Cakes are left at tombs in China on Yu-Lan Hui (festival for hungry ghosts) on the 15th of the 7th moon, in Europe on All Souls Day, in Japan on the Bon festival. Eating the divine body is exemplified in the communion rite in Christian churches. In Mexico miniature candy skulls are eaten; this eating of the dead is the obverse of eating for the dead. It also appears in Melanesia, where part of a corpse is eaten out of respect. In the United States, Halloween begging is a related rite, and the threat, "Trick or treat," suggests a penalty if the bribe of sweets is not forthcoming.

Soul candle. Corpse candle to light the way into the netherworld.

meaning aloft, height, and from the Latin, meaning under; resolving into es-us, which yields essence of light. Radical of sausage, sustenance, and sister; equates with 'sus' of Jesus.

SUSANNA (SUE, SUKE, SUSAN, SUSANNAH, SUSIE, SUZANNE, SUZY) (1) Feminine name from the Hebrew, meaning lily. (2) In the Old Testament a beautiful and virtuous woman. Wife of Joachim. Two elders threatened to bear false witness against her when she repulsed their advances after they had seen her bathing. As she was on her way to be executed Daniel proved the two elders had been lying, and they were executed in her place. Probably derived from a moon myth. (2) In Christian tradition the church, lamb, soul after death.

SUSA-NO-WO (SOSANOC, SUSANOO, TAKE OR TAKA-HAYA-SUSA-NO-WO) Literally, brave-swift-impetuous-male. Japanese sea god. Born from the nose of Izanagi. One of a trinity with his sister Amaterasu, sun goddess, and his brother Tsukiyomi, moon god. A fierce-tempered god, with excrement he laid waste his sister's rice garden and by other deeds caused her to hide in the cave Ame-no-Iwato, with the consequence the world was thrown into darkness (suggesting an eclipse). For his mischievous acts he was expelled to Idzumo (Japan), where he saved Kushi-nada-hime, a rice goddess by slaying the dragon Koshi (tides), which yearly devoured a beautiful maiden. In the tail of the dragon he found Kusanagi, the magic sword from which Amaterasu created deities. Later he was expelled to the underworld, and his descendant Okuni-nushi-no-kami became Idzumo's ruler. Creator of numerous terrestrial progeny, among them Idakeru, introducer of seeds. Gloomy, furious, impetuous, strong, he was an agent of darkness and death; also a destroyer of the wicked. He personified rain, thunderclouds, whirlwinds, and was invoked against pestilence and shipwreck. Buddhists worshiped him as underworld lord and identified him with Buto, Emma-O, Gozu-Tenwo, Sampo-Kwojin, and Tsuki-yomi. The ox is his attribute. As a dragon slayer he resembles Heracles and Perseus, as one cast from heaven he resembles Lucifer and Tezcatlipoca.

SU-SHEN Pirates, sea traders. An ancient people of northeastern Sibera, called Vikings of the East.

SUSNA (SUSHNA) Hind drought demon. Indra helps Kutsa to overcome Susna and find the celestial cows (rain clouds).

SVIGDUR Literally, champion drinker. A name of Ivalde as drought demon.

SVIPDAG Literally, shining one. Norse sun hero. Son of Orvandel and Groa, half brother of Ull. He was protected from danger by magic, thus was invulnerable except for one weakness. He traveled into Hel to obtain an irresistible sword (rays), thus one who experienced rebirth. His father, under the name Egil, was a captive of Halfdan, who forced him to shoot an apple from Svipdag's head. With his magic sword he killed Halfdan (darkness) to avenge the insults to Egil and the shame Halfdan had caused Groa. He then rescued Menglod (Freya) from the underworld, and with her entered Asgard, where she became his wife. His legend suggests the yearly transit of the sun. Among his epithets are Amleth (Hamlet), a wronged son; Erik, who with the advance of Christianity became Christ's rival, hence a devil afterwards called Old Erik; Hoder, summer sun; Skirnir, the servant (rays) of Frey. His saga is the source of the Hamlet, Siegfried, Sigurd, and William Tell legends.

Swan maidens. A world-wide folk tale theme in which a swan sheds her magic feathers (mists) when she bathes and becomes a beautiful maiden (sun-lit day). A youth (agricultural lord) steals her feather-robe, she falls into his power, and becomes his wife. Eventually, he breaks a tabu, she regains her feathers, and flies away; thus summer or fertility disappears. Also accounts for the divine heritage of man, and exemplifies the nobility of a celestial being and the greed of mankind, or the desire of man to rise to loftier realms. In some legends the swan maidens are air spirits (winds), bringers of tidings. Related to the motifs beast marriage, beauty and the beast, divine-human marriages.

Swan song. Eternity, happiness after death, martyrdom. The last work of a composer or poet, a last achievement, a last utterance, song of one's own death, in allusion to the song a swan is fabled to sing when dying.

White swan. Perfection.

SWANHILD (SVANHILD) In German sagas, daughter of Sigurd and Gudrun. Fairest of all women, wife of Jormunrek. Sibeche falsely accuses her of adultery with her stepson Randver, and Jormunrek has her trampled to death by four wild stallions. Variouslly interpreted to be dawn, spring sunlight, or summer fertility slain by winter at the instigation of storm, or early morning vapors evaporated by the sun at the instigation of darkness. Thus, she inherited from Sigurd the curse of the Andvari gold. Her story is that of Hippolytus in reverse.

SWAP, SOLOMON A Yankee. From a character in early American dramas. Later called Jonathan, Solomon Gundy, and finally Uncle Sam.

SWASTIKA (SVASTICA) Benediction, divine inscrutability, flame of sacred fire, flight, four cardinal directions or winds, generative power, growth, happiness, health, infinity, knowledge, life, lightning flash, longevity, perfect square, prosperity, rays, strength, sun in daily or yearly rotation, sun followers, swift racer, vitality, whirling motion. With arms pointing to the right a good luck talisman. When the bent arms are to the left the correct term is suavastika or vardhamana (neither generally used) and an unfortunate omen. Small curved top limbs also are unfortunate, suggesting the scythe of death. In occultism: (clockwise) human view; (counterclockwise) divine view. Emblem of rain, sun, and wind gods. The design originated in the Bronze Age, and appeared in all parts of the world except among Semites and Egyptians. Probably inspired by the motion when two sticks are tied together and twirled to create fire, later a representation of two serpents. An early form of the cross; union of four phalli. Related to the fylfot, gammadion, Solomon's knot, triskelion. Symbol of Buddha's esoteric doctrine; appears as one of the marks on Buddha's sole. In China called wan tzu and typifies a benevolent society, also Buddha's heart. It symbolizes mind, resignation, and possesses ten thousand efficacies, suggesting ten thousand or innumerable generations of sons and grandsons. In Germany, with arms to the left and called hakenkreuz (hook cross), the Nazi emblem, instrument of Anti-Semitism, brutality, greed, mass murder, torture. The Jains of India regard it as a symbol of human progress, the upper right arm representing life's lowest stages; the lower right arm representing the soul's evolution through plant and animal life; the lower left arm representing human evolution; the upper left arm representing spiritual evolution, plane at which the soul is freed from matter. In Norse mythology, Thor's hammer Mjolnir.

Sword of a hero. In folk literature the fortunes of a hero, usually a personification of the sky, sun, moon, or another aspect of nature, depend on his sword (rays), made for him by a celestial artisan or given to him by a deity. He acquires it because he has the strength to remove it from a stone or tree (world of darkness), into which a supreme or powerful deity has thrust it and from which no one else has been able to budge it. Sometimes he finds it glistening in water. It possesses procreative as well as death-dealing powers, and its design contains magic. With the loss of his sword the hero dies or, conversely, with the death of the hero the sword disappears, shatters, or becomes the possession of an heir as powerful and brilliant as the original owner. A hero sometimes has more than one sword, suggesting the light of different times of the day or year. Among the most famous in legend are: Angervadil, sword of Frithiof; Arondight of Lancelot; Ascalon of Saint George; Azoth of Paracelsus; Balisarda of Rogero; Balmung of Siegfried; Blutgang of Heime; Caladbolg of Fergus; Chrysaor of Artegai; Colada of Cid; Corrouge of Otuel; Courtain of Ogier, Curtana of Edward Confessor, Durandal of Roland; Excalibur of Arthur; Floberge or Flamberge (flame-cutter) of Charlemagne, Maugis, and Rinaldo; Glorious of Oliver; Gram (also called Branstock) of Siegmund and Sigurd; Greysteel of Koll the Thrall; Haute-Claire (very-bright) of Closamont and Oliver; Hrunting of Beowulf; Joyeuse of Charlemagne; Krees, used in Oriental ceremonies; Kusanagi of Susa-no-wo; Merveilleuse of Doolin; Mimung borrowed from a witch by Siegfried; Mirandoisa of Arthur, Morglay of Sir Bevis, Naegling of Beowulf; Naglering of Dietrich; Philippan of Antony the triumvir; Quernbiter (a foot-breadth) of Haco I and Thoralf Skolinson; Sanglamoire (big bloody glove) of Braggadochio; Sauvagine of Ogier, Schrit of Biterolf, Tizona (the poker) of King Bucar and taken by Cid Tranchera (trenchant) of Agricane; Waske of Iring; Wel-sung of Dietlieb and Sintram; Xelhua, in Mexican mythology; Zuflagar of Ali.

Sword of Damocles. When the courtier Damocles praised the happiness, power and wealth of Dionysius, the tyrant to exemplify the threat hanging over a king invited Damocles to a banquet and during the meal suspended a sword by a single horsehair over his head.

Sword of Victory. In Norse mythology gift of Frey to Gymer, when the giant induced Gerd to become Frey's bride. The loss of the sword by Frey was one of the causes of the downfall of the gods at Ragnarok, thus when the sun lost his rays the celestial deities succumbed to the power of dark forces.

Sword pointing to naked heart. Divine justice, which overcomes all sinners. In Freemasonry symbolizes justice.

TANE (KANE, TANE-MAHUTA) Polynesian primeval deity of forests. He separated his parents, Rangi (sky) and Papa (earth), who were in continual copulation, to give those deities already conceived room in which to move. He raised the sky in three heavens, first to tree tops, then to mountain tops, finally to where it is, and he clothed his father, giving him stars. His wife Hine-tuamange brought forth mountain streams and reptiles, his wife Mumuhango brought forth trees, his wife Ngaore brought forth grass, his wife Rangahore brought forth stone. With earth and spittle he formed Hine-i-tau-ira and married her. When Hine-i-tau-ira discovered her husband was her father, she killed herself in shame and descended to the underworld, where she became goddess of night. Tane went after her, but she refused to return to the upper world. Thus the forest lost its vegetation in winter. In another version he molded Tiki and Hine-ahu-one, and they became parents of the human race. In another version, with Ku and Lono, he created man, and gave the form life by breathing into it. The drum was sacred to him. Resembles Maui, Orpheus, Taaroa.

they may have been mummified oracular heads connected with ancestor worship or were images of Ishtar. Later used in divination. In the middle ages used as talismans. Parallel lares, penates. See Speaking head.

TEREBINTH In the Old Testament the sacred oak in which God or one of his angels revealed himself, hence the word of God.

TE REINGA Polynesian underworld; entered by a leap from Rerenga-wairua.

TEREUS In Greek mythology son of Ares. Husband of Procne, by whom he was the father of Itys. He violated his wife's sister Philomela, and to punish him, the sisters killed Itys and served him to his father. When Tereus discovered the crime he pursued Procne and Philomela, whom the gods transformed into a swallow and nightingale respectively. Tereus was changed into a hoopoe. He personified the rising sun; Procne the dew; Philomela the dawn clouds which greet the sun.

TERLAIN (TERLAIK) Disastrous storms on the Malay Peninsula. Supposedly caused by teasing animals.

TERMAGANT A corruption of tervagant or trivigante, meaning thrice roving, and alluding to the moon wandering under the name Artemis (or Diana) in heaven, Selene (or Luna) with beams on earth, Hecate (or Proserpine) in the lower world. In middle age romances the name applied to one of the fabled idols which Saracens worship. In morality plays the name was given to a violent man in long, flowing Eastern robes, a dress which caused him to be mistaken for a woman, and the name is now applied to a boisterous, scolding wife.

TERMINUS Roman god presiding over boundaries and landmarks. A surname of Jupiter and of Mercury.

Terminal. Originally a single block of stone representing Terminus, later a square pedestal surmounted by an armless and bearded bust of the god. Sometimes called Terminus. Resembles the Herm.

Terminalia. Festival of Terminus. Celebrated on February 23 with the decoration of terminal figures at boundaries.

TERPSICHORE Greek muse of choral song and dance. Portrayed as playing a seven-stringed lyre with a plectrum.

TERVILS Norwegian evil and prophetic demons.

TESHUP (TESHUB) Father and thunder god of eastern Hittites. He carried a hammer. Mate of Shaushka. By western Hittites called Tarku. Resembles Sutekh.

TESSERA Small cube of bone, ivory, wood, etc., used in ancient Rome as a die in gambling or as a token or voucher.

Tessera frumentaria or nummaria. Entitled one to a dole or money.

Tessera hospitalis. Entitled one to an exchange or hospitality.

Tessera militaris. Contained a watchword.

Tesserarian art. Gambling.

Tessera theatralis. Admitted to a theater, designated a seat's position.

TEST World-wide mythological motif in which a hero proves his worth. Often he is an unpromising child or youngest son, who succeeds where better favored or older brothers have failed. He answers a riddle, conquers an adversary, engages in dangerous quest, wins a contest or race. Tests are made by fathers-in-law, jealous relatives, prospective brides, supernaturals, village elders. At stake may be a bride, the hero's life, a kingdom, reconciliation with a lost child. The hero may cross a horizon or pass through a door that opens and closes or is guarded by a fierce monster; he may die and be magically revived; he may be honest or resort to trickery. Most often he is a fertility or light spirit, and his adventures relate to his experiences as he travels through the cycle of the year.

TESTAMENT Covenant, dispensation. Dream significance: omen of death. In Sacred Scriptures the Old Testament treats God's revelations before the advent of Christ, and the New Testament contains those after His advent and regarded as God's interest in human salvation through Jesus. Later used to indicate a human will or disposition of property after death.

TESTICLES Seat of a man's strength. Because of this belief primitive tribes feed the roasted testicles of a captured enemy who exhibited valor to their youths.

TET Same as Tat.

TETEONNAN Literally, all begetter, mother of gods and men. Aztec lunar goddess. Second mother of Huitzilopochtli. An aspect of Ciuateotl.

TETH (THETH) Ninth letter of the Hebrew alphabet, equivalent of English T. Its meaning is serpent; it symbolizes serpent power or cosmic wisdom; its numerical value is nine. According to mystics, its correspondences are: color, yellow; musical tone, E natural; planetary, Mars; symbolic, prudence; tarot, Hermit; zodiacal, Leo. Its direction on the cube of space is north above, representing disintegration of forms by furious activity. Its intelligence is the secret of all spiritual activities. In white magic corresponds to Tahor (pure world) and Cherubim, who preside at the birth of man and inspire him with the light needed to direct him to eternal life. By their ministry guardian angels are devoted to the whole of humanity.

TETHRA In Irish mythology a Fomor king. Undersea lord and war god who aided Bres in the war against the Tuatha De Danann. He owned vast herds and a talking sword, which when captured revealed the deeds it had done. Perhaps a masculinization of Tethys, Pelasgian sea goddess.

Tethra's cattle. Heavenly bodies.

TETHYS Literally, moisture or nourisher. Pelasgian sea-goddess. Daughter of Uranus; wife of Oce-anus; mother of Alpheus, Metis, and the Oceanides. The halcyon was sacred to her. Identical with Thetis.

TETRACTYS Pythagorean mystery of the first four numbers, i.e. $1 + 2 + 3 + 4 = 10$, whence all things supposedly originated. Pythagoreans swore oaths on the holy tetractys, which consisted of ten dots or yods arranged in a pyramid. The top dot, the monad or active principle, represented position; the next two dots, the duad or passive principle, represented extension; the three dots, the triad or world arising from the union of the monad and duad, represented surface; the four bottom dots, the quarternary or world of liberal sciences, represented three-dimensional space. The pyramid was interpreted as birth, growth, prime, death. The center dot with each of the four sides represented the five directions, elements, and senses.

TETRAGRAMMATON In Hebrew texts the four consonants variously written JHVH, JHWH, YHVH, YHWH (Sometimes I is used to substitute for J or Y), representing the ineffably holy name of the Supreme Being (Jehovah). Derived from and combining within itself the past, present, and future forms of the verb to be. Revered as a symbol of the immutable I am. Its potency is that of Aum (see). In the middle ages employed as a talisman, usually on a pentacle. Inscribed by Hebrews on the phylactery. By extension any sacred four-letter word, as Deus, Jove, Zeus; also the number four as a sacred symbol.

Tetragrammaton circle. Ring with three yods and one kamets or tau. Cabalistic symbol of Divine Essence with three hands or three aspects surrounded by infinity. Jehovah as He was, is, and is to come. In Christian tradition the mystery of the Trinity.

TETRAHEDRON Platonic symbol of fire.

TETRAMORPH The four attributes of the evangelists, namely: bull, eagle, lion, man, united in a composite winged figure standing on winged wheels of fire, all wings being full of eyes. Symbolic of unparalleled energy and zeal. Compare Ezekiel.

TEUCER (TEUKROS) In Greek mythology, (1) son of Scammander and Ida. A river deity or rays on water. In some accounts the first king of Troy; thus Trojans also were called Teurcians. Seemingly an aspect of or identical with Tros. (2) Best of the Greek archers in the Trojan War. When his father, Telamon, declined to receive him on his return from the war because he had failed to avenge the death of his half-brother Ajax, Teucer set out in search of a new home and founded the city of Salamis on Cyprus. Personification of light rays.

TEYRNON (TEIRNYON TWRYF VLIANT, TEIYRNON) In Brythonic legend a farmer whose colt is born on May 1, the same night as the son of the king and queen, Pwyll and Rhiannon. A huge black hand snatched away the colt and, running to pursue the thief, Teyrnon found a newborn babe in his doorway. He and his wife raised the child, calling him Gwri (golden-hair). Eventually, Teyrnon heard that the son of the king had been kidnapped, and he gave the boy to his parents, who renamed him Pryderi. Thus fertility was returned to the underworld rulers for the winter. The colt typifies the infant's external soul.

TEZCAQUAHUJTL Literally, mirroring sea or tree of the mirror. Aztec great tree, one of the two pillars holding up the sky. Compare Quetzalveixochitl.

TEZCATLIPOCA (TEZCATEPUCA) Literally, smoking mirror. Chief Aztec and Toltec deity. Son of Coatlicue or of Tonacatecutli and Tzintetl. Originally worshiped as two of the four divine brothers (directions), the red lord of east wind and rain; the black lord of north wind and winter, whose flute lured people to death (cognate with angels blowing their trumpets). With his brothers, Huitzilopochtli and Quetzalcoatl, he made the first man, Cipactonal, and the first woman, Oxomuco. Later he was worshiped as a sun and lightning god, protector of warriors, ruler of the day's tenth hour. A defier of time, he remained eternally young, and sacrificed himself daily to assure light's resurrection each morning. Thus he was the first to visit the underworld and return. He carried a great mirror shield or had an obsidian mirror as a foot. It reflected all mankind's deeds, over which he judged. The mirror represented water's surface or the sky. For sinning against Quetzalcoatl, he was cast from heaven, transformed into a tiger, and finally formed into the constellation Great Bear. As a nocturnal god he appeared as a puppet dancing on his hands, and he sent famines, plagues, and wars, and was patron of thieves and witches. In this aspect he resembles Lucifer and Susa-no-wo. A handsome youth who was feted for a year was sacrificed to him; indicating that riches and pleasures may turn into poverty and death. Occasionally identified as lord of the south and shown with a feather in his hair. Sacred to him were the cock, coyote, skunk, tiger. Among his epithets are: Camaxtli, night which brings day; father of Quetzalcoatl, with whom he remained in constant conflict. Monenequi, he who demands prayers. Moquequeloá, mocker. Moyocoyatzin, determined doer. Nezualpilli, lord who fasts. Teimatini, disposer of men. Telpochtli, youth, potent and unpersuadable. Teyocoyani, creator of men. Texcatzoncatl, straw mirror, agent of a drunken man's mischief. Titlacauan, we are his slaves. Tlamatzincatl, he who enforces penitence. Yoalliehecatl, night wind. Yoamaxtli, night garb. Yaotlneoc, enemy of both sides. Yaotzin, arch enemy.

THE See Th.

THEBE Greek spring nymph. Daughter of Zeus and Iodama (an aspect of Europa); wife of Zethos, who named Thebes, city over which he was king, after her.

THEBES (1) Ancient sacred and capital city of Upper Egypt. Called hundred-gated. In some legendary accounts the Thebans sent two hundred war chariots out of each of its gates; in others, the gates were passageways to eternal realms. Name probably derived from the goddess Apet, by transposing the T in her name; Tape being pronounced Thebai by the Greeks, who named the city. The city's holy name was Nu or Nu-Amon, and in it Amon-Ra was worshiped in ram guise. Compare Belus Temple, Is Temple. (2) Chief city in ancient Boeotia, and a dominant power in central Greece. City of seven gates. In one version settled by Cadmus, in another by Zethos. It incurred the displeasure of Hera, when Semele, a Theban princess, by Zeus became the mother of Dionysus, and the goddess caused the city's destruction. See Seven Against Thebes.

THEFT (1) In an Italian icon personified by a pale youth in a wolf skin. His arms and legs are bare, his feet are winged. In one hand a purse, in the other a knife and picklock. He has a hare's ears.

THEIA (THIA) Greek Titan. Source of light and order. Daughter of Uranus and Gaea; sister-wife of Hyperion; mother of Eos, Helios, Selene.

THEIN Burmese rain nats who live in stars. Showers occur when they leave their houses and engage in battle; thunder and lightning come when their arms clash. When rain is needed a village holds a tug-of-war to arouse them.

THEISPAS Weather or thunder god of the ancient Urartians of Armenia.

THELMA Feminine name; a form of the Celtic Selma; also from the Greek, meaning nursling or sailing vessel.

THEMIS Literally, place. Greek Titan. Daughter of Uranus and Gaea; companion and wife of Zeus, by whom she was mother of Astraea, the Horae, the Moirai. Originally a great earth mother who controlled the cycle of the seasons. She became an oracular goddess, and the righteousness of her deliverances established her as the goddess of divine justice. Usually portrayed as a mature woman holding the sword of justice in her right hand and the scales in her left; her eyes are bandaged because justice is impartial and not blinded by what it sees. In her role of mother-earth, she carries the horn of plenty instead of the sword. Other attributes are books, manuscripts, quills (pens), symbols of law. Identified with Ananke and Tyche.

THEOBALD Masculine name from Old Teutonic, meaning bold for the people, people's champion.

THEODORIC (DEREK, DIRCK, TED, TEDDY, TERRY, THEODORE, THEODOSIUS) (1) Masculine name from the Anglo-Saxon, meaning powerful among the people; from the Germanic, meaning people's ruler; from the Greek, meaning divine gift. In feminine form, Dora, Theodora, Theodosia. (2) Sixth century king of the Ostrogoths; warrior and invader. In legend called Dietrich von Bern; likewise identified with the Germanic thunder god Donar. Also Thjodrorir.

THEOLA Feminine name from the Greek, meaning divine speech.

THEOLOGY Symbolized by altar services, Bible, black robe, cross of Christ, palm branch, rosary beads. In an Italian icon personified by a woman with two faces, a young one glancing heavenward, an old one glancing earthward. She sits on a globe covered with stars. Her right hand is on her breast, her left hand holds up her skirt, under which is a wheel.

THEOPHILUS Masculine name

from the Greek, meaning lover of God.

THEORY In an Italian icon personified by a young woman looking upward, her hands clasped together, a pair of compasses on her head. She wears a purple dress and descends steps.

THERMOPYLAE Forlorn hope, tragic defense; alluding to the struggle in the narrow mountain pass leading from Thessaly into Greece, in which three hundred Spartans were cut to pieces by Persian invaders. Here too Antiochus the Great was defeated by Romans under Glabrio.

THERMUTIS In Hebrew legend the daughter of Pharaoh who found and saved the baby Moses. She was cured of leprosy when she touched the ark in which the infant lay in the Nile waters. Thus the sun cures the sores of famine.

THERSANDER The name of two Greek sun heroes. (1) Son of Sisyphus and Merope; warrior who fought with the Greeks in the Trojan War. (2) Son of Polynices. In the battle of the Epigoni against Thebes, the Thebans were routed, and Alcmaeon, the Epigoni leader, crowned Thersander king of the empty city. Thus a degraded or supercilious ruler.

THERSITES A deformed and scurrilous Greek who fought at the siege of Troy. He was slain by Achilles (sun) for his base and impudent conduct. An aspect of wind. Resembles Conan Maol.

THESAN Etruscan dawn deity.

THESEUS Literally, he who disposes, or of the law. Greek solar hero, son of Aegeus, Athenian king, and Aethre, air goddess; or son of Poseidon, sea god, Aegus being his putative father. Aegeus deserted him, but on reaching manhood, Theseus lifted a great rock, under which his father had placed a sword and sandals (rays and wind). With the trophies he set out for Athens. Enroute he emulated the deeds of Heracles, killing giants and monsters (drought and storm demons). At Athens he thwarted the efforts of Medea (moon) to poison him. As a service to the Athenians he offered himself as a victim to the Minotaur (fertility devourer). Aided by Ariadne (dawn), whom he later deserted, he found his way through the labyrinth (underworld) and killed the Minotaur. Believing Theseus dead, Aegeus jumped into the sea; thus Theseus, the new year or sun, caused the death of the old and fulfilled the doom attached to a fatal child. Theseus fought the Amazons, was one of the Argonauts, and took part in the Calydonian boar hunt, all seasonal myths. Phaedra, his second wife, slandered Hippolytus, his son by the Amazon Hippolyta, and Theseus prevailed upon Poseidon to slay his son. With his friend Pirithous he descended into the underworld to abduct Persephone. Pirithous (vegetation) was detained, but Theseus (aged or winter sun) was set free by Heracles (another sun aspect). Thus Theseus was one resurrected. During his absence sedition had broken out in Athens (city of Athene, the dawn). Failing to quell the outbreak Theseus fled, and died mysteriously. Some interpret Theseus and Pirithous to be twin brothers. Compare Kavi Usan, Perseus, Sacred king under King.

THESMOPHORIA (THESMOPHOROI) Athenian autumn festival held late in October. Celebrated exclusively by married women. Abstinence from sexual intercourse was observed, the eating of the pomegranate seed and the wearing of garlands were tabu, cakes shaped like female sex organs were eaten. The chief ceremony consisted of casting young pigs into a chasm or adytum, whence their decaying remains were later fetched up and sowed in the ground with seed to address Demeter directly and ensure earth's and man's fertility, thus symbolizing, as in the Persephone legend, the annual decay and revival of nature.

THET Egyptian talisman. Girdle of Isis, protection of Isis, Isis' words of power. Similar to the Crux Ansata and the Tat.

THETA Eighth letter of the Greek alphabet, equivalent of English th, with a numerical value of zero. Inasmuch as it is the first letter in thanatos, Greek for death, it was used in passing sentence of capital punishment, hence an unlucky letter.

THETIS (1) Feminine name from the Greek, meaning the determined. (2) Greek ocean nymph. Chief of the fifty daughters of Nereus and Doris. Neither Zeus nor Poseidon, both of whom loved her, would marry her because of the prophecy that she would bear a son greater than his father. She was married to the mortal Peleus, and their son was Achilles (sun). One who had the power to transform herself into different shapes (seasonal or hourly changes), she personifies one who is variable or fickle. The halcyon was sacred to her. See Peleus.

Thetis' hair-stone. Rock-crystal in which is embedded hair-like filaments. A talisman.

THEY (THEM) Society; thus Gretchen in Goethe's Faust does not leave because 'they' wait for her.

THIALFI See Thjalfi.

THIASUS Literally, band. In Greek antiquity a gathering assembled to honor a god with banquets, processions, sacrifices; those in the Dionysia, such as maenads, nymphs, satyrs, Silenii, shown on vases or other art works.

THIEF Dream significance: false friend. A mythological motif, in which the thief is a personification of frost, scorching sun, turbulent sea, underworld, wind, or other decay-causing or violent aspect of nature. Some things stolen are: clouds, fire, herds, light, moon, seasons, sun, vegetation, water. The thief often is despised for his insignificance or weakness, but when he steals no human eye can trace the path by which he flees with his booty, and when his work is done he again appears meek and no one suspects him. He may be a magnanimous trickster, who steals for the purpose of alleviating misfortune; he may plunder from the rich to give to the poor, or to bring lovers together. Some famous legendary thieves are: Agamedes, Apaharvarman, Autolykus, Cacus, Forty thieves, Hermes, Mercury, Robbers of Rhampsinitus's treasury, Robin Hood, Trophonius.

Thieves' Latin. Jargon of thieves.

THIGH Faithfulness, generation, offspring, procreation, sword support. In the occult sciences, anatomical denomination governed by Sagittarius. Thigh flesh was taboo in Mediterranean countries, and the thigh-bones of sacrificial animals were dedicated to deities, the rest of the beast eaten by worshipers.

Hand on another's thigh.

Homage.

Hand under one's own thigh.

Oath, obedience, security.

Hip and thigh. Utterly and irrecoverably.

Human thigh-bone trumpet.

Used in pairs in Buddhist necromantic rites.

Thigh wound. A world-wide mythological motif symbolizing the impotence of a king whose land's fertility is tied to his health. It is an act of sympathetic magic to assure resurrection, i.e. vegetation's return in spring. It dramatizes grain falling before the sickle, nature's withering in autumn, partial destruction of the sun before it sets. It suggests resistance to the introduction of a foreign ritual or the trespassing by a male into a woman's realm. Jacob's thigh was disabled by the angel to show the patriarch that his prevalence was through faith and prayer, not through force. Other mutilated heroes are: Adonis, Fisher king, Hylas, Pentheus, Tammuz.

THIMBLE Insignificance, littleness, picayunishness. Dream significance: quiet happiness.

THING (THINGSTEAD, TING) From the Icelandic, meaning assembly. The meeting of the Norse gods for the making of laws and giving of decisions.

THINGGISHALSANGMA In Tibetan Buddhism one of the five long-life sisters who accompanied Sridevi. Emblems: camara and surya; vahana: mule.

THINGYAN PWE Burmese New Year feast. In Europe called Water Feast. Held in April. Pots of clear cold water are offered to the priests, who wash the Buddha images. Then women and men throw the water on each other, thus honoring each other as sacred.

THINKING CAP Careful consideration, judgment. The allusion is to the cap formerly worn by a judge when passing sentence.

THINNESS Meanness, poverty, sickness. Dream significance: loss of money.

Thin edge of a wedge. An apparently inauspicious beginning that may lead to important consequences.

THIRD Third chasm, eighth circle. In Dante's Inferno the chasm of simonists, who are fixed head downward in the hole of a rock.

Third circle. Dante's Hell of the gluttonous, where icy rains fall.

Third estate. Third social class. It formerly comprised early bourgeoisie, peasants, serfs, yeomen. In France known as tiers état.

Third floor back. A small room in a boarding house.

Third penny. In Anglo-Saxon law the penny taken from every threepence of county-court fines, the perquisite of the county's earl.

Third rate (or class). Inferior.

Third Reich. A reign of terror. Official name of Germany under Adolph Hitler's dictatorship. The term contains medieval mysticism, in which a third realm was understood to be the millennium, and it sets the first Reich as the medieval empire which fell apart in 1806, and the second that of Bismarck, from 1870 to 1918.

THIRTEEN Bad luck, betrayal, contradiction, curse, death, disaster, domination, lack of harmony, negation of fulfilment, ruin. Occasionally believed to be lucky, a number bringing a blessing, or a foreteller of something unusual, but generally represents misfortune. By occultists called The Death. Its vibrations are solar. Its nature is fatal and it produces transmutations. Corresponds to the Hebrew letter mem. It produces understanding, and in a name or cycle denotes spiritual knowledge, truth. In black magic thirteen demons were evoked. Regarded holy by ancients, who did not mention it indiscriminately. This hesitation led the uninitiated to believe it evil. Formerly the year contained thirteen twenty-eight day months with an extra day to adjust to 365. The Celtic alphabet, also related to the year, had thirteen consonants assigned to seasonal trees. The mystic number of Arthur and his twelve knights, Christ and his disciples, Jacob and his sons, Odysseus and his companions, Roland and the French peers, Romulus and his shepherds, the head plus the other twelve parts of Osiris's torn body, and of Christian crucifixion symbols. Mexican number of regeneration (cycle of the year).

Thirteen at a table. Fatality, mishap. The origin of the belief is in Norse mythology. At a Valhalla banquet Loki intruded, making the thirteenth guest, and Balder was slain. Christians confirm the belief with the Last Supper of Christ. In France persons, called quatorzèmes, are available to make a fourteenth at dinner parties.

Thirteen colonies. Original English settlements on the east coast of North America. Formed the original thirteen states: Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Virginia.

Thirteen lunar circuits of the year. Symbolic of quadrature through the seasons.

Thirteenth day of a month. Unlucky. Especially so regarded by sailors, who object to leaving port on the 13th day, particularly if it falls on a Friday. They start a thirteenth voyage with apprehension.

Thirteen treasures of Britain. When Merlin faded from this world he took thirteen treasures, all possessed of magic qualities (fertilizing mists and rays or producers of verdure), with him. They were: basket, caldron, chariot, chess-board, drinking-horn, garment, halter, knife, mantle, pen, platter, sword, whetstone.

THIRTY Carries the influences of three. A path whence astrologers deduce their judgments, as it is the approximate number of days required for the sun's transit through one zodiac sign and for a manifestation of the phases of the moon. According to mystics a person whose name corresponds to thirty is hopeful and patient, inclined to exaggerate, and loves to write. Physical weak spot: throat. By Jarsaxa, father of Magni and Modi; by Sif, father of Thrud. Probably originally an oak deity. Supreme god of peasants and yeomen, whereas Odin was the noble's supreme god. Periodically he lost his hammer Mjolnir (or Thrudhammer), with which he slew implacable foes, the frost giants, and disguised in Freya's gown (verdure), he visited the underworld, where he ate gluttonously and recovered his hammer (strength). Hrungir cast a stone (sun) at him, and it lodged in his forehead. He wrestled with Elli (old age), and almost emptied a drinking horn which was connected with the ocean. At Ragnarok he kills the Midgard serpent, but falls dead from its venom. All seasonal myths. For favorable winds the Vikings sacrificed humans to him. His carved image was carried as a protective amulet. His abode was Bilskirnir (shining moment) or Thrudvang (strong field). He had a red beard, bristling hair, and flames flashing from his eyes. Sometimes he had three eyes. He wore peasant's garb, a belt of prowess, and iron gauntlets. He traveled on foot, on the eight-legged (directions) horse Sleipner, or in a chariot drawn by silver-horned goats, Tanngnjost and Tanngrisnir. Other attributes were bull, fylfot, rowan tree, whale. He gave his name to Thursday. Among his epithets are: Hafra drottin, goat lord; Oku-Thor, wagon Thor; Reidartyr (Reidityr), riding god; Thrudugr, mighty god; Valdi Kjola, wagon ruler. TOBIAS (TOBE, TOBIAH, TOBY) (1) Masculine name from the Hebrew, meaning Jehovah is good, distinguished of the Lord. (2) In the Old Testament son of Tobit. He marries Raguel's daughter Sarah, whose seven previous bridegrooms had been slain by Asmodeus on the wedding night. In the bridal chamber Tobias roasted the heart and liver of a fish that had tried to devour him, and the smoke drove off Asmodeus. Once the wedding was consummated Asmo-deus completely lost his power, and Tobias, accompanied by his bride and dog, left for home, where he applied the fish gall to his father's eyes and cured him of blindness. Tobias personified dawn or spring, who drove off night or winter, and brought renewed sight to the sun. In his battle with Asmodeus, he took the part of a sacred king. The seven suitors probably were surrogates; a mock marriage was one of the ritual deaths in such coronations; thus at the end of eight years his term of office was over. In legend a bridal chamber monster frequently is defeated by means of grateful dead (guardian spirits), thus the dead buried by his father may have aided him. As one who received wisdom and virtue from a fish he resembles Finn MacCoul.

YUGA A measurement of time. One of the four Hindu ages of the world, which together form a Mahayuga or Manvantara. Two thousand Mahayugas make a Kalpa or day and night of Brahma. The night of Brahma endures a thousand cycles of time, after which the god awakens and renews the day of Brahma. The four yugas are: Krita, age of righteousness, when there was one Veda, one rule, one deity, and men lived 400 years. Treta was a fourth less righteous, men performed religious rites for a reward rather than out of a sense of duty, and lived for 300 years. Dvapara saw righteousness decrease another fourth; the Veda became fourfold; men lived for 200 years. In Kali, the present yuga, righteousness has been decreased to one fourth; sacrifice has ceased; calamities, fear, and hunger have increased, and men live to one hundred years. The yuga names have been taken from the sides of a die.

Yuga	Godly years duration	Year's duration man's time	Die side	Corresponding Western age
Krita	4,800	1,728,000	4 dots	Gold

ZEUS Literally, bright or living one. Supreme deity of ancient Greeks. Born at the winter solstice on Mount Ida in a cave in which his mother Rhea (earth) hid to protect him from his father Cronus (time). When Cronus swallowed his other children, Rhea fed her husband a stone as a substitute for the infant Zeus, who was reared in secrecy by the Curetes and Dactyli (winds) and nourished by the she-goat Amalthea (vegetation), whose hide became his aegis. Zeus emasculated and dethroned his father, fought off revolting giants (night and storm demons) and became god of the day sky, thunder, weather, chief of the Olympians, dispenser of justice; thus the embodiment of authority. When warned that the child his wife Metis would bear would be more powerful than himself, he swallowed the pregnant woman (the sky assimilated the sea), and their offspring Athena (dawn and wisdom) sprang from his brain. Hera, his sister, became his second wife. A great begetter, he had many amours, some attributed to the action of natural phenomena, some to the consolidation of his cult with beliefs in localities invaded by his worshipers. By Aegina he fathered Aiakos (fertility); by Demeter, Persephone (spring); by Dia, Pirithous (fertility); by Dione, Aphrodite (love); by Eurynome, the Charites (Graces); by Hera, Ares (ruler of the dead), Eileithyia (child-birth), Hebe (youth), Hephaestus (smith); by Leto, Apollo (sun),

He changed Io into a heifer and fathered Epaphus (calf-god). By shaking his aegis he produced darkness and storms. His attributes are: double-bladed ax, eagle, ether, flame, goat, mountain tops, obelisk, oak, ox, pigeon, pillar, pyramid, ram, scepter, sow, throne, thunderbolt, victory image, wings. Portrayed as a bearded man of imposing mien with thick masses of hair, high forehead, large nose. Uncovered above the waist to denote the openness of upper regions, covered below the waist to denote that terrestrial things are secret or concealed. He typifies one fond of rest and pleasure, greedy, partial, unfaithful, wrathful, and at times unjust, and represents physical force and oppressor of man, as opposed to Prometheus, intellect and champion of man. At Dodona a talking oak (rustling branches) delivered his prophecies. He also revealed his will by birds in flight. In Orphic phiosophy he represents life itself. Epithets are: Agoraios (god of oratory), Boulaïos (god of assemblies), Eleutherios (liberator from Persian yoke), Ephestius (sanctuary guardian), Herkeios (enclosures god), Horios (boundary protector), Ktesios (storeroom or fertility god, source of jar demons in later legends), Marnas (virgin born), Meilichios or Hades (purifier underground), Nephelegeretes (cloud gatherer), Nicophoros (victory bringer), Olympios (administrative intelligence), Ombrios (rain giver), Panemerios (livelong day), Pater (father), Phratris (clan head), Pilos (presider over friendship and moral law), Pistios (covenant protector), Polieus or Basileus (ruler of the state), Soter (preserver), Teleos (family protector), Tritos (wind lord), Xenios (hospitality lord, protector of strangers), Zagreus (resurrection). diluvian king and priest of lustrations. Sun hero. Warned of a deluge, he wrote down all history, the mysteries of ritual, rules of conduct, and deposited the tablets at Sippar, city of the sun-god. With his wife, daughter, and pilot, he escaped in an ark, which grounded on a mountain. The four offered sacrifices; then he disappeared, and in a pious voice from the air instructed the others to uncover the tablets and make them known to all men. In one account he sent out a dove to look for land, all were made immortal, and live on an island beyond the western sea (sunset). Prototype of Noah and Utnapishtim. In a Greek inscription called Xisuthros (Sisythes).

ZIVA (SIVA) Slavic life goddess. In Polish mythology called Zywie.

ZIVAN Masculine name from the Slavic, meaning the rock.

ZIVENA VITZCATL Aztec highest heaven.

ZIZ (ZIV) Primeval giant bird in Hebraic lore. Devourer of vegetation. Corresponds to the Persian Caena-maergha.

ZIZA (ZIZAH) Feminine name from the Hebrew, meaning abundance.

ZIZAL-XIU Mayan sacred plant. Although immortal itself, it supposedly blights anyone or anything that touches it.

ZIZI (ZIZA) Norther European equivalent of Isis.

ZIZITH Fringe or tassel worn by Jews on the outer garment; now chiefly worn on the tallith during prayer. Typifies light rays.

ZIZOLA In Bologna a candlestick Cinderella; also a derivation of Zizi (Isis).

ZLOTABABA Name from the Russian, meaning golden old woman. Idol worshiped by Finno-Ugrians. It was that of a woman with a child on her lap and another child standing by her, and once stood at the mouth of the Ob river. Precious furs were offered to her by hunters who wanted her good will.

ZLUIDNI Slavic malicious fairies. They are appealed to in the curse, "May the Zluidni strike you."

ZMAY Serbian dragon. A legendary lover of a beautiful princess, who transforms him into a handsome youth with supernatural courage and strength. See Beauty and the Beast.

ZMEI GORUINICH Slavic many-headed snake; evil genius which kidnaps mortal maidens. Demon of winter who kidnaps vegetation.

ZMEK (CMOK, SMOK) Slavic penate or guardian angel. Believed to have snake form. Parallels the hospodaricek.

ZOAN (SAU) Royal Egyptian city where Aaron and Moses worked miracles. Destroyed according to Biblical prophecy; ruins mark its site.

ZOAR From the Hebrew, meaning little. City to which Lot retired after leaving Sodom and Gomorrah, and which he prevailed upon God not to destroy by fire. A sacred place.

ZOBEIDE Feminine name from the Arabic, meaning favored.

ZOCHO-TEN One of the four Japanese Buddhist kings, guardian of the south, lord of growth. In Sanscrit called Virudhaka.

ZODIAC Literally, animal circle. Symbolic of celestial glory, complete circuit, dome of light, firmament, halo, lofty sentiments, pathway of fates, round, time. Consulted in horoscope casting, the ascendancy or descendancy of the stars in the houses governing the destiny of a person or state. Field of sun-hero epics.

Lunar zodiac. Circle consisting of twenty-eight star groups associated with the days of the months. Anciently in the Orient marked the moon's progress around the heavens.

Solar zodiac. Sun path, twelve mansions associated with the months of the year, and which anciently corresponded to the twelve constellations bearing the same name. Owing to the equinoxes' precession, each constellation now is in the mansion that has the name next following its own.

ZOE Feminine name from the Greek, meaning life.

ZOHAK Iranian drought monster. Serpent slain by Thraetaona.

ZOHAR Literally, candor. Cabalistic book of splendor; typifies mysticism and science.

ZOMBI In Haitian vodun cult a human whose soul has been stolen by an evil magician. A ghost or phantom.

ZONA Feminine name from the Greek, meaning girdle.

ZOOLOGY Personified by a savant seated and contemplating a parakeet perched on his finger; in the foreground bay leaves, a turtle, and a mastodon's bones.

Zoological signs: Female - circle above a cross; male - circle below a cross or arrowhead; undetermined sex - circle.

ZOPATA Literally, fire father. Italian festival of Saint Nicholas.

ZOPHAR Cynic, false comforter, pessimist, severe judge; from the Naamathite who comforted and admonished Job in his distress.

ZOPHIEL Literally, God's spy. In Milton's Paradise Lost an angel who brings word to the heavenly host that the rebels are preparing a fierce second attack.

ZORA Illyrian dawn deity. Name yields essence of fire.

ZORE Feminine name from the Slavic, meaning princess.

ZOROASTER (ZARATHUSTRA, ARDUSHT) Light hero and prophet. Son of the virgin Dughdova; his putative father was Pourushaspa. The khvarenanh (glory) of Yima was transferred to him. Ahura Mazda revealed the true path to him, and he founded Zoroastrianism. He was falsely accused, but proved his innocence by curing the ill miraculously. Eventually he was slain by demons (spirits of darkness), who had tried to kill him before he was born. He descended into the underworld and after three days ascended to heaven. He left three germs, which were deposited in Lake Kasu, where they are guarded by 99,999 fravashis (stars). Once in every millennium a maiden bathing in the lake will receive one of the germs; thus three Saoshyants (prophets) will be born to bring light and goodness into the world.

Zoroastrianism. Duality; religion in which the forces of light and fertility or goodness, led by Ahura Mazda, are in continuous conflict with the forces of darkness and drought or evil, led by Angra Mainyu. Fire, as the purest of all elements, is its principle symbol; hence the misconception its adherents are fire worshippers. Its Bible is the Zend-Avesta. Originally called the religion of the Magi (sages).

ZTAK Hittite supreme deity. Origin of the words stake, stick, stock. Parallels Sutekh.

ZU Babylonian and Sumerian storm demon, which battles the sun and steals the fate tablets from Enlil, and thus controls the world's destiny. He, in turn, loses the tablets to Marduk. A personification of summer sandstorms. The battle suggests a conflict between the constellation Serpens and Aquila. In later myths a chaos dragon in Tiamat's chain. In sculpture portrayed as a bull to symbolize violent storms which bring fertility; a lion-headed black eagle with a poisonous tooth, i.e. sun's enemy; a winged horse, i.e. winds. Parallels Ahi, Azhi Dahaka, Leviathan, Mushussu, Vishapa.

ZUFUR TUKIAH Moslem talisman. Sacred crutch invariably formed of a combination of letters indicating a deity or holy man.

ZULEIKA (1) Feminine name from the Arabic, meaning fair. (2) Arabian name for Potiphar's wife.

ZUME (TAMU, TUME) Literally, our ancestor. West Indian god who came from the east and instructed the people in agricultural arts. Personification of dawn. Identical with Pay Zume.

ZUNI Literally, human being. New Mexican Indians inhabiting pueblos. A peace-loving agricultural and ceremonious people who value sobriety. By the Spaniards believed to be possessors of great hoards of gold.

ZUPH Hebrew name meaning honeycomb.

ZUTUP Mayan Indian magic herb. It supposedly gives the power of speech to a dumb child.

ZUZIM Literally, stout and valiant men. A race of giants mentioned in the Old Testament. Probably the same as Zamzummim.

ZYA Buriat term for the image of a person drawn for the purpose of working evil magic. Incantations are made over it; then it is hidden near the dwelling of the intended victim, who can escape sickness and death only by a shaman's countermagic.

ZYWIE Polish deity of life.

ZZZ See Z thrice repeated under Z.

PRE FACE

When Gertrude Jobs showed me the manuscript of her Dictionary of Mythology, Folklore, and Symbols, I suggested that as a librarian I would find it helpful if there were a subject index to tabulate the names and attributes of gods, heroes, and abstractions.

Now two years later, Mrs. Jobs surprises me with such a tool. The approximately 22,000 listings in this useful index are divided into two categories. The first part lists deities and mythological characters by their fields of interest. The second part similarly lists mythological affiliations, attributes and things.

Now one can see at a glance one hundred and three personal names associated with music, ranging from the Teutonic, to the Japanese, to the Zuni, to the Celtic, to the Inca. Or, grouped together, one finds fifty island abodes within the broader category of Other Worlds, and spread among equally diverse cultures.

The presentation of this Index is a fitting key to accelerate the use of the Dictionary. It will be extremely useful to librarians, scholars, and indeed to crossword puzzle workers.

A. P. DeWeese
The New York Public Library

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Ever since I have been old enough to use Room 315, the great reading room of the New York Public Library, it has been a second home to me. Most of the research for my Dictionary of Mythology, Folklore and Symbols was accomplished there. When Mr. DeWeese, the Library's Chief of Information, suggested that the Dictionary should be supplemented by a topical guide, the thought of further cutting into time usually devoted to poetry or fiction writing terrified me. But the need nagged, and to free myself of the idea, I organized these tables. An entry may refer to a positive or negative aspect of the category under which it is listed. Each number under "Page" in the tables refers to the page in my Dictionary of Mythology, Folklore and Symbols on which details, such as legends, genealogy, functions, symbolic meaning of activities, etc. may be found.

I would like to say that I am grateful not only to the many fine departments of the New York Public Library, but to Yale University Library, the Library of Congress, to those libraries that sent books on loan to Milford, and to Miss Virginia Walters and the other librarians at the Taylor Library of Milford, Connecticut, for their ever ready assistance.
