I. ANCIENT PERIOD: EARLIEST TIMES TO 476 A.D.

Historical Outline.

from the origin of man upon the earth down to some arbitrarily fixed date. The fall of the Western Roarbitrarily fixed date. The fall of the Western Roman Empire (476 A. D.) is usually taken as the date at which ancient history ends. For the greater part of this period, no absolute chronology exists. In the first epochs time is reckened not by years, but by geological ages and, even after man left remains from which his history may be reconstructed, dynasties and cras give a more correct idea of the passage of time than do uncertain dates.

According to the testimeny of geology and anthropology, man existed on the earth in the Early Stone Age, which is placed between 50,000 and 125,000 years ago, after the third descent of the polar ice cap and during the third long warm interval. Traces of man during this period are found, and his primitive culture may be reconstructed from the stone implements buried in the glacial drift. The Middle Stone Age occurred during the fourth descent of the ice cap, in which period mankind was driven south or took refinge in caves and adapted himself to the al-tered conditions. The Later Stone Age began be-tween 8,000 and 10,000 years ago with the fourth warm interval, which still continues. It was in the Later Stone Age that actual historical records were first made, and from this period enward various nations have arisen at different times and have developed their cultures.

oped their cultures.

The Egyptian Empire, along the lower Nile in Africa, was the home of the earliest civilization of which authentic historic record was preserved. By means of picture writing and hieroglyphics, as well as by buildings, sculptures, and articles of use that have been preserved, the culture and civilization of the early Egyptians may be studied. The earliest fixed that he history is deservined by the Fewnits in date in history is determined by the Egyptian invention of a calendar (4341 B. C.). How long the Egyptian Empire had existed before this there is no means of knowing, nor can it be determined when the race emerged from the Later Stone Age.

At the same time, though by independent develop-ment, emerged the old Babylonian Empire. The plain through which the Tigris and Euphrates rivers flow was occupied by the Sumerians long before 3000 B. c., and the city kingdoms were founded and a culture developed, records of which have been preserved to us by the system of cuneiform writing. The Semitic people, who were descendants of the nomads occupying the Arahian Desert, overthrew this state; and in the age of Sargon (2700 B. C.) a was then established under Hammnrabl.

A discussion of ancient history covers the field om the origin of man upon the earth down to some was displaced by a new Semitic invasion, that of the Amerites of Syria, and the supremacy of Babylon was then established under Hammurabl.

Farther north, on the upper course of the Tigris, was the Assyrian Empire. There, sometime before 3000 B. c., the Semitic nomads of the desert settled at Ashur. They came alternately under the influence of the Babylonians to the south, to whom they were vassals, and of the Hittites in the west and drew their culture particularly from the Arameans, or Syrians. During the reign of Sennacherlb (705-681 B. c.). Babylon and Egypt were conquered, a vast empire was developed, Nineveh was founded as the capital city, and an elaborate administration was developed. The Assyrian army, the first to be equipped with iron weapons, proved invincible.

The Assyrian Empire fell before the enslaught of the Chaldeans, and under Nebuchadnezzar (604-561 B. c.) Babylon was the home of the highest civ-

561 B. C.) Babylon was the home of the highest civ-ilization yet developed. While these Semitic king-doms were developing in the Tigris-Euphrates valley, other Semitic people like the Aramæans and the Hebrews in Syria and Palestine, though reaching no such material grandeur, developed a culture even more important. Particularly was this true of the He-brews, who gave to the world the monotheistic idea.

The Medo-Persian Empire developed northwest of the Persian Gulf, founded, not by a Semitic people, but by a branch of the great Indo-European family. About 550 B. C., under Cyrns the Persian, the Medes were defeated and the foundations laid for an empire which rapidly expanded, the Chaldean Empire of Babylon was overthrown and the Semitic east collapsed before the invaders from the north. In 525 Egypt was conquered by the Persian Cambyses, and under Darius the Persians developed an administrative system which rivaled that of the early Assyrians.

Another branch of the great Indo-European fam-Another branch of the great Indo-European family pushed into India and reached the Ganges, perhaps as early as 1500 B. c. There they developed a culture based on the caste system and their religion was Brahmanism, which embodied the doctrine of the transmigration of the soul. In the fifth century B. c. Buddhism was developed and for a time displaced Brahmanism, but was gradually driven out of India proper. It still flourishes, however, in eastern Asia, where it numbers as its adherents nearly a third of the human race.

This came neither from the Semitic nor from the Indo-European race, but from the Turanians who settled in the valley of the Ilwang River sometime before 3000 B. c. Here was developed the Confucian religion, which ranks in number of adherents next to Buddhism. The Chinese at a very early era developed a system of pictorial will time from which modern Chinese characters were at a very early era developed a system of pictorial writing from which modern Chinese characters were developed. A literature, the most prized portion of which is included in the Nine Classics, was developed sometime before the third century B. c. In the third century, moreover, was built the great Chinese walt, as a defense against the Huns.

The Hittic Empire existed in Asia Minor between 1450 and 1250 B. c. The Hittites served as the great connecting link between the east and the west and although they developed a culture of their west, and although they developed a culture of their own which, as has been seen, influenced some of the Semitic empires, it was as carriers of culture from one region to another that the llittites were most important.

In the Mediterranean at Troy (2500–1500 B. C.) and at Mycenæ in Greece (1500) and at Knosses in Crete (1600–1500), a civilization was developed which has been described by the poet Homer and was formerly known as Greek civilization. Excavations have later proved that this civilization existed long before the Greek invasion; and it is now called the Minoan, Mycengan, or Mediterranean. It was characterized by vast palaces and buildings and a profusion of gold. Great advances buildings and a profusion of gold. Great advances were made in architecture and engineering, and the metal workers developed extraordinary skill. This civilization fell before the invasions of another branch of the Indo-European race, the Greeks. Contrary to the formerly accepted opinion of history, the Greeks on their entrance into the Balkan Peninsuda were still in the barbaric, nomadic stage of culture. Beginning about 2000 B. c., the Greeks in a series of invasions attacked and overthrew the Mycenæan states they found. But the conquered gave to their conquerors their culture; and the Greeks, taking what was best from the Mycenæan civilization, developed in their little citystates a civilization superior to any that the world states a civilization superior to any that the world had yet seen. About the 8th century B. c. the Greeks began to send out colonies and settled on the islands and shores of the Ægean Sea, in Sicily and Italy, and even in southern France.

of the Greek city-states gave way before the growth of the Macedonian Empire. Under Alexander the Great, Asia Minor, Syria, Egypt, and even In-dia were brought, at least for a time, under Greek control More important than the conquest of these countries was the diffusion of the Greek culture, which in a decadent form continued throughout ancient history and even into medieval times

In Italy, city-states were founded by the Etrus-cans, another branch of the Indo-Europeans, perhaps contemporary with the building of the city-states in Greece. The Italians followed with small states, of which Rome, the legendary date of whose foundation is 753 B. C., was the most important At an early date a republican form of government was established and a military system developed which enabled the Romans to conquer the surrounding tribes and gradually to extend their dominion over Italy south of the Po. In so doing they came in contact with the Greek colonies in Italy and Sicily.

Even more important was their conflict with the Carthaglnlans. This was their first non-Italian campaign and the success of the Romans eliminated the Semitic Phœnician state as a possible rival in the Mediterranean. After this first foreign war, the Roman conquest proceeded rapidly. First Greece, then Asia Minor and Syria, then Gaul and Britain subducd, until by the reign of Augustus, the c.-14 A. D.), all the first Roman emperor (27 B. countries adjacent to the Mediterranean Sea were included in his dominion. Although expanded under Trajan, the boundaries of Rome remained substantially the same until the onslaught of the barbarians.

Just as the Greeks and Romans had overthrown an earlier civilization, so the Romans themselves suc-cumbed to barbarlan invasions from the north and east. This process, beginning perhaps with the onslaught of the Cimbri and Teutones (113-101 B. C.), became serious with the invasion of the Marcomanni in 180 A. D. With ever-increasing frequency and intensity the Teutonic tribes pushed into the empire and founded Germanic kingdoms 476 A. Chronology.

Basis of Ancient Chronology. exact chronology of ancient history from the earliest times is quite impossible. The reason for this is obvious. Such a chronology requires not only contemporaneous and continuous historical records or writings embodying them, which are frequently wanting, but also a fixed method of reckoning years an era or some other similar device must have been adopted. The need, however, of this is felt only after a long period of civilization. The Egyptians with all their care to preserve records of events, had no historical era. If they dated at all, with very few exceptions they dated only by the years of their sov-From this fact, with the fragmentary ereigns. acter of their monuments and literature, and with the possible synchronism of dynasties, arises the great of determining the Egyptian chronology The Assyrians during the latter part of their history had an exact method of reckoning years. named each year after an officer, usually called by us an eponym. Lists of these eponyms have been discovered, several copies, all of which closely agree, covering the period from $93 to 666 B. c. From the record of a total eclipse, 763 B. c., is determined the dates of all these years. This Assyrian canon, from the men-tion of Ahab, Jehu, Uzziah, and a few other kings of Israel and Judah in the Assyrian annals, has fixed the periods of these menarchs and compelled a modifica-tion of the previous understanding of Old Testament chronology. The Hebrews seem to have preserved but few records of their early history, and the lapses of time given in the Old Testament from the period of creation down to the fall of Jerusalem are in a large degree conjectural. In addition to the Assyrian canon for determining dates of partially the same period, there is the Canon of Ptolemy, a chronological compilation, with astronomical notes, of Baby lonian, Persian, Greek, and Roman kings, commencing 747 B. c., and extending to 137 A. D. This so far as tested has proved an accurate and reliable document, and has been of the greatest service in determining ancient chronology. For the periods of Babylonian and Assyrian history earlier than these Fòr the periods of Babcanons, there are lists of monarchs, with the length of their reigns, going back to 2800 B. c These lists have not been preserved or discovered entirely without breaks.

Lists of magistrates or priests preserved in temples or in archives of state were the basis of the ordinary Greek chronology. Thucydides designates the year of the outbreak of the Peloponnesian War as the forty-eighth year of the priestess Chrysis at Argos, when Ænesias was ephor at Sparta, and Pythodorus From about 500 B. c. to 293 was archon at Athens.

This method of reckoning by local magistrates or priests was nev wholly abandoned, but in the third century B. c. the Macedonian Kings of Syria computed the years of their reigns from the founding of the dynasty in 312 , and the era thus established — the Era of the euclds — set an example widely followed in later Seleucids -Greek and Roman times. The Romans dated an event by giving the name of the two men in whose consulship the event occurred, or occasionally and less formally by giving the name of one consul. Formal lists of the consuls were kept as a part of the public record. Some copies of the lists, in Latin and in Greek, have been preserved and may be found in the "Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum," Vol. I.; they form the basis of Roman chronology. But it is probable that the public records were destroyed when Rome was captured by the Ganls, B. c. 390, and that the lists for the years 509-390 were made up from priestly records or from tradition. For the earlier years, before the expulsion of the kings, the dates rest upon tradition or legend, and have little value. The date of the founding of the city, 753 B. C., however, was universally accepted by the Romans and was occasionally used as a to reckon from, especially when the period of time that had clapsed was regarded as significant. system of reckoning ab urbe condita is modern and conventional. In medieval and modern times, historians of antiquity long continued to compute time from the founding of Rome or the first year of Abraham (2016 B. c.) or the creation of the world or some similar point; but since the end of the 18th century the practice of dating events, before as well as after the birth of Christ, from a point which is fixed as midhas come into general use. Astronomers, however, have taken a whole year, 1 B. c., as their point of departure, designating it 0, so that the year 323 B. c., appears in their calculations as 322 B. C

In this chronological history the dates of the early Egyptian dynasties I.-XVIII. are from the Chronology of Eduard Meyer and Breasted, which are always the latest that can be given for Egyptian eras The much earlier dates once current are now pretty generally abandoned by Egyptologists.

The following dates must be received as only approximate: Bahylonian and Assyrian dates before the ninth century B. C., Biblical dates before the middle of the seventh century B. C., Greek dates before the middle of the sixth centnry B. C., Roman dates before the beginning of the third century B. C.

Many dates subsequent to these periods cannot be exactly fixed, and hence they are given differently by historical authorities. Sometimes differences arise from different modes of reckoning. Some writers, for example, count as the first year of a ruler the year in the course of which he came to the throne, others begin with the first full calendar year of his reign.

II. MEDIEVAL PERIOD: 477 A. D. TO 1492.

Historical Outline.

The word "medieval" is used of the long period beginning at the extinction of the Roman Empire in Western Europe. Its end has been variously conceived, sometimes as being coincident with the fall of Constantinople, in 1453, sometimes with the spread of the Renaissance over Western Europe about 1400; more often, with the discovery of the New World, in 1492, or the outbreak of the Protestant Revolution, in 1517. The transitions from ancient to medieval and from medieval to modern times were gradual and, of course, not perceived by contemporaries.

These great divisions of history are made mainly for convenience of treatment. But they are based on something more than this, for the cluef But they are ideas and forces that underlie the development are, in the Middle Ages, strikingly different from those of either ancient or modern history. Our choice of the particular points of division, however, will depend upon which of these ideas and forces we consider fundamental In this work the expression "Medieval History" is applied to all the series of European events and transformations between the establishment of the first barbarian kingdom in Italy, in 477 A. D. and the discovery of America, in 1492, the period forming an epoch of great changes In the conditions and grouping of European na-

Whatever may be the historical phraseology, the old forces of civilization in Europe certainly seemed markedly to decline with the decadence and extinction of the western division of the Roman Empire. and Europe was transformed into a condition so unlike that which prevailed during the long Roman ascendancy as to mark a new era in human his-It was an era in which civil society was broken up and new races and new institutions were forcibly implanted. Only in the towns and cities of the south of Europe, and in a few other favored io-calities were the remains of the old activities of the ternal decay of the Roman race and of the institu-tions which it had created. The second relates to the upheaval and progressive westward and southern movement of the barbarian nations across the line of the Danube and the Rhine.

The causes of this movement of the Teutonic nations are obscure and difficult to separate from legend. The fact of the barbarian invasions is suffi-ciently tangible, but not the impelling forces. The Germanic nations, seated in the north and far east, after having been held at bay for several centuries, at last broke over the frontiers of Rome and, pouring through the passes of the Alps, overran Italy, center of the Empire, defeated the armies of the degenerates, took the capital, uprooted the unreal governates. ment of Romulus Augustulus, and instituted a bar-barian kingdom in its stead. This was the king-dom of the Herulians; and with this event the chronological outline of Medieval History may properly begin.

While the barbarian invasions were sweeping over the Roman Empire, the Eastern Empire maintained itself and was powerful and tiourished long after the Western Empire was extinguished. Justinian performed one of the greatest of services to Rome by the codification of the Roman law, which later served as the foundation for the civil law of nearly all the civilized nations. With the fall of the Western Empire, the political supremacy of Italy vanished and its influence on subsequent history was chiefly due to the power of the papacy, seated at Rome, and to the vigor of the Renaissance.

A new and unexpected force arose on the eastern borders of European commerce and influence, when in 570, was born Mohammed, the Arabian prophet, founder of the religion which to-day rivals Christianity in the numbers of its adherents. This religion, This religion. originating in Arabia, spread through Persia, Palestine, and Syria into Africa and Spain. Its triumphal progress was checked by the Franks under Charles Martel in 732, the Saracens were driven beyond the Pyrenees, and then slowly yielded till, in 1492, the last of their kingdoms, Grenada, went out of existence. In 1300 the Ottoman Turks, from the interior of northern Asia Minor, who were also followers of the Prophet, and who had long assailed the Eastern Empire, began their conquests, which culminated in the capture of Constantinople, in 1453, and the destruction of the empire. The Turks held Asia Minor, Greece, Northern Africa, and the Balkan and Danube region. Till the end of the 17th century they threatened Christian civilization in Eastern Europe. The Ottoruan Empire maintained itself over Christian subject peoples till the state. close of the World War in 1918,

The barbarian kingdoms which were founded in of Ferdinand and Isabella and the union of vari-Italy had little subsequent effect on Europe. The central power was shifted to Gaul, where the Franks, under Clovis, accepted Christianity and laid the foundations for the modern state of France. It was a prince of the Frankish royal house founded by Clovis, Charles Martel, who checked the Mohammedan invasions, and under Charlemagne the Western Empire was revived. Alter Charlemagne's death (814) his empire soon fell to pieces, but was re-vived under Otto the Great as the "Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation," which claiming, but never exercising, world dominion, was the strong-est temporal force in Europe during the Middle Ages. A second force of even wider importance was the papacy. Through the agency of the missionaries, priests, and monks of the church, the barbarians were everywhere Christianized and brought to adopt the essentials of Western civilization. What little remained of the classical learning of antiquity was kept alive in the monasteries of the church. fluence of the pope, however, was not confined to spiritual affairs: he claimed the right to excommunicate and depose sovereigns who disobeyed the commands of the church; and eventually brought together a temporal dominion, enveloping Rome, as a defense of his person and rights in rude times

The political and social system of Western Europe throughout the greater part of the period was based upon the feudal system, by which the functions of the state were transferred from the central authority and exercised by individuals. Socially, the individ-nal and the land were closely associated and, accordto the strict feudal theory, there was no land without its landlord and no man without his over-lord. Allegiance was owed, not to the state, but to the overlord, who in turn might be the vassal of a greater noble.

In Asia the Sui dynasty flourished in China, but was overthrown in the 14th century by the Tatars; and the great Mongol emperor, Kuhlai Khan, es-tablished an empire which included all of Asia, save Romans any longer discoverable.

Two groups of causes of this great transmutation of Europe may be noted

The first relates to the in Buddhism was introduced into Japan, which meant Buddhism was introduced into Japan, which meant the introduction of Chinese civilization into that kingdom, and in the 7th century the imperial dynasty of the mikade was established.

In the medieval period two great spiritual and intellectual movements took hold on Europe, — the Crusades and the Renaissance. In the spiritual sphere, beginning in the 11th century, came an outburst of religious enthusiasm which culminated in the Crusades. This passionate revival resulted in seven military expeditions to recover Jerusalem and the Holy Land from the possession of the Infidels, and lasted through the 12th and 13th centuries. The Crusades were among the greatest events in medieval history; they increased the power and authority of the papacy and the church, and also of the princes, stimulated intellectual growth, widened men's horizons, developed commerce, hastened the rise of towns, and established a tradition of the right and ability of Europe to exercise power in Asia

About the year 1300, began the revival of learning known as the Renaissance, which first showed itself in Italy with the appearance of Dante, but quickly spread throughout Western Europe. It began with an almost passionate study of classical learning and antiquities; it widened into a magnificent literature in the modern tongues, which were Ly this time es-tablished. Greek philosophers and mathematicians had long before reached Europe through the Arabic versions. After the capture of Constantinople by in 1453, these writings stimulated the thought of European philosophers and literary men, and ultimately led to the questioning of the religious authority of the church

From being purely a literary revival, the Renaissance becan e an artistic movement and the sculptors and painters of that period have never since been equaled. As a result of this movement, men been equaled. As a result of this movement, men sought to widen their knowledge of the world and in the Age of Discoveries, beginning with the 15th century, under the lead of Prince Henry the Navigator, explored the coast of Africa, discovered the Cape of Good Hope, and finally reached

In England, the Saxon kingdom fell before the invasion of the Normans in the 11th century, and a strong monarchy was established by William the Conqueror, which was developed and protected by his successor, Henry II., at the expense of the great feudal lords. During the reign of John, the ous little kingdoms into a powerful national despotism.

In France feudalism retained its hold, and the development of a supreme national monarchy was postponed; while in Haly the Italian cities and duch ies prevented the growth of a national state, but by their rivalries stimulated the intellectual revival. Germany and Austria, though possessing an inchoate nationality, developed no strong government, but consisted of a multitude of jurisdictions, owing shadowy allegiance to the Emperor.

Thus medieval history includes the long struggle of the Christian Church to maintain itself in a contest with the new barbarian conditions, to resist the aggressive assaults of Islam, and finally to readjust itself to the changing forces of the time, economic, political, and intellectual. It leads up to the story of the Crusades and of the institutions of chiv-alry which came afterwards. It describes the strugany which came arterwards. It describes the strug-gle of the papacy and its gradually developed consti-tution, first with the Empire, then with the national states whose powers and organizations were matur-ing as a result of the Empire's weakness.

It includes the revelation of a new world hitherto unknown except vaguely in the story of Atlan-tis, the sagas of Icelandic bards, and the tradition repeated by Mandeville. It is the background of the growth of representative institutions, the economic and political advance of the towns, and in the westernmost parts of Europe the increased participation in government of the middle class. It brings Europe up to the revival of art and learning, the reformation of religion, the division of the Continent into nations under conditions political and ecclesiastical which prepared the ground for the division of the church and nations into Cathelic and Protestant.

III. EARLY MODERN PERIOD: 1492 TO 1814.

Historical Outline.

Modern history strictly includes the whole recent progress of mankind to the present day. It is convenient, however, to group together the events and tendencies of the three centuries ending with the close of the Napoleonic period, during which the habits of thought and government, the organization of society, and the religious beliefs of the Christian world took on the forms with which men of to-day are familiar. The modern era opens with the Age of Discovery.

The modern era opens with the Age of Discovery. During the Renaissance man was finding himself; now he found the world. No change in the whole course of history is more significant than that which resulted from the expansion of the Roman and the Medieval world, which took no account of anything outside the Mediterranean region and western Enrope, into the world which includes Asia and the Americas. The epoch-making voyage of Columbus and the discovery of a sea ronte to India by Vasco da Gama meant more than the discovery of new land and the opening up of new spheres of trade. It opened the way for expansion from Europe and the foundation of colonies east and west, which developed into new nations, holding different ideas from those of the mother countries.

In this Age of Discovery Spaln was preëmlnent. The strong monarchy established by Ferdinand and Isabella was in a position more favorable than that of any other European state to throw its strength and resources into the foundation of a colonial empire, and the Spanlards were bold and successful navigators and traders. Spain took full advantage of her opportunity and laid the foundation for a colonial empire not inferior in extent and even in duration to that of ancient Rome or of the modern British Empire. She impressed her language, her religion, and her culture upon South America, the West Indies, portions of North America, and the Philippines; and down to 1815 her control was still active. Then the empire collapsed and finally disappeared, except for Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, but the Spanish language and religion remained the basis of South American culture.

In this period came the logical result of the questionings of the Renaissance—the Protestant Reformation. Beginning in a series of attempts to remedy abuses of the Roman Catholic Church the movement, under Luther, Calvin, Zwingli, Knox, Huss, and their followers, caused a schism which has never been healed. The chief issue was the denial of the authority of a universal church and a reliance on the dictates of the individual conscience. Not only did the Reformation put an end to the universality of the Roman Church, but in the religious wars which followed it dislocated the political power and weakened the influence of that other great medieval institution, the Holy Roman Empire.

The Age of Discovery opened the world to European settlement, while the Reformation led to the foundation of Protestant powers which denied the papal authority. Both Catholic and Protestant nations entered the race for colonial expansion. Thus France, through the discovery of the St. Lawrence and the explorations of her voyageurs and missionaries, opened up and acquired an empire in North America, including the valleys of the St. Lawrence and the Mississippi. So, too, England, after breaking the naval supremacy of Spain, founded colonics along the Atlantic seaboard which were a perpetual challenge not only to the papal power, but to the sovereignty which Spain claimed over that region. In the Eastern Hemisphere, first the Portuguese and then the Dutch acquired colonial possessions and tapped the lucrative trade of India. The period was favorable to the development of

The period was favorable to the development of strong national states. England had a system of representative government in the elective House of Commons, but allowed Henry VIII. to exercise an almost absolute monarchy. Henry's danghter Elizabeth, also, was a genuine national sovereign, though arbitrary. The popular element in the government, however, joined issue with the Stuart kings, and the civil war against Charles I, laid the foundations for a real parliamentary government which was superior to the crown and which with the accession of William III. became surreme accession of William III. became supreme.

In Russia Ivan the Terrible and, at a later date. Bir Poter the Great, by unchecked absolutism brought the nation into contact with Europe and made a beginning in modern state organization. In Anstria and Germany the Holy Roman Emptre persisted in a feeble and declining form, a har to the development of vigorous nationalism, a poor defense against the onslaughts of the Turks. During this period the Baltic powers of Denmark and Sweden had brief periods of prosperity and wide European influence, especially under Gustavus Adolphus and Charles XII. of Sweden. Italy was the prey of the ambition 1498.

of the greater European powers and the scene of frequent wars and invasions. In France, beginning with Francis I., a strong national state was developed which, though torn by the religious wars of the Huguenot period, became, under Louis XIV., the strongest factor in European life and politics.

The 18th century witnessed the struggle of Europe against the supremacy of Louis XIV. In a series of wars which encircled the world, France was defeated in India, America, and Europe, and England emerged as the most powerful stale with the widest colonial possessions. Prussia rose as a force to be reckoned with and became the center of Germany.

The 18th century closed with what may be called the Era of Revolution. In America the English colonists, questioning the right of England to control their economic development, and demanding wider powers of self-government, declared their independence. With France as their ally, they achieved their aim, and the United States of America was founded, which was destined to make the military force and political ideas of the New World a factor in European policy. In France the revolution was of even greater effect; it gave point to the teachings of the philosophers of the previous age. The despotism, which had continued from the days of Louis XIV., based on the feudal system, fell before the attack of democratic ideas. Feudalism was destroyed. France became a republic, and her republican ideas permeated even the most despotic systems of Europe, while her revolutionary armies attempted by military force to mold these ideals into states.

From the democratic enthusiasm of the French revolutionary republic developed the military empire of Napoleon. Once again, as in the time of Louis XIV., France dominated Europe and one man dominated France. Spain and Italy were conquered; Prussia and Austria were humbled; and Napoleon drew the boundaries of new states, placed new severeigns on old and new thrones, and impressed his system on all Europe. Only England and Russia remained outside his power. In 1812 he invaded Russia, but the very vastness of that empire defeated him, and a disastrons retreat was the hegiming of his downfall. Under the lead of England, the European nations rallied and on the field of Waterloo were finally successful and put an end to the ambition of France to dominate Europe.

tion of France to dominate Europe.

The Congress of Vienna in 1815 remade the map of Europe and established boundaries and policies which, with the exception of the unification of Italy and Germany, remained throughout the 19th century. Thus the year 1815 may well be taken as the ending of early modern history and the beginning of nineteenth-century history.

IV. NINETEENTH-CENTURY PERIOD: 1814 TO 1914.

Historical Outline.

The 19th century, as here considered, practically includes the period from the Congress of Vienna in 1814 to the opening of the World War in 1914. These hundred yours have a unity unusual in history; the new political, social, and economic condi-tions separate the period from earlier centuries and lead up to the World War.

The century began with exhaustion and reaction.

Europe was weary of the wars of revolutionary

France. The Quadruple Alliance against Napoleon was successful not merely in the overthrow of Na-poleon, but also in the resistance to the new ideas by the autocracy of France, Austria, Prussia, and Spain. Europe had seen so many sovereigns de-posed and set up by France and Napoleon that the posed and set up by France and Napoleon that the only safety for royalty seemed the "principle of legitimacy." Hence, the Holy Alliance, formed by Russia, Prussia, Austria, and eventually France, which developed under the leadership of Count Metternich as a bulwark of conservatism and weapon of repression. Autocracy was strengthened in the countries of the allies; and the Alliance used its power to suppress democratic movements elsewhere. Thus, the revolutions in Italy and in Spain were suppressed by the allies; and for years after the Congress of Vienna the forces of reaction controlled the world.

Even in England, the freest state in Europe, the policy of suppression initiated in the previous century continued until 1832. Not until the Reform Bill of that date, which extended the vote to the mid-dle classes, could England be said to have a genu-inely popular or democratic government. In the United States, under the influence of the ideas of the Revolution restated by Jefferson, a real democracy was growing up; and the success of federal govern-ment was attracting the attention of Europe. The conditions of the whole country, and especially of the West, were favorable to a rough, good-humored, and active popular government, which revealed itself in national affairs by the election of Jackson in 1828
The year 1830 was ushered in by revolutions. In France the Bour, bon monarchy came to an end with the abdication of Charles X. and the accession of Louis Philippe, the citizen king, who established a constitutional monarchy of considerable liberalism in France, which lasted until 1848. Another revolution disrupted the artificial kingdom of the Netherlands, which the Congress of Vienna had created. Belgium declared her independence and was recognized as an independent state whose neutrality was guaranteed by the powers. The revolution blazed guaranteed by the powers. The revolution blazed up far to the eastward in Poland, which the czar of Russia had erected as a separate kingdom united to Russia by personal union. The Poles desired greater liberality and, above all, independence; and they revolted. They were crushed and their country disappeared from the map, continuing only as a sian province. Revolutions in the parts of Italy held by Austria were easily suppressed and small disturbances in the minor states in Germany were unsuccessful. In England the movements of the period were mostly political.

The 19th century was an age of Inventions. From the downfall of Napoleon to the outbreak of the World War, greater material changes took place than from the beginning of history to the Napoleonic era. In science, new discoveries were made; new applications of knowledge in medicine and hygiene checked or ended plagues and pestilences which had decimated whole sections of the world. Humanity and sympathy demanded that the sufferings due to poverty, disease, and ignorance should be relieved.

In material progress the greatest advance was In communication and transportation. At the beginning of this period the journey from Boston to New York occupied as many days as it now does hours. In Europe large cities lived in fear of starva-tion because of the impossibility of the transportation of supplies. The transportation of the raw cot-tion of supplies. The transportation of the raw cot-ton demanded by Manchester manufacturers from Liverpool, only 30 miles away, was often delayed a month. The invention of the steam engine and the building of railways altered these conditions. Moreover, the application of steam to navigation aided the rapid transport of the commerce of the world from one point to another. Danger from famine seemed to disappear and the resources of the whole world could be concentrated at any point and the products of every nation could be exchanged throughout the world.

most instantaneously known in another. Social, economic, and political ideas became common property.

Machinery, steam, and electricity were applied in other fields. Industry was revolutionized. At the beginning of the century it was conducted by means of man or animal power, wind or water, in the homes of the workers. The relation between employer and employee was intimate and constant.

With the application of grown came the footeness. With the application of steam came the factory system: transportation brought raw products to centers; power was distributed in great factories employing large numbers of workers. These workers no longer were under the intimate observation of the owner who now, instead of being an individual, was likely to be a corporation, less in touch with the needs and demands of the workers and more intent on securing profits. The massing of population in industrial centers caused a migration from country districts and the rise of cities in which lived large populations of workmen, too often crowded in inadequate

In 1848 another series of revolutions swept over Europe, which, as in 1830, began in France. The monarchy of Louis Philippe gave way to the Second Republic, which was speedily replaced by the Second Empire. Hungary, under Kossuth, revolted from Austria and for a moment enjoyed independence. The Czechs of Bohemia also demanded independence and their demands were temporarily conceded; but and then definition were temporary conceeded, but Austria, soon regaining her power, suppressed their aspirations. The Austrian provinces of Italy re-volted and renounced Austrian control, but the jealousies of the Italians as yet prevented united action, and the Austrian army restored authority.

In Germany the revolutionary movement affected a large number of states. In the Parliament at Frankfurt am Main the attempt was made to establish a German federal union, at the head of which should be the Prussian king; but on his refusal the idea was abandoned for a score of years. less, as a result of this movement Prussia and several other German states received constitutions which, by the standards of those days, seemed liberal

The 19th century was the period of development of nationalities. The Congress of Vienna had drawn the map of Europe for the benefit of dynasties, with scant regard to races or peoples. Throughout the century there was a steady revival of nationalism. It was seen in the unsuccessful struggles of Hungary and Bohemia for national independence in 1848. Although Italy, also, failed in 1848 to realize her aspirations, Cavour and Garibaldi succeeded in driving out the Austrians and converting Italy from a geographical expression to a united kingdom in 1861. In 1866 the German states freed themselves from the control of Austria, and under William I. of Prussia founded a strongly nationalistic federal empire.

in southeastern Europe the Balkan peoples, who had suffered for centuries under the oppression of the Turks, struggled successfully for their freedom and founded national states, jealous of one another, whose conflicting claims and relations to their neigh-bors made a danger spot in Europe. The Poles and bors made a danger spot in Europe. The Poles and Bohemians and other peoples in Austria-Hungary still failed to achieve their legitimate national aspira-tions. In the Far East Japan opened her doors to Western influence, borrowed what she considered the best from Western culture, and developed a nationality and civilization peculiarly her own. She sought expansion not merely in Korea, but also in China. After defeating China in 1895, she dared to challenge Russia and in the drawn conflict (1905) won not merely Korea, but also recognition as a firstrate power, to be reckoned with in world politic

The 19th century was a century of expansion. During the 18th century Great Britain appropriated much of the French colonial empire, and though she lost some of her own colonies through the successful American Revolution and the establishment of the United States of America, she was more than com-pensated for this loss by expansion elsewhere. In India she established an empire which in population outranks that of ancient Rome or the Spanish American empire. As in ancient times Rome strove to civilize the peoples conquered by her, so Great Brittries in India to raise a people of lower standards of living to European conceptions. In Australia and New Zealand the English colonies developed into great self-governing dominions; and in South Africa the British possessions were consolidated and by the conquest of the independent Boer states, the South African Union became the determining factor in that portion of the continent.

France. In eastern Europe Russia's annoted find an outlet to the Mediterranean threatened Turkey's possession of Constantinople and furnished a makker for European diplomacy. The continent of most instantaneously known in another. Social, eco- | France. In eastern Europe Russia's ambition to key's possession of Constantinople and furnished a problem for European diplomacy. The continent of Africa was partitioned among the European states, England, France, Portugal, Belgium, Spain, and later Germany, were rivals for portions of its territory. Twice relations were strained between England and France and twice between Germany and France in this rivalry for African possession. At the close of the century Africa was practically divided among the great states of Europe vided among the great states of Europe.
Russia, unable to obtain Constantinople, sought expansion to the east, and having acquired Siberia and Central Asia attempted to dominate Manchuria and Korea and thus came in conflict with Japan. The vast Chinese Empire at times seemed on the point of disintegration and about to suffer the fate of point or disintegration and about to suffer the tate of Africa and be partitioned among the powers. Only mutual jealousy and rivalries and the inertia of China itself seemed to prevent. Even the United States sought expansion, and by her war with Spain put an end to Spain's once vast colonial empire and acquired Porto Rico and the Philippines, thus be-coming a world power with interests no longer confined to the Western Hemisphere.

The artificial boundaries of European states, which ignored nationalities, and the rivalry in expansion, fomented natural jealousies. Prussia had reached supremacy in Germany and expected to dominate Europe through military force. cess of the military system of Prussia compelled other states to adopt similar systems. Almost overywhere throughout Europe, save in England, military service was compulsory, and vast standing armies were maintained at ruinous cost.

The inventions of the age outran the realm of industry, and nations vied with each other in the production of new and more terrible means of destruc-tion. With the development of colonial empires overseas came the necessity of navies to protect these far-distant possessions. Thus developed a trivalry in military and naval equipment which threatened to bankrupt the less prosperous states and burden industry with a crushing load of taxes. Moreover, the possession of such military equipment affected the tone of international intercourse, and the threat of force was too often ill concealed by the words of diplomacy.

In 1899 the nations met at The Hague in a conference. This was called by the czar of Russia for the purpose of attempting to check the increase of armaments and to devise methods of maintaining peace. It was unsuccessful in its attempt to limit military preparations, but devised a scheme of arbitration with a permanent voluntary court which was of some use in settling international disputes. A or some use in settling international disputes. A second Hague Conference was held in 1907 which, although it still failed to limit armaments and to provide for compulsory arbitration, did accomplish much in the codification of military law and the establishment of rules for what, as was vairily hoped, would be more humane modes of warfare

The great world nations were engaged not only in colonial rivalry and the race for military preparedness, but also in economic rivalry, and vast revenue was needed to support the burdens of the colonial empires and the military establishments. National industries were stimulated by protective tariffs, while each nation sought to market its products in the territories of others. Competition and trade rivalries characterized the last two decades of the period. In the countries less commercially developed, such as China, outside nations sought exclusive privileges; and even in highly developed states they attempted, often by discreditable methods, to gain commercial advantage.

The economic rivalry of the nations reacted upon the industrial conditions in each state. The factory systems based on capitalism were pushed to their extreme limit. In protest there developed a school of thought which denied the very foundation of the capitalistic system. The socialists, originating in the early decades of the 19th century, were successful, not in establishing their theoretical socialist state, but in forcing the governments of most states to mitigate some of the more obvious evils of the capitalistic system. Not content with such results, in many states the socialists became a political party, which in a few cases held the majority in the legislature

Outside the theoretical socialist movement, labor organized into unions and, at first little touched by Communication by steam was supplemented by electricity; and the telephone and telegraph, and later the wireless, made it possible for nations to transfer ideas even more quickly than they exchanged products. The world of thought grew pean possessions to the newly formed Balkan states, closer and what happened in 'one country was alR reforms, but, as in Russia, of extorting political and constitutional changes.

The last years of the century saw a revival of the nationalistic movement of the mid-century. The nationalistic movement of the mid-century. The Czechs and the Poles were restive under the control of Austria and Russia. In Russia, the nationalistic movement of the autocracy attempted the Russification of all the included nationalities, and was met by rival nationalistic movements in Finland, Poland the Baltic Provinces, and the Ukraine.

In Asia, China succeeded in throwing off the cen turies-long control of the Manchus, and a republic was established. Japan was becoming more conscious of her power and less ready to submit to European dictation in Asiatic questions. The Balkar states, in a temporary union, deprived Turkey of her The Balkan European possessious up to Constantinople, and each state hoped for a union of the members of its nationality in a single state.

In 1914 England was distracted over the Irish question, and seemed for the moment unable to solve the labor problem. Russia was in the throes of a general strike. The Balkans were dissatisfied with the results of their war with Turkey and distrustful of Austria. The German Empire, alone, seemed at the height of its prosperity and strength; and in 1914 Germany attempted to gain world control.

18t4-1815. Congress of Vlenna to reconstruct Enrope after the Napoleomic wars; starting point of present-day international relations. A congeries rather than a congress; final act, June 9, 1815, merely codifies the treaties between the various states; result, a patchwork that violates the principle of the Congress, "legitimacy," and also the opposing principles of nationalism and liberalism. France reduced to boundaries of 1792; Russia augmented by Finland (from Sweden), part of Prussian Poland, and Turkish territory. Prussia loses sian Poland, and Turkish territory. Prussia loses part of Poland but gains part of Saxony, Pome-rania (from Sweden), and Rhine territory. Austria Austria gains compactness by giving up her Netherlands and gets part of northern Italy (Lombardy and Venetia), Illyria, and some extension into the Alps. Great Britain increases her colonial empire. These additions are at the expense of smaller states; but Sweden receives Norway from Denmark, and Austrian Netherlands (Belgium) is mited to Holland. Italy is left as 10 states with Austria dominating and the republics abolished Various German princes are "mediatized," and a loose confederation of 3S states formed, with the presidency in Austria. 1814-1850. Prohibition of the slave trade by all civilized nations. Previously (1807) by England and United States. Urged in Congress of Vienna. Abolition of slavery in British Colonics (1833); takes effect 1838. Abolition in French colonies (1848). Also by Latin American states. Controversy of Quintuple Treaty (1841); Joint Cruising Convention of U. S. and England (1842). Era of improved transportation in the United States. Turnpikes, especially the Cumberland Road (1820); canals, especially Eric Canal (1825); steamboats on lakes and rivers, clipper ships on the sea. Beginning of railroads and ocean steamers.

1814-1860. Development of factory system in Europe and U. S. and constant improvement of machinery and processes. Cheap iron makes cheap machinery possible. Division of Labor increases product. Cheap transportation brings raw ma-terials together and distributes manufactured goods. Opening up of virgin lands furnishes new goods. Opening up of Virgin tailus taimsness new materials and enlarges food products. 1814-1854. Change in colonial conditions of the world. The Spanish and Portuguese empires break up in America. Great Britain gives respon-sible government to the large colonies settled by Englishmen. Colonial trade is opened up. France expands in Africa and Great Britain in the East and in North America.

V. WORLD-WAR PERIOD: 1914 TO 1920.

Historical Outline.

OUTBREAK OF THE WAR.

The occasion for the World War was found in the Balkans. Although Austria had succeeded in enforcing her will in the settlement of the second Balkan War in 1913, and through the erection of an Albanian kingdom had successfully prevented Scrbia from gaining access to the sea, the Serbs were filled with resentment. The idea of nationality was strong in them and they hoped to unite their race in one autonomous state. Since Austria-Hungary ruled millions of Serb subjects, she could but regard this ambition as dangerous to her supremacy. Both In Serbia and in the Serbian regions governed by Austria, secret societies were formed and an active Pan-Serbian propaganda was initiated. Still, Scrbia was obliged to submit in 1913, as she had done in 1908 and 1909. Alone, she was in no condition to measure strength with Austria.

On June 28, 1914, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria, heir to the throne, was assassinated in Sarajevo, the capital of Bosnia. Although the assassins were Austrian subjects and natives of Bosnia, they were Serbians by race. Austria had been watching for an opportunity to teach Serbia a lesson and forthwith assumed that this act was the result of Serbian propaganda, denounced the Serbs as a nation of murderers, and held the Serbian government responsible.

On July 23 Austria carried out a long-planned design and sent the fated ultimatum to Serbia containing demands of such a character as, Sir Edward Grey said, had never been laid upon an independent ortey said, had hever been and upon an independent nation. The Pan-Serbian propaganda must be suppressed, all anti-Austrian propaganda, whether in newspapers, textbooks, or schools, must cease; officers in the government and army whose names the Austrian government should submit must be removed; Serbia must accept Austrian aid in the investigation of this conspiracy. Finally, Serbia was given 48 hours in which to submit to this humiliating ultimatum. The nature of the demands was such as to make it evident that Austria had resolved on war

On July 25 Serbia submitted to all demands save the last, which she offered to arbitrate; but this did not satisfy Austria, and on July 28 she declared war upon Serbla. Although the war began with the attempt of Austria to suppress a petty Balkan state, the real causes were far wider than the Balkan

They were world-reaching. question.

From the point of view of Germany, she and her ally, Austria, were in constant danger of a move-- commonly called Pan-Slavism - to unite the Slavs of the Balkans and the Slavs of Russia. To German eyes Pan-Slavism meant the extinction of Pan-Germanism and of the peculiar Kultur which Germany stood. Germany alleged that she and Austria would be surrounded by "an iron ring," on the one side Russia and her allies, on the other ance with her ally, Great Britain. Germany was France with her ally, Great Britain. Germany was conscious of great material success; she was prosperous, efficient, and scientific and demanded a position equal to what she considered her due — "a place in the sun." Germany's colonial empire was small compared with that of Great Britain and France, and the colonies she held were less lucrative and desirable than those in the hands of her rivals. The teachings of her philosophers emphasized that the state was might, and that war was the proper means to expand her culture. Finally, the growth of the Socialist party in Germany was a menace to the military régime and if Germany was ever to strike it must do so before this rising power prevented such action and destroyed the military machine which had been so carefully prepared. For these reasons, among others, Germany supported her ally, Austria, in her demands on Serbia, and helieved that the day had come when she might aspire to world domination.

Russia coudd not allow her Slav protégée, Serbia, to be overridden by Austria. Twice before, Russia had been forced to assent to Austria's slights and must now take some decisive steps in order to retain her influence in the Balkans. Therefore, on July 29, her influence in the Balkans. the day after Austria declared war upon Serbia, Russia mobilized the forces in the southern military districts; and the day after Belgrade was bombarded by the Austrians, Russia ordered a general mobilization (July 31).

Germany seized upon that action as a pretext for a war long agreed upon. While her regular armies were massing on the Russian border, she demanded that Russia cease mobilizing, and on August 1 declared war. An ultimatum was presented to France demanding whether France would support Russia. On August 2 Germany struck at France France demanding whether France would support Russia. On August 2 Germany struck at France through the neutral state of Luxemburg and entered French territory. On the same day Germany which varied little until March 1918.

demanded a passage for her armies through the neutralized state of Belgium, which refused and bravely accepted the war thus thrust upon her

Throughout these events Great Britain did all in her power to mitigate the severity of the Austrian demands on Serbia and to mediate in the dispute between Russia and Austria. She received no sympathy in these steps from Germany, which insisted that mediation was impracticable. The evidence shows that Austria took no step without the consent if not the positive advice of her ally, Germany. The suppression of Serbia was part of the general policy of Company, which is part of the general policy of Germany, which desired not a peaceful sct-tlement of the Serbian dispute, but an appeal to arms, in which sho felt herself destined to be trium-

Still, Germany was not ready to measure strength with France and Russia if Great Britain were to be their ally. She therefore offered to respect the terri-torial integrity of France should England remain neutral (July 28), but refused to give a similar assurance with regard to the French colonial possessions England was already bound by a secret agreement to protect the Channel coast of France. Her refusal of this offer led Germany to strike at France through Belglum; and the appeal of Belgium at once brought Great Britain into the war as the ally of France and Russia, contrary to Germany's expectations.

In another respect the plans of the Teutonic allies miscarried. Italy, the third member of the Triple Alliance, issued a declaration of neutrality, August 3, correctly asserting that the Triple Alliance was a defensive, not an offensive, alliance, and that she had not been consulted by her allies in the steps which brought on the war.

Whether the war was necessary for Germany's defense or not, her actions soon alienated the sympathies of the world. The confession of the German chancellor that Germany was violating Belgian rights and his assertion that "Just for a word — neutrality — just for a scrap of paper Great Britain was going to make war on a kindred nation " showed a cynical disregard for international law and the rights of small nations. Furthermore, Germany's method of making war was more brutal and terrible than the world had seen in modern times. The invasion of Belgium was resisted by the Belgian army and the heroic opposition of this little force at Liége checked the German advance and gave the Allies time to concentrate their forces. Thus thwarted, the Germans took savage revenge upon the Belgians. Louvain was destroyed, towns and villages along the route of the German advance were sacked, and hundreds of innocent civilians were ruthlessly executed. A policy of terrorization was adopted which, although preventing insurrection, failed to break the Belgian spirit, but won the sympathy of the world and gained universal opprobrium for Germany.

CAMPAIGNS OF 1914.

Llége fell on August 7; on August 20 Brussels was occupied. Three days later Namur was occupied and Mons attacked, and the great retreat of the French and English forces began. France was invaded; for ten days and ten nights the retreat continued. The great fortresses proved useless against the most powerful guns ever moved by an advancing army. Town after town in northern France was occupied as the British and French forces were obliged to retire to avoid being surrounded. The invaders came within striking distance of Paris, and German victory seemed certain.

On September 6 the advance was halted and to his generals Marshal Joffre sent word that "the hour has come to hold fast and let yourselves be killed rather than to yield." The decisive world battle of the Marne began with the desperate assault by the French, as is shown in the message which General Foch sent to Joffre, "My right is in retreat, my center is yielding. Situation excellent. I shall attack." The attack was successful, and not only attack." The attack was successful, and not only was the German advance checked, but the German army was driven back with enormous losses from the Marne to the Aisne, where it took refuge in a line of trenches and resisted the French advance.

The battle of the Marne saved Paris and France from German dominion. But Germany still occupied large portions of the French territory, and after their defeat on the Marne the Germans besieged and captured Antwerp and swept westward to occupy the Channel ports. Ostend was captured October 15, but the Germans were checked before Dunkirk was reached and the first hattle of Ypres began October 19. Here the British army, though out-numbered four to one and suffering a loss of one half,

Although Germany failed to capture Paris and to destroy France, she occupied most valuable terri-tory, by possession of which her power to continue the war was augmented. The territory she held contained nine tenths of the iron ore and half of the coal of France; and the Belgian harbors of Ostend and Zeebrugge furnished convenient bases for the submarine warfare she later adopted.

On the Russian front Germany was disagreeably surprised. She had counted on the slowness of the unwieldy empire to mobilize, and hoped by a sudden hlow to paralyze Russia's western ally, and then to deal with the East at her leisure. Russia, how-ever, advanced more rapidly than was expected and invaded East Prussia on the north and Galicia on the south, where the Austrians were defeated at Lem-(September 1) and Przemyśl was invested, while a central army struck in the direction of Posen On August 29 the Germans, with reënforced lines, defeated the Russians at Tannenberg and drove them out of East Prussia; and by a combined attack of the German and Austrian forces the Russians were pushed back in Poland until General von Hindenburg was on the outskirts of Warsaw.

On October 13 Grand Duke Nicholas, the Russian generalissimo, took the offensive, and the battle of the Marne was repeated on the Vistula. Hindenburg struck again at Warsaw, but was checked, and after the Russian victory in the north at Avgustovo (October 4) the Russians again invaded East Prus-On December 6, the Germans, though suffering terrific losses, cut their way eastward to Lódź and by the end of the year established a line twenty-five miles west of Warsaw.

While Germany and Austria were occupied with Russia and France, Serhia, aided by little Montenegro, the only Balkan state to stand by her, gained some initial victories, although the Austrians succeeded in occupying the Serbian capital, Belgrade, Because of the relief from pressure resulting from the Russian advance in Galicia, the Serbians were able to retake it, drove the Austrian troops out of Serbia, and invaded Bosnia.

Meanwhile the Central Powers enlisted an ally. On November 5, 1914, Turkey entered the war. Ever since the revolution which established the Young Turks in control (1908), German influence had been dominant. The success of Russia might mean the loss of Constantinople to Turkey, while a German victory might insure the continuance of the Ottoman Empire. To Germany and her allies the adherence of Turkey was of great value. The sultan, as the head of the Mohammedan religion, was expected to proclaim a "jihad," or holy war, which would cause unrest among the millions of Mohammedan subjects of Great Britain and Russia. Morever the Turkish army officered by Germana would over, the Turkish army, officered by Germans, would be a convenient instrument with which to detach a significant part of the military strength of Russia and Great Britain. During 1914, although the Turks attempted to cross the Sinai peninsula and threaten Egypt, and to invade the Caucasus, they were defeated; the immediate reply was the British occupation of Busrah at the head of the Persian Gulf, the final annexation of Cyprus, and the announcement that Egypt had become a British colony.

In the Far East, Japan as Great Britain's ally declared war upon Germany and demanded the surrender of Kiaochow. When this was refused, Japan captured the fortress by siege. Germany's widely scattered colonlal empire was attacked elsewhere. In the Pacific, Apia was occupied by New Zealand troops (August 29), and the surrender elsewhere. of the German possessions in the Samoan group and of Kaiser-Wilhelmsland, Bismarck Archipelago, and the Solomon Islands rapidly followed. October 7, Japan seized the Marshall Islands. In Africa a Franco-British force captured Togo, and the forces of the South African Union began the conquest of other German possessions.

British troops came to the rescue of France on the western front, while the British navy upheld the cause of the Allies all over the world. The fleet, on the declaration of war, at once began a blockade of the German northern coast, which continued throughout the war. At the same time, Ger-many's vast merchant marine was swept from the sea by British and French emisers or interned in neutral harbors. During the early days of the war considerable damage was done to Allied commerce by the swift German cruisers Emden and Karlsruhe; but with the destruction of these vessels the danger was diminished and only the German main fleets were to be feared.

The home fleet was mostly bottled up in the Kiel Canal; the small Pacific fleet (November 1) won a naval victory over an English squadron off the coast of Chile. December S, however, it was totally stroyed in the battle of the Falkland Islands.

European waters the British won a naval victory near Helgoland (August 28, 1914); but soon after lost three 12,000-ton cruisers, the Aboukir, Cressy, and Hogue, by the attack of a German submarine. The main German fleet, however, did not take the sea and though a small port on the coast of England was bombarded (Dec. 16), little damage resulted.

Great Britain also commanded the English Channel and was able to transport an ever increasing number of troops to France with the loss of only a few hundred men. Equally vital was the blockade which Great Britain established against the German ports. Not only were ships prevented from entering the ports, but the trade of neutrals was restricted through the doctrine of "continuous voyage," so that Germany was cut off from commercial intercourse with all but the neighboring states. Thus began an economic pressure which ultimately had the effect of breaking the morale of the German people and paving the way for the victory of the Allies. Although the battle of the Marne saved France, yet the Germans held practically all of Belgium and contributed in the contributed on the contributed on the Comman and a line of integer because and a line of integer broads.

Although the battle of the Marne saved France, yet the Germans held practically all of Belgium and northwestern France and a line of intrenchments from the North Sea to Switzerland During the year 1915 the Allies attempted to dislodge them from these positions. The war was a war of "attrition," or as Joffre said, "of nibbling." For some months no engagements of importance were fought, but on March 10, at Neuve Chapelle the British began a tentative offensive. This battle was remarkable because intensive artillery preparation was first used. On a narrow front of less than four miles, more than 300 British cannon were concentrated, and by means of high explosives the German defenses were literally blasted away. In this single battle the British used more shell than they had used in the whole of the Boer War. Following the artillery preparation, the German line was bent but not broken. The Germans counterattacked but the British in spite of enormous losses held their new front.

On the part of the Germans an attempt to break

On the part of the Germans an attempt to break the lines of the Allies was made at Ypres (April 22-25). This battle was noteworthy for the first use of poisonous gas. The Canadians, on whom the attack was made, were unprepared for such tactics. The use of poisonous gas had been expressly prohibited by the Hague Convention of 1907, to which Germany had given her assent. Her illegal methods were momentarily successful and the French and Canadians were forced back. But on May 24 the fighting died down, and the Germans had succeeded only in bending the Allies' line.

ceeded only in bending the Allies' line.

Again, on September 25, the Allies took the offensive at the battle of Loos. Although the immediate objective was obtained, yet the cost in lives was enormous, and the British commanders failed to follow up their initial success. Thus the deadlock on the western front continued.

CAMPAIGNS OF 1915.

On the Russian front the Allies had better success. On the north the Russians attempted a new invasion of East Prusla, but von Hindenburg, to whom this territory was familiar, entmaneuvered them and decisively defeated them in the battle of the Masurian Lakes (Feb. 10-12, 1915). In this battle, the Russians lost in killed and wounded 150,000, and over 100,000 were taken prisoners.

Against Austria Russia at first won more success. From January until May the Russian army pushed into Galicia. Przemyśł feli March 22, and the whole battle front moved forward until May I. At this date the tables were turned. The Austrians reënforced under von Hindenburg and von Mackensen, attacked the Russians on a wide front. The Germans and Austrians were everywhere successful, and the whole Russians line was forced to retreat. Przemyśł was recaptured June 3; Lemberg, June 22: Russian Poland was invaded and Warsaw was occupied, August 5; Russian Poland was conquered and the provinces of Lithuania and Kurland were overrun. The Russian army was extricated by the skillful generalship of the Grand Duke Nicholas. Yet for his ill success he was removed from his command and sent to the Caucasus.

mand and sent to the Caucasus.

The Allies suffered another severe blow in the Turkish campaign. An ambitious plan to capture Constantinople was prepared. The importance of the place was obvious. Constantinople, in the hand of the Turks, barred the Allies from reaching Russia by water. Through the Dardanelles and the Black Sea ports munitions might be dispatched to Russia and from Russia provisions might be drawn to relieve the necessities of the Allies. Moreover, the possession of Constantinople would cut Germany off from her Turkish ally and put an end to the Teutonic dream of uninterrupted German control from Berlin to Bagdad. Furthermore, an Allied success in this quarter would have a wonderful effect upon the wavering courage of the Balkan states.

The first attempt to capture Constantinople was made at the Dardanelles (February 19, 1915) but was checked a month later by the loss of three battleships, two British and one French. Anglo-French troops aided by the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps, known as the "Anzacs," landed on the peninsula of Gallipoli. An attack was made at Achi Baba, the key to the Turkish positions, but the Turks, under the command of the German General von Sanders, repulsed them. Desperate attempts were also made to cut the communications with Constantinople, but the operations failed. Although the troops remained throughout the year, nothing was accomplished. The evacuation of the Allied positions was accomplished by January 8, 1916.

The British had some initial success in their campaign against the Turks in Mesopotamia. They succeeded in driving the Turks back beyond the Tigris and Euphrates by July, and pushed forward in the direction of Bagdad. On November 22–24 General Townshend's column defeated more than 13,000 Turks at Ctesiphon. The Turks, however, received reënforcements, and the British were compelled to retreat to Kul-el-Amara, where they were besieged.

One permanent gain was made by the Allies. On May 23, 1915, Italy declared war on Austria-Hungary. Italy had been a member of the Triple Alliance for over 30 years, and in 1912 this alliance had been renewed to last until 1920. But Italy was not consulted in the Serbian ultimatum, and the war was obviously offensive and not defensive. Under these circumstances Italy was perfectly justified in refusing to enter the war on the side of her allies and in taking up a neutral position.

The kingdom of Italy, however, was not complete, as Austria still controlled hundreds of thousands of Italians in the Trentino and Trieste. This was "Italian government attempted to acquire this territory from Austria by negotiations; but when this attempt failed, Italy, in response to an overwhelming popular demand, felt that her legitimate aspirations could best be satisfied by joining the Allies and therefore declared war npon Austria.

A double offensive was launched against Austria, one column moving into the Trentino, and another against the positions beyond the Isonzo, flanking Trieste. After some initial successes, both sides intrenched themselves, and the Italian offensive came to a halt, largely because of the difficult nature of the country.

The effect of the Allied failure at the Dardanelles was disastrous. Greece had been about to join the Allies, but now adopted a tortnous policy of benevoneutrality towards Germany. On Bulgaria result was even more decisive. Bulgaria hated the result was even more decisive. Roumania, Serbia, and Greece and felt that these powers had deprived her of her legitimate territory by the Treaty of Bucharest in 1913. (See Bulgaria Yow that the Russians were driven from Galicia and the Allies unsuccessful at the Dardanelles, Bulgaria saw her opportunity to tear up the treaty and with German aid to acquire the territory and she coveted. After a period of devious diplomacy the Bulgarian czar, Ferdinand, joined the Central Powers (Oct. 5, 1915), although war was not formally declared until Oct. 14. The effect was far-reaching It gave to Germany the long-wished-for "corridor" to Turkey and enabled her to hurry munitions and men to her Turkish allies. The accession of Bulgaria men to her Turkish allies. The accession of Bulg to the Central Powers sealed the doom of Serbia transported by Allied vessels to the island of Corfu. In German Southwest Afrlea, a division of the troops of the Union of South Africa, commanded by General Louis Botha, began operations in February. Windhuk, the capital, was captured on May 12, and on July 9 the German commander surrendered unconditionally. In the Kamerun the Allies occupied the seacoast and the railroads and drove the Germans into the interior. In German East Africa the resistance was more obstinate and the British suffered minor repulses.

1915 saw the virtual extinction of the mwilling pretext of the war, Serbia. In October a new campaign was organized against her; and the Austrians, freed from the danger of Russian invasion and reënforced by the Germans and the Bulgarians, who had now joined the Tentonic powers, swept through the country. The remnant of the Serbian army was transported by Allied vessels to the island of Corfu.

No important fleet engagements took place during the year 1915. The Germans confined their naval activity to the use of the submarine. In February, the British Isles were declared in a state of blockade, and Germany claimed the right to sink merchant vessels bearing the British flag and bound for British ports. Although international law allowed the destruction of the merchantmen of one belligerent by another, the dictates of humanity, which had hitherto been observed by contending powers, required that the crew and passengers should be removed before the destruction of the vessel. The submarine was a craft unable either to capture a merchant vessel or adequately to provide for the safety of the crew and passengers. Thus the use of the submarine as a weapon against merchantmen was considered illegal. Unmoved by such considerations, the Germans with their submarines destroyed

Anglo-French troops aided by the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps, known as the "Anzacs," landed on the peninsula of Gallipoli. An attack was made at Achi Baba, the key to the Turkish among whom were more than a hundred Americans.

In spite of the submarine menace, Great Britain continued to transport into France troops and munitions and, although suffering great losses in her merchant marine, was able to keep in touch with her colonial empire and to import food and munitions.

CAMPAIGNS OF 1916.

In 1916 Germany's supreme effort on the western front was made at Verdun, a place so strongly fortified as to be considered almost impregnable; and for that very reason there were few defenses of major importance between Verdun and Paris. The capture of such an important position would paralyze the Allied resistance and with the fail of Paris France might succumb. Moreover, the very difficulty of the military operations offered a chance for military glory to the German Crown Prince, who commanded that section of the line.

The Germans made careful preparations and ac-

The Germans made careful preparations and accumulated enormous armies and vast supplies, and on February 21 the attack began. It seemed impossible that human force could defy such destructive artillery fire, or that troops could maintain their positions and check the advance of their opponents, sheltered behind the rain of high explosives. Although the French were driven from position to position and in four days retired four miles, they contested every inch of the ground. Reënforcements were hurried to them, and the advance was temporarily checked; but the Germans had resolved to capture Verdun whatever the cost. The French, mider Pétain, and, later, Nivelle, were equally resolved to check them and, with the cry "Its ne passeront pas!" ["They shall not pass!"], they thwarted the efforts of the Germans and actually drove them out of most of the positions they had won. The battle lasted from February until July. It was renewed in October, and on December 15, by a surprise attack, General Nivelle recovered Fort de Vaux and two miles of territory along a seven-mile front and took 11,400 prisoners and 115 guns. This ten months' battle cost the Germans about 600,000 men and the French nearly 500,000.

On July 1 began the great Allied offensive on the Somme. The intent was twofold. By attacking the Germans in this region it was hoped to relieve the pressure on Verdun. The inmediate objective, however, was the capture of the railway centers of Pérome and Bapaume, which supported the German front. The Allies here perfected the method of artiliery preparation before attacking the German positions. After blasting away the protective barriers of barbed wire and shattering the trenches, the infantry, following the barrage, occupied the German positions. Throughout the summer the advance proceeded. Thiepval, Pozières, Longueyal, and Combles were captured and Pérome was threatened. In the autumn (September 15) the "tanks" first made their appearance, and between November 12 and 18 in the Ancre region the British gained the highland commanding Bapanme. The rains of November brought the advance to an end, yet the Allies had gained 170 square miles which they retained, unlike the Germans at Verdun, who had been driven out of most of the positions taken by them.

The year 1916 marked the height of Russla's success. In Armenia, Grand Duke Nicholas was successful against the Turks and captured the strongly fortified city of Erzerum (February 16, 1916) and Trebizond (April 18), while another Russian column penetrated the mountains and occupied "old Armenia." The Turks thus lost over 30,000 square miles on a front of 750 miles.

In Europe General Brusilov started a great offen-

In Europe General Brusilov started a great offensive in June. The immediate object was the capture of Kovel and Lemberg and the recapture of Bukowina. Along a front which extended from the Pripyat marshes to the Roumanian frontier, the Russian forces advanced. The Austrian lines were broken and the fortresses of Lutsk and Duhno were captured. Czernowitz was reoccapied (June 17) and Bukowina retaken. On the north, Brody was captured and Kovel was threatened and the Russian Cossacks poured through the Carpathian passes toward the Hungarian plain. As before, Germany came to the rescue of Austria. The Russians were halted at the Styr on the north, but on the south they almost reached Lemberg. At this point Brusilov's offensive came to an end. This victory was the greatest Allied success since the battle of the Marne. The Russians took more than 420,000 prisoners and over 15,000 square miles of territory.

oners and over 15,000 square miles of territory.

The Russian drive was intended to prepare the way for the entrance of Roumania on the side of the Adlies. In Transylvania Austria governed millions of the Roumanian race and the nationalistic aspirations of Roumania led to the hope that these people might be joined with the Roumanian state. Moreover, Bulgaria, never forgetting the Treaty of Bucharest, was ready to take any advantage the war might offer to regain the territory she had surrendered to made a spectaedar raid into Transylvania. The results were tragic. Brusilov's offensive had come to a stop and Russia was not able to aid the Ronmanians. The German general, von Mackensen, commanding an army of Bulgarians, Turks, and Germans, swept into the Dobruja and captured a division of the Roumanian army. The invading troops in Transylvania were ordered to withdraw, but a new German army commanded by von Falkenhayn fell upon its rear and drove it across the border. Mackensen crossed the Danube and the Roumanian forces were caught between two converg-Bucharest was abandoned December ing armies. and the Roumanian army sought refuge in the Russian lines. Like Serbia, Roumania was almost completely conquered, and the grain fields and oil wells were at the service of the Teutonic allies. More-over, the Austro-German front now ran almost in a straight line from the Baltic to the Black Sea. Mesopotamia the Turks pressed the siege of Knt-el-Amara, and General Townshend was forced to surrender April 29, 1916 In Arabia the Grand Shereef of Mecca revolted from Turkish rule and established a government which included Mecca, Medina, and Jedda.

In the southern Balkans the Austrians meted out to Montenegro the same fate that the Serbians had suffered and occupied Cetinje January 13 and Scularl, the chief trading center of Albania, January 23. To check this advance, or at least to prevent the Tentonic powers from overrunning Greece, the Allies oecupied Salonikl, as a point from which they might attack the Bulgarians and possibly threaten the Teutonic lines of communication. Large detachments of French and English troops were sent to Saloniki, and the Serbian army, which had been re-fitted by the French at Corfu, was given the position on the left flank. In September an offensive was begun which resulted in the Allied occupation of Monastir, November 19.

On the Italian front the Austrians launched a powerful offensive in May. Taking from the east-ern front large detachments of troops and guns, Austria struck south along the valley of the Adige and Brenta and approached the Venetian plain. Brusilov's drive in the east, however, forced Austria to hurry reënforcements to that front and saved the day for Italy. Taking advantage of this, the Italian offensive began in August along the Isonzo, and Görz (Gorizia) was captured August 9, thus redeeming the first important town of "Italia irredenta." A foothold was also gained on the Karst (Carso) plateau, and in October the Austrian line was broken in the Julian Alps.

The year 1916 saw the extinction of German authority in Africa. In February the conquest of the Kamerun was completed and 900 German and 14,000 eolonial troops took refuge in Spanish Guinea German East Africa, however, was stubbornly defended, and not until September were any large detachments of German troops defeated. By December the Allies were everywhere successful and German anthority was at an end.

The naval operations during 1916 included the continuous use by Germany of the submarlne against both naval and merchant vessels. While Germany had an undoubted right to sink without warning the naval vessels, she had no right to sink the merchant ships without giving an opportunity to save the lives of the noncombatants, nor to attack ships of a neutral state, unless bound for a blockaded port or carrying contraband. Since the British fleet prevented an effective blockade of Allied ports, the only right of capture or destruction rested upon the carriage of contraband. Both Germany and the Allies had declared practically all articles of commerce, including foodstuffs, contraband; and through the doctrine of continuous voyage, by which merchandise consigned to a neutral port for reëxportation to a belligerent was considered contraband, practically all the commerce of the world was at the merey of one helligerent or the other. Since Great Britain and her allies commanded the sea, they were able to enforce their plans, but this they did by the legitimate means of search and seizure. Against the extreme doctrine of continuous voyage, and the British system of ordering all vessels to put in at Kirkwall in the Orkneys, the United States protested.

Germany, since the submarine was unable to search or eapture merchant vessels, resorted to destruction without warning. Against this the United States protested. As far back as February, 1915, it warned Germany that "strict accountabil-1915, it warned Germany that street account about y' would be demanded of her for the destruction of American vessels. After the sinking of the Lustania, President Wilson demanded that Germany disavow the act and make reparation "as far as disavow the act and make reparation "as far as reparation is possible," and declared that the United States would not "omit any word or any act necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and its citizens and of safeguarding their free exercise and en-

No agreement was reached between the two governments and no further action taken.

On March 24, 1916, a French packet, the Sussex, was torpedoed while crossing the English Channel and two Americans were killed. President Wilson protested and declared that the United States would sever diplomatic relations unless the German government should declare an effective abandonment of its submarine warfare against passenger and freight-carrying vessels. On May 4 Germany apparently agreed, and promised that merchant vessels would not be sunk without warning nor without safeguarding human life unless resistance was offered or escape attempted. Even this promise was conditioned upon the success the United States should have in compelling Great Britain to observe what Germany held was international law. President Wilson accepted the promise but repudiated the condition

On May 31 occurred the greatest naval battle of the war. For the first and last time the German Grand Fleet offered battle. The German high-seas fleet, commanded by Admiral von Scheer, was sighted by the British scouts under Admiral Beatty sailing northward up the western coast of Denmark. While signaling the British main fleet Admiral Beatty attacked without delay, hoping to cut off the German fleet from its base. The battle lasted unbeauty attacked without delay, noping to cut on the German fleet from its base. The battle lasted un-til evening, and under the cover of darkness the Ger-man fleet escaped. The result was inconclusive. The English admitted the loss of 14 vessels, includ-ing 3 of their largest battle cruisers, with which Beatty had attacked before Jellicoe came to his aid The English asserted that the German losses were 21 but the Germans conceded the loss of only 11 ships. The real victory, however, lay with England, for her main fleet was undamaged and the German highseas fleet never took the sea again until it left Kiel to surrender.

CAMPAIGNS OF 1917.

The two major events in 1917 were the Russlan revolution and the entrance of the United States into the war. From the outbreak of the From the outbreak of the war in 1914, although shocked at German atrocities in Belgium, the government of the United States maintained strict neutrality; and although the majority of the American citizens sympathized with the Allies the attitude of the government was genuinely impartial. As the war developed, the demand that the United States should become an active partici-pant on the side of the Allics grew stronger, particu-The submarine campaign of Gerlarly in the East. many accentuated the feeling of hostility toward the Teutonic powers. When this campaign resulted in the destruction of American vessels and loss of American lives, the demand for action greatly increased. Moreover, the action of German under-agents in fomenting strikes and even in causing the creased. destruction of property stirred up a feeling of bit-ter hostility. In 1915 the Anstrian ambassador, Dumba, and the German military attachés von Papen and Boy-Ed, were forced to leave the country because of the discovery of such activities.

When, however, on January 31, 1917, Germany announced that in a zone around Great Britain. France, Italy, and in the eastern Mediterranean, all ships there found would be sunk, the rights of the United States were infringed in a way no other nation had ever dared to suggest. As if to add insult, Germany conceded that one passenger vessel a week would be allowed to go to England, if it proceeded along a route laid down by Germany and if it were painted with stripes, the width of which was care-fully prescribed. To this attack upon the rights of the United States there could be but one answer, On February 3 diplomatic Intercourse was severed. The German ambassador received his passports and the ambassador of the United States was recalled from Germany. On April 2 President Wil-son addressed Congress and recommended a declaration of war. On April 6 war was formally declared as already existing by the act of Germany.

Meanwhile, a revolution in Russia forced the abdication of the czar (March 15, 1917). The visional government which was established The protempted to earry on the war and disclaimed the intention of making a separate peace; but Russia had suffered more than any other country in loss of men, her people were war-weary, and food shortage was common in the large centers. The provisional government gave way first to a frankly socialistic repub-lic under Kerenski, and he in turn was overthrown by the extreme socialists, or Bolsheviki (November 7, 1917). The new government at once announced its policy of an immediate democratic peace, the confiscation of all landed property, the recognition of the supreme authority of the Soviets, or the work-ingmen's and soldiers' councils, and the election of a constitutional convention. An armistice was signed (December, 1917) and peace negotiations were at once started with Germany, resulting in the Peace of Brest-Litovsk (March, 1918) on terms very unfacounted upon to give military aid to the Allies.

Along the western front the year was marked by the great German retreat to the Hindenburg line (February to April). The British attacked this new position in the vicinity of Arras and succeeded in capturing more than 20,000 prisoners and 257 guns (April and May). The most notable exploit in this operation was the recapture of Viny Ridge by the Canadians. On June 7, after two weeks of interior critics. Canadians. On June 7, after two weeks of intensive artillery preparation, enormous mines were exploded and the British captured Messines Ridge, which dominated their salient at Ypres. On July 31 began the battle of Flanders, during which the British advanced along the front from the Lys to the Yser. 6,000 prisoners were taken the first day, and during the next three months 16,000 more.

The battle of Cambral began November 20 and was a sequel to the battles of Arras and Flander Here the British by a surprise movement, employing tanks without previous artillery preparation, almost reached Cambrai and eaptured 10,000 prisoners and 150 guns. The Germans, however, counter-attacked with surprising force and recovered most of the ground which had been gained

In the meantime, in April, the French had made an attack between Soissons and Reims, taking 24,000 prisoners and 150 guns, but this victory had been purchased by an immense loss of lives. It was clear that though the Allies won local victories in France and succeeded in bending the German line they failed to break it, and so far were unsuccessful in their attempt to force the Germans back.

In the Balkans Roumania was occupied by the Germans in January, 1917, and on December 19 accepted a forced armistice. Nor were the actions of Nor were the actions of the Allied forces at Saloniki successful. It was felt unwise to reënforce the army in this region further, and a decision was reached (but never carried out) to withdraw the troops.

On the Italian front the Allies were more successful. In May Italy began a formidable offensive north of Görz. In two weeks the Italians took more than 50,000 prisoners and throughout the summer continued to advance, until by October they were near Trieste and the way to Laibach was open.

At this juncture, the collapse of Russia liberated German troops from the eastern front. The Aus-tro-German effensive began October 24 with an attack upon the Italian flank upon the upper Isonzo and gradually forced a retreat behind the Tagliamento. Therefore the defense in the mountain district to the west collapsed with frightful losses to This breakdown of the Italians was the Italians. due partly to lack of supplies, partly to the superiority of the Austrian artillery, and partly to subtle propaganda and pacifist doctrines, which were making considerable headway. The retreat was continued until the Piave was reached, where the Italian line held against further assault.

The most important military success of the Allies during the year of 1917 was in Mesopolamia.

After General Townshend's surrender at Kut-cl-Amara (April 29, 1916), a new British expedition was formed under General Maude. With 120,000 East Indians General Maude marched against Kutel-Amara, which he recaptured February 24, 1917. He pushed forward, and on March 11 captured Bagdad, the ancient capital of the Mohammedan world. For a few weeks the British and Russian forces were in tonch. In September the advance was renewed, the Turks were defeated at Ramadie on the Euphrates, and the British finally reached Tekrit, which they occupied Nov. 6, but did not hold.

The Turkish power was threatened in another region. The British resolved that the dangers which had threatened the Suez Canal during the early years of the war should not be repeated. Consequently they sent an army into Palestine, which on March 26-27 defeated the Turks near Gaza, but was compelled by the summer heat to remain idle till autumn. In October this force, now mider General Allenby, inflicted great damage upon the Turkish troops, captured Jaffa, the port of Jerusalem, in November, and on December 11 occupied the Holy City itself. The capture of Jerusalem and its deliverance from the Turks caused great rejoicing throughout the Christian world, as the victory of the medicyal Crusaders seemed to be repeated. More medieval Crusaders seemed to be repeated. important, however, from a strategic point of view was the fact that the eapture of Jerusalem prevented the dispatch to Bagdad of a Turkish force which was being formed under General Falkenhayn.

There were no important naval operations during 1917. The unrestricted submarine warfare which Germany waged upon commerce was, however, having its effect. The neutral countries, particularly and the submarine was the submarine ticularly Norway, suffered great losses, but the brunt of the attack fell upon Great Britain. The British admiralty admitted in December that the Germans had succeeded in destroying vessels faster than they could be built, but claimed that the British navy was destroying the German submarines faster than Gerjoyment." Germany evaded the issue, and in the correspondence which followed President Wilson again repeated his demand for reparation. Ultimany could replace them. Nevertheless, although the shrinkage of British tomage from the outbreak of transporting troops and supplies, not simply for itself but for its allies, made the question of shipping one of the most important of the war.

CAMPAIGNS OF 1018.

The year 1918 was both the most disastrous and the most glorious year for the Allies. It opened with a tremendous German drive in France beginning on March 21. With Russia eliminated from the war the Germans could transfer their troops from the eastern to the western front. Wi at their disposal they felt secure of success. With these prize of victory," said the Kaiser, "must not and will not fail us.

The first attack was made in Picardy between the Scarpe and Oise on the British Fifth Army, which was commanded by General Gough. This held the position at the extreme right of the British army next the French and the brunt of the attack came upon The Germans hoped to win a decisive success and force the British to withdraw. chose the British rather than the French because a victory over the French would leave the British in the field, while a British defeat meant a French sur-render. The Germans were successful in breaking the British line and throwing it back, and a great disaster might have resulted had not the French cavalry arrived in time to check the Germans. Nevertheless, the Germans won a great success; Péronne, Bapaume, Ham, Albert, Noyon, and Montdidier fell.

At this moment the American commander in chief, General Pershing, placed all his forces at the absolute disposal of Marshal Foch, and with French reënforcements the British retirement was checked. Nevertheless, the Germans had reached many points that they had previously reached in 1914.

German activity was now turned toward the north. At the battle of Armentlères, at the point where the British and Portuguese lines joined, they made a vicious lunge. Their hope was to reach the Channel ports and cut off the British army from its base. During the first 10 days they won considerable ground and forced the British to retreat. At this critical moment General Halg Issued his famous order: "Every position must be held to the last man. There must be no retirement. With our last man. There must be no retirement. With our hacks to the wall, and believing in the justness of our cause, each one of us must fight to the end." In the bitter fighting which continued, the British lost Messines and Wytschaete ridges and even Mount Kemmel. But French reënforcements came in time and Ypres was not captured.
On May 27 and June 9 two movements were directed against Paris, one between Reims and Noyon, which continued for several days and gained some 30 miles, the other between Noyon and Montdidier, which was less successful. A month later the Germans, in their fifth offensive, thrust between Château-Thierry and the Argonne. Here they employed more material and men than had been used since the March drive. In two days they succeeded in crossing the Marne and threatened Reims. But Foch had now American troops at his disposal, the advance was checked, and the counter-offensive at last began.

In the meantime the Austrians attacked the Italian front for a hundred miles, from Asiago to the Adriatic, and captured thousands of prisoners Although the Italians, aided by the Allies, made a counterattack, the Austrians remained in possession of half of Venetia and the positions they had held at the end of 1917. The Italians in Albania, aided by a French contingent, began an offensive (July 6). But without support from the Allies in Macedonia, they were obliged to halt and the Austrian counter-attacks forced a retreat.

On the sea, Germany continued her ruthless submarine warfare and even dispatched submarines to operate off the coast of the United States. Although she was successful in sinking many vessels the combined navies of the Allies were able, through the system of convoys, to keep a stream of supplies and munitions pouring into Europe. A greater achievement, however, was the transportation of the American army of 2,000,000 men across the Atlantic with the loss of only 732. Moreover, as the year progressed the Allies were more and more successful in checking the menace of the submarine On April 23 the British succeeded in blocking the entrance to the harbor of Zeebrugge, which had served as a submarine base, and on May 9 were partially successful in a similar attempt at Ostend. New inventions, such as the depth bombs, and the great mine barrage which the American navy laid down in the North Sea took heavy toll. Germany was not only unable to destroy Allied commerce and to prevent the transportation of the American army, but was forced to see her most successful instrument, the submarine, fail.

Meanwhile the Americans appeared on the western front and came into contact with the enemy, June 3, at Château-Thierry, followed by eleven days of hard fighting in Belleau Wood. On July 18 Foch assumed the counteroffensive. He attacked the enemy from Château-Thierry on the Marne to the river twenty villages and taking thousands of prisoners.

On August 8 the British army moved forward between Albert and the Luce, a branch of the Avre After five days of continuous fighting General Rawlinson advanced 12 miles, taking 30,000 prisoners and 750 guns. In the third week of August the French attacked the line between the Aisne and the Oise, while the British struck again between Arras and Albert, and advancing from Arras General Horne broke the permanent German defenses, the Drocourt-Quéant line. In six weeks the Allies took 150,000 prisoners and 2,500 guns and 2,000 square miles of French territory. The next advance was made in the region of the Meuse where, on September 12 and 13, the American army eliminated the Saint-Mihiel salient. In 24 hours the Germans lost 25,000 prisoners and were forced to withdraw from 150 square miles of French territory.

On the Balkan front the Allied attack began on September 15. The lines were extended beyond Monastir and Lake Doiran with a front of more than a hundred miles. The French and Serbs took advantage of this gain and pushed up the valley of the Vardar, capturing important centers of communications and splitting the Bulgarian army apart. September 23 the Italian, Greek, and French troops captured Prilep and on the 26th the British and Greek forces took Strumnitza, with a large quantity of raw material. The Bulgarians, thus cut off from retreat, made unconditional surrender on September 30.

The Hallan drive was renewed (October 24) and the Austrian line was broken. On October 26 and 27 armies crossed the Plave and penetrated the Austrian lines in three places. The retreat became a rout and at the time of the signing of the Austrian armistice (November 3) it was estimated that the Italians had captured 300,000 prisoners, 5,000 guns, and 250,000 horses. Following this military defeat the organization of Austria-Hungary collapsed. In Palestine General Allenby advanced north cantiously and captured Jericho, February 21. On September 19 he made a surprise attack on the Turkish lines and, after three days of maneuvering, succeeded in encircling the Seventh and Eighth Turkish Armies, forcing them to surrender 80,000 men and 5,000 guns. The Arabs on his right were equally successful in disposing of the Fourth Turkish Army. The British army in Mesopotamia, now commanded by General Marshall, made a slow but steady advance during the spring. Hit was captured steady advance during the spring. Hit was captured March 9 and two months later the British force was within 80 miles of Mosul. On October 30 Marshall attacked the Turkish forces on the Tigris and took 7,000 prisoners. As a result of these successful blows in the east and west of her Asiatic dominions Turkey withdrew from the war, October 31.

While these events were happening on other fronts, Foch began the final stage of his campaign. On September 26 Pershing ordered the advance of the American troops between the Argonne and Meuse. The terrain was most difficult and the American force was obliged to contest every inch of its advance. Nevertheless, it pushed steadily on despite heavy losses and by November 7 had broken the German lines and threatened Sedan. In the north, the British and Belgians attacked the enemy from the famous fighting ground in the region of Ypres Against this attack Ludendorff rushed his reserves, hoping by a counterattack not only to check the British advance but to relieve the pressure on other parts of the line.

Foch now struck his chief blow. 8 an attack was made by three British armies under Generals Byng, Rawlinson, and Horne, aided by the French under Debeney. On a front of 12 miles, between Cambrai and Saint-Quentin, the British drove 12 miles, straight through the Hindenburg line, and at a point where it was supposed to be the strongest. Both Saint-Quentin and Cambrai fell. The conscquences of this victory were enormous. The British pushed through into the open country wards Valenciennes and renewed their activity in the The Germans were forced to evacuate their stronghold at Laon and, October 16 to 18, had to give up the Belgian coast, Ostend, and Zeebrugge. The advance continued, and the Germans were steadily pushed out of Belgium, evacuating Bruges and being forced back toward Brussels. On November 2 the Canadians entered Valenciennes and with the French, who were advancing down the Sambre valley, took Manbenge on November 9 and entered Mons on November 11, a few hours before the signing of the armistice.

During the year 1918 various attempts were made to define the issues of the war in order that an understanding might be reached npon which peace negotiations could be conducted. In January President Wilson laid down his famous "fourteen points," which ultimately became the basis of the peace negotiations. During the year these were supplemented and amplified on several occasions, especially in his address of Sept. 27 at the Metropolitan Opera House, when he insisted that a League of Nations was the indispensable agent for the making of any peace.

Bulgaria surrendered September 30; and on Octo-states.

mendous burden placed upon the British marine in Aisne and advanced from four to six miles, reclaiming ber 4 the first German peace proposal was made. This asked for negotiations on the basis of the "four-teen points." On October 8 President Wilson, instead of making a direct response, questioned whether the chancellor was speaking "merely for the constituted authorities of the empire, who have so far conducted the war," and declined to propose an armistice as long as the Central Powers occupied Allied territory. This reply, while arousing some criticism in the United States, was regarded in London and Berica embracid distoration means in the don and Paris as a shrewd diplomatic move, in that it was an appeal from the German government to the people, showing the impossibility of cessation of war without surrender of the occupied territory.

Meanwhile the German submarine warfare continued and in their retreat the Germans were guilty of great devastation. This led President Wilson to of great devastation. This led President Wilson to assert in his communication of October 14 that no armistice could be granted while the German forces continued their illegal and inhuman practices. On Oct. 5 Austria-Hungary sent an offer to the United States (rec'd Oct. 7) to conclude an armistice on the basis of the "fourteen points." On Oct. 19, the President, in replying to the Austrian suggestion, pointed out that conditions had altered since January and that by the recognition of the Czecho-Slovak republic the integrity of Austria could no longer be preserved. On Oct. 20 Prince Maximilian, the German chancellor, stated that the new government of Germany was now such as was desired by the vast majority of the German people and that in the future no government could take office without having the confidence of the Reichstag. In the reply of October 23 the United States asserted that if it must deal with the military masters of Germany, it must lemand, not peace negotiations, but surrender.

On October 26 General Ludendorff resigned and on October 31 an armistice was granted to Turkey by which the Allies gained control of the Dar-danelles and the Bosporus and forced the demohidization of the Turkish army and the surrender of all war vessels in Turkish waters. On November 3 an armIstice was granted to Austria on even more severe terms than those given to Bulgaria and Tur-key. All Allied territory was to be evacuated, half the military equipment was to be handed over to the Allies, the Allies were to be given the right of free movement in Austro-Hungarian territory and to continne the existing blockade. The result was the dis-integration of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and the abdication of the emperor.

On November 8 a meeting between Marshal Foch and the German plenipotentiaries took place and on November 11 an armistice was signed. The military clauses of the armistice demanded not merely cessation of hostilities but the immediate evacuation of Belgium, France, Alsace and Lorraine, and the left bank of the Rhine. Vast military stores and 5,000 locomotives were to be turned over to the Allies to compensate for the seizure of French and Belgian material. Of the naval forces all submarines, 6 battle cruisers, 10 battleships, 8 light cruisers, and 50 destroyers were to be interned in a place designated by the Allies. German troops, moreover, were to evacuate the territories of Austria-Hungary, Roumania, Turkey, and Russia; and Germany was to renounce the treaties of Bucharest and Brest-Litovsk. The terms of this armistice were such that Germany was deprived of all power of resistance and would be forced to accept the treaty which the United States and the Allies should impose upon her.

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

The Peace Conference assembled in Paris, Jann-At this conference were represented ary 18, 1919. ary 18, 1919. At this conference were represented the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, as the five principal powers who took part in all sessions. In addition, the following powers were members of the conference and took part in essions especially affecting them: Belgium, Brazil, the four great British self-governing colonies, India. China, Cuba, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Hejaz, duras, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Serbia, Siam, and Czecho-Slovakia.

The representation of the several powers was fixed as follows: five members each were allowed the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan; Belgium, Brazil, and Serbia had three members each; China, Greece, Hejaz, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Siam, Czecho-Slovakia, Australia, Canada, South Africa, and India, two members each; Cuba, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru, Uruguay, and New Zealand, one member each. All important decisions were reached in the Supreme Council, composed of the ranking delegates of the five chief powers.

The problems which faced this assembly were more important and far-reaching than had faced any previous international conference. Not only was it necessary to deal with Germany and her allies but with new and weak states which had been formed out of their territory. The national aspirations of the five principal powers were not always in harmony, and these aspirations sometimes ran counter to the best interests of some of the newly created Moreover, the collapse of the German Empire and of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and the disintegration of Russia presented almost insoluble problems. The results of the conference were bound problems. The results of the conference were bound to be a series of compromises which would be completely satisfactory to no nation.

One of the most important accomplishments of the Peace Conference was the formation of a Covenant for a League of Natious. This League was to consist of the powers represented at the conference, together with such other powers as on invitation acceded to it. It provided for an Assembly at which each state had one vote, and a Council which should consist of the five principal powers and represnoting consist of the are principal powers and repre-sentatives of four other members selected by the Assembly. Measures were adopted to prevent war by the fixing of armaments and by arbitration, which should be earried out by the League. Members re-sorting to war in disregard of the Covenant would be debarred from intercourse with other members and the Council might take military, naval, or economic measures against them. A system, known as the mandatory, was evolved by which backward powers might be placed under the tutelage of mem-bers of the League. Provisions were inserted for a permanent international labor conference, the con-trol of trade in arms and ammunition, for freedom of communication, and equitable treatment for commerce of all members of the League.

The second act of the conference was to prepare a treaty to terminate the war with Germany. By this treaty Alsace-Lorraine was restored to France, and France was given the occupation of the Saar coal fields for a limited period in recompense for the destruction of her coal mines. An independent state of Poland was erected, and the southern and eastern frontiers of East Prussia were to be determined by plehiscites. More important to Germany, Danzig was made a free city under the supervision of the League of Nations. Czecho-Slovakia was recognized as an independent state, and the boundary of the Schleswig-Holstein region was to be readjusted in accordance with the expressed wishes of the population Germany, moreover, recognized the entire independence of German Austria

Outside of Europe, Germany surrendered all her colonies to the Allied and Associated powers, recognized the French protectorate in Morocco and the English protectorate in Egypt and accepted, in advance, all arrangements which might be made con-cerning Turkey and Bulgaria. To Japan Germany ceded all the rights and privileges she had acquired by lease from China in the peninsula of Shantung.

The military and naval clauses of the treaty amplifield the terms of the armistice. Compulsory mili-tary service was prohibited for Germany, and the size of the army and navy was fixed. Germany was obliged to accept the responsibility for the damage which the Allied and Associated powers had suffered and to make such restitution and reparation as might be determined upon. Stringent economic clauses and financial provisions were inserted which would seriously handicap any possible German com-mercial rivalry. The delegates of Germany staned this treaty June 28, 1919, and it was subsequently ratified by the German National Assembly, July 9, and put in force January 10, 1920

The work of the Peace Conference, however, was of finished. A treaty was prepared for Austria, not finished. which she signed September 10, 1919, by which German Austria was separated from Czecho-Slovakia, from Hungary, and from Jugo-Slavia. Her posses-sions in southern Tirol and at the head of the Adriatic were lost and Austria was confined to the part of the country occupied by Germans. Similar provisions were introduced by which Austria accepted the responsibility for the loss and damage of the Allied and Associated governments and promised such repara-tion as the Allies might determine. Provisions were introduced for the protection of minority national-ities and for the transference of citizenship to the states and to the territories acquired by Italy.

Another perplexing question which faced the conference was the disposition of Fiume. This city, with a small majority of Italians, lay within terri-tory occupied from time immemorial by Slavs and claimed by the new Serb-Croat-Slovene state (Jugo-Italy demanded Fiume, but the Peace 'onference, acting upon the suggestion of President Wilson, refused to accede to this demand. It was seized by an unauthorized force of Italian troops,

The most difficult problem which the Peace Conference faced was the question of Russia. Not only had the empire disintegrated, and certain por-tions, such as Finland and Poland been recognized as independent states by the Allies, but the Russian government, in the hands of the Bolsheviki, was such that no power was willing to treat with it. England, the United States, and Japan, had troops in her territory and were at war with the Bolshevist government. Various proposals were read health Various proposals were made looking to the settlement of this question but no solution was reached by the beginning of 1920. Thus, the eastern boundaries of Poland, the northern boundary of Rou-mania, and the questions of the Baltic Provinces are still unsettled, nor does the solution seem imminent.

WESTERN FRONT, 1916.

Feb. 21. Verdun campaign begins with a stupendous German bembardment on a 6-mile sector north and east of the Meuse. Reduction of Verdun salient by Germans would end its menace against the iron fields of Briey basin and extend against the fron fields of Briegy asin and excend the German front. Infantry attack begins the next day. February 25, Fort de Douaumont, one of main outer defenses, falls. Pétain succeeds as French commander. His policy of counterat-tacks checks German advance.

June 24. Allied artillery preparation begins battle of the Somme. Bombardment lasts a week over the German Noyon salient between Arras and La Fère.

July 1. Allied attack begins on both sides of the Somme, with Bapaume and Péronne as ob-jectives. By July 5 British have taken German first line on a front of 6 miles north from Fricourt on the river. French advance a depth of six miles on a front of 10 miles and by July 9 are across French advance a depth of six miles the river from Péronne. German counterattacks after July 14 stay French advance.

July 14. Halg begins his attack on the German second line and takes Pozières on July 25, but losses are great and German counterattacks check the British advance and also prevent eon-quest of the ridge from Thiepval southeast, which commands the Bapaume-Péronne road.

Aug. 4. Haig attacks the Thiepval salient, but Germans retain possession throughout the month Aug. 29. Von Falkenhayn, German chief of staff, primarily responsible for Verdun attack, succeeded by Hindenburg.

Sept. 3. Allies resume the drive north of the Somme with Combles as immediate objective. Tanks used for the first time in this drive. September 4, attack begins also south of the river with Chaulnes as objective. September 26, Germany evacuates Combles. September 26, British finally capture Thlepval. October 7, British capture Le Sars, which puts them within 4 miles of Bapaume, but the advance is stayed here vember 18, the battle ends with the reduction by the British of the salient formed on the Ancre by the advance south of it. French fail to capture Chaulnes. Results of prolonged battle leave German line intact but badly dented and lead to the completion in the rear by the Germans of a continuous fortified system of defenses called the Hindenburg line.

Oct. 24. Nivelle at Verdun recovers Fort de

Douaumont. November 2, Fort de Vaux reoccupied. December 15-16, French attack north of Douaumont recovers much ground, and later the original French lines are almost completely restored.

WESTERN FRONT, 1918.

March 21. Von Ludendorff begins first great German offensive of the year. Ultimate purpose to crush French and British before American force turns scale. Peace on eastern front has enabled Germany to concentrate forces on western front. Attack made along the Somme (Picardy) to drive wedge between British and French armies and roll former back on Channel. Breaks through British Fifth Army (Alarch 22) west of Saint-Quentin. March 26, Allies finally unify their forces; Foeh made generalissimo. Germans continue advance threatening Amiens; but gap in Allied forces closed. March 27, Germans take Montdidier and Albert, south and north of Amiens. Attack shifts to Arras, but fails entirely to take Vimy Ridge. Minor German advances continue until April 5. When line is stabilized Germans are farther west than in 1916, and within easy range of Amens, most important of Allied [long-distance cannon.

March 23. First bombardment of Parls by April 9. Second great attack begins; this time in Flanders up Lys Valley south of Ypres, to envelop that city and advance to the coast west of it. Attack penetrates near La Bassée, takes Armentières, April 10, and reaches Merville. April 15, attack made north of Ypres, recovering ground gained by British in 1917. French reënforcements (Foch's Army of Maneuver) arrive, April 16, and advance checked. April 18, German efforts southeast toward Béthune fail, but man efforts southeast toward Bethune fail, but April 25, Kemmel captured and Ypres gravely threatened from south. However, assault on southwest line fails, April 29, and offensive ends without opening way to the coast.

May 27. Ludendorff, abandoning Channel ports for Paris as objective, launches third attack in Champagne on lightly-held line north of the Aisne (Chemin des Dames). May 28, Soissons taken and Marne reached May 31. June 1, Château-Thierry reached and becomes apex of salient. June 1-3, German attack on western line of salient between Château-Thierry and Soissons. June 6, French and Americans combine attack on southern end of west line around Bouresches (Marines in Belleau Wood), throw Germans on defensive and end the advance, which has given Germans 650 square miles of territory, but left them in a dangerous pocket.

May 28. First important engagement of May 28. First important engagement of American troops, at Cantigny, near Montdi-dier. Strong German position seized and held against counterattacks.

June 9-11. German fourth offensive, intended to flatten out French salient around Compicgne between Picardy and the Marne, advances by attack between Noyon and Montdidier. Stopped by counterattacks with only slight gains, as are also attacks farther south between Soissons and Châtean-Thierry (June 11-13).

July 15. Ludendorff's fifth and final offensive on east side of Marne salient and east of Reims to pinch out the French salient between this and Saint-Mihiel lines, causing evacuation of Verdun, and getting elbow room for advance on Paris. Attack east of Reims breaks down at once. July 15-18, Germans cross the Marne toward Condéen-Brie but fail to drive Americans from river near Châtean-Thierry.

July 18. Allied grand counteroffensive in-augurated and does not step until armistice. First phase to wipe out Aisne-Marne salient begins by Franco-American surprise attack on west side of salient. Château-Thlerry retaken July 21, Fère-en-Tardenois taken, and the Ourcq reached July 29. Meanwhile Germans retire from east side of salient, and whole force pushed back to the Vesle. August 2, Soissons retaken, and Germans retire on the Aisne lines. Ends first phase, with practical elimination of the salient.

Second phase, battle of Amlens, begins; attack on the Picardy salient on both sides of the Somme. Angust 10, Montdidier evacuated by Germans. August 13, Allies before Chaulnes and Roye, where German defense stiffens. Foch accordingly shifts point of attack, August 18-21, and flanks the Chaulnes-Roye line by an advance which wipes out gain of German fourth offensive and envelops Neyon.

Aug. 21. Haig attacks opposite Bapaume and farther sonth. Albert captured August 22.

August 23, drive along the whole line from Neyon to Arras begins, resulting in the capture of Roye August 26, Chaulnes August 28, Noyon, Combles, and Bapaume August 29, Péroune September 1.

Aug. 26. British attack east of Arras below the Scarpe, and by September 3 have erased the Quéant-Drecourt line of the Hindenburg system and forced a general retreat down to the Somme. Lens evacuated September 3.

Sept. 12-17. Battle shifts to a line southwest of Cambrai, and, September 18-19, still farther south to before Saint-Quentin, which French develop from the south. Except around Chemin des Dames, German sallent in Pleardy has now been wlped out. By September 6, Germans have also voluntarily retired from the Lys River salient south of Ypres.

Sept. 12-13. Third phase. American army, under Pershing, now acting for the first time as a unit, with French troops, drives the Germans out of the Saint-Mihlel salient, bringing Metz within range of the long-distance guns.

Sept. 26. Fourth phase of simultaneous attacks begins. (1) Americans and French launch the Mense-Argonne offensive from Verdun to east of Reims. Attack aims at the vital supply and evacuation line through Sedan and Mézières, 30 miles north, and flanks the enemy's Aisne lines (Chemin des Dames). Americans advance rapidly in Argonne Forest for three days. Attack resumed October 4, but then as Germans resist obstinately in order to hold this pivotal position, it advances slowly until the end of October, when the forest has been cleared and the German main line from Grandpré eastward penetrated. French on west meanwhile pushing down the Aisne to union with Americans at Grandpré, key of the Krlemhilde (east) and Hundling sections of German second withdrawal line. October 8, attack begins on the cast of the Meuse against the point on which the German general retreat must The third phase of the American attack begins The third phase of the American area on November 1, and advance is again rapid and troops are acress the river from Sedan November 7. After that date the operation is mainly pursuit of the retiring enemy east of the river.

Sept. 27. (2) Haig and the French make the final assault on the Hludenburg line at Saint-Quentin and the Canal du Nord. Line pierced September 29, Saint-Quentin taken October 1, and October 5 British again before Cambrai. City taken October 9, and Le Cateau, October 10. Sept. 28. (3) Allied troops under King Albert advance in Flauders between Ypres and Dixmude.

advance in Flanders netween 1925. Farther south Dixmude occupied September 29. Farther south Advance forces Messines Ridge taken same day. Ad evacuation of Armentières October 3.

Sept. 30. (4) West of the Argonne opera-Reims and force the enemy to retire to the Aisne.

October 9, Germans compelled to evacuate Moron-October 9, Germans compelled to evacuate Moron-villiers Heights, from which they have shelled Reins and the cathedral; also, Bazancourt on October 7. Farther west Germans evacuate Chemin des Dames October 12, the position here not only attacked in front, but flanked by the French advance beyond Saint-Quentin, up the Oise. La Fère and Laon taken October 13, and Germans fall back on the Hunding line, already menaced on both flanks by American and French advance. Oct. 14. (3a) Flanders offensive renewed. Menin and Roulers taken that day, Ostend October 17, and Dutch boundary reached October 20, Germans having evacuated Zeehrugge and Bruges, and retired to Ghent. Oct. 17. (5) Douai occupied by forces oper-ating between the Flanders and Picardy offensives, and Germans abandon Lille next day.

Oct. 17. (2a) Haig attacks the German line of the Selle south of Valenciennes. This crossed (October 20), attack renewed (October 23) towards Forest of Mormal and against Valenciennes, which city falls November 2

The French east of Saint-Quentin drive the Germans between the Oise and Serre, while farther east the Hunding line north of the Aisne is assaulted.

Nov. 4. A general assault precipitates the German retreat along the whole line from the Mense to the Scheldt. (4b) Guise, on the Oise, and Vervins farther east taken, November 5, from the west, and Bethel on the Aisne from the south by the French, who reach outskirts of Mézières on November 8, while (1a) Americans have approached Sedan. November 8, (2b) British take Tournai on the Scheldt and, November 9, Manbeuge on the Sambre; while Mons, the place from which the British retreat began in 1914, is occu-which the British retreat began in 1914, is occupied November 11, and farther north Grammont, within 20 miles of Brussels.

Nov. 11. Armistice signed and in operation. At this time German Hae runs through Ghent southeast to east of Sedan and by the border of Alsace-Lorraine to the Swiss boundary. By terms of armistice Germans to evacuate France, Belgium, Luxemburg, and Alsace-Lorraine within two weeks, surrender a vast amount of ordnance and equipment, repatriate (without reciprocity) prisoners, and make reparations. Allies to occupy territory west of the Rhine with extensive bridgeheads east of the river at Mainz (French), Koblenz (American), and Celogne (British); Germany to pay for upkeep of army of occupation. All submarines and 6 battle cruisers and 10 battleships, 8 light cruisers, and 50 destroyers to be surrendered, and all other warships disarmed and placed under Allied supervision. Blockade to continue. Germans to withdraw from Russia, Roumania, and Turkey. Treaties of Bucharest and Brest-Litevsk to be abandoned and payments under them restored. These terms make impossible any renewal of the war by Germany.

Nov. 17. Allied imopposed advance toward Germany begins; boundary crossed December I. Troops reach Cologne Dec. 6, Koblenz Dec. 9, and Mainz Dec. 9, though formal entries come later.

EASTERN, ITALIAN, AND BALKAN FRONTS, 1918. See also Esthonia, Livonia, Lithuania, Latvia, Finland, Poland, Russia,

June 15. Austrians attempt a desperate offensive over nearly the whole front; too extensive to succeed. Minor gains especially at vital elbow of line, Montello plateau, annulled by Italian counteroffensive June 18–July 6.

July 7. Italians controlling Adriatic with French assistance attempt advance in Albania, but do not reach objective, Elbasan. Austrians counterattack in August and drive Allies back to old lines.

By these treaties Great Britain, France, and Italy undertake to preserve the integrity of Abyssinia, to maintain the "open door" as far as concessions are concerned, and to abstain from intervening in internal affairs

The Abyssinians were converted to Christianity in the fourth century and have remained members of the Alexandrian Church. The government is mo-narchical, and from 1889 to 1913 the emperor was Menelik, who in his attempt to check Italian aggression, became involved in war. The Italian forces were decisively defeated at the battle of Adowa (March 1, 1896), and as a result Menelik was recog-

Afghanistan was conquered by the emperor Tamerlane, who died in 1405. Sultan Baber added a part of Afghanistan including Kabul to his domains and for two centuries it belonged to India and was ruled by the Mogul emperors.

The Persian Nadir Shah seized it in 1738. In 1749 a separate empire was formed by Ahmad Shah, who defeated the Marathas in 1761 and gave the country a national character. After Ahmad came Timur Khan, who transferred his capital from Kandahar to Kabul. Among his twenty-three sons a strife arose for the succession. Soon afterwards Sir William Macnaghten was murdered by Akbar Khan, son of Dost Mohammed. An agreement was made for the withdrawal of the British garrison from the country; but the march of the 690 Europeans from Kabul to Jalalabad was a massacre. Only 23 of the number reached Jalalahad, though 95 prisoners were ultimately liberated.

To avenge this outrage an expedition in 1842 un-der General Pollock forced the Khyber Pass and relieved Jalalabad. Dost Mohammed was restored to the throne as a friend of the British government. After his death Shere Ali Khan came to the throne with the aid of Great Britain and succeeded in extending his anthority over Afghan-Turkistan on the borders of the Russian conquests. The boundary of the Amu Darya (ancient Oxus) River was obtained by the influence of Great Britain, which had now adopted the policy of maintaining Afghanistan as the frontier barricade of her Indian possessions

Shere Ali Khan was at length obliged to fly from Kabul by his son, Yakub Khan, who proved hostile to England. A British army was sent into the country and Kabul was captured (1878). Again the British envoy and his followers were massacred, and second invasion was necessary in order to avenge the crime and restore order.

Yakub Khan was succeeded in 1880 by Abd-er-Rahman Khan, grandson of Dost Mohammed, supported by British influence. A more regular and ported by British influence. A more regular and orderly government was established. In 1896 the army was reorganized, regular conscription established, and the troops armed with European weapons. Abd-er-Rahman was succeeded by his son, Habib Ullah Khan, who (1905) promised to observe the agreement of his father and to be guided by the advice of the British government in external affairs, Russia declared Afghanistan outside her sphere of influence, and Great Britain agreed not to interfere in internal affairs, provided the ameer fulfilled his obligations to the British government. Habib Ullah Khan was assassinated February 20, 1919, and was succeeded by his third son, Amanullah Khan, and attacks upon the British have followed on the northwestern frontier of India.

Government and Finance. The government of Afghanistan is monarchical and nearly absolute. The ameer receives a subsidy of 1,850,000 rupees from the Indian government, and his total revenue amounts to about 13,000,000 rupees.

Vegetables and cereals are also raised in paying quantities in the Vegetables and fertile plains and valleys, often with the aid of irrigation from small rivers or wells. There are two harvests in the year in most parts of the country, one reaped in the summer, the other in antumn. The principal minerals are copper and lead, although iron produced and gold is found in small quantities. The leading manufactures are silk and carpets, felts and articles made of camel's and goat's hair. In 1916-17 the imports from India amounted to $6,750,000 and the exports to India amounted to $5,700,000.

Defense. The Afghan army is said to number 98,000 men. The real military strength lies in the mountainous character of the country, the lack of roads, and the capacity of the inhabitants for guerrilla warfare.

Albania is situated on the western shore of the Balkan Peninsula, extending from the southern boundary of Montenegro (now part of Jugo-Slavia) to the northern boundary of Greece. It is perhaps It is perhaps the least-known country in Europe, and the wildness of the land and the fierce and lawless disposition of the people have combined to discourage travelers and explorers, so that many of the geographical problems are still unsolved.

The native Albanians are probably descendants from the oldest people in Europe — the old Mediterranean race which occupied the Balkan Peninsula before the coming of the Greeks. While elsewhere the Mediterraneau race was conquered by the Greco-Roman invasions of antiquity and later the Slavonic invasion of the Balkans absorbed or displaced the classic Greeks, the people of Albania have remained to a great extent unaffected by foreign influence.

After the division of the Roman Empire the territory inhabited by the Albanians became provinces of the Byzantine Empire. In 640, northern Albania was conquered by the Serbo-Croats and remained under Serbian rule until 1360, although in the ninth and tenth conturies the Bulgarians under the Czar Simeon controlled the country (see Bulgaria). the eleventh century the Normans made themselves masters of Durazzo, while in the fourteenth century Stephen Dushan added Albania to his short-lived Afghanistan is geographically a lofty quadrilateral platean lying between northwestern India, eastern Persia, and Russia. Scrbia and Montenegro hoped to partition Albania, but in this they were thwarted by the powers (see Austral, Sprain); an "independent" kingdom of Albania was erected under the protection of the powers, and a German prince, William of Wied, placed upon the throne. At the outbreak of the World War William fled, and Albania fell into a state of anarchy. In 1916 the Austrians occupied the country, but June 3, 1917, the general in charge of the Italian forces set up a provisional government at Durazzo, and southern Albania, though nominally independent, is actually an Italian protectorate.

Religion and Education. Two thirds of the Albanians are Moslems, and the remaining one third are divided between the Roman Catholic and Greek Churches. Under Turkish rule little was done for education. There are schools maintained by the education Jesuits and the Orthodox Greek Church and by American missionaries.

Buenos Aires was first founded by Mendoza in 1535 — thirty years before the founding of Saint Angustine in Florida — but the settlement was not permanent. An expedition sent out by him explored the valley of the Rio de la Plata as far as Paraguay and founded Asunción (1536). At first this region was regarded as a province of the Spanish viceroyalty of Peru. This relation was held until 1620. when Bucnos Aires (Colonias de la Plata) separate provincial government from Philip III.

The Spanish colonial system attempted to monopolize for Spain all the trade with the colonists and to prohibit intercolonial trade. But forbidden traffic was bound to flourish in the face of such restrictions. From 1715 to 1739 England held the contract (asiento) for supplying the Spanish American colonists with negro slaves, and in so doing contrived both to smuggle in and carry away a large quantity of goods. In 1776 a viceroyalty was formed of the provinces of Rio de la Plata, Paragnay, Uruguay, and Bolivia, with Buenos Aires as its capital.

In the wars of the French Revolution Spain sided with France against Great Britain; and in reprisal with France against Great Britain; and in reprisal General William Beresford in 1806 landed a body of troops and held Buenos Aires for about two months. In 1807 another British force of 8,000 under General Whitelocke attempted to regain possession of Buenos Aires, but was compelled to capitulate. The successful defense of Buenos Aires without aid from the mother country strengthened the growing feeling of dissatisfaction and led to a revolt, which was aided by popular resentment at efforts to which was aided by popular resentment at efforts to secure the province for France.

May 25, 1810, a provisional junta was formed and the war of independence began. The most fa-mous leader was General José de San Martín, who defeated the adherents of Spain. March 25, who deteated the adherents of Spain. March 25, 1816, a republic was proclaimed; and Buenos Aires was declared the regular seat of the government. Although the independence of Argentina was thus assured in 1816, the war with Spain dragged on until San Martín crossed the Andes, set free Chile and Peru, and finally captured Lima, in 1821

The Spanish government, however, did not acknowledge this actual independence until 1842. In 1825 a national constitution of the federal states which formed the Argentine Republic was decreed, and the English government acknowledged its inde-pendence. Peace, however, was long delayed, for pendence. Argentina was involved both in civil wars and in war

His policy was to reincorporate Uruguay and Paraguay into the republic, and he was so indifferent to the rights of foreign residents that, in 1835, a French fleet was sent to blockade Buenos Aires. His rule gradually degenerated into one of tyranny and bloodshed. In his attempt to control Uruguay he laid siege to Montevideo. This brought about the joint intervention of the French and English fleets in 1845. In 1853 a new constitution, modeled upon that of the United States, was adopted; Buenos Aires, at first resisting, gave her adherence, in 1855. In 1856 war broke out gave her adherence, in 1855. lar, and compulsory for children from 6 to 14 years of age. In 1917 there were more than 8,000 public primary schools, with more than a million pupils. There are 37 national colleges, with over 11,000 students, and 33 private institutions of the same grade.

Industry and Production. Argentina possesses more than 250,000,000 aeres which may be used for agricultural purposes or cattle industries. Of this area about 10,000,000 acres require irrigation and 58,000,000 acres were under cultivation in 1917. It is one of the great wheat-growing countries of the world and in 1917-18 produced about 6,000,000 tons of wheat, 4,000,000 tons of maize, and 1,000,000 tons of oats. Cotton, tobacco, and wine are also produced and the sugar industry is growing rapidly. Argentina is famous for its live-stock industry, and in 1915 it was estimated that there were 30,000,000 cattle, 9,000,000 horses, 81,000,000 sheep, and 4,000,000 goats. The total wool clip amounted to more than goats. The total wool clip amounted to more than 180,000 tons. Mining is of no great importance, although gold, silver, and copper are worked on a small scale. Before the World War Argentina exported more to Great Britain than to any other country, and imported more from it. From 1915 to 1919, however, the United States ranked first, both in imports to and exports from Argentina.

Defense. Military service is compulsory on all men from the 20th to the 45th year. For the first ten years they belong to the active army and then pass into the national guard, where they serve for ten years and finish their service with five years in the territorial guard. The greater proportion of the annual contingents are trained for only three months, but a part serve for one year. There are five military districts, each of which is supposed to provide on mobilization a complete division of the first line and also a reserve division, irrespective of the national guard and territorial troops. The total peace establishment of the army is 25,000 officers and men, and the reserve numbers 250,000. The navy is in the process of transformation and consists chiefly of two modern, dreadening the and a four determinant. modern dreadnoughts and a few destroyers. other vessels are of little military value.

Finance. Owing to the frequent revolutions and extravagant and ill-advised financial policies of the dictators, the financial condition of Argentina is not good. There is a bonded debt of nearly $500,000,000, gold, and $223,000,000, paper, and also a floating debt of $572,000,000, paper. The annual charges on the public debt amount to $126,000,000, paper, about a third of the total revenue, which ordinarily

The estimated area is 1,153,119 square miles and the population in 1918, 8,279,159.

ARMENIA.

Historical Outline.

The northern and central portions of Asia Minor have for ages been occupied by the Armenian race, which has maintained its language, religion, culture, and national characteristics in the face of conquests and oppression by Roman, Persian, Byzantine, and Turkish masters. Xenophon passed through the land on his famous Retreat of the Ten Thousand (401-400 B. c.). It was a Roman province. Christianity was adopted under Sapor, about 300 A. D.; and the Armenians are, therefore, the earliest people to make Christianity the national faith.

Armenia was a province in the Empire of the Ottoman Turks from 1514 A.D. The Turks followed their usual policy of permitting Christian subjects to exercise the faith, while depriving them of all national and political power. Nevertheless, the business and statesmanlike abilities of the Armenians caused their spread into other parts of the empire, including Constantinople.

When Russia began to press upon Turkey, the Armenians were again brought into the war frontier. the Peace of Berlin (1878) Armenia was divided and Russia took over the northern area, between the Black and Caspian Seas. Part of the Armenians were in Persia. Meanwhile the Armenians in all parts of the Turkish Empire were selected by the fanatical Turks under Sultan Abdul Hamid as enemies of the Turkish dispensation, subject to plunder and murder. Brutal massacres of Armenians in the capital and elsewhere occurred in 1896; and again under the régime of the Young Turks in 1909.

When the World War broke out the Armenian young men were called up into the army, except those who took flight. Then followed one of the most frightful massacres of history. The Armenians left at home were called upon to give up their arms. When disarmed, they were set upon by Kurds and other enemy tribes and by the regular Turkish authorities, acting under pressure from the Germans. Men, women, and children were swept up and started on horrible journeys to distant parts of the empire, most of them perishing on the way. fewer than 1,500,000 lives were thus sacrificed

Russian forces came to the rescue of the unhappy country, and the Armenians made such organiza-tion as was possible for self-defense. In 1918 they formed the Republic of Armenia on the Russian side with a provisional ministry. The Turks, however held the southern area and after hostilities in We The Turks, however ern Europe ended went on killing Armenians. The question of national existence has been complicated the founding of a Georgian republic in the north and the Republic of Azerbaijan in the east. purpose of the Turks was to destroy the nation by killing so many that they might then set up the plea that an Armenian republic would contain only a minority of Armenians, and would thus violate the principle of self-determination.

The Armenians sent delegates to the Congress of Paris, but were coolly received by the Congress. They were finally declared independent by the treaty of peace of June, 1919, and the Turkish treaty of May 20, 1920; but the Turkish raids still continued They urged the United States to accept a mandate for them; and President Wilson agreed to be arbiter of their boundary difficulties, but the Senate declined that responsibility. In the spring of 1920 the Armenians were still imperfectly organized; and what was left of the Turkish nationalistic forces were trying to destroy them.

Almost all the country occupied or claimed as a port by an impartial commission.

In the lower districts eotton is raised. The people are industrious and thrifty. Rug making has been a traditional pursuit for ages. The people are intelligent and intensely devoted to their own national church. The people of the Armenian race are widely scattered through Asia Minor and they claim Cilicia on the Mediterranean. Many thousand Armenians have emigrated to America. The total population of Armenian race and language in Europe and Asia when the World War broke out was estimated at 2,400,000, of whom a million were in Russian Armenia and perhaps $00,000 in various parts of Turkey.

AUSTRIA.

Historical Outline.

THE title Emperor of Austria, is a modern term and was assumed in 1804 by Francis II, who, in 1806, divested himself of the ancient title derived from the Holy Roman Empire. The state of Austria, however, is of ancient origin. The territory now called Austria was inhabited by Celtic tribes who were conquered by the Romans about 14 B. c. Vindohona, modern Vienna, became an important Roman settle ment. North of the Danube dwelt the Marcemanni the district was settled by the Slovenes, who subsequently became members of the kingdom of the After Charlemagne had established his authority over the Bavarians he began a campaign against the Avars, and finally incorporated them in his empire and erected a border state called the East

The real founder of Austria, however, was Otto the Great, who in 955 overthrew the Magyars, freed Bavaria, and refounded the East Mark for the de-fense of his kingdom. The control of this region was entrusted to Leopold, a member of the family of Babenberg, which administered it until the middle of the thirteenth century. In 1156 Austria was raised to the rank of a duchy and given special privits territory increased until it occupied substantially the boundaries it had in 1914. The Danube trade was large and profitable, and Vienna became one of the most important German-speaking cities

In 1282 Austria came into the possession of the family of the Hapsburgs, who continued to rule it until the forced abdication of the last Austrian emperor, Charles I. (1918). The first great Austrian history was that of Maximilian I. The first great period in ceeded in recovering Vienna from the Hungarians, and greatly added to the Austrian territory, intil it included nearly 50,000 square miles. In 1518 repre-sentatives of the various Austrian provinces met at Innsbruck, a proceeding which marks the beginning of the unified organic government of Austria.

Maximilian was succeeded by his grandson, King Charles of Spain, who became emperor under the title The Austrian lands were given or Charles V. The Austrian lands were given to Ferdinand, the hrother of Charles, and thus Spain and Austria remained divided. Ever since the Turks appeared north of the Danube, Austria had been the In 1526 Solvman the Magnifibulwark of Europe. ent defeated and killed the king of Bohemia and Hungary, thereby obtaining the greater part of Hun-In 1530 the Turks besieged Vienna, and Ferdinand agreed to pay them tribute for the small portion of Hungary which he still held.

During the early years of the Thirty Years' War Austria gained ground against the northern Protestant states of Germany. With the entry of France in 1635 the war became a struggle between France and the House of Hapsburg. After the Peace of Westphalia, in 1648, Austria was forced to allow Alsace to pass to France and to permit the states the empire to make independent alliances. lloly Roman Empire, as a political force, practi-cally ceased, although it was not formally abolished until 1806

In the latter half of the seventeenth century Austria, under Leopold I., was involved in wars with Turkey and was only saved from the loss of Vienna and the destruction of the state by the intervention of the Polish king, John Sobieski. In 1699 peace was finally made at Karlowitz by which Slavoma, Transylvania, and practically all of Hungary were ceded to the Austrian crown By the acts of the Diet of Pressburg the Hungarian crown was made hereditary in the Hapsburg family, and in 1697 Transylvania was united to the Hungarian monarchy. The personal union between Austria and Hungary continued, though Hungary was not a part of the empire.

During the eighteenth century Austria, in common with the rest of Europe, was involved in the War of the Spanish Succession, as the result of which Austria received the Spanish Netherlands, Sardinia, and Naples

In 1740 Emperor Charles VI, died and was succeeded in the Austrian and Hungarian kingdoms by his daughter, Maria Theresa. This was the signal for an attack upon the Austrian dominions, beginning the War of the Austrian Succession the Great of Prussia, with the support of France, seized Silesia; England supported Austria. The war ended in 1748 with the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, by which Austria ceded Silesia to Prussia

In 1756 an alliance was made between France and Austria to withstand the aggressions of Frederick the Great, and the Seven Years' War began. Great Britain now supported Prussia. By the Peace of Hubertsburg, in 1763, Germany was practically dibetween Austria and Prussia. In 1772 came the first partition of Poland, by which Austria received the great province of Galicia.

The French Revolution brought Austria and France again into conflict, although Queen Marie Antoinette was an Austrian princess In 1792 France declared war, and Austria, in alliance with Prissia, began a twenty years' struggle. The first phase of the war came to an end with the Treaty of Campoformido (or Campoformio) October 17, 1797, by which Austria lost the Belgian provinces, but gained Venice. In 1793 had come the second parti-tion of Poland, which marked the end of that buffer state, and brought Russia, Prussia, and Austria in touch with one another. The rise of Napoleon caused a renewal of the war, and after the decisive battle of Austerlitz the Treaty of Pressburg (1805)

Russia, among whom were the Huns; and in 590 A.D. of Germany. Six months later Francis I., who since 1804 had borne the title of Emperor of Austria, abdicated the title and functions of "German Em-German Emperor in the Realm." Austria, always hostile in spirit to Napoleon, in 1813 joined the Grand Alliance and shared in the battle of Leipzig which opened the way for a victorious advance into France

The congress which was to resettle the affairs of Europe was held at Vienna in 1814 and 1815. der the guidance of Count Metternich, its prime minister, Austria received all the territories lost since 1792, except Belgium and Breslau, and was restored in Lombardy, Tirol, and Venetia. Until 1848 Met-ternich dominated the Austrian policy and established a system of repression and reaction, which extended to Prussia, France, and the German state. So successful was he that the Revolutions of 1830 hardly affected Austria.

During this period Hungary was kept in semidependence. In 1848 Hungary, under the lead of Kossuth, broke into open revolt and would have secured independence but for the armies of Russia which came to the rescue of Francis Joseph.

During the next fifteen years Austria dominated Hungary and was the leading power in Germany. Slowly the rival, Prussia, forged ahead and, after 1860, founded its system of universal military service. In 1864 Austria was aroused by the Prinssian victory over Denmark, but could not rise to the danger of war and was overwhelmed by Prussia in the Seven Weeks' War of 1866. By the Peace of Prague Austria agreed to withdraw altogether from German affairs, and was allowed to retain all her

In 1867 a working arrangement was reached with Hungary, resulting in the formation of the Dual Monarchy. The German victory of 1871 over France and the establishment of a German Empire still further diminished the power of Austria in Europe. Meanwhile the Austrian Empire was struggling with its racial problems.

The Austro-Hungarian Monarchy was composed of two equal, distinct, and independent composite states with two capitals, Vienna for Austria and Budapest for Hnngary. Each had its own parlia-ment and its own ministry and administration. The two kingdoms were united in the person of the monarch, who was emperor of Austria and king of Hun-Certain affairs were also regarded as common for both and they were administered by a joint ministry with three departments, foreign affairs, and finance The only common deliberative hody was a Delegation of 60 members from each part of the monarchy, which met alternately at Vienna and Budapest

In both kingdoms there was racial heterogeneity; in each there was a dominant race. In Austria the Germans were the largest single race element (9,000,000), but were outnumbered in the total by large groups of Czecho-Slovaks (6,000,000), Poles (5,000,000), Ruthenians (3,000,000), and Slovenes (1,000,000). In Hungary the Magyars numbered 10,000,000, but they were outnumbered in the total by Roumanians (3,000,000), Germans (2,000,000), Slovaks (1,900,000), Croatians (1,800,000), Serbians (1,100,000), Ruthenians, and others. Many of these minority races were separated from their kinsmen in other states and there was constant striving for autonomy within the monarchy and aspirations for union with their kinsmen outside. In Galicia the Poles, though in a minority, gained control of the Diet and enjoyed greater autonomy than did their kinsmen who suffered under Prussian or Russian rule. In Bohemia the struggle was more severe and the Czechs were kept in cultural subjection as well as political bond age to the Germans. Bosnia and Herzegovina, with a population of 2,000,000, were practically Austrian pendencies, making 17,000,000 people ruled by 9.000.000 Germans.

In foreign policy, the Dual Monarchy has had a varied history. By the Treaty of Berlin in 1878-Austria-Hungary received the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, nominally under Turkish suzerainty. Although forced to consent to the continuance of the Balkan states of Bulgaria, Roumania, and Serbia, Austria looked askance at the establishment of Slav states, lest the Slavic peoples within her borders should desire to unite with them. Thus she regarded with no friendly eyes the growing sentiments of nationality in Serbia. In 1908, after the Turkish Revolution, she formally annexed the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, thereby arousing the hostile feeling of the Slavs. At the close of the first Balkan War of 1913, Anstria persuaded the great powers to establish the kingdom of Albania, thereby preventing Serhia from obtaining an access As a result, Serbia was inspired with bitter hatred and a passionate desire to unite all Serbs, whether in Anstria or elsewhere, in one state was one of the direct causes of the World War.

The German-Hungarian ruling statesmen had long ought an occasion of war with Russia. The immediate break came from the assassination of Archduke and the Quadi, who threatened the peace of the Roman Empire during the reign of Marcus Aurelins.

This region was frequently invaded by tribes from federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible, and in a federation of the Rhine was formed to break the unity held the Serbian government responsible and the serbian government responsib brutal ultimatum demanded abject reparation from Serbia. Acting upon the advice of Russia, Serbia consented to these demands, but Austria, which had industry and Lahor. Within the diversified high state of efficiency and at the outbreak of the war included 4 dreadnoughts, 12 predreadnoughts, 18 destroyers, 63 torpedo boats, 11 submarines, and consented to these demands, but Austria, which had already secured the backing of Germany, alleged that the submission was not sufficiently complete, and declared war upon Serbia. This caused Russia to mobilize in defense of her Slavic kinsmen. many was seeking a cause of open war and mobilized against both Russia and her ally, France.

During the World War, Austria fighting for herself was unsuccessful. 'The first invasion was repulsed by Serbia. The Russians were able to penetrate Galicia, to capture Przemyśl, and to threaten an invasion of the great Hungariea plajne. The Austrian vasion of the great Hungarian plains. The Austrian Slavs realized that they were fighting against their own cause, and in some cases went over to the enemy. During these campaigns Italy in 1916 was able to eanture Görz and to win a foothold on the Carso (Karst) plateau and threaten the road to Laibach (1917)

The Germans had to come to the aid of the Austrians. With combined German and Austrian forces they completely vanquished Serbia and Montenegro 1915-16, threw back the threatened invasion Russia, and, in 1917, regained from Italy the lest ground and drove the Italians behind the Piave Until 1918 the Allies had not considered the dismemberment of Austria-Hungary; but the de-mands of the Czecho-Slovaks were finally answered by the recognition of their independence (France, June 30, 1918), and Italy approved of the aspirations of the Jugo-Slavs for an independent state.

The collapse came suddenly in September, 1918 The Austrian armies, no longer reënforced by the Germans, were driven from their positions in Macedenia and Bulgaria, and made unconditional sur render September 30, 1918. In the last week of October the Italians broke up the Austrian armies on their territory. November 3, Austria accepted an armistice, dictated by the Italians. Three days before, revolutions broke out in Budapest and Viand on November 11 the Emperor Charles abdicated; next day the German-Austrian republic was proclaimed.

1919, a national constitutional In Fehruary. assembly was elected on the basis of universal suf-frage. In this chamber the Social Democrats obtained 70 seats; the Christian Socialists, 64; Liberals, 23. In spite of rumors that the monarchy was to be reëstablished, no head was chosen for the state, the executive power being placed in the hands of a cabinet, headed by Dr. Karl Renner. Throughout the summer of 1919 there were serious outbreaks and communistic demonstrations, but these were finally quelled and the government accepted the treaty drawn by the Allies.

Organization.

Government. Until the overthrow of the Dual Monarchy, Austria was governed by a Reichsrath, or legislature, consisting of two houses. The upper house was composed of princes of the imperial family (14); nobles in whose family by nominations of the emperor the dignity was hereditary (81); archbishops (10); bishops (7); other life members nominated by the emperor (159); a total of 271. The lower house, of 516 members, was chosen on the basis of universal, equal, direct suffrage by Austrian male eitizens over 24 years of age.

The powers of the Reichsrath were those which ordinarily belong to a parliamentary body. All laws, including the budget, must have been passed by both houses; and all treaties, which placed a fiscal by both houses, and an treaties, which placed a fiscal burden upon the monarchy or the citizens or in-volved any change in the territorial status, must have been ratified by it. Either house might inter-pellate the ministers and investigate the administrative acts of the government. Each of the 17 provinces of the Austrian half of the monarchy had its parliament and local administration.

The severeign power of the monarchy was vested in the emperor, and all powers, not expressly conferred elsewhere, remained in his hand. The powers of government were exercised largely through ministers who were supposedly responsible to the Reichsrath. Certain important powers were expressly conferred upon the emperor and indirectly exercised by him; these included the appointment and dismissal of ministers, the management of all public officials, the command of the armed forces, together with the power of declaring war and concluding peace, the power of granting titles and appointing life peers, the power of pardon, the right to summon, adjourn, and dissolve various legislative bodies, and to issue ordinances and to conclude treaties with consent of the Reichsrath, where such consent was necessary

The ministers were nominally responsible and the parliamentary system was nominally in operation; actually, the ministers were more dependent upon the emperor than upon the Reichsrath. The political parties in the Reichsrath were so numerous, and, heeause of racial divisions, so hostile to one another, that the government found little difficulty in playing one group against another. The Czec ways an irreconcilable body of members The Czechs were al-

territory of Austria the natural productions vary according to the latitude and still more according to the altitude. Some parts of the country reach up the Alpine slopes beyond the snow line, other parts descend to the level of the Adriatic and to semi-tropical conditions. The chief industries are agriculture and mining, and the cultivation of the soil furnishes employment to nearly half of the population. The leading agricultural crops are rye, oats, barley, wheat, potatoes, sugar beets, wine, and pulse. There were in Austria in 1910 over 1,800,000 horses, for which Austria was deservedly famous, and vast herds of cattle, sheep, and pigs. tion of silk cocoons was also important. The produc-

In the south, Austria possessed rich and varied mineral wealth, although with the loss of Bohemia and Moravia this has been diminished. Nevertheless, there are deposits of coal and iron, copper, lead, zine, sulphur, manganese, and petroleum, and rich salt mines in Upper Austria. The value of the mining products in 1913 amounted to over $75,000,000 and the steel production in 1917 amounted to over 2,000,000 metric tons. There were numerous factories of pottery, textiles, food and table delicacies, woodwork and metal, and large and important breweries and distilleries and tobacco factories.

The old government gave much attention to roads and thoroughfares, to canals and telegraphs and all means of communication and commercial inter-course. The navigation of the rivers had been im-proved, especially of the Danube, which is the main artery of the country; the rapids of the Iron Gate were corrected and the Danube was made free in Trieste, the main port of the Adriatic, is an outlet and inlet for commerce. The general condition of labor, however, was poor and unprogressive, the miners were still almost serfs of the operators Ignorance and semislavery prevailed among the in-dustrial classes. For these reasons labor agitations were common.

Religion. While the monarchy was Christian in profession and while the emperor was always a nember of the Roman Catholic Church, religious liberty was established by the law of the state, and political rights were independent of religious professions 78% of the population, however, are adherents of the Roman Catholic Church, 12% are Greek Catholies, about five per cent Jews, and two per cent Prot-

Education. Within recent years much attention has been given to education in Austria. laws were passed regarding instruction, the opening of schools, and the decrease of illiteracy. The school system of Austria comprised elementary schools, Gymnasia, universities, and technical and special schools. Attendance at elementary schools is compulsory between the ages of 6 and 14. In 1912 there were over 23,000 elementary schools, with more than 4,000,000 pupils; and in 1905 it was reported that 91.3% of the children of school age were actually attending school. Before the World War there were 518 Gynnasia and Realschulen, with over 160,000 pupils. Eight universities were maintained by the state, of which the Polish university at Lemberg was the largest in 1913-14 and that of Vienna was second largest.

Defense. Before the war the position of Austria-Hungary was that of a fortified city in central Europe. The perimeter of the empire was 5,396 miles in extent; of this line 1,050 miles was on the Adriatic seahoard. The natural barrier Adriate scanoard. The natural parrier of the mountains protected a considerable part of the border and made invasion difficult. At all the strategic points on the exposed frontiers, fortifications were points of the exposed formers, formerations were erected. The protection thus afforded was thought to be so effective that the capital was left undefended. On the Adriatic side the naval port of Pola could accommodate the entire naval force of the monarchy and was strongly fortified.

The peculiar constitution of the Dual Monarchy modified the whole military system. In general it was based on the German model, but the desire of Austria to increase to the utmost the fighting strength of the monarchy was not approved by Hungary. The first-line troops of the Austro-Hungarian army were under the joint government and were known as the "common" army. Both Austria and Hungary, however, possessed national armies with separate organizations, which, however, were under the command of the emperor in Austria, who was the king in Hungary. Service was compulsory throughout the monarchy, and all men were liable between the ages of 19 and 42. Actual service, however, usually commenced at the 21st year and continued for two years, followed by ten years in the reserve. About 160,000 recruits were raised annually and the total strength of the field army was about 600,000, to which should be added the divisions of the Austrian and Hungarian reserves, which would give a total of about 820,000. The casualties during the World War were estimated at 4,500,000, including 1,000,000 killed.

The Austro-Hungarian navy was maintained in a war included 4 dreadnoughts, 12 predreadnoughts, 18 destroyers, 63 torpedo beats, 11 submarines, and a flotilla of monitors for policing the Danune.

Before the World War the area of Austria was 115,832 square miles and the population (1910) 28,571,934. The new republic of Anstria, however, has an area of about 32,000 square miles and a population estimated at 6,412,430 (see Hungary).

Historical Outline.

The geographical position of Relgium has from earliest times given the country an important standing among the nations of western and central Europe. From the days of Casar, the Belgic territory has been the line of racial division between the Teu-tonic and the Latin and Celtic races. During the Middle Ages the provinces which now form the modern kingdoms of the Netherlands and Belgium were brought under the control of the dukes of Burgundy, and in 1516 on the accession of the dukes of Burgundy, and in 1516 on the accession of the Emperor Charles V. (Charles I. of Spain) they were attached to the Spanish crown. Charles V. was succeeded by his sou, Philip II., whose tyranny led to the War of Liberation, finally brought to a close in 1648 by the Treaty of Westphalia by which Netherlands gained its independence, but Belgium remained under the control of Spain. control of Spain.

The attempt of Louis XIV. of France to place his grandson upon the throne of Spain produced the War of the Spanish Succession, at the close of which, by the Treaty of Utrecht (1713), the Belgian provinces were assigned to Austria and became known as the Austrian Netherlands. In 1792 the armies of revolutionary France invaded the country and by the treaty of 1801 (Lunéville) it was incorporated in France. At the fall of Napoleon, Belgium was against its will united with the kingdom of the Neth-

Although the population outnumbered that of Holland by nearly a million, the two parts of the kingdom had equal representation in the legislative assembly. The seat of the government was in Holland and the king was a Protestant in religion and a Dutchman by birth. In the ministry and in the civil service the Belgians did not receive what they considered their share of the offices. The attempt to make Dutch the official language aroused great opposition. Nevertheless the Belgians were proserous, and measures for improving and extending perous, and measures for improving and extending the educational system were undertaken.

In 1830 the Belgians revolted. In the civil war that followed, the Dutch were imable to picovail; and on the intervention of the great powers, an inde-pendent kingdom of Belgium was set up, under Leo-pold of Saxe-Coburg as Leopold I., king of the Bel-

The Treaty of London (1831) signed by Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia recognized Belgium as an independent state and guaranteed its independence and permanent neutrality. Leopold I, turned the attention of the government to private industry and internal communication. Commercial treaties were negotiated with different countries to provide outlets for the industrial products. The king attempted to remove irritating questions from politics, and was so successful that the revolu-tions of 1848 hardly affected Belgium. In 1865 Leopold I. was succeeded by his son, Leopold II., who was a figure in Europe throughout his reign, and was chiefly responsible for the atrocities in the Belgian Congo. During the first years of his reign there wer, almost annual outbreaks, riots and strikes against the Catholic clergy and demands for equal suffrage. The guarantee of neutrality was carried out in the Franco-Prissian war of 1870-71.

In 1909 Albert succeeded as king. At the outbreak of the World War on August 2, 1914, Germany presented an ultimatum to Belgium demanding passage for German troops. The king at once ing passage for German troops. The king at once appealed to Great Britain, who demanded that Germany observe the neutrality of Belgium, which she and Great Britain had guaranteed, and, on refusal, entered the war. In the meautime the German troops entered Belgian territory. The small Bel-gian army held the Germans in check at Liege and thus gave the Allies time to concentrate their Jorces. The overwhelming numbers of the German army, however, broke down all resistance and swept through and occupied all but a small strip of the Belgian territory.
From 1914 to November, 1918, Belgium suffered under military occupation, including wholesale military arrests and executions of noncombatants, the most noted instance being that of Edith Cavell. The Germans levied heavy taxes, fines, and indemnities upon the country, and (1916) decreed the wholesale deportation of Belgians to Germany for forced labor. The suffering of the population was some-what mitigated by the Belgian Commission for Relief, through which practically all the rest of the Al-lied world distributed food and supplies under the direction of Herbert Hoover. In 1918 the Belgian government declared that it was no longer willing to accept a status of guaranteed neutrality.

Organization.

Government. Belgium is a constitutional monarchy, the legislative power being vested in the king, Senate, and Chamber of Representatives. No act of the king, however, can have effect unless signed by one of his ministers, who is responsible to the brightness. the legislature. The Senate consists of 120 members, chosen for eight years, partly by direct and partly by indirect election. The Chamber of Rep-resentatives, consisting of 186 members, apportioned according to population, is chosen by direct election for four years, one half retiring every two years. By the system of proportional representation, minority parties are represented. The Electoral Reform Bill of 1919 provides for universal one-man, one-vote suffrage for males of 21, for widows, and for mothers of soldiers killed in battle or of civilians shot by Germans, thus doing away with plural voting.

Religion and Education. Most of the inhabitants are Roman Catholic, but the salaries of ministers of all denominations are paid by the state.

Four universities exist, of which those at Ghent and Life over state institutions while between them.

and Liége are state institutions, while those at Brussels and Louvain (ruthlessly destroyed by the Germans) are church institutions. Connected with the universities are special schools of engineering, art, and mining. The secondary schools of Belgium are well organized and administered; but the primary schools, because of the low salaries of the teachers and the inadequate inspection, do not rank high. Education is free for those who cannot afford to pay, but is not compulsory.

Industry. The principal mineral production of Belginm is coal, the mining of which gave employment to over 150,000 people before the war. The product has exceeded 32,000,000 tous a year. The iron mines do not produce as much as formerly and large imports of iron are made from France and Luxemburg. Liége is the center of the metal industry.

The soil of Belgium originally was nnfavorable to production, but like Holland, the country has been reclaimed, until at present the agriculture and horti-culture of Belgium are hardly exceeded by any nation. The lands are divided into small holdings and brought to a high state of cultivation. In 1913 the chief crops were oats and rye, wheat and potatoes, and sugar beets. Next after agriculture and mining is the production of live stock. Belgian horses are chosen by purchasing agents of many countries for cavalry service, and sheep and cattle industries flourish.

The Belgian manufactures enjoy a high reputa-on. Many fine fabrics are produced, particularly tion. woolen, linen, and cotton goods, laces and hosiery. Belgium has two ports of entry, Ostend and Antwerp, and has a large export trade in raw materials and mannfactured products

Defense. The exposed position of Belgium has made the country from earliest times a battlefield. Although its neutrality was guaranteed by the great powers it was thought necessary to fortify several chief eities. Until recently the army was recruited by voluntary enlistment, but on May 30, 1913, a military bill passed the Chamber of Deputies, imposing compulsory military service, and providing an effective field army of 170,000. The total length of service is eight years in the active army and five years in the reserve, which latter can be called out only in the event of war or threatened invasion.

The area, including the cessions from Germany, is 11,759 square miles and the population, as estimated in 1918, was 7,620,576.

Dec. 20. A congress of the powers at London recognizes the Independence of Belgium.

1831. Feb. 7. Constitution of Belgium is adopted. June 4. Leopold of Saxe-Coburg elected king of the Belgians; on July 21, he ascends the throne as Leopold I. French army stops the threatened advance of the Dutch troops.

Nov. 15. The powers sign a treaty with Belgium at London, giving it part of Luxemburg and Holland, a territorial indemnity in Limburg, and declaring independent Belgium a "perpet-ually neutral state," guaranteed by Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia.

33. The French besiege the Dutch in Autwerp who capitulate December 23. By this conquest the Belgic revolution is completed.

1839. April 19. The powers reaffirm the treaty of 1831. On the same day Netherlands and Belgium sign a treaty of separation in same terms 48. Two parties, Liberal and Catholic, devetop; the Liberals gain control (1847) and, in sympathy with the popular revolts elsewhere in Enrope, the responsible ministry canses the Parliament to enact an Electoral Reform Bill.

The Liberals are overthrown, but the Catholics do not gain control until 1854.

The Liberals regain the majority, following an attempt to give the clergy control of charities. 665. Dec. 10. Leopold 1 dies, and is succeeded 1865. by his son, Leopold 11.

570. Flemish is recognized, with French, as an official language. On the outbreak of the Franco-German War Belgium takes measures to guard her frontier, but Great Britain announces an intention to uphold the guarantee of neutrality and induces France and Prussia not to violate it.

Leopold 11. calls a conference of geographical experts at Brussels to consider Africa. The International Association for the Exploration and Civilization of Africa is started.

378. Nov. 25. A special committee of the association, called finally the luternational Association of the Congo, is formed. It is mainly supported by Leopold, and gradually becomes strictly a Belgian affair. It develops the territory of the longo and its tributaries.

1579. 179. A bill for improving the primary educational system is passed by the Liberals. By it rellgious instruction is abolished. The Belgian bishops protest, and refuse absolution to teachers and parents. Catholic private schools are established, attended by a majority of the children. Diplomatic Intercourse with the Vallcan is temporarily suspended.

1880. The fiftleth anniversary of Belglan Independence is celebrated.

The elerical reaction leads to the overthrow of the Liberal ministry, and the Catholic party regains control, retaining it until the outbreak of the World War. A law is passed permitting the communes to choose between Catholic or unsectariau schools, both being publicly supported. Socialists become important as separate party.

April 22. The United States recognizes the Congo Association, with Leopold at its head, as a properly constituted state. Other powers follow suit and the limits of the new state are fixed. S55. Feb. 26. The General Act of the (Congo)

Conference at Berlin is signed by the participating nations. It provides for freedom of trade in the Congo Basin, the neutrality of the territories of the hasin, and the navigation of the river, and also settles other matters pertaining generally to Africa.

Aug. 1. Being authorized to do so by Parliament, Leopold announces to the powers who signed the Congo Act that he has assumed the title of Sovereign of the Independent State of Congo, which will have with Belgium an exclusively present luminary. The government is each sively personal union. The government is an absolute monarchy, and becomes practically a monopolistic trading concern.

The spread of socialism among the laborers and the deplorable condition of the miners lead to disastrous strikes and riots, with demands for better conditions and freer suffrage The agitation continues for years and is the vital question in Belgian politics.

1893. April 27. Constituent Assembly adopts as a compromise manhood suffrage with plural voting for the elergy and property holders.

95. A new school law requires compulsory and 1895. religious primary education.

896. Sept. 19. Charges by missionaries and others of gross cruelties in the Congo causes the king to appoint a supervisory Committee of Protection, which is ineffectual.

199. December. Proportional representation 1899. is adopted.

Constitution of Belgium is adopted. 1903-1905. Criticism of the treatment of natives In the Congo and the commercial methods employed there excite discussion in Great Britain and elsewhere as contrary to the acts of the Congo Conference. Leopold denies the charges and refuses to permit an international investigation. He appoints (July, 1904) a commission of inquiry, but reforms later inaugurated by its effort prove illusory. Belgium's option of annexation not exercised. Intervention by Great Britain feared.

1908. Nov. 15. Congo Free State is annexed. The original treaty (November 28, 1907) reserved the crown domain to the king, but this unsatisfactory feature was later eliminated.

1909. Dec 17 Leopold II. dies and is succeeded 1909. Dec. 17. Leopoid II. dies and is succeeded by his nephew Albert 1., who, in his speech from the throne, promises radical reforms in the Congo.
 1911-1913. The severe political strife of these years turns again upon the ministry's educational bill, which favors the Catholics and elerical control, and on the demands against plural voting ("one man, one vote"). The Catholics retain the ascendancy in the elections of June, 1912, but anticlerical riots break out in Brussels, and the protests of the Socialists are voiced by strikes. In April, 1913, half of the male workingmen are supposed to be idle. A compromise is reached.

914. Aug. 2. Germany, in violation of her guarantee of Belgian neutrality, demands passage for her troops through Belginm and on refusal invades and subjugates the country. The pretense of civil government and observance of Belgian law is observed over all of the country not in the army zones, but the arbitrary military courts supplemented by "military necessity" practically nullify this. The Hague Convention is violated by the imposition of collective penalties, local and national, levies in excess of legitimate requirements, the substitution of German for Belgian authority, and persistent efforts at Germanization and the sapping of Belgian national spirit. The attempt is made to split Belgium on a linguistic basis.

In connection with a Belgian organization within Belgium it collects, transports, and distributes food and other necessities to prevent starvation in Belgium, where industry has ceased because of German occupation and the Allied blockade. Belgium's raw material and much of her food supplies normally come from outside. The Allies permit the passage of snpplies through the blockade, and the Germans refrain from seizure of the Imports as well as from requisition of the supplementing Belgian produce, which the commission also handles. The commission has a quasi international status and a separate flag. plies to those able to pay, and distributes the rest. The necessary funds are raised mainly by loans to the Belgian government from Great Britain, France, and, later, the United States, and the difficulties due to the irredeemable paper money in circulation within Belgium are over-come by the commission's taking complete control of Belgian finances, becoming the sole agent of exchange between the people and the exiled government. The loans are supplemented by contributions, in which the British Empire and the United States bear the largest share, but to which many Belgians also contribute.

Historical Outline.

On the return of Columbus from his first voyage, Pope Alexander VI., on May 3, 1493, divided the world by a line running north and south, 100 leagues west of the Cape Verde Islands. Spain might discover and claim all west of the dividing line, and Portugal might discover and take all east of it. The following year this line, by treaty between the two powers, was moved to a meridian 370 leagues west of the Cape Verde Islands. In February, 1500, the Spanish adventurer Vicente Yanez Pinzon discovered the northern coast of Brazil. This discovery would have given the country to Spain had not the maritime parts of Brazil lain east of the papal line of demarcation. Thus, though Spain made the discovdemarcation. ery, Portugal had the exclusive right of possession and settlement.

In April, 1500, the Portuguese captain, Cabral, on a voyage to India, reached the Brazilian coast south of Bahia. No colony, however, was established un-til 1531. Portugal divided the coast into sections, and assigned each section to some Portuguese nobleman who was expected to become the proprietary of These grants became the basis for the a colony. later Portuguese provinces

Bahia was founded in 1549, and became the eapital of the Portuguese possessions in South America. Notwithstanding the papal grant, other European nations attempted to make settlements. Thus, a French colony was established at Rio de Janeiro in 1558, but was abandoned in 1560. Another French settlement was made at Maranhão in 1612. In 1624 the Dutch seized Bahia, but were obliged to surrender it the following year. In 1630 Pernambuco was taken by the Dutch and held until 1654.

In 1640 Portugal established a viceroyalty for Bra-zil with Bahia as the capital. Rio de Janeiro became the capital in 1762. During the 17th century colonial settlements did not thrive, but in the ISth there was a remarkable development. Negro slaves, early was a remarkable development. Negro slaves, early introduced, furnished profitable labor. Sugar and coffee industries were established and rich mines of gold and diamonds discovered The interior was ex-plored and its enormous resources appreciated

On the French invasion of Portugal in 1807, Dom John, prince regent of Portugal, and the Portuguese royal family, fled to Brazil for refuge and made Rio de Janeiro the seat of government. The new govern-ment was extravagant, yet the increased activity brought a new stimulus to the industry of the whole Many English shiphuilders, French manufacturers, Swedish iron founders, and German en-gineers settled in the country. The government gineers settled in the country. The government sought to improve the agricultural and natural resources by introducing plants and trees from India and Africa which would thrive in Brazil. The importance of Brazil decided the regent to make it a kingdom; and by the decree of 1815 the Portuguese sovereignty took the title of the United Kingdom of Portugal, Brazil, and Algarve. In 1816 the Queen Dona Maria I died, and the prince regent took the title of Dom John VI. and returned to Portugal (1821). gal (1821). His son, Dom Pedro, became regent In 1822 Brazil declared its independence of Portugal and Dom Pedro was proclaimed emperor of Brazil. For fifteen years the old Portuguese party kept up a petty warfare, and in 1831 Pedro abdicated in favor of his son, Dom Pedro II., a minor, who in 1840 was proclaimed sovereign in his own right. From 1849 to 1852 Brazil was involved in war with the Argentine Confederation under the dictator Rosas From 1865 to 1870 there was war with Paraguay, instigated by Francisco Solano López of Paraguay.

During the reign of Dom Pedro II., Brazil made steady advance in material prosperity. Steamers were placed on the Amazon and its tributaries and some railways were built. The emperor was highly educated and sincerely desired to improve the educational system. He was more deeply interested in the economic and social life of his people than in the political life of the country. His liberalism prevented his opposing the socialistic doctrines which had taken deep root in the educated classes. The heir to the throne, his daughter, Isabella, Countess d'Eu, however, was deeply attached to the Church and so greatly under its influence that the Liberals opposed her possible accession to the throne. Discontent was increased by the sudden abolition of slavery without compensation to the owners in 1888. Hence, in 1889 the empire was overthrown and a federal republic with a constitution modeled upon Outbreaks and insurrections occurred, and in 1893 there was a naval revolt and eivil war. In 1894 Doctor Prudente de Moraes Barros succeeded to the presidency and began to reduce militarism to a minimuni and to reform the disordered finances. In 1898 he was succeeded by President Salles, who not only established financial order, but by means of arbitration, settled the boundary dispute with French Guiana. In 1906 the Pan-American Congress met in Brazil and was addressed by Secretary of State Root, of the United States, who expressed the friendly sentiment of that country toward the South American republics. In 1912 a new coinage system was established, based upon a gold standard, corresponding in weight and form with the British pound sterling In 1914 Brazil, together with Argentina and Chile (ABC powers), attempted to serve as mediator in the dispute between the United States and Mexico. When the United States entered the World War in 1917, Brazd came out against the Germans, declared war, but was not drawn into the European campaign.

Organization.

Government. By the constitution of 1891 the Brazilian nation is constituted as the United States of Brazil, with twenty states, one national territory, and one federal district. The legislative authorit is exercised by a national congress with the approval of the president of the republic. Congress consists of a Chamber of Deputies and a Senate. The Chamber of Deputies of 212, (1919), elected for three years by direct vote (with minority representation) in a proportion not greater than one for every 70,000 of population. No state, however, may have less than four representatives—The Senate consists of 63 members chosen by direct vote, three from each state and from the federal district, for nine years, one third retiring each year. The president is elected for a term of four years and is not eligible for the succeeding term. Both the president and vice president are elected directly by an absolute majority of the votes. The president appoints and dis-misses ministers, is commander in chief of the army and navy, and within certain limits has the power to declare war and make peace. With the consent of the Congress he appoints the members of the supreme federal tribunal and all diplomatic envoys. The ministers are not responsible to the Congress or to the courts for the advice given to the president.

Local government is intrusted to the states, which

Production and Industry. Brazil is an agricultural country, although only a small fraction of its soil has been brought under cultivation. The chief product is coffee, of which Brazil furnishes four fifths of the world's supply. The average crop is estimated at 12,000,000 sacks of 132 pounds each. About one eighth the world's supply of rubber comes from Brazil, the product of 1919 being 38,000 tons. Other important crops are sugar, tobaceo, cotton, cacao, and nuts. The forests and mines of Brazil are of enormous value, but little has been done in their development. The most important mannin their development. The most important manufacturing industry is cotton weaving, which is so rapidly increasing that the importations from Europe are declining. The manufacture of silk is also enare declining. The manufacture of silk is also encouraged. There are more than two thousand to-bacco factories and over a hundred sugar factories.

The population is made up of a comparatively small group of Portuguese descendants, with numer ous Negroes and a still greater number of Indians In the southern states of Brazil there are prosperous Russian, Italian, and German settlements, the last named numbering about 500,000. Before the war Great Britain had the greatest share of the foreign trade, but since 1915 the United States has both exported more to Brazil and imported more from Brazil than any other country.

Religion and Education. Until the downfall of the empire, the established religion was Roman Catholic. By the constitution of 1891 absolute equality and toleration were given to all religious be-liefs; the government, however, left to the Church all religious buildings and their properties and income The vast majority of the people are Roman Catholic Education is free, but except in a few municipalities is not compulsory. The federal government expects to provide for higher or university education, but there is no general university in Brazil, though several are in the process of formation. There are. bowever, about 25 faculties which confer degrees.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Historical Outline.

In 1648 England was in the midst of civil war The struggle between Charles 1. and Parliament was twofold in character. On the constitutional side it was an attempt to limit the power of the crown and to extend parliamentary government and its pense of royal prerogative. powers at the e religious side, the attempt of the king to impose conformity to the doctrines and practices of the Church of England, as he and his advisers interpreted them, was opposed by the Presbyterians, who wished to establish their form of church policy, and by the Independents, who feared that the "new presbyter is but old priest writ large" and wished to make each congregation a self-governing body.

The Civil War resulted in the triumph of Parliament and the Independents under Oliver Cromwell, with his Ironsides captured the king. English Presbyterians united with the Scots against Cromwell and the "new-modeled" army, but were defeated, and all England was at the mercy of the Independents. Their first step was to break up the Long Parliament, December 6, 1648. Colonel Pride drove the Presbyterian members out of the House of Commons—" Pride's Purge"—; thenceforth of Commons—" Pride's Purge"—; thenceforth Independents controlled the legislature as well as the army. Charles I. was tried and beheaded (1649) and the Commonwealth was established. That, too, proved weak and gave place to the Protectorate under the personal rule of Oliver Cromwell, backed by his invincible Ironsides. On Cromwell's death, England, tired of military rule, returned to the con-stitutional form of government, and Charles II. and the Stuart line were restored (1660)

Charles II. maintained an ignoble and corrupt court, but learned from his father's fate not to defy the power of Parliament openly. The Restoration, however, brought a reaction; many of the liberties for which the Long Parliament of Charles I, had struggled were ignored not only by the king, but by Parliament James II., who succeeded Charles (1685), was of a different type. Stubborn, where his brother had been yielding, he personally threatened civil liberty, and even sought to restore the Roman Catholic

The result was the Revolution of 1688 by which James II. was deposed and the Protestant William of Orange, and his wife Mary, the daughter of James, were placed upon the throne. This revolution (1688) meant more than a change of sovereigns James H. had claimed to rule by divine right, William III. ruled by act of Parliament. Thus, parliamentary sovereignty was definitely established. With the establishment of the power of Parliament the royal prerogative came more and more into the hands of the ministers, who were not responsible to of the employers, and unspeakable misery and degrathe king. This power was based on control of Pardation developed.

liament, through the personal influence of the minthe House of Commons, which was practically chosen by the same great Whig families.

In 1707, through the union of England, Scotland, Wales, Great Britain was formed. Scotland sent forty-five members to the House of Commons and the Scottish peers chose sixteen to represent them in the House of Lords.

On the Continent Louis XIV. was attempting to expand his dominion. William III found it easy to bring England to the support of a rivalry which lasted for two centuries. Whichever side France espoused, England was obliged to oppose the War of the Spanish Succession, the War of the Austrian Succession, and the Seven Years' War, England headed a grand alliance to prevent the establishment of an overwhelming empire in Europe and to protect her own institutions. encircled the world. The vast French empire of India fell to England as part of the prize of victory The English and French colonists in America fought the battles of their parent states, and by England's victory France was eliminated from North America in 1763.

From 1689 on, the supremacy of Parliament was unquestioned. In 1715 the royal veto became a formality. With the exception of the ill-starred formality. With the exception of the ill-starred attempt of George III. to establish personal rule, no sovereign has since questioned the sovereign power of Parliament. The changes in the English constitution have been not so much in the nature of amendments, though great remedial acts and statutes have registered the growth of new forces. The growth of English constitution is through customs which determine how the power of the state shall be exercised. The whole tendency of these customs has been to subject the power of the crown to the control of the ministers, who in turn are responsible to the Honse of Commons, which represents the political sovereignty of the people, that is, of the voting classes

The reign of William III. vindicated the sover-eignty of Parliament; that of Anne (1702-1714) saw the beginnings of the establishment of the cabinet system. During the reigns of George I. and George II., both of whom were foreigners who understood little and cared less for English institutions, the cabinet became supreme. The ministry of Walpole (1721-1742) was an uninterrupted rule of the Whigs, who had departed from their original principles of opposition to the absolutism of Charles II James II. and themselves had become aristo cratic and corrupt. During the reign of George III., who at first imitated Walpole in control of the House of Commons, the constitutional principle was at last established, under William Pitt, that a minister might appeal to the electors from an adverse vote in the House of Commons. Thus the parties became he instruments of popular sovereignty.

After the transference of the French colonial empire to England, Great Britain attempted to enforce mercantile system on her vast colonial empire. The colonies, although fostered and encouraged to produce what Great Britain lacked, were prevented from competing with each other and the mother country. The English colonists in America resisted this English control of their economic development and resented the attempt of Great Britain to control their political life. Thus the American Revolution began, which resulted in the independence of the United States and the realization on the part of England of the value of strong and attached colonies, even though competing.

In the war for the independence of the United States, England's old enemy, France, intervened. Hardly had peace been made before France was convulsed by the French Revolution, and France contended for supremacy. From and France contended for supremacy. vulsed by the French Revolution; and again England From 1793 to Napoleon; and in the Congress of Vienna, which re made the map of Europe, her voice was influential.

The eighteenth century saw also a bloodless revolution in England. The invention of Hargreaves spinning jenny, Crompton's mule, and Cartwright' power loom, and the invention of the steam engine James Watt revolutionized the textile and brought new sources of power to the manufacturer. The discovery (1762) of Roebuck that iron ore might be smelted by pit coal as well as charcoal, developed the iron trade and vastly increased the output of the collieries Industry no longer was carried on in isolated cottages, but in towns. inventions quickened the growth of a powerful bank ing system. The factory system was established. One effect was the rise of new centers of population New demands were made for means of communication. A canal system was developed. Ports and docks were built after 1800. The old highways were Ports and transformed into turnpikes which in turn were suprailroads. plemented plemented by railroads. Agricultural England stood still while industrial England, under the sys Agricultural tem of laissez faire, grew rich. The state made no attempt to protect the workman against the rapacity

Along with the industrial revolution an agrarian isters as representatives of the landholding Whig revolution took place. The increased population nobles in the House of Lords, and their control of demanded an increased supply of food. England ceased to export corn (see corn, n., 3, in the Dict). The old wasteful system of simple rotation of crops gave way to scientific farming. The rights of com-mon pasture were limited and common arable lands almost disappeared. Small holdings gave place to large farms, cultivated by gangs of agricultural laborers, who in their degradation were the counterpart of the factory hands. The price of corn increased with the demand and was artificially protected by the corn laws, which limited importation from abroad. were inadequate to meet the rising costs of living, pauperism increased to such an extent that a seventh of the population regularly received poor relief. England in 1850 was a land of contrasts: vast wealth and desperate poverty, professed liberty and an unrepresented proletariat.

A change also took place in religion. The passionate devotion of the High Church party in the reign of Anne gave place to indifference. Religion seemed dead. In 1729 John Wesley, his brother Charles, and George Whitefield formed a society nicknamed the Methodists, from which developed gious revival. Thenceforward the nonconformists were a recognized social and political factor. In the latter part of the eighteenth century the evangelicals added fervor and zeal to the religious life of England through the foundation of Bible societies and Sunday schools.

From 1784 to 1830 was the period of Tory supremacy. Fear of the French Revolutionary ideas produced reaction and suppression in England. Nevertheless, the Catholic Relief Bill was passed (1829) and shortly after the accession of William IV. the Whigs came to power. The first step in the development of modern political England was the passage of the Reform Bill in 1832. In theory Parliament represented the people, but the franchise was so restricted that only a small minority of the people had the right Moreover, the shifting of the population to vote. from agricultural to industrial England produced startling inequalities in representation. which had disappeared still elected members to Parliament, while the new manufacturing centers were totally unrepresented. The first Reform Bill of 1832 enfranchised the middle classes. The working classes were drawn into public life in 1867, the agricultural laborers in 1885, the women in 1918; until to-day England has universal suffrage for both men and women, with no property qualifications; and representation is apportioned according to popula-

on. Parliament really represents the people.

During the nineteenth century England was practically always at war on the borders of her dependencies. Formal wars went on with the United States in 1812, as a result of the enforcement of the claim to control the seas; against China in 1842; as an ally with France against Turkey (the Crimean War, 1854-1856); but England escaped from the numerous European wars from 1859 to 1913. serious colonial war was the South African The striking feature of the nineteenth (1899-1902). century was colonial expansion in Canada, Australasia, and Africa, with the development of great self-governing dominions. The British rule of India is a direct parallel with the greatest triumphs of Roman civilization

From the last quarter of the nineteenth century the Liberal and Conservative parties both at-tempted to ameliorate the condition of the poor, differing in the rate of progress. Of late years the great outstanding difference of opinion has been the status of Ireland. Ireland retained her Parliament as a separate kingdom until the Act of Union of 1800, following the Revolution of 1798. In the last half century an ever increasing demand has been made for home rule for Ireland. In 1886 Gladstone acthe principle and introduced his first Home Rule Bill which was defeated in the House of Com-Again in 1893 Gladstone carried a Home Rule Bill triumphantly through the House of Commons, only to have it rejected by the House of Lords. In 1913, a Home Rule Bill again failed in the House of Lords; but under the change of the Parliament Act of 1911, the Commons passed the bill three times, and in 1914 it became a law. The World War and civil disturbances in Ireland caused the government to delay putting the bill into operation and the question was postponed.

In the meantime the Sinn Feiners developed in Ireland and scouted Home Rule, demanded independence, and set up the form of an Irish Republic. England could find no course for the time being but to govern Ireland by military rule, and that left the problem hanging.

The first years of the twentieth century saw the growth of a new force in British politics, the Labor The industrial situation of England was Frequent strikes on a large ened not only prosperity but industrial life itself. The government was forced to intervene again and again, and by act of Parliament to establish mini-mum wages in certain industries. With the coming of peace, however, the Labor party de-With thanded changes affecting the very foundations of the capitalistic system. At the election of 1918, labor gained ground, though short of a majority 1920, the Labor party appears as a strongly organized opposition to the coalition under Lloyd George.

The two Teutonic powers and Italy were forming and consolidating the Triple Alliance, while from 1879 to 1900 England occupied a position of "splendid isolation "in European affairs. France and Russia were in close alliance. England was without an ally and at times seemed to be without a friend. In 1898, France and England nearly came to blows over the partition of the Sudan, while between Russia and England there was mutual jealousy and suspicion. The Boer War (1899–1902) showed Germany ready to take advantage of England's difficulties. Britain under the personal influence of King Edward began to reach out to other powers. In 1902 a treaty with Japan was signed by which either power agreed to come to the aid of the other if attacked by more than one nation. In 1904 a treaty was signed with France, nominally settling the status of the mutual possessions in Africa, but in fact laying the founda-tion of the later "Entente Cordiale." It made an end to the suspicion between England and France. As a result better relations between England and Russia developed. Thus at the outbreak of the World War, Europe was divided into two groups, the Triple Alliance and the Entente powers, who, although bound by no common formal treaty to aid each other in ease of war, were in substantial agree-ment and harmony; and as Great Britain was secretly pledged to protect the French Channel coast, Ger-many's attack upon France was certain to draw Eng-As a gnarantor of the neutrality of Belgium and as the power directly threatened by the German occupation of Belginm, England was certain to come to Belgium's aid. Moreover, throughout her history, her interests demanded that Belgium should be both neutral and indépendent. Morally, and for the protection of her coasts, she was bound to come to the aid of France. Thus, on August 4, 1914, when Germany refused to respect Belgian neutrality, England declared war.

During the war the British Empire raised 8,000,000 men. In November, 1918, the strength of the British army furnished by the United Kingdom (exclusive of the army in India) was over 3,500,000 men. Up to November 10, the casualties on all the various fronts were over 3,000,000. In addition, Great Britain, through her navy, maintained a blockade against Germany, kept the seas open for trade and was essential in transporting the American army to France. In addition to financing her own military establishment Great Britain loaned to her dominions $831,060,000 and $7,620,480,000 to her allies.

Organization.

Government. The government of Great Britain is in form a constitutional monarchy. The king reigns, but does not govern; in fact he has no political power and very little authority of any kind. royal powers are exercised by the ministers, nominally appointed by the Crown, but actually chosen by the House of Commons as an executive commite of Commons and Lords, responsible to the people The executive power of the ministers is far greater than that of the president of the United States; and there are few limitations in the British constitution upon the exercise of this power.

The constitution is not found in any one document, but in the acts of Parliament, the rules and customs of Parliament, the rules of common law and understandings and extralegal agreements. From one point of view, Great Britain may be said to have no constitution, since Parliament may at any time alter any constitutional principle by statute To put it another way, Parliament is both a legislative and a constituent assembly. It makes the laws and it makes the constitution Parliament is thus legally completely sovereign or, rather, represents the ultimate sovereignty of a constitution.

Parliament is composed of two chambers, House of Lords and the House of Commons. House of Lords consists of peers who hold their seats (1) by hereditary right; (2) by creation of the sovereign; (3) by virtue of their office (the Law Lords, wo archbishops, and 24 bishops); (4) by election for life (28 Irish peers); (5) by election for duration of the parliament (16 Scottish peers). The number is thus not fixed, but a full house, in 1920, would be about 700. The House of Commons consists of 707 members, chosen (since 1918) by almost uni-In Great Britain versal suffrage, male and female. In Great Britain the constituencies are supposed to contain about 70,000 inhabitants, and in Ireland 43,000, each. addition, the holders of degrees from certain universities elect representatives for the universities.

The two chambers are nominally coordinate, although money bills, which the Lords cannot amend, law; alongside exists the Free Church of Scotland must originate in the Honse of Commons. In 1909, In Ireland there is now no church establishment.

England would be paralyzed by her Irish and do- the David Lloyd George budget contained new | Nonconformist denominations, especially the Westaxes on land; it aroused the landholding interest, which was very strong in the House of Lords, and the Lords refused to concur. Hence, Act of 1911 provided that any bill which passed three times through the House of Commons, provided at least two years had intervened between its first introduction and its passage for the third time, becomes a law even if the House of Lords refuses its assent. The threat of swamping the House of Lords by creating new peers brought the Lords to accept this measure, which reduced them to a subordinate position in legislation leaving the Commons the responsible authority

The nominal term for a parliament is five years, but the king, on the advice of his ministers, may dissolve the House of Commons at any time and eall for a new election. Moreover, since Parliament is supreme, it may prolong its own life, as was done dur-ing the World War; the parliament chosen in 1911 continued until 1918

Although possessing the legal power in legislation, the right to supervise all executive acts, the anthority by vote of want of confidence to force the withdrawal of any ministers or the fall of the whole cabinet, liament is much under the control of the cabinet. This is due in part to the development of the twoparty system. Since the cabinet ministers are the party system. Since the cabinet ministers are the chiefs of their party, members of Parliament are chosen by their parties to support the cabinet in whatever it undertakes. Hence, since 1886 only one cabinet has fallen because of an adverse vote in the House of Commons. The cabinet and the ministers are more and more looking not to the legal sovereign — Parliament — but to the political sovereign, the electorate; and more and more public opinion is able to control the action of the ministers.

In local government, Parliament is also supreme. Municipalities, counties, and smaller subdivisions, exercise a considerable measure of self-government virtue of acts of Parliament; but most of their activities may be supervised by ministers chosen by the Commons and nominally responsible to it.

Industry and Labor. The establishment

Industry and Labor. The establishment of free trade and the repeal of the corn laws in the middle of the nineteenth century hastened the decline of English agriculture. Much of the land had a value beyond its income-producing power, because of the social importance connected with Its ownership.
Great estates were kept up for pleasure and display, rather than on an economic basis. It was cheaper to import than to raise agricultural products ginning in 1908, provision was made by act of Parliament to increase the small holdings, and the David Lloyd George hudget of 1909 attempted to tax idle land so as to increase the acreage under cultivation. Nevertheless, on the outbreak of the World War the agricultural condition of England was serious. Since a considerable part of the food had to be imported output of the food had to be imported to the food had to be im ported, every effort was made to increase the area under cultivation. The price of wheat was guaranteed and a minimum wage was fixed for agricultural laborers and thus the acreage under wheat increased by nearly one half over 1914.

In manufactures England has for a century excelled, particularly in textiles. Of late years, how-ever, German competition came in and Germans were able to undersell some products in England and there was an agitation for "fair trade," that is, some form of protective duties.

The condition of British labor is better than in any continental country. The pressure to ameliorate is condition has come from trade-unions rather than from theoretical socialists; and up to the outbreak of the war, they won many substantial privileges. the twentieth century the trade-unions were en-forcing their demands by strikes on a scale so large as to tend to paralyze some of the national indus-This brought about government intervention and the establishment in certain industries of minimum wages fixed by law. As a result of the experiences in the war, the English laborers formed a political party which presents formidable opposition to the coalition government of David Lloyd George. It also urges radical changes in the capitalistic ganization of society and looks toward the establishment of some form of state socialism.

In commerce Great Britain is still far superior to any other nation. Her merchant fleet is the greatest and her trade more widespread and profitable. Before the war London was the clearing house of the world's commerce, and Great Britain still remains the chief carrying nation of the world. Religion. Complete religious toleration in Great Britain has been the rule since 1866, and there are no political disabilities on account of religion. The Church of England is established by law in England and is supported by the government. Nominally, the king appoints the bishops and other ecclesiastical dignitaries, but in reality the ministry in power at the time selects them. In Wales the English Church was disestablished in 1914, but the enforcement of the act was postponed until the close of the war. Scotland the Presbyterian Church is established by leyan Methodists, the Primitive Methodists, the Congregationalists, and the Baptists, are strong. In all, the dissenting churches count 2,000,000 members; and there are about 1,900,000 Roman Catholics in England and Wales. The total official membership of the Anglican Church is 2,359,599 (1919).

Education. Until very recently England backward in public education. For the well-to-do there was ample provision in the historic endowments for schools, colleges, and universities; and both the established church and the dissenting churches gave some gratinitous education to the poor. In 1906, a broad provision was made for the establishment of free schools, the government in some cases contributing to the support of church and other private schools on condition of certain tests and examinations, and in others establishing "board schools" The system is complicated that were purely public. The system is complicated and has involved frequent disputes, especially on the difficult question of religious teaching.

Elementary education is now free, and attendance at school is compulsory between the ages of five and fourteen. Provisions are also made for courses in advanced instruction. On July 31, 1917, there were in England and Wales over 21,000 schools for elementary education, with over 5,979,000 pupils on the books. By the Fisher Act of 1918, county and county borough councils are required to provide at once free continuation schools for pupils under sixteen years of age and subsequently for those under eighteen. Vocational schools are also provided for, and the employment of pupils in industry must be suspended if required by the Education Authority. Provision is made for medical inspection, physical training, and amusements.

Higher education is provided for by the universities, of which Oxford and Cambridge were founded in the Middle Ages. Others, as Manchester, Birmingham, and London, are of modern origin.

Defense. Before the World War, the land forces of the United Kingdom consisted of a regular army recruited by voluntary enlistment for twelve years, from three to nine of which were spent in active service and the rest in the army reserve. The greater part of the regular army was stationed in the dominions. On mobilization for war the regular army at home was absorbed into the "expeditionary force," with a total strength of about 165,000. torial army was intended for home defense and was recruited by voluntary enlistment for terms of four The total forces of the regular army and territorial army in 1914 were about 727,000; but only about 100,000 were in the United Kingdom and available for immediate service

During the war conscription was adopted by the Military Service Act of 1916, which was amended and extended except to Ireland. The United Kingdom furnished about 3,500,000 troops.

Great Britain's strongest defense, however, has been her navy, maintained on the "two-power" principle; that is, that the British navy must at all times be equal to the two strongest foreign navies combined Not satisfied with this, the attempt was double the combined strength of any two foreign In 1914, the navy consisted of 16 snpernavies dreadnoughts, 15 dreadnoughts, 40 battleships, 50 cruisers, 248 destroyers, and 85 submarines, besides other boats; in 1919, there were 46 dreadnoughts, 21 battleships, 34 cruisers, 340 destroyers, 147 torpedo boats, and numerous submarines.

Area and Population. The area of the United Kingdom in square miles is: England, 50,874; Wales, 7,466; Scotland, 30,405; Ireland, 32,586; Isle of Man, 227; Channel Islands, 75 — a total of 121,633. population is: (1911) England, 34,045,290; 2,025,202; Scotland, 4,760,904; Ireland, 4,390,219; Isle of Man, 52,016; Channel Islands, 96,899 — a total of 45,516,259, including enlisted men abroad. These figures have been much disturbed by the losses of the war.

Meanwhile the Shelburne ministry, having started the peace, is forced out, February 23, by a coall-tion of North and Fox, who, April 2, become secretaries of state, with the Duke of Portland as nominal premier. Pitt introduces, May 7, a bill for parliamentary reform, directed especially against the rotten horoughs and bribery; Fox supports it, but North opposes, and it is defeated. November 20, Burke's India Bill (see India) is introduced by Fox; though opposed by Pitt, it passes the Commons, but is defeated in the House of Lords on December 17 by the king's personal influence. King George dismisses the ministry on December 19 and names Pitt as premier, though the latter is not backed by the Commons, and is repeatedly defeated by the coalition majority.

March 25. Parliament is dissolved and public opinion rallying to Pitt, he has a majority in the new Commons, which meets on May 15 (Sixteenth Parliament of Great Britain), and being strong enough to disregard the king's wishes, he comes premier in fact as well as in name. Irish question becomes important. The Irish Parliament is elected by and composed of Protestants, mainly from "rotten boroughs": ministry is responsible to the lord lieutenant only and he in turn can be independent of Parliament or make it subservient to him through patronage, and is responsible only to English ministry and crown. In October the Society of United Irishmen is started by Wolfe Tone, a Protestant, to open the Iranchise to Catholics and agitato for reform in Parliament and elsewhere.

(For British participation in the Continental wars 1793-1815, see France; and for the controversy and war with United States, 1794-1815, growing out of neutral trade question, see UNITED STATES.) Reaction in England caused by the Terror in France and later by Napoleon's rule postpones the domestic reforms toward which Pitt is moving. Extent of the early reaction is seen in the harsh enforcement of the Treasonable Correspondence Act (passed May 7).

With the return of orderly government in France (Directory) English public opinion veers toward peace and relief from the burden of war: October 29, the king is mobbed on his way to open parliament. Pitt insists on continuing war and the passage of bills to restrain what he considers revolutionary violence. Holland having become a dependency of France, English capture Cape of Good Hope colony, but it is restored in 1802 by the Peace of Amiens.

BRITISH DOMINIONS, COLONIES, PROTECTORATES, POSSESSIONS, AND DEPENDENCIES.

The British Empire includes an area of 12,780,-380 square miles and a population estimated in 1919 at 441,410,000. The subdivisions are here arranged under the six great divisions of the world: Europe, Asia, Africa, America, Australasia, and Oceania.

In form of government the colonies are divided into three classes: (1) The "crown colonies" over which the home government exercises complete control; (2) Possessions having representative institutions, in which the home government has a veto on legislation, and retains appointments and control of the principal public officers; (3) "Responsible governments," in which all the officials except the nominal ones are appointed by the colonial governments; the home government retaining a seldom-used veto on legislation. These include the great "self-gov-erning dominions" of South Africa, Australia, erning dominions" of South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, and Canada. A special merit of Brit-ish colonial government is its elasticity; it seeks no uniformity, and allows liberty as to details, so far as such liberty does not weaken or infringe upon the central home authority, which is always paramount and which keeps control of all foreign relations and

The colonies are administered by a colonial office in three departments: (1) The Dominions Department deals with business connected with the self-governing colonies and is joined with the secreta riat of the Imperial Conference. (2) The Crown Colonies Department deals with the administrative and political work of the crown colonies and protectorates. (3) The General Department, which is also the legal department, deals with matters common to all crown colonies, such as education, telegraphs, post office, banking, and currency. Connected with this department are standing committees which deal with promotion, pensions, finance, concessions, and railways.

The area is 92 square miles (with the neighbor-lng islands, 118 square miles) and in 1918 the population was 224,000.

GIBRALTAR.

GIBRALTAR is a rocky area of nearly two square miles at the extreme southern point of Spain with a civil population (1919) of 16,096, and about 1,867 aliens. It was seized by the British in 1704 and though enduring many sieges since, notably in 1782, it has never been retaken. Nature and the most persistent care and skill have rendered it one of the persistent care and skill have rendered it one of the strongest fortresses in the world. It is also a naval base with a harbor of 260 acres. It is administered as a crown colony under a governor who is at the same time military commander in chief.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS IN ASIA ADEN.

ADEN, "the Gibraltar of the East," is a peninsular rock, city, and harbor on the extreme southern coast of Arabia, one hundred and five miles east of Cape of Arabia, one hundred and five miles east of Cape Bab el Mandeb. The area is 75 square miles. (For population, etc., see under Perim.) It first came into British possession in 1839, when the East India Company occupied it. Great Britain now holds a protectorate of Aden, embracing 9,000 square miles. Great sums have been expended on the fortifications and harbor. A political "Resident" administers affairs and also commands the troops of Perim, Aden, and the protectorate. Directly opposite in Africa is the British Somaliland protectorate.

INDIA.

Historical Outline.

India almost deserves to be called a continent by itself. Its political history has no unity, but is the story of various races and creeds acting and reacting story of various races and creeds acting and reacting upon each other. The India of prehistoric ages was apparently populated by three distinct stocks when it was invaded by a branch of the great Aryan family in the second millennium B. c. The intermixture ily in the second millennium B. C. of Aryans and aborigines constitutes the bulk of the population there to-day. During 2,000 years, invasions of barbarous Turanians from across the Himalayas have added vigorous strains to the blood of the population. To this essentially foreign element from the North was due the extension of Buddhism which gross in the Cangos valley as a protest against which arose in the Ganges valley as a protest against decadent Brahmanism. For generations it was a great unifying influence, but declined in the place of its birth, while its sway reached eventually the uttermost regions of Asia.

The quarrels between the creeds and races of India were interrupted in the eleventh century A. D., by successive invasions of Moslem Tatars and Afghans from the Northwest. The invaders had learned to act together and were therefore superior to the native population. By the thirteenth century the native population. By the thirteenth century they had conquered nearly the whole of India, which remained more or less under Moslem rule until the scepter passed to Great Britain. The most powerful and effective of these Moslem dynasties was that of the Moguls, or Mongols, descendants of Tamerlane (Timour the Great), who established themselves in Delhi in 1556 and reigned with splendor until 1707. The family of Bahadur Shah, sultan, continued nominal rulers till the suppression of the Sepoy Mutiny in 1857.

Sepoy Mutiny in 1857.

The Portuguese found their way around the Cape of Good Hope in 1498, and began to trade with India. They made no attempt to secure anything more than trading stations, or factories. The more than trading stations, or factories. The French and the English aimed at small territorial bases, which enlarged steadily. In 1757, at the battle of Plassey, the French enterprise was crushed Meantime the British East India Company was making itself master, taking advantage of the decline of the Mogul supremacy. Its extent and power grew till the Mutiny of 1857, a desperate and almost successful effort to shake off the British rule.

The relations between England and India are un-

The relations between England and India are un-precedented in history. No previous instance is to be found of the acquisition and successful government of a dependency so immense in extent and so populous, at such a distance from the central power. This magnificent conquest was made piecemeal. Englishmen at home hesitated to seize the prize, while it was impossible to arrest the gravitation of the whole country toward British rule as one state after another crumbled and fell from anarchy or sheer inantian sheer inanition.

Since 1857 there has been a steady pressure in This group of uniteen coral islands, four fluided miles west of Ceylon, has a population of 70,000 and an area of about 115 square miles. The inhabitants are Mohammedans. The Maldives are a dependbut even the extension of native influence by the re-form of 1919 fails to satisfy the aspirations of native agitators and leaders.

Organization.

Government An account of the government of India practically involves a history of its gradual acquisition by Great Britain. From the three early factories of the East India Company there arose the Iactories of the East India Company there arose the three vast presidencies of Bengal, Bombay, and Madras, each with a governor, councils, and civil service of its own. Since 1858, the East India Company has been replaced by a Secretary of State for India, who is a member of the British cabinet, assisted by a security of from the forwischen manners of whom a is a member of the British cabinet, assisted by a council of from ten to fourteen members, of whom a majority must have lived in India, appointed for seven years by the Secretary of State for India. The Secretary of State and Council control the expenditure of the revenues of India, both in India and penditure of the revenues of infina, note in India and elsewhere, and conduct the business transacted in the United Kingdom in relation to the government of India. In 1919 the undersecretary of state for India was Lord Sinba of Raipur, the first Indian to hold this office.

In India the supreme executive authority vested in a governor-general or viceroy, who is appointed by the crown and usually holds office for five years. The council of the governor-general is composed of the commander in chief of the British forces and six ordinary members, who usually hold office for five years. In 1909 the council was expanded into a legislative council by the addition of other members nominated by the viceroy or elected under the Indian Councils Act. The legislative council consists of 68 members, including the governor-general, 36 of whom are officials and 32 nonofficials. Special provision is made for the representation of Mohammedans

This council, under certain restrictions, has power to make laws for all persons within British India and for all British subjects in the native states and Ior native subjects of the king in any part of the world. In 1912 India was divided into fifteen administrain 1912 India was divided into intern administra-tions: Madras, Bombay, Bengal, United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, Punjab, Burma, Bihar and Orissa, Central Provinces and Berar, Assam, North-West Frontier Province, Ajmer-Merwara, Coorg, Baluchi-stan, Delhi, Andaman and Nicobar Islands.

In three of these provinces (Madras, Bombay, and Bengal) the executive power is vested in a governor; elsewhere in a lieutenant governor or chief commissioner. The administrative officers of the more important provinces are assisted by executive There are also legislative councils consisting of the executive councils and nominated and elected members; the provinces, therefore, though under the control of the government of India, have some administrative independence. The provinces some administrative independence. The provinces are divided into divisions under commissioners, and then into districts at the head of each of which is an executive officer who has entire supervision of the district and is responsible to the governor of the province.

The control which the government of India exercises over the native states varies in degree. are all governed by Indian princes, ministers, councils, but are under the political supervision of a British Resident, who is the actual governing power. The chiefs have no right to make war or peace or to have relations with each other or external ited. The total number of Indian states is about ited. 700, varying from Hyderabad with an area of over 82,000 square miles and a population of over 13,000,-000 to small states consisting of only a few villages.

721 municipalities exist in India, with a total population (1917) of over 17,000,000. These munici-These municipalities have charge of their own roads, water supply, drainage, sanitation, medical relief, vaccina-tion, and primary education. Under the supervision of the provincial government, they may impose taxes, enact by-laws, and expend money. Since 1884, the elective principle has been extended in dif-Ierent degrees over all India, the majority of the members of committees in the larger towns and in many smaller towns being elected by the taxpayers.

Religion. The creeds of India have been important in the political as well as the spiritual lile of its people. The prehistoric cults were crude and gross. In contrast to these the Aryans brought into the country a worship of singular purity and elevation, without shrines or images or offensive rites. The gradual intermixture of the two races resulted in a deteriorated form of the higher religion known as Hinduism, the creed of three fourths of the inhabitants of India to-day. This has not been evolved, however, without some marked influences from Buddhism, which arose in the sixth century B. C., was made the state religion in Hindustan by Asoka, about 228 B. C., and flourished for about a thousand years side by side with Brahmanism.

As a protest against the emptiness of the older creed, Buddhism was at first extremely effective, but finally declined and practically disappeared from the land. It still survives in Burma, where are over 10,000,000 adherents of this faith. Jainism, an analogous but not an allied cult, still survives, notably in Bombay and Rajpntana. Next to the Hindus (217,587,000), the Moslems are most numerous (66,647,299), the great majority of them Sunnites Adherents of other faiths found in India are the Sikhs (numbering 3,000,000), Parsis (about 100,000), and Christians of all churches (3,876,203). Few regions of the earth have shown such an aptitude and passionate concern for diverse religions has India. The government permits and protects all forms of religion, except such practices and rites as thuggee and suttee.

Industry and Lahor. Because of the favorable climate and abundant rainfall, India has some of the most productive land in the world. The mainstay is agriculture, which by scientific methods, irrigation, and systematic rotation of crops, now yields more than at any past period. Its chief crops are wheat and other food grains, rice, cotton, opium, tea, sugar cane, tobacco, and indigo. Forests and mines are productive, while manufacture with modern machinery, relying on the abundant labor sup-ply, is bound to become a great industrial factor in the future. In 1913, the total sea-borne import and export commerce of India was worth $1,381,581,330, of which $897,115,878 was exports. During the which $897,115,878 was exports. World War, this trade was much reduced, since it was hard to reach markets.

Education. The problem of the education of the native population is tremendous and has never been fairly faced. According to the census of 1911, out of the 313,417,081 inhabitants, 18,539,431 were able to read and write. Fewer than 2,000,000 natives have a knowledge of English. The educational institutions are of two classes: (1) Public or private schools, including mission schools which conform to the standards prescribed by the department of public instruction or by the universities and which un-dergo inspection. (2) Private institutions which do not Iulfill the conditions prescribed by government Public education provides for: (1) Primary Schools in which are taught reading and writing in the vernacular and other elementary knowledge; (2) Secondary Schools where instruction is brought up to a fixed standard of graduation. These schools are divided into English or vernacular and also into high and middle schools; (3) Colleges, where the students are studying for a degree. All the public colleges are affiliated with the five great universities of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, the Punjab, and Allaha-bad. New universities have been established at Benares and Patna and Ior Mysore. In all, there are 192,755 institutions of education, with 7,851,946 students, besides numerous special schools. About four fifths of the children of school age are left unre-

Defense. The military forces of India consist of the British troops stationed there, the Indian army, and the imperial-service troops. The army as a whole is divided into a Northern and a Southern army. At the outbreak of the World War (August, 1914) the total of British troops in all India was 79,-953, but these were mostly withdrawn and their place taken by native units

The Indian army in 1914 consisted of 2,751 officers, 159,134 other ranks, 45,660 noncombatants and 36.767 reservists. These numbers were largely increased during the war, and on September 30, 1918, the Indian army was 1,161,789. Service in the ranks is voluntary and enlistment is for four years with the option of extending it to 32 years. About a third of the men are Mohammedans and nearly two thirds Imperial-service troops are also raised and maintained by the native states, but trained by Britsh officers. In 1914 they numbered about 20,000 sist officers. In 1914 they numbered about 20,000 with a cavalry force of 6,600.

The military forces in India are administered under the supreme control of the commander in chief by a headquarters staff. From August, 1914, to September 30, 1918, 1,172,908 troops of all ranks were sent to the various Ironts, exclusive of 42,430 British

Area and Population. The area of British India is 1,093,074 square miles and its population in 1911 was 244,267,542. The Indian states, which are all under the control of the Indian government, have an area of 709,555 square miles and a population of 70,888,854, making a total for all India of an area of 1,802,629 with a population of 315,156,396.

A garrison was maintained here until the death of Napoleon at St. Helena. They are without government, heing left entirely to themselves, except that a British ship visits the group once a year.

THE SEYCHELLES.

The Seychelles are a group of about 90 islands northeast of Madagascar. First settled by the French, Great Britain has held them since 1794. They were formerly dependent on Mauritius, but since 1888 have constituted a separate administration under a governor and council. They are well supplied with schools, and local examinations are held for Cambridge. The area is about 156 square

BRITISH SOMALILAND.

British Somaliland (area about 68,000 square miles, population about 300,000, mostly Moslem nomads) lies south of the Gulf of Aden and north of Italian Somaliland. Armed resistance to British rule ceased in 1905. With the introduction of order, settlements on the coast are springing up and trade is increasing. The exports are ostrich feathtrade is increasing. The exports are ostrich feathers, gums, skins, and hides. The country is administered by a commissioner, assisted by British army

BASUTOLAND.

BASUTOLAND is inclosed by the Orange Free State, Natal, and Cape of Good Hope Province. It is a native reservation. A resident commissioner ad-ministers affairs under the high commissioner for South Africa. It is better adapted for grain raising than any other region of South Africa. The area is 11,716 miles and the population in 1911 consisted of 403,111 natives and 1,396 Europeans.

BECHUANALAND.

BECHUANALAND is a protectorate, lying between the Transvaal Province and the former German Southwest Africa. The Cape-to-Cairo Railway passes through it. A resident commissioner administers affairs under the high commissioner for South Africa. The area is 275,000 square miles and the population in 1911 was 125,350, including 1,692

RHODESIA.

Rhodesia perpetuates the name of the British financier and statesman, Cecil Rhodes. The region extends from the Transvaal Province northwards. Its neighbors are Portuguese East Africa, Nyasaland, the former German East Africa, Belgian Congo, Angola, and Bechuanaland. The British South Africa Company, chartered in 1889, admin-isters the whole territory. It is divided by the Zam-bezi into Southern Rhodesia and Northern Rhodesia. Rhodesia is governed by an administrator, appointed by the Company, and an executive council. There is also a legislative council, partly appointed and artly elected by the registered voters. Southern Rhodesia has an area of 149,000 square miles, and the estimated population (1918) was 770, 000 natives and 37,000 Europeans. The country is rich in gold and other minerals; the total output in 1917 being valued at over $19,440,000; gold alone being in 1918 $12,791,500 The Rhodesian railway system extends from Cape of Good Hope Province northwards to the Belgian Congo.

Northern Rhodesia has an area of about 291,000 square miles and an estimated population (1918) of 890,000 natives and 2,400 Europeans. The government is vested in a resident commissioner and an advisory council of five members. Timber is plentiful and the agricultural products are corn, cotton, tobacco, and wheat. Rubber is also produced.

SWAZILAND.

SWAZILAND is situated at the southeastern corner of the Transvaal. It is under the control of the British government, which is exercised by the high commissioner for South Africa. Its agricultural commissioner for south Africa. Its agricultural crops are corn and tobacco. The territory is rich in minerals and in 1917–18 the output of tin was valued at $291,600. # UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

The Union of South Africa, established by act of Parliament, September 20, 1909 (actually united May 31, 1910), consists of the four self-governing colonies of the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Transvaal, and Orange Free State. The British govern-ment appoints a governor-general, who in turn designates an executive council of ministers responsible to the South African Parliament.

The legislative power is vested in a Parliament consisting of a Senate and a House of Assembly which may be summoned or prorogued by the governor-general; and the Assembly may be dissolved and new elections called for.

The Senate consists of 40 members, of whom, until 1920, eight were nominated by the governor-general and 32 elected, eight for each province. The senators must be British subjects of European descent, of thirty years of age, and possessing property to the value of $2.500. The House of Assembly consists of 130 members, 51 for the Cape of Good Hope, 17 for Natal, 45 for Transvaal, 17 for Orange Free State. Members must be British subjects of European de-scent, and resident five years in the Union.

Each province is governed by an administrator appointed nominally by the governor-general of South Africa, actually by a ministry for the time South Africa, actually by a ministry for the time being, and by a provincial council, elected for three years, which has authority to deal with finance, education, charity, numicipal institutions, local works, and other matters delegated to them.

Religion and Education. The majority of the white people (693,898) are adherents of the Dutch Protestant churches. There are over 250,000 Angelogans 58,000 Prochytogions 53,000

cans, 80,000 Wesleyans, 58,000 Presbyterians, 53,000

PROVINCES OF THE UNION.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The colony of the Cape of Good Hope was originally founded by the Dutch in 1652. Great Britain occupied it from 1795 to 1803 and again from 1806 1814, when it was formally ceded to Great in. It had a responsible government from 1872 Britain. to 1910 when it formed one of the original provinces of the South African Union. It is divided into 119 administrative districts, and there are 126 municipalities and 78 village-management boards. The area is 276,966 sq. miles; the population (1911) was 2,564,965, of whom 619,319 were Europeans. were 1,437,688 Christians, and 1,047,233 natives of no religion. Education is compulsory for children of European extraction, and there were 121,000 European pupils and 148,000 non-Europeans.

Production and Industry. The majority of the diamonds produced in South Africa come from Cape of Good Hope Province.

NATAL.

NATAL was annexed to Cape Colony (now Cape of Good Hope Province) in 1844, given a separate government in 1845, and responsible government in 1893. The province of Zululand was annexed to Natal in 1897. In 1910 Natal became one of the provinces of the Union of South Africa. It has a seaboard of about 360 miles. The climate is well suited to Europeans, being semitropical on the coast and somewhat colder inland.

Education. The province maintains 169 primary schools, seven intermediate schools, and seven secondary schools, with various special schools. In 1917 there were over 21,000 Europeans attending the government and inspected schools, and over 28, 000 colored children receiving education. About 1,000 children attend private, unaided schools

Production and Industry. There are vast sugar plantations on the coast of Zuduland, which in 1917–18 produced 130,000 tons, while tea and cereals of all kinds grow abundantly. Natal has a small gold production. Its coal production in 1917 was over 2,000,000 tons. The whaling industry is also

The area of Natal (including Zululand, which is 10,424 square miles) is 35,291 square miles. The population (1911) was 1,194,043, of whom 98,000 were Europeans. The European population has more than doubled since 1891

TRANSVAAL.

THE TRANSVAAL was colonized by the Boers in 1836–37, and its independence was recognized by Great Britain in 1852. In 1877 it was annexed by the British government, but after the rebellion of 1880 its independence was recognized under certain conditions. The discovery of gold in "the Rand" (see RAND, in the Dict.) and the consequent influx of foreigners produced friction leading to the South African War (1899–1902), which resulted, in 1900, in the amexation of the Transvaal In 1906 it received responsible government, and in 1910 became one of the provinces of the Union of South Africa.

Religion and Education. The Dutch Protestant churches are the strongest religious denomination.

The primary and elementary schools are maintained by the province and consist of 900 primary schools, with $5,000 pupils; 19 intermediate, and 11 secondary, schools, with over 3,000 pupils; 350 state the corn and tobacco crops are important. The greatest resources, however, are gold (1917) $184,-680,000, diamonds $8,103,000, and coal $7,708,000.

Transvaal has an area of 110,450 square miles. and is divided into twenty-four districts. The population (1911) was 1,686,212, of whom 420,552 were Europeans or whites. The European population is increasing.

ORANGE FREE STATE.

EUROPEANS first crossed the Orange River in the middle of the eighteenth century, and made settlements in 1810 and 1820. In 1848 the whole territory, including the Vaal, was proclaimed a British possession, but in 1854 British sovereignty was with-drawn. In the South African War the Orange Free Grawn. In the South African war the Grange Free State sided with the South African Republic (now Transvaal Province), and as a result was annexed, in 1900, as the Grange River Colony. It was governed as a crown colony until 1907, when it received the convention of the Colonia C responsible government, and in 1910 it became a part of the Union of South Africa.

Religion and Education. The principal religious denomination is the Dutch Reformed Church, with 175,000 adherents.

Primary and secondary education are controlled by the province, which is divided into school districts, for each of which there is a school board. In 1917 there were 731 public, and 137 aided private, schools, with 36,938 pupils. Attendance is compulsory, but fees are charged at all the schools. Both Dutch and English are taught to all children unless objected to by the parents. There are several institutions of higher instruction: a norma, cheol, a polytechnic college, and an industrial school.

Industry and Production. The province is well adapted for grazing, and stock farming is one chief industry, although an increasing quantity of grain is being produced. The province produced in 1917, $4,551,800 worth of diamonds and $1,056,000

The province has an area of 50,389 square miles, and is divided into 24 districts. The population (1911) was 175,189 whites, 352,985 colored.

EGYPT.

Historical Outline.

EGYPT was conquered by the Romans in 46 A. D., and its national existence ended with the establishment of the Arabian dominion in 641 A D. next six centuries the country was one of the cali-phates of Islam. In 1250, Egypt was conquered by the Mamelukes, originally Tatars and Turks, who from being a race of slaves, rose by insurrection to become the dominant people of the country. This line of sovereigns continued until 1382, when a new line, the Circassian Mamelukes took their place. In 1517 the Sultan Selim I. invaded and subdued Egypt. In the two centuries following, this dependency lost vitality, though it was never destroyed and the Mamelukes were still a power in Lower Egypt.

In 1798 Napoleon Bonaparte invaded Egypt and almost destroyed the Mamelukes in the battle of the Pyramids. Napoleon took Egypt as a station on the conqueror's road to Asia. After the unsuccessful siege of Acre he was obliged to give way, and in 1801 Napoleon took Egypt as a station on the

the French army evacuated the country.

In 1805 Mehemet Ali, the first viceroy of the country, gained virtual independence. He affected country, gained virtual independence. He affected European methods and became a powerful ruler. In 1830 he made a successful invasion of Syria, and challenged the sultan to open war. In 1839 the Turks were defeated in the battle of Nizib. The Western powers came on the scene and obliged Mehemet Ali to resume his relation as a viceroy of the Ottoman Empire. The sultan, in 1848, appointed Ottoman Empire. The sultan, in 1848, appointed Ibrahim, son of Mehemet, as regent of Egypt. Thereafter, a succession of weak princes ruled Egypt till, in 1863, Ismail succeeded to the pashalic. Four years later he was designated by the sultan as khedive of Egypt

Ismail tried to westernize his realm by lavish expenditure, subsidized the opera, and contracted large foreign debts. The completion of the canal across the Isthmus of Suez in 1869 gave Ismail great prestige in European countries and enabled him, in the name of the government, to borrow enormous sums of money for his personal use. In 1879 the reign broke down, he was expelled, and his son, Tew-fik, was established in his stead. Tewfik was obliged to appeal to Western powers for aid. Not even the interest on the public debt could be paid.

In this emergency, Great Britain and France intervened, and from 1879 to 1883 Egyptian affairs were under the supervision of two controllers general, appointed by France and England. This humiliating condition of the Egyptians led to an insurrection in 1882; in a nationalistic movement Arabi Pasha, the minister of war, took the lead and raised a little army. England intervened and bombarded Alexandria, defeated Arabi Pasha, and restored Tew-fik. In this intervention France had taken no part and as a result, in 1883, a single English financial advisor was appointed without whose concurrence no important financial decision could be made. France rather unwillingly acquiesced, but in the Anglo-French convention of 1904 gave her approval to the Under Ismail and Tewfik the authority of Egypt was pushed up the Nile. In that distant region appeared the Mahdi (see in the Dictionary), one of the fanatical prophets who from time to time became leaders in the Sudan. He all but annihilated an Egyptian army under English officers, and the rule the British was shaken. In 1884 General Charles George Gordon nese Gordon") was sent with a small British force into the Sudan. Left without support, he was cooped up in Khartum, and on January 26, 1885, the town was stormed and Gordon was killed, just as a British relief force was nearing. The British abandoned the Sudan until 1898, when General Kitchener defeated the dervishes at Omdurman and reoccupied Khartum.

In 1892 Abbas Hilmi Pasha succeeded his father, Tewfik, and showed considerable independence of, and irritation at, British control. For some of his acts he was forced to apologize publicly in the official gazette. The British were obliged to recognize the desire of the Egyptians for a share in their own gov-

SUDAN extends from the frontier of Egypt to Uganda and the Belgian Congo, and from the Red Sea to Wadai, in Central Africa. At various times a nominal authority was exerted over it by Egypt, but from 1882 until the victories of Kitchener in 1898 and 1899 there was no Egyptian influence there.

BRITISH COLONIES AND POSSESSIONS IN AMERICA.

CANADA.

Historical Outline.

England began to colonize America as early as 1567; and at one time held as colonies the whole area of the present United States east of the Mississippi That possession was lost in the American Revolu-tion, and in 1846 Great Britain gave up claim to the Oregon country south of 49°. Otherwise, nearly every island and continental area that Great Britain ever occupied in the two Americas is still British

The Dominion of Canada is a fine example of the colonizing ability of Great Britain. The difficulty of organizing the provinces of Canada into a federation, leaving to the crown the central authority, was great. The whole region reaching from Nova Scotia far into the interior was once possessed and colonized by the French. This Gallic foundation had to be taken into account, but English institutions have fixed themselves alike in old French Canada and in those parts colonized by Great Britain berself.

Old Canada, often called Quebec, included that country between the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Lakes Superior and Huron. The modern Dominion of Canada embraces Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island as well as New Brunswick, and Frince Edward Manitoba, Sas-the great region of the Northwest — Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, and the Northwest Territories. The total area, excluding the water surfaces, is 3.603,910 square miles, which is greater than that of the United States inclusive of Alaska and Hawaii. The Hudson's Bay Company's claims to the western half of this domain were in 1869 purchased for $1,460,000.

The French who penetrated the valley of the St Lawrence set up a mild feudalism, which had no permanent effect. The last traces disappeared in 1854. manent effect. In the latter part of the 17th century the city of Quebec became the seat of administration for Montreal, Quebec, and Three Rivers. The governing body was the governor, the bishop of Quebec, five associate judges, and the king's attorney. To this period also belong the discoveries and explorations of La Salle. He explored the Great Lakes and the river systems and reached the Mississippi, which he descended to its mouth. His great and rational plans of colonization drew the attention of France to the possibilities of an empire in the New World.

In the struggle between the British and French nations for colonial empire, the first weakening of the French was shown in the Treaty of Utrecht, in 1713, by which Hudson Bay, Newfoundland, and Acadia were relinquished to Great Britain. The American possessions of France were restricted thenceforth to the valleys of the St. Lawrence and the Mississippi.

New France was conquered. Canada was transferred 1912. to Great Britain; Louisiana, to Britain and Spain. At the time of the Treaty of Paris (1763), the total population of Canada was scarcely more than 65,000. Primitive manners still prevailed. The chief interests of the people were in the fur trade, and hardy and adventurous trappers traversed the forests far into the interior. Nevertheless the Canadians were an agricultural people easily supporting themselves

The transfer to England brought great changes in the social and industrial as well as the political condition of the country. Within ten years exports increased threefold and amounted to $1,775,000, and the import trade amounted to $1,367,000.

Just before the outbreak of the American Revolution, the British government passed the Quebec Act (1774), by which the province of Quebec was governed by a legislative council appointed by the crown and the Roman Catholic Church was established by law. Moreover, the limits of Quebec Province were extended to include the territory lying between the Great Lakes and the Ohio River.

This act greatly aroused the Thirteen Colonies, who expected to share in the founding of "back colonies," beyond the Alleghenies. At the outbreak onies. of the American Revolution, the Thirteen Colonies vainly solicited the Canadians to make common cause against the mother country. A disastrous campaign of invasion was conducted by Montgomery and Arnold in the winter of 1775. Thenceforth, during the great conflict with Great Britain, Canada was a refuge for the American loyalists, who were welcomed and received lands.

Great Britain, after the Treaty of 1783, closed the ports of her colonies to the trade of the United States while granting Canada a valuable privilege in supplying the British West Indies with her principal ex-In 1822, the importation of wheat and lumber from the United States was conceded. From the beginning of her history, the question of trade and of the economic laws by which trade is governed has been one of the leading political questions in

In 1791, however, a constitution was granted conceding to the Canadians the right to establish a government of their own with an elective legislature. old French colony was designated henceforth as Lower Canada. Upper Canada, with an English-speaking population, was made a separate province. The civil and religious rights of the French Canadians were so well guaranteed by the constitution that the revolution in France did not react upon them or arouse them.

In the War of 1812 the Canadian frontier was the scene of the principal hostilitics. Little battles were fought on the line of Niagara, and the St. Lawrence, but the Canadians with some British troops held their own. Later, jealousy grew up between Quebec and Ontario out of conflict of commercial and financial interests. An effort was made in 1822 for the union of Upper and Lower Canada, but this was not effected until 1840. In the year 1849 the free-trade policy of Great Britain was extended to the colonies, and the old restrictive navigation laws were finally abrogated.

At the same time the coal beds of Vancouver and the gold deposits of the British mainland were discovered. The organization of British Columbia, the first British province on the Pacific, followed. forts were made to do away with ecclesiastical endowments and other special interests. In 1854, the reserve privileges of the established clergy and the seigniorial tenures in property were annulled in Upper and Lower Canada. In the same year the Great Western Railway was undertaken — a work of the greatest importance in promoting the international relations and interests of Canada and the United States.

The American Civil War showed the strength of federation and, also, brought out the possibility of annexation by the great neighbor. After long discussions and controversies, the people of all the provinces came to an understanding. In 1867, the British North American Act was passed, by which all the eastern continental colonies were united, including Quebec and Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New

In 1869, the possessions of the Hudson's Bay Company were purchased by Great Britain, and in 1870, what was then the vast territory of Manitoba became an independent province of the Dominion. In 1871, British Columbia was admitted as a member of the federation. In 1873, Prince Edward Island was admitted. Then, in 1882, came the organization of several northwestern territories. ritorial organization was completed by an order in council in 1895. By this decree the remaining por-tions of the Northwest Territories were divided into four districts, to which were given the names Ungava, Franklin, Mackenzie, and Yukon. In 1898, the Yukon Territory was made a separate political unit, and in 1905 Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Athabaska were reorganized as the provinces The contest was renewed in 1744, and again in 1754. Of Saskatchewan and Alberta and admitted to the Sardines, and whitefish After seven years' conflict. England was victorious. Union. Ungava was annexed to Quebec Province in valued at $32,000,000.

The Dominion now consists of nine provinces, the Yukon Territory, and the Northwest Territories, which last in 1920 were redivided into the provisional districts of Franklin, Mackenzie, and Keewatin.

Organization.

The constitution of Canada de-Government. pends upon the British North America Act of 1867, which provides that the constitution of the Dominion shall be "similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom." The executive authority is yested in the crown of Great Britain and Ireland, but carried on by a governor-general and a privy council (King's Privy Council) which is virtually the ministry for the time being. The ministers are design nated by the governor-general and are responsible to the party having a majority in the lower house of Parliament, that is, to the House of Commons. Thus parliamentary responsibility is established.

King's Privy Council consists of the prime minister, usually called the premier, the president of the Council, the secretary of state and minister of mines, the ministers for the departments of Trade and Commerce; Justice; Marine, Fisheries and Naval Service; Militia and Defense; Militia and Defense (overseas); postmaster-general; ministers of Agriculture; Public Works; Finance; Railways and Canals: Interior: Customs and Inland Revenue; Labor: Immigration and Colonization: Soldiers' Civil Reëstablishment; and two members without portfolios. These ministers form the responsible values; and their chief, the prime minister, is the port folios. head of the government.

The legislature consists of a Senate nominated for life by the governor-general. It now consists of 96 members. The total number must never exceed 104. Senators must be at least thirty years of age and possess property, either real or personal, to the value of $4,000, within the province from which they are appointed.

The House of Commons is elected by the people for a term of five years, unless sooner dissolved, one representative for every 30,819 persons. The Province of Quebec chooses 65 members and the other provinces proportionally according to their populations. In 1919, the House of Commons consisted of 234 members — 82 for Ontario, 65 for Quebec, 16 for Nova Scotia, 11 for New Brunswick, 15 for Manitoba, 13 for British Columbia, 3 for Prince Edward Island, 16 for Saskatchewan, 12 for Alberta, and one for Yukon Territory. At the election held in 1917, the Unionist party obtained 151 seats against S1 for all other parties.

Under the constitution, the Dominion govern-ment, unlike that of the United States, is endowed with all the powers not assigned exclusively by this document to the provincial legislatures. the nine provinces has a separate Parliament and administration, with a lieutenant governor designated by the governor-general. The provincial prime min-ister corresponds to the governor of a State, with large legislative powers added. The provincial prime ministers have full powers to manage local affairs and dispose of their revenue, provided they do not interfere with the action and policy of the Do-minion administration. They may amend their provincial constitutions (except as regards the office of Heutenant governor), levy taxes, borrow money, manage the sale of crown lands within the province, and exercise general police power except over lines of ships, railways, canals, and telegraphs which extend beyond the province or connect with other provinces. The federal Parliament, however, may declare certain public works for the general good and thus withdraw them from the control of the provincial Parliaments.

Production and Industry. Canada is a great agricultural country, providing enormous quantities of field crops, the value of which in 1917 was estimated at $1,145,000,000. In 1918, the wheat crop was estimated at 210,000,000 busbels: barley, $3,-000,000; oats, 456,000,000: potatoes, 105,000,000; flax, 7,695,000; and hay and clover, 14,495,000 tons. There are enormous ranches in Canada and a large amount of live stock. According to the returns for 1918, there were 3,000,000 horses, 3,000,000 milch cows, 6,000,000 other cattle, 3,000,000 sheep, 4,000,000 swine. For 1917, the important dairy products were creamery butter to the value of $34,000,000, factory cheese valued at $41,000,000, evaporated condensed milk and cream valued at $6,000,000, and other dairy products valued at nearly $12,000,000. It is officially estimated that there are between 500 and 600 million acres of timber land, and the forest products for 1916 were valued at $190,000,000.

The Atlantic provinces have a coast line of over 5,000 miles, and on the Pacific coast the meandering line of British Columbia is 7,000 miles. In addition there are 220,000 square miles of fresh water, abundantly stocked with fish. In 1917, the total value of the produce of the fisheries of Canada was $52,000,-000. The principal kinds of fish caught were salmon, codfish, lobsters, herring, halibut, haddock, sardines, and whitefish, and the exports in fish were S

With the consent of the British government, Can-ada maintains a protective tariff with a differential of about 15% on values in favor of the mother country. The tariff and the growth of business caused by the war resulted in a threefold increase of manufac-tures in the two years between 1915 and 1917. The following are the largest industries: food products, valued at $388,000,000; textiles, $144,000,000; timber, $123,000,000; iron and steel, $120,000,000.

On December 31, 1917, there were 4,925 sailing vessels and 4,264 steamers registered, with a total net tounage of 971,438. The canal, river, and lake navigation of Canada covers over 2,700 miles and 28,000 trips aggregating 20,000,000 in tonnage were made through Canadian canals in 1917. In 1917, the total length of the railways was 38, 604 miles; an increase of 1,170 miles over the previons year. The government railways in operation are 3,944 miles in length. The Canadian Pacific railway extends from Montreal to Vancouver, and is 2.502 miles in length. This railway and a line of Pr 'ne steamers bring Liverpool and Yokohama within twenty-five days of each other by "The All-Red Line." The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway was completed in 1914, from Moncton, New Brunswick, by way of Quebec, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, and Edmonton to the Pacific coast at Prince Rupert, British Columbia. It has a length of about 3,600 miles, is entirely within British territory, and forms a link in the shortest route between Europe and Asia.

Education is controlled by the provincial authorities on systems based upon the principle of free edu-cation; although education is more or less compulsory, the law is not strictly enforced. In Quebec the public schools are partly Catholic and partly Protestant. In Alberta, Ontario, Quebec, and Saskatchewan there are separate schools for Roman Catholics. Elsewhere the schools are nonsectarian.

Each province has at least one university — 22 in all, with about 16,000 students. The most important of these are McGill University, Montreal, the University of Toronto, and the French Canadian University of Laval. In the school year 1916–17 there were more than 1,300,000 pupils in attendance on 27,000 schools.

Defense. By the Militia Act of 1904, the land forces are divided into the active and reserve militia.

Service in the active militia is voluntary for threeyear enlistments. In case of need it is compulsory. The permanent force consisted of two regiments of cavalry, a brigade of horse artillery, a battalion of infantry, and other troops. British subjects between the ages of 18 and 60 who are not exempt or disqualified by law are liable for service in the militia.

The operation of the Militia Act and the organization of the military forces in Canada were suspended as a result of the World War, during which conscription was employed. There were, however, in 1919 about 12,000 troops for home defense. 418,052 troops of all ranks were sent to France up to October 31, 1918, and the total casualties amounted to 213,586.

Area and Population. The area of Canada (in part estimated, owing to lack of definite topographical information with reference especially to the northern stretches of the new provisional district of Franklin is 3,729,665 square miles, including the water surfaces, and the population by the census of 1911 was 7,206,643 (1917, estimated, 8,361,000). Between 1914 and 1918, 347,774 immigrants arrived in Canada, of whom 188,030 were from the United States.

CANADIAN PROVINCES.

ALBERTA.

THE district of ALBERTA was organized as part of the Northwest Territory in 1875, and admitted as a province of the Dominion in 1905. Alberta is pre-eminently an agricultural province, the area of arable land being 100,000,000 acres, about a twelfth of which is under cultivation at the present time. In 1917, the total value of the crops was $177,000,000, of which wheat, oats, barley, and flax were the most important. From 1880 to 1900 Alberta was the greatest ranching country in America, but farming has superseded cattle raising. Nevertheless, in Nevertheless, 1918 there were over 300,000 milch cows, 1,362,000 other horned cattle, and the wool clip was estimated at 2,400,000 pounds, net. There are valuable coal deposits, and 11,000,000 acres of forest reserve. The area is 255,285 square miles and the population (1916) 496,525

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

BRITISH COLUMBIA, first coasted by Spanish navigators, and more completely explored by Cook in 1778 and Vancouver in 1792, was for a time known as New Calcdonia, and formed a portion of the Hudson's Bay Company's concession, but in 1858 was made a crown colony. In 1866 it was united with Vancouver Island, and in 1871 entered the Canadian confederation. British Columbia has vast mineral deposits and the value of the output in 1916

Canada has great mine, all resources, and in 1917 was $42,290,462; gold $5,000,000, copper $17,000,- | Canada (1791-1840), Canada East (1841-1867), and 000, coal $7,000,000, lead $3,000,000, silver $4,000,-000. It contains more than half the standing timber in Canada and it is estimated that there are about 50 billion feet board measure under the control of the The area is 355,855 square miles the population in 1919 was estimated at 400,000.

MANITOBA.

Manitoba, for two centuries the center of the Hudson's Bay Company's activities, then known as the Red River Settlement, entered the Dominion in Manitoba is the great grain-producing province of Canada, the value of its crops in 1917 being $137,471,000. In 1918, it produced over 55,000,000 bushels of wheat, 63,000,000 bushels of oats, 31,000,-000 bushels of barley, 8,000,000 bushels of potatoes and 5,000,000 bushels of rye. The province is be lieved to be rich in gold deposits and the value of the minerals, chiefly coal, produced in 1917 was $2,539,-Manufacturing is prosperous and the value of the products in 1918 was over $61,000,000. The area is 251,832 square miles and the population (in 1916) was 553,860, more than double that of 1901. The capital, Winnipeg, has a population of 163,000.

NEW BRIINSWICK.

Settlements were made in New Brunswick as early as 1762, and in 1784 it separated from Nova Scotia. It is one of the original provinces of the Dominion. The value of New Brunswick's agricul-tural crops in 1917 was over $24,000,000, and the timber products were valued at more than $20,000,000. Nearly $4,000,000 is invested in the fish-000.000. ing industry and the value of the products for 1917 was over $5,000,000. There are deposits of minerals, but active mining is confined to coal and gypsum. The area is 27,985 square miles and the population in 1911, 351,889.

NOVA SCOTIA.

SETTLEMENTS WERE made in Nova Scotia, then called Acadia, by the French at the beginning of the seventeenth century. Port Royal was taken by the seventeenth century. Port Royal was New Englanders in 1690, but restored. In 1713, the province was ceded to the British by the Treaty of Utrecht and the name was changed to Nova Scotia. It was one of the original provinces of the Dominion. The chief industries of Nova Scotia are agriculture and fishing. Fruit growing is extremely important and on an average a million barrels of apples are raised yearly. The climate is well adapted for the growth of fodder and pasturage, and the annual wool clip is over a million pounds. There is considerable clip is over a million pounds. There is considerable mineral wealth of coal, iron, gypsum, building stone, limestone, manganese, and tungsten. Nova Scotia has the most extensive fisheries of any of the Canadian provinces. More than $8,000,000 is invested in this industry and the value of the product in 1916– 17 was over $10,000,000. The area is 21,428 square miles and the population (1911) was 492,338.

ONTARIO.

ONTARIO, known as Upper Canada from 1791 to 1867, was one of the original provinces of the Dominion. The province contains great agricultural and mineral resources, extensive forests, great water power, and valuable fisheries. The chief industry is agriculture and the value of the crops in 1917 was over $333,000,000, which included more than 14,-000,000 bushels of wheat, 23,000,000 bushels of barley, I16,000,000 bushels of rye, 2,000,000 bushels of peas, 4,000,000 bushels of buckwheat, 2,000,000 bushels of potatoes. The tobacco crop for 1918 was bushels of potatoes. The tobacco crop for 1918 was estimated at 10,000,000 pounds. The mineral production of 1917 included nickel $20,943,000, silver $8,698,000, copper $7,824,000, pig iron $14,201,000. The total value of the minerals produced was over $72,000,000. In 1915, there were nearly 10,000 in dustrial establishments, the products of which were valued at $715,000,000. The area is 407,262 square miles and the population in 1911 was 2,523,274. The largest cities are Toronto, the capital of the province, with 470,000; Ottawa, the capital of the Dominion, with 102,000; and Hamilton with 101,000 inhabitants

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, once known as the Isle St. Jean, was discovered by Cartier in 1534. It was occupied by the British in 1758 and received its present name in 1798. It was admitted to the confederation in 1873. Prince Edward Island is the smallest of the Dominion provinces and lies at the mouth of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Its chief industries are agriculture and fishing. In recent years the provincial government has acquired the oyster beds from the Dominion government, and is rapidly developing them. A imique industry is the raising of silver foxes. The province has an area of 2,184 square miles and a population in 1911 of 93,728, which shows a decrease of about 10 per cent from 1901.

QUEBEC.

QUEBEC, formerly called New France or Canada (1608-1763), Province of Quebec (1763-1790), Lower again the Province of Quebec from 1867, was first occupied by the French in 1608; taken by the British in 1629 but restored till 1763, when it was surrendered finally by the French. It became one of the original provinces of the Dominion in 1867. The population is sharply divided into two racial elements, 1,605,000 inhabitants being of French origin and 316,000 of British origin, according to the census of 1911. In order to protect this French majority from oppression by the English majority of the whole Dominion, the province is guaranteed 65 members in the Dominion Parliament. The Roman Catholics the Dominion Parliament. The Roman Catholics are nearly ten times as numerous as all other denominations together. All public schools in Quebec are either Catholic or Protestant.

The value of the field crops in 1917 was over $153,000,000. There are over 174,000 square miles of forcet received and Onlyne furnishes the left.

of forest reserve and Quebec furnishes more than half of all the pulp wood produced in Canada. The mineral resources of the province are extremely varied; in 1917, the product amounted to over $16,000,000 and included asbestos $7,198,000, copper and sulphur ore $1,205,342, and many rare minerals. In 1916, there were 7,158 industrial establishments whose total products were valued at $387,000,000.

The area of Quebec is 706,834 square miles and the population in 1911 was 2,003,232, showing an increase of 21.45% since 1901. The principal city is Montreal with a population of 700,000 (1917).

SASKATCHEWAN.

SASKATCHEWAN was admitted to the Dominion in 1905. It is preëminently an agricultural province and the principal crops in 1918 were oats 134,000,000 bushels, wheat 106,000,000, barley 161,000,000, no-6,951,000. Its mineral productions in 1917 tarioes 6,951,000. Its mineral productions in 1917 were valued at $832,000, being mainly coal. The area is 251,700 square miles and the population in 1911 was 492,432, having quadrupled in ten years.

After gold was discovered in the Klondike district on tributaries of the Yukon River in 1896, Yukon Territory was constituted a separate unit governed by a commissioner and a Legislative Council of ten members. The chief occupation is mining, coal, gold, copper, and silver being the chief minerals. The total mineral production in 1917 was 84,380,000. Between 1885 and 1918, $196,000,000 worth of gold was produced. The area of the Territory is 207,076 square miles. After the gold ran out, the population in 1911 was 8,512, showing a decrease of about two thirds gives 102. decrease of about two thirds since 1901.

The Northwest Territories comprise the three provisional districts of Franklin, Mackenzie, and Keewatin and have an area of approximately 2,843,-900 square miles, but a large part of the area for Franklin is estimated without any definite topographical data, especially with reference to the northern stretches. The population in 1911 was 18,481, showing a decrease of about 8 per cent since 1901. The government is in the hands of a Commissioner and a Council of Four and the administration is carried on by the officers of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

BERMUDAS.

The Bermudas are a group of over 300 islands in the Atlantic, 580 miles sontheast of Cape Hatteras. They are not strictly reckoned as a part of the West Indies and were once attached to Virginia. They constitute a crown colony, and are exceedingly important, both as a strongly fortified station of the British fleet and because of their commanding strategic position. The permanent military force comprises an average of 3,000 men of all branches. The chief exports are onions, potatoes, and other vege-tables. Of late years these islands, with their delightful climate, have become a tourist's resort much visited from the United States. Are 19 square miles, population (1918) 21,840. Area about

BRITISH WEST INDIES.

Columbus on reaching Guanabani (now gener ally identified with Watling Island) supposed he had found the Indies. Thus arose the name had found the Indies. Thus arose the name west Indies applied to the great archipelago curving from Florida and Yucatan to South America. The group is geographically American, but the political and international relations of the West Indian islands until the end of the nineteenth century chiefly European. The West Indies include thirty major islands and many groups of islands

Among these islands the Spaniards coasted and colonized until no other part of the New World was so well known and so fully occupied by colonists The easy conditions of the climate, the gentleness of the aborigines, the richness of the islands, and the ease of conquest, made the Spaniards masters for a Then other European powers began dispute these rich possessions. From 1600 to 1650 the French and English occupied several islands not From 1600 to 1650 colonized by Spain.

Most of the natives of the islands were killed out by Spanish officers; and Negro slaves were introduced by all the colonists, thus fixing this curse in one of the fairest parts of the globe. As the Spanish monarchy declined, the islands were detached from her empire. The British seized Jamaica in 1655. Denmark, France, and Holland took and held islands or s. Cuba - last remnant of the Spanish American empire — was made nominally independent, actually a protectorate of the United States, by the war of 1898. The greater number of islands have passed into the possession of Great Britain, but the United States is at present the most active and strongest power in the Caribbean region.

BAHAMAS.

THE BARAMAS are a group of about 30 inhabited and over 600 uninhabited islands northeast of Cuba. Guanahani, one of the Bahamas, was the first land discovered by Columbus in his first voyage, 1492 It was named by him San Salvador. BARBADOS is the most eastern of the West Indian islands islands. Though geographically one of the Windward Islands it is administratively a colony by itself, having its own governor assisted by a Legislative Council of 9 members, all appointed by the crown, its own Assembly of 24 members annually ted by the people. Most of the inhabitants beelected by the people. Most of the inhabitants belong to the Church of England. Sugar and cotton are the chief products. Also manjak, a kind of as-phalt, is exported. Violent hurricanes are frequent and destructive. Barbados has been made very prosperous by the high price of sugar. The area is 166 square miles and the population (1918) 191,664.

TAMAICA.

Jamaica, one of the Greater Antilles, from its history, size, and relative situation, is the most important of the British West India islands. discovered by Columbus in May, 1494. Fifteen years later the first colony was planted by the Spaniards. Columbus called the island Santiago, but the name was soon replaced by the native '' Jamaica,'' signifying the '' country of springs.'' In the time of Creniwell, Admiral Penn at the head of an English fleet wrested Jamaica from the Spaniards. All subsequent efforts of Spain to reconquer it were failures

The island soon became known for its sugar production. In 1673 the first pot of sugar was sent to England by the governor of the island. The slave The slave trade furnished the means of developing the industry. The slaves multiplied and some escaped to the Blue Mountains. These so-called "marcons" made a descent upon the plantations in 1715 and a servile war continued for 23 years. The authorities were glad to make peace by many concessions.

The sugar industry increased in importance

During the first three quarters of the eighteenth century more than five hundred thousand slaves were imported. In 1795 the slaves revolted, but they were suppressed. The island was very prosperous; some wealthy Jamaican planters settled in New England and elsewhere. The trade between Jamaica and Great Britain was profitable

In 1807 the British government totally abolished the slave trade with all its colonies. The antislavery reformers headed by Wilherforce next turned upon

The victory for humanwas costly to Jamaica and the other sugar-producing British West India islands. The abolition of slavery and other changes in the trade relations of the West Indies caused a decline from which the island bas never recovered.

In 1692 Port Royal, the old capital, was destroyed by earthquake and Kingston became the seat of gov-ernment. Another earthquake destroyed the town of Savanna la Mar in 1740. Cholera ravaged Jamaica in 1846 and some of the principal settlements lost the greater part of their inhabitants. insurrection in 1865 was put down by Governor Eyre with a strong and brutal hand. Though cleared by an official inquiry, public opinion was against him In 1907 an earthquake destroyed a great part of the town of Kingston and killed nearly 1,000 persons.

The island is ruled by a governor, assisted by a Privy Council and a Legislative Council of 29 members, 14 of whom are elected. Jamaica is divided into 15 parishes, in each of which an elected board administers local affairs. The government maintains elementary, secondary, and industrial schools; also colleges for training teachers. There is no state church. ### BRITISH HONDURAS.

British Henduras was originally a settlement of British logwood cutters made about 1638. In reality it was fortified by England as a convenient point from which to attack Spanish commerce. By the treaty of 1763 it was agreed that Great Britain should remove her fortifications from the Bay of Honduras, and in 1783 Great Britain promised to give it up altogether. British sovereignty, however, was established by the defeat of the Spaniards in 1798. This settlement led to difficulties with the United States, which were enhanced by the Claytonof 1850. This part of Central Amer-"His Majesty's Settlement in the Bay ica was called ica was called "His Majesty's Settlement in the Bay of Honduras." It yields large quantities of mahogany and logwood. # BRITISH COLONIES AND POSSESSIONS IN THE PACIFIC.

COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA.

Historical Outline.

The continent of Australia became known to Europe through the captain of the Dutch ship Duyf-ken in 1606. In 1770 Captain James Cook, the great navigator, landed on the southeast coast, named many places, and hoisted the British flag at Port Jackson; and the country was accepted as a British possession. In 1788 a penal settlement was established at Botany Bay. Other such settlements established at Botany Bay. Other such were started at Sydney and elsewhere. ties for sheep farming and the natural advantages of the country attracted many other settlers, who bitterly resented the importation of felons. Their resistance was effectual. Few convicts were sent after 1837, and none after 1867.

The sentiment for autonomy grew strong during the administrations of Sir Thomas Brisbane and Sir Ralph Darling. The discovery of gold in 1851 was followed by a great influx of population. The colonies of Australia developed into flourishing states. Both the Commonwealth and the various states have tried many experiments in progressive legislation and have adopted invalid and old-age pensions, advanced land legislation, and labor laws.

Organization.

The Commonwealth of Australia was proclaimed by Queen Victoria on September 17, 1900, on a con-stitution enacted by the British Parliament at the request of the colonies concerned. It was inaugurated at Sydney, January 1, 1901. The Australian federation is similar to that of the United States, and was accomplished only after much opposition and long discussion.

The Commonwealth is composed of the five con-Wales, Victoria, estern Australia, tinental states of New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia, and the insular state of Tasmania. In 1911 South Australia transferred to the Commonwealth the Northern Territory, with an area of 523,620 square miles and a European population of 1,418. At the same time the Federal Capital Territory (Yass-Canberra) of 912 square miles, with a population of 1,714, was transferred to the Commonwealth by New South Wales. In 1917 this Federal area was increased to slaveholding, and in 1834 secured an act of Parliament for the abolition of slavery in all the British colonies. At that time there were 322,000 slaves in Guiana, Brazil, and Venezuela. It was taken from government, presided over by a governor appointed

Each has an upper and lower legislative house. In each state every man and woman over 21 years of age is entitled to vote, unless disqualified.

Government. By the constitution, approved by popular vote of each state and by the British Parliament, legislative power is exercised by a federal Parliament, consisting of the king, a Senate and a House of Representatives. The king is represented by a governor-general, appointed by the crown, and controlled in most of his executive functions through a Council of the state ministers, who constitute a cabinet. These ministers in 1918 were: Prime Minister and Attorney-General; Minister for the Navy; Public Works and Railways; Home and Territories; Minister of Customs; Treasurer; Post-master-General; Minister of Defense; Minister for Repatriation; Vice President of the Executive Council, and three Honorary Ministers. The Senate is composed of 6 senators from each state, elected for 6 years, one half retiring every 3 years. The House 6 years, one half retiring every 3 years. The House is as nearly as possible twice as numerous as the Senate, and the members are chosen for three years by universal adult suffrage, the number from each state being proportioned to its population, save that no state shall ever be represented by less than five. The legislative powers of the Parliament are ample.

In operation the Australian government is carried on by ministers responsible to Parliament, the governor-general being a figurehead; a federal court exercises the power to annul statutes of the states and of the union without appeal to Great Britain unless it certifies the case itself for imperial decision.

Rellgion. There is no state church. The Church of England leads in number of communicants. Then come Roman Catholics, Methodists, Presbyterians, Lutherans, and Baptists in the order named

Industry and Labor. Agriculture, cattle and sheep raising, dairy farming, and mining are the chief occupations. The chief exports 1917-18 were coner occupations. The cline exports 197-15 were wool, $119,492,000; wheat, $29,112,800; flour, $21,-482,900; butter, $23,835,500; beef, $17,975,600; copper, $15,140,000; lead, $15,612,700; tin, $5,321,- 700; skins and hides, $13,864,000.

Education is in the hands of the various states and is generally free and compulsory. In 1917 there were 9,197 state schools, with 782,504 pupils. In addition there are numerous private schools, largely In denominational or technical, and schools giving spe-denominational or technical, and schools giving special training. In each state there is also a university.

Defense. By the Defense Act of 1903, amended by the various acts since passed, compulsory military training is established, beginning with cadets of twelve to eighteen years of age. This is followed by two years in the citizen forces as recruits and six years as soldiers. Liability ends with the completion of the twenty-sixth year. The actual period of training, however, is very short, about sixteen days each year. When the system is under full opdays each year. When the system is under full operation it is estimated that there will be 150,000 cadets and 120,000 citizen soldiers. Before the World War the militia consisted of 50,000 and there were 90,000 undergoing compulsory training as senior cadets. It is estimated that the annual cost senior caders. It is estimated that the annual cost when this system is in full working order will somewhat exceed $14,580,000. The total military forces, June 30, 1917, amounted to 281,942, of whom 3,923 were permanent. During the World War, more tban 750,000 men volunteered and 300,000 were sent Proposals to establish conscription were overseas. defeated.

The Commonwealth plans to make Australia selfdefending, and in 1911 agreed to furnish an Australian fleet unit together with the necessary auxiliaries such as docks and depot ships. In time of peace this navy was to be under the control of the Commonwealth, but in time of war one of the units of the royal navy. A ship of this unit chased and destroyed the German commerce destroyer, Emden.

Area and Population. The area of the Australian Commonwealth (not including New Guinea) is 2,974,581 square miles and the population (estimated, 1919) 5,140,153.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

NEW SOUTH WALES was the earliest settled and is now the most populous of all the Australian states. In 1840 New Zealand was separated from it and organized as a separate colony Responsible government was established in 1855. The general election of 1904 was the first in the state in which women were entitled to vote. The permanent capital of the Commonwealth will be located in New South Wales at Yass-Canberra. The state is entitled to 27 members in the Commonwealth House of Representatives. The area is 310,372 square miles, estimated population in 1919 was 1,960,597.

VICTORIA.

VICTORIA is the most southern and, in territory, the smallest of the continental states. It was permanently colonized in 1835, when Melbourne was founded. Responsible government dates from 1855. 97% of the inhabitants above fifteen can read and Victoria is entitled to 21 members in the

The area is 670,500 square miles estimated acquired in 100,719,607. miles; estimated population in 1919, 712,827.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

South Australia occupies the center of the continent, which it spans from north to south. It was made a British province in 1836. Women were granted the franchise in 1894. A large part of the interior is occupied by the almost limitless and desert Austral Plain. It is entitled to 7 members in the Commonwealth House of Representatives. The area is 380,070 square miles. The estimated population in 1919 was 455,944.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

Western Australia occupies all the western part of the continent. The first settlement was planted on the Swan River, in 1829. Responsible government was granted in 1890. This was the last of the square miles. The estimated population (1919) was 323,220 as against only about 50,000 thirty

TASMANIA.

Tasmania is separated from Australia by Bass Tasmania is separated from Austrana by Strait, about 150 miles in width. In 1642 it was discovered by the Dutch navigator Tasman, whose name it bears. He called it Van Diemen's Land, for a Dutch governor of Java who claimed the island for Holland. The Frenchnan Marion-Dufresne visited the island in 1772, and provoked the natives to hostil-Five years afterward Captain Cook anchored in Adventure Bay. Then came a brief contest among representatives of different European powers for the right of dominion. Captain Bass circumnavigated the island in 1798. Because of his favorable description, the site of Hobart Town was afterward chosen.

In 1803 a colony was planted on the Derwent, the same year a penal colony was established at Port Phillip, Australia, but was transferred to Ho-bart Town in 1804. The natives were constantly hostile, but were brought to subjection in 1830, after which the aboriginal race rapidly dwindled.

Tasmania was a dependency of New South Wales until 1825. Then the inhabitants declared them-selves independent, and sought to establish a civil government of their own. Next, they successfully resisted the further importation of criminals, which eased in 1853. In 1856 responsible government was put in operation. In 1901 it became one of the states of the Commonwealth of Australia. Tasmania now has five members in the House of Representatives

NEW GUINEA OR PAPUA.

British New Guinea, now officially called the Territory of Papua, was transferred to the Australian Commonwealth in 1905. Situated on the other side of the island-studded Torres Strait at a short distance from Australia, the political destiny of New Guinea vitally affected the inhabitants of Queens-land and of all the Australian states. It is governed by a lieutenant governor, and a council of six, nomi-nated by the governor-general of Australia. It has some valuable mineral fields, particularly of copper and gold.

The area is 90,540 square miles and the native population (1918) was about 200,000

NEW ZEALAND.

Historical Outline.

The Dominion of New Zealand is the largest insular possession of Great Britain. It includes North Island, South Island, Stewart Island, and some dependent groups. In the interior, mountain ranges rise to considerable heights. Some among them are still active volcanoes and there are glaciers and scenic hot springs. The climate is one of the best in the South Temperate zone.

Tampan discovered New Temperate 2019.

Tasman discovered New Zealand in 1642, and anchored in a bay of South Island. Captain Cook in North Island in 1769 proclaimed the sovereignty of Great Britain. He introduced swine and European vegetables. Settlements were made by Englishmen, and American whaling ships visited the islands. Friendly relations were cultivated with the natives, March 12. Formal naming of federal capital as Canberra.

May. General election: House, Liberals 38, Laborites 37; Senate, Liberals 7, Laborites 29.

Herendry relations were cultivated with the natives, the Maoris, who were a brave and vigorous race, physically of fine form and mentally well endowed. In 1820 Hongi 1ka, the Maori king, visited England and was honored by George 1V. Thirteen years later a British Resident was appointed, and in 1838, a 1833. lieutenant governor. The New Zealand Company was chartered in 1839. Beginning with 1844 there were a number of fierce wars with the Maoris, who were subdued with difficulty.

Constitutional government was established in 1852, the colony being divided into provinces, each governed by an elected superintendent and provincial council. This was succeeded by the parliamensystem in 1876. On September 9, designation of the colony of New Zealand changed to the Dominion of New Zealand. It declined to enter the Australian Federation, the nearest part of which is 1,200 miles away.

Organization.

Government. The executive power is exercised by a governor-general, who may assent or refuse to assent to hills or reserve them for the English crown. He may summon, prorogue, and dissolve the Parliament and may return bills for amendment to either house. The legislative function is vested in the governor-general and a Parliament, which consists of a Legislative Council and a House of Representatives. The Legislative Council has 38 members (June, 1918). After former life appointments expire, all members will hold seats for seven years. In 1920 an elective Legislative Council of 40, of which the governor-general may appoint three Maori members, is to be established. The House of Representatives numbers 80 members, including four Maoris, and is elected by the people (male and fe-male suffrage) for three years. More than half of the population are enrolled as electors. Few countries have carried experiments in state socialism and governmental participation in the affairs of capital and labor as far.

Industry and Labor. New Zealand is rich in agricultural, grazing, and forest resources, and in 1917 exported $59,172,000 worth of wool, $29,074,500 frozen meat, $29,066.700 hutter and cheese, $9,048. 500 nides, skins, and pelts. Its manufactures are also rapidly increasing, the most important being connected with preserving meat, making butter and cheese, grain mills, sawmills, tauning, and wool

Religion. No form of religion receives state aid. The leading church is the Church of England, with 43% of the population, after which come the Presbyterian and Roman Catholic.

Education. Education is thoroughly systematized and widesyread. 95% of the population over five years of age were able to read and write in 1916. At that date there were 37 endowed secondary schools, with 7,052 pupils and 2,355 public primary schools, with an enrollment of 185,884. also 305 private schools, with 23,000 pupils. The University of New Zealand is an examining body with which are affiliated four colleges. there are normal and technical schools and 118 naschools, with 5,132 pupils.

Defense. The Defense Act of 1909, amended in 1910, provides for the gradual training of every New Zealander between the ages of twelve and twenty-five. From 18 to 25 service is required in the territorial force, which before the World War was about 30,000 strong. Between 25 and 30 years, service in the reserve is required. The territorial force is re-quired to attend seven days' annual drill, besides thirty drills and six whole-day parades each year. Conscription was introduced in 1916 and during World War nearly 100,000 were sent overseas. The Naval Defense Act of 1913 provides for a force raised by voluntary enlistment, which is put at the disposal of the British government.

Area and Population. The area is 103,581 square miles and the estimated population in 1919 was 1,139,014, exclusive of the aborigines. In 1916 there were 49,766 Maoris.

The following groups of islands in the Pacific are attached to New Zealand:

Auckland Islands, an uninhabited group about 200 miles south of Stewart Island. The largest has an area of about 330 square miles.

Chatham Islands, a group of 375 square miles area, 536 miles east of New Zealand. In 1916 it had a population of 477.

Kermadec Islands. This group is now unin-habited. It is 600 miles northeast of New Zealand and has an area of 15 square miles.

Cook Islands and other South Pacific Islands. These islands are widely separated in the south central Pacific and were aunexed to New Zealand in The total area is about 280 square miles and the population in 1916 was 12,797. The more important islands are Rarotonga, Nine (Savage Island), Mangaia, Aitntaki, and Atin. The first two have resident commissioners. The principal products are fruits and copra, with some coffee and pearl shell

FIJI ISLANDS.

The Fiji group comprises over 200 islands. THE FIN GROUP comprises over 200 islands, eighty of which are inhabited, lying between 177° E, and 178° W. long., being thus at the antipodes of Greenwich. The principal islands are of coral and volcanic origin. The surface is mountainous; many volcanic origin. The surface is mountainous; many of the peaks rise above 3,000 feet and a few of them above 4,000 feet. The climate is healthful.

The area is 7,083 square miles; the estimated population (1918) was 163,416, including 87,700 Fijians and 61,700 East Indians. There has been a gradual decrease of the native population since 1875

OTHER ISLANDS IN THE PACIFIC.

THERE is hardly a habitable reef or atoll in the Pacific or the Indian Ocean, over which some European power does not now assert authority. A majority of the groups, scattered over the face of the Pacific, are under Great Britain. Space is lacking to mention even their names.

The most familiar of these islands are the group of Tonga, or Friendly, Islands and Piteairn Island. Germany, Great Britain, and the United States had conflicting interests in the Tongas, but finally the other powers consented that a British protectorate be proclaimed in 1899. The native king was left on the throne, but a British commissioner conducts the administration. The inhabitants numbered 23,766 All are Christians and the great majority are adherents of the free church of Tonga. A good deal of enterprise is shown, and exports and imports are rapidly increasing. The total area is about 385 square niles. The Tonga Islands were discovered square miles. The by Tasman in 1643.

It was visited by no others until 1808, and then again in 1825. Its area is 2 square miles. The inhabitants in 1914 numbered 140, all descendants of the original settlers. They are an orderly and industrious community.

BULGARIA.

Historical Outline.

BULGARIA has had a long and turbulent history. The Bulgars, a Ural-Altaic race, made their first historical appearance on the banks of the Volga in the latter part of the 7th century. A small body of Bulgarians descended on the Slavs south of the Danube, conquered them, mixed with them, took their language, and thus arose a Bulgarian nation. 9th century Bulgaria reached a high point among the civilized powers of the earth, occupying an empire from the Black Sea to the Adriatic and from Thessaly to the Carpathians. That empire soon declined and was conquered by the Byzantine emperors. In 1186 by a general insurrection the nation recovered its independence, and under Ivan II. (1218–1241) gained control of Albania, Epirus, Macedonia, and Thrace. It was unable to repel the Turks, who early began to ravage the country. In 1366 the Bulgarian Czar, Ivan Shishman III., was compelled to abdicate and declare himself a vassal of the Sultan. For five centuries (1366-1878) Bulgaria suffered under characteristic Turkish rule. Towns and villages were sacked and the peasants were massacred with indescribable cruelty. Some of the inhabitants fled to the mountains, but many of the nobles embraced Mohammedanism and were liberally rewarded. The majority of the people, however, remained Christians and though subject to heavy taxes were contemptuously disregarded by the Turks.

At the beginning of the 19th century Bulgarian nationality had almost disappeared. Then hooks hegan to appear written in modern Bulgarian; 1835 a Bulgarian school was established; and attempts were made to revive the national spirit. Various insurrections took place which were put down with awful cruelty. For instance, after the Until recently the native Fijians were the best-rising of 1876 at Koprivsčica and Panagyurishte, were sent through the districts, and more than 15,000 people were massacred.

As a result of the Russo-Turkish War and the Treaty of San Stefano (see Turkey), Russia planned to erect a greater Bulgaria independent of Turk The great powers refused to allow this plan to be carried out and the Congress of Berlin divorced Eastern Roumelia from Bulgaria and established Bulgaria as a nominal dependency of Turkey, under the rule of Prince Alexander of Battenberg. Since the Congress of Berlin provided no govern-ment for Eastern Roumelia, the Bulgarians in 1885 took possession of it in deflance of the Treaty of Ber-lin, but with the sympathy of Great Britain and in spite of the opposition of Russia and Turkey. While the Turkish troops were massed on the border, Serbia suddenly declared war. Contrary to all expectations, the Bulgarian army, although imperfectly equipped, defeated the Serbs and peace was declared March 3, 1886. About a month later, Prince Alexander was recognized by the sultan as governorgeneral of Eastern Roumelia.

This victory made Prince Alexander a national hero. Russia, however, was dissatisfied with Bul-garia's prosperity and stirred up an insurrection among the army officers, by whom he was seized and compelled to abdicate. Stambuloff, president of the Assembly, initiated a counter-revolution, and Alexander was restored to power. He committed the blunder of offering to resign the throne to Russia, thus recognizing Bulgarian dependence on Russia. The national leaders turned against him and he was allowed to abdicate and leave the country.

A regency was formed in which the most prominent figure was Stambuloff, who combated the Russian attempt to name the ruling prince. Finally, Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha was elected prince and accepted the throne. During his early Ferdinand depended upon Stambuloff, who ruled with an iron hand, but nevertheless prevented Russian intervention and maintained authority in Bulgaria. In 1894 Stambuloff resigned and Prince Ferdinand inaugurated a policy of conciliation toward Russia, hoping to obtain recognition. The death of the czar, Alexander III., and the conversion of Prince Boris to the Orthodox Greek faith led to the withdrawal of Russian opposition and the recognition of Ferdinand as prince of Bulgaria.

In 1908, when Turkey was in the throes of a revolution. Ferdinand announced his independence of Turkey and proclaimed himself czar of Bulgaria War began October 17, 1912, and Bulgaria, as one of the Balkan allies, took a leading part in the Balkan War (see Turkey). With an army of 300,000 men, they invaded Turkey and fought and won the battles of Kirk Kilise and Lüle-Burgas. By the middle of November the Bulgarians reached the Chatalja line of fortifications and were within twenty-five miles of Constantinople. An armistice was granted to Turkey, but Bulgaria demanded the surrender of Adrianople. The war was resumed, Bulgaria with Serbian assistance pushed the siege of Adrianople to a successful conclusion (March 6, 1913), and Turkey was compelled to accept the terms of peace. By the Treaty of London (May 30, 1913) a line was drawn from Enos, on the Egean, to Midia, and all west of that line was ceded by Turkey to the Balkan allies.

Serbia, discontented because of the recognition of Albania (see Albania and Serria) demanded compensation in Macedonia. This was refused by the Albana (see Albania and Serria) demanded com-pensation in Macedonia. This was refused by the Bulgarians, who treacherously attacked both Greeks and Serbians June 29, 1913. Thus was inaugurated the second Balkan War. At first the Bulgarians were successful against the Serbians; but on July 10 Roumania proclaimed war, and on July 12 the Turks invaded the recently lost territory and reoccu-By the end of July the Roumapied Adrianople. nians were within two miles of Sofia and Bulgaria sued for peace. By the Treaty of Bucharest (August Bulgaria was compelled to cede to Serbia all the Macedonian territory occupied by the Serbian troops, as well as the Turkish province of Kossovo. Greece secured additional territory, including Kavala, but Turkey retained Adrianople.

During the first year of the World War, Bulgaria by tortuous means maintained a neutral position, waiting to determine which side would be ous; after the successes of Hindenburg and Mackensen in East Prussia and the Iailure of the Allies at Gallipoli, Bulgaria joined the Central Powers (October 5, 1915) and Great Britain declared war upon her (October 15, 1915). The Central Powers at once moved against Serbia; and while the Germans and Austrians invaded from the north, Bulgaria attacked from the cast. For the next three years the Bulgarian force was held in Macedonia to check the Allies at Saloniki. In September, 1918, the Allied forces advanced and defeated the Bulgarians in a disastrous series of battles, and Bulgaria made unconditional surrender September 30, 1918.

Bulgaria is adapted for grazing and there are vast herds of cattle, horses, mules, asses, pigs, and sheep. The chief manufactured products are woolens, cottons, and cigarettes.

Religion. The state religion is that of the Orthodox Eastern Church, but in 1870, because of its desire for religious autonomy, the Bulgarian Church was declared by the Patriarch of Constantinople to be outside the Orthodox communion.

Education. Education is free and nominally obligatory between the ages of 8 and 12. In 1913–14 there were over 4,000 elementary schools, 316 lower-middle schools, and 47 high schools. # CENTRAL AMERICAN STATES.

The six little countries of Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Salvador, and Panama are nominally free and independent members of the family of nations, but the United States has an absolute protectorate over Panama and, since 1912, a virtual protectorate over Nicaragua. Despite the individuality of each, their nearness to each other, their situation in the tropics, the type of their political life, and the frequency of their revolutions give them many characteristics in common.

Panama, because of its peculiar international significance, is separately treated after the chronology of Central America. The other five countries are included in a common chronology.

COSTA RICA. Historical Outline.

COLUMBUS, on his third voyage, traced the coast of Costa Rica for a considerable distance. On his fourth and last voyage he again visited this region, and soon afterwards the Spanish established them-selves there. The Mayas who eccupied the country were among the most advanced of all the aboriginal peoples in America. By 1530 the Spanish conquest of the country was completed and it was a province of the Spanish captainey general of Guatemala until 1821.

Costa Rica, in common with the other Central American provinces, revolted, and united with the Mexican Empire of Iturbide in 1821; but this union was never popular in Costa Rica. In 1823, when the Mexican Republic was established, Costa Rica withdrew and after 1824 was a part of the Republic of the United Provinces (States) of Central America. The central government had little effective authority and fell to pieces in 1839.

Cesta Rica built up its trade during this period, and in 1848 became an independent republic. It has so remained except for a short time when it joined so remained except for a short time when it joined the Greater Republic of Central America, composed of Honduras, Nicaragua, and San Salvador. In 1856-60 Costa Rica was involved in eivil war by the American adventurer, William Walker. Unlike the other Central American states, its subsequent history has been comparatively peaceful except for occasional bloodless revolutions, as in 1917.

In 1907 Costa Rica and the other four Central American states signed a treaty by which they agreed to submit disputed matters to a court of arbitration whose decisions should be binding on all parties. In 1916 Cesta Rica brought suit for infringements of rights resulting from a treaty between the United States and Nicaragua. The court ruled in favor of Costa Rica, but held that the treaty could not be declared void because the United States was not subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and the central union broke down.

Organization.

Government. The legislative power is vested in a Chamber of Representatives of 43 deputies elected by universal suffrage for terms of four years, one half retiring every two years. The executive authority is in the hands of a president chosen for four years. A standing committee of five deputies represents Congress during the recess and advises the president. There are six eabinet ministers appointed by and responsible to the president

Industry and Production. Part of the country is high table-land with a temperate climate; hut along the coast the land is low, with tropical vegetation and tropical climate. The principal industry is agriculture and the chief products are coffee and bananas. Mining ranks second in importance; there are rich gold mines in several districts. The exports, the greater part of which go to the United States, ex-

the greater part of which go to the United States, exceed the imports by over $5,000,000.

Religion and Education. The constitution insures entire religious liberty. Roman Catholicism is the state religion. Elementary schools are maintained by local school boards, while the national government pays the teachers and gives financial aid. There are secondary schools, one college for girls, a normal school, three municipal colleges, and medical, law, and dental schools. Spanish is the medical, law, and dental schools. Spanish is the language of the country Defense. Costa Rica has an army of 52,208, of which 38,000 are active. The peace strength is 1,000 men and the war strength is estimated at 50,000 militia, since every male between 18 and 50 may be called upon. The navy consists of two motor laumches, one on the Atlantie and one on the Pacific.

The area is estimated at 23,000 square miles and

GUATEMALA. Historical Outline.

Guatemala was conquered for the Spaniards by Pedro de Alvarado in 1524, and a Spanish captainey general established which included fifteen provinces. During the colonial period the native tribes almost disappeared, while the Roman Catholic Church and the Spanish language became permanently identified with the culture of the country. In 1821 Guate-mala, in common with the other Central American provinces, revolted and joined the Mexican Empire of Iturbide. From 1824 it was a member of the Central American confederation which was dissolved in 1839, and Rafael Carrcra was made president of the republic of Guatemala. In 1851 a new constitution was adopted for Carrera and in 1854 the presidency was conferred upon him for life — practically a dietatorship.

Guatemala was involved in wars among the five Central American states. In 1873 Rufino Barries was elected president and governed the country as a dictator, expelling the Jesuits, confiscating their a dictator, expening the Jesuits, consistently the church. Although he encouraged education and succeeded in settling the Mexican boundary, his administration was bad for the country. In 1885 he proclaimed himself military chief of Central America and claimed the command of the military forces of the flye states, but was defeated and killed in battle. In 1898 Don Manuel Estrada Cahrera was elected president, an office in which he continued until 1920. In 1906 a band of adventurers invaded Guatemala and gained considerable sympathy from the German and British residents, but Cabrera held his ground and, through the intervention of President Roosevelt and President Diaz of Mexico, peace was made.

Organization.

Government. The constitution adopted in 1879 has been revised four times, last in 1903. The legis-lative power is vested in a National Assembly, one member for every 20,000 inhabitants, elected by universal suffrage for four years; and a Council of State of 13 members partly elected by the assembly and partly appointed by the president. The president is elected for a term of six years.

Industry and Production. The soil is ex-tremely fertile. The most important crop is coffee, which is raised on vast plantations, fifty per cent of which are owned by Germans. Next to coffee are sugar, plantains, and bananas. Guatemala abounds in mahogany and dyewood. There are rich mines, but owing to the lack of transportation they are little developed.

Religion and Education. Most of the people Religion and Education. Most of the people of Guatemala are Roman Catholics, but religious liberty prevails. There is no state religion. The bishops of Costa Rica, Honduras, Nicaragua, and San Salvador are the suffragans of the archbishop of Guatemala. Education is free and obligatory for all children between the ages of six and fourteen. There are nearly 2,000 government schools, including 18 kindergartens, 500 primary schools for boys, mere than 500 schools for girls, 50 night schools fer workmen, and schools of arts and crafts. By a decree of May 2, 1918, a government university was established COLUMBUS first landed on the American continent at Cape Honduras, 1502. The first settlement was made in 1524 by Olid, a lieutenant of Cortes, who had heard rumors of rich and populous empires in this region. In 1525 Cortes reached the colony and founded the city which is now Puerto Cortés. early explorers found numerous ruins of stone temples and eities, which seem to be akin in art and architecture to early Asiatic buildings. In 1539 Honduras was incorporated in the captaincy general of Guatemala. The mines of the province were the richest which had yet been discovered in the New World, and several large cities came into existence. For the following 150 years Honduras remained a part of the viceroyalty of Guatemala and suffered the apathy and deeline which prevailed throughout that part of the Spanish Empire.

In 1821 the province broke into revolt and declared its independence. Two years afterwards it became a member of the Central American union, which continued until 1839, when Honduras became independent. During a long period all Central America was the scene of civil war. In the end Mareo Aurelio Soto became president, and a new constitution was adopted in 1880. Frequent outbreaks of civil war occurred between 1883 and 1903, when Manuel Bonilla gained the presidency and succeeded in maintaining order until, toward the end of ceeded in maintaining order until, toward the end of his term, he was involved in war with President Ze-laya of Nicaragua. Bonilla was defeated and forced to flee. By a convention at Washington (1907) the territory of Honduras was neutralized and a high court was established to which it was agreed all future Central American disputes should be submitted. This system broke down in 1916.

COLUMBUS discovered the coast of Nicaragua in 1502, but it was not regularly explored until 20 years later, when Gil Gonzálcz de Ávila penetrated to the western provinces and dispatched his lieutenant Córdoba to circumnavigate the Great Lakes. The city of Granada was founded in 1524. The early city of Granada was founded in 1524. city of Granada was founded in 1524. The early Spanish government was abominable. Father Boyle declares that the first two governors were mur-derers, the third killed the second, the fourth was a forger, and the fifth a rebel and a hemicide. In 1685 the town of Leon was sacked by the Dutch under the leadership of Dampier.

In common with the other states of Central America, Nicaragua revolted in 1821 and two years later joined the five central states in a federal union. During the sixteen years that this league lasted there was not a single year of peace. Civil strife broke out and in ten years there were 396 so-called presidents. An aristocratic party established itself in Granada, to aid which William Walker, an American filibus-terer, invaded the country in 1855, with the supof Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was then carrying on a transport line across the country. At first Walker was successful, but was soon expelled. He attempted a second invasion in 1857, but was captured and shot in 1860.

In 1894 a new constitution was adopted and Bluefields, the settlement of the Mosquito Indians, was invaded. British and American forces were sent for the protection of the nationals of those countries. and in 1895 the British fleet occupied Cerinto to enforce claims for damages during the civil wars. In 1909 a revolution broke out which lasted for nearly two years, followed in 1912 by another revolution, when the United States landed forces and proclaimed martial law.

Under the protection of the United States, Adolfo Diaz was elected president in 1912, and in 1914 a treaty was signed by which the United States gained the perpetual right to construct an interoceanic canal obtain naval bases near the Panama Canal, treaty was ratified in 1916. Industry. Agriculture, lumbering, and mining are the chief industries. In the eastern part of the republic the banana is the chief product, though coconuts, plantains, oranges, and pineapples are also raised and rice is cultivated to a small extent. In the western half the products are more varied, the most important being sugar cane, cocoa, corn, beans, and coffee. The annual average output of coffee is estimated at 22,000,000 pounds. There are valuable ferests of mahegany and cedar; gold mines are worked by American and British companies.

PANAMA.

Historical Outline.

In 1513 Vasco Núñez de Balboa had his first view of the Pacific Ocean from a mountain in Panama; and from that time the transit across the Isthmus made Panama important as the main canal route from Spain to the Pacific coast and the Philippines. It was one of the first provinces to revolt from Spain and was a portion in succession of the republic of Co-lombia, the republic of New Granada, and the United States of Colombia. The development of California made Panama a trade route between East and West, and led to projects for a canal and to the construc-tion of a railroad across it. In 1886, as a result of a revolution, the constitution of Colombia abolished the sovereignty of the province and reduced it to de-partments under governors appointed by the president of the republic.

The trade through the Isthmus was an important arce of revenue to Colombia, but the people had little or no share in their own government, and derived little benefit from the traffic. The French project of a canal in 1879 and the interest of the United States in it aroused Panama, especially after the British withdrew their claims (1901). prepared a canal treaty, then refused to ratify it, and, with the good will of President Roosevelt, Panama revolted from Colombia in 1903. The revolu-tionary government was at once recognized by the United States and a treaty negotiated by which the United States obtained perpetual occupation of a zone (Canal Zone) five miles wide on either side of the Canal route and was given jurisdiction over the cities of Panama and Colon as to quarantine sanitation. The islands in Panama Bay were ceded, as was the coast line of the Canal, for such works of defense as might be necessary. On the ratification of the treaty (1904), the United States paid Panama ten million dollars; and undertook to make a perpetual annual payment of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, beginning nine years from that Government. By the constitution of 1904 the executive functions are exercised by a president, who is elected for four years, as are the three vice presidents (or designados), and the legislative functions by a Chamber of Deputies of (1919) 33 members (one for every 10,000 inhabitants), meeting biennially. The president is assisted by a cabinet of five members. No action is taken by the government or the bers. electors which it is believed would be unwelcome to the United States.

Agriculture. Agriculture is still of a primitive order and although the soil is of great fertility only about five eighths of the whole area is occupied and only a small part properly cultivated. products are bananas, caoutchoue, cacao, and ma-hogany. All ordinary minerals but coal are found.

Religion. Most of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics. The population is Spanish American with Indian admixture.

Education. The government maintains 398 public schools at which are enrolled 22,000 children. A university has been opened at the cost of about one and a half million dollars.

Defense. Panama, being under the protection of the United States, has no army or navy. The area is 32,380 square miles and the popula-

CHILE.

Historical Outline.

Chile extends from the extreme southern point of South America along the western coast for nearly 39 degrees of latitude, or 2,700 miles, while nowhere is it more than 250 miles wide, averaging only a hundred. The land was originally occupied by Indians who were above the stage of savagery, but far below the level of culture of the races in Mexico and Peru. In the 15th century, previous to European discovery, northern Chile was conquered by the Peruvians and a higher civilization introduced which tended to weaken the resistance of the Indians to the later Spanish conquerors. Beyond the territory con-trolled by the Incas the Indians of Chile were fierce and warlike.

The first Spanish invasion was in 1535, when Diego de Almagro was sent by Pizarro from Peru. In 1540 a century of continuous warfare began under Pedro de Valdivia, who founded Santiago. dians desperately resisted the conquest and settlement and were in possession of the territory south of the Biobio River. The constant warfare with the Indians and the fact that lack of gold compelled the settlers to engage in hard, continuous work, produced a stronger and hardier race than is found in most of the other South American republics. But these conditions did not bring about the material prosperity which characterized many of the Spanish colonies in South America.

During the period of Spanish control the thirteen provinces of Chile were under the administration of a governor appointed by the Peruvian viceroy and the Spanish system of restricting colonial trade worked against material development. When the Spanish monarchy was overthrown by Napoleon the Chileans were among the first to revolt (1810). government, however, was not easily overthrown and after a three years' conflict the Spanish rule was restored. In 1817 a patriot force which had been organized in the Argentine by San Martín, an Argentine officer, and by O'Higgins crossed the Andes and defeated the Royalists at the battle of Chacabuco. During the eight years following, the Spanish occu-pied certain strongholds, especially on the coast, from which they were with difficulty expelled.

After the revolution, the government was organized under the dictatorship of O'Higgins, who believed that firm and orderly government was more important than liberty. His policy aroused opposition, and in IS23 he was compelled to resign. During the next seven years three different constitutions and 50 airplanes. The navy consists of one prewere proclaimed and ten governments set up, but in 1830 the Conservatives, supported by a military uprising led by General Joaquín Prieto, gained the power. Prieto was elected president and a new constitution. The area of Chile is 289,stitution promulgated in 1833, which with some modifications is still in force.

During the next thirty years there were only three small and unimportant uprisings and, under the firm rule of the Conservatives, Chile made rapid progress. Schools and libraries were established, the foreign debt consolidated, and finances were important that the consolidated is a superior of the consolidated. proved. In 1836 war broke out between Chile and the confederation of Peru and Bolivia. Chile was successful and the confederation was dissolved.

In 1865 an alliance was made by Chile and Peru in a war with Spain. The conflict lasted for four years and was ended through the intervention of the United States. In 1879 war broke out between Chile on the one side and Peru and Bolivia on the other, in which Chile was successful and occupied the nitrate fields of Bolivia along the seacoast (1882). treaty of peace, however, was not made until 1905. Bolivia ceded all claims to a scaport and a strip of the coast, on condition that Chile would construct at her own cost a railway from La Paz to the port of Arica, giving Bolivia free transit across Chilean territory to the sea

During the Civil War (1891) the Congressional, or anti-Balmaceda, party attempted to forward arms by the steamer Itata from San Diego, California. United States government ordered the detention of the Itata, an order subsequently held invalid by the Federal courts. The Itata escaped and reached Chile. While negotiations for the surrender of the Itata were pending, a party of American sailors from the ship of war Baltimore went ashore at Valparaiso They were attacked by a mob, many wounded and one killed. This affair produced great excitement in the United States. Delay in examining into the affair caused a threat of war by President Harrison Chile at last offered an apology. Otherwise, the relations between Chile and the United States have been amicable.

Since that time the internal condition of the country has been peaceful and prosperous. In 1902 a long-standing boundary dispute between Chile and the Argentine Republic was terminated by arbitration. A terrible earthquake in 1906 almost entirely destroyed Valparaiso and did much damage to other cities. In 1914 Chile, with Argentina and Brazil, the three being commonly called "the ABC powattempted to mediate between the United States and Mexico.

Chile is divided into three zones. The desert region in the north is rainless, barren, and absolutely destitute of vegetation, but rich in mineral and saline deposits. The agricultural region, lying between the coast range and the Andes, is known as the Vale of Chile. It is a highly fertile region and thickly populated. South of the forty-first parallel the country is mountainous, heavily forested, and subject to almost continuous rainfall. The coast of northern Chile is singularly deficient in good harbors.

Organization.

Government. The constitution (1833) vests the legislative power in a national congress. A Senate of 37 is popularly elected by the provinces for a term of six years; a Chamber of Deputics of 118 is chosen directly by the departments for three years. The suffrage is open to all men of 21 years of age who are able to read and write. The executive power is vested in a president chosen for five years by indi-rect vote. The retiring president is not eligible for reëlection.

Religion and Education. The Roman Catholic religion is maintained by the state, but the constitution guarantees free exercise of all religions. Education is free, but not compulsory. There are 3,000 cation is free, but not compulsory. There are 3,000 public primary schools. The higher institutions of learning are two universities and the National Institute at Santiago, hesides professional and technical schools.

Industry and Lahor. Agriculture and mining the chief occupations. Wheat and other cereals are the chief occupations. Wheat and other cereals are produced in considerable quantities, and cattle and sheep are numerous. Before the World War, Great Britain obtained the greater share of both the export and import trade. Since 1916, however, the exommerce with the United States has far surpassed that of any other country. The chief source of wealth is the trade in nitrates from the districts concurred from Penu and Bolivia. quered from Peru and Bolivia.

Defense. All able-hodied citizens are liable to service from the 18th to the 45th year. Recruits are called up in their twentieth year and trained for one year. After that they are enrolled for nine years. The total strength of the active army in 1916 was The air force consists of fourteen seaplanes

CHINA.

Historical Outline.

China, in the broadest sense, includes Manchuria, Mongolia, and Tibet. But the name is more strictly applied to the eighteen provinces occupying the southeastern part of the republic. This vast region is separated from the rest of Asia by lofty table-lands and rugged mountains, from which the great rivers descent each work of the province of high descend eastward. Western China consists of high lands which are generally only sparsely populated; astern China, of lowlands densely populated, province of Shantung is estimated to have a population of 528 per square mile.

The Chinese regard themselves as the original inhabitants of the soil, but foreign scholars believe that they are descendants from wandering tribes of Tatars or from the ancient peoples of Tibet and Farther India. They are members of the Turanian (Ural-Altaic) family and belong to the Mongolian race. Chinese tradition regards Fu-Hi as the first historical emperor and places his lifetime between the years 2852-2738 B. c., but this early history is founded on, and may in part have been invented to explain the origin of, some institution or culture. Thus Fu-Hi is reputed to have invented the plow. to have introduced matrimony, and in general to have brought order out of chaos.

Not until the Chow dynasty, 1123-255 B. c., do we reach historic ground. At this time a feudal system was introduced; since the imperial domain lay in the middle of the population, the name Middle Kingdom was applied to the empire. During this dynasty was born Confucius, the founder of the nadynasty was norm connected, the founder of the has tive religion of China (Confucianism). During the Tsin dynasty (255-206 g. c.) the empire was extended to the sea, the Mongols were defeated, and the great Chinese Wall built as a protection against the raids of Tatar horsemen. This vast structure, of which several branches and parallel lines still stand, was over 1,400 miles long, from 30 to 50 feet high, and 15 to 25 feet thick. From 206 B. c. to 221 A. D. was a brilliant period in Chinese history. Feudalism was checked by the development of the royal power, and the empire was consolidated. Conquests extended the rule westward to Russian Turkestan; and in the east north-ern Korea was conquered. This epoch was followed by a period of confusion, but finally, in 590 A. D., Yang Kian, prince of Suy in the northern kingdom, extended his conquest southward, brought the whole empire under his control and founded the Suy dy-

In 618 the usurper Li Ynen brought an end to the In 618 the usurper Li Ynen brought an end to the line of Suy and founded the dynasty of Tang, which lasted for over three hundred years. Its fame spread westward, and in 643 embassies arrived from Persia and Constantinople. During this time came the golden age of Chinese literature. During the last two hundred years, Tatar raids distressed the country, and by the end of the tenth century Chinese graperors suffered the hunfilistic of reving nese emperors suffered the hamiliation of paying tribute to the Tatars. Gradually the Tatars occu-pied the northeastern provinces of China and established an empire which was overthrown in the thirteenth century, partly by the great conqueror Genghls Khan.

The Mongol emperor Kuhlal Khan (1259-1294) included China in his empire, which spread over most of Asia save Hindustan and Arabia. It was during this reign that Marco Polo, a Venetian, visited the Chinese court and brought back to Europe the first extended authentic knowledge of Chinese life and customs. In the fourteenth century the Ming dy-nasty was founded as a native Chinese power and Tatary was conquered. During the fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries China had little to show except rebellions and Tatar invasions, ending in the establishment of the Manchus as rulers of China (1644). This Tatar or Manchu dynasty ruled the (1644). This Tatar or Manchu dynasty ruled the Chinese Empire until February 12, 1912, when it gave way to a republic.

The foreign relations of the Manchu dynasty deserve mention. Although one empire in form, the different provinces of China were ruled by civil vice-roys and by "Tatar generals" directly representing the military power of the Empire. These princes were often engaged in civil wars and insurrections. Under Manchu rule, China made little progress in culture or wealth, except under pressure of foreign powers. That influence was almost always resisted powers. That influence was almost always resisted by the Chinese themselves and in particular by the Manchu rulers.

ceived at Peking, and the first Protestant mission-ary, Reverend Robert Morrison, reached Canton a little later. Foreign intercourse was confined to one port, Canton, where a large European trade had developed. This trade, chiefly in opium, tea. and silk. in the hands of the British, Dutch, and Portuguese was subject to many restrictions and exactions. Disputes arose about the importation of opium which was forced by Great Britain upon the Chinese in the face of an imperial decree. In 1840 the British declared war upon China. As a result of this so-Britain and the Five Treaty Ports of Canton, Amoy, Foochow, Ningpo, and Shanghai were opened for general commerce. In 1844 the United States made its first treaty with China on similar lines.

Six years later broke out the frightful Taiping rebellion, which lasted for nearly twenty years. In 1856 England and France again declared war upon China to obtain redress for alleged injuries to their commerce and citizens. In 1858, by a general treaty with Great Britain, France, Russia, and the United States, the Chinese government yielded its claims in the Amur region in favor of Russia. practice of Christianity was officially permitted Other wars occurred between China and Great Brit ain and France; Peking was occupied in 1860, and the imperial Summer Palace was looted. Finally the Taiping rebellion was broken, partly through the victory of the imperial troops under Charles George Gordon and General Ward, an American, and partly through the efforts of Ll Hung Chang, a statesman just coming to the front.

In 1872 thirty Chinese boys were sent to the United States for education. This was the beginning of China's direct touch with Western culture. Thousands of Chinese students have since been sent to the United States and to European countries, and later many to Japan, in order that Western ideas and methods might be introduced into the empire.

In 1894 Japan made an alliance with Korea and declared war upon China. After a brief struggle China was abjectly defeated, Port Arthur and other territory being captured. Japan demanded the cession of Port Arthur, which was close to the heart of the Chinese Empire, and an immense indemnity (see Japan). As the result of a protest by Russia, France, and Germany, Japan was forced to give up Port Arthur and to consent to a reduction of the indemnity (see Russia).

In the meantime Russia, which had begun the Siberian railway, obtained (1896) from China the right to exploit the mines, industries, and forests of Manchuria and the Liaoung peninsula, to import goods from Siberia on special terms, to construct a system of railways in Manchuria, and also in connection with them to establish military guards for the stations and lines. The effect was practically to place Manchuria in Russian control: thus was begun a systematic movement for the dismemberment of the Chinese Empire.

Other European powers came into this process In 1897 Germany, as reprisal for the murder of two missionaries, seized the town and bay of Kiaochow in southern Shantung and received a lease for ninety nine years of the territory occupied and the right to administer the surrounding territory, together with the railroads and coal mines of the province. Russia obtained the ports of Port following year, Arthur and Talien (Dairen), which gave her an arsenal of great strength and the advantage of an ice-free port. Great Britain obtained additional territory in Kowloon and received a lease of the fortified harbor of Weihaiwei. France obtained privileges in the island of Hainan, and the right to extend a railway from Tonkin into the southern provinces of China. The United States demanded provinces of China. no forced concessions from China and urged that the European powers should recognize the policy of the "open door" — equain all parts of China. - equal rights of all nations to trade

In the meantime two internal movements arose in China. On the one hand the more progressive of the younger generation demanded Western education and Western knowledge, hoping that China might benefit by a transformation similar to that which had taken place in Japan thirty years before. young emperor supported this movement and promised many reforms both in education and in administration. On the other hand the old bureaueracy and the officeholders stood by their vested privileges. the officeholders stood by their vested privices. They were aided by the feeling that Western influence was breaking China to pieces. The reactionaries raised the ery of "China for the Chinese" and demanded the expulsion of the foreigners. The emperor was practically deposed and the Empress Dowager Tzu Hsi An took control of the government, cancelled the reform edicts and attempted to suppress the movement for modernization.

Just at this time came the Bover rebellion 1900). The Boxers were a secret association which anneared first in Shantung, hostile to foreigners and the foreigners and save the dynast

Sporadic outbreaks occurred throughout China in which many foreigners and Chinese converts were murdered. In Peking the European officials and residents took refuge in the British legation and were there besieged from June until August. News of their plight reached the outer world and an international force of British, Russian, French, German, Austrian, Italian, American, and Japanese troops hurried to their rescue. The forces were delayed were compelled to capture Tientsin: but ultiwas hurried to their rescue. mately, by forced marches, they reached Peking and The dowager rescued the prisoners in the legation. empress fled with the emperor, and the imperial palace at Peking was looted. As a result of this re-bellion China was forced to make formal and humiliating apologies to Germany and Japan and to pay an indemnity of over $300,000,000. By 1902 order was somewhat restored in the country and conditions seemed fairly normal.

The Manchurian question at once revived. By a formal convention (1902) Russia agreed to the gradual evacuation of Manchuria. A delay offended China indirectly and brought to the surface the con-flicting interests of the Western powers and of Japan in particular, which felt constricted both in Manchuria and Korea. Believing that China was help-less, Japan took it up directly with Russia and finally declared war upon that country in 1904. (See Ja-Pan, Russia.) Japan recaptured Port Arthur, overran Korea, and, in the Treaty of Portsmouth, these possessions were confirmed though Manchuria was nominally restored to China.

The lessons of the Boxer rebellion and the contemptuous way in which China had been treated during the Russo-Japanese War had their effect. forms in administration were made: the special privileges of the Manchus were attacked; and the despised military profession was raised to an honorable calling. A national army was formed, which was expected to take the place of the old provincial armies under the viceroys. The most striking proposed reform was the setting up of a representative assembly and a parliamentary system of government.

The old question of opium came up again.

vicious use of this drug was widespread in China and between twenty-five and thirty million people were The opium question, however, was noral issue. The British sent great addicted to it. not simply a moral issue. The British sent great quantities from India, and derived a large Indian revenue from the tax upon it. The United States and eventually Great Britain aided the Chinese in their crusade in 1902. In 1908 an agreement was reached with Great Britain restricting the importation of opium and the sale and use of the drug was prohibited after ten years

Educational reforms led to the abolition of the old examinations, based on a knowledge of the Chinese classies. Examinations in modern subjects were quired for admission to the civil service. In 1908 both the emperor and the Empress Dowager Tzŭ Hsi An died, and Prince Chun became regent for the Emperor Hsüan-tung, his three-year-old son, the heir to the throne.

In 1910 the National Assembly met for the first It was nothing but a consultative body hav time. ing no control over the purse or other questions, and was soon dissolved (January, 1911). In that year a cabinet and general staff were organized in which as in the National Assembly, the Manchus held the preponderance of power.

Friction between the Manchus and the Chinese developed throughout the empire, leading to many insurrections and riots, led by a group of patriotic leading to many insurrections. These projects took place in but radical reformers. These revolts took place in southern and central China where the feeling was most strong that the Manchus were hindering prog-ress. In October the National Assembly was reconvened and a constitutional government promised; but the revolutionists succeeded in capturing Shanghai, Hankow, and Nanking. By the end of the year a republic was set up with Sun Yat Sen as provisional president. On February 12, 1912, the Manchu dynasty, after 268 years of rule, formally abdicated

Two days later Sun Yat Sen resigned the provi sional presidency and was replaced by Yuan kai: and suffrage was granted to literate women property owners. In 1913 the first parliament of the hinese Republic was convened at Peking and recognized by the United States. Then Yuan Shih-kai was elected president of the Chinese Republic by the parliament on October 6, and the new republic was recognized by the European powers on October 10th The majority of the parliament however was opposed to Yuan Shih-kai, who ordered the dissolution of the Kuo Ming Tang (the party in opposition) and abolished the parliament (January, 1914) and in May became practically dictator.

In 1915 most of the provinces voted to reëstablish the monarchy under Yuan Shih-kai as emperor; the more democratic southern provinces revolted, and foreign powers intervened. Insurrection and drawn chiefly from the lower classes. Perhaps it civil war continued through 1916 and 1918. Yuan was an agent of the dynasty, for it had the favor if Shih-kai died June 6, 1916, and the newly elected not the guidance of the government. The Boxers president, Li Yuan-hung, and later Feng Kwo-chang.

Not till near 1800 was a British ambassador re-| displayed on their banners the legend "Exterminate | who succeeded in office, continued the struggle against the disaffected provinces in the south.

The outbreak of the World War in 1914 greatly affected China. Japan, as the ally of Great Britain, entered into the struggle and demanded that Germany should evacuate Tsingtau, the port of Kiao-chow in the province of Shantung. On refusal, Japan, after a brief siege, obtained possession of this port and the surrounding district. May 25, 1915, China was practically forced into signing a treaty with Japan in which she acceded to certain demands which materially altered the relations between China and Japan and affected the position of other powers in relation to China. These demands may be classified under five heads: (1) Shantung. China agreed that Japan should succeed not merely to a position which Germany had occupied in that province but engaged to make no cession of territory to any third power and to consent to Japan's extending the railway and dominating the trade of the province. (2) Manchuria and Inner Mongolia. Here Japan demanded the lease of Port Arthur and Talien (Dairen) and the Southern Manchurian railway for 99 years, together with special privileges and advantages for her subjects. (3) The Hanyehping. This company controlled the Hanyang iron works and coal mines. Japan demanded a joint Chinese and Japanese com-pany in control of all mines in the neighborhood, giving a monopoly of rich iron ores and other mineral resources. (4) Territorial concessions. A mutual declaration against cession or lease of territory along the coast of China. (5) Special privileges. For hospitals, churches, police instructors, munitions, construction of railroads, capital, and Japanese political, financial, and military advisors. China made very effort to avoid signing this treaty, but was forced to consent.

The United States was aware of these negotiations, which could hardly have taken place except for the World War. In November, 1917, Secretary Lansing in an exchange of notes with Viscount Ishii, special Japanese ambasador, stated that territorial propinquity creates special tions between countries"..." the United States recognizes that Japan has special interests in China." Both nations disclaimed interference with the independence or territorial integrity of China and reas-serted the principle of the "open door," or equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China. China declared war on Germany and Austria-Hungary August 14, 1917, somewhat against the will of the United States and the Allies. This entry into the war complicated the payments of the Boxer Rebellion indemnity, and gave China a status as a bel-ligerent, which admitted her to a share in the peace negotiations with Germany in 1919. At the conference in Paris, Japan demanded and obtained the cession of all rights and privileges which Germany had enjoyed in China - this specially affected the rich province of Shantung. Although Japan had formally promised the United States to restore these to China at some future period, nothing to that effect appeared As a result, China refused to sign it.

Organization.

Government. Before the establishment of the republic in 1912 China was supposed to be governed by an emperor, exercising absolute and arbitrary power, who ruled as vice regent of heaven, not for his own pleasure but for the good of his people. In practice, the power of the emperor was checked and often nullified. The imperial edicts, which were law for the empire, were framed by a secret and irrespon-sible body of officials, mostly Manchus in Peking. The magistrates were appointed out of a small class of men who were able to take a high stand on literary examinations which tested mainly knowledge of Chinese classics. Nobody received a significant appointment who had not the backing of influential people; and the high posts went only to those who had shown ability in office.

The administration of the eighteen provinces was vested in governors and viceroys and other officers, nominally appointed by the emperor, but practically by the palace officials. In theory the central gov-ernment had complete control over the provincial administration, but actually the viceroys of the provinces were laws unto themselves; the central government had power to remove or degrade any provincial governor, but usually went no further than to transfer him to another province. Yet the imperial government alone had official relations with outside nations and was held responsible if the lives and property of foreigners suffered.

The republican government established in 1912 consists of a president and vice president elected for consists of a president and vice president electron five years and a bleameral legislature, composed of a senate  $(Tsan\ Yi\ Yuan)$  of 264 members and a house of representatives  $(Chung\ Yi\ Yuan)$  of 596 members. Since the establishment of the republic, however, there have been almost continuous insurrections and civil wars. The aim was to form a strong central government exercising great control over the provincial governments. In each province there to be a supreme governor appointed by the president and removable by him, but this led to local rehellions, and in the struggle between the "North and the South" the central government has lost control over both. In 1919 the students at Peking made a demitted. onstration against certain officials who they be-lieved had been bribed to betray their country to

Industry and Resources. China is essentially an agricultural country. The land is held in small freehold estates on payment of an annual tax. The soil is generally fertile and the people are most industrious, but the holdings are so small and the im-plements so primitive that the Chinese are rather gardeners than farmers. Wheat, barley, corn, and other cereals are chiefly cultivated in the north, and rice, sngar, and indigo in the sonth. Cotton is extensively grown and tea is an important product. Silk culture is one of China's most essential industries and she produces about a fourth of the world's

Manufacturing was rapidly developing in China before the World War, particularly in the cotton, woolen, and silk industries in Shanghai and Canton. In large centers flour and rice mills are being established and at Hanyang near Hankow there are important ironworks. China is immensely rich in minerals. The coal supply is almost unrivaled and the annual output of about 15,000,000 tons can be indefinitely enlarged. Iron ores are abundant. In the Yangtze valley exist rich deposits of petroleum; tin and antimony are found, as well as gold and silver Religion. The Chinese acknowledge three religions as indigenous: Confucianism, Buddhism, and Mohammedanism and Christianity have Taoism Taoism. Monammedanism and Christianity have been introduced. Mohammedanis are found in every province, and it is estimated that they number between five and ten million. Roman Catholicism, introduced more than three centuries ago, now has two million converts. The Protestant denomina-tions began their work in 1807 and count about half a million native Christians. There is also a Russian Orthodox mission which dates from 1885. Education. Until 1905 education in China was of a purely Chinese character, based on the study of Chinese classics and tested by public examinations, success in which opened the way for government employment. Some of the Chinese had been educated in the mission schools, and a few had studied in Europe and the United States. In 1905 the old system of examinations was swept away and a new educational system was initiated.

Primary education is to be compulsory in the hands of the provincial anthorities; and schools are to be established throughout the country. Secondary and higher education is given over to the board of education of the central government. There are to be four national universities with preparatory colleges attached, besides technical schools and normal schools. The Peking government university, established in 1898 and completely reorganized in 1917, has now over 1500 students. There are nnmerous mission schools, both Protestant and Catholic, throughout China.

In addition the United States returned to China the surplus of the Boxer indemnity, amounting to over $8,000,000, and China agreed to spend the income of this sum in preparing and sending students to the United States for education. The number of schools has increased; but China is still far behind its needs in education.

Defense. The army is recruited on the principle of modified conscription for terms of three years in the first line, three in the first reserve, and four in the second reserve. In theory the military forces are under the ministry of war and are paid by the central government; and theoretically the civil governors have no authority over the army. Since the death of Yuan Shih-kai, however, the military governors have been practically independent of Peking and have raised armies which gravely menace the peace of the republic. The Chinese navy consists of four old cruisers and some torpedo boats.

Area and Population. The area of China is estimated at 4,277,170 square miles and the population at 320,650,000. No exact census has ever been taken, as it would probably cause a revolution.

COLOMBIA.

Historical Outline.

The coasts of Colombia were first visited by Alonso de Ojeda in 1499 and 1501, and Columbus visited Veragua and Porto Bello on his last voyage, in 1502. Settlements were attempted in 1508 and 1509 and the country was conquered in 1535–36, becoming a province under the Spanish administration, subordinate to the viceroyalty of Pern. In 1740 the present Celembia, Ecuador, and Venezuela were constituted a viceroyalty under the name of New Granada, which continued until the rebellion against Spain. In 1811 New Granada rebelled, but the first movement for independence was crushed. In 1819 a new rebellion broke out under the lead of Bolivar, who won a great victory over the Loyalists at Beyacá, and the Republic of Colombia was estab-May 16-19. Two secret agreements are signed lished, which in various forms has since continued.

N

In 1829 Venezuela set up a separate government and a year later Ecuador followed. In 1831 the Republic of New Granada was organized under the presidency of Francisco Santander. During a nine years' civil war the provinces of Cartagena and Panama and Veragua declared themselves independent, under the name of the State of the 1sthmus of Panama. Granada regained her authority over them in 1843, and a period of prosperity followed A large part of the domestic debt was paid off, immigration was encouraged, trade was fostered, and in 1852 slavery was entirely abolished. By the treaty of 1846 with the United States of America, that country received special privileges in the Isthmus of Panama and in turn guaranteed that tract to Colombia. In 1853 the constitution was altered so that any province might declare itself independent and enter into a federal connection with the central re-public, which was now known as the Granadine Confederation. In 1856–57 Antioquia and Panama se-ceded, but in 1861 a federal constitution was adopted under Mosquera as dictator. From that time until 1886 there were numerous revolutions and attempts to reëstablish the confederation of Colombia, Ecuador, and Venezuela, complicated by boundary disputes between Colombia and Venezuela.

In 1886 a new constitution was established and the federal system abolished, the states becoming departments with governors appointed by the president of the republic. The president, Guzmán Blanco, was practically an absolute despot aided by military force. In 1899 the Liberals organized a revolution which continued until 1903. Venezuelan troops invaded Colombian territory in 1901, but were routed after a fierce battle.

The possession of the Isthmus gave Colombia a point of vantage; and in 1878 a French company was granted a concession for a canal. By the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty between the United States and Great Britain in 1850 these countries asserted a special interest in a canal. In 1901 Great Britain yielded her claims, leaving the United States to negotiate a treaty with Colombia. This transferred the forfeited concession of the French company, a canal strip ten miles wide and the two ports of Colón and Panama. The Colombian congress, however refused to ratify this treaty in 1903.

Thereupon a revolt broke out in Panama, and the state secoded from Colombia. American troops pre-vented the Colombian troops from suppressing the rebellion, and the United States at once recognized the independence of Panama, which was thus separ-ated from Colombia. In 1904 General Rafael Reyes succeeded to the presidency and set about restoring Colombia from the shattered condition into which she had fallen. The tenure of the presidency was extended to ten years from January 1, 1905, with no restriction upon reëlection and General Reyes was thus in the position of a dictator. He proved his ability and integrity, did much to allay the spirit of unrest in the country, and proposed a treaty of com-pensation from the United States.

Organization.

Government. The present constitution dates from 1886 and provides for a Senate of 34 elected for four years indirectly by electors chosen for that purpose; and a House of Representatives of 92 (one for every 50,000 of population) chosen for two years. The president is elected by direct vote for a term of years, and is not eligible for reëlection until four years afterwards.

Religion and Education. The religion is Roman Catholicism, with toleration for all sects. Primary education is free although not compulsory and there are more than 5,000 primary schools and nearly 400 secondary and professional schools, 98 trade schools, and the University of Bogotá, founded in 1572, to-gether with several departmental universities and numerous private colleges.

Industry. Colombia is especially rich in minerals—gold, silver, copper, lead, mercury, manganese, emeralds, and platinum, the last-named being Nearly all found in abundance in the alluvial soils. the best emeralds mined to-day come from Colombia. Iron is found to some extent. The soil is very fertile, but agriculture is backward for lack of public transportation. Rubber trees grow wild, and rubber cultivation has begun. The Panama hat industry is making great progress.

Defense. Military service is compulsory for about one and a half years. The permanent army consists of an effective force of 6,000. In war every Colombian is compelled to serve and the strength may be increased to 50,000. Colombia has no navy. The area is 440,846 square miles. The population is composed of a few people of Spanish blood, and an element of Indians and mixed blood. It numbered about 5,000 000 in 1912

Historical Outline.

Cuba was the most important island discovered by the early voyagers. Columbus gave to it the name of Juana, in honor of the Infante Juan, son of Ferdinand and Isabella. Afterwards the name was changed to Fernandina, later to Santiago, and then to Ave Maria. Finally, history accepted the aboriginal name of Cuba.

The Spaniards quickly realized the importance of Cuba, and founded Baracoa as early as 1511, Santiago and Trinidad by 1515, and Havana in 1519. Twenty years later, after Havana was burned by French adventurers, Hernando de Soto built the fortress of La Fuerza, which still stands. The French again de-stroyed the capital town in 1555, but it was quickly rebuilt

The first insular enterprise of the Spaniards was to get possession of the mines. The natives were reduced to slavery, driven in relays into the interior, and in a few years were almost exterminated.

New Granada, including present Venezuela the mines ceased to yield, the raising of cattle bethe nimes ceased to yield, the raising of cattle be-came the principal industry of the colonists. The tobacco and sugar industries came next; and in order to prosecute these, Negro slavery was introduced. The richness and extent of Cuba made the island a coveted prize, and the leading nations of western Europe sought to possess it. During the decline of the home kingdom in the seventeenth and eightenth centuries (see Spain), Spanish America suffered and Cuban enterprise and progress were re-laxed. Meanwhile both Great Britain and Holland axed. Meanwhile both Great Britain and Hohand secured a firm footing in the West Indies. Thus for a long time the status of the islands was not greatly

During the intercolonial wars in North America, a combined English fleet and army, commanded by Lord Albemarle, came down on Havana (1762) and captured the city. A large ransom was extorted, but in the following year, according to the terms of the Treaty of Paris, Spain received Cuba back. Then followed revival and progress. In 1790, Luis de las Casas was commissioned captain general of Cuba and did something for the Negro slaves. After five years, the fugitive French from Santo Domingo sought refuge in Cuba and the principles of democracy began to work in Spanish America.

Cuba did not take fire. The people remained loyal subjects of the Spanish crown. When, in 1808, the Spanish Bourbons were deposed by Napoleon, the members of the Cuban government renewed their oath, and held the island for the Bourbons When the Bourbons were restored, the captains general who governed the country became almost absolute. Great offices and sinecural positions were farmed out by the ministers at Madrid, and the Cuban officials made themselves good by the spolia-tion of the people. A system of heavy taxation was imposed, and the island had to support a standing army and a navy.

The spirit of freedom thus repressed began to struggle against conditions as early as 1819. The interests of the United States in Cuba began during the Napoleonic wars, when for a time our trade was allowed. The fear of the taking over of Cuba by France was one of the main causes of the Monroe Doctrine of 1823. A secret political society was formed in Cuba called "The Black Eagle," having for its principal aim the emancipation of the Cubans.

The United States made no objection to the Spanish control of Cuba till about 1848, when attempts were made to buy the island. The next step was a series of filibustering expeditions lasting from 1849 to 1854, in which Americans attempted to make Cuba independent. In 1854 the Ostend Manifesto, a semiofficial document, declared that annexation was necessary to protect the interests of slavery. President Pierce and President Buchanan did their best to annex Cuba on any terms.

After the Spanish revolution of 1867–68 Cuba became agitated with the spirit of independence and an armed insurrection began. The war lasted until 1876, when, though the rebellion was said to be suppressed, the Spanish armies had never been able to put down the guerrilla warfare. One result was the abolition of slavery.

In 1895 the second great Cuban revolt began, and it so seriously affected the United States that in 1898 the government demanded that Spain withdraw her forces. This involved the United States and Spain in war, and by the Treaty of Paris (1898, ratified 1899), Spain withdrew from Cuba, which was for the time administered by an American army under General Leonard Wood.

In 1901 the "Platt Amendment" was adopted by Congress on the suggestion of President Roosevelt, and incorporated into the treaty with Cuba in 1903. Cuba thereby agreed to make no treaty which would Criba thereby agreed to make no treaty which would impair independence, or permit any foreign power to obtain control over any portion of the island, or incur a debt, the interest and sinking fund for which could not be met by the revenues of the island. In addition Cuba agreed that the United States might intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, maintenance of government, and establishment of order. Under this treaty the United tablishment of order. Under this treaty the United States was forced to send troops in 1906 and established a provisional government which continued for three years.

Organization.

Government. By the Cuban constitution, adopted in 1901, Cuba is a republic with a president and vice president, both elected for a term of four years, a Senate, and llouse of Representatives. The president is assisted by a cabinet of six members. The influence of the United States in Cuba makes the country virtually a dependency.

Industry and Labor. The main interests of Cuba are agricultural: tobacco, sugar, coffee, cocoa, and cereals being the principal products. The total production of sugar, which in 1896 was 225,221 tons, and in 1897 was 212,951 tons, in 1918-19 was 4,446,-229 tons, or nearly 20 times as much. Beds of asphalt and mines of copper, manganese, and iron are worked. The forests are rich in valuable woods, as When mahogany, cedar, dyewood, and other hard woods.

Religion and Social Conditions. Almost all the people are Roman Catholics.

The larger part of the Cuban population is wholly or partly Negro. Most of the rest are of Spanish descent, but some, also, are from the United States and Europe.

Education was in a backward condition prior to independence. In 1899 only 36 per cent of the inhabitants could read. In 1904 there were 1,936 primary schools and many colleges and insti-tutes for higher instruction. The University of Haana has faculties of law, medicine, pharmacy, letters, and science.

Defense. During the World War and for one year after peace was signed, military service was obligatory between the ages of 21 and 28. The army was composed of 1700 men in the land forces and 1000 in the naval forces. Obligatory military training is given to all Cubans between the ages of 19 and 25

The area of Cuba is 44,164 square miles and the population 2,898,905 (1919). Approximately 75 per cent of the population are white and 25 per cent colored.

N CZECHO-SLOVAKIA.

Historical Outline.

CZECHO-SLOVAKIA is situated in central Europe and includes the two historic divisions of Bohemia and Moravia, and the mountain mass to the eastward, including the Tatra ranges. Bohemia is the most important of these regions and lies on a great plateau surrounded by mountains, commanding both the flat lands in Germany in the north and the Danube valley on the south. It has sometimes been called the Citadel of Europe. Moravia lies east of Bohemia and on its northern boundary is the famous Moravian Gap through which the Slavic invaders poured into central Europe. Still farther east lies the Tatra region of the Carpathian mountains.

The recorded history of these regions begins in the sixth century A. D. At that time the ancestors of the Czechs and Slovaks pushed through the Moravian Gap and expelled the Teutonic peoples who occupied this region. The Slavs were originally rude barbarians; but acquiring civilization they built up powerful states in both Bohemia and Moravia. The Slovaks, however, living in the eastern mountains, never developed the same political or cultural standards as the Czechs in Bohemia and Moravia.

During the Middle Ages, Bohemia, which had absorbed Moravia, was one of the leading kingdoms of Europe; but in the 13th century the native dynasty died out and foreign sovereigns came to the throne who favored Teutonic influences. At this time German merchants and workmen began to settle in the towns, giving them a decided Teutonic complexion.

Bohemia was an intellectual center. In the Reformation it took the Protestant side, but in the Hussite wars gradually returned to the mother church. A Czech nationalistic feeling halted the progress of Germanism for nearly a century. In the 17th century the Thirty Years' War (1618–1648) was a renewal of the contest. This time the Czechs were defeated. Bohemia and Moravia were decimated and the old Czech nobility was destroyed and Austrian Germans took their place. For almost three centuries it seemed as if the Czech nationality had disappeared.

In the 19th century came a revival of nationalism, which, aided by economic prosperity, caused the rapid growth of a Czech middle and educated class which furnished leaders. Gradually the Czechs gained political control wherever they were in numerical majority. This infuriated the Germans, who threatened secession from Austria to the German Empire. The Czechs demanded autonomy for Bohenia and Moravia within the Austrian Empire and when refused began to demand independence and fixed their hopes upon Russia.

and fixed their hopes upon Russia.

During the early years of the World War the Alied Powers did not consider the dismemberment of the Austro-Hungarian Empire and little sympathy was given to the Czecho-Slovak aspirations for independence. In July, 1918, however, France recognized the Czecho-Slovaks as an independent nation. This action was followed by Great Britain and the United States; and on October 28, 1918, the independence of the state was proclaimed. Violent controversies over boundaries ensued with all the neighboring states, — Austria, Germany, Poland, and the Ukraine.

Organization.

Government. On November 14, 1918, the Czecho-Slovak assembly met at Prague and formally established a republic. The suffrage is universal, including men and women on equal footing. The church is separate from the state and the rights of minorities are safeguarded by proportional representation. A system of parliamentary responsible government was established and Professor Thomas (6. Masaryk was elected president

G. Masaryk was elected president.

Industry and Labor. Czecho-Slovakia is a highly favored region possessing a good climate and a fertile land. Before the World War, large crops of cereals and potatoes were raised and the cultivation of the sugar beet was very successful. The most famous agricultural product of Bohemia is hops. The mountains are rich in minerals, particularly coal and lignite, and in the north are valuable iron mines. Other minerals are silver, lead, tin, antimony, graphite, and radium.

Since the country is well supplied with water power as well as eoal, there has always been a varied industrial life. During the last half century have arisen textile industries, the refining of beet sugar, the brewing of beer, and the manufacture of chemicals and glass (see Bohemian glass, in the Dict.).

Education. Before the war, education was compulsory between the ages of 6 and 14 and the illiterates numbered only 2% of the population. In 1914, 13,600 primary schools counted an attendance of 2,032,000 pupils; and 1,021 higher primary schools had more than 170,000 pupils. Secondary education was furnished by 216 Gymnasiums and modern schools. Of the many technical schools and four universities, the most celebrated is the oldest at Prague with 7,000 students.

Z

Until the final determination of the boundaries, it is impossible to give accurate statistics but it is estimated that the area is about 56,316 square miles, and the population about 14,000,000.

DENMARK.

Historical Outline.

Danish history, first clearly recorded in the ninth century, includes the discoveries and settlements made by the Norsemen in England, Iceland, Greenland, and America. In 1648 Denmark was important enough to be recognized as an independent, although secondary, kingdom by the Peace of Westphalia.

During the rest of the seventeenth century Denmark was at war with Sweden from time to time. At home, the nobles at last accepted a hereditary sovereign, Charles XII of Sweden, who was able to force the Danes to neutrality; but after his death (1718) the country was freed from outside pressure. In the reigns of Frederick V. and Christian VII., in the latter part of the eighteenth century, Denmark reformed her social condition, improved her economic position, and attempted to remain neutral in the struggle between France and England. With Russia, Prussia, and Sweden she formed the Second Armed Neutrality League for the protection of her commerce and the freedom of the seas (1800). England retalized, and in 1801 Nelson destroyed the Danish ficet and in 1807 the British bombarded the Danish capital. This threw Denmark into the arms of Napoleon. By the Congress of Vienna Denmark, as his ally, was punished by the loss of Norway, which was ceded to Sweden. The retention of the duchy of Holstein brought Denmark into close relations with the Germanic Confederation. The relation of Schleswig and Holstein to the central government became so strained that in 1848 they broke into a revolt and appealed to Prussia. In 1863 Schleswig was incorporated in the kingdom of Denmark. When Denmark refused to repeal this action, an Austro-Prussian army invaded Schleswig, and in 1864 Denmark was compelled to make peace and renounce all rights to the duchies of Schleswig-Holstein and Lauenburg.

From 1863 to 1906 Christian 1X, was king of

From 1863 to 1906 Christian IX. was king of Denmark. Although his reign began with a humiliation, the country developed both politically and economically and was prosperous. Between 1883 and 1890 there was a severe constitutional crisis over the power of the king to appoint his ministers irrespective of the majority in the Diet. The lower house refused to accept the budget prepared by the ministry and the king issued a provisional financial decree for the collection of the taxes. In 1894 some concessions were made and the prime minister, Estrup, retired. Since then, although no such crisis has occurred, there have been frequent conflicts between the two houses of the Diet. In the meantime the Conservative party had gradually been losing power, until in 1913 a radical cabinet was formed.

In 1906 Frederick VIII. was proclaimed king and one of his first acts was to visit the insular possessions of Denmark, the Faroe Islands, and Iceland. Christian X. succeeded in 1912. In 1915 the suffrage was extended to women taxpayers.

Like the other Scandinavian countries, Denmark was neutral during the World War, but suffered greatly for want of the food she ordinarily imported, owing to the trade restrictions of the Allies. In 1914 exportation of food to Germany was made a penal offense, and in 1918 the United States concluded a shipping agreement with Denmark which assured that country a supply of the necessary food-stuffs, metals, machinery, and chemicals, on the promise that Denmark would not export them to the Central Powers, or to other neutral countries.

Organization.

Government. The present constitution of Denmark is based on the charter of June 15, 1915, which is a development of the original constitution of 1849 The executive power is vested in a king and his responsible ministers, who have access to both houses of the Diet, but may vote only in the chamber of which they are members. The Diet consists of a lower house, the Folkething of 140 members, elected by direct universal suffrage, male and female, proportional representation, and an upper house, the Landsthing, or senate, of 72 members, elected by the electors of the Folkething who are 35 years of age, by indirect election and proportional represen-All laws must be passed by both houses and the Landsthing has the duty of appointing the judges and the trying of impeachments.

Industry and Labor. The situation of Denmark is favorable for commerce. The humidity of the climate and the modification of the tempera-ture by the sea make possible the production of abundant crops in a region lying far north. The long occupation of the peninsula has resulted in the destruction of the forests and a fair development of the soil. The principal crops are oats, potatoes, barley, rye, and wheat. Excellent pasturage makes dairying and cattle raising one of the important industries. Denmark is divided into small farms, the law prohibiting consolidation into great estates.

The Danish fisheries are among the most productive of Europe, the most important being the herring, cod, and salmon. Within recent years manufactures have increased, and in 1914 there were 82,000 industrial factories and shops, employing 346,000 laborers and producing silk, linen, eotton and woolen goods; also leather, lace, gloves, thread, glassware, earthenware, plate wares, weapons, and eutlery. Denmark possesses a large merchant marine for a nation of her size, having in 1917 3,397 vessels, of which more than 500 were steamers.

Religion. The state religion of the kingdom is Lutheran and the national church is under the super-intendence of seven bishops. These, however, have no political status. All other sects and divisions are tolerated, and there are no civil disabilities on account of religion.

Education. Education in Denmark has been compulsory since 1814, the school age being from 7 The public schools, with the exception of few middle-class schools, are free. More than 3,400 elementary schools and 81 middle-class schools profor over 400,000 pupils (1917). For higher education there is an agricultural college at Copenhagen, 189 technical schools, 21 training colleges for teachers, and numerous special schools, among which may be mentioned 70 popular high schools (adult schools). The University of Copenhagen was founded in 1479; the attendance is about 3,000, women being admitted on equal terms with men.

Defense. All able-bodied Danish subjects are obliged to serve in the army. Military service commences at 20 and lasts for 16 years, though only for the first eight years are men enrolled in the active army. At the time of joining, the recruits are continuously trained for more than five months in the infantry, nine months in the first artillery, and one year in the garrison artillery. About a fourth of the men prolong their initial training. Subsequent training takes place only once or twice during the re maining years of the active service. 13,000 recruits are trained annually. The peace strength of the active army is about 120 officers and 12,900 men.

The Danish fleet is maintained for the purpose of coast defense and consists of four monitors, two small cruisers, besides torpedo boats and submarines.

The area of Denmark is 16,585 square miles and the estimated population (1919) 3,170,979.

GREENLAND.

It was proved in 1892 by Lieutenant Robert E. Peary that Greenland is an island. Its area is about $50,000 square miles, making it the largest island in the world. The area of the Danish colony of Greenland is 46,740 square miles and the inhabit ants, mostly civilized Eskimos, are supposed to num-

The first Europeans to touch Greenland were Eric the Red and his band in the tenth century.
These people called it Greenland, hoping that an attractive name would draw colonists. A respectable immigration from Iceland followed. After the discovery of America by Columbus and others Green-land was visited by Davis, Hudson, and Baffin, whose names have remained attached to the waters they explored. The Danes landed on the west coast in 1721 and established missions. The more recent explorers have been many, among them Nordenskjöld, Greely, Nansen, and Peary.

Most of the country is buried under eternal snow and ice. It is almost everywhere mountainous, but the mountains have been blotted out as the valleys have been filled through the centuries by accumulated masses of snow. Petermann Peak, reckoned as 9,000 feet in height, is the loftiest elevation. the thousands of enormous glaciers in Greenland, the Humboldt is the vastest, with an unbroken front on the sea of from forty to fifty miles.

Nevertheless, along the coast during the summer months there is a profusion of vegetation, and garden vegetables grow in the south. The Royal Danish Greenland Company has a monopoly of trade, under a system designed rather for the protection of the natives than for profit.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC (SANTO DOMINGO).

THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC occupies the middle and eastern part of the island of Santo Domingo or Haiti. (See Haiti.) Since 1884 it has existed as a more or less independent republic with frequent revolutions and periods of anarchy. In 1899 the republic was practically bankrupt and certain European powers in 1904 intimated that unless the United States took charge of the Dominican customs and would guarantee an equitable distribution to satisfy their claims they would land forces. In 1905 President Roosevelt negotiated a treaty by which an American commissioner should collect and hold 55% of the revenues for foreign creditors.

With certain amendments this was ratified by the United States Senate in 1907. In 1916 United States forces occupied the republic and proclaimed a military government similar to that in Haiti

Historical Outline.

The country now included in the republic of Ecuador has been known from the early days of Spanish discovery. The ancient name of the country was Quito, so called from the Quitus. These people held the country from time immemorial until they were overcome by the Caras in the tenth century. At a later time the Peruvians conquered Quito and made it a part of their empire. In 1533 Quito was conquered by the Spaniards. The country was made a dependency of Peru, and was ruled by an underpresident appointed by the viceroy.

by Napoleon (1807) led to a series of insurrections among the Spanish American colonies, one of which broke out in Ecuador in 1809. Three years afterwards there was a general insurrection, but the Spanish forces from Peru put it down. In 1820 a revolu-tion again gathered head at Gnayaquil, and to this General Bolivar gave a cordial support. The patriots with forces from Colombia in 1822 gained a great victory on Mount Pichincha and immediately en-tered into union with New Granada and Venezuela, which states had already adopted the republican form of government. ### ESTHONIA.

ESTHONIA, or the region inhabited by the Esthonians, claims substantially the northern third of the former Russian province of Livonia, and resisted the troops of Soviet Russia until December 31, 1919, when an armistice was signed. To avoid a long struggle Alexander I. granted the Finns complete autonomy, and Finland existed as a separate country with the Czar of Russia as Grand Duke of Finland. In 1899 Russia de-termined upon the Russification of Finland. This aroused the Finns, who met the Russian policy with passive resistance, and a period of Russian oppression and Finnish retaliation followed. The Russian revolution of 1905 gave the Finns the opportunity to obtain their old liberties. But when the czardom had recovered, it again undertook the Russification

In 1917 the Kerenski government restored the constitution to Finland. The Bolshevist party in Russia attempted to spread its doctrines to the surrounding country and that led to civil war between the Finnish "Red" and "White" Guards. In Proceedings 1017. Finland declared its independence. December, 1917, Finland declared its independence and from that time on there was civil war between the Radicals and Reactionaries. In the beginning the Radicals were successful, but by June, 1918, through German aid, the Conservatives obtained the power and proposed to establish a monarchy with a German prince as king, and even elected Prince Frederick Charles of Hesse.

With the collapse of Germany a peaceful revolution occurred (Dec. 13, 1918) and General Mannerheim freed the country from all Bolshevist activities. The Republic of Finland was recognized by the British and American governments, in 1919, and the Diet elected Professor K. J. Stahlberg president.

FRANCE.

Historical Outline.

France, at the middle of the seventeenth century, held the first rank among the powers of Europe. England remained an insular kingdom. Spain declined after the age of Charles V. and Philip II. Germany was still a chaotic collection of kingdoms and principalities. For a time France alone was a consolidated unit of race and institutions, showing consonated init of race and institutions, showing forth the spirit of nationality and employing the agencies and methods of a great modern state.

When Louis XIV. was ten years of age France was represented at the Congress of Westphalia (1648) by Cardinal Mazarin. In 1661 Louis XIV. began his personal autocratic rule, which lasted until 1715. He was called the "Grand Monarch," and his reign of 72 years was one of the most interesting in history. In the foreign and religious wars France obtained only minor advantages. The acquisition of Alsace only minor advantages. was the really valuable gain from a bistorical point

The age of Louis XIV, was one of astomishing activity and glory, but of little substantial advantage to France. The manner of the king in administration and war resembled a royal parade and spectacle. Near the conclusion of the reign it was seen that the military power and prestige of the monarchy were waning. As for the literary splendor and artistic fame of the period, these cannot be claimed as results of the influence of the king.

Louis XIV. was proud and arrogant. He had great abilities when he chose to use them and an instinct for choosing subordinates. Thus Colbert, the banker statesman, was placed at the head of the De-partment of Finance. Turenne and Condé were partment of Finance. Turenne and Conde were chosen as commanders of the French armies. Louvois, Noailles, Villars, and Tallard came afterwards. On the other hand, he made many serious mistakes in state policy, especially the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685, the scheme for placing his grandson on the throne of Spain, and the correspondence with the English Jacobites. Battles were fought and some victories won by the king's armies, but the age was on the whole an era of proclamations and pageant-ry rather than of great deeds and marked progress.

The consequences of this false prosperity were quickly shown. During the first half of the eightenth century, both the monarchy and the nation looked backward rather than forward. The English power in combination with the Netherlands gained at the expense of France. Louis XV., great-grandson of the Grand Monarch, came to the throne in his personal will, under Louis XV. the government of France became weak and contemptible, while at the same time the French nation began to manifest its power and genius. All that is significant in the XV. was a flowering of the French reign of Louis mind and its brilliant ascendancy in Europe. the state was inert, French minds assailed the po-litical, social, and religious structure of the age. A new learning came, a new science, and a new phi-Free thought clashed with despotism losophy. The customs and traditions of a thousand years were set at naught. New opinions sought expression in literature. The Encyclopedists were awake sion in literature. The Encyclopedists were awake with a new system of learning, a new category of the achievements of mankind. Meanwhile, the French lost their colonial empire in India and in North America. While the country was the most intelligent and the richest in Europe, the government was gent and the richest in Europe, the government was on the verge of bankruptcy.

Louis XVI. came to the throne on the death of his grandfather in 1774. Neither he nor the French aristocracy saw that a new era was about to begin. aristocracy saw that a new era was about to begin. For thirteen years the old methods of government and society were accepted as though they were eternal. In reality they had been destroyed by the slow-moving forces of history. The French monarchy could never recognize nor accept this fact and thus fell before the attack of modern ideas. thus fell before the attack of modern ideas.

The French Revolution began as a struggle against The French Revolution began as a struggle against political privilege; it quickly developed into a struggle for "liberté, égalité, fraternité"— personal freedom, legal equality, brotherhood. Feudal rights were destroyed; then the monarchy was put on a constitutional hasis (1791). Then came an up-rising from the depths—a republic was established, the king and queen were executed, gradually the the king and queen were executed, gradually the rabble of Paris got control of the Convention and the management of the government. The result was the Reign of Terror (1794), which led to anarchy. The only way out was to form a Directory, a dictatorship of a group. Military support was necessary. In 1795 the young Napoleon protected the Convention against a Royalist uprising and presently became the victorious leader of the French armies, repelling invasion and spreading the ideas of the Revolution in conquered lands.

In 1803 Napoleon declared himself Emperor of the French. In a series of wars he defeated Austria, crushed Prussia, occupied Holland, destroyed Spain, and threatened Russia. In 1809 Austria attempted to throw off the French yoke, but was de-feated at Wagram; and in 1812 Napoleon declared war upon Russia, invaded it, and occupied Moscow in triumph. The Russians, however, destroyed the city and the French were forced to a disastrous and In 1813 the German nations rallied frightful defeat. In 1813 the German nations rallied and at the great hattle of Leipzig the French were defeated and Napoleon retreated to the Rhine.

NINETEENTH-CENTURY PERIOD.

The allies invaded France's territory entering Paris March 30, 1814, and Napoleon abdicated and was exiled to Elba. In March, 1815, Napoleon Ianded in France and began his wonderful "Hundred The alliance was renewed against him; on Days." The alliance was renewed against him, on June 18 he was overwhelmingly defeated at Vaterloo, and the empire was abolished for the second time.

The House of Bourbon was restored, but without enthusiasm or hope on the part of the French people. The reigns of Louis XVIII. and his brother, Charles X., were but interludes between the past and the future. Then came the Revolution of 1830 and the substitution of the Orléans monarchy of Louis Philippe, modeled on the English hasis. The Citizen King was tolerated by the nation until the Revolution of 1848, when the short-lived Second Republic served as a stepping-stone for Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, on which he mounted to the empire in 1851.

The temper of France showed itself to be imperial and the coup d'état of Napoleon III. was ratified with enthusiasm. For 19 years he ruled France, partly by diplomacy and partly by nilitary power. His court was the most glittering in Europe. After the Crimean War, the opening of the Suez Canal, and the International Exposition of 1867, his prestige was greater than that of any other ruler of his time.

From 1852 to 1860 this rule was autocratic and repressive; from 1860 to 1870 it was forced into a form which paid some attention to the rights of the Napoleon III. was an intensely modern people. Napoleon III. was an intensely modern man, interested in works of utility and improvement and humanity. Hospitals and asylums and relief agencies were founded, laborers were given the right to strike, banks were organized so that the farmers might improve their holdings, railways were built and canals begun. In the midst of this prosperity the court was openly and unblushingly corrupt.
The Empire was losing thousands of the troops and military credit in the effort to make Mexico a de-

Not so the people The pretext was found in 1870 in a controversy over the Spanish throne, skillfully aggravated by the Ems dispatch which Bismarck so edited as to arouse German popular opinion. The emperor took the hait. Offivier, the French minister, announced that he accepted war "with a light heart." The empress declared that "this is my war."

A few days of actual war brought down this house of cards. The scandalous lack of preparation of the French was revealed before the efficiency of the Prussians. Fighting began August 2, 1870, and on September 1 at Sedan a whole French army of 120,-000 men was destroyed or captured, including the surrender of Emperor Napoleon III. The empire at once collapsed and a republic was proclaimed. Fighting continued until February, 1871, and included the siege and final capitulation of Metz and of the empired by the control of the of the capital city of Paris.

For this war Germany exacted from France the then unprecedented money indemnity of five billion francs (about $1,000,000,000) and tore away the two French provinces of Alsace and Lorraine, including the important military fortress of Metz. Alsace was German in origin and speech, but had been French for two centuries, and in 1870 was French in spirit and nationality. The possession of Lorraine spirit and nationality. The Third French Republic was proclaimed September 4, 1870, and its first act was to renew the war. Although the republican government of France was thus restored, it had no constitution. power was in the hands of the National Assembly, which exercised all legislative and executive powers It was also the only body capable of making a constitution. The Assembly was not in favor of a republic; and the old Bourbon line would have been restored hut for the refusal of the heir to the throne to accept the tricolor flag. Bonapartists also hoped and plotted. In 1875 the constitution of the Third Republic was formed, which still left the way open for a monarchy. In 1879 the republic was accepted as permanent and Jules Grévy was elected president.

This republic has lasted for nearly fifty years, and in spite of dangerous crises has proved acceptable to France and has fought through the World War. There seems little likelihood of a change in the form of government. The history and development of the republic may conveniently be grouped around six important movements: (1) church and state; (2) the army; (3) colonial empire; (4) civil control of the military; (5) socialism and labor; (6) relations with Germany.

In the long struggle between republicans and monarchists the Roman Catholic Church supported the monarchists, which caused Gambetta to ex-claim, "Clericalism, that is our enemy." In 1880 the Jesuits were expelled from France and the new free and compulsory educational system, estabiree and compusory educational system, established 1881–1882, attempted to free the schools from clerical control. In the struggles over the Dreyfus case the Clerical party sided with the army, which caused the formation in the Chamber of Deputies of the coalition called the "bloc," composed of Radisels of Sociolists, which establish the abundant cals and Socialists, which attacked the church,

Under the leadership of Waldeck-Rousseau, laws were passed suppressing all religious orders except those authorized by the government, and no religious order was allowed to teach. In 1905 the Concordat, or treaty with the Pope, dating from 1801, was abrogated and thenceforth church and state in France were separate. Legally organized "associations of worship" were given the privilege of occupying the church buildings. Bishops and priests were deprived of state aid; but, on the other hand, the church was free from state interference in ecclesiastical affair

The monarchists joined in the hunt, eager to discredit the republic. The Clerical party eager to discredit the republic. The Clerical party was against Dreyfus. On the other side the bloc of radical republicans insisted that the army should be subordinate to civil authority, that clerical influence should be kept out of politics, and that the republic should be preserved. A series of investigations showed that Dreyfus was an innocent man, his enemies were held up to public scorn, and the attacks on the army were checked.

During the early years of the republic a distinct movement was made to carry trade-unionism over During the eighties the socialists lost to socialism. ground and disintegrated into groups. About 1900, however, the various socialist elements united and in the ministry of Waldeck-Rousseau an "independent socialist" received a portfolio. In 1905 a formal Socialist party was formed, on the platform of transforming the capitalistic organization of society into a collectivist or communistic organization, through the political organization of the working classes (proletariat). In the elections of 1910 the popular optoletarial). In the elections of 1910 the popular vote polled by the Socialists was 1,200,000 and 105 Socialist deputies were elected. The election of 1919, the first after the World War, showed a reaction; and the Socialists and Radicals lost 126 seats in the Chamber of Deputies, while the Republicans of the Left and the Progressives gained 122 and the Liberal Action party (Catholic), 42.

From 1871 until 1892 France stood almost alone in Europe. Through the defeat by Germany, she sank for a time to the position of a second-rate The loss of Alsace-Lorraine was not serious in a territorial sense, but the policy of revanche (revenge) was never abandoned. The French always hoped that the lost provinces might some day be restored. Nevertheless, France accepted the loss as an accomplished fact for the time turned her energies to building up a colonial empire.

As far back as 1830 France had sent a fleet to threaten Algiers; war followed, and by 1847 France threaten Algiers; war followed, and by 1847 France controlled the whole of Algeria. Under Napoleon III., the Senegal valley in Africa was annexed, and in Asia Cochin China was acquired (1862). During the Third Republic, Tunis was made a "protectorate" (1881), and the French possessions in West Africa were expanded until France controlled most of the western coast of Africa from the Meditage. of the western coast of Africa from the Mediterranean to the Congo. The region thus brought under French influence is nearly eight times as large as France and has a population of over 14,000,000. In Asia the kingdom of Annam became a protectorate in 1883 and Tonkin was annexed in 1885. Madagascar was declared a French colony.

The French long looked with desire toward Morocco, but Germany was a rival contestant for territory both in the interior of Africa and on the northern coast. In 1906 the emperor asserted the interest of Germany. This was contested by France and Great Britain, and by the Conference of Algeeiras French primacy in Morocco was acknowledged — a settlement proposed by the representative of the United States. Again, ln 1911, Germany sent the Panther to Agadir, an act which almost caused war. Once more Germany was forced to yield and to recognize the French interests; in return France ceded extensive territories in Kamerun and the French Congo.

These incidents showed that France had powerful friends in Europe; the long isolation was broken. The change goes back to 1892, when an alliance was made with Russia. Thenceforward the two powers were united, if need be, against the Triple Alliance of Thenceforward the two powers Germany, Austria, and Italy. France's position in Europe was made more secure. The rivalry with Great Britain continued and became serious in 1898 over conflicting colonial claims in Africa (the Fa-Neither party desired war, and the matter was settled by compromise.

ain and used all his influence to bring about a military understanding hetween France and England—the Entente Cordiale of 1904. France recognized England's special interests in Egypt, and England the special interests of France in Morocco. The adjustment of colonial questions was the smaller part of the result. Without any formal public alliance, England became the firm friend of France; then setthed old differences with the ally of France, Russia; and thus the germ of a rival Triple Entente was formed to offset the famous Triple Alliance.

The early years of the twentieth century saw Europe divided into two camps. Germany's universal military service compelled her neighbors to adopt the same policy in self-defense. In spite of proposals made at the Hague Conferences of 1899 and 1907 to discover on to limit the military scribble of the conference of the same of the limit the military catalytics. to disarm or to limit the military establishments, a contest in military preparedness went on. #### WORLD-WAR PERIOD.

Nevertheless, when in 1914 Germany, asserting that she was surrounded by an "iron ring" of enemies, seized the Austrian demands on Serbia after the murder of the Austrian Crown Prince as the occasion for war on Russia, France was deeply involved. She was bound to defend her ally against a two-power war; and she could readily see that Germany would seek her destruction. Hence on August 3, 1914, German troops being already in French territory, war was declared on Germany.

Germany recognized that France, well armed and close to German centers, was the most immediately dangerous opponent. Therefore, leaving the eastern frontier weakly defended, Germany struck through Belgium directly at France. By the end of August Germany had almost reached Paris; but by the battle of the Marne she was thrown back on lines which still included a large part of the industrial section of France, threatening the Channel and the capital

During the war France suffered as almost no other country. She was deprived of a large portion of her most valuable industrial resources, a large part of the male population was mobilized in the army, and industry was paralyzed. In the territory occupied the Germans were guilty of frightful devastation and destruction beyond what was necessary for military purposes. Their clear and avowed purpose was so to cripple the economic resources and organization of France that she should cease to be a trade rival after

In the early years of the war there were frequent changes of ministry; but just as in military affairs war produced one supreme leader, Foeh, so in politi-cal affairs, Clemenceau became the most powerful influence in France. With no thought of surrender, in spite of reverses and in the face of a defeatist party, Clemenceau maintained his steady course and upheld the policy of Foch.

At the close of the war France demanded compensation, not only for the "crime of 1870" and for the enormous military losses, but also for the devastation which the Germans had wrought. restored Alsace-Lorraine to France, gave to her an undetermined sum by way of reparation, and in particular assigned the occupation of the valuable coal mines in the Saar region as a compensation for the willful devastation of the Lens and other French coal fields. Thus, after being deprived of her provinces for nearly half a century, France was able to redress the wrong of 1870 and to receive partial compensation for her losses.

Government. The Constitution of France does not consist of a single document submitted for approval to the electorate, but of a series of statutes passed by the Assembly. The foundations are five laws, sometimes referred to as the Constitution of 1875, which provide for the organization of the public powers, the relations of the public powers, the elec-tion of senators, and the election of deputies. To these have been added the Laws of 1879, fixing Paris as the seat of government; of 1884, for the abolition of life senators; of 1885, 1889, and 1913, for the election of deputies. The power to amend and alter this constitution is vested in the National Assembly, which consists of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies sitting in joint session.

executive power is vested in a president chosen by the National Assembly for a term of seven years. Nominally the president has wide and important powers; practically, like the king of England, he personally exercises few of these powers, all real executive acts being performed by ministers. ministry in France, while nominally appointed by the president, is directly responsible to the Chamber of Deputies, and thus a cabinet system of government is established, similar to that in England.

In actual practice the French parliamentary sys tem is quite different, since the Chamber of Deputies is divided into numerous groups, no one of which generally possesses a clear majority; hence, every ministry is responsible not to one organized party, but to a temporary coalition. Since the election of 1898, which resulted in the formation of the bloc, or coalition of the Radical and Socialist parties, somewhat more consistent support has been given to the various ministries. Yet, as compared with England the ministries in France are short-lived and shifting.

The legislative power is vested in a bicameral gislature. The Chamber of Deputies is apportioned, one for every hundred thousand inhabitants. After various experiments between the election of each member from one district (scrutin d'arron-dissement) and of all the deputies from a department upon a common ticket (scrutin de liste) or general ticket, the latter was accepted in 1919, combined with proportional representation. It was hoped thus to check the control which the local politicians and the prefects of the departments exercised, and by proportional representation to give to minorities more adequate representation.

Although the ministers are not responsible to the Senate, it has not sunk to the position of the British Ilouse of Lords, and still exercises considerable influence on legislation and administration.

The Assembly has full legislative power and when in joint session as the National Assembly may amend he constitution, without reference to the electorate.

The unit of local government in France is the commune, which varies in size. In the whole country there are 36,241 communes, each electing a municipal council, which council elects a mayor. A number of communes, twelve on an average, are grouped in a canton; several cantons make up a district, or arrondissement (Paris, however, is divided into 20 arrondissements); a group of arrondissements constitutes a department; and of these departments there were S7 before the recovery of Alsace-Lorraine.

Through all this gradation the strong hand of the eentral government is felt. Even the local mayor is its agent, and the prefect at the head of each department and the subprefeet over every arrondissemen. are the powerful representatives of the executive branch. Paris itself has a mayor for each of its 20 rrondissements, while the place of mayor of the city is taken by the prefects of the Seine and of police.

This centralization of governmental power in a single national organization has prevailed in France. alike under monarchy, empire, and republic. The power of the people manifests itself in a frequent power of the people manifests itself in a frequent change of the head, whether by revolution or under constitutional forms, rather than by a distribution of authority among many individuals and bodies, as in the English-speaking nations.

Industry and Labor. France is an important agricultural country. Out of an area of 132,000,000 acres, 98,000,000 acres are cultivated, 24,000,000 are in forests, and only 9,500,000 are classed as moorland or uncultivated land. As in most other countries in modern times the ratio of agriculturists to those engaged in other industries is decreasing. In 1910 more than 5,000,000 people were engaged in manu-In 1910 factures, 375,000 in mining and metal work, and 500,000 in fisheries.

The soil of France is rich and of varied quality and produces readily all the vegetables, grains, and fruits of the north temperate zone. The more important erops as returned in 1913 were potatoes, wheat, oats, sugar heets, rye, and barley. The vineyards of France have always been famous and nearly 4,000,-000 acres are devoted to the cultivation of the vine, which in 1914 produced 1,316,849,000 gallons of Cider is also produced in large quantities. wine. In addition the production of nuts, fruits, and particularly of olives is very important. Silk culture is encouraged by the government and is carried on in 24 departments. In 1913 there were 90,000 producers and the total value of the product was over 15,000,000 francs (about $3,000,000).

France pessesses valuable metal deposits, and in 1913 produced 40,000,000 tons of coal and lignite and 21,000,000 tons of iron ore. silver, zinc, antimony, arsenic, and gold were produced in smaller amounts; and in 1913 the value of the output of the quarries amounted to $58,000,000.

The French manufactures are among the finest and most profitable in the world. The handiwork and most profitable in the world. The handwork of the French has always been celebrated, and their skill and taste are shown in the manufacture of delicate machinery and heautiful articles. The industries of France are varied. Measured by the numbers of persons employed, the more important (apart from agriculture, mining, commerce, and transport) are the manufacture of clothing; the textile industries (manufacture of cotton, wool, lace, and silk goods, etc.); woodworking; manufacture of iron, metal, and leather goods; building; and haking.

The most important exports of the country are woolen, silk, and cotton goods, raw wool, raw silk, wine, Parisian goods, automobiles, skins, and furs. The industrial condition of France is a matter of constant concern to the government. The fact that four ministries of the government out of fourteen have to do with industrial questions shows the preëminent importance of industry in the consideration of the republic.

The general condition of the laborer in France has long been above that in any other country of Europe. Hence there was no exodus of French workingmen from their own country. The French laborer, though a peasant, is generally a small landowner. One of the beneficent results of the French Revolution was the breaking up of vast estates and the creation of more than 4,000,000 small holdings. laborer is generally contented and happy. Religion. For ages France has usually stood by a policy of regarding the church as a national rather than an international institution. Kings of France maintained a Gallican church as against the claims Rome to ecclesiastical jurisdiction. The church under the old régime was closely allied with the nobility and its privileges. Hence the Revolution attacked it, and for a time proscribed it. When France returned to a settled government, the church Even Napoleon found it expedient to was restored. make terms with the pope, by the Concordat of 1801. One of the watchwords of the restoration and reaction in 1815 was " to strengthen the altar and the throne.

After various fluctuations, the policy of France under the republic was to secularize the state, but to make a grant of funds to any sect numbering 100, 000 adherents. The Roman Catholic Church, the Protestants both of the Reformed, or Calvinist, Church and of the Lutheran or Augsburg Confession, and the Jewish Religious Community all received these grants. By the law of 1905 all the communions were put upon the voluntary or self-supporting basis, the state paying no more stipends, except that clergy over 45 years of age, or who had served over 25 years, were to receive a grant for a time. Of late years the government has come into time. Of late years the government has come into friendly relations with the papacy.

Education. The most important laws concerning education were those of 1881, when primary education was made free; and of 1882, when it was made compulsory between the ages of six and thirteen. Later laws have made it entirely secular: no religious instruction is given in the state schools, and all the teachers are appointed from the laity. Even private schools and tutors must be certified by the state. There were, in 1913, in France and Algeria more than 69.000 primary and higher schools, of which  $57,\!000$  were public and  $12,\!000$  private, with a total attendance of 5,669,000 pupils. The effect has been remarkable. Illiteracy has dropped from 25% to 4%, and in 1913 only 2% of the conscripts could neither read nor write. The annual cost of this primary education in 1913 was about 225,000,000 francs ($45,000,000).

Secondary education for boys is supplied in two types of schools, by the state in lycees and by the communes in collèges, both corresponding nearly to American high schools. The course extends seven years. In 1913 there were 112 lycées, with over 62,000 pupils and 231 communal collèges, with over 37,000 pupils. For girls there were in 1914 52 lycées, with 14,000 pupils and 70 collèges, with 7,000 pupils. Higher education is provided for by the state in universities and special schools. the state in universities and special schools. A decree of 1885 created a general council of faculties and the creation of universities was accomplished in 1897 There are 14 faculties of law, 8 of medicine, 16 of sciences, 16 of letters. The state faculties confer the degrees. In addition professional and technical instruction is given in special courses, including admirable normal schools, and institutions for training teachers.

France has a coast line of 1,304 miles on the Atlantic and 456 on the Mediterranean. Be-fore the World War its land frontier of 1,575 miles touched the borders of Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, and Spain. An army and navy and in-ternal fortifications are a prime necessity to France. Paris is the center of defense, and along the boundaries is a belt of fertifications which up to 1914 were supposed to be formidable barriers, the most important line being Verdun, Toul, Épinal, and Belfort. This line was held against the Germans in the World War, Verdun being subjected to repeated

Military service in France is compulsory and universal, no exemptions being allowed except for physical disability. Liability for service extends from the cal disability. Liability for service extends from the twentieth to the forty-eighth year and involves active service in the army for three years, eleven years in the reserve, seven years in the territorial army and seven years in the territorial reserve. The active army is mobilized for training and maneuvers twice in the period of reserve service, for four weeks on each occasion. The peace establishment of the army in 1914 was $46,188. During the World War, however, more than 128,372 officers and 5,064,000 men were mobilized. The casualties were 1,385,300 dead, 2,675,000 wounded, and 446,000 prisoners or missing. No great army in history has ever made such a sacrifice of man power in the defense of its land.

The minister of marine has the supreme command of the navy. In 1919 the navy consisted of seven dreadnoughts, 13 predreadnoughts, numerous cruisers and gunboats, 80 destroyers, 153 torpedo boats, and over 100 shmarines. The navy was not equal to the British in quality of ships. In the World War its service was almost wholly in the Mediterranean.

Area and Population. The area of continental France is 212,659 square miles and the population (1911) 41,475,523. These figures include the recovered provinces of Alsace-Lorraine, which have an area of 5,605 square miles and which in 1910 had a population of 1,874,014.

FRENCH COLONIES AND DEPENDENCIES.

France in the eighteenth century possessed a vast colonial empire. Almost the whole was transferred to Great Britain in 1763. Napoleon built up a great complex empire of subject and protected lands in Europe, and attempted to take over the Spanish American empire. All that was forfeited in 1814. In 1830 France began a third and successful drive for external territory; and in 1920 possesses 4,660,000 square miles with an estimated population of about 50,000,000. Algeria is not regarded as a colony, but as a part of France. Most of the colonies enjoy some measure of self-government and have elective councils to assist the government. The older colonies also have direct representation in the French legislature, usually by functionaries. The colonial empire is not self-supporting, and France in 1917 expended on it over 200,000,000 francs ($40,000,000). of which 190,000,000 franes was for military services.

FRENCH POSSESSIONS IN AFRICA. ALGERIA.

Algeria, like all northern Africa, was conquered by the Arabic Moslems in the seventh century. In the sixteenth century Khaireddin Pasha, the great admiral of Sultan Solyman I., imposed for a time the authority of the Ottoman Empire. This control was never more than nominal and was repudiated in 1705. Piracy was the chief occupation of the Algerines, as of their neighbors. Great Britain and other states paid protection money. The United States in 1801–1805 made war on the Algerines, who, however, soon returned to their evil practices. In 1815 Commodore Decatur with an American squadron punished them; and a joint British and Dutch squadron then destroyed the Algerine navy and a great part of the capital.

came the French conquest by war lasting till 1847. Resistance continued until 1870, when France established a civil administration of the country.

Government. Algeria is considered a part of France, and each of the three departments into which it is divided sends one senator and two deputies to the National Assembly. A governor-general at Algiers represents the French government and exercises large authority. He is assisted by an advisory council. There is no other legislative authority.

visory council. There is no other legislative authority for Algiers than the Assembly in Paris.

Industry and Labor. A small area of highly fertile land near the coast is cultivated scientifically, but the greater part of the country is of little value for agriculture. The northern portion is mountainous and better adapted to grazing and forestry. Some tropical fruits grow abundantly and the productive align evil is on important industry. The duction of olive oil is an important industry. The cork oak is cultivated and, in 1916, 4,000 tons of cork were obtained. The chief export sheep, wheat, wool, fruit, and tobacco. The chief exports are wine, Religion. The native population is entirely Moslem. The French population is Roman Catho-lic, with the exception of about 60,000 Jews.

Defense. Before the World War the military force consisted of one army corps. French residents are under the same obligation to serve as in France, and natives are required to give three years' service under the colors and seven in the reserve.

The area of Algeria is about 222,180 square miles

TUNIS.

Tunis was long a vassal state of Turkey. with Algiers, its main industry was piracy. In 1871 the Turkish sultan released the bey from payment of tribute. The French had long coveted the counof tribute. The French had long coveted the country, and in 1881 it was forcibly made a protectorate.

Government. The former reigning family still nominally occupies the throne, but the government is earried on by a special department of the French foreign office. The French minister resident is also the Tunisian minister of foreign affairs. For administrative purposes Tunis is divided into 19 eivil and military districts, each under a French governor. The subordinate officials, however, are natives. army of occupation of about 17,000 men is made up of a nucleus of French troops supported by native regiments. During the World War, 35,000 native troops served in Europe under the French colors.

Industry and Labor. In the north the mountains shelter fertile valleys, suitable for intensive cultivation and the raising of citrous fruits and olive In the center the high table-lands afford pas tures, while the south is famous for its oases and gar-dens and dates. The chief agricultural products are wheat, barley, and oats. In 1918 the wine yield was 14,000,000 gallons; olive oil, 3,000,000 gallons. The date erop for 1918 was estimated at 88,000,000 pounds. The important mines are of lead, zine, iron, and manganese. The fisheries are valuable.

Z

Religion and Education. The natives are Moslem; the foreigners, Roman Catholics and Jews. There are 287 public schools, 8 lycées and collèges, and 23 private schools, all together harboring 30,000 pnpils. A Mohammedan university exists in the Great Mosque at Tunis, and there are numerous Moslem schools.

The area is about 50,000 square miles and the population (1914) is estimated at 1,940,000.

MOROCCO.

See Morocco, as a separate country, page 128.

FRENCH WEST AFRICA.

South of the western Sahara is a region belonging to France of about 1,682,000 square miles with a population (1917) of about 12,000,000. The historical nucleus of this region is the French colony Senegal, which dates back nearly three centuries. The French occupation of this region was bitterly resisted by the natives. In 1904 French West Africa was reorganized and divided into Senegal, French Guinea, the Ivory Coast, Dahomey, the territories of Senegambia (now Upper Senegal-Niger), the Military Territory of the Niger, and the "Civilian Territory"

Government. A governor-general, assisted by a council, has authority over all French West Africa In each of the colonies there is a lieutenant governor under the direction of the governor-general.

Industry and Labor. In all the colonies this is of a similar character; — primitive agriculture in a rich region of spontaneous tropical products.

Religion. Throughout French West Africa Mohammedanism and the Negro faiths predominate, although there are many Christian missionaries.

Education. Schools are founded in large numbers by Catholic and Protestant missions under the French government. Everywhere the French have attempted to civilize and benefit the country by force while reaping the material advantages. Some progress has been made in the introduction of railroads, telegraphs and telephones, and highways.

Senegal is the most western part of Africa administrative purposes it is divided into four mu-nicipal communes, whose inhabitants are regarded Frenchmen and elect one deputy to the French National Assembly, and about a score of districts in which the government exercises absolute authority and whose natives are not French citizens. The soil is generally sandy and the natives cultivate groundinits, corn, and some rice. Other products are castor beans, gum, and rubber. The area is 74,000 square miles and the population 1,444,621.

French Guinea lies on the Atlantic coast be-tween Portuguese Guinea and the British colony of Sierra Leone. The chief product is rubber. The area is 93,000 square miles and the population 1,812,000.

The Ivery Coast extends between Liberia and the British Gold Coast and reaches inland to the colony of Upper Senegal-Niger. There is an ex-cellent harbor. The natives cultivate corn, plan-tains, and other fruits. In the inlands the mahogany forests are worked, and gold is found near Grand Bassam. Rubber is a valuable export. The area is about 125,000 sq. miles and the population 1,562,000.

Dahomey lies on the coast between Togoland and Nigeria France obtained a footing in 1851 and annexed the kingdom in 1894. The colony has only seventy miles of coast, but spreads out as it extends The natives are of pure Negro stock and are industrious agriculturists in the coast regions. forests abound in coconut and oil palms which furnish the chief exports. The area is 39,000 square miles and the population 911,000.

The colony of Upper Senegal-Niger was founded in 1904. It includes more than two thirds of the course of the Niger and a large part of the Sahara The chief exports are groundnuts, cattle, and rubber. The area is 473,273 square miles.

The colony of the Upper Volta was formed by a decree of March, 1919, from the southern section of Upper Sengal-Niger. It lies within the bend of the Niger and has an area of 95,000 square miles. The total population of the Upper Senegal-Niger and Upper Volta colonics is about 5,600,000.

The Military Territory of the Niger comprises that part of the Sahara to the east of the Niger and was established in 1904. It has an area of 533,000 square miles and a population of 850,000.

Mauretania, the western end of the Sahara, was formed into a protectorate in 1903, and in the fol-lowing year established as a "Civilian Territory." It has an area of 344,967 square miles and a population of 256,000, mostly Moslem.

THE SAHARA.

This name is given to the enormous region extending from the Nile basin west to the Atlantic and south from the Mediterranean colonies. In 1898 Great Britain recognized this vast territory of over 1,500,000 square miles — half the size of the United States — as French. It contains numerous oases and some grazing country, but immense areas are sterile. some grazing country, but immense areas are sterile.

FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA
(FRENCH CONGO).

FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA lies on the Atlantic coast, sonth of what was formerly the German Kamerun and of the territory of the Belgian Congo, French occupation began in 1841. This possession is divided into three colonies, each under a lieutenant governor, who in turn is under the governor-general for French Equatorial Africa. Little has been done to develop the natural resources of forests and mines, but whale fisheries were started in 1912.

The area is about 672,000 square miles and the estimated population (1915) 9,000,000.

FRENCH SOMALI COAST.

FRENCH SOMALI COAST lies on the east coast of Africa between the Italian colony of Eritrea and British Somaliland. The country has scarcely any industries, but the coast fisheries and inland trade are important. In 1912, 11,000 tons of salt were exported. Many of the exports from Abyssinia pass through the colony. It has an area of about 5,790 square miles and an estimated population of 206,000.

MADAGASCAR.

Madagascar was claimed by the French on the basis of a grant of Louis XIII. to a French trading company, which the natives refused to recognize. Protestant missions had good success in the early nineteenth century. The French secured concessions from the different native chiefs; and at length, in 1885, after severe fighting, obtained control of the island. A formal protectorate was established in 1890; and in 1896 Madaga car was recognized as a French possession and the island and its dependencies declared a French colony.

Government. Madagascar is ruled by a French governor-general, assisted by a council of administration, but has no elective assembly, nor is it represented in the French, National Assembly. Natives are employed to a large extent in subordinate positions, in both civil and military administration.

Industry and Labor. Madagascar is largely agricultural. The chief vegetable products are rice, sugar, coffee, vanilla, and rubber. The forests abound in valnable woods and there are profitable mines of graphite. Silk and cotton weaving and the manufacture of Panama hats are carried on. chief exports are hides, rice, gold dnst, and wax.

Religion and Education. The Christian population, under numerous missionary societies, is estimated at 450,000 Protestants and 50,000 Roman Catholics. The outlying tribes are still heathen. Education is nominally compulsory from 8 to 14 years of age and there are 745 official schools, with 76,000 pupils, and 432 private schools, with 43,000 pupils. The children are obliged to learn the French language.

Defense. In time of peace the troops in Madagascar consist of 2,411 Europeans and 6,376 natives. During the World War Madagascar sent to France a large contingent of native officers and men.

The area is estimated at 228,000 square miles and the population (1917) at 3,545,000.

Mayotta and the Comoro Islands are north of Madagascar, and are administered under the government of that island. Sugar cane and vanilla, spices and perfume plants are cultivated. The area is 790 sq. miles; the population (1914) about 96,000.

RÉUNION.

Réunion, or Bourbon, discovered by the Portuguese in 1545, occupied by the French in 1649, and conceded a French possession since 1767, is an island 420 miles east of Madagascar, controlled by a governor-general, with the assistance of a privy council and an elective council-general; it is represented in the French Assembly by two deputies and one senator. The annual rainfall is very high - 150 inches. Sugar, rnm, coffee, tapioca, and vanilla and spices are the chief exports. The area is 970 square miles and the population (1912) 173,822.

FRENCH POSSESSIONS IN ASIA.

French India is made up of the petty fragment of the vast colonial empire which was attempted by Dupleix and broken to pieces by Clive in 1757. It comprises widely separated towns on the coast of India and is represented in the French Assembly by one senator and one deputy. Pondicherry is the most important of these towns and has a population of 47,000. The principal crops are paddy, groundon 47,000. The principal color are pairly scotter nuts, and raggee. In 1917 there were over 50,000 acres of rubber trees, which produced over a million pounds. The total area is about 196 square miles pounds. and the estimated population (1918) 266,000.

Cochln China. The chief occupation is rice culture. River and coast fishing is also extensively carried on. As a French colony it sends one deputy to the French Assembly. The capital is Saigon, which possesses wharves, repair and dry docks, and a navy yard which makes it one of the important ports in Asia. The estimated area is 20,000 square miles and the population 3,000,000.

The area is 100 square miles and the population 6,119,720.

Laos has been a French protectorate since 1893. The soil is very fertile, producing rice, cotton, indigo, tobacco, and fruits, and vast teak forests from which the logs are floated down to Saigon. Gold, tin, lead, and precious stones are also found. The natives however, are so opposed to foreigners that for commercial purposes the country is almost inaccessible. #### FRENCH POSSESSIONS IN AMERICA.

French Gulana lies between Dutch Guiana and Brazil. It is the only French possession on the mainland in the Western Hemisphere, and was first occupied by the French in 1604. Since 1855 Guiana has been a penal settlement for habitual criminals, and the penal population numbers over 4,000. On the Île du Diable, Captain Dreyfus was confined from 1895 to 1899. There is little agriculture in the colony, and the most important industry is gold mining. Silver, iron, and phosphates are also found. The area is about 32,000 square miles and the population (1911) about 49,000.

Martinique is one of the West Indies. settled in 1635 by the French, who soon exterminated the natives. It has twice been taken by the British during wars, but restored at the conclusion of peace. It is represented in the French Assembly by one senator and two deputies. Sugar, rum, and cocoa are the chief productions, after which come tobacco, coffee, and cotton. The island has suffered terribly from tornadoes and earthquakes, notably twice in 1902 from eruptions of Mont Pelée. The area is 385 square miles and the population

Guadeloupe is the name commonly given to two closely adjacent islands (Gnadeloupe proper and Grande-Terre) in the West Indies. Dependent on it are the five smaller islands of Marie-Galante, Les Saintes, Désirade, Saint-Barthélemy, and Saint-Martin Guadeloupe was occupied by the French in 1635; they lost it several times in war, but always regained it when peace was made. It is represented in the French Assembly by one senator and two deputies. The chief products are sugar, coffee, and deputies. Saint-Pierre and Miquelon, each the largest of a small group of islands, with an area altogether of 93 square miles and a population of 4,652, are the last remnant of the once magnificent colony of New France. They lie in the north Atlantic, south of and near the coast of Newfoundland. The islands are hardly more than bare rocks. The catching and drying of fish is the sole occupation.

New Caledonia is an island lying east of Australia, with an area of 7,650 square miles and a population (1911) of 50,000, 5,671 of whom were of con-

GERMANY.

Historical Outline.

THE GERMAN REPUBLIC Was proclaimed November 9, 1918. In order to understand its peculiar constitution and the events which led to the World War, it is necessary to trace the successive steps which transformed the empire of Charlemagne into the Holy Roman Empire and that in turn into the German Empire under the hegemony of Prussia, and finally resulted in the present republic.

Of the later Teutonic invaders, the Franks were the first to establish a kingdom with the attributes of a modern state. Under Charlemagne, this kingdom became an empire and in gratitude for his assistance against the Lombards, the Pope, Leo III., on Christmas Day, 800, crowned Charlemagne Roman em-His empire extended from the Elbe across the Pyrenees, and from the Baltic to the states of the Church in Italy. Although in name a Roman empire, in fact it was Teutonic in race and in culture.

The successors of Charlemagne found it impossible to preserve intact the territory of the empire he had created, and by the close of the ninth century the disintegration was complete.

In the early years of the tenth century, Henry I, a Saxon, founded a German monarchy. He was succeeded by his son, Otto I., who went to the aid of the pope and, in 962, was crowned emperor of the "Holy Empire of the German Nation." Thus began the ill-fated influence of Germany in Italy which was continued by Austria until the World War. Until the beginning of the nineteenth century, when the imperial dignity was finally abolished, the em-peror was almost the sole unifying element in the rivalry of the petty kingdoms, duchies, states, and cities which went to make up Germany.

Although the imperial dignity was elective in form atthough the imperial digitary. The election was made by seven great princes of the empire known as electors. They were, before the Peace of Westphalia (1648), the archbishops of Mainz, Treves, and Cologne, king of Bohemia, count palatine of the Rhine, duke of Saxony, and margrave of Brandenburg.

Rhine, duke of Saxony, and margrave of Bradicious, In theory, any Christian prince was eligible to the imperial dignity, but all the emperors belonged to reigning German houses, except the two contesting claimants: Richard, Earl of Cornwall (son of King John of England), who was elected in 1257 by a part of the electors; and Alfonso of Castile, elected the same time by the rest of the electors. This in-ternational character of the emperor accounts for the of election cherished by Francis I. of France and Henry VIII. of England.

MODERN PERIOD.

In 1519 Charles I. of Spain became emperor under the title of Charles V., and there ensued not merely the struggle with France but the far more terrible religious wars, which closed in 1648 with the Peace of Westphalia. By the terms of this treaty the empire was thoroughly reorganized, but still presented many anomalies. For example, during the eight-eenth century the archduke of Austria was usually emperor. At the same time, as king of Bohemia he was an imperial elector, and inside the empire he was ruler of the Austrian Netherlands (Belgium). Outside the empire he was king of Hungary and duke of Milan. Again, the margrave of Brandenburg was an electoral prince in the empire, while outside of it he was king of Prussia and later duke of Silesia. The duke of Brunswick-Lüneburg was made an imperial elector in 1692, being commonly called the Elector of Hanover; and in 1714 the Elector of Hanover became king of England.

This empire, a political abnormality, at one time about 300 sovereign states, was powerless to resist the onslaught of Napoleon. By the Treaty of Lunéville (1801), the states on the left bank of the Rhine were ceded to France. This dispossessed many princes who were promised compensation elsewhere. At the dictation of Napoleon, in 1803, the process of consolidation was carried still further and the territories of the ecclesiastical states (those ruled by bishops and abbots) and all but six of the free cities were added to the possessions of the more important princes. Napoleon also allowed Austria and Prussia to take over portions of the empire.

In 1805 Austria was crushed at the battle of Aus-In 1805 Austria was crushed at the battle of Austrelitz, and in the following year Napoleon organized the Confederation of the Rhine. This Confederation included practically all the Holy Roman Empire except Austria, Prussia, Brunswick, and Hesse. The Confederation entered into an alliance with France. This was the death blow to the old empire, and Francis II., the last emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, resigned the office of Roman emperor and was thenceforth known by the title of hereditary emperor of Austria, which he had assumed in 1804. Although resigning the title, Austria still hoped to exercise leadership in the German states sisted of 38 sovereign states, including one empire (Austria), five kingdoms, of which Prussia was largest, one electorate, seven grand duchies, and four By the territorial settlement of the Confree cities. gress, Austria lost in German lands and gained in Italy. The question of the future was to be whether a new and stronger union of German states should grow up around Prussia or around Austria as the leading and central power.

An important stage in the development of the German Empire under Prussian leadership was the formation of customs unions among groups of states which established free trade and, consequently, close commercial relations inside the group. The first group, including Prussia and several smaller states, took shape in the years 1819–1830. In 1824 a second customs union was formed by Bavaria and certain of the smaller states. In 1833 members of both these groups united, forming the basis of the Zollverein (customs union), which was fully organized in 1837 and comprised the Prussian group and eight states (among them Bavaria, Saxony, Würtberg), with a total population of 26,000,000. It Württemsignificant and prophetic that Austria was not in this nucleus of the later German Empire.

In 1848 the Liberals of Germany held an assembly at Frankfurt and offered the title of German emperor to Frederick William IV. of Prussia, who declined the honor unless all the princes of Germany should give their assent. In 1862 Count von Bismarck became president of the Prussian ministry, and the process of the unification of Germany began to move more rapidly. In 1866 Prussia proposed a Germanic confederation which should exclude Austria and when the Diet rejected this plan, Bismarck persuaded William I. to proclaim that the old German confederation was dissolved. This brought on war between Austria and Prussia, in which Prussia was overwhelmingly successful. As a result the North German Confederation (Bund) was established, in which Prussia was all-powerful. Although the southern states of Germany were not included, they soon formed customs unions with the new Bund, and after Prussia's successful war with France (1870-71) joined the new empire which was then created.

The stringgle of 1870-71 between the Gaul and the Teuton, in which Prussia took the leading part, brought the Germans together as the machinations of statesmen and years of peace could not have done It was a fitting climax when, on January 18, 1871, in the palace of Versailles, built by Louis XIV., the archenemy of Germany, the German Empire was constituted and King William of Prussia proclaimed German emperor.

From its foundation until his resignation as chancellor in 1890, the history of the German Empire centers around the activity of Bismarck. It was his mind which put in form the unusual federal institutions of the empire and it was his manipulation that gave them their development. As soon as the empire was fairly established, Bismarek was involved in two constitutional conflicts, in neither of which he was successful.

In the new German Empire a small majority was Protestant and the large Catholic population had long looked to Catholic Austria rather than to Protestant Prussia for leadership. In the first elections of the empire the Catholic party, called the Center, won 63 seats. Apparently the Church meant to interfere in politics. This aroused Bismarck, who in-augurated the struggle known as the Kulturkampf. The Reichstag forbade the religious orders to engage in teaching; in 1872 the Jesuits were expelled from Germany, and by the "May Laws" of 1873 to 1875, the Roman Catholic clergy were forbidden to interfere in civil affairs, were required to study their theology at a state university and to pass state examinations; the state took over the power of inspec-tion of all Catholic seminaries, and suppressed the religious orders. Bismarck summed up his policy in the saying: "I shall not go to Canossa." Politically the policy was a failure, for in 1877 the Center grew to 92 votes, the largest fraction in the Reichstag. Convinced that the policy of suppression was useless, Bismarek tried conciliation. The anticlerical legislation was little by little repealed; and the Center, from being the irreconcilable party, became one of the supporters of Bismarek's measures

A second and lasting domestic problem was socialism. The Socialist party, founded by Lassalle in 1848, was broken up; but it reappeared in 1863 in two groups which united in 1875. In its original platform the party demanded the abolition of capitalistic society and the foundation of a socialist state which should control the instruments of production. It also demanded a free state in which there should he universal suffrage for men and women of the age of 20, the secret ballot, free speech, free association, and a free press. The growth of the party was pheand a free press. The growth of the party was phenomenal. In 1871 it cast a popular vote of 142,000 in 1874 it more than doubled; and in 1877 it grew to nearly 500,000. Owing to the artificial distribution in the Reichstag, by which the great cities were un-derrepresented, the Socialists obtained only nine

Bismarek determined to crush the Socialists by a two-fold policy — repression and "inoculation."

By a law of October, 1878, associations, meetings, the suband publications having for their object "version of the social order" were forbidden. officers received large powers of arrest and the right to expel Socialists from the country. If martial law were proclaimed — an easy matter — the ordinary courts ceased to protect the liberties of the Socialists. This law was vigorously applied; over 14,000 multications were appropriately applied; over 14,000 publications were suppressed, 1,500 Socialists were imprisoned, and 900 were banished. The first effect of the law seemed to justify its passage, for in the election of 1881 the Socialist vote decreased by about 190,000; but in 1884 it rose to nearly 500,000, in 1887 to over 760,000, and in 1890 to 1,427,000. Suppression of the Socialists, like that of the Catholies, meaut only a larger number of more active opponents.

Bismarck's policy of inoculation consisted in try-ing to break the force of the movement by improving the condition of the working class. He drafted and secured a comprehensive system of insurance against accident, sickness, old age, and incapacity. He aimed to prevent pauperism by pensions to the dependent. This was virtually a kind of state socialism. The Socialists still refused to support the government. They were democrats, while Bismarck ernment. an absolutist.

Three other features of Bismarck's policy should be mentioned. The first was his system of protective duties. He believed that Germany to be strong tive duties. He believed that Germany to be strong must be rich and prosperous, and, therefore, framed tariffs which assured to the Germans greater control of German markets; thus he encouraged the agrarian party of agricultural Prussia and the industrial party of the rapidly developing manufacturing centers.

The second great state policy was that of foreign alliances. After a period of the Dreikaiserbund, Three Emperors' League (Germany, Russia, and Austria), in 1879 he definitely adopted the policy of allowed library with Austria which provided that if a close alliance with Austria, which provided that if either power were attacked by Russia both countries would cooperate with the whole of their military power and conclude no peace except conjointly. power and conclude no peace except conjointy. In either Germany or Austria should be attacked by any other power, the ally might remain neutral, unless Russia should take part, when both would act together. In 1882 Italy, irritated at the French seizure of Tunis, joined Austria and Germany, thus forming the Triple Alliance which until 1914 was one of the dominating features in European diplomacy.

A third policy of Bismarck's was the acquisition of Long after 1871 he was opposed to colonization or colonial conquests, but energetic merchants began to trade in Africa and the Pacific, and German settlements were made in the tropics. In 1880 the Colonial Society was founded; and in 1884 Bismarek himself adopted a vigorous colonial policy, which after his retirement resulted in the establishment of a colonial empire in Africa and the Pacific. The spirit of German colonization differed from that of England. With little regard for the rights or wel-fare of the natives, the Germans concentrated their attention upon the development of the material resources and the making of the colonies as profitable to Germany as possible. Emperor William I. died March 9, 1888, and was succeeded by his son, Frederick III., who reigned only until June 15. Had Frederick lived, it is sup-posed that more liberal ideas might have been He was succeeded (June 15, 1888) by his son, William II., a young man of twenty-nine years, as Emperor and King of Prussia. The German constitutional system gave to the sovereign of Prussia tremendous power and influence; the federal constitution gave the kingdom of Prussia predominance, and the personality of the ruler was significant. William II. was a man of active mind and fertile imagination, self-confident, ambitious, versatile, and vigorons. He attempted to excel in everything; in war, in music, in art, and in literature; and he concentrated in his own hands the vast political power which William I, had exercised through his chandles with the barries of the second transfer eellor. In 1890 Bismarck was dismissed, and from that time on, although there were seven chancellors, there was but one ruling personality—the emperor.

The reign of William II, is remarkable for the wonderful economic development of Germany The high protective tariff gave German merchants the advantage in the domestic market, and state aids and subsidies helped to build up a vast export and shipping trade. Germany prespered in a material way, and began to rival England in comperce. The colonial empire founded by Bismarck was developed and exploited for the benefit of the German merchants. The army, the strongest in Europe in 1870, became even stronger and was the most perfeetly equipped, drilled, and prepared military force which the world had seen. Not content with posses-sing the strongest land force in the world, the emperor attempted to rival England's naval power, in particular by the law of 1897, which instead of sim-ply providing for the building of a certain number of ships adopted a comprehensive naval program that was designed to be permanent and which was later The prosperity of Germany and her desire for "a place in the sun," taken in connection with this overwhelming military and naval force, made her arrogant in dealing with other states. Thus she joined in the protest which deprived Japan of the fruits of her victory in the war with China, while in China she was the most ruthless in exacting the reparation that resulted in the virtual annexation of Kiaochow. With France in 1906 and again in 1911 relations were strained because of Germany's attitude over French influence in Morocco. Secure in her own strength and in that of her allies, Italy and Anstria, Germany felt able to defy the rest of Europe.

On Bismarck's retirement (1890) Emperor Wil-

On Bismarck's retirement (1890) Emperor William II. refused to renew the oppressive laws; and the Socialists rapidly gained both in popular vote and in representation in the Reichstag. In 1893 they polled 1,800,000 votes and elected 44 members; in 1896 over 2,000,000 votes and elected 57 members; in 1903 the party polled over 3,000,000 votes and gained 79 seats in the Reichstag. In 1912 it received 4,250,000 votes and elected 110 members, even from the Potsdam district, in which the emperor resided. This vote was much greater than the strength of the Socialist party, for it offered the

The Socialist organization instead of opposing all reforms undertaken by the government and attempting at once to establish a socialistic state, cooperated with the government in humanitarian legislation. When the World War broke out, the socialistic majority Socialists would not face the edium of being the only party to oppose a nationalistic war. A small group, however, the minerity Socialists, adhered to their original doctrines and refused to cooperate with the government either in war or peace.

Germany not only prospered in a material way, but in education she was in the lead of other countries. Her schools and universities were considered models. Her cities were the best governed in the world. Much was done to alleviate the condition of the poor and the working class. Her people seemed contented and prosperous. But her government was neither free nor democratic. The state controlled all activities, and by means of skillfully conducted propaganda swayed public opinion as desired. Hence, when Germany supported Austria in the dispute with Serbia and involved all Europe in the World War, the German subjects supported the emperor with little hesitation or objection.

WORLD-WAR PERIOD.

On the declaration of war in 1914 the German military machine functioned perfectly. The troops were mobilized, and the vast preparations made years in advance came into use. The initial victories brought great encouragement to the people. Even when the pressure of the blockade was felt, the victories in Russia and Italy and even in France were used to sustain the spirits of the people. Years of drill and state control had their effect in preventing risings against lack of fuel, food, and clothing. Not until the army in France was driven back and defeated and the military machine was incanable of mashing forward did the revolution come.

Although the emperor changed his chancellors twice between August, 1914, and October, 1918, in the effort to avoid parliamentary crises, there is no evidence that the course of the government was seriously affected by popular sentiment. In 1918, however, Prince Maximilian of Baden became chancellor, with the avowed intention of rehabilitating the government, which had suffered in prestige as the result of the military defeats. Reforms were promised, but it was too late; and on November 9 it was annonneed that the emperor had abdicated. On the same day a popular government was set up under Ebert and the emperor field to Holland.

After several months of disorder, a national assembly was held at Weimar in February, 1919, at which Friedrich Ebert was elected president of the German Republic and a constitution was adopted July 31, 1919. The most humiliating act which the new government had to perform was the ratification of the treaty imposed upon Germany by the Allies on July 9. By this treaty Germany lost Alsace-Lorraine, the use of the mines in the Saar Valley, large belts of eastern Germany which were ceded to Poland, and all her colonial empire. In addition an indefinite war indemnity was imposed, the surrender of much of her mercantile fleet was demanded, her army was reduced to an internal police force and her navy to a fleet of the smallest dimensions.

Organization.

Government. The government of the modern German Empire established in 1871 was federal in form. However, unlike other federal states, unequal powers were given to the component members. The executive authority was invested in an emperor, who was entitled to it as king of Prussia; and also in the Bundesrath, an assembly of instructed delegates representing the states which composed the empire. The Bundesrath was the most typically Germanic institution established by the constitutions. Of the 61 votes in this assembly, Prussia held 17, Bavaria 6, Saxony 4, Württemberg 4, Baden 3, Hesse 3, Alsace-Lorraine 3 (since 1911), Mecklenburg-Schwerin 2, Brunswick 2, and seventeen other states 1 apiece. Through internal arrangements, with three of the smaller states, Prussia controlled their votes.

Under all circumstances, Prussia was able to control enough votes to make a majority. The delegates to the Bundesrath were not chosen by the people, but appointed by the governments of the states, usually the prime minister and other high officials. Thus the emperor, as king of Prussia, appointed the delegates who cast the 17 votes of Prussia according to his instructions. As emperor he also controlled the three votes of Alsace-Lorraine, and as king of Prussia, those of Waldeck and Brunswick. The additional vote to make a majority could always be had from the weak northern states, which were really dependencies of Prussia.

The Bundesrath was the active power in the government, both legislative and executive. It prepared and introduced bills, which were discussed and voted on in the Bundesrath before submission to the Reichstag, and any amendment which the Reichstag made must be ratified by the Bundesrath as final. The executive authority of the Bundesrath consisted in the power to issue ordinances and, in conjunction with the emperor, to declare war, conclude treaties, and punish delinquent states. In addition, with the assent of the emperor, the Bundesrath might dissolve the Reichstag; and, with the emperor, it shared certain appointing powers.

The Reichstag consisted of 397 members, chosen by direct secret ballot from single-member districts which were constituted in 1871. The unprecedented growth of cities and the shifting of the population to industrial centers made the distribution of seats more and more unfair. In the Reichstag, Prussia had 236 members, a number less than she was entitled to by population. Laws were ordinarily initiated in the Bundesrath, where they were framed by the imperial chancellor, and where under the constitution Prussia, besides its normal influence, had a specific veto on any change in legislation concerning the army, navy, or taxes.

The emperor was commander in chief of the army and navy, represented the empire in foreign affairs, and negotiated treaties. As king of Prussia, he instructed the chancellor as to what legislation should be introduced in the Bundesrath and controlled the ottes of Prussia in that body, votes which would prevent the change of the constitution or the alteration of any law concerning the army or navy or taxes. He was thus both constitutionally and actually the most powerful constitutional monarch in the world.

To assist him the imperial chancellor was appointed, who generally was head of the Prussian delegation to the Bundesrath and minister president of Prussia. It was this curious and complicated interlacing of imperial and royal powers which made Bismarck willing to consent to Prussia's apparent underrepresentation in the Reichstag and Bundesrath. It was this, also, that made Prussia and its king the almost absolute arbiter of German affairs.

The constitution of the present German Republic, adented July 31, 1919, while nominally creating a federal state, actually provides for a unitary state The powers which the national government exercise are wider both in legislation and execution than those the former German Empire. The toward centralization is emphasized in the new re-The legislative power is vested in a Reichstag and National Council. The Reichstag is chosen for four years on the basis of universal equal suffrage direct and secret votes, by all men and women over the age of 20, in accordance with the proportional representation, but may be dissolved proportional representation, but may be dissolved proportional representation. The National by the president of the republic. The National Council consists of one delegate from each state and one delegate for every million inhabitants which any state may possess in excess of the population of the No state, however, shall be entitled to more than two fifths of all the members and half of the Prussian delegates must be chosen by the provincial administrations of Prussia.

The president of the republic is elected by the voters for a term of seven years, but may be deposed by a recall vote if requested by the Reichstag. His executive power is exercised by a chancellor and ministers, who must retain the confidence of the Reichstag; thus, a government responsible to the people is at last introduced. Legislation requires the assent of the Reichstag and the National Council, but if the president decrees a law approved by the Reichstag, it may be referred to the people; and if the National Council shall twice refuse to accept a legislative proposal of the Reichstag, the president may refer it to the people; or if the Reichstag rejects the protest of the National Council by a majority of two thirds, the proposal becomes a law without the assent of the National Council. The constitution in great detail emimerates the rights and duties of citizens, their social, religious, and economic life, and provides for education. In many respects it resembles some of the state constitutions in the United States in that it seems to establish a code of laws in addition to a frame of government.

Industry and Labor. Before the war. Germany was both an agricultural and industrial country. In western Germany small holdings were the rule, while in the eastern part, vast estates with tenant farmers were customary. The chief agricultural products, in were customary. The chief agricultural products, in order of yield, were potatees, hay, rye, oats, and wheat, but Germany was forced to import foodstuffs. Forestry was conducted on scientific principles and was of great importance. The mineral products were varied, the most important being coal, lignite, iron ore, and potassic salt. The coal and iron fields in German Lorraine were rich and important, and in 1911 Germany produced over $200,000,000 worth of pig iron. German manufactures include iron and steel, textiles of all sorts, beet sugar, glass, porce-lain, earthenware, optical instruments, dyestuffs, beer, and machinery. Of her experts, in 1913, the important were metals and manufactures thereof, agricultural products, textiles, and machinery. Religion. Under the former empire there was entire liberty of conscience and no imperial state church though both the Catholic and the Protestant clergy were supported by taxation or the states. Under the republic the same liberty exists nor is there a state church. Sixty-one per cent of the population is Protestant and thirty-six per cent Catholic, while one per cent are Jews. In 1905 the Roman Catholics were in the majority in Alsace-Lorraine, Bavaria, Baden, and the Rhine provinces and Polish districts of Prussia; and in four other states they formed more than twenty per cent of the population.

Education. In the former empire, education was compulsory and general throughout the Empire; and in 1911 there were more than 61,000 elementary public schools, with more than 180,000 teachers and more than 10,000,000 pupils. Secondary education was highly organized, severe, and thorough and included technical schools. There were 23 universities, with a total of more than 53,000 students; the oldest was Heidelberg, founded in 13.56

The constitution of the new republic provides for compulsory education in the popular schools for at least eight years, to be followed by continuation schools until the eighteenth year. Instruction, books, and apparatus in all schools are free, and aid is provided for students in poor circumstances. State supervision of private schools is established. The former distinction between schools for the lower classes and the higher classes is abolished.

Defense. As a result of the treaty of 1919, Germany, from being the most militaristic of states, has become one of the weakest military states. Her army is fixed by the treaty at 100,000 and must be recruited on the voluntary basis by enlistment for 12 consecutive years, off.cers serving for 25 years. The activities of the general staff are reduced, military schools are to be suppressed, no reserves are allowed, and the amount of munitions and armaments is limited. The naval force is limited to 6 battleships, 6 light cruisers, 12 destroyers, and 12 torpedo boats; and the personnel of the navy must not exceed 15,000, recruited entirely from volunteers for periods of 25 years for officers and 12 for the men. Germany is allowed to retain a hundred marmed seanlanes and an air force of 1,000 men.

In 1910 the date of the last census, the area of Germany was 208,780 square miles and the population 64,925,993. As a result of the treaty, Germany has lost Alsace-Lorraine on the west and on the east large portions of German Peland, Danzig, and part of southeastern Silesia. It is estimated that the present area (1919) is about 171,910 square miles and the population about 55,086,000.

FORMER GERMAN COLONIAL EMPIRE.

The German colonial empire, before the World War, had an area of 1,023,400 square miles containing an estimated native population of nearly 13,000,000. The white population, however, was only a little over 20,000. This territory was chiefly in Africa, where Germany was an aggressive participant in the partition of the continent. In addition, she held the very valuable naval base at Kiaochow in China and numerous islands in the Pacific.

These colonies were all under practically the same form of government. Each was administered by an imperial commissioner, who in almost every case was assisted by a council. Scant attention was paid to the needs of the natives, and the purpose of the colonies was to develop and expand German trade and to increase the prestige of the empire, with an unfounded expectation that part of the rapidly increasing home population would settle in these tropical possessions.

By the treaty of 1919, Germany ceded all her over-sea possessions to the Allied and Associated Powers to be disposed of as they should see fit. In the sections of the Peace Treaty dealing with the League of Nations, a system of mandatory powers was established. By this system, nations not able to maintain their independence, such as those beThe mandatary would have no right of exploitation but would administer the country for its own benefit A few such mandataries were established in 1920.

Togoland with its dependencies is on the Gulf of Guinea, between the Gold Coast colony and French It has an area of 33,700 square miles, and an estimated colored population (1913) of over a million. In 1918 the European population was 110, of whom one was German. The climate is cool for the tropics and the country is hilly. Tropical products abound, and there is a considerable amount of live stock. The principal exports are cocoa, palm keruels, palm oil, cotton, and rubber which in the year before the World War were valued at more than $2,000,000. By the treaty of 1919 Togo was divided between the British and French, the former obtaining about one third of the territory but no seacoast.

KAMERUN.

Kamerun protectorate lies between British Nigeria and the French Congo. In 1911 it was increased by cessions from the French Congo, and had an area of 191,130 square miles, with a population of 2,540,000, of whom 1,871 were whites. The soil on the coast region is fertile, and numerous valuable tropical vegetable products, particularly cocoa, grow in profusion, and the rubber tree and oil palms flour-Experiments have been made in the cultivation of spices, and there is an active trade in ivory. Val-uable hard woods, notably ebony, are found. The German government maintained four schools, which 868 pupils attended. There is a railroad 149 miles long. By the treaty of 1919, Kamerun passed under the joint administration of Great Britain and France

PROTECTORATE OF SOUTHWEST AFRICA.

German Southwest Africa lies south of Angola (Portuguese West Africa), west of Bechuanaland, and north of the Cape of Good Hope Province. The area is 322,200 square miles and the native population was estimated (1913) at 150,000. The whole south-ern region and much of the east is desert. It was formerly occupied by six native races; the Bushmen, Hottentots, Damaras, Hereros, Ovampos, and Griquas (Bastaards). The Hereros were originally a no-mad and pastoral people, but as a result of the war with Germany were reduced from 100,000 to less than 20,000. The Ovampos, living in the northern part, are the most numerous native race in the protectorate. They are an agricultural people and understand the working of iron.

GERMAN EAST AFRICA.

What was formerly German East Africa is a protectorate on the Indian Ocean, with an area of about 384,180 square miles and a population (1913) of 7,659,898. Although by German law every native born after 1905 was declared free, there were 185,000 serfs under German rule. In 1913 there were 109 government schools, with 6,000 pupils, and schools 8 missionary societies, with over 100,000 pupils.

On the coast grow forests of mangroves, coco palms and other tropical trees. Many plantations of coco palms, coffee, vanilla, tobacco, cacao, rubber, tea, sugar, and cotton have been set out. In 1912 the herds of cattle and sheep numbered over 10,000,000 head. The chief exports are rubber, copra, ivory, coffee, and vegetable fiber. German East Africa was invaded by General Smuts and conquered in 1918. By the treaty of 1919 it was placed under an English mandate and is now known as Tanganyika Territory.

FORMER GERMAN POSSESSION IN ASIA. KIAOCHOW.

Klaochow, in the province of Shantung, China. was seized by Germany in 1897 as a recompense for the lives of two missionaries. By the treaty of 1898 the town, harhor, and district were "leased" to Germany for 99 years, — practically a cession. The area is about 200 square miles and the population 192,000. The German district is surrounded by a "neutral zone," having an area of 2,500 square miles and a population of 1,200,000. The development of the control of the contr ment of coal mines of the interior, the right to build a railroad to them, and the right to extend it to the longing to the Turkish Empire and those in central west in Shantung province, were parts of the agree-Africa, southwest Africa, and the southern Pacific ment. Germany thus acquired a favored and almost unassailable position in the trade of the rich province power under conditions prescribed by the League. of Shantung, with 26,000,000 inhabitants. The exof Shantung, with 26,000,000 inhabitants, ports are straw goods, silk, and coal.

The Japanese government called upon Germany to surrender this protectorate, August 15, 1914, and receiving no reply, declared war. The capital and fortified naval base, Tsingtau, was besieged and captured. November 7, and the control of the protectorate of the protector rate surrendered three days later, since which time it has been administered by the Japanese. By the treaty of 1919 Japan succeeds to Kiaochow and all Germany's "rights and privileges." This so offended the Chinese that they refused to sign the treaty.

FORMER GERMAN POSSESSIONS IN THE PACIFIC.

NEW GUINEA (FORMER GERMAN NEW GUINEA).

German New Guinea included the possessions which Germany formerly occupied in the western Pacific: Kaiser-Wilhelmsland, Bismarck Archipelago, the German Solomon Islands, Caroline Islands, Marshall Islands, Mariana (Ladrone) Islands. ser-Wilhelmsland, Bismarck Archipelago, and the Solomon Islands were occupied by the Australian forces in September, 1914, and by the treaty of 1919 were assigned to the Commonwealth of Australia. By October, 1914, the Japanese had captured the island groups — Caroline, Pelew, Mariana, and Marshall — in the North Pacific and in 1919 the administration of them was assigned to Japan by the treaty.

Kalser-Wilhelmsland was made a German protectorate in 1884. It has an area of 70,000 square miles and lies 2° south of the equator. The native population has been estimated at between 110,000 and 530,000. Tropical fruits grow abundantly, particularly coconuts; and the land is rich in mineral wealth, which is very slightly developed.

Bismarek Archipelago is the name given to several groups of islands east of New Guinea, having an area of approximately 15,570 square miles and a white population of less than 1,000. The products are copra, cotton, coffee, and rubber. The largest island is New Britain, on which is the seat of the government, Rabaul, with a population of 800.

The Solomon Islands, lying southeast of Bismarck Archipelago, were acquired by Germany in 1886. The natives raise tropical products and are skillful fishermen, but there is practically little European trade. The European population numbered 60.

The Caroline, Pelew, and Marlana (or. Ladrone) Islands, with the exception of Guam, which was ceded to the United States, passed from Spain to

The population is mostly of Malay origin and the chief export is copra. Vap is an island in the western subdivision of the Caroline Islands. It was held by Germany at the beginning of the World War. Yap was transferred to Germany by Spain with the rest of the Carolines on June 30, 1899. It was occupied by the Japanese October 21, 1914. It was claimed for the United States during the conference in Paris in 1919, but States during the conference in Paris in 1919, but was not transferred. Its value to the United States would be as a cable and coaling station on the trans pacific route. The area is 79 square miles and the population 7,000.

The Marshall Islands came under German rule 1 1885. They have an area of 150 square miles and population of 15,000. There are extensive plantations of coco palms and the chief export is phosphate.

SAMOA ISLANDS.

THE Samoa Islands, formerly called Navigators Islands, lie in Polynesia, south of the equator. Germany, Great Britain, and the United States all claimed rights in this group; but in 1899 Great Britain ceded her claims to Germany in return for several of the Solomon Islands. By agreement, in 1900, between Germany and the United States, the meridian 171° east of Greenwich was made a delimitation, leaving to Germany all to the west and to the United States all to the east. The area of German Samoa is about 1,000 square miles. The area of German Samoa is about 1,000 square miles. The population (census 1917) was 41,128. Copra and cocoa beans are the principal exports. In addition to the government, the American, English, and French missionaries maintain schools, and have brought the natives into proprint a correspond Collection of the contraction. natives into nominal acceptance of Christianity

At the end of August, 1914, the British occupied German Samoa and the Treaty of Versailles in 1919 gave New Zealand a mandate over the islands.

Historical Outline.

From the conquest of Greece by the Romans in 146 B. c. until the acknowledgment of Greek independence in 1830, Greece existed as a part of the Roman Empire, the Eastern or Byzantine Empire, or the Turkish Empire. Notwithstanding these eighteen centuries of dependence and often cruel oppression, and in spite of frequent invasions and large admixtures of foreign population, the Greek spirit and the Greek language have been preserved. The center of Greek life, however, was long ago transferred to Constantinople, and the Greek influence was exerted not so much at Athens as in Asia Minor and Egypt, and even India, by Greek conquerors, merchants, and traders.

From 1483 to 1830 Greece was an integral part of the Turkish Empire, and like the other Turkish pos-sessions in Europe, suffered from the extortion of the pashas and the misrule of the Turkish officials During this period Greece was frequently raided by Christian fleets. During the 18th century the condition of the Greeks improved. Personal service was commuted into money payments and the tribute of children which the Turks exacted for the Janizaries was allowed to fall into abeyance. erty. March 10, strike caffed off. Spartacides not suppressed until March 13. Acute unrest and disorder reported from all over Germany.

April 7. In Munich a soviel government is proclaimed for Bavaria, which the national government refuses to recognize. Rival communist the civil service and granted special privileges to the Greek clergy. Finally, education improved, new schools and academies were founded, and Greek nationality began to revive.

The Greek struggle for independence began with several insurrections which broke out throughout the country without plan or connection. The real revolution dates from Annunciation Sunday, April 6, 1821, when all the Peloponnesus burst into fiames. The Turks, unaided, were unable to put down the revolution and called in the tributary Egyptians, who committed all manner of atrocities. This aroused Europe, which had begun to take an interest in the revival of Greece; and Great Britain, France, and Russia ordered an immediate armistice key refused to obey, and the battle of Navarino fought October 20, 1827, in which the Turkish and Egyptian ships were destroyed by the British, French, and Russians. In 1830, Greece was de-clared an independent kingdom, but with only half the territory the patriots had fought for. The European powers, moreover, refused to allow Greece to choose her own sovereign and ((1832) designated Prince Otto of Bavaria as king (Otho I.)

Otho began in an arbitrary manner, but in 1843 by a peaceful revolution the people obtained a consti-tution; a national assembly was called in 1844 and a constitutional monarchy was established. Selfgovernment did not bring quiet. Society was in a disturbed condition, and politics kept Athens in a turmoil, while the European powers frequently intervened, often to the detriment of the Greeks. In 1862 Othe was deposed by a revolution, and the crown was offered to Christian William of Sonderburg-Glücksburg, who ascended the throne as George I.

During the reign of George I. (1863-1913) Greece saw material prosperity and development, generally peaceable. Politics often caused local disorders in Athens, and there were frequent changes of the cabinets and accusations of corruption. The significant events were the extension of the boundaries in Epirus and Thessaly (1881), and the long insurrection in Crete which began in 1889. As a part of this Cretan movement, the Greeks declared war against Turkey in 1897, but were disastrously defeated. Prince George, however, was appointed by the powers high commissioner for Crete. In 1910 Venizelos, the Cretan leader, was called to Athens to form a cabinet, and in 1911 a revised constitution was adopted which provided for judicial and administrative reforms and increased the military and naval efficiency.
Through the activities of Venizelos, the Balkan eague, consisting of Bulgaria, Serbia, Montenegro, and Greece, was formed in 1912, and war was de-clared upon Turkey (see Turkey). In this war the Greeks invaded Macedonia and occupied Saloniki and Janina. As a result of the second Balkan War (July, 1913) and the Treaty of Bucharest, Greece gained Doiran, Demir-Hissar, Seres, Drama, and Kavala, as well as Vodena and Florina.

The outbreak of the World War found Greece allied with Serbia but occupying a precarious position. King Constantine, who succeeded at the death of his father, was the brother-in-law of the German emperor and believed that it would be disastrous for Greece to throw her lot in with Serbia. The leading character in Greece, however, was the Cretan patriot, Venizelos, who accomplished the union of Crete with Greece and was the real founder of the Balkan League. Venizelos, as prime minister, with Baikan League. Venizelos, as prime immister, with a strong popular following, commanded the confidence of the Parliament and urged support of Serbia and alliance with Great Britain and France. 1915 (March 6) Venizelos resigned, as a protest against the king's foreign policy, and forced the resignation of his successor, whom the king hoped to find more compliant. The king dissolved parlia-ment, but the election again showed a majority for Venizelos, and he assumed power, only to resign a second time in protest against the policy of the king.

October 5, 1915, the Allied forces occupied Saloniki. Through the connivance of King Constantine, German influence increased, and Venizelos established a provisional government at Saloniki. On June 12, provisional government at Saloniki. On June 12, 1917, King Constantine was forced to abdicate and was succeeded by his second son, Alexander; on July 26 Venizelos reconvened the parliament dissolved in 1915, and Greece entered the war on the side of the Allies.

Organization.

Government. Greece, properly the Kingdom of the Hellenes, is a constitutional monarchy based upon the constitution of 1864, revised in 1911. legislative power is in the Boule, which consists of 184 representatives elected by manhood suffrage for 4 years in the proportion of one to every 16,000 in-This chamber must meet annually for habitants. not less than three months. A Council of State was established in 1911 for the purpose of examining legislative propositions and annulling decisions and acts which may be contrary to law. The executive

The land is largely in the hands of peasant proprietors and is divided iuto small holdings. On the whole agriculture is in a backward state. The most important crop is the currant; after which come olives, figs, and cereals. Greece contains a variety of mineral deposits such as iron, copper, zinc, lead. manganese, aluminium, and antimony, mostly in small quantities.

The general condition of labor in Greece is more prosperons than that of the surrounding regions. The variety of the industrial life and the promotion of education by the government, as well as the natural character of the Greeks, make for a high degree of intelligence. From antiquity the long seacoast and numerous harbors have encouraged commerce; and now, as then, Greek merchants and traders have spread throughout the Mediterranean region, bringing wealth to their country.

Religion. Most of the inhabitants belong to the Greek Orthodox Church, which is declared the state church, though complete toleration and liberty of worship is assured.

Education. Education is compulsory between the ages of 6 and 12, but the law is not well enforced in the country districts. In 1910-11, 3,551 primary schools had 250,000 pupils, and besides these there were 41 high schools, 248 middle schools, and various special schools. There are two universities at Athens.

Defense. Military service is universal and compulsory and few exemptions are granted. The service begins in the 20th year and lasts for 31 years, only three of which are in the active army The annual contingent of recruits is about 25,000 The Greek army was reorganized in 1917, and nine divisions took part in the offensive of September, 1918. Before the World War the Greek navy consisted of three old cruisers, two battleships, purchased from the United States, and one cruiser, purchased from t chased from Japan, together with 13 torpedo-boat destroyers. When the war broke out the Greek navy was in a state of transition and two cruisers were being built in England. In 1917 a British commission was appointed to reorganize the navy The total area of Greece is 41,933 sq.

SMYRNA, OR AIDIN.

AIDIN has for a long time been a name of the southern Turkish province of Asia Minor, to which the name Smyrna is also applied, from the principal city in the province. The country is fruitful and the coast abounds in excellent harbors, which caused the early settlement of such great cities as Smyrna and Ephesus. It was subsequently a part of the Persian Empire, and has passed through the hands of Greeks, Romans, Byzantines, Seljuks and, finally, the Ottoman Turks, who held it for nearly five hundred years.

From ancient times Smyrna has had a predominant Greek population, particularly in the city of Smyrna. During the World War the Turks attempted to extirpate the Greeks, who organized to defend themselves. At the end of active hostilities Greek troops occupied the province, and by the Turkish treaty with the Allies (May 20, 1920) it was provided that the province should be put under the control of the Greek government for a period of five years, after which the people should vote upon their future. Smyrna has therefore practically ceased to be a part of the Turkish Empire and is a dependency of Greece. The area is about 2,600 square miles and the popula-tion in 1911 was estimated at 2,500,000.

1912. Oct. 15. Turco-Italian peace terms leave Italy in occupation of a number of the Ægean islands (Dodecanese) pending certain conditions, which are not fulfilled by Turkey (see ITALY).

HAITI.

Historical Outline.

THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI occupies the western third of the West Indian island sometimes called by the Spanish name Santo Domingo, but more often by its native name of Halti. The island was dis-covered by Columbus in 492 and named Hispaniola. Little Spain; colonization began in 1496, and Haiti developed more rapidly than the other Spanish-American possessions. The desire to exploit the rich soil and gold mines led the Spaniards to establish slavery, and the population rapidly declined. Negro slaves were substituted and became the most numerous element in the population.

In the early part of the 17th century, pirates took possession of a large part of the territory of Haiti. which was ceded to France in 1697 by the Treaty of Ryswick (Rijswijk). As the settlements expanded and became populous, they grew rebellious. When the French Revolution broke out, the Negroes and mulattoes were ten times as numerous as the whites Conflicts arose between negroes and mulattoes, and then came a terrible insurrection. In 1793 the allied British and Spaniards sent a force to Haiti. As a counter measure the French Convention issued in the same year a decree of emancipation for all slaves.

In 1795 the Spanish colony on the island passed to rance. Toussaint L'Ouverture then appeared as France. Toussaint L'Ouverture then appeared as leader of the blacks, expelled the British forces, and made himself dictator of the government, which professed nominal submission to France but in 1801 he demanded independence. In 1802 a French army under Leclerc overthrew the Negroes and captured Toussaint and sent him to France, where he died in captivity. His successor, Dessalines, defeated the French and expelled them in 1803, thus blocking Napoleon's plans for taking over Louisiana.

Dessalines declared himself emperor. When he was assassinated in 1806, Christophe, a full-blooded Negro, succeeded him with the center of his power in the northwest. Pétion, another leader, started a temporary republic in the southwest. Boyer suc-ceeded Pétion and was able to organize the people of both sections of the island into the Republic of Haiti, but after ruling for twenty years he was overthrown. In 1844 the eastern and Spanish-speaking districts, comprising about two thirds of the island, separated from the western part and set up the Doseparated from the western part and set up the Bo-minican Republic. In the western portion, or Haiti proper, anarchy prevailed. Two years later a re-publican constitution was proclaimed under Presi-dent Riché. This did not bring peace or establish order and the history of Haiti continued to be one of civil war, revolt, and anarchy, during which obliga-tions were incurred to the United States and European powers for damages to their citizens

In 1911 a joint note was submitted by the United States, Great Britain, France, Germany, and Italy insisting on prompt settlement of claims. This precipitated a revolution which continued intermit-tently until 1914, when a British cruiser arrived to enforce the overdue claims awarded by arbitration.
The government at Washington thought it time to take action. American marines landed and controlled Cap-Haitien for nearly a month. In July, 1915, a reign of terror was inaugurated by President Guillaume Sam, and Rear Admiral Caperton landed marines at Port-au-Prince; since that time the United States forces have controlled the country.

In 1916 a treaty was signed between Haiti and the United States which provides for the establishment of a receivership over Haitian customs under American control. This administration includes not only the distribution of funds for the payment of foreign debts, but the expenditure of the balance for domestic pur-poses. Thus, through the supervision of the finances of Ilaiti, the United States controls the operations of the government and has established a protectorate.

Organization.

Government. The present constitution, ratified June 12, 1918, provides for a Senate of 15 and a Chamber of Deputies on the basis of one member for each 60,000 inhabitants, chosen for two years by direct popular vote.

Production and Commerce. The industries of Haiti are mainly in tropical products, of which the most important are fruit, coffee, cocoa, and sugar; the cultivation of tobacco is increasing. Haiti also possesses resources of gold, silver, copper, iron, and antimony, and in the last few years concessions have been granted for mining coal, iron, and copper.

Religion. The religion is Roman Catholicism. Education. Public primary education is free, and in 1918 there were 854 primary schools, with 61,000 pupils, 29 secondary schools, one normal School, a school of law, and one of medicine.

Defense. An armed constabulary, both urban and rural, was established in 1916. The officers are drawn from the United States Marine Corps and the force numbers 2,688. The reserve force and old force numbers 2,688. The reserve force and old line regiments amount to about 19,000. The coastguard service is three auxiliary schooners.

The area is about 10,000 square miles and in 1912 the population, almost entirely Negro, was estimated at 2,500,000.

HEJAZ.

THE KINGDOM OF HEJAZ was recognized as an independent state during the World War. It includes the most important portions of Arabia and in it are found the Holy Cities, Mecca and Medina. Ottoman control in the past was recognized chiefly through the payment of an annual subsidy, but in 1916 the Emir Husein assumed the title of the King of Heiaz and threw off Turkish control. Heiaz has an estimated area of about 100,000 square miles and an estimated population of 750,000.

ARABIA.

For ages this part of the world has been known as Arabia, an enormous peninsula of over a million square miles lying between the Red Sea on the west, the Indian Ocean on the south, and the Persian Gulf on the east. Since the keys of the two Holy Cities, Medina and Mecca, were brought to Sultan Selim 1, in 1517, it has been regarded as a tributary of Turkey; but the Turks have never exercised authority except in the provinces of Hejaz and Yemen, which stretch along the Red Sea. In the extreme southwest corner is the British protectorate of Aden and in the southeast corner is the sultanate of Oman in which British political influence is predominant.

The interior of Arabia is a wide semidesert region given over to nomadic tribes, embraced under the comprehensive name of the Bedouins, some of whom, however, have fixed dwellings. The greater part are shepherds and herdsmen whose favorite pastime is the sacking of villages and the robbing of caravans Each tribe, whether nomad or settled, is ruled by its Slavery is a deep-rooted institution, and the sheik. Slavery is a deep rooted in the majority of the slave trade is still carried on. The majority of the Bedouins are orthodox Moslems.

The organized parts of Arabia have been included in the new kingdom of Hejaz.

Mecca and Medina, however, remain the Holy Cities of the Mohammedan faith. Arabia resumes its earlier condition of disorganization and intertribal contests. Except for the holy pilgrimages and the hold retained by its language throughout the Moslem world, the country becomes again politically impotent, a province owing nominal allegiance to the Bagdad or Egyptian caliphate. Mecca and Medina are governed by local shereefs lieutenants of the caliphs, and bound to provide protection for the pilgrims.

Historical Outline.

THE KINGDOM OF HUNGARY owed its foundation to the invasion of the non-Aryan tribe of Magyars. This people, probably akin to the Finns, under the leadership of the seminythical king Arpád, reached the great plain of Hungary at the close of the ninth century and completely overthrew the empire of Magyaria. The Dalacraine Seaths and Creatic in the century and completely overthrew the empire of Moravia. The Bulgarians, Serbs, and Croats in the southern provinces were quickly reduced and a non-European dynasty and kingdom were established between Teutonic Europe, the Turkish Empire, and the Slavic territories to the east. Christianity from the Roman Catholic Church was introduced by Stephen I., who was recognized king of Hungary in the year 1000 by Pope Sylvester II. Immigration from other parts of Europe took place and Hungary became the refuge of thousands of immigrants from central Europe, especially Germans. Other move-ments from the east and south brought in Roumanians and a few Serbs.

From the time of Stephen down to comparatively recent times, little attempt was made to weld the kingdom into a united nation. During his reign the political power was entirely in the hands of the Magyar freemen, who were nobles; and until 1848 the whole burden of taxation was borne by the mass of peasants.

In 1222, during the reign of Andrew II., the "Golden Bull" was promulgated, which has been compared to the Great Charter of England and which served as the first basis for the written constitution of the Magyar kingdom. The purpose of the Golden Bull was to strengthen the crown by uniting with it the interest of the mass of the Magyar nobility, who like the crown were threatened by the great barons. It also confirmed the principle of exemption from taxation of all nobles and their right to refuse military service abroad. The Arpád dynasty came to an end in 1308 and during the four hundred years of its rule, in spite of the terrible Tatar invasion, had founded a Christian state and a national monarchy based on a Western model.

Hungary came under the House of Anjou (1308–

Hungary came under the House of Anjou (1308–1382); and under the rule of Louis the Great the Polish crown was added to that of Hungary. Sigismund (1387–1437) of the House of Luxemburg succeeded Louis the Great. As king of Hungary, Sigismund fought bravely against the Turkish peril and prevented further inroads of the Turks. But on the whole the greatness of the kingdom began to decline. In the fifteenth century the Turks again threatened Hungary, but were defeated by John Hunyadi (Hunyadi János) at Belgrade (1456). Hunyadi, Lass the Diet chose Matthias son of John Hunyadi. 1458 the Diet chose Matthias, son of John Hunyadi, as king. Under his leadership the army was reoras king. As a result of this invasien a portion of Hungary came into the hands of Ferdinand of Austria, which the Austrian sovereign paid tribute to Turkey For the next two centuries Hungary suffered alike under the pressure of the Hapsburgs and the Turkish invasion, which did not end until the Peace of Karlowitz (1699). During the eighteenth century Hungary, united to Austria, was drawn by Austria into the wars of the Spanish Succession Austrian Succession and the Seven Years' War, and finally shared with Austria the shock of the Napoleonic wars.

In the middle of the nineteenth century came a Hungarian national revival and a struggle for autonomy, or independence. The first great leader was Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi, who demanded social referm and aimed to make Hungary a prosper ous modern state. His work, however, was carried on outside; within the Hungarian Diet developed a radical party led by Louis Kossuth and Ferencz (Francis) Deák. By 1840 Kossuth became the leader of the Liberal party and urged a program which demanded taxation of the nobles, control by the Diet of all national expenses, liberty of the press, freedom for public meetings and associations, and autonomy for Hungary

On March 3, 1848, Kessuth in the Hungarian Diet initiated the revolution by a marvelous speech which was spread throughout the empire. In Austria it brought about the fall of Metternich and in Hungary the passage of the famous March Laws. These laws destroyed the old aristocratic political machinery These laws and established a democratic constitution. Feudal service was abolished, religious freedom established, liberty of the arrange of the constitution liberty of the press and trial by jury proclaimed, and the Diet was to be elected, not by the privileged no-bility, but by every Hungarian who possessed property to the amount of $150.

Moreover, the relations between Hungary and the empire were vitally altered, and Hungary became practically independent, having its ewn ministry. not only for domestic business, but for war, finance, and foreign affairs. Hungary and Austria were now united only by the common sovereign. Should the consent of Austria be obtained, Hungary's autonomy would be complete. This consent was given under compulsion on April 10, 1848, and Hungary created a national army and adepted a national flag.

Although Hungary had practically wen independence, the new Austrian emperor, Francis Joseph, was waiting for an opportune time to reassert his power, and took advantage of the racial rivalries. The Revolution of 1848 was carried on by the Magyars, who, although the most numerous single race, formed a minerity of the population. In the summer of 1848 the Serbs, Croatians, and Roumanians demanded from Hungary the same privileges that Hungary had won from Austria. The Hungarians would not consent, and Austria exploited the situa-tion by stirring up the Croatians. In September, 1848, the Serbs and Croatians began a civil war against the Magyars; and Kossuth and the radical party gained control of the Hungarian Diet. was declared against Hungary by Austria in 1849; and, although the Magyars were unsuccessful during the first months of the year, a few victories in April led them to declare for independence and to estabhish a republic with Kossuth as president. Austria appealed to Russia and the Czar willingly responded. Between 100,000 and 200,000 Russian troops poured into Hungary, while the Austrians advanced from the west. The Hungarians fought bravely, but were forced to capitulate at Világos August 13, 1849; and forced to captulate at villagos August 10, 1010, and Hungary's independence was at an end.

For the next ten years Hungary was ruled as a subject prevince of Austria without local self-government. In 1861 Francis Joseph attempted to create some form of constitutional government and one parhament for the entire empire. garians refused to cooperate; they believed that Hungary had always been a separate nation, united to Austria only in the person of the sovereign. They objected to a constitution being "granted" by the Austrian emperor and demanded one founded upon their historic right.

After the war with Prussia a compromise or Ausgleich was established in 1867, which served as the constitution of the Austro-Hungarian Empire until constitution of the Austro-Hungarian Empire untuing November, 1919. (See Austra).

The political history of recent Hungary has turned upon race questions. The Magyars, although the most numerous race, were still in the minority, yet they had held control and attempted to Magyarize they had held control and attempted to Magyarize the other peoples. Only in Croatia, where there was a strong Slavie population, have they allowed the subject nationalities to develop. Here they estab-lished a compromise similar to that which Austria had given them in 1867. Elsewhere the Magyars, with their political experience, dominated the peas-ants of the other nationalities. ants of the other nationalities.

Nevertheless the policy was not successful; even in Croatia there was a demand for larger independence, the Serbs in the south desired to join with Serbia.

Towards the end of the nineteenth century the Magyars, new under the lead of Francis Kossuth, son of Louis Kossuth, demanded a greater inde-pendence in the affairs of the empire. They asked They asked for separate diplomatic representation in foreign affairs and the privilege of framing their ewn tariff Most emphatically did they demand the use of the Magyar language in the Hungarian part of of the Magyar language in the Hungarian part of the imperial army. These demands the emperor, Francis Joseph, denied, and he even threatened to abdicate. He added the threat of introduction of universal suffrage. To this the Magyars were op-posed, inasmuch as universal suffrage would submerge the Magyar minority.

During the World War, in spite of demands from the Liberal party for independence, Hungary re-mained faithful to Austria until November 1, 1918. On that date a revolution broke out and a Hungarian republic was proclaimed. November 11, Emperor Charles abdicated, and the separation between Aus-tria and Hungary was complete. The new Hungarian republic faced great difficulties, shortage of food, and grave social discontent. Moreover, the Roumanians, Serbs, and Czechs advanced into Hungarian territory and occupied the Bánát region, from which came the food supply, and the northern coal mines, upon which industrial life depended. At the beginning of 1919 a Bolshevist outhreak occurred and a Soviet government was established under Bela At first the new government won some success against its enemies but receiving no support from the Allies in the Peace Conference it finally fell and was replaced by a republican form of government. In January, 1920, the Peace Treaty of Neuilly was handed to the Hungarian delegates.

Government. Between 1918 and 1920 Hungary had feur forms of government. Until the ab-dication of the Emperor Charles, Hungary was living under the old historic constitution, which had developed from the Golden Bull of 1222 and was partly written and partly dependent upon tradition. constitution was declared forfeited in 1849 but was restored in 1860, and when Emperor Francis Joseph I. was crowned king of Hungary he swore, in 1867, to maintain the constitution.

The legislative power was vested in a Parliament of two houses. The House of Magnates, composed chiefly of nebles and clergy and ex-officio members, numbered 304. The House of Deputies was elected by the vote of male citizens of 20 years of age who were able to meet the suffrage qualifications. In 1912 the number of voters was 1,221,415, or a fourth of the male population over 20 years of age. by means of this unrepresentative assembly that the Magyar minority succeeded in maintaining its supremacy. In all, the assembly had 453 members, of whom only 40 represented the titular kingdom of Croatia and Slavenia

The executive power was in the hands of the king. wielded by a ministry responsible to Parliament. 1913 there were 13 ministers, the president of the council, the ministry of finance, the ministry of the king's person, the ministry of national defense, the ministry of the interior, the ministry of education and public worship, the ministry of justice, the ministry of industry and commerce, the ministry of agriculture, the minister for Croatia and Slavonia.

From November 2, 1918, to March 22, 1919, a republican form of government was established, with Count Karelyi as prime minister. This republic fell, and a Bolshevist Soviet government was established with a ministry formed by the Workmen's Council of Budapest. This, in turn, gave way to the reëstablishment of the republic.

Industry and Labor. In Hungary the cultivation of the soil was the chief industry and supported two thirds of the population, more than 42% total area being classifled as arable land and about 27% as forest land, nearly half of which belonged 21% as forest land, nearly han of which belonged to the state. On the establishment of the republic, measures were taken to break up the vast estates and distribute the land to the peasants. Before the World War the chief agricultural crops were corn. The manufactures of Hungary gave employment, before the war, to about a twelfth of the population, and included the manufacture of clothing and foodstuffs, iron and metal work, beer and ale, sugar, and stains, iron and metal work, beer and acc, sugar, and tobacco products. The chief experts, in the year before the war, were cereals, live stock, and sugar.

Religion. There was complete religious toleration and equality of both sexes before the law. A

Education Education in Hungary was con ducted by means of infant schools, elementary and repetition schools, preparatory schools for teachers, universities, and special schools. Attendance at school was compulsory for children between the ages of 6 and 12 and repetition courses for children from 12 to 15 years; while children between 3 and 6, unless otherwise provided for, might be sent to infant schools. In spite of this elaborate system, in 1910 schools. In spite of this elaborate system, in 1910 over 9,000,000 out of a population of 21,000,000 were unable to read and write. Five universities were maintained by the state, of which the largest was the University of Budapest, with 437 professors and about 5,400 students.

Defense. Before the separation of Austria and Hungary, compulsory military service was required from the 19th to the 42nd year, and Hungary confrom the 19th to the 42nd year, and Hungary contributed her share to the common army. In addition there was the Hungarian reserve (Honrédség), numbering about 36,000, who served for two years with the colors. After ten years' further service in the Honrédség, service in the Landsturm (Népfölkelés), or territorial army, was required until the 42nd birthday. With the establishment of the republicacit large. #### ICELAND.

THE important island in the north Atlantic Ocean known as Iceland belongs properly to the Western Hemisphere. It is four times as far from the Nor-wegian coast as from Greenland. Being of a volcanic origin, the coast is irregular and the interior is thrust up into jagged mountains. The island is noted for its climatic and other peculiar features — lava beds and extinct craters and geysers

The great importance of Iceland as a country lies in the old Norse stock here displayed in its purest and best development. The language and the spirit of the race are expressed in an interesting literature. At a time when America was unknown, poets and

Poems and that peculiar form of the epic called the aga abounded before there was any extensive English literature.

The sailors of this stock were the most adventurous of any in the Middle Ages. Only the Italians and Portuguese and Dutch navigators of a later age rivaled the Norse sea kings in their goings forth and

Jeeland was colonized by Norse adventurers about the middle of the ninth century. The first permanent settlement is attributed to Ingosf the Norwegian, who chose exile rather than the acceptance of the Christian religion, and organized a government about the year 930. An assembly of the pagan chiefs founded the Althing in the plain of Thingvalla. The government was representative and democratic. There was a national parliament composed of the chiefs, and a president called the Lagmadur.

In the year 1000 Christianity was adopted by the Althing as the religion of the republic. The civil life of the people became active, and political excitement ran to party divisions. By taking advantage of these divisions the Norwegians succeeded in obtaining the sovereignty of the country. In the latter half of the twelfth century, the Black Death ravaged Iceland and a considerable period elapsed before the people recovered their spirits.

A new disaster came when the Danes (1380) extended their sway over Iceland. This fatal blow at national independence seemed to paralyze the spirit of the people. For a long time Iceland remained a scarcely discoverable spot in the history of Europe. The publication of the Icelandic and Norwegian manuscripts and the explication of the sagas by the antiquaries of Denmark and Sweden revived the interest, first of scholars and then of the whole world, in the literature and history of the Norse countries

In 1874 the millennial anniversary of Iceland was celebrated with as much éclat as the whole popula-tion could give to the occasion. The king of Denmark visited the island in person, and was received with enthusiasm.

The government of Iceland as a dependency of Denmark ceased under the Act of Union of November 30, 1918, under which the island is now practically an independent state.

Historical Outline.

OF all nations of Europe, Italy has been the most transformed by the passage from ancient to modern times. Italy was the seat of the Reman Empire. When that empire was divided, the western part was submerged by barbarian invasions, and Teutonic principalities were founded throughout the peninsula. During the Middle Ages there grew up the free cities which developed into states governed by a semirepublican élite or by commercial guilds. Political unity was impossible, but the rivalries of these states enlarged the sense of individual power which made Italy the home of the Renaissance. Throughout, the pepe, as the head of the universal church, was the spiritual leader and also a political ruler of the territory called the States of the Church. Italy was an object of contention and a battlefield for Spain, France, and Germany.

Down to the middle of the 17th century no one considerable state existed within the limits of Italy, except Venice, which had fought for and still possessed mainlands and islands on and beyond the Adriatic. Milan, Florence, Genoa, and Pisa, and some smaller cities, kept up a tradition of independence without the reality. Rome was the traditional center of the peninsula but had little governmental power. Naples was a kingdom under a foreign line of sovereigns. Italy had become what Metternich later dubbed it:—"a geographical expression." later dubbed it: — a geographical expression. Even the so-called Italian states — Tuscany, Parma, Modena, and the rest — were pawns in European politics, several of them practically Austrian, bought, sold, traded, divided, inherited, given away. The traditions and prestige of Rome were the only forces within Italy that were regarded outside.

Francis I. of France invaded Italy in 1515.

story-tellers and historians flourished in Iceland. diers of Charles V. sacked Rome in 1527. Swiss came down from the north; Piedmont was controlled by the French for a time, under Louis XIV. Venice, after the discovery of the all-water route to the Indies, lost her ascendancy in the Mediterranean countries. As a result of the Treaty of Utrecht (1713), Austria received Naples and Sardinia. Between 1731 and t737 Tuscany and the posessions of the Medici passed to Francis of Lerraine, the husband of Maria Theresa; and in 1748 there was a general partition of Italy: Austria retained Milan and Tuscany; Don Philip, brother of Charles III. of Spain, held Parma and Piacenza; Charles III. was confirmed in the kingdom of the Two Sicdies; Modena went under the protection of the French; the ancient house of Savey in the north assumed royalty in 1720; and this kingdem of Piedmont was the only genuinely Italian state, except the republics of Venice and Genoa, which remained nominally independent.

During the French Revolution the French invaded

During the French Revolution the French unvaled Piedmont and the Austrian pessessions, swept down the peninsula (1804), captured the pope, and occupied Naples. In 1804 Emperor Napeleon redistributed Italy. Part was annexed directly to the French Empire; another part was erected into the kingdom of Italy, with himself as king and his stepson, Eugène de Beaulharnais, as viceroy. The remindered processing the the kingdom of Naples under mainder was made into the kingdom of Naples under Napoleon's brother, Joseph, and alterwards under his hyther-in-law, Murat. The papacy was recegnized by the Concordat of 1801. Venice was dismembered. The supremacy of the French made the later Italian unity possible, in that it created three governments instead of a dezen states. Feudalism was abolished, political barriers were thrown down, commercial intercourse was made more free, enlightened laws were imposed, and industry was stimulated.

The collapse of Napoleon's empire left Italy again confusion. The Congress of Vienna (1815) undid in cenfusion. The Congress of Vienna (1815) undid most of the work of the French and created ten states, nene large enough to be a danger. To Austria were given as provinces Lombardy and Venice; Austrian princes ruled in three other states, making Austria the controlling power in the north. In the south Ferdinand, king of Naples, was allied with Austria. The only independent powers left on the map were the States of the Church and the little kingdom of Piedmont with the Island to the south; the combined territory was called the kingdom of Sardinia. Yet in this tough and vigorous state, which included the great port of Genea, was preserved a national spirit which made it the nucleus of a united Italy.

Within five years of the Congress of Vienna, Milan and Naples were both in revolt, but Austria, as the agent of the Holy Alliance, suppressed the rising in Naples. Similar stirrings in 1830 were put down; Austria's power seemed invincible. The only hope was in Piedmont, which made war en Austria. In 1849 King Charles Albert was defeated, abdicated, and was succeeded by his son, Vietor Emmanuel II. In 1853 Cayour became prime minister and began to prove himself the consummate statesman of Italy. He set out to bring about the unification of Italy. Piedmont received a constitution: Cayour labored to strengthen its industrial and economic condition so that it might be fit to play its part. With magnifi-cent audacity Sardinia joined France and England in declaring war upon Russia in 1855. As a result Piedmont was given a place at the Congress of Paris in 1856 and won the sympathy of Emperor Napoleon III. of France

In 1859 Caveur secured the powerful alliance of France for the price of Nice and a strip of Savoy. Austria was provoked to declare war upon Piedment, and Napoleon came to its aid. The allies ment, and Napoleon came to its add. The ames were successful and won the battles of Magenta and Solferino. Then Napoleon weakened and, to the wrath of Cavour, refused to carry out the Iull pro-gram. The hasty peace of Villafranca transferred Lombardy with Milan to Piedmont; but Austria was without the support of Cavour, led the Legion of the Thousand which overthrew the Bourbens in Sicily and Naples. The people of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies voted to join themselves to Sardinia (Pied-In 1866, Italy allied with Prussia in the war against Austria and although the Italians were deagainst Austria and atthough the Italians were de-leated by land and sea, Austria was compelled to liberate Venice. Thus Italy was at last united, ex-cept for Rome, which would have gone into the combination but for a garrison of French troops. In 1870, during the Franco-Prussian War, Rome was occupied by Italian troops and by popular vote joined Italy. It at once became the Italian capital. joined Italy. It at once became the Italian capital. The entlre peninsula thenceforward fermed a united and independent kingdem under Victor Emmanuel and his successors Nevertheless, Italy was still a small and weak The pope refused to accept the loss of his power. temperalities and to come to living terms with the Italian government. As the "Prisoner of the Vati-Italian gevernment. As the "Prisoner of the Vatican" he might still furnish a cause for intervention by one of the great Roman Gatholic powers. The Italians, however, recalled the glories of the past. They had restored the center of the old Roman Empire and now looked forward to occupying its possessions in the Mediterranean. Tunis was the national ambition; and the French seizure of Tunis in 1881 gave a shock to the friendship and gratitude of the Italian people. Hence, in 1882, Italy joined the alliance already formed between Austria and Germany — the famous Triple Alliance which dominated Europe in most crises until 1914. The protection offered by this alliance had its price: if Italy claimed the prerogatives of a great power, she must organize a military and naval program on a large The result was heavy expenditure and growing debt.

Italy also embarked on colonial expansion. 1885 she seized the port of Massaua on the Red Sea and set up the colony of Eritrea in East Africa and a and set up the colony of Efficient Basis Africa and protectorate of Somaliland. The colonies proved valueless, and led to war with Abyssinia and a disastrons defeat at Adowa (1896). In 1912 Italy went to war with Turkey for the possession of Tripoli; as a part of the hostilities, Italy occupied the Dodecanese, twelve islands in the Ægean Sea which were coveted by Greece, and which Italy agreed to surrender to Greece. Peace in 1913 confirmed these losses of Turkey. In 1917 Italy occupied Albania and set up a government at Durazzo; and in 1918-19 occupied parts of Dalmatia and Fiume, and still retained the Dodecanese

At the outbreak of the World War Italy remained neutral, standing on her rights in holding that she was obliged to aid her allies only in a defensive war. Negotiations took place with both sides, Austria offering considerable territory. The decision was Negotiations took place with both sides, Austria offering considerable territory. The decision was made to adhere to the Entente on the basis of the promise of Adriatic territory made in the secret Treaty of London of April 26, 1915. On May 4, 1915, she denounced the Triple Alliance, and on May 23 she joined the other powers and declared war against Austria and later (August 21) against Turkey and (October 19) against Bulgaria.

During the war, after some defeats, Italy won a great advantage in 1917 and almost reached Trieste; but on October 24 the Germans and Austrians began a formidable offensive and drove the Italians back to Not until October in 1918 could Italy, the Piave. with the aid of the Allies, make headway. Then, in a victorious campaign of about a week, 400,000 Austrian prisoners were taken and on November 4 Austria-Hungary accepted an armistice dictated by the Italians. As a result of the war Italy "redeemed" Italian territory by adding a region inhabited by Italian-speaking people and beyond that by pushing the political boundaries to the main divide of the Alps. These successes encouraged a hope for further advances, for the possession, in short, of all the rest of the eastern Adriatic coast from Trieste to southern Albania.

Government. The constitution of Italy is an expansion of the charter granted by Charles Albert, king of Sardinia (Piedmont), in IS48. The execupower is vested in the king, but may be exercised only through ministers who are responsible to a parliament of two chambers. The Senate is composed of adult princes of the royal house and of an unlimited number of senators, nominated by the king for life. They must be 40 years of age, must have filled a high office or have acquired fame for the benefit of the nation, and must pay taxes of $600 a year. 1917 there were 376 senators and seven members of the royal family. The Camera de' Deputati is chosen by universal manhood suffrage, but men less than 21 who have performed military service during the World War may also vote. The number of deputies is 508, or one for every 71,000. The duration of Parliament is five years and it must meet annually.

Under the parliamentary system the king has the power to dissolve the Chamber of Deputies but is compelled to order new elections and convoke a new meeting within four months. Politics in Italy have been much affected by individuals and by combinations rather than by genuine differences of political opinion. Two difficulties have stood in the way of real popular government. The first is the influence of a small group of irreconcilables, the "Catholic group who long abstained from participation in the national life and denied the right of the Italian gov-ernment to control them. The second is the rapid growth of the Socialists, who are numerous and well organized.

Industry and Labor. From time immemorial, Italy has been one of the fertile regions of the earth. Only 7.9% of the whole land is waste land, while 48.8% is tilled, 28.1% is in pasture, and 5.8% is devoted to vineyards and orchards. Land is held on one or another of three tenures: (1) Peasant propries the propries which is west commenced in Pietroschia, which is west commenced in Pietroschia, and Lie torship, which is most common in Piedmont and Liguria, although found in many other parts of Italy; (2) Partnership holdings, by which the peasant cultivates the land on shares, a system found in Tuscany, the Marches, and Umbria; (3) Rent, which exists in Lombardy and Venetia. Throughout Italy the land is generally divided into small holdings.

produced in 1918 were wheat, corn, potatoes, sugar beets, oats, rice, and beans, while olive oil and wine were produced in large quantities. The silk culture is also important and in 1918 the silk cocoon crop amounted to more than 29,000,000 kilos. The refining of sugar is also becoming increasingly important, having grown from four sugar factories in 1899 to 34 in 1918, with an output sixteen times greater. The products of the forests are also important.

Many valuable minerals are found in Italy more important according to value of product being mineral fuel, sulphur ore, iron, zinc, mercury, lead, boric acid, and the output from the quarries of building and decorative stone. Italy, however, lacks coal and iron in paying quantities.

The birth rate of Italy is higher than that of any other country in Europe, and this has led to a condition in which not enough food is raised to support the population, which in less than fifty years in-creased by two fifths. The insufficiency of home-grown food proved a great drawback during the World War. Emigration has helped to readjust the balance; between 1876 and 1905 over 8,000,000 persons emigrated; but the hope of Italy was in becoming an industrial nation, so as to give employment at home and thus check emigration. Therefore Italy began to develop industries and German capital hastened the process. The industrial expansion proceeded so far that by 1908 emigration practically ceased except from southern Italy and Sicily. In 1911, 243,926 industrial establishments were enumerated which employed over 2,000,000 persons. The chief exports of Italian manufacture are raw cotton and silk manufactures, and wines

Religion. The state religion of Italy is the Roman Catholic, but freedom of worship is granted to all denominations, nineteen twentieths of the peo-ple professing to be Roman Catholics. In 1855 a law was passed providing for the suppression of religious corporations, which was extended in 1873.

The most difficult question which Italy has faced is the relation of the kingdom to the papacy. Since Italian unity was accomplished by the overthrow of States, the pope regards the king and his government as a usurper in Rome. Although the government treated the pope with generosity and courtesy, granting him a quarter of Rome to be entirely under his control and an annual pension of over 3,000,000 francs, he still considers himself the "Prisoner of the Vatican" and refuses to leave its precincts and thus subject himself to the sovereignty of a "robher king." In the early years of the kingdom, moreover, the pope forbade all devont Catholics to take any part in the political life of the state, thereby As time has creating the class of irreconcilables. gone on some of the bitterness has disappeared and most Catholics to-day do not feel themselves debarred from voting or from political life.

Education. At the formation of the kingdom, the most pressing problem was that of education In Piedmont and Lombardy, which were the most advanced sections, about a third of the men and more than one half of the women were illiterate, while in Naples and Sicily the number of illiterates while in Naples and Sirily the humber of interacts exceeded 90%. In 1877 a compulsory educational law was passed, but because of the expense was not very thoroughly enforced. At present the state regulates public instruction, which is supported either entirely by the state or in conjunction with the towns and provinces. Public schools are of every grade, and every teacher must have the quali-fications required by law. Four types of schools are maintained by the kingdom: (1) Elementary schools, of lower grades with compulsory attendance; every commune must have at least one for boys and one for girls. Higher grade elementary schools are reormal and secondary schools, and attendance is compulsory to the age of twelve; (2) Secondary classical schools, which provide instruction leading to the universities; (3) Secondary instruction in technical subjects, provided by special schools; (4) Higher education, met by twenty-one public universities, the oldest of which is the University of Bologna, founded in 1200, and the largest, that of Naples which has over 6,300 students, while the University of Rome has 4,100, Padua 2900, Bologna 2,600, Turin 2,400, Palermo 2,100. In the elementary and secondary schools there are over 4,000,000 pupils. The effect of this system of education is remarkable. In 1911 illiteracy was highest in Ca-labria (69.6%) and lowest in Piedmont (11%); certain districts reported that no young man or woman twenty years of age was unable to read and write.

Defense. Italy has an extensive seacoast, measuring about 2,000 miles, exclusive of the Italian islands. The land frontier bordering on France is 300 miles in extent; on Switzerland, 418; on Austria and Jugo-Slavia, 566; and on San Marino, 25. The routes into Italy from central Europe on the north are easily defended. The Alps are a sufficient bar-rier except for a few passes, mostly fortified. The rier except for a few passes, mostly fortified. The boundary to the eastward between Jugo-Slavia and Italy is more open. The new boundary places Italy

The chief agricultural crops in order of quantity on the summit ridge of the high Alps. The Italian scaboard at all accessible points was well fortified under the conditions of warfare down to 1914 as were the islands and the Strait of Messina

The beginning at the age of 20. beginning at the age of 20. The young men of each annual contingent are divided into three classes; the first being drawn for the permanent army, the second for the permanent army "with unlimited leave," and the third of those exempted from military service, but assigned to the territorial militia. The term of service in the ranks of the permanent army is two years which is followed by eight years' service in the reserve, four years in the mobile militia, and seven years in the territorial militia.

The Carabinieri, or military police force, are selected from the army and serve for three years: after which they are transferred for four years' service in the reserve of the Carabinieri and then to the territorial militia. The normal strength of the Italian field army is about 400,000 men, of the mobile militia, 326,000. From 1915 to November, 1918, over 5,600,000 Italians mobilized of whom 507,-000 were killed, and 962,000 wounded. The Italian navy (1920) consists of six dreadnoughts and six predreadnoughts and five armored cruisers, besides monitors, submarines, and destroyers. Before the opening of the war, Italy was building four superdreadnoughts, but with her entrance into the war, work was discontinued on these ships.

Area and Population. The area of Italy is 110,632 square miles and the estimated population in 1915 was 36,120,118. The density of tion in 1915 was 326.5 to the square mile. The density of the populamated that the new territory gained by Italy from Austria by the Treaty of Saint-Germain will add about 12,500 square miles to the area and 1,900,000 to the population.

ITALIAN DEPENDENCIES.

The colony of Eritrea on the coast of the Red ea has an area of about 45,000 square miles and a population, largely nomadic, estimated at 450,000 The tropical climate and the scarcity of water make agriculture without irrigation impossible. Pasturage, however, is abundant. Camels, oxen, sheep, and goats are common and the produce supplies the local trade. Pearl fisheries are carried on and a promising trade in palm nuts is being developed. There are 74 miles of railroad, a telegraph line of 514 miles, and 863 miles of telephone lines.

Italian Somaliland. The colony and protectorates of Italian Somaliland extend along the eastern coast of Africa from British Somaliland southward to the Juba River and comprise 139,430 square miles with a population of about 650,000. The principal occupation of the people is cattle raising and agriculture. The exports, which are chiefly agricultural, amounted to more than 6,000,000 lire (1918).

Tripolitania and Cyrenaica (together called Libya or Libla Italiana). These colonies formed out of Turkish Tripoli were acquired by Italy as the result of the war with Turkey in 1912. The area of Libya is estimated at 406,000 square miles and the population from 523,000 to I,000,000 and even higher. Tripolitania is divided into four zones: (I) along the sea, covered with palms, olives, lemon and fruit trees; (2) in the highlands, where olive groves, palm and fig trees flourish, and cereals and rich grasses are raised; (3) oases which are rich in palms; (4) a region covered with palms, figs, vines, and almonds.

In Cyrenaica olives and cypresses are common, pasturage is abundant, and cattle can be bred on a large scale. There is considerable caravan trade between Tripoli and central Sudan, an important article of which is ostrich feathers to the value of $350,000 a year. Sponge fisheries were started in 1885 and are now very profitable.

JAPAN.

Historical Outline.

THE JAPANESE EMPIRE occupies the numerous islands which lie off the coast of Asia between the twentieth and fiftieth degrees of latitude. There are five principal islands in this group, nearly 500 im portant ones, and about 3000 others. The Pacific coast line of these islands is indented with numerous harbors, and to the west the ocean bottom descends to its greatest known depth. It is probable that at this point there is a subterranean volcano, which causes the frequent earthquakes that visit Japan. The eastern coast of the islands is more regular, and the Japan Sea, which separates the islands from Korea and China, is comparatively shallow. A mountain range runs north and sonth throughout all the islands; the most famous peak is Fuji (12,440 ft.). In the islands the summers are hot and humid.

though short, and the winters long, cold, and clear.

The original people of Japan were the Ainus, of whom a few thousands still exist. They were probable. ably driven northward by the Manehu-Koreans and the Malays, and in some ways suggest a closer affinity with Europeans than with the other types. modern population of Japan is the result of a fusion of three stocks; the Manchu-Korean type, the Mongol type, and the Malay type. The fusion of these races has gone on for so many centuries that at present, although different origins may be recognized, the population of Japan is singularly homogeneous

Japanese chronicles trace the history of Japan from 660 B. c. when the first mikado, Jimmu Tenno ascended the throne. It is better to classify the period between 660 B, c, and 500 A, D, as the prehistoric period. In 552 Buddhism was introduced into Japan Irom Korea and China. This meant not simply the introduction of a religion, but the bringing of the Japanese into contact with Chinese civilization and culture and the accelerating of immigration from China and Korea

Probably in the sixth or seventh century the be-ginnings of the shogunate were established. This was the result of social and political forces which must have been working for centuries, and which produced a system somewhat similar to the feudal system of western Europe. It was associated with several changes: (1) The growth of a numerous court nobility, who, by intermarriage with the family of the mikado, claimed divine descent. This class gradually absorbed all the civil offices, but became enervated, and, although retaining titular authority, lost the actual power. The mikado himself, though treated with great respect and reverence, was removed from the scene of actual government and existed simply as a puppet in the hands of the military class. (2) The daimio, or feudal lords, were heads of daimio clans which oppressed or contended with each other, like the similar class in Europe.
(3) The military class, or samurai, were supported by the rations delivered to them by their chiefs. sole occupation was war. They were the only mid-dle class, had the privilege of wearing the sword, and considered themselves the guardians of the country's welfare. They felt contempt for money and gain, insisted on the strictest code of honor, and developed stoical endurance and indifference to pain and suffer ing. (4) The shoguns, as the generals were called, were great daimios who took possession of power, were great adamies who took possession of powers, and gradually made the title and the office hereditary in a single family. They were mayors of the palace. In 1603 Iyeyasu, the founder of the Tokugawa dynasty, succeeded to the office of shogun, and the power remained in that family until the revolution of 1868

The famous policy of isolation was not a traditional matter. Until about 1600 Japan enjoyed in-tercourse with Korea and China. Iyeyasu rigidly excluded foreigners and forbade native Japanese to emigrate, because he believed that the missionaries and Christian converts were opposed to his government. Under the edicts of the two and a half cen-turies thereafter all trade with Europeans was in the hands of the Dntch, who maintained a post at Naga saki, where they were practically prisoners. The Japanese continued to develop their native art and industries. Untiring industry, uncomplaining pa-tience, scrupulous attention to minute details, and strict obedience to authority were their chief characteristies

NINETEENTH-CENTURY PERIOD.

The awakening of Japan was probably due to the success of the Europeans in breaking Into China. It came about in 1853, when Commodore Perry appeared in Tokyo Bay and proposed a treaty of amity and commerce between the two nations. The Japanese leared armed iovasion and granted their first treaty with the West (1854).

Treaties followed with Great Britain, Russia, France, and Holland and foreign influence began to be felt in all directions. Between 1867 and 1871 abolished and a centralized authority set up. national government slowly developed into a system which, if not democratic, at least brought about representative government.

The subsequent history of Japan reaches out in three main directions: (1) the enthnsiastic adoption of Western ideas and culture; (2) the development of a modern government; (3) the expansion of the foreign relations of the empire. Nothing could be more remarkable than the enthusiasm with which Japaa set out to modernize herself. The entire nation went to school. The leaders of the state called from European nations and America experts in different Thus, Englishmen constructed the railways and trained the workers on them; Frenchmen re-Iramed the laws and at first trained the army Americans superintended educational affairs, the postal service, and agriculture; Germans codified the commercial methods, and ultimately took over the military training; while Italians were engaged to teach painting and sculpture. The Japanese showed their remarkable liberalism and eclectic instinct in choosing what was needed for their condition without doing violence to their own traditions and conventions; and within one short generation proved that a nation of Asiatic culture might adjust itself to progressive Western ideas.

The overthrow of the shogunate left the mikado in theory absolute. His power, however, was shared by an appointed ministry, the geuro, an unofficial council of seven heads of great families. In this ministry developed a liberal group who advocated the adoption of representative government and the establishment of the parliamentary system. Tests were made in local affairs, and assemblies were called in the various cities and provinces of representatives chosen by the people. In 1889 the Imperial Constitution, the work of Prince Ito, was promulgated; it established a Diet, together with a cabinet. This cabinet, however, is not responsible to the Diet, but is appointed and removed at the sole pleasure of the mikado; although pressure from the Diet often canses was about 30,000,000, but has increased rapidly. Between 1899 and 1907 the population increased 11.6 per cent, while the lood-producing area increased by only 4.4 per cent. Thus the question of the support of a dense and rapidly increasing population was a vital one. Moreover, Japan does not possess all the raw materials necessary for modern industry; and in the desire to obtain an outlet for her population, a market for her manufactures, and a source of raw materials she has acquired territory and fields of influence at the expense of her neighbors.

In the early years of the restored empire, Japan was involved in disputes with Russia concerning the island of Sakhalin, which was awarded to Russia in 1875. Japan came into collision with China con-cerning Formosa and the Riukiu (Okinawa) Islands, which were annexed in 1895 after victorious war.

The first serious foreign complication, however, came over Korea. From the sixteenth century, when Japan had overrun the Korean peninsula, it had been the custom for the Koreans to send congratulatory presents to each shogun on his accession. This custom was discontinued on the overthrow of the shognnate, much to the displeasure of Japan. Io 1875 Japan and Korea were nearly involved in war, and Japan, by threatening a naval demonstration, extorted a favorable treaty with Korea (1876), by which three ports were opened to foreign trade, while the independence of Korea was recognized. It was China's policy, however, to surround herself with states which were nominally independent, but actually vassal states, to serve as buffers against foreign aggression. Korea was one of these, and China resented the acknowledgment that Korea was independent. The government of Korea was weak, inefficient, and corrupt, and China had oftentimes dispatched military forces to support it. Japan now claimed the same privilege and dispatched troops to support the reform movement.

The War with China in 1894 was a series of triumphs for Japan. In the first pitched battle at Pingyang (September 16, 1894) the Chinese, armed with Krapp guns and repeating rifles, were driven from their fortified positions with a loss of 6,000 men. Next day a detachment of fourteen warships and six torpedo hoats of the Chinese navy was encountered by eleven small Japanese men-of-war off the Yaln River. The Japanese sank four of the Chinese vessels and drove the rest into refuge. The sea route was now open and Japan captured the fortified naval stations at Talien (Dairen), Port Arthur, and Welhaiwei. In this war, although the Japanese had 120,000 men engaged, only a thousand were killed and less than five thousand were wounded.

had its origin in a group of young men and which placed in power the Mikado Mutsuhito. As the movement developed, the whole Ieudal system was Pending the payment of this indemnity, Japan occupied Weihaiwei, and four new ports were opened to foreign trade.

Russia, Germany, and France resented Japan's success. A joint note was presented recommending that the territories given to Japan on the mainland should not be permanently occupied, as such a pro-ceeding would be detrimental to peace. Although Although couched in diplomatic terms, the powers gave every indication that they were prepared to enforce their recommendation by arms. Japan was in no condi-tion to resist, and on the day of the publication of the treaty an imperial rescript was published in which the mikado announced that he had yielded to the advice of the three powers.

The next foreign war in which Japan was involved was also with China, for the relief of the legations at the time of the Boxer Rebellion (1900). Japan some-what unwillingly engaged in this expedition upon the request of the European powers and the United States. The conduct of her officers and troops won much praise and gave her a high military reputation.

In 1904 Japan came into inevitable collision with Russia's Asiatic empire lacked an ice-free port and convenient access to the Pacific. In 1898 Russia acquired Port Arthur and gained special privileges in Manchuria, but after the Boxer Rebelprivileges in Manchuria, but after the Boxer Kebel-lion had made a point of withdrawing Irom Man-churia. In 1903 she attempted to gain a foothold in Korea so as to flank the access of China to the sea, precisely what had been prohibited to Japan. But whereas Russia was only indirectly opposed to Japanese expansion, Japan was vitally interested in the bar to expansion in Korea. Moreover, Japan had thousands of settlers in Korea, had invested in After five the railways, and had developed a trade. months of fruitless negotiation, Japan declared war (February 10, 1904).

On sea and land Japan had nnexpected success. In the first operations eight Russian cruisers were disabled. Port Arthur, after a siege lasting from May until January 1, 1905, was taken. The Russian Iorces were driven back in southern Manchuria and defeated in several pitched battles. ruary 20, 1905, to March 15 raged the battle of Mukden, the greatest in history up to that time. May 27 and 28, 1905, the Russian Pacific fleet was annihilated off Tsushima in the strait between Korea and Japan. The Russians were cheeked and blocked. Both parties became exhausted; Japan hinted to President Roosevelt a willingness to negotiate. Rnssia was ready to meet halfway in the consideration of peace terms under the auspices of the United States. A peace conference was held at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, as a result of which a treaty was ratifled which recognized Japan's preponderant influence in Korea, transferred Russia's lease of Port Arthur to Japan, divided the island of Sakhalin between Russia and Japan, and provided for the joint evacu-ation of Manchuria by both armies. This went into ation of Manchuria by both armies. effect October 15, 1905.

Japan had fought two wars for Korea and was resolved that her influence should he supreme in that country. The Koreans had made no progress in improving either their government or finances. Japan instituted many reforms in 1906, and in 1908 organized it as a dependency. Financial reforms included taxes, currency, and banks. Industry was fostered by the establishment of printing, brickmakfostered by the establishment of printing, breamagning, forestry, coal mining, the laying out of model farms, and cotton cultivation. Public works like waterworks, hospitals, and medical schools were opened, and reforms were made in the government. An efficient body of police was established and a ju-diciary, of which the majority were Japanese, was Finally in 1907 the Korean standing shanded. This resulted in an insurrecestablished. army was disbanded. This resulted in an insurrection which lasted for two years. Japan had promsed to respect the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Korea, but held that the conditions made further independence impossible; and in 1910 Japan proclaimed the formal annexation of Korea.

The position of Japan in Asia was that of a Western military and naval power, with the intense interest of the strongest Oriental nation.

In 1908 through an exchange of notes between Secretary Root and Ambassador Takahira which secretary Root and Ambassador Takanira When was not submitted to the Senate for ratification, the United States recognized the interest of Japan to the principle of the "open door." Both parties pledged themselves to observe the independence and integrity of China. In 1915, however, Japan presented the "21 demands" to China, which looked toward a Japanese monopoly of some lines of tradeward a Japanese monopoly of some lines of trade, and an influence inconsistent with Chinese independence (see China). In an exchange of notes (November 2, 1917) between Secretary Lansing and Viscount Ishii it was recognized that Japan had "special interests" in China, but disclaimed diserimination against other nations or infringement of the independence or territorial integrity Japan changed from a medieval power to a modern one. The Shogun Ki-ki resigned in 1867 as the result of a revolutionary reform movement, which

WORLD-WAR PERIOD.

Aiready in alliance with Great Britain, Japan quickly recognized the opportunity to take a place among world powers by entering the World War. After a few months' campaign, Japan compelled the German forces to surrender the fortified port of Tsingtau in Kiaochow. Japan thus obtained the dominant place in the Chinese province of Shantung, Japan thus obtained the and also occupied all important islands previously Germau in the North Pacific. In the conference and treaty which brought the war to an end, Japan ranked with Great Britain, France, Italy, and the United States as one of the five world powers by whose decision the perplexing questions were settled. For herself, Japan secured the Shantung peninsula and the privileges which Germany had previously held, as well as the German Pacific Islands north of the equator. The Shantung concession so offended

China that she refused to sign the treaty.

During the World War Japan prospered greatly.

Her manufactured products and her raw materials were in great demand. But the wealth was by no means evenly distributed, and there was great suffering and considerable disorder among the lower classes. For the first time in the history of the empire, labor began to organize and to state its claims. A movement for popular government also gained headway.

Organization.

Government. The constitution asserts the emperor's rights of sovereignty and all the executive power of the state. The genro down to 1919 made most of the great decisions of state policy. The executive power, however, is exercised by a cabinet, which is not responsible to Parliament, but solely to the emperor. The emperor nominally can declare war and make peace and treaties. In legislation, all laws require the assent of the Imperial Diet, which may be called, prorogued, or dissolved by the emperor. The Diet consists of two houses: a House of Peers of 373 members consisting partly of hereditary nobles and persons nominated by the emperor for meritorious services, who sit for life, and partly of a group of lesser nobility and representatives of the prefectures, who are chosen for terms of seven years; and a House of Representatives consisting of 3SI members chosen from electoral districts by Japanese subjects of 25 years of age and upwards who are taxpayers.

In local government the country is divided into prefectures (fu and ken) and into municipalities. each prefecture there is a governor and an assembly which gives decisions chiefly on financial matters.

Industry and Labor. About three fifths of the arable land is cultivated by peasant proprietors. chief crops are rice, barley, rye, and wheat. Scarcely less important than the cereal crops is the production of silk and tea. The important mineral and metal products in order of their value (1918) are: coal, steel, copper, pig iron, petroleum, silver, and gold. ge industry in cotton goods has developed; important manufactures are silk, paper, large other matches, earthenware, lacquer ware, knit goods

Japan's merchant marine has developed rapidly since 1898 and consists of over 2,700 steamers and 12,236 sailing vessels. The government subsidizes shipping companies for foreign trade, and Japanese teamers now run on four great routes to Europe North America, South America, and Australia. In addition there are lines between Japanese ports and Korea, Northern China, and the Yangtze River. There are over 7,800 miles of railway, of which 5,999 miles are state railways.

Religion. There is absolute religious toleration in Japan. The state religion, however, is Shinto, which has neither dogma nor moral code, but combines mythology and a politico-religious ritual. Its supreme tenet, however, is the inculcation of implicit obedience to the heaven-descended mikado. Buddhism was introduced from Korea in the sixth century, and has a strong hold on Japan. Confu-cianism, accepted by the educated classes, was formerly the basis of the educational system. There are numerous Christian missions of the

There are numerous Christian missions of the Roman Catholic, Greek Catholic, and Western Protestant Churches, with about 137,000 converts. Education. Education is compulsory between the ages of six and fourteen. There are more than 25,000 elementary schools, with nearly 7,500,000 pupils; more than 700 middle, high, and normal schools, with more than 260,000 pupils; 7,600 special and technical schools with 324,000 students. The and technical schools, with 394,000 students. four imperial universities of Tokyo, Kyoto, Tohoku (at Sendai and Sapporo), and Kiushu, have an attendance of nearly 10,000 students.

Defense. Service in the army and the navy is compulsory and universal, beginning at the age of 17 and extending to the age of 40. Service in the ranks is on the former German plan, two years in the infantry, and three years in other branches, then five (or four) years and four months in the reserve. reserves are called out twice for training for 60-day periods during their term of service. Service in the second reserve lasts for ten years, with two periods of training of sixty days each. After this the men are enlisted in the home defense army or territorial reserves. The total strength of the field army in 1920 was about 600,000 combatants. The Japanese navy consisted (1920) of nine dreadnoughts, 13 pre dreadnoughts, 100 destroyers, 43 submarines, besides armored cruisers and other boats.

The area of Japan is 148,756 square miles and the population by the first census (1920) was 55, 961,140. The area and population of the impor-tant Japanese dependencies are as follows: Korea (Chosen) 84,738 square miles, 17,284,207 population; Formosa (Taiwan), 13,944 square miles, 3,654,000 population; and Sakhalin (Karafuto), 13,253 square miles, 105,765 population; for the whole Japanese Empire a total area of about 260,700 square miles and a total population of 77,005,112.

JUGO-SLAVIA: KINGDOM OF THE SERBS, CROATS, AND SLOVENES.

Historical Outline.

Ar the outbreak of the World War the Serbs in the Austro-Hungarían Monarchy were geographically subdivided, and in a position of political inferiority to the Germans in their half of the empire and the Hungarians in their half. A proposition to rearrange the empire into three groups — German, Hungarian, and Slav — was supposed to be favored by Francis Ferdinand, heir to the throne, at the time of his assassination. The Slavs numbered 27,000,000 out of 51, 000,000 in the empire; yet were in a minority in both the Austrian and Hungarian diets. In the Hunga-rian part of the empire, the Slavs with the adjacent Bosnians and Herzegovinians numbered 7,300,000, besides 2,800,000 Roumanians, out of a total popula-tion of 23,000,000. Yet the Hungarians were work-ing systematically to root out their languages, traditions, and nationality. Only the Croatians received any favor at the hands of their masters.

any favor at the hands of their masters.

A Slav propaganda went on under the surface. In 1903 a set of treason trials at Agram revealed a secret organization. The Serbian kingdom across the Drave was gaining ground and had the ambition to draw away the Serbs out of Ilungary into a large Serb state. The Bosnians and Herzegovinians, who emerged from their age-long thralldom to Turkey in 1878, were also Slavs and they joined forces with their blood brethren.

The war of 1914 was directly due to the growing fear on the part of the empire that the Serbians would unite with the Serbs in Hungary, and was aimed at the destruction of the fountain of such in-fluence. In the World War the Croat, Slav, and Bosnian troops, forced into service, had no desire to fight the Russian Slavs, and surrendered in large numbers. They felt no such hesitation with regard to Italy, which as soon as she came in (1915) began to plant herself in Albania. By the secret Treaty of London (April 26, 1915), the Italians were promised a large slice of territory inhabited by Slavs, in-cluding the coast of Dalmatia.

No opportunity came for a combined Slav movement till Austria-Hungary collapsed, in 1918. Then the fragments came together. Serbia, as an organized state, was the nucleus. The Monteneorganized state, was the indiceds. The Montenergins, who are Serbs in all but name, threw in their lot with Serbia. The Croats, Slovenes, Bosnians, and Dalmatians were at last free to unite with them in a Jugo-Slav nation organized under the name of the "Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes," headed by Prince Alexander of Serbia as regent. Their state is popularly known as Jugo-Slavia. Many difficulties and rivalries developed inside Government. No constitution has been adopted for the new unified state. The legislative Assembly consists partly of Serbian deputies, who were elected before the first Balkan War, and partly of delegates appointed from the new territories. According to appointed from the new territories. According to the constitution of the former Serbian kingdom, no measure can become a law unless adopted by one half of the Assembly. As it has been almost a con-tinuous and a majority, there has been almost a continuous conflict between the legislature and the successive cabinets.

The estimated area of Jugo-Slavia is 101,254

square miles and the population is about 14,361,000

JUGO-SLAVIA: COMPONENT PARTS. SERBIA.

Historical Outline.

Two of the sections of Jugo-Slavia, Montenegro and Serbia, have had a testing as independent king-Serbia was in 1914 an inland kingdom of southeastern Europe, in the northwestern part of the Balkan Peninsula. The population was chiefly Slav, but included some Croats, Bulgars, Slovenes, Montenegrins, Albanians, and Turks. The history of the Serbs dates from the middle of the 7th century, when they became settled in the Balkan Peninsula. By the 12th century they acknowledged the suzerainty of the Byzantine emperors. The most glorious era of Serbia, however, was in the 14th century when, under Stephen Dushan (1331–1355), "Emperor of the Serbs and the Greeks," an attempt was made to establish a Serbian empire, which should include Serbia, Greece, and Bulgaria. Stephen's object was to prevent the Turks from gaining a foothold in Europe, for which he planned to secure Constantinople; but he died in 1355.

His successor was overwhelmingly defeated by the Turks (1389) in the battle of Kossovo. For the next three centuries and a half Serbia was a Turkish dependency, suffering all the evils of the rule of the lawless and corrupt pashas.

The Serbians' struggle for independence began in 1804 with the election of Czerny Djordje, or Kara Georg ("Black George"), as commander in chief of the Serbian nation. Under his command the Serbs succeeded in expelling the Turks, and by 1807 the sultan was forced to offer them self-government On the advice of Russia this was refused; but when Russia, attacked by Napoleon in 1812, was forced to conclude the Treaty of Bucharest, no provision was made for Serhia, which was reconquered by Turkey, Another insurrection occurred in 1815 and two years later Serbia regained her autonomy, which was recognized by the Treaty of Adrianople in 1829.

Between 1830 and 1879 Serbia was becoming unified and was struggling for independence. Under Prince Michael in 1867, after an understanding had been arrived at with other Balkan states and proyinces for an attack upon the Turkish power, Serbia demanded that Turkey should withdraw from Bel-grade and all other Serb fortresses. To prevent a general uprising, Great Britain intervened and com-pelled Turkey to submit.

As a result of the Russo-Turkish War (1877–78) a greater Bulgaria was created. This dissatisfied and alarmed the Serbs. Although the Congress of Berlin reduced the territories assigned to their neighbor. it failed to satisfy the ambition of the Serbs. From 1879 Serbia developed her internal resources and although defeated by Bulgaria in a brief war in 1885, she prospered. In 1903 King Alexander, who had suspended the constitution of 1889 and was ruling despotically, was assassinated, together with Queen Draga; and Peter Karageorgevich, who had planned the murder, was proclaimed king.
In 1908 Austria annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina

These provinces contained a large Serb population; and since Austria under the terms of the Congress of Berlin was entitled only to "occupation and administration," Serbia hoped that they might become a part of a greater Serbia.

In 1912 the Balkan League, consisting of Montenegro, Serbia, Greece, and Bulgaria was formed, and war was declared by Serbia on Turkey, October 17 (see Түнкёт). The leading spirit in Serbia was the premier, Pashić. The allies won every pitched battle and captured every besieged fortress and occupied Monastir and other strongholds in Macedonia, and on the Adriatic occupied the port of Durazzo in defiance of Austria. Together with the Bulgarians, the Serbians captured Adrianople (March 26, 1913), which forced Turkey to accept their terms. By the Treaty of London, Turkey was expelled from the Balkans; but by the terms dictated by the great powers, the coefficient with the service of the content of the coefficient with the content of the coefficient with the coefficient with the coefficient of the coefficient with the coefficient of the coefficient with the coefficient with the coefficient of the coefficient with the coefficient of the coefficient with the coefficient with the coefficient of the coefficient with the coefficient of the coefficient with the coefficient of the coeffici ers, the so-called independent kingdom of Albania was planted upon the Adriatic. Bulgaria, apparently under the instigation of Anstria, treacherously attacked her former allies, but was defeated, and Serbia gained a large portion of Macedonia.

Serbia felt that Austria had prevented her legiti-mate expansion in Bosnia and on the Adriatic. Austria regarded Serbia as a dangerous neighbor who R was attempting to unite all the southern Slavs in Austria-Hungary under her protection. On June 28, 1914, the Arcbduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the attack Turkey, but are crushed at Aleksinac, Oc-Austrian throne, together with his wife, was as nated in Sarajevo, the capital of Bosnia. Although the crime was done by an Austrian subject, Austria held the Scrbian nation responsible and on July 23 presented a humiliating ultimatum of ten demands which commanded Serbia to suppress all Pan-Ser-bian propaganda and all newspapers and societies which fostered hatred and contempt for the Austrian government. Moreover, Austria demanded that Serbia should accept Austrian assistance in investi gating and punishing the perpetrators of the crime of Sarajevo. Although England attempted to obtain a modification of the terms, Austria refused. Even after Serbia submitted, Austria mobilized her forces and declared war. This step led directly to the World War of 1914-18.

In the first year of the war, the Austrian armies of invasion were repeatedly thrown back. In 1915 a combined force of Austrians and Germans, fresh from their success in Russia, invaded Serbia. which was bound to come to her aid, refused juider the unconstitutional influence of King Constantine, the brother-in-law of the German kaiser. Thus Serbia, deserted by her allies and attacked on the north. and by the Bulgarians on the east, was conquered and utterly crushed with indescribable cruelty. What was left of her army was transported to the island of Corfu, where it was refitted and in 1918 joined with the Allies in the attack upon Bulgaria which surrendered September 30.

Organization.

Government. Before the World War the consticution of Serbia provided for a king, assisted by a council of ministers who were individually and col-lectively responsible to the National Assembly. The National Assembly (Narodna Skupshtina) was composed of 166 deputies elected by male citizens of 21 years of age who paid a small tax. Elections took place every four years and the assembly met annually. This assembly, including popular elements, was very representative of national feeling The leading Serbian statesman was Pashić.

Industry and Labor. More than four fifths of the Serbians are peasant farmers, the great majority of whom cultivate small farms of their own. Indian corn is the principal crop and is used for food and as fodder for the swine, which are the principal export Wheat, flax, hemp, and tobacco are also raised, and the sugar beet was successfully introduced in 1900. Religion. The state religion is the Greek Ortho-dox, which has nearly 3,000,000 adherents. There are 8,000 Roman Catholics, 800 Protestants, 6,000 Jews, and 14,000 Moslem Turks and Gypsies. plete liberty of conscience is allowed.

Education. Education is compulsory and free in all primary schools under the ministry of educa-In 1900, however, less than 17% of the people could read and write. In fact the country has almost no schools. The university at Belgrade had (1920) 80 professors and 7,250 students.

Defense. Before the World War, military service was compulsory and universal between the ages of 18 and 55, but the recruits joined at 21 and completed their military service at 45. Serbia was able to muster an army of 500,000 men. During the World War 757,000 troops were raised and the casualties were 369,000.

After the Treaty of Bucharest, which closed the second Balkan War, the area of Serbia was 33,891 square miles and its pepulation 4,615,567.

CROATIA AND SLAVONIA.

Historical Outline.

Among the Slavic tribes that settled in central Germany the Croatians found their way into the land south of the middle Drave. Alongside of it to the eastward was the similar settlement of the Slavonians. In recent times the two were united as a double province of the Hungarian portion of the Anstro-Hungarian Monarchy. The territory extends from the Drave and the Danube to the inclosed reaches of the Adriatic above Dalmatia. The twin peoples were blood brethren of the Serbians, Bosnians, and Montenegrins.

Their common history is that they were won for Christianity through the Roman Church in the ninth century. In the tenth century they were conquered by the kings of the Hungarians, who gave themselves the title of Kings of Croatia and Dalma-In the tenth century they were contia. Later a king of Croatia, Dalmatia, and Slavonia was set up by the Hungarian sovereign (who was also sovereign of Austria) in order to organize the frontier against the Turks. Nevertheless, Bosmia and its sister provinces Herzegovina, Croatia, and Slavonia were conquered and occupied by the Turks. The Venetians succeeded in holding the strip of Dalmatian coast. Slavonia was till 1745 a military province.

Napoleon, by his crushing victories in Italy and Austria, forced the Austrian government to yield to him, by the Treaty of Schönbrunn, or Vienna (Oct. 14, 1809), the Dalmatian coast and a broad belt extending inland which he called the "Hlyrian Provinces." This was the most enlightened government that these lands bad ever known, but it was their misfortune to be restored to Austria by the Treaty of Vieuna, in 1815.

From that time onward for a hundred years the Hungarians made it their policy to Magyarize their Serbian subjects. The result was that when, in 1848, the Hungarians were fighting for their pendence against Anstria, the Croats sided with the Germans. For this service they received no reward. Every effort was made to break up their national traditions. After the defeat of Austria by Prussia traditions. After the defeat of Austria by Prussia in 1866, the Dual Monarchy was formed, and Hun-gary reluctantly granted to Croatia (1868) an organized government with ministers and a legislature.

A similar system was set up for Slavonia. In 1908 the Hungarian government prosecuted, convicted, and put to death several of the Croatians on a charge of plotting for the independence of their country. The Croatian-Slavonians ardently sympathized with the protests against the formal incorporating into the monarchy of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which they had hoped to see develop into a part of a new Scrb state. They were much aroused by the Serbian victories over the Turks in 1912 and 1913. The double province of Croatia-Slavonia is a region which in the midst of barren mountains incloses considerable areas of fruitful soil, and there are various minerals in the mountains. The inhabitants are ous minerals in the mountains. The inhabitants are a lively agricultural people. In the European wars of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the Croat cavalry was celebrated for its bravery and its cruelty to noncombatants. The area of the double province is about 16.000 square miles. Before the World War, the population was about 2,600,000 people, nearly all of them of Serb stock.

Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, Slavic tribes of the same speech and customs, have been separated by different rule, religion, and alphabet. Slovenes and Croats, Catholics and using Latin alphabet, are under the Hapsburgs in Austria and Hungary. Some Serbs, Orthodox (Greek Church) and using the Cyrillic alphabet, are farther east in the Banat and elsewhere under Hungary. The remainder of the Jugo-Slavs are under Turkey; mostly Orthodox, but some Mohamme-Montenegro and Ragusa are independent. Revolutionary year offers opportunities to the Serb people. Hungarian revolt is anti-Slav, and Serbs and Croats unite in demanding recognition; Austria humors them until Hungary is subdued and then continues the policy of repression. Croatia-Slavonia and Fiume are separated from Hungary in 1849 and ruled as a single Austrian crownland.

367. By the Dual-Monarchy Ausgleich the Serbo-Croats of Dalmatia and Istria, and the Slovenes of Carniola, Carinthia, Styria, and Görz (Gorizia) are grouped in Anstria; and the Croats of Croatia Slavonia and the Serbs of the Bánát, Bács-Bodrog, and Baranya are included in Hun-gary; Germans and Magyars dividing the Slavs in order the better to keep them repressed.

1868. June 25. Hungary agrees to a local Diet in Croatia-Slavonia, and to Serbo-Croatian as official language; Croatia-Slavonia acknowledges llungarian sovereignty, pays part of revenue to Hungary, and is represented in the Parliament. Resistance to Hungarian control continues.

MONTENEGRO.

Historical Outline.

Montenegro, as an independent state, dates from the battle of Kossovo in 1389. Some of the defeated Serbians took refuge in Crnagora, the "Black Mountain" (Venetian Italian "Montenegro"), a highly defensible upland region. There they maintained a heroic resistance for over 500 years—the only people in the Balkans who never yielded to the Turk. Their independence was acknowledged by Turkey and Europe at the Congress of Berlin in 1878. The population of Montenegro is a primitive, peasant people, delighting in war and impatient of peace. Since 1860 they have been ruled by Prince Nicholas, who in 1910 took the title of king.

In 1912 the Montenegrins were the first to declare Montenegro, as an independent state, dates from

In 1912 the Montenegrins were the first to declare war upon Turkey and marched upon Scutari, the capital of Albania. This they continued to besiege in spite of the opposition of Austria and the great powers who blockaded the coast, and Scutari finally surrendered to them with Serbian aid, April 23, 1913. King Nicholas was obliged by the opposition of Austria to surrender Scutari to the great powers, who then established the so-called independent kingdom of Albania August S, 1914, Montenegro declared war upon Austria to aid Serbia, and together with the Serbians carried the war into Bosnia. After the subjugation of Serbia, the Austrians attacked Montenegro in 1916 and occupied its capital, Cetinje. Being hard pressed, the Montenegrins sned for peace, but would not accept the terms and the war was resumed. The chief ports and towns were occupied by Austrians, many of the Montenegrins retiring into Albania. Scutari was reoccupied by the Austrians, and the Italians were forced to evacuate Durazzo, so that Anstria was everywhere successful on the eastern coast of the Adriatic.

By the surrender of Bulgaria, in September, 1918. and the withdrawal of Austria, the Montenegrins returned. The National Assembly on April 20, 1919, voted for the union of Montenegro with Jugo-Slavia. In 1919 Serbian troops occupied Montenegro and King Nicholas (not in the country) appealed to the Peace Conference for protection and restoration of his royal power, which was not accorded.

BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA. Historical Outline.

The province of Bosnia, once part of the Roman Empire, was organized about 1200 A D. under a ban, or sovereign, who later incorporated the neighboring district of Herzegovina. For a time this region was included in the empire of Serbia. Then it was independent; but in 1463 it was conquered by the Turks, who held it nearly four centuries. A considerable part of the population accepted the Moslem religion A considerable

In 1875 a rebellion called the attention of Europe to the sufferings of the Christian population. By the Treaty of Berlin in 1878 the double province, instead of being put on the road to independence, was placed under the control of the Austrian government without being annexed to either part of the empire.

A policy of subjecting the region to Austrian laws ideals, etc., was followed, and order was restored by military force. Nominally, there was still a feudal relation to the sultan, but after the insurrection of the Young Turks the Austrian government assumed that this suzerainty had ceased and in 1908 formally annexed the provinces to the empire. This was a great disappointment not only to the Bosnians, but also to Serbia, which had looked forward to including the blood brethren in a large Serb kingdom. The assassination of the heir to the imperial throne at the capital, Sarajevo, in 1914, was the pretended occasion for the World War. The Bosnians were compelled to serve in the Austrian armies. The Serbs made unavailing efforts to get a permanent foothold in the country. At the end of the war the Bosnians and Herzegovinians entered into the new state of Jugo-Slavia.

The population is chiefly Serbian by race, but in respect to religion it comprises about 900,000 Greek Catholics, half a million Roman Catholics, and 600,-000 Moslems, the last named having maintained their faith notwithstanding their separation from Turkey. The country, which covers an area of 19,-762 square miles, is mountainous and considerable parts are sterile, but there are broad and fertile valuation. leys and in normal times a considerable production of foodstuffs, timber, and salt. #### LIBERIA.

Historical Outline.

LIBERIA is situated at the upper angle of the southwestern coast of Africa. Its coast line is about 350 miles in length and extends from the British colony of Sierra Leone to the French colony of the Ivory Coast.

In 1816 the American Colonization Society was organized in Princeton, New Jersey. The avowed object was to establish in Africa a colony to be peopled with American freedmen and captured slaves. The first colonists arrived in 1820 and, in course of time, the Society sent 18,000 American Africans. Civil government was established in 1824, and in 1828 a regular constitution was prepared. For nearly twenty years the home society retained the control and then surrendered everything into the hands of the Liberians.

Liberia, while nominally independent, is actually under the tutelage of the United States. Thus, in 1910 an agreement was made with France and Germany by which the American government was to take charge of the finances, military organization, agriculture, and boundary disputes. And thus Liberia in sympathy with the United States declared war upon Germany August 4, 1917.

Government. The constitution of the republic is modeled on that of the United States. The execu-tive power is given to a president (elected for four years), vice president, and a council of six ministers. Legislative power is in the hands of a House of Representatives of 13, elected for four years, and a Senate of 8, elected for six years.

Industry. Although Liberia is rich in agricultural, mining, and forest resources, industry a backward state. The chief exports are rubber, palm oil, coffee, and cocoa; and in 1913 the export trade was a little over a million dollars. There are trade was a little over a million dollars. There are no railroads, and transportation is carried on by ox-carts and on the rivers.

Religion. The Americo-Liberians are all Protestants and there are several American missions at work, and one French Roman Catholic. Education. In 1910 there were 113 government elementary schools, with more than 4,000 pupils. There were also 87 mission schools, with about 2,000 pupils. The Methodists maintain a college at Monrovia, and the government established a college (1916) with 3 professors and 20 students.

Defense. Every citizen between 16 and 50 is liable for military service, and the organized militia, volunteers, and police number about 400. There is one armed revenue cutter.

The total area is about 40,000 sq. miles; the population (estimated) between 1,500,000 and 2,100,000.

LITHUANIA.

The Lithuanians lie south of the former Baltic Provinces of Russia, east of Germany and Poland, and are found chiefly in the former Russian provinces (governments) of Kovno, Suvalki, Grodno, and parts of Vitebsk, Minsk, and Vilno. They represent a branch of the Aryan race which from time immemorial bas inhabited this region near the Baltie. They were the last of the native European races to accept Christianity. In alliance with the Poles they occupied a large part of Prnssia and defeated the Germans in a decisive battle in 1410. When Rnssia dismembered Poland, Lithuania practically ceased to exist; but during the 19th century a feeling of race consciousness was aroused, and an idea of an independent Lithuania took root.

Lithuania is an unfertile country with low-lying, marshy land. Only in the province of Kovno is agri-culture carried on to any extent. The raising of live culture carried on to any extent. The raising of live stock and the utilization of the forest resources are Poultry farming, particularly geese rearing, is earried on. The chief articles of export are corn, cattle, lumber, hides, and wool.

The approximate area of the present Lithuanian Republic is 36,532 square miles, and the population in 1914 was 4,651,000. In the complications due to the World War Kurland was grouped with Lithuania, not elaiming a separate existence.

LUXEMBURG.

This, the only independent duchy in Europe, is situated between France, Belgium, and Germany. In 1384 it became a duchy, and its dukes several times occupied the imperial throne. It passed by turns to Burgundy, Spain, France, Austria, and again to France. After the fall of Napoleon, it was again to France. After the fall of Napoleon, it was created a grand duchy and given to the Netherlands. On the rise of Belgium in 1830, half of it was assigned to the new kingdom.

The other half, now the duehy, was neutralized in 1867, and in 1890 its connection with the Nether-lands was severed. A mountainous region, occupying an important strategic position, the possession of the duchy has long been coveted both by France and Germany

MESOPOTAMIA.

THE plain through which flow the twin rivers, Tigris and Euphrates, extending from the mountains of eastern Asia Minor to the Persian Gulf, is the seat of some of the earliest empires. The fat plain was very early fertilized by irrigation waters from the rivers, and supported a large population, which developed immense cities with vast walls, temples, and public buildings. Two centers of intensive national life sprang up — Babylon near the present Bagdad, and Nineveh near the present Mosul.

About 2300 в. с. Babylon became a great commercial city. It was brought into relations with the rising Hittite power to the westward. About 1100 B. c. the Assyrians became powerful and for a time they held Babylon. Judea was drawn into the wars and conquests of this period. In 539 B. c. the Persians took Babylon, which had revived, and held Meso-potamia till the Persian Empire went down before Alexander (331 B. c.). The kingdoms set up by Alexander's generals and the rising nation of the Parthians contended for the region. The Romans long disputed the Parthian rule, and eventually, at the beginning of the third century A. D., came into possession of the valley, only to confront a revived Persian Empire, which for ages was the enemy of Rome's successor, the Byzantine Empire.

The rising tide of the new religion and the Mohammedan power in the eighth century prevailed over the Persians, and Bagdad became the capital of the eastern Mohammedans. In the thirteenth century the nomadic Arabs ruled the country and the canals fell out of use. In the seventeenth century the Turks became the masters, and did nothing to restore it to fertility. Just before the World War the Germans were pushing their project of a "Berlinte-Bagdad'' railroad which was to give them control of Asia Minor and Mesopotamia. During the war the country fell wholly into the bands of the English, who expect to keep it, lest it become a gateway to-ward India for enemies. There is no evidence that the inhabitants desire any rule except that of their own contending tribes.

The country contains valuable oil fields and could probably be made a cotton-producing region. The area is 143,250 square miles and the population is, according to the 1920 eensus, 2,849,282.

Historical Outline.

The earliest Spanish discoverers learned that in the central plateau of southern North America lived a people who had a considerable degree of culture. This was the empire of the Aztecs under Montezuma. whose principal city was on an island in the lake of Tezcoco. Like the Peruvians in South America, the Aztecs had reached the upper stage of barbarism. They dwelt in vast communal houses of red stone coated with white stucco, which were divided into rooms by cedar partitions hung with tapestries. The city of Mexico was connected with the mainland by three stone causeways, each nearly five miles length, and by a solid masonry aqueduct. The temple was surrounded by walls eight feet high and in the courtyard were twenty pyramids not far from one hundred feet in height, on which were offered human sacrifices to the war god. From this strategic position the Aztees waged war and levied tribute upon the surrounding tribes and were able oppose the Spanish conquests with some success by assembling an organized army

By making an alliance with neighboring tribes who hated their Mexican masters and by taking advantage of the belief that the Spaniard was the God of Light, Cortes succeeded in obtaining an entry to the city (1519), from which, however, he was expelled in a memorable night hattle. He reformed his forces and in 1521 after a terrible siege the city of Mexico surrendered, the Aztec empire was conquered, and the chieftain Montezuma was executed.

During the long colonial period, Mexico was the seat of the viceroyalty of New Spain, which included Guatemala, Manila, and Santo Domingo and was the center of the Spanish colonial power in North America. During this period four classes of population developed: the native Indians; the Creoles, of Spanish descent but Mexican birth; "Peninsulars," Spaniards horn in Europe; mestizos, or half-breeds, who were crosses between the other classes and Indians. To these classes should be added the Negro slaves and the various crosses which resulted from To these classes should be added the Negro their intermarriages with other races. The Spanish rule of Mexico was like that of the other Spanish colonies, and the Spanish language and culture and the Roman Catholic religion were introduced and material improvements made in the city of Mexico.

The overthrow of the Bourhons aroused the Mexicans and a revolution was started in 1810 under Morelos-Pavón. In 1813 a national congress was summoned and Mexico was declared independent but the old government rallied, defeated the popular party and after three years of guerrilla warfare re-stored order. In 1820 a new revolution broke out under General Iturbide who captured the capital and in 1821 the last viceroy, O'Donojú, formally recognized the independence of Mexico. Iturbide declared himself emperor of Mexico. At the end of a ear the empire gave way to a republic, proclaimed by López de Santa Anna

No stable government was possible, and the land went through a series of revolutions. In 1836 the Anglo-Saxon settlers of Texas revolted and the forces of Santa Anna were defeated at San Jacinto. therefore declared independence, which was recognized by the United States. In 1845 at her own request Texas was annexed to the Union. The transfer of Texas and the desire of the United States for California led to war between the United States and Mexico. General Zachary Taylor captured Mon-terey and defeated Santa Anna at Buena Vista while Geueral Winfield Scott captured Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico. The war was terminated by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, by which Mexico gave up not ouly Texas but New Mexico and California

In 1861 Spain, England, and France invaded Mexico in order to force a settlement of their claims for injuries against their citizens and property. Spain and England withdrew, but Napoleon III declared war upon Mexico, occupied the city, and established a so-called empire under Maximilian of Austria (1864). The United States protested against any attempt to found an empire against the will of the Mexicans; hence, the French troops were withdrawn, Maximilian was overwhelmed, and executed (1867)

After a period of prosperity under President Juárez, a full-blooded Indian, broken by occasional insurrections, General Porfirio Diaz led a revolt and secured the presidency in 1877. From this time until 1911 the development of Mexico was almost wholly the work of Diaz who was reflected from time to time and permitted no rivals. Mexico made great prog-ress in economic and material ways. Foreign capital was secured for railroads and mines by concessions and guarantees of bonds and some of the vast resources of the country were developed. were taken to establish a stable currency on the gold standard, railways were built, and the harbor of Vera Cruz was improved. There were few insurrec-tions of importance and a rebellion of Yaqui Indians, who had never been subdued since the Spanish conquest, was ended in 1907. But the political power was in the hands of a few who exploited the lower classes for their own benefit and pledged the resources of the country to foreign capitalists.

The long administration of Diaz came to an end in 1911 when a revolt headed by Francisco J. Madero spread over the northern section of the country Diaz resigned and Madero was elected president. During the next two years there were rebellions against the Madero government in all parts of the country and on February 18, 1913, Madero was de-posed and Victoriano Huerta proclaimed president. On February 23 Madero was shot, while being trans ferred from one prison to another by the order of Huerta, and although some of the rebel leaders submitted to Hnerta's government, the "Constitution-alists" maintained their resistance and won im-

The rear purpose was to prevent military supplies from reaching Huerta. Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, the "ABC" states of South America, offered to mediate in the dispute, and a conference was held at Niagara Falls which attempted to settle the international complications and hoped to arrange the internal disputes of Mexico. However, as General Carranza, the first chief of the Constitutionalist forces, refused to consent to an armistice, little progress was made in the internal settlement.

The conference had some good effects, for it showed that the United States was actuated by no selfish motives, and did much to allay the feeling of resentment which the American occupation of Vera Cruz had aroused in the South American republics. Huerta gave up the struggle, resigned the presidency, and left the country. A period of anarchy and war followed, in which the city of Mexico changed hands four times. Finally, the conflict narrowed down to one between the forces of Carranza and Villa.

The United States formally recognized Carranza (October 19, 1915) and considerable progress was made in establishing order. Villa alone stood out in active, spasmodic warfare against the government. But Carranza was unable to control the bandits and Villa (March, 1916) attacked a United States post at Columbus, New Mexico. General Pershing led a punitive expedition into Mexico to capture Villa. It remained nearly a year without reaching Villa and was at last withdrawn (1917)

A revised constitution was promulgated February 5, 1917, which established, on paper at least, a demo eratic form of government and Carranza was chosen president. His policy was to establish law and order, to reform the disordered finances, and to restore the industries and credit of Mexico, in which task he subjected certain foreign interests to almost confiscatory taxation. He set himself against foreign concessions and interests, believing that much of Mexico's troubles have come from such intervention. During the World War the German residents and official representatives attempted to put obstacles in the way of obtaining petroleum, and Mexico was the seat of German plotting. Although Carranza himself was not accused of immentral action, certain of his decrees were certainly favorable to Germany. In 1918 a new form of tax on oil wells aroused opposition in the United States.

Government. The constitution of 1917 establishes a federal republic of states which manage their own local affairs, but are subject in national and international affairs to the control of the central govermment. The executive power is in a president elected by direct popular vote for a term of four years. The legislative power is in a congress consisting of a House of Representatives directly elected for two years by universal suffrage at the ratio of one member for every 60,000 inhabitants; and a Senate of 58 members, two for each state, elected in the same way as the deputies. In practice the states are subject to the national executive in office at the time.

To prevent ecclesiastical influence in politics it is provided that no religious body can acquire landed Education is free and obligatory and controlled by the national government in the Federal District and in the territories. Elsewhere it is regulated by the state authorities. In 1912 primary education was nominally extended so that it might reach the native population. The National University of Mexico, established in 1910, is situated in the city of Mexico.

The area of Mexico is 767,198 square miles. census population of 1910 was 15,115,612 and the estimated population in 1912 was 15,501,684.

THE PRINCIPALITY OF MONACO has an area of eight square miles. It is the smallest state in Europe. It is inclosed between the French department of Alpes-Maritimes and the Mediterranean. The population is 22,956. There is no elective assembly, the prince acting as absolute master. Its reputation is due to its casino, which is the gambling center of Europe. A joint-stock company controls the gaming tables, having obtained a concession which of Europe. does not expire until 1947. The company pays the prince $400,000 annually, besides occasional bonuses which run into the millions. In reality Monaco is a dependency of France.

MOROCCO.

Historical Outline.

Technically and geographically Morocco is the westward extension of Algeria, but it is the home of a diverse population — Berbers, Arab-Bedouins, Moors, Jews, and Negroes. Morocco was the last of the North African countries to fall before the Moster invasion of the seventh century. In 105 and lem invasion of the seventh century. In 1058 an independent kingdom was founded on what had been the dominion of the caliphs. At the middle of the seventeenth century Ali Shereef, born in Arabia, gained ascendancy and founded the dynasty of the Alides. Morocco was one of the group of north African states from which came the Barbary pirates over whom a victory was won by the United States a century ago. Christian slavery was abolished and piracy suppressed. From 1859 to 1873 there was war with Spain, and Morocco was obliged to pay an indemnity and to surrender territory and certain commercial advantages.

Sultan Mulai-Abd-el-Aziz succeeded in 1904. His reign was troubled and full of confusion. Brig-ands infested the land, and an American citizen, Perdicaris, was captured and held for ransom by the bandit leader Raisuli, which led President Roosevelt to dispatch a squadron to Tangier and demand "Perdicaris alive or Raisuli dead." Great Britain and France negotiated a joint convention for the policing of Morocco, April 8, 1904; but Germany was greatly irritated by this and maintained that the German commercial interests demanded protection. On March 31, 1905, the German emperor landed at Tangier and antagonized the French policy in a public address

This resulted in the calling of a conference at Algeciras, Spain, January 15, 1906, in which the United States had great influence. The result was a conven-tion for the joint control of Morocco by France and Spain. Acting upon this, Casabianea was bombarded by French and Spanish vessels and occupied by French troops, to the wrath of Germany. In 1908 relations were strained by the arrest of certain German deserters who were members of the French foreign legion, and the matter was submitted to the Hague Tribunal for arbitration. Revolts occurred 1911, and in 1912 a French protectorate was established over Morocco, assented to in the Franco-Spanish treaty by which Tangier was declared international. The French protectorate was recognized by Great Britain also in 1914, and reaffirmed by the Peace Treaty of 1919.

Organization.

Government. The government is in the hands of a sultan, who is absolute and irresponsible save as affected by foreign influence and fear of revolution. Since 1912, however, the sultan is obliged to follow the advice of the French resident-general, who is appointed by the French minister of foreign affairs. There is a grand vizier, who also is under the control of the French resident-general, and a minister of finance who acts under the control of the French director-general of finance

Production and Industry. Agriculture is in a primitive state, but the soil is suitable for agricultural production. Grapes and a great variety of fruits are grown, and in 1911 cotton was introduced. The fisheries are very valuable, especially the sardine and turny fisheries. There are rich but little developed mineral deposits of copper, iron, lead, antimony, sulphur, silver, gold, and petroleum. In 1917 the imports amounted to over $70,000,000 and the exports to $25,000,000.

The area is about 231,500 square miles and the population may be roughly estimated at 6,000,000.

Chronology.

1649. Establishment of present (Filali) dynasty.
1769. Portuguese expelled from Mazagan, their last possession. ## THE NETHERLANDS.

Historical Outline.

THE NETHERLANDS, or lowlands or "hollowlands," whence comes the name "Holland," popularly applied to the country (which formerly included Belgium and the duchy of Luxemburg), lie between Germany and Belgium. The coast is formed by a line of sand duces and the long much of which is beline of sand dunes and the land, much of which is below the sea level, is protected from the sea by a series of dikes. It is necessary to confine the rivers as well, and because of the continual deposits some of the surfaces of the rivers are higher than the surrounding land. A series of canals more than 1,500 miles in length extends throughout Holland A people inhabiting such a territory were bound to be a seafaring race, and the sailors of Holland early gained preëminence. The Dutch became the successors of the Portuguese and Spanish East Indian empire and monopolized a large part of the carrying trade

As a result of the long struggle with Spain (see Spain), the Dutch cities and country were welded into a federal union (1579), which by the Peace of Westphalia was recognized as an independent state. When Charles II. of England favored Louis XIV. of France, the enemy of the Dutch, the war was revived between Holland and England, and one of the results was the English capture of New Amsterdam in America. By the Treaty of Breda (1667) England and Holland were united as Protestant powers in opposing Louis XIV. In 1689 Prince William of Orange was elected to the throne of England, and both countries united in the struggle with France. On the death of William III. without male heirs, the On the death of William III. without male heirs, the anti-Orange party in the Netherlands prevented the appointment of a Stadholder. When the Stadholdership was restored in 1747, the holders—beginning with William (IV.) Friso, of the House of Orange—were virtually kings of a declining federation.

In order to prevent the expansion of France in the direction of the North Sea, Belgium was included with Holland. In the Netherlands the reign of William I. extended to 1840, and that of his son, William 11., to 1849. The latter was succeeded by his daughter Wilhelmina under the regency of the Queen mother.

Wilhelmina was inaugurated as full sovereign in 1898. Since 1898 the franchise has been somewhat extended, and in 1916 women were made eligible to membership in the States-General. In 1908 there was a slight difficulty with Venezuela, and a naval force was dispatched to South America.

On the outbreak of the World War the position of Holland was precarious. Germany attacked Dutch commerce, and the Allies established a virtual em-bargo against her, for fear that supplies would be transported to Germany. As a result there was a great shortage of food, and riots broke out attended by serious loss of life. In 1916 the British and American governments seized the Dutch shipping in their ports and utilized it for the transportation supplies, promising, however, ample compensation to the owners. At the end of the war Emperor William took refuge in Holland, which refused to surrender him to the Allies.

Organization.

Government. The constitution of the Netherlands was proclaimed in 1815, and was revised in 1848, 1887, and 1917. According to this charter, Netherlands forms a constitutional, hereditary monarchy. The executive power belongs exclusively to the sovereign, while the legislative authority is exercised conjointly by the sovereign and the States-General. The States-General consists of two chambers, the upper, or first, chamber and the lower, or second, chamber. By the Reform Act of December 12, 1917, universal suffrage, male and female, is extended to all Dutch citizens 23 years of age: the upper chamber of 50 members serving for terms of nine years is, however, chosen by men only; the lower chamber is made up of 100 deputies, who are elected directly for terms of four years.

Industry and Labor. The chief agricultural products of Holland are oats, rye, wheat, and sugar beets. It is renowned for its cattle and dairy prod-ucts. There are a few mines of coal, which consti-tutes the sole mineral wealth. The fisheries are very restored. Gurkhas are permitted to enlist In the Indian army, where they are highly valued.

1914. On the outbreak of the World War the prime minister offers the army to the governor-general Dutch steamers are found in every part of the world.

There is entire liberty of conscience, although the royal family and the majority of the people are members of the Reformed Church.

Education. Public instruction is compulsory (act of 1900) between the ages of 6 and 13, and is entirely secular. The cost of primary instruction is divided between the state and the towns. 3,000 primary instruction is divided between the state and the towns. public elementary schools and more than 2,000 private elementary schools care for over 1,000,000 pupils, while 113 middle schools accommodate 19,000 pupils. There are numerous special and technical schools as well as four public universities, with more than 5,000 students.

Defense. By the act of 1912 service in the army is partly voluntary and partly compulsory. Every Dutch citizen is liable to service in the army or navy between the ages of 19 and 40. Actual service is determined by lot. The maximum strength of the annual contingent is 25,500, including 600 for sea service. The peace strength of the army is 194,000 men. There are 156,000 additional trained men, and 250,000 untrained men available for mobilization. The navy is maintained for a double purpose: protection of the Dutch coast, and the defense of the East Indian possessions. The navy consists of six coast defense ships and five cruisers. In addition are gunboats and torpedo boats. A large force was kept under arms during the World War, to protect the border and keep the country in a state of defense.

The area is 12,582 square miles and the population (1918) is 6,778,699, one of the densest in Europe.

DUTCH POSSESSIONS.

The kingdom of the Netherlands has colonial possessions in both the West and the East Indies, together comprising an area of more than 780,000 sq miles, inhabited by more than 47,000,000 people

In the West Indies are Dutch Guiana, or Surman, and Curação.

DUTCH GUIANA.

SINCE the Peace of Breda in 1667, when Dutch Guiana was assigned to the Netherlands in exchange New Netherland in North America, it has been twice taken by Great Britain, but both times returned to the Netherlands on conclusion of peace. It is a small territory of about 46,000 square miles, with 107,827 inhabitants in 1919, exclusive of the Negroes and Indians living in the forests. ernor and high officers are named by the sovereign, and there is a representative body, called the Colonial States, the members of which are chosen for a term of six years, one member for every 200 voters.

CURAÇÃO.

CURAÇÃO is the name given to the colony comprise ing a little cluster of islands north of Venezuela, of which the largest is Curaçao. The total area is 403 square miles and the population 57,195 (1918).

DUTCH EAST INDIES.

In the East Indies the more important possessions are Java, Sumatra, Celebes, the Molneca Islands, the Sunda Isles, about three fourths of Borneo, and about three fifths of New Guinea. Most of these were acquired by the Dutch East India Company, formed in 1602 and dissolved in On its dissolution the home government took 1798 over the control.

The entire area is about 735,000 sq. miles; total population (est. 1917) approximately 47,000,000.

Java, the most valuable Dutch possession, has an area of 48,854 square miles, and about 34,000,000 in-With the neighboring island of Madura, it is divided into 17 residencies, each ruled by a resident, assisted by assistant residents and controleurs. Under them is a host of functionaries, Dutch and native. The Dutch colonial army of about 42,000 of all ranks is entirely separate from the home army. One third are Europeans, including all the commissioned officers, gunners, and a certain proportion of noncommissioned officers. The greater part of the land is government property. The labor laws are stringent and vigorously enforced. Coffee, sugar, tobacco, rubber, indigo, tea, and spices are the staple productions. There are valuable oil fields.

Historical Outline.

Geological and archeological researches have shown that a fishing and hunting population inhabited Norway as far back as 6000 H. C., but the earliest tradition attributes the settlement to Olaf, who fled from Sweden. The country was settled by numerous chieftains, whose principal occupation as described in the sagas was piracy and war. In the tenth century Greenland was discovered by Eric the Red, and Vinland (possibly part of America), was visited by his son. Christianity was introduced about 1000, and the kingdom became united under Olaf. Iceland was conquered in 1260, and the three kingdoms of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden were united by the Kalmarian Union (Union of Kalmar), 1397.

At the beginning of the 16th century, the king of At the beginning of the four century, the king of Denmark gained the ascendancy. A long period of dependency followed until, in 1814, Norway was ceded to Sweden by the king of Denmark, who then held the suzerainty. The Norwegians were dissatisfied with the union, declared their independence, and chose a Danish prince for their king. A Swedish army overawed the country, and Norway was joined in a personal union with Sweden under the Joined in a personal amon with sweden under the rule of Charles XIII. This continued for over a hundred years, when, in 1915, Norway declared her independence and chose Charles of Denmark as king, who rules under the name of Haakon VII.

During the World War Norway remained neutral. Her commerce suffered more than that of any other neutral nation from the depredations of the submarines. Although suffering privations almost amounting to famine from her inability to import coal and the necessary foodstuffs, her carrying trade, because of the high freight rates, greatly prospered.

Organization.

Government. Norway is a constitutional monarchy with a king whose authority is exercised by a Council of State consisting of one minister of state and at least seven councilors, who are heads of the departments of government. The king appoints the high officials, may issue provisional ordinances, declare war and peace, and may exercise the veto twice, but if the same bill passes three sepa-rate legislatures it becomes a law without his assent. The legislature, called the Storthing, assembles every year. The Storthing is chosen every third year by universal suffrage, since 1913, and consists of 126 members. On assembling, the Storthing divides it-self into two honses, the Lagthing, which consists of sell into two houses, the Lagthing, which consists of one fourth of the members of the Storthing, and the Odelsthing, which consists of three fourths. If the two houses do not agree, a joint session is held and the final decision is made by a majority of two thirds. Industry and Labor. Norway is a barren and mountainous country, with little opportunity for agriculture. The chief crops are potatoes, hay, and labor. The forests and fisheries are the two shief oats. The forests and fisheries are the two chief sources of national wealth. Although the country lacks coal, manufacturing is carried on successfully because of the enormous amount of water power, which in recent years has been turned to the production of electrochemical products. The fisheries furnish more than half of Norway's exports, and there are valuable mines of pyrites, iron ore, and copper.

Religion. The Evangelical Lutheran Church is Religion. The Evangelical Luthcran Church is the national church, endowed by the state; but all other religions are tolerated.

Education. Education is compulsory between the ages of 7 and 14, and in 1916 there were more than 6,000 elementary schools, 93 secondary schools, and 99 communal and private schools. 10 normal schools, and a university at Christiania with more than 1,500 students.

Defense. The army of Norway is a national militia, in which service is compulsory and universal for mated population in 1918 was 2,632,010.

PALESTINE.

Historical Outline.

The name Palestine is applied to the territory lying between the eastern coast of the Mediterranean Sea and the line of the Jordan River, with somewhat indefinite boundaries to the northern and southern ends. It has been celebrated for ages as the seat of the Jewish people; and as the seene of the birthplace, home, and death of Jesns Christ, and hence the "Holy Land" of Christian countries.

Palestine has gone through many mutations: it has been part of the Egyptian, Babylonian, Assyrian, Seljuk, and Ottoman empires. It was the scene of the great struggles of the Crusades, and it once included a kingdom of Jerusalem with a Western sovereign. It has been the bridge for the march of armies between Asia and Africa, and is at present the object of a movement for the resettling of a Jewish com-munity who expect to become an independent state.

The Jews who came into the land about 1160 B. c eventually were divided into two kingdoms — Israel and Judah. Their sacred eity of Jerusalem was many times taken, notably by the Roman general Titus (70 A. D.), by the Crusaders in 1009, and by Saladin in 1187. It remained thereafter under Mos-Saladin in 1187. It remained thereafter under Mos-lem power till 1918.

The population of Palestine contains many races, of whom the majority appear to be Bedouins, or set-tled Arabs, and a Iew of Persian and Kurdish descent. A Jewish population is made up in part from colonies planted from outside during the last fifty years.

The chief products of the country are olives, wine, fruits, and other semitropical products.

There are no workings of valuable minerals.

During the World War a railroad line was completed Irom Egypt to Jerusalem, from which there are connections by rail north and northward to Damascus, Beirut, and Aleppo.

The area of the former Turkish vilayet of Jerusalem is about 6,600 square miles, and the population, in 1915, about 350,000; but the horders of the state of Palestine, which is under the mandate of Great Britain, contain about 9,000 square miles and a total population (1919) of about 650,000.

PARAGUAY.

Historical Outline.

PARAGUAY is one of the South American states not touching the ocean. Its chief city, Asunción, was founded by Ayolas in the fall of 1536. After the abandonment of Buenos Aires by the Spaniards, Asunción became the capital of the whole region of the Plata. Paraguay was a dependency of Bucnos Aires, when, in 1811, it rose against the Spanish authorities and defeated the Argentine leader Bel-grano. The consulate, established in 1812, was sup-planted two years later by the dictatorship of General Francia, who held undisputed sway until 1840 A second brief consulate was succeeded by the presi-dency of Don Carlos López. After him his son Don Francisco López ruled from 1862 for seven years over what was called the Republic of Paraguay. His ambition and egotism involved Paraguay in wars with Brazil and the Argentine Republic, but on April 1, 1870, López was killed and Paraguay crushed at the battle of Aquidaban. From that date Paraguay, although troubled by revolutions in 1908, 1911, 1912, and 1915, has shown great industrial progress.

PERSIA.

Historical Outline.

Few existing nations go farther back for their origin than does Persia. Ancient history takes note of Iran as one of the earliest seats of civilization. Following the old empire of Bactria came that of the Medo-Under the Achæmenian kings (559-330 Persians. B. c.) Persia was a conquering power, the dominion of which was extended westward to Greece, eastward to the Indus, southward to Ethiopia, and northward to the countries above the Caspian.

The Persians made successful war with almost every kingdom upon their borders, until Alexander the Macedonian turned the tide of conquest brief Greek ascendancy was succeeded by the dy-nasty of the Seleucidae, and that by the Parthian The Romans held the country for a time, including the conquest of Persia by Trajan and the subsequent campaigns of Severus. The Sassanian Empire followed, from the third century to the period of the Moslem conquest. The Persians repeatedly conquered parts of western India, and have left a mark on its religion and literature. Under the Abbasside caliphs Persia again became a great empire, the transformation of which into modern Persia may be dated from the death of Abbas III., in the year 1736. At that time the ambitious Nadir became shah. His northern conquests and wars in the west justified his reputation as one of the greatest of the shahs.

The history of Persia during the latter half of the eighteenth century is largely an account of feuds and revolutions. The Kajar dynasty was established with the accession of Aga Mohammed in 1794, who since 1779 had contended for the throne in a civil Fath Ali Shah was proclaimed in 1798; then followed a war with Russia, which led to diplomatic relations between Persia and England, and Persia and Napoleon I. cultivated friendly relations France. with the shah.

Persia, however, has never entered into the European system; and the Western states have not much concerned themselves with the course of Persian events. Mohammed Shab sent an army against Herat in 1837, and thus came into collision with the British. His son, Nasr-ed-Din Shah, during the Crimean War (1854-56), entered into secret relations with Russia, and it was only after the treaty of peace that friendly relations were again declared between the shah and the Western governments.

boundaries with Argentina; El Chaco territory to be arbitrated.

Great Britain in the nineteenth century adopted the policy of maintaining an envoy at the Persian court. In 1862 the Anglo-Indian telegraph was carried through Persia from London by Swedish officers.

The area of Persia is estimated at 628,000 square area of Persia is estimated at 628,000 square. carried through Persia from London by way of Te-beran and Bagdad. In 1873 and again in 1878 the shah visited London and other Western cities, where he was received with great distinction. In 1881 the international boundary between Persia and Russia was peacefully established. Nasr-ed-Din held the throne for forty-eight years, and was then, in 1896, assassinated by a fanatic. The Persian rule passed without controversy to his son Muzaffar-ed-Din.

Between 1899 and 1907 Russia and Great Britain 1721. Persia conquered by Afghans. were rivals for the control of the kingdom. The Russian Bank lent Persia $20,000,000 of which more Persian power and greatly extends it; but the emthan half was squandered by the shah. In return Russia obtained a valuable concession and threat-ened Great Britain's naval supremacy in the Persian Gulf. In 1899 Lord Lansdowne stated in the House of Lords that Great Britain would resist by all means in its power the attempt of any other nation to obtain a naval base on the Gulf; and in 1903 Lord Curzon, viceroy of India, made a naval demonstration,

The rivalry of Russia and England in central Asia extended to Persia. As a part of a general clean-up of the situation they came to an agreement in 1907 in which Persia was not consulted, by which Great Britain agreed not to seek any political or commercial concessions or to interfere with Russia in the northern zone; while in the southern zone which bordered upon Afghanistan, Great Britain was to have free hand. The central zone was regarded as a neutral belt in which either country might obtain concessions. In case Persia should fail to meet her liabilities in regard to loans previously contracted, Great Britain and Russia reserved the right to as sume control of the Persian revenues within their respective spheres of influence. In addition Russia admitted the special interests of Great Britain in the Persian Gulf. This was virtually a partition of the ancient land.

In 1907 Mohammed Ali Mirza succeeded to the throne and a self-constituted Assembly demanded To this he that he rule as a constitutional monarch. agreed. Revolution broke out, the shah was throned and his eleven-year-old son proclaimed shah and a representative government established (1909). In 1911 W. Morgan Shuster, an American, was made treasurer-general with full powers of direction and control. The ex-shah invaded Persia with considerable forces, but was defeated. Russia demanded the dismissal of Shuster, and the Persians were forced to comply. Russia nevertheless invaded the country and occupied Tabriz. In 1913 the British and Russian governments agreed to advance $2,000,-000 to Persia and in return each received concessions for railways. Ahmed Mirza was then crowned shah and in 1918 Persia informed Holland that she regarded the treaties imposed on her in recent years, especially the Russo-British treaty of 1907 fixing the spheres of interest, as no longer binding.

Organization.

Government. Until 1906 the shah, within the limits imposed by the Mohammedan religion, was an absolute ruler. The only limit upon his power was the influence of the leading doctors of the law. In 1906 a representative government, called National Council, was in theory established but never properly constituted; and since 1915 it has ceased to exist as a legislative or administrative body. The govern-ment is in the hands of a self-designated cabinet.

Religion. 8,500,000 of the population are Mohammedans of the Shiite sect, 850,000 of the rival Sunnite sect. There are about 10,000 Parsis or followers of Zoroaster, 50,000 Armenians, 30,000 Nestorians, and 40,000 Jews.

Education. Various Moslem colleges are sup-Education. Various Moslem colleges are supported by public funds in which the students are instructed in the Mohammedan religion and the Persian and Arabic literature. In 1849 a polytechnic school was opened at Teheran and there are also military colleges. Within recent years many schools modeled on military lines have been established and the whole educational system is undergoing radical

Industry and Labor. Persia has from time immemorial been regarded as a garden country, not-withstanding the vast areas of desert. The products range from those of the north temperate zone to those of the tropics. Next to Arabia, Persia leads in the production of medicinal gnms. All cereal grains and many of the common fruits, such as apples, peaches, apricots, plums, quinces, figs, dates, and oranges, are produced in ahundance.

The oil fields of the Caspian region are extremely rich and in 1916-17 more than $17,000,000 worth of oil was exported. There are considerable mineral deposits, iron, lead, copper, and coal—none of them developed. The most important exports of Persia, besides petroleum, are, in the order of their value, as follows: dried fruits, opium, animals (live stock), cotten, rice, and skins.

Defense. The army consists of a small force at the capital of not more than 2,000 men and two brigades with their headquarters at Shiraz and Ker-

PERU.

Historical Outline.

In Peru was developed the highest native civilization in either of the Americas. In the highlands which extend into Bolivia the kingdom of the Piruas was established, probably as early as 800 a. D., and ruins of vast masonry edifices are found at Tiahua-naco near the southern shore of Lake Titicaca and at This empire was overthrown about 1000 A. D., and about 1230 the Inca Empire was established at Cuzco. A wonderful system of roads and bridges was built through the mountains, temples and fortresses were built with marvelous skill. The workers in metals showed great variety and originality of design, while the textiles which have survived show perfection of technique and pattern. fully planned system of land tenure and colonization provided for all the wants of the people. The native government, however, was fierce and tyrannical.

The Spaniards entered Peru in 1527. Just be

Just before their coming a civil war had raged between Huascar and Atahualpa, and the people were divided. 1533 the Spanish conquest was completed. Quito, northern Ecuador, part of New Granada, Charcas (modern Bolivia), and northern Chile had been invaded and conquered. In 1535 Pizarro founded Lima and made it his capital. The abundance of gold excited the Spaniards and they treated the natives with cruelty unusual even for them. made a viceroyalty which included the whole of Spanish South America, but in 1718 New Granada was set off; in 1776 La Plata, and even Chile and Quito, were not wholly subordinate.

In 1780 the Indian natives, always numerous, but as a rule not formidable to the Spanish ascendancy, rose in rebellion under their hero, Tupac Amaru. The insurgents, however, were not able to hold their own against the Spaniards and were left in a worse condition than before.

When the insurrections against Spanish rule broke out in the north and east, Peru was the center of the Spanish power in South America and the Spanish military strength was concentrated at Lima. sequently the risings in the more distant provinces such as Chile and Buenos Aires were successful. Independence, however, depended on destroying the power of the viceroy at Lima.

San Martín, the Argentine general, brought a contingent of the Argentine army across the Andes and the Chilean troops landed on the Peruvian coast in 1820, protected by a fleet of armed ships under the command of Lord Cochrane, an Englishman. San Martin was enthusiastically received and proclaimed the independence of Peru at Lima, July 28, 1821. The Spanish rallied after one defeat, but Boliyar arrived at Lima to organize an attack upon the Spanish viceroy in the interior. In 1824 the final battle of Ayacucho was fought, in which the viceroy and all his officers were taken prisoners and the Spanish power finally was overthrown. In 1826 Callao, the

It was only after 1845 that order was restored in Peru, but here, as in the other countries of South America, the people divided into factions and presidents were made and deposed by military violence. No stable government was secured in Peru.

In 1864 Spain seized the Chincha Islands which had valuable guano deposits, intending to hold them until the Spanish claims against Peru should be sat-Although the islands were restored, a body of Peruvian revolutionists declared war against Spain, and the Spanish admiral bombarded Callao. In 1868 an era of speculation began which continued until 1876 when a financial crisis produced general bankruptey, and then war with Chile broke out.

Chile alleged that Peru and Bolivia had formed an alliance against her, but the true object was to obtain possession of the rich deposits of guano and the nitrate beds on the Bolivian and Peruvian coasts. Severe fighting occurred between 1873 and 1883 and both Bolivia and Peru were crushed. By the treaty of 1883 Chile obtained absolute cession of the province Tarapacá and ten years occupation of the districts of Tacna and Arica, the ownership of which was to be decided by a popular vote at the expiration of the period, a voto which was never taken.

From this war Peru has not yet recovered.
Boundary disputes with Bolivia, 1908, Brazil, 1910, and Ecuador, 1911, have been settled by arbitration, and revolutions have been frequent, the last in 1919 In 1918 war threatened between Chile and Peru, but through the influence of the United States the differences were settled and the United States acted as mediator in the boundary dispute.

Peru is rich in minerals and produces over $20,000,000 worth of copper, $10,000,000 worth of petroleum, $8,000,000 worth of silver, although the gold mines have almost ceased to be profitable.

The area of Peru is 722,461 square miles, but the boundaries of some portions are not yet determined. The last census was taken in 1876 and showed a population of 2,660,881; the Lima Geographical Society estimated in 1896 that the population was 4,620,201, but there are grave doubts whether the population is actually increasing.

Historical Outline.

THE state of Poland originated in the Slav migrations of the 6th century and occupied the inland plains which are drained by the Vistula River. Here in the 10th century a Slavic state under the Piast dynasty was founded, which checked the Teutonic movement to the east. In the year 1000 A.D. the Emperor Otto III. recognized Boleslaus I. as king of Poland. During the 12th century the Piast dynasty declined and Poland was broken up into several principalities. In the 13th century the terrible Tatar invasion ravaged and depopulated the land.

The Poles were now so weak that they became a prey to the heathen Lithuanians and Old Prussians. These peoples were a separate branch of the Aryan race, being neither Slav nor Teuton. In 1386 the Lithuanian Prince Jagello married the daughter of the Polish king, and Poland and Lithuania were united against the Germans. This kingdom of Poland-Lithuania waged a terrible strug-gle with the Teutonic Knights, whom they finally defeated at the hattle of the Tannenberg in 1410; and in 1466 a peace was made by which the Teutonic Knights ceded West Prussia to Poland, but retained East Prussia as vassal of the Polish crown. thus gained access to the sea. Under Polish rule West Prussia became partly Polonized, although the towns, especially Danzig, remained German.

Under the Jagellon dynasty a succession of able kings made Poland-Lithuania a great power. Although the old Polish provinces of Pomerania and Si-lesia were not recovered, the union with Lithuania brought an immense extent of territory to the east. Russia, which had just suffered from the terrible Tatar invasions, lost to Lithuania the territory beyond the Dnieper, almost as far as the Black Sea. immense region was occupied by the Poles and Lith-uanians who cruelly oppressed the Russian peasants and reduced them to a condition of serfdom.

The Jagelion dynasty became extinct in 1572, and thenceforward the Polish nobility, 60,000 in all, had the right to elect a king. The nobles split into fac-tions and the country was plunged into anarchy. The principle of "liberum veto," or unanimous consent, crippled the government and led to violence and despotism. Poland's weakness attracted the greed of the great powers. In 1772 Russia, Prussia, and Austria united in despoiling Poland by carving ont the First Partition. Russia received the eastern part of Lithuania: Austria, East Galicia; Prussia, most of Polish Prussia. In the Second Partition (1793) Russia took the greater part of Lithuania; Prussia, Danzig, and Thorn, and the whole of Great Poland, which became Southern Prussia. In 1795, by the Third Partition, Poland reased to exist as an independent state; Prussia took the region between the Vistula and the Bug and Niemen and part of Cracow; Austria took West Galicia; and Russia, all that remained. During the Galicia; and Russia, all that remained. During the Napoleonic wars the kingdom of Poland was temporarily revived as the Duchy of Warsaw, but the Congress of Vienna redrew the lines of division, giving the larger share, including Warsaw, to Russia; while Prussia and Austria got comparatively little.

The annihilation of the Polish state did not extinguish the Polish nationality. Old Poland had been divided between the tyrannical aristocrats and the peasants. Under foreign control all classes alike suffered oppression and felt a common grievance. In 1830 the Russian Poles, exasperated by the report that the czar was to use their army to coerce the Belgians, broke into revolt. The Russian grand duke fled from Warsaw and open war ensued.

On the suppression of the rebellion Russian Poland was made a Russian province and severe meastres were taken to stamp out all national sentiments. The universities were closed, the church harshly treated, and the Polish recruits drilled in the Russian army. Alexander II. attempted a more liberal policy, but an insurrection broke out in 1863 and caused a return to the harsh methods. However, the sup-pression of the nobility and gentry has caused an improvement in the economic position of the Lithuanian and Polish peasants.

In that part of Poland which fell to Prussia similar attempts at breaking down the national spirit were made. The German language was taught in the schools and German colonists were settled in the schools and German colonists were settled in the territory. In Austria, however, the Poles were treated more liberally and practically given autonomy in Galicia. Yet the Poles of all sections never lost the hope of a united and independent Poland.

The World War was Poland's opportunity. In March, 1915, Russia at last granted to Poland a limited form of self-government, hoping to prevent the Poles from becoming allies of the Central Powers, who had invaded Poland and were rapidly driving the Russians back By the end of 1915, the Germans and Austrians occupied the whole country, and on November 5, 1916, the Central Powers pro-claimed the independence of Poland, but neither determined the boundaries nor established a constitution. In October, 1918, a constituent assembly was elected to frame a constitution establishing universal suffrage, male and female, direct, secret, and proportional. By the treaties formed at the Peace proportional. Proportional. By the telephone formany and the Al-lied powers recognized the independence of Poland and agreed to accept whatever boundaries the Allied powers should determine. The city and port of Danzig, however, was established as a free city under the protection of Poland

Organization.

Government. Poland is now a republic under a president and a Council of Ministers who are responsible to Parliament. Ignace Paderewski was the first prime minister; Joseph Pilsudski president.

Industry and Labor. Poland is an important agricultural country, her principal crops being rye, wheat, oats, and barley. There are important mines, particularly coal, iron, and zinc; and in Galicia oil is found. Textile industries are important, and Lódź in Russian Poland was the center of the iron industry.

Religion. The great majority of the people are Religion. The great majority of the people are Roman Catholics, but there is no established church and all denominations are tolerated. Fierce prejudice against the Jews has led to many attacks.

Education. In former Russian and Austrian Poland there were in 1919 over 10,000 public schools, with an attendance of over 1,600,000. The University of Warsaw had, in 1916-17, 2,500 students.

A Polish estimate gives the probable area of the new Republic as 141,854 square miles and the population about 20,000,000. lation about 30,000,000.

Historical Outline.

PORTUGAL is one of the oldest states of Europe, the Portis Galorum of the Romans, yet it has had a very recent political development. Under the Roman Empire the country, then occupied by Gallic peo-Empire the country, then occupied by Gallic peo-ples, was called Lusitania. Afterwards it was a Visigothic dependency. Later it resisted the sur-rounding Moors. In the eleventh century it came into the hands of the Duke of Burgundy, and was recognized in 1143 as an independent kingdom under Alfonso I. The Burgundian dynasty ended in 1385 with the accession of John 1, of the House of Aviz.

This was the age of discovery. Prince Henry the Navigator, the son of John, initiated and supported a series of voyages along the coast of Africa, which culminated in the voyage of Da Gama to India (1497). This expansion went on during the reign of Emanuel, the Great or Happy (1495-1521), and the Portuguese Empire was founded which included valuable possessions in India, the East, Africa, and Brazil. In 1581 Philip II. of Spain forced Portugal to recognize his authority; for nearly 60 years it was a June 4. France creates an autonomous Polish army under French command at the western front. Sept. 12. Central Powers drop the "Polish State" project, and organize a regency council the nation rebelled, and the Duke of Braganza was proclaimed king under the title of John IV. Independence was won by the decisive battle of Monte ownership Claros (1665). During the seventeenth century the Spanish Bourbons long hoped to reëstablish the Spanish ascendancy and their policy was hostile toward Portugal in 1737 when formal independence was proclaimed. At this time the reigning sover-cign was John V., whose high character and influence

Meanwhile the scafaring and adventures in the East reacted upon the national intellect, and an age of literature and art was opened. Lisbon in the six-teenth century was one of the intellectual centers of Europe, the home of poets, historians, and philosophers, of whom Camoens is the most celebrated.

In 1750 Joseph I, became king — a reign of disaster. Lisbon was wrecked by the earthquake of 1755; and one half of the capital was destroyed. The authority of the state passed into the hands of the ecclesiastics and the monarchy was dependent on The Marquis of Pombal reformed foreign support. the financial and commercial system, established sugar, silk, and woolen industries, fostered colonial development and tried to establish commercial inde-pendence. The order of the Jesuits was expelled from Portugal and the funds obtained from the confiscation of the property were used for education.

Portugal had long been a kind of trade dependency of England. During the French Revolution Portugal remained neutral until 1801 when a Franco-Spanish army compelled Portugal to cede a frontier fortress to Spain, to pay an indemnity, and to exclude British ships from the ports. In 1808 Portugal was in the hands of the French. Napoleon declared that the House of Braganza (Bragança) had forfeited its throne. The Braganza family fled to Brazil and for nearly fifteen years remained in Rio de

In the meantime the British had driven the French from Portugal and under a new constitution (1821) John VI. resumed the throne. His son, Dom Pedro, remained behind, first as prince regent and later as emperor of Brazil (see Brazil). When his father died, in 1826, Dom Pedro might have become king of Portugal, but he chose to send his daughter Maria instead. Her younger brother, Dom Miguel, usurped the throne, but England compelled him to Frequent revolutions and insurrections occurred In 1889 Carlos I. succeeded to until 1870. His country was involved in disputes with throne. Great Britain and Germany over African territory, and more than one collision took place between the Portnguese and the British forces; in 1893 these boundary disputes were settled. In 1892 the ex-travagant management of the railways which were guaranteed by the state caused such a deficit that the Portuguese government committed a formal act of bankruptcy by issuing a decree reducing the amount then due to foreign bondholders by two thirds

The political condition of Portugal was unhealthy. The two regular parties were run by professional politicians, who manipulated the election returns and kept ont Republican and Independent candidates Finally, in 1906, a dictatorship was established under João Franco, a man conspicuous for his integrity, energy, and courage, who set out to reform the national finances and administration. King Carlos was accused of financial irregularity and attacked by the Republicans. Passion rose to the point where the king and the crown prince were assassinated (1908) and the second son, Manuel, became king. A coalition ministry representing all parties was formed and Manuel swore to uphold the constitution. In 1910 the Republican soldiers at Lisbon, aided by the warships, attacked the municipal guards and after severe street fighting became masters of the capital. The king fled to England and a republic was proclaimed, which was officially recognized by powers.

The life of the new republic has not been tranquil The separation of church and state was decreed and the monks and nuns expelled. Monarchist out-breaks occurred from time to time, and one presi-dent, Doctor Sidonio Paes, was assassinated (1918). With the outbreak of the World War, Portugal announced its intention of fulfilling its treaty obligations to Great Britain in 1916. The German ships lying in Portuguese harbors were seized, Germany declared war, and Portuguese regiments were sent to the lines in northern France.

Organization.

Government. The constitution of 1911 provides for two chambers: a National Council of 164 elected by direct suffrage for three years; and a second chamber of 71 elected by the numicipal councils and renewher of 71 elected by the infinite years. The president of the republic is elected by both chambers for four years, but cannot be reëlected. The president appoints the ministers, but they are responsible to and may be removed by Parliament.

Only recently has free has been made in building railways. ownership become the right of the people. chief agricultural products are wheat, rye, and oats; wine is also produced in large quantities, as is ofive oil and figs and other fruits. A fifth of the area of the country is covered by forests; the cork furnishes one of the principal sources of wealth. Portugal has minerals, but because of the lack of coal and cheap transportation many of the most valuable mines are unworked. The fisheries are important, especially of sardines and tunny fish. The most characteristic Portuguese industry is the manufacture of azulejos, or porcelain tiles, an art inherited from the Moors.

Religion. Before the establishment of the public the national religion was Roman Catholic, although other forms of faith and practice were tolerated. The great number of monasteries and convents exercised influence not only in religion, but in politics. With the establishment of the republic state support for the maintenance of the church was abolished. The conventual establishments of Portugal were nominally suppressed by a decree in 1834 and their property was supposed to be confiscated for the benefit of the state. Nevertheless, several such establishments were formed in later years, and later suppressed by the Republicans

Education. There are three kinds of education in Portugal: (1) Primary, which is compulsory and rigorously enforced. In 1915 there were more than 6.700 elementary schools. (2) Secondary, which includes 32 secondary schools, with more than 11,000 of the last the teachers for which or terminal in the students, the teachers for which are trained in the normal departments of the universities of Lisbon and Coimbra. (3) Higher, which was reorganized in 1911. There are now three universities—at Lisbon, Coimbra, and Oporto - with various faculties. There is also a technical school at Lisbon, special colleges for music and art, and a military academy.

Defense. The army of Portugal is raised by conscription and all adult males are liable to service between the ages of 17 and 45, but practically service begins at the age of 20. Service is required in the active army for ten years, ten years in the reserve, and eight in the territorial army. In the active army the recruits undergo a preliminary training from 15 to 30 weeks. from 15 to 30 weeks. Afterwards there are two weeks of training during the annual mobilization. The peace establishment of the active army consists of 30,000 men, but during the World War 65,-000 men were sent to France, and 35,000 European troops served in Angola and Mozambique. The Portuguese navy consists of three protected cruisers, variety of old gunboats, five destroyers, and four submarines.

The area of Portugal (including the Azores and Madeira) is 35,490 square miles and the population in 1911 was 5,957,985.

PORTUGUESE DEPENDENCIES.

The colonial empire of Portugal comprises 936,000 square miles with a population of about 8,735,000 It includes possessions both in Africa and Asia. August 15, 1914, partial autonomy was granted all Portuguese colonies; they have the right to establish their own codes of laws.

POSSESSIONS IN ASIA.

In India Portugal still holds Goa, on the Malabar coast, captured by Albuquerque in 1510 and formerly the capital of the Portuguese Empire in the cornerry the capital of the Fortuguese Empire in the East; Daman, north of Bombay, and Diu, a small island west of Daman. Besides the salt works in these colonies, in 1906 deposits of manganese were discovered. In China Portugal holds Macao, sinnated on an island at the month of the Si (West) River, near Canton. In the Malay Archipelago Portugal still controls the eastern portion of the is-land of Timor, the chief exports from which are coffee, sandalwood, and copra

ROUMANIA. Historical Outline.

The modern kingdom of Roumania comprises the former principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia. It also includes the territory of Dobrnja (Dobrogea) ceded by Turkey at the Congress of Berlin in 1878. The country lies between the Carpathians, the Pruth, the Black Sea, and the Danube.

The overwhelming majority of the population are of vast estates. colonists of the Roman province of Dacia and of the Moldavians who were of Slavic stock.

Ronmanian history begins with the foundation of the Wallachian state by Radul Negru in 1220. 1526 Wallachia was conquered by the Tinks. davian history begins with the reign of Stepben the Great (1458-1504), after whom the country was made tributary to Turkey. By the Treaty of Adrianople (1829) Turkish troops were withdrawn from the two principalities, and Russian influence became strong. In 1848 a revolutionary movement opposed Russian domination and for a time a Russian army occupied the territory to restore order. The native princes fled to Vienna and Austria, induced the Russians to withdraw, and occupied the provinces with a force to restore order.

The Treaty of Paris (1856) established local autonomy free from Turkish influence and rectified the frontier; and in 1861 the union of the two provinces was accepted and the election of Colonel Prince Alexander Joan I. was ratified. In 1866 a revolution forced Prince Alexander to abdicate, and Prince Charles of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen was elected domn (lord) of Roumania as Carol (Charles)I

Roumania joined the Russian troops after Russia declared war upon Turkey in 1877. During the long reign of King Charles 1. (as prince, 1866-1881: as king, 188I-1914), Roumania steadily progressed and developed a lively consciousness of nationality. The fact that large numbers of people of the Roumanian race lived under Austrian rule in Transylvania and under Russia in Bessarabia led to the desire for a greater Rou-mania. In the first Balkan War of 1912 (see Turkey, Bulgaria, Greece, Serbia), Roumania took no part. In the second Balkan War (1913), however, Roumania attacked Bulgaria in the rear and forced the ession of a strip of territory south of the Dobruja (Dobrogea)

But the Dobruja was overrun by General von Mackensen with a force of Bulgarians, Turks, and Germans, and the armies from Transylvania were called. Von Falkenhayn, the German commander, fell upon these armies in their retreat. Bucharest was abandoned, and the whole country fell into German control. May 6, 1918, Roumania was forced to sign a definitive peace with the Central Powers, thereby losing her Black Sea coast and many important mountain passes

On the overthrow of the Central Powers, the Roumanian people reasserted themselves. New elections were held for Parliament and a Liberal ministry was installed. The new government pro-posed many political and social reforms, among which were the establishment of universal suffrage and the distribution of land to the peasantry by the expropriation of the large estates. Moreover, the Liberal government sought to realize Roumania's ambition for a combination of all Roumanian people and a union was established with Transylvania, while almost constant warfare was kept up with Soviet Russia and Bolshevist Hungary, largely, however, for territorial purposes. In 1919 a Roumanian army invaded Hungary and occupied Budapest in defiance of the wishes of the Allied Powers, retreating only when Roumania had extorted territorial compensation and partial reparation for some of her suffering during the war.

RUSSIA.

Historical Outline.

The history of Russia may be said to begin in 862, when Rurik and his two brothers, who were probably Northmen, entered Russia at the invitation of the Slav and Finnish tribes and founded a capital of the Slav and Finnish tribes and founded a capital at Novgorod. They at once began to conquer the country, and in two centuries had established themselves at Kiev, threatened Constantinople, checked the nomadic tribes of the steppes, and formed alliances with Poland, Hungary, Norway, and France. During this period, Russia consisted of a large number of independent principalities ruled. of a large number of independent principalities ruled over by the descendants of Rurik, of which Novgorod was the most important.

From 1238 to 1462 Russia was overrun by the Mongols and Tatars, one tribe of whom, known as the "Golden Horde," built a capital at Sarai on the lower Volga. Their chief, Genghis Khan, created a vast empire stretching from China to the Danube. a vast empire stretching from China to the Danube. In 1380 a coalition of Russian princes under Dimitri Donskoi defeated the "Golden Horde" at Kulikovo and later (1462) the Russians under Ivan III. Iounded the exardom of Museovy, the first three rulers of which had a united reign of 122 years. They established an absolute autoeracy on the Asiatic model and suppressed the independent principalities. Of these rulers Ivan IV., commonly known as Ivan the Terrible, ruled for over fifty years and first took the title of Czar of all the Russias. He unsparingly put down all movements toward independence within the empire and pushed the frontier eastward at the expense of the Tatars. Here was settled a class of Russian colonists whose descendants became the Cossacks, the best fighters in the Russian military force. Russia also attempted to expand to the west at the expense of Lithnania and thus came in conflict not only with the Lithuanians, but also with Poland and Sweden.

Ivan was succeeded by his son, Feodor I., in whose reign the agricultural laborers were forbidden to migrate from one estate to another, thereby fixing on the country the institution of serfdom. There folthe country the institution of serfdom. There fol-lowed a period of civil war and disorder, ending with the election of Mikhail Romanov as Czar in 1613, who founded the Romanov dynasty. This native dynasty was much Germanized by marriages with Germans. In the reign of Alexis (1645-76), the successor of Mikhail, Russia intervened in the Ukraine, and as a result of the war with Poland gained territory to the middle course of the Dnieper River, which thus became the boundary between Russia and Poland.

The great sovereign of the Romanov dynasty was Peter the Great (1682-1725), who more than any other monarch brought Western civilization to Rus-With autocratic high-handedness he abolished some of the most cherished customs, and abandoned Moscow for his newly created capital of St. Peters Story (now Petrograd), which was founded on the Neva to serve as "a window through which his people might look into Europe." In Icreign affairs Peter the Great was an expansionist. At first he desired with the aid of the European powers to drive the Turk from Europe; but finding no response to this idea he turned his attention to the problem of reaching the Baltie. He made an alliance with the king of Poland by which Russia, Denmark, and Poland should acquire the Swedish provinces along the Baltie. But he had not counted upon Charles Which a large part of the XII. of Sweden, who came to the defense of the Swedish possessions and carried on the Northern War for more than twenty years. Finally, by the Treaty Afghanistan on the south.

of Nystad (1721), Peter acquired for Russia the provinees of Ingria, Karelia, Livonia, Esthonia, and part | reaction.

On the death of Peter the Great without male heirs, the crown passed to several sovereigns in the female line who married German princes, and German influence greatly increased. In 1762 Catherine II., a German by birth, came to the throne and Iollowed a strong and ruthless policy which caused Russia to be recognized as one of the great powers. Peter the Great had attempted to establish some essentials of good government, to introduce the arts, and to develop the natural resources of Russia. Catherine did the same, and attempted to raise Russia to an intellectual level with western Europe. Secondary schools were founded in the principal towns, an academy was established at St. Petersburg, and a taste for French literature spread rapidly throughout Russia.

In loreign affairs Catherine pushed the frontiers of Russia south and west. Her first step was to aequire Kurland in 1795. She joined with Austria and Prussia in the first partition of Poland in 1772 (see Poland); in the second partition of Poland, in 1793, by which Russia acquired the eastern provinces, ineluding the Ukraine; and in the final partition, in 1795, by which Poland disappeared from the map.

To the south Russia also was successful in acquiring, by the Treaty of Küchük Kainarja (1774), the liberation of the region of the Bug, of Crimea and Kuban, the opening of the Bosporus and Dardanelles to Russian vessels, and the right of intervention in the Danubian provinces. Catherine had even more ambitious plans, and desired to partition Turkey as Poland had been divided. In alliance with the Emperor Joseph II., war was declared upon Turkey in 1787. Although Russia was successful, Austria signed a separate peace; and in 1792, by the Peace of Jassy, Russia gained additional territory between the Bng and Dniester and privileges in the Dannbian Principalities, although the Turks remained at Constantinople.

When the French Revolution broke out Catherine abstained from joining the opposing coalition, hoping to be able to solve the Eastern Question unre-strained by other European powers. Before such an strained by other European powers. Before such an opportunity presented itself, she died and was succeeded by her son, Paul, whose reign of four years left little mark on Russian history. Paul was succeeded by his son, Alexander J. (1801–25), in the early part of whose reign liberal movements took certain oppressive measures were repealed, and schools, colleges, and universities were founded.

NINETEENTH-CENTURY PERIOD

Alexander I., however, is best known for his opposition to Napoleon. At first he believed that his aims were not irreconcilable with those of the First Consul, and made the Peace of Tilsit after the defeat of Austria in 1807. Russia would not carry out Napoleon's Continental system, and Napoleon invaded the country and was frightfully defeated in 1812 in the memorable retreat from Moscow. From this time on Alexander was head and front of the coalition against the French emperor; and after 1814 became, with Count Metternich, the apostle of reaction in the restoration of Europe.

During the reign of his successor, Nieholas I. (1825-55), Russia again attempted to settle the Eastern Question, but was thwarted by the intervention of Great Britain, France, and Sardinia in the rimean War and forced to sign the Peace of Paris 1856), which ended her advance in that quarter. The reign of Alexander II. (1855-81) was an epoch of great reforms. The serfs were liberated, the courts reformed, the elected provincial and dis-trict councils were given charge of the roads, schools, and hospitals; the natural resources of the country were developed, and a considerable amount of liberty allowed to the press. These reforms, however, were all Irom above downward. The people had no share in their government, no representative assembly, and no one was safe from secret "administra-tive proceedings" which resulted in death or banishment. The courts, though an improvement over the old tribunals, did not always administer justice. The liberty of the press was dependent on the temper of police officials. Revolutionary societies were formed, spreading at first purely academic doctrines, but later preaching Nihilism. To meet this move-ment a secret police was organized, arbitrary arrests and banishments took place, and an era of oppression was established. After frequent attempts upon his life Alexander was assassinated March 13, 1881, on the eve of announcing a representative constitution.

In foreign policy Alexander attempted to expand both sonth and eastward. In the south he fought the successful Turkish War (1877-78) and dictated the Peace of San Stefano, in sight of Constantinople, but was deprived of the fruits of his victory by the Congress of Berlin. He was brilliantly snecessful in Asiatic expansion, and began a movement by which a large part of the Amur basin was acquired; then he made Russia master of practically all the territory between Siberia on the north and Persia and

The reign of Alexander III. (1881-94) was one of reaction. The local self-government in the towns and villages was restricted, and the liberalism which existed in his father's reign was suppressed. He at-tempted to establish Russian nationality throughout his vast domains, and therefore suppressed the local institutions and, as far as possible, the native lan-guage of the various national groups which went to make up his empire, especially in Finland and the Baltic Provinces Russia's foreign policy was also changed. Although at first Alexander joined the secret revival of the Dreikaiserbund, or Three Emperors' League (1884-87), he gradually turned toward France, with which country a military convention was made in 1894. Not until 1895, however, was the word "alliance" used of the understanding between France and Russia. In Asia he extended his influence to the south, even entering Afghanistan, but was checked in that direction by the energetic preparation of the British, and a boundary convention was signed in 1887.

Nicholas II. (1894–1918) was somewhat more liberal than his father, but he held the same ideas concerning the spread of Russian nationality thus the pushed to the extreme, but unsuccessfully, the attempted policy of Russification in Finland. In the Balkan affairs Nicholas 11 reversed the policy of aloofness and acted as the protector of the Balkan In Asia, however, he continued his lather's policy of expansion, and by the construction of the Trans-Siberian Railway he attempted to dominate northern China and the little kingdom of Korea. Thus, in 1895 Russia deprived Japan of her conquests in the successful Japanese-Chinese War (see China, Japan), and subsequently acquired from China a lease of Port Arthur, which became a Irontier fortress. As a result of Russian expansion Japan declared war 1904). The Russo-Japaneso War (see Japan) was a defeat for the Russians, who were beaten at sea, driven from northern Korea, deprived of Port Arthur, and pushed back in churia. After peace was made Russia, by diplomatic and peaceful means, attempted to acquire a dominant position in Manchuria, but was thwarted by Japan.

From its very beginning the war with Japan was denounced by some Russians as the work of a small minority for their own benefit; the sufferings of the war revealed the inefficiency of the government. The maintenance of peace and order within Russia as in the hands of the minister of the interior de Plehve, who pitilessly prosecuted the Liberals everywhere. In July, 1904, he was assassinated, an act approved by the revolutionary socialists, who maintained that in Russia violence was the only means possible to fight tyranny. The emperor somewhat mitigated the policy of repression — allowed more Ireedom of the press and permitted the provineial assemblies, the zemstvos, to send representa-tives to St. Petersburg to discuss the needs of the The Liberals demanded a constitution for eountry. The agitation continued, and on January 22, 1905, occurred "Bloody Sunday," when an immense number of workmen under the leadership of Father Gapon attempted to approach the palace and present their demands. They were attacked by the Cossaeks and a great number slain under the eyes of tho emperor. Disorders continued throughout the summer, and on August 19, 1905, the ezar announced that he would summon a Duma, to be merely a consultative body. Feeling that this concession was not sufficient the Liberals organized a general strike: and throughout the month of October Russia was cut off from the outside world, industry and commerce were paralyzed, and the schools, stores, and courts were closed.

Finally, on October 30, the ezar announced that he would summon the Duma and would guarantee that no law should come into force without its approval, but he refused the popular demand for a consti-tutional assembly. Moreover, he instituted the Council of the Empire, which consisted largely of appointed officials, as the upper chamber of the legisla-Then, before the Duma met, he issued certain decrees, organic laws which were beyond the power of the Duma to alter.

The Duma met May 10, 1906, and was in session for two months before it was dissolved by the emperor. It demanded amnesty for political offenders, reformation of the Council of the Empire, the granting of the town lands to the peasants on long-term leases, and, finally, the appointment of a ministry which should be responsible to it rather than to the emperor. This the ezar reinsed to grant and disemperor. This the ezar refused to grant and dis-solved the Duma July 22, 1906. A second Duma was summoned March 5, 1907.

but failed to satisfy the government, and sixteen of its members were arrested and many others indicted for carrying on revolutionary propaganda. On June 16, 1907, this Duma was dissolved and the czar, contrary to his promise made on the summoning of the first Duma, altered the electoral law, thereby giving to the landowners the power to choose a large majority of the members.

A third Duma was summoned November 14, 1907, and continued until September, 1912; it was unsuccessful in eheeking the power of the autocracy. Its greatest act was the law of 1909, which broke up the historic form of coilective ownership of land (the mir) and substituted individual ownership. But neither the third Duma nor the fourth, which was summoned in 1912, were much more than consultative bodies, the power of initiation remaining in the autocracy and the power to check the acts of the Duma in the Council of the Empire. The policy of Russification steadily continued, and although certain concessions were made in 1905 in Finland, and ancient liberties were restored in 1909, the Russian government determined to end the autonomy of that country and to incorporate it within the state.

WORLD-WAR PERIOD.

On the outbreak of the World War, August 1 1914, domestic affairs were in unstable equilibrium. The government ordered mobilization in answer to the mobilization of Austria and let it be known that it was the champion of the Slavie states in the Balkans. Refusing Germany's peremptory demands to demobilize, Russia accepted the war declared by Germany, invaded East Prussia, and won some initial successes; but was defeated at the Tannenberg and after some success was driven back to Warsaw. Russia was more successful in dealing with Austria and captured Przemyśl (March, 1915), but later in the same year was defeated to the north of Warsaw by Hindenburg and driven back in the south by von Warsaw and Vilno being finally cap-Mackensen, In 1916, under Brusilov, a great offensive took place. Hungary was invaded and consider-Austrian territory occupied.

These reverses and these victories were accompanied by great sacrifices and sufferings; and the government showed itself neither efficient nor free from German influence. The Duma, which just before the war had been dissatisfied with the repressive measures of the government, in 1915 gained the right to choose five members of the ministry and passed measures extending the franchise to the peasants. It was becoming extremely critical of the policy of the government, and on March 12, 1917, refused to dissolve on the order of the ezar. This was the signal for revolution and the first complete change of government since the first Romanov.

March 15 the czar abdicated. The Duma, in conference with the labor leaders, appointed a provisional cabinet headed by Prince Georges Lvov and Paul Milyukov as ministers of foreign affairs, and Aleksandr F. Kerenski, a Social Revolutionary, as minister of justice. The provisional government amounced a program of reforms which included freedom of speech, universal suffrage, the election of a constituent assembly, and a general grant of amnesty; and assurances were given the Allies that there would be no slacking on the part of Russia in the common struggle. A week later, however, the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates decided to hold a peace conference in some neutral country, and in June appealed to the labor organizations of the world for a peace without annexations or indemnities. They finally declared the Duma abolished and invested Kerenski with unlimited powers.

Kerenski attempted to carry on the war against Germany, but was thwarted by a decree of the Council on April 30, 1917, which vested the discipline of the army in soldiers' committees. Nevertheless, in July he launched an offensive along the Strypa and in three weeks captured 40,000 prisoners; but in the full flood of success the troops mutinied and fell into disorderly retreats. This was practically the end of the effective resistance of Russia to Germany.

On November 8, 1917, the extreme Social Demo-erats — the Bolsheviki — who believed in earrying the doctrines of socialism to their farthest logical eonclusions, overthrew Kerenski and his government, and declared that the final public authority rested in the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' They promised immediate peace, dis-Delegates. tribution of land among the peasants, and the convocation of a constituent assembly. In order to accomplish their first promise the Bolsheviki signed an armistice on December 17 and in March, 1918, signed the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk with the Central Powers, by which Russia gave up all claim to the Ukraine, Po land, Kurland, Lithuania, Fiuland, and western half of Livonia and Esthonia. In addition Russia relinquished the region of Batum, Kars, and Erivan to

The actual power, however, was in the hands of Lenin and Trotski, who through their control of the treasury and the army 14. ruthlessly suppressed all opposition.

Before the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk, Finland had declared its independence and it had been recognized by the Bolshevist government (January, 1918). The Ukraine region did likewise, and its independence was recognized later (May 23, 1918). Germany proclaimed an autonomous Poland and an independent Lithmania.

The Allied Powers, fearing that Germany might utilize the resources not merely of the eeded territory but of Russia itself, dispatched troops to the Murman Region on the northern coast of the Kola peninsula, and American, Japanese, and Czecho-Slovak troops, who occupied Vladivostok to protect the military stores, came in conflict with the Bolsheviki. August 9, Lenin deelared that Russia was at war with the Allies. Thus, for more than two years, Russia, shorn of some of her most important possessions, was cut off from the Western world and under the unchecked control of the most extreme adherents of Socialism, the Bolsheviki.

Under the rule of the Bolsheviki Russia suffered all the horrors of a social revolution. Thousands of the upper and middle classes were executed, property both in the form of capital and real estate was rnthlessly confiscated. Communism was attempted, the capitalistic industrial system was overthrown, and the theories of extreme socialization of industry established. Cut off from the rest of the world, unable to export her products and to import the necessary machinery, the transportation system in confusion, economic life was almost destroyed. sands upon thousands perished from starvation and in the disorders which attended the overthrow of the old system. Possessing a paper constitution, apparently of the most democratic sort, and passing many laws of a most liberal character, the power was concentrated in the hands of Lenin and Trotski and utilized for the fulfillment of their extreme social theories Resistance to the Bolshevist government was organized outside the center of the empire. In the east Admiral Kolchak, and in the south General Denikin, attempted to hold the fronts; while on the west the Poles, and farther north the Esthonians and Letts, attempted to cheek the Bolshevik power. In the extreme north the British troops on the Kola peninsula, and the Russian troops around Archangel, held their own. Yet at the beginning of the year 1920 little progress had been made in the overthrow of the Bolsheviki, and on January 2 the Esthonians signed a truce by which their independence was granted, thus recognizing the Bolshevik state. Soon after, the forces under Admiral Kolehak were dispersed and General Denikin was defeated; and on January 8 it was announced that the Allies would open trade with the cooperative societies in Russia. To this Lenin refused assent unless an armistice was A center of resistance to the Bolsheviki granted. still existed on the Black Sea coast, where Wrangel organized a force.

Government. Before the Revolution of 1905 the government of Russia was usually spoken of as an unlimited autocracy. All power in theory originated in the ezar and was exercised according to his directions. Nevertheless, the emperor was limited by certain fundamental laws and customs of the empire; as that the empire might not he partitioned, but must descend entire in order of primogeniture and by preference to the male heir; and that the emperor and empress must be members of the Eastern Orthodox Church. Further limitation on imperial power was the impossibility of one person exercising through such a vast domain all powers of government. Ministries, councils, and organs of local government, though nominally subject to the unchecked power of the emperor, carried out or neglected to carry out his will. The whole administration was honeycombed with corruption and there was a powerful German influence in public and industrial life.

In 1905 the emperor voluntarily limited his legislative power by declaring that no measure could become a law without the assent of the Duma. In 1906 the Council of the Empire was established as the upper house of the imperial legislature, and its assent was necessary for the passage of any law by the Duma. Above both, however, was the emperor with the absolute power of veto and the right to proregue or dissolve the Duma. The government from 1906 to 1907 might well be described as a self-limited autocracy, tempered by revolution and strikes.

The Council of the Empire (Gosudarstvenniy Soviet) consisted of 196 members, 98 of whom were norminated by the emperor and 98 elected. Of the elected members, 3 were returned by the monks, 3 by the secular elergy, 18 by the corporations of nohles, 6 by the academy of sciences and the universities, 6 by the ehambers of commerce, 6 by the industrial coun-

The large landed proprietors sat in person in the assembly while the small proprietors were represented by delegates. The largest taxpayers of the cities chose delegates directly to the electoral college, but the smaller taxpayers were searcely represented. The peasant delegates were elected by the volosts, which consisted of delegates chosen by the mirs, which were the communes of the various villages. Thus the peascommunes of the various villages. ants were represented only in the fourth degree, and would have received no representation in the Duma had not the law required that each class should be

At first sight the legislative powers of the Duma seemed large, but the legislative grant was subject to numerous restrictions. First, all measures dealing with the organization of the army and navy were outside of its province, being considered not as laws, but as administrative rules. Although the Duma had some power over the budget nearly one half of the expenditures of the country were beyond its con-Moreover, if the budget finally voted by the Duma was not sanctioned by the emperor, that of the previous year remained in force; and the government had power to levy new taxes to earry out new laws. Furthermore, the emperor had the power to issue ordinances having the force of law. Although these ordinances might not infringe the fundamental laws or statutes and must have been submitted to the Duma for its assent, yet, since the emperor had power to prorogue or dissolve the Duma as often as he pleased, temporary ordinances might easily become permanent. Finally, the ministers were appointed by the emperor and responsible to him, not to the Duma. In spite of these limitations the third Duma succeeded in establishing its position and in making a return to the old undisguised absolutism impossible.

Russia was divided into 78 governments, 21 provinces, and 2 districts. For the purposes of local government there were: (1) the mirs, (2) the zemstvos, (3) the municipal Dnmas. The mir, or the peasant village eommune, a Slav institution which existed from time immemorial, was very interesting. After the freeing of the serfs in 1861, the mirs were relieved from the jurisdiction of the landholding nobility and consisted of the heads of the honscholds of the village. A number of mirs were united into a volost, which had an assembly consisting of delegates of the mirs. The powers of self-government of both the mirs and volosts were limited, however, by the action of the police commissionaries, representing the central absolute government.

In "Old Russia" the 34 governments had provincial assemblies or zemstvos which consisted of a representative council and an executive board. The executive board was composed of five classes of delegates representing: (1) the large landed proprietors; (2) the small landholders; (3) the wealthy townsmen; (4) the less wealthy townsmen; (5) the volosts. The municipal Dumas were established in 1870 and consisted of delegates chosen from three groups of electors determined according to wealth. In the Duma, the zemstvos, and the municipal Dumas alike, the representation was by wealth and classes rather than by population or territory.

July 19, 1918, the fifth All-Russian Soviet eongress published a constitution for the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic. According to this constitution Russia is a republic of soviets, or councils, composed of workers', soldiers', and peasants' delegates; and all central and local anthority is vested in these soviets. The soviets are thus industrial or social groups not based on numbers or territorial areas. Private property and ownership of land was abolished; all forests, mines, and waters, all live stock, model estates, and agricultural concerns became national property. The state owns all factories, mines, railways, and other means of production and transportation. Every one is compelled to work, and a dictatorship of the proletariat was proclaimed.

Freedom of conseience, freedom of opinion, freedom of the press, and freedom of association are guaranteed by this constitution. Universal military service is incumbent on all citizens, but the privilege of defending the revolution with arms is reserved to the laboring class only. The political rights of Russian citizenship may be acquired without any formalities by residing in the territory of the Russian Republic for the purpose of labor. The Russian Republic is thus a socialistic community of all the laboring masses of Russia.

The highest authority in the state is the All-Russian Congress of Soviets, composed of representatives of town soviets on the basis of one delegate for every 25,000 electors, and of provincial congresses of soviets on the basis of one delegate for every 125,-000 inhabitants. The supreme legislative, administrative, and controlling body in the republic is an elective All-Russian Central Executive Committee of 200 members, chosen by the All-Russian Congress of This committee chooses the council of people's commissioners for purposes of administration.

The franchise is given to all citizens over 18 years of age who earn their livelihood by productive labor, without regard to religion, nationality, residence, or sex; and to sailors and soldiers in the Soviet army and navy. Thus the old political classes of laudowners, professional and business men, and government officials are totally excluded, so far as they still exist.

Industry and Labor. Most of the industries of Russia were still in the primitive stages of development till the twentieth century. It was ages before the European habits of life were substituted for the Asiatic. The terem, or harem, was long a Russian institution. About 1880 rapid advances were made in the European factory system. In many large towns were enormous factories employing vast numbers of workmen, which exemplified the worst and most dangerous features of modern industrialism. The crying need in Russia's industrial life is transportation, and although in 1913 there were more than 46,000 miles of railways and 153,000 miles of navigable rivers, canals, and lakes, vast regions of Russia were still in frontier conditions. Four years later were still in frontier conditions. Four the railroads were almost out of service.

In her natural resources Russia is one of the richest countries in the world. Her agricultural land is vast and much of it is still uncultivated. In 1913 it was estimated that ever 300,000,000 acres were under cultivation, and the cereal crop was apparently limited only by the lack of proper farm machinery and means of transportation. In central Asia and the Caucasus there are more than 1,800,000 acres under cotton cultivation; and in 1911 there were more than 200,000 acres of tobacco. There were about 550,000,000 acres of forests, which have always yielded a net profit.

The country is rich in all kinds of ore, and the min-ing industry steadily increased. Gold, platinum, silver, lead, zinc, copper, iron, coal, and salt are among the minerals found. The oil fields of Russia are va-ried and of unsurpassed wealth. In the Baku dis-trict alone, in 1913, 56,000,000 barrels were produced.

Factories in 1915 numbered over 14,000 and employed nearly 2,000,000 werkpeople. The chief industries were the manufacture of woolen, silk, and The chief cotton goods, leather, tallow, candles, seap, and metcotton goods, leather, tallow, candles, seap, and met-als, and flax spinning. Russia ranks third among the countries of the world in the production of fish and other sea food. In the year before the war the most valuable exports of Russia were cereals, lumber, wooden ware, flax, eggs, dairy preduce, furs, leather, oils, and hemp; and exports of 1,420,949,000 rubles (about $731,789,000) were shipped to Germany, to the United Kingdom, Holland, France, and other countries. In the same year her imports amounted countries. In the same year her imports amounted to 1,220,539,000 rubles (about $628,577,500).

The condition of labor, whether peasant or in manufactories, is now desperate. The high taxes, lack of communication, and want of appliances keep the peasants miserable. In the large, manufacturing towns the wages are low and the housing condi-tions wretched. Centuries of oppression have illfitted this class to enjoy political liberty or economic opportunity.

The Orthodex faith was the established religion of Russia. The emperor was the he of the church and had full appointing power, The emperor was the head though he delegated this generally to the Procurator of the Holy Synod. According to the latest census (1897), which is imperfect, the Orthodox Church included about two thirds of the population. There were 13,000,000 Mohammedans, 11,000,000 Roman Catholics, 5,000,000 Jews, 2,000,000 dissidents, and 1,000,000 Armenian Gregorians.

Education. Higher education was well cared for in Russia by 10 universities, to which should now be added two new universities established by the Bolsheviki, and the school of technology. January 1, 1914, over 1,800 middle schools cared for 700,000 students; and in 1910 over 2,000 special schools counted more than 223,000 pupils. Altogether, according to the Year Book of Russia of 1914, there were over 7,000,000 in attendance at school, of which number 5,000,000 were primary pupils. This is but a twen-6,000,000 were primary pupils. tieth of the population, and mostly urban at that. Historacy is very high in Russia. In the central Asian provinces only 6% of the people were able to read and write, in Siberia 16%, in the Caucasus 17%, in European Russia proper 30%.

Defense. The frontiers of Russia, before the war, particularly in the west, were well fortified. Military service was universal and compulsory, extending from the 20th to the 43d year and life service for the Cossacks, who are not a different race, but a group of military communities with whom the profession of arms is hereditary. The peace strength of fession of arms is hereditary. The peace strength of the armies of Russia in 1914 was above 1,300,000. After the Russo-Japanese war, Russia reorganized her navy, and in 1915 possessed a fleet of 6 dreadnoughts, 8 predreadnoughts, and 117 destroystill undetermined.

ers, in addition to other vessels. By January, 1920, thirteen armies were organized under Bolshev estimated to number more than 700,000 infantry

Service was compulsory upon all citizens.

Before the outbreak of the war the area of Russia was estimated at 8,247,624 square miles and its population about 166,561,000, including all the Asiatic possessions. Of these fully 20,000,000 per-ished in or as a result of the World War.

FORMER RUSSIAN POSSESSIONS.

By the Bolshevist revolution in 1917 the empire of Russia was broken up. Several independent or semi-independent states were formed or are in the process of formation. Of these Finland and Poland have been recognized by the United States and European powers and are described elsewhere. The former Baltic Previnces are fully treated on page 143. The independent states that have developed from them are treated separately (see Esthonia, Latvia, and Lith-uania). In Transcaucasia the Republic of Georgia has been erected out of former Russian provinces and the republies of Armenia and Azerbaijan have been formed in the regions south of Georgia, formerly held in part by Turkey and Persia (see Armenia AZERBAIJAN, and GEORGIA).

The Ukraine, still apparently a part of Russia, is treated below. Other states have at one time or another since 1917 set themselves up as independent. These, however, have now ceased to exist as states and form part of the present Russian Socialist Fed-eral Soviet Republic. Some of the more important of these temporary states were: the Republic of North Russia; the Murman, or Murmansk, Region; the Don Republic; the Tatar-Bashkir Republic; the Republic of White Russia; the Kurland Republic; the Tauride Republic; the Yakutsk Republic; the Republic of Eastern Karelia; and the Kuban Republic

THE UKRAINE (UKRAINIA)

The Ukrainians, sometimes known as Little Russians, and the Ruthenians, or Red Russians, occupy the plains stretching from Peland across the south of the former Russian Empire to the river Don, bordering on the Black Sea and the Sea of Azov. also found in eastern Poland, in Galicia, and slight extent in Reumania. They settled this region during the early centuries of the Christian Era, and in the 9th century founded a strong kingdom around Kiev, which was the center of Russian life until the Tatar invasion of the 13th century. At that time the kingdom of Ukrainia was overthrewn and the remnants in the west came under the Polish rule.

On the decline of the Tatar power Ukramian colonists pushed eastward from Poland and resettled their country, founding a military republic. This was displeasing to the Poles, who attempted to over-threw them in a series of wars which lasted until the 17th century. Not feeling strong enough to resist the Poles alone, the Ukrainians put themselves under the protection of Russia, which attempted to Russianize them and eppressed them as cruelly as the Poles had done. With the partition of Poland in the Poles had done. 18th century Russia acquired practically all of the Ukraine territory. In the 19th century there was a revival of Ukrainian race consciousness and literature, which by the beginning of the 20th century had made great headway, in spite of Russia's attempt to suppress it. The lauguage is a dialect of Russian.

November 21, 1917, the Ukrainian People's Republic was proclaimed, and a constitution was adopted December 23, 1917. At first the hetman, the head of the state, was supported by the Germans; but on December 16, 1918, German influence was removed and a ministry, under Martos, was appointed (April 25, 1919). The Allied Powers recognized the independence of the Ukrainians in March, 1918.

A large part of Ukrainia belongs to the "Black region of Russia, which yields large quantities of grain, particularly wheat, for export. Agriculture is thus the chief occupation. There are also valuable deposits of iron ere — the most available in Russia. These iron deposits are within 200 miles of rich coal deposits which assure a profitable development of the iron and steel industry. The other industries of the iron and steel industry. The other are sugar making, distilling, and tanning. there were 950,000 acres devoted to the sugar beet, yielding 3,200,000 tens of sugar.

The territory claimed by the Ukrainians embraces all the southwestern portion of former Russia, as outlined above, and also the Kuhan region between the Black Sea and the Caspian. The area of this territory is stated to be 498,000 square miles, and the population about 46,000,000.

SIBERIA.

Siberia was proclaimed as the Independent Republic of Siberia, with its capital at Tomsk, December, 1917. The first Siberian Duma, with 30 members, was opened February 5, 1918. On November 18, 1918, all the power was seized by Admiral Kol-chak, who summarily dealt with the attempts at democracy. In 1920 the Bolsheviki gained centrol of most of Siberia. The political status, however, of much of this former vast empire of Russia in Asia is

DEPENDENCIES IN ASIA.

Two states in Central Asia, Bokhara and Khiva, were, before the revolution of 1017, under the suzerainty of Russia. The khanate of Bokhara, south of Russian Turkestan, was founded by the Usbegs in the 15th century, after Tamerlane had crushed the "Golden Horde." The ameer of the country preclaimed a holy war against Russia in 1866, but was overcome, and in 1873 a treaty was signed by which Bokhara became virtually a Russian dependency. Silk, corn, fruit, tobacco, cotton, and hemp are produced as well as cattle, horses, and camels. The area of the state is 83,000 square miles and the population about 1,250,000, mostly Mohammedan.

Khiva is a khanate lying west of Bokhara, and was also founded by Usbegs after the fall of Tamerlane's empire. A Russian expedition in 1872 overcame the khan and compelled him to sign a treaty by which Khiva came under Russian control. The area is 24,000 sq. miles; the population is estimated at. 646,000.

FORMER BALTIC PROVINCES OF RUSSIA. Historical Outline.

THE BALTIC PROVINCES are situated on the eastern shore of the Baltic Sea, touching on the north the Gulf of Finland. The "provinces" under Russia were Esthonia, Livonia, Kurland, and St. Petershurg. Ancient Lithuania was incorporated into Kovno and Vilno, no official district retaining the name.

The history of this region begins with its conquest during the 12th century when the Tentonic Knights of the Sword attempted to Christianize the fierce Lettish, Finnish, and Esthonian tribes. The result was the establishment of an ecclesiastical state governed by the Teutonic order, which not only Christianized the natives but imposed German civiliza-tion upon them. The Teutonic element, though never composing more than a tenth of the population, has succeeded in dominating the economic and political life of the region, and in the towns constitutes the majority of the upper class.

In the middle of the 16th century Ivan the Terrible attempted to wrest this region from the Teutonic order, but was unsuccessful. In 1721, however, Peter the Great, after a long struggle, succeeded in incorporating the provinces in Russia. Until the latter half of the 19th century the Baltic Provinces enjoyed a considerable degree of home rule, but with the growth of Pan-Slavism the Russification of the provinces was undertaken and an attempt was made to set the Lettish and Esthoman peasantry against the German upper classes. This was fairly successful, and by 1914 the Germans had lost their political supremacy. As a further result of the movement the inhabitants became conscious of a nationality distinct from that of the Russians.

In spite of the severe climate and poor soil, the peasants have succeeded in producing large crops, especially of rye, oats, barley, and flax. The vast meadow lands make stock raising an important industry. The industrial life is centered at Riga, Libau, and Revel, and in the last half century numer-ous textile and flax-spinning mills, tanneries, breweries, sugar refineries, and distilleries have been estab-

The World War swept backward and forward over much of these lands; and fighting continued at intervals for nearly two years after the armistice of 1918. The provinces resisted Russian attempts to form a consolidated province; and could not form a federal union. They were affected by the Bolshevist propaganda and even fought each other. The chief common interest was the determination to be neither Russian, Polish, or German.

The combined area of the three Russian provinces The combined area of the three Russian provinces Esthonia, Kurland, and Livonia—was about 35,000 square miles (about the size of Indiana) and the population before the World War was 3,000,000. The native population of Letts and Esthonians was about 2,500,000. The Letts of Kurland and part of Livonia are peasants and town workmen of fairly high intelligence, and with growing economic prosperity are rapidly gaining notitical nower. The high intelligence, and with growing economic property are rapidly gaining political power. The Esthonians are mostly peasants, sailors, and fishermen, more steady and energetic and prosperous than the but not so quick intellectually. They are the Letts, but not so quick intellectually. The landholding nobility of the Baltic Provinces is mostly German, the government is in their hands, and though serfdom is abolished in 1817 the condition of the peasants is but little improved thereby. The privileges of the provinces are gradually curtailed and Russification promoted.

63. Sept. 6. A decree permits the peasants to purchase and hold as hereditary property the land on which they have worked. This creates an inon which they have worked. This ereates an in-termediary class between the German nobles and the landless peasants: the landless continue to constitute the bulk of the inhabitants.

ania. In the provinces it is a desperate socialist and landless peasant uprising; suppressed and followed by a reaction. The landlords, favoring Pan-Germanism, adopt the policy of bringing in and settling peasants from Germany, there being none else to support them. In Lichuania the revolt is mild; a national assembly pronounces for autonomy. Russia raises the ban on the native language and adopts the policy of playing the nationalists against the Polish nobles. She tries the same method of Pan-Slavism in the provinees; in neither case successfully.

SAN MARINO.

SAN MARINO is an independent republic situated near the Adriatic, in the northeastern part of Italy. It has existed for over a thousand years. It has a legislature, made up of the Grand Council of sixty members and of another Council of twelve members. Two of the Grand Councilors are appointed every six months to act as Regents and exercise executive functions. The little army consists of 950 men and 39 officers. The State has no public debt. Agriculture is the main occupation of the people. The chief exports are wine, cattle, and stone. Actually San Marino is a dependency of the kingdom of Italy. The population (1919) was 11,944 and the area 38 square miles.

Monastery of San Marino exists; traditionally founded by patron saint of same name.

1631. Papacy, on acquiring Urbino, recognizes the Independence of San Marino, which has been gradually established through several centuries 1797. Bonaparte respects the independence, at this time and later.

15. Congress of Vienna makes no attempt to disturb San Marino, and two years later the pope confirms the independence anew.

1862. March 22. Treaty with Italy; independence recognized and protection given. Practically a dependency of Italy.

SIAM.

Historical Outline.

The kingdom of Siam is ancient, having a history reaching back to the early years of the Christian Era. The city of Lampun is reputed to have been founded in 575 A. D. Before this time, Siam is said to have been under the dominion of Cambodia. There are inscriptions antedating the close of the thirteenth century, in which the houndaries of the country are declared. When the Portuguese and other Europeans reached southern Asia, the court of Siam attracted them.

During the eighteenth century, warfare was made upon the so-called Laos States on the north and northeast, and Siamese supremacy was established in these countries. The great cities of Luang Pra-bang and Wieng Chan were transferred to Siam in 1828. Meanwhile, trade intercourse had sprung up The great cities of Luang Prabetween the kingdom and several of the Western nations. Commercial relations were begun with France as early as the close of the sixteenth century. About the same time, similar relations were established by the Japanese. The Dutch traders visited Siam, and in 1752 trade was opened with the Dutch factories in Ceylon.

The present dynasty of Siamese rulers was established in 1782, when the capital was transferred to 1905. Revolt throughout the provinces and Lithu- Bangkok by the successful general Phaya Chakkri. In 1856 a treaty with Great Britain was negotiated by Sir John Bowring, by the terms of which Siam was opened to foreign residence. The conditions of trade were made conformable to the usages of civilized nations.

The recent rulers of the kingdom have shown breadth of view and attainments. The reign of Maha Mongkut extended from 1852 to 1868. In the latter year he was succeeded by his eldest son, Chula-longkorn I., whose long reign was marked by a broad policy that attracted the attention of the Western peoples.

The great misfortune of the kingdom is its weak geographical position, as Siam is wedged between British and French possessions in the East and both Great Britain and France occasionally "rectify" the frontier. France took in 1907 about 7,000 square miles, Great Britain in 1908 an equally large area, and in 1909 an additional area of 15,000 square miles

By the last treaty British jurisdiction in Siam proper practically eeased, thus suggesting the abandonment of exterritorial rights by the other European powers.

In recent years Siam has given great attention to internal reform. Two successive American advisers, Strobel and Westengard, received almost absolute power to establish a proper financial system and to adjust difficulties with European powers. The government has been unified and trade expanded. A progressive railway policy has attracted to Siam European trade and capital.

Organization.

Government. The executive power is exercised y a king advised by a cabinet. The Legislative Council consists of the ministers of the state and others, not less than twelve in number, appointed by the crown. The present number of the council is forty. It meets at least once a week and may promulgate laws without the royal assent in case of any temporary disability of the crown.

Religion and Education. The prevailing religion is Buddhism. Very little influence upon the popular faith has been exerted by foreign intercourse and there are nearly 7,000 Buddhist temples with a total of 170,000 priests. In each province there is a commissioner of education and the government primary schools in 1917, numbered 329, with more than 25,000 puipls. There were more than 3,100 per 25,000 pupils. There were more than 3,100 non-government primary schools, 116 government sec-ondary schools and six special governmental schools. Production, Industry, and Commerce. Forced labor is still demanded from the rural population, but this service is decreasing and Chinese coolies do the chief part of both the skilled and unskilled labor. ## SPAIN.

Historical Outline.

The history of Spain falls naturally into four periss. In the first, Spain was a frontier of Roman culture. In the second, Spain stood as the barrier which defended Christendom against the assaults of the Moors, who were the advance wave of the Moslem power. The Moors at one time succeeded in conquering the cities of Spain, but the native popu-lation never surrendered and ultimately drove the Moors from the peninsula. When Spain emerged from the conflict and became a united kingdom with the marriage of Ferdinaud of Aragon and Isabella of Castile in 1479, the Spanish character reflected the military characteristics of the age-long struggle religion the conflict made Spain the most Catholic of all European nations.

The third period of Spanish history falls in the age of discovery and expansion. Here Spain, as a commercial and seafaring nation, played a leading part. She established the Spanish American Empire, which continued for over four hundred years. Like Rome, Spain impressed upon her conquests her culture, her language, her religion, and her political institutions and did more than any other European nation to Christianize and civilize the natives.

The wealth Spain derived from the gold and silver of the New World gave her the position for a time of the leading power in Europe. True to her tradition Spain remained passionately attached to the Catholic Spain remained passionately attached to the religion and Protestantism gained no foothold. On Cartholisism increased in fervor. The Inquisition had its stronghold there and such types as Loyola and Saint Theresa were there developed. At the battle of Lepanto (1571) the Spanish ships were the strength of the fleet which saved Europe from the Turks. But the same naval skill was in vain when she attempted to crush the heretics in the Netherlands and in England.

In 1516 Charles I. of Spain united in himself the Spanish kingdom, the archduchy of Austria, the duchy of Burgundy, and the kingdom of Naples and Slelly, and in 1519 he became Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire as Charles V. For nearly forty ssions were ruled by his son, Philip II. of Spain. The fourth period of Spanish history begins with the unsuccessful wars with England at the end of the 16th century, and with the decline of sea power. In the three generations following Charles V., Spain steadily declined — partly from the stern exclusion of the skilled Jews and Moors, chiefly from the bad economic system which was due to the influx of the specie of the New World.

In 1700 Charles II. died and a long controversy arose over the succession. Philip of Anjou, grand-son of Louis XIV. of France, had married the elder sister of Charles II. of Spain, and was backed by France. Ferdinand, the grandson of Leopold I the Emperor, had married a younger sister of Charles II., and was supported by Austria. More important, however, than the legal claims of the aspirants was the question of the balance of power in Europe England and Holland, the leading naval powers, resolved that the strength of the Spanish monarchy should be united with neither the power of France nor the power of Austria. Notwithstanding the acts of disavowal made by Philip IV. and Charles II., by his will Charles left the crown of Spain to Philip of Anjou.

Louis XIV., electing to follow the will rather than to be bound by the treaty he had just signed, proclaimed his grandson, Duke of Anjou, as Philip V. of Spain and was resolved to seat him in a position which would have made Spain a dependency of France. This produced the Grand Alliance of England, the Netherlands, and the Emperor, and involved Europe in twelve years of war. From August, 1704, to September, 1709, the allies won the battles of Blenheim, Ramillies, Oudenarde, and Malplaquet. In 1711, Archduke Charles became Emperor and thus ceased to urge his Spanish claims. Anjou was at last accepted as king of Spain in 1713 by the Treaty of Utrecht; but his country was in no condition to give aid to France. The recognition of Philip V. was balanced by the Spanish loss of Naples, Sardinia, Parma, Milan, and the remainder of the Spanish Netherlands. Sicily received Savoy and England gained Minorca and the title to Gibraltar.

The reign of Philip V. was marked by a serious loss of the constitutional rights of the people in Spain What was left of the old liberty that Aragon, Valencia, and Catalonia formerly enjoyed was now ignored. Meanwhile the ambitious queen, Elizabeth Farnese, and her conspiring minister, Cardinal Alberoni, usurped the authority of the state. The political decay of Spain became apparent. After Philip's death in 1746 the crown passed to his son, Ferdinand VI., and then Charles III. held the throne. Naples was already in the power of Charles, who brought that dominion with him back to Spain.

In 1761 Charles III., acting for Spain, entered into the Family Compact made by the Bourbon princes of Europe. He thus involved Spain as an ally of France in the Seven Years' War, terminated by the Treaty of Paris in 1763. As a result of this conflict France was driven from Canada and ceded to Spain the vast region west of the Mississippi known as Louisiana, but Spain lost the Floridas. Charles III was supported by capable statesmen; commerce, agriculture, and the arts showed symptoms of re-vival, and there was a considerable increase in the population of the kingdom; yet there was little substantial and permanent gain. One of the notable events of the reign was the expulsion of the Jesuits from the Spanish dominions, in 1767. Charles IV. became king in 1788. He fell under the influence of his minister, Manuel de Godoy, duke of Alcudia, the astute "Prince of the Peace." At the outbreak of the French Revolution Godoy at first opposed the revolutionary government of France but in 1796 he made a league and entered into the Treaty of San Ildefonso, Hence Spanish fleets joined the French against the English. The fortunes of Spain swayed back and forth as those of France rose or fell, until Spanish independence was for a time extinguished.

Napoleon formed an ambitions plan of restoring a colonial empire to France, and proceeded to con-quer Spain, expecting thus to acquire Spanish America. Hence at a conference at Bayonne in 1808, the French emperor forced Ferdinand VII, and the infantes, Don Carlos and Don Antonio, to resign their claims to the Spanish throne. A junta of 150 subservient members offered the crown to Joseph Bonaparte, whom Napoleon entitled "King of Spain and India." The Spaniards as a nation never accepted this arrangement. An anti-French party appeared in the kingdom, and was supported by Eng-lish forces under Moore and Wellington. England and her European allies henceforth strove to restore the Bourbon house, and early recognized the prince of Asturias as king (Ferdinand VII.). The Spanish colonies refused to accept French rule, and in 1803 Napoleon's cession of Louisiana showed that he had tion of France. The Spaniards gave more or less effective support to Wellington, in his long, and at last successful, struggle with Napoleon's marshals in the Peninsular campaign.

In 1814, when the French emperor was hard pressed, he agreed to recognize Ferdinand, on condi-tion that he would take an oath to support the reformed constitution of ISI2. This promise was not fulfilled and after Waterloo there was none to enforce it. Ferdinand was restored and became as arbitrary as he pleased. His reign, moreover, was marked by the revolt of the Spanish colonists in America and in 1821 the last Spanish colony on the mainland of America was lost. In 1819 Spain signed a treaty with the United States, by which the Floridas, temporarily recovered by Spain, were for-

Ferdinand VII. died in 1833 and was succeeded by his daughter, Infanta Isabella, with the queen mother as regent. During the next seven years Spain was torn by revolts intended to place Don Carspain was forn by revoits intended to place Doir Car-los, the brother of Ferdinand VII, on the throne. In 1840, owing to a new revolution, Maria Christina, the queen mother, withdrew from Spain; General Espartero assumed control and in 1841 was ap-pointed regent. Isabella II. was declared of age in During her reign even the court of Spain was shocked by the scandals of the queen's private life. Revolutions broke ont and in 1868 Isabella fled from Spain; in 1870 she formally abdicated the throne in favor of her son, Alfonso. From the departure of Isabella until 1874 Spain was in a state of insurrec-tion and also of civil war. The crown was offered to Amadeus, the son of Victor Emmanuel of Italy, and for three years he attempted to exercise some authority, but abdicated in 1872

For two years Spain was a republic, and presidents followed each other in rapid succession. followed each other in rapid succession. At length Isabella's son was proclaimed king under the title of Alfonso XII. and some sort of order was established. During this period the island of Cuba had been in revolt for ten years, but in 1878 Spanish authority was once more established and in 1880 a measure was passed abolishing slavery there.

Alfonso XII. died November 25, 1885, and his wife, Maria Christina, became the regent for their son, who was born May 17, 1886, and was given the title of Alfonso XIII. During the early years of his reign Spain lost the remains of her over-sea empire. 1895 a revolution convulsed Cuba which the Spanish authorities found impossible to suppress, and in 1896 insurrections broke out in the Philippine Islands. In both Cuba and the Philippines the Spanish authorities showed great cruelty in dealing with the revolutionists and were not always careful to distinguish American citizens from natives.

The United States remonstrated with Spain and a party in the United States demanded the recognition of Cuban independence. In 1898, because of the failure of the Spanish administration in Cuba, the United States demanded the immediate withdrawal of Spain from the island. War was declared. On July 14, Santiago surrendered, and on August 12 the war was ended.

By the Treaty of Paris in the following December, Spain ceded Porto Rico, the Philippines, and Guam to the United States and withdrew her authority from Cuba. Cuba became nominally an independent republic, but actually a protectorate of the United States. In the following year, Spain sold to United States. In the following year, spain sold to Germany the Caroline, Pelew, and Mariana or La-drone Islands (excepting Guam) for $4,000,000, and thus, after an experience of four centuries ceased to possess American or Oriental colonies, In 1902, Alfonso XIII. was enthroned and four years later married Princess Victoria of Battenberg, the granddaughter of Queen Victoria of England. Throughout his reign there have been frequent manifestations of anarchy and he has twice narrowly es-The industrial condition caped assassination Spain has not been good and frequent general strikes have led to the proclamation of martial law. Political history has been confused, ministry succeeding ministry with startling rapidity. Nevertheless the king has on the whole governed wisely and has shown that he has the interests of his people at heart. The agricultural and industrial development have been greatly encouraged in the kingdom.

During the World War, Spain maintained a position of neutrality. Accusations were made that improper pro-German influence was determining the policy of the country; but the great object of the government was to strengthen the internal condition of Spain and avoid at any cost being involved in the war. In this Spain was successful. As a neutral producing food and raw materials, Spain was enriched by the war.

The Cortes is a double body consisting of a Senate and Congress; the two houses are of equal authority There are three classes of senators, the first two together not to exceed 180: senators by their own right senators of life tenure (nominated by the crown); and 180 senators elected by corporations of the state.

The Congress or popular body is an elective assembly having one member apportioned to every fifty thousand of the inhabitants. The electors must be twenty-five years of age, having full civil rights and antecedent citizenship of some municipality for a period of two years. By the law of August 8, 1907, voting is compulsory for all males over the age of 25. Ten members of Congress may be chosen as representatives at large, provided each shall have received a cumulative vote of ten thousand. in all 417 deputies, of whom 98 may be chosen in 28 of the large districts on the principle of minority representation.

The executive includes under the monarch a couneil of nine ministers, as follows: President of the Council; Minister of Foreign Affairs; of Justice; Finance: Interior: War: Marine: Public Works: Public Instruction.

Industry and Labor. From the beginning of the 17th century until the end of the 19th century the industries as well as the political influence of Spain were declining. The centuries of warfare with the Moors and the opportunities for wealth in the Span ish colonial possessions brought about a distaste for labor among the upper classes. Though Spain is naturally one of the most fertile countries of Europe, nearly nine tenths of the land being productive, agricarried on by unprogressive methods Commercial and manufacturing interests also declined and Spain was less affected than almost any other country of Europe by the manufacturing and industrial changes of the 19th century

One of the drawbacks to agricultural development has been the favor shown to the mesta or union of proprietors of the sheep ranches. Fine wool, being Fine wool, being the leading product of Spain since the Middle Ages, attracted the patronage of the government to the discouragement of agriculture. The silk interest ranked next to that of wool. This industry has been greatly improved and the excellence of both fiber and fabric is recognized throughout the world. Spain has large manufactories of cotton goods, principally in Catalonia, where in 1910 there were 2,600,-000 spindles. There are also large woolen manufactories with nearly 9,000 looms.

In recent years more attention has been paid to the development of the resources and industries of The production of wheat has, under the s of the war, greatly increased. More than 3,800,000 acres of land are devoted to the cultivation of olives which produce about 1,400,000 tons of olives and over 255,000 tons of oil. Spain is very rich in minerals and in 1918 the more important productions were iron, copper, coal, lead, lignite, Religion. The Roman Catholic Church is the national church of Spain and practically the entire population are Catholics, with the exception of about 30,000, including 7,000 Protestants and 4,000 Jews. Education. Spain at an early date was one of the foremost states in the matter of education. Her universities, in particular that of Salamanca, were famous. Under the Moors, Spain was the leading educational center of Europe. The spirit of Moorish art and learning was somewhat transfused into the Christian states. After the close of the Middle Ages, however, this educational preëminence was lost. Medieval methods were long continued in Spain until by the middle of the 19th century Spain ranked in illiteracy as one of the most backward states in Europe.

In 1857 an elaborate system of primary education was established. Education was made compulsory and a primary school was planned for every five hundred inhabitants, while instruction was to be on a rigidly uniform plan. This system, however, was not carefully enforced, although various improvements have been made. The country is divided into 11 educational districts with the universities as centers. Since 1902 public and primary schools have been supported by the government and most of the school children are educated without cost. are 26,000 public schools and 5,000 private schools, with over 2,600,000 pipils. The peace establishment for 1920 was 216,000 men and the total strength of the field army would be about 300,000. The reserve troops amount to about 90,000. In addition the military police and constabulary amount to about 30,000 The Spanish navy consists of three dread-noughts built between 1912 and 1914, one old predreadnought and seven ernisers, the most recent of which was built in 1916. In 1915 a new program for six years was adopted which provided for 4 eruisers, 6 destroyers, 28 submarines, and 3 gunboats.

Area and Population. The continental area of Spain is 190,050 square miles, but including the Balearic and Canary Islands and the Spanish possessions (Ceuta, Melilla, etc.) on the African coast opposite Gibraltar, the total area is 194,783 square miles The population of Spain is increasing very slowly The total in 1910 was 19,950,817; estimated in 1918 at 20.719.598.

Unvisited by Europeans until near the end of the Middle Ages, most of them were subdued by the Norman, Jean de Béthencourt, a navigator and adventurer, early in the fifteenth century. The kingdom of Castile acquired them from his successor. Many geographers formerly reckoned longitude from Ferro as from the original meridian, dividing east from west.

POSSESSIONS IN AFRICA.

Spanish Morocco comprises a zone in the north of Morocco extending for about 200 miles from the Algerian border to the Atlantic, with an average breadth of 60 miles. The rights of Spain to this reacknowledged in the Franco-Spanish gion were treaty of 1912. The zone is administered by a Span-ish High Commissioner. Spanish Morocco includes the region known as Er Rif, but by the treaty of 1912 Tangier and surrounding territory of about 140 square miles was deelared international. The area of Spanish Morocco is about 7,700 square miles and the population is estimated at 600,000.

Historical Outline.

THE authentic history of Sweden begins in the ninth century with the mission of Ansgar and the practical conversion of the people to Christianity. From the tenth century to the end of the fourteenth from the tenth century to the end of the four-teenth there were numerous civil wars, in which the free peasants practically disappeared. In 1388 the no-bles deposed the king and offered the crown to Mar-garet of Norway and Denmark, and in 1397 Sweden

During Gustavus Adolphus' campaigns, his great minister, Count Axel Oxenstiern, established a strong and successful government at home. Gustavus Adolphus was succeeded by his daughter Christina, Adolphus was succeeded by his daughter Christonian under whom a colony was planted on the Delaware. She was forced to abdicate in 1654 and was succeeded by Charles X., who undertook a war with Poland which was at first successful, but later researched the control of the contr sulted in disaster. Charles also successfully crossed the frozen Belt and attacked Denmark and for a time controlled that country. He was succeeded by Charles XI. in 1660, who maintained peace for six-teen years. War broke out in 1675 between Sweden, in alliance with France, and Denmark, supported by the elector of Brandenburg. For a time Sweden was hard pressed, but by the Treaty of Fontainebleau (confirmed by the subsequent Treaty of Lund) reeovered what it had lost to Denmark

In 1697 the crown descended to Charles XII., one of the most remarkable characters in history. He plunged Sweden into a great northern war, in which he was successful against Russia, then turned back, defeating the Poles and Saxons and placing his candidate on the Polish throne. In a second invasion of Russia he was successful until his reënforcements were ent off and his army surrounded and destroyed. In 1714 he returned to Sweden and faced an alliance of the powers hostile to him. In 1718 he was killed on an expedition to Norway. By the Peace of Nystad (1721) the war was brought to an end. Sweden had to abandon all her conquests on the Continent, but western Finland was restored to her.

The next sovereign was his sister Ulrica Eleonora, who turned her sovereignty over to Frederick of who turned her sovereignty over to Frederick with Hesse-Cassel, under whom some of the territorial losses were recovered. The power of the crown de-clined, however, and civil war broke ont between the two parties of the nobility, the "Hats" and "Caps." Under several weak kings the royal power continued to decline. During the French Revolution peace, were made with Bussia by the surrender of Finland. was made with Russia by the surrender of Finland, and Russia induced Sweden to make peace with France and join the Continental system. Charles XIII. adopted and appointed as heir to the crown the French marshal, Bernadotte; and at this time Norway was added to the Swedish domain (1814).

In the struggle against Napoleon Sweden furnished an army of 30,000 men. At the Congress of nished an army of 30,000 men. At the Congress of Vienna (1815) Sweden retained possession of Norway, and no objection was made to Bernadotte when, in 1818, he succeeded to the throne under the title of Charles XIV. He ruled until 1844 and under him prosperity began to revive.

Towards the end of Oscar's long reign came the separation of Norway and the establishment of that kingdom under a separate sovereign (see Norway). The franchise question was finally settled in 1907 by the establishment of proportional representation for both chambers, universal manhood suffrage for election to second chamber, and the reduction of the qualifications for the first chamber. In 1907 King Oscar died and was succeeded by his son Gustavus

In 1909 the franchise was still further extended by granting the vote to all inhabitants over 24 years of age without distinction of sex. During this reign the general tendency has been towards a more democratic, if not radical, policy. Like the other Scandinavian countries Sweden remained nentral during the World War, and although suffering from Lord the World War, and, although suffering from Iood shortage because of the embargo laid by the Allies, found a ready market for her surplus products in Germany

Government. Sweden is a constitutional monarchy; the king as executive exercises his powers in conjunction with a council of state, and has absolute veto upon legislation. The legislative power is in a Diet of two houses, both elected by the people. The first chamber consists of 150 members elected for six years by the provincial assemblies. They must satisfy a high property qualification. The second chamber is composed of 230 representatives, chosen for three years by universal suffrage, men and women There is proportional representation for both alike.

Religion and Education. Lutheran Protestantism is recognized as the state religion. The king must be a member of this church. All other religions are tolerated.

Education is well advanced in Sweden. there were more than 16,000 elementary schools besides many secondary schools and special vocational schools. The two universities of Upsala and of Lund have more than 3,700 students enrolled.

Defense. There is universal service supplemented by voluntary culistment. Military liability extends from the age of 20 to the end of the forty-second year. The peace establishment in 1920 comprised $6,000 men. The navy was eriginally intended entirely for coast defense. In recent years expert entirers of considerable speed and gun nower everal cruisers of considerable speed and gun power have been added.

The area is 173,035 square miles and the estimated population in 1918 was 5,813,850.

SWITZERLAND.

Historical Outline.

SWITZERLAND has neither geographical, ethnie, linguistic, nor religious unity; yet it is a very individual country with a positive nationality. Geographically, the country consists of the upper valleys of the Rhine, Rhone, and Danube, with some outlying areas; and the whole country is embedded in the great masses of the Alps. Ethnically the Swiss consist of French, German, Italian, and Romance-speaking people. The linguistic divisions are well marked the constitution recognizes French, German, and Italian as the three national languages in which debates in the legislature may be carried on. In religion there is a sharp division between the Roman Catholics and the Protestants who are the more numerons

Most of Switzerland was Romanized and traces of Roman civilization remain. Passing by the legendary history with the names of such heroes as William Tell, the actual modern history of Switzerland began in 1291. In that year a league was formed between the men of Uri, Schwyz, and Unterwalden for defense and the maintenance of their privileges. At once the confederates engaged in a struggle for existence with the House of Hapsburg. In the famous battles of Sempach, Morgarten, and Näfels they won their independence. This struggle lasted until 1412.

During the 15th century the league expanded and after a civil war about 1450, adopted a constitution for the enlarged confederation of the 'Eight Old Places.' In the latter years of the 15th century it Places." In the latter years of the 15th century it successfully fought Charles the Bold, and added some French-speaking districts to the Confederation. In the 16th century Swiss infantry, then the best in the world, won glorious victories in the It wars, but were at last defeated at the battle of Marignano in 1515 and made a peace with France.

During the Reformation most of northern Switzerland was under the influence of Ulrich Zwingli, political and religious reformer, a rival and theologically an opponent of Martin Luther. He opposed the alliance with France and desired to secure for Zurich and Bern the chief power in the Confederation. The country suffered little from regious wars, but was split into two religions camps. By the Peace of Westphalia in 1648, the independence of Switzerland was formally acknowledged.

Throughout the 17th and 18th centuries the Confederation was practically a dependency of France. The aristocracy of the cities continued, particularly in Bern, Lucerne, Freiburg and Solothurn, where the voting power was vested in the hands of a small class, which refused to admit any new burgher; and within the small voting class a still smaller class monopolized most of the offices.

During the French Revolution the troops of the republic overthrew the aristocratic parties causing the fall of the Confederation; and the Directory established the Helvetic Republic which was highly centrallegislature.

May 5. Shipment of all kinds of war mate- | ized and ran counter to local independence in the Confederation. When the French troops were withdrawn, civil war broke out; and Bonaparte, by the Act of Mediation (1803), granted a constitution in which the federal system was partly reëstablished.

While the rest of Europe was in war and commotion, Switzerland enjoyed comparative peace, although party feeling ran high. The Congress of Vienna (1815) accepted a revised constitution, sub-mitted by the Swiss Diet, by which the new cantons of Geneva, Valais, and Neuchâtel were added to the republic. Switzerland was also enlarged on the side of France. The new constitution set up a federal or central government, and a division of sovereign rights was made between the powers of local government retained by the cantons and the national powers.

The revolutionary movement which swept Europe in 1830 affected Switzerland slightly and the people in several cantons compelled the authorities to give them more liberty. Religious differences led to the War of the Sonderbund (1846), which brought about a new constitution in 1848; this lasted until 1874, when the present constitution was adopted.

Throughout her history, Switzerland has been the asylum of political refugees and at times the protection given them by the government has led to pro-tests from other states. Particularly was this true in 1836 and in 1838 when Louis Napoleon songht In 1844 and 1845, campaigns were conprotection. ducted against the Jesuits, who were finally expelled. Ten years later war was threatened by the king of Prussia to regain Neuchâtel, but was settled by the intervention of England and France. In 1888 and 1889 the Socialists and Nihilists were prosecuted and the latter were expelled from the country

In recent times the institutions of Switzerland, both the federal and cantonal systems have become more and more democratic. Through the use of the initiative and referendum the people obtained direct control, not merely over their legislation, but also over the constitution. Because of the protective pol-icies of France and Germany, Switzerland has been obliged to adopt a high tariff which has brought in a This has been spent in the purchase large revenue. the railways and the extension of government activities in commerce, as well as in the physical improvement of the cities through the erection of pubhe buildings.

Until the outbreak of the World War, Switzerland was contented politically and prosperons economically. Although the federation was able to maintain its neutrality, the great interruption of external trade prevented the importation of the necessary foodstuffs and dried up the main source of federal revenue. To maintain its neutrality the government felt obliged to mobilize the Swiss militia at a cost of more than $36,000,000, which had to be met by loans.

Organization.

Government. Switzerland is a federal republic. It consists of 22 cantons, three of which are politi-cally divided. These, like the states of the United States, possess sovereign powers in all fields which are not assigned to the federal government by the Constitution of 1874 or subsequent constitutional amendments. The government of the cantons varies both in structure and procedure; but each possesses its own legislature, executive, and judiciary. In four of the cantons, Uri, Unterwalden, Appenzell, and Glarus, the ancient democratic assemblies (Landesgemeinden) are preserved. These assemblies are held in the open air in April or May and attended by the voters in person. They elect a sort of standing committee, like the selectmen of the New England towns, a chief magistrate, and a judiciary. In the other cantons there are representative councils which exercise the legislative functions. All the cantons save Freiburg have the referendum and the initiative.

The federal government is vested in two houses: the National Council, numbering at present 189, composed of deputies chosen for three years by direct manhood suffrage in the proportion of one to every 20,000 or major fraction; and the second assembly, the Council of States, consisting of 44 members, two from each canton. Unlike the members of the Senate of the United States, the qualifications for the members of the Swiss Council of States, as well as the tenure of office, are not regulated by the constitution or by the federal authority, but are left entirely in the hands of the cantons. As a result the upper in the hands of the cantons. As a result the upper honse lacks uniformity and morale and does not have the influence of the American Senate or of the Swiss National Council.

The executive power is vested in a Federal Council of seven members, who act as heads of the executive departments and who are chosen by the two bodies of the federal legislature sitting together; one of the seven, chosen as President of the Confederation, presides at its meetings, but has no independent The Swiss executive does not executive powers. hold itself politically responsible to the legislature, and hence does not resign when its plans are not adopted, but attempts to carry out the desires of the 0 is the control by the people of the affairs of the government through the initiative and referendum. On the demand of 30,000 citizens, or eight cantons, the Assembly is obliged to submit for popular approval any of its acts. An amendment to the constitution must also be submitted on the demand of 50,000 In 1891 the Confederation also adopted the initiative which applies only to the constitution. By this 50,000 voters may propose an amendment either in general terms to be drawn up by the Assembly, or in specific terms to be submitted to the people. The different cantons have adopted these institutions in different degrees. Zurich submits all the acts of the Council to the popular vote at semiannual elections, and any citizen may propose a law to the Council; if one third of that body votes favorably, it must be submitted to the people and arctic climate is reached.

The natural wealth of Switzerland lies singularly enough in its snows, which make superb pasturage in the summer and also attract the tourist. The agricultural products are those common to central statements of Switzerland in these commons. Europe, but in no part of Switzerland is there op-Europe, but in no part of Switzerland is there op-portunity for wide or extensive cultivation. Every-thing is local and incidental. About two thirds of the productive soil is devoted to agriculture or graz-ing; the breeds of cattle, horses, sheep, and swine are of the hest, and the animals and dairy products are famous throughout Europe. Valuable standard products are cheese, condensed milk, and chocolates.

The chief agricultural products are rye, oats, and potatoes, but the supply of these and of other grains is insufficient, and Switzerland is partially dependent for its food upon imports. The cultivation of sugar beets has recently been attempted. The forests of Switzerland cover nearly a fifth of the territory and produce quantities of excellent timber. Of the mineral products the most important is asphalt. The saline deposits along the Rhine are also of importance Metals exist in Switzerland, but are hardly worked at all. True coal is entirely absent. Recently the government has set out to make the waterfalls available, so as to furnish power and cut down the coal bills.

In spite of the lack of coal, manufacturing has prospered, and there are nearly 9,000 factories, the more important being engaged in the manufacture of machinery, silk, cotton, and watches, for which Switzerland is famous. One of the industries of Switzerland is the entertainment of foreign visitors, which produces larger gross receipts (in 1905 over $33,000,000) than any other.

Education. There is no central educational administration in Switzerland. By the constitution of 1874 education was made obligatory and placed un-1874 education was made compactly an interest der the civil authority of the cantons. Primary instruction is free. In 1916 there were 4,578 primary schools, with over 500,000 pupils, 548 secondary schools, with 50,000 pupils, and 126 middle schools, with 36,000 pupils. There are also commercial and with 36,000 pupils. There are also commercial and technical schools and special vocational schools. Seven universities exist in Switzerland: Zurich, Geneva, Neuchatel, Bern, Lausanne, Freiburg, and Basel.

Religion. Religious freedom and perfect liberty of conscience and creed are guaranteed by the constitution. There is no established church. Since 1874 legislation has been directed against the Catholics, and in 1848 the Jesuits were expelled and pro-hibited from exercising their functions. More than half of the Swiss people are Protestants.

Defense. Old-fashioned fortifications exist on the southern border and protect the St. Gothard tunnel. There is no standing army, but a national militia in which the service is compulsory and universal, extending from the twentieth to the fortyeighth year. The training is carried on in the re-cruits' schools for 65 days for the infantry, 75 days for the artillery, and 90 days for the cavalry. The subsequent trainings occupy 11 days annually up to a total of about six months.

Twelve years are spent subsequent trainings occupy 11 days annuary up to a total of about six months. Twelve years are spent in the first line, eight in the first reserve, and eight in the second reserve. Altogether, Switzerland can mobilize nearly 200,000 men, not including the second reserve, which amounts to about 60,000.

SYRIA.

Syria is the strip of territory extending from the frontiers of Egypt northward to the middle valley of the Euphrates, along the Mediterranean Sea, geo-graphically including Palestine, though the two lands are now to be separated. As the natural high-way between Asia and Africa it has been many times swept over by conquering armies from the Egyptians, Assyrians, and Persians to the Saracens and Turks; and has been part of the Mesopotamian, Greek, and Roman empires. It has likewise been for long periods independent.

Syria has been for ages the point of contact be-tween Eastern and Western commerce through its tween Eastern and Western commerce through its famous ancient ports at Tyre and Sidon; and their proximity to Antioch and Damascus. It was also a meeting point for the civilizations of Africa and Central Asia. For ages it was traveled by visitors to the "holy places" of the Christian faith; and the crusades involved the conquest of Syria. Syria passed into the hands of the Turks and in 1914 yes, still preprized into villayers of the Meelen. 1914 was still organized into vilayets of the Moslem

For more than a century France has shown a strong desire to acquire Syria. In the World War Syria, because of its nearness to the Suez Canal, became a because of its nearness to the Suez Canal, became a battlefield between Turkish and British troops, who drew into alliance neighboring Arab trihesmen. The new king of Hejaz has claimed Syria as a part of his country; but in 1920 France received from the Allies a "mandate" for Syria and her armies were seeking to pacify the land. The boundaries of the new state have yet to be determined, but if it extends to what, under Turkish rule, was the northern part of Syria, including the vilayets of Aleppo, Zor, Syria, Syria, including the vilayets of Aleppo, Zor, Syria, and Beirut, the estimated area will be about 106,740 square miles and the population about 3,000,000. Among many race elements the people of Lebanon are a Christian community, which since 1864 has had a claim to protection from France.

Historical Outline.

THE Ottoman Turkish Empire had its origin in the migration of a Turkoman band in the 13th century. from their home in central Asia. They founded a settlement at Erzerum, near the Black Sca. Their first leader was Osman 1. (1288–1326). During the 14th century they spread through Asia Minor, as the Seljuk Turks had spread before them, and attacked the Eastern Empire. This bulwark of Christendom and civilization was threatened when, in the 14th century, the Turks crossed the Bosporus into Europe and began the conquest of Thrace and Macedonia. Little by little they reduced the Empire to a small territory around Constantinople. They were a hardy race of peasants, well-adapted to military discipline and capable of great endurance.

tured and brought up in the Mohammedan faith, but was recruited later from various sources. As the Janizaries received no pay during peace, they were always ready and eager for war, and furnished were always ready and eager for war, and furnished a nucleus for the military power of the sultan.

In 1453 Constantinople, to the shame and woe of Christendom, was captured, and the Turks soon reached the Danube. The golden age of the Turkish Empire was during the reign of Solyman 11.

(1520-1566). At this time the Turkish Empire extended from the frontiers of Germany to Persia, and (1520-1566). At this time the Turkish Empire ex-tended from the frontiers of Germany to Persia, and the Black Sea was a Turkish lake. The whole of the Euphrates valley and Bagdad was conquered, the Venetians were driven from Greece, and the whole Balkan Peninsula, with the exception of the little state of Montenegro and a little strip of the Dalmastate of Montenegro and a little strip of the Dalma-tian coast, was in the hands of the Turks. In the Mediterranear, Crete and Malta were still held by the Christians: but the northern coasts of Africa from Egypt to Morocco were under the supremacy of the sultan, whose sea power was a factor to be reckoned with. Occupying this position Turkey be-came an juffuence in European politics and intercame an influence in European politics and intervened not simply in eastern Europe, in the Balkans, and in Hungary, but at one time was allied with France against the emperor Charles V.

The subsequent history of Turkey is that of gradual decline broken only by momentary attempts at reform and military successes. Her position has been maintained and her empire prolonged by the jealousies of European states which feared that in the disintegration of Turkey a general war might ensue which would alter the balance of power in Enrope.

In the 16th century, Turkey suffered her first great defeat at the battle of Lepanto (1571). Turkey took advantage of the wars of the Reformation to push northward till Wallachia, Hungary, and Croatia were occupied. Austrians, Russians, and Poles still stood against them. They failed before Vienna in 1682 and at the Peace of Karlowitz (1699) were compelled to admit their losses. The Hungarian provinces were restored; Azov went to Russia, Podolia and the Ukraine to Poland, and Morea (the Peloponnesus) and Dalmatia to Venice.

During the first part of the 18th century, Ahmed III. attempted with considerable success to regain some of the lost territory. He succeeded in wresting the Greek peninsula from the Venetians, but failed disastrously in his war with Austria and was obliged to cede Belgrade, Wallachia, and Temesvár. In 1730 Mahmud I. came to the throne and captured Belgrade. In 1768 Turkey declared war upon Russia, but was defeated and by the treaty of Küchük Kainarja was obliged to surrender the Crimea.

In 1789 Selim III. made heroic efforts to recover what his predecessors had lost. He instituted many internal reforms. He was successful in dealing with Russia and secured the Dniester as the frontier; but his pashas began to revolt, and the conquest of Egypt by Napoleon precipitated a war with France. In 1807 the Janizaries dethroned Selim and after an interim of a year placed Mahmud II on the throne. In 1812 peace was made with Russia by the Treaty of Bucharest, and the Pruth was established as the boundary line. The acquisitions of Russia at the expense of Turkey aroused the jealousy of the other European powers, and from this date Turkey became the protégé of the western powers and their came the protege of the western powers and their pawn to check the advance of Russia.

The disintegration of the Turkish Empire continued rapidly during the 19th century. In 1821 the Greek revolt began Contrary to their policy of suppressing revolutions, European powers intervened, and the Turkish fleet was defeated at Navarino by a joint Western fleet in 1827. Russia took this opportunity to declare war and in 1829 wrested some additional territory from the empire, while in some additional territory from the empire, while in 1830 the independence of the Greeks was acknowledged. In 1832 Egypt revolted and in 1841 became autonomous under Mehemet Ali as hereditary tributary prince.

Since 1829 the Turkish question has centered around the attempt of Russia to reach the Mediterranean and the efforts of the European powers to prevent Russia from disturbing the halance of power in the East. The first evidence of this policy and counter policy was the Crimean War (1854–1856) which involved not only Russia and Turkey, but also France, England, and Sardinia as allies of Turkey As a result of the Treaty of Paris (March 30, 1856). Russia was forced to abandon her pretensions to exercise a protectorate over the Christians in Turkey, and to the exclusive right of interference in the Danublan provinces. The navigation of the Danube was made free; the Black Sea was closed to warships; and Turkey was admitted to the concert of Enrope. All the contracting powers pledged themselves to respect her independence and the integrity of her terri-On her part Turkey made promises of a large measure of autonomy for the Christian communities. none of which were kept, and submitted to certain reforms in her internal administration intended to safeguard the holders of her bonds.

At first they had no standing army, but in 1330 In 1876 Abdul-Hamid came to the throne and pro-the Janizarics were founded. This troop at first consisted of Christian children who had been cap-European provinces but for the whole Turkish Empire. In 1878, however, he suspended the constitu-tion, which was never in operation, and established a pire. despotism more efficient and oppressive than that of his predecessors

Russia took the occasion, along with Roumania, to declare war in 1877; and after suffering some repulses she overwhelmingly defeated the Turks and concluded the Treaty of San Stefano (March 3, 1878) within sight of the minarets of Constantinople. Bulgaria was declared an autonomous tributary principality extending from the Black Sea to the Ægean; and Turkey was forced to recognize the independence of Roumania, Serbia, and Montenegro, and to introduce reforms in Bosnia and Herzegovina. To Russia Turkey ceded Bessarabia and the Dobruja. This treaty aroused the jealousy of the European powers and a congress was called at Berlin in 1878, as a result of which the Treaty of Berlin was signed. By this agreement the territory assigned to Bulgaria was greatly reduced; Montenegro, Serbia, and Roumania were declared independent; the Asiatic frontier of Russia was adjusted; and Great Britain received the control of Cyprus as a reward for standing by the Turk.

On the restoration of peace, some attempt was made by the European powers to compel Turkey to fulfill her promises. Financial advisers were sent from Germany, English officers were engaged to reform the police, and some attempt was made to restablish, engles, in Turkish Sucress In 1982, the establish order in Turkish finances. In 1881 the great powers compelled the sultan to consent to the establishment of a public debt commission, to which was given the collection of certain taxes and the administration of certain portions of the finances. large part of the Turkish debt was repudiated, and the remainder secured by revenues administered by the commission. Almost the only advance in agri-culture or industry which has taken place in Turkey during the 19th century has been due to the activities of this commission.

The failure of the settlement of Turkish affairs by the Congress of Berlin was seen in the revolt of Crete in 1890 and the unsuccessful war of Greece against Turkey in 1897. Moreover, the condition of Macedonia was intolerable. Here were found representatives of all the Balkan nationalities and representatives of all religious sects, Christian and Moham-medan. The Turkish anthorities could neither guarantee order nor control their officers, and Macedonia was the scene of massacres and atrocities.

The sultan, Abdul-Hamid, was a despot of Oriental type, cunning, cruel, and suspicions. He was an adept at balancing European nations against each He massacred Armenian subjects, tyrannized over the Turks; yet was flattered and favored by European diplomats. Among the objects of his favor were the Albanians, nominally subjects, really independent. Abdul-Hamid alienated them and in 1908 Albanians supported a successful revolution organized by the Young Turks, a group holding princi-ples of constitutional government and animated by ideas of Western culture. They demanded that the constitution of 1876 be restored, including the promised elective parliament with a responsible ministry which could put an end to the despotic rule of the sultan.

The sultan, overborne by force, granted their demands, and on December 17 a Turkish parliament It was felt that this revolution would was opened. modernize and liberalize Turkey and that perhaps the old racial and religious fends would disappear; but the Young Turks were not able to carry out their policies.

The revolution, however, disturbed the delicate The revolution, however, disturned the deflected balance in the Balkans. Bosnia and Herzegovina, since 1878 under Austrian control, were now defl-nitely incorporated into the Austro-Hungarian Empire, inasmuch as the Turkish snzerainty had ceased in the revolution. Bulgaria proclaimed her independence from the nominal Turkish snzerainty and Prince Ferdinand, the German sovereign of the state, assumed the title of Czar. Later, the Greek popula-tion of Crete declared for a union with Greece. These territorial changes constituted a breach of the Treaty of Berlin and strengthened Austria at the expense of the Slavic Balkan states, thereby weakening Russia's influence

The new Turkish parliament met in December, 1908, and refused to support the ministries appointed by the sultan. Meanwhile, Abdul-Hamid plotted a counter-revolution, was thereupon deposed, and his brother placed on the throne with the title of Mohammed V. The Young Turks were in complete Mohammed V. The Young Turks were in complete control but failed to take advantage of their opportunity. Although they might be liberal in theory, in practice they oppressed the subject races as the old régime had done. Their policy was "Turkey for the Turks," and they tried to suppress the libertles which had been granted to the Orthodow Greek Church and to reënforce the Moslem element. In so doing they alienated not only the Armenians, but also the other large Christian elements — the Greeks. also the other large Christian elements — the Greeks, Bulgarians, and Serblans.

Italy chose this moment of uneasiness and disruption to send her warships to Tripoli, which for yearshe had desired as a possession on the northern coast of Africa to balance England's hold on Egypt and France's on Tunis and Algeria. Although Italy had no difficulty in obtaining the coast cities, she was unable to make progress in the interior. To bring Turkey to terms, she seized the island of Rhodes and the eleven other Turkish islands which with it constitute the December 2009. with it constitute the Dodecanese. Turkey yielded, and on October 15, 1912, a treaty was signed by which Turkey surrendered Tripoli, and Italy agreed to withdraw her troops from the Dodecanese, which, how-ever, as late as 1920 had not been done. The sig-nificance of this war lies in the fact that the dis-memberment of Asiatic Turkey had begun and that Turkey was unable to protect its integrity.

The Balkan War may be considered as the direct The Balkan War may be considered as the direct consequence of the failure of the Young Turks. An alliance of Bulgaria, Serbia, and Greece was formed in spite of racial and religious differences and territorial jealousies. Premier Venizelos, a man of Cretan birth who had been instrumental in rescuing Creta from Turkish control and icining it with Cretan birth who had been instrumental in rescuing Crete from Turkish control and joining it with Greece, was the soul of this combination. In October, Montenegro, Serbia, Bulgaria, and Greece declared war on Turkey, demanding autonomy for Macedonia, Christian governors for the provinces, and the withdrawal of the Turks. The war was brief and resulted in an overwhelming triumph for the allies; Turkey made a peace (May 30, 1913) by the allies; Turkey made a peace (May 30, 1913) by which she lost practically all her European posse which she lost practically an life European possessions save Constantinople and the territory in its immediate vicinity. The Balkan allies had gained their aims, but Macedonia was still an object of controversy, while Austrian influence caused Albania to troversy, while Austrian limence caused Albania to be declared an independent state, shutting off Serbia from any Adriatic port. Bulgaria opposed the de-mands of Serbia in Macedonia and the second Balkan War broke out (July, 1913). During this war Turkey was allowed by Bulgaria to reoccupy Adrianople, and Roumania attacked Bulgaria in the rear, forcing a peace by which Turkey received back some of the territory gained by Bulgaria in the first Balkan War.

Long before the two Balkan wars, Germany and Austria-Hungary were extending their influence in Austria-Hungary were extending their influence in the Turkish Empire at the expense of Russia and England and were checking the growth of strong Slavic states in the Balkans. German capital, under favorable concessions, was poured into Turkey. The German embassy was all but the seat of Turkish government. On the outbreak of the World War, Germany counted upon the hencyclent poutcally. government. On the outhreak of the world War, Germany counted upon the benevolent neutrality if not on the aid of Turkey. The German cruisers Goeben and Breslau were received in Turkish waters, and on October 30, 1914, attacked Russian merphylympia the Block Section 1914.

and on October 30, 1914, attacked Russian merchantmen in the Black Sea and then homharded Odessa. Therefore (November 5) England, France, and Russia declared war upon Turkey.

In February and March, 1915, a British-French fleet tried to force the Dardanelles, but was repulsed. In April a landing was made on the Gallipoli peninsula and a foothold was maintained until the end of the year. Then the Allies finally abandoned the attempt at a direct capture of Constantidoned the attempt at a direct capture of Constantinople. Farther east a composite British and Indian force invaded Mesopotamia and after a disastrous surrender at Kut-el-Amara finally captured Bagdad, March 11, 1917. Another force under General Allenby advanced through Palestine and captured Jerusalem (December, 1917), Damascus (October 1, 1918), and Aleppo (October 25, 1918), thus shattering the Turkish Empire in Syria. Arabia had long before revolted and founded the kingdom of the Hejaz.

Government. Until the constitution of 1876, Turkey was an absolute despetism. The rule of the sultan, however, was tempered by tradition. In practice he appointed ministers who exercised the executive power in divan, but he could disavow them, remove them, or execute them. The great doctors of the Moslem law might exercise some restraint, but there was no legislature or attempt to consult the will of the subjects. The constitution of 1876 would have provided for a Chamber of Deputies, one for every 6,000 electors, and a Senate of members appointed by the sultan; instead, Abdul-Hamid established an autocracy even more complete than that of

URUGUAY.

Historical Outline.

URUGUAY was originally settled by a Spanish colony from Buenos Aires. Portugal claimed the territory, to which it abandoned preteosions only after being defeated in war by Spain. After the overthrow of Spanish authority in South America, Brazil, as heir of Portugal, by force asserted rights to the country. The war lasted two years. Great Britain intervened and peace was secured by the cession to Brazil of the territory called the "Seven Missions." Then came a bitter war with Buenos Aires. This time both Great Britain and France interfered and a treaty of peace was made At last, in 1859, both Brazil and the Argentine Confederation recognized the independence of Uruguay. The state was dragged into war with the dictator López, but otherwise in the last fifty years there has been little in its history that is important to the rest of the world.

VENEZUELA.

Historical Outline.

Venezuela was the first part of the mainland of the New World sighted by Columbus on his third voyage, 1498. In the following year Ojeda and Amerigo Vespucci traced the coast line and finding houses built on piles called it Venezuela ("Little Venice"). Las Casas, the missionary to the Indians, founded a little colony at Cumaná, which was destroyed by the natives in 1522. Caracas was founded in 1567, and become the coach of the continuous founded in 1567 and became the seat of the captaincy general. The province itself was attached to the viceroyalty. New Granada, and this relation was maintained during the Spanish American rule.

In 1810 Venezuela revolted, and a democratic government was about to be established under the leadership of Miranda, when a great carthquake (March 26, 1812) destroyed Caracas. The people believed that the earthquake was a divine judgment on account of their rebellion and for a time the patriotic movement subsided. The patriots rallied, how-ever, obtained control of the state, and made it a part of the Colombian union. Simon Bolivar, himpart of the Colombian union. Simon Bolivar, himself a Venezuelan, was elected president; but the Spanish authorities did not yield until Bolivar won the battle of Carabobo (June 24, 1821). Venezuela seceded from the confederation (December 8, 1829) and during the next fifteen years, although there were attempts at revolution, Venezuela was less disturbed than Colombia because of the control of General Páez, who exercised practically dictatorial power.

From 1849 to 1870 there were frequent revolu-tions till the supreme power came into the hands of Guzmán Blanco, who for the next twenty years was "elected" president at every alternate election, while nominating and electing an adherent of his own for the intervening term In 1889 a revolt oc-curred which resulted (IS92) in the triumph of General Joaquín Crespo, who became president in 1894 and for four years dominated the state,

The boundary dispute with Great Britain is the most significant recent event in the history of Vene-zuela. Definite boundaries had never been drawn between it and British Guiana and in 1835 the Royal Geographical Society authorized Robert II. Schomburgk to draw a map of the British possessions, based on his explorations. He made the river Amacuro the northern boundary and the Cotinga the divisional line from Brazil. This map Great Britain subsequently claimed as correct and authoritative.

Venezuela, alarmed at the British claim, presented the counterclaim of the republic (1841). 1882 Venezuela, hoping to end the long dispute, proposed arbitration and asked the good offices of the United States, but Great Britain refused to arbitrate. The government of British Guiana laid formal claim to the disputed territory and Venezucla seemed unable to defend her rights. In 1895 Presi-dent Cleveland of the United States interfered and in a message to Congress, in which he invoked the Monroe Doctrine, practically stated that any at-tempt on the part of the British government to enforce its claims on Venezuela without resort to arbitration would be considered as a casus bella

The United States appointed a commission to determine what were the true boundaries of Venezuela; but before it reported Great Britain agreed that the matter should be decided by a court of arbitration. In 1899 an award was made which practically confirmed the British claims as conbraced in the Schomburgk line.

In 1899 General Cipriano Castro, as the result of a successful revolution, became president and was the dominating figure in Venezuela until 1909. His administration was challenged by domestic rebel-lions and threatened by the condition of foreign

In 1902 Germany, Great Britain, and Italy united in demanding an early settlement of the claims for in demanding an early settlement of the claims for indemnity to their nationals who had suffered at the time of the revolution. President Roosevelt forbade the Germans to occupy territory; some ports were blockaded, but the claims were submitted to an arbitral commission which made its award in November, 1903. There were also disputes with the United States because of failure to satisfy American claims and for a time dispute relations were claims, and for a time diplomatic relations were broken off. In 1908, while President Castro was in Germany, a revolution put an end to his rule, and although he attempted to return and start a counterrevolution in 1913 his party was defeated

Venezuela did not take any part in the World War, even to the extent of severing diplomatic relations with Germany, but in 1920 joined the League of Nations.

Government. The constitution (1914) vests the Government. The constitution (1914) vests the legislative authority in a Congress, consisting of a Senate of 40 members elected for three years, two for each Venezuelan state, and a Chamber of Deputies elected for three years, consisting of one deputy for every 35,000 inhabitants in each state and one more for an excess of 15,000. The executive power is in the hands of a president, elected by Congress for seven years, who acts through his cabinet ministers practically as a military despot. practically as a military despot.

Production and Industry. There are three distinct zones in Venezuela; the agricultural, in which coffee, cocoa, sugar cane, corn, and cotton are produced; the pastoral, which affords fine grazing grounds for large herds of cattle; and the forest zone, in which caoutchouc, balata (a gum resembling rubber), tonka beans, and vanilla growing wild are worked by the inhabitants. Venezuela is rich in minerals, chief among which is gold, although copper, coal, salt, and asphalt are also produced. The asphalt is exported to the United States, the output for 1918 being 46,453 tons. The principal exports in 1917-18 were coffee, cocoa, hides, gold, cattle, and balata and rubber, named in order of value.

Education and Religion. Roman Catholicism is the state religion, but all faiths are tolerated. The ducational system was reorganized in 1915, so that free and compulsory education from the age of seven to the completion of the primary grade was established, and a uniform course of study for all grades in the schools and state examinations provided. The central university is at Caracas and the university of Los Andes is at Mérida.

Defense. The active army consists of 9,600 and the naval force of an armored cruiser and several small vessels

Area and Population. Venezuela has an area of 398,594 square miles and an estimated population (1917) of 2,844,618. This official estimate, however, has been much questioned and probably 2,250,000 is more nearly correct

Historical Outline.

Discovery of America. The first record of the discovery of the Western Continent is found in the Icelandic Sagas, handed down for centuries by oral tradition. In 874 a Norse colony was established in Iceland and in 985 Eric the Red discovered and then settled a harren land which he called Greenland, hoping that a pleasant name would attract settlers The Sagas tell of a voyage made by Leif Ericson in the sagas ten of a voyage made by Len Brisson the year 1000 beyond Greenland, where he discovered an unknown land on which grew "grapes" and "self-sown wheat," whence he called it Vinland and where he established a little trading post. No authentic remains of these explorations and occupations. tions have been found, but there is no reason to doubt that Norsemen landed on the Atlantic Coast of North America, south of Labrador. Enthusiastic archæologists think they have identified Vinland with the Massachusetts Bay region. There is also a tradition that two Venetian brothers, Zeno by name, made two voyages from the Orkneys previous to 1400 and found new land in the

The actual practical discovery of America was due, however, not so much to chance voyages as to the economic, intellectual, and political condition of Europe at the end of the fifteenth century. outlook of Europe was toward the East, toward India and far Asia, from which came products, such as spices, silks, and precious stones, greatly desired by Europe since ancient times, and since the Crusades in popular demand. A small supply of these products trickled into Europe through the overland caravan trade for ages, but by the fifteenth century Turkish conquest had all but closed this trade. Constantinople fell into the hands of the Turks in 1453; and trade with the East was much impeded in that city and the other termini of trade routes in Asia Minor, in which European traders were established. To find a new route for this commerce was a compelling motive which brought about the age of discovery

Another reason for penetrating the Western seas was the revival of learning in Europe, which stimulated men's thoughts and imagination. Keen minds roused by the Renaissance did not hesitate to question the mysteries of unknown seas, while the use of the compass and the invention of rude nautical instruments made voyages possible far off the coast

A third influence was the improved condition of western Europe, which had emerged from the disorders of the Middle Ages and was organizing into strong national units. Conscious of themselves, these seafaring people were ready to seek new outlets and acquire new resources.

Portugal first initiated the search for a sea route to India. The sailors dispatched by Prince Henry the Navigator and his successors began a systematic exploration of the west coast of Africa, which resudted in the passing of the Cape of Good Hope in 1487 by Bartholomeu Lias and prepared the way for the first sea voyage from Europe to India by Vasco da Gama in 1497.

The actual historic discovery of America was made by Christopher Columbus, in 1492. Columbus, son of a Genoese wool carder, was born in 1446 or 1447 and after some slight education went to sea As a result of his voyages, his reading, his study, and the tales of sailors, he became convinced that the world was round, and that the eastern coast of Asia was not far from the western coast of Europe, He was strengthened in his theory by the writings of the ancients and the teachings of the geographers of his time, but he alone of the sailors of his time was ready to put his theory to a test. He vainly sought support for his idea and backing for his voyage in Italy, in Portugal, and in England. Finally he persuaded Ferdinand and Isabella, the sovereigns of the recently united kingdoms of Castile and Aragon, to become his patrons.

He sailed from Palos, Spain, August 3, 1492, with a little fleet of three vessels, the largest of not more than 100 tous burden. In spite of the discontent of his crew, almost resulting in mutiny, he pushed on, and on October 12, 1492, landed on a small island which in pious gratitude he named San Salvador. He continued his voyage to the coasts of Cuba and Haiti, and on his return it was declared that he had found a short route to the Indies. Although he made three other voyages, reached the north coast of South America, and touched the borders of Niceragua and Honduras, he died with no conception that he had opened up two unknown continents, but convinced that he had reached land and islands off the coast of Asia in 1497 John Cabot, a Venetian sailing under the authorization of Henry VII of England, reached the northern coast of North America, perhaps at

The name America was suggested by an Alsatian geographer, Hylacomylus, from Amerigo Vespucci, who claimed in 1497 to have discovered a large section of the western coast of South America and probably the coast of Central and North America. He described this and later voyages in lively style in accounts printed before the narrative of Columbus's later voyages. The name was gradually extended to all South America and thence by popular usage to the northern continent.

The coast of North America was slowly determined. In 1506 Jean Denys, of Honfleur, explored the Gulf of St. Lawrence; in 1512 Ponce de León discovered Florida. In 1513 Balboa crossed the 1sthmus of Darlen and discovered the Pacific Ocean, and in 1519, the fleet of Magelian started on a three years' voyage to South America, sailed through the Strait of Magellan, and across the Pacific Ocean. One of the vessels rounded the Cape of Good Hope, and thus proved by experience that the earth is round, and that a vast ocean separated the newly discovered continents from Asia

In 1524 Verrazano explored for France long stretches of the coast of what is now the United in 1535 Jaeques Cartier sailed up the St. Lawrence. By this time it was established that the land was continuous from the Strait of Magellan to Labrador.

Now began an era of interior explorations. In 1540 De Soto, on an overland expedition, passed from Florida through the region now occupied by the Southern States, crossed the Mississippi, and penetrated as far north and west as Arkansas. In 1540 Coronado, setting out from Mexico, explored what is now New Mexico, went as far north as Oklahoma, and sent on an advance party which reached the center of Kansas. In 1579 Sir Francis Drake, the English sea dog, coasted South America, and hore up northward as far as California. From 1603 to 1608 the French under the leadership of the indefatigable Champlain explored the St. Lawrence. founded Quebec, and determined the coast line of New England. In 1609 Henry Hudson made his way up the river which has since borne his name. Thus, the coast line of the Americas was determined as far as 45° north latitude

The First Colonles. The first settlements made by Europeans in North America were made by the Spaniards, and the oldest town within the limits of the United States which has had a continuous exist-ence is Saint Augustine, Florida, founded in 1565. The Spaniards were attracted by the richer regions of Central and South America, in which they established a great colonial empire that curiched the home country with its precious metals. Another current of civilization was the French in Canada. plain and his successors established posts at Quebee and Monfreal, on the St. Lawrence, and in Acadia at Port Royal. Venturesome explorers, priests, and traders reached the Great Lakes, pushed across the watershed, explored the Misslsslppl in 1682, and founded Louislana in 1699, thus giving France good title not merely to the St. Lawrence region, but to the Great Lakes and the whole central plain between the Appalachians and the Rocky Mountains.

English Colonization. What proved to be the most significant colonizing movement came from England. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth there sprang up a national jealousy of Spain and a con-test against the Spanish claim to exclusive rights in the New World. The Elizabethan seamen, chief of whom were Hawkins, Drake, and Raleigh, harried Spanish commerce in illegal and in open wars and roused the interest and enthusiasm of the English In 1584 Raleigh sent out an expedition which explored a stretch of the Atlantic coast now called Virginia for the "Virgin Queen." In 1585 a settlewas maintained at Raleigh's cost on Roanoke Island for a year, and in 1587 a second Raleigh col-ony was founded, all trace of which was lost.

The defeat of Spain's Invineible Armada in 1588 opened the way for the permanent settlement of Virginia. This was carried out not by gentlemen adrenturers of the Elizabethan Age, but by a group of capitalists, headed by Sir Thomas Smythe. From the Queen they received a charter for the Virginia Company, which in 1607 planted the first permanent English settlement at Jamestown. The early life of the colory was been with difficulties and decided. life of the colony was beset with difficulties and dan-gers and death. The colony was almost starved out, but a profitable crop for export was discovered in tobacco, and slowly the little colony became self-sustaining, though never profitable to the founders.

Newfoundland. In 1498, with his son Sebastian grims," who had fled from England to Holland to Cabot, he made another voyage which may have escape persecution, planted a second English colonial nucleus at Plymouth, the first settlement in New England. Because of the endurance and persevering nature of these settlers, and the abundant natural resources of timber and fish, they were able firmly to establish an important colony.

English emigration to America on a large scale began in 1630, when a powerful company sent the "Great Emigration" to Massachusetts. These were Puritaus, men of wealth and substance, who settled first on the coast around Boston under a royal charter giving them practical self-government Other Puritan settlements were made in New England, both from England directly and from colonies already established in Massachusetts, and these resulted in the colonies of Maine, Connecticut, New Haven, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire.

The southern colonies were increased by Maryland (1632) and later by the Carolinas (1663) with similar conditions, except that the Carolinas furnished "naval stores," rice, and indigo. Slavery flourished in them all, fed by a slave trade from the West Indies

Between the northern and the southern group of colonies a middle group was slowly developed, after the Dutch were dispossessed (1664): New York on the basis of the former New Netherland; then East and West New Jersey (1665), afterward united; 1682 the magnificent colony of Penusylvania, founded by William Penn, which soon became the most prosperous and richest of the colonies, with a population drawn from the Welsh, Scotch-Irish, and Germans, as well as from the English.

Colonial Growth. In the main the economic foundation of all the colonies was agriculture. In the South tobacco, rice, and indigo could be raised on large plantations worked by Negro slaves. In the middle colonies, where the winters were more severe, slavery took root in a milder form. The rich soil of Pennsylvania and the sober, hardy, and industrious character of the settlers soon made that State the largest grain-producing colony. In New England, where the soil was less fertile, the fisheries provided food and an export of dried fish which developed a trade with the neighboring continental colonies, the West Indies, and even with Africa. An important trade was built up with the Indians, from whom were obtained furs and skins, especially beaver skins.

Although all the colonies on the Atlantic seaboard were either founded or conquered by the English, there was always a nou-English element in the population. Huguenots and, later, Acadian French were found in New England, South Carolina, and elsewhere. In New York the Dutch were long the elsewhere. dominating element, and in Pennsylvania there were Swedes, Scotch-Irish, French, and a large German element, which also settled along the Mohawk Valley in New York. In all the colonies there was some Negro population, which was largest in the South, and in South Carolina was more numerous than the white population. Although representing different races, nearly all the colonists were Protestants and held similar ideas concerning personal liberty and self-government. English political institutions and the English common law, with all its safeguards, were easily transferred to this western England

Government of the Colonies. The colonies were classified according to their form of government into three groups. The royal colonies or provinces had no charter and took the government framed for them by the English authorities. proprietary colonies were held by a charter granted to an individual or group and inherited by their fam-ilies. The proprietor arranged the colonial government. The charter colonies had a documentary grant to a stock company which, in the case of the New England colonies, was made up of the colonists themselves

Notwithstanding these variations, all the colonies developed similar political institutions. In each there was a governor, appointed by the king in the royal colonies, by the proprietor in the proprietary colonies, and elected by the company in the chartered colonies—In each there was a legislature, consisting of a Council appointed in the royal and proprietary colonies and elected in the chartered colonies; and a lower house elected in all colonies by the freehold-Suffrage was nowhere universal; property and tax qualifications and religious tests much limited the voters.

These colonial legislatures claimed for themselves much the same powers in colonial affairs that Parliament exercised in the English system. This gave the colonists invaluable training in self-government, and In 1620 a little band of religious exiles, the " Pil- they did not hesitate to brave their governors and

In local affairs there were three systems of government. In the South the county system, with a board of justices appointed by the governor. In New England the township, with the meeting of freemen in a primary assembly, known as the "town meeting." In a few of the places in the middle colonies was a horough or etty government. In all cases the control of the local government was never far from the people governed.

To the English government English Control. the colonists were Englishmen across the sea who had no representation in Parliament. England exercised her control over these scattered subjects, first by the right to grant ownership and control of lands then through the appointment of governors for the royal provinces and pressure upon the proprietors of the proprietary provinces; then by instructions the governors. At the time of the Revolution only Connecticut and Rhode Island were full chartered colonies outside the sphere of royally appointed officials.

Besides the governor England appointed officials. inspectors of customs, collectors of revenue, and the like, to enforce or to inspect the enforcement of the Appeals could be, and sometimes were, taken from colonial courts to the Privy Council in England. As for legislation, the charters were generally held be beyond the authority of Parliament; and Parliament passed no local laws for individual colonies, but in matters of trade and the foreign policy of the mother country an act of Parliament was binding

Indian and Colonial Wars. The three principal nations, the Spanish, the French, and the English, who settled in America, had each its own methods with the Indians. The Spaniards practically enslaved and baptized the Indians; the French baptized the Indians, traded and intermarried with them; the English crowded them out of their hunting grounds and avoided them, and only now and then a man, like John Eliot, attempted to Christianize them. The French soon gained an ascendancy over the Indians who proved invaluable allies in the stern conflict with

In almost every English colony the relations At first the nawith the Indians were the same. tives looked on the settlers with tolerant curiosity. Later, when it was found that the English took rather than shared the hunting grounds, war broke In these wars, whether the Pequot War of out 1637 or the terrible fights of 1622 in Virginia, the colonists were everywhere snecessful, except against the Five Nations of the Iroquois, who held their own till the Revolution of 1775.

The second stage came in each colony twenty to fifty years later and was far more serious. In Virginia in 1644 Opechancanough led a successful raid, while New England was scourged by King Philip's In Virginia in 1676, under the leadership of Nathaniel Bacon, the Indians were finally de-feated. Of a similar sort were the Tuscarora War in North Carolina and the Yamassee struggle in South Carolina.

Intercolonial Wars. In the series of European wars from 1689 to 1763, the English colonies were always drawn in against the French on the north and the Spaniards on the south. During King Willlam's War Port Royal, Acadia, was captured, but returned to the French by the treaty of 1697. 1701 began the War of the Spanish Succession, called in America Queen Anne's War, which included Indian raids upon the New England settlements, the second capture of Port Royal and, by the Peace of Utrecht (1713), the transfer of all Acadia, thereafter known as Nova Scotia. The Austrian Succession in Europe led to King George's War in America (1744), in which the French fortress of Louisburg on Cape Breton Island was taken (1745). In 1754 the outbreak of the French and Indian War was the first gun in the European Seven Years' War. One of the episodes was the expedition against Fort Duquesne (modern Pittsburgh) and the defeat of General Braddock (1755). Fort Duquesne was later captured, and also Quebec (1759) Fort Duand Montreal (1760). By the Treaty of Paris (1763) France surrendered to Great Britain all claims to territory east of the Mississippi, while to compensate her ally. Spain, for sharing the war and losing the Floridas, France transferred to her western Louisiana, including the city of New Orleans. by the middle of the eighteenth century the English had eliminated all foreign claimants to the region east of the Mississippi and Irom Hudson Bay to the

The difficulties of colonial intercourse tended to put each colony back upon itself for its own protection and defense. The home government forced the New England colonies to consolidate under the tyranny of Andros, and in 1686 New York was joined to this But at the " Glorious Revolution " of 1685-89 this temporary union fell apart.

During the struggles with the French and Indians from 1689 to 1763 the British government attempted to bring about cooperation in military affairs; the colonists were jealous of their own prerogatives and were slow to come to one another's aid. In a Congress of Commissioners called at Albany, Benjamin Franklin presented a scheme for colonial union called the Alhany Plan. This was objected to by the colonists because it gave the king too great power and by the English authorities because it was felt to be too democratic. Revolutionary era did the colonists succeed in sinking their internal differences and forming an effecfive union

The Revolutionary Era. The causes for the The Revolutionary Era.

American Revolution begin to appear distinctly soon

(1) American Revolution of George III, in 1760. The after the accession of George III, in 1760. English government had always claimed legal supremacy. An act of Parliament was superior to all colonial statutes in general matters, especially in The so-called Acts of Trade were meant to trade. restrict the commerce and manufactures of the colonies. In local matters the danger from the French in Canada made the home government cautious until England was better able to enforce her ideas upon the colonies. Both home British and colonial British looked upon England as the center and head of a great colonial empire. The only central authorities were a hereditary king and a Parliament in which the colonists could have no representation.

By the colonial system embodied in the Acts of Trade Great Britain had long sought to secure for home merchants the profits of the colonial empire and at the same time to grant protection to all of its members. This policy was first put into the form of law by the Ordinance of 1651 and the subsequent navigation acts down to the Molasses Act of 1733 and the Sugar Act of 1764. By this policy the colonies were protected against competition in the British markets in certain products; but were compelled to make their direct purchases only from the home or colonial members of the empire. Thus, Virginia was given the tobacco monopoly as against tobacco farms in England, but had to buy hardware and cloth from England. Thus, New England had a profitable share in the carrying trade of the British Empire, but was compelled to buy its molasses only from English colonies. With certain exceptions all commerce with foreign nations must go through Greal Britain, and was there subject to taxation. The execution of this policy was lax, and smnggling and other forms of illegal trade were habitual in the colonies. In 1763 Great Britain felt the enormous cost of the war with France and thought it reasonable to divide the cost of the military protection of the colonies.

The policy as adopted included faxation to be laid on the colonists by act of Parliament — the proceeds to be used for colonial defense. Opposition at once arose in the colonies. For years they had enjoyed forbidden trade with the French West Indies, the Spanish possessions, and with the Dutch. Under the protective Sugar Act the English West Indies were able to raise the price of sugar and molasses, upon which there were taxes, while European goods coming through England both cost more and The colonists felt that since they were also taxed. maintained at their own expense their colonial gov ernments and had burdened themselves with debt in the wars with the Indians and French, which were for the defense of the British Empire as well as their own protection, they had contributed their share to the imperial expenses

A second ground of colonial opposition lay in the fact that the British government was proposing, not simply to enforce this commercial policy, but to use the proceeds of the taxes for the payment of British officials in the colonies. As has been shown, the colonists, through their control of local taxation and appropriations, directed the action of their governments and of the officials. If the officials were paid from taxes levied by Parliament they would be subject to English rather than colonial control.

The issue was brought to a head by the passage of the Stamp Act (1765), which laid stamp duties on by their representatives. Intense opposition to the Stamp Act caused its repeal, but the repeal act reasserted a right of taxation It was then deterasserted a right of taxation. It was then determined in the Townshend Acts (1767) to raise revenue by duties on colonial imports, thus avoiding the issue of internal taxation without representation. The answer of the colonies was unmistakable. Massachusetts sent a circular letter to the other colonies which, while disavowing any desire for in-dependence, suggested concerted action. The Virginia Assembly passed resolutions asserting that the Virginia Assembly had the sole right to lay taxes upon the people. These theoretical statements reupon the people. These theoretical statements received practical force by the establishment of Non-Importation Agreements, by which the colonists agreed not to use the taxed goods. shend Acts were defeated. Thus the Town-

Committees of Correspondence (first organized by New York in 1764) were appointed by Massa-chusetts and Virginia in 1772 and 1773 respectively. Through the means of these committees the different colonies were informed of public opinion in the other colonies, and a solidarity of interest was created.

Although the Townshend Acts were partially repealed, a light duty was maintained on tea, which was sold cheaper than in England. The colonists refused to purchase the taxed tea because it would then become an admission of the right of Parliament to tax the colonies. The tea in Boston was destroyed in a riotous gathering known as the Boston Tea Party (1773). The English answer to this defiance was aimed directly at the people of Massachusetts. The port of Boston was closed by statute, the charter of Massachusetts was suspended, trials outside the colony were provided for, and the quartering of British troops sanctioned within the province

The colonial reply was the First Continental Congress, summoned at Philadelphia, September 5, This assembly, representative of twelve colonies, formulated in the name of all the colonies a Declaration of Rights. It accepted and drew up the Association, which was in effect a boycott of British goods and slaves, including an article against taxation without representation.

· Great statesmen in England, including Lord Chatham, worked for conciliation. The king and his subservient ministers stood for repressive measures and the majority in Parliament supported them. Collisions occurred between the British between the British troops and the citizens of Boston. Military stores were collected by the leaders of the people at Concord and elsewhere

The Revolution. The first armed clash of the Revolution took place at Lexington and Concord, April 19, 1775. At Lexington the minutemen stood firmly until fired upon by the British, when they retired; at Concord, a few bours later, they rallied and their force, now augmented, drove back the British to Boston On June 17, 1775, the colonists, attempting to fortify Bunker Hill, were finally driven from It was a dear victory, for it cost 1,000 British troops and proved that militia could hold regulars

The Second Confinental Congress assembled May 10, 1775, at Philadelphia, and at once placed itself at the head of military and naval George Washington was chosen Commander in Chief of the American army and took command at Cambridge. On March 17, 1776, he forced the evacuation of Boston by the British. On July 4. 1776, Congress adopted the Declaration of Independence, in which it declared the colonies independent of Great Britain and stated their case to the European nations.

The Revolutionary War lasted for seven years, during which time Great Britain employed not only English troops, but also hired Hessians from Germany. During the first period of the war the conflict centered between the Hudson and the Dela-New York was captured in 1776 and Washware. ington was obliged to retreat across New Jersey. As a result the French governin 1778, recognized the Independence of the United States and made a treaty of alliance by which supplies, troops, and above all, the French fleet, were sent to aid the colonists.

The last period of the conflict was in the South. Here the British were at first successful, but by a series of masterly engagements General Nathanael Greene cleared the territory. Cornwallis returned to Yorktown; and while a French fleet held up the British relief expedition, a consolidated American and French army besieged him and captured his whole army. By the Treaty of Paris (1783) Great Britain acknowledged the independence United States and agreed to formulate boundaries; Movements toward Union. The English colonles in America were Individualistic. Many of them were founded by small religious sects, others, representing nine colonies, assembled in New York

The Critical Period. Although the colonies had achieved independence, they had not secured stability. They were burdened with debt, their trade disorganized, their currency literally "not worth a 'Continental,' as the bills of credit issued by Congress were called. During the war the Second Continental Congress framed Articles of Confederation (1777), which provided for a league between the colonies and which made a division between the powers to be exercised by Congress, representing the central government on the one hand, and the States, representing the local governments, on the other.

Several faults revealed themselves in this plan: It operated not upon citizens, but upon States; it gave Congress no power to tax individuals, but only to make requisitions upon the States; it did not authorize a general regulation of foreign or interstate commerce; it could not be amended without the unanimous consent of all the States, nor could Congress pass important legislation without the assent of three fourths of the States. Weak as this instru-ment was, several States delayed to adopt it in definite form until 1781; nor could they be persuaded to amend it by giving Congress more power in the years

The Constitutional Convention of 1787 was summoned ostensibly to propose amendments to the Articles of Confederation. Actually, after four months' debate it produced a new constitution, which the confederation or league was transformed into a federal state.

The question of federal power was adjusted on a new basis. Neither Congress nor the States were recognized as sovereign, but the great doctrine of the sovereignty of the people of the United States was assured by the first words of the preamble, "We the people of the United States . . . ordain and establish this Constitution." No longer could States enact laws in conflict with the Constitution or acts of Cons, for, by Article VI., "This Constitution, the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties . . . shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

In the specific division of powers between the federation and States, Congress was given the power to levy taxes, to control commerce, to raise an army and a navy, and to declare war, — in fact all powers necessary for the regulation of foreign affairs and most concerns which affected the nation as a whole. The States were forbidden by explicit prohibitions to interfere in some of these spheres.

Congress was to consist of a House of Representatives and a Senate. In the Senate each State has equal representation — two senators — and no State may be deprived of this equality of representation in the Senate without its consent. Thus State pride is satisfied, and the fear that the small States may be oppressed is removed. In the House of Representatives the people are represented in proportion to the population in each State, as shown by the decennial censuses.

The head of the executive branch of the government is the president, who has great power, since he possesses a suspensory veto over legislation; may appoint the principal officers with the consent of the Senate; directs the foreign relations; instructs diplomatic representatives; controls the negotiation of all treaties; commands the army and navy; and above all, enforces the laws of the United States.

At the summit of the judicial department is a Supreme Court and below it inferior courts, all of which uphold the laws of Congress and the Constitution of the United States against all infringements. even those by the States themselves

By amendments (I.-X.), which were quickly added to the Constitution, the great Anglo-Saxon rights of personal liberty — such as freedom of speech, press, religion, and the right of jury trial — are guaranteed against usurpation by Congress; and the States are forbidden to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Supreme Court of the United States therefore acts as a reviewing authority upon State legislation. Two other amendments (XI-XII.) were added to the Constitution in 1798 and 1804, respectively, but after these no other amendments were adopted up to the time of the Civil War.

The Convention at Philadelphia transmitted this Constitution to Congress with the recommendation that it be submitted to conventions called within the various States and be declared in force when ratified by nine States. The campaign for ratification was bitter and during it many political pamphlets were written: the most famous, appearing serially in a New York journal and later published as The Federalist, were composed by James Madison, Alexander Hamilton, and John Jay, and are still the most authoritative interpretation of the document. On June 21, 1788, New Hampshire, the ninth State, ratiaed the Constitution. Virginia and New York followed soon, but North Carolina delayed until 1789, and Rhode Island until 1790. the campaign for the ratification of the Constitution those groups which were in favor of the Constitution and the extension of the powers of a central government were known as Federalists. Those who be-lieved in maintaining the States as the chief agencies of government and who were thus opposed to a federal state were called Antifederalists. In these differences is found the germ of the first two great political parties.

The country was unanimous in choosing George Washington as first president, and John Adams received 34 of the 69 electoral votes for vice president Washington's first administration he tempted to sink party differences and called to his cabinet men of such diverse opinions as Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton. In spite of the at-tempt to ignore parties, both domestic and foreign questions revealed a genuine difference of political opinion and strengthened the party spirit. Thus question of the assumption of the debts of Congr Thus the and of the States was favored by Hamilton and his group, who also favored the establishment of a national bank and a mildly protective tariff. measures, however, were opposed by Jefferson and the Antifederalists. Little by little Washington was forced to become a party president and his second administration was frankly Federalist.

Foreign affairs disturbed the country and drew The outbreak of the French party lines tighter. Revolution (1789) and the later war of France with Great Britain forced a decision as to whether the United States should aid her former ally, France, and thus subject her commerce to British reprisals, or attempt to stand neutral. Washington, Hamilton, and the Federalists, while favoring England, believed that the best interests of the United States required absolute neutrality. Thus this position, never be-fore so clearly stated, set forth the true principles and established the proper rules of neutrality which later have become a part of international law. settle the controversies between the United States and England, Washington authorized a treaty with England known as the Jay Treaty, which after a bitter struggle was ratified in 1795. In strong and powerful language Washington in the Farewell Address (1796) put before his countrymen the deirability of keeping out of European compileations.

During the administration of John Adams (1797) 1801) the parties were still more thoroughly divided; and the impossibility of avoiding a share in the troubles of Enrope was shown by a brief naval war with France (1799). Thomas Jefferson was chosen president in 1800, after a contest over a tie with Burr. The Jeffersonian party, the old Antifederalists, now called the Democratic Republicans, were in control of the government, but attempted no serious changes. They took over the national government as they found it organized, and applied their own policy to it, rather than to attempt to alter the es tablished system. The army and navy were reduced and the money saved was expended for the payment of the debt. On the other hand, Jefferson, in 1803, boldly purchased the Louislana Territory from Napoleon, thus extending the power of the president and enlarging the territory of the United States beyond all expectation of the framers of the Constifution.

The renewal of war between England and France in 1803 again showed that the United States could not live for itself alone, for its commerce suffered from both belligerents. The paper blockades declared by the Emperor Napoleon upon the English ports, the French decrees for seizing neutral ships. and the equally illegal orders in council issued by the British, caused the capture of 1500 American vessels. In addition, Great Britain insisted upon her right of search and impressment, which greatly irritated the United States. Moreover, her cruisers, reaching the coast of the United States, attempted to enforce her pretensions in American waters. The United States attempted to meet these aggressions by a boycott policy which should avoid war; it was expressed by the embargo (1807) and Nonintercourse Act (1809). failures

In Madison's administrations (1809-1817) the United States tried to balance one aggression against the other, only to be tricked by Napoleon and ignored by Spain. For several years States seemed on the brink of war with Great Brit-As no redress was obtained for the British captures till the last moment, and thousands of American citizens were held by British action, the United States declared war on England, June 18, 1812.

The War of 1812. On land the United States set out to capture Canada, but was unsuccessful. On the other hand, Maine was invaded and Castine occupied by the British. The capital, Washington, was burned by a small British force in 1814, and the distant settlement of Astoria was occupied.

On the sea the United States was more successful and the victories of the Constitution over the Guer-

Organization of the Government. During over the Macedonian, the Constitution over the Java, and the Hornet over the Peacock in naval duels did much to raise the prestige of the United States. American privateers harried British commerce and captured I.344 prizes.

The final battle of the war was at New Orleans, January 8, 1815, after the treaty of peace had been signed. In this, General Andrew Jackson was overwhelmingly successful. In the meantime negotiations for peace were in progress at Ghent: a treaty was signed which, although omitting mention of impressments, restored the American territory occupied by British troops and provided for the appointment of commissions to settle disputed points (1814) Although the United States was not successful in winning her contentions, the end of the European wars put an end to the issues of neutral trade and ssments; and she had shown herself ready fight for her rights and had won the respect of England and the European nations.

From the close of the War of 1812 until the election of Andrew Jackson, in 1828, parties were disorganized. The live domestic questions were the protective tariff and internal improvements, while the most pressing foreign question was over the recognition of the recently revolted South American republics. In dealing with this question Monroe, on the advice of John Quincy Adams, his secretary state, enunciated the Monroe Doetrine in 1823. In this he declared that the American continents are not open to further colonization or to the extension to this hemisphere of the European system of government. By implication, the United States re-served the Western Hemisphere as her field of influence and renounced interference in European affairs. This doctrine has become the corner stone of American foreign policy; for although the United States has not been able to avoid intervention in European affairs, it has stood by its original position that in both Americas it was to be the determining influence.

In IS20 the slavery question for the first time ecame an issue in national politics. The question became an issue in national politics. The question arose over the admission of Maine and Missouri as States. If Missouri, which was in the same geographical belt as the three western free States, were made free, the slavery power would begin to decline. Missouri became a slave State the two sections free and slave — would be perpetuated in the West. After an aerimonious debate the question was settled compromise (" Missouri Compromise Maine was admitted as a free State, Missouri as a slave State; but otherwise the territory in the Louisiana Purchase, north of 36° 30′ (the southern boundary of Missouri) was "forever" to be free.

Social and Economic Development of the Country. Between 1783 and 1830 the rising United States was transformed from a narrow strip of territory between the Allegheny Mountains and the Atlantic Ocean to a country stretching as far west as the Rocky Mountains; and from a small nation of 3,500,000 to one of over 12,000,000. The most remarkable and significant feature of this growth was the development of the West.

In 1790 a civilized population of 109,000 lived west of the Alleghenies. In 1815 there were ten times that number of inhabitants and from 1815 to 1830 the Western population increased to 2,300,000 Cheap public lands and the opportunities to develop homes on the fertile soil attracted immigrants from all the Eastern States. Thus there developed a democratic society different from that of the East-ern communities. The frontiersmen were substanern communities. The frontiersmen were substantially equal in wealth, and to all equal opportunity was open. Land was inexpensive, easy to obtain, and quickly brought under cultivation. Thus even the poorest immigrant, who bad the necessary en-Thus even within a short time could become the equal of his neighbors in possessions and importance.

This social and economic equality produced political ideas of absolute democracy, which were funda-mentally different from those of Eastern industrial The economic conceptions of this frontier society were crude; land and food were plenty, but there was no transport obtainable for long distances; surplus products were hard to dispose of, and money was scarce. Like all pioneer commuthe Westerners demanded cheap and ahundant money, and resented the payments they were forced to make to Eastern capitalists. They were intensely patriotic, sure of themselves, and of the future of the country. Thus, with Henry Clay as their spokesman, they were impatient at the timidity of Madison's government and enthusiastically supported the War of 1812. supported the war of 1812. As the population increased through this region, they became a force to be reckoned with in national politics. They nearly turned the scale in 1824, and in 1828 triumphed in the election of their candidate, Andrew Jackson.

Industrial Development. While these changes were going on in the West a new society was developing in the East. In the South the best land, including much that was not suitable for the cultivation of rice or tobacco, was turned to cotton. rière, the Wasp over the Frolic, the United States at first of small importance, became through the intype of cultivation transformed Southern society Slavery in many parts of the South was still patriarchal and unprofitable. The slave system on the rich cotton lands tended to become capitalistic. Many great plantations in the Southwest were cultivated by gangs of slaves under hired overseers, and the demand for more land suitable for the cultivation of cotton and the extension of the slavery system became intense. The Southern planter, moreover, was dependent on imports which came either from the industrial North or from Europe. He desired cheap imports and resented the protective tariff which He desired cheap increased the cost of his goods; and he frequently found himself politically allied with the Democratic frontiersmen of the West.

of struggle between England and France, American shipping was highly profifable, notwithstanding the losses by captures. Under the restrictive acts after 1807 it somewhat declined, but it recovered after peace in 1814. Another significant develop-ment was in manufacturing. In England, beginning with the invention of llargreaves' spinning jenny in 1767, which was followed by the power loom other similar developments, the textile industry was transferred from cottages to factories. The same thing happened in other industries; and by 1800 the modern factory system was well established in Eng-

In America the development was slower. In 1793 Samuel Slater and Moses Brown set up in Pawtucket the first successful cotton factory. Beginning in 1807 the nonimportation acts, and later the war with England, gave American manufacturers temporary monopoly of the home market. The effect was startling. In 1807 there were 8,000 spindles in the cotton industry, in 1809, 80,000, and similar progress was made in other lines. At the close of the war these Eastern manufacturers demanded a continuance of the protection that their industries had received; and thus found themselves in sharp opposition to the planters of the South and the frontiersmen of the West.

This industrial growth transformed society. factory system produced a class of workmen, constantly recruited by immigration from Europe, very different from the old colonial type. The city population increased. Between 1800 and 1820 the population lation of Boston almost doubled, and that of New York more than doubled. This working class was at first debarred from political life by property qualifications. When at last they received the vote they naturally aligned themselves with the more democratic element in the community and opposed the Federalists and then their successors, the Whigs.

Political Issues and Parties. From 1816 to 1824 was an era of personal politics. By 1824 the democratic movement of the West, South, and East became powerful and by 1830 was almost everywhere Successful. Andrew Jackson was atmost everywhere successful. Andrew Jackson was its spokesman. Coming from the West, where substantial equality prevailed, he held the theory that no man had a vested right to office. Therefore he made wholesale removals of the federal officers and fastened the spolts system upon American political life. As a spokesman of the Western democracy he distrusted the second Unifed States Bank, which was used to strengthen the financial system of the United States, but had not always kept clear of politics. He directed the removal of the deposits which the government had made in the bank, and successfully exerted his influence to prevent a new charter.

An era of wildeat hanking had already set in, during which many State banks issued currency which proved worthless. A financial panie oc-curred in 1837, due to loose banking based on spec-

Protective tarlffs were adopted in 1816 and again in 1824. In 1828 came the so-called tariff of abominations, with still higher duties, some of which were modified by the Tariff of 1832, which, however, retained the protective system. In the South and especially in South Carolina this policy was resented. The leaders of that State, headed by John C. Calboun, therefore expounded the theory of nullification,—that is, that a State without withdrawing from the Union might by a solemn act "nullify" an act of Congress beyond the powers granted by the Constitution. A State convention which was supposed to represent the sovereignty of the State declared the tariff acts null and void, and prohibited the payment of the duties levied under them.

Jackson met the issue squarely. In his nullification proclamation of 1832 he declared "The laws of the United States must be executed," and appealed to Congress to enlarge his powers so that he might enforce the law. The South Carolinians, realizing that he was in earnest, held an informal meeting to suspend the operation of the nullification ordinance. Meanwhile, Clay and Calhoun effected a compromise tariff which was adopted by Congress, providing for the gradual reduction of duties to a trade. Even before the adoption of the Constitusucceeded in upsetting protection. In a slightly different form the nullification idea was the basis of the later secession movement.

A party was already rising made up of "Anti-Jackson men," which grew in both the South and which grew in both the South and North and slowly coalesced. The mainstay was the manufacturers and the capitalists of the East, who desired a national bank as against the wildcat banks and high protective duties and far-reaching internal improvements. Webster and Clay were the greatest leaders of this group. In 1832 these men united as National Republicans to support Clay, who was defeated by Jackson. In 1835 they formally adopted the name of Whigs. From its very nature and its geographical support the Whig party was a party of compromise on the question of slavery. It elected two presidents by nominating military heroes, William Henry Harrison in 1840 and Zachary Taylor in 1848; then it declined and, in 1856, disap-

Territorial Expansion. The territorial expansion of the United States began with the treaty of 1783, by which the western boundaries of the possessions which Great Britain had fixed in 1763 at the Appalachian Mountains were extended to the Mississippi. In 1803 Jefferson added the vast Louisiana acquired from France. In 1812-1814 West Florida was annexed by conquest, and in 1819 East Florida was acquired from Spain, while the southern and western boundaries of the Louisiana Purchase were determined In 1836 Texas became independent of Mexico and existed as the Lone-Star Stafe until 1845, when it was annexed to the War wifh Mexico began in 1846 because Polk desired California and was glad to make use of the Texan claim to all the territory as far south and west as the Rio Grande. In this war the United States was suecessful; not only was the disputed territory annexed, but also California and New Mexico, being all the region south of the 42d parallel and west of the Louisiana Purchase, were conquered. This territory was rounded out by the Gadsden Purchase in 1853.

In Oregon joint occupation with Great Britain was renewed in 1827, but terminated in 1846. By a boundary treaty the disputed region was divided, and the part south of 49° was confirmed to the United States. In 1842 the dispute over the Maine boundary was settled by the Webster-Ashburton Treaty. Thus, in the seventy years following the Revolution, the territory was quadrupled, and the United States obtained fronts on the Atlantic, Gulf, Pacific, and Great Lakes.

Problem of Slavery. Back of the various politieal problems and policies of expansion was the question of slavery. Before the Revolution, slavery existed in every colony North and South. At the time of the adoption of the Constitution all of the New England States and Pennsylvania were on the high road toward universal freedom.

The Constitution of 1787 had to recognize an institution which then existed in eight of the States; two of the great compromises of the Constitution and several other provisions dealt with slavery the apportionment of taxes and of representation, slaves were to be counted as three fifths of their total number. Congress was forbidden to prohibit the foreign slave trade until 1808. But Congress had power to regulate slavery in the territories, and even in the District of Columbia, and dealt with the question of fugitive slaves. The word "slave" was avoided, for many Northerners and some Southern leaders looked to the final extinction of slavery.

The causes for the decline of slavery in the North were partly moral, partly political, and partly eco-nomic. Its sudden and unexpected growth in the South was due to cetton. In the North neither the soil nor the climate favored the increase of slavery and manufactures gave employment to a class of laborers more intelligent than the slaves. South the invention of the cotton gin greatly stimulated the grewth of cotton, for it was a staple which could be easily cultivated by ignorant and unskilled slave labor employed most of the year. Statistics show that in New England the slaves decreased from 3,763 in 1790 to about 200 in 1820. In the Middle States from 45,000 in 1790 to 18,000 in 1816. In the South, on the other hand, there was an increase from 648,651 in 1790 to 3,953,000 in 1860. Of the Southern States, Maryland showed a decrease of 16% between 1830 and 1860, Virginia an increase of only 4%, North Carolina an increase of 35%, but in Georgia and the Gulf States during the same period the increase was  $276\,\%$ This decline of the border States as farming communities and the increase of work and prosperity in the South, led to a rift of in-terests and feeling within the South.

Federal Legislation concerning Slavery. Congress acted upon the implied permission in the Constitution and as early as possible passed laws first restricting and then forbidding the foreign slave Territory. Again, in 1820 the Missouri Compromise excluded slavery from other territories north of 36° 30'. But Congress made provision for the capture of fugitive slaves and left slavery in the District of Columbia. With this compromise the South was for a time content. The great unsettled areas, especially in the Southwest, apparently afforded ample room for expansion and the establishment of their " peculiar system.'

> Abolition Movement. The Abolition movement began in the colonies as early as 1700 and never ceased until its purpose was accomplished. From 1775 to 1830 it was strong in the northern tier of slave States. In 1831 William Lloyd Garrison founded a paper called The Liberator, devoted to the abolition of negro slavery and established active antislavery societies. In the same year a slave Insurrection, headed by Nat Turner, broke out in Virginia. Although there was no connection between the antislavery movement and this insurrection. tion, still the Southerners became apprehensive and Southern abolition movement vanished. Southern resentment at the discussion of slavery by the North was such that the legislature of Georgia offered a reward for Garrison's arrest and conviction. Because of fear of insurrections, the system of restrictions on the Negroes commonly called the Black Code was now revised and made more drastic.

From 1816 to 1848 States were admitted to the Union in pairs, one Southern, one Northern. Thus when Texas was admitted to the Union as a slave State in 1845 it was soon counterbalanced by Iowa (1846). By the war with Mexico the United States gained the immense areas of New Mexico and Cali-The South confidently expected the new territory to be divided by the 36° 30′ line. when, in 1846, the measure known as the Wilmot Proviso passed the House stipulating that in the new territory to be acquired from Mexico "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall ever exist in any part of said territory, except for crime, whereof the party shall first be duly convicted — " there was the party shall first be duly convicted an uproar.

The question was solved by the accidental discovery of gold In California in 1848. Within two years more than 80,000 emigrants entered the country. Most of these "Forty-Niners" were Northern or Southern men who with their own hands lahored for gold and had no intention of competing In November, 1849, a convention with slaves. In November, 1849, a convention was held under the advice of President Taylor which drew up a State constitution prohibiting slavery and applied for admission to the Union as a free State. No force in Congress could resist this action of the Californians.

For a time the opposition to slavery conducted by the Abolitionists was mainly outside the political parties. In the election of 1840 the growing sentiment of the North began to take the form of votes. The agitation over the Wilmot Proviso led to the formation of the Liberty party (1840). Its successor, the Free-soll party, in 1848 nominated Van Buren for president and cast nearly 300,000 votes, out of about 3,000,000.

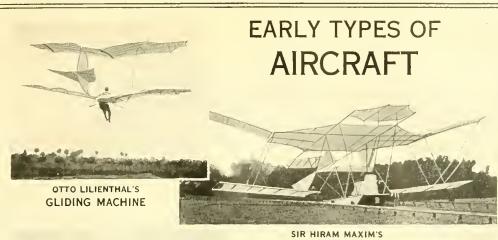

The successful candidate in 1848 was General Zachary Taylor, a Whig from Louisiana, owner of slaves and father-in-law of Jefferson Davis. Taylor became convinced that the aggression was from the He planned to hasten the admission of California and New Mexico as either free or slave States as the people of each territory might determine.

In the meantime Henry Clay was called from his retirement to attempt, as he had done in 1820, to settle the matter by compromise. Taylor died in July, 1850, and the scheme put forward by Clay and supported by Webster was adopted. By this Compromise of 1850 California was admitted as a free State extending from Mexico to Oregon; New Mexico and Utah were organized as territories without the Wilmot Proviso, but with a dubious promise that the "rights of property" were to be decided by the Supreme Court. Utah was plainly destined to become a free State, but it was hoped that slaves could be introduced into New Mexico. The South also gained a new fugitive slave law, which was to be enforced by Federal commissioners.

This compromise was a makeshift. It could not control the sentiments of the people, and the attempt to enforce the law in Boston caused indignatempt to emoree the law in Boston caused indigna-tion and disorder. Popular feeling was still more aroused by the publication of Uncle Tom's Cabin by Harriet Beecher Stowe in 1852. Although its pic-ture of slavery was not the average, its description of known and probable horrors gave it imprecedented success, more than 300,000 copies being sold in a single year. It exercised an influence in politics beyond that of any other book ever written in America.

In 1854 Stephen A. Douglas of Illinois introduced into the Senate the Kansas-Nebraska Bill, which provided for the organization of the Louisiana Pur-chase north of 36° 30′ and west of Misscuri and Iowa into the two territories of Kansas and Ne-Provision was made that the States formed out of this territory should be free or slave "as their constitution may prescribe at the time." This was North Carolina, Arkansas, and Teunessee at once and Congress; but the next day she was attacked by constitution may prescribe at the time." This was the doctrine of Popular Soverelguty or Squatter Sovereignty. It left to the people the decision as to who should first organize the State government. It left to the people the decision as It was directly contrary to the spirit and principle of the Missouri Compromise on the specious argument that the Missouri Act was repealed by the "principle of the Compromise of 1850. Immigration so-cieties were organized in both the North and the South, and settlers were hurried to Kansas. The North was more successful, and after a period of violence and even civil war, Kansas was admitted as a free State in 1861. In 1856 the political party op-posed to slavery took the name of Republican party and nominated Frémont, "the Pathfinder," for president. Great enthusiasm was shown, and Frémont polled only 500,000 votes less than the successful Democratic candidate, Buchanan.

In 1857 opinion in the North was still further inflamed by the decision in the Dred Scott Case.
The Supreme Court held: (1) that a slave or the descendants of a slave could not be a citizen and, there fore, had no standing in the United States Courts; (2) that the restriction of territorial slavery by the Missouri Compromise was unconstitutional; (3) that slave owners could carry their slaves and property into any territory. The Republicans were thus in-formed by the highest court of the land that the po-litical principles for which their party was formed were unconstitutional and impossible of accomplishment, and that even the Kansas-Nebraska Act, which embodied Douglas's principles, was unsound.

Two years later John Brown, an intense antislavery man and agitator in Kansas, thought he saw, in the possibility of Negro insurrection, a weak spot in the system of slavery. He, therefore, with a score of followers raided the United States arsenal at Harpers Ferry and tried to bring in the slaves in the neighbor-He was captured and hanged for treason. Although his plan involved civil war and destruction and his sentence was legally just, he was convinced that he was doing a great service to humanity. Public opinion in the North raised him to the rank of a martyr. The South was not terrified, but for the first time realized the extent to which the Abolitionists were ready to go.

In the presidential campaign of 1860 four candidates appeared. The Democratic party split and the Northern wing nominated Douglas; the Southern wing put forward Vice President Breckinridge. A remnant of the old Whigs organized the Constitutional Union party and nominated Bell and Everett on the platform of the Constitution and the Laws. The growing Republican party nominated Abraham Lincoln. In the election Lincoln received 930,000 popular votes fewer than his combined opponents, but his majorities and pluralities in all the free States except New Jersey gave him 180 electoral votes, and he was elected. In Congress the Republicans elected nine members less than a majority of Secession. On the news of the election of Lincoin the legislature of South Carolina summoned a convention which declared (Dec. 20, 1860) that "the union now subsisting between South Carolina and other States, under the name of 'The United States of America,' is hereby dissolved." Other Southern States followed. On February 8, 1861, delegates of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, delegates of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Florida — a little later joined by Texas — met in convention at Montgom-ery, Alabama, and established a provisional consti-tution for "The Confederate States of Amer-lea." Jefferson Davls was chosen president and Alexander H. Stephens vice president.

President Buchanan, a State-rights man, a Democrat, and a lifelong defender of slavery, advised Con-gress that secession was wrong, but that the anti-slavery men had provoked it, and that the Federal government had no right to coerce a State. took no measures to prevent secession or to maintain the Federal control of the forts, mints, and custom-All efforts houses within the Confederate States. address was conciliatory, assuring the South that slavery would not be assaulted in the slave States and that fugitive slaves ought to be restored; but he uncompromisingly asserted that the Union was perpetual and secession impossible. As to the forts and customhouses, he maintained that they must be held by the Federal authorities and that it was his duty to enforce the laws throughout the territory of the United States

Major Anderson, the commander of Fort Sumter in Charleston Harbor, refused to deliver the fort to the State authorities and April 12, 1861, the Confederate forces opened fire on the fort. The Civil War. It was plain that the region on the border between the two sections would be the scene of the conflict. Both the Northern and Southern armies hastened to secure the most advantageous positions, especially in the area south of Washington. Richmond had been made the capital of the Confederacy and Northern public sentiment demanded an attack upon it. A hastily gathered force marched southward from Washington and on July 21, 1861, fought the battle of Bull Run, called in the South the first battle of Manassas, in which the Union army, was defected and in pagin presented. the Union army was defeated and in panic retreated to Washington. This event stung the North and made clear the terrible gravity of the struggle coln issued a call for half a million men. Je Jefferson Davis also called for troops and both sides prepared for a bitter conflict.

The fall of 1861 was spent by both armies in per feeting their organization and disciplining their troops, and no important general action took place in the East. In the West a struggle took place in Missouri where, although the Southern troops were generally successful in the fleld, the State was prevented from joining the Confederacy

April 19, 1861, Lincoln proclaimed a blockade of the Southern ports—This was practically a recogni-tion of formal war and at once involved the United States in complications with European powers long coast line of the Confederacy made the blockade difficult; but after a few months it was tightened, and many captures were made, though blockade runners continued to enter the Southern ports till the end of the war. Lincoln's action on the blockade brought the great naval powers of France and England face to face with a decision as to the nature of the struggle. May 13, 1861, Great Britain properly recognized the war as an actuality and issued a proclamation of neutrality; but then and thereafter refused to recognize the independence of the Confederacy

Relations with Great Britain, however, brought almost to the breaking point by the seizure of Mason and Slidell, the Confederate commissioners, from the British steamer Trent (1861). A conflict was avoided by the prompt return of Mason Slidell and the disavowal of the capture on a technicality by Lincoln. Nevertheless, a large party in England openly or secretly favored the cause of the Confederacy and exerted such influence that the British government neglected to enforce its neutrality, and several vessels under directions of Confederate agents were built or altered to serve as commerce destroyers, and were allowed to leave British ports. The most dangerous were the Alabama, Shenandoah, and Florida, which preyed upon Union commerce. In 1872 Great Britain arbitrated the claims arising out of her negligence and paid for the damage done.

The Western campaign of 1862 was favorable to the Union. General Grant captured Fort Henry on the Tennessee and Fort Donelson on the Cumberland. Two months later New Orleans was captured by Admiral Farragut. While the Union forces were still divided, Grant was attacked on April 6th by General Albert S. Johnston at the terrible battle of Plttsburg Landing or Shiloh. The first day's fight was a defeat for Grant, but the Confederate general was killed and Buell's army came to the rescue just in time. Two months of cautious maneuvering on both sides followed.

In the East General George B. McClellan spent the spring in preparation and finally transferred his army to the peninsula between the York and James Rivers, aiming at Richmond. April 4, the Army of the Petomac began to move from Fortress Monroe, and for three months the campaign went on, closing with a series of engagements within sight of Richmond, in which the more brilliant successes were won by the Confederates. General Jackson, known familiarly as "Stonewall" Jackson, especially distinguished himself. The battle of Malvern IIIII held the Confederates in check while McClellan withdrew to the protection of his gunboats.

In August General Lee, now in command of the Confederate forces, meved toward Washington. A terrible battle, known as the second battle of Buil Run or Manassas, was fought on August 30, in which the Union army under General Pope was severely beaten. McClellan was summoned to severely beaten. McClelian was summoned to Washington and his forces joined with the remnants of Pope's army. Lee crossed the Potomac, but was checked at the battle of Antietam, called Sharpshurg in the South. No other decided action took place until December 13, when General Burnside, who had been appointed in McClellan's place, engaged Lee's army at Frederickshurg and met with gaged Lee's army at Fredericksburg and met with

This first battle between ironclads ultimately revolutionized naval warfare. The Eastern campaigns of the Union forces had been unsuccessful, but the victories of Farragut and Grant had more than compensated for these defeats

Emancipation. Early in the war Congress, ignoring the Dred Scott decision, prohibited slavery in the District of Columbia and the territories. September 23, 1862, President Lincoln issued a pre-liminary proclamation which was followed on January 1, 1863, by a formal emancipation proclama-tion, freeing all slaves within the territory held by the Confederate States. This action was based upon the power of the President to conduct the war and to weaken the Southern forces by reducing slave labor. Up to this time the Republican party, or the Union party, as it was sometimes called, put in the foreground that it was fighting for the preservation of the Umon; and slavery was not directly affected in the four loyal border slave States. By the Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution, adopted in 1865, slavery and involuntary servitude were prohibited throughout the United States and all places subject to its jurisdiction. This was the first amendment to be added since 1804.

The Western war in 1863 turned to the advantage the North. The battle of Murfreeshoro, Tenof the North. The battle of Murfreeshoro, Tennessee (January 1, 1863), left the Union force in possession of the field. The great object in the West was now the opening of the Mississippi, and General was now the opening of the anissister of the capture of Orant began a series of operations for the capture of Vickshurg, which surrendered on July 4, 1863, so that the Mississippi ran, as Lincoln said, "unvexed that the Mississippi ran, as Lincoln said, that the Mississippi ran, as Lincom said, unvexed to the sea." Meanwhile, under General Hooker, the Army of the Potomac in the East suffered a great reverse at Chancellorsville (May 2-3, 1863); and Lee shortly after invaded Pennsylvania. Meade was placed at the head of the great Union force which confronted Lee at Gettysburg.

During the first three days of July was fought what is generally regarded as the decisive battle of the war. Lee was repulsed and fell back across the Potomac. In the West the Union army commanded by Rosecrans was badly defeated at Chickamauga eptember 19-20). Grant was placed at the head of the Western armies and organized a powerful movement which led to the battles of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge and drove the Confederate forces out of southern Tennessce.

Grant's success led to his appointment as lieutenant general and commander of all the Union forces Leaving the Western army in command of Sherman, Grant opened the campaign in the East by attacking Lee's army in the terrible battle of the Wilderness, May, 1864. During the next six weeks Grant fought a series of battles which resulted in heavy losses, especially on the Union side. Lee was driven back to Petersburg, the key to Richmond, but held his lines for many months. But the Union losses could be replaced by fresh troops, while the strength of the Confederate army was permanently diminished.

In the West Sherman started a movement south from Chattaneoga. He was opposed by Johnston, a general second only to Lee in ability. After three months of almost continual fighting Sherman succeeded in reaching Atlanta. On November 16 began his famous " March to the Sea" across Georgia, ending at Savannah, December 21. Sherman's campaign cut the Confederacy in two, hesides devastating some of its most fertile territory

February 1, Sherman started northward, while Grant, whose army had been strengthened, attacked Lee. Hoping to divert Grant, Lee dispatched Jubal Early with a body of Confederate troops through the Shenandoah Valley across the Potomac, and they reached the defenses of Washington, but were halted Grant dispatched Sheridan to flank Early and devastate the Shenandoah Valley.

Early in April Lee was forced to abandon his defenses, and a few days later was stopped and sur-rounded by Grant and Sheridan at Appomatiox Court House. Here Lee, seeing further resistance hopeless, surrendered his whole army, April 9. A few days later Johnston surrendered to Sherman (April 26). The terms of surrender were such as had never before been granted to the defeated party at the end of a great civil war. The Confederate soldiers were required to lay down their arms and to cease from hostility. Grant generously allowed the men who had horses to retain them

Reconstruction. At the outbreak of the war Lincoln and the Republicans generally denied that a State could secede and leave the Union. The war forced the seceding States to accept the contention of the North as a physical fact; but the emancipation of the slaves was a profound change in the social economic conditions of the South, both in the ConfedR settlement: (1) the status of the seceded States; (2) the status of the Southern whites; (3) the status of the Negroes.

Were the seceding States out of the Union? Or were they simply regular States in which insurrections had occurred and unlawful governments been founded? If they were States then the assent of 27 States was necessary for the ratification of the Thirteenth Amendment. If the States were out of the Union and had been reduced to a territorial basis. Congress might require them to ratify as a requisite for readmission

President Lincoln held that the discussion of the question of whether the States were out of the Union or not was "bad as the basis of controversy and good for nothing at all". The States in question were "out of their practical relation with the Union" and the sole object of the government should be to get them into that proper practical relation."

His plan for reconstruction, proposed in 1864, also took account of the personal status of participants in the Confederacy. He offered amnesty to all per-sons (except certain classes) who would take the eath to support the Constitution and the new state of things. Whenever one tenth of the voters in any things. State should organize a genuine republican form of government, the president was ready to recognize The two houses of Congress, however, could not be denied the privilege to act as sole judge as to whether they would admit senators and representatives from such State governments

It was a frightful misfortune to both North and South when (April 14, 1865) President Lincoln was assassinated by the agent of a hand of con-spirators embittered by the failure of the South. The immediate result was to deepen a sense of the peril which still lay in the system of slavery

The presidency went to the vice president, Andrew Johnson. He had been a Democrat hefore the war and still believed in State severeignty, but he believed also in the Union. He was a man of great courage, with good intentions which he expressed with such violence that he alienated many who would otherwise have supported him.

President Johnson worked on the lines of Lincoln's reconstruction policy and had succeeded in most States. By the time Congress assembled (December 1865), Johnson had ready a new group of Southern State governments which had joined in ratifying the Thirteenth Amendment, so that slavery was extinct throughout the United States.

At first the large Republican majorities in both houses were inclined to proceed in harmony with the President. But the radicals, under the leadership of Thaddeus Stevens of Pennsylvania, caused Congress to break with the President and omitted from the roll call the names of the newly elected representatives from the recognized Southern States. The Republicans held a two-thirds majority in both houses and were therefore able to override any presidential veto.

They turned their attention especially to the status of the Negroes, whom they feared the reconstructed States would keep in a condition of vassalage. These fears were strengthened by the passage of State "Vagrant Acts" which discriminated against the Negroes. To protect the Negroes Congress proposed the Fourteenth Amendment, which declared that "all persons born or naturalized in the Lighted Congress. in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside." This directly reversed Taney's decision in the Dred Scott Case

Still further to protect the freedmen the amendment included elauses forbidding any State "to abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; or to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law This removed the protection of the freedmen from State to Federal courts. This Feurteenth Amendment, which was based on a previous Civil Rights Act, was proposed to the States in June, 1866, but was rejected by all the Southern States except Ten-

Congress was ready in the spring of 1867 with a comprehensive plan of reconstruction passed over the President's veto. The act of 1867 divided all the late Confederate States (except Tennessee) into military districts under the command of army officers. Under their direction white and black alike (except those classes excluded by the Four-teenth Amendment) were admitted to vote for delegates to State constitutional conventions, which must frame a constitution including Negro suffrage. When this was done the voters could choose a legislature, which must ratify the Fourteenth Amendment. When this process was completed the State was to be allowed to return to the Union

President Johnson, who had attempted by vetoes to check every step in this congressional plan for reconstruction, was distrusted by Congress lest through his power of appointment and removal he might thwart its plans. To insure success Congress passed the Tenure of Office Act, which made removals contingent upon the approval of the Senate. Johnson nevertheless removed Stanton, secretary of war, expecting to make a test case for the Supreme For this Johnson was Impeached by the House of Representatives, but after a long trial was acquitted by the Senate. His real offense was in obstinately differing with the party in power.

The Fourteenth Amendment went into force in July, 1868. General Grant, the Republican candidate for the presidency, was elected on a platform approving the congressional policy of reconstruction. In 1869 the Flfteenth Amendment was proposed, which declared that "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State on account of race color, or previous condition of servitude." The ratification of this amendment, as well as the Fourteenth, was made a condition for the readmission of Virginia, Mississippi, Texas, and Georgia. Although the Fifteenth Amendment was declared in force March, 1870, it was not until 1871 that the last of the Confederate States was restored to its full

The congressional policy of reconstruction expected Republican supremacy in the South through the Negro vote, which became the prey of unscrupulous leaders and some of the governments there organized fell into extravagance and corruption. State debts rapidly increased and State credit de-clined. The Southern whites, although reluctantly clined. accepting the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, resolved that the Negroes should not control organized a secret political organization They throughout the South, called Ku-Klux Klan, to terrorize the blacks, and speedily regained control of most of the State governments. This disturbance continued throughout the administration of President Grant

The election of 1876 was in doubt for more than four months. The unquestioned electoral votes stood 184 for Tilden, Democratic candidate, and 166 for Hayes, Republican. The 18 votes of Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina and one vete in Oregon were disputed. No method of terminating the dispute was provided by the Constitution and Congress finally created an Electoral Commission which declared, by a majority of S to 7 on all critical questions, that Hayes was elected.

President Hayes withdrew the troops from the South (April, 1877); henceforth the freedmen were left to their own resources and to the courts to obtain their civil and political rights

Congress, which was now Democratic, attempted to repeal the various laws which protected the Ne-grees in their right to vote. In this attempt they were partially successful, but the last of the Laws were not repealed until 1890. A new method of assuring white supremacy was new proposed. Complicated voting systems and registration and poll taxes disposed of most of the Negro vote.

In seven States other steps were taken to assure the control of the whites. The first was the Mississippi Constitution of 1890, ordained and established without reference to the voters for ratification, which set up alternative conditions for voting, one of which was that the voter should be able to read or understand any section of the Constitution. Provisions of this sort when applied by white registration officers effectually disfranchised most Negroes. Since an educational qualification night be enferced upon the whites, Louisiana, in 1896, adopted a "Grandfather Clause" whereby a person whe voted in 1867 or before, or the son or grandson of such a person, might vote. The Supreme Court such a person, might vote. The Supreme Court held in 1915 that a similar clause in the Oklahoma constitution was unconstitutional, but throughout the Southern States the whites remain in political

The Economic Revolution. Long before the Civil War steam and machinery transformed large portions of the North into manufacturing regions, and the creed of protection was made a political issue for the benefit of these industries. In the fifty years fellowing the Civil War the advance in industry and commerce was tremendous. In 1905 over twelve billion dollars was invested in factories; and the total value of the manufactured products was more than fourteen billion dollars—fifteen times the amount turned out in 1860. As late as 1882 turned out in 1860. hundreds of theusands of tens of steel rails were imported annually into the United States, but ten years later more than fifteen thousand tons were annually exported.

Rallway construction advanced even more rapidly than the growth of the population and the increase in manufacturing. In the decade between increase in manufacturing. In the decade between 1860 and 1870 the mileage of railroads increased by more than two thirds. In the next two decades it increased fivefold; and in 1910 there were 242,000 miles of railroad, more than eight times the mileage of 1860. The early railroads were constructed on the important lines of transit; but they soon were pushed into the West, where there were no large by grants of money, credit, and land by State and local governments. This expansion included fraud and corruption, in which some public officials were involved. The building of these roads was often a great speculation, and fortunes were made; but in many instances the small investors were wiped out.

After the period of construction there followed a period of combination. Beginning in 1869 with the union of the Hudson River and New York Cenal lines, great systems were brought together both the East and West. This was also an era tral of Inventions which revolutionized transportation and industry. For example, air brakes, Pullman cars, and railway signals were introduced; Bell's telephone was put in operation in 1875, are lights in 1879, incandescent lights in 1882; and electric street railways were in successful operation in 1885.

Social Transformation. This economic revolution brought about a transformation in society, which included several significant elements. The first was industrial capital which, as contrasted with agriculture, increased enormously in amount and in political power. The second was a new distribupolitical power. flon of the population. The majority were no longer found on farms, but were wage workers. The drift to the eitles checked the normal growth of the rural regions. In 1890, 31.6% of the population lived in towns of over 2,500; in 1900, 40.5%; in 1910, 46.3%; in 1920, over one half. In the ferty years after the Civil War, New York tripled in popdation, San Francisco increased more than sixfold, Chicago more than tenfold.

Another altering force was the effect of demand for labor in stimulating immigration. In 1870 387,000 immigrants arrived in the United States; in 1880, 457,000; in 1882, 788,000; while in the three pears between 1907 and 1907. years between 1905 and 1907 more than a million came each year. In all more than 33,000,000 immigrants came to the United States between 1820 and 1920. Great Britain and Ireland furnished more than any single country, 8,000,000 in all; Germany came next with more than 5,000,000, and the Scandinavian immigration added 2,000,000.

About 1900, Russia, Italy, and the southern European countries began to send large numbers; and in all more than 3,000,000 have come from the countries under the control of the former Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, 3,000,000 from Russia, and 3,000,000 from Italy. On the Western coast about 200,000 have come from Japan and 288,000 Chinese arrived before the Exclusion Act of 1883.

The industrial revolution and fereign immigration acted together to force large numbers of people into a protetarlat, a large population living in tenements and rented houses, suffering poverty and degradation. The employment of women and children in factories on the one hand, the organization of working elass into trade-unions and other groups on the other, led to demands for legislation to mitigate the evils. At length the opposition to the labor system reached the form of an attack on the industrial system itself.

As a result of this social and economic revolution the industrial class became a political factor. Trade-unions, which came into existence about 1800, were organized in many lines of industry and The Labor Reform included millions of members. party appeared in 1872, and a few years later the Knights of Labor attempted a consolidation of all trades and classes of workers, and demanded an eight-hour day and other reforms. In 1877 the first great rallroad strike occurred, and Pittsburgh for a time fell almost completely into the hands of the strikers. From this time on strikes, often accompanied by violence, were a regular part of the struggles between the employer and the employee.

The most significant result of the industrial transformation was the rise of enormous combinations in transportation and industry. The largest and most profitable lines of business were passing from individual to corporate ownership. was to combine the corporations into still larger units, commonly called (rusts, which possessed greater resources and exercised greater influence.

In 1882 the Standard Oil Trust was organized, and the stocks of several competing corporations were placed in the hands of trustees, who managed the properties as a whole and distributed the profits pro rata. This method proved attractive and was followed by similar organizations in cotton, oil, lineed oil, lead, sugar, whisky, and cordage. the trust method was not followed, vast new corporations were formed which purchased the securities of other corporations and thus controlled their proper-ties and managed the industry as a whole. By this method enormous amounts of securities were issued, oftentimes upon purely fictitious values, which encouraged speculation of the wildest sort

Moreover, in the necessity for paying dividends upon these securities the corporations attempted to crush competition and to control, if not to increase, prices. Special privileges were demanded from legislatures, and corporations were in a position to This rapid expansion was not due solely to private exercise political influence. Attempts were made enterprise, but was aided and stimulated by lavish on the part of the States to regulate and control the Development of the West. In 1876 the Far Western States, Oregon, California, and Nevada, were separated from the States of the Middle West by a broad wedge of territories: Washington, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Ctah, Arizona, New Mexico, Dakota, and the Indian Territory. In 1870 the combined population of these territories was under half a million. This region was devoted almost entirely to cattle raising, but the small farmers were beginning to take up government land and to fence off the more fertile fields and watercourses. The building of the great transcontinental railroads opened up this region to settlement, and the territories developed more rapidly than the older States had dene. From 1889 to 1896, seven new States were formed from this area.

The Economie Development of the South. The emancipation of the slaves and the devastation wrought by the Civil War made it necessary to reconstruct the industry of the South. The few remaining old plantations of large size were mostly subdivided. In 1860, the average holding of land in the Southern States had been 335 acres; in 1880 it was 153, and in 1900 it had fallen to 138. The fluid capital of 1860 was invested in Confederate securities, which became worthless; and the demand for new capital could only be satisfied by large amounts from the North. Railroads were rebuilt, cities extended, and cotton factories, blast furnaces, and iron and steel works set up. For the first time the South became an industrial region.

In 1860, there were but 300,000 cotton spindles in that section; in 1900 there were 4,000,000, while the number of employees had increased tenfold and the value of the output nearly twelvefold. In West Virginia and Alabama coal and iron and steel industries developed so rapidly that Alabama, which had stood tenth among the pig-iron producing States in 1880, ranked third in 1890. The social effects of the industrial change were significant: political leaders began to be drawn from industry and business as well as from agriculture. This rapid industrial growth and mutual cooperation in business and investments did much to heal the breach between the North and South and to unite the country.

Changes in Polities and Law. This economic and industrial development in both sections brought in a new type of public official. Statesmen like Clay, Webster, and Calhoun were succeeded by men of the type of Conkling, Platt, Gorman, Quay, and Congress was more and more composed of practical men who either had organized or had assisted in the organization of great railways and industries and other enterprises which controlled natural resources and franchises. They were convinced that prosperity of the country depended upon the development of these industries and resources They demanded the widest possible extension of the rights of private property and the narrowest re-striction of the State. They believed that the natural resources of the country should be transferred to private ownership, and that intangible assets like franchises should be transformed into private prop-They supported their theory of property by a theory of law and politics, which, while protecting property against disorder and furnishing public aid for private enterprises, regarded State interference with this property as an evil to be resisted the Fourteenth Indicial Review under Amendment. For many years the only attempts to control or regulate the industrial and economic system were made by the States. Some years after the Fourteenth Amendment was passed, efforts were made to apply its terms to restrict the actions of the States. The words "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immu-nities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the were supposedly framed to protect the Negrocs against injustice by the States. ment certainly transferred a great area of power to the Federal government.

Thus, the word "person" was held their interests. to include artificial persons, such as corporations, which, therefore, could not be deprived of property without due process of law. Due process of law gradually came to mean that the Supreme Court of the United States would make it a practice to review State legislation and to test its reasonahleness serious question was that of rates charged by publicservice corporations. Gradually it became a settled doctrine property. State legislation affecting private property was subject to judicial review, and that private property should be free from all interference, except such as might be allowed by the Supreme Court of

The power of judicial review has been applied not only to property, but also to social and remedial legislation. Thus, the Supreme Court has asserted its right to review and occasionally to reverse the decision of the State courts and State legislatures upon the limitations of heurs of labor and other laws attempting to alter or remedy social and industrial conditions.

Parties and Party Issues from 1877 to 1896. From 1861 to 1889 was an era of Republican control. During it the Democrats held the presidency for only The Republican years out of twenty-eight. party, originally a minority party of protest, was transfermed by the Civil War into the majority party, which felt sure that on its success depended the preservation of the Union and the salvation of society. The high tariff required by the financial necessities of the Civil War was gradually raised to a party doctrine and was supported by the influence and campaign subscriptions of the corporations The skillful and honest management by affected. Republican officials of the national debt caused by the war attracted financiers; and the farmers of West owed their homes to the generous public-land policy of the Republicans.

The Democratic parly for a time seemed discredited by the Civil War, but its principles had such vitality that it succeeded in gaining a majority in the House of Representatives in 1874, and it almost gained the presidency in 1876. The administration of Hayes was colorless, and he was hampered by a Democratic House of Representatives. In 1880 a section of the Republicans vainly tried to nominate General Grant for a third term, to revive their waning popularity. The next Republican president, James A. Garfield, of Ohio, received a popular vote only 7,000 greater than that of his Democratic rival, General Hancock. After Garfield's death by assassination in 1881, he was succeeded (September, 1881) by the vice president, Chester A. Arthur, who administered the office with dignity and ability, but could not make headway against the rising distrust toward the Republican party.

In 1884 the Republicans nominated James G. Blaine, of Maine, a man of ability who had had a brilliant career in the House of Representatives and was possessed of a magnetic personality. Unfortunately, he had used his political power for the private ends of some of his friends. The Democrats nominated Grover Cleveland, governor of New York. Many reform Republicans, commonly called "mugwinnps," refused to support Blaine and went over to the Democratic candidate. Cleveland was elected, though the shifting of a thousand votes in New York would have given the victory to the Republicans.

Cleveland's first two years were negative rather than positive. He used the veto more freely than any other American president, chiefly to check private pension hills. He succeeded in recovering more than $0,000,000 acres of public land from illegal claimants. He was the first to treat the labor problem in a special message. The most significant statute passed in his administration, the Interstate Commerce Law of 1887, was not a partisan measure. Throughout his administration he was hampered by a Republican Senate and by the divisions within his own party in the House of Representatives. Cleveland became satisfied that the tariff was

Cleveland became satisfied that the tariff was a largerous to the country, and in 1887 he made it an issue on which he hoped to unite his own party and defeat the Republicans in the campaign of 1888. The Republicans nominated Benjamin Harrison was managed by a political boss and by a capitalist who raised a large sum from the interests protected by the tariff. Harrison was elected by an electeral plurality of 65, although Cleveland polled a greater popular vote; and the Republicans succeeded in gaining control of both houses of Congress

Their narrow majority in the House of Represent atives caused Speaker Reed to "count a quorum," a practice thereafter embodied in the rules. Thus organized, the Republicans at once prepared a bill called the McKinley Tariff, after the man who had charge of it. The tariff of 1890, based upon the theory of high protection, was the Republican answer to Cleveland's demand for tariff reform. In the same year, in response to the outcry against the big corporations and trusts the Sherman Antitrust Law was passed. An attempt was made to hold the Western States and the silver wing of the party by the passage of the Sherman Act, which provided for the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver each month, to be paid for in notes redeemable in silver or gold at the option of the government.

In the campaign of 1892 both parties renominated the candidates of 1888, but Harrison was decisively defeated. For the first time since 1872, a third party polled a significant vote — 1,000,000 votes cast for the Populist candidate, Weaver.

Cleveland's second administration began in 1893 with what appeared to be an era of prosperity; but beneath the surface were serious financial and industrial difficulties. The revenues were declining and the government was facing a deficit at a time when there was a stringency in the gold market. The gold reserve, which the government maintained to redeem United States notes, diminished rapidly. Finally, on October 30, 1893, the Sherman silver law was repealed and some relief obtained.

The industrial condition of the country was also bad. Never before had the evil of unemployment been so widespread in the United States; and Coacy's Army of the unemployed, which planned to march to Washington as a protest, was felt to be a dangerous symptom. Reduction in wages produced strikes, chief of which was the Pullman strike of 1894 at Chicago, which for a time paralyzed the railroads and led to the interference of Federal troops against the protest of Governor Altegeld of Illinois. In this strike the Federal courts granted an injunction against the president of the union, Eugene V. Debs, who went to prison for persisting in the direction of the strike contrary to the commands of the court.

The most important piece of legislation was the Wilson Tariff of 1894, including an Income tax designed to make up for loss of revenue by a reduced tariff, a provision which in 1895 was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The tariff bill was so altered in the Senate that President Cleveland refused to sign it, but allowed it to become a law without his signature.

Minor Parties. While the two great parties attempted to concentrate public attention upon the tariff other issues, especially social and economic problems, were constantly being discussed and reforms urged. Since these questions were ignored by the old parties, minor parties took them up, beginning in the Reconstruction period.

The Greenback Party. During the Civil War there were issued about $450,000,000 in United States notes, popularly known as greenbacks. Beginning in 1866, an attempt was made to redeem these, but this was checked by Congress within a year. The arguments in opposition to the retirement of the greenbacks were those which have always been used for the expansion of the currency: to reduce the circulating medium would increase the value of coin and cause prices to fall. To pay all the greenbacks a bonded debt must be substituted, thus increasing the interest charges, and causing increased taxation. The debtor class would suffer, while the holders of bonds or other colligations paying a fixed income would receive relatively much more.

In 1876 a National Greenhack convention was held and Peter Cooper, of New York, was nominated for president. The Greenbackers differed from the old parties, not only on monetary questions, but also on social and economic legislation. Thus, in 1880, when their candidate received over 300,000 votes, they advocated labor legislation of an advanced type, Chinese exclusion, and the regulation of interstate commerce for the benefit of the shipper. This party ceased to exist after 1884, but the discontented elements which went to make it up were absorbed by the newly formed People's party.

The 16-to-1 Silver Men held ideas similar to the Greenbackers'.

In 1792 gold and silver were coined at the ratio of 15 to 1; this proved too low for gold, which was driven out of circulation. In 1834 the ratio was established at 16 to 1, which proved an overvaluation for gold, so that little silver was offered for coinage. In 1873, when silver had practically ceased to circulate, silver was demonetized and the gold dollar made the basis of the monetary system. Meantime, the production of silver increased immensely, while its use in coinage was discontinued. The result was that the price of silver declined and the silver-mine owners demanded that a government which protected manufactures should give them aid by resuming the coinage of silver. These demands were reënforced by those of the debter class, who demanded cheap and abundant money with which to pay their debts. The West was in debt to the East and believed that the gold standard worked against them and for the banker.

Both the Republicans and Democrats were divided on this issue. In 1878 the Bland-Allison Act provided that the secretary of the treasury should buy not less than two million dollars' worth of silver each month, to be coined into silver dollars. This was altered by the Sherman Act of 1890, which required the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver a month. Silver was overproduced and steadily fell in price — gold went almost out of circulation, and it was with great difficulty that Cleveland accomplished the repeal of this act (1893) which threatened to empty the treasury.

Lahor Parties. The organization of labor began as early as 1865. In 1870 labor reform parties nominated candidates for governor in Massachusetts and New Hampshire. In 1872 a candidate for the presidency was nominated by a national convention. These attempts to utilize the political influence of Socialist Labor party was organized in 1892, but has never received a large number of votes, the maximum being 39,000 in 1900. It was the most radical of all parties and because of its very radicalism has failed to unite the working class

The Socialist party, which first nominated candidates in 1900, is less radical than the Socialist Labor party and has attracted far wider support. In 1900 it received 87,000 votes; in 1908, 420,000; in 1912, 900,000. It has succeeded also in electing occasional representatives to Congress, but has had no appreciable effect in presidential campaigns, since it draws its strength from both of the great parties

The Populists. In the sixties was organized a secret society called the "Fatrons of Husbandry," commonly known as the "Grangers," which attempted to improve the conditions of the farmers. Others it is recognitived much by the way of State Of itself it accomplished much in the way of State railway legislation, but on national issues it united with the Greenbackers. The first national focus of agrarian discontent was the People's, or Popullst, parfy, which was the combination of the National Farmers' Alliance, the Industrial Union, organized in Texas in 1875, and the National Farmers' Alliance of Illinois, organized in 1880.

The aggregation grew very rapidly and in 1890 claimed a membership of over three million. The People's convention of 1892 put forward the most radical platform ever adopted by any American Among the planks were free and unlimited party. coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1; additional United States notes until the circulating medium should amount to $50 per capita; and a graduated income tax to compel holders of wealth to contribute their proportional share to the expenses of the gov-In the campaign of 1892 they cast a milernment ernment. The Campaign of 1896. Gradually these irregular movements came together for the campaign of 1896. During his second administration, President Cleveland failed to hold the confidence of his party and was bitterly attacked by the radical wing. In the Democratic convention of 1896, this wing gained control and adopted a platform favoring the free and unrestricted coinage of silver, denouncing the tariff, and attacking the Supreme Court for its decision on the income tax case and the lower Federal courts for the use of injunctions in labor disputes. the use of injunctions in labor disputes. This platform was enthusiastically supported by William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska, in his famous "Cross of Gold" speech which won for him the nomination of the party. The Populist party also nominated Bryan.

The Republican convention was controlled by the conservatives and, although nearly a hundred delegates who favored the free coinage of silver seceded, platform favering the maintenance of the gold tandard was adopted. The Republicans hoped to a platform layering the maintenance of the good standard was adopted. The Republicans hoped to focus the attention of the campaign upon the tariff, but the radical nature of the Democratic platform and its frank appeal to class prejudice, divided the parties sharply along class lines. The gold stand-ard was made the most prominent issue. The Republican campaign was ably managed by Marcus A. Hanna, who introduced into the political campaign the efficiency he had shown in business. Republican candidate, McKinley, was elected by a popular majority of less than 500,000 over the Democrats and all other parties. For Congress, the Republicans elected a safe, but by no means united For Congress, the Although the conservatives triumphed, the large popular vote which the Populist and Democratic candidates secured showed that new issues were entering into political life; but the solution of these questions was postponed by the Spanish American War and the resulting imperialism

United States as a World Power. The Civil War altered the international position of the United States. It showed that the military and naval resources of the nation were so great that no other state was likely to challenge it. It left several diplo-matic controversies with Great Britain. The long dispute over the northwestern boundary was finally settled by the award of the emperor of Germany in 1872. More important was the question of Great Britain's liability for the damage done to American commerce by the Alabama and other Confederate cruisers built or altered in Great Britain and allowed to use the colonial ports. Finally, by the Treaty of Washington (1871) Great Britain practically admitted her responsibility; these claims were referred to an arbitration commission which met at Geneva and in 1872 awarded the United States $15,500,000.

With France the United States became involved because of the attempt of Napoleon III, to defy the Monroe Doctrine and to establish an empire in Mexico, under Maximilian. At the close of the war, France listened to the warning of the United States and withdrew ber support, and the short-lived Mexi-

Great Britain was at last aroused to the necessity of an understanding with the United States for the safety of the empire. Arbitration was accepted, but far beyond this peaceful adjustment was the changed tone of British statesmen and people toward the United States.

In 1895 the Cubans revolted against the oppression of the Spanish governors; this rising interfered with the business between the United States and Cuba and also forced our government to take stringent measures to maintain neutrality. iards were unable to suppress the revolt, and adopted cruel measures in dealing with the revolutionists, who in their turn depended on guerrilla warfare and destruction and could not win sufficient success to warrant recognition even as belligerents. the American hattleship, Maine, was destroyed in the harbor of flavana, by what agency was never revealed; and the demand for intervention became irresistible. April 19, 1898, Congress adopted a resolution recognizing the Independence of Cuba, demanding the immediate withdrawal of Spain from island, and authorizing the president to use the military and naval forces to carry out the resolution. On April 25 Congress declared that war had existed April 21, the day on which the American ambassador was dismissed from the Spanish Court

The war was brief, and resulted in an overwhelming victory for the United States. On May I Commodore Dewey attacked and destroyed the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay. May 25, the American fleet blockaded Santiago and on June 10 the invasion of Cuba was begun at Guantánamo Bay near Santiago. July 1–2, the outer defenses of Santiago were captured by the American fleet and the next day Admiral Cervera's fleet was destroyed by the American fleet under command of Admiral Sampson. The only military officer who attracted public attention was Theodore Roosevelt, who served as colonel a cavalry regiment popularly called the Rough Riders. Santiago surrendered July 17, and General Miles began the easy conquest of Porto Rico; while on August 13 the city of Manila surrendered to General Merritt and Admiral Dewey.

The taking of Manila occurred the day after a protocol was signed at Washington suspending hostilities, and on December 10, 1898, the Treaty of Paris was signed. By this treaty Spain relinquished all sovereignty over Cuba, and ceded to the United States Porto Rico, Guam, and the Philippine Islands, while the United States agreed to pay to Spain $20,000,000.

As a result of the war with Spain the United States assumed a new position in international affairs. It was in possession of Asiatic territory, the Philippines. It had become sponsor for the independence of Cuba, and for law and order in that island, thereby establishing a protectorate. Even more important, the United States by intervention departed from the traditional policy of isolation and was soon involved in European affairs. February 4, 1899, the Filipinos attacked the American forces at Manila and began an annoying guerrilla warfare which lasted until 1902.

The Panama Canal. During the war with Spain the spectacular voyage of the Oregon from California around South America to Cuba showed the inconvenience and danger of having the Amerifleet separated by the continent. were made that the isthmus should be cut by a canal which the United States should control. ton-Bulwer Treaty of 1850 with Great Britain prevented this, for it recognized the equal interests of the United States and Great Britain in the construction, use, and neutrality of any canal on any route. During the eighties there were frequent diplomatic negotiations with Great Britain, looking to the ex-tension of the privileges of the United States in that region, but nothing was accomplished.

In 1901, however, the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty unnulled the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty and allowed the United States to construct and control the canal, The United States of Colombia, of which Panama was a province, refused to ratify a satisfactory agreement, and Panama revolted in 1903 and established a republic. This republic was recognized by President Roosevelt, and a treaty was negotiated by which the United States is given full sovereignty over a strip of land ten miles wide

With Latin America the United States had assumed new relations. The Monroe Doctrine as in-terpreted by the United States prevented European nations from interfering in the affairs of the South American republics. As interpreted by President Roosevelt, it made the United States the sponsor for their good behavior, and in three instances— Santo Domingo, Nicaragua, and Haiti—protector-ates were established in order to preserve order and compel the states to make reparation. In the cases Cuba and Panama the United States felt that their interests were so closely bound up with those of the United States that it was justified in assuming virtual control. Pan-American conferences have been held, the last in 1915, in order to cement the relations between the Western republics and to remove causes of misunderstanding.

With Mexico, relations have been strained almost to the point of war. In 1910 Porfirio Diaz was in-augurated president for the seventh consecutive term, but was compelled by a rising tide of revolu-tion to resign, and Madero was elected president. He was deposed and murdered by General Huerta, whose administration the United States refused to recognize. In 1914 American forces landed and took possession of Vera Cruz, and Huerta resigned. The United States finally lent its influence to the of Carranza, who succeeded in establishing a government, which, however, was unable to maintain peace in the face of the rebellion of Villa. In 1916 the United States dispatched a punitive expedition into Mexico, and war seemed likely, but al-though affairs remained in an unsatisfactory state, the United States allowed the Mexicans to attempt to solve their own problems.

Prosperity and Disconfent. The period from 1896 to 1912 differs remarkably from other periods of the political and economic life of the country in two respects. First, large economic interests, or "big business," very frankly attempted to control the government. Second, this attempt was met hy countermoves to control business, first by the ordinary constitutional legislative method, and finally by the attempt to make radical changes in the system of government.

From 1896 to 1907 the country was very prosper-In 1897 the Republicans used their majority to pass the Dingley Tariff, which aimed not merely at a large revenue for the government, but was a return to the McKinley policy of stimulating manufactures and raised the duties still higher. Foreign trade rapidly expanded, while manufacturing and business more than kept pace. The destruction caused by the Spanish War created a demand for new commodities and fresh capital, but the real un-derlying reason for expansion lay in the fact that the country was in an era of rapid expansion of business

The most characteristic feature was the continued organization of trusts. New combinations of rail-roads were also made, and in the attempt to pay dividends on the inflated capital and watered stock, rates for transportation were increased. Business, moreover, meddled in politics, not merely for the general good, but for special privileges, which were sometimes gained by the use of corrupt means. Thus, in spite of the superficial prosperity the country was enjoying, there were warnings of trouble and symptoms of public discontent with its methods

The demand for the regulation of the rallroads, begun in the Granger movement espoused by the Greenbackers, was partially solved by the passage of the Interstate Commerce Law of 1887. This law forbade rebates and special favors and created a commission to carry out the statute, but its supposed power to regulate rates was denied by the Supreme Court.

Prohibition of monopolies was attempted by the Antitrust Law of 1890, which declared illegal every combination in the restraint of foreign or interstate commerce. Little conscientious effort was made to enforce either law until the second Roosevelt administration. The Interstate Commerce Law was amended by the Hepburn Act of 1906 which specifically gave the commission the power to prescribe reasonable rates for railroads and interstate carriers which were declared to include telegraph and telephone companies, pipe lines, express and sleeping-car companies, bridges, ferries, and railway terminals. During Roosevelt's administration, moreover, several prosecutions of large corporations were initiated under the Antitrust Law, especially the Northern Securities Case of 1904. These attempts, however, failed to satisfy the demands of constantly increasing elements in both parties for more radical regulation.

The election of 1900 triumphantly returned to power the Republicans under McKinley and seemed to have ended the possibility of serious threats from the radicals who composed the Populist party. In both parties the conservative elements were in con-trol and showed little sympathy with the demands most serious danger, however, was experienced in made either by the radicals or the liberal elements.

the Russo-Japanese War (1904-05), which was The assassination of President McKinley and the difference for a time in the power or policy of the organization of the party. The fact that President Roosevelt was able in some measure to obtain legislation and to initiate policies looking toward more stringent government control failed to satisfy the discontented elements.

Since neither of the great parties would adopt a thoroughgoing policy of governmental control, since the radicals had learned from bitter experience the futility of dependence upon State legislation, they proposed schemes to shake the control of the party organization and to give the people a more diect participation in the affairs of the government These measures grouped themselves around the initiative, referendum, and recall; but they also include movements for direct primaries in place of nominating conventions, the subjection of party organizations to law, and the limitation of the use of money in political campaigns.

Most radical of all was an attack upon the power of the courts to declare statutes unconstitu-This arose from the feeling that the courts in the exercise of their power of judicial review were more ready to protect property and private interests than to allow the State legislatures to pass such regulatory and remedial legislation as they felt necessary, especially in labor cases — To subject the courts to popular control, the device of the recall of judges or the recall of judicial decisions was proposed, and the former was adopted by several States. Most of these movements originated in the West, but they spread eastward so rapidly that conservative politicians were thoroughly alarmed.

President Roosevelt's administrations (1901–1909) postponed the conflict. His personal popularity was so great and many of his policies so satisfactory to the liberals that no open division appeared in the Republican party, which easily elected Mr. Roosevelt's candidate, William Howard Taft (No-vember, 1908). The administration of President Taft failed to satisfy the discontented elements. question of the revision of the tariff, which Roosevelt had avoided, was met by the Payne-Aldrich Bill of 1909, but the duties were not substantially During this administration many antitrust presecutions were successfully concluded, and the Standard Oil Trust and the American Tobacco Trust were dissolved. Many wise and liberal laws were passed, but the Republican party was still divided.

In 1910 discontent in the Republican ranks was reflected by the cutting down of the power of Speaker Cannon, a "standpatter." The Progressives, as the more radical element was called, demanded a solution of the economic and social questions which was unacceptable to the leaders of the party. Taft himself, although liberal as regards particular measures, was resolutely opposed to any changes in the constitutional or legal framework of the government which would result in a more democratic con-The second Congress of his administration (elected 1910) was Democratic, thus showing the trend of popular discontent.

The presidential campaign of 1912 was interesting in many respects. Direct primaries were tried for the first time in many States, thus allowing the voters the opportunity to express their preference directly in the choice of delegates; and such delegates were generally pledged to a particular candidate. Mr. Roosevelt, who felt that the Republican party had abandoned his policy and was pursuing a course which would lead to disaster, contested the nomination with President Taft. Roosevelt ob-tained the majority of the delegates chosen by the primaries, but Taft was strong in States where the delegates were chosen by conventions. After a bitter struggle, in which nearly all the contests were settled in favor of Taft delegates, the Republican national convention nominated Taft. Rooseyelt and his supporters therefore seceded and formed the Progressive party, which nominated Roosevelt.

The Democrats nominated Governor Wilson, of New Jersey, on a platform advocating a tariff for revenue, dissolution of the trusts, and criminal prosecution of the officials of the trusts, together with such additional legislation as to make private monopoly impossible.

The three-cornered campaign was very lively. had 3,484,000 popular votes and 8 electoral; Roosevelt polled 4,119,000 popular and 88 electoral votes; Wilson was elected with 6,293,000 popular votes and 435 electoral votes. Notwithstanding the Democratic and Progressive platforms, which called for legislation that up to this time had been considered socialistic, the Socialist party more than doubled its vote over 1908, obtaining 900,000 popular votes.

The Democratic party in 1913 was in a better condition than at any time since 1896. By inviting Bryan to become his secretary of state, President Bryan to become his secretary of state, President Wilson succeeded in gaining the support of the Bryan wing of the Democracy for the important measures he desired to pass. The first of these concerned the tariff. By the Underwood Tariff Bill, adopted October 3, 1913, many of the duties were reduced from a protective to a revenue basis, although considerable protection was still accorded. To meet To meet

This was made possible by the ratification in 1913 of the Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which allowed Congress to levy taxes on income without apportionment according to the population. The main features of this first successful law were: (1) moderate rates; (2) exemp-tion of incomes under $3,000; (3) a sliding seale rumning from 1% to 6%

The next steps were financial. The Owen-Glass Currency Bill established a Federal Reserve Bank system, which put the control of the member banks under a national board resembling the Interstate Commerce Commission. The purpose was to concentrate the banking resources of the country and to provide an elastic currency

Next came the Federal Trade Commission Bill, by which a commission was established to prevent unfair competition in commerce and to investigate the affairs of corporations other than banks and common carriers.

In the same direction was the Clayton Antitrust Bill, which attempted to codify the various laws and court decisions concerning monopoly and unlawful restraints of trade. The legislative program was in fulfillment of the Democratic platform and proved satisfactory, both to the more radical elements of the country and to the large economic interests.

During the first years of President Wilson's administration there was serious industrial depression; but with the outbreak of the World War in 1914 the demands of the belligerents stimulated manufacture and trade to a startling degree. Whereas, in 1913 the United States had imported $1,800,000,000 worth of products and experted $2,400,000,000 worth, in 1917 the imports amounted to $2,600,000,-000, while the exports reached the stupendous total of $6,290,000,000. In addition, the necessities of the Allies forced them to sell in the American market the American securities they had held, and the interest which formerly had been sent abroad was available for investment in the United States. Moreover, the Allies floated issues of bonds in the American market, the interest on which was also added to the American resources.

Thus, within five years, the United States became the financial center of the world, controlled the largest proportion of the gold supply, and became the great creditor nation whose products and whose capital alone were capable of satisfying foreign demands. During the year and a half ol war, the United States issued $19,000,000,000 worth of Liherty Bonds, which were taken up by all classes of population.

During the war immigration declined, and there was a shortage of labor, which was increased by the enlistment in the United States army of over 3,000,-Labor was not slow to take advantage of 000 men. this situation and demanded better conditions and increase after increase in wages. During the period when the United States was in active participation the National War Labor Board did much to prevent widespread or long-continued strikes.

With the end of hostilities, labor continued to demand the high wages it enjoyed during the war, and in many instances even higher. The high cost of living was made the reason for these demands. More-over, during the war the National War Labor Board, wherever possible, recognized and negotiated with the labor unions; and union labor now demanded recognition in more and more industries, together with the right of collective bargaining. In some with the right of collective bargaining. regions still more advanced demands were made, looking toward the nationalization of the railways and even the control of industry by labor. On November 1, 1919, a strike in the bituminous coal fields began, which the government checked through the utilization of the war powers it still had the right to

A part of the war legislation dealt with the conservation and distribution of food; and the president was authorized to prohibit the use of food products for the manufacture of liquors. In the meantline an amendment to the Federal Constitution to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors as beyerages was in 1917 submitted by Congress States for ratification. On January 16, 1919, this amendment was ratified by the necessary number States, and proclaimed as the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution: it went into effect January 17, 1920.

United States in the World War. the country sympathized with Belgium and France in 1914, the President issued a proclamation of neutrality at the outbreak of the World War, and 1917, in the face of great difficulties and in spite of the promptings of large numbers of the people, maintained this neutrality. The position, which was difficult enough because of the extensions which Great Britain made in the belligerent rights of block ade and contraband was made still more difficult by Germany through the destruction of both belligerent and neutral commerce by her submarines.

The destruction of the Lusitania, May 7, 1915, brought a strong protest from President Wilson.

January 31, rine warfare, at least against neutrals. January 31, 1917, Germany declared unrestricted submarine warfare on all commerce within certain zones off the coast of Great Britain and France. Within three days diplomatic relations with Germany were severed; and war was declared April 6, 1917.

By voluntary enlistment the military forces of the United States were increased from 121,000 regulars to 475,000, and the National Guard from 76,000 to 400,000. On May 18, 1917, conscription was adopted, all men between the ages of 21 and 31 being liable; on August 31, 1918, the age limits were extended to include those between the ages of 18 and 45; and about two million men were sent to France. The war was financed by means of the sale of Liherty Bonds, certificates of indebtedness, and thrift stamps. Heavy increases in favation, particularly the income and excess-profits taxes, yielded $2.314,000,000, and other taxes made the total revenue over five billion.

Even before the United States entered the war. President Wilson announced that he would urge tho United States to enter a World Peace Federation to guarantee and enforce future peace. During the war, partly because of the disinterested position the occupied, and partly because United States commanded the resources necessary for the Allies' success, the President was able to secure acceptance of his ideas. The Treaty of Versalites, signed June 28, 1919, which terminated the war, included the covenant for a League of Nations.

When the treaty reached the Senate strong oppo-sition appeared to some parts of it, especially the transfer of the Chinese province of Shantung to Japan Still more bitter was the objection to the League of Nations. Several senators were op-posed to any international union, many others would not accept this particular text, others were ready to accept the league with "amendments" or "reserva-President Wilson would accept no alterations, and the treaty (including the league) falled of ratification.

In 1920 the Nineteenth Amendment, abolishing sex qualification for the suffrage, was ratified by 37 States and took effect in the presidential election of that year.

The Land.

The Country. The development and history of a people are influenced, if not largely determined, by the physical characteristics of the country they in-The United States of America occupies the habit. territory south of the Great Lakes and the 49th parallel, and north of the Gulf of Mexico, the Rio Grande, and Mexican territory, stretching from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific. Its area is 3,026,789 square miles, which is more than three fourths as great as that of all Europe. Within this territory there are all varieties of climate and kinds of soil, and most of the products that are found in Europe exist here in ahundance.

Temperature and Climate. In the various parts of the territory of the United States there are great variations of temperature. This is part! due to the effect on the Eastern coast of the col Labrador Current and on the Western coast of the warm Japan Current; while the vast plains extending from the Aretic circle to the Gulf of Mexico permit eurrents of warm or cold air to circulate freely. Thus, Arkansas has the winter climate of Edinburgh and the summer climate of Spain, while in Minnesota the summers are those of Venice and the winters those of Norway. In like manner the summer climate of Maine is like that of France, while the winters are literally as "cold as Greenland." are negrally as cold as Greenfald. These variations in climate make possible products similar to those distributed from northern Africa to Norway. The occupations of the people are equally varied.

In all parts of the United States except the area extending from the eastern front of the Rocky Mountains, and their southern extensions, westward to the Sierra Nevadas, the rainfall is sufficient for farming. Portions of this area, and regions in and near the mountains, may be reclaimed by irrigation, but there are large areas which can never support a population.

Physical Characteristics. East of the barrier of the Rocky Mountains the territory of the United States is singularly uniform. The Atlantic coastal plain is narrow, but is not broken by im-The Atlantic passable rivers. Almost everywhere in the United States, save in New England, the soil is fertile, and the early settlers, once past the initial stage, had no fear of scar-city, but produced a surplus which the easy communions made a solid basis of agricultural prosperity

The staple crops are cereals: wheat, corn, rye oats, barley, and buckwheat. In the warmer regions of the south rice and even sugar cane are profitably cultivated, while for many years "Cotton was King" in the seaboard States. The prairie rewas King" in the seaboard States. The prairie regions of the interior proved rich for corn, and the plains of the Southwest are unrivaled ranges for cattle. In southern California and in Florida the climate makes tropical fruits profitable.

Minerals in great variety are abundant in the United States, especially noteworthy being the rich coal deposits extending from Alabama to New York along the slopes of the Alleghenies and as far west as Iowa. The United States possesses one square mile of coal-bearing strata for every 10 square miles of territory; whereas in Europe the proportion is one to every 188. This coal, together with the immense deposits of iron, assures the United States an unrivaled position in industry. This of late has been increased by vast oil fields and a seemingly inexhaustible supply of oil-bearing and gas-bearing shales. The precious metals gold and silver are abundant and widely distributed. Copper, zinc, lead, and tungsten all are available.

The rapid-flowing streams of the Atlantic coast furnish a good supply of water power, while the larger rivers of the South and the interior and the swift streams of the mountain regions promise a volume of water power for electrical energy which has hardly been appreciated.

The Aboriginal People. When America was discovered it was inhabited by a race whom the discoverers called Indians. Whence they came or how long they had been in North America cannot be definitely stated. It is probable that Asia and North America, and perhaps even Europe and North America, were once joined, and that human life, wherever originated, flowed from one hemisphere to the her. Human remains, deeply buried in geological strata, are proof that man has existed in America at least 30,000 years, perhaps much longer.

The Indians. The aborigines of North America all belong to one ethnic unit and all reached about the same degree of culture; none of them were ut-terly savage, none civilized. Those in the southern part of North America and the western part of South America were in the middle stage of barbarism; they nad no phonetic alphabet, nor any idea of the private ownership of landed property, which marks the beginning of civilization. Thanks to Indian corn, beginning of civilization. Thanks to Indian corn, they knew a rude but productive agriculture. They still were in that stage of culture in which the family inferior to the clan or gens as a recognized group All things being owned by the clan, all members of the clan and gens traced their descent, not through their fathers, but through their mothers. For purposes of war and government the clans were united into tribes and some of the more advanced tribes into larger units.

United States Bureau of Ethnology divides the Indians of the United States into 59 families, the most important of which were: The Algonquian family, which included the Ojibwas, Ottawas, Crees Algonquins, Micmacs, and Blackfeet; the Iroquoian family, the most important members of which were "The Five Nations"; the Muskhogean family, which occupied most of Georgia; the Siouan family, the chief group of which lived west of the upper Mississippi and the upper Missouri valley; the Sheshonean family, the most important tribes of which were the Comanches and Utes. Yet they were few in total numbers - perhaps half a million, within the limits of the Contact with the whites caused the Indians to dwindle in the East. Wherever the whites settled, the story is the same. Early uprisings were followed by more severe struggles in which the tribes were broken or driven westward to contend with the tribes already on the land. French neighbors in the North and Spanish in the South used the Indians against the English, till the English were so firmly settled that there could be but one outcome to the struggle. Through later frontier wars and Indian massacres the whites triumphantly moved westward, and the Indians were either exferminated or confined to reservations where they lost their independence, while the government attempted to raise them to civilization by education and paternal care.

Organization.

Natural Resources. The United States has eight States. The national Constitution went into been greatly aided in its development by its vast force in April, 1789, and has been amended on ten occasions, the total number of amendments being nineteen. Ultimate sovereignty resides in the "people of the United States," who by the action of three fourths of the legislatures of the States can amend the Constitution, thereby adding to the powers of the national government or limiting the powers of the

The legislative power is vested in a Congress consisting of two houses; a Senate with two senators from each State, chosen for six years, one third of whom retire every two years; and a House of Representatives (435 in 1919) chosen for two years in portion to the population of the States. No bill can become a law until it has passed both houses of Congress and is signed by the president. The president may allow it to become a law by default, or may sign it, or may veto it, in which case it may be passed over the veto by a two-thirds vcte of both houses The legislative power of Congress, as set forth in the Constitution, includes broad national powers of taxation and appropriation, control of foreign and interstate commerce, military and naval legislation, declaration of war, creation of offices, the monetary system, weights and standards, and finally the general power to pass all "Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the force going Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof Besides these positive powers, negative protection is given through prohibitions laid upon the States which prevent them from interfering with Congress in the exercise of these powers, and through the review of State legislation by the Federal courts.

The executive power is vested in a president, who, with the vice president, is chosen by special electors for a term of four years. Each State is entitled to a number of presidential electors equal to the number of its senators and representatives combined. These electors may be chosen in any way the constitutions of the States may provide, but at present are all chosen by popular election (see elector, 3 and ELECTORAL COLLEGE, in the Dict.). president is commander in chief of the army and navy, negotiates treaties — which require ratification two thirds of the Senate - and appoints most of the important officers. The president, moreover, is charged with the faithful execution of the laws of the United States and may utilize the army and navy to fulfill his obligation.

He is assisted by ten heads of ten departments the secretaries of State, of the Treasury, of War, the Attorney-General, the Postmaster-General, the secretaries of the Navy, of the Interior, of Agriculture, of Commerce, and of Labor. These officers sit in an informal council, not designated by law, usually called the eabinet. They are subject to the directions of the president under the law, but are in no responsible to Congress in the sense of being pelled to resign by adverse vote. Other portions compelled to resign by adverse vote. of the executive power are placed in the hands of administrative commissions and boards.

The judicial power is vested in the Supreme Court of the United States and "such inferior Courts as the Congress may . . . establish." The Supreme Court consists of a chief justice and eight associate justices. This court has original jurisdiction in cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and cases to which a State shall be a party. In all other case of the Supreme Court is appellate. In all other cases, the jurisdiction

The inferior courts of the United States by acts of Congress consist of a Circuit Courf of Appeals, divided into 39 circuits and 89 district courts, Court of Claims, and a Court of Customs Appeal. The jurisdiction of these courts extends to all cases in law and equity arising under the Consti-tution, the laws of the United States and treaties; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; and between citizens of different States

Two consequences of the American theory of judicial power have developed during the life of the Federal republic. From an early date the Supreme Court has construed its power to receive appeals from the highest State courts on Federal questions as justifying the annulment of State laws whenever it finds that they contravene the Constitution. And since 1857 the Supreme Court has set aside numerous Federal statutes on the same ground.

State Government. Each of the 48 States by s own constitution determines its frame of government, except as it may be limited by the Constitu-tion or laws or treaties of the United States. Each State has a governor, a legislative hody of two houses and a judiciary (see States by name, page 195 ff.).

Production and Industry. The United States, from the variety of its soil and climate and the variety and extent of its resources, is at once the leading agricultural and the greatest manufacturing country of the world. In 1919 the value of the agricul-tural products was estimated at $24,900,000,000 There were produced 2,900,000,000 bushels of corn. National Government. The national Constitution went into | bushels of barley, 91,000,000 tons of hay, 41,000,000 bushels of rice, 1,761,000 pounds of sugar, 11,030,000 bales of cotton, 1,389,000,000 pounds of tobacco, The value of the mineral products of the United States was more than $7,679,000,000 in 1918. The value of the metallic products amounted to more than $2,000,000,000, the production of pig iron being valued at more than $1,180,000,000; copper at $471,-000,000; zinc at $89,000,000; lead at $76,000.000; and gold at $68,000,000. Of the nonmetallic prodbituminous coal was mined to the value of $1,465,000,000; coke nearly $200,000,000; petro-leum, more than $690,000,000; and anthracite coal, $336,000.000

In 1915 there were 275,791 manufacturing establishments, with a total capital of more than $22,000,000,000, employing more than 8,000,000 persons and with products to the value of $24,-000,000,000. Of these, food and kindred products amounted to more than $4,000,000,000; textiles, 3,400,000,000; iron and steel, 3,220,000,000; chemicals and allied products, 2,000,000,000.

Religion. The original colonies were settled by people of various beliefs, many of whom desired to perpetuate their own peculiar doctrines to the exclusion of all others. Gradually, religious toleration won the day, and by the Federal Constitution Congress was prohibited from making any law concerning religion. Freedom of worship is also guaranteed in the various State constitutions. There is thus no established or state church anywhere in the United States, and all religious denominations are repre-The Roman Catholics are the largest religious body, with 16,000,000 (1917) communicants (including the confirmed children). The Baptist bodies with 7,236,000 (mostly adults), and the Methodist with 7,165,000, have each about as many persons in the families reported as the Catholics. The Lutheran bodies comprise 2,460,000 communicants; the Presbyterian, 2,260,000; the Protestant Episcopal Church, 1,000,000. There are also 360,000 members of Jewish congregations. The Church of Christ Scientist has 319,000 adherents.

Education. From early colonial days stress has been laid on common-school education. All States now provide actually or nominally free elementary and secondary instruction, but the systems vary. In some States attendance between certain ages is compulsory, in others it is optional. In some, public education is provided only through the high or secondary schools; but all the States maintain some universities and schools which give collegiate instruction. In 1916 the 281,000 State common schools counted more than 20,000,000 pu-In this group were more than 12,000 public high schools, with over 1,000,000 pupils; more than 2,000 private high schools and academies, with 155,000 pupils; 574 universities, with 259,000 stu-In addition there were numerous profesdents. sional schools of theology, law, medicine, dentistry, pharmacy, veterinary medicine, as well as increasing numbers of technical and vecational schools. Special schools are established for the deaf and blind and feeble-minded.

Defense. Before the World War, the military forces of the United States consisted of the Regular Army recruited by voluntary enlistment, and a National Guard, also recruited by voluntary enlistment under the direction of the various State governments, but subject to Federal control in case of war. peace footing of the Regular Army was 137,203, and the total enlisted strength of the National Guard, July 30, 1916, was 8,589 officers and 123,605 mcn.

When war was declared on Germany in 1917, conscription was introduced. The object was to insure at least 4,000,000 men available to send to France by June, 1919. In November, 1918, the Regular Army consisted of 3.665,000 men, of whom about 2,000,000 were in France. Some of the important ports of the United States are protected by an elaborate system of coast defense At the outbreak of the World War, the United States ranked below Great Britain and Germany, and possibly Japan, in its naval establishment. In 1916–1917 a great expansion was begun, and a three-year program of shipbuilding adopted. On the entry of the United States into the war, this program was greatly accelerated, and in 1920 the United States ranked second only to Great Britain in naval strength, having 36 battleships as compared with Great Britain's 55, 8 cruisers, 13 light cruisers, 4 coast-defense vessels, 105 torpedo-boat destroyers, and 84 submarines. There were building or projected 13 battleships, 9 cruisers, 238 torpedo-boat destroyers, and 74 submarines. These official figures show that the United States ranks second among the five great naval powers, being far exceeded by Great Britain, but far surpassing both France and Japan. The German navy, second in 1914, has disappeared. The United States maintains a military academy at West Point and a naval academy at Annapolis for the training of officers for the army and navy. Area and Population. Statistics showing the

2. It must be a "peace without victory," leaving no sting or resentment; "only a peace between equals can last."

It must make no distinction between the rights of big nations and of small ones. "Right must be based upon the common strength, not upon the individual strength, of the nations upon whose concert peace will depend."
4. It must accept "the principle that govern-a, it must accept "the principle that govern-ments derive all their just powers from the con-sent of the governed."

5. There should be a "united, independent, and autonomous Poland."

'Inviolable security of life, of worship, and of industrial and social development should be guaranteed to all peoples who have lived hitherto under the power of governments devoted to a faith and purpose hostile to their own."

7. Every great people "should be assured a direct ontlet to the great highways of the sea," if not by cession of territory, then by neutralization of direct rights of way. 8. "The paths of the sea must alike in law and in fact be free," giving free, constant, unthreatened intercourse in practically all circumstances.

9. There must be a limitation of both land and naval armaments, to make them a power for order only.

10. "The nations should with one accord adopt the doctrine of President Monroe as the doctrine."

Jan. 8. In the course of an address made hefore Congress, Wilson names fourteen points essential in considering peace, as follows:

1. Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at; after which there shall be no private international control of the control of t tional understandings of any kind, but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view.

2. Absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas, outside territorial waters, alike in peace and in war, except as the seas may be closed in whole or in part by international action for the enforcement of international covenants.

The removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance.

Adequate guarantees given and taken that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety.

"5. A free, open-minded, and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims, based on a strict observance of the principle that in deter-mining all such questions of sovereignty the interests of the populations concerned must have equal weight with the equitable claims of the government whose title is to be determined.

Evacuation of all Russian territory, and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest cooperation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy, and assure her of a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing; and, more than a welcome, assistance also of every kind she may need and may herself desire. The treat-ment accorded Russia by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good will, of their comprehension of her needs as tingnished from their own interests, and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy.

Belgium, the whole world will agree, must he evacuated and restored without any attempt to limit the sovereignty which she enjoys in common with all other free nations. No other single act will serve as this will serve to restore confidence among the nations in the laws which they have themselves set and determined for the government of their relations with one another. Without this healing act, the whole structure and validity of international law is forever impaired.

"8. All French territory should be freed and invaded portions restored; and the wrong done to France by Prussia in 1871 in the matter of Alsace-Lorraine, which has unsettled the peace of the world for nearly fifty years, should be righted, in order that peace may once more be made secure in the interest of all.

"9. A readjustment of the frontiers of ftaly should be effected along clearly recognizable lines of nationality.

"10. The peoples of Austria-Hungary, whose place among the nations we wish to see safe-guarded and assured, should be accorded the freest opportunity of autonomous development.

"11. Roumania, Serbia, and Montenegro should be evacuated; occupied territories restored; Serbia accorded free and secure access to the sea; and the relations of the several Balkan states to one another determined by friendly counsel along historically established lines of allegiance and nationality; and international guarantees of the political and economic independence and territorial integrity of the several Balkan states should be entered into.

The Turkish portions of the present Ottoman Empire should be assured a secure sovereignty, but the other nationalities which are now under Turkish rule should be assured an undonbted security of life and an absolutely unmolested opportunity of autonomous development, and the Dar-danelles should be permanently opened as a free passage to the ships and commerce of all nations under international guarantees.

An independent Polish state should be erected which should include the territories inhabited by indisputably Polish populations, which should be assured a free and secure access to the sea, and whose political and economic independence and territorial integrity should be guaranteed by international covenant.

A general association of nations must be formed, under specific covenants, for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small states alike."

General conditions and activities In 1918: The most striking characteristic of the year is the reorganization of the life of the people under war commissions; begun in 1917, but carried out mainly in 1918. The Council for National Defense continues in general oversight. Food supply is of primary importance, and a careful agricultural program is framed to secure the greatest results but compared in the control of the c sults, but crop conditions are not so favorable as during the year before. The people submit cheerfully to restrictions on quantity and quality of food, in order to assist in supplying the needs of the armies and Allied populations. Farm labor is scarce; various measures are taken to supply the deficiency. Prices of food are regulated and profiteering punished. Activities of the Food Administration are far-reaching and efficacious.

Manufacturing is under government supervision and nonwar industry is curtailed. A War Industries Board has charge, determining priorities in demand for material, transportation, and fuel, supervising war purchases and purchases for Allies, and promoting efficiency. The War Credits Board makes advances to contractors for war supplies Property of alien enemies is taken over and operated by the Alien Property Custodian. Fuel is an important problem. During the summer a large saving of gasoline results from a general cessation of Sunday automobile driving east of the Mississippi, in response to an appeal of the Fuel Admin-istrator. Transportation is under the Director-General of Railroads, and the government oper-ates express, telegraph, telephone, and cables.

Labor shows continued improvement in hours and conditions. Government supervision, through Secretary of Labor Wilson as War Labor Admin-istrator, with an advisory council, the National Labor Policies Board, and the National War La-bor or Arbitration (Taft-Walsh) Board, reduces strikes and lockouts. Recruitment and distribu-tion of labor is featured. "Work-or-fight" policy is announced, but not seriously enforced. The Shipping Board and its Emergency Fleet Corporation through requisition and purchase puts the merchant marine into war service; but the ship-building program does not get into full operation during the year. In this, as in other respects, the period is still one of war preparations rather than accomplishments. A War Trade Board has charge of foreign trade.

Finance is mobilized through the Capital Issues Committee of the Federal Reserve Board, which passes upon the issues of new industrial securities, and through the War Finance Corporation. Selence also is mobilized for war purposes, with a research council and a naval consulting board.

A National Board for Historical Service works in connection with the Committee on Public Informa-tion. This Committee keeps up the knowledge and interest through pamphlets, daily bulletins ie" pictures, and speakers (four-minute The people are thoroughly alive and united movie in support of the war, and respond enthusiastically to the demands of the Liberty Loans and War Savings, and also to the appeals of the Red Cross Y.M.C.A., and other war-work organizations. bition amendment.

General conditions in 1919: The year is chiefly one of reconstruction, accomplished or attempted. Most notable accomplishment is the demobilization of the war army and the return of the navy to a peace basis. Civil reconstruction proves to be an unexpectedly difficult task. Some of the war agencies quickly dissolved; others have to be retained because of industrial unrest and continuous advance in prices. Food administration, censorship, War Industries Board, Price Fixing Committee, War Labor Board, and War Trade Board go out of existence, though in some cases functions con-tinued by other agencies; cables, telegraphs, and telephones returned to their owners: Federal employment service greatly contracted. Railroad Administration, Alien Property Custodian, Fuel Administration, Shipping Board, Grain Corpora-tion, War Finance Corporation, and Sugar Equalization Board continue; while the Council of National Defense remains as a reconstruction agency. Operations of the Grain Corporation greatly lessened in importance by the fact that conditions and foreign demand for wheat nullify the need of the government price guarantee. Because of the sugar shortage (rationing renewed) and advance in price, a special act continues the operation of the Sugar Board through 1920. War-time fair-price committees revived. Extralegal war powers of the president continue during the year.

Labor the greatest of the reconstruction problems. Active demand for laborers, high cost of living, radical propaganda, evident sympathy of the president with advanced labor ideals, class disregard of the rights of the general public, belief in profiteering by manufacturers and dealers, urrest in Europe — these influence the demands of labor organizations on their employers, lead to strikes, and also to a radical labor legislative program, including continuation of war-time government operations of industry and transportation. An aftermath of the war is an alarming decrease in agricultural laborers.

Future of American shipping, built up and operated by the Federal government during the war, studied, but not solved. Construction continues under the Shipping Board; between June, 1914, and June, 1919, American seagoing tomage increases from 2,000,000 to almost 10,000,000.

In polities there is a growing estrangement between the Democratic president and the Republican Congress. Congress resents being ignored in precedented decilne; pound sterling falls to can Congress. Congress resents being ignored in the determination of problems of peace and of reconstruction while the president shows intolerance of criticism and a determination to carry out his own plans with all the same flxity of purpose as during the war. His long-continued illness, while not relieved of the responsibilities of his office, complicates the situation. The adoption by the States of the prohibition amendment and the submission to them of the female suffrage amendment are important political events. Several new parties, all radically inclined, proposed. Influence of the approaching presidential election felt; antagonism of the president and Senate on the League Nations suggests it as a prominent issue of the

Historical Outline.

Delaware, popularly called the "Diamond State" and the "Blue Hen State," was settled by the Swedes in 1638, but conquered by the Dutch in 1655 and made part of New Netherland. In 1664 the English obtained control, and in 1682 Delaware became a part of the territory granted to William Penn. In 1703 the counties comprising the present were given a separate legislative assembly, and in 1710 a separate executive council, but retained a common governor with Pennsylvania until 1776 Although preëminently a rural district, with little trade and less manufacturing, Delaware joined with the other colonies in resistance to Great Britain, and in 1765 entered into the nonimportation agreement. sent delegates to the Continental Congress, ratified the Articles of Confederation in 1779, and was the first State to ratify the Constitution, Decem-

The present constitution (1897) pro-vides for a governor elected for four years, a Gen-eral Assembly, consisting of a Senate of 17 elected for four years and a House of Representatives of 35 elected for two years. The Federalist party and its successor, the Whig party, controlled Delaware until 1852, then the Democrats gained control until 1896, with the exception of 1872 when the State went for Grant. Since 1896 the presidential vote has been Republican with the expertion of 1912, when it was Republican with the exception of 1912, when it was Progressive

Delaware is chiefly an agricultural State, seven eighths of the land being in farms. Corn and wheat are the chief crops, but peaches and other small fruits are very important. Delaware ranks second in the quantity of tomatoes packed. The chief manufactured products are leather goods (the output of which equals all the other manufactures combined), iron and steel work, and in recent years explosives The State has two normal schools, agricultural and mechanical colleges at Newark, and Delaware College, founded in 1834. The common schools are free, and attendance is compulsory.

PENNSYLVANIA (2). Historical Outline.

PENNSYLVANIA, the "Keystone State," so called from its geographical position in the center of the thirteen original States on the Atlantic seaboard, was founded as a colony by William Penn in 1681, under a proprietary charter by which the govern-ment and the land were vested in the founder. To attract settlers, Penn, himself a Quaker, appealed especially to that sect and other persecuted sects throughout England and Europe, promising them toleration in religion, a liberal frame of government, and generous land grants. His policy was successful, and Pennsylvania soon became one of the most populous colonies. From an early time it attracted a large non-English immigration. The first settlers were English Quakers, but they were soon followed by Welsh, Germans, and Scotch-Irish.

The political life of the colony was turbulent. Altough the Quakers were in the minority, Penn apointed Quakers as governors, and the western 1776. July 15-Sept. 28. First constitutional convention in the United States chosen solely to though the Quakers were in the minority, Penn appointed Quakers as governors, and the western counties felt that they had not adequate representation, while his land policy aroused opposition. the treatment of the Indians the Quakers were very successful, but their immunity from Indian troubles and their hatred of all war caused them to refuse aid to other colonies who were less fortunate Philadelphia was the seat of the Confi

Continental Congresses of 1775 and 1776 and the Constitu-tional Convention of 1787. Pennsylvania was the second State to ratify the Constitution and exerci great influence in the early history of the country through its leaders, especially Benjamin Franklin, John Dickinson, Robert Morris, Thomas Mifflin, and, later, Albert Gallatin. One president, Buchanan, was a Pennsylvanian.

During the Revolution the battles of Brandy-wine and Germantown were fought in Pennsylvania, and Philadelphia was occupied by the Brit-ish. In the Civil War the great struggle at thettysburg was the only action of importance on Pennsylvania soil.

The first constitution of Pennsylvania, framed in 1776, was unique in that it provided for an executive council, a single-chambered legislature, and a council of censors, who were to see that the constitution was observed and that needed amendments were from was observed and that needed amendments were proposed. In the second constitution (1790) these peculiarities disappeared, and a governor with large appointing powers was established. The demand for a more democratic form of government produced the third constitution in 1838, and the present one was adopted in 1873. The governor serves for four years and appoints the secretary of the commonwealth, the attorney-general, and the superintendent of instruction; he also has the right to veto items in appropriation bills. The legislature, holding biennial sessions, consists of a Senate of 50, chosen for four years; and a House of Representatives of 207, chosen for two years. Payment of a State or county tax is required for voting.

Politically, as well as geographically, Pennsylvania was for many years the "fieystone State." Beginning in 1797 Pennsylvania cast its electoral vote for the Jeffersonian party and its successor, the Democratic party, until 1860, with the exception of 1840, when it supported the Whig candidate, Harrison. Sinco 1860 it has been consistently Republican with the exception of 1912 when it supported Roosevelt and the Progressive party. In State politics Pennsylvania was generally Democratic until the Civil War; since then it has been Republican with but two exceptions. The Republican party is highly but two exceptions. organized and obtains enormous pluralities—over 500,000 for Roosevelt in 1904. This continued Republican triumph and successful organization has been variously explained as due to the benefits of the tariff to Pennsylvania's industries; to the easily controlled foreign vote; to the strong political organizations in the large cities which tend to neutralize independent voting; and to the apathy of certain

The University of Pennsylvania, founded in 740, was the earliest institution of learning in the United States to assume the title of university. Other notable institutions are the Pennsylvania State College; Temple University (Philadelphia), the universities of Pittsburgh, Lehigh, Duquesne, and Bucknell; Dickinson, Franklin and Marshall, Allegheny, Lafayette, Haverford, Swarthmore, Washington and Jefferson, Grove City, St. Vincent, Beaver, Pennsylvania, and Bryn Mawr (for women) colleges; the Carnegie Institute of Technology, Drexel In-stitute, and Girard College as technical schools.

Once the greatest agricultural colony, and still a rich farming State, Pennsylvania has become the leading State in the production of coal, pig iron, and cement, and second only to W. Va. in natural gas. Its most important industries as reported in 1910 are steel and rolling mills, with products of $500,000,000; textiles, $267,000,000; foundry and machine work, $210,000,000; blast furnaces, $168,000,000.

NEW JERSEY (3).

Historical Outline.

New Jersey was first settled by the Dutch in the northeastern part and by the Swedes along the Delaware River. In 1655 Peter Stuyvesant set up Dutch authority over the whole region, but in 1664 it was surrendered to the English. Charles II. granted it along with New York to his brother James, Duke of York, who in turn gave it to two of his friends as a proprietary province. After various changes, including division into East Jersey and West Jersey, it came into the hands of William Penn and his associates who, in 1702, surrendered the government to the British administration. During the Revolu-tion New Jersey was the scene of Washington's battles of Trenton, Princeton, and Monmouth.

The first constitution (1776) established the ordinary type of State government, except that the governor was elected by joint ballot of the two houses of the legislature, and that the suffrage clause was later supposed to give women the right to vote The present constitution (1844) gave to the governor unusual executive authority, through his power to appoint the secretary of state, attorney-general, su-perintendent of public instruction, chancellor, chief justice, supreme court, circuit, inferior, and district judges, as well as the usual administrative officers.

New Jersey has had a varled party history. first it was strongly Federalist, then Jeffersonian Republican in 1804, Republican 1816 to 1828, Democratic in 1832, and Whig until 1852; from that time Democratic until 1860, when it divided its vote between Lincoln and Douglas. From 1864 to 1896 it was Democratic, except in 1872; Republican until 1912, when it was Progressive. Its public men include General George B. McClellan and President Woodrow Wilson.

Agriculture, market gardening, and fruit raising are important pursuits. The leading Industries are the manufacture of textiles, silk, cotton goods, hosiery, petroleum products, foundry and machine work, and chemicals, the smelting of copper and silver, and, more recently, shipbuilding.

The leading institution of learning is Princeton University, founded in 1746. Rutgers College (1766) is the principal seminary of the Dutch Reformed Church and Stevens Institute of Technology, the leading scientific school.

GEORGIA (4).

Historical Outline.

Georgia, the "Empire State of the South." called also, sometimes, the "Cracker State," was in the disputed belt between English Virginia and Spanish Florida, and was the last of the original thirteen colonies to be founded. The first settlers were sent out in 1733 as a result of a scheme, devised 181. March 4. Royal proprietary charter of Pennsylvania granted to William Penn. [others).

* The numbers in parentheses after the names of the States indicate the order in which the States joined the Union; for the original thirteen colonies, this means the order in which they ratified the Federal Constitution. - See tables pages 220 and 221 where the population and area of each State are also shown.

Within a few years, bands of Salzburgers, Highlanders, Swiss, Moravians, and new recruits from England made other settlements. In 1734 Ogle-thorpe made a second visit to the colony, bringing Charles Wesley as his secretary, and John Wesley as a missionary to the Indians. Somewhat later George Whitefield made a visit to the colony. After this the government of the colony was placed in the hands of trustees, who became unpopular for restricting land tenure, prohibiting slave labor and liquor, and forcing the cultivation of silk, flax, and hemp. In 1754 the colony was surrendered to the crown and governed like other royal provinces. Under this management the colony prospered and fulfilled one of its purposes, to serve as a buffer between the Spanish in Florida and the more thickly settled colonies in Carolina. With the outbreak of the Revolution, Georgia was involved in domestic strife and nowhere was the conflict between the loyalists and patriots more bitter. In 1778 the British succeeded in capturing Savannah, which they used as a base of operations throughout most of the war. On the news of the Declaration of Independence, a convention framed and ratifled the first State constitution; but there was little opportunity to test it, as the arrival of the British forces threw the State into confusion. Georgia was fourth State to ratify the Constitution (January 2, 1788) and framed the second of her seven constitutions in 1789.

Georgia showed a very independent spirit with respect to the western lands (ceded in 1802); and to the Creek and Cherokee Indian lands. The most eminent son of Georgia was Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the Confederacy. Although the Whig party was strong, Georgia ratified the ordinance of secession, January 19, 1861, and was the scene of heavy fighting; the battle of Chickamauga (1863), the campaign between Chattanooga and Atlanta (1864), and Sherman's "March to the Sea" (1864) all took place on her soil.

During the Reconstruction period Georgia suffered both from carpetbaggers and from the misdirected zeal of her own citizens. Even after military gov-ernment had been once abolished, Congress felt obliged to restore it in order to protect the Negroes, and Georgia was not finally readmitted to the Union until July 15, 1870, the last of the Confederate States to be restored. During this period three constitutions were framed and experimented with. In the present constitution, adopted in 1877, representation is based in part upon counties, which sometimes enables the minority to control.

Georgia has always been an agricultural State, although possessing great resources of lumber. Until recent years cotton has outranked the other agricultural products; but in 1918, the value of the cereal crops — corn, oats, and wheat — exceeded that of cotton. After 1880 manufacturing of cotton goods rapidly developed, and the output of this industry exceeds all others, lumber coming next; the manufacture of cottonseed oil, oil cake, and fertilizers is also important.

Among the institutions of higher learning are the University of Georgia, a State institution; Emory University; Georgia School of Technology; the North Georgia Agricultural College, Agnes Scott, Brenau, Wesleyan Female, and Piedmont colleges; and Atlanta University and Morehouse College for Negroes.

CONNECTICUT (5).

Historical Outline.

Connecticut has various nicknames: "Nutmeg State," "Land of Steady Habits," "Blue Law State," and "Freestone State." The river from which the State takes its name was discovered by Adrian Block in 1614, and a small trading post soon established by the Dutch on the site of Hartford. Traders also came from Plymouth, Massachusetts. In 1636 the first permanent settlements were begun by colonists from Massachusetts, who founded the towns of Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield and framed the first popular constitution made in America.

The colony of New Haven was founded in 1638 on a grant of Lord Saye and Sele by a group of wealthy settlers who desired to found a commonwealth after a Biblical pattern. In 1662 Charles II, granted a charter to John Winthrop and his associates for the whole region occupied by both colonies, including the settlements already made. This charter was so liberal and allowed so much self-government and gave England so few opportunities to interfere that it was continued as the first State constitution until In 1686 Sir Edmund Andros became governor of all New England and took over the government of Connecticut, but failed to obtain the origcharter, which, according to tradition, hidden in an oak tree. (See Charter Oak, in Dict.)

During the Revolution, Connecticut suffered comparatively little, except in an attack on Groton; but took an active part, furnishing 30,000 troops and, also, Jonathan Trumbull, one of Washington's most trusted advisers, believed to be the original "Brother Jonathan

In framing the Constitution of the United States. Connecticut was ably represented on the conserva-tive side, particularly by Roger Sherman, who successfully advocated the equal representation of the States in the Senate. During the War of 1812 Connecticut, in common with all New England, was in opposition, and a convention was held at Hartford from Dec. 15, 1814, to Jan. 5, 1815, to formulate plans of possible resistance. (See Hartford Con-VENTION, in the Dictionary.

By the Charter of 1662 Connecticut obtained the right to a strip of land extending to the Pacific Ocean. When this impossible claim to a tract which cut straight across Pennsylvania was released, Con-necticut retained a tract along Lake Eric called the Western Reserve and the Fire Lands. From the sale of these lands Connecticut realized a large sum, From the which was appropriated for the common school system, one of the earliest and most progressive in At present there are more than a thouthe period. At present there are more than a chousand public elementary schools, 75 high schools, 4 normal schools, 15 model schools, and the Connecticut Agricultural College. The most famous educational institution in Connecticut is Yale University, founded in 1701. Other private institutions of higher learning are Wesleyan University, Trinity College, and the Connecticut College for Women.

Connecticut has been a doubtful State in politles. In State politics it was Federalist until 1817, when it began to alternate at almost every election until 1896 Since 1896 it has been Republican, except in 1910 and In national politics it has been Federalist, Republican, or Whig, with two exceptions until 1873, when it became Democratic until 1896, with the exception of 1884; since 1896 it has been Republican, with the exception of 1912.

The constitution of Connecticut, adopted in 1818, has been amended thirty-five times, but still retains many of the old characteristics of the colonial charter. The legislature consists of a House of Representatives of 258 members, and a Senate of 36. Since each town under 5,000 is entitled to send one representative, and no town sends more than two, the small communities, containing a minority of the population, may outvote the majority living in the cities Every effort to change this system has been unavailing. governor and legislature are elected biennially

Although Connecticut ranks thirty-first of the States in population, it ranks twelfth in manufactured products. The proximity of New York, the excellent opportunities for water transportation through Long Island Sound and the great tidal rivers, together with good railroad facilities, all combined with the traditional Yankee ingenuity, gave Connecticut a start which it has never relinquished. Manufacturing of all sorts, from small notions to large machinery, is carried on. In recent years the munition plants at Bridgeport and elsewhere have been greatly expanded. Hartford is the national center for the life-insurance business The soil of Connecticut is fertile and the climate suitable for the production of tobacco In addition, forest products, fruits, nuts, and garden truck are important. The fisheries, particularly of oysters, are very profitable.

MASSACHUSETTS (6).

Historical Outline.

Massachusetts, the "Bay State" or "Old Bay State," was visited possibly by Northmen and certainly by Verrazano. Capt. John Smith gave it the general name of New England.

The first settlement to be made within the limits of Massachusetts was made by Bartholomew Gos-nold in 1602 on one of the Elizabeth Islands. The first important colony was settled by the Pllgrims (1620), a little band of religious exiles, who planted and successfully maintained the colony of Plymouth until, after two generations, it was absorbed in the larger province of Massachusetts Bay. This later settlement owed its foundation to the Massachusetts Bay Company, under the control of John Winthrop and his associates, who were Puritans in religion, but people of wealth and importance. The "great emigration," as their coming was called, began in 1629 and continued for about ten years, at the end of which period Massachusetts approached Virginia in population.

From 1629 until 1684 the government of the colony was vested in the Governor, Assistants, and Freemen of the Massachusetts Bay Company: and the right to vote and take part in the government of the colony was acquired only by election to membership in the company of members of the Congregational Church. Hence the early settlers and their descendants were able to retain their influence and perpetuate the Puritan doctrines of church and

In 1684, after a long struggle, the charter of the company was vacated by legal proceedings in England, and Massachusetts and the other New England colonies were for a short time united under the rule of Sir Edmund Andros, a governor appointed by the crown

After the fall of the Stuarts in England, Massachusetts received the second or provincial charter (1691), under which it lived until the Revolution. Under this the right to vote was based on a property qualification, with no restriction as to religious belief. The governor was appointed by the crown; the House of Representatives was elected by the people, according to towns; and the General Court - as the legislature was, and is still, called—chose the upper house, or Council. Thus the colonists of Massachu-setts were able to exercise more influence, and more frequently to obtain their desires, than those of the other royal provinces. The colonists early developed great political capacity and learned the art of self-government.

During the colonial period, Massachusetts suffered from Indian wars, both King Philip's War (1675-76) and the French and Indian wars of the early eighteenth century. Frequent raids were made overland from Canada; and counter expeditions were fitted out by the colony with the aid of England against Montreal and the French possessions in Nova Scotia. Port Royal (Annapolis) was captured in 1690, but returned by the Treaty of Ryswick (Rijswijk); it was again captured by an expedition from England (1710).

The large commerce of Massachusetts and the independent and self-reliant spirit which developed in the colony marked it out for discipline by the king, Troops were sent to Boston in 1768, street fight between soldiers and civilians in 1770 and the Boston Tea Party of 1773 brought down the wrath of the British government. In 1774 Acts of Parliament closed the port of Boston to commerce, and the charter was altered to secure the appointment of the Council and judges. General Gage was appointed governor as well as commander in chief. The inevitable clash between the people and the royal troops came in April, 1775. The British evacuated Bosion the next year, and from that time Massa-chusetts was free from serious invasion.

In 1780 the first State constitution, framed by a special convention and then submitted to popular vote, was provided for Massachusetts. The constitution has been frequently amended and was altered and rearranged by a constitutional convention of 1917–19. Massachusetts has always been a forward State in legislation and now has a responsive governmental system with the popular initiative and referendum.

During the "Critical Period" of the Confederation, Massachusetts was in bad condition. suffered grievously, the treasury was empty, taxes were high, and the debtor class was demanding paper money for relief. In 1786-87 occurred an armed uprising, known from the name of its leader as Shays's Rebellion. Such disturbances made the conservatives and merchants anxious to adopt the Federal Constitution of 1787; but the Antifederalists were strong enough to prevent ratification unless the amendments they proposed were added with an urgent recommendation. This proved a happy expedient and was followed by other pivotal States, and thus made ultimate ratification possible.

In national politics Massachusetts voted for Jefferson in 1804, Monroe in 1820, and Wilson in 1912; in all other presidential elections it has supported the candidates of the Federalist, Whig, or Republican In State elections until 1910 it was generally Republican, but since that time it may be classed as a doubtful State. Among the great men of Massachusetts have been James Otis, Samuel Adams, President John Adams, his son, President John Quincy Adams, and Daniel Webster.

education Massachusetts was a pioneer in the establishment of both common schools and col-leges. In 1635 free schools were established; in 1636 Harvard College was founded; in 1647 every town having fifty families was obliged to have a free school. Its present school system is based upon the town or city as the unit, although the State Board of Education has supervisory powers and grants aid from the State school fund to small towns. A system of yocational schools as well as high schools is established. Although Massachusetts has no State university, the State supports an agricultural col-lege (Massachusetts Agricultural College) and ten normal schools, and there are altogether more than twenty institutions of higher learning, academic and twenty institutions of higher learning, academic and scientific, for men and women. Among them may be mentioned Harvard. Boston, and Clark universities; Williams, Amherst, Holy Cross, Tufts, Boston, and Clark colleges; Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Worcester Polytechnic Institute, International Y. M. C. A College (Springfield); and Mount Holyoke, Wellesley, Smith, Radcliffe, and Simmons colleges for women. There are also numerous professional schools merous professional schools.

Massachusetts is the second State in density of population: nearly 80 per cent of its population lives in 36 cities, mostly grouped about Boston. These cities are the centers of most varied manufacturing establishments, and Massachusetts ranks fourth in the value of its manufactured products. In the production of boots, shoes, and cotton goods it exceeds any other State. Other impor-tant products are foundry and machine-shop prod-ncts, electrical machinery, paper, and wood pulp. The investment in fisheries exceeds that of any other State; and from colonial times the cod, haddock and mackerd fisheries have been important. The chief mineral products are granite and trap rock. Agriculture is relatively unimportant, hay and forage producing a third of the value and vegatables are consistent. etables one quarter

MARYLAND (7).

Historical Outline.

Maryland, known as the "Old Line State," was coasted by early Spanish, French, Dutch, and English explorers. It owed its foundation to the colonizing zeal of Sir George Calvert, first Lord Baltimore, a Catholic gentleman of the reign of James I., and his son Cecil, to whom the king issued a pro-prietary charter giving both territorial and governmental rights. Cecil Calvert planned two things: a profitable venture in trade and land; and the establishment of a colony which should be a refuge for the persecuted sects in England. The first expedition contained both Roman Catholics and Protestants, and while the men of wealth and prominence were generally Roman Catholic, the majority of the colonists were always Protestants. To protect the Catholic minority, a law was passed in 1649 granting toleration to all Christians.

In 1689 the Baltimore family was deprived of the governmental power in the colony, but allowed to retain its proprietary rights. In 1715 the proprietorretain its proprietary rights. In 1715 the proprietor-ship was restored to the fourth Lord Baltimore on his becoming a Protestant, and it remained in the family until the Revolution. A long dispute between the Baltimore and Penn families concerning the boundaries of their respective provinces resulted in the running of Mason and Dixon's line in 1767. The trade of Maryland was unfavorably affected by the British navigation acts, and the colony fell in with the movement for independence and drafted a with the movement for independence and drafted a constitution in 1776 which was in force until 1851.

The attack on Fort McHenry in 1814 suggested the national song "The Star-Spangled Banner" (composed by Francis Scott Key). During the Civil War, Maryland was the scene of numerous minor conflicts, and the great battle of Anticiam

Maryland delayed ratification of the Articles of the Confederation until assured that the western lands should become the property of the Union; but by a large majority ratified the Federal Constitution, April 28, 1788. In State politics Maryland has been Democratic since 1868, with few exceptions. In national politics it was Republican from 1896 to 1912, but Democratic at other elections since 1868.

It has had four constitutions, the present one adopted in 1867. Among its national statesmen have been Charles Carroll, William Pinkney, and Senator Arthur P Gorman. The suffrage is wide, and every attempt to limit it has failed. Each county and legislative district, of which there are four for the city of Baltimore alone, has one Senator; while the House of Delegates is chosen by counties according to population. The governor is elected for four years and has wide appointing power.

The most important institution of higher learning is Johns Hopkins University, famous for its graduate instruction and its medical school and hospital. The United States Navai Academy is situated at Amnapolis, and Goucher College for women at Baltimore. There is a State university (Maryland State College of Agriculture). Among other institutions of higher learning may be mentioned Hood and Western Maryland colleges Agriculture is important, the principal crops being corn, wheat, hay, potatoes, and tobacco. In industry the ontput of men's clothing is more than three times as great as any other product. Next in succession are tinware, copper and sheet tin, tobacco manuractures, foundry and machine work. fisheries of the State are more important than those of any other State. It has also valuable coal deposits

Historical Outline.

SOUTH CAROLINA, the " Palmeito State," was early coasted by Spaniards and later by French and English. The first settlement of Europeans was attempted by the French in 1562 at Port Royal, but it was a failure. The first English settlement was made under a proprietary charter, granted by Charles Il in 1663 to eight noblemen of his court, covering all the territory lying between the 31st and 36th parallels. By a second charter, issued in 1665, the limits were extended to 29° and 36° 30′. In order to attract settlers, liberal concessions were promised and toleration in religion allowed; and the philosopher John Locke was commissioned to draw up a frame of government, which, however, proved impractical. Within this one colony of Carollaa, two centers of settlement appear, and the colony was divided into North Carolina and South Carolina in 1710. (See North Carolina, below.)

In 1680 English colonists founded Charleston, and soon a number of French Huguenots came to find refuge. The growth of the colony was rapid, but its political life was turbulent, and in 1729 the Crown bought out the rights of the proprietors, the colony

becoming a royal province.

The South Carolinians took part in an unsuccessful expedition against Saint Augustine in 1702, and were frequently involved in Indian troubles. They resisted the Stamp Act, adhered to the nonimportation agreement of 1774, and sent food to Boston. During the Revolution Fort Moultrie was unsucthe British in 1780, and the battles of King's Mountain, Cowpens, Entaw Springs, and Camden were fought within its territory.

Politically South Carolina has always been Demicrophysics of the property of th ocratic, except in 1792, and during the Reconstruc-tion period, 1868–1876, but it has not always been in agreement with that party. Thus John C. Calhoun, believing that Congress was sacrificing the agricul-tural interest of the country to manufacturing from 1828 to 1833, led a movement for nullification, in which South Carolina held that it had the right to declare null and void the acts of Congress. The prompt action of President Jackson, and the compromise of 1833, by which the objectionable duties were reduced, brought about a settlement, if not an abandonment, of the doctrine.

South Carolina was the first State to secode in 1860 and the first formal attack upon the Union forces was made at Fort Sumter, Anril 12, 1861. The State was the scene of several battles during the Civil War, around Charleston and Beanfort (taken by Union fleet, 1861) and in 1865 through the invasions by Sherman's army.

During the period of Reconstruction, South Carolina suffered from the misrule of the ignorant blacks and corrupt whites, and the debt was increased fivefold in five years.

The Senate of 44 is chosen one from each county for a term of four years, one half retiring at each elec-tion. The House of Representatives consists of 124 members chosen for two years from the counties, according to population. From 1907 to 1911 the State attempted to regulate the liquor traffic by the establishment of State dispensaries, but in 1915 adopted State-wide prohibition.

NEW HAMPSHIRE (9).

Historical Outline.

The coast of New Hampshire, the "Granite State," was explored as early as 1603 by Martin Pring, but the first grant was made in 1622 to John Mason and Sir Ferdinando Gorges, and scattered settlements began in 1623. The settlers were diverse in character; some were Royalists from England; some, Church-of-England men; some, dissatisfled colonists from Massachusetts. In the years from 1641 to 1643 Massachusetts acquired possession of this region and exercised jurisdiction over it; but in 1677 an English decision pronounced this to be a usurpation, and in 1679 the colony was made a separate royal province.

During the colonial period New Hampshire suffered greatly from Indian raids and was largely dependent upon Massachusetts for protection. Under the advice of the Continental Congress, the colonists formed the first constitution framed for a State (1776); another was adopted in 1784; while the present one dates from 1792. Provision is made that every seven years the question of revision shall be submitted to the people. A convention to revise the constitution sat in 1919–20

Historical Outline.

Virginia is variously known as the "Old Domin-ion," the "Mother of Presidents," and the "Mother of States."

The coast of Virginia was early explored by the Spanish, French, and English. The name was given in honor of Queen Elizabeth to the region explored by three expeditions sent out by Sir Walter Raleigh, be-Two attempts were made at colomzation, but the first permanent settlement was that of 1607, sent by the Virginia Company, a trading and colonizing company chartered by James I. in 1606. The settlers built a stockade at Jamestown, but were ill-supplied and unsuited for pioneer work. but were ill-supplied and unsuited for pioneer work. Famine, disease, and attacks by the Indians would have caused the total destruction of the colony had it not been for the energy of ('aptain John Smith, who secured food from the Indians and won their friendship. The little colony was reënforced in 1608; but the winter of 1609, "the starving time," reduced it from 500 to 60, and the enterprise was about to be abandoned, when the arrival of Lord De La Warr with fresh supplies and colonists saved the venture

In 1612 the success of the colony was assured through the discovery of the proper method of curing tobacco by John Rolfe, also famous for his marriage to Pocahontas, an Indian princess, who, Smith maintained, saved his life. The attempts at communism were abandoned and individual owner-ship of land and the development of agriculture began to bring prosperity to the colony, although during the Indian Wars of 1618 to 1622 nearly 400 of the colonists perished. In 1618 the more liberal element on the Virginia Company gave permission for a form of self-government, and the first representative assembly held in America assembled in 1619. After the execution of Charles I., some of his adherents, the Cavaliers, came to Virginia, and although compelled to submit to the authority of the Common-wealth, Virginia was the first English possession to recognize Charles II., from which is said to come its name of the Old Dominion.

Agriculture, particularly the raising of tobacco gave Virginia a large foreign trade and made it res tive under the commercial system established by the Navigation Acts. When Parliament attempted (1765) to impose the Stamp Act and other taxes on the colonies, Virginia was one of the first to voice resistance. It was active in the movement for independence, organized committees of correspondence Continental Congresses. The first Virginia con-stitution under the influence of Thomas Jefferson, was one of the best expressions of popular govern-ment of its time. During the Revolution Viscon-was invaded by 19 was invaded by Benedict Arnold, and was the scene of the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

In the framing of the Federal Constitution, Virginia took a leading part. The president of the Convention was Washington; its most faithful and tirevention was washington; its most faithful and free-less supporter, James Madison. In the organization of the new government, Virginia played a prominent rôle, furnishing four of the first five presidents mamely, Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe), each of whom served two terms, and the State thus became known as the "Mother of Presi-dents." The great Chief Justice John Marshall and, later, President Tyler were also Virginians.

In 1798 the Virginia legislature, aroused by the Alien and Sedition Acts, adopted resolutions denying the unlimited power of the national government, asserting that to the States belonged all rights not distinctly delegated to the national government by the Federal Constitution, and maintaining that the States had the legal authority to determine the extent of the powers so granted. In later times this theory was developed into the doctrine of State Rights and State Sovereignty, which furnished the legal justification for nullification and secession.

ln 1861 the issue of secession was put squarely be-fore the people and adopted by overwhelming majorfore the people and adopted by overwhelming majorities in the eastern counties. The western counties, however, remained in the Union and formed the State of West Virginla. During the war the capital of the Confederacy was Richmond, and many important campaigns were fought in the State, including the critical battles of Bull Run (first and second), Fair Oaks, Seven Pines, Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg, Wilderness, Cold Harbor, the siege of Petersburg, and many battles in the Shenandoah Valley.

Suffrage clauses requiring an educational test and payment of poll taxes for three years, or ownership of property, harred many of the Negroes and whites from voting.

The governor is elected for a four-year term; the legislature meets biennially, and is composed of the House of Delegates, chosen for two years, and the Senate, chosen for four. Representation is granted according to population by districts apportioned every ten years. The apportionment by population instead of by voters gives undue representation to the whites in the older counties, where there are many nonvoting Negroes

Great progress has been made in receut years in Great progress has been made in recent years in education, which is rendered difficult by the large number of ignorant Negroes and the fact that the population is widely scattered. Schools are established, and attendance is compulsory between the ages of cight and twelve. There are four State normal schools and about twelve principal institutions of higher learning, the largest being the University of Virginia, founded by Jefferson (1825) and celebrated throughout the country. Among the others are William and Mary College, Washington others are Wilham and Mary College, Washington and Lee University, Randolph-Macon, Richmond, Roanoke, Hampden-Sidney, and Emory and Henry colleges, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, and Virginia Military Institute. Within the past few years laws have been passed limiting hours of labor, extricting the amployment of children, and prorestricting the employment of children, and providing for safety in industry.

The products of the State are both agricultural and mineral. Crops rank in the following order, corn, tobacco, hay, wheat, potatoes, peanuts. The chief industrial products are lumber and timber, tobacco, flour, and grist. Virginia has some coal and some large ironworks. Newport News and Norfolk are among the finest ports on the Atlantic coast.

NEW YORK (11).

Historical Outline.

New York is generally known as the "Empire State." but it is sometimes called the "Excelsior State," from its motto. Although Verrazano visited New York Bay on his voyage in 1524, the first explorer was Henry Hudson, an Englishman in the property of the Dutch Feet India Company, the are employ of the Dutch East India Company, who entered the hay and sailed up the river which bears his name (1609). Trading posts were established on Manhattan island and at Fort Nassau, just below Albany, in 1613. The Dutch West India Company began a settlement on Manhattan (1623), the object being to tap the valuable fur trade rather than to establish a colory. The settlement grow slowly but employ of the Dutch East India Company, who enestablish a colony. The settlement grew slowly, but attracted diverse nationalities, and during the Dutch period had very little self-government. In 1664 it was conquered by the English; it was reconquered by the

The Dutch contributed little to the instituyear. The Dutch contributed fittle to the installational life of the colonies in America, and not until well into the period of the English control did New York become of great importance

With the English conquest of 1664 the colony became a proprietary colony of the Duke of York, after whom it was named; hence the "Duke's Laws," framed in 1665, which became the basis of future codes. When the Duke became King James II. (1685) the colony became a royal province. Although New York never was granted a charter, it was given a representative assembly, which had the right to levy taxes and appropriate money. With this power the colonists succeeded in obtaining substantially the same frame of government as existed in the other provinces. Part of the lesson of self-government was learned in frequent quarrels with the English authorities

Its rapidly developing commerce made New York impatient of the English restrictions on trade, and in 1762 the colonial legislature framed remonstrances against the commercial policy of Parliament, established committees of correspondence with other colonies in 1764, and was the scene of the Stamp Act Congress of 1765. A strong Tory influence held New York hack at the beginning of the Revolution: but it joined in the Declaration of Independence, and in 1777 a convention established the first constitution. During almost the entire Revolution the British held possession of the city of New York, not evacuating it until December, 1783.

New York was sharply divided over the ratification of the Federal Constitution. Two of the three delegates withdrew from the Philadelphia Convention, leaving Hamilton to represent the State alone. During the campaign for ratification Hamilton, John Jay, and Madison wrote a series of essays in favor of the Constitution, which were collected and published under the title of The Federalist. This and the pressure of the commercial interests brought about the tification of the Constitution as the eleventh State.

The State was Federalist from 1795 to 1800, but after that became Jeffersonian under De Witt Cfinton, who remained the political leader until 1822. Clinton was succeeded by the "Albany Regency," a group of men who reduced machine politics to a science. Personal rivalries and short-lived popular movements characterized this period. The Antimasonic movement had its origin in the State and was powerful enough to determine at least one The antirent troubles, originating in old Dutch privileges of the landlords, lasted until 1843.

Since the Civil War, as before, the State has been doubtful both in national and State politics. Of its recent governors the more notable have been Theo-Roosevelt and Charles E. Hughes, under both of whom reform measures were passednotable men of the State have been, among others George Clinton, De Witt Clinton, and Presidents Van Buren and Cleveland.

New York is living under its fourth constitution, adopted in 1894. This provides for a legislature consisting of an Assembly of 150 and a Senate of 50, both elected for two years from districts appor-tioned every ten years. Although New York and Kings counties contain one half the population, they are allowed but two fifths of the members of the Sen-The legislature has all power not withdrawn by positive provisions of the Constitution.

He has a qualified veto power over the bills as passed by the legislature, and an absolute veto power for thirty days after the adjournment of the legislature over bills then waiting his consideration. In addition he has the power to veto items in appropriation bills. In 1917, New York granted suffrage to women.

New York did not establish a system of free schools until 1851 but has developed one of the most advanced systems of education. The educational policy of the State is directed by a Board of Regents, which has charge of the management and supervision of the public schools and all educational work of the State. School attendance is compulsory between the ages of 7 and 16, and great attention is paid to secondary and vocational schools. In 1918 law was passed requiring military training for three hours a week for all hoys between the ages of 16 and 19 in public schools. The State has many institutions of higher learning, of which the oldest as well as the largest is Columbia University, once Kings College, in New York City. Other important insti-tutions are Alfred, Buffalo, Colgate, Cornell, Ford-ham, New York, Rochester, St. Lawrence, Syracuse,

NORTH CAROLINA (12).

Historical Outline.

NORTH CAROLINA, popularly known as the "Old North State" and the "Turpentine State," was the scene of the first English settlements in America (Roanoke Island). These settlements were un-Later it was peopled by colonists from Virginia, but in 1663 formed a portion of the Carolina grant given by Charles II. to eight noblemen of his court (see South Carolina, above). tion of these proprietors was concentrated on the development of South Carolina, and the northern region with a rude and turbulent population was neglected. In 1729 the proprietors sold their rights to the crown, and a more settled form of government was established. Numbers of immigrants, Scotch-Irish and Germans, went into the western regions which developed along different lines from the east ern. This divergence is the key to many of the political conflicts down to the time of the Civil War

At the outbreak of the revolutionary movement the people of North Carolina, against the protests of the governor, held a convention and established a frame of government. A convention of Mecklena frame of government. A convention of Mecklenburg County (Charlotte) drew up a statement, one version of which is called the Mecklenburg Declaration (May, 1775). It contains phrases which closely resemble phrases in the final great Declaration of Independence of 1776. A State constitution of Independence of 1770. A State constitu-tion was adopted in 1776 in which the Assembly was the real power, for it elected the governor and all other officials. North Carolina delayed ratifica-tion of the Federal Constitution until 1789 and thus did not vote at the first presidential election.

In politics the State has been Democratic except om 1840 to 1848, when the Whigs had control, from largely over the question of internal improvements which were demanded by the people of the western counties. The Populists in 1892 acquired great influence and in 1896 united with the Democrats

A State convention in 1861 adjourned without action on secession. But on Lincoln's call for troops North Carolina joined the other Confederate The capital was captured by General Sher-States. man in 1865 and the State placed under military rule. It was readmitted on July 11, 1868.

The State is now living under its fourth constltution (1876) by which, according to the amendments of 1900, the suffrage is granted only upon fulfillment of educational qualifications, except that those persons, and their descendants, who could vote in 1867 are not required to fulfill this test. In practice the Negro vote is nearly all excluded, without affecting the white vote. The governor is elected he has no veto power. The legislature consists of a Senate of 50 and a House of 120.

The educational problem is difficult owing to the scattered population and the large number of ignorant Negroes. Separate schools are required for the blacks, but the schools for the whites are more numerous and better attended. The school law compels the attendance of children of school age for a term of four to eight months each school year during There are numerous farm schools four to six years. There are numerous tarm schools in the counties, a State university (University of North Carolina), Trinity, Elon, Meredith, and Wake Forest colleges, Salem Academy and College; and Shaw University and Livingstone College

North Carolina is an agricultural State and its products rank in the following order: corn, cotton, tobacco, wheat, peanuts, and hay. Its manufactures are increasing, the chief ones heing cotton goods, tobacco, lumber and timber, cottonseed oil and cake. The fisheries are also important,

RHODE ISLAND (13).

Historical Outline.

RHODE ISLAND, the smallest State, and hence popariy called "Little Khody," owes its foundaulariv called Massachusetts, the most famous of whom were Roger Williams and Anne Hutchinson, who founded separate settlements at Providence and Portsmouth. In 1663 Williams obtained a charter from Charles II., and the scattered settlements were The charter proved so satisfactory that it united. was continued until 1843, when the present constltution was adopted.

During the colonial period the colony suffered from King Philip's War and boundary disputes with its neighbors and showed such independence and disregard of the British commercial regulations that it was constantly on the defense. During the Revolution the British occupied Newport from 1776 to 1779, but Rhode Island furnished great aid to the patriot cause through the privateers which were fitted out in the colony. General Nathanael Greene, one of Washington's most trusted generals, was a native of the State. Rhode Island did not send delegates to the Constitutional Convention, and seven times voted against ratification, only acquiescing when Congress passed a tariff act in which Rhode Island was treated as foreign territory.

which Rhode Island was treated as to age.

The long delay over revision of the charter produced Dorr's Rebellion, which finally led to the adoption of the constitution of 1842. By this the adoption of the constitution of 1842. By this the right to vote is extended to all adult males of twentyone, but the right to vote on questions of taxation in Providence is still restricted to those who are the possessors of 134 dollars' worth of real estate. The Senate consists of one member from each town, and the membership of the House is never to exceed 2; no single town shall be accorded more than one fourth of the representation. These arrangements make it possible for the small towns, in which the population is declining, to control the political situation and they have played into the hands of a politi-cal machine. Rhode Island is generally Republican in both State and national politics.

The educational system is excellent. the large number of foreign born make the percentage of illiteracy high, every attempt is made to provide an adequate school system. Education is compulsory between the ages of 5 and 15, every town must provide a high school, and there are excellent industrial schools and schools of design. Brown University, at Providence, is the chief institution Brown of higher learning. There is a State agricultural college (Rhode Island State College).

Rhode Island is the most densely settled State in the Union and although it ranks thirty-eighth in population, it ranks sixteenth in manufacturing. industries, in the order of the value of their products, are woolen and worsted goods, cotton goods, jewelry, foundry and machine work

VERMONT (14).

Historical Outline.

VERMONT, the "Green Mountain State," was first explored by Champlain, and the first European settlement was made by the French at St. Anne in 1665 In 1724 Massachusetts established Fort Dummer on the site of Brattleboro. Later, under the claims of New Hampshire, Governor Wentworth of that State made lavish land grants which produced numerous scattered settlements. The territory was long claimed by both New York and New Hampshire, which caused a dispute that was not finally settled until just before the admission of Vermont to the Union. In 1777 a State government was organized under the first antislavery constitution ever drafted.

During the Revolution Vermont was practically an independent commonwealth, without representation in Congress, and waged practically a separate war with Great Britain. The capture of Tieonderoga by the State hero, Ethan Allen, in 1775 was the result of its efforts. The battle of Benning-the result of its efforts. The ton was fought in Vermont.

The constitution of 1792 has been radically revised and submitted to popular vote four different times. The governor is chosen for four years, the legislature consisting of a Senate of 30 apportioned to the counties according to population, and a House of Representatives of 246, one from each town and city, is elected biennially.

Agriculture is the chief occupation of the people. the principal crops being hay, potatoes, maple sugar and sirup. Dairy products are very important, and Vermont leads all the States of the Union in pounds of butter per cow, and in the ratio of dairy cows to population. Manufacturing is relatively unimportant except the products of the marble quarries.

Education is compulsory for children between the ages of 8 and 15, and no child who has not completed the nine-year school course can lawfully be employed in any factory, mine, or quarry or as a messenger during school hours. As a consequence of a small foreign-born population and the excellent aducational system, the percentage of Illiteracy is lower in Vermont than in any other State. The University of Vermont, Middlebury College, and Norwich University are the principal institutions of higher learning.

KENTUCKY (15).

Historical Outline.

The early history of the region is connected with Daniel Boone, a North Carolinian, who explored the region in 1769. In 1775, while in the employ of the Transylvania Company, he founded a fort at Boonesborough. Many settlers from Virginia and North Carolina were attracted to the region because of its rich pasture lands in the blue grass. Under the influence of George Rogers Clark, the Virginia Assembly established Kentucky as a county in 1776. It remained a part of the parent State until admitted directly in 1792. During the Civil War it tried to remain neutral, but finally sided with the Union and suffered much from the occupation and hostilities of both armies

In State polities Kentucky has generally been Democratic, except from 1836 to 1850, when it supported the Whigs, under the influence of Henry Clay, its leading citizen. In recent times it has been Democratic till 1890, after which the Republicans several times carried it. Kentucky has been rich in national statesmen, notably Henry Clay, John J. Crittenden, and Vice President Breckinridge.

Education is compulsory between the ages of 7 and 14 for eight consecutive weeks during the year. The schools in the mountains especially are backward. There are four normal schools and several institutions of higher learning, among them the University of Kentucky (State), University of Louisville, Central University of Kentucky (Center College), Berea, Georgetown, and Transylvania colleges.

Kentucky is preëmlnently an agricultural State, the chief products in order of value being corn, tobacco, hay, and wheat. Its most important mineral is coal. The chief manufactured products mineral is coal. The chief manufactured products are flour and grist, and tobacco, and (until 1920) distillery products.

TENNESSEE (16).

Historical Outline.

TENNESSEE, the "Volunteer State," was part of French Louisiana but was included in the charter to the Carolinas. It was first made known charter to the Carolinas. It was first made to the English by Daniel Boone about 1769. the Revolution to 1790 it was a part of North Carolina and from 1777 was organized as the County of Washington. In 1778 a settlement was made on the Cumberland River, near the site of Nashville, and an attempt was made to establish a separate government called the "State of Franklin," under John Sevier as governor. In 1790 North Carolina ceded the territory to the United States and Tennes organized as the Territory Sonth of the Ohio River. It was admitted to the Union in 1796.

During the Civil War Tennessee seeeded, but East Tennessee remained loyal and played an portant part in the operations of the war in that section. The severe battles of Shiloh, Chattanooga, section. The severe battles of Shiloh, Chattanooga, Island No. 10, Stone River, and Nashville were fought in Tennessee; and the whole State was almost incessantly the scene of conflict. Tennessee was the first of the seeding States to be reorganized, and was restored to the Union (July 24, 1866), after ratifying the Federal Constitution, with amendments, and adopting an antislavery State constitution.

Since 1870 the Democratic party has controlled the State government, except in 1880, 1894, and 1910, when the Democratic party was divided and Republicans were elected. In the National elections the State has been uniformly Democratic. Two presidents, Jackson and Johnson, were Tennesseeans

OHIO (17).

Historical Outline.

This State, the "Buckeye State," was within the French claims to the valleys of the St. Lawrence and Mississippi rivers. It was transferred to Eng-land in 1763 and affirmed to the United States by the treaty of 1783. New York, Connecticut, and Virginia claimed parts of it. Most of it was included in the Northwest Territory (1787) which has since been divided into the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin. By the Northwest Ordinical Conservation of Conservations of the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin. By the Northwest Ordinical Conservation of Conservations of C nance a system of government was established and slavery forbidden throughout this region.

Three main streams of immigration poured into this region; from Virginia to the Central area; from Connecticut to the Northern; from Massachusetts under General Rufus Putnam to the Southern. The Northwest Territory was organized in 1787, with General Arthur Saint Clair as governor, with whom were associated Manasseh Crutler and General Anthony Wayne, who had had a large share in the sub-jugation of the Indians. The government estab-lished by the Ordinance was highly centralized, and the governor possessed great power This form lasted until 1798, when a representative territorial government was established and an assembly met in 1799. Ohio was admitted as a State in 1803.

The first constitution of the State was framed in 1802 and showed a reaction against the centralized government and strong executive. The legislature practically the governing power, the governor ing lost the veto power. The State rapidly having lost the veto power. The State rap filled up and became a force in national affairs. has furnished to the national government the following presidents: Harrison, Grant, Ilayes, Garfield, McKinley, and Taft. In 1851 the second constitution established a government of the ordinary type, with biennial elections, a governor chosen for a four-year term, a Senate of 23 and a House of Repre-sentatives of 123, both elected for two years.

In 1912 the State government was much altered, 12 amendments being submitted to the people, of which 34 were adopted. The judicial system was revised, the powers of the legislature defined, and the Initiative and referendum and direct primary adopted. The local government in Ohio is of the mixed type, a combination of the county system of ne South and the town system of New England. In National polities Ohio was Jeffersonian until the Jackson era, after which it oscillated until 1856; it then became Republican and so remained in na-tional elections until 1912. In State politics it was Republican from 1856 to 1905 with six exceptions. It has therefore been ranked as a doubtful State, and one from which it is desirable to pick the presidential candidate, since it has a large electoral vote, is centrally located, and the candidate may be supposed to have strength in his own locality.

Education in Ohio has been greatly aided by the wise policy initiated by Congress in 1802, when it granted sixteen sections of each township for the school fund. The first school law was adopted in 1821, and the school fund established six years later. In 1902 a thorough revision of the school system was undertaken, the schools were standardized, and high schools of three grades established. School attendance is compulsory during the full term of each year versity at Columbus. Among others are Ohio University, Ohio Northern University, Ohio Wesleyan University, University of Cincinnati, Municipal University of Akron, Western Reserve, Miami, Denison, and Toledo universities; Wittenberg, Wooster, St. Mary, Deflance, Oberlin, Baldwin-Wallace, Kenyon Findlay, Muskingum, Rio Grande, Otterbein, and Hiram colleges, Wilberforce University for Negroes, and Case School of Applied Science.

Ohio is rich in natural resources. It is one of the leading agrleultural and grazing States, the chief crop, corn, amounting to over $200,000,000 in 1918; other important crops are wheat, hay oats, potatoes, and tobacco. Horse and cattle breeding and dairy farming are also important. The State has extensive mineral resources and ranks fourth of the States In mineral output, the two leading prod-ucts being coal and manufactures from clay. Ohio ranks fifth as a manufacturing State. In 1916 ranks fifth as a manufacturing State. In 1916 the products of the iron and steel mills were nearly $200,000,000 and of foundries and machine shops $150,000,000. Other important products are iron and steel, rubber goods, pottery, slaughtering and packing products, flour and grist mill products. Ohio has excellent facilities for water transportation. Its most important city is Cleveland, on Lake Eric, with a population in 1920 of 796.836 (5th city).

LOUISIANA (18).

Historical Outline.

Louisiana is popularly known as the "Pellean State" and the "Creole State." The name "Louisiana," after Louis XIV., was given by La Salle to the whole Mississippi basin extending from the Alleghenies to the Rocky Mountains, and from the Gulf to the sources of the Ohio, Missouri, Platte, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Red rivers. At the close of the French and Indian War in 1762–1763, France ceded to Spain the region west of the Mississippi, and to Great Britain the region east of the Mississippi and north of the Bayon Iherville. In 1783 Great Britain recognized the eastern portion as part of the United States. In 1800 Spain transferred the territory west of the Mississippi to France, and in 1803 Jefferson, realizing the importance of the territory, bought it for $15,000,000. Shortly after, the portion now occupied by the State of Louisiana was organized as the Territory of Orleans, and in 1812 was received into the Union. The last battle of the War of 1812 was fought in 1815, when General Jackson repulsed the British hefore New Orleans. During the Civil War, lower Louisiana was occupied by the Union forces. During Reconstruction, political quarrels kept the State in confusion until 1876.

The constitution of Louisiana, adopted in 1913, provides for a governor, elected every four years; a General Assembly, consisting of a Senate of from 36 to 41 members, based on population, and a House of Representatives of not more than 120 based on population, except that each parish and each ward in the City of New Orleans is entitled to at least one representative.

In polities Louisiana, with the exception of four years when a Whig governor was elected, has been consistently Democratic. In national elections as well it has chosen Democratic electors since the Civil The sugar growers are ardent protectionists and some of them were Progressives in 1912. Lou-isiana has furnished one president, Zachary Taylor. The law of Louisiana is unique in that it is not based npon English common law, but npon the Code Napoléon, slightly modified by Anglo-Saxon institutions.

For a long time education was in an unsatisfactory condition; but in 1912 and 1916 a comprehensive State system was established centering in a State Board of Education. Collegiate education is given at the Louisiana State University, Tulane University, Loyola University, Jefferson College, the H. S. Newcomb Memorial College (for women), and also other colleges established for colored The chief crops are cotton, corn, and rice. The chief industries are lumbering and the productions sugar and oil. There are also important sulphur mines and oil and gas deposits. The port of New Orleans has a large international trade.

INDIANA (19).

Historical Outline.

Indiana, the "Hoosler State," a part of the Northwest Territory, received separate territorial organization in 1809, under Governor William Heury Harrison. Security from the Indians was obtained by the victory of Harrison over Tecumseh at the battle of Tippecanoe in 1811.

Indiana was admitted as a State in 1816. The pres ent constitution was adopted in 1851, and since it requires for amendment a majority of the members of each of the two houses in two successive sessions and a majority of all the votes cast at the elections, and since only one amendment shall be put before the people at one time, it has proved impossible of di-rect amendment. This constitution provides for a governor elected for four years, a Senate of fifty chosen for four years and a House of Representatives of 100 chosen for two years. Enumerations and apportionments are made every six years.

Politically Indiana is a doubtful State, both in

State and national politics. It has given to the nation Vice Presidents Hendricks, Fairbanks, and Marshall.

The educational standards of Indiana are high, and the illiteracy rate extremely low. Ed compulsory between the ages of 6 and 14. Education is compulsory between the ages of 6 and 14. The principal universities are Indiana and Purdue, both of which are under State control, and De Pauw, Notre Dame, and Valparaiso, which are private institu-tions. Wahash, Butler, Hanover, and Earlham colleges should also be mentioned.

Indiana has been the home of many noted writers, among whom may be mentioned Lew Wallace, James Whitcomb Riley, Eugene Field, Edward Eggleston, and Booth Tarkington.

The State is largely agricultural, 94% of the territory being in farms. The important crops are corn, wheat, hay, oats, and potatoes. The principal manufactured products are flour and grist, meat products, foundry and machine-shop goods, iron and steel products, and antomobiles.

Illinois is popularly known as the "Prairie State" and the "Sucker State."

The first Europeans to set foot within the present The first Europeans to set foot within the present limits of the State were the French explorers La Salle (1670) and Marquette and Joliet (1673), who reached the Illinois River and established trading posts as early as 1682. A few French inhabitants dritted in and lived in harmony with the Indians. For a long time the Illinois country was included in the Louisiana government. In 1763 this region was ceded by France to England and later claimed by Virginia by virtue of George Rogers Clark's expedi-Virginia by virtue of George Rogers Clark's expedi-tion. This imperfect claim was yielded in 1784 by Virginia; and also the claims of Massachusetts and Connecticut by those States in 1785-86. In 1787 it became a part of the Northwest Territory; then of Indiana Territory; then was organized as the separate territory of Illinois in 1809, and finally was admitted as a State in 1818.

The State rapidly filled up and great enterprise was shown, but such heavy indebtedness was incurred tor internal improvements that its credit was imperiled. In 1847 the people restored their credit was imperiled. In 1847 the people restored their credit by subjecting themselves to a heavy tax. The growth of the State was accelerated by the opening of the Eric Canal and the Great Lakes route and by the erie Canai and the Great Lakes rolle and by the government grant of land for the Illinois Central Radroad in 1850, so that by 1870 the State ranked first in railway mileage.

In 1850 began the great German immigration, together with a small Irish element, and in the next ten years the population doubled. In the succeeding dec-ade, in spite of the drain of the Civil War, it tripled. Chicago, the metropolis, a city of 30,000 in 1850 rose to over 300,000 in 1870. In 1871 the city was almost totally destroyed by fire, but rapidly recovered

The 'Prairie State's '' great wealth is still mainly in farms, the chief crops being corn, wheat, oats, and hay. It is also a great industrial State, ranking third in the value of its manufactured products, and lead-ing in slaughtering and meat packing. Other important products besides meat are foundry and machineshop products, clothing, iron and steel, and agricultural implements. Illinois ranks third after Pennsylvania and Ohio in mineral ontput, the chief products being coal, petroleum, natural gas, and zinc. On the Great Lakes a large fleet of steamers carries coal, ore, and cereals.

Education is free and compulsory for children between 7 and 14, and the school system is excellent. There are 6 public normal schools and more than 25 colleges and universities, the largest of which is the University of Chicago, with over 9,000 students. The University of Hitnois ranks second, with over The University of Hitnois ranks second, with over 7,000 students, and Northwestern University has over 4,000. Among the other institutions may be mentioned Illinois Wesleyan, Loyola, De Paul, and James Millikin universities; Knox, Lake Forest, Illinois, Eureka, Northwestern, and Illinois Woman's colleges; and the Armour Institute of Technology.

The constitution adopted in 1870 (a constitutional convention sat in 1920) provides for a legislature meeting biennially, consisting of a Senate of 51 chosen for four years from districts based on population, and a House of Representatives containing three representatives from each Senatorial district For representatives each elector has three votes, which he may cast for three candidates or divide as he wishes.

ALABAMA (22).

Historical Outline.

ALABAMA is popularly called the " Cotton State." ALABAMA is popularly called the "Cotton State." The region was originally discovered by De Soto and other Spanish explorers, became English in 1763, and was included in the territory of Mississippi set up by the Union in 1798. It received territorial government in 1817, and was admitted as a State in 1819. Like most pioneer communities at that time the State favored the Democratic party and its senators and representatives have generally been senators and representatives have generally been senators and representatives have generally been Democrats, except for certain commercial centers which sometimes sent Whigs to Congress before the Civil War. Since then it has been consistently Democratic. William L. Yancey, senator and Confederate leader, was an Alabaman.

The present constitution, adopted in 1901, assures the political control of the whites by an educational qualification modified in favor of the whites by the so-called "grandfather clause." The sessions of the legislature were made quadrennial and sections were introduced providing for the regulation of corporations. In spite of strong Union sentiment in the Northern centers, Alabama seceded early in January ln 1861.

Originally, and for many years, Alabama was agricultural and cotton is its chief product. But the extensive deposits of coal and iron are rapidly changling it to an industrial and manufacturing State. It already ranks third in production of iron ore, and in 1918 its production of coal increased 60 % and of coke 19% over the previous year. During the World War its industries rapidly developed, especially shipbuilding, both for completed hulls and plate mills for fabricated vessels. Atmospheric nitrogen has been produced at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River, where in the future the vast electric power will be utilized. At present the development is lncomplete.

There are nearly 7,000 public elementary schools, with over half a million enrolled pupils; eight public normal schools, with over 2,000 students. Eleven institutions provide for higher learning, including the University of Alabama, under State control; the University of Alabama, indel state control Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute for colored people, founded by Booker T. Washington in 1880, with nearly 2,000 students; and Alabama Polytechnic Institute, St. Bernard, Howard, and Spring Hill colleges, and the Woman's College of Alabama.

MAINE (23).

Historical Outline.

Maine is called the "Pine-Tree State" and the "Lumber State." The coast was visited by French explorers and in 1607 an attempt was made at a settlement near the mouth of the Kennebec The first permanent settlements made by River. the English were at Monhegan and Saco about 1622. Since Maine was the frontier, invasion was easy, and during the colonial wars it was frequently raided. Many settlers came from Massachusetts, by which Commonwealth the title was bought in 1678, although control had been exercised since 1652. During the Revolution British vessels made descents upon the coast and burned Falmouth, now Portland.

Until 1820 Maine was recognized as a district of Massachusetts. In the War of 1812 British forces invaded and took possession of Castine. Maine was invaded and took possession of Castme. Alalne was admitted to the Umon in 1820 by consent of the parent State. For a long time the boundary between Maine and the British possessions was in dispute, but this was settled by the treaty of 1842.

The constitution of Maine, adopted in 1819 and soon amended, provides for a House of Representatives of 151 chosen every two years, and a Senate of the state of the service of the ser for two years.

The educational standards of Maine are high, a school fund having been established in 1828 by setting aside 20 townships of public land. Education is free between the years of 5 and 21 and compulsory between 5 and 14. There are nearly 200 pubhic high schools, 7 public normal schools, and four colleges and institutions of higher education,—the University of Maine, Bowdoin College, founded in 1794, Bates College, and Colby College.

The chief products of Maine are hay, potatoes, and oats; also, granite, in which Malne ranks third of the New England States, and sea food — chiefly lobsters, cod, and herring. Its forests are large and lobsters, cod, and herring. Its forests are large and important. The first growth of pine has been cut off, but the land gradually reforests.

Before the Civil War Maine was generally Democratic, since then Republican. It furnished to national politics Vice President Hamlln. Its most renowned statesmen have been James G. Blaine and Thomas B. Reed.

MISSOURI (24).

Historical Outline.

Missouri has been called the "Bnillon State" because of the advocacy by Senator Thomas H.

Benton of gold and silver currency. Benton of gold and silver currency.

The country now occupied by the State was visited by Marquette and Joliet in 1683, who gave the name "Missouri," or "Muddy Water," to the river and the country bordering it. It was annexed to the United States as a portion of the Louisiana Purchase and became the District of Louisiana in 1804. The and necame the District of Louisiana in 1804. The district was organized as Louisiana Territory in 1805, and in 1812 its name was changed to Missouri Territory. In 1817 it applied for admission to the Union. This request gave rise to a bitter controversy over the slavery question, which was finally decided by the famous Missouri Compromise of 1820 and 1821 by which Missouri was admitted as 1820 and 1821, by which Missouri was admitted as a slave State, but slavery was prohibited "forever" in the rest of the Louisiana cession north of 36° 30°. Although distinctly a Southern State, the slave-holding interest was unable to carry it into sceesion and the Missouri government remained level to the University of the China. loyal to the Union.

The constitution adopted in 1875 is the third and has been frequently amended, recently to provide for direct legislation. In the House of Representatives the larger counties are discriminated against in faver of the smaller ones, and the representatives are chosen for two years. For the Senate the State is divided into 34 districts, approximately equal in population, each choosing one senator for a term of four years, one half the number being chosen bien-

In politics Missourl was almost uniformly Democratic, with the exception of the Civil War until 1904, when the Republicans succeeded in electing most of their ticket. The Republicans carried the State for president again in 1908, but the Democrats in 1912 and 1916. Misseuri, therefore, may now be ranked as a doubtful State. Its most distinguished men have been the Blairs, father and son, and Thomas H. Benton,

School attendance is compulsory for children from eight to fourteen years for not less than three fourths of the school term. There are over 600 publications of the school term. lic high schools and seven public normal schools, together with about a dozen institutions of higher learning, among which may be mentioned the University of Missouri, Washington University, and Louis University; and William Jewell, Park, Missouri Wesleyan, and Central Wesleyan colleges.

Agriculture is still the chief occupation of the State, the more important crops being wheat, oats, potatoes, and, in the south, cotton. Missouri leads all other States In the production of zine and lead and has large deposits of coal. ## ARKANSAS (25).

Historical Outline.

ARKANSAS, sometimes called the "Bear State," originally a portion of the Louisiana Territory, received territorial organization in 1819 and was admitted as a State in 1836. In was closely connected with the best of the Southern interests and seceded May 6, 1861. For several years after the war, it was the scene of acute political conflict. The present constitution, adopted in 1874, has been frequently amended, but an attempt to adopt a new constitution extending the suffrage to women and establishing state-wide prohibition was defeated in 1918. Like other Southern States Arkansas has been backward in education, but in 1907 a comprehensive system was established providing for compulsory education. No child under 14 can be employed in a manufacturing establishment unless he attends school 12 weeks in a year and can read and write English. There are two public normal schools and eight colleges, the largest being the University of Arkansas, a State institution; Ouachita, Arkansas, Hendrix, Henderson-Brown, and Philander Smith colleges are of importance.

Arkansas is an agricultural State, the chief crops heing cotton, corn, wheat, and hay. The State has a large coal area and manganese ores, lead. and bauxite (for aluminium) are found. The chief industries are lumbering and the production of cot-tonseed oil and oil cake.

MICHIGAN (26).

Historical Outline.

Michigan is popularly known as the "Wolverine State "and also, sometimes, as the "Lake State."
The shores of Lake Michigan were partly explored by French traders and missionaries between 1634 and 1640, and the first settlement was made Marquette at Sault Sainte Marie in 1668. 1701 a military post was planted at Detroit by Cadillac which in 1760, during the French and Indian War, fell into the hands of the English. By the Treaty of 1763 the English were given possession of all this region, but they had to fight for it with Pontiac,

By the Treaty of 1783 the country was acknowledged a part of the United States and was included later in the Northwest Territory. In 1805 Michigan was erected into a separate territory and became a State (1837) after a sharp dispute with Ohio concerning the boundary. The Upper Peninsula was added an Indian chief

by Congress as a mollifier.

The present constitution, adopted in 1908, provides for a Senate of 32 and a Honse of Representatives of not fewer than 64 nor more than 100, elected for two years on the basis of decennial apportionments of the population. The governor is also chosen for two years. Both amendments to the constitution and laws may be made and proposed by the initiative; and all elected officers except judges are subject to recall.

Since the organization of the Republican party the State has been Republican, except in 1892 when five of its electors were Democratic; and in 1912 when it followed the Progressive party. All the United States senators and a majority of the members of Congress have always been Republican. In State politics the governors bave always been Republican since 1856. The most renowned Michigan states-man was Lewis Cass.

Michigan is one of the foremost States in education and has an excellent system of schools, with compulsory attendance for children from 7 to 16. The State also has six normal schools. There is a State university (University of Michigan) at Ann Arbor, founded in 1841 and now baving nearly 7,000 students. Albion, Hope, Hillsdale, and Kalamazoo colleges, the University of Detroit, and Michigan Agricultural College are other higher Institutions of learning.

The State is largely agricultural; the chief crops being oats, corn, wheat, hay, potatoes, and sugar beets. Michigan ranks sixth in the production of mineral wealth; the chief products being iron, copper, and coal; and the total mineral output was valued in 1918 at more than $199,000,000. The industries of the State are chiefly connected with lumber and automobiles; of the latter Michigan produces about three fourths of the entire output in the United States. Other important industries are foundry and machine work, flour and gristmilling, furniture manufacture, copper smelting, and the production of beet sugar.

FLORIDA (27).

Historical Outline.

FLORIDA is called the "Peninsniar State" and also the "Everglade State."

The seutheastern peninsula of North America was discovered in 1512 by Ponce de León in the search for gold and the Fountain of Youth. The oldest permanent existing European settlement in America was made at Saint Augustine in 1565, an expedi-tion from which destroyed a colony of French Huguenots who, in 1564, had huilt Fort Caroline, on the Saint Johns River. After the settlement of the Carolinas and Georgia there were frequent disputes and frontler wars, sometimes reflecting European conditions and sometimes representing local difficulties between the English and the Spaniards.

In 1763 Florida was ceded to England but was returned to Spain by the Treaty of 1783. Its position rendered it an asylum for runaway slaves and a basis of operations for hostile Indians. When the Semi-nole War broke out in 1818 the Spanish authorities in Florida were supposed to give aid to the Indians, and Andrew Jackson, in command of the United States forces, acting without orders crossed the horder and carried on the war there. In 1819 the United States bought Florida from Spalm for $5,000,000. It was organized as a territory in 1822 and admitted as a State in 1845.

The Reconstruction constitution of Florida provided for a cabinet system, but it was soon discontinued. The present constitution was adopted in 1885 and provides for a governor, elected for four years; a bicameral legislature; a lower house, elected every two years; and a Senate of 32, one balf being elected every two years; holding office for four The constitution provides for the Australian ballot with nonpartisan tickets, thus controlling the Negro vote. School attendance is not compulsory, and separate schools are provided for white children and colored children. Higher education is provided for by the (State) University of Florida, the Florida State College for Women, and, among others, the John B. Stetson University and Southern and Rollins colleges.

Agriculture is pursued in all parts of the State. the chief products being pineapples, oranges, grape-fruit, and tobacco. #### TEXAS (28).

Historical Outline.

The coast of Texas, the "Lone-Star State," was included by the Spaniards in their earliest claims but the first settlement was made by the French in 1685. This, however, was only short-lived. The 1685.

Spanish occupation did not begin until 1715. When the United States bought Louisiana from France in 1803 it claimed that Texas was included in the purchase, but the title remained uncertain until the Florida purchase in 1819, when the United States relinquished any right it might have to the territory west of the Sabine River.

Texas became a province of the republic of Mexico when that country revolted from Spanish rule. Meanwhile a considerable immigration from the United States had taken place, and Texas won its independence from Mexico by the decisive battle of San Jarinto (1836), at which General Sam Houston, the first president of Texas, commanded.

Texas was recognized by the United States and several European powers as an independent state, and sought annexation to the United States. was favored by the slaveholding interests of the South and was accomplished in 1845 by joint resolu-tion. By this annexation the United States was involved in a houndary dispute with Mexico. Mexican War followed (1846), during which Mexico was invaded and its capital captured. As a result the southern boundary of Texas was established at the Rlo Grande.

The present constitution of Texas, adopted in 1876, provides for a legislature consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives, fixed respectively at and a House of Representatives, hard respectively as 31 senators and 150 representatives. Senators are elected for four years, one half biennially; the representatives, for two years. Reapportionment is required after each Federal census. The governor is elected biennially.

Texas has been almost uniformly a Democratic State since admission, except for a short period dur-ing Reconstruction. Its most distinguished citizen Sam Houston, president of the Lone-Star Republic

The constitution requires the legislature to provide an "efficient system of free public schools" and for that purpose vast quantities of public land and portions of other taxes and revenue have been appropriated. Funds are apportioned to school disappropriated. Funds are apportuned to school districts annually on the basis of the school population. The employment of illiterate children under 14 years of age in factories is prohibited. There are 6 public normal schools and about 20 institutions of higher learning, the most important of which is the University of Texas. Among the others may be mentioned the Agricultural and Mechanical College, Texas Christian University, Baylor, Trinity, Dallas, Southern Methodist, and Southwestern universi-ties, Simmons, Austin, Baylor Female, and Howard Payne colleges, the College of Industrial Arts (women), and Rice Institute.

Texas is one of the most important agricultural States in the Union The total value of farm property is nearly $3,000,000,000 and some of the arid region is being reclaimed through irrigation. ## IOWA (29).

Historical Outline.

Iowa takes its name from an Indian tribal name (said to mean "Sleepy Ones"). It is often called by the nickname of the "Hawkeye State." It was a part of the Louisiana Purchase of 1803. The first settler was probably Julien Dubnque, in 1788, but permanent occupation did not begin until 1830. 1833 the Iowa country was opened up by the Black Hawk Purchase and settlers came from all parts of the Union. For a time part of Missouri Territory, Iowa was organized as a separate territory in 1838 and admitted to the Union in 1846.

The constitution adopted in 1857 provides for a legislature consisting of a Senate of 50, elected for four years, and a House of Representatives of 108, elected for two years; also, a governor, elected for Local government was organized on the county-township or commissioner plan. in 1913 several cities adopted the commission form of government.

School attendance is compulsory for 16 consecuive weeks annually during the school age (7 to 16). ### CALIFORNIA (31).

Historical Outline.

California, the "Golden State" or "El Dorado," was coasted by the Spamards between 1537 and 1542 and named after the imaginary kingdom of the Amazons of Spanish romance. Sir Fran-cis Drake for the English visited the coast in 1579, but the English did not enforce their claims. No permanent settlements were made within the present limits of the State until the Franciscan missions were established, beginning in 1769; through these the Spanish culture and language were extended to the Indians. When Mexico became independent, California remained one of its provinces, but was brought into the possession of the United States in 1846-1847 through conquest by military and naval forces in the Mexican War. By the treaty with By the treaty with Mexico the United States retained possession of California.

In 1848 placer gold was disrovered in quantities by Marshall at Sutter's Mill, near the spot where Coloma village now stands. Adventurers of all sorts soon were flocking to the new country (see FORTY-NINER, in the Dictionary), and within four years the population reached a quarter of a million.

California was admitted as a free State as part of the Compromise of 1850. In 1906 large portions of Francisco were destroyed by fire following an hquake. The city government at the time San earthquake. attempted to turn this disaster to its profit. Public indignation was stirred throughout the State and a reform movement initiated which bore fruit in the constitutional amendments of 1911.

The present constitution, adopted in 1879, has been frequently amended; most radically in 1911 and 1914, in the way of providing more popular control of the government and regulating corporations and railroads. The legislature consists of a House of Representatives of 80 members elected for two years and a Senate of 40 elected for four years, one half retiring every two years. Legislative sessions are di-vided into two parts. In the first, which may not exceed thirty days, and must be followed by an adjournment of at least 30 days, no bill may be introduced except by permission of a three-fourths ma-The governor is elected for a term of four jority. There are also a number of smaller institutions, such as Pomona and Occidental colleges, College of the Pacific, and Throop College of Technology.

MINNESOTA (32).

Historical Outline.

Minnesota is generally known by the nickname of "Gopher State." although it is also sometimes called the "New England of the West" and the "Northern-Star State."

The region of Minnesota, or "Cloudy Water," first visited by La Salle and Hennepin in 1680. The State lies on both sides of the Mississippi and its territory lay partly in the old Northwest Territory and partly in the Louisiana Purchase. It was or-ganized as a territory in 1849 and admitted as a State in 1858. In 1862 the State suffered severely from a rising of the Sioux Indians, when over 700 settlers were massacred.

The present constitution was adopted in 1858 and has been frequently amended. Since 1898 amendments have been difficult, since the process requires a majority of all those voting at the election. The constitution provides for a governor elected for two years, whose executive power is shared with a large number of officials and commissioners; a legislature consisting of a Senate of 67 chosen for four years from senatorial districts and a House of Representatives of 130 members chosen biennially from the same districts in proportion to the population. Minnesota was the first State to adopt a compulsory primary election law applicable to the whole State.

Politically Minnesota has been Republican with pronounced Independent tendencies, although the Democrats have occasionally elected the governor. In national elections it has been Republican since its admission to the Union, with the exception of 1912. Among its public men have been Secretary of the Treasury William Windom and Sen. Nelson.

The State has a good public school system, both elementary and high, and 6 public normal schools. The University of Minnesota heads the State educational system. Other important higher institutions are St. Olaf College, St. John's University, Hamline University, and Carleton and Macalester cellers. ter colleges.

Minnesota is chlefly an agricultural State, the main crops being oats, corn, and wheat. Live stock raising is important and the wool clip is nearly three million pounds. It contains immensely valuable Iron mines, chiefly red hematite in the Mesaba and Vernilion ranges. The most important manufactured product is flour. Minneapolis is one of the most important centers of the grain trade, and Duble in important restricted. luth is an important port.

OREGON (33).

Historical Outline.

Oregon, "Sunset State" or "Webfoot State," is part of the area between former Russian and Mexican territory along the Pacific Coast, west of the continental divide. Between 1543 and 1792 the coast was visited by Spanish, Russian, British, and French explorers; and the mouth of the Columbia River was entered in 1792 by Captain Gray of Boston. In 1804 Jefferson sent out an exploring expedition under Lewis and Clark, which passed up the Missouri and thence to its headwaters across the mountains and down the Columbia to the Pacific Coast (1805). a result, John Jacob Asfor of New York founded a fur-trading post at Astoria, 1811. The Hudson's Bay Company of fur traders also established posts and the region of Oregon was claimed by both Great Britain and the United States as far north as 54° 40′, where Russian Alaska came in. By a treaty of 1818 the citizens of Great Britain and the United States were free to occupy the country. In 1846 the present dividing line at 49° was determined. (See FIFTY-FOUR FORTY OR FIGHT and NORTHWEST BOUNDARY DISPUTE, in the Dictionary

Oregon was self-organized as a territory in 1843, regularly organized by Congress in 1848, and ad-nutted as a State in 1859. The constitution then adopted has been frequently amended, particularly in 1902 by the establishment of the initiative and referendum for both constitutional amendments and the passage of laws. By utilizing this method, Oregon has attempted radical solutions for social and economic problems. The State, though normally Republican, has become Independent in State affairs, although it has remained Republican (except in 1912) in national affairs.

School attendance is compulsory for the full school term for children 9 to 15 years of age. is a public normal school, an agricultural college (Oregon Agricultural College), and the University of Oregon, all supported by the State, and several smaller colleges, such as Reed College, Pacific University, and Willamette University, carried on by various denominations.

Oregon has one sixth of the standing Umber in the United States, and its forest products are of great value. Other products are hay, potatoes, and wheat: the wool clip amounts to 15,000,000 pounds. the wool cnp amounts to 15,000,000 pounds. The fisheries of salmon, sturgeon, halibut, and oysters are abundant. The mineral resources of the State are as yet not highly developed. ### KANSAS (34).

Historical Outline.

Kansas, called the "Sunflower State" and "Jayhawker State," was first made known by Coronado's expedition of 1540, and came into the United States as part of the Louisiana Cession It was still almost an unknown land until the opening of the Oregon and Santa Fe trails, about 1835. By the Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854 part of the Louisiana Purchase was organized into the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, with the proviso that the inhabitants of these territories should choose for themselves whether the territory should be slave or free when admitted as a State. Immediately emigrants began pouring into the country both from the North and the South, each section aiming to control the elections. The political conflict was so violent that at one time there were two governments and two capitals of Kansas, while from 1855 to 1857 actual civil war raged. The aid given by societies in the North stimulated emigration from that section and Kansas was admltted as a free State in 1861. There was border warfare during the Civil War.

The constitution (1859) has had few amendments. the most important being for prohibition (1880) and woman's suffrage (1912). The legislature consists of a Senate of 40 members elected for four years, and a House of Representatives of 125 elected In State for two years. Sessions are biennial. In State polltles Kansas has been Republican with the exception of the Populist movement in 1890, 1892, and 1894. In national affairs it went Democratic in 1896 and in the three following State elections.

The State maintains the University of Kansas, with nearly four thousand students, and the Kansas State Agricultural College. Among the other institutions may be mentioned McPherson, Washburn, and Southwestern colleges, and Baker, Kansas City, and Ottawa universities.

Kansas is preeminently agricultural, the chief crops being corn, wheat, and hay. It has also a most extensive live-stock industry. There are large coal and oil fields and valuable deposits of zinc. The chief industries are flour and gristmilling, slaughtering, manufacturing of railway cars, and zinc smelt-

Historical Outline.

NEVADA, taking its name from the Sierra Nevada mountains, and called the "Silver State," was a remote part of the Spanish territory ceded by the Treaty of 1848 with Mexico. Nevada is also known as the "Sagebrush State." For a time part of Utah Territory, it was organized as a territory in 1861 and admitted to the Union in 1864. The constitution provides for a legislature consisting of a Senate of 22 elected for four years, an Assembly of 53 elected for two years, and a governor elected for four years. Nevada has been Democratic since 1896, with the exception of 1904. The public school system was organized by the code of 1911 and is supported chiefly from a Federal land grant of 2,000,000 acres and a tax of ten cents on each hundred-dollar valuation. School attendance compulsory between the ages of 8 and 16. (State) University of Nevada is at Reno.

The mineral resources of the State are chiefly gold and silver, but copper, lead, zinc, and tungsten are also found. The chief crops are wheat, potatoes, In 1917 the wool clip amounted to over and corn. 10,000,000 pounds.

Historical Outline.

Nebraska is an Indian word which signlifes Water Valley," and the State is sometimes called he "Blackwater State." the "

At first a part of French Louisiana, later included in Missouri Territory, and then, after being long unorganized, Nebraska Territory was formed by the Act of 1854 and thrown open to newcomers, who were to determine whether it should be a free or a slave territory. Nebraska was admitted as a free State in 1867. The present constitution, that of 1875, provides for a legislature consisting of 33 senators and 100 representatives and for a governor, all elected for a two-year term.

Until 1890 the State was generally Republican From 1890 to 1900 there were frequent changes of party in the State government. In national polities party in the State government. In national polities it went Democratic in 1896, 1908, 1912, and 1916. The reasons for these frequent alterations are the rise of the Populist party and the prominence of William Jennings Bryan, thrice candidate of the Democratic party for president.

The school system is founded on the district unit and county superintendents manage the rural schools. School attendance is compulsory for children between 7 and 15 for not less than 12 weeks in the school term. There are eleven principal institutions of higher learning, the largest of which is the University of Nebraska; among the others may be named Creighton, Nebraska Wesleyan, Cotner, and Omaha universities, and Doane and Union colleges.

Nebraska is one of the most important agricultural States, its principal crops being corn, wheat, and oats, while beet sugar is also produced. The chief industries are slaughtering and flour milling.

COLORADO (38).

Historical Outline.

COLORADO is sometimes called the " Centennial State," from its being admitted in 1876, the year of the centennial of United States independence.

The central Rocky Mountains were known to the Spaniards and were explored by Pike in 1806, Long in 1819, and Frémont in the early forties. The discovery of gold near Pikes Peak in 1858 brought the first Anglo-Saxon settlements to this region; but the difficulties of quartz mining and the discoveries in other sections checked immigration. The territory was organized in 1861 and the State admitted

The constitution adopted in that year has been frequently amended, and provides for a General Assembly consisting of a Senate of 35 elected for 4 years, one half retiring every two years, and a House of Representatives of 65 elected for two years; also a governor elected for two years. All citizens, male and female, 21 years of age are qualified as voters. Since 1912 all elective officers and judicial decisions are subject to recall. The initiative and referendum were adopted in 1910. Colorado is a doubtful State politically, but may be considered Republican with medical learning. lican with radical leanings tending to the Democratic party

The public schools are under the supervision of a State superintendent and include the State Teachers College and a normal school. For higher education there are several institutions, among them the University of Colorado, the University of Denver, Colorado Agricultural College, and Colorado College

Denver is the center of the traffic in live stock west of the Rocky Mountains, and slaughtering and meat packing are the principal industries of the State other than mining. The chief agricultural products other than mining. The chief agricultural products are oats and corn, the yield of which is increasing, owing to the extension of the irrigation projects. Colorado is rich in mineral resources: gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc, tungsten, and coal. The State copper, lead, zinc, tungsten, and coal. abounds in summer and winter resorts and has a considerable Eastern population.

NORTH DAKOTA (30).

Historical Outline.

NORTH DAKOTA, originally part of the Louisiana Purchase, was included in the Territory of Dakota in 1861 and admitted as a State in 1889. Its con-stitution, adopted that year, provides for a Legislative Assembly consisting of a Senate of 49 elected for 4 years, and a House of Representatives of 113 elected for two years; also, a governor elected for two years. The constitution itself is long and contains many provisions ordinarily found in statute laws. In politics the State is normally Republican but at various times the Democrats have been in control. In the presidential elections of 1912 and 1916 it supported the Democratic candidates. In 1918 the candidates of the Nonpartisan League controlled the State government and passed many economic measures of a radical nature.

School attendance is compulsory for children between 7 and 15, and two sections in each township are set aside for the school fund. The chief higher are set aside for the school fund. The chief higher educational institutions are the University of North Dakota, Fargo and Jamestown colleges, and the State Agricultural College.

Agriculture is the chief pursuit, the principal crops being wheat — which in 1918 amounted to nearly 100,000,000 bushels-, oats, and barley. Much live stock is also raised.

MONTANA (41).

Historical Outline.

Montana, part of French Louisiana, was organized as a territory in 1864 and admitted as a State in The name [from Latin montana, fem. of mon-1889. tanus mountainous] suggests the situation, one sixth of its area being on the western slope of the Rocky mountains and the remainder on the eastern slope, extending to the plains of the Mississippi valley. Included in the latter are the "Bad Lands," abounding in iron and coal and producing rich grasses that facilitate the rearing of eattle. The climate is dry and bracing and modified by the warm "Chinook" winds, which come down from the mountains.

The valleys are fertile and adapted to raising cattle, sheep, and horses. Large irrigation projects are being carried out by the Federal government, which will increase the area of agricultural land. The chief crops are wheat, oats, barley, and potatoes.

Montana has great mineral resources and is among the three States producing the largest amount of copper. Other mineral products include gold, silver, and coal.

The constitution, adopted in 1889, provides for a governor elected for two years with extensive powers, a Senate of 43 elected for 4 years, one half retiring every two years, and a House of Representatives of 97

WASHINGTON (42).

Historical Outline.

Washington, the "Evergreen State," is the most northwestern of the United States. Its coasts were visited by the Spaniards, French, English, and Russians and its territory was long jointly occupied by Great Britain and the United States. In 1846 the region was divided and the present northern bound-ary line on the 49th parallel was agreed upon; and in 1848 Washington was included in the territory of Oregon. During the period of joint occupation, American pioneers, particularly the missionaries to the Indians, eminent among whom was Doctor Marcus Whitman, did much to stimulate settlement from the East. In 1872 the last point of the disputed boundary was settled by the award of the German emperor, who substantiated the American claim to San Juan Island. Washington was organized as a separate territory in 1853 and admitted as

UTAH (45).

Historical Outline.

UTAH, sometimes called the "Mormon State," is named from the Ute, or Utah, Indians. The early spelling of the name was varied. "Yuta" was common among the Spaniards: later are found "Youta," "Eutaw," "Utaw," and "Utah." Utah lies in the Great Basin of the interior and includes the head waters of the Columbia and Colorado rivers It was first explored by the Spaniards, then by fur traders and by Frémont. It was part of Spain, then of Mexico, till its annexation in 1848; organized as territory in 1850, it was admitted into the Union in 1896.

The first permanent settlers were Mormons, led from Illinois and Missouri by Brigham Young in 1847. He was for a time territorial governor and then, as Prophet of the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-day Saints, was the leader of the community. From 1851 to 1859 there was a conflict between the Mormon authorities and the United States

The State consists of two great plateaus, 5,000 feet above the sea, divided by the Wasatch Range of mountains, with peaks rising up nearly 12,000 feet. Many fertile valleys are in a high state of cultivation, but in the west all the streams disappear in the desert or into the salt lakes, especially Great Sait Lake, 80 miles long, from 20 to 35 miles wide, and having no It is so sait that no fish can live in it. outlet Tho streams flowing into the lake have been used to irrigate the valleys and plains. Except some pine in the mountains and cottonwood along the banks of the streams, there are no forests. In the northwestern part of the State there is good pasturage, and the wool clip is over 15,000,000 pounds. The State produces a diversity of metals, especially lead, copper, silver, gold, zinc. and coal.

The constitution of 1896, while promising toleration in religion, prohibits polygamous marriages, and provides for a Senate of 18 elected for 4 years and a House of Representatives of 46 elected for 2 years; also, a governor elected for 4 years. Suffrage is extended to both men and women. The State is doubtful and shifting in politics. Education is compulsory between the ages of 8 and 16 and the percentage of illiterates was only 2.5. There is a good public school system, a State normal school, the (State) University of Utah, and Brigham Young College.

NEW MEXICO (47).

Historical Outline.

From the time of its discovery by Europeans the territory now included in the State of New Mexico was a part of Mexico. The title was gained for the United States by the Mexican cessions of 1848 and the Gadsden Purchase of 1853. It was organized as a territory in 1850. Joint statehood with Arizona was proposed in 1906, but rejected by the latter. A State constitution was framed in 1911 but rejected by President Taft because of the difficult method prescribed for amendment. A new constitution was then framed and the State was admitted, 1912. The legislature consists of a Senate of 24 members and a House of 49; a governor is chosen for two years Since admission as a State, New Mexico has been Democratic in politics.

ARIZONA (48).

Historical Outline.

ARIZONA, sometimes known as the "Valentine State," from its having been admitted on February 14, 1912, was Spanish and Mexican from the first explorations to the transfer to the United States by the Mexican treaties of 1848 and 1853. It was included in the territory of New Mexico in 1850, organized as a separate territory in 1863, refused to join with New Mexico as a State in 1906, and submitted a consillution for the approval of Congress in 1911. The resolution accepting this constitution and admitting Arizona was vetoed by President Taft because of the radical nature of the constitution proposed, his objection being directed chiefly against the recall of judicial officers. Arizona withdrew the clauses and was admitted in 1912. stitutional amendments, ratified in November, 1912, Arizona restored the provision for the recall of judges and extended the suffrage to women. The constitution provides for a governor elected for three years, a Senate of 19 and House of Representatives of 35, all elected for two years. The State has been Democratic in national and State elections since its admission

School attendance is compulsory for 12 weeks (6 consecutive) for children between 8 and 14 and free for children from 6 to 21. There is a good system of elementary schools; there are also high schools, two public normal schools, the (State) University of Arizona, and an agricultural school in connection with the latter.

Arizona, with its dry climate, is not well adapted for agriculture; but where lrrigation is used the soil is productive. # TERRITORIES AND DEPENDENCIES OF UNITED STATES.

ALASKA.

Historical Outline.

Alaska is a vast tract 590,884 square miles in extent — greater than the area of the original thirteen States -- which was acquired from Russia by the United States in 1867.

The first Europeans to see the wild coast were early Spanish voyagers and Drake in 1580. Cook and other explorers skirted it from 1778 to 1800. The first Russian discoveries were made by Bering

The Russian-American Fur Company had a monopoly of Alaskan trade, and in 1821 Russia claimed ownership south to 51° and also a monopoly of the North Pacific Ocean. In 1824 Russia by treaty withdrew all claims south of 54° 40°. In 1867 the United States much one of the states with the states wit with the states with the states with the states with the states United States purchased the whole enormous area from Russia for $7,200,000. The Canadian Northwest thus became the eastern neighbor of Alaska; the boundary was left unsettled till the arbitration of 1903, under which the Canadians remained shut off from the coast north of 54° 40′.

Alaska is separated from the rest of the United States by British Columbia. The island of Attu, which is the most westerly of the Alaskan islands, extends American territory into the Eastern Hemisphere and is as many degrees of longitude west of San Francisco as San Francisco is west of Maine. Including the islands and its deeply indented shores, the coast line of Alaska is 20,000 miles. The great coast range of mountains is from 50 to 75 miles in width, and includes Mount McKluley, 20,300 feet in height, the loftiest peak on the continent of North America. The extension of this chain forms the mountainous Aleutian Islands. One third of the territory lies within the Arctic zone, and the slopes of the great range are covered with glaciers that afford magnificent seenery.

The interior contains grassy plains and groves of pines on the mountains. The Yukon River, which rises in British Columbia and flows through Alaska into the Pacific, is one of the great streams of the world, being navigable by steamers for 2,000 miles and having a width of a mile, six hundred miles from its mouth. The ellmate of the coast and Pacific islands is moderated by the warm Japan Current, which produces an immense rainfall. In southwest-ern Alaska it rains or snows two days out of three ern Alaska it rams or snows two days out of three throughout the year. At Sitka in midsummer there is no darkness, the sun dipping below the horizon and immediately rising again. East of the coast range the winter cold is intense, the thermometer sometimes falling to 70° below zero.

By act of Congress in 1912 Alaska became an organized territory, with a legislative assembly con-

Religious missions represent almost all denominations of the Protestant, Russian, and Roman Catholic churches. The territory is well supplied with schools, the Federal government having appropriated $200,000. The great problem of Alaska is transportation, and in 1914 Congress passed an act authorizing the president to construct and operate a railroad from the coast to the coal deposits, which are valuable for naval purposes. Alaska is rich in gold deposits in the interior on the Yukon River and at Cape Nome. Other important industries are the seal and salmon fisheries, the annual catch of the latter being valued at over $14,000,000.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

A district ten miles square, obtained by cessions of jurisdiction by Maryland and Virginia in 1788 and 1789, was set apart by Act of Congress in 1790 for the seat of government of the United States. Commissioners were appointed by President Washington in 1791 to lay out the District, and to secure a proper title to the soil. Major L'Enfant, a French engineer, planned the city of Washington; and the buildnecessary for the accommodation of Congress and the President were erected before December, 1800. The city suffered loss from the occupation and burning by the British in 1814 — In 1846 the Virginia portion of the District was retroceded to that For many years after its establishment, the only local government was that of the municipalities of Georgetown and Washington The question of slavery and the slave trade in the District caused violent controversies down to the act prohibiting the trade in 1850; and the act for compensated emancipation in 1862. In 1871 a territorial govern-ment was established, followed in 1874 by a government by a Commission appointed by the President, which is still in action. There are three large institntions of learning in the District of Columbia George Washington University, Catholic University of America, and Georgetown University.

By act of Congress (Spooner Amendment) of March 2, 1901, prescribing future relations with Cuba, requirement was made that that country sell or lease to the United States land necessary for naval stations at points to be agreed upon with the president. Cuba accepted the requirement in her constitution, May 20, 1902.

United States government selected Guantánamo Bay in Oriente province at the eastern extremity of the Island, and on February 16-23, 1903, agreement was made with Cuba for indefinite lease of the station. The lease was signed July 2, 1903. of the station. The lease was signed July 2, 1340. Cuba retains ultimate sovereignty but during period of occupation the United States "shall exercise complete jurisdiction and control.

HAWAII.

Historical Outline.

The archipelago known formerly as the Sandwich Islands, more recently by the native name of Ha-waii-Nei or the Hawaiian Islands, and now as the Territory of Hawaii, consists of a group of twelve islands, of which eight are inhabited and four uninisianos, or which eight are mnabited and four uninhabited, lying in the central North Pacific on the crossroads of the ocean. Their entire area is 6,449 square miles. The largest islands are: Hawaii, 4,015 square miles; Maui, 728; Oahu, 598; Kauai, 547; Molokai, 261; Lanai, 139; Niihau, 97; Kahoolawa, 60

The capital city, Honolulu, on the island of Oahu, is 2,400 miles from Seattle, 2,098 from San Francisco, 3,310 from Acapulco, 4,685 from Panama, 5,147 from Callao, 2,263 from Pagopago, 3,850 from Auckland, 4,424 from Sydney, 3,387 from Guam, 4,778 from Manila, 4,917 from Hongkong, 3,400 from Υοκοhama. This strategic center commands the main routes of international commerce and communication between the East and West and dominates the development Great and Little Corn Islands, off the Atlantic of the Pacific. Pearl Harbor, in Oahu, near Honocoast of Nicaragua, were eeded to the United States by treaty signed Aug. 5, 1914, and ratified by outlay one of the finest harbors in the world.

at the present time showing light complexion and other European characteristies. The natives call them Kekea and themselves Kanakas.

The first recorded discovery of the Hawaiian group was made by the English Captain Cook, in group was made by the Engish Captain Cook, in 1778; later he provoked the natives, who killed him (February, 1779). At this time, each island was ruled by its own chief. The chief of Hawaii, named Kamehameha, was a man of enterprise; he was taught by the English explorer, Vancouver, to build ships and made an insular fleet of twenty vessels Kamehameha supplied his soldiers with firearms and conquered the neighboring islands, uniting six of them in one government. Thus he became king of the in one government. Thus he became king of the so-called Sandwich Islands. He was succeeded by his son, Karnehameha II. To this epoch belongs the abolition of idolatry and of the system of taboo. Many of the old barbaric customs were interdicted from this time forth.

In 1820 a company of American missionaries reached Honolulu, and soon the English missionary, Ellis, brought with him Christian natives from hiti (Society Islands). From this time there was progress in the direction of European civilization. The native language was reduced to a written form. A little later the missionaries induced the sovereign to accept the Ten Commandments as the constitution of the kingdom.

In 1840 Kamehameha III., then in the seventh year of his reign, granted a new frame of government with civil rights to his people. In 1843 a provisional cession of the islands was made to Great Britain, but in 1844 the independence of Hawaii was restored, and was guaranteed by Great Britain, France, and the United States. In 1891 Queen Liliuokalani succeeded, but because of evasions and nullifications of the constitution, and the granting of opium and lot-tery monopolies, the queen was dethroned in 1893 by an uprising of the Americans and the better class of

The American minister, Stevens, declared Hawaii under the protection of the United States, and negotiated a treaty of annexation which President Harrison submitted to the Senate. This was withdrawn by President Cleveland; and since Liliuokalani refused to grant amnesty the United States interposed no obstacle to the establishment of the Re-public of Hawali in 1894. In 1898, at the time of the Spanish American War, the strategic importance of the Islands was demonstrated and in that year, in accordance with the desire of the Hawaiian Government, the islands were annexed to the United States.

In 1900 Hawaii was organized as the Territory of Hawaii. The legislature consists of a Senate of 15 members elected for four years with a suffrage based on intelligence qualifications, which shuts out many of the natives, and a House of Representatives of 30 elected for two years. The governor and secretary are appointed by the president, and a delegate to the Congress of the United States is elected biennially. By the terms of annexation all persons who were citi-By the terms of annexation an persons who were citizens of the Republic of Hawaii became citizens of both Hawaii and the United States. Since that time eitzenship is acquired as in the United States. The population is diverse. The native Hawaiians, because of a high death rate, are declining, as are the Chinese through emigration to China. On the other hand the Americans and Europeans are increasing. There were in 1920 about 100,000 Japanese whose children are born into citizenship. At present Chinese, Japanese, and Korean immigration is prohibited. The total population is somewhat over 250,-000. Because of the difficulty of obtaining labor, the Department of Labor and Immigration and the Hawaiian Sugar Planters Association gave assistance to certain classes of immigrants. Thus by 1920, 12,000 Filipinos had been introduced, and efforts are made to attract European emigrants, particularly the Portuguese.

Nearly all the natives are Christian, the Protestants being nearly twice as numerous as the Catholics, who are chiefly Portuguese. Since 1840 schools have been established and education is now free and compulsory between the ages of 6 and 17. There are several industrial schools and the College of Hawaii. Great effort is made to improve and preserve the health of the inhabitants, the bubonic plague has been practically eliminated, and every effort is made to control leprosy and tuberculosis, to which the natives are peculiarly susceptible.

The islands are to a great extent mountainous and volcanic, but the soil is highly fertile. Sugar and pineapples are the staple products, while coffee, honey, hides, wool, tobacco, and rubber are also

GUAM.

Guam, the largest of the Ladrone or Mariana Islands, early discovered by the Spaniards, was captured by the United States in the Spanish American War and ceded by Spain in the subsequent treaty of 1898. The area is 225 square miles and the population 13,275 (1920). Under Spain the island was neglected, but since 1900 a system of schools has been established and Improvements introduced in roads, agriculture, and sanitation. A government radio station exists on the island, which is also in cable communication with the rest of the world. The only local government is that administered by a naval officer appointed by the president, who exercises executive, legislative, and judicial functions. The harhor of Agana is closed to all vessels except by permission of the navy department. The products of the island are maize, rice, sugar, and copra; and the exports amounted to about $100,000 in 1918, while the imports were three times as much.

THE SAMOA ISLANDS.

In 1722 the Dutch Captain Roggeveen discovered the cluster of islands to which, forty-six years afterward, Louis Antoine de Bougainville gave the name lles des Navigateurs, or Navigators Islands. He was struck with the way in which the natives handled their canoes. He found the islanders a gay, lighthearted, indolent people, living under the easiest conditions of climate and soil.

In recent times the name of this group has been changed to the native word "Samoa." The cluster consists of fourteen islands in all, having a total area of 1,070 square miles. The three important ones are Savaii, Upolu, and Tutuila. On the northern shore of the second named is the harhor of Apla, which, by the tripartite agreement of 1879, made by Germany, Great Britain, and the United States, was declared to be an international port of entry, to be controlled by the consuls of the three powers named. German party at Apia, instigated by the Hamburg commercial house of Godeffroy and Son, took sides with one of the national factions under Tamasese The islands were desired by Germany, Great Britain, and the United States—chiefly as a naval center. In 1881 the three powers agreed on a scheme involving nominal joint control. scheme was a failure, and the other powers interand in a conference at Berlin in 1889 it was agreed that Samoa should be independent and neutral, with the right to govern itself, including the right to elect its king. Apia, the capital of the country, was declared to he a municipal district under control of the consuls resident of the three powers, and having its president, as well as chief justice, nominated by them.

In 1899, owing to trouble over the kingship, the treaty powers started negotiations for a change of government; while these were in progress, Great Britain in exchange for other territory ceded to Germany all her Samoan interests. Finally, in Germany all her Samoan interests. Finally, in 1900 it was agreed between Germany and the United States that the island of Tutuila and all other islands of the Samoan group east of 171° west of Greenwich should belong to the United States; while the islands west of that meridian should belong to Germany. This group was ceded by Germany to the Allies in the treaty of 1919.

The situation of Samoa on the main lines of navigation between San Francisco and Auckland.

Honolulu and Sydney, Queensland and Panama, Tokyo and Cape Horn, gives to the islands whatever world interest they may claim. They are, though small, very productive. The local products include copra, coffee, cacao, and cotton. The population of the Canal Zone (1920) was tlon in American Samoa numbers 8,056, mostly pure Polynesians, all of whom have been Christianized by the missionaries. There are 69 schools on the islands, attended by over a thousand hoys and nearly a thousand girls.

The harbor of Pagopago, in Tutuila, one of the best small ports in the Pacific, was ceded to the United States as a naval and coaling station in 1872. The United States maintains a naval station there under commandant who is also governor of the islands The insular officers are appointed by him and he is maker of such regulations as he deems necessary. Still, the customs of the people are not interfered with, and they enjoy practical self-government.

GUANO ISLANDS.

By an act of Congress passed on August 18, 1856, any guano island discovered and occupied by a citizen of United States shall be considered as appertaining to United States. Provision was made for working the deposits under bond, and relinquishment after removal of guano. Under the act some 70 or more islands have been bonded, mostly in the Pacific, notably Baker, Christmas, and Howland. Many have been stricken from the list. Christmas Island was later occupied by the British.

PANAMA CANAL ZONE.

THE PANAMA CANAL ZONE, a strip of territory five miles on either side of the Canal route, was ceded by Panama to the United States by the treaty of 1903. Since the Zone is a military reservation, no private individuals or traders are permitted to settle or acquire land. The government is vested in a governor appointed by the president for a term of four years and in such other officers as the president shall deem necessary.

The Canat has a summit elevation of 85 feet above the sea and is 43.S nautical miles in length, including its approaches. From shore to shore the Canal is about 35 miles long. The channel ranges from 300 to 100 feet wide and has a minimum depth of 41 feet. The average time of passage through the From shore to shore Canal is from seven to eight hours. It is estimated that the maximum traffic capacity of the Canal is 36 ships per day. The cost of the construction of the Canal to June 30, 1917, was $365,631,760. The cost of operation and maintenance in 1917 was $6,000,788.

22,858, of whom about 7,000 were Americans.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Historical Outline.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS (Spanish, Islas Filipinas) in the last years of the nineteenth century acquired a historical importance greater than had been hitherto attached to them. While they had long been coveted by other European nations, they remained the Spanish outpost and naval base in the Pacific until the hold of Spain was broken by the destruction of her fleet in the East and the capture of Manila in the war with the United States (1898).

This extensive archipelago was first visited by men of the white race in 1521. Magellan on his round-the-world voyage reached the little island of round-the-world voyage reached the little island of Homonhon or Malhon, near Samar. The next month he was killed by the natives on the island of Mactan. He called the group the Islands of St. Lazarus. Subsequently, they were called Islas de Poniente, and by the Portuguese, Islas de Oriente. Villalobos gave the name Isla Filipina to the island of Samar, in honor of Philip II., of Spain.

Subsequent explorations made better known the number and character of the islands. San Miguel, in Cebu, afterwards called The Holy Name of Jesus, was founded by Legazpi. From this time the name of Philippines was used by the Spanish chroniclers. The conquest of the islands was effected without the cruel methods practiced by the Spaniards in the West Indies

In 1571, Manila, on the island of Luzon, the largest and most important member of the group, was chosen as the capital of the whole. A Spanish government was organized. Civil authority of varying extent was extended over the archipelago, including about 3,140 islands. Most of the islands are small, and many are uninhabited; Luzon, the largest, has 40,969 square miles, being over one third of the total land surface of the whole, which has been estimated at 115,026 square miles. The other principal islands are eight: Mindanao, Samar, Mindoro, Panay, Leyte, Negros, Masbate, and Cehu. All are of volcanic origin.

In Luzon the mountains rise to the height of 7,000 feet. Owing to the prevailing moisture and warmth, the forests grow to the mountain tops. The region is subject to carthquakes, and volcanoes occasionally hurst out.

The history of the Philippines under the Spaniards offers few important events. The native tribes, as indeed the whole population, have often shown a disposition to rebel against Spanish authority. T islands have been ravaged occasionally by pirates.

The Philippines have had little connection with Western Europe. Once, in 1762, an English armament under Draper and Cornish bore down on Manila and compelled the payment of $5,000,000 as a ransom. The city was held for nearly two years, but was restored according to the terms of the Treaty of Paris in 1763. At the outbreak of the war between Spain and the United States, in 1898, Commodore George Dewey, commanding the Pacific division of the American navy, attacked and destroyed the Spanish squadron under command of Admiral Montojo in the harbor of Manila, and blockaded Luzon. A large division of the American army under General Merritt was sent from San Francisco across the Manila, which city was eventually occupied by the Americans.

By the Treaty of Parts ((ratifled in 1899) the Philippines were ceded by Spain to the United States, Spain receiving $20,000,000 for her outlays in the islands. President McKinley did not at that time desire their retention, but saw no other course A long struggle ensued with insurgents led by Emilio Aguinaldo, who proclaimed himself president. his capture in 1901, resistance to American occupation gradually ceased, except for occasional brigandage.

Organization.

Government. William H. Taft was appointed the first American civil governor in 1901 and the first Legislative Assembly was convened in 1907. By the organic act of the Philippine Islands in 1916, autonomous government was extended to the islands, and the whole archipelago was put under civil government. The governor-general, the vice governor, who is also secretary of the Department of Public Instruction, the auditor, and the deputy auditor are appointed by the United States. Both branches of the legislative body are elected, the Senate for six years and the House of Representatives for three; and the legislature elects two resident commissioners of the Islands to hold office for three years.

There are six executive departments: Interior, Public Instruction, Finance, Justice, Agriculture and Natural Resources, Commerce and Communication. The secretaries of those departments, appointed the governor-general with the consent of the Philippine Senate, are all Filipinos with the exception of the secretary of the Department of Public Instruction. The government of the provinces and towns is closely connected with the Insidar government, the officials being in part designated from above.

The leading races of the Philippines are the Market and Market and Market are the Market and Market and Market are the Market and Mark gritos, of whom about 25,000 remain; the Indonesians or non-Christian tribes, such as the Igorrotes, Tinguianes, etc., and the pure Malays, as the Tagalogs, Visayans, Bicols. There are also many types of mestizos. In course of time a large Malay population has come in, as also have considerable numbers of Chinese immigrants. The Spaniards are comparatively few in numbers, and these reside chiefly in Manila, Cavite, Batangas, and a few other Negro slavery was never introduced into the towns. islands, and hence the African element is wanting.

According to the census of 1918 there were 10,350,-640 people. Of these more than 1,000,000 were non-Christian, mostly savages, with many Mohammedans in the South. The capital, Manila, had 266,943 inhabitants in 1914 The Spanish-Malay mixed race furnished most of the leaders. Aguinaldo, the revolutionary chieftain, is of mixed Chinese and Malay

The productions of the Philippines are abundant and valuable. The commercial woods include teak, ebony, cedar, gumwood, ironwood, sapan wood, The breadfruit tree, the coconut, the orange the citron, and the mango grow luxuriantly and yield abundant fruits. The great staples are coffee, sugar, copra, hemp, tobacco, with some rice, wheat corn, pepper, ginger, vanilla, cinnamon, cacao, etc. The mineral wealth includes gold, copper, cinnabar, iron, saltpeter, sulphur, coal, etc. The tobacco products, chiefly the cigars of Manila, are regarded by many as the finest in the world. The Bureau of Agriculture has done much in improving methods of cultivation and of rearing live stock and in combating the ravages of destructive insects.

The total exports in 1919 amounted to $113,000,the total Imports to $107,000,000. When the United States entered the islands there were only 120 miles of narrow gauge railway. There are now 757 miles of railway, 5,471 miles of insular telegraph lines, 986 miles of cable.

The archipelago is divided into 48 Education. educational divisions in which there are over 4,000 schools with 406 American teachers, over 11,000 Filipino teachers and over 671,000 pupils. The anmual expenditure for education is about $5,000,000. Higher education is provided by the state-supported University of the Philippines with colleges of liberal arts, medicine and surgery, engineering, law, veter-

There is also the University of Santo Tomás, founded in 1611 and conducted by the Dominican Order.

One of the vexing controversies was that of the "Frlars' lands." During Spanish rule immense "Friars' lands." During Spanish rule, immense estates, occupied by the peasantry, were owned by religious orders from Spain, who became obnoxious to the Philippine Catholic clergy and people in general. This condition of affairs caused continual strife and confusion. By an act of Congress in 1902, the Philippine government received authority to acquire by purchase the lands in question and to dispose of them by sale or lease. The preliminary negotia-tions at Rome and Manila were conducted by Governor William H. Taft. More than 410,000 acres were purchased at a cost of $7,239,000, to be sold or leased to their occupants

PORTO RICO.

Historical Outline.

COLUMBUS, on his second voyage in 1493, approached the coast of an island which the natives called Borinquen, but which the Spaniards called Puerto Rico ("rich harbor"). Ponce de León, who was governor in 1510, founded the towns of Caparra, now known as Pueblo Viejo, and San Juan. The Spaniards first subdued and then virtually exterminated the native population. The English terminated the native population. sacked Caparra in 1595. Several other attacks were made in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. On the downfall of the Spanish Bourbons, Porto Rico like Cuba remained faithful to the dethroned dynasty, though in 1820 an ineffectual attempt at independence was started by a faction. Subsequently Porto Rico was ruled by a Spanish officer, who oppressed the people and kept them in tyrannical subjection. Slavery prevailed until abolished in Porto Rico is represented in Congress by a resident commissioner elected for four years.

In 1899 over 83% of the population could neither read nor write; but as a result of the excellent school system established by the United States, the percentage of illiteracy was reduced to 65% ten years later. The University of Porto Rico is at Rio Piedras, near San Juau.

Two thirds of the cultivated land of the island is devoted to the raising of sugar, and a little more than a ninth to tobacco, which ranks second in Other important exports are coffee, bananas, pineapples, oranges, and cotton Over 1,000 miles of highway have been constructed on the island and about 300 miles of railroad.

The island has an area of 3,606 square miles, and in 1918 had a population of 1,299,809, or 360 per square mile. The colored population was about a third.

THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.

The group of islands consisting of St. Croix, St. Thomas, and St. John have at various times been held by the Dutch, English, Spaniards, and French. In 1733 they passed under the control of Denmark and were known as the Danish West Indies. An effort was made to aunex them to the United States in 1867, but the Senate refused to ratify. Negotiations were revived in 1916, and Denmark accepted a payment of $25,000,000.

The government is vested in such officers as the president shall appoint until Congress acts. Sugar cane, cotton, fruit, and vegetables are grown on the islands and about a million dollars' worth exported The islands are now officially to the United States known as the Virgin Islands of the United States.

The islands have a combined area of 132 square miles; and a population of about 26,000, a fourth of whom in 1919 were illiterate.

THE PRESIDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

George Washington, the first president of the United States, as also the first leader of the armies of the United States, was born in Westmoreland County, Virginia, February 22, 1732. His father, a planter, died when the son was eleven years old; his mother lived to the age of eighty-two; to her training he owed especially his high sense of honor and his As a youth, he was methodical in his habintegrity. active in athletic pursuits, and conversant with nature. When seventeen years old, he received a commission as a public surveyor, having shown a great aptitude for that career. At nineteen years he was made adjutant general, with rank of major, in charge of one of the militia districts of Virginia. brother, at this time residing at Mount Vernon, Virginia, died, leaving him in charge of his estate.

It was now 1753. The French on the frontier were setting up claims to territory already claimed Washington was chosen by Governor Virginia. Dinwiddie to go as commissioner with large powers to learn the intentions of the French and to warn them against encroachment. To accomplish this, he had to make alone a perilous journey through the wilderness. This task he performed successfully and with rare good judgment. The Governor decided to take active measures to repel the French encroachments, and Washington was appointed lieutenant colonel in command. He was captured by a party of French at Great Meadows — the beginning of the French and Indian War. In 1755 he accompanied General Braddock on his ill-fated expedi-He was exposed to extreme peril, but escaped and his courage and ability made him a marked man. He served in this war for three years taking active part in the capture of Fort Duquesne. This training gave him an admirable knowledge of military affairs. His success had made him the most prominent Virginian in military service.

In 1759, in his twenty-seventh year, he married Mrs. Martha Custis, a young widow with two children, who became his charge. Washington never had children of his own. The joint estate which he now held was large and required great attention, but he could not avoid public life, and he took an active part in the discussions which led to the Revolutionary movements. He was a delegate to the first Continental Congress, held in 1774, and Patrick Henry pronounced him the greatest man on the floor for solid information and sound judgment. When the second Congress assembled in 1775, Washington was again a member and was placed at once at the head of When the hour came and important committees. the colonies prepared to take up arms in defense of their liherties, he was the unanimous choice of Congress for the post of commander in chlef of the American armies.

Washington, profoundly humble, but firm in his conviction of the righteousness of the country's cause, accepted the trust. On the 3d of July, 1775, in Cambridge, Massachusetts, he drew his sword as commander of the army, beneath or near a great elm, which still stands, now with a commemorative stone at its base. He retained command throughout the war and proved himself a great general, for he was patient and cautious when the odds were against him, prompt and bold to act when opportunity offered, and held the army in his hand now as a shield to protect the country, now as a weapon to strike a decisive blow—He commanded men, for he was a born ruler and had learned the mastery of himself.

When the war was over, he resigned his commission and retired to private life. He would receive no money other than expenses for his public services, but at once began to devise plans for increasing the resources of Virginia. It was impossible that he should be left alone. When a great civil need arose, the people again demanded him. He went as a dele gate from Virginia to the convention which framed the Constitution, and was its presiding officer. Upon the adoption of the Constitution, he was unantmously chosen first president of the United States, in 1789. He went to New York to take the office April 30, 1789, and his journey was a triumphal procession. In the organization of the government under the new Constitution be rendered great service; he made all the first appointments to executive and judicial office; he favored sound finance and a national bank. When war broke out in Europe in national bank. When war broke out in Europe in 1793, he stood firm for neutrality. His skill aided in settling controversies with England by the Jay Treaty of 1794; and he put down the Whisky Insurrection. After four years of service, he was unanimously chosen for a second term. No other man stood as he in the hearts of men, and by his firmness, his large wisdom, and his singleness of purpose to promote only the good of the country, he kept the without. He refused to hold office for a third term, and wrote a Farewell Address which has the tone of a benignant father to his children. He returned to his country estate, but in 1798, when there was lm-minent prospect of war with France, the country again turned to him and he was appointed commander in chief of the army. He immediately began the organization of his command, but died at his home, December 14, 1799, in the sixty-eighth year of His remains were buried in the family at Mount Vernon, where they still rest. His death was followed by universal mourning. He was pronounced "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

JOHN ADAMS.

JOHN ADAMS, who succeeded Washington in the presidency, was associated with him as vice president. He was a Massachusetts man, born October In early life he was a schoolmaster and at the outbreak of the War for Independence he was a lawyer. He took a leading part in the early measures of resistance against the British crown, but was not at first in favor of separation. He was very in-dependent in spirit and courageous in his convictions, as when he defended the soldiers concerned in the Boston Massacre, taking the unpopular side then as often afterward. He was a delegate to the first and second Continental Congresses. In the latter he proposed the name of George Washington as commander in chief, seconded the resolution for independence introduced by Richard Henry Lee, and was one of a committee of five, the other members being Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, and Robert R. Livingstone, to draw up a declaration of independence.

In February, 1778, he was sent to France as one of the commissioners from the new nation. There he made but a short stay, inasmuch as the object of his mission had already been accomplished by Benjamin Franklin, after the surrender of Burgovne. He returned to America in August, 1779. In October of the same year he was again sent abroad by Congress and was active on the commission which negotiated a favorable peace with Great Britain (Sept. 3, 1783). He was first minister of the United States to Great Britain, holding that office till near the close of 1789

Simultaneously with the adoption of the Constitu-tion, Adams returned to the United States and was elected to the office of vice president. This position he held for eight years, and then, upon the retirement of Washington, was elected president. He came into power when the Federal party, to which he belonged, was giving way before the Republican party, headed by Jefferson. Adams was not in sympathy with all the measures advocated by his own party, nor did he get on well with Hamilton, another able leader of the Federalists. The faction in the party and the bitter political feuds throughout the country, together with the fierce European war, brought the United States into peril. Adams fa-vored the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798, which injured his party. In the controversies with France, including the X Y Z mission of 1797, he stood for national honor and for peace, but he accepted the Naval War of 1799. Then he hastened the peace of 1800 with France

The rest of his life he spent in reflrement at his home in Quincy, Massachusetts. His wife, to whom he was married in 1764, was a remarkable woman, as shown by the letters which passed between them during the separation caused by his public duties. own character is significantly shown in this correspondence, and is well described in the words of his grandson: "Ardent, vehement in support of what he believed to be right, easily roused to anger by oppo-

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Thomas Jefferson, third president, was the son of a Virginia planter. He was born in 1743, and educated at William and Mary College. His first notable public service was in the second Continental Congress. He succeeded Adams and held the office of president for two terms, from 1801 to 1809. The Federalists, who had been the special advocates of the Constitution and had exercised the chief governmental power up to this time, had often been in the minority and yet had retained control because they had a definite policy. Their opponents at first were known by the negative title of Antifederalists, and their party, if such it may be called, though it was never organized, was the Antifederalist party. But by degrees the various elements of the opposition became consolidated into a party with a positive politi-This work of consolidation was largely the accomplishment of their great leader, Jefferson, who named his new party "Republican." The name "Democratic," borrowed from French politics, was, however, applied to him and his followers by their enemies, and though Jefferson never accepted it, the designation stuck and after more than thirty years was even adopted by the party itself, the official name of which is Democratic-Republican. As long as he lived he gave direction to many otherwise divergent forces. He was a comparatively young man when he drew up the draft of the Deelaration of Independence, in 1776.

He was elected governor of Virginia, an office which he held for two years, and was then an efficient member of the Congress of the Confederation. He was the author of the Federal Ordinance of 1784, and also of the system of rectangular land surveying. Afterwards, in 1784, he went to Europe as commissioner to negotiate treaties with foreign powers, in connection with Franklin and Adams. came hack to America, in 1789, he was at once in-vited by Washington to serve as Secretary of State in his cabinet. Washington's cabinet was composed of somewhat discordant elements, and Jefferson often found himself at odds with Alexander Hamilton, the Secretary of the Treasury, and opposed the National Bank. Jefferson was a determined and Jefferson was a determined opponent of centralization. He held that through the distribution of powers good government is effeeted. His views with regard to the Constitution looked toward the doctrine of State sovereignty, and he was in open sympathy with the philosophers of the French Revolution, who almed at the reconstruction of society on a more democratic basis.

His fundamental principle was belief "in the accuracy of the popular judgment," and he always relied with firm confidence upon the people. A strict constructionist of the Constitution, as president he did not allow his theories to interfere with his actions when circumstances demanded a certain course. When vested with responsibility he cared less to show himself consistent than to guide the country to successful issues. Important policies were pursued during his administration. By the exercise of extreme economy the public debt and the expenses of the government were greatly reduced, but the efficiency of young nation together when it was forming, against sition, but sincere, placable, and generous, when the navy was somewhat impaired, though it wor great distinction in the war with Algiers. of Louislana was the most conspicuous and the most important act of his administration, but one of those acts wherein his theory and his practice disa-greed. In the difficulties arising out of European politics and war, Jefferson had been disposed to sympathize with France rather than Great Britain, but president he found himself forced into antagonism with both countries. His remedy, the Embargo Act of 1807, proved a failure.

Declining urgent solicitation to accept a third term of office, in 1809 he returned to private life at Monticello in Virginia, near the place of his birth By a singular coincidence he died on the 4th of July, 1826. Adams died the same day and being ignorant of Jefferson's death is said to have uttered as his last words, "Jefferson survives." The epitaph on Jefferson's monument at Monticello, written by himself, indicates what he esteemed the greatest achieve ments of his life: "Author of the Declaration of In-dependence, of the Statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and Father of the University of Virginia.

JAMES MADISON.

James Madison, fourth president, was born March 16, 1751. His home was at Montpelier, a ham-let of Virginia in the neighborhood of Monticello He was a graduate of the College of New Jersey (now Princeton University) and came into places of responsibility in his native State. As member of the Congress of the Confederation he was active in urging reforms, and learned the need of a stronger Union. In 1787 he was chosen as one of the Virginia delegates to the convention and was author of the so-called "Randolph" or "Virginia Plan," which became the basis of the Constitution. The proceedings of the convention were secret, and posterity has been dependent for an exact knowledge of its doings mainly upon the notes of Madison, which he made with great care and diligence. He was one of the foremost debaters in the convention, and when the result was reached he was an able defender. the Constitution in the long public discussion which followed before the action of the convention was ratified by the people. In connection with Hamilton and Jay, he wrote the papers which constitute the series collectively called "The Federalist," his own part being especially the exposition of the powers proposed to be vested in the Union, the relations of the general to the State authorities, and the separation and mutual dependence of the forces of the central authority.

More, perhaps, than any other man, Madison may be regarded as having personal and practical rela-tions with the interpretation of the Constitu-He was one of the two most prominent framers of it; one of the three most able defenders of it before the people. For eight years under Jefferson he was Secretary of State, and for eight years after-ward, namely, from 1809 to 1817, President of the United States. His writings on the Constitution are the most important which we have on the subject, and he is, perhaps, the greatest of American constitutional statesmen. He never swerved from the po-sition which he took at the time of the convention, that an adoption of the Constitution by the States was forever obligatory, and in his old age, when South Carolina held the doctrine of nullification, he pronounced it a "colossal heresy." He parted company, however, with Jay and Hamilton quite early in his career, and held within strict limits the State rights creed, which more than any other man he helped to formulate, especially by what are known as the Virginia Resolutions of 1798-99.

 $J_{\rm AMES}$  Monroe, fifth president, was one of the youngest of the company of men whom we associate together as founders of the nation. At the time of the Declaration of Independence, Monroe, who was born April 28, 1758, was eighteen years old. Mon-roe was also a Virginian and served with distinction under Washington during the War for Independence and in the Congress of the Confederation was very ac tive and did his best to prevent the impending wreck

Under the new Federal Government, he was sent by Washington as minister to France, where his republican and antifederal views made him almost a partisan of the French government. In the delicate relations between England, France, and the United States, the presence in France of a minister so pronounced in his views was embarrassing, and Monroe was recalled, almost in disgrace, but he was after wards sent by Jefferson to France in 1803, when he completed negotiations with Napoleon for the purchase of Louisiana. Monroe ever after regarded the act as one in which he felt special pride.

In 1806 Monroe was appointed minister to England, with William Pinkney, and negotiated a treaty of Commerce (1806), which was not accepted by Jefferson. After his return he was governor of Virginia, and in 1811 was called by Madison to be secretary of state in his administration, an office which he held until he was elected in 1816 to succeed Madison as president.

He also acted for a time as secretary of war. When nominated for reëlection at the end of his first term, out of two hundred and thirty-two electoral votes he received all but one. The period of his presidency, especially the earlier part, when the country had closed the war with Great Britain and was entering upon a time of prosperity, was called the "Era of Good Feeling," and a journey taken by the President through the Northern States called out a general expression of harmony. He died on the 4th of July, 1831.

Monroe's presidency and his name are especially remembered for the enumeration of what is now known as the Monroe Doctrine. The allied sovereigns of Europe proposed to aid Spain in reducing to obedience her revolted colonies in America. Monroe, in a message to Congress, declared that in the war between Spain and her colonies the United States would observe strict neutrality, That we should consider any attempt on the part of the allied powers to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. . . . But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States." In the debates which afterward sprang up about the message, the construction was put upon this declaration which it has ever since borne, that the American continents were thenceforth not to be considered as fields for colonization by any European power. The acquisition of Florida from Spain and the "Missouri Compromise The acquisition of also signalized Monroe's term.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

John Quiney Adams, sixth president, born July 11, 1767, son of John Adams, began his public career when his father took him with him, when he went as commissioner to France in 1778, and kept him with him during his stay in Europe. The son may be said him during his stay in Europe. The son may be said to have grown up in the diplomatic service, having been appointed minister, successively, to the Netherlands, to Portngal, and to Russia. He was chosen to the Massachusetts Senate in 1802, and the next year to the United States Senate. He accepted a position in 1806 as Professor of Rhetoric in Harvard University, but though he had strong literary tastes as well as legal training, his experience and the public demand made a political life inevitable. Madison appointed him minister to Russla, and in 1814 he was one of the commissioners who negotiated the peace between Great Britain and the United States, known as the Treaty of Ghent. Shortly afterward he was made minister to Great Britain, and upon the accession of President Mouroe he besecretary of state. In that office he made many commercial treaties, and was even more active than Monroe in the decisions and phrasing of the Monroe Doctrine

At the presidential election of 1824, there were four candidates, all of the Democratic-Republican party: Adams, Andrew Jackson, William H. Craw-ford, and Henry Clay. Since no one received a majority of electoral votes, the election devolved upon the Honse of Representatives. That body, voting by States, chose Mr. Adams, though in both the popular and the electoral vote he had been below General Jackson. He took the presidential oath in the face of strong opposition and was confronted throughout his entire term by bitter political ene-mies. Any measure he might propose was almost sure of defeat. Of independent character, strict integrity, and unflagging industry, he endeavored faithfully to discharge all the duties of his office though encountering in many directions only dislike and His diary is a valuable commentary npon contemporary history, and reveals also in emphatic lines the strong, obstinate, suspicions, but

He left the White House almost unnoticed, when successor entered, and indeed turned his back with little show of civility upon Washington and its men, returning to his ancestral farm at Quiney, to live in retirement. Twice the attempt was made to censure and humiliate him for venturing to present petitions bearing on slavery. Both times he defled his enemies, and his public defense of the right of petition had a great in-fluence upon the conscience of the country. His death was dramatic, for he fell upon the floor of the House when in the midst of a speech, Peb. 23, 1848.

ANDREW JACKSON.

dents had belonged to well-to-do families of either Virginia or Massachusetts and had been connected with the public service of the nation. Jackson's early life had been passed in hardship and all his assocarry life had been passed in hardship and air his asso-ciations were rugged. He was born in the same year, 1767, as John Quincy Adams, on the 15th of March, in Union County, North Carolina. In 1780, at the age of thirteen, he volunteered with his brother Rob-ert to fight under General Sumter. In 1786 he was admitted to the bar, and two years later removed to Nashville, Tennessee. He was a member of the House of Representatives from Tennessee, 1796-97, and in 1797 was appointed to fill a vacancy in the United States Senate, which he entered Nov. 22. After his return to his State in 1798 he was elected by the legislature to a place on the bench of the State supreme court, which he held for six years, and during his town of office was chosen wain report of during his term of office was chosen major general of the State militia. He resigned his judgeship in 1804 and applied himself to business, but in the rough condition of the country and the times his fighting capacity was a conspicuous part of his reputation, so that upon the breaking out of the war with England in 1812 he came forward rapidly as a milltary leader. His great reputation was won by his brilliant and successful defense of New Orleans at the close of the war, and from that time he was one of the marked men of the country. Three years later, in 1818, when engaged in quelling disturbances in 1818, when engaged in quelling disturbanees among the Georgia Indians, he disregarded the boundary which separated the United States from the Spanish territory and without orders made a raid into Florida. This act produced a momentary consternation, but the purchase of Florida shortly after removed diplomatie difficulties.

The people liked a man who was willing to take responsibility. The independence and will which Jackson showed made him a popular hero. He was appointed governor of Florida in 1821, and then for a time sat as senator from Tennessee at Washington.

time sat as senator from Tennessee at Washington. At the next general election, in 1824, he was nominated for the presidency as a Democrat by the legislature of Tennessee. Though he had a slight superi-ority of electoral votes there was no choice under the Constitution. The House of Representatives elected Mr. Adams. As the close of Adams's term approached, Jackson was again nominated. He was successful by an electoral vote of more than two to one. In 1832 he was again elected for a second term by a still larger majority.

Jackson's own individual and remarkable character bad much to do with the direction taken by events. He was peculiarly a man of the people, in the sense of deriving his power from their personal rather than political adherence. He had a limited education, little experience in statesmanship, strong prejudices, but much common sense, unwavering patriotism, and, above all, the inborn genius of leadership in any form of conflict. As a Democrat he was opposed to what he regarded as loose constructions of the Constitution; he was especially hostide to the National Bank, and his persistent hostility, which sometimes found expression in what his enemies called arbitrary measures, led finally to the overthrow of the bank. He was also a passionate lover of the Union, and when South Carolina attempted nullification, Jackson's will and promptness interposed at once the force of the nation to crush the movement. He had bitter enemies and enthusiastic and devoted friends. administration "formed an era in the political, social, and industrial history of the United States.'

Like Washington and Jefferson, refusing a third election to the chief magistracy, he retired at the end of his second term and spent the rest of his life in quiet at his countryseat, known as The Hermitage, There he died on June, 8, 1845.

WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON.

WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON, ninth president, was born in Virginia, February 9, 1773, and spent his early life on the frontier as an officer of the United States army. He was appointed governor of Indiana Territory, and won his greatest fame in conflicts with the Indians, especially at the Battle of Tippecanoc, when he defeated the Indian chief Tecumseh. He took an active part in the second war with Great Britain, and in 1828 was sent as minister to Colombia. He was nominated by the Whig party against Van Buren in 1840, and a political canvass followed which was marked by great enthusiasm on the part of the Whigs. The discontent with the administration, which financial distress had helped to create, was turned to account, and Harrison's personal popularity was vigorously used in the prosecution of the canvass. All mamer of devices were employed, and the autumn following the nominations became a general autumn following the nominatoris to the political festival. Harrison was elected, but had scarcely chosen his cabinet before he died, April 4, 1841 inst a month after his inanguration. He was the first president to dle in office.

On becoming presi-dent, this lack of adherence to the political principles dent, this lack of adherence to the political principles of the Whigs who had elected him caused a breach with the Whigs, who were headed by Henry Clay. All the cabinet resigned except Webster. The Democrats did not take the president up and he was left isolated. Nevertheless, his administration had several successes in diplomacy. Webster negotiated the Ashburton Treaty, which fixed the northeast boundary of the United States for 2.000 miles. The first treaty with China was secured (1844); and Calhoun was made secretary of state to negotiate a treaty of annexation of Texas, state to negotiate a treaty of annexation of Texas, which failed of ratification. In 1844 he was nominated for the presidency by the Democrats as a "dark horse" because he supported the annexation of Texas. His opponent, Henry Clay, was uncertain, and Polk was elected in a very close contest, and no president has been more successful in gaining his ends. He adjusted the Oregon boundary (1846) and annexed California and New Mexico. The Mexican War, which was presecuted during his term of office, was favored largely by those who saw in it a means of strengthening the power of the Southern slavery forces. He was a man of industry and ability. He served one term, 1845–49, declining to seek renomination, and died on June 15, 1849, three months after his departure from the White House.

In 1832 and July 9, 1850, Fillmore succeeded to the chair. He surrounded himself with an able cabinet and endeavored to follow a middle course between the po-litical extremes. The passage of the Fugitive Slave Bill during his administration, and his proclamation enforcing it, estranged from him a large section of the Whig party. After his retirement from office (1853) he spent some time in travel at home and abroad, and while absent received a nomination for the presidency at the hands of the American party in He obtained the electoral votes of one State, Mary-land. ## FRANKLIN PIERCE.

FRANKLIN PIERCE, fourteenth president, was born In Hillsborough, New Hampshire, November 23, 1804, and after graduating at Bowdoin College, where he and Nathaniel Hawthorne were intimate friends, he studied law under Levi Woodbury. He was member of the State legislature from 1829 to was member of the State legislature from 1829 to 1833, and Speaker of the House during the last year, when he was elected to Congress and served two years in the lower house. In 1836 he was sent to the United States Senate, but at the close of his term re-turned to the practice of the law. In the Mexican war he became a volunteer, was colonel in command of a regiment, and saw some service.

In 1852 Pierce was little known in the country, but was nominated by the Democratic Convention on the forty-ninth ballot. The Whig candidate was General Winfield Scott, who in the Mexican War had gained little less distinction than had General Taylor. Pierce received more than six sevenths of the entire electoral vote and the Whig party rapidly disintegrated, never again putting a presidential ticket in the field. Though a Northern man, Pierce sympathized with the extreme Southern school and made Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, his secretary of war. As chief magistrate he showed little ability to direct or command. Personally agreeable, of ele gant manners, most estimable in private life, he lacked vigor for the conduct of affairs and merely drifted with the tide. He failed to receive a renomination in 1856; and, retiring to private life, died at Concord, New Hampshire, October 8, 1869. During his term the "Missouri Compromise" was repealed, opening the Territories to slavery.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

James Buchanan, fifteenth president, was born in Franklin County, Pennsylvania, April 23, 1791, graduated at Dickinson College, and in 1812 was admitted to the bar. He was a Federalist in the early days. He was sent to Congress in 1821, after serving days. He was sent to Congress in 1821, after serving in the State legislature, and was ten years in the House. In 1832 he became minister to Russia under appointment of President Jackson, to whose party he had attached himself, and in 1834 was chosen to the United States Senate, where he supported Jackson and Van Buren. He was President Polk's secretary of state, and was sent by Pierce as minister to England. While there he joined the ministers to France and Spain in a paper called, from the place where it was drawn up, the Ostend from the place where it was drawn up, the Ostend Manifesto, in which an attempt was made to force the United States into a policy for the possession of Cuba, a policy which formed part of the Southern program, since it would erect an additional safeguard to slavery

The coutest between the slave power and the antislavery sentiment had been growing in intensity dur-ing Pierce's administration, so that at the election in 1856 a great increase in the popular vote for the anti-slavery, now called the Republican, candidate occurred; but the Democratic party was highly organized, and responded, moreover, to the will of the South, which was now thoroughly sensible of its declining power and put forth a strong effort to retain control

Upon his elevation to the presidency Buchanan placed several extreme Southerners in his cabinet, and made repeated efforts to annex Mexico and Central American territory. After the election of Abraham Lincoln, in 1860, Buchanan drifted along. Hls message of December, 1860, tied his own hands against taking action by accepting the construction of the Constitution under which the South justified its preparation to secede. The occupation of Fort Sumter by Major Anderson, Dec. 26, brought about a cabinet crisis. Buchanan was ready to surrender the fort, but Jeremiah Black, his secretary of state, threatened to resign; Buchanan gave in helplessly and from that time to the end of his term, March 4, 1861, was a chip in the stream. The events which followed his administration so plunged him into obscurity, that his death, in 1868, was almost a surprise to people at large, so entirely had he been forgotten

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, sixteenth president, was born in Hardin County, Kentucky, February 12, 1809, of obscure parentage, his father being unable to read or write; his early life was passed amid hardships and in a slow development of mental power. At nineteen he was a common hand on a flatboat, and for a few years was occupied with some of the humbler forms of trade, while he patiently sought a qualification for higher pursuits. He culisted in the war against the nigher pursuits. He emisted in the war against the Black Hawk Indians, and was chosen captain of a company. After various vicissitudes he secured admission to the bar, and at the same time was urged mission to the bar, and at the same time was urged by his friends, who early were won by his strong, kind nature, to accept political office. He was a great admirer of Henry Clay, and in 1844 took an active part in the canvass for his election. He had been identified from the beginning with the Whig party, and in 1846 was elected to Congress. He was not conspicuous in the House, but in the test questions upon elevary was always found upon the side of these who slavery was always found upon the side of those who would restrict it and obstruct its encroachments. He was a candidate for election to the Senate in 1849, but was defeated. He was at this time engaged in the practice of his profession at Springfield, Illinois. As the Whig party melted away and the Republican rose, he attached himself to the latter, and was urged by his neighbors as a candidate for the vice presidency with Frément in 1856. He did not receive the nomination, but two years afterward he was chosen with great unanimity to confront Stephen A. Douglas, who was the Democratic candidate for United dent.

Douglas had a powerful following and was one of the most prominent men in the country. A memorable campaign followed, when the two rivals fought the intellectual battle in a series of personal encounters throughout the length and breadth of the State. Lincoln's homely force, his unfailing good nature, and the moral strength of his convictions made a deep impression upon his auditors; he failed of an election by the legislature, although he had secured a popular majority, but the contest served to make him more conspicuous and trusted. His nomination as president was followed by his election, and the minds of the North turned anxiously to the subject of their choice. At first he disappointed many: he did not move quickly enough for some; he seemed to others unappreciative of the gravity of the situation. He came to Washington in secret — because of a plot to assassinate him.

Nevertheless, his inaugural address was full of power and hope. There was something in his quiet manner which inspired confidence, and his regard for the Constitution was plainly a part, also, of his ingrained sense of the sanctity of the Union. He sought by practical means to hold the South in willing loyalty to the federal bond, but when the blow was struck at Fort Sumter there was no delay in taking his place at the head of the armed forces of the nation. He addressed himself at once to the people; he had confidence in them; and in the four years of war which followed he never swerved from his faith. The confidence which he reposed in the his faith. people was returned, at first slowly, at last unre-servedly. The history of the war and of the political measures which marked its course is a history of President Lincoln's administration. He had no arbitrary ways; he assumed no power; but he was patiently responsive to all the signs of the time, and moved at the head of the people, taking successive steps only as he was sure that they were close behind him. He was never separated from them in his solemn leadership, and he turned from time to time with words of cheer, of encouragement and trust, which were of great importance in fixing confidence when it was wavering.

There was an absence of ceremony often in his ways which disconcerted many people, and those who knew him slightly thought him often a mere jester. The South recognized his power more thorjester. The South recognized his power more thoroughly, as the intensity of its hostile expression showed. His power grew more impressive as the hour came when victory was in the hands of the Union, and the President, abating nothing of the claims which the country made, stretched out a hand of welcome to the Southern States. He had been reelected by the people to a second term of office, and in January, 1865, overtures for peace were received, which were immediately responded to by Mr. Lincoln. He sent Mr. Seward to Fortress Monroe to meet commissioners from Jefferson Davis, and, in his eagerness, having little regard for what might he his eagerness, having little regard for what might be said, himself followed and joined the conference. His action was not misunderstood, and the temper in which his mind worked was nobly illustrated by the speech which he delivered upon the occasion of his inauguration. The conference had been fruitless, but the fortunes of war were fast solving the problem. Mr. Lincoln did not live to see the full consummation of his desires. On the night of Friday, April 14, 1865, while sitting in a private box at Ford's Theater, Washington, he was shot by an assassin. He died the next morning at a few minutes before seven o'clock. His death plunged the nation into mourning, but it lifted the victim into the place of a

Among the great events of his service besides the military and civil combats, were the prohibition of slavery in the Territories and District of Columbia (1863); the Pacific Railroad, Homestead and Agricultural College Acts (1862); the preliminary and final Emancipation Proclamations (1862, 1863); and the Thirteenth Amendment (1865).

Still his natural ability and force of character carried him rapidly forward until, in IS42, he was elected to the House of Representatives in Congress, where he remained for ten years as a Democrat. In 1853 he was elected governor of his State, was reëlected in 1855, and in 1857 was sent to the United States Senate. As the secession movement grew imminent, Johnson in speeches both in and out of Congress opposed it with all his might. President Lincoln made him provisional governor of Tennessee during the Civil War. He was elected with Lincoln on the "Union" ticket in 1864. On the death of Lincoln in 1865 he became president and reorganized the Southern States on a hasis control by the non-slaveholding whites. In 1866 Congress with its two-thirds Republican majorities, substituted a very different plan of reconstruction, and therefore the President was in opposition to Congress. Many measures were passed over his veto, and in 1868 he was impeached and tried before the Senate. His opponents lacked one vote of the two thirds necessary to convict. His term of of-fiee expired the next year, and he retired to his home in Greenville, Tennessee. He was elected to the Senate in 1874, but died July 31, 1875.

ULYSSES SIMPSON GRANT.

ULYSSES SIMPSON GRANT, eighteenth president was born April 27, 1822, at Point Pleasant, Ohio, and baptized as Hiram Ulysses, but by an aecident was entered at the West Point Military Aeademy, to which he had received an appointment, as Ulysses S., with the assumption that he bore his mother's maiden name of Simpson. The error was perpetuated and Grant earried through the rest of his life the significant initials, "U.S." After his course at West Point was completed he was ordered with his regi-ment to join General Taylor's army in Texas. He saw active service as second lieutenant and quarter-master in the Mexlean War, and after the close of the war, when he married, he was ordered to Oregon, where he received his commission as captain. 1854 he resigned his commission, returned to St. Louis, near which he owned a small farm, and in 1859 went to Galena, Illinois, where he joined his father and brothers, who were engaged in the leather trade

Three days after the call for volunteers in 1861 a public meeting was held at Galena, at which he presided. Within a week he was drilling a company of volunteers, and on April 23d he went to Springfield with them. He was commissioned eaptain, made colonel of the Twenty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and shortly afterward brigadier general, each prometion coming to him unsought. From this time forward his services form a part of the military history of the war for the Union; he rose rapidly to the highest rank, and was recognized as one of the great generals of modern times. He was the com-manding officer at Forts Henry and Donelson, at Pittsburg Landing, in the Mississippi campaign and the Vicksburg campaign, and at Chattanooga, and then was transferred to the Eastern field and was made commanding officer of all the Union Armies, and received Lee's surrender in 1865.

The close of the war found General Grant the hero of the hour. He sought in vain to heal the breach between the President and Congress. Before the close of Johnson's term his elevation to the presi-deney was clearly foreshadowed. He was nomi-nated by the Republican party in May, 1868, and elected by a large majority.

During his first term the great question of Reconstruction of the Southern States was upper-most, and the plan formed by Congress, in 1867, was carried out. In spite of this drastic legislation, supported by troops in the South, gradually the former leadership of the South came to the front. The Ku-Klux conspiracies and other forces broke up the Negro suffrage in many States, in spite of Grant's vigorous resistance and strong coercive acts.

Grant came into collision with Sumner and other leading Republicans over his effort to annex the whole or part of Santo Domingo; and there was a disorganizing atmosphere of corruption among some 1842. ### RUTHERFORD BIRCHARD HAYES

The next occupant of the White House was Ruth-ERFORD BIRCHARD HAYES, the nineteenth president. He was born on October 4, 1822, at Delaware, Ohio, educated at Kenyon College, Gambier, and at the law school of Harvard University. He practiced his profession successfully in Cincinnati, and, without engaging very closely in politics, made a careful study of history and statesmanship. When the war for the Union opened he refused a commission until he had mastered the taetics, but having accomplished this he was made successively major, heutenant colonel, colonel, and brigadier general. He saw severe fighting and kept to his post steadily until the war closed. He was chosen representative to Congress during the last year of the war, and, without being prominent on the floor, was an indefatigable In 1867 he was nominated for governor of Ohio, and held the office two terms. Again in 1875 he was elected after an exciting campaign, and his ability and popularity made him a conspicuous candidate for the presidency in 1876.

In the hot struggle between the supporters of Grant and Blaine in the Republican Convention of 1876, Hayes was put up as a compromise candidate and duly nonlinated against Samuel J. Tiden, who was nominated by the Democrats. The election was closely contested, and after its close the country was kept in suspense by uncertainty as to the result, both parties claiming the votes of certain States. This dispute was settled only by an agreement to refer the decision to an Electoral Commission created by Congress, consisting of five senators, five representatives, and five justices of the Supreme Court. cisions of this body, by a vote of eight to seven, gave the election to Mr. Hayes, on March 2, 1877, declar-ing that he had received 185 electoral votes to 184 received by Alr. Tilden, but his title was bitterly challenged throughout his term of office by many persons who considered the decision of the Electoral Commission unjust. He announced at once his determination to secure if possible a fair opportunity for the people of the South to demonstrate the sincerity of their professions of concord, and withdrew the miliof their professions of concord, and windere the inner tary forces by which alone Republican governors in Louisiana and South Carolina could maintain their office and authority. In this course he went through a running fight with Congress over riders attached to appropriation bills intended to prevent the carrying out of the coercive acts. Personally upright and sincerely desirous to purify the administration of the government from abuses, he was handleapped in his best endeavors by the manner of his election. He died January 17, 1893.

JAMES ABRAM GARFIELD.

James Abram Garfield, twentieth president, had before his election long been identified with the public service, and was widely known in the country. Born November 19, 1831, in Orange, Ohio, he was obliged to struggle with poverty in his early years; but he had an unconquerable thirst for knowledge, and, in spite of all obstacles, secured a preparation for Williams College, from which he was graduated in 1856. He chose teaching for his profession, but was sent to the Ohio Senate in 1859, and when the war broke out he enlisted and was rapidly promoted to the rank of major general.

In the autumn of 1862 he was elected to Congress from the nineteenth Ohie district, and served by repeated reëlections until, near the close of the Hayes administration, he was chosen United States senator. Before he could take his place, however, he was nominated and elected president. He entered upon the office to which he had been elected, March 4, 1881. The early days of his administration revealed a rift in the Republican party. Senator Conkling of New York fought the President over appointments. Before Garfield was fairly embarked in the office of president he was shot and mortally wounded on the second of July in a railway station in Washington by a disappointed office seeker. His death, which oc-curred at Elberon, New Jersey, did not follow, however, until September 19, 1881. His long sickness was borne with a courage and serene patience which exalted him in the eyes of the people.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

(STEPHEN) GROVER CLEVELAND, twenty-second and twenty-fourth president, was born on March 18, 1837, in Caldwell, New Jersey. By the death of his father, who was a country minister in New York State, he was thrown on his own resources at the age of six-in a lawyer's office. He was admitted to the bar in 1859. In 1870 he was elected sheriff of Erie County, but resumed the practice of law after serving his term of three years. In 1881 he was elected mayor of Buffalo, and the next year was chosen by a very large majority governor of New York. He discharged the duties of those offices with eminent success. Representing the reform element in politics, he was nomi nated in 1884 for the presidency by the National Democratic Convention. The Republicans named James G. Blaine, who had been secretary of state under President Garfield and a prominent candidate for the nomination at the two preceding conventions Mr. Cleveland was elected president after a close and angry contest.

As president, Cleveland showed the qualities of courage and capacity. He carried the Civil Service Act further forward. He made himself chieftain of the Democratic party

Near the close of his administration Mr. Cleveland made a strong appeal to Congress and through Congress to the people, to provide for the extinction of a large surplus in the Treasury, and to prevent the accumulation of such a surplus, by a corresponding reduction in the imposition of duties on imports. The Democratic party renominated Cleveland, but he was defeated, and the Republican candidates, Harrison and Morton, were chosen.

Mr. Cleveland returned to the practice of law, this time in New York City. In the presidential campaign of 1892 he was nominated again, against the protests of Tammany Democracy. Harrison was renominated against him.

The issue in this campaign turned largely upon the question of maintaining a high protective tariff. The Democratic party was successful, and Mr. Cleveland was elected.

Mr. Cleveland was elected.

Early in his second administration he called a special session of Congress for the purpose of securing legislation which should repeal that portion of the Sherman Act of 1890 relating to the compulsory purchase of silver. The policy of tariff reduction was embodied in the Wilson Bill, which was passed by the Hunes but was a materially altered in the by the House, but was so materially altered in the Senate in the direction of higher protection that President Cleveland declared it a betrayal of party pledges and reluctantly allowed it to become a law without his signature. The President maintained the redemption of all government obligations in gold sanctioned large issues of boods to procure funds for this purpose. His most striking act was his message to Congress in December, 1895, strongly asserting the Mouroe Doctrine and making the United States an active party in the houndary dispute between Greaf Britain and Venezuela.

In addition to a protective tariff, Mr. Harrison favored subsidies in aid of ocean shipping, federal intervention to secure to the colored citizens of the South the free exercise of the right to vote, justice to the Indians, reform of the civil service, a great enlargement of the pension list, and international arbitration. During the second half of his term Mr. Harrison was hampered by the congressional elections of 1890, which made the House of Representatives Democratic. He was re-nominated in the presidential campaign of 1892, but lost the election. In 1893 he resumed the practice of law at Indianapolis. Throughout his public and private life he was conrageous and conscientious, and, although deficient in the arts and traits that make men popular, possessed the respect and esteem of the American people. ### WILLIAM McKINLEY.

William McKinley, twenty-fifth president, was born at Niles, Trimbull County, Ohio, January 29, 1843. He studied at Union Seminary, Poland, Ohio, and later, for a short time, at Allegheny College, Meadville, Pennsylvania. At the outbreak of the Civil War he culisted at the age of eighteen as a private soldier in the Twenty-third Ohio, and rose through the several grades until, on July 25, 1864, he was brevetted major by President Lincoln for gallant and meritorious services

At the close of the war he returned to Ohio, studied law, and began the practice of his profession at Canton, Stark County. He was a member of Congress from 1877 until 1891, became chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, when, in 1890, the tariff bill that bears his name was framed and passed. At that time he showed the personal grace and magnetism and the ability to bring individuals into harmonious service together for a common purpose which made him a national figure. His district was gerrymandered so as to throw him out of Congress in the election of 1890, but he was at once taken up as the Republican candidate for the governorship of Ohio, and was elected in November, 1891. He was reelected. At the Republican National Convention of 1896, he was nominated for the presidency on the first ballot, accepting the gold standard as a party principle. On this issue he was elected in November over the Democratic candidate, William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska. In 1900 he was renominated unanimously, and was reflected, his Democratic opponent again being William Jennings Bryan, but his econd administration was cut short by his death, September 14, 1901.

During the four and a half years that Mr. McKin ley was president, the Wilson Tariff Law, enacted under the preceding administration, was replaced by the Dingley Tariff Law of 1897, a measure highly protective. Decisive action in regard to the cur-rency was delayed by a fruitless effort in behalf of international bimetallism, and by the war with Spain. It was not until 1900 that gold was definitively made the hasts of the currency.

The policy of McKinley which seems likely to influence the welfare of the United States most deeply is that of over-sea territorial annexations. The Hawaiian Islands and other small Pacific islands were brought in and as a result of the Spanish War of 1898, came the annexation of Porto Rico, the Philippines, and Guam. The grave constitutional questions involved were settled by the Insular decisions of the Supreme Court (1901) in a way that sustained the general policy of the government.

A second important result of the war with Spain was the responsibility incurred by the United States toward Cuba. The United States established a temporary protectorate, and reorganized Cuba ac-cording to American ideas. The part taken by the United States in the troubles with China, occasioned by the Boxer ontbreak, was dignified and effective.

At home the period of McKinley's presidency was marked by economic prosperity and the subsidence of sectional feeling. September 5, 1901, at the Buffalo Pan-American Exposition President McKinaccordance with the recommendations of Mr. Har-ley made his last public address, a noble plea for in-tion.

McKinley was a peacemaker. He carried friendliness into every relation of life, public as well as private. He healed party feuds, softened the asperities of party warfare, and assuaged sectional ani-mosities. His spirit toward other peoples is best told in the following words taken from the Buffalo address: "God and man have linked the nations to-No nation can longer be indifferent to any other. And as we are brought more and more in touch with each other, the less occasion is there for misunderstandings, and the stronger the disposition, when we have differences, to adjust them in the court of arbitration.... Let us ever remember that our interest is in concord, not conflict.... Our earnest prayer is that God will graciously vouchsafe prosperity, happiness, and peace to all our neighbors, and like blessings to all peoples and powers of earth."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Theodore Roosevelt, twenty-sixth president, was born in New York on October 27, 1858, of a mixed Dutch, English, French, Scotch, and Irish descent. His mother was a Southerner. As a boy he was not strong, but was fond of outdoor life. He graduated from Harvard College in 1880. In 1881 he was elected to the legislature of New York, in which he served three years. In 1884 he was a delegate to the National Republican Convention. A party man, he supported the nominee of the convention, Mr. Blaine, whose nomination he did not favor. Shortly ifterward he engaged in cattle raising on a ranch in Returning to the East, he was in North Dakota. 1886 unsuccessful candidate for mayor of New York. He was member of the Civil Service Commission (1889-95) and president of the New York Police Board (1895–97), in both positions showing himself courageous and efficient.

Assistant secretary of the navy in 1897, he aided much in preparing our navy for the impending war with Spain. A year later he resigned to help raise the regiment of the "Rough Riders," of which he was at first lieutenant colonel and later colonel, and at the head of which he rendered distinguished service in Cuba. His gallantry at San Juan called public attention to him, and the Republican leaders in New York were compelled to nominate him for governor in 1898. He showed himself such a vigorous and independent executive that the same leaders insisted that he be nominated for vice president in 1900, so as to put him on the shelf. Against his will he accepted and was elected with McKinley. The death of McKinley raised him to the presidency. He took the oath of office on September 14, 1901

When about to assume his duties as president, Mr. Roosevelt said, "It shall be my aim to continue, about the said, "It shall be my aim to continue, about the said of the said to the said solutely unbroken, the policies of President McKin-ley for the peace, the prosperity, and the honor of our beloved country." In his first annual message to Congress he indicated what later proved the main features in his policy: He recommended that the civil and military services be brought to the highest possible efficiency, that the Mouroe Doctrine be maintained, that the trusts be regulated rather than suppressed, that labor and capital have fair play, that works of irrigation be advanced, and that a transisthmian canal be constructed as quickly as possible.

In 1904 there was no opposing candidate in the Republican Convention; and in the election Roosevelt easily defeated Judge Alton B. Parker, the Democratic candidate. It was the first time that a man who had succeeded to the presidency through the death of the president was himself subsequently elected by the people to that office.

No other president was equipped for the discharge of his official duties with such an expansions of the control of the

of his official duties with such an exhaustless store of vigor and vitality. No other president ever developed such energy and activity. Familiar through his constant travels with all parts of the country, he appreciated the circumstances and necessities of each Some of the trusts he eaused to be prosecuted; he made an effort to regulate the railroads and to protect employees against aeeident; he encouraged the effort to develop the internal ways and to preserve and increase the natural resources of the naof Panama, and the piercing of the 1sthmus was soon vigorously undertaken. As long as the Panama Canal endures, it may be considered his monu-

The appropriate conclusion of Mr. Roosevelt's presidency was the globe-encircling cruise of the battleship fleet in 1908, affording practical solution of many naval problems and proclaiming, wherever it went, the majesty of the Republic and its friendliness to all.

In addition to the responsibilities of his office there was hardly a matter of national or humanita-rian interest or even of international concern with which he did not deal. Thus he was instrumental in terminating the coal strike of 1902 through the medium of a commission, the findings of which have had lasting weight in similar labor disputes. He took the initiative in hringing about a treaty of peace between Russia and Japan in 1905.

In 1908 Mr. Roosevelt refused the solicitations of his party, which wished to force a renomination upon him, and used all his influence for his friend and secretary of war, William Howard Taft

Shortly after leaving the White House Mr. Roosevelt headed the Smithsonian African Expedition, devoting nearly a year to the hunt in Africa and obtaining an exceedingly rich collection of African fauna. On his way homeward he delivered ad-dresses before many famous societies and universities of Continental Europe and Great Britain. received a tremendous demonstration on his arrival at New York in June, 1910.

Roosevelt was an author of versatility. He was a tireless speaker and writer. In his numerous lectures and addresses there are few subjects of moment on which he has not spoken. In 1910 he took active part in the Republican State campaign in New York; and in 1912, having become convinced that a second Taft administration was not for the best interests of the country, he attempted to se cure the Republican nomination. When he was defeated he put himself at the head of a new National Progressive party. He received over 4,000,000 votes and SS electoral votes to the Republicans' ,000,000 votes and S electoral votes, but Woodrow Wilson was elected. ### WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT.

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT, twenty-seventh president was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, ou September 15, 1857. His father, Judge Alphonso Taft, was secretary of war and attorney-general in the cabinet of President Grant. Mr. Taft graduated from Yale in 1878, being class orator and salutatorian, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1880. He was indge of the Superior Court in Ohio, 1887-90, solicitor-general of the United States, 1890-92, and United States circuit judge, 6th Circuit, 1892-1900. He

From Islands, July 4, 1901, to February 1, 1904. In 1902, by direction of President Roosevelt, he went to Rome to confer with Pope Leo XIII., concerning the purchase of the agricultural lands of the religious orders in the Philippines. On February I, 1904, he became secretary of war.

In 1906 he was sent by the President to quiet the troubles In Cuba, and for a time acted as provisional governor of the island. In March and April, 1907, he visited Panama, Cuba, and Porto Rico by direction of the President to remove various difficulties. Later in the year he visited the Philippines and Japan, returning to America via Russia.

He was nominated for the presidency on the first ballot by the Republican National Convention at Chicago on June 18, 1908. His Democratic antagonist was William Jennings Bryan, leader of his party for the third time. The campaign was one of great activity. Both Taft and Bryan participated vigor-ously, each delivering several hundred speeches. At the election Taft was successful by comfortable majorities.

During the four years of his administration the country enjoyed general prosperity. There was no financial panic. Work was pushed on the Panama Canal. Some of the larger trusts were vigorously prosecuted. Many judicial appointments of a high order were made. Discretion was shown in dealing with the complicated questions arising from the distracted condition of the Republic of Mexico.

The Payne-Aldrich Tariff Bill, which he signed although it had been supposed he did not approve of it, and the reciprocity agreement with Canada, passed by Congress in a special session but afterwards rejected by Canada, greatly affected his popularity Quarrels between members of his cabinet and their inferior officers, together with frequent insubordination which he was slow to suppress, further damaged his prestige.

Meanwhile the Republican party was splitting into two hostile camps, the reactionaries or "stand-patters" and the insurgents or progressives. Casting his let with the former, Taft's candidacy for a second presidential term was hotly opposed by the latter, who found an exponent and leader in Mr. Roosevelt. Their attacks on Mr. Taft and his administration finally induced the President to enter the campaign in person. The Republican National Convention by a small majority nominated Taft. Shortly afterby a small majority nonlinated tait. Shortly after-ward Mr. Roosevelt was nonlinated by the newly constituted National Progressive party. The result of the election was the choice of the Democratic candidate, Governor Wilson, of New Jersey. Shortly before relinquishing office, Mr. Taft was tendered and accepted an appointment as Kent Professor of Law in Yale University. His influence, however, was not confined merely to academic cles. He was in great demand as a public speaker and through his addresses as well as the genial dignity he displayed did much to regain his popularity. During the World War he was one of the joint chairmen of the National War Labor Board which did much to prevent friction between labor and capital, was also president of the League to Enforce Peace, and advocated the ratification of the Peace Treaty with the League of Nations.

During his administration at Princeton, Mr Wilson became widely known throughout the country from his writings and lectures on political and social questions. He is the author of many books on historical, literary, and governmental subjects, among which may be mentioned: Congressional Government, The State, Division and Reunion, An Old Moster and Other Political Essays, Mere Literature, George Washington, A History of the American Peo-ple, Free Life, The New Freedom.

In 1910 he was elected governor of New Jersey, the only successful candidate on the Democratic State ticket. In office he displayed wisdom and firmness in meeting the difficult political and industrial problems of the State and soon became a national figure, identified with the cause of popular rights and practical reform.

At the Democratic National Convention, held at Baltimore in 1912, he was nominated for the presidency on the 46th ballot through the influence of W. J. Bryan. He took an active part in the campaign, showing himself chivalrons to his opponents, though critical of their principles and methods, and always mindful of the dignity of the office he was seeking. The election showed that the Rep can party was split into two fairly equal parts. The election showed that the Republi-Although the combined popular vote for Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt exceeded that for Mr. Wilson by 1,410,682 and Mr. Wilson received a smaller popular vote (6,298,857) than was cast for Mr. Bryan in 1908 (6,328,601), Wilson was elected by a greater electoral vote (435) than was cast for President Taft in 1908 (321). Renominated in 1916, he was elected by a plurality of 23 electoral votes and by a plurality of nearly 600,000 popular votes over his nearest competitor, Hughes.

His service as president may be divided into three periods. During his first administration the Democratic party was united and followed his leadership almost unhesitatingly. In these years great constructive measures were passed: The tariff was revised; the Federal Reserve Bank established; the Federal Trade Commission established; and the antilaws revised.

With the outbreak of the World War a new issue arose and the difficulties of his position were multi-He was attacked and criticized because of his stand on neutrality and his hesitancy to stimulate military and naval preparedness. Nevertheless, he kept the confidence of the great majority of the people, was reëlected and led a united country into the war. Although bitterly criticized on the score of many of his appointments and the methods of his subordinates, the government under his direction accomplished in the material, military, and naval spheres the task it had set itself and did much to bring the war to a victorious close.

The third period begins with the congressional elections of 1918, which returned a Republican Senate and Congress. The difficulties were increased by the fact that from December, 1918, until July, 1919, with the exception of a short interval in March, 1919, President Wilson was abroad negotiating the treaty Even before the entrance of the United States into the war the President had announced that he would nrge the United States to enter a federation to guarantee the peace of the world. The Treaty of Versailles, which terminated the war, included the covenant for the League of Nations. On his return to the United States he submitted the treaty to the Senate, only to find it subject to the severest criticism and acrimonious debate. In September, 1919, he made an extended tour through the West, hoping to rouse public opinion in favor of the treaty and the League of Nations. This proved too much for his strength and he was overcome by a paralytic shock from which his partial recovery was extremely slow.

During the last year of President Wilson's administration, the predominant issue was the ratification of the Peace Treaty with Covenant of the League of Nations. At first the President refused to admit any reservations whatsoever, but finally accepted those proposed by Senator Hitchcock Senator Lodge, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, insisted on the adoption of reservations which President Wilson felt he could not accept, and the treaty was finally rejected by the Senate, March 19, 1920.

Perhans a more compelling reason was to be found in the fact that Secretary Lansing was initiating a policy concerning Mexico, which was not in accord with the President's desire.

President Wilson took no part in the presidential campaign. He neither publicly favored any partic-

President Wilson regained sufficient strength to preside in person over several cabinet meetings and to accompany President-elect Harding to the capital, although he was unable to witness his successor's inauguration

WARREN GAMALIEL HARDING.

Warren Gamaliel Harding, the twenty-ninth president, was born just outside the village of Blooming Grove, Morrow County, Ohio, November 2, 1865. His father, Dr. George T. Harding, the village physician, was of old colonial stock. The Hardings, originally from Scotland, first settled in Connecticut and later moved to Wyoming Valley, Pennsylvania, where some of them perished in the terrible Wyoming massacre. Some members of the family fought in the American Revolution. ident Harding's mother was Pheebe Dickerson, a descendant of a Holland-Dutch family, the Van

Although the father was a physician, the Harding family was busy developing their land, and Warren Harding, the oldest of eight children, spent his early life as a farmer's boy. He attended the village school until he was fourteen, and then entered Ohio Central College, of Iberia, from which he was grad-uated with high honors. While there, he was editor of the college paper, thus first showing his interest in journalism. After leaving college at seventeen, he taught school for a year; and during the next year he studied law, supporting himself by selling insurance and doing odd jobs. When he was nine-teen, his father, Dr. Harding, moved to Marion, Ohio, the county seat, and young Harding obtained a job on a democratic paper. He filled all positions from printer's devil to editorial writer. As a result of an editorial praising James G. Blaine, he forced to sever connections with the paper. Aided by his father and his former employer, he purchased The Star, then a struggling paper of Marion, almost on the verge of bankruptey. Warren Harding threw his energy into the development of this paper, making lished upon a firm basis, he organized a stock company and distributed shares to his employees, allowing the dividends to count towards their purchase money until one fourth of the capital stock was owned by them. The paper has always been operated on the union basis and has never had any labor difficulties or strikes.

In the conduct of his paper, President Harding was always sanguine, urging the establishment new industries and enterprises in the town and county. Being always a generous subscriber to these enterprises, he thus came to serve on many boards of directors and was highly regarded for his business sagacity.

In 1899, he was chosen State senator from the thirteenth senatorial district and served two terms in the Ohio legislature. In the State Senate, he became floor leader, and was active in his support of United States Senator Foraker. port of United States Senator Forager. He served as lieutenant governor 1904-1906. He was nominated by the Republicans for governor of Ohio, but was defeated by a Democrat, Judson Harmon, in 1910. In State politics he was a consistent organization man, and hence advocated the remomination of ex-President Taft in 1912. He was chosen to present Taft's name at the Republican convention at Chicago. In 1916, he was chairman of the Republican convention and was suggested as a possible candidate for nonhation. In 1914, he was elected to the United States Senate by a plurality of more than 100,000.

In the Senate he served on many important committees. He was chairman of the committee on the Philippines and a member of the following committees: Commerce; Expenditures in the ury Department; Foreign Relations; Pac lands, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands; Public Health and National Quarantine; Standards, Weights, and Measures; and Territories. During the War World he was a strong advocate of pre-paredness, and never hesitated to support the extension of the power of the President in war time. With the coming of peace, however, he found himself in sharp disagreement with President Wilson's pol-icy. He was always an opponent of the League of Nations and was one of the signers of the "Round Robin," by which certain senators notified the world that they would not ratify the Treaty embodying the Covenant of the League of Nations. supported the reservations submitted by Senator Lodge, although more inclined to side with those who were opposed to the ratification of the Treaty in any He also supported Senator Knov's resolution declaring the war with Germany at an end; and Senator Reed's reservation that the United States was to be the sole judge as to whether matters in which she was interested should be submitted to the League. He finally voted against the Treaty assubmitted by President Wilson His attitude on prohibition is seen by his vote for the Eighteenth Amendment and his support of the Volstead Act With regard to labor and railroads, he voted to support the Esch-Cummins Bill with the anti-strike In a letter to an Ohio labor union, he defended his course in these words: "If the government, representing all the people, cannot guarantee transportation under any and all conditions, it ular candidate to succeed himself, nor did he actively aid Governor Cox in his campaign. After the election of November 2, President Wilson gradually throughout the State. When The Star became established throughout the State. When The Star became established throughout the state. ating the transportation system, it fails again. onght to and it must do both."

the pre-convention campaign of 1920, Senator Harding was not one of the leaders. In fact, during the early balloting of the convention, he ranked fourth. On the eighth ballot, however, he showed an increase of strength and on the ninth ballot he received 374½ votes, the highest of any candidate. The tenth ballot gave him 692½ votes, 200 more than was necessary for the choice.

The Republican campaign of 1920 was in many ways similar to that of 1896. President Harding seldom left his home at Marion, but conducted what is popularly known as a "front-porch" campaign. Various delegations from all parts of tho country, representing most varied occupations, came to Marion and were addressed by him. The Republican campaign manager, Will II. Hays, proved an extremely able harmonizer and succeeded preventing any open dissatisfaction in the Re-blican party. The election, November 2, 1920, publican party. The election, November 2, 1920, resulted in an overwhelming victory for the Republicans. Senator Harding received 16,140,585 popular votes and 404 electoral votes.

In his inaugural address, President Harding declared that the United States could have no part in any super-government. He advocated an association of nations for foreign mediation and conciliation. He urged the protection of American ciliation. He urged the protection of American Industry, and reconstruction and readjustment from war conditions. His cablnet appointments included Charles Evans Hughes, former Justice of the Supreme Court, and presidential candidate 1916, as Secretary of State; Senator Albert B. Fall of New Mexico, as Secretary of the Interior, and Herbert C. Hoover, of California, as Secretary of Commerce. President Harding adopted the innovation of inviting the vice-president to meet innovation of inviting the vice-president to meet with the cabinet.

A special session of Congress was summoned April 12, 1921, to which President Harding, following the precedent set by President Wilson, presented his message In person. In his address, President Harding declared that in the existence of the League of Nations, the United States could have no part. He advocated an international association for justice unconnected with the Treaty settlement and favored a declaration of peace by Congressional resolution. In domestic affairs, he advocated the repeal of the excess-profits taxes, the passage of an emergency tariff bill to protect the farmers, pending the permanent revision of the tariff. He opposed government ownership of the railroads, but advocated a congressional investigation.

President Harding was married in 1891 to Florence Kling, daughter of Amos Kling, of Marion.

COMPARATIVE SIZE OF THE UNITED STATES AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

(Scale, 100 miles to 1 inch.)

The squares of which the left-hand lower corners coincide, and which are inclosed by solid lines, indicate the areas of the several States. Those arranged on the right of the diagram and bounded by broken lines, indicate the areas of foreign countries, and are inserted for the sake of comparison. Where two States are of nearly equal area they are of necessity represented by a single square, e. g., South Dakota and Nebraska; also Vermont and New Hampshire; etc. The areas of the several States, as given in the following table, are land areas from the computations of the Geographer of the United States Census.

INDEX

TO THE

REFERENCE HISTORY OF THE WORLD.

The Table of Contents and the Preface, preceding the History, should be read in order quickly to comprehend the plan and scope of the History and to make full use of it. The aim in this INOEX has been to cover all important references to periods, events, places, persons, and the like, each under its specific name. Events are given under the names of the places where they occurred. Thus, battle of Actium is under ACTIUM, Congress of Berlin, under Berlin, Treaty of Versailles, under Versailles, etc. Besides this specific indexing, much of the information is otherwise indexed under topics, as Aviation, Prohibition, Socialism, Woman Sufrage, so that the whole forms a topical analysis as well asindex. In the case of all countries of any importance the index shows, under the name of the country, its organization, including government, religion, industry and labor, education, defense, etc., and its chronology; and in addition are listed all other places where the country, or events or persons important in its history, are treated in the histories of other countries or periods. These "other references" are especially useful in the chronology do not, of course, need to be indexed in dearly modern periods down to the time when Its individual chronology begins, after which time the events contained in this chronology do not, of course, need to be indexed in detail under that country. All of the items under a country's name or under a topic are arranged both chronologically and alphabetically, as in the History itself.

Besides the direct references from one country or section of the History to another, cross references have been freely used, as in the History, to link the treatments together or suggest phases of a question that may not at first be evideat. It is bould be remembered in this connection that many names of the important events, personages, and places mentioned in the History will also be found in the main vocabulary of the Dictionary, the Biographical section, or the Gazetteer, to which further reference may be made.

EXPLANATIONS: Reference numbers, as 16a, 16f, indicate page and column location of the item in the History. The numeral shows the page; the letter shows the column and also whether the upper or lower half of the column is meant, "a" indicating the upper half of the first column, "b" the lower half of the first column, "c" the upper half of the second column, "d" the lower half, "e" the upper half of the third column, and "f" the lower half, "e" the upper half of the third column, and "f" the lower half. This simple method of referring directly to the different parts of a page is shown by the accompanying diagram. Where several references to aname or event are to the same half column in the History, semicolons separate the distinct items, and the page and column reference is given after the last item only.

Abbreviations have been freely used in the index, care being taken to use only such as are well established or obvious, Such abbreviations have been freely used in the index, care being taken to use only such as are well established or obvious, "French", "Germany", "Germans", "Ger

In the first place I should like to express my satisfaction at the extremely convenient form and arrangement of

examining it with reference to its treatment of philosophical terms, and have found a completeness and exactness in this matter which is, so far as I know, quite unparalleled in general diction-

YALE UNIVERSITY, New Haven, Conn. Charles C. Torrey, Ph. D., D.D., Professor of the Semitic Languages.

I can only express the strongest admiration for the range, accuracy, and supplied regarding the sources, preparaconciseness of the etymologies and tion, properties, chemical relationships definitions in this Dictionary, in the and uses of an astonishingly large number field where my chief interest lies. No of substances, combine to make the work other of the smaller dictionaries of the of positive value alike to the novice and conciseness and convenience.

English language can compare with it to the advanced student. in these respects. The work of revising has plainly been done with great care by specialists.

E. P. Morris, Litt. D., Professor of the Latin Language and Literature.

Then I looked for the terms of grammar, which is also a bobby of mine. I happened first upon parataxis, about the definition of which I have been obliged to differ with some of my philological friends, and lo! there was my own definition! You will understand that I am now ready to vouch for your accuracy from cover to cover.

Webster's New International Dictionary is a small encyclopedia, covering the entire territory of the world's knowledge and the world's action. The horizontal division of the page is a feature which attracts instant attention and produces very valuable results. The mechanical execution seems faultless.

HAMILTON COLLEGE,

The type and arrangement are ideal. The type and arrangement are ideal. The discriminating hospitality shown to newer words reflects the elasticity and persistent growth of our verbal riches. The expansion of this volume is a distinct increase of our knowledge. It is a triumphant indispensability.

The type and arrangement are ideal.

It was a happy thought to divide the page, placing the more usual words in the upper part, and the less familiar words in the lower part. The New International, as a whole, is evidently thoroughly up to date, and embodies the results of the latest, developments, in science.

Fred Neher, A. M.; Professor of Chemistry.

It was distinctly a surprise to find the new "Webster" actually supplying, in fairly full measures, what for some years has been one of chemical literature's greatest needs, the lack of a modern encyclopedic dictionary of the science. Clear definitions of terms, lucid statements of laws and theories, brief but accurate and up-to-date information supplied regarding the sources, preparapleteness in yocabulary, sound linguistic

What impresses me most, is the change wrought by the horizontal division of the page and the relegation to the bottom of the obsolete and unusual words. It at once facilitates reference to the ordinary vocabulary and it is quite as easy to find the obsolete, unusual words when grouped together as they are here.

COMBINES ADVANTAGES OF DICTIONARY AND ENCYCLOPEDIA.

The New International combines more successfully than any other contemporary work the leading features of both a Frances word book and an encyclopedia. Frances G. Richard, Ass't Professor of English, Miami University, Oxford, Ohio.

FACTS AND DATES OF ALL HISTORY MADE READILY AVAILABLE.

I have had the Century Dictionary for several years, but I prefer the New International to all others, not only because it is thoroughly reliable but also because it is new and especially convenient for use. The New International Dictionary is used in the schools of Portland. This is in the schools of Portland. evidence that in this city the book is highly appreciated. I especially recommend the edition with Reference History as the important facts and dates in all history can be so readily and certainly obtained. T. T. Davis, Principal Lincoln High School, Portland, Ore.

THE REFERENCE HISTORY A STRIK-ING FEATURE.

On examination, I am impressed with the scholarship, accuracy, clearness and exhaustiveness of the work.

The new plan of page division, the Reference History of the World, and the treatment of new words and of old words which have gained new uses and new meanings are striking features. A. Burnett Rhett, M.A., Supt. Public Schools, Charleston, S. C.

HISTORY MADE READILY ACCES-SIBLE TO ALL READERS.

During the past two years, I have used your Reference History Edition of Webster's International Dictionary, and in accuracy, convenience of arrangement, and comprehensiveness, believe it to be without a peer in any language. The appendix contains a compendium of the most important and interesting events of ancient and modern history, making it readily accessible to all classes of readers. G. T. Surface, M. #### A DICTIONARY AND ENCYCLOPEDIA.

It might well be called a Dictionary and Encyclopedia.

In my opinion no single book has ever been published which should prove to be so comprehensively instructive in the school, in the library, in the office, and in the homes of all classes, as Webster's New International Dictionary, Reference History Edition. James L. Hughes, Ex-Chief Inspector, The Board of Education, Toronto.

MOST RELIABLE WORKING TOOL.

To my mind the New International more nearly represents the usage of the best educated people throughout the English-speaking world than any other book. Rello A. Tallcott, A.B., Instructor, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio.

HANCES THE VALUE.

I have tested Webster's New International in a number of places and for a variety of reasons and have always found it entirely satisfactory.

The Reference History feature of the book will greatly enhance the value of the Dictionary as a book of ready reference. W. O. Thompson, Pres. Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio.

COMBINES ADVANTAGES OF DIC-TIONARY AND ENCYCLOPEDIA.

The Reference, or Encyclopedic, Department is a valuable addition found in the New International. This combines the excellence of the Dictionary with that of the Encyclopedia. The Historical Reference brings to the general reader, to the student, and to the teacher, a wide scope of knowledge. Hiram R. Wilson, Orio Prof. of English, Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio.

INVALUABLE TO THE SCHOLAR AND THE STUDENT.

I desire to commend in the highest terms the Reference History Edition of Webster's New International Dictionary.

This Edition Excels

As a Reference Library.

It answers questions in all departments of knowledge, including History, Biography, Geography, Fiction, Foreign Words and Phrases, etc.

The work is invaluable to the scholar and the student. Every intelligent father and mother, able to purchase it, should place it upon the center table of the sitting room for frequent use by the boys and girls of the family.

I wish every child in Atlanta had a copy of the book. Wm. M. Slaton, Supt. of Schools, Atlanta, Ga.

REFERENCE HISTORY GREATLY EN-HANCES THE VALUE OF THE WORK.

The value of the Reference History is greatly enhanced by an index referring to greatly enhanced by an index referring to all persons, places, events, and periods treated in the work. For a public speaker, who frequently is called upon to verify historical allusions, the historical section is one of the most useful portions of the New International. James A. Kelso, Ph. D., D. D., Pres. of the Western Theological Seminary, North Side, Pittsburgh, Pa.

APPROVES THE SUPERIOR WORK.

The New International Dictionary is much superior to the International. I note with pleasure the improvement in defini-It is a very fine piece of bookmaking; the print is excellent, and the paper is exceptionally good in that it is both thin and strong. I express my approval of the work. Luther L. Wright, Mich. State Supt. of Public Instruction, Lansing.

REFERENCE HISTORY GREATLY EN- SUPERIOR WEARING QUALITY OF BINDING.

Among the features which make this dictionary particularly desirable for general use in schools, libraries, and homes, is:

The comprehensiveness of its vocabulary; its encyclopedic features; its valuable supplementary matter, of which the Reference History is the most important part.

2. The general physical make-up of the book which is far superior to anything yet offered in a general dictionary com-prised in a single volume; the paper which is thinner but of a stronger quality than that used in former editions of Webster's Dictionary; the binding of Full American Russia Leather, which has wearing qualities that have proven better than those of the Full Sheep binding found on the trade edition of this Dictionary. Julia H. Gulli-ver, Ph.D., LL.D., Pres. Rockford College, Rockford, Ill.

GREAT REFERENCE LIBRARY.

The public is familiar with Webster's Dictionaries, but one must see the New Edition with the Reference History of the World to appreciate what a really great reference library this work has become.

The Reference History Department has added so much that this work will take the place of many other Reference books. No student, no family should be without it. John W. Zeller, Ohio State School Commissioner, Columbus.

THE MOST USEFUL WORK.

Of all English Dictionaries, for general use, Webster's New International holds the lead. For many reasons we find it the most useful work of its kind on our reference shelves. It retains the valuable and attractive features of former editions. surpasses all previous editions and is in every way worthy of this new century.
C. B. Galbreath, Librarian, Ohio State Library, Columbus.

NEEDED BY EVERY LIBRARY AND HOUSEHOLD.

The New International with Reference History is the kind of book which the largest as well as the smallest library must contain and every household needs as a part of its equipment for culture. I know of no other reference work which compares with it for extent, combined with compactness, accuracy, and usefulness. W. E. Stone, LL.D., Pres. Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind.

AN ENCYCLOPEDIA.

The New International is not a dictionary but an encyclopedia; it is more than an encyclopedia, it is a history; and to the element of exact history it adds the charm of romance. Surely the art of dictionary making has reached its climax. After this all others must be imitators. Here is the history of the World reduced to microscopic dimensions, and yet, for the purposes of the student and man of affairs, it is sufficiently full. Rev. Philip Stafford Moxom, Springfield, Mass.

REFERENCE HISTORY OF THE WORLD.

What is the origin, history, orthography, pronunciation and meaning of any given word? What are the facts concerning any important person,—ancient or modern?

What is the orthography, local pronunciation, etc., of countries, cities, towns, mountains, rivers,

What is the origin, history, meaning, etc., of any noted fictitious person or place?

What are the names of the Presidents of the United States, and when did they hold office?

What is the order in which the States were admitted to the Union?

What are the leading events in the history of the United States for the past year?

What is the comparative size of the United States and foreign countries?

What is the area, population, capital, annual revenue, etc., of foreign nations?

When and by what treaty were the Philippines ceded to the United States?

What States were made from the Louisiana Purchase? What is the relation of the United States to Samoa?

What was the Missouri compromise?

When and where was the first naval battle?

Who was Charlemagne and when did he reign?

These and the thousands of other questions which are constantly arising can be most easily and satisfactorily answered by consulting

THE REFERENCE HISTORY EDITION OF WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

WHY

WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL CAN RIGHTFULLY BE CALLED THE STANDARD DICTIONARY FOR THE ENGLISH-SPEAKING WORLD.

BECAUSE it is used as the standard by nearly all of the Federal and State Courts, where justice often bangs on the meaning of a word.

BECAUSE it is the standard in the United States Government Printing Office at Washington, and in the Executive Departments generally.

BECAUSE the Schoolbooks of the country are based upon it,-25,000,000 or more annually, -so that the children are educated in accordance with its principles. BECAUSE in every instance where State purchases have been made for the supply of public schools, Webster has been selected. BECAUSE it is heartily recommended by Presidents of Universities, Colleges, and Seminaries, and by Superintendents of Schools, almost without number.

BECAUSE it is warmly indorsed and commended by men and women of recognized authority in matters of literature, and science, all over the world.

BECAUSE it is used as the standard by a vast majority of the newspapers. Thousands of statements to this effect are on file with the publishers. BECAUSE of its adoption by the English Government as the standard in the Postal Telegraph Department of the United Kingdom,—the only department requiring an absolute standard.

BECAUSE it is accepted by the Government as the standard for telegraphic messages throughout the Australian Com-

BECAUSE its sale in Canada and other English Colonies is largely in excess of the sale of all other dictionaries of similar scope.

BECAUSE of its very wide diffusion on the Continent of Europe, in Turkey, India, Australia, South Africa, China, Japan,

BECAUSE it has wider acceptance and is more generally adopted in actual use as a standard authority than any other lexicon in the world.

WHY

WEBSTER'S NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY IS THE BEST FOR TEACHERS, SCHOOLS, AND FAMILIES.

BECAUSE it is easy to find the word wanted.

Words are given their correct alphabetical places in the vocabulary, each one beginning a paragraph so as to be readily caught by the eye. They are not "run in" in the middle of a paragraph or line, out of the natural alphabetical order.

BECAUSE it is easy to ascertain the pronunciation.

The pronunciation is indicated by the ordinary diacritically marked letters used in the schoolbooks of the country, the sounds of which are taught in the public schools.

The International does not use strange and peculiar letters nor indicate the ordinary alphabetical sound of one letter by another quite different letter.

BECAUSE it is easy to trace the growth of a word.

The etymologies are complete and scientific and the different meanings a word has acquired are given in the order of their development.

The etymologies are not scrimped nor are the definitions jumbled together in an illogical order.

BECAUSE it is easy to learn what a word means.

The definitions are clear, explicit, and full; terse, yet comprehensive. They are not composed of technical scientific terms which must themselves be defined before they can be understood.

Each definition is contained in a separate paragraph making it easy to select the one desired. They are not run on one after the other.

BECAUSE the New International is one volume containing the pith and essence of an authoritative library covering every field of the world's thought, action, and culture. It is a constant source of knowledge and interest to all members of the home, a necessity to every business and professional man, and indispensable to the student.

CAUTION! Webster's New International Dictionary and each of the genuine Webster abridgments can be identified by a circular trade-mark (as shown at the right) on the front cover and by our name on the titlepage. Only in this series are to be found the latest and best. BEWARE of unauthorized and unreliable issues of smaller books, also of larger so-called Webster dictionaries not of the genuine Webster series. We have been publishers of the genuine Webster dictionaries for over 70 years.
