"Most of the authors are world leaders in research on alcohol and aspects of health. The book will clearly provide an impressive and up-to-date summary of the biomedical research field."

Dr Eric Brunner,
University College London, UK.

Increasing evidence supports a clear role for high alcohol intake in the cause of major heart disease. However, it has been discovered that specific constituents of some alcoholic beverages, which are also present in fruits and vegetables, may reduce the risk of certain types of heart pathology in humans when these beverages are consumed in moderate amounts.

One of these constituents is ethanol itself, which may have some beneficial actions at low levels of consumption.

Alcohol and Heart Disease investigates the effects of alcoholic beverage intake on human cardiac function, focusing on the pathological effects of high alcohol consumption as well as the potential benefits of moderate use. The authors examine the many interactions of alcohol intake and cardiac cell function, cardiac lipids, stroke, cocaine use and AIDS. The contributors, who include many experts in the field, use evidence from animal models, epidemiological studies and medical reports to help define both the problem and consequences of alcohol consumption on the human heart.

Ronald Ross Watson is Professor of Public Health Research at the School of Medicine, University of Arizona, USA. He completed his PhD in biochemistry at Michigan State University and joined the Department of Family and Community Medicine at the University of Arizona in 1982 after a number of professorial research positions in nutrition, immunology and microbiology. Professor Watson was responsible for initiating the National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA) Alcohol Research Center at the University of Arizona and was its Director until 1994. His current research work uses mice as a model to study the interactions of alcohol use, heart disease and AIDS.

Adam K. Myers is Professor and Director of Graduate Studies at Georgetown University Medical Center in Washington, DC, USA, where he teaches cardiovascular physiology to medical and graduate students. He received his MS in zoology at the University of Maryland and PhD in physiology at Georgetown University, and is now an active biomedical researcher with interests in alcohol and the pathophysiology of the cardiovascular system. He is currently investigating the role of alcohol, and specifically ethanol, in contributing to inhibition of blood platelet function, a process implicated in the reduced mortality and morbidity associated with moderate drinking.
