INTRODUCTION.

THIS volume appears, I trust opportunely, during the initial signs of a revival of that romantic or supernatural element which is the first characteristic of primitive song-craft in every nation, and is, by a select section of discriminating literary critics, now welcomed as the salvation of modern poetry. Independently of this fact, there can be no need for apology in presenting for the first time to the lovers of phantasy an anthology of the fairy poetry which during six centuries has made beautiful by its gracious melody the minor paths of English song. I propose in this brief introduction to consider the Elfin mythology in its connection with poetry, without attempting an actually critical estimate of the literary value of the fairy flights which follow it; their poetic merit is, for the most part, sufficiently guaranteed by the names which are attached to them—Chaucer and Spenser in the aurora or day-spring of our literature; Shakespeare, Drayton, Herrick, and other masters of melody in the splendour of its meridian light; Hogg, Horne, and Allingham at our own epoch of inspired imaginings.

From the days of Casaubon to Keightley, many conflicting derivations of the word fairy have been proposed by rival etymologists. It is now fairly established that it has come to us from the Latin fatum, through the Romance languages.

A debased Latin verb, fatere, to enchant, was common in mediæval times, and was naturalized in Spain, Italy, and Provence. The French form was faer, fêr. Of this verb, says Keightley, in his masterly "Fairy Mythology," the past participle is faé, fê; hence in the romances we continually meet with les chevaliers faés, les dames faées, &c. From the verb faer, fêr, to enchant, we are told by the same authority that the French made a substantive, faerié, fêrie, illusion, enchantment, a word which was considerably extended in its meaning both before and after its assimilation into the English language, and which came to be employed, not only for illusion, but for the land which was par excellence the home of all gramary, illusion, and envoutement, namely, the Land of the Fairies, for the people who dwell therein, and for every individual member of the elfin tribe.

It is also established, and by this etymology itself, that the original fairy of Frankish poetry and fiction was simply a female initiated into the mysteries and marvels of magic. Such was the mighty Morgue la Fay, the mystic sister of King Arthur, and such, in unconscious accordance with the original tradition, were those fairies of later French romance who delighted our childhood in the graceful and beautiful stories of Perrault and the Countess d'Aulnoy.

The immediate source of the conceptions which are at the base of English fairy poetry must be evidently sought in the romances and legends of early French chivalry, in such delightful, though comparatively unknown, stories as that of the Paladin Huon de Bordeaux, who was protected in direst extremity, and assisted in the successful prosecution of an almost impossible quest by the divine child Oberon, and then in a glade of dews and sunshine, fenced by the mystic darkness of a Syrian forest, was anointed with supernatural chrism, and instructed in the magical sentences which compel the obedience of elf and gnome and lutin, and "crowned King of all Faërie."

Oberon himself, it is true, has a Teutonic origin, and is known to the early Germanic folk-lore by the name of Alberich, Alberon, &c., but the original inspiration of English fairy poetry is derived, as I have said, through the fairy imaginings of the French metrical romancers. By these, the supreme monarch of Elfland, who, despite the suppositious succession of Huon and his own translation to Paradise, continued to spread wide his golden rule as in pre-Provençal days, is represented as a child of four to five years, indescribable in his beauty, sirenian in voice and manner, clothed in a robe which sparkled with all manner of precious stones, and aërially conveyed in a superb, swan-drawn chariot. His palace, with its golden roof and diamond spires, seems to have followed him in his travels, and thus the Land of Faërie was substantially and for the time being in that spot wheresoever which was the tarrying-place of the Grand Master of the Elfin World.

Side by side with the fays of poetry and chivalrous history there persisted, in spite of the general diffusion of Christianity, the old spiritual traditions of the Gothic and Celtic nations, concerning the Elves, Trolls, Brownies, malignant or benevolent dwarfs, gnomes, and generally diminutive beings gifted with supernatural powers and of an other than mortal origin. These two hierarchies of supernal beings were confused in the popular imagination; the magical abilities which could only be painfully acquired by humanity were identified with the magical prerogatives which were inherent in the natures of Kelpie, Elf, and Ghoul, and the mystical combination produced that new, glorious, and beautiful hierarchy of semi-spiritual essences which was governed by the elfin Oberon.

The discrepancies in fairy traditions, as preserved in English poetry, may be partly accounted for by the fact of this confusion. We find the most eminent fairy authorities in distinct disagreement on several important points. Spenser, the poet of the elfin world par excellence, in his account of the "Rolls of Elfin Emperours," deduces all Faërie from the man-monster created by Prometheus. Shakespeare, on the other hand, refers them to an Indian origin, and the dictionaries of Fairy Mythology, in accordance with this supposition, fix his abode in India, and represent him nightly crossing the intervening seas with inconceivable rapidity to dance in the western moonlight. The oriental origin of magic was generally recognized at a very early period of European gramary; the original fairies of romance received their wisdom from Persia and from India, and after the transfiguration of the elfin world by the confusion of the several spiritual conceptions already noticed, it is easy to see how an eastern source was attributed to the later fairy lineage. But on this point it must also be remembered that the Crusades were undoubtedly the means of acquainting western poets with the rich fountains of oriental romance, and that the general similarity between the Persian Peri and our own fairy, as well as the substantial identity of many supernatural fictions which are popular both in the West and the East, are a sufficient warrant for attributing a part of this very transformation to the glamorous influence of Arabian imaginations.

The classical alternative which is offered by the poet-chronicler of Fairydom has also a base in fact. The Elizabethan age commonly identified the fairies of Gothic superstition with the classic nymphs who attended Diana, while the elfin queen was Diana herself, and was called by one of the names of that goddess, that is, Titania, which is found in the metamorphoses of Ovid as a title of the uranian queen. This opinion also originated with the romance-writers. Chaucer identifies the fairies with the inhabitants of the Latin Infernus—

Pluto that is King of fayrie . . .
Proserpine and all her fayrie, &c.

The tradition spread widely, and found during the early part of the fourteenth century a voice of poetic beauty in the lovely Scotch fairy-tale of "Orfeo and Heurodis," which represents the Greek master of mystical song-craft as a "Kinge in Ingland, who abode in Traciens, or Winchester"—

The King hadde a quen of priis
That was y cleped dame Herodis,
The finest leuedi for the nones
That might gon on bodi and bones,
Full of love and of godinesse
Ac no man may tell hir fairnesse.

On a certain morn of May, Heurodis, Eurodis, or Eurydice repaired with two of her maidens "to play bi an orchard side," in the neighbourhood of the palace—

To se the floures sprede and spring,
And to hear the foules sing.

She fell asleep on the green, and when she awoke it was in a state of frenzy which frightened her virgins away, and they ran back to alarm the whole palace.

She was borne from the orchard to her bed by a long train of knights and ladies, and was visited by the distressed king, whom she informed, amidst great lamentations, that she must go from him—

As Ich lay this under tide,
And slepe under an orchard side,

There come to me to fair knightes
 Wele y armed al to rightes,
 And bad me comen an heighing,
 And speke with her lord the king ;
 And Ich answered at wordes bold,
 Y durst nought, no y nold :
 Thai pinkd oghain as thai might driue,
 Ther com her king also bliue,
 With an hundred knightes and mo,
 And damissels an hundred al so ;
 Al on snowe white stedes,
 As white as milke were her wedes,
 Y no seighe yete bifore
 So fair creatours y core !
 The king hadde a crown on hed,
 It nas of silver, no of gold red,
 Ac it was of a precious ston ;
 As bright as the sonne it schon :
 And as son as he to me cam,
 Wold Ich, nold Ich, he me nam,
 And made me with him ride,
 Opon a palfrey by his side,
 And brought me to his pallays,
 Wele attired in ich ways ;
 And schewd me castels and tours,
 Rivers, forestes, frith with flours ;
 And his riche stedes ichon,
 And sith then me brought oghain hom,
 Into an owhen orchard,
 And said to me afterward :
 Loke dame ! to morowe that av be Right here under this ympe tree ;
 And than thou schalt with ous go,
 And live with us ever mo,
 And yif thou makest ous y let,
 Where thou be, thou worst y set,
 And to tore thine limes al,
 That nothing help the no schal,
 And thei thou best so torn,
 Yete thou worst with ous y born,

The power of the Fairy King over the royal lady of earth appears to have been given him in virtue of her slumber beneath an elvish tree, which, though growing in her husband's orchard, made the surrounding grass-plot the property of the elvish world. Orfeo repaired on the morrow to the "ympe-tree," accompanied by a thousand knights, resolved one and all to die, if it were necessary, ere the queen should go from home; but on reaching the fay-bound place Heurodis, in the midst of the whole company, was spirited suddenly away. The king in his misery vowed never again to look upon the face of a woman, and retired into the wilderness with his harp, which subdued by its magical melody the fierce beasts that abounded on every side. This wilderness eventually proves to be a summer resort of the Fairy King. Orfeo beholds distant visions of elfin hunters, elfin knights and ladies at the dance, and then on a certain day of supreme election he falls into the hands of a joyous bevy of elfin damsels, among whom he recognizes his own Heurodis. Their mutual emotion betrays him, and she is carried swiftly away by her companions. Orfeo pursues the bright band with lyre and lamentations; a rock opens before them; he follows them into it, and thus reaches Fairy Land.

He com into a fair cuntry,
 As bright soonne somers day,
 Smothe and plain and al grene,
 Hill no dale was none ysene.
 Amiddle the lond a castel he seighe,
 Rich and reale and wonder heighe;
 Al the utmust wal
 Was cler and schine of cristal;
 An hundred tours ther were about,
 Degiselich and bataild stout;
 The butrass come out of the diche
 Of rede gold y arched riche;

The housour was anowed al,
 Of ich maner divers animal ;
 Within there wer wide wones
 Al of precious stones,
 The worss piles on to biholde,
 Was al of burnist gold :
 Al that lond was ever light,
 For when it schuld be therk and night,
 The riche stonnes light gonne,
 Bright as doth at none the sonne :
 No man may tel no thenke in thought
 The riche werk that ther was wrought.

This description corresponds on the whole with the general drift of legend, which represents the Land of Faërie to be situated beneath the ground, so that the true elfin court is a subterranean pageantry—a point which is commonly ignored by modern fanciful writers.

The castle which Orfeo entered appears to have been a general receptacle for things and persons who had been spirited away from earth, or had in any way suddenly disappeared.

Ther he seize his owen wiif,
 Dame Heurodis, his liif liif,
 Slepe under an ympe-tree ;
 Bi her clothes he knewe that it was sche.

He did not, however, at once claim his bride, but repaired to the royal hall where the king and queen of fairyland were seated in a bright and blissful tabernacle, their crowns and vestures almost blinding him by their splendour. Orfeo performs in their presence on his harp, and wins such admiration from the king, that, with Herodian prodigality, he is promised whatever he may demand. The restitution of Heurodis is, of course, the favour in question, and the musician-monarch returns out of Fairyland with a wife beautified more than ever by the gramary of the elfin atmosphere, and, unlike the classical hero, successfully closes his quest by resuming his royal authority.

The entrance of several elements all foreign to each other into the later conception of Fairyland has assisted in the creation of other confusions besides the conflicting accounts of the elfin lineage. "Most spirits," says a writer in Chambers's Journal, "could contract and diminish their bulk at will, but the fairy alone seems to have been regarded as essentially small in size. The majority of other spirits, such as dwarfs, genii, &c., are represented as deformed creatures, whereas the fairy has almost uniformly been described as a beautiful miniature of the human being, perfect in face and form." This statement, however, is not even generally correct; it is contradicted continually in legends and poetry alike. It is evident, for instance, that the "Queene of Faire Elfland," with whom the immortal Rhymer of "bonny Ercildoune" performed his "mirk night" journey into Fairyland, was a spirit, at any rate, approaching the common stature of humanity. Such also were the elfin emperors of Spenser, and such the fay ladies whom Dryden celebrates in his magnificent modernized version of Chaucer's "Flower and the Leaf," and who were simply departed human beings in a certain state of bondage. The inhabitants of the Elfin World, and generally all classes of nature-spirits, are poetically depicted in all forms and sizes at the will of the bard or romancer, and are sometimes identical with the original human fairy of the Arthurian and Charlemagne cycles, sometimes with the diminutive good people of Gothic lore. These formal discrepancies originated in time a harmonizing tradition which well enters into the spirit of fairy mythology. In the fine ballad of "The Young Tam-lane," that elfin knight, who had passed from mortality into fairyhood, informs his mistress that he can quit his body when he pleases, and inhabit either earth or air.

Our shapes and size we can convert
To either large or small ;
An old nut-shell's the same to us
As is the lofty hall.

The religion professed in the elfin world is another debated point. According to Chaucer, the book, and bell, and holy water, the matins and other prayers of monks and limitours, had, even in his day, thoroughly exorcised the fairies, and improved them off the face of the earth, a statement which may be true enough in the case of the trolls and the brownies, and other survivals of heathen times.

In olde dayes of the King Artour,
Of which that Bretons spoken gret honour,
All was this lond fulfilled of faerie ;
The elf-quene, with hire joly compaignie
Danced ful oft in many a grene mede.
This was the old opinion as I rede ;
I speke of many hundred yeres ago ;
But now can no man see non elves mo,
For now the grete charitee and prayeres
Of limitoures and other holy freres,
That serchen every land and every streme,
As thikke as motes in the sonne beme,
Blissing halles, chambres, kichenes, and boures,
Citees and burghes, castles high, and toures,
Shropes and bernes, shepenes and dairies,
This maketh that ther ben no faeries :
For ther as wont to walken was an elf,
Ther walketh now the limitour himself,
In undermeles and in morweninges,

And sayth his matines and his holy things,
 As he goth in his limitatioun.
 Women may now go safely up and down,
 In every bush, and under every tree,
 Ther is non other incubus but he,
 And he ne will don hern no dishonour.

But Bishop Corbet, writing in the days of the Restoration, testified that the fairies "were of the old religion," and that since the advent of Protestantism and Elizabethan glories they had departed hence. Herrick, however, adopts a middle course.

Now, this the fairies would have known,
 Theirs is a mixed religion :
 And some have heard the elves it call
 Part Pagan, part Papisticall.

Intimately associated with the reigning Potentate of Fairyland, the monarch Oberon, and a person of, in some respects, more considerable importance, was the moonlight queen of elves, who is more or less identified by Chaucer, Shakespeare, and the romance of "Orfeo and Heurodis" with the queen of the classical Avernus, Prosperine, but who is distinguished by Drayton from that goddess in his poetic romance of "Nymphidia," and who, as a matter of actual fact, is a combination of several mythological elements.

In the most ancient traditions we have glimpses of a time when this fair and glorious lady alone occupied the faëry throne, and, as in the case of Sire Thopas, was occasionally sought by human lovers. Shakespeare gives her the classical name of Titania, who is commonly identified with Mab, but their characters are sufficiently distinct. The latter, according to Keightley, has completely dethroned Titania, a statement which is scarcely borne out by the facts, for Mab was a person of general celebrity long before the appearance of the "Midsummer Night's Dream," which contains the first mention of the rival sovereign. The herald and messenger of the royal pair was the tricky sprite indifferently known as Puck, Hobgoblin, and Robin Goodfellow, and who must also perhaps be identified with "the illusory candle-holder," Jack o' Lantern, or Will o' the Wisp, whose fatal phosphorescent light is, in "Paradise Lost," described as

A wandering fire,
Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night
Condenses, and the cold environs round,
Kindled through agitation to a flame,
Which oft, they say, some evil spirit attends,
Hovering and blazing with delusive light,
Misleads the amazed night-wanderer from his way
To bogs, and mires, and oft through pond and pool.

Book the Ninth.

The different hierarchies of fairy spirits who are supposed to be in relation with man may be grouped broadly into three general divisions:—1. Land Fairies. 2. Sea Fairies. 3. Elfin dwellers of the underworld. In the first class will be included such inhabitants of grove and forest as the lovely Korrigan of Brittany, the Moss Folk of Germany, and the Elves proper of English traditional poetry. It will include the fairies of field and meadow, such as the Lutin of Normandy, the Little Monk of Neapolitan legends, the Good Neighbours of Scottish lore. It will comprise the domestic faires who, under the name of Pixies, haunt our Cornish farms and homesteads, the Caledonian Brownie, the Germanic Kobold, and the Niss of Scandinavian legend. The Neckan and Merman are familiar instances of the nature-spirits included in the second division. The elves of the underworld—the trolls, dwarfs, wild-women, and still-folk of Germany, Scandinavia, and Switzerland—are unrepresented in English tradition and poetry, though in most of our early romances the Land of Faerie is supposed to be underground. Modern imagination has added many supernatural characters to those of ancient legend. Some of its most graceful conceptions—its flower fairies, and sprites of the twilight—are included in this volume.

Besides the story of Orfeo and Heurodis, there are several ancient English metrical romances which are concerned with adventurous quests and travels into Fairyland. Their archaic form and considerable length naturally exclude them from a popular anthology, but this introduction may fitly close with an abstract of one which is singularly beautiful in conception and in high repute among discerning students of our early poetical literature.

The “Romaunt of the Knight Launfal,” by Thomas Chestre, is an amplified version of an antique Lay by Marie de France, a Norman poetess, who flourished in the thirteenth century. It is concerned with a “bachelor” named Launfal, who for generosity and largesse was made steward at the court of King Arthur, and was chosen by Merlin to bring home the king’s bride, Gwennere. The mission was undertaken by the knight—

But syr Launfal lyked her noght. . . .
 For the lady bar bos of swych word,
 That sche hadde lemanny under her lord,
 So fele there was noon ende.

After the marriage of Arthur, Launfal took leave of the court and repaired with two knights to Karlyoun, where he tarried, making good cheer for a year's space, till he came to the end of his resources. His boon companions then forsook him, and he fell into great poverty. In this strait he borrowed a saddle and bridle from the mayor's daughter, and rode away westward.

The weather was hot ; he dismounted in a fair forest, and sat in the shadow of a tree, covering his worn garments with his mantle. After a space, two "gentyll maydenes," wearing kirtles of Indian sandel and green mantles bordered with gold, appeared before him.

Har faces wer whyt as snow on downe,
 Har rode was red, hern ey were browne,
 I sawe never non swyche ;
 That oon bar of gold a basyn,
 That other a towayle whyt and fyn,
 Of selk that was good and ryche.

They came to him over the heath ; he greeted them in all gentleness, while on the part of their lady, dame Tryamour, they returned his salutation, and invited him to follow them and speak with her. He courteously consented, and was conducted to an honourable pavilion, enriched with gold and crystal, as well as radiant carbuncles.

He fond yn the pavyloun
 The Kynges doughter of Olyroun,
 Dame Tryamour that hyghte,
 Her fadyr was Kyng of fayrye,
 Of occient fer and nyghe,
 A man of mochell myghte.
 In the pavyloun he fond a bed of prys
 Theled with purpur bys,
 That semylé was of syghte,

Therinne lay that lady gent,
 That after Syr Launfal hadde ysent,
 That lessome lemede bryght.
 For hete her clothes down sche dede,
 Almost to her gerdyl stede,
 Than lay sche uncovert,
 She was as whyt as lylve yn May,
 Or snow that sneweth yn wynterys day.
 He seyght never non so pert.
 The rede rose, whan sche ys newe,
 Ayens her rode nes naught of hewe,
 I dare well say yn fert.
 Her here schon as gold wyre,
 May no man rede her attyre,
 Ne naught well thenke yn hert.

This fay lady informed Launfal that there was no man in all "Christenté," be he king or emperor, whom she loved as much as himself, at which words the knight was inflamed with reciprocal passion,

And kiste that swete flour ;
 And sat adoun her bysyde,
 And seyde, Swetyng, what so betyde,
 I am to thyn honour.

She tells him that she is acquainted with his present distress, and that if he will truly forsake all women for love of her, she will enrich him inexhaustibly—

I wyll the yeve an alner,
 Imad of sylk and of gold cler,
 Wyth fayre ymages thre ;
 As oft thou putttest the hond therinne,
 A mark of gold thou schalt wynne,
 In wat place that thou be.

She also promises him her steed Blanchard and her squire

Gyfre, with the additional advantage of her protection by magic art from dangers of war or tournament.

Sir Launfal entered into the agreement ; they supped and slept together, and in the morning she dismissed him, warning him not to boast of his conquest if he wished to retain her love. He returned to Karlyoun, and was presently waited on by ten men, riding upon sumpters, and bearing gold, silver, rich garments, and bright armour. Once more he kept great cheer, but this time it was the poor and unfortunate whom he entertained. His reputation became so great that a tournament was cried in the town to do him honour. The knight closed it with a rich and royal feast which lasted a fortnight. During all this time he was visited nightly by his elfin mistress, but was destined now to be divided from her by the challenge of a chevalier in Lombardy, who sent messengers praying him to cross the sea and take jousts with him for the honour of his lady. The challenge was accepted by Launfal, who repaired with his steed and his squire to Lombardy, and achieved so brilliant a victory that he was envied by "all the lords of Atalye," who vowed revenge for the defeat of their comrade, but were themselves slain in great numbers, and the hero returned into Britain. The reputation of Launfal reached the ears of King Arthur, who sent for him. A feast of forty days took place, during which the queen took occasion to avow the passion that had long consumed her for the handsome cavalier who had conducted her to her bridal home ; but the knight Launfal, faithful to his fairy mistress, repelled her advances, and the unexpected indignity, changing love into hatred, impelled the false wife to denounce Launfal to her husband as her attempted seducer. The infuriated monarch vowed his immediate death, and the unfounded accusation prompted the knight to boast for the first time of that mysterious mistress whose supernatural beauties he declared did utterly transcend and eclipse those of the royal lady. On the intervention of certain illustrious knights—Gawain and Percivall—a respite of a twelvemonth and a fortnight was granted Launfal in order that he might produce his mistress, when, if his assertions were seen to be obviously true with regard to her wonderful charms, he should receive his pardon. But the unfortunate lover had broken his compact, he had boasted of his elfin lady, his horse and squire had vanished, the time mentioned drew rapidly to its close; in truth, the day came when Launfal must pay with his life the forfeit of his supposed crime, and Triamour apparently had left him to his fate.

The knights of the round table, who knew well the character of their queen, began plotting his rescue, and arranging for his flight across the sea, when “ten maidens bright of ble” came to the royal castle, the avant coureures of a lady against whose arrival King Arthur courteously appointed his fairest chamber, and then summoned his barons

For to yeve judgment
Upon that traytour full of pryde.

Other ten maidens at this juncture rode up and, speaking apart with the monarch, announced the approach of the Lady Triamour. The queen, coming forward, urged her spouse to avenge her on Launfal; but

As the quene spak to the kyng,
The baronns seygh come rydyng
A damesele alone,
Upon a whyt comely palfrey,
They saw never non so gay
Upon the grounde gone.

As rose on rip her rode was red,
 The her schon upon her hed,
 As gold wyre that schyneth bryght ;
 Sche hadde a cronne upon her molde,
 Of ryche stones and of golde,
 That lossom lemede lyght.
 The lady was clad yn purpere palle,
 With gentyll body and myddyll small,
 That semely was of syght,
 Her mantyll was furryth with whyt ermyrn,
 Ireversyd jolyf and fyn,
 No rychere be ne myght.
 And when Launfal sawe that lady,
 To alle the folk he gon crye an hy,
 Both to yonge and olde,
 Her, he seyð, comyth my lemman swete,
 Sche myghte me of my balys bete,
 Yf that lady wold.

The lady rode into the hall, into the presence of the King, his queen, and all her damsels. The maidens who had heralded her approach crowded round her, and assisted her to dismount. Arthur greeted her, and she returned his salutation with sweet and valorous words. She informed the monarch of her mission,

 To shere Launfal the knyght,
 That he never, yn no folye,
 Besofte the quene of no drurye,
 By dayes ne by nyght. . . .
 He bad nacht her, but sche bad hym,
 Here lemman for to be.

The king having confessed that she was fairer and brighter than his wife—

Wyth that dame Tryamour to the quene geth,
 And blew on her swych a breth,
 That never eft myght sche se.

The lady lep on hyr palfrey
 And bade hem alle have good day,
 Sche nolde no longere abyde ;
 Wyth that came Gyfre all so prest,
 Wyth Launfal's stede out of the forest,
 And stod Launfal besyde.
 The knyght to horse began to sprynge,
 Anoon without any lettynge,
 Wyth hys lemman away to ryde ;
 The lady took her maydenys achon,
 And wente the way that sche hadde er gon,
 Wyth solas and wyth pryde.

She carried her lover to a "jolyf ile," called Olyroun ; and on a certain day in every year you may still see the horse of the knight Launfal, and hear his loud neighing, as he goes wearily seeking his master, who, in all truth, was taken into fairyland, and

Seththe saw hym yn thys lond no man,
 Ne no more of hym tells y ne can,
 For sothe, wythout lye,

as Thomas Chestre avers in his valedictory lines.

This little volume is devoted to a sweet and delightful section of poetic fancy, and not to the lofty flights of inspired imagination. It is full of felicity and beauty, and though not a tabernacle enshrining the rarest gems, it is a storehouse of dainty devices. If individual poems are occasionally found to fall below the general level of their writers, as perhaps in the case of Herrick, an explanation will possibly be seen in the unserious spirit with which the subject has been too frequently approached by our English poets, who have generally represented a class superior to the superstitions and sometimes to the faiths of the time. In such cases as that of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, for whom the doctrine of spiritual essences was still true, for whom those elemental intelligences

Which have their haunts in dale and piny mountain,
Or forests, by slow stream or tingling brook,

still survived in the "faith of reason," we find the concentrated strength of a vivid and mature imagination devoted to the production of a true fairy poem which is "not for an age but for all time."

A word, in conclusion, must be said on the arrangement of this anthology. The absence of a sufficiently harmonious development of fairy fancy as it is found in our English poetry does not warrant a simple chronological plan; I have adopted another which I trust will contribute towards the attractiveness and literary value of the book. It opens with a foreview, or bird's-eye prospect of the fairy country, as it might be beheld by the traveller from without. A prelude follows, which implores the return of its inhabitants into the world of humanity. Then, in the first division there is a particular account of the court, country, and people of Fairyland, of its temples, palaces, and festivals. The second division contains the Chronicles of Fairyland, a series of pleasing poetic romances, where the scene is laid in the Fairy country and the actors are exclusively elfin folk. A third division is devoted to those wonderful and mystical travels or spiritual pilgrimages into Fairyland, which have been occasionally undertaken by favoured and adventurous mortals. The section entitled Men and Fairies comprises those poems and romances in which the different orders of elfin spirits enter into communication with man and mingle in the life of earth, dispensing supernatural benevolence, or working unheard-of woe, according to their various dispositions. Some poems which cannot be included in the foregoing divisions, but deserve by their merits a place in this elfin anthology, are comprised in a miscellaneous section. The work closes with an epilogue, which shows why the fairies have departed, and what are the conditions of their return.

My best thanks are due to Mr. Robert Buchanan and to Mr. William Allingham for their permission to insert several graceful poems ; to Mr. Philip James Bailey for the use of his mystical "Fairy Tale" ; to Dr. Charles Mackay for similar kindness in respect of his "Kelpie of Corrievreckan," and to a number of recent writers who have generously contributed to the adornment of this collection. The omission of several poems by illustrious contemporary writers, whose copyrights are vigilantly protected by their publishers, will be viewed by indulgent readers as a matter of necessity, however much it may be regretted.

THE FOREVIEW.

FAIRYLAND.

DIM vales, and shadowy floods,
And cloudy-looking woods ;
Whose forms we can't discover
For the tears that drip all over ;
Huge moons there wax and wane—
Again, again, again—
Every moment of the night,
For ever changing places ;
And they put out the star-light
With the breath from their pale faces.
About twelve by the moon-dial,
One more filmy than the rest
(A kind which, upon trial
They have found to be the best)
Comes down—still down—and down
With its centre on the crown
Of a mountain's eminence ;
While its wide circumference
In easy drapery falls
Over hamlets, over halls,
Wherever they may be—
O'er the strange woods, o'er the sea,
Over spirits on the wing,
Over every drowsy thing—
And buries them up quite
In a labyrinth of light ;
And then, how deep !—O, deep,
Is the passion of their sleep !

In the morning they arise,
And their moony covering
Is soaring in the skies,
With the tempests as they toss,
Like—almost anything,
Or a yellow albatross.
They use that moon no more
For the same end as before—
Videlicet a tent—
Which I think extravagant :
Its atomies, however,
Into a shower dissever,
Of which those butterflies
Of earth, who seek the skies,
And so come down again,
(Never contented things !)
Have brought a specimen
Upon their quivering wings.

EDGAR ALLAN POE.

PRELUDE.

FAIRIES' RECALL.

WHILE the blue is richest
In the starry sky,
While the softest shadows
On the greensward lie,
While the moonlight slumbers
In the lily's urn,
Bright elves of the wild-wood !
Oh ! return, return !

Round the forest fountain,
On the river shore,
Let your silvery laughter
Echo yet once more ;
While the joyous bounding
Of your dewy feet
Rings to that old chorus :
" The daisy is so sweet ! "

Oberon, Titania,
Did your starlight mirth
With the song of Avon
Quit this work-day earth ?
Yet while green leaves glisten,
And while bright stars burn,
By that magic memory,
Oh, return, return !

MRS. HEMANS.

THE FAIRY FAMILY.

THE ROLLS OF ELFIN EMPEROURS.

PROMETHEUS did create
A man of many parts from beasts deryv'd,
And then stole fire from heven to animate
His worke, for which he was by Jove depriv'd
Of life himselfe, and hart-strings of on ægle ryv'd.

That man so made, he called Elfe, to weet
Quick, the first author of all Elfyn kynd ;
Who, wand'rin through the world with wearie feet,
Did in the Gardins of Adonis find
A goodly Creature, whom he deemd in mynd
To be no earthly wight, but either spright
Or angell, th' author of all woman kynd ;
Therefore a Fay he her according hight,
Of whom all Fayres spring, and fetch their lignage right.

Of these a mighty people shortly grew,
And puissant kinges, which all the world war-rayd,
And to themselves all nations did subdew.
The first and eldest, which that scepter swayd,
Was Elfin ; him all India obayd,
And all that now America men call :
Next him was noble Elfinan, who laid
Cleopolis' foundation first of all,
But Elfiline enclosed it with a golden wall.

His sonne was Elfinelle, who overcame
 The wicked Gobbelines in bloody field ;
 But Elfant was of most renowned fame,
 Who all of crystall did Panthea build :
 Then Elfar, who two brethren gyaunts kild,
 The one of which had two heads, th' other three ;
 Then Elfinor, who was in magick skild ;
 He built by art upon the glassy see
 A bridge of bras, whose sound heven's thunder seemed to be.

He left three sonnes, the which in order raynd,
 And all their offspring in their dew descents ;
 Even seven hundred princes, which maintaynd
 With mightie deeds their sondry governments,
 That were too long their infinite contents
 Here to record, ne much materiall ;
 Yet should they be most famous moniments,
 And have ensample, both of martiall
 And civil rule to kings and states imperiall.

After all these Elficleos did rayne,
 The wise Elficleos ! in great maiestie,
 Who mightily that scepter did sustayne,
 And with rich spoyles and famous victorie
 Did high advaunce the Crown of Faëry.
 He left two sonnes, of which fayre Elferon,
 The eldest brother, did untimely dy,
 Whose empty place the mighty Oberon
 Doubly supplide in spousall and dominion.

Great was his power and glory over all,
Which him before that sacred seate did fill,
That yet remains his wide memoriall.
He dying, left the fairest Tanaquill
Him to succede therein by his last will :
Fairer and nobler liveth none this houre,
Ne like in grace, ne like in learned skill ;
Therefore they Glorian call that glorious floure :
Long mayst thou, Glorian ! live in glory and great powre.

EDMUND SPENSER.

THE FAERY KING.

WHEN the monthly horned queene
 Grew jealous that the starrs had seene
 Her rising from Endymion's arms,
 In rage she threw her misty charmes
 Into the bosome of the night,
 To dimme their curious pryeing sight ;
 Then did the dwarfish Faery elves,
 Having first attyr'd themselves,
 Prepare to dresse their Oberon King
 In light robes fitt for revelling :
 With a cobweb shirt more thinne,
 Than ever spider since could spin,
 Bleacht to the whiteness of the snow,
 By the stormie windes that blow
 In the vast and frozen ayre
 No shirt half so fine, so fayre.
 A rich wastcoat they did bring,
 Made of the trout-flies gilded wing :
 At which his elveship gan to fret,
 Swearing it would make him sweat
 Even with its weight : he needs would weare
 A wastcoat wrought of downy haire,
 New shaven from an eunuck's chin,
 That pleas'd him well, 'twas wondrous thin,
 The outside of his doublet was Made of the foure-leav'd, true lov'd, grasse
 Chang'd into so fine a glosse,
 With the oyle of crispie mosse,

It made a rainbow in the night,
Which gave a lustre passing light :
On every seame there was a lace
Drawne by the unctious snail's slow pace
To which the fin'st, pur'st silver thread
Compar'd, did looke like dull pale lead.
Each button was a sparkling eye
Tane from the speckled adder's frye ;
And for cooleness next the skin,
'Twas wth white poppey linde wthin.
His breeches of the fleece was wrought,
Which from Cholchos Jason brought ;
Spun into so fine a yarne,
"No mortal wight might it discerne,"
Weaved by Arachne on her loome,
Just before she had her doome.
A rich mantle he did weare,
Made of tinsell gosameare ;
Beflowered over with a few
Diamond stars of morning dew ;
Dyed crimson in a mayden's blush ;
Lin'd with humble-bee's soft plush.
His cap was all of ladies' love,
So wondrous light that it would move,
If any humming gnat or flie
Buzz'd the air in passing by.
About his necke a wreath of pearle
Dropt from the eyes of some poore girle,
Pinched, because she had forgot
To leave clean water in the pot.
And for's feather he did weare,
Old Nisus' fatall purple haire,
The sword ygirded to his thigh

Was smallest blade of finest rye ;
A payre of buskins they did bringe
Of y^e cowladye's corral winge,
Powdred o'er with spots of jett,
And lin'd wth purple violett.
His belt was made of myrtle leaues,
Pleyted in small curious threavs,
Besett wth amber cowslip's studs,
And fringed about with daysey buds,
In w^{ch} his bugle horne was hunge,
Made of the babling Ecchoe's tongue,
W^{ch} sett vnto his moone-burnt lip
He winds, and then his Faeryes skipp ;
At that the lazy drone 'gan sound,
And each did trip a fayrey round.

SIR SIMEON STEWARD.

QUEEN MAB.

THIS is Mab, the mistress Fairy
That doth nightly rob the dairy,
And can help or hurt the churning
As she please without discerning.

She that pinches country wenches,
If they rub not clean their benches,
And with sharper nails remembers
When they rake not up their embers :
But if so they chance to feast her,
In a shoe she drops a tester.

This is she that empties cradles,
Takes out children, puts in ladles :
Trains forth midwives in their slumber,
With a sieve the holes to number ;
And then leads them from her burrows,
Home through ponds and water-furrows.

She can start our Franklin's daughters,
In their sleep, with shrieks and laughters ;
And on sweet St. Anna's night,
Feed them with a promised sight,
Some of husbands, some of lovers,
Which an empty dream discovers.

BEN JONSON.

THE FAIRY QUEEN.

COME, follow, follow me,
You, fairy elves that be ;
Which circle on the greene,
Come follow Mab, your queene.
Hand in hand let's dance around,
For this place is fairy ground.

When mortals are at rest
And snoring in their nest,
Unheard and unespy'd,
Through key-holes we do glide ;
Over tables, stools, and shelves,
We trip it with our fairy elves.

And, if the house be foul
With platter, dish, or bowl.
Upstairs we nimbly creep,
And find the sluts asleep ;
Then we pinch their arms and thighs ;
None escapes, nor none espies.

But if the house be swept,
And from uncleanness kept,
We praise the household maid,
And duely she is paid :
For we use before we goe
To drop a tester in her shoe.

Upon a mushroomes head
Our table-cloth we spread ;
A grain of rye, or wheat,
Is manchet, which we eat ;
Pearly drops of dew we drink
In acorn cups fill'd to the brink.

The brains of nightingales,
With unctuous fat of snailes,
Between two cockles stew'd,
Is meat that's easily chew'd ;
Tails of wormes and marrow of mice,
Do make a dish that's wonderous nice.

The grasshopper, gnat, and fly
Serve for our minstrelsie ;
Grace said, we dance awhile,
And so the time beguile ;
And if the moon doth hide her head,
The gloe-worm lights us home to bed.

On tops of dewie grasse
So nimbly do we passe
The young and tender stalk
Ne'er bends when we do walk ;
Yet in the morning may be seen
Where we the night before have been.

OLD POEM.

THE FAIRIES.

IF ye will with Mab find grace,
Set each platter in his place ;
Rake the fire up, and get
Water in, ere sun be set.
Wash your pails and cleanse your dairies,
Sluts are loathsome to the fairies :
Sweep your house ; who doth not so,
Mab will pinch her by the toe.

ROBERT HERRICK.

QUEEN MAB.

O THEN, I see, Queen Mab hath been with you.
She is the fairies' midwife, and she comes
In shape no bigger than an agate stone
On the forefinger of an alderman ;
Drawn with a team of little atomies
Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep :
Her wagon spokes made of long spinners' legs :
The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers ;
The traces, of the smallest spider's web ;
The collars, of the moonshine's watery beams ;
Her whip, of cricket's bone, the lash, of film ;
Her wagoner, a small grey-coated gnat,
Not half so big as a round little worm,
Pricked from the lazy finger of a maid :
Her chariot is an empty hazel nut,
Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub,
Time out of mind the fairies' coachmakers.
And in this state she gallops night by night,
'Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love :
On courtiers' knees that dream on court'sies straight ;
O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees ;
O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

LULLABY FOR TITANIA.

FIRST FAIRY.

You spotted snakes with double tongue,
 Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen ;
 Newts, and blind-worms, do no wrong ;
 Come not near our fairy queen.

CHORUS.

Philomel with melody
 Sing in our sweet lullaby ;
 Lulla, lulla, lullaby ; lulla, lulla, lullaby !
 Never harm, nor spell, nor charm,
 Come our lovely lady nigh !
 So good night, with lullaby.

SECOND FAIRY.

Weaving spiders, come not here ;
 Hence, you long-legg'd spinners, hence ;
 Beetles black, approach not near ;
 Worm, nor snail, do no offence.

CHORUS.

Philomel with melody
 Sing in our sweet lullaby ;
 Lulla, lulla, lullaby ; lulla, lulla, lullaby !
 Never harm, nor spell, nor charm,
 Come our lovely lady nigh !
 So good night, with lullaby.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

THE FAIRY QUEEN SLEEPING.

SHE lay upon a bank, the favourite haunt
Of the spring wind in its first sunshine hour,
For the luxuriant strawberry blossoms spread
Like a snow-shower there, and violets
Bow'd down their purple vases of perfume
About her pillow,—link'd in a gay band
Floated fantastic shapes, these were her guards,
Her lithe and rainbow elves.

We have been o'er land and sea,
Seeking lovely dreams for thee,—
Where is there we have not been Gathering gifts for our sweet queen?
We are come with sound and sight
Fit for fairy's sleep to-night ;—
First around thy couch shall sweep
Odours, such as roses weep
When the earliest spring rain
Calls them into life again ;
Next upon thine ear shall float
Many a low and silver note,
Stolen from a dark-eyed maid,
When her lover's serenade,
Rising as the stars grew dim,
Waken'd her from thoughts of him ;—
There shall steal o'er lip and cheek
Gales, but all too light to break

Thy soft rest,—such gales as hide
 All day orange-flowers inside,
 Or that, while hot noontide, dwell
 In the purple hyacinth bell ;
 And before thy sleeping eyes
 Shall come glorious pageantries,—
 Palaces of gems and gold,
 Such as dazzle to behold,—
 Gardens, in which every tree
 Seems a world of bloom to be,— Fountains, whose clear waters show
 The white pearls that lie below.—
 During slumber's magic reign
 Other times shall live again ;
 First thou shalt be young and free
 In thy days of liberty,—
 Then again be woo'd and won
 By thy stately OBERON.
 Or thou shalt descend to earth,
 And see all of mortal birth.—
 No, that world's too full of care
 For e'en dreams to linger there.
 But, behold, the sun is set,
 And the diamond coronet
 Of the young moon is on high
 Waiting for our revelry ;
 And the dew is on the flower,
 And the stars proclaim our hour :
 Long enough thy rest has been,
 Wake, TITANIA, wake, our queen !

L. E. L.

ROBIN GOOD-FELLOW.

FROM Oberon, in fairye land,
 The King of ghosts and shadows there,
 Mad Robin I, at his command,
 Am sent to view the night-sports here.
 What revell rout
 Is kept about,
 In every corner where I go,
 I will o'ersee,
 And merry bee,
 And make good sport, with ho, ho, ho !

More swift than lightning can I flye
 About this aery welkin soone,
 And, in a minute's space, descrye
 Each thing that's done below the moone.
 There's not a hag
 Or ghost shall wag
 Or cry, "'Ware Goblins !" where I go,
 But Robin I
 Their feates will spy,
 And send them home, with ho, ho, ho !

Whene'er such wanderers I meete,
 As from their night-sports they trudge home,
 With counterfeiting voice I greeete
 And call them on with me to roame
 Thro' woods, thro' lakes,
 Thro' bogs, thro' brakes ;

Or else, unseene, with them I go,
 All in the nicke
 To play some tricke
 And frolicke it, with ho ! ho ! ho !

Sometimes I meete them like a man ;
 Sometimes, an ox ; sometimes, a hound !
 And to a horse I turn me can,
 To trip and trot about them round.
 But if, to ride,
 My backe they stride,
 More swift than wind away I go,
 O'er hedge and lands,
 Thro' pools and ponds
 I whirry, laughing, ho, ho, ho !

When lads and lasses merry be,
 With possets and with juncates fine,
 Unseene of all the company,
 I eat their cakes and sip their wine :
 And, to make sport
 I fart and snort,
 And out the candles I do blow ;
 The maids I kiss ;
 They shrieke,—“ Who's this ? ”
 I answer nought, but ho, ho, ho !

Yet now and then, the maids to please,
 At midnight I card up their wooll ;
 And while they sleepe and take their ease,
 With whee to threads their wax I pull.
 I grind at mill
 Their malt up still ;

I dress their hemp, I spin their tow
If any 'wake
And would me take,
I wend me, laughing, ho, ho, ho !

When house or harth doth sluttish lye,
I pinch the maidens black and blue ;
The bed-clothes from the bedd pull I,
And lay them naked all to view.
'Twixt sleepe and wake
I do them take,
And on the key-cold floor them throw.
If out they cry,
Then forth I fly,
And loudly laugh out, ho, ho, ho !

When any need to borrowe ought,
We lend them what they do require,
And for the use demand we nought,
Our owne is all we do desire.
If to repay
They do delay,
Abroad amongst them then I go,
And night by night
I them affright
With pinchings, dreames, and ho, ho, ho !

When lazie queans have nought to do
But study how to cog and lye,
To make debate and mischief too,
'Twixt one another secretlye,
I marke their gloze,
And it disclose

To them whom they have wronged so ;
 When I have done
 I get me gone,
 And leave them scolding, ho, ho, ho !

When men do traps and engins set
 In loop holes, where the vermine creep,
 Who from their foldes and houses get
 Their ducks and geese, and lambes and sheepe
 I spy the gin,
 And enter in,
 And seeme a vermine taken so ;
 But when they there
 Approach me neare,
 I leap out laughing, ho, ho, ho !

By wells and rills, in meadowes greene,
 We nightly dance our hey-day guise,
 And to our fairye king and queene
 We chant our moonlight minstrelsies.
 When larks 'gin sing,
 Away we fling ;
 And babes new borne steal as we go,
 And elfe in bed
 We leave instead,
 And wend us laughing, ho, ho, ho !

From hag-bred Merlin's time have I
 Thus nightly revell'd to and fro,
 And for my pranks men call me by
 The name of Robin Good-fellow.

Fiends, ghosts, and sprites
Who haunt the nightes,
The hags and goblins do me know,
And beldames old
My feats have told,
So vale, vale ; ho, ho, ho !

OLD POEM.

PUCK'S SONG.

OVER hill, over dale,
Through bush, through brier,
Over park, over pale,
Thorough flood, thorough fire,
I do wander everywhere,
Swifter than the moone's sphere ;
And I serve the fairy queen,
To dew the orbs upon the green .
The cowslips tall her pensioners be ;
In their gold coats spots you see ;
Those be rubies, fairy favours ;
In those freckles live their savours :
I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

THE LEGEND OF PUCK THE FAIRY.

WOULD'ST know what tricks, by the pale moonlight,
Are play'd by me, the merry little Sprite,
Who wing through air from the camp to the court,
From king to clown, and of all make sport ;
 Singing, I am the sprite
 Of the merry midnight,
Who laugh at weak mortals, and love the moonlight.

To a miser's bed, where he snoring slept
And dreamt of his cash, I slily crept ;
Chink, chink o'er his pillow like money I rang,
And he waked to catch—but away I sprang,
 Singing, I am the sprite, &c.

I saw through the leaves in a damsel's bower,
She was waiting her love at that starlight hour :
“ Hist, hist ! ” quoth I, with an amorous sigh,
And she flew to the door, but away flew I,
 Singing, I am the sprite, &c.

While a bard sat inditing an ode to his love,
Like a pair of blue meteors I star'd from above,
And he swoon'd—for he thought 'twas the ghost, poor man !
Of his lady's eyes, while away I ran,
 Singing, I am the sprite, &c.

THOMAS MOORE.

THE FAIR TEMPLE ;

OR, OBERON'S CHAPEL.

A WAY enchased with glass and beads
 There is, that to the chapel leads,
 Whose structure, for his holy rest,
 Is here the Halcyon's curious nest :
 Into the which who looks, shall see
 His temple of idolatry,
 Where he of godheads has such store,
 As Rome's Pantheon had not more.
 His house of Rimmon this he calls,
 Girt with small bones, instead of walls.
 First, in a niche, more black than jet,
 His idol-cricket there is set ;
 Then in a polished oval by,
 There stands his idol-beetle-fly :
 Next, in an arch, akin to this,
 His idol-canker seated is :
 Then in a round, is placed by these
 His golden god, Cantharides.
 So that where'er ye look, ye see
 No capital, no cornice free,
 Or frieze, from this fine frippery.
 Now, this the fairies would have known,
 Theirs is a mixed religion :
 And some have heard the elves it call
 Part Pagan, part Papisticall.
 If unto me all tongues were granted,
 I could not speak the saints here painted.

Saint 'Tit, Saint Nit, Saint Is, Saint Itis,
 Who 'gainst Mab's state placed here right is.
 Saint Will-o'-th'-Wisp, of no great bigness,
 But alias called here fatuus ignis.
 Saint Frip, Saint Trip, Saint Fill, Saint Fillie,
 Neither those other saintships will I
 Here go about for to recite
 Their number, almost infinite,
 Which, one by one, here set down are
 In this most curious calendar.
 First, at the entrance of the gate,
 A little puppet-priest doth wait,
 Who squeaks to all the comers there,
 "Favour your tongues, who enter here,
 Pure hands bring hither, without stain."
 A second pules, "Hence, hence, profane."
 Hard by, i' th' shell of half a nut,
 The holy water there is put ;
 A little brush of squirrels hairs,
 Composed of odd, not even pairs,
 Stands in the platter or close by
 To purge the fairy family.
 Near to the altar stands the priest,
 There off'ring up the Holy Grist ;
 Ducking in mood and perfect tense,
 With (much good do't him) reverence.
 The altar is not here four-square,
 Nor in a form triangular ;
 Nor made of glass, or wood, or stone,
 But of a little transverse bone
 Which boys and bruckelled children call
 (Playing for points and pins) cockall.
 Whose linen drapery is a thin,

Subtile, and ductile codlin's skin :
 Which o'er the board is smoothly spread
 With little seal-work damasked.
 The fringe that circumbinds it, too,
 Is spangle work of trembling dew,
 Which, gently gleaming, makes a show,
 Like frost-work glitt'ring on the snow.
 Upon this fetuous board doth stand
 Something for shew-bread, and at hand
 (Just in the middle of the altar)
 Upon an end, the Fairy-psalter,
 Graced with the trout-fly's curious wings,
 Which serve for watchet ribbonings.
 Now, we must know, the elves are led
 Right by the Rubric, which they read :
 And if report of them be true,
 They have their text for what they do,
 Ay, and their book of canons too.
 And, as Sir Thomas Parson tells,
 They have their Book of Articles :
 And if that Fairy Knight not lies,
 They have their Book of Homilies ;
 And other Scriptures, that design
 A short, but righteous discipline.
 The basin stands the board upon
 To take the Free Oblation,
 A little pin-dust, which they hold
 More precious than we prize our gold ;
 Which charity hey give to many
 Poor of the parish, if there's any.
 Upon the ends of these neat rails,
 Hatched with the silver-light of snails,
 The elves, in formal manner, fix

Two pure and holy candlesticks,
In either which a small tall bent
Burns for the altar's ornament.
For sanctity, they have, to these,
Their curious copes and surplices
Of cleanest cobweb, hanging by
In their religious vestery.
They have their ash-pans and their brooms,
To purge the chapel and the rooms ;
Their many mumbling mass-priests here,
And many a dapper chorister.
Their ushering vergers, here likewise,
Their canons and their chanteries :
Of cloister monks they have enow,
Ay, and their abbey-lubbers too.
And if their legend do not lie,
They much affect the Papacy ;
And since the last is dead, there's hope
Elve Boniface shall next be Pope.
They have their cups and chalices,
Their pardons and indulgences ;
Their beads of nuts, bells, books, and wax
Candles, forsooth, and other knacks ;
Their holy oil, their fasting spittle,
Their sacred salt here, not a little.
Dry chips, old shoes, rags, grease, and bones,
Beside their fumigations,
To drive the devil from the cod-piece
Of the friar, of work an odd piece,
Many a trifle, too, and trinket,
And for what use, scarce man would think it.
Next then, upon the chanter's side
An apple's core is hung up dried,

With rattling kernels, which is rung
To call to morn and even-song.
The saint, to which the most he prays
And offers incense nights and days,
The lady of the lobster is,
Whose foot-pace he doth stroke and kiss,
And humbly chives of saffron brings,
For his most cheerful offerings.
When, after these, he's paid his vows,
He lowly to the altar bows :
And then he dons the silkworms shed,
Like a Turk's turban on his head,
And reverently departeth thence,
Hid in a cloud of frankincense ;
And by the glow-worm's light well-guided,
Goes to the feast that's now provided.

ROBERT HERRICK.

OBERON'S FEAST.

A LITTLE mushroom-table spread,
After short prayers they set on bread,
A moon-parched grain of purest wheat,
With some small glitt'ring grit, to eat
His choice bits with; then in a trice
They make a feast less great than nice.
But all this while his eye is served,
We must not think his ear was starved ;
But that there was in place to stir
His spleen, the chirring grasshopper,
The merry cricket, puling fly,
The piping gnat for minstrelsy.
And now, we must imagine first,
The elves present, to quench his thirst,
A pure seed-pearl of infant dew,
Brought and besweetened in a blue
And pregnant violet ; which done,
His kitling eyes begin to run
Quite through the table, where he spies
The horns of papery butterflies,
Of which he eats ; and tastes a little
Of that we call the cuckoo's spittle.
A little fuz-ball pudding stands
By, yet not blessed by his hands,
That was too coarse ; but then forthwith
He ventures boldly on the pith
Of sugared rush, and eats the sagg
And well bestrutted bee's sweet bag ;

Gladding his palate with some store
Of emmets' eggs ; what would he more,
But beards of mice, a newt's stewed thigh,
A bloated earwig, and a fly ;
With the red-capped worm, that's shut
Within the concave of a nut,
Brown as his tooth. A little moth,
Late fattened in a piece of cloth ;
With withered cherries, mandrake's ears,
Mole's eyes ; to these the slain stag's tears ;
'The unctuous dewlaps of a snail,
The broke-heart of a nightingale
O'ercome in music ; with a wine
Ne'er ravished from the flattering vine,
But gently pressed from the soft side
Of the most sweet and dainty bride,
Brought in a dainty daisy, which
He fully quaffs up to bewitch
His blood to height ; this done, commended
Grace by his priest ; the feast is ended.

ROBERT HERRICK.

OBERON'S PALACE.

FULL as a bee with thyme, and red
As cherry harvest, now high fed
For lust and action ! on he'll go
To lie with Mab, though all say no.
Lust has no ears ; he's sharp as thorn,
And fretful, carries hay in 's horn,
And lightning in his eyes ; and flings
Among the elves, if mov'd, the stings
Of pettish wasps ; well know his guard,
Kings, though they're hated, will be feared.
Wine led him on. Thus to a grove,
Sometimes devoted unto love,
Tinselled with twilight, he and they
Led by the shine of snails, a way
Beat with their num'rous feet, which by Many a neat perplexity,
Many a turn, and many a cross-
Track, they redeem a bank of moss
Spongy and swelling, and far more
Soft then the finest Lemster ore :
Mildly disparkling, like those fires
Which break from the enjewelled tyres
Of curious brides ; or like those mites
Of candied dew in moony nights.
Upon this convex, all the flowers
Nature begets by th' sun and showers,
Are to a wild digestion brought,
As if Love's sampler here was wrought ;

Or Citherea's ceston, which
 All with temptation doth bewitch.
 Sweet airs move here, and more divine
 Made by the breath of great-eyed kine,
 Who, as they low, empearl with milk
 The fern-leav'd grass, or moss like silk.
 The breath of monkeys met to mix
 With musk-flies, are th' aromatics
 Which cense this arch ; and here and there,
 And farther off, and everywhere
 Throughout that brave mosaic yard,
 Those picks or diamonds in the card,
 With pips of hearts, of club and spade,
 Are here most neatly interlaid.
 Many a counter, many a die,
 Half rotten and without an eye,
 Lies hereabouts ; and for to pave
 The excellency of this cave,
 Squirrels' and children's teeth late shed,
 Are neatly here enchequerèd,
 With brownest toadstones, and the gum
 That shines upon the bluer plum.
 The nails fall'n off by whit-flaws : Art's
 Wise hand enchasing here those warts
 Which we to others (from ourselves)
 Sell, and brought hither by the elves.
 The tempting mole, stol'n from the neck
 Of the shy virgin, seems to deck
 The holy entrance ; where within,
 The room is hung with the blue skin
 Of shifted snake ; enfriezed throughout
 With eyes of peacocks' trains, and trout-
 Flies' curious wings ; and these among

Those silver-pence, that cut the tongue
 Of the red infant, neatly hung.
 The glow-worm's eyes, the shining scales
 Of silv'ry fish, wheat-straws, the snail's
 Soft candle-light, the kitling's eyne,
 Corrupted wood, serve here for shine.
 No glaring light of bold-faced day,
 Or other over-radiant ray,
 Ransacks this room ; but what weak beams
 Can make reflected from these gems,
 And multiply ; such is the light,
 But ever doubtful, day or night.
 By this quaint taper-light, he winds
 His errors up ; and now he finds
 His moon-tanned Mab, as somewhat sick,
 And, love knows, tender as a chick.
 Upon six plump dandélions, high-
 Reared, lies her elvish majesty,
 Whose woolly bubbles seemed to drown
 Her Mabship in obedient down ;
 For either sheet was spread the caul
 That doth the infant's face enthrall,
 When it is born, by some enstyled
 The lucky omen of the child ;
 And next to these, two blankets o'er-
 Cast of the finest gossamer ;
 And then a rug of carded wool,
 Which, sponge-like, drinking in the dull
 Light of the moon, seemed to comply,
 Cloud-like, the dainty deity.
 Thus soft she lies ; and overhead
 A spinner's circle is bespread
 With cobweb curtains, from the roof

So neatly sunk, as that no proof
Of any tackling can declare
What gives it hanging in the air.
The fringe about this, are those threads
Broke at the loss of maidenheads ;
And all behung with these pure pearls
Dropt from the eyes of ravished girls
Or writhing brides, when panting they Give unto love the straighter way.
In music now he has the cries
Of fainèd-lost virginities ;
The which the elves make to excite
A more unconquered appetite.
The king's undressed ; and now upon
The gnat's watchword the elves are gone.
And now the bed, and Mab possessed
Of this great-little kingly quest,
We'll nobly think what's to be done,
He'll do no doubt. This flax is spun.

ROBERT HERRICK.

THE WATER LADY.

ALAS, the moon should ever beam
 To show what man should never see !—
I saw a maiden on a stream,
 And fair was she !

I staid awhile, to see her throw
 Her tresses back, that all beset
The fair horizon of her brow
 With clouds of jet.

I staid a little while to view
 Her cheek, that wore in place of red
The bloom of water, tender blue,¹
 Daintily spread.

I staid to watch, a little space,
 Her parted lips if she would sing ;
The waters closed above her face
 With many a ring.

And still I staid a little more,
 Alas ! she never comes again !
I throw my flowers from the shore,
 And watch in vain.

¹ In a little water-colour sketch by Severn, given to Mrs. Hood by Keats, the nymph's complexion was of a pale blue.

I know my life will fade away,
I know that I must vainly pine,
For I am made of mortal clay,
But she's divine.

THOMAS HOOD.

THE PIXIES.

THE frost hath spread a shining net
Where last the autumn roses blew ;
On lake and stream a seal is set
Where floating lilies charmed the view ;
So silently the wonder grew
Beneath pale Dian's mystic light,
I know my fancies whisper true,
The Pixies are abroad to-night.

When at the midnight chime are met
Together elves of every hue,
I trow the gazer will regret
That peers upon their retinue ;
For limb awry and eye askew
Have oft proclaimed a fairy's spite—
Peep slyly, gallants, lest ye rue,
The Pixies are abroad to-night.

'Tis said their forms are tiny, yet
All human ills they can subdue,
Or with a wand or amulet
Can win a maiden's heart for you ;
And many a blessing know to strew
To make the way to wedlock bright ;
Give honour to the dainty crew,
The Pixies are abroad to-night.

ENVOY.

Prince, e'en a prince might vainly sue,
Unaided by a fairy's might ;
Remember Cinderella's shoe,
The Pixies are abroad to-night.

SAMUEL MINTON PECK.

SONG OF THE WATER SPRITE.

THE weary sun, all goldēn red,
 Sinks in the sea ;
All fiery glows his ocean bed—
 There seek me ;
For there, my floating tresses lave
In the golden fires of the crystal wave,
 For ever free !

When Vesper first peers through the sky
 Q'er wild Tiree,
And twinkling darts her light from high—
 There find me ;
The clear air nerves my gossamer wing,
And I love to hear the star-sprites sing,
 For ever free !

The mildly radiant Queen of Night
 Dreams o'er the sea,
And bathes the deep in silv'ry light—
 There seek me ;
For there I skim her watery glass,
And I merrily watch each spirit pass,
 For ever free !

I love the Sun—I love the Moon—
 So fair to see ;
 I love the little twinkling stars,
 And they love me ;
 I, too, love my emerald home,
 With its coral cells 'neath the sparkling foam
 For ever free !

For there, we lightly trip around
 The coral tree,
 And quickly beat the pearly ground
 All merrily :
 While o'er us, as we gaily sing,
 All the crystal domes with music ring,
 For ever free !

When sun, or stars, are shining bright
 Down through the sea,
 When pure domes flushed in sunset light
 Change gloriously,
 We play with murmuring rose-lipp'd shells,
 Or we 'sail a-down clear waterfalls,
 For ever free !

We hear, in each cool sparry cave,
 Plaint melody
 Sung by the mermaids of the wave,
 Æolianly !
 While ocean's coral groves around,
 With the witching syren-notes resound,
 For ever free !

Hark ! hark ! the sweet-voiced choir renew
 Their symphony !
All quivering with a rainbow hue
 In ecstasy,
Our spangled wings now waft us high,
Through the mazy paths of the starry sky,
 For ever free !

ANDREW JAMES SYMINGTON.

THE NIX.

THE crafty Nix, more false than fair,
Whose haunt in arrowy Isa lies,
She envied me my golden hair,
She envied me my azure eyes.

The moon with silvery ciphers traced
The leaves, and on the waters play'd ;
She rose, she caught me round the waist,
She said, "Come down with me, fair maid."

She led me to her crystal grot,
She set me in her coral chair,
She waved her hand, and I had not
Or azure eyes or golden hair.

Her locks of jet, her eyes of flame
Were mine, and hers my semblance fair ;
"O make me, Nix, again the same,
O give me back my golden hair !"

She smiles in scorn, she disappears,
And here I sit and see no sun,
My eyes of fire are quenched in tears,
And all my darksome locks undone.

R. GARNETT.

A LEGEND OF THE WATER-SPIRIT CALLED NECKAN.

DARK and deep and calm as night
Flows the stream along ;
Quiet in the evening light,
As love's fulness strong
Flowing, flowing, flowing on
Swift as sweet days come and gone,
Low murmuring like Eternity,
Softly step two children bright,
Hearkening for the Water-Sprite,
Nigh unto the alder-tree
Where at evening singeth he
As he doth sing to-night,
Floating on the azure tide
Fairer than an earthly bride.
While the river flows along,
Hearken to the spirit's song :
 " Softly falls the summer
 Over all the land,
 Softly flows the river
 Past its mossy strand,
Over-arched by wild-rose bowers,
Clustered with the woodbine flowers
Hanging down their fragrant tresses
Over shady cool recesses,
Where the water-lilies gleam
'Tranquil on the moving stream.

Deep beneath, the spirits glide
 Who know not sorrow, hate, nor pride ;
 Loving earth with its fair things,
 Mountain and valley and sunny lea,
 But most the rivers so pure and free,
 Sparkling fountains, secret springs,
 Dewy flowers in radiant bloom,
 Morning glories, midnight gloom,
 Loving all things pure and bright
 With unspeakable delight.
 Learning from the starry skies
 Everlasting mysteries."
 Sudden ceased both lyre and song
 (Softly flowed the stream along),
 For thus spake those children young :
 " Oh, Neckan, what availeth thee
 To sing and play so gloriously
 In perfect exultation ?
 What avail the starry skies,
 Or the splendour of thine eyes,
 Or the unsealed mysteries ?
 For thee is no salvation !"
 Weeping sore the Spirit threw
 Far his golden-stringèd lyre,
 Piteous wailing, wild and shrill,
 Sank he in the waters blue ;
 In a fairy-ring of fire
 Once they flashed and then were still.
 Homeward turned the children bright
 Through the meadows green and wide,
 Soon their father's knee beside Told they of the Water-Sprite.
 Grave he heard them, answering then “Nay, my children, ye were wrong

Thus to mar the Spirit’s song.
Haste to-morrow to the glen
When the light is fair and dim
That the sunset giveth,
Tell the Spirit that for him,
Him too the Saviour liveth.”
On the morrow when the sun
To the western gates had run,
Forth there stepped those children bright
Hearkening for the Water-Sprite.
Soon they heard him wailing low
In his sad extreme of woe,
Underneath the alder-tree
Weeping in his misery.
Softly drew the children near,
Softly spake: “Oh, Spirit, hear,
Our sire this comfort giveth:
God has sent His Son to be
The World’s Redeemer, then for thee
See! the Redeemer liveth!”
Then the Spirit wept no more,
Golden-stringèd lyre he strung,
Soon melodious echoes rung
From the farther, wooded shore.
Gloriously he played and sung,
Whilst the sun withdrew his light,
Slowly rose behind the trees
Orion and the Pleiades,
And still went singing on the joyful Water-Sprite.

MARGARET DIXON.

THE MERMAID.

‘OH, where won ye, my bonny lass,
 Wi’ look sae wild an’ cheery?
 There’s something in that witching face
 That I lo’e wonder dearly.’

“I live where the harebell never grew,
 Where the streamlet never ran,
 Where the winds o’ Heaven never blew—
 Now find me gin you can.”

“’Tis but your wild an’ wily way,
 The gloaming makes you eerie
 For ye are the lass o’ the Braken-Brae,
 An nae lad maun come near ye :

“But I am sick, an’ very sick,
 Wi’ a passion strange and new,
 For ae kiss of thy rosy cheeks
 And lips o’ coral hue.”

* * * * *

“Go, hie you from this lonely brake,
 Nor dare your walk renew ;
 For I’m the Maid of the Mountain Lake,
 An’ I come wi’ the falling dew.”

“Be you the maid of the Crystal Wave,
Or she of the Braken Brae ;
One tender kiss I mean to have ;
You shall not say me nay.

“For beauty’s like the daisy’s vest,
That shrinks from the early dew ;
But soon it opes its bonny breast,
An’ sae may it fare wi’ you.”

“Kiss but this hand, I humbly sue,
Ev’n there I’ll rue the stain ;
For the health of men will dim its hue,
It will ne’er be pure again.

“For passion’s like the burning beal
Upon the mountain’s brow,
That wastes itself to ashes pale,
And sae will it fare with you.

“Oh, mother, mother, make my bed,
And make it soft and easy ;
And with the cold dew bathe my head,
For pains of anguish seize me :

“Or stretch me in the chill blue lake,
To quench this bosom’s burning ;
An’ lay me by yon lonely brake,
For hope there’s none returning.

“ I’ve been where man should not have been,
 Oft in my lonely roaming ;
 And seen what man should not have seen
 By greenwood in the gloaming.

“ Oh, passion’s deadlier than the grave,
 A’ human things undoing ;
 The Maiden of the Mountain Wave
 Has lured me to my ruin ! ”

’Tis now an hundred years an’ more,
 An’ all these scenes are over,
 Since rose his grave on yonder shore
 Beneath the wild wood cover ;

An’ late I saw the Maiden there,
 Just as the daylight faded,
 Braiding her locks o’ gowden hair,
 And singing as she braided :

MERMAID’S SONG.

Lie still, my love, lie still and sleep,
 Long is thy night of sorrow ;
 The Maiden of the Mountain deep
 Shall meet you on the morrow.

But oh, when shall that morrow be,
 That my true love shall waken ?
 When shall we meet, refined an’ free,
 Amid the moorland braken ?

Full low and lonely is thy bed,
The worm even flies thy pillow ;
Where now the lips, so comely red,
That kissed me 'neath the willow ?

Oh, I must laugh, do as I can,
Ev'n, mid my song of mourning,
At all the fuming freaks of man,
To which there's no returning.

Lie still, my love, lie still and sleep—
Hope lingers o'er thy slumber ;
What though thy years beneath the steep
Should all its stones outnumber ?

Though moons steal o'er an' seasons fly
On time's swift wing unstaying,
Yet there's a spirit in the sky,
That lives o'er thy decaying.

In domes beneath the water-springs,
No end hath my sojourning ;
An' to this land of fading things
Far hence be my returning ;

For spirits now have left the deep,
Their long last farewell taken :
Lie still, my love, lie still an' sleep,
The day is near the breaking !

When my loved flood from fading day
No more its gleam shall borrow,
Nor heath-fowl from the moorland grey
Bid the blue dawn good-morrow ;

The Mermaid o'er thy grave shall weep,
Without one breath of scorning :
Lie still, my love, lie still an' sleep,
And fare thee well till morning !

JAMES HOGG.

SONG OF THE WATER NIXIES.

By the ripple, ripple of the shallow sea,
 By the rocky sea,
 By the hollow sea,
 We have built a giant windmill, with its long arms free,
 And it grinds, that we May not hungry be.
 With a rumble and a roar, sounding all along the shore,
 We should vanish and should perish if our wheel were heard no more.

Little hopes of fisher maidens in the far-off town,
 In our wheel go down,
 Evermore go down,
 For the fisher lads that hold them in the deep sea drown ;
 By our grinding drown,
 For our pleasures drown.
 Rend the garment from the soul ; let it go, we care not where ;
 What do mortals want with spirit? 'Tis the bodies that are fair.

Out beyond the green horizon lurks the vengeful day,
 Lurks the fateful day,
 Lurks the hateful day.
 When the winds shall cease to help us in our shark-like play,
 When our calm cold sway
 Shall have passed away,
 When the wreckers and the wrecked both at peace shall be,—
 When the threat shall be fulfilled, and there be no more sea.

SARAH WILLIAMS.

FLOWER FAIRIES.

FLOWER Fairies have you found them,
When the summer dusk is falling,
With the glow-worms all around them,
Have you heard them softly calling?

Calling through your garden spaces
Notes like fairy bells set ringing,
Heard from out enchanted places
Whence the fairy bees come winging?

Silent stand they through the noonlight
In their flower shapes fair and quiet,
But they quit them in the moonlight,
In its beams to sing and riot.

I have heard them, I have seen them,
From their petals light-like raying,
And the trees would fain have been them
The great trees too old for playing.

Hundreds of them altogether,
Flashing flocks of flying fairies,
Crowding through the summer weather,
Seeking where the coolest air is.

And they tell the trees that know them,
As upon their boughs they hover,
Of the things that chance below them,
How the rose has a new lover.

And the roses laugh, protesting
That the lilies are as fickle ;
Then they look where birds are nesting,
And their feathers softly tickle.

Then away they all go sweeping,
Having had their fill of gladness,
But the trees, their night-watch keeping,
Feel a tender, loving sadness.

For they know of bleak December,
When each bough to pain left bare is,
When they only shall remember
Those bright visitings of fairies.

When the roses and the lilies
Shall be gone to come back never,
To a land where all so still is
That they sleep and sleep for ever.

PHILIP BOURKE MARSTON.

SONG OF THE TWILIGHT FAIRIES.

VESTAL moon, vestal moon,
Star of Love's delight,
Rise, and gild our 'festal noon—
Noon of Fairy-night.

Vestal moon, vestal moon,
Up the golden height,
Thou art rising to thy noon—
We to Love's delight.

Fairies hide in cowslip bells
Through the garish light ;
Naiads rest in purple shells,
By the sea-marge bright.

Fairy-Queen, appear, appear,
From thy citron nest ;
Wake, O wake ! come, Sweet, for here
Shines the moonlight blest.

Golden Fairies in the sun
Wind their elfin horn,
Where the dancing streamlets run,
And the Day is born.

Silver Fairies haunt the night
When the Sun's asleep ;
Azure Fays the heavenly height,
'Mid the starry sheep.

Fays of Silver, Gold, and Blue
Wake to Love's delight ;
Drink your fill of sweet May-dew,
Chase the star-flakes bright.
Lo ! we come, we come, we come,
From the foxglove bells,
Some from golden brake, and some
From the asphodels.
Vestal moon, vestal moon,
From your golden height,
Gaze through all the fairy noon
On our Love's delight.

THOMAS LAKE HARRIS.

FAIRIES ON THE SEA-SHORE.

First Fairy. My home and haunt are in every leaf
 Whose life is a summer day bright and brief—
 I live in the depths of the tulip's bower,
 I wear a wreath of the cistus flower,
 I drink the dew of the blue harebell,
 I know the breath of the violet well,—
 The white and the azure violet ;
 But I know not which is the sweetest yet,—
 I have kiss'd the cheek of the rose,
 I have watch'd the lily uncloze,
 My silver mine is the almond tree,
 Who will come dwell with flower and me?

Chorus of Fairies. Dance we our round, 'tis a summer night,
 And our steps are led by the glow-worm's light.

Second Fairy. My dwelling is in the serpentine
 Of the rainbow's colour'd line,—
 See how its rose and amber clings
 To the many hues of my radiant wings ;
 Mine is the step that bids the earth
 Give to the iris flower its birth,
 And mine the golden cup to hide,
 Where the last faint hue of the rainbow died.

Search the depths of an Indian mine,—
Where are the colours to match with mine ?

Chorus. Dance we round, for the gale is bringing Songs the summer rose is singing.

Third Fairy. I float on the breath of a minstrel's lute,
Or the wandering sounds of a distant flute,
Linger I over the tones that swell
From the pink-veined chords of an ocean-shell ;
I love the skylark's morning hymn,
Or the nightingale heard at the twilight dim,
The echo, the fountain's melody,—
These, oh ! these are the spells for me !

Chorus. Hail to the summer night of June ;
See ! yonder has risen our ladye moon.

Fourth Fairy. My palace is in the coral cave
Set with spars by the ocean wave ;
Would ye have gems, then seek them there,—
There found I the pearls that bind my hair.
I and the wind together can roam
Over the green waves and their white foam,—
See, I have got this silver shell,
Mark how my breath will its smallness swell,
For the Nautilus is my boat
In which I over the waters float :
The moon is shining over the sea,—
Who is there will come sail with me ?

Chorus of Fairies. Our noontide sleep is on leaf and flower,

Our revels are held in a moonlit hour,—

What is there sweet, what is there fair,

And we are not the dwellers there?

Dance we round, for the morning light

Will put us and our glow-worm lamps to flight!

CHRONICLES OF FAIRYLAND.

NYMPHIDIA.

THE COURT OF FAIRY.

OLD Chaucer doth of Topas tell,
 Mad Rablais of Pantagruel,
 A later third of Dowsabel,
 With such poor trifles playing :
 Others the like have labour'd at,
 Some of this thing, and some of that
 And many of they know not what,
 But that they must be saying.

Another sort there be, that will
 Be talking of the fairies still,
 Nor never can they have their fill,
 As they were wedded to them :
 No tales of them their thirst can slake
 So much delight therein they take,
 And some strange thing they fain would make,
 Knew they the way to do them.

Then since no muse hath been so bold,
 Or for the later, or the old,
 Those elvish secrets to unfold,
 Which be from others' reading ;
 My active muse to light shall bring
 The court of that proud Fairy King,
 And tell there of the revelling—
 Joy prosper my proceeding.

And thou, Nymphidia, gentle Fay,
 Which, meeting me upon the way,
 These secrets didst to me bewray,
 Which now I am in telling :
 My pretty, light fantastic maid,
 I here invoke to thee my aid,
 That I may speak what thou hast said,
 In numbers smoothly swelling.

This palace standeth in the air,
 By necromancy placèd there.
 That it no tempests needs to fear,
 Which way soe'er it blow it :
 And somewhat southward tow'rd the noon,
 Whence lies a way up to the moon,
 And thence the Fairy can as soon
 Pass to the earth below it.

The walls of spiders' legs are made,
 Well morticed and finely laid,
 He was the master of his trade,
 It curiously that builded :
 The windows of the eyes of cats,
 And for the roof, instead of flats,
 Is cover'd with the skins of bats,
 With moonshine that are gilded.

Hence Oberon, him sport to make (Their rest when weary mortals take,
 And none but only Fairies wake),
 Descendeth for his pleasure ;

And Mab, his merry Queen, by night
 Bestrides young folks that lie upright
 (In elder times the Mare that hight),
 Which plagues them out of measure.

Hence shadows, seeming idle shapes,
 Of little frisking elves and apes,
 To earth do make their wanton scapes,
 As hope of pastures hastes them :
 Which maids think on the hearth they see,
 When fires well-near consumèd be,
 There dancing hayes by two and three,
 Just as their fancy casts them.

These make our girls their flutt'ry rue,
 By pinching them both black and blue,
 And put a penny in their shoe,
 The house for cleanly sweeping :
 And in their courses make that round,
 In meadows and in marshes found,
 Of them so call'd the Fairy ground,
 Of which they have the keeping.

These, when a child haps to be got,
 Which after proves an idiot,
 When folk perceive it thriveth not,
 The fault therein to smother :
 Some silly, doating, brainless calf,
 That understands things by the half,
 Say, that the Fairy left this aulf,
 And took away the other.

But listen, and I shall you tell
 A chance in Fairy that befel,
 Which certainly may please some well,
 In love and arms delighting :
 Of Oberon, that jealous grew
 Of one of his own Fairy crew,
 For well (he fear'd) his Queen that knew,
 His love but ill requiting.

Pigwiggen was this Fairy Knight,
 One wondrous gracious in the sight
 Of fair Queen Mab, which day and night
 He amorously observed :
 Which made King Oberon suspect
 His service took too good effect,
 His sauciness and often checkt,
 And could have wish'd him starved.

Pigwiggen gladly would commend
 Some token to Queen Mab to send,
 If sea or land him aught could lend,
 Were worthy of her wearing :
 At length this lover doth devise
 A bracelet made of emmets' eyes,
 A thing he thought that she would prize,
 No whit her state impairing.

And to the Queen a letter writes,
 Which he most curiously indites,
 Conjuring her by all the rites
 Of love, she would be pleased

To meet him, her true servant, where
 They might, without suspect or fear,
 Themselves to one another clear,
 And have their poor hearts eased.

“At midnight the appointed hour,
 And for the Queen a fitting bow’r,
 (Quoth he) is that fair cowslip flow’r,
 On Hipcut-hill that groweth :
 In all your train there’s not a Fay,
 That ever went to gather May,
 But she hath made it in her way,
 The tallest there that groweth.”

When by Tom Thum, a Fairy page,
 He sent it, and doth him engage,
 By promise of a mighty wage,
 It secretly to carry ;
 Which done, the Queen her maids doth call,
 And bids them to be ready all,
 She would go see her summer hall,
 She could no longer tarry.

Her chariot ready strait is made,
 Each thing therein is fitting laid,
 That she by nothing might be stay’d,
 For naught must be her letting :
 Four nimble gnats the horses were,
 Their harnesses of gossamere,
 Fly Cranion, her charioteer,
 Upon the coach-box getting.

Her chariot of a snail's fine shell,
 Which for the colours did excel ;
 The fair Queen Mab becoming well,
 So lively was the limning :
 The seat the soft woll of the bee,
 The cover (gallantly to see)
 The wing of a py'd butterfly,
 I trow, was simple trimming.

The wheels composed of crickets' bones,
 And daintily made for the nonce,
 For fear of rattling on the stones,
 With thistle-down they shod it :
 For all her maidens much did fear,
 If Oberon had chanc'd to hear,
 That Mab his Queen should have been there,
 He would not have abode it.

She mounts her chariot with a trice,
 Nor would she stay for no advice,
 Until her maids, that were so nice,
 To wait on her were fitted ;
 But ran herself away alone ;
 Which, when they heard, there was not one
 But hasted after to be gone,
 As she had been diswitted.

Hop, and Mop, and Drop so clear,
 Pip, and Trip, and Skip, that were
 To Mab their sovereign dear,
 Her special maids of honour ;

Fib, and Tib, and Pinch, and Pin,
 Tick, and Quick, and Jill, and Jin,
 Tit, and Nit, and Wap, and Win,
 The train that wait upon her.

Upon a grasshopper they got,
 And what with amble and with trot,
 For hedge nor ditch they spared not,
 But after her they hie them.
 A cobweb over them they throw,
 To shield the wind if it should blow,
 Themselves they wisely could bestow,
 Lest any should espy them.

But let us leave Queen Mab awhile,
 Through many a gate, o'er many a stile
 That now had gotten by this wile,
 Her dear Pigwiggen kissing ;
 And tell how Oberon doth fare,
 Who grew as mad as any hare,
 When he had sought each place with care,
 And found his Queen was missing

By grisly Pluto he doth swear,
 He rent his clothes, and tore his ha
 And as he runneth here and there,
 An acorn cup he getteth ;
 Which soon he taketh by the stalk,
 About his head he lets it walk,
 Nor doth he any creature baulk,
 But lays on all he meeteth.

The Tuscan poet doth advance,
 The frantic Paladine of France,
 And those more ancient do inhance
 Alcides in his fury,
 And others Ajax Telamon :
 But to this time there hath been none
 So Bedlam as our Oberon,
 Of which I dare assure ye.

And first encount'ring with a wasp,
 He in his arms the fly doth clasp,
 As though his breath he forth would grasp,
 Him for Pigwidden taking :
 "Where is my wife, thou rogue? (quoth he)
 Pigwidden, she is come to thee ;
 Restore her, or thou dy'st by me."
 Whereat the poor wasp quaking,

Cries, "Oberon, great Fairy King,
 Content thee, I am no such thing ;
 I am a wasp, behold my sting !"
 At which the Fairy started.
 When soon away the wasp doth go,
 Poor wretch was never frightened so,
 He thought his wings were much too slow,
 O'erjoy'd they so were parted.

He next upon a glow-worm light
 (You must suppose it now was night),
 Which, for her hinder part was bright,
 He took to be a devil ;

And furiously doth her assail
 For carrying fire in her tail ;
 He thrash'd her rough coat with his flail,
 The mad King fear'd no evil.

“ Oh ! (quoth the glow-worm) hold thy hand,
 Thou puissant King of Fairyland,
 Thy mighty strokes who may withstand,
 Hold, or of life despair I ! ”
 Together then herself doth roll,
 And tumbling down into a hole,
 She seem'd as black as any coal,
 Which vext away the Fairy.

From thence he ran into a hive,
 Amongst the bees he letteth drive,
 And down their combs begins to rive,
 All likely to have spoiled :
 Which with their wax his face besmear'd,
 And with their honey daubed his beard ;
 It would have made a man affear'd
 To see how he was moiled.

A new adventure him betides :
 He met an ant, which he bestrides,
 And post thereon away he rides,
 Which with his haste doth stumble,
 And came full over on her snout,
 Her heels so threw the dirt about,
 For she by no means could get out,
 But over him doth tumble.

And being in this piteous case,
 And all befurried head and face,
 On runs he in this wild-goose chase,
 As here and there he rambles,
 Half blind against a mole-hill hit,
 And for a mountain taking it,
 For all he was out of his wit,
 Yet to the top he scrambles.

And being gotten to the top,
 Yet there himself he could not stop,
 But down on th' other side doth chop,
 And to the foot came rumbling :
 So that the grubs therein that bred,
 Hearing such turmoil overhead,
 Thought surely they had all been dead,
 So fearful was the jumbling.

And falling down into a lake,
 Which him up to the neck doth take,
 His fury it doth somewhat slake,
 He calleth for a ferry.
 Where you may some recovery note,
 What was his club he made his boat,
 And in his oaken cup doth float,
 As safe as in a wherry.

Men talk of the adventures strange
 Of Don Quishot, and of their change,
 Through which he armèd oft did range,
 Of Sancha Panza's travel :

But should a man tell everything
 Done by this frantic Fairy King,
 And them in lofty numbers sing,
 It well his wits might gravel.

Scarce set on shore, but therewithal
 He meeteth Puck, which most men call
 Hobgoblin, and on him doth fall
 With words from phrenzy spoken :
 " Hoh hob," quoth Hob, " God save thy grace,
 Who drest thee in this piteous case ?
 He thus that spoil'd my sovereign's face,
 I would his neck were broken."

This Puck seems but a dreaming dolt,
 Still walking like a ragged colt,
 And oft out of a bush doth bolt,
 Of purpose to deceive us ;
 And leading us makes us to stray
 Long winter nights out of the way,
 And when we stroll in mire and clay,
 He doth with laughter leave us.

" Dear Puck," quoth he, " my wife is gone ;
 As e'er thou lov'st King Oberon,
 Let everything but this alone,
 With vengeance and pursue her :
 Bring her to me alive or dead ;
 Or that vile thief Pigwiggen's head ;
 That villain hath defiled my bed,
 He to this folly drew her."

Quoth Puck, " My liege, I'll never lin,
 But I will thorough thick and thin,
 Until at length I bring her in,
 My dearest lord, ne'er doubt it."
 Thorough brake, thorough brier,
 Thorough mud, thorough mier,
 Thorough water, thorough fier,
 And thus Puck goes about it.

This thing Nymphidia overheard,
 That on this mad king had a guard,
 Not doubting of a great reward,
 For first this bus'ness broaching :
 And through the air away doth go
 Swift as an arrow from the bow,
 To let her sovereign Mab to know
 What peril was approaching.

The queen, bound with love's powerful charm,
 Sate with Pigwiggen arm in arm ;
 Her merry maids, that thought no harm,
 About the room were skipping :
 A humble-bee their minstrel, play'd
 Upon his haut-bois, every maid
 Fit for this revel was array'd,
 The hornpipe neatly tripping.

In comes Nymphidia, and doth cry,
 " My sovereign, for your safety fly,
 For there is danger but too nigh,
 I posted to forewarn you :

The king hath sent Hobgoblin out,
 To seek you all the fields about,
 And of your safety you may doubt,
 If he but once discern you."

When like an uproar in a town,
 Before them everything went down ;
 Some tore a ruff, and some a gown,
 'Gainst one another justling :
 They flew about like chaff i' th' wind ;
 For haste some left their masks behind,
 Some could not stay their gloves to find ;
 There never was such bustling.

Forth ran they by a secret way,
 Into a brake that near them lay,
 Yet much they doubted there to stay,
 Lest Hob should hap to find them :
 He had a sharp and piercing sight,
 All one to him the day and night,
 And therefore were resolv'd by flight
 To leave this place behind them.

At length one chanc'd to find a nut,
 In th' end of which a hole was cut,
 Which lay upon a hazel-root,
 There scatter'd by a squirrel,
 Which out the kernel gotten had :
 When quoth this Fay, " Dear queen, be glad,
 Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
 I'll set you safe from peril.

"Come all into this hut (quoth she),
 Come closely in, be rul'd by me,
 Each one may here a chuser be,
 For room ye need not wrestle,
 Nor need ye be together heapt."
 So one by one therein they crept,
 And lying down, they soundly slept,
 And safe as in a castle.

Nymphidia, that this while doth watch,
 Perceiv'd if Puck the queen should catch,
 That he would be her over-match,
 Of which she well bethought her ;
 Found it must be some pow'rful charm,
 The queen against him that must arm,
 Or surely he would do her harm,
 For throughly he had sought her.

And list'ning if she aught could hear,
 That her might hinder, or might fear ;
 But finding still the coast was clear,
 Nor creature had descry'd her :
 Each circumstance and having scann'd,
 She came thereby to understand,
 Puck would be with them out of hand,
 When to her charms she hy'd her.

And first her fern seed doth bestow,
 The kernel of the mistletoe ;
 And here and there as Puck should go,
 With terror to affright him,

She night-shade straws to work him ill,
 Therewith her vervain and her dill,
 That hind'reth witches of their will,
 Of purpose to despight him.

Then sprinkles she the juice of rue,
 That groweth underneath the yew,
 With wine drops of the midnight dew,
 From lunary distilling ;
 The molewarp's brain mixt therewithal,
 And with the same the pismire's gall :
 For she in nothing short would fall,
 The Fairy was so willing.

Then thrice under a brier doth creep,
 Which at both ends was rooted deep,
 And over it three times she leapt,
 Her magic much availing :
 Then on Proserpina doth call,
 And so upon her spell doth fall,
 Which here to you repeat I shall,
 Not in one tittle failing.

“ By the croaking of the frog ;
 By the howling of the dog ;
 By the crying of the hog
 Against the storm arising ;
 By the evening curfew-bell ;
 By the doleful dying knell ;
 O let this my direful spell,
 Hob, hinder thy surprising.

"By the Mandrake's dreadful groans ;
 By the Lubrican's sad moans ;
 By the noise of dead men's bones
 In charnel houses rattling ;
 By the hissing of the snake,
 The rustling of the fire-drake,
 I charge thee this place forsake,
 Nor of Queen Mab be prattling.

"By the whirlwind's hollow sound,
 By the thunder's dreadful stound,
 Yells of spirits underground,
 I charge thee not to fear us :
 By the screech-owl's dismal note,
 By the black night-raven's throat,
 I charge thee, Hob, to tear thy coat
 With thorns, if thou come near us."

Her spell thus spoke, she stept aside,
 And in a chink herself doth hide,
 To see thereof what would betide,
 For she doth only mind him :
 When presently she Puck espies,
 And well she markt his gloating eyes,
 How under every leaf he pries,
 In seeking still to find them.

But once the circle got within,
 The charms to work do straight begin,
 And he was caught as in a gin :
 For as he thus was busy,

A pain he in his headpiece feels,
 Against a stubbed tree he reels,
 And up went poor Hobgoblin's heels ;
 Alas ! his brain was dizzy.

At length upon his feet he gets,
 Hobgoblin fumes, Hobgoblin frets,
 And as again he forward sets,
 And through the bushes scrambles,
 A stump doth trip him in his pace,
 Down comes poor Hob upon his face,
 And lamentably tore his case
 Amongst the briars and brambles.

“ Plague upon Queen Mab (quoth he),
 And all her maids, where'er they be ;
 I think the devil guided me,
 To seek her, so provoked.”
 When stumbling at a piece of wood,
 He fell into a ditch of mud,
 Where to the very chin he stood,
 In danger to be choaked.

Now worse than e'er he was before,
 Poor Puck doth yell, poor Puck doth roar,
 That waked Queen Mab, who doubted sore
 Some treason had been wrought her :
 Until Nymphidia told the Queen
 What she had done, what she had seen,
 Who then had well-near crack'd her spleen
 With very extreme laughter.

But leave we Hob to clamber out,
 Queen Mab and all her Fairy rout,
 And come again to have a bout
 With Oberon yet madding :
 And with Pigwiggen now distrougt,
 Who much was troubled in his thought,
 That he so long the Queen had sought,
 And through the fields was gadding.

And as he runs, he still doth cry,
 “King Oberon, I thee defy,
 And dare thee here in arms to try,
 For my dear lady’s honour :
 In that she is a queen right good,
 In whose defence I’ll shed my blood,
 And that thou in this jealous mood
 Hast laid this slander on her.”

And quickly arms him for the field,
 A little cockle-shell his shield,
 Which he could very bravely wield,
 Yet could it not be pierced :
 His spear a bent both stiff and strong,
 And well near of two inches long ;
 The pile was of a horse-fly’s tongue,
 Whose sharpness nought reversed.

And puts him on a coat of mail,
 Which was of a fishe’s scale,
 That when his foe should him assail,
 No point should be prevailing.

His rapier was a hornet's sting,
 It was a very dangerous thing,
 For if he chanc'd to hurt the king,
 It would be long in healing.

His helmet was a beetle's head,
 Most horrible and full of dread,
 That able was to strike one dead,
 Yet it did well become him :
 And for a plume, a horse's hair,
 Which being tossèd by the air,
 Had force to strike his foe with fear,
 And turn his weapon from him.

Himself he on an earwig set,
 Yet scarce he on his back could get,
 So oft and high he did curvet,
 Ere he himself could settle :
 He made him turn, and step, and bound,
 To gallop, and to trot the round,
 He scarce could stand on any ground,
 He was so full of mettle.

When soon he met with Tomalin,
 One that a valiant knight had been,
 And to great Oberon of kin :
 Quoth he, "Thou manly Fairy,
 Tell Oberon I come prepar'd,
 Then bid him stand upon his guard ;
 This hand his baseness shall reward,
 Let him be ne'er so wary.

"Say to him thus, 'That I defy
 His slanders and his infamy,
 And as a mortal enemy
 Do publicly proclaim him :
 Withal, that if I had mine own,
 He should not wear the Fairy crown,
 But with a vengeance should come down ;
 Not we a king should name him.' "

This Tomalin could not abide,
 To hear his sovereign vilify'd ;
 But to the Fairy court him hy'd,
 Full furiously he posted,
 With ev'rything Pigwigen said ;
 How title to the crown he laid,
 And in what arms he was array'd,
 And how himself he boasted.

"Twixt head and foot, from point to point,
 He told the arming of each joint,
 In every piece how neat and quaint ;
 For Tomalin could do it :
 How fair he sat, how sure he rid ;
 As of the courser he bestrid,
 How manag'd, and how well he did.
 The king, which listen'd to it.

Quoth he, " Go, Tomalin, with speed,
 Provide me arms, provide my steed,
 And everything that I shall need,
 By thee I will be guided :

To strait account call thou thy wit,
 See there be wanting not a whit,
 In everything see thou me fit,
 Just as my foe's provided."

Soon flew this news through Fairy-land,
 Which gave Queen Mab to understand
 The combat that was then in hand
 Betwixt those men so mighty :
 Which greatly she began to rue,
 Perceiving that all Fairy knew,
 The first occasion from her grew,
 Of these affairs so weighty.

Wherefore attended with her maids,
 Through fogs, and mists, and damps she wades,
 To Proserpine the Queen of Shades,
 To treat, that it would please her
 The cause into her hands to take,
 For ancient love and friendship's sake,
 And soon thereof an end to make,
 Which of much care would ease her.

Awhile there let we Mab alone,
 And come we to King Oberon,
 Who arm'd to meet his foe is gone,
 For proud Pigwiggen crying :
 Who sought the Fairy King as fast,
 And had so well his journies cast,
 That he arrivèd at the last,
 His puissant foe espying.

Stout Tomalin came with the King,
 Tom Thumb doth on Pigwidden bring,
 That perfect were in ev'rything
 To single fights belonging :
 And therefore they themselves engage,
 To see them exercise their rage,
 With fair and comely equipage,
 Not one the other wronging.

So like in arms these champions were,
 As they had been a very pair,
 So that a man could almost swear
 That either had been either :
 Their furious steeds began to neigh,
 That they were heard a mighty way :
 Their staves upon their rests they lay ;
 Yet ere they flew together,

Their seconds minister an oath,
 Which was indifferent to them both,
 That on their knightly faith and troth,
 No magic them supplied ;
 And sought them that they had no charms,
 Wherewith to work each other's harms,
 But come with simple open arms,
 To have their causes tried.

Together furiously they ran,
 That to the ground came horse and man ;
 The blood out of their helmets span,
 So sharp were their encounters :

And though they to the earth were thrown,
 Yet quickly they regain'd their own ;
 Such nimbleness was never shewn,
 They were two gallant mounters.

When in a second course again,
 They forward came with might and main,
 Yet which had better of the twain,
 The seconds could not judge yet :
 Their shields were into pieces cleft,
 Their helmets from their heads were 'reft,
 And to defend them nothing left,
 These champions would not budge yet.

Away from them their staves they threw,
 Their cruel swords they quickly drew,
 And freshly they the fight renew,
 They every stroke redoubled :
 Which made Proserpina take heed,
 And make to them the greater speed,
 For fear lest they too much should bleed,
 Which wond'rously her troubled.

When to th' infernal Styx she goes,
 She take the fogs from thence that rose,
 And in a bag doth them enclose,
 When well she had them blended :
 She hies her then to Lethe spring,
 A bottle and thereof doth bring,
 Wherewith she meant to work the thing
 Which only she intended.

Now Proserpine with Mab is gone
 Unto the place where Oberon
 And proud Pigwiggen, one to one,
 Both to be slain were likely :
 And there themselves they closely hide,
 Because they would not be espy'd ;
 For Proserpine meant to decide
 The matter very quickly.

And suddenly unties the poke,
 Which out of it sent such a smoke,
 As ready was them all to choke,
 So grievous was the pother :
 So that the knights each other lost,
 And stood as still as any post,
 Tom Thumb nor Tomalin could boast
 Themselves of any other.

But when the mist 'gan somewhat cease,
 Proserpina commandeth peace,
 And that a while they should release
 Each other of their peril :
 " Which here (quoth she) I do proclaim
 To all, in dreadful Pluto's name,
 That as ye will eschew his blame,
 You let me hear the quarrel.

" But here yourselves you must engage,
 Somewhat to cool your spleenish rage,
 Your grievous thirst and to assuage,
 That first you drink this liquor ;

Which shall your understandings clear,
 As plainly shall to you appear,
 Those things from me that you shall hear,
 Conceiving much the quicker.”

This Lethe water, you must know,
 The memory destroyeth so,
 That of our weal, or of our woe,
 It all remembrance blotted,
 Of it nor can you ever think :
 For they no sooner took this drink,
 But nought into their brains could sink,
 Of what had them besotted.

King Oberon forgotten had
 That he for jealousy ran mad ;
 But of his queen was wond'rous glad,
 And ask'd how they came thither.
 Pigwigen likewise doth forget
 That he Queen Mab had ever met,
 Or that they were so hard beset
 When they were found together.

Nor either of 'em both had thought
 That e'er they had each other fought,
 Much less that they a combat sought,
 But such a dream were loathing.
 Tom Thumb had got a little sup,
 And Tomalin scarce kiss'd the cup,
 Yet had their brains so sure lockt up,
 That they remember'd nothing.

Queen Mab and her light maids the while
Amongst themselves do closely smile,
To see the king caught with this wile,
 With one another jesting :
And to the Fairy Court they went,
With mickle joy and merriment,
Which thing was done with good intent ;
 And thus I left them feasting.

MICHAEL DRAYTON.

PRINCE BRIGHTKIN.

SCENE : A Forest in Fairyland.

DAWN.

- First Fairy.* Fairies and Elves !
Shadows of night
Pale and grow thin,
Branches are stirr'd ;
Rouse up yourselves ;
Sing to the light,
Fairies, begin,—
Hark, there's a bird !
- Second.* For dreams are now fading,
Old thoughts in new morning ;
Dull spectres and goblins
To dungeon must fly.
The starry night changeth,
Its low stars are setting,
Its lofty stars dwindle
And hide in the sky.
- First.* Fairies, awake !
Light on the hills !
Blossom and grass
Tremble with dew ;

Gambols the snake,
 Merry bird shrills,
 Honey-bees pass,
 Morning is new.

Second. Pure joy of the cloudlets,
 All rippled in crimson !
 Afar over world's edge
 The night-fear is roll'd ;
 O look how the Great One
 Uplifts himself kingly ;
 At once the wide morning
 Is flooded with gold !

First. Fairies, arouse !
 Mix with your song
 Harplet and pipe,
 Thrilling and clear.
 Swarm on the boughs !
 Chant in a throng !
 Morning is ripe,
 Waiting to hear.

Second. The merle and the skylark
 Will hush for our chorus,
 Quick wavelets of music,
 Begin them anon !
 Good-luck comes to all things
 That hear us and hearken,—
 Our myriads of voices
 Commingling in one.

General Chorus. Golden, golden
 Light unfolding,
 Busily, merrily, work and play,
 In flowery meadows,
 And forest-shadows,
 All the length of a summer day !
 All the length of a summer day !

Sprightly, lightly,
 Sing we rightly !
 Moments brightly hurry away !
 Fruit-tree blossoms,
 And roses' bosoms—
 Clear blue sky of a summer day !
 Dear blue sky of a summer day !

Springlets, brooklets,
 Greeny nooklets,
 Hill and valley, and salt-sea spray !
 Comrade rovers,
 Fairy lovers,—
 All the length of a summer day !
 All the livelong summer day !

FORENOON.

Enter two Fairies (ROSLING and Another) separately.

First. Greeting, brother !

Second. Greet thee well !
 Hast thou any news to tell ?
 How goes sunshine ?

First. Flowers of noon
All their eyes will open soon,
While ours are closing. What hast done
Since the rising of the sun ?

Second. Four wild snails I've taught their paces,
Pick'd the best ones for the races.
Thou ?

First. Where luscious dewdrops lurk,
I with fifty went to work,
Catching delicious wine that wets
The warm blue heart of violets ;
Last moon it was hawthorn-flower,
Next moon 'twill be virgin's bower,
Moon by moon, the varied rose,—
To seal in flasks for winter mirth,
When frost and darkness wrap the earth
Which wine delights you, fay ?

Second. All those
But none is like the Wine of Rose.
With Wine of Rose,
In midst of snows
'The sunny season flows and glows !

First. Elf, thou lovest best, I think,
'The time to sit in a cave and drink.

Second. Is't not well to have good reason,
'Thus, for loving every season ?
White-rose wine
Is pure and fine,

But red-rose dew, dear tippie of mine !
The red flow'rs bud
In our summery blood,
And the nightingale sings in our brain like a wood !

First. Some who came a-gathering dew,
Tasting, sipping, fresh and new,
Tumbled down, an idle crew,
And there among the grass they lie,
Under a toadstool ; any fly
May nip their foolish noses !

Second. Soon
We shall hear the Call of Noon.

First. They cannot stir to any tune.
No evening feast for them, be sure,
But far-off sentry on the moor.
Whence that sound of music ?—hist !

Second. Klingoling, chief lutanist,
A hundred song-birds in a ring
Is teaching all this morn to sing
Together featly, so to fill
The wedding-music,—loud and shrill,
Soft and sweet, and high and low,
Singled, mingled. He doth know
The art to make a hundred heard
Like one great surprising bird.

First. Here comes Rosling ! He'll report
All the doings of the Court.

Enter a Third Fairy.

Greeting, brothers !

First. Greet thee well !

Hast thou any news to tell ?
Our Princess dear, what shadow lies
Drooping on her blissful eyes ?
Her suitors plague her ?—is it so ?

Third. So in truth it is. But, lo !
Who comes our way ? Fairy, whence ?
Thou'rt a stranger.

Enter a Fourth Fairy.

No offence,
I trust, altho' my cap is blue,
While yours are green as any leaf.
Courteous fays ! No spy or thief
Is here, but one who longs to view
Your famous Forest ; chiefly there
Your Princess fair, the praised in song
Wheresoever fairies throng.
Oft you see her ?

Third. Every day.

Fourth. And is she lovely as they say ?

Third. Thou hast not seen her? Dost thou think
 Blue and golden, white and pink,
 Could paint the magic of her face?
 All common beauty's highest place
 Being under hers how far!—

Fourth. How far?

Third. A glow-worm to the evening star.

First. Scarce Klingoling could say so well!
 'Tis true: so much she doth excel.
 Come, fairy, to our feast to-night,
 Two hours from sunset; then you may
 See the Forest-Realm's Delight.

Fourth. But were it not presumptuous?

First. Nay,
 Thou art, I ween, a gentle fay,
 And sure of welcome.

Fourth. It is said
 Her Highness shortly means to wed!

Third. Next full moon, by fairy law,
 She must marry, no escape,
 Were it marsh-sprite, kobold, shape
 Creeping from earth-hole with horn and claw!

Fourth. And hath she now a suitor?

Third. Three ;
 Bloatling, Rudling, Loftling ; she
 Loathes them all impartially.
 The first is ugly, fat, and rich,
 Grandson of a miser witch ;
 He sends her bossy peonies,
 Fat as himself, to please her eyes,
 And double poppies, mock flow'rs made
 In clumsy gold, for brag display'd ;
 Ten of the broadest shoulder'd elves
 To carry one must strain themselves.

First. Aye ! so I've seen them.

Second. This is more Than I ever heard before.

Third. Field-marshal Rudling, soldier fay,
 His beard a broom to sweep away
 Opposition, with his frown
 Biddeth common fairies, "Down !
 Down on your knees !" and then his smile,
 Our lovely Lady's heart to wile—
 Soft as a rat-trap ! and his voice—
 Angry jay makes no such noise
 When bold marauders threat (as you,
 Little Jinkling, sometimes do)
 Her freckled eggs.

Fourth. And Loftling ?

Third. True,
 Prince Loftling's chin, so grand is he,
 Is where another's nose would be ;
 His proud backbone the wrong way bends
 With nobleness. He condescends
 To come in state to our poor wood ;
 And then 'tis always understood
 We silence every prattling bird,
 Nor must one grasshopper be heard ;
 Which tasks our people ; she, meanwhile,
 Our Lady, half dead with his vile
 Ceremonial and precision,—
 "Madam, with your august permission,
 I have the honour to remark—
 Ah hum ! ah haw !" from dawn to dark,

Fourth. He will not win her !

Third. No, no, no !
 Dreary the wood if that were so,
 Good stranger. But enough, I ween,
 Of gossip now.

Fourth. Kind Caps o' Green,
 I thank ye for your courtesies !
 Brightkin's my name, my country lies
 Round that blue peak your scout espies
 From loftiest fir-tree on the skies
 Of sunset. So I take my leave
 Till the drawing-on of eve.

First. They call me Rosling, gentle fay.
 Adieu ! forget not ; here I'll stay
 To meet thee and to show the way.

All. Adieu ! adieu ! till close of day.

THE NOON CALL.
 Hear the call !
 Fays, be still !
 Noon is deep
 On vale and hill.
 Stir no sound
 The Forest round !
 Let all things hush
 That fly or creep,—
 Tree and bush,
 Air and ground !
 Hear the call !
 Silence keep !
 One and all
 Hush and sleep !

NEAR SUNSET.

Two Fairies : ROSLING and JINKLING.

Ros. Little Jinkling ! friend of mine !
 Where dost lurk when fairies dine ?
 At the banquet round and round
 Searching, thee I never found.
 Comest thou late ? The feast is done ;
 Slowly sinks the mighty sun.

Jink. Nay, fay ! I was far away.
 Over the tree-tops did I soar
 Twenty leagues and twenty more.
 Swift and high goes the dragon-fly,

And steady the death's-head moth,
 But the little bird with his beak awry
 Is a better saddle than both !
 The lovely Lady of Elfin-Mere,
 I had a message for her ear.

Ros. Of state ?

Jink. Of state : of import great,
 I must not even to thee relate.

Ros. And is she fair ?

Jink. Thrice fair is she ;
 The pearly moon less delicately
 Comes shining onward than this Lady
 From her water-palace shady
 Floats across the lucent lake,
 And all her starry lilies make
 Obeisance ; every water-sprite
 Gazing after with delight,
 Only wishing he might dare
 Just to touch her streaming hair,
 Meanwhile, crowds of fairies glide
 Over, under, the crystal tide,
 Some on swimming-birds astride,
 Some with merry fishes at play,
 Darting round her rippling way.

Ros. There was your banquet !

Jink. There indeed,
 Among the lily and the reed.
 Wavy music, as we feasted,
 Floating round us while we floated,

Soothed our pleasure and increased it ;
 Mirth and jest more briskly glancing
 Than the water-diamonds dancing
 Down the lake where sunshine smote it.
 Bright and gay !—might not stay !—
 White the hand I kiss'd, O fay,
 Leap'd on my bird, and sped away.
 Hast any news to tell me ?

Ros. Much !
 Never didst thou hear of such.

Jink. A fight with spiders ?—hornets ?—perils
 Teasing owls, or chasing squirrels ?
 Or some little elf, poor soul,
 Lost in a winding rabbit-hole ?
 Are the royal trees in danger ?

Ros. Dost thou mind the Blue-cap Stranger,
 Brightkin by his name, that we Met ere noontide lullaby ?

Jink. Came he to your Feast ?

Ros. My friend,
 Ask no more questions, but attend !
 To the Feast he came with me,
 The chamberlain most courteously
 Placing us nigh the upper end.
 Her Highness bow'd, and Brightkin gazed
 On her face like one amazed,
 While our Beauty's tender eyes
 Rested with a sweet surprise

Upon the stranger-fairy : round
 Went cates and wines, and Klingoling
 With five new birds began to sing.
 Then came a page on errand bound
 To ask the stranger's name and realm :
 " Brightkin of the Purple Helm,
 From the Blue Mountain, fairy knight,
 Flown thence to view the Forest,—might
 It please her Highness." It did please.
 So by and by we sat at ease
 In shadowy bow'r, a favour'd ring,
 Now talking, now with Klingoling
 Join'd in a waft of harmony ;
 And evermore there seem'd to be
 'Twixt Brightkin and our Princess dear
 A concord, more than string with string
 And voice with voice rejoice one's ear.
 And then he took the lute and sung,
 With modest grace and skilfully,
 For tipt with honey seem'd his tongue ;
 At first a murmuring melody,
 Like the far song of falling rills
 Amid the foldings of the hills,
 And ever nearer as it flew,
 Shaping its figure, like a bird,
 Till into Love's own form it grew
 In every lovely note and word.
 So sweet a song we never heard !
 When, think what came ?

Jink.

I cannot think.

Ros.

A trumpet-blast that made us wink !

A hailstorm upon basking flowers !
 Quick, sharp!—we started to our feet,
 All save her Highness, mild and sweet,
 Who said, "See who invades our bowers."

Jink. Who was it, Rosling? quickly say!

Ros. The King of the Blue Mountains, fay,
 Seeking audience, without delay.
 Fierce and frowning his look at first,
 Like that uncivil trumpet-burst;
 But all his blackness alter'd soon,
 Like clouds that melt upon the moon,
 Before the gentle dignity
 Of Her, Titania's child, whom we Obey and love.

Jink. Blest may she be !
 But wherefore came the haughty King?

Ros. Hear briefly an unusual thing.
 His only Son, the prince and heir,
 Kept with too strict and jealous care
 Within the mountain boundaries,
 To-day o'erleaps them all, and flies,
 No elf knows whither : flies to-day—
 The Lord of Gnomes being on his way,
 Bringing to that mountain Court
 His gem-clad heiress. Here was sport !
 Then couriers told the angry king
 They saw the Prince on gray-dove's wing
 Threading our forest ; and again
 That he had join'd our Lady's train.

“Madam! is’t so?” “If this be so,
Great sir, I nothing know.” When lo!
Brightkin outspringing kneels. “My son!”
Exclaims the king—“Ho! seize and bind him!”
But swift her Highness—“Stay! let none
Move hand or foot! Great King, you find him
Here in the Forest-Realm, my rule
Whereof no fairy power may school,
Saving imperial Oberon.
Free came he hither, free shall go.”
Then says the Prince, “If you command,
I leave you, Pride of Fairyland,
Else never!” Briefly now to tell,
As briefly all these things befell,
’Twas clear as new-born star they loved;
The Mountain-King their love approved;
And all were happy.

Jink. Where are they,
The King and Prince?

Ros. They fly away
On the sunset’s latest ray.
To-morrow they will come again,
With a countless noble train:
And next full moon—the Wedding Feast!

Jink. O joy! the greatest and the least
Will join the revelry, and bring
A marriage-gift of some fine thing.

I know a present she will prize—
 A team of spot-wing'd butterflies,
 Right in flight, or else with ease
 Winding through the tops of trees,
 Or soaring in the summer sky.

Ros. Well done, Jinkling!—Now good-bye ;
 Sleepy as a field-mouse I,
 When paws and snout coil'd he doth lie.

Jink. Hark to Klingoling's lute-playing !
 On the poplar-spire a-swaying
 Gently to the crescent moon.

Ros. I cannot stay to hear the tune.

Jink. I linger in the yellow light.

Ros. And so, good-night !

Jink. And so, good-night !

AFTER SUNSET.

Kingoling and a Faint Chorus.

Moon soon sets now ;
 Elves cradled on the bough.
 Day's fays drop asleep ;
 Dreams through the forest creep.

Chorus. When broadens the moonlight, we frolic and jest ;
When darkles the forest, we sink into rest.

Shine, fine star above !
Love's come, happy love !
Haste, happy wedding-night,
Full moon, round and bright !

Chorus. And not till her circle is low in the west
We'll cease from our dancing, or couch us to rest !

Lute, mute fall thy strings !
Hush, every voice that sings !
Fade away, drowsy song,
Dim forest-aisles along !

Chorus. Of all thy dear music a love-song is best !
Thou hushest—we're silent—we sink into rest.

WILLIAM ALLINGHAM.

THE CULPRIT FAY.

'Tis the middle watch of a summer's night—
 The earth is dark but the heavens are bright ;
 Nought is seen in the vault on high
 But the stars, and the moon, and the cloudless sky,
 And the flood which rolls its milky hue,
 A river of light on the welkin blue.
 The moon looks down on old Cronest,
 She mellows the shades on his shaggy breast,
 And seems his huge gray form to throw
 In a silver cone on the wave below ;
 His sides are broken by spots of shade,
 By the walnut bough and the cedar made,
 And through their clustering branches dark
 Glimmers and dies the firefly's spark—
 Like starry twinkles that momentarily break
 Through the rifts of the gathering tempest's rack.

II.

The stars are on the moving stream,
 And fling, as its ripples gently flow,
 A burnished length of wavy beam
 In an eel-like spiral line below ;
 The winds are whist, and the owl is still,
 The bat in the shelvy rock is hid,
 And nought is heard on the lonely hill
 But the cricket's chirp, and the answer shrill
 Of the gauze-winged Katy-did ;

And the plaint of the wailing whip-poor-will,
 Who moans unseen, and ceaseless sings,
 Ever a note of wail and wo,
 Till morning spreads her rosy wings,
 And earth and sky in her glances glow.

III.

'Tis the hour of fairy ban and spell,
 The wood-tick has kept the minutes well,
 He has counted them all with click and stroke,
 Deep on the heart of the mountain oak,
 And he has awakened the sentry elfe
 Who sleeps with him in the haunted tree,
 To bid him ring the hour of twelve,
 And call the fays to their revelry ;
 Twelve small strokes on his tinkling bell—
 ('Twas made of the white snail's pearly shell :)—
 " Midnight comes, and all is well !
 Hither, hither, wing your way !
 'Tis the dawn of the fairy day."

IV.

They come from beds of lichen green,
 They creep from the mullen's velvet screen ;
 Some on the backs of beetles fly
 From the silver tops of moon-touched trees,
 Where they swung in their cobweb hammocks high,
 And rocked about in the evening breeze ;
 Some from the hum-bird's downy nest—
 And, pillowed on plumes of his rainbow breast,
 Had slumbered there till the charmed hour ;
 Some had lain in the scoop of the rock,

With glittering ising-stars inlaid,
 And some had opened the four-o'clock,
 And stole within its purple shade.
 And now they throng the moonlight glade,
 Above—below—on every side,
 Their little minim forms arrayed
 In the tricksey pomp of fairy pride !

v.

They come not now to print the lea,
 In freak and dance around the tree,
 Or at the mushroom board to sup,
 And drink the dew from the buttercup ;—
 A scene of sorrow waits them now,
 For an Ouphe has broken his vestal vow ;
 He has loved an earthly maid,
 And left for her his woodland shade ;
 He has lain upon her lip of dew,
 And sunned him in her eye of blue,
 Fanned her cheek with his wing of air,
 Played in the ringlets of her hair,
 And, nestling on her snowy breast,
 Forgot the lily-king's behest.
 For this the shadowy tribes of air
 To the elfin court must haste away :—
 And now they stand expectant there,
 To hear the doom of the Culprit Fay.

vi.

The throne was reared upon the grass
 Of spice-wood and of sassafras ;
 On pillars of mottled tortoise-shell

Hung the burnished canopy—
 And o'er it gorgeous curtains fell
 Of the tulip's crimson drapery.
 The monarch sat on his judgment-seat,
 On his brow the crown imperial shone,
 The prisoner Fay was at his feet,
 And his peers were ranged around the throne.
 He waved his sceptre in the air,
 He looked around and calmly spoke ;
 His brow was grave and his eye severe,
 But his voice in a softened accent broke :—

VII.

“ Fairy ! Fairy ! list and mark,
 Thou has broke thine elfin chain,
 Thy flame-wood lamp is quenched and dark,
 And thy wings are dyed with a deadly stain—
 Thou hast sullied thine elfin purity
 In the glance of a mortal maiden's eye ;
 Thou hast scorned our dread decree,
 And thou shouldst pay the forfeit high,
 But well I know her sinless mind
 Is pure as the angel forms above,
 Gentle and meek, and chaste and kind,
 Such as a spirit well might love ;
 Fairy ! had she spot or taint,
 Bitter had been thy punishment.
 Tied to the hornet's shardy wings ;
 Tossed on the pricks of nettles' stings ;
 Or seven long ages doomed to dwell
 With the lazy worm in the walnut-shell ;
 Or every night to writhe and bleed
 Beneath the tread of the centipede ;

Or bound in a cobweb dungeon dim,
 Your jailer a spider huge and grim,
 Amid the carrion bodies to lie,
 Of the worm, and the bug, and the murdered fly :
 These it had been your lot to bear,
 Had a stain been found on the earthly fair.
 Now list, and mark our mild decree—
 Fairy, this your doom must be :—

VIII.

“ Thou shalt seek the beach of sand
 Where the water bounds the elfin land,
 Thou shalt watch the oozy brine
 Till the sturgeon leaps in the bright moonshine,
 Then dart the glistening arch below,
 And catch a drop from his glistening bow.
 The water-sprites will wield their arms,
 And dash around, with roar and rave,
 And vain are the woodland spirits' charms,
 They are the imps that rule the wave.
 Yet trust thee in thy single might,
 If thy heart be pure and thy spirit right,
 Thou shalt win the warlock fight.

IX.

“ If the spray-bead gem be won,
 The stain of thy wing is washed away,
 But another errand must be done
 Ere thy crime be lost for aye ;
 Thy flame-wood lamp is quenched and dark,
 Thou must reilluminate its spark.
 Mount thy steed and spur him high
 To the heaven's blue canopy ;

And when thou seest a shooting star,
Follow it fast, and follow it far—
The last faint spark of its burning train
Shall light the elfin lamp again.
Thou hast heard our sentence, Fay ;
Hence ! to the water-side, away !”

x.

The goblin marked his monarch well ;
He spake not, but he bowed him low,
Then plucked a crimson colen-bell,
And turned him round in act to go.
The way is long, he cannot fly,
His soiled wing has lost its power,
And he winds adown the mountain high,
For many a sore and weary hour.
Through dreary beds of tangled fern,
Through groves of nightshade dark and dorn,
Over the grass and through the brake,
Where toils the ant and sleeps the snake ;
Now o'er the violet's azure flush
He skips along in lightsome mood :
And now he thrids the bramble-bush,
Till its points are dyed in fairy blood.
He has leaped the bog, he has pierced the briar,
He has swam the brook, and waded the mire,
Till his spirits sank, and his limbs grew weak,
And the red waxed fainter in his cheek.
He had fallen to the ground outright,
For rugged and dim was his onward track,
But there came a spotted toad in sight,
And he laughed as he jumped upon her back ;

He bridled her mouth with a silkweed twist,
 He lashed her sides with an osier thong ;
 And now through evening's dewy mist
 With leap and spring they bound along,
 Till the mountain's magic verge is past,
 And the beach of sand is reached at last.

XI.

Soft and pale is the moony beam,
 Moveless still the glassy stream,
 The wave is clear, the beach is bright
 With snowy shells and sparkling stones ;
 The shore-surge comes in ripples light,
 In murmurings faint and distant moans ;
 And ever afar in the silence deep
 Is heard the splash of the sturgeon's leap,
 And the bend of his graceful bow is seen—
 A glittering arch of silver sheen,
 Spanning the wave of burnished blue,
 And dripping with gems of the river dew.

XII.

The elfin cast a glance around,
 As he lighted down from his courser toad,
 Then round his breast his wings he wound,
 And close to the river's brink he strode ;
 He sprang on a rock, he breathed a prayer,
 Above his head his arms he threw,
 Then tossed a tiny curve in air,
 And headlong plunged in the waters blue.

XIII.

Up sprung the spirits of the waves,
From sea-silk beds in their coral caves,
With snail-plate armour snatched in haste,
They speed their way through the liquid waste ;
Some are rapidly borne along
On the mailed shrimp or the prickly prong,
Some on the blood-red leeches glide,
Some on the stony star-fish ride,
Some on the back of the lancing squab,
Some on the sideling soldier-crab ;
And some on the jellied quarl, that flings
At once a thousand streamy stings ;
They cut the wave with the living oar,
And hurry on to the moonlight shore,
To guard their realms and chase away
The footsteps of the invading Fay.

XIV.

Fearlessly he skims along,
His hope is high, and his limbs are strong,
He spreads his arms like the swallow's wing,
And throws his feet with a frog-like fling ;
His locks of gold on the water shine,
At his breast the tiny foam-beds rise,
His back gleams bright above the brine,
And the wake-line foam behind him lies.
But the water-sprites are gathering near
To check his course along the tide ;
Their warriors come in swift career
And hem him round on every side ;
On his thigh the leech has fixed his hold,
The quarl's long arms are round him rolled,

The prickly prong has pierced his skin,
 And the squab has thrown his javelin,
 The gritty star has rubbed him raw,
 And the crab has struck with his giant claw ;
 He howls with rage and he shrieks with pain,
 He strikes around, but his blows are vain ;
 Hopeless is the unequal fight,
 Fairy ! nought is left but flight.

xv.

He turned him round and fled amain
 With hurry and dash to the beach again,
 He twisted over from side to side,
 And laid his cheek to the cleaving tide.
 The strokes of his plunging arms are fleet,
 And with all his might he flings his feet,
 But the water-sprites are round him still,
 To cross his path and work him ill.
 They bade the wave before him rise ;
 They flung the sea-fire in his eyes,
 And they stunned his ears with the scallop stroke,
 With the porpoise heave and the drum-fish croak.
 Oh ! but a weary wight was he
 When he reached the foot of the dogwood tree
 —Gashed and wounded, and stiff and sore,
 He laid him down on the sandy shore ;
 He blessed the force of the charmed line,
 And he banned the water-goblins' spite,
 For he saw around in the sweet moonshine
 Their little wee faces above the brine,
 Giggling and laughing with all their might
 At the piteous hap of the fairy wight.

XVI.

Soon he gathered the balsam dew
From the sorrel-leaf and the henbane bud ;
Over each wound the balm he drew,
And with cobweb lint he stanch'd the blood.
The mild west wind was soft and low,
It cooled the heat of his burning brow,
And he felt new life in his sinews shoot,
As he drank the juice of the cal'mus root ;
And now he treads the fatal shore
As fresh and vigorous as before.

XVII.

Wrapped in musing stands the sprite :
'Tis the middle wane of night,
His task is hard, his way is far,
But he must do his errand right
Ere dawning mounts her beamy car,
And rolls her chariot wheels of light ;
And vain are the spells of fairy-land,
He must work with a human hand.

XVIII.

He cast a saddened look around,
But he felt new joy his bosom swell,
When, glittering on the shadowed ground,
He saw a purple mussel shell ;
Thither he ran, and he bent him low,
He heaved at the stern, and he heaved at the bow,
And he pushed her over the yielding sand,
Till he came to the verge of the haunted land.

She was as lovely a pleasure-boat
 As ever fairy had paddled in,
 For she glowed with purple paint without,
 And shone with silver pearl within ;
 A sculler's notch in the stern he made,
 An oar he shaped of the bootle-blade ;
 Then sprung to his seat with a lightsome leap,
 And launched afar on the calm blue deep.

XIX.

The imps of the river yell and rave ;
 They had no power above the wave,
 But they heaved the billow before the prow,
 And they dashed the surge against her side,
 And they struck her keel with jerk and blow,
 Till the gunwale bent to the rocking tide.
 She wimpled about in the pale moonbeam,
 Like a feather that floats on a wind-tossed stream ;
 And momentarily athwart her track
 The quarl upreared his island back,
 And the fluttering scallop behind would float,
 And spatter the water about the boat ;
 But he bailed her out with his colen-bell,
 And he kept her trimmed with a wary tread,
 While on every side like lightning fell
 The heavy strokes of his bootle-blade.

XX.

Onward still he held his way,
 Till he came where the column of moonshine lay,
 And saw beneath the surface dim
 The brown-backed sturgeon slowly swim :

Around him were the goblin train—
But he sculled with all his might and main,
And followed wherever the sturgeon led,
Till he saw him upward point his head ;
Then he dropped his paddle blade,
And held his colen-goblet up
To catch the drop in its crimson cup.

XXI.

With sweeping tail and quivering fin,
Through the wave the sturgeon flew,
And, like the heaven-shot javelin,
He sprang above the waters blue.
Instant as the star-fall light,
He plunged him in the deep again,
But left an arch of silver bright,
The rainbow of the moony main.
It was a strange and lovely sight
To see the puny goblin there ;
He seemed an angel form of light,
With azure wing and sunny hair,
Throned on a cloud of purple fair,
Circled with blue and edged with white,
And sitting at the fall of even
Beneath the bow of summer heaven.

XXII.

A moment, and its lustre fell,
But ere it met the billow blue,
He caught within his crimson bell,
A droplet of its sparkling dew—
Joy to thee, Fay ! thy task is done,
Thy wings are pure, for the gem is won—

Cheerily ply the dripping oar,
And haste away to the elfin shore.

XXIII.

He turns, and lo ! on either side
The ripples on his path divide ;
And the track o'er which his boat must pass
Is smooth as a sheet of polished glass.
Around, their limbs the sea-nymphs lave,
With snowy arms half swelling out,
While on the glossed and gleamy wave
Their sea-green ringlets loosely float ;
They swim around with smile and song ;
They press the bark with pearly hand,
And gently urge her course along,
Toward the beach of speckled sand ;
And, as he lightly leaped to land,
They bade adieu with nod and bow,
Then gaily kissed each little hand,
And dropped in the crystal deeps below.

XXIV.

A moment stayed the fairy there ;
He kissed the beach and breathed a prayer,
Then spread his wings of gilded blue,
And on to the elfin court he flew ;
As ever ye saw a bubble rise,
And shine with a thousand changing dyes,
Till lessening far through ether driven,
It mingles with the hues of heaven ;
As, at the glimpse of morning pale,
The lance-fly spreads his silken sail,

And gleams with blending soft and bright,
 Till lost in the shades of fading night ;
 So rose from earth the lovely Fay—
 So vanished, far in heaven away !

* * * *

Up, Fairy ! quit thy chick-weed bower,
 The cricket has called the second hour,
 Twice again, and the lark will rise
 To kiss the streaking of the skies—
 Up ! thy charmed armour don,
 Thou'lt need it ere the night be gone.

XXV.

He put his acorn-helmet on ;
 It was plumed of the silk of the thistle-down ;
 The corslet-plate that guarded his breast
 Was once the wild-bees' golden vest ;
 His cloak of a thousand mingled dyes,
 Was formed of the wings of butterflies ;
 His shield was the shell of a lady-bug queen,
 Studs of gold on a ground of green ;
 And the quivering lance which he brandished bright,
 Was the sting of a wasp he had slain in fight.
 Swift he bestrode his firefly steed ;
 He bared his blade of the bent grass blue ;
 He drove his spurs of the cockle-seed,
 And away like a glance of thought he flew,
 To skim the heavens and follow far
 The fiery trail of the rocket-star.

XXVI.

The moth-fly, as he shot in air,
 Crept under the leaf, and hid her there ;

The katy-did forgot its lay,
 The prowling gnat fled fast away,
 The fell moscheto checked his drone
 And folded his wings till the Fay was gone,
 And the wily beetle dropped his head,
 And fell on the ground as if he were dead ;
 They crouched them close in the darksome shade,
 They quaked all o'er with awe and fear,
 For they had felt the blue-bent blade,
 And writhed at the prick of the elfin spear ;
 Many a time on a summer's night,
 When the sky was clear and the moon was bright,
 They had been roused from the haunted ground,
 By the yelp and bay of the fairy hound ;
 They had heard the tiny bugle-horn,
 They had heard the twang of the maize-silk string,
 When the vine-twigg boughs were tightly drawn,
 And the nettle shaft through air was borne,
 Feathered with down of the hum-bird's wing.
 And now they deemed the courier ouphe,
 Some hunter sprite of the elfin ground ;
 And they watched till they saw him mount the roof
 That canopies the world around ;
 Then glad they left their covert lair,
 And freaked about in the midnight air.

XXVII.

Up to the vaulted firmament
 His path the firefly courser bent,
 And at every gallop on the wind,
 He flung a glittering spark behind ;
 He flies like a feather in the blast
 Till the first light cloud in heaven is past,

But the shapes of air have begun their work,
And a drizzly mist is round him cast,
He cannot see through the mantle murk,
He shivers with cold, but he urges fast,
 Through storm and darkness, sleet, and shade,
He lashes his steed, and spurs amain,
For shadowy hands have twitched the rein,
 And flame-shot tongues around him played,
And near him many a fiendish eye
Glared with a fell malignity,
And yells of rage, and shrieks of fear,
Came screaming on his startled ear.
His wings are wet around his breast,
The plume hangs dripping from his crest,
His eyes are blurred with the lightning's glare,
And his ears are stunned with the thunder's blare,
But he gave a shout, and his blade he drew,
 He thrust before, and he struck behind,
Till he pierced their cloudy bodies through,
 And gashed their shadowy limbs of wind ;
Howling the misty spectres flew,
 They rend the air with frightful cries,
For he has gained the welkin blue,
 And the land of clouds beneath him lies.

XXVIII.

Up to the cope careering swift
 In breathless motion fast,
Fleet as the swallow cuts the drift,
 Or the sea-roc rides the blast,

The sapphire sheet of eve is shot,
 The sphered moon is past,
 The earth but seems a tiny blot
 On a sheet of azure cast.
 O ! it was sweet in the clear moonlight,
 To tread the starry plain of even,
 To meet the thousand eyes of night,
 And feel the cooling breath of heaven ;
 But the Elfin made no stop or stay
 Till he came to the bank of the milky-way,
 Then he checked his courser's foot,
 And watched for the glimpse of the planet-shoot.

XXIX.

Sudden along the snowy tide
 That swelled to meet their footsteps' fall,
 The sylphs of heaven were seen to glide,
 Attired in sunset's crimson pall ;
 Around the Fay they weave the dance,
 They skip before him on the plain,
 And one has taken his wasp-sting lance,
 And one upholds his bridle-rein ;
 With warblings wild they lead him on
 To where through clouds of amber seen,
 Studded with stars, resplendent shone
 The palace of the sylphid queen.
 Its spiral columns gleaming bright
 Were streamers of the northern light ;
 Its curtains' light and lovely flush
 Was of the morning's rosy blush,
 And the ceiling fair that rose aboon
 The white and feathery fleece of noon.

XXX.

But oh ! how fair the shape that lay
 Beneath a rainbow bending bright,
She seemed to the entranced Fay
 The loveliest of the forms of light ;
Her mantle was the purple rolled
 At twilight in the west afar ;
'Twas tied with threads of dawning gold,
 And buttoned with a sparkling star.
Her face was like the lily roon
 That veils the vestal planet's hue ;
Her eyes two beamlets from the moon,
 Set floating in the welkin blue.
Her hair is like the sunny beam,
And the diamond gems which round it gleam,
Are the pure drops of dewy even
That ne'er have left their native heaven.

XXXI.

She raised her eyes to the wondering sprite,
 And they leaped with smiles, for well I ween
Never before in the bowers of light
 Had the form of an earthly Fay been seen.
Long she looked in his tiny face ;
 Long with his butterfly cloak she played ;
She smoothed his wings of azure lace,
 And handled the tassel of his blade ;
And as he told in accents low
The story of his love and woe,
She felt new pains in her bosom rise,
 And the tear-drop started in her eyes

And "O, sweet spirit of earth," she cried,
 "Return no more to your woodland height,
 But ever here with me abide
 In the land of everlasting light !
 Within the fleecy drift we'll lie,
 We'll hang upon the rainbow's rim,
 And all the jewels of the sky
 Around thy brow shall brightly beam !
 And thou shalt bathe thee in the stream
 That rolls its whitening foam aboon,
 And ride upon the lightning's gleam,
 And dance upon the orbéd moon !
 We'll sit within the Pleiad ring,
 We'll rest on Orion's starry belt,
 And I will bid my sylphs to sing
 The song that makes the dew-mist melt ;
 Their harps are of the umber shade
 That hides the blush of waking day,
 And every gleamy string is made
 Of silvery moonshine's lengthened ray ;
 And thou shalt pillow on my breast
 While heavenly breathings float around,
 And, with the sylphs of ether blest,
 Forget the joys of fairy ground."

XXXII.

She was lovely and fair to see,
 And the Elfin's heart beat fitfully ;
 But lovelier far, and still more fair,
 The earthly form imprinted there ;
 Nought he saw in the heavens above
 Was half so dear as his mortal love,

For he thought upon her looks so meek,
And he thought of the light flush on her cheek ;
Never again might he bask and lie
On that sweet cheek and moonlight eye,
But in his dreams her form to see,
To clasp her in his revery,
To think upon his virgin bride
Was worth all heaven and earth beside.

XXXIII.

“Lady,” he cried, “I have sworn to-night
On the word of a fairy knight,
To do my sentence-task aright ;
My honour scarce is free from stain,
I may not soil its snows again ;
Betide me weal, betide me woe,
Its mandate must be answered now.”
Her bosom heaved with many a sigh,
The tear was in her drooping eye ;
 But she led him to the palace gate,
And called the sylphs who hovered there,
 And bade them fly and bring him straight
Of clouds condensed a sable car.
With charm and spell she blessed it there,
From all the fields of upper air ;
Then round him cast the shadowy shroud,
And tied his steed behind the cloud ;
And pressed his hand as she bade him fly
Far to the verge of the northern sky,
For by its wan and wavering light
There was a star would fall to-night.

XXXIV.

Borne afar on the wings of the blast,
 Northward away, he speeds him fast,
 And his courser follows the cloudy wain
 'Till the hoof-strokes fall like pattering rain.
 The clouds roll backward as he flies,
 Each flickering star behind him lies,
 And he has reached the northern plain,
 And backed his firefly steed again,
 Ready to follow in its flight
 The streaming of the rocket-light.

XXXV.

The star is yet in the vault of heaven,
 But it rocks in the summer gale ;
 And now 'tis fitful and uneven,
 And now 'tis deadly pale ;
 And now 'tis wrapped in sulphur smoke,
 And quenched is its rayless beam,
 And now with a rattling thunder-stroke
 It bursts in flash and flame.
 As swift as the glance of the arrowy lance
 That the storm-spirit flings from high,
 The star-shot flew o'er the welkin blue,
 As it fell from the sheeted sky.
 As swift as the wind in its trail behind
 The elfin gallops along,
 The fiends of the cloud are bellowing loud,
 But the sylphid charm is strong ;
 He gallops unhurt in the shower of fire,
 While the cloud-fiends fly from the blaze ;
 He watches each flake till its sparks expire,
 And rides in the light of its rays.

But he drove his steed to the lightning's speed,
 And caught a glimmering spark ;
 Then wheeled around to the fairy ground,
 And sped through the midnight dark.

* * * * *

Ouphe and goblin ! imp and sprite !
 Elf of eve ! and starry Fay !
 Ye that love the moon's soft light,
 Hither—hither wend your way ;
 Twine ye in a jocund ring,
 Sing and trip it merrily,
 Hand to hand, and wing to wing,
 Round the wild witch-hazel tree.

Hail the wanderer again,
 With dance and song, and lute and lyre,
 Pure his wing and strong his chain,
 And doubly bright his fairy fire.
 Twine ye in an airy round,
 Brush the dew and print the lea ;
 Skip and gambol, hop and bound,
 Round the wild witch-hazel tree.

The beetle guards our holy ground,
 He flies about this haunted place,
 And if mortal there be found,
 He hums in his ears and flaps his face :
 The leaf-harp sounds our roundelay,
 The owlet's eyes our lanterns be ;
 Thus we sing, and dance, and play,
 Round the wild witch-hazel tree.

But hark ! from tower on tree-top high,
The sentry elf his call has made,
A streak is in the Eastern sky,
Shapes of moonlight ! flit and fade !
The hill-tops gleam in morning's spring,
The skylark shakes his dappled wing,
The day-glimpse glimmers on the lawn,
The cock has crowed, and the Fays are gone.

J. RODMAN DRAKE.

TRAVELS IN FAIRYLAND.

THE RIME OF SIRE THOPAS.

LISTENETH, lordlings, in good entent,
And I wol tell you verament
 Of mirth and of solas,
Al of a knight was faire and gent
In bataille and in turnament,
 His name was Sire Thopas.

Yborne he was in fer contree,
In Flandres, al beyonde the see,
 At Popering in the place,
His father was a man ful free,
And lord he was of that contree,
 As it was Goddes grace.

Sire Thopas was a doughty swain,
White was his face as paindemaine,
 His lippes red as rose.
His rudde is like scarlet in grain,
And I you tell in good certain
 He had a semely nose.

His here, his berde, was like safroun,
That to his girdle raught adoun,
 His shoon of cordewane ;
Of Brugges were his hosen broun ;
His robe was of ciclatoun,
 That coste many a jane.

He coude hunt at the wilde dere,
 And ride on hauking for the rivere
 With grey goshawk on honde :
 Thereto he was a good archere
 Of wrastling there was none his pere,
 There ony ram should stand.

Ful many a maide bright in bour
 They mourned for him par amour,
 Whan hem were bet to slepe ;
 But he was chaste and no lechour,
 And swete as is the bramble flour,
 That bereth the red hepe.

And so it fell upon a day,
 Forsoth, as I you tellen may,
 Sire Thopas wold out ride ;
 He worth upon his stede gray,
 And in hond a launcegay,
 A long swerd by his side.

He priketh thurgh a faire forest,
 Therin is many a wilde best,
 Ye bothe buck and hare,
 And as he priked north and east,
 I telle it you, him had almeste
 Betidde a sory care.

Ther springen herbes gret and smale,
 The licoris and the setewale,
 And many a cloue gilofre,
 And notemuge to put in ale,
 Whether it be moist or stale,
 Or for to lain in cofre.

The briddes, it is no nay,
The sperhawk and the popinjay,
That joy it was to here,
The throslet cok made eke his lay,
The wode dove upon the spray
He sang ful loud and clere.

Sire Thopas fell in love-longing,
Al when he herd the throstel sing,
And priked as he were wood ;
His faire steed in his priking
So swatte, that men might him wring,
His sides were al blood.

Sire Thopas eke so wery was
For priking on the softe gras,
So fiers was his corage,
That down he laid him in that place
To maken his stede some solace,
And yaf him good forage.

“ A, Seint Mary, benedicite,
What aileth this love at me
To binde me so sore ?
Me dremed al this night parde,
An elf-quene shal my lemman be,
And slepe under my gore.

“ An elf-quene wol I love ywis,
For in this world no woman is Worthy to be my mate in toun,—
All other women I forsake,
And to an elf-quene I me take
By dale and eke by doun.”

Into his sadel he clomb anon,
 And priked over stile and ston
 An elf-quene for to espie,
 Til he so long had ridden and gone,
 That he fond in a privee wone
 The contree of Faerie.

Wherein he soughte north and south,
 And oft he spied with his mouth
 In many a forest wilde,
 For in that contree n'as ther non,
 That to him dorst ride or gon,
 Neither wif ne childe.

Til that there came a gret geaunt,
 His name was Sire Oliphaunt,
 A perilous man of dede,
 He sayde, "Child, by Termagaunt,
 But if thou prike out of myn haunt,
 Anon I slee thy stede with mace—
 Here is the quene of Faerie,
 With harpe, and pipe, and simphonie,
 Dwelling in this place."

The child sayd, "Al so mote I the,
 To morwe wol I meten thee,
 Whan I have min armoure,
 And yet I hope par ma fay,
 That thou shalt with this launcegay
 Abien it ful soure; thy mawe—
 Shal I perce, if I may,
 Or it be fully prime of the day,
 For here thou shalt be slawe."

Sire Thopas drow abax ful fast ;
This geaunt at him stones cast
 Out of a fell staffe sling :
But faire escaped child Thopas,
And al it was thurgh Goddes grace,
 And thurgh his faire bering.

Yet listeneth, lordlings, to my tale,
Merier than the nightingale,
 For now I wol you rounne,
How Sire Thopas with sides smale,
Priking over hill and dale,
Is comen agein to toune.

His mery men commandeth he,
'To maken him bothe game and gle,
 For nedes must he fighte,
With a geaunt with hedes three,
For paramour and jolitee
 Of on that shone ful brighte.

“ Do come,” he sayd, “ my minestrales,
And gestours for to tellen tales
 Anon in min arming,
Of romaunces that ben reales,
Of popes and of cardinales,
 And eke of love-longing.”

They fel him first the swete win,
And mede eke in a maselin,
 And real spicerie,
Of ginger-bred that was ful fin
And licoris and eke comin,
 With sugar that is trie.

He didde next his white lere,
 Of cloth of lake fin and clere
 A breche and eke a sherte,
 And next his sherte a haketon,
 And over that an habergeon,
 For percing of his herte,

And over that a fin hauberk,
 Was all ywrought of Jewes werk,
 Ful strong it was of plate,
 And ever that his cote-armoure,
 As white as is the lily-floure,
 In which he wold debate.

His sheld was all of gold so red,
 And therein was a bores hed,
 A charboncle beside ;
 And this he swore on ale and bred
 How that the geaunt shu'd be ded,
 Betide what so betide.

His jamboux were of cuirbouly,
 His swerdes sheth of ivory,
 His helme of latoun bright,
 His sadel was of rewel bone,
 His bridel as the sonne shone,
 Or as the mone-light.

His spere was of fin cypres,
 That bodeth werre, and nothing pees,
 The hed ful sharpe yground.
 His stede was all dapple gray,
 It goth an aumble in the way

Ful softely and round in londe—
Lo, lordes nim, here is a fit ;
If ye wol ony more of it,
To telle it wol I fond.

Now hold your mouth pour charite,
Bothe knight and lady fre,
And herkeneth to my spell,
Of bataille and of chevalrie,
Of ladies love and druerie,
Anon I wol you tell.

Men speken of romaunces of pris,
Of Hornchild and of Ipotis,
Of Bevis and sire Guy,
Of sire Libeux, and Pleindamour,
But sire Thopas, he bereth the flour
Of real chevalrie.

His goode stede he al bestrode,
And forth upon his way he glode,
As sparcle out of bronde ;
Upon his crest he bare a tour,
And therein striked a lily flour,
God shilde his corps fro shonde.

And for he was a knight auntrous,
He n'olde slepen in non hous,
But liggen in his hood,
His brighte helm was his wanger,
And by him baited his destrer
Of herbes fin and good.

Himself drank water of the well,
As did the knight sire Percivell
 So worthy under wede,
Til on a day—

GEOFFREY CHAUCER.

THOMAS THE RHYMER.

PART FIRST—ANCIENT.

TRUE THOMAS lay on Huntlie bank
A ferlie he spied wi' his ee ;
And there he saw a ladye bright
Come riding down by the Eildon Tree.

Her shirt was o' the grass-green silk,
Her mantle o' the velvet fine ;
At ilka tett o' her horse's mane
Hung fifty siller bells and nine.

True Thomas, he pull'd aff his cap,
And louted low down to his knee,
“ All hail, thou mighty Queen of Heaven !
For thy peer on earth I never did see.”

“ O no, O no, Thomas,” she said,
“ That name does not belang to me ;
I am but the Queen of fair Elfland,
That am hither come to visit thee.

“ Harp and carp, Thomas,” she said ;
“ Harp and carp along wi' me ;
And if ye dare to kiss my lips,
Sure of your bodie I will be.”—

“Betide me weal, betide me wo,
 That weird shall never daunt me.”
 Syne he has kiss’d her rosy lips,
 All underneath the Eildon Tree.

“Now, ye maun go wi’ me,” she said ;
 “True Thomas, ye maun go wi’ me ;
 And ye maun serve me seven years,
 Thro’ weal or wo as may chance to be.”

She mounted on her milk-white steed ;
 She’s ta’en true Thomas up behind :
 And aye, whene’er her bridle rung,
 The steed flew swifter than the wind.

O they rade on, and farther on ;
 The steed gaed swifter than the wind ;
 Until they reach’d a desert wide,
 And living land was left behind.

“Light down, light down, now, true Thomas,
 And lean your head upon my knee ;
 Abide and rest a little space,
 And I will shew you ferlies three.

“O see ye not yon narrow road,
 So thick beset with thorns and briers ?
 That is the path of righteousness,
 Though after it but few inquires.

“And see ye not that braid braid road,
 That lies across that lily leven ?
 That is the path of wickedness,
 Though some call it the road to heaven.

“ And see not ye that bonny road,
That winds about that fernie brae ?
That is the road to fair Elfland,
Where thou and I this night maun gae.

“ But, Thomas, ye maun hold your tongue,
Whatever ye may hear or see ;
For if you speak word in Elflyn land,
Y’ll ne’er get back to your ain countrie.”

O they rade on, and farther on,
And they waded through rivers aboon the knee,
And they saw neither sun nor moon,
But they heard the roaring of the sea.

It was mirk mirk night, and there was nae stern light,
And they waded through red blude to the knee ;
For a’ the blude that’s shed on earth
Rins through the springs o’ that countrie.

Syne they came on to a garden green,
And she pu’d an apple frae a tree—
“ Take this for thy wages, true Thomas,
It will give thee the tongue that can never lie.”

“ My tongue is mine ain,” true Thomas said ;
A gudely gift ye wad gie to me !
I neither dought to buy nor sell,
At fair or tryst where I may be.

“ I dought neither speak to prince or peer,
Nor ask of grace from fair ladye—”
“ Now hold thy peace !” the lady said,
“ For as I say, so must it be.”—

He has gotten a coat of the even cloth,
 And a pair of shoes of velvet green ;
 And till seven years were gane and past,
 True Thomas on earth was never seen.

PART THE SECOND.

When seven years were come and gane,
 The sun blinked fair on pool and stream ;
 And Thomas lay on Huntlie bank
 Like one awakened from a dream.

He heard the trampling of a steed,
 He saw the flash of armour flee,
 And he beheld a gallant knight
 Come riding down by the Eildon-tree.

He was a stalwart knight, and strong ;
 Of giant make he 'pear'd to be :
 He stirr'd his horse, as he were wode,
 Wi' gilded spurs, of fashion free.

Says—" Well met, well met, true Thomas !
 Some uncouth ferlies show to me."
 Says—" Christ thee save, Corspatrick brave !
 Thrice welcome, good Dunbar, to me !"

" Light down, light down, Corspatrick brave,
 And I will show thee curses three,
 S'all gar fair Scotland greet and grane,
 And change the green to the black livery.

“ A storm shall roar this very hour,
From Ross’s hills to Solway sea—”
“ Ye lied, ye lied, ye warlock hoar !
For the sun shines sweet on fauld and lea.”—

He put his hand on the Earlie’s head ;
He show’d him a rock beside the sea,
Where a king lay stiff beneath his steed,
And steel-dight nobles wiped their ee.

“ The neist curse lights on Branxton hills :
By Flodden’s high and heathery side,
Shall wave a banner red as blude,
And chieftains hung wi’ meikle pride.

“ A Scottish King shall come full keen,
The ruddy lion beareth he ;
A feather’d arrow sharp, I ween,
Shall make him wink and warre to see.

“ When he is bloody, and all to bledde,
Thus to his men he still shall say—
‘ For God’s sake, turn ye back again,
And give yon southern folk a fray !
Why should I lose the right is mine ?
My doom is not to die this day.’

“ Yet turn ye to the eastern hand,
And wo and wonder ye shall see ;
How forty thousand spearmen stand,
Where yon rank river meets the sea.

“There shall the lion lose the gylte,
 And the libbards bear it clean away ;
 At Pinkyn Cleuch there shall be spilt
 Much gentil bluid that day.”—

“Enough, enough, of curse and ban ;
 Some blessings show thou now to me,
 Or, by the faith o’ my bodie,” Corspatrick said,
 “Ye shall rue the day ye e’er saw me !”—

“The first of blessings I shall thee show,
 Is by a burn that’s call’d of bread ;
 Where Saxon men shall tyne the bow,
 And find their arrows lack the head.

“Beside that brigg, out ower that burn,
 Where the water bickereth bright and sheen,
 Shall many a falling courser spurn,
 And knights shall die in battle keen.

“Beside a headless cross of stone,
 The libbards there shall lose the gree ;
 The raven shall come, the erne shall go,
 And drink the Saxon bluid sae free.
 The cross of stone they shall not know,
 So thick the corses there shall be.”

“But tell me now,” said brave Dunbar,
 “True Thomas, tell now unto me,
 What man shall rule the isle Britain,
 Even from the north to the southern sea ?”

“ A French Queen shall bear the son,
Shall rule all Britain to the sea ;
He of the Bruce's blood shall come,
As near as in the ninth degree.

“ The waters worship shall his race ;
Likewise the waves of the farthest sea ;
For they shall ride over ocean wide,
With hempen bridles and horse of tree.”

PART THE THIRD.—MODERN.

By Walter Scott.

When seven years more were come and gone,
Was war through Scotland spread,
And Ruberslaw show'd high Dunyon
His beacon blazing red.

Then all by bonny Coldingknow,
Pitch'd palliounes took their room,
And crested helms, and spears a-rowe,
Glanced gaily through the broom.

The Leader, rolling to the Tweed,
Resounds the ensenzie ;
They roused the deer from Caddenhead,
To distant Torwoodlee.

The feast was spread in Ercildoune,
In Learmont's high and ancient hall :
And there were knights of great renown,
And ladies, laced in pall.

Nor lacked they, while they sat at dine,
 The music nor the tale,
 Nor goblets of the blood-red wine,
 Nor mantling quaighs of ale.

True Thomas rose, with harp in hand,
 When as the feast was done :
 (In minstrel strife, in Fairy Land,
 The elfin harp he won.)

Hush'd were the throng, both limb and tongue,
 And harpers for envy pale ;
 And armed lords lean'd on their swords,
 And hearken'd to the tale.

In numbers high, the witching tale
 The prophet pour'd along ;
 No after bard might e'er avail
 Those numbers to prolong.

Yet fragments of the lofty strain
 Float down the tide of years,
 As buoyant on the stormy main
 A parted wreck appears.

He sung King Arthur's Table Round ;
 The Warrior of the Lake ;
 How courteous Gawaine met the wound,
 And bled for ladies' sake.

But chief, in gentle Tristram's praise,
 The notes melodious swell ;
 Was none excell'd in Arthur's days,
 The Knight of Lionelle.

For Marke, his cowardly uncle's right,
A venom'd wound he bore ;
When fierce Morholde he slew in fight,
Upon the Irish shore.

No art the poison might withstand ;
No medicine could be found,
'Till lovely Isolde's lily hand
Had probed the rankling wound.

With gentle hand and soothing tongue
She bore the leech's part ;
And, while she o'er his sick-bed hung,
He paid her with his heart.

O fatal was the gift, I ween !
For, doom'd in evil tide,
The maid must be rude Cornwall's queen,
His cowardly uncle's bride.

Their loves, their woes, the gifted bard
In fairy tissue wove ;
Where lords, and knights, and ladies bright,
In gay confusion strove.

The Garde Joyeuse, amid the tale,
High-rear'd its glittering head ;
And Avalon's enchanted vale
In all its wonders spread.

Brangwain was there, and Segramore,
And fiend-born Merlin's gramarye ;
Of that famed wizard's mighty lore,
O who could sing but he ?

Through many a maze the winning song
 In changeful passion led,
 Till bent at length the listening throng
 O'er Tristrem's dying bed.

His ancient wounds their scars expand,
 With agony his heart is wrung :
 O where is Isolde's lily hand,
 And where her soothing tongue ?

She comes ! she comes !—like flash of flame
 Can lovers' footsteps fly ;
 She comes ! She comes !—she only came
 To see her Tristrem die.

She saw him die ; her latest sigh
 Joined in a kiss his parting breath ;
 The gentlest pair, that Britain bare,
 United are in death.

Then paused the harp : its lingering sound
 Died slowly on the ear ;
 The silent guests still bent around,
 For still they seem'd to hear.

Then wo broke forth in murmurs weak :
 Nor ladies heaved alone the sigh :
 But, half ashamed, the rugged cheek
 Did many a gauntlet dry.

On Leader's stream, and Learmont's tower,
 The mists of evening close ;
 In camp, in castle, or in bower,
 Each warrior sought repose.

Lord Douglas, in his lofty tent,
Dream'd o'er the woful tale :
When footsteps light across the bent
The warrior's ears assail.

He starts, he wakes ;—"What, Richard, ho !
Arise, my page, arise !
What venturous wight, at dead of night,
Dare step where Douglas lies !"—

Then forth they rush'd ; by Leader's tide,
A selcouth sight they see—
A hart and hind pace side by side,
As white as snow on Fairnalie.

Beneath the moon, with gesture proud,
They stately move and slow ;
Nor scare they at the gathering crowd,
Who marvel as they go.

To Learmont's tower a message sped,
As fast as page might run ;
And Thomas started from his bed,
And soon his clothes did on.

First he woxe pale, and then woxe red ;
Never a word he spake but three ;—
"My sand is run ; my thread is spun ;
This sign regardeth me."

The elfin harp his neck around,
In minstrel guise, he hung :
And on the wind, in doleful sound,
Its dying accents rung.

Then forth he went ; yet turn'd him oft
 To view his ancient hall :
 On the gray tower, in lustre soft,
 The autumn moonbeams fall ;

And Leader's waves, like silver sheen,
 Danced shimmering in the ray ;
 In deepening mass, at distance seen,
 Broad Soltra's mountains lay.

“ Farewell, my father's ancient tower !
 A long farewell,” said he :
 “ The scene of pleasure, pomp, or power,
 Thou never more shalt be.

“ To Learmont's name no foot of earth
 Shall here again belong,
 And on thy hospitable hearth,
 The hare shall leave her young.

“ Adieu ! adieu !” again he cried,
 All as he turn'd him roun'—
 “ Farewell to Leader's silver tide !
 Farewell to Ercildoune !”

The hart and hind approach'd the place,
 As lingering yet he stood ;
 And there, before Lord Douglas' face,
 With them he cross'd the flood.

Lord Douglas leap'd on his berry-brown steed,
 And spurred him the Leader o'er ;
 But though he rode with lightning speed,
 He never saw them more.

Some said to hill, and some to glen,
Their wond'rous course had been ;
But ne'er in haunts of living men
Again was Thomas seen.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

KILMENY.

BONNIE Kilmeny gaed up the glen ;
 But it wasna to meet Duneira's men,
 Nor the rosy monk of the isle to see,
 For Kilmeny was pure as pure could be.
 It was only to hear the yorling sing,
 And pu' the cress-flower round the spring ;
 The scarlet hypp and the hind-berrye,
 And the nest that hung frae the hazel-tree ;
 For Kilmeny was pure as pure could be.
 But lang may her minny look o'er the wa' ;
 And lang may she seek i' the greenwood shaw ;
 Lang the laird o' Duneira blame,
 And lang, lang greet or Kilmeny come hame !

When many lang day had come and fled,
 When grief grew calm and hope was dead,
 When mass for Kilmeny's soul had been sung,
 When the bedesman had played and the dead-bell rung,
 Late, late in a gloaming, when all was still,
 When the fringe was red on the westlin hill,
 The wood was sere, the moon i' the wane,
 The reck o' the cot hung o'er the plain,
 Like a little wee cloud in the world its lane ;
 When the ingle lowed wi' an eiry leme—
 Late, late in the gloaming Kilmeny came hame !

“ Kilmeny, Kilmeny, where have you been ?
Lang hae we sought baith holt and dean ;
By burn, by ford, by greenwood tree,
Yet you are haesome and fair to see.
Where gat ye that joup o’ the lily sheen ?
That bonnie snood o’ the birk sae green ?
And those roses, the fairest that ever were seen ?
Kilmeny, Kilmeny, where have you been ? ”

Kilmeny look’d up wi’ a lovely grace,
But nae smile was seen on Kilmeny’s face ;
As still was her look, and as still was her e’e,
As the stillness that lay on the emerant lea,
Or the mist that sleeps on a waveless sea.
For Kilmeny had been, she kenned not where,
And Kilmeny had seen what she could not declare ;
Kilmeny had been where the cock never crew,
Where the rain never fell, and the wind never blew.
But it seemed as the harp of the sky had rung,
And the airs of heaven played round her tongue,
When she spoke of the lovely forms she had seen,
And a land where sin had never been ;
A land of love and a land of light,
Withouten sun, or moon, or night,
Where the river swa’d a living stream,
And the light a pure and cloudless beam ;
The land of vision it would seem,
A still, an everlasting dream.

In yon greenwood there is a waik,
And in that waik there is a wene,
And in that wene that is a maike ;
That neither has flesh, nor blood, nor bane ;
And down in yon greenwood he walks his lane.

In that green wene Kilmeny lay,
 Her bosom hap'd wi' flowerets gay ;
 But the air was soft, and the silence deep,
 And bonny Kilmeny fell sound asleep.
 She kenned nae mair, nor open'd her e'e,
 Till wak'd by the hymns of a far countrie.

She woke on a couch of silk sae slim,
 All striped wi' the bars of the rainbow's rim ;
 And lovely beings round were rife,
 Who erst had travelled mortal life ;
 And aye they smiled and 'gan to speer,
 "What spirit hath brought this mortal here?"

"Lang have I rang'd the world wide,"
 A meek and reverend fere replied;
 "Baith night and day I have watched the fair,
 Eident a thousand years and mair.
 Yes, I have watched o'er ilk degree,
 Wherever blooms feminitye ;
 And sinless virgin, free of stain
 In mind and body, find I nane.
 Never since the banquet of time
 Found I a virgin in her prime,
 Till late this bonnie maiden I saw,
 As spotless as the morning snaw ;
 Full twenty years she has lived as free
 As the spirits that sojourn in this countrie :
 I have brought her away from the snares of men,
 That sin or death she never may ken."

They clasped her waist, and her hands sae fair,
 They kissed her cheeks and they kemmed her hair ;
 And round came many a blooming fere,
 Saying, " Bonnie Kilmeny, ye're welcome here !
 Women are freed of the littand scorn,
 O blessed be the day Kilmeny was born !
 Now shall the land of the spirits see,
 Now shall it ken what a woman may be !
 Many lang year, in sorrow and pain,
 Many lang year through the world we've gane,
 Commissioned to watch fair woman-kind,
 For it's they who nurse the immortal mind.
 We have watched their steps as the dawning shone,
 And deep in the greenwood walks alone ;
 By lily bower and silken bed,
 The viewless tears have been o'er them shed ;
 Have soothed their ardent minds to sleep,
 Or left the couch of love to weep.
 We have seen, we have seen ! but the time maun come,
 And the angels will weep at the day of doom !

" O would the fairest of mortal kind
 Aye keep these holy truths in mind,
 That kindred spirits their motions see,
 Who watch their ways with anxious e'e,
 And grieve for the guilt of humanity !
 O, sweet to Heaven the maiden's prayer,
 And the sigh that heaves a bosom sae fair !
 And dear to heaven the words of truth
 And the praise of virtue from beauty's mouth !
 And dear to the viewless forms of air,
 The mind that kythes as the body fair.

“O, bonny Kilmeny ! free frae stain,
 If ever you seek the world again,
 That world of sin, of sorrow, and fear,
 O tell of the joys that are waiting here ;
 And tell of the signs you shall shortly see ;
 Of the times that are now, and the times that shall be.”

They lifted Kilmeny, they led her away,
 And she walked in the light of a sunless day ;
 The sky was a dôme of crystal bright,
 The fountain of vision and fountain of light ;
 The emerant fields were of dazzling glow,
 And the flowers of everlasting blow.
 Then deep in the stream her body they laid,
 That her youth and her beauty never might fade ;
 And they smil'd on Heaven when they saw her lie
 In the stream of life that wandered by.
 And she heard a song, she heard it sung,
 She ken'd not where, but sae sweetly it rung,
 It fell on the ear like a dream of the morn,—
 “O, blest be the day that Kilmeny was born !
 Now shall the land of the spirits see,
 Now shall it ken what a woman may be !
 The sun that shines on the world sae bright,
 A borrowed gleid frae the fountain of light ;
 And the moon that sleeks the sky sae dun,
 Like a gouden bow or a beamless sun,
 Shall wear away and be seen nae mair,
 And the angels shall miss them travelling the air.
 But lang, lang after, baith nicht and day,
 When the sun and the world have fled away ;
 When the sinner has gone to his waesome doom,
 Kilmeny shall smile in eternal bloom !”

They bore her away, she wist not how,
For she felt not arm nor rest below ;
But so swift they wained her through the light,
'Twas like the motion of sound or sight ;
They seemed to split the gales of air,
And yet nor gale nor breeze was there.
Unnumbered groves below them grew,
They came, they passed, and backward flew,
Like floods of blossoms gliding on,
A moment seen, in a moment gone.
Ah ! never vales to mortal view
Appeared like those o'er which they flew,
That land to human spirits given,
The lowermost vales of the storied heaven ;
From thence they can view the world below,
And heaven's blue gates with sapphires glow,
More glory yet unmeet to know.

They bore her far to a mountain green,
To see what mortal never had seen,
And they seated her high on a purple sward,
And bade her heed what she saw and heard,
And note the changes the spirits wrought,
For now she lives in the land of thought.
She looked, and she saw nor sun nor skies,
But a crystal dome of a thousand dyes :
She looked, and she saw nae land aright,
But an endless whirl of glory and light,
And radiant beings went and came,
Far swifter than wind, or the linkèd flame.
She hid her e'en frae the dazzling view ;
She looked again, and the scene was new.

She saw a sun in a summer sky,
 And clouds of amber sailing by ;
 A lovely land beneath her lay,
 And that land had lakes and mountains grey ;
 And that land had valleys and hoary piles,
 And marled seas and a thousand isles.
 Its fields were speckled, its forests green,
 And its lakes were all of the dazzling sheen,
 Like magic mirrors, where shining lay,
 The sun, and the sky, and the cloudlet grey ;
 Which heaved and trembled and gently swung,
 On every shore they seemed to be hung :
 For there they were seen on their downward plain
 A thousand times and a thousand again ;
 In winding lake and placid firth,
 Like peaceful heavens in the bosom of earth.

Kilmeny sighed and seemed to grieve,
 For she found her heart to that land did cleave ;
 She saw the corn wave on the vale ;
 She saw the deer run down the dale ;
 She saw the plaid and the broad claymore,
 And the brows that the badge of freedom bore,—
 And she thought she had seen the land before.

She saw a lady sit on a throne,
 The fairest that ever the sun shone on :
 A lion licked her hand of milk,
 And she held him in a leish of silk ;
 And a leifu' maiden stood at her knee,
 With a silver wand and melting e'e ;
 Her sovereign shield till love stole in,
 And poisoned all the fount within.

Then a gruff, untoward bedesman came,
And hundert the lion on his dame ;
And the guardian maid wi' the dauntless e'e,
She dropped a tear, and left her knee ;
And she saw till the queen frae the lion fled,
Till the bonniest flower o' the world lay dead ;
A coffin was set on a distant plain,
And she saw the red blood fall like rain ;
Then bonny Kilmeny's heart grew sair,
And she turned away, and could look nae mair.

Then the gruff, grim carle girmed amain,
And they trampled him down, but he rose again ;
And he bated the lion to deeds of weir,
Till he lapped the blood to the kingdom dear ;
And, weening his head was danger preef,
When crowned with the rose and clover leaf,
He gowled at the carle, and chased him away,
To feed wi' the deer on the mountain grey.
He gowled at the carl, and he gecked at heaven,
But his mark was set and his arles given,
Kilmeny a while her e'en withdrew ;
She looked again, and the scene was new.

She saw before her fair unfurled
One-half of all the glowing world,
Where oceans rolled, and rivers ran,
To bound the aims of sinful man.
She saw a people, fierce and fell,
Burst frae their bonds like fiends of hell ;
There lilies grew, and the eagle flew :
And she herked on her ravening crew,

Till the cities and towers were wrapped in a blaze,
 And the thunder it roared o'er the lands and the seas.
 The widows wailed, and the red blood ran,
 And she threatened an end to the race of man ;
 She never loved, nor stood in awe,
 Till caught by the lion's deadly paw.
 Oh ! then the eagle swinked for life,
 And brainzelled up a mortal strife ;
 But flew she north, or flew she south,
 She met wi' the gowl o' the lion's mouth.

With a mooted wing and waefu' maen,
 The eagle sought her eiry again :
 But lang may she cover in her bloody nest,
 And lang, lang sleek her wounded breast,
 Before she sey another flight,
 To play wi' the norland lion's might.

But to sing the sights Kilmeny saw,
 So far surpassing nature's law,
 The singer's voice wad sink away,
 And the string of his harp wad cease to play.
 But she saw till the sorrows of man were by,
 And all was love and harmony ;—
 Till the stars of heaven fell calmly away,
 Like flakes of snaw on a winter day.

Then Kilmeny begged again to see
 The friends she had left in her ain countrie,
 To tell of the place where she had been,
 And the glories that lay in the land unseen ;
 To warn the living maidens fair,
 The loved of heaven, the spirits' care,

That all whose minds unmeled remain
Shall bloom in beauty when time is gane.
With distant music, soft and deep,
They lulled Kilmeny sound asleep ;
And when she awakened, she lay her lane,
All happed with flowers, in the greenwood wene.
When seven long years had come and fled,
When grief was calm, and hope was dead,
When scarce was remembered Kilmeny's name,
Late, late in a gloamin' Kilmeny came hame.
And O, her beauty was fair to see,
But still and steadfast was her e'e !
Such beauty bard may never declare,
For there was no pride nor passion there ;
And the soft desire of maiden's e'en
In that mild face could never be seen.
Her seymar was the lily flower,
And her cheek the moss-rose in the shower ;
And her voice like the distant melodye
'That floats along the twilight sea.
But she loved to raike the lanely glen,
And keep afar frae the haunts of men,
Her holy hymns unheard to sing,
To suck the flowers, and drink the spring ;
But wherever her peaceful form appeared
The wild beasts of the hill were cheered ;
The wolf played blithely round the field,
The lordly byson lowed and kneeled ;
The dun deer wooed with manner bland,
And covered beneath her lily hand.
And when at eve the woodlands rung,
When hymns of other worlds she sung
In ecstasy of sweet devotion,

O, then the glen was all in motion !
 The wild beasts of the forest came,
 Broke from their boughs and faulds the tame,
 And goved around, charmed and amazed ;
 Even the dull cattle crooned and gazed,
 And murmured, and looked with anxious pain
 For something the mystery to explain.
 The buzzard came with the throstle-cock ;
 The corby left her houf in the rock ;
 The blackbird alang wi' the eagle flew ;
 The hind came tripping over the dew ;
 The wolf and the kid their raike began,
 And the kid and the lamb and the leveret ran ;
 The hawk and the hern attour them hung,
 And the merle and the mavis forhooyed their young ;
 And all in a peaceful ring were hurled—
 It was like an eve in a sinless world !

When a month and a day had come and gane,
 Kilmeny sought the greenwood wene ;
 There laid her down on the leaves sae green,
 And Kilmeny on earth was never mair seen.
 But O, the words that fell frae her mouth
 Were words of wonder, and words of truth !
 But all the land were in fear and dread,
 For they kendna whether she was living or dead.
 It wasna her hame, and she couldna remain ;
 She left this world of sorrow and pain,
 And returned to the land of thought again.

JAMES HOGG.

A FAIRY TALE.

ONCE in days of yore a little Princess, who had summers seen
Scarcely seven, and was christened by the holy name Christine,
Found herself, at eve, disporting in a fairy ring of green.

She had left the kingly castle ; left her sire's and mother's side,
Left the banquet, where her brother feasted with his royal bride ;
And had rambled to the forest valley, 'neath the summer
moon,
Where she crossed the charmèd circle, aught thereof unknowing. Soon
Overweared there she rested, wishing what might come to pass,
When by chance her hand alighted on a tuft of clover-grass.
This she grasped, a tiny handful :—Ah ! Saint Mary ! what she saw !—
Mounted on their milk-white palfreys, issuing from the shady shawe,
Came the fairies, caracolling gaily as they passed along ;
Then, dismounting, closed around her in a bright and joyous throng ;
Ladylings and lordlings dancing, piping, harping, full of song.

Clad in robes of silken silver, golden gossamer a few,
 Decked with jewels bright as starlets, bright as berries,
 bright as dew ;
 Some in kirtle, scarf, and doublet, all of verdant forest hue.

Lovers there she saw, arm-twinning, in the wild wood's shadowy slade ;
 There some woful knight was kneeling at the feet of haughty maid ;
 Here was feasting, there was music ; many a cunning
 prank was played.

Suddenly, the stateliest of them, he that most a monarch seemed,
 (Cap of crimson his, and mantle like an emerald that beamed)
 When he spied the gentle maiden, smiling on the merry scene ;
 "Ho ! my lords and ladies !" cried he, "wist ye who with us
 hath been ?
 Lo ! a mortal stands among us ; fairer than a fairy she ;
 Let us speak with her a moment ; questioning belongs to me."

Straight the jocund throng desisted from their pastime and their play,
 While the king of all the fairies to the childling thus 'gan say :—

"Lovely mortal ! wilt thou, wilt thou quit with us thy child-
 hood's bowers,
 And in our enchanted Eden wander through a world of flowers ?

All delights that thou hast dreamed of, gathered there shall be, and thine ;
Flowers that fade not, games that end not, skies that always mildliest shine ;
Kneaded cates of amber honey, and the rosebud's dewy
wine ;
Wreaths of jewels, combs of silver, beads and bracelets all of gold,
And a diamond girdle round thee ; mine I give thee now, behold !
Bowls of rubies thou shalt sip from, and from crystal tables dine,
And, at eve, on lily leaves, and mingled violets recline ;
Wilt thou with me, sweet one, tell me !” “ King,” she answered, “ I am thine.”
All the fairy court with rapture danced when thus they heard her say ;
“ Noble chieftain, child of beauty, let us haste,” they cried, “ away !”

“ Seal the covenant first,” quoth Oberon ; and a magic cup of wine
Straight was brought him, when the king bethought him of the charm divine,
Which the eyes of life had opened, to perceive their secret line.
Deep within the rosy goblet he the four-fold leaflet dipped,
Drank thereof, and to the damsel gave it ; daintily she sipped.

Then to horse ; the gallant knighthood lift their ladies to the sells ;
Every steed was shod with silver, every bridle hung with bells,
Like the lilies of the valley, only all of silver. Swells

Soft the moonlight air with strains aforesaid never heard ;
 More sweet than tone of nymph or muse, or god, to both preferred.

So they ambled on until they reached a green and grove-
 crowned hill,
 Which, without a gate, they entered, opening at the mon-arch's will :
 Then the portals closed upon her ; woe is me for that dear
 child,
 'Mid the insubstantial regions of the fairies thus beguiled.

Streams of bubbling gold flowed round her ; fountains flung their diamond spray,
 O'er the fields a pearl-dew glistened ; polished loadstone
 paved the way ;
 Trees were leafed with golden florins ; daisies chimed like silver crowns,
 Musical and odorous breezes breathed across the velvet downs.
 Soon they neared the regal palace twinkling in the aëry
 dyes,
 Lilac, pearl, and beryl blended, of that country's sunless skies ;
 While the fay-queen and her ladies, with their flower-robed
 damsels fair,
 Came forthright to greet her crowned spouse, and royal
 guestling there.

From the centre of the high dome swung a topaz solar bright,
 Which through all the palace darted gleams of glad and glorious light,

Emerald lamplights ranked around it, tempered this with cooler ray ;
While, without, the welkin poured one pale and ever-dawning day.
There the feast was flowing ever ; stream-like music ceaseless played ;
There the dance was always weaving ; minstrels chanting in the shade ;
There for aye the chase was bounding over dale and hill
and plain,
And fair Christine, on hound-high steed, the foremost of the elfin train.
Still she saddened when she minded of the simple garlands
she Wove of wild rose and of woodbine, with her playmates on the lea ;
And the hazel and brown beech nut which they gathered from the tree.
What though clad in jewelled raiment, trilling, tripping, day and night,
What though ply'd with queenly dainties, what though cull-
ing gold-blooms bright,
Never in the feast delicious, nor the dance's 'wildering whirl,
Nor the wine-cup's merry orbit, could forget that lonely girl
The ancient hall where dwelled her sire, and where, too,
from her mother's side,
She, one summer's eve, had stolen forth into the forest wide.

“Drink the dew,” the Fairy Fate said, “that the poppy lends repose,
Mingled with the fragrant nectar chalice in the golden rose.”

Then she drank the draught Lethean from the bowl with flowerets crowned,
 Flaming flowers, that all remembrance of her past existence
 drowned ;
 Thus, with lustres vainly lapsing, to perpetual childhood
 bound.
 Never moon there marked the season ; sun ne'er shadowed forth the time ;
 Years themselves were undistinguished in that soft and listless clime.

Now where mines of gold and silver branch, in many a gleaming vein,
 Through the bosom of the mountain, 'neath the many leaguéd plain ;
 Where jasper and cornelian clear and alabaster pure,
 And purple spars and glass-bright rocks the glittering caves
 immure,
 She roamed ; and all the virtues learned of every potent gem
 Or mystic or medicinal ; all gifts that unto them
 Pertained of causing love, or hate, or infinite delight,
 Imperial wealth, tyrannic state, long life, and beauty bright ;
 These into an armlet stringing, ruby, sapphire, emerald,
 pearl,
 Threaded on the sunny tendril of one desultory curl,
 As an amulet Titania gave to her, the spell-bound girl.

Through the dwarf-king's wondrous regions she with him
 delighted strayed ;
 Rings and charms and magic weapons he for her, love-
 smitten, made.

Blythely oft beneath the seas she roved with mermaids from their caves,
Arched with amber, pearl and ivory roofs, whose floor bright coral paves ;
And oft, too, when the fairy court, for pleasure, or for pride,
Would seek the cooling streams that lave earth's plains and meadows wide,
The water spirits, in their arms, the darling maid would fold,
And hidden things of years to come mysteriously they told ;
There she viewed in crystal vases souls of hapless wretches
drowned,
Which from their pellucid prisons she with holy zeal un-
bound ;
Upward sprang the sprites with joyful some, and some with mournful sound.
With the sylphs in air she sported ; with the golden-palaced
gnome,
Earth embosomed, or the light-elves in their rainbow-clouded home.

Oft times with the Elle-King rode she, in his chariot, o'er the main,
While his martial band, with sea-conchs, blew the war-inspiring strain ;
Then upon the headlands landing, counted o'er the frosty
meads,
Royal droves of great blue kine, lipping the ice-dew of weeds.

'Gainst the fairies of the fire she with tidal spirits waged
War ; and earth, and air, and ocean felt how fierce the battle raged.

High she shook her shining falchion, pliant as the rushen plant,
 Falchion her dwarf-lover forged her, hard and bright as adamant ;
 Fighting by the Elle-King's side, there she the lord of fireland slew ;
 All the hosts of fire were routed ; crowned her queen the conquering crew ;
 Back to fairyland she hasted ; home her train in triumph drew.

King and spouse majestic welcome gave her, on her glad return ;
 And a thousand tongues besought that her adventures they might learn.
 This she grants ; and lo ! a banquet, by unheard command is seen,
 Instantaneously furnished on the flower-embroidered green.
 On the east hand of her liege lord sat the bright, the brave
 Christine ;
 On his west divine Titania, night's incomparable queen ;
 Then the Victress told Sir Oberon all she had done, and where had been ;

How from end to end of faërie she had passed, below,
 above,
 Scathless by the spells the dwarf-king gave her in his days
 of love ;
 How had dealt with Nisses, Noks, and Kobolds, Kelpies,
 Norns, and Trolls ;
 How with Peris fared, and Shadim, Afrits, Ogres, Deevs, and Ghouls ;

She had travelled in the whirlwind ; for no harm to her might fall,
Who had talismans and virtues could enchant or vanquish all ;—
How the Elle-chief's broad dominions scarred by war, she sad, beheld ;
How with hosts of fire they fought, and how the first of foes she quelled ;
How, she said, in God she trusted ;—at that word the banquet ceased ;
Shrieked and vanished all the faërie, save the king who bade the feast.

Silent sate the maid and monarch many a moment, till, quoth he,
“ Knowest thou not, unhappy child, the woe thou hast wrought in faërie ?
Know'st thou not that by the name which elfin tongue
hath never passed,
When so uttered, we are scattered, dust-like by the tem-
pest's blast ;
Know'st thou not that we be spirits, doomed to linger here,
unchanged,
In the sunless land of Faërie, from the light of heaven
estranged,
Till with promise of salvation, we be blessed by holy priest,
Or some sinless mortal give us hope to be at last released ?
Till the universal judgment we, the viewless sons of Eve,
Wander in the hollow underworld, unable to believe,
Till we hold the great assurance, for the lack whereof we grieve.

Still as we of sin were guiltless, save the sin inherited
From our mother's first transgression, ere the floods abroad were spread,

He, the great Creator, hid us in the bosom-shades of earth,
And forbade that in the sunlight ever we should journey
forth."

"Bounteous is He," said the maiden, "of illimitable grace ;
Nor would He have hid ye here, if good He meant not to your race."

"Ah, alas ! then, why delayeth He his merciful command ?"
Sighed the fairy ; "sooner blossom shall the sceptre in my hand ;"

Saying,—in the mold he wildly struck his white and star-tipped wand.

Scarce had he the sad word uttered when the peeled and polished rod

Bourgeoned forth in buds and blossoms, rooted in the mossy sod ;

"Lo ! a miracle," said Christine ; "trust ye henceforth, too,
in God.

Rest ye sure His mercy broodeth over all the souls He made."

"We are spirits," groaned the fairy, "greatly of our end afraid ;
Though a flickering hope inspires us with belief that we shall be

Joined, at last, with Him and heaven, in His boundless clemencie."

"Be it," said she ; "knew not I, nathless, so saintly your desire ;

And if mine your royal sanction to reseek my loving sire,

He within his walls sustains, for mercy's sake, a godly frere,
 Who to pious aspirations ever lends a pitying ear ;
 And will grant His sacred blessing to your nation ; doubt it ne'er ;
 He will bless whate'er loves me ; for I to him was always dear."

"Speed thee earthwards," said the sovrán, "speed thee, dearest child of light ;"

On the instant, hosts of fairies warbling, darted into sight.
 Airs delicious, such as mortal never heard from human hands,

Whispered loud from golden clarions, harped on strings
 of silver strands,

Strains triumphant, thrilled and echoed through those dim
 enchanted lands.

"Speed thee, heart of love," they faltered, "speed thee on thy star-taught way ;

Bring to Oberon and his people hope of heaven and peace for aye."

"Ah ! farewell, ye good and loyal," said the princess, stepping
 forth,

"Ne'er shall I forget your bounties, never see surpassed your worth ;

If not pure enough for heaven, ye are far too pure for earth."

Towards the limits far of Faërie quick their anxious course they took,

And the hill she entered first self-opened like a magic book ;
 Forth she peeped, and backward turning to bestow one farewell look,

Nothing saw she, nothing heard she, save a low and eërie wail
 With the rustle of the greenwood blending and the sunset gale.

All was changed ; and she, deep sighing, tottered on her lonesome way,
 'Till she neared a stunted hamlet ; children at their twilight
 play,
 As she stooped to raise a withering rosebud, by the path
 that lay,
 Shyly tittering ; thus she spake them ; " Laugh ye at my fresh-pulled roses ? "
 " We laughed to see an old, old beldame picking up our cast off posies,"
 Said they ; but she understood no word of what the bant-
 lings uttered ;
 And again they mouthed and mocked at that they said the old crone muttered.

Soon she came where, blind with dotage, propped on staff,
 an old man stood ;
 All his tresses white with age as with its snows a wintry wood.
 " Gaffer," said she, " where's the castle, that on yonder mountain piled Held the prince unpeered in honour ? Late I left it, foolish child ! "
 Mused a moment, recollecting ; presently, the old man smiled :

" Second childhood then I fancy must at least, good dame,
 be thine ;
 I alone in all the region mind me of that lordly line ;

I alone some words remember of the tongue that then was spoke,
By the noble race that here dwelt, ere they felt war's iron yoke.
King, peer, peasant, all were conquered, all uprooted at a blow ;
One disastrous battle gave the country to a foreign foe ;
Slain or banished all ; but that's well-nigh a hundred years ago.

Yonder castle's crumbling ruin saw its lord, though dauntless, fall ;
Dame and daughter he beheld both slain ; in vain his vassals all,
In vain his son for crown and bride fought ; he was left an idiot thrall.
On the evening of his bridal, souls of war, those sea-kings came,
And, ere midnight, tower and town were all engulfed
in gory flame.
Save the holy chaplain, none of all that princely house remained,
And myself, the humblest menial, on the lands where once they reigned.
He, in rock-hewn hermit's cavern, life, with passion unde-
filed,
Wore away, in trances murmuring blessings on some wandered child,
Daughter of his Lord, 'twas counted, by the cursed invading host
Killed ; or wiled away by fairies ; howsoe'er, the child was lost.

Twenty winters since his clay from mine to earth's cold arms was given ;
And so long his blessed spirit has been with the saints in heaven."

"Hold," she cried, "I hear a weeping ; I no longer love the light ;"

Back she started, and departed straightways through the deepening night.

In the hill she heard a wailing and a sobbing sad and deep ;
And the crash of thousand harpstrings hands of desperation sweep ;

Then she laid her down, and, praying, slept the long unmorrowing sleep.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY,

THE CONQUEST OF FAIRYLAND.

THERE reigned a king in the land of Persia, mighty and great was he grown,
On the necks of the kings of the conquered earth he builded up his throne.

There sate a king on the throne of Persia; and he was grown so proud
That all the life of the world was less, to him, than a passing cloud.

He reigned in glory: joy and sorrow lying between his hands.
If he sighed a nation shook, his smile ripened the harvest of lands.

He was the saddest man beneath the everlasting sky,
For all his glories had left him old, and the proudest king must die.

He who was even as God to all the nations of men,
Must die as the merest peasant dies, and turn into earth
again.

And his life with the fear of death was bitter and sick and accursed,
As brackish water to drink of which is to be for ever athirst.

The hateful years rolled on and on, but once it chanced at noon

The drowsy court was thrilled to gladness, it echoed so sweet a tune.

Low as the lapping of the sea, as the song of the lark is clear,

Wild as the moaning of pine branches ; the king was fain to hear.

“ What is the song, and who is the singer ? ” he said ; “ before the throne

Let him come, for the songs of the world are mine, and all but this are known.”

Seven mighty kings went out the Minstrel man to find :
And all they found was a dead cypress soughing in the wind.

And slower still, and sadder still the heavy winters rolled,
And the burning summers waned away, and the king grew very old ;

Dull, worn, feeble, bent ; and once he thought, “ To die
Were rest, at least.” And, as he thought, the music wandered by.

Into the presence of the king, singing, the singer came,
And his face was like the spring in flower, his eyes were clear as flame.

“What is the song you play, and what the theme your praises sing ?

It is sweet ; I knew not I owned a thing so sweet,” said the weary king.

“I sing my country,” said the singer, “a land that is sweeter than song.”

“Which of my kingdoms is your country? Thither would I along.”

“Great, O king, is thy power, and the earth a footstool for thy feet ;

But my country is free, and my own country, and oh, my country is sweet !”

The eyes of the king, as he heard, grew young and alive with fire :

“So, is there left on the earth a thing to strive for, a thing to desire ?

“Where is thy country? tell me, O singer! speak thine innermost heart!

Leave thy music! speak plainly! Speak—forget thine art!”

The eyes of the singer shone as he sang, and his voice rang wild and free

As the elemental wind or the uncontrollable sobs of the sea.

“O for my distant home!” he sighed; “Oh, alas! away and afar

I watch thee now as a lost sailor watches a shining star.

“ Oh that a wind would take me there ! that a bird would set me down
 Where the golden streets shine red at sunset in my father’s town !

“ For only in dreams I see the faces of the women there,
 And fain would I hear them singing once, braiding their ropes of hair.

“ Oh I am thirsty and long to drink of the river of life, and I
 Am fain to find my own country, where no man shall die.”

Out of the light of the throne, the king looked down : as in the spring
 The green leaves burst from their dusky buds, so was hope in the eyes of the king.

“ Lo,” he said, “ I will make thee great ; I will make thee mighty in sway
 Even as I ; but the name of thy country speak, and the place and the way.”

“ Oh, the way to my country is ever north till you pass the mouth of hell,
 Past the limbo of dreams and the desolate land where shadows dwell.

“ And when you have reached the fount of wonder, you ford
 the waters wan
 To the land of elves and the land of fairies, enchanted
 Masinderan.”

The singer ceased ; and the lyre in his hand snapped, as a cord, in twain ;
And neither lyre nor singer was seen in the kingdom of Persia
again.

And all the nobles gazed astounded ; no man spoke a word
Till the old King said : “ Call out my armies ; bring me hither a sword ! ”

As a little torrent swollen by snows is turned to a terrible stream,
So the gathering voices of all his countries cried to the king in his dream.

Crying, “ For thee, O our king, for thee, we had freely and willingly died,
Warriors, martyrs, what thou wilt ; not that our lives betide

“ The worth of a thought to the king, but rather, O ruler, because thy rod
Is over our heads, as over thine is the changeless will of God.

“ Rather for this we beseech thee, O master, for thine own sake refrain
From the blasphemous madness of pride, from the fever of impious gain.”

“ You seek my death ” the king thundered ; “ you cry, Forbear to save
The life of a king too old to frolic ; let him drowse in the grave.

“ But I will live for all your treason ; and, by my own right hand !
 I will set out this day with you to conquer Fairyland ! ”

Then all the nations paled aghast, for the battle to begin
 Was a war with God, and a war with death, and they knew the thing was sin.

Sick at heart they gathered together, but none denounced the wrong,
 For the will of God was unseen, unsaid, and the will of the king was strong.

So the air grew bright with spears, and the earth shook under the tread
 Of the mighty horses harnessed for battle ; the standards
 flaunted red.

And the wind was loud with the blare of trumpets, and every house was void
 Of the strength and stay of the house, and the peace of the land destroyed.

And the growing corn was trodden under the weight of armèd feet,
 And every woman in Persia cursed the sound of a song too
 sweet,

Cursed the insensate longing for life in the heart of a sick old man ;
 But the King of Persia with all his armies marched on Masinderan.

Many a day they marched in the sun till their silver armour was lead
To sink their bodies into the grave, and many a man fell dead.

And they passed the mouth of hell, and the shadowy country
gray,
Where the air is mist and the people mist and the rain more real than they.

And they came to the fount of wonder, and forded the waters wan,
And the King of Persia and all his armies marched on Masinderan.

And they turned the rivers to blood, and the fields to a ravaged camp,
Till they neared the golden faery town, that burned in the dusk as a lamp.

And they shouted and shouted for joy, to see it stand so nigh,
Given into their hands for spoil ; and their hearts beat proud and high.

The armies longed for the morrow, to conquer the shining
town,
For there was no death in the land, neither any to strike them down.

And the hosts were many in numbers, mighty, and skilled in the strife,
And they lusted for gold and conquest as the old king
lusted for life.

Till, gazing on the golden place, night took them unaware,
And black and windy grew the skies, and black the eddy-
ing air—

So long the night and black the night that fell upon their eyes,
They quaked with fear, those mighty hosts ; the sun would never rise.

Darkness and deafening sounds confused the black, tempestuous air,
And no man saw his neighbour's face, nor heard his neighbour's prayer.

And wild with terror the mad battalions fell on each other in fight,
The ground was strewn with wounded men, mad in the horrible night—

Mad with eternal pain, with darkness and stabbing blows
Rained on all sides from invisible hands till the ground was red as a rose.

And, though he were longing for rest, none ventured to pause from the strife,
Lest haply another wound be his to poison his hateful life.

And the king entreated death ; and for peace the armies prayed ;
But the gifts of God are everlasting, His word is not gain-said.

Gold and battle are given the hosts, their boon is turned to a ban,
And the curse of the king is to live forever in conquered
Masinderan.

A. MARY F. ROBINSON.

A FAIRY VOYAGE.

WINDLESS and waveless grew the sea,
 And, gazing from the southern shore,
 A jewelled pinnacle came to me ;
 A soft wind blew and sped me o'er
 The waters ; and above, like snow,
 White clouds were waving to and fro,
 As if they were the floating sails
 Of airy barques by heavenly gales
 Wafted through atmospheric seas.
 Then rose and swelled the northern breeze,
 And bore me southward in my flight ;
 Three days I sailed through day and night.
 At times, asleep on billows green,
 The Water Fays anear were seen,
 And wakening as I passed them by,
 They waved their white hands silently ;
 And sometimes, passing Fairy Isles,
 I saw mysterious shining piles,
 Temple and palace, spire and dome ;
 And still I sped through sparkling foam.

Mysterious moved, nor wind nor sail
 Impelled me, but the viewless gale,
 So faint, I scarcely felt its wings,
 Moved round me. Nightly, star-like rings,
 Were kindled in the ether blue ;
 These ring-like circles met my view

Through all the sky instead of stars ;
At times the waves, like golden bars
Of music, chimed beneath the keel ;
I heard mysterious organs peal,
And wind-harps ; then I knew we sped
Where the sweet winds with songs were fed,
From Fairy Islands hidden deep ;
Sometimes I heard the waters leap ;
And then I saw the yellow leaves
Of feathered palms, that in the seas
Took root, and opened on the breast
Of ocean a transcendent crest
Of purple flowers ; these were possessed
By golden cygnets—each a nest
For silver swans. From east to west
The Heavens with wavy lines of light
Were streaked and plumed from morn till night,
And jewelled birds with plumage bright
Rose, flashing, from the ocean's brine ;
And all the while this heart of mine
Beat languid in my breast, and soon
My spirit sank into a swoon,
And still my form was borne within
That magic barge. The silver rim
Around the sea became more bright
As the third day dropped into night.

When I awoke, a silver shell
Lay in the boat. I took it up,
And found it was a hollow cup ;
'Twas filled with sweetest hydromel.
I drank it. As I drank, the air

Seemed filled with birds as white as snow,
With white wings waving calm and slow ;
From north to south they seemed to go.
A dulcet strain began to flow
Around me on my way. The glow
'Round the sky's silver rim arose
Like the aurora, when it flows
From pole to zenith ; and the rays
Rose by degrees, until their blaze
Formed a vast, rosy dome on high ;
And all that glorious canopy
Transparent green, till white and gold
Celestial Spheres in music rolled,
And luminous beauty. All was still ;
But suddenly the sharp, swift thrill,
Like sunrise, shot through mind and brain,
And all at once a sacred strain
Pealed from those circling Spheres. The words
Vibrated, and the Ocean caves
Through all their sparry arches rang,
And all the Spheres together sang.

MEN AND FAIRIES.

THE APPROACH OF TITANIA.

PUCK.

Now the hungry lion roars,
And the wolf howls the moon !
Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,
All with weary task fordone.
Now the wasted brands do glow,
Whilst the scritch-owl, scritch-ing loud,
Puts the wretch, that lies in woe,
In remembrance of a shroud.
Now it is the time of night
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his sprite,
In the churchyard paths to glide :
And we fairies, that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolic : not a mouse
Shall disturb this hallowed house :
I am sent with broom before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.

Enter OBERON and TITANIA, with their Train

OBERON.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire :
Every elf and fairy sprite

Hop as light as bird from briar ;
 And this ditty, after me,
 Sing, and dance it trippingly.

TITANIA.

First rehearse this song by rote :
 To each word a warbling note,
 Hand-in-hand, with fairy grace,
 Will we sing, and bless this place.

Song and Dance.

OBERON.

Now, until the break of day,
 Through this house each fairy stray ;
 To the best bride-bed will we,
 Which by us shall blessed be ;
 And the issue there create
 Ever shall be fortunate ;
 So shall all the couples three
 Ever true in loving be :
 And the blots of nature's hand
 Shall not in their issue stand ;
 Never mole, hare-lip, nor scar,
 Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised in nativity,
 Shall upon their children be.—
 With this field-dew consecrate,
 Every fairy take his gait ;
 And each several chamber bless,
 Through this palace with sweet peace ;

E'er shall it in safety rest,
And the owner of it blest.

 Trip away ;

 Make no stay :

Meet me all by break of day.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

A FAIRY TALE

IN THE ANCIENT ENGLISH STYLE.

IN Britain's Isle, in Arthur's days,
 When midnight fairies daunc'd the maze,
 Liv'd Edwin of the Green ;
 Edwin, I wis, a gentle youth,
 Endow'd with courage, sense, and truth,
 Though badly shap'd he'd been.

His mountain back mote well he said,
 To measure height against his head,
 And lift itself above ;
 Yet, spite of all that Nature did
 To make his uncouth form forbid
 This creature dar'd to love.

He felt the charms of Edith's eyes,
 Nor wanted hope to gain the prize,
 Could ladies look within ;
 But one Sir Topaz dress'd with art,
 And, if a shape could win a heart,
 He had a shape to win.

Edwin, if right I read my song,
 With slighted passion pac'd along
 All in the moony light ;
 'Twas near an old enchanted court,
 Where sportive fairies made resort
 To revel out the night.

His heart was drear, his hope was cross'd,
'Twas late, 'twas far, the path was lost
 That reach'd the neighbour town ;
With weary steps he quits the shades,
Resolv'd, the darkling dome he treads,
 And drops his limbs adown.

But scant he lays him on the floor
When hollow winds remove the door,
 And trembling rocks the ground :
And, well I ween to count aright,
At once a hundred tapers light
 On all the walls around.

Now sounding tongues assail his ear,
Now sounding feet approachen near,
 And now the sounds increase :
And from the corner where he lay
He sees a train profusely gay
 Come pranking o'er the place.

But (trust me, Gentles !) never yet
Was dight a masquing half so neat,
 Or half so rich before ;
The country lent the sweet perfumes,
The sea the pearl, the sky the plumes,
 The town its silken store.

Now, whilst he gaz'd, a gallant drest
In flaunting robes above the rest,
 With awful accent cry'd ;
“What mortal of a wretched mind,
Whose sighs infect the balmy wind,
 Has here presum'd to hide ?”

At this the swain, whose venturous soul
 No fears of magic art controul,
 Advanc'd in open sight ;
 "Nor have I cause of dread," he said,
 "Who view, by no presumption led,
 Your revels of the night.

"'Twas grief, for scorn of faithful love,
 Which made my steps unweeting rove
 Amid the nightly dew."

"'Tis well," the gallant cries again,
 "We fairies never injure men
 Who dare to tell us true.

"Exalt thy love-dejected heart,
 Be mine the task, or ere we part,
 To make thee grief resign ;
 Now take the pleasure of thy chance ;
 Whilst I with Mab, my partner, daunce,
 Be little Mable thine."

He spoke, and all a sudden there
 Light music floats in wanton air ;
 The monarch leads the queen :
 The rest their fairy partners found ;
 And Mable trimly tript the ground
 With Edwin of the Green.

The dauncing past, the board was laid,
 And siker such a feast was made,
 As heart and lip desire,
 Withouten hands the dishes fly,
 The glasses with a wish come nigh,
 And with a wish retire.

But, now to please the fairy king,
Full every deal they daunce and sing,
 And antic feats devise ;
Some wind and tumble like an ape,
And other some transmute their shape
 In Edwin's wondering eyes.

Till one at last, that Robin hight,
Renown'd for pinching maids by night,
 Has bent him up aloof ;
And full against the beam he flung,
Where by the back the youth he hung
 To sprawl uneath the roof.

From thence, "Reverse my charm," he cries,
"And let it fairly now suffice
 The gambol has been shewn."
But Oberon answers with a smile,
"Content thee, Edwin, for awhile,
 The vantage is thine own."

Here ended all the phantom-play ;
They smelt the fresh approach of day,
 And heard a cock to crow ;
The whirling wind that bore the crowd
Has clapp'd the door, and whistled loud,
 To warn them all to go.

Then screaming all at once they fly,
And all at once the tapers die ;
 Poor Edwin falls to floor ;
Forlorn his state, and dark the place,
Was never wight in such a case
 Through all the land before,

But soon as Dan Apollo rose,
 Full jolly creature home he goes,
 He feels his back the less ;
 His honest tongue and steady mind
 Had rid him of the lump behind,
 Which made him want success.

With lusty livelyhed he talks,
 He seems advancing as he walks,
 His story soon took wind ;
 And beauteous Edith sees the youth
 Endowed with courage, sense, and truth,
 Without a bunch behind.

The story told, Sir Topaz mov'd,
 The youth of Edith erst approv'd,
 To see the revel scene :
 At close of eve he leaves his home,
 And wends to find the ruin'd dome
 All on the gloomy plain.

As there he bides, it so befel,
 The wind came rustling down a dell,
 A shaking seized the wall ;
 Up spring the tapers as before,
 The fairies bragly foot the floor,
 And music fills the hall.

But certes sorely sunk with woe
 Sir Topaz sees the Elphin show,
 His spirits in him die ;
 When Oberon crys, "A man is near,
 A mortal passion, cleeped fear,
 Hangs flagging in the sky,"

With that, Sir Topaz, hapless youth !
In accents faltering, aye for ruth,
 Intreats them pity grant ;
For als he been a mister wight
Betray'd by wandering in the night
 To tread the circled haunt ;

“A Losell vile,” at once they roar,
“And little skill'd of fairy lore,
 Thy cause to come we know :
Now has thy kestrel courage fell,
And fairies, since a lie you tell,
 Are free to work thee woe.”

Then Will, who bears the wispy fire
To trail the swains among the mire
 The caitiff upward flung ;
There, like a tortoise in a shop,
He dangled from the chamber top,
 Where whilome Edwin hung.

The revel now proceeds apace,
Deftly they strut it o'er the place,
 They sit, they drink, and eat ;
The time with frolic mirth beguile,
And poor Sir Topaz hangs the while
 Till all the rout retreat.

By this the stars began to wink,
They shriek, they fly, the tapers sink,
 And down y-drops the knight :
For never spell by fairy laid
With strong enchantment bound a glade,
 Beyond the length of night.

Chill, dark, alone, adreed, he lay,
 Till up the welkin rose the day,
 Then deem'd the dole was o'er :
 But wot ye well his harder lot ?
 His seely back the bunch had got
 Which Edwin lost afore.

This tale a Sybil-nurse ared ;
 She softly stroak'd my youngling head,
 And when the tale was done,
 " Thus some are born, my son," she cries,
 " With base impediments to rise,
 And some are born with none.

" But virtue can itself advance
 To what the favourite fools of chance
 By fortune seem'd design'd ;
 Virtue can gain the odds of fate,
 And from itself shake off the weight
 Upon th' unworthy mind.

THOMAS PARNELL.

THE ELFIN KING.

“ O SWIFT and swifter far he speeds
Than earthly steed can run ;
But I hear not the feet of his courser fleet,
As he glides o'er the moorland dun.”

Lone was the strath where he crossed their path,
And wide did the heath extend,
The Knight in Green on that moor is seen
At every seven years' end.

And swift is the speed of his coal-black steed,
As the leaf before the gale,
But never yet have that courser's feet
Been heard on hill or dale.

But woe to the wight who meets the Green Knight,
Except on his faulchion arm
Spell-proof he bear, like the brave St. Clair,
The holy Trefoil's charm ;

For then shall fly his gifted eye,
Delusions false and dim ;
And each unblessed shade shall stand portrayed
In ghostly form and limb.

O swifter, and swifter far he speeds
 Than earthly steed can run ;
 " He skims the blue air," said the brave St. Clair,
 " Instead of the heath so dun.

" His locks are as bright as the streamer's light,
 His cheeks like the rose's hue ;
 The Elfin-King, like the merlin's wing
 Are his pinions of glossy blue."

" No Elfin-King, with azure wing,
 On the dark brown moor I see ;
 But a courser keen, and a Knight in Green,
 And full fair I ween is he.

" Nor Elfin-King, nor azure wing,
 Nor ringlets sparkling bright ;"
 Sir Geoffrey cried, and forward hied
 To join the stranger Knight.

He knew not the path of the lonely strath,
 Where the Elfin-King went his round ;
 Or he never had gone with the Green Knight on,
 Nor trod the charmèd ground.

How swift they flew ! no eye could view
 Their track on heath or hill ;
 Yet swift across both moor and moss
 St. Clair did follow still.

And soon was seen a circle green,
 Where a shadowy wassel crew
 Amid the ring did dance and sing,
 In weeds of watchet blue.

And the windlestrae,¹ so limber and grey,
Did shiver beneath the tread
Of the coursers' feet, as they rushed to meet
The morrice of the dead.

“Come here, come here, with thy green fere,
Before the tread be stale ;
To roundel dance with speed advance,
And taste our wassel ale.”

Then up to the Knight came a grizly wight,
And sounded in his ear,
“Sir Knight, eschew this goblin crew,
Nor taste their ghostly cheer.”

The tabors rung, the liltis were sung,
And the Knight the dance did lead ;
But the maidens fair seemed round him to stare,
With eyes like the glassy bead.

The glance of their eye, so cold and so dry,
Did almost his heart appal ;
Their motion is swift, but their limbs they lift
Like stony statues all.

Again to the Knight came the grizly wight,
When the rounded dance was o'er ;
“Sir Knight, eschew this goblin crew,
Or rue for evermore.”

But forward pressed the dauntless guest
To the tables of ezlar red,
And there was seen the Knight in Green,
To grace the fair board head.

And before that Knight was a goblet bright
 Of emerald smooth and green,
 The fretted brim was studded full trim
 With mountain rubies' sheen.

Sir Geoffrey the Bold of the cup laid hold
 With health-ale mantling o'er ;
 And he saw as he drank that the ale never shrank,
 But mantled as before.

Then Sir Geoffrey grew pale as he quaffed the ale,
 And cold as the corpse of clay ;
 And with horny beak the ravens did shriek,
 And fluttered o'er their prey.

But soon throughout the revel rout
 A strange commotion ran,
 For beyond the round they heard the sound
 Of the steps of an uncharmed man.

And soon to St. Clair the grim wight did repair,
 From the midst of the wassel crew ;
 "Sir Knight, beware of the revellers there,
 Nor do as they bid thee do."

'What woeful wight art thou?' said the Knight,
 "To haunt this wassel fray?"
 "I was once," quoth he, "a mortal, like thee,
 Though now I'm an elfin grey.

"And the Knight so bold as the corpse lies cold,
 Who trode the greensward ring ;
 He must wander along with that restless throng,
 For aye, with the Elfin-King,

“ With the restless crew, in weeds so blue,
The hapless Knight must wend ;
Nor ever be seen on haunted green
Till the weary seven years’ end.

“ Fair is the mien of the Knight in Green,
And bright his sparkling hair ;
’Tis hard to believe how malice can live
In the breast of aught so fair.

“ And light and fair are the fields of air,
Where he wanders to and fro ;
Still doomed to fleet from the regions of heat
To the realms of endless snow.

“ When high overhead fall the streamers [†] red,
He views the blessed afar ;
And in stern despair darts through the air
To earth, like a falling star.

“ With his shadowy crew, in weeds so blue,
That Knight for aye must run ;
Except thou succeed in a perilous deed,
Unseen by the holy sun.

“ Who ventures the deed, and fails to succeed,
Perforce must join the crew.”

“ Then brief, declare,” said the brave St. Clair,
“ A deed that a Knight may do.”

“ ’Mid the sleet and the rain thou must here remain
By the haunted greensward ring,
Till the dance wax slow, and the song faint and low,
Which the crew unearthly sing.

[†] Northern Lights.

“Then right at the time of the matin chime,
 Thou must tread the unhallowed ground,
 And with mystic pace the circles trace
 That inclose it nine times round.

“And next thou must pass the rank green grass
 To the tables of ezlar red ;
 And the goblet clear away thou must bear,
 Nor behind thee turn thy head.

“And ever anon as thou treadest upon
 The sword of the green charmed ring,
 Be no word expressed in that space unblessed
 That ’longeth of holy thing.

“For the charmed ground is all unsound,
 And the lake spreads wide below,
 And the Water-Fiend there, with the Fiend of Air,
 Is leagued for mortals’ woe.”

’Mid the sleet and the rain did St. Clair remain
 Till the evening star did rise ;
 And the rout so gay did dwindle away
 To the eldritch dwarfy size.

When the moonbeams pale fell through the white hail,
 With a wan and a watery ray,
 Sad notes of woe seemed round him to grow,
 The dirge of the elfins grey.

And right at the time of the matin chime
 His mystic pace began,
 And murmurs deep around him did creep
 Like the moans of a murdered man.

The matin bell was tolling farewell
When he reached the central ring,
And there he beheld, to ice congealed,
That crew, with the Elfin-King.

For aye, at the knell of the matin bell,
When the black monks wend to pray,
The spirits unblest have a glimpse of rest
Before the dawn of day.

The sigh of the trees, and the rush of the breeze,
Then pause on the lonely hill ;
And the frost of the dead clings round their head,
And they slumber cold and still.

The Knight took up the emerald cup,
And the ravens hoarse did scream,
And the shuddering elfins half rose up,
And murmured in their dream :

They inwardly mourned, and the thin blood returned
To every icy limb ;
And each frozen eye, so cold and so dry,
'Gan roll with lustre dim.

Then brave St. Clair did turn him there
To retrace the mystic track,
He heard the sigh of his lady fair,
Who sobbed behind his back.

He started quick and his heart beat thick,
And he listened in wild amaze ;
But the parting bell on his ear it fell,
And he did not turn to gaze.

With panting breast as he forward pressed,
 He trode on a mangled head ;
 And the skull did scream, and the voice did seem
 The voice of his mother dead.

He shuddering trode : on the great name of God
 He thought—but he nought did say ;
 And the greensward did shrink, as about to sink,
 And loud laughed the Elfins grey.

And loud did resound, o'er the unblessed ground,
 The wings of the blue Elf-King ;
 And the ghostly crew to reach him flew,
 But he crossed the charmed ring ;

The morning was grey, and dying away
 Was the sound of the matin bell ;
 And far to the west the fays that ne'er rest,
 Fled where the moonbeams fell.

And Sir Geoffrey the Bold, on the unhallowed mould,
 Arose from the green witch-grass ;
 And he felt his limbs, like a dead man's, cold,
 And he wist not where he was.

And that cup so rare, which the brave St. Clair
 Did bear from the ghostly crew,
 Was suddenly changed, from the emerald fair,
 To the ragged whinstone blue ;
 And instead of the ale that mantled there
 Was the murky midnight dew.

JOHN LEYDEN.

THE YOUNG TAMLANE.

“ O I FORBID ye, maidens a’
That wear gowd on your hair,
To come or gae by Carterhaugh,
For young Tamlane is there.

“ There’s nane that gaes by Carterhaugh,
But maun leave him a wad,
Either gowd rings or green mantles,
Or else their maidenheid.

“ Now gowd rings ye may buy, maidens,
Green mantles ye may spin ;
But, gin ye lose your maidenheid,
Ye’ll ne’er get that agen.” —

But up then spake her, fair Janet,
The fairest o’ a’ her kin ;
“ I’ll cum and gang to Carterhaugh,
And ask nae leave o’ him.”

Janet has kilted her green kirtle,
A little abune her knee ;
And she has braided her yellow hair,
A little abune her bree.

And when she came to Carterhaugh,
 She gaed beside the well ;
 And there she fand his steed standing,
 But away was himsell.

She hadna pu'd a red red rose,
 A rose but barely three ;
 Till up and starts a wee wee man,
 At lady Janet's knee.

Says—"Why pu' ye the rose, Janet ?
 What gars ye break the tree ?
 Or why come ye to Carterhaugh,
 Withouten leave o' me ?"—

Says—"Carterhaugh it is mine ain ;
 My daddie gave it me ;
 I'll come and gang to Carterhaugh,
 And ask nae leave o' thee."

He's ta'en her by the milk-white hand,
 Among the leaves sae green ;
 And what they did, I cannot tell—
 The green leaves were between.

He's ta'en her by the milk-white hand,
 Among the roses red ;
 And what they did, I cannot say—
 She ne'er return'd a maid.

When she came to her father's ha',
 She looked pale and wan ;
 They thought she'd dreed some sair sickness,
 Or been with some leman.

She didna comb her yellow hair,
Nor make meikle o' her head ;
And ilka thing that lady took,
Was like to be her deid.

It's four and twenty ladies fair
Were playing at the ba' ;
Janet, the brightest of them anes,
Was faintest o' them a'.

Four and twenty ladies fair
Were playing at the chess ;
And out there came the fair Janet,
As green as any grass.

Out and spak an old grey-headed knight
Lay o'er the castle wa'—
“ And ever, alas ! for thee, Janet,
But we'll be blamed a' ! ”

“ Now haud your tongue, ye auld grey knight !
And an ill deid may ye die,
Father my bairn on whom I will,
I'll father nane on thee.”

Out then spake her father dear,
And he spake meek and mild—
“ And ever, alas ! my sweet Janet,
I fear ye gae with child.”

“ And if I be with child, father,
Mysell maun bear the blame ;
There's ne'er a knight about your ha'
Shall hae the bairnie's name.

“ And if I be with child, father,
 ’Twill prove a wondrous birth,
 For weel I swear I’m not wi’ bairn
 To any man on earth.

“ If my love were an earthly knight,
 As he’s an elfin grey,
 I wadna gie my ain true love
 For nae lord that ye hae.”

She prink’d hersell and prinn’d hersell,
 By the aë light o’ the moon,
 And she’s away to Carterhaugh,
 To speak wi’ young Tamlane.

And when she came to Carterhaugh,
 She gaed beside the well ;
 But there she saw the steed standing,
 But away was himsell.

She hadna pu’d a double rose,
 A rose but only twae,
 When up and started young Tamlane,
 Says—“ Lady, thou pu’s nae mae !

“ Why pu’ ye the rose, Janet,
 Within this garden grene,
 And a’ to kill the bonny babe,
 That we got us between ? ”

“ The truth ye’ll tell to me, Tamlane,
 A word ye mauna lie ;
 Gin e’er ye was in haly chapel,
 Or sained in Christentie ? ”—

“The truth I’ll tell to thee, Janet,
A word I winna lie ;
A knight me got, and a lady me bore,
As well as they did thee.

“Randolph, Earl Murray, was my sire,
Dunbar, Earl March, is thine ;
We loved when we were children small,
Which yet you well may mind.

“When I was a boy just turn’d of nine,
My uncle sent for me,
To hunt, and hawk, and ride with him
And keep him companie.

“Then came a wind out of the north,
A sharp wind and a snell ;
And a deep sleep came over me,
And frae my horse I fell.

“The Queen of Fairies keepit me,
In yon green hill to dwell ;
And I’m a fairy, lyth and limb ;
Fair lady, view me well.

“But we, that live in Fairyland
No sickness know, nor pain ;
I quit my body when I will,
And take to it again,

“I quit my body when I please,
Or unto it repair ;
We can inhabit, at our ease,
In either earth or air.

“ Our shapes and size we can convert
 To either large or small ;
 An old nutshell’s the same to us
 As is the lofty hall.

“ We sleep in rose-buds soft and sweet,
 We revel in the stream ;
 We wanton lightly on the wind,
 Or glide on a sunbeam.

“ And all our wants are well supplied
 From every rich man’s store,
 Who thankless sins the gifts he gets,
 And vainly grasps for more.

“ Then would I never tire, Janet,
 In elfish land to dwell ;
 But aye, at every seven years,
 They pay the teind to hell ;
 And I’m sae fat and fair of flesh,
 I fear ’twill be mysell.

“ This night is Hallowe’en, Janet,
 The morn is Hallowday ;
 And, gin ye dare your true love win,
 Ye hae nae time to stay.

“ The night it is good Hallowe’n,
 When fairy folk will ride ;
 And they that wad their true love win,
 At Miles Cross they maun bide.”—

“But how shall I thee ken, Tamlane?
Or how shall I thee know,
Amang so many unearthly knights,
The like I never saw?”—

“The first company that passes by,
Say na, and let them gae;
The next company that passes by,
Say na, and do right sae;
The third company that passes by,
Then I’ll be one o’ thae.

“First, let pass the black, Janet,
And syne let pass the brown;
But grip ye to the milk-white steed,
And pu’ the rider down.

“For I ride on the milk-white steed,
And aye nearest the town;
Because I was a christen’d knight,
They gave me that renown.

“My right hand will be gloved, Janet,
My left hand will be bare;
And these the tokens I gie thee,
Nae doubt I will be there.

“They’ll turn me in your arms, Janet,
An adder and a snake,
But haud me fast, let me not pass,
Gin ye would buy me maik.

“They’ll turn me in your arms, Janet,
 An adder and an esk ;
 They’ll turn me in your arms, Janet,
 A bale that burns fast.

“They’ll turn me in your arms, Janet,
 A red-hot gad o’ airn ;
 But haud me fast, let me not pass,
 For I’ll do you no harm.

“First dip me in a stand o’ milk,
 And then in a stand o’ water ;
 But haud me fast, let me not pass—
 I’ll be your bairn’s father.

“And, next, they’ll shape me in your arms
 A tod, but and an eel ;
 But haud me fast, nor let me gang,
 As you do love me weel.

“They’ll shape me in your arms, Janet,
 A dove, but and a swan :
 And last they’ll shape me in your arms
 A mother-naked man :
 Cast your green mantle over me—
 I’ll be myself again.”—

Gloomy, gloomy, was the night,
 And eiry was the way,
 As fair Janet, in her green mantle,
 To Miles Cross she did gae.

The heavens were black, the night was dark,
And dreary was the place ;
But Janet stood, with eager wish,
Her lover to embrace.

Betwixt the hours of twelve and one,
A north wind tore the bent ;
And she heard strange elritch sounds
Upon that wind which went.

About the dead hour o' the night
She heard the bridles ring ;
And Janet was as glad o' that
As any earthly thing.

Their oaten pipes blew wondrous shrill,
The hemlock small blew clear ;
And louder notes from hemlock large,
And bog-reed, struck the ear ;
But solemn sounds, or sober thoughts,
The Fairies cannot bear.

They sing, inspired with love and joy,
Like skylarks in the air ;
Of solid sense, or thought that's grave
You'll find no traces there.

Fair Janet stood, with mind unmoved,
The dreary heath upon ;
And louder, louder wax'd the sound,
As they came riding on.

Will-o'-Wisp before them went,
 Sent forth a twinkling light ;
 And soon she saw the Fairy bands
 All riding in her sight.

And first gaed by the black, black steed,
 And then gaed by the brown ;
 But fast she gript the milk-white steed,
 And pu'd the rider down.

She pu'd him frae the milk-white steed,
 And loot the bridle fa' ;
 And up there raise an erlish cry—
 “ He's wan among us a' ! ”—

They shaped him in fair Janet's arms
 An esk, but and an adder ;
 She held him fast in every shape—
 To be her bairn's father.

They shaped him in her arms at last
 A mother-naked man :
 She wrapp'd him in her green mantle,
 And sae her lover wan !

Up then spake the Queen o' Fairies,
 Out o' a bush o' broom—
 “ She that has borrow'd young Tamlane,
 Has gotten a stately groom. ”—

Up then spake the Queen o' Fairies,
 Out o' a bush o' rye—
 “ She's ta'en away the bonniest knight
 In a' my companie.

“But had I kenn’d, Tamlane,” she says,

“A lady wad borrow’d thee—

I wad ta’en out thy twa grey e’en,

Put in twa e’en o’ tree.

“Had I but kenn’d, Tamlane,” she says,

“Before ye came frae hame—

I wad ta’en out your heart o’ flesh,

Put in a heart o’ stane.

“Had I but had the wit yestreen

That I hae coft the day—

I’d paid my kanes seven times to hell

Ere you’d been ever away!”

OLD BALLAD.

LORD SOULIS.

LORD SOULIS he sat in Hermitage Castle,
 And beside him Old Redcap sly ;—
 “ Now, tell me, thou sprite, who art meikle of might
 The death that I must die ? ”—

“ While thou shalt bear a charmed life,
 And hold that life of me,
 ’Gainst lance and arrow, sword and knife,
 I shall thy warrant be.

“ Nor forged steel, nor hempen band,
 Shall e’er thy limbs confine,
 Till threefold ropes of sifted sand
 Around thy body twine.

“ If danger press fast, knock thrice on the chest,
 With rusty padlocks bound ;
 Turn away your eyes, when the bird shall rise,
 And listen to the sound.”

Lord Soulis he sat in Hermitage Castle,
 And Redcap was not by ;
 And he call’d on a page, who was witty and sage,
 To go to the barmkin high.

“ And look thou east, and look thou west,
 And quickly come tell to me,
 What troopers haste along the waste,
 And what may their livery be.”

He look'd o'er fell, and he look'd o'er flat,
 But nothing, I wist, he saw
 Save a pyot on a turret that sat
 Beside a corby crow.

The page he looked at the skriegh of day,
 But nothing, I wist, he saw,
 Till a horseman gray, in the royal array,
 Rode down the Hazel-shaw.

“ Say, why do you cross o'er moor and moss ? ”
 So loudly cried the page ;
 “ I tidings bring from Scotland's king,
 To Soulis of Hermitage.

“ He bids me tell that bloody warden,
 Oppressor of low and high,
 If ever again his lieges complain,
 The cruel Soulis shall die.”

By traitorous sleight they seized the knight
 Before he rode or ran,
 And through the key-stone of the vault
 They plunged him, horse and man.

* * * *

O May she came, and May she gaed,
 By Goranberry green ;
 And May she was the fairest maid
 That ever yet was seen.

O May she came, and May she gaed,
 By Goranberry tower ;
 And who was it but cruel Lord Soulis
 That carried her from her bower ?

He brought her to his castle gray,
 By Hermitage's side ;
 Says—" Be content, my lovely May,
 For thou shalt be my bride."

With her yellow hair, that glitter'd fair,
 She dried the trickling tear ;
 She sighed the name of Branhholm's heir,
 The youth that loved her dear.

" Now, be content, my bonny May,
 And take it for your hame ;
 Or ever and aye shall ye rue the day
 You heard young Branhholm's name.

" O'er Branhholm tower ere the morning hour,
 When the lift is like lead sae blue,
 The smoke shall roll white on the weary night,
 And the flame shall shine dimly through."

Syne he's ca'd on him Ringan Red,
 A sturdy kemp was he ;
 From friend or foe, in Border feid,
 Who never a foot would flee.

Red Ringan sped, and the spearmen led
 Up Goranberry slack ;
 Aye many a wight, unmatched in fight,
 Who never more came back.

And bloody set the westering sun,
And bloody rose he up ;
But little thought young Branxholm's heir
Where he that night should sup.

He shot the roe-buck on the lee,
The dun-deer on the law ;
The glamour sure was in his e'e
When Ringan nigh did draw.

O'er heathy edge, through rustling sedge,
He sped till day was set ;
And he thought it was his merry-men true,
When he the spearmen met.

Far from relief, they seized the chief,
His men were far away ;
Through Hermitage slack they sent him back
To Soulis's castle gray.
Syne onward fure for Branxholme tower
Where all his merry-men lay.

"Now, welcome, noble Branxholme's heir !
Thrice welcome," quoth Soulis, "to me !
Say, dost thou repair to my castle fair,
My wedding guest to be ?
And lovely May deserves, par fay,
A brideman such as thee !"

And broad and bloody rose the sun
And on the barmkin shone ;
When the page was aware of Red Ringan there,
Who came riding all alone.

To the gate of the tower Lord Soulis he speeds,
 As he lighted at the wall,
 Says—"Where did ye stable my stalwart steeds,
 And where do they tarry all?"

"We stabled them sure on the Tarras Muir ;
 We stabled them sure," quoth he :
 Before we could cross the quaking moss,
 They all were lost but me."

He clench'd his fist, and he knocked on the chest,
 And he heard a stifled groan ;
 And at the third knock each rusty lock
 Did open one by one.

He turned away his eyes as the lid did rise,
 And he listened silentlie ;
 And he heard breathed slow, in murmurs low,
 "Beware of a coming tree !"

In muttering sound the rest was drown'd,
 No other word heard he ;
 But slow as it rose, the lid did close,
 With the rusty padlocks three.

* * * *

Now rose with Branxholme's ae brother
 The Teviot, high and low ;
 Bauld Walter by name, of meikle fame,
 For none could bend his bow.

O'er glen and glade, to Soulis there sped
 The fame of his array,
 And that Teviotdale would soon assail
 His towers and castle gray.

With clenched fist, he knock'd on the chest,
And again he heard a groan ;
And he raised his eyes as the lid did rise,
But answer heard he none.

The charm was broke, when the spirit spoke,
And it murmur'd sullenlie,—
“ Shut fast the door, and for evermore
Commit to me the key.

Alas ! that ever thou raised'st thine eyes,
Thine eyes to look on me !
Till seven years are o'er, return no more,
For here thou must not be.”

Think not but Soulis was wae to yield
His warlock chamber o'er ;
He took the keys from the rusty lock,
That never were ta'en before.

He threw them o'er his left shoulder,
With meikle care and pain ;
And he bade it keep them fathoms deep
Till he returned again.

And still, when seven years are o'er,
Is heard the jarring sound ;
When slowly opes the charmed door
Of the chamber under ground.

And some within the chamber door
Have cast a curious eye :
But none dare tell, for the spirits in hell,
The fearful sights they spy.

When Soulis thought on his merry-men now
 A woful wight was he ;
 Says—" Vengeance mine, and I will not repine !
 But Branxholm's heir shall die !"

Says—" What would you do, young Branxholm,
 Gin ye had me, as I have thee ?
 " I would take you to the good greenwood,
 And gar your ain hand wale the tree."

" Now shall thine ain hand wale the tree,
 For all thy mirth and meikle pride ;
 And May shall choose, if my love she refuse,
 A scrog bush thee beside."

They carried him to the good greenwood,
 Where the green pines grow in a row ;
 And they heard the cry, from the branches high,
 Of the hungry carrion crow.

They carried him on from tree to tree,
 The spring boughs below ;
 " Say, shall it be thine, on the tapering pine,
 To feed the hooded crow ?"

" The fir-tops fall by Branxholm wall,
 When the night-blast stirs the tree,
 And it shall not be mine to die on the pine,
 I loved in infancie."

Young Branxholm turn'd him, and oft look'd back,
 And aye he pass'd from tree to tree ;
 Young Branxholm peep'd, and purirly spake,
 " O sic a death is no for me !"

And next they pass'd the aspin gray,
Its leaves were rustling mournfullie ;
“ Now, choose thee, choose thee, Branxholm gay !
Say, wilt thou never choose the tree ? ”—

“ More dear to me is the aspin gray,
More dear than any other tree ;
For beneath the shade that its branches made,
Have pass'd the vows of my love and me.”

Young Branxholm peep'd, and purily spake,
Until he did his ain men see,
With witches' hazel in each steel cap,
In scorn of Soulis gramarye ;
Then shoulder-height for glee he lap,
“ Methinks I spye a coming tree ! ”—

“ Ay, many may come, but few return,”
Quo' Soulis, the lord of gramarye ;
“ No warrior's hand in fair Scotland
Shall ever dint a wound on me ! ”

“ Now, by my sooth,” quo' bold Walter,
“ If that be true we soon shall see.”
His bent bow he drew, and his arrow was true,
But never a wound or scar had he.—

Then up bespake him true Thomas,
He was the lord of Ersyltoun ;
“ The wizard's spell no steel can quell,
'Till once your lances bear him down.”—

They bore him down with lances bright,
 But never a wound or scar had he ;
 With hempen bands they bound him tight,
 Both hands and feet on the Nine-stane lea.

That wizard accurst, the bands he burst ;
 They moulder'd at his magic spell ;
 And neck and heel, in the forged steel,
 They bound him against the charms of hell.

That wizard accurst, the bands he burst ;
 No forged steel his charms could bide ;
 'Then up bespake him true 'Thomas,
 "We'll bind him yet, whate'er betide."

'The black spae-book from his breast he took,
 Impressed with many a warlock spell ;
 And the book it was wrote by Michael Scott,
 Who held in awe the fiends of hell.

They buried it deep, where his bones they sleep,
 That mortal man might never it see :
 But 'Thomas did save it from the grave,
 When he return'd from Faerie.

'The black spae-book from his breast he took,
 And turn'd the leaves with curious hand ;
 No ropes, did he find, the wizard could bind,
 But threefold ropes of sifted sand.

They sifted the sand from the Nine-stane burn,
 And shaped the ropes sae curiouslie ;
 But the ropes would neither twist nor twine,
 For 'Thomas true and his gramarye.

The lack spae-book from his breast he took,
And again he turn'd it with his hand ;
And he bade each lad of Teviot add
The barley chaff to the sifted sand.

The barley chaff to the sifted sand
They added still by handfulls nine ;
But Redcap sly unseen was by,
And the ropes would neither twist nor twine.

And still beside the Nine-stane burn,
Ribb'd like the sand at mark of sea,
The ropes that would neither twist nor twine,
Shaped of the sifted sand you see.

The black spae-book true Thomas he took,
Again its magic leaves he spread ;
And he found that to quell the powerful spell
The wizard must be boiled in lead.

On a circle of stones they placed the pot,
On a circle of stones but barely nine ;
They heated it red and fiery hot,
Till the burnish'd brass did glimmer and shine.

They roll'd him up in a sheet of lead,
A sheet of lead for a funeral pall ;
They plunged him in the cauldron red,
And melted him, lead, and bones, and all.

At the Skelf-hill, the cauldron still
The men of Liddesdale can show ;
And on the spot, where they boil'd the pot,
The spreit and the deer-hair ne'er shall grow.

JOHN LEYDEN.

THE COURT OF KEELDAR.

THE eiry blood-hound howl'd by night,
 The steamers flaunted red,
 Till broken streaks of flaky light
 O'er Keeldar's mountains spread.

The lady sigh'd as Keeldar rose—
 “Come, tell me, dear love mine,
 Go you to hunt where Keeldar flows,
 Or on the banks of Tyne?”

“The heath-bell blows where Keeldar flows,
 By Tyne the primrose pale ;
 But now we ride on the Scottish side,
 To hunt in Liddesdale.”

“Gin you will ride on the Scottish side
 Sore must thy Margaret mourn ;
 For Soulis abhorr'd is Lydall's lord,
 And I fear you will ne'er return.

“The axe he bears, it hacks and tears ;
 'Tis form'd of an Earth-fast flint ;
 No armour of knight, tho' ever so wight
 Can bear its deadly dint.

“No danger he fears, for a charm’d sword he wears,
Of adderstone the hilt ;
No Tynedale knight had ever such might,
But his heart-blood was spilt.”—

“In my plume is seen the holly green,
With the leaves of the rowan-tree ;
And my casque of sand, by a mermaid’s hand,
Was formed beneath the sea.

“Then, Margaret dear, have thou no fear
That bodes no ill to me,
Though never a knight, by mortal might,
Could match his gramarye.”

Then forward bound both horse and hound,
And rattle o’er the vale ;
As the wintry breeze through leafless trees
Drives on the pattering hail.

Behind their course the English fells
In deepening blue retire ;
Till soon before them boldly swells
The muir of dim Redswire.

And when they reach’d the Redswire high,
Soft beam’d the rising sun ;
But formless shadows seem’d to fly
Along the muirland dun.

And when he reach’d the Redswire high,
His bugle Keeldar blew ;
And round did float, with clamorous note
And scream, the hoarse curlew.

The next blast that young Keeldar blew,
 Still stood the limber fern ;
 And a Wee Man, of swarthy hue,
 Upstarted by a cairn.

His russet weeds were brown as heath,
 That clothes the upland fell ;
 And the hair of his head was frizzly red,
 As the purple heather-bell.

An urchin, clad in pickles red,
 Clung cowering to his arm ;
 The hounds they howl'd, and backward fled,
 As struck by Fairy charm.

“ Why rises high the staghound's cry,
 Where staghound ne'er should be ?
 Why wakes that horn the silent morn,
 Without the leave of me ? ”—

“ Brown Dwarf, that o'er the muirland strays,
 Thy name to Keeldar tell ! ”—

“ The Brown Man of the Muirs, who strays,
 Beneath the heather-bell.

“ 'Tis sweet beneath the heather-bell
 To live in autumn brown ;
 And sweet to hear the lav'rock's swell
 Far, far from tower and town.

“ But wo betide the shrilling horn,
 'The chase's surly cheer !
 And ever that hunter is forlorn
 Whom first at morn I hear.”—

Says, "Weal nor wo, nor friend nor foe,
In thee we hope nor dread."

But, ere the bugles green could blow,
The Wee Brown Man had fled.

And onward, onward, hound and horse,
Young Keeldar's band have gone ;
And soon they wheel in rapid course,
Around the Keeldar Stone.

Green vervan round its base did creep,
A powerful seed that bore ;
And oft, of yore, its channels deep
Were stain'd with human gore.

And still, when blood-drops, clotted thin,
Hang the grey moss upon,
The spirit murmurs from within,
And shakes the rocking-stone.

Around, around, young Keeldar wound,
And call'd, in scornful tone,
With him to pass the barrier ground,
The Spirit of the Stone.

The rude crag rock'd ; " I come for death,
I come to work thy wo !"—
And 'twas the Brown Man of the Heath,
That murmur'd from below.

But onward, onward, Keeldar past,
Swift as the winter wind,
When, hovering on the driving blast,
The snowflakes fall behind.

'They pass'd the muir of berries blae,
 The stone cross on the lea ;
 They reach'd the green, the bonny brae,
 Beneath the birchen tree.

'This is the bonny brae, the green,
 Yet sacred to the brave,
 Where still, of ancient size, is seen
 Gigantic Keeldar's grave.

'The lonely shepherd loves to mark
 The daisy springing fair,
 Where weeps the birch of silver bark,
 With long dishevell'd hair.

'The grave is green, and round is spread
 The curling lady-fern ;
 That fatal day the mould was red,
 No moss was on the cairn.

And next they pass'd the chapel there ;
 The holy ground was by,
 Where many a stone is sculptured fair,
 To mark where warriors lie.

And here, beside the mountain flood,
 A massy castle frown'd,
 Since first the Pictish race in blood
 The haunted pile did found.

'The restless stream its rocky base
 Assails with ceaseless din ;
 And many a troubled spirit strays
 The dungeons dark within.

Soon from the lofty tower there hied
A knight across the vale ;
“ I greet your master well,” he cried,
“ From Soulis of Liddesdale.

“ He heard your bugle’s echoing call
In his green garden bower ;
And bids you to his festive hall
Within his ancient tower.”—

Young Keeldar call’d his hunter train ;—
“ For doubtful cheer prepare !
And, as you open force disdain,
Of secret guile beware.

“ ’Twas here for Mangerton’s brave lord
A bloody feast was set,
Who, weetless, at the festal board,
The bull’s broad frontlet met.

“ Then ever, at uncourteous feast,
Keep every man his brand ;
And, as you ’mid his friends are placed,
Range on the better hand.

“ And, if the bull’s ill-omen’d head
Appear to grace the feast,
Your whingers, with unerring speed,
Plunge in each neighbour’s breast.”

In Hermitage they sat at dine,
In pomp and proud array ;
And oft they fill’d the blood-red wine,
While merry minstrels play.

And many a hunting-song they sung,
 And song of game and glee ;
 Then turned to plaintive strains their tongue
 " Of Scotland's luv and lee."—

To wilder measures next they turn :
 " The Black Black Bull of Norway ! "—
 Sudden the tapers cease to burn,
 The minstrels cease to play.

Each hunter bold of Keeldar's train,
 Sat an enchanted man ;
 For cold as ice, through every vein,
 The freezing life-blood ran.

Each rigid hand the whinger rung,
 Each gazed with glaring eye ;
 But Keeldar from the table sprung,
 Unharm'd by gramarye.

He burst the door ; the roofs resound ;
 With yells the castle rung ;
 Before him, with a sudden bound,
 His favourite blood-hound sprung.

Ere he could pass, the door was barr'd,
 And, grating harsh from under,
 With creaking, jarring noise, was heard
 A sound like distant thunder.

The iron clash, the grinding sound,
 Announce the dire sword mill ;
 The piteous howlings of the hound
 The dreadful dungeon fill.

With breath drawn in, the murderous crew
 Stood listening to the yell,
And greater still their wonder grew
 As on their ear it fell.

They listen'd for a human shriek
 Amid the jarring sound ;
They only heard, in echoes weak,
 The murmurs of the hound.

The death-bell rung, and wide were flung
 The castle gates amain ;
While hurry out the armèd rout,
 And marshal on the plain.

Ah ! ne'er before in Border feud
 Was seen so dire a fray !
Through glittering lances Keeldar hew'd
 A red corse-paven way.

His helmet, form'd of mermaid sand,
 No athal brand could dint ;
No other arms could e'er withstand
 The axe of earth-fast flint.

In Keeldar's plume the holly green
 And rowan leaves nod on,
And vain Lord Soulis's sword was seen,
 Though the hilt was adderstone.

Then up the Wee Brown Man he rose,
 By Soulis of Liddesdale ;
"In vain," he said, "a thousand blows
 Assail the charmèd mail.

“In vain by land your arrows glide,
 In vain your falchions gleam—
 No spell can stay the living tide,
 Or charm the rushing stream.

And now young Keeldar reach'd the stream,
 Above the foamy linn ;
 The Border lances round him gleam,
 And force the warrior in.

The holly floated to the side,
 And the leaf of the rowan pale ;
 Alas ! no spell could charm the tide,
 Nor the lance of Liddesdale.

Swift was the Count o' Keeldar's course
 Across the lily lee ;
 But home came never hound nor horse,
 And never home came he.

Where weeps the birch with branches green,
 Without the holy ground,
 Between two old gray stones is seen
 The warrior's ridgy mound.

And the hunters bold, of Keeldar's train,
 Within yon castle's wall,
 In a deadly sleep must aye remain,
 'Till the ruin'd towers down fall.

Each in his hunter's garb array'd,
 Each holds his bugle-horn,
 Their keen hounds at their feet are laid,
 That ne'er shall wake the morn.

JOHN LEYDEN.

THE BROWNIE OF BLEDNOCH.

THERE came a strange wight to our town-en',
An' the fient a body did him ken ;
He tirlid na lang, but he glided ben
 Wi' a dreary, dreary hum.

His face did glow like the glow o' the west,
When the drumly cloud has it half o'ercast ;
Or the struggling moon when she's sair distrest.
 O sirs, 'twas Aiken-drum.

I trow the bauldest stood aback,
Wi' a gape an' a glower till their lugs did crack,
As the shapeless phantom mum'ling spak—
 “Hae ye wark for Aiken-drum?”

Oh, had ye seen the bairns's fright,
As they stared at this wild and unyirthly wight ;
As they skulkit in 'tween the dark and the light,
 And graned out, “Aiken-drum !”

The black dog, growling, cowered his tail,
The lassie swarfed, loot fa' the pail ;
Rob's lingle brak as he mendit the flail,
 At the sight o' Aiken-drum.

His matted head on his breast did rest,
 A lang blue beard wan'ered down like a vest ;
 But the glare o' his ee hath nae bard exprest,
 Nor the skimes o' Aiken-drum.

Roun' his hairy form there was naething seen
 But a philabeg o' the rashes green,
 An' his knotted knees played aye knoit between—
 What a sight was Aiken-drum !

On his wauchie arms three claws did meet,
 As they trailed on the grun' by his taeless feet ;
 E'en the old gudeman himsel' did sweat
 To look at Aiken-drum.

But he drew a score, himsel' did sain ;
 The auld wife tried, but her tongue was gane ;
 While the young ane closer clasped her wean,
 And turned frae Aiken-drum.

But the canty auld wife cam till her breath,
 And she thocht the Bible might ward aff scaith,
 Be it benshee, bogle, ghaist, or wraith—
 But it feared na Aiken-drum.

“ His presence protect us ! ” quoth the auld gudeman ;
 “ What wad ye, whare won ye, by sea or by lan' ?
 I conjure ye, speak, by the beuk in my han' ! ”
 What a grane gae Aiken-drum !

“ I lived in a lan' where we saw nae sky,
 I dwelt in a spot where a burn rins na by ;
 But I'se dwell now wi' you if ye like to try—
 Hae ye wark for Aiken-drum ? ”

“ I’ll shiel a’ your sheep i’ the mornin’ sune,
 I’ll berry your crap by the light o’ the moon,
 An’ ba the bairns wi’ an unkenned tune,
 If ye’ll keep puir Aiken-drum.

“ I’ll loup the linn where ye canna wade,
 I’ll kirn the kirn, an’ I’ll turn the bread ;
 An’ the wildest filly that ever ran rede,
 I’se tame’t,” quoth Aiken-drum.

“ To wear the tod frae the flock on the fell,
 To gather the dew frae the heather-bell,
 An’ to look at my face i’ your clear crystal well,
 Might gie pleasure to Aiken-drum.

“ I’se seek nae guids, gear, bond, nor mark ;
 I use nae beddin’, shoon, nor sark ;
 But a cogfu’ o’ brose ’tween the light an’ the dark,
 Is the wage o’ Aiken-drum.”

Quoth the wylie auld wife : “ The thing speaks weel ;
 Our workers are scant—we hae routh o’ meal ;
 Gif he’ll do as he says—be he man, be he deil—
 Now ! we’ll try this Aiken-drum.”

But the wenches skirled : “ He’s no be here !
 His eldritch look gars us swarf wi’ fear ;
 An’ the feint a ane will the house come near,
 If they think but o’ Aiken-drum.”

“ Puir clipmalabors ! ye hae little wit ;
 I’st na Hallowmas now, an’ the crap out yet ? ”
 Sae she silenced them a’ wi’ a stamp o’ her fit—
 “ Sit yer wa’s down, Aiken-drum.”

Roun' a' that side what wark was dune
 By the streamer's gleam, or the glance o' the moon ;
 A word, or a wish, an' the brownie cam sune,
 Sae helpfu' was Aiken-drum. . . .

On Blednoch banks, an' on crystal Cree,
 For mony a day a toiled wight was he ;
 While the bairns played harmless roun' his knee,
 Sae social was Aiken-drum.

But a new-made wife, fu' o' frippish freaks,
 Fond o' a' things feat for the first five weeks,
 Laid a mouldy pair o' her ain man's breeks
 By the brose o' Aiken-drum.

Let the learned decide when they convene
 What spell was him an' the breeks between ;
 For frae that day forth he was nae mair seen,
 An' sair missed was Aiken-drum.

He was heard by a herd gaun by Thrieve,
 Crying : " Lang, lang now may I greet an' grieve :
 For, alas ! I hae gotten baith fee an' leave—
 Oh, luckless Aiken-drum ! "

Awa', ye wrangling sceptic tribe,
 Wi' your pros an' your cons wad ye decide
 'Gain the 'sponsible voice o' a hail country-side,
 On the facts 'bout Aiken-drum !

Though the " Brownie o' Blednoch " lang be gane,
 The mark o' his feet's left on mony a stane ;
 An' mony a wife an' mony a wean
 'Tell the feats o' Aiken-drum.

E'en now, light loons that jibe an' sneer
At spiritual guests an' a' sic gear,
At the Glashnoch mill hae swat wi' fear,
An' looked roun' for Aiken-drum.

An' guidly folks hae gotten a fright,
When the moon was set, an' the stars gied nae light,
At the roaring linn, in the howe o' the night,
Wi' sughs like Aiken-drum.

WILLIAM NICHOLSON.

LA BELLE DAME SANS MERCI.

I.

AH, what can ail thee, wretched wight,
Alone and palely loitering ;
The sedge is wither'd from the lake,
And no birds sing.

II.

Ah, what can ail thee, wretched wight,
So haggard and so woe-begone ?
The squirrel's granary is full
And the harvest's done.

III.

I see a lily on thy brow,
With anguish moist and fever dew ;
And on thy cheek a fading rose
Fast withereth too.

IV.

I met a lady in the meads,
Full beautiful, a faery's child ;
Her hair was long, her foot was light,
And her eyes were wild.

V.

I set her on my pacing steed,
And nothing else saw all day long ;
For sideways would she lean, and sing
A faery's song.

VI.

I made a garland for her head,
And bracelets too, and fragrant zone ;
She look'd at me as she did love,
And made sweet moan.

VII.

She found me roots of relish sweet,
And honey wild, and manna dew ;
And sure in language strange she said,
I love thee true.

VIII.

She took me to her elfin grot,
And there she gaz'd and sighed deep,
And there I shut her wild sad eyes—
So kiss'd to sleep.

IX.

And there we slumber'd on the moss,
And there I dream'd, ah woe betide,
The latest dream I ever dream'd
On the cold hill side.

X.

I saw pale kings, and princes too,
Pale warriors, death-pale were they all ;
Who cry'd—" La belle Dame sans merci
Hath thee in thrall !"

XI.

I saw their starv'd lips in the gloom
With horrid warning gaped wide,
And I awoke, and found me here
On the cold hill-side.

XII.

And this is why I sojourn here
Alone and palely loitering,
Though the sedge is wither'd from the lake,
And no birds sing.

JOHN KEATS.

THE MOUNTAIN SPRITE.

IN yonder valley there dwelt, alone,
A youth, whose moments had calmly flown,
Till spells came o'er him, and, day and night,
He was haunted and watched by a Mountain Sprite !

As once, by moonlight, he wandered o'er
The golden sands of that island shore,
A foot-print sparkled before his sight—
'Twas the fairy foot of the Mountain Sprite !

Beside a fountain, one sunny day,
As bending over the stream he lay,
There peep'd down o'er him two eyes of light,
And he saw in that mirror the Mountain Sprite.

He turn'd, but lo, like a startled bird,
That spirit fled !—and the youth but heard
Sweet music, such as marks the flight
Of some bird of song, from the Mountain Sprite.

One night, still haunted by that bright look,
The boy, bewilder'd, his pencil took,
And, guided only by memory's light,
Drew the once-seen form of the Mountain Sprite.

“Oh thou, who lovest the shadow,” cried
A voice, low whisp’ring by his side,
“Now turn and see,”—here the youth’s delight
Seal’d the rosy lips of the Mountain Sprite.

“Of all the Spirits of land and sea,”
Then rapt he murmur’d, “there’s none like thee,
And oft, oh oft, may thy foot thus light
In this lonely bower, sweet Mountain Sprite!”

THOMAS MOORE.

THE FAIRY BOY.

A MOTHER came when stars were paling,
Wailing round a lonely spring ;
Thus she cried while tears were falling,
Calling on the Fairy King :

“ Why with spells my child caressing,
Courting him with fairy joy ;
Why destroy a mother’s blessing,
Wherefore steal my baby boy ?

“ O’er the mountain, through the wild wood,
Where his childhood loved to play ;
Where the flowers are freshly springing,
There I wander, day by day.

“ There I wander, growing fonder
Of the child that made my joy ;
On the echoes wildly calling
To restore my fairy boy.

“ But in vain my plaintive calling
Tears are falling all in vain !
He now sports with fairy pleasur ,
He’s the treasure of their train !

“Fare thee well, my child, for ever,
In this world I’ve lost my joy,
But in the next we ne’er shall sever,
There I’ll find my angel boy !”

SAMUEL LOVER.

THE FAIRY CHILD.¹

THE summer sun was sinking
With a mild light calm and mellow,
It shone on my little boy's bonny cheeks,
And his loose locks of yellow ;

The robin was singing sweetly,
And his song was sad and tender ;
And my little boy's eyes, when he heard the song,
Smiled with a sweet, soft splendour.

My little boy lay on my bosom
While his soul the song was quaffing,
The joy of his soul had tinged his cheek,
And his heart and eye were laughing.

I sate alone in my cottage,
The midnight needle plying ;
I feared for my child, for the rush's light
In the socket now was dying !

There came a hand to my lonely latch,
Like the wind at midnight moaning ;
I knelt to pray, but rose again,
For I heard my little boy groaning :

¹ The woman in whose character these lines are written, supposes her child stolen by a fairy. I need not mention how prevalent the superstition was among the peasantry, which attributed instances of sudden death to the agency of these spirits.—AUTHOR'S NOTE.

I crossed my boy and I crossed my breast,
But that night my child departed—
They left a weakling in his stead,
And I am broken-hearted !

Oh ! it cannot be my own sweet boy,
For his eyes are dim and hollow,
My little boy is gone—is gone,
And his mother soon will follow !

The dirge for the dead will be sung for me,
And the mass be chanted meetly,
And I shall sleep with my little boy
In the moonlight churchyard sweetly.

DR. ANSTER.

THE FAIRY TEMPTER.

A FAIR girl was sitting in the greenwood shade,
List'ning to the music the spring birds made ;
When sweeter by far than the birds on the tree,
A voice murmur'd near her, " Oh come, love, with me—
 In earth or air,
 A thing so fair
 I have not seen as thee !
Then come, love, with me."

"With a star for thy home, in a palace of light,
Thou wilt add a fresh grace to the beauty of night ;
Or, if wealth be thy wish, thine are treasures untold,
I will show thee the birthplace of jewels and gold—
 And pearly caves
 Beneath the waves,
 All these, all these are thine,
If thou wilt be mine."

Thus whisper'd a fairy to tempt the fair girl,
But vain was his promise of gold and of pearl ;
For she said, " Tho' thy gifts to a poor girl were dear,
My father, my mother, my sisters are here :
 Oh ! what would be
 Thy gifts to me
 Of earth, and sea, and air,
If my heart were not there ?"

SAMUEL LOVER.

THE FAIRIES OF THE CALDON-LOW.

A MIDSUMMER LEGEND.

“AND where have you been, my Mary,
And where have you been from me?”
“I've been to the top of the Caldon-Low,
The midsummer night to see!”

“And what did you see, my Mary,
All up on the Caldon-Low?”
“I saw the blithe sunshine come down,
And I saw the merry winds blow.”

“And what did you hear, my Mary,
All up on the Caldon-Hill?”
“I heard the drops of the water made,
And the green corn ears to fill.”

“Oh, tell me all, my Mary—
All, all that ever you know ;
For you must have seen the fairies,
Last night on the Caldon-Low.”

“Then take me on your knee, mother,
And listen, mother of mine :
A hundred fairies danced last night,
And the harpers they were nine.

“ And merry was the glee of the harp-strings,
And their dancing feet so small ;
But, oh, the sound of their talking
Was merrier far than all ! ”

“ And what were the words, my Mary,
That you did hear them say ? ”

“ I'll tell you all, my mother—
But let me have my way ! ”

“ And some they played with the water,
And rolled it down the hill ;
' And this,' they said, ' shall speedily turn
The poor old miller's mill ;

“ ‘ For there has been no water,
Ever since the first of May ;
And a busy man shall the miller be
By the dawning of the day ! ”

“ ‘ Oh, the miller, how he will laugh,
When he sees the mill-dam rise !
The jolly old miller, how he will laugh,
Till the tears fill both his eyes ! ’ ”

“ And some they seized the little winds,
That sounded over the hill,
And each put a horn into his mouth,
And blew so sharp and shrill :—

“ ‘ And there,' said they, ' the merry winds go,
Away from every horn ;
And those shall clear the mildew dank
From the blind old widow's corn.

“ Oh, the poor blind old widow—
 Though she has been blind so long,
 She'll be merry enough when the mildew's gone,
 And the corn stands stiff and strong.’

“ And some they brought the brown lintseed,
 And flung it down from the Low—
 ‘ And this,’ said they, ‘ by the sunrise,
 In the weaver's croft shall grow !

“ Oh, the poor, lame weaver,
 How will he laugh outright,
 When he sees his dwindling flax-field
 All full of flowers by night !’

“ And then upspoke a brownie,
 With a long beard on his chin—
 ‘ I have spun up all the tow,’ said he,
 ‘ And I want some more to spin.

“ I've spun a piece of hempen cloth,
 And I want to spin another—
 A little sheet for Mary's bed,
 And an apron for her mother !’

“ And with that I could not help but laugh,
 And I laughed out loud and free ;
 And then on the top of the Caldon-Low,
 There was no one left but me.

“ And all, on the top of the Caldon-Low,
 The mists were cold and grey,
 And nothing I saw but the mossy stones
 That round about me lay.

“ But, as I came down from the hill-top,
I heard, afar below,
How busy the jolly miller was,
And how merry the wheel did go.

“ And I peeped into the widow’s field ;
And, sure enough, was seen
The yellow ears of the mildewed corn
All standing stiff and green.

“ And down by the weaver’s croft I stole,
To see if the flax were high ;
But I saw the weaver at his gate,
With the good news in his eye !

“ Now, this is all I heard, mother,
And all that I did see ;
So, prithee, make my bed, mother,
For I’m tired as I can be.”

MARY HOWITT.

THE GREEN GNOME.

A MELODY.

RING, sing ! ring, sing ! pleasant Sabbath bells !
 Chime, rhyme ! chime, rhyme ! through the dales and dells !
 Rhyme, ring ! chime, sing ! pleasant Sabbath bells !
 Chime, sing ! rhyme, ring ! over fields and fells !

And I gallop'd and I gallop'd on my palfrey white as milk,
 My robe was of the sea-green woof, my serk was of the silk,
 My hair was golden yellow, and it floated to my shoe,
 My eyes were like two harebells bathed in shining drops of dew ;
 My palfrey, never stopping, made a music sweetly blent
 With the leaves of autumn dropping all around me as I went ;
 And I heard the bells, grown fainter, far behind me peal and
 play,
 Fainter, fainter, fainter, fainter, till they seemed to die away ;
 And beside a silver runnel, on a lonely heap of sand,
 I saw the green Gnome sitting, with his cheek upon his hand ;
 Then he started up to see me, and he ran with cry and
 bound,
 And drew me from my palfrey white, and set me on the ground :

O crimson, crimson, were his locks, his face was green to see,
But he cried, "O light-hair'd lassie, you are bound to marry me!"

He claspt me round the middle small, he kissed me on the cheek,

He kissed me once, he kissed me twice—I could not stir or speak;

He kissed me twice, he kissed me thrice—but when he kissed again,

I called aloud upon the name of Him who died for men!

Ring, sing! ring, sing! pleasant Sabbath bells!

Chime, rhyme! chime, rhyme! through the dales and dells!

Rhyme, ring! chime, sing! pleasant Sabbath bells!

Chime, sing! rhyme, ring! over fields and fells!

O faintly, faintly, faintly, calling men and maids to pray,

So faintly, faintly, faintly, rang the bells far away;

And as I named the Blessed Name, as in our need we can,

The ugly green green Gnome became a tall and comely man!

His hands were white, his beard was gold, his eyes were black as sloues,

His tunic was of scarlet woof, and silken were his hose;

A pensive light from Faëryland still linger'd on his cheek,

His voice was like the running brook, when he began to speak:

"O you have cast away the charm my stepdame put on me,

Seven years I dwelt in Faëryland, and you have set me free!

O I will mount thy palfry white, and ride to kirk with thee,

And by those sweetly shining eyes, we twain will wedded be!

Back we gallop'd, never stopping, he before and I behind.
And the autumn leaves were dropping, red and yellow, in the wind,
And the sun was shining clearer, and my heart was high
and proud,
As nearer, nearer, nearer, rang the kirk-bells sweet and loud,
And we saw the kirk before us, as we trotted down the fells,
And nearer, clearer, o'er us, rang the welcome of the bells !

Ring, sing ! ring, sing ! pleasant Sabbath bells !
Chime, rhyme ! chime, rhyme ! through the dales and dells !
Rhyme, ring ! chime, sing ! pleasant Sabbath bells !
Chime, sing ! rhyme, ring ! over fields and fells !

ROBERT BUCHANAN.

THE "MIDIAN-MARA." ¹

I.

THERE'S a sad sea-maiden
Sighs day and night ;
For lack of Eden
Her eyes weep sore ;
If you come upon her
By pale moonlight,—
Farewell to honour
For evermore !
Tho' her hair is redder
Than blood fresh spilt,
'Tis you must wed her
And share her guilt ;
'Tis you, more pity !
Must buried be
In her shining City
Beneath the Sea.

II.

But should'st thou view her
When shines the sun,
And softly unto her
On tiptoe creep,
You'll find her dozing
As I have done,
Naked reposing
In a sunny sleep ;

Then be quickly ready
 To seize her hair,
 And to name Our Lady
 As she wakens there :
 And tho' clouds may thunder
 O'er the waters wide,
 To the walls of wonder
 She'll be your guide.

III.

In the year of hunger,¹
 That's long gone by,
 When I was younger
 Who now am old,
 By the Ocean dreary
 Like a taisch ² went I,
 Thin, weak and weary,
 With want and cold.
 O sweetly gleaming
 Was the Sea that hour,
 And the sun was streaming
 Thro' a golden shower ;
 As I wandered sighing
 For the famished Land,
 I beheld her lying
 On the yellow strand !

IV.

Like the silver shining
 Was the Maiden's skin,

The red locks twining
 To the breasts of white,
 Her cheeks were hueless
 And chill and thin,
 Her lips were dewless,
 But her eyes were bright.
 Behind her creeping
 I held her hair,—
 As she scream'd upleaping
 I said the prayer ;—
 " O Midian-Mara !
 I hold thee mine :
 Thy help I borrow,
 By the Cross's sign ! "

v.

Hast thou ever noted
 A wounded seal,
 As it bleats shrill-throated
 Before it dies ?
 As a seal's eyes turning
 On them that kill,
 With a dying yearning,
 Were the maiden's eyes.
 With those orbs of azure
 She gazed on me :—
 " O what's thy pleasure,
Gilli ma chree ? "
 And her tears fell brightly
 Upon the sands,
 As she trembled whitely
 With wringing hands.

VI.

"O take me straightway,"
 To her said I,
 "To the City's gateway
 That well ye know—
 'Tis the hunger kills me,
 And that's no lie,
 And a longing fills me
 From earth to go."
 She ceased her crying,
 And sadly said,
 With the white gulls flying,
 Above her head,
 "Is it there, marvourneen,
 Ye'd wish to stand,
 That were bred and born in A Christian land?"

VII.

I knew her nature
 Was sly and deep,
 Tho' the wicked creature
 Had a heavenly face;
 And I looked below me
 At the waves asleep,
 As I answered, "Show me
 That very place!
 'Tis you must charm me
 To take the track,
 And no hand shall harm me
 Till I come back."

As I spake, deep thunder
Was heard that day,
And I saw, far under,
Where the City lay !

VIII.

'Neath the green still ocean,
Far, far, below,
With a mystic motion
That can't be told,
I saw it gleaming
On a strand of snow,
Its bright towers beaming
All glass and gold !
And a sound thrilled thro' me
Like the sound of bells,
Upwasted to me
On the ocean swells ;
And I saw far under,
Within those same,
White shapes of wonder
That went and came.

IX.

" O Mary, mother,
That savest me,
'Tis the place, no other,
Where I would go ;
For 'tis sweet and pleasant,
Set 'neath the Sea
In the bright white crescent
Of the strand below.

'Tis the hunger in me
 That works its will,
 Lest the devil win me
 To steal or kill."
 I held her tighter,
 And prayed anew :—
 As I spoke, still brighter
 That vision grew.

x.

Still glassy and shining
 Those walls of flame,
 With the seaweeds twining
 Around their feet ;
 More large the place's
 Great towers became,
 Till I saw the faces
 In the golden street.
 I saw and knew them
 (The Lord's my guide !)
 As the water drew them
 From side to side ;
 I saw the creatures,
 And I knew them then—
 The wool-white features
 Of drown'd men !

XI.

Upright they drifted,
 All wet and cold,
 By the sea-wash lifted
 Like the red sea-tang,

While in wild, sad cadence,
 From the towers of gold,
 The pale sea-maidens
 Struck harps and sang.
 " O shule, shule,
O shule, aroon !"¹
 I tell thee truly,
 I heard them croon ;
 Then I heard that thunder
 Roll deep once more,
 And I swooned for wonder
 On the yellow shore !

XII.

When I raised in sorrow
 My fearful face,
 The Midian-Mara
 Was fled from me ;
 Without repining
 I left the place,
 As the Moon rose shining
 Beyond the sea.
 And my feet went faster
 To see her light,
 For I feared disaster
 If I stayed that night. . . .
 When God took pity,
 And brought me bread,
 I forgot that City
 Of the drownèd dead.

ROBERT BUCHANAN.

" ¹ Come, come, my darling, come ! "

THUBBER-NA-SHIE ;

OR, THE FAIRY WELL.

[Amongst the many old and fanciful superstitions embodied in the traditions of our peasantry, some of the most poetical are those connected with spring wells, which in Ireland have been invested with something of a sacred character ever since the days of Druidical worship. It is in some parts of the country an article of popular belief, that the desecration of a spring by any unworthy use is followed invariably by some misfortune to the offender ; and that the well itself, which is regarded as the source of fruitfulness and prosperity, moves altogether out of the fields in which the violation had been committed.—“Dublin University Magazine,” vol. viii. p. 449].

OH ! Peggy Bawn was innocent,
 And wild as any roe ;
 Her cheek was like the summer rose,
 Her neck was like the snow :

And every eye was in her head
 So beautiful and bright,
 You'd almost think they'd light her through Glencarrigy by night.

Among the hills and mountains,
 Above her mother's home,
 The long and weary summer day
 Young Peggy Blake would roam ;

And not a girl in all the town,
From Dhua to Glenlur,
Could wander through the mountain's heath
Or climb the rocks with her.

The Lammas sun was shinin' on
The meadows all so brown ;
The neighbours gathered far and near
To cut the ripe crops down ;

And pleasant was the mornin',
And dewy was the dawn,
And gay and lightsome-hearted
To the sunny fields they're gone.

The joke was passing lightly,
And the laugh was loud and free ;
There was neither care nor trouble
To disturb their hearty glee ;

When, says Peggy, resting in among
The sweet and scented hay,
" I wonder is there one would brave
The Fairy-well to-day ! "

She looked up with her laughin' eyes,
So soft at Willy Rhu ;
Och murdher ! that she didn't need
His warnin' kind and true !

But all the boys and girls laughed,
And Willy Rhu looked shy ;
God help you, Willy ! sure they saw
The throuble in your eye.

“ Now, by my faith ! ” young Connell says,
 “ I like your notion well—
 There’s a power more than gospel
 In what crazy gossips tell.”

Oh, my heavy hatred fall upon
 Young Connell of Sliabh-Mast !
 He took the cruel vengeance
 For his scorned love at last.

The jokin’ and the jibin’
 And the banterin’ went on,
 One girl dared another,
 And they all dared Peggy Bawn.

Till, leaping up, away she flew
 Down to the hollow green—
 Her bright locks, floating in the wind,
 Like golden lights were seen.

They saw her at the Fairy-well—
 Their laughin’ died away,
 They saw her stoop above its brink
 With heart as cold as clay.

Oh ! mother, mother, never stand
 Upon your cabin floor !
 You heard the cry that through your heart
 Will ring for evermore ;

For when she came up from the well,
 No one could stand her look :
 Her eye was wild—her cheek was pale—
 They saw her mind was shook :

And the gaze she cast around her
Was so ghastly and so sad—
“ O Christ preserve us ! ” shouted all,
“ Poor Peggy Blake’s gone mad ! ”

The moon was up—the stars were out,
And shining through the sky,
When young and old stood mourning round
To see their darling die.

Poor Peggy from the death-bed rose—
Her face was pale and cold,
And down about her shoulders hung
The lovely locks of gold.

“ All you that’s here this night,” she said,
“ Take warnin’ by my fate,
Whoever braves the Fairies’ wrath,
Their sorrow comes too late.”

The tear was startin’ in her eye,
She clasp’d her throbbin’ head,
And when the sun next mornin’ rose
Poor Peggy Bawn lay dead.

JAMES TEELING.

THE FAIRIES' PASSAGE.

I.

TAPP, tapp! Rapp, rapp! "Get up, Gaffer Ferryman."

"Eh? who is there?" The clock strikes Three.

"Get up, do, Gaffer! You are the very man
We have been long—long—longing to see."

The ferryman rises, growling and grumbling,
And goes fum-fumbling, and stumbling, and tumbling,
Over the wares in his way to the door.

But he sees no more

Than he saw before,

'Till a voice is heard—"O Ferryman, dear!

Here we are waiting, all of us here!

We are a wee, wee colony, we;

Some two hundred in all, or three.

Ferry us over the river Lee

Ere dawn of day,

And we will pay

'The most we may,

In our own wee way!"

II.

"Who are you? Whence came you? What place are you going to?"

"O, we have dwelt over-long in this land.

The people get cross, and are growing so knowing,
too ;

Nothing at all but they now understand ;
We are daily vanishing under the thunder
Of some huge engine or iron wonder ;

'That iron—O, it has entered our souls !'

“——Your souls ? O, Goles !

You queer little drolls !

Do you mean—— ?” “Good Gaffer, do aid us with speed,

For our time, like our stature, is short indeed !

And a very long way we have to go,

Eight or ten thousand miles or so,

Hither and thither, and to and fro ;

With our pots and pans,

And little gold cans ;

But our light caravans

Run swifter than man's !”

III.

“Well, well, you may come !” said the Ferryman, affably ;

“Patrick, turn out, and get ready the barge !”

Then again to the little folk—“Though you seem laugh-ably

Small, I don't mind, if your coppers be large.”

O, dear ! what a rushing, what pushing, what crushing

(The waterman making vain efforts at hushing

The hubbub the while) there followed these words !

What clapping of boards !

What strapping of cords !

What stowing away of children and wives,
 And platters, and mugs, and spoons, and knives !
 Till all had safely got into the boat,
 And the Ferryman clad in his tip-top coat,
 And his wee little faeries were fairly afloat !
 Then ding ! ding ! ding !
 And kling ! kling ! kling !
 How the coppers did ring
 In the tin pitcherling !

IV.

Off, then, went the boat, at first very pleasantly,
 Smoothly, and so forth, but after a while
 It swayed and it swagged this way and that way, and presently
 Chest after chest, and pile after pile,
 Of the little folks' goods began tossing and rolling,
 And pitching like fun, beyond fairy controlling !
 O, Mab ! if the hubbub was great before,
 It was now some two or three million times more ;
 Crash went the wee crocks, and the clocks, and the locks,
 Of each little wee box were stove in by hard knocks ;
 And then there were oaths, and prayers, and cries—
 “ Take care ! ”—“ See there ! ”—“ Oh, dear ! my eyes ! ”
 “ I am killed ! ”—“ I am drowned ! ”—with groans and sighs ;
 Till to land they drew ;
 “ Yeo heo ! Pull to !
 Tiller-rope, thro' and thro' ! ”
 And all's right anew.

v.

" Now, jump upon shore, ye queer little oddities,
 . . . Eh ! what is this ? Where are they at all ?
 Where are they and where are their tiny commodities ?
 Well ! as I live ! " He looks blank as a wall,
 The poor Ferryman ! Round him, and round him he gazes,
 But only gets deeplier lost in the mazes
 Of utter bewilderment ! All, all are gone—
 And he stands alone,
 Like a statue of stone,
 In a doldrum of wonder. He turns to steer,
 And a tinkling laugh salutes his ear
 With other odd sounds — " Ha ! ha ! ha ! ha !
 Tol, lol ; zid, ziddle—quee, quee—bah ! bah !
 Fizzigiddy ! pshe ! sha ! sha ! "

" O, ye thieves, ye thieves ! ye rascally thieves ! "

The good man cries. He turns to his pitcher,
 And there, alas ! to his horror perceives,
 That the little folks' mode of making him richer
 Had been to pay him with—withered leaves !

CLARENCE MANGAN.

THE HAUNTED SPRING.

[It is said, Fays have the power to assume various shapes for the purpose of luring mortals into Fairyland ; hunters seem to have been particularly the objects of the lady fairies' fancies.]

GAILY through the mountain glen
 The hunters horn did ring,
 As the milk-white doe
 Escaped his bow,
 Down by the haunted spring.
 In vain his silver horn he wound,—
 'Twas echo answered back ;
 For neither groom nor baying hound
 Were on the hunter's track !
 In vain he sought the milk-white doe
 That made him stray, and 'scaped his bow ;
 For, save himself, no living thing
 Was by the silent haunted spring.

The purple heath-bells, blooming fair,
 Their fragrance round did fling,
 As the hunter lay
 At close of day,
 Down by the haunted spring.
 A lady fair, in robe of white,
 To greet the hunter came ;
 She kissed a cup with jewels bright,
 And pledged him by his name ;

“ Oh, lady fair,” the hunter cried,
“ Be thou my love, my blooming bride,
A bride that well may grace a king !
Fair lady of the haunted spring.”

In the fountain clear she stoop'd,
And forth she drew a ring ;
And that loved Knight
His faith did plight
Down by the haunted spring.
But since that day his chase did stray,
The hunter ne'er was seen,
And legends tell, he now doth dwell
Within the hills so green ;¹
But still the milk-white doe appears,
And wakes the peasants' evening fears,
While distant bugles faintly ring
Around the lonely haunted spring.

THE ROMANCE OF THE FAIRY CURE.

I.

NELLY Phelan's child is ailing ;
Hour by hour, the babe is failing ;
Squeeling, kicking, biting, whining,
To an atomy he's pining.

II.

Once he was a fine, wee fellow ;
Now he's wrinkled, thin, and yellow.
Playful then he was, and civil ;
Now he's cross-grained, as the devil.

III.

To a wise woman Nell's walking ;
Long time they're in secret talking ;
First she heard all Nell's description ;
Then she wrote out a prescription.

IV.

“ Take this cure, although a strange one ;
It is needed when they change one ;
By it you'll the fairies bother,
Get your child, and choke the other.

V.

“ You must make the fairy speak out,
Ere your child, from them, you take out :
If you follow what’s here written,
You shall find the biter bitten.”

VI.

Cried Nell, “ Be sure that I’ll observe it ;
If I fail I’ll not deserve it :
I would walk the wide world over,
If my child I could recover.”

VII.

Five hundred egg-shells Nelly chooses ;
In a pot, the shells she bruises ;
In spring water now they’re boiling,
Stirring round the pot she’s toiling.

VIII.

Red-hot now the poker’s ready ;
While Nell stirs the pot, so steady :
From the child, in cradle lying,
Nell now hears a strange voice crying—

IX.

“ Mammy ! Mammy ! what’s that boiling ?
Why with potstick are you toiling ? ”
Nell, with fright, to drop was ready,
Yet she answered, cool, and steady—

X.

“Egg-shells, deary ! I am brewing,
 Cock’s broth for my babe I’m stewing.
 When I skim off all the dripping,
 Then it will be fit for sipping.”

XI.

“Though five hundred years I’m chewing,
 Egg-shells never saw I brewing ;
 Though five centuries I’m cheating,
 Ne’er have I seen cock’s broth eating.”

XII.

Quick the poker Nelly seizes ;
 To the cradle now she races ;
 Red-hot down its throat she crams it ;
 With her might and main she rams it.

XIII.

Gone like lightning is the fairy ;
 In its stead, there lies her deary—
 Her brave boy—her darling Terry,
 With his lip and cheek of cherry.

JAMES CLARENCE MANGAN.

THE FAIRY NURSE.

SWEET babe ! a golden cradle holds thee,
And soft the snow-white fleece enfolds thee ;
In airy bower I'll watch thy sleeping.
Where branchy trees to the breeze are sweeping.
Shuheen, sho, lulo lo !

When mothers languish broken-hearted,
When young wives are from husbands parted,
Ah ! little think the keeners lonely,
They weep some time-worn fairy only.
Shuheen, sho, lulo lo !

Within our magic halls of brightness,
Trips many a foot of snowy whiteness ;
Stolen maidens, queens of fairy—
And kings and chiefs a slugh shee airy.
Shuheen, sho, lulo lo !

Rest thee, babe ! I love thee dearly,
And as thy mortal mother nearly ;
Ours is the swiftest steed and proudest,
That moves where the tramp of the host is loudest.
Shuheen, sho, lulo lo !

Rest, thee, babe ! for soon thy slumbers
Shall flee at the magic Koelshie's numbers ;
In airy bower I'll watch thy sleeping,
Where branchy trees to the breeze are sweeping.
Shuheen, sho, lulo lo !

EDWARD WALSH.

THE FAIRY THORN.

AN ULSTER BALLAD.

“GET up, our Anna dear, from the weary spinning wheel ;
For your father’s on the hill, and your mother is asleep :
Come up above the crags, and we’ll dance a highland reel
Around the fairy thorn on the steep.”

At Anna Grace’s door ’twas thus the maidens cried,
Three merry maidens fair in kirtles of the green ;
And Anna laid the rock and the weary wheel aside,
The fairest of the four, I ween.

They’re glancing through the glimmer of the quiet eve,
Away in milky wavings of the neck and ankle bare ;
The merry-sliding stream in its sleepy song they leave,
And the crags in the ghostly air :

And linking hand and hand, and singing as they go,
The maids along the hill-side have ta’en their fearless way
Till they come to where the rowan trees in lonely beauty grow
Beside the Fairy Hawthorn grey.

The Hawthorn stands between the ashes tall and slim,
Like matron with her twin grand-daughters at her knee ;
The rowan berries cluster o’er her low head grey and dim,
In ruddy kisses sweet to see.

The merry maidens four have ranged them in a row,
 Between each lovely couple a stately rowan stem,
 And away in mazes wavy like skimming birds they go,
 Oh, never carolled bird like them !

But solemn is the silence of the silvery haze
 That drinks away their voices in echoless repose,
 And dreamily the evening has stilled the haunted braes,
 And dreamier the gloaming grows.

And sinking one by one, like lark-notes from the sky
 When the falcon's shadow saileth across the open shaw,
 Are hushed the maidens' voices, as cowering down they lie
 In the flutter of their sudden awe.

For, from the air above, and the grassy ground beneath,
 And from the mountain-ashes and the old whitethorn between,
 A power of faint enchantment doth through their beings
 breathe,
 And they sink down together on the green.

They sink together silent, and stealing side by side,
 They fling their lovely arms o'er their drooping necks so
 fair,
 Then vainly strive again their naked arms to hide,
 For their shrinking necks again are bare.

Thus clasped and prostrate all, with their heads together bowed,
 Soft o'er their bosoms beating—the only human sound—
 They hear the silky footsteps of the silent fairy crowd,
 Like a river in the air, gliding round.

Nor scream can any raise, nor prayer can any say,
But wild, wild, the terror of the speechless three—
For they feel fair Anna Grace drawn silently away,
By whom they dare not look to see.

They feel their tresses twine with her parting locks of gold,
And the curls elastic falling, as her head withdraws ;
They feel her sliding arms from their tranced arms unfold,
But they dare not look to see the cause :

For heavy on their senses the faint enchantment lies
Through all that night of anguish and perilous amaze ;
And neither fear nor wonder can ope their quivering eyes
Or their limbs from the cold ground raise.

Till out of Night the earth has rolled her dewy side,
With every haunted mountain and streamy vale below ;
When, as the mist dissolves in the yellow morning tide,
The maidens' trance dissolveth so.

Then fly the ghastly three as swiftly as they may,
And told their tale of sorrow to anxious friends in vain—
They pined away and died within the year and day,
And ne'er was Anna Grace seen again.

SAMUEL FERGUSON, M.R.I.A.

THE FAIRY WELL OF LAGNANAY.

I.

MOURNFULLY, sing mournfully—
 “ O listen, Ellen, sister dear :
 Is there no help at all for me,
 But only ceaseless sigh and tear ?
 Why did not he who left me here,
 With stolen hope steal memory ?
 O listen, Ellen, sister dear,
 (Mournfully, sing mournfully)—
 I'll go away to Sleamish hill,
 I'll pluck the fairy hawthorne tree,
 And let the spirits work their will ;
 I care not if for good or ill,
 So they but lay the memory
 Which all my heart is haunting still !
 (Mournfully, sing mournfully)—
 The Fairies are a silent race,
 And pale as lily flowers to see ;
 I care not for a blanched face,
 Nor wandering in a dreaming place,
 So I but banish memory :—
 I wish I were with Anna Grace !”
 Mournfully, sing mournfully !—

II.

Hearken to my tale of woe—
 'Twas thus to weeping Ellen Con,
 Her sister said in accents low,
 Her only sister, Una bawn :
 'Twas in their bed before the dawn,
 And Ellen answered sad and slow,—
 “ Oh Una, Una, be not drawn
 (Hearken to my tale of woe)—
 To this unholy grief I pray,
 Which makes me sick at heart to know,
 And I will help you if I may :
 —The Fairy Well of Lagnanay—
 Lie nearer me, I tremble so,—
 Una, I've heard wise women say
 (Hearken to my tale of woe)—
 That if before the dews arise,
 True maiden in its icy flow
 With pure hand bathe her bosom thrice,
 Three lady-brackens pluck likewise,
 And three times round the fountain go,
 She straight forgets her tears and sighs.”
 Hearken to my tale of woe !

III.

All, alas ! and well-away !
 “ Oh, sister Ellen, sister sweet,
 Come with me to the hill I pray,
 And I will prove that blessed freet ! ”
 They rose with soft and silent feet,
 They left their mother where she lay,
 Their mother and her care discreet,

(All, alas ! and well-away !)

And soon they reached the Fairy Well,
The mountain's eye, clear, cold, and grey.

Wide open in the dreary fell :

How long they stood 'twere vain to tell,
At last upon the point of day,

Bawn Una bares her bosom's swell,

(All, alas ! and well-away !)

Thrice o'er her shrinking breasts she laves
The gliding glance that will not stay

Of subtly-streaming fairy waves :—

And now the charm three brackens craves,
She plucks them in their fringed array :—

Now round the well her fate she braves,

(All, alas ! and well-away !)

IV.

Save us all from Fairy thrall !

Ellen sees her face the rim

Twice and thrice, and that is all—

Fount and hill and maiden swim,

All together melting dim !

“Una ! Una !” thou may'st call,

Sister sad ! but lith or limb

(Save us all from Fairy thrall !)

Never again of Una bawn

Where now she walks in dreamy hall

Shall aye of mortal look upon !

Oh ! can it be the guard was gone,

That better guard than shield or wall ?

Who knows on earth save Turlagh Daune ?

(Save us all from Fairy thrall !)

Behold the banks are green and bare,

No pit is here wherein to fall :

Aye—at the fount you well may stare,

But nought save pebbles smooth is there,

And small streams twirling one and all.

Hie thee home, and be thy pray'r,

Save us all from Fairy thrall !

SAMUEL FERGUSON, LL.D., M.R.I.A.

QUEEN MAB.

A LITTLE fairy comes at night,
 Her eyes are blue, her hair is brown,
 With silver spots upon her wings,
 And from the moon she flutters down.

She has a little silver wand,
 And when a good child goes to bed
 She waves her wand from right to left,
 And makes a circle round its head.

And then it dreams of pleasant things,
 Of fountains filled with fairy fish,
 And trees that bear delicious fruit,
 And bow their branches at a wish :

Of arbours filled with dainty scents
 From lovely flowers that never fade ;
 Bright flies that glitter in the sun,
 And glow-worms shining in the shade :

And talking birds with gifted tongues,
 For singing songs and telling tales,
 And pretty dwarfs to show the way
 Through fairy hills and fairy dales.

But when a bad child goes to bed,
From left to right she weaves her rings,
And then it dreams all through the night
Of only ugly horrid things !

Then lions come with glaring eyes,
And tigers growl, a dreadful noise,
And ogres draw their cruel knives,
To shed the blood of girls and boys.

Then stormy waves rush on to drown,
Or raging flames come scorching round,
Fierce dragons hover in the air,
And serpents crawl along the ground.

Then wicked children wake and weep,
And wish the long black gloom away ;
But good ones love the dark, and find
The night as pleasant as the day.

THOMAS HOOD.

THE KELPIE OF CORRIEVRECKAN.

I.

HE mounted his steed of the water clear,
 And sat on his saddle of sea-weed sere ;
 He held his bridle of strings of pearl,
 Dug out of the depths where the sea-snakes curl.

II.

He put on his vest of the whirlpool froth,
 Soft and dainty as velvet cloth,
 And donn'd his mantle of sand so white,
 And grasp'd his sword of the coral bright.

III.

And away he gallop'd, a horseman free,
 Spurring his steed through the stormy sea,
 Clearing the billows with bound and leap—
 Away, away, o'er the foaming deep !

IV.

By Scarba's rock, by Lunga's shore,
 By Garveloch isles where the breakers roar,
 With his horse's hoofs he dash'd the spray,
 And on to Loch Buy, away, away !

V.

On to Loch Buy all day he rode,
And reach'd the shore as sunset glow'd,
And stopp'd to hear the sounds of joy
That rose from the hills and glens of Moy.

VI.

The morrow was May, and on the green
They'd lit the fire of Beltan E'en,
And danced around, and piled it high
With peat and heather and pine-tops dry.

VII.

A piper play'd a lightsome reel,
And timed the dance with toe and heel ;
While wives look'd on, as lad and lass
Trod it merrily o'er the grass.

VIII.

And Jessie (fickle and fair was she)
Sat with Evan beneath a tree,
And smiled with mingled love and pride
And half agreed to be his bride.

IX.

The Kelpie gallop'd o'er the green—
He seem'd a knight of noble mien,
And old and young stood up to see,
And wonder'd who the knight could be.

X.

His flowing locks were auburn bright,
 His cheeks were ruddy, his eyes flash'd light ;
 And as he sprang from his good gray steed,
 He look'd a gallant youth indeed.

XI.

And Jessie's fickle heart beat high,
 As she caught the stranger's glancing eye :
 And when he smiled, " Ah well," thought she,
 " I wish this knight came courting me ! "

XII.

He took two steps towards her seat—
 " Wilt thou be mine, O maiden sweet ? "
 He took her lily-white hand, and sigh'd,
 " Maiden, maiden, be my bride ! "

XIII.

And Jessie blush'd, and whisper'd soft—
 " Meet me to-night when the moon's aloft ;
 I've dream'd, fair knight, long time of thee—
 I thought thou camest courting me. "

XIV.

When the moon her yellow horn display'd,
 Alone to the trysting went the maid ;
 When all the stars were shining bright,
 Alone to the trysting went the knight.

XV.

“ I have loved thee long, I have loved thee well,
Maiden, oh more than words can tell !
Maiden, thine eyes like diamonds shine ;
Maiden, maiden, be thou mine ! ”

XVI.

“ Fair sir, thy suit I'll ne'er deny—
Though poor my lot, my hopes are high ;
I scorn a lover of low degree—
None but a knight shall marry me.”

XVII.

He took her by the hand so white,
And gave her a ring of the gold so bright ;
“ Maiden, whose eyes like diamonds shine—
Maiden, maiden, now thou'rt mine ! ”

XVIII.

He lifted her on his steed of gray,
And they rode till morning away, away—
Over the mountain and over the moor,
And over the rocks, to the dark sea-shore.

XIX.

“ We have ridden east, we have ridden west—
I'm weary, fair knight, and I fain would rest,
Say, is thy dwelling beyond the sea ?
Hast thou a good ship waiting for me ? ”

XX.

“ I have no dwelling beyond the sea,
 I have no good ship waiting for thee ;
 ‘Thou shalt sleep with me on a couch of foam,
 And the depths of the ocean shall be thy home.’

XXI.

The gray steed plunged in the billows clear,
 And the maiden’s shrieks were sad to hear.
 “ Maiden, whose eyes like diamonds shine—
 Maiden, maiden, now thou’rt mine !”

XXII.

Loud the cold sea-blast did blow,
 As they sank ’mid the angry waves below—
 Down to the rocks where the serpents creep,
 Twice five hundred fathoms deep.

XXIII.

At morn a fisherman, sailing by,
 Saw her pale corse floating high :
 He knew the maid by her yellow hair
 And her lily skin so soft and fair.

XXIV.

Under a rock on Scarba’s shore,
 Where the wild winds sigh and the breakers roar,
 ‘They dug her a grave by the water clear,
 Among the sea-weed salt and sere.

XXV.

And every year at Beltan E'en,
The Kelpie gallops across the green,
On a steed as fleet as the wintry wind,
With Jessie's mournful ghost behind.

XXVI.

I warn you, maids, whoever you be,
Beware of pride and vanity ;
And ere on change of love you reckon,
Beware the Kelpie of Corrievreckan.

CHARLES MACKAY.

THE ELF OF THE WOODLANDS.

A CHILD'S STORY.

IN his bed the summer sun is sleeping,
 And the air is murky and cool ;
 The vapours o'er the grass are creeping,
 Or hanging above the pool ;
 But a timid gleam,
 Like a half-awake dream,
 Comes peering and peeping soon ;
 Till dew-drops trickle gay
 In the spider's web to play,
 And swing in his spangled festoon.
 A soft beam tips the trunks and leaves
 Of this green silent wood,
 And presently a net-work weaves,
 And presently a hood ;
 A net-work and a hood of gold,
 Spread in many a lovely fold,
 And many a gleaming band,
 Silently as minutes, told
 Into a Lover's hand.

Oh, it is a silent wood
 In this early summer morning !
 Even the birds are not half awake,
 But whisper their chirrups in the brake,
 Like a prelude of sweet warning.

It is as if the placid hours
Hung their heads like folded flowers,
Or like sweet flowers in bud,
Still and happy, smiling and good,
As children in a morning dream,
Who mone not—yet awake they seem,
Their close lids gilded by the beam.

There is a pretty cottage white,
Which also seems asleep,
Dreaming in the early light—
Its very roof and windows sleep!
Each gentle shade that fades away,
Before the rays that following creep,
Is nothing more than dreaming play—
The cottage surely is asleep!

What buzzing tickles yon oak-tree's foot,
Bustling and busy, with nought to be seen!
There's something fidgeting at the root,
With a foo-fooing sound like a school-boy's flute,
And a rattling like pods of dry bean!
See! see! there's a thing scarce five inches high,
With a comical motion and funny bright eye,
And a look both roguish and bold—
His limbs are all antics—he skips like a flea—
His body is brown as the bark of a tree,
Mix'd with green streaks and tarnish'd gold!

With little legs straddling,
He dances about—
Pretends to be waddling—
Then leaps with a flout

At something he sees in the bright quiet air,
 And in front of the cottage he makes antics rare !
 He dances, he prances,
 Gives hiccups and kick-ups,
 But all without noise is his merriment made ;
 He laughs at the little cot !
 Threatens the chimney-pot !
 But soft as a moth, or as light plays with shade.

 Now he stops—
 Now he hops—
 Now cautiously trips !
 On tip-toe,
 And slip-toe
 He skuttles and skips ;
 Along the grass gliding,
 Half-dancing—half sliding—
 Oft stooping—half hiding—
 Then bolt upright walks,
 And whispering talks
 'To himself,
 Pretty elf ;
 And quaint sounds he utters,
 Till close to the shutters
 Of the cot that's still sleeping,
 He climbs up close, peeping,
 And pokes in each crevice his sharp little nose ;
 Till one shutter creaks,
 And opening squeaks,
 And the elfin springs down, and dances and crows !
 Till softly again,
 He climbs to the lattice,

Taps once, twice, and thrice !
Puffs and blows—
And through the crack'd pane
In he goes !

Within this cottage lived a child—

“ Toody ” her name—she was not very big
You might judge by the plants and shrubs that grew wild,
And o'er her head nodded or lifted a sprig.

Within the same cot there also resided
Her cousins—in love they were never divided—

Kitty and Crocus, Tiny and Twig.

But accurate words in good time to employ,
We say “ Tiny's ” a small dog, and not a small boy ;
And likewise explain that Grandmama Grey,

In spectacles, tucker, and flower'd chintz gown,
Took care of them all—often grave, seldom gay,
Yet she always half smiled when trying to frown.

Five o'clock in the morning !

“ What noise do I hear below ? ”

Cried Grandmama Grey. “ Although it's broad day,
There's no one up, I know.”

Then her head's complete adorning—

Her turret cover'd with snow,

Skull-cap and bandage, and double-frill'd night-cap,
With puff-crown and ribbon, bows, broad strings, and all,
Not stopping to think, and not caring what might hap,

She cast off, and threw at the opposite wall !

Crying loudly, “ Come, children ! jump up with me—
There's a rat in the dairy ! run quickly and see !

Down with me, each one, as blithe as a grig—
Toody and Kitty, and Crocus and Twig ! ”

At once down the stairs they ran scrambling and fumbling,
 In night-gowns and night-caps—all laughing and jumbling,
 With Tiny between their legs, barking and tumbling.

Down at last they are safely landed,
 Dusky the parlour—the shutters closed,
 Though one swings a-jar (which the Elfin's hand did),
 By green blinds the light is still opposed.
 So one by one, some rosy, some pale—
 As Indians cautiously pass through a mead,
 Holding each other by night-gown tail,
 Dame Grey and the children in silence proceed.

They reach the dairy—pause at the door ;
 They look at each other, then clap their hands,
 And in they bounce, as a wave on the shore
 Scatters its foam on the lonely sands.
 On all sides they spread, and stare round about,
 But soon they huddle together in fear,
 For behind a milk-jug, under the spout,
 They see a small figure that's wondrous queer !

It is golden, and greenish, and earthy brown,
 With a perking nose and a pointed chin,
 It has very bright eyes and a funny frown,
 With a russetin apple's network skin.
 They see him ! they see him !
 He knows it, too well !—
 They flee him ! they flee him !—
 In terror pell-mell !
 But Tiny springs up—and around a milk-pan
 Gives chase !—now they scour round as fast as they can !—

They whirl round so swift their two bodies seem one,
And like a dark band on a humming-top spun.
Dame Grey and the children ran back from their nook,—
The chase takes away their breath as they look !
Till at length with a noise like a bark, laugh, and scream,
The elf leapt in !—and swam across three pans of cream !

On the opposite side,
He had quickly espied
In the wall a small shelf,
And there landed himself.

“ We’ve lost him ! we’ve lost him ! ”

The children all cried !

But Grandmama Grey,
I am happy to say,
Being in her own dairy,
Was wise as a fairy,
And quick with a jelly-bag,
At the shelf’s end,
Into its belly-swag
Swept our small friend !

Now you must know that good Dame Grey
Had prudence at her fingers’ ends,
And to the parlour leads the way,
But no one knows what she intends.
Said she, “ Now, all go up and dress,
I’ll leave the bag upon the floor
Mouth downwards ; Tiny’s watchfulness
Shall guard the window, chimney, door.”
So Tiny came, and gravely stood
With both ears cock’d, and nose down bent,
While with as fix’d an attitude
The pointed bag stood, like a tent !

Soon they were dress'd, and down they came ;
 Breakfast was ready, the tea-kettle singing ;
 Toast, hot rolls, water-cresses, and ham,—
 And the parlour-bell still for more egg-cups ringing !
 But mute as a tree, with a truant notching it !
 Stood the jelly-bag tent, with Tiny watching it.

Up rose little Toody, and said, " Don't you think
 An Elf of the woods would like something to drink ?
 Coffee or tea, by way of exhorter
 Not to turn sulky—perhaps, milk-and-water ! "
 So under one edge of the jelly-bag tent
 Toody a saucer cautiously push'd,
 Then roll'd an egg^g under with merriment,
 Though silently all in the room sat hush'd,
 Ten minutes they listened—and then—shall I tell ?
 They all plainly heard the crack of a shell.

" Away with the tea-things ! " said Grandmama Grey ;
 In a twinkling the tea-things were taken away !
 And Martha ran back to see what they meant
 To do with the small rogue under the tent.
 Cried Dame Grey, " Bring the bird-cage—look sharp—and run quicker ! "
 It once was a blackbird's, and made of white wicker.

'The bird-cage was brought, and Grandmama Grey
 Took the jelly-bag up in her carefullest way,
 Clapt its mouth to the open door—shook it—at last
 In popp'd the Elf !—the cage-door was made fast !

Now, what do you think the small prisoner did ?
Shed many tears, and jibber'd, and groan'd ?
Crouch'd at the bottom d'ye fancy he did,
And there his sad capture and fate bemoan'd ?
Nothing like this : with one spring and ten kicks
He climbed to the perch, and himself he seated,
Like a young thing practising calisthenics,
With his hands on his pole, as if tired and heated

Toody ran close to the cage—so did Crocus ;
Twig cried, “ Here's mischief and hocus-pocus ! ”
And Kitty stared smiling ; her soft hazel eyes
With wonder seem'd double their natural size.
But the Elf met their looks without a wince,
While his cheek was yellow and tart as quince,
And his tongue at one side thrust a bulb on the skin
As the sight of his left eye slid out and in.
He sat on his perch, not the least in despair,
But swinging his little legs—and, I declare,
With a perking, half-winking, impertinent air.

Dame Grey with her spectacles now rose up,
“ Who are you, little sir ? and what may you be ?
Do you know you have broken my best China cup,
And spoilt all my cream ?—now, answer to me !
Tell us your story from first to last—
Where you were born—where educated—
Or here a captive for life you stay fast !—
Begin, sir, at once—all must be stated.”

Rough the crown of the Elf did bristle,
His brutus rose like a flowering thistle,
Till his anger through his nose did whistle ;

But his feelings he master'd, and tried to look
 Demure as a good child over his book.
 Some yellow of egg he rubb'd off his chin,
 And stuck like a buttercup on his shin,
 Then shrugg'd his shoulders up in a hunch,
 With a wheezing squeal, and a noise like Punch,
 Though not half so loud. And now with a sneeze,
 Like a parrot's, who suffers much from a cold,
 His account of his life among the trees
 He thus, in his way, began to unfold.

“ Nine white witches sat in a circle close,
 With their backs against a greenwood tree,
 As around the dead-nettle's summer stem
 Its woolly white blossoms you see.

Tack-a-rack, tangle tang, twangle tee !

Rills and hills,
 Lawns and horns,
 Hedges, sedges,
 Rushes, thrushes,

Twangle dee !

“ With hooded heads bent 'neath the broad green shade,
 And hands laid flat on each knee,
 They sat, as around the dead-nettle's stem
 Its beldame-shaped bloom you may see.

Tack-a-rack, tangle tang, twangle tee !

Woods and broods,
 Birds and herds,
 Eggs and curds,
 Osiers, rosiers,—

Tangle dee !

“ Now the witches so white they worked a charm
 For the life of my mother and me,
 And said in the woodlands we ever should dwell,
 From man’s knavish fingers free.

Tangle fangle, jangle hangle, wrangle see !

Guns and runs,
 Hops and pops,
 Nettings, frettings,
 Pools and fools—

Dangle dee !

“ Then from hedges and ditches, these old lady-witches,
 Took bird-weed and rag-weed, and spear-grass for me,
 And they wove me a bower, ’gainst the snow-storm or shower,

In a dry old hollow beech tree.

Tangle dangle, suns and funs, twangle tee !

Sticks and tricks,
 Lights and sprites,
 Moons, festoons,
 Glooms, mushrooms,

Tangle dee !

“ My nest-home inside, is dark, warm, and soft
 As the sable-hair’d breast of a panting bee ;
 And never in my life will I have an elfin wife,
 Till the prettiest comes to court me.

Twangle tangle, kisses blisses, tangle tee !

Courts and sports,
 Eyes and sighs,
 Peeps and leaps,

Hands and bands,
Huts and nuts—

Twangle twee !

Ivy wreaths,
Flowering heaths,
Jays and fays,
Owls and fogs,
Bats and frogs,
Holes and moles,
Music sound,
Under ground—

Twangle dee !

Twining, shining,
Dances, prances,
Berries, cherries,
Sorrels, laurels,
Reed-pipe, seed ripe,
Burrows, furrows,
Habits, rabbits,
Paths and crosses,
Plots and mosses,
Hares and stags,
Dwarfs and hags,
Shrubs all burry,
Creatures furry,
Wren and titmouse,
Wasp and woodlouse—

Twangle tee !

Races, graces,
Woodland faces,
Quaint grimaces,
Silver gushes,
Tall bull-rushes,

Rambles, scrambles,
 Bogs and brambles,
 Buzzes, fuzzes,
 Trailing briars,
 Red wood-fires,
 Squirrels, jackdaws,
 Things with black claws,
 Legs, horns, eyes,
 Blythe butterflies,
 Rush-knot shoe-tie,
 Peeps of blue sky,
 Distant steeple,
 Bee and beetle,
 Fairy people,
 Small legs fleetest,
 Echoes sweetest,
 Joy completest—

Twangle tee !

Ri-rigdum, dingle shade-laugh, tingle dee !”

Each look'd at the other—none knew what to say.
 “This won't do for me !” said Grandmama Grey ;
 “None of your hoaxing about white witches,
 Nettles and nonsense, and hedges and ditches ;
 I never before heard so clever a blade
 At an answer in genuine rhodomontade.
 Why do you prattle of woodland and stream ?
 What do I care how your small heels you kick up ?
 You know you came here to steal cake and drink cream ;
 And, besides, you have broken a china tea-cup !”

Hereat the Elf gazed up on high,
 Through the cage-top bars with rueful gloom,
 And then he gave a little sigh,
 Fixing his eyes on Martha's broom ;
 And meditated thoughtfully.
 But presently he cast a glance
 At Toody, who was winking nigh ;
 And now this Elf with nonchalance
 Look'd round and shouted pleasantly,
 " I vow, by the tom-tit's foolish ways,
 By the mole's front claws and his pin-hole eye,
 The woodpecker's thorn-tongue and groundless dismays,
 I have told my biography faithfully."
 Again at Toody a look he stole,
 Then coolly resumed his rigmarole.

" Loitering once in a wood," he said,
 Cocking his nose with a side-bent head,—
 " A wood full of rabbit-runs, spaces, and turns,
 And crowded regiments of feathery ferns,
 With all sorts of groundlings pleasant to see,
 Such as cup-moss and wild anemone,—
 I sat me down in a silent nook,
 By a rill that pearl'd from a grassy dell,
 And being in want of an excellent book ;
 I took up a pebble, which did as well.
 I pondered much on its class and merit ;
 Its natural secrets my heart did ferret,—
 I consider'd it in a learned spirit ;
 And while I was thus at study,
 I heard near at hand a fussing and spiriting,
 And a ruffling sound of dipping and flirting,
 'Neath a morning sky all ruddy.

On tiptoe I trip—o'er the bushes I look—
 And close at the red-gravell'd edge of the brook,
 There stood a robin bathing !
 He ruffled his feathers with a spattering sound,
 And made himself look like a fussy round,
 Or some fairy's curious plaything,
 With a spangly shower all flying and splashing,
 In a circle of water-drops showering and flashing !
 But presently—
 His eye—his eye !——”

“ His eye—his eye ! ” all the children cried—
 “ What of his eye ? ” The Elf, aside,
 Once more at Toody stole a glance,
 And Toody a quiet nod gave askance,
 As much as to say, “ I'll find you a chance.”
 And then the Elf gave a downward squint
 At the close cage-door, by way of a hint ;
 And, after scratching his apricot cheek,
 Of the robin again he proceeded to speak,—
 Jumping down to the floor of the cage,
 And acting a “ robin ” as if on the stage.

“ His eye ! his eye !
 The clear round mirror of jet and light,
 Caught a glimpse of me.
 He bobbed—took wing—and was out of sight.
 Well, good folks—well !
 I have more to tell !
 Then I stood up in the rabbit-path,
 Winding along the low banks of the rill,
 Where I saw the robin taking his bath,
 And I fancy I see him still !

True, as I say, he came back once more,
 With a fluster'd air, and in anger ; I vow
 He look'd like an alderman lecturing the poor,
 But meaning at last to—unlock the cage-door!
 Methinks, I see him now !
 Along and across, he hops and he flits
 Just so !—on my word—just so !
 Then suddenly—look, there he sits
 Upon a topmost twig !
 He took a flight—and then a hop—
 Again a flight,
 Then perch'd so light
 Upon the twig's tip-top !
 Look at his large bright eye,
 Very round and very black ;
 Now he bobs, and now he bows,
 Incessantly,
 With head, and tail, and back ;
 Bob, tail—and now bob, nose,
 Up and down he goes,
 Then off he flies in a crack !
 Upon a tall tree bough,
 There—there ! I see him now !
 Come, Bob, come !
 He sits quite dumb—
 What cares he for a crumb !
 Look at his breast so red !
 Again he bows his head,
 Bobs and bows—ruffles his wings—
 Now smoothes them down, and then he sings.
 How he sings and warbles sweet !
 No more bobbing,
 Hob-and-nobbing,

Quiet he sits, and fills the air
 With music delicate and rare ;
 And now he glances at his feet,
 Then like a gentleman complete
 He bobs again—gives one quick bow,
 As I do now !—
 Points down his tail, and up his nose—
 And off he goes !”

“ Run, Tiny—run !—Oh, Kitty, Twig, and Crocus !
 The little wretch is gone !—oh, villain, thus to joke us !
 Run, Toody—run !—you, you are the deceiver
 That loosen'd the cage-door !—I'm surely in a fever !
 Tiny, chase him—Tiny, catch him !

 Oh, Kitty, Twig, and Crocus—
 The robin redbreast story was only meant to hoax us !
 Away—away—away !
 Come all into the wood !
 Follow me, I say, I say, I say,
 Through brambles, weeds, and mud !”
 Oh, none shall run to-day
 So fast as Granny Grey,
 She hath the youngest blood !

Off they all ran trooping,
 And halloing and hooping,
 Beneath the low boughs stooping,
 Right through the wood,
 For Grandmamma Grey,
 Like an old duck, led the way,
 When a string of ducks trudge to a flood.
 Then came Kitty, side by side
 With Toody, who oft cried,

“Oh, Kitty dear, was ever such rare fun, fun, fun !”
 And Crocus close to Twig,
 Both scampered in a jig,
 For they knew the Elf his freedom-race had won, won, won.

As for him, the roguish Elf,
 He took good care of himself ;
 His mites of legs they twinkled as he fled, fled, fled !
 He was scarcely seen, indeed,
 He so glistened with his speed,
 And his hair streamed out like silver grass behind his head !

Now leaping here, now there,
 Tiny barking everywhere,
 Through undergrowth and thicket made his way with nose
 and claw,
 Till suddenly the party
 Met, full drive, with laughter hearty,
 Florry, Pay, Bow, Carry, Minnie, Ganner, Andy, Ock, and Daw !

Such a meeting—such quick greeting—
 Such explaining and repeating !
 All confusion, no one listening, but all for the chase ;
 So off the party pack
 To follow the Elf's track,
 And Granny Grey was foremost still in this mad race !

Now flew buttons, laces, bands,
 While with burning face and hands,
 Through and through, and up and down, they troop with shout and crow !
 Under, over, and across
 Shrubs, tangles, trunks, and moss,

Till their hearts are almost bursting, and they gasp, and puff, and blow !

They struggle and they strive,
Droop—lag—and then revive ;

And once again they speed along and wish for wings to fly ;

They grow deaf and dizzy-eyed—
With pains in head and side ;

But the Elf they cannot overtake—'tis all in vain to try !

So the party wild with heat,
And defeat—so complete—
To the cottage stagger and retreat—

Oh, oh, oh !

And, with fagg'd and streaming faces, they all sit down on the floor,

Their clothes green from bark of trees—
Torn and mudded to the knees—

With faces like red-lion signs, and feet all sore !

There they sit, a good long hour,
As for moving !—they have no such power ;

And Martha with hot water comes, each hand and face to wash.

And then, still lounging on the ground,
Cups of tea are handed round,

Their dinners they had lost, while they hunted brake and bush.

All hungry as young hawks,
How the toast and butter “ walks,”

With legs of fowl down hunter's throats, who seem'd just now half dead ;

But soon they laugh and shout,
 Eat and drink, and loll about,
 Till at last with laughing kisses they all troop off to bed.

But where to sleep none knew,
 For the cottage was but small,
 Yet by Dame Grey's arrangement
 There was room enough for all.
 Three slept upon the floor
 Of the largest room upstairs,
 And in the parlour, four,
 On sofa, rug, and chairs.
 The night was warm and pleasant—
 One fill'd the window seat ;
 And two slept in the summer-house—
 And, oh, it was so sweet !

Within a very little nook
 Toody always slept alone ;
 Its strip of window stole a look
 Over the lawn and hay-rick cone.
 Within the open lattice crept
 Some jasmine from the cottage wall,
 And to the breathing of her sleep,
 Softly swayed, with rise and fall.
 But something else comes creeping in,
 As softly from the starry night,—
 The Elf !—'tis he !—first peeping in,
 Now like a moth doth he alight !
 He trips up to the little bed,
 And near it hangs a full-blown rose,
 Then in the middle of the flower
 Places a light that gleams and glows.

It is a glow-worm from the lea,
And lighting up the rose's heart,
A fairy grot it seems to be—
Where dream-thoughts live and ne'er depart.
And now the Elf once more is gone
Into the woodlands wild,
Leaving his blessing thus to shine
Upon the dreaming child.

R. H. HORNE.

TWO FAIRIES IN A GARDEN.

1. "WHITHER goest, brother Elf?"
2. "The sun is weak—to warm myself
In a thick red tulip's core.
Whither thou?"
1. "Till day be o'er,
To the dim and deep snow-palace
Of the closest lily-chalice,
Where is veil'd the light of noon
To be like my Lady's moon.
Thou art of the day, I ween?"
2. "Yet I not disown our Queen,
Nor at Lycs' am backward found,
When the mighty Feast comes round;
When She spreads abroad her power
To proclaim a midnight hour
For the pale blue Fays like thee
And the ruddy Elves like me
To mingle in a charmèd ring
With a perfect welcoming;
Guarded from the moon-stroke cold,
And wisp that scares us on the wold,"
1. "Swift that Night is drawing near,
When your abrupt and jovial cheer,
Mixes in our misty dance,
Meeting else by rarest chance.

We love dark undew'd recesses
 Of the leafy wildernesses,
 Or to hide in some cold flow'r,
 Shelter'd from the sunlight hour,
 And more afflictive mortal eye."

2. "Gladly, gladly, do I spy
 Human children playing nigh,
 Feel, and so must you, the grace
 Of a loving human face.
 Else why come you in this place?
 O, my Sister, if we might
 Show ourselves to mortal sight
 Far more often! if they knew
 Half the friendly turns we do!
 Even now, a gentle thought
 Would pay my service dimly wrought,
 Round these winding garden-walks,
 Fruits and flow'rs and leaves and stalks.
 Paler favourites of the noon,
 Can ye give or take such boon?"
1. "Chantings, Brother, hear you might,
 Softly sung through still of night;
 Calling from the weird North
 Dreams like distant echoes forth,
 Till through curtain'd shades they creep,
 To inlay the gloomy floor of sleep
 For babes, and souls that babe-like are:
 So we bless them from afar
 Like a faint but favouring star.
 —But tell me how in fields or bowers
 Thou hast spent these morning hours?"

2. "Through the tall hedge I have been,
 Shadowy wall of crusted green,
 Within whose heart the birds are seen.
 Speeding swiftly thence away
 To the crowning chestnut-spray,
 I watch'd a Tyrant steal along
 Would slay the sweet Thrush in her song ;
 Warned, she soon broke off from singing,
 There we left the branchlet swinging.
 Whispering Robin, down the walk,
 News of poising, pouncing Hawk,
 The Sycamore I next must strew
 On every leaf with honey-dew.
 And hither now from clouds I run,
 For all my morning work is done."

1. "Alas, I wither in the sun,
 Witless drawn to leave my nest
 Ere the day be laid to rest !
 But to-night we lightly troop
 By the young Moon's silver hoop ;
 Weaving wide our later ranks
 As on evening river-banks
 Shifting crowds of midges glance
 Through mazes of their airy dance :
 O might you come, O might you see
 All our shadow'd revelry !
 Yet the next night shall be rarer,
 Next and next and next, still fairer ;
 We are waxing every night,
 Till our joy be full and bright ;

Then as slowly do we wane
With gentle loss that makes no pain.
For thus are we with life endued :
Ye, I trow, have rougher food."

2. " Yes : with fragrant soul we're fed
Of every flower whose cheek is red,
Shunning yellow, blue, and white :
And southward go, at the nightingale's flight
Many the Faery Nations be.
O ! how I long, I long to see
The moonèd midnight of our Feast,
Flushing amber through the east,
When every cap in Elfindom
Into that great ring shall come,
Owf and Elf and Fairy blended,
Till th' imperial time be ended !
Even those fantastic Sprites
Lay aside their dear delights
Of freakish mischief and annoyance
In the universal joyance,
One of whom I saw of late
As I peep'd through window-grate,
(Under roof I may not enter)
Haunt the housewife to torment her,
Tangle up her skeins of silk,
Throw a mouse into her milk,
Hide her thimble, scorch her roast,
Quickly drive her mad almost ;
And I too vex'd, because I would Have brought her succour if I could.

—But where shall this be holden, say?
Far away?"

1. "O, far away,
Over river must we fly,
Over the sea, and the mountain high,
Over city, seen afar
Like a low and misty star,—
Soon beneath us glittering
Like million spark-worms. But our wing,
For the flight will ne'er suffice.
Some are training Flittermice,
I a Silver Moth."

2. "Be ware
How I'll thrid the vaulted air!
A Dragon-fly with glassy wings,
Born beside the meadow-springs,
That can arrow-swiftly glide
Thorough the glowing eventide,
Nor at twilight-fall grow slack,
Shall bear me on his long blue back.
Dew-stars, meteors of the night,
May not strike him with affright,
He can needle through the wood,
That's like a green earth-chained cloud,
Mountain-summits deftly rake,
Draw swift line o'er plain and lake.
If at Lysco I be last,
Other elves must journey fast.
Lu a vo!"

1. "But, Elf, I rede,
Of all your Herbs take special heed.
Our Mistress tholes no garden flowers,
Though we have freedom of these bowers.

Tell me what you mean to treasure,
Each in 's atom ?”

2. “Gold-of-Pleasure,
Medic, Plumeseed, Fountain-arrow,
Vervain, Hungry-grass, and Yarrow,
Quatrefoil and Melilot.”

1. “These are well. And I have got Moonwort and the Filmy Fern,
Gather'd nicely on the turn,
Wo to Fairy that shall bring
Bugloss for an offering,
Toad-flax, Barley of the Wall,
Enchanter's Nightshade, worst of all.
—Oh, brother, hush ! I faint with fear !
A mortal footstep threatens near.”

2. “None can see us, none can hear.
Yet, to make thee less afraid,
Hush we both as thou hast pray'd.
I will seek the verse to spell
Written round my dark flow'r's bell,
'To sing at sunset. So, Farewell !”

WILLIAM ALLINGHAM.

ELFIN SONG.

I.

FAR in the western ocean's breast
 The summer fairies have found a nest ;
 The heavens ever unclouded smile
 Over the breadth of their beautiful isle ;
 Through it a hundred streamlets flow,
 In spangled paths, to the sea below,
 And woo the vales that beside them lie
 With a low and tremulous minstrelsy.
 The elfin brood have homes they love
 In the earth below and skies above ;
 But the haunt which of all they love the best
 Is the palm-crowned isle, in the ocean's breast,
 That mortals call Canary ;
 And many an Ariel, blithesome, airy,
 And each laughing fay and lithesome fairy,
 Know well the mystical way in the West
 To the sweet isle of Canary.

II.

With an ever-sounding choral chant,
 And a clear, cerulean, wild desire
 To clasp that fairy island nigher,
 The sinuous waves of ocean pant ;
 For here all natural things are free
 To mingle in passionate harmony.

The light from their mirror turns away
 With a golden splendour, in the day,
 But nightly, when coroneted Even
 Marshals the shining queen of heaven,
 There gleams a silvery scenery,
 From the rim of the great prismatic sea
 Around the isle of Canary,
 To the central crags of Pisgatiri,
 Where the crested eagle builds his eyry,
 Scanning the shores of sweet Canary.

III.

Lustrously sailing here and there,
 Afloat in the beatific air,
 Birds, of purple and blue and gold,
 Pour out their music manifold ;
 All day long in the leas they sing,
 While the sun-kissed flowers are blossoming ;
 At eve, when the dew-drop feeds the rose,
 And the fragrant water-lilies close,
 The marvellous-throated nightingale
 With a dying music floods each vale,
 Till the seaward breezes, listening, stay
 To catch the harmony of his lay
 And cool the air of Canary ;
 And thus the melodies ever vary,
 In the vales of the ocean aviary,
 In the blissful valleys of sweet Canary.

IV.

The Elle-King's palace was builded there
 By elves of water and earth and air ;

Lovingly worked each loyal sprite,
 And it grew to life in a summer night.
 Over the sheen of its limpid moat,
 Wafted along, in a magic boat,
 By fairy wings that fan the sails,
 And eddying through enchanted vales,
 Through walls of amber and crystal gates,
 We come where a fairy warder waits ;
 And so, by many a winding way
 Where sweet bells jingle and fountains play,
 To the inmost, royalest room of all,—
 The elfin monarch's reception-hall,
 The pearl and pride of Canary !
 To guard its fastness the elves are wary,
 And no weird thing, of pleasure chary,
 Can enter with evil in sweet Canary !

v.

All that saddens, and care and pain,
 Are banished far from that fair domain ;
 There forever, by day and night,
 Is naught but pleasance and love's delight ;
 Daily, the Genii of the flowers
 Shade with beauty a hundred bowers ;
 Nightly, the Gnomes of precious stones
 Emblazon and light a hundred thrones ;
 And the Elves of the field, so swift and mute,
 Bring wine and honey and luscious fruit ;
 And the Sylphs of the air, at noontide, cool
 The depths of each bower and vestibule ;
 And all are gay,—from the tricksome Fay
 Who flutters in woodlands far away,

To the best-beloved attendant Elf,
And the royal heart of the king himself,
 Who rules in bright Canary ;
And the labouring Fairies are blithe and merry,
Who press the juice from the swollen berry
 That reddens the vines of sweet Canary.

VI.

What if there be a fated day
When the Faëry Isle shall pass away,
And its beautiful groves and fountains seem
The myths of a long, delicious dream !
A century's joys shall first repay
Our hearts, for the evil of that day ;
And the Elfin-King has sworn to wed
A daughter of Earth, whose child shall be,
By cross and water hallowéd,
From the fairies' doom forever free.
What if there be a fated day !
It is far away ! it is far away !
Maiden, fair Maiden, I, who sing
Of this summer isle am the island king.
I come from its joys to make thee mine :
Half of my kingdom shall be thine ;
Our horses of air and ocean wait—
Then hasten, and share the Elle-King's state
 In the sweet isle of Canary ;
And many an Ariel, blithesome, airy,
And each laughing fay and lithesome fairy,
Shall rovingly hover around and over thee,
And the love of a king shall evermore cover thee,
 Nightly and daily in sweet Canary.

EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN.

THE FERLIE.

A FERLIE cam ben to me yestreen,
 A lady jimp an' sma',
 Wi' a milk-white snood an' a kirtle green,
 Yellow an' roun where her bonny e'en,
 And she said, " Will ye come awa' ?

" Will ye gang wi' me to the Elflin Knowe,
 To milk our queene's coo ? "

" Na, na," quo' I, " I maun shear my sheep,
 I've my barn to bigg, an' my corn to reap,
 Sae I canna come the noo."

The ferlie skirled as she turned to gae,
 For an angry elf was she,
 " O a wilfu' man maun hae his way,
 An I mak' sma' doot but ye'll rue the day
 That ye wouldna gang wi' me."

O, ance again will ye speir at me
 An' I'll aiblins come awa' ?

" O I'll come again to your yetts," quo' she,
 When broom blooms bright on yon rowan-tree
 An' the laverock sings i' th' snaw ! "

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE FOUNTAIN OF THE FAIRIES.

THERE is a fountain in the forest call'd
The Fountain of the Fairies : when a child
With a delightful wonder I have heard
Tales of the elfin tribe who on its banks
Hold midnight revelry. An ancient oak,
The goodliest of the forest, grows beside ;
Alone it stands, upon a green grass plat,
By the woods bounded like some little isle.
It ever hath been deem'd their favourite tree,
They love to lie and rock upon its leaves,
And bask in moonshine. Here the woodman leads
His boy, and showing him the green-sward mark'd
With darker circlets, says the midnight dance
Hath traced the rings, and bids him spare the tree.
Fancy had cast a spell upon the place
Which made it holy ; and the villagers
Would say that never evil thing approach'd
Unpunish'd there. The strange and fearful pleasure
Which fill'd me by that solitary spring,
Ceased not in riper years ; and now it wakes
Deeper delight, and more mysterious awe.

ROBERT SOUTHEY.

SONGS OF THE PIXIES.

[The Pixies, in the superstitions of Devonshire, are a race of beings invisibly small, and harmless or friendly to man. At a small distance from a village in that county, half-way up a wood-covered hill, is an excavation, called the Pixies' parlour. The roots of old trees form its ceiling; and on its sides are innumerable ciphers, among which the author discovered his own cipher and those of his brothers, cut by the hand of their childhood. At the foot of the hill flows the river Otter. To this place the author conducted a party of young ladies, during the summer months of the year 1793; one of whom, of stature elegantly small, and of complexion colourless yet clear, was proclaimed the Fairy Queen: on which occasion, and at which time, the following irregular ode was written.]

I.

WHOM the untaught shepherds call
 PIXIES in their madrigal,
 Fancy's children, here we dwell:
 Welcome, ladies! to our cell.
 Here the wren of softest note
 Builds its nest and warbles well;
 Here the blackbird strains his throat;
 Welcome, ladies! to our cell.

II.

When fades the moon all shadowy-pale,
 And scuds the cloud before the gale,
 Ere morn with living gems bedight
 Streaks the East with purple light,

We sip the furze-flowers fragrant dews,
 Clad in robes of rainbow hues
 Richer than the deepened bloom
 That glows on summer's scented plume :
 Or sport amid the rosy gleam,
 Soothed by the distant-tinkling team,
 While lusty labour, scouting sorrow,
 Bids the dame a glad good-morrow,
 Who jogs th' accustomed road along,
 And paces cheery to her cheering song.

III.

But not on filmy pinion
 We scorch amid the blaze of day
 When noon-tide's fiery-tressed minion
 Flashes the fervid ray.
 Aye from the sultry heat
 We to the cave retreat,
 O'er-canopied by huge roots intertwined
 With wildest texture, blackened o'er with age ;
 Round them their mantle green the ivies bind,
 Beneath whose foliage pale,
 Fanned by the unfrequent gale,
 We shield us from the tyrant's mid-day rage.

IV.

Thither while the murmuring throng
 Of wild-bees hum their drowsy song,
 By indolence and fancy brought,
 A youthful bard, "unknown to fame,"
 Woos the queen of solemn thought,
 And heaves the gentle mis'ry of a sigh,
 Gazing with tearful eye,

As round our sandy grot appear
 Many a rudely sculptured name
 To pensive mem'ry dear !
 Weaving gay dreams of sunny-tinctured hue
 We glance before his view ;
 O'er his hushed soul our soothing witch'ries shed,
 And twine our faery garlands round his head.

v.

When evening's dusky car
 Crowned with her dewy star
 Steals o'er the fading sky in shadowy flight ;
 On leaves of aspen trees
 We tremble to the breeze,
 Veiled from the grosser ken of mortal sight.
 Or, haply at the visionary hour,
 Along our wild sequestered walk,
 We listen to th' enamoured rustic's talk ;
 Heave with the heavings of the maiden's breast,
 Where young-eyed loves have built their turtle nest ;
 Or guide of soul-subduing power
 Th' electric flash, that from the melting eye
 Darts the fond question and the soft reply.

vi.

Or thro' the mystic ringlets of the vale
 We flash our faery feet in gamesome prank ;
 Or, silent-sandalled, pay our defter court
 Circling the spirit of the western gale,
 Where, wearied with his flower-caressing sport,
 Supine he slumbers on a violet bank ;
 Then with quaint music hymn the parting gleam,
 By lonely Otter's sleep-persuading stream ;

Or where his wave with loud unquiet song
 Dashed o'er the rocky channel froths along ;
 Or where his silver waters smoothed to rest,
 The tall tree's shadow sleeps upon his breast.

VII.

Hence ! thou lingerer, light !
 Eve saddens into night.
 Mother of wildly-working dreams ! we view
 The sombre hours, that round thee stand
 With down-cast eyes (a duteous band !),
 Their dark robes dripping with the heavy dew.
 Sorceress of the ebon throne !
 Thy power the Pixies own,
 When round thy raven brow
 Heaven's lucent roses glow,
 And clouds, in wat'ry colours drest,
 Float in light drapery o'er thy sable vest ;
 What time the pale moon sheds a softer day,
 Mellowing the woods beneath its pensive beam :
 For 'mid the quiv'ring light 'tis ours to play,
 Aye dancing to the cadence of the stream.

VIII.

Welcome, ladies ! to the cell,
 Where the blameless Pixies dwell,
 But thou, sweet nymph ! proclaimed our faery queen,
 With what obeisance meet
 Thy presence shall we greet ?
 For lo ! attendant on thy steps are seen
 Graceful ease in artless stole,
 And white-robed purity of soul,
 With honour's softer mien :

Mirth of the loosely-flowing hair
And meek-eyed pity eloquently fair,
Whose tearful cheeks are lovely to the view,
As snow-drop wet with dew.

IX.

Unboastful Maid ! tho' now the lily pale
Transparent grace thy beauties meek ;
Yet ere again along the impurpling vale,
The purpling vale and elfin-haunted grove,
Young Zephyr his fresh flowers profusely throws,
We'll tinge with livelier hues thy cheek !
And haply from the nectar-breathing rose
Extract a blush of love !

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE.

FAIRY REVELS.

THE fairies are dancing by brake and bower,
For this in their land is the merriest hour.

Their steps are soft, and their robes are light,
And they trip it at ease in the clear moonlight.

Their queen is in youth and in beauty there,
And the daughters of earth are not half so fair.

Her glance is quick, and her eyes are bright,
And they glitter with wild and unearthly light.

Her brow is all calm, and her looks are kind,
But the look that she gives leaves but pain behind.

Her voice is soft and her smiles are sweet,
But woe to thee who such smiles shall meet.

She will meet thee at dusk like a lady fair,
But go not, for danger awaits thee there.

She will take thee to ramble by grove and by glen,
And the friends of thy youth shall not know thee again.

FAIRY FAVOURS.

WOULD'ST thou wear the gift of immortal bloom ?
 Would st thou smile in scorn at the shadowy tomb ?
 Drink of this cup ! it is richly fraught
 With balm from the gardens of genii brought ;
 Drink, and the spoiler shall pass thee by,
 When the young all scattered like rose-leaves lie.

And would not the youth of my soul be gone,
 If the loved had left me, one by one ?
 Take back the cup that may never bless,
 The gift that would make me brotherless ;
 How should I live with no kindred eye
 To reflect mine immortality ?

Would'st thou have empire, by sign or spell,
 Over the mighty in air that dwell ?
 Would'st thou call the spirits of shore and steep
 To fetch thee jewels from ocean's deep ?
 Wave but this rod, and a viewless band,
 Slaves to thy will, shall around thee stand.

And would not fear, at my coming then,
 Hush every voice in the homes of men ?
 Would not bright eyes in my presence quail ?
 Young cheeks with a nameless thrill turn pale ?
 No gift be mine that aside would turn
 The human love for whose founts I yearn !

Would'st thou then read through the hearts of those Upon whose faith thou hast sought repose?
Wear this rich gem! it is charm'd to show
When a change comes over affection's glow,
Look on its flushing or fading hue,
And learn if the trusted be false or true!

Keep, keep the gem, that I still may trust,
Though my heart's wealth be but pour'd on dust!
Let not a doubt in my soul have place,
To dim the light of a loved one's face;
Leave to the earth its warm sunny smile—
That glory would pass could I look on guile!

Say, then, what boon of my power shall be,
Favour'd of spirits! pour'd forth on thee?
Thou scornest the treasures of wave and mine,
Thou wilt not drink of the cup divine,
Thou art fain with a mortal's lot to rest—
Answer me! how may I grace it best?

Oh! give me no sway o'er the powers unseen,
But a human heart where my own may lean!
A friend, one tender and faithful friend,
Whose thoughts' free current with mine may blend,
And leaving not either on earth alone,
Bid the bright calm close of our lives be one!

WATER-LILIES.

A FAIRY SONG.

COME away, elves ! while the dew is sweet,
Come to the dingles where fairies meet ;
Know that the lilies have spread their bells
O'er all the pools in our forest dells ;
Stilly and lightly their vases rest
On the quivering sleep of the water's breast,
Catching the sunshine through leaves that throw
To their scented bosoms an emerald glow ;
And a star from the depth of each pearly cup,
A golden star unto heaven looks up,
As if seeking its kindred where bright they lie,
Set in the blue of the summer sky.
—Come away ! under arching boughs we'll float,
Making those urns each a fairy boat ;
We'll row them with reeds o'er the fountains free,
And a tall flag-leaf shall our streamer be,
And we'll send out wild music so sweet and low,
It shall seem from the bright flower's heart to flow,
As if 'twere a breeze with a flute's low sigh,
Or water drops train'd into melody.
—Come away ! for the midsummer sun grows strong,
And the life of the lily may not be long.

FELICIA HEMANS.

THE THREE KNIGHTS OF CAMELOTT.

A FAIRY TALE.

FILL high the massy bowl of wine,
And drink unto Sir Palmerine,
 To Arthur, Ban, and Bors !
And strong Saint George, long since in tomb,
With champions bold of Christendom,—
 Their wassails and their wars !

The hunters and the winding horn,
Sir Tristram rising with the morn.
 And then King Pellinore ;
The mighty Launcelot with spear
Unfailing in the fierce career,
 Or 'gainst the tusked boar.

Let tabor blithe and bugle sound
Unto King Arthur's table round,—
 All valiant hearts I wot ;—
Drink in thy spirit's lusty glee,
And pledged with fullest jollity
 The knights of Camelott.

Three noble hearts of this strong band
Have travell'd to a distant land,

And on their meadows green,
 Where ancient lords and ladies gay
 Witness the rush of fierce tourney,
 They are no longer seen.

Oh ! there was many a lady's eye
 Once glancing on them brilliantly,
 Now full of glimmering tears ;
 And many a knight whose plates of mail
 Had echoed with their strong assail
 Now rid him of his fears.

The younger, hight Sir Amorel—
 A lover gay, and, sooth to tell,
 He loved not oft in vain ;
 For he both generous was and brave,
 Full rich in dress, and never grave,
 But sweetly told his pain.

His doublet was of violet hue,
 And glistened with the morning dew ;
 His helm of emerald bright ;
 And round his waist a diamond zone,
 Like a fair constellation shone,
 With scintillating light.¹

A wreath of lilies round his neck
 Hung loosely tangling o'er his back,
 All robed in carmine clear,
 Whose broidered roses glanced like fire ;
 While in his hand with sportive ire
 He shook a silver spear !

¹ The fairy fashion of these accoutrements is after the manner of Chaucer's fragment of Sir Thopas.

A gorgeous pheasant-plume he wore,
An ivory shield he lightly bore,
 With figures carved thereon ;
Venus, Adonis,—Helen fair,
Paris—and Dian, too, was there,
 With pale Endymion.

His saddle-pommel bore a stone
That like a freakful glow-worm shone ;
 His palfry proud did go,
With coat all pied and colour sheen,
Like the sweet blossom of the bean
 In drops of jet and snow.

The second was Sir Leontine ;
Ne'er was a bolder heart than thine
 On direful battle-plain ;
The shade of victory in the air
Sang to the passage of thy spear,
 Like whispers o'er the slain.

A glittering coat of mail he wore
Of steel, with diamonds sprinkled o'er ;
 A helm of burnished gold ;
With nodding plume of purest white
That down his plated shoulder bright
 In snowy volume roll'd.

A sea-waved velvet housing flow'd
Adown his courser's flanks, yet showed
 The limbs of graceful swell,
Like to a chestnut's clear, bright brown,
Bursts from its green and prickly crown,
 And fallen in the dell,

His shield was gold of richest ore
 And, blood-red, in its centre bore
 The head of chanticleer,
 That seemed to fill with flashing eye
 And glowing crest, all turret high,
 The very woods with fear.

His bridle was of pearl'd japan,
 His saddle white cornelian,
 With trappings silver bell'd ;
 His spurs were golden, rough and red
 Like star-fish, and above his head
 A shining sword he held.

The third he hight Sir Galohault,
 A stern old knight as e'er did vault
 Upon a mailed steed ;
 With arm that like death's sceptre fell,
 And calm, unconquerable will
 In perilous time of need.

A suit he wore of iron mail,
 Well overlaid with bar and nail ;
 A massy iron helm,
 Whose solemn-nodding coally plume
 Roll'd heavy, as a cloud of gloom
 That would the fields o'erwhelm.

A tall black steed, all lightning-eyed,
 Like that which Merlin once did ride
 I' the Battle of the Kings,
 With grave demeanour he bestrode,
 And silently and slow it glode
 As though on airy wings.

Full long these Knights have travell'd far
In search for enterprise of war
 Upon a distant shore,
And many a valiant deed and just
Hath each achieved, nor shall the rust
 Of ages soil them o'er.

The birds rose up while yet 'twas night,
And sang to hurry on the light—
 Full soon the morning breaks ;
To greet the sun, fresh leaves and flowers
Open their hearts in fields and bowers,
 And man their joy partakes.

Into a forest they rode along,
That echoed with the wood-lark's song,
 And blackbird loud in bush,
Whose yellow bill prolonged the strain,
And lectured every grove again,
 Till evening's gentle hush.

The goldfinch with his fiery face,
The little Mars of feather'd race,
 Trilled forth a challenge brief ;
While swell'd his cheeks in fullest bloom
Of burning gold and velvet gloom,
 Like to the wall-flower's leaf.

But soon the Knights wild joyance hear
Of rougher music piping near
 Among the forest trees,—
Of reed and timbrel, mad with glee,
And frequent shouts of jollity
 Loud dancing on the breeze.

And now beneath the oak they spied
 A hairy Satyr, drunken-eyed,
 With Pan-pipes loose in hold,
 And laughing face as red as wine,
 And paunch as heavy as a vine,
 While on the grass he roll'd.

“Oh, laugh ye there, and pipe ye there,
 With breath as hot as summer air !”
 Quoth gay Sir Amorel ;
 “Methinks thou hast a jovial time
 From lark-rise unto evening chime,
 And bear'st life's journey well.”

“Ho ! Knight,” the vinous Satyr said,
 “A life of joy I've ever led ;
 I swear it by my horns !
 Pastime we find in sun or shade,
 Rifle a vineyard, steal a maid,
 And punish her proud scorns.

“Wild dancing, quoting, song, and sleep,
 Fill up the rest ; but take ye keep
 Where all our pain begins,
 For we are ever doom'd to wear”
 (He slily grinned) “these coats of hair
 In penance for our sins !”

“And say ye so,” quoth Leontine,
 “Thou steal'st the virgin, stripp'st the vine ;
 And laughing talk'st of pain ?”
 The Satyr answered not a word,
 But like a well-fed, jolly bird
 To piping fell again.

“Where keep ye all the ladies fair?”
Quoth Amorell, and shook his spear;
 But still the Satyr plied
His merry pipes with louder peal,
Till sharp and sudden he doth feel
 The javelin pierce his side.

Fierce was his goat's-face to behold,
And red as burns the marigold
 Upon its verdant bed!
Then up he sprang and hoof'd the mound,
Dash'd wild his woodpipes on the ground,
 And yelling, madly fled!

“And follow me, and follow me!”
Cried Leontine, with ardent glee,—
 The Knights then spurr'd their steeds;
“To free bright maids from thieves like these,
We'll chase the Satyr through the trees,
 And track him as he bleeds.”

Then close they follow'd through the wood,
And leap'd the dyke and swam the flood,
 Till loud again they hear
The broken song, the laughing shout,
As of some Bacchanalian rout
 In echoes far and near.

The Satyr scrambled on before,
Headlong through trunks and thickets tore,
 Oft looking back with ire!
Till soon they reach'd a lawny plain
Where damsels, bound with osier chain,
 Were ranged in drooping quire.

And crowds of Satyrs, old and young,
 Were dancing in a drunken throng ;
 While some, with glee obscene,
 On tufted hoofs were bounding high,
 Spinning their timbrels soundingly,
 Then rolling on the green.

And loud the Pandean pipes were blown,
 Or shrill, or full-deep mellow tone,
 From cheeks of swollen red ;
 And some close to their hairy breast,
 Within their rugged arms oft prest
 The pale and loathing maid.

Some quoyed ; others form'd a ring
 To quaff the goblet, or to sing ;
 Some fought, and tugged long beards ;
 Some gazing sat on grassy knoll,
 While oft a massy oaken bowl
 Came whizzing at their heads !

Within a fresh green copse afar,
 Sir Amorell a lady saw,
 Right lovely to behold ;
 Who beckon'd with sweet looks of sadness,
 Then wrung her hands in eager madness !
 Ah, could his heart be cold ?

Intent upon the laughing rout,
 Sir Galohault descried her not,
 Nor bold Sir Leontine,
 But Amorell, with fond surprise,
 Gazed on the beauty of her eyes,
 Like far-off stars divine.

He prick'd his courser's flanks amain,
And swiftly cross'd the charmed plain,
 As buoyant as the wind ;
And soon he breathed a balmy air,
And sate him by the lady fair,
 Nor thought of friends behind.

His steed he left to roam at will,
And on his knees he gently fell,
 So fair she was to see ;
When as he strove her hand to greet,
She bent, and gave him kisses sweet—
 But not a word spake she.

And as he sat beside her there,
With fingers tangled in her hair,
 A second lady came,
More bright and lovely to his view,
All clad in robes of clouded blue,
 Zoned with a ruby's flame.

In silence on her face he gazed,
With visage moveless and amazed :
 But soon his heart rose high,
And love, divided, battled strong ;
On each alternately and long
 He fix'd his wavering eye.

Thus sitting, upward softly flows,
Like odour from the morning rose,
 A music breathing faint ;
And from embowering vines there tripp'd
A maiden, fresh and coral-lipp'd,
 A laughing woodland saint.

Her ivory bosom was o'erhung
 With violets and vine tendrils long ;
 White robes around her fell ;
 But, ah ! so loose and wildly flying,
 The Zephyrs all for love were dying—
 And so was Amorell !

He saw—and he could think no more—
 He loved—he sigh'd ;—when soon all four
 In gleesome gambols join'd :
 Till Amorell entranced sank down
 In dead sleep !—and like music flown
 They vanish'd in the wind !

Now leave we Amorell asleep,
 By phantoms fair enchanted deep,
 And to the Knights return ;
 Who, pausing, view'd the crowded plain,
 The laughers, and the captive chain,
 Who ever weep and mourn.

The limping Satyr gain'd the throng,
 And show'd his wound, and told his wrong :
 They gather'd earnest round ;
 And ceased their dancing and their mirth,
 And dropp'd their reeds and bowls to earth,
 And spurn'd the mossy ground.

Quoth Leontine, with ardent mien,
 “ Yon hairy rabble on the green
 'Twere best at once to rout ;
 To free the captives from their woe—
 But see !—they hasten tow'rds us now,
 With loud and furious shout !”

Wildly the Satyrs on the sward
Came bounding like a horned herd,
 With staves and knotty bones,
Wood-knives, and clubs, and leathern slings,
Hark ! through the air already sings
 A volleying shower of stones !

It rattled on their polish'd mail,
And fell about in heavy hail !
 Onward they spurr'd apace :
Sir Leontine right eager flew,—
Soon met the foremost of the crew,
 And smote him in the face.

A second fell,—and soon a third,
Sharp cloven 'twixt the neck and beard,
 Bounced down without his head,
Which roll'd along, a shaggy ball,
And o'er its trunk a crowd did fall,
 So heedlessly they sped.

Upon his shield their clubs of thorn
Beat loudly, while with yells of scorn
 Each stony volley flies,
And oft they task their wildest force
To drag him downward from his horse
 With savage mouth and eyes !

Stern Galohault with truncheon strong
Now rode amidst the warring throng,
 And smote them headlong down ;
Still urging on to where the chain
Of captive damsels wept in pain,
 As though their eyes would drown ;

Till as more near he won his way,
 He found athwart his passage lay
 A moat, both deep and wide ;
 Each on the opposing margin stands
 With outstretch'd and imploring hands !
 In vain, he must abide.

When looking round he spied a way
 'That moat to pass without delay,
 Across a bridge of wood ;
 And call'd Sir Leontine aloud,
 Who battled 'gainst the furious crowd,
 And scarcely them withstood.

He heard, but such his headstrong ire,
 He scorn'd unconquering to retire,
 Though stronger grew the assail,
 While oft before him there upsprang
 Spears through the earth ! and loudly rang
 Against his temper'd mail :

Till weary grown, he turn'd to find
 Sir Galohault—when swift as wind
 Before him there arose
 An armed Knight in shadowy mail,
 On flame-eyed charger, tall and pale,
 The deadliest of his foes !

Yet paused he not, but spurr'd his steed,
 And the Knight's javelin as a reed
 He strongly put aside !
 And his good sword both horse and man
 Clove straightway through,—as did King Ban,—
 They fell asunder wide !

Soon as the Shadow touch'd the ground
It rose united, with a bound,
 And ran a fresh career ;
Again he cleft it through and through
And swift again it upward grew,
 And threaten'd with its spear !

Thus wearied, soon around his head
The clubs redoubling fell like lead,—
 The Satyrs shout and throng,
Till 'rest of strength his glaive to wield,
With dented helm and bloody shield,
 They drag him down headlong !

And o'er the fallen Knight full loud
They piped and raved, this wild-wood crowd,
 And crumpled horns they blew ;
With savage glee each goat's-eye glares,
And, holding beards, they danced in pairs,
 And flourish'd boughs of yew !

Torn and uprooted was the grass,
Where cloven hoofs had struggled fierce
 In that unusual fray,
And o'er the plain they panting roll,
Where broken quoit and quarter'd bowl,
 And doubled goblet lay.

Sir Galohault has ridden alone,
Unheeding either shout or groan,
 Over the bridge to go ;
And finds it guarded by a herd
Of savage dogs, as white as curd,
 Or polar bears of snow.

Now flash'd the dark eye of his steed,
 And bearing on, with trampling speed
 He rush'd across the bridge !
 Some were crush'd down, and some his glaive
 Sent headless to the hissing wave,
 So deadly was its edge.

Some, wounded, to the side were clinging,
 And struggling upwards, grasping, swinging,—
 The rest swam gaunt and grim,
 Bedabbled o'er in foam and blood,
 Or smothering 'neath the oozy mud,
 Deep bedded round the brim.

He darted on !—when through the ground
 Ten horsemen sprang, with sudden bound,
 In armour midnight black !
 'Midst them he rode with couchant spear,
 And through them pass'd : in taunting fear,
 They vainly call'd him back.

Before his path bright virgins now
 Come softly waving arms of snow ;
 And pray'd the Knight to stay :
 And one, most lovely, him besought
 There to alight—but Galohault
 Still gallop'd on his way.

Though pass'd the bridge, he could not see
 Where now the captive dames might be ;
 But soon his glances meet,
 Slow moving o'er the enchanted meads,
 A troop of dwarfs with goblin heads,
 And fin-like hands and feet.

And in the distance stood on high
A dusky castle gloomily,
 Like to a rocky cloud ;
But ere the Knight could gallop near,
A croaking voice fell on his ear
 From that right ugly crowd.

“ Return, oh, Knight ! or thou shalt rue
The hope thy madness doth pursue ;
 ’Tis death to all who see ;
The owner of yon castle tall,
Would straight devour thee, horse and all—
 He sleeps beneath yon tree ! ”

Sir Galohault he listen’d no more,—
Swift o’er the plain his charger tore,
 Until the tree he gain’d ;
There lay a cumbrous Giant dreaming,
His hot breath like an oven steaming ;
 His beard with wine was stain’d !

His hair was like a lion’s mane,
And shaggily bestrew’d the plain ;
 His limbs of hideous size :
Sir Galohault loud shouted forth,
“ Giant, awake !—awake thy wrath ! ”
 He oped his moony eyes !

“ Harrow thy heart ! ” the Giant said ;
“ Strong thunder leap upon thy head !
 Why hast thou broke my sleep ?
The browsing herds in pasture far,
Troop from the tiger’s echoed roar,—
 Why hast thou broke my sleep ?

The Knight, confronting his mad stare,
 Spurr'd on, his sword upraised in air,
 And one strong blow he sped,
 Which falling on the Giant's mane,
 Turn'd off, or else had cleft in twain
 His tawny tressed head.

The giant rose!—with weighty force
 Breasting the fury of the horse,
 And dealt a blow so true
 From swinging mace, that the strong shock
 Falling upon them like a rock,
 Both horse and man o'erthrew!

Their falling armour loudly rang
 With iron jar and echoing clang,
 Upon the indented earth:
 Arouse, Sir Knight! nor on the sward
 Lie moveless, by thy fallen sword,
 Before a Giant's wrath!

Now as the monster stood to deal
 A second stroke,—with flashing steel
 Sir Galohault arose!
 And drove straight thro' the brawny side
 His smoking glaive, in trenches wide,
 And follow'd strong his blows.

The mighty Giant gave a roar!
 And, like the ocean's trembling floor,
 The earth shook far and near.
 And he fell dead!—there, dark he lay,
 As shadows of declining day,
 When tempests gloom the air.

Sir Amorell ! Sir Leontine,
Where have ye slept, entranced, supine,
Blind to the morning beams ?
Lo ! saved by guardian powers from death,
With wondering eyes ye issue forth,
And meet like men in dreams !

When sank the conquer'd Knights, subdued
By charms of witch-craft, and by crowd
Of Satyrs wild in war ;
Good spirits shielded them from ill,—
And while they slept as marble still,
Their coursers stray'd afar.

O'er marsh and mead, in gleesome speed,
Two youngling Satyrs rode the steed
Of sleeping Amorell ;
Leontine's to a fire was sent—
The Satyrs, like a lobster, meant
To cook him in his shell.

But, ere the roaring fire was made,
A louder roaring shook the glade,—
'Twas of the Giant slain ;
And straightway all his minion band,
Satyr, and goblin, fled the land,
And ne'er return'd again.

Sir Leontine regain'd his steed,
As did Sir Amorell, soon freed
When fled that boisterous herd ;
And tow'rds Sir Galohault with glee
Riding, they view where from a tree
Swung a grim head and beard.

All rode unto the castle wall,
 And thronging from the marble hall
 Did Lords and Ladies come ;
 From ugly dwarfs thus sudden changed,
 The Knights they thank'd, and round them ranged,
 To lead them through the dome.

And vassal trains were waiting there,
 Who to the spacious table bear
 The viands and the wine ;
 Eftsoon the board was garnish'd well
 With malmsey, mead, and muscadel,
 And lucious boughs of vine.

The ruby wine, the amber ale,
 With floating toast, in spicy gale
 Of clove and nutmeg brown,
 Worthy ye were, brave Knights of yore,
 To quaff ; for readily ye bore
 All hardships for renown.

So down they sat, a brilliant throng,
 And joyous quaff'd, and trolled the song ;
 In mirth their hearts dissolve ;
 And o'er the table-head was seen
 In Magic letters, fiery sheen,
 “ Man wins by high resolve ! ”

And four-and-twenty huntsmen bold,
 In belted doublets, green and gold,
 Their bugle horns lift high ;
 A joyous roundelay they peal,
 Then the same horns with ale they fill
 And quaff right merrily.

Sing, oh, the days of olden time !
Full glorious, though in rudest rhyme
 Be sung of Ban and Bors,
Of strong Saint George, now cold in tomb,
With champions bold of Christendom,
 Their wassails and their wars !

With tabor blithe and bugle sound,
Unto King Arthur's Table Round—
 Right valiant hearts I wot—
Drink in thy spirit's lusty glee,
And pledge, with fullest jollity,
 These Knights of Camelott.

FANTASIES.

I.

I'm weary, I'm weary,—this cold world of ours ;
 I will go dwell afar, with fairies and flowers.
 Farewell to the festal, the hall of the dance,
 Where each step is a study, a falsehood each glance ;
 Where the vain are displaying, the vapid are yawning ;
 Where the beauty of night, the glory of dawning,
 Are wasted, as Fashion, that tyrant, at will Makes war on sweet nature, and exiles her still.

II.

I'm weary, I'm weary,—I'm off with the wind :
 Can I find a worse fate than the one left behind ?
 —Fair beings of moonlight, gay dwellers in air,
 O show me your kingdom ! O let me dwell there !
 I see them, I see them !—how sweet it must be
 To sleep in yon lily !—is there room in't for me ?
 I have flung my clay fetters ; and now I but wear
 A shadowy seeming, a likeness of air.

III.

Go harness my chariot, the leaf of an oak ;
 A butterfly stud, and a tendril my yoke.
 Go swing me a hammock, the poles mignonette ;
 I'll rock with its scent in the gossamer net.

Go fetch me a courser : yon reed is but slight,
Yet far is the distance 'twill bear me to-night.
I must have a throne,—ay, yon mushroom may stay,
It has sprung in a night, 'twill be gather'd next day :
And fit is such throne for my brief fairy reign ;
For alas ! I'm but dreaming, and dreams are but vain.

THE CITY OF GOLD.

YEARS onward have swept,
Aye, long ages have rolled—
Since the billows first slept
O'er the City of Gold !

'Neath its eddy of white
Where the green wave is swelling,
In their halls of delight
Are the fairy tribes dwelling.

And but seldom the eye
Of a mortal may scan,
Where those palaces high
Rise unaided by man.

Yet, at times the waves sever,
And then you may view
The yellow walls ever
'Neath the ocean's deep blue.

But I warn thee, O man !
Never seek to behold,
Where the crystal streams ran
In the City of Gold !

Like a beauty with guile,
When some young knight has found her,
There is death in her smile,
And dark ruin around her !

Like a poet's first dream
In his longings for glory ;
A dagger whose gleam
With the life-blood is gory.

Like wishes possessed,
And for which we have panted,
When we find us unblest,
Tho' our prayers have been granted.

Like ought that's forbidden
Weak man to behold,
Death and sorrow are hid in
The City of Gold.

Rash youth ! dost thou view it,
The ransom thou'lt pay,
Alas ! thou must rue it,
Death takes thee to-day !

THE WEIRD LADY.¹

THE swevens came up round Harold the Earl,
 Like motes in the sunné's beam ;
 And over him stood the Weird Lady,
 In her charméd castle over the sea,
 Sang, " Lie thou still and dream."

" Thy steed is dead in the stall, Earl Harold,
 Since thou hast been with me ;
 The rust has eaten thy harness bright,
 And the rats have eaten thy greyhound light,
 That was so fair and free."

Mary Mother she stooped from heaven ;
 She wakened Earl Harold out of his sweven,
 To don his harness on ;
 And over the land, and over the sea
 He wended abroad to his own countrie,
 A weary way to gon.

O but his beard was white with eld,
 O but his hair was gray ;
 He stumbled on by stock and stone,
 And as he journeyed he made his moan
 Along that weary way.

Earl Harold came to his castle wall ;
The gate was burnt with fire ;
Roof and rafter were fallen down,
The folk were strangers all in the town,
And strangers all in the shire.

Earl Harold came to a house of nuns,
And he heard the dead-bell toll ;
He saw the sexton stand by a grave ;
“ Now Christ have mercy, who did us save,
Upon yon fair nun's soul.”

The nuns they came from the convent gate
By one, by two, by three ;
They sang for the soul of a lady bright
Who died for the love of a traitor knight :
It was his own lady.

He stayed the corpse beside the grave ;
“ A sign, a sign ! ” quod he.
“ Mary Mother who rulest heaven,
Send me a sign if I be forgiven
By the woman who so loved me.”

A white dove out of the coffin flew ;
Earl Harold's mouth it kist ;
He fell on his face, wherever he stood ;
And the white dove carried his soul to God
Or ever the bearers wist.

THE FAIRIES.

UP the airy mountain,
 Down the rushy glen,
 We daren't go a-hunting
 For fear of little men ;
 Wee folk, good folk,
 Trooping all together ;
 Green jacket, red cap,
 And white owl's feather !

Down along the rocky shore
 Some make their home,
 They live on crispy pancakes
 Of yellow tide-foam ;
 Some in the reeds
 Of the black mountain lake,
 With frogs for their watch-dogs,
 All night awake.

High on the hill-top
 The old King sits ;
 He is now so old and gray
 He's nigh lost his wits.
 With a bridge of white mist
 Columbkil he crosses,
 On his stately journeys
 From Slieveleague to Rosses ;

Or going up with music
On cold starry nights,
To sup with the Queen
Of the gay Northern Lights.

They stole little Bridget
For seven years long ;
When she came down again
Her friends were all gone.
They took her lightly back,
Between the night and morrow,
They thought that she was fast asleep,
But she was dead with sorrow.
They have kept her ever since
Deep within the lake,
On a bed of flag-leaves,
Watching till she wake.

By the craggy hill-side,
Through the mosses bare,
They have planted thorn-trees
For pleasure here and there.
Is any man so daring
As dig up them in spite,
He shall find their sharpest thorns
In his bed at night.

Up the airy mountain,
Down the rushy glen,
We daren't go a-hunting
For fear of little men ;

Wee folk, good folk,
Trooping all together ;
Green jacket, red cap,
And white owl's feather !

THE MAIDS OF ELFIN-MERE.

'Twas when the spinning-room was here,
Came Three Damsels clothed in white,
With their spindles every night ;
Two and one, and Three fair Maidens,
Spinning to a pulsing cadence,
Singing songs of Elfin-Mere ;
Till the eleventh hour was told,
Then departed through the wold.

Years ago, and years ago ;

And the tall reeds sigh as the wind doth blow.

Three white Lilies, calm and clear,
And they were loved by every one ;
Most of all, the Pastor's Son,
Listening to their gentle singing,
Felt his heart go from him, clinging,
Round these Maids of Elfin-Mere ;
Sued each night to make them stay,
Sadden'd when they went away.

Years ago, and years ago ;

And the tall reeds sigh as the wind doth blow.

Hands that shook with love and fear
Dared put back the village clock,—
Flew the spindle, turn'd the rock,
Flow'd the song with subtle rounding,
Till the false "eleven" was sounding ;
Then these Maids of Elfin-Mere

Swiftly, softly, left the room,
Like three doves on snowy plume.

*Years ago, and years ago ;
And the tall reeds sigh as the wind doth blow.*

One that night who wander'd near
Heard lamentings by the shore,
Saw at dawn three stains of gore
In the waters fade and dwindle.
Nevermore with song and spindle
Saw we Maids of Elfin-Mere.
The Pastor's Son did pine and die ;
Because true love should never lie.

*Years ago, and years ago ;
And the tall reeds sigh as the wind doth blow.*

BALLADE OF FAIRY GOLD.

A GOBLIN trapped in netted skein,
 Did bruise his wings with vain essay ;
 " Now who will rend this hempen chain ?
 Let that man ask me what he may,
 I shall not, surely, say him nay :
 The shadows wane, the day grows old,
 Meseems this mesh will keep for aye
 The sun-bright glint of Fairy Gold ! "

These echoes of the creature's pain,
 As in the fowler's net he lay,
 Drew soon anigh a surly swain
 Who cut the cords and freed the fay :
 " Now what fair gift shall well repay
 Thy service done ?—for words are cold—
 Sweet looks or wisdom ! vine or bay ? "
 " The sun-bright glint of Fairy Gold."

" Thou choosest ill, but speech is vain,
 Lo ! here is treasure good and gay : "
 The goat-herd grasped his golden gain
 And bore the shining store away ;
 He oped his chest, at break of day,
 To find—no talents, bright and cold,
 But soft, dead cowslips—nowhere lay
 The sun-bright glint of Fairy Gold !

ENVOY.

Take hands, O Prince, for we will stray,
We twain, where nought is bought or sold,
And find in every woodland way,
The sun-bright tint of Fairy Gold.

GRAHAM R. TOMSON.

IN A FAIRY BOAT.

IN a fairy boat, on a fairy sea,
All amber and gold, I used to float
When never a wind rose stormily ;
In a fairy boat.

And sweet and sad like a white dove's note
Strange voices wakened my soul to glee,
And soft scents strayed from the violet's throat.

In a fairy boat I shall no more be,
For gloom has fallen on creek and moat,
And my tired soul is too heavy to flee
In a fairy boat.

BERNARD WELLER.

EPILOGUE.

FAREWELL TO THE FAIRIES.

FAREWELL rewards and fairies,
 Good housewives now may say,
For now foul sluts in dairies
 Do fare as well as they.
And though they sweep their hearths no less
 Than maids were wont to do,
Yet who of late, for cleanliness,
 Finds sixpence in her shoe?

Lament, lament, old abbeys,
 The fairies lost command ;
'They did but change priests' babies,
 But some have changed your land ;
And all your children sprung from thence
 Are now grown Puritans ;
Who live as changelings ever since,
 For love of your domains.

At morning and at evening both,
 You merry were and glad,
So little care of sleep or sloth
 These pretty ladies had ;
When Tom came home from labour,
 Or Cis to milking rose,
Then merrily went their labour,
 And nimbly went their toes.

Witness those rings and roundelays
 Of theirs, which yet remain,
 Were footed in Queen Mary's days
 On many a grassy plain ;
 But since of late Elizabeth,
 And later, James came in,
 They never danced on any heath
 As when the time hath been.

By which we note the fairies
 Were of the old profession,
 Their songs were Ave Marias,
 Their dances were procession :
 But now, alas ! they all are dead,
 Or gone beyond the seas ;
 Or farther for religion fled,
 Or else they take their ease.

A tell-tale in their company
 They never could endure,
 And whoso kept not secretly
 Their mirth, was punished sore ;
 It was a just and Christian deed
 To pinch such black and blue :
 Oh, how the Commonwealth doth need
 Such justices as you.

RICHARD CORBET.

FAIRY SONG.

HAVE ye left the greenwood lone ?
 Are your steps for ever gone ?
 Fairy King and Elfin Queen,
 Come ye to the sylvan scene,
 From your dim and distant shore,
 Never more ?

Shall the pilgrim never hear
 With a thrill of joy and fear,
 In the hush of moonlight hours,
 Voices from the folded flowers,
 Faint sweet flute-notes as of yore,
 Never more ?

“Mortal ! ne'er shall bowers of earth
 Hear again our midnight mirth :
 By our brooks and dingles green
 Since unhallow'd steps have been,
 Ours shall thread the forests hoar
 Never more.

Ne'er on earthborn lily's stem
 Will we hang the dewdrop's gem ;
 Ne'er shall reed or cowslip's head
 Quiver to our dancing tread,
 By sweet fount or murmuring shore,
 Never more !”
 FELICIA HEMANS.

AN INVOCATION.

By the Moon-Queen's mystic light,
 By the hush of holy night,
 By the woodland deep and green,
 By the starlight's silver sheen,
 By the zephyr's whisper'd spell,
 Brooding Powers Invisible,
 Faërie Court and Elfin Throng,
 Unto whom the groves belong,
 And by Laws of ancient date,
 Found in Scrolls of Faërie Fate,
 Stream and fount are dedicate,
 Wheresoe'er your feet to-day,
 Far from haunts of men may stray,
 We adjure you, stay no more,
 Exiles on an alien shore,
 But with spells of magic birth
 Once again make glad the earth !

Here in glade and dingle sweet
 Ye may find a snug retreat :
 Can ye wish for softer bed
 Than the moss that here is spread ?
 Here the mavis' voice is heard,
 Every late and early bird ;
 Many a tendril's slender string
 Here is fit for fairy swing ;

Purling brooks and founts that play
 Make sweet music night and day ;
 In the lakes that stedfast lie
 Under Heaven's eternal eye,
 The blown lilies, waiting, float,
 Each will serve as elfin boat ;
 Tender as a harper's string
 Is the low wind's lute-playing ;
 Never do the evening dews
 Nectar to the flowers refuse :
 Who shall find a fairer spot ?
 Linger, fairies, linger not !

* * *

Still the woods are dark and lonely ;
 There the throstle calleth only—
 There alone the throstle calleth
 As the silent twilight falleth ;
 All the magic spells are broken,
 All the ancient charms unspoken.
 Who to human tongues shall teach
 That forgotten fairy speech,
 By whose aid the world of old
 Did with Nature commune hold ?
 'Tis the pride of human hearts
 Whence the gentle fay departs !
 Ye who now their loss deplore,
 Ye who would their reign restore,
 Know that fervent faith and worth
 Elfin blessings bring to earth ;
 Purest thoughts are brightest chrism
 In the mystical baptism,

Which to those elected duly
Lifts the veil, revealing truly
Elfin worlds in 'rapt clairvoyance,
Elfin marvels, Elfin joyance,
Elfin vistas, Elfin vision,
Elfin voices, dreams Elysian,
Fay-built isles and seas that be
Glamour all and gramarye.
Where shall point the Elfin wing?
Worlds of pure imagining ;
Then where virtue rules the heart
Thence the Fairies ne'er depart !
