

88. Uses of the Subjunctive Mood

The subjunctive is used after verbs expressing hope, wish, desire, command or doubt such as sperare - to hope, desiderare - to desire, volere - to want, and dubitare - to doubt. But verbs that express certainty or fact used in the affirmative sense (and not negative) require the indicative, such as essere sicuro - to be sure, essere certo - to be certain, and sapere - to know. And if the subject of both verbs in the sentence is the same, use di with the infinitive instead of the subjunctive.

Dubito che loro vengano. I doubt that they'll come.

Spero che lei vinca. I hope that she wins.

Non so se i musei siano aperti. I don't know if the museums are open.

So che i musei sono aperti. I know that the museums are open.

Non credo di averlo perso. I don't think that I lost it.

The subjunctive is also used after impersonal expressions, usually essere and an adjective or adverb, unless they state a fact. Some common expressions are è necessario - it's necessary, è meglio - it's better, è possibile - it's possible, and è probabile - it's probable.

The indicative is used after these expressions of certainty: è certo - it's certain, è sicuro - it's sure, and è vero - it's true.

Certain conjunctions require the subjunctive as well, such as sebbene - even though, benché - although, affinché - so that, prima che - before, purché - provided that, as long as and nel caso che - in the event that. The subjunctive is also used after a relative superlative che, and after il primo.. che, l'ultimo..che, and il solo...che.

89. Possessive Pronouns

The possessive pronouns replace a noun, and they have the same forms as the possessive adjectives. They always require an article, unless the possessive pronoun follows the verb essere, in which case it is omitted.

Non parlo a tua madre. Parlo alla mia. I'm not talking to your mother. I'm talking to mine.

Questa macchina è mia. This car is mine.

91. Historical Past

The historical past or past absolute is used to indicate a completed action, and is used mainly in writing and rarely in speech. It is not a compound tense, and is formed by dropping the regular stems of the verbs and adding these endings:

-are	-ere	-ire
-ai -ammo -ei -emmo -ii -immo
-asti -aste -esti -este -isti -iste

-ò -arono -è -erono -ì -irono

Avere and essere and many other verbs are irregular in the historical past:

avere	essere	fare	dire
ebbi	avemmo	fui	fummo	fecì	facemmo	dissi	dicemmo
avesti	aveste	fosti	foste	facesti	faceste	dicesti	diceste
ebbe	ebbero	fu	furono	fece	fecero	disse	dissero
dare	bere	stare
diedi	demmo	bevvi	bevemmo	stetti	stemmo
desti	deste	bevesti	beveste	stesti	steste
diede	diedero	bevve	bevvero	stette	stettero

The following verbs are irregular only in the io, lui/lei and loro forms.

The verbs are all either -ere or -ire verbs, so use the irregular stem for these three forms and add these endings: -i, -e, -ero. Use the regular stem and regular endings for the other three forms.

infinitive irregular stem	infinitive irregular stem
chiedere chies-	rispondere rispos-
chiudere chius-	sapere sepp-
conscere conobb-	scegliere scels-
decidere decis-	scrivere scriss-
leggere less-	vedere vid-
mettere mis-	venire venn-
nascere nacqu-	vivere viss-
prendere pres-	volere voll-

The past perfect of the historical past is formed the same way as the past perfect of the indicative. Just add the past participle to the historical past of avere or essere.
