Nom.	văyăm, asmē (Vedic)	vaêm	hēmeis	nos	we.
Acc.	asmān, nas	ahma, nô	hēmas	nos	us.
Inst.	ăsmābhis	ehmā	. . .	. . .	by us.
Dat.	ăsmābhyăm, or nas	ahmaibya, ahmāi, nô	hēmin	nobis	to us.
Abl.	ăsmăt	. . .	. . .	. . .	from us.
Gen.	ăsmākăm, or nas	ăhmākĕm	hēmōn	nostrum	of us.
Loc.	ăsmāsu	. . .	hēmin	nobis	in us.

SINGULAR.

Nom.	twăm	tūm	su	tu	thou.
Acc.	twām	thwâm, thwā, tē	se	te	thee.
Inst.	twăyā	thwâ	. . .	. . .	by thee.
Dat.	tubhyam, or tē	taibyō, tōi, tē	soi	tibi	to thee.
Abl.	twăt	thwaṭ	. . .	. . .	from thee.
Gen.	tăvă, tē	tava, tôi, tē	sou	tui . .	of thee.
Loc.	twăyi	thōi	soi	te	in thee.

PLURAL.

Nom.	yūyam, yushmē (Vedic)	yūzhem yūs	humeis	vos	you.
Acc.	yushmān, vas	vāo, vō	humas	vos	you.
Inst.	yusbmābhis	khshmā, vāo	. . .	. . .	by you.
Dat.	yushmabyam, vas	yūsmaibyā, vō	humin	vobis	to you.
Abl.	yushmat	yūshmaṭ	. . .	. . .	from you.
Gen.	yushmākam	yūshmākĕm, vo, vāo	humōn	vestrum	of you.
Loc.	yushmāsu	. . .	humin	vobis	in you.

The following are examples of the similarity as regards the declension of nouns between the four languages in question.

NOUNS MASCULINE, ending in a.

Vṛika, "a wolf."

SINGULAR.

	Sanskrit.	Zend.	Greek.	Latin.
Nom.	vṛikas	vĕhrko	lukos	lupus.
Acc.	vṛikam	vĕhrkem	lukon	lupum.
Inst.	vṛikeṇa	vĕhrkă, vĕhrkā	lukō	lupo.
Dat.	vṛikāya	vĕhrkāi	lukō	lupo.
Abl.	vṛikāt	vĕhrkāṭ	lukō	lupo.
Gen.	vṛikasya	vĕhrkahê	lukou	lupi.
Loc.	vṛikē	vĕhrkê	lukō	lupo.
Voc.	vṛika	vehrkă	luke	lupe.

DUAL.

Nom. Acc. Voc.	vṛikau	vĕhrka	lukō	No dual.
Gen. Loc.	vṛikayōs	vĕhrkayão	lukoin
Inst. Dat. & Abl.	vṛikābhyām	vĕkrkaeibya	lukoin.

PLURAL.

Nom. & Voc.	vṛikās.	vĕhrkâoñhô	lukoi	lupî.
Acc.	vṛīkān	vĕhrkản	lukous	lupos.
Inst.	vṛikais	vĕhrkâis	lukois	lupis.
Dat.	vṛikebhyas	vĕhrkaeibyô	lukois	lupis.
Abl.	vṛikebhyas		lukois	lupis.
Gen.	vṛikāṇām	vĕkrkảnảm	lukōn	luporum.
Loc.	vṛikeshu	vehrkaēshva	lukois	lupis.

NOUN FEMININE.

Jihvā, "tongue."

SINGULAR.

Nom.	jihvā	hizvă	glossa	lingua.
Acc.	jihvām	hizvảm	glossan	linguam.
Inst.	jihvăyā	hizvaya	glossē	linguā.
Dat.	jihvāyai	hizvăyāi	glossē	linguæ.
Abl.	jihvāyāḥ	hizvayāṭ	glossē	linguā.
Gen.	jihvāyāḥ	hizvayâo	glossēs	linguæ.
Loc.	jihvāyām	hizvăya	glossē	linguâ.
Voc.	jihve	hizve, hizva	glossa	lingua.

NOUN MASCULINE, ending in ṛi.

SINGULAR.

Pitṛi, "father," and in the Zend column bhrātṛi, "brother."[29]

	Sanskrit.	Zend.	Greek.	Latin.
Nom.	pitā	brāta	patēr	pater.
Acc.	pitaraṁ	brātarĕm	patĕra	patrem.
Inst.	pitrā	brāthra	patĕri, patri	patre.
Dat.	pitre	brāthrē	patĕri, patri	patri.
Abl.	pitus	brāthraṭ	patĕri, patri	patre.
Gen.	pitus	brāthrō	patros	patris.
Loc.	pitari	brāthri ?	patĕri, patri	patre.
Voc.	pitaḥ	brātarĕ	patĕr	pater.

PLURAL.

Nom.	pitaras	brāthrō	patĕrĕs	patres.
Acc.	pitṛīn	brāthrō	pateras	patres.
Inst.	pitṛibhis	brātarebis	patrasi	patribus.
Dat.	pitṛibhyas	brātarĕbyō	patrasi	patribus.
Abl.	pitṛibhyas	brātarĕbyō	patrasi	patribus.
Gen.	pitṛīṇām	brāthrâm	paterōn, patrōn	patrium.
Loc.	pitṛishu	brātareshva ?	patrasi	patribus.

ANOTHER FORM OF NOUN MASCULINE, ending in ṛi.

SINGULAR.

Nom.	dātā	dātă	dŏtēr	dator.
Acc.	dātāram	dātārĕm	dŏtēra	datorem.
Inst.	dātrā	dāthra	dotēri	datore.
Dat.	dātrē	dāthrē	dotēri	datori.
Abl.	dātŭs	dāthraṭ	dotēri	datore.
Gen.	dātus.	dāthrō	dotēros	datoris.
Loc.	dātări	dāthri	dotēri	datore.

PLURAL.

Nom.	dātāras	dātārō	dotēres	datores.
Acc.	dātṛīn	dātāro	dotēras	datores.
Inst.	dātṛibhis	dātarebis	dotērsi	datoribus.
Dat.	dātṛibhyas	dātarebhyō	dotērsi	datoribus.
Abl.	dātṛibhyas		dotērsi	datoribus.
Gen.	dātṛīṇām	dāthraṅm	dotērōn	datorum.
Loc.	dātṛishu	. . .	dotērsi	datoribus.

PRESENT PARTICIPLE ACTIVE.

Bharat, "supporting."

SINGULAR.

Nom.	bharan	barâś	pherōn	ferens.
Acc.	bharantam	barĕntem	pherontă	ferentem.
Inst.	bharatā	barata	pheronti	ferente.
Dat.	bharatē	barĕntê	pheronti	ferenti.
Abl.	bharatas	barantaṭ	pheronti	ferente.
Gen.	bharatas	barĕntô	pherontos	ferentis
Loc.	bharati	barĕntĭ ?	pheronti	ferente.
Voc.	bharan	. . .	pheron	ferens.

[29] The paradigms of nouns, etc., given in Justi's Handbuch are often incom-

NEUTER NOUNS.

Dāna, "a gift." Dāta, "an ordinance" (Zend).

SINGULAR.

	Sanskrit.	Zend.	Greek.	Latin.
Nom.	dānăm	dātĕm	dōrŏn	donum.
Acc.	dānăm	dātĕm	dōron	donum.
Inst.	dānēna	dātă	dōrō	dono.
Dat.	dānāya	dātāi	dōrō	dono.
Abl.	dānāt	dātāṭ	dōrō	dono.
Gen.	dānasya	dātăhê	dōron	doni.
Loc.	dāne	dātê	dōrō	dono
Voc.	dānă	dātă	dōron	donum.

NEUTER NOUN ending with a consonant.

Nāman, "a name."

SINGULAR.

Nom.	nāmă	nâmă	ŏnŏma	nomen.
Acc.	nāmă	nâmă	ŏnŏma	nomen.
Inst.	nāmnā	nâmănă	onomati	nomine.
Dat.	nāmnē	nâmainē	onomati	nomini.
Abl.	nāmnas	nâmanaṭ	onomati	nomine.
Gen.	nāmnas	nâmanô	onomatos	nominis.
Loc.	nāmni	nâmaini	onomati	nomine.
Voc.	nāman	nâmă	onoma.	nomen.

PLURAL.

Nom.	nāmāni	nāméni	onomăta	nomina.
Acc.	nāmāni	nāmăn, nāméni	onomăta	nomina.
Inst.	nāmăbhis	naménīs	onomasi	nominibus.
Dat.	nāmăbhyas	nāmăbyô	onomasi	nominibus.
Abl.	nāmabhyăs		onomasi	nominibus.
Gen.	nāmnām	nāmanăm	onomatōn	nominum.
Loc.	nāmasu	namahva	onomasi	nominibus.

The forms of conjugating verbs in Sanskrit and Greek have a remarkable resemblance, particularly in those Greek verbs in mi, in which reduplication of the consonant of the root takes place in the present and imperfect tenses. Greek as well as Sanskrit has the augment in ĕ = ă in the imperfect and aorist, and the reduplication of the consonant in the perfect. The most striking instance of resemblance is, perhaps, the root dā or do, 'to give'; which I subjoin, together with several other examples; adding occasionally the Latin forms, and the Zend also, where they are easily accessible.

plete, in consequence of all the forms of particular words not being found in the Zend Avesta, and the fact that there is no native grammar of Zend extant. Compare the Tables in Schleicher's Compendium, pp. 576, ff.

THE VERB to give.

Present Tense.

	Sanskrit.	Zend.	Greek.	Latin.
Sing.	dadāmi	dadâhmi	didōmi	do.
	dadāsi	dadhāhi	didōs	das.
	dadāti	dadhâiti	didōsi	dat.
Dual	dadvas	. . .	. . .	. . .
	datthas	. . .	didoton	. . .
	dattas	. . .	didoton	. . .
Plural	dadmas	dadĕmahi	didomen	damus.
	dattha	. . .	didote	datis.
	dadati	dadĕnti?	didousi	dant.

Imperfect.

Sing.	adadām	. . .	edidōn	dabam.
	adadās	. . .	edidōs	dabas.
	adadāt	. . .	edidō	dabat.
Dual	adadva	. . .	. . .	. . .
	adattam	. . .	edidoton	. . .
	adattām	. . .	edidotēn	. . .
Plural	adadma	. . .	edidomen	dabamus.
	adatta	. . .	edidote	dabatis.
	adadus	. . .	edidosan	dabant

Third Preterite.

Sing.	adām	. . .	edōn	. . .
	adās	. . .	edōs	. . .
	adāt	. . .	edō	. . .
Dual	adāva	. . .	. . .	. . .
	adātam	. . .	edoton	. . .
	adātām	. . .	edotēn	. . .
Plural	adāma	. . .	edomen	. . .
	adāta	. . .	edote	. . .
	adus	. . .	edosan	. . .

Reduplicated Preterite.

	Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
Sing.	dădau	dedōka	dedi.
	daditha	dedōkas	dedisti.
	dădau	dedōke	dedit.
Dual	dadiva	. . .	. . .
	dădathus	dedōkaton	. . .
	dădătus	dedōkatēn	. . .
Plural	dădĭma	dedōkamen	dedimus.
	dada	dedōkate	dedistis.
	dădus	dedōkasi	dederunt.

The subjunctive and precative moods of the Sanskrit also answer nearly to the optatives of the present and aorist in Greek: thus,

Subjunctive.

	Sanskrit.	Greek.		Sanskrit.	Greek.
Sing.	dădyām	didoiēn.	Plur.	dadyāma	didoiēmen.
	dădyās	didoiēs.		dadyāta	didoiēte.
	dădyāt	didoiē.		dadyus	didoiēsan.

Precative.

	Sanskrit.	Greek.
Sing.	dēyāsam	doiēn.
	dēyās	doiēs.
	dēyāt	doiē, etc.

There is also a resemblance in the Greek future dōsō, "I will give," and the future particle dōsōn, to the Sanskrit dāsyāmi and dāsyăn; and a perfect identity in the Latin gerund, datum, with the Sanskrit infinitive dātum. The affinity between the Sanskrit form dātṛi, "a giver," or "one who will give," (which makes dātāras in the plural), and the Latin future particle daturus, is also striking.

THE VERB to place.

Present Tense.

	Sanskrit.	Greek.
Sing.	dadhāmi	tithēmi.
	dadhāsi	tithēs.
	dadhāti	tithēsi.
Dual	dadhvas	. . .
	dhatthas	titheton.
	dhattas	titheton.
Plur.	dadhmas	tithemen.
	dhattha	tithete.
	dadhati	titheisi.

Imperfect.

	Sanskrit.	Greek.
Sing.	adadhām	etithēn.
	adadhās	etithēs.
	adadhāt	etithē.
Dual	adadhva	. . .
	adhattam	etitheton.
	adhattām	etithetēn.
Plur.	adadhma	etithemen.
	adhatta	etithete.
	adadhus	etithesan.

Third Preterite.

	Sanskrit.	Greek.
Sing.	adhām	ethēn.
	adhās	ethēs.
	adhāt	ethē.
Dual	adhāva	. . .
	adhātam	etheton.
	adhātām	ethetēn.
Plural	adhāma	ethemen.
	adhāta	ethete.
	adhus	ethesan.

THE VERB to spread.

Present Tense.

	Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
Sing.	stṛiṇōmi	strōnnūmi	sterno.
	stṛiṇōshi	strōnnus	sternis.
	stṛiṇōti	strōnnūsi	sternit.
Dual	stṛiṇuvas	. . .	. . .
	stṛiṇuthas	strōnnuton	. . .
	stṛiṇutas	stronnuton	. . .
Plural	stṛiṇumas	stronnumen	sternimus
	stṛiṇutha	stronnute	sternitis.
	stṛiṇvanti	strōnnûsi	sternunt.

Imperfect.

	Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
Sing.	astṛṇavam	estronnun	sternebam.
	astṛṇōs	estronnus	sternebas.
	astṛṇōt	estronnu	sternebat.
Dual.	astṛṇuva	. . .	. . .
	astṛṇutam	estronnuton	. . .
	astṛṇutām	estronnutēn	. . .
Plural	astṛṇuma	estronnumen	sternebamus.
	astṛṇuta	estronnute	sternebatis.
	astṛṇvan	estronnusan	sternebant.

THE VERB to creep.

Present Tense.

Sing.	sarpāmi	herpō	serpo.
	sarpasi	herpeis	serpis.
	sarpati	herpei	serpit.
Dual.	sarpāvas	. .	. .
	sarpathas	herpeton	. .
	sarpatas	herpeton	. .
Plural	sarpāmas	herpomen	serpimus.
	sarpatha	herpete	serpitis.
	sarpanti	herpousi	serpunt.

Imperfect.

Sing.	asarpam	heirpon	serpebam.
	asarpas	heirpes	serpebas.
	asarpat	heirpe	serpebat.
Dual.	asarpāva	. .	. .
	asarpatam	heirpeton	. .
	asarpatām	heirpetēn	. .
Plural	asarpāma	heirpomen	serpebamus.
	asarpata	heirpete	serpebatis.
	asarpan	heirpon	serpebant.

Subjunctive, optative, and future (Latin).

Sing.	sarpēyam	herpoimi	serpem.
	sarpēs	herpois	serpes.
	sarpēt	herpoi	serpet.
Plural	sarpēma	herpoimen	serpemus.
	sarpēta	herpoite	serpetis.
	sarpēyus	herpoien	serpent.

Perfect.

sasarpa	heirpa	serpsi.

Participles.

SINGULAR.

Nom.	sarpan	herpōn	serpens.
Acc.	sarpantam	herpŏnta	serpentem.
Dat.	sarpatē	herpŏnti	serpenti.

PLURAL.

	Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
Nom.	sarpantas	herpontes	serpentes.
Dat.	sarpadbhyas	herpousi	serpentibus.

THE VERB to be.

Present.

	Sanskrit.	Zend.	Greek.	Latin.
Sing.	asmi	ahmi	eimi, emmi	sum.
	asi	aẖi	eis, essi	es.
	asti	aṡ'ti	esti	est.
Dual.	svas	. .	. .	. .
	sthas	. .	eston	. .
	stas	. .	eston	. .
Plur.	smas	mahi	esmen	sumus.
	stha	ṡ'ta	este	estis.
	santi	hĕnti	eisi	sunt.

Imperative.

Sing.	astu	. .	estō	esto.
Plur.	santu	. .	estōsan	sunto.

Imperfect.

Sing.	āsam	. .	ēn	eram.
	āsīs	. .	ēs, ēstha	eras.
	āsīt	. .	ēn	erat.
Dual.	āsva	. .	. .	. .
	āstam	. .	ēton	. .
	āstām	. .	ētēn	. .
Plur.	āsma	. .	ēmen	eramus.
	āstha	. .	ēte	eratis.
	āsan	. .	ēsan	erant.

THE VERB to stand.

Present.

Sing.	tishṭhāmi	. .	histēmi	sto.
	tishṭhasi	histahi	histēs	stas.
	tishṭhati	histaiti	histēsi	stat.
Plur.	tishṭhāmas	. .	histamen	stamus.
	tishṭhatha	. .	histate	statis.
	tishṭhanti	histĕñti	histāsi	stant.

THE VERB to show or say.

Preterite.

	Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
Sing.	adiksham	edeixa	dixi.
	adikshas	edeixas	dixistis.
	adikshat	edeixe	dixit.
Plur.	adikshāma	edeixamen	diximus.
	adikshata	edeixate	dixistis.
	adikshan	edeixan	dixerunt.

The following are additional examples of similarity of form in the past tenses, combined in most cases with identity of sense.

Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.	English.
avākshīt	. .	vexit	he carried.
akshipsi [I threw]	. .	scripsi	I wrote.
apaptaṁ	epipton	. .	I fell.
apatam	epeson	. .	I fell.
asthām	estēn	. .	I stood.

The subjoined instances exhibit the similarity in the formation of the reduplicated perfect between the Sanskrit and the Greek.

SANSKRIT.			GREEK.
Root.	Perfect.	English.	Present.	Perfect.	English.
lip	lilēpa	I anointed	leipō	leloipa	I left.
śak	śaśāka	I was able	derkō	dedorka	I saw.
tup	tutōpa	I injured	tuptō	tetupha	I struck.
tuph	tutōpha
tap	tatāpa	I heated	thapto (from taphō.)	tetapha	I buried.

I add some examples of conformity between the Sanskrit infinitive and the Latin supine.

Sanskrit.	Latin.	English.	Sanskrit.	Latin.	English.
sthātum	statum	to stand.	janitum	genitum	to beget.
anktum	unctum	to anoint.	ētum	itum	to go.
vamitum	vomitum	to vomit.	svanitum	sonitum	to sound.
jnātum	notum	to know.	startum	strātum	to spread.
yōktum	junctum	to join.	sarptum	serptum	to creep.
peshṭum	pistum	to pound.

The form of the Sanskrit desideratives, though not the signification, is found in Greek and Latin: thus we have gignōscō (Greek), and nosco (Latin), answering to jijñāsāmi, "I desire to know;" and again, mimnēskō and [re]miniscor, answering to mimnāsāmi, "I desire to remember."

Again, Greek words like paipallō, daidallō, paiphassō, pimplēmi, pimprēmi, etc., though without the meaning, have the form of Sanskrit intensives, like bobhū, bambhram.

In regard to the participles, also, there is a remarkable coincidence between the Sanskrit and the Greek. Some of the participles of the active voice have been already given. The following are some other specimens.

PERFECT PARTICIPLE ACTIVE.

Greek.			Sanskrit.
Masc.	Fem.	Neuter.	Masc.	Fem.	Neuter.
tetuphōs	tetuphuia	tetuphos.	tetupivān	tutupūshī	tutupivat.

PASSIVE AND MIDDLE PARTICIPLES.

	Greek.		Sanskrit.
PRESENT.	dīyamānas	didomenos	FUTURE.	dāsyamānas	dōsomenos.

Sanskrit (neuter and masculine) bases in man correspond to the Latin in men: thus we have sthāman = stamen; starîman = stramen. Nominal forms in tra, also, are common to Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin: thus the Sanskrit aritram, nētram, śrotram, mātram, gātram; vaktram, khanitram, vāditram, varutram, correspond in form to the Greek niptron, plectron, lektron, phereitron, lutron, arotron, and the Latin mulctrum, spectrum, aratrum.

The nominal form in năs is common to Greek and Sanskrit: thus, the hupnos (sleep) of the one answers to the svapnas of the other.

Passive past participles in ta are common to Sanskrit with the other languages: thus,

Sanskrit.	Zend.	Greek.	Latin.
jnātas	. . .	gnōtos	(g)notus.
ajnātas	. . .	agnōtos	ignotus.
dattas	dātō	dŏtŏs	dātus.
yuktas	yukhtō	zeuktos	junctus.
labdhas	. . .	lēptos	. . .

Compare also bhăgnăs in Sanskrit, with stugnos, terpnos, in Greek.

Abstract or other substantives in ṭā, tāt, tēs, tas, are also found in them all: thus,—

Sanskrit.	Zend.	Greek.	Latin.
nava-tā	amĕrĕtāṭ	neo-tēs	novi-tas.
sama-tā	uparatāṭ	homo-tēs	facili-tas.
laghu-tā	isharestāṭ	platu-tēs	levi-tas.

Forms in tis occur both in Sanskrit and Greek; but the latter has mostly sis for the tis of the former: thus,

Sanskrit.	Greek.
ma-tis	mē-tis.
uk-tis	phă-tis.
tṛip-tis	terp-sis.
yuk-tis	zeuk-sis (=zeuxis).

Instances of adjectives similarly formed:

Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
malinas	pedinos	marīnus.
kulīnas	skoteinos	ferīnus.
divyas	hălios	egregius.
pitryas	patrios	patrius.
yaśasyas	thaumasios	censorius.

Forms in las and ras:

Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
chapălas	eikelos	tremulus.
taralas	trapelos	stridulus.
madhuras	phoberos	. . .
sụbhras	psukhros	gnarus.
bhădras	lampros	purus.

Feminine nouns are also similarly formed, as follows:

Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
indrānī	theaina	matrona.
vărụṇānī	lukaina	patrona.
rudrāṇī	despoina	. . .

Abstract nouns are also formed in Greek, as in Sanskrit, by changing the vowel of the root: thus, from the roots bhid, krudh, and lubh, are formed the nouns bhēda, krodha, and lobha; and so in Greek we have tromos, phobos, trokhos, nomos, loipos, from tremo, phebomai, trekho, nemo, and leipō.

We have examples of nouns in Latin and Greek resembling Sanskrit nouns in ya, such as these:

Sanskrit.	Latin.	Greek.
mādhuryam	mendacium	theopropion.
naipuṇyam	principium	monomachion.

Simple radicals, or radicals slightly modified, are used in all three languages at the end of compound nouns and adjectives:

Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
dharma-vid	pēdo-trips	artifex.
netra-mush	pros-phux	index.
brahma-dvish	bou-plēx	princeps.

The use of eu and dus in Greek corresponds to that of su and dus in Sanskrit: thus,

Sanskrit.	Greek.
sukaras	euphoros.
sulabhas	eutrophos.
dustaras	dustropos.
dussahas	dusphoros.

The following are instances of the employment of a, an, i, or in privative, in the three languages:

Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
ajnāta	agnotos	ignotus.
an-ishṭhas	an-osios	ineffabilis.

The subjoined adjectives are formed in a manner nearly alike in Sanskrit and Latin from adverbs of time:

Sanskrit.	Latin.	Sanskrit.	Latin.
hyastanas	hesternus.	sāyantanas	vespertinus.
śvastanas	crastinus.	sanātanas	sempiternus.

The use of various sorts of compound words is common to Sanskrit with Greek and Latin. Thus we have,

Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.	English.
trirātram	trinuction	trinoctium	a period of three nights.
svapnakaras	hupnophoros	somnifer	bringing sleep.
sadābhramas	aeiplanos	. . .	always wandering.
arindamas	ippodamos	. . .	foe-, steed-subduing.
devadattas	theodotos	. . .	god-given
mahāmātis	megalomētis	magnanimus	high-souled.
bhūridhanas	polukhrusos	. . .	very rich.
bāhumūrttis	polumorpbos	multiformis	multiform.
chatushpād	tetrapous	quadrupes	four-footed.
sarūpas	summorphos	conformis	of the same form.

Forms in ana, nouns and adjectives:

Sanskrit.	Greek.
darpaṇam	drepanon.
vahanam	organon.
śobhanas	hikanos.

Forms in aka or ika:

Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
nāyakas	polemikos	medicus.
dhārmikas	rhetorikos	bellicus.

Forms in ant:

Sanskrit.	Greek.
dhanavān	doloeis.
dhanavantam	doloenta.

Sanskrit nouns ending in as, corresponding to Greek and Latin nouns of the third declension:

Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
ayas	pseudos	foedus.
yaśas	mēdos	scelus
apas	kēdos	opus.

In Greek and Latin the comparative and superlative degrees are formed very much as in Sanskrit. The Greek has, however, two forms like Sanskrit; the Latin only one.

Sanskrit.	Zend.	Greek.	Latin.	English.
bhadra	husko	kleinos	longus
bhadra-tara	husko-tara	kleino-teros	long-ior	different meanings
bhadra-tama	śpentotĕma	kleino-tatos	longis-simus svādus	. . .	hēdus	suavis	sweet.
svādīyān	. . .	hēdīōn	suavior	sweeter.
svādishṭhas	. . .	hēdistos	suavissimus	sweetest.

In Greek and Latin, as in Sanskrit, verbs are compounded with prepositions.

Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.
apa-gachhati	ap-erkhetai	abs-cedo.
san-gachhati	sun-erkhetai	con-venit.
upa-dadhāti	hupo-tithēsi	sup-ponit.
pari-bhrāmyati	peri-erkhetai	circu-it.
pra-sarpati	pro-bainei	pro-cedit.

In Latin, as in Sanskrit, verbs are compounded with nouns or adjectives.

Sanskrit.	Latin.
parikhīkaroti	significat.
krishṇīkaroti	magnificat.

In Greek and Latin adjectives agree in gender and number with the noun, just as in Sanskrit: thus,

	Sanskrit.	Greek.	Latin.	English.
Nom. Sin.	svādŭs svăpnăs	hēdus hupnos	suavis somnus	sweet sleep.
Acc. Sin.	svādŭm svăpnăm	hēdum hupnon.	suavem somnum	sweet sleep.
Nom. Plu.	svādăvas svapnās	hēdues hupnoi	suaves somni	sweet sleeps.
Nom. Sin.	năvo dātā	neos dotēr	novus dator	new giver.
Acc. Sin.	năvăm dātārăm	neon dotēra	novum datorem	new giver.

We must, therefore, conclude from the illustrations which have been given above, of the resemblances existing both in roots and inflections, between the Sanskrit, the Zend, the Greek, and the Latin (viewed in contrast with the almost total want of similarity between the Sanskrit and other tongues, e.g. the Arabic), that there is a close affinity between the various members of the former group of languages; and that in fact they are all descended from one common stock.

It may, however, be objected that the affinity which I have been seeking to establish between the Sanskrit, the Greek, and the Latin, is disproved by the fact that (while a portion of the words in these languages are identical with or akin to each other) the great majority of their words are different. If these languages had in reality had a common origin, their vocabularies must, it may be urged, have been entirely or nearly homogeneous, i.e. must, with few exceptions, have consisted of the same identical words, just as is the case with the Bengalī, the Hindī, and the Mahrattī, which are confessedly kindred dialects. To this I reply, First, that even such a small proportion of common words, combined with great similarity in point of structure and inflection, is sufficient to demonstrate the common derivation of any two languages from one original stem, provided it can be shown (as it assuredly can in the case under consideration) that neither the words nor the inflections have been borrowed by the one language from the other. For how could the common possession by these two supposed languages of even a comparatively small stock of words be otherwise accounted for? This community of words could not be accidental; for had there been anything of accident in the case, we should, beyond a doubt, have discovered the same casual resemblances between other languages—between Sanskrit and Arabic for instance, or between Greek and Arabic—as we discover between Sanskrit and Greek; whereas in point of fact we discover scarcely any such resemblances. The difference between Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin, in regard to the large majority of the words of which their vocabularies are composed, admits of an easy explanation. The speech of different branches of every great race of men has (as I have already in part shown in p. 32, f.) an inevitable tendency, arising from a great variety of causes, to diverge more and more from the original type. This tendency is visible even in India itself, among men of the same branch of the Arian family. The vocabulary of the Vedas is, to some extent, different from that of the later Sanskrit writings. Many words which are common in the former have been entirely disused in later times, while new words, unknown in the Vedas, have been introduced. If the Nighaṇṭus be compared with the Amara-kosha (which may be supposed to contain the words in most general use in later Sanskrit), many nouns will be found in the former which are wanting in the latter, as well as in all other more recent vocabularies. I may instance such words as tuvi, 'much;' napāt, 'offspring;' gmā and jmā, 'earth;' ketas, 'knowledge;' ākenipa, 'wise;' takman, 'offspring;' etc., which occur in the Nighaṇṭus, but will be sought for in vain in the Amara-kosha.[30] In fact, many of the words in the Nighaṇṭus owe their insertion in that vocabulary entirely to the fact that they had become obsolete in later times. Again, any one who is familiar with the different modern vernaculars of India must be aware how much they differ from each other, not only in their grammatical forms, but also, frequently, in the words themselves which are employed by preference in each to denote any particular objects. Now, as we have already seen (pp. 7, 42), all these dialects must at one time have issued from one and the same parent form of speech. But if such a divergence as this has actually taken place in dialects spoken by the different branches of one people, living in the same country, under nearly the same influences of soil and climate, and professing the same religion; must not a much wider divergence have of necessity arisen between the languages of tribes separated for thousands of years, and living in regions far apart from each other, under different physical conditions, and subject to the modifying action of different social, political, and religious institutions?

[30] The following are additional words peculiar to the hymns of the Veda: Akshṇayāvan, atharyu, anarvis, anānuda, aptur, aprāyu, ambhriṇa, alātriṇa, asaśchat, askṛidhoyu, asridh, āśuśukshaṇi, īvat, ṛijishin, evayāvan, kāṇukā, kiyedhas, kuṇāru, kuṇḍṛiṇāchī, jātubharman, jenya, nabhanya, nichumpuṇa, nishshidh, nishshidhvan, opaśa, paritakmyā, bīriṭa, mehanā, reṇukakāṭa, śurudh, sakshaṇi, salalūka, śundhyu, sumajjāni, smaddishṭi, śvātra, etc. See my article "On the Interpretation of the Veda," in the Journal of the R.A.S., vol. ii., new series, pp. 325, ff.

Such divergences between the languages of any two or more nations which have sprung from one common stock have, as I have already intimated, an inevitable tendency, at least in the earlier stages of society, to become wider and more marked; so that two dialects derived from the same original form of speech, though they at first differed but little from each other, will thus almost necessarily become more and more dissimilar from each other the longer they have been separated from the parent root.

Peculiar circumstances, such as constant intercourse, and the possession of a common religion and a common literature, may, indeed, for a period of greater or less duration, avert such a gradual divergence in language between two separate nations. This state of things is at present actually exemplified in the case of England and America. But these two nations have only become separated from each other for a comparatively short period; and it would be difficult to predict how long their identity of language may continue. So powerful, however, are the causes which operate in this case to maintain an absolute community of speech, that (notwithstanding the adoption in America of some new words, and a considerable number of phrases unknown in England) the two nations will, in all likelihood, continue to employ the same dialect for many ages to come. This result will, however, more probably arise from the English language undergoing a parallel alteration in both countries, than from its continuing entirely unchanged in either.

But we must be careful not to underrate the extent of the fundamental affinity in roots and words between the Sanskrit, the Greek, the Latin, and the other western languages of the same family. Even a cursory examination of such works as Professor Benfey's "Greek-Radical-Lexicon,"[31] Curtius's "Outlines of Greek Etymology,"[32] or [31] Griechisches Wurzellexicon: 2 vols. Berlin, 1839 and 1842.

[32] Grundzüge der Griechischen Etymologie, second edition, 1866.

Fick's "Comparative Dictionary of the Indo-Germanic Languages,[33] is sufficient to show that these coincidences are more numerous than might at first sight have been supposed, and that it is only an insufficient study of the variations undergone by different words in the several languages under review which prevents our perceiving that a considerable, though probably undeterminable, proportion of their vocabulary is essentially common to them all.

But, Secondly, there is a further circumstance by which the original affinity between Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin, and their ancient derivation from one parent stock, are proved; which is this, that it is precisely those words and elements which are the most primitive, the most fundamental, and the most essential parts of each language which they have in common. I mean, First, those words which express the natural relations of father, mother, etc., and kindred generally; Secondly, the pronouns; Thirdly, the prepositions and particles; Fourthly, the words expressing number; and Fifthly, the forms of inflection. Thus, the words which Sanskrit has in common with Latin, Greek, and the other members of the Indo-European stock, are those which would be in use in the earliest stages of society, when men were simple and uniform in their habits and ideas, when they had few wants, few arts, little knowledge, no sciences, no philosophy, and no complicated institutions. But after the different tribes of the Indo-European stock had departed in different directions from their primeval abodes, and had settled in distant countries, they became in the course of time more and more different from each other in their religions, in their manners and customs, and in all their modes of life. The climates under which they lived were different; some settling within the torrid zone, while others migrated into temperate or even frigid latitudes. The aspects of nature, too, were very dissimilar in these different regions, some of them being level and fertile, others mountainous and unproductive; some situated on the shores of the ocean, and others at a distance inland. The natural productions of these different tracts, too, were various, as well as the animals by whom they were tenanted. Some of these countries, for instance, produced rice and the sugar-cane, and were frequented by the elephant, the camel, the lion, and the tiger; while in others these plants and animals were not indigenous. In consequence of all these local influences, the temperaments and habits of the men of different nations became exceedingly diversified. In level and fertile countries, with hot climates, men became less active and energetic, owing to the relaxing effects of the heat, and the diminished necessity for labour; while the frames of those who settled in colder countries were both braced by the greater severity of the climate, and by the necessity of labour for extracting a subsistence from the less genial soil. Men settled on the shores of the sea naturally became addicted to maritime pursuits, from which those living inland were debarred. In this way different arts arose, different sciences were cultivated, and different social and political institutions were established. In some countries the active energies of the people were fostered by the existence of free forms of government: in others the feeling of independence, perhaps originally feeble, was altogether crushed by despotism; while, on the other hand, the thoughtful tendencies which were native to the race found their full scope in scientific pursuits, or in philosophical and religious contemplation. With these great and manifold changes in all the conditions of life, corresponding alterations in language, intended to express new objects and new ideas, would be necessarily introduced, which became more and more extensive and decided as centuries rolled on.[34] The different stages of this process which I have been describing are more or less distinctly exemplified in the different languages which have been specified as connected by affinity with the Sanskrit. Of these languages the Zend (or language of the Zend Avesta) is that which had been separated from the Sanskrit for the shortest space of time, and subjected to the action of the smallest modifying influences, at the period when it took the form in which the most ancient of the extant Zoroastrian writings are composed; and accordingly, it has a far closer resemblance to the Sanskrit than either the Greek or the Latin. This has been made clear by the evidence which has been already adduced. The Greek and Latin languages, on the other hand, had been separated from the Sanskrit for a much longer interval of time, and affected by novel influences of far greater potency, when they became embodied in the oldest compositions which have descended to us; and they accordingly differ from the Sanskrit, in most respects, much more widely than the Zend does.

[33] Vergleichendes Wörterbuch der Indogermanischen Sprachen, second edition, 1870.

[34] The divergences, apparent or real, between the Arian languages, are due "to alterations, to losses occasioned by the lapse of time, and also to the incessant efforts (so to speak) of the language to replace the lost forms, and to follow step by step the gradual developments of the several nationalities."—Pictet, "Origines Indo-Européennes, ou les Aryas Primitifs," p. 5. See Appendix, Note C.

I conclude, therefore, from the foregoing considerations, that the differences which exist between the Sanskrit, the Greek, and the Latin languages, as we find them in their later stages, afford no reason for doubting that they had, at an earlier period, a much more intimate connexion, and were, in fact, originally identical.

Another objection may, however, perhaps be raised by some person looking at the subject from an Indian point of view. It is quite true, he may urge, that an affinity exists between the Sanskrit, the Zend, the Greek, and the Latin; but this quite tallies with what our Sāstras record (Manu x. 43, 44; Vishṇu-purāṇa, iv. 3, p. 375, quarto edition of Wilson's translation, or vol. iii. pp. 294, f. of Dr. Hall's edition),[35] that the Yavanas (Greeks), Pahlavas (Persians), and Kambojas, were originally Kshatriya tribes, who became degraded by their separation from Brāhmans and Brahmanical institutions; and it is also quite clear from the proofs which you have adduced of affinity between these languages and our sacred tongue, that the former are mere Prākṛit or Apabhraṁśa dialects derived from Sanskrit. Your hypothesis of these languages, as well as the Sanskrit, being derived from some earlier form of speech now no longer extant, is quite gratuitous; for, what the heretical Bauddhas falsely say of their Apabhraṁśa, which they call Pāli, is literally true of Sanskrit, the language of the gods, that it is that primeval and eternal form of speech[36] from which all others are derived.

To this I reply, that even if Zend, Greek, and Latin could be shown, on the ground of their affinity with Sanskrit, to be derived from it, it would still be quite impossible for the objector to prove on the same ground that Sanskrit was the parent of all the languages which are spoken by all the tribes which have inhabited India or the adjacent countries. Arabic, as has been shown, is quite distinct from Sanskrit, and has scarcely any perceivable affinity with it of any kind. And the same is the case with the languages current in the south of India, the Tamil, the Telugu, the Canarese, and the Malayalim (the tongues spoken by the inhabitants of Draviḍa, Telinga, Karnāṭa, etc.). For Manu himself (as we have already seen, p. 151, n. 164) makes a distinction between the languages employed by the people of India; which shows that forms of speech of a non-Arian, i.e. non-Sanskrit, character were spoken by part of the population. So that the point which the objector is, perhaps, really seeking to establish, viz., that the Arian-Indians are the original progenitors of all the surrounding nations,[37] and their language, Sanskrit, the parent of all other languages, could never be proved. It cannot be admitted, however, as I have already remarked, that Greek and Latin are derivatives from Sanskrit. There is no proof of this theory, and all probability is against it. The whole grammatical character of Greek and Latin is that of independent languages; and any one who will compare their structure and composition with that of the Indian Prākṛits, which every one allows to be derived from Sanskrit, will at once perceive the difference of the two cases.

[35] See first volume of this work, second edition, pp. 481, ff, and 486–488.

[36] See Mahābbāshya, as quoted above, p. 161, note 183.

First.—The grammatical forms of the Prākṛits (as we have already seen, p. 69), have evidently resulted from a disintegration or simplification of the older Sanskrit forms. Thus (as we have already seen by the comparative tables, introduced above, pp. 76, ff.), the Sanskrit words mukta, gupta, sūtra, mārga, artha, śreshṭha, dṛishṭi, pushpa, dakshiṇa, madhya, satya, tushṇīm, laghu, sādhu, sabhā, are in Prākṛit softened down into mutta, gutta, sutta, magga, attha, seṭṭha, diṭṭhi, puppha, dakkhiṇa, dāhiṇa, majjha, sachcha, tuṇhīm, lahu, sāhu, and sahā. The further back we trace the Prākṛit forms, the more nearly do they resemble the Sanskrit, till the two are found to be almost identical; while the more modern the grammatical forms are which the Prākṛits have taken, the more widely do they diverge from their Sanskrit prototypes. The case is quite different with the Latin and Greek. A few instances may, no doubt, be discovered where the modes in which the Latin or Greek forms vary from the Sanskrit correspond in some degree to those changes of softening or simplification[38] which the Sanskrit forms have undergone in Prākṛit. Thus the Greek dolikhos, "long," varies from the Sanskrit dīrgha somewhat in the same manner as the Prākṛit sirī and hirī vary from the Sanskrit śrī and hrī; and the Greek hupnos, "sleep," appears to simplify the Sanskrit svapna by much the same process as that by which the Prākṛit reduces the Sanskrit sthāna, "place," to ṭhāna. But the few instances of this sort which can be adduced are quite insufficient to prove that even in these cases the Greek or the Latin words are borrowed from the Sanskrit.[39] They may with quite equal probability have been derived from an earlier language from which the Sanskrit is also drawn. There is no appearance of Greek and Latin words having resulted from any modification of the Sanskrit: for, while many of their forms have a close resemblance to the Sanskrit forms, they are, at the same time, for the most part equally original with those of that language; and many of them are so different from the Sanskrit, and [38] There are very few of the Prākṛit forms which are not simplifications of the Sanskrit. Even in such a case as that of the word itthī, or iśthiyā, "woman" (from strī), the change is in one sense a simplification, as one or more consonants are thrown out, and the vowel i is prefixed to facilitate pronunciation. But the great majority of Sanskrit words commencing with a double consonant are modified in Prākṛit, not by prefixing a vowel, but either by rejecting one of the members of the compound consonant, or by interposing a vowel between them. Thus the Sanskrit sthā becomes in Prākṛit ṭhā, sthala becomes thala, skandha becomes kandha, spṛiś becomes phaṁs, kshamā becomes khamā, snāna becomes ṇhāna, sneha becomes saneha, mlāna becomes milāna.

[37] Compare the Mahābhārata i. 3533, which says, Yados tu Yādavāḥ jātās Turvasor Yavanāḥ smṛitāḥ | Druhyoḥ sutās tu Vaibhojāḥ Anos tu Mlechha-jātayaḥ. "The Yādavas sprang from Yadu. The Yavanas are said to be Turvasu's offspring; the Vaibhojas are descended from Druhyu, and the Mlechha tribes from Anu." These four progenitors, and Pūru, were sons of of the Kshatriya monarch Yayāti.

[39] It may, however, be further objected that my argument is incomplete, as all Prākṛit or derivative dialects do not modify the original language in the same manner. Thus French and Spanish, it may be said, do not corrupt the Latin in the same way as Italian does. Now, as it has been stated above (p. 147) that the Indian Prākṛits corrupted Sanskrit very much in the same way as the Italian corrupted Latin, so (the objector may urge) Zend, and Greek, and Latin, may have modified Sanskrit in a somewhat different way, as French and Spanish modified Latin. To this I reply that in the case of all these derivatives of Latin, viz. Italian, French, and Spanish, it can be shown (1.) that the people who spoke these languages were either entirely or in part descended from the Romans; or that, at least, they received their language from the Romans who conquered and colonized their respective countries; but it cannot be shown either that the Greeks or Romans were descended from the Indians, or in any way received their languages from Hindustan. (2.) In the case of the French and Spanish languages, as well as in that of the Italian, the exact process and the very steps can be pointed out by which they changed the forms of the Latin words; but it cannot be historically shown, in regard to the Greek or Latin, that their words are in any way corruptions of Sanskrit originals.

so peculiar, that they could not be deduced from it according to any laws of mutation recognized by philologists. The Greek and Latin forms can, therefore, only be derived from another and anterior source, from which the Sanskrit forms also, as well as they, have flowed. It is, further, the opinion of distinguished comparative philologists, that Latin and Greek have preserved some forms of inflection, which are more ancient than those preserved in Sanskrit; and represent more exactly the original forms of the supposed parent language. For instance, the Latin has preserved the nominative of the present participle ending in ens, such as ferens (carrying), while Sanskrit has only the form in at, bharat for example, which seems to have been originally bharans or bharant.[40] The same is the case with various roots, nominal and verbal, in which the Sanskrit appears to have lost the original form of the word, while it has been preserved in Greek or Latin, or both. Thus the word for "a star," which seems to have been originally star,—a form which has been preserved in the Rigveda and in the Greek astēr and astron, and in the Latin astrum, as well as in the Zend śtāre, and the Persian sitārah,—has been lost in the later Sanskrit, where it becomes tāra. Again, on the supposition that the h, j, and chh of Sanskrit are corrupted from the k or gh, g, and sk of the earlier language, the following Sanskrit words appear to have departed further from the original forms than the corresponding words in Greek and Latin, viz., S. hṛidaya = Gr. kardia, Lat. cor; S. hanu = Gr. genus; S. mih = Gr. omikheo; S. bāhu = Gr. pēkhus; S. jānāmi = Gr. ginōskō, Lat. gnosco; S. jajanmi = Gr. gennao, Lat. gigno; S. ajra = Gr. agros, Lat. ager; S. rajata = Gr. arguros, Lat. argentum; S. jambha = Gr. gomphos; S. jaras = Gr. gēras; S. jānu = Gr. gonu; S. chhāyā = Gr. skia; S. chhid (chhinadmi) = Gr. skhizo, Lat. scindo; and S. ashṭau = G. oktō.

Second: But the fact that the Greek and Latin languages are in their origin independent of the Sanskrit may be further shown by the following considerations:[41]

[40] Bopp, Comp. Grammar, para. 129. Ad. Regnier, Traité de la formation des mots dans la langue Grecque, note 1, pp. 68, 69.

[41] I am indebted for the substance of the paragraphs marked with an asterisk (*) to the kindness of Professor Goldstücker, who is dissatisfied with some views propounded in the passage immediately preceding, as he rejects the theory which has hitherto been in favour with philologists that the fullest forms are necessarily the

* (1.) On a careful examination of the roots contained in the Dhātupāṭhas, or lists of radicals in the classical or modern Sanskrit, it will be found that many of these verbal roots are compounded, or resolvable into simpler forms. But as those roots, notwithstanding their composite character, are treated by the Indian grammarians as ultimate radicals, it is clear that those grammarians have forgotten the simpler forms from which the others have been derived. Of this remark the following roots are exemplifications, viz.: vyanj, vyay, vī, vyadh, pyush or vyush, prush, veksh and ujhh, which, though evidently compounded of vi+anj, vi+ay, vi+i, vi+adh, pi or vi+ush, pra+ush, va for ava+īksh, ut+hā (jahāti), are yet treated by the Indian grammarians as if they were simple roots.

* (2.) The Sanskrit has not only undergone alterations such as the above, but the modern language has actually lost some fuller forms of roots, which are still discoverable in the Vedic hymns. As an instance of this may be mentioned the root grabh, (see above, p. 221,) "to seize," which in the modern Sanskrit has become prakritized into grah. Other instances are the Vedic dhurv, and dhvṛi, as compared with the modern hvṛi; and the Vedic śundh, as compared with the modern śudh. The following Vedic roots are not to be found in modern Sanskrit at all, viz.:[42] kan, inkh, ubj, śav, ven, sach, myach, tsar, dhraj, mand, ves, vaksh, turv, bharv, etc., etc.

* (3.) But it is not only a fact that the modern Sanskrit has lost some of the oldest verbal roots; the same appears to be the case with the more ancient Vedic Sanskrit also, from which some primitive radicals had already disappeared. This is indicated by the circumstance that there exist certain Sanskrit nouns, which must have been derived from radicals which in their verbal form are not discoverable even in the Vedas. Thus from the existence of the word vīrudh, "a shrub," and nyagrodha (a particular tree), we may infer that there once existed a root rudh, "to grow," which in this sense (for the oldest. [In this second edition the paragraphs are reprinted, by Professor Goldstücker's permission, with a slight addition to this note, and an enlargement of note 44, p. 264.] Compare for the roots given in paragraph * (1.) Professor Benfey's "Complete Sanskrit Grammar," pp. 73, ff.

[42] On the hypothesis that the fuller form is the more ancient, I may also cite the Vedic forms ścham (as compared with the modern cham) and śchand (as compared with the modern chand), as given in Professor Benfey's "Complete Grammar," p. 73.

modern Sanskrit has still rudh in the sense of "to stop,") now survives only in its weakened form ruh.[43] In like manner it appears from the nouns dhanus, "a bow," pra-dhana, "battle," and ni+dhana, "death," that the root han, "to kill," must once have existed in the stronger form dhan = Greek than.

* (4.) Some of the verbal roots which have been lost by both the modern and the Vedic Sanskrit, and which cannot be traced there even through their preservation in derivatives, may yet be recovered from oblivion by the aid of the Greek or Latin. Thus the Sanskrit hu, "to sacrifice," must have originally existed in the stronger form dhu, as we may infer from the Greek thuō; and in the same way the earliest form of the Sanskrit guh, "to hide," was probably gudh, as the Greek keuthō would lead us to suppose. So too from the Greek forms nēthō, "to spin," and leikhō, "to lick," we may argue that the original Sanskrit forms of nah and lih must have been nadh and ligh.[44] Several forms of substantives and other words also can be shown, in which the [43] See Pictet's "Origines Indo-Européennes," p. 145.

[44] So the root duh, "to milk," must have once been dugh, as is proved not only by its passive participle dugdha, but also by the Zend substantive dughdhar and the Greek thugatēr, "daughter," a word which most philologists think originally signified "milker." Professor Goldstücker is of opinion "that in all the Sanskrit dhātus the sound h is weakened from a sonant aspirate, or, though more rarely, from a surd aspirate, or, though likewise rarely, from a sibilant. Thus he thinks that gāh, vṛih, spṛih, for instance, were originally gādh, vṛidh, spṛidh; vah, originally vadh (compare ūḍhā and vadhū); tṛih, 'injure,' tṛiph; suh, 'delight,' sukh; māh, 'measure,' mās; mih —mīsh; hul —śal or śval, etc. Dah, he thinks, was dadh, as is shown by the substantive antardadhana, lit., that which burns or causes heat (when) in the middle (of a liquor); and since, in his opinion, ah (whence ahan) is the more original form of dah, he believes that this view of dadh is supported by the Greek αἰθ (originally ἀθ, whence Ἀθήνη), which points to a Sanskrit adh. That from dah, nidāgha and similar forms are derived, is no disproof of an original dadh; for when dah settled down as a new dhātu, its final h would naturally be treated as a guttural. Thus, though han was undoubtedly dhan, from the later han we have ghnat, jaghāna, jeghnīy, ghāṭa, etc. And not only sounds, but even meanings undergo the influence of a confused recollection of what once was a more original form. Thus hṛi represents an older dhṛi, bhṛi, and ghṛi, 'sprinkle, moisten;' yet dhárd refers in some of its meanings not to dhṛi, but—through the influence of hṛi—to ghṛi."

In the same way we sometimes see the aspirated consonant of the root changed into h, as in the case of the participle hita (vi-hita, ni-hita, &c.) from the root dhā, "to hold." This weakening process, commenced in Sanskrit, has been continued and carried much further in Prākṛit, where the aspirated consonants of Sanskrit are softened into h, as where the root kath, "to say," becomes kah. See Vararuchi, ii.,

Greek forms are stronger than the Sanskrit. Thus, instead of the Sanskrit hima, "winter," ahi, "a serpent," hyas, "yesterday," we find in Greek the stronger forms kheimōn, ekhis or ophis, khthĕs, or ekhthĕs.

From the facts detailed in the preceding paragraphs, which prove that compound roots have been taken by the Indian grammarians for simple ones, and that old forms have been modified or lost in the modern, or even in the Vedic, Sanskrit, it is clear that that language (especially in its modern form) cannot be always regarded as a fixed standard, according to which the originality of the Latin and Greek forms could be estimated. And the supposition that any of the Greek or Latin words[45] are borrowed from Sanskrit by a prakritizing process is satisfactorily disproved by the fact that various instances have been adduced of the very opposite nature, where the Greek and Latin forms, instead of being like the Prākṛit ones, weaker or simpler than the Sanskrit, are stronger or more complex. For, whether or not the existence of these stronger or more complex forms in Greek and Latin proves that the Sanskrit once had similar forms, which have now disappeared, it is at least sufficient to neutralize the argument,—drawn from the presence of certain other stronger or more complex forms in Sanskrit than we encounter in the corresponding words in Greek and Latin,—that those languages are derived from Sanskrit: for, by parity of reason, the presence of some forms (which we have actually seen to exist) in Greek and Latin stronger or more complex than those discoverable in corresponding cases in Sanskrit, would prove that these weaker Sanskrit forms were mere corruptions of the Greek and Latin words.

27; and pp. 94, ff, above. See also Benfey's Complete Sanskrit Grammar, p. 20, where it is said: "h appears never to be original in Sanskrit, but to have arisen from the weak aspirates gh, dh, bh. This derivation can be illustrated by many examples from the Vedas, or from the kindred languages. Compare the Vedic dughāna from duh; sandegha from dih; sadha for saha; grabh for grah."

[45] I except, of course, such words as have evidently passed from Sanskrit into Greek at a period comparatively modern; such as κάρπασος from karpāsa, and others of the same kind. But, on the other hand, a good many Greek words can be shown to have been received into the Sanskrit astronomical literature within the last two thousand years, such as hōrā, kendra, liptā, ḍṛikāṇa, anaphā, sunaphā, apoklima, paṇaphara, jāmitra, meshūraṇa, and riḥpha, derived from the Greek ὥρα, κέντρον, λεπτά, δεκάνος, ἀναφή, συναφή, ἀπόκλιμα, ἐπαναφορά, διάμετρος, μεσουράνημα, and ῥιφή.—Colebrooke, Misc. Ess. ii. 526, ff.; Weber. Ind. Stud. ii. 254.

Third:—The Indian Prākṛits have derived by far their largest stock of words from the Sanskrit; the few which they contain that are not Sanskrit having been derived from the languages of the indigenous tribes who inhabited Northern India before the arrival of the Āryas. On the other hand, only a certain proportion, as we have seen, of the words which compose the vocabulary of the Greek and Latin languages, are common to them with the Sanskrit: the greater part of the words are, if not different, at least difficult to identify as the same. Now, had Latin and Greek been derived from the modern, or even from the Vedic Sanskrit, the number of words indisputably common to all three languages must have been very much greater. It is true that more may be said in favour of the hypothesis that the Zend has been derived from Sanskrit; but there are sufficient reasons for believing that Zend is a sister and not a daughter of Sanskrit; and, consequently, that both have a common mother of a more primeval date.

I therefore conclude, that Greek and Latin, as well as Zend, are not derived from Sanskrit, but have, together with it, grown out of some older parent language,[46] which was superseded by its daughters, and, became extinct, because it ceased to be employed as a spoken tongue, and because (as being the language of a very early stage of society) it has not been preserved in any literary records. To render this supposition conceivable, I may remark that the same fate—extinction—might have befallen the Sanskrit itself, and the Latin, when they, in like manner, gave birth to the various dialects which have superseded them as living and popular forms of speech, had it not been that [46] "An indubitable result of the researches which have recently been pursued into the Arian tongues is, that, notwithstanding the various alterations which they have undergone, they all bear the clear impress of one common type, and are consequently descended from one real, living, primeval language, which was complete in itself, and which was employed by a whole nation as its common organ of communication. This is not a mere hypothesis devised to explain the relations by which those languages are connected with each other: it is a conclusion which forces itself irresistibly on our belief, and which possesses all the validity of the best established fact. When we perceive so large a number of languages, of a character so marked, converging in all the details of their structure towards a common centre in which every particular fact finds its cause, it becomes impossible to admit that that centre has never had any other than a purely imaginary existence, and that that marvellous agreement arises solely from an instinctive impulse peculiar to a certain race of men." —A. Pictet, Origines Indo-Européennes, p. 43.

they flourished at periods of much more advanced civilization than the assumed primeval language to which I have referred, and have been perpetuated by means of the numerous writings, secular and sacred, of which they are the vehicles.

The primitive language to which I have just alluded is thus characterized by M. Pictet, in the work above referred to, pp. 1, 2:—"While thus augmenting in numbers and in prosperity, that prolific race was labouring to create for itself, as a powerful means of development, a language admirable by its richness, its force, its harmony, and the perfection of its forms; a language in which were spontaneously reflected all its impressions, not merely its mild affections and its simple admiration, but also its nascent aspirations toward a higher world; a language abounding in images and in intuitive ideas, bearing within it, in germ, all the future affluence both of the most sublime poetry and of the most profound reflection. At first one and homogeneous, that language, already perfected to a very high degree, served as a common instrument of expression to this primitive people, as long as it continued within the limits of its native country."

SECT. III.—That affinity in language affords some presumption of affinity in race: modes in which a greater or less diversity of language and institutions would arise in different branches of the same stock: central Asia the birth-place of the Āryas.

The facts and considerations adduced in the preceding section have, I think, proved beyond a doubt that the Sanskrit language has a common origin with the Zend, the Greek, and the Latin; and that all these tongues have sprung, like branches from one stem, out of the same parent language, now extinct. This conclusion being established, it follows as a necessary corollary either, first, that the Indians, the Persians, the Greeks, and the Romans also, that is, the nations who spoke the languages derived from that one common source, were themselves also descended, whether entirely or partially, from one and the same stock; i.e. that they had for their common ancestors the ancient people who spoke the extinct language to which I have referred,[47]

[47] "The radical affinity of all the Arian languages necessarily leads us," as we have seen, "to regard them as having sprung from one single primitive language. . . Now as a language presupposes always a people to speak it, it further follows that all the Arian nations have issued from one single source, though they may have become occasionally blended at a later period with some foreign elements. Hence we

although at some period after their separation their forefathers may have become intermingled with other and alien races; or secondly, that the ancestors of the four nations above mentioned must have been brought into close contact with each other before that original parent language had been broken up into different forms of speech; or, thirdly, that their forefathers must have derived their respective languages from the descendants of those who originally spoke them. Unless, therefore, we resort to the third alternative, it must, with the reservation made in the preceding sentence, be taken for an established fact either that the ancestors of the Indians at one time existed together with the ancestors of the Persians, the Greeks, and the Romans, in one country, as one nation, or that at least the forefathers of these several nations must have lived long in contact with each other at an early stage of their history. It is true that we have no historical record of this primeval period; but we are inevitably led to assume the existence of an anterior state of things such as I have asserted, by the fact, that no other supposition will account for the philological phenomena which we encounter in later history. From the effects, we are entitled to reason back to the existence of a cause adequate to their production. We have to explain the fact, that there have been found in different regions of the world, lying far apart from each other, various nations speaking languages which evince an unmistakable affinity to one another; and there is no other mode of explaining this circumstance but by supposing that the progenitors of these nations, or, at least, the progenitors of those tribes which communicated to them their several languages, have radiated in different directions from one central country which was their common birthplace, or their common abode, and where they all employed one common form of speech.

If we pursue our inquiries further, we shall find that certain data exist, by means of which we can discover with some probability what was the order of time in which the ancestors of these several nations separated themselves from the original stock, or departed from their may with certainty infer the existence, at a pre-historic period, of an Arian people, free, originally, from all foreign intermixture, sufficiently numerous to have supplied those swarms of men which issued from its bosom, and sufficiently endowed by nature to have created for itself the most beautiful perhaps of all languages. This people, though unknown to tradition, is in a certain degree revealed to us by philological science."—Pictet, pp. 5, 6.

common dwelling-place, and travelled towards those new countries which they continued to occupy in later times.

Let us suppose a numerous and powerful nation occupying an isolated position in the centre of a vast region as yet thinly peopled. Let us next imagine what would be the probable course of affairs in such a society, and then compare this hypothetical picture with the traces remaining to us in history of the actual events. We have first then to contemplate this original race, or association of two or more races, gifted with vigorous powers both of mind and body,[48] as still residing in their primitive abode. When, in the natural order of events, this active and gifted population began to multiply, the countries which they at first occupied, either as shepherds or agriculturists, would soon be found too narrow for the supply of their growing necessities.[49] If fresh lands fit for pasture or for cultivation existed unoccupied in the vicinity of their original territory, they would insensibly extend their borders as occasion required. If there was no territory near at hand which would yield them a subsistence, the more energetic and adventurous members of the community would be driven by the pressure of necessity to inquire whether ampler possessions might not be found at a distance; and they would depart in larger or smaller detachments in quest of new abodes. This process of migration, when once commenced, would go on without intermission. The first adventurers would be speedily followed by other successive bands, till at length new nations were formed at a greater or less distance from the original country.

The earliest emigrants, who thus departed to distant regions, passing often through countries differing in climate and productions from their [48] M. E. Renan, however, thinks that the Arian race was not originally superior in intelligence to the Semitic, Hamitic, and other races, but the contrary. Histoire des langues Sémitiques, p. 487.

[49] "But a constant and rapid increase of the population could not but speedily bring about gradual migrations, which would be directed towards regions more and more distant. From that time forward the separation of the nation into distinct tribes, the greater infrequency of communication and changes in their modes of life, occasioned a certain number of dialects to spring forth out of this common language, and to develope themselves, without, however, as yet, becoming detached from their primitive source; and at the same time the original character of the race, becoming modified according to circumstances, gave birth to a variety of secondary national characteristics, destined, at a later period, to expand, to exhibit their own peculiar life, and to play their part in the great drama of humanity."—Pictet, p. 2.

primeval abodes, encountering novel and strange objects, and inured to new pursuits, would gradually lose many of their ancient customs; and in exchange would acquire new habits, and along with them also, new modes of speech. Those portions of the original population, on the contrary, which continued to live together in their ancient country, or had gradually extended themselves together over adjacent regions, would preserve more nearly their original customs, religion, and language. But at length a period might arrive when the same causes which had occasioned the separation of the earlier emigrants, or some other causes of a different nature, would lead to a disruption in the remaining part of the nation also. It would become divided into different sections; which would separate from one another and establish themselves in different, but probably adjacent, countries, and would never exhibit so wide a divergence from each other in respect of their religion, their institutions, and their general character, as those earlier emigrants who had settled in regions at a greater distance.

The first case which I have above hypothetically put is that of the Greeks and Romans,[50] who appear to have broken off at an early period from the great Arian nation and departed to the westward, in quest of new habitations. The distance of the countries, viz., Greece, Italy, and the surrounding provinces, where they ultimately settled, from the cradle of the Arian race, and their wide divergence in religion and language from the eastern branches of the same stock, concur to prove that they separated themselves from the latter at a very remote era. On the other hand, the vicinity of the region occupied by the Greeks to that inhabited by the Romans, would lead us to suppose that the ancestors of these two nations migrated from the east at about the same period, though the differences which we discover between the language and religion of the one people as compared with those of the other, compel us to assume a subsequent separation of the two, and an independent development of each.

The second case which I have above supposed, of two branches of the original Arian stock continuing to live together for a considerable time after the other branches had become separated, is that of the Perso-Arians and the Indo-Arians. Both from the closer vicinity to each other of the countries in which the Persians and the Indians eventually settled, i.e., north-eastern Persia and north-western India, and from the nearer affinity which we perceive between the language and the mythology of these two races than we find to exist between the language and mythology of either and those of the Greeks or the Romans, we are led to conclude that the ancestors of the Indians and Persians remained united in one community (either in their primeval seats or in some region further to the south) to a much later period than the other branches of the Arian race.

[50] For the sake of simplifying the view I give of the question, I purposely omit all mention of the German and other branches of this great family, and of the periods at which they migrated westward.

[I introduce here some further remarks on the subject treated in this and the following section from a paper which I wrote some time ago, and which owed its origin to the various objections alleged against the validity of the proof derived from language of the affinity between the Indians and the nations of the west:—

"This common origin of these languages, and the remoteness of the localities in which they have been spoken, imply, I think, as their almost necessary condition, the affinity of the tribes by which these dialects were spoken at the period of their earliest divergence from one another, the original occupation by those tribes of a common country, their gradual separation, and their emigration from their common abode in the direction of those regions which we find to be ultimately occupied (I will not yet say by their descendants—for that is the point in dispute—but) by the nations who at a later period spoke those several languages. It is true that even this assumption may be disputed, and it may be urged that the original mother-country from which the different tribes carrying with them the cognate dialects issued forth, may have been the common dwelling-place of a variety of tribes unconnected by descent, though they either (1) agreed to make use of the same language, the weaker or more barbarous clans discarding altogether their own forms of speech, or (2) gradually fused into one common tongue a multitude of dialects previously quite distinct. But this hypothesis, under either of these modifications, appears to be improbable, as nations do not readily abandon their ancestral tongues except under the pressure of strong necessity. But even if we should admit that the population of Central Asia, from which the different branches of the so-called Indo-European race are presumed to have issued, was not originally a homogeneous one, but composite, made up of a mixture of distinct tribes, still these tribes must, during the period when their common language was in process of formation, have lived together in intimate union, and by the intermarriage of the different sections[51] have become eventually blended into one community. The formation and universal adoption of one common language is scarcely conceivable on any other conditions. When, therefore, this community was at length broken up, and its different fractions began to depart from their original home in different directions in search of new abodes, —an event which we must imagine to have occurred after the lapse of several generations from their (supposed) first coalition,—these different sections must, as a result of this long cohabitation, and the consequent commingling of blood, have been all composed in a great measure of the same elements. We may perhaps, however, be allowed to set aside this objection, which has been last dealt with, and assume that the tribes which, several thousand years ago, radiated from the supposed common home in Central Asia, were originally homogeneous, or of one and the same stock. If this assumption is admitted, it will hardly be denied that, for a short time at least, these several tribes, as, one by one, they diverged in different directions from the postulated centre, may have maintained the purity of their blood. But it will be urged that this would not long continue to be the case. It will be said: 'Supposing that all the assumptions which you have made up to this point are conceded, what proof can be adduced to show that those tribes which, as you allege, carried with them one or more dialects which were ultimately developed into the Sanskrit, Old Persian, Greek and Latin languages, into India, Persia, Greece, and Italy respectively, were really the descendants of those tribes which you imagine to have started from your assumed centre at an unknown period? Admitting, for the sake of argument, that certain sections of your Indo-European race branched off in different directions in search of new abodes, they then disappear. There is no longer the slightest probability that we shall ever be able to recover at any point of the long line of their alleged journeyings the smallest traces of their progress onward to their assumed destinations.[52] The supposed streams of population no longer begin to flow onward, than, like the waters of the fabled fountain of Arethusa, [51] Unless we suppose that at the early period in question they were divided into separate castes, which, however, is an improbable supposition.

[52] See, however, Pictet, vol. i. pp. 54–88; and p. 536, quoted further on.

they sink underground, and none of those nationalities which emerge into the light of day long afterwards, and at distant points of the globe, can possibly be identified by you as pure continuations of those same original streams. You have no test of sufficient potency to justify you in pronouncing that the elements of which the two sets of bodies—viz., those which started from the centre, and those which reached the several points of the circumference—were composed were in all respects homogeneous. You can tell nothing of the routes and stages by which these migratory tribes advanced; you are quite unable to indicate the varios casus, the tot discrimina rerum, through which they passed, the many adventures they must have undergone, the encounters they may have had with other races, whose influence on their speech and on their entire destinies may have been most important. The tribes which you allege to have migrated from Central Asia may have settled at any habitable points between that region and the countries in which you imagine that you have discovered their descendants. They may at this intermediate point have communicated their ancestral language to people of a different race with whom they there came into contact, and it may have been either the descendants of these alien races, or a people of mixed blood, by whom the languages in question were carried onward into the countries where they were found to prevail at the dawn of history. On either hypothesis the ultimate colonists of northern India, Persia, Greece, or Italy, were not the genuine descendants of the tribes which started, perhaps several thousand years before, from your supposed centre. And it may be further urged that these arguments are corroborated by the fact that notwithstanding the striking affinities that undoubtedly exist between certain parts of the Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin languages, the number of words which are common to these languages is very small in comparison with those in which they differ from one another; and this fact, it may be further argued, can best be explained by the supposition that these languages have been gradually formed by the accretion of new words imported into them by men of alien race, who from time to time became intermingled with the tribes by which the languages were previously employed. Some such intermixture of population, it may be concluded, is necessary to explain the great mutual divergence which eventually came to characterize these four languages.'

"I shall take up these several arguments in succession.

"Supposing that the affinities alleged to exist between the languages spoken at the dawn of history in India, Persia, Greece, and Italy, are admitted to be real, we have to discover the most natural explanation of this phenomenon. The kindred forms of speech must, as we have seen, have had a common origin, and must have been conveyed to the localities in which they were found, either (1) by the remote descendants of the races, derived from a common stock, by which, at first they were severally spoken, or (2) by tribes which had been in long and intimate contact with those races at some period of their history.[53]

"The question to be answered is therefore this: Whether is it most probable that the colonists who conveyed to India, Persia, Greece, and Italy the forms of speech which were thenceforward prevalent in those countries had (1) inherited the languages which they brought with them by direct descent from their remotest forefathers; or that (2) at some intermediate period of their national history, their ancestors had adopted, in whole or in part, the language of some alien race? These questions, I allow, can receive no positive answer. A probable solution is all that can be offered. It is freely admitted that we are utterly unable to define the date, or the course, or the duration, of the migrations which have been assumed, or to conjecture the various events by which they may have been attended. But if there be no historical proof, or other indication, to the contrary, the presumption, I think, is always in favour of the conclusion that a people has retained the language of its ancestors. Languages which, on the grounds already stated, may be maintained to have had a long and continuous existence, must, in the absence of any written literature, have been orally handed down by some people or other. But no probable reason can be alleged for supposing that the descendants of those who first spoke them have become extinct. Even conceding that at some stage or other of its history any particular form of speech has been communicated by the race which inherited it to people of another stock, it is not thereby rendered necessary or even likely that it should have been dropped by those who had inherited it. Arguing, therefore, on grounds of probability, the utmost which we can be fairly required to admit in regard to any language is, that at some period or other of its history, it may have begun to be spoken by an alien tribe which had received it from another tribe to which it had descended by inheritance, while at the same time it continued to be spoken by the latter also.[54] We are therefore, I think, justified in concluding that some portion at least of the people by whom these languages were severally employed in the earliest historical periods were the lineal representatives of those tribes which emigrated from Central Asia at the unknown period already referred to, or, at any rate, were in part of that stock. But there are other reasons for adopting this conclusion. It is no doubt true, and has been already admitted, that people of one stock may receive their language from people of an alien race. But in such a case the nation adopting the language would generally, if not invariably, be inferior in moral and intellectual power to that whose language it borrowed. The reverse is scarcely credible. When, therefore, we find a race of high mental endowments speaking a particular tongue, we are justified in supposing (so long as we have no historical proof to the contrary) that it is using the speech of its forefathers. But both the earliest known or Vedic Indians, and the earliest known Greeks, were superior in intellect, whilst they were at least equal in martial prowess, to the nations with which they were brought into contact, and were no doubt descended from peoples possessed of the same characteristics, who are therefore unlikely to have had their languages imposed upon them by conquerors of any other race, or to have voluntarily adopted the speech of any other people. I will adduce another ground—though not of a linguistic character, but derived from the later history of the Indians and Greeks—for believing that these two nations have sprung from the same stock, I mean the remarkable resemblance between the intellectual capacity and endowments of both, as shown in the eminence attained and the originality evinced by each in literature, science, and speculation. As this similarity is generally recognized, I need not adduce any evidence of the fact.

[53] It is also possible that the tribes which brought the language to the country in which it was first found to exist may have transferred the language to another race, and have themselves entirely disappeared; but this hypothesis appears to be so unlikely that it may be left out of consideration.

[54] Now I do not find that either the Sanskrit, or the Persian, or the Greek, or the Latin, was originally employed by different tribes living in different regions of the globe; but on the contrary that all these languages were at first spoken by one compact nation.

"As regards the objection which I have supposed to be made that alongside of the remarkable proofs of affinity between the Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin, there exist differences in vocabulary so much more extensive as to be explicable only on the supposition that the tribes which inherited these languages from their ancestors must have undergone from time to time a large intermixture of foreign blood,—as it would otherwise be impossible to account for the wide divergence which ultimately prevailed between those different forms of speech,—I repeat (see pp. 257, f.) that the phenomenon in question is susceptible of another explanation. The increasing change in the different dialects of the mother-language, after the tribes by which they were spoken had radiated in different directions from their central home, may be accounted for (even on the supposition of their remaining free from any material intermixture of blood), by the necessary conditions of a nascent civilization as well as by the vicissitudes necessarily attendant on their migrations. At that early stage when these tribes had made little progress in arts and culture, and had no literature to fix their spoken dialect, constant alterations would naturally occur, old words would be modified or disused, whilst new ones, suggested by the different circumstances, physical, social, and political, through which they passed, would be introduced. Such a gradual process of alteration is a necessary result of the laws which regulate the development of thought and language in the early periods of society, and does not therefore require the hypothesis of any intermingling of foreign elements of population to render it intelligible. At the same time, it need not be denied that many words now found in Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin may have been borrowed from people of other races.

"But supposing it to be held that the above conclusions regarding language as a test of race are too uncertain and conjectural to be of any value, there can be no doubt that this much at least is established by the mutual affinities of the Sanskrit, Persian, Greek, and Latin, that the ancestors of the earliest known Indians, Persians, Greeks, and Romans, had immediately or remotely derived their respective languages from races which had at one time been in the closest contact with each other as constituent parts of the same community, governed by the same institutions, and adherents of the same religion and worship (see the abstract of the Rev. G. C. Geldart's paper, "Language no Test of Race," in the Transactions of the British Association for 1858, p. 150, f. of the Transactions of the Sections).[55]

"Let us see what conclusion this proposition involves in regard to the origin of the Hindus, a question the consideration of which first led me to the study of the problems discussed in this paper. The Hindus of the Vedic period are either directly descended from the people who first spoke Sanskrit in its oldest form, or they are not. If they are not, then they must have derived their language (now esteemed sacred and divine) from some alien race which communicated it to their forefathers. But as the traditions contained in their own sacred books say nothing of this, they cannot, on this hypothesis, be regarded as giving a trustworthy or sufficient account of the origin and history of the race. If, on the other hand, the early Indians derived the Sanskrit language by direct descent from those who first spoke it, their progenitors must at some period have lived in close contact either with the ancestors of the Persians, Greeks, and Romans, or with some other tribes with which at some time or other the forefathers of the Persians, Greeks, and Romans, had been socially and politically connected. In either case the ancestors of the Hindus must have formed part of an ancient community, which also embraced the forefathers of other tribes which eventually separated themselves from that community; and could not well have had the distinct and peculiar origin assigned to them in their legendary books. Where, then, did the separation referred to take place? In, or out of, India? To this I reply that, looking to the geographical positions ultimately occupied by the different nations which spoke the various languages cognate to Sanskrit, the probability is, that the separation to which I have referred took place at some central point intermediate between the countries in which these peoples severally dwelt, viz., at a point, consequently, to the west or north-west of the Indus. Whether the populations composing the several nations in question were themselves the descendants of the tribes which originally separated from the assumed parent stock, or whether one or more of them derived their languages from those descendants, we must in every case assume it as more likely that the migrations which terminated in the ultimate formation of the Indian, Persian, Greek, and Roman nationalities had proceeded from an intermediate point than from one in the extreme east.

[55] See Appendix D.

"Supposing it now to be considered as established or probable that a tribe of Indo-European descent had at an early period immigrated into India from the north-west, but that insuperable physiological difficulties are opposed to the supposition that their descendants could ever, from the mere influence of climate, have gradually acquired their present dusky complexion, we must resort to the hypothesis, to be hereafter referred to, that those original immigrants, or their descendants, intermarried with the darker tribes whom they found settled in the country; and that the offspring of these intermarriages were born with swarthier complexions than their Indo-European ancestors. If this be the true explanation of the fact, it must be admitted that the Brahmanical or Sanskrit-speaking Indians are not of pure Indo-European blood, though they are in part of Indo-European extraction. In any case they have inherited the high mental endowments which are characteristic of that race."]

The propositions which I have already proved, or shall now attempt to prove, are the following:—

First: That the Indo-Arians, that is, the higher classes of the northern Indians, or the Brāhmans, Kshattriyas and Vaiśyas, are descended either exclusively or partially from the same Arian race as the Persians, the Greeks, and the Romans.

Second: That the primeval abode of this original Arian race was in some country of central Asia, situated out of, and to the north-west of, India.

Third: That different branches gradually separated themselves from this parent stock, and migrated to new countries, west, south, or east of their early home.

Fourth: That the ancestors of the Indians and Persians appear to have lived together as one nation to a later period than the other branches of the Arian race, but at length separated, the Indo-Arians migrating into India, while the Perso-Arians occupied the territory of Bactria, and the adjacent provinces.

I shall not consider it necessary, in the discussion of the subject, to handle each of these propositions in the succession here indicated; but shall rather take up the different topics in the order in which the process of proof which I shall follow may render most convenient.

SECT. IV.—Whether there is any objection arising from physiological considerations, to classing the Indians among the Indo-European races.

In proving, as I have already done, that the Greek and Latin languages have a common origin with the Sanskrit, I have adduced the principal portion of the proof which I had to bring forward of the common origin of the nations by which those several languages have been spoken. And yet language is not the only respect in which an affinity exists between the Indians, Iranians, Greeks, and Romans. Their mythologies also present some points of contact. As regards the Indians and Iranians, this will be shown in a following section. For an indication of the proofs that exist that the mythologies of the Greeks and Indians, how much soever they subsequently diverged from each other, must have issued from one common source, I may refer to the fifth volume of this work, pp. 2, ff., 33, f., and 76, where the identity of the words Dyaus and Zeus, and of Varuṇa and Uranos, is referred to. The mythology of the Greeks has also been considered to present some other points of contact with that of India, as when the Erinnys of the Greeks has been identified with the Saraṇyū of the Vedas, the Centaurs with the Gandharvas, Minos with Manu, Ṛibhu with Orpheus, Hermes with Sāramēyà, the Phlegyes with the Bhṛigus, etc.;[56] but it would carry me too far if I were to attempt to offer any account of the views which have been propounded on this subject. I will now therefore direct my attention mainly to exhibiting at greater length the grounds which exist for supposing that the Persians and the Indians are descended from the same common ancestors; and that, after remaining united together, as the constituent parts of one nation, for some time subsequent to the migration to the westward of the other branches of the same stock, they, too, were at last broken up, by the force of circumstances, into two distinct nations, which settled in two separate, though adjacent, regions. I will subsequently pass in review the additional reasons which can be adduced for supposing that the Indians immigrated into India from the north-west.

[56] See Kuhn's Herabkunft des Feuers und des Göttertranks, Berlin, 1859; and Müller's Paper on Comparative Mythology, in the Oxford Essays for 1856, and in "Chips," vol. ii. p. 181.

Before, however, proceeding to carry out the intention here indicated, it will be expedient briefly to inquire whether, on physiological grounds, there is any reason for denying that the Indians are descended from the same stock as the nations of Europe.[57] "In their physical characteristics the Brahmanical and other high caste Indians belong, as well as the other nations who have just been mentioned, to the so-called Caucasian type. It might, indeed, at first sight, be supposed that the dark-complexioned Hindus could not possibly be of the same race as the fair-coloured natives of England or Germany. But a closer examination of the different nations to whom, on philological grounds, we are led to assign a common origin, will show that they vary in complexion very much according to the climatic influences of the regions in which they ultimately settled, and in which they have been resident for a long series of ages. If we look to the south-eastern and north-western extremities only of the vast tract over which the Indo-European races have spread, we shall, no doubt, find that there is a complete contrast in point of colour between the occupants of those widely separated countries. But the same wide contrast does not exist between the inhabitants of those tracts (included within the same limits) which are adjacent to each other. The Indians do not differ very much in complexion from the Persians, nor the Persians from the Greeks, nor the Greeks from the Italians, nor the Italians from the Germans or the Anglo-Saxons. These different nations alter in complexion by almost imperceptible shades varying nearly according as their respective countries range successively from south-east to north-west. While the Indians may be denominated black, the Persians are olive-coloured, the Greeks have a still fairer complexion with a ruddy tinge, and the Italians approach yet more nearly in hue to the Teutonic tribes. It is therefore to the varying action of different climatic influences that we have to ascribe the diversity of colour which characterizes these several nations. The scorching rays of an Indian sun, the high temperature of an Indian climate, and the peculiar diet afforded by an Indian soil, acting on the Indo-Arians

[57] [I reprint here, nearly as it originally stood, but now marked by inverted commas, the answer which I gave to this question in the first edition of this work; and shall add a reference to the difficulties raised on physiological grounds against the views there stated.]

during the long period of 3,000 years or more since they first settled in Hindustan, appear amply sufficient to account for the various peculiarities of complexion, of feature, and of corporeal structure which now distinguish that section of the Indo-European family from the kindred branches to the west. In fact, the action of these causes is sufficiently conspicuous in India itself. The people of Bengal, who are of the same race as the inhabitants of the north-western provinces, have, owing to the greater moisture of their climate, and the want of that bracing temperature which the latter enjoy for three or four months of every year, gradually become darker in complexion and less robust in their structure. Again, it is notorious to every one who has lived in northern India, that a Brāhman from the temperate province of Kashmīr is far fairer than a Brāhman of Mathurā or Benares; in fact he has quite the look of a foreigner. It has also been observed that an Indo-Briton, or person partly of European and partly of Indian descent, becomes fairer from living in the colder climate of Europe: but immediately recovers his ancient complexion on being exposed again to the heat of the tropics. It does not appear necessary to enter further into the discussion of this subject, as the preceding observations will suffice to remove any doubts as to the common origin of the Indians and the nations of Europe, which may have arisen from their differences of complexion.[58] I will only add that, if the considerations here urged have any foundation, the Indo-Arians must have been much fairer in complexion at the period of their first arrival in India, and [58] A full discussion of this subject may be found in Lassen's Indische Alterthumskunde, 2nd ed., i. 478–487. [His conclusion as summed up in p. 487 is as follows: "The Arian Indians belong to the Caucasian race in virtue of their language and their physical type: their darker complexion does not amount to such a degree of blackness as not to be derivable from the effects of climatic influences. The Caucasian race easily assumes dark shades through intermixture and the continued action of a hot climate: the Portuguese in India, descendants of native women, have become quite as black as negroes; and the northern and western Asiatics who have lived for several generations in India are now, even without intermarriage with native wives, of as decided an olive-yellow complexion as the native Indians could be." It will be seen that Lassen here refers to the intermarriage of the Arians with other [and no doubt duskier] races as one of the possible causes of their darker colour]. See also A. W. von Schlegel, Essais, pp. 466, ff., and Müller's "Last Results of the Sanskrit Researches," in Bunsen's Outlines of the Phil. of Univ. Hist., vol. iii., p. 129, reprinted in his "Chips," vol. i., pp. 63, f. Compare his "Last Results of the Turanian Researches," in Bunsen as above, pp. 349, ff.

while they still continued to occupy the north-westerly regions of the Panjab, than they became at a later period, when they had been longer exposed to the fierceness of the Indian sun, and when they had penetrated further to the south-east. And we accordingly find that this supposition tallies with some expressions in the Vedic hymns, the oldest of which, no doubt, date from a very early period. Thus, in a text of the Rigveda, iii. 34, 9, we find an allusion made to the colour of the Arian immigrants: Haṭvī Dasyūn pra āryaṁ varṇam āvat: 'He destroyed the Dasyus, and protected the Arian colour:' and in Rigveda, ii. 12, 4, the same word is applied to designate the Dasyu tribes: Yo dāsaṁ varṇam adharaṁ guhā kaḥ | 'He who swept away the base Dāsa colour.' Though the word varṇa, 'colour,' which is here employed, came afterwards to be current as the designation of caste, there is some reason to suppose that it may have been originally used to discriminate the fair-coloured Āryas from the dark-complexioned aborigines. But such a term of contrast, if employed now, would not perhaps possess half the force which it may have had at a time when we may suppose the distinction of colour between the Āryas and the savage tribes whom they encountered, to have been far more palpable than it is in modern times."

The above views are, however, disputed on physiological grounds by different writers, such as the late Mr. John Crawfurd, Professor Huxley, and other authors referred to by the latter. Thus, in his paper on "Language as a Test of the Races of Man,"[59] Mr. Crawfurd writes as follows: "In phonetic character, in grammatical structure, and in some cases even in words, there exists a near resemblance between certain languages of Northern, but not of Southern India, and most, but by no means between all the ancient and modern languages of Europe. From this fact some ethnologists have jumped to the conclusion that the Oriental and Western people, between whose languages this affinity exists, must necessarily be of the same blood, or in other terms, of one and the same race of man. In India, however, there neither now exists, nor does history tell us that there ever did exist, a race of fair complexion resembling Europeans: neither does there exist in Europe, nor is there even a tradition of there ever having existed, a race of black men like Hindus. Hence, as the fact has been well ascertained, that neither time, climate, nor locality will produce any material alteration of race, and assuredly not such a one as would turn a black skin into a white one, or the reverse, we must come to the inevitable conclusion that the theory which makes race and language synonymous is, in this instance at least, nothing better than an ethnological figment." And in another paper on the "Early Migrations of Man," in the same vol., pp. 346, ff., the same writer combats the opinion which "makes the peopling of India and Europe with their present inhabitants to depend on an emigration from a certain table-land of northern Asia." Mr. Crawfurd proceeds to quote a passage from Professor Max Müller's "History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature," p. 12, ff., in which this view is maintained; and then remarks: "The entire theory developed in the passages now quoted is founded on philology, and sets aside all the well-established qualities, physical and intellectual, which from the dawn of authentic history have distinguished the many races of man, which it includes in a single category." And further on Mr. Crawfurd urges: "All this is broadly asserted in the face of the notorious fact that history affords no example of a people becoming white from black, or black from white, or black or white from brown. No black race of man is ever known to have inhabited Europe, or white man to have inhabited India, or black or white to have inhabited the parent land of the supposititious original stock." In an article in the Fortnightly Review, No. 3, for 15th June, 1865, pp. 257, ff., Professor Huxley discusses the methods and results of ethnology; and inquires whether the problems presented by that science are to be determined by means of zoology, or philology, or history, or by any one of several other methods to which he refers. After stating the claims that have been put forward on behalf of philology, and quoting from an essay by the late August Schleicher,[60] who held that the natural classification of languages is also the natural classification of mankind, Prof. Huxley remarks, p. 260: "Without the least desire to depreciate the value of philology as an adjuvant to ethnology, I must venture to doubt, with Rudolphi, Desmoulins, Crawfurd, and others, its title to the leading position claimed for it by the writers whom I have just quoted. On the contrary, it seems to me obvious that, though, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, unity of languages may afford a certain presumption in favour of the unity of stock of the peoples speaking those languages, it cannot be held to prove that unity of stock, unless philologers are prepared to demonstrate that no nation can lose its language and acquire that of a distinct nation, without a change of blood corresponding with the change of language." And in p. 262 he writes: "Thus we come, at last, to the purely zoological method, from which it is not unnatural to expect more than from any other, seeing that, after all, the problems of ethnology are simply those which are presented to the zoologist by every widely distributed animal he studies." In a subsequent part of the same paper (p. 273, f.) the writer—referring to the opinion that "the operation of the existing diversities of climate and other conditions on people so migrating, is sufficient to account for all the diversities of mankind"—observes that he "can find no sufficient ground for accepting" it, and that he doubts "if it would ever have obtained its general currency except for the circumstance that fair Europeans are very readily tanned and embrowned by the sun." To this he adds: "But I am not aware that there is a particle of proof that the cutaneous change thus effected can become hereditary, any more than the enlarged livers which plague our countrymen in India can be transmitted;—while there is very strong evidence to the contrary. Not only, in fact, are there such cases as those of the English families in Barbadoes, who have remained for six generations unaltered in complexion, but which are open to the objection that they may have received infusions of fresh European blood; but there is the broad fact, that not a single indigenous negro exists either in the great alluvial plains of tropical South America, or in the exposed islands of the Polynesian Archipelago, or among the populations of equatorial Borneo or Sumatra. No satisfactory explanation of these obvious difficulties has been offered by the advocates of the direct influence of conditions. And as for the more important modifications observed in the structure of the brain, and in the form of the skull, no one has ever pretended to show in what way they can be affected directly by climate."

[59] In the Transactions of the Ethnological Society of London (published in 1865), vol. iii., p. 2.

[60] Ueber die Bedeutung der Sprache für die Naturgeschichte der Menschen, 1858.

In a lecture[61] printed in the periodical paper called "Nature," of

[61] "On the Forefathers of the English People."

17th March, 1870, Prof. Huxley gives expression to similar views in opposition to the opinion that climate has any effect upon complexion. He writes: "There is no reason to think that climatal conditions have had anything whatever to do with this singular distribution of the fair and the dark types. Not only do the dark Celtic-speakers of the Scotch Highlands lie five or six degrees farther north than the fair Black-foresters of Germany; but, to the north of all the fair inhabitants of Europe, in Lapland, there lives a race of people very different in their characters from the dark stock of Britain, but still having black hair, black eyes, and swarthy yellowish complexions."

In the first quoted of these papers Dr. Huxley makes no reference to the particular question of the origin of the Sanskrit-speaking Indians; but in the lecture published in "Nature" we find the following passage, in which he refers to the immigration of Arians into India, and to their absorption in the main into the pre-existing population, from which it may be concluded that he regards the upper classes of the existing North Indian Hindus as partially of Arian blood, and ascribes their dusky complexion to the intermarriage of their ancestors with the darker tribes which were previously in occupation of the country: "Hence, there can be no reasonable doubt that the fair element of the Celtic-speaking population of these [i.e. the British] islands 1,900 years ago was simply the western fringe of that vast stock which can be traced to Central Asia, and the existence of which on the confines of China in ancient times is testified by Chinese annalists. Throughout the central parts of the immense area which it covers, the people of this stock speak Aryan languages—belonging, that is, to the same family as the old Persian or Zend, and the Sanskrit. And they remain still largely represented among the Affghans and the Siahposh on the frontiers of Persia on the one hand, and of Hindostan on the other. But the old Sanskrit literature proves that the Aryan population of India came in from the north-west, at least 3,000 years ago. And in the Vedas these people portray themselves in characters which might have fitted the Gauls, the Germans, or the Goths. Unfortunately there is no evidence whether they were fair-haired or not. India was already peopled by a dark-complexioned people more like the Australians than any one else, and speaking a group of languages called Drawidian. They were fenced in on the north by the barrier of the Himalayas; but the Aryans poured from the plains of Central Asia over the Himalayas, into the great river basins of the Indus and the Ganges, where they have been, in the main, absorbed into the pre-existing population, leaving as evidence of their immigration an extensive modification of the physical characters of the population, a language, and a literature."

I add some remarks on this subject from the pen of an eminent philologer and orientalist in the North American Review, No. 217, for Oct., 1867, pp. 552, f. After asserting, in opposition to M. Oppert, "that the boundaries of Indo-European language have been approximately determined by the spread and migrations of a race," he adds, "Of course every sound and cautious linguistic scholar is mindful that language is no absolute proof of descent, but only its probable indication, and that he is not to expect to discover, in modern tongues, clear and legible proofs of the mixture which the peoples that speak them have undergone. Such a thing as a pure and unmixed race, doubtless, is not to be met with in the whole joint continent of Europe and Asia, whose restless tribes have been jostling and displacing one another for ages past. And especially in the case of a great stock like the Indo-European, which has spread so widely from a single point over countries which were not before uninhabited, there must have been absorptions of strange peoples, as well as extrusions and exterminations; one fragment after another must have been worked into the mass of the advancing race; and as the result of such gradual dilution, the ethnic character of some parts of the latter may, very probably, have been changed to a notable degree. These are the general probabilities of the case: how far we shall ever get beyond such an indefinite statement of them is at present very uncertain," etc.

The conclusion to be drawn from all these arguments and considerations appears to be that the original Sanskrit-speaking Indians were derived from the same stock as the Iranians, the Greeks, and the Romans, although possibly before their arrival in the Punjab, and most probably at a later period, they and their descendants have not remained free from an intermixture of alien blood.

SECT. V.—Reasons for supposing the Indians and Persians in particular to have a common origin.

I will now proceed to indicate the various grounds which exist for concluding that the Indians and the Persians, or Iranians, were not only descended from the same original stock, but that they continued to form one community even after the other kindred tribes had separated from them and migrated to distant regions.

The first proof is the closer affinity which, as we have already seen, subsists between the Zend, the language of the ancient Persians,[62] and the Sanskrit. From the examples of resemblance both in roots and inflections which have been adduced in Section II., it is manifest that, upon the whole, the Zend is more nearly related to the Sanskrit, than either the Greek or the Latin are. It is true that in the lists of parallel words which have been there brought forward, the parallel Zend words have been often omitted, while the Greek and Latin words have been adduced: but this does not arise from the Zend forms having had no existence, but either from their not having been discovered in any of the extant Zend texts, or from their not being readily accessible to me. But the Zend words which have been brought forward will be generally found to stand in a relation of closer resemblance to the Sanskrit than either the corresponding Greek or Latin words do. I subjoin some further comparative lists of Zend and Sanskrit vocables to which the Greek and Latin either offer no equivalents in form, or equivalents which generally bear a much more distant resemblance to the Sanskrit than the Zend words present. These lists, which contain a few repetitions, are the following:—

I. NOUNS, ADJECTIVES, ETC.

Sanskrit.	Zend.	English.	Sanskrit.	Zend.	English.
yebhyas	yaēibyo	to whom.	kas, kā, kim	ko, kā, kat[64]	who (mas. fem, neut.)
yadi[63]	yēdhi, yēzi	if.	kva	kva	where?
mithuna	mithwan	a pair.	gharma	gărĕma[65]	warm.
giribhyas	gairibyo	to hills.	vṛitrahan, vṛitraghna	vĕrĕthrajan, vĕrĕthraghnya	slayer of enemies, victorious.
ukta	aokhta	spoken.
strī	stri	woman.
antar	aŋtarĕ	within.
dātāram	dātārem	giver (acc.)	mantra	māthra	hymn, sacred text.
gaus	gāus	cow.	pāda	pādha	foot.

[62] For an account of the various old Iranian dialects, see Spiegel in Kuhn and Schleicher's Beiträge zur verg. Sprachf., ii. 6, ff., and App., note D.*

[63] In Greek, ei; in Latin, si.

[64] In Latin, quis, quæ, quod.

[65] In Greek, thermos.

Sanskrit.	Zend.	English.
padānām	pādhanaṅm	feet (gen. pl.).
ap	ap	water.
subhadra	hufĕdhri	very good, of good lineage.
turya*	tūirya	fourth.
tritaya	thrishva	three, a third.
chatushṭhaya	chaṫhrushu	four, a fourth.
atharvāṇam	āthravaněm	priest (acc.).
asmai	ahmāi	to him.
svar	hvarĕ	heaven, sun.
sva	hva	own.
jihvā	hizva	tongue.
sahasra	hazaṅra	thousand.
mahāntam	mazāoñtem	great (acc. masc.).
yūyam	yūzhem	you.
vāri	vairi	water, sea.
tanu	tanu	body.
śayānam	śayaněm	sleeping (acc.).
sapta sindhavas	hapta hiñdu	country of the seven rivers.
ārya	airya	respectable.
sōma	hōma	moon-plant.
anya	anya	other.
viśva	vīśpa	all.
sarva	haurva	all.
upama	upama	highest.
ugra	ughra	vehement.
taruṇa	tauruna	tender.
savya	havya	left (side).
rajishṭha	razista	most straight.
dūra	dūra	far.
nedishṭa	nazdista	near.
śrīla	śrīra	beautiful.
prathama	fratĕma	first.
agra	aghra	first.
pūrva	paurva	former.
śyāva	śyāva	black.
kriśa	kereśa	lean.
sakṛit	hakereṭ	once.
āviś	āvish	manifest.
yama	yéma	twin.
andha	añdāo	blind.
antima	añtĕma	furthest, last.
esha	aēsha	this.
atra	athra	here.
adhara	adhara	lower.
arvan	aurvañṭ	horse.
spaś	spaś	spy, guardian.
drishṭi	darsti	view.
stuti	śtūiti	praise.
stotar	śtaotar	praiser.
sthūṇā	śtūna	pillar.
ratha	ratha	chariot.
gāthā	gātha	verse, poem.
pitu	pitu	food.
rai	rāi	wealth, glitter.
hiraṇya	zaranya	gold.

Sanskrit.	Zend.	English.
peśas	paēśaṅh	form.
ahan	azan	day.
śarad	śarĕdha	autumn, year.
asta, kshaya	asta, khshaya	house.
angushṭha	aṅgusta	thumb, finger.
vana	vana	forest, tree.
kaśyapa	kaśyapa	tortoise.
tamas	temaṅh	darkness.
bhūmī	būmi	earth.
mesha	maēsha	sheep.
varāha	varāza	boar.
ukshan	ukhshan	bull.
kshīra	khshīra	milk.
ishu	ishu	arrow.
dhanvān	thanvana	bow.
bhāga	bāga	lot, fortune.
bhakta	bakhta	allotted, fate.
sakhi	hakhi	friend.
ojas	aojaṅh	vigour.
kshattra	khshathra	royalty, kingdom.
vaśa	vaśaṅh	power.
kṛishti	karśti	ploughing, cultivation.
praśna	frashna	question.
pārśhṇi	pāshna	heel.
dasta	zaśta	hand.
mushṭi	musti	fist.
grīvā	grīvă	neck.
pāṁśu	pāṁśnu	dust.
parśu	pĕrĕśu	rib.
matsya	maśya	fish.
parṇa	parĕna	feather, wing.
parṇin	pĕrĕnin	bird.
charman	charĕman	hide.
aśru	aśru	tear.
aṁśa	āśa	part.
vakshatha	vakhshatha	increase.
yakshma	yaśka	consumption, sickness.
adhvan	adhwan	road.
artha	arĕtha	object, profit.
anartha	anarĕtha	useless, wrong.
vyartha	vyarĕtha	vain, desecration.
amṛita	ameretāṭ	immortality.
dhānya	dāna	grain.
viś	vīś	people, tribe.
tāyu	tāyu	thief.
garbha	garĕwa	fœtus.
putra	puthra	son.
anta	añta	end.
kshudhā	shudha	hunger.
giri, parvata	gairi, paurvata	mountain.
visha	vis, visha	poison.
kanyā	kanyă	damsel.

II.—VERBAL ROOTS AND FORMS.

Sanskrit.	Zend.	English.
rāj	rāz	to shine.
jush	zush	to love.
rud	rud	to weep.
ruh[66]	rud	to grow.
rudh	rud	to stop.
idh	id	to kindle.
śuch	śuch	to glow.
dharsh	darĕsh	to dare.
much	much	to loose.
muh[67]	mugh	to bewilder, be bewildered.
van	van	to love.
van	van	to smite.
gā	gā	to sing.
chi	chi	to gather.
chi+vi	chi+vi	to distinguish.
dru	dru	to run.
ram	ram	to rest.
gar (girati)	gar	to swallow.
gar (gṛiṇāti)	gar	to praise.
gar (jāgarti)	gar	to awake.
śiksh	śakhsh	to learn.
nī	nī	to lead.
var	var	to cover.
gam	gam	to go.
nam	nam	to bend.
khan	kan	to dig.
druh	druj	to injure, lie.
paś	pas	to bind.
dvish	dvish	to hate, offend.
dhan	dvān	to sound.
ish	ish	to wish.
kam	kam	to desire.
su	hu	to bring forth.
smar	mar	to remember.
sthā+ut	śtā+uś	to rise.
kart	karĕṭ	to cut.
dā	dā	to cut, divide.
jar	zar	to grow old.
ji	ji	to conquer.
bhī	bī	to fear, frighten.
karsh	karĕsh, kash	to draw.
bhaj	baz, bakhsh	to divide, bestow.
pā	pā	to protect.
pātar	pātar	protector.
trā	thrā	to deliver.
trātar	thrātar	deliverer.
ush	ush	to burn.
dah	daz	to burn.

Sanskrit.	Zend.	English.
īś	iś	to be powerful.
bandh	bañd	to bind.
badhnāmi	bañdāmi	I bind.
dădarśa	dādarĕsa	I saw.
vahāmi	vazāmi	I carry.
vahati	vazaiti	he carries.
vahanti	vazĕñti	they carry.[68]
vahantaḥ	vazeñto	carrying (nom. pl.).
bharati	baraiti	he carries.
bharanti	barĕñti	they carry.
pracharati	fracharaiti	he goes forward.
vicharanti	vīchareñti	they roam.
bhavati	bavaiti	he is.
bhavanti	bavaiñti, bavaiñti	they are.
bhavishyantam	būshyañtem	about to be.
dadāti	dadhāiti	he gives.
dadāmi	dadhāmi	I give.
dădmāsi	dădĕmahi	we give.
tāpayati	tāpayēiti	he warms.
ātāpayati	ātāpayēiti	he kindles or lights.
pradēśayeyam	frādaēśaêm	may I enjoin.
jagmushīm	jaghmūshīm	(acc. fem. perf. part. of gam, "to go") stauti	śtaoiti	he praises.
staumi	śtaomi	I praise.
studhi	(avi) śtūidhi	praise thou.
astaut	śtaoṭ	he praised.
hanti	jaiñti	he kills.
hantu	jañtu	let him kill.
yaj	yăz	to sacrifice.
yajate	yazaitē	he sacrifices.
yajāmahe	yazamaidē	we sacrifice.
yajante	yazeñtē	they sacrifice.
prīṇāmi	āfrīnāmi	I love, vow.
prīṇīmasi	frīnāmahi	we love.
veda	vaēdā	I know.
veda	vaēdā, vaēdha	he knows.
vettha	vōistā	thou knowest.
vidyāt	vīdyāt	he may know.
vidvān	vīdvāo, vīdhvao	knowing, wise.
vindanti	viīdeñti	they find.
avāmi	avāmi	I protect.
kshayasi	khshayēhi	thou rulest.
vashṭi	vasti	he desires.

[66] Probably softened from an original form rudh.

[67] Probably from an original form mugh.

[68] In Justi's Dictionary s.v. vaz, I find a form vazadhyāi, which would answer exactly to a vedic Sanskrit form vahadhyai, supposing the verb vah to form the infinitive in that way, which, however, is not the case.

Sanskrit.	Zend.	English.	Sanskrit.	Zend.	English.
asmi	ahmi	I am.	santaḥ	heñto	being (nom.
asi	ahi	thou art.	kṛiṇomi (vedic)	kerenaomi	I do. [pl.)
asti	aśti	he is.	kṛiṇoshi	kerenūishi	thou dost.
santi	heñti	they are.	kṛiṇoti	kerenaoiti	he does.
astu[69]	aśtu	let him be.	kṛiṇvanti	kerenvaiñti	they do.
santu	hẹñtū	let them be.	kṛiṇavāni	kerenavāni	may I do.
santam	heñtem	being (acc. sing.).	kṛiṇuhi	kerenūidhi	do thou.
			akṛiṇot	kerenaot	he did.

With the preceding lists should be compared the comparative tables of Sanskrit, Zend, Greek, and Latin, as well as of Sanskrit and Persian words given above in pp. 220, ff., and 230, ff., which will contribute to supply their deficiencies. Many Persian words will be found in the latter tables (p. 220, ff.), which in form closely resemble the Sanskrit terms, having the same signification, while on the other hand there are in numerous instances no Greek or Latin terms which closely correspond to the same Sanskrit words both in sound and in sense. Now, if even the modern Persian language, notwithstanding the many modifications it has undergone from diverse influences throughout a long course of centuries, can still supply so large a number of words which so closely resemble the Sanskrit terms, we may safely conclude that the Zend, one of the forms of the early Persian (which was the ancient medium, or akin to the ancient medium,[70] through which the modern Persian derived all the Arian words which it possesses), must itself have contained a far larger number of words bearing a very much closer resemblance to the Sanskrit, even although many of these may not be discoverable in any extant Zend texts.

These views receive confirmation from the following remarks of Professor Müller in his "Last Results of the Persian Researches," pp. 111, 112:—

"It is clear from his (M. E. Burnouf's works) and from Bopp's valuable remarks in his Comparative Grammar, that Zend in its grammar and dictionary is nearer to Sanskrit than any other Indo-European language. Many Zend words can be re-translated into Sanskrit simply [69] Greek estō.

[70] I learn from Prof. Kern of Leyden's recent dissertation on the antiquity of castes (Indische Theorieën over de Standenverdeeling, Amsterdam, 1871), that he has "already on another occasion shown that the Neo-Persian does not descend directly from the old-Persian of the Achæmenidæ, but is a dialect occupying a place intermediate between the West and East Iranian languages." No further reference is given to the place where this essay is to be found.

by changing the Zend into their corresponding forms in Sanskrit. . . . Where Sanskrit differs in words or grammatical peculiarities from the northern members of the Arian family, it frequently coincides with Zend. The numerals are the same in all these languages up to 100. The name for thousand, however (sahasra) is peculiar to Sanskrit, and does not occur in any of the Indo-European dialects except in Zend, where it becomes hazanra. . . . . These facts are full of historical meaning; and with regard to Zend and Sanskrit, they prove that these two languages continued together long after they were separated from the common Indo-European stock."

The second argument in support of the proposition I have undertaken to prove is, that both of the nations in question, viz., the Indians and the Persians, apply to themselves, in their earliest written records, the same name of Āryas.

The Vedas are, as I have already shown, the oldest of all the Indian books. They are, therefore, not only the most authentic source of information in regard to the earliest language of the Indians, but there is every probability that they would preserve more distinct and exact traces of their primeval history than we find in the other Śāstras, which were composed at a later period, when the most genuine traditions of the origin of the race had been obscured and corrupted. From the Vedic hymns accordingly it does, in fact, appear more distinctly than from any other of the Indian writings, that the progenitors of the Hindus were originally called Āryas. We find this name applied to the forefathers of the higher classes among the Indians (in contradistinction to the Dasyus, who appear to have been a people of a different race, and to have been settled in India before the Āryas), in such passages of the Vedas as the following: Rigveda i. 51, 8, "Distinguish between the Āryas and those who are Dasyus; chastizing those who observe no sacred rites, subject them to the sacrificer." R. V. i. 103, 3, "Indra, thunderer, who knowest [both], hurl thy shaft against the Dasyu, and augment the might and glory of the Ārya."[71]

By means of this word Ārya, then, we are able to connect the early Hindus with the early Persians. For, first, it appears that in ancient times the Medes also (who were eventually included in one empire with the Persians)[72] bore the name of Arians. This is clear from the following passage of the ancient Greek historian Herodotus, who narrated the wars of the Greeks and Persians. In the seventh book of his history, sect. 62, we have the following statement:—Ἐκαλέοντο δὲ πάλαι πρὸς πάντων Ἄριοι· ἀπικομένης δὲ Μηδείης τῆς Κολχίδος ἐξ Ἀθηνέων ἐς τοὺς Ἀρίους τούτους, μετέβαλον καὶ οὗτοι τὸ οὔνομα· αὐτοὶ δὲ περὶ σφέων ὧδε λέγουσι Μῆδοι. "They (the Medes) were formerly called Arians by all. But when the Colchian Medea arrived among these Arians from Athens, they also changed their name. The Medians say these things of themselves." A nation or tribe bearing the name of Arians is mentioned by Herodotus in sect. 66 of the same book. Ἄριοι δὲ τόξοισι μὲν ἐσκευασμένοι ἦσαν Μηδικοῖσι, τὰ δὲ ἄλλα κατάπερ Βάκτριοι· Ἀρίων δὲ ἦρχε Σισάμνης. "The Arii were armed with Median bows, but in other respects like the Bactrians. The Arii were commanded by Sisamnes." These last mentioned Arians appear to have dwelt in the neighbourhood of Herat. (See Bähr's Herod. iii. 93, and vii. 62.) A tribe bearing a similar name is mentioned by the same author as paying 300 talents tribute along with the Parthians, Chorasmians, and Sogdians: Πάρθοι δὲ καὶ Χοράσμιοι καὶ Σόγδοι τε καὶ Ἄρειοι τριακόσια τάλαντα (iii. 93). The same people are mentioned by Arrian (iii. 8, 4) as forming part of the army of Darius: Σατιβαρζάνης δὲ ὁ Ἀρείων σατράπης Ἀρείους ἦγε. The Arizanti are specified, Herod. i. 101, as one of the seven Median tribes. In Herodotus we further find several proper names which are compounded with the word Arius; thus, vii. 67, the commander of the Kaspians is called Ariomardus. In the 78th chapter of the same book, another person of the same name, and son of Darius, is mentioned. In other passages of the same writer and other ancient authors (viz. Xenophon, Polybius, Arrian, and Quintus Curtius), such names as Ariabignes, Ariaramnes, Ariaces, Ariaius, Arimazes and Ariarathes (= Āryaratha), are assigned to Persians. The word Ἄριον, which occurs in the ancient Greek dramatist Æschylus, Choephoroi, verse 423 (ἔκρψα κομμὸν Ἄριον, etc., "I have chaunted a Persian dirge"), is interpreted by the scholiast on the passage as equivalent to Περσικόν, "Persian."

[71] The original passages, with many other similar ones, will be cited further on.

[72] On the mutual relations of the Medes and Persians the following remarks are made by Mr. Rawlinson, in his Herodotus, vol. i. p. 401: "That the Medes were a branch of the great Arian family, closely allied both in language and religion to the Persians, another Arian tribe, seems now to be generally admitted. The statement of Herodotus with regard to the original Median appellation, combined with the native traditions of the Persians which brought their ancestors from Aria, would, perhaps, alone suffice to establish this ethnic affinity. Other proofs, however, are not wanting. The Medes are invariably called Arians by the Armenian writers; and Darius Hystaspes, in the inscription upon his tomb, declared himself to be 'a Persian, the son of a Persian, an Arian, of Arian descent.' Thus it appears that the ethnic appellative of Arian appertains to the two nations equally; and there is every reason to believe that their language and religion were almost identical."

But, further, it is not only in the Greek authors that we find the name of Arians applied to the Medes or Persians; in the most ancient books of the Zoroastrian religion also, which are composed in the Zend language, the same word, as a designation of the early Persians, is of frequent occurrence. I give, in a somewhat abridged form, Professor Spiegel's abstract of the evidence which exists of the common origin of the Indians and Persians, as the most recent and complete of which I am aware. (See his translation of the Avesta, vol. i. Introduction, pp. 4, ff.) One part of this evidence is their common name of Ārya.

"Ethnography, supported by her two handmaids, physiology and philology, has in recent times demonstrated that a single race (the Indo-Germanic) has spread its branches over the whole space from India to the most westerly point of Europe. The most highly gifted and civilized nations, both of the ancient and modern world, are all derived from this stock; viz., the Indians, Persians, Greeks, Romans, Germans, Slavonians, and perhaps also the Celts. All these nations are branches of one single original family, whose abodes have not yet been certainly determined, and perhaps will never be ascertained in a way to preclude all dispute; but it is probable that, in the earliest times, all these races dwelt together as one people, on the elevated table-land of central Asia. The emigration of this people from their original seats, and their separation into different branches, are events which lie anterior to all history. Faint indications of the degree of culture possessed by these tribes before their separation may be derived from the terms for particular conceptions which have remained common to them all; and the amount of their knowledge is not to be estimated too low. If the state had not been organized by them, the family, at least, had been already regulated, as is proved by the community of the words designating relationships. We find names common to them for the different kinds of cattle, and for different implements of husbandry. Their conceptions of the gods, on the contrary, seem to have continued to be of the most general character.[73]

"But in addition to this possession by the whole Indo-Germanic race of particular words, there exists a closer relationship between single members of this family. This closer relationship is to be explained by the fact, that some of these races continued to live together even after the others had separated from them. Thus, for example, the Greeks and Romans have much that is common to both in their languages and in their ideas, which cannot be explained by their original relationship. But in no instance is this affinity more striking or intimate than between the Indians and the Persians. These two branches must have lived long together after quitting their common cradle, as is clearly proved by linguistic and mythological considerations. The three dialects of ancient Persian with which we are acquainted, viz., that of the Cuneiform Inscriptions, that of the second part of the Yaśna, and the language of the remaining portions of the Avesta, have all such a close affinity to the oldest Indian language, the Sanskrit, as exhibited in the Vedas, that they might almost be all called dialects of one and the same language. Other grounds, particularly of a mythological character, speak no less strongly in proof of the two tribes (Indians and Persians) having adhered long to each other. It is of especial importance that they both call themselves by the same name. Ārya, signifying 'honourable,' in ordinary speech, and derived from arya, which means 'lord' in the Vedas, is the most usual and the most ancient name of the Indian people. (R.V. i. 51, 8, and Sāmaveda, i. 1, 1, 5, 3.) Among the Indians the term Mlechha, which denotes an impure barbarian, is the opposite of Ārya. The same is the case among the Persians. According to the Persian laws of euphony, ārya had to be changed to airya, a name which the Persians long applied to themselves, and out of which the more modern [73] See Kuhn's Dissertation in Weber's Ind. Stud. i. 321, ff. The elaborate work of M. Adolphe Pictet, above quoted (pp. 258, 266, ff.), has for its object to discover, by a comparison of the primitive words common to all the Arian nations, what was their original and common country, and what the condition of the parent nation as regarded its civilization and its intellectual and religious culture before the separation of the several branches. The first volume, relating to the ethnography, geography, and natural history of the country, appeared in 1859; and the second, treating of the material civilization, the social condition, and the intellectual, moral, and religious life of the Āryas, was published in 1863.

Irān has arisen; a name, too, with which Herodotus had become acquainted. To this word airya, another word, anairya, non-iranic, is opposed.

"It is, however, established that this original Arian race, from which, at a later period, the Indians and Persians separated themselves, cannot have lived as one community either in India or in Persia. We must regard it as demonstrated that the Indians who spoke Sanskrit were not autochthonous in Hindustan. The oldest seats of the Indians of which we find any mention made are to be placed in the Panjāb. In the First Fargard of the Vendidad, verse 73, a country called Hapta Hendu, or India, is mentioned, which, in the Cuneiform Inscriptions, is called Hidus. It was not understood for a long time what was signified by Hapta Hendu, Seven-Indias, but the Vedas have explained this name. In the Vedic hymns we find the name Sapta-Sindhavas, the seven rivers, still employed to designate the country of the Indians.[74] From the Panjāb, the Indians, as their later books testify, advanced further towards the east; first, as far as the Sarasvatī; after which, they spread themselves over the whole of northern India; and only at a late period into the south of the peninsula. The Persian legends conduct us with the same distinctness to a primeval country in the north."

We shall shortly have to return to this question, and inquire what were the primeval seats of the Arians. In the mean time, I revert to the affinities of the Persians and Indians.

The third proof of this which I have to adduce is, the coincidences which are discoverable in the ancient mythologies of the two nations. On this subject, Professor Spiegel proceeds, pp. 6, ff.:—"We have already said that the different branches of the Arian family had but few words in common connected with theology. The most widely diffused term is the general designation of God as 'the shining,' formed from the ancient root, 'div' or 'dyu' 'to shine.' From this is derived the Sanskrit 'deva,' the Latin 'deus,' the Lithuanian 'dievas,' the German 'zio' and 'tyr,' the Greek Ζεύς, and also Jupiter from 'Diespiter.' The old Persian 'daēva' belongs to the same root, but has (on what grounds we shall presently discover) a somewhat different signification. More intimate mythological affinities are only to be found between particular branches of the Indo-Germanic family, as between the Greeks and Romans, and especially between the Indians and Persians. A number of personages found in the Veda correspond in name with others in the Avesta, and must originally have been completely identical, though in the course of events, it has naturally occurred that this similarity has become more or less effaced. One personage whose identity was the first to attract attention, is the Yama of the Indians [the son of Vivasvat], the Yima of the Persians [who is the son of Vīvaṅhvant]. In the Vedas and Upanishads we already meet with Yama as the king of the dead. He inhabits a particular world, where he has assembled the immortals around him. Among the ancient Indians his world is not a place of terrors, but its expanses are full of light, and the abodes of happiness, pleasure, and rapture.[75] In Irān, Yima is a fortunate monarch, under whose rule there was neither death nor sickness. After he has for some time continued to diffuse happiness and immortality, he is obliged to withdraw with his attendants to a more contracted space, on account of the calamities which threaten the world. Here lies, according to my view, the point of connexion between the two legends. The Indian regards Yama simply as the king of the dead, or, at least, of the blessed: the Persian limits the number of the blessed to a determinate number, who are selected to live with Yima.

[74] Spiegel, Avesta, vol. i. p. 66, note 3.

"A second renowned personage in the Persian heroic poetry, who also occurs in the Vedas, is Thraêtaŏno, the descendant of Athwya, the Frēdun, or Feridun of a later period, with whom the Trita of the Veda is connected. Trita is the son of Āptya, and, according to the Vedic accounts, he fights with a serpent, and smites a three-headed dragon with seven tails, and liberates the cattle. Quite similarly, Thraêtaŏno destroys a pestilent serpent with three heads, three girdles, six tails, and a thousand powers.

"A third personage, who can be pointed out in both the Indian and Persian mythology, is Sāma Kereśāśpa, the man of heroic temper, and the same as the Kṛiśaśva of the Indians, who, it is true, has not yet been discovered in the Veda, but who was known to the Indian grammarian Pāṇini, and is frequently named in the Purāṇas as a warlike ṛishi. (Rāmāy. i. 23, 12, Schleg.; i. 31, 10, Gorres.)

[75] See R.V. ix. 113, 7–11, quoted by Roth in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, iv. 426, ff. The original passage will be given in the App. note E.

"To these three personages may now be added a fourth, Kava Uś, or the Kāvya Uśanas of the Vedas. This is the person called Kāus at a later period in the Persian legends. Unfortunately, the stories of Kava Uś are so few and so brief, that I can scarcely venture to indicate their connexion more in detail. (See Weber Vāja.-S, Spec. II. 68, note.)

"In addition to this identity of personages, we find also that the Indians and Persians have some important ceremonies in common. We shall here only mention two, though a closer examination of the Persian liturgy will no doubt bring others to light. The first is the Soma or Homa offering. (See also vol. ii. of Spiegel's Avesta, p. 69.) In both the Indian and the Persian religions, soma, or haŏma, which is identical with it, is the name of a plant, the juice of which is pressed out and drunk, with certain religious forms; and in both religions Soma is also a god.[76] Soma and Haoma have also a great number of epithets common to them, which clearly show how short a period had elapsed since the Persian and Indian adherents of this worship had become separated from each other."

The Indians and Persians have also at least one of their deities in common, viz., Mitra.

"In the Veda, (says Dr. F. Windischmann, Mithra, pp. 54, 56, and 63) Mitra occurs as the son of Aditi (boundless space), and hence parallel with the sun, and stands almost always inseparably associated with Varuṇa. He appears to belong to a race of gods who are already disappearing, and has resigned a portion of his functions to Indra. In the Veda Mitra is the light, while Varuṇa is to be understood of the sky, especially the nocturnal sky. The connexion of Mitra and Varuṇa in the Veda is analogous to that of Mithra and Vayu in the Zend texts. Mithra is thus an ancient national god of the Arians; and the character under which he is represented in the Zend Avesta has many points of resemblance to the Vedic Mitra, though it has also essential differences of Zoroastrian origin. Aryaman, who is to be understood of the sun, appears, in R.V. i. 36, 4, and elsewhere, along with Mitra and Varuṇa. His name signifie companion or friend, and he also occurs in the Zend texts."[77]

[76] See Windischmann, Ueber den Somacultus der Arier: and App. note F.

I proceed with my quotation from Professor Spiegel's Introduction, i. 8: Secondly, "The reception of neophytes into the sacred society is performed among both peoples, the Persians and the Indians, by investing them with a girdle or thread. In the case of a Brāhman the investiture is to be performed in the eighth year after his birth or conception, in the case of a Kshatriya in the eleventh, and of a Vaiśya in the twelfth. But the period of investiture for a Brāhman has not finally expired till his sixteenth year, for a Kshatriya till his twenty-second, or for a Vaiśya till his twenty-fourth.[78] After the investiture, the teacher is to instruct the pupil in reading the Vedas, and in the rites of purification. (Manu, ii. 69; Yājñavalkya, i. 15.) Up to his seventh year the Parsee is incapable of doing any evil; and if he does anything wrong, the blame of it falls on his parents. In India he is invested with the Kosti or sacred girdle in his seventh [77] Professor Spiegel, in his note to the 22nd Fargard, vol. i. p. 266, says of the last-named god,—"It is to be lamented that the god who is here designated by the name of Airyama occurs but seldom, and is but briefly noticed in the Avesta; for he is unquestionably the ancient Indo-Germanic deity, who is mentioned in the Vedas under the name of Aryaman;" but subsequently, on maturer consideration, retracted this opinion. In Kuhn and Schleicher's Beiträge zur Vergl. Sprachf. i. 131, ff., he says: "I have in my note on Vend. xxii. 23 (p. 266), regarded the Airyama of the last chapter as the Vedic Aryaman. This comparison is only in part correct. It is true that, letter for letter, Airyama is the Sanskrit Aryaman, and therefore the phonetic affinity cannot be doubted. It does not, however, follow that the signification must therefore be the same. If, as is supposed by many, the Iranians had issued from the bosom of the Indian people, if the entire culture of the Indians, as exhibited in the Vedas, had been the basis of theirs, this assumption would be less questionable. But according to my view such is not the case, but the separation of the two nations took place before (though, perhaps, not long before) the Vedic period. The question thus arises whether—supposing both nations to have already had the word Aryaman—we are to assume that the conception of the god Aryaman had been already formed. The word occurs in several places in the second part of the Yaśna, where, however, the context does not justify us in explaining it as a proper name." Spiegel then goes on to state his opinion that in the last chapter of the Vendidad Airyama is not to be understood of a god, but merely as denoting a particular prayer in which that word occurs, and which Ahura Mazda discovers to be more efficacious in healing sickness than another sacred text to which he had first had recourse.

[78] Aśvalāyana Gṛihya-Sūtra, i. 20:—Aṣhṭame varshe brāhmaṇam upanayed garbhāshṭame vā | ekādaśe kshatriyaṁ dvādaśe vaiśyam | ā shoḍaśād brāhmaṇasya anatītaḥ kālaḥ ā dvāviṁśāt kshatriyasya ā chaturviṁśād vaiśyasya—ataḥ ūrddhvam patita-sāvitrīkāḥ bhavanti |

year; among the Parsees who live in Kirman, the ceremony is postponed till the tenth year. From the seventh to the tenth year, half the blame of the offences which the child commits falls upon his parents. With his tenth year the boy, according to the view of the Ravaets, enters formally into the community of the Parsees; according to other books, the fifteenth year appears to be that in which he is admitted into religious fellowship.

"All these traces of a common development which we have just pointed out between the Indians and the Persians have their origin, of course, in a pre-historical period, when both nations lived together undivided. Traces can also be discovered which lead to the conclusion that the separation of these two races was occasioned, in part at least, by religious causes.[79] Even if it have been accidental that Ahura, the highest god of the Persians, was, under the designation of Asura,[80] reckoned among evil spirits by the later Indians, it can scarcely have happened by chance that the Devas of the Indians have, under the name of Daēvas, been transformed into evil spirits and allies of Angra Mainyus; that Indra, the highest god of the earliest Hinduism, is, in like mannner, banished to hell; and that Sarva occurs as an evil spirit, while the Indians have considered this name worthy to be a designation of Siva, one of the three highest deities of the later form of their religion.[81] The conjecture is therefore not unnatural

[79] In his second volume, however, Professor Spiegel adds, on this subject, the following reservation:—"In the first volume I have alluded to a religious alienation; but too much importance is not to be ascribed to this view, and no adventurous hypotheses should be built upon it. Even without the assumption of a religious alienation, it is quite conceivable how gods, who were held in honour by the one people, should be degraded to the infernal regions by the other. . . . . That which gives probability to the assumption of an actual alienation between the Indians and the Iranians on account of their religious conceptions, is the fact that the number of these opposing conceptions is not inconsiderable," pp. cix. cx. On the same subject Dr. Justi writes in the introduction to his Handbook of the Zend Language, p. v:—"The nature-religion derived from the primeval days of the Arian race vanished before the new doctrine (of Zaratushtra), and its deities shared the fate of so many heathen divinities, which Christianity thrust down into hell."

[80] "Derived from asu = prajnā, 'wisdom,' in the Nighaṇṭus. The word asura has also a good sense in Vedic Sanskrit; it means sarveshām prāṇadah. Comp. Sāyaṇa on R.V. xxxv. 7, 10." Compare my article "On the Interpretation of the Veda" in the Journal R.A.S. for 1866, p. 376, ff., and Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. Asura.

[81] See, however, the fifth volume of this work, p. 121, where it is stated, on the

that religious differences may have been one of the grounds of separation. Still, even after their separation, the Indians and Persians did not remain without some knowledge of each other's progress. They were not too far separated to render this possible; and the Vendidad (i. 74) still shows an acquaintance with India under the name of Hapta-Hendu, i.e. Sapta Sindhavaḥ, the land of the seven rivers, which was a designation of the Vedic India."

On the same subject Professor Müller remarks: "Still more striking is the similarity between Persia and India in religion and mythology. Gods unknown to any Indo-European nation are worshipped under the same names in Sanskrit and Zend; and the change of some of the most sacred expressions in Sanskrit into names of evil spirits in Zend only serves to strengthen the conviction that we have here the usual traces of a schism which separated a community that had once been united." (Last Results of Persian Researches, p. 112; "Chips," i. 83.)

From the three-fold argument above stated,—drawn (1st) from the striking similarity between the Sanskrit and Zend, (2nd) from the common name of Ārya, applied to themselves by both the Indians and the Iranians, and (3rd) from the coincidences between the religion and mythology of these two nations,—I conceive that a powerful confirmation is derived to the conclusion which I have been endeavouring to establish, namely, the common origin of all the nations to which the name of Indo-European has been applied. If even from philological considerations alone we are entitled to assume the descent of the Indians, Iranians, Greeks, and Romans, from the same common ancestors, our general conclusion is greatly strengthened when we can (in the case of two of these nations) add to the arguments founded on language, the further evidence derivable from community of name, and, to a certain extent, of tradition and of mythology.

authority of Professor Spiegel, that the materials afforded by the Zend books are not sufficient to afford a basis for any positive conclusions in reference to the god Andra, and his relation to the Vedic Indra. See also the note in the same page.

SECT. VI.—Was India the primitive country of the Āryas and Indo-European races?

As we have been led by the preceding investigation to conclude (1) that the Sanskrit, the Zend, the Greek, and the Latin languages must all have had a common origin; (2) that the races also who employed these several languages were all branches, more or less pure, of one great family; and (3) that consequently the ancestors of these different branches must at one time have lived together as one nation in one country:—we have now to determine, if possible, what that country was. First, then, was India the common cradle of the Indo-Germanic races, and did the other branches of that great family all migrate westward from Hindustan, while the Indo-Arians remained in their primeval abodes? or, secondly, are we to assume some other country as the point from which the several sections of the race issued forth in different directions to the various countries which they eventually occupied?

Mr. A. Curzon maintains[82] the first of these two theories, viz., that India was the original country of the Arian family, from which its different branches emigrated to the north-west, and in other directions.

The opinion that the Arians are a people of an origin foreign to the soil of India, which they are presumed to have invaded and conquered, imposing their religion and institutions on the so-called aborigines, is rejected by him as one founded on very insufficient data, and as resting on no well-established historical grounds. He thinks that it is a course opposed to the evidence of facts based on the results of comparative philology to maintain that the barbarous aboriginal tribes of India, destitute of written records, traditional religious system, or well-defined institutions, can be more ancient than the Arian Hindus, the possessors of an early civilization. These rude tribes may, in his opinion, have sprung from some of the barbaric hordes, who, under the name of Śakas, Hūnas, etc., are mentioned by Sanskrit writers as having invaded India, and who, after their defeat, may have taken refuge in the hills and forests of Hindustan.

Reviewing the different possible suppositions as to the way in which the Arians may have entered India, Mr. Curzon infers (1) that they could not have entered from the west, because it is clear that the people who lived in that direction were descended from these very [82] Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, vol. xvi. pp. 172–200.

Arians of India;—such descent being proved by the fact that the oldest forms of their language have been derived from the Sanskrit (to which they stand in a relation analogous to that in which the Pāli and Prākṛit stand), and by the circumstance that a portion of their mythology is borrowed from that of the Indo-Arians. Nor (2) could the Arians, in his opinion, have entered India from the north or north-west, because we have no proof from history or philology that there existed any civilized nation with a language and religion resembling theirs which could have issued from either of those quarters at that early period and have created the Indo-Arian civilization. It was equally impossible (3) that the Arians could have arrived in India from the east, as the only people who occupied the countries lying in that direction (the Chinese) are quite different in respect of language, religion, and customs from the Indians, and have no genealogical relations with them. In like manner (4) the Indians could not have issued from the table-land of Thibet in the north-east, as, independently of the great physical barrier of the Himālaya, the same ethnical difficulty applies to this hypothesis as to that of their Chinese origin. And (5) the Indians cannot be of Semitic or Egyptian descent, because the Sanskrit contains no words of Semitic origin, and differs totally in structure from the Semitic dialects, with which, on the contrary, the language of Egypt appears, rather, to exhibit an affinity. And (6) "no monuments, no records, no tradition of the Arians having ever originally occupied, as Arians, any other seat than the plains to the south-west of the Himalayan chain, bounded by the two seas defined by Manu (memorials such as exist in the histories of other nations who are known to have migrated from their primitive abodes), can be found in India." Mr. Curzon (7) regards as illogical the inference, that because the Arians spread at an early period to the south of India, as they did also to the west and north-west, they must have originally issued from some unknown region to invade and conquer India itself. In the same way, he urges, it might be argued that the Romans invaded Italy from some unascertained quarter (instead of springing from one region of Italy), because they extended their dominion to the south, as well as in other directions. In explanation of their movements, he quotes the passage of Manu, ii. 17, ff. (which will be hereafter given at length), and assumes, in accordance with the indications which it affords, that the earliest seat of Indian civilization was in Brahmāvartta; and that the Arians, as they increased in numbers and advanced in social progress, gradually moved forward to the central region called Madhyadeśa, and eventually to Āryāvartta, the tract between the Himālaya and the Vindhya, extending from the eastern to the western sea. Mr. Curzon admits the existence of a non-Arian people and nationality, viz., the Tamulian in the south, which he conceives may have been in course of formation contemporaneously with the rise of the Arian community in the north; though he thinks that there is nothing to indicate that the Tamulians, or the hill tribes, or any other indigenous race, were ever in possession of Āryāvartta (the country north of the Vindhya) before its occupation by the Arians.

His conclusion (founded on the assumption that all the languages of the Arian family have been framed from a Sanskrit basis, and are only modified and corrupted forms of what was once the original tongue of the Arian race of India) is therefore the following, viz., that either (1) the nations whose speech is derived from Sanskrit have sprung from the gradual dispersion of the ancient Arian race of India, such dispersion being occasioned by political or religious causes, issuing in the expulsion from India of the defeated parties, and their settlement in different unoccupied countries chiefly to the westward; or (2) that the Arians invaded the countries to the west and north-west of India, and conquered the various tribes inferior to themselves, who were there in possession, imposing upon them their own institutions and language. Of these two alternative suppositions, he conceives the latter to have the greater probability in its favour. As regards the time when the Arian advance in a westerly direction took place, he thinks that "it was subsequently to their extension over this territory [the Dekhan] and its occupation, which may be regarded as the third era in their history, when the Arians had attained an advanced state of civilization, when the Vedas had been composed, and a national system of religion established; when the Brahmanical hierarchy had been formed, the Arian tongue cultivated, and codes of law compiled; when tribes had separated under particular princes, and founded different governments in various parts of the country; when religious schisms had begun to arise, anti-Brahmanical sects had increased, political dissensions and civil war had spread their effects—that the migrations in a westerly and north-westerly direction which terminated in the extension of the Arian tongue over the geographical zone," [including Ariana, Persia, Armenia, Phrygia, Greece, Italy, Germany, etc. etc.], which he had "pointed out, took place."

I have stated the opinion of Mr. Curzon on this question, together with his arguments, in considerable detail, as it represents the view to which the Indian reader will, no doubt, incline as the most reasonable (see above, p. 259); and it is therefore only fair that all that can be urged in its behalf should be fully stated.

Before discussing Mr. Curzon's hypothesis, I shall adduce the statement given by Mr. Elphinstone (History of India, vol. i., p. 95, ff., 1st edition) on the same subject. It will be seen that after reviewing the arguments on both sides, this distinguished author leaves it undecided whether the Hindus sprang from a country external to Hindustan, or were autochthonous.

"On looking back to the information collected from the Code [of Manu] we observe the three twice-born classes forming the whole community embraced by the law, and the Sudras in a servile and degraded condition. Yet it appears that there are cities governed by Sudra kings, in which Brahmins are advised not to reside (chap. iv. 61), and that there are 'whole territories inhabited by Sudras, overwhelmed with atheists, and deprived of Brahmins' (chap. viii. 22). The three twice-born classes are directed invariably to dwell in the country between the Himawat and the Vindya Mountains, from the eastern to the western ocean. But though the three chief classes are confined to this tract, a Sudra distressed for subsistence may dwell where he chooses (chap. ii. 21–24). It seems impossible not to conclude from all this that the twice-born men were a conquering people; that the servile class were the subdued aborigines; and that the independent Sudra towns were in such of the small territories, into which Hindostan was divided, as still retained their independence, while the whole of the tract beyond the Vindya Mountains remained as yet untouched by the invaders, and unpenetrated by their religion. A doubt, however, soon suggests itself whether the conquerors were a foreign people, or a local tribe, like the Dorians in Greece; or whether, indeed, they were not merely a portion of one of the native states (a religious sect, for instance) which had outstripped their fellow-citizens in knowledge, and appropriated all the advantages of the society to themselves.

"The different appearance of the higher classes from the Sudras, which is so observable to this day, might incline us to think them foreigners; but without entirely denying this argument (as far at least as relates to the Brahmins and Cshetriyas), we must advert to some considerations which greatly weaken its force.

"The class most unlike the Brahmins are the Chandalas, who are nevertheless originally the offspring of a Brahmin mother, and who might have been expected to have preserved their resemblance to their parent stock, as, from the very lowness of their caste, they are prevented mixing with any race but their own.[83] Difference of habits and employments is, of itself, sufficient to create as great a dissimilarity as exists between the Brahmin and the Sudra; and the hereditary separation of professions in India would contribute to keep up and to increase such a distinction.

"It is opposed to their foreign origin, that neither in the Code [of Manu], nor, I believe, in the Vedas, nor in any book that is certainly older than the Code, is there any allusion to a prior residence, or to a knowledge of more than the name of any country out of India. Even mythology goes no further than the Himalaya chain, in which is fixed the habitation of the gods.

"The common origin of the Sanskrit language with those of the West leaves no doubt that there was once a connexion between the nations by whom they are used; but it proves nothing regarding the place where such a connexion subsisted, nor about the time, which might have been in so early a stage of their society as to prevent its throwing any light on the history of the individual nations. To say that it spread from a central point is a gratuitous assumption, and even contrary to analogy; for emigration and civilization have not spread in a circle, but from east to west. Where, also, could the central point be, from which a language could spread over India, Greece, and Italy, and yet leave Chaldea, Syria, and Arabia untouched?

[83] [See the first volume of this work, 2nd edition, p. 481, and Manu x. 12, there quoted. It is clear, however, that we are not to take these accounts of the formation of the different castes, written at a time when the Brahmanical system was fully developed, and in the interest of its defenders, as furnishing the true history of their origin. See Lassen, Ind. Ant., 1st ed., i. 407, and 2nd ed., pp. 485, f.—J. M.]

"The question, therefore, is still open. There is no reason whatever for thinking that the Hindus ever inhabited any country but their present one; and as little for denying that they may have done so before the earliest trace of their records or traditions."[84]

Mr. Elphinstone then proceeds to explain how he thinks castes may have originated.

SECT. VII.—Central Asia the cradle of the Arians: opinions of Schlegel, Lassen, Benfey, Müller, Spiegel, Renan, and Pictet.

These views of Mr. Curzon, of which I have given a summary in the preceding section, are opposed to the general consent of European scholars. A. W. von Schlegel, Lassen, Benfey, Müller, Weber, Roth, Spiegel, Renan, and Pictet, however differing on other points, all concur in this, that the cradle of the Indians, as well as of the other branches of the Indo-Germanic race, is to be sought for in some country external to India.

I shall proceed to give some extracts from the writings of these eminent authors; and shall finish with a summary of the arguments which seem to carry most weight in favour of the conclusion which they have adopted.

The first authority whom I shall cite is A. W. von Schlegel, who, in an essay "On the Origin of the Hindus,"[85] systematically discusses the question under consideration in all its bearing. He treats of the migratory movements of ancient nations, of the traditions of the Hindus regarding their own origin, of the diversities of races, of the physiological character of the Hindus and of the indigenous Indian tribes, of the bearing of comparative philology on the history of nations, on the relations of the Arian languages to each other, and finally deduces the results to which he is led by the convergence of all these various lines of investigation. As I have already treated at length of some of these subjects, I shall only cite two passages, the first of which furnishes a reply to Mr. Curzon's argument against the immigration of the Hindus from any foreign region, drawn from the absence of any national tradition to that effect. It is as follows:—

[84] See Appendix, note G.

[85] De l'Origine des Hindous, published originally in the second volume of the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, London, 1834; and reprinted in his Essais Littéraires et Historiques, Bonn, 1842.

"In inquiring into the birth-place of any people, and into the route by which, and the period at which, they have travelled to their present abodes, we are naturally tempted, first of all, to interrogate the popular tradition on these points: but if we do so, it may easily happen that either no answer at all, or a false one, will be obtained. An illiterate people, ignorant of writing, which has adopted a stationary life, after a long and arduous migration, might, after a few centuries, easily lose all recollection of its change of habitation: or, if certain vestiges of such a change were preserved, it might be impossible for a people so circumstanced to indicate with precision the point of departure; as for this purpose a general knowledge of the shape of continents and of seas would be necessary. It has often happened that tribes in a barbarous state have emigrated, either impelled by necessity, or to avoid some powerful neighbour. The utmost that such tribes could do might be to direct their journey with tolerable exactness according to the four cardinal points: shaping their course so as to avoid any unexpected difficulties which might arise, they would suffer themselves to be guided by chance; and their only measure of distance would be the fatigue and the duration of their march." (Essais, p. 444.)

The following is the passage in which Schlegel sums up the results of his researches:—

"If we admit (and it is my conviction that the more deeply the subject is investigated the more indubitable will the conclusion appear) that the derivation of the [Indo-European] languages from one common parent justifies the inference that the nations who spoke them also issued from one common stock; that their ancestors, at a certain epoch, belonged to one sole nation, which became divided and subdivided as its expansion proceeded;—the question naturally arises, what was the primeval seat of that parent nation? It is nowise probable that the migrations which have peopled so large a part of the globe should have commenced at its southern extremity, and have been constantly directed from that point towards the north-west. On the contrary, every thing concurs to persuade us that the colonies set out from a central region in divergent directions. According to this supposition, the distances which the colonists would have to traverse up to the time of their definitive establishment, become less immense; the vicissitudes of climate to which they were exposed, become less abrupt, and many of the emigrant tribes would thus make an advantageous exchange, as regards fertility of soil and the temperature of the air. And where is this central country to be sought for, if not in the interior of the great continent, in the neighbourhood, and to the east of the Caspian Sea? It may perhaps be objected that the country in question is now occupied by people of a different race: but to how many countries has it not happened to undergo a total change of their inhabitants? The prolific parent-country of so many swarms of expatriated colonists might, from that very circumstance, be converted into a desert. . . . It is probable that, since the commencement of history, the nature of this country has changed, and that in former times it was more favourable than now to agriculture and to population. According to my hypothesis, then, the ancestors of the Persians and Hindus must have emigrated from their early seats towards the south-west and the south-east; and the forefathers of the European nations towards the west and the north. . . . I conceive that the tribes which migrated towards Europe followed two great routes; the one along the northern shores of the Black Sea; while the other traversed Asia Minor, and crossed the Ægean Sea, or the Hellespont, Thrace, Illyria, and the Adriatic. It was indubitably by this latter route that Greece and Italy received their colonists." (Essais, p. 514–517.)

Professor Lassen also decides against the hypothesis that India was the birth-place of the Indo-European races. He says: —[86]

"It is, as we have seen, a result of modern investigation that the ancient language of the Indians is so intimately related to those of the other Indo-Germanic nations as to establish the original unity both of these languages and nations. We are therefore driven to the conclusion either—1st, that the Indians migrated to India from some other primeval seat; or, 2nd, that all the kindred Indo-Germanic nations had their origin in India. The following considerations determine us to decide in favour of the former of these alternatives.

"It would, first, be an improbable supposition that the nations which are now so widely extended should have been derived from the remotest member of the entire series. Their common cradle must be sought, if not in the very centre, at all events in such a situation as to render a diffusion towards the different regions of the world practicable. This condition is not well fulfilled by supposing India to be the point of departure. Secondly, none of the phenomena of speech, customs, or ideas observable among the other cognate nations indicate an Indian origin. Of the countries which were anciently occupied by the great Indo-Germanic family, India was the most peculiar, and differed the most widely from the others; and it would be very unaccountable that no trace of these Indian peculiarities should have been preserved by any Celtic race in later times, if they had all originally dwelt in India. Among the names of plants and animals which are common to all these nations there is none which is peculiar to India.[87] The most widely diffused word for any species of corn (yava) denotes not rice, but barley. Thirdly, for a decision of this question, the manner in which India is geographically distributed among the different nations by which it is occupied is of great importance. The diffusion of the Arians towards the south points to the conclusion that they came from the north-west, from the country to the north of the Vindhya, probably from the region bordering on the Jumna, and the eastern part of the Punjab. Their extension to the east, between the Himālaya and the Vindhya, also indicates the same countries as their earlier seats. We find, moreover, evident traces of the Arians, in their advance from the north-west, having severed asunder the earlier population of Hindustan, and driven one portion of it towards the northern, and another portion towards the southern, hills. Further, we cannot assume that the Arians themselves were the earlier inhabitants who were pushed aside; for the inhabitants of the Dekhan, like those of the Vindhya range, appear always as the weaker and retiring party, who were driven back by the Arians. We cannot ascribe to the non-Arian tribes the power of having forced themselves forward through the midst of an earlier Arian population to the seats which they eventually occupied in the centre of the country; but, on the contrary, everything speaks in favour of their having been originally settled in those tracts where we find them at a later period, and of their having once occupied a more extensive territory. These non-Arians were in fact feebler races, like the Australian negroes of the Archipelago and the red men of America. The Arians, on the other hand, were a more perfectly organized, enterprising, and creative people, and were consequently the more recent; just as the earth has at a later period produced the more perfect classes of plants and animals. Finally, the same thing is shown by the political relation of the two branches of the population. The Arians take up for themselves, i.e. for the three highest castes, a position of the most complete contrast to the aboriginal tribes, first of all by the name of 'Ārya, and next by their prerogatives; for the name of 'dvija,' 'twice-born,' with the higher rank connected with it, is the exclusive designation of the three upper classes. The Arians in this way mark themselves out as the superior and conquering race. In confirmation of this we can also adduce an outward mark, that of complexion. The word for caste in Sanskrit (varṇa) originally signified 'colour.' The castes therefore were distinguished by their complexion. But, as is well known, the Brahmans have a fairer colour than the Śūdras and Chaṇḍālas; and the Kshatriyas and Vaiśyas, who were also Arians, must have participated in the same fair complexion. We are thus led to the conclusion, which would be deducible even from the affinity of language, that the Arian Indians originally distinguished themselves as white men from the dark aborigines; and this accords with the assumption that they came from a more northern country."

[86] Indian Antiquities, first edition, p. 512, ff.; second edition, p. 613.

[87] [This circumstance, however, might be accounted for, as Weber remarks (Modern Investigations on Ancient India, p. 10), by the names being forgotten, from the plants and animals being unknown in western countries. See further on.—J.M.]

That the Arians were not autochthonous in India, but came from some country to the north, is also the opinion of Professor Max Müller.

"At the first dawn of traditional history we see these Arian tribes migrating across the snow of the Himālaya southward toward the 'Seven Rivers' (the Indus, the five rivers of the Panjāb, and the Sarasvatī), and ever since India has been called their home. That before this time they had been living in more northern regions, within the same precincts with the ancestors of the Greeks, the Italians, Slavonians, Germans, and Celts, is a fact as firmly established as that the Normans of William the Conqueror were the Northmen of Scandinavia. The evidence of language is irrefragable, and it is the only evidence worth listening to with regard to ante-historical periods." . . .

"While most of the members of the Arian family followed this glorious path" [i.e. to the north-west], "the southern tribes were slowly migrating to the mountains which gird the north of India. After crossing the narrow passes of the Hindu-kush or the Himālaya, they conquered or drove before them, as it seems without much effort, the original inhabitants of the Trans-Himalayan countries. They took for their guides the principal rivers of Northern India, and were led by them to new homes in their beautiful and fertile valleys." (Last Results of Sanskrit Researches, in Bunsen's Out. of Phil. of Un. Hist., vol. i., pp. 129 and 131; Anc. Sansk. Lit., pp. 12, 13, 15; Chips, i. 63, 65.)

Again, in the Last Results of the Turanian Researches (Bunsen, as above, p. 340), the same able writer remarks: "It is now generally admitted that this holy-land of the Brahmans, even within its earliest and narrowest limits, between the Sarasvatī and Drishadvatī, was not the birth-place of the sons of Manu. The Arians were strangers in the land of the Indus and the Ganges, but no one can now determine the exact spot whence they came, and where they had been previously settled. Traditions current among the Brahmans as to the northern regions, considered the seats of the blessed, may be construed into something like a recollection of their northern immigration—holy places along the rivers of northern India, where even in later times Brahmans went to learn the purest Sanskrit, may mark the stations of their onward course—the principal capitals of their ancient kingdoms may prove the slow but steady progress toward the mouths of the principal rivers of India—but with the sources of those rivers, the homes of the Arian strangers vanish from our sight, even after we have reached the highest points of view accessible on Indian ground."

Professor Benfey expresses an equally confident opinion that India was not the original country of the Hindus. His reasons are as follows. After giving some account of the various tribes, by whom southern and central India are occupied, he proceeds: "We thus find the whole of the Dekhan covered with the remains of a nation of which it is highly probable that the several parts were connected by affinity. But we know with certainty that the Sanskrit-speaking people did not establish themselves in the Dekhan till a later period, and as colonists, who apparently began their occupation by making themselves masters of the coasts. . . . Now it is hardly probable that those barbarous tribes could have pushed themselves forward into the midst of the Arian Indians at a period when the latter had attained to the height of their social and political development; and yet it is at this very period that we already find mention made of several of these barbarous races. We are therefore compelled to recognize the latter as being the earlier inhabitants of the Dekhan, who were reduced to subjection by the arms of the Sanskrit-speaking race, and either incorporated into their community as a servile caste, or driven back into the recesses of the mountains."—Indien,[88] p. 9. In p. 12, the same author proceeds: "From the foregoing sections it appears that the Sanskrit-speaking people, who called themselves Aryas and Viśes, can be shown to have immigrated from foreign regions into their new abodes. It can be positively demonstrated that they once formed one nation, spoke one speech, and possessed the same civilization, with the races who are allied to them by language, viz., the Aryas properly so called (i.e. the Iranians), the Greeks, Latins, etc. It is scarcely to be doubted that the theatre of this early union was one of the countries of Asia; but the time is so far antecedent to the dawn of history, and so many commotions, migrations, and so forth, must have swept over the region which they formerly occupied, that every trace which the Sanskrit-speaking race might have left of their residence there has been obliterated."

The following remarks of Professor Spiegel (Introduction to Avesta, vol. ii., pp. cvi. ff.) will serve as an answer to Mr. Curzon's allegation that the language and mythology of the Persians are derived from those of India: "Though it is universally admitted that a primeval country is to be assumed, where the Arians lived in pre-historical times as one people, and from which they gradually migrated; and although it is allowed that the Indians and Iranians must have dwelt together for a length of time in this, or in some other adjacent country, even after the separation of the other branches; still it is by no means clear what should be regarded as that primeval country. Agreeably to Mr. Curzon's assumption, India was the fatherland of the Indo-Germanic races. From that country the individual branches of that stock migrated westwards, and last of all the Iranians, who continued to dwell in the immediate vicinity of their original country, which henceforward remained in the sole possession of a single race, the Indians. According to this assumption, the relation of Iran to India admits of a very simple adjustment; India is the cradle, the Indian language (i.e. the Vedic Sanskrit) is the mother-tongue of all the Indo-Germanic nations. If, accordingly, an important affinity is discernible both in language and in ideas between the Indians and Iranians, the reason of it is simply this, that the Iranians emigrated last from India, and thus carried with them the largest share of Indian characteristics. On this view the older monuments of Iranian literature would stand in the same relation to the Vedic literature that the Pali and Prakrit stand to the later Sanskrit. Lassen[89] had, however, previously declared himself against this assumption that India was the cradle of the Indo-Germanic races; and his arguments have not been invalidated by Mr. Curzon. And as regards the relation of the old Iranian dialect to the Sanskrit of the Vedas, I boldly assert that we cannot possibly suppose the former to stand in any such relation of dependence to the latter as the Pali or the Prakrit stands in to the later Sanskrit; and no one who impartially examines the question will do otherwise than support my view.

[88] In Ersch and Gruber's Encyclopædia (German).

"We may therefore at once set aside the supposition that India was the cradle of the Indo-Germanic race. We prefer to assume with Lassen that their original abode is to be sought in the extreme east of the Iranian country, in the tract where the Oxus and Jaxartes take their rise.

"But the second question, in regard to language, is not thus determined. For it might still be imagined possible that not only the Indians, but also the Iranians along with them, had migrated to the countries on the Indus; and that the Iranians, perhaps owing to religious differences, had retraced their steps to the westward. The great affinity between the Sanskrit and the ancient Bactrian languages, and the resemblances between the mythologies of the Vedas on the one hand, and the Avesta on the other, would then admit of the same explanation, viz., that the Iranians had spent the Vedic period, or at least a great part of it, in conjunction with the Indians; and hence the close affinity between their ideas. This is in fact the view of a scholar who is very familiar with this branch of study, Professor Max Müller.[90]

[89] Ind. Ant. i. 1st ed., p. 512; 2nd ed., p. 613. See above, p. 308, ff.

[90] "Last Results of the Persian Researches," p. 113, reprinted in "Chips," i. 86. "If regarded from a Vaidik point of view, . . . the gods of the Zoroastrians come out once more as mere reflexions of the primitive and authentic gods of the Vedas. It can now be proved, even by geographical evidence, that the Zoroastrians had been settled in India before they immigrated into Persia. I say the Zoroastrians, for we have no evidence to bear us out in making the same assertion of the nations of Media and Persia in general. That the Zoroastrians and their ancestors started from India during the Vaidik period can be proved as distinctly as that the inhabitants of Massilia started from Greece. The geographical traditions in the First Fargard of the Vendidad do not interfere with this opinion. If ancient and genuine, they would embody a remembrance preserved by the Zoroastrians, but forgotten by the Vaidik poets—a remembrance of times previous to their first common descent into the country of the Seven Rivers. If of later origin, and this is more likely, they may represent a geographical conception of the Zoroastrians after they had become acquainted with a larger sphere of countries and nations, subsequent to their emigration from the land of the Seven Rivers." [In the reprint in "Chips," the following note is added: "The purely mythological character of this geographical chapter has been proved by M. Michel Bréal, Journal Asiatique, 1862."] The same opinion is repeated by Professor Müller in his Lectures on the Science of Language, i. 235 (1st edit.): "The Zoroastrians were a colony from northern India. They had been together for a time with the people whose sacred songs have been preserved to us in the Veda. A schism took place and the Zoroastrians migrated westward to Arachosia and Persia. . . . They gave to the new cities, and to the rivers along which they settled, the names of cities and rivers familiar to them, and reminding them of the localities which they had left. Now as a Persian h points to a Sanskrit s, Harôyu would be in Sanskrit Saroyu. One of the sacred rivers of India, a river mentioned in the Veda, ... has the name of Sarayu, the modern Sardju." On this point Mr. Rawlinson coincides with Professor Müller. In the Third Essay appended to the first volume of his Herodotus, p. 403, he thus writes: "The great migration of the Arian race westward from beyond the Indus, simultaneous probably with the movement of a kindred people, the progenitors of the modern Hindoos, eastward and southward to the Ganges, and the Vindhya mountain-range, is an event of which the most sceptical criticism need not doubt, remote though it be, and obscurely seen through the long vista of intervening centuries." From a later part of the same volume, however, Essay xi. p. 669, it clearly appears that Mr. Rawlinson does not regard the country east of the Indus as the earliest abode of the Arians, and that this migration of the Arians westward was, in his opinion, one which followed their original migration from the west to the east: "The Eastern or Arian migration, whereby an Indo-European race became settled upon the Indus, is involved in complete obscurity. We have indeed nothing but the evidence of comparative philology on which distinctly to ground the belief, that there was a time when the ancestors of the Pelasgian, Lydo-Phrygian, Lycian, Thracian, Sarmatian, Teutonic, and Arian races dwelt together, the common possessors of a single language. The evidence thus furnished is, however, conclusive, and compels us to derive the various and scattered nations above enumerated from a single ethnic stock, and to assign them at some time or other a single locality. In

"I cannot agree with this view, as I am quite unable to discover that there is any historical reminiscence by which it can be established.[91] The facts which I have above collected regarding Zoroaster and his religion certainly do not point to the conclusion that he was a Bactrian, much less that the religion of the Bactrians came from India; on the contrary, these accounts seem to lead us to believe that their religion came first from Media. . . . But if there be no historical recollection, what else is there to favour the opinion in question? Surely it cannot be the similarity of structure between the languages of India and Persia! We esteem the Sanskrit so highly, not because it was the original speech of the Indo-Germanic race, but because it stands the nearest to that original language. Now it cannot surprise us that another language of the same family, as the ancient Bactrian is, should have remained on a nearly similar level. It is not in the least at variance with this view that the last-named language is far younger than the Vedic Sanskrit, for it is well known that external circumstances frequently occasion the speedy corruption of one language, while another can long preserve its ancient level. And so in this case, both languages issued in a nearly similar form from one common parent form of speech, and were then developed independently of each other. And as the phenomena of the two the silence of authentic history, Armenia may be regarded as the most probable centre from which they spread; and the Arian race may be supposed to have wandered eastward about the same time that the two other kindred streams began to flow, the one northward across the Caucasus, the other westward over Asia Minor and into Europe. The early history of the Arians is for many ages an absolute blank, but at a period certainly anterior to the fifteenth century before our era they were settled in the tract watered by the upper Indus, and becoming straitened for room, began to send out colonies eastward and westward. On the one side their movements may be traced in the hymns of the Rigveda, where they are seen advancing step by step along the rivers of the Punjab, engaged in constant wars with the primitive Turanian inhabitants, whom they gradually drove before them into the various mountain ranges, where their descendants still exist, speaking Turanian dialects.* On the other, their progress is as distinctly marked in the most early portions of the Zendavesta, the sacred book of the western or Medo-Persic Arians. Leaving their Vedic brethren to possess themselves of the broad plains of Hindoostan, and to become the ancestors of the modern Hindoos, the Zendic or Medo-Persic Arians crossed the high chain of the Hindoo-Koosh, and occupied the region watered by the upper streams of the Oxus."

[91] See, however, App. Note H.

* "See Müller's Essay on the Bengali Language in the Report of the British Association for 1848, p. 329, and Bunsen's Philosophy of Univ. Hist., vol. i. pp. 340–364."

languages do not necessitate the assumption that the ancient Bactrian language has passed through the Vedic Sanskrit, so neither is this view forced upon us by the contents of the Avesta. Reference has, indeed, been made to the points of contact between the legends, and even between the manners and customs exhibited in the Veda and the Avesta. But the few particulars which recur in the Vedas cannot be set against the far larger number of which there is no trace there. Similar common legends have been discovered in the Greek mythology, and yet it has never been imagined by any one, that the ancient Greeks must have believed in the Vedas. We are, therefore, warranted in supposing that in the old Bactrian language and literature we possess the monuments of a people, who certainly lived together with the Indians longer than any of the other kindred races, and have therefore a certain number of religious and other conceptions common to them with the former. But these common elements are so insignificant when compared with those which are of peculiarly Iranian growth, that we are justified in regarding the language and literature as independent Iranian productions. How, and by what causes the separation of the Iranians from the Indians was occasioned, is a point which, owing to our want of information on that early period, can no longer be certainly determined. . . . Among the grounds of it I have (in the first volume, p. 9) referred to a religious alienation between the two nations, but too great importance should not be assigned to this view. Even without assuming any such alienation, it is conceivable that gods who were honoured by the one people, might be degraded to hell by the other.[92] . . . That which gives probability to the idea of an actual alienation between the Indians and Iranians on religious grounds, is the number of such opposing conceptions.

"We must accordingly maintain that the Indians and Iranians have each gone through their own proper development apart from the others. Any points of coincidence between the two must thus be referred to the early pre-Vedic period, not to the era of the special development of either of the two peoples. None of the common features which I have referred to in vol. i. (see above, p. 293, ff.) are of such a character as to make it at all necessary for us to suppose the country bordering on the Indus to have been the scene of their origination. An origin in that locality might, with most probability, be ascribed to the legend of Vṛitrahan, as Indra is designated, as the slayer of Vṛitra, who withholds the clouds and the necessary rain. The word recurs again in the old-Bactrian verethraya, 'victorious:' (the deity, Verethragna, I regard as being certainly of far later origin). From the circumstance that no special sense is assigned to the word in the ancient Bactrian language, I do not conclude, as is commonly done, that in the Avesta it has lost its special meaning; but, on the contrary, I assume that the Indian limitation of the word to Indra did not take place till after the separation of the two peoples, and that the word had originally a more general meaning." (p. cx.)

[92] See Appendix, note I.

The following is the opinion of Professor Weber on the same general question. In his tract, entitled "Modern Investigations on Ancient India," p. 10, after sketching the physical and intellectual condition of the early Āryas, as deducible from the words common to all the Indo-European languages, he proceeds thus:—

"In the picture just now drawn, positive signs are, after all, almost entirely wanting, by which we could recognize the country in which our forefathers dwelt and had their common home. That it was situated in Asia is an old historical axiom: the want of all animals specifically Asiatic in our enumeration above seems to tell against this, but can be explained simply by the fact of these animals not existing in Europe, which occasioned their names to be forgotten, or at least caused them to be applied to other similar animals; it seems, however, on the whole, that the climate of that country was rather temperate than tropical, most probably mild, and not so much unlike that of Europe; from which we are led to seek for it in the highlands of central Asia, which latter has been regarded from time immemorial as the cradle of the human race."

My next quotation is from the work of M. Pictet, "Les Origines Indo-Européennes," in which he endeavours, by an examination of all the accessible data, geographical, and ethnographical, as well as by a survey and comparison of all the terms common to the Arian languages, which refer to climate, to topography, and to natural history, to determine what that country was, which the common ancestors of the Indo-European nations originally inhabited.[93]

[93] M. Pictet's second volume, which appeared in 1863, treats (as already stated,

I shall not attempt to follow the course of M. Pictet's multifarious investigations and reasonings, or to pass any judgment on his particular deductions; but shall content myself with extracting his account of the general results to which he has been conducted.

"By consulting successively national appellations, traditions, geography, philology, and ethnography, we have arrived at the following conclusions:—The Arian people, as they called themselves in opposition to the barbarian, must have occupied a region, of which Bactria may be regarded as the centre. This is the conclusion to which we are at once led by merely comparing the directions followed by the swarms of men who issued from this centre, and which all radiated from it as a point of departure. The geographical configuration of this portion of Asia completely confirms this first induction; for the only possible outlets through which the population could issue occur at the very points where the principal currents of emigration have actually flowed, if we may judge by the ultimate positions of the Arian people, and the scattered traditions which they have preserved of their origin." . .

"We may presume (1) from the order and direction of the migrations which determined the ultimate positions of the Arian races; (2) from the traces of their ancient names, left by the several nations along the routes which they must have followed; and (3) from the more special affinities which connect together the different groups of Arian languages; that the primitive Ariana, at the period of its greatest extension, must have embraced nearly the whole of the region situated between the Hindu-kush, Belurtagh, the Oxus, and the Caspian Sea; and, perhaps, extended a good way into Sogdiana, towards the sources of the Oxus and the Jaxartes. I do not mean that Ariana then formed one strongly constituted state. It is much more probable that it was at that time partitioned among distinct tribes, united solely by the general bond of race, by similarity of manners and language, by a common stock of beliefs and traditions, and by a sentiment of natural brotherhood. This is to be inferred, both from the topographical character of the country and from the successive emigrations which must have followed each other at considerable intervals. I have attempted

p. 294, note,) of the state of material civilization, the social condition, the intellectual, moral, and religious life of this primitive people, before it was broken up into different nations.

in chapter iii. to fix, by approximation, the relative positions of the different branches of the race before their dispersion."

[I introduce here, from p. 51 of M. Pictet's work, the substance of the passage referred to, so far as it relates to the Iranians, Indians, Greeks, and Latins:—

"Assuming Bactria to have been the centre of the region peopled by the primitive Aryas, the Iranians must have possessed its north-east corner, bordering on Sogdiana, towards Belurtagh, and have at first spread towards the east, as far as the high mountain valleys, from which they afterwards descended to colonize Iran. Alongside of them, to the south-east, probably in the fertile regions of Badakhshan, dwelt the Indo-Arians, occupying the slopes of the Hindu-kush, which they had afterwards to cross, or to round, in order to arrive in Cabul, and penetrate thence into northern India. To the south-west, towards the sources of the Artamis and the Bactrus, we should place the Pelasgo-Arians (the Greeks and Latins), who must have advanced thence in the direction of Herat, and continued their migration by Khorasan and Mazenderan to Asia Minor and the Hellespont."]

"Though nothing more than a hypothesis, the preceding distribution appears to account better than any other for the entire facts of the case. But it can be shown, in a more precise manner, that the Aryas must have been originally divided into two groups, the one eastern and the other western, from which, on the one side, the Aryas of Persia and India issued, and on the other the European nations. The principal arguments in support of this statement cannot, however, be unfolded till I come to the sequel of my work. . . . . In regard to the period when the Arian emigrations took place, I may say, by anticipation, that, in all probability, the earliest of them cannot be placed at less than three thousand years before the Christian era, and that, perhaps, they go back to a still remoter period."—(Pictet, Les Aryas Primitifs, pp. 536, ff.)

In the second volume of his work, p. 734, M. Pictet adheres to the same conclusion as to time. He says there: "As the result of all that precedes, I believe I do not exaggerate in placing about three thousand years before our era the epoch of the first movements towards dispersion of the ancient Aryas, whose different migrations must have taken centuries to accomplish down to the period of the definitive establishment of their descendants in the immense tracts which they occupied."

I shall now attempt briefly to sum up the arguments in favour of the conclusion, that the Indo-Arians were not autochthonous, but immigrated into Hindustan from Central Asia.

Mr. Curzon entertains, as we have seen, a different opinion, which he grounds on the assumption that the languages, as well as the mythologies, both of the Persians, and also of the Greeks and Latins, are derived from India. We have already seen (p. 259, ff.) how untenable the notion is that the Greek and Latin languages could have been derived from Sanskrit; and the points of coincidence between the Greek, the Italian, and the Indian mythologies are too few and too remote to justify the idea of their derivation from the Indo-Arians, at any period nearly so recent as the hypothesis would require. I am not prepared to pronounce it altogether inconceivable that the Greek and Latin races could have emigrated from India within any period short of 1500 years B.C., without distinct traces of this migration being discoverable in their own literature, or in that of other nations; for, as we have already seen (p. 307), the traces of such movements may soon disappear from the traditions of an illiterate people. But if the languages and religions of Greece and Italy be not derived from those of India, there is no ground for this hypothesis. And any emigration from India at an earlier period than that indicated appears to be improbable. Fifteen hundred years before the Christian era, India, if (as it no doubt was) already occupied by the Indo-Arians, must, at all events, have been very thinly peopled. The Āryas had not, at that period, extended themselves beyond the north-west quarter of India.[94] Large tracts both to the east and west of the Ganges, and to the north of the Vindhya range, must then have been still uncultivated. While such facilities remained for the occupation of new territory for the purposes of agriculture or pasturage, in their own immediate neighbourhood, it does not appear what sufficient motive could have existed to impel any branch of the small Arian population to desert the fertile plains and the warm temperature of India (to which, by the hypothesis, they must have been long accustomed) for the rugged mountains and the barren and less genial regions which lay to the north-west and west of the Indus.

[94] This will be made evident by the details which I shall shortly adduce relative to their diffusion in Hindustan.

As regards the derivation of the Iranian language and mythology from the Indian (which may be asserted with more show of probability than in the case of the Greeks and Latins), I may place the authority and the arguments, just quoted, of Professor Spiegel in opposition to those of Mr. Curzon.

I have so far examined Mr. Curzon's theory generally, and without reference to the particular period when he supposes the movement of the Arians to the westward to have taken place. But when we advert to the late era at which he supposes it to have occurred, as stated above, p. 303, f., in his own words, his theory acquires a still higher degree of improbability. If the Arians, or rather (in that case) the already Brahmanized Indians, had invaded and conquered the countries lying to the west of the Indus at a period subsequent to their occupation of the Dekhan and to the full development of their civilization and their peculiar institutions, it is scarcely conceivable that no trace of this sweeping invasion should have remained, either in their own literature or in that of any of the western nations, and that no specifically Brahmanical influences should have been discoverable in the religious or political systems of Persia, Greece, Rome, or Germany; for the period at which such a supposed extension of the Brahmanical Indians took place could not have been an "ante-Hellenic" era (p. 187); nor, consequently, is it imaginable that all record of it should have disappeared in a presumed "age of darkness" (p. 186). The "ante-Hellenic" period terminated nearly 1000 years B.C., and the Brahmanical institutions could not have been fully developed very long before that time.

Mr. Elphinstone, as we have seen, does not decide in favour of either theory, but leaves it in doubt whether the Hindus were an autochthonous or an immigrant nation. As a justification of his doubt, he refers to the circumstance that all other known migrations of ancient date have proceeded from east to west, and have not radiated from a common centre. But this reasoning cannot claim to offer more than a limited presumption, and cannot be set against the stronger probabilities which, in this case, are suggested by the subsequent history of the different Arian nations in favour of a radiation from one common centre.

The mutual affinities of the Arian tongues imply, as we have seen, the anterior existence of one parent language, from which they all issued, and conduct us by probable inference to the conclusion that the several nations who spoke those separate dialects were all descended, though not, perhaps, without intermixture with other races, from the same common ancestors, who employed the parent-language in question, and formed one Arian nation inhabiting the same country. As the question where this country was situated cannot be decided by history, we are thrown back upon speculation; and we are therefore led to inquire what that region was which by its position was most likely to have formed the point of departure from which nations situated in the opposite quarters ultimately occupied by the Indians, the Iranians, the Greeks, the Romans, the Germans, and the Slavonians, must have issued in order to reach their several abodes by the most easy and natural routes. The point of departure which best satisfies this condition is, in the opinion of the eminent writers whom I have cited, some region of Central Asia, lying to the north-west of India. We may, therefore, place the cradle of the Arians in or near Bactria.

SECT. VIII.—On the National Traditions of the Indians regarding their own Original Country.

I shall now inquire whether there are any data to be found among the traditions of the Indians or the Persians, from which we can derive any confirmation of the conclusion to which we have been led by other considerations. I must, however, begin with a candid admission that, so far as I know, none of the Sanskrit books, not even the most ancient, contain any distinct reference or allusion to the foreign origin of the Indians. This does not, perhaps, afford any just ground of surprise. The Vedic hymns themselves do not carry us back to the first ages of the nation, but contain allusions to personages and events of a still earlier date. The past history of their race is very liable to be forgotten by an unlettered people, as is remarked by Schlegel, in the passage quoted above, p. 307; and any traditions which may at one time have existed of the early Arian migrations might very easily have been overgrown and effaced by the luxuriant harvest of legendary inventions for which India has been remarkable from the earliest ages. This process of obscuration is distinctly traceable in other parts of Indian history, and it has been frequently remarked how greatly the myths and even the allusions of the Vedas have been amplified and distorted by more recent mythologists. I shall, however, proceed to quote such passages as may appear in any way to imply the tradition of a foreign origin.

First. In the Rigveda,[95] an expression occurs from which we might infer that the Indians still retained some recollection of their having at one time occupied a colder country. Reference is made to winter in the following texts:—R.V. i. 64, 14: Tokam pushyema tanayaṁ śataṁ himāḥ | "May we cherish sons and descendants a hundred winters!"—v. 54, 15: Idaṁ su me Maruto haryata vacho yasya tarema tarasā śataṁ himāḥ | "Be pleased, O Maruts, with this hymn of mine, by the force of which may we pass through a hundred winters!"—vi. 4, 8: Madema śatahimāḥ suvīrāḥ | "May we rejoice, living a hundred winters, with vigorous offspring!" The same words are repeated in vi. 10, 7; vi. 12, 6; vi. 13, 6; vi. 17, 15. In vi. 48, 8, it is said to Agni: Pāhi aṁhasaḥ sameddhārāṁ śataṁ himāḥ stotṛibhyo ye cha dadati | "Preserve him who kindles thee from calamity for a hundred winters, and [preserve also] those who give (gifts) to thy worshippers." And in ii. 1, 11, we find the words: Tvam Iḷā śatahimā'si dakshase | "Thou (Agni) art Iḷā, bestowing a hundred winters on the wise man." And in ix. 74, 8, we find the words, Kakshīvate śatahimāya, "To Kakshīvat, who has lived a hundred winters." The phrase, Paśyema śaradaḥ śataṁ jīvema śaradaḥ śatam, "May we see—may we live—a hundred autumns," also occurs in R.V. vii. 66, 16. See also R.V. x. 18, 4. This may, perhaps, be a more recent form of the expression, dating from a period when the recollection of the colder regions from which they had migrated was becoming forgotten by the Āryas.[96]

[95] Wilson, Introd. to Rigveda, vol. i. p. xlii.

[96] I omit here the quotation from the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 8, 1, 1, f. containing the oldest form of the legend of the Deluge extant in the Indian records, as well as the version of the same story given in the Mahābhārata, Vanaparva, vv. 12746, ff., together with all the passages from the hymns relating to the descent of the Arian Indians from Manu, which were given in the first edition of this volume, pp. 324-331, because all these texts, and many others besides, have now been quoted in the second edition of the first volume of this work, pp. 161-238; and because, further, it is doubtful whether the correct reading in the passage of the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa i. 8, 1, 5, is atidudrāva "he passed over," or adhidudrāva, which would

Second. In the allusions made to the Uttara (or northern) Kurus in the Indian books, there may be some reminiscence of an early connexion with the countries to the north of the Himālaya. The following passage from the Aitareya-brāhmaṇa, viii. 14 (quoted by Weber, Indische Studien, i. 218), contains the oldest reference to this people of which I am aware:—Tasmād etasyām udīchyāṁ diśi ye ke cha pareṇa Himavantaṁ janapadāḥ "Uttarakuravaḥ Uttaramadrāḥ" iti vairājyāya te 'bhishichyante | "virāḷ" ity etān abhishiktān āchakshate | "Wherefore in this northern region, all the people who dwell beyond the Himavat, [called] the Uttara Kurus and the Uttara Madras, are consecrated to glorious rule (vairājya). Those who are consecrated are called virāḷ."

The following quotation from another part of the Aitareya-brāhmaṇa, viii. 23, will, however, show that even at the early period when that work was composed, the country of the Uttara Kurus had come to be regarded as belonging to the domain of mythology: Etam ha vai Aindram mahābhishekaṁ Vāsishṭhaḥ Sātyahavyo 'tyarātaye Jānantapaye provācha | tasmād u Atyarātir Jānantapir arājā san vidyayā samantaṁ sarvataḥ pṛithivīṁ jayan parīyāya | sa ha uvācha Vāsishṭhaḥ Sātyahavyaḥ "ajaishīr vai samantaṁ sarvataḥ pṛithivīm | mahan mā gamaya" iti | Sa ha uvācha Atyarātir Jānantapir "yadā brāhmaṇa Uttarakurūn jayeyam atha tvam u ha eva pṛithivyai rājā syāḥ senāpatir eva te 'haṁ syām" iti | Sa ha uvācha Vāsishṭhaḥ Sātyahavyaḥ "devakshetraṁ vai tad na vai tad martyo jetum arhati | adruksho vai me ā 'taḥ idaṁ dade" iti | tato ha Atyarātiṁ Jānantapim āttavīryaṁ niḥśukram amitratapano S'ushminaḥ S'aivyo jaghāna | tasmād evaṁvidushe brāhmaṇāya evaṁchakrushe na kshatriyo druhyed na id rāshṭrād avapadyeyad na id vāmaprāṇo jahat| "Sātyahavya of the race of Vasishṭha declared this great inauguration, similar to Indra's, to Atyarāti, son of Janantapa; and in consequence Atyarāti, who was not a king, by [that] knowledge traversed the whole earth round, reducing it to subjection. Sātyahavya said to him, 'Thou hast subdued the whole earth round: exalt me now to greatness.' Atyarāti replied, 'When, O Brāhman, I conquer the Uttara Kurus, then thou shalt be king of the earth, and I will be only thy general.' Sātyahavya rejoined, 'That is the land of the gods; no not so distinctly convey the same sense; and would leave it doubtful whether the writer intended to represent Manu as having crossed the Himālaya from the northward.

mortal may conquer it: thou hast acted injuriously towards me; I take back, therefore, that [which I have bestowed].' In consequence of this the foe-destroying Śushmiṇa, the son of Śivi, slew Atyarâti, son of Janantapa, who had [thus] become bereft of his vigour, and destitute of strength. Wherefore let no Kshatriya treat injuriously a Brâhman who possesses this knowledge and has performed this rite, lest he lose his kingdom and his life." (See Colebrooke's Misc. Ess., i. 43.)

The northern Kurus are also mentioned in the Râmâyaṇa.[97] In the "description of the northern region," iv. 44, 82, ff. we have the following account: Tân gachhata hari-śreshṭhâḥ viśâlân Uttarân Kurûn | dânaśîlân mahâbhâgân nityatushṭân gatajvarân | na tatra śîtam ushṇaṁ vâ na jarâ nâmayas tathâ | na śoko na bhayaṁ vâ'pi na varshaṁ nâ'pi bhâskaraḥ | "Go, most excellent of monkeys, to those illustrious Uttara Kurus, who are liberal, prosperous, perpetually happy, and undecaying. In their country there is neither cold nor heat, nor decrepitude, nor disease, nor grief, nor fear, nor rain, nor sun." A great deal more follows in the same hyperbolical strain, and then it is added (verse 117): Kurûṁs tân samatikramya uttare payasâṁ nidhiḥ | tatra somagirir nâma hiraṇmaya-samo mahân | and in verses 121, 122: na kathanchana gantavyaṁ kurûṇâm uttareṇa cha | anyeshâm api bhûtânâṁ na tatra kramate gatiḥ | sa hi somagirir nâma devânâm api durgamaḥ | "Beyond the Kurus to the north lies the ocean; and there the vast Soma-mountain is situated, resembling a mass of gold." "You must not travel to the north of the Kurus. That region is untrodden by the steps of other living beings also. For that Soma-mountain is difficult of access even to the gods themselves."[98]

In the same way, when Arjuna, in the course of his conquests, as described in the Digvijaya Parva of the Mahâbhârata, comes to the [97] See also the first volume of this work, second edition, p. 493, f.

[98] These quotations are from Gorresio's edition. The Bombay edition, sec. 43 of the same book, vv. 38, and 57, f., is less diffuse. It says, v. 38: Uttarâḥ Kuravas tatra kṛitapuṇya-pratiśrayâḥ | "There are situated the Uttara Kurus, the abodes of those who have performed works of merit:" and in v. 57: Na kathanchana gantavyaṁ Kurûṇâm uttareṇa vaḥ | anyeshâm api bhûtânâṁ nânukrâmati vai gatiḥ | 58 | sa hi somagirir nâma devânâm api durgamaḥ. "You must not on any account go to the northward of the Kurus: nor may any other creatures proceed further. For that Soma-mountain is difficult of access even to the gods."

country of the Uttara Kurus in Harivarsha, he is thus addressed by the guards at the gate of the city (Sabhā Parva, verses 1045, ff.): Pārtha nedaṁ tvayā śakyam puraṁ jetuṁ kathanchana | . . . idam puraṁ yaḥ praviśed dhruvaṁ na sa bhaved naraḥ | . . . na chātra kinchij jetavyam Arjunātra pradṛiśyate | Uttarāḥ Kuravo hy ete nātra yuddham pravartate | pravishṭo 'pi hi Kaunteya neha drakshyasi kinchana | na hi mānusha-dehena śakyam atrābhivīkshitum | "This city, O king, cannot in any way be subdued by thee. . . . He who enters this city must be more than mortal. . . . There is nothing to be beheld here, O Arjuna, which thou mayest conquer. Here are the Uttara Kurus, whom no one attempts to combat. And even if thou shouldst enter, thou couldst behold nothing; for here no one with a mortal body can see."

On this passage (part of which is a mere repetition of the Ait. Brāh. viii. 23) Professor Lassen remarks (in the Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes, ii. 62): "At the furthest accessible extremity of the earth appears Harivarsha, with the northern Kurus. The region of Hari or Vishṇu belongs to the system of mythical geography; but the case is different with the Uttara Kurus. Here there is a real basis of geographical fact; of which fable has only taken advantage, without creating it. The Uttara Kurus were formerly quite independent of the mythical system of 'dvīpas,' though they were included in it at an early date." Again the same writer says at p. 65: "That the conception of the Uttara Kurus is based upon an actual country, and not on mere invention, is proved (1) by the way in which they are mentioned in the Vedas" [the Aitareya-brāhmaṇa, as just quoted p. 324]; "(2) by the existence of Uttara Kuru in historical times as a real country; and (3) by the way in which the legend makes mention of that region as the home of primitive customs. To begin with the last point, the Mahābhārata speaks as follows of the freer mode of life which women led in the early world, Book I., verses 4719–22: Anāvṛitāḥ kila purā striyaḥ āsan varānane | kāma-chāra-vihāriṇyaḥ svatantrāś chāruhāsini | tāsāṁ vyuchcharamāṇānāṁ kaumārāt subhage patīn | nādharmo 'bhūd varārohe sa hi dharmaḥ purā 'bhavat | taṁ chaiva dharmam paurāṇaṁ tiryagyoni-gatāḥ prājāḥ | adyāpy anuvidhīyante kāma-krodha-vivarjitāḥ | pramāṇa-dṛishṭo dharmo 'yam pūjyate cha maharshibhiḥ | Uttareshu cha rambhoru Kurushv adyāpi

pūjyate | 'Women were formerly unconfined, and roved about at their pleasure, independent. Though in their youthful innocence, they went astray from their husbands, they were guilty of no offence; for such was the rule in early times. This ancient custom is even now the law for creatures born as brutes, which are free from lust and anger. This custom is supported by authority, and is observed by great ṛishis, and it is still practised among the northern Kurus.' [99]

"The idea which is here conveyed is that of the continuance in one part of the world of that original blessedness which prevailed in the golden age. To afford a conception of the happy condition of the southern Kurus it is said in another place" (Mahābh., i. 4346: Uttaraiḥ Kurubhiḥ sārdhaṁ dakshiṇāḥ Kuravas tathā | vispardhamānāḥ vyaharaṁs tathā devarshi-chāraṇaiḥ |) "'The southern Kurus vied in happiness with the northern Kurus, and with the divine ṛishis and bards.'"

Professor Lassen goes on to say: "Ptolemy (vi. 16)[100] is also acquainted with Uttara Kuru. He speaks of a mountain, a people, and a city called Ottorokorra. Most of the other ancient authors who elsewhere mention this name have it from him. It is a part of the country which he calls Serica; according to him the city lies twelve degrees west from the metropolis of Sera, and the mountain extends from thence far to the eastward. As Ptolemy has misplaced the whole of eastern Asia beyond the Ganges, the relative position which he assigns will guide us better than the absolute one, which removes Ottorokorra so far to the east that a correction is inevitable.

"According to my opinion the Ottorokorra of Ptolemy must be sought for to the east of Kashghar."

Lassen also thinks that Megasthenes had the Uttara Kurus in view

[99] [I am myself responsible for the translation of these lines. The practice of promiscuous intercourse was, according to the legend, abolished by S'vētakētu, son of the ṛishi Uddālaka, who was incensed at seeing his mother led away by a strange Brāhman. His father told him there was no reason to be angry, as: anavṛitāḥ hi sarveshām varṇānām anganāḥ bhuvi | yathā gāvaḥ sthitās tāta sve sve vārṇe tathā prajāḥ | "The women of all castes on earth are unconfined: just as cattle are situated, so are human beings, too, within their respective castes." S'vētakētu, however, could not endure this custom, and established the rule that henceforward wives should remain faithful to their husbands, and husbands to their wives. Mahābhārata, i. verses 4724-33.—J.M.]

[100] The original passage will be given in appendix, note J.

when he referred to the Hyperboreans, who were fabled by Indian writers to live a thousand years.[101] In his Indian Antiquities (Ind. Alterthumskunde, 2nd ed., i. 612, f. and note) the same writer concludes that the descriptions given in such passages as those above cited relative to the Uttara Kurus are to be taken as pictures of an ideal paradise, and not as founded on any recollections of the northern origin of the Kurus. Still it is probable, he thinks, that some such reminiscences originally existed, and still survived in the Vedic era, though there is no trace of their existence in later times.

The sanctity of Kashmīr is thus celebrated in the Vana Parva of the Mahābhārata, verses 10,545–46: Kāśmīra-maṇḍalaṁ chaitat sarvapunyam arindama | maharshibhiś chādhyushitam paśyedam bhrātṛibhiḥ saha | yatrauttarāṇāṁ sarveshām ṛishīṇāṁ Nāhushasya cha | Agneś chaivātra saṁvādaḥ Kāśyapasya cha Bhārata | "And this is the region of Kāśmīra, all-holy, and inhabited by great ṛishis: behold it, along with thy brothers. It was here that the conversation of all the northern ṛishis with Nāhusha, as well as that of Agni and Kāśyapa, occurred."

Fourth. In the Atharva-veda, v. 4, 1, the salutary plant "kushṭha" is spoken of as growing on the other side of the Himālaya:—Udaṅ jāto Himavataḥ prāchyāṁ nīyase janam, "Produced to the north of the Himavat, thou art carried to the people in the east." This reference may perhaps be held to imply that the contemporaries of the author of this mantra had some acquaintance with the country on the other side of the great chain.

Fifth. In a passage of the Sānkhāyana or Kaushītakī-brāhmaṇa vii. 6 (cited by Weber, Ind. Stud. i. 153, note, and alluded to by Müller, "Last Results of the Turanian Researches," p. 340), it is reported that the north was resorted to at an early period for the purpose of studying language, as it was best known in that region: Pathyā Svastir udīchīm diśam prājānāt | Vāg vai Pathyā Svastiḥ | tasmād udīchyām diśi prajnātatarā vāg udyate | udanche u eva yanti vāchaṁ śikshitum | yo vā tataḥ āpachhati tasya vā śuśrūshante "iti sma āha" | eshā hi vāco dik prajnātā | "Pathyā Svasti (a goddess) knew the northern region. Now Pathyā Svasti is Vāch [the goddess of speech]. Hence in the northern region speech is better known and better spoken: and it is to the north that men go to learn speech: men listen to the instructions of any one who comes from that quarter, saying, 'he says [so and so]': for that is renowned as the region of speech." On this the commentator Vināyaka Bhaṭṭa remarks (Weber, as above): "Prajnātatarā vāg udyate," kāśmīre Sarasvatī kīrtyate | Badarikāśrame veda-ghoshaḥ śrūyate | "vāchaṁ śikshitum" Sarasvatī-prasādārthaṁ "udanche eva yanti" | yo vā prasādaṁ labdhvā "tataḥ āgachhati" | "smāha" prasiddham āha sma sarvalokaḥ | "'Language is better understood and spoken:' for Sarasvatī is spoken of [as having her abode] in Kashmīr, and in the hermitage of Badarikā [Badarināth in the Himālaya, apparently], the sound of the Vedas is heard. 'Men go to the north to learn language': to obtain the favour of Sărăsvătī; and 'he who comes thence,' having obtained her favour, 'is listened to with attention,' as every one knows, and repeats."

[101] Zeitschrift, as above, ii. 67, and Schwanbeck, Megasthenis Indica, pp. 77, 117, Περὶ δὲ τῶν χιλιετῶν Ὑπερβορέων τὰ αὐτὰ λέγειν Σιμωνίδῃ καὶ Πινδάρῳ καὶ ἄλλοις μυθολόγοις.

There may lie in this passage some faint reminiscence of an early connexion with the north.

Sect. IX.—Whether any tradition regarding the earliest abodes of the Arian race is contained in the First Fargard of the Vendidad.

I shall now proceed to quote at some length the First Fargard of the Vendidad, descriptive of the creation of various countries by Ahura-mazda, which is held by some scholars to contain a reference to the earliest regions known to, and successively occupied by, the Iranians, though this is denied by others. Being unacquainted with Zend, I shall borrow the abstract which I give of this section from the versions of Professor Spiegel[102] and Dr. Haug.[103]

1–4.—"Ahura-mazda spake to the holy Zarathustra: 'I formed into an agreeable region that which before was nowhere habitable. Had I not done this, all living things would have departed to Airyana-vaējo.'[104]

[102] Avesta: Die Heiligen Schriften der Parsen (Avesta: The Sacred Writings of the Parsīs), vol. i., pp. 61, ff.

[103] Das Erste Kapitel des Vendidād (The First Chapter of the Vendidad), pp. 18, ff.

[104] The purport of this is, Dr. Haug remarks, that Airyana-vaējo was originally

5–9.—'I, Ahura-mazda created as the first, best region, Airyana-vaējo, in a state of excellence. Then Angra-mainyus, the destroyer, formed in opposition to it, a great serpent, and winter [or snow], the creation of the daēvas. There are there ten months of winter, and two of summer.'

13, 14.—'I, Ahura-mazda, created as the second, best region, Gāu, in which Sughdha is situated.'

[Here, and in most of the following cases, I omit the counter-creations of Angra-mainyus.]

17, 18.—'I, etc., created as the third, best region, Mōuru, the mighty, the holy.'

21, 22.—'I, etc., created as the fourth, best region, the fortunate Bakhdhī, with the lofty banner.'

25, 26.—'I, etc., created as the fifth, best region Nisāi,' [situated between Mōuru and Bakhdhī.]

29, 30.—'I, etc., created as the sixth, best region, Harōyu, abounding in houses [or water].'

33–36.—'I, etc., created as the seventh, best region, Vaēkereta where Duǰak is situated. In opposition to it, Angra-mainyus, the destroyer, created the Pairika Khnathaiti, who clung to Kereśāśpa.'

37, 38.—'I, etc., created as the eighth, best region, Urvā, full of pastures.'

41, 42.—'I, etc., created as the ninth, best region, Khnĕnta, in which Vehrkāna lies.'

45, 46.—'I, etc., created as the tenth, best region, the fortunate Haraqaiti.'

49, 50.—'I, etc., created as the eleventh, best region, Haētumat, the rich and shining.'

59, 60.—'I, etc., created as the twelfth, best region, Raghā, with three fortresses [or races].'

63, 44.—'I, etc., created as the thirteenth, best region, Chakhra, the strong.'

67, 68.—'I, etc., created as the fourteenth, best region, Varena, with four corners; to which was born Thraētaŏno, who slew the serpent Dahāka.'

the only cultivated country, and that all other countries were waste. As it was to be feared that the inhabitants of the waste would overrun Airyana-vaējo, other countries also were made habitable by Ahura-mazda.

72, 73.—'I, etc., created as the fifteenth, best country, Hapta-hĕndu [from the eastern to the western Hendu[105]]. In opposition, Angra-mainyus created untimely evils, and pernicious heat [or fever].'

76, 77.—'I, etc., created as the sixteenth, and best, the people who live without a ruler on the sea-shore.'

81.—'There are besides, other countries, fortunate, renowned, lofty, prosperous and splendid.'"

I shall now adduce the most important comments of different authors on this curious passage.

Haug observes (p. 9) that "the winter of ten months' duration assigned to Airyana-vaējō, points to a position far to the north, at a great distance beyond the Jaxartes; but the situation cannot, in the absence of any precise accounts, be more specifically fixed. Only so much is undeniable, that the Iranians came from the distant north. The same thing results from the Second Fargard of the Vendidad, where the years of Yima are enumerated by winters, and the evils of winter are depicted in lively colours." The same writer further remarks (pp. 23, 24): "By Airyana-vaējō we are to understand the original country of the Arians, and paradise of the Iranians. Its ruler was King Yima, the renowned Jemshēd of Iranian legends, who is hence called śruto Airyēnē-vaējahi, 'famous in Airyana-vaējo.' (Fargard ii.) In this region Ahura-mazda and Zarathustra adore the water of the celestial spring (Ardvī śūrā anāhitā, Yasht, 5, 17, 104); and here, too, Zarathustra supplicates Drvāśpā and Ashi. Thus, Airyana-vaējō had become an entirely mythical region, the abode of gods and heroes, free from sickness, death, frost and heat, as is said of Yima's realm. We can, however, discover a historical substratum in the chapter before us. In Airyana-vaējō the winter lasts for ten months; but winter being a calamity inflicted by Angra-mainyus, was not compatible with the idea of a paradise, the abode of joy and blessedness. This long duration of winter is, however, perfectly characteristic of regions lying far to the north, and is a primitive reminiscence of the real cradle of the Iranians. In the legend of Airyana-vaējō an actual historical recollection of this earliest home has thus become blended with the conception of a primeval abode of mankind in paradise, such as is represented in so many popular traditions."

[105] Spiegel omits the words within brackets.

"Airyana-vaējo," says Spiegel, "is to be placed in the furthest east of the Iranian plateau, in the region where the Oxus and Jaxartes take their rise."

The second country is Sogdiana; the third, Merv (the ancient Margiana); the fourth, Balkh (the ancient Bactria); the fifth, Nisa (the ancient Nisæa);[106] the sixth, Herat (the ancient Aria); the seventh is Kabul,[107] according to Spiegel, and Sejestan according to Burnouf, Lassen, and Haug; the eighth is Kabul, according to Haug and Lassen;[108] the ninth is Gurgān, according to Spiegel,[109] and Kandahār, according to Haug; the tenth is the Arachosia of the ancients; the eleventh is the valley of the Hilmend river; the twelfth is Rei in Media; the thirteenth and fourteenth are variously placed; the fifteenth is the country of the seven rivers (Sapta-sindhavas), or the Panjāb; and the sixteenth may, Haug thinks, be sought on the shores of the Caspian Sea.[110]

In regard to the age of the section under review, Dr. Haug remarks (p. 6): "The original document itself [as distinguished from certain additions which appear to have been interpolated in it] is certainly of high antiquity, and is undoubtedly one of the oldest of the pieces which compose the existing Vendidad. But in the form in which it lies before us (even after striking out the late interpolations) it is decidedly subsequent to Zarathustra; and later than the so-called 'Gāthās,' in which, for the most part, the genuine sayings and doctrines

[106] Spiegel says that in the writings on the geography of this section, the position of this country has been much disputed. Comm. p. 24. (The first volume of this commentary appeared in 1865, thirteen years after the publication of the first volume of the translation of the Avesta.)

[107] According to his commentary, p. 28, Spiegel thinks that the correctness of this identification cannot be decidedly guaranteed, but that it has much in its favour.

[108] According to Spiegel, this locality is difficult to determine. Comm. p. 31.

[109] In his Comm., p. 32, Spiegel says that the name Vehrkāna appears to coincide with the ancient Hyreania. Lassen concurs in this. Ind. Ant., i. 635, note (2nd ed.).

[110] In a paper "On the Geographical Arrangement of the Arian Countries mentioned in the First Fargard of the Vendidad," published in the Transactions of the Berlin Academy for 1856, pp. 621–647, Dr. Kiepert contests the conclusions of Dr. Haug and others in regard to the position of some of the countries. Dr. Haug defends his own views in a paper in the Journ. of the Germ. Or. Society, vol. xi., pp. 526–533.

of Zarathustra have been handed down. The chief reason for this conclusion is, that the passage under review exhibits the Persian doctrine in a far more developed shape than the songs of Zarathustra." And again in p. 7, "Though there is thus no doubt that this Fargard only dates from the period after Zarathustra, we do not thereby mean to say that it is of modern origin; on the contrary, its whole contents show that it must be very ancient. We can scarcely derive from it any fixed historical data. From the names of the countries, however, we can gather not only that the geographical knowledge of its author was very limited, but also that the region actually occupied by the Arians was much more contracted than we afterwards find it."

In his first volume Professor Spiegel remarks on the same Fargard as follows, p. 59: "The great importance of this first chapter for the prehistorical age of the Indo-Germanic race in general, and of the Persian race in particular, has been fully allowed by investigators of the mythology and history of the ancient world. Heeren, Rhode, Lassen, and others, have recognized in these accounts of the Vendidad a half-historical, half-mythical fragment, which reveals to us the state of geographical knowledge among the followers of the Avesta at the time when it was composed. Perhaps, we may also, with Rhode, discover in it the history of the gradual diffusion of the Iranian race, regarding the first-mentioned country as their primeval abode, and those which follow as the regions which were peopled at a later date. The order in which the countries are arranged appears to tell in favour of this hypothesis."

In his second volume, p. cix, Professor Spiegel retracts his qualified adhesion to the view of Rhode. He says: "I cannot coincide in the attempt to discover in the first chapter of the Vendidad an account of the gradual migration of the Iranians. It has been said that that list of countries is a continuous history of their attempts at colonization, beginning with their northern home, and ending with Hapta-Hendu or India. But the list nowhere speaks of any such migration. . . . . Hence, I see in this chapter nothing but a specification of the countries known to the Iranians at a particular time. This period, however, cannot be a very recent one, as the name Hapta-Hendu is connected with the Vedic period. This name, however, may have been preserved in Persia after it had disappeared in India, and we cannot conclude from it that this Fargard was composed contemporaneously with the Vedas."[111]

M. Pictet, on the other hand, makes the following observations: "These names [of countries] enable us to follow step by step the extension of the Iranians over the vast domain which they have ever since occupied. The thing which interests us the most in this enumeration is the point of departure, and the general direction of the movement. The first perfect abode which Ormuzd created is called 'Airyana-vaējo.' . . . As Ritter and Lassen remark, the ten months of winter and only two of summer can only apply to the highest valleys of Belurtagh and Mustagh at the north-east corner of the Iranian table-land. But it is difficult to conceive that an 'excellent' abode could ever have existed there, unless we assume a very improbable alteration of climate. We are as little able to imagine how a country so savage and so poor could have been the cradle of a race so prolific as the Aryas. I believe, then, that we must separate, in this tradition, the mythical element from the historical data. Airyana-vaējo, the primeval paradise, was probably nothing more than a very confused reminiscence of the country originally inhabited by the Aryas. At their dispersion, the Perso-Arian branch, driven back perhaps by the gradual increase of the Arian population, may have directed their steps towards the east as far as the high valleys of Belurtagh and Mustagh, where their further progress would be arrested. At a later period, when the emigration of the other Arian tribes had left the field clear, they descended from these unprofitable regions towards the more favoured countries of which they had preserved some recollection, as we learn from the myth in Vendidad."—Origines Indo-Européennes, pp. 36, 37.

Professor Müller's views, as well as those of M. Bréal, on the First Fargard of the Vendidad will be found above, in note 90, p. 314.[112]

[111] In his Commentary on the Avesta, vol. i. (1865), p. 1, the same author writes: "This view (that this Fargard describes the migration of the Iranians) was first shaken by Kiepert in his dissertation on "The Geographical Arrangement of the Names of Arian Countries in the First Fargard of the Vendidad" (Proceedings of the Berlin Academy of Science, Dec., 1856, p. 621, ff.), with which I in general agree, as does also M. Bréal, De la Geographie de l'Avesta (Journ. Asiatique, 1862). On the other hand, Haug and Bunsen maintain the view that this chapter describes the migrations of the Indo-Germans, and in particular of the Arians, up to the time of their immigration into Iran and India (compare Bunsen's Ægyptens Stelle in der Welt-geschichte, vol. ii., p. 104, ff.).

[112] See Appendix, note K.

Sect. X.—What was the route by which the Āryas penetrated into India?

We have already seen (pp. 306, ff.) that according to the most numerous authorities, Bactria, or its neighbourhood, was the country which the different branches of the Indo-European race occupied in common before their separation. By what route, then, did they enter into India? [113]

A. W. von Schlegel thinks that the Indo-Arians must have penetrated into that country from the west. After describing the difficulties of the sea routes leading to India from the south, and of the land route over the Himālaya from the north, he goes on to say: "The western [113] In the first edition of this volume, p. 345, I wrote as follows: "Professor Benfey, who, apparently, differs to some extent from other scholars in designating that primeval country as Tartary, is of opinion that the Indian and Persian branches of this family may, after their separation from the others, have dwelt together, more to the south, in Little Thibet, the country near the sources of the Indus;" and I then proceed to quote from his Indien, pp. 14, ff., a passage in which he argues that most probably the Indians "crossed over from their ancient seats beyond, and in the northern valleys of, the Himālaya, into the southern plains, rather as peaceable colonists than as martial conquerors. The passes over which the road lies are, it is true, difficult, but by no means insuperable, and are available for traffic and every sort of intercourse, though difficult for warlike operations. By these routes the first Aryas who settled in India, partly following the various branches of the Ganges, might have found their way, through Kemaon, Garhwal, or Sirmur, to the plains situated to the the south of the Himālaya. Here they founded Indraprastha, and thence spread themselves around, subduing the feeble Mlechhas, and gradually conquering all the parts of India which were not too difficult of access."

In his review of the first volume of this work, in the Gött. Gel. Anzeigen for 1861, p. 136, Prof. Benfey writes: "The author has also given a place to the opinion expressed by me in 1840 in regard to the road by which the Sanskrit-speaking race immigrated into India. This was written at a time when I had scarcely any means of becoming acquainted with the Vedas; and since then I have had no opportunity for expressing my views anew upon this question. But already in 1844, when I first read through the Rigveda in London, and still more in 1846, after Roth's dissertation 'On the Literature, etc. of the Veda,' had appeared, I, too, became firmly convinced that it was not the region of the Sarasvatī which was to be assumed as the earliest abode of the immigrants into India (on which my opinion regarding their route had been founded), but the country of the Upper Indus, and that, consequently, their route must have been over the Hindukush and the Indus." Professor Benfey then goes on to state his conviction that his earliest view was the only one to which the materials at his command before the Vedas were accessible could properly lead. And he refers to the fact that Prof. Weber's opinion had at first coincided with his own (the passage will be quoted in a note further on, p. 339), and had only at a later period been altered in conformity with the materials now accessible.

side of India appears to be more open, as from Kashmīr to the Delta of the Indus the boundaries are not otherwise marked than by that river itself. But in its upper course the Indus is not navigable, owing to its rapidity and its cataracts: and in addition its right bank is flanked by mountains. Towards the sea it spreads out into, or is surrounded by, marshes: more in the interior, and even above the confluence of the five rivers, it is bounded by sandy deserts. From that point to the place where it enters the plains near Attock, a tract intervenes where the passage may be more easily effected. Accordingly it is on this side that India has always been entered by foreign conquerors, by Semiramis, if her Indian expedition is authentic, . . by Alexander the Great, Seleucus, and the Greek kings of Bactria, by the Indo-Scythians, or nomad races, who invaded certain provinces during the century preceding our era; by Mahmud of Ghazni, by the Afghans, the Moguls, and the Persians under Nadir Shah. Thus all probabilities are united in favour of the supposition that the ancestors of the Hindus came from the same side; a supposition which we find to be confirmed by arguments of another kind. The Panjab would consequently be the first country occupied by the colonists. Tradition does not, however, celebrate this as a classic region. On the contrary, in a passage of the Mahābhārata, published and commented on by Lassen, its inhabitants are described as less pure and correct in their customs than the real Aryas, as perhaps they had been corrupted by the vicinity of barbarians. This leads us to believe that it was only after the colonists had spread themselves over the plains of the Ganges, that their form of worship, and the social order dependent upon it, could have assumed a permanent form."—Essais littéraires et historiques, pp. 455–457.

The same view is taken by Lassen (Indian Antiquities, 1st ed., i. 511; 2nd ed., p. 612):—

"The Indians, like most other nations of the ancient world, believe themselves to be autochthonous: their sacred legends represent India itself as the scene of creation, as the abode of the patriarchs, and the theatre of their deeds; and they have no recollection of having sprung from any country out of India, or of having ever lived beyond the bounds of their own Bhāratavarsha. (See, however, above, p. 323, ff.)

"It is true that we might be tempted to discover in the superior sacredness which they ascribe to the north a reference, unintelligible to themselves, to a closer connexion which they had formerly had with the northern countries; for the abodes of most of the gods are placed towards the north in and beyond the Himalaya, and the holy and wonderful mountain Meru is situated in the remotest regions in the same direction. A more exact examination will, however, lead to the conviction that the conception to which we have referred has been developed in India itself, and is to be derived from the peculiar character of the northern mountain-range. The daily prospect of the snowy summits of the Himalaya glittering far and wide over the plains, and in the strictest sense insurmountable, and the knowledge which they had of the entirely different character of the table-land beyond, with its extensive and tranquil domains, its clear and cloudless sky and peculiar natural productions, would necessarily designate the north as the abode of the gods and the theatre of wonders; while its holiness is explicable from the irresistible impression produced upon the mind by surrounding nature. Uttara Kuru, the Elysium in the remotest north, may be most properly regarded as an ideal picture created by the imagination, of a life of tranquil felicity, and not as a recollection of any early residence of the Kurus in the north. Such at least is true of the representation which we have of this country in the epic poems. It is, however, probable that originally, and as late as the Vedic era, a recollection of this sort attached itself to that country, though in later times no trace of it has been preserved."

After stating the reasons (already detailed above, pp. 308, ff.) which lead to the conclusion that the Indians could not have been autochthonous, Lassen proceeds as follows (1st ed., p. 515, 2nd. ed., p. 616): "There is only one route by which we can imagine the Arian Indians to have immigrated into India; they must have come through the Panjab, and they must have reached the Panjab through western Kabulistan. The roads leading from the country on the Oxus into eastern Kabulistan and the valley of the Panjkora, or into the upper valley of the Indus down upon Gilgit, and from thence either down the course of the Indus, or from Gilgit over the lofty plateau of Deotsu down on Kashmir, are now known to us as the roughest and most difficult that exist, and do not appear to have been ever much or frequently used as lines of communication. We can only imagine the small tribes of the Daradas to have come by the second route from the northern side of the Hindukush into their elevated valleys; but we cannot suppose the mass of the Arians to have reached India by this road. All the important expeditions of nations or armies which are known to us have proceeded through the western passes of the Hindukush, and if we suppose the Arian Indians to have come into India from Bactria, this is the only route by which we can assume them to have arrived." It is true that the Hindus attach no idea of sanctity to the Panjab; on the contrary, "the Sarasvatī is the western boundary of the pure land, governed by Brahmanical law. There are, indeed, Indians dwelling further to the west, but they do not observe the Brahmanical ordinances in all their integrity. But this mode of regarding the western tribes can only have arisen after the Indian institutions had been developed, and a marked difference had become observable between the people living east of the Sarasvatī, and those on the western border. The people of the Panjab always appear as descended from the same stock, and in spite of the aversion in question, the epic legends recount to us frequent relations between the kings of the pure portion of India and the tribes to the westward. There is no break in the chain of Indian races towards the west." (p. 616, 2nd ed.)

M. Burnouf briefly indicates his opinion on the question with which we are now occupied, by speaking of "the movement which from the earliest ages had carried the Arian race from the Indus to the Ganges, and from the Ganges into the Dekhan," etc., Preface to Bhag. Pur., vol. iii., p. xxix.

I am not aware whether Professor Roth has ever expressed an opinion as to the precise route by which the Arians entered India; but in his work on the Lit. and Hist. of the Veda (1846), p. 136, he writes as follows: "It is more than probable that the bulk of the tribes which we may designate as the Vedic people dwelt nearer to the Indus than the Jumna, and that the battle which is described in the hymn before us was one of those conflicts in which the northern tribes pressed upon the southern, on their way towards the regions which they were eventually to occupy. The Indus is well known and frequently celebrated in the hymns of the Rigveda, while at this moment I know of only one passage in which the Ganges is mentioned, and that only in a way which assigns to it an inferior rank."

The same writer in his article on "Brahma and the Brahmans," in the Journal of the German Oriental Society for 1847, p. 81, again expresses himself thus: "When the Vedic people, expelled by some shock—and that at a period more recent than the majority of the hymns of the Veda—relinquished their seats in the Panjab and on the Indus, advanced further and further to the south, drove the aborigines into the hills, and occupied the broad tracts lying between the Ganges, the Jumna, and the Vindhya range, the time had arrived when the division of power, the relations of king and priest, could become transformed in the most rapid and comprehensive manner."

Professor Weber also speaks of the Arians as at one time dwelling beyond the Indus. In his Hist. of Ind. Lit. (1852), pp. 2 and 3, he writes: "In the oldest parts of the Rigveda the Indian people appear to us as settled on the north-western borders of India, in the Panjab, and even beyond the Panjab, on the borders of the Kubhā river, the Kophēn in Kabul.[114] The gradual diffusion of this people from this point towards the east, beyond the Sarasvatī and over Hindustān as far as the Ganges, can be traced almost step by step in the later portions of the Vedic writings." See also Ind. Stud. ii. 20.

In his "Recent Investigations on Ancient India," the same writer similarly remarks: "The oldest hymns of the Veda show us the Arian people still dwelling beyond, or, at least, only on the north-western frontiers of India; viz., in the tract between the Cabul river and the Indus, as well as in the Panjab. Their advance from this point, and extension over India can be traced step by step in their literature. Their road lay to the north of the great desert of Marwar, from the Satadru (the modern Sutlej) to the Sarasvatī, a river (esteemed at a later period as of the highest sanctity) which loses itself in the sands of the desert. This must have been a point where they made a halt of long continuance, as may be concluded from the great sacredness ascribed in later times to this region. At that period it formed the boundary line between the Brahmanical organization which was being now formed in Hindustan, and those Arian races of the west which retained the free manner of life inherited from their forefathers."—Indian Sketches, pp. 13, 14.

[114] In his Indische Studien, vol. i. p. 165 (published 1849–50), Weber speaks of the "Arian Indians being driven by a deluge from their home (see above, p. 335, note), and coming from the north, not from the west (as Lassen, i. 515, will have it) into India; first of all to Kashmir and the Panjab; as it is only in this way that we can explain the northern Kurus and the northern Madras, with whom the conception of the golden age became afterwards associated." As, however, in the passages quoted in the text, which were written at a later date, Weber supposes the Arians to have dwelt on the Kabul river, they must, in order to arrive there, have either arrived by the route which Lassen assigns, or have afterwards spread themselves to the westward.

M. Langlois, in the Preface to his French translation of the R.V., speaks to the same effect, pp. ix, x: "The hymns of the Rigveda were composed for tribes which had come from the banks of the Indus, and were living in the plains watered by the Ganges. This people seems to have belonged to that great branch of the human race known under the name of the Aryas. They brought with them a mild and simple civilization, patriarchal manners, a polished language. . . . These Aryas, as they established themselves in India, drove back before them the ancient populations, which then proceeded to occupy the forests and mountains, and which, on account of their savage customs and murderous depredations, became, for the Aryas, the types of those evil spirits which they have depicted in their books. At the head of the first colony there must have been a prince of the Arian nation called Manu, whom the traditions represent as the father of mankind."

In another place, in a note to R.V. i. 33, 3 (p. 264, vol. i. of his work, note 2), the same author writes still more explicitly as regards the point under consideration: "It is my opinion that the Indian colony conducted by Manu, which established itself in Āryāvărtta, came from the countries which lie to the west of the Indus, and of which the general name was Aria, Ariana, Hiran."

Professor Müller does not, as far as I am aware, anywhere determine the route by which the Arians arrived in India, more precisely than is done in the following passages (already quoted in pp. 310, f.): "At the first dawn of traditional history we see these Arian tribes migrating across the snow of the Himālaya, southward towards the 'seven rivers' (the Indus, the five rivers of the Panjāb, and the Sarasvatī), and ever since India has been called their home."—Last Results of the Sanskrit Researches, p. 129 ("Chips," i. 63); and Anc. Sanskrit Lit., p. 12. And again, at p. 131 ("Chips," i. p. 65); Anc. Sanskrit Lit., p. 15, he writes: "After crossing the narrow passes of the Hindukush or the Himālaya, they [the southern Arians] conquered, or drove before them . . . . the aboriginal inhabitants of the Trans-Himalayan countries." Some remarks on the same subject have been already quoted (see above, p. 311) from his "Last Results of the Turanian Researches," p. 340.

Whatever other and minor differences of view may exist between the several authorities whom I have last cited, they are all of one accord at least in regard to this one point, that India is not the original country of the Hindus.

Sect. XI.—The immigration of the Indo-Arians from the north-west rendered probable by the tenor of the Vedic hymns.

The immigration of the Arians, the progenitors of the Brahmanical Indians, into India from the north-west, is further rendered probable by the fact that the writers of the Vedic hymns appear to be most familiar with the countries lying in that direction, i.e., with the north-western parts of India itself, as well as with the countries bordering on, or beyond the Indus, and with the rivers which flow through those regions; while the countries and rivers in the central and eastern parts of India are more rarely mentioned; and no allusion whatever is made to the regions of the south. On this subject I borrow the following remarks from Professor Roth's work on the Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, p. 136: "The Sindhu (Indus) is well known and frequently celebrated in the hymns of the Rigveda, while at present I know of only one hymn in which the Ganges is mentioned, and that only in a subordinate capacity. This passage occurs in one of the hymns ascribed to Sindhukshit, son of Priyamedha (x. 75, 5), which is addressed to the Sindhu, 'the most copious of streams,' (apasām apastamā). The other rivers are solicited to regard graciously the praises of the poet, which are dedicated to the Sindhu.[115] The passage is, after Yāska (Nirukta, ix. 26), to be explained thus: 'Gangā, Yamunā, Sarasvatī, Sutudrī, with the Parushnī, receive graciously my hymn. Marudvridhā, hear with the Asiknī, the Vitastā; Arjīkīyā, hear with the [115] The entire hymn is quoted and translated in the fifth volume of this work, p. 343, f.

Sushomā.' "[116] (Imaṁ me Gange Yamune Sarasvati S'utudri stomaṁ sachata Parushṇi ā | Asiknyā Marudvṛidhe Vitastayā Ārjīkīye śṛiṇuhi ā Sushomayā |)

Another passage in which the Indus is mentioned is the following, R.V. i. 126, 1: Amandān stomān prabhare manīshā Sindhāv adhi kshiyato Bhāvyasya | Yo me sahasram amimīta savān atūrto rājā sravaḥ ichhamānaḥ | "With my intellect I produce ardent encomiums upon Svanaya, the son of Bhavya, who dwells on the Sindhu; the invincible prince, who, desirous of renown, has offered through me a thousand oblations." In the 7th verse of the same hymn we find a reference which indicates familiarity with the country of the Gandhāris and its sheep: Sarvā 'ham asmi romaśā Gandhārīṇām ivāvikā | "I am all hairy, like a ewe of the Gandhāris." Gandhāra is placed by Lassen (in the map of Ancient India in vol. ii. of his Indian Antiquities) to the west of the Indus, and to the south of the Cophen or Kabul river, the same position to which the Gandaritis of the ancients is referred.[117] In a note to his Transl. of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. ii., p. 174 (Dr. Hall's ed.), Prof. Wilson writes of the Gāndhāras: "These are, also, a people of the north-west, found both on the west of the Indus and in the Punjab." The word Sindhu also occurs in the following passages of the Rigveda, viz., i. 94, 16; i. 122, 6; ii. 15, 6; iv. 30, 12; v. 53, 9; vii. 33, 3; viii. 20, 25; x. 64, 9. It is, however, difficult to say whether the Indus be always meant. The last of these passages

[116] Part of Yāska's note (Nirukta, ix. 26) is as follows:—Imam me Gange Yamune Sarasvati S'utudri Parushṇi stomam ā sevadham Asiknyā cha saha Marudvṛidhe Vitastayā cha Ārjīkīye āśṛiṇuhi Sushomayā cha iti samastārthaḥ | . . . . Irāvatīm Parushṇī ity āhuḥ . . . . Asiknī aśuklā asitā | . . . Marudvṛidhāḥ sarvāḥ nadyaḥ | Marutaḥ enāḥ vardhayanti | . . . Ārjīkīyām Vipāḍ ity āhuḥ | (See vol. i., pp. 339 and 417, note 210.) "The entire sense is, 'Receive this hymn, O Gangā, Yamunā, Sarasvatī, S'utudrī, Parushṇī, and Marudvridhā along with the Asiknī, and Ārjīkīyā along with the Vitastā and Sushomā.' . . . Parushṇī is a name of the Irāvatī. . . . Asiknī means 'black.' . . . All rivers [may be called] Marudvṛidhā, because they are swollen by the Maruts . . . Ārjīkīyā is a name of the Vipāś." See Roth's remarks on these rivers, in his Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, pp. 136–140; and a passage which will be quoted from Lassen in the text further on.

[117] The Gandarii are mentioned by Herodotus, vii. 66, along with the Parthians, Chorasmians, Sogdians, and Dadikæ, as forming part of the army of Xerxes. See the Asiatic Researches, vol. xv. 103, ff.; the Journ. Royal Asiatic Society, v. 17; and Rawlinson's Herodotus, iv. 216, f.

(which occurs in a hymn to the Viśve devas) is as follows, R.V. x. 64, 9: Sarasvatī Sarayuḥ Sindhur ūrmibhir maho mahīr avasā "yantu vakshaṇīḥ | devīr āpo mātaraḥ sūdayitnvo ghṛitavat payo madhumat no archata | "Let the Sarasvatī, the Sarayu, the Sindhu, with their waves; let the great [rivers] come swiftly, strengthening us with their succour. Divine waters, mothers, flowing, impart (?) to us your waters with butter and honey."

The verse which has been cited above from the Rigveda, x. 75, 5, in the extract from Professor Roth's work, is followed by another,[118] in which the names of several other rivers are mentioned, viz., the Tṛishṭāmā, the Susartū, the Rasā,[119] the S'vetī, the Kubhā, the Gomatī, the Krumu, and the Mehatnū. In Roth and Böhtlingk's Lexicon, the Kubhā, Gomatī, and Krumu are set down as being affluents of the Indus.[120] That they were really so is rendered probable by their being mentioned in conjunction with that river. In the case of the Kubhā, the probability is strengthened by its name, which has a close resemblance to that of the Kophēn, or Kabul river, which falls into the Indus, a little above Attock (see the passage from Weber's Ind. Liter., above p. 339). This river is mentioned again in R.V. v. 53, 9: Mā vo Rasā 'nitabhā Kubhā Krumur mā vaḥ Sindhur ni rīramat | mā vaḥ

[118] R.V. x. 75, 6:—Tṛishṭāmayā prathamaṁ yātave sajūḥ Susartvā Rasayā S'vetyā tyā | tvaṁ Sindho Kubhayā Gomatīm Krumum Mehatnvā sarathaṁ yābhir īyase | "Unite first in thy course with the Trishṭāmā, the Susartū, the Rasā and the S'vetī; thou, Sindhu, [meetest] the Gomatī with the Kubhā, the Krumu with the Mehatnū, and with them art borne onward (as) on the same car."

[119] The Rāsā is considered by Dr. Aufrecht, in his explanation of R.V. x. 108, to denote there and elsewhere the "milky way." See Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. xiii. p. 498. Yāska merely explains it as meaning a river: Rasā nādī | Nir. xi. 25. In his translation of Sāmaveda, ii. 247 (=R.V. ix. 41, 6), Benfey translates rasā by "ocean." In his Glossary he explains it of "a particular river which separates the world of Indra from that of the Panis (?);" referring to R.V., x. 108. In R.V. i. 112, 12, he explains it of the river Rasā. In his translation of this verse in Orient und Occident, iii. 150, he makes it a river of the lower world (unterwelt). In Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon the Rasā is stated to be the name of a river, in R.V., i. 112, 12; v. 53, 9; x. 75, 6; and to mean "a mythical stream which flows round the earth and sky" in ix. 41, 6; x. 108, 1, f.; x. 121, 4; v. 41, 15.

[120] In his Elucidations (Erläuterungen) of the Nirukta, p. 43, note, Professor Roth remarks: "The Kōphēn is the Kubhā of the Veda, mentioned in R.V. v. 53, 9, and x. 75, 7. If we identify the Krumu and Gomatī of this last text, with the Kurum and Gomal which flow into the Indus from the west (as Lassen proposes in a letter), we may regard the rivers whose names precede [the Tṛishṭāma, Rasā, S'vetī, and Anitabhā] as being affluents of the Indus further to the north than the Kōphēn."

parishṭhāt Sarayuḥ purīshiṇī asme it sumnam astu vaḥ | "Let not, O Maruts, the Rasā, the Anitabhā, the Kubhā, the Krumu or the Sindhu arrest you: let not the watery Sarayu stop you: let the joy you impart come to us." Another of the rivers named in the verse previously cited (R.V. x. 75, 7), and declared by Roth to be an affluent of the Indus, is the Gomatī. It is not necessary that we should identify this river with the Gomatī (Goomtee), which rises to the north-west of Oude and flows past Lukhnow, though, being mentioned along with the Sarayu (if, indeed, this be the modern Surjoo), it may be the same. A river of the same name is mentioned again in R.V. viii. 24, 30: Esho apaśrito Valo Gomatīm anu tishṭhati | "This Vala dwells afar on the [banks of the] Gōmatī."[121] It is quite possible that the names of the rivers in Oude may have been borrowed from some streams further west.[122] Another river, the Suvāstu, which may be an affluent of the Indus, is mentioned in R.V., viii. 19, 37: Suvāstvāḥ adhi tugvani | These words are quoted in Nirukta, iv. 15, and explained thus: Suvāstur nadī | tugma tīrtham bhavati | "Suvāstu is a river; tugma means a ferry." On this passage Roth observes, Erläuterungen, p. 43: "The bard Sobhari is recounting the presents which he received from Trasadasyu, son of Purukutsa, on the banks of the Suvāstu. In the Mahābhārata, vi. 333,[123] the Suvāstu is connected with the Gaurī. Now, according to Arrian, Indica, 4, 11,[124] the Soastos and Garoias

[121] Compare R.V. v. 61, 19.

[122] There is a stream called Gomātī in Kemaon, which must be distinct from the river in Oude, as the latter rises in the plains.

[123] In the list of rivers in the description of Jambukhaṇḍa. The words are: Vāstuñ Suvāstuñ Gaurīñ cha Kampanāñ sa-Hiraṇvatīm | "The Vāstu, the Suvāstu, the Gaurī, the Kampanā, and the Hiraṇvatī."

[124] Κωφὴν δὲ ἐν Πευκελαιήτιδι, ἅμα ὁι ἄγων Μάλαντόν τε καὶ Σόαστον καὶ Γαρρόιαν, ἐκδιδοῖ ἐς τὸν Ινδόν. "The Kophen unites with the Indus in Peukĕlæētis, bringing with it the Malantus, the Soastus, and the Garrœas." Professor Wilson (Ariana Ant. pp. 183, 190, 194) thinks these two last names really denote one and the same river. "Now there can be no doubt that by the Kophen is to be understood the Kabul River; for Arrian says, that having received the Malamantus, Suastus, and Garœus, it mixes with the Indus, in the country of Peukelaotis; and the latter part of Alexander's operations west of the Indus, shortly before he crosses that river, are carried on in the same district along the Indus and the Cophen."—Wilson, Ariana Ant., p. 183. "The united stream [of the Punjkora and Sewat] is called either the Punjkora or Sewat River; and this may explain why Arrian, in his Indica, speaks erroneously of a Suastus as well as a Garœus, whilst in Ptolemy we have no other flow into the Kōphēn. From comparing these two passages, it results with tolerable certainty that the Suvāstu is the same as the modern Suwad, a stream which flows into the Kabul river from the north, after first joining the Panjkora."

Returning now to R.V. x. 75, 6, and taking first the most westerly streams (next to the Indus) there specified, we come (1) to the Vitastā or Behat, (2) the Asiknī or Chenab (Akesines), (3) the Parushṇī, Irāvatī, or Ravee, (4) the Ārjīkīyā, Vipāś, or Beeas, and (5) the Śutudrī, or Sutlej. Yāska, as we have seen, identifies the Parushṇī with the Irāvatī, and the Ārjīkīyā with the Vipāś; Professor Roth considers the Asiknī to be the same as the Chenab or Akesines; and there is no doubt that the Vitastā is the Hydaspes, and that the Śutdrī is the Sutlej. We have, consequently, in this passage an enumeration of the rivers of the Panjāb. The Asiknī is again mentioned in R.V. viii. 20, 25; the Parushṇī in R.V. vii. 18, 8, 9, and viii. 63, 15; the Śutudrī in iii. 33, 1; and the Vipāś in iii. 33, 1, 3, and iv. 30, 11.

The other rivers named in the passage so often referred to, R.V. x. 75, 5, 6, are the Sarasvatī, the Gangā, and the Yamunā. The following are some of the most remarkable passages in which the Sarasvatī is celebrated. In iii. 23, 4, it is thus mentioned along with the Dṛishadvatī (with which Manu, ii. 17, also associates it) and the Āpāyā: Ni tvā dadhe vare ā pṛithivyāḥ Iḷāyāspade sudinatve ahnāṃ | Dṛishadvatyām mānushe Āpayāyāṃ Sarasvatyāṃ revad Agne didīhi | river than the Suastus described."—Ibid. p. 190. "Alexander crossed, according to Arrian's narrative, four rivers before he reached the Indus; and these, the Kophen, Khoes, Euaspla, and Garœus, we have still in the Punjshir, Alishung, Khonar, and Punjkora. . . . Thus even Arrian is a better authority as an historian than as a geographer, for he describes in the latter character the Kophen as bringing with it to the Indus, the Malamantus, Suastus, and Garœus; two of which he does not name at all in his narrative, and of which the third is probably the same as the second."—Ibid. p. 194. Lassen, on the other hand, holds that Ptolemy is in error. "It must surprise us," he remarks (Ind. Ant., iii. 129), "that, of the rivers of Eastern Kabul, Ptolemy mentions only the Suastos, and passes over the Garoias [the ancient name was Gaurī, the present is Panjkora] in silence, though this river must have been known to him from the accounts of the writers of the Macedonian age, who, however, are wrong in making the Suastos to unite not with it, but with the Kophen. This is the more surprising, as Ptolemy is acquainted with the region called Goryaia after that river. . . . Ptolemy is thus misled into making the Suastos rise too far to the north." See also Lassen's Ind. Ant. ii. 668-9. In any case, the existence of a river in the Kabul country, called Suastus at the date of Alexander's expedition, is undoubted.

"On an auspicious day I place thee on the most sacred spot of Iḷā [the earth]. Shine, O opulent Agni, in the assembly of men on the banks of the Dṛishadvatī, the Āpāyā, the Sarasvatī." In R.V. vi. 61, 2, the same river is thus magnified: Iyaṁ śushmebhir bisa-khā ivārujat sānu girīṇāṁ tavishebhir ūrmibhiḥ | pārāvata-ghnīm avase suvṛiktibhiḥ Sarasvatīm ā visāsema dhītibhiḥ | "By her force, and her impetuous waves she has broken down the sides of the mountains, like a man digging lotus fibres. For succour let us, with praises and hymns, invoke Sarasvatī who sweeps away her banks."[125] In verse 13 of the same hymn the same epithet ápāṁsam apastamā, "most copious of streams," which is applied to the Sindhu in R.V. x. 75, 7 (see above, p. 341), is also assigned to the Sarasvatī.

Hymns 95 and 96 of the seventh book of the Rigveda are devoted to the praises of the Sarasvatī and her male correlative the Sarasvat. The first and part of the second verse of the former hymn are as follows: Pra kshodasā dhāyasā sasre eshā Sarasvatī dharuṇam āyasī pūḥ | pra bābadhānā rathy eva yāti viśvāḥ apo mahinā sindhur anyāḥ | ekā achetat Sarasvatī nadīnāṁ śuchir yatī giribhyaḥ ā samudrāt | "This Sarasvatī has flowed on with a protecting current, a support, an iron barrier. This stream rushes on like a charioteer, in her majesty outrunning all other rivers.[126] Sarasvatī is known as the one river, flowing on pure from the mountains to the sea."[127]

The Jumna is mentioned in two other passages of the Rigveda besides x. 75, 5. In v. 52, 17, reference is made to property in cows

[125] In reference to this verse, Yāska observes, ii. 23: Tatra "Sarasvatī" ity etasya nadī-vat devatā-vachcha nigamāḥ bhavanti | . . . Atha etad nadī-vat | "There are texts which speak of Sarasvatī both as a river and as a goddess. . . . In the following she is referred to as a river." He then quotes the verse before us; and explains (ii. 24) pārāvata-ghīm by pārāvāra-ghātinīm "destroying the further and the near bank." See also the commentary on the Taitt. Br. vol. ii. p. 842 (Bibl. Indica). This interpretation is condemned in B. and R.'s Lexicon, s. v., where the sense is said to be, either (a) "striking the distant (demon)," or (b) "striking from, or at, a distance."

[126] See the translation of this verse in Benfey's Glossary to the Sāmaveda, p. 157, under the word rathī.

[127] Langlois, vol. iii., p. 241, note 13, thinks that Sarasvatī in this hymn stands, not for a river, but for "the goddess of sacrifice," with her libations. "These libations form a river, which flows from the mountains, where the sacrifice is performed, and where the soma plant is collected. This river flows into the samudra (sea), which is the vessel destined to receive the libations."

and horses on the banks of the Yamunā;[128] and in vii. 18, 19, it is said that the "Yamunā protected [or gladdened] Indra."[129] I have found a reference to the Gangā in one other passage besides x. 75, 5, viz., in vi. 45, 31,[130] where the adjective gāngya, "belonging to the Gangā," occurs. But the Rigveda contains no hymn devoted to the celebration of the Gangā, such as we find appropriated to the Sindhu and Sarasvatī.

The Sarayu is also referred to in three passages in the R.V. iv. 30, 18, v. 53, 9, and x. 64, 9. The first of these texts runs thus: Ūta tyā sadyaḥ Āryā Sarayor Indra pārataḥ | Arṇāchitraratha avadhīḥ | "Thou hast straightway slain these two Āryas, Arṇa and Chitraratha, on the other side of the Sarayu." The second and third have been already quoted in pp. 343, f. The Sarayu named in these passages, particularly the last two, may be different from the river of the same name which now flows along the north-eastern frontier of Oude, as it is mentioned in connexion with rivers all of which appear to be in the Panjāb. But it is not absolutely necessary to suppose this,[131] as we shall presently see that one of the Vedic ṛishis was acquainted with Kīkaṭa or Behar. In the Rigveda we have no mention made of the rivers of the south, which have in later ages become so renowned in Hindustan for their sanctity, the Narmadā, the Godaverī, and the Kavērī.

[On the subject treated in the preceding pages, the second edition of Lassen's Indian Antiquities contains, at p. 643, vol. i., some new matter which I translate: "The names of the rivers mentioned in the hymns of the R.V. furnish us with the means of arriving at exact conclusions regarding the abodes of the Arian Indians at the time when they were composed. The Gangā and the Yamunā are only mentioned once in the tenth book. In an earlier book the Dṛishadvatī too is only once named: much oftener

[128] R.V. v. 52, 17: Yamunāyām adhi śruṭam ud rādho gavyaṁ mṛije ni rādho aśvyam mṛije |

[129] R.V. vii. 18, 19: Āvad Indraṁ Yamunā ityādi |

[130] See Roth, Litt. und Gesch. des Weda, p. 136; and above p. 341. The words are: Uruḥ kaksho na Gāngyaḥ | Roth, sub voce kaksha, says, the sense of the word kaksha is uncertain. Langlois does not translate it. Wilson misapprehends Sāyaṇa's explanation.

[131] See, however, the opinion of Lassen, as quoted below.

the Sarasvatī; but most frequently of all the Sindhu (Indus) with its affluents, some of which are designated by their older names, viz., Asiknī for the Chandrabhāgā, Marudvṛidhā for the same stream after its confluence with the Vitastā, Urunjirā for the Irāvatī, and Parushṇī for the Vipāśā. (The principal passage is R.V. x. 75.) The three western affluents of the Indus, which are now called Gomal, Kurrum, and Kabul, are named in these hymns Gomatī, Krumu, and Kubhā respectively: the last word has, as is well known, been turned by the Greeks into Kophen. The Anitabhā, Rasā, and Śvetī must also be regarded as affluents of the same river (R.V., v. 53, 9; x. 75, 6). . . . Before I proceed further, I think it fit to remark that it is not the fault of the learned geographer [M. Vivien de St. Martin], to whom we owe a valuable dissertation on the Vedic geography, but of the French translator [of the R.V., the late M. Langlois], if the former has been misled to assume the existence of three rivers which have no reality. Sushomā and Ārjīkīyā signify vessels which are used in the preparation of the Soma.[132] The assumption that there is a river called Tṛishṭāmā is founded on an ignorance of the language. In the verse in question (R.V., x. 75, 6) 'tṛishṭā,' 'harshly sounding,' is to be referred to the Sindhu, whilst 'amayā' is the instrumental singular feminine from the pronoun 'ama.'[133]

The following additional rivers are named in the R.V., the Anśumatī, the Hariyupīyā, and the Yavyāvatī, but only once (vi. 27, 5, 6; viii. 85, 13, ff.), and in such a way that their situation cannot be fixed. Finally, the Sarayu is thrice named. In one place (iv. 30, 17) it is said that by the help of Indra Turvasu and Yadu crossed this stream.[134] In the second passage (x. 64, 9) it is named in connexion with the Sarasvatī and Sindhu; and in the third (v. 53, 9), again, in connexion with these two, and as well as with several affluents of the Indus and the Yamunā. These data do [132] In proof of this Lassen refers to Roth, on the Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, p. 137. See also Roth's Illust. of Nirukta, p. 131, and Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. ārjīkīyā: also Benfey's Glossary to S.V., s.v. śaraṇyāvat.

[133] Tṛishṭāmā is given as the name of a river in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon; and this interpretation is not withdrawn in the "additions and improvements," in vol. v.

[134] The Sarayu is not named in v. 17, but in v. 18, where Indra is said to have slain two Āryas, Arṇa and Chitraratha, on the other side of this river. See p. 347.

not suffice to show what river is meant. Perhaps it is an affluent of the Sarasvatī; this river is in any case to be distinguished from the well-known affluent of the Gangā. From this survey it is clear that at the time of the composition of the Rigveda the Arian Indians dwelt chiefly in eastern Kabulistan and in the Panjāb as far as the Sarasvatī.

"If we hold the Anitabhā, the Rasā, and the Śvetī,—as from the connexion we must,—for the modern Abu Sin, Burrindu, and Sudum, the Arian Indians were at that time already in possession of a tract on the upper Indus. The conjecture that by the Rasā is meant the Suvāstu, and by the Śvetī the Koas of the ancients, cannot be justified. Whether we are to assign to the Arian Indians a tract in western Kabulistan also, depends on the ascertainment of the modern names of the three rivers mentioned in the R.V., which have not yet been identified. It was only in the period when the tenth book of this collection of hymns was composed that the Arian people had travelled further east and reached the Gangā.

"The Atharvaveda represents to us an important advance in the diffusion of the Arian Indians. The Bahlīkas and Gandhāras appear in the light of peoples living at a distance; so, too, the countries of Magadha and Anga. It may be hence concluded that at that period the Arians had not spread further than to north-western Bengal, on the south bank of the Ganges.[135] Regarding the diffusion of the Brahmanical religion, the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa has preserved a remarkable legend, of which the essential import is as follows," etc. Lassen then quotes the passage (i. 4, 1, 10, ff.), which will be cited further on.]

We have already seen (p. 328) that the Himālaya mountains are mentioned in the Atharvaveda. In a fine hymn, the 121st of the 10th maṇḍala of the R.V., also, we have the following verse, x. 121, 4: Yasya imé Himavanto mahitvā yasya samudraṁ rasayā saha āhuḥ | "He whose greatness these snowy mountains, and the sea with the aërial river declare,"[136] etc. But no allusion to the Vindhya range, [135] The author here refers to Roth on the Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, pp. 37, ff., where some verses of A.V., v. 22, are quoted, translated, and illustrated. See p. 351.

[136] See Müller's translation in Bunsen's Gott in der Geschichte, part ii., p. 107. The Himālaya, or snowy range, is also mentioned, A.V. xii. 1, 11: Girayas te parvatāḥ himavanto araṇyaṁ te pṛithivi syonam astu | "May thy mountains be snowy, O earth, and thy wilderness beautiful."

which runs across the central parts of India, is to be found in the Rigveda.

The following text from the R.V. shows that the author of the hymn (said to be Viśvāmitra) knew something of the countries to the eastward as far as Kīkaṭa or Behar, R.V. iii. 53, 14: Kiṁ te kṛiṇvanti Kīkaṭeshu gāvo na āśiraṁ duhre na tapanti gharmam | ā no bhara Pramagandasya vedo naichāśākham Maghavan randhaya naḥ | "What are thy cows doing among the Kīkaṭas? They yield no milk for oblations; and they heat no fire. Bring us the wealth of Pramaganda [or the usurer]; and subdue to us, O Maghavat (Indra), the degraded man (naichāśākha)." Yāska explains Kīkaṭa as "a country inhabited by people who were not Āryas," Nirukta vi. 32: Kīkaṭo nāma deśo 'nāryanivāsaḥ |[137] The word Kīkaṭa is given in the vocabulary called Triḳāṇḍaśesha, as equivalent to Magadha. In Böhtlingk and Roth's Dictionary, the following lines are quoted from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, i. 3, 24: Tataḥ kalau sampravṛitte sammohāya sura-dvishām | Buddho nāmāñjana-sutaḥ Kīkaṭeshu bhavishyati | "Then, when the Kali age has begun, a person named Buddha, son of Anjana, will be born among the Kīkaṭas, in order to delude the enemies of the gods (the Asuras)." The commentator on the Bhāg. Pur. explains the Kīkaṭas by madhye Gayā-pradeśe | "in the country of Gayā." Again, Bhāg. Pur., vii. 10, 18, it is said: Yatra yatra cha mad-bhaktāḥ praśāntāḥ samadarśinaḥ | sādhavaḥ samudāchārās te pūyante 'pi Kīkaṭāḥ | "In every place where those who are devoted to me, who are calm, who regard all things as alike, who are holy and virtuous, are found, the men [of that country] are purified, even if they be Kīkaṭas." Professor Weber, in his Ind. Stud. i. 186, states his opinion that the Kīkaṭas were not (as Yāska tell us) a non-Arian tribe, but a people who, like the Vrātyas, were of Arian origin, though they did not observe Arian rites; and they may, he thinks, have been Buddhists, or the forerunners of Buddhism.

[137] Sāyaṇa gives an alternative explanation of kīkaṭa, borrowed from a hint in Yāska: Yadvā "kriyābhir yāga-dāna-homa-lakshaṇābhiḥ kim phalishyati" ity aśraddadhānāḥ pratyuta "pibata khādata ayam eva loko na paraḥ" iti vadanto nāstikāḥ kīkaṭāḥ | "Or the Kīkaṭās are atheists, who, being destitute of faith, say, 'what fruit will result from sacrifices, alms, or oblations? rather eat and drink, for there is no other world but this.'" In Sāyaṇa's introduction to the Rigveda (Müller's edit. vol. i. p. 7), an aphorism of the Mīmānsā, with a comment, is quoted, in which an objector demurs to the eternity of the Veda, because objects and persons who existed in time are mentioned in it. In the objector's statement, Naichaśākha is spoken of as a city, and Pramaganda as a king: "Kiṁ te kṛiṇvanti Kīkaṭeshv" iti mantre kīkaṭo nāma janapadaḥ āmnātaḥ | tathā Naichaśākhaṁ nāma nagaram Pramagando nāma rājā ity ete 'rthāḥ anityāḥ āmnātāḥ | "In the verse, 'what do thy cows among the Kīkaṭas, etc.,' a country named Kīkaṭa is recorded, together with a city called Naichaśākha and a king called Pramaganda; all which are non-eternal objects."

From these passages there seems to be no doubt that the Kīkaṭas were a people who lived in Magadha or Behar.

The following verses from one of the mantras of the Atharvaveda, v. 22, quoted and explained by Professor Roth in his Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, pp. 37–42, may tend to show what were the limits of the country occupied by the Āryas at the date of its composition. These limits coincide in one direction with those indicated in the preceding passage from the Rigveda, in which the Kīkaṭas are mentioned. This mantra contains an invocation to Takman, apparently a personified cutaneous disease, who is supplicated to withdraw to certain other tribes, whose names are specified, and whom we may therefore with probability conclude to have been regarded as without the Arian pale, though not necessarily non-Arians. A.V., v. 22, verses 5, 7, 8, 12, 14: 5 | Oko asya Mūjavanto oko asya Mahāvṛishāḥ | yāvaj jātas takmaṁs tāvān asi Bahlikeshu nyocharaḥ | 7 | Takman Mūjavato gachha Bahlikān vā parastarām | S'ūdrām ichha prapharyaṁ tāṁ Takman vi iva dhūnuhi | 8 | Mahāvṛishān Mūjavato bandhu addhi paretya | praitāni takmane brūmo anyakshetrāṇi vā imā | 12 | Takman bhrātrā balāsena svasrā kāsikayā saha | pāmnā bhrāṭṛivyeṇa saha gachhāmum aranaṁ janam | 14 | Gandhāribhyo Mūjavadbhyo Angebhyo Magadhebhyaḥ | praishyaṁ janam iva śevadhiṁ takmānam pari dadmasi | 5. "His (Takman's) abode are the Mūjavats, his abode the Mahāvṛishas. As soon as thou art born, O Takman, thou sojournest among the Bahlikas. 7. Go, Takman, to the Mūjavats, or far away to the Bahlikas. Choose the female Sūdra for food; and shake her. 8. Passing (us) by, O friend, devour the Mahāvṛishas and the Mūjavats. We point out to Takman these or those alien regions. 12. Ṭakman, along with thy brother Balāsa, and with thy sister Kāsikā (cough), and with thy nephew Pāman, depart to that foreign people. 14. We transfer Takman as a servant, and as a treasure, to the Gandhāris, the Mūjavats, the Angas, and the Magadhas."

The Mūjavats are again mentioned in the Vājasanēyi-sanhitā, 3, 61, as follows: Etat te Rudra avasaṁ tena paro Mūjavato atīhi | avatata-dhanvā pināk̄avasaḥ kṛittivāsāḥ ahiṁsan naḥ śivo atīhi |[138] "This, O Rudra, is thy food; with it depart beyond the Mūjavats. With thy bow unbent, and concealed from view, and clad in a skin, pass beyond, uninjuring us and propitious."

The Mūjavats being mentioned along with the Bahlikas, a Bactrian race, and with the Gandhāris (see above, p. 342) may, as Roth thinks, be a hill tribe in the north-west of India; and the Mahāvṛishas may belong to the same region.[139]

The Angas and Magadhas mentioned in verse 13 are, on the contrary, tribes living in south Behar, and the country bordering on it to the west. We have thus in that verse two nations situated to the north-west, and two to the south-east, whom we may suppose, from the maledictions pronounced on them, to have been hostile, or alien tribes,

[138] Mūjavat is explained by the commentator on the V.S., as the name of a mountain, the place of Rudra's abode: Mūjavān nāma kaśchit parvato Rudrasya vāsasthānam | This is apparently a later idea. Compare the Mahābhārata, Sauptika-parva, 785, Evam uktvā sa sakrodho jagāma vimanāḥ Bhavaḥ | girer Mūnjavataḥ pādaṁ tapas taptum mahātapāḥ | "Bhava (S'iva) having so said, went away angry and disturbed, to the quarter of the hill Munjavat, to perform austerity, the great devotee;" and the Āśvamedhika parva, 180: Girer Himavataḥ pṛishṭhe Munjavān nāma parvataḥ | tapyate yatra bhagavāṁs tapo nityam Umāpatiḥ | "On the heights of the Himavat mountain there is a hill called Munjavat, where the divine lord of Umā (S'iva) performs continual austerity." The commentator on the S'atapatha-brāhmaṇa says it is the "Northern Mountain," udīchyaḥ parvataḥ | The S'atapatha-brāhmaṇa (ii. 6, 2, 17,) thus comments on the text of the Vāj. S., after quoting it: Avasena vai adhvānaṁ yanti | tad enaṁ sāvasam eva anvavārjati yatra yatra asya charaṇaṁ tad anu | atra ha vai asya paro Mūjavadbhyaś charaṇam | tasmād āha "paro Mūjavato 'tīhi" iti "avatata-dhanvā pināk̄avasaḥ" ity "ahiṁsan naḥ śivo 'tīhi" ity | eva etad āha "kṛittivāsāḥ" iti | nishvāpayaty eva enam etat | svapann u hi na kanchana hinasti | tasmād āha "krittivāsāḥ" iti | "Men go on their way with provision. He therefore sends him (Rudra) off with provision, wherever he has to go. Here his journey is beyond the Mūjavats; hence he says 'pass beyond the Mūjavats;' 'with bow unbent and concealed,' 'uninjuring us and propitious, pass beyond.' He adds 'clad in a skin.' This lulls him to sleep; for while sleeping he injures nobody. Wherefore he says 'clad in a skin.'" A derivative of the word Mūjavat occurs also in the R.V. x. 34, 1: Somasya iva Maujavatasya bhakshaḥ | "Like a draught of the soma produced on Mūjavat, or among the Mūjavats." Yāska, Nir. 9, 8, explains the word thus: Maujavato Mūjavati jātaḥ | Mūjavān parvataḥ. "'Maujavataḥ' means produced on Mūjavat: Mūjavat is a mountain."

[139] On the Bāhīkas and Bāhlīkas, see Lassen, Zeitsch. 1840, p. 194; and for 1839, p. 52, ff.

who lived on the borders of Brahmanical India, and to have been beyond its boundaries at the time this incantation was composed. (Roth, Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, p. 42.)

It does not, however, follow that the tribes who, in the Atharva-veda, are spoken of as if they were hostile, or alien, were really of a non-Arian origin. (See above, p. 351.)

Thus, the Arians appear in later times to have been in communication with the Gandhāras. In the Śatapatha-brāhmaṇa allusion is made to a royal sage called Svarjit, son of Nagnajit, the Gāndhāra, who had expressed an opinion on the nature of breath or life; and although his view was not regarded as authoritative, still the very fact of its being quoted, and its author mentioned as a Rājanya, proves his Arian origin. This is the passage, Śat.-Br. viii. 1, 4, 10: Atha ha sma āha Svarjid Nāgnajitaḥ | Nagnachid vā Gāndhāraḥ | . . . Yat sa tad uvācha Rājanyabandhur iva tv eva tad uvācha | "Further Svarjit, son of Nagnajit, said. Now Nagnajit was a Gāndhāra. . . : This which he said, he spake as a mere Rājanya." Nagnajit, the Gāndhāra, is also mentioned in the Ait.-Br., vii. 34, as one of the persons who received instruction regarding a particular rite from Parvata and Nārāda.[140] He is also mentioned[141] in the following passage of the Mahābh., i. 2439–41: Prahrāda-śishyo Nagnajit Subalaś chābhavat tataḥ | tasya prajā dharma-hantrī jajne deva-prakopanāt | Gandhāra-rāja-putro 'bhūch Chhakuniḥ Saubalas tathā | Duryodhanasya jananī jajnāte 'rtha-viśāradau | "Nagnajit, the disciple of Prahrāda, and Subala, were then born. Owing to the wrath of the gods, the offspring born to him became the enemies of righteousness. Two children were born to the king of Gandhāra (Subala), Śakuni Saubala, and the mother of Dūryodhana, who were both intelligent." Duryodhana was a Kuru prince, and one of the heroes of the Mahābhārata.

These passages are amply sufficient to prove that the Gandhāras were a people with whom the Arians of India were in the habit of holding intercourse, and contracting affinities, and from this intercourse we may reasonably infer a community of origin and language. On this subject Lassen remarks (Zeitsch. für die Kunde des Morgenl., iii. 206): "Though in individual passages of the Mahābhārata, hatred and contempt are expressed in reference to the tribes living on the Indus and its five great tributaries, yet there is no trace of these tribes being ever regarded as of non-Indian origin. That there was no essential difference in their language is proved, as regards a later period, by the testimony of Pāṇini, which I have already cited." The previous passage here referred to is from the same article, p. 194, where it is said: "The word Bāhīka is used not only in the Mahābhārata, but also in Pāṇini,[142] as a general designation for the tribes of the Panjāb. The use of this appellation is thus fully certified; and if the grammarian found it necessary to give special rules for forming the names of the villages in the Bāhīka country, we may hence conclude that the Bāhīkas spoke Sanskrit, though they applied particular affixes differently from the other Indians."

[140] Roth, Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, pp. 41, 42.
[141] See Weber, Ind. Stud. i. 218–220.

The same writer elsewhere[143] remarks: "The Indians distinguish, not expressly, but by implication, the nations dwelling between the Sarasvatī, and the Hindu-kush, into two classes: first, those to the eastward of the Indus, and some of those immediately to the westward of that river, as the Gandhāras (see p. 342, above), are in their estimation still Indians; . . . but with the exception of the Kāshmiras, and some less known races, these Indians are not of the genuine sort: the greater freedom of their customs is regarded as a lawless condition." And Weber similarly remarks:[144] "The north-western tribes retained their ancient customs, which the other tribes who migrated to the east had at one time shared. The former kept themselves free from the influences of the hierarchy and of caste, which arose among the latter as a consequence of their residence among people of alien origin (the aborigines). But the later orthodox feelings of the more eastern [142] The aphorisms here referred to are iii. 3, 78, and iv. 2, 117, 118. The two latter, with the comments, are as follows:—117 | Vahīka-grāmebhyaścha | Vāhīka-grāma-vāchibhyo vṛidha-sanjnakebhyash "ṭhañ" "ñiṭh" ity etau pratyayau bhavataḥ | S'ākalikī | S'ākalikā | 118 | Vibhāshā Uśīnareshu | Uśīnareshu ye Vāhīka-grāmās tad-vāchibhyo vṛidhebhyash "ṭhañ" "ñiṭh" ity etau pratyayau vā bhavataḥ | Saudarśanikī | Saudarśanikā | pakshe chhaḥ | Saudarśanīyā | "117. The affixes ṭhañ and ñiṭh are employed in words taking vṛiddhi, which denote villages of the Vāhīkas; as S'ākalikī, S'ākalikā. 118. Or the affixes ṭhañ and ñiṭh are optionally employed in words taking vṛiddhi, which denote Vāhīka villages in the country of the Uśīnaras; as Saudarśanikī, Saudarśanikā; or sometimes with the chhas affix, Saudarśanīyā.

[143] Zeitschrift, ii. 58. See also Asiat. Res. xv. 108; and App. note L.

[144] Ind. Stud. i. 220.

Arians obliterated the recollection of their own earlier freedom; and caused them to detest the kindred tribes to the westward as renegades, instead of looking on themselves as men who had abandoned their own original institutions."

There are other races also, who, although in the later Sanskrit literature they are spoken of as being now aliens from the Brahmanical communion, are yet declared to have once belonged to the Kshatriya caste; and to have lost their position in it from neglect of sacred rites.[145] (See above, p. 259, and note 35). In addition to this tradition, however, we have yet further proof of the Arian origin of some at least of these tribes. Thus, it appears from the following passage of the Nirukta (already quoted above, p. 152), that the Kambōjas spoke an Arian language, Nirukta, ii. 2: "Among some (tribes) the original forms are used, among others the derivatives. S'avati for the 'act of going' is used only among the Kambōjas, while its derivative śava is used among the Āryas. Dāti is employed by the eastern people in the sense of 'cutting,' while the word dātram, 'sickle,' (only) is used by the men of the north." If, therefore, the testimony of Yāska in regard to the language used by Kambōjas is to be trusted, it is clear that they spoke a Sanskrit dialect. It is implied in the remarks he has made, that a close affinity existed between the languages of the Āryas and Kambōjas; that the substance of both was the same, though in some respects it was variously modified and applied. For it is only where such a general identity exists, that the differences existing between any two dialects can excite any attention. Had the two languages had but little in common, no such comparison of minor variations could have suggested itself to the grammarians. Now the country of the Kambōjas was situated to the north-west of India, on the other side of the Indus. It is clear, therefore, that Sanskrit was spoken at some distance to the west of that river.

Professor Roth is even of opinion that this passage proves Sanskrit grammar to have been studied among the Kambōjas. In his Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, p. 67, he observes: "The multitude of grammarians whose opinions are cited in the Prātiśākhyas, proves how widely grammatical studies were pursued; and Yāska (Nirukta ii. 2: see above, and p. 152), confirms this in a remarkable passage, according to which verbal forms were variously employed by the grammarians of four different provinces. These four tribes were the Kambōjas and Āryas, together with the Prāchyas and Udīchyas (or eastern and northern peoples). It is thus irrefragably proved that the Kambōjas were originally not only an Indian people, but also a people possessed of Indian culture; and consequently that in Yāska's time this culture extended as far as the Hindukush. At a later period, as the well-known passage in Manu's Institutes (x. 43) shows, the Kambōjas were reckoned among the barbarians, because their customs differed from those of the Indians. . . . . The same change of relation has thus, in a smaller degree, taken place between the Kambōjas and the Indians, as occurred, in a remote antiquity, between the latter and the ancient Persians." [146]

[145] This tradition is, however, erroneously extended to some of the eastern and southern tribes, the Puṇḍras, Oḍras and Draviḍas, who, as we shall afterwards see, could not have been of Arian origin.

Now, as I have intimated, the fact that Sanskrit was spoken by the tribes to the west of the Indus may be held to prove that that tract of country was inhabited by races of Arian origin, and of common descent with the Indians;[147] and affords an additional argument in support of the position that the Indo-Arians immigrated into India from that direction.

It may, however, perhaps, be objected that the passage in question

[146] In his later work, the edition of the Nirukta, Roth suspects, for certain reasons, that so much of the passage before us as refers to the Kambōjas may be interpolated. He adds, however, that "it is in so far valuable, as it shows that the ancient Indians imagined the Kambōjas also to be students of Sanskrit Grammar." Erläut., pp. 17, 18. In the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vii. 373–377, Professor Müller makes some remarks on the same passage. He alludes to the fact that a similar passage occurs in the Mahābhāshya; and observes that "though this circumstance appears partly to confirm Roth's conjecture regarding the spuriousness of portions of the passage, it may also be possible that the Mahābhāshya has borrowed it from the Nirukta, or that both the Nirukta and the Mahābhāshya may have taken it from the common source of ancient grammatical tradition." In any case, this reference to a distant race like the Kambōjas, looks as if it must have been borrowed from some ancient source. The passage of the Mahābhāshya is as follows, p. 62 of Dr. Ballantyne's edition: S'avatir gati-karmā Kambojeshv eva bhāshito bhavati | vikāre eva enam Aryāḥ bhāshante "śavaḥ" iti | "Hammatiḥ" Surāshṭreshu "raṁhatiḥ" Prāchya-madhyameshu "gamim" eva tv Āryāḥ prayuṁjate | "Dātir" lavanārthe Prāchyeshu dātram Udīchyeshu | "S'avati, as a verb of going, is employed only by the Kambōjas; the Āryas use only its derivative, s'ava. The Surāshṭras use hammati, the central and eastern tribes raṁhati, but the Āryas only gami in the sense of 'going.' Dāti occurs among the eastern tribes as the verb for 'cutting;' dātra, a 'sickle,' alone is used by the people of the north."

[147] See Appendix, note M. See Rawlinson's Herodotus, i. p. 670, 671; and Strabo, there quoted.

(Nir. ii. 2), not only proves that Sanskrit was spoken by the Kambojas, to the north-west, but by the men of the east also. Now, as we may presume that Yāska lived on the banks of the Sarasvatī or of the Yamunā, or of the Gangā, the people whom he designates Prāchyas, or "men of the east," must have been the Kīkaṭas, or the Magadhas, or the Angas, or the Vangas. But since it is evident from this passage that these tribes also spoke Sanskrit, it might in like manner be argued from this circumstance that the Āryas must have penetrated into India from the eastward. To this I reply, that we can prove from other passages, such as that in the S'atapatha-brāhmaṇa, i. 4, i. 10–18 (which will be quoted further on), that the Arian civilization travelled from the west to the east; and that therefore we may reasonably suppose that these Prāchya tribes did not originally live in the eastern country, but formed part of the population which had migrated from the west, or that at least they did not begin to speak Sanskrit till they had learnt it from the Arians coming from the west. And besides, this passage which I have quoted from Yāska does not stand alone; it is only auxiliary to the other arguments which have been already adduced to show that the Indo-Arians came from the north-west.

This fact, that tribes speaking dialects of Sanskrit lived to the north-west of India, might, it is true, be also explained on Mr. Curzon's hypothesis, that these tribes had emigrated from India. But this hypothesis is opposed, as we have already seen, pp. 312, f., 320, f., to the other circumstances of the case.

The argument, then, which I derive from the facts just detailed, when briefly stated, is this: We find the north-west of India to be occupied by various tribes, who spoke the same language as the Arian Indians. On the other hand, we find (as will be shown at length in the next chapter) that different parts (the eastern and southern as well as the north-western) of Hindustan itself, were inhabited by a variety of tribes speaking languages fundamentally distinct from those of the Arian race. From this I draw the conclusion that the Arian Indians must have come from without, from the same side which we find to be occupied from the earliest period by tribes speaking the same language; and have driven before them to the east and south the non-Arian races, to whom, on penetrating into India, they found themselves opposed. This subject, however, will be handled at length in the following chapter.

CHAPTER III.

THE ARIANS IN INDIA: THEIR ADVANCE TO THE EAST AND SOUTH.

In the preceding chapter I have endeavoured, by a variety of arguments derived from comparative philology, and from general history, as well as from the most ancient written records of the Indians and the Iranians, to prove—First, that the dominant race which we find established in Hindustan at the dawn of history was not autochthonous, but immigrated into that country from Central Asia; and Secondly, that the route by which this people penetrated was from the north-west through Kabul, and across the Indus. I shall, for the future, assume that both of these two propositions have been substantiated; and shall proceed to trace the history of the Indo-Arian tribes after they had entered the Panjāb, and had commenced their advance to the south and east. We have already gathered (see above, pp. 341, ff.), from an examination of the oldest Indian records, the hymns of the Rigveda, that the country on both sides of the Indus was the earliest seat of the Indo-Arians in India. We shall now see (as has also been already intimated, pp. 291) that in these same hymns the ancient bards designated the men of their own tribes by the name of Āryas, and distinguished them expressly from another class of people called Dasyus, who, we have reason to suppose, were a race of distinct origin from the Āryas, and perhaps different from them in colour (see above, p. 282), as they certainly were in language, in religion, and in customs, who had been in occupation of India before it was entered by the Indo-Arians from the north-west. I shall afterwards adduce various passages from the Brāhmaṇas and post-Vedic writings, illustrative of the progress of the Indo-Arians as they advanced to the east and south, driving the indigenous tribes before them into the hills and forests, and taking possession of the territory which the latter had previously occupied. I shall subsequently furnish some illustrations of the fundamental differences which exist between the Sanskrit and the languages of the south of India—differences which indicate that the tribes among which the latter dialects were originally vernacular must in all probability have been of a different race from the Indo-Arians. And, finally, I shall refer to the mode in which these various classes of facts support the conclusion to which we have been already led, that the Indo-Arians were not autochthonous in India, but immigrated into that country from the north-west.

Sect. I.—Distinction drawn between the Āryas and Dasyus in the Rigveda.

I proceed, then, first, to show that the authors of the Vedic hymns made a distinction between the members of their own community and certain tribes whom they designated as Dasyus. This will appear from the following texts. R.V. 51, 8, 9: Vijānīhi Āryān ye cha dasyavo barhmishmate randhaya śāsad avratān | śākī bhava yajamānasya chodità viśvā it tā te sadhamādeshu chākana | "Distinguish between the Āryas and those who are Dasyus: chastizing those who observe no sacred rites [or who are lawless], subject them to the sacrificer. Be a strong supporter of him who sacrifices. I desire all these (benefits) at thy festivals."[1] x. 86, 19: Ayam emi vichākaśad vichinvan dāsam āryam | "Here I come," (says Indra) "perceiving and distinguishing the Dāsa and the Ārya." i. 103, 3; Sa jātūbharmā śraddadhānaḥ ojaḥ puro vibhindann acharad vi dāsīḥ | vidvān vajrin dasyave hetim asya āryam saho vardhaya dyumnam Indra | "Armed with the lightning,[2] and trusting in his strength, he (Indra) moved about shattering the cities of the Dasyus. Indra, thunderer, considering, hurl thy shaft against the Dasyu, and increase the might and glory of the Ārya." i. 117. 21: Yavaṁ vṛikeṇa Aśvinā vapantā ishaṁ duhānā manushāya dasrā | abhi dasyuṁ bakureṇa dhamantā uru jyotiś chak-

[1] This text, as well as R.V. i. 103, 3, given below, is quoted by Professor Müller, "Languages of the Seat of War," first edition, p. 28, note.

[2] Professor Benfey (Orient und Occident, iii. 132) renders jātūbharmā, "a born warrior." Prof. Aufrecht considers it to mean "carrying off the victory, or palm," deriving jātu from ji, to conquer, which he thinks had another form jā, from which comes jāyu, "victorious."

rathur āryāya | "O beautiful Aśvins, sowing barley with the plough, drawing forth (lit. milking) food for man, and sweeping [or blowing] away the Dasyu with the thunderbolt, ye have created a great light for the Ārya."[3] i. 130, 8: Indraḥ samatsu yajamānam āryam prāvad viśveshu śatamūtir ājishu svarmīḷheshu ājishu | manave śāsad avratān tvachaṁ kṛishṇām arandhayat | "Indra, who in a hundred ways protects in all battles, in heaven-conferring battles, has preserved in the fray the sacrificing Ārya. Chastizing the neglectors of religious rites, he subjected the black skin to Manu" (or the Arian man).[4] iii. 34, 8, 9: Sasāna yaḥ pṛithivīṁ dyām utemām Indram madanti anu dhīraṇāsaḥ | sasāna atyān uta sūryaṁ sasāna Indraḥ sasāna purubhojasaṁ gām | hiraṇyam uta bhogaṁ sasāna hatvī dasyūn pra āryaṁ varṇam āvat | "The wise gladden Indra, who bestowed the earth and this firmament. Indra gave horses, he gave the sun, he gave the much-nourishing cow; and he gave golden wealth. Slaying the Dasyu, he protected the Āryan colour," iv. 26, 1, 2: Aham Manur abhavaṁ sūryaś cha ahaṁ Kakshīvān ṛishir asmi vipraḥ | ahaṁ Kutsam Ārjuneyaṁ ni ṛinje ahaṁ kavir Uśanāḥ paśyata mām | 2 | aham bhūmim adadām āryāya ahaṁ vṛishṭiṁ dāśushe martyāya | aham apo anayaṁ vāvaśānāḥ mama devāso anu ketum āyan | "I," says Indra, "was Manu, and I the sun; I am the

[3] Sāyaṇa interprets the "great light," either of the glory acquired by the Aśvins: Svākīyaṁ tejo māhātmyaṁ chakrathuḥ | or of the sun: Vistīrṇaṁ sūryākhyaṁ jyotiḥ | "For it is the living man who beholds the sun:" Jīvan hi sūryam paśyati | Roth thinks this verse may refer to some forgotten legend, and that vṛika may have the ordinary sense of "wolf." He compares R.V. viii. 226: Daśasyantā manave pūrvyaṁ divi yavaṁ vṛikeṇa karshathaḥ | "Desiring to be bountiful to the man, ye have of old in the sky ploughed barley with the wolf." He is also of opinion that dhamantā has in the verse before us its proper sense of "blowing," and refers in proof to the words of R.V. ix. 1, 8, dhamanti bākuraṁ dṛitim | Bakura perhaps signifies, he thinks, a "crooked wind instrument, which the Aśvins used to terrify their enemies; and bākura" (in R.V. ix. 1, 8) "might denote a skin shaped like a bakura." Illustr. of Nirukta, p. 92. In his Lexicon, Roth adheres to the opinion that bakura is probably a martial wind-instrument, and that bākuro dṛitiḥ is a bagpipe. The two following passages also similarly speak of light: R.V. ix. 92, 5: Jyotir yad ahne akṛinod u lokam prāvad manuṁ dasyave kar abhīkam | "When he (Soma) gave light to the day and afforded space, he delivered Manu [or the Arian man], and arrested the Dasyu." R.V. x. 43, 4: . . . vidat svar manave jyotir āryam | "He (Indra) gave to Manu blessedness (and) a glorious light."

[4] This passage is translated in a review of the first volume of this work, contained in the "Times" of 12th April, 1858. The "black skin," is there interpreted of the dark colour of the Dasyus. The next passage is also partly quoted in the same article.

wise ṛishi Kakshīvāt. I subdue Kutsa, the son of Arjuni. I am the sage Uśanas: behold me. 2. I gave the earth to the Ārya, and rain to the sacrificer. I have led the longing waters. The gods have followed my will."[5] iv. 30, 18: The Sanskrit text of the following is given above, p. 347: "Thou, O Indra, hast speedily slain those two Āryas, Arṇa and Chitraratha, on the opposite bank of the Sarayu" (river). vi. 25, 2, 3: Ābhir viśvāḥ abhiyujo visūchīr āryāya viśo avatārīr dāsīḥ| Indra jāmayaḥ uta ye ajāmayo arvāchīnāso vanuśho yuyujre| tvam eshāṁ vithurā śavāṁsi jahi vṛishṇyāni kṛiṇuhi parāchaḥ | "By these (succours) subdue to the Ārya all the hostile Dāsa people everywhere. Indra, whether it be kinsmen or strangers who have approached and injuriously assailed us, do thou enfeeble and destroy their power and vigour, and put them to flight." vi. 33, 3: Tvaṁ tān Indra ubhayān amitrān dāsā vṛitrāṇi āryā cha śūra | vadhīr ity ādi. "Do thou, heroic Indra, destroy both these our foes, (our) Dāsa and our Ārya enemies, etc. vi. 60, 6: Hato vṛitrāṇi āryā hato dāsāni satpatiḥ | hato viśvāḥ apa dvishaḥ | "Do ye, O lords of the heroic, slay our Ārya enemies, slay our Dāsa enemies, destroy all those who hate us." R.V. vii. 5, 6: Tvaṁ dasyūn okaso Agne ājaḥ uru jyotir janayann āryāya | "Thou, Agni, drovest the Dasyus from the house, creating a wide light for the Ārya." vii. 83, 1: Dāsā cha vṛitrā hatam āryāṇi cha sudāsam Indrā-Varuṇā 'vasā 'vatam | "Slay both the Dāsa enemies and the Ārya; protect Sudās (or the liberal man) with your succour, O

[5] Sāyaṇa connects the word ārya as an epithet with Manu understood. Professor Weber, Ind. Stud. i. 195, note, thinks that Manu means in this passage the moon. (In pp. 194, 5, he has a dissertation on the word Manu.) The speaker in these verses appear to be Indra. (See Böthl. and Roth's Dictionary, sub voce, Uśanas.) The Anukramaṇī, as quoted by Sāyaṇa, says, Adyābhis tisṛibhir Indram iva ātmānam ṛishis tushṭāva Indro vā ātmānam | "In the first three verses the ṛishi celebrates himself as if under the character of Indra; or Indra celebrates himself." Kuhn (Herabkunft des Feuers, p. 143) conjectures that Vāmadeva may perhaps have been an ancient epithet of Indra. In R.V. x. 48, 1, Indra says, similarly: Ahaṁ dāśushe vibhajāmi bhojanam | "I distribute food to the sacrificer," etc. The pantheistic author of the Vṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, thinks that the Ṛishi Vāmadeva is speaking of himself in these words (Bibliotheca Indica, pp. 215, 216): Tad yo yo devānām pratyabudhyata sa eva tad abhavat tathā ṛishīṇāṁ tathā manushyāṇām | tad ha etat paśyann ṛishir Vāmadevaḥ pratipede "aham Manur abhavaṁ sūryaś cha" iti | "Whosoever of gods, ṛishis, or men, understood That, he became That. Perceiving this, the Ṛishi Vāmadeva obtained this text, 'I was Manu, I the sun, etc." Uśanas is connected with Indra in R.V. vi. 20, 11.

Indra and Varuṇa." x. 38, 3: Yo no dāsaḥ āryo vā purushṭuta adevaḥ Indra yudhaye chiketati | asmābhis te sushahāḥ santu śatravaḥ tvayā vayaṁ tān vanuyāma śangame | "O, much lauded Indra, whatever ungodly person, Dāsa or Ārya, designs to fight against us, let these enemies be easily subdued by us. May we destroy them in the conflict." x. 49, 3: Ahaṁ Sushṇasya śnathitā vadhar yamaṁ na yo rare āryaṁ nāma dasyave | "I, the slayer of Sushṇa, have restrained the bolt,—I who have not abandoned the Āryan name to the Dasyu." x. 65, 11: Brahma gām aśvaṁ janayanta oshadhīr vanaspatīn pṛithivīm parvatān apaḥ | sūryaṁ divi rohayantaḥ sudānavaḥ āryā vratā visṛijanto adhi kshami | "These bountiful ones" (the gods named in the preceding verse) "have generated prayer, the cow, the horse, plants, trees, the earth, the mountains, the waters;—causing the sun to ascend the sky, and spreading Āryan rites over the earth."[6] x. 83, 1: Sāhyāma dāsam āryaṁ tvayā yujā vayaṁ sahaskṛitena sahasā sahasvatā | "May we," (O Manyu) "associated with thee, the mighty one, overcome both Dāsa and Ārya through (thy) effectual energy." x. 102, 3: Antar yachha jighāṁsato vajram Indra abhidāsataḥ | dāsasya vā maghavann āryasya vā sanutar yavaya vadham | "Restrain, O Indra, the bolt of the murderous assailant: remove far away the weapon of our enemy, be he Dāsa or Ārya." x. 138, 3: Vi sūryo madhye amuchad rathaṁ vidad dāsāya pratimānam āryaḥ | "The sun has launched his car in mid-heaven: the Ārya has paid back a recompense to the Dasyu." viii. 24, 27: Yaḥ ṛikshād aṁhaso muchad yo vā aryāt saptasindhushu | vadhar dāsasya tuvinṛimṇa nīnamaḥ | "Who delivered [us] from the destroyer, from calamity; who, O powerful [god], didst avert the bolt of the Dāsa from the Ārya in [the land of] the seven streams."

The above-cited texts seem to show that the Rigveda recognizes a distinction between the tribe to which the authors of the hymns belonged, and a hostile people who observed different rites, and were regarded with contempt and hatred by the superior race. This appears from the constant antithetic juxtaposition of the two names Ārya and Dasyu, in most of these texts; and from the specification in others of enemies, both Ārya and Dasyu. If human enemies are designated in the latter texts by the word Ārya, we may reasonably suppose the same class of foes to be commonly or often denoted by the word Dasyu. It is not, of course, to be expected that we should find the Indian commentators confirming this view of the matter more than partially; as they had never dreamt of the modern critical view of the origin of the Āryas and their relation to the barbarous aboriginal tribes. Yāska (Nirukta, vi. 26) explains the term Ārya by the words "son of a [or, of the] lord."[7] The word Dasyu is interpreted by him etymologically, thus: "Dasyu comes from the root das, to destroy; in him moisture is consumed, and he destroys (religious) ceremonies."[8]

[6] Compare R.V. vii. 99, 4: Urum yajñāya chakrathur u lokam janayantā sūryam ushasam agnim | Dāsasya chid vṛishaśiprasya māyāḥ jaghnathur narā pṛitanājyeshu: "Ye (Indra and Vishṇu) have provided abundant room for the sacrifice, creating the sun, the dawn, and fire. Ye, O heroes, have destroyed the powers of the bull-nosed Dāsa."

Sāyaṇa interprets the word Ārya, by "wise performers of rites;"[9] wise worshippers;"[10] "wise;"[11] "one to whom all should resort;"[12] "the most excellent race [colour] consisting of the three highest castes;"[13] "practising ceremonies;"[14] "most excellent through performance of ceremonies;"[15] and in two places, i. 117, 21, and iv. 26, 2, he regards it as an epithet of Manu. The same commentator interprets the word Dasyu of the "robber Vṛitra;"[16] "enemies who destroy the observers of Vedic rites;"[17] "the Asuras, Piśāchas, etc., who destroy;"[18] "the vexing Asuras;"[19] "all the people who destroy religious rites;"[20] "Vala and the other Asuras who destroy religious rites;"[21] "enemies devoid of religious ceremonies."[22] From these quotations it will be seen that Sāyaṇa mostly understands the Dasyus of superhuman beings, demons, or Titans, rather than of human enemies.

[7] Nir. vi. 26: Āryaḥ īśvara-putraḥ | See Benfey's remarks on this definition in Gött. Gel. Anz., for 1861, pp. 141, f.

[8] Nir. vii. 23: Dasyur dasyateḥ kshayārthād upadasyanty asmin rasāḥ upadāsayati karmāṇi |

[9] Vidusho 'nushṭhātṛīn | on R.V. i. 51, 8.

[10] Vidvāmsaḥ stotāraḥ | on i. 103, 3.

[11] Vidushe | on i. 117, 21.

[12] Araṇīyaṁ sarvair gantavyam | on i. 130, 8.

[13] Uttamaṁ varṇaṁ traivarṇikam | on iii. 34, 9.

[14] Karma-yuktāni | on vi. 22, 10.

[15] Karmānushṭhātṛitvena śreshṭhāni | on vi. 33, 3.

[16] Choraṁ vṛitram | on i. 33, 4.

[17] Anushṭhātṛīṇām upakshapayitāraḥ śatravaḥ | on i. 51, 8; and i. 103, 3.

[18] Upakshaya-kāriṇam asuram piśāchādikam | on i. 117, 21.

[19] Bādhakān asurān | on iii. 34, 9.

[20] Karmaṇām upakshapayitṛīr viśvāḥ sarvāḥ prajāḥ | on vi. 25, 2.

[21] Upakshapayitṛīn karma-virodhino Vala-prabhritīn asurān | on vi. 33, 3.

[22] Karmahīnāḥ śatravaḥ | on vi. 60, 6.

In his note on i. 100, 8, he speaks of them as "destroying enemies living on the earth;"[23] and in another place he explains the Dāsa varṇa, as being either "the Sūdras and other inferior tribes, or the vile destroying Asura."[24]

There is no doubt that in many passages of the R.V., to which I shall presently refer, the words Dasyu and Dāsa are applied to demons of different orders, or goblins (Asuras, Rākshasas, etc.); but it is tolerably evident from the nature of the case, that in all, or at least some of the texts which have been hitherto adduced, we are to understand the barbarous aboriginal tribes of India as intended by these terms. This is yet more clearly established by the sense in which the word Dasyu is used (i.e. for men and not for demons) in the Aitareya-brāhmaṇa, in Manu, and in the Mahābhārata. Thus the author of the Aitareya-brāhmaṇa, after making Viśvāmitra say to his fifty disobedient sons, vii. 18: Tān anuvyājahāra "antān vaḥ prajā bhakshīshṭa" iti | te ete Andhrāḥ Puṇḍrāḥ Śabarāḥ Pulindāḥ Mūtibāḥ ity udantyāḥ bahavo bhavanti | Vaiśvāmitrāḥ dasyūnām bhūyishṭhāḥ | "Let your progeny possess the extremities [of the land]," adds, "These are the Andhras, Puṇḍras, Śabaras, Pulindas, Mūtibas, and other numerous frontier tribes. Most of the Dasyus are descended from Viśvāmitra."[25] And in the authoritative definition already quoted[26] (see also vol. i., p. 482), Manu tells us: "Those tribes in the world which are without the pale of the castes sprung from the mouth, arms, thighs, and feet [of Brahmā], whether they speak the language of the Mlechhas, or of the Āryas, are all called Dasyus."

The Mahābhārata thus speaks of the same people, ii. 26, 1025: Pauravaṁ yudhi nirjitya Dasyūn parvata-vāsinaḥ | gaṇān Utsavasanketān ajayat sapta Pāṇḍavaḥ | "Having vanquished the Paurava in battle, the Pāṇḍava conquered the Utsavasanketas, seven tribes of Dasyus inhabiting the mountains." And again, Ibid. ver. 1031–2: Daradān saha Kāmbojair ajayat Pākaśāsaniḥ | prāguttarāṁ diśaṁ ye cha vasanty āśritya Dasyavaḥ | nivasanti vane ye cha tān sarvān ajayat prabhuḥ | Lohān Paramakāmbojān Ṛishikān uttarān api | "Pākaśāsāni conquered

[23] Pṛithivyām bhūmau vartamānān dāsyūn upakshapayitṝn śatrūn | on i. 100. 8.

[24] Dāsaṁ varṇaṁ śūdrādikaṁ yadvā dāsam upakshapayitāram adharaṁ nikṛishṭam asuram.

[25] See the first volume of this work (2nd ed.), pp. 355, ff.

[26] See above p. 151.

the Daradas, with the Kāmbojas, and the Dasyus who dwell in the north-east region, as well as all the inhabitants of the forest, with the Lohas, the Parama-Kāmbojas (furthest Kāmbojas), and the northern Ṛishikas." And once more: Kāmbojānāṁ sahasraiś cha S'akānāṁ cha viśāmpate | S'abarāṇāṁ Kirātānāṁ Varvarāṇāṁ tathaiva cha | agamyarūpām pṛithivīm māṁśa-śoṇita-kardamām | Kṛitavāṁs tatra S'aineyaḥ kshapayaṁs tāvakam balam | Dasyūnāṁ sa-śirastrāṇaiḥ śirobhir lūnamūrdhajaiḥ | dīrghakūrchair mahī kīrṇā vivarhaiḥ aṇḍajair iva | "Saineya (Krishṇa's charioteer) made the beautiful earth a mass of mud with the flesh and blood of thousands of Kāmbojas, S'ākas, S'āvāras, Kirātas, Varvaras, destroying thy host. The earth was covered with the helmets and shaven and bearded heads of the Dasyus, as with birds bereft of their wings."[27] Here it is evident that the word Dasyu, in the latter part of the sentence, is a generic term denoting the whole of the tribes who had been previously mentioned, the Kāmbojas, S'ākas, etc.

Another passage occurs in the S'ānti Parva of the Mahābh., sect. 65, verses 2429, ff., where the tribes there enumerated are said to live after the fashion of the Dasyus; and where the duties to be observed by the Dasyus are described. The Dasyus therefore cannot have been regarded by the author of the Mahābhārata as demons.

If any further illustration of this point be required, it may be found in the following story (from the Mahābhārata, S'ānti P., sect. 168, verses 6293, ff.) about the sage Gautama living among the Dasyus: Bhīshma uvācha | hanta te vartayishye 'ham itihāsam purātanam | udīchyāṁ diśi yad vṛittam Mlechheshu manujādhipa | brāhmaṇo madhyadeśīyaḥ kaśchid vai brahma-varjitam | grāmaṁ vṛiddhi-yutaṁ vīkshya prāviśad bhaiksha-kāṁkshayā | tatra Dasyur dhanayutaḥ sarva-varṇa-viśesha-vit | brahmaṇyaḥ satyasandhaś cha dāne cha nirato 'bhavat | tasya kshayam upāgamya tato bhikshāṁ ayāchata | . . . . | Gautamaḥ sannikarsheṇa Dasyubhiḥ samatām iyāt | tathā tu vasatas tasya Dasyu-grāme sukhaṁ tadā | . . . . kim idaṁ kurushe mohād vipras tvaṁ hi kulodvahaḥ | madhyadeśa-parijñāto Dasyu-bhāvaṁ gataḥ katham | Bhīshma is the speaker: "I will tell thee an ancient story about what happened in the northern region among the Mlechhas. A certain Brahman of the central country, perceiving a particular village, which was destitute of Brahmans [or the Veda], to be in a prosperous condition, entered it to solicit alms. There lived there a wealthy Dasyu, who was acquainted with the distinctions of all the castes, religious, truthful, and liberal. Approaching his house, the Brahman asked alms," and a house. . . . . "From proximity with the Dasyus, Gautăma [the Brahman in question] became like them. While he was thus dwelling happily in a village of Dasyus," another Brahman arrived, who demanded of him: "What is this that thou art foolishly doing? Thou art a Brahman of good family, well known in the central region: how is it that thou hast sunk into the condition of a Dasyu?"

[27] Mahābh. Droṇa Parva. Sect. 119, ver. 4747, ff.

From the evidence afforded by these passages of Manu and the Mahābhārata, it is probable that the word Dasyu, when occurring in the Veda, is sometimes at least to be understood of men, and, consequently, of the wild aboriginal tribes, whom the Arian Indians encountered on their occupation of Hindustan. It is true that, by the later authorities whom I have quoted, the Dasyus are regarded as degraded Arians,[28] (though Manu says that some of them spoke Mlechha dialects), and that tribes unquestionably Arian, as the Kāmbojas (see above, p. 355, f.), are included among them. But though it is true that some of the Arian tribes who had not adopted Brahmanical institutions were so designated in after-times, the term Dasyu could not well have been so applied in the earlier Vedic era. At that time the Brahmanical institutions had not arrived at maturity; the distinction between those who observed them strictly and those who observed them laxly could scarcely have arisen; and the tribes who are stigmatized by the Vedic poets as persons of a different religion must therefore, probably, have been such as had never before been brought into contact with the Arians, and were, in fact, of an origin totally distinct.

It thus appears, that by the Dasyus who are mentioned in the Rig-veda we must, in some passages, though not in all, understand the barbarous aboriginal tribes with whom the Āryas, on their settlement in the north-west of India, were brought into contact and conflict. Before we proceed further, however, it will be interesting to review some of the other principal texts of the R.V. in which the Āryas and Dasyus are mentioned. I should be glad if, while doing so, I could hope to arrive in each case at a definite result in regard to the application made of the words Dasyu and Dāsa, and to determine precisely the relations which subsisted between the tribes sometimes understood under that designation and the Āryas. But the sense of the texts is often so obscure, that I cannot always expect to fix their interpretation, or, consequently, to deduce from them any certain conclusions. As, however, I have collected and arranged a considerable number of passages bearing on this subject, I think it best to present them to the reader, with such illustrations as I am able to supply, in the hope that a fuller elucidation may sooner or later be supplied by the mature researches of some more competent scholar.

[28] See Lassen, Zeitschrift, ii. 49, ff.

[Since the above remarks were written, Professors Benfey and Roth have expressed their opinions on this subject. The former scholar writes as follows, in his review of the first edition of this work above referred to, Gött. Gel. Anz. for 1861, pp. 137, ff.: "On a point which occupies a prominent place in this work I will permit myself one further observation. It is well known that in the Vedas the word 'dasyu,' and in place of it also 'dāsa,' frequently appears as the antithesis of 'ārya.' . . . It admits of no doubt that the Sanskrit-speaking races designate themselves by the word ārya; it is therefore a natural supposition that by the words 'dasyu' and 'dāsa' they denote those who had been subjected by them. This assumption is confirmed by several passages. On the other hand, however, there are not a few in which the same expressions 'dasyu' and 'dāsa' are applied to the demons with whom the gods are in conflict, and whose defeat is a condition of the earth receiving the heavenly blessing which is bestowed by the gods. . . . . The question arises whether one of these is the proper signification, which is only secondarily applied to the other, or whether any third sense common to both lies at the root of them. The answer is already indicated by the alternating employment of 'dasyu' with 'dāsa' (which has the sense of slave) in the same antithesis (with 'ārya')—an employment which we may with the highest probability conjecture to rest upon an identity, or, at least, an inward connexion. This indication receives a tolerably decisive confirmation from the fact that according to an abundance of analogies 'dasyu' and 'dāsa' are found to be akin to each other from a phonetic point of view." . . . . After stating at some length his grounds for this opinion, Prof. Benfey proceeds: "The essential similarity of 'dāsa' and 'das' is thus beyond doubt. But

'dāsa' has decidedly the sense of 'slave,' and if this was the original meaning of both the forms, it is equally certain that both 'dāsa' and 'dasyu,' in contrast with the 'ārya,' at first designated the aboriginal population subjected by the latter at the time of their diffusion; and this relation which subsisted on earth, which no doubt was not rarely interrupted by revolts of the subject people, was transferred by the Arians to the domain of the gods, whose harmful demons were represented as the rebellious slaves of the deities.

"The view that in this contrasted relation 'dāsa' has really the sense of 'slave,' 'servant,' is supported by three essentially similar half verses of the Atharvaveda (overlooked by the author in his collection), in which 'Sūdra,' the well-known name for the servile caste in India, stands in the same contrast to 'ārya,' as 'dasyu' and 'dāsa' elsewhere do. The first is iv. 20, 4: Tayā 'ham sarvam paśyāmi yaś cha Śūdraḥ utāryaḥ | 'By this (plant) I see every one, whether 'Sūdra or Ārya.' The second text is iv. 20, 8: Tenāhaṁ sarvam paśyāmi uta Śūdram utāryam | 'By it (a kind of goblin) I see every one, whether Sūdra or Ārya.' The third is xix. 62, 1," which Prof. Benfey does not quote, but which runs thus: Priyam mā kṛiṇu deveshu priyaṁ rājasu mā kṛiṇu | priyaṁ sarvasya paśyataḥ uta śūdre utārye | "Make me dear to the gods; make me dear to kings, dear to every one who beholds me, whether to Sūdra or Ārya."

Professor Roth, in his Lexicon, s.v. dasyu, defines that word as denoting (1) "a class of superhuman beings, who are maliciously disposed both to gods and men, and are overcome by Indra and Agni in particular." Many of the demons subdued by Indra, designated by particular names, as Śambara, Śushṇa, Chumuri, etc., bear the general appellation of Dasyu. They are not only spirits of darkness like the Rakshases, but extended over the widest spheres. In A.V., xviii. 8, 22, they are demons in the form of deceased men (Ye dasyavaḥ pitṛishu pravishṭāḥ jnātimukhāś charanti). They are, he remarks, frequently contrasted (a) generally with men (manu, āyu, nar), and are called amānusha in R.V., x. 22, 8 (in support of which he refers to R.V., viii. 87, 6; ix. 92, 5; Vāl., 2, 8; R.V., vi. 14, 3, and v. 7, 10); and (b) more specifically with pious orthodox men (ārya), and it is but seldom, if at all (he considers), that the explanation of dasyu as referring to the non-Arians, the barbarians, is advisable (in proof of which he cites

R.V., i. 117, 21; vii. 5, 6; ii. 11, 18, f.; iii. 34, 9; i. 103, 3; x. 49, 3; i. 51, 8). The last passage, however, he thinks, is best explained of the barbarians. The word is (2)—he goes on to say—an opprobrious designation of hostile, wicked, or barbarous men, perhaps in the following passages of the Veda, v. 70, 3, turyāma dasyūn tanūbhiḥ; "let us overcome the Dasyus in our own persons:" x. 83, 6, hanāva dasyūn uta bodhi āpeḥ | "let us slay the Dasyus, and do thou recollect thy friend." In Ait. Br., vii. 18, they are barbarous tribes: Vaiśvāmitrāḥ dasyūnām bhūyishṭhāḥ | "Most of the Dasyus are descended from Viśvāmitra."]

Sect. II.—Additional Vedic texts bearing on the relations of the Āryas and Dasyus.

First: In the following passages, or some of them, reference may be made to the earth or territory being bestowed on the Āryas, i. 100, 18: Dasyūn Śimyūmś cha puruhūtaḥ evair hatvā pṛithivyāṁ śarvā nivarhīt | sanat kshetraṁ sakhibhiḥ śvitnyebhiḥ sanat sūryaṁ sanad apaḥ suvajraḥ |. "(Indra), the much-invoked, having, according to his wont, smitten to [or on] the earth the Dasyus and Śimyus [or destroyers], crushed them with his thunderbolt. The thunderer, along with his shining friends, bestowed territory, bestowed the sun, bestowed the waters."[29] ii. 20, 7: Sa vṛitrahā Indraḥ kṛishṇayonīḥ purandaro dāśīr airayad vi | ajanayad manave kshām apaś cha ityādi | "Indra, the

[29] Several points are obscure in this passage. Is the word Śimyu the name of a tribe (as Professor Wilson renders it), or does it merely mean a destroyer? In R.V. vii. 18, 5, we have the words śardhantam śimyum, which Professor Roth (Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, p. 94) renders by "defiant wrong-doer." Sāyana on that passage explains śimyum by bodhamānam | "understanding" (participle). In the text before us he explains the word Śamayitṛīn vadhakāriṇo rākshasādīn | "Subduers, i.e. slayers, Rākshasas, etc."; and again on the same passage: Śimyūn | Śamu upaśame | śamayati sarvaṁ tiraskaroti iti rākshasādiḥ śimyuḥ | "The verb śam designates one who contemns every one else. Śimyu therefore = Rākshasa, etc." Then, who are the "shining friends" of Indra, in the second clause? The Maruts? or the fair-complexioned Āryas? In verse 2 of this hymn, we find the words sakhibhiḥ svebhiḥ, "his friends," which Sāyaṇa interprets of the Maruts. He explains verse 18 thus: śvitnyebhiḥ śvetavarṇair alankāreṇa dīptāngair sakhibhir mitrabhūtair marudbhiḥ saha kshetraṁ śatrūṇāṁ svabhūtām bhūmiṁ sanat samabhākshīt | "Along with his white-coloured (i.e. whose limbs were shining with ornaments) friends, the Maruts, he divided the territory belonging to his enemies." On the other hand, we have, in verse 6 of this hymn, the worshippers themselves spoken of as, according to Sāyaṇa's gloss, the persons with whom the sun was shared. The slayer of Vṛitra, and destroyer of cities, scattered the servile (hosts) of black descent. He produced the earth and waters for Manu."[30] The passages iii. 34, 9, and iv. 26, 2, which have been already quoted above (p. 360, f.), should be again referred to here. vi. 18, 3: Tvaṁ ha nu tyad adamayo dasyūṁr ekaḥ kṛishṭīr avanor āryāya | "Thou (Indra) hast then subdued the Dasyus: thou hast alone subdued peoples to the Ārya."[31] vi. 61, 3: Uta kshitibhyo avanīr avindaḥ | "And thou (Sarasvatī) hast obtained lands for men."[32] vii. 19, 3: Paurukutsiṁ Trasadasyum āvaḥ kshetrasātā vṛitrahatyeshu pūrum | "Thou hast preserved the man Trasadasyu, son of Purukutsa, in fights words there are: Asmākebhir nṛibhiḥ sūryaṁ sanat | which Sāyaṇa renders, Asmadīyair nṛibhiḥ purushaiḥ sūryaṁ sūryaprakāsaṁ sanat sambhaktaṁ karotu śatrupurushais tu dṛishṭi-nirodhakham andhakāraṁ saṁyojayatu | "Let him divide the light of the sun with our men, and involve our enemies in darkness which shall obstruct their view." The same words are rendered by Rosen: Nostratibus viris solem concedat, "Let him bestow the sun on our countrymen," where the words in the instrumental case have the sense of the dative assigned to them. If they bear that sense in verse 6, they may equally have it in the 18th also. The meaning would then be, "He bestowed the land, the sun, the waters, on his fair friends." But this use of the instr. would not suit verse 10, Sa grāmebhiḥ saṇitā saratheḥbhiḥ | whether we understand grāmebhiḥ of villages, or hosts. On the words, "his fair friends," Professor Wilson remarks, Rigveda i. p. 260, note: "These, according to the scholiast, are the winds, or Maruts; but why they should have a share of the enemy's country (śatrūṇam bhūmim) seems doubtful. Allusion is more probably intended to earthly friends or worshippers of Indra, who were white (świtnya) in comparison with the darker tribes of the conquered country." The worshipper's friendship with Indra is mentioned in many passages of the R.V., as, i. 101, 1; iv. 16, 10; vi. 18, 5; vi. 21, 5 and 8; vi. 45, 7. Rosen renders this passage: Expugnavit terram sociis suis nitentibus, "He conquered the earth with his struggling companions;" thus giving another sense to śvitnyebhiḥ. In two other hymns, vii. 99, 3, and x. 65, 11 (quoted above, p. 362), we find mention made of the sun in a somewhat similar manner as in the verse under review. In his translation of the Rigveda in Orient und Occident, ii. 518, f., Prof. Benfey gives the following sense to the verse before us: "The much-invoked smites the robbers and devisers of mischief; in tempest he shatters them to the ground with his bolt; with his shining comrades the thunderer acquired ground, sun, and floods."

[30] Sāyaṇa explains the words kṛishṇayonīḥ, etc., thus: kṛishṇayōnīr nikṛishṭajātīr, dāsīr upakshapayatrīr āsurīḥ senāḥ, "the destructive armies of the Asuras, of degraded rank." The Vālākhilya ii. 8, has the following words: yebhir ni dasyum manusho nighoshayaḥ | "The horses with which (Indra) thou didst scare (?) the Dasyu away from the man."

[31] Sāyaṇa explains kṛishṭīḥ, "people," by putradāsādīn, "children, slaves," etc.

[32] Sāyaṇa explains avanīḥ, by Asūrair apahṛitāḥ bhūmīḥ, "lands taken away by the Asuras." Roth (Dict.) assigns also to the word the sense of "streams;" which it might seem to be the function of Sarasvatī to give rather than lands.

with foes for the acquisition of land." vii. 100, 4: Vichakrame pṛithivīm esha etāṁ kshetrāya Vishṇur manave daśasyan | "This Vishṇu traversed this earth, to give it for a domain to Manu (or the [Āryan] man)." It is possible that in these passages, or in some of them, allusion may be made to the occupation of the plains of India, and the subjugation of the aboriginal tribes by the Āryas, on their immigration from the north-west; but it must be confessed that the explanation is uncertain. In R.V., x. 65, 11, quoted above (p. 362), there seems to be a reference to the spread of Āryan institutions.

Second: In two of the passages already quoted (i. 51, 8, 9; i. 130, 8), the epithets ăvrăta and apavrata, "devoid of," or "opposed to, religious rites," or "lawless," will have been noticed as applied to the Dasyus. I proceed to cite some further passages in which the character and condition of the Dasyus (whoever they may be) are specified.

They are (1) described as a degraded race, i. 101, 5: Indro yo dasyūn adharān avātirat marutvantaṁ sakhyāya havāmahe | "We invoke to be our friend, Indra, attended by the Maruts, who subdued the base Dasyus" [or, "subdued and humbled the Dasyus"].[33] ii. 11, 18: Dhishva śavaḥ śūra yena Vṛitram avābhinad Dānum Aurṇavābham | apāvṛiṇor jyotir āryāya ni savyataḥ sādi dasyur Indra | "Maintain, O hero, that strength by which thou hast broken down Vṛitra, Dānu, Aurṇavābha. Thou hast revealed light to the Ārya, and the Dasyu has been set on thy left hand."[34] The text of the following, R.V., ii. 12, 4, has been already given in p. 282: "He who swept away the low Dāsa colour."[35] iv. 28, 4: Viśvasmāt sīm adhamān Indra dasyūn viśo dāsīr akṛiṇor apraśastāḥ | "Indra, thou hast made these Dasyus lower than all, and the servile people without renown."

They are described (2) as having either no religious worship, or rites different from those of the Āryas. i. 33, 4, 5: Ayajvānaḥ Sanakāḥ pretim īyuḥ | parā chit śīrshā vivṛijus te Indra ayajvāno yajvabhiḥ spardhamānāḥ |

[33] Sāyaṇa explains this of making the Asuras vile and slaying them: Asurān adharān nikṛishṭān kṛitvā.

[34] Sāyaṇa explains the word Dasyu in this verse of the mythical personage Vṛitra. The words ni + sādi, making together nishādi, present a curious coincidence with the word Nishāda.

[35] Roth (Dict.) gives the sense of "removing, putting away," to guhā kaḥ. Sāyaṇa explains it of "hiding in a cavern." The word varṇa, colour, race, which is applied to the Āryas, iii. 34, 9, is here made use of in speaking of the Dasyus. Sāyaṇa explains the latter, either of the S'ūdra caste, or of the Asuras.

"The unsacrificing Sanakas perished. Contending with the sacrificers, the non-sacrificers fled, O Indra, with averted faces."[36] i. 131, 4: S'āsas tam Indra martyam ayajyum ityādi | "Thou, O Indra, hast chastised the mortal who sacrifices not."[37] i. 132, 4: Sunvadbhyo randhaya kanchid avratañ hṛiṇāyantañ chid avratam | "Subject to those who offer libations the irreligious man, the irreligious man though wrathful." iv. 16, 9: Ni māyāvān abrahmā dasyur arta | "The deceitful, prayerless Dasyu has perished." R.V., v. 7, 10: Ād Agne apṛiṇato 'triḥ sasahyād dasyūn ishaḥ sasahyād nṛīn | "O Agni, may the Atri then overcome the illiberal Dasyus: may Isha overcome the men." R.V., vi. 14, 3: Tūrvanto dasyum āyavo vrataiḥ sīkshanto avratam | "Men subduing the Dasyu, with rites (or laws) overwhelming the irreligious (or lawless)." v. 42, 9: Apavratān prasave vāvṛidhānān brahma-dvishaḥ sūryād yavayasva | "Remove far from the sun the irreligious, the haters of prayer, who increase in progeny." viii. 59, 10: Tvañ naḥ Indra ṛitayus tvānido ni tṛimpasi | madhye vasishva tuvinṛimṇa ūrvor ni dāsañ śiśnatho hathaiḥ | 11 |

[36] Sāyaṇa describes the Sanakas as followers of Vṛitra: Etannāmakāḥ Vṛitrānucharāḥ. I cannot say who may be meant by the Sanakas here. They may have been heretical Āryas and not Dasyus. A Sanaka was a mindborn son of Brahmā. Wilson, Vish. Pur., first edition, p. 38, note 13. Weber, Ind. Stud. i. 385, note, quotes a text of the Mahābh. xii. 13,078, where he is mentioned as a sage. Benfey renders sanakāḥ "old."

[37] In i. 100, 15, the word marttāḥ, "men," is opposed to devāḥ, "gods." The word martya, "mortal," is usually applied to men. But from the following passage of the S'atapatha-brāhmaṇa it appears that the Asuras also are regarded as mortal, and that the gods too were formerly so. ii. 2, 2, 8, ff.: Devāścha vai Asurāścha ubhaye prājāpatyāḥ paspṛidhire | Te ubhaye eva anātmāna āsuḥ, martyā hy āsuḥ | anātmā hi martyaḥ | Teshu ubhayeshu martyeshu Agnir eva amṛita āsa | Tam ha sma ubhaye amṛitam upajīvanti . . . . Tato devās tanīyāñsa iva pariśiśishire | Te archantaḥ śrāmyantas cheruḥ | Uta Asurān sapatnān martyān abhibhavema iti te etad amṛitam agnyādheyam dadṛiśuḥ | Te ha ūchuḥ | hanta idam amṛitam antarātmann ādadhāmahai | Te idam amṛitam antarātmann ādhāya amṛitā bhūtvā astaryyā bhūtvā staryān sapatnān martyān abhibhavishyāma iti. "The gods and Asuras, both the offspring of Prajāpati, strove together. They were both soul-less, for they were mortal; for he who is soul-less is mortal. While they were both mortal, Agni alone was immortal; and they both derived life from him, the immortal. . . . Then the gods were left as the inferior. They continued to practise devotion and austerity, and (while seeking to) overcome their foes, the mortal Asuras, they beheld this immortal consecrated fire. They then said, 'Come, let us place this immortal (fire) in our inmost soul. Having done so, and having [thus] become immortal and invincible, we shall overcome our mortal and conquerable enemies.'" The gods accordingly placed the sacred fire in their hearts, and by this means overcame the Asuras.

Anyavratam amānusham ayajvānam adevayum | ava svaḥ sakhā dudhuvīta parvataḥ sughnāya dasyum parvataḥ | "Thou, Indra, lovest our religious rites; thou tramplest down those that revile thee; thou, vigorous hero, guard thyself in thy vital parts (lit. thighs); thou hast smitten the Dāsa with thy blows. 11. Let his own friend Parvata, let Parvata strike down to swift destruction the Dasyu who observes different rites, who is inhuman, who does not sacrifice, nor regard the gods."[38] iv. 41, 2: Sahvāṅso dasyum avratam | "Subduing the irreligious Dasyu."[39] x. 22, 7, 8: Ā naḥ Indra prikshase asmākam brahma udyatam | tat tvā yāchāmahe avaḥ S'ushṇaṁ yad hann amānusham | 8 | Akarmā Dasyur abhi no amantur anyavrato amānushaḥ | tvaṁ tasya amitrahan vadhar Dāsyasya dambhaya | "Our prayer, O Indra, is lifted up to thee for sustenance. We implore of thee that succour whereby thou didst smite the inhuman S'ushṇa. The Dasyu, irreligious, foolish, observing other rites, and inhuman, is against us: do thou, O slayer of our foes, subdue the weapon of this Dāsa."

Another epithet which is frequently applied to the adversaries of the Vedic bards, or of their deities (whether those adversaries may have been Āryas, Dasyus, or demons), is "anindra," "without Indra," "despisers of Indra." It occurs in the following texts, R.V., i. 133, 1: Ubhe punāmi rodasī ṛitena druho dahāmi sam mahīr anindrāḥ | "By sacrifice I purify both worlds, I consume the great female-goblins which regard not Indra." R.V., iv. 23, 7: Druhaṁ jighāṁsan dhvarasam anindrāṁ tetikte tigmā tujase anīkā | "Seeking to slay the injurious female-sprite who regards not Indra, he (Indra) makes his sharp weapons sharper for her destruction." R.V., v. 2, 3: Hiraṇyadantaṁ śuchivarṇam ārāt kshetrād apaśyam āyudhā mimānam | dadāno asmai amṛitaṁ viṗṛikkat kim mām anindrāḥ kṛiṇavann anukthāḥ | "From an adjacent spot, while offering to him the imperishable,

[38] I am indebted to Prof. Aufrecht for aid in the translation of this passage. The epithets of the Dasyu in the last verse seem well applicable to a mortal; but some of them recur in x. 22, 8. In verse 7 of the same hymn a mortal enemy is referred to: Na sīm adevaḥ āpad isham dīrghāyo martyaḥ: "O long-lived god, let not a godless mortal obtain prosperity." In his comment on R.V. v. 20, 2, Sāyaṇa explains the word anyavrata thus: Vaidikād vibhaktam vratam karma yasya tasya Asurasya, "the Asura whose rites are different from those of the Veda." See Goldstücker, Dict. s.v. "anyavrata."

[39] Benfey in a note to his translation of Sāmaveda, ii. 243 (p. 251), understands Dasyum avratam of Vṛitra, or the Evil Spirit in general.

unmingled [fuel or butter?], I beheld [Agni] the golden-toothed, the bright-coloured, fashioning his weapons: what can those who regard not Indra, and recite no hymns, do to me?" R.V., vii. 18, 6: Ardhaṁ vīrasya śṛitapām anindram parā śardhantaṁ nanude abhi kshām | "Indra hurled to the ground the half of the struggling heroes, drinkers of the oblation, and disregarders of Indra."[40] R.V., x. 27, 6: Darśan nu atra śṛitapān anindrān bāhukshadaḥ śarave patyamānān | ghṛishuṁ vā ye niniduḥ sakhāyam adhi ū nu eshu pavayo vavṛityuḥ | "They beheld here those who drink the libation, who regard not Indra, who offer worthless oblations,[41] and are fit victims for the thunderbolt: the wheels have rolled over those who reviled [our] destroying friend." In R.V., x. 48, 7, Indra speaks: Abhīdam ekam eko asmi nishshāḷ abhi dvā kim u trayaḥ karanti | khale na parshān prati hanmi bhūri kim mā nindanti śatravo anindrāḥ | "Impetuous, I alone vanquish this one enemy; I vanquish two; what can even three do? [In battle] I destroy numerous foes like sheaves of corn on the threshing-floor. Why do the enemies who regard not Indra revile me?"[42]

The following text speaks of men who are destitute of hymns and prayers, x. 105, 8: Ava no vṛijinā śiśīhi ṛichā vanema anṛichaḥ | nābrahmā yajnaḥ ṛidhag joshati tve | "Take away our calamities. With a hymn may we slay those who employ no hymns. Thou takest no great pleasure in a sacrifice without prayers."[43]

As we have seen above (p. 282), there is some appearance of an allusion being made in the Veda (3) to a distinction of complexion as existing between the Āryas and the aborigines. On this subject I quote the following remarks, made by Prof. Max Müller, in a review of the first volume of this work, which originally appeared in the [40] See Roth's interpretation of this verse in his Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, pp. 98, 99; and his remarks on the tribes who are referred to in this hymn, ibid. pp. 132–5.

[41] Prof. Roth, s.v. explains bāhukshad as denoting a niggardly worshipper who offers the foreleg, i.e. a worthless portion of the victim.

[42] See Nirukta, iii. 10, and Roth, Erläuter., p. 29.

[43] In my article "On the Relations of the Priests to the other Classes of Indian Society in the Vedic Age," (Journ. Royal As. Soc., new series, ii. 286, ff.), I have quoted numerous texts from the Rigveda "containing denunciations of religious hostility or indifference," in which "no express reference is made to Dasyus," and which may therefore, "with more or less probability, be understood of members of the Āryan community."

"Times" newspaper of 10th and 12th April, 1858, and has since been reprinted in his "Chips," vol. ii. (see p. 324):—"At the time," he says, "when this name of 'varṇa' was first used in the sense of caste, there were but two castes, the Āryas and the non-Āryas, the bright and the dark race. This dark race is sometimes called by the poets of the Veda 'the black skin.' Rigveda, i. 130, 8: 'Indra protected in battle the Āryan worshipper, he subdued the lawless for Manu, he conquered the black skin.'"[44] (This passage has been already quoted, p. 360.)

Some other passages in which black-coloured enemies are mentioned may also possibly be referrible to the dark aborigines; such as R.V. ii. 20, 7, already quoted (p. 369): "Indra, the slayer of Vṛitra and destroyer of cities, scattered the servile (dāsīḥ) [hosts] of black descent." But Prof. Roth (in his Lex.), explains this last expression, krishṇayoniḥ, as well as kṛishṇagarbhāḥ, in R.V. i. 101, 1, as descriptive of the black clouds. The latter of these two phrases is similarly understood by M. Regnier in his Étude sur l'Idiome des Vedas, p. 154. In R.V. iv. 16, 13, mention is made of Pipru and Mṛigaya being subjected to Ṛijiśvan, son of Vidathin, and of 50,000 black beings (explained by the commentator as Rakshases) being destroyed by Indra, as old age destroys the body. (Tvam Piprum Mṛigayaṁ śūśavāṁsam Ṛijiśvane Vaidathināya randhīḥ | pañchāśat kṛishṇā ni vapaḥ sahasrā atkam na puro jarimā vi dardaḥ |) These, also, are perhaps to be regarded as aërial foes.[45] See also Professor Benfey's explanation of R.V. viii. 85, 15, in his translation of the Sāmaveda, i. 323, p. 228. In

[44] This phrase, "the black skin," occurs also in R.V. ix. 41, 1, a text which reappears in the Sāmaveda, i. 491, and ii. 242. The words are Pra ye gāvo na bhūṛṇayas tveshāḥ ayāsō akramuḥ, ghnantaḥ kṛishṇām apa tvacham; which are thus rendered by Professor Benfey: "The flaming, the tempestuous [gods], approach like furious bulls, and chase away the black skin." In a note he adds the explanation: "The Maruts (winds) chase the clouds." In his Glossary to the S.V., the same author explains the phrase "black skin" by "night." A similar expression, tvacham asiknīm, occurs in R.V. ix. 73, 5: Indra-dvishṭām apa dhamanti māyayā tvacham asiknīm bhūmano divas pari | "By their might they" (I cannot say who [qu. Maruts?] are here referred to) "sweep away from the sky the black skin of the earth, hated of Indra." So Benfey translates this line in his Glossary, s.v. asiknī. But perhaps the words "black skin" should not be construed with the word "earth." The construction may be, "from earth and sky."

[45] Compare Prof. Wilson's Translation and R.V. i. 101, as well as the Introduction to his R.V., vol. iii., pp. viii, ix, xiv and xv.

the following text allusion is made to black tribes of some kind: R.V. vii. 5, 3: Tvad-bhiyā viśaḥ āyann asiknīr asamanāḥ jahatīr bhojanāni | Vaiśvānara pūrave śosuchānaḥ puro yad Agne darayann adīdeḥ | "For fear of thee the black tribes fled, scattered, relinquishing their possessions, when thou, Agni Vaiśvānara, gleaming in behalf of Pūru [or the man], didst tear and burn the cities." Prof. Roth (Lexicon, s. v. "asikni") explains the words "black tribes" as meaning "spirits of darkness." A similar phrase occurs in R.V. viii. 62, 18: Puraṁ na dhṛishṇo āruja kṛishṇayā bādhito viśā | "O impetuous, break down as it were a rampart, being harassed by the black race." It is not clear who is here apostrophized; or what dark-coloured enemies are referred to.

There are (4) some passages in which the epithet "mṛidhravāch" is applied to the speech of the Dasyus. If it were certain that the aboriginal tribes were alluded to in all or in any of these texts, and that the adjective in question had reference to any peculiarity in their language, the fact would be one of the highest interest; but unfortunately both points are doubtful.[46] The following are the passages alluded to:—R.V. i. 174, 2: Dano viśaḥ Indra mṛidhravācaḥ sapta yat puraḥ śarma śāradīr dart | ṛiṇor apo anavadya arṇāḥ yūne Vṛitram Purukutsāya randhīḥ | "When thou, O Indra, our defence, didst destroy the seven autumnal castles, thou didst subdue the people of injurious speech. Thou, blameless one, hast impelled the flowing waters: thou hast subjected Vṛitra to the youthful Purukutsa." R.V. v. 29, 10: Pra anyach chakram avṛihaḥ Sūryasya Kutsāya anyad varivo yātave kaḥ | anāso Dasyūn amṛiṇor vadhena ni duryoṇe āvṛiṇañ mṛidhravāchaḥ | "Thou didst detach one wheel of Sūrya: the other thou didst set free to go for Kutsa. Thou hast with thy weapon smitten the mouthless [or noseless] Dasyus: in their abode thou hast beaten down the injuriously speaking people." v. 32, 8: Tyaṁ chid arṇam madhupaṁ śayānam asinvam vavram mahi ādad ugraḥ | apādam atram mahatā vadhena ni duryoṇe āvṛiṇañ mṛidhravācham | "The fierce [Indra] seized that huge, restless [Vṛitra], the drinker up of the sweets, reclining, insatiable, the hidden; and beat down in his abode with a great weapon, that footless, devouring, and injuriously-

[46] The Atharvaveda xii. 1, 45, refers to the earth as "sustaining men of very various forms of speech and customs; each dwelling in their own abodes" (janam bibhratī bahudhā vivāchasaṁ nānādharmāṇam pṛithivī yathaukasam).

speaking [demon]." vii. 6, 3: Ni akratūn grathino mṛidhravāchaḥ Paṇīn aśraddhān avṛidhān ayajñān | pra pra tān Dasyūn Agnir vivāya pūrvaś chakāra aparān ayajyūn | "The senseless, false, injuriously-speaking, unbelieving, unpraising, unworshipping Paṇis (or niggards); these Dasyus Agni removed far off. It was he who first made the irreligious degraded." vii. 18, 13: Vi sadyo viśvā dṛiṁhitāni eshām Indraḥ puraḥ sahasā sapta dardaḥ | vi Ānavasya Tṛitsave gayam bhāg jeshma Pūruṁ vidathe mṛidhraṿācham | "Indra straightway shattered all their strongholds, their seven castles by his violence: he divided to the Tṛitsu the substance of the Ānava: we vanquished in the fight the injuriously-speaking Pūru [or man]."

The word "mṛidhravāch," which I have rendered "injuriously-speaking," is explained by Sāyaṇa (in his comments on three of these passages) as meaning "one whose organs of speech are destroyed" (hiṁsita-vāgindriya, or hiṁsita-vachaska). On i. 174, 2, he interprets it as marshaṇa-vachanāḥ, "speaking patiently," ("suing for pardon," Wilson), and on vii. 18, 13, by bādhavācham, "speaking so as to vex," ("ill-speaking," Wilson). The same term is rendered by Wilson, in his translation of the second and third passages, by "speech-bereft," or "speechless." Roth, in his "Illustrations of the Nirukta," p. 97, rejects the explanation of Yāska (who (Nir. vi. 31) renders "mṛidhravāchaḥ" by "mṛiduvāchaḥ," "softly-speaking,"), and considers that it means "speaking injuriously." Dr. Kuhn, again (Herabkunft des Feuers, p. 60), is of opinion that the epithet in question means "a stutterer;" and thinks that, in R.V. v. 29, 10, reference is made to the gradual dying away of the distant thunder, which is regarded as the voice of the vanquished demon. In treating of the aboriginal races of India, Prof. Müller (Last Results of Turanian Researches, p. 346: see, below, pp. 389, ff.) remarks, that "the 'anāsas,' enemies, whom Indra killed with his weapon (R.V. v. 29, 10), are probably meant for noseless (a-nāsas), not, as the commentator supposes, for faceless (an-āsas) people. (See also the article of the same author already alluded to in p. 375.) Professor Wilson, on the other hand, remarks (R.V., vol. iii., p. 276, note): "Anāsa, Sāyaṇa says, means āsyarahitān, devoid of, or deprived of, words; āsya, face or mouth, being put by metonymy for śabda, the sound that comes from the mouth, articulate speech, alluding possibly to the uncultivated dialects of the barbarous tribes, barbarism and uncultivated speech being identical, in the opinion of the Hindus, as in the familiar term for a barbarian, 'mlechha,' which is derived from the root, mlechh, to speak rudely;" and adds, in reference to Professor Müller's proposed interpretation of anāsa: "The proposal is ingenious, but it seems more likely that Sāyaṇa is right, as we have the Dasyus presently called also mṛidhravāchas, ... having defective organs of speech."

There are only two of the four preceding passages containing the word mṛidhravāch, in which the Dasyus are named; and in the second of these two texts (R.V. vii. 6, 3) this word is applied to persons or beings called paṇi, who are either niggards, or the mythical beings who stole the cows of the gods or the Angirases, and hid them in a cave. (See Wilson's R.V. vol. i. pp. 16, 17, note.)[47] In any case, the sense of the word mṛidhravāch is too uncertain to admit of our referring it with confidence to any peculiarity in the speech of the aborigines.

In the R.V. frequent mention is made (5) of the cities or castles of the Dasyus, or of the Asuras. One of these passages, i. 103, 3, has been already quoted in p. 359. The following are additional instances: R.V. i. 51, 5: Tvam Pipror nṛimaṇaḥ prārujaḥ puraḥ pra Ṛijiśvānaṁ Dasyu-hatyeshu āvitha | "Benevolent to men, thou hast broken the castles of Pipru, and protected Ṛijiśvan in his battles with the Dasyus." R.V. i. 63, 7: Tvaṁ ha tyad Indra sapta yudhyan puro vajrin Purukutsāya dardaḥ | "Thou, O Indra, thunderer, fighting for Purukutsa, didst destroy then seven castles." i. 174, 8: Bhinat puro na bhido adevīr nanamo vadhar adevasya pīyoḥ | "Thou hast pierced the godless piercers like their castles: thou hast bowed down the weapon of the godless destroyer." ii. 14, 6: Yah śataṁ Śambarasya puro bibheda aśmaneva purvīḥ | "Who split the hundred, the numerous, castles of Śambara as with a thunderbolt." ii. 19, 6: Divodāsāya navatiṁ cha nava Indraḥ puro vi airach Chhambarasya | "Indra shattered for Divodāsa a hundred castles of Śambara." iii. 12, 6: Indrāgnī navatim puro dāsapatnīr adhūnutam | sākam ekena karmaṇā | "Indra and Agni, by one effort together, ye have shattered ninéty castles belonging to the Dasyus." iv. 26, 3: Aham puro mandasāno vi airaṁ nava sākaṁ navatīḥ Śamba-

[47] See Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. paṇi, where R.V. vii. 6, 3, is cited among the texts where the word means "niggard;" and comp. my art. on the "Priests in the Vedic Age," Journ. R. A. S. for 1866, p. 290.

rasya | Śatatamaṁ veśyaṁ sarvatātā Divodāsam Atithigvam yad āvam | "Exhilarated, I have destroyed at once the ninety-nine castles of Śambara: the hundredth habitation (remained) in security, when I protected Divodāsa Atithigva."[48] vi. 31, 4: Tvaṁ śatāni ava Śambarasya puro jagantha apratīni dasyoḥ | "Thou hast destroyed hundreds of unequalled castles of the Dasyu Śambara." The following verse seems to show that by these castles, as well as by mountains, clouds are meant:—x. 89, 7: Jaghāna Vṛitraṁ svadhitir vaneva ruroja puro aradad na sindhūn | bibheda giriṁ navaṁ in na kumbham ā gāḥ Indro akṛiṇuta svayugbhiḥ | "Indra smote Vṛitra as an axe (fells) the woods; he broke down the castles, he as it were hollowed out the rivers. He split the mountain like a new jar; he possessed himself of the cows, with his companions."

Iron castles are spoken of in the following passage: ii. 20, 8: Prati yad asya vajram bāhvor dhur hatvī dasyūn puraḥ āyasīr nitārīt | "When they placed the thunderbolt in his (Indra's) hand, he slew the Dasyus, and overthrew their iron castles."[49]

In the following texts "autumnal castles" are spoken of:—i. 131, 4: Vidus te asya vīryasya pūravo puro yad Indra śāradīr avātiraḥ | sāsahāno avātiraḥ | śāsas tam Indra martyam ayajyuṁ śavasaspate | "Men know this heroism of thine, that thou hast overthrown the autumnal castles, violently overthrown them. Lord of power, thou hast chastised the mortal who sacrifices not."[50] (See also R.V. i. 174, 2, which has been quoted in p. 376.) vi. 20, 10: Sapta yat puraḥ śarma śāradīr dart han dāsīḥ Purukutsāya śikshan | "When thou, our defence, didst [48] See Kuhn's Herabkunft des Feuers, p. 140, and note. Benfey in his excursus on sarvatāti, Or. und Occ. ii. 524, renders "the hundredth dwelling in safety, when I was gracious to the pious Divodāsa." The words "in safety" may, he says, refer to Indra, or to the hundredth city which he did not destroy; and he refers, as Kuhn also does, to R.V. vii. 19, 5.

[49] Mention is also made of iron castles or ramparts in the following texts: R.V. iv. 27, 1; vii. 3, 7; vii. 15, 14; vii. 95, 1; viii. 89, 8; and x. 101, 8; but not in connexion with the Dasyus.

[50] The "autumnal" castles may mean the brilliant battlemented cloud-castles, which are so often visible in the Indian sky at this period of the year. Sāyana in loco explains the term thus: Śāradīḥ saṁvatsara-sambandhinīḥ saṁvatsara-paryantam prākāra-parikhādibhir dṛiḍhīkṛitāḥ puraḥ śatrūṇām purīḥ | "The enemies' annual cities, fortified for a year with ramparts, ditches, etc.;" but see next note.

break down the seven autumnal castles, thon didst slay the Dāsa (people), showing favour to Purukutsa." [51]

The epithet śasvat is applied to castles in the following text. This word means, as is well known, "constant," "perpetual," but according to the Nighaṇṭus it has the meaning of "many;" and Sāyaṇa generally understands it in this sense. viii. 17, 14: Drapso bhettā purāṁ śaśvatīnām Indro munīnāṁ sakā | "The drop (of Soma) is the splitter of many (or of the perpetual) castles. Indra is the friend of sages." viii. 87, 6: Tvaṁ hi śaśvatīnām Indra dartā purām asi | hantā dasyor manor vṛidhaḥ patir divaḥ | "Thou, Indra, art the destroyer of many (or the perpetual) castles, the slayer of the Dasyu, the benefactor of man, the lord of the sky." [52] Castles of stone are mentioned in one passage, iv. 30, 20: S'atam aśmanmayīnām purām Indro vi āsyat Divodāsāya dāśushe | "Indra has thrown down a hundred castles built of stone, for his worshipper Divodāsa." [53] In R.V. viii. 1, 28, mention is made of a "moving" castle: Tvam puraṁ charishṇvaṁ vadhaiḥ S'ushṇasya sampiṇak | "Thou hast shattered with thy bolts the moving castle of S'ushṇa." [54]

The castles referred to in these Vedic hymns were, in later times, at least, understood of castles of the Asuras; and the following legend was invented to explain what they were. In the Commentary on the Vājasaneyi-Sanhitā of the Yajurveda, the following passage occurs: Atra iyam ākhyāyikā asti | devaiḥ parājitāḥ asurās tapas taptvā trailokye trīṇi purāṇi chakrur lohamayīm bhūmau rājatīm antarikshe haimīṁ divi | tadā devais tāḥ dagdhum upasadā Agnir ārādhitaḥ | tataḥ upasad-devatā-rūpo 'gnir yadā tāsu pūrshu praviśya tāḥ dadāha tadā tisraḥ puro 'gnes tanavo 'bhūvan | tad abhipretya ayam mantraḥ | "On this text [Vāj. Sanh. 5, 8], the following story is told:—The Asuras

[51] Sāyaṇa, in his note on this verse, explains the word śāradīḥ differently, as śaran-nāmnaḥ asurasya sambandhinīḥ | "Belonging to an Asura called S'arad." Sāyaṇa renders the word s'arma in this passage by "with thy thunderbolt." In his note on R.V. i. 174, 2, he had previously rendered it by "for our happiness." I have ventured to render it "our defence."

[52] In R.V. viii. 84, 3, we find the same epithet applied to persons: Tvam hi śaśvatīnam patiḥ rājā viśām asi | "Thou art the lord, the king of many peoples."

[53] Sāyaṇa interprets aśmanmayīnām by pāshāṇair nirmitānām, "built of stone," and says they were the cities of S'ambara.

[54] It appears that moving cloud-castles are here meant.

having been vanquished by the gods, performed austerities, and built three castles in the three worlds,—one of iron on the earth, one of silver in the atmosphere, and one of gold in the sky. Then Agni was supplicated by the gods to burn these castles with the upasad. In consequence, Agni, in the form of the upasad deity, entered these castles, and burned them. Then these castles became the bodies of Agni. It is to this that this Mantra (text) has reference."[55] The Satapatha-brāhmaṇa (iii. 4, 4, 3, ff.) has the following passage on the same subject:—Devāś cha vai asurāś cha ubhaye prājāpatyāḥ paspṛidhire | tato 'surāḥ eshu lokeshu puraś chakrire ayasmayīm eva asmin loke rajatām antarikshe harinīm̃ divi | tad vai devāḥ aspṛiṇvata | te etābhir upasadbhir upāsīdan | tad yad upāsīdaṁs tasmād upasado nāma | te purāḥ prābhindann imān lokān prājayan | tasmād āhur "upasadā puram̃ jayanti" iti | "The gods and Asuras, who were both the offspring of Prajāpati, contended together. Then the Asuras constructed castles in these worlds, one of iron in this world, one of silver in the atmosphere, and one of gold in the sky. The gods were envious of this. They sat near (upa-asīdan) with these 'upasads' [ceremonies so called, or sieges]; and from their thus sitting the name of 'upasad' originated. They smote the cities, and conquered these worlds. Hence the saying that men conquer a city with an 'upasad.'" In the sequel of the same passage, iii. 4, 4, 14, it is said: Vajram eva etat saṁskaroti Agnim anīkam̃ Somam̃ śalyam̃ Vishṇum̃ kulmalam | "He thus prepares the thunderbolt, making Agni the shaft, Soma the iron, Vishṇu the point."[56] (See also Weber's Ind. Stud. ii. 310.)

The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa i. 23 gives the following variation of the story: Devāsurāḥ vai eshu lokeshu samayatanta | te vai asurāḥ imān eva lokān puro 'kurvata yathā ojīyāṁso balīyāṁsaḥ | evam̃ te vai ayasmayīm eva imām akurvata rajatām antarikshaṁ harinīm̃ divam̃ te tathā imān lokān puro 'kurvata | te devāḥ abruvan "puro vai ime 'surāḥ imān lokān akrata | puraḥ imān lokān prati karavāmahai" iti "tathā" iti | te sadaḥ eva asyāḥ

[55] The reference here is to the text of the V.S. 5, 8, which contains the words yā te Agne ayaḥśayā tanūḥ; yā te agne rajaḥśayā tanūḥ; yā te agne hariśayā tanūḥ: "The body of thine, Agni, which reposes in iron; which reposes in silver; which reposes in gold." The 'upasad' was a festival, part of the jyotishṭoma, which was kept for several days. See Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon.

[56] The Commentary says: "anīkam̃" vajrasya mukha-pradeśaḥ | śalyas tataḥ pūrvo bhāgaḥ "kulmalam̃" tatpuchha-bhāgaḥ |

pratyakurvata agnīdhram antarikshād havirdhāne divas tathā imān lokān puraḥ pratyakurvata|te devāḥ abruvann "upasadaḥ upāyāma upasadā vai mahāpuraṁ jayanti" iti "tathā" iti | te yām eva prathamām upasadam upāyaṁs tayā eva enān asmāl lokād anudanta yāṁ dvitīyāṁ tayā 'ntarikshād yāṁ tṛitīyāṁ tayā divaḥ | tāṁs tathā ebhyo lokebhyo 'nudanta. "The gods and Asuras strove together in these worlds. The Asuras made these worlds into castles, as strong and powerful persons do. Thus they made this earth a castle of iron, the air one of silver, and the sky one of gold: thus did they make these worlds castles. The gods said: "These Asuras have made these worlds into castles; let us in turn make of them counter-castles.' (The other gods said) 'so be it.' They (accordingly) made out of this earth a sitting-room[57] (sadas), out of the air a fire-altar, and out of the sky two receptacles of oblations: thus they made these worlds into counter-castles. The gods said, 'let us enter upon sieges (upasadaḥ),[58] for by siege men conquer a great fort.' (The other gods said) 'so be it.' By the first siege on which they entered they drove them (the Asuras) from this earth, by the second from the air, and by the third from the sky. So they drove them from these worlds."

Further on, in section 25 of the same chapter, the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa says:—Ishuṁ vai etāṁ devāḥ samaskurvata yad upasadaḥ | tasyāḥ Agnir anīkam āsīt Somaḥ śalyo Vishṇus tejanaṁ Varuṇaḥ parṇāni | tām ājyadhanvāno 'sṛijaṁs tayā puro bhindantaḥ āyan | "The gods prepared this arrow, the Upasads. Agni was its shaft, Soma was its iron, Vishṇu was its point, Varuṇa its feathers. Using the ājya for a bow, they discharged this arrow, and went forward shattering the castles."

The Taittirīya Saṁhitā, vi. 2, 3 (as quoted in the commentary on an earlier part of the same work, Bibl. Ind., Black Yajurveda, in the first volume, page 390, f.), thus relates the story, combining the parts of the narrative which are separated in the two other Brāhmaṇas:—Teshām asurāṇām tisraḥ puraḥ āsan | ayasmayī avamā 'tha rajatā 'tha hariṇī | tāḥ devāḥ jetuṁ nāśaknuvan | tāḥ upasadā eva ajigīshan | tasmād āhur "yaś chaivaṁ veda yaś cha na upasadā vai mahāpuraṁ jayanti" iti |

[57] This is Prof. Haug's rendering. See his note, Transl. of Ait. Br. p. 51.

[58] "There is throughout this chapter a pun between the two meanings of upasad, 'siege,' and a certain ceremony" [so called] "observable."—Haug, p. 52.

te ishuṁ samaskurvata Agnim anîkam Somaṁ śalyaṁ Vishṇuṁ tejanam | te 'bruvan "kaḥ imâm asisyati" iti | "Rudraḥ" ity abruvan | "Rudro vai krûraḥ so 'asyatv" iti | so 'bravîd "varaṁ vṛiṇai aham eva paśûnâm adhipatir asâni" iti | tasmâd Rudraḥ paśûnâm adhipatiḥ | taṁ Rudro 'vâsṛijat | sa tisraḥ puro bhitvâ ebhyo lokebhyo 'surân prâṇudata | "These Asuras had three castles, the lowest one of iron, next one of silver, and then one of gold. The gods were unable to conquer these. They sought to capture them by siege (or by an upasad). Hence men say, 'he who knows, and he who does not know, this, both conquer a great fort by siege.' They prepared an arrow, making Agni the wooden shaft, Soma the iron, and Vishṇu the point.[59] They said, 'who shall shoot this arrow?' 'Rudra,' they said; 'Rudra is cruel, let him shoot it.' He (Rudra) said, 'let me ask a boon; let me be the lord of cattle (or victims).' Hence Rudra is the lord of cattle. He discharged the arrow, and having shattered the three castles, drove the Asuras from these worlds."[60]

The Atharvaveda, v. 28, 9, f., speaks of three castles of the gods:—Diyas tvâ pâtu haritam madhyât tvâ pâtu arjunam | bhûmyâḥ ayasmayam pâtu prâgâd devapurâḥ ayam | imâs tisro devapurâs tâs tvâ rakshantu sarvataḥ | "May the golden protect thee from the sky, the silver from the air, the iron from the earth: this man has reached the castles of the gods. May these three castles of the gods preserve thee continually."

Another text speaks of the castles of the Asuras, Atharvaveda, x. 6, 10: Tam bibhrach chandramâḥ maṇim asurâṇâm puro 'jayad dânavânâṁ hiraṇmayîḥ | "Holding that gem, the Moon captured the golden castles of the Asuras, sons of Danû."

And verse 20 of the same hymn says: Tair medino Angiraso Dasyûnâm bibhiduḥ puras tena tvaṁ dvishato jahi | "Allied with them (the Atharvans) the Angirases shattered the castles of the Dasyus: with it do thou slay thine enemies."

In several texts Dasyus are mentioned in connexion with mountains. Thus in R.V., ii. 12, 11, we have the words, Yaḥ S'ambaram parvateshu kshiyantam chatvârimśyâṁ śaradi anvavindat | "Who discovered

[59] Comm. p. 391: Anîka-śabdo bânasya prathama-bhâgaṁ kâshṭham âchashṭe śalya-śabdo lôhaṁ tejana-śabdas tad-agram.

[60] See the version of the same story, given in the Anuśâsana parva of the Mahâbhârata, as quoted in vol. iv. of this work, pp. 168, f.; and at much greater length in the Karṇa parva, vv. 1407, ff.

Sambara living in the mountains in the fortieth autumn;" and in i. 130, 7: Bhinat puro navatim Indra Pūrave Divodāsāya mahi dāśushe nṛito vajreṇa dāśushe nṛitaḥ | Atithigvāya Sambaraṁ girer ugro avābharat | maho dhanāni dayamānaḥ ojasā viśvā dhanāni ojasā| "O Indra, impetuous, thou didst shatter by thy bolt ninety-nine cities for Pūru (or the man), for the very liberal sacrificer Divodāsa;—impetuous,—for the liberal sacrificer. Fierce, he hurled down Sambara from the mountain for the sake of Atithigva, bestowing great wealth by his power, all wealth by his power." iv. 30, 14: Uta dāsaṁ Kaulitaram bṛihataḥ parvatād adhi | avāhann Indra Sambaram | "Thou, Indra, didst cast down the Dāsa Sambara, son of Kulitara, from the great mountain." vi. 26, 5: Ava girer dāsaṁ Sambaram han prāvo Divodāsam | "Thou didst hurl down the Dāsa Sambara from the mountain, thou didst preserve Divodāsa."

The wealth or property of the Dasyus or Asuras is spoken of in various places. Thus in i. 33, 4: Vadhīr hi dasyuṁ dhaninaṁ ghanena ekaś charann upa śākebhir Indra | "Thou, O Indra, advancing singly, hast slain the wealthy Dasyu, together with his allies, with thy destructive weapon."[61] i. 176, 4: Asunvantaṁ samaṁ jahi dūṇāśaṁ yo na te mayaḥ | asmabhyam asya vedanaṁ daddhi sūriś chid ohate | "Kill all those who make no oblations, though difficult to destroy, and who cause thee no gladness; give us their wealth: the worshipper expects it." ii. 15, 4: Sa pravoḷhṝn parigatya Dabhīter viśvam adhāg āyudham iddhe agnau | sa gobhir aśvair asṛijad rathebhiḥ | "Surrounding those (Asuras) who had carried away Dabhīti, he burned all their weapons in the blazing fire, and presented him with cows, horses, and chariots." iv. 30, 13: Uta Sushṇashya dhṛishṇuyā pramṛiksho abhi vedanam | puro yad asya sampiṇak | "Thou didst boldly sweep away the wealth of Sushṇa, when thou didst shatter his castles." viii. 40, 6: Api vṛiścha purāṇa-vad vratater iva gushpitam | ojo dāsasya dambhaya | vayaṁ tad asya sambhṛitaṁ vasu Indreṇa vibhajemahi | "Root up, as of old, like (a tree) overgrown by a creeping plant; subdue the might of the Dāsa; may we through [or with]

[61] Sāyaṇa remarks on this verse: "The Vājasaneyins distinctly record the wealth [of Vṛitra] in these words; 'Vṛittrasyāntaḥ sarve devāḥ sarvāścha vidyāḥ sarvāṇi havīṁshi cha āsan: In Vṛitra were contained all the gods, all the sciences, and all oblations.' "

Indra divide his collected wealth." x. 69, 6: Sam ajryā parvatyā vasūni dāsā vṛitrāṇi āryā jigetha | "Thou hast conquered the property, whether situated in the plains or hills, (thou hast conquered) the Dāsa and the Ārya enemies."

In the following and numerous other texts (as well as in some of the preceding), various Dasyus, or at least adversaries, are specified by name, together with the persons who were delivered from them. R.V., i. 51, 6: Tvaṁ Kutsaṁ Śushṇahatyeshu āvitha arandhayo Atithigvāya Śambaram | mahāntaṁ chid Arbudaṁ nyakramīḥ padā sanād eva dasyuhatyāya jajnishe | "Thou hast preserved Kutsa in his fights with Śushṇa; hast subdued Śambara to Atithigva; thou hast trodden under foot the great Arbuda; of old hast thou been born to destroy the Dasyus."[62] vii. 19, 2: Tvaṁ hi tyad Indra Kutsam āvaḥ śuśrūshamāṇas tanvā samaryye | dāsaṁ yat Śushṇaṁ Kuyavaṁ ni asmai arandhayaḥ Ārjuneyāya śikshan | "Thou, O Indra, didst then deliver Kutsa in the fray, interposing with thy body, when favouring that son of Arjuni, thou didst subdue to him the Dāsa Śushṇa, and Kuyava."[63] i. 53, 8: Tvaṁ Karanjam uta Parṇayaṁ vadhīs tejishṭhayā Atithigvasya vartanī | tvaṁ śatā Vangṛidasya abhinat puro anānudaḥ purishūtāḥ Ṛijiśvanā | 9 | Tvaṁ etān jana-rājno dvirdaśa abandhunā Suśravasā upajagmushaḥ | shashṭiṁ sahasrā navatiṁ nava śruto ni chakreṇa rathyā dushpadā avṛiṇak | 10 | Tvaṁ āvitha Suśravasaṁ tavotibhis tava trāmabhir Indra Tūrvayāṇam | tvaṁ asmai Kutsam Atithigvam Āyum mahe rājne yūne arandhanāyaḥ | "8. Thou hast slain Karanja and Parṇaya with the glittering spear of Atithigva. Unyielding, thou hast broken down the hundred cities of Vangṛiḍa, which had been blockaded by Ṛijiśvan. 9. Thou, renowned Indra, hast with thy swift chariot-wheels, crushed those twenty kings of men, who assailed the unaided Suśravas, [and their] sixty thousand and ninety-

[62] This verse is followed almost immediately by the text, i. 51, 8, quoted above, p. 359. "Distinguish between the Āryas," etc.

[63] In R.V., iv. 26, 1 (quoted above, p. 360), also, Kutsa is called the son of Arjuni. Kuhn considers that Kutsa is a personification of the lightning, a view which he considers to be confirmed by his patronymic of Ārjuni, Arjuna being an epithet of Indra, and of the thunderbolt. See Herabkunft des Feuers, pp. 57-62, 65, 140, 176. See also Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v. Kuyava is also mentioned in i. 103, 3: Kshīreṇa snātaḥ Kuyavasya yoshe, hate te syātām pravaṇe Śiphāyāḥ. "The two wives of Kuyava bathe with water; may they be drowned in the stream of the Śiphā."

nine [followers]. 10. Thou hast by thy aids protected Suśravas, and by thy help Tūrvayāṇa. To this mighty youthful king thou hast subjected Kutsa, Atithigva, and Āyu."[64] ii. 30, 8: Sarasvati tvam asmān aviḍḍhi marutvatī dhṛishatī jeshi śatrūn | tyaṁ chit śardhantaṁ tavishīyamāṇam Indro hanti vṛishabhaṁ S'aṇḍikānām | "Sarasvatī, do thou protect us: impetuous, attended by the Maruts, thou conquerest our enemies. Indra destroys the chief of the S'aṇḍikas, arrogant, and making a display of his strength."[65] iv. 30, 15: Uta dāsasya Varchinaḥ sahasrāṇi śatā 'vadhīḥ | adhi pancha pradhīn iva | 21 | asvāpayad Dabhītaye sahasrā tṛiṁśataṁ hathaiḥ | dāsānām Indro māyayā | "Thou hast slain above a thousand and five hundred followers of the Dāsa Varchin like fellies of a wheel [crushed, or whirled round?][66] 21. Indra, [64] The youthful king, alluded to in the last verse, is said by Roth (Lexicon, under the word "Atithigva") to be Tūrvayāṇa. See, however, under Tūrvayāṇa. Benfey (Or. und Occ., i. 413) says it must be Suśravas. These names occur again in vi. 18, 13. Kutsa is sometimes aided (R.V., i. 63, 3; i. 121, 9; iv. 16, 12; x. 99, 9), and sometimes vanquished (ii. 14, 7; iv. 26, 1; vi. 18, 13; Vāl., 5, 2), by Indra.

[65] Sāyaṇa says that S'aṇḍāmarkāv Asurapurohitau: "S'aṇḍa and Marka are the priests of the Asuras." See the story regarding them in Taitt. San., vi. 4, 10, 1, quoted in the fifth volume of this work, p. 230, note, where they appear in the character referred to by Sāyaṇa. The story is somwhat differently told in S'atap. Br., iv. 2, 1, 5: Yatra vai devāḥ asura-rakshasāni apajaghnire tad etāv eva na śekur apahantum | yad ha sma devāḥ kincha karma kurvate tad ha sma mohayitvā kshipre eva punar apadravataḥ | 6 | te ha devāḥ ūchuḥ | "upajānīta yatha imāv apahanāmahai" iti | te ha ūchuḥ | "grahāv eva ābhyām gṛihṇāma tāv abhyavaishyataḥ | tau svīkṛitya apahanishyāmahe" ita | tābhyāṁ grahau jagṛihuḥ | tāv abhyavaitām | tau svīkṛitya apaghnata | tasmāt S'aṇḍāmarkābhyāṁ gṛihyete devatābhyo hūyete | "When the gods smote the Asuras and Rakshases, they could not smite these two (S'aṇḍa and Marka, who had just been named). When the gods performed any rite, these two used to come and disturb it, and then run away quickly. 6. The gods said: 'Consider how we shall smite them.' They (the other gods?) said: 'Let us prepare two draughts for them; they will alight; and then we shall master and smite them.' They accordingly prepared libations for these two. They alighted. They (the gods) mastered and smote them. Hence two draughts are prepared for S'aṇḍa and Marka, but are offered to the gods." In the S'atapatha-brāhmaṇa, i. 1, 4, 14 (p. 9 of Weber's edition), Kilāta and Ākuli are declared to be the priests of the Asuras: Kilātākulī iti ha Asura-brahmāv āsatuḥ. Z. D. M. G. for 1850, p. 302. In Ind. Stud., i. 32, Weber quotes the following words from the Pānchvins'a-brāhmaṇa, 13, 11; Gaupāvanānām vai satram āsīnānām, Kirātākulyāv asuramāye, etc. "While the Gaupāvanas were seated at a sacrifice, Kirāta and Ākuli, etc." See also Ind. Stud., i., p. 186, 195, ii. 243. According to the Mahābhārata, i. 2544, Uśanas Kāvya, or S'ukra, son of Bhṛigu (v. 2606) was the teacher (upādhyāya) of the Asuras, and his four sons were their priests (yājakāḥ). In verses 3188, ff., of the same book, the rivalry of Uśanas and Angiras is referred to. Uśanas Kāvya was the messenger of the Asuras, according to the Taitt. San., i. 5, 8, 5. [66] See also R.V., vii. 99, 5.

by his superhuman power, put to sleep with his weapons thirty thousand Dāsas for Dabhīti." v. 30, 7: Atra dāsasya Namucheḥ śiro yad avartayo manave gātum ichhan | 9 | striyo hi dāsaḥ āyudhāni chakre kim māṁ karann abalāḥ asya senāḥ | antar hi akhyad ubhe asya dhene atha upapraid yudhaye dasyum Indraḥ | "When, designing prosperity for Manu, thou didst strike off the head of the Dāsa Namuchi.[67] 9. The Dāsa took his wives for allies in battle. What will his feeble hosts do to me? He concealed his two fair ones; and then Indra approached to fight with the Dasyu." viii. 32, 26: Ahan Vṛitram ṛichīshamaḥ Aurṇavābham Ahīśuvaṁ himena avidhyad Arbudam | "Indra slew Vṛitra, Aurṇavābha, Ahīśuva: with frost he pierced Arbuda." viii. 40, 10: Yaḥ ojasā S'ushṇasya aṇḍāni bhedati jeshat svarvatīr apaḥ | "Who by his might crushes the eggs of Sushṇa; he conquered the celestial waters." x. 54, 1: Prāvo devān ātiro dāsam ojaḥ prajāyai tvasyai yad aśikshaḥ Indra | "Thou hast protected the gods, thou hast overcome the might of the Dasyus, when thou, O Indra, didst favour some one people." x. 73, 7: Tvaṁ jaghantha Namuchim makhasyuṁ dāsaṁ kṛiṇvānaḥ ṛishaye vimāyam | "Thou hast slain the vehement Namuchi, making the Dāsa devoid of power for the ṛishi."[68] x. 95, 7: Yat tvā Purūravo raṇāya avardhayan dasyuhatyāya devāḥ | "When, Purūravas, the gods strengthened thee for the conflict with the Dasyus."

I have gone over the names of the Dasyus or Asuras mentioned in the R.V. with the view of discovering whether any of them could be regarded as of non-Arian or indigenous origin; but I have not observed any that appear to be of this character. But we should recollect that the Arians would not unnaturally designate the aboriginal leaders (if they specified any of them in their sacred hymns) by names of Arian origin, or at least softened into an Arian form. The Greeks introduced Greek modifications into Persian and other proper names, and the Chaldeans are stated in the Book of Daniel to have given Chaldean appellations to the Jews.

In some passages the Dasyus are spoken of as monsters.[69] Thus, ii.

[67] There is a legend about Indra and the Asura Namuchi in the S'atap. Brāh., v. 4, 1, 8, p. 459.

[68] See Benfey, Gloss. to S.V. under the word Namuchi.

[69] The Dasyus must be evil spirits in A.V., xviii. 2, 28: Ye dasyavaḥ pitṛishu pravishṭāḥ, etc. ("the Dasyus who have entered into, or among, the Pitṛis"). They

14, 4: Yah Uraṇaṁ jaghāna nava chakhvāṁsaṁ navatiṁ cha bāhūn | yo Arbudam ava nīchā babādhe | "Who slew Uraṇa, displaying ninety-nine arms; who struck down Arbuda," etc. x. 99, 6: Sa id dāsaṁ tuviravam patir dan shaḍakshaṁ triśīrshāṇaṁ damanyat | asya Trito nu ojasā vṛidhāno vipā varāham ayoagrayā han | "This lord humbled and subjugated the loud-shouting Dāsa, with six eyes and three heads.[70] Trita, increasing in strength, smote this boar with his iron-tipped shaft." The enemies of Indra are spoken of in a few passages as scaling the sky: thus, ii. 12, 12: Yo Rauhiṇam asphurad vajrabāhur dyām arohantaṁ sa janāsaḥ Indraḥ | "O men, he who, armed with the thunder, slew Rauhiṇa as he was scaling the heaven, is Indra." viii. 14, 14: Māyābhir utsisṛipsataḥ Indra dyām ārurukshataḥ ava dasyūn adhūnuthāḥ | "Thou, Indra, hast hurled down the Dasyus, who, by their superhuman powers, were mounting upwards, and seeking to scale heaven."[71] In ii. 12, 2, the Dasyus are said to regard themselves as immortal: Sṛijo mahīr Indra yāḥ apinvaḥ parishṭhitāḥ Ahinā śūra pūrvīḥ | amartyaṁ chid dāsan manyamānam avābhinad ukthair vavṛidhānaḥ | "Thou hast, O heroic Indra, let loose the abundant waters, which thou augmentedst when they were stopped by Ahi. Gaining vigour by hymns, he shattered the Dāsa, who regarded himself as immortal." In v. 7, 10, the Dasyus are conjoined with men: Ād Agne apṛiṇato ʼtriḥ sāsahyād dasyūn ishaḥ sāsahyād nṛīn | "Hereupon, O Agni, may the Atri overcome the illiberal Dasyus, may Isha overcome the men."

I have thus brought under review in this section a variety of passages which bear, or might be conceived to bear, some reference to the conquest of territory by the Āryas and to the condition, colour, speech, religious rites, and castles of the Dasyus. The meaning of many of these texts is, however, as we have seen, extremely doubtful; and some of them are clearly of a mythological import. Such, for instance, are those which describe the contests of Indra with Vṛitra, the demon of are said to be parāpuraḥ and nipúraḥ, which the commentary on V.S., 2, 30, explains as having gross or subtile bodies. In that passage the word asurāḥ is used instead of Dasyus. See also A.V., x. 3, 11, where they are identified with asuras. Indro dasyūn iva asurān.

[70] In S'atap. Br., p. 57, a son of Tvashṭri with three heads and six eyes is mentioned as having his three heads cut off by Indra.

[71] In i. 78, 4, the expression yo dasyūn ava dhūnushe recurs.

the clouds, who withholds rain; where we are, no doubt, to understand both the god and his adversary as personifications of atmospherical phenomena. In the same way, Śambara, Śushṇa, and Namuchi are to be regarded as mythical personages, of a kindred character with Vṛitra. And yet there are many passages in which the word "vṛitra" has the signification of enemy in general (as R.V. vi. 33, 3; vi. 60, 6; vii. 83, 1, p. 361); and Professor Spiegel, as we have seen (p. 317), is of opinion that the word "vṛitrahan" had originally nothing more than a general signification, and that it was only at a later period that it came to be a special designation of Indra. The word Śambara, again, as Benfey (Glossary to Sāmaveda, p. 181) remarks, is given in the Nighaṇṭus as synonymous with megha, "a cloud" (i. 10), with udaka, "water" (i. 12), and with bala, "force" (ii. 9); while the mythical narrations generally identify him with Vṛitra. In regard to this word Professor Roth remarks as follows (Lit. and Hist. of the Veda, p. 116): "In the passages which speak of Divodāsa, mention is made of his deliverance, by the aid of the gods, from the oppressor Śambara, e.g. R.V. i. 112, 14; ix. 61, 2. It is true that Śambara is employed at a later period to designate an enemy in general, and in particular the enemy of Indra, Vṛitra; but it is not improbable that this may be the transference of the more ancient recollection of a dreaded enemy to the greatest of all enemies, the demon of the clouds." (See, however, p. 368, above.)

Professor Müller (Last Results of the Turanian Researches, pp. 344, ff.) remarks as follows on the use of the words Dasyu, Rakshas, Yātudhāna, etc.: "Dasyu simply means enemy; for instance, when Indra is praised because 'he destroyed the Dasyus and protected the Arian colour.'[72] The 'Dasyus,' in the Veda, may mean non-Arian races in many hymns; yet the mere fact of tribes being called the enemies of certain kings or priests can hardly be said to prove their barbarian origin. Vasishṭha himself, the very type of the Arian Brahman, when in feud with Viśvāmitra, is called not only an enemy but a 'Yātudhāna,' and other names, which in common parlance are only bestowed on barbarian savages and evil spirits." (See the first volume of this work, pp. 326, f., [72] [This passage, iii. 34, 9, appears to me to be, rather, one of those in which the contrast is most strongly drawn between the Āryas and the aborigines. See above, pp. 282 and 360.—J.M.]

where the original passage and the translation are given.) "In other passages [of the R.V.] the word . . . devil (rakshas) is clearly applied to barbarous nations. Originally rakshas meant strong and powerful, but it soon took the sense of giant and barbarian,[73] and in this sense it occurs in the Veda, together with Yātudhāna. Another Vaidik epithet applied, as it seems, to wild tribes infesting the seats of the Āryas, is 'anagnitra,' 'they who do not keep the fire.' Thus we read, 'Agni, drive away from us the enemies—tribes who keep no sacred fires came to attack us. Come again to the earth, sacred god, with all the immortals, come to our libation.'[74] The same races are called 'kravyād,' or flesh-eaters. In a famous hymn of Vasishṭha we read: 'Indra and Soma, burn the Rakshas, destroy them, throw them down, ye two Bulls, the people that grow in darkness. Hew down the madmen, suffocate them, kill them, hurl them away, and slay the voracious. Indra and Soma, up together against the cursing demon! may he burn and hiss like an oblation in the fire! Put your everlasting hatred on the villain, who hates the Brahman, who eats flesh, and whose look is abominable.'[75] . . . Kravyād, flesh-eater, means people who eat raw meat, . . . and they are also called āmādas, . . . or raw-eaters, for [73] The Rev. Dr. Wilson (India Three Thousand Years Ago, p. 20) thinks that the words Rākshasa, Piśācha, and Asura, were originally names of tribes; but he adduces no proof of this, and I have found none.

[74] R.V. i. 189, 3: Agne tvam asmad yuyodhi amīvāḥ anagnitrāḥ abhyamanta kṛishṭīḥ | Punar asmabhyan suvitāya Deva kshām viśvebhir amṛitebhir yajatra ||

[75] [R.V. vii. 104, 1, 2: Indrā-Somā tapatam raksha ubjatam ni arpayatam vṛishaṇā tamovṛidhaḥ | Parāśṛinītam achito ni oshatam hatam nudethām ni śiśītam atriṇaḥ | Indrā-Somā sam aghaśaṁsam abhy agham tapur yayastu charur agnivān iva | Brahmadvishe kravyāde ghorachakshase dvesho dhattam anavāyam kimīdine | In a similar strain, Viśvāmitra, the rival of Vasishṭha, says, in R.V. iii. 30, 15–17: Indra dṛihya yāmakośā abhūvan yajñāya śiksha gṛiṇate sakhibhyaḥ | Durmāyavo durevā martyāso nishangiṇo ripavo hantvāsaḥ | sam ghoshaḥ śṛiṇve avamair amitrair jahi ni eshu aśanim tapishṭhām | Vṛiścha īm adhastād vi ruja sahasva jahi raksho Maghavan randhayasva | Ūdvṛiha rakshaḥ sahamūlam Indra vṛiścha madhyam prati agram śṛiṇīhi | ā kīvataḥ salalūkam chakartha brahmadvishe tapushim hetim asya | "Indra, be strong; [the Rakshases?] have stopped the road: bestow favour on the sacrifice, and on thy worshipper and his friends: let our mortal foes, bearing quivers, practising wicked deceit, and malicious, be destroyed. A sound has been heard by our nearest foes; hurl upon them thy hottest bolt, cut them up from beneath, shatter them, overpower them; kill and subdue the Rakshas, O Maghavan! Tear up the Rakshas by the roots, Indra, cut him in the midst, destroy him at the extremities. How long dost thou delay? Hurl thy burning shaft against the enemy of devotion." See Roth, Illustr. of Nir., vi. 3, p. 72.—J.M.]

the cooking of meat was a distinguishing feature of civilized nations, and frequently invested with a sacrificial character. Agni, who in the Vedas is the type of the sacrifice, and with it of civilization and social virtues, takes an entirely different character in his capacity of 'kravyād,' or flesh-eater. He is represented under a form as hideous as the beings he is invoked to devour. He sharpens his two iron tusks, puts his enemies into his mouth and swallows them. [R.V., x. 87, 2, ff.] He heats the edges of his shafts, and sends them into the hearts of the Rakshas. He tears their skin, minces their members, and throws them before the wolves to be eaten by them, or by the shrieking vultures. These Rakshas are themselves called 'achitas,' mad, and 'mūradevās,'[76] worshippers of mad gods. Nay, they are even taunted with eating human flesh, and are called 'asutṛipas,' as enjoying the life of other men. In the Rigveda we read [x. 87, 16], 'the Yātudhānas who gloat on the bloody flesh of men or horses, and steal the milk of the cow, O Agni, cut off their heads with thy fiery sword.' All these epithets seem to apply to hostile, and, most likely, aboriginal races, but they are too general to allow us the inference of any ethnological conclusions. The Vaidik ṛishis certainly distinguish between Arian and non-Arian enemies. The gods are praised for destroying enemies, Arian as well as barbarian (dāsā cha vṛittrā hatam āryāṇi cha), and we frequently find the expression 'kill our Arian enemies, and the Dāsā enemies; yea, kill all our enemies.' But there is no allusion to any distinct physical features, such as we find in later writers. The only expression that might be interpreted in this way is that of 'suśipra,' as applied to Arian gods. It means 'with a beautiful nose.' As people are fain to transfer the qualities which they are most proud of in themselves to their gods, and as they do not become aware of their own good qualities, except by way of contrast, we might conclude that the beautiful nose of Indra was suggested by the flat noses of the aboriginal races. Tribes with flat, or even no noses at all, are mentioned by Alexander's companions in India; and in the hymns of the Rigveda, Manu is said to have conquered Vi-śiśipra (Pada-text, viśi-śipra), which may be translated by 'noseless.' The Dāsa, or barbarian, is also called 'vṛishaśipra' in the Veda, which seems to mean 'goat or bull-nosed,' and the 'anāsas,' enemies whom Indra killed with his weapon (R.V. v. 29, 9, 10), are probably meant for noseless (a-nāsas), not, as the commentator supposes, for faceless (an-āsas) people." (See above, p. 377, f.)

[76] [The far more opprobrious epithet of śiśnadeva is applied, apparently, to the same class of people, in R.V. vii. 21, 5; and x. 99, 3. The former of these texts ends thus: Mā śiśnādevāḥ apigur ṛitam nah: "let not the lascivious wretches approach our sacred rite." Yāska (Nir. iv. 19) explains śiśnadeva by abrahmacharyya; Roth (Illustrations to Nir., p. 47) thinks the word is a scornful appellation for priapic, or sensual demons. The last line of the second text (x. 99, 3, apparently spoken of Indra) is as follows: Anarvā yat śatadurasya vedo ghnan śiśnadevān abhi varpasā bhūt. "When, smiting the lascivious wretches, the irresistible god by art made himself master of the wealth of [the city] with a hundred portals." (See the fourth volume of this work, pp. 345, ff.)—J.M.]

Professor Müller then proceeds to remark that the physical features of the aboriginal tribes are more distinctly described in the Purāṇas. (See the first volume of this work, pp. 301, 303, and a passage from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa which will be quoted further on).

We may, perhaps, be better able to understand many of the expressions and allusions in the hymns, and the manner in which some particular phrases and epithets are applied (as it would appear, indiscriminately, to the different classes of beings, human, ethereal, or demoniacal), if we can first of all obtain an idea of the position in which the Āryas, on their settlement in India, would probably find themselves placed in reference to the aboriginal tribes; and if we, secondly, consider that the hymns in which these phrases are recorded were composed at various dates, ranging over several centuries; that the same words and phrases are perpetually recurring in the different hymns; and that expressions employed in one sense in the earlier hymns may have been transferred, in the compositions of a later date, to a different class of beings. We have further to recollect, that the hymns may not always have been handed down in a complete state, and that portions of different compositions, which had originally a different subject and purpose, may have been erroneously thrown together by compilers in after-ages. I shall say a few words, by way of conjecture, on each of these topics.

First, then, we may conceive the Āryas advancing from the Indus in a south-easterly direction into a country probably covered with forest, and occupied by savage tribes, who lived in rude huts, perhaps defended by entrenchments, and subsisted on the spontaneous products of the woods, or on the produce of the chase, and of fishing; or by some attempts at agriculture. These barbarians were of dark complexion, perhaps also of uncouth appearance, spoke a language fundamentally distinct from that of the Āryas, differed entirely from them in their religious worship, which no doubt would partake of the most degraded fetishism, and (we can easily suppose) regarded with intense hostility the more civilized invaders who were gradually driving them from their ancient fastnesses. The Āryas, meanwhile, as they advanced, and gradually established themselves in the forests, fields, and villages of the aborigines, would not be able all at once to secure their position, but would be exposed to constant reprisals on the part of their enemies, who would "avail themselves of every opportunity to assail them, to carry off their cattle, disturb their rites, and impede their progress."[77] The black complexion, ferocious aspect, barbarous habits, rude speech, and savage yells of the Dasyus, and the sudden and furtive attacks which, under cover of the impenetrable woods,[78] and the obscurity of night, they would make on the encampments of the Āryas, might naturally lead the latter to speak of them, in the highly figurative language of an imaginative people in the first stage of civilization, as ghosts or demons;[79] or even to conceive of their hidden assailants as possessed of magical and superhuman powers, or as headed by devils. The belief in ghosts is not obsolete (as every one knows) even in modern times and among Christian nations. In the case of nocturnal attacks, the return of day would admonish the assailants to withdraw, and would restore the bewildered and harassed Āryas to security; and, therefore, the rising of the sun in the east would be spoken of as it is [77] Wilson, R.V. vol. i. Introd. p. xlii. See the fifth vol. of this work, pp. 450, ff.

[78] In the Rigveda there is a hymn (x. 146) of six verses, addressed to Araṇyānī, the goddess of forests, which we can conceive to have been composed at a period such as that described above, by a rishi accustomed to live amidst vast woods, and to the terrors incident to wandering through their solitudes. The first and last stanzas of this hymn are as follows: Araṇyāni Araṇyāni asau yā preva naśyasi | katha grāmam na pṛichhasi na tvā bhīr iva vindati | . . . Añjanagandhiṁ surabhim bahvannām akṛishīvalām | prāham mṛigāṇām mātaram Araṇyānim aśaṁsisham. "Araṇyānī, Araṇyānī, thou who almost losest thyself, how is it that thou seekest not the hamlet? Doth not fear possess thee? . . . I have celebrated Araṇyānī, the unctuous-scented, the fragrant, abounding in food, destitute of tillage, the mother of wild beasts." See Roth, Illustr. of Nir., p. 132: and the fifth volume of this work, p. 422.

[79] In R.V. viii. 18, 13, human enemies are spoken of as acting like Rakshases: Yo naḥ kaśchid ririkshati rakshastvena martyaḥ svais sa evaiḥ ririkshīshṭa: "May the man who seeks, with Rakshas-like atrocity, to injure us, perish by his own misconduct."

in one of the Brāhmaṇas, as driving away or destroying the devils.[80] In a similar way the author of the Rāmāyaṇa (if we suppose that there is any historical basis for his poetical narrative) speaks, as we shall shortly see, of the barbarian tribes encountered by Rāma in the Dekhan as Rākshasas and monkeys.[81] This state of things might last for some time. The Āryas, after advancing some way, might halt, to occupy, to clear and to cultivate the territory they had acquired; and the aborigines might continue in possession of the adjacent tracts, sometimes at peace, and sometimes at war with their invaders. At length the further advance of the Āryas would either drive the Dasyus into the remotest corners of the country, or lead to their partial incorporation with the conquerers as the lowest grade in their community. When this stage was reached, the Āryas would have no longer any occasion to compose prayers to the gods for protection against the aboriginal tribes; but their superstitious dread of the evil spirits, with which the popular mind in all ages has been prone to people the night, would still continue.

Secondly. Throughout the whole period (which we may presume to have extended over several centuries) during which the state of things just described continued, the composition of the Vedic hymns was proceeding. These hymns were (as we have supposed, pp. 196, 198) preserved by the descendants of the several bards, who on their part, again, were constantly adding to the collection other new compositions of their own. The authors of these new effusions would naturally incorporate in them many thoughts and phrases borrowed from the older hymns which were preserved in their recollection,[82] and which were now, perhaps, beginning to be invested with a certain sanctity. As circumstances changed, the allusions and references in the older hymns might be forgotten; and it might happen that some of the expressions occurring in them would no longer be distinctly understood, and might in this way be applied to conditions and events to which they had originally no reference. The same thing might also happen by way of accommodation: phrases or epithets referring to one class of enemies might be transferred to another, as Professor Roth (see p. 389) supposed to have been the case with the word Śambara. When, in fact, we see that hints and allusions in the Vedas have been often developed in the Purāṇas into legends of an entirely different character and tendency, that the functions and attributes of the Vedic gods were quite changed in later ages, and that even in the Brāhmaṇas the true meaning of many of the Vedic texts has been misunderstood, it becomes quite admissible to suppose, that, even in the age when the later hymns were composed, the process of misapplication may have commenced, and that their authors may, in various instances, have employed the words of the earlier hymns in a different manner from that in which they were at first applied. In this way it is conceivable that what was originally said of the dark-complexioned, degraded, and savage aborigines, of their castles, or rude fortifications, and of their conflicts with the Āryas, may have been at a later period transferred to the foul sprites of darkness, to the hostile demons of the clouds, and to the conflicts of the gods with the Asuras and the Daityas. Or it is, perhaps, a more probable supposition that, in the artless style of early poetry, the earthly enemies of the worshipper were mentioned in the hymns along side of the malicious spirits of darkness (with whom, as we have just seen, p. 393, they might be supposed to have some affinity or alliance), or the aërial foes of Indra. This conjunction or confusion of different kinds of enemies becomes the more intelligible if the word Dasyu, as is supposed by the Indian commentators (page 363, above), originally bore the generic sense of destroyer. (See, however, the remarks of Professor Benfey in p. 367, f.) It might thus come to be applied to all kinds of enemies, as the mention of one description of foes might naturally suggest a reference to the others, and to the epithets applicable to them. We ourselves apply to the devil the appellation of the foul fiend, a word which means enemy (feind) in German; and when employing such prayers as "deliver us from the fear of the enemy," we naturally include all disturbers of our peace, outward or inward, physical or ghostly. Epithets like anyavrata, "observing different rites," avrata, "without rites," ayajyu, "not sacrificing," adeva, "without gods," which were originally applicable only to men, might thus, in the progress of a fantastic mythology, be afterwards transferred to demons.

[80] Quoted by Sāyaṇa on R.V. i. 33, 8: Ādityō hy eva udyan purastād rakshāṁsy apahanti. See also Sāyaṇa on R.V., i. 71, 4.

[81] And in our own experience the Chinese speak of Europeans as "foreign devils.'

[82] Compare Renan's Histoire des langues Sémitiques, 2nd ed. p. 120, note 1.

That this is not merely a presumption, but that, at least, something like the process in question actually took place in India, may be illustrated by the following curious passage from the Chhāndogya Upanishad, p. 585: Tasmād api adya iha adadānam aśraddadhānam ayajamānam āhur "āsura vata" iti | Asurāṇāṁ hy eshā upanishat pretasya śarīram bhikshayā vasanena alankāreṇa iti saṁskurvanti | etena hy amuṁ lokaṁ jeshyanto manyante | "Hence even at the present day a person who is destitute of liberality and faith, and who does not sacrifice, is contemptuously addressed as one of the Asura race. This is the sacred doctrine of the Asuras: they adorn the bodies of the dead with gifts, with raiment, and jewels, and imagine that by this means they shall attain the world to come." [83]

The following passage of the Śatap. Br. iii. 2, 1, 23 and 24 (p. 235, Weber's ed.), may also serve to show the connexion between the aborigines and Asuras: Te Asurāḥ āttavachaso "he alavaḥ he alavaḥ" iti vadantaḥ parābabhūvuḥ | Tatra etām api vācham ūdur upajijñāsyām | sa mlechhas | Tasmād na brāhmaṇo mlechhed | Asuryā ha eshā vāk. "The Asuras, deprived of speech, and crying he alavaḥ ('O enemies,' incorrectly, instead of he arayaḥ), were defeated. Here they also spoke this doubtful expression. This is incorrect language [or one who speaks so is a mlechha]. Therefore let no Brahman speak incorrectly; for this is the language of the Asuras." [84]

[83] See Weber's Ind. Stud. i. 271, 2, and note. Compare Manu, xi. 20: Yad dhanaṁ yajñaśīlānām deva-svaṁ tad vidur budhāḥ | Ayajvanāṁ tu yad vittam āsura-svam tad uchyate || "The wealth of those who practise sacrifice is regarded by the wise as the property of the gods; but the wealth of those who never sacrifice is called the property of the Asuras." See also Śatapatha-brāhmaṇa, xiii, 8, 1, 5 (App. Note N.), and Weber's Ind. Stud. i. 189; as well as the text from the Taittirīya-brāhmaṇa cited in the first volume of this work, 2nd ed., p. 21.

[84] In the Brāhmaṇas numerous mythical tales occur of battles between the Devas (gods) and Asuras, which Weber (Ind. Stud. i. 186, and ii. 243) thinks are often to be understood of contests between the Arians and the aborigines. This he considers to be proved by the passage about Kilāta (whose name nearly corresponds with that of the Kirātas, an aboriginal race) and Ākuli, priests of the Asuras, quoted above, p. 386, note, from the Śatap. Br., and by the legend of Rāvaṇa. It may be also worthy of note, that the word krivi, when occurring in the R.V. (as in ii. 17, 6, and elsewhere), though taken by Roth, in his Lexicon, to mean generally a cloud, is understood by the Commentator as the name of an Asura; while this same word is stated in the Śatap. Br. xiii. 5, 4, 7, to be an old name of the Panchālas; Krivayaḥ iti ha vai purā Panchālān āchakshate.

SECT. III.—The Arians on the Sarasvatī, and their diffusion eastward and southward from that point.

In the preceding sections we have seen that the Āryas, on penetrating into Hindustan from the north-west, and advancing across the Panjāb from the Indus towards the Sarasvatī, found themselves in contact and conflict with a race of people, apparently aboriginal, who are designated in the Vedic hymns by the appellation of Dasyus. We shall shortly find that at a later period, on their southward progress from the Doab towards and across the Vindhya range, the Arians again began to press upon the aborigines, and drove them further and further into the Dekhan. We shall also, perhaps, find in the epithets applied in the Rāmāyaṇa to the barbarous tribes of the Dekhan, a confirmation of the opinion that in the hymns of the Rigveda the same class of people are designated by such terms as Rakshas, etc. Before proceeding with this investigation, however, we must first pause for a moment with the Brahmanical Indians in the holy land on the banks of the Sarasvatī, and then by the aid of some texts from their ancient writers, trace their advance from that point to the eastward, and their diffusion over northern India generally.

We shall now, therefore, suppose that the Āryas, after traversing the country of the five rivers, have arrived on the banks of the Sarasvatī, and have even extended themselves as far as the Jumna and the Ganges. It would appear that the narrow tract called Brahmāvartta between the Sarasvatī and the Dṛishadvatī, alluded to in the classical passage of Manu, ii. 17–24, must have been for a considerable period the seat of some of the most distinguished Indian priests and sages, that there the Brahmanical institutions must have been developed and matured, and perhaps the collection of the Vedic hymns completed and the canon closed. (See above, pp. 302, 345, 348.) It is not easy to account in any other way for the sacred character attached to this small tract of country.[85] On this subject Lassen remarks as follows (in his

[85] Some texts of the Veda relating to the Sarasvatī have been quoted above, p. 345, f. Weber (Ind. Stud., ii. 311) quotes two passages from the S'ānkhāyana and Aitareya Brāhmaṇas, about the ṛishis holding a sacrifice on the banks of this river. See also Professor Haug's Ait. Br. The commencement of the legend in the Ait. Br., ii. 19, is as follows: Rishayo vai Sarasvatyām̃ satram āsata, te Kavasham Ailūsham somād anayan: "dāsyaḥ putraḥ kitavo 'brāhmaṇaḥ katham no madhye dīkshishṭa" iti tam bahirdhanva udavahann "atra enam pipāsā hantu | Sarasvatyāḥ Zeitschrift, iii. p. 201):—"The holiness [of the Sarasvatī] must also rest on historical grounds, and be referred to an age when the contrast had become strongly marked between the inhabitants of inner India, whose institutions were framed according to rigid sacerdotal principles, and the occupants of the Panjāb, by whom such rules were but imperfectly observed. This contrast, however, was not only applicable to the people of the west: towards the south also the country which was regulated by institutions of a strictly Indian character, terminated with the Sarasvatī: the place where that river disappeared was the door of the Nishāda country; and she disappeared in order that she might not come into contact with that impure race."[86] Of the same locality Professor Wilson (Vishṇu-Purāṇa, Preface, p. lxvii) remarks: "Various adventures of the first princes and most famous sages occur in this vicinity; and the Āśramas, or religious domiciles, of several of the latter are placed on the banks of the Sarasvatī. According to some authorities, it was the abode of Vyāsa, the compiler of the Vedas and Purāṇas; and agreeably to another, when on one occasion the Vedas had fallen into disuse, and been forgotten, the Brahmans were again instructed in them by Sārasvata, the son of Sarasvatī.[87] One of the most distinguished of the tribes of the Brahmans is known as the Sārasvata. . . . . The udakam māpād" iti | "The ṛishis attended at a sacrifice on the [banks of] the Sarasvatī. They removed Kavasha Ailūsha from the soma, saying, 'This is the son of a bondmaid, a gamester (or deceiver), and no Brāhman; how has he consecrated himself among us in the sacred rite?' Accordingly they took him into the wilderness, saying, 'Let thirst destroy him here; let him not drink the water of the Sarasvatī.'" The Sarasvatī, however, showed him favour, and the Brāhmans in consequence admitted him to their fellowship. In the Mahābh., iii. 5074, quoted by Lassen (Zeitschr., iii. 200), it is said: Dakshiṇena Sarasvatyāḥ Dṛishadvaty-uttareṇa cha, ye vasanti Kurukshetre te vasanti tripishṭape | "Those who dwell in Kurukshetra, south of the Sarasvatī, and north of the Dṛishadvatī, dwell in heaven." See also the first volume of this work, 2nd ed., p. 421, f.

[86] Mahābh., iii. 10,538: Etad Vinaśanaṁ nāma Sarasvatyāḥ viśāmpate | dvāram Nishādarāshṭrasya yeshāṁ doshāt Sarasvatī | Pravishṭā pṛithivīṁ vīra mā Nishādāḥ hi mām viduḥ | "This is the place called the Vinaśana (disappearance) of the Sarasvatī, the gate of the country of the Nishādas, to whose impurity it was due that the Sarasvatī sank into the earth, lest [as she said] the Nishādas should become acquainted with her."

[87] An abstract of the legend here referred to is given by Professor Wilson at p. 285, 1st ed. of his work, note 9; 2nd ed., vol. iii. p. 70. The passage occurs in the ixth or S'alya Parva of the Mahābh., verse 2960. A twelve years' drought river itself receives its appellation from Sarasvatī, the goddess of learning, under whose auspices the sacred literature of the Hindus assumed shape and authority." [May we not with as much probability suppose the converse to have been the case,—especially as her name is derived from saras, "water" (Nir., ix. 36),—and that the goddess derived her name from the river on whose banks she may be said to have been born?][88] "These indications render it certain that, whatever seeds were imported, from without, it was in the country adjacent to the Sarasvatī river that they were first planted and cultivated and reared in Hindustan." See also Lassen, Zeitschrift, iii. p. 202.

The high degree of sanctity ascribed by the Indians, at the close of the Vedic era, to the country between the Sarasvatī and Dṛishadvatī, is further proved by the following passage of Manu, already repeatedly referred to:

Manu, ii. 17–24: Sarasvatī-Dṛishadvatyor deva-nadyor yad antaram | tañ deva-nirmitañ deśam Brahmāvartam prachakshate | 18 | Tasmin deśe yaḥ āchāraḥ pāramparya-kramāgataḥ | varnāṇāñ sāntarālānāñ sa sadāchāra uchyate | 19 | Kurukshetrañ cha Matsyāś cha Pañchālāḥ Śūrasenakāḥ | esha Brahmarshi-deśo vai Brahmāvartād anantaraḥ | 20 | Etaddeśa-prasūtasya sakāśād agrajanmanaḥ | svañ svañ charitrañ śikṣheran pṛithivyāñ sarva-mānavāḥ | 21 | Himavad-Vindhyayor madhyañ yat prāg Vinaśanād api | pratyag eva Prayāgāch cha madhyadeśaḥ prakīrtitaḥ | 22 | Ā samudrāt tu vai pūrvād ā samudrāt tu paśchimāt | tayor evāntarañ giryor āryāvartañ vidur budhāḥ | 23 | kṛishṇasāras tu charati mṛigo yatra svabhāvataḥ | sa jñeyo yajñiyo deśo Mlechchhadeśas tataḥ paraḥ | 24 | Etān dvijātayo deśān samśrayeran prayatnataḥ | śūdras tu yasmin kasmin vā nivased vṛitti-karshitaḥ | "The tract, fashioned by the gods, which lies between the two divine rivers Sarasvatī and occurred, during which the great ṛishis travelled hither and thither in search of food, and thus lost the Vedas (teshāṁ kshudā parītānāṁ nashṭāḥ vedā 'bhidhāvatām). The Muni Sārasvata was about to depart also, but was dissuaded by the Sarasvatī; na gantavyam itah putra tavāhāram ahañ sadā | dāsyāmi matsyapravarān ushyatām iha Bhārata: "Go not hence, my son: I will give thee excellent fish for food." He accordingly remained, "preserving his life and the Vedas" (prāṇān vedāṁścha dhārayan); and communicated the Vedas again to the other ṛishis at their desire.

[88] See the fifth volume of this work, pp. 338, ff. Professor Weber, however, in his review of that volume in the Lit. Centralblatt of July 28th, 1870, p. 864, objects to the view there stated.

Dṛishadvatī, is called Brahmāvartta. 18. The usage relating to castes and mixed castes which has been traditionally received in that country, is called the pure usage. 19. The country of Kurukshetra, and of the Matsyas, Panchālas, and Śūrasenas, which adjoins Brahmāvartta, is the land of brahmarshis (divine ṛishis). 20. From a Brāhman born in that region let all men upon earth learn their respective duties. 21. The tract situated between the Himavat and the Vindhya ranges to the east of Vinaśana, and to the west of Prayāga, is known as the Madhyadeśa (central region). 22. The wise know as Āryāvartta the country which lies between the same two ranges, and extends from the eastern to the western ocean. 23. The land where the black antelope naturally grazes is to be regarded as the proper region of sacrifice; beyond that limit lies the country of the Mlechhas. 24. Let twice-born men be careful to remain within these (specified) countries. But a Śūdra may dwell anywhere, when drawn to seek subsistence."[89]

From this passage it appears that at the period to which the rules prescribed in these verses are referable the Brāhmans had not ordinarily penetrated to the south of the Vindhya range, though adventurers might have visited, or hermits might have settled, in those regions. And even to the north of the Vindhya we find the country distributed into several tracts more or less holy, according to their distance from the hallowed spot in the north lying on the banks of the Sarasvatī. First, then, we have this small region itself, Brahmāvartta. This name may signify (1) either the region of Brahmā, the creator, in which case it may have been regarded as in some peculiar sense the abode of this god, and possibly the scene of the creation; or (2) the region of devotion or the Vedas (brahma), and then it will rather denote the country which was sanctified by the performance of holy rites and the study of sacred literature. Next in order we have the land of the Brahmarshis, comprising Kurukshetra

[89] I am indebted to Professor Aufrecht for the following note: "Pāṇini, ii. 4, 10, says: Śūdrāṇām aniravasitānām: the combination into a dvandva of Śūdras who are not excluded (Kaiyyaṭa explains niravasita by vahishkṛita) is put into the singular. On this the Mahābhāshya remarks: Āryāvartād anirvasitānām | ke punar Āryāvartāḥ | prāg Ādarśāt pratyak Kālakavanād dakshiṇena Himavantam uttareṇa Paripātram | " The sense is as follows: "'Not excluded' from Āryāvarta. But what are the Āryāvartas? The country east of Ādarśa, west of Kālakavana (or the forest of Kālaka), south of the Himavat, and north of Paripātra."

(the country west of the Jumna, and stretching from the Sarasvatī on the north towards Vṛindāvana and Mathurā),[90] with the country of the Matsyas, Panchālas, and Sūrasenas. The Panchālas are said by Kullūka Bhaṭṭa, the commentator on Manu, to have occupied the country about Kānyakubja or Kanauj; and the Sūrasenas to have lived in the neighbourhood of Mathurā.[91] The third tract, called Madhyadeśa, embraces a wider area, and stretches, north and south, from the Himālaya to the Vindhya range, and north-west and south-east, from Vinaśana, where the Sarasvatī disappeared in the desert (see above, p. 398) to Prayāga or Allahabad. The fourth region, Āryāvartta, or the abode of the Āryas, is yet more extensive than the last, and extends within the same limits of latitude from the sea at the mouth of the Indus to the Bay of Bengal (the eastern and western oceans).

The manner in which these several countries are here successively introduced seems to intimate that the Āryas proceeded gradually from the banks of the Sarasvatī (where, as we have supposed, they had established themselves after traversing the Panjāb) towards the east and south; and that the countries farthest to the south and east, as well as to the south-west, of the Sarasvatī, were those with which they had become last acquainted, and were least familiar. Another proof that the Arians had not yet penetrated to the south of the Vindhya, or thoroughly occupied the eastern provinces of Northern India, at the time to which we refer, may be found in Manu, x. 43, 44 (see first volume of this work, second ed., pp. 481, f., 486, ff.), where we are told that the Pauṇḍrakas, Oḍras, and Draviḍas, who had formerly been Kshatriyas, had, from neglect of religious rites and the absence of Brāhmans, sunk to the state of Vṛishalas, or Śūdras. From this it would appear that some at least of the people of those countries, i.e. of the inhabitants of Bengal proper and of northern Orissa, as well as those of the Coromandel coast,[92] were then living without Brahmanical institutions; and consequently that the Brāhmans had not yet taken complete possession of all those provinces; though, if the definition above given by Manu of the word Āryāvartta may be relied on as proof, the Āryas must have carried their conquests as far eastward as the eastern ocean, or Bay of Bengal.

[90] See the map of Ancient India, in Lassen, Ind. Ant. vol. ii.

[91] Panchālāḥ Kānyakubja-deśāḥ Śūrasenakāḥ Mathurā-deśāḥ.

[92] See Wilson's Vishṇu-Purāṇa, 1st ed., pp. 190, 192; 2nd ed. vol. ii., pp. 170, 177, and notes.

In the Śatapatha-brâhmaṇa we find the following remarkable legend, to which attention was first drawn by Weber (in his Ind. Stud., i. 170, ff.),[93] regarding the advance of the Brâhmans, and the spread of their religious rites in an easterly direction from the banks of the Sarasvatī (Śatap. Br., i. 4, 1, 10, ff.):—Videgho ha Mâthavo 'gniṁ Vaiśvânaram mukhe babhâra | tasya Gotamo Râhûgaṇaḥ ṛishiḥ purohitaḥ âsa | tasmai sma âmantryamâṇo na pratiśṛiṇoti "na id me 'gnir vaiśvânaro mukhâd nishpadyâtai" iti | tam ṛigbhir hvayituṁ dadhre "'vîtihotraṁ tvâ kave dyumantaṁ samidhîmahi | Agne bṛihantam adhvare' videgha" iti | sa na pratiśuśrâva "'Ud 'Agne śuchayas tava śukrâḥ bhrâjaṇtaḥ îrate | tava jyotîṁshi archayo' videghâ" iti | sa ha naiva pratiśuśrâva | "taṁ tvâ ghṛitasnav îmahe" ity eva abhivyâharad | atha asya ghṛita-kîrtâv eva Agnir Vaiśvânaro mukhâd ujjajvâla | taṁ na śaśâka dhârayitum | so 'sya mukhâd nishpede | sa imâm pṛithivîm prâpa adaḥ | tarhi Videgho Mâthavaḥ âsa sarasvatyâm | sa tataḥ eva prâṅ dahann ṗbhîyâya imâm pṛithivîm | taṁ Gotamaś cha Râhûgaṇo Videghaś cha Mâthavaḥ paśchâd dahantam anvîyatuḥ | sa imâḥ sarvâḥ nadîr atidadâha | Sadânîrâ ity uttarâd girer nirdhâvati | tâṁ ha eva na atidadâha | tâṁ ha sma tâm purâ brâhmaṇâḥ na taranti 'anatidagdhâ agninâ Vaiśvânareṇa" iti | tataḥ etarhi prâchînam bahavo brâhmaṇâḥ | tad ha akshetrataram iva âsa srâvitaram iva asvâdîtam Agninâ Vaiśvâṇareṇa iti | tad u ha etarhi kshetrataram iva brâhmaṇâḥ u hi nûnam etad yajnair asishvidan | sâ 'pi jaghanye naidâghe sam iva eva kopayati tâvat śîtâ 'natidagdhâ hy Agninâ Vaiśvânareṇa | sa ha uvâcha Videgho Mâthavaḥ "kva aham bhavâni" iti | "ataḥ eva te prâchînam bhuvanam" iti ha uvâcha | sâ eshâ 'py etarhi kośala-videhânâm maryâdâ | te hi Mâthavâḥ | Atha ha uvâcha Gotamo Râhûgaṇaḥ "Kathaṁ nu me âmantryamâṇo na pratyaśraushîr" iti | Sa ha uvâcha "Agnir me Vaiśvânaro mukhe 'bhût sa na id me mukhâd nishpadyâtai tasmât te na pratyaśrausham" iti | "tad u katham abhûd" iti | "Yatra eva tvam 'ghṛitasnav îmahe' iti abhivyâhârshîs tadâ eva ghṛita-kîrtâv Agnir Vaiśvânaro mukhâd udajvâlît taṁ nâśakaṁ dhârayitum | sa me mukhâd nirapâdi" iti | "Videgha[94] the Mâthava bore Agni Vaiśvânara in his mouth. The Ṛishi Gotama Râhûgaṇa[95] was his priest (purohita). Though addressed by him he (Videgha) did not answer, 'lest (he said)

[93] See also Lassen's Ind. Ant. vol. i. (2nd ed.), p. 645.

[94] Afterwards prakritized to Videha?

[95] See R.V. i. 78, 5.

Agni (Fire) should escape from my mouth.' [The priest] began to invoke Agni with verses of the Ṛik; 'We kindle thee at the sacrifice, O wise Agni, the sacrificer, the luminous, the mighty,' (R.V. v. 26, 3) 'O Videgha.' He made no answer. [The priest then repeated,] 'Thy bright, brilliant, flaming beams and rays mount upwards, O Agni,' (R.V. viii. 44, 16) 'O Videgha.' [Still] he made no reply. [The priest then recited:] 'Thee, O dropper of butter, we invoke,' etc. (R.V. v. 26, 2). So far he uttered; when immediately on the mention of butter (ghṛita), Agni Vaiśvānara flashed forth from his mouth: he could not restrain him, so he issued from his mouth, and then fell down to this earth. Videgha the Māthava was then on [or in] the Sarasvatī. [Agni] then traversed this earth, burning towards the east. Gotama Rāhūgaṇa and Videgha the Māthava followed after him as he burned onward. He burnt across all these rivers; but he did not burn across the Sadānīrā, which descends from the northern mountain [the Himālaya]. The Brāhmans formerly did not use to cross this river, because it had not been burnt across by Agni Vaiśvānara. But now many Brāhmans [live] to the east of it. It used to be uninhabitable, and swampy, being untasted by Agni Vaiśvānara. It is now, however, habitable; for Brāhmans have caused it to be tasted by sacrifices. In the end of summer this river is, as it were, incensed, being still cold, not having been burnt across by Agni Vaiśvānara. Videgha the Māthava spake: 'Where shall I abide?' [Agni] replied, 'Thy abode [shall be] to the east of this (river).' This stream is even now the boundary of the Kośalas and Videhas; for they are Māthavas. Gotama Rāhūgaṇa then said: 'How was it that, though addressed by me, thou didst not answer?' He replied: 'Agni Vaiśvānara was in my mouth. I did not answer lest he should escape from my mouth.' 'How then,' [rejoined Gotama] 'did it come to pass [that he escaped]?' [Videgha answered]: 'As thou didst utter the words, "O dropper of butter, we invoke," then, at the mention of butter, Agni Vaiśvānara flashed forth from my mouth: I could not retain him, he issued from my mouth.'"

In this passage the gradual advance of the Āryas with their Brahmanical worship, from the banks of the Sarasvatī eastward to those of the Sadānīrā, and afterwards beyond that stream, is, as I have said, distinctly indicated. At the time when the Śatapatha-brāhmaṇa was composed, the Brāhmans had already (as Weber remarks) dwelt for a long time in the country beyond the Sadānīrā, and it had then become a principal seat of the Brahmanical religion; as Janaka, the king of Videha, appears in that work with the title of "samrāṭ," or emperor. Thus (Śatap. Br. xi. 3, 1, 2), we have the following notice: "Janaka the Vaideha put this question to Yājnavalkya. 'Dost thou, O Yājnavalkya, know the Agnihotra sacrifice?' 'O monarch,' he replied, 'I know it.'"[96] Professor Weber makes the following remarks on the legend I have just quoted: "Under the name of Agni Vaiśvānara (the Fire which burns for all men), the sacrificial worship of the Brāhmans appears to be intended. The part which in the legend the priest plays in reference to the king is mysterious; but I understand it to mean that he compelled him to propagate the Arian worship towards the east. The Sadānīrā presents an obstacle, not from its magnitude or the difficulty of crossing it (which the Ganges and Jumna must have previously done in a greater degree), but from the inhospitable character of the territory beyond; for the word 'srāvitaram,' 'somewhat flowing,' designates the nature of the tract as an inundated swamp.[97] Even after Videgha Māthava had advanced across the river, the Brāhmans (as the Arians are here called) appear to have remained for a long time on its western bank, and to have only crossed in greater numbers after the king with his people had cultivated the country; until, in the time of the Śatap. Br., it had attained such a flourishing condition, that the tradition of its oceanic origin was only indistinctly preserved." Ind. Stud. i. pp. 178, 179.

In the Vocabularies of Amara Sinha, i. 2, 3, 33, and Hemachandra, 4, 150, Sadānīrā is given as a synonym of Karatoyā, a river in the north of Bengal Proper. But as the Sadānīrā is in this passage described as forming the boundary between the Kośalas and Videhas, or the countries of Oudh and North Behar, it seems that the river at present called the Gandak must be meant.—Weber, as above, p. 181.

[96] Śatap. Br. p. 846: Tad ha etaṁ Janako Vaideho Yājñavalkyam paprachha "vettha agnihotram Yājñavalkya" iti "veda samrāḍ" iti | See also Śatap. Br. xi. 6, 2, 1, p. 872, where Janaka is addressed by the Brāhmans by the same title.

[97] In illustration of this, a line of the Mahābh. ii. 1078, is referred to by Weber, which states that Bhīmasena, in the course of his conquest of the eastern country, came to the territory bordering on the Himavat, which was of aqueous origin: tato Himavataḥ pārśvaṁ samabhyetya jalodbhavam.

Lassen, Ind. Ant. i. 64 (2nd ed.), remarks: "Some lexicographers identify the Karatoyā with the Sadānīrā, whilst in other lists they are distinguished from each other. This appears to be the correct view in the present case, especially as Sadānīrā means always 'abounding in water,' and might be applied to any large river."

Lassen (Zeitschrift for 1839, p. 22, f.) quotes, for another purpose, and comments on, the following passage from the Mahābhārata, in which the name of the Sadānīrā occurs; but it throws no light on its position. "Departing from the Kurus (from Indraprastha), they passed through the middle of Kurujāngala, and came to the lovely Padma lake. Then passing Kālakūṭa, they crossed successively on one mountain (or in Ekaparvataka?) the rivers Gandakī, Mahāśōna, and Sadānīrā. Having then crossed the beautiful Sarayū, and seen the eastern Kośalā, they crossed the river Mālā Charmaṇvatī, and came to Mithilā."[98] In this passage (if any order has been preserved), it will be noticed that the Sadānīrā is placed between the Gandakī (whatever stream this name denotes) and the Sarayū, and so to the west of the latter river. Its position does not, therefore, seem to be well defined in the ancient Indian authorities. This, however, is of little consequence for our present purpose, as any uncertainty in regard to the precise locality of the river does not obscure the plain and express purport of the legend, viz., that the Brāhmans with their worship advanced from the Sarasvatī eastward to Behar and Bengal.

Sect. IV.—Advance of the Arians from the Doab across the Vindhya Mountains; and their conflicts with the aboriginal tribes of the Dekhan.

It is not essential for the object which I have in view to attempt to trace with any precision the different stages in the progress of the Āryas to the east and south, which a review and comparison of the data supplied by the Brāhmaṇas, the Rāmāyaṇa, and the Mahābhārata may enable the careful investigator to determine, and to refer to particular periods.

[98] Mahābh., ii. 793: Kurubhyaḥ prasthitās te tu madhyena Kurujāngalam | Ramyam Padmasaro gatvā Kālakūṭam atītya cha | Gaṇḍakīṁ cha Mahāśoṇaṁ Sadānīrāṁ tathaiva cha | Ekaparvatake nadyaḥ krameṇaityāvrajanta te | Uttīrya Sarayūṁ ramyām dṛishṭvā pūrvāṁ cha Kośalām | Atītya jagmur Mithilām Mālāṁ Charmaṇvatīṁ nadīm||

As it is only necessary for my argument to prove that they did advance from the north-west to the east and to the south, and that in so doing they came into contact with aboriginal races who had been in previous occupation of the country, it will suffice for this purpose if (after the foregoing notice of their progress to the eastward) I now pass on to that great southward movement, of which we can perhaps discern the indistinct outlines in the poetic and hyperbolical narrative of the Rāmāyaṇa.

"The Rāmāyaṇa," remarks Professor Lassen (Ind. Ant., first ed., i. 534; second ed., p. 646, f.), "in the proper action of the poem, designates, for the most part, only the north of Hindustan as Arian." "It represents Mithilā and Anga in the east as Arian countries; and regards the Kekayas in the west, though dwelling beyond the Sarasvatī, as a pure Arian race; and to this tribe one of the wives of king Daśaratha belongs." Among the persons who were to be invited to the sacrifice of that monarch are the following, Rāmāyaṇa, Schlegel's ed., i. 12, 20, ff. (=Bombay ed., section 13, 21, ff.; and Gorresio's ed., 12, 18, ff.): Mithilādhipatiṁ śūraṁ Janakaṁ dṛidha-vikramam | nishṭhitaṁ sarva-śāstreshu | tathā vedeshu nishṭhitam | . . . | tathā Kekaya-rājānaṁ vṛiddham parama-dhārmikam | śvaśuraṁ rāja-siṁhasya sa-putraṁ tvam ihānaya | Angeśvaraṁ cha rājānam Lomapādaṁ susatkṛitam | suvrataṁ deva-sankāśam svayam evānayasva ha | Prāchyāṁś cha Sindhusauvīrān Saurāshṭreyāṁś cha pārthivān | Dākshiṇātyān narendrāṁś cha sarvān ānaya mā chiram | "[Bring] Janaka, the heroic king of Mithilā, of stubborn valour, versed in all the Sāstras, and in the Vedas. . . . . Bring also the aged and very righteous king of the Kekayas, the father-in-law of the lion-like king, together with his son; and thyself bring Lomapāda, the devout and god-like king of the Angas, paying him all honour. And bring speedily all the eastern, the Sindhusauvīra, the Surāshṭra, and the southern monarchs."

The word "southern kings" may, Lassen says, be employed here in a restricted sense, or inexactly, for from other parts of the poem it appears that the country to the south of the Vindhya was still unoccupied by the Āryas. Even the banks of the Ganges are represented as occupied by a savage race, the Nishādas. Thus we are told in the Rām., ii. 50, 33, ff., Bombay ed. (= ii. 50, 18, ff., Schlegel's ed.; and ii. 47, 9, ff. in Gorresio's ed.) (a curious passage, which I shall cite at some length): Tatra rājā Guho nāma Rāmasyātma-samaḥ sakhā | Nishāda-jātyo balavān sthapatiś cheti viśrutaḥ | sa śrutvā purusha-vyāghraṁ Rāmaṁ vishayam āgatam | vṛiddhaiḥ parivṛito 'mātyair jñātibhiś chāpy upāgataḥ | tato Nishādādhipatiṁ dṛishṭvā dūrād upasthitam | saha Saumitriṇā Rāmaḥ samāgachhad Guhena saḥ | tam ārtaḥ samparishvajya Guho Rāghavam abravīt | "yathā 'yodhyā tathedaṁ te Rāma kiṁ karavāṇi te | īdṛiśaṁ hi mahābāho kaḥ prāpsyaty atithim priyam" | tato guṇavad annādyam upādāya pṛithagvidham | arghyaṁ chopānayach chhīghraṁ vākyaṁ chedam uvācha ha | "svāgataṁ te mahābāho tavedyam akhilā mahī | vayam preshyāḥ bhavān bhartā sādhu rājyam praśādhi naḥ" | . . . . Guham evam bruvāṇaṁ tu Rāghavaḥ pratyuvācha ha | "architāś chaiva hṛishṭāś cha bhavatā sarvadā vayam | padbhyām abhigamāch chaiva sneha-sandarśanena cha" | bhujābhyāṁ sādhu-vṛittābhyām pīḍayan vākyam abravīt | "dishṭyā tvāṁ Guha paśyāmi hy arogaṁ saha bāndhavaiḥ" | "There [there was] a king called Guha, of the race of the Nishādas, a friend whom Rāma regarded as himself, and renowned as a powerful chief (sthapati).[99] He, hearing that the eminent Rāma had come to his country, approached him attended by his aged ministers and relations. Rāma then, along with the son of Sumitrā (i.e. Lakshmaṇa), seeing from a distance that the Nishāda king had arrived, met him. Guha, distressed (at the state in which he saw Rāma), embraced him, and said: 'This country is thine, like (thine own) Ayodhyā. What can I do for thee? For who shall find a guest so dear as thou art?' He then brought excellent food of various sorts, and quickly presented the customary 'arghya' (offering); and then said: 'Welcome, large-armed hero, this whole earth is thine: we are thy servants, thou art our master: rule over our kingdom prosperously.' . . . . Rāma replied thus to this address of Guha: 'We have always been honoured by thee, and we have been delighted with thee; both by thy coming on foot to meet us, and by thy display of affection.' Then pressing (Guha) with his holy arms, he said: 'Happily, O Guha, I behold thee and all thy kinsfolk in good health,'" etc.[100] This chieftain provided a boat to ferry Rāma with [99] See the first volume of this work, p. 366, note 164, and the gloss of Govinda Ānanda on Brahma Sūtra, i. 3, 34. Bibliotheca Indica, p. 317.

[100] It is singular that a Nishāda should be here represented as a friend of Rāma, "equal to (or, dear as) himself," and whom he affectionately embraces. The commentator thus tries to explain the matter: Yadyapi īdṛiśa-sakhyaṁ "hīna-preshyaṁ his wife and brother across the Ganges (Rām., Schegel's ed. ii. 52, vv. 4–7 and 68, ff., = Bombay ed. ii. 52, 5, ff., 74, ff.): and afterwards attended on his other brother, Bharata, when he also passed the same way. (Rām., Schegel's and Bombay editions; ii. 83, 20, and 84, 1, 10, etc.)

In the same poetical narrative, the Daṇḍaka forest is represented as beginning immediately to the south of the Jumna. The whole country from this point to the Godāvarī is described as a wilderness, over which separate hermitages are scattered,[101] while wild beasts and Rākshasas everywhere abound.[102] "The Rāmāyaṇa," says Lassen (first ed., i. 535; second ed., pp. 647, f.), "contains the narrative of the first attempt of the Arians to extend themselves to the south by hīna-sakhyam" ity ādinā upapātakeshu gaṇitaṁ tathāpi tad vipra-vishayam | rājnām āṭavika-balena prayojanavattvāt shaḍvidha-bala-sangrahasya rāja-dharmatvāchcha tat-sakhyam eva iti dik | atra idam bodhyam Nishāda-Guha-vishaye Rāmasya "ātmasamaḥ sakhā" ity evaṁ vadatā Vālmīkinā Rāma-samatva-Rāma-samāna-khyātitvoktyā bhagavad-bhaktatvena Nishādatve 'pi pūrva-kṛita-śravaṇādimattvena tasya tattvajnatvaṁ sūchitam | "Although such a friendship is, according to the words (no doubt of some smriti), 'the service of the low, and the friendship of the low,' etc., reckoned among the minor sins, yet this refers to Brāhmans, since in the case of kings such friendship is owing to the need they have of a force of people living in the forests, and it is part of a king's duty to collect a force of six kinds of soldiers. Here it is to be understood that Vālmīki, when he describes the Nishāda Guha as being a 'friend dear to Rāma as his own soul,' by speaking of his equality with Rāma, and of his being in the same category with Rāma, intimates that he had,—through his devotion to the Divine Being, and although now in the state of a Nishāda, yet by what he had formerly done and heard,—attained to a knowledge of the highest truth."

[101] Rām. iii. 1, 1, Bombay ed. (= iii. 6, 1, Gorresio): Praviśya tu mahāraṇyaṁ Daṇḍakāranyam ātmavān | Rāmo dadarśa durdharshas tāpasāśrama-maṇḍalam | Rāma alludes to the vastness of the forest, iii. 11, 31, Bombay ed. (= iii. 15, 33, Gorresio): Na tu jānāmi taṁ deśaṁ vanasyāsya mahattayā | Kutrāśrama-padam ramyam maharshes tasya dhīmataḥ | "From the vastness of the forest, I cannot discover the spot where the sacred hermitage of the great and wise ṛishi exists.

[102] At a later period, after the commencement of the Mahomedan inroads into Hindustan, southern India came to be regarded as the sanctuary of the Brahmanical religion and learning. Thus in the verse of Vyāsa cited by Weber (Hist. of Ind. Lit., p. 247, note), it is said: Samprāpte tu kalau kāle Vindhyādrer uttare sthitāḥ | Brāhmaṇāḥ yajñarahitāḥ jyotiḥ-śāstra-parāngmukhāḥ | "In the Kali age the Brāhmans living to the north of the Vindhya are destitute of sacrifice, and averse to astronomy;" while another law book, quoted by the same writer, says: Vindhyasya dakshiṇe bhāge yatra Godāvarī sthitā | tatra Vedāścha yajñāścha bhavishyanti Kalau yuge | "In the Kali age the Vedas and sacrifices will be found to the south of the Vindhya, on the banks of the Godāvarī."

conquest; but it presupposes the peaceable extension of Brahmanical missions in the same direction, as having taken place still earlier. Rāma, when he arrives on the south of the Vindhya range, finds there the sage Agastya, by whom the southern regions had been rendered safe and accessible. Agastya appears as the adviser and guide of Rāma, and as the head of the hermits settled in the south. In this legend we cannot but recognize the recollection that the south was originally a vast forest, which was first brought into cultivation by Brahmanical missions. The Rākṣhasas who are represented as disturbing the sacrifices and devouring the priests, signify here, as often elsewhere, merely the savage tribes which placed themselves in hostile opposition to the Brahmanical institutions. The only other actors who appear in the legend in addition to these inhabitants are the monkeys, which ally themselves to Rāma, and render him assistance. This can only mean that when the Arian Kshatriyas first made hostile incursions into the south, they were aided by another portion of the indigenous tribes. Rāma reinstates in possession of his ancestral kingdom a monkey-king who had been expelled, and in return receives his assistance."

Whether or not we concur with Lassen in thinking that the idea of the monstrous characteristics which are assigned to these gigantic demons, the Rākshasas, have been borrowed from the barbarous tribes whom the Brahmanical anchorites found in occupation of the forests, and from whom they would no doubt suffer continual molestation and cruelty (and perhaps this view derives some confirmation from the fact that both the rude aboriginal races, and cloud-demons, and malignant sprites appear to be denoted by the word Dasyu in the Vedic hymns), —or whether we regard them as poetical creations, in which the Indian imagination runs riot in the description of coarse and grotesque brutality,—there can be no doubt that southern India was at the period referred to but partially cultivated, and that it had only begun to be occupied by Arian colonists. The following are some of the passages of the Rāmāyaṇa in which the atrocities of the Rākshasas are described. An aged ṛishi, the spokesman of the hermits in the neighbourhood of Chitrakūṭa, thus represents to Rāma the sufferings to which they were exposed, Rām., ii. 116, 11, ff. (Bombay ed. Comp. Gorresio's ed., iii. 1, 15, ff.): Rāvaṇāvarajaḥ kaśchit Kharo nāmeha rākshasaḥ | utpāṭya tāpasān sarvān janasthāna-nivāsinaḥ | 12 | dhṛishṭaś cha jitakāśī cha nṛisaṁśaḥ purushādakaḥ | avaliptaś cha pāpaś cha tvāṁ cha tāta na mṛishyate | 13 | tvaṁ yadā-prabhṛiti hy asminn āśrame tāta vartase | tadā-prabhṛiti rakshāṁsi viprakurvanti tāpasān | 14 | darśayanti hi bībhatsaiḥ krūrair bhīshaṇakair api | nānā-rūpair virūpaiś cha rūpair asukha-darśanaiḥ | 15 | apraśastair aśuchibhiḥ samprayujya cha tāpasān | pratighnanty aparān kshipram anāryāḥ puratah sthitān | 16 | teshu teshv āśrama-sthāneshv abuddham avalīya cha | ramante tāpasāṁs tatra nāśayanto 'lpachetasaḥ | 17 | avakshipanti srug-bhāṇḍān agnīn sinchanti vāriṇa | kalaśāṁś cha pramardanti havane samupasthite | 18 | tair durātmabhir āvishṭān āśramān prajighāṁsavaḥ | gamanāyānya-deśasya chodayanty ṛishayo 'dya mām | tat purā Rāma śārīrīm upahiṁsāṁ tapasvishu | darśayanti hi dushṭāś te tyakshyāmaḥ imam āśramam | "11, 12. A certain Rākshasa, called Khara, the younger brother of Rāvaṇa, fierce, esteeming himself victorious, cruel, a man-eater, arrogant, wicked, distresses the devotees dwelling in Janasthāna and cannot endure thee. 13. From the time when thou hast dwelt in this hermitage the Rākshasas distress the devotees. 14. They show themselves in various disgusting, cruel, terrible, and ugly forms. 15. And these base (anārya) wretches harass others by bringing them into contact with vile and impure objects. 16. These foolish beings coming unperceived and disguised[103] into different places near the hermitages take delight in destroying the ascetics. 17. They cast away the sacrificial ladles and vessels, put out the fires with water, and smash the water-jars at the time of the oblation. 18. Desiring to desert the hermitages infested by these malignant wretches, the ṛishis to-day are urging me to go to another place. 19. The wicked ones already show a desire to inflict bodily injury on the ascetics: we shall abandon this hermitage."

Proceeding on his journey through the forest, Rāma encounters Virādha, a Rākshasa, who is thus described, Rām. Bombay ed. iii. 2, 4, ff. (Gorresio's ed. iii. 7, 5, ff.): Dadarśa giriśṛiṅgābham purushādam mahāsvanaṁ | 5 | gabhīrāksham mahāvaktraṁ vikaṭaṁ vikaṭodaram |

[103] The original words are: Abuddham and avalīya, which the commentator explains as "abuddham" aviditam yathā bhavati tathā nidrādau "avalīya cha" nirbhayam āślishya cha | "Unknown, in sleep, etc.; and fearlessly insinuating themselves." Gorresio's edition substitutes the words līnāḥ vikṛita-darśanāḥ, "dissolved" [into air] and "changed in appearance."

bībhatsaṁ vishamaṁ dīrghaṁ vikṛitaṁ ghora-darśanam | 6 | vasānaṁ charma vaiyāghraṁ vasārdraṁ rudhirokshitam | trāsanaṁ sarva-bhūtānāṁ vyāditāsyam ivāntakam | 7 | trīn siṁhāṁs chaturo vyāghrān dvau vṛikau pṛishatān daśa | savishāṇam vasā-digdhaṁ gajasya cha śiro mahat | avasajyāyase śūle vinadantam mahāsvanam | "He beheld a being like a mountain peak, a man-eater, loud-voiced, (5) hollow-eyed, large-mouthed, huge, huge-bellied, horrible, rude, long, deformed, of dreadful aspect, (6) wearing a tiger's skin, dripping with fat, wetted with blood, terrific to all creatures, like Death with open mouth, (7) bearing three lions, four tigers, two wolves, ten deer, and the great head of an elephant with the tusks, and smeared with fat, on the point of an iron pike, shouting with a loud voice." [104]

This demon, who was slain by Rāma, turned out to be a Gandharva, who by a curse had been transformed into a Rākshasa; but now on his death, regains his primeval form. He, nevertheless, requests that his body shall be buried after the manner of the Rākshasas; Rām., Bomb. ed. iii. 4, 22 (Gorresio iii. 8, 19): Avaṭe chāpi māṁ Rāma nikshipya kuśalī vraja | rakshasāṁ gata-satvānām esha dharmaḥ sanātanaḥ | 23 | avaṭe ye nidhīyante teshāṁ lokāḥ satātanāḥ | . . . . | 27 | tataḥ khanitram ādāya Lakshmaṇaḥ śvabhram uttamam | akhanat pārśvatas tasya Virādhasya mahātmanaḥ | 28 | tam mukta-kaṇṭham utkshipya śankukarṇam mahāsvanam | Virādham prākshipat śvabhre nadantaṁ bhairavasvanam | "And, Rama, cast me into a trench, and go away prosperously, for such is the immemorial custom in regard to deceased

[104] The Nishādas also are described in the Purāṇas as very black and ugly, but differ from the Rākshasas in being very short. See the first vol. of this work, pp. 301, 303, and Wilson's Vishṇu-Pur. 2nd ed.. i. 181. The Bhāg.-Pur., iv. 14, 43-46, thus describes them:— "Viniśchityaivam ṛishayo vipannasya mahīpateḥ | mamanthur ūrum tarasā tatrāsīd bāhuko naraḥ | kākakṛishṇo 'tihrasvāṅgo hrasvabāhur mahāhanuḥ | Hrasvapād nimnanāsāgro raktākshas tāmramūrdhajaḥ | Taṁ tu te 'vanatam dīnam kiṁ kāromīti vādinam | nishīdety abruvaṁs tāta sa nishādas tato 'bhavat | Tasya vaṁśāstu naishādāḥ giri-kānana-gocharāḥ | "The ṛishis having thus resolved, vigorously rubbed the thigh of the defunct king (Veṇa), when there issued from it a servile man, black as a crow, very short in limb, with short arms, large jaws, short feet, pendent nose, red eyes, and copper-coloured hair. This man, humble and bowed down, asked them what he should do. They answered, 'Sit down' (nishīda), and he, in consequence, became a Nishāda. His descendants are the Naishādas, who dwell in hills and forests." We are informed by Prof. Wilson that the Padma Purāṇa (Bhū.-K.) "has a similar description, adding to the dwarfish stature and black complexion, a wide mouth, large ears, and a protuberant belly."

Rākshasas; such of them as are so interred attain to ever-enduring worlds." . . . "27. Then Lakshmaṇa, taking a spade, dug a suitable trench by the side of the great Virādha. 28. And raising the pin-eared,[105] loud-voiced Rākshasa, after Rāma had removed his foot from his throat, he cast him into the trench, resounding dreadfully."[106] This may allude (as Weber remarks, Ind. Stud. i. 272, note) to a difference between the funeral rites of the Brahmanical Indians and the aboriginal tribes.

The following are two further passages in which the Rākshasas and their oppression of the anchorites are described. The sufferers, it appears, assert that they possess the power of ridding themselves of their enemies by their superhuman faculties; but these faculties they do not choose to exert, for the reason assigned. Rām., Bombay ed., iii. 6, 15, ff. (Gorresio's ed. iii. 10, 16, ff.): So 'yam brāhmaṇa-bhūyishṭho vānaprastha-gaṇo mahān | tvannātho 'nāthavad Rāma Rākshasair hanyate bhṛiśam | ehi paśya śarīrāṇi munīnām bhāvitātmanām | hatānāṁ Rākshasair ghorair bahūnām bahudhā vane | Pampā-nadī-nivāsānām anu Mandākinīm api | Chitrakūṭālayānāṁ cha kriyate kadanaṃ mahat | "This large company of hermits, principally Brāhmans, whose lord thou art, is slaughtered by the Rākshasas, as if they had no protector. Come, Rāma, and behold the bodies of numerous meditative munis, lying slain by the Rākshasas in many parts of the forest. A great slaughter is being perpetrated of the dwellers on the Pampā, and the Mandākinī,[107] and the residents on Chitrakūṭa." Ram. iii. 10, 10, Bombay ed. (=Gorresio's ed. iii. 14, 11, ff.): 10 | Rākshasair Daṇḍakāraṇye bahubhiḥ kāmarūpibhiḥ | 11 | arditāḥ sma bhṛiśam Rāma

[105] The sense of the epithet śanku-karṇa is not clear. It is compounded of śanku, a "pin," "peg," or "stake," and karṇa, "ear." The commentator explains śanku by śanku-vat kaṭhinam, "hard as a pin."

[106] In the sequel, however, Rāma encounters Kabandha, another Rākshasa, whom at his request Laksmaṇa burns on a funeral pile in a trench.—Rām. iii. 71, 31; 72, 1, ff. (=Gorr. sec. 75, verses, 45, 50, ff.)

[107] Here it will be observed that the name of a river in the Himālaya [a branch of the Ganges, flowing down from the glacier of Kedarnath; see the first volume of this work, 1st ed., p. 187, note; Rāmāyaṇa, iv. 44, 94, Gorresio's ed. saptarshi-bhavanaṁ tatra tatra Mandākinī nadī | "There (in the country of the Uttara Kurus) is the abode of the seven ṛishis; there is the river Mandākinī;" and my "Notes of a trip to Kedarnath," printed in 1855 for private circulation, p. 15, f.] is applied to a river in the centre of India. This illustrates what has been said above (pp. 344, 347 and 349) about the application of the same name to different streams.

bhavān nas tatra rakshatu | homa-kāle tu samprāpte parva-kāleshu chānagha | 12 | dharshayanti sma durdharshāḥ Rākshasāḥ piśitāśanāḥ | Rākshasair dharshitānāṁ cha tāpasānāṁ tapasvinām | 13 | gatim mṛigayamāṇānām bhavān naḥ paramā gatiḥ | kāmaṁ tapaḥ-prabhāvena śaktāḥ hantuṁ niśācharān | 14 | chirārjitaṁ na chechhāmas tapaḥ khaṇḍayituṁ vayam | bahuvighnaṁ tapo nityaṁ duścharaṁ chaiva Rāghava | 15 | tena śāpaṁ na munchāmo bhakshyamāṇāś cha Rākshasaiḥ | 10, 11. "We are greatly harassed by numerous Rākshasas in the Daṇḍaka forest, who change their forms at will. At the time of offering the oblation and our festivals, (12) the fierce, flesh-devouring Rākshasas assail us. Of us, the devout ascetics, thus assailed, and (13) seeking a helper, thou art the supreme defence. It is true that by the power of our austerities we could at will slay these goblins; (14) but we are unwilling to nullify the merit which has been earned by long exertion. The acquisition of such merit is arduous, and attended with many obstacles: (15) it is on that account that, even while being devoured, we abstain from launching curses against our oppressors." The utterance of a curse, it appears from this passage, was an act which neutralized the sanctity of him who pronounced it. Compare the story of Viśvāmitra in the first volume of this work, p. 408. Sītā, however, thinks that her husband Rāma has no right to slay the Rākshasas, who were not in a state of hostility with him, and had done him no injury.[108]

It does not appear, however, why the aid of Rāma should have been so earnestly invoked, as the sage Agastya appears to have been perfectly successful in keeping the Rākshasas under restraint. His prowess is thus described, Rām. iii. 11, 79; Bombay ed. (= Gorresio's ed. iii. 17, 17, ff.): Agastyaḥ iti vikhyāto loko svenaiva karmaṇā | āśramo dṛiśyate tasya pariśrānta-śramāpahaḥ| . . . . | 81 | Nigṛihya tarasā mṛityuṁ lokānāṁ hita-hāmyaya | dakshiṇā dik kṛitā yena śaraṇyā puṇyakarmaṇā | 82 | Tāsyedam āśrama-padam prabhāvād yasya rākshasaiḥ | dig iyaṁ dakshiṇā trāsād dṛiśyate nopabhujyate | 83 | yadā-prabhṛiti chākrāntā dig iyam puṇyakarmaṇā | tadā-prabhṛiti nirvairāḥ praśāntāḥ rajanīcharāḥ | 84 | Nāmnā cheyam bhagavato dakshiṇā dik

[108] Rām. iii. 9, 24, Bomb. ed. (=Gorr. ed. iii. 13, 22): Na kathanchana sā kāryā gṛihīta-dhanushā tvayā | buddhir vairaṁ vinā hantuṁ Rākshasān Daṇḍakāśritān | aparādhaṁ vinā hantum loko vīra na maṁsyate |

pradakshiṇā | prathitā trishu lokeshu durdharshā krūra-karmabhiḥ | 85 | Mārgaṁ niroddhuṁ satatam bhāskarasyāchalottamaḥ | sandeśam pālayaṁs tasya Vindhyaśailo na vardhate | . . . . | 90 | Nātra jīved mṛishāvādī krūro vā yadivā śaṭhaḥ | nṛiśaṁsaḥ pāpavṛitto vā munir esha tathāvidhaḥ | "79. The hermitage of Agastya, renowned in the world by his holy acts, (that hermitage) which offers relief to the wearied, is now in view. . . . . 81. [This is the] meritorious sage, who has restrained death by his power, and who, through his benevolence to mankind, has rendered the southern regions perfectly secure (see above, p. 409). 82. This is the hermitage of that saint by whose might it is effected that this southern region is, owing to their dread of him, only gazed upon, and not possessed, by the Rākshasas. 83. Ever since that holy man has visited this region, all the goblins have become devoid of enmity and subdued. 84. Through the name of this saint this southern country has become prosperous, and renowned in the three worlds, as secure against the attacks of the cruel. 85. The lofty Vindhya range (which sought to grow to a great height), with the view of stopping the path of the sun, now, submissive to the sage's command, increases no farther." . . . "90. No liar, or cruel, or wicked, or murderous, or sinful man may dwell here:—such is this muni."

In a preceding part of the same section, iii. 11, 55, f., Bombay ed. (= Gorresio's ed., iii. 16, 13, ff.), the destruction of two Asuras called Vātāpi and Ilvala, by this sage, is described: Ihaikadā kila krūro Vātāpir api chelvalaḥ | bhrātarau sahitāv āstāṁ brāhmaṇa-ghnau mahāsurau | 56 | Dhārayan brāhmaṇaṁ rūpam Ilvalaḥ saṁskṛitaṁ vadan | āmantrayata viprān sa śrāddham uddiśya nirghṛiṇaḥ | 57 | Bhrātaraṁ saṁskṛitaṁ kṛitvā tatas tam mesha-rūpiṇam | tān dvijān bhojayāmāsa śrāddha-dṛishṭena karmaṇā | 58 | Tato bhuktavatāṁ teshāṁ viprāṇām Ilvalo 'bravīt | "Vātāpe nishkramasv" eti svareṇa mahatā vadan | 59 | Tato bhrātur vachaḥ śrutvā Vātāpir mesha-vad nadan | bhitvā bhitvā śarīrāṇi brāhmaṇānāṁ vinish-patat[109] | . . . . | 61 | Agastyena tadā devaiḥ prārthitena maharshiṇā |

[109] We have here a form of the imperfect without the augment, vinishpatat for vinirapatat, on which the commentator remarks that the absence of the augment is Vedic (aḍ-abhāvaḥ ārshaḥ). In Gorresio's edition the perfect nishpapāta is substituted. In i. 18, 17, the Bombay edition has similarly pushpa-vṛishtiś cha khāt patat, "a shower of flowers fell from the sky," where the commentator makes a similar remark (aḍ-abhāvaś chhāndasaḥ).

anubhūya kila śrāddhe bhakshitaḥ sa mahāsuraḥ | 62 | Tataḥ "sampannam" ity uktvā datvā haste 'vanejanam | bhrātaraṁ "niskramasv" eti Ilvalaḥ samabhāshata | 63 | Sa tadā bhāshamāṇaṁ tu bhrātaraṁ vipraghātinam | abravīt prahasan dhīmān Agastyo munisattamaḥ | 64 | "Kuto nishkramituṁ śaktir mayā jīrṇasya Rakshasaḥ | bhrātus tu mesharūpasya gatasya Yama-sādanam" | 65 | Atha tasya vachaḥ śrutvā bhrātur nidhana-saṁśritam | pradharshayitum ārebhe muniṁ krodhād niśācharaḥ | "55. Formerly the cruel Vātāpi and Ilvala, two brothers, who were great Asuras and slayers of Brāhmans, lived together here. 56. The ruthless Ilvala, assuming the shape of a Brāhman, and speaking Sanskrit, used to invite the Brāhmans to a funeral ceremony (śrāddha). 57. He then served up to them, with the rites appropriate to a śrāddha, his brother Vātāpi, who had been transformed into a ram. 58. But after they had eaten him, he called out with a loud voice, 'Vātāpi, issue forth.' 59. Hearing his brother's voice Vātāpi, bleating like a ram, issued forth, rending asunder the Brāhmans' bodies." Thousands of Brāhmans were constantly killed by them in this way. "61. The ṛishi Agastya, however, at the request of the gods, understanding the state of things, devoured Vātāpi. 62. Ilvala then cried, 'All is complete,' gave him water to wash his hands, and called to his brother, 'Issue forth.' 63. The wise ṛishi, however, smiled and said to the Brāhman-slayer who thus addressed his brother, 'How can he come forth, when he has been digested by me in his form of a ram, and has gone to the abode of Yama?' 65. Hearing these words pronouncing his brother's doom, Ilvala began to assail Agastya," but but was burnt up by the flash of his eye.[110]

Agastya is again spoken of (Rām., vi. 117, 14, Bombay ed.) as the conqueror of the south:[111] Nirjitā jīvalokasya tapasā bhāvitātmanā | Agastyena durādharshā muninā dakshiṇeva dik | "As the southern region, unassailable by living beings, was conquered by the meditative muni Agastya, through his austerities."

[110] An explanation of this legend is suggested by Weber, Ind. Stud., i. 475. He thinks it may partly have taken its rise in the remembrance of some cannibals living in the Dekhan. The story is told more at length in the recension of the text followed by Gorresio, and with a touch of humour. Ilvala asks Agastya, smiling, how he alone will be able to eat a whole ram. Agastya, also smiling, replies that he is hungry, after his many years of fasting and austerities, and will find no difficulty whatever in devouring the entire animal; which he accordingly begs may be served up, and swallows (iii. 16, 22, ff.), with the result already told.

[111] On Agastya see the quotation from Lassen above, p. 409; and Caldwell's Dravidian Grammar.

Vibhīshaṇa, the brother of Rāvaṇa, is represented by his sister Sūrpaṇakhā, in her interview with Rāma, as virtuous and one who does not follow the practices of the Rākshasas.[112] Can this allude to some of the southern tribes or chiefs, who allied themselves to Rāma, having adopted Brahmanical usages, or is it merely a fictitious portion of the story? Vibhīshaṇa eventually deserts his brother, and is kindly received and embraced as a friend by Rāma.[113] In the Rāmopākhyāna in the Third Book of the Mahābh., verses 15,913–18, while Rāvaṇa asks Brahmā to make him invincible by superhuman beings, Vibhīshaṇa, on the other hand, prays, "that even in the greatest calamity, he may never incline to unrighteousness, and that the Brahmanical weapon may appear to him a thing he had never learned to wield."[114] He thus indicates his submissive disposition towards the Brāhmans.

The Rākshasas are described by Khara, one of their chiefs, Rām. iii. 22, 8, f. (=Gorr. ed. iii. 28, 18), as being "of fearful swiftness, unyielding in battle, in colour like a dark blue cloud."[115]

Khara himself is characterized by Rāma as the "perpetual enemy of the Brāhmans,"[116] as "cruel, hated of the Brāhmans, devoid of righteousness, and wicked."[117] Rāvana is stigmatized as an "overthrower of religious duties, and a ravisher of the wives of others;"[118] as "one who at the sacrifices and oblations polluted the Soma which

[112] Rām., Bombay ed., iii. 17, 22: Vibhīshaṇas tu dharmātmā na tu Rākshasaceshṭitaḥ (=Gorresio's ed., iii. 23, 38: Vibhīshaṇaś cha dharmātmā Rākshasāchāravarjitaḥ||)

[113] Rām. (Gorresio's ed.), v. 91, 20: Tañcha Rāmaḥ samutthāpya parishvajya cha Rākshasam | Uvācha madhuraṁ vākyam sakhā mama bhavān iti | The Bombay ed., vi. 19, 24, has only iti bruvāṇaṁ Rāmas tu parishvajya Vibhīshaṇam | abravīl Lākshmaṇam ityādi |

[114] Mahābh., iii. 15,918: Paramāpadgatasyāpi nādharme me matir bhavet | Aśikshitaṁ cha bhagavan brahmāstram pratibhātu me | "In verse 15,197 Vibhīshaṇa is styled dharmagoptā kriyāratiḥ, "a protector of righteousness, and devoted to religious rites."

[115] Rakshasāṁ bhīma-vegānāṁ samareshv anivarttinām | Nīlajīmūta-varṇānām, etc.

[116] Rām., iii. 30, 12 (=Gorr., iii. 35, 68, and 100): Nityam brāhmaṇakaṇṭaka.

[117] Gorresio, Ibid., verse 70: Krūrātman brahmavidvishṭa tyaktadharma supāpakṛit.

[118] Ibid., 32, 12 (= Gorr. 36, 11): Uchchetāraṁ cha dharmāṇām paradārābhimardanam.

the Brāhmans had offered with hymns;" and as a "snatcher away of prepared sacrifices, a killer of Brāhmans, a wicked and cruel being."[119] Nevertheless, to inspire confidence, Rāvaṇa approaches Sītā, pronouncing the Vedas, Rām. iii. 46, 14, (= Gorr. 52, 20).[120]

Under the designation of monkeys, again, which play so important a part in the Rāmāyaṇa, have we another class of the aborigines, who allied themselves to the Brāhmans, and embraced their form of religious worship; or are they, as well as the Rākshasas, merely rude poetical creations? In Rām., iii. 72, 18, f., Bombay ed. (= Gorr., iii. 75, 66), it is said that "Sugrīva, chief of the monkeys, is not to be despised, as he is grateful, can change his form at will, and is active in aiding his friends."[121] And we are told that at the inauguration of this same Sugrīva, who was reinstated by Rāma in his kingdom, from which he had been expelled by Bāli, "the monkeys gratified the Brāhmans according to the prescribed rule, with gifts of jewels, clothes, and food: after which men skilled in the Vedic formulas poured clarified butter, consecrated by sacred texts, upon the kindled fire, under which had been spread kuśa grass."[122]

The monkeys are described as living in a cavern (Rām. (Bombay and Gorresio's editions), iv. 33, 1, ff.), which Lakshmaṇa is represented as entering to convey a message of remonstrance to Sugrīva for his tardiness in aiding Rāma. The cavern, however, is a cave only in name, as, in the usual style of later Indian poetry, it is depicted as filled with trees, flowery thickets, palaces, a mountain stream, etc. This feature of monkey-life (their occupation of a cavern) may be either purely poetical, and intended to be in keeping with their other

[119] Rām., 32, 19 (=Gorr. 36, 11, ff.): Mantrair abhishṭutam puṇyam adhvareshu dvijātibhiḥ | havirdāneshu yaḥ somam upahanti māhābalaḥ | Prāpta-yajna-haraṁ dushṭam brahmaghnam krūrakāriṇam |

[120] Brahma-ghosham udīrayan | In the Mahābh., iii. 15,981, the sons of Vaiśravaṇa, i.e. Rāvaṇa and his brothers, are said to have been originally sarve veda-vidaḥ śūrāḥ sarve sucharita-vratāḥ, "all of them learned in the Vedas, heroic, and attentive to religious rites."

[121] Na tu te so 'vamantavyaḥ Sugrīvo vānarādhipaḥ | kṛitajnaḥ kāmarūpī cha sahāyārthe cha krityavān | See above, p. 157.

[122] Rām., iv. 26, 29, ff.(=Gorr. 25, 27, 28): Tatas te vānaraśreshṭhaṁ abhishektuṁ yathāvidhi | Ratnair vastraiś cha bhakshyaiś cha toshayitvā dvijarshabhān | 30 | Tataḥ kuśa-paristīrṇaṁ samiddham jātavedasam | Mantrapūtena havishā hutvā mantravido janāḥ || characteristics, or it may have reference to the rude habits of the aboriginal inhabitants of the southern forests.

I need not decide whether it is more probable that the extravagant descriptions of the gigantic and sylvan inhabitants of the Dekhan which I have just quoted, should have originated in some actual and hostile contact with the savages who occupied the then uncleared forests of that region, than that they should be the simple offspring of the poet's imagination.

It is certain that the description given of the Rākshasas in the Rāmāyaṇa corresponds in many respects with the epithets applied to the similar class of beings, the Dasyus (whether we take them for men or for demons), who are so often alluded to in the Rigveda. The Rāmāyaṇa, as we have seen, depicts them as infesting the hermitages or settlements of the Arians, as obstructing their sacred rites,[123] as enemies of the Brāhmans, as eaters of men,[124] as horrible in aspect, as changing their shape at will, etc., etc. In the same way the Rigveda (see above, pp. 363, 371, ff., and 390, ff.) speaks of the Dasyus, Rākshasas, or Yātudhānas as being "destitute of, or averse to religious ceremonies" (akarman, avrata, apavrata, ayajyu, ayajvan), as "practising different rites" (anyavrata) as "godless" (adeva, adevayu), "haters of prayer" (brahmadvish), as "inhuman" (amānusha), "ferocious looking, or with fierce eyes" (ghora-chakshas), as "flesh-eaters" (kravyād), "devourers of life," or "insatiable" (asutṛip), as "eaters of human and of horse flesh," (R.V. x. 87, 16: Yaḥ paurusheyeṇa kravishā samankte yo aśvyena paśunā yātudhānaḥ); as monstrous in form, and possessed of [123] In the Mahābh., xiv. 2472–74, the same hostile act which is so often assigned in the Rāmāyaṇa to Rākshasas, is attributed to a Nishāda. Arjuna is there said to have arrived in the course of his progress to the south, in the country of Ekalavya, king of the Nishādas; and to have vanquished that king's son, who had come to obstruct a sacrifice (yajña-vighnārtham āgatam).

[124] In the story of Gautama, already partially quoted, in p. 365, f. from the Mahābh., the very same epithet of "man-eater" (purushāda) which the Rāmāyaṇa applies to the Rākshasas, is employed to characterize the Dasyus, who are regarded in the Mahābh. merely as a tribe of savages, and not as demons. The Brāhman who reproaches Gautama with sinking into the condition of a Dasyu, is said to have seen him 'coming home with a bow in his hand, his limbs besmeared with blood, and in appearance like a man-eater," etc. (. . . . dhanush-pāṇim dhṛitāyudham | Rudhireṇāvasiktāngaṁ gṛiha-dvāram upāgatam | Taṁ dṛishṭvā purushādābham apadhvastam kshayāgatam, etc.)

magical or superhuman powers.[125] It is quite possible that the author of the Rāmāyaṇa may have borrowed many of the traits which he ascribes to his Rākshasas from the hymns of the Rigveda.

The last editor and translator of the Rāmāyaṇa, Signor Gorresio, writes as follows in regard to the fabulous races with which that work has peopled the Dekhan (Notes to vol. vi. pp. 401, 402): "The woodland inhabitants of India south of the Vindhya range are called in the Rāmāyaṇa monkeys, in contempt, I conceive, of their savage condition, and also, perhaps, because they were little known at that time. In the same way Homer related fabulous stories about the races who, in his age, were unknown to the Greeks. The occupants of the Dekhan differed from the Sanskrit-speaking Indians in origin, worship, and language." And in regard to the Rākshasas he observes, p. 402: "The author of the Rāmāyaṇa has no doubt, in mythical allegory, applied the hated name of Rākshasas to a barbarous people who were hostile to the Sanskrit-speaking Indians, and differed from them in civilization and religion. These Rākshasas were, I say, robbers or pirates who occupied the southern coasts of India, and the island of Ceylon." In his preface to the last volume (the tenth) of the Rāmāyaṇa (pp. i-ix), Signor Gorresio returns to this subject; and, after remarking that the Arian tribes, on their immigration from Northern Asia into the Panjāb, had to encounter indigenous races of a different origin,[126] whom they partly drove before them, and partly reduced to servitude, he proceeds to make a distinction between the savage tribes occupying the Vindhya and its neighbourhood and those further south. The first, whom the Rāmāyaṇa styles Vānaras or monkeys, though they differed from the Āryas in race, language, colour, and features, must, he thinks, have shown a disposition to receive the Arian civilization; since they entered into league with Rāma, and joined in his expedition against the black tribes further south. The greater part of the tribes

[125] In R.V., iv. 4, 15, another epithet, viz. aśas, "one who does not praise [the gods]," is applied to the Rakshases. Dahâ aśaso Rakshasaḥ pāhi asmān druho nido mitramaho avadyāt: "Thou who art to be revered by thy friends, burn the Rākshases who offer no praise; deliver us from the reproach of the oppressor and the reviler."

[126] The same thing, he remarks, happened to the Semitic races also, who came into contact with the Hamitic or Cushitic tribes, some of them nearly savage, as the Rephaim and the Zamzummim, Deut., ii. 20.

south of the Vindhya also submitted to the institutions of the Āryas; but towards the extremity of the peninsula and in Ceylon, there was (Gorresio believes) a ferocious black race, opposed to their worship. To this race the Arians applied the name of Rākshasas, an appellation which, in the Veda, is assigned to hostile, savage, and hated beings. It is against this race that the expedition of Rāma, celebrated in the Rāmāyaṇa, was directed. The Arian tradition undoubtedly altered the attributes of these tribes, transforming them into a race of giants, deformed, terrific, truculent, and able to change their form at will. But notwithstanding these exaggerations, the Rāmāyaṇa has (Gorresio thinks) preserved here and there certain traits and peculiarities of the race in question which reveal its real character. It represents these people as black, and compares them sometimes to a black cloud, sometimes to black collyrium; attributes to them crisp and woolly hair, and thick lips; and describes them as wearing gold earrings, necklaces, turbans, and all those brilliant ornaments in which that race has always delighted. These people are also represented as hostile to the religion of the Āryas, and as disturbers of their sacrifices. The god whom they prefer to all others, and specially honour by sacrifices, is the terrible Rudra or S'iva, whom Gorresio believes to be of Hamitic origin.[127] Their emblems and devices are serpents and dragons, symbols employed also by the Hamites.[128] Signor Gorresio considers the story of Rāma's expedition against the Rākshasas to be historical in its foundation, though exaggerated by mythical embellishments; and he observes that the Arian tradition has even preserved the memory of an earlier struggle between the same two races, as some Puranic legends relate that Kārttavīrya, of the Yādava family, a contemporary [127] In a note (no. 35, vol. x., p. 291), to Rām., vi. 54, 33 (where the disturbance of Daksha's sacrifice by S'iva is alluded to), Gorresio writes: "The fact here alluded to is mentioned rather than described in the First Book, 68, 9, ff. (= Bombay ed., 66, 9, ff.). It appears to me that this fact represents, under a mythical veil, the struggle of the ancient forms of worship. S'iva, a deity, as I believe, of the Cushite or Hamite tribes, which preceded the Arian or Indo-Sanskrit races, wished to participate in the new worship and sacrifices of the conquerors, from which he was excluded; and by disturbing their rites, and committing acts of violence at their sacrifices, succeeded in being admitted to share in them." In regard to S'iva's interference with the sacrifice of Daksha, see Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, vol. i., pp. 120, ff. (Dr. Hall's ed.), and the fourth volume of this work, pp. 168, 203, 226, 241, 312–324.

[128] As Signor Gorresio has not supplied any references to the passages in which these various characteristics of the Rākshasas are described, I am unable to verify his details. See, however, Rām. v. 49, 1, ff. (= Gorr. 45, 1, ff.)

of Paraśurāma, and somewhat anterior to the hero of the Rāmāyaṇa, invaded Lankā (Ceylon), and made Rāvaṇa prisoner (Wilson, Vishṇu Purāṇa, 1st ed., pp. 402, 417; Dr. Hall's ed. iv. 22, f., 55, f.; and the first volume of this work, p. 478).[129]

In regard to Signor Gorresio's views as above expounded, I will only observe here, that the aborigines of southern India are not generally regarded as of Hamitic origin; but, as we shall see in a subsequent Section, are considered by other philologists to be of Turanian extraction.

Professor Weber is of opinion (Hist. of Ind. Lit. p. 181), that the principal characters who figure in the Rāmāyaṇa, are not historical personages at all, but mere personifications of certain events and circumstances. Sītā (the furrow), he remarks, occurs both in the Rigveda,[130] and in the Gṛihya ritual, as an object of worship, and represents the Arian agriculture; while he regards Rāma as the ploughman personified. The Rāmāyaṇa has only, he thinks, an historical character in so far as it refers to an actual occurrence, the diffusion of Arian civilization towards the south of the peninsula.[131]

[129] The story is thus told in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, iv. 11, 4: Māhishmatyāṁ digvijayābhyāgato Narmadā-jalāvagāhana-kṛīḍā-nipānamadākulēna ayatnenaiva tena aśesha-deva-daitya-gandharveśa-jayodbhūta-madāvalepo 'pi Rāvaṇaḥ paśur iva baddhaḥ sva-nagaraikānte sthāpitaḥ | "When, in the course of his campaign of conquest, Rāvaṇa came to Mahishmatī (the capital of Kārttavīrya), there he who had become filled with pride from his victories over all the devas, daityas, and the chief of the Gandharvas, was captured without difficulty by Kārttavīrya (who was excited by bathing and sporting in the Narmadā, and by drinking wine), and was confined like a wild beast in a corner of his city." Prof. Wilson (p. 417, note) states that, according to the Vāyu Pur., Kārttavīrya invaded Lankā, and there took Rāvaṇa prisoner; but that the circumstances are more generally related as in the Vishṇu Purāṇa.

[130] Rigveda, iv. 57, 6, f. (=A.V. iii. 17, 8): Arvāchī subhage bhava sīte vandāmahe tvā | Yathā naḥ sabhagā'sasi yathā naḥ suphalā'sasi | 17 | (=A.V., iii. 17, 4) Indraḥ sītāṁ ni gṛihṇātu tāṁ Pūshā anu yachhatu | (A.V., abhi rakshatu) | Sā naḥ payasvatī duhām uttarām uttarāṁ samām | "Propitious Furrow, approach; Furrow, we worship thee, that thou mayest be propitious to us, and prolific to us. 7. May Indra plough the Furrow, may Pūshan direct her: may she, full of moisture, milk forth (food) for us in each successive year." See Wilson's translation and note, and Vāj. Sanhitā, 12, 70.

[131] See also the Indische Studien of the same author, vol. i. pp. 175, 277; vol. ii. pp. 292, 410; his dissertation on the Rāmatāpanīya-upanishad (Berlin, 1864), p. 275; and his Essay on the Rāmāyaṇa (Berlin, 1870), p. 7, ff. It would lead me too far to give any summary of the varied contents of this learned treatise. The reader can also consult the views of Mr. Talboys Wheeler in his History of India, vol. 2, The Rāmāyaṇa and the Brahmanic period, pp. 37, f., 315-318.

SECT. V.—Indian traditions regarding the tribes in the south of the peninsula.

Having furnished some account of the advance of the Āryas into southern India, and of the races whom they there encountered (if there is any historical basis for the fabulous narrative of the Rāmāyaṇa), I have now to inquire whether the other Hindu traditions offer us any probable explanation of the origin and affinities of the tribes who occupied the Dekhan before its colonization by the Brāhmans.

Among the Dasyu tribes which, according to the Aitareya-brāhmaṇa, vii. 18,[132] were descended from the Ṛishi Viśvāmitra, are mentioned the Andhras. And Manu, x. 43, 44,[133] specifies the Draviḍas among the tribes which had once been Kshatriyas, but had sunk into the condition of Vṛishalas (or Sūdras), from the extinction of sacred rites, and the absence of Brāhmans. In like manner the Cholas and Keralas are stated in the Harivaṅśa to have once been Kshatriyas, but to have been deprived of their social and religious position by King Sagara.[134] In the same way it appears that several of the Purāṇas, the Vāyu, Matsya, Agni, and Brahma, claim an Arian descent for the southern races, by making their progenitors, or eponyms, Pāṇḍya, Karṇāṭa, Chola, and Kerala, to be descendants of Dushyanta, the adopted son of Turvasu, a prince of the lunar line of the Kshatriyas. (See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, Dr. Hall's ed. vol. iv. p. 117, note 1).[135] Turvasu, the Purāṇas say, was appointed by his father to rule over the south-east. Thus the Harivaṅśa relates: "Yayāti, son of Nahusha, having conquered the earth with its seven continents and oceans, divided it into five portions for his sons. This wise monarch placed Turvasu over the south-east region."[136]

According to the legend, Turvasu, in common with most other of [132] Quoted in the first volume of this work, pp. 356, 358; and above, p. 364.

[133] Already quoted in the first volume, pp. 481, f., together with other parallel texts from the Mahābh.

[134] See the first volume, p. 488.

[135] The Harivaṅśa, sect. 32, verse 1836, substitutes Kola for Karnāṭa: Kuruthāmād ath' Ākrīḍaś chatvāras tasya chh" ātmajāḥ | Pāṇḍyaścha Keralaśchaiva Kolaś Cholaścha pārthivaḥ | Teshaṁ janapadāḥ sphītāḥ Pāṇḍyāś Cholāḥ sakeralāḥ| "From Kuruthāma sprang Akrīḍa, who had four sons, Pāṇḍya, Kerala, Kola, and Chola, who were the kings of the rich countries of Pāṇḍya, Chola, and Kerala."

[136] Ibid., sect. 30, verses 1616, ff.: Saptadvīpāṁ Yayātis tu jitvā pṛithvīṁ sasāgarām | vyabhajat panchadhā rājan putrāṇāṁ Nāhushas tadā | Diśi dakshiṇapūrvasyām Turvasam matimān prabhuḥ | . . . . nyayojayat | |

Yayāti's sons, had declined to accede to his father's request that he should exchange his condition of youthful vigour for his father's decrepitude, and was, in consequence, cursed by the old man. The Mahābh. i. 3478, ff., gives the following particulars of the curse: "Since thou, though born from within me, dost not give me up thy youth, therefore thy offspring shall be cut off. Thou, fool, shalt be king over those degraded men who live like the mixed castes, who marry in the inverse order of the classes, and who eat flesh; thou shalt rule over those wicked Mlechhas who commit adultery with their preceptors' wives, perpetrate nameless offences, and follow the practices of brutes." [137]

The Andhras, Draviḍas, Cholas, and Keralas, who have been mentioned in the preceding passages as degraded Kshatriyas, or as descendants of the adopted son of Turvasu, were the inhabitants of Telingana, of the central and southern parts of the Coromandel coast (or the Tamil country), and of Malabar respectively. It is evident that the legendary notices which I have just quoted do not throw any light on their origin. That these tribes could not have been of Arian descent, I shall proceed to show in the next Section by more satisfactory evidence, derived from the language of their modern descendants.

Sect. VI.—Languages of the south of India, and their fundamental difference from Sanskrit.

As I have already intimated in the earlier parts of this volume, there appear in the vernacular dialects of northern India many remains of pre-existing languages, distinct from Sanskrit, which are supposed to have been spoken by non-Arian tribes settled in that portion of the peninsula before the immigration of the Āryas; and I have also alluded to the existence of a class of languages in the south of India, viz., the Telugu, the Tamil, the Malayālim, and the Canarese, which are fundamentally different from the Sanskrit.[138] I shall now proceed to establish in detail the assertions I have made regarding these southern languages.

[137] Yat tvam me hṛidayāj jāto vayaḥ svam na prayachhasi | tasmāt prajā samuchhedaṁ Turvaso tava yāsyati | Sānkīrṇāchāra-dharmeshu pratilomachareshu cha | Piśitāśishu ch' āntyeshu mūḍha rājā bhavishyasi | Guru-dara-prasakteshu tiryag-yoni-gateshu cha | Paśu-dharmishu pāpeshu Mlechheshu tvam bhavishyasi | In verse 3533 Turvasu is said to be the progenitor of the Yavanas (Turvasor Yavanāḥ smṛitāḥ |)

[138] See above, p. 49.

Various savage tribes are still to be found among the hilly tracts in central India, such as the Gonds, Kols, etc., whose language is quite distinct from any of the ancient or modern Prākrit dialects derived from the Sanskrit. It is not, however, necessary that I should enter into any details regarding the speech of these wild races. It will suffice for the purposes of my argument if I show that the same remark applies equally to the far more numerous, and more cultivated tribes who occupy the Dekhan; and that the various languages which are current in the different provinces of the south, while they have a close affinity to each other and a common origin, are, in their entire character, essentially distinct from Sanskrit and its derivatives. In regard to these languages, information of the most conclusive character may be obtained from the preface to Mr. A. D. Campbell's Telugu Grammar (including the note by Mr. Ellis), as well as from the Rev. Dr. Caldwell's Comparative Grammar of the Dravidian Languages. From the last-named work I abstract the following details:—"There are four principal languages current in the different provinces of southern India, Tamil, Telugu, Canarese, and Malayālim, spoken collectively by upwards of thirty-one millions of people, besides five minor dialects, spoken by 650,000 persons. These forms of speech are not, in the proper sense of the word, dialects of one language, as no one of them is so nearly related to any of the others, as that two persons using different members of the group, the one, for instance, Tamil, and the other Telugu, would be mutually intelligible. The Tamil and the Malayālim have the most affinity to each other, and yet it is only the simplest sentences in one of these languages that would be understood by a person who spoke only the other. The Tamil and the Telugu, on the other hand, are the furthest removed from each other of the four languages; and though the great majority of roots in both are identical, yet they are so disguised by inflection and dialectic changes, that persons speaking each only one of these two languages would be scarcely at all understood by each other. The various Dravidian idioms therefore, though sprung from a common stock, must be regarded as distinct languages.

"The northern Pandits classify the vernacular dialects of India[139] in two sets of five, the five Gauras and the five Dravidas. In the latter, they include the Mahratha and Gurjara, as well as the Telinga, the Karṇāṭaka, and the Drāviḍa or Tamil. The first two languages are, however, erroneously coupled with the last three; as, though the Mahratha and Gurjara (Guzeratee) possess certain features of resemblance to the languages of the south, they yet differ from the latter so widely and radically and are so closely allied with the northern group, Hindī, Bengalī, etc., that they must be placed in the same class with the latter. The Drāviḍa proper or Tamil, the Telinga or Telugu, and the Karṇāṭaka, or Canarese, are not, as the northern Pandits suppose, derived from the Sanskrit, like the northern dialects, but, as regards their original and fundamental portion, are quite independent of Sanskrit. The difference between the northern and southern dialects consists in this, that though the former contain a small proportion of aboriginal or non-Sanskrit words, they are mainly composed of words derived by corruption from the Sanskrit,[140] while the Tamil, Telugu, and other southern languages, on the contrary, though they contain a certain amount of Sanskrit words, are yet, both as regards the great bulk of their vocabulary and their whole genius and spirit, totally distinct from the classical speech of the Arians."

[139] See Colebrooke's Misc. Essays, vol. ii., pp. 21, ff.

On this subject I shall introduce here some quotations from a note by Mr. F. W. Ellis, appended to the preface to Campbell's Telugu Grammar: "In arrangement the two latter [the Carnata and Telingana alphabets], which are nearly the same, certainly follow the Nágari, but in the form of the letters, mode of combination, and other particulars, there is no resemblance; and the Tamil is totally different, rejecting all aspirates, and having many sounds which cannot be expressed by any alphabet in which the Sanscrit is written. . . . . Neither the Tamil, Telugu, nor any of their cognate dialects, are derivations from the Sanscrit; the latter, however it may contribute to their polish, is not necessary for their existence; and they form a distinct family of languages, with which the Sanscrit has, in latter times especially, intermixed, but with which it has no radical connexion."—(p. 2). . . . . "The Telugu, to which attention is here more specially directed, is formed from its own roots, which, in general, have no connexion with the Sanscrit, nor with those of any other language, [140] See above, p. 32, f.

the cognate dialects of Southern India, the Tamil, Cannaḍi, etc., excepted, with which, allowing for the occasional variation of con-similar sounds, they generally agree; the actual difference in the three dialects here mentioned is in fact to be found only in the affixes used in the formation of words from the roots; the roots themselves are not similar merely, but the same."—(p. 3.)

"To show that no radical connexion exists between the Sanscrit and Telugu, ten roots in alphabetic order, under the letters A, C, P, and V, have been taken from the common Dhātumālā, or list of roots, and with them have been compared the Telugu roots under the same letters taken from a Telugu Dhātumālā. . . . These will be found in the following lists, the mere inspection of which will show, that among the forty Telugu roots not one agrees with any Sanskrit root." These lists I will copy here:—

SANSKRIT.	TELUGU.
Ak, to mark, move, move tortuously.	Akkalu, to contract the abdominal muscles.
Ag, to move, move tortuously.	Agalu, to separate, break.
Anka, Anga, to mark.	Aggu, to worship.
Agh, to move, despise, begin, move quickly.	Aggalu, to be insufferable, excessive.
Agha, to sin.	Aṭs, to give by compulsion, to incur debt.
Ach, to honour, serve.	Aṇṭu, to touch, adhere, anoint the head.
Anch, to move, speak unintelligibly, speak intelligibly.	Aḍangu, to be destroyed, submit, be subdued.
Aj, to throw, move, shine.	Aḍaru, to shine, shoot at.
Aṭ, Aṭh, to move.	Aḍalu, to weep bitterly.
Aḍ, to occupy, undertake.	Aḍu, to slap.
Kak, to hint desire, go.	Kakku, to vomit.
Kakk, laugh.	Kaṭs, to play dice, chess.
Kakh, laugh.	Kraṭs, to want.
Kakkh, laugh.	Kaṭṭu, to tie, build, become pregnant.
Kag, to move.	Kaḍugu, to wash.
Kach, to tie, shine.	Kaḍangu, Kanangu, to swell, boil.
Kaj, to hiccup.	Kaṭaku, Kuḍagu, to lick as a dog.
Kaṭ, to move, screen, rain.	Kaḍaru, to call aloud.
Kaṭh, to fear, recollect anxiously.	Kaḍalu, to move or shake.
Kaḍ, to eat, rejoice, divide, preserve.	Kaḍi, to approach, obtain.
Pach, to cook, explain, stretch.	Pagalu, Pangalu, to break, make forked.
Paḍ, to shine, move.	Panchu, to divide, send away, appoint.
Paṭh, to speak.	Paṭṭu, to seize, touch, begin, knead the limbs, understand, unite intimately.
Paṇ, to traffic, praise.	Paḍu, to suffer, fall.

SANSKRIT.	TELUGU.
Pat, to rule, move.	Paṇḍu, to reprove, produce, lie down.
Path, to move.	Paḍayu, to obtain.
Pad, to move, be fixed.	Paṇtangu, to vow.
Pan, to praise.	Paḍaru, to act precipitately, speak nonsense, threaten.
Pamb, to move.	Pannu, to join steers to a plough, prepare.
Parbb, to move.	Panatsu, to send, employ.
Vak, to be cooked, move.	Vaga, Vagu, to grieve, pretend grief, consult.
Vag, to be lame.	Vagir, to speak deceitfully, bark as a dog.
Vach, to speak, order.	Vangu, to stoop.
Vaj, to move, renew, or repair.	Vats, to come.
Vaṭ, to surround, share, speak.	Vantsu, to bind, pour out water.
Vaṭa, to surround, share.	Vrats, to divide.
Vaṇṭa, to share.	Vaṭu, to become lean.
Vaṭh, to go alone, be able.	Vaṭṭu, to dry up.
Vaḍ, to shine, surround.	Vaṭṭru, to shine.
Vaṇ, to sound.	Vaḍḍu, to serve food.

Mr. Ellis then (p. 7) adduces a list of fifteen roots, Telugu, Canarese and Tamil, taken in alphabetical order, "to show that an intimate radical connexion exists between the Telugu and other dialects of Southern India." As I believe the affinity between these languages is admitted by all competent scholars, I do not consider it necessary to quote this comparative list. Mr. Ellis then proceeds (p. 11) to prove by further details that these three languages are not only radically connected, but have also an intimate relation to each other "as regards terms used for the expression of ideas." With this view he first quotes a native writer, Māmidi Vencaya:

"Māmidi Vencaya, the author of the Āndhra Dīpikā, an excellent dictionary of the Telugu, has, in the preface to this work, introduced a concise analysis of the language, the substance of which . . . . is translated in the following paragraph.

"'The modes of derivation in the Andhra [Telugu] language are four; they are Tatsamam, Tadbhavam, Deśyam, and Grāmyam. Tatsamam consists of Sanscrit terms, pure as spoken in heaven, the Telugu terminations being substituted for those of the original language.'"

Of these the following are examples[141]:—

SANSKRIT.	TATSAMAM.	SANSKRIT.	TATSAMAM.
Rāmaḥ	Rāmaṇḍu.	Vāc	Vāccu.
Vanam	Vanamu.	Dyau	Divamu.

[141] [A few examples only are selected under two heads.—J.M.]

"'Tadbhavam consists of terms formed, either from the Sanscrit direct, or through one of the six Pracrits, varied by the interposition of syllables, and by the substitution, increment, and decrement of letters. . . . . The several modes of derivation . . . . are exemplified in the following lists:'"—

SANSKRIT.	TADBHAVAM.	SANSKRIT.	TADBHAVAM.
Samudraḥ	Sandaramu.	Chandraḥ	Tsandurundu.

Separate lists follow of Tadbhava terms introduced from Sanskrit into Telugu through the Mahārāshṭrī, the Saurasenī, the Māgadhī, the Paiśāchī (said to be spoken in the countries of Pāṇḍya and Kekaya), the Chulikā-Paiśāchī (spoken in Gandhāra, Nepāla, and Kuntala), and the Apabhranśa, spoken in the country of Abhīra, and on the coast of the western ocean.

Mr. Ellis proceeds, p. 15, with his extracts from Māmidi Vencaya: "'Deśyam, in other words Āndhra or Telugu, is of two kinds; the language which originated in the country of Telingana, and Anyadeśyam, or the language of foreign countries intermixed with it.'" Previously to showing what part of the language originated in Trilingam, the native author quotes from the "Adharavana Vyācaranam" a description of the country to which this name applies.[142] Mr. Ellis gives the author's definition of the native Telugu, as the language which arose within the boundaries of Trilinga, as follows: "As it is here said, in the country between Śrīsailam, the station of Bhīmeswara at Dracharāmam, the greater Kāleśwaram, and, as the fourth, the mountain of Mahendra, in these holy places were three lingams, and the language which originated in the country known by the name of the Trilinga-dēśam, is that now under consideration; this is the Atsu or pure Telugu, and is thus described in the Appacavīyam (verse): 'All those words which are in use among the several races who are aborigines of the country of Andhra, which are perfectly clear and free from all obscurity, these shine forth to the world as the pure native speech of Andhra (Śuddha-Andhra-Dēśyam).'" The following are some of the examples given, viz., pālu, milk, perugu, curdled milk, ney, clarified butter, puḍami, the earth, paḍatuka, a woman, koduku, a son, tala, the head, nela, the moon, maḍi, a field, puli, a tiger, magavanḍu, a man. Māmidi Vencaya then proceeds to the terms introduced into Telugu from foreign countries. "The following verse is from the Appacavīyam: 'O Keśava, the natives of Andhra, having resided in various countries, by using Telugu terms conjointly with those of other countries, these have become Andhra terms of foreign origin.'"

[142] This passage, as quoted in the Andhrakaumudī, is given by Mr. Campbell in the Introduction to his Grammar, p. ii. note. I am indebted to the late Prof. H. H. Wilson, for transcribing it for me from the Telugu into Roman characters: Śrīśaila-Bhīma-Kāleśa-Mahendra-giri-saṁyutam | Prākāraṁ tu mahat kṛitvā trīṇi dvārāṇi ch' ākarot | Tkilochano maheśasya triśūlaṁcha kare vahan | Trilingarūpī nyavasat tri-dvāreshu gaṇair vṛitaḥ | Āndhra-Vishṇuḥ sura-yuto Danujena Nishambhuna | Yuddhvā trayodaśa yugān hatvā tam Rākshasottamam | Avasat tatra ṛishibhir yuto Godāvarī-taṭe | Tatkāla-prabhṛiti kshetṛam Trilingam iti viśrutam| I translate this anew as follows:—"He [the Andhrian Vishṇu before mentioned], having constructed a vast wall connecting Śrīśaila, Bhīmeśvara, Kāleśvara, and the Mahendra hills, formed in it three gates. There, in the form of three Lingas, with three eyes, bearing in his hand the trident of Maheśa (Śiva), he dwelt in the three gates surrounded by his hosts. The Andhrian Vishṇu, attended by the Suras, having slain the illustrious Rākshasa Nishambhu, the son of Danu, after a conflict lasting for thirteen yugas, resided there with the ṛishis, on the banks of the Godāvarī. Since that time this sacred territory has been called Trilinga."

This is what Māmidi Vencaya has to say about the Grāmyam terms: "Terms which cannot be subjected to the rules of grammar, and in which an irregular increment or decrement of letters occurs, are called Grāmyam; they are corruptions, and are described in the following verse from the Appacavīyam (verse): 'Such Telugu words as are commonly used by rustic folk are known as Grāmyam terms: these lose some of their regular letters and are not found in poetry, unless, as in abusive language, the use of them cannot be avoided.'"

"In the preceding extracts" (Mr. Ellis proceeds) "the author, supported by due authority, teaches that, rejecting direct and indirect derivatives from the Sanscrit, and words borrowed from foreign languages, what remains is the pure native language of the land: this constitutes the great body of the tongue, and is capable of expressing every mental and bodily operation, every possible relation and existing thing; for, with the exception of some religious and technical terms, no word of Sanscrit derivation is necessary to the Telugu. This pure native language of the land, allowing for dialectic differences and variations of termination, is, with the Telugu, common to the Tamil, Cannaḍi (i.e. Canarese), and the other dialects of southern India: this may be demonstrated by comparing the Dēśyam terms contained in the list taken by Vencaya from the Appacavīyam with the terms expressive of the same ideas in Tamil and Cannaḍi. It has been already shown that the radicals of these languages mutatis mutandis are the same, and this comparison will show that the native terms in general use in each, also, correspond."

A comparative list of Telugu, Canarese, and Tamil words is then annexed, pp. 19–21, which I omit. Mr. Ellis then goes on (p. 21): "From the preceding extracts and remarks on the composition of the Telugu language, as respects terms, it results that the language may be divided into four branches, of which the following is the natural order. Dēśyam, or Atsu-Telugu, pure native terms, constituting the basis of this language, and, generally also, of the other dialects of southern India: Anya-dēśyam, terms borrowed from other countries, chiefly of the same derivation as the preceding: Tatsamam, pure Sanscrit terms, the Telugu affixes being substituted for those of the original language: Tadbhavam, Sanscrit derivatives, received into the Telugu direct, or through one of the six Pracrits, and in all instances more or less corrupted. The Grāmyam (literally the rustic dialect, from Grāmam, Sans. a village), is not a constituent portion of the language, but is formed from the Atsu-Telugu by contraction, or by some permutation of the letters not authorized by the rules of grammar. The proportion of Atsu-Telugu terms to those derived from every other source is one half; of Anya-dēśyam terms one tenth; of Tatsamam terms in general use three twentieths; and of Tadbhavam terms one quarter.

"With little variation, the composition of Tamil and Cannaḍi is the same as the Telugu, and the same distinctions, consequently, are made by their grammatical writers. The Telugu and Cannaḍi both admit of a freer adoption of Tatsamam terms than the Tamil: in the two former, in fact, the discretion of the writer is the only limit of their use; in the high dialect of the latter those only can be used which have been admitted into the dictionaries by which the language has long been fixed, or for which classical authority can be adduced; in the low dialect the use of them is more general; by the Brahmans they are profusely employed, more sparingly by the Sudra tribes. The Cannaḍi has a greater, and the Tamil a less, proportion of Tadbhavam terms than the other dialects; but in the latter all Sanscrit words are liable to greater variation than is produced by the mere difference of termination, for, as the alphabet of this language rejects all aspirates, expresses the first and third consonants of each regular series by the same character, and admits of no other combination of consonants than the duplication of mutes or the junction of a nasal and a mute, it is obviously incapable of expressing correctly any but the simplest terms of the Sanscrit. All such, however, in this tongue are accounted Tatsamam when the alteration is regular and produced only by the deficiencies of the alphabet.

"But though the derivation and general terms may be the same in cognate dialects, a difference of idiom may exist so great that in the acquisition of one no assistance in this respect can be derived from a knowledge of the other. As regards the dialects of southern India this is by no means the case: in collocation of words, in syntactical government, in phrase, and indeed in all that is comprehended under the term idiom, they are not similar only, but the same. To demonstrate this, and to show how far they agree with, or differ from, the Sanscrit," Mr. Ellis proceeds to give a series of comparative renderings of sentences in Sanskrit, and in the Tamil, Telugu, and Canarese. As, however, it would lengthen this Section too much to cite these details, I must refer the reader who is desirous of pursuing the subject further to Mr. Ellis's "Note" itself.

From Mr. Campbell's Introduction to his Grammar, pp. vii, viii,, ff., I supply some further particulars regarding the early cultivation of Telugu and the belief of the native grammarians as to the origin of their language:—"The most ancient Teloogoo grammarian of whom mention is made in the native books is the sage Kunva, who is said to have been the first that composed a treatise on the principles of the language. It is stated[143] that he executed this work by command of a king of Andhra, named Andhra Royoodoo,[144] son of Soochundra. . . .

[143] "Kunva said: 'He who speaks irreverently of my grammar, composed by the command of Andhra Vishnoo, shall be considered as guilty of irreverence to his priest.' Andhra Cowmudi." The original is as follows: Kaṇvas tu yathā āha Andhra-vishṇor anujñā-kṛitasya mad-vyākaraṇasyāvadrohī guru-drohīti.

[144] In regard to this king Mr. Campbell quotes the following passage, which precedes that cited in my former note, p. 428: Andhra-nātho Mahāvishṇur Nishambhu-danujāpahā | Purā Svayambhuvo Manoḥ kāle Kaliyuge Hariḥ | Kākule rāja-varyasya Suchandrasya tanūbhavaḥ | Abhavat sarva-devaiścha veshṭito loka-pūjitaḥ | "Formerly, in the time of Manu Svayambhū, in the Kali age, Hari, the lord of Andhra,

The works of Kunva, of Audharvan Achary, and of several other ancient grammarians, are not now to be found. All the treatises on Teloogoo grammar at present extant consist of Sanscrit commentaries on a series of concise apophthegms written in Sanscrit by a Bramin named Nannapa, or Nunniah Bhutt."

"It has been very generally asserted (says Mr. Campbell, p. xv, ff.,) and indeed believed, that the Teloogoo has its origin in the language of the Vedams. . . . I venture publicly to state my inquiries to have led me to a contrary conclusion; but I do so with the less hesitation as I find myself supported by the concurrent evidence of all native authors who have ever written on the subject of the Teloogoo language."

"In common with every other tongue now spoken in India, modern Teloogoo abounds with Sanscrit words; . . . nevertheless there is reason to believe that the origin of the two languages is altogether distinct." "In speaking the Teloogoo the Soodras use very few Sanscrit words: among the superior classes of Vysyas, and pretenders to the Rajah caste, Sanscrit terms are used only in proportion to their greater intimacy with the Bramins, and their books; and when we find even such Sanscrit words as these classes do adopt, pronounced by them in so improper and rude a manner as to be a common jest to the Bramins, who, at the same time, never question their pronunciation of pure Teloogoo words, I think we may fairly infer it to be probable at least that these Sanscrit terms were originally foreign to the language spoken by the great body of the people."

"Some native grammarians maintain that before the king Andhra Royadoo[145] established his residence on the banks of the Godavery, the only Teloogoo words were those peculiar to what is emphatically termed the pure Teloogoo, now generally named the language of the land, which they consider coeval with the people, or, as they express it, 'created by the god Brimha.' The followers of this prince, say they, for the first time began to adopt Sanscrit terms with Teloogoo the great Vishnu, the slayer of the Dānava Nishambhu, was born in Kākula as the son of the monarch Suchandra, and was attended by all the gods, as well as reverenced by all mankind."

[145] "This is the prince who is now worshipped as a divinity at Siccacollum on the river Krishna, and who was the patron of Kunva, the first Teloogoo grammarian."

terminations, and by degrees corruptions from the Sanscrit crept into the language, from the ignorance of the people respecting the proper pronunciation of the original words.[146] This would imply that the nation still retain some faint remembrance of those times in which their language still existed independent of the Sanscrit; and it is certain that every Teloogoo grammarian, from the days of Nunniah Bhutt to the present period, considers the two languages as derived from sources entirely distinct; for each commences his work by classing the words of the language under four separate heads, which they distinguish by the respective names of Dēshyumoo, language of the land; Tutsumumoo, Sanscrit derivatives; Tudbhuvumoo, Sanscrit corruptions; and Gramyumoo, provincial terms. [Compare the Grammar, p. 37.] To these, later authors have added Anya-dēshyumoo, foreign words."

"The words included in the first class, which I have denominated the language of the land, are . . . the most numerous in the language, and the model by which those included in the other classes are modified and altered from the different languages to which they originally belonged. The name by which they are designated implies 'that which belongs to the country or land;' it marks the words in question not as merely 'current in the country,' but as the growth and produce of the land."

"In the course of this work it will be obvious to the Sanscrit scholar that the declension of the noun by particles or words added to it,—the use of a plural pronoun applicable to the first and second persons conjointly—the conjugation of the affirmative verb—the existence of a negative aorist, a negative imperative, and other negative forms of the verb—the union of the neuter and feminine genders in the singular, and of the masculine and feminine genders in the plural, of the pronouns and verbs—and the whole body of the syntax, are entirely unconnected with the Sanscrit; while the Tamil and Karnataca scholar will at once recognize their radical connexion with each of these languages. The reader will find all words denoting the different parts of the human frame, the various sorts of food or utensils in common use among the natives, the several parts of their dress, the compartments of their dwellings, the degrees of affinity and consanguinity peculiar to them, in short, all terms expressive of primitive ideas or of things necessarily named in the earlier stages of society, to belong to the pure Teloogoo or language of the land. It is true (so mixed have the two languages now become) that Sanscrit derivatives or corruptions may, without impropriety, be occasionally used to denote some of these. This, however, is not common: the great body of Sanscrit words admitted into the language consists of abstract terms, and of words connected with science, religion, or law, as is the case, in a great degree, with the Greek and Latin words incorporated with our own tongue: but even such Sanscrit words as are thus introduced into Teloogoo are not allowed to retain their original forms; they undergo changes and assume terminations and inflections unknown to the Sanscrit, and, except as foreign quotations, are never admitted into Teloogoo until they appear in the dress peculiar to the language of the land."

[146] The following is the passage referred to, and it follows the one quoted in the note, p. 428: Tatratyās tatsamālāpās tatkālīnāḥ Harer bhaṭāḥ | Kālena mahatā sarvaṁ tatsamaṁ svalpa-buddhibhiḥ | Aśuddhochchāryamāṇaṁ sat tadbhavañcheti sammatam | Vikarsha-vyatyayābhyāñcha pādārdhokti viśeshataḥ | Tadbhavam iti kathyante kālena mahatā samāḥ | Brahmaṇā nirmitāḥ vāchaḥ pūrvam Andhreśitur Hareḥ | Achchāḥ iti cha kathyante sup-kṛid-dhātu-samanvitāḥ | "The adherents of Hari who dwelt there (in Trilinga, on the banks of the Godāvarī) at that time, spoke tatsama words. In process of time these tatsama words began to be incorrectly pronounced by simple persons, and were regarded as tadbhava. Tatsama words were denominated tadbhava from loss or substitution [of letters], or from being contracted a fourth or a half. Words, consisting of nouns, verbals, and roots, which were fashioned by Brahmā before the time of Hari, the lord of Andhra, are called achcha (pure)."

At the risk of some repetition, I shall add a few further observations, abstracted from Dr. Caldwell's grammar, pp. 29, ff., and 56, in proof of the radical differences between the Sanskrit and the southern languages:—"No person," he remarks, "who is acquainted with comparative philology, and who has compared the primitive and essential words, and the grammatical structure of the Dravidian languages with those of the Sanskrit, can imagine that the former have been derived from the latter by any known process of corruption or decomposition. We shall first advert to the Sanskrit element which has been introduced into these languages, and then revert to their non-Sanskrit or essential basis." First, the most recent infusion of Sanskrit words into the Tamil, Dr. Caldwell states (p. 56), "was effected by the great religious schools of Śankara Achāryya and Rāmānuja, from about the tenth to the fifteenth century A.D. The words then introduced (excepting a few points wherein change was unavoidable) are pure, unchanged Sanskrit. Secondly, at a period partly preceding and partly contemporaneous with the above, from the eighth to the twelfth or thirteenth century A.D., the Jainas introduced the largest proportion of the Sanskrit derivatives that are to be found in Tamil. This period of Jaina intellectual predominance was the Augustan age of Tamil literature, a period when the celebrated college of Madura flourished, and the Cuṛaḷ, the Chintāmani, and the classical vocabularies and grammars were written. The Tamilian writers of this period, from national feeling, and their jealousy of Brahminical influence, modified the Sanskrit words which they employed so as to accord with the euphonic rules of Tamil. Thus loka, 'world,' becomes ulagu[147] in Tamil; rājā, 'king,' becomes araśu; and ra, 'night,' (from rātri) becomes iravu. Nearly the whole of the Sanskrit words found in the Telugu, Canarese, and Malayālim belong to these two periods, or correspond mainly with the Sanskrit derivatives found in the Tamil of those two periods, especially the more recent. These derivatives are divided into the two classes of Tatsama, words identical or nearly so with pure Sanskrit, and Tadbhava, words which are borrowed from Sanskrit or the northern Prakrits, but have been to some degree modified in form. Thirdly, the Tamil contains many derivatives, belonging to the very earliest period of the literary cultivation of that language, which were probably introduced before Sanskrit words had begun to be imported into the other southern dialects. The Sanskrit of this period is more corrupted than that of the Jaina period, and the corruptions are of a different character. The Jainas altered the Sanskrit words in accordance with the euphonic rules of Tamil, whereas the words introduced in the earliest period have been changed in defiance of all rules; as the Sanskrit śrī, 'sacred,' into tiru. While, however, a certain proportion of Sanskrit words have been introduced into the Dravidian tongues in the ways just described,—it would be quite a mistake to suppose that these languages are derived from the Sanskrit in the same manner as [147] It is supposed by some scholars, from the fact that, in most passages of the Rigveda where the word "loka" occurs, it is preceded by "u," that the original form of the word was "uloka," and that in the texts in question "u" is not a particle separate from the word before which it stands. See Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. "loka."

the Hindī, Mahrattī, and other Gauḍa dialects. For (1) the non-Sanskrit portion of the Dravidian languages exceeds the Sanskrit portion nearly as much as in the North-Indian dialects the Sanskrit element exceeds the indigenous or non-Sanskrit element. (2) The pronouns and numerals of the Dravidian languages, their mode of inflecting verbs and nouns, the syntactic arrangement of their words—everything, in fact, which constitutes the essential structure of a language, are radically different from those of the Sanskrit. The contrary is the case with the vernacular dialects of the north, in which the pronouns, the numerals, and a large proportion of nouns and verbs, have been derived by adoption or gradual transformation from the older Prakrits and ultimately from the Sanskrit. (3) The true Dravidian words, which form the great majority in the southern vocabularies, are placed by the native grammarians in a different class from the Sanskrit derivatives, and are honoured with the epithets 'national words' and 'pure words.'" In support of this Dr. Caldwell refers to the passage already quoted in p. 433; and gives it as his opinion that Andhrarāya probably lived several centuries before the Christian era. "(4) In the uncultivated languages of the Dravidian stock, Sanskrit words are not at all, or very rarely, employed. And further, some of the cultivated Dravidian languages which do make use of Sanskrit derivatives are able to dispense with these altogether. This indeed is not the case with Telugu, Canarese, or Malayālim; but Tamil, the most highly cultivated, as regards its original structure, of all the Dravidian idioms, is not dependent on Sanskrit for the full expression of thought. In fact, the ancient or classical dialect of this language, the Shen-Tamil, in which nearly all the literature has been written, contains very little Sanskrit; and even differs chiefly from the colloquial dialect by the jealous care with which it rejects derivatives from Sanskrit and restricts itself to pure Dravidian elements. So much is this the case that a Tamil composition is regarded as refined and classical, not in proportion to the amount of Sanskrit it contains, but in proportion to the absence of Sanskrit. It is also worthy of remark that though the principal Telugu writers and grammarians have been Brahmans, in Tamil, on the contrary, few Brahmans have written any works of distinction, while the Tamilian Sudras have cultivated and developed their language with great ardour and success; and the finest compositions in the Tamil language, the Cuṛaḷ and the Chintāmani, are not only independent of the Sanskrit, but original in design and execution."

A few more specimens of Tamil words derived from Dr. Caldwell's book, passim, may be added to show how perfectly distinct they are from the Sanskrit, and North-Indian vernacular, words having the same sense, with which I shall presume the reader to be acquainted.

'NOUNS, ETC.

nān	I	kīṛ	below	illāl	a wife
nām	we	kāl	foot	vannān	a washerman
nī	thou	viṇ	sky	vannātti	a washerwonīr	we	kurudu	blindness	oru	one [man viral	finger	irumbu	iron	irandu	two kaḍal	the sea	iruppu	of iron	mūndru	three maṇal	sand	suvar	a wall	nāngu	four kuḍal	a bowel	ugir	finger-nail	eindu	five niṛal	shade	tamir	sweetness	aru	six sēval	a cock	kiṇaṛu	a well	eṛu	seven nilam	the ground	īral	the liver	eṭṭu [148]	eight mādu	an ox	tigil	a fright	onbadu	nine ādu	a sheep	tinggal	the moon	pattu	ten kuranju	a monkey	iruḷ	darkness	mupattu	thirty pagal	a day	toppu	a grove	mūru	a hundred kaṇ	the eye	magan	a son	munnūṛu	three hundred mūkku	the nose	magaḷ	a daughter	arubadu	sixty mēl	above	illān	a husband	eṛubadu	seventy

Tamil declension of manei, a house.

	Singular.	Plural.
NOM.	manei	maneigal
ACC.	maneiyei	maneigalei
INST.	maneiyāl	maneigalāl
CONJ.	maneiyoḍu	maneigaloḍu
DAT.	maneikku	maneigalukku
ABL.	maneiyilirundu	maneigalirundu
GEN.	maneiyin	maneigalin
LOC.	maneiyiḍattil	maneigaliḍattil
VOC.	maneiye	maneigaḷe

VERBS.

irrukkiṛadu	it is	tuḷir	to sprout
perugugiṛudu	it increases	pugaṛ	to praise
aḍangu	to be contained	magiṛ	to rejoice
aḍakku	to contain	suṛal	to whirl
āgu	to become	kuyil	to sound ākku	to make	tuval	to bend
nīngu	to quit	uruḷ	to roll
nīkku	to put away	kaḍukku	to suffer pain nirambu	to be full	tara	to give nirappu	to fill	vara	to come
vaḷar	to grow

[148] This word, it must be allowed, is not unlike the Hindī āṭh, eight.

"(5) The grammatical structure of the Dravidian languages is radically different from that of the Sanskrit; and proves that they are quite independent of that language." For further illustrations of this fact I must refer to Dr. Caldwell's Grammar, pp. 34, ff., and to the subsequent details given in that work, passim.

Sect. VII.—Results deducible from the preceding Sections.

In the last section I have supplied abundant evidence, derived from the best authorities, of the radical differences which exist between the languages of the south of India and the Sanskrit. The evidence which I have adduced is not (as will have been noticed) confined to the fact of those dissimilarities of roots and of structure which are sufficient to convince the comparative philologist that the Dravidian dialects have no original affinity with the Indo-European tongues. We have also the testimony of the native grammarians of the south to the same effect, as far as regards the Sanskrit (as we have seen, pp. 428, 433). The Telugu authors hold that the words of which their language is composed are of four classes, Deśya or Atsu (or aboriginal), Taṭsama (pure Sanskrit), Tadbhava (modified Sanskrit), and Grāmya (or rustic); and they consider that the first class, the Deśya or Atsu-Telugu words, constituted the primeval basis of the language before the introduction of Tatsama words in the time of King Andhrarāya,[149] and were created, with a complete grammatical structure of their own, by the god Brahmā. I am not in a position to cite any similar testimony on the part of the Tamil grammarians; but Mr. Ellis informs us (see p. 430) that the same distinctions are made by them as by the Telugu writers, and their idea of the relation of perfect independence in which their language stands to the Sanskrit is sufficiently shown by the fact that they regard that Tamil as the most pure and classical in which there is the smallest admixture of Sanskrit. It is therefore a fact, established beyond all doubt, that the Dravidian or South-Indian languages have, as regards their original and fundamental portion, no affinity with the [149] We have already seen, p. 436, that Dr. Caldwell considers this monarch to have flourished several centuries B.C. From the Vishṇu Purāṇa, iv. 24, it appears that an Andhra-bhṛitya dynasty of kings reigned in Magadha, whose accession Wilson (V.P., iv. 203, Dr. Hall's ed.) calculates to have dated from 18 years B.C. See also Lassen, Ind. Ant., ii. 755, 934.

Indo-European languages; and could not, by any modification known to comparative philologists, have been derived from any member of that family. There are certain processes and modes of mutation which are always discoverable when one language springs out of another. The words of the derivative tongue are always, or almost always, recognizable (even if considerably modified), in the new forms which they have assumed; and the steps of their transformation can be either exactly traced, or at least divined with certainty. But the primitive words and forms of the South-Indian dialects could not have issued from the Sanskrit by any known law of modification.

But if the Dravidian languages be of a stock altogether distinct from the Sanskrit, it follows, at least, as a primâ facie inference (see above, p. 267), that the races which originally spoke these two classes of languages must also have been distinct from one another in their descent, and could not have belonged to the same branch of the human family. Had the Dravidian nations been of Arian lineage, the whole of their languages must, in all probability, have more or less closely resembled either the older Prākṛits (described in the early part of this volume) or the later Hindī, Mahrattī, and Bengalī, all of which have evidently arisen, in great part, from the decomposition of Sanskrit. But such (as we have seen) is not the case in regard to those southern dialects.

And as the Dravidians now make use of languages which are radically distinct from Sanskrit, we cannot suppose it probable that the aboriginal part of the nation ever, at any former time, spoke a language which had any affinity to Sanskrit. Such a supposition would be at variance with the traditions preserved by the Telugu grammarians. And no race of mankind has ever been known which (except under the pressure of external influence) has lost, or abandoned, the language which it had derived from its forefathers, and of itself adopted a form of speech fundamentally different. But as we have no proof of any such external influence which could have led the Dravidians to exchange their original language for another, we must conclude that they have derived their existing dialects from their forefathers; and these their forefathers, as their speech was distinct from that of the ancestors of the Arians, must, as we have every reason to conclude, have been distinct in lineage also from the latter. But if the original Dravidian Indians of the south of India are of a different race from the Arian Indians, they could not, as Manu and the Mahābhārata assert (see above, p. 422), have been degraded Kshatriyas. And this conclusion is not in the slightest degree affected by the fact that a considerable portion of the existing Dravidian communities, though speaking the language of the south, belongs, or claims to belong, to the higher Arian castes. For if the southern Brāhmans, and some of the other castes, be (as in all probability they are) of Arian descent, more or less pure, this does not prove that the same is the case in regard to the great mass of the Dravidian population; for there is every reason to believe that those southern communities existed before the Arians had spread themselves to the south of the Vindhya mountains, and that the Brāhmans emigrated at a comparatively recent period from northern to southern India. On their arrival in the south, these Brāhmans no doubt spoke Sanskrit, or rather one of its derivative Prākṛits. But though, from their superior civilization and energy, they soon succeeded in placing themselves at the head of the Dravidian communities, and in introducing among them the Brahmanical religion and institutions, they must have been so inferior in numbers to the Dravidian inhabitants as to render it impracticable for them to dislodge the primitive speech of the country, and to replace it by their own language. They would therefore be compelled to acquire the Dravidian dialect of the province in which they settled; and in a generation or two, the majority of them would lose the vernacular use of the Prākṛit dialects which they had brought with them. This, however, might not prevent their retaining in use a good many words of Sanskrit origin. And as many of these Brāhmans, or subsequent immigrants from Northern India by whom they were subsequently reinforced, were, no doubt, learned men, and as their religious books were composed in Sanskrit, they would necessarily preserve their acquaintance with that sacred tongue, and with its literature; and would no doubt from time to time introduce fresh Sanskrit words into the local vernacular,[150] just as we see that English is continually enriched by [150] I may take this opportunity of adverting again to the probability already alluded to above, in note 67, p. 33, that Sanskrit has not only influenced the aboriginal tongues both of northern and southern India, but has also received some influence from one or from both of them in return. Mr. E. Norris observes (Journ. Roy. As. Soc., vol. xv., p. 19): "I will here express my conviction that the sounds the addition of new Greek and Latin words. The fact that many of the present inhabitants of the south of India are of Arian extraction affords, therefore, no reason for doubting that the primitive language of those provinces was entirely distinct from the Sanskrit, and that the population by whom that language was originally employed was totally unconnected with the Arian race. For even the existence of the limited proportion of non-Sanskrit words which we can discover (see above, p. 31, f.) in the Hindī, Mahrattī, and other northern dialects, seems sufficient to prove that there originally existed in northern India one or more races of non-Arian inhabitants who occupied the country before the immigration into Hindustan of the Sanskrit-speaking Āryas.

It now remains for me to inquire how this important fact that the great bulk of the population of the Dekhan is non-Arian in its descent, affects the results at which I had previously arrived, on the grounds set forth in the foregoing pages, in regard to the trans-Himalayan origin of the Arians, and their immigration into India from the north-west.

In the preceding chapter, we were led by a variety of considerations, called cerebral are peculiar to the Tartar or Finnish class of languages; that the really Indian [i.e. the aboriginal, or non-Arian—J.M.] languages are all of Tartar origin, or, at least, that their phonetic and grammatical affinities are Tartar; and that the writers of Sanskrit adopted the sound from their Indian neighbours." And Professor Benfey says (Complete Sanskrit Grammar, p. 20): "The mute cerebrals have probably been introduced from the phonetic system of the Indian aborigines into Sanskrit, in which, however, they have become firmly established." And at p. 73 of the same work he thus writes: "Sanskrit is a language of great antiquity and of wide diffusion. Long after it had ceased to be vernacularly spoken, it continued to be employed as the organ of culture and religion, and in this capacity it prevailed over extensive regions where there existed alongside of it, not merely a variety of dialects which had been developed out of it, but also several popular dialects which were originally quite distinct from it. From these circumstances it has resulted, not only that forms which have been admitted into the Prakrit dialects have been afterwards adopted into Sanskrit, but further, that words which were originally quite foreign to the Sanskrit have been included in its vocabulary. To separate these foreign words will only become possible when an accurate knowledge of the dialects which have no affinity with Sanskrit shall have been attained. But it is almost as difficult to distinguish those irregular forms which have originated in the dialects derived from Sanskrit and have been afterwards received into Sanskrit, from those forms which have arisen in Sanskrit itself; because, on the one hand, Sanskrit literature and its history are as yet but little known, and on the other hand, those phonetic changes, which attained their full power in the Prakrits, had already begun to work in Sanskrit itself. See also above, p. 141, f.

all pointing to the same result, to conclude that the Āryas had penetrated into India from the north-west. The facts which have been substantiated in the foregoing sections of the present chapter are in perfect harmony with that conclusion. These facts are (1) that the Āryas, when living in the Panjāb, found themselves in conflict with a class of enemies whom, in contrast to the men of their own race, they called Dasyus: (2) that the Āryas, after occupying the north-west of India, from the Indus to the Sarasvatī, began, at length, to move forward to the east and to the south: (3) that, still later, they crossed the Vindhya range, and commenced to coloniże the Dekhan, which had been previously occupied exclusively by savage or alien tribes: and now we learn (4) that the nations who at the present day inhabit the different provinces of the Dekhan, and who (with the exception of such part of the population as is descended from the later Arian immigrants, or has received an infusion of Arian blood) are the direct descendants of the original tribes, — speak a class of languages which are radically distinct from the Sanskrit. It may be expedient, however, to show somewhat more in detail the manner in which these circumstances corroborate, or at least harmonize with, the theory that the Arians are not autochthonous, but of trans-Himalayan origin, and that they immigrated into Hindustan from the north-west. First, then, the fact that at the dawn of Indian history, the earliest Vedic period, we find the Arian Indians inhabiting the Panjāb; then advancing gradually eastward along the southern border of the Himālaya from the Sarasvatī to the Sadānīrā, and spreading simultaneously, no doubt, over the southern parts of Doab, and in Behar; and at length crossing the Vindhya mountains into the Dekhan;—affords the strongest presumption that they penetrated into India from some quarter closely adjoining the north-western corner of that country, which was the starting-point of their onward course of conquest and colonization. Secondly: the indubitable fact that the Arians found, on advancing into the Dekhan, a people speaking a language radically different from their own, who had been in earlier occupation of the country; and the almost equally certain fact that they had previously encountered similar alien tribes in the Panjāb and in the Doab, add to the probability of the conclusion that they (the Arians) could not have belonged to the race by whom India was originally peopled. For, we must either suppose that both of these two races, the Arian and the non-Arian, grew up together in India, where we find them in contact from the earliest period, or that one or both of them have immigrated into that country from without. But it seems unlikely that two races whose languages differ so essentially, as those of the Arians and non-Arians do, and whose religions also were, no doubt, originally diverse, should have sprung up, and co-existed, in the same country, and under the same climatic influences. It is much more likely that one or both of them should have been foreign. The fact is that both have probably immigrated into India from the north-west;[151] but the evidence in favour of this supposition is far stronger in the case of the Arian, than in that of the non-Arian tribes. For, besides the proofs derived from the language of the Arians, which clearly connects them with the nations to the west of the Indus, we have the evidence of their complexion, which in the present day is fairer than that of the aborigines, and in earlier times was perhaps still more clearly distinguishable from the dark colour of the latter (see pp. 281, f., 310). But if neither of these two races was indigenous in India, and if they did not at first occupy any portion of that country contemporaneously with each other, which of them is most likely to have been the first possessor? We must, no doubt, conclude that the Dasyus or barbarous races and the Dravidians were the earliest occupants. For, as Lassen observes (see p. 309), we perceive evident traces of the Arians having severed asunder an earlier population, and driven one portion of it towards the northern and another towards the southern hills; and the inhabitants of the Vindhya range, and of the Dekhan, appear always as the weaker and retiring party who were driven back by the Arians. And we cannot ascribe to the non-Arian tribes the power of forcing themselves forward through the midst of an earlier Arian population to the seats which they eventually occupied in the centre and south of the peninsula: for the Arians were from the beginning a more powerful and civilized people than their adversaries, and from a very early period have held them in subjection. It is indeed objected by Mr. Curzon (see above, p. 301), that these rude so-called aboriginal tribes may have been descended from some of the barbaric hordes who under the name of Śakas, Hūṇas, etc., are mentioned by Sanskrit writers as having invaded India, and some of whom, after their defeat, may have taken refuge in the hills and forests of Hindustan. But I apprehend that this explanation will not meet the facts of the case. We can have no assurance, that such legends as that regarding the Sakas, which is quoted in the first volume of this work (pp. 486, ff.), even if they have any historical foundation, can be referred to any very remote period. For the time at which the Indo-Scythians, who were repelled by Vikramaditya, made themselves masters, and retained possession, of the western frontiers of India, cannot be placed much earlier than the commencement of the Christian era. (See Lassen's Ind. Antiq. vol. ii. 365, ff., 398, 408, 409.) But the traces which we discover in Indian literature of the existence of the Dasyus are (as we have seen from the various Vedic texts cited above) much older than this period.

[151] In the App., note O, I shall quote the views of the Rev. Dr. Caldwell and other writers, regarding the origin and relations of the different non-Arian tribes.

In conclusion, I return to the point from which I started at the commencement of this volume; and, as the result of the preceding investigations, repeat the following propositions: First, that the Hindus of the superior castes are sprung at least partially from the same race with the Indo-European nations of the west: Secondly, that as the parent race appears to have had its origin in Central Asia, the ancestors of the Indian branch of it could not have been indigenous in Hindustan, but must have immigrated into that country from the north-west.

APPENDIX.

NOTE A.—Page 187, last line.

On this subject Professor H. Kern remarks in his recent dissertation, "Indische theorieën over de Standenverdeeling" (Indian Theories on the Division of Classes): "That mention is sometimes made [in the Zendavesta] of three, and at other times of four [classes], proves of itself nothing whatever. The case may once have stood on the same footing as the mention sometimes of three, sometimes of four, Vedas. Here also some have thought to discover a contradiction, and have drawn from it the most adventurous conclusions. When the Hindus speak of the three Vedas, they mean that there is a triple Veda, consisting (1) of recited verses (rich), (2) of verses sung (sāman) and (3) of formulas in prose (yajush), all the three words being comprehended under the name of "mantra." Altogether independent of the three sorts of mantras is the number of the collections of them. Though there were a hundred collections of mantras, the Veda is, and remains, threefold. It happens by accident that the Hindus possess four such collections (and in a certain sense, five), which usually bear the name of the Sanhitās of the Rigveda, Sāmaveda, Yajurveda (white and black), and Atharvaveda. This does not interfere with the fact that the Atharvaveda is almost entirely a Rigveda, though the larger collection is regarded as the Rigveda in the most eminent sense, whilst the Yajurveda only in part consists of yajush-verses. It does not need to be proved that we must know the principle on which any distribution proceeds before we can deduce any conclusion from numbers." p. 13, f.

NOTE B.—Page 191, line 22.

In his dissertation quoted in the preceding note, pp. 3, f., Professor Kern says of the Atharvaveda: "Sometimes it is difficult to guess what is meant by older and younger. For example, the Atharvaveda is said to be younger than the Rigveda: that has become a sort of article of faith, which some one uninitiated believer receives on the authority of critics; whilst another, again, copies with confidence what has been asserted by the former. Now about half the hymns in the Atharvaveda are, with the exception of an occasional varietas lectionis, the same as in the Rigveda, so that the Atharvaveda cannot be younger than the Rigveda. And it could only be asserted that the remaining portion of the A.V. is of later date, when grounds for this position, derived from language, versification, and style, etc., had been adduced. But, so far as I know, no one has ever even attempted to seek for such grounds. I will show, by a single example, that even in the remaining portion of the A.V. to which I have referred, somewhat may very well be found which, without the least doubt, was known to the Indians in the oldest Vedic period, and even still earlier, though the Rigveda makes no mention of it. In A.V. v. 22, 5, 7, 14, the Bahlīkas (or Balhikas) are named. As Balkh was conterminous with the most ancient abodes of the Arians in India, the Bahlīkas cannot possibly have been unknown to the oldest Indians. And yet we find in the Rigveda no traces of those neighbours with whom they were constantly coming into contact, whilst there are such traces in the Atharvaveda."

I am unable to agree with Professor Kern when he alleges that no one has ever attempted to seek for proofs of the posteriority of the A.V. to the R.V. from differences in language, versification, style, etc., between the two, although such proofs have not always been stated in detail. See the remarks quoted from Professor Whitney in p. 190, above. In his Dissertations on the Literature and History of the Veda, p. 12, Prof. Roth writes as follows: "In the pieces which are common to it (the A.V.), with the Rik, it allows itself a great many transpositions and alterations, which further appear to be in most cases of an arbitrary character. In the sections which are peculiar to it, the language approaches to the flowing mode of expression belonging to a later period, though it has the grammatical forms of the older hymns. Between it and the Rik, there subsists, further, the peculiar relation that the latter too, towards the end (in the last anuvāka of the tenth maṇḍala), contains a considerable number of sections which bear completely the character of the Atharva-hymns, and are also actually reproduced in the latter. In addition to these general marks of a later origin of this Veda, we find also a number of special characters, of which I here adduce one: The hymns of the Rik celebrate in various ways the deliverances which Indra, the Aśvins, and other gods had vouchsafed to the forefathers. The names of the persons so rescued, however, lie beyond the times of the authors themselves, and a Vedic rishi is seldom found to be mentioned. But in the fourth book of the Atharva there occurs, for example, a hymn in which Mitra and Varuṇa are invoked so to protect the suppliant,—not as they had preserved, for instance, Dadhyach, Rebha, Pedu, and others, but Jamadagni, Vasiṣṭha, Medhātithi, Purumīlha, etc., all these being names of men whom the tradition makes to be composers of hymns in the Rigveda. It thus appears to admit of no doubt that the Atharva has not only been collected later than the Rik, but is also of later origin."

In his Dissertation on the A.V.[1] pp. 22, ff., the same author writes: "If I have above designated the A.V. as a sort of supplement to the R.V., it is already implied that I regard this collection as later. But it would be a useless undertaking to try to determine its date even approximately, as our information regarding the dates of particular Indian writings is far too uncertain. For the rest, this Veda must, without hesitation, be reckoned as part of the old literature. I shall be able in another place to collect, in the form of a survey, the manifold proofs which may be drawn from the contents of the A.V., to establish the assertions that the greater part of its formulas and hymns are later than the hymns of the R.V., and that this collection has been made subsequently to the other. Here I will confine myself to the single, but quite certain proof, that derived from language.

"With a view to the preparation of the Sanskrit Lexicon, the words of all the Vedic Sanhitās have been completely collected by myself and my co-editor of the A.V., Mr. W. D. Whitney. I can, therefore, state, with tolerable exactness, the number of times that particular words occur in these different Sanhitās. Generally regarded, the language of the A.V. shows itself to be the same which is peculiar to the other Vedas, and thus as very notably distinguished from the so-called classical, or more properly, common, Sanskrit. The A.V. also has very many peculiar Vedic forms, i.e. forms which belong to the old speech; and yet when an opportunity is afforded of comparing parallel passages of the R.V., there may not seldom be observed (a) the exchange of the old form for one which prevailed at a later period, e.g. of the absolutive tvi or tvāya for tvā, which alone was in common use at a later period: similarly, (b) a treatment of the hiatus in verse which shows how gradually the ancient usage ceases (see the Sanskrit Lexicon, s.v. iva). But the tendency towards the later linguistic usage is most of all visible from a lexical point of view" (i.e. that which regards not the forms of words, but the words themselves). "This is shown most strikingly in the use of many particles: just as Homer, who is so rich in these small words, is in this respect distinguished from later authors, so is the R.V. distinguished from later books, and already from the A.V. Thus, in those pieces which are peculiar to it, the latter has the particle itthā but once, whilst it occurs more than sixty times in the R.V. So, too, it employs the particle it much more rarely, whilst im, which is found about two hundred times in the R.V., is not used in it at all. On the other hand, the R.V. does not at all know the later form evam, but makes use of the older eva, whilst the A.V. has evam more than forty times, but (and here there may be a trace of a revision of the text) only from the eighth book onward.

[1] Abhandlung über den Atharwaveda, Tübingen, 1856.

"In the same way, certain main conceptions of the older language appear but seldom in the A.V. This case, it is true, is different from that of those particles. These small words may occur anywhere in a book, whatever its contents may be, provided only that it agrees in point of form with another book which is compared with it, which is the case here. Nouns and verbs, on the contrary, cannot occur with equal frequency in books of which the contents are different. Yet even here a comparison between the R.V. and A.V. may be instituted with an approach to correctness. "Ṛita," the fundamental conception in the religious system of the Vedas, could not certainly be so prominent in the A.V. as in the R.V.; yet it must surprise us that this word, with its compounds, is found so very seldom in the former, whilst it is met with more than three hundred times in the latter. So too ṛikvan, which the R.V. has twenty times, is wanting in the A.V.; ūti, which is found in above a hundred places in the former, occurs in only six or seven texts of the latter. Kāru, which the R.V. has forty-five times, is met with only once in the A.V. So, too, the latter has ukthya only once, the former about forty times.

"The old much-employed word ish is met with very rarely in the A.V., and nearly always only in connexion with ūrj; udan but once; the adjective riśhva is used forty-eight times in the R.V. and only once in the A.V.; the old adverbial form uruyā is unknown to the A.V., whilst in the R.V. we find it perhaps twenty times. The denominative verb urushyati, which would have suited perfectly the class of conceptions prevalent in the A.V., is met with there only twice, whilst the R.V. has it thirty-four times. The ancient verb kan, which was afterwards entirely lost, is wanting also in the A.V., while we encounter it nearly forty times in the R.V. On the other hand, the A.V. is very liberal in its use of the verb kalp, which was so much applied in later times, whilst the R.V. has it only once in the first pine, i.e., the ancient, books; although in the tenth book it certainly uses it fourteen times. The word indriya, which occurs indeed very often in the R.V., but never in its later ordinary signification, of "sense," has the latter meaning in the A.V.: in the nineteenth book it is used for the five senses.

"These examples might be increased at pleasure. I have chosen them from the letters already worked out in the Lexicon, in order that an opportunity may be afforded of examining the proofs of them; and they will abundantly suffice for our purpose. It will be observed how the vocabulary of the A.V. approaches to that of the later period of language, of which, so far as we yet know, the Brāhmaṇas, the second class of Vedic books, are the earliest productions. But from this fact it must not be immediately concluded that the hymns preserved in the A.V. are all of them later than those of the R.V., but we must, at the same time, keep in view that in the case of those among them which perhaps date from as early a linguistic period, either revision, or daily usage, may have stripped off the antiquated words. For, according to my view, it is not to be denied that the A.V. contains many pieces which, both by their style of expression, and by their ideas, are shown to be contemporary with the older hymns of the R.V."

I am indebted to Professor Aufrecht for the following further detailed proofs of the same point. In the parts of the A.V., which consist of entire hymns common to it and the R.V., there are found not only whole verses, but portions of verses and phrases, which have been borrowed from the R.V., and adapted to certain purposes different from those which they served in the original. That these verses, portions of verses, and phrases, have been taken from the R.V. by the A.V., and not vice versâ, from the latter by the former, is shown by the context in each case. It is further to be remarked, that several verses which occur not in the text of the R.V., but only in the Khilas or supplementary hymns of an evidently late character interpolated in it, are found in the A.V. Compare Prof. Müller's Preface to his Rigveda, vol. ii., p. xxxiv., and vol. iv., preface, pp. 13 and 19, lines 12, ff., from the bottom. The Rātrisūkta, one of these Khilas, [printed in the 4th volume of this work, p. 424], is partly found in the A.V. This does not preclude the possibility that a few hymns, especially the magical ones in books i.–ix. of the A.V., but no others, may be as old as certain hymns of the tenth maṇḍala and others of the R.V., which have been attached to the end of other maṇḍalas, such as i. 191, and the last two hymns of the second maṇḍala; or that some ideas of the A.V. may be as ancient as any in those parts of the R.V.

The Rigveda, though the oldest collection, does not necessarily contain everything that is of the greatest age in Indian thought or tradition. We know, for example, that certain legends bearing the impress of the highest antiquity, such as that of the Deluge, appear first in the Brāhmaṇas.

Descending to particulars, we find a great difference between the two Sanhitās.

i. Religion.

Do the religious ideas in the A.V. stand at the same point as in the R.V.? or is there a progress towards a systematization of religion; Do we find traces of a development of polytheism, or of an advance towards monotheism? Surely the latter.

1. Vishṇu. The A.V. contains no hymn addressed to this god. He is mentioned merely as one of the οἱ πολλοί, or as a lokapāla (guardian of one of the regions of the world), iii. 27, 5; xii. 3, 59.

2. Varuṇa. The A.V. has a hymn to this god, iv. 16, remarkable in some respects (which was employed as an oath to be taken by a witness),[2] but every line of it affords evidence of being copied from the R.V. There is also another hymn, no doubt based upon some old tradition, in which Varuṇa is represented as giving a cow to Atharvan, but apparently spun out with the view of intimating to the faithful that the magician (Atharva-priest) should be rewarded by a donation of cows. For the rest, Varuṇa is treated very much as Vishṇu.

3. Indra. No particular hymn is addressed to him; no feats, no enemies, of his are mentioned beyond such as are found in the Rigveda.

4. The same is the case in regard to Agni. And, further, he no longer appears as the ever youthful mediator between gods and men, but his fire has become formally divided into the Dakshiṇāgni, the Pūrvāgni, the Gārhapatya, etc.

From all this it is clear that the A.V. has no fresh hymns contemporary with older ones of the R.V. or exhibiting distinct and original features of the most ancient gods, but in so far as they are concerned, builds upon the materials supplied by the R.V., while it introduces new and more modern characteristics leading in the direction of, and ultimately developed into, the latter mythology. In fact, the principal gods of the R.V. have sunk down to the same level, which they occupy in the later epic poems, and a new god, Bhava-Śarva, has arrived at supremacy.

The A.V. has, however, besides the last-named Bhava and Śarva (xi. 2, 1, and elsewhere), who occur nowhere in the R.V., its peculiar gods, not such as the bright elementary powers of the R.V., but serpents,[3] sprung from fire, from plants, from the waters, from lightning (tebhyaḥ sarpebhyo namasā vidhema | "Let us with reverence worship these serpents"), x. 4, 23; viii. 8, 15; viii. 10, 29 (where Takshaka is mentioned), etc.; and it has hymns to Night, xix. 47–50;[4] and

[2] In the actual application, in particular cases, of the formula in verse 9, tais tvā sarvair abhi shyāmi pāśair asāv āmushyāyaṇa amushyāḥ putra, "with all these bonds I bind thee, so and so, son of such and such a man, and of such and such a woman," the real name of the person was substituted for the words āmushyāyaṇa, and a definite purpose in the verse is thus evident. Comp. A.V. x. 5, 36, 44; xvi. 7, 8; xvi. 8, 1.

[3] The R.V. has sarpa, "serpent," only once, x. 16, 6.

[4] It is true that we have the same in R.V. x. 127; but in the A.V. the adoration is more decided.

pays worship to cows, xii. 4 and 5. On the other hand, the A.V. shows a progress towards monotheism in its celebration of Brahman, Brahma jyeshṭham, Skambha (see the 5th volume of this work, pp. 378, ff.); and has hymns to Kāla and Kāma, divinities unknown to the R.V. (See vol. v., pp. 402, ff.)

ii. Poetry, Imagination.

Of poetical sentiment, or imagination (such, for example, as breathes in the beautiful hymns to Ushas in the R.V.), the A.V. has next to nothing. The reader feels himself in a dark suffocating atmosphere, surrounded by domineering priests, who would sternly repress any flights of levity.

iii. Ritual.

The development in this department becomes clearer and clearer. Compare terms such as agnishṭoma, anuvāka, prayāja, anuyāja,[5] (i. 30, 4), mahānāmnī, mahāvrata, rājasūya, vājapeya, agnihotra, ekarātra, dvirātra, chatūrātra, pancharātra, etc. (x. 7, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11): see also xix. 22 and 23. In xiii. 3, 6, the three words of the sacrifice (yajnasya trayo 'ksharāḥ), meaning, it is to be supposed, such directions as yakshat, vashaṭ, svāhā, are mentioned. The whole 20th book is compiled for certain definite sacrificial purposes, which are very minutely stated in the A.V. Sūtras.

iv. Speculation.

In the A.V. we encounter the terms (a) nāma and rūpa, "name," and "form," which occur so constantly in the Brāhmaṇas and Vedantic literature; (b) pīlumatī dyauḥ, "a heaven formed of atoms," (xviii. 2, 48); (c) kshiti and akshiti, "transitoriness," and "eternity" (xi. 7, 25); (d) the three guṇās, x. 8, 43 (comp. viii. 2, 1, and the fifth volume of this work, pp. 309, note 468, and 377, note 562); (e) the conception of sleep as being neither life nor death, vi. 46, 1, which is of a modern character.

v. Language.

A few points of difference in this respect between the R.V. and the A.V. may be mentioned, to which a multitude of others could easily be added. The root kṛi has in the R.V. only the form kṛiṇoti, and kuru occurs only in x. 145, 2. The A.V. has kṛiṇoti, but karoti quite as often. The R.V. uses the root sas, and not so commonly svap, for "to sleep." The A.V. has sas only once, iv. 1, 6, and in verses that are borrowed from the R.V. it substitutes svap, e.g. iv. 5, 5, 6. The R.V. has only the form dyut, "to shine;" the A.V. has this, but also jyut, "to shine," vii. 16, 1; iv. 37, 10. The R.V. has never tadā for "then," and tadānīṁ only in x. 129, 1 (this being one of the points insisted upon for proving the comparatively modern origin of the hymn), while the A.V. has both forms. The use of tva . . . tva, "the one . . . the other," is common in R.V., whilst the A.V. has the phrase only once; viii. 9, 9, and there only in what appears to be an imitation of R.V. x. 71, 7, 8. Divākara, "the sun," in A.V. iv. 10, 5; xiii. 2, 34, is a word which has quite a modern sound. Na, in the sense of "like," "as," disappears in the A.V. gradually, as also the particle it, both so very common in the R.V. Dṛiś, "to see," of which in the R.V. we have the forms dṛiśeyam, darśam, dṛiśan, adṛiśran, dṛiśāna, never appears in the A.V., except, as in later Sanskrit, in the perf., etc.; for jyog eva dṛiśema sūryam, in i. 31, 4, is an imitation of R.V. i. 24, 1, 2, etc., etc.

[5] These two terms occur also in R.V. x. 51, 8, f.

vi. Miscellaneous terms indicating a more modern stage.

Dvīpin, "a leopard," occurs in iv. 8, 7; vi. 38, 2; xix. 49, 4. (The animal comes from the dvīpa, "island," perhaps Ceylon). Śyāmaṁ lohitam ayas, "real (black) iron and brass," xi. 3, 7. Imāni panchendriyāṇi manaḥshashṭhāni, "these five senses and the mind, manas, a sixth." Names of seasons: grīshma (R.V. only in the Purusha-sūkta). Kali, one of the dice, vii. 109, 1. Āchārya, brahmachārin,[6] xi. 5, 1. A Śrotriya (a priest who has studied the Veda) can alone be a guest, ix. 6, 37. Dhana, which in the R.V., especially in old hymns, has the sense of "prize," appears in the A.V. chiefly (only rarely meaning "a stake,") in its later sense of property, wealth, money. The form dharma occurs in the A.V. xi. 7, 17; xii. 5, 7; xviii. 3, 1. In R.V. the word appears only in the form dharman. Naga, "mountain," is found in xix. 8, 1; it signifies "not going," and is a perfectly modern word, as modern as namura, xiii. 4, 46, "immortality," for the older amṛita. Puṇḍarīkaṁ navadvāram, i.e. the body "with the nine openings," x. 8, 43. Nārakaṁ lokam, "hell," occurs, xii. 4, 36, whilst there is nothing of the kind in the R.V. Panchāṅguri (the five-fingered) "man," is modern. Parameshṭhin, of a supreme deity (often with Prajāpati, iv. 11, 7; viii. 5, 10; ix. 3, 11; or different from him, viii. 7, 1), very frequently occurring, is not found a single time in the R.V. Paś, "to see," has, in the R.V., often its oldest form spaś, but never in A.V. except in three passages that are taken from the R.V. Paśupati, applied to Bhava, e.g. xi. 2, 28; xi. 6, 9; xv. 5, 3, never occurs in the R.V. Māgadha, "a bard," xv. 2, 1–4, as in later times.

[6] Brahmachārin occurs also in R.V. x. 109, 5.

In conclusion, it may be mentioned that the very fact that the A.V. mentions countries like Magadha, Anga, Bahika, v. 22, is a proof that it was composed at a time when the geographical knowledge of the Hindus had become enlarged. Strabo knew more of the world than Herodotus; therefore he was later.

On this subject, a learned correspondent writes: "No one will affirm that every single piece in the A.V. is more recent than every part of the R.V. But every one must see that the great bulk of the R.V. is of a much older character than the bulk of the A.V.; and that the collection of the pieces making up the latter is later than in the case of the R.V. It follows from this, that any one who seeks to represent any part of the A.V. as older than any part of the R.V., must prove this as the exception, and cannot be allowed to throw on his opponent the burden of establishing the contrary. For the rest, it will not aid us much to propound such general rules. In every individual given case, a sufficient number of material proofs will be found to relieve us from such general discussions."

Remarks on Professor Kern's conclusion regarding the antiquity of castes.

The present volume does not treat of caste; but as that is the subject of my first volume, it appears necessary that I should take this opportunity of adverting to Professor Kern's opinions on the antiquity of that institution, as set forth in the dissertation above quoted, which was read before the Royal Academy of Sciences at Amsterdam on the 13th of March, 1871. First of all I must briefly state the author's positions, and the grounds on which he bases them. He refers, first (p. 6) to the fact that the four castes or classes (Standen) are mentioned in the Purusha-sūkta, which, however, some scholars regard as one of the most recent in the collection of the Rigveda, whilst others maintain the exact contrary. Neither party, he considers, have proved their assertions. He himself regards the antiquity of the hymn as a matter of indifference, not in itself, but in its bearing upon the question of the antiquity of classes. After quoting and explaining the hymn, he proceeds (p. 8): "We may confidently ask whether the expressions it contains either in themselves, or in connexion with the whole, furnish the least ground even for guessing that the poet intended to register, or to recommend, a new institution? In truth, if anything is plain in the whole poem, it is this, that in the estimation of the author, the division into classes was as old as the sun and moon, as Indra and Agni, as the horse and the cow, in short, as old as the creation. Before such a symbolical theory could arise, all remembrance of the historical origin of classes must have been lost. How is this affected by the question whether the Purusha-sūkta is the latest, or the earliest, hymn in the Rigveda?"

He adds (p. 8): "We are ignorant how long a period intervened between the institution of classes and the composition of the hymn. As little is it shown by the quotation whether all the legal prescriptions regarding the classes were then applied, or even existed theoretically; and we are also left in uncertainty whether, besides the four principal divisions, the intermediate classes also were recognized. But we must of necessity conclude that classes were hereditary, because the once effected division of Purusha is represented as something permanent." Dr. Kern goes on to remark (p. 9) that we must not expect to derive from the hymns a complete picture of the contemporaneous Indian institutions; or persuade ourselves that our conjectures founded on their scanty data possess the certainty of established facts. He had previously said in p. 3, that the argumentum a silentio has been sometimes abused in treating of geographical questions affecting the Vedic Indians.

Secondly, Professor Kern inquires (pp. 9, ff.) whether we find in the Zend Avesta any reference to the existence of the same classes as we meet with in India, as he considers that such reference would afford probable proof of the existence of this division into classes before the separation of the Perso-Arians and the Indo-Arians. This question he answers in the affirmative. He finds that in Yaśna xix.

46, four classes are mentioned: Āthrava, Rathaeshtāo, Vāśtriya-fshuyañṭ, and Hūiti [words which are rendered in Neriosengh's Sanskrit translation by ācārya, kshatriya, kuṭumbin, and prakṛitikarman, i.e. "religious teacher, kshatriya, householder (or peasant), and workman."] On this he remarks, p. 11, "It is thus established that according to the Zend Avesta the first class (pishtra) consists of teachers or priests, of Brāhmans, the second of Knights, Kshatriyas, exactly as in India. Consequently a division of the nobility into Brahmans and Kshatriyas, and the precedence of the former over all the classes, is not the work of the Indian Brahmans." In like manner, Professor Kern considers (p. 11) that the third class, Vāśtriya fshuyañṭ, corresponds to the Indian Vaiśya, being composed of the same elements; and that both designations are very ancient; and further (p. 12) that the fourth class, Hūiti, is that of workmen, servants, and petty traders, and answers to that of the Śūdras. The word pishtra (which Professor Spiegel renders by "trade") Professor Kern regards (p. 13) as probably synonymous with varṇa, the Sanskrit word for caste; and adds: "If we observe that a few lines above the passage which has been cited, it is said, Yaśna xix. 44; 'This word [command] which Ahura Mazda [the creator] has spoken embraces four classes [pishtra],' I think we may assert that there is an unmistakable correspondence in the manner in which the sacred books of the Iranians and of the Indians speak of the institution of classes, although here, as in every other case, the Hindu expresses himself in much more metaphorical language than his kinsman in Iran."

Prof. Kern then proceeds (p. 13) to combat the opinion expressed in a note on the passage by Prof. Spiegel, which I quote at length: "Four trades are known only to the later Iranian State. Older pieces of the Yaśna (comp. xiv. 5, ff.), as of the Vendidad, unequivocally recognize only three. The word by which the fourth class is here designated (Hūiti) is an entirely peculiar one, and does not occur elsewhere. There is no ground for assuming that the remark respecting the fourth class is here interpolated; and consequently the piece before us is shown to be a tolerably late one." Professor Kern demurs to this assertion without proof. He adds that nothing is proved by the circumstance that in some places four, in others only three classes are mentioned; as (p. 14) the three classes referred to in Yaśna xiv. 9, teachers, knights, and peasants, are spoken of as "the greatest powers of the Mazdayasnian faith;" and that even in India, when reference is made to fellowship in religious worship, the three superior classes alone are mentioned. The same may have been the case in Bactria. Prof. Kern also remarks that four classes are referred to in Vendidad xiii. 125, the fourth being denoted by the word "vaeśu," rendered by Professor Spiegel, "villager." On the preceding grounds Professor Kern maintains that the fourfold division of classes is older than the most ancient Indian documents.

In a communication with which he has favoured me, Prof. Kern maintains that among all Indo-Germanic nations, classes were hereditary at the time when these nations appeared on the stage of history. It is, he says, a novelty to him to learn that anywhere amongst the Indo-Germans of yore, the classes could intermarry without any limit. The Bactrians, it appears to him, were the most exclusive of all the Indo-Germans in their notions about intermarriage, for the Magi of old, and the Parsis of modern times, proceed to such lengths in their apprehension of intermingling pure with impure blood, that they esteem marriages between the nearest relatives to be meritorious. However that may be, he asks (after referring to the Iranian subdivision of classes as above specified), whether the bare facts of the case such as we know them at present, lead to the conclusion that it was only in India that the Brāhmans acquired or usurped a supremacy which did not belong to them before they came to India? This question he finds himself obliged to answer in the negative. The further question, how far the four castes as a legal institution were common to all the Arian nations? Professor Kern leaves undecided, only drawing attention to the fact that hereditary classes with prescriptions regarding marriage, etc., among all the Indo-Germans, deviate less from the character of the existing Hindu castes in proportion as we extend our view further back into the history of the past.

A learned friend has favoured me with some remarks on Dr. Kern's dissertation, of which I will give the substance, with some additions of my own.

The decisive objection against these assertions is, that if castes had existed from the earliest times, they must have been everywhere mentioned in the oldest Indian records. Just as the later books are full of allusions to them usque ad nauseum, so must in that case the ancient texts also have constantly referred to them. But now the Purusha-sūkta alone takes notice of them. This is strange. Professor Kern considers that the argumentum a silentio may be abused, but in this case its application seems to be perfectly legitimate. For the rest, it should not be necessary to prove to a Sanskrit scholar that this hymn is not old. Does it not read as much like a set of verses from the Mahābhārata as like one of the older hymns?[7] If that be not admitted, and special proofs be required, it is sufficient to draw attention to the fact that the words "vaiśya," "śūdra," "pṛishadājya," "sādhya" (v. 7), occur only in this hymn (verse 16 is here, as also in R.V. i. 164, 50, evidently a subsequent addition); and that in v. 14, we have "loka" not "u loka" (see the St. Petersburg Lexicon, s.v.)

Professor Kern urges that in the estimation of the author of the Purusha-sūkta castes are as old as the sun and moon. True; but what does that prove? Is not in India everything as old? Did not the first man compose the well-known institutes of law?

Professor Kern says (p. 10) that the same classes are found among all kinds of nations. This tells more against, than for, him. In these cases it is natural classes, and not unnatural castes, that we find. And if the writer had made this distinction clear to himself, and had sought in his texts for the characteristics of each, he would have seen that there were no grounds for the assertion he has made. For we all know that wherever human society has attained to a settled order, it has become divided into classes; and that privileged orders have everywhere existed. But the transformation of classes into castes is peculiar to India (even in Egypt there were no castes in a strict sense). But this transformation did not cause itself. Did, for instance, the Vaiśya impose on himself the restriction that he was not to learn, and to practise, the functions of a priest, not to marry the daughter of a Brāhman, etc.? All this necessarily arose from a legislation which from small beginnings was continually pushing its inroads further and further; that is, it took place artificially. With this process should be compared the privileges which the Romish Church has partly striven after, and partly attained, for its Brāhmans. And who but the Brāhmans themselves were the authors of this legislation?

[7] This does not of course mean that the Purusha-sūkta is contemporaneous with the Mahābhārata; and is not in some respects of a more archaic character than even the oldest parts of the latter. The rules of Sandhi, which were in force at the time when the Mahābhārata was composed, are not observed in the Purusha-sūkta (see above p. 161, end of note 181); and neuter plural forms like viśvā in verse 3 of the latter are no longer used in the former. In the opinion of my correspondent, the tenth maṇḍala of the R.V. is properly a gleaning of hymns supplementary to the preceding books, and contains compositions in regard to the authorship of which no tradition had been preserved. That such a "gleaning" should contain comparatively recent poems need occasion no surprise.

"The great point, I repeat, is to distinguish between the natural classes or orders, and castes, which cannot have arisen naturally, but are artificial.

"The solution of the question at issue cannot turn on the degree of strictness with which the classes were separated from each other. We have long been acquainted with the fact that classes and races—like nations—were everywhere far more rudely held asunder in ancient than in modern times. It is thus perfectly natural that marriages between persons of different classes were also rare. Let it be recollected what a gulf divided the patricians and plebeians in Rome. Hence the greatest weight is to be attached to an exact definition of the conception of caste. I believe it may be asserted that it is only in India that the conclusions resulting from this conception have been completely drawn, by regarding each caste as a description of men sui generis, as a separate divine creation.

"I am not aware on what evidence Professor Kern founds his opinion that the Bactrians were the most exclusive of all the Indo-Germans in regard to intermarriage. On this subject I would draw attention to the passage of Herodotus, iii. 31, where the marriage of Cambyses with his sister is spoken of at length. What the later Iranian books say of the so-called Khetudas can prove nothing in regard to ancient times. The Avesta gives, so far as I understand of it, no sort of prescription about the marriage of relatives; and the counsellors of Cambyses said to him quite correctly νόμον οὐδένα ἐξευρίσκειν, ὃς κελεύει ἀδελφεῇ συνοικέειν ἀδελφεόν. We must first be told what the word qaêtvadatha (see Justi's Lexicon, p. 86), in the few passages of the Avesta where it occurs, actually signifies. Justi himself understands it as meaning marriage between relatives only in one place. And even that has yet to be proved. The word qaêtu (hvaêtu),—or as it would be more correct, (namely on the ground of the metre, which everywhere reckons hv [=q] as a syllable; e.g. qâthra [hvâthra] as trisyllabic = huâthra) to write it,—haêtu, means only relationship (and is in the Gāthās always bisyllabic). Any one who wishes to combine with that the idea of marriage, must prove his point. In Spiegel too, I find no example from the old books. In fact, he says in his Introduction to vol. ii. of his translation, p. xxvi., that 'everything relating to marriage appears to date from a very recent period.'

The explanations of the few Avesta passages which Professor Kern adduces are not of importance in their bearing on the main question. Ordinarily, in fact, it is only the three natural classes, Āthrava, Rathesta, and Vāstrya (cattle-farmer), that are mentioned. Though in two passages a "hūiti" or "vaeśa" is added to these, that, too, is only a class. Professor Kern explains "vaeśa" rightly. In the Veda also "veśa" denotes a dependent settler, perhaps an inhabitant, one belonging to somebody, and so a servant. The interpretation of hūiti as a "proletary" does not appear to be in conformity with the conceptions of that period. If it is to have such a signification, why does he not rather derive it from "hu" = "sū" (compare "prasūta," and other forms which frequently occur in the ancient language), which means to command, direct?

I may, in addition to the above remarks, draw attention to the fact, that if the Indian and Iranian classes had a common and simultaneous origin, it is singular that there should be no trace of any similarity in the names by which these classes were permanently denoted, although the Zend and the Sanskrit exhibit so close an affinity in so large a portion of their vocabulary.

It is true that two of the words are common to both languages, as "āthrava" (crude form "atharvan") corresponds to the Sanskrit "atharvan"; while the Zend "rathaēstāo" answers nearly to the Sanskrit "ratheshṭhā." The former word, "atharvan," is thus explained in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon: "(a) The fire and soma priest, R.V. ix. 11, 2; viii. 9, 7 (here Agni is the priest); V.S. viii. 56 (Soma is his own priest); R.V. vi. 47, 24; x. 48, 2; a brāhman, Medinīkosha, n. 164; (b) Atharvan personified is the first priest, in an undefined antiquity, who calls down fire from heaven, offers soma, and presents prayers, R.V. vi. 16, 13; vi. 15, 17; x. 21, 5; i. 80, 16; x. 92, 10;

i. 83, 5; A.V. xviii. 3, 54. With miraculous powers he overcomes the demons, and receives from the gods celestial gifts, R.V. x. 87, 12, etc." In Prof. Wilson's Dictionary the word is explained as signifying a brāhman. Prof. Goldstücker, s.v. interprets it as "(1) A brāhmaṇa, a priest, probably one connected with offerings to fire, or the attendance on the holy fire. (2) The proper name of a priest who is considered to have obtained fire from heaven," etc., etc. The word is perpetuated in the name of the Atharvaveda (which also bears the name of the "Atharvāngirasas," the hymns or incantations of the Atharvans and of the Angirases, who were another set of ancient sages, or priests). But although we should admit, on the authority of the Medinīkosha, that "atharvan" is a synonym of brāhmana, it cannot be said to have obtained much currency in Sanskrit in this sense, and cannot even be regarded as a generic name for priest. The passages of the R.V. given by Roth (see above), in which it is not employed as a proper name, are the following: ix. 11. 2 (=S.V. ii. 2): Abhi te madhunā payo atharvāṇo aśiśrayuḥ | devaṁ devāya devayu | "The atharvans have mingled milk with thy sweet liquor, [milk which is] divine, and devoted to [thee, soma], who art divine." viii. 9, 7: Ā somam madhumattamaṁ gharmaṁ sinchād atharvaṇi | "Let him (the ṛishi) pour the sweet soma, the heated potion, into the priest." By the priest is meant Agni, according to Professor Roth. Sāyaṇa explains the word atharvaṇi as = ahiṁsake 'gnau | yadvā 'tharvā ṛishiḥ | tena nirmathito 'gnir upachārād "atharvā" ity uchyate | "Into the innoxious fire; or, Atharvan was a ṛishi: the fire rubbed forth by him is by a figure called 'atharvan.'" Vāj. S. viii. 56: Atharvā upāvahriyamāṇaḥ | "It (soma) becomes 'atharvan' when being brought." Here, Professor Roth says Soma is his own priest. (The commentator's note is as follows: Kaṇḍanārtham upāvahriyamaṇaḥ ānīyamānaḥ somo 'tharva-nāmako bhavati.) R.V. vi. 47, 24: Daśa rathān prashṭimataḥ śatam gāḥ atharvabhyaḥ | Aśvathaḥ Pāyave adāt | 'Aśvatha has given ten chariots with their horses, and a hundred cows, to the priests, to Pāyu." Sāyaṇa explains atharvabhyaḥ as = atharva-gotrebhyaḥ ṛishibhyaḥ | "Ṛishis of the family of Atharvan." R.V. x. 48, 2: Aham Indro rodho vaksho Atharvaṇaḥ | "I, Indra, am the protecting armour, and strength, of Atharvan [or, of the priest]." Roth, s.v. vakshaḥ, seems to take Atharvan in this text for a proper name. The word employed in the Veda for priest was at first "brahman," and subsequently "brāhmaṇa," the son of a "brahman." See the first vol. of this work, pp. 242, ff. If "atharvan" had been the name of a caste in the Indian sense from a period preceding the separation of the Indo- and Perso-Arians, it could scarcely have been dropped by the former, or made way for "brahman" and "brāhmaṇa."

The crude form of "rathaēstāo," as given in Justi's Dictionary, is "raṯhaēstar," whilst the Sanskrit form is "ratheshṭhā." The words thus differ somewhat in form. In all the passages of the Rig-veda, cited in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, "ratheshṭhā" appears to be an epithet of Indra, "riding in a chariot." The only other text cited in the Lexicon, viz. Vāj. S. 22, 22, is as follows: Ā brahman brāhmaṇo brahmavarchasī jāyatām | ā rāshṭre rājanyo śūraḥ ishavyo 'tivyādhī mahāratho jāyatām | dogdhrī dhenuḥ | voḍhā 'naḍvān | āśuḥ saptiḥ | purandhir yoshā | jishṇuḥ ratheshṭhāḥ sabheyo yuvā ā'sya yajamānasya jāyatām | "O priest, may a brāhman be born possessed of the lustre of sacred learning. May a rājanya be born in the kingdom, heroic, a piercing archer, riding on a great chariot ('mahāratha'). May a cow yielding milk, an ox fit to carry a load, a swift horse, a wise woman, a victorious rider in a chariot ('ratheshṭhā,' a polite youth, be born to this sacrificer." Here it will be observed that the word "ratheshṭhā" is not one of the epithets applied to the Rājanya in the early part of the sentence; and although where it is separately introduced afterwards, it probably denotes a person of the warrior class, yet it is evidently not the appellation of a caste, but a synonym for a fighting man. The word does not seem to be known to later Sanskrit; at least, no instance of its occurrence there is adduced by Böhtlingk and Roth, and it does not appear at all in Wilson's Dictionary.

In the first volume of this work, pp. 11, 14, f., 292, ff., the views of Prof. Haug, on the antiquity of caste, as explained in his tract on the "Origin of Brahmanism" (published at Poona, in 1863), have been stated. Dr. Haug returns to the subject in a dissertation ("Brahma und die Brahmanen") read before the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, on the 28th March, 1871, in which he maintains, with some modifications, the conclusions at which he had before arrived. Thus, in p. 13, he states—caste-system in India is very ancient, and existed already in the Vedic age. Some have sought to disprove its existence at that period, on the ground that, excepting this one, the old hymns contain no distinct reference to it. The hymn itself they assign to the very end of the Vedic era. In its present form, it is true, it is not older than the greater part of the hymns of the tenth book, and than those of the Atharvaveda. But the ideas which it contains are certainly of a primeval antiquity: in particular, the descriptive portion of it looks like a versified sacrificial formula. And in fact the hymn is found in the Yajurveda among the formulas connected with human sacrifices, which were formerly practised in India.

(a) regarding the Puruṣa-sūkta: "In any case it proves that the

(b) "But even if it were to be admitted that this hymn, with its ideas, is but a very recent product of the Vedic age, that would afford no sufficient proof that castes did not exist at all in the earliest period of the Arian immigration into India. As we have seen above, p. 9, the Brāhman already appears [R.V. iv. 50, 8, f., and i. 108, 7] in contrast to the Rājan, i.e. a member of the warrior caste (they are frequently called Rājanyas instead of Kshatriyas),—a circumstance which plainly points to a distinction of castes.

(c) "Besides, it is scarcely conceivable that the caste-system, to which reference is made in all the four Vedas, sometimes more frequently, sometimes more rarely, should have been suddenly formed in the later Vedic period.

(d) "The reason why the names of the castes are not mentioned in those hymns of the Rigveda which, rightly or wrongly (for a thorough investigation of this point with certain results is as yet wanting), are regarded as the oldest, may be a different one," [i.e. the reason why the castes are not there mentioned need not be that these castes did not then exist]. "The fact, namely, must not be overlooked, that by far the greater part of the Vedic hymns were composed for sacrificial purposes, and partly for quite definite ceremonies, are often merely the poetical variations of primeval sacrificial formulas, and further that the most of them are the compositions of Brāhmans. As the ceremonial is not prescribed in the hymns, where almost everything turns upon the invocation of the most diverse gods, no opportunity was offered to make special mention of the castes. The sacrificers, i.e. those who caused the sacrifice to be offered (yajamānās), are called 'givers' in general, also 'the rich,' (maghavan) without any mention of their caste. . . . . Now as there were no hymns or sacrificial formulas composed specially for Brāhmans, or Kshatriyas, or Vaiśyas,—as there actually have been for the ceremonies of the Śūdras, who are not allowed to hear verses of the Veda,—the Vedic poets had no opportunity to mention the castes in their hymns. Consequently the fact that the names of the individual castes do not appear there does not by any means prove their non-existence. This conclusion was in any case premature."

(e) "Besides the grounds already assigned, a further positive proof can be adduced that castes actually existed already in the most ancient period. In the religious records of the Iranians, who are so nearly allied [to the Indians], in the Zendavesta, the four castes are quite plainly to be found, only under other names, (1) Athrava, 'priest,' (Skr. Atharvan), (2) Rathaēstāo, 'warrior,' (3) Vāstriyo fshuyās, 'cultivator,' (4) Hūitis (Pehl. hutokhsh), 'workman' (Yasna 19, 17, Westerg.) No further data regarding the mutual relations of these castes are contained in the Zend writings; but we can conclude, from various circumstances, that the priests, the Athravas, already formed a caste. So, for example, Zarathustra is forbidden by Ahuramazda to communicate a sacred text to any one else but an Athrava, i.e. priest (Yasht 14, 46, West.)." [See Spiegel's Avesta, iii. 148.] "No one but the son of a priest may be a priest, and the daughters of members of the priestly caste may only be given in marriage within the caste,—a custom which continues to this day. The distinction of the other castes has, however, become obliterated among the Zoroastrians, just in the same way as, among the Hindus, the Brāhman caste alone has on the whole been maintained pure, though split up into innumerable subdivisions, whilst the other three castes have become dissolved into a great number of mixed castes, so that at the present day, properly speaking, four castes only exist in theory, but not in reality. This circumstance, now, that a remnant of the caste-system has still been preserved among the Zoroastrians, speaks strongly in favour of the assumption that that institution already existed among the Indians in the remotest times, in any case ever since their immigration into India. How close the connexion between the old Indians and the Iranians must have remained, even in the Vedic period, is shown by a distinct allusion which I have lately discovered in the Zendavesta to the initial verse of the Atharvaveda."

(f) In an earlier part of his Dissertation (p. 8, f.), Prof. Haug, after explaining that in the Vedic age Kshatriyas as well as Brāhmans could take part in the performance of sacrifice, and were in some cases composers of Ṛik verses; and that even Kavasha Ailūsha, the son of a slave, was the author of a hymn (see above, p. 397, f., note 85), adds: "Notwithstanding that the Brāhmâns in the Vedic age occasionally accorded to distinguished men of other classes a participation in the privileges they claimed, they nevertheless appear, even in the most remote period, to have formed a caste distinguished from the other classes, and already tolerably exclusive, into which no one who was not born in it could, without great difficulty, obtain an entrance." He then quotes the text R.V. iv. 50, 8, f., and refers to and compares i. 108, 7.

I add a few remarks on some portions of Prof. Haug's argument.

(a) In regard to the Purusha-sūkta, I refer to what has been said above, in the first volume of this work, p. 11. Prof. Haug now states his opinion that the ideas of the hymn are very old, but not its diction.

(b) See the first volume of this work, pp. 246, and 247, note 15 in the latter page, and p. 263, f., also Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. "kshatra." Does not Prof. Haug found too much on the passages to which he refers (R.V. iv. 50, 8, f., and i. 108, 7)? See, however, the verse of Manu, iii. 13, quoted below, where the word "rājan" is employed for Rājanya. In R.V. iv. 50, 8, f., the word seems evidently to denote a "king." In R.V. i. 108, 7, however, it may mean a man of the ruling tribe or class. Comp. Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. "rājan."

(c) The Vedic period was of considerable duration. Professor Haug himself estimates the period during which "the bulk of the Sanhitā" was composed to have been from 1400—2000 before our era, and thinks "the oldest hymns and sacrificial formulas may be a few hundred years more ancient still, so that we would fix the very commencement of Vedic literature between 2400 and 2000." Ait. Br. i. 47, f. The entire Vedic period would thus be a thousand years, which however, is, perhaps, too large an estimate.

(d) The reasons here assigned in explanation of the non-occurrence in the hymns of other references to the castes, supposing them to have then existed, and to have borne the same names as afterwards, seem scarcely sufficient. The hymns do not appear to be so exclusively sacrificial in their character as is here assumed; and might in many passages have admitted of allusions to the existence of castes.

(e) The observations already made upon Professor Kern's Dissertation are applicable here.

(f) In reference to these remarks, see the first volume of this work, p. 265, ff. Prof. Kern, in his Dissertation, p. 18, cites a passage from the Mahābhārata, xiii. 2505, ff., in regard to the intermarriages of Brāhmans with the other two next classes, one verse of which (2515) is to the following effect: Abrāhmaṇaṁ tu manyante Śūdrā-putram anaipuṇāt | trishu varṇeshu jāto hi brāhmaṇād brāhmaṇo bhavet | "They regard from want of skill as not a Brāhman the son of a Śūdrā woman [by a Brāhman father]. A son begotten by a Brāhman in the three castes [i.e. on a woman of either of the upper three classes] will be a Brāhman." And Manu says, iii. 13, Śūdraiva bhāryā Śūdrasya sā cha svā cha viśah smṛite | te cha svā chaiva rājnaś cha tāś cha svā ch' āgrajanmanaḥ | "A Śūdrā female only can be the wife of a Śūdra. She and a woman of his own caste may be the wives of a Viś, i.e. Vaiśya. These two and a woman of his own caste may be the wives of a Rājan, i.e. Rājanya; these three and a woman of his own caste may be the wives of a Brāhman." From these texts it would appear that purity of caste blood was not much regarded among the Hindus in early ages.

NOTE C.—Page 258.

"The conformities [between the languages of the same family] are astonishing; and especially so, because they enter into the minutest details, and even into the anomalies. It is a curious phenomenon to discover such an inconceivable tenacity in idioms which might appear to be nothing more than passing caprices. The most volatile portion of languages, I mean their pronunciation, has evinced its stability: in the midst of mutations of letters, which are, nevertheless, subject to certain rules, vowels, long or short, have often preserved their quantity." "On the other hand, the disparity is great: the distances which the languages have traversed in their individual development are immense. After we have exhausted all the analogies, even the most secret, there remains in each of these languages a portion which is no longer susceptible of comparison with the other languages of the same family. We must therefore admit as the causes of that partial incommensurableness, two opposite principles, viz., oblivion and invention. The oblivion of forms and words formerly in use is but too manifest in the languages with whose history we are most intimately acquainted; and it has frequently injured their richness and beauty. Such oblivion must always follow a retrograde movement in civilization: in proportion as the intellectual sphere is contracted, a generation which has relapsed into ignorance and barbarism, abandons expressions which have now become superfluous. And as regards invention, I find no difficulty in that either, since in order to comprehend the absolute origin of language, we have no choice between having recourse to a miracle, and conceding to mankind an instinctive power of inventing language."—A. W. von Schlegel, de l'origine des Hindous, Essais; and in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature of the United Kingdom, vol. ii. p. 433.

NOTE D.—Page 277.

Mr. Geldart argues the question both from a negative and a positive point of view. Under the first head, he remarks that "language is too uncertain an ethnological test to be of any practical value," and instances the complete discrepancy which exists between the races and the languages of the British Isles. Cumberland and Cornwall, for example, in language agree with London and disagree with Wales, while as to race, it is directly the reverse." The same thing is shown, he observes, "by many similar examples: the accumulative evidence of all amounted to this, that since in so many cases where the ethnological indications of language can be compared with the actual testimony of history, the latter completely contradicts the former," a common language is "not even primâ facie evidence in favour of a common lineage." "Secondly, in a positive point of view, it was shown that in all the instances above cited, there had taken place between the races a close assimilation of (1) political, (2) religious, (3) intellectual, or (4) general social relations, or of any, or of all of these combined; and it was suggested that it is such an assimilation, and not unity of race, that unity of language rightly typifies."

"The sum of the whole was, that it is not safe to infer from affinity between the language of two nations more than this, that there was a time when there existed between them civil, religious, or some sort of social relations. Language was the product and token of a nation's political, moral, or intellectual, but not of its physical constitution. It would not reveal a people's genealogy, but its mental and social history.

"Should it ever be proved that all languages were derived from one original, the sole valid inference would be, that at some time one sovereign race had imposed upon all the rest its own political or social institutions, while the great question of the number of races would remain just where it stood."

NOTE D*.—Page 287.

"Strabo tells us that the tribes of the Persians, Medes, Bactrians, and Sogdians, spoke nearly the same language. We can have no difficulty in supposing that this similarity of speech which existed in Strabo's age, existed also in earlier times. The old Iranian dialects, of which the monuments have been still preserved to us, justify this assumption. Of these there are four, (1) the speech of the earlier Achæmenidæ, (2) that of the later Achæmenidæ, (3) the dialect of the Gāthās,[8] (4) the old Bactrian, the ordinary language of the Avesta. The last two dialects might perhaps also be embraced under the designation of Avestic. The first two of these dialects belong to western, the last two to eastern, Iran."—Spiegel, in Kuhn and Schleicher's Beiträge zur Vergl. Sprachf. ii. 6. I must refer to the original paper for further details regarding these dialects. I will only quote one or two remarks. In his account of the old Persian or earlier Achæmenidan dialect, Spiegel observes (p. 7), that, "we find in it all the classes of the Sanskrit alphabet represented, excepting the cerebrals, which have a purely local origin." (See above, p. 440, note.) At p. 13, he remarks: "We have pointed out in the entire grammar of the old Persian so much that is identical with the Sanskrit, that it may now be time to notice the differences which stamp it as a distinct language from the old Indian. Not a few such peculiarities are to be found in all the departments of grammar. In a phonetic aspect, there is this important deviation that the old Persian has the letter z, which is unknown to the Sanskrit, and that it, like the Greek, changes the Indian s into h."—(See above, pp. 313, and 315).

[8] [It is scarcely necessary to say that this has no connexion with the Indian Gāthā dialect, described above, pp. 115, ff.—J.M.]

NOTE E.—Page 296.

Rigveda ix. 113, 7–11. Yatra jyotir ajasraṁ yasmin loke svar hitaṁ | Tasmin mām dhehi pavamāna amṛite loke akshite | Yatra rājā Vaivasvato yatrāvarodhanaṁ divaḥ | Yatrāmūr yahvatīr āpaṣ tatra mām amṛitam kṛidhi | Yatrānukāmaṁ charaṇam trināke tridive divaḥ | Lokāḥ yatra jyotishmantas tatra mām, etc. | Yatra kāmāḥ nikāmāścha yatra bradhnasya vishṭapam | Svadhā cha yatra tṛiptiścha tatra mām, etc. | Yatrānandāścha modāścha mudaḥ pramuda āsate | Kāmasya yatrāptāḥ kāmās tatra mām, etc. | "Place me, O purified (Soma), in that undecaying unchanging region, where perpetual light and glory abide. Make me immortal in the world where king Vaivaśvata (Yama) reigns, where the sanctuary of the sky is, and those great waters are. Make me immortal in the third heaven, where action is at pleasure, where the shining regions exist. Make me immortal in the world where all enjoyments abide, in the realm of the sun, where celestial food and satisfaction are found. Make me immortal in the world where there are manifold pleasures and joys, and where the objects of desire are attained." Benfey, Gloss. to Sāmaveda, under the word nikāma, renders svadhā and tṛiptiḥ by "nectar and ambrosia." See the fifth vol. of this work, pp. 284, ff.

NOTE F.—Page 297.

I shall here translate or abstract the most important parts of Dr. Windischmann's Dissertation, "On the Soma-worship of the Arians." Dr. Windischmann begins with the following remarks: "If we advert to the striking contrast which exists between the doctrine of Zarathustra and the Brahmanical system, and to the fact that the former must be looked on as the work of a reformer seeking to preserve the old nature-worship from the mythological transformations with which it was threatened, it must appear as a matter of the greater importance to throw light upon those points in which the two religions agree. For as regards those conceptions which existed before the two systems had developed their opposing principles, we may reasonably assume that they were possessed in common long before the separation of the Arian race into the Indian and Iranian branches, that they formed part of the (already existing, and distinguishable) religions of the Zendavesta and the Veda, and that they had been inherited from the most primitive tradition. Such traditions are, indeed, comparatively few; but the concurrence of those which have been preserved, is so much the more striking; as, for example, Lassen (Ind. Alt. i. 517) has shown in regard to the Iranian legend of king Yima, son of Vivañghat, who corresponds to the Indian Yama, son of Vivasvat. Yima, however, is regarded by the Medo-Persians as the first king, lawgiver, and founder of the Iranian worship, while Yama is looked on by the Brahmans as lord of Hades (R.V. i. 35, 6), and judge of the dead, and it is his brother Manu who plays the same part as 'Yima.'' [See, however, p. 296, above.] "But by far the most remarkable analogy is that which exists between the Haoma of the Zendavesta and the Soma of the most ancient Brahmanical books, an analogy which is not confined to some few features of the legend, but extends to the entire Soma-worship of the early Arian race.

"Haoma and Soma are names etymologically identical. Both come from the root su, in Zend hu, which signifies, 'to beget,' and also, but especially in the Vedic dialect, to 'drop,' or 'to press out juice.' In later Indian mythology Soma means the moon and its deity: but in the Zendavesta and the Vedas it signifies a celebrated plant, and its juice. This is the asclepias acida, or sarcostema viminalis, the expressed juice of which produces a peculiarly astringent, narcotic, and intoxicating effect. The plant,[9] plucked up by the roots, is collected by moonlight on the mountains; stripped of its leaves; carried on a car drawn by two goats to the place of sacrifice (where a spot covered with grass and twigs is prepared); crushed between stones by the priests; and is then thrown, stalks as well as juice (sprinkled with water) into a sieve, whence, after the whole has been further pressed by the hand of the Brahmans, the juice trickles into a vessel (called drona) which is placed beneath. The fluid is then mixed with clarified butter, wheaten and other flour, and brought into a state of fermentation; it is then offered thrice a day, and partaken of by the Brahmans. The Sāmaveda is almost entirely made up of songs to accompany this ceremony; and the Rigveda, too, contains numerous passages which have reference to it. It was unquestionably the greatest and the holiest offering of the ancient Indian worship. The sound of the trickling juice is regarded as a sacred hymn. The gods drink the offered beverage; they long for it (as it does for them); they are nourished by it, and thrown into a joyous intoxication: this is the case with Indra (who performs his great deeds under its influence), with the Aśvins, the Maruts, and Agni. The beverage is divine, it purifies, it inspires greater joy than alcohol, it intoxicates Śakra, it is a water of life, protects and nourishes, gives health and immortality, prepares the way to heaven, destroys enemies, etc. The Sāmaveda distinguishes two kinds of Soma, the green and the yellow: but it is its golden colour which is for the most part celebrated.

[9] Compare Stevenson's Translation of the Sāmaveda, p. iv. This work is repeatedly referred to in the sequel.

"If we compare all this with what the Persians say of the Haoma plant, we find the most surprising agreement. Haoma is the first of the trees, planted by Ahura Mazda in the fountain of life. He who drinks of its juice never dies. According to the Bundehesh, the Gogard or Gokeren tree bears the Haoma, which gives health and generative power, and imparts life at the resurrection. The Haoma plant does not decay, bears no fruit, resembles the vine, is knotty, and has leaves like jessamine; it is yellow and white. Its juice is prepared and offered with sacred rites, and is called Parahaoma. Thus in Yaśna, iii. 5, it is said haomencha para-haomencha ayēšē, 'I reverence the Haoma and the Para-haoma.'

"The fact that the Magians offered up a plant was known to Plutarch,[10] but what this plant was is not certain. . . . . The plant

[10] The paragraph in which this information is found (of which Windischmann cites only a few words) is as follows:—

Plutarch de Isid. et Osir. 46. Νομίζουσι γὰρ οἱ μὲν θεοὺς εἶναι δύο καθάπερ ἀντιτέχνους, τὸν μὲν ἀγαθῶν, τὸν δὲ φαύλων δημιουργόν· οἱ δὲ τὸν μὲν ἀμείνονα θεὸν, τὸν δὲ ἕτερον δαίμονα, καλοῦσιν· ὥσπερ Ζωρόαστρις ὁ μάγος, ὃν πεντακισχιλίοις ἔτεσι τῶν seems to have changed with the locality; and the soma-plant of the Indians does not appear to be the same as the haoma of the Persians; at least the latter affirm that their sacrificial plant does not grow in India. Ahura Mazda causes the white haoma to grow among the numerous kinds of trees. . . . . A constant appellation of the haoma is the gold-coloured (zairigaonō), just as in the Veda.

"But these are not the only points of resemblance between the Soma worship of the Indians and Persians. There is one other very important particular in which they both agree. In the Vedas, Soma is not merely a sacred sacrificial beverage, but also a god. This is proved by numerous passages of the Veda (Stevenson, p. 98); and in particular by the splendid hymn to Soma, Rigveda, i. 91. Precisely in the same manner, Haoma is, in the Zendavesta, not a plant only, but also a powerful deity; and in both works the conceptions of the god and the sacred juice blend wonderfully with each other. The most important passages regarding this personified Haoma are to be found in the 9th and 10th sections of the Yaśna, which are explained by striking analogies in the hymn of the Veda just referred to. The Τρωϊκῶν γεγονέναι πρεσβύτερον ἱστοροῦσιν. Οὗτος οὖν ἐκάλει τὸν μὲν Ὡρομάζην, τὸν δὲ Ἀρειμάνιον· καὶ προσαπεφαίνετο τὸν μὲν ἐοικέναι φωτὶ μάλιστα τῶν αἰσθητῶν, τὸν δε ἔμπαλιν σκότῳ καὶ ἀγνοίᾳ· μέσον δὲ ἀμφοῖν τὸν Μίθρην εἶναι· διὸ καὶ Μίθρην Πέρσαι τὸν μεσίτην ὀνομάζουσιν· ἐδίδαξε μὲν τῷ εὔκταῖα θύειν καὶ χαριστήρια, τῷ δὲ ἀποτρόπαια καὶ σκυθρωπά. Πόαν γάρ τινα κόπτοντες ὄμωμι καλουμένην ἐν ὅλμῳ, τὸν Ἅδην ἀνακαλοῦνται καὶ τὸν σκότον· εἶτα μίξαντες αἵματι λύκου σφαγέντος, εἰς τόπον ἀνήλιον ἐκφέρουσι καὶ ῥίπτουσι. Καὶ γὰρ τῶν φυτῶν νομίζουσι τὰ μὲν τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ θεοῦ, τὰ δὲ τοῦ κακοῦ δαίμονος εἶναι· καὶ τῶν ζώων, ὥσπερ κύνας καὶ ὄρνιθας καὶ χερσαίους ἐχίνους, τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ· τοῦ δὲ φαύλου τοὺς ἐνύδρους εἶναι, διὸ καὶ τὸν κτείναντα πλείστους εὐδαιμονίζουσι.

"For some think that there are two gods, as it were opposed in their functions, the one the framer of good objects, the other of bad. Some call the more excellent being God, and the other Demon; as Zoroaster, the Magian, who is related to have lived 5000 years before the Trojan war. He called the one Ōromazes, the other Arimanius, and declared that the former resembled light most of all sensible things, and the latter darkness and ignorance. He also said that Mithras was intermediate between them. This is the reason why the Persians call Mithras the mediator. He taught them to sacrifice votive and thank-offerings to the one (Ōromazes), and to the other gloomy oblations to avert his wrath. For after pounding a certain herb called ŏmōmi in a mortar, they invoke Pluto and darkness; and when they have mixed it with the blood of a slaughtered wolf, they carry it to a sunless spot and cast it away. For they also regard certain plants as belonging to the good deity, and others to the evil demon; and some animals, as dogs, and birds, and hedgehogs, to the former (and others as) sea-urchins, to the latter; and they felicitate those who have killed the greatest number of these last."

9th section begins thus: 'In early morning Haoma came to Zarathustra, who was consecrating his sacred fire, and repeating prayers. Zarathustra asked him, "What man art thou, whom I see to be the most excellent in the whole existing world on account of his immortal life?" Hereupon Haoma, the pure, the remover of sickness, answered me, "I am, O Zarathustra, the pure, the remover of sickness. Invoke me, holy man, pour me forth to drink, celebrate me with praise, as formerly the holy men used to do." Then Zarathustra said, "Reverence to Haoma."'[11] Haoma is here called 'remover of heat, or sickness,' and in the same way Soma is said in Rigveda, i. 91, 12, to be amīvahā, 'the destroyer of suffering.' This passage of the Yaśna clearly shows how, as I have before mentioned, the separate ideas of the god and of the juice are blended. Haoma desires that he himself shall he prepared for sacrifice.

"This passage is followed by a specification of the four original worshippers of Haoma. The first was Vivañhat, who prepared the celestial beverage hunūta, and in consequence obtained a blessing, and the fulfilment of his wish that a son should be born to him. This was King Yima, the most glorious of men, in whose realm men and animals never died, water and trees never dried up, food was superabundant, and cold, heat, disease, death, and devilish envy were unknown.

"What has before been said of Yima shows the importance of this passage. The worship of Haoma is placed anterior to Yima, i.e. to the commencement of Iranian civilization; and in fact is declared to be the cause of that happy period. The Rigveda also refers to this high antiquity of the Soma worship, when (i. 91, 1) it says of Soma: 'By thy guidance, O brilliant (Soma), our courageous fathers have obtained treasures among the gods.' Like Vivañhat, the next worshippers of Haoma, viz., Athwya and Samanām Sevishta, also obtained

[11] Compare Spiegel's translation of the same passage, and its continuation, Avesta, ii. 68, ff. In note 4 he remarks: "Haoma, like various other deities of the Avesta, is regarded as at once a personal god, and as the thing on account of which this god was imagined. Haoma is at once a Yazata and a drink. The original identity of the Indian Soma with the Haoma of the Avesta has been excellently shown in F. Windischmann's dissertation. Among both nations the healing power of the Haoma is prominently noticed, but among the Parsīs it is particularly the white Haoma which imparts immortality. The Indian plant is the asclepias acida; the Persian is not determined. Both nations notice that the plant grew on mountains, and originally, at least, it must have been the same plant which both employed."

offspring,—Thraētaonō and sons who destroyed the Ahrimanian monster. The heroic age of the conflict of light is thus referred back to Haoma, whilst in the Rigveda (i. 91, 8), Soma is invoked to 'deliver from destruction, to suffer none of his friends to perish;' and (in verse 15) to protect from incantations and from sin; and in the Sāmaveda (Stevenson, p. 259) he is said to drive away the Rakshasas.

"It is interesting to remark, that while Thraētaonō is said here to have been bestowed by Haoma, the Sāmaveda names a Ṛishi Trita as an offerer of Soma.

"The fourth worshipper of Haoma is Pourusaśpa, the father of Zarathustra: his reward was the birth of this illustrious son, the promulgator of the anti-demonic doctrine. Here also the ancient legend confirms the priority of the Haoma worship to the Zoroastrian reformation.

"When Zarathustra has thus learnt that he owes his own existence to Haoma, he celebrates his praises: and the epithets which he here applies to the god agree in a remarkable way with those of the Veda. Some of these parallel epithets are hvaresa, Zend, = svarshā, Sanskrit (R.V. i. 91, 21), 'giving heaven;' verethrajao, Zend, = vṛitrahā, Sanskrit (R.V. i. 91, 5), 'destroyer of enemies;' hukhratus, Zend, = 'sukratuḥ, Sanskrit (R.V. i. 91, 2), 'offering good sacrifices,' or 'wise,' or 'strong.' The blessings supplicated by Zarathustra from Haoma also agree in many points with those which the Vedic poet asks from Soma."

It is not necessary, however, to pursue the subject farther. I refer the reader, who wishes further details of this sort, to Dr. Windischmann's dissertation itself.

I copy the following remarks on the Soma worship from Mr. Whitney's "Main Results of the later Vedic Researches in Germany" (Journal of the Amer. Orient. Society, iii. 299, 300). The "hymns, one hundred and fourteen in number [of the 9th book of the Rigveda], are, without exception, addressed to the Soma, and being intended to be sung while that drink was expressed from the plant that afforded it, and was clarified, are called pāvamānyas, 'purificational.' . . . . The word soma means simply 'extract' (from the root su, to express, extract), and is the name of a beverage prepared from a certain herb, the asclepias acida, which grows abundantly upon the mountains of India and Persia. This plant, which by its name should be akin to our common milk-weed, furnishes, like the latter, an abundant milky juice, which, when fermented, possesses intoxicating qualities. In this circumstance, it is believed, lies the explanation of the whole matter. The simple-minded Arian people, whose whole religion was a worship of the wonderful powers and phenomena of nature, had no sooner perceived that this liquid had power to elevate the spirits, and produce a temporary phrenzy, under the influence of which the individual was prompted to, and capable of, deeds beyond his natural powers, than they found in it something divine; it was, to their apprehension, a god, endowing those into whom it entered with god-like powers; the plant which afforded it became to them the king of plants; the process of preparing it was a holy sacrifice; the instruments used therefor were sacred. The high antiquity of this cultus is attested by the references to it found occurring in the Persian Avesta; it seems, however, to have received a new impulse on Indian territory, as the pāvamānya hymns of the Veda exhibit it in a truly remarkable state of development. Soma is there addressed as a god in the highest strains of adulation and veneration; all powers belong to him; all blessings are besought of him, as his to bestow. And not only do such hymns compose one whole book of the Ṛik, and occur scattered here and there through other portions of it, but the most numerous single passages and references everywhere appearing, show how closely it had intertwined itself with the whole ritual of the Vedic religion." [See the section on Soma in the fifth volume of this work.]

Lassen remarks in reference to the affinities of the Iranians and Indians (Ind. Ant. 1st ed., i. 516; 2nd ed., i. 617): "It should first be recollected that the Zendavesta shows us the [Iranian] doctrine not in its original, but in a reformed shape; a distinction is made between the pious men who lived before the proclamation of the law by Zoroaster, and the 'nearest relations:' and we may conclude that the points wherein the Brahmanical Indians and the followers of Zoroaster coincide, belong to the old, and those in which they differ, to the new, system. Of the beings who are the objects of veneration in the Avesta, it is the seven highest, i.e. Ahura Mazda and the Amesha Spentas, who are peculiarly Iranian; their names are unknown to the Brahmans; the Vedas recognize no class of seven divinities of the highest rank who are of the same character. On the other hand, there is no trace of Brahma among the Iranians. The fundamental principle of the Zend doctrine, the dualistic separation of the good and evil principles, is, in like manner, foreign to Brahmanism. But there are, nevertheless, other deities, who are equally venerated in the Zendavesta and the Veda, viz., fire, the sun, the moon, the earth, and water; a fact which indicates that both religions have a common foundation."

Lassen also treats of the legend of Yima, and of other points of connexion between the Indian and Iranian religions, 1st ed. i. pp. 517–526, and at greater length in the 2nd ed. pp. 619–634; and then observes: "These common reminiscences of the Eastern Iranians, and the Arian Indians, cannot be explained from any communications such as neighbouring nations might make to one another. On the contrary, we perceive sometimes a varying, sometimes a contradictory, conception of important traditions and appellations, which is only intelligible if we presuppose an earlier agreement, which had, in part, become lost and modified in the course of time, after the separation of the two nations; and in part had become converted into a contradiction by a division in their opinions. Even this contradiction indicates a closer connexion between the two nations at an earlier period."

See also Professor R. Roth's articles in the Journal of the 'German' Oriental Society, for 1848 (pp. 216, ff.), 1850 (pp. 417, ff.), and 1852 (pp. 67, ff.), on the legends of Feridūn and Jemshīd, and on the "highest gods of the Arian nations;" and also his paper on Nabānazdista, at p. 243 of the last-named volume; as well as Spiegel's paper in Indische Studien, iii. 448. In the vol. of the Journal of the Germ. Or. Society for 1848, p. 216, Roth proposes to show by an example, "how the Veda and the Avesta flow from one fountain, like two streams, the one of which, the Vedic, has continued fuller, purer, and truer to its original character; while the other has become in many ways polluted, has changed its original course, and consequently cannot always be followed back with equal certainty to its sources." See also Professor Müller's "Last Results of the Persian Researches," reprinted in "Chips," i. 81, ff.

NOTE G.—Page 306.

Professor Cowell, editor of the fifth edition of the History of India (1866), has some remarks on this conclusion of Mr. Elphinstone in an additional Appendix, no. viii., pp. 284, ff. He there gives a summary of the circumstances which lead to the belief that the Indians were immigrants from without, as the most probable inference from the premises. He alludes first to "the fact of a connexion between the original Sanskrit-speaking tribes and the other nations of Western Asia and Europe, as proved by the common origin of their respective languages," as admitted by Mr. Elphinstone, and then proceeds: "It is perhaps going too far to assert that this connexion is thus proved to be one of race; at any rate, this is a question which belongs to physical science rather than to history. It is enough for the historian if it is granted that in some remote prehistoric time the ancestors of these various tribes were living in close political relation to each other; and the similarity which we find in their languages must undoubtedly prove this, even although the problem of race should remain as unsettled a question as before." Compare Mr. Geldart's remarks in note D, above, pp. 467, 468.

Professor Cowell allows that "this similarity and linguistic sympathy proves only the fact of a connexion; but they 'prove nothing regarding the place where it subsisted, nor about the time,' [Elphinstone]; but" (he adds) "perhaps the following considerations may throw some light on this further question," and then goes on to say that "a central home once occupied by the ancestors of these now widely scattered nations seems primâ facie more probable than to suppose that they emigrated from the furthest extremity of the line as India." He then states the considerations which confirm this view.

NOTE H.—Page 315.

"The question regarding the time and place of the separation is of yet greater importance than that concerning its cause. For our present inquiry, it is of less consequence to determine the place, than the time, of that separation. As regards the region where the Indians and Iranians dwelt together, several suppositions may be made. The Iranians may have immigrated into the Panjāb along with the Indians, and have turned thence in a westerly direction. But, on the other hand, the Indians might have separated themselves from the Iranians, and travelled towards the east. Thirdly, it might be conjectured that the two races had parted from each other before they migrated towards India and Iran. Be this as it may, though we are unable to assign any date to the period of the separation, we must decidedly hold it to have occurred before the Vedic era. No such relation exists between the two races as would justify us in assuming that the Iranians formed one community with the Indians during the Vedic period. The great majority of the Vedic gods and of the Vedic conceptions are as little known to the Iranians, as the Iranian conceptions are to the Indians. The ideas which are common to both nations may be most easily and satisfactorily explained by supposing them to have been developed in the ante-Vedic period." Spiegel, in Kuhn and Schleicher's Beiträge zur vergl. Sprachf. vol ii. pp. 3, 4.

NOTE I.—Page 316.

"It is the common view that it was religious grounds which occasioned the separation of the Indians and Iranians. This opinion is supported by the fact that the names of several divinities which have a good signification among the one people, are used in a bad sense by the other, and vice versâ. Thus the Indian deva (god), has become a demon among the Iranians under the form of daeva; and Indra as Aŭdra has experienced a similar degradation. It must not be denied that these differences of conception may have had their foundation in a religious schism between the two nations; but this opinion should not be regarded as more than a probable conjecture, or held to be an historical fact, which follows from the linguistic data with the same certainty as the proposition that the Indian and Iranian nations had originally the same common ancestors. Other possible modes may be conceived, in which this opposition may have arisen; such as the internal development of the Iranian people itself. We have only to reflect on the case of the German religions, and their ancient gods, who, in presence of Christianity, came to be regarded as evil spirits. Dualism, with its rigorous consequences, was a power which operated in Iran in precisely the same manner as Christianity did in Germany. This dualism, which was a result of the particular development of the Iranian people, was compelled to make room in its system, in the best way it could, for those forms of religious belief which it found already in existence, and did not feel itself strong enough to discard. Many beings formerly regarded as gods may thus have been transformed into evil spirits, because they stood in too strong a contrast to the new moral system. It appears to me that the opposition between the religious conceptions of the Indians and the Iranians grew up gradually, and not all at once, in consequence of a reform of Zarathustra, as some have assumed." Spiegel, as above, p. 3. On Añdra see the 5th vol. of this work, p. 121, and note 212 there.

NOTE J.—Page 327.

Ptolemy, Geogr. vi. 16, has the following notice of Ottorocorra:—

Ὄρη δὲ διέζωκεν τὴν Σηρικὴν, τά τε καλούμενα Ἄννιβα, κ. τ. λ. "The country of Serica is surrounded by mountain ranges," viz., the Annibian, the Auxacian, the Asmiræan, the Casian, the Thagurian, and that of Emodus.

Καὶ τὸ καλούμενον Ὀττοροκόρρας, οὗ τὰ πέρατα ἐπέχει μοίρας ρξθ λστ καὶ ροστ λθ. "[Another of these ranges] is that called Ottorocorras, the limits of which extend from 169° 36′ to 176° 39′ east longitude."

Τὰ μὲν οὖν ἀρκτικώτερα τῆς Σηρικῆς κατανέμονται ἔθνη Ἀνθρωποφαγῶν. "The northern parts of Serica are inhabited by the tribes of the Anthropophagi" (men-eaters). The Annibi, Sizyges, etc. follow.

Καὶ μεσημβρινώτατοι παρὰ τὰ Ἡμωδὰ καὶ Σηρικὰ ὄρη Ὀττοροκόρραι. "And southernmost of all, near the Emodian and Serican mountains, dwell the Ottorocorræ."

Among the cities of Serica is mentioned Ottorocorra, in east longitude 165° 37′ 15″.

Ottorocora is again alluded to by Ptolemy in book viii., in his remarks on the eighth map of Asia:—

Ἡ Ὀττοροκόρα τὴν μεγίστην ἡμέραν ἔχει ὡρῶν ιδγο ἔγγιστα· καὶ διέστηκεν Ἀλεξανδρείας πρὸς ἕω ὥραις ἑπτά. "The greatest length of the day in Ottorocora is nearly 14⅔ hours. It is distant from Alexandria seven hours towards the east."

See, for an account of Ptolemy's geographical system, Lassen's Ind. Ant. iii. 94, ff.; and for the position of Ottorocorra, the map at the end of the same volume.

NOTE K.—Page 334.

In regard to Airyanem Vaējo, Lassen observes (Ind. Ant. 1st ed., i., p. 526, ff.; 2nd ed. p. 634, ff.): "If we assume that the Arian Indians and the Iranians had originally the same common abodes, out of India, we should expect to find a tradition on the subject among the latter people rather than among the former. We have already said that the Indians have no longer any legend of this sort, though they imagine a sacred region and the seats of the gods to exist to the north of India.[12] The Iranians, on the contrary, clearly designate Airyanem Vaējo as the first created country: this they place in the extreme east of the Iranian highlands, in the region where the Oxus and Yaxartes take their rise. This country was afflicted with winter by Ahriman, and had only two months of summer, as if the tradition of a decrease in the earth's temperature still floated in the legend. We must suppose the cold highlands on the western slopes of Belurtag and Mustag to be meant," etc. [The next paragraph will be quoted in Note M.] The following remarks are added: "It suffices to have made it probable that the earliest abodes of the Indians and Iranians are to be sought in the extreme east of the Iranian highlands; but we may assert it to be more than probable that the Indians were derived from some part of the Iranian

[12] Lassen's idea, quoted in p. 337, that the "daily prospect of the snowy summits of the Himālaya, glittering far and wide over the plains," and the knowledge the Indians had of the "table-land beyond, with its extensive and tranquil domains, its clear and cloudless sky," etc., would point out the "north as the abode of the gods, and the theatre of wonders," is confirmed by Homer's description of Olympus, Odyss. vi. 42, ff.:—

Οὔλυμπόνδ', ὅθι φασὶ θεῶν ἕδος ἀσφαλὲς αἰεὶ
Ἔμμεναι· οὔτ' ἀνέμοισι τινάσσεται, οὔτε ποτ' ὄμβρῳ
Δεύεται, οὔτε χιὼν ἐπιπίλναται· ἀλλὰ μάλ' αἴθρη
Πέπταται ἀνέφελος, λευκὴ δ' ἐπιδέδρομεν αἴγλη.

"Olympus, where they say the blessed gods
Repose for ever in secure abodes:
No stormy blasts athwart those summits sweep,
No showers or snows bedew the sacred steep;
But cloudless skies serene above are spread,
And golden radiance plays around its head."

This, however, is the ideal Olympus. The mountain is styled ἀγάννιφος, "snowy," in Iliad i. 420, where the scholiast explains the discrepancy by saying that the epithet "snowy" applies only to the parts below the clouds, the summits being above the clouds, and exempt from rain or snow.

country. . . . . The means of arriving at a conclusion on this subject are uncertain; we can only form conjectures from a review of the later geographical positions occupied by these nations; and we are thus led to fix on the country lying between the Caspian sea and the highlands before mentioned, as having been most probably their ancient seats."

See also Ariana Antiqua, p. 134, quoted in Note M.

Baron von Bunsen also treats of the First Fargard of the Vendidad in one of the Appendices to his Bibel-werk, vol. v. pp. 315, 316. I abstract the following remarks:—"The sacred books of Zoroaster's followers begin with a description of the gradual diffusion of the Arian races of Bactria, as far as the Penjab. The account of these migrations of the Bactrian Arians is preceded by a remarkable reference to the primeval country in the north-east, from which their forefathers removed to their present abodes, in consequence of a great natural convulsion. It appears that that once perfect primeval country, Airyana, had originally a very mild climate, until the hostile deity created a powerful serpent, and snow; so that only two months of summer remained, while winter prevailed during ten. The country next occupied was Sogdiana; and the third Bactria. The progress of the Arians with their civilization is, as it were, the march of Ahura Mazda, the lord of spirits. This advance has an historical import, for all the countries which are specified form a continuous series, extending towards the south and west, and in all of them the Arian culture is discoverable, and even now (in part exclusively) predominant. The first-named country can be no other than that where the Oxus and Yaxartes take their rise; the table-land of Pamer, and Khokand. Assuming the genuineness and antiquity of the Bactrian tradition, we have here a testimony, deserving of the highest consideration, to the historical character of the Biblical tradition regarding the interruption of the life of the Asiatic population by a great natural convulsion confined to this locality. The country lying between the highlands just mentioned to the east, and the mountains of Caucasus and Ararat to the west, with the Caspian Sea in its centre, is regarded by scientific geologists, such as Humboldt and Murchison, as the very region where the most recent convulsions of nature have occurred. The snow and the prolonged winter alluded to in the oldest Arian tradition must have been the result of an upheaving of the land into mountains."

NOTE L.—Page 354.

In the Asiatic Researches, vol. xv. 108, Professor H. H. Wilson translates parts of a long passage in the Karṇa Parva, or viii[th] book of the Mahâbh., verses 2025, ff., in which the manners of the Bâhîkas, Madras, Gândhâras, Araṭṭas, and other tribes of the Panjâb are stigmatized as disgraceful. The same text is quoted and translated in the appendix to M. Troyer's Râjataranginî, vol. ii. pp. 549, ff. I will cite a few specimens from this passage. The country where the Bâhîkas dwell is thus defined (verses 2029, ff.): Vahishkṛitâḥ Himavatâ Gangayâ cha vahishkṛitâḥ | Sarasvatyâ Yamunayâ Kurukshetreṇa châpi ye | Panchânâm Sindhu-shashṭhânâṁ nadînâṁ ye'antarâśṛitâḥ | Tân dharmavâhyân aśuchîn Bâhîkân parivarjayet | "Let every one avoid those impure Bâhîkas, who are outcasts[13] from righteousness, who are shut out by the Himavat, the Gangâ, the Sarasvatî, the Yamunâ, and Kurukshetra, and who dwell between the five rivers which are associated with the Sindhu (Indus), as the sixth."

Their women are thus described (v. 2035): Gâyanty athacha nṛityanti striyo mattâḥ vivâsasaḥ | Nagarâgâra-vapreshu vahir mâlyânulepanâḥ, etc. "The women, drunk and undressed, wearing garlands, and perfumed with unguents, sing and dance in public places, and on the ramparts of the town," etc.; with much more to the same effect.

Again (v. 2063, ff.): Panchanadyo vahanty etâḥ yatra nissṛitya parvatât | Âraṭṭâḥ nâma Bâhîkâḥ na teshv Âryo dvyaham vaset | (v. 2068, ff.) Âraṭṭâḥ nâma te deśâḥ Bâhîkaṁ nâma tajjalam | Brâhmaṇâpasadâḥ yatra tulyakâlâḥ Prajâpateḥ | Vedo na teshâṁ vedyañcha yajño yajanam eva cha | Vrâtyânâṁ dâsamîyânâm annam devâḥ na bhunjate | Prasthalâḥ Madra-Gândhârâḥ Âraṭṭâḥ nâmataḥ Khaśâḥ | Vasâti-Sindhusauvîrâḥ iti prâyo 'tikutsitâḥ | "In the region where these five rivers flow after issuing from the mountains dwell the Bâhîkas, called Araṭṭas; let no Ârya dwell there even for two days. . . . The name of the country is Araṭṭa; the water of it is called Bāhīka. There dwell degraded Brāhmans, contemporary with Prajāpati. They have no Veda, no Vedic ceremony, nor any sacrifice. The gods do not eat the food offered by Vrātyas and servile people. The Prasthalas, Madras, Gandhāras, Araṭṭas, Khaśas, Vasātis, and Sindhusauvīras are nearly all very contemptible." Again it is said of the same country (v. 2076, ff.) Tatra vai Brāhmaṇo bhūtvā tato bhavati Kshatriyaḥ | Vaiśyaḥ Śūdraścha Bāhīkas 'tato bhavati nāpitaḥ | Nāpitaścha tato bhūtvā punar bhavati Brāhmaṇaḥ | Dvijo bhūtvā cha tatraiva punar dāso 'bhijāyate | Bhavaty ekaḥ kule vipraḥ prasṛishṭāḥ kāmachāriṇaḥ | Gāndhārāḥ Madrakāśchaiva Bāhīkāśchālpachetasaḥ. "There a Bāhīka, born a Brāhman, becomes afterwards a Kshatriya, a Vaiśya, or a Śūdra, and eventually a barber. And again the barber becomes a Brāhman. And once again the Brāhman there is born a slave. One Brāhman alone is born in a family among the senseless Gāndhāras, Madras, and Bāhīkas; the [other brothers] act as they will without restraint."

[13] These expressions, "dharma-vahyâḥ" and "vâhish-kṛitâḥ," seem to contain a play on the name of the Bâhîkas. This tribe is mentioned in the S'. P. Br. i. 7, 3, 8, quoted above, p. 202; where it is said that they gave to Agni the name of Bhava. This reference to their recognition of one of the Indian gods, without any depreciatory allusion to their manners, may perhaps be held to indicate that the author of the Brâhmaṇa did not hold them in such low esteem as the speaker in the Mahâbhârata. See also the quotations from Pâṇini in note 142, p. 354.

In the Rājataraṅginī, i. 307, ff., the Gāndhāra Brāhmans are thus characterized: — Agrahārān jagṛihire Gāndhāra-brāhmaṇās tataḥ | samāna-śīlās tasyaiva dhruvaṁ te 'pi dvijādhamāḥ | Bhaginī-varga-sambhoga-nirlajjāḥ Mlechha-vaṁśajāḥ | Snushā-sangati-saktāścha dāra-dāḥ santi pāpinaḥ | Vastubhāvais tathā bhāṭya bhāryyā-vikraya-kāriṇaḥ | paropabhogitās teshāṁ nirlajjās tarhi yoshitaḥ | "Then the Gāndhāra Brāhmans seized upon rent-free lands; for these most degraded of priests were of the same disposition as that [tyrannical prince.] These sinners, sprung from Mlechhas, are so shameless as to corrupt their own sisters and daughters-in-law, and to offer their wives to others, hiring and selling them, like commodities, for money. Their women being thus given up to strangers, are consequently shameless."

M. Troyer remarks (vol. ii. 317) that "the inhabitants of the Panjāb are in this passage of the Mahābh. named generally Bāhīkas and Araṭṭas, while the Gāndhāras are associated with the different tribes into which these inhabitants are subdivided, such as the Prasthalas and Madras, in such a way that it can scarcely be doubted that the former (the Gāndhāras) lived in their neighbourhood, diffused like them between the six rivers of that country. . . The Sindhu-Gāndhāras mentioned, Rāj. i. 66, lived on the Indus."

And Wilson says (As. Res. xv. 105): "According to the Mahābh.

the Gandhari are not only met with upon crossing the Setlej and proceeding towards the Airāvatī (Ravi), or where Strabo places Gandaris, but they are scattered along with other tribes throughout the Panjāb, as far as to the Indus, when we approach Gandaritis. According also to our text (Rāj. i. 66) one body of the Gandhari appear to occupy a division of their own on the last river, which is named after that very circumstance, Sindhu-Gandhar, and these may have extended westward as far as the modern Candahar." In his Vishṇu-Pur., 1st ed., p. 191, note 83, the same writer says of the Gāndhāras: "These are also a people of the north-west, found both on the west of the Indus, and in the Panjāb, and well known to classical authors as the Gandarii and Gandaridæ." See also Rawlinson's Herodotus, iv. pp. 216, 217.

NOTE M.—Page 356.

Lassen, Ind. Ant. i. 527, remarks as follows: "The opinion that the original seats of these [the Indian and Iranian] nations are to be sought here in [the extreme east of the Iranian highlands], receives great confirmation from the fact, that we find branches of these nations on both sides of this lofty range; for the ancient inhabitants of Casghar, Yarkhand, Khoten, Aksu, Turfān, and Khamil are Tājīks and speak Persian; it is from this point only that they are diffused towards the interior of upland Asia; so that their most powerful germ seems to have been planted on this range."

And Professor H. H. Wilson says: "Without extending the limits of India, however, too far to the north, there is no reason to doubt that the valleys of the Indian Caucasus were properly included within them, and that their inhabitants, as far as to the Pamer mountains and Badakhshān, were Indians, who may have been at first tributary to Persia, and afterwards subjects of some branches of the Greek race of Bactrian kings."—Ariana Antiqua, p. 134.

Badakhshān is the country on the banks of the Oxus near its sources, situated between lat. 36° and 38° north, and lying eastward from Balkh. Pamer lies in the same direction. See the map in Ariana Ant. p. 214, or that of Ancient India in Lassen's Ind. Ant., vol. ii.

NOTE N.—Page 396, note 83, line 6.

The passage of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa here referred to is as follows: xiii. 8, 1, 5: Chatussrakti | devāś cha asurāś cha ubhaye prājāpatyāḥ dikshv aspardhanta | te devāḥ asurān sapatnān bhrātṛivyān digbhyo 'nudanta | te 'dikkāḥ parābhavan | tasmād yāḥ daivyaḥ prajāś chatussraktīni tāḥ śmaśānāni kurvate | atha yāḥ āsuryaḥ prāchyās tvad ye tvat parimaṇḍalāni | te 'nudanta hy enān digbhyaḥ. "Four-cornered. The gods and Asuras, both the offspring of Prajāpati, contended in the regions. The gods expelled the Asuras, their rivals and enemies, from the regions" [conceived, apparently, as square, or angular]. "They, being regionless, were overcome. Hence, the people who are divine construct their graves four-cornered; whilst the Eastern people, who are akin to the Asuras, construct them round. For the gods drove the Asuras from the regions."

NOTE O.—Page 443.

A question of considerable interest here presents itself, on which it may be desirable to make a few remarks, viz., whether the indigenous or non-Arian races, who now speak Tamil, and the other languages of the southern group, are of the same family as those tribes who were brought into contact with the Āryas on their first arrival in India, and the remains of whose languages have survived in the vernacular dialects of northern Hindustan. The late Rev. Dr. J. Stevenson appears to have been of opinion that the non-Sanskrit element in the northern and southern vernacular dialects was originally to a great extent the same, and that the people who spoke them also belonged to one race. He remarks (Art. vii., Journ. Bombay Branch Royal As. Soc., No. XII. for 1849), "It is usually taken also for granted that between the non-Sanskrit parts of the northern and southern families of languages there is no bond of union, and that the only connecting link between the two is their Sanskrit element. It is to this last proposition that the writer of this paper demurs." He afterwards proceeds: "The theory which has suggested itself to the writer as the most probable is, that on the entrance of the tribes which now form the highest castes, those of the Brahmans, Kshattriyas and

Waisyas, into India, they found a rude aboriginal population, speaking a different language, having a different religion, and different customs and manners; that by arms and policy the original inhabitants were all subdued, and in great numbers expelled from the northern regions, those that remained mixing with the new population, and being first their slaves, and then forming the Sudra caste. The language of these aborigines is supposed to have belonged to the southern family of languages, the most perfect remaining type of which family is the Tamil." The fundamental affinities of the northern and southern languages are then discussed by Dr. Stevenson in various papers in the same journal, which appeared in the years 1851 and 1852. Dr. Caldwell, however, has expressed his dissent from Dr. Stevenson, both in regard to the affinities between the pre-Aryan races themselves of the north and of the south, and their original languages. (See pp. 38, ff. and 69, ff. of his Dravidian Grammar). In regard to the languages he remarks (p. 39, ff.) that the hypothesis of their affinity does not appear to him to have been established; as though various analogies in grammatical structure seem to connect the non-Sanskrit element in the north Indian idioms with the Scythian or Tartar tongues, yet that no special relationship of the former to the Dravidian languages has yet been proved to exist. If the non-Sanskrit element in the northern vernaculars (p. 40) had been Dravidian, we might have expected to find in their vocabularies a few primary Dravidian roots such as the words for head, hand, foot, eye, ear; whereas Dr. Caldwell has been unable to discover any trustworthy analogy in words belonging to this class. Further research, he adds (p. 42), may possibly disclose the existence in the northern vernaculars of distinctively Dravidian forms and roots, but their presence does not yet appear to be proved; and he therefore concludes that the non-Sanskrit portion of the northern languages cannot safely be placed in the same class with the southern, except, perhaps, in the sense of both being Scythian rather than Arian. The same is the opinion of the Rev. Dr. J. Wilson, who in his "Notes on the Marāthī Language," in the preface to the second edition of Molesworth's Marāthī Dictionary (p. xxii), thus writes:—"The Scythian words in the Marāthī are, in general, like those of the other Turanian tongues, more in their forms than in their sounds. They differ very much from the vocables of the Turanian languages in the south of India (the Canarese, Telugu, Tāmul, and Malayālam), the comparison of the dictionaries and grammars of which throws but little light on the Marāthī; and though they may be classed in the same tribe of languages, they evidently belong to a different family, to a different Turanian immigration into India, yet to be explored by the combined labours of the philologist and the ethnographer." Regarding the question whether the non-Arian tribes of the north and the south are themselves of the same stock, Dr. Caldwell remarks (p. 72) that the Dravidians may be confidently regarded as the earliest inhabitants of India, or at least as the earliest that entered from the north-west, but it is not so easy to determine whether they are the people whom the Arians found in possession, or whether they had been already expelled from the north by the irruption of another Scythian race. Without deciding this point positively, Dr. Caldwell is led by the apparent differences between the Dravidian languages and the aboriginal element in the northern vernaculars, to incline to the supposition that the Dravidian idioms belong to an older stage of Scythian speech; and if this view be correct, it seems to follow that the ancestors of the Scythian or non-Arian portion of the north Indian population must have immigrated into India at a later period than the Dravidians, and must have expelled the Dravidians from the greater portion of north India before they were themselves subjugated by a new race of Arian invaders from the north-west. In any case Dr. Caldwell is persuaded that it was not by the Arians that the Dravidians were expelled from northern India, and that, as no reference occurs either in Sanskrit or Dravidian tradition to any hostilities between these two races, their primitive relations could never have been otherwise than amicable. The pre-Arian Scythians, by whom Dr. Caldwell supposes that the Dravidians may have been expelled from the northern provinces, are not, he considers, to be confounded with the Kolas, Santhals, Bhills, Doms, and other aboriginal tribes of the north, who, he supposes, may have retired into the forests before the Dravidians, or, like the Bhotan tribes, have entered into India from the north-east. The languages of these forest tribes Dr. Caldwell conceives to exhibit no affinity with the aboriginal element in the north-Indian vernaculars. We have therefore, according to the views just summarily expounded, four separate strata, so to speak, of population in India:

First and earliest, the forest-tribes, such as the Kolas, Santhals, Bhills, etc., etc., who may have entered India from the north-east.

Second. The Dravidians, who entered India from the north-west, and either advanced voluntarily towards their ultimate seats in the south of the peninsula, or were driven by the pressure of subsequent hordes, following them from the same direction.

Third. We have the race (alluded to at the end of the preceding head, No. 2) of Scythian or non-Arian immigrants from the north-west, whose language afterwards united with the Sanskrit to form the Prākṛit dialects of northern India.

Fourth. The Arian invaders who (after separating first from the other branches of the Indo-Germanic stock, and last of all from the Persian branch of that family) advanced into India, drove before them the non-Arian tribes who were previously in possession of the Panjāb and other parts of the north-west provinces of India, and after organizing Brahmanical communities, and founding Brahmanical institutions in the north, gradually diffused themselves to the east and south, and eventually extended their discipline, and to some degree their sacred language, to the remotest parts of the peninsula.

To whatever degree the details of this theory may be capable of proof, the general conclusion, at least, seems to be undeniable, viz., that the ancestors, both of the Dravidian nations, and of other non-Sanskritic tribes now occupying different parts of India, were in occupation of that country before the immigration of the Arians; and that the former could not (as is erroneously intimated in various Puranic and other traditions) have been descended from the latter. If the Dravidian Cholas, Keralas, etc., were originally Kshatriyas who fell away from Brahmanism, they must have been reconverted to that system; a double process of which there is no historical proof.

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

i. Page 47, lines 21–24.

This remark seems to be incorrect. The Scholiast could not have meant to denote the Mahārāshṭrī, or any other of the provincial Prākṛits, by the term "deśi," as they all embraced a "tatsama" and a "tadbhava" element also. He could only, when using the word "deśi," have referred to the local element in each. See pp. 49, 427, ff.

ii. Page 249, lines 18, ff.

A leanred friend informs me that the Sanskrit astu does not correspond to the Latin esto, which in old Latin is estod; that the latter word coincides with such Sanskrit forms as yajatāt, etc.; and that the same holds good of the Greek estō. He also states that santu (Sanskrit) is not = sunto (Latin); and that the Greek ēs, ēn, do not correspond to the Sanskrit āsīs, āsīt, but to the Vedic ās (compare Böhtlingk and Roth s.v. 1, as; where Pāṇini vii. 3, 97, and R.V. x. 85, 7; x. 129, 3, and x. 149, 2, are referred to). Bopp. Comp. Gr., 2nd ed., ii. p. 410, gives the Sanskrit āsam, āsīs, āsīt, and ās, as corresponding to the Greek ēn, ēs, ēs, ēn; and Schleicher in the table in p. 710, of his Compendium, 3rd ed., gives estō (Gr.) and esto (Lat.) as corresponding to the Sanskrit astu, and sunto (Lat.) as coinciding with the Sanskrit santu.

iii. Page 250, line 14.

Darś, dadarśa, correspond both in sense and sound to derkō, dedorka.

iv. Page 251, lines 25–27.

Instead of the Sanskrit navatā, samatā, lṛghutā, such Vedic forms as arishṭatāti, devatāti, sarvatāti, should have been given as the more exact equivalents of the Zend, Greek, and Latin words there quoted. See Bopp's Comp. Grammar, 2nd ed., vol. iii. pp. 218 (where the Latin senecta, juventa, vindicta, are specified as the forms corresponding to the Sanskrit navatā, etc.), and 221. See also Schleicher's Compendium, 3rd ed., p. 425. f.

v. Page 251, lines 28, ff.

Compare with the Sanskrit and Greek forms in tis and sis, the Latin mens, mentis; ars, artis; fors, fortis; and vestis. See Schleicher's Compendium, p. 437.

vi. Page 253.

In the appendix to his edition of Ujjvalaladatta, Prof. Aufrecht has pointed out a number of forms which correspond in Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin.

vii. Page 264, line 1; and 289, line 6, and note 66.

See Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. 1, rudh; where rodhati in R.V. viii. 43, 6, and vi rodhat, in R.V. i. 67, 5 (9), are derived from rudh, the old form of ruh, and are explained in the sense of "growing." See also Benfey's translation of the latter passage in Orient und Occident, i. 596.

viii. Page 347, lines 8, ff; 348, lines 25, ff., and 350, f.

Compare note 12 in the first preface above, p. xxv.

ix. Page 393, line 19; 395, line 21; 396, line 15; and 418, note 124.

The points referred to in these passages are further illustrated by the following lines from the Mahābhārata, ii. 1169, ff.: Tataḥ Śūrpārakaṁ chaiva Tālākaṭam athāpi cha | vaśe chakre mahātejāḥ Daṇḍakāṁś cha mahābalaḥ | 1170 | Sāgara-dvīpa-vāsāṁś cha nṛipatīn Mlechha-yoni-jān | Nishādān purushādāṁś cha Karṇaprāvaraṇān api | 1171 | Ye cha Kālamukhāḥ nāma nara-rākshasa-yonayaḥ | kṛitsnaṁ Koligiriṁ chaiva Surabhīpattanaṁ tathā | . . . . 1173 | Ekapādāṁś cha purushān Kerakān vana-vāsinaḥ | nagarīṁ Sanjayantīṁ cha pāshaṇḍaṁ Karahāṭakam | 1175 | Dūtair eva vase chakre- | 1176 | Tataḥ kachchha-gato dhīmān dūtān Mādravatī-sutaḥ | 1177 | Preshayāmāsa rājendra Paulastyāya mahātmane | Vibhīshaṇāya dharmātmā prīti-pūrvam arindama | 1178 | Śa chāsya pratijagrāha śāsanam prīti-pūrvakam | "1169. Then the glorious and mighty warrior reduced to subjection Śūrpāraka, Tālākaṭa, the Daṇḍakas, (1170) the kings of Mlechha race, who inhabited the islands of the ocean, the Nishādas, the men-eaters, the Karṇaprāvaraṇas, [men whose ears served them for coverings], (1171) the Kālamukhas sprung from men and Rākshasas, the whole of Kolagiri and Surabhīpattana . . . . 1173. He then by his heralds subjected the Kerakas, one-footed men living in forests, the city Sanjayantī, and the wicked Karahāṭaka . . . 1176. Then the wise and righteous son of Mādravatī, arrived in the low-lying tract, sent messengers amicably to the great son of Pulastya, Vibhīshaṇa, who received his commands in the same spirit." In verse 1837, the "man-eating Romakas," and in v. 1875, the Karṇaprāvaraṇas, are again mentioned.

The monkeys despatched to seek for Sītā are desired to visit among other countries those of the following races:—Rāmayaṇa iv., 40, 26, ff. (Bombay ed., =iv. 40, 29, ff., Gorr. ed.): Karṇaprāvaraṇāṁś chaiva tathā chāpy Oshṭhakarṇakāḥ | Ghoralohamukhāś chaiva javanāś chaika-pādakāḥ | akshayāḥ balavantaś cha tathaiva purushādakāḥ | Kirātāś tīkshṇachūḍāś cha hemābhāḥ priya-darśanāḥ | āma-mīnāśanāś chāpi Kirātāḥ dvīpavāsinaḥ | antarjalacharāḥ ghorāḥ naravyāghrāḥ iti smṛitāḥ. "The Kārṇaprāvaraṇas (men whose ears served for coverings), the Oshṭhakarṇakas (people whose ears extended to their lips), the dreadful Lohamukhas (iron-faced-men), swift, and one-footed, undecaying, strong, men-eaters (a kind of Rākshasas according to the commentator), the Kirātās, with sharp-pointed hair-knots, gold-coloured, and pleasant to behold; and the dreadful Kirātas, who are islanders, and eat raw fish, live in the waters, and are men-tigers (men below and tigers above, according to the commentator)." One of the Rākshasīs mentioned in the Mahābh. iii. 6137, is called ekapādā, "the one-footed."

x. Page 416, line 4.

The Rākshasas are in other places also described as following Brahmanical observances. Thus in the sequel of the story of Gautama (from the Mahābhārata xii. 6293, ff.), above referred to in pp. 365, f., and 418, note 124,—which is told as an illustration of ingratitude,—it is narrated that in consequence of the remonstrances of the other Brāhman, the hero of the story, after pleading poverty as an excuse for his mode of life, left the Dasyu village in which he had been living, and went towards the ocean. While he is halting in a delightful forest under a tree, a crane, called Rājadharman, son of Kaśyapa and the goddess Dākshāyaṇī, and a friend of Brahmā, arrives in the evening from the heaven of that deity. Gautama, being hungry and thirsty, is tempted to kill and eat him. The bird, however, welcomes him as a guest to his house, and entertains him with the utmost kindness and hospitality. Gautama then, in answer to an inquiry of his host, explains that he is indigent, and on his way to the sea-coast in search of the means of subsistence. The bird promises to procure him riches, and in the morning sends him to a friend of his own, a Rākshasa king, called Virūpaksha, who lived not far off, and who, he said, would fulfil all Gautama's aspirations (v. 6356). The Brāhman accordingly proceeds to the court of the Rākshasa chief, where he is eagerly welcomed. In answer to the Rākshasa's questions, he avows that he has married a Śūdra woman as his second wife (punarbhū). Notwithstanding this confession, he is invited to a feast to be given to a thousand learned Brāhmans whom the Rākshasa chief was to entertain on that day (vv. 6376, ff.) These Brāhmans were all well fed, received large presents of jewels, and were assured that on that day they would receive no molestation from any Rākshasas (vv. 6392, f.). Gautama, too, got his share of gold, which weighed so heavily, that he could scarcely carry it away to his place of sojourn in the forest, where he sat down wearied and hungry. He is, however, welcomed and entertained by the crane Rājadharman, but resolves to slay his host, that he may have somewhat to eat on the way home (v. 6401). He accordingly kills the crane while asleep, plucks and roasts him (v. 6403), and sets out on his journey homeward. After a time, the Rākshasa king is apprehensive that something may have befallen his friend Rājadharman, who had not come to visit him as usual, and sends to ascertain the cause of his absence (6407, ff.). The bird's skeleton is discovered, and Gautama is pursued and brought to the Rākshasa king, who, with his ministers and purohitas, weeps at the sight of his friend's remains (v. 6418); and commands the malefactor to be slain and his flesh given to the Rākshasas to eat. They, however, beg to decline eating the flesh of such a sinner, and say it should be given to the Dasyus. But even the latter refuse to eat it. Both Rājadharman and Gautama are, however, afterwards restored to life.

The latter returns to his old haunts, and begets wicked sons on this Śūdra woman, his second wife. He is in consequence cursed by the gods, and doomed to hell (vv. 6445, ff.).

xi. Page 343, lines 8 and 19.

The number of the periodical called "Nature," for 14th Sept., 1871, contains an article by Prof. Max Müller, on Major-General Cunningham's "Ancient Geography of India," in which R.V. v. 53, 9, and x. 75, 6, are translated, and some remarks on the Kubhā, Krumu, and Gomatī rivers are added.

xii. Page 439, line 14.

As this sheet is passing through the press, I find that it is stated by a writer in the "Cornhill Magazine" for November, 1871, p. 570, f., that Dr. Caldwell is wrong in asserting that the Dravidians are a Turanian people; and that in reality they "represent lineally an offshoot from the great parent stock which left the fatherland long before Sanskrit was grown into vigour, and about the same period that the Teutonic wave flowed northwards into Europe. There is scarcely a Dravidian root which does not appear in Gothic, Anglosaxon, or Icelandic." As at present informed, I am unable to say whether any detailed proof of these assertions has been, or can be, adduced.

METRICAL TRANSLATIONS.

I REPRINT here two metrical translations from Indian authors, which have already been published, though they are but very slightly connected with the other contents of this volume.

I. Asita and Buddha, or the Indian Simeon.

In the Lalita Vistara—a legendary history in prose and verse of the life of Buddha, the great Indian Saint, and founder of the religion which bears his name—it is related that a Ṛishi, or inspired sage, named Asita, who dwelt on the skirts of the Himālaya mountains, became informed, by the occurrence of a variety of portents, of the birth of the future lawgiver, as the son of King Śuddhōdana, in the city of Kapilavastu, in Northern India, and went to pay his homage to the infant. I have tried to reproduce the legend in the following verses. The similarity of some of the incidents to portions of the narrative in St. Luke ii. 25, ff., will strike the reader.

I may mention that the Buddhist books speak also of earlier Buddhas, that the word means "the enlightened," or "the intelligent," and that Buddha also bore the appellations of Gautama, and of Śākyasinha, and Śākyamuni—i.e., the lion, and the devotee, of the tribe of the Śākyas, to which he belonged.

That I have not at all exaggerated the expressions in the text which speak of Buddha as a deliverer or redeemer, or assimilated his character more than was justifiable to the Christian conception of a Saviour, will be clear to any one who can examine the original for himself. In a passage quoted in the first volume of this work, p. 509, Kumārila Bhaṭṭa, a renowned Brahmanical opponent of the Buddhists, while charging Buddha with presumption and transgression of the rules of his caste in assuming the functions of a religious teacher (with which, as belonging to the Kshatriya, and not to the Brahmanical, class, he had no right to interfere), ascribes to him these words—"Let all the evils (or sins) flowing from the corruption of the Kali age" (the fourth, or most degenerate, age of the world) "fall upon me; but let the world be redeemed!" If we were to judge from this passage, it might seem that the character of a vicarious redeemer was claimed by, or at least ascribed to, Buddha. I am informed by Mr. R. C. Childers, however, that in his opinion the idea of Buddha's having suffered vicariously for the sins of men is foreign to Buddhism, and indeed, opposed to the whole spirit and tendency of the system. According to him the Buddhist idea is simply this, that Buddha voluntarily underwent great sufferings and privations during a long course of probation, in order that he might attain the truth, and teach it to men, and so redeem them from worldly existence.

Another valued correspondent, Professor E. B. Cowell, is unable to think that the sentiment ascribed to Buddha by Kumārila is foreign to his system, as it is thoroughly in accordance with the idea of the six pāramitas. But he does not understand it as implying any theological notion of vicarious atonement, but rather the enthusiastic utterance of highly-strung moral sympathy and charity; and would compare it with St. Paul's words in Romans ix. 3, and explain it in just the same way as, he thinks, Chrysostom does that verse. He further refers to the existence of numerous Buddhist stories in the Kathāsaritsāgara, among which is one from lvi. 153, viz., the story of the disobedient son with a red-hot iron wheel on his head, who says:—Pāpino 'nye 'pi [vi?] muchyantām pṛithvyām tat-pātakair api | ā pāpakshayam etad me chakram bhrāmyatu mūrdhani | "Let other sinners on earth be freed from their sins; and until the removal of [their] sin let this wheel turn round upon my head." In either case it is only a wish, and it is not pretended that it really had, or ever could have, any effect on other men. It only expresses a perfection of charity. The same idea (borrowed, as Mr. Cowell supposes, from Buddha) occurs in the Bhāgavata Purāna, ix. ch. 21. The "immortal word" (amṛitaṁ vachaḥ, v. 11) contained in the 12th verse, and ascribed to the pious and benevolent king Rantideva,—who himself endured hunger and thirst to relieve others,—is as follows: Na kāmaye 'haṁ gatim īśvarāt parām ashṭarddhi-yuktām apunarbhavaṁ vā | ārtim prapadye 'khila-dehabhājām antaḥsthito yena bhavanty aduḥkhāḥ | "I desire not from God that highest destiny which is attended with the eight perfections, nor do I ask to be exempted from future births. I seek to live within all corporeal beings, and endure their pains, that so they may be freed from suffering." On this the commentator annotates thus: Para-duḥkhā-sahishṉutayā sarveshāṁ duḥkhaṁ svayam bhoktum āśāste | . . . . . "akhiladeha-bhājām ārtiṁ" duḥkhaṁ tat-tad-bhoktṛi-rūpeṇa "antaḥ-sthitaḥ" sann aham "prapadye" prāpnuyām ity evaṁ kāmaye |)

On Himālaya's lonely steep
There lived of old a holy sage,
Of shrivelled form, and bent with age,
Inured to meditation deep.

He—when great Buddha had been born,
The glory of the Sākya race,
Endowed with every holy grace,
To save the suffering world forlorn—

Beheld strange portents, signs which taught
The wise that that auspicious time
Had witnessed some event sublime,
With universal blessing fraught.

The sky with joyful gods was thronged:
He heard their voice with glad acclaim
Resounding loudly Buddha's name,
While echoes clear their shouts prolonged.

The cause exploring, far and wide
The sage's vision ranged; with awe
Within a cradle laid he saw
Far off the babe, the Sākyas' pride.

With longing seized this child to view
At hand, and clasp, and homage pay,
Athwart the sky he took his way
By magic art, and swan-like flew;

And came to King Suddhōdan's gates,
And entrance craved—"Go, royal page,
And tell thy lord an ancient sage
To see the King permission waits."

The page obeyed, and joined his hands
Before the prince, and said—"A sage,
Of shrivelled form, and bowed with age,
Before the gate, my sovereign, stands,

"And humbly asks to see the King."
To whom Suddhōdan cried—"We greet
All such with joy; with honour meet
The holy man before us bring."

The saint beside the monarch stood,
And spake his blessing—"Thine be health,
With length of life, and might, and wealth;
And ever seek thy people's good."

With all due forms, and meet respect,
The King received the holy man,
And bade him sit; and then began—
"Great sage, I do not recollect

"That I thy venerable face
Have ever seen before; allow
That I inquire what brings thee now
From thy far-distant dwelling-place."

"To see thy babe," the saint replies,
"I come from Himālaya's steeps."
The king rejoined—"My infant sleeps;
A moment wait until he rise."

"Such great ones ne'er," the Ṛiṣhi spake,
"In torpor long their senses steep,
Nor softly love luxurious sleep;
The infant Prince will soon awake."

The wondrous child, alert to rise,
At will his slumbers light dispelled.
His father's arms the infant held
Before the sage's longing eyes.

The babe beholding, passing bright,
More glorious than the race divine,
And marked with every noble sign,[14]
The saint was whelmed with deep delight;

And crying—"Lo! an infant graced
With every charm of form I greet!"
He fell before the Buddha's feet,
With fingers joined, and round him paced.[15]

Next round the babe his arms he wound,
And "One," he said, "of two careers
Of fame awaits in coming years
The child in whom these signs are found.

[14] Certain corporeal marks are supposed by Indian writers to indicate the future greatness of those children in whom they appear. Of these, thirty-two primary, and eighty secondary, marks are referred to in the original as being visible on Buddha's person.

[15] The word here imperfectly translated, means, according to Professor H. H. Wilson's Dictionary, "reverential salutation, by circumambulating a person or object, keeping the right side towards them."

"If such an one at home abide,
He shall become a King, whose sway
Supreme a mighty arm'd array
On earth shall stablish far and wide.

"If, spurning worldly pomp as vain,
He choose to lead a tranquil life,
And wander forth from home and wife,
He then a Buddha's rank shall gain."

He spoke, and on the infant gazed,
When tears suffused his aged eyes;
His bosom heaved with heavy sighs;
Then King Suddhōdan asked, amazed—

"Say, holy man, what makes thee weep,
And deeply sigh? Does any fate
Malign the royal child await?
May heavenly powers my infant keep!"

"For thy fair infant's weal no fears Disturb me, King," the Rishi cried;
"No ill can such a child betide:
My own sad lot commands my tears.

"In every grace complete, thy son
Of truth shall perfect insight[16] gain,
And far sublimer fame attain
Than ever lawgiver has won.

"He such a Wheel[17] of sacred lore
Shall speed on earth to roll, as yet
Hath never been in motion set
By priest, or sage, or god of yore.

"The world of men and gods to bless,
The way of rest and peace to teach,
A holy law thy son shall preach—
A law of stainless righteousness.

"By him shall suffering men be freed
From weakness, sickness, pain and grief;
From all the ills shall find relief
Which hatred, love, illusion, breed.

"His hand shall loose the chains of all
Who groan in fleshly bonds confined;
With healing touch the wounds shall bind
Of those whom pain's sharp arrows gall.

"His words of power shall put to flight
The dull array of leaden clouds
Which helpless mortals' vision shrouds,
And clear their intellectual sight.

"By him shall men who, now untaught,
In devious paths of error stray,
Be led to find a perfect way—
To final calm[18] at last be brought.

"But once, O King, in many years,
The figtree[19] somewhere flowers perhaps;
So after countless ages' lapse,
A Buddha once on earth appears.

"And now, at length, this blessed time
Has come: for he who cradled lies
An infant there before thine eyes
Shall be a Buddha in his prime.

"Full, perfect, insight gaining, he Shall rescue endless myriads tost
On life's rough ocean waves, and lost,
And grant them immortality.[20]

"But I am old, and frail, and worn;
I shall not live the day to see
When this thy wondrous child shall free
From woe the suffering world forlorn.

"'Tis this mine own unhappy fate
Which bids me mourn, and weep, and sigh;
The Buddha's triumph now is nigh,
But ah! for me it comes too late!"

When thus the aged saint, inspired,
Had all the infant's greatness told,
The King his wondrous son extolled,
And sang, with pious ardour fired—

"Thee, child, th' immortals worship all,
The great Physician, born to cure
All ills that hapless men endure;
I, too, before thee prostrate fall."

And now—his errand done—the sage,
Dismissed with gifts, and honour due,
Athwart the æther swan-like flew,
And reached again his hermitage.

[16] The term here translated "insight" is derived from the same root as the word "Buddha," and means "intelligence," or "enlightenment."

[17] The term thus rendered, dharmachakra, expresses a somewhat singular figure. It denotes the "wheel of the law," or the "wheel of righteousness," or the "wheel of religion."

[18] The word in the original is nirvâṇa, a term of which the sense is disputed—some scholars esteeming it to mean absolute annihilation; others explaining it as the extinction of passion, the attainment of perfect dispassion. Mr. Childers informs me that he considers nirvâṇa to signify active bliss on earth for a brief period, followed (upon death) by total annihilation. See a letter from him on this subject in No. 62 of "Trübner's Literary Record" for October, 1870, p. 27.

[19] The tree referred to in the original is the Udumbara, the Ficus glomerata.

[20] Amrite cha pratishthâpayishyati.

II. Rāvaṇa and Vedavatī.

The Rāmāyaṇa, as is well known to students of Indian literature, relates the adventures of Rāma, son of the King of Ayodhyā (Oude), who, in consequence of a domestic intrigue, became an exile from his country, and wandered about the southern regions of India in company with his brother Lakshmaṇa and his wife Sītā. Sītā was carried off by Rāvaṇa, King of the Rākshasas (demons or goblins), to his capital Lankā, in the island of Ceylon. Ultimately, Rāvaṇa was slain in battle by Rāma, who (according, at least, to the poem in its existing, and perhaps interpolated, form) was an incarnation of the supreme god Vishṇu, and Sītā was rescued. Rāma returned to Ayodhyā after his father's death, and succeeded him on the throne. The legend now freely translated is taken from the supplementary book of the Rāmāyaṇa, chapter 17, and relates a passage in the earlier life of Rāvaṇa. Vedavatī, the heroine of the story, agreeably to the Indian theory of the transmigration of souls, was subsequently re-born in the form of Sītā.

Where, clothed in everlasting snow,
Himālay's giant peaks arise
Against the ambient azure skies,
And bright as molten silver glow—
While, far beneath, the solitudes
Are green with Devadāru[21] woods—

It chanced that once the demon lord
Who ruled in Lankā's isle afar,
And, mounted on his airy car,
Those northern tracts sublime explored,
Alighted there upon the ground,
And roamed the forests wild around.

And, lo, he saw a maiden, fair
And brilliant as a goddess, clad
In garb ascetic, rude and sad,
Deform with squalid matted hair:
And all at once with passion fired,
The damsel's secret thus inquired:

"How is it, tell me, lovely maid—
Whose virgin charms subdue the heart,
Whose form with every grace of art
In gold and gems should be arrayed—
Thou dost this doleful garb assume,
Which ill beseems thy youthful bloom?

"Whose daughter art thou? What hath led
Thy choice to such a life austere?
O blest were he whom, lady dear
And beauteous, thou should'st deign to wed!"
Him, duly honoured as a guest,
The fair ascetic thus addressed:

"My father was a holy sage;
From him I sprang as, calm, and dead
To earthly aims and joys, he read
Th' eternal Veda's hallowed page:
The voice which spoke within the Book
In me a form corporeal took.

"The gods, enamoured, all aspired
The honour of my hand to gain:
Their ardent pleas were urged in vain;
A loftier aim my father fired;
For he had vowed, with lawful pride,
I could be only Vishnu's bride.

"Incensed at his rejection, one
Among the suitors, proud but base,
The chieftain of the Daitya race,[22]
Avenged the slight the sage had shown:
By night he nigh my father crept,
And vilely slew him while he slept.

[21] Pinus devadaru, which signifies, the "divine tree;" the Deodar, a magnificent tree, both n height and girth.

[22] The Daityas in character correspond with the Titans of the Greeks.

"That I my sire's high aim may gain,
And win great Vishnu for my lord,
I lead this life, by thee abhorred,
Of hard austerity and pain;
And, till the god himself impart,
I wed his image in my heart.

"I know thee, Rāvan, who thou art:
By virtue of this life austere
All hidden things to me are clear;
I bid thee hence; avaunt, depart!"
But by the maiden's charms subdued,
The demon still his suit pursued.

"Proud art thou, lady fair, whose soul
So high aspires; but such sublime
Devotion suits not well thy prime,
Nor stern and painful self-control.
The old may so their days employ;
But thou should'st live for love and joy.

"I am the lord of Lankā's isle;
Thy peerless charms my bosom fire;
If thou wilt crown my heart's desire,
And ever on me sweetly smile,
Then thou, my favoured queen, shalt know
The bliss that power and wealth bestow.

"And who is Vishnu, pray, declare,
Whose form thy fancy paints so bright?
Can he in prowess, grandeur, might,
And magic gifts, with me compare?
A phantom vain no longer chase,
The offer of my love embrace."

To whom the holy maid replied—
"Presumptuous fiend, thy boast is loud:
No voice but thine, profanely proud,
Hath ever Vishnu's might defied.
Heaven, earth, and hell, all own him lord—
By all their hosts and powers adored."

She spake; the fiend with rage was fired:
The damsel's hair he rudely grasped;
Thus by his hated fingers clasped,
She tore her locks, and cried, inspired—
"This insult I may not survive:
I enter now this fire, alive.

"Yet though I die, I once again
Shall live to recompense this wrong.
And though my vengeance slumber long,
My pious works their meed shall gain,
And I shall re-appear on earth,
A virgin fair of royal birth."

She ceased. With fixed resolve to die,
The fire she entered, calm, elate;
When all at once, to celebrate
This deed heroic, from the sky
There fell a shower of fragrant flowers,
Rained down by gods from heavenly bowers.

Nor was this maid's prediction vain.
Attaining all her heart's desire,
As Sītā she was born again,
The daughter of a royal sire,
And won great Rāma for her lord,
Whom men as Vishnu's Self adored.

And now the demon-king profane,
Whose coming doom had been foretold
By that insulted maid of old,
By Rāma's hand in fight was slain.
For how could hellish power withstand Incarnate Vishnu's murderous brand?

INDEX TO PROPER NAMES AND MATTERS.

A
Abhidharmapitaka, 56
Abhīra, 428
Abhīrikā, 46
Ābhīrī, dialect, 46
Abu Sin, 349
Achcha, see Atsu and Utsu
Achitas, 391
Ādarśa, 400
Adharavana Vyākaraṇam, 428
Adhvaryu, 188
Aditi, 297
Āditya (the sun), 188
Æschylus quoted, 293
Agamemnon, 196
Agastya, 409, 413 ff.
Agni, 175, 181, 185, 188 f, 197, 201 f, 211 f, 323, 361, 451, etc.
Agnihotra, 404
Agni purāṇa, 422
Agrāyaṇa, 177
Ahi, 388
Ahīśuva, 387
Ahriman, 480, see Angramainyus
Ahura Mazda, 298 f, 329 ff, 464, 471 ff.
Aindravāyava-graha-brāhmaṇa, 213
Airāvatī, 484, see Irāvatī
Airyama, 298
Airyama-vaējo, 329 ff, 480 f.
Aitareya Brāhmaṇa 181
i. 4—172
i. 23, 25—381 f.
ii. 19—397
v. 32—188
vii.
1, 22, 34—183, 353
13—184
18—364, 369
viii. 14, 23—324
38—183
Aitihāsikas, 175 f.
Akesines, 345
Akrīḍa, 422
Aksu, 484
Ākuli, 386, 396
Alexandria, 479
Alexander the Great, 344 f.
Alishung, 345
Allahabad pillar inscription, 104, 109
Āmād, 390
Amarakosha, 255, 404
Ameshaśpentas, 475
Amīr Taimur, 6
Anagnitra, 390
Anāsas, 392
Ānava, 377
Āndhra-dīpikā, 427
Andhrabhritya dynasty, 438
Andhra kaumudī, 428, 431
Andhrian Vishṇu, 428, 431
Andhra Rāya or Andhra Rayadoo, 431, 436, 438
Andhras, 364, 423, 427
Āndhra, 300, 478
Angas, 351 f, 357, 406, 454
Angiras, 197
Angirasas, 189, 383
Anglosaxons, 280
Angramainyus, 299, 330
Anindra, 373 f.
Anitabhā, 343 ff, 348 f
Anjana, 350
Annibi, 479
Annibian mountains, 479
Anthropophagi, 479
Anukramaṇī, 195, 361
Anuyājas, 175 f.
Anyadeśyam, 428
Apabhraṁśa, 46 ff, 52, 259, 428
Āpastamba, 179
Apayā, 345
Appakavīyam, 429
Āptya, 296
Arabic, 218 ff.
Arachosia, 314, 332
Araṇyanī, 393
Ararat, 481
Araṭṭas, 482 ff
Arbuda, 385, 387 f.
Ardhamāgadhī, dialect, 46, 50
Aria, Ariana, 318, 340
Ariabignes, Ariarathes, etc., etc., 293
Arii, 292
Arimanius (Ahriman) 472
Ariomardus, 292
Arizanti, 292
Ārjikīyā, 341, 345, 348
Ārjuni, 385
Arṇa, 347 f, 361
Arrian, Indica, 344
Aryaman, 297 f.
Āryas, 213, 282, 291, 354, 359 ff, 443
Āryāvarta, 303, 340, 400
Ashi, 331
Asiknī, 341, 345
Asita, the Indian Simeon, 494
Asmiræan mountains, 479
Aśoka, 56, 62 ff, 104, 132
Asura, 299
Asuras, 175, 202, 363, 485, etc., etc.
——, their castles, 378 ff.
Asutṛipas, 391, 418
Āśvalāyana, 179, 199, 298
Aśvatha, 461
Aśvins, 176, 360, 447, 471
Atharvan, 451, 460 f, 464
Atharvans, 189, 383
Atharvāngirasas, 460
Atharva Sanhitā, 187 ff, 445 ff.
Atharvaveda.
iii.
17, 4, 8—421

Atharvaveda.—continued.
iv.
16, 1, ff.—451
20, 4, 8—368
30, 4—209
v.
4, 1—328
22, 5, 7 f, 12, 14—351, 446
28, 9 f—383
x.
3, 11—388
4. 23—451
6, 10, 20—383
7, 20—189
xi. 7, 24—189
xii.
1, 11—349
1, 45—376
xviii.
2, 28—368, 387.
xix.
47, 50—451
62, 1—368
Āthrava, 456, 460, 464
Athwya, 296, 473
Atithigvā, 379, 385
Atri, 198, 388
Atsu Telugu, 429 f.
Aṭṭhakatha, 56, 62
Attock, 335
Atyarāti, 324
Audharvan Achary, 432
Audumbarāyaṇa, 177
Aufrecht, Prof. Th., his Catalogue, 167
———, art. in Jour. Ger. Or. Society, 343
———, art. in Ind. Stud. 195
———, on age of Atharvaveda, 450 ff.
———, on the relation of Prākṛit to Sanskrit, 131
———, on Vedic forms in Pāli, 72
———, quotations supplied by, 159, 400 ———, suggestions by, 205, 238, 359, etc.
———, his Ujjvalaladatta, 142, 490
Aupamanyava, 175, 195
Aurṇavābha, 176 f, 204
———, the demon, 371, 387
Auxasian mountains, 479
Avantī, dialect, 50
Avatārs, 203
Avesta, 459 f, 475 f.
Ayodhyā, 498
Āyu, 386.

B

Bactria, 457, 481
Bactrians, 457, 459
———— kings, 336, 484
———— language, 226
Badakhshan, 319, 484
Badarikā, 329
Bāgh o Bahār quoted, 6
Bachr's Herodotus, 292
Bāhīkas, 202, 352, 354, 482 ff.
Bahlīkas, Bahlikas, Balhikas } 349, 351, 446, 454
Bakhdhī, 330
Bālādichcha, 60
Bālarāmāyaṇa, 78, 89, 103
Balāsa, 351
Bāli 417
Balkh, 332, 446
Ballantine, Rev. H., on relation of Mahrattī to Sanskrit, 26
Ballantyne, Dr. J. R., correction suggested by him, 174 ———, his Mahābhāshya, 154, 346
Banga, 64
Bangas, 357
Bauddhas, 259
Bauddhāyana, 179
Beames, Mr. J., art. in Journ. R. A. S., 8, 35, 143 f.
Beeas, 345
Behar, 347, 350, 404, 443
Behat, 345
Belurtagh, 318 f, 334, 480
Benfey, Prof. Th.
——, his art. in Gött. Gel. Anz. 115, 117, 145, 335, 367 f.
——, Griech. Wurzellexikon, 228, 256 ——, Indien quoted, 55, 64, 105, 136, 311, 335
——, Orient und Occident, 204, 343, 359, 370, 372, etc.
——, Sāmaveda, 160, 170, 198, 203, 237, 343, 346, 348, etc., etc.
——, Sanskrit grammar, 263, 265, 441
Bengali dialect, 4 ff, 32, 118, 127, 146, 254, 425, 439
Bhabra inscription, 104, 109, 115
Bhāgavata Purāṇa, 162
i. 3, 24—350
iv. 14, 43 ff—411
vii. 10, 18—350
ix. 21, 11 f—495
Bhāmaha's Manoramā, 43
Bhāratavarsha, 336
Bhāshā, 46, 67, 130, 136, 151 f.
Bhāskara Āchārya, 161, 178
Bhava, 451
Bhavya, 342
Bhills, 487
Bhīmeśvara, 428
Bhīshma, 365
Bhota, 49
Bhotan, 487
Bhṛigu, 197
Bhṛigus, 279
Bhūr, 188
Bhuvaḥ, 188
Blackie, Prof., his note on Iliad, ii. 813 f—157
Böhtlingk, Dr. O.—
———, his S'akuntalā, 14
———, his Pāṇini, 154
Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, 187, 189, 204, 224, 238, 346, 348, 350, 360, f, 368 f, 460 ff, etc.
Bollensen, Dr., articles by him, 160
Bopp, Dr. F., Comp. Gram. 228, 236, 489
Brahmā, Brahmā jyeshtham, } 195, 452
Brahmā and Brimha, 159, 202, 432 f.
Brāhman (priest), 188, 462
Brāhman (caste) 298, 456 ff, 462
Brāhmaṇas (books), 163, 176, 178 ff.
Brahma purāṇa, 422
Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa, 162
Brahmāvarta, 303, 400
Brajbhākhā, 36, 39
Bréal, M., on the geography of the Avesta, 314, 334
Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, 215 f, 361

Bṛihaddevatā, 164
Bṛihat, 156
Brockhaus, H., his Prabodhachandrodaya, 14
Buddha, 55, 115, 153, 350, 494 ff.
Buddhaghosa, 62, 72
Buddhapriya, 60
Buddhism, 55 ff.
Buddhist councils, 56
Buddhists, 53 f, 351
Bundehesh, 471
Bunsen on the geography of the Avesta, 334, 481
Burnouf, M. E., Bhāgavata Purāṇa, 338
——, Histoire du Buddhisme Indien, 116, 123 f.
——, Lotus de la bonne loi, 55, 61, 72, 105 f, 109 ff.
Burnouf and Lassen, on the Pāli, 68, 108
Burrindu, 349

C

Calchas, 196
Caldwell's Dravidian Gram., 53, 415, 424 ff, 486 ff.
Campbell's Telugu Gram., 48 f, 53, 424 f, 434 ff.
Canarese language, 32, 260, 423 ff.
Canoj, 49, see Kanouj
Casian mountains, 479
Caspian Sea, 481
Caucasus, 481
Cawnpore, properly Kānhpur, 17
Celtic languages, 217
Centaurs, 279
Cerebral letters, 441 f.
Chakhra, 330
Chaṇḍālikā, Chāṇḍālī, 46, 50
Chaṇḍālas, 305, 310
Chaṇḍīdevaś Prākṛita dīpikā, 46
Chandrabhāgā, 348
Charaṇavyūha, 192
Charmaśiras, 177
Chhandas, 189
Chhāndogya Upanishad, p. 585—396
iv. 17, 1—188
Chenab, 345
Childers, Mr. R. C., suggestions made, and materials supplied, by him, 22, 24 f, 28 f, 54, 76, 83, 88 f, 110, 495.
Chintāmaṇi, 435
Chitrakūṭa, 409, 412
Chitraratha, 347 f, 361
Cholas, 422 f.
Chorasmians, 292, 342
Chrysostom, 495
Chulikapaiśāchī, dialect, 48, 52, 428
Chumuri, 368
Clough's Pāli Grammar, 65, 70, 73, 76
Colebrooke, Mr. H. T., his Essays, 178, 195, 200, 203, 265, 325, 424
Comparative Philology, remarks on, 217 ff.

Comparative Tables—
i. Sanskrit, Prākṛit and modern vernaculars, 13, 15 ff
ii. Prākṛit and modern vernaculars, 27 ff.
iii.—vii. Sanskrit, Gāthā, Pāli, and Prākṛit, 76 ff.
viii. Sanskrit, rock inscriptions and Pāli, 111 ff.
ix. Sanskrit, Persian, & Arabic words, 220
— Sanskrit, Zend, and Persian, 221 ff.
x. Sanskrit, Zend, Greek, and Latin, 230 ff.
Sanskrit & Zend, 287 ff.
Sanskrit and Telugu roots, 426 f.
Comparison of Sanskrit and Zend, Greek and Latin pronouns, nouns, verbs, etc., 242 ff.
Cophēn, see Kophēn
Coromandel coast, 401
Cowell, Prof. E. B., his Prākṛitaprakāśa, 14, 43 f, 48, 73 ff, 120.
——, correction made by him, 174
——, note in Elphinstone's history, 476 f.
——, opinion referred to, 495
Crawfurd, Mr. John—
"Language as a test of the races of man," etc., 282, f.
Cural, 435, 437
Curtius, Grundzüge der Griech. Etymologie, 228, 237, 239, 256
Curzon, Mr. A., in Jour. R.A.S., 301 ff, 312 f, 320 f, 357, 441, 443
Cushitic tribes, 419 f.

D

Dabhīti 384, 387
Dadhyach, 447
Daēvas, 299, 330
Dahāka, 330
Daityas, 395, 497
Daksha, 420
Dākshāyaṇī, 492
Dākshiṇātya dialect, 46, 50
Damilas, 60
Daṇḍin's Kāvyādarśa, 46 f.
Danū, 383
Dānu, 371, 428
Daṇḍaka forest, 408, 413
Daṇḍakas, 490
Daradas, 338, 365
Dasyus, 31, 145, 151, 213 282, 291, 359 ff, 409, 418, 443, 492
Dāsa, 361 f, 367 f, etc.
D'Alwis, Mr. J., his Kachchāyana, 54, 65
Darśanas, 330
Daśaratha, 406
Dehli pillar inscription, 104, 109
Dekhan, 441 ff.
Delius's Radices Praeriticæ, 14
Demodocus, 211
Deotsu, 337
Devāpi, 168
Devas, 175, 299
Desī, Deśyam, 447 ff,
Deshyumoo 427 ff.
Desmoulins, 283
Dharmachakra, 495
Dhātumālā, Sanskrit, 425
————, Telugu, 425
Dhauli inscription, 104, 109, 114
Diespiter, 295
Dīgha Nikāya, 61
Dīpankara, 60

Divodāsa, 379 f, 384, 389
Dracharāmam, 428
Dravida, 260, 401, 422 f.
Drāvidī, dialect, 46, 50, 127, 425
Dravidas, 355
Dravidians, 443
Dṛishadvatī, 311, 345, 397, 399 ff.
Druhyu, 260
Drvaspā, 331
Dualism, 478
Duǰak, 330
Durgā, 201
Durga or Durgāchārya, commentator on the Nirukta, quoted, 156, 165 ff, 173 f, 303 f.
Duryodhana, 353
Dushyanta, 422
Dwarf avatār, 203
Dyaus, 279

E

Ekalavya, 418
Ekaparvataka, 405
Ellis, Mr. F. W.
——, his note on the Dravidian languages, 48, 53, 424 ff.
Elphinstone's (Hon. Mr.) History of India, quoted or referred to, 304, 321, 476 ff.
Emodus, 479
Erinnys, 279
Euaspla, 345
Euripides quoted, 215

F

Faesi, his note on Iliad ii. 813 f.—157
Fargard, 1st, of the Vendidad, 314, 329 ff, 480 f.
Fausböll's Dhammapada, quoted, 71, 76
Feridun, or Frēdun, 296, 476
Fick, August, his Vergl. Wörterbuch, 216, 228, 257
Finnish languages, 441
French language, 261

G

Gālava, 177
Gandak, Gandakī, 404 f.
Gandarii, Gandaritis, 342
Gāndhāra, Gandhāris, 49, 342, 349, 351 ff, 428, 482
Gandharvas, 175, 279
Gangā, 341, 345, 482
Gārgya, 177
Gārhapatya fire, 451
Garrœas, 344
Gāthā dialect (Indian), 10, 115 ff, 207, 210
Gāthās (Zoroastrian), 332, 468
Gāthin, 197
Gāu, 330
Gauḍī dialect, 48, 50
Gaupāyanas, 386
Gaurī, 344
Gautama, 365, 418, 491 f, 494
Gayā, 350
Gayasīras, 204
Geldart, Rev. G. C., his paper "Language no test of race," 277, 467 f.
Germans, 280
Gilgit, 337
Girnār inscription, 104 f, 114
Godāverī, 347, 408, 428
Gogard, or Gokeren tree, 471
Gomal, 343, 348
Gomatī, 343, 348, 493
Gonds, 424
Goldstücker, Dr. Th., his Dictionary, 373, 463
——, his Pāṇini, 153
——, paragraphs contributed by him, 262 ff.
Gopatha Brāhmaṇa, i. 1, 1—156
Gotama, 197
Gotama Rāhūgaṇa, 402
Govinda Ānanda, 307
Govinda deva's Bālarāmāyaṇa and Prasannarāghava, 14
Gorresio's Rāmāyaṇa, 406 ff, 419 f.
Goryaia, 345
Grāmyam, Gramyumoo speech, 49, 427 ff.
Greek, 216, 254 ff.
Greeks, 267 ff.
Gṛihya Sūtras, 186, 421
Guha, 407 f.
Gundert, Dr. H., on the Dravidian elements in Sanskrit, 34
Gurgān, 332
Gurhwal, 335
Guzeratī or Gurjara dialect, 4, 7, 425

H

Haag, Dr. F. Vergleichung des Prākrit mit den Romanischen Sprachen, 147
Haĕtumat, 330
Haiva, 49
Haoma, 297, 470 ff.
Hall, Dr. F., his Vāsavadattā, 152
Hamitic tribes, 419 f.
Hanumān, 157, 159
Hapta Hendu, 295, 300, 331 ff.
Hari, 431
Harivaṅsa—
1616, 1836—422
7799—208
9491—189
Haraqaiti, 330
Harivupīya, 348
Harivarsha, 326
Harōyu, 314, 330
Haug, Prof. M., 199
——, Ait. Brāhmaṇa, 164, 172, 184 f, 382, 397
——, Das Erste Kapitel des Vendidad, 329 ff.
——, Brahma und die Brahmanen, 462 ——, Origin of Brahmanism, 462
Hebrew, 218
Hebrew, knowledge of, how preserved, 139
Heeren, Prof., 332
Hemachandra, 44, 51 f, 67, 404
Hermes, 279
Herodotus quoted, 215, 292, 459
Hesiod, 186
Hilmend, 332
Himālaya or Himavat, 303, 310, 324, 328, 335, 340, 349, 400, 412, 480
Hindī dialect, 4 ff, 13, 15 ff, 32, 118, 127, 146, 227, 254, 425, 438 f, 441
Hindukush, 335, 340, 354
Hiran, 340
Hiraṇvatī, 344

Homer, 186, 216
Hotṛi, 188
Hūiti, 456, 460, 464
Humayūn, 6
Humboldt, 481
Hūṇas, 443
Hutokhsh, 464
Huxley, Prof., on the "Methods and results of Ethnology," etc., 282 ff.
Hydaspes, 345
Hyrcania, 332

I

Ilā, 323
Iliad quoted, 157
Ilvala, 159, 414
Indo-European languages, 217 ff.
Indo-Scythians, 444
Indra, 197 f, 201, 212 f, 299, 348, 359, 361, 373, 447, 451, etc.
Indraprastha, 335
Interpretation of the Veda, article on the, in Journ. R. A. S. 173, 210, 255
Iranians, 477 f, 480, and passim
Irāvatī, 342, 345, 348
Īśāna, 294
Īśvarachandra Vidyāsāgara quoted, 162
Italian compared with Prākṛit, 147 ff.
Italians, 280
Itihāsas, 161 f.

J

Jainas, 435
Jamadagni, 447
Janaka, 192, 404, 406
Jānakī (Sītā), 158
Janasthāna, 410
Jemshēd, 331, 476
Jumna, see Yamunā
Jupiter, 295
Justi, Dr., his Handbuch der Zendsprache, 220, 223, 228, 244, 289, 299, 459, 462
Jyotishṭoma, 381

K

Kabandha, 412
Kabul, 332
Kabulistan, 337
Kachchāyana's Pāli Grammar, 54, 60
Kaiyyaṭa, 400
Kakshīvat, 323, 361
Kākula, 432
Kāla, 452
Kālakavana, 400
Kālakūṭa, 405
Kālamukhas, 491
Kāleśvara, 428
Kali, 408, 431, 453
Kālī, 221
Kalinga, 64
Kālidāsa, 180
Kalpasūtras, 180 f.
Kāma, 452
Kambojas, 259, 355, 365
Kampanā, 344
Kandahār, 332
Kanojana
Kanouj } 49, 143, 401
Kānyakubja
Kaṇva or Kunva, 198, 431
Kapardin, 201
Kapurdigiri inscription, 104, 107, 114
Karahāṭaka, 490
Karanja, 385
Karatoyā, 404 f.
Kārṇaprāvaraṇas, 491
Karṇāṭa, 260, 422
Karṇāṭaka dialect, see Canarese.
Kārtavīrya, 420 f.
Kashmīr, 329, 337
Kāśikā, 351
Kaśmīras, 354
Kaśyapa, 492
Kaṭa, 197
Kāṭhaka, 180
Kāṭṭhakya, 177
Kathāsarit-sāgara, 495
Kātyāyana, 58 f, 179, 193
Kaushītakī Brāhmaṇa, 163, 184, 192, 328
Kaushītakins, 192
Kautsa on the uselessness of the Nirukta, 170 ff.
Kautsa, 177
Kava Uś, 297
Kavasha Ailūsha, 398, 465
Kāverī river, 347
Kāvya chandrikā, 47
Kāvya Uśanas, 297
Kedarnath, 412
Kemaon, 335, 344
Kekaya, 48, 406, 428
Kerakas, 491
Keralas, 422 f.
Kereśāspa, 296
Kern, Prof. H., on the triple Veda, 445
——, on the age of the A.V., 446 f.
——, on the antiquity of castes, 454 ff.
Khamil, 484
Khara, 410, 416
Khaśas, 482
Khetudas, 459
Khila, 193, 199, 450
Khnenta, 330
Khoes, 345
Khoten, 484
Khokand, 481
Khonar, 345
Kiepert, Dr., on the geography of the Vendidad, 332, 334
Kīkaṭa, 347, 350, 357 f.
Kilāta, 386, 396
Kirātas, 365, 396, 491
Koas, 349
Kola, 422
Kolagiri, 491
Kols, 423, 487
Kophēn river, 339, 342 ff.
Koran, 219
Kośalā, 405
Kośalas, 403 f.
Kosti (sacred girdle of Parsees), 298
Kraushṭaki, 177
Kravyād, 390, 418
Kriśāśva, 296
Krivi, 396
Krishṇa, 201
Krishṇā (river), 432
Krumu, 343 ff, 348, 493
Kshatriya, 298, 310, 355, 456, 463, 494
Kubhā, 339, 343 ff, 348, 493
Kuhn, Prof. Adalbert, on the inserted letters in Pāli, 70
——, in Indische Studien, 294
——, in Zeitsch. für die Kunde des Morgenlandes, 160
——, Herabkunft des Feuers, 279, 361, 377
——and Schleicher's Beiträge, 468, 477 ff.
Kuhn, Dr. Ernest, his translation of Kachchāyana, 54
Kulitara, 383
Kullūka Bhaṭṭa, 401

Kumārila Bhaṭṭa, 494
Kuntala, 49, 428
Kurus, 405
Kurujāṅgala, 405
Kurukshetra, 400, 482
Kurum, 343, 348
Kurutthāma, 422
Kutsa, 361, 376, etc.
Kuyava, 385

L

Lakshmaṇa, 407, 412, 417, 498
Lakshmīdhara's Shaḍbhāshā Chandrikā, 44, 48
Lalita vistara, 10, 76, 89, 115 ff, 210
Langlois's Rigveda, 196, 199, 340, 346
Languages derived from Latin, 134, 146
Lassen's Indische Alterthumskunde (or, Indian Antiquities), 42, 55, ff, 58, 104 f, 108 f, 124, 132 ff, 153, 158, 281, 308, 336, 342, 347 ff, 406, 408, 444
—— Institutiones linguæ Praeriticæ, 14, 30, 35 ff, 45 f, 58
—— Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes, 326, 353, 366 Latin, 146, 149, 216, 227, 254 ff.
—— in the middle ages, 139
Letto-Slavonic tongues, 217
Linga, 202
Lit. Centralblatt, 147
Lohamukhas, 491
Lohas, 355
Lomapāda, 406

M

Madhusūdaṇa Sarasvatī, 189
Mādhwāchārya, 163
Madras, 482 ff.
Mādravatī, 491
Madhyadeśa, 303, 400 f.
Magadha, 350 f, 454
Māgadhī dialect, 45 f, 48, 50 f, 54, 58, 60, 63, 108, 114 f, 428
Mahābhārata, 458
i.
732—207
2544, 2606, & 3188 ff —386
2439 ff—353
3478—423
3533—260
4346—327
4719 ff—326
ii.
793 ff—404
1025, 1031 f—364
1045 ff—326
1078—402
1169 ff—490
iii.
5074, 10538—398
10545 f—328
12746 ff—323
15197, 15918—416
15981—417
vi.
333—344
vii.
4747 ff—365
viii.
1407 ff—383
2025 ff—482 f.
ix.
2960—398
x.
785—352
xii.
2429 ff, 6293 ff—365
6293 ff—491 f.
xiii.
2505 ff—466
7458 ff—383
xiv.
180—252
2472—418
Mahābhāshya, 400
pp. 22, & 63—154
p. 62—356
p. 104—161
——, Vivaraṇa, on, 206
Mahādeva, 194, 201 f.
Mahārāshṭrī dialect, 36 ff, 43 ff, 48, 50 f, 56, 65, 428, 488
Mahāvaṅśa (or Mahawanso), 62 f.
Mahendra, 56 f, 61, 63
Mahendra hills, 428
Maheśa, 428
Mahīdhara's commentary, on the Vāj. S., 164, 186, 193
Māhishmatī, 421
Mahmūd of Ghazni, 336
Mahommed, 218
Mahrattī dialect, 4, 7, 15 ff, 32, 118, 127, 146, 254, 425, 438, 486
Maitreya, 183
Mālā Charmaṇvatī, 405
Malantus, 344
Malamantus, 344
Malayālim language, 32, 260, 423 ff.
Māmidi Venkaya, 427 ff.
Mānava dharma śāstra, 138, 141 ——, quoted, i 23—188
ii. 17 ff—399
— 23—346
— 69—298
iii. 13—466
x. 12—305
— 45—151, 364
xi. 20—396
Mandākinī, 412
Mantra, 179
Manu, 184, 196, 260, 279, 323, 340, 360 f, 470, etc.
Manu Svayambhū, 431
Manyu, 362
Marka, 386
Maruts, 323, 369
Marudvṛidhā, 341
Marwar, 339
Māthavas, 403
Mathiah pillar, 104
Mathurā, 281, 401
Matsyas, 400
Matsyapurāṇa, 422
Meghavāhana, 132
Medea, 292
Medes, 292
Medhātithi, 447
Medinīkosha, 463
Megasthenes, 327
Mehatnū, 343
Merv, 332
Minos, 279
Mir Amman, 6
Mithilā, 405 f.
Mithra, 297, 472
Mitra, 297
Mlechhas, 151, 213, 365 f.
Molesworth's Mahrathi Dictionary, 266
Monkeys, 417 ff
Mōuru, 300
Mṛichchhakaṭī, 11 f, 14, 151
Mṛidhravāch, 376
Mṛigaya, 375

Mūjavats, 351 f.
Müller, Prof. Max—
——, "Chips," 115, 153, 164 f, 279, 281, 300, 310, 314, 340
——, Essay on the Bengali language, 315
——, Anc. Sansk. Literature, 75, 104, 153, 161, 164, 168, 173 f, 180, 184 f, 187, 189 ff, 310
——, in Journ. Germ. Or. Society, 356 ——, Languages of the seat of war, 359
——, Last results of Persian researches, 290, 300
——, of Sanskrit do., 153
——, of Turanian do., 281, 311, 328, etc.
——, Lectures on language, 314
——, Translation of R.V. x. 129—349
—— art. in "Nature," 493
Munjavat, 352
Mūradevas, 391
Murchison, Sir R., 481
Musalmans, 219
Mustagh, 234, 480
Mūtibas, 364

N

Nadir Shah, 336
Nāgeśa Bhaṭṭa, 206
Nagnajit, 353
Nahusha, 422
Naichaśākha, 350
Naidānas, 176
Nairuktas, 176
Namuchi, 387
Nannapa, or Nunniah Bhut, 432
Nārada, 353
Narmadā, 347, 421
Nāṭī dialect, 48
Nepala, 49, 428
Neriosengh's Sanskrit transl. of the Avesta, 456
Nigama, 179
Nighaṇṭus (or Naighaṇṭuka), 165, 169, 186, 255, 299
Nirukta, 169, 179, 186
i.
1—165
4 f—151
15—169, 171
20—165 f
Nirukta—continued.
ii.
2—152, 355
11—195
16—174
23—346
iii.
8—175
iv.
15—344
vi.
7—207
31—377
32—350
vii.
1—195
16—197
viii.
21 f—175
ix.
26—342
8—352
x.
42—195
10, 46—196
xii
1, 19—176
41—177
Niruktapariśishṭa—
i. 9—155
i. 12—177
Nisa, Nisāi, Nisæa, 330, 332
Nishādas, 406 ff, 411, 418
Nishambhu, 428
Nodhas, 197
North Indian Dialects, 4
Nöldeke, Prof., on the Semitic and Indo-European languages, 219
Norris, Mr. E., on the origin of the cerebrals in Sanskrit, 440 f.
Nyāyamālāvistara, quoted, 53, 179

O

Odras, 355, 400
Odyssey, quoted, 211
Œdipus, 196
Olympus, 480
Origin of non-Sanskrit words in vernaculars, 7, 31 f.
Orissa, 401
Ormuzd, Oromazes, 334, 472
Orpheus, 279
Osthakarṇakas, 421
Ottorocorra, 327
Oudh, 404
Oxus, 318, 480 f.

P

Padma lake, 405
—— Purāṇa, 411
Pahlavas, 259
Paingins, 192
Pairika Khnathaiti, 330
Paiśaichī dialect, 43, 48, 50, 52, 428
Pākaśāsani, 364
Pāli language, 10 f, 53 ff, 207, 214, 259
Pāman, 351
Pamer, 481, 484
Pampā, 412
Panchajana, 175
Panchālas, 396, 400
Panchālī dialect, 127
Panchaviṁśa Brāhmaṇa 13, 11—386
Pāṇḍya, 48 f, 422, 428
Pāṇini, 153
i. 2, 36—152
i. 4, 20—152
ii. 4, 10—400
iii. 2, 108—152
iii. 3, 78—354
iv. 2, 117 f—354
vi. 3, 20—152
vi. 4, 102—206
vii. 2, 64—206
Panis, 377
Panjāb, 295, 336 f.
Panjkora, 337, 344
Parahaoma, 471
Paramakambojas, 365
Paraśurāma, 421
Paripātra, 400
Parṇaya, 385
Parsees, 298
Parthians, 292, 342
Paruchhepa, 195
Parvata, 353, 373
Parushṇī, 341, 345, 348
Paśūnāmpati, 202
Pathyā Svasti, 328
Paurava, 364
Pāvamānya, 474
Pericles, 186
Persian language, 217 ff.
Persians, 267 ff.
Peukelæotis, 344
Phallus, 202
Phlegyes, 279
Pictet, Ad., Origines Indo-Européennes, 258, 264, 266 ff, 272, 294, 317 ff, 334

Pipru, 375, 378
Pisāchas, 363
Pitakattaya, 56 f.
Pishtra, 456
Pitris, 175
Plutarch, de Isid. et Osir. quoted, 471 f.
Pluto, 472
Portuguese, 281
Pouruśaspa, 474
Prāchyas, 356
Prahrāda, 353
Prahasta, 159
Prajāpati, 185, 188, 372, etc.
Prākrit, meaning of the word, 51, 66 f.
Prākrit, dialects, 10 ff, 214, 221, 260 f.
——, Scenic or Dramatic, were they spoken? 34 ff.
Pramaganda, 350
Prasannarāghava, 76, 89, 103
Prasthalas, 483
Prasthānabheda, quoted, 190
Prātiśākhyas, 186, 355
Prayāga, 400 f.
Prayājas, 175 f.
Priests in the Vedic age, in Journ. R.A.S., 374, 378
Prinsep, Mr. James, decipherer of Indian Inscriptions, 104, 106
Priyadarśin or Piyadasi, 104, 108, 115
Priyamedha, 341
Ptolemy, the geographer, 327, 345, 479
Pukkasas, 50
Pulastya, 491
Pulindas, 364
Punarbhū, 492
Pundras or Paundrakas, 355, 364, 401
Punjshīr, 345
Purānas, 161 f.
Pūru, 260, 376 f. etc.
Purukutsa, 344, 370, etc.
Purumīlha, 447
Purūravas, 387
Purusha, 455
Purushamedha, 193
Purusha-sūkta, 199, 454 f., 458, 462 f.
Pūshan, 201, 421

R

Radhia pillar, 104
Raghā, 330
Raghuvanśa x. 16—173
Rājadharman, 492
Rājan, Rājanya, 463, 465 f.
Rājataranginī, quoted, 483
Rājendralāl Mitra, Babu, his art. in Journ. As. Society, Beng. 115 ff.
Rakshases or Rākshasas, 175, 198, 364, 408 ff, 491
Rāma, 201, 407 ff, 498, 499
Rāma, son of Mrigū, 183
Rāma Tarkavāgīśa's Prākritakalpataru, 46, 52
Rāmānuja, 163, 434
Rāmāyana,—139, 498
————, quoted
i.
12, 20 ff—406
ii.
50, 33 ff—406 f
59, 3—25
116, 11 ff—409
iii.
1, 1—408
2, 4 ff—410
4, 22—411
6, 15 ff—412
9, 24—413
10, 10 ff—412
11, 31—408
11, 55 ff—414
11, 56—159
11, 79—413
17, 22—416
30, 12—416
32, 12, 19—416 f
35, 70—416
46, 14—417
72, 18—417
iv.
26, 29 ff—417
40, 26 ff—491
43, 38, 57—325
v.
18, 18 f—159
30, 17 ff—157
82, 3—159
91, 20—416
vi.
19, 24—416
104, 2—159
117, 14—415

Rantideva, 495
Rasā, 343 ff, 348 f.
Rasavāhinī, 76
Rathaeshtao, } 456, 460,
Ratheshthā, } 462, 464
Rathantara, 156
Rātrisūkta, 450
Rāuhina, 388
Rāvana, 157 f, 416, 421, 498 f.
Ravee (river), 345
Ravi the sun, 189
Rawlinson's (Rev. G.) Herodotus, 292, 314, 342, 356
Regnier. M. Ad. Traité de la formation des mots dans la langue Grecque, 262
———, E'tude sur l'idiome des Vedas, 375
Rei, 332
Renan, E., Histoire des langues Semitiques, 218 f, 269, 394
Rephaim, 419
Rhode, Dr., 333
Ribhu, 279
Rigveda, 188, 445
Rigveda—i.
1, 2—197
—, 4—209
—, 7—209
2, 1—205
3, 7—205
5, 3—209
6, 5—209
16, 3—209
17, 6—209
21, 1—209
22, 16—21—203
24, 1 f—185
27, 13—185
33, 4, 5—363, 371, 384
33, 8—394
35, 6—470
37, 4—211
48, 14—197
51, 5—378
—, 8, 9—291, 359, 363
—, 6—385
53, 8 ff—385
62, 13—197
63, 7—378
64, 14—323
78, 4—388
89, 10—173

Rigveda—continued.
91, 1, 5, 8, 12, 21—473 f
100, 8—364
—, 10—370
—, 15—372
—, 18—369
101, 1—375
101, 5—371
103, 3—291, 359, 363, 378
104, 3—385
108, 7—463, 465
112, 14—389
114, 1—201
117, 21—359, 363
126, 1, 7—342
139, 7—384
—, 8—360
131, 4—372, 379
132, 4—372
133, 1—373
164, 45—155
169, 3—173
174, 2—376, 377
—, 8—378
176, 4—384
189, 3—390
ii.
1, 11—323
11, 18—371
12, 2—388
12, 4—282, 371
—, 11—383
—, 12—388
14, 4—388
—, 6—378
15, 4—384
19, 6—378
20, 7—369, 375
—, 8—379
30, 8—386
iii.
12, 6—378
16, 4—209
23, 4—345
30, 15 ff—390
32, 13—197
34, 8, 9—282, 360, 363, 389
53, 14—359
iv.
4, 15—419
5, 3—211
16, 9—372
—, 13—375
23, 7—373
26, 1, 2—360
—, 3—378

Rigveda—continued.
28, 4—371
30, 13—384
—, 14—384
—, 15, 21—386
—, 18—347, 361
—, 20—380
41, 2—373
50, 8 f—463, 465
57, 6 f—421
v.
2, 3—373
7, 10—372, 388
20, 2—373
29, 9, 10—376, 377, 392
30, 7, 9—387
32, 8—376
42, 9—372
44, 8—173
52, 17—347
53, 9—343
54, 15—323
70, 3—369
vi.
4, 8—323
12, 4—173
14, 3—372
18, 3—370
20, 10—379
—, 11—361
22, 10—363
23, 4—209
25, 2, 3—361, 363
26, 5—384
31, 4—379
33, 3—361, 363
44, 13—197
45, 31—347
47, 24—461
48, 8—323
60, 6—361, 363
61, 2, 13—346
—, 3, 370
vii.
5, 3—376
—, 6—361
6, 3—377, 378
18, 5—369
—, 6—374
—, 13—377
—, 19—347
19, 3—370
—, 2—385
21, 5—391
22, 9—198
33, 5—205
83, 1—361
95, 1, 2—346

Rigveda—continued.
99, 4—362
100, 4—371
104, 1, 2—390
viii.
1, 28—380
7, 9—461
14, 14—388
17, 14—380
18, 13—393
19, 37—344
22, 6—360
24, 27—362
—, 30—344
32, 26—387
40, 6—384
—, 10—387
59, 10, 11—372
62, 18—376
66, 4—173
84, 3—380
87, 6—380
ix.
1, 8—360
11, 2—461
41, 1—375
61, 2—389
73, 5—375
74, 8—323
92, 5—360
113, 7 ff—469
x.
22, 7, 8—373
27, 6—374
34, 1—352
38, 3—362
43, 4—360
48, 1—361
—, 2—461
—, 7—374
49, 3—362
53, 4—175
54, 1—387
64, 9—343
65, 11—362
69, 6—385
71, 3—211
73, 7—387
75, 5—341
—, 6—343
83, 1—362
—, 6—369
86, 19—359
87, 2 ff, 16—391, 418
88, 10—204
89, 7—379
90—454 f, 458
90, 9—189
95, 7—387

Rigveda—continued.
99, 3—391
99, 6—388
102, 3—362
103, 1—172
105, 8—374
121, 4—349
125, 4—209
—, 5—211
133, 2—172
138, 3—362
146, 1, 6—393
Rijiśvan, 375, 378, 385
Rishabha, 197
Rishikas, 365
Rishis, 196 ff.
Ritter, Dr., 334
Rock and pillar inscriptions, 59, 104 ff.
Romakas, 491
Romans, 267 ff.
Rosen (Dr.) Rigveda, 370
Roth, Dr. Rudolf, art. in Journ. Ger. Or. Society, quoted, 67, 153, 339 ——, Literature and history of the Veda, 170, 191, 335, 338, 341, 347, 351, 355, 369, 446
——, Nirukta, 164, 166, 169, 176, 180 f, 186, 211, 343 f, 348, 356, 360, etc.
——, Dissertation on the A.V., 173, 447
——, art. in Indische Stud., 185
Rudolphi, 283
Rudra, 194, 201, 352, 383, 420
Rudradāman, 132
Rūpasiddhi (a Pāli Grammar), 54, 60

S

S'ābarī or Sāvarī dialect, 46, 50
Sadānīrā, 403 ff, 442
Sagara, 422
Sahasāuka, 160
Sahya, 48
Sāhityadarpaṇa, 50
S'akas, 50, 365, 443
S'ākalikā, S'ākalikī, 354
S'ākalya, 177
S'ākapūni, 177, 204
S'ākārī dialect, 46, 50
S'ākaṭāyana, 177
S'akuni, 353
S'ākuntalā, 14
S'ākyamuni, 494
S'ākyasinha, 494
Sāma Kereśāspa, 296
Samanām Sevishta, 473
Sāmaveda, 188, 191, 445
S'ambara, 368, 378, 389, etc.
Sanakas, 372
Sandhi, 141
S'aṇḍa 386
S'aṇḍikas, 386
Saṅhitās, four Vedic, 187
Sanjayantī, 491
S'aṅkarāchārya, 434
———, on Bṛihad Ār. Up. 164
S'āṅkhāyana Br., 328
Sanskrit, 44, 47 f.
Saptaśataka, 76
Sapta Sindhavas, 295, 300
S'arad, 380
Sārameya, 279
S'araṇyū, 279
Sārasvata, 398
Sarasvat, 346
Sarasvatī (river), 310 f. 338 ff, 345 ff, 370, 397 ff, 441
Sarasvatī (goddess) 329, 399
Sarasvatī-kaṇṭhābharaṇa, 160
Sarayu, 314, 343 ff, 348 f, 361, 405
S'arva, 202, 299, 451
S'atabalāksha, 177
S'atadru, 339
Sātyahavya, 324
S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa—
i. 1, 4, 14—386
— 3, 5, 2—173
— 4, 1, 10 ff—402
— 6, 3, 1 ff—388
— 7, 3, 8—202
ii. 2, 2, 8 ff—372
— 6, 2, 17—352
iii. 2, 1, 23—114
iv. 2, 1, 5 f—386
— 4, 4, 3 ff, 14—381
— 6, 7, 1—187
vii. 1, 4, 10—352
xi. 3, 1, 2—404
— 5, 1, 10, 12—163
— 6, 2, 1—404
xiii. 4, 3, 7 f—189
— 5, 4, 5—184
S'atapatha B.—cont.
— 5, 4, 7—396
— 8, 1, 5—485
xiv. 4, 2, 22—184
—6, 11, 2—156
S'ātyāyana Brāhmaṇa, 184
Saujāta, 183
S'aunaka, 164
S'aurasenī dialect, 36 f, 43 ff, 48, 50 f, 59 f, 108, 127, 428
S'avaras, 365
Sāyaṇa's commentary on R.V., quoted, 155, 164, 179, 184, 186, 197, 212, 299, 350, 360, 363, 463, etc.
Schlegel, A. W. von, his Essais, 281, 306, 335, 466
Schleicher, August, Compendium der Vergl. Grammat. der Indog. Sprachen, 216, 229 f, 245, 490
Scythians and their language, 486 ff.
Seleucus, 336
Semiramis, 336
Semitic languages, 217 ff.
Serica, 479
S'esha, 163
Setubandha, 48
Sewat or Suwad, 344 f.
Shen Tamil, 436
Siccacollum, 432
S'imyus, 369
Sindhu (Indus) 341 ff, 482
Sindhugāndhāras, 483
Sindhukshit, 341
Sindhusauvīras, 406, 483
S'iphā, 385
Sirmur, 335
S'isnadeva, 391
Sītā, 157 f, 413, 417, 421, 498
Sītā (the furrow) 421
S'iva, 201 f, 204, 299, 420
Sizyges, 479
Skambha, 452
Slavonic languages, 218
Smṛitis, 163, 179
Soastus, 334
Sobhari, 344
Sogdiana, 332, 481
Sogdians, 342, 468
Soma, 381, 469 ff.
Somagiri, 325
Soochundra, 451

Spiegel, Dr. F., art. in Kuhn and Schleicher's Beiträge, etc., 287, 298, 468 f, 477 ff.
——, Avesta, 293 ff, 298 ff, 312, 329 ff, 456 f.
——, Kammavākya, 63, 76
S'rauta sūtras, 186
S'rīśailam, 428
Stenzler's (Dr. A.) Mrichchhakaṭī, 14
Stevenson, Rev. Dr. J., on the adoption of words into Sanskrit, 33 ——, on the affinity of the northern and southern non-Arian languages, 485 f.
——, Sāmaveda, 470
Sthaulāshṭhīvi, 177
Streiter, Dissertatio de Sunahsepho, 185
Subala, 353
Sudās, 361
S'uddhōdana, 494 ff.
Sudhesha, 49
S'ūdras, 304 f, 310, 364, 483
Sudum, 345
Sughdha, 330
Sugrīva, 417
S'ukra, 386
Sultan Mahmud, 6
S'unas'sepa, 184
Surabhīpattana, 491
S'ūrpāraka, 490
Sūrya, 376
Susartu, 343 ff.
S'ushmina, 325
Śushna, 362, etc.
Śushomā, 342, 348
Suśravas, 385
Sutlej, 345 (see S'utudrī)
Sūtras, 179
Sūtrapiṭaka, 56
S'utudrī 341, 345
Suvāstu, 344
Svanaya, 342
Svar, 188
Svarjit, 353
S'vetī, 343, 348 f.
Syriac, 218

T

Tadbhava, Tadbhavam, Tudbhuvumoo, 47 ff. 427 ff.
Taiṭiki, 177
Tājiks, 484
Takman, 351
Takshaka, 451
Tālākaṭa, 490
Tambapanni, 60
Tamil language, 32, 260, 423 ff.
Tamulians, 303
Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa—Commentary on—
i. 5, 9, 2—156
Do. vol. ii. p. 842—346
Taittirīya Sanhitā, 184
i. 2, 1—172
— 5, 1, 1—202
v. 5, 7, 3—203
vi. 2, 3—382
— 4, 7, 3—212
— 4, 10, 1—386
p. 466—202
Comm. on, p. 9—163
Tāṇḍaka Brāhmaṇa, 184
Tartar languages, 441
Tatsama, Tatsamam, Tutsumumoo, 47 ff, 427 ff.
Telinga, Telingana, 260, 428
Telugu language, 32, 127, 260, 423 ff.
Teutonic languages, 218
——— tribes, 280
Tiresias, 196
Thagurian mountains, 479
Thraêtaono, 296, 330, 474
Titans, 363
Trasadasyu, 344, 370
Trayī vidyā, 187, 445
Trilinga, 428 f, 433
Trimūrti, 202
Trishṭāmā, 343, 348
Trita, 296, 388, 474
Tritsus, 205, 377
Trivikrama, 203
Troyer, M., Rājataranginī, 483
Tullberg's Mālavikā Agnimitra, 14
Turfan, 484
Turnour, M., his Mahāwanso, quoted or referred to, 53, 55, 57, 60 f, 76 ———, art. in Jour. As. Soc. of Bengal, 110
Turvasu, 260, 348, 422
Tūrvayāna, 386
Tvashṭṛi, 175, 388

U

Uchchhishṭa, 139
Udgātṛi, 188
Udīchyas, 356
Ujjvalaladatta's Unādi Sūtras, Prof. Aufrecht's edition of, 490
Uloka, Ulagu, 435, 458
Unyudeshyumoo, 49
Upanishads, 163, 176, 200
Upasad, 381
Urana, 388
Uranos, 279
Urdu dialect, 6 f.
Urunjirā, 348
Urvā, 330
Uśanas, 361, 386
Ushas, 452
Uśīnaras, 354
Utkalī dialect, 46
Utkila, 197
Utsavasanketas, 364
Utsu-deshyumoo, 49 (see Atsu)
Uttarakurus, 324 ff, 337, 339
Uttara Madras, 324, 339

V

Vāch, 211 ff, 329
Vaēkereta, 330
Vāhlīka, 48 (see Bahlīka); ditto dialect, 50
Vaibhojas, 260
Vaiśravana, 417
Vaiśya, 298, 310, 456, 483
Vaivasvata, 469
Vājasaneyi Yajurveda, 193
Vājasaneyi Sanhitā—
3, 61—352
5, 8 and commentary, 380 f
8, 56—461
16, 54—172
18, 52—198
22, 22—462
23, 22 f—122
Vala, 363
Vālakhilya ii. 8—370
Vālakhilya—
iv. 3—204
xi. 6—211
Vālmīki, 408
Vāmadeva, 184, 211, 361
Vāmadevya, 156
Vānaras, or monkeys, 419
Vangrida, 385

Varāha Mihira, quoted, 5
Varchin, 386
Vararuchi, 12, 14, 43, 52, 59, 75, 148, 264
Varena, 330
Vārshyāyani, 177
Varuna, 212, 279, 297, etc.
Varvaras, 365
Vasishtha, 184, 198, 205, 389, 447
Vāstriya fshuyañt, 456, 460, 464
Vāstu, 344
Vātāpi, 414
Vāyu, 163, 188, 205, 213, 297
Vāyu Purāṇa, 421 f.
Veda, 179 f, 186
Vedāngas, 179
Vedarthā prakāśa, comm. on Taitt. S., quoted, 163
Vedavatī, 498
Vedavyāsa, 199
Vedic Sanskrit, forms of, 206 ff.
Vendidad, 498
Vendidad, first fargard of, 314, 329 ff, 418
—— 2nd do., 331
Verethragna, Verethraya, 317, 474
Vehrkāna, 330
Vernaculars of India, their antiquity, 7 ff.
Vibhāshās, 46
Vibhishana, 416, 490
Vidathin, 375
Videgha, the Māthava, 402
Videhas, 403 f.
Vikramāditya, 135, 160, 444
Vikramorvasī, 12
Vimadas, 198
Vinaśana, 391, 400 f.
Vināyaka Bhatta, 329
Vinayapitaka, 56
Vindhya, 303 f, 309, 339, 349, 408, 414
Vipās, 342, 345, 348
Virādha, 410 f.
Vishnu, 181, 202 ff, 362, etc.
Vishnupada, 204
Vishnupurāna, 162, 259, 421, 484
Viśiśipra, 392
Vis'vāmitra, 178, 197, 364, 379, 389, 413, 422
Vis've-devaḥ, 185, 205, 343
Vitastā, 341, 344, 348
Vivasvat, Vīvanhvañt, 296, 470
Vivien de St. Martin, xxiv. f, 348
Vrātyas, 351, 483
Vrindāvana, 401
Vrishalas, 401, 422
Vritra, 175 f, 363, etc.
Vritrahan 317, 389, 474
Vyāvahārikī (vāk) 67, 156
Vullers, Dr. J. A., his Persian and Latin Lex., and Persian Grammar, 220, 223 Vyāsa, 398
ditto, 408

W

Weber's Bhagavatī, 14
—— Essay on the Rāmāyana, 421
—— Indische Lit. geschichte, 105, 144, 152, 184, 187, 191, 193, 339, 361, 408, 421
—— Indische Skizzen, 217, 309, 317, 339
—— Indische Studien, 62, 105, 107, 125, 129, 152, 154, 192, 202, 265, 324, 328, 339, 351, 354, etc.
—— article in Jour. Ger. Or. Soc. 66, 157
—— Mālavikā and Agnimitra, 105
—— Rāmatāpanīya Upanishad, 421
—— Saptaśataka of Hāla, 14, 75
—— Vājasaneyi Sanhitā specimen, 130
—— in Lit. Centralblatt, 399
Wheeler, Mr. Talboys, his history of India, 421
Whitney, Pr f. W. D., his art. in Jour. Amer. Or. Society, 187, 190, 194, 196, 210, 446, 474
——, art. in North Amer. Review, 286
Wilson, Prof. H. H., Ariana Antiqua, 344
——, Rigveda Sanhitā, 164, 185, 194, 201, 203, 323, 369 f.
——, Sanskrit Gram., 208
——, Vishnu Purāna, 342, 398, 401, 411, 420 f.
——, Theatre of the Hindus, 34, 158.
——, articles and notice in Jour. R.A.S. 104 ff, 106, 109, 111 ff, 185
Wilson, Rev. Dr. J., notes on the Mahrattī language, 26, 486
——, India three thousand years ago, 390
Windischmann, Ueber den Somacultus der Arier, 297, 469 ff.
——, Mithra, 297

Y

Yadu, 260, 348
Yādavas, 260, 420
Yajnaparibhāshā, 179
Yājnavalkya, 192, 298, 404
Yājnikas, 178
Yajurveda, 188, 192, 445
Yama, 296, 415, 469 f.
Yamunā, 341, 345 ff, 482
Yarkhand, 484
Yāska, 151, 153, 164
Yas'na, 456, 472
Yātudhāna, 389 ff, 418
Yavanas, 139, 259 f, 423
Yavyāvatī, 348
Yaxartes, 318, 480 f.
Yayāti, 260, 422
Yazata, 473
Yima, 296, 331, 470, 473, 476

Z

Zamzummim, 419
Zaratushtra or Zoroaster, 299, 315, 331 ff, 464, 472 ff.
Zend, 216, 218, 220 ff, 226, 228 ff, 242, 258 f, 266, 287 ff.
Zendavesta, 216, 226, 258, 455 f, 475
Zeus, 279, 295
Zoroastrians, 314.

STEPHEN AUSTIN AND SONS, PRINTERS, HERTFORD.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS-URBANA
294.1M8901868 C001 V002
ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS ON THE ORIGIN AN
3 0112 014311663

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

294.1
M89o
1868
v.3

Return this book on or before the Latest Date stamped below.

Theft, mutilation, and underlining of books are reasons for disciplinary action and may result in dismissal from the University.

University of Illinois Library

DEC 21 1965

MAY 30 1968

MAR 21 1974

MAR 21 1974

AUG 9 1975

JUL 24 1975

APR 4 1977

MAR 7 1977

JUL 19 1999

L161—O-1096

ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS

ON THE

ORIGIN AND HISTORY

OF

THE PEOPLE OF INDIA,

THEIR RELIGION AND INSTITUTIONS,

COLLECTED, TRANSLATED, AND ILLUSTRATED,

BY

J. MUIR, D.C.L., LL.D., PH.D.

VOLUME THIRD.

THE VEDAS: OPINIONS OF THEIR AUTHORS AND OF LATER INDIAN WRITERS ON THEIR ORIGIN, INSPIRATION, AND AUTHORITY.

SECOND EDITION,
REVISED AND ENLARGED.

LONDON:
TRÜBNER & CO., 60, PATERNOSTER ROW.
1868.

(All Rights Reserved.)

Arthepsavaḥ ṛishayo devatāś chhandobhir abhyadhāvan |
Anukramaṇikā.

"Rishis, seeking to obtain the various objects of their desire, hastened to the deities with metrical compositions."

(See p. 211 of this volume.)

HERTFORD:
PRINTED BY STEPHEN AUSTIN.

294.1
M 89 c
1868
V. 3

PREFACE.

THE object which I have had in view in the series of of treatises which this volume forms a part, has been to investigate critically the most important points in the civil and religious history of the Hindus. Having shown in the First Volume that the mythical and legendary accounts given in the Purāṇas, etc., regarding the origin of the caste system which has long prevailed in India, are mutually contradictory and insufficient to establish the early existence of the popular belief regarding the distinct creation of four separate tribes, as an original and essential article of the Brahmanical creed; and having endeavoured to prove, in the Second Volume, by a variety of arguments, drawn chiefly from comparative philology and from the contents of the Rigveda, that the Hindus are descended from a branch of the Indo-European stock, which dwelt originally along with the other cognate races in Central Asia, and subsequently migrated into Northern Hindustan, where the Brahmanical religion and institutions were developed and matured;—I now come, in this Third Volume, to consider more particularly the history of the Vedas, regarded as the sacred Scriptures of the Hindus, and the inspired source from which their religious and philosophical systems (though, to a great extent, founded also on reasoning and speculation) profess to be mainly derived; or with which, at least, they all claim to be in harmony.

When I speak, however, of the history of the Veda, I am reminded that I am employing a term which will suggest to the philosophical reader the idea of a minute and systematic account of the various opinions which the Indians have held in regard to their sacred books from the commencement, through all the successive stages of their theological development, down to the present time. To do anything like this, however, would be a task demanding an extent of research far exceeding any to which I can pretend. At some future time, indeed, we may hope that a history of the theological and speculative ideas of the Indians, which shall treat this branch also of the subject, may be written by some competent scholar. My own design is much more modest. I only attempt to show what are the opinions on the subject of the Veda, which have been entertained by certain distinct sets of writers whom I may broadly divide into three classes—(1) the mythological, (2) the scholastic, and (3) the Vedic.

The first, or mythological class, embraces the writers of the different Purāṇas and Itihāsas, and partially those of the Brāhmaṇas and Upanishads, who, like the compilers of the Purāṇas, frequently combine the mythological with the theosophic element.

The second, or scholastic class, includes the authors of the different philosophical schools, or Darśanas, with their scholiasts and expositors, and the commentators on the Vedas. The whole of these writers belong to the class of systematic or philosophical theologians; but as their speculative principles differ, it is the object of each particular school to explain and establish the origin and authority of the Vedas on grounds conformable to its own fundamental dogmas, as well as to expound the doctrines of the sacred books in such a way as to harmonize with its own special tenets.

The third class of writers, whose opinions in regard to the Vedas I have attempted to exhibit, is composed (1) of the rishis themselves, the authors of the Vedic hymns, and (2) of the authors of the Upanishads, which, though works of a much more recent date, and for the most part of a different character from the hymns, are yet regarded by later Indian writers as forming, equally with the latter, a part of the Veda. As the authors of the hymns, the earliest of them at least, lived in an age of simple conceptions and of spontaneous and childlike devotion, we shall find that, though some of them appear, in conformity with the spirit of their times, to have regarded their compositions as in a certain degree the result of divine inspiration, their primitive and elementary ideas on this subject form a strong contrast to the artificial and systematic definitions of the later scholastic writers. And even the authors of the Upanishads, though they, in a more distinct manner, claim a superhuman authority for their own productions, are very far from recognizing the rigid classification which, at a subsequent period, divided the Vedic writings from all other religious works, by a broad line of demarcation.

It may conduce to the convenience of the reader, if I furnish here a brief survey of the opinions of the three classes of writers above described, in regard to the Vedas, as these opinions are shown in the passages which are collected in the present volume.

The first chapter (pp. 1–217) contains texts exhibiting the opinions on the origin, division, inspiration, and authority of the Vedas, which have been held by Indian authors shortly before, or subsequent to, the collection of the Vedic hymns, and consequently embraces the views of the first two of the classes of writers above specified, viz. (1) the mythological and (2) the scholastic. In the first Section (pp. 3–10), I adduce texts from the Purusha Sūkta, the Atharva-veda, the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, the Chhāndogya Upanishad, the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, and the Institutes of Manu, which variously represent the Vedas (a) as springing from the mystical sacrifice of Purusha; (b) as resting on (or inhering in) Skambha; (c) as cut or scraped off from him, as being his hair, and his mouth; (d) as springing from Indra; (e) as produced from time; (f) as produced from Agni, Vāyu, and Sūrya; (g) as springing from Prajāpati, and the waters; (h) as being the breathing of the Great Being; (i) as being dug by the gods out of the mind-ocean; (j) as being the hair of Prajāpati's beard, and (k) as being the offspring of Vāch.

In page 287 of the Appendix a further verse of the Atharva-veda is cited, in which the Vedas are declared to have sprung from the leavings of the sacrifice (uchchhishṭa).

In the second Section (pp. 10–14) are quoted passages from the Vishṇu, Bhāgavata, and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas, which represent the four Vedas as having issued from the mouth of Brahmā at the creation; several from the Harivaṁśa, which speak of the Vedas as created by Brahmā, or as produced from the Gāyatrī; another from the Mahābhārata, which describes them as created by Vishṇu, or as having Sarasvatī for their mother; with one from Manu, which declares the Vedas, along with certain other objects, to be the second manifestation of the Sattva-guṇa, or pure principle, while Brahmā is one of its first manifestations.

The third Section (pp. 14–18) contains passages from the Brāhmaṇas, the Vishṇu Purāṇa, and the Mahābhārata, in which the Vedas are celebrated as comprehending all beings, as being the soul of metres, hymns, breaths, and gods, as imperishable, as the source of form, motion, and heat, of the names, forms, and functions of all creatures, as infinite in extent, as infinite in their essence (brahma), though limited in their forms as Rich, Yajush, and Sāman verses, as eternal, and as forming the essence of Vishṇu.

The fourth Section (pp. 18–36) contains passages from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and Manu, in which the great benefits resulting from the study of the Vedas, and the dignity, power, authority, and efficacy of these works are celebrated; together with two other texts from the latter author and the Vishṇu Purāṇa, in which a certain impurity is predicated of the Sāma-veda (compare the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, as quoted in p. 12, where the four Vedas are described as respectively partaking differently of the character of the three Guṇas, or Qualities); and some others from the Vāyu, Padma, Matsya, and Brahma-vaivartta Purāṇas, and the Mahābhārata, and Rāmāyaṇa, which derogate greatly from the consideration of the Vedas, by claiming for the Purāṇas and Itihāsas an equality with, if not a superiority to, the older scriptures. A passage is next quoted from the Muṇḍaka Upanishad, in which the Vedas and their appendages are designated as the "inferior science," in contrast to the "superior science," the knowledge of Soul; and is followed by others from the Bhagavad Gītā, the Chhāndogya Upanishad and the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, in which the ceremonial and polytheistic portions of the Veda are depreciated in comparison with the knowledge of the supreme Spirit.

The fifth Section (pp. 36–49) describes the division of the Vedas in the third or Dvāpara age, by Vedavyāsa and his four pupils, according to texts of the Vishṇu, Vāyu, and Bhāgavata Purāṇas; and then adduces a different account, asserting their division in the second or Tretā age, by the King Purūravas, according to another passage of the same Bhāgavata Purāṇa, and a text of the Mahābhārata (though the latter is silent regarding Purūravas).

Section vi. (pp. 49–57) contains passages from the Vishṇu and Vāyu Purāṇas and the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, regarding the schism between the adherents of the Yajurveda, as represented by the different schools of Vaiśampāyana and Yājnavalkya, and quotes certain remarks of Prof. Weber on the same subject, and on the relation of the Rig and Sāma Vedas to each other, together with some other texts, adduced and illustrated by that scholar, on the hostility of the Ātharvaṇas towards the other Vedas, and of the Chandogas towards the Rig-veda.

Section vii. (pp. 57–70) contains extracts from the works of Sāyaṇa and Mādhava, the commentators on the Rig and Taittirīya Yajur Vedas, in which they both define the characteristics of the Veda, and state certain arguments in support of its authority. Sāyaṇa (pp. 58–66), after noticing the objections urged against his views by persons of a different school, and defining the Veda as a work consisting of Mantra and Brāhmaṇa, asserts that it is not derived from any personal, or at least not from any human, author (compare the further extract from him in p. 105); and rests its authority on its own declarations, on its self-proving power, on the Smṛiti (i.e. non-vedic writings of eminent saints), and on common notoriety. He then encounters some other objections raised against the Veda on the score of its containing passages which are unintelligible, dubious, absurd, contradictory, or superfluous. Mādhava (pp. 66–70) defines the Veda as the work which alone reveals the supernatural means of attaining future felicity; explains that males only, belonging to the three superior castes, are competent to study its contents; and asserts that, inasmuch as it is eternal, it is a primary and infallible authority. This eternity of the Veda, however, he appears to interpret as not being absolute, but as dating from the first creation, when it was produced from Brahmā, though, as he is free from defects, the Veda, as his work, is self-proved.

Section viii. (pp. 70–108) contains the views of Jaimini and Bādarāyaṇa, the (alleged) authors of the Mīmānsā and Brahma (or Vedānta) Sūtras on the eternity of the Veda. Jaimini asserts that sound, or words, are eternal, that the connection between words and the objects they represent also, is not arbitrary or conventional, but eternal, and that consequently the Vedas convey unerring information in regard to unseen objects. This view he defends against the Naiyāyikas, answering their other objections, and insisting that the names, derived from those of certain sages, by which particular parts of the Vedas are designated, do not prove those sages to have been their authors, but merely the teachers who studied and handed them down; while none of the names occurring in the Veda are those of temporal beings, but all denote some objects which have existed eternally. Two quotations in support of the supernatural origin of the Veda are next introduced from the Nyāya-mālā-vistara (a condensed account of the Mīmāṅsā system) and from the Vedārtha-prakāśa (the commentary on the Taittirīya Yajur-veda). The arguments in both passages (pp. 86–89) are to the same effect, and contain nothing that has not been already in substance anticipated in preceding summaries of the Mīmānsā doctrine. In reference to their argument that no author of the Veda is remembered, I have noticed here that the supposition which an objector might urge, that the ṛishis, the acknowledged utterers of the hymns, might also have been their authors, is guarded against by the tenet, elsewhere maintained by Indian writers, that the rishis were merely seers of the pre-existing sacred texts. Some of the opinions quoted from the Sūtras of Jaimini are further enforced in a passage from the summary of the Mīmānṣā doctrine, which I have quoted from the Sarva-darśana-saṅgraha. The writer first notices the Naiyāyika objections to the Mīmānsaka tenet that the Veda had no personal author, viz. (1) that any tradition to this effect must have been interrupted at the past dissolution of the universe; (2) that it would be impossible to prove that no one had ever recollected any such author; (3) that the sentences of the Veda have the same character as all other sentences; (4) that the inference,—drawn from the present mode of transmitting the Vedas from teacher to pupil,—that the same mode of transmission must have gone on from eternity, breaks down by being equally applicable to any other book; (5) that the Veda is in fact ascribed to a personal author in a passage of the book itself; (6) that sound is not eternal, and that when we recognize letters as the same we have heard before, this does not prove their identity or eternity, but is merely a recognition of them as belonging to the same species as other letters we have heard before; (7) that though Parameśvara (God) is naturally incorporeal, he may have assumed a body in order to reveal the Veda, etc. The writer then states the Mīmānsaka answers to these arguments thus: What does this alleged 'production by a personal author' (pauruṣheyatva) mean? The Veda, if supposed to be so produced, cannot derive its authority (a) from inference (or reasoning), as fallible books employ the same process. Nor will it suffice to say (b) that it derives its authority from its truth: for the Veda is defined to be a book which proves that which can be proved in no other way. And even if Parameśvara (God) were to assume a body, he would not, in that state of limitation, have any access to supernatural knowledge. Further, the fact that different śākhās or recensions of the Vedas are called after the names of particular sages, proves no more than that these recensions were studied by those sages, and affords no ground for questioning the eternity of the Vedas,—an eternity which is proved by the fact of our recognizing letters when we meet with them. These letters are the very identical letters we had heard before, for there is no evidence to show either that letters of the same sort (G's, for instance,) are numerically different from each other, or that they are generic terms, denoting a species. The apparent differences which are observable in the same letter, result merely from the particular characteristics of the persons who utter it, and do not affect its identity. This is followed by further reasoning in support of the same general view; and the writer then arrives at the conclusion, which he seems to himself to have triumphantly established, that the Veda is underived and authoritative.

The question of the effect produced on the Vedas by the dissolutions of the world is noticed in some extracts from Patanjali's Mahābhāshya and its commentators, which have been adduced by Prof. Goldstücker in the Preface to his Mānava-kalpa Sūtra, and which I have partly reprinted in pp. 95 ff. It is admitted by Patañjali, that, though the sense of the Vedas is permanent, the order of their letters has not always remained the same, and that this difference is exhibited in the different recensions of the Kāṭhakas and other schools. Patañjali himself does not say what is the cause of this alteration in the order of the letters; but his commentator, Kaiyyaṭa, states that the order was disturbed during the great mundane dissolutions, etc., and had to be restored (though with variations) by the eminent science of the rishis. Kullūka, the commentator on Manu (see p. 6), maintains that the Veda was preserved in the memory of Brahmā during the period of dissolution; and promulgated again at the beginning of the Kalpa, but whether in an altered form, or not, he does not tell us. The latter point is also left unsolved in Śankara's commentary on Brahma Sūtra i. 3, 30, which I quote in the Appendix, pp. 300 ff. Pages 93 ff. contain some remarks (by way of parenthesis) on the question whether or not the Pūrva Mīmāṁsā admits the existence of a Deity.

In the extract given in pp. 98–105 from his commentary on the Brahma Sūtras,[1] Śankara, who follows the author of those Sūtras, and Jaimini, in basing the authority of the Vedas on the eternity of sound, finds it necessary to meet an objection that, as the gods mentioned in the Veda had confessedly an origin in time, the words which designate those gods cannot be eternal, but must have originated co-evally with the created objects which they denote, since eternal words could not have an eternal connection with non-eternal objects. This difficulty he tries to overcome (ignoring the ground taken by Jaimini, that the Veda contains no references to non-eternal objects) by asserting that the eternal connection of words is not with individual objects, but with the species to which these objects belong, and that Indra and the other gods are proved by the Veda to belong to species. Śankara then goes on to assert, on the authority of Brahma Sūtra, i. 3, 28, fortified by various texts from the Vedas and the Smṛitis, that the gods and the world generally are produced (though not in the sense of evolution out of a material cause) from the word of the Vedas (see pp. 6 and 16) in the form of sphoṭa. This last term will be explained below. This subject above referred to, of the eternal connection of the words of the Veda with the objects they represent, is further pursued in a passage which I have quoted in the Appendix, p. 300, where an answer is given to the objection that the objects denoted by the words of the Veda cannot be eternal, as a total destruction of everything takes place (not, indeed, at the intermediate, but) at the great mundane dissolutions. The solution given is that, by the favour of the supreme Lord, the inferior lords Brahmā, etc., retain a recollection of the previous mundane conditions; and that in each successive creation everything is produced exactly the same as it had previously been. I then proceed in p. 105 to adduce a passage from Sāyaṇa, the commentator on the Rig-veda, who refers to another of the Brahma Sūtras, i. 1, 3 (quoted in p. 106), declaring that Brahma was the source of the Veda, which Śankara interprets as containing a proof of the omniscience of Brahma. Sāyaṇa understands this text as establishing the superhuman origin of the Veda, though not its eternity in the proper sense, it being only meant, according to him (as well as to Mādhava; see p. xi.), that the Veda is eternal in the same sense as the æther is eternal, i.e. during the period between each creation and dissolution of the universe.

[1] My attention was originally drawn to this passage by a treatise, then unpublished, by the Rev. Prof. Banerjea, formerly of Bishop's College, Calcutta.

In opposition to the tenets of the Mīmānsakas, who hold the eternity (or the eternal self-existence) of the Veda, and to the dogmas of the Vedānta, as just expounded, Gotama, the author of the Nyāya aphorisms, denies (Section ix. pp. 108–118) the eternity of sound; and after vindicating the Veda from the charges of falsehood, self-contradiction, and tautology, deduces its authority from the authority of the wise, or competent, person or persons who were its authors, as proved by the efficacy of such of the Vedic prescriptions as relate to mundane matters, and can be tested by experience. It does not distinctly result from Gotama's aphorism that God is the competent person whom he regards as the maker of the Veda. If he did not refer to God, he must have regarded the rishis as its authors. The authors of the Vaiśeshika Sūtras, and of the Tarka Sangraha, as well as the writer of the Kusumānjali, however, clearly refer the Veda to Īśvara (God) as its framer (pp. 118–133). Udayana, the author of the latter work (pp. 128–133), controverts the opinion that the existence of the Veda from eternity can be proved by a continuous tradition, as such a tradition must, he says, have been interrupted at the dissolution of the world, which preceded the existing creation. He, therefore (as explained by his commentator), infers an eternal (and omniscient author of the Veda; asserting that the Veda is paurusheya, or derived from a personal author; that many of its own texts establish this; and that the appellations given to its particular śākhās or recensions, are derived from the names of those sages whose persons were assumed by Īśvara, when he uttered them at the creation. In pp. 125 ff. I have quoted one of the Vaiśeshika Sūtras, with some passages from the commentator, to show the conceptions the writers entertained of the nature of the supernatural knowledge, or intuition, of the rishis.

Kapila, the author of the Sānkhya Aphorisms (pp. 133–138), agrees with the Nyāya and Vaiśeshika aphorists in denying the eternity of the Veda, but, in conformity with his own principles, differs from Gotama and Kaṇāda in denying its derivation from a personal (i.e. here, a divine) author, because there was no person (i.e. as his commentator explains, no God) to make it. Vishṇu, the chief of the liberated beings, though omniscient, could not, he argues, have made the Veda, owing to his impassiveness, and no other person could have done so from want of omniscience. And even if the Veda have been uttered by the primæval Purusha, it cannot be called his work, as it was breathed forth by him unconsciously. Kapila agrees with Jaimini in ascribing a self-demonstrating power to the Veda, and differs from the Vaiśeshikas in not deriving its authority from correct knowledge possessed by a conscious utterer. He proceeds to controvert the existence of such a thing as sphoṭa (a modification of sound which is assumed by the Mīmānsakas, and described as single, indivisible, distinct from individual letters, existing in the form of words, and constituting a whole), and to deny the eternity of sound.

In the tenth Section (pp. 138–179) I shew (a) by quotations from the aphorisms of the Vedānta and their commentator (pp. 140–145), that the author and expounder of the Uttara Mīmāṁsā (the Vedānta) frequently differ from Jaimini the author of the Pūrva Mīmāṁsā in the interpretation of the same texts of the Upanishads. A similar diversity is next (b) proved at greater length (pp. 145-173), by quotations from the aphorisms and commentaries of the Vedānta and the Sānkhya, to characterize the expositions proposed by the adherents of those two systems respectively. One quotation is given in pp. 175 ff. to shew (c) that the same is true in regard to the followers of the Vaiśeshika philosophy, who distinctly reject the Vedāntic explanations; and last of all (d) I have made some extracts (pp. 177 ff.) from the Bhakti Sūtras of Sāṇḍilya to exhibit the wide divergence of that writer from the orthodox views of the Vedānta regarding the sense of the Vedas. In pp. 173–175 I quote some remarks of Dr. E. Roer, and Prof. Max Müller, regarding the doctrines of the Upanishads, and their relations to the different philosophical schools.

In the facts brought forward in this section we find another illustration (1) of the tendency common to all dogmatic theologians to interpret in strict conformity with their own opinions the unsystematic and not always consistent texts of an earlier age which have been handed down by tradition as sacred and infallible, and to represent them as containing, or as necessarily implying, fixed and consistent systems of doctrine; as well as (2) of the diversity of view which so generally prevails in regard to the sense of such texts among writers of different schools, who adduce them with equal positiveness of assertion as establishing tenets and principles which are mutually contradictory or inconsistent.

In the eleventh Section (pp. 179–207) some passages are adduced from the Nyāya-mālā-vistara, and from Kullūka's commentary on Manu, to show that a distinct line of demarcation is drawn by the scholastic writers between the Vedas on the one hand, and all other classes of Indian scriptures, embraced under the designation of Smṛiti (including the Darśanas, the Institutes of Manu, the Purāṇas, and Itihāsas, etc.), on the other, the first being regarded as independent and infallible guides, while the others are (in theory) held to be authoritative only in so far as they are founded on, and coincide with, the Veda. The practical effect of this distinction is, however, much lessened by the fact that the ancient sages, the authors of the Smṛitis, such of them, I mean, as, like Manu, are recognized as orthodox, are looked upon by Mādhava and Śaṅkara as having had access to Vedic texts now no longer extant, as having held communion with the gods, and as having enjoyed a clearness of intuition into divine mysteries which is denied to later mortals (pp. 181–185). Sankara, however (as shewn in pp. 184–192), does not regard all the ancients as having possessed this infallible insight into truth, but exerts all his ingenuity to explain away the claims (though clearly sanctioned by an Upanishad) of Kapila, who was not orthodox according to his Vedāntic standard, to rank as an authority. In his depreciation of Kapila, however, Sankara is opposed to the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (p. 192). I then proceed to observe (pp. 194–196) that although in ancient times the authors of the different philosophical systems (Darśanas) no doubt put forward their respective opinions as true, in opposition to all the antagonistic systems, yet in modern times the superior orthodoxy of the Vedānta appears to be generally recognized; while the authors of the other systems are regarded, e.g. by Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, as, amid all their diversities, having in view, as their ultimate scope, the support of the Vedāntic theory. The same view, in substance, is taken by Vijnāna Bhikshu, the commentator on the Sānkhya Sūtras, who (pp. 196–203) maintains that Kapila's system, though atheistic, is not irreconcilable with the Vedānta and other theistic schools, as its denial of an Īśvara (God) is only practical, or regulative, and merely enforced in order to withdraw men from the too earnest contemplation of an eternal and perfect Deity, which would impede their study of the distinction between matter and spirit. To teach men this discrimination, as the great means of attaining final liberation, is one of the two main objects, and strong points, of the Sānkhya philosophy, and here it is authoritative; while its atheism is admitted to be its weak side, and on this subject it has no authority. Vijnāna Bhikshu goes on to say that it is even supposable that theistic systems, in order to prevent sinners from attaining knowledge, may lay down doctrines partially opposed to the Vedas; and that though in these portions they are erroneous, they will still possess authority in the portions conformable to the Śruti and Smṛiti. He then quotes a passage from the Padma Purāṇa, in which the god Śiva tells his consort Pārvatī that the Vaiśeshika, the Nyāya, the Sānkhya, the Purva-mīmānsā Darśanas, and the Vedāntic theory of illusion, are all systems infected by the dark (or tāmasa) principle, and consequently more or less unauthoritative. All orthodox (āstika) theories, however, are, as Vijnāna Bhikshu considers, authoritative, and free from error on their own special subject. And as respects the discrepancy between the Sānkhya and the Vedānta, regarding the unity of Soul, he concludes that the former is not devoid of authority, as the apparent diversity of souls is acknowledged by the Vedānta, and the discriminative knowledge which the Sānkhya teaches is an instrument of liberation to the embodied soul; and thus the two varying doctrines, if regarded as, the one practical (or regulative), and the other real (or transcendental), will not be contradictory. At the close of Section eleventh (pp. 204–207) it is shewn that the distinction drawn by the Indian commentators between the superhuman Veda and its human appendages, the Kalpa Sūtras, etc., as well as the Smṛitis, is not borne out by certain texts which I had previously cited. The Bṛihad Āraṇyaka and Muṇḍaka Upanishads (pp. 8, 31) seem to place all the different sorts of Śāstras or scriptures (including the four Vedas) in one and the same class, the former speaking of them all promiscuously as being the breathing of Brahma, while the latter describes them all (except the Upanishads) as being parts of the "inferior science," in opposition to the "superior science," or knowledge of Brahma. In the same spirit as the Muṇḍaka, the Chhāndogya Upanishad also (quoted in p. 32 f.) includes the four Vedas in the same list with a variety of miscellaneous Śāstras (which Nārada has studied without getting beyond the confines of exoteric knowledge), and never intimates (unless it be by placing them at the head of the list) that the former can claim any superiority over the other works with which they are associated. As, however, Śaṅkara could not, in consistency with the current scholastic theory regarding the wide difference between the Vedas and all other Śāstras, admit that the latter could have had a common origin with the former, he endeavours in his comment on the passage of the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad to which I have adverted, to shew that the other works, which are there said to have been breathed out by the great Being along with the Vedas, were in reality portions of the Brāhmaṇas. This explanation can scarcely apply to all the works enumerated, and its force is weakened by the tenor of the other passages from the Muṇḍaka and Chhāndogya Upanishads, while any such distinction is repudiated in the statements of the Itihāsas and Purāṇas quoted in pp. 27–30 and 105.

In the twelfth Section (pp. 207–217) the arguments in support of the Veda, adduced in the philosophical systems, and by the various commentators, as above summarised, are recapitulated, and some remarks are made on these reasonings. My observations are intended to shew that the arguments in question are inconclusive, or assume the points to be established; that the rishis are proved by the contents of the hymns to have been their real authors; and that numerous events which have occurred in time, are undoubtedly mentioned in the Vedas. This as we have seen (above, p. xvi.) is admitted by Sankara.

The Second Chapter (pp. 217–286) exhibits the opinions of the rishis in regard to the origin of the Vedic hymns. Its object is to shew in detail that, though some at least of the rishis appear to have imagined themselves to be inspired by the gods in the expression of their religious emotions and ideas, they at the same time regarded the hymns as their own compositions, or as (presumably) the compositions of their forefathers, distinguishing between them as new and old, and describing their own authorship in terms which could only have been dictated by a consciousness of its reality. The first, second, and third Sections (pp. 218–244) contain a collection of passages from the Rig-veda in which a distinction is drawn (1) between the rishis as ancient and modern, and (2) between the hymns as older and more recent; and in which (3) the rishis describe themselves as the makers, fabricators, or generators of the hymns; with some additional texts in which such authorship appears to be implied, though it is not expressed. Section fourth (pp. 245–283) contains a variety of passages from the same Veda, in which (1) a superhuman character or supernatural faculties are ascribed to the earlier rishis; and (2) the idea is expressed that the praises and ceremonies of the rishis were suggested and directed by the gods in general, or, in particular, by the goddess of speech, or by some other or others of the different deities of the Vedic pantheon. To illustrate, and render more intelligible and probable, the opinions which I have ascribed to the old Indian rishis regarding their own inspiration, I have quoted in the same Section (pp. 267 - 273) a number of passages from Hesiod and Homer to shew that the early Greek bards entertained a similar belief. I then advert (pp. 273 - 274) to the remarkable divergence between the later religious histories of Greece and of India. I next enquire briefly (in pp. 274 - 275) in what way we can reconcile the apparently conflicting ideas of the rishis on the subject of the hymns, considered, on the one hand, as their own productions, and, on the other, as inspired by the gods. Then follow (pp. 275 - 279) some further texts from the Rig-veda, in which a mystical, magical, or supernatural efficacy is ascribed to the hymns. These are succeeded (pp. 279-283) by a few quotations from the same Veda, in which the authors complain of their own ignorance; and by a reference to the contrast between these humble confessions and the proud pretensions set up by later theologians in behalf of the Veda, and its capability of imparting universal knowledge. The ideas of the rishis regarding their own inspiration differ widely from the conceptions of later theorists; for while the former looked upon the gods, who were confessedly mere created beings, as the sources of supernal illumination, the latter either regard the Veda as eternal, or refer it to the eternal Brahma, or Īśvara, as its author. The fifth and last Section (pp. 283-286) adduces some texts from the Śvetāśvatara, Muṇḍaka and Chhāndogya Upanishads, which show the opinions of the writers regarding the inspiration, of their predecessors; and refers to the similar claims set up on their own behalf by the writers of the Itihāsas and Purāṇas, as shewn in the passages quoted in pp. 27-30.

With all its imperfections this volume may perhaps possess a certain interest, not only for the student of Indian history, but also for the divine and the philosopher, as furnishing a few documents to illustrate the course of theological opinion in a sphere far removed from the ordinary observation of the European student, —a course which, quite independently of the merits of the different tenets involved in the enquiry, will, I think, be found to present a remarkable parallel in various respects to that which is traceable in the history of those religious systems with which we are most familiar. In both cases we find that a primitive age of ardent emotion, of simple faith, and of unarticulated beliefs, was succeeded by a period of criticism and speculation, when the floating materials handed down by preceding generations were compared, classified, reconciled, developed into their consequences, and elaborated into a variety of scholastic systems.

In the Preface to the first edition I stated as follows: "In regard to the texts quoted from the Rig-veda, I have derived the same sort of assistance from the French version of M. Langlois, which has been acknowledged in the Preface to the Second Volume, p. vi. I am also indebted for some of the Vedic texts to Boehtlingk and Roth's Lexicon."

A comparison of the former edition with the present will shew that considerable alterations and additions have been made in the latter. The texts which formerly stood in the Appendix have now been transferred to their proper places in the body of the work; and various other passages have been transposed. The principal additions will be found in the first four sections, in the ninth (pp. 115-127), tenth (which is altogether new), eleventh (pp. 185 ff.), and in the Appendix.

I am indebted to various learned friends for assistance in different parts of the work, which I have acknowledged in the notes. My thanks are especially due to Professors Goldstücker and Cowell for various important corrections which they have suggested in my translations of passages of a scholastic and philosophical character, quoted either in the body of the volume or in the Appendix,—corrections which are incorporated in the text,—as well as for some further remarks and suggestions which will be found in the notes or Appendix. I am also under obligations to Professor Aufrecht for some emendations of my renderings in the early part of the work, as well as for his explanations of many of the texts of the Rig-veda cited in the Second Chapter.

EDINBURGH,
November, 1868.

J. MUIR.

CONTENTS.

PAGES.

v.—xxviii. PREFACE.

1—217. CHAPTER I. OPINIONS REGARDING THE ORIGIN, DIVISION, INSPIRATION, AND AUTHORITY OF THE VEDAS, HELD BY INDIAN AUTHORS SHORTLY BEFORE, OR SUBSEQUENT TO, THE COLLECTION OF THE HYMNS OF THE RIG-VEDA.

3—10. SECT. I. Origin of the Vedas according to the Purusha-sūkta, the Atharva-veda, the Brāhmaṇas, Upanishads, and Institutes of Manu.

10—14. SECT. II. Origin of the Vedas according to the Vishṇu, Bhāgavata, and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas, the Harivaṁśa, the Mahābhārata; eternity of the Veda; miscellaneous statements regarding it.

14—18. SECT. III. Passages of the Brāhmaṇas and other works in which the Vedas are spoken of as being the sources of all things, and as infinite and eternal.

18—36. SECT. IV. Passages from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and Manu eulogistic of the Veda, with some statements of a different tenor from Manu and other writers.

36—49. SECT. V. Division of the Vedas, according to the Vishṇu, Vāyu, and Bhāgavata Purāṇas, and the Mahābhārata.

49—57. SECT. VI. Accounts in the Vishṇu and Vāyu Purāṇas of the schisms between the adherents of the Yajur-veda, Vaiśampāyana, and Yājnavalkya; hostility of the Ātharvaṇas towards the other Vedas; and of the Chhandogas towards the Rig-veda.

PAGES.

57—70. Sect. VII. Reasonings of the Commentators on the Vedas, in support of the authority of the Vedas.

70—108. Sect. VIII. Arguments of the Mīmānsakas and Vedāntins in support of the eternity and authority of the Vedas.

108—138. Sect. IX. Arguments of the followers of the Nyāya, Vaiśeshika, and Sānkhya systems in support of the authority of the Vedas, but against eternity of sound, and of the Vedas; Vaiśeshika conception of the intuitive knowledge of the rishis.

138—179. Sect. X. Extracts from the Vedānta, Sānkhya, Vaiśeshika, and Bhakti aphorisms, and their commentators, illustrative of the use which the authors of the different Darśanas make of Vedic texts, and the different modes of interpretation which they adopt.

179—207. Sect. XI. Distinction in point of authority between the Veda and the Smṛitis or non-Vedic Śāstras, as stated in the Nyāya-mālā-vistara, and by the commentators on Manu, and the Vedānta; Vijnāna Bhikshu's view of the Sānkhya; opinion of Śankara regarding the authority of the orthodox rishis; difference of view between him and Madhusūdana regarding the orthodoxy of Kapila and Kaṇāda, etc.: the distinction between the Vedas and other Śāstras, drawn by later writers, not borne out by the Upanishads.

207—217. Sect. XII. Recapitulation of the arguments urged in the Darśanas, and by commentators, in support of the authority of the Vedas, with some remarks on these reasonings.

217—286. CHAPTER II. The Rishis, and their Opinions in regard to the Origin of the Vedic Hymns.

218—224. Sect. I. Passages from the Hymns of the Veda which distinguish between the Rishis as Ancient and Modern.

224—232. Sect. II. Passages from the Veda in which a distinction is drawn between the older and the more recent hymns.

PAGES.

232—244. SECT. III. Passages of the Rig-veda in which the Rishis describe themselves as the composers of the Hymns, or intimate nothing to the contrary.

245—283. SECT. IV. Passages of the Rig-veda in which a supernatural character is ascribed to the Rishis or the Hymns; similar conceptions of inspiration entertained by the Greeks of the Homeric age; limitations of this opinion in the case of the Vedic Rishis.

283—286. SECT. V. Texts from the Upanishads, showing the opinions of the authors regarding the inspiration of their predecessors.

287—312. APPENDIX.

287. Quotation from the Atharva-veda xi. 7, 24.

287—288. Amended translations by Professor Aufrecht.

288—289. Quotations from Manu and the Mahābhārata on Vedic and other study.

289—290. Various illustrative quotations and references.

290. Amended translation by Professor Cowell.

290. Note by Professor Cowell on the phrase Kālātyayāpadishṭa.

291. Amended translation by Professor Cowell.

292—300. Quotation of Brahma Sūtras, i. 3, 34–38, with S'ankara's comments, shewing the incompetence of S'ūdras to acquire the highest divine knowledge, with a short passage of a contrary tenor from the Bhagavat Gītā.

300—308. Quotation from Brahma Sūtras, i. 3, 30, with S'ankara's comment, in continuation of the reasoning in pp. 101–105 in support of the eternity of the words of the Veda, and in refutation of the objections derived from the alleged non-eternity of creation; with Brahma Sūtra, ii. 1, 36, and part of S'ankara's comment.

308—309. Quotation from Manu, ii. 14 f.; and from Kullūka in explanation of the term samayādhyushita.

PAGES.

309—10. Corrections by Professors Cowell and Goldstücker.

310. Quotation from Commentary on Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 17, 54.

310. Quotation from Vājasaneyi Saṁhita, xiii. 45, and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vii. 5, 2, 21.

311. Additional texts (i. 67, 4; i. 109, 1, 2; and x. 66, 5) from the Rig-veda, regarding the composition of the hymns.

312. Supplementary note by Prof. Goldstücker, on Kālātyayāpadishṭa.

ERRATA ET CORRIGENDA.

Page 24, line 11. For Brahmā read Brahmă.
„ 45, „ 15. For Yayush read Yajush.
„ 53, „ 8. For theologicans read theologians.
„ 62, „ 2 from foot: For its author read their authors.
„ 85, „ 4 „ Before Prajāpatir insert xi. 243.
„ 95, „ 2 „ For dhvanitvam read dhvanitam.
„ 96, „ 16. The same correction.
„ 101, „ 22. For Vanap. read S'āntip.
„ 149, „ 6. For śabdādikshiter read śabdād ikshiteḥ.
„ 159, „ 16. For chaindri- read cha indri-.
„ 159, „ 31. For paratvou- read paratvo-.
„ 160, „ 18. For punar-utpattir read punar-anutpattir.
„ 213, „ 16. For p. 120 read p. 118.
„ 221, „ 24. For vi. 21, 1 read vi. 21, 8.
„ 224, „ 7 from foot. Omit dhishaṇā.
„ 261, „ 12. For vi. 62, 3 read vi. 26, 3.

ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS.

VOLUME THIRD.

CHAPTER I.

OPINIONS REGARDING THE ORIGIN, DIVISION, INSPIRATION, AND AUTHORITY OF THE VEDAS, HELD BY INDIAN AUTHORS SHORTLY BEFORE, OR SUBSEQUENT TO, THE COLLECTION OF THE HYMNS OF THE RIG-VEDA.

In the preceding volumes of this work[1] I have furnished a general account of the ancient Indian writings, which are comprehended under the designation of Veda or Śruti. These works, which, as we have seen, constitute the earliest literature of the Hindus, are broadly divisible into two classes: (1) The Mantras or hymns, in which the praises of the gods are celebrated and their blessing is invoked; (2) the Brāhmaṇas, which embrace (a) the liturgical institutes in which the ceremonial application of these hymns is declared, the various rites of sacrifice are prescribed, and the origin and hidden import of the different forms are explained, and (b) the Āraṇyakas,[2] and Upanishads (called also Vedāntas, i.e. concluding portions of the Vedas), which in part possess the same character as some of the earlier portions of the Brāhmaṇas, and are in part theological treatises in which the spiritual aspirations which [1] See Vol. I. pp. 2 ff. and Vol. II. pp. 169 ff. See also Professor Max Müller's History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature.

[2] For more precise information see Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. pp. 313 ff. from which it will be perceived that only some of the Āraṇyakas form part of the Brāhmaṇas, and that two of the Upanishads are included in a Saṅhitā.

were gradually developed in the minds of the more devout of the Indian sages are preserved. It is, therefore, clear that the hymns constitute the original and, in some respects, the most essential portion of the Veda; that the Brāhmaṇas arose out of the hymns, and are subservient to their employment for the purposes of worship; while the Upanishads give expression to ideas of a speculative and mystical character which, though to some extent discoverable in the hymns and in the older portion of the Brāhmaṇas, are much further matured, and assume a more exclusive importance, in these later treatises.

I content myself here with referring the reader who desires to obtain a fuller idea of the nature of the hymns, and of the mythology which they embody, to the late Professor H. H. Wilson's translation of the earlier portion of the Rig-veda, to his prefaces to the several volumes, to Professor Max Müller's History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, and to two papers of my own in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, entitled Contributions to a knowledge of the Cosmogony and Mythology of the Rig-veda. In the fourth volume of this work I return to the latter branch of the subject, and compare the conceptions which the rishis entertained of the different objects of their worship, with those representations of the deities who bore the same names, which occur in Indian writings of a later date, whether mythological or theological.

The task to which I propose in the meantime to devote myself, is to supply some account of the opinions entertained by Hindu writers, ancient and modern, in regard to the origin and authority of the Vedas. With this view I have collected from some of the later hymns, from the Indian writings of the middle and later Vedic era (the Brāhmaṇas and Upanishads) as well as from the books, whether popular or scientific, of the post-vedic period (the Purāṇas, the Itihāsas, the Institutes of Manu, the aphorisms of the Darśanas, or systems of philosophy, and their commentators, and the commentaries on the Vedas) such passages as I have discovered which have reference to these subjects, and propose to compare the opinions there set forth with the ideas entertained on some of these points by the writers of the more ancient hymns, as deducible from numerous passages in their own compositions.

The mythical accounts which are given of the origin of the Vedas are mutually conflicting. In some passages they are said to have been created by Prajāpati from fire, air, and the sun, or by some other process. In other texts they are said to have been produced by Brahmā from his different mouths, or by the intervention of the Gāyatrī, or to have sprung from the goddess Sarasvatī, or to have otherwise arisen. I proceed to adduce these several passages.

SECT. I.—Origin of the Vedas according to the Purusha-sūkta, the Atharva-veda, the Brāhmaṇas, Upanishads, and Institutes of Manu.

Purusha-sūkta.—In the ninth verse of this hymn (Rig-veda, x. 90, already quoted in Vol. I. pp. 8 and 9) the three Vedas are said to have been produced from the mystical victim Purusha: Tasmād yajnāt sarva-hutaḥ ṛichaḥ sāmāni jajnire | chhandāṁsi jajnire tasmād yajus tasmād ajāyata | "From that universal sacrifice sprang the ṛich and sāman verses: the metres sprang from it: from it the yajush arose."[3]

This is the only passage in the hymns of the Rig-veda in which the creation of the Vedas is described.

In the Atharva-veda the following texts refer to that subject:

x. 7, 14. Yattra ṛishayaḥ prathamajāḥ ṛichaḥ sāma yajur mahī, | ekarshir yasminn ārpitaḥ Skambhaṁ tam brūhi katamaḥ svid eva saḥ | . . . . 20. Yasmād ṛicho apātakshan yajur yasmād apākashan | sāmāni yasya lomāni atharvāṅgiraso mukham | Skambham tam brūhi katamaḥ svid eva saḥ |

"Declare who that Skambha (supporting-principle) is in whom the primeval rishis, the ṛich, sāman, and yajush, the earth, and the one rishi, are sustained. . . . . 20. Declare who is that Skambha from whom they cut off the ṛich verses, from whom they scraped off the yajush, of whom the sāman verses are the hairs, and the verses of Atharvan and Angiras the mouth."

[3] The word veda, in whatever sense we are to understand it, occurs in R.V. viii. 19, 5: Yaḥ samidhā yaḥ āhutī yo vedena dadāśa martyo agnaye | yo namasā svadhvaraḥ | 6. Tasya id arvanto raṁhayante āśavas tasya dyumnitamaṁ yaśaḥ | na tam aṁho deva-kṛitaṁ kutaś chana na martya-kṛitam naśat | "The horses of that mortal who, devoted to sacrifice, does homage to Agni with fuel, with an oblation, with ritual knowledge (?), with reverence,—(6) speed forward impetuously; and his renown is most glorious. No calamity, caused either by god or by man, can assail him from any quarter."

xiii. 4, 38. Sa vai ṛigbhyo ajāyata tasmād ṛicho ajāyanta |

"He (apparently Indra, see verse 44) sprang from the ṛich verses: the ṛich verses sprang from him."

xix. 54, 3. Kālād ṛichaḥ samabhavan yajuḥ kālād ajāyata |

"From Time the ṛich verses sprang: the yajush sprang from Time."[4]

The following texts from the same Veda may also be introduced here:

iv. 35, 6. Yasmāt pakvād amṛitaṁ sambabhūva yo gāyatryāḥ adhipatir babhūva | yasmin vedāḥ nihitāḥ viśvarūpās tenaudanenāti tarāmi mṛityum |

"I overpass death by means of that oblation (odana), from which, when cooked, ambrosia (amṛita) was produced, which became the lord of the Gāyatrī, and in which the omniform Vedas are comprehended."

vii. 54, 1. Ṛichaṁ sāma yajāmahe yābhyāṁ karmāṇi kurvate | ete sadasi rājato yajñaṁ deveshu yachhataḥ | 2. Ṛichaṁ sāma yad aprāksham havir ojo yajur balam | esha mā tasmād mā himsīd vedaḥ pṛishṭaḥ śachīpate |

"We worship the Ṛich and the Sāman, wherewith men celebrate religious rites, which shine in the assembly, and convey sacrifices to the gods. 2. Inasmuch as I have asked the Ṛich and the Sāman for butter and for vigour, and the Yajush for strength,—let not the Veda, so asked, destroy me, o lord of strength (Indra)."

The next passage is from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 5, 8, 1 ff.:

Prajāpatir vai idam agre āsīd ekaḥ eva | so 'kāmayata syām prajāyeya iti | So 'śrāmyat sa tapo 'tapyata | tasmāch chrāntāt tepānāt trayo lokāḥ asṛijyanta pṛithivy antarikshaṁ dyauḥ | sa imāṁs trīn lokān abhitatāpa | tebhyas taptebhyas trīṇi jyotīṁshy ajāyanta agnir yo 'yam pavate sūryaḥ | sa imāni trīṇi jyotīṁshy abhitatāpa | tebhyas taptebhyas trayo vedāḥ ajāyanta agner ṛigvedo vāyor yajurvedaḥ sūryāt sāmavedaḥ | sa imāṁs trīn vedān abhitatāpa | tebhyas taptebhyas trīṇi śukrāṇy ajāyanta bhūr ity ṛigvedād bhuvaḥ iti yajurvedāt svar iti sāmavedāt | Tad ṛigvedenaiva hotram akurvata yajurvedena ādhvaryavaṁ sāmavedena udgītham | yad eva trayyai vidyāyai śukraṁ tena brahmatvam uchchakrāma.

"Prajāpati was formerly this universe [i.e. the sole existence], one only. He desired, 'may I become, may I be propagated.' He toiled in devotion, he performed austerity. From him, when he had so toiled, and performed austerity, three worlds were created,—earth, air, and sky. He infused warmth into these three worlds. From them, thus heated, three lights were produced,—Agni (fire), this which purifies (i.e. Pavana, or Vāyu, the wind),[5] and Sūrya (the sun). He infused heat into these three lights. From them so heated the three Vedas were produced,—the Rig-veda from Agni (fire), the Yajur-veda from Vāyu (wind), and the Sāma-veda from Sūrya (the sun). He infused warmth into these three Vedas. From them so heated three luminous essences were produced,—bhūḥ from the Rig-veda, bhuvaḥ from the Yajur-veda, and svar from the Sāma-veda. Hence, with the Rig-veda they performed the function of the hotṛi; with the Yajur-veda, the office of the adhvaryu; with the Sāma-veda, the duty of the udgātṛi; while the function of the brahman arose through the luminous essence of the triple science [i.e. the three Vedas combined]."

[4] See my translation of the entire hymn in the Journal of the Roy. As. Soc. for 1865, p. 381. The Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 2, 13, says: Tad eva sarvam evaitad vyaktāvyakta-svarūpavat | tathā purusha-rūpeṇa kāla-rūpeṇa cha sthitam | "This (Brahma) is all this universe, existing both as the perceptible and the imperceptible; existing also in the forms of Purusha and of Kāla (Time)."

Chhāndogya Upanishad.—A similar passage (already quoted in Volume Second, p. 200) occurs in the Chhāndogya Upanishad (p. 288 of Dr. Röer's ed.):

Prajāpatir lokān abhyatapat | teshāṁ tapyamānānāṁ rasān prābṛihad agnim pṛithivyāḥ vāyum antarikshād ādityaṁ divaḥ | sa etās tisro devatāḥ abhyatapat | tāsāṁ tapyamānānāṁ rasān prābṛihad agner ṛicho vāyor yajūṁshi sāma ādityāt | sa etāṁ trayīṁ vidyām abhyatapat | tasyās tapyamānāyāḥ rasān prābṛihad bhūr iti ṛigbhyo bhuvar iti yajurbhyaḥ svar iti sāmabhyaḥ |

"Prajāpati infused warmth into the worlds, and from them so heated he drew forth their essences, viz. Agni (fire) from the earth, Vāyu (wind) from the air, and Sūrya (the sun) from the sky. He infused warmth into these three deities, and from them so heated he drew forth their essences,—from Agni the ṛich verses, from Vāyu the yajush verses, and from Sūrya the sāman verses. He then infused heat into this triple science, and from it so heated he drew forth its essences,—from ṛich verses the syllable bhūḥ, from yajush verses bhuvaḥ, and from sāman verses svar."[6]

[5] See S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 1, 2, 19: . . . ayam eva sa Vāyur yo 'yam pavate . . . "This is that Vāyu, he who purifies."

[6] Passages to the same effect occur also in the Aitareya (v. 32–34) and Kaushītakī Brāhmaṇas. That in the former will be found in Dr. Haug's translation of the Manu.—The same origin is assigned to the three Vedas in the following verses from the account of the creation in Manu, i. 21–23, where the idea is no doubt borrowed from the Brāhmaṇas:

Sarveshāṁ tu sa nāmāni karmāṇi cha pṛithak pṛithak | Veda-śabdebhya evādau pṛithak saṁsthāś cha nirmame | Karmātmakāṁ cha devānāṁ so 'sṛijat prāṇinām prabhuḥ | sādhyānāṁ cha gaṇaṁ sūkshmaṁ yajñaṁ chaiva sanātanam | Agni-vāyu-ravibhyas tu trayaṁ brâhma sanātanam | dudoha yajña-siddhyartham ṛig-yajuḥ-sāma-lakshaṇam |

"He [Brahmā] in the beginning fashioned from the words of the Veda[7] the several names, functions, and separate conditions of all [creatures]. That Lord also created the subtile host of active and living deities, and of Sādhyas, and eternal sacrifice. And in order to the performance of sacrifice, he drew forth from Agni, from Vāyu, and from Sūrya, the triple eternal Veda, distinguished as Rich, Yajush, and Sāman."

Kullūka Bhaṭṭa, the commentator, annotates thus on this passage:

Sanātanaṁ nityam | vedāpaurusheyatva-paksho Manor abhimataḥ | pūrva-kalpe ye vedās te eva Paramātma-mūrtter Brahmaṇaḥ sarvajnasya smṛity-ārūḍhāḥ | tān eva kalpādāv agni-vāyu-ravibhyaḥ āchakarsha | śrautaś cha ayam artho na śaṅkanīyaḥ | tathācha śrutiḥ | "agner ṛigvedo vāyor yajurvedaḥ ādityāt sāmavedaḥ" iti |

"The word sanātana means 'eternally pre-existing.' The doctrine of the superhuman origin of the Vedas is maintained by Manu. The same Vedas which [existed] in the previous mundane era (Kalpa) were preserved in the memory of the omniscient Brahmā, who was one with the supreme Spirit. It was those same Vedas that, in the beginning of the [present] Kalpa, he drew forth from Agni, Vāyu, and Sūrya: and this dogma, which is founded upon the Veda, is not to be questioned, for the Veda says, 'the Rig-veda comes from Agni, the Yajur-veda from Vāyu, and the Sāma-veda from Sūrya.'"

Another commentator on Manu, Medhātithi, explains this passage in a more rationalistic fashion, "by remarking that the Rig-veda opens with a hymn to fire, and the Yajur-veda with one in which air is mentioned."—Colebr. Misc. Ess. i. p. 11, note.

Brāhmaṇa; and the one in the latter is rendered into German by Weber in his Ind. Stud. ii. 363 ff.

[7] Kullūka explains this to mean, "Having understood them from the words of the Veda" (Veda-śabdebhyaḥ eva avagamya).

To the verses from Manu (i. 21–23) just cited, the following from the second book may be added, partly for the purpose of completing the parallel with the passages previously adduced from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and the Chhāndogya Upanishad:

Manu, ii. 76 ff. Akāraṁ chāpy ukāraṁ cha makāraṁ cha Prajāpatiḥ | Veda-trayād niraduhad bhūr bhuvaḥ svar itīti cha | 77. Tribhyaḥ eva tu vedebhyaḥ pādam pādam adūduhat | "tad" ity ṛicho 'syāḥ sāvitryāḥ parameshṭhī prājāpatiḥ | . . . . 81. Oṁkāra-pūrvikās tisro mahāvyāhṛitayo 'vyayāḥ | Tripadā chaiva gāyatrī vijneyaṁ Brahmaṇo mukham.

76. "Prajāpati also milked out of the three Vedas the letters a, u, and m, together with the words bhūḥ, bhuvaḥ, and svar. 77. The same supreme Prajāpati also milked from each of the three Vedas one of the [three] portions of the text called sāvitrī [or gāyatrī], beginning with the word tat.[8] . . . . 81. The three great imperishable particles (bhūḥ, bhuvaḥ, svar) preceded by om, and the gāyatrī of three lines, are to be regarded as the mouth of Brahmā."

The next passage, from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 1, 1, 8, first speaks generally of Prajāpati creating the three Vedas, and then afterwards, with some inconsistency, describes their production from the waters:[9]

So 'yam purushaḥ Prajāpatir akāmayata "bhūyān syāṁ prajāyeya" iti | so 'śrāmyat sa tapo 'tapyata | sa śrāntas tepāno brahma eva prathamam asṛijata trayīm eva vidyām | sā eva asmai pratishṭhā 'bhavat | tasmād āhur "brahma asya sarvasya pratishṭhā" iti | tasmād anūchya pratitishṭhati | pratishṭhā hy eshā yad brahma | tasyām pratishṭhāyām pratishṭhito 'tapyata | 9. So 'po 'sṛijata vāchaḥ eva lokāt | vāg eva asya sā 'sṛijyata | sā idaṁ sarvam āpnod yad idaṁ kincha | yad āpnot tasmād āpaḥ | yad avṛiṇot tasmād vāḥ | 10. So 'kāmayatā "ābhyo 'dbhyo 'dhi prajāyeya" iti | so 'nayā trayyā vidyayā saha apaḥ prāviśat | tataḥ āṇḍaṁ samavarttata | tad abhyamṛiśat | "astv" ity "astu bhūyo 'stv" ity eva tad abravīt | tato brahma eva prathamam asṛijyata trayy eva vidyā | tasmād āhur "brahma asya sarvasya prathamajam" iti | api hi tasmāt purushād brahma eva pūrvam asṛijyata tad asya tad mukham eva asṛijyata | tasmād anūchānam āhur "agni-kalpaḥ" iti | mukhaṁ hy etad agner yad brahma |

[8] This text, Rig-veda, iii. 62, 10, will be quoted in the sequel.

[9] This passage with the preceding context is given in the Fourth Volume of this work, pp. 18 f.

"This Male, Prajāpati, desired, 'May I multiply, may I be propagated.' He toiled in devotion; he practised austere-fervour. Having done so he first of all created sacred knowledge, the triple Vedic science. This became a basis for him. Wherefore men say, 'Sacred knowledge is the basis of this universe.' Hence after studying the Veda a man has a standing ground; for sacred knowledge is his foundation. Resting on this basis he (Prajāpati) practised austere-fervour. 9. He created the waters from Vāch (speech), as their world. Vāch was his: she was created. She pervaded all this whatever exists. As she pervaded (āpnot), waters were called 'āpaḥ.' As she covered (avriṇot) all, water was called 'vār.' 10. He desired, 'May I be propagated from these waters.' Along with this triple Vedic science he entered the waters. Thence sprang an egg. He gave it an impulse; and said, 'Let there be, let there be, let there be again.' Thence was first created sacred knowledge, the triple Vedic science. Wherefore men say, 'Sacred knowledge is the first-born thing in this universe. Moreover, it was sacred knowledge which was created from that Male in front, wherefore it was created as his mouth. Hence they say of a man learned in the Veda, 'He is like Agni; for sacred knowledge is Agni's mouth.'"

The next passage from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 3, 10, 1, briefly states that the Vedas were created after Soma:

Prajāpatiḥ Somaṁ rājānam asṛijata | taṁ trayo vedāḥ anv asṛijyanta |

"Prajāpati created king Soma. After him the three Vedas were created."

The same Brāhmaṇa in other places, as iii. 3, 2, 1, speaks of the Veda as derived from Prajāpati (Prājāpatyo vedaḥ).

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.—According to the following passage of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiv. 5, 4, 10 (= Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, p. 455 of Röer's ed. and p. 179 of trans.) the Vedas, as well as other Śāstras, are the breath of Brahma:

Sa yathā ārdredhāgner abhyāhitāt pṛithag dhūmāḥ viniścharanti evaṁ vai are 'sya mahato bhūtasya niśvasitam etad yad rigvedo yajurvedaḥ sāmavedo 'tharvāṅgirasaḥ itihāsaḥ purāṇaṁ vidyā upanishadaḥ ślokāḥ sūtrāṇy anuvyākhyānāni vyākhyānāni asyaiva etāni sarvāṇi niśvasitāni |

"As from a fire made of moist wood various modifications of smoke proceed, so is the breathing of this great Being the Rig-veda, the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, the Atharvāngirases, the Itihāsas, Purāṇas, science, the Upanishads, verses (ślokas), aphorisms, comments of different kinds—all these are his breathings."

It is curious that in this passage the Vedas appear to be classed in the same category with various other works, such as the Sūtras, from some at least of which (as we shall see further on), they are broadly distinguished by later writers, who regard the former (including the Brāhmaṇas and Upanishads) as of superhuman origin, and infallible correctness, while this character is expressly denied to the latter, which are represented as paurusheya, or merely human compositions, possessed of no independent authority.

In the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad (pp. 50–53 of Dr. Röer's ed.) Prajāpati [identified with Death, or the Devourer] is said to have produced Vāch (speech), and through her, together with soul, to have created all things, including the Vedas:

Sa tayā vāchā tena ātmanā idaṁ sarvam asṛijata yad idaṁ kincha ṛicho yajūṁshi sāmāni chhandāṁsi yajnān prajāḥ paśūn |

"By that speech and that soul he created all things whatsoever, ṛich, yajush, and sāman texts, metres, sacrifices, creatures, and animals."

And in Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiv. 4, 3, 12 (p. 290 of the same Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad) it is said:

Trayo vedāḥ ete eva | vāg eva ṛig-vedo manô yajur-vedaḥ prānaḥ sāma-vedaḥ |

"The three Vedas are [identifiable with] these three things [speech, mind, and breath]. Speech is the Rig-veda, mind the Yajur-veda, and breath the Sāma-veda."

The following text, from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vii. 5, 2, 52, gives a singular account of the production of the Vedas:

"Samudre tvā sadane sādayāmi" iti | Mano vai samudraḥ | manaso vai samudrād vāchā 'bhryā devās trayīṁ vidyāṁ nirakhanan | tad esha śloko 'bhyuktaḥ "ye (yat?) samudrād nirakhanan devās tīkshṇābhir abhribhiḥ | sudevo adya tad vidyād yatra nirvapaṇaṁ ādhur" iti | manaḥ samudro vāk tikshṇā 'bhris trayī vidyā nirvapaṇam | etad esha śloko 'bhyuktaḥ | manasi tāṁ sādayati |

"'I settle thee in the ocean as thy seat.'[10] Mind is the ocean.

[10] I am indebted to Professor Aufrecht for the following explanation of this formula, which is taken from the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, xiii. 53. The words are addressed to a

From the mind-ocean with speech for a shovel the gods dug out the triple Vedic science. Hence this verse has been uttered: 'May the brilliant deity to-day know where they placed that offering which the gods dug out with sharp shovels.' Mind is the ocean; speech is the sharp shovel; the triple Vedic science is the offering. In reference to this the verse has been uttered. He settles it in Mind."

The next passage from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 39, 1, speaks of the Veda as being "the hair of Prajāpati's beard" (Prajāpater vai etāni śmaśrūṇi yad vedaḥ). The process of its germination is left to the imagination of the reader.

In another text of the same Brāhmaṇa, Vāch (speech) is called the mother of the Vedas:

ii. 8, 8, 5. Vāg aksharam prathamajā ṛitasya vedānām mātā amṛitasya nābhiḥ | sā no jushāṇā upa yajnam āgād avantī devī suhavā me astu | yām ṛishayo mantra-kṛito manīshiṇaḥ anvaichhan devās tapasā śrameṇa |

"Vāch (speech) is an imperishable thing, and the first-born of the ceremonial, the mother of the Vedas, and the centre-point of immortality. Delighting in us, she came to the sacrifice. May the protecting goddess be ready to listen to my invocation,—she whom the wise rishis, the composers of hymns, the gods, sought by austere fervour, and by laborious devotion."

Sect. II.—Origin of the Vedas according to the Vishṇu, Bhāgavata, and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas, the Harivaṁśa, the Mahābhārata; eternity of the Veda; miscellaneous statements regarding it.

In the Vishṇu and Bhāgavata Purāṇas we find a quite different tradition regarding the origin of the Vedas, which in these works are said to have been created by the four-faced Brahmā from his several mouths. Thus the Vishṇu Purāṇa says, i. 5, 48 ff.:

Gāyatraṁ cha ṛichaś chaiva trivṛit-sāma-rathantaram | Agnishṭomaṁ cha yajnānāṁ nirmame prathamād mukhāt | yajūṁshi traiṣṭubhaṁ chhandaḥ stomaṁ panchadaśaṁ tathā | Vṛihat sāma tathokthyaṁ cha dakshiṇād asṛijad mukhāt | sāmāni jagatī-chhandaḥ stomaṁ saptadaśaṁ brick at the time when the hearth (chityā) for the reception of the sacred fires is being constructed. As the bricks are severally called apasyā (properly 'efficacious,' but erroneously derived from ap) they are addressed as if placed in various parts of water

tathā | vairūpam atirātraṁ cha paśchimād asṛijad mukhāt | ekaviṁśam atharvāṇam āptoryāmāṇam eva cha | Anushṭubhaṁ sa vairājam uttarād asṛijad mukhāt |

"From his eastern mouth Brahmā formed the gāyatra, the ṛich verses, the trivṛit, the sāma-rathantara, and of sacrifices, the agnishṭoma. From his southern mouth he created the yajush verses, the trishṭubh metre, the pancḥadaśa-stoma, the vṛihat-sāman, and the ukthya. From his western mouth he formed the sāman verses, the jagatī metre, the saptadaśa-stoma, the vairūpa, and the atirātra. From his northern mouth he framed the ekavinśa, the atharvan, the āptoryāman, with the anushṭubh and virāj metres." [11]

In like manner it is said but with variations, in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, iii. 12, 34, and 37 ff.:

Kadāchid dhyāyataḥ srashṭur vedāḥ āsaṁś chaturmukhāt | kathaṁ srakshyāmy ahaṁ lokān samavetān yathā purā | . . . . Ṛig-yajuḥ-sāmātharvākhyān vedān pūrvādibhir mukhaiḥ | śastram ijyāṁ stuti-stomam prāyaśchittaṁ vyadhāt kramāt |

"Once the Vedas sprang from the four-faced creator, as he was meditating 'how shall I create the aggregate worlds as before?' . . . . He formed from his eastern and other mouths the Vedas called ṛich, yajush, sāman, and atharvan, together with praise, sacrifice, hymns, and expiation."

And in verse 45 it is stated that the ushṇih metre issued from his hairs, the gāyatrī from his skin, the trishṭubh from his flesh, the anushṭubh from his tendons, the jagatī from his bones (Tasyoshṇig āsīl lomebhyo gāyātrī cha tvacho vibhoḥ | trishṭup māṁsāt snuto 'nushṭup jagaty asthnaḥ Prajāpateḥ).

The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa says on the same subject, 102, 1:

Tasmād aṇḍād vibhinnāt tu Brahmaṇo 'vyakta-janmanaḥ | ṛicho babhūvaḥ prathamam prathamād vadanād mune | 2. Javā-pushpa-nibhāḥ sadyas tejo-rūpānta-saṁhatāḥ | pṛithak pṛithag vibhinnāś cha rajo-rūpa-vahās tataḥ | 3. Yajūṁshi dakshiṇād vaktrād anirūddhāni kānchanam | yādṛig-varṇaṁ tathā-varṇāny asaṁhati-dharāṇi cha | 4. Paśchimaṁ yad vibhor vaktram Brahmaṇaḥ parameshṭhinaḥ | āvirbhūtāni sāmāni tataś chhandāṁsi tāny atha | 5. Ātharvaṇam aśeshaṁ cha bhṛingāñjana-chaya-prabham | ghorāghora-svarūpaṁ tad ābhichārika-śāntikam | 6. Uttarāt pra-

[11] See Wilson's Transl. vol. i. p. 84.

kaṭībhūtaṁ vadanāt tasya vedhasaḥ | sukha-sattva-tamaḥ-prāyaṁ saumyā-saumya-svarūpavat | 7. Ṛicho rajo-guṇāḥ sattvaṁ yajushāṁ cha guṇo mune | tamo-guṇāni sāmāni tamaḥ-sattvam atharvasu |

1. "From the eastern mouth of Brahmā, who sprang by an imperceptible birth from that divided egg (Manu, i. 9, 12), there suddenly issued first of all the ṛich verses, (2) resembling China roses, brilliant in appearance, internally united, though separated from each other, and characterized by the quality of passion (rajas). 3. From his southern mouth came, unrestrained, the yajush verses of the colour of gold, and disunited. 4. From the western mouth of the supreme Brahmā appeared the sāman verses and the metres. 5 and 6. From the northern mouth of Vedhas (Brahmā) was manifested the entire Ātharvaṇa of the colour of black bees and collyrium, having a character at once terrible and not terrible,[12] capable of neutralizing the arts of enchanters, pleasant, characterized by the qualities both of purity and darkness, and both beautiful and the contrary. 7. The verses of the ṛich are distinguished by the quality of passion (rajas), those of the yajush by purity (sattva), those of the sāman by darkness (tamas), and those of the atharvan by both darkness and purity."

Harivaṁśa.—In the first section of the Harivaṁśa, verse 47, the creation of the Vedas by Brahmā is thus briefly alluded to:

Ṛicho yajūṁshi sāmāni nirmame yajna-siddhaye | sādhyās tair ayajan devān ity evam anuśuśruma |

"In order to the accomplishment of sacrifice, he formed the ṛich, yajush, and sāman verses: with these the Sādhyas worshipped the gods, as we have heard."

The following is the account of the same event given in another part of the same work; Harivaṁśa, verse 11,516:

Tato 'sṛijad vai tripadām gāyatrīṁ veda-mātaram | Akaroch chaiva chaturo vedān gāyatri-sambhavān |

After framing the world, Brahmā "next created the gāyatrī of three lines, mother of the Vedas, and also the four Vedas which sprang from the gāyatrī."[13]

[12] Ghorāghora is the correct MS. reading, as I learn from Dr. Hall, and not yāvaddhora, as given in Professor Banerjea's printed text.

[13] The same words gāyatrīṁ veda-mātaram also occur in the M.Bh. Vanaparvan, verse 13,432; and the same title is applied to Vāch in the Taitt. Br. as quoted above, p 10.

A little further on we find this expanded into the following piece of mysticism, verse 11,665 ff.:

Samāhita-manā Brahmā mokshạ-prāptena hetunā | chandra-maṇḍala-saṁsthānāj jyotis-tejo mahat tadā | Praviśya hṛidayaṁ kshipraṁ gāyatryāḥ nayanāntare | Garbhasya sambhavo yaś cha chaturdhā purushātmakaḥ | Brahma-tejomayo 'vyaktaḥ śāśvato 'tha dhruvo 'vyayaḥ | na chendriya-guṇair yukto yuktas tejo-guṇena cha | chandrāṁśu-vimala-prakhyo bhrājishṇur varṇa-saṁsthitaḥ | Netrābhyāṁ janayad devaḥ ṛig-vedaṁ yajushā saha | sāmavedaṁ cha jihvāgrād atharvāṇaṁ cha mūrddhataḥ | Jāta-mātrās tu te vedāḥ kshetraṁ vindanti tattvataḥ | Tena vedatvam āpannā yasmād vindanti tat padam | Te sṛijanti tadā vedāḥ brahma pūrvaṁ sanātanam | Purushaṁ divya-rūpābhaṁ svaiḥ svair bhāvair mano-bhavaiḥ |

"For the emancipation of the world, Brahmā, sunk in contemplation, issuing in a luminous form from the region of the moon, penetrated into the heart of Gāyatrī, entering between her eyes. From her there was then produced a quadruple being in the form of a Male, lustrous as Brahmā, undefined, eternal, undecaying, devoid of bodily senses or qualities, distinguished by the attribute of brilliancy, pure as the rays of the moon, radiant, and embodied in letters. The god fashioned the Rig-veda, with the Yajush from his eyes, the Sāma-veda from the tip of his tongue, and the Atharvan from his head. These Vedas, as soon as they are born, find a body (kshetra). Hence they obtain their character of Vedas, because they find (vindanti) that abode. These Vedas then create the pre-existent eternal brahma (sacred science), a Male of celestial form, with their own mind-born qualities."

I extract another passage on the same subject from a later section of the same work, verses 12,425 ff. When the Supreme Being was intent on creating the universe, Hiraṇyagarbha, or Prajāpati, issued from his mouth, and was desired to divide himself,—a process which he was in great doubt how he should effect. The text then proceeds:

Iti chintayatas tasya "om" ity evotthitaḥ svaraḥ | sa bhūmāv antarīkshe cha nāke cha kṛitavān svanam | Taṁ chaivābhyasatas tasya manaḥ-sāramayam punaḥ | hṛidayād deva-devasya vashaṭkāraḥ samutthitaḥ | bhūmy-antarīksha-nākānām bhūyaḥ svarātmakāḥ parāḥ | mahāsmṛitimayāḥ punyāḥ mahāvyāhṛitayo 'bhavan | chhandasāṁ pravarā devī chaturviṁśākshara 'bhavat | Tat-padaṁ saṁsmaran divyaṁ sāvitrīm akarot prabhuḥ |

ṛik-sāmātharva-yajushaś chaturo bhagavān prabhuḥ | chakāra nikhilān vedān brahma-yuktena karmaṇā |

"While he was thus reflecting, the sound "om" issued from him, and resounded through the earth, air, and sky. While the god of gods was again and again repeating this, the essence of mind, the vashaṭkāra proceeded from his heart. Next, the sacred and transcendent vyāhṛitis, (bhūḥ, bhuvaḥ, svar), formed of the great smṛiti, in the form of sound, were produced from earth, air, and sky. Then appeared the goddess, the most excellent of metres, with twenty-four syllables [the gāyatrī]. Reflecting on the divine text [beginning with] "tat," the Lord formed the sāvitrī. He then produced all the Vedas, the Ṛich, Sāman, Atharvan, and Yajush, with their prayers and rites." (See also the passage from the Bhāg. Pur. xii. 6, 37 ff., which will be quoted in a following section.)

Mahābhārata.—The Mahābhārata in one passage speaks of Sarasvatī and the Vedas as being both created by Achyuta (Vishṇu) from his mind (Bhīshma-parvan, verse 3019: Sarasvatīṁ cha vedāṁś cha manasaḥ sasṛije 'chyutaḥ). In another place, Śānti-parvan, verse 12,920, Sarasvatī is said, in conformity with the texts quoted above, pp. 10 and 12, from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, the Vana-parvan, and the Harivaṁśa, to be the mother of the Vedas:

Vedānām mātaraṁ paśya mat-sthām devīṁ Sarasvatīm |

"Behold Sarasvatī, mother of the Vedas, abiding in me."

Manu.—According to the verses in Manu, xii. 49, 50, quoted in the First Volume of this work, p. 41, the Vedas, with the other beings and objects named along with them, constitute the second manifestation of the sattva guṇa, or pure principle; while Brahmā is placed in a higher rank, as one of the first manifestations of the same principle. The word Veda in this passage is explained by Kullūka of those "embodied deities, celebrated in the Itihāsas, who preside over the Vedas" (Vedābhimāninyaś cha devatāḥ vigrahavatyaḥ itihāsa-prasiddāḥ).

SECT. III.—Passages of the Brāhmaṇas and other Works in which the Vedas are spoken of as being the sources of all things, and as infinite and eternal.

The first text of this sort which I shall cite is from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, x. 4, 2, 21:

Atha sarvāṇi bhūtāni paryaikshat | sa trayyām eva vidyāyāṁ sarvāṇi bhūtāny apaśyat | attra hi sarveshāṁ chhandasāṁ ātmā sarveshāṁ stomānāṁ sarveshām prāṇāpāṁ sarveshāṁ devānām | etad vai asti | etad hy amṛitam | yad hy amṛitam tad hy asti | etad u tad yad martyam | 22. Sa aikshata Prajāpatiḥ "trayyāṁ vāva vidyāyāṁ sarvāṇi bhūtāni | hanta trayīm eva vidyām ātmānam abhisaṁskaravai" iti | 23. Sa ṛicho vyauhat | dvādaśa bṛihatī-sahasrāṇy etāvatyo ha ṛicho yāḥ Prajāpati-sṛishṭās tās triṁśattame vyūhe panktishv atishṭhanta | tāḥ yat triṁśattame vyūhe tishṭhanta tasmāt triṁśad māsasya rātrayaḥ | atha yat panktishu tasmāt pānktaḥ Prajāpatiḥ | tāḥ ashṭāśataṁ śatāni panktayo 'bhavan |

21. "Then he looked around upon all beings. He beheld all beings in this triple Vedic science. For in it is the soul of all metres, of all hymns of praise, of all breaths, of all the gods. This, indeed, exists.[14] It is an undying thing. For that which is undying (really) exists. This is that which is mortal.[15] Prajāpati reflected, 'All beings are comprehended in the triple Vedic science: come let me dispose myself in the shape of the triple Vedic science.[16] He arranged the verses of the Rig-veda. Twelve thousand Bṛihatīs, and as many Ṛich-verses which were created by Prajāpati, stood in rows in the thirtieth class. Since they stood in the thirtieth class there are thirty nights in the month. Since they stood in rows (pankti) Prajāpati is called Pānkta. They formed eighteen hundreds of rows."

The next text, from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 12, 9, 1, speaks of the three Vedas as being respectively the sources of form, motion, and heat, or brilliancy:

Ṛigbhyo jātām sarvaśo mūrttim āhuḥ sarvā gatir yājushī haiva śaśvat | sarvaṁ tejaḥ sāma-rūpyaṁ ha śaśvat |

"They say that form universally proceeds from ṛich verses; that motion is always connected with the yajush, and that all heat has the nature of the sāman."

We have already seen, p. 6, that Manu (i. 21) speaks of the names, [14] "Always exists" (sarvadā vidyate).—Comm.

[15] On this the commentator remarks: Yach cha martyam maraṇa-dharmakam manushyādi tad apy etat trayī-bhūtam eva | ato marttyāmṛitātmakaṁ sarvaṁ jagad attrāntarbhūtam | "And that which is mortal, subject to death, the human race, etc., is also one with the triple Vedic science. Hence the latter includes all the world both mortal and immortal."

[16] I owe this interpretation of this clause to Prof. Aufrecht.

functions, and conditions of all things as fashioned from the words of the Veda. It is similarly said in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 5, 58:

Nāma rūpaṁ cha bhūtānāṁ kṛityānāṁ cha pravṛttanaṁ | Veda-śabdebhya evādau devādīnāṁ chakāra saḥ | ṛishīṇāṁ nāmadheyāni yathā veda-śrutāni vai | yathā-niyoga-yogyāni sarveshām api so 'karot |

"In the beginning he created from the words of the Veda the names, forms, and functions of the gods and other beings. He also assigned the names of all the rishis as indicated in the Vedas, and as appropriate to their respective offices."

The same idea is repeated in the Mahābhārata, Sāntiparvan, 8533:

Ṛishayas tapasā vedān adhyaishanta divāniśam | An-ādi-nidhanā vidyā vāg utsṛishṭā Svayambhuvā | ādau vedamayī divyā yataḥ sarvāḥ pravṛittayaḥ | ṛishīṇām nāmadheyāni yāś cha vedeshu sṛishṭayaḥ | nānā-rūpaṁ cha bhūtānām karmaṇāṁ cha pravarttayan (pravarttanam?) | veda-śabdebhya evādau nirmimīte sa īśvaraḥ |

"Through austere-fervour (tapas) the rishis studied the Vedas, both day and night. In the beginning knowledge (vidyā)[17] without beginning or end, divine speech, formed of the Vedas, was sent forth by Svayambhū (= Brahmā, the self-existent): from her all activities are derived. It is from the words of the Veda that the lord in the beginning frames the names of the rishis, the creations which (exist) in the Vedas, the various forms of beings, and the activity manifested in works."

The Mangalācharaṇa, or prayer prefixed to their commentaries on the Rik Sanhitā and Taittirīya Sanhitā, by both Sāyaṇa and Mādhava, is as follows:

Yasya niśśvasitaṁ vedāḥ yo vedebhyo 'khilaṁ jagat | nirmame tam ahaṁ vande vidyā-tīrtham maheśvaram |

"I reverence Maheśvara the hallowed abode of sacred knowledge, of whom the Vedas are the breathings, and who from the Vedas formed the whole universe."

The following passage from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, iii. 10, 11, 3, asserts that the Vedas are infinite in extent:

Bharadvājo ha tribhir āyurbhir brahmacharyyam uvāsa | taṁ ha jīrṇiṁ

[17] In quoting this line in a passage of his Vedārtha-prakāśa, or commentary on the Taittirīya Saṁhitā, which I shall adduce further on, Mādhava Āchāryya gives the reading nityā, 'eternal,' instead of vidyā, 'knowledge.' It is possible that the line may be taken from some other book.

sthaviraṁ śayānam Indraḥ upavrajya uvācha | "Bharadvāja yat te chaturtham āyur dadyāṁ kim etena kuryyāḥ" iti | "brahmacharyyam eva enena chareyam" iti ha uvācha | 4. Taṁ ha trīn giri-rūpān avijñātān iva darśayāñchakāra | teshāṁ ha ekaikasmād mushṭim ādade | sa ha uvācha "Bharadvāja" ity āmantrya | "vedāḥ vai ete | anantāḥ vai vedāḥ | etad vai etais tribhir āyurbhir anvavochathāḥ | atha te itarad ananūktam eva | ehi imaṁ viddhi | ayaṁ vai sarva-vidyā" iti | 5. Tasmai ha etam agnim sāvitraṃ uvācha | taṁ sa viditvā amṛito bhūtvā svargaṁ lokam iyāya ādityasya sāyujyam | amṛito ha eva bhūtvā svargaṁ lokam ety ādityasya sāyujyaṁ yaḥ evaṁ veda | eshā u eva trayī vidyā | 6. Yāvantaṁ ha vai trayyā vidyayā lokaṁ jayati tāvantam lokaṁ jayati yaḥ evaṁ veda |

"Bharadvāja lived through three lives[18] in the state of a religious student (brahmacharyya). Indra approached him when he was lying old and decrepit, and said to him: 'Bharadvāja, if I give thee a fourth life, how wilt thou employ it?' 'I will lead the life of a religious student,' he replied. 4. He (Indra) showed him three mountain-like objects, as it were unknown. From each of them he took a handful: and, calling to him, 'Bharadvāja,' said, 'These are the Vedas. The Vedas are infinite. This is what thou hast studied during these three lives. Now there is another thing which thou hast not studied, come and learn it. This is the universal science.' 5. He declared to him this Agni Sāvitra. Having known it he (Bharadvāja) became immortal, and ascended to the heavenly world, to union with the sun. He who knows this ascends to heaven, to union with the sun. This is the triple Vedic science. He who knows this conquers a world as great as he would gain by the triple Vedic science."

Another text from the Taittirīya Sanhitā, vii. 3, 1, 4, puts the matter somewhat differently:

Atha brahmā (brahma-vādino?) vadanti parimitāḥ vai richaḥ parimitāni sāmāni parimitāni yajūṁshi atha tasya eva anto nāsti yad brahma |

"The expounders of sacred science say, 'Rich verses are limited, sāman verses are limited, yajush verses are limited; but there is no end of sacred knowledge."

Vishṇu Purāṇa.—At the end of Section 6 of the third book of the [18] This does not appear to mean, three lives in three different births, but a life of thrice the usual length, or already twice renewed.

Vishṇu Purāṇa we have the following assertion of the eternity of the Veda:

Iti śākhāḥ prasankhyātāḥ śākhā-bhedās tathaiva cha | karttāraś chaiva śākhānām bheda-hetus tathoditaḥ | sarvā-manvantareshv eva śākhā-bhedāḥ samāḥ smritāḥ | Prājāpatyā śrutir nityā tad-vikalpās tv ime dvija |

"Thus the Śākhās, their divisions, their authors, and the cause of the division have been declared. In all the manvantaras the divisions of the Śākhās are recorded to be the same. The śruti (Veda) derived from Prajāpati (Brahmā) is eternal: these, o Brāhman, are only its modifications."

In another passage of the same book, Vishṇu is identified with the Vedas: Vishṇu Purāṇa, iii. 3, 19 ff.:

Sa ṛiṅ-mayaḥ sa sāmamayaḥ sa chātmā sa yajurmayaḥ | ṛig-yajuḥ-sāma-sārātmā sa evātmā śarīriṇām | sa bhidyate vedamayaḥ sa vedaṁ karoti bhedair bahubhiḥ saśākham | śākhā-praṇetā sa samasta-śākhāḥ jñāna-svarūpo bhagavān anantaḥ |

"He is composed of the Rich, of the Sāman, of the Yajush; he is the soul. Consisting of the essence of the Rich, Yajush, and Sāman, he is the soul of embodied spirits. Formed of the Veda, he is divided; he forms the Veda and its branches (śākhās) into many divisions. Framer of the Śākhās, he is also their entirety, the infinite lord, whose essence is knowledge."

Sect. IV.—Passages from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and Manu, eulogistic of the Veda, with some statements of a different tenor from Manu and other writers.

The following panegyric on Vedic study is taken from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 5, 6, 1:

Pancha eva mahāyajñāḥ | tāny eva mahāsattrāṇi bhūta-yajno manushya-yajnaḥ pitṛi-yajno deva-yajno brahma-yajnaḥ iti | 2. Ahar ahar bhūtebhyo baliṁ haret | tathā etam bhūta-yajnaṁ samāpnoti | ahar ahar dadyād ā uda-pātrāt tathā etam manushya-yajnaṁ samāpnoti | ahar ahaḥ svadhākuryād ā uda-pātrāt tathā etaṁ pitṛi-yajnaṁ samāpnoti | ahar ahaḥ svāhākuryād ā kāshṭhāt tathā etaṁ deva-yajnaṁ samāpnoti | 3. Atha brahma-yajnaḥ | svādhyāyo vai brahma-yajnaḥ | tasya vai etasya brahma-yajnasya vāg eva juhūr manaḥ upabhṛich chakshur dhruvā medhā sruvaḥ satyam avabhṛithaḥ svargo lokaḥ udayanam | yāvantaṁ ha vai imām pṛithivīṁ vittena pūrṇāṁ dadaṁ lokaṁ jayati tris tāvantaṁ jayati bhūyāṁsaṁ cha akshayyaṁ yaḥ evaṁ vidvān ahar ahaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte | tasmāt svādhyāyo 'dhetavyaḥ | 4. Paya-āhutayo ha vai etāḥ devānāṁ yad ṛichaḥ | sa yaḥ evaṁ vidvān ṛicho 'har ahaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte payaāhutibhir eva tad devāṁs tarpayati | te enaṁ tṛiptās tarpayanti yogakshemeṇa prāṇena retasā sarvātmanā sarvābhiḥ puṇyābhiḥ sampadbhiḥ | ghṛita-kulyāḥ madhu-kulyāḥ pitṛīn svadhā abhivahanti | 5. Ājyāhutayo ha vai etāḥ devānāṁ yad yajūṁshi | sa yaḥ evaṁ vidvān yajūṁshy ahar ahaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte ājyāhutibhir eva tad devāṁs tarpayati te enam tṛiptās tarpayanti yoga-kshemeṇa ityādi | 6. Somāhutayo ha vai etāḥ devānāṁ yat sāmāni | sa yaḥ evaṁ vidvān sāmāny ahar ahaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte somāhutibhir eva tad devāṁs tarpayati ityādi | 7. Meda-āhutayo ha vai etāḥ devānāṁ yad atharvāṅgirasaḥ | sa yaḥ evaṁ vidvān atharvāṅgiraso 'har ahaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte meda-āhutibhir eva tad devāṁs tarpayati ityādi | 8. Madhv-āhutayo ha vai etāḥ devānāṁ yad anuśāsanāni vidyā vākovākyam itihāsa-purāṇaṁ gāthāḥ nārāśaṁsyaḥ | sa yaḥ evaṁ vidvān ityādi | 9. Tasya vai etasya brahma-yajnasya chatvāro vashaṭkārāḥ yad vāto vāti yad vidyotate yat stanayati yad avasphūrjati | tasmād evaṁ vidvān vāte vāti vidyotamāne stanayaty avasphūrjaty adhīyīta eva vashaṭkārāṇām achhaṁbaṭkārāya | ati ha vai punar mṛityum muchyate gachhati Brahmaṇaḥ sātmatām | sa ched api prabalam iva na śaknuyād apy ekaṁ deva-padam adhīyīta eva tathā hūtebhyo na hīyate | xi. 5, 7, 1: Atha ataḥ svādhyāya-praśaṁsā | priye svādhyāya-pravachane bhavataḥ | yuktamānāḥ bhavaty aparādhīno 'har ahar arthān sādhayate sukhaṁ svapiti parama-chikitsakaḥ ātmano bhavati | indriya-saṁyamaś cha ekārāmatā cha prajnā-vṛiddhir yaśo loka-paktiḥ | prajnā varddhamānā chaturo dharmān brāhmaṇam abhinishpādayati brāhmaṇyam pratirūpa-charyyāṁ yaśo loka-paktim | lokaḥ pachyamānaś chaturbhir dharmair brāhmaṇam bhunakty archayā cha dānena cha ajyeyatayā cha abadhyatayā cha | 2. Ye ha vai ke cha śramaṇāḥ ime dyāvā-pṛithivī antareṇa svādhyāyo ha eva teshām paramatā kāshṭhā yaḥ evam vidvān svādhyāyam adhīte | tasmāt svādhyāyo 'dhetavyaḥ | 3. Yad yad ha vai ayaṁ chhandasaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte tena tena ha eva asya yajna-kratunā ishṭam bhavati yaḥ evaṁ vidvān svādhyāyam adhīte | tasmāt svādhyāyo 'dhetavyaḥ | 4. Yadi ha vai apy abhyaktaḥ alankṛitaḥ suhitaḥ sukhe śayane śayānaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte ā ha eva sa nakhāgrebhyas tapyate yaḥ evaṁ vidvāṅ svādhyāyam adhīte | tasmāt svādhyāyo 'dhetavyaḥ | 5. Madhu ha vai ṛicho ghṛitaṁ ha sāmāny amṛitaṁ yajūṁshi | yad ha vai ayaṅ vākovākyaṁ adhīte kshīraudana-māṁsaudanau ha eva tau | 6. Madhunā ha vai esha devāṁs tarpayati yaḥ evaṁ vidvān ṛicho 'har ahaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte | te enaṁ tṛiptās tarpayanti sārvaiḥ kāmaiḥ sarvair bhogaiḥ | 7. Ghṛitena ha vai eshā devāṁs tarpayati yaḥ evaṁ vidvān sāmāny ahar ahaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte | te enaṁ tṛiptāḥ ityādi | 8. Amṛitena ha vai esha devāṁs tarpayati yaḥ evam vidvān yajūṁshy ahar ahaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte | te enaṁ tṛiptāḥ ityādi | 9. Kshīraudana-māṁsaudanābhyāṁ ha vai esha devāṁs tarpayati yaḥ evaṁ vidvān vākovākyam itihāsa-purāṇam ity ahar ahaḥ svādhyāyam adhīte | te enaṁ tṛiptāḥ ityādi | 10. Yanti vai āpaḥ | ety ādityaḥ | eti chandramāḥ | yanti nakshattrāṇi | yathā ha vai na iyur na kuryur evaṁ ha eva tad ahar brāhmaṇo bhavati yad ahaḥ svādhyāyaṁ na adhīte | tasmāt svādhyāyo 'dhetavyaḥ | tasmād apy ṛichaṁ vā yajur vā sāma vā gāthāṁ vā kuṁvyāṁ vā abhivyāhared vratasya avyavachhedāya |

"There are only five great sacrifices, which are the great ceremonies, viz., the offering to living creatures,[19] the offering to men, the offering to the fathers, the offering to the gods, and the Veda-offering (brahma-yajña). 2. Let an oblation be daily presented to living creatures. Thus the offering to them is fulfilled. Let (hospitality) be daily bestowed even down to the bowl of water. Thus is the offering to men fulfilled. Let the oblation to the fathers be daily presented,[20] down to the bowl of water with the svadhā formula. Thus is the offering to the fathers fulfilled. Let the oblation to the gods be daily presented as far as the faggot of wood. Thus is the offering to the gods fulfilled. 3. Next is the Veda-offering. This means private study[21] (of the sacred books). In this Veda-sacrifice speech is the juhū, the soul the upabhṛit, the eye the dhruvā, intelligence the sruva,[22] truth the ablution, and paradise

[19] This sacrifice, as I learn from Prof. Aufrecht, consists in scattering grain for the benefit of birds, etc. See Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. bali. In regard to the other sacrifices see Colebrooke's Misc. Essays, i. pp. 150, 152, 182 ff., 203 ff.

[20] In explanation of this Professor Aufrecht refers to Kātyāyana's Śrauta Sūtras, iv. 1, 10, and Manu, iii. 210, 214, 218.

[21] Svādhyāyaḥ sva-śākhādhyanam | "Reading of the Veda in one's own śākhā."—Comm.

[22] These words denote sacrificial spoons or ladles of different kinds of wood. See the drawings of them in Prof. Müller's article on the funeral rites of the Brāhmans, Journ. of the Germ. Or. Soc. vol. ix. pp. lxxviii. and lxxx.

the conclusion. He who, knowing this, daily studies the Veda, conquers an undecaying world more than thrice as great as that which he acquires who bestows this whole earth filled with riches. Wherefore the Veda should be studied. 4. Verses of the Rig-veda are milk-oblations to the gods. He who, knowing this, daily reads these verses, satisfies the gods with milk-oblations; and they being satisfied, satisfy him with property, with breath, with generative power, with complete bodily soundness, with all excellent blessings. Streams of butter, streams of honey flow as svadhā-oblations to the fathers. 5. Yajush-verses are offerings of butter to the gods. He who, knowing this, daily reads these verses, satisfies the gods with offerings of butter; and they, being satisfied, satisfy him, etc. (as in the preceding paragraph). 6. Sāman-verses are soma-libations to the gods. He who, knowing this, daily reads these verses, satisfies the gods with soma-libations; and they being satisfied, satisfy him, etc. (as above). 7. Verses of Atharvan and Angiras (atharvāngirasaḥ[23]) are oblations of fat to the gods. He who, knowing this, daily reads these verses, satisfies the gods with oblations of fat; and they etc. (as above). 8. Prescriptive and scientific treatises, dialogues, traditions, tales, verses, and eulogistic texts are oblations of honey to the gods. He who, knowing this, daily reads these, satisfies the gods with oblations of honey; and they etc. (as above). 9. Of this Veda-sacrifice there are four Vashaṭkāras, when the wind blows, when it lightens, when it thunders, when it crashes; wherefore when it blows, lightens, thunders, or crashes, let the man, who knows this, read, in order that these Vashaṭkāras may not be interrupted.[24] He who does so is freed from dying a second time, and attains to an union with Brahma. Even if he cannot read vigorously, let him read one text relating to the gods. Thus he is not deprived of his living creatures."

xi. 5, 7, 1: "Now comes an encomium upon Vedic study. Study and teaching are loved. He (who practises them) becomes composed in mind. Independent of others, he daily attains his objects, sleeps pleasantly, becomes his own best physician. Control of his senses, concentration of mind, increase of intelligence, renown, capacity to educate mankind [are the results of study]. Increasing intelligence secures for [23] The Atharva Sanhitā is so called.

[24] See Böthlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. chhambaṭ.

the Brāhman the four attributes of saintliness, suitable conduct, renown, and capacity for educating mankind. When so educated, men guarantee to the Brāhman the enjoyment of the four prerogatives which are his due, reverence, the receipt of gifts, freedom from oppression, and from death by violence. 2. Of all the modes of exertion, which are known between heaven and earth, study of the Veda occupies the highest rank, (in the case of him) who, knowing this, studies it. Wherefore this study is to be practised. 3. On every occasion when a man studies the Vedic hymns he (in fact) performs a complete ceremonial of sacrifice, i.e. whosoever, knowing this, so studies. Wherefore this study, etc., etc. 4. And even when a man, perfumed with unguents, adorned with jewels, satiated with food, and reposing on a comfortable couch, studies the Veda he (has all the merit of one who) performs penance (felt) to the very tips of his nails:[25] (such is the case with him) who, knowing this, studies. Wherefore etc. 5. Rig-veda-verses are honey, Sāma-verses butter, yajus-verses nectar (amṛita). When a man reads dialogues (vākovākya) [and legends], these two sorts of composition are respectively oblations of cooked milk and cooked flesh. 6. He who, knowing this, daily reads Rig-veda-verses, satisfies the gods with honey; and they, when satisfied, satisfy him with all objects of desire, and with all enjoyments. 7. He who, knowing this, daily reads Sāma-verses, satisfies the gods with butter; and they, when satisfied, etc. (as before). 8. He who, knowing this, daily reads Yajus-verses, satisfies the gods with nectar; and they, etc. (as before). 9. He who, knowing this, daily studies dialogues and the different classes of ancient stories, satisfies the gods with milk- and flesh-oblations; and they, etc. (as before). 10. The waters move. The sun moves. The moon moves. The constellations move. The Brāhman who on any day does not study the Veda, is on that day like what these moving bodies would be if the ceased to move or act. Wherefore such study is to be practised. Let [25] This sentence is differently rendered by Professor Weber, Ind. Stud. x. p. 112, as follows: "He burns (with sacred fire) to the very tips of his nails." In a later page of the same Essay we are told that according to the doctrine of a teacher called Nāka Maudgalya as stated in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, the study and teaching of the Veda are the real tapas (svādhyāya-pravachane eva tad hi tapaḥ). In the text of the Āraṇyaka itself, vii. 8, it is declared that study and teaching should always accompany such spiritual or ritual acts as ṛitam, satyam, tapas, dama, śama, the agnihotra sacrifice, etc. See Indische Studien, ii. 214, and x. 113.

a man therefore present as his offering a verse of the Rig-veda, or the Sāman, or the Yajush, or a Gāthā, or a Kunīvyā, in order that the course of his observances may not be interrupted."

Manu employs the following honorific expressions in reference to the Vedas (xii. 94 ff.):

Pitṛi-deva-manushyāṇāṁ vedaś chakshuḥ sanātanam | aśakyaṁ chāprameyaṁ cha veda-śāstram iti sthitiḥ | Yā veda-vāhyāḥ smṛitayo yāś cha kāścha kudṛishṭayaḥ |[26] sarvās tā niṣhphalāḥ pretya tamo-niṣhṭhāḥ hi tāḥ smṛitaḥ | Utpadyante chyavante cha yāny ato 'nyāni kānichit | Tāny arvāk-kālikatayā[27] niṣhphalāny anṛitāni cha | Chāturvarṇyaṁ trayo lokāś chatvāraś chāśramāḥ pṛithak | Bhūtam bhavad bhavishyaṁ cha sarvaṁ vedāt prasiddhyati | śabdaḥ sparśaś cha rūpaṁ cha raso gandhaś cha panchamaḥ | vedād eva prasiddhyanti prasūti-guṇa-karmataḥ | Bibhartti[28] sarva-bhūtāni veda-śāstraṁ sanātanam | Tasmād etat param manye yaj jantor asya sādhanam | Saināpatyaṁ cha rājyaṁ cha daṇḍa-netṛitvam eva cha | sarva-lokādhipatyaṁ cha veda-śāstra-vid arhati | Yathā jāta-balo vahnir dahaty ārdrān api drumān | tathā dahati veda-jñaḥ karma-jaṁ dosham ātmanaḥ | veda-śāstrārtha-tattva-jño yatra tatrāśrame vasan | ihaiva loke tiṣhṭhan sa brahmabhūyāya kalpate |

"The Veda is the eternal eye of the fathers, of gods, and of men; it is beyond human power and comprehension; this is a certain conclusion. Whatever traditions are apart from the Veda, and all heretical views, are fruitless in the next world, for they are declared to be founded on darkness. All other [books] external to the Veda, which arise and pass away, are worthless and false from their recentness of date. The system of the four castes, the three worlds, the four states of life, all that has been, now is, or shall be, is made manifest by the

[26] Dṛishṭārtha-vākyāni "chaitya-vandanāt svargo bhavati" ity ādīni yāni cha asat-tarka-mūlāni devatā-'pūrvādi-nirākaraṇātmakāni veda-viruddhāni chārvāka-darśanani | "That is, deductions from experience of the visible world; such doctrines as that 'heaven is attained by obeisance to a chaitya,' and similar Chārvāka tenets founded on false reasonings, contradicting the existence of the gods, and the efficacy of religious rites, and contrary to the Vedas."—Kullūka.

[27] Idānīntanatvāt | "From their modernness."—Kullūka.

[28] "Haviṣ agnau hūyate | so 'gnir ādityam upasarpati | tat sūryo raśmibhir varshati | tenānnam bhavati | atha iha bhūtānām utpatti-sthitiś cheti havir jāyate" iti brāhmaṇam | "'The oblation is cast into the fire; fire reaches the sun; the sun causes rain by his rays; thence food is produced; thus the oblation becomes the cause of the generation and maintenance of creatures on this earth;' so says a Brāhmaṇa."—Kullūka.

Veda. The objects of touch and taste, sound, form, and odour, as the fifth, are made known by the Veda, together with their products, qualities, and the character of their action. The eternal Veda supports all beings: hence I regard it as the principal instrument of well-being to this creature, man. Command of armies, royal authority, the administration of criminal justice, and the sovereignty of all worlds, he alone deserves who knows the Veda. As fire, when it has acquired force, burns up even green trees, so he who knows the Veda consumes the taint of his soul which has been contracted from works. He who comprehends the essential meaning of the Veda, in whatever order of life he may be, is prepared for absorption into Brahmā, even while abiding in this lower world."

The following are some further miscellaneous passages of the same tenor, scattered throughout the Institutes (Manu, ii. 10 ff.):

Śrutis tu vedo vijneyo dharma-śāstraṁ tu vai smṛitiḥ | te sarvārtheshv amīmāṁsye tābhyāṁ dharmo hi nirbabhau | 11. Yo 'vamanyeta te mūle hetu-śāstrāśrayād dvijaḥ | sa sādhubhir vahishkāryyo nāstiko veda-nindakaḥ | . . . . 13. Dharmaṁ jijnāsamānānām pramāṇam paramaṁ śrutiḥ |

"By śruti is meant the Veda, and by smṛiti the institutes of law: the contents of these are not to be questioned by reason, since from them [a knowledge of] duty has shone forth. The Brāhman who, relying on rationalistic treatises,[29] shall contemn these two primary sources of knowledge, must be excommunicated by the virtuous as a sceptic and reviler of the Vedas. . . . . 13. To those who are seeking a knowledge of duty, the śruti is the supreme authority."

In the following passage, the necessity of a knowledge of Brahma is asserted, though the practice of ritual observances is also inculcated (vi. 82 ff.):

Dhyānikaṁ sarvam evaitad yad etad abhiśabditam | na hy anadhyātmavit kaschit kriyā-phalam upāśnute | adhiyajnam brahma japed ādhidaivikam eva cha | ādhyatmikaṁ cha satataṁ vedāntābhihitaṁ cha yat | Idaṁ śaraṇam ajnānām idam eva vijānatām | idam anvichchhatāṁ svargam idam ānantyam ichchhatām |

[29] This, however, must be read in conjunction with the precept in xii. 106, which declares: ārshaṁ dharmopadeśaṁ cha veda-śāstrāvirodhinā | yas tarkenānusandhatte sa dharmaṁ veda nāparaḥ | "He, and he only is acquainted with duty, who investigates the injunctions of the rishis, and the precepts of the smṛiti, by reasonings which do not contradict the Veda."

"All this which has been now declared is dependant on devout meditation: no one who is ignorant of the supreme Spirit can reap the fruit of ceremonial acts. Let a man repeat texts relating to sacrifice, texts relating to deities, texts relating to the supreme Spirit, and whatever is declared in the concluding portions of the Veda (the Upanishads). This [Veda] is the refuge of the ignorant, as well as of the understanding; it is the refuge of those who are seeking after paradise, as well as of those who are desiring infinity."

The following text breathes a moral spirit, by representing purity of life as essential to the reception of benefit from religious observances (ii. 97):

Vedās tyāgaś cha yajñāś cha niyamāś cha tapāṁsi cha | na vipradushṭa-bhāvasya siddhiṁ gachhanti karchichit |

"The Vedas, almsgiving, sacrifices, observances, austerities, are ineffectual to a man of depraved disposition."

The doctrine which may be drawn from the following lines does not seem so favourable to morality (xi. 261 ff.):

Hatvā lokān apīmāṁs trīn aśnann api yatastataḥ | Ṛigvedaṁ dhārayan vipro nainaḥ prāpnoti kinchana | Ṛiksaṁhitāṁ trir abhyasya yajushāṁ va samāhitaḥ | sāmnāṁ vā sa-rahasyānāṁ sarva-pāpaiḥ pramuchyate | yathā mahā-hradam prāpya kshiptam loshṭaṁ vinaśyati | tathā duścharitaṁ sarvaṁ vede trivṛiti majjati |

"A Brāhman who should destroy these three worlds, and eat food received from any quarter whatever, would incur no guilt if he retained in his memory the Rig-veda. Repeating thrice with intent mind the Sanhitā of the Rik, or the Yajush, or the Sāman, with the Upanishads, he is freed from all his sins. Just as a clod thrown into a great lake is dissolved when it touches the water, so does all sin sink in the triple Veda."

Considering the sacredness ascribed in the preceding passages to all the Vedas, the characteristics assigned to three of them in the passage quoted above (p. 12) from the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, as well as the epithet applied to the Sāma-veda in the second of the following verses are certainly remarkable; (Manu, iv. 123 ff.):

Sāma-dhvanāv ṛig-yajushī nādhīyīta kadāchana | vedasyādhīṭya vā 'py antam āraṇyakam adhītya cha | Ṛigvedo deva-daivatyo yajurvedas tu mānushaḥ | Sāmavedaḥ smṛitaḥ pitryas tasmāt tasyāśuchir dhvaniḥ |

"Let no one read the Rich or the Yajush while the Sāman is sounding in his ears, or after he has read the conclusion of the Veda (i.e. the Upanishads) or an Āraṇyaka. The Rig-veda has the gods for its deities; the Yajur-veda has men for its objects; the Sāma-veda has the pitṛis for its divinities, wherefore its sound is impure."

The scholiast Kullūka, however, will not allow that the sound of the Sāma-veda can be really "impure." "It has," he says, "only a semblance of impurity" (tasmāt tasya aśuchir iva dhvaniḥ | na tv aśuchir eva). In this remark he evinces the tendency, incident to so many systematic theologians, to ignore all those features of the sacred text on which they are commenting which are at variance with their theories regarding its absolute perfection. As it was the opinion of his age that the Veda was eternal and divine, it was, he considered, impossible that impurity or any species of defect could be predicated of any of its parts; and every expression, even of the highest authorities, which contradicted this opinion, had to be explained away. I am not in a position to state how this notion of impurity came to be attached to the Sāma-veda. The passage perhaps proceeded from the adherents of some particular Vedic school adverse to the Sāma-veda; but its substance being found recorded in some earlier work, it was deemed of sufficient authority to find a place in the miscellaneous collection of precepts,—gathered no doubt from different quarters, and perhaps not always strictly consistent with each other, — which make up the Mānava-dharma-śāstra.

Vishṇu Purāṇa.—The following passage from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, at the close, ascribes the same character of impurity to the Sāma-veda, though on different grounds, Vish. Pur. ii. 11, 5 :

Yā tu śaktiḥ parā Vishṇor ṛig-yajuḥ-sāma-sanjnitā | saishā trayī tapaty aṁho jagataś cha hinasti yat | saiva Vishṇuḥ sthitaḥ sthityāṁ jagataḥ pālanodyataḥ | ṛig-yajuḥ-sāma-bhūto 'ntaḥ savitur dvija tishṭhati | māsi māsi ravir yo yas tatra tatra hi sā parā | trayīmayī Vishṇu-śaktir avasthānaṁ karoti vai | Ṛichas tapanti pūrvāhne madhyāhne 'tha yajūṁshy atha | vṛihadrathantarādīni sāmāny ahnaḥ kshaye ravau | angam eshā trayī Vishṇor ṛig-yajuḥ-sāma-sanjnitā | Vishṇu-śaktir avasthānam māsāditye karoti sā | na kevalaṁ ravau śaktir vaishṇavī sā trayīmayī | Brahmā 'tha Purusho Rudras trayam etat trayīmayam | sargādāv ṛiṅmayo Brahmā sthitau Vishṇur yajurmayaḥ | Rudraḥ sāmamayo 'ntāya tasmāt tasyāśuchir dhvaniḥ |

"The supreme energy of Vishṇu, called the Rich, Yajush, and Sāman—this triad burns up sin and all things injurious to the world. During the continuance of the world, this triad exists as Vishṇu, who is occupied in the preservation of the universe, and who in the form of the Rich, Yajush, and Sāman, abides within the sun. That supreme energy of Vishṇu, consisting of the triple Veda, dwells in the particular form of the sun, which presides over each month. The Rich verses shine in the morning sun, the Yajush verses in the meridian beams, and the Vṛihad-rathantara and other Sāma verses in his declining rays. This triple Veda is the body of Vishṇu, and this his energy abides in the monthly sun. But not only does this energy of Vishṇu, formed of the triple Veda, reside in the sun: Brahmā, Purusha (Vishṇu), and Rudra also constitute a triad formed of the triple Veda. Acting in creation, Brahmā is formed of the Rig-veda; presiding over the continuance of the universe, Vishṇu is composed of the Yajur-veda; and for the destruction of the worlds, Rudra is made up of the Sāma-veda; hence the sound of this Veda is impure."

Vāyu Purāṇa.—Other passages also may be found in works which are far from being reputed as heretical, in which the Vedas, or particular parts of them, are not spoken of with the same degree of respect as they are by Manu. Thus the Vāyu Purāṇa gives precedence to the Purāṇas over the Vedas in the order of creation (i. 56[30]):

Prathamaṁ sarva-śāstrāṇāṁ Purāṇaṁ Brahmaṇā smṛitam | anantaraṁ cha vaktrebhyo vedās tasya viniḥsṛitāḥ |

"First of all the Śaśtras, the Purāṇa was uttered by Brahmā. Subsequently the Vedas issued from his mouths."

Similarly the Padma Purāṇa says:

Purāṇaṁ sarva-śāstrāṇām prathamaṁ Brahmaṇā smṛitam | tri-varga-sādhanaṁ puṇyaṁ śata-koṭi-pravistaram | nirdagdheshu cha lokeshu vājī-rūpeṇa Keśavaḥ | Brahmaṇas tu samādeśād vedān ahṛitavān asau | angāni chaturo vedān purāṇa-nyāya-vistarā[n?] | mīmāṁsā[ṁ?] dharma-śāstraṁ cha pariṛihyātha sāmpratam | matsya-rūpeṇa cha punaḥ kalpādāv uda-kāntare | aśesham etat kathitam ityādi |[31]

"The Purāṇa, which is an instrument for effecting the three objects of life, which is pure, and extends to the length of a hundred crores of verses, was the first of all the Śāstras which Brahmā uttered. When the worlds had been burnt up, Keśava (Kṛishṇa), in the form of a horse, and obeying Brahmā's command, rescued the Vedas. Having taken them with their appendages, the Purāṇas, the Nyāya, the Mīmānsā, and the Institutes of Law, he now at the beginning of the Kalpa promulgated them all again in the form of a Fish from the midst of the waters."

[30] Page 48 of Prof. Aufrecht's Catalogue of Sanskrit MSS. in the Bodleian Library at Oxford.

[31] See the same Catalogue p. 12, col. i.

In the Matsya Purāṇa, iii. 2 ff., not only is priority of creation claimed for the Purāṇas, but also the qualities of eternity and identity with sound, which are generally predicated of the Vedas alone:

Rūpaṁ dadhāra[32] prathamam amarāṇam Pitāmahaḥ | āvirbhūtās tato vedāḥ sāṅgopāṅga-pada-kramāḥ | 3. Purāṇaṁ sarva-śāstrāṇām prathamam Brahmaṇā smṛitam | nityaṁ śabdamayam puṇyam śata-koṭi-pravistaram | 4. Anantaraṁ cha vaktrebhyo vedās tasya vinissṛitāḥ | mīmāṁsā nyāya-vidyā cha pramāṇāshṭaka-saṁyutā | 5. Vedābhyāsa-ratasyāsya prajā-kāmasya mānasāḥ | manasā pūrva-sṛishṭāḥ vai jātāḥ ye tena mānasāḥ |

2. "Pitāmaha (Brahmā), first of all the immortals, took shape: then the Vedas with their Angas and Upāngas (appendages and minor appendages), and the various modes of their textual arrangement, were manifested. 3. The Purāṇa, eternal, formed of sound, pure, extending to the length of a hundred crores of verses, was the first of the Śāstras which Brahmā uttered: and afterwards the Vedas, issued from his mouth; and also the Mīmānsā and the Nyāya with its eightfold system of proofs. 5. From him (Brahmā), who was devoted to the study of the Vedas, and desirous of offspring, sprang mind-born sons, so called because they were at first created by his mind."

The Vāyu Purāṇa says further on in the same section from which I have already quoted:[33]

Yo vidyāch chaturo vedān sāṅgopanishado dvijaḥ | na chet purāṇaṁ saṁvidyād naiva sa syād vichakshaṇaḥ | Itihāsa-purāṇābhyāṁ vedān samupavṛiṁhayet | vibhety alpa-śrutād vedo mām ayaṁ praharishyati |

[32] This quotation is made from the Taylor MS. No. 1918 of the India Office Library. The Guikowar MS. No. 3032 of the same collection, reads here tapas chachāra, "practised austerity," instead of rūpaṁ dadhāra, "took shape," and has besides a number of other various readings in these few lines.

[33] See p. 50 of Dr. Aufrecht's Catalogue.

"He who knows the four Vedas, with their supplements and Upanishads is not really learned, unless he know also the Purāṇas. Let a man, therefore, complete the Veda by adding the Itihāsas and Purāṇas. The Veda is afraid of a man of little learning, lest he should treat it injuriously."

The first of these verses is repeated in the Mahābhārata, Ādiparvan verse 645, with a variation in the first half of the second line na chākhyānaṃ idaṁ vidyāt, "unless he know also this narrative" (i.e. the Mahābhārata). The second of the verses of the Vāyu Purāṇa also is to be found in the same book of the Mahābhārata verse 260, and is followed by these lines:

261. Kārshṇaṁ vedam imaṁ vidvān śrāvayitvā 'nnam aśnute | . . . . 264. Ekataś chaturo vedāṅ Bhārataṁ chaitad ekataḥ | purā kila suraiḥ sarvaiḥ sametya tulayā dhṛitam | chaturbhyaḥ sa-rahasyebhyo vedebhyo hy adhikaṁ yadā | tadā-prabhṛiti loke 'smin mahābhāratam uchyate |

"The man who knows this Veda relating to Kṛishṇa (the Mahābhārata), and repeats it to others, obtains food. . . . . 264. All the collected gods formerly weighed in a balance the four Vedas which they placed in the one scale, and this Bhārata which they put into the other. When the latter was found to exceed (in weight) the four Vedas with the Upanishads, it was thenceforward called in this world the Mahābhārata."

Here there is a play upon the word Bhārata, as in part identical with bhāra, "weight."

The following verses of the same Ādiparvan and many others are also eulogistic of the great epic poem:

2298. Idaṁ hi vedaiḥ sammitam pavitram api chottamam | śrāvyāṇām uttamaṁ chedaṁ purāṇam ṛishi-saṁstutam |

"This (Mahābhārata) is on an equality with the Veda, pure, most excellent, the best of all works that are to be recited, ancient, and praised by rishis."

2314. Vijneyaḥ sa cha vedānām pārago Bhāratam paṭhan |

The reader of the Bhārata is to be regarded as having gone through the Vedas."

The benefits derivable from a perusal of the same poem are also set forth in the Svargārohaṇika-parvan, verses 200 ff.

In the same way the Rāmāyaṇa, i. 1, 94, speaks of itself, as "this pure and holy narrative, which is on an equality with the Vedas" (idam pavitram ākhyānam puṇyaṁ vedaiś cha sammitam).

And in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ii. 8, 28, it is said: Prāha bhāgavataṁ nāma purāṇam brahma-saṁmitam | Brahmaṇe Bhagavat-proktaṁ Brahma-kalpe upāgate |

"(Brahmarāta) declared the Purāṇa called the Bhāgavata, which stands on an equality with the Veda (brahma), and was declared by Bhagavat to Brahmā when the Brahma-kalpa had arrived."

Brahma-vaivartta Purāṇa.—The Brahma-vaivartta Purāṇa asserts in a most audacious manner its own superiority to the Veda (i. 48 ff.):

Bhavagan yat tvayā pṛishṭaṁ jñātaṁ sarvam abhīpsitam | sāra-bhūtaṁ purāṇeshu Brahma-vaivarttam uttamam | Purāṇopapurāṇānāṁ vedānām bhrama-bhanjanaṁ |

"That about which, venerable sage, you have inquired, and which you desire, is all known to me, the essence of the Purāṇas, the pre-eminent Brahma-vaivartta, which refutes the errors of the Purāṇas and Upapurāṇas, and of the Vedas." (Professor Aufrecht's Cat. p. 21.)

In the following passage also, from the commencement of the Muṇḍaka Upanishad, the Vedic hymns (though a divine origin would no doubt be allowed to them [34]) are at all events depreciated, by being classed among other works as part of the inferior science, in contrast to the Brahma-vidyā or knowledge of Brahma, the highest of all knowledge, which is expressly ascribed to Brahmā as its author:

1. Brahmā devānām prathamaḥ sambabhūva víśvasya karttā bhuvanasya goptā | sa brahma-vidyāṁ sarva-vidyā-pratishṭhām Atharvāya jyeshṭha-putrāya prāha | 2. Atharvaṇe yām pravadeta Brahmā Atharvā tām purovāchāṅgire brahma-vidyām | sa Bhāradvājāya Satyavāhāya prāha Bhāradvājo 'ṅgirase parāvarāṁ | 3. Śaunako ha vai Mahāśālo 'ṅgirasaṁ

[34] In fact the following verses (4 and 6) occur in the second chapter of the same Mund. Up.: Agnir mūrddhā chakshushī chandra-sūryyau dishaḥ śrotre vāg vivritāś cha vedāḥ | vāyuḥ prāṇo hṛidayaṁ víśvam asya padbhyām pṛithivī hy esha sarva-bhūtāntarātmā | . . . . 6. Tasmād ṛichaḥ sāma yájūṁshi dīkshā yajñāś cha sarve kratavo dakshiṇās cha | saṁvatsaraṁ cha yajamānaś cha lokāḥ somo yatra pávate yatra sūryaḥ | "Agni is his [Brahma's] head, the sun and moon are his eyes, the four points of the compass are his ears, the uttered Vedas are his voice, the wind is his breath, the universe is his heart, the earth issued from his feet: he is the inner soul of all creatures. . . . 6. From him came the Rich verses, the Sāman verses, the Yajush verses, initiatory rites, all oblations, sacrifices, and gifts, the year, the sacrificer, and the worlds where the moon and sun purify."

vidhivad upapannaḥ prapachchha | kasmin nu bhagavo vijñāte sarvam idaṁ vijñātam bhavatīti | 4. Tasmai sa hovācha | dve vidye veditavye iti ha sma yad brahma-vido vadanti parā chaivāparā cha | 5. Tatrāparā "ṛigvedo yajurvedaḥ sāmavedo 'tharvavedaḥ śikshā kalpo vyākaraṇaṁ niruktaṁ chhando jyotisham" iti | atha parā yayā tad aksharam adhigamyate |

"Brāhmā was produced the first among the gods, maker of the universe, preserver of the world. He revealed to his eldest son Atharva, the science of Brahma, the basis of all knowledge. 2. Atharvan of old declared to Angis this science, which Brahmā had unfolded to him; and Angis, in turn, explained it to Satyavāha, descendant of Bharadvāja, who delivered this traditional lore, in succession, to Angiras. 3. Mahāśāla Śaunaka, approaching Angiras with the proper formalities, inquired, 'What is that, o venerable sage, through the knowledge of which all this [universe] becomes known?' 4. [Angiras] answered, 'Two sciences are to be known—this is what the sages versed in sacred knowledge declare—the superior and the inferior. 5. The inferior [consists of] the Rig-veda, the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, the Atharva-veda, accentuation, ritual, grammar, commentary, prosody, and astronomy. The superior science is that by which the imperishable is apprehended.[35]

I adduce some further passages which depreciate the ceremonial, or exoteric parts of the Vedas, in comparison with the esoteric knowledge of Brahma.

My attention was drawn to the following passage of the Bhagavad Gītā, ii. 42 ff., by its quotation in the Rev. Professor K. M. Banerjea's Dialogues on Hindu Philosophy:

Yām imām pushpitām vācham pravadanty avipaśchitaḥ | veda-vāda-ratāḥ pārtha nānyad astīti vādinaḥ | kāmātmānaḥ svarga-parāḥ janma-karma-phala-pradāṁ | kriyā-viśesha-bahulām bhogaiśvarya-gatim prati | bhogaiśvarya-prasaktānām tayā 'pahṛita-chetasām | vyavasāyātmikā buddhiḥ samādhau na vidhīyate | traiguṇya-vishayāḥ vedāḥ nistraiguṇyo bhavār-

[35] Compare the Mahābhārata, Ādip. verse 258, which speaks of the Āraṇyakas as superior to (the other parts of) the Vedas, and amṛita as the best of medicines (āraṇyakaṁ cha vedebhyaś chaushadhibhyo 'mṛitaṁ yathā). Similarly the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, x. 3, 5, 12 (quoted in Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 315, note), speaks of the Upanishads as being the essence of the Yajush: Tasya vai etasya yajusho rasaḥ eva upanishat |

juna | . . . . yāvān arthaḥ udapāne sarvataḥ samplutodake | tāvān sarveshu vedeshu brāhmaṇasya vijānataḥ |

"A flowery doctrine, promising the reward of works performed in this embodied state, prescribing numerous ceremonies, with a view to future gratification and glory, is preached by unlearned men, devoted to the injunctions of the Veda, assertors of its exclusive importance, lovers of enjoyment, and seekers after paradise. The restless minds of the men who, through this flowery doctrine, have become bereft of wisdom, and are ardent in the pursuit of future gratification and glory, are not applied to contemplation. The Vedas have for their objects the three qualities (sattva, rajas, tamas, or 'goodness,' 'passion,' and 'darkness'); but be thou, Arjuna, free from these three qualities . . . . As great as is the use of a well which is surrounded on every side by overflowing waters, so great [and no greater] is the use of the Vedas to a Brāhman endowed with true knowledge."

Chhāndogya Upanishad, vii. 1, 1, p. 473 (Colebrooke's Essays, i. 12):

"Adhīhi bhagavaḥ" iti ha upasasāda Sanatkumāraṁ Nāradaḥ | taṁ ha uvācha "yad vettha tena mā upasīda tatas te ūrddhvaṁ vakshyāmi" iti | 2. Sa ha uvācha "ṛigvedam bhagavo'dhyemi yajurvedaṁ sāmavedam ātharvaṇaṁ chaturtham itihāsa-purāṇam panchamaṁ vedānāṁ vedam pitryaṁ rāśiṁ daivaṁ nidhiṁ vākovākyam ekāyanaṁ deva-vidyām brahma-vidyām bhūta-vidyāṁ kshatra-vidyāṁ nakshatra-vidyāṁ sarpa-deva-jana-vidyām etad bhagavo'dhyemi | 3. So'ham bhagavo mantra-vid evāsmi na ātma-vit | śrutaṁ hy eva me bhagavaddṛiśebhyas 'tarati śokam ātma-vid' iti so'ham bhagavaḥ śochāmi tam mā bhagavān śokasya pāraṁ tārayatv" iti | taṁ ha uvācha "yad vai kincha etad adhyagīshṭhāḥ nāma evaitat | 4. Nāma vai ṛigvedo yajurvedaḥ sāmavedaḥ ātharvaṇaś chaturthaḥ itihāsa-purāṇaḥ panchamo vedānāṁ vedaḥ pitryo rāśir daivo nidhir vākovākyam ekāyanaṁ deva-vidyā brahma-vidyā bhūta-vidyā kshatra-vidyā nakshatra-vidyā sarpa-deva-jana-vidyā nāma evaitad nāma upāsva" iti | 5. "Sa yo nāma brahma ity upāste yāvad nāmno gataṁ tatra asya yathā kāmachāro bhavati yo nāma brahma ity upāste" | "asti bhagavo nāmno bhūyaḥ" iti | "nāmno vāva bhūyo'sti" iti | "tan me bhagavān bravītv" iti |

1. "Nārada approached Sanatkumāra, saying, 'Instruct me, venerable sage.' He received for answer, 'Approach me with [i.e. tell me] that which thou knowest; and I will declare to thee whatever more is to be learnt.' 2. Nārada replied, 'I am instructed, venerable sage, in the Rig-veda, the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, the Ātharvaṇa, [which is] the fourth, the Itihāsas and Purāṇas, [which are] the fifth Veda of the Vedas, the rites of the pitṛis, arithmetic, the knowledge of portents, and of great periods, the art of reasoning,[36] ethics, the science of the gods, the knowledge of Scripture, demonology, the science of war, the knowledge of the stars, the sciences of serpents and deities; this is what I have studied. 3. I, venerable man, know only the hymns (mantras); while I am ignorant of soul. But I have heard from reverend sages like thyself that 'the man who is acquainted with soul overpasses grief.' Now I, venerable man, am afflicted; but do thou transport me over my grief.' Sanatkumāra answered, 'That which thou hast studied is nothing but name. 4. The Rig-veda is name; and so are the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, the Ātharvaṇa, which is the fourth, and the Itihāsas and Purāṇas, the fifth Veda of the Vedas, etc. [all the other branches of knowledge are here enumerated just as above],—all these are but name: worship name. 5. He who worships name (with the persuasion that it is) Brahma, ranges as it were at will over all which that name comprehends;—such is the prerogative of him who worships name (with the persuasion that it is) Brahma.' 'Is there anything, venerable man,' asked Nārada, 'which is more than name?' 'There is,' he replied, 'something which is more than name.' 'Tell it to me,' rejoined Nārada."

(Śankara interprets the words panchamaṁ vedānāṁ vedam differently from what I have done. He separates the words vedānāṁ vedam from panchamaṁ and makes them to mean "the means of knowing the Vedas," i.e. grammar. See, however, the Bhāg. Pur. i. 4, 20, below, p. 42, and iii. 12, 39, to be quoted further on.

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiv. 7, 1, 22 (= Bṛihadāraṇyaka Upanishad, iv. 3, 22, p. 792 ff., p. 228–9 of Dr. Röer's English): Atra pitā apitā bhavati mātā amātā lokāḥ alokāḥ devāḥ adevāḥ vedāḥ avedāḥ yajnāḥ ayajnāḥ | atra steno 'steno bhavati bhrūṇa-hā abhrūṇa-hā paulkaso 'paulkasaś chāṇḍālo 'chāṇḍālaḥ śramaṇo 'śramaṇas tāpaso 'tāpaso nanvāgatam punyena ananvāgatam pāpena[37] tīrṇo hi tadā sarvān śokān hṛidayasya bhavati |

[36] Vākovākyam = tarka-śāstram — Sāyaṇa. The word is elsewhere explained as meaning "dialogues" (ukti-pratyukti-rūpam prakaraṇam—Comm. on S'. P. Br. xi. 5, 6, 8). The sense of some of the terms in this list of sciences is obscure; but exactness is not of any great importance to the general drift of the passage.

[37] I give here the reading of the Br. Ār. Up. The S'. P. Br. in Professor Weber's

"In that [condition of profound slumber, sushupti,] a father is no father, a mother is no mother, the worlds are no worlds, the gods are no gods, and the Vedas are no Vedas, sacrifices are no sacrifices. In that condition a thief is no thief, a murderer of embryos is no murderer of embryos, a Paulkasa no Paulkasa, a Chāṇḍāla no Chāṇḍāla, a Śramaṇa no Śramaṇa, a devotee no devotee; the saint has then no relation, either of advantage or disadvantage, to merit or to sin; for he then crosses over all griefs of the heart."

(I quote from the commentary on the Br. Ār. Up. Śankara's explanation of the unusual words nanvāgata and ananvāgata: Nanvāgataṁ na anvāgatam ananvāgatam asambaddham ity etat puṇyena śāstra-vihitena karmaṇā tathā pāpena vihitākaraṇa-pratishiddha-kriyā-lakshaṇena | "Nanvāgata=na (not) anvāgata, and ananvāgata=asambaddha, unconnected. This condition is unconnected either with merit, i.e. action enjoined by the śāstra, or with sin, i.e. action defined as the neglect of what is enjoined, or the doing of what is forbidden."

To the same effect the great sage Nārada is made to speak in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, iv. 29, 42 ff.:

Prajāpati-patiḥ sākshād bhagavān Giriśo Manuḥ | Dakshādayaḥ prajādhyakshāḥ naishṭhikāḥ Sanakādayaḥ | Marīchir Atry-angirasau Pulastyaḥ Pulahaḥ Kratuḥ | Bhṛigur Vaśishṭhaḥ ity ete mad-antāḥ brahmavādinaḥ | adyāpi vāchaspatayas tapo-vidyā-samādhibhiḥ | paśyanto 'py na paśyanti paśyantam Parameśvaram | śabda-brahmaṇi dushpāre charantaḥ uruvistare | mantra-lingair vyavachchhinnam bhajanto na viduḥ param | yadā yasyānugṛihṇāti bhagavān ātma-bhāvitaḥ | sa jahāti matiṁ loke vede cha parinishṭhitāṁ | tasmāt karmasu varhishmann ajnānād artha-kāśishu | mā 'rtha-dṛishṭiṁ kṛithāḥ śrotra-sparśishv aśprishta-vastushu | sva-lokaṁ na vidus te vai yatra devo Janārdanaḥ | āhur dhūmradhiyo vedaṁ sa-karmakam a-tad-vidaḥ | āstīrya darbhaiḥ prāg-agraiḥ kārtsnyena kshiti-maṇḍalam | stabdho vṛihad-vadhād mānī karma nāvaishi yat param | tat karma Hari-toshaṁ yat sā vidyā tan-matir yayā |

"Brahmā himself, the divine Giriśa (Śiva), Manu, Daksha and the other Prajāpatis, Sanaka and other devotees, Marīchi, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Bhṛigu, Vaśishṭha—all these expounders of sacred knowledge, and masters of speech, including myself (Nārada) as text gives ananvāgataḥ puṇyena ananvāgataḥ pāpena. And yet the commentary alludes to the word ananvāgata being in the neuter.

the last, though seeing, are yet, to this day, unable, by austerity, by science, by contemplation, to see Parameśvara (the supreme God), who sees all things. Wandering in the vast field of the verbal brahma (the Veda), which is difficult to traverse, men do not recognise the Supreme, while they worship him as he is circumscribed by the attributes specified in the hymns (mantras). When the Divine Being regards any man with favour, that man, sunk in the contemplation of soul, abandons all thoughts which are set upon the world and the Veda. Cease, therefore, Varhishmat, through ignorance, to look upon works which merely seem to promote the chief good, as if they truly effected that object, (works) which only touch the ear, but do not touch the reality. The misty-minded men, who, ignorant of the Veda, declare that works are its object, do not know [his] own world, where the divine Janārdana abides. Thou who, obstinate man that thou art, strewest the whole earth with sacrificial grass, with its ends turned to the east, and art proud of thy numerous immolations,—thou knowest not what is the highest work of all. That by which Hari (Vishṇu) is pleased, is work; that by which the thoughts are fixed on him, is science."

I copy the comment on a part of this passage, viz. on verses 45 and 46:

Śabda-brahmaṇi vede urur vistāro yasya arthato 'pi pāra-śūnye tasmin varttamānāḥ mantrāṇāṁ lingair vajra-hastatvādi-guṇa-yukta-vividha-devatā-'bhidhāna-sāmarthyaiḥ parichchhinnam eva Indrādi-rūpam tat-tat-karmāgraheṇa bhajantaḥ param Parameśvaraṁ na viduḥ | Tarhy anyaḥ ko nāma | karmādy-āgrahaṁ hitvā parameśvaram eva bhajed ity ata āha "yadā yam anugṛhṇāti" | anugrahe hetuḥ | ātmani bhāvitaḥ san sa tadā loke loka-vyavahāre vede cha karma-mārge parinishṭhitām matiṁ tyajati |

"Men, conversant with the verbal brahma, the Veda, of which the extent is vast, and which, in fact, is boundless, worshipping Parameśvara [the supreme God] under the form of Indra, etc., circumscribed by the marks specified in the hymns, i.e. limited to various particular energies denominated deities, who are characterised by such attributes as 'wielder of the thunderbolt,' etc.; worshipping Him, I say, thus, with an addiction to particular rites, men do not know the supreme God. What other [god], then, [is there]? He therefore, in the words, 'When he regards any one with favour,' etc., says, let a man, abandoning all addiction to works, etc., worship the supreme God alone. The reason for this favour [is supplied in the following words]:

'Sunk in the contemplation of soul, he then relinquishes his regard directed to the business of the world and to the Veda, i.e. to the method of works.'"

The following passage from the Kaṭha Upanishad (ii. 23) is of a somewhat similar tendency (p. 107 of Roër's ed. and p. 106 of Eng. trans.):

Nāyam ātmā pravachanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena | yam evaisha vṛinute tena labhyas tasyaisha ātmā vṛinute tanūṁ svām |

"This Soul is not to be attained by instruction, nor by understanding, nor by much scripture. He is attainable by him whom he chooses. The Soul chooses that man's body as his own abode."

The scholiast interprets thus the first part of this text:

Yadyapi durvijneyo 'yam ātmā tathāpy upāyena suvijneyaḥ eva ity āha nāyam ātmā pravachanena aneka-veda-svīkaraṇena labhyo jneyo nāpi medhayā granthārtha-dhāraṇā-śaktyā na bahunā śrutena kevalena | kena tarhi labhyaḥ ity uchyate |

"Although this soul is difficult to know, still it may easily be known by the use of proper means. This is what [the author] proceeds to say. This soul is not to be attained, known, by instruction, by the acknowledgement of many Vedas; nor by understanding, by the power of recollecting the contents of books; nor by much scripture alone. By what, then, is it to be attained? This he declares."

It is not necessary to follow the scholiast into the Vedantic explanation of the rest of the passage.[38]

The preceding passages, emanating from two different classes of writers, both distinguished by the spirituality of their aspirations, manifest a depreciation, more or less distinct and emphatic, of the polytheism of the Vedic hymns, as obstructive rather than promotive, of divine knowledge, and express disregard, if not contempt, of the ceremonies founded on that polytheism, and performed with a view to the enjoyments of paradise.

Sect. V.—Division of the Vedas, according to the Viṣhṇu, Vāyu, and Bhāgavata Purāṇas, and the Mahābhārata.

Some of the Purāṇas, as we have seen above, represent the four Vedas as having issued from Brahmā's different mouths. If they had [38] See Prof. Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. 1st ed. p. 320, and p. 109.

each a separate origin of this kind, it would seem that they must have had from the time of their production a distinct existence also. And yet it is elsewhere said that there was originally but one Veda, which was subsequently divided into four portions.

Thus the Vishṇu Purāṇa gives the following account of the division of the Veda, described as having been originally but one, into four parts, iii. 2, 18:

Kṛite yuge paraṁ jñānaṁ Kapilādi-svarūpa-dhṛik | dadāti sarva-bhūtānāṁ sarva-bhūta-hite rataḥ | chakravartti-svarūpeṇa tretāyām api sa prabhuḥ | Dushṭānāṁ nigrahaṁ kurvan paripāti jagattrayam | Vedam ekaṁ chatur-bhedaṁ kṛitvā śākhā-śatair vibhuḥ | karoti bahulam bhūyo Vedavyāsa-svarūpa-dhṛik | vedāṁs tu dvāpare vyasya, etc.

"In the Kṛita age, Vishṇu, devoted to the welfare of all creatures, assumes the form of Kapila and others to confer upon them the highest knowledge. In the Tretā age the Supreme Lord, in the form of a universal potentate, represses the violence of the wicked, and protects the three worlds. Assuming the form of Vedavyāsa, the all-pervading Being repeatedly divides the single Veda into four parts, and multiplies it by distributing it into hundreds of śākhās. Having thus divided the Vedas in the Dvāpara age," etc.[39]

This is repeated more at length in the following section (Vish. Pur. iii. 3, 4 ff.):

Veda-drumasya Maitreya śākhā-bhedaiḥ sahasraśaḥ | na śakyo vistaro vaktuṁ sankshepeṇa śṛiṇushva tam | Dvāpare dvāpare Vishṇur Vyāsa-rūpī mahāmune | Vedam ekam sa bahudhā kurute jagato hitaḥ | vīryaṁ tejo balaṁ chālpam manushyāṇām avekshya vai | hitāya sarva-bhūtānāṁ veda-bhedān karoti saḥ | yayā sa kurute tanvā vedam ekaṁ pṛithak prabhuḥ | Vedavyāsābhidhānā tu sā mūrttir Madhuvidvishaḥ | . . . . Ashṭā-viṁśati-kṛitvo vai vedāḥ vyastāḥ maharshibhiḥ | Vaivasvate 'ntare tasmin dvāpareshu punaḥ punaḥ |

"It is not possible, Maitreya, to describe in detail the tree of the Vedas with its thousand branches (śākhās); but listen to a summary. A friend to the world, Vishṇu, in the form of Vyāsa, divides the single Veda into many parts. He does so for the good of all creatures, because he perceives the vigour, energy, and strength of men to have become decreased. Vedavyāsa, in whose person he performs this division, is an impersonation of the enemy of Madhu (Vishṇu). . . . . Eight-and-twenty times in the Dvāpara ages of this Vaivasvata Manvantara[40] have the Vedas been divided by great sages." These sages are then enumerated, and Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana[41] is the twenty-eighth.

[39] Compare on this subject portions of the passage of the Mahābhārata quoted in the First Volume of this work, pp. 144–146.

The subject is resumed at the beginning of the next section (Vish. Pur. iii. 4, 1 ff.):

Ādyo vedaś chatushpādaḥ śata-sāhasra-saṃmitaḥ | Tato daśa-guṇaḥ kṛitsno yajño 'yaṁ sarva-kāmadhuk | Tato 'tra mat-suto Vyāso 'ṣṭāviṁśatitame 'ntare | vedam ekam chatushpādaṁ chaturdhā vyabhajat prabhuḥ | yathā tu tena vai vyastāḥ Vedavyāsena dhīmatā | Vedās tathā samastais tair vyastāḥ Vyāsais tathā mayā | tad anenaiva vedānāṁ śākhābhedān dvijottama | chaturyugeshu rachitān samasteshv avadhāraya | Kṛishṇa-dvaipāyanaṁ Vyāsam viddhi Nārāyaṇam prabhum | ko 'nyo hi bhuvi Maitreya Mahābhārata-kṛid bhavet | Tena vyastāḥ yathā Vedāḥ mat-putreṇa mahātmanā | Dvāpare hy atra Maitreya tad me śṛiṇu yathārthataḥ | Brahmaṇā chodito Vyāso vedān vyastum prachakrame | Atha śishyān sa jagrāha chaturo veda-pāra-gān | Ṛigveda-śrāvakam Pailaṁ jagrāha sa mahāmuniḥ | Vaiśampāyana-nāmānaṁ Yajurvedasya chāgrahīt | Jaiminiṁ Sāma-vedasya tathaivātharvaveda-vit | Sumantus tasya śishyo 'bhūd Vedavyāsasya dhīmataḥ | Romaharshaṇa-nāmānam mahābuddhim mahāmunim | Sūtaṁ jagrāha śishyaṁ sa itihāsa-purāṇayoḥ |

"The original Veda, consisting of four quarters, contained a hundred thousand verses. From it arose the entire system of sacrifice, tenfold (compared with the present) and yielding all the objects of desire. Subsequently, in the twenty-eighth manvantara my son, [Parāśara is the speaker] the mighty Vyāsa, divided into four parts the Veda which was one, with four quarters. In the same way as the Vedas were divided by the wise Vyāsa, so had they been divided by all the [preceding] Vyāsas, including myself. And know that the śākhā divisions [formed] by him [were the same as those] formed in all the periods of four yugas. Learn, too, that Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana Vyāsa was the lord Nārāyaṇa; for who else on earth could have composed the Mahābhārata? Hear now correctly how the Vedas were divided by him, my great son, in this Dvāpara age. When, commanded by Brahmā, Vyāsa undertook to divide the Vedas, he took four disciples who had read through those books. The great muni took Paila as teacher of the Rich, Vaiśampāyana of the Yajush, and Jaimini of the Sāman, while Sumantu, skilled in the Atharva-veda, was also his disciple. He took, too, as his pupil for the Itihāsas and Purāṇas the great and intelligent muni, Sūta, called Romaharshaṇa."[42]

[40] For an account of the Manvantaras, see the First Part of this work, pp. 39, 43 ff.

[41] Lassen (Ind. Ant. 2nd ed. i. 777, note) remarks: "Vyāsa signifies arrangement, and this signification had still retained its place in the recollection of the ancient recorders of the legend, who have formed from his name an irregular perfect, viz. vivyāsa." Lassen refers to two passages of the Mahābhārata in which the name is explained, viz. (i. 2417), Vivyāsa vedān yasmāt sa tasmād Vyāsaḥ iti smṛitaḥ | "He is called Vyāsa because he divided the Veda." And (i. 4236) Yo vyasya vedāṁś chaturas tapasā bhagavān ṛishiḥ | loke vyāsatvam āpede kārshṇyat kṛishṇatvam eva cha | "The divine sage (Kṛishṇa Dvaipāyana Vyāsa) who, through fervid devotion, divided the four Vedas, and so obtained in the world the title of Vyāsa, and from his blackness, the name of Kṛishṇa."

Vāyu Purāṇa.—In the same way, and partly in the same words, the Vāyu Purāṇa (section lx.) represents the Vedas to have been divided in the Dvāpara age. It first describes how this was done by Manu in the Svāyambhuva, or first manvantara, and then recounts how Vyāsa performed the same task in the existing seventh, or Vaivasvata manvantara; and, no doubt, also in the Dvāpara age, though this is not expressly stated in regard to Vyāsa.

The following is an extract from this passage (as given in Dr. Aufrecht's Catalogue of the Bodleian Sanskrit MSS. p. 54):

Dvāpare tu purāvṛitte Manoḥ svāyambhuve 'ntare | Brahmā Manum uvāchedam vedaṁ vyasya mahāmate | Parivṛittaṁ yugaṁ tāta svalpa-vīryāḥ dvijātayaḥ | saṁvṛittāḥ yuga-doshena sarvaṁ chaiva yathākramam | bhrashṭa-mānaṁ yuga-vaśād alpa-śishṭaṁ hi dṛiśyate | Daśa-sāhasra-bhāgena hy avaśishṭam kṛitād idam | vīryaṁ tejo balaṁ chālpaṁ sarvaṁ chaiva praṇaśyati | vede vedāḥ hi kāryyāḥ syur mā bhūd veda-vināśanaṁ | vede nāśam anuprāpte yajño nāśaṁ gamishyati | yajne nashṭe deva-nāśas

[42] Mahīdhara on the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (Weber's ed. p. 1) says, in regard to the division of the Vedas: Tatrādau Brahma-paramparayā praptaṁ Vedaṁ Vedavyāso manda-matīn manushyān vichintya tat-kṛipayā chaturdhā vyasya Ṛig-yajuḥ-sāma-tharvākhyāṁś chaturo vedān Paila-Vaiśampāyana-Jaimini-Sumantubhyaḥ kramād upadideśa te cha sva-śishebhyaḥ | Evam paramparayā sahasra-śākho Vedo jātaḥ | "Vedavyāsa, having regard to men of dull understanding, in kindness to them, divided into four parts the Veda which had been originally handed down by tradition from Brahmā, and taught the four Vedas, called Rich, Yajush, Sāman, and Atharvan, in order, to Paila, Vaiśampāyana, Jaimini, and Sumantu; and they again to their disciples. In this way, by tradition, the Veda of a thousand śākhās was produced."

tataḥ sarvam praṇaśyati | Ādyo vedaś chatush-pādo śata-sāhasra-sammitaḥ | Punar daśa-guṇaḥ kṛitsno yajno vai sarva-kāma-dhuk | Evam uktas tathety uktvā Manur loka-hite rataḥ | vedam ekam chatush-pādaṁ chaturdhā vyabhajat prabhuḥ | Brahmaṇo vachanāt tāta lokānāṁ hita-kāmyayā | tad aham varttamānena yushmākam veda-kalpanam | manvantareṇa vakshyāmi vyatītānām prakalpanam | pratyakshenā parokshaṁ vai tad vibodhata sattamāḥ | Asmin yuge kṛito Vyāsaḥ Pārāśaryaḥ parantapaḥ | "Dvaipāyanaḥ" iti khyāto Vishṇor aṁśaḥ prakīrtitaḥ | Brahmaṇā choditaḥ so 'smin vedaṁ vyastuṁ prachakrame | Atha śishyān sa jagrāha chaturo veda-kāraṇāt | Jaiminiṁ cha Sumantuṁ cha Vaiśampāyanam eva cha | Pailaṁ teshāṁ chaturthaṁ tu panchamaṁ Lomaharshaṇam |

"In the former Dvāpara of the Svāyambhuva manvantara, Brahmā said to Manu, 'Divide the Veda, o sage. The age is changed; through its baneful influence the Brāhmans have become feeble, and from the same cause the measure of everything has gradually declined, so that little is seen remaining. A part (of the Veda) consisting of only these ten thousand (verses) is now left to us from the Kṛita age; vigour, fire, and energy are diminished; and everything is on the road to destruction. A plurality of Vedas must be made out of the one Veda, lest the Veda be destroyed. The destruction of the Veda would involve the destruction of sacrifice; that again would occasion the annihilation of the gods, and then everything would go to ruin. The primeval Veda consisted of four quarters and extended to one hundred thousand verses, while sacrifice was tenfold, and yielded every object of desire.' Being thus addressed, Manu, the lord, devoted to the good of the world, replied, 'Be it so,' and in conformity with the command of Brahmā, divided the one Veda, which consisted of four quarters, into four parts.[43] I shall, therefore, narrate to you the division of the Veda in the existing manvantara; from which visible division you, virtuous sages, can understand those invisible arrangements of the same kind which were made in past manvantaras. In this Yuga, the victorious son of Parāśara, who is called Dvaipāyana, and is celebrated as a portion of Vishṇu, has been made the Vyāsa. In this Yuga, he, being commanded by Brahmā, began to divide the Vedas. For this purpose he took four pupils, Jaimini, Sumantu, Vaiśampāyana, [43] The Mahābhārata, S'āntip. verse 13,678, says the Vedas were divided in the Svāyambhuva manvantara by Apāntaratamas, son of Sarasvatī (Tena bhinnās tadā vedā manoḥ svāyambhuvo 'ntare).

and Paila, and, as a fifth, Lomaharshana" [for the Purāṇas and Itihāsas, etc.]

Bhāgavata Purāṇa.—It is in its third book, where the different manvantaras are described, that the Vishṇu Purāṇa gives an account of the division of the Vedas. In the book of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa where the manvantaras are enumerated, there is no corresponding allusion to the division of the Vedas; but a passage to the same effect occurs in the fourth section of the first book, verses 14 ff.:

Dvāpare samanuprāpte tṛitīya-yuga-paryaye | jātaḥ Parāśarād yogī Vāsavyāṁ kalayā Hareḥ | 15. Sa kadāchit Sarasvatyāḥ upaspṛiśya jalaṁ śuchi | viviktaḥ ekaḥ āsīnaḥ udite ravi-maṇḍale | 16. Parāvara-jnaḥ sa ṛishiḥ kālenāvyakta-raṁhasā | yuga-dharma-vyatikaram prāptam bhuvi yuge yuge | 17. Bhautikānāṁ cha bhāvānāṁ śakti-hrāsaṁ cha tat-kṛitam | aśraddhadhānān nissatvān durmedhān hrasitāyushaḥ | 18. Durbhagāṁs janān vīkshya munir divyena chakshushā | sarva-varṇāśramāṇāṁ yad dadhyau hitam amogha-dṛik | 19. Chāturhotraṁ karma śuddham prajānāṁ vīkshya vaidikam | vyadadhād yajna-santatyai vedam ekaṁ chaturvidham | 20. Ṛig-yajuḥ-sāmātharvākhyāḥ vedāś chatvāra uddhṛitāḥ | itihāsa-purāṇaṁ cha panchamo veda uchyate | 21. Tattrarg-veda-dharaḥ Pailaḥ sāmago Jaiminiḥ kaviḥ | Vaiśampāyana evaiko nishṇāto yajushām uta | 22. Atharvāṅgirasām āsīt Sumantur dāruṇo muniḥ | itihāsa-purāṇānām pitā me Romaharshaṇaḥ | 23. Te ete ṛishayo vedaṁ svaṁ svaṁ vyasyann anekadhā | śishyaiḥ praśishyais tach-chhishyair vedās te śākhino 'bhavan | 24. Te eva vedāḥ durmedhair dhāryante purushair yathā | evaṁ chakāra bhagavān Vyāsaḥ kṛipaṇa-vatsalaḥ | 25. Strī-śūdra-dvijabandhūnāṁ trayī na śruti-gocharā | karma-śreyasi mūḍhānāṁ śreyaḥ eva bhaved iha | iti Bhāratam ākhyānaṁ kṛipayā muninā kṛitam |

14. "When the Dvāpara age had arrived, during the revolution of that third yuga, the Yogin (Vyāsa) was born, a portion of Hari, as the son of Parāśara and Vāsavyā. 15. As on one occasion he was sitting solitary at sunrise, after touching the pure waters of the Sarasvatī, (16) this rishi, who knew the past and the future, perceiving, with the eye of divine intelligence, that disorder had in each yuga been introduced into the duties proper to each, through the action of time, whose march is imperceptible, (17) that the strength of beings formed of the elements had in consequence declined, that men were destitute of faith, vigour, and intelligence, that their lives were shortened, (18) and that they were miserable,—reflected with unerring insight on the means of benefitting the several castes and orders. 19. Discerning that the pure Vedic ceremonies ought to be performed for men by the agency of four classes of priests, he divided the one Veda into four parts, with a view to the performance of sacrifice. 20. Four Vedas, called the Rich, Yajush, Sāman, and Atharvan, were drawn forth from it; while the Itihāsas and Purāṇas are called the fifth Veda. 21. Of these the Rich was held by Paila, the sage Jaimini chanted the Sāman, Vaiśampāyana alone was versed in the Yajush, (22) the dreadful muni Sumantu in the verses of Atharvan and Angiras, and my father Romaharshaṇa in the Itihāsas and Purāṇas. 23. Each of these rishis arranged his own Veda in many ways; and by the successive generations of their disciples the Vedas were separated into branches (śākhās). 24. The venerable Vyāsa, kind to the wretched, acted thus in order that the Vedas might be recollected by men of enfeebled understanding. 25. And as women, Śūdras, and the inferior members of the twice-born classes were unfitted for hearing the Veda, and were infatuated in desiring the blessings arising from ceremonies, the muni, with a view to their felicity, in his kindness composed the narrative called the Mahābhārata."

But notwithstanding the magnitude of the great legendary and theological repertory which he had thus compiled, Vyāsa, we are told, was dissatisfied with his own contributions to sacred science until he had produced the Bhāgavata Purāṇa consecrated to the glory of Bhagavat (Kṛishṇa).[41] The completion of this design is thus narrated, Bhāg. Pur. i. 7, 6:

Anarthopaśamaṁ sākshād bhakti-yogam Adhokshaje | lokasyājānato vidvāṁś chakre Sātvata-saṁhitām | 7. Yasyāṁ vai śrūyamāṇāyāṁ Kṛishṇe parama-pūrushe | bhaktir udpatyate puṁsaḥ śoka-moha-bhayāpahā | 8. Sa saṁhitām Bhāgavatīṁ kṛitvā 'nukramya chātmajam | Śukam adhyāpayāmāsa nivṛitti-niratam muniḥ |

"Knowing that devotion to Adhokshaja (Kṛishṇa) was the evident means of putting an end to the folly of the world, which was ignorant of this, he composed the Sātvata-Sanhitā (the Bhāgavata). 7. When a man listens to this work, devotion to Kṛishṇa, the supreme Purusha, arises in his mind, and frees him from grief, delusion, and fear. Having [41] See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, Preface, p. xlvi.

completed and arranged this Sanhitā, the muni taught it to his son Śuka, who was indisposed to the pursuit of secular objects."

Towards the close of this Purāṇa also, in the sixth section of the twelfth book (verses 37 ff.), there is to be found what Professor Wilson (Vish. Pur. Pref.) calls "a rather awkwardly introduced description of the arrangement of the Vedas and Purāṇas by Vyāsa."

The passage (as given in the Bombay lithographed edition) is as follows:

Sūta uvācha | samāhitātmano brahman Brahmaṇaḥ parameshṭhinaḥ | hṛid-ākāśād abhūd'nādo vṛitti-rodhād vibhāvyate | yad-upāsanayā brahman yogino malam ātmanaḥ | dravya-kriyā-kārakākhyaṁ dhūtvā yānty apanurbhavam | Tato 'bhūt trivṛid oṁkāro yo 'vyakta-prabhavaḥ svarāṭ | yat tal lingam Bhagavato Brahmaṇaḥ paramātmanaḥ | sṛiṇoti yaḥ imaṁ sphoṭaṁ supta-śrotre cha śūnya-dṛik | yena vāg vyajyate yasya vyaktir ākāśe ātmanaḥ | svadhāmno brahmaṇaḥ sākshād vāchakaḥ paramātmanaḥ | sa-sarva-mantropanishad-veda-vījaṁ sanātanam | tasya hy āsaṁs trayo varṇāḥ a-kārādyāḥ Bhṛigūdvaha | dhāryante yais trayo bhāvāḥ guṇāḥ nāmārtha-vṛittayaḥ | tato 'kshara-samāmnāyam asṛijad bhagavān ajaḥ | Antassthoshma-svara-sparśa-hrasva-dīrghādi-lakshaṇam | tenāsau chaturo vedāṁs chaturbhir vadanair vibhuḥ | sa-vyāhṛitikān soṁkārāṁś chāturhotra-vivakshayā | putrān adhyāpayat tāṁs tu brahmarshīn brahmakovidān | te tu dharmopadeshṭāraḥ sva-putrebhyaḥ samādiśan | te paramparayā prāptās tat-tach-chhishyair dhṛita-vrataiḥ | chaturyugeshv atha vyastāḥ dvāparādau maharshibhiḥ | kshīṇāyushaḥ kshīṇā-sattvān durmedhān vīkshya kālatataḥ | vedān brahmarshayo vyasyan hṛidisthāchyuta-noditāḥ | Asminn apy antare brahman bhagavān loka-bhāvanaḥ | brahmeśādyair lokapālair yāchito dharma-guptaye | Parāśarāt Satyavatyām aṁśāṁśa-kalayā vibhuḥ | avatīrṇo mahābhāga vedaṁ chakre chaturvidham | ṛig-atharva-yajuḥ-sāmnāṁ rāśīn uddhṛitya vargaśaḥ | chatasraḥ saṁhitās chakre mantrair maṇigaṇāḥ iva | tāsāṁ sa chaturaḥ śishyān upāhūya mahāmatiḥ | Ekaikāṁ saṁhitāṁ brahman ekaikasmai dadau vibhuḥ | Pailāya saṁhitām ādyām bahvṛichākhyām uvācha ha | Vaiśampāyana-sanjnāya nigadākhyaṁ yajur-gaṇam | sāmnāṁ Jaiminaye prāha tathā chhandoga-saṁhitām | Atharvāṅgirasīṁ nāma sva-śishāya Sumantave |

"Sūta speaks: 'From the æther of the supreme Brahma's heart, when he was plunged in meditation, there issued a sound, which is perceived [by the devout] when they close their organs of sense. By adoring this sound, devotees destroy the soul's threefold taint, extrinsic, inherent, and superhuman,[45] and become exempt from future birth. From this sound sprang the oṁkāra, composed of three elements, self-resplendent, of imperceptible origin, that which is the emblem of the divine Brahma, the supreme spirit. He it is who hears this sound (sphoṭa), when the ears are insensible and the vision inactive,—(this sphoṭa or oṁkāra) through which speech is revealed, and which is manifested in the æther, from the Soul.[46] This [oṁkāra] is the sensible exponent of Brahma, the self-sustained, the supreme spirit; and it is the eternal seed of the Vedas, including all the Mantras and Upanishads. In this [oṁkāra] there were, o descendant of Bhṛigu, three letters, A and the rest, by which the three conditions, the [three] qualities, the [three] names, the [three] significations, the [three] states[47] are maintained. From these [three letters] the divine and unborn being created the traditional system of the letters of the alphabet, distinguished as inner (y, r, l, v), ushmas (ś, sh, s, h), vowels, long and short, and consonants. With this [alphabet] the omnipresent Being, desiring to reveal the functions of the four classes of priests, [created] from his four mouths the four Vedas with the three sacred syllables (vyāhṛitis) and the oṁkāra.[48] These he taught to his sons, the brahmarshis, skilled in sacred lore; and these teachers of duty, in turn declared them to their sons. The Vedas were thus received by each succeeding generation of devout pupils from their [45] Dravya-kriyā-kāraka, which the scholiast interprets as answering to adhibhūta, adhyātma, and adhidaiva. See the explanation of these terms in Wilson's Sānkhya-kārikā, pp. 2 and 9.

[46] I quote the scholiast's explanation of this obscure verse: Ko 'sau paramātmā tam āha 'sṛiṇoti' iti | imam sphoṭam avyaktam oṁkāram | nanu jīvaḥ evo taṁ sṛiṇotu | na ity āha | supta-śrotre karṇa-pidhānādinā avṛittike 'pi śrotre sati | jīvas tu karaṇādīnatvād na tadā śrotā | tad-upalabdhis tu tasya paramātma-dvārikā eva iti bhāvaḥ | Īśvaras tu naivam | yataḥ śūnya-dṛik śūnye 'pi indriya-varge dṛik jñānaṁ yasya | tathā hi supto yadā śabdaṁ śrutvā prabuddhyate na tadā jīvaḥ śrotā līnendriyatvāt | ato yas tadā śabdaṁ śrutvā jīvam prabodhayati sa yathā paramātmā eva tadvat | ko 'sāv oṁkāras taṁ viśinashṭi sārdhena yena vāg bṛihatī vyajyate yasya cha hṛidayākāśe ātmanaḥ sakāśād vyaktir abhivyaktiḥ. The word sphoṭa will be explained below, in a future section.

[47] These the scholiast explains thus: Guṇāḥ sattvādayaḥ | nāmāni ṛig-yajuḥ-sāmāni | arthāḥ bhūr-bhuvaḥ-svar-lokāḥ | vṛittayo jāgrad-ādyāḥ |

[48] If I have translated this correctly, the oṁkāra is both the source of the alphabet, and the alphabet of the oṁkāra !

predecessors, and in each of the systems of four yugas were divided by great sages at the beginning of the Dvāpara.[49] The Brahmarshis, impelled by Achyuta, who resided in their hearts, divided the Vedas, because they perceived that men had declined in age, in power, and in understanding. In this manvantara also,[50] the divine and omnipresent Being, the author of the universe, being supplicated by Brahmā, Īśa (Śiva), and the other guardians of the world, to maintain righteousness, became partially incarnate as the son of Parāśara and Satyavatī, and divided the Veda into four parts. Selecting aggregates of Ṛich, Atharvan, Yajush, and Sāman verses, and arranging them in sections (vargas), he formed four sanhitās (collections) of the hymns, as gems [of the same description are gathered together in separate heaps]. Having summoned four disciples, the wise lord gave to each of them one of these sanhitās. To Paila he declared the first sanhitā, called that of the Bahvṛichas; to Vaiśampāyana the assemblage of Yayush verses, called Nigada; to Jaimini the Chhandoga collection of Sāman verses; and to his pupil, Sumantu, the Atharvāngirasī."

The Bhāgavata Purāṇa, however, is not consistent in the account which it gives of the division of the Vedas. In a passage already quoted in the First Volume of this work, p. 158, it speaks of that division as having been the work of the monarch Purūravas, and as having taken place in the beginning of the Tretā age. From the importance of this text I will extract it here again at greater length.

The celestial nymph Urvaśī, the Purāṇa tells us, had been doomed, in consequence of a curse, to take up her abode upon earth. She there

[49] Dvāparādau can only mean the "beginning of the Dvāpara;" but the scholiast undertakes by the following process of reasoning to show that it means the end of that yuga: Dvāparādau dvāparam ādir yasya tad-antyāṁśa-lakshaṇasya kālasya | tasmin dvāparānte veda-vibhāga-prasiddheḥ S'antanu-sama-kāla-Vyāsāvatāra-prasiddheś cha | vyastā vibhaktāḥ | "Dvāparādau means the period of which the dvāpara was the beginning, i.e. the time distinguished as the concluding portion of that yuga; since it is notorious that the Vedas were divided at the end of the Dvāpara, and that the incarnation of Vyāsa was contemporaneous with S'antanu. Vyastāḥ = vibhaktāḥ, divided."

[50] From this it appears that hitherto the account had not referred to the present manvantara. The scholiast remarks: Evaṁ sāmānyato veda-vibhāga-kramam uktvā vaivasvata-manvantare viśeshato nirūpayitum āha | "Having thus [in the preceding verses] generally described the manner in which the Vedas are divided, [the author] now states [as follows], with the view of determining particularly [what was done] in the Vaivasvata manvantara."

fell in love with King Purūravas, the report of whose manly beauty had touched her heart, even before she had been banished from paradise. After spending many happy days in the society of her lover, she forsook him in consequence of his having infringed one of the conditions of their cohabitation, and Purūravas was in consequence rendered very miserable. He at length, however, obtained a renewal of their intercourse, and she finally recommended him to worship the Gandharvas, who would then re-unite him with her indissolubly.

The Purāṇa then proceeds (ix. 14, 43 ff.):

Tasya saṁstuvatas tushṭāḥ agnisthālīṁ dadur nṛipa | Urvaśīm manyamānas tāṁ so 'budhyata charan vane | Sthālīṁ nyasya vane gatvā gṛihān ādhyāyato niśi | Tretāyāṁ sampravṛittāyām manasi trayy avarttata | Sthālī-sthānaṁ gato 'śvatthaṁ śamī-garbhaṁ vilakshya saḥ | Tena dve araṇī kṛitvā Urvaśī-loka-kāmyayā | Urvaśīm mantrato dhyāyann adharāraṇim uttarām | Ātmānam ubhayor madhye yat tat prajananaṁ prabhuḥ | Tasya nirmathanāj jāto jātavedāḥ vibhāvasuḥ | Trayyā cha vidyayā rājnā putratve kalpitas trivṛit | Tenāyajata yajneśaṁ bhagavantam adhokshajam | Urvaśī-lokam anvichhan sarva-devamayaṁ Harim | Ekaḥ eva purā vedaḥ praṇavaḥ sarva-vāṅmayaḥ | Devo nārāyaṇo nānyaḥ eko 'gnir varṇaḥ eva cha | Purūravasa evāsīt trayī tretā-mukhe nṛipa | Agninā prajayā rājā lokaṁ gāndharvam eyivān |

"The Gandharvas, gratified by his praises, gave him a platter containing fire. This he [at first] supposed to be Urvaśī, but became aware [of his mistake], as he wandered in the wood. Having placed the platter in the forest, Purūravas went home; and as he was meditating in the night, after the Tretā age had commenced, the triple Veda appeared before his mind.[51] Returning to the spot where he had placed the platter, he beheld an aśvattha tree springing out of a śamī tree, and formed from it two pieces of wood. Longing to attain the world where Urvaśī dwelt, he imagined to himself, according to the sacred text, Urvaśī as the lower and himself as the upper piece of wood, and the place of generation as situated between the two.[52] Agni was produced from its

[51] Karma-bodhakam veda-trayaṁ prādurabhūt | "The three Vedas, expounders of rites, were manifested to him," as the scholiast explains."

[52] Allusion is here made to a part of the ceremonial for kindling a particular sacrificial fire; one of the formulas employed at which, as given in the Vāj. Sanhitā, 5, 2, is, "thou art Urvaśī" (Urvaśy asi), and another, "thou art Purūravas" (Purūravōḥ friction, and, according to the threefold science [Veda], was under his triple form, adopted by the king as his son. With this fire, seeking to attain the heaven of Urvaśī, he worshipped the divine Hari, the lord of sacrifice, Adhokshaja, formed of the substance of all the gods. There was formerly but one Veda, the sacred monosyllable om, the essence of all speech; one god, Nārāyaṇa; one Agni, and [one] caste. From Purūravas came the triple Veda in the beginning of the Tretā age. Through Agni, his son, the king attained the heaven of the Gandharvas."[53]

On the close of this passage the commentator remarks:

Nanv anādir veda-traya-bodhito brāhmaṇādīnām Indrādy-aneka-deva-yajanena svarga-prāpti-hetuḥ karma-mārgaḥ kathaṁ sādir iva varṇyate | Tatrāha "eka eva" iti dvābhyām | Purā kṛita-yuge sarva-vāṅmayaḥ sarvāsāṁ vāchāṁ vīja-bhūtaḥ praṇavaḥ eka eva vedaḥ | Devaś cha Nārāyaṇaḥ eka eva | Agniś cha eka eva laukikaḥ | Varṇaś cha eka eva haṁso nāma | Veda-trayī tu Purūravasaḥ sakāśād āsīt . . . . Ayam bhāvaḥ | kṛita-yuge sattva-pradhānāḥ prāyaśaḥ sarve 'pi dhyāna-nishṭhāḥ | rajaḥ-pradhāne tu Tretā-yuge vedādi-vibhāgena karma-mārgaḥ prakaṭo babhūva ity arthaḥ |

"How is it that the eternal method of works, which is pointed out by the three Vedas, and through which Brāhmans and others, by worshipping Indra and many other gods, attain to paradise, is spoken of [in the preceding verses] as if it had a beginning in time? He [the author of the Purāṇa] answers this in these two verses. Formerly, i.e. in the Kṛita age, there was only one Veda, the sacred monosyllable om, the essence of all words, i.e. that which is the seed of all words; and there was only one god, Nārāyaṇa; only one fire, that for common uses; and asi), the former denoting the lower (adharāraṇi), and the latter the upper, piece of wood (uttarāraṇi), by the friction of which the fire was to be produced. See Weber's Indische Studien, i. 197, and note; Roth's Illustrations of the Nirukta, p. 154; the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, iii. 4, 1, 22, and Kātyāyana's S'rauta Sūtras, v. 1, 28 ff. The commentator on the Vājanasaneyi Sanhitā explains the formula Urvasy asi thus: Yathā Urvaśī Purūravo-nṛipasya bhogāya adhastāt śete tadvat tvam adho 'vasthitā 'si | "As Urvasī lies under King Purūravas for sexual connection, so thou art placed underneath."

[53] This story is also told in a prose passage in the Vish. Pur. iv. 6. It is there stated that Purūravas divided fire, which was originally one, in a threefold manner (Eko 'gnir ādāv abhavad Ailena tu atra manvantare traitā pravarttitā). No mention, however, is there made of his having divided the Vedas, or partitioned society into castes.

only one caste, the Hansa. But the triple Veda came from Purūravas. . . . . The meaning is this: in the Kṛita age the quality of goodness predominated in men, who were almost all absorbed in meditation. But in the Tretā age, when passion (rajas) prevailed, the method of works was manifested by the division of the Vedas." [54]

This last quoted passage of the Bhāgavata gives, as I have intimated, a different account of the division of the Vedas from that contained in the other two texts previously adduced from the same work, and in the citations from the Vishṇu and Vāyu Purāṇas. The one set of passages speak of the Veda as having been divided by Vyāsa into four parts in the Dvāpara age; while the text last cited speaks of the triple Veda as having originated with Purūravas in the Tretā age; and evidently belonged to a different tradition from the former three. The legend which speaks of three Vedas may possibly have a somewhat more ancient source than that which speaks of four, as it was not till a later date that the Atharva asserted its right to be ranked with the three others as a fourth Veda. The former tradition, however, would appear to have had its origin partly in etymological considerations. The word Tretā, though designating the second Yuga, means a triad, and seems to have been suggested to the writer's mind by the triple fire mentioned in the legend.

Mahābhārata.—The following passage from the Mahābhārata, Śāntiparvan (verses 13,088 ff.), agrees partially in tenor with the last passage from the Bhāgavata, but is silent regarding Purūravas:

Idaṁ kṛita-yugaṁ nāma kālaḥ śreshṭhaḥ pravarttitaḥ | Ahiṁsyāḥ yajna-paśavo yuge 'smin na tad anyathā | Chatushpāt sakalo dharmo bhavishyaty atra vai surāḥ | Tatas Tretā-yugaṁ nāma trayī yatra bhavishyati | Prokshitāḥ yajna-paśavo badhaṁ prāpsyanti vai makhe [55] | Yatra

[54] This legend is borrowed from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 5, 1, 1 ff. (pp. 855–858 Weber's ed.), where the motive for its introduction is to describe the process by which fire was generated by Purūravas in obedience to the command of the Gandharvas, as the means of his admission into their paradise. See Professor Müller's translation of this story in the Oxford Essays for 1856, pp. 62, 63, or the reprint in his Chips from a German Workshop; and the First Volume of this work, p. 226. The legend is founded on the 95th hymn of the tenth book of the Rig-veda.

[55] Manu (i. 85, 86) differs from this passage of the Mahābhārata in making the Dvāpara the age of sacrifice: Anye kṛitayuge dharmās Tretāyāṁ Dvāpare pare | Anye kaliyuge nṛīṇāṁ yuga-hrāsānurūpataḥ | Tapaḥ pareṁ Kṛitayuge Tretāyāṁ jñānam uchyate | Dvāpare yajnam evāhur dānam ekaṁ kalau yuge | "Different duties are practised by men in the Kṛita age, and different duties in the Tretā, Dvāpara, and

pādaś chaturtho vai dharmasya na bhavishyati | Tato vai dvāparaṁ nāma miśraḥ kālo bhavishyati |

"This present Kṛita age is the best of all the yugas; in it it will be unlawful to slay any animals for sacrifice; in this age righteousness shall consist of all its four portions and be entire. Then shall follow the Tretā age, in which the triple Veda shall come into existence, and animals fit for sacrifice shall be slaughtered as oblations. In that age the fourth part of righteousness shall be wanting. Next shall succeed the Dvāpara, a mixed period."

The M. Bh. (Śāntip. 13,475) relates that two Asuras, who beheld Brahmā creating the Vedas, suddenly snatched them up and ran off. Brahmā laments their loss, exclaiming:

Vedo me paramāṁ chakshur vedo me paramam balam | . . . . Vedān ṛite hi kiṁ kuryāṁ lokānāṁ śrishtim uttamām |

"The Veda is my principal eye; the Veda is my principal strength. . . . . What shall I do without the Vedas, the most excellent creation in the universe?" They were, however, recovered and restored to Brahmā (verses 13,506 ff.).

Vishṇu Purāṇa.—The following verse, Vish. Pur. iii. 2, 12, refers to the periodical disappearance of the Vedas:

Chaturyugānte vedānāṁ jāyate kali-viplavaḥ | pravarttayanti tān etya bhuvi saptarshayo divaḥ |

"At the end of the four ages (yugas) the disappearance of the Vedas, incident to the Kali, takes place. The seven rishis come from heaven to earth, and again give them currency." (Compare M. Bh. Śāntip. verse 7660, which will be quoted further on.)

SECT. VI.—Accounts in the Vishṇu and Vāyu Purāṇas of the schisms between the adherents of the Yajur-veda, Vaiśampāyana and Yājnavalkya; hostility of the Atharvaṇas towards the other Vedas; and of the Chhandogas towards the Rig-veda.

The Vishṇu Purāṇa, iii. 5, 2 ff., gives the following legend regarding Kali ages, in proportion to the decline in those yugas. Devotion is said to be supreme in the Kṛita, knowledge in the Tretā, sacrifice in the Dvāpara, and liberality alone in the Kali." See also Mahābhārata, Śāntiparvan, verse 8505, which agrees with Manu. See also the First Volume of this work, pp. 39 ff.

the way in which the Yajur-veda came to be divided into two schools, the black and the white:

Yājnavalkyas tu tasyābhūd Brahmarāta-suto dvija | Śishyaḥ paramadharma-jño guru-vṛitti-paraḥ sadā | Ṛishir yo 'dya mahāmeruṁ samāje nāgamishyati | Tasya vai sapta-rātraṁ tu brahma-hatyā bhavishyati | Pūrvam eva muni-gaṇaiḥ samayo 'bhūt kṛito dvija | Vaiśampāyana ekas tu taṁ vyatikrāntavāṁs tadā | Śvaśrīyam bālakaṁ so 'tha padā spṛishṭam aghātayat | Śishyān āhaśa "bhoḥ śishyāḥ brahma-hatyāpahaṁ vratam | Charadhvam mat-kṛite sarve na vichāryyam idam tathā" | Athāha Yājnavalkyas taṁ "kim ebhir bhagavan dvijaiḥ | Kleśitair alpatejobhir charishye 'ham idaṁ vratam" | Tataḥ kruddho guruḥ prāha Yājnavalkyam mahāmatiḥ | "Muchyatāṁ yat tvayā 'dhītam matto viprāvamanyaka | Nisteja so vadasy etān yas tvam brāhmaṇa-pungavān | Tena śishyeṇa nārtho 'sti mamājnā-bhanga-kāriṇā" | Yājnavalkyas tataḥ prāha bhaktau tat te mayoditam | Mamāpy alaṁ tvayā 'dhītaṁ yad mayā tad idaṁ dvija | Ity uktvā rudhirāktāni sarūpāṇi yajūṁshi saḥ | Chhardayitvā dadau tasmai yayau cha svechhayā muniḥ | yajūṁshy atha visṛishṭāni Yājnavalkyena vai dvija | Jagṛihus tittirībhūtvā Taittirīyās tu te tataḥ | Brahma-hatyā-vratam chīrṇam guruṇā choditais tu yaiḥ | Charakādhvaryavas te tu charaṇād munisattamāḥ | Yājnavalkyo 'tha Maitreya prāṇāyāma-parāyaṇaḥ | tushṭāva prayatāḥ sūryam yajūṁshy abhilashaṁs tataḥ | . . . . Ity evamādibhis tena stūyamanaḥ stavaiḥ raviḥ | vāji-rūpa-dharaḥ prāha "vṛiyatām" iti "vānchhitam" | Yājnavalkyas tadā prāha praṇipatya divākaram | yajūṁshi tāni me dehi yāni santi na me gurau | Evam ukto dadau tasmai yajūṁshi bhagavān raviḥ | ayātayāma-sanjnāni yāni vetti na tad-guruḥ | Yajūṁshi yair adhītāni tāni viprair dvijottama | vājinas te samākhyātāḥ sūryo 'śvaḥ so 'bhavad yataḥ |

"Yājnavalkya, son of Brahmarāta, was his [Vaiśampāyana's] disciple, eminently versed in duty, and always attentive to his teacher. An agreement had formerly been made by the Munis that any one of their number who should fail to attend at an assembly on Mount Meru on a certain day should incur the guilt of Brahmanicide during a period of seven nights. Vaiśampāyana was the only person who infringed this agreement, and he in consequence occasioned the death of his sister's child by touching it with his foot. He then desired all his disciples to perform on his behalf an expiation which should take away his guilt, and forbade any hesitation. Yājnavalkya then said to him,

'Reverend sir, what is the necessity for these faint and feeble Brahmins? I will perform the expiation.' The wise teacher, incensed, replied to Yājnavalkya, 'Contemner of Brāhmans, give up all that thou hast learnt from me; I have no need of a disobedient disciple, who, like thee, stigmatizes these eminent Brāhmans as feeble.' Yājnavalkya rejoined, 'It was from devotion [to thee] that I said what I did; but I, too, have done with thee; here is all that I have learnt from thee.' Having spoken, he vomited forth the identical Yajush texts tainted with blood, and giving them to his master, he departed at his will. [The other pupils] having then become transformed into partridges (tittiri), picked up the Yajush texts, which were given up by Yājnavalkya, and were thence called Taittirīyas. And those who by their teacher's command had performed the expiation for Brahmanicide, were from this performance (charaṇa) called Charakādhvaryus. Yājnavalkya then, who was habituated to the exercise of suppressing his breath, devoutly hymned the sun, desiring to obtain Yajush texts.... [I pass over the hymn.] Thus celebrated with these and other praises, the sun assumed the form of a horse, and said, 'Ask whatever boon thou desirest.' Yājnavalkya then, bowing down before the lord of day, replied, 'Give me such Yajush texts as my teacher does not possess.' Thus supplicated, the sun gave him the Yajush texts called Ayātayāma, which were not known to his master. Those by whom these texts were studied were called Vājins, because the sun (when he gave them) assumed the shape of a horse (vājin)."

I quote also the parallel text from the Vāyu Purāṇa, as it exhibits some slight variations from the preceding (Aufr. Cat. p. 55):

Kāryam āsīd ṛishīṇāṁ cha kinchid brāhmaṇa-sattamāḥ | Meru-pṛishṭhaṁ samāsādya tais tadā "'stv" iti mantritam | Yo no 'tra sapta-rātreṇa nāgachhed dvija-sattamāḥ | sa kuryād brahma-badhyāṁ vai samayo naḥ prakīrttitaḥ | Tatas te sa-yaṇāḥ sarve Vaiśampāyana-varjitāḥ | Prayayuḥ saptarātreṇa yatra sandhiḥ kṛito 'bhavat | Brāhmaṇānāṁ tu vachanād brahma-badhyāṁ chakāra saḥ | Śishyān atha samānīya sa Vaiśampāyano 'bravīt | "Brahma-badhyāṁ charadhvaṁ vai mat-kṛite dvijaḥ-sattamāḥ | sarve yūyaṁ samāgamya brūta me tad-hitaṁ vachaḥ" | Yājnavalkyaḥ uvācha | Aham eva charishyāmi tishṭhantu munayas tv ime | bālaṁ chotthāpayishyāmi tapasā svena bhāvitaḥ | Evam uktas tataḥ krudhdho Yājnavalkyam athābravīt | uvācha "yat tvayā 'dhītaṁ sarvam praty-

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY

arpayasva me" | Evam uktaḥ sarūpāṇi yajūṁshi pradadau guroḥ | rudhireṇa tathā 'ktāni chharditvā brahma-vittamaḥ | Tataḥ sa dhyānam āsthāya sūryam ārādhayad dvijaḥ.| "sūrya bṛahma yad uchchhinnaṁ khaṁ gatvā pratitishṭhati" | Tato yāni yatāny ūrddhaṁ yajūṁshy āditya-maṇḍalam | Tāni tasmai dadau tushṭaḥ sūryo vai Brāhmarātaye | Aśva-rūpaś cha mārttaṇḍo Yājnavalkyāya dhīmate | Yajūṁshy adhīyate yāni brāhmaṇāḥ yena kenachit (yani kānichit?) |aśva-rūpāṇi (-rūpeṇa?) dattāni tatas te Vājino 'bhavan[56] | brahma-hatyā tu yaiś chīrṇā charaṇāt charakāḥ smṛitāḥ | Vaiśampāyana-śishyās te charakāḥ samudāhṛitāḥ |

"The rishis having a certain occasion, met on the summit of Mount Meru, when, after consultation, they resolved and agreed together that any one of their number who should fail to attend there for seven nights should become involved in the guilt of brahmanicide. They all in consequence resorted to the appointed place for seven nights along with their attendants. Vaiśampāyana alone was absent, and he, according to the word of the Brāhmans, committed brahmanicide. He then assembled his disciples, and desired them to perform, on his behalf, an expiation for his offence, and to meet and tell him what was salutary for the purpose. Yājnavalkya then said, 'I myself will perform the penance; let all these munis refrain: inspired by my own austere-fervour I shall raise up the boy (whom thou hast slain).' Incensed at this speech of Yājnavalkya [Vaiśampāyana] said to him, 'Restore all that thou hast learned (from me).' Thus addressed, the sage, deeply versed in sacred lore, vomited forth the identical Yajush texts stained with blood, and delivered them to his teacher. Plunged in meditation, the Brāhman (Yājnavalkya) then adored the sun, saying, 'Sun, every sacred text which disappears [from the earth] goes to the sky, and there abides.' The sun, gratified, and [appearing] in the form of a horse, bestowed on Yājnavalkya, son of Brahmarāta, all the Yajush texts which had ascended to the solar region. As all the Yajush texts which these Brāhmans study were given by him in the form of a horse, they in consequence became Vājins. And the disciples of Vaiśampāyana, by whom the expiatory rite was accomplished, were called Charakas, from its accomplishment (charaṇa)."[57]

[56] I am indebted to Dr. Hall for communicating to me the various readings of this verse in the India Office Library MSS., but some parts of it seem to be corrupt.

[57] In a note to p. 461 (4to. ed.) of his Translation of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, Prof. Wilson

It is sufficiently evident from the preceding legend that the adherents of the two different divisions of the Yajurveda (the Taittirīya or black, and the Vājasaneyi or white), must in ancient times have regarded each other with feelings of the greatest hostility—feelings akin to those with which the followers of the rival deities, Vishṇu and Śiva, look upon each other in modern days. On this subject I translate a passage from Professor Weber's History of Indian Literature, p. 84:

"Whilst the theologicians of the Ṛich, are called Bahvṛichas, and those of the Sāman Chhandogas, the old name for the divines of the Yajush is Adhvaryu: and these ancient appellations are to be found in the Sanhitā of the Black Yajush (the Taittirīya), and in the Brāhmaṇa of the White Yajush (the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa). The latter work applies the term Adhvaryus to its own adherents, whilst their opponents are denominated Charakādhvaryus, and are the objects of censure. This hostility is also exhibited in a passage of the Sanhitā of the White Yajush, where the Charakāchārya, as one of the human sacrifices to be offered at the Purushamedha, is devoted to Dushkṛita or Sin." [58]

In his Indische Studien (iii. 454) Professor Weber specifies the following passages in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa as those in which the Charakas, or Charakādhvaryus are censured, viz. iii. 8, 2, 24; iv. 1, 2, 19; iv. 2, 3, 15; iv. 2, 4, 1; vi. 2, 2, 1, 10; viii. 1, 3, 7; viii. 7, 1, 14, 24. Of these I quote one specimen (iv. 1, 2, 19):

mentions the following legend illustrative of the effects of this schism. "The Vāyu and Matsya relate, rather obscurely, a dispute between Janamejaya and Vaiśampāyana, in consequence of the former's patronage of the Brāhmans of the Vājasaneyi branch of the Yajur-veda, in opposition to the latter, who was the author of the Black or original Yajush. Janamejaya twice performed the Aśvamedha according to the Vājasaneyi ritual, and established the Trisarvī, or use of certain texts by Aśmaka and others, by the Brāhmans of Anga, and by those of the middle country. He perished, however, in consequence, being cursed by Vaiśampāyana. Before their disagreement, Vaiśampāyana related the Mahābhārata to Janamejaya."

[58] Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, xxx. 18 (p. 846 of Weber's ed.): Dushkṛitāya charakāchāryyam | (charakāṇāṁ gurum—Scholiast). Prof. Müller also says (Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 350), "This name Charaka is used in one of the Khilas (the passage just quoted) of the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā as a term of reproach. In the 30th Adhyāya a list of people is given who are to be sacrificed at the Purushamedha, and among them we find the Charakāchārya as the proper victim to be offered to Dushkṛita or Sin. This passage, together with similar hostile expressions in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, were evidently dictated by a feeling of animosity against the ancient schools of the Adhvaryus, whose sacred texts we possess in the Taittirīya-veda, and from whom Yājnavalkya seceded in order to become himself the founder of the new Charaṇas of the Vājasaneyins."

Tāḥ u ha Charakāḥ nānā eva mantrābhyāṁ juhvati "prāṇodānau vai asya etau | nānā-vīryau prāṇodānau kurmaḥ" iti vadantaḥ | Tad u tathā na kuryāt | mohayanti ha te yajamānasya prāṇodānau | api id vai enam tūshṇīṁ juhuyāt |

"These the Charakas offer respectively with two mantras, saying thus: 'These are his two breathings,' and 'we thus make these two breathings endowed with their respective powers.' But let no one adopt this procedure, for they confound the breathings of the worshipper. Wherefore let this libation be offered in silence."

But these sectarian jealousies were not confined to the different schools of the Yajur-veda; the adherents of the Atharva-veda seem to have evinced a similar spirit of hostility towards the followers of the other Vedas. On this subject Professor Weber remarks as follows in his Indische Studien, i. 296: "A good deal of animosity is generally displayed in most of the writings connected with the Atharvan towards the other three Vedas; but the strongest expression is given to this feeling in the first of the Atharva Pariśishṭas (Chambers Coll. No. 112)."

He then proceeds to quote the following passage from that work:

Bahvṛicho hanti vai rāshṭram adhvaryur nāśayet sutān | Chhandogo dhanaṁ nāśayet tasmād Ātharvaṇo guruḥ | Ajnānād vā pramādād vā yasya syād bahvṛicho guruḥ | deśa-rāshṭra-purāmātya-nāśas tasya na saṁśayaḥ | yadi vā 'dhvaryavaṁ rājā niyunakti purohitam | śastrena badhyate kshipram parikshīṇārtha-vāhanaḥ | yathaiva pangur adhvānam apakshī chāṇḍa-bhojanam (chāṇḍa-jo nabhaḥ?)[59] | evaṁ chhandoga-guruṇā rājā vṛiddhiṁ na gachhati | purodhā jalado yasya maudo vā syāt kathanchana | abdād daśabhyo māsebhyo rāshṭra-bhraṁśaṁ sa gachhati |

"A Bahvṛicha (Rig-veda priest) will destroy a kingdom; an Adhvaryu (Yajur-veda priest) will destroy offspring; and a Chhandoga (Sāma-veda priest) will destroy wealth;—hence an Ātharvaṇa priest is the [proper] spiritual adviser. (The king) who, through ignorance or mistake, takes a Bahvṛicha priest for his guide will, without doubt, lose his country, kingdom, cities, and ministers. Or if a king appoints an Adhvaryu priest to be his domestic chaplain, he forfeits his wealth and his chariots, and is speedily slain by the sword. As a lame man makes no progress on a road, and an egg-born creature which is without wings cannot soar into the sky, so no king prospers who has a Chhandoga for his teacher. He who has a Jalada or a Mauda for his priest, loses his kingdom after a year or ten months."

[59] For the ingenious conjectural emendation in brackets, I am indebted to Professor Aufrecht. I adopt it in my translation.

"Thus," continues Professor Weber, "the author of the Pariśishṭa attacks the adherents of certain Śākhās of the Atharva-veda itself, for such are the Jaladas and the Maudas, and admits only a Bhārgava, a Paippalāda, or a Saunaka to be a properly qualified teacher. He further declares that the Atharva-veda is intended only for the highest order of priest, the brahman, not for the three other inferior sorts."

The following passage is then quoted:

Atharvā śrijate ghoram adbhutaṁ śamayet tathā | atharvā rakshate yajnam yajnasya patir Angirāḥ | Divyāntariksha-bhaumānām utpātānām anekadhā | śamayitā brahma-veda-jnas tāsmād dakshiṇato Bhṛiguḥ | Brahmā śamayed nādhvaryur na chhandogo na bahvṛichaḥ | rakshāṁsi rakshati brahmā brahmā tasmād atharva-vit |

"The Atharva priest creates horrors, and he also allays alarming occurrences; he protects the sacrifice, of which Angiras is the lord. He who is skilled in the Brahma-veda (the Atharva) can allay manifold portents, celestial, aërial, and terrestial; wherefore the Bhṛigu [is to be placed] on the right hand. It is the brahman, and not the adhvaryu, the chhandoga, or the bahvṛicha, who can allay [portents]; the brahman wards off Rakshases, wherefore the brahman is he who knows the Atharvan."

I subjoin another extract from Professor Weber's Indische Studien, i. 63 ff., which illustrates the relation of the Sāma-veda to the Rig-veda,[60] as well as the mutual hostility of the different schools: "To understand the relation of the Sāma-veda to the Rig-veda, we have only to form to ourselves a clear and distinct idea of the manner in which these hymns in general arose, how they were then carried to a distance by those tribes which emigrated onward, and how they were by them regarded as sacred, whilst in their original home, they were either—as living in the immediate consciousness of the people—subjected to modifications corresponding to the lapse of time, or made way for new hymns by which they were pushed aside, and so became forgotten. It is a foreign country which first surrounds familiar things with a sacred charm; emigrants continue to occupy their ancient mental position, preserving what is old with painful exactness, while at home life opens out for itself new paths. New emigrants follow those who had first left their home, and unite with those who are already settlers in a new country. And now the old and the new hymns and usages are fused into one mass, and are faithfully, but uncritically, learned and imbibed by travelling pupils from different masters;—several stories in the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka are especially instructive on this point, see Ind. Stud. p. 83;—so that a varied intermixture arises. Others again, more learned, then strive to introduce arrangement, to bring together what is homogeneous, to separate what is distinct; and in this way theological intolerance springs up; without which the rigid formation of a text or a canon is impossible. The influence of courts on this process is not to be overlooked; as, for example, in the case of Janaka, King of Videha, who in Yājnavalkya had found his Homer. Anything approaching to a clear insight into the reciprocal relations of the different schools will in vain be sought either from the Purāṇas or the Charaṇavyūha, and can only be attained by comparing the teachers named in the different Brāhmaṇas and Sūtras, partly with each other and partly with the text of Pāṇini and the gaṇapāṭha and commentary connected therewith (for the correction of which a thorough examination of Patanjali would offer the only sufficient guarantee). For the rest, the relation between the S.V. and the R.V. is in a certain degree analogous to that between the White and the Black Yajush; and, as in the Brāhmaṇa of the former, (the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa), we often find those teachers who are the representatives of the latter, mentioned with contempt, it cannot surprise us, if in the Brāhmaṇa of the Sāma-veda, the Paingins and Kaushītakins are similarly treated."

[60] See the Second Volume of this work, pp. 202 f.

It is sufficiently manifest from the preceding passages of the Purāṇas concerning the division and different Śākhās of the Vedas, that the traditions which they embody contain no information in regard to the composition of the hymns, and nothing tangible or authentic regarding the manner in which they were preserved, collected, or arranged. In fact, I have not adduced these passages for the purpose of elucidating those points, but to show the legendary character of the narratives, and their discrepancies in matters of detail. For an account of the Śākhās of the Vedas, the ancient schools of the Brāhmans, and other matters of a similar nature, I must refer to the excellent work of Professor Müller, the "History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature," pp. 119–132 and 364–388 and elsewhere.

SECT. VII.—Reasonings of the Commentators on the Vedas, in support of the authority of the Vedas.

I proceed now to adduce some extracts from the works of the more systematic authors who have treated of the origin and authority of the Vedas, I mean the commentators on these books themselves, and the authors and expositors of the aphorisms of several of the schools of Hindu philosophy.[61] Whatever we may think of the premises from which these writers set out, or of the conclusions at which they arrive,

[61] Although the authors of the different schools of Hindu philosophy (as we shall see) expressly defend (on grounds which vary according to the principles of the several systems) the authority of the Vedas, they do not consider themselves as at all bound to assert that the different portions of those works are all of equal value: nor do they treat their sacred scriptures as the exclusive sources out of which their own theology or philosophy are to be evolved. On the relation of Indian thinkers generally to the Vedas, I quote some remarks from an article of my own in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society for 1862, pp. 310 f.: "It is evident from some of the hymns of the Veda (see Müller's Hist. of Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 556 ff.) that theological speculation has been practised in India from a very early period. . . . . As, therefore, the religious or mythological systems of India became developed, it was to be expected that they should exhibit numerous variations springing out of the particular genius of different writers; and more especially that, whenever the speculative element predominated in any author, he should give utterance to ideas on the origin of the world, and the nature and action of the Deity or deities, more or less opposed to those commonly received. In the stage here supposed, a fixed and authoritative system of belief or institutions had not yet been constructed, but was only in process of construction, and therefore considerable liberty of individual thought, expression, and action would be allowed; as is, indeed, also shown by the existence of different schools of Brāhmans, not merely attached to one or other of the particular Vedas, but even restricting their allegiance to some particular recension of one of the Vedas. Even after the Brahmanical system had been more firmly established, and its details more minutely prescribed, it is clear that the same strictness was not extended to speculation, but that if a Brāhman was only an observer of the established ceremonial, and an assertor of the privileges of his own order, he might entertain and even profess almost any philosophical opinion which he pleased (Colebrooke, Misc. Ess. i. 379; Müller, Anc. Sansk. Lit. 79). In this way the tradition of free thought was preserved, and speculative principles of every character continued to be maintained and taught without hindrance or scandal. Meanwhile the authority of the Vedas had come to be generally regarded as paramount and divine, but so long as this authority was nominally acknowledged, independent thinkers were permitted to propound a variety of speculative principles, at variance with their general tenor, though perhaps not inconsistent with some isolated we cannot fail to be struck with the contrast which their speculations exhibit to the loose and mystical ideas of the Purāṇas and Upanishads, or to admire the acuteness of their reasoning, the logical precision with which their arguments are presented, and the occasional liveliness and ingenuity of their illustrations.

I.—The first passage which I shall adduce is from Sāyaṇa's introduction to his commentary on the Rig-veda, the Vedārthaprakāśa, pp. 3 ff. (Sāyaṇa, as we have seen in the Second Volume of this work, p. 172, lived in the 14th century, A.D.):

Nanu Vedaḥ eva tāvad nāsti | kutas tad-avāntara-viśeshaḥ ṛigvedaḥ | Tathā hi | ko 'yaṁ vedo nāma | na hi tatra lakshaṇaṁ pramāṇaṁ vā 'sti | nacha tad-ubhaya-vyatirekeṇa kinchid vastu prasidhyati | Lakshaṇa-pramāṇābhyāṁ hi vastu-siddhir iti nyāya-vidāṁ matam | "Pratyakshānumānāgameshu pramāṇa-viśesheshv antimo Vedaḥ iti tallakshaṇam" iti chet | na | Manv-ādi-smṛitishv ativyāpteḥ | Samaya-balena samyak parokshānubhava-sādhanam ity etasya āgama-lakshaṇasya tāsv api sadbhāvāt | "apaurusheyatve sati iti viśeshaṇād adoshaḥ" iti chet | na | Vedasyāpi parameśvara-nirmitatvena paurusheyatvāt | "Śarīra-dhāri-jīva-nirmitatvābhāvād apaurusheyatvam" iti chet | [na] | "Sahasra-śīrshā purushaḥ" ityādi-śrutibhir īśvarasyāpi śarīritvāt | "Karma-phala-rūpa-śarīra-dhāri-jīva-nirmitatvābhāva-mātreṇa apaurusheyatvaṁ vivakshitam" iti chet | na | Jīva-viśeshair Agni-Vāyv-Ādityair vedānām utpāditatvāt | "Ṛigvedaḥ eva Agner ajāyata Yajurvedo Vāyoḥ Sāmavedaḥ Ādityād" iti śruter īśvarasya agny-ādi-prerakatvena nirmātritvaṁ drashṭavyam | "mantra-brāhmaṇātmakaḥ śabda-rāśir vedaḥ" iti chet | na | Īdṛiśo mantraḥ | īdṛiśam brāhmaṇam ity anayor adyāpi anirṇītatvāt | Tasmād nāsti kinchid vedasya lakshaṇam | Nāpi tat-sadbhāve pramāṇaṁ paśyāmaḥ | "'Ṛigvedaṁ bhagavo 'dhyemi Yajurvedaṁ Sāmavedam Ātharvaṇam chaturtham' ityādi vākyaṁ pramāṇaṁ" iti chet | na | tasyāpi vākyasya vedāntaḥpātitvena ātmāśrayatva-prasangāt | Na khalu nipuṇo 'pi svaskandham ārodhuṁ prabhaved iti | "'Vedaḥ eva dvijātīnāṁ niḥśreyasakaraḥ paraḥ' iti ādi smṛiti-vākyaṁ pramāṇam" iti chet | na | tasyāpy ukta-śruti-mūlatvena nirākṛitatvāt | pratyakshādikaṁ śankitum apy ayo-portions of their contents. It was only when the authority of the sacred books was not merely tacitly set aside or undermined, but openly discarded and denied, and the institutions founded on them were abandoned and assailed by the Buddhists, that the orthodox party took the alarm."

gyam | Veda-vishayā loka-prasiddhiḥ sārvajanīnā 'pi "nīlaṁ nabhaḥ" ityādi-vad bhrāntā | Tasmāl lakshaṇa-pramāṇa-rahitasya vedasya sadbhāvo na angīkartuṁ śakyate iti pūrva-pakshaḥ |

Atra uchyate | mantrā-brāhmaṇātmakaṁ tāvad adushṭaṁ lakshaṇam | ata eva Āpastambo yajna-paribhāshāyām evāha "mantra-brāhmaṇayor veda-nāmadheyam" iti | tayos tu rūpam uparishṭhād nirṇeshyate | apaurusheya-vākyatvaṁ iti idam api yādrišam asmābhir vivakshitaṁ tādrišam uttaratra spashṭībhavishyati | pramāṇāny api yathoktāni śruti-smṛiti-loka-prasiddhi-rūpāṇi veda-sadbhāve drashṭavyāni | Yathā ghaṭa-paṭādi-dravyāṇām sva-prakāśatvābhāve 'pi sūrya-chandrādīnāṁ sva-prakāśatvam avirudham tathā manushyādīnāṁ sva-skandhārohāsambhave 'py akuṇṭhita-śakter vedasya itara-vastu-pratipādakatva-vat sva-pratipādakatvam apy astu | Ata eva sampradāya-vido 'kuṇṭhitāṁ śaktim vedasya darśayanti "chodanā hi bhūtam bhavishyantaṁ sūkshmaṁ vyavahitaṁ viprakṛishtam ity evanjātīyam artham śaknoty avagamayitum" iti | Tathā sati veda-mūlāyāḥ smṛites tad-ubhaya-mūlāyāḥ loka-prasiddheś cha prāmāṇyaṁ durvāram | Tasmāl lakshaṇa-pramāṇa-siddho vedo na kenāpi chārvākādinā 'podhuṁ śakyate iti sthitam |

Nanv astu nāma Vedākhyaḥ kaśchit padārthaḥ | tathāpi nāsau vyākhyānam arhati apramāṇatvena anupayuktatvāt | Na hi Vedaḥ pramāṇaṁ tal-lakshaṇasya tatra duḥsampādatvāt | tathā hi "samyag anubhava-sādhanaṁ pramāṇam" iti kechil lakshaṇam āhuḥ | apare tu "anadhigatārtha-gantṛi pramāṇam" ity āchakshate | na chaitad ubhayam vede sambhavati | mantra-brāhmaṇātmako hi vedaḥ | tatra mantrāḥ kechid abodhakāḥ | "amyak sā te Indra ṛishṭir" (R.V. i. 169, 3) ity eko mantraḥ | "Yādṛiśmin dhāyi tam apasyayā vidad" (R.V. v. 44, 8) ity anyaḥ | "Sṛiṇyā iva jarbharī turpharītū" (R.V. x. 106, 6) ity aparaḥ | "Āpānta-manyus tṛipala-prabharmā" (R.V. x. 89, 5) ity-ādayaḥ udāhāryāḥ | na hy etair mantraiḥ kaśchid apy artho 'vabudhyate | eteshv anubhavo eva yadā nāsti tadā tat-samyaktvaṁ tadīya-sādhanatvaṁ cha dūrāpetam | "Adhaḥ svid āsīd" (R.V. x. 129, 5) iti mantrasya bodhakatve 'pi "sthāṇur vā purusho vā" ityādi-vākya-vat sandigdhārtha-bodhakatvād nāsti prāmāṇyam | "Oshadhe trāyasva enam" (Taitt. Sanh. i. 2, 1, 1) iti mantro darbha-vishayaḥ | "Svadhite mā enaṁ hiṁsīr" (Taitt. Sanh. i. 2, 1, 1) iti kshura-vishayaḥ | "Sṛiṇota grāvāṇaḥ" iti pāshāṇa-vishayaḥ | Eteshv achetanāṇāṁ darbha-kshura-pāshāṇānāṁ chetana-vat sambodhanaṁ śrūyate | tato "dvau chandramasāv" iti vākya-vad viparītārtha-bodhakatvād aprāmāṇ-

yam | "Ekaḥ eva Rudro na dvitīyo 'vatasthe" | "sahasrāṇi sahasraśo ye Rudrāḥ adhi bhūmyām"[62] ity anayos tu mantrayor "yāvajjīvam aham maunī" ity vākya-vad vyāghāta-bodhakatvād aprāmāṇyam | "Āpaḥ undantu" (Taitt. Sanh. i. 2, 1, 1) iti mantro yajamānasya kshaura-kāle jalena śiraśaḥ kledanam brūte | "S'ubhike śiraḥ āroha śobhayantī mukham mama" iti mantro vivāha-kāle mangalāchāraṇārtham pushpa-nirmitāyāḥ śubhikāyāḥ vara-badhvoḥ śirasy avasthānam brūte | tayoś cha mantrayor loka-prasiddhārthānuvāditvād anadhigatārtha-grantṛitvam nāsti | tasmād mantra-bhāgo na pramāṇam |

Atra uchyate | "Amyag"-ādi-mantrāṇām artho Yāskena niruktagranthe 'vabodhitaḥ | tat-parichaya-rahitānām anavabodho na mantrānāṁ dosham āvahati | Ata eva atra loka-nyāyam udāharanti "na esha sthāṇor aparādho yad enam andho na paśyati | purushāparādho sambhavati" iti | "Adhaḥ svid āsīd" iti mantraś cha na sandeha-prabodhanāya pravṛittaḥ kiṁtarhi jagat-kāraṇasya para-vastuno 'tigambhīratvaṁ niśchetum eva pravṛittaḥ | tad-artham eva hi guru-śāstra-sampradāya-rahitair durbodhyatvam "adhaḥ svid" ity anayā vacho-bhangyā upanyasyati | Sa eva abhiprāyaḥ uparitaneshu "ko addhā veda" (R.V. x. 129, 6) ity ādimantreshu spashṭīkṛitaḥ | "Oshadhy"-ādi mantreshv api chetanāḥ eva tat-tād-abhimāni-devatās tena tena nāmnā sambodhyante | tāś cha devatāḥ bhagavatā Bādarāyaṇena "abhimāni-vyapadeśas tu" iti sūtre sūtritāḥ | Ekasyāpi Rudrasya sva-mahimnā sahasra-mūrtti-svīkārād nāsti parasparaṁ vyāghātaḥ | Jalādi-dravyeṇa śiraḥ-kledanāder loka-siddhatve 'pi tad-abhimāni-devatānugrahasya aprasiddhatvāt tad-vishayatvena ajnātārtha-jnāpakatvam | tato lakshaṇa-sadbhāvād asti mantra-bhāgasya pramāṇyam |

"But, some will say, there is no such thing as a Veda; how, then, can there be a Rig-veda, forming a particular part of it? For what is this Veda? It has no characteristic sign or evidence; and without these two conditions, nothing can be proved to exist. For logicians hold that 'a thing is established by characteristic signs and by proof.' If you answer that 'of the three kinds of proof, perception, inference, and scripture, the Veda is the last, and that this is its sign;' then the objectors rejoin that this is not true, for this sign extends too far, and includes also Manu's and the other Smṛitis; since there exists in them

[62] The Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, xvi. 53, has, asankhyātā sahasrāṇi ye Rudrāḥ adhi bhūmyām |

also this characteristic of Scripture, viz. that in virtue of common consent it is a perfect instrument for the discovery of what is invisible.' If you proceed, 'the Veda is faultless, in consequence of its characteristic that it has no person (purusha) for its author;'[63] they again reply, 'Not so; for as the Veda likewise was formed by Parameśvara (God), it had a person (purusha) for its author.' If you rejoin, 'It had no person (purusha) for its author, for it was not made by any embodied living being;' [they refuse[64] to admit this] on the ground that, according to such Vedic texts as 'Purusha has a thousand heads,' it is clear that Īśvara (God) also has a body. If you urge that apaurusheyatva ('the having had no personal author') means that it was not composed by a living being endowed with a body which was the result of works;—the opponent denies this also, inasmuch as the Vedas were created by particular living beings—Agni (fire), Vāyu (wind), and Āditya (the sun); for from the text 'the Rig-veda sprang from Agni, the Yajur-veda from Vāyu, and the Sāma-veda from Sūrya,' etc., it will be seen that Īśvara was the maker, by inciting Agni and the others. If you next say that the Veda is a collection of words in the form of Mantras and Brāhmaṇas, the objectors rejoin, 'Not so, for it has never yet been defined that a Mantra is so and so, and a Brāhmaṇa so and so.' There exists, therefore, no characteristic mark of a Veda. Nor do we see any proof that a Veda exists. If you say that the text, 'I peruse, reverend sir, the Rig-veda, the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, and the Ātharvaṇa as the fourth,' is a proof, the antagonist answers, 'No, for as that text is part of the Veda, the latter would be open to the objection of depending upon itself; for no one, be he ever so clever, can mount upon his own shoulders.' If you again urge that such texts of the Smṛiti as this, 'It is the Veda alone which is the source of blessedness to twice-born men, and transcendent,' are proofs, the objector rejoins,' 'Not so; since these too must be rejected, as being founded on the same Veda.' The evidence of the senses and other ordinary sources of knowledge ought not even to be doubted.[65] And common report in reference to the Veda, though universal, is erroneous, like such phrases as 'the blue sky,' etc. Wherefore, as the Veda is destitute of characteristic sign and proof, its existence cannot be admitted. Such is the first side of the question.

[63] Or, the meaning of this may be, "If you urge that, as the Veda has no personal author, there is—in consequence of this peculiar characteristic—no flaw (in the proposed definition), etc."

[64] I have translated this, as if it there had been (which there is not) a negative particle na in the printed text, after the iti chet, as this seems to me to be necessary to the sense. I understand from Prof. Müller that the negative particle is found in some of the MSS. [I am, however, informed by Prof. Goldstücker that na is often omitted, though understood, after iti chet.]

"To this we reply: The definition of the Veda, as a work composed of Mantra and Brāhmaṇa, is unobjectionable. Hence Āpastamba says in the Yajnaparibhāshā, 'the name of Mantra and Brāhmaṇa is Veda.' The nature of these two things will be settled hereafter.[66] The sense we attach to the expression 'consisting of sentences which had no personal author' will also be declared further on. Let the proofs which have been specified of the existence of the Veda, viz. the Veda (itself), the Smṛiti, and common notoriety, be duly weighed. Although jars, cloth, and other such [dark] objects have no inherent property of making themselves visible, it is no absurdity to speak of the sun, moon, and other luminous bodies, as shining by their own light. Just in the same way, though it is impossible for men or any other beings to mount on their own shoulders, let the Veda through the keenness of its power be held to have the power of proving itself, as it has of proving other things.[67] Hence traditionists set forth this penetrating force of the Veda; thus, 'Scripture is able to make known the past, the future, the minute, the distant, the remote.' Such being the case, the authority of the Smṛiti, which is based on the Veda, and that of common notoriety, which is based on both, is irresistible. Wherefore it stands fast that the Veda, which is [65] The drift of this sentence does not seem to me clear. From what immediately follows it would rather appear that the evidence of the senses may be doubted. Can the passage be corrupt?

[66] See the First Volume of this work, pp. 2 ff. and the Second Volume, p. 172.

[67] The same thing had been said before by S'ankāra Achāryya (who lived at the end of the 8th or beginning of the 9th century, A.D. See Colebrooke's Misc. Essays, i. 332), in his commentary on the Brahma Sūtras, ii. 1, 1: Vedasya hi nirapeksham svārthe prāmāṇyaṁ raver iva rūpa-vishaye | purusha-vachasāṁ tu mūlāntarāpekshaṁ svārthe prāmāṇyaṁ vaktṛi-smṛiti-vyavahitaṁ cha iti viprakarshaḥ | "For the Veda has an independent authority in respect of its own sense, as the sun has of manifesting forms. The words of men on the other hand, have, as regards their own sense, an authority which is dependent upon another source [the Veda], and which is separated [from the authority of the Veda] by the fact of its author being remembered. Herein consists the distinction [between the two kinds of authority]."

established by characteristic sign, and by proof, cannot be overturned by the Chārvākas or any other opponents.

"But let it be admitted that there is a thing called a Veda. Still, the opponents say, it does not deserve explanation, being unsuited for it, since it does not constitute proof. The Veda, they urge, is no proof, as it is difficult to show that it has any sign of that character. Now, some define proof as the instrument of perfect apprehension; others say, it is that which arrives at what was not before ascertained. But neither of these definitions can be reasonably applied to the Veda. For the Veda consists of Mantra and Brāhmaṇa. Of these mantras some convey no meaning. Thus one is amyak sā te Indra ṛishtir, etc.; another is yādṛiśmin, etc.; a third is śṛinyā iva, etc. The texts āpāntu-manyuḥ,[68] etc., and others may be adduced as further examples. Now no meaning whatever is to be perceived through these mantras; and when they do not even convey an idea at all, much less can they convey a perfect idea, or be instruments of apprehension. Even if the mantra adhaḥ svid āsīd upari svid āsīd, 'was it below or above?' (R.V. x. 129, 5) convey a meaning, still, like such sayings as 'either a post or a man,' it conveys a dubious meaning, and so possesses no authority. The mantra, 'deliver him, o plant,' has for its subject grass. Another, 'do not hurt him, axe,' has for its subject an axe (kshura). A third, 'hear, stones,' has for its subject stones. In these cases, grass, an axe, and stones, though insensible objects, are addressed in the Veda as if they were intelligent. Hence these passages have no authority, because, like the saying, 'two moons,' their import is absurd. So also the two texts, 'there is one Rudra; no second has existed,' and 'the thousand Rudras who are over the earth,' involving, as they do, a mutual contradiction (just as if one were to say, 'I have been silent all my life'), cannot be authoritative. The mantra āpaḥ undantu expresses the wetting of the sacrificer's head with water at the time of tonsure; while the text 'śubhike,' etc. ('garland, mount on my head and decorate my face') expresses the placing of a garland formed of flowers on the heads of the bridegroom and bride, by way of blessing, at the time of marriage. Now, as these two last texts merely repeat a matter of common notoriety, they cannot be said to attain to what was not before ascertained. Wherefore the Mantra portion of the Veda is destitute of authority.

[68] See Nirukta, v. 12, and vi. 15, and Roth's Illustrations. It is not necessary for my purpose to inquire whether the charge of intelligibility brought against these different texts is just or not.

"To this we reply, the meaning of these texts, 'amyak,' and the others, has been explained by Yāska in the Nirukta.[69] The fact that they are not understood by persons ignorant of that explanation, does not prove any defect in the mantras. It is customary to quote here the popular maxim, 'it is not the fault of the post that the blind man does not see it; the reasonable thing to say is that it is the man's fault.' The mantra 'adhaḥ svid,' etc. ('was it above or below?') (R.V. x. 129, 5) is not intended to convey doubt, but rather to signify the extreme profundity of the supreme Essence, the cause of the world. With this view the author intimates by this turn of expression the difficulty which persons who are not versed in the deep Scriptures have, in comprehending such subjects. The same intention is manifested in the following mantras ko addhā veda, etc. (R.V. x. 129, 6) ('who knows?' etc.) In the texts oshadhe, etc. ('o herb,' etc.), the deities who preside over these various objects are addressed by these several names. These deities are referred to by the venerable Bādarāyaṇa in the aphorism abhimāni-vyapadeśaḥ. As Rudra, though only one, assumes by his power a thousand forms, there is no contradiction between the different texts which relate to him. And though the moistening, etc., of the head by water, etc., is a matter of common notoriety, yet as the good-will of the deities who preside over these objects is not generally known, the texts in question, by having this for their subject, are declaratory of what is unknown. Hence the Mantra portion of the Veda, being shown to have a characteristic mark, is authoritative."

Sāyaṇa then, in p. 11 of his Preface, proceeds to extend his argument to the Brāhmaṇas. These are divisible into two parts, Precepts (vidhi), and Explanatory remarks (arthavāda). Precepts again are either (a) incitements to perform some act in which a man has not yet engaged (apravṛitta-pravarttanam), such as are contained in the ceremonial sections (Karma-kāṇḍa); or (b) revelations of something previously unknown (ajnāta-jnāpanam), such as are found in the portions which treat of sacred knowledge or the supreme spirit (Brahma-kāṇḍa). Both these parts are objected to as unauthoritative. The former is said (1) to enjoin things afterwards declared to be improper; and (2) to prescribe in some texts things which are prohibited in others. Thus in the Aitareya, Taittirīya, and other Brāhmaṇas, many injunctions given in other places are controverted in such phrases as, "This or that must not be regarded;" "This must not be done in that way" (tat tad na ādṛityam | tat tathā na kāryyam).[70] And again prescriptions are given which are mutually contradictory. Another objection is that no result, such as the attainment of paradise, is perceived to follow the celebration of a jyotishṭoma or other sacrifice; whilst satisfaction never fails to be experienced immediately after eating (jyotishṭomādishv apy anushṭhānānantaram eva cha svargādi-phalaṁ na upalabhyate | na hi bhojanānantaraṁ tṛipter anupalambho 'sti |). The answer given to the earlier of these objections is that the discrepant injunctions and prohibitions are respectively applicable to people belonging to different Śākhās or Vedic schools; just as things forbidden to a man in one state of life (āśrama) are permitted to one who is in another. It is thus the difference of persons which gives rise to the apparent opposition between the precepts (tathā jarttilādi-vidhir attra nindyamāno 'pi kvachit śākhāntare bhaved iti chet | bhavatu nāma | prāmāṇyam api tach-chhākhādhyāyinam prati bhavishyati | yathā gṛihasthāśrame nishiddham api parānna-bhojanam āśramāntareshu prāmāṇikaṁ tad-vat | anena nyāyena sarvattra parasparaviruddhau vidhi-nishedhau purusha-bhedena vyavasthāpanīyau yathā mantreshu pāṭha-bhedaḥ |). In the same way, it is remarked, the different Śākhās adopt different readings in the mantras. As regards the objection raised to the authoritativeness of the revelations of things hitherto unknown, which are made in the Brahma-kāṇḍa, that they are mutually contradictory—as when the Aitareyins say, Ātmā vai idam ekaḥ eva agre āsīt, "This was in the beginning soul only;" whilst the Taittirīyakas on the other hand affirm, asad vai idam agre āsīt, "This was in the beginning non-existent;"—the answer is given that it is determined by a particular aphorism (which is quoted)[71] that in the latter passage the word asat does not mean absolute vacuity or nothingness, but merely an [70] Compare the quotation given above, p. 54, from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, iv. 1, 2, 19.

[69] See the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society for 1866, pp. 323, 329, 334, and 337.

[71] Brahma Sūtra, ii. 1, 7, appears to be intended; but the text of it as given by Sāyaṇa does not correspond with that in the Bibliotheca Indica.

undeveloped condition (. . . . iti sūtre Taittirīya-gata-vākyasya asachchhabdasya na śūnya-paratvaṁ kintv avyaktāvasthā-paratvam iti nirṇītam |).[72] Sāyaṇa accordingly concludes (p. 19 of his Preface) that the authority of the whole Veda is proved.

II.—The second passage which I shall quote is from the Vedārtha-prakāśa of Mādhava Āchāryya on the Taittirīya Yajur-veda (p. 1 ff. in the Bibliotheca Indica). Mādhava was the brother of Sāyaṇa,[73] and flourished in the middle of the 14th century (Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. 301):

Nanu ko 'yaṁ vedo nāma ke vā asya vishaya-prayojana-sambandhādhikāriṇaḥ kathaṁ vā tasya prāmāṇyam | na khalv etasmin sarvasminn asati vedo vyākhyāna-yogyo bhavati | Atra uchyate | Ishṭa-prāpty-anishṭa-parihārayor alaukikam upāyaṁ yo grantho vēdayati sa vedaḥ | Alaukika-padena pratyakshānumāne vyāvartyete | Anubhūyamānasya srak-chandana-vanitāder ishṭa-prāpti-hetutvam aushadha-sevāder anishṭa-parihāra-hetutvaṁ cha pratyaksha-siddham | Svenānubhavishyamāṇasya purushāntara-gatasya cha tathātvam anumāna-gamyam | "Evaṁ tarhi bhāvi-janma-gata-sukhādikam anumāna-gamyam" iti chet | na | tad-viśeshasya anavagamāt | Na khalu jyotishṭomādir ishṭa-prāpti-hetuḥ kalanja-bhakshaṇa-varjanādir anishṭa-parihāra-hetur ity amum artham veda-vyatirekeṇa anumāna-sahasreṇāpi tārkika-śiromaṇir apy asyāvagantuṁ śaknoti | Tasmād alaukiko-pāya-bodhako vedaḥ iti lakshaṇasya na ativyāptaṁ | ata evoktam | "Pratyakshenānumityā vā yas tūpāyo na budhyate | Etaṁ vindanti vedena tasmād vedasya vedatā" iti | sa eva vēpāyo vedasya vishayaḥ | tad-bodhaḥ eva prayojanam | tad-bodhārthī cha adhikārī | tena saha upakāryyopakāraka-bhāvaḥ sambandhaḥ | nanu "evaṁ sati strī-śūdra-sahitāḥ sarve vedādhikāriṇaḥ syur 'ishṭam me syād anishṭam mā bhūd' iti āśishaḥ sārvajanīnatvāt" | maivam | strī-śūdrayoḥ saty upāye bodhārthitve hetv-antareṇa vedādhikārasya pratibaddhatvāt | upanītasya eva adhyayanādhikāram

[72] Compare with this the passages quoted from the S'atapatha and Taittirīya Brāhmaṇas in the First Volume of this work, pp. 19 f., 24 f., 27 f., and from the Taitt. Sanh. and Brāh. in pp. 52 and 53; and see also the texts referred to and commented upon in the Journ. of the Roy. As. Soc. for 1864, p. 72, and in the No. for 1865, pp. 345–348.

[73] Whether either of these two brothers, who were ministers of state, were the actual writers of the works which bear their names, or whether the works were composed by Pandits patronized by the two statesmen, and called after the names of their patrons, is a point which I need not attempt to decide.

bruvat śāstram anupanītayoḥ strī-śūdrayor vedādhyayanam anishṭa-prāpti-hetur iti bodhayati | kathaṁ tarhi tayos tad-upāyāvagamaḥ | purāṇādibhir iti brūmaḥ | ata evoktam | "strī-śūdra-dvijabandhūnāṁ trayī na śruti-gocharā | iti Bhāratam ākhyānam muninā kṛipayā kṛitam" (Bhāg. Pur. i. 4, 25) | iti | tasmād upanītair eva traivarṇikair vedasya sambandhaḥ | tat-prāmāṇyaṁ tu bodhakatvāt svataḥ eva siddham | paurusheya-vākyaṁ tu bodhakam api sat purusha-gata-bhrānti-mūlatva-sambhāvanayā tat-parihārāya mūla-pramāṇaṁ apekshate na tu vedaḥ | tasya nityatvena vaktṛi-dosha-śaṅkānudayāt | . . .'. Nanu vedo 'pi Kālidāsādi-vākya-vat paurusheyaḥ eva Brahma-kāryyatva-śravaṇāt | "ṛichaḥ sāmāni jajnire | chhandāṁsi jajnire tasmād yajus tasmād ajāyata" iti śruteḥ | ata eva Bādarāyaṇaḥ (i. 1, 3) "śāstra-yonitvād" iti sūtreṇa Brahmaṇo veda-kāraṇatvam avochat | maivam | śruti-smṛitibhyāṁ nityatvāvagamāt | "vāchā Virūpa nityayā" (R.V. viii. 64, 6) iti śruteḥ | "anādinidhanā nityā vāg utsṛishṭā svayambhuvā" iti smṛiteś cha | Bādarāyaṇo 'pi devatādhikaraṇe sūtrayāmāsa (i. 3, 29) "ata eva cha nityatvam" iti | tarhi "paraspara-virodhaḥ" iti chet | na | nityatvasya vyāvahārikatvāt | sṛishṭer ūrdhvaṁ saṁhārāt pūrvam vyavahāra-kālas tasmin utpatti-vināśādarśanāt | kālākāśādayo yathā nityāḥ evaṁ vedo 'pi vyavahāra-kāle Kālidāsādi-vākya-vat purusha-virachitatvābhāvād nityaḥ | ādisṛishṭau tu kālākāśādi-vad eva Brahmaṇaḥ sakāśād vedotpattir āmnāyate | ato vishaya-bhedād na paraspara-virodhaḥ | Brahmaṇo nirdoshatvena vedasya vaktṛi-doshābhāvāt svatas-siddham prāmāṇyaṁ tad-avastham | tasmāl lakshaṇa-pramāṇa-sadbhāvād vishaya-prayojana-sambandhādhikāri-sadbhāvāt prāmāṇyasya susthatvāch cha vedo vyākhyātavyaḥ eva |

"Now, some may ask, what is this Veda, or what are its subject-matter, its use, its connection, or the persons who are competent to study it? and how is it authoritative? For, in the absence of all these conditions, the Veda does not deserve to be expounded. I reply: the book which makes known (vedayati) the supernatural (lit. non-secular) means of obtaining desirable objects, and getting rid of undesirable objects, is the Veda. By the employment of the word "supernatural," [the ordinary means of information, viz.] perception and inference are excluded. By perception it is established that such objects of sense, as garlands, sandal-wood, and women are causes of gratification, and that the use of medicines and so forth is the means of getting rid of what is undesirable. And we ascertain by inference that we shall in future experience, and that other men now experience, the same results (from these same causes). If it be asked whether, then, the happiness, etc., of a future birth be not in the same way ascertainable by inference, I reply that it is not, because we cannot discover its specific character. Not even the most brilliant ornament of the logical school could, by a thousand inferences, without the help of the Vedas, discover the truths that the jyotishṭoma and other sacrifices are the means of attaining happiness, and that abstinence from intoxicating drugs[74] is the means of removing what is undesirable. Thus it is not too wide a definition of the Veda to say that it is that which indicates supernatural expedients. Hence, it has been said, 'men discover by the Veda those expedients which cannot be ascertained by perception or inference; and this is the characteristic feature of the Veda.' These expedients, then, form the subject of the Veda; [to teach] the knowledge of them is its use; the person who seeks that knowledge is the competent student; and the connection of the Veda with such a student is that of a benefactor with the individual who is to be benefitted.

"But, if such be the case, it may be said that all persons whatever, including women and Śūdras, must be competent students of the Veda, since the aspiration after good and the deprecation of evil are common to the whole of mankind. But it is not so. For though the expedient exists, and women and Śūdras are desirous to know it, they are debarred by another cause from being competent students of the Veda. The scripture (śāstra) which declares that those persons only who have been invested with the sacrificial cord are competent to read the Veda, intimates thereby that the same study would be a cause of unhappiness to women and Śūdras [who are not so invested]. How, then, are these two classes of persons to discover the means of future happiness? We answer, from the Purāṇas and other such works. Hence it has been said, 'since the triple Veda may not be heard by women, Śūdras, and degraded twice-born men, the Mahābhārata was, in his benevolence, composed by the Muni.'[75] The Veda, therefore, has only a relation to men of the three superior classes who have obtained investiture.

[74] Kalanja-bhakshaṇam is mentioned in the Commentary on the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, x. 33, 28. In his translation of the Kusumānjali, p. 81, note, Professor Cowell says: "Some hold the Kalanja to be the flesh of a deer killed by a poisoned arrow—others hemp or bhang,—others a kind of garlic. See Raghunandana's Ekādaśī tattva."

"Then the authority of the Veda is self-evident, from the fact of its communicating knowledge. For though the words of men also communicate knowledge, still, as they must be conceived to participate in the fallibility of their authors, they require some primary authority to remedy that fallibility. But such is not the case with the Veda; for as that had no beginning, it is impossible to suspect any defect in the utterer. . . .

"A doubt may, however, be raised whether the Veda is not, like the sentences of Kālidāsa and others, derived from a personal being,[76] as it proclaims itself to have been formed by Brahmā, according to the text, 'the Rich and Sāman verses, the metres, sprang from him; from him the Yajush was produced;'[77] in consequence of which Bādarāyaṇa, in the aphorism[78] 'since he is the source of the śāstra,' has pronounced that Brahma is the cause of the Veda. But this doubt is groundless; for the eternity of the Veda has been declared both by itself, in the text, 'with an eternal voice, o Virūpa,'[79] and by the Smṛiti in the verse 'an eternal voice, without beginning or end, was uttered by the Self-existent.'[80] Bādarāyaṇa, too, in his section on the deities (Brahma Sūtras, i. 3, 29) has this aphorism; 'hence also [its] eternity [is to be maintained].' If it be objected that these statements of his are mutually conflicting, I answer, No. For [in the passages where] the word eternity is applied to the Vedas, it is to be understood as referring to the period of action [or mundane existence]. This period is that which commences with the creation, and lasts till the destruction of the universe, since, during this interval, no worlds are seen to [75] See the quotation from the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, above, p. 42.

[76] This seems to be the only way to translate paurusheya, as purusha cannot here mean a human being.

[77] R.V. x. 90, 9, quoted in the First Volume of this work, p. 10; and p. 3, above.

[78] Brahma Sūtras, i. 1, 3, p. 7 of Dr. Ballantyne's Aphorisms of the Vedānta.

[79] These words are part of Rig-veda, viii. 64, 6: Tasmai nūnam abhidyave vāchā Virūpa nityayā | vṛishṇe chodasva sushṭutim | "Send forth praises to this heaven-aspiring and prolific Agni, o Virūpa, with an unceasing voice [or hymn]." The word nityayā seems to mean nothing more than "continual," though in the text I have rendered it "eternal," as the author's reasoning requires. Colebrooke (Misc. Ess. i. 306), however, translates it by "perpetual." I shall again quote and illustrate this verse further on.

[80] This line, from the M.Bh. S'āntip. 8533, has already been cited above, in p. 16.

originate, or to be destroyed. Just as time and æther (space) are eternal,[81] so also is the Veda eternal, because, during the period of mundane existence, it has not been composed by any person, as the works of Kālidāsa and others have been.[82] Nevertheless, the Veda, like time and æther, is recorded in Scripture to have originated from Brahma at the first creation. There is, therefore, no discrepancy between the two different sets of passages, as they refer to different points. And since Brahma is free from defect, the utterer of the Veda is consequently free from defect; and therefore a self-demonstrated authority resides in it. Seeing, therefore, that the Veda possess a characteristic mark, and is supported by proof, and that it has a subject, a use, a relation, and persons competent for its study, and, moreover, that its authority is established, it follows that it ought to be interpreted."

Sect. VIII.—Arguments of the Mīmānsakas and Vedāntins in support of the eternity and authority of the Vedas.

I shall now proceed to adduce some of the reasonings by which the authors of the Pūrva Mīmānsā, and Vedānta, aphorisms, and their commentators, defend the doctrine which, as we have already seen, is held by some of the Indian writers, that the Vedas are eternal, as well as infallible.

I.—Pūrva Mīmānsā.—I quote the following texts of the Pūrva Mīmānsā which relate to this subject from Dr. Ballantyne's aphorisms of the Mīmānsā, pp. 8 ff.[83] I do not always follow the words of Dr. Ballantyne's translations, though I have made free use of their substance. (See also Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. 306, or p. 195 of Williams and Norgate's ed.) The commentator introduces the subject in the following way:

[81] Passages affirming both the eternity of the æther, and its creation, are given in the First Volume of this work, pp. 130 and 506.

[82] The same subject is touched on by Sāyaṇa, at p. 20 of the introductory portion of his commentary on the Rigveda. The passage will be quoted at the end of the next section."

[83] Since the 1st edition of this Volume was published, the Sanskrit scholar has obtained easy access to a more considerable portion of the Mīmānsā Sūtras with the commentary of S'abara Svāmin by the appearance of the first, second, and part of third, Adhyāyas in the Bibliotheca Indica.

S'abdārthayor utpatty-anantaram purusheṇa kalpita-sanketātmaka-sambandhasya kalpitatvāt purusha-kalpita-sambandha-jñānāpekshitvāt sabdāsya yathā pratyaksha-jñānaṁ śuktikādau satyatvam vyabhicharati tathā purushādhīnatvena śabde 'pi satyatva-vyabhichāra-sambhavāt na dharme chodanā pramāṇam iti pūrva-pakshe siddhāntam āha |

"Since, subsequently to the production of words and the things signified by them, a connection of a conventional character has been established between the two by the will of man, and since language is dependent upon a knowledge of this conventional connection determined by man, [it follows that] as perception is liable to error in respect of mother-of-pearl and similar objects [by mistaking them for silver, etc.], so words also may be exposed to the risk of conveying unreal notions from [their sense] being dependent on human will; and consequently that the Vedic precepts [which are expressed in such words, possessing a merely conventional and arbitrary meaning] cannot be authoritative in matters of duty. Such is an objection which may be urged, and in reply to which the author of the aphorisms declares the established doctrine."

Then follows the fifth aphorism of the first chapter of the first book of the Mīmānsā: Autpattikas tu[a] śabdasya[b] arthena sambandhas[c] tasya[d] jñānam[e] upadeśo[f] 'vyatirekaś cha[g] arthe 'nupalabdhe[h] tat[i] pramāṇam Bādarāyaṇasya anapekshatvāt | which may be paraphrased as follows: "The connection of a word with its sense is coeval with the origin of both. In consequence of this connection the words of the Veda convey a knowledge of duty, and impart unerring instruction in regard to matters imperceptible. Such Vedic injunctions constitute the proof of duty alleged by Bādarāyaṇa, author of the Vedānta Sūtras; for this proof is independent of perception and all other evidence."

I subjoin most of the remarks of the scholiast as given by Dr. Ballantyne, indicating by letters the words of the aphorism to which they refer:

[a] Autpattikaḥ | svābhāvikaḥ | nityaḥ iti yāvat | "Autpattika (original) means natural, eternal in short."

[b] S'abdasya | nitya-veda-ghaṭaka-padasya "agnihotraṁ juhuyāt svargakāmaḥ" ityādeḥ | "S'abda (word) refers to terms which form part of the eternal Veda, such as,' 'the man who desires heaven should perform the Agnihotra sacrifice.' "

(c) Sambandha (connection), "in the nature of power," i.e. according to Dr. Ballantyne, depending on the divine will that such and such words should convey such and such meanings.

(d) Atas tasya | dharmasya | "'Hence' is to be supplied before 'this,' which refers to 'duty.'"

(e) Jnānam | atra karane lyuṭ | jnapter yathārtha-jnānasya karaṇam | "In the word jnāna (knowledge) the affix lyuṭ has the force of 'instrument,' 'an instrument of correct knowledge.'"

(f) Upadeśaḥ | artha pratipādanam | "Instruction, i.e. the establishment of a fact."

(g) Avyatirekaḥ | avyabhichārī dṛiśyate ataḥ | "'Unerring,' i.e. that which is seen not to deviate from the fact."

(h) Nanu "vahnimān iti śabda-śravaṇānantaram pratyakshena vahniṁ dṛishṭvā śabde pramātvaṁ gṛihṇāti iti loke prasiddheḥ pratyakshādītara-pramāṇa-sāpekshatvāt śabdasya sa kathaṁ dharme pramāṇam ata āha "anupalabdhe" iti | anupalabdhe pratyakshādi-pramāṇair ajnāte'rthe | "Since it is a matter of notoriety that any one who has heard the words '[the mountain is] fiery' uttered, and afterwards sees the fire with his own eyes, is [only] then [thoroughly] convinced of the authority of the words, it may be asked how words which are thus dependent [for confirmation on] perception and other proofs, can themselves constitute the proof of duty? In reference to this, the word anupalabdhe ('in regard to matters imperceptible') is introduced. It signifies 'matters which cannot be known by perception and other such proofs.'"

(i) Tat | vidhi-ghaṭita-vākyaṁ dharme pramāṇam Bādarāyaṇāchāryasya sammatam | ayam āśayaḥ | 'parvato vahnimān' iti doshavat-purusha-prayuktam vākyam arthaṁ vyabhicharati | ataḥ prāmāṇya-niśchaye pratyakshādikam apekshate | tathā 'gnihotraṁ juhoti iti vākyam kāla-traye 'py arthaṁ na vyabhicharati | ata itara-nirapekshaṁ dharme pramāṇam | "This, i.e. a [Vedic] sentence consisting of an injunction, is regarded by Bādarāyaṇa also as proof of duty. The purport is this. The sentence, 'the mountain is fiery,' when uttered by a person defective [in his organ of vision], may deviate from the reality; it therefore requires the evidence of our senses, etc.' to aid us in determining its sufficiency as proof. Whereas the Vedic sentence regarding the performance of the Agnihotra sacrifice can never deviate from the truth in any time, past, present, or future; and is therefore a proof of duty, independently of any other evidence."

The commentator then proceeds to observe as follows: Pūrva-sūtre śabdārthayos sambandho nityaḥ ity uktam | tach cha śabda-nityatvādhīnam iti tat sisādhayishur ādau śabdānityatva-vādi-matam pūrva-paksham upādayati | "In the preceding aphorism it was declared that the connection of words and their meanings [or the things signified by them] is eternal. Desiring now to prove that this [eternity of connection] is dependent on the eternity of words [or sound], he begins by setting forth the first side of the question, viz. the doctrine of those who maintain that sound is not eternal."

This doctrine is accordingly declared in the six following aphorisms (sūtras), which I shall quote and paraphrase, without citing, in the original, the accompanying comments. These the reader will find in Dr. Ballantyne's work.

Sūtra 6.—Karma eke tatra darśanāt | "Some, i.e. the followers of the Nyāya philosophy, say that sound is a product, because we see that it is the result of effort, which it would not be if it were eternal."

Sūtra 7.—Asthānāt | "That it is not eternal, on account of its transitoriness, i.e. because after a moment it ceases to be perceived."

Sūtra 8.—Karoti-śabdāt | "Because, we employ in reference to it the expression 'making,' i.e. we speak of 'making' a sound."

Sūtra 9.—Sattvāntare yaugapadyāt | "Because it is perceived by different persons at once, and is consequently in immediate contact with the organs of sense of those both far and near, which it could not be if it were one and eternal."

Sūtra 10.—Prakṛiti-vikṛityoś cha | "Because sounds have both an original and a modified form; as e.g. in the case of dadhi atra, which is changed into dadhy atra, the original letter i being altered into y by the rules of permutation. Now, no substance which undergoes a change is eternal."

Sūtra 11.—Vṛiddhiś cha kartṛi-bhūmnā 'sya | "Because sound is augmented by the number of those who make it. Consequently the opinion of the Mīmānsakas, who say that sound is merely manifested, and not created, by human effort, is wrong, since even a thousand manifesters do not increase the object which they manifest, as a jar is not made larger by a thousand lamps."

These objections against the Mīmānsaka theory that sound is manifested, and not created, by those who utter it, are answered in the following Sūtras:

Sūtra 12.—Samañ tu tatra darśanam | "But, according to both schools, viz. that which holds sound to be created, and that which regards it as merely manifested, the perception of it is alike momentary. But of these two views, the theory of manifestation is shown in the next aphorism to be the correct one."

Sūtra 13.—Sataḥ param adarśanañ vishayānāgamāt | "The non-perception at any particular time, of sound, which, in reality, perpetually exists, arises from the fact that the utterer of sound has not come into contact with his object, i.e. sound. Sound is eternal, because we recognise the letter k, for instance, to be the same sound which we have always heard, and because it is the simplest method of accounting for the phenomenon to suppose that it is the same. The still atmosphere which interferes with the perception of sound, is removed by the conjunctions and disjunctions of air issuing from a speaker's mouth, and thus sound (which always exists, though unperceived) becomes perceptible.[84] This is the reply to the objection of its 'transitoriness' (Sūtra 7)."

An answer to Sūtra 8 is given in

Sūtra 14.—Prayogasya param | "The word 'making' sounds, merely means employing or uttering them."

The objection made in Sūtra 9 is answered in

Sūtra 15.—Āditya-vad yaugapadyam | "One sound is simultaneously heard by different persons, just as one sun is seen by them at one and the same time. Sound, like the sun, is a vast, and not a minute object, and thus may be perceptible by different persons, though remote from one another."

An answer to Sūtra 10 is contained in

Sūtra 16.—Varṇāntaram 'avikāraḥ | "The letter y, which is substituted for i in the instance referred to under Sūtra 10, is not a modification of i, but a distinct letter. Consequently sound is not modified."

The 11th Sūtra is answered in

Sūtra 17.—Nāda-vṛiddhiḥ parā[85] | "It is an increase of 'noise,' not [84] "Sound is unobserved, though existent, if it reach not the object (vibrations of air emitted from the mouth of the speaker proceed and manifest sound by their appulse to air at rest in the space bounded by the hollow of the ear; for want of such appulse, sound, though existent, is unapprehended)."—Colebrooke, i. 306.

[85] The text as given in the Bibliotheca Indica has nāda-vṛiddhi-parā.

of sound, that is occasioned by a multitude of speakers. The word 'noise' refers to the 'conjunctions and disjunctions of the air' (mentioned under Sūtra 13) which enter simultaneously into the hearer's ear from different quarters; and it is of these that an increase takes place."

The next following Sūtras state the reasons which support the Mīmānsaka view:

Sūtra 18.—Nityas tu syād darśanasya parārthatvāt | "Sound must be eternal, because its utterance is fitted to convey a meaning to other persons. If it were not eternal [or abiding], it would not continue till the hearer had learned its sense, and thus he would not learn the sense, because the cause had ceased to exist."

Sūtra 19.—Sarvatra yaugapadyāt | "Sound is eternal, because it is in every case correctly and uniformly recognized by many persons simultaneously; and it is inconceivable that they should all at once fall into a mistake."

When the word go (cow) has been repeated ten times, the hearers will say that the word go has been ten times pronounced, not that ten words having the sound of go have been uttered; and this fact also is adduced as a proof of the eternity of sound in

Sūtra 20.—Sankhyābhāvāt | "Because each sound is not numerically different from itself repeated."

Sūtra 21.—Anapekshatvāt | "Sound is eternal, because we have no ground for anticipating its destruction."

"But it may be urged that sound is a modification of air, since it arises from its conjunctions (see Sūtra 17), and because the Śikshā (or Vedānga treating of pronunciation) says that 'air arrives at the condition of sound;' and as it is thus produced from air, it cannot be eternal." A reply to this difficulty is given in

Sūtra 22.—Prakhyābhāvāch cha yogyasya | "Sound is not a modification of air, because, if it were, the organ of hearing would have no appropriate object which it could perceive. No modification of air (held by the Naiyāyikas to be tangible) could be perceived by the organ of hearing, which deals only with intangible sound."

Sūtra 23.—Linga-darśanāch cha | "And the eternity of sound is established by the argument discoverable in the Vedic text, 'with an eternal voice, o Virūpa.'" (See above, p. 69.) Now, though this sentence had another object in view, it, nevertheless, declares the eternity of language, and hence sound is eternal."

"But though words, as well as the connection of word and sense, be eternal, it may be objected—as in the following aphorism—that a command conveyed in the form of a sentence is no proof of duty."

Sūtra 24.—Utpattau vā rachanāḥ syur arthasya a-tan-nimittatvāt | "Though there be a natural connection between words and their meanings, the connection between sentences and their meanings is a factitious one, established by human will, from these meanings (of the sentences) not arising out of the meanings of the words. The connection of sentences with their meanings is not (like the connection of words with their meanings) one derived from inherent power (see Sūtra 5, remark (c), above, p. 72), but one devised by men; how, then, can this connection afford a sufficient authority for duty?"

An answer to this is given in

Sūtra 25.—Tad-bhūtānāṁ kriyārthena samāmnāyo 'rthasya tan-nimittatvāt | "The various terms which occur in every Vedic precept are accompanied by a verb; and hence a perception (such as we had not before) of the sense of a sentence is derived from a collection of words containing a verb. A precept is not comprehended unless the individual words which make it up are understood; and the comprehension of the meaning of a sentence is nothing else than the comprehension of the exact mutual relation of the meanings arising out of each word."

Sūtra 26.—Loke sanniyamāt prayoga-sannikarshaḥ syāt | "As in secular language the application of words is known, so also in the Veda they convey an understood sense, which has been handed down by tradition."

The author now proceeds in the next following Sūtras to state and to obviate certain objections raised to his dogmas of the eternity and authority of the Vedas.

Sūtra 27.—Vedāṁś cha eke sannikarsham purushākhyāḥ | "Some (the followers of the Nyāya) declare the Vedas to be of recent origin, i.e. not eternal, because the names of men are applied to certain parts of them, as the Kāṭhaka and Kauthuma."

This Sūtra, with some of those which follow, is quoted in Sāyaṇa's commentary on the R.V. vol. i. pp. 19 and 20. His explanation of the present Sūtra is as follows:

Yathā Raghuvaṁśādayaḥ idānīntanās tathā vedāḥ api | na tu vedāḥ anādayaḥ | ataḥ eva veda-kartṛitvena purushāḥ ākhyāyante | Vaiyāsikam

Bhāratañ Vālmīkīyañ Rāmāyaṇam ity atra yathā Bhāratādi-kartṛitvena Vyāsādayaḥ ākhyāyante tathā Kāṭhakañ Kauthumañ Taittirīyakam ity evañ tat-tad-vedā-śākhā-karttṛitvena Kaṭhādīnām ākhyātatvāt paurusheyāḥ | Nanu nityānām eva vedānām upādhyāya-vat sampradāya-pravarttakatvena Kāṭhakādi-sāmākhyā syād ity āśankya yukty-antaraṁ sūtrayati | . . . .kā tarhi Kāṭhakādy-ākhyāyikāyāḥ gatir ity āśankya sampradāya-pravarttanāt sā iyam upapadyate |

"Some say, that as the Raghuvañśa, etc., are modern, so also are the Vedas, and that the Vedas are not eternal. Accordingly, certain men are named as the authors of the Vedas. Just as in the case of the Mahābhārata, which is called Vaiyāsika (composed by Vyāsa), and the Rāmāyaṇa, which is called Vālmīkīya (composed by Vālmīki), Vyāsa and Vālmīki are indicated as the authors of these poems; so, too, Kaṭha, Kuthumi, and Tittiri are shown to be the authors of those particular Śākhās of the Vedas which bear their names, viz. the Kāṭhaka, Kauthuma, and Taittirīya; and consequently those parts of the Vedas are of human composition. After suggesting that the Vedas, though eternal, have received the name of Kāṭhaka, etc., because Kaṭha and others, as teachers, handed them down; he adduces another objection in the next Sūtra."

The explanation here indicated is accepted a little further on, in the remarks on one of the following Sūtras: "What, then, is the fact in reference to the appellations Kāṭhaka, etc.? It is proved to have arisen from the circumstance that Kaṭha, etc., handed down the Vedas." I proceed to

Sūtra 28.—Anitya-darśanāch cha | "It is also objected that the Vedas cannot be eternal, because we observe that persons, who are not eternal, but subject to birth and death, are mentioned in them. Thus it is said in the Veda 'Babara Prāvahaṇi desired,' 'Kusuruvinda Auddālaki desired.' Now, as the sentences of the Veda, in which they are mentioned, could not have existed before these persons were born, it is clear that these sentences had a beginning, and being thus non-eternal, they are proved to be of human composition" ('Babaraḥ Prāvahaṇir akāmayata' 'Kusuruvindaḥ Auddālakir akāmayata' ityādi (vākyānāṁ?) vedeshu darśanāt teshāṁ jananāt prāg imāni vākyāni nāsann iti sāditvād anityatvam paurusheyatvañ cha siddham).

These objections are answered in the following aphorisms:

Sūtra 29.—Uktaṁ tu śabda-pūrvatvam | "But the priority—eternity—of sound has been declared, and, by consequence, the eternity of the Veda."

Sūtra 30.—Ākhyā pravachanāt | "The names, derived from those of particular men, attached to certain parts of the Vedas, were given on account of their studying these particular parts. Thus the portion read by Kaṭha was called Kāṭhaka, etc."

Sūtra 31.—Paranlu śruti-sāmānya-mātram | "And names occurring in the Veda, which appear to be those of men, are appellations common to other beings besides men."

"Thus the words Babara Prāvahaṇi are not the names of a man, but have another meaning. For the particle pra denotes 'pre-eminence,' vahana means 'the motion of sound,' and the letter i represents the agent; consequently the word prāvahaṇi signifies that 'which moves swiftly,' and is applied to the wind, which is eternal. Babara again is a word imitating the sound of the wind. Thus there is not even a semblance of error in the assertion that the Veda is eternal" (Yadyapi Babaraḥ Prāvahaṇir ity asti parantu śrutiḥ prāvahaṇy ādi-śabdaḥ sāmānyam | anyārthasyāpi vāchakam | tathā hi | "pra" ity asya utkarshāśrayaḥ | "vahanaḥ" śabdasya gatiḥ | i-kāraḥ karttā | tathā cha utkṛishṭa-gaty-āśrayo vāyu-paraḥ | sa cha anādiḥ | Babaraḥ iti vāyu-śabdānukaraṇam | iti na anupapatti-gandho 'pi |).

Before proceeding to the 32nd Sūtra, I shall quote some further illustrations of the 31st, which are to be found in certain passages of the Introduction to Sāyaṇa's Commentary on the Rig-veda, where he is explaining another section of the Mīmānsā Sūtras (i. 2, 39 ff.). The passages are as follows (p. 7):

Anitya-saṁyogad mantrāṇārthakyam | "kiṁ te kṛiṇvanti Kīkaṭeshv" iti mantre Kīkaṭo nāma janapadaḥ āmnātaḥ | Tathā Naichaśākhaṁ nāma nagaram Pramagando nāma rājā ity ete 'rthāḥ anityāḥ āmnātāḥ | Tathā cha sati prāk Pramagandād na ayam mantro bhūta-pūrvaḥ iti gamyate | And in p. 10: Yad apy uktam Pramagandādy-anityārthā-saṁyogād mantrasya anāditvaṁ na syād iti tatrottaram sūtrayati | "Uktaś chānitya-saṁyogaḥ" iti | prathama-pādasya antimādhikaraṇe so 'yam anitya-saṁyoga-doshaḥ uktaḥ parihṛitaḥ | Tathā hi | tatra pūrva-pakshe Vedānām paurusheyatvaṁ vaktuṁ Kāṭhakaṁ Kālāpakam ity-ādi-purusha-sambandhābhidhānaṁ hetūkṛitya "anitya-darśanāch cha" iti hetv-antaraṁ

sūtritam | "Babaraḥ prāvāhaṇir akāmayata" ity anityānām Babarādīnām arthānāṁ darśanāt tataḥ pūrvam asattvāt paurusheyo vedaḥ iti tasya uttaraṁ sūtritam "paraṁ tu śruti-sāmānya-mātram" iti | tasya ayam arthaḥ | yat Kāṭhakādi-samākhyānaṁ tat pravachana-nimittam | yat tu param Babarādy-anitya-darśanaṁ tat śabda-sāmānya-mātraṁ na tu tatra Babarākhyaḥ kaśchit purushō vivakshitaḥ | kintu "babara" iti śabdaṁ kurvan vāyur abhidhīyate | sa cha prāvāhaṇiḥ | prakarsheṇa vahana-śīlaḥ | Evam anyatrāpy ūhanīyam |

"It is objected that the mantras are useless, because they are connected with temporal objects. Thus in the text, 'what are thy cows doing among the Kīkaṭas?'[86] a country called Kīkaṭa is mentioned, as well as a city named Naichaśākha, and a king called Pramaganda, all of them non-eternal objects. Such being the case, it is clear that this text did not exist before Pramaganda." The answer to this is given in p. 10: To the further objection that the mantras cannot be eternal, because such temporal objects as Pramaganda, etc., are referred to in them, an answer is given in the following Sūtra: 'The connection with non-eternal objects has been already explained.' In the last section of the first chapter, this very objection of the hymns being connected with non-eternal things has been stated and obviated (see above, Sūtras 28–31). For in the statement of objections, after it has first been suggested as a proof of the human origin of the Vedas, that they bear names, Kāṭhaka, Kālāpaka, etc., denoting their relation to men, a further difficulty is stated in a Sūtra, viz., that 'it is noticed that non-eternal objects are mentioned in the Vedas;' as, for example, where it is said that 'Babara Prāvāhaṇi desired.' Now, as it specifies non-eternal objects of this kind, the Veda, which could not have existed before those objects, must be of human composition. The answer to this is given in the aphorism, 'any further names are to be understood as common to other things.' The meaning is this: the names Kāṭhaka, etc., are given to the Vedas because they are expounded by Kaṭha, etc.; and the further difficulty arising from the names of Babara and other objects supposed to be non-eternal, is removed by such names being common to other objects [which are eternal in their nature]. No persons called Babara, etc., are intended by those names, but the wind, which makes the sound babara, is so designated. And prāvāhaṇi refers to the same object, as it means that which carries swiftly. The same method of explanation is to be applied in other similar cases."

[86] See the First Volume of this work, p. 342, and the Second Volume, p. 362.

I proceed to the 32nd Sūtra. It is asked how the Veda can constitute proof of duty when it contains such incoherent nonsense as the following: "An old ox, in blanket and slippers, is standing at the door and singing benedictions. A Brāhman female, desirous of offspring, asks, 'Pray, o king, what is the meaning of intercourse on the day of the new moon?' or the following: 'the cows celebrated this sacrifice'" (Nanu "Jaradgavo kambāla-pādukābhyāṁ dvāri sthito gāyati mangalāni[87] | tam brāhmaṇī pṛichhati puttra-kāmā rājann amāyāṁ labhanasya ko'rthaḥ" | iti | "gāvo vai etat sattram āsata" ity-ādīnām asambaddha-pralāpānāṁ vede sattvāt kathaṁ sa dharme pramāṇam). A reply is contained in

Sūtra 32.—Kṛite vā viniyogaḥ syāt karmaṇaḥ sambandhāt | "The passages to which objection is taken may be applicable to the duty to be performed, from the relation in which they stand to the ceremony" (as eulogistic of it).

As a different reading and interpretation of this Sūtra are given by Sāyaṇa in his commentary, p. 20, I shall quote it, and the remarks with which he introduces and follows it:

Nanu vede kvachid evaṁ śrūyate "vanaspatayaḥ satram āsata sarpāḥ satram āsata" iti | tatra vanaspatīnām achetanatvāt sarpāṇāṁ chetanatve 'pi vidyā-rahitatvād na tad-anushṭhānaṁ sambhavati | Ato "Jaradgavo gāyati madrakāṇi" ityādy-unmatta-bāla-vākya-sadṛiśatvāt kenachit kṛito vedaḥ ity āśankya uttaraṁ sūtrayati | "Kṛite cha aviniyogaḥ syāt karmaṇaḥ samatvāt" | Yadi jyotishṭomādi-vākyaṁ kenachit purusheṇa kriyeta tadānīṁ kṛite tasmin vākye svarga-sādhanatve jyotishṭomasya viniyogaḥ na syāt | sādhya-sādhana-bhāvasya purusheṇa jnātum aśakyatvāt | śrūyate tu viniyogaḥ | "jyotishṭomena svarga-kāmo yajeta" iti | na cha etat unmatta-vākya-sadriśaṁ laukika-vidhi-vākya-vad bhāvya-karaṇeti-kartavyatā-rūpais tribhir aṁśair upetāyāḥ bhāvanāyāḥ avagamāt | loke hi "brāhmaṇān bhojayed" iti vidhau kiṁ kena kathaṁ ity ākāṅkshāyāṁ

[87] In his commentary on the following aphorism Śabara Svāmin gives only a part of this quotation, consisting of the words Jaradgavo gāyati mattakāni, "An old ox sings senseless words;" and adds the remark: kathaṁ nāma jaradgavo gāyet, "How, now, can an old ox sing?" We must not therefore with the late Dr. Ballantyne take jaradgava for a proper name.

tṛiptim uddiśya odanena dravyeṇa śāka-sūpādi-pariveshaṇa-prakāreṇa iti yathā uchyate jyotishṭoma-vidhāv api svargam uddiśya somena dravyeṇa dīkshaṇīyādy-aṅgopakāra-prakāreṇa ity ukte katham unmatta-vākya-sadṛiśam bhaved iti | vanaspaty-ādi-satra-vākyam api na tat-sadṛiśaṁ tasya satra-karmaṇo jyotishṭomādinā samatvāt | yat-paro hi śabdaḥ sa śabdārthaḥ iti nyāya-vidaḥ āhuḥ | jyotishṭomādi-vākyasya vidhāyakatvād anushṭhāne tatparyyaṁ | vanaspaty-ādi-satra-vākyasya arthavādatvād praśaṁsāyāṁ tātparyam | sā cha avidyamānenāpi karttuṁ śakyate | achetanāḥ avidvāṁso 'pi satram anushṭhitavantaḥ kim punaś chetanāḥ vidvāṁso brāhmaṇāḥ iti satra-stutiḥ |

"But it will be objected that the Veda contains such sentences as this: 'trees and serpents sat down at a sacrifice.' Now, since trees are insensible, and serpents, though possessing sensibility, are destitute of knowledge, it is inconceivable that either the one or the other should celebrate such a ceremony. Hence, from its resembling the silly talk of madmen and children, as where it says, 'An old ox sings songs (fit only for the Madras?)' (see the Second Volume of this work, pp. 481 ff.), the Veda must have been composed by some man. The answer to this doubt is contained in the following Sūtra (which I can only render by a paraphrase): 'If prescribed by mere human authority, no rite can have any efficacy; but such ceremonies as the jyotishṭoma rest on the authority of the Veda; and narrative texts such as that regarding the trees and serpents have the same intention as precepts, i.e. to recommend sacrifice.' If the sentence enjoining the jyotishṭoma sacrifice had been composed by any man then, as the sentence was so composed, the sacrifice so enjoined would not have been applicable as a means of attaining paradise; for no man could know either the end, or the means of accomplishing it. But the application in question is prescribed in the Veda by the words 'let him, who seeks paradise, sacrifice with the jyotishṭoma.' Now this injunction does not resemble the talk of a madman, since we recognize in it, as in injunctions of a secular kind, the contemplation of the three characteristics of the action to be performed, viz. its end, means, and mode. For, as when a question is put in regard to the object for which, the instrument through which, and the manner in which the precept, 'to feed Brahmans,' is to be fulfilled, we are told that the object is to be their satisfaction, the instrumental substance boiled rice, and the manner, that it is to be served up with vegetables and condiments;—in the same way, in the Vedic injunction regarding the jyotishṭoma, we are told that paradise is the object, that soma is the instrumental substance, and that the application of the introductory and other portions of the ritual is the manner. And when this is so, how can this precept be compared to the talk of a madman? Nor does the sentence regarding trees, etc., celebrating a sacrifice, admit of such a comparison, since the sacrifice in question is similar to the jyotishṭoma and other such rites. For logicians say that the meaning of a word is the sense which it is intended to intimate. The purport of the sentence regarding the jyotishṭoma, which is of a preceptive character, is to command performance. The object of the sentence regarding trees, etc., attending at a sacrifice, which is of a narrative character, is eulogy; and this can be offered even by a thing which has no real existence. The sacrifice is eulogized by saying that it was celebrated even by insensible trees and ignorant serpents: how much more, then, would it be celebrated by Brāhmans possessed both of sensation and knowledge!"

The following passage from the Nyāya-mālā-vistara, a treatise containing a summary of the doctrines of the Pūrva-mīmānsā of Jaimini, by Mādhava Āchāryya, the brother of Sāyaṇa Āchāryya (see above, p. 66) repeats some of the same reasonings contradicting the idea that the Veda had any personal author (i. 1, 25, 26):

Paurusheyaṁ na vā veda-vākyaṁ syāt paurusheyatā | Kāṭhakādi-samākhyānād vākyatvāch chānya-vākya-vat | Saṃākhyā 'dhyāpakatvena vākyatvaṁ tu parāhatam | Tatkartr-anupalambheṇa syāt tato 'paurusheyatā | Kāṭhakaṁ Kauthumaṁ Taittirīyakam ityādi samākhyā tat-tad-veda-vishayā loke dṛishṭā | taddhita-pratyayaś cha tena proktam ity asminn arthe varttate | tathā sati Vyāsena proktaṁ Vaiyāsikam Bhāratam ity-ādāv iva paurusheyatvam pratīyate | kincha | vimataṁ veda-vākyam paurusheyam | vākyatvāt | Kālidāsādi-vākya-vad iti prāpte brūmaḥ | adhyayana-sampradāya-pravarttakatvena samākhyā upapadyate | Kālidāsādi-grantheshu tat-sargāvasāne karttāraḥ upalabhyante | tatkā vedasyāpi paurusheyatve tat-karttā upalabhyeta na cha upalabhyate | ato vākyatva-hetuḥ pratikūla-tarka-parāhataḥ | tasmād apaurusheyo vedaḥ | tathā sati purusha-buddhi-kṛitasya aprāmāṇyasya anāśankanīyatvād vidhi-vākyasya dharme prāmāṇyaṁ susthitam | [88]

[88] I have extracted this passage from Prof. Goldstücker's text of the Nyāya-mālā-

"[Verses] 'Is the word of the Veda derived from a personal author or not? It must (some urge) be so derived, since (1) it bears the names of Kāṭhaka, etc., and (2) has the characters of a sentence, like other sentences. No (we reply); for (1) the names arose from particular persons being teachers of the Vedas, and (2) the objection that the Vedic precepts have the characters of common sentences is refuted by other considerations. The Veda can have no personal author, since it has never been perceived to have had a maker.' [Comment] It is objected (1) that the names Kāṭhaka, Kauthuma, Taittirīyaka, etc., are applied in common usage to the different Vedas; and the taddhita affix by which these appellations are formed, denotes 'uttered by' [Kaṭha, Kuthumi, and Tittiri], (comp. Pānini, iv. 3, 101). Such being the case, it is clear that these parts of the Vedas are derived from a personal author, like the Mahābhārata, which is styled Vaiyāsika, because it was uttered by Vyāsa, etc. And further (2), the sentences of the Veda, being subject to different interpretations, must have had a personal author, because they have the properties of a sentence, like the sentences of Kālidāsa, etc. To this we reply (1), the name applied to any Veda originates in the fact that the sage whose name it bears, was an agent in transmitting the study of that Veda. But (2) in the books of Kālidāsa and others, the authors are discoverable [from the notices] at the end of each section. Now if the Veda also were the composition of a personal author, the composer of it would, in like manner, be discoverable; but such is not the case. Hence, the objection that the Veda partakes of the nature of common sentences is refuted by opposing considerations. Consequently the Veda is not the work of a personal author. And such being the case, as we cannot suspect in it any fallibility occasioned by the defects of human reason, the preceptive texts of the Veda are demonstrated to be authoritative in questions of duty."

II.—Vedārtha-prakāśa. The verses just quoted are repeated in the Vedārtha-prakāśa of Mādhava on the Taittirīya Sanhitā (p. 26), with a various reading at the beginning of the third line, viz. "samākhyānam pravachanāt" instead of "samākhyā 'dhyāpakatvena." The comment by which the verses are explained in the same work, is as follows:

Vālmīkīyaṁ Vaiyāsikīyam ityādi-samākhyānād Rāmāyaṇa-Bhāratā-vistara; and I am indebted to the same eminent scholar for some assistance in my translation of it.

dikaṁ yathā paurusheyaṁ tathā Kāṭhakaṁ Kauthumaṁ Taittirīyam ity-ādi-samākhyānād vedaḥ paurusheyaḥ | kincha veda-vākyam paurusheyaṁ vākyatvāt Kālidāsādi-vākya-vad iti chet | maivam | sampradāya-pravṛittyā samākhyopapatteḥ | Vākyatva-hetus tv anupalabdhi-viruddha-kālātyayāpadishṭaḥ | Yathā Vyāsa-Vālmīki-prabhṛitayas tad-grantha-nirmāṇāvasare kaiśchid upalabdhāḥ anyair apy avichhinna-sampradāyena upalabhyante | na tathā veda-karttā purushaḥ kaśchid upalabdhaḥ | pratyuta vedasya nityatvaṁ śruti-smṛitibhyām pūrvam uḍāhṛitam | Paramātmā tu veda-karttā 'pi na laukika-purushaḥ | tasmāt karttṛ-doshābhāvād nāsty aprāmāṇya-śankā |

"It may be said (1) that as the Rāmāyaṇa, the Mahābhārata, and other such books, are regarded as the works of personal authors from the epithets Vālmīkīya (composed by Vālmīki), Vaiyāsikīya (composed by Vyāsa), etc., which they bear, so too the Veda must have had a similar origin, since it is called by the appellations of Kāṭhaka, Kauthuma, Taittirīya, etc.; and further (2), that the sentences of the Veda must have had this origin, because they possess the properties of a common sentence, like those of Kālidāsa and others. But these objections are unfounded, for (1) the appellations of those parts of the Veda are derived from the sages who were agents in transmitting the study of them; and (2) the objection about the Veda having the properties of a common sentence is opposed to the fact that no author was ever perceived, and so proceeds upon an erroneous generalization.[89] For though Vyāsa and Vālmīki, etc., when employed in the composition of their respective works, were perceived by some persons to be so engaged, and are known by others also [in after ages] to be the authors, from the existence of an unbroken tradition to that effect;—no human author of the Veda has ever been perceived. On the contrary, we have formerly shown that the eternity of the Veda is declared both by itself and by the Smṛiti. And even if the Supreme Spirit be the maker of it, still he is not a mundane person; and consequently, as no defect exists in the maker, there is no reason to suspect fallibility in his work."

[89] This phrase thus translated (kālātyayāpadishṭa) is a technical term in the Nyāya philosophy, denoting one of the hetv-abhāsas, or "mere semblances of reasons," and is thus defined in the Nyāya-sūtras, i. 49, Kālātyayāpadishṭaḥ kālātītaḥ, which Dr. Ballantyne (Aphorisms of the Nyāya, p. 42) thus explains: "That [semblance of a reason] is mis-timed, which is adduced when the time is not [that when it might have availed]. [For example, suppose one argues that] fire does not contain heat, because it is factitious, [his argument is mis-timed if we have already ascertained by the superior evidence of the senses that fire does contain heat]." It does not, however, appear, how the essential validity of an argument can depend at all on the time when it is adduced, as is justly observed by Professor Goldstücker, who has favoured me with his opinion on the sense of the phrase. After consulting the commentary of Vātsyāyana in loco, he thinks the aphorism (which is not very distinctly explained by the commentators) must denote the erroneous transference of a conclusion deduced from the phenomena happening at one "time," i.e. belonging to one class of cases, to another class which does not exhibit, or only apparently exhibits, the same phenomena; in short, a vicious generalization.

No notice has been taken by these commentators of an objection which might have been raised to the validity of this reasoning, viz. that the hymns of the Ṛich and other Vedas are all set down in the Anukramaṇīs, or indices to those works, as being uttered by particular rishis; the rishis being, in fact, there defined as those whose words the hymns were—yasya vākyaṁ sa ṛishiḥ.[90] (See Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. 26, or p. 12 of Williams and Norgate's ed.) Though, however, this objection has not been alluded to in any of the preceding passages, an answer has been provided to it in the well-known assertion of the orthodox Indian writers that the rishis did not compose, but only saw and afterwards repeated the hymns and other parts of the Vedas, which had in reality pre-existed from eternity.

Thus, in the Vedārtha-prakāsa on the Taittirīya Sanhitā, p. 11, it is said: Atīndriyārtha-drashṭāraḥ ṛishayaḥ | Teshāṁ veda-drashṭṛitvaṁ smaryate | Yugānte 'ntarhitān[91] Vedān setihāsān maharshayaḥ | Lebhire tapasā pūrvam anujñātāḥ svayambhuvā | (Mahābhārata, Sāntiparvan, verse 7660. See above, p. 49.) "The rishis were seers of things beyond the reach of the bodily senses. The fact of their seeing the Vedas is recorded in the Smṛiti: 'The great rishis, empowered by Svayambhū, formerly obtained, through devotion, the Vedas and the Itihāsas which had disappeared at the end of the [preceding] Yuga.'"

So, too, Manu (as already quoted, Vol. I. p. 394) says, in similar, although more general language: Prajāpatir idaṁ śāstraṁ tapasaivāsṛijat prabhuḥ | Tathaiva vedān ṛishayas tapasā pratipedire | "Prajāpati created this Śāstra (the Institutes of Manu) by austere-fervour (tapas); and by the same means the rishis obtained the Vedas."

[90] Some passages from the Nirukta on this subject will be quoted in a later part of this volume.

[91] The text of the Biblioth. Ind. reads tarhi tān. I have followed the M. Bh., which evidently gives the true reading.

The following extract from the account of the Pūrva-mīmānsā philosophy, given in the Sarva-darśana-sangraha of Mādhava Ācharyya (Bibliotheca Indica, pp. 127 ff,), contains a fuller summary of the controversy between the Mīmānsakas and the Naiyāyikas respecting the grounds on which the authority of the Veda should be regarded as resting:

Syād etat | vedasya katham apaurusheyatvam abhidhīyate | tat-pratipādaka-pramāṇābhāvāt katham manyethāḥ apaurusheyāḥ vedāḥ | sampradāyāvichchhede saty asmaryyamāṇa-karttṛikatvād ātma-vad iti | tad etad mandaṁ viśeshaṇāsiddheḥ | paurusheya-veda-vādibhiḥ pralaye sampradāya-vichchhedasya kakshīkaraṇāt | kincha kim idam asmaryyamāṇa-karttṛikatvaṁ nāma | apratīyamāna-karttṛikatvam asmaraṇa-gochara-karttṛikatvaṁ vā | na prathamaḥ kalpaḥ Parameśvarasya karttuḥ pramiter abhyupagamāt | na dvitīyo vikalpāsahatvāt | tathā hi | kim ekena asmaraṇam abhipreyate sarvair vā | na ādyaḥ | "yo dharma-śīlo jitamāna-roshaḥ" ityādishu muktakoktishu vyabhichārāt | na dvitīyaḥ | sarvāsmaraṇasya asarvajna-durjnānatvāt |

Paurusheyatve pramāṇa-sambhavāch cha veda-vākyāni paurusheyāṇi | vākyatvāt | Kālidāsādi-vakya-vat | veda-vākyāni āpta-praṇītāni | pramāṇatve sati vākyatvād Manv-ādi-vākya-vad iti |

Nanu | "Vedasyādhyayanaṁ sarvaṁ gurv-adhyayana-pūrvakam | vedādhyayana-sāmānyād adhunā 'dhyayanaṁ yathā" | ity anumānam prati sādhanam pragalbhate iti chet | tad api na pramāṇa-koṭim praveshṭum īshṭe | "Bhāratādhyayanaṁ sarvam gurv-adhyayana-pūrvakam | Bhāratādhyayanatvena sāmpratādhyayanaṁ yathā" iti ābhāsa-samāna-yogakshematvāt | nanu tatra Vyāsaḥ karttā iti smaryyate "ko hy anyaḥ Puṇḍarīkākshād Mahābhārata-kṛid bhavet" ity-ādāv iti chet | tad asāram | "ṛichaḥ sāmāni jajnire | chhandāṁsi jajnire tasmād yajus tasmād ajāyata" iti purusha-sūkte vedasya sa-karttṛikatā-pratipādanāt |

Kincha anityaḥ śabdaḥ sāmānyavattve sati asmad-ādi-vāhyendriya-grāhyatvād ghaṭa-vat | nanv idam anumānaṁ sa evāyaṁ ga-kāraḥ ity pratyabhijnā-pramāṇa-pratihatam iti chet | tad atas phalgu "lūna-punar-jāta-keśa-dalita-kund"-ādāv iva pratyabhijnāyāḥ sāmānya-vishayatvena bādhakatvābhavāt |

Nanv aśarīrasya Parameśvarasya tālv-ādi-sthānābhāvena varṇochchāraṇāsambhavāt kathaṁ tat-praṇītatvaṁ vedasya syād iti chet | na tad bhadraṁ svabhāvato 'śarīrasyāpi tasya bhaktānugrahārthaṁ līlā-vigrahagrahaṇa-sambhavāt | tasmād vedasya apaurusheyatva-vācho yuktir na yuktā iti chet |

Tatra samādhānam abhidhīyate | Kim idam paurusheyatvaṁ sisādhayishitam | puruṣhād utpannatva-mātram | yathāsmad-ādibhir ahar ahar uchchāryyamāṇasya vedasya | pramāṇāntareṇa artham upalabhya tat-prakāśanāya rachitatvaṁ vā | yathā asmad-ādibhir iva nibadhyamānasya prabandhasya | prathame na vipratipattiḥ | charame kim anumāna-balāt tat-sādhanam āgama-balād vā | na ādyaḥ | Mālatī-mādhavādi-vākyeshu savyabhichāratvāt | atha pramāṇatve sati iti viśishyate iti chet | tad api na vipaśchito manasi vaiśadyam āpadyate | pramāṇāntarāgocharārtha-pratipādakaṁ hi vākyaṁ Veda-vākyam | tat pramāṇāntara-gocharārtha-pratipādakam iti sādhyamāne "mama mātā bandhyā" iti vad vyāghātāpātāt | kincha Parameśvarasya līlā-vigraha-parigrahābhyupagame 'py atīndriyārtha-darśanaṁ na sanjāghaṭīti deśa-kāla-svabhāva-viprakṛishṭārtha-grahaṇopāyābhāvāt | na cha tach-chakshur-ādikam eva tādṛik-pratīti-janana-kshamam iti mantavyam | dṛishṭānusāreṇaiva kalpanāyāḥ āśrayaṇīyatvāt | tad uktaṁ Gurubhiḥ sarvajna-nirākaraṇa-velāyām "yatrāpy atiśayo dṛishṭaḥ sa svārthānatilanghanāt | dūra-sūkshmādidṛishṭau syād na rūpe śrotra-vṛittitā" iti | ataḥ eva na āgama-balāt tat-sādhanam |

"Tena proktam" iti Pāṇiny-anuśāsane jāgraty api Kāṭhaka-Kālāpa-Taittirīyam ityādi-samākhyā adhyayana-sampradāya-pravarttaka-vishayatvena upapadyate | tad-vad atrāpi sampradāya-pravarttaka-vishayatvenāpy upapadyate | na cha anumāna-balāt śabdasya anityatva-siddhiḥ | pratyabhijnā-virodhāt | . . . .

Nanv idam pratyabhijnānaṁ gatvādi-jāti-vishayaṁ na gādi-vyakti-vishayaṁ tāsāṁ prati-purusham bhedopalambhād | anyathā "Somaśarmā 'dhīte" iti vibhāgo na syād iti chet | tad api śobhāṁ na bibhartti gādi-vyakti-bhede pramāṇābhāvena gatvādi-jāti-vishaya-kalpanāyāṁ pramāṇābhavāt | Yathā gatvam ajānataḥ ekaṁ eva bhinna-deśa-parimāṇa-saṁsthāna-vyakty-upadhāna-vaśād bhinna-deśam iva alpam iva mahad iva dīrgham iva vāmanam iva prathate tathā ga-vyaktim ajānataḥ ekā 'pi vyanjaka-bhedāt tat-tad-dharmānubandhinī pratibhāsate | etena viruddha-dharmādhyāsād bheda-pratibhāsaḥ iti pratyuktam | tatra kiṁ svābhāviko viruddha-dharmādhyāso bheda-sādhakatvena abhimataḥ prātītiko vā | prathame asiddhiḥ | aparathā svabhāvika-bhedābhyupagame daśa ga-kārān udachārayat Chaitra iti prattipattiḥ syād na tu daśa-

kṛitvo ga-kāraḥ iti | dvitīye tu na svābhāvika-bheda-siddhiḥ | na hi paropādhi-bhedena svābhāvikam aikyaṁ vihanyate | mā bhūd nabhaso 'pi kumbhādy-upādhi-bhedāt svābhāviko bhedaḥ | . . . . tad uktam āchāryayaiḥ | 'prayojanaṁ tu yaj jātes tad vaṇṇād eva labhyate | vyakti-labhyaṁ tu nādebhyaḥ iti gatvādi-dhīr vṛithā" iti | tathā cha "pratyabhijñā yadā śabde jāgartti niravagrahā | anityatvānumānāni saiva sarvāṇi bādhate" | . . . . tataś cha vedasya apaurusheyatayā nirasta-samasta-śankākalankānkuratvena svataḥ siddhaṁ dharme prāmāṇyam iti susthitam |

"Be it so. But how [the Naiyāyikas may ask] is the Veda alleged to be underived from any personal author? How can you regard the Vedas as being thus underived, when there is no evidence by which this character can be substantiated? The argument urged by you Mīmānsakas is, that while there is an unbroken tradition, still no author of the Veda is remembered, in the same way as [none is remembered] in the case of the soul (or self). But this argument is very weak, because the asserted characteristics [unbrokenness of tradition, etc.] are not proved; since those who maintain the personal origin [i.e. origin from a person] of the Veda, object that the tradition [regarding the Veda] was interrupted at the dissolution of the universe (pralaya).[92] And further: what is meant by the assertion that no author of the Veda is remembered? Is it (1) that no author is believed? or (2) that no author is the object of recollection? The first alternative cannot be accepted, since it is acknowledged [by us] that God (Parameśvara) is proved to be the author. Nor can the second alternative be admitted, as it cannot stand the test of the following dilemma, viz. Is it meant (a) that no author of the Veda is recollected by some one person, or (b) by any person whatever? The former supposition breaks down, since it fails when tried by such detached stanzas as this, 'he who is religious, and has overcome pride and anger,' etc.[93] And the latter supposition is inadmissible, since it would be impossible for any person who was not omniscient to know that no author of the Veda was recollected by any person whatever.

[92] This objection occurs in a passage of the Kusumānjali, which I shall quote further on.

[93] I do not know from what work this verse is quoted, or what is its sequel. To prove anything in point, it must apparently go on to assert that such a saint as is here described remembers the author of the Veda, or at least has such superhuman faculties as would enable him to discover the author.

"And moreover, [the Naiyāyikas proceed], the sentences of the Veda must have originated with a personal author, as proof exists that they had such an origin, since they have the character of sentences, like those of Kālidāsa and other writers. The sentences of the Veda have been composed by competent persons, since, while they possess authority, they have, at the same time, the character of sentences, like those of Manu and other sages.

"But [ask the Mīmāṇsakas] may it not be assumed that, 'All study of the Veda was preceded by an earlier study of it by the pupil's preceptor, since the study of the Veda must always have had one common character, which was the same in former times as now;'[94] and that this inference has force to prove [that the Veda had no author or was eternal]? Such reasoning [the Naiyāyikas answer] is of no force as proof, [for it might be urged, with an equal show of reason, that] 'All study of the Mahābhārata was preceded by an earlier study of it by the pupil's preceptor, since the study of the Mahābhārata, from the mere fact of its being such, [must have had the same character in former times] as it has now;' and the advantage of such an argument is simply illusory. But the [Mīmānsakas will ask whether there is not a difference between these two cases of the Veda and the Mahābhārata, since] the Smṛiti declares that [Vishṇu incarnate as] Vyāsa was the author of the latter,—according to such texts as this, 'Who else than Puṇḍarīkāksha (the lotus-eyed Vishṇu) could be the maker of the Mahābhārata?' (see above, p. 39),—[whilst nothing of this sort is recorded in any Śāstra in regard to the Veda]. This argument, however, is powerless, since it is proved by these words of the Purusha-sūkta, 'From him sprang the Ṛich and Sāman verses and the metres, and from him the Yajush verses,' (above, p. 3) that the Veda had a maker.

"Further [proceed the Naiyāyikas] we must suppose that sound [on the eternity of which the eternity and uncreatedness of the Veda depend] is not eternal, since, while it has the properties belonging to a [94] The purport of this verse is, that as every generation of students of the Veda must have been preceded by an earlier generation of teachers, and as there is no reason to assume any variation in this process by supposing that there ever had been any student who taught himself; we have thus a regressus ad infinitum, and must of necessity conclude that the Vedas had no author, but were eternal.

genus, it can, like a jar, be perceived by the external organs of beings such as ourselves. But [rejoin the Mīmānsakas], is not this inference of yours refuted by the proof arising from the fact that we recognise the letter G [for example] as the same we have heard before? This argument [replies the Naiyāyika] is extremely weak, for the recognition in question having reference to a community of species,—as in the case of such words as 'hairs cut and grown again, or of full-blown jasmine,' etc.,—has no force to refute my assertion [that letters are not eternal].

"But [asks the Mīmānsaka] how can the Veda have been uttered by the incorporeal Parameśvara (God), who has no palate or other organs of speech, and therefore cannot be conceived to have pronounced the letters [of which it is composed]? This objection [answers the Naiyāyika] is not happy, because, though Parameśvara is by nature incorporeal, he can yet, by way of sport, assume a body, in order to shew kindness to his devoted worshippers. Consequently, the arguments in favour of the doctrine that the Veda had no personal author are inconclusive.

"I shall now [says the Mīmānsaka] clear up all these difficulties. What is meant by this paurusheyatva ('derivation from a personal author') which it is sought to prove? Is it (1) mere procession (utpannatva) from a person (purusha), like the procession of the Veda from persons such as ourselves, when we daily utter it? or (2) is it the arrangement—with a view to its manifestation—of knowledge acquired by other modes of proof, in the sense in which persons like ourselves compose a treatise? If the first meaning be intended, there will be no dispute. If the second sense be meant, I ask whether the Veda is proved [to be authoritative] in virtue (a) of its being founded on inference, or (b) of its being founded on supernatural information (āgamā-balāt)? The former alternative (a) [i.e. that the Veda derives its authority from being founded on inference] cannot be correct, since this theory breaks down, if it be applied to the sentences of the Mālatī Mādhava or any other secular poem [which may contain inferences destitute of authority]. If, on the other hand, you say (b), that the contents of the Veda are distinguished from those of other books by having authority, this explanation also will fail to satisfy a philosopher. For the word of the Veda is [defined to be] a word which proves things that are not provable by any other evidence. Now if it could be established that this Vedic word did nothing more than prove things that are provable by other evidence, we should be involved in the same sort of contradiction as if a man were to say that his mother was a barren woman. And even if we conceded that Parameśvara might in sport assume a body, it would not be conceivable that [in that case] he should perceive things beyond the reach of the senses, from the want of any means of apprehending objects removed from him in place, in time, and in nature. Nor is it to be thought that his eyes and other senses alone would have the power of producing such knowledge, since men can only attain to conceptions corresponding with what they have perceived. This is is what has been said by the Guru (Prabhākara) when he refutes [this supposition of] an omniscient author: 'Whenever any object is perceived [by the organ of sight] in its most perfect exercise, such perception can only have reference to the vision of something very distant or very minute, since no organ can go beyond its own proper objects, as e.g. the ear can never become cognizant of form.' Hence the authority of the Veda does not arise in virtue of any supernatural information [acquired by the Deity in a corporeal shape].

"Without any contravention[95] of the rule of Pānini (iv. 3, 101; see above, p. 83) that the grammatical affix with which the words Kāṭhaka, Kālāpa, and Taittirīya are formed, imparts to those derivatives the sense of 'uttered by' Kaṭha, Kalāpa, etc., it is established that the names first mentioned have reference [not to those parts of the Veda being composed by the sages in question, but] to the fact that these sages instituted the practice of studying those parts of the Veda. Here also these appellations ought to be understood in the same manner, as referring to the fact of those sages being the institutors of the study of the Veda; and we are not to think that the eternity of sound [or of the words of the Veda] is disproved by the force of any inference [to be drawn from those names], since this would be at variance with the recognition [of letters as the same we knew before] (see above, Mīmānsa Sūtras, i. 19 f., p. 75). . . . .

"But [the Naiyāyikas will ask] does not the recognition [of G and other letters as the same we knew before] refer to them as belonging to the [same] species, and not as being the [same] individual letters, since, in fact, they are perceived to be different [as uttered by] each person,—for otherwise it would be impossible for us to make any distinction [between different readers, as when we say], 'Somaśarman is reading?' This objection, however, shines as little as its predecessors, and has been answered in this way, viz. that as there is no proof of any distinction of individuality between G's, etc., there is no evidence that we ought to suppose any such thing as a species of G's, etc. [i.e. of G's and other letters each constituting a species]. Just as to the man who is ignorant that G's constitute a species, [that letter], though one only, becomes, through distinction of place, magnitude, form, individuality, and position, variously modified as distinct in place, as small, as great, as long, or as short, in the same way, to the man who is ignorant of an individuality of G's, [i.e. of G's being numerically different from each other], this letter, though only one, appears, from the distinction existing between the different persons who utter it, to be connected with their respective peculiarities; and as contrary characters are in this way erroneously ascribed [to the letter G], there is a fallacious appearance of distinctness [between different G's]. But does this ascription of contrary characters which is thus regarded as creating a difference [between G's] result from (1) the nature of the thing, or (2) from mere appearance? There is no proof of the first alternative, as otherwise an inherent difference being admitted between different G's, it would be established that Chaitra had uttered ten (different] G's, and not [the same] G ten times. But on the second supposition, there is no proof of any inherent distinction [between G's]; for inherent oneness (or identity) is not destroyed by a difference of extrinsic disguises [or characteristics]. We must not conceive, from the merely apparent distinctness [occasioned by the separation of its parts] by jars, etc., that there is any inherent distinctness in the atmosphere itself. . . . . It has been said by the Āchāryya 'The object which the Naiyāyikas seek, by supposing a species, is in fact gained from the letter itself; and the object at which they aim by supposing an individuality in letters, is attained from audible sounds (i.e. the separate utterances of the different letters), so that the hypothesis of species, etc., is useless.' And he thus reaches the conclusion that, 'since, in respect of sounds (letters), recognition has so irresistible a power, [literally, wakes, unrestrained], it alone repels all inferences against the eternity [of sound, or the Veda]." After some further argumentation the Mīmānsaka arrives at the conclusion that "as every imputation of doubt which has germinated has been set aside by the underived character of the Veda, its authority in matters of duty is shewn to be self-evident."

[95] Literally "although the rule of Pānini be awake."

I shall not attempt to carry further my translation of this abstruse discussion, as the remainder of it contains much which I should find great difficulty in comprehending.[96]

[Although not directly connected with the subject in hand, the following passage from S'ankara's commentary on the Brahma Sūtras, iii. 2, 40,[97] will throw some further light on the doctrines of the Mīmānsā. In the two preceding Sūtras, as explained by S'ankara, it had been asserted, both on grounds of reason and on the authority of the Veda, that God is the author of rewards. In the 40th S'ūtra a different doctrine is ascribed to Jaimini:

Dharmaṁ Jaiminir ataḥ eva | Jaiminis tv āchāryyo dharmam phalasya dātāram manyate | ata eva hetoḥ śruter upapatteś cha | śrūyate tāvad ayam arthaḥ "svarga-kāmo yajeta" ity evam ādishu vākyeshu | tatra cha vidhi-śruter vishaya-bhāvopagamād yāgaḥ svargasya utpādakaḥ iti gamyate | anyathā hy ananushṭhātṛiko yāgaḥ āpadyeta tatra asya upadeśasya vaiyarthyaṁ syāt | nanv anukshaṇa-vināśinaḥ karmaṇaḥ phalaṁ na upapadyade iti parityakto 'yam pakshaḥ | na esha doshaḥ śruti-prāmāṇyāt | śrutiś chet pramāṇaṁ yathā 'yam karma-phala-sambandhaḥ śrutaḥ upapadyate tathā kalpayitavyaḥ | na cha anutpādya kimapy apūrvaṁ karma vinaśyat kālāntaritam phalaṁ dātuṁ śaknoti ity ataḥ karmaṇo vā sūkshmā kāchid uttarāvasthā phalasya vā pūrvāvasthā apūrvaṁ nāma asti iti tarkyate | upapadyate cha ayam arthaḥ uktena prakāreṇa | Īśvaras tu phalaṁ dadāti ity anupapannam avichitrasya kāraṇasya vichitra-kāryyānupapatteḥ vaishamya-nairghṛiṇya-prasangād anushṭhāna-vaiyarthyāpatteś cha | tāsmād dharmād eva phalam iti |

"'Jaimini says that for this reason virtue [is the giver of reward].' The Āchāryya Jaimini regards virtue [i.e. the performance of the prescribed rites and duties] as the bestower of reward.' 'For this reason,'

[96] In fact I have left out some pages of the translation which I had given in the first edition, as well as the corresponding portion of the text. I am indebted to the kindness of Professor Goldstücker for various suggestions towards the improvement of my translation. But two of the passages on which he had favoured me with his opinion are, to my own apprehension, so obscure, that I have omitted them.

[97] It is partly quoted in Prof. Banerjea's work on Hindu Philosophy.

and because it is proved by the Veda. This is the purport of the Vedic text, 'Let the man who seeks paradise, sacrifice,' and others of the same kind. As from this Vedic injunction we must infer the existence of an object [to be sought after] it is concluded that sacrifice has the effect of producing heavenly bliss; for otherwise we should be involved in the absurdity of a sacrifice without a performer [since no one would care to sacrifice without an object], and thus the injunction would become fruitless. But may it not be said that it is not conceivable that any fruit should result from a ceremony which perishes every moment, so that this view must be abandoned? No, this defect does not attach to our Mīmānsaka statement, since the Veda is authoritative. If the Veda be authority, this connection of the reward with the ceremony must be supposed to exist just as is proved by the Veda. But as a ceremony which perishes without generating any unseen virtue, cannot produce a reward at a distant time, it must be concluded that there is either a certain subtile ulterior form of the ceremony, or a certain subtile anterior form of the reward, which is called 'unseen virtue.' And this result is established in the manner before mentioned. But it it is not proved that God bestows rewards, because it is inconceivable that a uniform Cause [such as He is] should produce various effects, and because the performance of ceremonies would be useless, owing to the partiality and unmercifulness which would attach [to the supposed arbiter of men's deserts]. Hence it is from virtue alone that reward results."

How far this passage may be sufficient to prove the atheism of the Mīmānsā, I will not attempt to say. Before we could decide on such a question, the other Sūtras of that school which refer to this question (if there be any such) would have to be consulted.

Professor Banerjea also quotes the following text from the popular work, the Vidvan-moda-taranginī, in which the Mīmānsakas are distinctly charged with atheism:

Devo na kaśchid bhuvanasya karttā bhartā na 'rttā 'pi cha kaśchid āste | karmānurūpāṇi śubhāśubhāni prāpnoti sarvo hi janaḥ phalāni | vedasyā karttā na cha kaśchid āste nityāḥ hi śabdāḥ rachanā hi nityā | prāmāṇyam asmin svataḥ eva siddham anādi-siddheḥ parataḥ kathañ tat |

"There is no God, maker of the world; nor has it any sustainer or destroyer; for every man obtains a recompence in conformity with his works. Neither is there any maker of the Veda, for its words are eternal, and their arrangement is eternal. Its authoritativeness is self-demonstrated, for since it has been established from eternity, how can it be dependent upon anything but itself?"

I learn from Professor Banerjea that the Mīmānsaka commentator Prabhākara and his school treat the Pūrva Mīmānsā as an atheistic system, while Kumārila makes it out to be theistic. In fact the latter author makes the following complaint at the commencement of his Vārttika, verse 10: Prāyeṇaiva hi Mīmāṁśā loke lokāyatīkṛitā | tām āstika-pathe karttum ayaṁ yatnaḥ kṛito mayā | "For in practice the Mīmānsā has been for the most part converted into a Lokāyata[98] (atheistic) system; but I have made this effort to bring it into a theistic path." See also the lines which are quoted from the Padma Purāṇa by Vijnāna Bhikshu, commentator on the Sānkhya aphorisms, in a passage which I shall adduce further on.]

It appears from a passage in Patanjali's Mahābhāshya, that that great grammarian was of opinion that, although the sense of the Veda is eternal, the order of the words has not continued uniform; and that it is from this order having been variously fixed by Kaṭha, Kalāpa, and other sages, that different portions of the Indian scriptures are called by their names.

The following passages from the Mahābhāshya, and from the Commentaries of Kaiyyaṭa and Nāgojibhaṭṭa thereon, are extracted from the fuller quotations given by Professor Goldstücker in pp. 147 f. of the Preface to his Mānava-kalpa-sūtra.

Patanjali: Nanu cha uktaṁ "na hi chhandāṁsi kriyante nityāni chhandāṁsi" iti | yadyapy artho nityaḥ | yā tv asau varṇānupūrvī sā anityā tad-bhedāch cha etad bhavati Kāṭhakaṁ Kālāpakam Maudakam Paippalādakam ityādi . . . . | Kaiyyaṭa: "Nityāni" iti | karttur asmaraṇāt teshām iti bhāvaḥ | "yā tv asāv" iti | mahāpralayādishu varṇānupūrvīvināśe punar utpadya ṛishayaḥ saṁskārātiśayād vedārthaṁ smṛitvā śabdarachanāḥ vidadhati ity arthaḥ | "tad-bhedād" iti | ānupūrvī-bhedād ity arthaḥ | tataś cha Kaṭhādayo vedānupūrvyāḥ karttāraḥ eva ityādi | Nāgojibhaṭṭa: Aṁśena vedasya nityatvaṁ svīkṛitya aṁśena anityatvam āha "yadyapy arthaḥ" iti | anena vedatvam śabdārthobhaya-vṛitti-dhvanitvam | nanu "dhātā yathā pūrvam akalpayad" ityādi-śruti-balena

[98] See Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. 402 ff., or p. 259 ff. of Williams and Norgate's ed.

ānupūrvī api sā eva iti navya-pūrva-mīmāṁsā-siddhāntāt sā nityā iti ayuktam ata āha "mahāpralayādishv" iti | ānupūrvyās tat-tat-kshaṇa-ghaṭitatvena anityatvam iti bhāvaḥ iti kechit | tac na | "yadyapy artho nityaḥ" ityādi-vākya-śesha-virodhāt | arthasyāpi jyotishṭomāder anityatvāt | pravāhāvichchhedena nityatvaṁ tu ubhayor api tasmād manvantara-bhedena ānupūrvī bhinnā eva "prati-manvantaraṁ chaishā śrutir anyā vidhīyate" ity ukter ity anye | pare tu | "artho nityaḥ" ity atra kṛita-katva-virodhy-anityatvasya eva abhyupagamaḥ pūrva-pakshiṇā tādṛiśa-nityatvasya eva chhandaḥsu ukteḥ | evaṁ cha artha-śabdena atra īśvaraḥ | mukhyatayā tasya eva sarva-veda-tātparyya-vishayatvāt | "vedaiś cha sarvair aham eva vedyaḥ" iti Gītokter ity āhūḥ | varṇānupūrvyāḥ anityatve mānam āha "tad-bhedāch cha" iti | anityatva-vyāpya-bhedena tat-siddhiḥ | bhedo 'tra nānātvam | Īśvare tu na nānātvam | bhede mānaṁ vyavahāram āha | "Kāṭhaka" ityādi | arthaikye 'py ānupūrvī-bhedād eva Kāṭhaka-kālāpakādi-vyavahāraḥ iti bhāvaḥ | atra ānupūrvī anityā ity ukteḥ padāni tāny eva iti dhvanitvam | tad āha "tataś cha Kaṭhā-dayaḥ" ityādi |

As Professor Goldstücker has only given (in p. 146 of his Preface) a translation of the above extract from Patanjali, and has left the passages from Kaiyyaṭa and Nāgojibhaṭṭa untranslated, I shall give his version of the first, and my own rendering of the two last.

Patanjali: "Is it not said, however, that 'the Vedas are not made, but that they are permanent (i.e. eternal)?' (Quite so); yet though their sense is permanent, the order of their letters has not always remained the same; and it is through the difference in this latter respect that we may speak of the versions of the Kaṭhas, Kalāpas, Mudakas, Pippalādakas, and so on." Kaiyyaṭa on Patanjali: "'Eternal;' by this word he means that they are so, because no maker of them is remembered. By the words, 'the order of their letters,' etc., it is meant that, the order of the letters being destroyed in the great dissolutions of the universe, etc., the rishis, when they are again created, recollecting, through their eminent science, the sense of the Veda, arrange the order of the words. By the phrase, 'through the difference of this,' is meant the difference of order. Consequently, Kaṭha and the other sages [to whom allusion was made] are the authors of the order of the Veda." Nāgojibhaṭṭa on Patanjali and Kaiyyaṭa: "Admitting in part the eternity of the Veda, he, Patanjali, declares in the words, 'though the sense is eternal,' etc., that it (the Veda) is also in part not eternal. By this clause it is implied that the character of the Veda as such is constituted both by the words and by the sense.[99] But is not the order also eternal, since it is a settled doctrine of the modern Mīmānsakas, on the strength of such Vedic texts as this, 'the creator made them as before,' etc., that the order also is the very same? No; this is incorrect, and in consequence, he (Kaiyyaṭa) says, 'in the great dissolutions,' etc. Some say the meaning of this is, that the order is not eternal, inasmuch as it is formed in particular moments. But this is wrong, because it is opposed to the conclusion of the sentence, 'though their sense is eternal,' etc., and because the objects signified also, such as the jyotishṭoma sacrifice, are not eternal. Others say that both the sense and the order of the words are eternal [or permanent], owing to the continuity of the tradition; and that, consequently, it is in different manvantaras that the order of the words is different, according to the text, 'in every manvantara this śruti (Veda) is made different.' Others again think that in the words, 'the sense is eternal,' etc., an admission is made by an objector of an eternity opposed to the idea of production, since it is only such a [qualified] eternity that is mentioned in the Veda; and that thus the word 'sense,' or 'object' (arthaḥ), here refers to Īśvara, because he is the principal object which is had in view in the whole of the Veda, according to the words of the Bhagavad-gītā (xv. 15), 'It is I whom all the Vedas seek to know.' He next states the proof of the assertion that the order of the letters is not eternal, in the words, 'through the difference of this,' etc. The difference in the order is proved by the difference in the things included under the category of non-eternity. Difference here means variety. But in Īśvara (God), there is no variety. He declares current usage to be the proof of difference, in the words 'Kāṭhaka,' etc., which mean that, though the sense is the same, we use the distinctions of Kāṭhaka, Kālāpaka, etc., in consequence of the difference of arrangement. Here by saying that the order is not eternal, it is implied that the words are the same. And this is what is asserted in the words [of Kaiyyaṭa], 'consequently Kaṭha and the other sages,'" etc.

[99] I am indebted to Professor Goldstücker for a correction of my former rendering of this sentence, and of several others in this passage of Nāgojibhaṭṭa.

After quoting these passages at greater length than I have given them, Professor Goldstücker goes on to remark in his note: "I have quoted the full gloss of the three principal commentators, on this important Sūtra [of Pāṇini] and its Vārttikas, because it is of considerable interest in many respects. . . . . We see Kaiyyaṭa and Nāgojibhaṭṭa writhing under the difficulty of reconciling the eternity of the Veda with the differences of its various versions, which, nevertheless, maintain an equal claim to infallibility. Patañjali makes rather short work of this much vexed question; and unless it be allowed here to render his expression varṇa (which means 'letter'), 'word,' it is barely possible even to understand how he can save consistently the eternity or permanence of the 'sense' of the Veda. That the modern Mīmānsists maintain not only the 'eternity of the sense,' but also the 'permanence of the text,' which is tantamount to the exclusive right of one single version, we learn, amongst others, from Nāgojibhaṭṭa. But as such a doctrine has its obvious dangers, it is not shared in by the old Mīmānsists, nor by Nāgoji, as he tells us himself. He and Kaiyyaṭa inform us therefore that, amongst other theories, there is one, according to which the order of the letters (or rather words) in the Vaidik texts got lost in the several Pralayas or destructions of the worlds; and since each manvantara had its own revelation, which differed only in the expression, not in the sense of, the Vaidik texts, the various versions known to these commentators represent these successive revelations, which were 'remembered,' through their 'excessive accomplishments,' by the Ṛishis, who in this manner produced, or rather reproduced, the texts current in their time, under the name of the versions of the Kaṭhas, Kalāpas, and so on. In this way each version had an equal claim to sanctity. There is a very interesting discussion on the same subject by Kumārila, in his Mīmānsa-vārttika (i. 3, 10)."

III. The Vedānta.—I proceed to adduce the reasonings by which Bādarāyaṇa, the reputed author of the Brahma, Sārīraka, or Vedānta Sūtras, as expounded by Śankara Āchāryya in his Śārīraka-mīmāṁsā-bhāshya, or commentary on those Sūtras, defends the eternity and authority of the Veda. His views, as we shall see, are not by any means identical with those of Jaimini and his school. After discussing the question whether any persons but men of the three highest tribes are qualified for divine knowledge, the author of the Sūtras comes to the conclusion that Śūdras, or persons of the fourth tribe, are incompetent, while beings superior to man, the gods, are competent[100] (Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. 348, or p. 223 of Williams and Norgate's ed.) In Sūtra, i. 3, 26, the author determines that the gods have a desire for final emancipation, owing to the transitoriness of their glory, and a capacity for attaining it, because they possess the qualities of corporeality, etc.; and that there is no obstacle which prevents their acquiring divine knowledge. A difficulty, however, having been raised that the gods cannot be corporeal, because, if they were so, it is necessary to conceive that they would be corporeally present (as priests actually are) at the ceremonial of sacrifice, in which they are the objects of worship,—a supposition which would not consist with the usual course of such ceremonies, at which the gods are not seen to be corporeally present, and would, in fact, involve an impossibility, since Indra, for example, being but one, could not be corporeally present at numerous sacrifices at once;—this difficulty is solved (under Sūtra i. 3, 27) in two ways, either by supposing (1) that the gods assume different forms, and are present at many sacrifices at once, although invisible to mortals; or by considering (2) that, as a sacrifice is offered to (and not, by) a deity, many persons may present their oblations to that deity at once, just as one Brāhman may be saluted by many different persons at the same time. It is, therefore, concluded that the corporeal nature of the gods is not inconsistent with the practice of sacrifice. Having settled these points, Śankara comes to Sūtra i. 3, 28:

"Śabde iti chet | na | ataḥ prabhavāt | pratyakshānumānābhyām" | Mā nāma vigrahavattve devādīnām abhyupagamyamāne karmaṇi kaśchid virodhaḥ prasajyi | śabde tu virodhaḥ prasajyeta | katham | Autpattikaṁ hi śabdasya arthena sambandham āśritya "anapekshatvād" iti vedasya prāmāṇyaṁ sthāpitam | Idānīṁ tu vigrahavatī devatā 'bhyupagamyamānā yadyapy aiśvaryya-yogād yugapad aneka-karma-sambandhīni havīṁshi bhuṇjīta tathāpi vigraha-yogād asmad-ādi-vaj janana-maraṇavatī sā, iti nityasya śabdasya anityena arthena nitya-sambandhe pralīyamāne yad vaidike śabde prāmāṇyaṁ sthitaṁ tasya virodhaḥ syād iti chet | na ayam apy asti virodhaḥ | kasmād "ataḥ prabhavāt" | Ataḥ eva [100] For a discussion of the different question whether the gods can practise the ceremonies prescribed in the Vedas, see the First Volume of this work, p. 365, note.

hi vaidikāt śabdād devādikaṁ jagat prabhavati | Nanu "janmādi asya yataḥ" (Brahma Sūtras i. 1, 2) iti brahma-prabhavatvaṁ jagato 'vadhāritaṁ katham iha śabda-prabhavatvam uchyate | Aṇicha yadi nāma vaidikāt śabdād asya prabhavo 'bhyupagataḥ katham etāvatā virodhaḥ śabde parihṛitaḥ | yāvatā Vasavo Rudrāḥ Ādityāḥ Viśvedevāḥ Marutaḥ ity ete 'rthāḥ anityāḥ eva utpattimattvāt | Tad-anityatve cha tad-vāchakānaṁ vaidikānāṁ Vasv-ādi-śabdānām anityatvaṁ kena vāryyate | Prasiddhaṁ hi loke Devadattasya putre utpanne Yajnadattaḥ iti tasya nāma kriyate iti | Tasmād virodhaḥ eva śabde iti chet | na | Gavādi-śabdārtha-sambandhanityatva-darśanāt | Na hi gavādi-vyaktīnām utpattimattve tad-ākṛitīnām apy utpattimattvaṁ syād dravya-guṇa-karmaṇāṁ hi vyaktayaḥ eva utpadyante na ākṛitayaḥ | Ākṛitibhiś cha śabdānāṁ sambandho na vyaktibhiḥ | vyaktīnām ānantyāt sambandha-grahaṇānupapatteḥ | Vyaktishu utpadyamānāsv apy ākṛitīnāṁ nityatvād na gavādi-śabdeshu kaśchid virodho dṛiśyate | Tathā devādi-vyakti-prabhavābhyupagame 'pi ākṛiti-nityatvād na kaśchid Vasv-ādi-śabdeshu virodhaḥ iti drashṭavyam | Ākṛiti-viśeshas tu devādīnām mantrārthavādādibhyo vigrahavattvādy-avagamād avagantavyaḥ | Sthāna-viśesha-sambandha-nimittāś cha Indrādi-śabdāḥ senāpatyādiśabda-vat | Tataś cha yo yas tat tat sthānam adhitishṭhati sa sa Indrādiśabdair abhidhīyate iti na dosho bhavati | Na cha idaṁ śabda-prabhavatvam Brahma-prabhavatva-vad upādāna-kāraṇatvābhiprāyeṇa uchyate | kathaṁ tarhi sthiti-vāchakātmanā nitye śabde nityārtha-sambandhini śabda-vyavahāra-yogyārtha-vyakti-nishpattir "ataḥ prabhavaḥ" ity uchyate | katham punar avagamyate śabdāt prabhavaṭi jagad iti | "pratyakshānumānābhyām" | Pratyakshaṁ śrutiḥ | prāmāṇyam prati anapekshatvāt | anumānaṁ smṛitiḥ | prāmāṇyam prati sāpekshatvāt | Te hi śabda-pūrvāṁ sṛishtim darśayataḥ | "Ete" iti vai prajāpatir devān asṛijata "asṛigram" iti manushyān "indavaḥ" iti pitṛīṁs "tiraḥ pavitram" iti grahān "āśavaḥ" iti stotraṁ "viśvāni" iti śastram "abhi saubhagā" ity anyāḥ prajāḥ iti śrutiḥ | Tathā 'nyatrāpi "sa manasā vācham mithunaṁ samabhavad" (Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa x. 6, 5, 4, and Bṛihadāraṇyaka Upanishad, p. 50) ityādinā tatra tatra śabda-pūrvikā sṛishtiḥ śrāvyate | Smṛitir api "anādi-nidhanā nityā vāg utsṛishṭā svayambhuvā | ādau vedamayī divyā yataḥ sarvāḥ pravṛittayaḥ" ity utsargo 'py ayaṁ vāchaḥ sampradāya-pravarttanātmako drashṭavyaḥ anādi-nidhanāyāḥ anyādṛiśasya utsargasya asambhavāt | Tathā "nāma rūpaṁ cha bhūtānāṁ karmaṇāṁ cha pravarttanam | Veda-śabdebhya evādau nirmame sa

maheśvaraḥ" iti | "sarveshāṁ cha sa nāmāni karmāṇi cha pṛithak pṛithak | Veda-śabdebhya evādau pṛithak saṁsthāś cha nirmame" iti cha | Apicha chikīrshitam artham anutishṭhan tasya vāchakaṁ śabdam pūrvaṁ smṛitvā paśchāt tam artham anutishṭhati iti sarveshāṁ naḥ pratyaksham etat | Tathā prajāpater api srashṭuḥ sṛishṭeḥ pūrvaṁ vaidikāḥ śabdāḥ manasi prādurbabhūvuḥ paśchāt tad-anugatān arthān sasarjja iti gamyate | Tathā cha śrutiḥ "sa bhūr iti vyāharan bhūmim asṛijata" [101] ity-evam-ādikā bhūr-ādi-śabdebhyaḥ eva manasi prādurbhūtebhyo bhūr-ādi-lokān prādurbhūtān sṛishṭān darśayati | kim-ātmakam punaḥ śabdam abhipretya idaṁ śabda-prabhavatvam uchyate | sphoṭam ity āha | . . . . Tasmād nityāt śabdāt sphoṭa-rūpād abhidhāyakāt kriyā-kāraka-phala-lakshaṇaṁ jagad abhidheya-bhūtam prabhavatīti | . . . . Tataś cha nityebhyaḥ śabdebhyo devādi-vyaktīnām prabhavaḥ ity aviruddham |

Sūtra i. 3, 29. "Ata eva cha nityatvam" | svatantrasya karttuḥ smaraṇād eva hi sthite vedasya nityatve devādi-vyakti-prabhavābhyupagamena tasya virodham āśankya "ataḥ prabhavād" iti parihṛitya idānīṁ tad eva veda-nityatvaṁ sthitaṁ dṛaḍhayati "ata eva cha nityatvam" iti | ataḥ eva cha niyatākṛiter devāder jagato veda-śabda-prabhavatvād eva veda-śabda-nityatvam api pratyetavyam | Tathā cha mantra-varṇaḥ "yajnena vāchaḥ padavīyam āyan tām anvavindann ṛishishu pravishṭām" iti sthitām eva vācham anuvinnāṁ darśayati | Vedavyāsaś cha evam eva smarati (Mahābhārata, Vanap. 7660) | "yugānte 'ntarhitān vedān setihāsān maharshayaḥ | lebhire tapasā pūrvam anujnātāḥ svayambhuvā" iti |

"Sūtra i. 3, 28: 'But it is said that there will be a contradiction in respect of sound (or the word); but this is not so, because the gods are produced from it, as is proved by intuition and inference.'

"Be it so, that though the corporeality of the gods, etc., be admitted, no contradiction will arise in respect of the ceremonial. Still [it will be said that] a contradiction will arise in regard to the word. How? [In this way.] By founding upon the inherent connection of a word with the thing signified, the authority of the Veda had been established by the aphorism 'anapekshatvāt,' etc. (Mīmānsā Sūtras i. 2, 21; see above, p. 75.) But now, while it has been admitted that the deities are corporeal, it will follow that (though from their possession of divine power they can at one and the same time partake of the oblations offered at numerous sacrifices), they will still, owing to their corporeality, be subject, like ourselves, to birth and death; and hence, the eternal connection of the eternal word with an object which is non-eternal being lost, a contradiction will arise in regard to the authority proved to belong to the word of the Veda; [for thus the word, not having any eternal connection with non-eternal things, could not be authoritative]. But neither has this supposed contradiction any existence. How? 'Because they are produced from it.' Hence the world of gods, etc., is produced from the Vedic word. But according to the aphorism (Brahma Sūtras i. 1, 2) 'from him comes the production, etc., of all this,' it is established that the world has been produced from Brahma. How, then, is it said here that it is produced from the word? And, moreover, if it be allowed that the world is produced from the Vedic word, how is the contradiction in regard to the word thereby removed, inasmuch as all the following classes of objects, viz. the Vasus, Rudras, Ādityas, Viśvedevas, Maruts, are non-eternal, because produced; and when they are non-eternal, what is there to bar the non-eternity of the Vedic words Vasu, etc., by which they are designated? For it is a common saying, 'It is only when a son is born to Devadatta, that that son receives the name of Yajnadatta,' [i.e. no child receives a name before it exists]. Hence a contradiction does arise in regard to [the eternity of] the word. To this objection we reply with a negative; for in the case of such words as cow we discover an eternal connection between the word and the thing. For although individual cows, etc., come into existence, the species to which they belong does not begin to exist, as it is individual substances, qualities, and acts, which begin to exist, and not their species. Now it is with species that words are connected, and not with individuals, for as the latter are infinite, such a connection would in their case be impossible. Thus as species are eternal (though individuals begin to exist) no contradiction is discoverable in the case of such words as cow, etc. In the same way it is to be remarked that though we allow that the individual gods, etc., have commenced to exist, there is no contradiction [to the eternity of the Vedic word] in the [existence of the] words Vasu, etc. [which denote those individual gods], since the species to which they belong are eternal. And the fact that the gods, etc., belong to particular species may be learned from this, that we discover their corporeality and other attributes in the hymns and arthavādas (illustrative remarks in the Vedas), etc. The words Indra, etc., are derived from connection with some particular post, like the words 'commander of an army' (senāpati), etc. Hence, whosoever occupies any particular post, is designated by the words Indra, and so forth; [and therefore Indra and the other gods belong to the species of occupants of particular posts]. Thus there is no difficulty. And this derivation from the word is not, like production from Brahma, meant in the sense of evolution, from a material cause. But how, since language is eternal and connected with eternal objects, is it declared in the phrase 'produced from it' that the production of individual things, corresponding to the ordinary sense of words, is effected by a thing (sound or language), the very nature of which it is to denote continuance [and not such change as is involved in the idea of production?][102] How, again, is it known that the world is produced from the word? The answer is, [it is known] 'from intuition and inference.' 'Intuition' means the Veda, because it is independent of any (other authority). 'Inference' means the smriti, because it is dependent on another authority (the Veda). These two demonstrate that the creation was preceded by the word. Thus the Veda says, 'at (or with) the word ete (these) Prajāpati created the gods; at asṛigram (they were poured out) he created men; at indavaḥ (drops of soma) he created the pitṛis; at tiraḥ pavitram (through the filter) he created the libations; at āśavaḥ (swift) he created hymns; at viśvāni (all) he created praise; and at the words abhi saubhagā (for the sake of blessings) he created other creatures.'[103] And in another place it is said 'with his [102] This sentence is rather obscure.

[101] Compare S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 1, 6, 3.

[103] According to Govinda Ānanda's Gloss this passage is derived from a Chhandoga Brāhmaṇa. It contains a mystical exposition of the words from Rig-veda, ix. 62, 1 (=Sāma-veda, ii. 180) which are imbedded in it, viz. ete asṛigram indavas tiraḥ pavitram āśavaḥ | viśvāni abhi saubhagā.| "These hurrying drops of soma have been poured through the filter, to procure all blessings." (See Benfey's translation.) It was by the help of Dr. Pertsch's alphabetical list of the initial words of the verses of the Rig-veda (in Weber's Indische Studien, vol. iii.) that I discovered the verse in question in the Rig-veda. Govinda Ānanda gives us a specimen of his powers as Vedic exegete in the following remarks on this passage: Ity etan-mantra-sthaiḥ padaiḥ smṛitvā Brahmā devādīn asṛijata | tattra "ete" iti padam sarvanāmatvād devānāṁ smārakam asṛig rudhiraṁ tat pradhāne dehe ramante iti "asṛigrāḥ" manushyāḥ | chandra-sthānām pitṛīṇām indu-śabdaḥ smārakaḥ ityādi | "Brahmā created the gods, etc., in conformity with the recollections suggested by the various words in this verse. The word ete ('these') as a pronoun suggested the gods. The beings who disport mind he entered into conjugal connection with Vāch (speech).' (S. P. Br. x. 6, 5, 4, Bṛih. Ār. Up. p. 50.) By these and other such texts the Veda in various places declares that creation was preceded by the word. And when the Smṛiti says, 'In the beginning a celestial voice, eternal, without beginning or end, co-essential with the Vedas, was uttered by Svayambhū, from which all activities [proceeded]' (see above, p. 16), the expression 'utterance of a voice' is to be regarded as employed in the sense of the origination of a tradition, since it is inconceivable that a voice which was 'without beginning or end,' could be uttered in the same sense as other sounds. Again, we have this other text, 'In the beginning Maheśvara created from the words of the Veda the names and forms of creatures, and the origination of actions;' and again, 'He created in the beginning the several names, functions, and conditions of all creatures from the words of the Veda.' (See above, pp. 16 and 6.) And it is a matter of common observation to us all, that when any one is occupied with any end which he wishes to accomplish, he first calls to mind the word which expresses it, and then proceeds to effect his purpose. So, too, in the case of Prajāpati the creator, we conclude that before the creation the words of the Veda were manifested in his mind, and that afterwards he created the objects which resulted from them. Thus the Vedic text which says, 'uttering bhūḥ, he created the earth (bhūmi), etc,' intimates that the different worlds, earth, and the rest, were manifested, i.e. created from the words bhūḥ, etc., manifested in his mind. Of what sort, now, was this word which is intended, when it is said that the world was produced from the word? It was sphoṭa (disclosure or expression), we are told."

I shall not quote the long discussion on which Śankara here enters, regarding this term. (See Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. 305 ff.; Ballantyne's Christianity contrasted with Hindu Philosophy, pp. 192 ff.; the same author's translation of the commencement of the Mahābhāshya, p. 10; and Professor Müller's article on the last-named work in the Journal of the German Or. Soc. vii. 170). Śankara states his conclusion themselves in bodies of which blood (asṛik) is a predominant element, were asṛigrāḥ, 'men.' The word indu (which means both the soma plant and the moon) suggested the fathers who dwell in the moon," etc., etc. The sense of asṛigram, as given above in the text, is "were poured out." Govinda Ānanda, no doubt, understood it correctly, though he considered it necessary to draw a mystical sense out of it.

to be that "from the eternal word, in the form of sphoṭa, which expresses [all things], the object signified by it, viz. the world, under the three characters of action, causer, and the results of action, is produced," and finishes his remarks on this Sūtra (i. 3, 28) by observing: "Consequently there is no contradiction in saying that the individual gods, etc., are derived from eternal words." He then proceeds to Sūtra i. 3, 29: "'Hence results the eternity of the Vedas.'" On this he observes, "The eternity of the Veda had been established by the fact of its being described in the Smṛiti as the work of a Self-dependent Maker. But a doubt had been suggested that this eternity is inconsistent with the admission that individual gods, etc., have commenced to exist. This doubt, however, having been set aside by the preceding aphorism, 'Since they are produced from it,' he now confirms the eternity of the Veda (which had been already proved) by the words of the Sūtra before us, which mean that as a result of this very fact that the world, consisting of gods and other beings belonging to fixed species, was produced from the words of the Vedas, the eternity of these Vedic words themselves also must be believed. Accordingly, the words of the hymn, 'by sacrifice they followed the path of Vāch, and found her entered into the rishis' (R.V. x. 71, 3; see the First Volume of this work p. 254, and Volume Second, p. 220) prove that Vāch already existed when she was discovered. And in the very same way Vedavyāsa records that, 'formerly the great rishis, empowered by Svayambhū, obtained through devotion the Vedas and Itihāsas, which had disappeared at the end of the preceding yuga.'"

Sāyaṇa refers to the Sūtra just quoted (i. 3, 29), as well as to another of the Vedānta aphorisms (i. 1, 3) in p. 20 of the introduction to his Commentary on the Rig-veda in these words:

Nanu bhagavatā Bādarāyaṇena Vedasya Brahma-kāryyatvaṁ sūtritam | "śāstra-yoṅitvād" iti | ṛigvedādi-śāstra-kāraṇatvād Brahma sarvajnam iti sūtrārthaḥ | bāḍham | na etāvatā paurusheyatvam bhavati | manushya-nirmitatvābhāvāt | īdṛiśam apaurusheyatvam abhipretya vyavahāra-daśā-yām ākāśādi-vad nityatvam Bādarāyaṇenaiva devatādhikaraṇe sūtritam | "ata evacha nityatvam" iti |

"But it is objected that the venerable Bādarāyaṇa has declared in the aphorism 'since he is the source of the śāstra (Brahma Sūtras i. 1, 3), that the Veda is derived from Brahma; the meaning of the aphorism being, that since Brahma is the cause of the Rig-veda and other Śāstras, he is omniscient. This is true; but it furnishes no proof of the human origin of the Veda, since it was not formed by a man. Bādarāyaṇa had in view such a superhuman origin of the Veda, when in the [other] aphorism 'hence also [its] eternity is to be maintained,' (which is contained in the section on the deities), he declared it to be, like the æther, etc., eternal, during the period of mundane existence." [104]

The remarks of S'ankara on the Brahma Sūtra (i. 1, 3) above referred to, begin as follows:

Mahataḥ ṛig-vedādeḥ śāstrasya aneka-vidyā-sthānopabṛiṁhitasya pradīpa-vat sarvārtha-dyotinas sarvajna-kalpasya yoniḥ kāraṇam Brahma | na hi īdṛiśasya śāstrasya ṛigvedādi-lākshaṇasya sarvajna-guṇānvitasya sarvajnād anyataḥ sambhavo 'sti | Yad yad vistarārthaṁ śāstraṁ yasmāt purusha-viśeshāt sambhavati yathā vyākaraṇādi Pāṇiny-āder jneyaika-deśārtham api sa tato 'py adhikatara-vijnānaḥ iti prasiddhaṁ loke | kimu vaktavyam aneka-śākhā-bheda-bhinnasya deva-tiryaṅ-manushya-varṇāśramādi-pravibhāga-hetor ṛig-vedādy-ākhyasya sarva-jnānākarasya aprayatnena eva līlā-nyāyena purusha-niśvāsa-vad yasmād mahato bhūtād yoneḥ sambhavaḥ ("asya mahato bhūtasya niśvasitam etad yad rig-vedaḥ" ity-ādeḥ śrutes) tasya mahato bhūtasya niratiśayaṁ sarvajnatvaṁ sarvaśaktitvaṁ cha iti |

"Brahma is the source of the great Śāstra, consisting of the Rig-veda, etc., augmented by numerous branches of science, which, like a lamp, illuminates all subjects, and approaches to omniscience. Now such a Śāstra, distinguished as the Rig-veda, etc., possessed of the qualities of an omniscient being, could not have originated from any other than an omniscient being. When an extensive treatise on any subject is produced by any individual, as the works on Grammar, etc., were by Pāṇini and others,—even although the treatise in question have for its subject only a single department of what is to be known,—it is a matter of notoriety that the author is possessed of still greater knowledge than is contained in his work.[105] What then need we say of the transcendent omniscience and omnipotence of that great Being from whom issued without effort, as an amusement, like a man's breathing (according to the Vedic text 'the Rig-veda is the breathing of that great Being'), that mine of universal knowledge called the Rig-veda, etc., which is divided into many śākhās, and which gave rise to the classes of gods, beasts, and men, with their castes and orders?"[106]

[104] See the quotation from the Vedārtha-prakāśa, at the top of p. 70, above. The æther (ākāśa) is uncreated according to the Vaiśeshikas (Kaṇāda's Sutras, ii. 1, 28, with S'ankara Miśra's commentary, and S'ankara Āchāryya on Vedānta Sūtra, ii. 3, 3: Na hy ākāśasya utpattiḥ sambhāvayituṁ śakyā śrīmat-Kaṇabhug-abhiprāyānusārishu jīvatsu | "The production of the æther cannot be conceived as possible, so long as those who follow Kaṇāda's view retain their vitality"). The Vedānta Sūtras, ii. 3, 1–7, on the other hand, assert its production by Brahma, in conformity with the text of the Taittirīyakas which affirms this: Tasmād vai etasmād ātmanaḥ ākāśaḥ sambhūtaḥ | "From that Soul the æther was produced."

It is clear from the aphorism last quoted that there is a distinction between the doctrine of the Pūrva Mīmānsā, and the Uttara Mīmānsā, or Vedānta, regarding the origin of the Veda, in so far as the former is silent on the subject of its derivation from Brahma, which the latter asserts. It is also to be observed that Sāyaṇa understands the eternity of the Veda as laid down in the Brahma Sūtras in a qualified sense (as limited to the duration of the mundane period) and not as an absolute eternity.

I may remark that in their treatment of the Vedic passages which they cite, the practice of Bādarāyaṇa, the author of the Brahma Sūtras, and of his commentator, Śankara Āchāryya, corresponds to their theory of the infallibility of the sacred text. The doctrines inculcated in the Sūtras, and expounded and vindicated by the commentator, profess to be based on the Veda; and numerous texts are cited in their support. Such passages as coincide with the theories maintained in the Sūtras are understood in their proper or literal (mukhya) sense;

[105] Dr. Ballantyne (Aphorisms of the Vedānta, p. 8) renders the last words thus: .... "that man, even in consideration of that, is inferred to be exceedingly knowing." Govinda Ānanda's note, however, confirms the rendering I have given. Part of it is as follows: Yad yach chhāstraṁ yasmād āptāt sambhavati sa tataḥ śāstrād adhikhārtha-jnānaḥ iti prasiddham | "It is well known that the competent author from whom any treatise proceeds has a knowledge of more than that treatise (contains)." The idea here is somewhat similar to that in the second of Bishop Butler's Sermons "Upon the love of God": "Effects themselves, if we knew them thoroughly, would give us but imperfect notions of wisdom and power; much less of his Being in whom they reside." .... "This is no more than saying that the Creator is superior to the works of his hands."

[106] An alternative explanation of the aphorism is given by the commentator, according to which it would mean: "The body of Scripture, consisting of the Rig-veda, etc., is the source, the cause, the proof, whereby we ascertain exactly the nature of this Brahma" (athavā yathoktam ṛigvedādi-śāstraṁ yoniḥ kāraṇam pramāṇam asya Brahmaṇo yathāvat svarūpādhigame).

whilst other texts which appear to be at variance with the Vedantic dogmas, and to favour those of the other philosophical schools, are explained as being merely figurative (gauṇa or bhākta); or other interpretations are given. See, for example, the Brahma sūtras, i. 1, 6; ii. 4, 2 f., etc., with Śankara's comments. The supposition of any real inconsistency between the different statements of the sacred volume is never for a moment entertained.[107] As, however, the different authors of the Vedic hymns, of the Brāhmaṇas, and even of the Upanishads, gave free expression to their own vague and unsystematic ideas and speculations on the origin of all things, and the relation of the Deity to the universe, and recognized no fixed standard of orthodox doctrine to which they were bound to conform,—it was inevitable that they should propound a great variety of opinions which were mutually irreconcilable. But as, in later times, the Vedas came to be regarded as supernatural and infallible books, it was necessary that those systematic theologians who sought to deduce from their contents any consistent theory of being and of creation, should attempt to shew that the discrepancies between the different texts were only apparent.

SECT. IX.—Arguments of the followers of the Nyāya, Vaiśeshika, and Sānkhya Systems in support of the authority of the Vedas, but against the eternity of sound.

I. The Nyāya.—The eternity of sound is, as we have already discovered from the allusions of the Mīmānsaka commentator, (above p. 73), denied by the followers of the Nyāya school. The consideration of this subject is begun in the following way in the Nyāya aphorisms of Gotama, as explained by Viśvanātha Bhaṭṭāchārya in the Nyāya-sūtra-vṛitti, ii. 81:

[107] See S'ankara on the Br. Sūtras, iii. 31 (p. 844 of Bibl. Indica), where he says, yadi punar ekasmin Brahmaṇi bahūni vijñānāni vedāntāntareshu pratipipādayishitāni teshām ekam abhrāntam bhrāntāni itarāṇi ity anaśvāsa-prasango vedānteshu tasmād na tāvat prativedāntam Brahma-vijñāna-bhedaḥ āśankituṁ śakyate | "If, again, in the different Vedāntas (i.e. Upanishads) a variety of conceptions regarding the one Brahma be sought to be established, one of these (conceptions) will be correct, and the others erroneous, and thus the objection of being untrustworthy will attach to the Upanishads. It must not, therefore, be suspected that there is in each of the Upanishads a different conception of Brahma."

Vedasya prāmāṇyam āpta-prāmāṇyāt siddham | na cha idaṁ yujyate vedasya nityatvād ity āśankāyāṁ varṇānām anityatvāt kathaṁ tat-samudāya-rūpasya vedasya nityatvam ity āśayena śabdānityatva-prakaraṇam ārabhate | tatra 'siddhānta-sūtram' | "Ādimattvād aindriyakatvāt kṛitakatvād upachārāch cha" | 81. S'abdo 'nityaḥ ityādiḥ | ādimattvāt sakāraṇakatvāt' | nanu na sakāraṇakatvaṁ kaṇṭha-tālv-ādy-abhighātāder vyanjakatvenāpy upapatter ataḥ āha aindriyakatvād iti sāmānyavattve sati vahir-indriya-janya-laukikika-pratyaksha-vishayatvād ity arthaḥ | . . . . Aprayojakatvam āśankya āha kṛitaketi | kṛitake ghaṭādau yathā upachāro jnānaṁ tathaiva kāryyatva-prakāraka-pratyaksha-vishayatvād ity arthaḥ | tathā cha kāryatvena anāhāryya-sārvalaukika-pratyaksha-balād anityatvam eva siddhati |

"It has been proved (in the 68th Sūtra, see below) that 'the authority of the Veda follows from the authority of the competent person who made it.' But it may be objected that this is not a proper ground on which to base the authority of the Veda, since it is eternal. With the view of proving, in opposition to this, that since letters are not eternal, the Veda, which is a collection of letters, cannot be so either, the author of the Sūtras commences the section on the non-eternity of sound. The Sūtra laying down the established doctrine, is as follows: 'Sound cannot be eternal, as (1) it had an origin, as (2) it is cognizable by sense, and (3) it is spoken of as factitious.' Sound is non-eternal, etc., because (1) it had a beginning, i.e. because it had a cause. But it may be said that it had no cause, as, agreeably to the doctrine of the Mīmānsakas (see above, p. 74), the action of the throat and palate in pronunciation may merely occasion a manifestation of sound [without creating it]. In reply to this it is said (2) that sound is cognizable by sense, i.e. that though it belongs to a genus, it is an object of ordinary perception through an external sense." [A different explanation given by other interpreters is next quoted, which I omit.] . . . "Then surmising that the preceding definition may be regarded as not to the point, the author adds the words 'since it is spoken of as factitious,' i.e. as jars and other such objects are spoken of as—are known to be—products, so, too, sound is distinguishable by sense as being in the nature of a product. And in consequence of this incontrovertible and universal perception of its being produced, it is proved that it cannot be eternal." [Two other explanations of this last clause of the Sūtra are then added.]

Leaving the reader to study the details of the discussion in Dr. Ballantyne's aphorisms of the Nyāya (Part Second, pp. 77 ff.), I will pass over most of the Sūtras, and merely quote the principal conclusions of the Nyāya aphorist. In Sūtra 86 he says in opposition to the 13th Sūtra of the Mīmānsā (above, p. 74):

86. "Prāg uchchāraṇād anupalambhād āvaraṇādy-anupalabdeḥ" | Śabdo yadi nityaḥ syād uchchāraṇāt prāg apy upalabhyeta śrotra-sannikarsha-sattvāt | na cha atra pratibandhakam asti ity āha āvaraṇeti āvaraṇādeḥ pratibandhakasya anupalabdhyā abhāva-nirṇayāt | deśāntara-gamanaṁ tu śabdasya amūrttatvād na sambhāvyate | atīndriyānanta-pratibandhakatva-kalpanām apekshya śabdānityatva-kalpanā eva laghīyasī iti bhāvaḥ |

"'Sound is not eternal, because it is not perceived before it is uttered, and because we do not perceive anything which should intercept it.' If sound were eternal, it would be perceived even before it was uttered, from its being in contact with the ear. [Sound, as Dr. Ballantyne explains, is 'admitted to be a quality of the all-pervading æther.'] And in the next words the aphorist says that there is no obstacle to its being so heard, since the non-existence of any hindrance, such as an intercepting medium, is ascertained by our not perceiving anything of that sort. And it is not conceivable that sound should have gone to another place [and for that reason be inaudible], since it has no defined form. The supposition that sound is non-eternal, is simpler than the supposition that there are an infinity of imperceptible obstacles to its perception."

The 89th and 90th Sūtras, with part of the comments on them, are as follows:

89. "Asparśatvāt" | śabdo nityaḥ | asparśatvād gagana-vad iti bhāvaḥ |
90. "Na karmānityatvāt" asparśvatvaṁ na śabda-nityatva-śādhakaṁ karmaṇi vyabhichārāt |

89. "It may be said that sound is eternal, from its being, like the sky, intangible. 90. But this is no proof, for the intangibility of sound does not establish its eternity, since these two qualities do not always go together; for intangibility, though predicable, e.g. of action, fails to prove its eternity."

The 100th and following Sūtras are as follows:

100. "Vināśa-kāraṇānupalabdheḥ" | 101. "Aśravaṇa-kāraṇānupalab-

dheḥ satata-śravaṇa-prasangaḥ" | Yady apratyakshād abhāva-siddhis tadā 'śravaṇa-kāraṇasya apratyakshatvād aśravaṇaṁ na syād iti satata-śravaṇa-prasangaḥ, iti bhāvaḥ | 102. "Upalabhyamāne cha anupalabdher asattvād anupadeśaḥ" | Anumānādinā upalabhyamāne vināśa-kāraṇe anupalabdher abhāvāt tvadīyo hetur anapadeśaḥ asādhakaḥ asiddhatvāt | janya-bhāvatvena vināśa-kalpanam iti bhāvaḥ |

"It is said (100) that 'sound must be eternal, because we perceive no cause why it should cease.' The answer is (101), first, 'that if the non-existence of any such cause of cessation were established by the mere fact of its not being perceived, such non-perception would occasion our hearing continually, which is an absurdity.' And (102), secondly, 'since such non-perception is not a fact, inasmuch as [a cause of the cessation of sound] is perceived, this argument falls to the ground.' Since a cause for the cessation of sound is discovered by inference, etc., and thus the non-perception of any cause is seen to be untrue, this argument of yours proves nothing, because its correctness is not established. The purport is that we suppose, from sound being produced, that it must also be liable to perish."

Sūtras 106–122 are occupied with a consideration of the question (above treated, pp. 73, 74, in Sūtras 10 and 16 of the Mīmānsā) whether letters can change or not. The conclusion at which Gotama arrives is, that the substance of letters cannot undergo any alteration, though they may be said to change when they are modified in quality by being lengthened, shortened, etc.

In a preceding part of the Second Book (Sūtras 57–68) Gotama treats of the Veda, and repels certain charges which are alleged against its authority. I shall quote most of these aphorisms, and cite the commentary more fully than Dr. Ballantyne has done. (See Ballantyne's Nyāya Aphorisms, Part ii. pp. 56 ff.)

S'abdasya dṛishṭādṛishṭārthakatvena dvaividhyam uktaṁ tatra cha adṛishṭārthaka-śabdasya vedasya prāmāṇyam parīkshitum pūrva-paksha-yati | 57. "Tad-aprāmāṇyam anṛita-vyāghāta-punaruktа-doshebhyaḥ" | Tasya dṛishṭārthaka-vyatirikta-śabdasya vedasya aprāmāṇyam | kutaḥ | anṛitatvādi-doshāt | tatra cha putreshṭi-kāryādau kvachit phalānutpatti-darśanād anṛitatvam | vyāghātaḥ pūrvāpara-virodhaḥ | yathā "udite juhoti anudite juhoti samayādhyushite juhoti | śyāvo 'sya āhutim abhyavaharati ya udite juhoti śavalo 'sya āhutim abhyavaharati yo 'nudite juhoti

śyāva-śavalāv asya āhutim abhyavaharato yaḥ samayādhyushite juhoti" atra cha uditādi-vākyānāṁ nindānumitānishṭa-sādhanatā-bodhaka-vākya-virodhaḥ | paunaruktyād aprāmāṇyam | Yathā "triḥ prathamām anvāha | trir uttamām anvāha" | ity atra uttamatvasya prathamatva-paryavasānāt triḥ kathanena cha paunaruktyam | eteshām aprāmāṇye tad-dṛishṭāntena tad-eka-karttṛikatvena tad-eka-jātīyatvena vā sarva-vedāprāmāṇyaṁ sādhanīyam iti bhāvaḥ | siddhānta-sūtram | 58. "Na karma-karttṛi-sādhana-vaiguṇyāt" | Na vedāprāmāṇyaṁ karma-karttṛi-sādhana-vaiguṇyāt phalābhāvopapatteḥ | karmaṇāḥ kriyāyāḥ vaiguṇyam ayathāvidhitvādi | karttur vaiguṇyam avidvattvādi | sādhanasya havir-āder vaiguṇyam āprokshitatvādi | Yathokta-karmaṇaḥ phalābhāve hy anṛitatvam | na cha evam asti iti bhāvaḥ | vyāghātam pariharati | 59. "Abhyupetya kāla-bhede dosha-vachanāt" | na vyāghātaḥ iti śeshaḥ | Agny-ādhāna-kāle uditahomādikam abhyupetya svīkṛitya anudita-homādi-karaṇe pūrvokta-dosha-kathanād na vyāghātaḥ ity arthaḥ | paunaruktyam pariharati | 60. "Anuvādopapattes cha" | chaḥ punar-arthe | anuvādopapatteḥ punar na paunaruktyam | nishprayojanatve hi paunaruktyaṁ doshaḥ | ukta-sthale tv anuvādasya upapatteḥ prayojanasya sambhavāt | ekādaśa-sāmidhenīnām prathamottamayos trir abhidhāne hi panchadaśatvaṁ sambhavati | tathā-cha panchadaśatvaṁ śrūyate | "Imam aham bhrātṛivyam panchadaśāvareṇa vāg-vajreṇa cha bādhe yo 'smān dveshṭi yaṁ cha vayaṁ dvishmaḥ" iti | Anuvādasya sārthakatvaṁ loka-prasiddham iti āha | 61. "Vākya-vibhāgasya cha artha-grahaṇāt" | Vākya-vibhāgasya | anuvādatvena vibhakta-vākyasya artha-grahaṇāt prāyojana-svīkārāt | śishṭair iti śeshaḥ | śishṭāḥ hi vidhāyakānuvādakādi-bhedena vākyāṁ vibhajya anuvādakasyāpi saprayojanatvam manyante | Vede 'py evam iti bhāvaḥ | . . . Evam aprāmāṇya-sādhakaṁ nirasya prāmāṇyaṁ sādhayati | 68. "Mantrāyurveda-vach cha tat-prāmāṇyam āpta-prāmāṇyāt" | Āptasya vedakarttuḥ prāmāṇyād yathārthopadeśakatvād vedasya tad-uktatvam arthāl labdham | tena hetunā vedasya prāmāṇyam anumeyam | tatra dṛishṭāntam āha mantrāyurveda-vad iti | mantro vishādi-nāśakaḥ | āyurveda-bhāgaś cha veda-sthaḥ eva | tatra saṁvādena prāmāṇya-grahāt tad-dṛishṭāntena vedatvāvachhedena prāmāṇyam anumeyam | āptaṁ gṛihītam prāmāṇyaṁ yatra sa vedas tādṛiśena vedatvena prāmāṇyam anumeyam iti kechit |

"It had been declared (Nyāya Sūtras, i. 8) that verbal evidence is of two kinds, (1) that of which the subject-matter is seen, and (2) that of which the subject-matter is unseen. With the view, now, of testing

the authority of that verbal evidence which refers to unseen things, viz. the Veda, Gotama states the first side of the question. Sūtra 57. 'The Veda has no authority, since it has the defects of falsehood, self-contradiction, and tautology.' That verbal evidence, which is distinct from such as relates to visible objects, i.e. the Veda, has no authority. Why? Because it has the defects of falsehood, etc. Of these defects, that of 'falsehood' is established by the fact that we sometimes observe that no fruit results from performing the sacrifice for a son, or the like. 'Self-contradiction' is a discrepancy between a former and a later declaration. Thus the Veda says, 'he sacrifices when the sun is risen; he sacrifices when the sun is not yet risen; he sacrifices' [I cannot explain the next words]. 'A tawny [dog?] carries away the oblation of him who sacrifices after the sun has risen; a brindled [dog?] carries off the oblation of him who sacrifices before the sun has risen; and both of these two carry off the oblation of him who sacrifices.' . . . . Now here there is a contradiction between the words which enjoin sacrifices, and the words which intimate by censure that those sacrifices will occasion disastrous results. Again, the Veda has no authority, owing to its 'tautology,' as where it is said, 'he repeats the first thrice, he repeats the last thrice.' For as the lastness ultimately coincides with [?] the firstness, and as there is a triple repetition of the words, this sentence is tautological. Now since these particular sentences have no authority, the entire Veda will be proved by these specimens to stand in the same predicament, since all its other parts have the same author, or are of the same character, as these portions."

Here follows the Sūtra which conveys the established doctrine. "58. 'The Veda is not false; it is owing to some fault in the ceremonial, or the performer, or the instrument he employs, that any sacrifice is not followed by the promised results.' Faults in the ceremonial are such as its not being according to rule. Faults in the performer are such as ignorance. Faults in the instrument, i.e. in the clarified butter, etc., are such as its not being duly sprinkled, etc. For falsehood might be charged on the Veda, if no fruit resulted from a sacrifice when duly performed as prescribed; but such failure never occurs."

Gotama next repels the charge of self-contradiction in the Vedas. "59. 'There is no self-contradiction, for the fault is only imputed in case the sacrifice should be performed at a different time from that at first intended.' The fault imputed to these sacrifices in the text in question would [only] be imputed if, after agreeing, at the time of placing the sacrificial fire, to perform the sacrifice after sunrise, one were to change it to a sacrifice before sunrise; there is, therefore, no self-contradiction in the passage referred to."

He next rebuts the charge of tautology. "60. 'The Veda is not tautological because repetition may be proper.' The particle cha means 'again.' 'Again, since repetition may be proper, there is no tautology.' For repetition is only a fault when it is useless. But in the passage referred to, since repetition is proper, its utility is apparent. For when the first and the last of the eleven sāmidhenīs (forms of prayer used on throwing fuel into the fire) are each repeated thrice, the whole number of verses will be made up to fifteen.[108] Accordingly, this number of fifteen is mentioned in these words of the Veda, 'I smite this enemy who hates us, and whom we hate, with the last of the fifteen verses, and with the thunderbolt of my words.'"

He next observes that the advantage of repetition is commonly recognised. "61. 'And the Veda is not tautological, because the utility of this division of discourse is admitted,' i.e. because the necessity for such a division of language, that is, of a description of language characterized as reiterative, is acknowledged, viz. by the learned. For by dividing language into the different classes of injunctive, reiterative, etc., learned men recognise the uses of the reiterative also. And this applies to the Veda."

The author of the aphorisms then proceeds to state and to define (in Sūtras 62–67) the different sorts of discourse employed in the Veda, and to defend the propriety of reiteration. "Having thus refuted the arguments which aim at showing that the Veda is of no authority, he goes on to prove its authority. 68. 'The authority of the Veda, like that of the formulas, and the Āyur-veda (treatise on medicine) follows from the authority of the competent [persons from whom they proceeded].' Since the competent maker of the Veda possesses authority, i.e. inculcates truth, it results from the force of the terms that the Veda was uttered by a person of this character; and by this reasoning the authority of the Veda is to be inferred. He illustrates this by the case of the formulas and the Āyur-veda. By formulas (mantra) are meant the sentences which neutralize poison, etc., and the section containing the Āyur-veda forms part of the Veda. Now as the authority of these two classes of writings is admitted by general consent, the authority of everything which possesses the characteristics of the Veda must be inferred from this example. Some, however, explain the aphorism thus: a Veda is that in which authority is found or recognised. From such vedicity (or possession of the character of a Veda) the authority of any work is to be inferred."

[108] If there are in all eleven formulas, and two of these are each repeated thrice, we have (2 × 3 =) six to add to the nine (which remain of the original eleven), making (6 + 9 =) fifteen. See Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. pp. 89 and 393.

I add the greater part of the more detailed and distinct exposition of this aphorism given by the commentator Vātsyāyana (Bibliotheca Indica, p. 91): [109]

Kiṁ punar āyurvedasya prāmāṇyam | yad āyurvedena upadiśyate idaṁ kṛitvā ishṭam adhigachchhati idaṁ varjjayitvā 'nishṭaṁ jahāti tasya anushṭhīyamānasya tathā-bhāvaḥ satyārthatā-'viparyyayaḥ | mantra-padānāṁ cha visha-bhūtāśani-pratishedhārthānām prayoge 'rthasya tathā-bhāvaḥ etat prāmāṇyam | kiṁ-kṛitam etat | āpta-prāmāṇya-kṛitam | kim punar āptānām prāmāṇyam | sākshāt-kṛita-dharmatā bhūta-dayā yathā-bhūtārtha-chikhyāpayishā iti | āptāḥ khalu sākshāt-kṛita-dharmāṇaḥ idaṁ hātavyam ayam asya hāni-hetur idam asya adhigantavyam ayam asya adhigamana-hetur iti bhūtāny anukampante | teshāṁ khalu vai prāṇa-bhṛitāṁ svayam anavabudhyamānānāṁ na anyad upadeśād avabodha-kāraṇam asti | na cha anavabodhe samīhā varjjanaṁ vā | na vā akṛitvā svasti-bhāvaḥ | nā'py asya anyaḥ upakārako'py asti | hanta vayam ebhyo yathā-darśanaṁ yathā-bhūtam upadiśāmaḥ | te ime śrutvā pratipadyamānāḥ heyaṁ hāsyanty adhigantavyam eva adhigamishyanti iti | evam āptopadeśaḥ etena tri-vidhena āpta-prāmāṇyena parigṛihīto 'nushṭhīyamāno 'rthasya sādhako bhavati | evam āptopadeśaḥ pramāṇam evam āptāḥ pramāṇam | dṛishṭārthena āptopadeśena āyurvedena adṛishṭārtho veda-bhāgo 'numātavyaḥ pramāṇam iti | āpta-prāmāṇyasya hetoḥ samānatvād iti | asya api cha eka-deśo "grāma-kāmo yajeta" ity evam-ādi-dṛishṭārthas tena anumātavyam iti | loke cha bhūyān upadeśāśrayo vyavahāraḥ | laukikasya apy upadeshṭur upadeṣṭavyārtha-jñānena parānugighṛikshayā yathā-bhūtārtha-chikhyāpayishayā cha prāmāṇyam | tat-pari-

[109] A small portion of this comment, borrowed from Professor Banerjea's Dialogues on Hindu philosophy, was given in the 1st edition of this vol. p. 210.

grahād āptopadeśah pramāṇam iti | drashṭṛi-pravaktṛi-sāmānyāch cha anumānam ye eva āptāḥ vedārthānāṁ drashṭāraḥ pravaktāraś cha te eva āyurveda-prabhṛitīnām | ity āyurveda-prāmāṇyc-vad veda-prāmāṇyam anumātavyam iti | nityatvād veda-vākhyānām pramāṇatve tat-prāmāṇyam āpta-prāmāṇyād ity ayuktam | śabdasya vāchakatvād artha-pratipattau pramāṇatvaṁ na nityatvāt | nityatve hi sarvasya sarveṇa vachanāch chhabdārtha-vyavasthā 'nupapattiḥ | na anityatve vāchakatvam iti chet | na | laukikeshv adarśanāt | te 'pi nityāḥ iti chet | na | anāptopadeśād artha-visaṁvādo 'nupapannaḥ | . . . . Manvantara-yugāntareshu cha atītānāgateshu sampradāyābhyāsa-prayogāvichhedo vedānāṁ nityatvam āptaprāmāṇyāch cha prāmāṇyam | laukikeshu śabdeshu cha etat samānam |

"On what then does the authority of the Āyur-veda depend? The Āyur-veda instructs us that to do so and so, is the means of attaining what is desirable, and to avoid so and so is the means of escaping what is undesirable: and the fact of such action having been followed by the promised result coincides with the supposition that the book declares what is true. So, too, the authority of the formulæ for neutralizing poison, repelling demons, and arresting lightning, is shewn by their application fulfilling its object. How is this result obtained? By the authoritativeness of competent persons. But what is meant by the authoritativeness of competent persons? It means their intuitive perception of duty, their benevolence to all creatures, and their desire to declare the truth of things. Competent persons are those who have an intuitive perception of duty; and they shew their benevolence to all creatures by pointing out that so and so is to be avoided, and that such and such are the means of avoiding it, and that so and so is to be attained, and that such and such are the means of attaining it. 'For these creatures,' they reflect, 'being themselves unaware of such things, have no other means of learning them except such instruction; and in the absence of information they can make no effort either to attain or avoid anything; whilst without such action their welfare is not secured; and there is no one else who can help in this case: come let us instruct them according to the intuition we possess, and in conformity with the reality; and they hearing, and comprehending, will avoid what should be avoided, and obtain what should be obtained.' Thus the instruction afforded by competent persons according to this threefold character of their authoritativeness [viz. (1) intuition, (2) benevolence, and (3) desire to teach], being received, and acted upon, effects the object desired. And so the instruction given by competent persons is authority, and these competent persons are authorities. From the Āyur-veda, which conveys instruction given by competent persons in reference to objects perceptible by the senses, it is to be inferred that that part also of the Veda which is concerned with imperceptible objects[110] is authoritative, since the cause, the authoritativeness of competent persons, is the same in both cases; and the same inference is to be drawn from the fact that a portion of the injunctions of the last mentioned part of the Veda also have reference to perceptible objects, as in the case of the precept, 'Let the man who desires landed property sacrifice,' etc., etc. In common life, too, men usually rely upon instruction. And the authority of an ordinary instructor depends (1) upon his knowledge of the matter to be taught, (2) upon his disposition to shew kindness to others, and (3) upon his desire to declare the truth. From its being accepted, the instruction imparted by competent persons constitutes proof. And from the fact that the seers and declarers are the same in both cases, viz. that the competent seers and declarers of the contents of the (rest of the) Veda are the very same as those of the Āyur-veda, etc., we must infer that the authoritativeness of the former is like that of the latter. But on the hypothesis that the authority of the Vedic injunctions is derived from their eternity, it will be improper to say that it arises from the authoritativeness of competent persons, since the authority of words as exponents of meanings springs from their declarative character, and not from their eternity. For on the supposition of the eternity of words, every (word) would express every (thing), which would be contrary to the fixity of their signification. If it be objected that unless words are eternal, they cannot be declarative, we deny this, as it is not witnessed in the case of secular words. If it be urged again that secular words also are eternal, we must again demur, since the discrepancy of purport arising from the injunctions of incompetent persons would be at variance with this." After some further argumentation Vātsyāyana concludes: "The eternity of the Vedas [really] consists in the unbroken continuity of their tradition, study, and application, both in the Manvantaras and [110] Compare the commentator's remarks introductory to the Nyāya aphorism ii. 57, quoted above, p. 112.

Yugas which are past, and those which are to come; whilst their authority arises from the authoritativeness of the competent persons (who uttered them). And this is common to them with secular words."

The phrase sākshāt-kṛita-dharmāṇaḥ, "possessing an intuitive perception of duty," which is employed by Vātsyāyana in the preceding extract as a definition of āptāḥ, "competent persons," is one which had previously been applied by Yāska (Nirukta, i. 20) to describe the character of the rishis: Sākshāt-kṛita-dharmāṇaḥ ṛishayo babhūvuḥ | te 'varebhyo 'sākshāt-kṛita-dharmabhyaḥ upadeśena mantrān samprāduḥ | upadeśāya glāyanto 'vare bilma-grahaṇāya imaṁ granthaṁ samāmnāsishur vedaṁ cha vedāṅgāni cha | "The rishis, who had an intuitive perception of duty, handed down the hymns by (oral) instruction to men of later ages, who had not that intuitive perception. These, declining in their power of giving instruction, compiled this work (the Nirukta), the Veda, and the Vedāngas, in order to facilitate the comprehension of details."

The Vaiśeshika.—Among the aphorisms of this system also there are some which, in opposition to the Mīmānsakas, assert, 1st, that the Vedas are the product of an intelligent mind; and 2nd (if the interpretation of the commentator is to be received) that they have been uttered by God.[111]

The second aphorism of the first section of the first book is as follows:

Yato 'bhyudaya-niśśreyasa-siddhiḥ sa dharmaḥ |

"Righteousness is that through which happiness and future perfection[112] are attained."

After explaining this the commentator proceeds to introduce the next aphorism by the following remarks:

Nanu nivṛitti-lakshaṇo dharmas tattva-jñāna-dvārā niśśreyasa-hetur ity

[111] Of the aphorisms, which I am about to quote, the first has been translated by Dr. Ballantyne (who published a small portion of these Sūtras with an English version in 1851); and it, as well as the others, is briefly commented upon by the Rev. Prof. Banerjea, in his Dialogues on Hindu Philosophy, pp. 474 ff., and Pref. p. ix., note. See my article in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, No. xx. for 1852, entitled "Does the Vaiśeshika philosophy acknowledge a Deity or not?" from which the translations now given have been transferred with but little alteration and a few additions. And compare Dr. Roer's German translation of the Vaiśeshika aphorisms in the Journal of the German Oriental Society for 1867, pp. 309 ff.

[112] The Commentator explains abhyudaya as = tattva-jñānam, "a knowledge of the reality," and niśśreyasa as ātyantikī duḥkha-nivṛittiḥ, "the complete cessation of suffering."

attra śrutiḥ pramāṇam | śruter eva prāmāṇye vayaṁ vipratipadyāmahe "anṛita-vyāghāta-punarukta-doṣebhyaḥ" | . . . . na cha āmnāya-pratipādakaṁ kinchid asti nityatve viprattipattau | nitya-nirdoshatvam api sandigdham | paurusheyatve tu bhrama-pramāda-vipratipatti-karaṇāpāṭavādi-saṁbhāvanayā āptoktatvam api sandigdham eva iti na niśśreyasaṁ na vā tattra tattva-jnānaṁ dvāraṁ na vā dharmaḥ iti sarvam etad ākulam | ataḥ āha "tad-vachanād āmnāyasya prāmāṇyam" | "tad" ity anupakrāntam api prasiddhi-siddhatayā īśvaram parāmṛiśati | yathā "tad-aprāmāṇyam anṛita-vyāghāta-punarukta-dṛshebhyaḥ" iti Gautamīya-sūtre tach-chhabdena anupakrānto 'pi vedaḥ parāmṛiśyate | tathā cha tad-vachanāt tena īśvareṇa praṇayanād āmnāyāsya vedasya prāmāṇyam | yadvā "tad" iti sannihitaṁ dharmam eva parāmṛiśati | tathā cha dharmasya "vachanāt" pratipādanād "āmnāyasya" vedasya prāmāṇyam | yad hi vākyam prāmāṇikam artham pratipādayati tat pramāṇam eva yataḥ ity arthaḥ | īśvaras tad-āptatvaṁ cha sādhayishyate |

"But may it not be objected here that it is the Veda which proves that righteousness, in the form of abstinence from action, is, by means of the knowledge of absolute truth, the cause of future perfection; but that we dispute the authority of the Veda because it is chargeable with the faults of falsehood, contradiction, and tautology[113] . . . . And further, there is nothing to prove the authority of the Veda, for its eternity is disputed, its eternal faultlessness is doubted, and if it have a personal author, the fact of this person being a competent utterer is questioned, since there is an apprehension of error, inadvertence, contradiction, and want of skill in composition attaching to him. Thus there is neither any such thing as future perfection, nor is either a knowledge of absolute truth the instrument thereof, or righteousness. Thus everything is perplexed."

In answer to all this the author of the aphorism says:

"The authority of the sacred record arises from its being uttered by Him."

"Here," says the commentator, "the word tad (His) refers to Īśvara (God); as, though no mention of Him has yet been introduced, He is proved by common notoriety to be meant; just as in the aphorism of Gautama: 'Its want of authority is shown by the faults of falsehood, [113] Here the same illustrations are given as in the commentary on the Nyāya aphorisms, quoted above, pp. 113 ff.

contradiction, and tautology,' the Veda, though not previously introduced, is intended by the word tad.[114] And so [the meaning of the aphorism is that] the authority of the sacred record, i.e. the Veda, is proved by its being spoken by Him, composed by Him, by Īśvara. Or, tad (its)[114] may denote dharma (duty) which immediately precedes; and then [the sense will be that] the authority of the sacred record, i.e. the Veda, arises from its declaring, i.e. establishing, duty, for the text which establishes any authoritative matter must be itself an authority. The proof of Īśvara and his competence will be hereafter stated." The commentator then goes on to answer the charges of falsehood, contradiction, and tautology alleged against the Veda.

The next aphorism which I shall quote (vi. 1, 1) is thus introduced by the commentator:

Buddhi-pūrvā vākya-kṛitir vede | saṁsāra-mūla-kāraṇayor dharmādharmayoḥ parīkshā shashṭhādhyāyārthaḥ | dharmādharmau cha "svargakāmo yajeta" "na kalanjam bhakshayed" ityādi-vidhi-nishedha-balakalpanīyau vidhi-nishedha-vākyayoḥ prāmāṇye sati syātām | tat-prāmāṇyaṁ cha vaktur yathārtha-vākyārtha-jñāna-lakshaṇa-guṇa-pūrvakatvād upapadyate | svataḥ prāmāṇyasya nishedhāt | ataḥ prathamaṁ veda-prāmāṇya-prayojaka-guṇa-sādhanaṁ upakramate | "vākya-kṛitir" vākya-rachanā | sā buddhi-pūrvā vaktṛi-yathārtha-vākyārtha-jñāna-pūrvā | vākya-rachanātvāt | "nadī-tīre pancha phalāni santi" ity asmad-ādi-vākya-rachanā-vat | "vede" iti vākya-samudāye ity arthaḥ | tattra samudāyināṁ vākyānāṁ kṛitiḥ pakshaḥ | na cha asmad-ādi-buddhi-pūrvaka-

[114] For the sake of the reader who does not know Sanskrit, it may be mentioned that tad being in the crude, or uninflected form, may denote any of the three genders, and may be rendered either 'his,' 'hers,' or 'its.' I may observe that the alternative explanation which the commentator gives of the Aphorism, i. 1, 3, viz. that the authority of the Veda arises from its being declarative of duty, is a much less probable one than the other, that its authority is derived from its being the utterance of God; for it does not clearly appear how the subject of a book can establish its authority; and, in fact, the commentator, when he states this interpretation, is obliged, in order to give it the least appearance of plausibility, to assume the authoritative character of the precepts in the Veda, and from this assumption to infer the authority of the book which delivers them. I may also observe that Jayanārāyaṇa Tarkapanchānana, the author of the Gloss on S'aṅkara Miśra's Commentary, takes no notice of this alternative interpretation; and that in his comment on the same aphorism when repeated at the close of the work (x. 2, 9) S'aṅkara Miśra himself does not put it forward a second time. Dr. Roer (Journ. Germ. Or. Soc. for 1867, p. 310) argues in favour of the former of the two interpretations as the true one.

tvena anyathā-siddhiḥ | "svarga-kāmo yajeta" ityādāv ishṭa-sādhanatāyāḥ kāryyatāyāḥ vā asmad-ādi-buddhy-agocharatvāt | tena svatantra-purusha-pūrvakatvaṁ vede siddhyati | vedatvaṁ cha śabda-tad-upajīvi-pramāṇātiriktа-pramāṇa-janya-pramity-avishayārthakatve sati śabda-janya-vākyārtha-jnānājanya-pramāṇa-śabdatvam |

"An examination of righteousness and unrighteousness, which are the original causes of the world,[115] forms the subject of the 6th section. Now, righteousness and unrighteousness are to be constituted by virtue of such injunctions and prohibitions as these: 'The man who desires paradise should sacrifice,' 'Let no one eat garlic,' etc., provided these injunctions and prohibitions be authoritative. And this authoritativeness depends upon the fact of the utterer [of these injunctions or prohibitions] possessing the quality of understanding the correct meaning of sentences, for the supposition of inherent authoritativeness is untenable. The author, therefore, first of all enters upon the proof of that quality which gives rise to the authoritativeness of the Veda.

"Aphorism vi. 1. 1.—'There is in the Veda a construction of sentences which is produced (lit. preceded) by intelligence.'"

"The 'construction of sentences,' the composition of sentences, 'is produced by intelligence,' i.e. by a knowledge of the correct meaning of sentences on the part of the utterer [of them]; [and this is proved] by the fact of these sentences possessing an arrangement like the arrangement of such sentences as 'There are five fruits on the river side,' composed by such persons as ourselves. 'In the Veda,' i.e. in the collection of sentences (so called). Here the construction of the sentences composing the collection is the subject of the proposition which is asserted. And this construction must not be ascribed to a wrong cause by assuming that it was the work of a [limited] intelligence such as ours. [Because it was not a limited intelligence which produced these sentences]. For it is not an object of apprehension to the understandings of persons like ourselves that such injunctions as, 'He who desires paradise should sacrifice,' are the instruments of obtaining what we desire, or that they are obligatory in themselves. Hence in the case of the Veda the agency of a self-dependent person is established [since these matters could be known by such a person alone.] And while the contents of the Veda are not the subjects of a knowledge produced by any proof distinct from verbal proof, and the proofs dependent thereon, Vedicity, or the characteristic nature of the Veda, consists in its being composed of (authoritative) words, whose authority does not spring from a knowledge of the meaning of sentences arising from words [but depends on the underived omniscience of its author]." "Or, Vedicity consists in being one or other of the four collections, the Rich, Yajush, Sāman, or Atharvan."[116]

[115] This, I suppose, means that the existence of the world in its present or developed form, is necessary in order to furnish the means of rewarding righteousness and punishing unrighteousness.

I will introduce the next aphorism (x. 2, 9) which I propose to cite (and which is a repetition of aphorism i. 1, 3), by adducing some remarks of the commentator on the one which immediately precedes it, viz. x. 2, 8:

Nanu śruti-prāmāṉye sati syād evam | tad eva tu durlabham | na hi mīmāṁsakānām iva nitya-nirdoshatvena śruti-prāmāṉyaṁ tvayā ishyate paurusheyatvenābhyupagamāt purushasya cha bhrama-pramāda-vipralipsādi-sambhavāt | ataḥ āha "dṛishṭābhāve" iti | dṛishṭam purushāntare 'smad-ādau bhrama-pramāda- [viprati?] lipsādikaṁ purusha-dūshaṇaṁ tad-abhāve sati ity arthaḥ | kshiti-karttṛitvena veda-vaktṛitvena vā 'numitasya purusha-dhaureyasya nirdoshatvena eva upasthiteḥ | tathā cha tad-vachasāṁ na nirabhidheyatā na viparītābhidheyatā na nishprayojanābhidheyatā | bhūtendriya-manasāṁ doshād bhrama-pramāda-kāraṇāpāṭavādi-prayuktāḥ eva vachasām aviśuddhayaḥ sambhāvyante | na cha īśvara-vachasi tāsāṁ sambhavaḥ | tad uktam "rāgājnānādibhir vaktā grastatvād anṛitaṁ vadet | te cheśvare na vidyante sa brūyāt katham anyathā" | nanu tena īśvareṇa vedaḥ praṇītaḥ ity atra eva viprapattir ataḥ āha | "tad-vachanāt āmnāyasya prāmāṉyam" | iti śāstra-parisamāptau "tad-vachanāt" tena īśvareṇa vachanāt praṇayanād "āmnāyasya" vedasya prāmāṉyam | tathā hi | vedās tāvat paurusheyāḥ vākyatvād iti sādhitam | na cha asmad-ādayas teshāṁ sahasra-śākhāvachchhinnānāṁ vaktāraḥ sambhāvyante atīndriyārthatvāt | na cha atīndriyārtha-darśino 'smad-ādayaḥ | kincha āptoktāḥ vedāḥ mahājana-parigṛihītatvāt | yad na āptoktaṁ na tad mahājana-parigṛihītaṁ | mahājana-parigṛihītaṁ cha idam | tasmād āptoktam | sva-tantra-purusha-praṇītatvaṁ cha āptoktatvam | mahājana-parigṛihītatvaṁ cha sarva-darśanāntaḥpāti-purushānushṭhīyamānārthatvam | kvachit phalābhāvaḥ karma-karttṛi-sādhana-vaiguṇyād

[116] The last words are a translation of the conclusion of Jayanārāyaṇa's gloss.

ity uktam | karttṛi-smaraṇābhavād na evam iti chet | na | karttṛi-smaraṇasya pūrvam eva sādhitatvāt | taṭ-praṇītatvaṁ cha sva-tantra-purusha-praṇītatvād eva siddham | na tv asmad-ādīnāṁ sahasra-śākha-veda-pranayane svātantryaṁ sambhavati ity uktatvāt | kincha pramāyāḥ guṇa-janyatvena vaidika-pramāyāḥ api guṇa-janyatvam āvaśyakam | tattra cha guṇo vaktṛi-yathārtha-vākyārtha-jnānam eva vāchyaḥ | tathā cha tādṛiśaḥ eva vede vaktā yaḥ svargāpūrvādi-vishayaka-sākshātkāravān | tādṛiśaś cha na īśvarād anyaḥ iti sushṭhu |

"Now all this will be so, provided the Veda is authoritative: but this condition is the very one which is difficult to attain; for you do not hold, like the Mīmānsakas, that the authority of the Veda arises from its eternal faultlessness; since you admit that it has a personal author, and error, inadvertence, and a desire to deceive are incident to such a person. It is with a view to this objection that the writer says in his aphorism, 'In the absence of what is seen,' i.e. in the absence of those personal faults which are seen in other persons like ourselves,[117] such as error, inadvertence, and a desire to deceive: for the Supreme Person who is inferred from the creation of the world, or the authorship of the Veda, can only exist in a state of freedom from fault; and, consequently, neither want of meaning, nor contradiction of meaning, nor uselessness of meaning, can be predicated of his words. Incorrectnesses in words are to be apprehended as the results of error, inadvertence, or unskilfulness in composition, arising from some defect in the elements, the senses, or the mind. But none of these things is to be imagined in the word of Īśvara (the Lord). And this has been expressed in the following verse: 'A speaker may utter falsehood, from being possessed by affection, ignorance, and the like; but these [defects] do not exist in God; how then can he speak what is otherwise [than true]?'

"But may not the fact that the Veda is composed by God be disputed? In consequence of this, the author says (in the next aphorism):

x. 2, 9. 'The authority of the Vedic record arises from its being uttered by Him.'

[117] A different interpretation is given by the commentator to this phrase dṛishṭābhāve, in an earlier aphorism in which it occurs, viz. vi. 2, 1. He there understands it to mean that where there is no visible motive for a prescribed action, an invisible one must be presumed (yattra dṛishṭam prayojanaṁ nopalabhyate tattra adṛishṭam prayojanaṁ kalpanīyam).

"Thus at the end of his treatise [the writer lays it down that] the authority of the Veda is derived from its being His word, viz. from its being spoken, i.e. composed by Him, i.e. by Īśvara. As thus: The Vedas are derived from a person, because they are formed of sentences. This has been proved. And persons like ourselves cannot be conceived as the utterers of these Vedas, which are distinguished by having thousands of Śākhās (recensions), because their objects are such as lie beyond the reach of the senses; and persons like us have no intuition into anything beyond the reach of the senses. Further, the Vedas [are not only derived from a personal author, but they] have been uttered by a competent author (āpta), because they have been embraced by great men. Whatever has not been uttered by a competent person is not embraced by great men: but this (book) is embraced by great men: therefore it has been uttered by a competent person. Now, composition by a self-dependent person is utterance by a competent person; and the reception (of the Veda) by great men is the observance of its contents by persons who are adherents of all the different philosophical schools: and (the infallibility of the Veda is defended by that which) has been already said, viz. that any occasional failure in the results (of ceremonies prescribed in the Veda) is owing to some defect in the rite, or in the performer, or in the instruments employed [and not to any fallibility in the Veda].

"If it be objected to this reasoning, that no author (of the Veda) is recollected, we rejoin, that this is not true, because it has been formerly proved that the author is remembered. And that it was composed by Him is proved by the simple fact of its being composed by a self-dependent person; and because it has been said that the self-dependence [or unassisted ability] of people like us in the composition of the Veda, consisting, as it does, of a thousand Śākhās, is inconceivable. And since authority (in a writing in general) springs from a quality [in its author], it necessarily follows that the authority of the Veda also springs from a quality. And there the quality in question must be declared to be the speaker's knowledge of the correct meaning of sentences. And thus (we have shewn that) there is such an utterer of the Veda, who possesses an intuitive knowledge of paradise, and of the yet unseen consequences of actions, etc., and such an utterer is no other than Īśvara. Thus all is satisfactory."

The ultimate proofs, then, of the binding authority of the Veda are, according to the commentator, 1st, its extent and subject-matter, and 2ndly, its unanimous reception by great men, adherents of all the different orthodox systems. Of course these arguments have no validity except for those who see something supernatural in the Veda, and on the assumption that the great men who embraced it were infallible; and therefore as against the Bauddhas and other heretics who saw nothing miraculous in the Vedas, and consequently regarded all their adherents as in error, they were utterly worthless. But possibly it was not the object of the commentator (for the greater part of the argumentation is his, not that of the author of the Aphorisms) to state the ultimate reasons on which the authority of the Vedas would have to be vindicated against heretics, but merely to explain the proper grounds on which the orthodox schools who already acknowledged that authority ought to regard it as resting; i.e. not, as the Mīmānsakas held their eternal faultlessness, but the fact of their being uttered by an intelligent and omniscient author; whose authorship, again, was proved by the contents of the Vedas having reference to unseen and future matters of which only an omniscient Being could have any knowledge; while the fact of these revelations in regard to unseen things having actually proceeded from such a Being, and being therefore true, was guaranteed by the unanimous authority of the wisest men among the faithful.

As it is a matter of some interest to know what is the nature of inspiration, or supernatural knowledge, as conceived by the Vaiśeshikas, I shall quote some passages bearing on this subject from the aphorisms, or from their expounder, Śankara Miśra. In his remarks on Aphorism viii. 1, 2 (p. 357), the commentator states that opinion (jnāna) is of two kinds, true (vidyā) and false (avidyā); and that the former (vidyā) is of two descriptions, arising from perception, inference, recollection, and the infallible intuition "peculiar to rishis" (Tach cha jnānaṁ dvividhaṁ vidyā cha avidyā cha | vidyā chaturvidhā pratyaksha-laingika-smṛity-ārsha-lakshaṇā). Perception or intuition, again, is of different kinds or degrees (Aphorism ix. 1, 11–15, pp. 385 ff.). Aphorism ix. 1, 11 (p. 386), is as follows:

Tad evam bhāvābhāva-vishayakaṁ laukika-pratyakshaṁ nirūpya yogi-pratyakshaṁ nirūpayitum prakaraṇāntaram ārabhate | ix. 1, 11. "Ātmany ātma-manasoḥ saṁyoga-viśeshād ātma-pratyaksham" | jnānam ut-

padyate iti śeshaḥ | dvividhās tāvad yoginaḥ samāhitāntaḥkaraṇāḥ ye "yuktāḥ" ity abhidhīyante asamāhitāntaḥkaraṇāś cha ye "viyuktāḥ" ity abhidhīyante | tattra yuktāḥ sākshātkartavyā vastuny ādareṇa mano nidhāya nididhyāsanavantaḥ | teshām ātmani svātmani parātmani cha jñānam utpadyate | "ātma-pratyaksham" iti | ātmā sākshātkāra-vishayo yattra jñāne tat tathā | yadyapy asmad-ādīnām api kadāchid ātma-jñānam asti tathāpy avidyā-tiraskṛitatvāt tad asat-kalpam ity uktam | "ātma-manasos sannikarsha-viśeshād" iti yoga-ja-dharmānugrahaḥ ātma-manasoḥ sannikarsha-viśeshas tasmād ity arthaḥ |

"Having thus defined ordinary perception which has for its objects existence and non-existence, the author, with the view of determining the character of the intuition of yogins, says:- 'From a particular concentration of both the soul and the mind[118] on the soul, arises the perception (or intuition) of soul.' On this the commentator remarks: 'There are two kinds of yogins (intent, or contemplative, persons), (1) those whose inner sense is fixed samāhitāntaḥkaraṇāḥ), who are called (yuktāḥ) united (i.e. with the object of contemplation), and (2) those whose inner sense is no longer fixed, and who are called disunited (viyuktāḥ).[119] Of these the first class, who are called 'united,' fix their minds with reverence on the thing which is to be the object of intuition, and contemplate it intently. In this way knowledge arises in their souls regarding their own souls, and the souls of others. 'Intuition of soul,' that is, a knowledge in which soul is the perceptible object of intuition. Now, although persons like ourselves have sometimes a knowledge of soul, yet from this knowledge being affected by ignorance, it has been said to be like what is unreal. 'From a particular concentration of the soul and the mind;' that is, from a particular conjunction of the soul and the mind which is effected by means of the virtue derived from yoga." See also Aphorism xv. p. 390.

At the conclusion of his remarks (Bibl. Ind. p. 408) on the third sort of true knowledge (referred to in p. 357, Bibl. Ind.), viz. recollection, the commentator remarks that the author of the aphorisms does not make any separate mention of the fourth kind of knowlege, viz. infallible intuition:

[118] The "mind" (manas) is regarded by the Indian philosophers as distinct from the soul, and as being merely an internal organ.

[119] This class is the more perfect of the two, as appears from the gloss of Jayanārāyaṇa: ayam api viśishṭa-yogavattvād viyuktaḥ ity uchyate.

ix. 2, 6. . . . . Ārshaṁ jnānam sūtra-kṛitā pṛithaṁ na lakshitam | yogi-pratyakshāntarbhāvitam | padārtha-pradeśākhye tu prakaraṇe tad uktam | tad yathā | "āmnāya-vidhātṛīṇām ṛishīṇām atītānāgata-varttamāneshv atīndriyārtheshv artheshu dharmādishu granthopanibaddheshu vā lingādy-anapekshād ātma-manasoḥ saṁyogād dharma-viśeshāch cha prātibhaṁ jnānaṁ yad utpadyate tad ārsham iti | tach cha kadāchil laukikānām api bhavati, yathā kanyakā vadati "śvo me bhrātā gantā iti hṛidayam me kathayati" iti |

"Rishis' (ārsha) knowledge," he says, "is not separately defined by the author of the aphorisms, but is included in the intuition of yogins.[120] But the following statement has been made (in reference to it) in the section on the categories: 'Rishis' (ārsha) knowledge is that which, owing to a conjunction of the soul and the mind, independent of inference, etc., and owing to a particular species of virtue, illuminates those rishis who have composed the record of the Vedas (āmnāya-vidhātṛīṇām), in reference to such matters, whether past, future, or present, as are beyond the reach of the senses, or in reference to matters of duty, etc., recorded in books,' etc. And this sort of knowledge is also sometimes manifested by ordinary persons, as when a girl says, 'my heart tells me that my brother will go to-morrow.'" See also Aphorism ix. 2, 13 (Bibl. Ind. pp. 414, 415).

The Tarka-sangraha, another Vaiśeshika work, also affirms the divine authorship of the Veda in these words:[121] Vākyaṁ dvividhaṁ laukikaṁ vaidikaṁ cha | vaidikam Īśvaroktatvāt sarvam eva pramāṇam laukikaṁ tu āptoktam pramāṇam anyad apramāṇam | "Sentences are of two kinds, Vedic and secular. Vedic sentences, from being uttered by Īśvara, are all proof [or authoritative]. Of secular sentences, those only which are uttered by competent persons (āpta) are proof; the rest are not proof."

In this text, the authority of the Veda is founded on its being uttered by Īśvara; and this characteristic is regarded as limited to the Veda.

[120] It had been already noticed by Professor Max Müller in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vii. p. 311, that "the Vaiśeshikas, like Kapila, include the intuition of enlightened rishis under the head of pratyaksha (intuition), and thus separate it decidedly from aitihya, 'tradition.'" He also quotes the commentator's remark about a similar intuition being discoverable among ordinary persons, which he thinks is not "without a certain irony."

[121] See Dr. Ballantyne's ed. with Hindī and English Versions, p. 40 of the Sanskrit.

On the other hand, such secular works as proceed from competent persons (āpta) are also declared to possess authority. Here, therefore, a distinction is drawn between the authority of the Veda and that of all other writings, however authoritative, inasmuch as the former was uttered by Īśvara, while the latter have only been uttered by some competent person (āpta). But in the Nyāya aphorism, ii. 68, quoted and commented upon above (p. 114), the authority of the Veda itself is made to rest on the authority of the wise, or competent persons (āpta), from whom it proceeded.[122] In this aphorism, therefore, either the word "āpta" must mean "Īśvara," or we must suppose a difference of view between the author of the aphorism on the one hand, and the writers of the Vaiśeshika aphorisms and the Tarka-sangraha on the other. We shall see from the next extract that the Kusumānjali coincides with the latter.

I quote from the work just named (of which Udayana Āchārya is the author), and its commentary,[123] some statements of the doctrine maintained by the author regarding the origin and authority of the Veda. Mr. Colebrooke (Misc. Ess. i. 263, or p. 166 of Williams and Norgate's ed.) speaks of this treatise as being accompanied by a commentary of Nārāyaṇa Tīrtha; but the one which is printed in the Calcutta edition, as well as in Professor Cowell's, is by Haridāsa Bhaṭṭāchārya. The object of the work is to prove the existence of a personal god (Īśvara), in opposition to various other antagonistic theories.

I. Kusumānjali, 2nd Stavaka, at the commencement: Anyathā 'pi paraloka-sādhanānushṭhāna-sambhavād iti dvitīya-vipratipattiḥ | Anyathā Īśvaraṁ vinā 'pi paraloka-sādhana-yāgādy-anushṭhānaṁ sambhavati yāgādeḥ svarga-sādhanatvasya veda-gamyatvāt | nitya-nirdoshatayā cha vedasya prāmāṇyam | mahājanc-parigrahāch cha prāmāṇyasya grahaḥ iti veda-kāraṇatayā na Īśvara-siddhiḥ | yogardhi-sampādita-sā.vajnya-Kapi-

[122] The following words are put by the author of the Vishṇu Purāṇa (iii. ch. 18; Wilson, vol. iii. p. 212) into the mouth of the deluder who promulgated the Bauddha and other heresies: Na hy āpta-vādāḥ nabhaso nipatanti mahāsurāḥ | yuktimad vachanaṁ grāhyam mayā 'nyais cha bhavad-vidhaiḥ | "Words of the competent do not, great Asuras, fall from the sky. It is only words supported by reasons that should be admitted by me and others like yourselves."

[123] This book was published at the Sanskrit Press, Calcutta, in the S'aka year, 1769. A new edition was published by Professor Cowell in 1864, accompanied by an English translation. I have availed myself of this excellent version to correct a good many mistakes in my own.

lādi-pūrvakaḥ eva vā vedo 'stv ity atra āha | "pramāyāḥ paratantratvāt sarga-pralaya-sambhavāt | tad-anyasminn aviśvāsād na vidhāntara-sambhavaḥ" | Śābdī pramā vaktṛi-yathārtha-vakyārtha-dhī-rūpa-guṇa-janyā iti guṇādhāratdyā Īśvara-siddhiḥ | nanu sakartṛike 'stu yathārtha-vākyārtha-dhīr guṇaḥ | akartṛike cha vede nirdoshatvam eva prāmāṇya-prayojakam astu mahājana-parigṛheṇa cha prāmāṇya-grahaḥ ity ata āha | "sarga-pralaya-sambhavād" iti | pralayottaram pūrva-veda-nāśād uttara-vedasya katham prāmāṇyam mahājana-parigrahasyāpi tadā abhāvāt | śabdasya anityatvam utpanno ga-kāraḥ iti pratīti-siddham | pravāhāvichchheda-rūpa-nityatvam api pralaya-sambhavād nāsti iti bhāvaḥ | Kapilādayaḥ eva sargādau pūrva-sargābhyasta-yoga-janya-dharmānubhavāt sākshāt-kṛita-sakalārthāḥ karttāraḥ santu | ity ata āha | "tad-anyasminn" iti | viśva-nirmāṇa-samarthāḥ animādi-śakti-sampannāḥ yadi sarvajnās tadā lāghavād eka eva tādṛiśaḥ svīkriyatām | sa eva bhagavān Īśvaraḥ | anityāsarva-vishayaka-jnānavati cha viśvāsaḥ eva nāsti | iti vaidika-vyavahāra-vilopaḥ | iti na vidhāntara-sambhavaḥ Īśvarānangīkartṛi-naye iti śeshaḥ |

"The second objection is that [there is no proof of an Īśvara], since the means of attaining paradise can be practised independently of any such Being. That is to say, the celebration of sacrifices, etc., which are the instruments of obtaining paradise, can take place otherwise, i.e. even without an Īśvara (God). For the fact that sacrifices, etc., are the instruments of obtaining paradise is to be learned from the Veda, while the authority of the Veda rests upon its eternal faultlessness; and the [immemorial] admission of that authority results from its reception by illustrious men. Now in this way there is no proof of the existence of a God to be derived from the idea that he is the cause of the Veda. Or let it be supposed that the Veda was preceded [composed] by Kapila and other sages, who by their wealth in devotion had acquired omniscience.

"In answer to all this the author says: [verse] 'Since truth depends on an external source; since creation and dissolution occur, and since there is no confidence in any other than God, therefore no other manner can be conceived [in which the Veda originated, except from God].' [Comment] Verbal truth [or authoritativeness] is derived from the attribute, possessed by its promulgator, of comprehending the true sense of words [i.e. in order to constitute the Veda an authoritative rule of duty, it must have proceeded from an intelligent being who understood the sense of what he uttered]; and since God is the substratum of this attribute [of intelligence], there is proof of his existence.

"But it may be said that if the Veda had a maker, then, indeed, such comprehension of the true sense of words as you insist upon may be a quality belonging to him; but if the Veda had no maker, let it be its faultlessness which imparts to it its authority, while the [immemorial] admission of that authority results from its reception by illustrious men.

"In answer to this the author says: 'Since creation and dissolution occur.' Since the previous Veda [the one which existed during the former mundane period] perished after the dissolution of the universe, how can the subsequent Veda [i.e. the one supposed by our opponents to have existed during the dissolution] be authoritative, since there was not then even any reception of it by illustrious men [who also had all become extinct at the dissolution]. And further, the non-eternity of sound is proved by the conviction we have that letters such as G are produced, [and not eternal]: and even that eternity (or perpetuity) of the Veda which consists in unbroken continuity of tradition, does not exist, as there is probable proof of a dissolution.[124] But, again, it is urged that Kapila and other saints—who, from their perception of duty, springing from the practice of devotion during the former mundane period, had acquired an intuitive knowledge of every subject—may at the creation have been the authors of the Veda. This is answered in the words, 'since there is no confidence in any other but God.' If persons capable of creating the universe and possessing the faculty of minuteness be omniscient, then, for the sake of simplicity, let one such person only be admitted, namely, the divine Īśvara.[125] And no confidence can be reposed in any person who is not eternal, and who is not possessed of a knowledge which extends to all objects. Thus the Vedic tradition disappears. And so he concludes that no other manner [of the origination of the Veda] can be conceived [except [124] The writers on the other side seem to reply to this Naiyāyika objection about the interruption of the tradition of the Veda through the dissolution of the universe, by saying that the Veda was retained in the memory of Brahmā or the Rishis during the interval while the dissolution lasted. See Kullūka on Manu, i. 23, above, p. 6; and the passage of Kaiyyaṭa on the Mahābhāshya, above, p. 96.

[125] "The law of parsimony bids us assume only one such," etc.—Cowell.

from Īśvara]; that is, in the system of those who deny an Īśvara [no way is pointed out]."

II. Kusumānjali, iii. 16.—"Na pramāṇam anāptoktir nādṛishṭe kvachid āptatā | adṛiśya-dṛishṭau sarvajño na cha nityāgamaḥ kshamaḥ" | ayaṁ hi sarva-kartṛitvābhāvavedakaḥ śabdaḥ anāptoktaś ched na pramāṇam | āptoktaś ched etad-artha-gochara-jñānavato nitya-sarva-vishayaka-jñānavattvam indriyādy-abhāvāt | āgamasya cha nityatvaṁ dūshitam eva prāg iti veda-kāro nityaḥ sarvajñaḥ siddhyati |

[Verse] "The word of an incompetent person is not authoritative; nor can there be any competency in regard to a thing unseen [by the speaker]. To perceive invisible things, a person must be omniscient; and an eternal scripture is impossible. [Comment] This [supposed] scriptural testimony, denying the fact of there being a creator of all things, if uttered by an incompetent person, would be no proof. If it was uttered by a competent person, then the person who possessed an acquaintance with this circumstance [that there was no creator] would be master of a knowledge which was eternal, and universal in its range, since he would not be limited by any bodily organs. And we have previously disproved the eternity of any scripture (see the first extract from the Kusumānjali, above). Consequently an omniscient and eternal author of the Veda is established."

III. Kusumānjali, v. 1.—"Kāryyāyojana-dhṛityādeḥ padāt pratyayataḥ śruteḥ | vākyāt sankhyā-viśeshāch cha sādhyo viśvavid avyayaḥ" | . . . Pratyayataḥ prāmāṇyāt | veda-janya-jñānaṁ kāraṇa-guṇa-janyam pramātvāt | pratyakshādi-pramā-vat | śruter vedāt | vedaḥ paurusheyo vedatvād āyurveda-vat | kincha vedaḥ paurusheyo vākyatvād bhāratādi-vat | veda-vākyāni paurusheyāṇi vākyatvād asmad-ādi-vākya-vat |

[Verse] "An omniscient and indestructible Being is to be proved from [the existence of] effects, from the conjunction of [atoms], from the support [of the earth in the sky], etc., from ordinary usages, from belief [in revelation], from the Veda, from sentences, and from particular numbers."

The following is so much of the comment as refers to the words pratyaya, śruti, and vākya: "From belief, i.e. from authoritativeness. The knowledge derived from the Veda is derived from the attributes of its Cause; since it is true knowledge, like the true knowledge derived from perception. From the śruti, i.e. the Veda. The Veda is [shewn to be] derived from a person, by its having the characters of a Veda, like the Āyur-veda. It is also [shewn to be] derived from a person, by having the character of sentences, like the Mahābhārata. The words of the Veda are [shewn to be] derived from a person, by their having the character of sentences, like the sentences of persons such as ourselves."

IV. Kusumānjali, v. 16.—"Syām" "abhūvam" "bhavishyāmī" 'tyādau sankhyā pravaktṛi-gā | samākhyā 'pi cha śākhānām nādya-pravachanād ṛite | Vaidikottama-purusheṇa svatantrochchārayituḥ sankhyā vāchyā | "tad aikshata eko 'ham bahu syām" ityādi-bahushu uttama-purusha-śruteḥ | sankhyā-padārtham anyam āha "samākhyā" ityādi | sarvāsām śākhānaṁ hi Kāṭhaka-Kālāpakādyāḥ samākhyāḥ sanjnā-viśeshāḥ śrūyante | te cha na adhyayana-mātra-nibandhanāḥ | adhyetṛīṇām ānantyāt | ādāv anyair api tad-adhyayanāt | tasmād atīndriyārtha-darśī bhagavān eva Īśvaraḥ kāruṇikaḥ sargādāv asmad-ādy-adṛishṭākṛishta-kāṭhakādi-śarīra-viśesham adhishṭhāya yāṁ śākhām uktavāṁs tasyāḥ śākhāyās tannāmnā vyapadeśaḥ iti siddham Īśvara-mananam moksha-hetuḥ |

[Verse] "In the phrases 'let me be,' 'I was,' 'I shall be,' [which occur in the Veda], personal designations have reference to a speaker; and the names of the Śākhās could only have been derived from a primeval utterance. [Comment] The first person (I), when it occurs in the Veda, must be employed to denote a self-dependent utterer. Now there are many instances there of such a use of the first person, as in the words, 'It reflected, I am one, let me become many.' The author then specifies another signification of the term sankhyā in the clause, 'and the designations,' etc. For all the Śākhās of the Veda traditionally bear the names, the special names, of Kāṭhaka, Kālāpaka, etc. And these names cannot be connected with the mere study [of these Śākhās by Kaṭha, Kalāpa, etc.] from the infinite multitude of students, since they must have been studied before by others besides the persons just mentioned. Wherefore the particular Śākhās which Īśvara, the beholder of objects beyond the reach of the senses, the compassionate Lord, himself uttered at the beginning of the creation, when he assumed the bodies of Kaṭha, etc., which were drawn on by the destiny (adṛishṭa) of beings like ourselves—these Śākhās, I say, were designated by the names of the particular sages [in whose persons they were promulgated]. And so it is proved that the contemplation of Īśvara is the cause of final liberation."

I am unable to say if the ancient doctrine of the Nyāya was theistic, as that of the Vaiśeshika Sūtras (at least as interpreted by Śankara Miśra) appears to be, and as that of the Kusumānjali, the Tarka-sangraha,[126] and the Siddhānta Muktāvali undoubtedly is (p. 6 of Dr. Ballantyne's ed., or p. 12 of his "Christianity contrasted with Hindu Philosophy," and p. 13 of Dr. Röer's Bhāshā-parichchheda, in Bibl. Ind.). The remarks of Dr. Röer on the subject, in pp. xv., xvi., of the introduction to the last named work, may be consulted. The subject is also discussed by Professor Banerjea in his work on Hindu philosophy, pp. 144–153. The solution of the question may depend much on the interpretation to be given to the aphorisms of Gotama, 19–21 of the fourth book.

III. The Sānkhya.—The opinions of the author of the Sānkhya aphorisms in regard to the authority of the Veda and the principles on which that authority depends, are contained in the 45th to the 51st aphorisms of the Fifth Book, which I extract with the comments of Vijnāna Bhikshu:[127]

45. "Na nityatvaṁ Vedānāṁ kāryatva-śruteḥ" | "Sa tapo 'tapyata tasmāt tapas tepānāt trayo vedā ajāyanta" ity ādi-śruter vedānāṁ na nityatvam ity arthaḥ | veda-nityatā-vākyāni cha sajātīyānupūrvī-pravāhānuchchheda-parāṇi | Tarhi kim paurusheyāḥ vedāḥ | na ity āha | 46. "Na paurusheyatvaṁ tat-kartuḥ purushasya abhāvāt" | īśvara-pratishedād iti śeshaḥ | sugamam | aparaḥ karttā bhavatv ity ākānkshāyām āha | 47. "Muktāmuktayor ayogyatvāt" | Jīvan-mukta-dhurīṇo Vishṇur viśuddha-sattvatayā niratiśaya-sarvajño 'pi vīta-rāgatvāt sahasra-śākha-veda-nirmāṇāyogyaḥ | amuktas tv asarvajnatvād eva ayogyaḥ ity arthaḥ | nanv evam apaurusheyatvād nityatvam eva āgatam | tatrāha | 48. "Na apaurusheyatvād nityatvam ankurādi-vat" | Spashṭam | nanv ankurādishv api kāryatvena ghaṭādi-vat purusheyatvam anumeyam | tatrāha | 49. "Teshām api tad-yoge dṛishṭa-bādhādi-prasaktiḥ" | Yat paurusheyaṁ tach chha-

[126] Jnānādhikaraṇam ātmā | sa dvividho jīvātmā paramātmā cha | tatra Īśvaraḥ sarvajnaḥ paramātmā eka eva | jīvātmā prati śarīram bhinno vibhur nityaścha | "The substratum of knowledge is soul. It is of two kinds, the embodied soul, and the supreme soul. Of these the supreme soul is the omniscient Īs'vara, one only. The embodied soul is distinct in each body, all-pervading, and eternal."

[127] Compare Dr. Ballantyne's translation of the Sānkhya Aphorisms, books v. and vi., published at Mirzapore in 1856, pp. 26 ff., as well as that which subsequently appeared in the Bibliotheca Indica (in 1865), pp. 127 ff.

rāra-janyam iti vyāptir loke dṛishṭā tasyāḥ bādhādir evam sati syād iti arthaḥ | nanv Ādi-purushochcharitatvād Vedāḥ api paurusheyāḥ eva ity āha | 50. "Yasmin adṛishṭe'pi kṛita-buddhir upajāyate tat paurusheyam" | Dṛishṭe iva adṛishṭe 'pi yasmin vastuni kṛita-buddhir buddhi-pūrvakatva-buddhir jāyate tad eva paurusheyam iti vyavahriyate ity arthaḥ | etad uktam bhavati | na purushochcharitatā-mātreṇa paurusheyatvaṁ śvāsa-praśvāsayoḥ sushupti-kālīnayoḥ paurusheyatva-vyavahārābhāvāt kintu buddhi-pūrvakatvena | Vedāḥ tu niḥśvāsa-vad eva adṛishṭa-vaśād abuddhi-pūrvakāḥ eva Svayambhuvaḥ sakāśāt svayam bhavanti | ato na te paurusheyāḥ | tathā cha śrutiḥ "tasyaitasya mahato bhūtasya niśvasitam etad yad ṛigvedo ity ādir" iti | nanv evam yathārtha-vākyārtha-jñānāpūrvakatvāt śuka-vākyasyeva vedānām api prāmāṇyaṁ na syāt tatrāha | 51. "Nija-śakty-abhvyakteḥ svataḥ prāmāṇyam" | Vedānām nijā svābhāvikī yā yathārtha-jñāna-janana-śaktis tasyāḥ mantrāyurvedādāv abhivyakter upalambhād akhila-vedānām eva svataḥ eva prāmāṇyaṁ siddhyati na vaktṛi-yathārtha-jñāna-mūlakatvādinā ity arthaḥ | tathā cha Nyāya-sūtram | "mantrāyurveda-prāmāṇya-vach cha tat-prāmāṇyam" iti |

"Sūtra 45. 'Eternity cannot be predicated of the Vedas, since various texts in these books themselves declare them to have been produced.' The sense is this, that the Vedas are proved not to be eternal by such texts as the following: 'He performed austerity; from him, when he had thus performed austerity, the three Vedas were produced.' [See above, p. 4.] Those other texts which assert the eternity [or perpetuity] of the Vedas refer merely to the unbroken continuity of the stream of homogeneous succession [or tradition]. Are the Vedas, then, derived from any personal author? 'No,' he replies in Sūtra 46. 'The Vedas are not derived from any personal author (paurusheya), since there is no person to make them.' We must supply the words, 'since an Īśvara (God) is denied.' The sense is easy. In answer to the supposition that there may be some other maker, he remarks, Sūtra 47, 'No; for there could be no fit maker, either liberated or unliberated.' Vishṇu, the chief of all those beings who are liberated even while they live,[128] although, from the pure goodness of his nature, he is possessed of perfect omniscience, would, owing to his impassiveness, be unfit to compose the Veda consisting of a thousand śākhās (branches), [128] See Colebrooke's Essays, i. 369, or p. 241 of Williams and Norgate's ed.

while any unliberated person would be unfit for the task from want of omniscience. (See Śaṅkara's comment on Brahma Sūtras i. 1, 3; above, p. 106.) But does not, then, the eternity of the Vedas follow from their having no personal author? He replies (48), 'Their eternity does not result from their having no personal author, as in the case of sprouts, etc.' This is clear. But is it not to be inferred that sprouts, etc., since they are products, have, like jars, etc., some personal maker? He replies (49), 'If such a supposition be applied to these (sprouts, etc.) it must there also be exposed to the objection that it is contrary to what we see, etc.' Whatever is derived from a personal author is produced from a body; this is a rule which is seen to hold invariably. But if we assert that sprouts are derived from a personal author, we contradict the rule in question, [since they evidently did not spring from any embodied person].' But are not the Vedas, too, derived from a person, seeing that they were uttered by the primeval Purusha? He answers (50), 'That object only (even though it be an invisible one), which its maker is conscious of having made, can be said to be derived from [or made by] such a person.' It is only those objects, be they seen or unseen, in regard to which a consciousness of design arises, that are ordinarily spoken of as made by a person. The sense is, that it is not mere utterance by a person which constitutes formation by that person (since we do not ordinarily speak of the inspirations and expirations of any person during the time of sleep, as being formed by that person), but only utterance with conscious design. But the Vedas proceed of their own accord from Svayambhū (the self-existent), like an expiration, by the force of adṛishṭa (destiny), without any consciousness on his part. Hence they are not formed by any person. Thus the Veda says, 'This Rig-veda, etc., is the breath of this great Being, etc.' [See above, p. 8.] But will not the Vedas, also, be in this way destitute of authority, like the chatter of a parrot, since they did not result from any knowledge of the correct meaning of the words of which they are made up? In reference to this, he says (51), 'The Vedas have a self-proving authority, since they reveal their own inherent power.' The self-evidencing authority of the entire Vedas is established by the perception of a manifestation in certain portions of them, viz. in the formulas and the Āyur-veda, etc., of that inherent power which they (the Vedas) possess of generating correct knowledge, and does not depend on its being shown that they (the Vedas) are founded on correct knowledge in their utterer,[129] or on any other ground of that sort. And to this effect is the Nyāya Sūtra, that 'their authority is like the authority of the formulas and the Āyur-veda.' (See above, p. 114.)

In reference to the 46th Sūtra I add here the 98th aphorism of the 1st book, with the remarks by which it is introduced and followed:

Nanu chet sadā sarvajnaḥ īśvaro nāsti tarhi vedānta-mahāvākyārthasya vivekasya upadeśe 'ndha-paramparāśankayā aprāmāṇyam prąsajyeta | tattra āha | 98. Siddha-rūpa-boddhṛitvād vākyārthopadeśaḥ | Hiraṇya-garbhādīnāñ siddha-rupāṇāñ[130] yathārthārthasya boddhṛitvāt tad-vaktṛikāyurvedādi-prāmāṇyena avadhṛitāch cha eshāñ vākyārthopadeśaḥ pramāṇam iti śeshaḥ |

"But may it not be said that if there be no eternally omniscient Īśvara, the charge of want of authority will attach to the inculcation of discriminative knowledge which is the subject of the great texts of the Upanishads, from the doubt lest these texts may have been handed down by a blind tradition. To this he replies: 86. 'From the fact that beings perfect in their nature understood them, it results that we have an (authoritative) inculcation of the sense.' As Hiraṇyagarbha (Brahmā) and other beings who were perfect in their nature understood the true sense, and are ascertained to have done so by the authoritativeness of the Āyur-veda, etc., which they uttered, their inculcation of the sense of the texts is authority;—such is the complete meaning of the aphorism."

In the 57th and following Sūtras of the fifth book, Kapila denies that sound has the character of sphoṭa, or that letters are eternal:

57. "Pratīty-apratītibhyāñ na sphoṭātmakaḥ śabdaḥ" | Pratyeka-varṇebhyo 'tiriktañ kalaśaḥ ityādi-rūpam akhaṇḍam eka-padam sphotaḥ iti yogair abhyupagamyate | kambu-grīvādy-avayavebhyo 'tirikto ghaṭādy-avayavīva | sa cha śabda-viśesho padākhyo 'rtha-sphuṭīkaraṇāt sphoṭaḥ ity uchyate | sa śabdo 'prāmāṇikaḥ | kutaḥ | "pratīty-apratītibhyām" | sa śabdaḥ kim pratīyate na vā | ādye yena varṇa-samudāyena ānupurvī-

[129] This directly contradicts the doctrine enunciated in the Vaiśeshika Sūtras and the Kusumānjali. See above, pp. 121, 123, and 129 f.

[130] This is a various reading given by Dr. Hall in the appendix to his edition of the Sānkhya-pravachana-bhāshya; and I have adopted it in preference to siddha-rūpasya which he gives in his text, as the former seems to afford a better sense.

viśesha-viśishṭena so 'bhivyajyate tasya eva artha-pratyāyakatvam astu | kim antargaḍunā teṇ | antye tv ajnāta-sphoṭasya nāsty artha-pratyāyana-śaktir iti vyarthā sphoṭa-kalpanā ity arthaḥ | Pūrvaṁ vedānāṁ nityatvam pratishṭiddham | idānīṁ varṇa-nityatvam api pratishedati | 58. "Na śabda-nityatvaṁ kāryatā-pratīteḥ" | Sa eva ayaṁ ga-kāraḥ ityādi-pratyabhijnā-balād varṇa-nityatvaṁ na yuktam | utpanno ga-kāraḥ ityādi-pratyayena anityatva-siddher ity arthaḥ | pratyabhijnā taj-jātīyatā-vishayiṇī | anyathā ghaṭāder api pratyabhijnāyāḥ nityatāpatter iti | śankate | 59. "Pūrva-siddha-sattvasya abhivyakṭir dīpeneva ghaṭasya" | Nanu pūrva-siddha-sattākasyaiva śabdasya dhvany-ādibhir yā 'bhivyaktis tan-mātram utpattiḥ pratīter vishayaḥ | abhivyaktau dṛishṭānto dīpeneva ghaṭasya iti | Pariharati | 60. "Sat-kāryya-siddhāntaś chet siddha-sādhanam" | Abhivyaktir yady anāgatāvasthā-tyāgena varttamānāvasthā-lābhaḥ ity uchyate tadā sat-kāryya-siddhāntaḥ | tādṛiśa-nityatvaṁ cha sarva-kāryāṇām eva iti siddha-sādhanam ity arthaḥ | yadi cha varttamānatayā sataḥ eva jnāna-mātra-rūpiny abhivyaktir uchyate tadā ghaṭādīnām api nityatvāpattir ityādi |

"'Sound has not the character of sphoṭa, from the dilemma that the latter must be either apparent or not apparent.' A modification of sound called sphoṭa, single, indivisible, distinct from individual letters, existing in the form of words like kalaśa (jar), distinguished also from parts of words like kambu-grīva (striped-neck) and forming a whole like the word ghaṭa (jar), is assumed by the Yogas. And this species of sound called a word (pada) is designated sphoṭa from its manifesting a meaning. But the existence of this form of sound is destitute of proof. Why? 'From the dilemma that it must be either apparent or not apparent.' Does this form of sound appear or not? If it appears, then let the power of disclosing a meaning [which is ascribed by our opponents to sphoṭa] be regarded as belonging to that collection of letters, arranged in a particular order, by which the supposed sphoṭa is manifested. What necessity is there then for that superfluous sphoṭa? If, on the contrary, it does not appear, then that unknown sphoṭa can have no power of disclosing a meaning, and consequently it is useless to suppose that any such thing as sphoṭa exists.

"The eternity of the Vedas has been already denied. He now denies the eternity of letters also. 58. 'Sound is not eternal, since it is clear that it is a production.' The meaning is, that it is not reasonable to infer on the strength of the recognition of the letter G as the same that we knew before (see Mīmānsā Aphorisms i. 13; above, p. 74), that letters are eternal; since it is clear that G and other letters are produced, and therefore cannot be eternal. The recognition of these letters has reference to their being of the same species as we have perceived before; since otherwise we are landed in the absurdity that, because we recognize a jar or any other such object to be the same, it must therefore be eternal.

"He expresses a doubt: 59. 'What we hear may be merely the manifestation of a previously existing thing, as a jar is manifested (not created) by the light of a lamp.' (See Mīmānsa Aphorisms i. 12, 13; above, p. 74.) Is it not the fact that it is merely the manifestation of previously existing language by sounds, etc., which we perceive as originating? An illustration of such manifestation is that of a jar by means of a lamp.

"He repels this doubt: 60. 'If the axiom that an effect exists in its cause be here intended, this is merely proving what is already admitted.' If by manifestation is meant the relinquishment by any substance of its past (?) condition, and the attainment of its present state, then we have merely the recognized principle of an effect virtually existing in its cause (see Sānkhya Kārika Aph. ix.); and as such eternity is truly predicable of all effects whatever, it is proving a thing already proved to assert it here. If, on the other hand, by manifestation be merely meant the perception of a thing actually existing, then we shall be involved in the absurdity of admitting that jars, etc., also are eternal, etc."

SECT. X.—On the use which the authors of the different Darśanas make of Vedic texts, and the mode of interpretation which they adopt.

I have already (in p. 107) touched on the mode of interpretation applied by the author of the Brahma Sūtras, or his commentator Śankara Āchāryya, to the Vedic texts, derived chiefly from the Brāhmanas and Upanishads, on which the Vedāntic doctrines are based, or by which they are defended, or with which, at least, they are asserted to be consistent. It will, however, be interesting to enquire a little more in detail into the extent to which the Indian scriptures are appealed to, and the manner in which they are treated by the authors or expounders of the different Darśanas. The object proposed by the Pūrva-mīmānsā is an enquiry into duty (dharma-jijñāsā—Aph. i.). Duty is defined as something enjoined by the Veda (chodanā-lakshaṇo 'rtho dharmaḥ—Aph. ii.); and which cannot be ascertained to be duty except through such injunction.[131] The first six lectures of the Mīmānsā, according to Mr. Colebrooke, "treat of positive injunction;" the remaining six concern "indirect command." "The authority of enjoined duty is the topic of the first lecture: its differences and varieties, its parts, ... and the purpose of performance, are successively considered, in the three next. . . . The order of performance occupies the fifth lecture; and qualification for its performance is treated in the sixth. The subject of indirect precept is opened in the seventh lecture generally, and in the eighth particularly. Inferable changes, adapting to the variation or copy what was designed for the type or model, are discussed in the ninth, and bars or exceptions in the tenth. Concurrent efficacy is considered in the eleventh lecture; and co-ordinate effect in the twelfth." . . . . "Other matters are introduced by the way, being suggested by the main topic or its exceptions" (Misc. Essays, i. 304 f.). It appears, therefore, that the general aim of the Pūrva-mīmānsā is (1) to prove the authority of the Veda, and then to (2) deduce from it the duties, whether enjoined directly or indirectly, which are to be performed, the manner and conditions of their performance, and their results. It is also termed the Karma-mīmānsā, "as relating to works or religious observances to be undertaken for specific ends" (Colebrooke, i. 296, 325).

The Brahma-mīmānsā, or Vedānta, is, according to the same author, the complement of the Karma-mīmānsā, and "is termed uttara, later, contrasted with pūrva, prior, being the investigation of proof deducible from the Vedas in regard to theology, as the other is in regard to works and their merit. The two together, then, comprise the complete system of interpretation of the precepts and doctrine of the Vedas, both practical and theological. They are parts of one whole. The later Mīmānsā is supplementary to the prior, and is expressly affirmed to be so: but differing on many important points, though agreeing on others, they are essentially distinct in a religious as well as a philosophical view" (Misc. Ess. i. 325). In fact the Brahma-mīmānsā proceeds upon a depreciation of the value of the objects aimed at by the Karma-mīmānsā, [131] See Ballantyne's Mīmānsā aphorisms, p. 7.

since the rewards which the latter holds out even in a future state are but of temporary duration; and according to Śaṅkara it is not even necessary that the seeker after a knowledge of Brahma should first have studied the Karma-mīmānsā before he conceives the desire to enter upon the higher enquiry (nanv iha karmāvabodhānantaryyaṁ viśeshaḥ | na | dharma-jijñāsāyāḥ prāg apy adhīta-vedāntasya Brahma-jijñāsopapatteḥ). (Śaṅkara on Brahma Sūtra, i. 1, 1, p. 25 of Bibl. Ind.) This is distinctly expressed in the following passage, p. 28:

Tasmāt kim api vaktavyam yad-anantaram Brahma-jijñāsā upadiśyate iti | uchyate | nityānitya-vastu-vivekaḥ ihāmutrārtha-phala-bhoga-virāgaḥ śama-damādi-sādhana-sampad mumukshatvaṁ cha | teshu hi satsu prāg api dharma-jijñāsāyāḥ ūrddhvaṁ cha śakyate Brahma jijñāsayituṁ jñātuṁ cha na viparyyaye | tasmād "atha" śabdena yathokta-sādhana-sampatty-ānantaryyam upadiśyate | "ataḥ" śabdo hetv-arthaḥ | yasmād vedaḥ eva agnihotrādīnāṁ śreyas-sādhanānām anitya-phalatāṁ darśayati "tad yathā iha karma-chito lokaḥ kshīyate evam eva amuttra puṇya-chito lokaḥ kshīyate" ity-ādi | tathā Brahma-vijñānād api param purushārthaṁ darśayati Brahma-vid āpnoti param" ity-ādi | tasmād yathokta-sādhana-sampatty-anantaram Brahma-jijñāsā kartavyā |

The author is explaining the word atha 'now,' or 'next,' with which the first Sūtra begins; and is enquiring what it is that is referred to as a preliminary to the enquiry regarding Brahma: "What, then, are we to say that that is after which the desire to know Brahma is enjoined?' The answer is, 'it is the discrimination between eternal and non-eternal substance, indifference to the enjoyment of rewards either in this world or the next, the acquisition of the means of tranquillity and self-restraint, and the desire for final liberation. For if these requisites be present, a knowledge of Brahma can be desired, and Brahma can be known, even before, as well as after, an enquiry has been instituted into duty. But the converse does not hold good (i.e. without the requisites referred to, though a man may have a knowledge of duty, i.e. of ceremonial observances, he possesses no preparation for desiring to know Brahma). Hence by the word atha it is enjoined that the desire in question should follow the possession of those requisites.' The next word ataḥ, 'hence,' denotes the reason. Because the Veda itself,—by employing such words as these, 'Wherefore just as in this life the world which has been gained by works perishes, so too in a future life the world gained by merit perishes'—points out that the rewards of the agnihotra sacrifice and other instruments of attaining happiness are but temporary. And by such texts as this, 'He who knows Brahma attains the highest exaltation,' the Veda further shews that the highest end of man is acquired by the knowledge of Brahma. Hence the desire to know Brahma is to be entertained after the acquisition of the means which have been already referred to."

In the Mīmānsā Sūtras, i. 1, 5, as we have seen above (p. 71), Bādarāyaṇa, the reputed author of the Brahma Sūtras, is referred to as concurring in the doctrine there laid down. But in many parts of the Brahma Sūtras, the opinions of Jaimini are expressly controverted, both on grounds of reason and scripture, as at variance with those of Bādarāyaṇa.[132]

I adduce some instances of this difference of opinion between the two schools:

We have seen above, p. 99, that according to the Brahma Sūtras the gods possess the prerogative (adhikāra) of acquiring divine science. This, however, is contested by Jaimini (see Brahma Sūtras, i. 3, 31), who objects (1) that in that case (as all divine sciences possess the characteristic of being science) the gods would also have the prerogative of becoming adepts in the science called Madhuvidyā, etc., which would be absurd, because the sun (Āditya), being the virtual object of worship in the ritual connected with that science, could not be worshipped by another sun, who, according to the supposition, would be one of the deities skilled in it, and one of the worshippers. Similar difficulties are furnished by other cases, as, for instance, that on the hypothesis referred to, the Vasus, Rudras, and three other classes of gods, would be at once the objects to be known and the knowers. In the next Sūtra the further objection is made (2) that the celestial luminaries, commonly called gods, are in reality destitute of sensation and desire; and on this ground also the prerogative in question is denied to the supposed deities. Bādarāyaṇa replies in the 33rd Sūtra (1) that although [132] Dr. Ballantyne refers to the Mīmānsakas as being the objectors alluded to by S'ankara in his remarks which introduce and follow Brahma Sūtra, i. 1, 4; but as Jaimini is not expressly mentioned there, I shall not quote this text in proof of my assertion. See Ballantyne's Aphorisms of the Vedānta, p. 12.

the gods cannot concern themselves with such branches of knowledge as the Madhuvidyā, with which they themselves are mixed up, yet they do possess the prerogative of acquiring pure divine science, as that depends on the desire and capacity for it, and the non-existence of any obstacle to its acquisition (tathāpy asti hi śuddhāyām brahma-vidyāyāṁ sambhavo 'rthitva-sāmarthyāpratishedhādy-apekshatvād adhikārasya). An exception in regard to a particular class of cases cannot, he urges, set aside a rule which otherwise holds good; for if it did, the circumstance that the generality of men belonging to the three highest castes are excluded from the performance of particular rites, such as the Rājasūya, would have the effect of rendering them incapable of performing any sacrifice whatever. And he goes on to cite several Vedic texts which prove that the gods have both the capacity and the desire for divine knowledge. Thus: Tad yo yo devānām pratyabudhyata sa eva tad abhavat tathā ṛishīnāṁ tathā manushyāṇām | "Whosoever, whether of gods, rishis, or men, perceived That, he became That." Again: Te ha ūchur "hanta tam ātmānam anvichhāmo yam ātmānam anvishya sarvān lokān āpnoti sarvāṁś cha kāmān" iti | Indro ha vai devānām abhi pravavrāja Virochano 'surāṇām iti | "They said, 'come, we shall enquire after that Soul, after investigating which, one obtains all worlds, and all objects of desire.' Accordingly Indra among the gods, and Virochana among the Asuras, set out" ("to go to Prajāpati the bestower of divine knowledge," according to Govinda Ānanda). And in reply to the second objection, Śankara maintains that the sun and other celestial luminaries are each of them embodied deities possessed of intelligence and power; an assertion which he proceeds to prove from texts both of the Veda and the Smṛiti. He then replies to a remark of the Mīmānsakas, referred to under Sūtra 32, that allusions in the Vedic mantras and arthavādas (illustrative passages) cannot prove the corporeality of the gods, as these texts have another object in view: and his reply is that it is the evidence, or the want of evidence, derivable from any texts which occasions us to believe or disbelieve in the existence of anything; and not the circumstance that such a text was or was not primarily intended to prove that particular point. The Mīmānsaka is represented as still unsatisfied: but I need not carry my summary further than to say that Śankara concludes by pointing out that the precepts which enjoin the offerings to certain gods imply that these gods have a particular form which the wor-shipper can contemplate; and that in fact such contemplation is enjoined in the text, "Let the worshipper when about to repeat the Vashaṭkara meditate on the deity to whom the oblation is presented" (yasyai devaṭāyāi havir gṛihītaṁ syāt tāṁ dhyāyed vashaṭkarishyan).[133]

In Brahma Sūtras, iii. 4, 1, it is laid down as the principle of Bādarāyaṇa that the knowledge of Soul, described in the Upanishads, is the sole means of attaining the highest end of man, i.e. final liberation; that it is not to be sought with a view to, and that its operation is altogether independent of, ceremonial observances (ataḥ | asmāt vedānta-vihitād ātma-jnānāt svatantrāt purushārthaḥ siddhyati iti Bādarāyanaḥ ācharyyo manyate). This he proves by various texts (ity-evaṁ-jātīyakā śrutir vidyāyāḥ kevalāyāḥ purushārtha-hetutvaṁ śrāvayati), such as Tarati śokam ātma-vit | sa yo ha vai taṭ param Brahma veda Brahma eva bhavati | Brahma-vid āpnoti param | "He who knows soul overpasses grief" (Chhāndogya Up. see above, p. 33); "He who knows that Brahma becomes Brahma;" "He who knows Brahma obtains the highest (exaltation);" etc. In the following Sūtra (2) Jaimini is introduced as contesting this principle, and as affirming that the knowledge of soul is to be acquired with a view to the performance of ceremonial works. The Sūtra in question, as explained by Śankara, means that "as the fact that soul is an agent in works implies an ultimate regard to works, the knowledge of soul must also be connected with works by means of its object" (karttṛitvena ātmanaḥ karma-śeshatvāt tad-vijnānam api . . . vishaya-dvāreṇa karma-sambandhy eva iti). The same view is further stated in the following Sūtras 3–7, where it is enforced by the example of sages who possessed the knowledge of Brahma and yet sacrificed (Sūtra 3), by a text which conjoins knowledge and works (Sūtra 5), by a second which intimates that a person who knows all the contents of the Veda has a capacity for ceremonial rites (Sūtra 6), and by others (7). Śankara replies under Sūtra 8 to the view set forth in Sūtra 2, which he declares to be founded on a mistake, as "the soul which is proposed in the Upanishads as the object of knowledge is not the embodied soul, but the supreme Spirit, of which agency in regard to rites is not predicable. That knowledge, he affirms, does not promote, but on the contrary, puts an end to all works" (na cha tad-vijñānaṁ karmaṇām pravarttakam bhavati pratyuta tat karmāṇy uchchhiṇatti), and under Sūtra 16 he explains how this takes place, viz. by the fact that "knowledge annihilates the illusory conceptions of work, worker, and reward, which are caused by ignorance, and are necessary conditions of capacity for ceremonial observances" (Api cha karmādhikāra-hetoḥ kriyā-kāraka-phala-lakshaṇasya samastasya prapanchasya avidyā-kṛitasya vidyā-sāmarthyāt svarūpopamarddam āmananti). To Sūtra 3 Bādarayaṇa replies that the ceremonial practice of sages is the same whether they do or do not acquire knowledge with a view to works; to Sūtra 5, by saying that in the text in question works and knowledge are not referable to one and the same person, but works to one and knowledge to another; and to Sūtra 6, by declaring that it is merely the reading of the Veda, and not a knowledge of all its contents that is referred to in the text in question. Another reason assigned in Sūtra 17 to shew that divine knowledge is not dependent on, or subservient to works, is that ascetics who practise no Vedic ceremonies are yet recognized in the Veda as competent to acquire it (ūrdhvaretassu cha āśrameshu vidyā śrūyate na cha tattra karmāngatvaṁ vidyāyāḥ upapadyate karmābhāvāt | na hy agnihottrādīni vaidikāni karmāṇi teshāṁ santi). In the following Sūtra (18) Jaimini is introduced as questioning the validity of this argument on the ground that the Vedic texts, which are adduced in support of it, merely allude to the existence of ascetics, and do not recognize such an order as consistent with Vedic usage, or that they have another object, or are ambiguous; while another text actually reprehends the practice of asceticism. To this Bādarāyaṇa rejoins in Sūtra 19, that the texts in question prove the recognized existence of the ascetic order as much as that of any other; and that the alleged ambiguity of one of the passages is removed by the consideration that as two of the three orders referred to, viz. those of the householder and brahmachārin, are clearly indicated, the third can be no other than that of the ascetic. The subject is further pursued in the next Sūtra 20, where the author and his commentator (who adduces additional texts) arrive at the conclusion that the practice of asceticism is not only alluded to, but enjoined in the Veda, and that consequently knowledge, as being inculcated on those who practise it, is altogether independent of works (tasmāt siddhā ūrddhvaretasaḥ āśramāḥ siddhaṁ cha ūrddhvaretassu vidhānād vidyāyāḥ svātantryam).

[133] The passage in which Śankara goes on to answer the objection that in cases like this the Itihāsas and Purāṇas afford no independent evidence, will be quoted below.

Again in Brahma Sūtras, iv. 3, 7–14, the question is discussed whether the words sa etān Brahma gamayati, "He conducts them to Brahman," refer to the supreme Brāhmā, or to the created Brāhmā. Bādari (Sūtra 7) holds that the latter is meant, whilst Jaimini (in Sūtra 12) maintains that the former is intended. The conclusion to which the commentator comes at the close of his remarks on Sūtra 14 is that the view taken by Bādari is right, whilst Jaimini's opinion is merely advanced to display his own ability (tasmāt "kāryyam Bādarir" ity esha eva pakshaḥ sthitaḥ | "param Jaiminir" iti cha pakshāntara-pratipādana-māttra-pradarśanam prajñā-vikāśanāya iti drashṭavyam).

Further, in Brahma Sūtras, iv. 4, 10, it is stated to be the doctrine of Bādari that the sage who has attained liberation no longer retains his body or bodily organs, but his mind (manas) alone, whilst in the following Sūtra (11) it is declared to be Jaimini's opinion that he retains his body and senses also. In the 12th Sūtra it is laid down as the decision of Bādarāyaṇa that either of the two supposed states may be assumed at will by the liberated spirit.

Jaimini and his opinions are also mentioned in Brahma Sūtras i. 2, 28, and 31; i. 4, 18; and iv. 4, 5.

I shall now adduce some illustrations of the claims which the founders of the other philosophical schools put forward on behalf of their own principles as being in conformity with the Vedas. I begin with a passage on this subject from Śankara's note introductory to Brahma Sūtras i. 1, 5 ff.:

Brahma cha sarvajñaṁ sarvaśakti jagad-utpatti-sthiti-nāśa-kāraṇam ity uktam | Sānkhyādayaḥ tu parinishṭhitaṁ vastu pramāṇāntara-gamyam eva iti manyamānāḥ pradhānādīni kāraṇāntarāṇi anumimānās tat-paratayā eva vedānta-vākyāni yojayanti | sarveshv eva tu vedānta-vākyeshu śrishṭi-vishayeshu anumānena eva kāryyeṇa kāraṇam lilakshayishitam | Pradhāna-purusha-saṁyogāḥ nityānumeyāḥ iti Sānkhyāḥ manyante | Kāṇādās tv etebhyaḥ eva vākyebhyaḥ Īśvaraṁ nimitta-kāraṇam anumimate aṇūṁś cha samavāyi-kāraṇam | evam anye 'pi tārkikāḥ vākyābhāsa-yukty-ābhāsāvashṭambhāḥ pūrva-paksha-vādinaḥ iha uttishṭhante | tattra pada-vākya-pramāṇa-jnena āchāryyena vedānta-vākyānām Brahmāvagati-paratva-pradarśanāya vākyābhāsa-yukty-ābhāsa-pratipattayaḥ pūrvapakshīkṛitya nirākriyante | tattra Sānkhyāḥ pradhānam triguṇam achetanaṁ jagataḥ kāraṇam iti manyamānāḥ āhur "yāni vedānta-vākyāni sarvajña-

sya sarvaśakter Brahmaṇo jagat-kāraṇatvam pratipādayanti ity avochas tāni pradhāna-kāraṇa-pakshe 'pi yojayituṁ śakyante | sarvaśaktitvaṁ tāvat pradhānasyāpi sva-vikāra-vishayam upapādyate | evaṁ sarvajnatvam upapadyate | katham | yat tvaṁ jnānam manyase sa sattva-dharmaḥ "sattvāt sanjāyate jnānam" iti smṛiteḥ | tena cha sattva-dharmeṇa jnānena kāryya-kāraṇavantaḥ purushāḥ sarvajnāḥ yogināḥ prasiddhāḥ | sattvasya hi niratiśayotkarshe sarvajnatvam prasiddham | na cha kevalasya akāryya-kāraṇasya purushasya upalabdhi-māttrasya sarva-jnatvaṁ kinchij-jnatvaṁ vā kalpayituṁ śakyam | triguṇatvāt tu pradhānasya sarva-jnāna-kāraṇa-bhūtaṁ sattvam pradhānāvasthāyām api vidyate iti pradhānasya achetanasya eva sataḥ sarvajnatvam upacharyyate vedānta-vākyeshu | avaśyaṁ cha tvayā 'pi sarvajnam Brahma abhyupagachhatā sarva-jnāna-śaktimattvena eva sarvajnatvam abhyupagantavyam | na hi sarva-vishayaṁ jnānaṁ kurvad eva Brahma varttate | tathā hi jnānasya nityatve jnāna-kriyām prati svātantryaṁ hīyeta | atha anityaṁ tad iti jnāna-kriyāyāḥ uparame uparameta api Brahma | tadā sarva-jnāna-śaktimattvena eva sarvajnatvam āpatati | api cha prāg utpatteḥ sarva-kāraka-śūnyam Brahma ishyate tvayā | na cha jnāna-sādhanānāṁ śarīrendriyādīnām abhāve jnānotpattiḥ kasyachid upapannā | api cha pradhānasya anekātmakasya pariṇāma-sambhavāt kāraṇatvopapattir mṛid-ādi-vat | na asaṁhatasya ekātmakasya Brahmaṇaḥ | ity evam prāpte idam sūtram ārabhyate | 5. "Īkshater na | aśabdam" | na Sānkhya-parikalpitam achetanam pradhānaṁ jagataḥ kāraṇaṁ śakyaṁ vedānteshv āśrayitum | aśabdaṁ hi tat | katham aśabdam | "īkshiteḥ" | īkshitṛitva-śravaṇāt kāraṇasya | katham | evaṁ hi śrūyate "Sad eva saumya idam agre āsīd ekam eva advitīyam" ity upakramya "tad aikshata 'bahu syām prajāyeya' iti tat tejo 'sṛijata" iti | tattra idaṁ-śabda-vāchyaṁ nāma-rūpa-vyākṛitaṁ jagat prāg utpatteḥ sad-ātmanā 'vadhāryya tasya eva prakṛitasya sach-chhabda-vāchyasya īkshaṇa-pūrvakaṁ tejaḥ-prabhṛiteḥ srashṭṛitvaṁ darśayati | tathā cha anyatra "ātmā vai idam ekaḥ eva agre āsīt | na anyat kinchana mishat | sa aikshata 'lokān nu sṛijai' iti sa imān lokān asṛijata" iti īkshā-pūrvikām eva sṛishṭim āchashṭe | . . . . ity-evam-ādīny api sarvajneśvara-kāraṇa-parāṇi vākyāny udāharttavyāni | yat tu uktam "sattva-dharmeṇa jnānena sarvajnam pradhānam bhavishyati" iti tad na upapadyate | na hi pradhānāvasthāyāṁ guṇa-sāmyāt sattva-dharmo jnānaṁ sambhavati | nanu uktam "sarva-jnāna-śaktimattvena sarvajnam bhavishyati" iti tad api na upapadyate | yadi guṇa-sāmye sati sattva-vyapāśrayāṁ jnāna-śaktim

āśritya sarvajnam pradhānam uchyeta kāmaṁ rajas-tamo-vyapāśrayām api jnāna-pratibandhaka-śaktim āśritya kinchij-jnatvam uchyeta | api cha na asākshikā sattva-vṛittir jānāti, na abhidhīyate | na cha achetanasya pradhānasya sākshitvam asti | tasmād anupannam pradhānasya sarvajnatvam | yoginām tu chetanatvāt sarvotkarsha-nimittaṁ sarvajnatvam upapannam ity anudāharaṇam | atha punaḥ sākshi-nimittam īkshitṛitvam pradhānasya kalpyeta yathā agni-nimittam ayaḥ-piṇḍāder dagdhṛitvaṁ tathā satiyan-nimittaṁ īkshitṛitvam pradhānasya tad eva sarvajnam mukhyam Brahma jagataḥ kāraṇam iti yukṭam | yat punar uktam Brahmaṇo 'pi na mukhyaṁ sarvajnatvam upapadyate nitya-jnāna-kriyatve jnāna-kriyām prati svātantryāsambhavād ity attra uchyate | idaṁ tāvad bhavān prashṭavyaḥ "kathaṁ nitya-jnāna-kriyatve sarvajnatva-hānir" iti | yasya hi sarva-vishayāvabhāsana-kshamaṁ jnānaṁ nityam asti so 'sarvajnaḥ iti vipratishiddham | anityatve hi jnānasya kadāchij jānāti kadāchid na jānāti ity asarvajnatvam api syāt | na asau jnāna-nityatve dosho 'sti | jnāna-nityatve jnāna-vishayaḥ svātantrya-vyapadeśo na upapadyate iti chet | na | prataṭaushṇa-prakāśe 'pi savitari dahati prakāśayati iti svātantrya-vyapadeśa-darśanāt | nanu savitur dāhya-prakāśya-saṁyoge sati dahati prakāśayati iti vyapadeśaḥ syāt | na tu Brahmaṇaḥ prāg utpatter jnāna-karma-saṁyogo 'sti iti vishamo dṛishṭāntaḥ | na | asaty api karmaṇi savitā prakāśate iti karttṛitva-vyapadeśa-darśanāt | evam asaty api jnāna-karmaṇi Brahmaṇas "tad aikshata" iti karttṛitva-vyapadeśopapatter na vaishamyam | karmāpekshāyāṁ tu Brahmaṇi īkshitṛitva-śrutayaḥ sutarām upapannāḥ | kim punas tat karma yat prāg utpatter īśvara-jnānasya vishayībhavati iti | ṭattvānyatvābhyām anirvachanīye nāma-rūpe avyākṛite vyāchikīrshite iti brūmaḥ | yat-prasādād hi yoginām apy atītānāgata-vishayam pratyakshaṁ jnānam ichhanti yoga-śāstra-vidaḥ kimu vaktavyaṁ tasya nitya-śuddhasya īśvarasya srishṭi-sthiti-saṁhṛiti-vishayaṁ nitya-jnānam bhavati iti | yad apy uktam prāg utpatter Brahmaṇaḥ śarīrādi-sambandham antareṇa īkshitṛitvam anupapannam iti na tach chodyam avatarati savitṛi-prakāśa-vad Brahmaṇo jnāna-svarūpa-nityatvena jnāna-sādhanāpekshānupapatteḥ | . . . . yad apy uktam "pradhānasya anekātmakatvād mṛid-ādi-vat kāraṇatvopapattir na asaṁhatasya Brahmaṇaḥ" iti tat pradhānasya aśabdatvena eva pratyuktam | yathā tu tarkeṇāpi Brahmaṇaḥ eva kāraṇatvaṁ nirvoḍhuṁ śakyate na pradhānādīnāṁ tathā prapanchayishyate "na vilakshaṇatvād asya" ity-evam-ādinā (Brahma Sūtras ii. 1, 4) |

Attra āha yad uktaṁ "na achetanam pradhānaṁ jagat-kāraṇam īkshitṛitva-śravaṇād" iti tad anyathā 'py upapadyate | achetane 'pi chetanavad upachāra-darśanāt | pratyāsanna-pātanatāṁ kūlasya ālakshya kūlam pipatishati ity achetane 'pi kūle chetana-vad upachāro dṛishṭas tad-vad achetane 'pi pradhāne pratyāsanna-sarge chetana-vad upachāro bhavishyati "tad aikshata" iti | yathā loke kaśchich chetanaḥ snātvā bhuktvā cha "aparāhne grāmaṁ rathena gamishyāmi" iti īkshitvā anantaraṁ tathaiva niyamena pravarttate tathā pradhānam api mahad-ādy-ākāreṇa niyamena pravarttate | tasmāch chetana-vad upacharyyate | kasmāt punaḥ kāraṇad vihāya mukhyam īkshitṛitvam aupachārikaṁ kalpyate | "tat tejaḥ aikshata" "tāḥ āpaḥ aikshanta" iti cha achetanayor apy ap-tejasoś chetanavad upachāra-darśanāt | tasmāt sat-karttṛikam api īkshaṇam aupachārikam iti gamyate upachāra-prāye vachanād ity evam prāpte idaṁ sūtram ārabhyate | 6. "Gauṇaś chet | na | ātma-śabdāt" | yad uktam pradhānam achetanaṁ sach-chhabda-vāchyam tasminn aupachārikī īkshitir ap-tejasor iva iti tad asat | kasmāt | ātma-śabdāt | "sad eva saumya idam agre asīd" ity upakramya "tad aikshata tat tejo 'sṛijata" iti cha tejo 'b-annānāṁ sṛishṭim uktvā tad eva prakṛitaṁ sad īkshitṛi tāni cha tejo-'b-annāni devatā-śabdena parāmṛiśya āha "sā iyaṁ devatā aikshata hanta aham imās tisro devatāḥ anena jīvena ātmanā 'nupraviśya nāma-rūpe vyākaravāṇi" iti | tattra yadi pradhānam achetanaṁ guṇa-vṛittyā īkshitṛi kalpyeta tad eva prakṛitatvāt sā iyaṁ devatā parāmṛiśyeta | na tadā devatā jīvam ātma-śabdena abhidadhyāt | jīvo hi nāma chetanaḥ śarīrādhyakshaḥ prāṇānāṁ dhārayitā prasiddher nirvachanāch cha | sa katham achetanasya pradhānasya ātmā bhavet | ātmā hi nāma svarūpam | na achetanasya pradhānasya chetano jīvaḥ svārūpam bhavitum arhati | attra tu chetanam Brahma mukhyam īkshitṛi parigṛihyate | tasya jīva-vishayaḥ ātma-śabda-prayogaḥ upapadyate | tathā "sa yaḥ eshoṇimā etadātmyam idaṁ sarvaṁ tat satyaṁ sa ātmā tat tvam asi S'vetaketo" ity attra "sa ātmā" iti prakṛitaṁ sad-aṇimānam ātmānam ātma-śabdena upadiśya "tat tvam asi S'vetaketo" iti chetanasya S'vetaketor ātmatvena upadiśati | ap-tejasos tu vishayatvād achetanatvaṁ nāma-rūpa-vyākaraṇādau cha prayojyatvena eva nirdeśāt | na cha ātma-śabda-vat kinchid mukhyatve kāraṇam asti iti yuktaṁ kūla-vad gauṇatvam īkshitṛitvasya | tayor api cha sad-adhishṭhitatvāpeksham eva īkshitṛitvam | satas tv ātma-śabdād na gauṇam īkshitṛitvam ity uktam | atha uchyate | achetane 'pi pradhāne bhavaty ātma-śabdaḥ | ātmanaḥ sarvārtha-kāritvāt |

yathā rājnaḥ sarvādhikāriṇi bhṛitye bhavaty ātma-śabdo "mama ātmā Bhadrasenaḥ" iti | pradhānaṁ hi purushātmano[134] bhogāpavargau kurvad upakaroti rājnaḥ iva bhṛityaḥ sandhi-vigrahādishu varttamānaḥ | athavā ekaḥ eva ātma-śabdaś chetanāchetana-vishayo bhavishyati "bhūtātmā" "indriyātmā" iti cha prayoga-darśanād yathā ekaḥ eva jyotiḥ-śabdaḥ kratu-jvalana-vishayaḥ | tattra kutaḥ etad ātma-śabdādīkshiter agauṇatvam ity attra uttaram paṭhati | 7. "Tan-nishṭhasya mokshopadeśāt" | na pradhānam aćhetanam ātma-śabdālambanam bhavitum arhati "sa ātmā" iti prakṛitaṁ sad aṇimānam ādāya "tat tvam asi Śvetaketo" iti chetanasya Śvetaketor mokshayitavyasya tan-nishṭhām upadiśya "Āchāryyavān purusho veda tasya tāvad eva chiraṁ yāvad na vimokshye atha sampatsye" iti mokshopadeśāt | yadi hy achetanam pradhānaṁ sach-chhabda-vāchyaṁ "tad asi" iti grāhayed mumukshuṁ chetanaṁ santam "achetano 'si" iti tadā viparīta-vādi śāstram purushasya anarthāya ity apramāṇaṁ syāt | na tu nirdoshaṁ śāstram apramāṇaṁ kalpayituṁ yuktam | yadi cha ajnasya sato mumukshor achetanam anātmānam "ātmā" ity upadiśet pramāṇa-bhūtaṁ śāstraṁ sa śraddadhānatayā 'ndha-go-lāngūla-nyāyena tad-ātma-dṛishṭiṁ na parityajet tad-vyatiriktaṁ cha ātmānaṁ na pratipadyeta | tathā sati purushārthād vihanyeta anarthaṁ cha richhet | tasmād yathā svargādy-arthino 'gnihotrādi-sādhanaṁ yathā-bhūtam upadiśati tathā mumukshor api "sa atmā | tat tvam asi Śvetaketo" iti yathā-bhūtam eva ātmānam upadiśati iti yuktam | evaṁ cha sati tapta-paraśu-grahaṇa-moksha-dṛishṭāntena satyābhisandhasya mokshopadeśaḥ upapadyate | . . . . tasmād na sad-aṇimany ātma-śabdasya gauṇatvam | bhṛitye tu svāmi-bhṛitya-bhedasya pratyakshatvād upapanno gauṇaḥ ātma-śabdo "mama ātmā Bhadrasenaḥ" iti | api cha kvachid gauṇaḥ śabdo dṛishṭaḥ iti na etāvatā śabda-pramāṇake 'rthe gauṇī kalpanā nyāyyā sarvattra anāśvāsa-prasangāt | yat tu uktaṁ chetanāchetanayoḥ sādhāraṇaḥ ātma-sabdaḥ kratu-jvalanayor iva jyotiḥ-śabdaḥ iti | tad na | anekārthatvasya anyāyyatvāt | tasmāch chetana-vishayaḥ eva mukhyaḥ ātma-śabdaś chetanatvopachārād bhūtādishu prayujyate "bhūtātmā" "indriyātmā" iti cha | sādhāraṇatve 'py ātma-śabdasya na prakaraṇam upapadaṁ vā kinchid niśchāyakam antareṇa anyatara-vṛittitā nirdhārayituṁ śakyate | na cha atra achetanasya niśchāyakaṁ kinchit kāraṇam asti prakṛitaṁ tu sad ikshitṛi sannihitaś cha chetanaḥ Śvetaketuḥ | na hi chetanasya Śvetaketor achetanaḥ ātmā sam-

[134] The edition printed in Bengali characters reads purushasya ātmanaḥ.

bhavati ity avochāma | tasmāch chetana-vishayaḥ iḷa ātma-śabdaḥ iti niśchīyate |

"And it has been declared that Brahma, omniscient and omnipotent, is the cause of the creation, continuance, and destruction of the world. But the Sānkhyas and others, holding that an ultimate (parinishṭhita)[135] substance is discoverable by other proofs, and inferring the existence of Pradhāna or other causes, apply the texts of the Upanishads as having reference to these. For (they assert that) all the texts of the Upanishads which relate to the creation, design inferentially to indicate the cause by the effect. The Sānkhyas think that the conjunctions of Pradhāna and Purusha (Soul) are to be inferred as eternal. From the very same texts the followers of Kaṇāda (the Vaiśeshikas) deduce that Īśvara is the instrumental cause and atoms the material cause[136] (of the world). So, too, other rationalizing objectors rise up who rely on fallacies founded on texts or reasoning. Here then our teacher (āchāryya), who understood both words and sentences and evidence, with the view of pointing out that the texts of the Upanishads have for their object the revelation of Brahma, first puts forward and then refutes the fallacies founded by those persons on texts or reasoning. The Sānkhyas regarding Pradhāna, consisting of the three qualities (guṇas, viz. sattva, rajas, and tamas, or "Goodness," "Passion," and "Darkness"), and inanimate, as the cause of the world, tell us: (a) 'Those texts in the Upanishads which, as you say, declare that an omniscient and omnipotent Brahma is the cause of the world, can be applied to support the view that Pradhāna is the cause. For omnipotence in regard to its own developments is properly predicable of Pradhāna also; and omniscience too may be rightly ascribed to it. You will ask, how? We answer (b), What you call knowledge is a characteristic of 'Goodness' (sattva), according to the text of the Smṛiti, 'From Goodness springs knowledge.' And (c) through this knowledge, which is a characteristic of Goodness, Yogins, who are men [135] Compare Sānkhya Sūtras, i. 69: pāramparyye 'pi ekatra parinishṭhā, etc., which Dr. Ballantyne renders, "Even if there be a succession, there is a halt (parinishṭhā) at some one point," etc.

[136] The phrase so translated is samavāyi-kāraṇam. The word samavāya is rendered by Dr. Ballantyne, in his translation of the Bhāshāparichheda (published January, 1851), p. 22, by "intimate relation" (the same phrase as Dr. Roer had previously employed in 1850); and in the translation of the Tarka-sangraha (published in September of the same year), pp. 2 and 4, by "co-inherence."

with bodily organs,[137] are reputed to be omniscient; for owing to the transcendent excellence of Goodness its omniscience is matter of notoriety. Nor it is only of a person (purusha) whose essence is mere perception, and who is devoid of corporeal organs, that either omniscience or partial knowledge can be predicated: but from Pradhāna being composed of the three qualities, Goodness, which is the cause of omniscience, belongs to it tóo in the condition of Pradhāna. And so in the texts of the Upanishads omniscience is figuratively ascribed to it, although it is unconscious." And (d) you also, who recognize an omniscient Brahma, must of necessity acknowledge that His omniscience consists in His possessing the power of omniscience. For He does not continually exercise knowledge in regard to all objects. For (e) if His knowledge were continual. His self-dependence (or voluntary action) in reference to the act of knowledge would be lost. But if knowledge be not continual, then when the act of knowledge ceases Brahma must cease (to know). And so omniscience results from the possession of the power of omniscience. Further (f) you, too, hold that before the creation Brahma was devoid of any impulse to action. Nor can knowledge be conceived to arise in anyone who has no bodily organs or other instruments of knowledge. Moreover (g) causality can properly be ascribed to Pradhāna (as it can to earth, etc.) owing to the variety in its nature,[138] and the consequent possibility of its development, but not to Brahma whose essence is simple and uniform.' These arguments having been urged, the following Sūtra is introduced: 5. 'No; for in consequence of the word 'beholding' being employed, your view is contrary to the Veda.' (a) The unconscious Pradhāna, imagined by the Sānkhyas as the cause of the world, can find no support in the Upanishads. For it is unscriptural. How so? From its beholding, i.e. because the act of 'beholding' (or 'reflecting') is in scripture ascribed to the cause. How? Because the Veda contains a text which begins thus: 'This, o fair youth, was in the beginning' 'Existent, one without a second' (Chh. Up. vi. 2, 1); and proceeds: 'It beheld, let [137] The epithet kāryya-karaṇavantaḥ is rendered dehendriya-yukta in the Bengali translation of S'ankara's comment, which forms part of the edition of the S'ārīraka-sūtras, with comment and gloss, published at Calcutta in 1784 of the S'aka æra. This translation is useful for ascertaining the general sense, but it does not explain all the difficult phrases which occur in the original.

[138] The meaning of this is that Pradhāna, as cause, possesses in its nature a variety corresponding to that exhibited by the different kinds of objects which constitute the visible creation; whilst Brahma is one and uniform.

me multiply, and be propagated.' 'It created light' (3). By these words the scripture, having first determined that the world, denoted by the word 'this' and now developed as Name and Form, subsisted before the creation in the form of the 'Existent,' then goes on to shew that this very subject of the text, denoted by the word 'Existent,' became, after 'beholding,' the creator of light and other objects. And accordingly another text (Ait. Up. i. 1) declares in the following words that the creation was preceded by 'beholding:' 'This was in the beginning Soul, one only; there was nothing else which saw.[139] It beheld, Let me create worlds; it created these worlds.'" After quoting two other texts Sankara proceeds: "These and other passages may also be adduced which shew that an omniscient Īśvara was the cause (of all things). And (b) the opinion which has been referred to, that Pradhāna will be omniscient in virtue of the knowledge which is an attribute of Goodness, is groundless. For since the three qualities are in a state of equilibrium as long as the state of Pradhāna lasts, knowledge as an attribute of Goodness cannot then belong to it. And the assertion (d) that Pradhāna will be omniscient from possessing the power of omniscience is equally untenable. If (b) in reliance on the power of knowledge residing in Goodness during the state of equilibrium, it be maintained that Pradhāna is then omniscient, a merely partial knowledge may with equal reason be ascribed to it on the strength of the power to obstruct knowledge which resides in Passion and Darkness (the other two qualities which constitute it). Besides, no function of Goodness can either be, or be called, knowledge, unless it be accompanied by the power of observing (or witnessing). But Pradhāna, being unconscious, possesses no such power. Consequently the omniscience of Pradhāna is untenable. And the omniscience of Yogins, (c) springing from their eminence in every attribute, becomes possible in consequence of their being conscious creatures; and therefore cannot be adduced as an illustrative argument in the case before us. If, again, you ascribe to Pradhāna a power of reflection derived from an observer (like the power of burning possessed by iron balls, etc., which is derived from fire) then it will be right to say that the source from which that power of reflection comes to Pradhāna, viz. the omniscient Brahma in the proper sense, and nothing else, is the cause of the world. Once more, (e) it is urged that omniscience cannot in the literal sense be properly attributed even to Brahma himself, because if the cognitive acts were continual, His self-dependence (or spontaneity), in regard to the act of cognition, would be no longer conceivable: we reply, that we must ask you how the supposition that cognitive acts are continual, interferes with the existence of omniscience. Because it is a contradiction to say that he who possesses a perpetual knowledge which can throw light upon all subjects can be otherwise than omniscient. For although on the hypothesis that knowledge is not continual, a negation of omniscience would result, as in that case the person in question would sometimes know and sometimes not know,—the same objection does not attach to the supposition of a perpetuity of knowledge. If you reply that on that supposition, self-dependence (or spontaneity), in regard to knowledge can no longer be attributed, we deny this, because we observe that spontaneity, in regard to burning and illuminating, is attributed to the sun, although he continually burns and shines. If you again object that this illustration does not hold good, because the power in question is ascribed to the sun only when his rays are in contact with the objects to be burnt or illuminated, whereas before the creation, Brahma has no contact with the object of knowledge;—we reply that the parallel is exact, because we observe that agency in shining is attributed to the sun even when there is no object [for his beams]; and in the same way agency in regard to 'beholding,' is justly ascribed to Brahma, even when there is no object of knowlege. But the texts which record the fact of 'beholding' will be applicable to Brahma with still greater propriety if that 'beholding' have had reference to a positive object. What then is the object which is contemplated by Brahma before the creation? We reply, the undeveloped Name and Form which were not describable either in their essence or differences, and which He wished to develope. For what need we say to prove the perpetual knowledge, relating to the creation, continuance, and destruction of the world, which belongs to Īśvara, the perpetually pure, from whose grace it is that the intuitive knowledge of things past and future, which men learned in the Yoga doctrine attribute to Yogins, is derived? And as regards the further objection (f) that Brahma, who before the creation was without body or organs of sense, could not be conceived to 'behold,'—that argument cannot be sustained, as from

[139] This is the sense assigned in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon to the word mishat. The commentators render it "moving" (chalat).

Brahma's existence in the form of knowledge being, like the sun's lustre, perpetual, he cannot be supposed dependent upon any (bodily organs as) instruments of knowledge." . . . . "Then as regards the assertion (g) that Pradhāna, from its multiformity of character can (like earth, etc.,) be readily conceived as the cause (of the manifold products which we see around us), whilst such causality cannot be ascribed to the simple and uniform Brahma,—that has been answered by the remark that the existence of Pradhāna is not established by scripture. And that the causality of Brahma, but not that of Pradhāna, etc., can be established by reasoning will hereafter be shewn in the Sūtras, 'Brahma, you say, cannot be the material cause of this world, because it differs from him in its nature,' etc. (Brahma Sūtras, ii. 1, 4 ff.). Here the Sānkhyas remark: 'As regards your objection that the unconscious Pradhāna cannot be the cause of the world, because the Veda describes that cause as 'beholding,' we observe (h) that that text, if otherwise explained, will be consistent with our view. For we find that even unconscious objects are figuratively spoken of as conscious. Thus we notice that any one who perceives that the bank of a river is on the point of falling, speaks in a figurative way of that unconscious bank as intending to fall.[140] In the same way when Pradhāna is on the point of creating, it can be figuratively said of it, although unconscious, as of a conscious being, that it 'beheld.'[141] Just as any conscious person, after bathing and eating, resolves that on the following day he will proceed to his village in a car, and afterwards acts according to that plan, so too Pradhāna (becoming developed) in the form of Mahat (intellect), etc., acts according to a law, and therefore is figuratively spoken of as conscious. If you ask us, why we abandon the proper sense of 'beholding,' and adopt a figurative one, we answer that we do so because we find the term figuratively applied to Water and to Light, though unconscious objects, in the Vedic texts, 'The Light beheld,' 'the Waters beheld' (Chh. Up. vi. 2, 3 f.). Hence from the fact that the expression is for the most part figuratively employed, we conclude that the act of beholding,' performed by the 'Existent' also was a figurative one." These objections having been brought forward, the following Sūtra is introduced: 6. "If you say that the act of 'beholding' is figuratively ascribed to Pradhāna, it is not so, because the word Soul also is applied to the cause." (h) "The assertion that the unconscious Pradhāna is designated by the word 'Existent,' and that 'beholding' is figuratively ascribed to it, as to Water and Light, is incorrect. Why? Because the word Soul also is employed. The text which begins with the words, 'This, o fair youth, was in the beginning Existent,' and goes on 'It beheld, it created light,' after relating the creation of Light, Water, and Food, refers to that 'Existent,' the 'beholder,' which is the subject of the text, and to Light, Water, and Food, under the appellation of deities, thus: 'This deity beheld (or resolved), come let me enter into these three deities with this living Soul, and make manifest Name and Form' (vi. 3, 2). Here if the unconscious Pradhāna were regarded as being, through the function of the quality (of Goodness), the 'beholder,' it would from the context be referred to in the phrase 'that deity;' and then the deity in question could not denote a 'living being' by the term 'Soul.' For the principle of life is both according to common usage, and interpretation, the conscious ruler of the body, and the sustainer of the vital breaths. How could such a principle of life be the Soul of the unconscious Pradhāna? For Soul means the essential nature, and a conscious principle of life cannot be the essence of the unconscious Pradhāna. But in reality the conscious Brahma is understood in this text as the 'beholder' in the proper sense of the term; and the word Soul, as relating to the principle of life, is rightly applied to Him. And thus in the sentence 'This entire universe is identical with this subtile particle; it is true; it is Soul: Thou art it, o Śvetaketu,' (Chh. Up. vi. 8, 6 f.) the author by employing the words 'it is Soul' designates the subtile particle, the Existent, which is the subject of the text, as Soul, by the term Soul, and so in the words 'thou art it, o Śvetaketu,' describes the conscious Śvetaketu as being Soul. But Water and Fire are unconscious things, because they are objects of sense,[142] and because it is pointed out that they were employed in the manifestation of Name and Form; and so there is no reason, as in the case of Soul, to describe them as 'beholders' in the proper sense: that term must be applied to them by a figure, as in the case of the 'river bank.' And their act of 'beholding' was dependent on their being governed by the 'Existent.' But, as we have said, the act of 'beholding' is not figurative in the case of the 'Existent,' because the word Soul is applied to it. But it is now urged (i), that the term Soul does apply to Pradhāna, though unconscious, because it fulfils all the objects of soul; just as it is applied by a king to his servant who accomplishes all his designs, when he says 'Bhadrasena is my soul.' For Pradhāna renders aid to a man's soul by obtaining for it both celestial enjoyment, and final liberation, as a king's servant assists him by acting in peace and war, etc. Or (j) the one word Soul may apply both to conscious and unconscious objects, as we see it employed in the phrases 'soul of the elements,' 'soul of the bodily organs;' just as the same word jyotis means both sacrifice and light. Why then, the Sānkhyas conclude, should you infer from the word 'Soul' that the term 'beholding' cannot be figuratively used?

[140] Kūlam pipatishati, literally, "The bank wishes to fall;" but, as is well known, a verb, or verbal noun, or adjective, in the desiderative form, often indicates nothing more than that something is about to happen. Here, however, the Sānkhyas are introduced as founding a serious argument on this equivocal form of speech.

[141] See Vijnāna Bhikshu's remarks on the Sānkhya Sūtra, i. 96, where the same illustration is given.

[142] Vishayatvāt = dṛig-vishayatvāt, "from their being objects of the sense of sight."—Govinda Ānanda.

"This is answered in the 7th Sūtra ('Soul cannot denote Pradhāna), because it is declared that the man who fixes his thoughts upon it obtains final emancipation.' Unconscious Pradhāna must not be understood to derive any support from the word 'Soul;' for after referring in the words 'it is Soul' to the 'Existent,' the 'very subtile thing,' which is the subject of the passage, and indicating in the words 'thou art it, o Śvetaketu,' that the conscious Śvetaketu, who was about to obtain emancipation, was intent upon it, the text above adduced declares his emancipation in the words 'the man who has an instructor knows, "this will only last until I am liberated; I shall then be perfected."' (Chh. Up. vi. 14, 6) For if the unconscious Pradhāna were denoted by the term 'Existent,' the words 'thou art it,' would cause the conscious person, who was seeking after emancipation, to understand (of himself) 'Thou art unconscious;' and in that case the Śāstra which declared what was contradictory would be unauthoritative, because injurious to the person in question. But we cannot conceive a faultless Śāstra to be unauthoritative. And if a Śāstra esteemed authoritative should inform an ignorant seeker after emancipation, that a thing which was not soul was soul, he (the ignorant seeker) would in consequence of his faith, persist in regarding it as soul, as in the case of the blind man and the bull's tail,[143] and would fail of attaining to soul which was quite different from it; and would in consequence lose the object of its efforts, and suffer injury. It is therefore proper to conclude that just as the Vedic precept, that he who desires paradise should perform the agnihotra sacrifice is conformable to truth, so, too, the text which says to the man seeking after emancipation, 'this is soul, thou art that, o Śvetaketu,' declares to him soul in conformity with the reality. And so,—as in the case of the man (charged with theft) who takes into his hand the red-hot axe, and (in consequence of the truth of his protestation of innocence) is delivered (Chh. Up. vi. 16, 2),—the promise of final emancipation will hold good in the case of the man whose thoughts are fixed on the true Brahma. . . . Consequently the application of the word 'soul' to the 'existent subtile thing' is not figurative. Whereas (i) the use of the same word when applied to a servant (as when it is said 'Bhadrasena is my soul'), is shown to be figurative by the manifest distinctness of a servant from his master. And the fact that a word is sometimes observed to be employed figuratively does not justify the supposition that it is so used in cases where the (proper) sense is established by the words; because that would give rise to doubt in every instance. Again, (j) it is incorrect to say that the word soul is common to things conscious and unconscious, (as the term jyotis means both sacrifice and flame), because the assertion that it has a variety of significa-tions is unreasonable. Hence the word soul, which properly refers to conscious things, is applied to the elements, etc., by a figurative ascription to them of consciousness, as when we say, 'the soul of the elements,' or 'the soul of the bodily organs.' And even if it were admitted that the word soul was common to different things, it could not be ascertained whether it had reference to one thing or another unless the context or some auxiliary word determined the point. But in the case before us there is nothing to determine that it denotes anything unconscious; on the contrary, the subject of the sentence is the 'Existent, the beholder,' and in immediate connection with it is the conscious Śvetaketu; for as we have already said an unconscious thing cannot be conceived as the soul of the conscious Śvetaketu. Thus it is settled that the word 'soul' refers to a conscious being," etc.

[143] The story or fable here alluded to is told at length by Ānanda Giri, and more briefly by Govinda Ānanda as follows: Kaśchit kila dushṭātmā mahāraṇya-mārge patitam andhaṁ sva-bandhu-nagaraṁ jigamishum babhāshe "kim attra āyushmatā duḥkhitena sthīyate" iti | sa cha andhaḥ sukha-vāṇīm ākarṇya tam āptam matvā uvācha "aho mad-bhāgadheyaṁ yad attra bhavān mām dīnaṁ svābhīshṭa-nagara-prāpty-asamartham bhāshate" iti | sa cha vipralipsur dushṭa-go-yuvānam ānīya tadīya-lāngūlaṁ andhaṁ grāhayāmāsa upadideśa cha enam andham "esha go-yuvā tvāṁ nagaraṁ neshyati mā tyaja lāngūlam" iti sa cha andhaḥ śraddhālutayā tad atyajan svābhīshṭam aprāpya anartha-paramparām prāptas tena nyāyena ity arthaḥ | "A certain malicious person said to a blind man who was lying on the road through a forest, and wishing to proceed to the city of his friends, 'Why, distressed old man, do you stay here?' The blind man hearing the agreeable voice of the speaker, and regarding him as trustworthy, replied: 'O how great is my good fortune that you have accosted me who am helpless, and unable to go to the city which I desire to reach!' The other, wishing to deceive him, brought a vicious young bull, and made the blind man lay hold of his tail, and told him that the young bull would conduct him to the city, enjoining him not to let go the tail. Trusting to the speaker, the blind kept his hold, but did not attain the object of his desire, and encountered a series of mishaps;—such is the illustration."

In the fourth section (pāda) of the 1st Book, the author of the Sūtras returns to his controversy with the Sānkhyas, and Śankara, after alluding to the aphorisms in which they had previously been combated, proceeds as follows (p. 334):

Idaṁ tv idānīm avaśishṭam āśankyate | yad uktam pradhānasya aśabdatvaṁ tad asiddhaṁ kāsuchit śākhāsu pradhāna-samarpaṇābhāsānāṁ śabdānaṁ śrūyamāṇatvāt | ataḥ pradhānasya kāraṇatvaṁ veda-prasiddham eva mahadbhiḥ paramarshibhiḥ Kapilādibhiḥ parigṛihītam iti prasajyate | tad yāvat teshāṁ śabdānām anya-paratvaṁ na pratipādyate tāvat sarvajnam Brahma jagataḥ kāraṇam iti pratipāditam apy ākulībhavet | atas teshām anya-paratvaṁ darśayitum paraḥ sandarbhaḥ pravarttate | "ānumānikam api" (Br. Sūtra i. 4, 1) anumāna-nirūpitam api pradhānam "ekeshāṁ" śākhināṁ śabdavad upalabhyate | Kāṭhake hi paṭhyate "mahataḥ param avyaktam avyaktāt purushaḥ paraḥ" iti | tattra ye eva yan-nāmāno yat-kramakāś cha mahad-avyakta-purushāḥ smṛiti-prasiddhās te eva iha pratyabhijnāyante | tattra "avyaktam" iti smṛiti-prasiddheḥ śabdādi-hīnatvāch cha na vyaktam avyaktam iti vyutpatti-sambhavāt smṛiti-prasiddham pradhānam abhidhīyate | atas tasya śabdavattvād aśabdatvam anupapannam [144] | tad eva cha jagataḥ kāraṇaṁ śruti-smṛiti-prasiddhibhyaḥ iti chet | na etad evam | na hy etat Kāṭhaka-vākyaṁ smṛiti-prasiddhayor mahad-avyaktayor astitva-param | na hy attra yādṛiśaṁ smṛiti-prasiddhaṁ svatantraṁ kāraṇaṁ triguṇam pradhānaṁ

[144] The text given in the Bibl. Indica has upapannam, but I follow the old edition in Bengali characters in reading anupapannam, which seems required by the sense.

tādṛiśam pratyabhijnāyate | śabda-mātraṁ hy attra avyaktam iti pratyabhijnāyate | sa cha śabdo na vyaktam avyaktam iti yaugikatvād anyasminn api sūkshme durlakshye cha prayujyate na cha ayaṁ kasminśchid rūdhaḥ | yā tu pradhāna-vādinām rūḍhiḥ sā teshām eva pāribhāshikī satī na vedārtha-nirūpaṇe kāraṇa-bhāvam pratipadyate | na cha krama-mātra-sāmarthyāt samānārtha-pratipattir bhavaty asati tad-rūpa-pratyabhijnāne | na hy aśva-sthāne gām paśyann aśvo 'yam ity amūḍho 'dhyavasyati | prakaraṇa-nirūpaṇāyāṁ cha attra na para-parikalpitam pradhānam pratīyate śarīra-rūpaka-vinyasta-grihīteḥ | śarīraṁ hy attra ratha-rūpaka-vinyastam avyakta-śabdena parigṛihyate | kutaḥ | prakaraṇāt pariśeshāch cha | tathā hy anantarātīto granthaḥ ātma-śarīrādīnāṁ rathi-rathādi-rūpaka-kḷiptiṁ darśayati | (Kaṭha Upanishad, i. 3, 3 f.) "ātmānaṁ rathinaṁ viddhi śarīraṁ ratham eva cha | buddhiṁ cha sārathiṁ viddhi manaḥ pragraham eva cha | 4. Indriyāṇi hayān āhur vishayāṁs teshu gocharān | ātmendriya-mano-yuktam bhoktety āhur manīshiṇaḥ" | taiś chaindriyādibhir asaṁyataiḥ saṁsāram adhigachchhati | saṁyatais tv adhvanaḥ pāraṁ tad Vishṇoḥ paramam padam āpnoti iti darśayitvā kiṁ tad adhvanaḥ pāram Vishṇoḥ paramam padam ity asya ākānkshāyāṁ tebhyaḥ eva prakṛitebhyaḥ indriyādibhyaḥ paratvena paramātmānam adhvanaḥ pāraṁ tad Vishṇoḥ paramam padaṁ darśayati | Kaṭha Up. i. 3, 10 f.) "indriyebhyaḥ parāḥ hy arthāḥ arthebhyaś cha param manaḥ | manasas tu parā buddhir buddher ātmā mahān paraḥ | 11. Mahataḥ param avyaktam avyaktāt purushaḥ paraḥ | purushād na paraṁ kinchit sā kāshṭhā sā parā gatir" iti | . . . . "Buddher ātmā mahān paraḥ" yaḥ sa "ātmānaṁ rathinaṁ viddhi" iti rathitvena upakshiptaḥ | kutaḥ | ātma-śabdād bhoktuś cha bhogopakaraṇāt paratvopapatteḥ | mahattvaṁ cha asya svāmitvād upapannam | . . . . yā prathamajasya Hiraṇyagarbhasya buddhiḥ sā sarvāsām buddhīnām paramā pratishṭhā sā iha "mahān ātmā" ity uchyate | sā cha pūrvattra buddhi-grahaṇena eva gṛihītā satī hirug iha upadiśyate tasyāḥ apy asmadīyābhyo buddhibhyaḥ paratvopapatteḥ | . . . . tad evaṁ śarīram eva ekam pariśishyate | teshu[145] itarāṇi indriyādīni prakṛitāny eva parama-padadidarśayishayā samanukrāman pariśishyamāṇena iha anena avyakta-śabdena pariśishyamāṇam prakṛitaṁ śarīraṁ darśayati iti gamyate | . . . . tad evam pūrvāparālochanāyāṁ nāsty attra para-parikalpitasya pradhānasya avakāśaḥ | 2. "Sūkshmaṁ tu tad-arhatvāt" | uktam etat prakaraṇa-

[145] The earlier edition above referred to omits teshu.

parisheshābhyām śarīram avyakta-śabdaṁ na pradhānam iti | idam idānīṁ āśankyate katham avyakta-śabdārhatvaṁ śarīrasya yāvatā sthūlatvāt spashṭataram idaṁ śarīraṁ vyakta-śabdārham aspashṭa-vachanas tv avyakta-śabdaḥ iti | ataḥ uttaram uchyate | sūkshmaṁ tv iha kāraṇātmanā śarīraṁ vivakshyate sūkshmasya avyakta-śabdārhatvāt | yadyapi sthūlam idaṁ śarīraṁ na svayam avyakta-śabdam arhati tathāpi tasya tv ārambhakam bhūta-sūksham avyakta-śabdam arhati | . . . . attra āha yadi jagad idam anabhivyakta-nāma-rūpaṁ vījātmakam prāg-avastham avyakta-śabdārham abhyupagamyeta tad-ātmanā cha śarīrasyāpy avyakta-śabdārhatvam pratijnāyeta sa eva tarhi pradhāna-kāraṇa-vādaḥ evam saty āpadyeta asya eva jagataḥ prāg-avasthāyāḥ pradhānatvena abhyupagamād iti | attra uchyate | yadi vayaṁ svatantrāṁ kānchit prāg-avasthāṁ jagataḥ kāraṇatvena abhyupagachchema prasanjayema tadā pradhāna-kāraṇa-vādam | Parmeśvarādhīnā tv iyam asmābhiḥ prāg-avasthā jagato 'bhyupagamyate na svatantrā | sā cha avaśyam abhyupagantavyā | arthavatī hi sā | na hi tayā vinā Parameśvarasya srashṭritvaṁ siddhyati śakti-rahitasya tasya pravritty-anupapatteḥ muktānāṁ cha punar-utpattir vidyayā tasyāḥ vīja-śakter dāhāt | avidyātmikā hi sā vīja-śaktir avyakta-śabda-nirdeśyā Parameśvarāśrayā māyāmayī mahāsushuptir yasyāṁ svarūpa-pratibodha-rahitāḥ śerate saṁsarino jīvāḥ | tad etad avyaktaṁ kvachid ākāśa-śabda-nirdishṭam | "etasmin nu khalv akshare Gārgi ākāśaḥ otaś cha protaś cha" iti śruteḥ | kvachid akshara-śabdoditam "āksharāt paratah parah" iti śruteḥ | kvachid māyā iti sūchitam "māyāṁ tu prakritiṁ vidyād māyinaṁ tu maheśvaram" iti mantra-varṇāt | avyaktā hi sā māyā tattvānyatva-nirūpaṇasya aśakyatvāt | tad idam "mahataḥ param avyaktam" ity uktam avyakta-prabhavatvād mahato yadā Hairanyagarbhī buddhir mahān | yadā tu jīvo mahāṁs tadā 'py avyaktādhīnatvāj jīva-bhāvasya mahataḥ param avyaktam ity uktam | avidyā hy avyaktam avidyāvattve cha jīvasya sarvaḥ saṁvyavahāraḥ santato varttate | tach cha avyakta-gatam mahataḥ paratvam abhedopachārāt tad-vikāre śarīre parikalpyate |

"But now this doubt still remains. The assertion that the existence of Pradhāna is not supported by the Veda is, say the Sānkhyas, destitute of proof, as certain Vedic Sākhās contain passages which have the appearance of affirming Pradhāna. Consequently the causality of Pradhāna has been received by Kapila and other great rishis on the ground that it is established by the Veda; and this is an objection to the statement which you make to the contrary. Until, therefore, it be established that these passages have a different object, the doctrine that an omniscient Brahma is the cause of the world, even though it has been proved, will be again unsettled; and consequently you bring forward a great array of arguments to shew that these texts apply to something else. In the words 'it may be deduced also,' i.e. it is determined by inference,—it is shewn that in the opinion of certain schools the doctrine of Pradhāna is scriptural, for in the Kaṭha Upanishad (i. 3, 11) we read the words 'Above the Great one is Avyakta (the Unmanifested one), and above the Unmanifested one is Purusha (Soul).' Here we recognize 'the Great one,' 'the Unmanifested one,' and Purusha, with the same names and in the same order in which they are known to occur in the Smṛiti (i.e. the system of Kapila). Here that which is called Pradhāna in the Smṛiti is denoted by the word 'the Unmanifested one,' as we learn both from its being so called in the Smṛiti, and from the epithet 'unmanifested' (which is derived from the words 'not' and 'manifested') being properly applicable to it in consequence of its being devoid of sound, and the other objects of sense: wherefore, from its having this Vedic authority to support it, its (i.e. Pradhāna's) unscriptural character is refuted; and it is proved both by the Veda, the Smṛiti, and common notoriety to be the cause of the world. If the Sānkhyas argue thus, we reply that the case is not so; for this text of the Kaṭha Upanishad does not refer to the existence of the 'Great one' and the 'Unmanifested one,' which are defined in the Smṛiti (of Kapila); for here we do not recognize such a self-dependent cause, viz. Pradhāna, composed of the three qualities, as is declared in that Smṛiti, but the mere epithet 'unmanifested.' And this word 'unmanifested,' owing to its sense as a derivative from the words 'not' and 'manifested,' is also applied to anything else which is subtile or indistinguishable, and has not properly a conventional meaning in reference to any particular thing. As for the conventional use which the assertors of Pradhāna make of it, that is a technical application peculiar to themselves, and does not afford any means for determining the sense of the Vedas. Nor does the mere identity of the order (of the three words) furnish any proof of identity of meaning unless we can recognise the essential character of the things to be the same. For no man but a fool, if he saw a cow in the place where he expected to see a horse, would falsely ascribe to it the character of a horse. And if we determine the sense of the context, it will be found that the Pradhāna imagined by our opponents finds no place here, since it is the 'body' which is indicated in the preceding simile. For here the body as represented under the figure of a chariot, etc., is to be understood by the word 'the Unmanifested.' Why? From the context and the remainder of the sentence. For the context which immediately precedes sets forth the soul, the body, etc., under the figure of a rider, a chariot, etc., as follows: 'Know that the soul is the rider, the body the chariot, the intellect the charioteer, and the mind the reins. The senses are called the horses, and the objects of sense the roads on which they go. The soul accompanied by the senses and the mind is the enjoyer;[146] so say the wise.' After pointing out (in the following verses) that with these senses, etc., if uncontrouled, the soul gains only this world, but if they are kept under controul, it attains to the highest state of Vishṇu, which is the end of its road; the author (in answer to the question 'What is that highest state of Vishṇu which is the end of the road?') shews in the following verses that it is the supreme Spirit who transcends the senses, etc. (which form the subject of the context), who is alluded to as the goal, and the highest state of Vishṇu: 'The objects of sense are higher than the senses; the mind is higher than the objects of sense; the intellect is higher than the mind; the Great soul is higher than the intellect; the Unmanifested one is higher than the Great soul; the spirit (Purusha) is greater than the Unmanifested: there is nothing higher than Spirit, that is the end, that is the highest goal.'" After observing that the various terms in these lines are the same which had been previously introduced in the simile of the chariot, charioteer, rider, horses, etc., Śankara assigns the reason of the superiority attributed to each succeeding object over that which precedes it, and then goes on to say in regard to intellect and soul: "'The Great soul is higher than the intellect,' that soul, namely, which is figuratively described as a rider, in the words 'Know the soul to be the rider.' But why is the Soul superior to the intellect? Both from the use of the word Soul and because it aids the enjoyment of the enjoyer, it is shewn to be superior. Its character as the Great soul is proved by its being the master. . . The intellect of Hiranyagarbha, the first-born, is the highest basis of all intellect; and it is that which is here called the 'Great soul.' It had been previously comprehended under the word 'intellect,' but is here separately specified, because it also is superior to our intellects. . . . . Thus the body alone remains of the objects referred to in the passage. After going over all the others in order, with the view of pointing out the highest state to be attained, he indicates by the one remaining word, the 'Unapparent,' the one remaining subject of the text, viz. the body—such is our conclusion. . . . Hence after examining both the earlier and later portions of the passage, we find that there is no place for the Pradhāna imagined by our opponents." Going on to interpret the next aphorism (i. 4, 2) 'But the subtile body may also be properly called 'unmanifested,' Sankara begins:

[146] The words of the original, both as given here and in the text of the Kaṭha Upanishad are ātmendriya-mano-yuktam bhoktā, which are not very clear. The commentators understand ātman at the beginning of the compound as denoting body, and supply ātmānam as the subject. See Dr. Roer's translation of the Upanishads (Bibl. Ind. p. 107).

"We have declared that, looking to the context and the only word which remained to be explained, the body, and not Pradhāna, is denoted by the word the 'Unapparent.' But here a doubt arises: 'How can the body be properly designated by the word 'unapparent,' inasmuch as from its grossness it is very distinctly perceptible, and therefore should rather be denoted by the word 'apparent,' while the word 'unapparent' signifies something that is not perceptible? We answer: In this passage the subtile body in its character of cause is intended, since what is subtile is properly designated by the term 'unapparent.' Although this gross body itself cannot properly be described by the word 'Unapparent,' still this term applies to the subtile element which is its originator" . . . . Sankara begins his interpretation of the next aphorism (i. 4, 3) as follows: "Here the Sānkhyas rejoin: 'If you admit that this world in its primordial condition, before its name and form had been manifested, and while it existed in its rudimentary form, could be properly designated by the word 'Unapparent,' and if the same term be declared applicable to body also while continuing in that state, then your explanation will exactly coincide with our doctrine of Pradhāna as the cause of all things; since you will virtually acknowledge that the original condition of this world was that of Pradhāna. To this we reply: If we admitted any self-dependent original condition as the cause of the world, we should then lay ourselves open to the charge of admitting that Pradhāna is the cause. But we consider that this primordial state of the world is dependent upon the supreme Deity (Parameśvara) and not self-dependent. And this state to which we refer must of necessity be assumed, as it is essential. For without it the creative action of the supreme Deity could not be accomplished, since, if he were destitute of his Śakti (power), any activity on his part would be inconceivable. And so, too, those who have been emancipated from birth are not born again, because this germinative power (on the destruction,—which implies the previous existence,—of which emancipation depends) is consumed by knowledge.[147] For that germinative power, of which the essence is ignorance, and which is denoted by the word 'Unapparent,' has its centre in the supreme Deity, and is a great illusive sleep, during which mundane souls repose unconscious of their own true nature. This 'Unapparent one' is in some places indicated by the term æther (ākāśa), as in the text (Bṛih. Ār. Up. iii. 8, 11) 'On this undecaying Being, o Gārgī, the æther is woven as warp and woof;' in other places by the word 'undecaying' (akshara), as in the text, 'Beyond the Undecaying is the Highest;' and is elsewhere designated by the term 'illusion' (māyā) as in the line (Śvetaśv. Up. 4, 10) 'Know that Prakṛiti (or matter) is illusion, and the great Deity the possessor of illusion.' For this 'illusion' is 'unapparent,' because it cannot be defined in its essence and difference. This is the 'Unapparent' which is described as above the 'Great one,' since the latter, when regarded as identical with the intellect of Hiraṇyagarbha, springs from the former. And even if the 'Great one' be identified with the embodied soul (jīva), the 'Unapparent' can be said to be above it, as the condition of the embodied soul is dependent upon the 'Unapparent.' For the 'Unapparent' is ignorance, and it is during its condition of ignorance that the entire mundane action of the embodied soul is carried on. And that superiority of the 'Unapparent' over the 'Great one' is by a figurative description of body as identical with the former attributed to body also."

[147] Govinda Ānanda explains this clause as follows: Bandha-mukti-vyavasthārtham api sā svīkāryyā ity āha "muktānām" iti | yan-nāśād muktiḥ sā svīkāryyā tāṁ vinā eva śrishṭau muktānām punar bandhāpattir ity arthaḥ | "In the words 'Those who had been emancipated,' etc., he tells us that this ignorance must be admitted, in order to secure the permanence of emancipation from the bondage (of birth): that is, that ignorance by the destruction of which emancipation is obtained must be admitted; as without it those who had been emancipated would at the creation be again involved in bondage," [because to be released at all, they must be released from something].

By these subtle and elaborate explanations Śankara scarcely appears to make out his point. But I cannot follow further the discussion of this question, and now go on to the eighth aphorism (i. 4, 8) where the purport of another Vedic text is investigated:

"Chamasa-vad aviśeshāt" | punar api pradhāna-vādī aśabdatvam pradhānasya asiddhaṁ ity āha | kasmāt | mantra-varṇāt | (Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, iv. 5) "ajām ekāṁ lohita-śukla-kṛishṇām bahvīḥ prajāḥ sṛijamānāṁ svarūpāḥ[148] | ajo hy eko jushamāṇo 'nuśete jahāty enām bhuktabhogām ajo 'nyaḥ" iti | attra hi mantre lohita-śukla-kṛishṇa-śabdaiḥ rajaḥ-sattva-tamāṁsy abhidhīyante | lohitaṁ rajo ranjanātmakatvāt śuklaṁ sattvaṁ prakāśātmakatvāt kṛishṇaṁ tamaḥ āvaraṇātmakatvāt | teshāṁ sāmyāvasthāvayava-dharmair vyapadiśyate lohita-śukla-kṛishṇā iti | na jāyate iti cha "ajā" syād "mūla-prakṛitir avikṛitir" ity abhyupagamāt | nanv ajā-śabdaś chhāgāyāṁ rūḍhaḥ | vāḍham | sā tu rūḍhir iha na āśrayituṁ śakyā vidyā-prakaraṇāt | sā cha bahvīḥ prajās traiguṇyānvitāḥ janayati . . . . tasmāt śruti-mūlā eva pradhānādi-kalpanā Kāpilānām ity evam prāpte brūmaḥ | na anena mantreṇa śruti-mūlatvaṁ Sānkhya-vādasya śakyam āśrayitum | na hy ayam mantraḥ svātantryeṇa kanchid api vādaṁ samarthayitum utsahate | sarvatrāpi yayā kayāchit kalpanayā ajātvādi-sampādanopapatteḥ Sānkhya-vādaḥ eva iha abhipretaḥ iti viśeshāvadhāraṇa-kāraṇābhāvāt | "chamasa-vat" |

"'Because, as in the case of the spoon, there is nothing distinctive.' The assertor of Pradhāna again declares that Pradhāna is not proved to be unscriptural. Why? From the following verse (Śv. Up. iv. 5): 'One unborn male, loving the unborn female of a red, white, and black colour, who forms many creatures possessing her own character, unites himself with her: another unborn male abandons her after he has enjoyed her.' For in this verse the words 'red,' 'white,' and 'black,' denote (the three Qualities) Passion, Goodness, and Darkness; —Passion, from its stimulating character, being designated by the term [148] The text of Dr. Röer's ed. of the Upanishad (Bibl. Ind. vol. vii.) has two various readings in this line, viz. lohita-kṛishṇa-varṇām for lohita-śukla-kṛishṇam (which latter, however, is the reading referred to by Śankara in his commentary on that work), and sarūpām for svarūpāḥ.

'red,' Goodness, from its illuminating character, by 'white,' and Darkness, from its enveloping character, by 'black.' The unborn female is described as red, white, and black, with reference to the characteristics of the three components which make up the state of equilibium. She must be called 'unborn' (Ajā), because she is not produced, since it is admitted that 'original matter' (Mūla-Prakṛiti = Pradhāna) is not a modification (of any other substance—Sāṅkhya Kārikā, verse 3). But is not ajā the conventional name for 'she-goat?' True (reply the Sānkyas), but that conventional sense cannot be adopted here, because knowledge is the subject of the context. And this unborn female produces many creatures characterized by the three Qualities . . . . And from this it is concluded that the theory of Kapila's followers regarding Pradhāna, etc., is based upon the Veda. We reply: that it cannot be admitted on the strength of this verse that the theory of the Sānkhyas is founded on the Veda. For the verse in question, if regarded independently, is powerless to sustain any hypothesis whatever; and the reason is that, as this description of the state of the unborn female may be rendered applicable on any hypothesis whatever, there is no ground for determining specifically that the Sānkhya theory is here intended—'as in the case of the spoon.'" This aphorism refers to a verse quoted in the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, ii. 2, 3 (Bibl. Ind. p. 413 of the Sanskrit, and p. 174 of Dr. Roer's translation), and beginning 'a cup with its mouth down, and its bottom upwards,' which, as Śankara remarks, cannot, without some further indication, be applied to any one cup in particular; and in the same way, he argues, the unborn female in the passage under discussion cannot, in the absence of anything to restrict the application in any special way be understood as denoting Pradhāna (evam ihāpy aviśesho 'jām ekām ity asya mantrasya | na asmin mantre Pradhānam eva ajā 'bhipretā iti śakyate niyantum). The question then arises what is meant by this 'unborn female.' To this the author of the aphorisms and Śankara reply, that the word denotes the material substance of a four-fold class of elements, viz. light, heat, water, and food, all derived from the supreme Deity (Parameśvarād utpannā jyotiḥ-pramukhā tejo 'b-anna-lakshaṇā chatur-vidha-bhūta-grāmasya prakṛiti-bhūtā iyam ajā pratipattavyā). These four elements he however seems (p. 357) to identify with three, in the words: bhūta-traya-lakshaṇā eva iyam ajā vijneyā na guṇa-traya-lakshaṇā | 'This unborn female is formed by three elements, not by the three qualities;' and the ascription of the three colours in the text to these three elements is supported by a quotation from the Chhāndogya Upanishad, vi. 4, 1, which is as follows: Yad agneḥ rohitam rūpaṁ tejasas tad rūpam yat śuklaṁ tad apāṁ yat krishṇaṁ tad annasya | "The red colour of fire is that of heat; its white colour is that of water; and its black colour is that of food (which here means earth, according to the commentator on the Chhāndogya Upanishad).[149] In this way, he adds, the words denoting the three colours are used in the proper sense, whereas if applied to the three qualities they would be figuratively employed (rohitādīnāṁ cha śabdānāṁ rūpa-viśesheshu mukhyatvād bhāktatvāch cha guṇa-vishayatvasya). Śankara concludes that this verse, descriptive of the unborn female, does not denote any self-dependent material cause called Pradhāna, but is shewn from the context to signify the Divine Power in its primordial state before Name and Form were developed (na svatantrā kāchit prakṛitiḥ pradhānaṁ nāma ajā-mantreṇa āmnāyāte iti śakyate vaktum | prakaraṇāt tu sā eva daivī śaktir avyākṛita-nāma-rūpā nāma-rūpayoḥ prāg avasthānenāpi mantreṇa āmnāyate ity uchyate).

Passing over the further questions, which are raised on this subject, I go on to the 11th Sūtra and the comment upon it, from which we learn that the words 'knowing him by whom the five times five men, and the æther are upheld, to be Soul,' etc. (yasmin pancha pancha-janāḥ ākāśāś cha pratishṭhitaḥ | tam evānyaḥ ātmānam vidvān ityādi), are adduced by the Sānkhyas in support of their system, as the number of the principles (tattva), which it affirms (see Sānkhya Kārikā, verse 3, and Sānkhya Sūtras, i. 61), corresponds to the number twenty-five in this text; while the applicability of the passage is denied by the Vedāntins on the ground that the 'principles' of the Sānkhya are not made up of five homogeneous sets of five each (p. 362); that if the Soul and æther mentioned in the text are added, as they must be, to the twenty-five, the aggregate number will exceed that of the Sānkhya 'principles,' among which both Soul and æther are comprehended (pp. 364 f.); that the fact of the correspondence of the numbers, if admitted, would not suffice to shew that the 'principles' of the Sānkhya were referred to, as they are not elsewhere recognized in the Veda, and as the word [149] See Babu Rajendra Lāl Mittra's translation of this Upanishad, p. 106.

'men' (janāḥ) is not usually applied to denote 'principles' (p. 365); and further that the phrase 'the five five men,' signifies only 'five,' and not 'five times five' (p. 366), etc. The conclusion arrived at in the twelfth aphorism is that the breath, and other vital airs, are referred to in the passage under consideration; and that although the word 'men' (janāḥ) is not generally applied to 'breath,' etc., any more than to 'principles,' the reference is determined by the context. Others, as Śankara observes, explain the term 'the five men' (panchajanāḥ) of the gods, fathers, gandharvas, asuras, and rakshases, and others again of the four castes, and the Nishādas.[150] The Vedāntic teacher (Bādarāyaṇa) however, as his commentator adds, has decided that the breath, etc., are intended.

If we now turn to the Sānkhya aphorisms themselves, we shall find that their author constantly refers to texts of the Veda as supporting, coinciding with, or reconcileable with his dogmas. I have noticed the following instances, viz. Sūtras i. 5, 36, 51, 54, 78, 84, 148, 155; ii. 20–22; iii. 14, 15, 80; iv. 22; v, 1, 12, 15, 21; vi. 32, 34, 51, 58, 59, which may be consulted in Dr. Ballantyne's translation. I can only refer more particularly to a few of these with the commentator's remarks.

I begin with Sūtra i. 155,[151] in which the author of the Aphorisms maintains that the great distinctive dogma of the Vedānta, the oneness of Soul, is not supported by the Veda. In Sūtra 150 he had laid it down as his own conclusion, established by the fact of the variety observable in the conditions of birth, etc., that there is a multitude of souls, and he now defends this as conformable to Scripture.

"Na advaita-śruti-virodho jāti-paratvāt" | ātmaikya-śrutīnāṁ virodhas tu nāsti tāsāṁ jāti-paratvāt | jātiḥ sāmānyam eka-rūpatvaṁ tattra advaita-śrutīnāṁ tātparyyād na tv akhaṇḍatve prayojanābhāvād ity arthaḥ | . . . . yathā-śruta-jāti-śabdasya ādare tv "ātmā idam ekaḥ eva agre asīt" "sad eva saumya idam agre āsīd ekam eva advitīyam" (Chhānd. Up. vi. 2, 1) ity-ādy-advaita-śruty-upapādakatayā eva sūtraṁ vyākheyaṁ | "jāti-paratvāt" | vijātīya-dvaiīa-nishedha-paratvād ity arthaḥ | tattra ādya-vyākhyāyām ayam bhāvaḥ | ātmaikya-śruti-smṛitishv ekādi-śabdāś chid-

[150] See the First Volume of this work, pp. 176 ff.
[151] i. 154 in Dr. Hall's edition in the Bibl. Ind.

ekarūpatā-māttra-parāḥ bhedādi-śabdāś cha vaidharmya-lakshaṇa-bheda-parāḥ |

"155. 'This is not opposed to the Vedic doctrine of non-duality, since that merely refers to genus.' Our doctrine that souls are numerous does not conflict with the Vedic texts which affirm the oneness of Soul, since these passages refer to oneness of genus. Genus means sameness, oneness of nature; and it is to this that the texts regarding non-duality relate, and not to the undividedness (or identity) of Soul; since there is no occasion for the latter view. The Sūtra must be explained with due regard to the sense of the word genus as it occurs in the Veda, so as (thereby) to bring out the proper meaning of such texts, expressing non-duality, as these, 'This was in the beginning Soul, one only;' 'This was in the beginning, o fair youth, Existent, one without a second.' The words 'since that merely refers to genus,' mean 'since that is merely intended to deny a duality denoting a difference of genus.' The first of two interpretations given of the Sūtra is as follows: In the texts of the Śruti and Smṛiti relating to the oneness of Soul, the words 'One,' etc., denote simply that Spirit is one in its nature; whilst the words, 'distinction,' etc., designate a distinction defined as difference of nature." At the close of his remarks the commentator gives a second explanation of the Sūtra.

The author returns to this subject in the 61st Sūtra of the fifth Book:

"Na advaitam ātmano lingāt tad-bheda-pratīteḥ" | yadyapy ātmanām anyonyam bheda-vākya-vad abheda-vākyāny api santi tathāpi na advaitam | na atyantam abhedaḥ | ajādi-vākya-sthaiḥ prakṛiti-tyāgātyāgādi-lingair bhedasyaiva siddher ity arthaḥ | na hy atyantābhede tāni lingāny upapadyante |

"'Soul is not one; for a distinction of souls is apparent from various signs.' Although there are texts affirming that there is no distinction, just as there are others which assert a distinction, of souls, still non-duality, i. e. an absolute absence of distinction must be denied; because a distinction is established by signs, such as the abandonment and non-abandonment of Prakṛiti, etc., mentioned in such texts as that about the 'unborn female,' etc. (See above, p. 165.) For these signs are inconsistent with the hypothesis of an absolute absence of distinction," etc.

A kindred subject is introduced in the next Sūtra, the 62nd:

"Na anātmanā 'pi pratyaksha-bādhāt" | dnātmanā 'pi bhogya-prapan-

chena ātmano na advaitam pratyakṣheṇāpi bādhāt | ātmanaḥ sarva-bhogyābhede ghaṭa-paṭayor apy abhedaḥ syāt | ghaṭādeḥ paṭādy-abhinnātmābhedāt | sa cha bheda-grāhaka-pratyakṣha-bādhitaḥ |

"'Further, there is not an absence of distinction (i.e. identity) between Soul and non-soul, as this is disproved by the evidence of sense.' That is: non-duality (i.e. identity) is not predicable of Soul on the one hand, and non-soul, i.e. the perceptible objects by which our senses are affected, on the other, because this is opposed to the evidence of sense. For if soul were identical with all that is perceptible, there would also be no distinction between a jar and cloth, inasmuch as jars, etc., would not be distinct from soul which is not distinct from cloth, etc.; and such identity (of jars, etc., with cloth, etc.) is opposed to the evidence of sense which obliges us to perceive a distinction."

But how is this to be reconciled with such Vedic texts as 'this is nothing but soul' (ātmā eva idam)? An answer is given in Sūtra 64, which seems to admit that the passages in question do at least on a prima facie view convey the sense ascribed to them by the Vedāntins:

"Anya-paratvam avivekānāṁ tattra" | avivekānām aviveki-purushān prati tattra advaite 'nya-paratvam upāsanārthakānuvādaḥ ity arthaḥ | loke hi śarīra-śarīriṇor bhogya-bhoktroś cha avivekena abhedo vyavahriyate "'haṁ gauro" "mama ātmā Bhadrasenaḥ" ityādiḥ | atas tam eva vyavahāram anūdya tān eva prati tathā upāsanāṁ śrutir vidadhāti sattva-śuddhy-ādy-artham iti |

"'These texts have another object, with a view to those who have no discrimination.' That is: in the passages which affirm non-duality another object is intended, viz. a reference (to vulgar ideas) with a view to stimulate devotion. For it commonly occurs that undiscriminating persons confound the body and the soul, the object to be experienced, and the person who experiences it, as when they say 'I am white,' 'Bhadrasena is myself.' The Veda, therefore, referring to this mode of speaking, inculcates on such undiscerning people the practice of devotion with a view to the promotion of goodness, purity, etc."

The author returns to the subject of non-duality in Sūtra vi. 51, which is introduced by the remark:

Nanv evam pramāṇādy-anurodhena dvaita-sidhhāv advaita-śruteḥ kā gatir iti |

"But if duality be thus established in accordance with proofs, etc, what becomes of the Vedic texts declaring non-duality?"

The answer is as follows:

"Na śruti-virodho rāgiṇāṁ vairāgyāya tat-siddheḥ" | advaita-śruti-virodhas tu nāsti rāgiṇām purushātirikte vairāgyāya eva śrutibhir advaita-sādhanāt |

"'Our view is not opposed to the Veda, as the texts in question establish non-duality with a view to produce apathy in those who are actuated by desire.' That is to say: There is in our doctrine regarding non-duality nothing contrary to the Veda, as the passages referred to affirm this principle with the view of producing in those who have desire an indifference in regard to everything except Soul."

The 12th aphorism of the fifth Book asserts that according to the Veda, Pradhāna, and not Īśvara, is the cause of the world. The details of the reasoning on which this view is founded, as here stated by the commentator, differ in some respects from those which Śankara puts into the mouth of the Sānkhyas:

"Śrutir api pradhāna-kāryyatvasya" | prapanche pradhāna-kāryyatvasya eva śrutir asti na chetana-kāraṇatve | yathā "ajām ekāṁ lohita-śukla-kṛishṇām bahvīḥ prajāḥ sṛijamānāṁ sarūpāḥ" | "tad ha idaṁ tarhy avyākṛitam asīt tad nāma-rūpābhyāṁ vyākriyata" ity-adir ity arthaḥ | yā cha "tad aikshata bahu syām" ityādiś chetana-kāraṇatā-śrutiḥ sā sargādāv utpannasya mahat-tattvopādhikasya mahāpurushasya janya-jñāna-parā | kiṁvā bahu-bhavanānurodhāt pradhāne eva "kūlam pipatishati" iti-vad gauṇī | anyathā "sākshī chetāḥ kevalo nirguṇaś cha" (Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, vi. 11) ity-ādi-śruty-uktāpariṇāmitvasya purushe 'nupapatter iti | ayaṁ cha īśvara-pratishedhaḥ aiśvaryye vairāgyārtham īśvara-jñānaṁ vinā 'pi moksha-pratipādanārthaṁ cha prauḍhi-vāda-māttram iti prāg eva vyākhyātam |

"'There are also Vedic texts to support the doctrine that the world has sprung from Pradhāna, as its cause.' That is: There are Vedic texts to shew that the phenomenal world has sprung from Pradhāna, and that it has not had a conscious being for its cause. They are such as these: 'An unborn female, red, white, and black in hue, producing many creatures like herself, etc.;' 'This was once undeveloped: it was developed with Name and Form.' As regards those other texts which affirm the causality of a conscious being, such as 'It reflected, let me become many,' they refer to the knowledge which sprang up in the great Male who was produced at the beginning of the creation possessing the attributes of the principle of Intellect (Mahat). Or, in accordance with the idea of becoming multiplied, the expression (indicating consciousness and will) is figuratively applied to Pradhāna, as when it is said of the bank of a river that it 'intends to fall.' For on any other supposition the incapability of any modification which is ascribed to Purusha in such texts as 'He who is the witness, the conscious, the sole being, free from the Qualities,' could not properly be applied to him (since if he were the material cause of the creation he must become modified). And it has been before explained[152] that this denial of an Īśvara is a mere display of ingenuity, introduced for the purpose of producing apathy in regard to glory, and of propounding a method of final liberation even independently of the knowledge of an Īśvara."

The following is the 34th Sūtra of the sixth Book, with the remarks by which it is introduced and followed:

Nanu "bahvīḥ prajāḥ purushāt samprasūtāḥ" ity-ādi-śruteḥ purushasya kāraṇatvāvagamād vivarttādi-vādāḥ āśrayaṇīyāḥ ity āśankya āha | "śruti-virodhād na kutarkāpasadasya ātma-lābhaḥ" | purushakāraṇatāyāṁ ye ye pakshāḥ sambhāvitās te sarve śruti-viruddhāḥ iti | atas tad-abhyupagantṛīṇāṁ kutārkikādy-adhamānām ātma-svarūpajñānaṁ na bhavati ity arthaḥ | etena ātmani sukha-duḥkhādi-guṇopādānatva-vādino 'pi kutārkikāḥ eva | teshām apy ātma-yathārtha-jñānaṁ nāsti ity avagantavyam | ātma-kāraṇatā-śrutayaś cha śakti-śaktimadabhedena upāsanārthāḥ eva "ajām ekām" ity-ādi-śrutibhiḥ pradhānakāraṇatā-siddheḥ | yadi cha ākāśasya abhi-ādy-adhishṭhāna-kāraṇatā-vad ātmanaḥ kāraṇatvam uchyate tadā tad na nirākurmaḥ pariṇāmasya pratishedhāt |

"But must we not adopt the theories of an illusory creation, etc., because the causality of Purusha (soul) is to be learned from such texts as the following 'many creatures have been produced from Purusha?' To this difficulty he replies: 'From his opposition to Scripture the illogical outcaste does not attain to Soul.' The sense of this is, that all the propositions, affirming the causality of Soul, which have been devised, are contrary to the Veda; and consequently the low class of bad logicians, etc., who adopt them have no knowledge of the nature of [152] See Vijnāna Bhikshu's remarks, introductory to the Sūtras (p. 5, at the foot), which will be quoted in the next Section, and his comment on Sūtra i. 92. He is, as we shall find, an eclectic, and not a thorough-going adherent of the Sānkhya.

Soul. Hence it is to be understood that those also who assert that Soul is the substance of the qualities of pleasure and pain, etc., are incompetent reasoners: they too are destitute of the true knowledge of Soul. The Vedic texts which declare its causality are intended to inculcate devotion on the ground that there is no distinction between Power (S'akti) and the possessor of Power (S'aktimat); for the causality of Pradhāna is established by such texts as that relating to the 'one unborn female,' &c. But if it be affirmed that Soul is the cause of the world merely in the same sense in which the æther is the cause of clouds, etc., viz. by affording them a receptacle, we do not object to that, since we only deny the transformation (of Soul into material productions)."[153]

In regard to the question whether the principles of the Vedānta or those of the Sānkhya are most in harmony with the most prevalent doctrine of the Upanishads, I shall quote some of the remarks of Dr. Röer, the translator of many of these treatises. In his introduction to the Taittirīya Upanishad he observes that we there find "the tenets peculiar to the Vedānta already in a far advanced state of development; it contains as in a germ the principal elements of this system." "There are, however," he adds, "differences" (Bibliotheca Indica, vol. xv. p. 5). The same nearly is the case with the Aitareya Upanishad (ibid. p. 27). In reference to the S'vetāśvatara Upanishad he remarks: "Sankara in his commentary on this Upanishad generally explains its fundamental views in the spirit of the Vedānta. He is sometimes evidently wrong in identifying the views of some of the other Upanishads with the tenets of the Vedānta, but he is perfectly right to do so in the explanation of an Upanishad which appears to have been composed for the express purpose of making the principle of the Vedānta agreeable to the followers of the Sānkhya" (ibid. pp. 43 f.). Of the Kaṭha Upanishad Dr. Röer says (ibid. p. 97): "The standing point of the Kaṭha is on the whole that of the Vedānta. It is the absolute spirit which is the foundation of the world. . . . . In the order of manifestations or emanations from the absolute spirit it deviates, however, from that adopted by the other Upanishads and by the later Vedānta, and is evidently more closely allied to the Sānkhya. The order is here: The unmanifested (avyakta), the great soul (mahātma, or mahat), intellect [153] See Dr. Ballantyne's translation, which I have often followed. He does not, however, render in extenso all the passages which I have reproduced.

(buddhi), mind, the objects of the senses, and the senses," etc.[154] The reader who wishes to pursue the subject further may consult the same author's remarks on the other Upanishads. On the whole question of the relation of the Vedānta and the Sānkhya respectively to the Veda, Dr. Röer thus expresses himself in his introduction to the Śvetāśvatara Upanishad (p. 36): "'The Vedānta, although in many important points deviating from the Vedas, and although in its own doctrine quite independent of them, was yet believed to be in perfect accordance with them, and being adopted by the majority of the Brāhmans, it was never attacked on account of its orthodoxy. The same cannot be said of the Sānkhya; for it was not only frequently in opposition to the doctrine of the Vedas, but sometimes openly declared so. Indeed, the Vedānta also maintained that the acquisition of truth is independent of caste (1) or any other distinction, and that the highest knowledge which is the chief end of man cannot be imparted by the Vedas (vide Kaṭha ii. 23); yet it insisted that a knowledge of the Vedas was necessary to prepare the mind for the highest knowledge (2). This the Sānkhya denied altogether, and although it referred to the Vedas, and especially to the Upanishads, still it did so only when they accorded with its own doctrines, and it rejected their authority (3) in a case of discrepancy."

I make a few remarks on some points in this quotation indicated by the figures (1), (2), and (3). (1) We have already learned above, p. 99, that, according to the Brahma Sūtras (see i. 3, 34 ff., and Śankara's explanation of them), at least, a Śūdra does not possess the prerogative of acquiring divine knowledge. (2) It appears from Śankara's argument against Jaimini that he does not consider a knowledge of the ceremonial part of the Veda as necessary for the acquisition of divine knowledge, but he seems to regard the Upanishads as the source from which the latter is derived. (3) I do not know on what authority this statement that the Sānkhyas ever actually rejected the authority of the Vedas is founded. Their attempts to reconcile their tenets with the letter of the Veda may often seem to be far-fetched and sophistical; but I have not observed that Śankara, while arguing elaborately against the interpretations of the Sānkhyas, anywhere charges them either with denying the authority of the Veda, or with insincerity in the appeals which they make to the sacred texts.

[154] See above, p. 161.

On the subject of the Upanishads the reader may also consult Prof. Max Müller's Ancient Sanskrit Literature.

I subjoin in a note some extracts from this work.[155]

The Nyāya and Vaiśeshika Sūtras do not appear to contain nearly so many references to Vedic texts as the Sānkhya; but I have noticed the following: Nyāya iii. 32 (= iii. 1, 29 in the Bibl. Ind.); Vaiśeshika ii. 1, 17; iii. 2, 21; iv. 2, 11; v. 2, 10.

The author of the Vaiśeshika Sūtras affirms, in iii. 2, 20, the doctrine that souls are numerous; and in the 21st Sūtra, which I quote, along with the comment of Śankara Miśra, and the gloss of the editor Pandit Jayanārāyana Tarkapanchānana, he claims Vedic authority for this tenet:

21. "Śāstra-sāmarthyāch cha" | (Śankara Miśrā) Śāstraṁ śrutiḥ |

[155] "They (the Upanishads) contain, or are supposed to contain, the highest authority on which the various systems of philosophy in India rest. Not only the Vedānta philosopher, who, by his very name, professes his faith in the ends and objects of the Veda, but the Sānkhya, the Vaiśeshika, the Nyāya, and Yoga philosophers, all pretend to find in the Upanishads some warranty for their tenets, however antagonistic in their bearing. The same applies to the numerous sects that have existed and still exist in India. Their founders, if they have any pretensions to orthodoxy, invariably appeal to some passage in the Upanishads in order to substantiate their own reasonings. Now it is true that in the Upanishads themselves there is so much freedom and breadth of thought that it is not difficult to find in them some authority for almost any shade of philosophical opinion." (p. 316 f.) Again: "The early Hindus did not find any difficulty in reconciling the most different and sometimes contradictory opinions in their search after truth; and a most extraordinary medley of oracular sayings might be collected from the Upanishads, even from those which are genuine and comparatively ancient, all tending to elucidate the darkest points of philosophy and religion, the creation of the world, the nature of God, the relation of man to God, and similar subjects. That one statement should be contradicted by another seems never to have been felt as any serious difficulty." (p. 320 f.) Once more: "The principal interest of the older Upanishads consists in the absence of that systematic uniformity which we find in the later systems of philosophy; and it is to be regretted that nearly all the scholars who have translated portions of the Upanishads have allowed themselves to be guided by the Brahmanic commentators," etc. (p. 322). "In philosophical discussions, they (the Brahmans) allowed the greatest possible freedom; and although at first three philosophical systems only were admitted as orthodox (the two Mīmānsās and the Nyāya), their number was soon raised to six, so as to include the Vaiśeshika, Sānkhya, and Yoga schools. The most conflicting views on points of vital importance were tolerated as long as their advocates succeeded, no matter by what means, in bringing their doctrines into harmony with passages of the Veda, strained and twisted in every possible sense. If it was only admitted that besides the perception of the senses and the induction of reason, revelation also, as contained in the Veda, furnished a true basis for human knowledge, all other points seemed to be of minor importance." (p. 78 f.)

tayā 'py ātmano bheda-pratipādanāt | śruyate hi . . . . (Jayanārāyaṇa) ito 'py jīvasya īśvara-bhinnatvam ity 'āha | śāstrasya śruteḥ śāmarthyāj jīveśvarayor bheda-bodhakatvāt | tathā hi | "dve brahmaṇī veditavye" (Maitrī Up. vi. 22) | "dvā suparṇā sayujā sakhāyā samānaṁ vṛiksham parishasvajāte | tayor anyaḥ pippalaṁ svādu atti anaśnann anyo abhichākaśiti" (Rig-veda Sanhitā, i. 164, 20; Śvetāśv. Up. vi. 6; Muṇḍaka Up. i. 3, 1, 1) ity-ādi-śruter jīveśvarayor 'bhedo 'vaśyam angīkāryyaḥ | na cha "tat tvam asi Śvetaketo" "Brahma-vid Brahma eva bhavati" ity-ādi-śrutīnāṁ kā 'gatir iti vāchyam | "tat tvam asi" iti śrutes tad-abhedena tadīyatva-pratipādanena abheda-bhāvanā-paratvāt | "Brahma-vid Brahma eva" iti śrutis cha nirduḥkhatvādinā Īśvara-sāmyaṁ jīvasya abhidhatte na tu tad-abhedam | "niranjanaḥ paraṁ sāmyam upaiti" iti śruter gaty-antarāsambhavāt | asti hi laukika-vākyeshu "sampad-ādhikye purohito 'yaṁ rājā saṁvṛittaḥ" ity-ādishu sādṛiśya-pareshv abhedopachāraḥ | na cha moksha-daśāyām ajnāna-nivṛittāv abhedo jāyate iti vāchyaṁ bhedasya nityatvena nāśāyogād bheda-nāśāṅgīkāre 'pi vyakti-dvayāvasthānasya āvaśyakatvāch cha iti sankshepaḥ | bheda-sādhakāni yukty-antarāṇi śruty-antarāṇi cha grantha-gaurava-bhiyā parityaktāni |

"'And this opinion is confirmed by the Śāstra.' (Śankara Miśra) The Śāstra means the Veda; by which also a distinction of Souls is established. For it is said," etc. [He then quotes two texts which are repeated by Jayanārāyaṇa, the author of the gloss, whose remarks are as follows:] "There is another proof of the Soul being distinct from Īśvara; viz. this, that it is confirmed by the Śāstra, the Veda, which declares the distinctness of the two; and this principle must of necessity be admitted from such texts as these: 'Two Brāhmăs are to be known;'[156] and 'Two birds, united, friends, attach themselves to the same tree; one of them eats the sweet fruit of the pippala tree, while the other, without eating, looks on.' Nor are we to ask what will then become of such other texts as (1) 'Thou art that, o Śvetaketu;' (2) 'He who knows Brahma becomes Brahma;' for the former of these two passages (1) tends to convey the idea of identity by representing as identity with That, the fact of Śvetaketu's entirely belonging to That; whilst the second (2) affirms the equality of the Soul with Īśvara, in consequence of its freedom from pain and other weaknesses, and not its identity with Him; for it is shewn by another Vedic text, viz. 'The passionless man attains the highest state of equality,' that any other destiny would be inconceivable. In secular modes of speaking also, such as the following, 'From the abundance of his wealth the domestic priest has become the king,' we find a figurative assertion of identity. Nor can it be said that distinction disappears on the cessation of ignorance in the state of final emancipation, because distinction, from its eternity, cannot be destroyed, and because, even if its destructibility were admitted, two separate personalities must still continue to exist. Such is a summary of our argument: further proofs from reasoning, and further texts of the Veda, are omitted from a dread of making the book too bulky."

[156] The full text is: Dve brahmaṇī veditavye śabda-brahma paraṁ cha yat—śabda-brahmaṇi nishṇātaḥ param brahmādhigachhati | "Two Brāhmăs are to be known, the verbal and the supreme. He who is initiated in the former attains the latter." Here, however, by the verbal Brāhmă, the Veda must be intended.

The charge of open contempt of the Veda is brought by Śankara against Śāṇḍilya, the author of the Bhāgavata heresy, as the orthodox Vedāntin considers it.[157] Of that doctrine Śankara thus speaks in his remarks on Brahma Sūtra ii. 2, 45:

Veda-vipratishedhaś cha bhavati | chaturshu vedeshu paraṁ śreyo 'labdhvā Śāṇḍilyaḥ idaṁ śāstram adhigatavān ity-ādi-veda-nindā-darśanāt | tasmād asangatā eshā kalpanā iti siddham |

"And it also contradicts the Veda: for we see such an instance of contempt of the Vedas as this, that Śāṇḍilya, not finding the means of attaining the highest good in the whole four of them, devised this Śāstra. Hence it is established that these imaginations are absurd."

The points of the Bhāgavata doctrine objected to by Śankara do not however appear to be those which are principally insisted on in the Bhakti Sūtras of Śāṇḍilya, published by Dr. Ballantyne in the Bibliotheca Indica in 1861. I will notice some of these doctrines. The leading principle of the system is that it is not knowledge (jnāna) but devotion (bhakti) which is the means of attaining final liberation (Sūtra 1). Devotion is defined in the 2nd Sūtra to be a supreme love of God (sā parā anuraktir Īśvare). Knowledge cannot, the author considers, be the means of liberation, as it may co-exist with hatred of the object known (Sūtra 4). Neither the study of the Veda nor the acquisition of such qualities as tranquility of mind is a necessary preliminary to devotion. The only requisite is a desire of emancipation, according to the commentator (remarks on Sūtra 1). Ceremonial works, too, have no bearing upon devotion (Sūtra 7), which may be practised by men of all castes, and even by Chāṇḍālas, since the desire to get rid of the evils of mundane existence is common to all (Sūtra 78). The commentator explains that the authority of the Vedas as the only source of supernatural knowledge is not denied, nor the fact that only the three highest castes have the right to study them: but it is urged that women, Śūdras, etc., may attain by means of the Itihāsas and Purāṇas, etc., to knowledge founded on the Vedas, whilst Chāṇḍālas, etc., may acquire it by traditional instruction based on the Smṛiti and the practice of virtuous men. Those whose devotion is not matured in the present world, will find the opportunity of perfecting it in Śvetadvīpa, the world of the divine Being (Sūtra 79). Even the wicked may have a penitential devotion (ārtti-bhaktāv eva adhikāraḥ), and after they are freed from their guilt, they may attain to full devotion. The Bhagavad Gītā is much quoted by the commentator on these Sūtras; but the Veda is also sometimes adduced in proof of their doctrines; as e.g. the following words of the Chhāndogya Upanishad, vii. 25, 2, are cited to prove that devotion is the chief requisite, and knowledge, etc., subservient to it:

[157] See Colebrooke's Misc. Essays, i. 413: "A passage quoted by Śankara Āchārya seems to intimate that its promulgator was Śāṇḍilya," etc., etc.

"Ātmā eva idaṁ sarvam iti | sa vai esha evam paśyann evam manvānaḥ evaṁ vijānann ātma-ratir ātma-krīḍaḥ ātma-mithunaḥ ātmānandaḥ sa svarāḍ bhavati" | tattra "ātma-rati-"rūpāyāḥ para-bhakteḥ "paśyann" iti darśanam apriyatvādi-bhrama-nirāsa-mukhena angaṁ bhavati |

"'All this is Soul. He who perceives this, thinks this, knows this, delights in Soul, sports with Soul, consorts with Soul, takes pleasure in Soul; he becomes self-resplendent.' Here the sight expressed in the words 'perceiving,' etc., is by removing all errors regarding disagreeableness, etc., an adjunct of supreme devotion in the form of 'delight in Soul.'" '

In his remarks on Sūtra 31 the commentator quotes another passage of the same Upanishad, iii. 14, 4, in which a Śāṇḍilya is referred to as the author of a statement. Śaṅkara in his commentary on the Upanishad calls him a rishi. He cannot, however, have been the same person as the author of the Sūtras; although, even if he had been so reputed, S'ankara would have had little difficulty in denying that they could have been written by a rishi, as we shall see in the next section that he contradicts the opinion that the rishi Kapila, referred to in the S'vetāśvatara Upanishad, was the author of the Sānkhya aphorisms.

SECT. XI.—Distinction in point of authority between the Veda and the Smṛitis or non-Vedic S'āstras, as stated in the Nyāya-mālā-vistara, and by the Commentators on Manu, and the Vedānta, etc.; difference of opinion between S'ankara and Madhusūdana regarding the orthodoxy of Kapila and Kaṇāda, etc.; and Vijnāna Bhikshu's view of the Sānkhya.

A distinct line of demarcation is generally drawn by the more critical Indian writers between the Vedas, and all other classes of Indian S'āstras, however designated. The former, as we have seen, are considered to possess an independent authority and to be infallible, while the latter are regarded as deriving all their authority from the Veda, and (in theory at least) as infallible guides only in so far as they coincide with its dicta. This will be clear from the following passages:

I. Nyāya-mālā-vistara.—The first text which I adduce has been already quoted in the Second Volume of this work, but is repeated here for facility of reference. It is from the treatise just named, i. 3, 24:

Baudhāyanāpastambāśvalāyana-kātyāyanādi-nāmānkitāḥ kalpa-sūtrādi-granthāḥ nigama- nirukta-shaḍ-anga-granthāḥ Manv-ādi-smṛitayaś cha apaurusheyāḥ dharma-buddhi-janakatvāt veda-vat | na cha mūla-pramāṇa-sāpekshatvena veda-vaishamyam iti śankanīyam | utpannāyāḥ buddheḥ svataḥ-prāmāṇyāngīkāreṇa nirapekshatvāt | Maivam | uktānumānasya kālātyayāpadishṭatvāt | Baudhāyana-sūtraṁ Āpastamba-sūtram ity evam purusha-nāmnā te granthāḥ uchyante | na cha Kāṭhakādi-samākhyā-vat pravachana-nimittatvaṁ yuktam | tad-grantha-nirmāṇa-kāle tadānīntanaiḥ kaiśchid upalabdhatvāt | tach cha avichhinna-pāramparyeṇa anuvarttate | tataḥ Kālidāsādi-granthavat paurusheyāḥ | tathāpi veda-mūlatvāt pramāṇam | . . . . kalpasya vedatvaṁ nādyāpi siddham | kintu prayatnena sādhanīyam | na cha tat sādhayituṁ śakyam | paurusheyatvasya samākhyayā tat-karttur upalambhena cha sādhitatvāt |

"It may be said that the Kalpa Sūtras and other works designated by the names of Baudhāyana, Āpastamba, Āśvalayana, Kātyāyana, etc., and the Nigama, Nirukta, and six Vedāngas, together with the Smṛitis of Manu and others, are superhuman, because they impart a knowledge of duty, as the Vedas do; and that they should not be suspected of inferiority to the Vedas on the ground that they depend upon a primary authority, since the knowledge which they impart is independent, because it is admitted to be self-evidencing. But this view is incorrect, for the inference in question proceeds upon an erroneous generalization. The books referred to are called by the names of men, as 'the Sūtras of Baudhāyana,' 'the Sūtras of Āpastamba;' and these designations cannot correctly be said to originate in the exposition of the works by those teachers whose names they bear (as is really the case in regard to the Kāṭhaka, and other parts of the Veda); for it was known to some of the contemporaries of these men, at the time when they were composing these Sūtras, Smṛitis, etc., that they were so engaged; and this knowledge has descended by unbroken tradition. Hence these books are, like the works of Kālidāsa and others, of human origin. Nevertheless, they possess authority, as being founded on the Veda." . . . The following additional remarks represent the opinion of the Guru (Prabhākara) on the same question: "It is not yet proved that the Kalpa Sūtras possess the character of the Veda; it would require great labour to prove it; and, in fact, it is impossible to prove it. For the human origin of these books is established by the names which they bear, and by their being observed to have had authors."

II. Kullūka.—The same thing is admitted by Kullūka, the commentator on Manu, who (in his remarks on i. 1) thus defines the relation of his author to the Vedas:

Paurusheyatve 'pi Manu-vākyānām avigīta-mahājana-parigrahāt śruty-upagrahāch cha veda-mūlakatayā prāmāṇyam | Tathā cha chhāndogya-brāhmaṇe śrūyate "Manur vai yat kinchid avadat tad bheshajam bheshajatāyai" iti | Vṛihaspatir apy āha "Vedārthopanibandhṛitvāt prādhānyaṁ hi Manoḥ smṛitam | Manv-artha-viparītā tu yā smṛitiḥ sā na śasyate | Tāvach chhāstrāṇi śobhante tarka-vyākaraṇāni cha | Dharmārtha-mokshopadeshṭā Manur yāvad na dṛiśyate" | Mahābhārate 'py uktam "Purāṇam Mānavo dharmaḥ sāṅgo vedaś chikitsitaṁ | ājñā-siddhāni chatvāri na hantavyāni hetubhiḥ" | virodhi-Bauddhādi-tarkair na hantavyāni | anukūlas tu mīmāṁsādi-tarkaḥ pravarttanīyaḥ eva | ata eva vakshyati "ārshaṁ dharmopadeśaṁ cha veda-śāstrāvirodhinā | yas tarkeṇānusandhatte sa dharmaṁ veda netaraḥ" iti |

"Though the Institutes of Manu had a personal author, still, as their reception by illustrious men of unimpeached [orthodoxy], and their conformity to the Veda, prove that they are based upon the latter, they are authoritative. Accordingly it is recorded in the Chhāndogya Brāhmaṇa that, 'Whatever Manu said is a medicine for remedial purposes.' And Vṛihaspati says: 'As Manu depends upon the contents of the Veda, he is traditionally celebrated as pre-eminent. But that Smṛiti which is contrary to the sense of Manu, is not approved. Scriptures and books on logic and grammar are all eclipsed as soon as Manu, our instructor in duty, and in the means of attaining both earthly prosperity, and final liberation, is beheld.' And it is said in the Mahābhārata: 'The Purāṇas, the Institutes of Manu, the Veda with its appendages, and treatises on medicine, these four, which are established by authority, are not to be assailed by rationalistic arguments;' that is, they are not to be attacked by hostile reasonings, such as those of the Bauddhas. But friendly arguments, such as those of the Mīmānsakas, are to be employed. And accordingly we shall find below (Manu xii. 106) that he says, 'the man who investigates the injunctions of the rishis, and the rules of duty by reasoning which is agreeable to the Veda, he, and he only, is acquainted with duty.'" (See above, p. 24, note 29.)

III. Nyāya-mālā-vistara.—But the precepts of the Smṛiti are not considered useless or superfluous. On the contrary, an authority is attributed to them corresponding to the antiquity, elevated position, and sacred character of their supposed authors. Thus the author of the Nyāya-mālā-vistara says (i. 3, 3):

Vimatā smṛitir veda-mūlā | vaidika-manv-ādi-praṇīta-smṛititvāt | upanayanādhyayanādi-smṛiti-vat | na cha vaiyarthyaṁ śankanīyam | asmadādīnāṁ pratyaksheshu parokshesheu nānā vedeshu viprakīrṇasya anushṭheyārthasya ekatra sankshipyamāṇatvāt |

"The variously understood Smṛiti is founded on the Veda, because the traditions, such as those regarding investiture, study, etc., have been compiled by Vedic men, such as Manu and others. Nor is it to be surmised that the Smṛiti is useless, since it throws together in a condensed form a variety of injunctions regarding matters to be observed, which are scattered through different Vedas, both such as are visible and such as are invisible to us." (This last expression appears to refer to the supposition that some parts of the Veda which Manu and others had before them when compiling their own works have now been lost. See Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. pp. 103–107.)

Accordingly the Smṛitis have an authority superior to that founded merely on the practice of learned men of modern date, who have no intuition into the past and invisible. Thus the Nyāya-mālā-vistara says (i. 3, 19):

Na hi idānīntanāḥ śishṭāḥ Manv-ādi-vad deśa-kāla-viprakṛishṭaṁ vedaṁ divya-jñānena sākshātkarttuṁ śaknuvanti yena śishṭāchāro mūla-vedam anumāpayet |

"For learned men of the present day do not possess the power, which Manu and others had, of placing before their minds, through divine knowledge, the Veda which is far removed from them both in place and time, so as to justify us in regarding the practice of these moderns as a sufficient ground for inferring the existence of a Veda as its foundation."

But as learned men, in any particular country or at any particular time, may be able to consult some Smṛiti which authorizes their particular observances, "these observances may serve as ground for inferring the existence of some Smṛiti on which they are founded, but not for inferring a Veda (tasmāch chhishṭāchāreṇa smṛitir anumātuṁ śakyate na tu śrutiḥ). But a Smṛiti which is thus merely inferred to exist is set aside by any visibly existing Smṛiti of contrary import (anumitā cha smṛitir viruddhayā pratyakshayā smṛityā bādhyate)."

IV. Śankara.—The above passages, by assuming that Manu and other eminent sages had the power of consulting Vedic texts now no longer accessible, make them practically almost infallible. The same view is taken by Śankara Āchāryya. (See, however, the passage quoted from him above, in note 67, p. 62; but there he has the author of the Sānkhya in view, whose tenets he regarded as contrary to the Veda.) In answer to the remark of a Mīmānsaka objector stated in the comment on the Brahma Sūtra i. 3, 32, that the Itihāsas and Purāṇas, being of human origin, have only a derived and secondary authority ('itihāsa-purāṇam api paurusheyatvāt-pramāṇāntara-mūlatām ākānkshate'), Śankara argues in his explanation of the following Sūtra (i. 3, 33) that they have an independent foundation:

Itihāsa-purāṇam apivyākhyātena mārgeṇa sambhavad mantrārthavāda-

mūlatvāt prabhavati devatā-vigrahādi prapanchayitum | pratyaksha-mūlam api sambhavati | bhavati hi asmākam apratyaksham api chirantanānām pratyaksham | tathā cha Vyāsādayo devatābhiḥ pratyakshaṁ vyavaharanti iti smaryate | yas tu brūyād idānīntanānām iva pūrveshām api nāsti devādibhir vyavaharttuṁ sāmarthyam iti sa jagad-vaichitryam pratishedet | idānīm iva chu na anyadā,'pi sārvabhaumaḥ kshatriyo'sti iti brūyāt tataś cha rājasūyādi-chodanāḥ uparundhyāt | idānīm iva cha kālāntare'py avyavasthita-prāyān varṇāśrama-dharmān pratijānīta, tataś cha vyavasthā-vidhāyi śāstram anarthakaṁ kuryāt | Tasmād dharmotkarsha-vaśāt chirantanāḥ devādibhiḥ pratyakshaṁ vyajahrur iti ślishyate | api chu smaranti "svādhyāyādishṭa-devatā-samprayogaḥ" ityādi | yogo'py animādy-aiśvarya-prāptiphalakaḥ smaryamāno na śakyate sāhasa-mātreṇa pratyākhyātum | śrutiś cha yoga-māhātmyam prakhyāpayati | "pṛithvy-ap-tejo-'nila-khe samutthite panchātmake yoga-guṇe pravṛitte | na tasyo rogo na jarā na mṛityuḥ prāptasya yogād[158] nimishaṁ śarīram" iti | ṛishīṇām api mantra-brāhmaṇa-darśināṁ sāmarthyaṁ na asmadīyena sāmarthyena upamātuṁ yuktam | tasmāt sa-mūlam itihāsa-purāṇam |

"The Itihāsas and Purāṇas also, having originated in the way which has been explained, have power, as being based on the hymns and arthavādas, to evince the corporeality, etc., of the gods. It is also reasonable to suppose that they are founded upon intuition. For there were things palpable through intuition to the ancients, though they are not thus palpable to us.[159] Accordingly it is recorded in the Smṛiti that Vyāsa and others associated face to face with the gods.[160] Any man

[158] Instead of yogād nimisham the text of the Biblioth. Indica reads yogāgnimayam

[159] See above, pp. 116, 118, and 127; and also Prof Müller's article on the Vaiśeshika Philosophy in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. vii. p. 311, where it is remarked that the Vaiśeshikas, like Kapila, include the intuition of rishis under the category of pratyaksha (ārshaṁ jnānaṁ sūtra-kṛitā pṛithak na lakshitam yogi-pratyakshe'ntar-bhāvāt).

[160] Compare with this R.V. i. 179, 2: Ye chid hi pūrve ṛitasāpaḥ āsan sākaṁ devebhir avadann ṛitāni | te chid avāsur ityādi | "The pious sages who lived of old and who conversed about sacred truths with the gods,—they led a conjugal life," etc. See also the passages quoted from the Vana-parvan of the Mahābhārata, the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, and Plato in the First Volume of this work, p. 147; and compare Hesiod, fragment 119: ξυναὶ γὰρ τότε δαῖτες ἔσαν, ξυναὶ δε θόωκοι ἀθανάτοισι θεοῖσι καταθνήτοις τ'ἀνθρώποις.

"Immortal gods, not unfamiliar, then Their feasts and converse shared with mortal men."

And Herodotus writes of the Egyptians, ii. 144: Τὸ δὲ πρότερον τῶν ἀνδρῶν τούτων who should maintain that the ancients, like his own contemporaries, were destitute of power thus to associate with superhuman beings like the gods, would be denying all variety in the history of the world. Such a person would in like manner affirm that as now there is no Kshattriya possessed of universal sovereignty, so neither was there ever such a prince; and would thus impugn the scriptural injunctions regarding the rājasūya sacrifice [which was only to be performed by a universal monarch]. He would also allege that in former times, as now, the dutes of castes and of orders were scarcely at all in force, and would thus render fruitless the scriptures by which the rules relating to them are prescribed. By these considerations it is intimated that the ancients, in consequence of their eminent holiness, were admitted to associate immediately with the gods, etc. And the Smṛiti[161] says that nearness to, and converse with the gods is gained by reading the Veda, etc. Again, when the Smṛiti talks of the practice of Yoga resulting in the acquisition of superhuman faculties, such as minuteness, this assertion cannot be impugned through mere audacity, [i.e. it must have had some good foundation]. The Veda, too, declares the immense power of devotion in these words: 'When the fivefold influence of Yoga, connected with the elements of earth, water, fire, air, and æther, has begun to act, and a man has attained an æthereal [or fiery] body, he is no longer affected by disease, decay, or death.' And it is unreasonable to estimate, by the analogy of our own power, the power of the rishis, the seers of the Vedic hymns and Brāhmaṇas. Wherefore the Itihāsas and Purāṇas have an (independent) foundation.'"

Śankara does not, however, treat all the ancients in this way. Like many other systematizers, he finds no difficulty in rejecting or explaining away any authorities which come into conflict with his views. It is thus that he deals with Kapila, the author of the Sānkhya. That eminent sage is thus spoken of in the Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, v. 2:

Yo yoniṁ yonim adhitishṭhaty eko viśvāni rūpāṇi yonīś cha sarvāḥ |

θεοὺς εἶναι τοὺς ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ ἄρχοντας, οἰκέοντας ἅμα τοῖσι ἀνθρώποισι, "And [the Egyptian priests said] that before these men the gods were the rulers in Egypt, dwelling together with men."

[161] It appears from the gloss of Govinda Ānanda that one of the Yoga Sūtras is here quoted. I give the sense according to his explanation: mantra-japād deva-sannidhyhaṁ tat-sámbhāshaṇaṁ cha iti sūtrārthaḥ.

ṛishim prasūtañ Kapilañ yas tam agre jñānair bibhartti jāyamānañ cha paśyet |

"The god who alone superintends every source of production and all forms, who formerly nourished with various knowledge his son the rishi Kapila, and beheld him at his birth, etc."[162]

Towards the close of his comment on Brahma Sūtras ii. 1, 1, which I shall cite at some length, Śankara makes some remarks on this passage of that Upanishad. After stating the points that had been established in the first Book (adhyāya) of the Brahma Sūtras, and alluding to the objections which had been urged against the Sānkhya and other hostile doctrines as contrary to the Veda, Śankara goes on to explain the object of the second book, and the purport of the aphorism with which it begins, as follows:

Idānīñ sva-pakshe smṛiti-nyāya-virodha-parihāraḥ pradhānādi-vādānāñ cha nyāyābhāsopabṛiñhitatvam prativedāntañ śṛishṭy-ādi-prakriyāyāḥ avigītatvam ity asya artha-jātasya pratipādanāya dvitīyo'dhyāyaḥ ārabhyate | tattra prathamañ tāvat smṛiti-virodham upanyasya pariharati | yad uktam Brahma eva sarvajñañ jagataḥ kāraṇañ tad ayuktam | kutaḥ "smṛity-anavakāśa-dosha-prasaṅgāt" | smṛitiś cha tantrākhyā paramarshi-praṇītā śishṭa-parigṛihītā | anyāś cha tad-anusāriṇyaḥ smṛitayaḥ | evañ saty anavakāśāḥ prasajyeran | tāsu hy achetanam pradhānañ svatantrañ jagataḥ kāraṇam upanibadhyate | Manv-ādi-smṛitayas tāvach chodanā-lakshaṇena agnihotrādinā dharma-jātena apekshitam arthañ samarpayantyaḥ sāvakāśāḥ bhavanti asya varṇasya asmin kāle 'nena vidhānena upanayanam īdṛiśaś cha āchāraḥ itthañ vedādhayanam itthañ samāvarttanam itthañ saha-dharma-chāriṇī-saṁyogaḥ iti tathā purushārthāñś chatur-varṇāśrama-dharmāñ nānā-vidhān vidadhati | na evañ kāpilādi-smṛitīnam anushṭheye vishaye 'vakāśo'sti moksha-sādhanam eva hi samyag-darśanam adhikṛitya tāḥ praṇītāḥ | yadi tattra apy anavakāśāḥ syur ānarthakyam eva āsām prasajyeta | tasmāt tad-avirodhena vedāntāḥ vyākhyātavyāḥ | katham punar "īkshity-"ādibhyo hetubhyo Brahma eva sarvajñañ jagataḥ kāraṇam ity avadhāritaḥ śruty-arthaḥ | "smṛity-anavakāśa-dosha-prasangena" punar ākshipyate | bhaved ayam anākshepaḥ sva-tantra-prajñānāñ | para-tantra-prajñās tu prāyeṇa janāḥ [162] See Śankara's commentary on this passage in Bibl. Ind. vii. 351, and Dr. Röer's translation, p. 62, with the note; also Dr. Hall's note in p. 19 of the preface to his edition of the Sānkhya Sāra, in the Bibl. Ind.

svātantryeṇa śruty-artham avadhārayitum aśaknuvantaḥ prakhyāta-praṇetṛikāsu smṛitishv avalamberan tad-balena cha śruty-artham pratipatserann asmat-kṛite cha vyākhyāne na viśvasyur bahu-mānāt smṛitīnām praṇetṛishu | kapila-prabhṛitīnāṁ cha ārshaṁ jñānam apratihataṁ smaryyate śrutiś cha bhavati "ṛishim prasūtaṁ kapilaṁ yas tam agre jñānair bibhartti jāyamānaṁ cha paśyed" iti | tasmād na eshām matam ayathārthaṁ śakyaṁ sambhāvayitum | tarkāvashṭambhena cha te 'rtham pratishṭhāpayanti | tasmād api smṛiti-balena vedāntāḥ vyākhyeyāḥ iti punar ākshepaḥ | tasya samādhir "na | anya-smṛity-anavakāśa-dosha-prasangād" iti | yadi smṛity-anavakāśa-dosha-prasangena īśvara-kāraṇa-vādaḥ ākshipyeta evam apy anyāḥ īśvara-kāraṇa-vādinyaḥ smṛityo 'navakāśāḥ prasajyeran | tāḥ udāharishyāmaḥ | .... evam anekaśaḥ smṛitishv api īśvaraḥ kāraṇatvena upādānatvena cha prakāśyate | smṛiti-balena pratyavatishṭhamānasya smṛiti-balena eva uttaram pravakshyāmi ity ato 'yam anya-smṛity-anavakāśa-doshopanyāsaḥ | darśitaṁ tu śrutīnam īśvara-kāraṇa-vādam prati tātparyyam | vipratipattau cha smṛitīnām avaśya-kartavye 'nyatara-parigrahe 'nyatarasyāḥ parityāge cha śruty-anusāriṇyaḥ smṛitayaḥ pramāṇam anapekshyāḥ itaraḥ | tad uktam pramāṇa-lakshaṇe "virodhe tv anapekshaṁ syād asati hy anumānām" iti (Mīmānsā Sūtras i. 3, 3) | na cha atīndriyān arthān śrutim antareṇa kaśchid upalabhate iti śakyaṁ sambhāvayituṁ nimittābhāvāt | śakyaṁ kapilādīnāṁ siddhānām apratihata-jñānatvād iti chet | na | siddher api sāpekshatvāt | dharmānushṭhānāpekshā hi siddhiḥ sa cha dharmaś chodanā-lakshaṇaḥ | tataś cha pūrva-siddhāyāś chodanāyāḥ artho na paśchima-siddha-purusha-vachana-vaśena atiśankituṁ śakyate | siddha-vyapāśraya-kalpanāyām api bahutvāt siddhānām pradarśitena prakāreṇa smṛiti-vipratipattau satyāṁ na śruti-vyapāśrayād anyad nirṇaya-kāraṇam asti | para-tantra-prajnasya api na akasmāt smṛiti-viśesha-vishayaḥ pakshapāto yuktaḥ | kasyachit kvachit tu pakshapāte sati purusha-mati-vaiśvarūpyeṇa tattvāvyasthāna-prasangāt | tasmāt tasya api smṛiti-vipratipatty-upanyāsena śruty-anusārānanusāra-vivechanena cha san-mārge prajnā sangrahaṇīyā | Yā tu śrutiḥ Kapilasya jñānātiśayaṁ darśayantī pradarśitā na tayā śruti-viruddham api Kāpilam mataṁ śraddhātuṁ śakyaṁ "Kapilam" iti "śruti-sāmānya-mātratvād" [163] anyasya cha Kapilasya Sagara-putrāṇām prataptur Vāsudeva-nāmnaḥ smaraṇāt | anyārtha-darśanasya cha prāpti-rahitasya asādhakatvāt | Bhavati cha anyā Manor māhātyam prakhyā-

[163] Mīmānsā-sūtra i. 1, 31. See above, pp. 78 f.

payantī śrutir "yad vai kincha Manur avadat tad bheshajam" [164] iti | Manunā cha (xii. 91) "sarva-bhūteshu chātmānaṁ sarva-bhūtāni chātmani | samam paśyann ātma-yājī svārājyam adhigachchhati" iti sarvātmatva-darśanam praśaṁsatā Kāpilam mataṁ nindyate iti gamyate | Kapilo hi na sarvātmatva-darśanam anumanyate ātma-bhedābhyupagamāt | . . . . ataś cha ātma-bheda-kalpanayā 'pi Kāpilasya tantrasya vedaviruddhatvaṁ vedānusāri-Manu-vachana-virudhatvaṁ cha na kevalaṁ svatantra-prakṛiti-parikalpanayā eveti siddham | vedasya hi nirapekshaṁ svārthe prāmaṇyaṁ raver iva rūpa-vishaye puruṣha-vachasāṁ tu mūlāntarāpekshaṁ svārthe prāmāṇyaṁ vaktṛi-smṛiti-vyavahitaṁ cha iti viprakarshaḥ | tasmād veda-viruddhe vishaye smṛity-anavakāśa-prasango na doshaḥ |

"But now the second chapter is commenced with the view of effecting the following objects, viz. (a) to refute, in our own favour, the charge of contradicting the reasonings of the Smṛiti, to shew (b) that the doctrines regarding Pradhāna, etc., have nothing more than an appearance of reason, and (c) that the manner in which the subjects of creation, etc., are treated in each of the Upanishads is unimpeachable. First of all then the author states, and removes, the objection of contrariety to the Smṛiti. Our opponents urge that it is incorrect to say that the omniscient Brahma is the cause of the world. Why? Because, (1) as they allege, that doctrine 'is chargeable with the objection of setting aside the Smṛiti as useless' (Br. Sūtra, ii. 1, 1). This term 'Smṛiti' denotes a systematic treatise (tantra) composed by an eminent rishi, and received by the learned; and there are other Smṛitis in conformity with it. And the alleged difficulty is that (on the theory that Brahma is the cause) all these would be set aside as useless; since they propound an unconscious Pradhāna as the self-dependent cause of the world. The Smṛitis of Manu and others, indeed, which affirm that by means of the agnihotra and other enjoined ceremonies, the objects desired (by those who practise these rites) will be accomplished, will still retain their use, viz. of prescribing the objects to be pursued, viz. the various duties of the four castes and orders,—that such and such a caste shall be initiated at such a time and by such a process, and shall follow such and such a mode of life, that the Veda is to be studied, that the cessation of study is to take place, and that union with a woman following the same rites is to celebrated, in such and such ways. But [on the hypothesis of Brahma being the creator] no such room is left for the Smṛitis of Kapila and others, on the ground of any ceremonies to be performed [in conformity with their prescriptions]; for they have been composed as embodying perfect systems affording the means of final liberation. If in this respect also no place be left for them the difficulty will arise that they are quite useless. And hence the conclusion is reached that the Upanishads should be interpreted so as to harmonize with them. But, such being the case, how, it is again objected, have you determined on the strength of the reasons furnished by the texts about 'beholding,' etc., that it is the meaning of the Veda that Brahma is the omniscient cause of the world, thus exposing yourself to the charge of leaving no place for the Smṛiti? Although we hold that this charge is harmless as regards those who think for themselves; yet men have for the most part no independent opinion, and are unable by an unassisted act of their own judgment to determine the sense of the Vedas, and will consequently lean upon the Smṛitis composed by renowned authors, and adopt the sense of the Vedas which they enforce: and from their lofty opinion of these authors they will have no confidence in our interpretations. And it is moreover urged (2) that Kapila and the others are declared by the Smṛiti to have possessed an unobstructed intuitive (ārsha[165]) knowledge; and there is also a Vedic text to the effect 'He who of old sustains with manifold knowledge Kapila when he is produced, and beholds him when born,' etc. (Śvetāsv. Up. v. 2). Consequently their doctrines cannot be imagined to be untrue. And they further support their tenets by argument. On these grounds also, it is urged, the Upanishads must be interpreted by the aid of the Smṛitis. The questions thus raised are settled by the concluding words of the Sūtra, 'No; for this conclusion is vitiated by the objection that other Smṛitis would in this way be rendered useless.' (1) If the doctrine that God is the cause of the world is chargeable with the objection that it leaves no room for the Smṛiti, in the same way the difficulty will arise (on the other theory) that other texts of the Smṛiti which affirm that God is the cause will be set aside. These we shall adduce." After quoting some passages, Śaṅkara proceeds: "In the same manner in numerous texts of the Smṛiti God is shewn to be both the instrumental and the material cause. I must answer on the strength of the Smṛiti the person who opposes me on the same ground, and so I just indicate this objection against his views as having the effect of setting aside other Smṛitis. But it has been shown that the sense of the Vedic texts is in favour of the causality of God. And since, if the Smṛitis are at variance with each other, we must of necessity accept the one set and reject the other, those of them which are conformable to the Veda will be authoritative, and the rest will deserve no attention: for it has been said in the section (of the Pūrva Mīmānsā) on proof (i. 3, 3), that 'if it (the Smṛiti) be contrary (to the Veda) it must be disregarded; but if there be no (contrariety) it must be inferred (that the former is founded on the latter).' And it is inconceivable that anyone should discover things beyond the reach of the senses without the aid of the Veda, since the means of doing so are wanting. If it be urged that we can conceive such discovery (of imperceptible things without the help of the Veda) as possible in the case of Kapila and other perfect persons (siddhānām), because there was nothing to obstruct their knowledge;—we reply, No; because perfection (siddhi) is dependent upon something else, viz. on the practice of duty. Now duty is defined as something which is enjoined. And the subject-matter of an injunction which was previously promulgated cannot be called into doubt on the strength of the words of a man who became perfect at a subsequent period. And even on the supposition that confidence could be placed in such 'perfect' persons, yet, as they are numerous, and as such a mutual contradiction as we have already pointed out exists between the Smṛitis of different 'perfect' persons, there is no means left of determining the truth, but reliance on the Veda. Causeless partiality to any particular Smṛiti, on the part even of a man who has no independent opinion, is improper; but if anyone ever does exhibit such partiality, the charge of depriving truth of all fixity attaches to his procedure, because the opinions of men (which he takes as the standard of his belief) assume all sorts of forms. Consequently his judgment also should be directed into the right path by indicating the mutual contradictions between the different Smṛitis, and by distinguishing those of them which are conformable to, from those which are at variance with, the Veda. And (2) the Vedic text which has been pointed out, showing the transcendent character of Kapila's knowledge, cannot be a warrant for believing the doctrine of Kapila, though contrary to the Veda, since the word Kapila 'has, in this text, a general sense' [applicable to others besides the author of the Sānkhya] (Mīm. Sūtra, i. 1, 31), and another Kapila called Vāsudeva, the consumer of Sagara's sons, is also mentioned in the Smṛiti; and since the indication of something which has a different object in view, and is therefore irrelevant to the matter in question, can prove nothing.'[166] There is, besides, another text of the Veda which sets forth the eminent diginity of Manu in these terms, 'Whatever Manu said is medicine.'[167] And Manu—when he employs the words (xii. 91), 'He who, with impartial eye, beholds himself in all beings, and all beings in himself, thus sacrificing his own personalty, attains to self-refulgence;' and, by saying this commends the tenet that everything is one with the supreme Spirit—must be understood as censuring Kapila's doctrine. For Kapila does not assent to the identity of Brahma and the universe, since he holds a diversity of souls." . . . (After quoting one passage from the Mahābhārata, and another from the Veda, to prove that Kapila is wrong, Śankara proceeds): "Hence it is proved that Kapila's system is at variance with the Veda and with the words of Manu, who follows the Veda, not only in supposing an independent Prakṛiti (nature), but also in supposing a diversity of souls. Now the Veda has an independent authority in regard to its own contents, as the sun has (an inherent power) of manifesting forms; whilst the words of men have, as regards their own sense, an authority which is dependent on another source (the Veda), and which is distinguished (from the authority of the Veda) by the fact of their authors being remembered. Consequently it forms no objection to a doctrine that it sets aside a Smṛiti on a point which is contrary to the Veda."

[164] See above, p. 181, and the First Volume of this work, pp. 188, and 510.

[165] See above, pp. 116, 118, and 127.

[166] The words thus translated are explained as follows in the Gloss of Govinda Ānanda: Kiṁcha "yaḥ Kapilam jnānair bibhartti tam īśvaram paśyed" iti vidhīyate tathā cha anyārthasya īśvara-pratipatti-śeshasya Kapila-sarvajnatvasya darśanam anuvādas tasya mānāntareṇa prāpti-śūnyasya svārtha-sādhakatvāyogād na anuvāda-mātrād sarvajnatva-siddhir ity āha | "And it is enjoined (in the text of the Śvetāśvatara Upanishad): 'Let him behold that Īśvara who nourishes Kapila with various knowledge;' and so since this 'indication' of, this reference to, the omniscience of Kapila, which has another object in view, and ends in the establishment of an Īśvara, and which on other grounds is shewn to be irrelevant, cannot prove its own meaning,—this mere reference does not suffice to evince Kapila's omniscience:—This is what Śankara means to say."

[167] See the First Volume of this work, pp. 188 and 510.

See also Śankara's commentary on the Taittirīya Upanishad, Bib. Ind. vii. pp. 136, 137, where he says:

Kāpila-kāṇādādi-tarka-śāstra-virodhaḥ iti chet | na | teshām mūlābhāve veda-virodhe cha bhrāntyopapatteḥ |

"If it be objected that this is contrary to the rationalistic doctrines of Kapila and Kaṇāda [and therefore wrong], I answer no, since these doctrines are proved to be erroneous, as having no foundation, and as being in opposition to the Veda."

His remarks on a passage of the Praśna Upanishad, which are as follows, afford a curious specimen of the contemptuous manner in which this orthodox Vedāntist treats the heretical Sānkhyas, etc. (Praśna Up. vi. 4; Bib. Ind. viii. 244):

Sānkhyās tu avidyā-'dhyāropitam eva purushe karttṛitvañ kriyā-kārakam phalañ cha iti kalpayitvā āgama-vāhyatvāt punas tatas trasyantaṇ paramārthataḥ eva bhoktṛitvam purushasya ichchhanti | tattvāntarañ cha pradhānam purushāt paramārtha-vastu-bhūtam eva kalpayanto 'nya-tārkika-kṛita-buddhi-vishayāḥ santo vihanyante | Tathā itare tārkikāḥ sānkhyair ity evam paraspara-viruddhārtha-kalpanātaḥ āmishārthinaḥ iva prāṇino 'nyonyañ viruddhamānāḥ artha-darśitvāt paramārtha-tattvāt tad-dūram eva apakṛishyante | atas tan-matam anādṛitya vedāntārtha-tattvam ekatva-darśanam prati ādaravanto mumukshavaḥ syur iti tārkika-mate dosha-darśanañ kinchid uchyate 'smābhir na tu tārkika-tātparyyeṇa |

"The followers of the Sānkhya imagine that the functions of action, and the enjoyment of reward which causes action, become erroneously attributed to the soul (purusha) in consequence of supervening ignorance; but as this doctrine differs from that of Scripture, they become afraid of it, and seek to ascribe to the soul enjoyment in the proper sense. And supposing another principle distinct from soul, viz. Pradhāna (or nature), which they regard as substance in the proper sense, they become the objects of correction by other rationalists, and are crushed. Thus, in consequence of the contrariety between the conceptions of the Sānkhyas and those of other freethinkers, the two parties quarrel with each other like animals fighting for flesh; and thus, from their having an (exclusive) regard to (their own) views, they are all drawn away to a distance from the essential truth. Wherefore let men, disregarding their tenets, seek for final liberation by paying honour to the principles of the Vedantic doctrine, which maintains the unity of all being. We have thus pointed out something of the errors of the rationalists, and have said nothing in accordance with their views."

IV.—In thus depreciating Kapila, Śankara is in direct opposition to the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (which, however, may be a work of later date than his[168]), in which the author of the Sāṇkhya is spoken of with the greatest reverence. Thus in Bhāg. Pur. i. 3, 10, he is described as the fifth incarnation of Vishṇu:

Panchamaḥ Kapilo nāma siddheśaḥ kāla-viplutam | provāchāsuraye sāṅkhyaṁ tattva-grāma-vinirṇayam |

"In his fifth manifestation, he [in the form of] Kapila, and lord of saints, declared to Āsuri the Sānkhya which defines the series of principles, and which had been lost through the lapse of time."

And again, in Bhāg. Pur. ix. 8, 12, 13, Kapila is made the subject of eulogy. A legend narrates that the sixty thousand sons of king Sagara, conceiving Kapila to be the robber of a horse which had been carried away from their sacrifice, advanced to slay him, when they were burnt up by fire issuing from his body. The author of the Purāṇa, however, denies that this was in any degree owing to passion on the part of the sage:

Na sādhu-vādo muni-kopa-bharjitāḥ nṛipendra-putrāḥ iti sattva-dhāmani | kathaṁ tamo roshamayaṁ vibhāvyate jagat-pavitrātmani khe rajo bhuvaḥ | yasyeritā sānkhyamayī dṛiḍheha naur yayā mumukshus tarate duratyayam | bhavārṇavam mṛityu-pathaṁ vipaśchitaḥ parātma-bhūtasya katham pṛithaṅmatiḥ |

"It is not an assertion befitting a good man to say that the king's sons were burnt up by the wrath of the sage; for how is it conceivable that the darkness (tamas) of anger should reside in the abode of goodness (sattva), or that the dust (or passion, rajas) of the earth should ascend into the sky, the region of purity? How could that sage, one with the supreme Spirit, by whom the strong ship of the Sānkhya was launched, on which the man seeking emancipation crosses the ocean of existence, hard to be traversed, and leading to death,—how could he entertain the idea of any distinction between himself and others [and so treat any one as an enemy]?"

It is not necessary for me to quote any further passages in praise of the author of the Sānkhya. There is a great deal about this system in the Mahābhārata, Sāntiparvan, verses 11,037 ff. See Colebrooke's Essays, i. 236 (p. 149 of Williams and Norgate's ed.); Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, pref. p. xciv. and text, pp. 18 ff. with notes; Bhāgavata Purāṇa, iii. chapters 24–30; Weber's Ind. Stud. passim; Dr. Röer's Introduction to Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, Bibl. Ind. xv. 35 ff.; and Dr. Hall's preface to the Sāṅkhya-sāra in the Bibl. Ind. p. 19, note.

[168] See Wilson's Vish. Pur., preface, pp. xliv. and li.

We have thus seen that a distinct line of demarcation is drawn by the most accurate and critical of the Indian writers, between the Śruti, which they define to be superhuman and independent, and the Smṛiti, which they regard as of human origin, and as dependent for its authority on its conformity with the Śruti. Śankara, indeed, as we have also observed (above, p. 183 f.), goes very nearly, if not altogether, so far as to assign an independent foundation to the Smṛitis; but he confines this distinction to such of these works as coincide in doctrine with the Śruti or Veda, according to his own Vedāntic interpretation of its principles, while all other speculators are denounced by him as heterodox. It is, however, clear from the Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, the Mahābhārata, the Bhagavad Gītā, the Vishṇu, and the Bhāgavata Purāṇas, etc., that the doctrines of the Sānkhya must have been very prevalent in ancient times, and that Śankara, when he condemned them as erroneous, must have done so in the face of many powerful opponents.[169]

[169] I quote the following passage from Dr. Röer's Introduction to the Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, pp. 36 f.: "At the time of the composition of the Śwetāśwatara, the Sānkhya was not a new system, which had to overcome the resistance of old received opinions, and the prejudices of men in power, whose interest might be opposed to the introduction of a doctrine by which their authority could be questioned. It had found many adherents; it was the doctrine of Manu, of some parts of the Mahābhārata, and to its founder divine honour had been assigned by general consent. It was a doctrine whose argumentative portion demanded respect, and as it was admitted by many Brāmhans (sic), distinguished for their knowledge of the Vedas, it could not be treated as a heresy. The most learned and eminent of the Brāmhans were evidently divided among themselves with reference to the truth of the Sānkhya and Vedānta, and this must have afforded to the opponents of the Vedaic system a most powerful weapon for attacking the Vedas themselves. If both the Sānkhya and Vedānta are divine revelations, both must be true; but if the doctrine of the one is true, the doctrine of the other is wrong; for they are contradictory among themselves. Further, if both are derived from the Vedas, it is evident that also the latter cannot reveal the truth, because they would teach opposite opinions about one and the same point. Such objections to the Vedas had been made already in ancient times, as is clear from the Upanishads, from several passages of Manu, from Yāska, etc.; and under these circumstances it cannot be wondered at, if early attempts were made to reconcile the

It is not necessary for me here to inquire with any accuracy what the relation was in which the different philosophical systems stood to each other in former ages. It may suffice to say that the more thorough-going adherents of each—of the Vedānta, the Sānkhya, the Nyāya, etc.—must, according to all appearance, have maintained their respective principles with the utmost earnestness and tenacity, and could not have admitted that any of the rival systems was superior to their own in any particular. It is impossible to study the Sūtras of the several schools, and come to any other conclusion. The more popular systems of the Purāṇas, on the other hand, blended various tenets of the different systems syncretically together. In modern times the superior orthodoxy of the Vedānta seems to be generally admitted. But even some who hold this opinion refuse to follow the example of Śankara in denouncing the founders of the rival schools as heretical. On the contrary, they regard them all as inspired Munis, who, by adapting their doctrines to the capacities or tendencies of different students, have paved the way for the ultimate reception of the Vedāntic system. Such is the view taken in the Prasthāna-bheda of Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, who gives the following lucid summary of the leading principles of the different schools of speculation (Weber's Indische Studien, i. 23):

Sarveshāṁ cha sankshepeṇa trividhaḥ eva prasthāna-bhedaḥ | tatra ārambha-vādaḥ ekaḥ | pariṇāma-vādo dvitīyaḥ | vivartta-vādas tṛitīyaḥ | pārthivāpya-taijasa-vāyavīyāś chaturvidhāḥ paramāṇavo dvy-aṇukādi-krameṇa brahmāṇḍa-paryantaṁ jagad ārambhante | asad eva kāryyaṁ kāraka-vyāpārād utpadyate iti prathamas tārkikāṇām mīmāṁsakānāṁ cha | sattva-rajas-tamo-guṇātmakam pradhānam eva mahad-ahankārādi-krameṇa jagad-ākāreṇa pariṇamate | pūrvam api sūkshma-rūpeṇa sad eva kāryaṁ kāraṇa-vyāpāreṇa abhivyajyate iti dvitīyaḥ pakshaḥ Sānkhya-Yoga-Pātanjala-Pāśupatānām | Brahmaṇaḥ pariṇāmo jagad iti Vaishṇavānām | sva-prakāśa-paramānandādvitīyam Brahma sva-māyā-vaśād mithyaiva jagad-ākāreṇa kalpate iti tṛitīyaḥ paksho tenets of the Vedānta and Sānkhya to save the uniformity of the doctrine, and thereby the sacredness of the Vedas as the Scriptures derived from the immediate revelation of God. So, for instance, it is recorded that Vyāsa, the reputed author of the Bramha Sūtras, wrote also a commentary to Patanjali's Yoga-śāstra, which is still extant under his name. In the same manner composed Gauḍapāda, the eminent Vedāntist, and teacher of Śankara's teacher, Govinda, a commentary to Īśvara Kṛishṇa's Sānkhya Kārikā; and the Bhagavad Gītā has also the same object."

Brahma-vādinām | sarveshām prasthāna-karttṛīṇām munīnāṁ vivartta-vāda-paryavasānena advitīye Parameśvare eva pratipādye tātparyam | na hi te munayo bhrāntāḥ sarvajñatvāt teshām | kintu vahir-vishaya-pravaṇānām āptatataḥ purushārthe praveśo na sambhavati iti nāstikya-vāraṇāya taiḥ prakāra-bhedāḥ pradarśitāḥ | tatra teshāṁ tātparyam abuddhvā veda-viruddhe 'py arthe tātparyam utprekshamāṇās tan-matam eva upādeyatvena gṛihṇanto janāḥ nānā-patha-jusho bhavanti | iti sarvam anavadyam.|

"The difference in principle between these various schools is, when briefly stated, three-fold. The first doctrine is that of a commencement of the world; the second is that of an evolution; the third is that of an illusion. Atoms of four descriptions—earthy, aqueous, igneous, and aerial—beginning with compounds of two atoms, and ending in the egg of Brahmā (the world), originate the universe: and effects, previously non-existent, come into being from the action of a causer. This is the first theory, that of the Logicians and Mīmānsakas. The second theory, that of the Sānkhyas, Yogas, Pātanjalas, and Pāśupatas, is that Pradhāna (or Prakṛiti = nature), consisting of the three guṇas (qualities), sattva, rajas, and tamas, is evolved, through the successive stages of mahat (intellect), and ahankāra (consciousness), etc., in the form of the world; and that effects, which had previously existed in a subtile form, are [merely] manifested by the action of their cause. Another form of this theory is that of the Vaishṇavas [the Rāmānujas], who hold the universe to be an evolution of Brahma. The third view, that of the Brahma-vādins (Vedāntists), is, that Brahma, the self-resplendent, the supremely happy, and the one sole essence, assumes, unreally, the form of the world through the influence of his own illusion (Māyā).

The ultimate scope of all the Munis, authors of these different systems, is to support the theory of illusion, and their only design is to establish the existence of one Supreme God, the sole essence; for these Munis could not be mistaken [as some of them must have been, if they were not all of one opinion, or, as those of them must have been who did not hold Vedāntic principles], since they were omniscient. But as they saw that men, addicted to the pursuit of external objects, could not all at once penetrate into the highest truth, they held out to them a variety of theories, in order that they might not fall into atheism. Misunderstanding the object which the Munis thus had in view, and representing that they even designed to propound doctrines contrary to the Vedas, men have come to regard the specific doctrines of these several schools with preference, and thus become adherents of a variety of systems. Thus all has been satisfactorily stated."

I find that Vijnāna Bhikshu, the commentator on the Sānkhya aphorisms, takes very nearly the same view as is here quoted from Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, in regard to the superiority of the Brahma Mīmānsā or Vedānta over the other Darśanas.

In his Sānkhya-pravachana-bhāshya (Bibliotheca Indica, pp. 3 ff.), he thus writes:

Syād etat | Nyāya-vaiśekikābhyām atra avirodho bhavatu | brahma-mīmāmsā-yogābhyām tu virodho 'sty eva | tābhyāñ nityeśvara-sādhanāt | atra cha Īśvarasya pratishidhyamānatvāt | na cha atrāpi vyāvahārika-pāramārthika-bhedena seśvara-nirīśvara-vādayor avirodho 'stu seśvara-vādasya upāsanā-paratva-sambhavād iti vāchyam | vinigamakābhāvāt | śvaro hi durjneyaḥ iti nirīśvaratvam api loka-vyavahāra-siddham aiśvaryya-vairāgyāya anuvadituṁ śakyate ātmanaḥ saguṇatvam iva | na tu kvāpi śruty-ādāv īśvaraḥ sphuṭam pratishidhyate yena seśvara-vādasyaiva vyāvahārikatvam avadhāryeta iti | atra uchyate | atrāpi vyāvahārika-pāramārthika-bhāvo bhavati | "asatyam apratishṭhaṁ te jagad āhur anīśvaram" ityādi-śāstrair nirīśvara-vādasya ninditatvāt | asminn eva śāstre vyāvahārikasyaiva pratishedhasya aiśvaryya-vairāgyādy-artham anuvādatvauchityāt | yadi hi laukāyatika-matānusāreṇa nityaiśvaryyaṁ na pratishidhyeta tadā paripūrṇa-nitya-nirdoshaiśvaryya-darśanena tatra chittāveśato vivekābhyāsa-pratibandhaḥ syād iti sānkhyāchāryyānām āśayaḥ | seśvara-vādasya na kvāpi nindādikam asti yena upāsanādi-paratayā tat śāstraṁ sankochyeta | yat tu "nāsti sānkhya-samaṁ jnānaṁ nāsti yoga-samam balam | atra vaḥ saṁśayo mā bhūj jnānaṁ sānkhyam param smṛitam" ityādi vākyam tad-vivekāṁśe eva sānkhya-jnānasya darśanāntarebhyaḥ utkarsham pratipādayati na tv īśvara-pratishedāṁśe 'pi | tathā Parāśarādy-akhila-śishṭa-saṁvādād api seśvara-vādasyaiva pāramārthikatvam avadhāryate | api cha "Akshapāda-praṇīte cha Kāṇāde sānkhya-yogayoḥ | tyājyaḥ śruti-virudho 'ṁśaḥ śruty-eka-śaraṇair nṛibhiḥ | Jaiminīye cha Vaiyāse virudhāṁśo na kaśchana | śrutyā vedārtha-vijnāne śruti-pāraṁ gatau hi tāv" iti Parāśaropapurāṇādibhyo 'pi brahma-mīmāṁsāyāḥ īśvarāṁśe balavattvam | yathā | "nyāya-tantrāṇy anekāni taiś tair uktāni vādibhiḥ | hetv-āgama-sadāchārair yad yuktaṁ

tad upāsyatām" iti moksha-dharma-vākyād api Parāśarādy-akhila-śishṭa-vyavahāreṇa brahma-mīmāṁsā-nyāya-vaiśeshikādy-uktaḥ īśvara-sādhaka-nyāyaḥ eva grāhyo balavattvāt | tathā | "Yaṁ na paśyanti yogīndrāḥ sānkhyāḥ api maheśvaraṁ | anādi-nidhanam brahma tam eva śaraṇaṁ vraja" ityādi-kaurmādi-vākyaiḥ sānkhyānām īśvarājñānasyaiva nārāyaṇādinā proktatvāch cha | kincha brahma-mīmāṁsāyāḥ īśvaraḥ eva mukhyo vishayaḥ upakramādibhir avadhṛitaḥ | tatrāṁśe tasya bādhe śāstrasyaiva aprāmāṇyaṁ syāt | "yat-paraḥ śabdaḥ sa śabdārthaḥ" iti nyāyāt | sānkhya-śāstrasya tu purushārtha-tat-ṣādhana-prakṛiti-purusha-vivekāv eva mukhyo vishayaḥ | iti īśvara-pratishedhāṁśa-bādhe 'pi na aprāmāṇyam | "Yat-paraḥ śabdaḥ sa śabdārthaḥ" iti nyāyāt | ataḥ sāvakāśatayā sānkhyam eva īśvara-pratishedhāṁśe durbalam iti | na cha brahma-mīmāṁsāyām api īśvāraḥ eva mukhyo vishayo na tu nityaiśvaryam iti vaktuṁ śakyate | "smṛity-anavakāśa-dosha-prasanga"-rūpa-pūrva-pakshasya anupapattyā nityaiśvaryya-viśishṭatvena eva brahma-mīmāṁsā-vishayatvāvadhāraṇāt | brahma-śabdasya para-brahmaṇy eva mukhyatayā tu "athātaḥ para-brahma-jijñāsā" iti na sūtritam iti | etena sānkhya-virodhād brahma-yoga-darśanayoḥ kāryyeśvara-paratvam api na śānkanīyam | prakṛiti-svātantryāpattyā "rachanānupapatteś cha na anumānam" ityādi brahma-sūtra-paramparā-'nupapatteś cha | tathā "sa purveshām api guruḥ kālena anavachchhedād" iti yoga-sūtra-tadīya-vyāsa-bhāshyābhyāṁ spḥuṭam īśa-nityatāvagamāch cha iti | tasmād abhyupagama-vāda-prauḍhi-vādādinā eva sānkhyasya vyāvahārikeśvara-pratishedha-paratayā brahma-mīmāṁsā-yogābhyāṁ saha na virodhaḥ | abhyupagama-vādaś cha śāstre dṛishṭaḥ | yathā Vishṇu-purāṇe (i. 17, 54) | "Ete bhinna-dṛiśāṁ daityāḥ vikalpāḥ kathitāḥ mayā | kṛitvā 'bhyupagamaṁ tatra sankshepaḥ śrūyatām mama" | iti | astu vā pāpināṁ jñāna-pratibandhārtham āstika-darśaneshv apy aṁśataḥ śruti-viruddhārtha-vyavasthāpanaṁ teshu teshv aṁśeshv aprāmāṇyaṁ cha | śruti-smṛity-aviruddheshu tu mukhya-vishayeshu prāmāṇyam asty eva | ataḥ eva Padma-purāṇe brahma-yoga-darśanātiriktānāṁ darśanānām nindā 'py upapadyate | Yathā tatra Pārvatīm prati Īśvara-vākyam | "śṛiṇu devi pravakshyāmi tāmasāni yathā-kramam | yeshāṁ śravaṇa-mātreṇa pātityaṁ jñāninām api | prathamaṁ hi mayaivoktaṁ Śaivam Pāśupatādikam | mach-chhakty-āveśitair vipraiḥ samproktāni tataḥ param | Kaṇādena tu samproktaṁ śāstraṁ vaiśeshikam mahat | Gautamena tathā nyāyaṁ sānkhyaṁ tu Kapilena vai | dvijanmanā Jaiminiṇā pūrvaṁ vedamayārthataḥ | nirīśvareṇa vādena kṛitam

śāstram mahattaram | Dhishaṇena tathā proktam chārvākam ati-garhitam | daityānāṁ nāśanārthāya Vishṇunā Buddha-rūpiṇā | bauddha-śāstram asat proktaṁ nagna-nīla-paṭādikam | māyā-vādam asach-chhāstram prachchhannam bauddham eva cha | mayaiva kathitam devi kalau brāhmaṇa-rūpiṇā | apārthaṁ śruti-vākyānāṁ darśayat loka-garhitam | karma-svarūpa-tyājyatvaṁ atra cha pratipādyate | sarva-karma-paribhraṁśād naishkarmyaṁ tatra chochyate | parātmᵑ-jīvayor aikyam mayā 'tra pratipādyate | brahmaṇo 'sya paraṁ rūpaṁ nirguṇaṁ darśitam mayā | sarvasya jagato 'py asya nāśanārthaṁ kalau yuge | vedārthavad mahāśāstram māyā-vādam avaidikam | mayaiva kathitaṁ devi jagatāṁ nāśa-kāraṇād" iti | adhikaṁ tu brahma-mīmāṁsā-bhāshye prapanchitam asmābhir iti | tasmād āstika-śāstrasya na kasyāpy aprāmāṇyaṁ virodho vā sva-sva-vishayeshu sarveshām abādhāt avirodhāch cha iti | nanv evam purusha-bahutvāṁśe 'py asya śāstrasya abhyupagama-vādatvaṁ syāt | na syāt | avirodhāt | brahma-mīmāṁsāyām apy "aṁśo nānā-vyapadeśād" ityādi-sūtra-jātair jīvātma-bahutvasyaiva nirṇayāt | sānkhya-siddha-purushāṇām ātmatvaṁ tu brahma-mīmāṁsayā bādhyate eva | "ātmā iti tu upayanti" iti tat-sūtreṇa paramātmanaḥ eva paramārtha-bhūmāv ātmatvāvadhāraṇāt | tathāpi cha sānkhyasya na aprāmāṇyam | vyāvahārikātmano jīvasya itara-viveka-jñānasya moksha-sādhanatve vivakshitārthe bādhābhāvāt | etena śruti-smṛiti-prasiddhayor nānātmaikātmatvayor vyāvahārika-pāramārthika-bhedena avirodhaḥ |

"Be it so: let there be here no discrepancy with the Nyāya and Vaiśeshika. But it will be said that the Sānkhya is really opposed to the Brahma-mīmānsā (the Vedānta) and the Yoga [of Patanjali]; since both of these systems assert an eternal Īśvara (God), while the Sānkhya denies such an Īśvara. And it must not be said (the same persons urge) that here also [as in the former case of the Nyāya and Vaiśeshika], owing to the distinction between practical [or conventional, or regulative] and essential truths, there may be no [real] contrariety between the theistic and the atheistic theories, inasmuch as the theistic theory may possibly have a view to devotion [and may therefore have nothing more than a practical end in view];—you are not, it will be said, to assert this, as there is nothing to lead to this conclusion [or, distinction]. For as Īśvara is difficult to be known, the atheistic theory also, which is founded on popular opinion, may, indeed, be adverted to for the purpose of inspiring indifference to the conception of a Deity, (just as it is [conventionally] asserted that soul has qualities); but neither the Veda, nor any other śāstra contains a distinct denial of an Īśvara, by which the merely practical [or conventional] character of the theistic theory could be shewn. [Consequently the theistic theory is not a mere conventional one, but true, and the contradiction between the atheistic Sāṅkhya and the theistic systems is real and irreconcilable].

"To this we reply: in this case also the distinction of practical and essential truths holds. For although the atheistic theory is censured by such texts as the following: 'They declare a world without an Īśvara to be false and baseless;' yet it was proper that in this system (the Sāṅkhya), the merely practical (or conventional) denial [of Īśvara] should be inculcated for the purpose of inspiring indifference to the conception of a Deity, and so forth. Because the idea of the author of the Sāṅkhya was this, that if the existence of an eternal Īśvara were not denied, in conformity with the doctrine of the Laukāyatikas, men would be prevented by the contemplation of a perfect, eternal, and faultless godhead, and by fixing their hearts upon it, from studying to discriminate [between spirit and matter]. But no censure on the theistic theory is to be found in any work, whereby [the scope of] that system might be restricted, as having devotion, etc., in view as its only end. And as regards such texts as the following: 'There is no knowledge like the Sāṅkhya, no power like the Yoga; doubt not of this, the knowledge of the Sāṅkhya is considered to be the highest,' they [are to be understood as] proving the superiority of the Sāṅkhya doctrine over other systems, not in respect of its atheism, but only of its discrimination [between different principles]. It is, moreover, established by the concurrence of Parāśara, and all other well instructed persons, that the theistic theory is that which represents the essential truth. Further, such texts as the following of the Parāśara Upapurāṇa, and other works, shew that the strength of the Brahma-mīmānsā lies on the side of its theism, viz., 'In the systems of Akshapāda (Gotama) and Kaṇāda, and in the Sāṅkhya and Yoga, that part which is opposed to the Veda should be rejected by all persons who regard the Veda as the sole authority. In the systems of Jaimini and Vyāsa (the Vedānta) there is no portion contrary to the Veda, since both these sages have attained to a perfect comprehension of its true meaning. In the same way it results from this text of the Moksha-dharma (a part of the Śānti-parvan of the Mahābhārata), viz.: 'Many systems of reasoning have been promulgated by different authors; [in these] whatever is established on grounds of reason, of scripture and of approved custom, is to be respected;' [from this text also, I say, it results] that the theory,—declared in the Brahma-mīmānsā, the Nyāya, the Vaiśeshika, etc., in consonance with the tradition of Parāśara and all other well-instructed men,—which asserts an Īśvara, is alone to be received, in consequence of its strength; and [the same thing follows] from the fact that in such passages as this of the Kaurma-purāṇa, etc., viz.—'Take refuge with that Maheśvara, that Brahma without beginning or end, whom the most eminent Yogins, and the Sānkhyas do not behold,'—Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu) and others assert that the Sānkhyas are ignorant of Īśvara.

"Moreover, Īśvara is determined to be the principal subject of the Brahma-mīmānsā by the introductory statement, etc., of that system. If it were open to objection on that side [i.e. on the side of its principal subject], the entire system would be without authority. For it is a rule that 'the sense of a word is that which it is intended to denote.' Whereas the principal subjects of the Sānkhya are—(1) the grand object of human pursuit, and (2) the distinction between nature (prakṛiti) and spirit (purusha), which is the instrument of attaining that grand object. Thus this system does not lose its authority, even though it be erroneous in so far as it denies an Īśvara. For it is a rule that 'the sense of a word is that which it is intended to denote.' Hence, as the Sānkhya has a certain applicability of its own, it is weak only in so far as it denies an Īśvara.

"Nor can it be alleged that it is Iśvara only, and not the eternity of his existence, that is the principal subject of the Brahma-mīmānsā; since, through the disproof of the objection (pūrva-paksha) that the theistic theory 'is chargable with the defect of rendering the Smṛiti inapplicable,'[170] it is ascertained that the assertion of an eternal Īśvara is the main object of the Brahma-mīmānsā. But as the word 'Brahma' is properly employed to denote the supreme Brahma, the first aphorism of the Brahma-mīmānsā does not run thus, 'Now follows the enquiry regarding the supreme Brahma;' [but thus, 'Now follows the enquiry regarding Brahma.'] Hence we are not to surmise that, as they [would otherwise] contradict the Sānkhya, the Brahma-mīmānsā and Yoga systems must aim at establishing [not an eternal Deity] but a [secondary] Īśvara, who is merely an effect. For this is disproved (1) by the series of Brahma Sūtras (ii. 2, 1 ff.) which affirm that 'an unintelligent cause of the world cannot be inferred, as it is not conceivable that such a cause should frame anything,' and which would be rendered inconclusive by the assumption of the independent action of Prakṛiti; and (2) by the fact that the eternity of God is clearly understood from the Yoga aphorism [i. 26], viz. 'He is also the instructor of the ancients, as he is not circumscribed by time,' as well as from the commentary of Vyāsa thereon.[171] Hence, as the Sānkhya, arguing on its own special principles, and at the same time making a great display of ingenuity[172] and so forth, has in view a merely practical denial of an Īśvara, it does not contradict the Brahma-mīmānsā or the Yoga. The method of reasoning on special principles is referred to in the Śāstra. Thus it is said in the Vishṇu Purāṇa [i. 17, 54, Wilson, vol. ii. p. 44], 'These notions, Daityas, which I have described, are the guesses of persons who look on the Deity as distinct from themselves. Accepting them as partially correct, hear from me a summary (of transcendental truth).

[170] The aphorism here referred to (Brahma Sūtras ii. 1, 1), with most of S'ankara's comment on it, has been already quoted above, pp. 185 ff.

"Or let it be [supposed] that even orthodox systems, with the view of preventing sinners from attaining knowledge, lay down doctrines which are partially opposed to the Veda; and that in those particular portions they are not authoritative. Still in their principal contents,

[171] I quote the commentary of Bhoja-rājā on this Sūtra, as given by Dr. Ballantyne (Aphorisms of the Yoga, part first, p. 32): Pūrveṣhām | ādyānām Brahmādīnām api sa gurur upadeshṭā yataḥ sa kālena nāvachchhidyate anāditvāt | teshām punar ādimattvād asti kālena avachchhedaḥ | "Of the ancients, that is, of the earliest [beings], Brahmā and the rest, he is the guru, i.e., the instructor, because He, as having no beginning, is not circumscribed by time; while they, on the other hand, having had a beginning, are circumscribed by time."

[172] I am indebted to Professor Cowell for a satisfactory interpretation of the first of these two phrases, abhyupagama-vāda and prauḍhi-vāda, as well as for various other improvements in my translation of this passage. The phrase abhyupagama-siddhānta is rendered by Dr. Ballantyne "Implied dogma" (Nyāya aphorisms, i. 31, p. 30, as corrected in MS.). Professor Goldstücker s.v. renders it by "implied axiom." In Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon the phrase abhyupagama-vāda is rendered "a discussion in a conciliatory spirit." In regard to the sense of prauḍhi-vāda, see above, p. 172.

which are consonant to the Śruti and the Smṛiti, they possess authority. Accordingly, in the Padma-Purāṇa we find a censure passed even upon the several philosophical systems (Darśanas), with the exception of the Brahma (the Vedānta) and the Yoga. For in that work Īśvara (Mahādeva) says to Pārvatī, 'Listen, goddess, while I declare to you the Tāmasa works (the works characterised by tamas, or the quality of darkness) in order; works by the mere hearing of which even wise men become fallen. First of all, the Śaiva systems, called Pāśupata, etc., were delivered by myself. Then the following were uttered by Brāhmans penetrated by my power, viz. the great Vaiśeshika system by Kaṇāda, and the Nyāya, and Sānkhya, by Gotama and Kapila respectively. Then the great system, the Pūrva-[mīmānsā], was composed by the Brāhman Jaimini on Vedic subjects, but on atheistic principles. So too the abominable Chārvāka doctrine was declared by Dhishaṇa,[173] while Vishṇu, in the form of Buddha, with a view to the destruction of the Daityas,[174] promulgated the false system of the Bauddhas, who go about naked, or wear blue garments. I myself, goddess, assuming the form of a Brāhman, uttered in the Kali age, the false doctrine of Māyā [illusion, the more modern form of the Vedānta], which is covert Buddhism, which imputes a perverted and generally censured signification to the words of the Veda, and inculcates the abandonment of ceremonial works, and an inactivity consequent on such cessation. In that system I propound the identity of the supreme and the embodied soul, and show that the highest form of this Brahma is that in which he is devoid of the [three] qualities. It was I myself, goddess, by whom this great śāstra, which, composed of Vedic materials and inculcating the theory of illusion, is yet un-Vedic, was declared in the Kali age for the destruction of this entire universe.' We have entered into fuller explanations on this subject in the Brahma-mīmānsā-bhāshya. There is, therefore, no want of authority, nor any contradiction, in any orthodox system, for they are all incapable of refutation in their own especial subjects, and are not mutually discrepant. Does, then, this system (the Sānkhya) lay down a theory based only on its own assumptions in respect of the multitude of souls also? It does not. For in the Brahma-mīmānsā also it is determined by such a kind of texts as the following (Brahma Sūtras, ii. 3, 43), viz. 'the embodied spirit is a portion[175] of the supreme soul, from the variety of appellations,' that there is a multitude of embodied spirits. But it is denied by the Brahma-mīmānsā that the spirits (purusha) asserted by the Sānkhya have the character of Soul; for it is determined by the Brahma Sūtra (iv. 1, 3), 'they approach Him as one with themselves,'[176] that, on the ground of transcendental truth, the supreme Soul alone has the character of Soul. But, nevertheless, the Sānkhya is not unauthoritative; for as the knowledge of its own distinctness from other things, obtained by the embodied spirit in its worldly condition, is instrumental to final liberation, this system is not erroneous in the particular subject matter which it aims at propounding. In this way it results from the distinction of practical and real, that there is no contradiction between the two theories (made known by the Śruti and Smṛiti), of a multitude of souls, and the unity of all soul.

[173] A name of Vṛihaspati, according to Wilson's dictionary.

[174] See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, pp. 334 ff.

The view taken by Madhusūdana, as quoted above, and partially confirmed by Vijnāna Bhikshu, of the ultimate coincidence in principle of all the different schools of Hindu philosophy, however mutually hostile in appearance, seems, as I have remarked, to be that which is commonly entertained by modern Pandits. (See Dr. Ballantyne's Synopsis of Science, advertisement, p. iv.) This system of compromise, however, is clearly a deviation from the older doctrine; and it practically abolishes the distinction in point of authority between the Vedas and the Smṛitis, Darśanas, etc. For if the Munis, authors of the six Darśanas, were omniscient and infallible, they must stand on the same level with the Vedas, which can be nothing more.

I return, however, from this digression regarding the hostility of Śankara to the adherents of the Sānkhya and other rationalistic schools,

[175] On this, however, Śankara (in loco) remarks as follows: Jīvaḥ Īśvarasya aṁśo bhavitum arhati yathā 'gner visphulingaḥ | aṁśaḥ iva aṁśaḥ | na hi niravayavasya mukhyo 'ṁśaḥ sambhavati | kasmāt punar niravayavatvāt sa eva na bhavati | "nānā-vyapadeśāt | "The embodied soul must be 'a portion' of Īśvara, as a spark is of fire (and not merely dependent upon him as a servant on his master). 'A portion' means, 'as it were a portion;' for nothing can be, in the proper sense, 'a portion' of that which has no parts. Why, then, as Īśvara has no parts, is not the embodied soul the very same as he? 'From the variety of appellations,' etc., etc."

[176] The original Sūtra runs thus: Ātmā iti tu upagachchhanti grāhayanti cha | "They approach Him as one with themselves, and [certain texts] cause them to receive Him as one with themselves." This refers to certain texts which Śankara adduces from one of the Upanishads, apparently.

and the opinions of later authors concerning the founders of those several systems. The distinction drawn by the Indian commentators quoted in this section between the superhuman Veda and its human appendages, the Kalpa Sūtras, etc., as well as the other Smṛitis, is not borne out by the texts which I have cited above (pp. 8, 31) from the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka (= Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa), and Muṇḍaka Upanishads. By classing together the Vedic Sanhitās, and the other works enumerated in the same passages, the authors of both the Upanishads seem to place them all upon an equal footing; and the former of the two authorities speaks of them all as having proceeded from the breathing of the Great Being. If the one set of works are superhuman, it may fairly be argued that the others are so likewise. According to the Muṇḍaka Upanishad, neither of them (if we except only the Vedāntas or Upanishads) can be placed in the highest rank, as they equally inculcate a science which is only of secondary importance.

As, however, Śankara (who, no doubt, perceived that it would be inconsistent with modern theories to admit that any of the works usually classed under the head of Smṛiti had been really breathed forth by the Creator, and that such a directly divine origin could, on orthodox principles, be assigned only to writings coming under the designation of Śruti), maintains in his comment on the text of the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad that the whole of the works there enumerated, excepting the Sanhitās of the four Vedas, are in reality portions of the Brāhmaṇas, it will be necessary to quote his remarks, which are as follows (Bibl. Ind. ii. 855 ff.):

. . . Niśvasitam iva niśvasitam | yathā aprayatnenaiva purusha-niśvāso bhavaty evaṁ vā | are kiṁ tad niśvasitaṁ tato jātam ity uchyate | Yad ṛigvedo yajurvedaḥ sāmavedo 'tharvaṅgirasaś chaturvidham mantra-jātam | itihāsaḥ ity Ūrvaśī-Purūravasor saṁvādādir "Ūrvaśī ha apsarāḥ" ityādi-brāhmaṇam eva | purāṇam "asad vā idam agre āsīd" ityādi | vidyā devajana-vidyā "vedaḥ so 'yam" ityādiḥ | upanishadaḥ "priyam ity etad upāsīta" ityādyāḥ | ślokāḥ "brāhmaṇa-prabhavāḥ mantrās tad ete ślokāḥ" ity ādayaḥ | sūtrāṇi vastu-sangraha-vākyāni vede yathā "ātmā ity eva upāsīta" ityādīni | anuvyākhyānāni mantra-vivaraṇāni | vyākhyānāni arthavādāḥ | . . . . evam ashṭavidham brāhmaṇam | evam mantra-brāhmaṇayor eva grahaṇam | niyata-rachanāvato vidyamānasyaiva vedasya abhivyaktiḥ purusha-niśvāsa-vat | na cha purusha-buddhi-prayatna-pūr-

vakaḥ | ataḥ pramāṇam nirapekshaḥ eva svārthe | .... tena vedasya aprāmāṇyam āśankate | tad-āśankā-nivṛitty-artham idam uktam | puru-sha-niśvāsa-vad aprayatnotthitatvāt pramāṇaṁ vedo na yathā 'nyo gran-thaḥ iti |

"'His breathing' means, 'as it were, his breathing,' or it denotes the absence of effort, as in the case of a man's breathing. We are now told what that breathing was which was produced from him. It was the four classes of mantras (hymns), those of the Ṛich, Yajush, Sāman, and Atharvāngirases (Atharvaṇa); Itihāsa (or narrative), such as the dialogue between Urvaśī and Purūravas, viz. the passage in the Brāh-maṇa beginning 'Urvaśī the Apsaras,' etc. [S. P. Br. p. 855]; Purāṇa, such as, 'This was originally non-existent,' etc.; Vidyā (knowledge), the knowledge of the gods, as, 'This is the Veda,' etc.; Upanishads, such as, 'Let him reverence this, as beloved,' etc.; Ślokas, such as those here mentioned, 'The mantras are the sources of the Brāhmaṇas, on which subject there are these ślokas,' etc.; Sūtras (aphorisms) oc-curring in the Veda which condense the substance of doctrines, as, 'Let him adore this as Soul,' etc.; Anuvyākhyānas, or interpretations of the mantras; Vyakhyānas, or illustrative remarks." The commen-tator adds alternative explanations of the two last terms, and then pro-ceeds: "Here, therefore, eight sorts of texts occurring in the Brāhmaṇas are referred to; and consequently the passage before us embraces merely mantras and Brāhmaṇas. The manifestation of the Veda, which already existed in a fixed form of composition, is compared to the breathing of a person. The Veda was not the result of an effort of the intelligence of any person.[177] Consequently, as proof in respect of its own contents, it is independent of everything else."

Śankara terminates his remarks on this passage by intimating, as one supposition, that the author of the Upanishad means, in the words [177] Compare S'ankara's Comment on Brahma Sūtra, i. 1, 3, as quoted above in p. 106, where this same text of the Bṛih. Ār. Up. is referred to. As the fact of Brahma being the author of the Vedas is there adduced to prove the transcendent character of his knowledge, and of his power, we must, apparently (unless we are to charge the great commentator with laying down inconsistent doctrines in the two passages), suppose that in the text before us he does not mean to deny that Brahma was conscious of the procession of the Vedas, etc., from himself, and cognizant of their sense (as the author of the Sānkhya aphorisms and his commentator seem to have understood, see above p. 135), but merely that his consciousness and cognizance were not the result of any effort on his part.

on which he comments, to remove a doubt regarding the authority of the Veda, arising from some words which had preceded, and therefore affirms that "the Veda is authoritative, because it was produced without any effort of will, like a man's breathing, and not in the same manner as other books." (See Sānkhya Sūtras, v. 50; above, p. 135.)

This attempt to explain the whole of the eight classes of works enumerated in the Upanishad as nothing else than parts of the Brāhmaṇas, cannot be regarded as altogether satisfactory, since some of them, such as the Sūtras, have always been referred to a distinct class of writings, which are regarded as uninspired (see Müller's Anc. Ind. Lit. pp. 75, 86); and the Itihāsas and Purāṇas had in all probability become a distinct class of writings at the period when the Upanishad was composed. And Śankara's explanation is rendered more improbable if we compare with this passage the other from the Muṇḍaka Upanishad, i. 1, 5, already quoted above (p. 31), where it is said, "The inferior science consists of the Ṛich, Yajush, Sāman, and Atharvan Vedas, accentuation (śikshā), ritual prescriptions (kalpa), grammar, commentary (nirukta), prosody (chhandas), and astronomy."[178] Here various appendages of the Vedas, which later writers expressly distinguish from the Vedas themselves, and distinctly declare to have no superhuman authority, are yet mentioned in the same category with the four Sanhitās, or collections of the hymns, as constituting the inferior science (in opposition to the knowledge of the supreme Spirit). From this we may reasonably infer that the author of the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad also, when he specifies the Sūtras and some of the other works which he enumerates, intended to speak of the Vedāngas or appendages of the Vedas, and perhaps the Smṛitis also, as being the breathing of Brahma. The works which in the passage from the Muṇḍaka are called Kalpa, are also commonly designated as the Kalpa Sūtras.

[178] I take the opportunity of introducing here Sāyaṇa's remarks on this passage in his Commentary on the Rig-veda, vol. i., p. 33: Atigambhīrasya vedasya artham avabodhayitum śikshādīni shaḍ-angāni pravṛittāni | ata eva teshām apara-vidyā-rūpatvam Muṇḍakopanishady Ātharvaṇikāḥ āmananti | "dve vidye" ityādi | . . . . sādhana-bhūta-dharma-jñāna-hetutvāt shaḍ-anga-sahitānām karma-kāṇḍānām apara-vidyātvam | parama-puruśhārtha-bhūta-brahma-jñāna-hetutvād upanishadām para-vidyātvam | "The Śikshā and other five appendages are intended to promote the comprehension of the sense of the very deep Veda. Hence, in the Muṇḍaka Upanishad, the followers of the Atharva-veda declare that these works belong to the class of inferior sciences, thus: 'There are two sciences,' etc. [see the entire passage in p. 31.] Since the sections of the Veda which relate to ceremonies [including, of course, the hymns], as well as the six appendages, lead to a knowledge of duty, which is an instrument [of something further], they are ranked as an inferior science. On the other hand the Upanishads, which conduct to a knowledge of Brahma, the supreme object of man, constitute the highest science."

This conclusion is in some degree confirmed by referring to the passage from the Mahābhārata, Śānti-parvan, 7,660, which has been cited in p. 105, where it is said that the "great rishis, empowered by Svayambhū, obtained by devotion the Vedas, and the Itihāsas, which had disappeared at the end of the preceding Yuga." Whatever may be the sense of the word Itihāsa in a Vedic work, there can be no doubt that in the Mahābhārata, which is itself an Itihāsa, the word refers to that class of metrical histories. And in this text we see these Itihāsas placed on a footing of equality with the Vedas, and regarded as having been, like them, pre-existent and supernatural. See also the passage from the Chhāndogya Upanishad, vii. 1, 1 ff. (Bibl. Ind., vol. iii. pp. 473 ff.), quoted above (p. 33), where the Itihāsas and Purāṇas are spoken of as "the fifth Veda of the Vedas." The same title of "fifth Veda" is applied to them in the Bhāg. Pur. iii. 12, 39 : Itihāsa-purāṇāni pañchamaṁ vedam Īśvaraḥ | sarvebhyaḥ eva mukhebhyaḥ sasṛije sarva-darśanaḥ | "The omniscient Īśvara (God) created from all his mouths the Itihāsas and Purāṇas, as a fifth Veda." See also the passages quoted above in pp. 27–30, from the Purāṇas and Mahābhārata, where the Itihāsas and Purāṇas themselves are placed on an equality with, if not in a higher rank, than the Vedas. The claims put forward by these popular works on their own behalf are not, indeed, recognized as valid by more critical and scientific authors, who, as we have seen at the beginning of this section, draw a distinct line of demarcation between the Vedas and all other works; but it would appear from the passages I have quoted from the Upanishads that at one time the Vedas were, at least, not so strictly discriminated from the other Śāstras as they afterwards were.

SECT. XII.—Recapitulation of the Arguments urged in the Darśanas, and by Commentators, in support of the Authority of the Vedas, with some remarks on these reasonings.

As in the preceding sections I have entered at some length into the arguments urged by the authors of the philosophical systems and their commentators, in proof of the eternity and infallibility of the Vedas, it may be convenient to recapitulate the most important points in these reasonings; and I shall then add such observations as the consideration of them may suggest.

The grounds on which the apologists of the Vedas rest their authority are briefly these: First, it is urged that, like the sun, they shine by their own light, and evince an inherent power both of revealing their own perfection, and of elucidating all other things, past and future, great and small, near and remote (Sāyaṇa, as quoted above, p. 62; Śankara on Brahma Sūtras i. 1, 3, above, p. 190). This is the view taken by the author of the Sānkhya Sūtras also, who, however, expressly denies that the Vedas originated from the conscious effort of any divine being (see p. 135). Second, it is asserted that the Veda could have had no (human) personal author, as no such composer is recollected (Mādhava, above, pp. 83 ff), and cannot therefore be suspected of any such imperfection as would arise from the fallibility of such an author (pp. 69 f.; Sāyaṇa p. 106). Third, the Pūrva-mīmānsā adds to this that the words of which the Vedas are composed are eternal, and have an eternal connection (not an arbitrary relation depending upon the human will) with their meanings, and that therefore the Vedas are eternal, and consequently perfect and infallible [179] (Mīmānsā Sūtras and Commentary, above, pp. 71 ff., and Sarva-darśana-sangraha, above, pp. 91 f.) Fourth, the preceding view is either explained or modified by the commentator on the Taittirīya Sanhitā (above, p. 69), as well as by Sāyaṇa in his Introduction to the Rig-veda (above, p. 106), who say that, like time, æther, etc., the Veda is only eternal in a qualified sense, i.e. during the continuance of the existing mundane system; and that in reality it sprang from Brahmā at the beginning of the creation. But this origin cannot according to their view affect the perfection of the Veda, which in consequence of the faultlessness of its author possesses a self-demonstrating authority. Fifth, although the Vedānta, too, speaks of the eternity of the Veda (above, p. 105), it also in the same passage makes mention of its self-dependent author; while in another passage (p. 106) it distinctly ascribes the origin of the Indian Scripture to Brahma as its source or cause. Brahma here must be taken as neuter, denoting the supreme Spirit, and not masculine, designating the personal creator, as under the fourth head.[180] Sixth, according to the Naiyāyika doctrine the authority of the Veda is established by the fact of its having emanated from competent persons who had an intuitive perception of duty, and whose competence is proved by their injunctions being attended with the desired results in all cases which come within the cognizance of our senses and experience (Nyāya Sūtras, above, pp. 116). Seventh, agreeably to the Vaiśeshika doctrine, and that of the Kusumānjali, the infallibility of the Veda results from the omniscience of its author, who is God (Vaiśeshika Sūtras, Tarka Sangraha, and Kusumānjali, pp. 119 ff., 127, and 129 ff., above).

[179] In the Bṛihad Araṇyaka Upanishad (p. 688 of Dr. Röer's ed.) it is said: Vāchaiva samrāḍ Brahma jñāyate vāg vai samrāṭ paramam Brahma | "By speech, o monarch, Bráhma is known. Speech is the supreme Brahma."

These arguments, as the reader who has studied all their details will have noticed, are sometimes in direct opposition to each other in their leading principles; and they are not likely to seem convincing to any persons but the adherents of the schools from which they have severally emanated. The European student (unless he has some ulterior practical object in view) can only look upon these opinions as matters of historical interest, as illustrations of the course of religious thought among a highly acute and speculative people. But they may be expected to possess a greater importance in the eyes of any Indian readers into whose hands this book may fall; and as such readers may desire to learn in what light these arguments are regarded by Western scholars, I shall offer a few remarks on the subject.

In regard to the first ground in support of the infallibility of the Veda, viz. the evidence which radiates from itself, or its internal evidence, I may observe first, that this is a species of proof which can only be estimated by those who have made the Indian Scripture the object of careful study; and, second, that it must be judged by the reason and conscience of each individual student. This evidence may appear conclusive to men in a certain stage of their national and personal culture, and especially to those who have been accustomed from their infancy to regard the Vedas with a hereditary veneration; whilst to persons in a different state of mental progress, and living under different influences, it will appear perfectly futile. It is quite clear that, even in India itself, there existed in former ages multitudes of learned and virtuous men who were unable to see the force of this argument, and who consequently rejected the authority of the Vedas. I allude of course to Buddha and his followers. And we have even found that some of those writers who are admitted to have been orthodox, such as the authors of the Upanishads, the Bhagavad Gītā, and the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, while they attach the highest value to the divine knowledge conveyed by the latest portions of the Veda, depreciate, if they do not actually despise, the hymns and the ceremonial worship connected with them.

[180] See note in p. 205, above.

In regard to the second argument, viz. that the Vedas must be of supernatural origin, and infallible authority, as they are not known to have had any human author, I observe as follows. The Greek historian, Herodotus, remarks (ii. 23) of a geographer of his own day who explained the annual inundations of the river Nile by supposing its stream to be derived from an imaginary ocean flowing round the earth, which no one had ever seen, that his opinion did not admit of confutation, because he carried the discussion back into the region of the unapparent (ἐς ἀφανὲς τὸν μῦθον ἀνενείκας οὐκ ἔχει ἔλεγχον). The same might be said of the Indian speculators, who argue that the Veda must have had a supernatural origin, because it was never observed to have had a human author like other books;—that by thus removing the negative grounds on which they rest their case into the unknown depths of antiquity, they do their utmost to place themselves beyond the reach of direct refutation. But it is to be observed (1) that, even if it were to be admitted that no human authors of the Vedas were remembered in later ages, this would prove nothing more than their antiquity, and that it would still be incumbent on their apologists to show that this circumstance necessarily involved their supernatural character; and (2) that, in point of fact, Indian tradition does point to certain rishis or bards as the authors of the Vedic hymns. It is true, indeed, as has been already noticed (p. 85), that these rishis are said to have only "seen" the hymns, which (it is alleged) were eternally pre-existent, and that they were not their authors. But as tradition declares that the hymns were uttered by such and such rishis, how is it proved that the rishis to whom they are ascribed, or those, whoever they were, from whom they actually proceeded, were not uttering the mere productions of their own minds? The whole character of these compositions, and the circumstances under which, from internal evidence, they appear to have arisen, are in harmony with the supposition that they were nothing more than the natural expression of the personal hopes and feelings of those ancient bards by whom they were first recited. In these songs the Aryan sages celebrated the praises of their ancestral gods (while at the same time they sought to conciliate their goodwill by a variety of oblations supposed to be acceptable to them), and besought of them all the blessings which men in general desire—health, wealth, long life, cattle, offspring, victory over their enemies, forgiveness of sin, and in some cases also celestial felicity.

The scope of these hymns is well summed up in the passage which I have already quoted (from Colebrooke's Misc. Essays i. 26) in the Second Volume, p. 206: 'Arthepsavaḥ ṛishayo devatāś chhandobhir abhyadhāvan | "The rishis desiring [various] objects, hastened to the gods with metrical prayers." The Nirukta, vii. 1, quoted in the same place, says: Yat-kāmaḥ ṛishir yasyāṁ devatāyām arthapatyam ichhan stutim prayunkte tad-devataḥ sa mantro bhavati | "Each particular hymn has for its deity the god to whom the rishi, seeking to obtain any object of desire which he longs for, addresses his prayer." And in the sequel of the same passage from the Nirukta (vii. 3), the fact that the hymns express the different feelings or objects of the rishis is distinctly recognized:

Paroksha-kritāḥ pratyaksha-kritāś cha mantrāḥ bhūyishṭhāḥ alpaśaḥ ādhyātmikāḥ | athāpi stutir eva bhavati na āśīrvādaḥ "Indrasya nu vīryāṇi pravocham" iti yathā etasmin sūkte | athāpi āśīr eva na stutiḥ "suchakshāḥ aham akshibhyām bhūyāsaṁ suvarchāḥ mukhena suśrut karṇābhyām bhūyāsam" iti | tad etad bahulam ādhvaryave yājneshu cha mantreshu | athāpi śapathābhiśāpau | "adya murīya" ityādi . . . athāpi kasyachid bhāvasya āchikhyāsā | "na mṛityur āsīd" ityādi . . . | athāpi paridevanā kasmāchchid bhāvāt | "sudevo adya prapated anāvṛid" ityādi | athāpi nindā-praśaṁse | "kevalāgho bhavati kevalādī" ityādi | evam aksha-sūkte dyūta-nindā cha kṛishi-praśaṁsā cha | evam uchchāvachair abhiprāyair ṛishīṇām mantra-dṛishṭayo bhavanti |

"[Of the four kinds of verses specified in the preceding section], (a) those which address a god as absent, (b) those which address him as present, and (c) those which address the worshippers as present and the god as absent, are the most numerous, while those (d) which refer to the speaker himself are rare. It happens also that a god is praised without any blessing being invoked, as in the hymn (R.V. i. 32). 'I declare the heroic deeds of Indra,' etc. Again, blessings are invoked without any praise being offered; as in the words, 'May I see well with my eyes, be resplendent in my face, and hear well with my ears.' This frequently occurs in the Ādhvaryava (Yajur) Veda, and in the sacrificial formulæ. Then again we find oaths and curses, as in the words (R.V. vii. 104, 15), 'May I die to-day, if I am a Yātudhāna,' etc. (See Vol. I. p. 327.) Further, we observe the desire to describe some particular state of things, as in the verse (R.V. x. 129, 2), 'Death was not then, nor immortality,' etc. Then there is lamentation, arising out of a certain state of things, as in the verse (R.V. x. 95, 14), 'The beautiful god will disappear and never return,' etc. Again, we have blame and praise, as in the words (R.V. x. 117, 6), 'The man who eats alone, sins alone,' etc. So, too, in the hymn to dice (R.V. x. 34, 13) there is a censure upon dice, and a commendation of agriculture. Thus the objects for which the hymns were seen by the rishis were very various." [181]

It is to be observed, however, that although in this passage the author, Yāska, speaks of the various desires which the rishis expressed in different hymns, he nevertheless adheres to the idea which was recognized in his age, and in which he doubtless participated, that the rishis "saw" the hymns.

In the Nirukta, x. 42, the form of the metre in particular hymns is ascribed to the peculiar genius of the rishi Paruchhepa: [182] Abhyāse

[181] In Nirukta, iv. 6, allusion is made to a rishi Trita perceiving a particular hymn when he had been thrown into a well (Tritaṁ kūpe 'vahitam etat sūktam prati babhau).

[182] A Paruchhepa is mentioned in the Taittīriya Sanhitā, ii. 5, 8, 3, as follows: Nṛimedhas cha Paruchhepaś cha brahmavādyam avadetām "asmin dā.āv ārdre 'gniṁ janayāva yataro nau brahmīyān" iti | Nṛimedho 'bhyavadat sa dhūmam ajanayat | Paruchhepo 'bhyavadat so "gnim ajanayat | "ṛishe" ity abravīd "yat samāvadvidva kathā tvam agnim ajījano nāham" iti | "sāmidhenīnām eva ahaṁ varṇaṁ veda" ity abravīt | "yad ghṛitavat padam anūchyate sa āsāṁ varṇas 'taṁ tvā samidbhir Angiraḥ' ity āha sāmidheṅīshv eva taj jyotir janayati" | "Nṛimedha and Paruchhepa had a discussion concerning sacred knowledge. They said, 'Let us kindle fire[1] in this moist wood, in order to see which of us has most sacred knowledge.' [2] Nṛimedha pronounced (a text); but produced only smoke. Paruchhepa pronounced (a text) and generated fire. Nṛimedha said, 'Rishi, since our knowledge is equal, how is it that thou hast generated fire, while I have not.' Paruchhepa replied, 'I know the lustre

[1] "Without friction."—Comm.

[2] "In regard to the Sāmidhenī formulas."—Comm.

bhūyāṁsam artham manyante yathā "aho darśanīya aho darśanīya" iti | tat Paruchchhepasya śīlam | "Men consider that by repetition the sense is intensified, as in the words 'o beautiful, o beautiful.' This is Paruchchhepa's habit."

In Nirukta, iii. 11, the rishi Kutsa is mentioned as being thus described by the interpreter Aupamanyava: Ṛishiḥ Kutso bhavati karttā stomānām ity Aupamanyavaḥ | "'Kutsa is the name of a rishi, a maker of hymns,' according to Aupamanyava."

So too the same work, x. 32, says of the rishi Hiraṇyastūpa that "he declared this hymn" (Hiraṇyastūpaḥ ṛishir idaṁ sūktam provācha).

I do not, as I have already intimated, adduce these passages of the Nirukta to show that the author regarded the hymns as the ordinary productions of the rishis' own minds, for this would be at variance with the expression "seeing," which he applies to the mental act by which they were produced. It appears also from the terms in which he speaks of the rishis in the passage (Nirukta, i. 20) quoted above, p. 120, where they are described as having an intuitive insight into duty, that he placed them on a far higher level than the inferior men of later ages. But it is clear from the instances I have adduced that Yāska recognizes the hymns as being applicable to the particular circumstances in which the rishis were placed, and as being the bonâ fide expression of their individual emotions and desires. (See also the passages from the Nirukta, ii. 10 and 24, quoted in Vol. I. pp. 269 and 338, which establish the same point.) But if this be true, the supposition that these hymns, i.e. hymns specifically suited to express the various feelings and wishes of all the different rishis, were eternally pre-existent, and were perceived by them at the precise conjunctures when they were required to give utterance to their several aims, is perfectly gratuitous and unnecessary. It might be asserted with nearly the same shew of reason that the entire stock of ordinary language employed by human beings to express their ideas had existed from eternity.[183] of the Sāmidhenīs. The sentence which contains the word ghṛita (butter) forms their lustre. When any one repeats the words, "We augment thee, o Angiras (Agni) with fuel and with butter," he then generates that lustre in the Sāmidhenīs.'"

[183] A difficulty of the same nature as that here urged, viz. that men and objects which existed in time are mentioned in the Vedas which are yet said to be eternal, was felt by Jaimini, as we have already seen (pp. 77 ff.). I recur to this subject in p. 215.

In regard to the third argument for the authority of the Vedas, viz. that they are eternal, because the words of which they are composed are eternal, and because these words have an inherent and eternal (and not a merely conventional) connection with the significations or objects, or the species of objects, which they represent, it is to be observed that it is rejected both by the Nyāya and Sānkhya schools.[184] And I am unable (if I rightly comprehend this orthodox reasoning) to see how it proves the authority of the Véda more than that of any other book. If the words of the Véda are eternal, so must those of the Bauddha books be eternal, and consequently, if eternal pre-existence is a proof of perfection, the infallibility of these heretical works must be as much proved by this argument as the divine origin of the Vedas, whose pretensions they reject and oppose. Or if the meaning is that the words of the Veda alone are eternal and infallible, this is an assumption which requires proof. If their reception by great rishis be alleged as evidence, it must be remarked that the authority of these rishis is itself a point which cannot be admitted until it has been established.

In regard to the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh of the arguments above stated, as put forward by the representatives of different schools or opinions in favour of the authority of the Veda, it may suffice to say that they for the most part assume the point to be proved, viz. that the Veda did proceed from an omniscient, or at least a competent, author. The only exception to this remark is to be found in the reasoning of the Nyāya and Sānkhya aphorisms that the infallibility of the Vedas is shown by the fact that the employment of the formulas or prescriptions of those parts of them which deal with temporal results, such as can be tested by experience, is always found to be efficacious; a premiss from which the conclusion is drawn that those other parts of the Veda, which relate to the unseen world, must be equally authoritative, as the authors of these different parts are the same persons. This argument cannot appear convincing to any but those who admit first, the invariable efficacy of all the formulas and prescriptions

See, however, the comment on Brahma Sūtra, i. 3, 30, regarding the perpetual recurrence of the same things in successive creations from, and to, all eternity, which will be quoted in the Appendix.

[184] See Dr. Ballantyne's remarks on this controversy, in pp. 186, 189, 191, and 192 of his "Christianity contrasted with Hindu Philosophy."

of the Veda which relate to such matters as can be tested by experience, and secondly, the identity of the authors of the parts of the Veda which contain these formulas and prescriptions with the authors of the other parts. It would be impossible to prove the former point, and next to impossible to prove the latter.

Against the eternity of the Vedas an objection has been raised, which Jaimini considers it necessary to notice, viz. that various historical personages are named in their pages, and that as these works could not have existed before the persons whose doings they record, they must have commenced to exist in time. This difficulty Jaimini attempts, as we have seen above (pp. 77 ff.), to meet by explaining away the names of the historical personages in question. Thus Babara Prāvahaṇi is said to be nothing else than an appellation of the wind, which is eternal. And this method, it is said, is to be applied in all similar cases. Another of the passages mentioned by an objector (see above, p. 79) as referring to non-eternal objects is R.V. iii. 53, 14, "What are the cows doing for thee among the Kīkaṭas?" etc. The author of the Mīmānsā Sūtras would no doubt have attempted to show that by these Kīkaṭas we are to understand some eternally pre-existing beings. But Yāska, the author of the Nirukta, who had not been instructed in any any such subleties, speaks of the Kīkaṭas as a non-Āryan nation. (Vol. I. p. 342, and Vol. II. p. 362.) It is difficult to suppose that Jaimini—unless he was an enthusiast, and not the cool and acute reasoner he has commonly proved himself to be—could have seriously imagined that his rule of interpretation could ever be generally received or carried out.[185] The Brāhmaṇas evidently intend to represent the numerous occurrences which they narrate, as having actually taken place in time, and the actors in them as having been real historical personages. See, for instance, the legends from the Śatapatha and Aitareya Brāhmaṇas, the Taittarīya Sanhitā, etc., quoted in the First [185] In Sāyaṇa's Introduction to R.V. vol. i. p. 23, it is said: Manushya-vṛittānta-pratipādakaḥ ṛicho nārāśaṁsyaḥ | "The Nārāśaṁsīs are verses which set forth the histories of men." Yāska's definition is the same in substance, Nir. ix. 9. If these Nārāśaṁsīs are, as Sāyaṇa says, verses of the hymns (ṛichaḥ), and if according to his definition their object is to record events in human history, it follows that they must refer to non-eternal objects. See also the explanation of the words nārāsaṁśena stomena in Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, 3, 53, given by the Commentator Mahīdhara, which will be quoted further on.

Volume of this work, pp. 182, 192, 194, 328, 355, etc. And it is impossible to peruse the Vedic hymns without coming to the conclusion that they also record a multitude of events, which the writers believed to have been transacted by men on earth in former ages. (See the passages quoted from the Rig-veda in the First and Second Volumes of this work, passim; those, for example, in Vol. I. pp. 162 ff., 318 ff., 339 ff., and Vol. II. p. 208.)

We shall, no doubt, be assisted in arriving at a correct conclusion in regard to the real origin and character of the hymns of the Veda, if we enquire what opinion the rishis, by whom they were confessedly spoken, entertained of their own utterances; and this I propose to investigate in the following chapter.

CHAPTER II.

THE RISHIS, AND THEIR OPINIONS IN REGARD TO THE ORIGIN OF THE VEDIC HYMNS.

I HAVE already shewn, in the preceding pages, as well as in the Second Volume of this work, that the hymns of the Rig-veda themselves supply us with numerous data by which we can judge of the circumstances to which they owed their origin, and of the manner in which they were created. We have seen that they were the natural product and expression of the particular state of society, of the peculiar religious conceptions, and of all those other influences, physical and moral, which prevailed at the period when they were composed, and acted upon the minds of their authors. (Vol. I. pp. 161 f., Vol. II. pp. 205 ff.; and above, pp. 211 f.) We find in them ideas, a language, a spirit, and a colouring totally different from those which characterize the religious writings of the Hindus of a later era. They frequently discover to us the simple germs from which the mythological conceptions current in subsequent ages were derived,—germs which in many cases were developed in so fanciful and extravagant a manner as to shew that the simplicity of ancient times had long since disappeared, to make way for a rank and wild luxuriance of imagination. They afford us very distinct indications of the locality in which they were composed (Vol. II. Pp. 354–372); they shew us the Aryan tribes living in a state of warfare with surrounding enemies (some of them, probably, alien in race and language), and gradually, as we may infer, forcing their way onward to the east and south (Vol. II. pp. 374 ff., 384 ff., 414 ff.); they supply us with numerous specimens of the particular sorts of prayers, viz. for protection and victory, which men so circumstanced would naturally address to the gods whom they worshipped, as well as of those more common supplications which men in general offer up for the various blessings which constitute the sum of human welfare; and they bring before us as the objects of existing veneration a class of deities (principally, if not exclusively, personifications of the elements, and of the powers either of nature, or of reason) who gradually lost their importance in the estimation of the later Indians, and made way for gods of a different description, invested with new attributes, and in many cases bearing new appellations.

These peculiarities of the hymns abundantly justify us in regarding them as the natural product and spontaneous representation of the ideas, feelings, and aspirations of the bards with whose names they are connected, or of other ancient authors, while the archaic forms of the dialect in which they are composed, and the references which are made to them, as pre-existent, in the liturgical works by which they are expounded and applied, leave no reason for doubt that they are the most ancient of all the Indian Scriptures.

We can also, as I have shewn, discover from the Vedic hymns themselves, that some of them were newer and others older, that they were the works of many successive generations of poets, that their composition probably extended over several centuries, and that in some places their authors represent them as being the productions of their own minds, while in other passages they appear to ascribe to their own words a certain divine character, or attribute their composition to some supernatural assistance. (Vol. I. p. 4, and II. pp. 206 ff., 219 ff.)

I shall now proceed to adduce further proofs from the hymns of the Rig-veda in support of these last mentioned positions, repeating, at the same time, for the sake of completeness, the texts which I have already cited in the Second Volume.

Sect. I.—Passages from the Hymns of the Veda which distinguish between the Rishis as Ancient and Modern.

The appellations or epithets applied by the authors of the hymns to themselves, and to the sages who in former times had instituted, as well as to their contemporaries who continued to conduct, the different rites of divine worship, are the following: ṛishi, kavi, medhāvin, vipra, vipaśchit, vedhas, muni, etc. The rishis are defined in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, to be persons "who, whether singly or in chorus, either on their own behalf or on behalf of others, invoked the gods in artificial language, and in song;", and the word is said to denote especially "the priestly bards who made this art their profession." The word kavi means "wise," or "a poet," and has ordinarily the latter sense in modern Sanskrit. Kṛipra means "wise," and, in later Sanskrit, a "Brāhman;" medhāvin means "intelligent;" vipaśchit and vedhas, "wise" or "learned." Muni signifies in modern Sanskrit a "sage" or "devotee." It is not much used in the Rig-veda, but occurs in viii. 17, 13 (Vol. II. p. 397).

The following passages from the Rig-veda either expressly distinguish between contemporary rishis and those of a more ancient date, or, at any rate, make reference to the one or the other class. This recognition of a succession of rishis constitutes one of the historical elements in the Veda. It is an acknowledgment on the part of the rishis themselves that numerous persons had existed, and events occurred, anterior to their own age, and, consequently, in time; and it therefore refutes, by the testimony of the Veda itself, the assertion of Jaimini (above, pp. 77 ff.) that none but eternally pre-existing objects are mentioned in that book.

If, under this and other heads of my inquiry, I have cited a larger number of passages than might have appeared to be necessary, it has been done with the intention of showing that abundant evidence of my various positions can be adduced from all parts of the Hymn-collection.[1]

R. V. i. 1, 2. Agniḥ pūrvebhir ṛishibhir īḍyo nūtanair uta | sa devān eha vakshati |

"Agni, who is worthy to be celebrated by former, as well as modern rishis, will bring the gods hither."

The word pūrvebhiḥ is explained by Sāyaṇa thus: Purātanair Bhṛigv-angiraḥ-prabhṛitibhir ṛishibhiḥ | "By the ancient rishis, Bhṛigu, Angiras," etc.; and nūtanaiḥ is interpreted by idānīntanair asmābhir api, "by us of the present day also." See also Nirukta, vii. 16.

[1] I have to acknowledge the assistance kindly rendered to me by Prof. Aufrecht in the revision of my translation of the passages quoted in this and the following sections. As, however, the texts are mostly quite clear in so far as regards the points which they are adduced to prove, any inaccuracies with which I may be chargeable in other respects are of comparatively little importance.

i. 45, 3. Priyamedha-vad Atri-vaj Jātavedo Virūpa-vat | Angiras-vad mahi-vrata Praskaṇvasya śrudhi havam | 4. Mahi-kerṇvaḥ ūtaye Priyamedhāḥ ahūshata |

"O (god) of great power, listen to the invocation of Praskaṇva, as thou didst listen to Priyamedha, Atri, Virūpa, and Angiras. 4. The Priyamedhas, skilled in singing praises, have invoked thee."

Here Praskaṇva is referred to, in verse 3, as alive, whilst Priyamedha, Atri, Virūpa, and Angiras belong to the past. In verse 4 the descendants of Priyamedha are however alluded to as existing. The three other names are also, no doubt, those of families. In R.V. iii. 53, 7, (see Vol. I. p. 341) the Virūpas appear to be referred to; while in viii. 64, 6 (which will be quoted below), a Virūpa is addressed. In v. 22, 4, the Atris are spoken of.

i. 48, 14. Ye chid hi tvām ṛishayaḥ pūrve ūtaye juhūre ityādi |

"The former rishis who invoked thee for succour," etc.

i. 80, 16. Yām Atharvā Manush pitā Dadhyaṅ dhiyam atnata | tasmin brahmāṇi pūrvathā Indre ukthā samagmata ityādi |

"In the ceremony [or hymn] which Atharvan, or our father Manu, or Dadhyanch performed, the prayers and praises were, as of old, congregated in that Indra," etc.

i. 118, 3 (repeated in iii. 58, 3). Āhur viprāsaḥ Aśvinā purājaḥ |

"O Aśvins, the ancient sages say," etc.

i. 131, 6. Ā me asya vedhaso navīyaso manma śrudhi navīyasaḥ |

"Hear the hymn of me this modern sage, of this modern [sage]."

i. 139, 9. Dadhyaṅ ha me janusham pūrvo Angirāḥ Priyamedhaḥ Kaṇvo Atrir Manur vidur ityādi |

"The ancient Dadhyanch, Aṅgiras, Priyamedha, Kaṇva, Atri, and Manu know my birth."

i. 175, 6. Yathā pūrvebhyo jaritṛibhyaḥ Indra mayaḥ iva āpo na tṛishyate babhūtha | Tām anu tvā nividaṁ johāvīmi ityādi |

"Indra, as thou hast been like a joy to former worshippers who praised thee, like waters to the thirsty, I invoke thee again and again with this hymn," etc.

iv. 20, 5. Vi yo rarapśe ṛishibhir navebhir vṛiksho na pakvaḥ sṛinyo na jetā | maryo na yoshām abhi manyamāno achhā vivakmi puruhūtam Indram |

"Like a man desiring a woman, I call hither that Indra, invoked by many, who, like a ripe tree, like a conqueror expert in arms,[2] has been celebrated by recent rishis."

iv. 50, 1. Tam pratnāsaḥ ṛishayo dīdhyānāḥ puro viprāḥ dadhire mandra-jihvam |

"The ancient rishis, resplendent and sage, have placed in front of them [Bṛihaspati] with gladdening tongue."

v. 42, 6. . . . . Nu te pūrve Maghavan na aparāso na vīryaṁ nūtanaḥ kaśchana āpa |

"Neither the ancients nor later men, nor any modern man, has attained to [conceived] thy prowess, o Maghavan."

x. 54, 3. Ke u nu te mahimanaḥ samasya asmat pūrve ṛishayo antam āpuḥ | yad mātaraṁ cha pitaraṁ cha sākam ajanayathās tanvāḥ svāyāḥ |

"Who among the rishis who were before us have attained to the end of all thy greatness? for thou didst at once produce from thy own body both the mother and the father (earth and heaven)."

vi. 19, 4. Yathā chit pūrve jaritāraḥ āsur anedyāḥ anavadyāḥ arishṭāḥ |

"As [Indra's] former worshippers were, [may we be] blameless, irreproachable, and unharmed."

vi. 21, 5. Idā hi te vevishataḥ purājāḥ pratnāsaḥ āsuḥ purukṛit sakhāyaḥ | Ye madhyamāsaḥ uta nūtanāsaḥ utāvamasya puruhūta bodhi |

"For now, o energetic god, men are thy worshippers, as the ancients born of old and the men of the middle and later ages have been thy friends. And, o much-invoked, think of the most recent of all."[3]

vi. 21, 1. Sa tu śrudhi Indra nūtanasya brahmaṇyato vīra kārudhāyaḥ |

"Heroic Indra, supporting the poet, listen to the modern [bard] who wishes to celebrate thee."

vi. 22, 2. Tam u naḥ pūrve pitaro navagvāḥ sapta viprāsaḥ abhi vājayantaḥ ityādi |

"To Him (Indra) our ancient fathers, the seven Navagva sages, desiring food, (resorted) with their hymns," etc.

vi. 50, 15. Evā napāto mama tasya dhībhir Bharadvājāḥ abhyarchanti arkaiḥ |

"Thus do the Bharadvājas my grandsons adore thee with (my?) hymns and praises."

[2] Prof. Aufrecht thinks śṛiṇyo na jetā may perhaps mean, "like a winner of sickles (as a prize)."

[3] This verse is translated in Benfey's Glossary to the Sāma-veda, p. 76, col. i.

vii. 18, 1. Tve ha yat pitaraś chid naḥ Indra viśvā vāmā jaritāro asanvann ityādi |

"Since, in thee, o Indra, even our fathers, thy worshippers, obtained all riches," etc.

vii. 29, 4. Uto gha te purushyāḥ id āsan yeshām pūrveshām aśriṉor ṛishīṉām | adha ahaṁ tvā Maghavaṉ johavīmi tvaṁ naḥ Indra asi pramatiḥ piteva |

"Even they were of mortal birth,—those former rishis whom thou didst hear. I invoke thee again and again, o Maghavan; thou art to us wise as a father."

vii. 53, 1. . . . . Te chid hi pūrve kavayo gṛiṉantaḥ puro mahī dadhire devaputre |

"The ancient poets, celebrating their praises, have placed in the front these two great [beings, heaven and earth] of whom the gods are the children."

vii. 76, 4. Te id devānāṁ sadhamādaḥ āsann ṛitāvānaḥ kavayaḥ pūrvyāsaḥ | gūḷhaṁ jyotiḥ pitaro anvavindan satya-mantrāḥ ajanayann ushāsam |

"They shared in the enjoyments of the gods, those ancient pious sages. Our fathers discovered the hidden light; with true hymns they caused the dawn to arise."

vii. 91, 1. Kuvid anga namasā ye vṛidhāsaḥ purā devāḥ anavadyāsaḥ āsan | te Vāyave Manave bādhitāya avāsayann[4] ushasaṁ sūryeṉa |

"Certainly those gods who were formerly magnified (or grew) by worship were altogether blameless. They lighted up the dawn and the sun to Vāyu (Āyu?) and the afflicted Manu." (See Vol. I. p. 172.)

viii. 36, 7. Śyāvāśvasya sunvatas tathā śṛiṉu yathā aśriṉor Atreḥ karmāṉi kṛiṉvataḥ |

"Listen to Śyāvāśva pouring forth libations, in the same way as thou didst listen to Atri when he celebrated sacred rites."[5]

ix. 96, 11. Tvayā hi naḥ pitaraḥ Soma pūrve karmāṉi chakruḥ pavamāna dhīrāḥ |

"For through thee, o pure Soma, our wise forefathers of old performed their sacred rites."

[4] See Benfey's Glossary to Sāma-veda, under the word vas 2.

[5] Compare viii. 35, 19; and viii. 37, 7.

ix. 110, 7. Tve Soma prathamāḥ vṛikta-varhisho mahe vājāya śravase dhiyaṁ dadhuḥ |

"The former [priests] having strewed the sacred grass, offered up a hymn to thee, o Soma, for great strength and food."

x. 14, 15 (=A.V. xviii. 2, 2). Idaṁ namaḥ ṛishibhyaḥ pūrvajebhyaḥ pathikṛidbhyaḥ |

"This reverence to the rishis, born of old, the ancients, who showed us the road." (This verse may also be employed to prove that at the end of the Vedic period the rishis had become objects of veneration.)

x. 66, 14. Vasishṭhāsaḥ pitṛivad vācham akrata devān ilānāḥ ṛishivad | ityādi |

"The Vasishṭhas, like the forefathers, like the rishis, have uttered their voice, worshipping the gods."

x. 67, 1—will be quoted in a following section.

x. 96, 5. Tvam aharyathāḥ upastutaḥ pūrvebhir Indra harikeśa yajvabhiḥ |

"Indra, with golden hair, thou didst rejoice, when lauded by the ancient priests."

x. 98, 9. Tvām pūrve ṛishayo gīrbhir āyan tvām adhvareshu puruhūta viśve |

"To thee the former rishis resorted with their hymns; to thee, thou much invoked, all men [resorted] at the sacrifices."

Vājasaneyi Saṅhitā, xviii. 52. Imau te pakshāv ajarau patatriṇau yābhyaṁ rakshāṁsi apahaṁsi Agne | tābhyām patema sukṛitām u lokaṁ yatra ṛishayo jagmuḥ prathamajāḥ purāṇāḥ |

"But these undecaying, soaring pinions, with which, o Agni, thou slayest the Rakshases,—with them let us ascend to the world of the righteous, whither the earliest-born ancient rishis have gone." (This verse is quoted in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, ix. 4, 4, 4, p. 739.)

The ancient rishis, as Sāyaṇa says in his note on R.V. i. 2, were Bhṛigu, Angiras, and others whom he does not name. In another place we find Atharvan, Manu, Dadhyanch, and others mentioned. I will not here enter into any particulars regarding these ancient sages. For some texts relating to Bhṛigu, I may refer to the First Volume of this work, pp. 443 ff.; and various passages relating to Manu will be found in the same volume pp. 162 ff., and in pp. 324–332 of the Second Volume. In regard to Atharvan, as well as Angiras, Professor Gold-stücker's Sanskrit and English Dictionary, and in regard to the same personages and Dadhyanch, the Sanskrit and German Lexicon of Boehtlingk and Roth, may be consulted.

SECT. II.—Passages from the Veda in which a distinction is drawn between the older and the more recent hymns.

From the passages which I propose to bring forward in the present section, it will be found that the hymns which the rishis addressed to the gods are frequently spoken of as new, while others of ancient date are also sometimes mentioned. The rishis no doubt entertained the idea that the gods would be more highly gratified if their praises were celebrated in new, and perhaps more elaborate and beautiful compositions, than if older, and possibly ruder, prayers had been repeated.

The fact that a hymn is called new by its author, does not, however, by any means enable us to determine its age relatively to that of other hymns in the collection, for this epithet of new is, as we shall see, applied to numerous compositions throughout the Veda; and often when a hymn is not designated as new, it may, nevertheless, be in reality of recent date, compared with the others by which it is surrounded. When, however, any rishi characterizes his own effusion as new, we are of course necessarily led to conclude that he was acquainted with many older songs of the same kind. The relative ages of the different hymns can only be settled by means of internal evidence furnished by their dialect, style, metre, ideas, and general contents; and we may, no doubt, hope that much will by degrees be done by the researches of critical scholars towards such a chronological classification of the constituent portions of the Rig-veda.

The hymns, praises, or prayers uttered by the rishis are called by a great variety of names, such as ṛich, sāman, yajush, brahman, arka, uktha, mantra, manman, mati, manīshā, sumati, dhī, dhīti, dhishaṇā, stoma, stuti, sushṭuti, praśasti, śaṁsa, gir, vāch, vachas, nītha, nivid, etc.

R.V. i. 12, 11. Sā naḥ stavānaḥ ābhara gāyatreṇa navīyasā | rayiṁ vīravatīm ishaṁ |

"Glorified by our newest[6] hymn, do thou bring to us wealth and food with progeny." (Sāyaṇa explains navīyasā by pūrvakair apy asampāditena gāyatreṇa | "A hymn not formed even by former rishis.")

[6] Compare Psalms, 33, 3; 40, 3; 96, 1; 98, 1; 144, 9; 149, 1; and Isaiah, 42, 10.

i. 27, 4. Imam ū shu tvam asmākaṁ saniṁ gāyatraṁ navyāṁsam | Agne deveshu právochaḥ |

"Agni, thou hast announced [or do thou announce] among the gods this our offering, our newest hymn."

i. 60, 3. Taṁ navyasī hṛidaḥ ā jāyamānam asmat sukīrttir madhujihvam aśyāḥ | yam ṛitvijo vṛijane mānushāsaḥ prayasvantaḥ āyavo jījananta |

"May our newest laudation (springing) from (our) heart, reach him, the sweet-tongued, at his birth, (him) whom mortal priests the descendants of Manu, offering oblations, have generated in the ceremonial." (See iii. 39, 1, in next page, and i. 171, 2 and ii. 35, 2, which will be quoted further on in the next section).

i. 89, 3. Tān pūrvayā nividā hūmahe vayam Bhagam Mitram Aditiṁ Daksham Asridham ityādi |

"We invoke with an ancient hymn Bhaga, Mitra, Aditi, Daksha, Asridh [or the friendly]," etc. (Pūrvakālīnayā | nityayā | nividā | vedātmikayā vāchā | "With an ancient—eternal, hymn—a Vedic text."—Sāyaṇa.)

i. 96, 2. Sa pūrvayā nividā kavyatā Āyor imāḥ prajāḥ ajanayad manūnām |

"Through the ancient hymn, the poetic work, of Āyu he (Agni) generated these children of men." [7]

i. 130, 10. Sa no navyebhir vṛisha-karmann ukthais purāṁ darttaḥ pāyubhiḥ pāhi śagmaiḥ |

"Through our new hymns, do thou, vigorous in action, destroyer of cities, sustain us with invigorating blessings."

i. 143, 1. Pra tavyasīṁ navyasīṁ dhītiṁ Agnaye vācho matiṁ sahasaḥ sūnave bharā |

"I bring to Agni, the son of strength, a new and energetic hymn, a production of thought uttered by the voice (vāchaḥ)."

ii. 17, 1. Tad asmai navyam Angiras-vad archata ityādi |

"Utter to him [Indra] that new [hymn] like Angiras." ("New, i.e. never before seen among other people" anyeshv adṛishṭa-pūrvam—Sāyaṇa.)

ii. 18, 3. Harī nu kaṁ rathe Indrasya yojam āyai sūktena vachasā navena | mo shu tvām atra bahavo hi viprāḥ ni ṛīraman yajamānāso anye |

[7] See the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, p. 143 of Prof. Haug's translation; and Vol. I. p. 180.

"With this new and well-expressed hymn I have yoked[8] the steeds in Indra's car, in order that he may come hither. Let not the other wise sacrificers, who are numerous, stop thee (from coming to me)."

ii. 24, 1. Sa imām aviḍḍhi prabhṛitiṁ yaḥ śśishe | ayā vīḍhema navayā mahā girā |

"Do thou who rulest receive this, our offering [of praise]: let us worship thee with this new and grand song."

iii. 1, 20. Etā te Agne janimā sanāni pra pūrvyāya nūtanāni vocham |

"These ancient [and these] new productions I have uttered to thee, Agni, who art ancient." (Comp. R.V. viii. 84, 5, in the next section.)

iii. 32, 13. Yaḥ stomebhir vāvṛidhe pūrvyebhir yo madhyamebhir uta nūtanebhiḥ |

"[Indra] who has grown through (or been magnified by) ancient, intermediate, and modern hymns."

iii. 39, 1. Indram matir hṛidaḥ ā vachyamānā achhā patiṁ stomatashṭā jigāti | ā jāgṛivir vidathe śasyamānā Indra yat te jāyate viddhi tasya | 2. Divaś chid ā pūrvyā jāyamānā vi jāgṛivir vidathe śasyamānā | bhadrā vastrāṇi arjunā vasānā sā iyam asme sanajā pitryā dhīḥ |

"1. The vigilant hymn, formed of praise, and uttered from the heart, proceeds to Indra the lord, when chaunted at the sacrifice: be cognizant, Indra, of this [praise] which is produced for thee. 2. Produced even before the daylight, vigilant, chaunted at the sacrifice, clothed in beautiful and radiant garments,—this is our ancient ancestral hymn." (Pitryā is rendered by Sāyaṇa as pitṛi-kramāgatā, "received by succession from our fathers.")

iii. 62, 7. Iyaṁ te Pūshann āghṛiṇe sushṭutir deva navyasī | asmābhis tubhyaṁ śasyate |

"Divine and glowing Pūshan, this new laudation is recited by us to thee."

v. 42, 13. Pra sū mahe suśaraṇāya medhāṁ giram bhare navyasīṁ jāyamānām |

"I present to the mighty protector a mental production, a new utterance [now] springing up."

[8] Compare the expressions vacho-yujā harī, "brown horses yoked by the hymn (R.V. viii. 45, 39; viii. 87, 9); brahma-yuj, "yoked by prayer" (i. 177, 2; iii. 35, 4; viii. 1, 24; viii. 2, 27; viii. 17, 2); and mano-yuj, "yoked by the mind, or will" (i. 14, 6; i. 51, 10; iv. 48, 4; v. 75, 6; viii. 5, 2).

v. 55, 8. Yat pūrvyam Maruto yach cha nūtanaṁ yad udyate Vasavo yach cha śasyate | viśvasya tasya bhavatha navedasaḥ |

"Be cognizant of all that is ancient, Maruts, and of all that is modern, of all that is spoken, Vasus, and of all that is recited."

vi. 17, 13. . . . . Suvīraṁ tvā svāyudhaṁ suvajram ā brahma navyam avase vavṛityāt |

"May the new prayer impel thee, the heroic, well-accoutred, the loud-thundering, to succour us." ("New, i.e. never made before by others' prayer, i.e. the hymn made by us" Nūtanam anyair akṛita-pūrvam | brahma asmābhiḥ kṛitaṁ stotram—Sāyaṇa.)

vi. 22, 7. Taṁ vo dhiyā navyasyā śavishṭham pratnam pratna-vat paritaṁsayadhyai |

"I seek, like the ancients, to stimulate thee, the ancient, with a new hymn."

vi. 34, 1. Saṁ cha tve jagmur giraḥ Indra pūrvīr vi cha tvad yanti vibhvo manīshāḥ | purā nūnaṁ cha stutayaḥ ṛishīṇām paspṛidhre Indre adhi ukthārkāḥ |

"Many songs, Indra, are collected in thee; numerous thoughts issue forth from thee; both before and now the praises, texts and hymns of rishis have hastened emulously to Indra."

vi. 44, 13. Yaḥ pūrvyābhir uta nūtanābhir gīrbhir vāvṛidhe gṛiṇatām ṛishīnām |

"He (Indra) who grew through the ancient and modern hymns of lauding rishis." (See R.V. iii. 32, 13, above p. 223.)

vi. 48, 11. Ā sakhāyaḥ subardughāṁ dhenum ajadhvam upa navyasā vachaḥ |[9]

"Friends, drive hither the milch cow with a new hymn."

vi. 49, 1. Stushe janaṁ suvrataṁ navyasībhir gīrbhir Mitrāvaruṇā sumnayantā |

"With new praises I celebrate the righteous race, with Mitra and Varuna, the beneficent." ("The well-acting race, i.e. the divine race, the company of the gods," sukarmāṇaṁ janaṁ daivyaṁ janaṁ deva-sangham—Sāyaṇa.)

vi. 50, 6. Abhi tyaṁ vīraṁ girvaṇasam archa Indram brahmaṇā jaritar navena |

"Sing, o worshipper, with a new hymn, to the heroic Indra, who delights in praise."

[9] Compare the words ni Agne navyasā vachas tanūshu śaṁsam esham, viii. 39, 2.

vi. 62, 4. Tā navyaso jaramāṇasya manma upa bhūshato yuyujānasaptī ityādi | 5. Tā valgū dasrā puruśākatamā pratnā navyasā vachasā vivāse |

"4. These (Aśvins), with yoked horses, approach the hymn of their new worshipper. . . . 5. I adore with a new hymn these brilliant, strong, most mighty, and ancient (gods)."

vii. 35, 14, will be quoted in the next section.

vii. 53, 2. Pra pūrvaje pitarā navyasībhir gīrbhiḥ kṛiṇudhvaṁ sadane ṛitasya ityādi |

"In the place of sacrifice propitiate with new hymns the ancient, the parents" (i. e. Heaven and Earth), etc.

vii. 56, 23. Bhūri chakra Marutaḥ pitryāṇi vkthāni yā vaḥ śasyante purā chit |

"Ye have done great things, o Maruts, when our fathers' hymns were recited of old in your honour."

vii. 59, 4. . . . . abhi vaḥ āvartt sumatir navīyasī[10] tūyaṁ yāta pipīshavaḥ |

"May the new hymn turn you hither; come quickly, desirous to drink."

vii. 61, 6. . . . . Pra vām manmāni ṛichase navāni kṛitāni brahma jujushann imāni |

"May the new hymns made to praise you, may these prayers gratify you."

vii. 93, 1. S'uchiṁ nu stomaṁ nava-jātam adya Indrāgnī Vṛittra-hanā jushetham | ubhā hi vāṁ suhavā johavīmi ityādi |

"Indra and Agni, slayers of Vṛittra, receive with favour the pure hymn newly produced to-day. For again and again do I invoke you who lend a willing ear," etc.

viii. 5, 24. Tābhir āyātam ūtibhir navyasībhiḥ suśastibhiḥ yad vāṁ vṛishaṇvasū huve |

"Come with those same succours, since I invoke you, bountiful [deities], with new praises." (The epithet navyasībhiḥ in this text might possibly be construed with the word ūtibhiḥ, "aids.")

viii. 6, 11. Aham pratnena manmanā giraḥ śumbhāmi Kaṇva-vat | yena Indraḥ śushmam id dadhe |

[10] The same words, sumatiḥ navīyasī, occur in viii. 92, 9, where they may not have the same sense as here.

"I decorate my praises with an ancient hymn, after the manner of Kaṇva, whereby Indra put on strength."

viii. 6, 43. Imāṁ su pūrvyāṁ dhiyam madhor ghṛitasya pipyushīṁ Kaṇvāḥ ukthena vavṛidhuḥ |

"The Kaṇvas with their praise have augmented this ancient hymn, replenished with sweet butter."

viii. 12, 10. Iyáṁ te ṛitviyāvatī dhītir eti navīyasī saparyantī ityādi |

"This new and solemn hymn advances to honour thee," etc.

viii. 20, 19. Yūnaḥ ū su navishṭhayā vṛishṇaḥ pāvakān abhi Sobhare girā | gāya ityādi |

"Sing, o Sobhari, with a new hymn to these youthful, vigorous, and brilliant (gods).

viii. 23, 14. S'rushṭī Agne navasya me stomasya vīra viśpate vi māyinas tapushā rakshaso daha |

"Heroic Agni, lord of the people, on hearing my new hymn, burn up with thy heat the deluding Rakshases."

viii. 25, 24. . . . . Kaśāvantā viprā navishṭhayā matī | maho vājināv arvantā sachā asanam |

"I have celebrated at the same time with a new hymn, these two sage and mighty [princes], strong, swift, and carrying whips."

viii. 39, 6. Agnir veda marttānām apīchyam . . . . Agnir dvārā vyūrṇute svāhuto navīyasā |

"Agni knows the secrets of mortals . . . . Agni, invoked by a new [hymn], opens the doors."

viii. 40, 12. Eva Indrāgnibhyām pitṛi-vad navīyo Māndhātṛi-vad Angiras-vad avāchi ityādi |

"Thus has a new [hymn] been uttered to Indra and Agni after the manner of our fathers, and of Māndhātṛi, and of Angiras."

viii. 41, 2. Tam ū shu samanā girā pitṛīṇāṁ cha manmabhiḥ Nābhākasya praśastibhir yaḥ sindhūnām upa udaye saptá-svasā sa madhyamaḥ |

"[Worship] him (Varuṇa) continually with a song, with the hymns of the fathers,[11] and with the praises of Nābhāka. He who dwells at the [11] The expression here employed, pitṛīṇāṁ cha manmabhiḥ, occurs also in R.V. x. 57, 3 (=Vāj. S. 3, 53): Mano nu ā huvāmahe nārāśaṁsena somena pitṛīṇāṁ cha manmabhiḥ | "We summon his soul with Soma, accompanied by human praises, and with the hymns of the fathers." The Vājasaneyi Saṇhitā reads stomena, "hymn," instead of somena. The commentator there explains nārāśaṁsena stomena as "a hymn birth-place of the streams, the lord of the seven sisters, abides in the centre." (This verse is quoted in the Nirukta x. 5. Nābhāka is said by Yāska to have been a rishi (ṛishir Nābhāko babhūva). A translation of the passage is given in Roth's Illustrations of the Nir. p. 235, where reference is also made to two verses of the preceding hymn (viii. 40, 4, 5), in which Nābhāka (the ancestor of Nābhāka) is mentioned thus: (verse 4) Abhyarcha Nābhāka-vad Indrāgnī yajasā girā . . . . (verse 5) Pra brahmāṇi Nābhāka-vad Indrāgnibhyām irajyata | "Worship Indra and Agni with sacrifice and hymn, like Nābhāka . . . . Like Nābhāka, direct your prayers to Indra and Agni." In explanation of the seven sisters, Roth refers to Nir. v. 27 (R.V. viii. 58, 12) where the seven rivers are mentioned. See his Illustrations of Nir. pp. 70, 71.

viii. 44, 12. Agniḥ pratnena manmanā śumbhānas tanvaṁ svām kaviḥ vipreṇa vavṛidhe |

"The wise Agni, illuminating his own body at [the sound of] the sage and ancient hymn, has become augmented."

viii. 55, 11. Vayaṁ gha te apūrvyā Indra brahmāṇi vṛittrahan | purutamāsaḥ puruhūta vajrivo bhṛitiṁ na pra bharāmasi |

"Indra, slayer of Vṛittra, thunderer, invoked of many, we [thy] numerous [worshippers] bring to thee, as thy hire, hymns which never before existed."

viii. 63, 7, 8. Iyaṁ te navyasī matir Agne adhāyi asmad ā mandra sujāta sukrato amūra dasma atithe | sā te Agne śantamā chanishṭhā bhavatu priyā tayā vardhasva sushṭutaḥ |

"O Agni, joyful, well-born, strong, unerring, and wondrous guest, this new hymn has been offered to (or, made for) thee by us; may it be dear to thee, agreeable and pleasant: lauded by it, do thou increase."

viii. 65, 5, 6. . . . . Indraṁ gīrbhir havāmahe | Indram pratnena manmanā marutvantam hávāmahe ityādi | 12. (=S.V. ii. 340.) Vācham ashṭāpadīm aham nava-sraktim ṛita-spṛiśam | Indrāt pari tanvam mame |

"5. We invoke Indra with songs; we invoke Indra, attended by the Maruts, with an ancient hymn. . . . 12. I compose for the sake of in which men are praised," and pitṝṇāṁ cha manmabhiḥ, as hymns "in which the fathers are reverenced" (pitaro yaiḥ stotrair manyante te manmānas tair ityādi). See Prof. Max Müller's translation of this hymn in the Journal of Roy. As. Soc. for 1866, pp. 449 and 458.

Indra a hymn of eight feet and nine lines, abounding in sacred truth." (This verse is translated and explained by Professor Benfey, Sāma-veda, p. 255.)

ix. 9, 8. Nu navyase navīyase sūktāya sādhaya pathaḥ | pratna-vad rochaya ruchaḥ |

"Prepare (o Soma) the paths for our newest, most recent, hymn; and, as of old, cause the lights to shine."

ix. 42, 2. Eshu pratnena manmanā devo devebhyaḥ pari | dhārayā pavate sutaḥ |

"This god, poured forth to the gods, with an ancient hymn, purifies with his stream."

ix. 91, 5. Sa pratna-vad navyase viśva-vāra sūktāya pathaḥ kṛiṇuhi prāchaḥ ityādi |

"O god, who possessest all good, make, as of old, forward paths for this new hymn."

ix. 99, 4 (= S.V. ii. 983). Taṁ gāthayā purānyā punānam abhi anūshata | uto kṛipanta dhītayo devānāṁ nāma bibhratīḥ |

"They praised the pure god with an ancient song; and hymns embracing the names of the gods have supplicated him." (Benfey translates the last clause differently.)

x. 4, 6. . . . . Iyaṁ te Agne navyasī manīshā yukshva rathaṁ na śuchayadbhir angaiḥ |

"This is for thee, Agni, a new hymn: yoke thy car as it were with shining parts."

x. 89, 3. Samānam asmai anapāvṛid archa kshmayā divo asamam brahma navyam ityādi |

"Sing (to Indra) without ceasing a new hymn, worthy of him, and unequalled in earth or heaven."

x. 91, 13. Imām pratnāya sushṭutiṁ navīyasīṁ vocheyam asmai uśate śṛiṇotu naḥ |

"I will address to this ancient [deity] my new praises, which he desires; may he listen to us."

x. 96, 11. . . . . Navyaṁ navyaṁ haryasi manma nu priyam ityādi |

"Thou delightest in ever new hymns, which are dear to thee," etc.

x. 160, 5. Aśvāyanto gavyanto vājayanto havāmahe tvā upa gantavai u | ābhūshantas te sumatau navāyāṁ vayam Indra tvā śunaṁ huvema |

"Desiring horses, cattle, and wealth, we invoke thee to approach us.

Paying homage to thee in a new hymn, may we, o Indra, invoke thee auspiciously."

Sect. III.—Passages of the Rig-veda, in which the rishis describe themselves as the composers of the hymns.

In this section I propose to quote, first of all, those passages in which the rishis distinctly speak of themselves as the authors of the hymns, and express no consciousness whatever of deriving assistance or inspiration from any supernatural source. I shall then adduce some further texts in which, though nothing is directly stated regarding the composition of the hymns, there is at the same time nothing which would lead the reader to imagine that the rishis looked upon them as anything else than the offspring of their own minds.

I shall arrange the quotations in which the rishis distinctly claim the authorship, according to the particular verb which is employed to express this idea. These verbs are (1) kṛi, "to make," (2) taksh (= the Greek τεκταίνομαι), "to fabricate," and (3) jan, "to beget, generate, or produce," with others which are less explicit.

I. I adduce first the passages in which (1) the verb kṛi, "to make," is applied to the composition of the hymns. (Compare R.V. vii. 61, 6, already quoted in the last section.)

R.V. i. 20, 1. Ayaṁ devāya janmane stomo viprebhir āsayā[12] | akāri ratna-dhātamaḥ |

"This hymn, conferring wealth, has been made to the divine race, by the sages, with their mouth [or in presence of the gods]."

i. 31, 18. Etena Agne brahmaṇā vāvṛidhasva śaktī vā yat te chakṛima vidā vā |

"Grow, o Agni, by this prayer which we have made to thee according to our power, or our knowledge."

i. 47, 2. . . . . Kaṇvāso vām brahma kriṇvanti adhvare teshāṁ su śṛiṇutaṁ havam |

"The Kaṇvas make a prayer to you: hear well their invocation."

i. 61, 16. Evā te hariyojanā suvṛikti Indra brahmāṇi Gotamāsaḥ akran |

"Thus, o Indra, yoker of steeds, have the Gotamas made hymns for thee efficaciously."

[12] See the note on vi. 32, 1, below.

i. 117, 25. Etāni vām Aśvinā vīryāṇi pra pūrvyāṇi āyavaḥ avochan | brahma kṛiṇvanto[13] vṛishaṇā yuvabhyāṁ suvīrāso vidatham ā vadema |

"These, your ancient exploits, o Aśvins, men have declared. Let us, who are strong in bold men, making a hymn for you, o vigorous gods, utter our offering of praise."

i. 184, 5. Eshā vām stomo Aśvināv akāri mānebhir maghavānā suvṛikti |

"This hymn has efficaciously been made to you, o opulent Aśvins, by the Mānas. (Comp. i. 169, 8; 171, 5; 182, 8; 184, 3.)

ii. 39, 8. Etāni vām Aśvinā vardhanāni brahma stomaṁ Gṛitsamadāsaḥ akran |

"These magnifying prayers, [this] hymn, o Aśvins, the Gṛitsamadas have made for you."

iii. 30, 20. Svaryavo matibhis tubhyaṁ viprāḥ Indrāya vāhaḥ Kuśikāsaḥ akran |

"Aspiring to heaven, the sage Kuśikas have made a hymn with praises to thee, o Indra." (The word vāhaḥ is stated by Sāyaṇa to be = stotra, "a hymn.")

iv. 6, 11. Akāri brahma samidhāna tubhyaṁ ityādi |

"O kindled [Agni], a prayer has been made to thee."

iv. 16, 20. Eved Indrāya vṛishabhāya vṛishṇe brahma akarma Bhṛiyavo na ratham | . . . . 21. Akāri te harivo brahma navyaṁ dhiyā syāma rathyaḥ sadāsāḥ |

"Thus have we made a prayer for Indra, the productive, the vigorous, as the Bhṛigus [fashioned] a car. . . . . 21. A new prayer has been made for thee, o lord of steeds. May we, through our hymn (or rite), become possessed of chariots and perpetual wealth."

vi. 52, 2. Ati vā yo maruto manyate no brahma vā yaḥ kriyamāṇaṁ ninitsāt | tapūṁshi tasmai vṛijināni santu brahma-dvisham abhi taṁ śochatu dyauḥ |

"Whoever, o Maruts, regards himself as superior to us, or reviles the prayer which is being made, may burning injuries be his lot; may the sky scorch the enemy of prayer.[14]

[13] The reader will find Prof. Haug's opinion of the sense of this phrase in p. 11 f. of his German dissertation "on the original signification of the word brahma," of which the author has been kind enough to send me a copy, which has reached me as this sheet is passing through the press. Prof. Haug mentions R.V. i. 88, 4; vii. 103, 8, as passages (additional to those I have given) in which the expression occurs.

[14] Translated by Prof. Haug in the Dissertation above referred to, p. 6.

vii. 35, 14. Ādityāḥ Rudrāḥ Vasavo jushanta (the Atharva-veda has jushantām) idam brahma kriyamāṇaṁ navīyaḥ | śṛiṇvantu no divyāḥ pārthivāso gojātāḥ ityādi |

"The Ādityas, Rudras, and Vasus receive with pleasure this new prayer which is being made. May the gods of the air, the earth, and the sky hear us."

vii. 37, 4. Vayaṁ nu te dāśvāṁsaḥ syāma brahma kṛiṇvantaḥ ityādi |

"Let us offer oblations to thee, making prayers," etc.

vii. 97, 9. Iyaṁ vām Brahmaṇaspate suvṛiktir brahma Indrāya vajriṇe akāri |

"Brahmaṇaspati, this efficacious hymn, [this] prayer has been made for thee, and for Indra, the thunderer."

viii. 51, 4. Āyāhi kṛiṇavāma te Indra brahmāṇi varddhanā ityādi |

"Come, Indra, let us make prayers, which magnify thee," etc.

viii. 79, 3. Brahma te Indra girvaṇaḥ kriyante anatidbhutā | imā jushasva haryaśva yojanā yā te amanmahi |

"Unequalled prayers are made for thee Indra, who lovest hymns. Receive favourably, lord of the brown steeds, those which we have thought out for thee, to yoke thy horses."

x. 54, 6. . . . . Adha priyam śūsham Indrāya manma brahmakṛito[15] Vṛihadukthād avāchi |

". . An acceptable and powerful hymn has been uttered to Indra by Vṛihaduktha, maker of prayers."[16]

x. 101, 2. Mandrā kṛiṇudhvaṁ dhiyaḥ ā tanudhvaṁ nāvam aritraparaṇīṁ kṛiṇudhvam |

"Make pleasant (hymns), prepare prayers, make a ship propelled by oars."

It is possible that in many of these passages the verb kṛi may have merely the signification which the word make has in English when we speak of "making supplications," etc., in which case it of course means to offer up, rather than to compose. But this cannot be the case in such passages as R.V. iv. 16, 20 (p. 233), where the rishi speaks of making the hymn as the Bhṛigus made a chariot.[17] And such an interpretation would be altogether inadmissible in the case of the texts which I next proceed to cite.

[15] Compare ṛishayo mantṛakṛito manīshiṇaḥ in Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 8, 8, 5; and R.V. ix. 114, 2: Ṛishe mantra-kṛitāṁ stomaiḥ Kaśyapodvardhayam giraḥ | somaṁ namasya rājanaṁ yo jajne vīrudhām patiḥ | "Ṛishi Kaśyapa, augmenting thy words with the praises of the makers of hymns, reverence King Soma, who was born the lord of plants."

[16] Prof. Haug thinks the word brahma-kṛit here refers to hymns, and mentions other passages in which it occurs: see p. 12 of the Dissertation above referred to.

II. Passages in which the word taksh, "to fashion, or fabricate," is applied to the composition of the hymns.

i. 62, 13. Sanāyate Gotamaḥ Indra navyam atakshad brahma hariyojanāya ityādi |

"Nodhas, descendant of Gotama, fashioned this new hymn for [thee], Indra, who art of old, and who yokest thy steeds," etc.

i. 130, 6. Imāṁ te vāchaṁ vasuyantaḥ āyavo rathaṁ na dhīraḥ svapāḥ atakshishuḥ sumnāya tvām atakshishuḥ |

"Desiring wealth, men have fashioned for thee this hymn, as a skilful workman [fabricates] a car; and thus they have disposed (lit. fashioned) thee to (confer) happiness."

i. 171, 2. Esha vaḥ stomo Maruto namasvān hṛidā tashṭo manasā dhāyi devāḥ |

"This reverential hymn, o divine Maruts, fashioned by the heart, has been presented [or, made] by the mind. [According to Sāyaṇa, the last words mean, 'let it be received by you with a favourable mind']."

ii. 19, 8. Evā te Gṛitsamadāḥ śūra manma avasyavo na vayunāni takshuḥ |

"Thus, o hero, have the Gṛitsamadas, desiring succour, fashioned for thee a hymn, as men make works." (Sāyaṇa explains vayuna by "road.")

ii. 35, 2. Imaṁ su asmai hridaḥ ā sutashṭam mantraṁ vochema kuvid asya vedat |

"Let us address to him this well-fashioned hymn proceeding from the heart; will he not be aware of it?"

v. 2, 11. Etaṁ te stomaṁ tuvi-jāta vipro rathaṁ na dhīraḥ svapāḥ atakshaṁ |

"I, a sage, have fabricated this hymn for thee, o powerful [deity], as a skilful workman fashions a car."

v. 29, 15. Indra brahma kriyamāṇā jushaṣva yā te śavishṭha navyā akarma | vastreva bhadrā sukṛitā vasūyuḥ rathaṁ na dhīraḥ svapāḥ atakshaṁ |

[17] See also v. 29, 15, and x. 39, 14, which will be quoted a little further on; and in which the verbs kṛi and taksh are both employed.

"O mighty Indra, regard with favour the prayers which are made, the new [prayers] which we have made for thee. Desirous of wealth, I have fabricated them like beautiful well-fashioned garments, as a skilful workman [constructs] a car." (Compare R.V. iii. 39, 2; above, p. 226.)

v. 73, 10. Imā brahmāṇi vardhanā Aśvibhyāṁ santu śantamā | yā takshāma rathān iva avochāma bṛihad namaḥ |

"May these magnifying prayers which we have fashioned, like cars, be pleasing to the Aśvins: we have uttered great adoration."

vi. 32, 1 (=S.V. i. 322). Apūrvyā purutamāni asmai mahe vīrāya tavase turāya | virapśine vajriṇe śantamāni vachāṁsi āsā[18] sthavirāya taksham |

"To this great hero, vigorous, energetic, the adorable, unshaken thunderer, I have with my mouth fabricated copious and pleasing prayers, which have never before existed."

vi. 16, 47. Ā te Agne ṛichā havir hṛidā tashṭam bharāmasi |

"In this verse, Agni, we bring to thee an oblation fabricated by the heart." (Comp. R.V. iii. 39, 1, in p. 226.)

vii. 7, 6. Ete dyumnebhir viśvam ātiranta mantraṁ ye vā araṁ naryāḥ atakshan |

"These manly (Vasishthas), who have skilfully fabricated the hymn, have by their energy accomplished all things (?)."

vii. 64, 4. Yo vāṁ garttam manasā takshad etam ūrddhvāṁ dhītiṁ kṛiṇavad dhārayach cha |

"May he who with his mind fashioned for you (Mitra and Varuṇa) this car, make and sustain the lofty hymn." (The same expression ūrddhvā dhītiḥ occurs in R.V. i. 119, 2.)

viii. 6, 33. Uta brahmaṇyā vayaṁ tubhyam pravṛiddha vajrivo viprāḥ atakshma jīvase |

"O mighty thunderer, we, who are sage, have fabricated prayers for thee, that we may live."

x. 39, 14. Etaṁ vāṁ stomam Aśvināv akarma atakshāma Bhṛigavo na ratham | ni amṛikshāma yoshaṇāṁ na maryye nityaṁ na sūnuṁ tanayaṁ dadhānāḥ |

"This hymn, Aśvins, we have made for you; we have fabricated it [18] On the sense of āsā see Prof. Müller's article in the Journal of Roy. As. Soc. for 1867, p. 232 f.; and Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v.

as the Bhrigus [constructed] a car; we have decorated it, as a bride for her husband, continuing the series [of our praises] like an unbroken line of descendants." (See iv. 16, 20, above, p. 233.)

(The following is Sāyaṇa's comment on this passage, for a copy of which I am indebted to Professor Müller: He Aśvinau vāṁ yuvayor etaṁ yathoktaṁ stomaṁ stotraṁ akarma akurma | Tad etad āha | Bhṛigavo na Bhṛigavaḥ iva rathaṁ atakshāma vayaṁ stotram saṁskṛitavantaḥ | karmayogād Ṛibhavo Bhṛigavaḥ uchyante | athavā rathakārāḥ Bhṛigavaḥ | kincha vayaṁ nityaṁ śāśvataṁ tanayaṁ yāgādīnāṁ karmaṇāṁ tanitāraṁ sūnuṁ na aurasaṁ putram iva stotraṁ dadhānāḥ dhārayanto martye manushye nyamṛikshāma yuvayoḥ stutiṁ nitarāṁ saṁskṛitavantaḥ | "Aśvins, we have made this preceding hymn or praise of you. He means to say this. Like the Bhṛigus, we have made a car, we have carefully constructed a hymn. The Ribhus are, in this passage, ... styled Bhṛigus; or Bhṛigus are chariot-makers. Moreover, maintaining praise as a constant perpetuator (like a legitimate son) of sacrifice and other rites, we have polished, i.e. carefully composed a celebration of you among men [?]." In this comment the word yoshaṇā is left unexplained. In verse 12 of this hymn the Aśvins are supplicated to come in a car fleeter than thought, constructed for them by the Ṛibhus—ā tena yātam manaso javīyasā rathaṁ yaṁ vām Ṛibhavaś chakrur Aśvinā | .)

x. 80, 7. Agnaye brahma Ṛibhavas tatakshuḥ |

"The Ṛibhus [or the wise] fabricated a hymn for Agni.

III. I next quote some texts in which the hymns are spoken of as being generated by the rishis. (Comp. R.V. vii. 93, 1, in p. 228.)

iii. 2, 1. Vaiśvānarāya dhishaṇām ṛitāvṛidhe ghṛitaṁ na pūtam Agnaye janāmasi |

"We generate a hymn, like pure butter, for Agni Vaiśvānara, who promotes our sacred rites."

vii. 15, 4. Navaṁ nu stomam Agnaye divaḥ śyenāya jījanam | vasvaḥ kuvid vanāti naḥ |

"I have generated a new hymn to Agni, the falcon of the sky; will he not bestow on us wealth in abundance?"

vii. 22, 9. Ye cha pūrve ṛiṣayo ye cha nūtnāḥ Indra brahmāṇi janayanta viprāḥ |

"Indra, the wise rishis, both ancient and modern, have generated prayers."

vii. 26, 1. Na somaḥ Indram asuto mamāda na abrahmāṇo maghavānaṁ sutāsaḥ | tasmai ukthaṁ janaye yaj jujoshad nṛivad navīyaḥ śṛiṇavad yathā naḥ |

"The soma exhilarates not Indra unless it be poured out; nor do libations [gratify] Maghavan when offered without a prayer. To him I generate a hymn such as may please him, that, after the manner of men, he may hear our new [production]."

vii. 31, 11. . . . . Suvṛiktim Indrāya brahma janāyanta viprāḥ |

"The sages generated an efficacious production and a prayer for Indra."

vii. 94, 1, 2 (=S.V. ii. 266). Iyaṁ vām asya manmanaḥ Indrāgnī pūrvya-stutir abhrād vṛishṭir iva ajani | śṛiṇutaṁ jaritur havam ityādi |

"This excellent praise has been generated for you, Indra and Agni, from the soul of this [your worshipper], like rain from a cloud. Hear the invocation of your encomiast." (Benfey thinks manman, "spirit," is to be understood of Soma, whose hymn, i.e. the sound of his dropping, resembles the falling of rain. The scholiast of the S.V. makes manman = stotṛi, "worshipper".)

viii. 43, 2. Asmai te pratiharyate Jātavedo vicharshaṇe Agne janāmi sushṭutim |

"Wise Agni Jātavedas, I generate a hymn for thee, who receivest it with favour."

viii. 77, 4. Ā tvā ayam arkaḥ ūtaye vavarttati yaṁ Gotamāḥ ajījanan |

"This hymn which the Gotamas have generated, incites thee to succour us."

viii. 84, 4, 5. Śrudhi havaṁ Tiraśchyāḥ Indra yas tvā saparyati suvīryasya gomato rāyaḥ pūrdhi mahān asi | Indra yas te navīyasīṁ giram mandrām ajījanat chikitvin-manasaṁ dhiyam pratnām ṛitasya pipyushīm |

"Hear, Indra, the invocation of Tiraśchī, thy worshipper; replenish him with wealth in strong men and in cattle, for thou art great. Indra (do this for him] who has generated for thee the newest exhilarating hymn, springing from an intelligent mind, an ancient mental product, full of sacred truth."

(These verses occur also in the Sāma-veda ii. 233, 234, and are translated by Professor Benfey, at pp. 230 and 250 of his edition. The hymn referred to in this passage is apparently designated as both new and old. How can it be both? It may have been an old hymn re-written and embellished; ancient in substance, though new in expression.[19] Compare St. John's Gospel, xiii. 34, and the First Epistle of St. John, ii. 7, 8, and iii. 11.)

ix. 73, 2. . . . . madhor dhārābhir janayanto arkam it priyām Indrasya tanvam avīvṛdhan |

"Generating the hymn, they have augmented the beloved body of Indra with the honied streams."

ix. 95, 1 (= S.V. i. 530). . . . . ato matīr janayata svadhābhiḥ |

"Wherefore generate hymns with the oblations." (Professor Benfey makes janayata the 3rd person singular of the imperfect middle, and applies it to Soma.)

x. 7, 2. Imāḥ Agne matayas tubhyaṁ jātāḥ gobhir aśvair abhi gṛiṇanti rādhaḥ |

"These hymns, Agni, generated for thee, celebrate thy bounty in cows and horses."

x. 23, 5, 6, 7. Yo vāchā vivācho mṛidhravāchaḥ purū sahasrā aśivā jaghāna | Tat tad id asya pauṁsyaṁ gṛiṇīmasi pitā iva yas tavishīṁ vāvṛidhe śavaḥ | 6. Stomaṁ te Indra Vimadāḥ ajījanann apūrvyam purutamaṁ sudānave | Vidma hi asya bhojanam inasya yad ā paśuṁ na gopāḥ karāmahe | 7. Mā kir naḥ enā sakhyā viyaushus tava cha Indra Vimadasya cha ṛisheḥ | Vidma hi te pramatiṁ deva jāmi-vad asme te santu sakhyā śivāni |

"5. Who (Indra) with his voice slew many thousands of the wicked uttering confused and hostile cries. We laud his several acts of valour, who, like a father, grew in vigour and strength. 6. For thee, o Indra, who art bountiful, the Vimadas have generated a copious hymn, which never before existed (apūrvya); for we know that it is gratifying to this mighty god, when we attract him hither as a cowherd drives his cattle. 7. Indra, may that friendship of ours never be dissolved, which exists between thee and the rishi Vimada: for we know thy wisdom, o god; may thy friendship be favourable to us, like that of a kinsman."

x. 67, 1. Imām dhiyaṁ sapta-śīrshṇīm pitā naḥ ṛitaprajātām bṛihatīm avindat | turīyaṁ svij janayad viśvajanyo Ayāsyaḥ uktham Indrāya śansan |

[19] As Prof. Aufrecht expresses it: "Gir is opposed to dhī, as form to substance a new utterance, but a primordial homage."

"Our father hath discovered [or invented] this great, seven-headed hymn, born of sacred truth; Ayāsya, friend of all men, celebrating Indra, has generated the fourth song of praise." (In his Lexicon, Roth gives Ayāsya as a proper name; but says it may also be an adjective with the sense of "unwearied.")

x. 91, 14. Kīlālu-pe soma-pṛishṭāya vedhase hṛidā ṡatiṁ janaye chārum Agnaye |

"With my heart I generate a beautiful hymn for Agni, the drinker of nectar, the soma-sprinkled, the wise." (See also R.V. i. 109, 1, 2, which will be quoted below.)

IV. In the following texts the verbal root ṛi, "to move, send forth," etc., used with or without a preposition, is applied to the utterance or (it may even mean) the production of hymns.

i. 116, 1. Nāsatyābhyām barhir iva pravṛinje stomān iyarmi abhriyā iva vātaḥ | yāv arbhagāya Vimadāya jāyāṁ senājuvā ni ūhatuḥ rathena |

"In like manner as I spread the sacrificial grass to the Nāsatyas (Aśvins), so do I send forth to them hymns, as the wind [drives] the clouds; to them (I say), who bore off to the youthful Vimada his bride in a chariot swift as an arrow."

vii. 61, 2. Pra vāṁ sa Mitrā-Varuṇau ṛitāvā vipro manmāni dīrghaśrud iyartti | Yasya brahmāṇi sukratū avāthaḥ ā yat kratvā na śaradaḥ pṛiṇaithe |

"The devout sage, heard afar off, sends forth his hymns to you, o Mitra and Varuna. Do you, mighty gods, receive his prayers with favour, so that for (many) autumns ye may not be satiated with his fervour." (See Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.v. ā + pṛi.)

viii. 12, 31. Imāṁ te Indra sushṭutiṁ vipraḥ iyartti dhītibhiḥ | jāmim padā iva pipratīm pra adhvare |

"In the sacrifice the sage, with praises, sends forth to thee this hymn, which is of kin to thee, and, as it were, supplies the places (of others?)

viii. 13, 26. . . . . Ṛitād iyarmi te dhiyam manoyujam |

". . . . From the sacred ceremony I send forth a prayer which will attract thy heart."

x. 116, 9. Pra Indrāgnibhyāṁ suvachasyām iyarmi sindhāv iva prerayaṁ nāvam arkaiḥ |

"I send forth a [hymn] with beautiful words to Indra and Agni; with my praises I have, as it were, launched a ship on the sea."

(Compare R.V. ii. 42, 1, spoken of Indra in the form of the bird called Kapinjala, a sort of partridge: Iyartti vācham ariteva nāvam | "It sends forth a voice, as a rower propels a boat." See also R.V. x. 101, 2, quoted above, p. 234.)

x. 4, 1. Pra te yakshi pra te iyarmi manma bhuvo yathā vandyo no haveshu | dhanvann iva prapā asi tvam Agne iyakshave pūrave pratna rājan |

"I offer thee worship, I send forth to thee a meditation, that thou mayest be accessible to adoration in our invocations. For thou, Agni, ancient king, art like a trough of water in the desert to the man who longs for thee."

V. In the following passages other verbs are employed to denote the composition or presentation of hymns:

i. 61. 2. Indrāya hṛidā manasā manīshā pratnāya patye dhiyo marjayanta |

"To Indra, the ancient lord, they prepared [or polished] hymns [or ceremonies] with the heart, mind, and understanding."

i. 61, 4. Asmai id u stomaṁ saṁhinomi rathaṁ na tashṭā iva ityādi |

"To him (Indra) I send forth a hymn, as a carpenter a car," etc.

i. 94, 1 (= S.V. i. 66). Imaṁ stomaṁ arhate Jātavedase ratham iva sam mahema manīshayā | bhadrā hi naḥ pramatir asya saṁsadi Agne sakhye mā rishāma vayaṁ tava |

"Let us with our intellect construct (or, send forth) this hymn for the adorable Jātavedas like a car, for his wisdom is favourable to us in the assembly. Agni, in thy friendship may we never suffer." (The root mah means to honour or worship.[20] The reader may compare Benfey's translation.)

There is to be found in the hymns a great multitude of passages in which the rishi speaks of presenting his hymns and prayers to the various deities who are the objects of his worship, without directly claiming for himself the authorship of those compositions. The natural inference to be drawn from the expressions which we shall find to be employed in most of the cases to which I refer, would, I think, be that the personality of the rishi himself was uppermost in his mind, and that he was not conscious that the praises which he was uttering to [20] See, however, the various reading suggested by Böthlingk and Roth s.v. mah + sam and ah + sam.

the gods proceeded from any other source than his own unaided faculties. Of this description are the following texts, which represent a manner of thinking and speaking very prevalent in the hymns:

i. 60, 5. Tam tvā vayam patim Agne rayīṇām praśamsāmo matibhir Gotamāsaḥ |

"We, the Gotamas, praise with hymns thee, Agni, the lord of riches."

i. 77, 5. Eva Agnir Gotamebhir ṛitāvā viprebhir astoshṭa jātavedaḥ |

"Thus has the holy Agni Jātavedas been celebrated by the sage Gotamas."

i. 78, 5. Avochāma Rahūgaṇāḥ Agnaye madhumad vachaḥ | dyumnair abhi pra nonumaḥ |

"We, the Rahūgaṇas, have uttered to Agni honied speech; we incessantly laud him with eulogies."

i. 91, 11. Soma gīrbhis tvā vayaṁ vardhayāmo vacho-vidaḥ | sumṛilīko naḥ āviśa |

"Soma, we who are skilled in speech magnify thee with praises; do thou enter into us, full of kindness."

i. 102, 1. Imāṁ te dhiyam prabhare maho mahīm . . . .

"I present to thee joyfully this great hymn . . . .

i. 183, 6. Atārishma tamasas pāram asya prati vāṁ stomo Aśvināv adhāyi |

"We have crossed over this darkness; a hymn, o Aśvins, has been addressed to you."

iii. 53, 2. Pitur na putraḥ sicham ā rabhe te Indra svādishṭhayā girā śachīvaḥ |

"Powerful Indra, I lay hold of thy skirt (as a son does that of his father), with a very sweet hymn."

iv. 3, 16. Etā viśvā vidushe tubhyaṁ vedho nīthāni Agne niṇyā vachāṁsi | nivachanā kavaye kāvyāni aśaṁsisham matibhir vipraḥ ukthaiḥ |

"Intelligent Agni, to thee, who knowest, [have I uttered] all these songs and mysterious words; to thee, who art a bard, have I, a sage, uttered these hymns, these poems, with meditations and praises."

iv. 32, 12. Avīvṛidhanta Gotamāḥ Indra tve stoma-vāhasaḥ |

"The Gotamas, Indra, bringing hymns to thee, have magnified thee."

v. 11, 5. Tubhya idam Agne madhumattamaṁ vachas tubhyam manīshā iyam astu śaṁ hṛide | Tvāṁ giraḥ sindhum iva avanīr mahīr ā pṛiṇanti śavasā vardhayanti cha |

"Agni, may this sweetest of prayers, may this mental production be pleasant to thy heart. As great rivers fill the ocean, so do the words of praise fill thee, and augment thee with strength."

v. 22, 4. Agne chikiddhi asya naḥ idaṁ vachaḥ sahasya | Taṁ tvā suśipra dampate stomair vardhanti Atrayo gīrbhiḥ śumbhanti Atrayaḥ |

"Vigorous Agni, observe these our words; thee, with the beautiful nose, the lord of the house, the Atris magnify with praises, the Atris decorate with hymns."

v. 45, 4. Sūktebhir vo vachobhir deva-jushtair Indrā nu Agnī avase huvadhyai |

"Let me invoke you for help, o Indra and Agni, with well-spoken words, such as are acceptable to the gods.

vi. 38, 3. Taṁ vo dhiyā paramayā purājām ajaram Indram abhi anūshi arkaiḥ ityādi |

"I adore thee, the ancient, imperishable Indra with an excellent hymn and with praises."

vii. 67, 5. Prāchīm ū devā Aśvinā dhiyam me amṛidhrāṁ sātaye kṛitaṁ vasūyum |

"O divine Aśvins, bring to fulfilment my unwearied prayer which supplicates wealth."

vii. 85, 1. Punīshe vām arakshasam manīshām somam Indrāya Varuṇāya juhvat | ghṛita-pratīkām Ushasaṁ na devīm ityādi |

"Offering soma to Indra and Varuna, I prepare for you twain the sincere hymn, like the goddess Ushas, with glittering face."[21]

viii. 5, 18. Asmākam adya vām ayaṁ stomo vāhishṭho antamaḥ | yuvābhyaṁ bhūtu Aśvinā |

"May this hymn of ours approach near to you, to-day, o Aśvins, and be effectual in bearing you hither."

viii. 8, 8. Kim anye paryāsate asmat stomebhir Aśvinā | putraḥ Kaṇvasya vām ṛishir gīrbhir Vatso avīvṛidhat |

"Aśvins, do others than we sit round you with songs? Vatsa, the son of Kaṇva, has magnified you by his hymns."

viii. 27, 8. Ā pra yāta Maruto Vishṇo Aśvinā Pūshan mākīnayā dhiyā | 11. Idā hi vaḥ upastutim idā vāmasya bhaktaye upa vo viśvavedaso namasyur āsṛikshi |

[21] Compare vi. 8, 1. Vaiśvānarāya matir navyasī śuchiḥ somaḥ iva pavate chārur Agnaye | "A new and bright hymn is purified, like beautiful soma, for Agni Vaiśvānara."

"8. Come, o Maruts, Vishṇu, Aśvins, Pūshan, at my hymn. 11. For now, possessors of all riches, now, in order to obtain wealth, have I, full of reverence, sent forth to you a hymn."

viii. 44, 2. Agne stomaṁ jushasva me vardhasva anena manmanā | prati sūktāni harya naḥ | 22. Uta tvā dhītayo mama giro varddhantu viśvahā | Agne sakhyasya bodhi naḥ | 26. Yuvānaṁ pispatiṁ kaviṁ viśvādam puru-vepasam | Agniṁ śumbhāmi manmabhiḥ |

"2. Agni, receive my hymn: grow by this product of my thought: rejoice in our beautiful words. 22. And may my thoughts and words always augment thee; Agni, think of our friendship. 26. With my mental productions I adorn Agni, the young, the lord of the people, the sage, the all-devouring, the very restless."

x. 42, 1. Astā iva supratarāṁ lāyam asyan bhūshann iva prabhara stomam asmai | vāchā viprās tarata vācham aryo niramaya jaritaḥ some Indram |

"Like an archer discharging his far-shooting arrow, with zeal present the hymn to Indra. Sages, by your song, overcome the song of the enemy; worshipper, arrest Indra at the soma."

x. 63, 17. Eva Plateḥ sūnur avīvṛidhad vo viśve Ādityāḥ Adite manīshī | īśānāso naro amartyena astāvi jano divyo Gayena |

"Thus, all ye Ādityas, Aditi, and ye ruling powers, has the wise son of Plati magnified you. The celestial race has been lauded by the immortal Gaya."

x. 111, 1. Manīshiṇaḥ prabharadhvam manīshām yathā yathā matayaḥ santi nṛiṇam | Indraṁ satyair ā īrayāma kṛitebhiḥ sa hi vīro girvaṇasyur vidānaḥ |

"Sages, present the prayer, according as are the various thoughts of men. Let us by our sincere rites stimulate Indra, for he is a hero, he is wise and loves our songs."

In the following verse, from a hymn in praise of liberality, it is said, though no doubt only figuratively, that the true rishi is the prince who is bountiful to the priesthood.

x. 107, 6. Tam eva ṛishiṁ tam ū brahmāṇam āhur yajñanyaṁ sāmagām ukthaśasam | sa śukrasya tanvo veda tisro yaḥ prathamo dakshiṇayā rarādha |

"He it is whom they call a rishi, a priest, a pious sacrificer, a chaunter of prayers, a reciter of hymns; he it is who knows the three bodies of the brilliant (Agni),—the man who is most prominent in bestowing gifts."

SECT. IV.—Passages of the Rig-veda in which a supernatural character is ascribed to the rishis or the hymns.

In the present section I propose to collect the most distinct indications which I have noticed in the Vedic hymns of any supernatural attributes attaching, in the opinion of the authors, either to the rishis themselves, or to their compositions. We shall see in the course of this enquiry (1) that a certain superhuman character was ascribed by the later rishis, who composed the hymns, to some of their predecessors; (2) that expressions are occasionally employed by the rishis which appear to ascribe their compositions to a divine influence generally; while there is a still more numerous set of texts in which the hymns are attributed in various forms of phraseology to the agency of one or more particular and specified deities; and (3) that there is a considerable number of passages in which a mysterious or magical power is ascribed to the hymns or metres.

I proceed to furnish specimens of these several classes of quotations.

I. I adduce some passages which ascribe a superhuman character or supernatural faculties to the earlier rishis.[22] These are the following:

R.V. i. 179, 2. Ye chid hi pūrve ṛitasāpaḥ āsan sākaṁ devebhir avadann ṛitāni | te chid avāsur ityādi |

"The pious sages who lived of old, and who conversed about sacred truths with the gods, led a conjugal life," etc.

vii. 76, 4. Te id devānāṁ sadhamādaḥ āsann ṛitāvānaḥ kavayaḥ pūrvyāsaḥ | gūḷhaṁ jyotiḥ pitaro anvavindan satyamantrāḥ ajanayann ushāsam |

"They were the associates of the gods, those ancient pious sages. The fathers found out the hidden light; with true hymns they generated the dawn."

x. 14, 15. Yamāya madhumattamaṁ rājne havyaṁ juhotana | idaṁ namaḥ ṛishibhyaḥ pūrvajebhyaḥ pūrvebhyaḥ patkikṛidbhyaḥ |

"Offer to king Yama a most sweet oblation. (Let) this reverence (be paid) to the rishis born of old, who were the earliest guides."

[22] Compare A.V. x. 7, 14, quoted above in p. 3.

The sixty-second hymn of the tenth Maṇḍala contains the following passage regarding the Angirases (see above, p. 223):

1. The Angirases.—x. 62, 1, 3. Ye yajnena dakshiṇayā samaktāḥ Indrasya sakhyam amṛitatvam ānaśa | tebhyo bhadram Angirasaḥ vaḥ astu prati gṛibhṇīta mānavaṁ sumedhasaḥ | 3. Ye ṛitena sūryam arohayan divi aprathayan pṛithivīm mātaram vi ityādi |

"1. Blessings be on you, Angirases, who, sanctified by sacrifice and liberality, attained the friendship of Indra and immortality. Do ye, o sages, graciously receive the man (who addresses you). 3. Ye who by sacrifice caused the sun to ascend the sky; and spread out our mother earth," etc.

This is succeeded by the following verses:

x. 62, 4. Ayaṁ Nābhā vadati valguvo gṛihe deva-putrāḥ ṛishayas tat śṛiṇotana . . . | 5. Virūpāsaḥ id ṛishayas te id gambhīra-vepasaḥ | Angirasaḥ sūnavas te Agneḥ pari jajnire |

"This Nābhan addresses you, brilliant beings, within the house. Hear this, ye rishis, sons of the gods. . . . 5. The Virūpas are rishis, profound in emotion; they are the sons of Angiras; they have been born from Agni."

(The fifth verse is quoted in the Nirukta, xi. 17. See Roth's illustrations of the passage.)[23]

2. Vasishṭha.—A supernatural character is attributed to Vasishṭha also in the following passage (which has been already quoted and illustrated in Vol. I. pp. 318 ff.).

vii. 33, 7 ff. Trayaḥ kṛiṇvanti bhuvanasya retas tisraḥ prajāḥ āryāḥ jyotir-agrāḥ | trayo gharmāsaḥ ushasaṁ sachante sarvān it tān anu vidur Vasishṭhāḥ | 8. Sūryasyeva vakshatho jyotir eshāṁ samudrasyeva mahimā gabhīraḥ | vātasyeva prajavo na anyena stomo Vasishṭhāḥ anu etave vaḥ |

[23] The next verse (which, with the sequel, is quoted in my article "On the relations of the priests to the other classes of Indian society in the Vedic age," Journ. Roy. As. Soc. for 1866, p. 276) is as follows: 6. Ye Agneḥ pari jajnire Virūpāso divas pari | Navagvo nu Dasagvo Angirastamaḥ sachā deveshu mamhate | "The Virūpas who were produced from Agni, from Dyaus,—the Navagva, the Dasagva, who is a most eminent Angiras, lavishes gifts along with the gods." Here the Virūpas would seem rather to be princes than rishis: and the same is the case in the following passage also: iii. 53, 6. Ime bhojāḥ Angiraso Virūpāḥ divas putrāso asurasya vīrāḥ | Viśvāmitrāya dadato maghāni sahasrasāve pra tiranta āyuḥ | "These liberal Virūpas of the race of Angiras, heroic sons of the divine Dyaus (the sky), bestowing gifts on Viśvāmitra at the ceremony with a thousand libations, have prolonged their lives." (See Vol. I. p. 341 f.)

9. Te id ninyam hṛidayasya praketaiḥ sahasra-valśam abhi sancharanti | yamena tatam paṛidhiṁ vayantaḥ apsarasaḥ upa sedur Vasishṭhāḥ | 10. Vidyuto jyotiḥ parisanjihānam Mitrā-Varuṇā yad apaśyatāṁ tvā | tat te janma uta ekaṁ Vasishṭha Agastyo yat tvā viśaḥ ājabhāra | 11. Utāsi Maitrāvaruṇo Vasishṭha Urvaśyāḥ brahman manaso 'dhi jātaḥ | drapsaṁ skannam brahmaṇā daivyena viśve devāḥ pushkare tvā adadanta | 12. Sa praketaḥ ubhayasya pravidvān sahasra-dānaḥ uta vā sadānaḥ | yamena tatam paridhiṁ vayishyan apsarasaḥ pari jajne Vasishṭhaḥ | 13. Satre ha jātāv ishitā namobhiḥ kumbhe retaḥ sisichituḥ samānam | tato ha Mānaḥ udiyāya madhyāt tato jātam ṛishim āhur Vasishṭham |

"7. Three [gods] create the fecundating principle in (all) existences; [there exist] three excellent productions of which light is the first: three fires attend upon the dawn: all these the Vasishṭhas know. 8. The splendour of these [sages] is like the full glory of the sun; their grandeur is profound as that of the ocean; like the swiftness of the wind, your hymns, o Vasishṭhas, cannot be followed by any other bard. 9. Through the intuitions of their hearts they seek out the mystery with a thousand branches. Weaving the envelopment extended by Yama [Agni? see R.V. i. 66, 4] the Vasishṭhas sat near the Apsaras. 10. When Mitra and Varuṇa saw thee quitting the gleam of the lightning, that was thy birth, Vasishṭha, and [thou hadst] one [other], when Agastya brought thee to the people. 11. And, Vasishṭha, thou art the son of Mitra and Varuṇa, born, o priest, from the mind of Urvaśī; all the gods placed thee—the drop fallen through divine contemplation—in the vessel. 12. He the wise, knowing both [worlds?], with a thousand gifts, or with gifts, Vasishṭha, being about to weave the envelopment extended by Yama, was produced from the Apsaras. 13. Born at the sacrifice, and impelled by adorations, they [Mitra and Varuṇa] let the same equal procreative energy fall into the jar; from the midst of this Māna (Agastya) issued forth; from this men say the rishi Vasishṭha was produced."

Two of these verses are quoted in the Nirukta, verse 8, in xi. 20, and verse 11, in v. 14. See also Prof. Roth's Illustrations of that work, p. 64, where he states his opinion that the foregoing verses which describe the miraculous birth of Vasishṭha in the style of the epic mythology, are a later addition to an older hymn. See the note in p. 321 of the First Volume of this work.

The two following passages also have reference to knowledge supernaturally communicated, or favours divinely conferred on Vasishṭha. See Vol. I. p. 325 ff.

vii. 87, 4. Uvācha me Varuṇo medhirāya trir̥iḥ sapta nāmn̥a aghnyā bibhartti | vidvān padasya guhyā na vochad yugāya vipraḥ uparāya śikshan |

"Varuṇa said to me, the intelligent, 'the cow has thrice seven names.' The wise [god], though he knows them, has not declared the mysteries of the word, which he desires to reveal to a later generation."

vii. 88, 4. Vasishṭhāṁ ha Varuṇo nāvi ā adhād r̥ishiṁ chakāra svapāḥ mahobhiḥ | stotāram vipraḥ sudinatve ahnāṁ yād nu dyāvas tatanan yād ushasaḥ |

"Varuṇa took Vasishṭha into the boat; by his mighty acts, working skilfully he (Varuṇa) has made him a rishi; the wise (god) has made him to utter praises in an auspicious time, that his days and dawns may be prolonged." (See Vol. I. p. 325 f.; and compare R.V. x. 101, 2, and x. 116, 9, in pp. 234 and 240, above.)

3. Viśvāmitra.—In one or more of the texts which I shall next produce, a superhuman character is ascribed to Viśvāmitra, if not to the Kuśikas.

iii. 29, 15. Amitrāyudho marutām iva prayāḥ prathamajāḥ brahmaṇo viśvam id viduḥ | dyumnavad brahma Kuśikāsaḥ erire ekaḥ eko dame Agniṁ samīdhire |

"Combating their foes, like hosts of Maruts, (the sages) the first-born of prayer are masters of all knowlege; the Kuśikas have uttered an enthusiastic prayer; each of them has kindled Agni in his house." (See Vol. I. p. 347.)

iii. 43, 5. Kuvid mā gopāṁ karase janasya kuvid rājānam Maghavann r̥ijīshan | kuvid mā r̥ishiṁ papivāṁsaṁ sutasya kuvid me vasvaḥ amr̥itasya śikshāḥ |

"Dost thou not make me a shepherd of the people? dost thou not make me a king, o impetuous Maghavan? dost thou not make me a rishi, a drinker of the soma? wilt thou not bestow upon me imperishable wealth?" (See Vol. I. p. 344.)

iii. 53, 9. Māhan r̥ishir devajāḥ devajūtaḥ astabhnāt sindhum arṇavaṁ nr̥ichakshāḥ | Viśvāmitro yad avahat Sudāsam apriyāyata Kuśikebhir Indraḥ !

"The great rishi (Viśvāmitra), leader of men, god-born, god-impelled, stemmed the watery current. When Viśvāmitra conducted Sudās, Indra was propitiated through the Kuśikas." (See Vol. I. pp. 342. Indra himself is called a Kauśika in R.V. i. 10, 11. See Vol. I. p. 347.)

According to ix. 87, 3, of which Uśanas is the traditional rishi, certain mysterious knowledge is said to have been possessed by that personage:

Ṛishiṛ viprah pura-etā janānām ṛibhur dhīrah Uśanā kāvyena | sa chid viveda nihitaṁ yad āsām apīchyaṁ guhyaṁ nāma gonām |

"A wise rishi, a leader of men, skilful, and prudent, is Uśanas, through his insight as a seer; he has known the hidden mysterious name applied to these cows."

Again in ix. 97, 7, it is said: Pra kāvyam Uśaneva bruvāno devo devānāṁ janimā vivakti |

"Uttering, like Uśanas, the wisdom of a sage, the god (Soma) declares the births of the gods."

In a hymn of the tenth Maṇḍala, the rishis are spoken of as "seeing" the objects of their contemplation in a way which seems to imply a supernatural insight (see above, pp. 116, 118, 125 ff.); in this hymn, x. 72, 1, 2, it is said:

Devānāṁ nu vayaṁ jānā pravochāma vipanyayā | uktheshu śasyamāneshu yaḥ paśyād uttare yuge | Brahmaṇaspatir etā saṁ karmāraḥ iva adhamat | devānām pūrvye yuge asataḥ sad ajāyata |

"Let us, from the love of praise, celebrate in recited hymns the births of the gods,—any one of us who in this later age may see them. Brahmaṇaspati has kindled these births, as a blacksmith [blows a flame]: in the earliest age of the gods, the existent sprang from the non-existent." [24] (See Vol. I. p. 46.)

Another not less decided instance of this use of the verb to see, in the sense of supernatural insight, may be found in the verse of the Vālakhilya already quoted in Vol. II. p. 220, which will be cited below. See also x. 130, 6, which will be quoted further on.

The next two passages speak of the radiance of the rishis.

viii. 3, 3 (= S.V. i. 250, and Vāj. S. 33, 81). Imāḥ u tvā purūvaso [24] The first of these verses is translated by Prof. Benfey in his Glossary to the Sāma-veda, p. 154.

giro vardhantu yāḥ mama | pāvaka-varṇāḥ śuchayo vipaśchitaḥ abhi stomair anūshata |

"Lord of abundant wealth, may these prayers of mine magnify thee! Pure sages of radiant appearance have celebrated thee with hymns."

viii. 6, 10. Aham id hi pituḥ pari medhām ṛitasya jagrabha | aham sūryaḥ iva ajani |

"I have acquired knowledge of the ceremonial from [my] father; I have become like the sun." (Is Indra the father here referred to?)

The following texts, which occur in the last book of the Rig-veda, speak of tapas ("fervour" or "austerity") being practised by the rishis much in the same way as the later epic literature does. This use of the word is not known in the earlier books of the R.V. (See Boehtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, under the word tapas.)

x. 109, 4. Devāḥ etasyām avadanta pūrve sapta ṛishayas tapase ye nisheduḥ |

"The ancient gods spoke of her, the seven rishis who sat down for austere-fervour." (See my article "On the priests of the Vedic age" in the Journ. Roy. As. Soc. for 1866, p. 270.)

x. 154, 2. Tapasā ye anādhṛiśyās tapasā ye svar yayuḥ | tapo ye chakṛire mahas tāṁs chid eva api gachchatāt | 5. Sahasra-nīthāḥ kavayo ye gopāyanti sūryam ṛishīṁs tapasvato Yama tapojān api gachhatāt |

"Let him (the deceased) go to those who through austere-fervour are invincible, who by austere-fervour have gone to heaven, who have performed great austerity. 5. Let him go, Yama, to the sages of a thousand songs who guard the sun (see Wilson, Vish. Pur. vol. ii. pp. 284 ff.), to the devout rishis, born from fervour." (See my article "On Yama" in the Journ. Roy. As. Soc.)

x. 190, 1. Ṛitaṁ cha satyaṁ cha abhīddhāt tapaso adhyajāyata | tato rātrī ajāyata tataḥ samudraḥ arṇavaḥ |

"Right and truth sprang from kindled austerity; thence sprang night, thence the watery ocean."

In x. 167, 1, it is even said that Indra attained heaven by austerity:

Tvaṁ tapaḥ paritapya ajayaḥ svaḥ |

"By performing austerity thou didst conquer heaven."

In some places the gods are said to possess in the most eminent degree the qualities of rishis, or kavis. This may possibly imply, e converso, that the rishis were conscious of a certain affinity with the divine nature, and conceived themselves to participate in some degree in the superior wisdom and knowledge of the deities.

R.V. i. 31, 1. Tvam Agne prathamo Angirāḥ ṛishir devo devānām abhavaḥ śivaḥ sakhā ityādi | 2. Tvam Agne prathamo Angirastamaḥ kavir devānām paribhūshasi vratam |

"1. Thou, Agni, the earliest rishi Angiras, a god, hast been the auspicious friend of the gods. . . . . 2. Thou, Agni, the earliest and most Angiras-like sage, administerest the ceremonial of the gods."

i. 66, 2. . . . Ṛishiṁ na stubhvā vikshu praśastaḥ ityādi |

"Like a rishi, who praises [the gods], he (Agni) is famous among the people," etc.

iii. 21, 3. . . . Ṛishiḥ śreshṭhaḥ samidhyase yajnasya pra avitā bhava |

"Thou, Agni, the most eminent rishi, art kindled; be the protector of the sacrifice."

v. 29, 1. . . . Archanti tvā marutaḥ pūta-dakshās tvam eshām ṛishir Indra asi dhīraḥ |

"The Maruts, endowed with pure dispositions, worship thee; thou, Indra, art their wise rishi." (Sāyaṇa, however, here renders ṛishi by drashṭā, "beholder.")

vi. 14, 2. Agnir id hi prachetāḥ Agnir vedhastamaḥ ṛishiḥ |

"Agni is wise; Agni is a most sage rishi."

viii. 6, 41. Ṛishir hi pūrvajā asi ekaḥ īśanaḥ ojasā | Indra choshkūyase vasu |

"Thou art an anciently-born rishi, who alone rulest by thy might; Indra thou lavishest riches."

viii. 16, 7. Indro brahmā Indraḥ ṛishir Indraḥ puru puru-hūtaḥ | mahān mahībhiḥ śachībhiḥ |

"Indra is a priest, Indra is a rishi, Indra is much invoked; he is great through his great powers."

ix. 96, 18 (= S.V. ii. 526). Ṛishi-manā yaḥ ṛishi-kṛit svarshāḥ sahasranīthaḥ padavīḥ kavīnām |

"Soma, rishi-minded, rishi-maker, bestower of good, master of a thousand songs, the leader of sages," etc.

ix. 107, 7. . . . Ṛishir vipro vichakshaṇaḥ | tvaṁ kavir abhavo devavītamaḥ ityādi |

"A rishi, a sage, intelligent, thou (Soma) wast a poet, most agreeable to the gods," etc.

x. 27, 22. . . . Indrāya sunvad ṛishaye cha śikshat |

". . . Let [men] present libations to Indra, and offerings to the rishi."

x. 112. 9. Ni shu sīda gaṇapate gaṇeshu tvām āhur vipratamaṁ kavīnāṃ | na ṛite tvat kriyate kinchana āre mahām arkam Maghavaṇś chitram archa |

"Sit, lord of multitudes, among our multitudes; they call thee the greatest of sages [or poets]; nothing is done without, or apart from, thee; sing, Maghavan, a great and beautiful hymn."

x. 115, 5. Agniḥ kaṇvatamaḥ kaṇva-sakhā ityādi |

"Agni is the greatest of the Kaṇvas, the friend of Kaṇva," etc.

II. The Vedic rishis, as we have seen, expected to receive from their gods every variety of temporal blessings, strength, long life, offspring, riches, cattle, rain, food, and victory, and they also looked for forgiveness of their offences, and sometimes for exaltation to paradise, to the same benefactors. Hence it would be nothing more than we might have anticipated, if we should further find them asking their different deities to enlighten their minds, to direct their ceremonies, to stimulate their devotion, to augment their powers of poetical expression, and to inspire them with religious fervour for the composition of their hymns. I think the following passages will justify this expectation by showing that the rishis (though, as we have seen, they frequently speak of the hymns as their own work) did also sometimes entertain the idea that their prayers, praises, and ceremonies generally, were supernaturally suggested and directed. One of the modes (if not the most important) in which this idea is expressed is, as we shall discover, the personification of speech under different appellations. The following are the passages to which I refer: they are—

First, such as refer to the gods generally:

R.V. i. 37, 4. Pra vaḥ śardhāya ghṛishvaye tvesha-dyumnāya śushmiṇe | brahma devattaṁ gāyata |

"To your vigorous, overpowering, energetic, host [of Maruts] sing the god-given prayer."

S.V. i. 299. Tvashṭā no daivyaṁ vachaḥ Parjanyo Brahmaṇaspatiḥ | putrair bhrātṛibhir Aditir nu pātu no dushṭaram trāmaṇaṁ vachaḥ |

"May Tvashṭri, Parjanya, and Brahmaṇaspati [prosper] our divine utterance: may Aditi with her [?] sons and brothers prosper our invincible and protective utterance."

In the next passage, the hymn or prayer is spoken of as inconceivable.

R.V. i. 152, 5. Achittam brahma jujushur yuvānaḥ ityādi |

"The youths received with joy the incomprehensible prayer," etc.

In R.V. x. 20, 10, Vimada, a rishi, is connected with the immortals:

Agne Vimado manīshām ūrjonāpād amṛitebhiḥ sajoshāḥ giraḥ āvakshat sumatīr iyānaḥ ityādi |

"O Agni, son of strength, Vimada, united with the immortals, hastening, has brought to thee a product of thought, and beautiful hymns."

In the two following texts the gods are said to have generated the hymn or prayer:

x. 61, 7. . . . Svādiṣṭho ajanayan brahma devāḥ Vāstoshpatiṁ vratapāṁ niratakshan |

"The thoughtful gods generated prayer: they fashioned Vastoshpati the protector of sacred rites."

x. 88, 8. Sūkta-vākam prathamam ād id Agnim ād id havir ajanayanta devāḥ | sa eshāṁ yajno abhavat tanūpāḥ tam dyaur veda tam pṛithivī tam āpaḥ |

"The gods first generated the hymn, then Agni, then the oblation. He was their sacrifice, the protector of their life. Him the Sky, the Earth, and the Waters know."

In the latter of the two following verses, Vāch (speech) is said to be divine, and to have been generated by the gods. Though speech is here spoken of generally, and nothing is said of the hymns, still these may have already come to be connected with her in the minds of the Vedic bards, as they were afterwards regarded as her most solemn and important expression.

R.V. viii. 89, 10. Yad vāg vadantī avichetanāni rāshṭrī devānāṁ nishasāda mandrā | chatasraḥ ūrjaṁ duduhe payāṁsi kva svid asyāḥ paramaṁ jagāma | 11. Devīṁ vācham ajanayanta devās tāṁ viśvarūpāḥ paśavo vadanti | sā no mandrā isham ūrjaṁ duhānā dhenur vāg asmān upa sushṭutā ā etu |

"When Vāch, speaking unintelligible things, queen of the gods, sat down, melodious, she milked forth sustenance and waters towards the four quarters: whither has her highest element departed? The gods generated the divine Vāch; animals of all kinds utter her; may this melodious cow Vāch, who yields us nourishment and sustenance,—approach us, when we celebrate her praises.

The last verse (as well as R.V. viii. 90, 16, which will be quoted below), derives some illustration from the following passage of the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, p. 982 (p. 251 English transl.), in which also Vāch is designated as a cow:

Vāchaṁ dhenum upāsīta | tasyāś chatvāraḥ stanāḥ svāhā-kāro vashaṭ-kāro hanta-kāraḥ svadhā-kārah | tasyāḥ dvau stanau devāḥ upajīvanti svāhā-kāram cha vashaṭ-kāraṁ cha hanta-kāram manushyāḥ svadhā-kāram pitaraḥ | tasyāḥ prāṇaḥ rishabho mano vatsaḥ |

"Let a man worship the cow Vāch. She has four udders, the formulæ svāhā, vashat, hanta, and svadhā. The gods live upon her two udders, svāhā and vashaṭ; men upon hanta; and the fathers upon svadhā. Breath is her bull; the mind, her calf."

The two verses, R.V. viii. 89, 10, and 11, occur in the Nirukta, xi. 28, 29. Roth (in his Illustrations of that work), p. 152, says the unintelligible utterance of Vāch in verse 10, means thunder. Whether this be the case, or not, the word appears to have a more general signification in the next verse, and to refer to speech in general, personified as a divine being. The speech which all the animals utter cannot of course be thunder.

In some of the preceding verses of this hymn there is a curious reference made to some sceptical doubts regarding the existence of Indra; which I quote here, though unconnected with the present subject.

R.V. viii. 89, 3, 4. Pra su stomam bharata vājayantam Indrāya satyaṁ yadi satyam asti | na Indro asti iti nemaḥ u tvaḥ āha kaḥ īm dadarśa kam abhi stavāma | Ayam asmi jaritaḥ paśya mā iha viśvā jātāni abhi asmi mahnā | ṛitasya mā pradiśo varddhayanti ādardiro bhuvanā dardarīmi |

"Present to Indra a hymn soliciting food, a true [hymn] if he truly exists. 'Indra does not exist,' says some one: 'who has seen him? whom shall we praise?' 'I am here, worshipper' [answers Indra]; 'behold me, I surpass all creatures in greatness; the directors of the sacrifice augment me; crushing, I destroy the worlds.'"

Second: the next set of passages which I shall bring forward either refer to Sarasvatī, Vāch, etc. (various names of the goddess of speech, or different personifications of speech, or of prayer), or at least speak of prayer as divine.

R.V. i. 3, 11, 12. Chodayitrī sūnṛitānāṁ chetantī sumatīnām | yajñaṁ dadhe Sarasvatī | . . . . dhiyo viśvā virājati |

"Sarasvatī, who furthers our hymns, and who is cognizant of our prayers, has sustained our sacrifice. . . . . She enlightens all intellects."

i. 22, 10. Ā gnāḥ Agne iha avase Hotrāṁ yavishṭha Bhāratīm | Varūtrīṁ Dhishaṇāṁ vaha |

"Bring here, youthful Agni, to our help, the wives [of the gods], Hotrā, Bhāratī, Varūtrī, and Dhishaṇā."

(Varūtrī, "the eligible," may be merely an epithet of Dhishaṇā which, according to Sāyaṇa, at least, is = vāg-devī, "the goddess of speech.")

i. 31, 11. Iḷām akṛiṇvan manushasya śāsanīm ityādi |

"The gods made Iḷā to be the instructress of men." (See Professor Wilson's note on this passage, p. 82 of his translation of the R.V. vol. i.)

ii. 3, 8. Sarasvatī sādhayantī dhiyaṁ naḥ Iḷā devī Bhāratī viśvatūrttiḥ | Tisro devīḥ svadhayā barhir edam achhidram pāntū śaraṇaṁ nishadya |

"May Sarasvatī, perfecting our hymn, may the divine Iḷā, and the all-pervading Bhāratī; may these three goddesses, seated on the place of sacrifice, preserve by their power the sacrificial grass uninjured." (See Prof. Müller's translation of part of the verse in the Journ. Roy. As. Soc. for 1867, vol. iii. p. 224.)

iii. 18, 3. . . . . Yāvad īśe brahmaṇā vandamānaḥ imāṁ dhiyaṁ śataseyāya devīm |

"Worshipping thee with a prayer according to the best of my power, in this divine hymn, to obtain unbounded wealth."

iv. 43, 1. Ka u śravat katamo yajniyānāṁ vandāru devaḥ katamo jushāte | kasya imāṁ devīm amṛiteshu preshṭhāṁ hṛidi śreshyāma sushṭutiṁ suhavyām |

"Who will hear us? which of all the objects of adoration? which of all the gods will be gratified by our praises? In the heart of whom among the immortals can we lodge this our divine and dearest hymn of praise and invocation?"

vii. 34, 1. Pra śukrā etu devī manīshā asmat sutashṭo ratho na vājī |

"May prayer, brilliant and divine, proceed from us, like a well-fabricated chariot drawn by steeds."

vii. 34, 9. Abhi vo devīṁ dhiyaṁ[25] dadidhvam pra vo devatrā vāchaṁ kṛiṇudhvam |

[25] Compare the same phrase dhiyam devīm in A.V. iii. 15, 3, and daivyā vāchā in A.V. viii. 1, 3.

"Receive towards you the divine hymn; proclaim the song for yourselves among the gods."

viii. 27, 13. Devaṁ devaṁ huvema vājasātaye gṛiṇanto devyā dhiyā |

"Let us invoke each of the gods to bestow riches, praising them with a divine hymn."

viii. 90, 16. Vacho-vidaṁ vācham udīrayantīṁ viśvālhir dhībhir upatishṭhamānām | devīṁ devebhyaḥ pari eyushīṁ gām ā mā avṛikta marttyo dabhrachetāḥ |

"Let not any mortal of little intelligence do violence to the cow, the divine Vāch, who is skilled in praise, who utters her voice aloud, who arrives with all the hymns, and who has come from the gods."

ix. 33, 5. Abhi brahmīr anūshata yahvīr ṛitasya mātaro marmṛijyante divaḥ śiśum |

"The great and sacred mothers of the sacrifice have uttered praise: they decorate the child of the sky."

x. 71, 1. Bṛihaspate prathamaṁ vācho agraṁ yat prairata nāmadheyaṁ dadhānāḥ | yad eshāṁ śreshṭhaṁ yad aripram āsīt preṇā tad eshāṁ nihitaṁ guhā āviḥ | 2. Saktum iva titaunā punanto yatra dhīrāḥ manasā vācham akrata | atra sakhāyaḥ sakhyāni jānate bhadrā eshāṁ lakshmīr nihitā adhi vāchi | 3. Yajnena vāchaḥ padavīyam āyan tām anvavindann ṛishishu pravishṭām | tām ābhṛitya vyadadhuḥ purutrā tāṁ sapta rebhāḥ abhi sannavante | 4. Uta tvaḥ paśyan na dadarśa vācham uta tvaḥ śṛiṇvan na śṛiṇoti enām | uto tvasmai tanvaṁ visasre jāyeva patye uśatī suvāsāḥ | 5. Uta tvaṁ sakhye sthirapītam āhur nainaṁ hinvanty api vājineshu | adhenvā charati māyayā esha vāchaṁ śuśruvān aphalām apushpām | 6. Yas tityāja sachi-vidaṁ sakhāyaṁ na tasya vāchi api bhāgo asti | yad īṁ śṛiṇoti alakaṁ śṛiṇoti na hi praveda sukṛitasya panthām |

"1. When, o Bṛihaspati, men sent forth the first and earliest utterance of Vāch (speech), giving a name (to things), then all which was treasured within them, the most excellent and spotless, was disclosed through love. 2. Wherever the wise,—cleansing, as it were, meal with a sieve,—have uttered speech with intelligence, there friends recognize [their] friendly acts; an auspicious fortune is impressed upon their speech. 3. Through sacrifice they followed the track of Vāch, and found her entered into the rishis: [26] taking, they divided her into many portions: her the seven poets celebrate. 4. One man, seeing, sees not [26] See the use made by S'ankara of this text, above, p. 105.

Vāch; another, hearing, hears her not; to another she discloses her form, as an elegantly attired and loving wife displays her person to her husband. 5. They say that one man has a sure defence in [her] friendship; men cannot overwhelm him even in the conflicts (of discussion); but that man consorts with an unprofitable delusion who has [only] heard speech [Vāch] which is [to him] without fruit or flower. 6. He who has abandoned his discerning friend, has no portion in Vāch; whatever he hears he hears in vain; he knows not the path of virtue."

The second, fourth, and fifth verses of this obscure hymn are quoted in the Nirukta, iv. 10; i. 19, 20; and are explained in Professor Roth's Illustrations. Verses 2 and 4 are also quoted and interpreted in the Mahābhāshya; see pp. 30 and 31 of Dr. Ballantyne's edition. The verse which is of most importance for my present purpose, is, however, the third, which speaks of Vāch having "entered into the rishis." See the First Volume of this work, pp. 254 f. The idea of Vāch being divided into many portions will be found again below in R.V. x. 125, 3.

x. 110, 8 (=Vāj. S. 29, 33). Ā no yajnam Bhāratī tūyam etu Iḷā manushvad iha chetayantī | tisro devīr barhir ā idam syonaṁ Sarasvatī svapasaḥ sadantu |

"Let Bhāratī come quickly here to our sacrifice, with Iḷā, who instructs us like Manush [or like a man], and with Sarasvatī: let these three goddesses, skilful in rites, sit down upon this beautiful sacrificial grass."

x. 125, 3. Ahaṁ rāshṭrī sangamanī vasūnāṁ chikitushī prathamā yajniyānām | tām mā devā vyadadhuḥ purutrā bhūristhātrām bhūri āveśayantīm | 4. Mayā so annam atti yo vipaśyati yaḥ prāṇiti ya īṁ śṛiṇoti uktam | amantavo māṁ te upa kshiyanti śrudhi śruta śraddhivaṁ te vadāmi | 5. Aham eva svayam idaṁ vadāmi jushṭaṁ devebhir uta mānushebhiḥ | yaṁ kāmaye taṁ tam ugraṁ kṛiṇomi tam brahmāṇaṁ tam ṛishiṁ taṁ sumedhām |

"3. I am the queen, the centre of riches, intelligent, the first of the objects of adoration: the gods have separated me into many portions, have assigned me many abodes, and made me widely pervading. 4. He who has insight, he who lives, he who hears [my] sayings, eats food through me. These men dwell in my vicinity, devoid of understanding. Listen, thou who art learned, I declare to thee what is worthy of belief. 5. It is even I myself who make known this which is agreeable both to gods and men. Him whom I love I make terrible, [I make] him a priest, [I make] him a rishi, [I make] him intelligent." [27]

x. 176, 2. Pra devañ devyā dhiyā bharata Jātavedasam havyā no vakshad ānushak |

"By divine prayer bring hither Jātaveḍas: may he present our oblations in order."

x. 177, 1. Patangam aktam asurasya māyayā hṛidā paśyanti manasā vipaśchitaḥ | samudre antaḥ kavayo vichakshate marīchīnām padam ichhanti vedhasaḥ | 2. Patango vācham manasā bibhartti tāñ Gandharvo avadad garbhe antaḥ | tāñ dyotamānāñ svaryam manīshām ṛitasya pade kavayo nipānti |

"1. Sages behold with the heart and mind the Bird illuminated by the wisdom of the Asura: the wise perceive him in the (aerial) ocean: the intelligent seek after the abode of his rays. 2. The Bird cherishes speech with his mind: the Gandharva hath uttered her in the womb: the bards preserve in the place of sacred rites this shining and celestial intellect." (See also x. 189, 3, vāk patangāya dhīyate.)

Third: I shall now adduce the passages in which other Vedic deities, whether singly or in concert, are spoken of as concerned in the production of the hymns:

Aditi.—In R.V. viii. 12, 14, Aditi is mentioned as fulfilling this function:

Yad uta svarāje Aditiḥ stomam Indrāya jījanat puru-praśastam ūtaye ityādi |

"When Aditi generated for the self-resplendent Indra a hymn abounding in praises, to supplicate succour," etc.

Agni.—R.V. i. 18, 6, 7.—Sadasaspatim adbhutam priyam Indrasya kāmyam | sanim medhām ayāsisham | yasmād ṛite na siddhyati yajno vipaśchitaś chana | sa dhīnāñ yogam invati |

"6. I have resorted, for wisdom, to Sadasaspati (Agni), the wonderful, the dear, the beloved of Indra, the beneficent; (7) without whom [27] This passage, which is commonly understood of Vāch, occurs also in the Atharva-veda, iv. 30, 2 ff., but with some various readings, as āveśayantaḥ for āveśayantīm, and śraddheyam for śraddhivam, etc. The hymn is translated by Mr. Colebrooke, Ess. i. 32, or p. 16 of Williams and Norgate's edition. Professor Whitney, as I learn from a private communication with which he has favoured me, is of opinion that there is nothing in the language of the hymn which is specially appropriate to Vāch, so as to justify the ascription of it to her as the supposed utterer.

the sacrifice of the wise does not succeed: he promotes the course of our hymns."

iv. 5, 3. Sāma dvi-barhāḥ mahi tigma-bhṛishṭiḥ sahasra-retāḥ vṛishabhas tuvishmān | padaṁ na gor apagūḷhaṁ vividvān Agnir mahyaṁ pra id u vochad manīshām | 6. Idam me Agne kiyate pāvaka aminate gurum bhāraṁ na manma | Bṛihad dadhātha dhṛishatā gabhīraṁ yahvam pṛishṭham prayasā saptadhātu |

"Agni occupying two positions, the fierce-flaming, the infinitely prolific, the vigorous, the powerful, who knows the great hymn, mysterious as the track of a [missing] cow, has declared to me the knowledge [of it]. 6. To me who am feeble, though innoxious, thou, o Agni, the luminous, hast given, as a heavy load, this great, profound, and extensive Pṛishṭha hymn, of seven elements, with efficacious oblations."

iv. 6, 1. Tvaṁ hi viśvam abhi asi manma pra vedhasaś chit tirasi manīshām |

"Thou presidest over all thoughts [or prayers]; thou augmentest the intelligence of the sage."

iv. 11, 3. Tvad Agne kāvyā tvad manīshās tvad ukthā jāyante rādhyāni |

"From thee, Agni, are generated poetic thoughts; from thee the products of the mind; from thee effective hymns."

x. 21, 5. Agnir jāto Atharvaṇā vidad viśvāni kāvyā |

"Agni, generated by Atharvan, is acquainted with all wisdom."

x. 91, 8. . . . . Medhākāraṁ vidathasya prasādhanam Agnim ityādi |

"Agni, the giver of understanding, the accomplisher of sacrifice."

x. 4, 5. Yad vo vayam pramināmo vratāni vidushāṁ devāḥ avidustarāsaḥ | Agnis tad viśvam āpṛiṇāti vidvān yebhir devān ṛitubhiḥ kalpayāti | Yat pākatrā manasā dāna-dakshāḥ na yajnasya manvate martyāsaḥ | Agnis tad hotā kratuvid vijānan yajishṭho devān ṛituśo yajāti |

"When, o [ye] gods, we, the most unwise among the wise, transgress the ordinances of your worship, the wise Agni completes them all, at the stated seasons which he assigns to the gods. When men, devoted to sacrifice, do not, from their ignorance, rightly comprehend the mode of worship, Agni, the skilful sacrificer, and most eminent of priests, knowing the ceremonial, worships the gods at the proper seasons."

(As rites and hymns were closely united in the practice of the early Indians, the latter finding their application at the former; if Agni was supposed to be the director of the one, viz., the oblations, he might easily come to be also regarded as aiding in the production of the other—the hymns. Verse 4 occurs also in the A.V. xix. 59, 1, 2, where, however, āpriṇātu is read instead of āpriṇāti, and in place of the words yebhir devān, etc., at the close of the verse, we have, somaś cha yo brāhmaṇān ā viveśa | "and Soma, who entered into the priests.")

Brahmaṇaspati.—R.V. i. 40, 5, 6. Prā nūnam Brahmaṇaspatir mantraṁ vadati ukthyam | yasmin Indro Varuṇo Mitraḥ Aryamā devāḥ okāṁsi chakrire | Tam id vochema vidatheshu śaṁbhuvam mantraṁ devāḥ anehasam ityādi |

"Brahmaṇaspati (abiding in the worshipper's mouth, according to the scholiast) utters the hymn accompanied with praise, in which the gods, Indra, Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman, have made their abode. Let us utter, gods, at sacrifices, that spotless hymn, conferring felicity." (Roth in his Lexicon considers okas to mean "good pleasure," "satisfaction." See also his Essay on Brahma and the Brāhmans, Journal of the Germ. Or. Soc. i. 74.)

Bṛihaspati.—R.V. ii. 23, 2. Usrāḥ iva sūryo jyotishā maho viśveshām ij janitā brahmaṇām asi |

"As the sun by his lustre instantly generates rays, so art thou (Bṛihaspati) the generator of all prayers."

x. 36, 5. Ā Indro barhiḥ sīdatu pinvatām Iḷā Bṛihaspatiḥ sāmabhir ṛikvo archatu |

"Let Indra sit upon the sacred grass; let Iḷā abound in her gifts; let the bard Bṛihaspati offer praise with hymns."

Gandharva.—According to Professor Roth (see under the word in his Lexicon) the Gandharva is represented in the Veda as a deity who knows and reveals the secrets of heaven, and divine truths in general; in proof of which he quotes the following texts:

R.V. x. 139, 5. Viśvāvasur abhi tad no gṛiṇātu divyo Gandharvo raṇaso vimānaḥ | Yad vā ghā satyam uta yad na vidma dhiyo hinvāno dhiyaḥ id naḥ avyāḥ

"May the celestial Gandharva Viśvāvasu, who is the measurer of the atmosphere, declare to us that which is true, or which we know not. May he stimulate our hymns, and may he prosper our hymns.

A.V. ii. 1, 2. Pra tad voched amṛitasya vidvān Gandharvo dhāma paramaṁ guhā yat |

"May the Gandharva, who knows the (secret of) immortality, declare to us that supreme and mysterious abode."

Indra.—R.V. iii. 54, 17. Mahat tad vaḥ kavayaś chāru nāma yad ha devāḥ bhavatha viśve Indre | sakhā Ṛibhubhiḥ puruhūta priyebhir imāṁ dhiyaṁ sātaye takshata naḥ |

"Great, o sage deities, is that cherished distinction of yours, that ye are all associated with Indra. Do thou, much invoked (Indra), our friend, with the beloved Ribhus, fabricate (or dispose) this hymn for our welfare." (This may merely mean that Indra was asked to give a favourable issue to the prayer of the worshipper, not to compose his hymn for him. See Roth's Lexicon, under the word taksh, 3.)

vi. 62, 3. Tvaṁ kaviṁ chodayaḥ arkasātāv ityādi |

"Thou (Indra) didst stimulate the poet in the composition of his hymns," etc. (Sāyaṇa renders arkasātau, "for the sake of finding food.")

vi. 18, 15. Kṛishva kṛitno akṛitaṁ yat te asti ukthaṁ navīyo janayasva yajnaiḥ |

"Energetic (Indra), do what thou hast never yet done; generate a new hymn with the sacrifices."

vi. 34, 1. Saṁ cha tve jagmur giraḥ Indra pūrvīr vi cha tvad yanti vibhvo manīshāḥ |

"Many hymns are congregated in thee, o Indra, and numerous products of the mind issue from thee." (This half-verse has been already quoted in p. 227.)

vi. 47, 10. Indra mṛiḷa mahyaṁ jīvātum ichcha chodāya dhiyam ayaso na dhārām | Yat kincha ahaṁ tvāyur idaṁ vadāmi taj jushasva kṛidhi mā devavantam |

"O Indra, gladden me, decree life for me, sharpen my intellect like the edge of an iron instrument. Whatever I, longing for thee, now utter, do thou accept; give me divine protection." (Compare with the word chodaya the use of the word prachodayāt in the Gāyatrī, R.V. iii. 62, 10, which will be given below.)

vii. 97, 3. Tam u namasā havirbhiḥ suśevam Brahmaṇaspatiṁ gṛiṇīshe | Indraṁ śloko mahi daivyaḥ sishaktu yo brahmaṇo devakṛitasya rājā | 5. Tam ā no arkam amṛitāya jushṭam ime dhāsur amṛitāsaḥ purājāḥ ityādi |

"3. I invoke with reverence and with offerings the beneficent Brahmaṇaspati. Let a great and divine song celebrate Indra, who is king of the prayer made by the gods. 5. May these ancient immortals make this our hymn acceptable to the immortal," etc.

viii. 13, 7. Pratna-vaj janaya giraḥ śṛiṇudhi jaritur havam |

"As of old, generate hymns; hear the invocation of thy worshipper."

viii. 52, 4. Sa pratnathā kavi-vṛidhaḥ Indro vākasya vakshaṇiḥ |

"Indra was of old the promoter of the poet, and the augmenter of the song."

viii. 78, 6. Yaj jāyathā apūrvya Maghavan Vṛittra-hatyāya, | tat pṛithivīm aprathayas tad asṭabhnāḥ uta dyām | 7. Tat te yajno ajāyata tad arkaḥ uta haskṛitiḥ | tad viśvam abhibhūr asi yaj jātaṁ yach cha jantvam |

"When, o unparalleled Maghavan, thou wast born to slay Vṛittra, thou didst then spread out the earth (the broad one) and sustain the sky: then thy sacrifice was produced, then the hymn, and the haskṛiti: (since) then thou surpassest everything that has been, or shall be, born."

Here therefore the hymn is asserted to be as old as Indra; though nothing more need be meant than that hymns then began to be produced. The hymn in which this verse occurs is not necessarily meant.

x. 112, 9. Ni shu sīda gaṇapate gaṇeshu tvām āhur vipratamaṁ kavīnām | na ṛite tvat kriyate kiṁchana āre mahām arkam Maghavan chitram archa |

"Lord of assemblies, sit amid our multitudes; they call thee the wisest of poets. Nothing is done without, or apart from thee; sing, o Maghavan, a great and beautiful hymn." (Already quoted in p. 252.)

Indra and Vishṇu.—R.V. vi. 69, 2. Yā viśvāsāṁ janitārā matīnām Indrā-Vishṇū kalaśā soma-dhānā | Pra vāṁ giraḥ śasyamānāḥ avantu pra stomāso gīyamānāsaḥ arkaiḥ |

"Indra and Vishṇu, ye who are the generators of all hymns, who are the vessels into which soma is poured, may the praises which are now recited gratify you, and the songs which are chaunted with encomiums."

Indra and Varuṇa.—The following passage is not, properly speaking, a portion of the Rig-veda, as it is part of one of the Vālakhilyas or apocryphal additions (described in Vol. II. p. 210), which are found inserted between the 48th and 49th hymns of the 8th Maṇḍala. From its style, however, it appears to be nearly as old as some parts of the R.V.

xi. 6. Indrāvaruṇā yad ṛishibhyo manīshāṁ vācho matiṁ śrutam adattam agre | yāni sthānāny asṛijanta dhīrāḥ yajnaṁ tanvānās tapasā 'bhyapaśyam |

"Indra and Varuṇa, I have seen through austere-fervour that which ye formerly gave to the rishis, wisdom, understanding of speech, sacred lore, and all the places which the sages created, when performing sacrifice." (See Vol. II. p. 220.)

The Maruts.—R.V. viii. 78, 3. Pra vaḥ Indrāya bṛihate Maruto brahma archata |

"Sing, Maruts, your hymn to the great Indra." (Compare verse 1, of the same hymn, and the words brahmakṛitā Mārutena gaṇena in iii. 32, 2.)

Pūshan.—R.V. x. 26, 4. Maṁsīmahi tvā vayam asmākaṁ deva Pūshan matīnāṁ cha sādhanam viprāṇāṁ cha ādhavam |

"We have called thee to mind, divine Pūshan, the accomplisher of our hymns, and the stimulator of sages." (The first clause of this, however, may merely mean that the god gives effect to the wishes expressed in the hymns. Compare vi. 56, 4: Yad adya tvā purushṭuta bravāma dasra mantumaḥ | tat su no manma sādhaya | "Accomplish for us the (objects of the) hymn, which we utter to thee to-day, o powerful and wise god."

Savitṛi.—R.V. iii. 62 (= S.V. ii. 812, and Vāj. S. iii. 35). Tat Savitur varenyam bhargo devasya dhīmahi | dhiyo yo naḥ prachodayāt |

"We have received that excellent glory of the divine Savitṛi; may he stimulate our understandings [or hymns, or rites]."

(This is the celebrated Gāyatrī, the most sacred of all the texts in the Veda. See Colebrooke's Misc. Ess. i. pp. 29, 30, 127, and 175; or pp. 14, 15, 78, and 109 of Williams and Norgate's ed. Benfey (S.V. p. 277) translates the Gāyatrī thus: "May we receive the glorious brightness of this, the generator, of the god who shall prosper our works." On the root from which the word dhīmahi is derived, and its sense, see also Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s.vv. dhā and dhī; and compare my article "On the Interpretation of the Veda," Journ. Roy. As. Soc. p. 372.

The Linga Purāṇa (Part II. sec. 48, 5 ff., Bombay lithographed ed.) gives the following "varieties" of the Gāyatrī, adapted to modern Śaiva worship:

Gāyatrī-bhedāḥ | Tatpurushāya vidmahe vāg-viśuddhāya dhīmahi | Tan naḥ Śivaḥ prachodayāt | Gaṇāmbikāyai vidmahe karma-siddhyai cha dhīmahi | Tan no Gaurī prachodayāt | Tatpurushāya vidmahe Mahā- devāya dhīmahi | Tan no Rudraḥ prachodayāt | Tatpurushāya vidmahe Vaktratuṇḍāya dhīmahi | Tan no Dantiḥ prachodayāt | Mahāsenāya vidmahe vāg-viśuddhāya dhīmahi | Tan naḥ Skandaḥ prachodayāt | Tīkshṇaśṛiṇgāya vidmahe Vedapādāya dhīmahi | Tan no Vṛishaḥ pracodayād ityādi |

"1. We contemplate That Purusha, we meditate[28] him who is pure in speech; may That Śiva stimulate us. 2. We contemplate Gaṇāmbikā, and we meditate Karmasiddhi (the accomplishment of works); may That Gaurī stimulate us. 3. We contemplate That Purusha, and we meditate Mahādeva; may that Rudra stimulate us. 4. We contemplate That Purusha, and we meditate Vaktratuṇḍa (Ganeśa); may That Danti (the elephant) stimulate us. 5. We contemplate Mahāsena (Kārtikeya, and we meditate him who is pure in speech; may That Skanda stimulate us. 6. We contemplate Tīkshṇaśṛinga (the sharp-horned), and we meditate the Veda-footed; may Vṛisha (the bull) stimulate us."

Soma.—R.V. vi. 47, 3. Ayam me pītaḥ udiyartti vācham ayam manīshām uśatīm ajīgaḥ |

"This [soma], when drunk, stimulates my speech [or hymn]; this called forth the ardent thought."

It may be said that this and the other following texts relating to Soma, should not be quoted as proofs that any idea of divine inspiration was entertained by the ancient Indian bards, as they can mean nothing more than that the rishis were sensible of a stimulating effect on their thoughts and powers of expression, produced by the exhilarating draughts of the juice of that plant in which they indulged. But the rishis had come to regard Soma as a god, and apparently to be passionately devoted to his worship. See the Second Volume of this work, pp. 470 ff., and especially pp. 474, 475; and my account of this deity in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society for 1865, pp. 135 ff.

Compare what is said of the god Dionysus (or Bacchus) in the Bacchæ of Euripides, 294:

Μάντις δ' ὁ δαίμων ὅδε· τὸ γὰρ βακχεύσιμον
Καὶ τὸ μανιῶδες μαντικὴν πολλὴν ἔχει.
Ὅταν γὰρ ὁ θεὸς εἰς τὸ σῶμ' ἔλθῃ πολύς,
Λέγειν τὸ μέλλον τοὺς μεμηνότας ποιεῖ.

[28] I retain here this sense of the word, which is probably the most commonly received.

"And this deity is a prophet. For Bacchic excitement and raving have in them much prophetic power. For when this god enters in force into the body, he causes those who rave to foretell the future."

R.V. viii. 48, 3. Apāma somam amṛitāḥ abhūma aganma jyotir avidāma devān | kiṁ nūnam asmān kṛiṇavad arātiḥ kim u dhūrttir amṛita martyasya |

"We have drunk the soma, we have become immortal, we have entered into light, we have known the gods; what can an enemy now do to us? what can the malice of any mortal effect, o immortal god?"[29]

(This passage is quoted in the commentary of Gauḍapāda on the Sānkhya Kārikā, verse 2, and is translated (incorrectly as regards the last clause), by Prof. Wilson, in p. 13 of his English version.)

A curious parallel to this last Vedic text is to be found in the satirical drama of Euripides, the Cyclops, 578 ff.; though there, of course, the object is merely to depict the drunken elevation of the monster Polyphemus:

Ὁ δ' οὐρανός μοι συμμεμιγμένος δοκεῖ
Τῇ γῇ φέρεσθαι, τοῦ Διός τε τὸν θρόνον
Λεύσσω τὸ πᾶν τε δαιμόνων ἁγνὸν σέβας.

"The sky, commingled with the earth, appears
To whirl around; I see the throne of Jove,
And all the awful glory of the gods."

R.V. ix. 25, 5. Arusho janayan giraḥ Somaḥ pavate āyushag Indraṁ gachchan kavikratuḥ |

"The ruddy Soma, generating hymns, with the powers of a poet (or with the understanding of a sage), united with men, is purified, resorting to Indra."

ix. 76, 4. . . . . Pitā matīnām asamashṭa-kāvyaḥ |

"[Soma] father of our hymns, of incomparable wisdom."

ix. 95, 2. Hariḥ sṛijānaḥ pathyām ṛitasya iyartti vācham ariteva nāvam | devo devānāṁ guhyāni nāma āvishkṛiṇoti barhishi pravāche |

[29] This text may be versified as follows:

We've quaffed the soma bright,
And are immortal grown;
We've entered into light,
And all the gods have known.
What foeman now can harm,
Or mortal vex us, more?
Through thee, beyond alarm,
Immortal god, we soar.

"The golden [Soma] when poured out along the path of the ceremony, sends forth his voice, as a rower propels a boat. A god, he reveals the mysterious natures of the gods to the bard upon the sacred grass." (See R.V. ii. 42, 1, and x. 116, 9, quoted in p. 240.)

ix. 96, 5 (= S.V. ii. 293–5). Somaḥ pavate janitā matīnāṁ janitā divo janitā pṛithivyēḥ | janitā Agner janitā sūryasya janitā Indrasya janitā uta Vishṇoḥ | 6. Brahmā devānām padavīḥ kavīnām ṛishir viprāṇām mahisho mṛigāṇām | śyeno gṛidhrāṇāṁ svadhitir vanānāṁ Somaḥ pavitram ati eti rebhan | 7. Prāvīvipad vāchaḥ ūrmiṁ na sindhur giraḥ somaḥ pavamāno manīshāḥ ityādi |

"Soma is purified, he who is the generator of hymns, of Dyaus, of Pṛithivī, of Agni, of Sūrya, of Indra, and of Vishṇu. 6. Soma, who is a brāhmăn-priest among the gods (or priests),[30] a leader among the poets, a rishi among sages, a buffalo among wild beasts, a falcon among vultures, an axe amid the forests, advances to the filter with a sound. The purified Soma, like the sea rolling its waves, has poured forth songs, hymns, and thoughts," etc. (See Benfey's translation of this passage in his Sāma-veda, pp. 238 and 253; and Nirukta-pariśishṭa, ii. 12, 13.)

Varuṇa.—R.V. viii. 41, 5, 6. Yo dharttā bhuvanānāṁ yaḥ usrāṇām apīchyā veda nāmāni guhyā | sa kaviḥ kāvyā puru rūpam dyaur iva pushyati . . . . | Yasmin viśvāni kāvyā chakre nābhir ivi śritā ityādi |

"He who is the upholder of the worlds (Varuṇa), who knows the secret and mysterious natures of the cows, he, a sage [or poet], manifests sage [or poetical] works, as the sky does many forms. . . . . In him all sage works abide, as the nave within a wheel," etc. (See R.V. vii. 87, 4, in p. 248, and ix. 95, 2, above, in this page.)

Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman.—R.V. vii. 66, 11. Vi ye dadhuḥ śaradam māsam ād ahar yajnam aktuṁ cha ād ṛicham | anāpyam Varuṇo Mitraḥ Aryamā kshatraṁ rājānaḥ āśata |

"The kings, Varuṇa, Mitra, and Aryaman, who made the autumn, the month, and then the day, the sacrifice, night, and then the Ṛich, possess an unrivalled power." [31]

[30] It appears from Prof. Benfey's note on S.V. ii. 294 (=R.V. ix. 96, 6, quoted here), that the scholiast on that passage makes devānām = ṛitvijām, "priests."

[31] As this verse ascribes the formation of the Ṛich to the gods who are named in it, my remark, in p. 3 above, that the Purusha Sūkta contains "the only passage in

The following passage of the Rig-veda has (as we have seen above, p. 69, note 79, and p. 75) been quoted by Indian commentators and aphorists to prove the eternity of the Veda, on its own authority:

R.V. viii. 64, 6. Tasmai nūnam abhidyave vāchā Virūpa nityayā | vṛishṇe chodasva sushṭutim |.

"Send forth praises, Virūpa, to this heaven-aspiring and prolific Agni, with perpetual voice." (See i. 45, 3, etc., quoted above, p. 220.)

There is, however, no reason whatever to suppose that the words nityayā vāchā mean anything more than perpetual voice. There is no ground for imagining that the rishi entertained any such conception as became current among the systematic theologians of later times, that his words were eternal. The word nitya is used in the same sense "perpetual" in R.V. ix. 12, 7 (= S.V. ii. 55, 2), where it is said of Soma: nitya-stotro vanaspatir dhīnām antar ityādi | "The monarch of the woods, continually-praised, among the hymns," etc., as well as in the two following texts:

R.V. ix. 92, 3.—Somaḥ punānaḥ sadaḥ eti nityam ityādi |

"The pure Soma comes to his perpetual abode [or to his abode continually], etc.

x. 39, 14 (quoted above, p. 236). Nityāṁ na sūnuṁ tanayaṁ dadhānāḥ |

"Continuing the series like an unbroken line of descendants."

The tenor of the numerous texts adduced in this Section seems clearly to establish the fact that some at least of the ancient Indian rishis conceived themselves to be prompted and directed, in the composition of their hymns and prayers, by supernatural aid, derived from various deities of their pantheon. It may add force to the proof derived from these texts, and show that I am the less likely to have misunderstood their purport and spirit, if I adduce some evidence that a similar conception was not unknown in another region of the ancient Indo-European world, and that the expressions in which the early Grecian bards laid claim to an inspiration emanating from the Muses, or from Apollo, were not mere figures of speech, but significant, originally, of a popular belief. Most of the following passages, from Hesiod the hymns of the R.V. in which the creation of the Vedas is described," requires some qualification.

and Homer, in which this idea is enunciated, are referred to in Mr. Grote's History of Greece, i. 478.

Hesiod, Theogony, 22:

Αι νύ ποθ' Ἡσίοδον καλὴν ἐδίδαξαν ἀοιδὴν
Ἄρνας ποιμαίνονθ' Ἑλικῶνος ὕπο ζαθέοιο.
Τόνδε ἥ με πρώτιστα θεαὶ πρὸς μῦθον ἔειπαν,
Μοῦσαι Ὀλυμπιάδες, κοῦραι Διὸς αἰγιόχοιο.
Ποιμένες ἄγραυλοι, κάκ' ἐλέγχεα, γαστέρες οἶον,
Ἴδμεν ψεύδεα πολλὰ λέγειν ἐτύμοισιν ὁμοῖα,
Ἴδμεν δ', εὖτ' ἐθέλωμεν, ἀληθέα μυθήσασθαι.
Ὡς ἔφασαν κοῦραι μεγάλου Διὸς ἀρτιέπειαι·
Καί μοι σκῆπτρον ἔδον, δάφνης ἐριθηλέος ὄζον,
Δρέψασαι θηητόν· ἐνέπνευσαν δέ μοι ἀνδὴν
Θείην, ὡς κλείοιμι τά τ' ἐσσόμενα, πρό τ' ἐόντα,
Καί με κέλονθ' ὑμνεῖν μακάρων γένος αἰὲν ἐόντων,
Σφᾶς τ' ἀυτὰς πρῶτόν τε καὶ ὕστερον αἰὲν ἀείδειν.

"The Muses once conferred the dower
On Hesiod of poetic power,
As underneath the sacred steep
Of Helicon he fed his sheep.
And thus they spake, 'Inglorious race
Of rustic shepherds, gluttons base,
Full many fictions we can weave
Which by their truthlike air deceive;
But, know, we also have the skill
True tales to tell, whene'er we will.'
They spake, and gave into my hand
A fair luxuriant laurel wand;
And breathed into me speech divine,
That two-fold science might be mine;
That future scenes I might unveil,
And of the past unfold the tale.
They bade me hymn the race on high
Of blessed gods who never die;
And evermore begin my lays,
And end them, with the Muses' praise."

Hesiod, Theogony, 94:

Ἐκ γὰρ Μουσάων καὶ ἑκηβόλου Ἀπόλλωνος
Ἄνδρες ἀοιδοὶ ἔασιν ἐπὶ χθόνα καὶ κιθαρισταί,
Ἐκ δὲ Διὸς βασιλῆες.

"The bards who strike the lyre and sing,
From Phœbus and the Muses spring:
From Jove's high race descends the king."

The following are the words in which the author of the Iliad invokes the aid of the Muses, to qualify him for enumerating the generals of the Grecian host (Iliad, ii. 484):

Ἔσπετε νῦν μοι Μοῦσαι Ολύμπια δωμάτ' ἔχουσαι,
Ὑμεῖς γὰρ θεαί ἐστε πάρεστέ τε ἴστε τε πάντα,
Ἡμεῖς δὲ κλέος οἶον ἀκούομεν οὐδέ τι ἴδμεν.

"Tell me the truth, ye Muses, tell,
Ye who on high Olympus dwell;
For, omnipresent, ye can scan
Whate'ever on earth is done by man,
Whilst we vague rumours only learn
And nothing certain can discern."

But the Muses could also take away, as well as impart, the gift of song, as appears from Iliad, ii. 594 ff.:

Ἔνθα τε Μοῦσαι
Ἀντόμεναι Θάμυριν τὸν Θρήϊκα παῦσαν ἀοιδῆς·
Στεῦτο γὰρ ἐυχόμενος νικησέμεν, εἴπερ ἂν ἀυταὶ
Μοῦσαι, ἀείδοιεν, κοῦραι Διὸς αἰγιόχοιο.
Αἱ δὲ χολωσάμεναι πηρὸν θέσαν, ἀυτὰρ ἀοιδὴν
Θεσπεσίην ἀφέλοντο, καὶ ἐκλέλαθον κιθαριστύν.

"'Twas there the Muses, we are told,
Encountered Thamyris of old.
He boasted that the minstrel throng
To him must yield the prize of song;
Yes, even although, among the rest,
The Muses should the palm contest.
Aware of his presumption, they
Both took his skill in song away,
And power to wake the tuneful lyre;—
And struck him blind, in vengeful ire."

The following passages from the Odyssey refer to Demodocus, the bard who sang at the court of Alcinous, King of the Phæacians (Odyssey, viii. 43 ff.):

Καλέσασθε δὲ θεῖον ἀοιδόν,
Δημόδοκον· τῷ γάρ ῥα θεὸς περὶ δῶκεν ἀοιδήν,
Τέρπειν, ὅππῃ θυμὸς ἐποτρύνῃσιν ἀείδειν.

"And go, the bard divine invite:—
The god hath given him skill
By song all others to delight,
Whenever he may will.

Odyssey, viii. 62 ff.:

Κῆρυξ δ' ἐγγύθεν ἦλθεν ἄγων ἐριήρον ἀοιδὸν·
Τὸν περὶ Μοῦσ' ἐφίλησε δίδου δ' ἀγαθόν τε κακόν τε, Ὀφθαλμῶν μὲν ἄμερσε δίδου δ' ἡδεῖαν ἀοιδήν.

"The herald came, and within him brought
The bard whom all with longing sought.
The Muse's darling, he had good
As well as ill from her received;
With power of dulcet song endued,
But of his eyesight too bereaved."

Here the Muse is described as the arbitress of the bard's destiny in other points besides the gift and withdrawal of song.

Odyssey, viii. 73:

Μοῦσ' ἄρ' ἀοιδὸν ἀνῆκεν ἀειδέμεναι κλέα ἀνδρῶν κ.τ.λ.

"Stirr'd by the Muse the bard extoll'd
In song the deeds of warriors bold."

A little further on, Ulysses says of Demodocus (Odyssey, viii. 479 ff.):

Πᾶσι γὰρ ἀνθρώποισιν ἐπιχθονίοισιν ἀοιδοὶ
Τιμῆς ἔμμοροί εἰσι καὶ αἰδοῦς, ὕνεκ' ἄρα σφέας
Ὄιμας Μοῦσ' ἐδίδαξε, φίλησε δὲ φῦλον ἀοιδῶν.

"All mortal men with awe regard,
And honourably treat, the bard;
Because the Muse has taught him lays,
And dearly loves his tuneful race."

And again he addresses him thus (Odyssey, viii. 487):

Δημόδοκ', ἔξοχα δή σε βροτῶν αἰνίζομ' ἁπάντων.
Ἢ σέ γε Μοῦσ' ἐδίδαξε Διὸς πᾶις, ἢ σέ γ' Ἀπόλλων.
Λίην γὰρ κατὰ κόσμον Ἀχαιῶν ὄιτον ἀείδεις, κ.τ.λ.

"Demodocus, beyond the rest
Of mortals I esteem thee blest.
For thee, the Muse, Jove's child, has taught,
Or Phœbus in thee skill has wrought;
So perfectly thou dost relate
The story of the Argives' fate." [32]

Phemius, the Ithacan minstrel, thus supplicates Ulysses to spare his life (Odyssey, xxii. 345 ff.):

Αὐτῷ τοι μετόπισθ' ἄχος ἔσσεται, ἔικεν ἀοιδόν
Πέφνης, ὅς τε θεοῖσι καὶ ἀνθρώποισιν ἀείδω.
Αὐτοδίδακτος δ' εἰμί, θεὸς δέ μοι ἐν φρεσὶν ὅτιμας Παντοίας ἐνέφυσεν.

"Thou soon wilt grieve, if thou the bard shouldst slay,
To gods as well as men who pours his lay.
Self-taught I am; and yet within my mind
A god hath gendered strains of every kind."

[32] "That is," says Mr. Grote, "Demodocus has either been inspired as a poet by the muse, or as a prophet by Apollo, for the Homeric Apollo is not the god of song. Kalchas, the prophet, receives his inspiration from Apollo, who confers upon him the same knowledge, both of past and future, as the Muses give to Hesiod." But does not this passage (Odyssey viii. 488) rather show that the Homeric Apollo was the god of song, as well as the bestower of prophetic intuition; and do we not learn the same from Iliad, i. 603? In any case, it is quite clear from Theog. 94, quoted above, that Hesiod regarded Apollo in this character.

The early Greeks believed that the gift of prophecy also, as well as that of song, was imparted by the gods to mortals. This appears both from Hesiod, as already quoted, and from the following passage of Homer (Iliad, i. 69):

Κάλχας Θεστορίδης, οἰωνοπόλων ὄχ' ἄριστος,
Ὃς ἤδη τά τ' ἐόντα τά τ' ἐσσόμενα, πρό τ' ἐόντα,
Καὶ νήεσσ' ἡγήσατ' Ἀχαιῶν Ἴλιον ἔισω,
Ἧν διὰ μαντοσύνην, τήν οἱ πόρε Φοῖβος Ἀπόλλων.

"Of augurs wisest, Calchas knew
Things present, past, and future too.
By force of that divining skill,
Vouchsafed to him by Phœbus' will,
The Grecian fleet he safely bore
From Aulis' bay to Ilion's shore."

It is thus argued by Mr. Grote that the early Greeks really believed in the inspiration of their bards by the Muses (History of Greece, i. 477 ff.):

"His [the early Greek's] faith is ready, literal and uninquiring, apart from all thought of discriminating fact from fiction, or of detecting hidden and symbolized meaning: it is enough that what he hears be intrinsically plausible and seductive, and that there be no special cause to provoke doubt. And if indeed there were, the poet overrules such doubts by the holy and all-sufficient authority of the Muse, whose omniscience is the warrant for his recital, as her inspiration is the cause of his success. The state of mind, and the relation of speaker to hearers, thus depicted, stand clearly marked in the terms and tenor of the ancient epic, if we only put a plain meaning upon what we read. The poet — like the prophet, whom he so much resembles — sings under heavenly guidance, inspired by the goddess to whom he has prayed for her assisting impulse. She puts the words into his mouth and the incidents into his mind; he is a privileged man, chosen as her organ, and speaking from her revelations. As the Muse grants the gift of song to whom she will, so she sometimes in her anger snatches it away, and the most consummate human genius is then left silent and helpless. It is true that these expressions, of the Muse inspiring and the poet singing a tale of past times, have passed from the ancient epic to compositions produced under very different circumstances, and have now degenerated into unmeaning forms of speech; but they gained currency originally in their genuine and literal acceptation. If poets had from the beginning written or recited, the predicate of singing would never have been ascribed to them; nor would it ever have become customary to employ the name of the Muse as a die to be stamped on licensed fiction, unless the practice had begun when her agency was invoked and hailed in perfect good faith. Belief, the fruit of deliberate inquiry, and a rational scrutiny of evidence, is in such an age unknown; the simple faith of the time slides in unconsciously, when the imagination and feeling are exalted; and inspired authority is at once understood, easily admitted, and implicitly confided in."

If we extend our researches over the pages of Homer, we shall speedily discover numerous other instances of a belief in divine interference in human affairs, not merely (1) in the general government of the world, in the distribution of good and evil, and the allotment of the diversified gifts, intellectual, moral, and physical, which constitute the innumerable varieties of human condition, but also (2) in the way of special suggestion, guidance, encouragement, and protection, afforded to individuals.

Illustrations of the general control exercised by the gods over the fortunes of mankind may be found in the following passages of the Iliad,—xiii. 730 ff., and of the Odyssey,—i. 347 f.; iv. 236 f.; vi. 188 f.; viii. 167–175; xvii. 218, 485 ff.

The following are illustrations of the special interference of the gods on behalf of their favourites: Iliad, i. 194 ff., 218; iii. 380 ff.; v. 1 ff.; vii. 272; xiii. 60 f., 435; xvi. 788 ff.:—Odyssey, i. 319 ff.; iii. 26 ff.; xiv. 216 f., 227; xvi. 159 ff.[33] Of the latter class of passages, I quote two specimens.

Odyssey, i. 319 ff.:

Ἡ μὲν ἄρ ὣς εἰποῦσ' ἀπέβη γλαυκῶπις Ἀθήνη,
Ὄρνις δ' ὣς ἀνοπαῖα διέπτατο· τῷ δ' ἐνὶ θυμῷ
Θῆκε μένος καὶ θάρσος, ὑπέμνησέν τέ ἑ πατρός
Μᾶλλον ἔτ' ἢ τὸ πάροιθεν· ὁ δὲ φρεσὶν ᾗσι νοήσας
Θάμβησεν κατὰ θυμόν, ὀΐσατο γὰρ θεὸν εἶναι.

"As thus she spake, Athene flew
Aloft, and soared beyond his view.
His soul she filled with force and fire,
And stronger memory of his sire.
Amazed, he felt the inward force,
And deemed a god must be its source."

[33] Compare Prof. Blackie's dissertation on the theology of Homer in the "Classical Museum," vol. vii. pp. 414 ff.

When Telemachus urges his youth and inexperience as a reason for diffidence in approaching Nestor, Minerva says to him (Odyssey, iii. 26):

Τηλέμαχ', ἄλλα μὲν ἀντὸς ἐνὶ φρεσὶ σῇσι νοήσεις,
Ἄλλα δὲ καὶ δαίμων ὑποθήσεται· οὐ γὰρ οἴω
Ὄυ σε θεῶν ἀέκητι γενέσθαι τε τραφέμεν τε.

"Some things thy mind itself shall reach,
And other things a god shall teach;
For born and bred thou ne'er hadst been
Unless they gods had will'd, I ween.

These passages, however, afford only one exemplification of the idea which runs through, and in fact created, the entire mythology of the Greeks, viz. that all the departments of life and of nature were animated, controlled, and governed by particular deities, by whom they were represented, and in whom they were personified.

The Indian mythology,—as is evident to every reader of the Vedas, as well as (to some extent) to the student of the Purāṇas,—is distinguished by the same tendency as the Grecian. Indra, Agni, Vāyu, Savitṛi, Sūrya, and many other gods are nothing else than personifications of the elements, while Vāch or Sarasvatī and some other deities, represent either the divine reason by which the more gifted men were supposed to be inspired, or some mental function, or ceremonial abstraction.

In the later religious history, however, of the two races, the Hellenic and the Indian, there is in one respect a remarkable divergence. Though the priestesses of the different oracles, and perhaps some other pretenders to prophetical intuition, were popularly regarded as speaking under a divine impulse,[34] the idea of inspiration as attaching to poems or other compositions of a religious, didactic, or philosophical character, very soon became extinct. The Greeks had no sacred Scriptures. Although a supernatural character was popularly ascribed to Pythagoras, Epimenides, and Empedocles, the Hellenic philosophers in general spoke and wrote in dependance on their own reason alone. They rarely professed to be guided by any supernatural assistance, or claimed any divine authority for their dogmas.[35] Nor (unless such [34] See Nägelsbach's Nachhomerische Theologie, pp. 173 ff., and Dr. Karl Köhler's Prophetismus der Hebræer und die Mantik der Griechen in ihrem gegenseitigen Verhältniss, (Darmstadt, 1860), pp. 39 ff.

[35] I express myself cautiously here, as a learned friend profoundly versed in the study of Plato is of opinion that there are traces in the writings of that author of a may have been the case at a very late period) was any infallibility claimed for any of them by their successors.

In India, on the other hand, the indistinct, and perhaps hesitating, belief which some of the ancient rishis seem to have entertained in their own inspiration was not suffered to die out in the minds of later generations. On the contrary this belief grew up (as we have seen above, pp. 57–138, and 207 ff.) by degrees into a fixed persuasion that all the literary productions of those early sages had not only resulted from a supernatural impulse, but were infallible, divine, and even eternal. These works have become the sacred Scriptures of India. And in the popular opinion, if not in the estimation of the learned, most Indian works of any importance, of a religious, scientific, or philosophical kind, which were produced at a later period, have come to be regarded as inspired, as soon as the lapse of ages had removed the writers beyond familiar or traditional knowledge, and invested their names with a halo of reverence.

To return from this digression to the inquiry which was being pursued regarding the opinions of the ancient Vedic rishis on the subject of their own inspiration:

How, it will be asked, are we to reconcile this impression which the rishis manifest of being prompted by supernatural aid, with the circumstance, which seems to be no less distinctly proved by the citations made in the preceding section (pp. 232 ff.), that they frequently speak of themselves as having made, fabricated, or generated the hymns, without apparently betraying any consciousness that in this process they were inspired or guided by any extraneous assistance?

In reply to this I will only suggest (1) that possibly the idea of inspiration may not have been held by the earliest rishis, but may have grown up among their successors; or (2) that it may have been entertained by some rishis, and not by others; or again (3), if both ideas claim to supernatural guidance, though by no means to infallibility. See also the mention made of the inspiration ascribed to Pythagoras, in Mr. Grote's Greece, iv. 528, 530; and the notices of Epimenides and Empedocles given by the same author, vol. iii. 112 ff., vol. vii. p. 174, and vol. viii. 465 f.; and compare on the same subjects Bp. Thirlwall's Hist. of Greece, ii. 32 ff., and 155 ff.; and Plato, Legg. i. p. 642. See also Prof. Geddes's Phædo, note P. p. 251, and the passages there referred to; and the Tract of Dr. Köhler, above cited, pp. 60 and 64.

can be traced to the same author, we may suppose that the one notion was uppermost in his mind at one moment, and the other at another; or (4) that he had no very clearly defined ideas of inspiration, and might conceive that the divine assistance of which he was conscious, or which at least he implored, did not render his hymn the less truly the production of his own mind; that, in short, the existence of a human, was not incompatible with that of a superhuman, element in its composition.

The first of these suppositions is, however, attended with this difficulty, that both conceptions, viz., that of independent unassisted composition, and that of inspiration, appear to be discoverable in all parts of the Rig-veda. As regards the second supposition, it might not be easy (in the uncertainty attaching to the Vedic tradition contained in the Anukramaṇī or Vedic index) to show that such and such hymns were written by such and such rishis, rather than by any others. It may, however, become possible by continued and careful comparison of the Vedic hymns, to arrive at some probable conclusions in regard to their authorship, so far at least as to determine that particular hymns should probably be assigned to particular eras, or families, rather than to others. I must, however, leave such investigations to be worked out, and the results applied to the present subject, by more competent scholars than myself.

III. While in many passages of the Veda, an efficacy is ascribed to the hymns, which is perhaps nothing greater than natural religion teaches all men to attribute to their devotions, in other texts a mystical, magical, or supernatural power is represented as residing in the prayers and metres. (See Weber's Vājasaneyi-Sanhitæ specimen, p. 61; and Vol. I. of this work, p. 242.) Some of the following texts are of the latter kind.

Thus in R.V. i. 67, 3, it is said:

Ajo na kshāṁ dadhāra prithivīṁ tastambha dyām mantrebhiḥ satyaiḥ |

"(Agni) who like the unborn, supported the broad earth, and upheld the sky by true prayers."

The following is part of Sāyaṇa's annotation on this verse:

Mantrair divo dhāraṇaṁ Taittirīye samāmnātaṁ | "devāḥ vai ādityasya svarga-lokasya parācho 'tipātād abibhayuḥ | taṁ chhandobhir adṛihan dhṛityā" iti | yadvā satyair mantraiḥ stūyamāno 'gnir dyāṁ tastambha iti |

"The supporting of the sky by mantras is thus recorded in the Taittirīya: 'The gods feared lest the sun should fall down from the heaven; they propped it up by metres.' Or the verse may mean that Agni, being lauded by true mantras, upheld the sky."

See also R.V. i. 96, 2, quoted above, in p. 225, and Ait. Br. ii. 33, cited in the First Volume of this work, p. 180.

i. 164, 25. Jagatā sindhuṁ divi astabhāyad rathantare sūryam pari apaśyat | gāyatrasya samidhas tisraḥ āhus tato mahnā pra ririche mahitvā |

"By the Jagatī metre he fixed the waters in the sky; he beheld the sun in the Rathantara (a portion of the Sāma-veda): there are said to be three divisions of the Gāyatra; hence it surpasses [all others] in power and grandeur."

iii. 53, 12. Viśvāmitrasya rakshati brahma idam Bhāratam janam |

"The prayer of Viśvāmitra protects this tribe of the Bharatas." (See Vol. I. pp. 242 and 342.)

v. 31, 4. Brahmāṇaḥ Indram mahayanto arkair avardhayan Ahaye hantavai u |

"The priests magnifying Indra by their praises, have fortified him for slaying Agni."

Compare the following texts already quoted, iii. 32, 13, p. 226; vi. 44, 13, p. 227; viii. 6, 11, p. 228; viii. 8, 8, p. 243; viii. 44, 12, p. 230; viii. 63, 8, p. 230; x. 67, 13, p. 244; and also i. 10, 5; ii. 11, 2; ii. 12, 14; iii. 34, 1, 2; v. 31, 10; viii. 6, 1, 21, 31, 35; viii. 13, 16; viii. 14, 5, 11; viii. 82, 27; and viii. 87, 8, where a similar power of augmenting, or strengthening, the gods is attributed to the hymns.

v. 40, 6. . . . . Gūḷham sūryaṁ tamasā apavratena turīyeṇa brahmaṇā avindad Atriḥ | 8. . . . . Atriḥ sūryasya divi chakshur ādhāt svarbhānor apa māyāḥ aghukshat | 9. Yaṁ vai sūryaṁ svarbhānus tamasā avidhyad āsurah | Atrayas tam anvavindan na hi anye aśaknuvan |

"Atri, by his fourth prayer, discovered the sun which had been concealed by the hostile darkness. 8. . . . . Atri placed the eye of the sun in the sky, and dispelled the illusions of Svarbhānu. 9. The Atris discovered the sun, which Svarbhānu, of the Asura race, had pierced with darkness; no other could [effect this]." (See Vol. I. of this work, pp. 242 and 469.)

vi. 75, 19. . . . . Devās tam̃ sarve dhūrvantu brahma varma mamāntaram |

"May all the gods destroy him; the prayer is my protecting armour."

vii. 19, 11. Nu Indra śūra stavamānaḥ ūtī brahma-jūtas tanvā vavṛidhasva ityādi |

"Heroic Indra, lauded, and impelled by our prayers, grow in body through (our) aid [or longing]," etc. (Compare viii. 13, 17, 25.)

vii. 33, 3. . . . . Even nu kam̃ dāśarājñe Sudāsam prāvad Indro brahmaṇā vo Vasishṭhāḥ | 5. . . . . Vasishṭhasya stuvataḥ Indraḥ aśrod uruṁ Tritsubhyaḥ akriṇod u lokam |

"Indra has delivered Sūdas in the combat of the ten kings through your prayer, o Vasishṭhas. 5. Indra heard Vasishṭha when he praised, and opened a wide place for the Tritsus." (See Vol. I. pp. 242 and 319.)

viii. 49, 9. Pāhi naḥ Agne ekayā pāhi uta dvitīyayā | pāhi gīrbhis tisṛibhir ūrjāmpate pāhi chatasṛibhir vaso |

"Protect us, Agni, through the first, protect us through the second, protect us, lord of power, through three hymns, protect us through four, thou bright god."

The following passage celebrates the numbers of the metres:

x. 114, 8, 9. Sahasradhā panchadaśāni ukthā yāvad dyāvā-pṛithivī tāvad it tat | Sahasradhā mahimānaḥ sahasram̃ yāvad brahma vishṭhitam̃ tāvatī vāk | 9. Kaś chhandasām̃ yogam āveda dhīraḥ ko dhishnyām prati vācham papāda | kam ṛitvijām̃ ashṭamam̃ śūram āhur harī Indrasya ni chikāya kaḥ svit |

8. "There are a thousand times fifteen ukthas; that extends as far as heaven and earth. A thousand times a thousand are their glorious manifestations; speech is commensurate with devotion. 9. What sage knows the [whole] series [or application] of the metres? Who has attained devotional speech? Whom do they call the eighth hero among priests? Who has perceived the two steeds of Indra?"

(The word dhishnya is said by Yāska, Nirukta, viii. 3, to be = to dhishaṇya, and that again to be = to dhishaṇā-bhava, "springing" from dhishaṇā, "speech," or "sacred speech."

I conclude the series of texts relating to the power of the mantras by quoting the whole of the 130th hymn of the 10th Maṇḍala of the Rig-veda:

1. Yo yajño viśvatas tantubhis tataḥ ekaśataṁ deva-karmebhir āyataḥ |

ime vayanti pitaro ye āyayuḥ pra vaya apa vaya āsate tate | 2. Puṃān enam tanute utkṛiṇatti pumāṃ vi tatne adhi nāke asmin | ime mayūkhāḥ upa shedur ū sadaḥ sāmāni chakrus tasarāṇi otave | 3. Kā āsīt praṃā pratimā kiṁ nidānam ājyam kim āsīt paridhiḥ kaḥ āsīt | chhandaḥ kim āsīt prāugaṁ kim uktham yad devāḥ devaṃ ayajanta viśve | 4. Agner gāyatrī abhavat sayugvā ushṇihayā Savitā sambabhūva | anushṭubhā Somaḥ ukthair mahasvān Bṛihaspater bṛihatī vāchaṃ āvat | 5. Virāṇ Mitrāvaruṇayor abhiśrīr Indrasya trishṭub iha bhāgáḥ ahnaḥ | Viśvān devān jagatī āviveśa tena chāklṛipre ṛishayo manushyāḥ | 6. Chāklṛipre tena ṛishayo manushyāḥ yajne jāte pitaraḥ naḥ purāṇe | paśyan manye manasā chakshasā tān ye imaṁ yajnam ayajanta pūrve | 7. Saha-stomāḥ saha-chhandasaḥ āvṛitaḥ saha-pramāḥ ṛishayaḥ sapta daivyāḥ | pūrveshāṃ panthām anudṛiśya dhīrāḥ anvālebhire rathyo na raśmīn |

"1. The [web of] sacrifice which is stretched on every side with threads,[36] which is extended with one hundred [threads], the work of the gods,—these fathers who have arrived weave it; they sit where it is extended, [saying] 'weave forwards, weave backwards.' 2. The Man stretches it out and spins it, the Man has extended it over this sky. These rays approached the place of sacrifice; they made the Sāma verses the shuttles for the woof. 3. What was the measure [of the ceremonial], what the form, what the type, what the oblation, what the enclosing fuel, what the metre, what the prāuga, and what the uktha, when all the gods sacrificed to the god? 4. The gāyatrī was associated with Āgni; Savitṛi was conjoined with the ushṇihā; and Soma, gladdening (us) through hymns (ukthas), with the anushṭubh; the bṛihatī attached itself to the speech of Bṛihaspati. 5. The virāj adhered to Mitra and Varuṇa; the trishṭubh, a portion of the day (?), [accompanied] Indra. The jagatī entered into the Viśvedevas. By this means human rishis were successful. 6. By this means our human fathers the rishis were successful, when this ancient sacrifice was celebrated. I believe that I behold with my mind, [as] with an eye, those ancients who performed this sacrifice. 7. The seven wise and divine rishis, with hymns, with metres, [with] ritual forms, and according to the prescribed measures, contemplating the path of the ancients, have followed it, like charioteers seizing the reins."

[36] In R.V. x. 57, 2, we find the same word tantu occurring: Yo yajnasya prasādhanas tantur deveshu ātatas tam āhutaṁ naśīmahi | "May we obtain him [Agni] who is offered, who is the fulfiller of sacrifice, who is the thread stretched to the gods." (Comp. the versions given by Prof. Müller in the Journ. R. A. S. for 1866, pp. 449, and 457.) Prof. Roth quotes under the word tantu the following text from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, ii. 4, 2, 6: Ā tantum Agnir divyaṁ tatāna | tvaṁ nas tantur uta setur Agne tvam panthāḥ bhavasi deva-yānaḥ | "Agni has stretched the divine thread. Thou, Agni, art our thread and bridge; thou art the path leading to the gods."

I shall not attempt to explain the meaning and purport of this obscure and mystical hymn, which has been translated by Mr. Colebrooke (Essays, i. 34, 35, or p. 18 of Williams and Norgate's ed.). My object in quoting the verses is to show how the various metres are associated with the different deities, in this primeval and mysterious rite, and how a certain sanctity is thus imparted to them. In verse 7, it will be observed, the rishis are spoken of as seven in number, and as divine. The Atharva-veda (x. 7, 43, 44) gives the second verse somewhat differently from the Rig-veda, as follows: Pumān enad vayati udgṛiṇatti pumān enad vi jabhāra adhi nāke | ime mayūkhāḥ upa tastabhur divaṁ sāmāni chakrus tasarāṇi vātave | "The Man weaves and spins this: the Man has spread this over the sky. These rays have propped up the sky; they have made the Sāma-verses shuttles for the woof."

IV. But whatever may have been the nature or the source of the supernal illumination to which the rishis laid claim, it is quite clear that some among them at least made no pretensions to anything like a perfect knowledge of all subjects, human and divine, as they occasionally confess their ignorance of matters in which they felt a deep interest and curiosity. This is shown in the following texts:

R.V. i. 164, 5. Pākaḥ pṛichchhāmi manasā avijānan devānām enā nihitā padāni | vatse bashkaye adhi sapta tantūn vi tatnire kavayaḥ otavai ū | 6. Achikitvān chikitasaś chid atra kavīn pṛichchhāmi vidmane na vidvān | vi yas tastambha shaḷ imā rajāṁsi ajasya rūpe kim api svid ekam | 37. Na vi jānāmi yad iva idam asmi niṇyaḥ sannaddho manasā charāmi | yadā mā āgan prathamajāḥ ṛitasya ād id vāchaḥ aśnuve bhāgam asyāḥ |

"5. Ignorant, not knowing in my mind, I enquire after these hidden abodes of the gods; the sages have stretched out seven threads for a woof over the yearling calf [or over the sun, the abode of all things]. 6. Not comprehending, I ask those sages who comprehend this matter; unknowing, [I ask] that I may know; what is the one thing, in the form of the uncreated one, who has upheld these six worlds? 37. I do not recognize if I am like this; I go on perplexed and bound in mind. When the first-born sons of sacrifice [or truth] come to me, then I enjoy a share of that word."

I do not attempt to explain the proper sense of these dark and mystical verses. It is sufficient for my purpose that they clearly express ignorance on the part of the speaker. Prof. Wilson's translation of the passages may be compared. Prof. Müller, Anc. Ind. Lit. p. 567, renders verse 37 as follows: "I know not what this is that I am like; turned inward I walk, chained in my mind. When the first-born of time comes near me, then I obtain the portion of this speech."

x. 31, 7. Kiṁ svid vanaṁ kaḥ u sa vṛikshaḥ āsa yato dyāvā-pṛithivī nishṭatakshuḥ | santasthāne ajare itaūtī ahāni pūrvīr ushaso jaranta |

"What was the forest, what the tree, out of which they fashioned heaven and earth, which continue to exist undecaying, whilst days, and many dawns have passed away?"

Compare x. 81, 4, where the first of these lines is repeated and is followed by the words: Manīshiṇo manasā pṛichhata id u tad yad adhyatishṭhad bhuvanāni dhārayan | "Ask in your minds, ye intelligent, what that was on which he took his stand when upholding the worlds;" and see verse 2 of the same hymn.

i. 185, 1. Katarā pūrvā katarā aparā ayoḥ kathā jāte kavayo ko vi veda |

"Which of these two (Heaven and Earth) is the first? which is the last? How were they produced? Who, o sages, knows?"

x. 88, 18. Kati agnayaḥ kati sūryāsaḥ kati ushasaḥ kati u svid āpaḥ | na upaspijaṁ vaḥ pitaro vadāmi pṛichchhāmi vaḥ kavayo vidmane kam |

"How many fires are there? how many suns? how many dawns? how many waters? I do not, fathers, say this to you in jest; I really ask you, sages, in order that I may know."

Compare x. 114, 9, above, p. 227.

x. 129, 5. Tiraśchīno vitato raśmir eshām adhaḥ svid āsīd upari svid āsīt | retodhāḥ āsan mahimānaḥ āsan svadhā avastat prayatiḥ parastāt | 6. Kaḥ addha veda kaḥ iha pravochat kutaḥ ājātā kutaḥ iyaṁ visṛishtiḥ | arvāg devāḥ asya visarjanena atha kaḥ veda yataḥ ābabhūva | 7. Iyaṁ visṛishṭir yataḥ ābabhūva yadi vā dadhe yadi vā na | yaḥ asya adhyakshaḥ parame vyoman so anga veda yadi vā na veda |

5. "Their ray [or cord], obliquely extended, was it below, or was it above? There were generative sources, and there were great powers, svadhā (a self-supporting principle) below, and effort above. 6. Who knows, who hath here declared, whence this creation was produced, whence [it came]? The gods were subsequent to the creation of this universe; who then knows whence it sprang? 7. Whence this creation sprang, whether any one formed it or not,—he who, in the highest heavens, is the overseer of this universe,—he indeed knows, or he does not know."

See the translation of the whole hymn by Mr. Colebrooke in his Essays, i. 33, 34, or p. 17 of Williams and Norgate's ed. See also Prof. Müller's version and comment in pp. 559–564 of his History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature; and my own rendering in the article on the "progress of the Vedic religion towards abstract conceptions of the Deity," in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society for 1865, pp. 345 f.

We have seen (above, p. 62) that a claim is set up (by some unspecified writer quoted by Sāyaṇa) on behalf of the Veda that it can impart an understanding of all things, past and future, subtile, proximate, and remote; and that according to Śankara Āchāryya (on the Brahma-sūtras, i. 1, 3) as cited above, p. 106, the knowledge which it manifests, approaches to omniscience. All such proud pretensions are, however, plainly enough disavowed by the rishis who uttered the complaints of ignorance which I have just adduced. It is indeed urged by Sāyaṇa (see above, p. 64) in answer to the objection, that passages like R.V. x. 129, 5, 6, can possess no authority as sources of knowledge, since they express doubt,—that this is not their object, but that their intention is to intimate by a figure of speech the extreme profundity of the divine essence, and the great difficulty which any persons not well versed in the sacred writings must experience in comprehending it. There can, however, be little doubt that the authors of the passages I have cited did feel their own ignorance, and intended to give utterance to this feeling. As, however, such confessions of ignorance on the part of the rishis, if admitted, would have been incompatible with the doctrine that the Veda was an infallible source of divine knowledge, it became necessary for the later theologians who held that doctrine to explain away the plain sense of those expressions.

It should, however, be noticed that these confessions of ignorance and fallibility are by no means inconsistent with the supposition that the rishis may have conceived themselves to be animated and directed in the composition of their hymns by a divine impulse. But although the two rivals, Vasishṭha and Viśvāmitra, whether in the belief of their own superhuman insight, or to enhance their own importance, and recommend themselves to their royal patrons, talk proudly about the wide range of their knowledge (see above, pp. 246 ff.), it is not necessary to imagine that, either in their idea or in that of the other ancient Indian sages, inspiration and infallibility were convertible or co-extensive terms. The rishis may have believed that the supernatural aid which they had received enabled them to perform what they must otherwise have left unattempted, but that after all it communicated only a partial illumination, and left them still liable to mistake and doubt.

I must also remark that this belief in their own inspiration which I imagine some of the rishis to have held, falls very far short of the conceptions which most of the later writers, whether Vaiśeshika, Mīmānsaka, or Vedāntist, entertain in regard to the supernatural origin and authority of the Veda. The gods from whom the rishis supposed that they derived their illumination, at least Agni, Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa, Soma, Pūshan, etc., would all fall under the category of productions, or divinities created in time. This is clearly shown by the comments of Śankara on the Brahma Sūtras, i. 3, 28, (above, pp. 101 ff.); and is otherwise notorious (see my "Contributions to a knowledge of the Vedic Theogony and Mythology" in the Jl. R. A. S. for 1864, p. 63). But if these gods were themselves created, and even (as we are told in the Rig-veda itself, x. 129, 6, cited in p. 280) produced subsequently to some other parts of the creation, the hymns with which they inspired the rishis, could not have been eternal. The only one of the deities referred to in the Rig-veda as sources of illumination, to whom this remark would perhaps not apply, is Vāch or Sarasvatī, who is identified with the supreme Brahma in the passage of the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad quoted above (p. 208, note 179); though this idea no doubt originated subsequently to the era of the hymns. But it is not to created gods, like Agni, Indra, and others of the same class, that the origin of the Veda is referred by the Vaiśeshikas, Mīmānsakas, or Vedantists. The Vaiśeshikas represent the eternal Īśvara as the author of the Veda (see the passages which I have quoted in pp. 118 ff. and 209). The Mīmānsakas and Vedantists, as we have seen (pp. 70 ff., 99 ff. and 208), either affirm that it is uncreated, or derive it from the eternal Brahma. And even those writers who may attribute the composition of the Veda to the personal and created Brahmā (see pp. 69, 105 f. and 208), with the Naiyāyikas who merely describe it as the work of a competent author (see pp. 116 f. and 209), and the Sānkhyas (see pp. 135 and 208), concur with the other schools in affirming its absolute infallibility. Their view, consequently (unless we admit an exception in reference to Vāch), differs from that of the Vedic rishis themselves, who do not seem to have had any idea, either of their hymns being uncreated, or derived from the eternal Brahma, or of their being infallible.

As regards the relation of the rishis to deities like Indra, it is also deserving of notice that later mythologists represent the former, not only as quite independent of the latter, and as gifted with an inherent capacity of raising themselves by their own austerities to the enjoyment of various superhuman faculties, but even as possessing the power of rivalling the gods themselves, and taking possession of their thrones. See the stories of Nahusha and Viśvāmitra in the First Volume of this work, particularly pp. 310 ff. and 404. Compare also the passages from the Rig-veda, x. 154, 2, and x. 167, 1, quoted above, p. 250, where the rishis are said to have attained to heaven, and Indra to have conquered it, by austere-fervour (tapas).

SECT. V.—Texts from the Upanishads, showing the opinions of the authors regarding their own inspiration, or that of their predecessors.

I shall now adduce some passages from different Upanishads, to show what opinions their authors entertained either in regard to their own inspiration, or that of the earlier sages, from whom they assert that their doctrine was derived by tradition.

I. Śvetāśvatara Up., v. 2 (already quoted above, p. 184). Yo yoniṁ yonim adhitishṭhaty eko viśvāni rūpāṇi yonīś cha sarvāḥ | ṛishiṁ pra sūtaṁ Kapilaṁ yas tam agre jnānair bibharttí jāyamānaṁ cha paśyet |

"He who alone presides over every place of production, over all forms, and all sources of birth, who formerly nourished with various knowledge that rishi Kapila, who had been born, and beheld him at his birth."

II. Śvetāśvatara Up. vi. 21. Tapaḥ-prabhāvād veda-prasādāch cha Brahma ha Śvetāśvataro 'tha vidvān | atyāśramibhyaḥ paramam pavitram provācha samyag ṛishi-sangha-jushṭam |

"By the power of austere-fervour, and by the grace of the Veda, the wise Śvetāśvatara declared perfectly to the men in the highest of the four orders, the supreme and holy Brahma, who is sought after by the company of rishis." (Dr. Röer's translation, p. 68, follows the commentator in rendering the first words of the verse thus: "By the power of his austerity, and the grace of God." This, however, is not the proper meaning of the words veda-prasādāch cha, if the correctess of that reading, which is given both in the text and commentary (Bibl. Ind. p. 372), be maintained. Śankara interprets the words thus: "Veda-prasādāch cha" | kaivalyam uddiśya tad-adhikāra-siddhaye bahu-janmasu samyag ārādhita-parameśvarasya prasādāch cha | "'By the grace of the Veda:' by the grace of the supreme God who had been perfectly adored by him during many births in order to acquire the prerogative of (studying) it (the Veda) in reference to kaivalya (isolation from mundane existence);" and thus appears to recognize this reading.

In the 18th verse of the same section of this Upanishad the Vedas are said to have been given by the supreme God to Brahmā:

Yo Brahmāṇaṁ vidadhāti pūrvaṁ yo vai vedāṁś cha prahiṇoti tasmai | taṁ ha devam ātma-buddhi-prakāśam mumukshur vai śaraṇam aham prapadye |

"Seeking after final liberation, I take refuge with that God, the manifester of the knowledge of himself, who at first created Brahmā and gave him the Vedas."

III. Muṇḍaka Up. i. 1 ff. (quoted above, p. 30, more at length). Brahmā devānām prathamaḥ sambabhūva viśvasya karttā bhuvanasya goptā | Sa brahma-vidyāṁ sarva-vidyā-pratishṭhām Atharvāya jyeshṭha-putrāya prāha |

"Brahmā was born the first of the gods, he who is the maker of the universe and the supporter of the world. He declared the science of Brahma, the foundation of all the sciences, to Atharva, his eldest son."

IV. The Chhāndogya Up. viii. 15, 1, p. 625 ff. concludes as follows: Tad ha etad Brahmā Prajāpataye uvācha Prajāpatir Manave Manuḥ prajābhyaḥ | ācharyya-kulād vedam adhītya yathā vidhānaṁ guroḥ karmātiśeshena 'bhisamāvṛitya kuṭumbe śuchau deśe svādhyāyam adhīyāno

dhārmikān vidadhad ātmani sarvendriyāṇi sampratishṭhāpya ahiṁsan sarva-bhūtāni anyatra tīrthebhyaḥ sa khalv evaṁ varttayan yavad-āyusham Brahma-lokam abhisampadyate na cha punar āvarttate na cha punar āvarttate |

"This [doctrine] Brahmā declared to Prajāpati, Prajāpati declared it to Manu, and Manu to his descendants. Having received instruction in the Veda from the family of his religious teacher in the prescribed manner, and in the time which remains after performing his duty to his preceptor; and when he has ceased from this, continuing his Vedic studies at home, in his family, in a pure spot, communicating a knowledge of duty [to his pupils], withdrawing all his senses into himself, doing injury to no living creature, away from holy places,—thus passing all his days, a man attains to the world of Brahma, and does not return again, and does not return again [i.e. is not subjected to any future births]."

I quote the commencement of Śankara's comment on this passage:

Tad ha etad ātma-jnānaṁ sopakaraṇam om ity etad aksharam ity-ādyaiḥ saha upāsanais tad-vāchakena granthena ashṭādhyāya-lakshaṇena saha Brahmā Hiraṇyagarbhaḥ Parameśvaro vā tad-dvāreṇa Prajāpataye Kaśyapāya uvācha | asāv api Manave sva-putrāya | Manuḥ prajābhyaḥ | ity evam śruty-artha-sampradāya-paramparayā āgatam upanishad-vijnānam adyāpi vidvatsv avagamyate |

"This knowledge of soul, with its instruments, with the sacred monosyllable Om and other formulæ of devotion, and with the book distinguished as containing eight chapters, which sets forth all these topics, [viz. the Chhāndogya Upanishad itself] was declared by Brahmā Hiraṇyagarbha, or by Parameśvara (the supreme God), through his agency, to the Prajāpati Kaśyapa. The latter in his turn declared it to his son Manu, and Manu to his descendants. In this manner the sacred knowledge contained in the Upanishads, having been received through successive transmission of the sense of the Veda from generation to generation, is to this day understood among learned men."

In an earlier passage of the same Upanishad iii. 11, 3 f. (partly quoted in the First Volume of this work, p. 195), we find a similar statement in reference to a particular branch of sacred knowledge (the madhu-jnāna):

3. Na ha vai asmai udeti na nimlochati sakṛid divā ha êva asmai bha-

vati yaḥ etām evam brahmopanishadaṁ veda | 4. Tad ha etad Brahmā Prajāpataye uvācha Prajāpatir Manave Manuḥ prajābhyaḥ | tad etad Uddālakāya Āruṇaye jyeshṭhāya puttrāya pitā brahma uvācha | 5. Idaṁ vāva taj-jyeshṭhāya puttrāya pitā brahma prabrūyāt pṛṇāyyāya vā antavāsine (6) na anyasmai kasmaichaṇa | yadyapy asmai imām adbhiḥ parigṛihītāṁ dhanasya pūrṇāṁ dadyāt etad eva tato bhūyaḥ ity etad eva tato bhūyaḥ iti |

"3. For him who thus knows this sacred mystery, the sun neither rises nor sets, but one day perpetually lasts. 4. This (Madhu-jñāna) was declared by Brahmā to Prajāpati, by Prajāpati to Manu, and by Manu to his descendants. This sacred knowledge was further declared to Uddālaka Āruṇi by his father. 5. Let a father expound it to his eldest son, or to a capable pupil, but to no one else. 6. If any one were to give him this entire earth, which is surrounded by water, full of wealth, this sacred knowledge would be more than that, yes, would be more than that."

Compare Manu, xi. 243, where that Code is said to have been created by Prajāpati (First Volume of this work, p. 394); and Bhagavad Gītā iv. 1, where the doctrine of that treatise is said to have been declared by Kṛishṇa to Vivasvat (the Sun), by Vivasvat to Manu, by him to Ikshvāku, and then handed down by tradition from one royal rishi to another (Vol. I. p. 508).

APPENDIX.

Page 4, line 5.

I have omitted here the verse from the Atharva-veda, xi. 7, 24 (quoted by Professor Goldstücker in his Paṇini, p. 70): Ṛichaḥ sāmāni chhandāṁsi purāṇaṁ yajushā saha | uchchhishṭāj jajnire sarve divi devāḥ diviśritāḥ | "From the leavings of the sacrifice sprang the Rich- and Sāman-verses, the metres, the Purāṇa with the Yajush, and all the gods who dwell in the sky."

Professor Aufrecht has favoured me with the following amendments in my translations in pp. 7 and 8:

Page 7, line 13.

For "the text called sāvitrī [or gāyatrī]" he would substitute "the verse dedicated to Savitṛi."

Page 7, line 16.

For "the mouth of Brahma" he proposes "the beginning of the Veda." (Sir W. Jones translates "the mouth, or principal part of the Veda.")

Page 8, line 8.

For "from Vāch (speech) as their world" he proposes "out of the sphere (or compass) of speech."

Page 8, line 8.

For "Vāch was his: she was created" he proposes "For in creating the Vedas, he had also created Vāch."

Page 8, line 13.

For "He gave it an impulse" he proposes "He touched it."

Page 8, line 16.

For "Moreover it was sacred knowledge, which was created from that Male in front" he proposes "For even from that Male (not only from the waters) Brahma was created first."

Page 8, line 16.

This passage of the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad corresponds to Satapatha Brahmaṇa x. 6, 5, 5.

Page 10, line 2.

"May the brilliant deity," etc., Professor Aufrecht would prefer to translate the second line of the verse, beginning sudevaḥ (p. 9, l. 6 from the foot), "Goodness (the good god) only knows where they put the earth which was thrown up (nirvapaṇa)."

Page 20, line 17.

See Āśvalāyanas Gṛihya Sūtras, pp. 155, and 157 ff.

Page 22, line 13, note 25.

I quote two verses from Manu, of which the second confirms the correctness of the rendering I have given of the words ā ha eva sa nakhāgrebhyas tapyate, and the first illustrates the text of the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka cited in the note: Manu ii. 166. Vedam eva sadā 'bhyasyet tapas tapsyan dvijottamaḥ | vedābhyāso hi viprasya tapaḥ param ihochyate | 167. "Ā haiva sa nakhāgrebhyaḥ" paranañ "tapyate" tapaḥ | yaḥ sragvy api dvijo 'dhīte svādhyāyañ śaktito 'nvaham | "Let a good Brāhman who desires to perform tapas constantly study the Veda; for such study is a Brāhman's highest tapas. 167. That twice-born man who daily studies the Veda to the utmost of his power, even though (luxuriously) wearing a garland of flowers (really) performs the highest tapas to the very extremities of his nails." This verse, it will be observed, quotes verbatim one of the phrases of the Brāhmaṇa, and gives definiteness to its sense by adding the words paramañ tapaḥ. Verses 165 ff. of the same book of Manu prescribe the abstemious mode of life which the student (brahmachārin) is to follow whilst living in his teacher's house. The Mahābhārata, Udyoga-parvan, 1537, thus states the conditions of successful study in general; Sukhārthinaḥ kuto vidyā nāsti vidyārthinaḥ sukham |

sukhārthī vā tyajed vidyām vidyārthī vā tyajet sukham | "How can one who seeks ease acquire science? Ease does not belong to him who pursues science. Either let the seeker of ease abandon science, or the seeker of science abandon ease."

Page 30, line 17.

Compare the lines quoted by the Commentator on Sāṇḍilya's Bhakti-sūtra, 83, p. 60, from the Mahābhārata, Sāntiparvan, Moksha-dharma, verses 13,551 ff.: Sahopanishado vedān ye viprāḥ samyag āsthitāḥ | paṭhanti vidhim āsthāya ye chāpi yatidharmiṇaḥ | tato viśishṭām jānāmi gatim ekāntināṁ nṛiṇām | "I regard the destination of Ekāntins (persons devoted to the One as their end) as superior to that of Brāhmans who perfectly study the Vedas, including the Upanishads, according to rule, as well as to that of those who follow the practices of ascetics (yatis)."

Page 34, line 1.

Perhaps this was scarcely a suitable passage to be quoted as depreciatory of the Veda, as in such a stage of transcendental absorption as is here described all the ordinary standards of estimation have ceased to be recognized.

Page 43, line 10.

With the expression hṛid-akāśa, "the æther of the heart," compare the passage quoted from the Veda in Śankara's commentary on Brahma Sūtra iii. 2, 35 (p. 873): "Yo 'yaṁ vahirdhā purushād ākāśo yo 'yam antaḥ-purushe ākāśo yo 'yam antar-hṛidaye ākāśaḥ | "This æther which is external to a man, this æther which is within a man, and this æther which is within the heart." See also the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad ii. 5, 10 and iii. 7, 12.

Page 44, line 1.

See the Yoga aphorisms i. 2 ff. as cited and explained by Dr. Ballantyne.[1] The second aphorism defines yoga to be "a stoppage of the functions of the mind" (Yogaś chitta-vṛitti-nirodhaḥ). "The mind then abides in the state of the spectator, i.e. the Soul" (tadā drashṭuḥ svarūpe 'vasthānam—Aph. 3). "At other times it takes the form of the functions" (vṛitti-sārūpyam itaratra—Aph. 4). These functions, or modifications (as Dr. Ballantyne translates) are fivefold, and either painful, or devoid of pain, viz. proof, or right notion (pramāṇa), mistake (viparyyaya), groundless imagination (vikalpa), sleep (nidrā), recollection (smṛiti) — Aphorisms 5–11. See also Dr. Ballantyne's Sānkhya Aphorisms, iii. 31 ff.

[1] Two fasciculi only, containing two Pādas and 106 Sūtras, were published at Allahabad in 1852 and 1853; but a continuation of Dr. B.'s work has been commenced in the "Pandit" for Sept. 1868.

Page 57, note 61.

With the subject of this note compare the remarks in p. 108, and the quotations from Dr. Roer and Professor Müller in pp. 173, 175, and 193.

Page 62, note 66.

Professor Cowell does not think that the text is corrupt. He would translate it, "the other pramāṇas, beside śabda, (scil. perception and inference), cannot be even supposed in a case like this" (which refers to such a transcendental object as the existence of an eternal Veda). Sāyaṇa, in his reply to the objector, recapitulates the applicable proofs as śruti, smṛiti, and loka-prasiddhi,—all three only different kinds of testimony, śabda.

Page 63, lines 11 f., and note 68.

Compare pp. 322 f., 329 f., 334 f., and 337 of my article "On the Interpretation of the Veda," in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society for 1866.

Page 84, note 89, and page 180, line 7.

I have been favoured by Professor Cowell with the following note on kālātyayāpadishṭa:

"My Calcutta Pandit considered this fallacy to be the same as that more usually called bādha (cf. too Bhāshāparichchheda, śl. 70, 77, and the Bengali translation, p. 65). Its definition is pakshe sādhyābhāvaḥ. The Tarka-sangraha defines a hetu as bādhita, 'when the absence of what it seeks to prove is established for certain by another proof,' as in the argument vahnir anushṇo dravyatvāt. The essence of this fallacy is that you deny the major, and therefore it does not matter whether you accept the middle term in itself or not. It is involved in the overthrow of the major term. I should translate it the 'precluded argument,' — it might have been plausible if it had not been put out of court by something which settles the point,—it is advanced too late (the pre in '*pre*cluded' expresses the kālātīta of the old name). This corresponds to the account in the Nyāya-sūtra-vṛitti: Kālasya sādhana-kālasyātyaye 'bhāve 'padishṭaḥ prayukto hetur | etena sādhyābhāvapramālakshaṇārtha iti sūchitam | sādhyābhāvanirṇaye sādhanāsambhavāt | Ayam eva bādhitasādhyaka iti gīyate. The Vṛitti goes on to say that you need not prove vyabhichāra (i.e. that your opponent's hetu or middle term goes too far, as in parvato dhumavān vahneḥ where vahni is a savyabhichāro hetuḥ) in order to establish the bādha. I should therefore prefer to translate the passage from the Vedārtha-prakāśa, p. 84, 'your alleged middle-term vākyatva, the possessing the properties of a common sentence, is liable to two objections,—(1) it is opposed by the fact that no author was ever perceived, and (2) it also is precluded by weighty evidence (which proves that your proposed major term is irrelevant).' Sāyaṇa then adds his reasons for each objection,—for the first, in the words from yathā Vyāsa down to upalabdhaḥ; for the second, in the fact that smṛiti and śruti agree in the eternity of the Veda (the pūrvam I suppose refers to p. 3 of the Calcutta printed text), and that even if the Supreme Spirit be the author he is not purushaḥ in the sense in which the objector uses the term. Either way, the major term of the objector's syllogism paurusheya is precluded, bādhita; or, in the technical language of the Nyāya, Sāyaṇa establishes an absence from the minor term (paksha) of the alleged major term (sādhya); and hence no conclusion can be drawn from the proposed syllogism. I may add that I have also looked into Vātsyāyaṇa, but his explanation seems to me an instance of what my Pandit used so often to impress on me, that the modern logic (which such a late mediæval writer as Sāyaṇa follows) is not always that of the Nyāyabhāshya. He makes the error lie in the example, i.e. in the induction; and it is therefore, as Professor Goldstücker says, a 'vicious generalization.'"

Page 88, note 95.

Professor Cowell disagrees with the explanation I have hazarded of the object of the sentence in the text to which this note refers. He thinks that its purport, as shewn by the word vyabhichārāt, is to intimate that the former of the two alternative suppositions would prove too much, as it would also apply to such detached stanzas as the one referred to, of which the author, although unknown to some persons, was not necessarily unknown to all, as his contemporaries no doubt knew who wrote it, and his descendants, as well as others, might perhaps still be aware of the fact. In this case, therefore, we have an instance of a composition of which some persons did not know the origin, but which nevertheless was not superhuman (apaurusheya). This is no doubt the correct explanation.

Page 99, line 1.

The argument in proof of the incompetence of the Śūdras for the acquisition of the highest divine knowledge is contained in Brahma Sūtras i. 3, 34–38. As the subject may possess an interest for any educated persons of this class into whose hands this book may fall in India, I extract the entire discussion of the question:

34. "Śug asya tad-anādara-śravaṇāt tad-ādravaṇāt sūchyate hi" | *yathā manushyādhikāra-niyamam apodya devādīnām api vīdyāsv adhikāraḥ uktas tathaiva dvijāty-adhikāra-niyamāpavādena śūdrasya apy adhikāraḥ syād ity etām āśankāṁ nivarttayitum idam adhikaraṇam ārabhyate | tattra śūdrasya apy adhikāraḥ syād iti tāvat prāptam arthitva-sāmarthyayoḥ sambhavāt | tasmāch "chhūdro yajne 'navaklṛiptaḥ" iti-vach chhūdro vidyāyām anavaklṛiptaḥ iti nishedhāśravaṇāt | yach cha karmasv anadhikāra-kāraṇaṁ śūdrasya anagnitvaṁ na tad vidyāsv adhikārasya apavādakam | na hy āhavanīyādi-rahitena vidyā vedituṁ na śakyate | bhavati cha lingaṁ śūdrādhikārasya upodbalakam | saṁvarga-vidyāyāṁ hi Jānaśrutim Pautrāyaṇaṁ śuśrūshuṁ śūdra-śabdena parāmṛiśati "aha hāre tvā śūdra tava eva saha gobhir astv" iti | Vidura-prabhritayaś cha śūdra-yoni-prabhavāḥ api viśishṭa-vijnāna-sampannāḥ smaryyante | tasmād adhikriyate śūdro vidyāsu | ity evam prāpte brūmaḥ | na śūdrasya adhikāro vedādhyayanābhāvāt | adhīta-vedo hi vidita-vedārtho vedārtheshv adhikriyate | na cha śūdrasya vedādhyayanam asty upanayana-pūrvakatvād vedādhyayanasya upanayanasya cha-varṇa-traya-vishayatvāt | yat tv arthitvaṁ na tad asati sāmarthye 'dhikāra-kāraṇam bhavati | sāmarthyam api na laukikaṁ kevalam adhikāra-kāraṇam bhavati śāstrīye 'rthe śāstrīyasya sāmarthyasya apekshitatvāt śāstrīyasya cha sāmarthyasya adhyayana-nirākaraṇena nirākṛitatvāt | yach cha idaṁ śūdro yajne 'navaklṛiptaḥ iti tad nyāya-pūrvakatvād vidyāyām apy anavaklṛiptatvaṁ dyotayati nyāyasya sādhāraṇatvāt | yat punaḥ saṁvarga-vidyāyāṁ śūdra-

śabda-śravaṇaṁ lingam manyase na tal lingaṁ nyāyābhāvāt | nyāyokter hi linga-darśanaṁ dyotakam bhavati na cha attra nyāyo 'sti | kāmaṁ cha ayaṁ śūdra-śabdaḥ saṁvarga-vidyāyām eva ekasyāṁ śūdram adhikuryyāt tad-vishayatvād na sarvāsu vidyāsu | arthavāda-sthatvāt na tu kvachid apy ayaṁ śūdram adhikarttum utsahate | śakyate cha ayaṁ śudra-śabdo 'dhikṛita-vishaye yojayitum | katham iti | uchyate | "'kam u are enam etat santaṁ sayugvānam iva Rainkam āttha'" (Chāndogya Upanishad, iv. 1, 3.) ity asmād haṁsa-vākyād ātmano 'nādaraṁ śrutavato Jānaśruteḥ Pautrāyaṇasya śug utpede tām ṛishī Rainkaḥ śūdra-śabdena anena sūchayāmbabhūva ātmanaḥ paroksha-jnānasya klyāpanāya itī gamyate jāti-śūdrasya anadhikārāt | katham punaḥ śūdra-śabdena śug utpannā sūchyate iti | uchyate | tad-ādravaṇāt śuciṁ abhidudrāva śuchā vā 'bhidudruve śuchā vā Rainkam abhidudrāva iti śūdrāvayavārtha-sambhavād rūḍhārthasya cha asambhavāt | dṛiśyate cha ayam artho 'syām ākhyāyikāyām |

35. "Kshattriyatva-gateś cha uttarattra Chaitrarathena lingāt" | Itaś cha na jāti-śūdro Jānaśrutir yat-kāraṇam prakaraṇa-nirūpaṇena kshattriyatvam asya uttarattra Chaitrarathena Abhipratāriṇā kshattriyeṇa samabhivyāhārāl lingād gamyate | uttarattra hi saṁvarga-vidyā-vākya-śeshe Chaitrarathir Abhipratārī kshattriyaḥ sankīrttyate | "atha ha Śaunakaṁ cha Kāpeyam Abhipratāriṇaṁ cha Kākshaseniṁ sūdena pariviśyamānau brahmachārī bibhikshe" (Chh. Up. iv. 3, 5) iti | Chaitrarathitvaṁ cha Abhipratāriṇaḥ Kāpeya-yogād avagantavyam | Kāpeya-yogo hi Chaitrarathasya avagataḥ | "etena vai Chaitrarathaṁ Kāpeyāḥ ayājayann" iti samānānvaya-yājināṁ cha prāyeṇa samānānvayāḥ yājakāḥ bhavanti | tasmāch "Chaitrarathir nāma ekaḥ kshattra-patir ajāyata" iti cha kshattra-jātitvāvagamāt kshattriyatvam asya avagantavyam | tena kshattriyeṇa Abhipratāriṇā saha samānāyaṁ vidyāyāṁ sankīrttanaṁ Jānaśruter api kshattriyatvaṁ sūchayati | samānānām eva hi prāyeṇa samabhivyāhārāḥ bhavanti | kshattṛi-preshaṇādy-aiśvaryya-yogāch cha Jānaśruteḥ kshattriyatvāvagatiḥ | ato na śūdrasya adhikāraḥ |

36. "Saṁskāra-parāmarśāt tad-abhāvābhilāpāch cha" | itaś cha na śūdrasyā adhikāro yad vidyā-pradeśeshu upanayanādayaḥ saṁskārāḥ parāmṛiśyante "taṁ ha upaninye" | "'adhīhi bhagavaḥ' iti ha upasasāda" | "brahma-parāḥ brahma-nishṭhāḥ paraṁ Brahma anveshamāṇāḥ 'esha ha vai tat sarvaṁ vakshyati' iti te ha samit-pāṇayo bhagavantam Pippalādam upasannāḥ" iti cha "tān ha anupanīya eva" ity api pradarśitā eva upanayana-prāptir bhavati | śūdrasya cha saṁskārābhāvo

'bhilapyate "śūdraś chaturtho varnaḥ ekajātir" ity ekajātitva-smaraṇena "na śūdre pātakaṁ kinchid ra cha saṁskāram arhati" ity-ādibhiś cha |

37. "Tad-abhāva-nirdhāraṇe cha pravṛitteḥ" | Itaś cha na sūdrasya adhikāro yat satya-vachanena śūdratvābhāve nirdhārite Jābālaṁ Gautamaḥ upanetum anuśāsituṁ cha pravavṛite "na etad abrāhmaṇo vivaktum arhati | samidham somya āhara upa tvā neshye na satyād agāḥ" (Chh. Up. iv. 4, 5) iti śruti-lingāt |

38. "Śravaṇādhyayanārtha-pratishedhāt smṛiteś cha" | Itaś cha na śūdrasya adhikāro yad asya smṛiteḥ śravaṇādhyayanārtha-pratishedho bhavati | veda-śravaṇa-pratishedho veda-dhyayana-pratishedhas tad-artha-jñānānushṭhānayoś cha pratishedhaḥ śūdrasya smaryyate | śravaṇa-pratishedhas tāvad atha asya "vedam upaśṛiṇvatas trapu-jatubhyāṁ śrotra-pratipūraṇam" iti "padyu ha vai etat śmaśānaṁ yat śūdras tasmāt śūdrasamīpe na adhyetavyam" iti cha | ataḥ eva adhyayana-pratishedhaḥ | yasya hi samīpe 'pi na adhyetavyam bhavati sa kathaṁ śrutim adhīyīyata | bhavati cha uchchāraṇe jihvā-chhedo dhāraṇe śarīra-bhedaḥ iti | ataḥ eva cha arthād artha-jñānānushṭhānayoḥ pratishedho bhavati | "na śūdrāya matiṁ dadyād" iti "dvijātīnām adhyayanaṁ ijyā dānam" iti cha | yeshām punaḥ pūrva-kṛita-saṁskāra-vaśād Vidura-dharma-vyādha-prabhṛitīnām jñānotpattis teshāṁ na śakyate phala-prāptiḥ pratibaddhuṁ jñānasya ekāntika-phalatvāt | "śrāvayech chaturo varṇān" iti cha itihāsa-purānādhigame chāturvarṇyādhikāra-smaraṇāt | veda-pūrvakas tu nāsty adhikāraḥ śūdrāṇām iti sthitam |

34. "In the word 'Śūdra' reference is made to his vexation on hearing that disrespectful expression, and to his running up."

"This section is commenced to silence the doubt whether in the same way as it had been denied (above) that the prerogative of acquiring divine knowledge is restricted to men, and affirmed that it extends to the gods, etc., also, the limitation of the same prerogative to twice-born men may not also be questioned, and its extension to Śūdras maintained. The grounds alleged in favour of the Śūdra having this prerogative are that he may reasonably be supposed to have both (a) the desire and (b) the power of acquiring knowledge, and that accordingly (c) the Veda contains no text affirming his incapacity for knowledge, as it confessedly has texts directing his exclusion from sacrifice: and further (d) that the fact of the Śūdra's not keeping up any sacred fire, which is the cause of his incapacity for sacrifice, affords no reason for denying to him the prerogative of gaining knowledge; since it cannot be maintained that it is impossible for a man who is destitute of the āhavanīya and other fires to acquire knowledge. There is also (e) in a Vedic text a sign which confirms the Śūdra's prerogative. For in the passage which treats of the knowledge of the Saṁvarga (Chhāndogya Upanishad, chapter iv. section 1–3) a speaker designates Jānaśruti, descendant of Janaśruta in the third generation, who was desirous of performing service, by the term Śūdra: 'Keep to thyself, o Śūdra, thy necklace and chariot[2] with thy cattle.' (Chh. Up. iv. 2, 2.) And further (f) Vidura and others are spoken of in the Smṛiti as possessed of distinguished knowledge, although they were of Śūdra descent. Consequently the Śūdra enjoys the prerogative of acquiring various sorts of divine knowlege. To this we reply: The Śūdra has no such prerogative, because he cannot study the Veda. For it is the man that studies the Veda, and obtains a knowledge of its contents, who enjoys the prerogative of [access to] those contents. But a Śūdra does not study the Veda, for such study must be preceded by initiation, which again is confined to the three upper castes. As regards (a) the desire of knowledge,—that, in the absence of power, confers no prerogative. And (b) mere secular power does not suffice for the purpose; since scriptural power is necessary in a matter connected with Scripture; and such scriptural power is debarred by the debarring of study. And (c) the passage which declares that a 'Śūdra is incapacitated for sacrifice,' demonstrates his incapacity for knowledge also; since that follows

[2] Such is the sense given to hāretvā by the Commentators, who make it out to be a compound of the words hāra, "necklace," and itvā, "a chariot;" but although itvā might be the nominative of itvan, "going," no such word appears in the lexicons with the sense of "chariot." Besides, the compound seems a very awkward one. Perhaps the word should be separated into ha are tvā; but then there would be no nominative to astu, and it would be difficult to construe tvā, "thee."—Since the above was written, I have been favoured with a note on the passage by Professor Goldstücker. He conjectures that the words should be divided as follows: ahaha are tvā Śūdra tava eva saha gobhir astu; that tvā may be the nominative singular feminine of the Vedic pronoun tva, meaning "some one," and then the sense might be as follows: "O, friend, some woman belongs to thee, Śūdra! Let her be (i.e. come) along with the cows." And Jānaśruti would appear to have understood the word tvā in this sense here supposed, for we find that on hearing the reply of Raikva, he took his daughter to the latter, along with four hundred additional cows and the other gifts; and that on seeing the damsel, Raikva expressed his satisfaction and acceded to the request of her father.—The author of these puzzling words, it seems, intended a pun; and Śaṅkara perhaps gave only one solution of it.

from the rule, which is of general application. As regards the circumstance that in the Vedic text regarding the knowledge of the Saṁvarga, the word Śūdra occurs, which you regard as a sign in favour of your view; it is (d) no sign; because in that passage no rule is laid down. For the discovery of a sign indicates that a rule has been laid down; but in the passage in question there is no such rule. And although it were conceded that [if it were found in a precept regarding the Saṁvarga] the word Śūdra would confer on a man of that caste a prerogative in regard to that particular knowledge alone, (from its being intended for him), although not to all sorts of knowledge, yet as the word occurs [not in precept, but] in an illustrative narrative (arthavāda) it cannot confer on him a prerogative in regard to any knowledge whatever. And in fact this word Śūdra can be applied to a person [of a higher caste] who possessed the prerogative. How? I explain: Vexation (śuk) arose in the mind of Jānaśruti when he heard himself disrespectfully spoken of in these words of the swan: 'Who is this that thou speakest of as if he were Rainka yoked to the chariot?'[3] (Chh. Up. iv. 1, 3). And since a Śūdra does not possess the prerogative of acquiring knowledge, we conclude that it is to this vexation (śuk) that the rishi Rainka referred, for the purpose of shewing his own knowledge of things imperceptible by sense, when he made use of this word Śūdra (Chh. Up. iv. 2, 2, see above). But again, how is it indicated by the word Śūdra that vexation (śuk) arose in his mind? We reply: by 'the running to it [or him]" (tad-ādravaṇāt); i.e. either 'he ran to vexation,' or 'he was assailed by vexation,' or 'in his vexation he resorted to Rainka.' We conclude thus because the sense afforded by the component parts of the word Śūdra is the probable one,[4] whilst the conventional sense of the word Śūdra is here inapplicable. And this is seen to be the meaning in this story.

[3] This appears to allude to the person referred to being found sitting under a chariot (Chh. Up. iv. 1, 8). See p. 67 of Babu Rājendralāl Mittra's translation. This story is alluded to by Professor Weber in his Ind. Stud. ix. 45, note, where he treats Sayugvan as a proper name, and remarks "The Vedānta Sūtras (i. 3, 34, 35), indeed, try to explain away this" (the circumstance of Jānaśruti being called a Śūdra) and of course Śankara in his commentary on them does the same, as well in his explanation of the Chhāndogya Upanishad." I am not, however, by any means certain that the epithet "Śūdra," applied to Jānaśruti by Rainka, is not merely meant as a term of abuse.

[4] The meaning of this is that the word Śūdra is derived from śuch, "vexation," Sūtra 35. "And that Jānaśruti was a Kshattriya is afterwards indicated by what is said of Abhipratārin of the race of Chaitraratha."

"That Jānaśruti was not a S'ūdra appears also from this, that by examining the context he is afterwards found to be a Kshattriya by the sign that he is mentioned along with Abhipratārin of the family of Chaitraratha. For in the sequel of the passage regarding the knowledge of the Saṁvarga mention is made in these words of Abhipratārin Chaitraratha, a Kshattriya: 'Now a Brahmachārin asked alms of Śaunaka of the race of Kapi, and Abhipratārin the son of Kakshasena who were being served at a meal' (Chh. Up. iv. 3, 5). And that Abhipratārin belonged to the family of Chaitraratha is to be gathered from his connection with the Kāpeyas; for the connection of Chaitraratha with the latter has been ascertained by the text: 'The Kāpeyas performed sacrifice for Chaitraratha." Priests of the same family in general officiate for worshippers belonging to the same family. From this, as well as from the text: 'From him a lord of Kshat-

and dru, "to run." (See the First Volume of this work, p. 97, note 192.) Even the great S'ankara, it seems, was unable to perceive the absurdity of such etymologies. In his commentary on the Chhāndogya Upanishad the same writer tells us that various explanations had been given of the employment of the word S'ūdra in this passage: Nanu rājā 'sau kshattṛi-sambandhāt | "Sa ha kshattāram uvācha" (iv. 1, 5) ity uktam | vidyā-grahaṇāya cha brāhmaṇa-samīpopagamāt | śūdrasya cha anadhikārāt | katham idam ananurūpaṁ Raikveṇa uchyate "śūdra" iti | tattra āhur āchāryyāḥ | haṁsa-vachana-śravaṇāt śug enam āviveśa | tena asau śuchā śrutvā Raikvasya mahimānaṁ vā dravati iti | ṛishir ātmanaḥ parokshajñatāṁ darśayan "śūdra" ity āha | śūdra-vad bādhanena eva enam vidyā-grahaṇāya upajagāma na śuśrūshayā | na tu jātyā eva śūdraḥ iti | apare punar āhur alpaṁ dhanam āhṛitam iti rushā eva enam uktavān "śūdra" iti | "But is not Jānaśruti shewn to have been a king, (a) from his name being connected with a charioteer in the passage 'He said to his charioteer,' (b) from his resorting to a Brāhman to obtain knowledge, and (c) from a S'ūdra possessing no such prerogative? How then did Raikva address to him an appellation inconsistent with this in the words 'o S'ūdra?' Learned teachers reply: 'Vexation (śuk) took possession of him on hearing the words of the swan: in consequence of which, or of hearing (śrutvā) of the greatness of Raikva, he ran up [S'ūdra is here derived either from śuchā + dravati, or from śrutvā + dravati]; and the rishi, to shew his knowledge of things beyond the reach of the senses, called him S'ūdra. He had approached to obtain knowledge from the rishi by annoying him like a S'ūdra, and not by rendering him service; while yet he was not by birth a S'ūdra. Others again say that the rishi angrily called him a S'ūdra because he had brought him so little property." This passage is also translated by Bābu Rājendralāl (Chh. Up. p. 68, note), who renders bādhanena (which I have taken to mean "annoying") by "paying" for instruction; but I cannot find any authority for this sense of the word.

triyas named Chaitrarathi was descended,' which proves that his family were Kshattriyas, we may gather that Abhipratārin belonged to this class. And the circumstance that Jānaśruti is mentioned in connection with the same branch of knowledge as Abhipratārin, the Kshattriya, shews that the former also was a Kshattriya. For it is in general men of the same class who are mentioned together. And from the fact of Jānaśruti sending a charioteer (Chh. Up. iv. 1, 5–7), and his other acts of sovereignty also, we learn that he was a Kshattriya. Hence (we conclude that) a Śūdra does not possess the prerogative of divine knowledge.

Sūtra 36. "From reference being made to initiation, and from a Śūdra being declared to be excluded from it."

"And that a Śūdra does not possess the prerogative of acquiring divine knowledge, may be further inferred from the fact that investiture with the sacred cord and other rites are referred to in passages where science is the subject in question. For the fact that the seekers after such knowledge obtained initiation, is shewn by such passages as the following: 'He invested him;' 'He came to him, saying, teach me, Sir' (Chh. Up. vii. 1, 1?); 'Devoted to Brahma, resting in Brahma, seeking after the highest Brahma, they approached the venerable Pippalāda with firewood in their hands, (saying) 'he will declare all this' (Praśna Up. i. 1); and 'having invested them,' etc. And that a Śūdra receives no initiation is shewn by the text of the Smṛiti which pronounces him to be but once-born, viz. 'the Śūdra is the fourth class, and once-born;' and by such other passages as this: 'There is no sin in a Śūdra, and he is not entitled to initiation.'"[5]

Sūtra 37. "And because he acted after ascertaining that it was not a Śūdra [who had come to him]."

"That a Śūdra does not possess the prerogative of acquiring knowledge appears also from this that [according to the Chhāndogya Upanishad] Gautama proceeded to invest and instruct Jābāla after ascertaining by his truth-speaking that he was not a Śūdra: 'None but a Brāhman could distinctly declare this: bring, o fair youth, a piece of fuel; I will invest thee; thou hast not departed from the truth' (Chh. Up. iv. 4, 5).[6]

This last verse has been already quoted in Vol. I. p. 138, note 244.

[6] I shall quote in full the earlier part of the passage from which these words are

Sūtra 38. "And because, according to the Smṛiti, a S'ūdra is forbidden to hear, or read, or learn the sense."

"And that a S'ūdra does not possess the prerogative of acquiring divine knowledge, appears from this that, according to the Smṛiti, he is forbidden to hear it, or read it, or learn its sense: i.e. it is declared in the Smṛiti that he is forbidden either to hear the Veda, or read the Veda, or to learn it contents, or to practise its injunctions. Hearing is forbidden to him in these texts: 'If he listens to the reading of the Veda, his ears are to be filled with [melted] lead and lac;' and 'The S'ūdra is a walking cemetery; therefore no one must read in his vicinity.' And consequently the reading of it is prohibited to him: for

taken, both for the sake of explaining the allusion, and for the illustration which it affords of ancient Indian manners: Chh. Up. iv. 4, 1. Satyakāmo ha Jābālo Jabālām mātaram āmantrayānchakre "brahmacharyyam bhavati vivatsyāmi kiṁ-gotro nv aham asmi" iti | 2. Sā ha enam uvācha "na aham etad veda tāta yad-gotras tvam asi | bahv ahaṁ charantī parichāriṇī yauvane tvām alabhe | sā 'ham etad na veda yad-gottras tvam asi | Jabālā tu nāma aham asmi Satyakāmo nāma tvam asi | sa Satyakāmaḥ eva Jābālo 'bravīthāḥ" iti | "Satyakāma, the son of Jabālā, addressed his mother Jabālā, saying, 'I wish, mother, to enter on the life of a religious student. To what family (gottra: see Müller's Anc. Sansk. Lit. pp. 378 ff.) do I belong?' 2. She answered, 'I do not know, my son, to what family thou belongest. Much consorting [with lovers] and roving (or serving), in my youth, I got thee. I know not of what family thou art. But my name is Jabālā, and thine Satyakāma. Say, 'I am Satyakāma son of Jabālā.'" He accordingly goes to Hāridrumata of the race of Gotama, and asks to be received as a student. The teacher enquires to what family he belongs and the youth repeats verbatim the answer he had received from his mother, and says he is Satyakāma the son of Jabālā. The teacher replies in the words quoted by S'ankara "No one other than a Brāhman could distinctly declare this," etc. The interpretation of paragraph 2, above given, seems to convey its correct sense. Jabālā apparently means to confess that her son was nullius filius: and that he must be content to call himself her son, as she did not know who his father was. The explanation of the words bahv ahaṁ charantī parichāriṇī yauvane tvām alabhe given by the Commentators and followed by Bābu Rājendralāl Mittra, that she was so much occupied with attending to guests in her husband's house, and so modest that she never thought of enquiring about her son's gottra, and that her husband died early, is founded mainly on the word parichāriṇī, and would not account for Jabālā's ignorance of her husband's name (which she does not mention) or even of her husband's lineage. In regard to the sense of charantī see the passage from the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, ii. 5, 2, 20, quoted in the First Volume of this work, p. 136, note 242. S'ankara was either ignorant of the laxity of ancient morals, or wished to throw a veil over the spurious origin of a sage like Satyakāma who had attained divine knowledge and become a teacher of it (see Chh. Up. iv. 10, 1). In his preface, however, p. 30, as I observe, Bābu Rājendralāl speaks of Satyakāma as a natural son in these words: "Although a natural born son whose father was unknown, and recognized by the contemptuous soubriquet of Jābāla from the designation of his mother Jabālā," etc.

how can he, in whose neighbourhood even the Veda is forbidden to be read, read it himself? And if he utters it, his tongue is to be cut; and if he retains it in his memory, his body is to be slit. And it results from the meaning of the terms that he is prohibited from learning its contents, or practising its injunctions, according to the texts, 'Let no one impart intelligence to a Śūdra;' and 'reading, sacrifice, and liberality are the duties of twice-born men.' As regards (f) Vidura, Dharma, Vyādha, and others in whom knowledge was produced in consequence of their recollection of acts performed in a former birth, their enjoyment of its results cannot be prevented, from the transcendent character of the effects of knowledge; and because in the text 'Let the four castes be made to hear them,' the Smṛiti declares that the four castes possess the prerogative of learning the Itihāsas and Purāṇas [by means of which Śūdras may attain perfection]. But it has been established that Śūdras do not possess the prerogative of acquiring divine knowledge derived [directly] from [the study of] the Veda."

The Bhagavad Gītā affirms a different doctrine in the following verses, x. 32 f., where Kṛishṇa says:

Mām hi Pārtha vyapāśritya ye 'pi syuḥ pāpa-yonayaḥ | striyo vaiśyās tathā śūdras te 'pi yānti parām gatim | 33. Kim punar brāhmaṇāḥ puṇyāḥ bhaktāḥ rājarshayas tathā |

"Those who have faith in me, even though they be of base origin, women, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras, attain to the most transcendent state. How much more pure Brāhmans and devout royal rishis."

Śankara could scarcely have been ignorant that his principle was not in harmony with this text; but he has thought proper to ignore this discrepance of views, as he probably shrank from directly contradicting a work held in such high estimation.

See also the account of the views entertained on the same subject by Śāṇḍilya which I have stated above, p. 178.

Page 105, line 24.

The following quotation continues the discussion of this subject; and will also serve to illustrate pp. 6 and 16, above, as well as p. 60 of the First Volume:

Brahma Sūtra i. 3, 30. "Samāna-nāma-rūpatvāch cha āvṛittāv apy

avirodho darśanāt smṛiteś cha" | athāpi syāt | yadi paśv-ādi-vad deva-vyaktayo 'pi santatyā eva utpadyeran nirudhyeraṁś cha tato 'bhidhānābhidheyābhidhātṛi-vyavahārāvichchedāt sambandha-nityatvena virodhaḥ śabde parihriyeta | yadā tu khalu sakalaṁ trailokyam parityakta-nāmarūpaṁ nirlepam pralīyate prabhavati cha abhinavam iti śruti-smṛiti-vādāḥ vadanti tadā katham avirodhaḥ iti | tattra idam abhidhīyate "samānanāma-rūpatvād" iti | tadā 'pi saṁsārasya anāditvaṁ tāvad abhyupagantavyam | pratipādayishyati cha āchāryyaḥ saṁsārasya anāditvam "upapadyate cha apy upalabhyate cha" iti (Brahma Sūtra ii. 1, 36) | anādau cha saṁsāre yathā svāpa-prabodhayoḥ pralaya-prabhava-śravaṇe 'pi pūrva-prabodha-vad uttara-prabodhe 'pi vyavahārād na kaśchid virodhaḥ | evaṁ kalpāntara-prabhava-pralayayor api iti drashṭavyam | svāpa-prabodhayoś cha pralaya-prabhavau śrūyete | "yadā suptaḥ svapnaṁ na kanchana paśyaty atha asmin prāṇaḥ eva ekadhā bhavati tadā enaṁ vāk sarvair nāmabhiḥ saha apyeti chakshuḥ sarvaiḥ rūpaiḥ saha apyeti śrotraṁ sarvaiḥ śabdaiḥ saha apyeti manaḥ sarvair dhyānaiḥ saha apyeti | sa yadā pratibudhyate yathā 'gner jvalataḥ sarvāḥ diśo visphulingāḥ vipratishṭherann evam eva etasmād ātmanaḥ sarve prāṇāḥ yathāyatanaṁ vipratishṭhante prāṇebhyo devāḥ devebhyo lokāḥ (Kaush. Br. Utt. A. 3, 3) iti | syād etat | svāpe purushāntara-vyavahārāvichchedāt svayaṁ cha sushupta-prabuddhasya pūrva-prabodha-vyavahārānusandhāna-sambhavād aviruddham | mahāpralaye tu sarva-vyavahārochchedāj janmāntara-vyavahāra-vach cha kalpāntara-vyavahārasya anusandhātum aśakyatvād vaishamyam iti | na esha doshaḥ | saty api sarva-vyavahārochchedini mahāpralaye Parameśvarānugrahād īśvarāṇāṁ Hiraṇyagarbhādīnāṁ kalpāntara-vyavahārānusandhānopapatteḥ | yadyapi prākṛitāḥ prāṇino na janmāntara-vyavahāram anusandhānāḥ dṛiśyante iti na tat prākṛita-vad īśvarāṇām bhavitavyam | yathā hi prāṇitvāviśeshe 'pi manushyādi-stamba-paryyanteshu jñānaiśvaryyādi-pratibandhaḥ pareṇa pareṇa bhūyān bhavan dṛiśyate tathā manushyādishv eva Hiraṇyagarbha-paryanteshu jñānaiśvaryyādy-abhivyaktir api pareṇa pareṇa bhūyasī bhavati ity etat śruti-smṛiti-vādeshv aśakṛid eva anukalpādau prādurbhavatām pāramaiśvaryyaṁ śrūyamāṇaṁ na śakyaṁ nāsti iti vaditum | tataś cha atīta-kalpānushṭhita-prakṛishṭa-jñāna-karmaṇām īśvarāṇāṁ Hiraṇyagarbhādīnāṁ varttamāna-kalpādau prādurbhavatām Parameśvarānugṛihītānāṁ supta-pratibuddhavat kalpāntara-vyavahārānusandhānopapattiḥ | tathā cha śrutir "yo Brahmāṇaṁ vidadhāti pūrvaṁ yo vai vedāṁś cha prahiṇoti tasmai | taṁ

ha devam ātma-buddhi-prakāśam mumukshur vai śaraṇam aham prapadye" (Śvetāśvatara Upanishad, vi. 18) iti | smaranti cha Śaunakādayo Madhuchhandaḥ-prabhṛitibhir dāśatathyo dṛishṭāḥ iti | prativedaṁ cha evam eva kāṇḍarshy-ādayaḥ smaryyante | śrutir apy ṛishi-jñāna-pūrvakam eva mantreṇa anushṭhānaṁ darśayati "yo ha vai aviditārsheya-chhando-daivata-brāhmaṇena mantreṇa yājayati vā adhyāpayati vā sthāṇuṁ cha richhati garttaṁ vā prapadyate" ity upakramya "tasmād etāni mantre vidyād" iti | prāṇināṁ cha sukha-prāptaye dharmo vidhīyate duḥkha-parihārāya adharmaḥ pratishidhyate | dṛishṭānuśravika-duḥkha-sukha-vishayau cha rāga-dveshau bhavato nau vilakshaṇa-vishayāv ity ato dharmādharma-phala-bhūtottarottarā sṛishṭir nishpadyamānā pūrva-sṛishṭi-sadṛiśy eva nishpadyate | smṛitiś cha bhavati "teshāṁ ye yāni karmāṇi prāk-sṛishṭyām pratipedire | tāny eva te prapadyante sṛijyamānāḥ punaḥ punaḥ | hiṁsrāhiṁsre mṛidu-krūre dharmādharmāv ṛitānṛite | tad-bhāvitāḥ prapadyante tasmāt tat tasya rochate" | iti | pralīyamānam api cha idaṁ jagat śakty-avaśesham eva pralīyate śakti-mūlam eva cha prabhavati itarathā ākasmikatva-prasangāt | na cha anekākārāḥ śaktayaḥ śakyāḥ kalpayitum | tataś cha vichhidya vichhidya apy udbhavatām bhūr-ādi-loka-pravāhāṇāṁ deva-tiryañ-manushya-lakshanānāṁ cha prāṇi-nikāya-pravāhāṇāṁ varṇāśrama-dharma-phala-vyavasthānāṁ cha anādau saṁsāre niyatatvam indraya-vishaya-sambandha-niyatatva-vat pratyetavyam | na hi indriya-vishaya-sambandhāder vyavahārasya prati sargam anyathātvaṁ shashṭhendriya-vishaya-kalpaṁ śakyam utprekshitum | ataś cha sarva-kalpānāṁ tulya-vyavahāratvāt kalpāntara-vyavahārānusandhāna-kshamatvāch cha īśvarāṇāṁ samāna-nāma-rupāḥ eva pratisargaṁ viśeshāḥ prādurbhavanti samāna-nāma-rūpatvāch cha āvrittāv api mahāsarga-mahāpralaya-lakshaṇāyāṁ jagato 'bhyupagamyamānāyāṁ na kaśchich chhabda-prāmāṇyādi-virodhaḥ | samāna-nāma-rūpatāṁ cha-śruti-smṛitī darśayataḥ "sūryā-chandramasau dhātā yathā-pūrvam akalpayat | divaṁ cha pṛithivīṁ chāntarīksham atho svaḥ" | iti | yathā pūrvasmin kalpe sūryā-chandramaḥ-prabhṛiti jagat klṛiptaṁ tathā 'sminn api kalpe Parameśvaro 'kalpayad ity arthaḥ | tathā "Agnir vai akāmayata 'annādo devānāṁ syām' iti sa evam agnaye kṛittikābhyaḥ puroḍāśam ashṭakapālaṁ niravapad" iti nakshatreshṭi-vidhau yo 'gnir niravapad yasmai vā 'gnaye niravapat tayoḥ samāna-nāma-rūpatāṁ darśayati ity-evaṁ-jātīyakā śrutir udāharttavyā | smṛitir api "ṛishīṇāṁ nāmadheyāni yāś cha vedeshu dṛishṭayaḥ | sarvaryy-ante prasūtānāṁ tāny evaibhyo dadāty

ajaḥ | yathartāv ṛitu-lingāni nānā-rūpāṇi paryyaye | dṛiśyante tāni tāny eva tathā bhāvāḥ yugādishu | yathā 'bhimānino 'tītās tulyās te sāmpratair iha | devāḥ devair atītair hi rūpair nāmabhir eva cha" ity evaṁ-jatīyakā drashṭavyā |

"Brahma Sūtra, i. 3, 30. 'And though there be a recurrence of creation, yet as (the new creation) has the same name and form[7] (as the old) there will be no contradiction in regard to the words of the Veda; since this is proved both by the intuition of rishis and by the Smṛiti.' And further, let it be so that if a series of individual gods, as of animals, etc., is born and disappears in unbroken continuity, the alleged contradiction in regard to the words of the Veda (viz. that as they are connected with objects which are not eternal, they cannot themselves be eternal) will be removed by the perpetuity of connection arising from the continuity of practice regarding the designation of things, the things to be designated, and the designator. But when, as texts of the S'ruti and Smṛiti inform us, the entire three worlds, losing name and form,[8] are utterly annihilated and afterwards produced anew, how can the contradiction be avoided? [The meaning of this is: How can there be an eternal connection between the words of the Veda and objects which how long soever they may have existed, must yet have come into being at the new creation following after the total (not merely the partial) destruction of the universe? and if such a connection does not exist, how can the words of the Veda be eternal, when before this new creation they represented nothing existent? see above, p. 102.] A reply to this is given in the words, 'Yet as (the new creation) has the same name and form as the old,' etc. Even then the world must be admitted to have been without a beginning. This eternity of the world will be declared by our teacher in the words (of [7] Professor Goldstücker is of opinion that here, as elsewhere, these words (nāma-rūpa) should be rendered "substance and form." See the note on the subject furnished by him in M. Burnouf's Introduction à l'histoire du Buddhisme Indien, p. 502.

[8] Govinda Ānanda remarks on the Sūtra before us, and S'ankara's comment: Nanu mahā-pralaye jāter apy asattvāt śabdārtha-sambandhānityatvam ity āśankya āha "samāna" iti | sūtraṁ nirasya āśankām āha "athāpi" iti | vyakti-santatyā jātīnām avāntara-pralaye sattvāt sambandhas tishṭhati vyavahārāvichhedāj jnāyeta cha iti vedasya anapekshatvena pramānye na kaśchid virodhaḥ syāt | nirlepa-pralaye tu sambandhanāśāt punaḥ sṛishṭau kenachit puṁsā sanketaḥ karttavyaḥ iti puruṣha-buddhi-sāpekshatvena vedasya aprāmānyam adhyāpakasya āśrayasya nāśād āśrayasya anityatvaṁ cha prāptam ity arthaḥ | mahāpralaye 'pi nirlepa-layo 'siddhaḥ sat-kāryya-vādāt |

Brahma Sūtra, ii. 1, 36), 'It is agreeable to reason, and it is ascertained.' And the world being eternal, although the Veda declares that its dissolution and reproduction take place during the sleep, and at the waking (of the creator), still as the practice continues the same in the later, as in the previous, waking condition, there is no contradiction (of the sort pretended). And it is to be considered that the same must be the case in regard to the dissolutions and creations of another Kalpa (see Vol. I. p. 43 f.). Now dissolutions and creations are said in the Veda to take place during (the creator's) sleep, and at his waking. 'When the sleeper does not see any vision, and when his breath is concentrated in him, then the voice with all names enters into him, the eye with all forms enters into him, the ear with all sounds enters into him, the mind with all thoughts enters into him. When he wakes, just as sparks shoot out in all directions from blazing fire, so do all breaths according to their several seats issue from this Soul; from the breaths spring deities; and from the deities worlds' (Kaushītakī Brāhmaṇa, latter part, 3, 3). But be it so, that [in the circumstances referred to] there is no contradiction of the kind alleged, because during the

tathā cha saṁskārātmanā śabdārtha-tat-sambandhānāṁ satām eva punaḥ sṛishṭāv abhivyakter na anityatvam | abhivyaktānāṁ pūrva-kalpīya-nāma-rūpa-samānatvād na sanketaḥ kenachit kāryyaḥ | vishama-sṛishṭau hi sanketāpekshā na tulya-sṛishṭāv iti pariharati "tatra idam" ity-ādinā | "But since in a great dissolution even species cease to exist, will it not result that the connection of words with the objects they denote is not eternal? In reference to this doubt the aphorist says, 'as the name and form are the same,' etc. Waving the authority of the Sūtra, the Commentator expresses a doubt in the words 'And further,' etc. It is true that the connection subsists in consequence of the continuity of individuals owing to the existence of species during the intermediate dissolutions, and this connection will be known because the previous practice continues uninterrupted. And so from the independence of the Veda, there will be no contradiction in regard to its authority. But since in a total dissolution all such connection is lost, and some intimation (of what had existed before) must be given by some person at the new creation, the Veda will be dependent on the understanding of such person, and consequently its unauthoritativeness, as well as the non-eternity of the dependent object, owing to the extinction of the instructor on whom it depended, will result. But even in a great dissolution an absolute annihilation is unproved, according to the doctrine that effects exist in their causes. And so, as words, the objects which they denote, and the connection between both, (all of which things previously existed), are manifested at the new creation as reminiscences of a previous existence, they are not non-eternal. As the objects thus manifested have the same names and forms as in the previous Kalpa, there is no necessity for any intimation (of what had existed before) being given by any person. For such an intimation would, indeed, be required in a dissimilar creation, but not in one which is similar. It is thus that the commentator removes the objection in the words 'a reply to this is given,' etc."

sleep (of one person) the practice of others continues uninterruptedly, and even the person who has been in a deep sleep can ascertain the action which took place in his former waking state. But this is inapplicable to a great dissolution, because then there is an absolute annihilation of all practice, and because the practice which prevailed in another Kalpa, like that of another birth, cannot be ascertained. This objection, however, does not hold; for although all practice is annihilated by a great dissolution, still it is proved that through the favour of the supreme Lord, the lords Hiraṇyagarbha (Brahmā), etc., can ascertain the practice of the preceding Kalpa. Although ordinary creatures are not observed to evince the power of discovering the practice of a former birth, the limitation which is true of them will not attach to the great lords in question. For just as in the series of beings commencing with men, and ending with posts, although all the creatures included in it without distinction possess the attribute of life, yet, as we descend the scale, the obstructions to knowledge and to power are perceived to go on gradually increasing; so too, in the series beginning with men and culminating in Hiraṇyagarbha, there is an ever greater and greater manifestation of knowledge and of power, etc.; and thus the transcendent faculties which are declared in texts of the Śruti and Smṛiti to belong to the beings who again and again come into existence at the beginning of the successive Kalpas cannot be denied to be real. And consequently it is established that the lords Hiraṇyagarbha and others who during the past Kalpa had manifested distinguished knowledge and powers of action, and who again came into existence at the beginning of the present Kalpa, and enjoyed the favour of the supreme Lord, were able, like a person who has been asleep and awakes again, to ascertain the practice of the previous Kalpa. And accordingly the Śruti says: 'Seeking final liberation, I take refuge with that God, shining by the light of his own intellect, who in the beginning creates Brahmā and reveals to him the Vedas' (Śvetāśv. Upan. vi. 18). And Śaunaka and others record in their Smṛitis that the hymns in the ten Maṇḍalas of the Rig-veda were seen by Madhûchhandas and other rishis. In the same way the Kāṇḍarshis, etc., of each of the Vedas are specified in the Smṛitis. The Śruti, too, in the passage commencing 'Any priest who in sacrificing for another person, or in teaching a pupil, employs a text of which he does not know the rishi, metre, deity, and proper application, is turned into a post, or falls into a pit,' and ending, 'Wherefore let him ascertain all these points regarding every text;' —declares that a knowledge of the rishi by whom it was seen should precede the ceremonial use of every text.[9] Further, righteousness is prescribed and unrighteousness is forbidden, with a view to promote the happiness and obviate the misery of living beings: and love and dislike have for their objects nothing but the happiness and misery which are perceptible by sense or are scripturally revealed. 'Consequently each succeeding creation which is effected, forming, as it does, the recompense of righteousness and unrighteousness, is constituted perfectly similar to each of those which preceded it. And the Smṛiti, too, declares: 'These creatures, as they are reproduced time after time, perform, respectively, the very same actions as they had performed in the previous creation.[10] They so act under the influence of (their previous tendencies) whether noxious or innoxious, mild or cruel, righteous or unrighteous, to truth or to falsehood; and it is from this cause that they are disposed to one or another course of conduct.' Besides, even when this world is destroyed, a residuum of its force (śakti) continues, and it is reproduced only because it has this force for its basis: for any other supposition would involve the difficulty of the world having no cause. And as we cannot conceive that there are many forms of force (śakti), we must believe that, as the relations between the senses and their objects are invariable, so too, in a world which had no commencement, the successions of earths and other worlds, and of different classes of living beings distinguished as gods, animals, and men, (although separated from each other in the period of their production,) as well as the ordinations of castes, orders, duties, and recompences are invariable. For we cannot imagine that such conditions as the relations between the senses and their objects, etc., should vary in every creation, in such a way, for example, as that there should exist objects for a sixth sense. Hence, as all Kalpas exist under the same conditions, and as the lords (Hiraṇyagarbha, etc.) are able to ascertain the conditions which existed in another Kalpa, varieties (of beings) having the same name and form are produced in every creation; and in consequence of this sameness of name and form, even though a revolution of the world in the form of a great creation and a great dissolution is admitted, no contradiction arises affecting the authority of the words of the Veda, etc. Both Śruti and Smṛiti shew us this sameness of name and form. Here such texts of the Śruti as these may be adduced: 'The creator formed as before the sun and moon, the sky and the earth, the air and the heaven.' This means that in this Kalpa the supreme Lord fashioned the sun, the moon, and the rest of the world in the same way as they had been fashioned in the former Kalpa.' Again: Agni desired, 'May I be the food-eater of the gods.'' He offered to Agni [as the deity presiding over] the Kṛittikās[11] (the Pleiades) a cake in eight platters.' In this passage the Śruti shews that the two Agnis, he who in the ceremony of sacrifice to the constellation offered the oblation, and he to whom it was offered, had the same name and form. And such Smṛitis, too, as the following should be examined: 'The Unborn Being gives to those born at the end of the night (i.e. of the dissolution[12]) the names of the rishis and their intuitions into the Vedas.[13] Just as on the recurrence of each of the seasons of the year its various characteristics are perceived to be the very same (as they had been before), so too are the things produced at the beginning of the yugas;[14] and the past gods presiding over different objects resemble those who exist at present, and the present (resemble the) past in their names and forms.' ''

[9] The object of these remarks of S'ankara regarding the rishis is thus explained by Govinda Ānanda: Kiṅcha mantrāṇām ṛishy-ādi-jñānāvaśyakatva-jñāpikā śrutir mantra-dṛig-ṛishīṇāṁ jñānātiśayaṁ darśayati ity āha | . . . . tathā cha jñānādhikaiḥ kalpāntaritaṁ vedaṁ smṛitvā vyavahārasya pravarttitatvād vedasya anāditvam anapekshatvaṁ cha aviruddham iti bhāvaḥ | "In these words S'ankara intimates that the S'ruti which declares the necessity of knowing the rishis, etc., thereby manifests the transcendent knowledge of the rishis who saw the mantras. . . . . And so from the fact that these rishis, distinguished by eminent knowledge, recollected the Veda which had existed in a different Kalpa, and [again] gave currency to the [ancient] practice [of its precepts], it is shewn that the eternity and independence of the Veda is not in contradiction [to any fact]—such is the purport."

[10] See the First Volume of this work, p. 60.

I shall quote a part of Śankara's remarks on the Brahma Sūtra, ii. 1, 36, referred to in the earlier part of the preceding quotation, in which the eternity of the world is affirmed:

[11] Kṛittikā-nakshattrābhimāni-devāya Agnaye — Govinda Ānanda.

[12] Śarvaryy-ante pralayānte—Govinda Ānanda.

[13] The sense of the last words, which I translate literally, is not very clear. Govinda Ānanda says that in the word vedeshu the locative case denotes the object (vedeshv iti vishaya-saptamī). Compare the passages quoted above in p. 16 from the Vishṇu P. and M. Bh. which partially correspond with this verse.

[14] Already quoted from the Vishṇu P. in the First Volume of this work, p. 60.

ii. 1, 36. "Upapadyate cha upalabhyate cha" | "upapadyate cha" saṁsarasya anādityam | ādimattve hi saṁsārasya akasmād udbhūter muktānām api punaḥ saṁsārodbhūti-prasangaḥ | akṛitābhyāgama-prasangaś cha sukha-duḥkhādi-vaishamyasya nirnimittatvāt | na cha īśvaro vaishamya-hetur ity uktam | na cha avidyā kevalā vaishamyasya kāraṇam eka-rūpatvāt | rāgādi-kleśa-vāsanākshipta-karmāpekshā tv avidyā vaishamya-karī syāt | na cha karma antareṇa sarīraṁ sambhavati na cha śarīram antareṇa karma sambhavati iti itaretarāśraya-dosha-prasangaḥ | anāditve tu vījānkura-nyāyena upapatter na kaschid dosho bhavati |

"'It is agreeable to reason, and it is ascertained.' The eternity of the world is agreeable to reason. For on the supposition that it had a beginning, as it came into existence without a cause, the difficulty would arise (1) that those who had obtained liberation from mundane existence might become again involved in it;[15] and (2) that men would enjoy or suffer the recompense of what they had never done, as the inequalities occasioned by happiness and misery, etc., would be causeless. But God is not the cause of this inequality, as we have said (see the comment on Sūtra ii. 1, 34). Nor can ignorance alone be its cause, since ignorance is uniform (whilst conditions are varied). But ignorance, when connected with works induced by the surviving memory of desire and other sources of disquiet, may be the cause of inequality. Further, corporeal existence does not originate without works, nor works without bodily existence: so that (this hypothesis of the world having had a beginning) involves the fallacy of making each of two things depend upon the other. But on the supposition that the world had no beginning, there is no difficulty, as the two things in question may be conceived to have succeeded each other like seed and sprout from all eternity." (See Ballantyne's Aphorisms of the Sānkhya, Book i. pp. 60 and 126.)

Page 111, line 2 from the foot; and Page 113, line 11.

In the first edition, p. 78, I had translated the word samayādhyushite "in the morning twilight." When revising the translation for the new edition I became uncertain about the sense, and did not advert [15] i.e. as Professor Cowell suggests, if there is no cause for the production of the world, it comes into existence at hap-hazard, and by some chance the liberated may be born again as well as the unliberated.

to the fact that the term is explained in Professor Wilson's Dictionary as denoting "a time at which neither stars nor sun are visible." Professor Cowell has since pointed out that the word occurs in the second of the following verses of Manu, where a rule is given for the interpretation of the Veda in cases such as that referred to by the commentator on the Nyāya Sūtras: ii. 14: S'ruti-dvaidhaṁ tu yattra syāt tattra dharmāv ubhau smṛitau | ubhāv api hi tau dharmau samyag uktau manīshibhiḥ | 15. Udite 'nudite chaiva samayādhyushite tathā | sarvathā varttate yajnaḥ itīyaṁ vaidikī śrutiḥ | "14. In cases where there is a twofold Vedic prescription, both the rites are declared in the Smṛiti to be binding; since they have been distinctly pronounced by sages to be of equal authority. 15. The Vedic rule is that sacrifice may be performed in all the three ways [indicated in a particular text], viz. when the sun has risen, when it has not risen, and when neither stars nor sun appear, i.e. in the morning twilight." Kullūka says: Sūrya-nakshatra-varjitaḥ kālaḥ samayādhyushita-śabdena uchyate | "a time devoid of sun and stars is denoted by the word samayādhyushita.

Page 142, lines 14 and 16.

The first of these quotations is from the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, i. 4, 10; and the second from the Chhandogya Upanishad, viii. 7, 2.

Page 149, line 6.

For śabdādīkshiter read śabdād īkshiter.

Page 154, note 140.

Professor Cowell observes on the close of this note that the Sānkhya opponent maintains that the metaphor is in every case a real one.

Page 157, line 18.

Professor Cowell remarks that the meaning of the phrase śabda-pramāṇake 'rthe is not correctly rendered by the translation here given, viz. "where the (proper sense) is established by the words." The author is laying down the general rule that in cases where there is nothing in the purport of any passage in which a particular word occurs to lead the reader to suppose that it is figuratively used, and where consequently the word itself is the only index to the sense, it must be understood in its primary signification. The proper rendering, therefore, is: "Where the sense can only be determined by the word itself."

Page 160, line 18.

For punar-utpattir read punar-anutpattir.

Page 181, lines 7 and 11 from the foot.

I learn from Professors Cowell and Goldstücker that vimatā smṛitiḥ should be rendered not "the variously understood Smṛiti" but "the Smṛiti which is here the subject of dispute."

Page 183, note 160, line 1.

With R.V. i. 179, 2, compare R.V. vii. 76, 4, quoted in p. 245.

Page 201, line 21.

The commentator thus explains this verse of the Vishṇu Purāṇa (I am indebted to Dr. Hall for a collation of the best MSS. in the India Office Library): Ete cha dveshopaśama-prakārāḥ madhyamādhikāriṇām eva uktāḥ na tu uttamādhikāriṇām ity āha "ete" | "bhinnadṛiśā" bheda-dṛishṭyā | "bhinna-dṛiśām" iti vā pāṭhaḥ | tattra bhinnadarśane "abhyupagamam" angīkāraṁ kṛitvā dveshopaśamopāya-bhedāḥ kathitāḥ | uktānām upāyānām paramārtha-sankshepo mama mattaḥ śrūyatām | "In the words 'these notions,' etc.' he tells us that the methods of repressing hatred which have been hitherto declared are those which are followed by the persons who have attained only to the secondary, not to the highest, stage of knowledge. Bhinna-dṛiśā is the same as bheda-dṛishṭyā, 'with a view which distinguishes [the Deity from themselves],' or the reading is bhinna-dṛiśām, 'of persons who look [on Him] as distinct.' 'Accepting' (abhyupagamaṁ kṛitvā), i.e. admitting, this opinion regarding a distinctness, 'I (the speaker in the V.P.) have declared these methods of repressing hatred. Now hear from me a summary' of the highest truth in regard to these methods."

Page 225, line 21.

There is a verse in the Vājasaneyi Saṁhitā, xiii. 45, in which also Agni is connected with the creation: Yo Agnir Agner adhi ajāyata śokāt pṛithivyāḥ uta vā divas pari | yena prajāḥ Viśvakarmā jajāna tam Agne heḍaḥ pari te vṛiṇaktu | "Agni, may thy wrath avoid that Agni who sprang from Agni, from the flame of the earth or from that of the sky, by whom Viśvakarman generated living creatures." This verse is quoted and after its fashion explained in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vii. 5, 2, 21: Atha dakshiṇato 'jam | "Yo Agnir Agner adhi ajāyata" ity

Agnir vai esha | Agner adhyajāyata | "śokāt prithivyāḥ uta vā divas pari" iti yad vai Prajāpateḥ śokād ajāyaṭa tad divaś cha prithivyai cha śokād ajāyata | "Yena prajāḥ Viśvakarmā jajāna" iti vāg vai ajo vāco vai prajāḥ Viśvakarmā jajñna ityādi | "Then [he places] a goat (aja) on the southern side, (saying): 'That Agni who sprang from Agni:' this goat is Agni and sprang from Agni. 'From the flame of the earth or from that of the sky:' that which sprang from the flame of Prajāpati sprang from the flame of the earth and of the sky. 'By whom Viśvakarman generated living creatures:' The goat, [or the Unborn], is Vāch (Speech): Viśvakarman generated living creatures from Vāch," etc. Compare R.V. i. 67, 5, quoted above in p. 275.

Page 235, line 9.

Add after this the following texts, in which the verbs taksh and jan are applied to the composition of the hymns:

R.V. i. 67, 4. Vindantīm attra naro dhiyaṁ-dhāḥ hṛidā yat tashṭān mantrān aśaṁsan | "Meditative men find him (Agni) here, when they have uttered hymns of praise fashioned by the heart."

i. 109, 1. Vi hy akhyam manasā vasyaḥ ichhann Indrāgnī jnāsaḥ uta vā sajātān | nānyā yuvat pramatir asti mahyaṁ sa vām dhiyaṁ vājayantīm ataksham | 2. Aśravaṁ he bhūri-dāvattarā vāṁ vijāmātur uta vā syālāt | atha somasya prayatī yuvabhyām Indrāgnī stomaṁ janayāmi navyam | "1. Seeking that which is desirable, I beheld [in you], o Indra and Agni, relations or kinsmen. I have no other counsellor than you,—I who have fabricated for you a hymn supplicating food. 2. For I have heard that you are more bountiful than an ineligible son-in-law (who has to purchase his bride), or than a bride's brother; so now, while presenting a libation of Soma, I generate for you a new hymn."

Page 253, line 15.

Insert after this the following verse: R.V. x. 66, 5. Sarasvān dhībhir Varuṇo dhṛita-vrataḥ Pūshā Vishṇur mahimā Vāyur Aśvinā | brahmakṛito amṛitāḥ viśva-vedasaḥ śarma no yaṁsan trivarūtham aṁhasaḥ | "May Sarasvat with thoughts, may Varuṇa whose laws are fixed, may Pūshan, Vishṇu the mighty, Vāyu, the Aświns,—may these makers of prayers, immortal, possessing all resources, afford us a triple-cased protection from calamity."

Supplementary Note on Kālātyayāpadishṭa.—See page 84, note 89, and page 290.

I am indebted to Professor Goldstücker for the following additional remarks on this expression:

The Tarkasangraha, quoted by Professor Cowell in his interesting note which you kindly communicated to me, differs materially from the Bhāshāparichchheda in its interpretation of the fallacy called by them bādha; and I might add that the Tarkasangraha-dīpikāprakāśa offers even a third explanation of the same Vaiśeshika term. But I do not think that the bādha of the Vaiśeshikas is the same as the kālātīta of the Naiyāyikas. For when we find that the Bhāshāparichchheda in its enumeration at v. 70 applies to the fifth hetvābhāsa the epithet kālātyayopadishṭa (probably the same as the kālātyayāpadishṭa of the Nyāya-sūtra i. 50) yet in its explanation of v. 77 does not call it kālātīta, as the Nyāya does, but bādha, such a variation in terms seems pointed; and when we find moreover that its interpretation of bādha differs from Vātsyāyana's interpretation of kālātīta, there seems to be a still greater probability that the Nyāya and Vaiśeshika disagree on the question of the fifth hetvābhāsa.

For that there is no real difference between the Nyāyabhāshya and the Nyāyavṛitti is still my opinion. Both commentaries, I hold, agree in stating that the fallacy kālātīta arises when a reason assigned exceeds its proper sphere (sādhanakāla), and neither, I think, can have taken kāla in its literal sense of "time." This might have been the case if, as Professor Cowell seems to suggest, "plausibility" of an argument were the subject of the Sūtra; but as, in my opinion, the hetu is always intended to be a valid and good hetu, I do not see how such a hetu can become a bad one simply by being advanced too late. It would, however, become bad by being applied to a time, i.e. to a case to which it properly does not belong.

The circumstance that the Vṛitti and Bhāshāparichchheda are probably works of the same author, does not invalidate my opinion; it would seem on the contrary to confirm it, since the object of both these works is a different one: the former being intended as an exposition of the Nyāya, and the latter as one of the Vaiśeshika.

INDEX TO PRINCIPAL NAMES AND MATTERS.

A

Abhipratārin, 297
Abhyupagama-vāda, 201
Accentuation, 31
Achāryya, 92
Achyuta, 14, 45
Aditi, 225, 252, 258
Ādityas, 102, 234
Adharāraṇi, 47
Adhokshaja, 43, 47
Adhvaryu, 5, 53, 54 f.
Ādhvaryava (Yajur) Veda, 212
Adṛishṭa, 132, 135
Æther, whether eternal or not, 70, 106, 164
Agastya, 247
Agni, 5 f., 46 f., 219 and passim
Agni a source of inspiration, 258 f.
Agni Sāvitra, 17
Agnishṭoma, 11
Ahaṅkāra, 195
Aila (Purūravas), 47
Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, 5, 225
Aitareya Upanishad, i. 1, —65
Ajā, 166
Akshapāda (Gotama), 199
Akshara, 164
Alcinous, 269
Ānanda Giri, 157
Anga, 53
Angis, 31
Angiras, 31, 34, 219 f.
Angirases, 246
Anukramaṇī, 85, 275
Anushṭubh, 11, 278
Anuvyākhyānas, 205
Āpaḥ (waters), 8
Apāntaratamas, 40
Āpastamba, 62, 179
Apollo, 267, 270
Apsaras, 247
Āpta, 114 ff., 124, 128
Āptopyāman, 11
Āraṇyakas, 1, 26
——— superior to rest of Veda, 31
Argives, 270
Arka, 224
Arthavādas, 64
Aryaman, 266
Aśmaka, 53
Asridh, 225
Astronomy, 31
Asura, the, 258
Asuras, 49
Āsuri, 192
Āśvalāyana, 179
Āśvalāyana's Gṛihya Sūtras, 288
Aśvattha, 46
Aśvins, 228, 236
Atirātra, 11
Atharvan, priest, 55
Atharvan, sage, 31, 220, 259, 284
Atharvan (the Veda), 11
Atharvāngirases, 3, 9, 21, 42, 205
Atharva Parisishṭa, 54 f.
Ātharvaṇas, 54
Atharva-veda, quoted—
ii. 1, 2,—260
iv. 35, 6,—4
vii. 54,—1
x. 7, 14, 20,—3
Atharva-veda continued—
x. 7, 43, 44,—279
xi. 7, 24,—287
xiii. 4, 38,—4
xix. 54, 3,—4
— 59, 1, 2,—260
Athene, 272
Atri, 34, 220, 276
Atris, 243
Auddālaki, 77
Aufrecht, Prof., Cat. of Bodl. Sansk. MSS., 27 f., 30, 39 ——— aid from him acknowledged, 9, 15, 20, 54, 219, 221, 287 f.
Aupamanyava, 213
Avyakta, 161, 173
Ayāsya, 240
Ayātayāma, 51
Āyu, 222, 225
Āyur-veda, 114 f., 116 f., 132, 135

B

Babara Pravāhiṇi, 77 ff.
Bacchus, 264
Bādarāyaṇa, 64, 69, 141, and passim
——— controverts opinions of Jaimini, 141 ff.
——— of the Sānkhyas, 150 ff.
Bādari, 145
Bahvṛichas, 54
Ballantyne's Aphorisms of the Mīmānsa, 70 ff.
——— Aphorisms of the Nyāya, 210 ff., 201

Ballantyne's Aphorisms of the Sānkhya, 133, 168
——— Aphorisms of the Vedānta, 107
——— Aphorisms of the Yoga, 201, 289
——— Christianity contrasted with Hindu Philosophy, 104, 214
——— Mahābhāshya, 104
——— Siddhānta-muktāvali, 133
——— Synopsis of Science, 203
Banerjea, Rev. Prof. K.M., 12
——— his Dialogues on Hindu Philosophy, 31, 93 f., 115, 118, 133
Bauddhas, 181
Baudhāyana, 179
Benfey, Prof., his Sāmaveda, 103, 221, 231, 238, 266
Bhadrasena, 156, 170
Bhaga, 225
Bhagavad-gītā, quoted—
ii. 42 ff.,—37
x. 32,—300
xv. 15,—97
——— referred to, 193
Bhāgavata Purāṇa, equal to the Veda, 30
——— why composed, 42
——— quoted—
i. 3, 10,—192
— 4, 14 ff.,—41
— 7, 6 ff.—42
ii. 8, 28,—30
iii. 12, 34, and 37 ff.—11
— — 39,—207
iv. 29, 42 ff.,—34
ix. 8, 12 f.,—192
ix. 14, 43 ff.,—46
xii. 6, 37 ff.,—43
Bhāgavatas, doctrine of the, 177
Bhākta, or figurative sense of words, 108
Bhakti Sūtras, 177
Bharadvāja, 17, 31
Bharadvājas, 221
Bharatas, 276
Bhāratī, 255, 257
Bhārgava, 55
Bhāshā-parichchheda, 133, 150, 290
Bhoja-rāja, 201
Bhūḥ, 5, 7, 14, 104
Bhuvaḥ, 5, 7, 14, 104
Bhṛigu, 34, 219
Bhṛigus, 233, 237
Bird, the, 258
Blackie, on the Theology of Homer, 272
Boehtlingk and Roth, Sanskrit Dictionary, 20, 151, 201, 236, 240 f., 263
Brahmā, 8, 21, 24, 33, 43, and passim
Brahmā, 3, 10, 12 f., 28, 31, 34, 45, and passim
Brahmā composed of the Rig-veda, 27
Brahma-kāṇḍa, 65
Brahma-mīmānsā, its object, 139 (see Vedānta)
Brahman (prayer) 224
Brahmaṇaspati, 234, 249, 260 f.
Brahmarāta, 50, 52
Brahma Sūtras, 69, 93, and passim
Brahma-vādis, 195
Brahma-veda, 55
Brahma-vaivartta-purāṇa, i. 48, quoted, 30
——— corrector of Veda, 30
Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, quoted—
i. 2, 4,—104
— 2, 5,— 9
— 4, 10,—142
— 5, 5,— 9
ii. 2, 3,—166
— 4, 10,—8, 204
iii. 8, 11,—164
iv. 1, 2,—208
— 3, 22,—33
v. 8,—254
Bṛihaspati, 221, 256, 260
Bṛihatī, 15, 278
Buddha, 202
Butler (Bp.), his sermons on the love of God, 107

C

Calchas, 271
Caste, originally but one, 47 f.
Chaitra, 92
Chaitraratha and Chaitrarathi, 297
Chāndāla, 34, 178
Chhandoga Brāhmaṇa, 103
Charaṇa, 53
Charaṇavyūhá, 56
Charakas, 52 ff.
Charakāchāryya, 53
Charakādhvaryus, 51
Chārvākas, 202
Chhandas, 206
Chhandogas, 54
Chhāndogya Brāhmaṇa, 181
Chhāndogya Upanishad, quoted—
iv. 1, 3,—294
— 2, 2,—293
— 3, 5,—296
— 17, 1,— 5
vi. 2, 1, 3 f.,—151, 154
— 3, 2,—155
— 4, 1,—167
— 8, 6 f.,—155, 176
— 14, 6,—156
— 16, 2,—157
vii. 1, 1–5,—32, 143, 207, 298
— 25, 2,—178
viii. 7, 2,—142
— 15, 1,—284
Colebrooke, Miscellaneous Essays, 6, 57, 74, and passim
Commentary, 31
Commentators on the Veda, their proofs of its authority, 57 ff.
Cowell, Prof. E. B., his translation of the Kusumānjali, 128 ——— his aid acknowledged, 201, 290 f., 308

D

Dadhyanch, 220
Daityas, 201
Daksha, 34, 225
Danti, 264
Dasagva, 246
Demodocus, 269 f.
Dharma, 300
Dhī, 224
Dhishaṇa, 202
Dhishaṇā, 255

Dhīti, 224
Dhruvā, 20
Dionysus, 264
Dissolution of the Universe, 96, 303
Dushkṛita, 53
Dvaipāyana, see Kṛishṇa
Dvāpara age, 37, 41, 45, 48 f.
Dyaus, 246, 266

E

Egyptians, 183 f.
Ekāntins, 289
Ekaviṁśa, 11.
Empedocles, 273
Epimenides, 273
Euripides, 264 f.

F

Freedom of Speculation in India in early times, 57

G

Gāthā, 23
Gaṇāmbikā, 264
Gandharva, 258, 260 f.
Gandharvas, 46 ff.
Gaṇeśa, 264
Gārgī, 164
Gauḍapāda, 265
Gauṇa, or figurative sense of words, 108
Gaurī, 264
Gaya, 244
Gāyatra, 11, 276
Gāyatrī, 7, 11, 13 f., 263
——— varieties of, 263
——— mother of the Vedas, 12
Giriśa, 34
Gir, 224
Gods, capable of acquiring divine knowledge, 99, 141
Goldstücker, Prof., his Dictionary referred to, 201
——— Mānava-kalpa-sūtra quoted, 95 ff.
——— his aid acknowledged, 84, 93, 97, 295, 303, etc.
Gotama, author of Nyāya Sūtras, 111, 113
Gotama, rishi, 235
Gotamas, 232, 238, 241
Grammar, 31
Gṛitsamadas, 233, 235
Grote's History of Greece, 268, 270 ff.
Guṇas, 12, 32, 44, 150, 165, 195
Guru, 91, 180
Govinda Ānanda quoted, 103, 155, 157, 164, 190, and passim

H

Hall, Dr., aid from him acknowledged, 12, 52
——— Sānkhya Sāra, 185, 193
Hanta, 254
Haridāsa Bhaṭṭāchāryya, 128
Hāridrumata, 299
Harivāṁśa quoted—
47,—12
11,516,—12
11,665 ff.,—13
12,425 ff.,—14
Haug, Prof., on the signification of the word brahma, 233 f.
Hellenic race, its difference from the Indian, 273
Herodotus quoted, 183, 210
Hesiod quoted, 183, 268
Hiraṇyagarbha, 13, 136, 163, 285, 305
Homer, 269 ff.
Hotrā, 255
Hymns, distinguished as new and old, 224 ff., see Mantras

I

Ignorance, 164
Ikshvāku, 286
Inferior science, 31, 206
Iḍā, 255
Indra, 4, 99, 103, 142, 220, and passim
——— sceptical doubts, regarding Indra, 254
——— source of inspiration, 261 f.
Inspiration, its nature, 125
Intuition of rishis, 125 ff., 183
Īśa, 45
Isaiah referred to, 224
Itihāsas, 2, 9, and passim, see Smṛiti

J

Jabālā, 299
Jābāla, 298 f.
Jagatī metre, 11, 276, 278
Jaimini, 39, 40, 42, 45, 93, 98, 141
——— controverts opinions of Bādarāyaṇa, 141 ff.
Jalada, 55
Jan (to generate), 232, 237
Janaka, 56
Janamejaya, 53
Janaśruta, 295
Jānaśruti, 295 ff.
Jaradgava, 80
Jātavedas, 237, 241
Jayanārāyaṇa Tarkapanchānana, 120, 175
John (St.), his First Epistle, 239
——— his Gospel, 239
Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society referred to, 2, 57, 118, 264, 290
Juhū, 20

K

Kaiyyata, 95 ff.
Kakshasena, 297
Kalanja, 68
Kalāpa, 91, 132
Kalāpas, 96
Kālāpa, 91
Kālāpaka, 79, 132
Kālātyayāpadishṭa, 84, 290, 312
Kalchas, 270 f.
Kali-yuga, 49
Kālidāsa, 69 f., 83 f., 89
Kalpa sūtras, 180, 206
Kaṇāda, 106 and passim
Kāṇḍarshis, 304
Kaṇva, 220
Kaṇvas, 229
Kāpeya, 297

Kapi, 297
Kapila, 37, and passim
——— how treated by S'ankara, 184 ff.
Kâpinjala, 241
Karmakânda, 64
Karma-mîmânsâ, see Pûrva-mîmânsâ
Karmasiddhi, 264
Kârttikeya, 264
Kas'yapa, 285
Katha (sage), 77, 83, 91, 132
Kathas, 96
Katha Upanishad quoted, i. 3, 3, and 10—162
— 3, 11,—161
ii. 23,—36
iii. 3, 10 f.,—158 ff.
Kâthaka, 76 f., 79, 83, 91, 132
Kâtyayana, 179
Kâtyayana's S'rauta Sûtras, 47
Kaurma-purâna, 200
Kaus'ika, 249
Kaushîtakî Br., 5, 304
Kaushîtakins, 56
Kauthuma, 76 f., 83
Kavi, 218
Kes'ava, 28
Kîkatas, 79, 215
Köhler, Prophetismus der Hebræer, 173 f.
Kratu, 34
Kri, (to make), 232
Krishna, 29, 42, 286
Krishna Dvaipâyana, 38 f.
Krita-yuga, 37, 40, 47 ff.
Krittikâs, 307
Kullûka on Manu, 6, 14, 23, 26, 180
Kumârila, 95
Kumvyâ, 23
Kus'ikas, 233, 247
Kusumânjali quoted, 128 ff.
Kusurubinda, 77
Kuthumi, 77, 83
Kutsa, 213

L

Lassen, In. Ant., 38
Laukâyatikas, 199
Linga-purâna, 263
Lokâyata, 95
Lomaharshana, &c.

M

Mâdhava, author of Nyâya-mâlâ-vistara, 82
——— author of the Sarva-dars'ana-sangraha, 86 ——— author of the Vedârtha-prakâsa, on T.S., quoted, 66 ff.
Madhuchhandas, 305
Madhuvidyâ, 141, 286
Madhusûdana Sarasvatî, 194
Madras, 81
Mahâbhârata, origin of the name, 29
——— is a Veda relating to Krishna, 29
——— equal to the Veda, 29
——— composed by Nârâyana, 39
——— why composed, 42
——— quoted—
Âdi-parvan—
258,—31
261, 264 f.,—29
645,—29
2298,—29
2314,—29
2417,—38
4236,—38
Vana-parvan—
13432,—12
Udyoga-parvan—
1537,—288
Bhîshma-parvan—
3019,—14
S'ânti-parvan—
7660,—85, 101
8505,—49
8533 ff.,—16, 69
12920,—14
13088 ff.,—48
13432,—12
13475,—49
12551,—289
13678,—40
Svargârohanika-parvan
200 ff.,—29
Mahâbhâshya, 95
Mahâs'âla S'aunaka, 31
Mahâsena (Kârttikeya), 264
Mahat, 154, 172 f.
Mahes'vara, 16
Mahîdhara on the Vâj. San. quoted, 39
Maitreya, 37
Maitrî Upanishad—
vi. 22,—176
Mâlatî Mâdhava, 90
Mâna (Agastya), 247
Mânas, 233
Mânava dharma - s'âstra quoted—
i. 21 ff.,— 6
— 85 f., —48
ii. 10 ff.,—24
— 76 ff.,— 7
— 97,—25
— 166 f.,—288
iv. 123 f.,— 25
vi. 82 ff.,—24
xi. 243,—85
xii. 91,—190
— 94 ff.,—23
— 106,—24, 181
Mândhâtri, 229
Mânava-kalpa-sûtra, 95
Manîshâ, 224
Manman, 224
Mantras, 1, 33, 62 ff., 115, 224
——— magical power ascribed to, 275 ff.
Manu, 181 f., 190, 220, 285
Manvantaras, 38
Marîchi, 34
Mârkandeya Purâna, 102, 1 ff., quoted, 11
Maruts, 102, 226, 263
Mati, 224
Matsya Purâna, iii. 2 ff. quoted, 28
Mauda, 55
Mâyâ, 164, 195, 202
Medhâtithi, 6
Medhâvi, 218
Meru, 50, 52
Mitra, 225, 227
Mîmânsâ, see Pûrva-mîmânsâ, 28
Mîmânsakas, their alleged atheism, 94 f.
Mîmânsa-vârttika, 95
Minerva, 273
Moksha-dharma quoted, 199 f.
Mudakas, 96
Mukhya, or proper senes of words, 107

Müller, M., Profr. aid received from 237 ——— Ancient Sanskrit Lit., 1, 2, 36, 53, 56 f., 175, 280 f.
——— Chips, etc., 48
——— Jour. R. A. S., 230, 236, 255
——— Jour. of Ger. Or. Soc., 20, 104, 127, 183
Muṇḍaka Upanishad—
i. 1, 1–5,—30, 204, 284
ii. 1, 4, and 6,—30
iii. 1, 1,—176
Muni, 219
Muses, 267 ff.

N

Nābhāka, 230
Nābhāka, 229
Nābhan, 246
Nägelsbach's Nachhomerische Theologie, 273
Nāgojibhaṭṭa, 95 ff.
Nahusha, 283
Naichaśākha, 79
Nāka Maudgalya, 22
Name and Form, 152, 155, 163, 167, 302, etc.
Nāsatyas (Aśvins), 240
Nārada, 32, 34
Nārāyaṇa, 47.
Nārāyaṇa-tīrtha, 128
Nārāśansīs, 215
Navagva, 221, 246
Nestor, 273
Nigada, 45
Nigama, 180
Nirukta, quoted—
i. 20,—118, 213
iii. 11,—213
iv. 6,—212
vii. 1, 3,—211
— 16,—219
viii. 3,—277
x. 32,—213
— 42,—212
——— referred to, 180, 206, 247
Nītha, 224
Nivid, 224
Nodhas, 235
Nṛimedha, a rishi, 213
Nyāya, whether theistic or not, 133
Nyāya Sūtras quoted, 108 ff.
Nyāya-māla-vistara, quoted, 82, 179, 181
Nyāya-sūtra-vṛitti, 108

O

Odana oblation, 4
Odyssey, 269 f., 272 f.
Oṁkāra, 44
Oracles, 273

P

Padma-purāṇa quoted, 27
Paila, 39, 41 f., 45
Paingins, 56
Paippalāda, 55
Panchadaśa-stoma, 11
Panchajanāḥ, 168
Pāṇini, 56, 91
Pānkta, 15
Paraśara, 38, 40 f., 45, 199 f.
Parāśara Upapurāṇa, 199
Parjanya, 252
Paruchhepa, a rishi, 212
Pāśupata system, 202
Pāśupatas, 195
Pātanjalas, 195
Patanjali, Mahābhāshya, 56, 95 f.
——— Yoga, 198
Paulkasa, 34
Paurusheya, 9, 90, 134
Paurusheyatva, 90
Pavana, 5
Pertsch, alphabetical list of initial words of rich-verses, 103
Phemius, 270
Phœacians, 269
Philosophical systems, their mutual relations, 194 ff.
Pippalāda, 298
Pippalādakas, 96
Pitāmaha, 28
Plati, 244
Plato quoted, 133
——— his ideas on inspiration, 273
Polyphemus, 265
Prabhākara, 91, 180
Pradhāna, 150, etc.
Prakṛiti, 164, 166
Pramaganda, 79
Praskaṇva, 220
Praśna Upanishad, Comm. on, 191
——— i. 1,—297
Prasthāna-bheda, 194 ff.
Praudhi-vada, 201
Praüga, 278
Pṛithivī, 266
Priyamedha, 220
Prosody, 31
Psalms, 224
Pulastya, 34
Pulaha, 34
Puṇḍarīkāksha, 89
Purāṇas, 2, 27, and passim, see Smṛiti ——— created before the Vedas, 27 f.
——— eternal, 28
——— form with the Itihāsas a fifth Veda, 33, 42
Purūravas, 45 ff., 205
Purusha, 3, 4, and passim
Purusha-medha, 35
Purusha-sūkta (R. V. x. 90, 1, 9), 3, 61, 69, 89
Pūrva-mīmānsa Sūtras quoted, 70 ff.
Pūrva-mīmānsā, its object, 139
Pūshan, 226, 263
Pythagoras, 273

R

Raghunandana, 68
Raghuvaṁśa, 77
Rahūgaṇas, 241
Raikva and Rainka, 296 f.
Rājās, 12, 32, 48, 150
Rājasūya sacrifice, 184
Rajendra lal Mittra, his translation of the Upanishad, 167, 296 f., 299
Rakshases, 55
Rāmānujas, 195
Rāmāyaṇa, i. 1, 94 quoted 29
——— equal to the Veda, 30
Rathantara, 276
Rationalistic treatises, 24
Ṛi (to move, send forth), 240

Ribhus, 237, 261
Rich, 224
Rich-verses, 11, 12, 15
Rig-veda, quotations from,
First Mandala—
1, 2,—219
3, 11, 12,—254
12, 11,—224
18, 6, 7,—258
20, 1,—232
22, 10,—255
27, 4,—225
31, 1, 2,—251
— 11,—255
— 18,—232
32, 1,—212
37, 4,—252
40, 5, 6,—260
45, 3, 4,—220
47, 2,—232
48, 14,—220
60, 3,—225
— 5,—242
61, 2,—241
— 4,—241
— 16,—232
62, 13,—235
66, 2,—251
67, 3,—275
— 4,—311
77, 5,—242
78, 5,—242
80, 16,—220
89, 3,—225
91, 11,—242
94, 1,—241
96, 2,—225
102, 1,—242
109, 1, 2, 4,—311
116, 1,—240
117, 25,—233
118, 3,—220
130, 6,—235
— 10,—225
131, 6,—220
139, 9,—220
143, 1,—225
152, 5,—253
164, 5, 6,—279
— 20,—176
— 25,—276
— 37,—279
169, 3,— 59
171, 2,—235
175, 6,—220
179, 2,—182, 245
183, 6,—153

Rig-veda continued—
First Mandala—
184, 5,—232
185, 1,—280
Second Mandala—
3, 8,—255
17, 1,—225
18, 3,—225
19, 8,—235
23, 2,—260
24, 1,—226
35, 2,—235
39, 8,—233
Third Mandala—
1, 20,—226
2, 1,—237
18, 3,—255
21, 3,—251
29, 15,—248
30, 20,—233
32, 13,—226
39, 1, 2,—226
43, 5,—248
53, 9,—248
— 12,—276
— 14,—215
54, 17,—261
58, 3,—220
62, 7,—226
— 10,—263
Fourth Mandala—
3, 16,—242
5, 3,—259
— 6,—259
6, 1,—259
— 11,—233
11, 3,—259
16, 20, 21,—233
20, 5,—220
32, 12,—242
43, 1, 2,—255
50, 1,—221
Fifth Mandala—
2, 11,—235
11, 5,—242
22, 4,—243
29, 1,—251
29, 15,—235
31, 4,—276
40, 6,—276
42, 6,—220
— 13,—226
44, 8,— 59
45, 4,—243
55, 3,—227
73, 10,—236

Rig-veda continued—
Sixth Mandala—
14, 2,—251
16, 47,—236
17, 13,—227
18, 15,—261
19, 4,—221
21, 5,—221
— 8,—221
22, 2,—221
— 7,—227
26, 3,—261
32, 1,—236
34, 1,—227, 261
38, 3,—243
44, 13,—227
47, 3,—264
— 10,—261
48, 11,—227
49, 1,—227
50, 6,—227
— 15,—221
52, 2,—233
62, 4,—228
69, 2,—262
75, 19,—277
Seventh Mandala—
7, 6,—236
15, 4,—237
18, 1,—222
19, 11,—277
22, 9,—237
26, 1,—238
29, 4,—222
31, 11,—238
33, 3,—277
— 7–13,—246
34, 1,—255
— 9,—255
35, 14,—234
37, 4,—234
53, 1,—222
— 2,—228
56, 23,—228
59, 4,—228
61, 2,—240
— 6,—228
64, 4,—236
66, 11,—266
67, 5,—243
76, 4,—222
85, 1,—243
87, 4,—248
88, 4,—248
91, 1,—222
93, 1,—228
94, 1, 2,—238

Rig-veda continued—
Seventh Mandala—
97, 3, 5,—261
— 9,—234
104, 15,—212
Eighth Mandala—
3, 3,—249
5, 18,—243
5, 24,—228
6, 10,—250
— 11,—228
— 33,—236
— 41,—251
— 43,—229
8, 8,—243
12, 10,—229
— 14,—258
— 31,—240
13, 7,—262
— 26,—240
16, 7,—251
19, 5, 6,—3
20, 19,—229
23, 14,—229
25, 24,—229
27, 11,—243
— 13,—256
36, 7,—222
39, 6,—229
40, 4, 5,—230
— 12,—229
41, 2,—229
— 5, 6,—266
43, 2,—238
44, 12,—230
48, 3,—265
49, 9,—277
51, 4,—234
52, 4,—262
55, 11,—230
63, 7, 8,—230
64, 6,—69, 267
65, 5, 6, 12,—230
77, 4,—238
78, 3,—263
— 6, 7,—262
79, 3,—234
84, 4, 5,—238
88, 4,—253
89, 3, 4,—254
— 10, 11,—253
90, 16,—256
Ninth Mandala—
9, 8,—231
12, 7,—267
25, 5,—265
33, 5,—256

Rig-veda continued—
Ninth Mandala—
42, 2,—231
62, 1,—103
73, 2,—239
76, 4,—265
87, 3,—249
91, 5,—231
92, 3,—267
95, 1,—239
— 2,—265
96, 5-7,—266
— 11,—222
— 18,—251
99, 4,—231
107, 7,—251
110, 7,—223
114, 2,—234
Tenth Mandala—
4, 5,—259
4, 6,—231
7, 2,—239
14, 15,—223
20, 10,—253
21, 5,—259
23, 5-7,—239
26, 4,—263
27, 22,—252
31, 7,—280
34, 13,—212
36, 5,—260
39, 14,—236, 267
42, 1,—244
54, 3,—221
— 6,—234
57, 2,—278
— 3,—229
61, 7,—253
62, 1, 3,—246
— 4, 5,—246
63, 17,—244
66, 5,—311
66, 14,—223
67, 1,—239
71, 1-6,—256
71, 3,—105
72, 1, 2,—249
80, 7,—237
81, 4,—280
88, 8,—253
— 18,—280
89, 3,—231
— 5,—59
90, 1,—61
— 9,—3, 61, 89
91, 8,—259
— 13,—231

Rig-veda continued—
Tenth Mandala—
— 14,—240
95, 14,—212
96, 5,—223
— 11,—231
98, 9,—223
101, 2,—234
106, 6,—59
107, 6,—244
109, 4,—250
110, 8,—257
111, 1,—244
112, 9,—252, 262
114, 8, 9,—277
115, 5,—252
116, 9,—240
117, 6,—212
125, 3-5,—257
129, 2,—212
— 5,—59
— 5-7,—280
— 6,—60
130, 1-7,—277 f.
139, 5,—260
154, 2, 5,—250
160, 5,—231
167, 1,—250
176, 2,—258
177, 1,—258
190, 1,—250
Rishis, nature of their inspiration, 125, 183
——— "seers" of the hymns, 211
——— distinguished as new and old, 218 ff.
——— speak of themselves as authors of hymns, 232 ff.
——— supernatural character ascribed to, 245 ff.
——— conscious of divine inspiration, 252 ff.
——— their opposite views how reconcilable, 274 f.
——— their confession of ignorance, 279 ff.
——— their idea of inspiration different from that of later writers, 281 f.
———rival the gods, 283
Ritual, 31

Röer, Dr. E., his translations and introductions to the Upanishads, 36, 185, 193, 254, 284
——— his Bhāshā-parichheda, 133
——— his German translation of the Vaiśeshika aphorisms, 118, 120
——— his remarks on the doctrine of the Upanishads, 173
——— his remarks on the Sānkhya, 193
Romaharshaṇa, 39
Roth, Illustrations of Nirukta, 47, 230, 246 f.
Rudra, 64, 234
——— composed of the Sāma-veda, 27
Rudras, 102, 234

S

S'abara, Svāmin, 70, 80
Sacrifices, the five great, 20
Sacrifice eternal, 6
Sadasaspati, 258
Sādhyas, 6, 12
Sagara, sons of, 190, 192
S'ākhās of the Veda, 37, 42, 56
S'akti, 164, 173, 306
Sāma-rathantara, 11
Sāma-veda, impurity of its sound, 26 f.
——— i. 299 quoted, 252
Sāman, 224
Sāman-verses, 11
S'amī wood, 46
Sāmidhenīs, 213
S'aṁsa, 224
Saṁvarga-vidyā, 295 ff.
Sanaka, 34
Sanatkumāra, 32 f.
S'āṇḍilya, an ancient sage, 178
——— author of the Bhakti Sūtras quoted, 177 f.
S'aṅkāra Āchārya's commentary on the Brahma Sūtras quoted, 62, 98 ff., 106, 108, 140 ff., 177, 182, 185 ff., 203, 289, 291 ff.
S'ankara Achārya's commentary on the Br. Ār. Up. quoted, 34, 204
——— his comm. on the Chhāndogya Up., 296
——— his comm. on the Praśna Up. quoted, 191
——— on the Taitt. Up. quoted, 191
S'ankara Miśrā comm. on Vaiśeshika, 120, 125
Sānkhya aphorisms, 133, 168
Sānkhya-kārikā, 138, 166
Sānkhya-pravachana-bhāshya, 196 ff.
S'antanu, 45
Saptadasa-stoma, 11
Sarasvatī, goddess, 14, 254 f., 257, 282
——— mother of the Vedas, 14
——— the river, 41
S'ārīraka-mīmānsā-bhāshya, 98 See S'ankara Āchārya
S'ārīraka sūtras, 98
Sarva-darśana-sangraha-86 ff.
S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, quoted—
iii. 4, 1, 22,—47
iv. 1, 2, 19,—53
vi. 1, 1, 8,—7
— 1, 2, 19,—5
vii. 5, 2, 52,—9
ix. 4, 4, 4,—223
x. 3, 5, 12,—31
— 4, 2, 21,—14
— 6, 5, 4,—104
xi. 5, 1, 1,—48
— 5, 6, 1–7, 10,—18
—5, 8, 1,—4
xiv. 4, 3, 12,—9
— 5, 4, 10,—8
— 7, 1, 22,—33
Sattva guna, 12, 32, 150
Sātvata-saṁhitā (the Bhāgavata Pur.) 42
Satyakāma, 293
Satyavāha, 31
Satyavatī, 45
S'aunaka, 297, 305
S'aunakas, 55
Savitṛi, 263
Sāvitrī, 7, 14
Sāyaṇa, his Vedārtha-prakāśa, or commentary on R. V. quoted, 58 ff., 76, 78, 80, 105, 206, 215, 219
Sayugvan, 296
Siddhānta-muktāvali, 133
S'ikshā, 206
Skambha, 3
Skanda, 264
S'lokas, 9, 205
Smṛiti, 24, 181, and passim
Smṛitis, extent and conditions of their authority, 181 ff.
Sobhari, 229
Soma, god, 8, 223
——— source of inspiration, 264 ff.
Somaśarman, 92
Soul, unity of, 190, 203
Souls, diversity of, 169, 175
Sound, eternity of, affirmed, 71 ff., 90 ff.
——— denied, 89, 109, 137
Species or Genera eternal, 102
Sphoṭa, 44, 104 f., 136 f.
S'ramaṇa, 34
S'ruti, 24
Sruva, 20
Stoma, 224
Stuti, 224
Sudās, 277
S'ūdras, unfit for study of Veda, 42, 68, 99, 292 ff.
——— may attain the highest bliss, 178
S'uka, 43
Sumati, 224
Sumantu, 39, 40, 42, 45
Superior science, 31, 206
Sushṭuti, 224
Sūrya, 5 f., 266
Sūta, 39, 43
Svadhā, 20, 254
Svāhā, 254
Svar, 5, 7, 14
Svarbhānu, 276
Svāyambbuva manvantara, 39 f.
S'vetaketu, 155
S'vetāśvatara, sage, 284

S'vetāsvatara Upanishad quoted—
iv. 5,—165
— 10,—164
v. 2,—184, 188 ff., 283
vi. 6,—176
— 11,—171
— 18,—304
— 21,—284
S'yāvās'va, 222

T

Taittirīyas, 51
Taittirīya Āranyaka, vii. 8,—22
Taittirīya Brāhmana [?], 275
——— quoted—
ii. 3, 10, 1,—8
— 4, 2, 6,—278
— 8, 8, 5,—10, 234
iii. 3, 9, 1,—10
— 10, 11, 3,—16
— 12, 9, 1,—15
Taittirīya Samhitā quoted, i. 2, 1, 1,—59 f.
ii. 5, 8, 3,—212
vii. 3, 1, 4,—17
Taittirīya Upanishad, 65
——— comm. on, 191
Tamas, 12, 32, 150, 202
Tāmasa works, 202
Tapas, 250
Tarka-sangraha, 127, 133, 150
Taksh (to fabricate), 232, 235
Telemachus, 273
Thamyris, 269
Thirlwall, Bp., his history of Greece, 274
Tīkshnasringa, 264
Time, 4
Tiras'chī, 238
Tittiri, 77, 83
Tretā-yuga, 37, 45, 47
Triple science, 8
Trisarvī, 53
Trishtubh, 278
Trita, 212
Tritsus, 277
Trivrit, 11
Tvashtri, 252

U

Udayana Āchāryya, 128
Uddālaka Āruni, 286
Uktha, 224, 278
Ukthya, 11
Ulysses, 270
Unborn Female, 165, 171
Unborn Male, 165
Upabarit, 20
Upanishads, 1, 2, 138, and passim
——— superior to other parts of the Veda, 31
——— their doctrines uniform according to S'ankara, but really various, 108, 175
Upapurānas, 30
Urvās'ī, 45 ff., 205, 247
Us'anas, 249
Ushas, 243
Usmas, 44
Ushnih metre, 11, 278
Uttarārani, 47

V

Vāch, 8, 10, 104 f., 253 f., 256 f., 282
Vachas, 224
Vājasaneyins, 53
Vājasaneyi ritual, 53
——— Samhita quoted—
iii. 53,—229
v. 2,—46
xiii. 53,—9
xvi. 53,—60
xviii. 52,—223
xxx. 18,—53
Vājins, 51 f.
Vairūpa, 11
Vais'ampāyana, 39, 40, 42, 45, 50 ff.
Vais'eshika, 106, 175
Vaishnavas, 195
Vaisvānara (Agni), 237
Vaivasvata Manvantara, 31 f., 45
Vaktratunda (Ganes'a), 264
Vālakhilya xi. 6,—262
Vālmīki, 77
Varuna, 227, 243, 247 f., 262
——— source of inspiration, 262, 266
Varūtrī, 255
Vāsavyā, 41
Vashat, 254
Vashatkāra, 14, 21
Vasishtha, 34, 246 ff.
Vasishthas, 223, 246
Vāstoshpati, 253
Vasus, 102, 226, 234
Vatsa, 243
Vātsyāyana quoted, 115
Vāyu, 5 f., 222
Vāyu Purāna, 27 f., 39, 51
Vedāntas, 1, see Upanishads
Vedānta Sūtras, 98 ff.
Vedārtha-prakās'a on R.V. quoted, 58 ff., 80
——— on T.S., 83 ff.
Vedas, general account of, 1 f.
——— division into Mantra and Brāhmana, 1, 62
——— sprang from sacrifice of Purusha, 3
——— from Skambha, 3
——— from Indra, 4
——— from Time, 4
——— from the Odana-oblation, 4
——— objects of worship and supplication, 4
——— sprang from Agni, Vāyu, and Sūrya, 4 f., 61
——— their eternity affirmed, 6, 18, 71, 76, 78, 105, 303
——— their eternity denied, 109, 117, 119, 130 134
——— their superhuman character (apaurusheyatva), 6
——— sources of the names, forms, and functions of creatures, 6, 16, 104
——— created by Prajāpati and from the waters, 8, 14
——— the breathing of the great Being, 8, 135, 205 ——— created by means of speech and soul, 9
——— one with speech, mind, and breath, 9

Vedas dug from the mind-ocean, 10
——— are the hair of Prajāpati's beard, 10
——— the offspring of Vāch, 10
——— created separately from Brahmā's mouths, 10 f.
——— characterized severally by the different guṇas, 12
——— created by Brahmā, 12
——— the Gāyatrī their mother, 12 f.
——— created from different parts of Brahma's body, 13
——— created by Achyuta, 14
——— Sarasvatī their mother, 14
——— all things comprehended in them, 15
——— sources respectively of form, motion, and heat, 15
——— breathings of Maheśvara, 16
——— infinite in extent, 17
——— Vishṇu composed of them, 18, 27
——— study of, a sacrifice, 20
——— study of, its benefits, 21
——— encomiums on study of, 21 ff.
——— useless to the depraved, 25
——— recollecting and repeating them removes sin, 25
——— the energy and body of Vishṇu, and severally the substance of Brahmā, Vishṇu, and Rudra, 27
——— created after the Purāṇas, 27
——— insufficient without the Itihāsas and the Purāṇas, 29
——— corrected by Brahma-vaivartta Purāṇa, 30
Vedas voice of Brahma, 30
——— their hymns form the inferior science, 31
——— classed with other śāstras, 31, 33
——— their ceremonial part decried in the Bhagavad Gīta, Chhāndogya Upanishad, and Bhāgavata Purāṇa, 32 ff.
——— in the state of profound sleep are no Vedas, 34
——— Soul not known through them, 36
——— originally one, 37 ff., 47
——— division of 37 ff.
——— their original extent, 38, 40 ——— necessity for their division, 40 f.
——— cannot be heard by women, Śūdras, etc., 42, 299
——— discrepant account of their division, 47
——— carried off by two Asuras but recovered by Brahmā, 49
——— form the eye of Brahmā, 49
——— their periodical disappearance, 49
——— mutual hostility of adherents of different Vedas, 49 ff.
——— schism among adherents of Yajur-veda, and its separation into white and black, 50 ff.
——— vindication of them against objections, and defence of their authority, by their commentators, 57 ff.
——— arguments of the Mīmānsakas in favour of their eternity and authority, 70 ff.
——— "seen" by the rishis, 85, 212
——— reasonings of the Vedantists on their eternity and authority, 98 ff.
——— sprang from Brahma, 106
Vedas, how interpreted by theologians, 107
——— arguments of the adherents of the Nyāya, Vaiśeshika, and Sānkhya in support of their authority, but against their eternity, 108 ff.
——— texts of, interpreted variously by different philosophers, 138 ff.
——— distinguished from all other Śāstras by being independent and infallible, 179 ff.
——— recapitulation of arguments in support of their authority, with remarks, 207 ff.
——— ideas of the rishis regarding the origin of their hymns, 217 ff.
——— hymns of, distinguished as old and new, 224 ff.
——— hymns of, made, fabricated, or generated, by the rishis, 232 ff.
——— hymns of, ascribed to the inspiration of the gods, 252 ff.
——— hymns of, a magical power attributed to, 275 ff.
——— sprang from the leavings of the sacrifice, 287
Vedhas, 219
Verbal brahma, 35
Videha, 56
Vidhi, 64
Vidura, 295, 300
Vidvan-moda-taraṅgiṇī, 208
Vijnāna Bhikshu, 133, 172, 196, and passim
Vidyā, 205
Vimada, 239 f., 253
Vimadas, 239
Vipaschit, 219
Vipra, 218
Virāj metre, 11, 278
Virochana, 142
Virūpa, 69, 75, 220, 246, 267
Vishṇu, 37, 40, 53, 244, 262, 266

Vishnu, composed of the Veda, 18, 127
Vishnu Purāna quoted—
i. 2, 13,—4
— 5, 48 ff.,—10
— 5, 58,—16
— 17, 54,—201
ii. 11, 5 ff.,—26
iii. 2, 12,—49
— 2, 18 ff.,—37
— 3, 4 ff.,—37
— 3, 19 ff.,—18
— 4, 1 ff.,—38
— 5, 2 ff.,—49
— 6, 22 f.,—18
— 18, 22,—128
iv. 6,—47
Vis'vāmitra, 247 f., 276, 283
Vis'vanātha Bhaṭṭāchārya, 108, 217
Vis'vāvasu, 260
Visvedevas, 102
Vivasvat, 286
Viyukta, 126
Vrihaduktha, 234
Vrihat-sāma, 11
Vrihaspati, heretical teacher, 202
Vrihaspati, author of a smriti, 181
Vrisha, 264
Vrittra, 228
Vyāhritis, 44
Vyādha, 300
Vyākhyānas, 205
Vyāsa, 37, 77, 89

W

Weber, Prof., Ind. Lit., 53
——— Ind. Stud., 22, 47, 53 ff., 193 f., 296, and passim
——— Vāj. San. Spec., 275
Whitney, Prof., his opinion referred to, 258
Wilson, Prof. H. H., 2
——— translation of Vishnu Purāna, 11, 52, 193, and passim ——— translation of Rig-veda, 2
——— Sānkhya kārikā, 44
Women unfit for the study of the Veda, 42, 68

Y

Yajnadatta, 102
Yājna-paribhāshā, 62
Yājnavalkya, 50 ff.
Yajush, 224
Yajush-verses, 11
Yama (Agni ?), 247
Yama, 245, 250
Yāska, see Nirukta
Yoga aphorisms, 184, 201
Yogas, 137
Yogins, 126
Yukta, 126

THE END.

STEPHEN AUSTIN, PRINTER, HERTFORD.

A

CATALOGUE OF IMPORTANT WORKS,

IN ALL DEPARTMENTS OF

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE,

PUBLISHED BY

TRÜBNER & CO.,

60, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

ADDRESS OF THE ASSEMBLED STATES OF SCHLESWIG TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF DENMARK. 8vo. pp. 32. 1861. 1*s.*

Adler.—THE SECOND DAYS OF THE FESTIVALS. A Sermon delivered at the New Synagogue, Great St. Helen's, on the second day of Passover, 5628, by the Rev. Dr. Adler, Chief Rabbi. Printed by request. 8vo., pp. 16, sewed. 1868. 6*d.*

ADMINISTRATION (THE) OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES. Correspondence between Hon. J. A. Campbell and Hon. W. H. Seward, all of which was laid before the Provisional Congress, on Saturday, by President Davis. 8vo. sewed, pp. 8. 1861. 1*s.*

Æsop.—THE FABLES OF ÆSOP. With a Life of the Author, Illustrated with 111 Engravings, from Original Designs by Herrick, handsomely printed on toned paper. 8vo. pp. xiii. and 311. 1865. Cloth, extra gilt edges. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Agassiz.—AN ESSAY ON CLASSIFICATION. By Louis Agassiz. 8vo. pp. viii. and 381. Cloth. 1859. 12*s.*

Agassiz.—METHODS OF STUDY IN NATURAL HISTORY. By L. Agassiz. 12mo. pp. 319. Cloth. 1864. 5*s.* 6*d.*

Agassiz.—GEOLOGICAL SKETCHES. By L. Agassiz. With portrait and numerous Illustrations. 1 Vol., crown 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 311. 1866. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Agassiz.—JOURNEY IN BRAZIL. By Professor and Mrs. Louis Agassiz. In 1 large 8vo. vol. with numerous Illustrations, 8vo. pp. xx. 540. 1868. 21*s.*

Agassiz.—SEA-SIDE STUDIES IN NATURAL HISTORY. By Elizabeth C. and Alexander Agassiz. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo. pp. vi. and 155. 1865. 12*s.*

Agüero.—BIOGRAFIAS DE CUBANOS DISTINGUIDOS. Por P. De Agüero. I. Don José Antonio Saco. En 8vo. mayor, 88 páginas, con retrato. 1860. 6*s.*

Agüero.—LA GUERRA DE ITALIA, y la Paz de Villafranca, con todos sus incidentes y sus complicaciones y consecuencias politicas hasta la nueva constitucion de la Peninsula. Coleccion de artículos publicados en varios Periódicos de Europa y América. Por P. de Agüero. Un tomo en 8vo. mayor, de 138 páginas. 1859. 12*s.*

Ahn.—Dr. F. Ahn's Practical Grammar of the German Language. A New Edition. By Dr. Dawson Turner, Head Master of Royal Institution School, Liverpool. Crown 8vo. pp. cxii. and 430. Cloth. 1866. 5*s.*

Ahn.—New, Practical, and Easy Method of Learning the German Language. By Dr. F. Ahn. First and Second Course. Bound in one vol. 12mo. cloth, pp. 86 and 120. 1866. 3*s.*

Ahn.—Key to Ditto. 12mo. sewed, pp. 40. 8*d.*

Ahn.—Manual of German and English Conversations, or Vade Mecum for English Travellers. 12mo. cloth, pp. 130. 1861. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Ahn.—German Commercial Letter Writer, with Explanatory Introductions in English, and an Index of Words in French and English. By Dr. F. Ahn. 12mo. cloth, pp. 248. 1861. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Ahn.—New, Practical, and Easy Method of Learning the French Language. By Dr. F. Ahn. First Course and Second Course, 12mo. cloth, each 1*s.* 6*d.* The Two Courses in one vol. 12mo. cloth, pp. 114 and 170. 1865. 3*s.*

Ahn.—New, Practical, and Easy Method of Learning the French Language. Third Course, containing a French Reader, with Notes and Vocabulary. By H. W. Ehrlich. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 125. 1866. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Ahn.—Manual of French and English Conversations, for the use of Schools and Travellers. By Dr. F. Ahn. 12mo., pp. viii. and 200. Cloth. 1862. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Ahn.—French Commercial Letter Writer, on the same Plan. By Dr. F. Ahn. 12mo. cloth, pp. 228. 1866. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Ahn.—New, Practical, and Easy Method of Learning the Italian Language. By Dr. F. Ahn. First and Second Course. 12mo. pp. 198. 1863. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Ahn.—Key to Ditto. 12mo. sewed, pp. 22. 1865. 1*s.*

Ahn.—New, Practical, and Easy Method of Learning the Dutch Language, being a complete Grammar, with Selections. By Dr. F. Ahn. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 166. 1862. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Ahn.—Ahn's Course. Latin Grammar for Beginners. By W. Ihne, Ph. D. 12mo. pp. vi. and 184, cloth. 1864. 3*s.*

Alcock.—A Practical Grammar of the Japanese Language. By Sir Rutherford Alcock, Resident British Minister at Jeddo. 4to. pp. 62, sewed, 18*s.*

Alcock.—Familiar Dialogues in Japanese, with English and French Translations, for the Use of Students. By Sir Rutherford Alcock. 8vo. pp. viii. and 40, sewed. 1863. 5*s.*

Alger.—A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life. With a complete Bibliography of the Subject. By William Rounseville Alger. 4th Edition, thoroughly revised. 8vo. cloth, pp. x. and 914 1866. 18*s.*

Alger.—The Friendships of Women. By William Rounseville Alger. 12mo. cloth, pp. xvi. and 416. 1867. 8*s.*

Alger.—The Genius of Solitude. The Solitudes of Nature and of Man, or the Loneliness of Human Life. By Rev. W. R. Alger. 16mo. pp. 412, cloth. 1867. 9*s.*

Alger.—The Poetry of the Orient. By William Rounseville Alger. 12mo., pp. xii. and 337, cloth. 1867. 9*s.*

Allibone.—A Critical Dictionary of English Literature, and British and American Authors, from the Earliest Accounts to the Middle of the Nineteenth Century. By S. Austin Allibone. Vol. I. royal 8vo. pp. 1,006, cloth. 1859. £1 4*s.* (Vol. II. nearly ready).

Althaus.—A Treatise on Medical Electricity, Theoretical and Practical. By Julius Althaus, M.D. 8vo. pp. viii. and 352. 1859. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Althaus.—The Spas of Europe. By Julius Althaus, M.D. 8vo. cloth, pp. 516. 1862. 12*s.*

"This is decidedly the most elaborate and complete work on mineral waters which has hitherto appeared in the English language."—British Medical Journal.

"A book of research and authority, written by one who is evidently master of his subject, and which we can confidently recommend to the reader."—Lancet.

"The book is well timed and well done."—Cornhill Mag.

"We can recommend Dr. Althaus's work as by far the best that has been written in our language, with a medical object in view."—Athenæum.

Althaus.—On the Value of Galvanism in the Treatment of Paralysis, Neuralgia, Loss of Voice, Rheumatism, and other Diseases. By Julius Althaus, M.D. Fourth Edition. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 236. 1866. 3*s.* 6*d.*

American Bible Union.—Revised Version of the Holy Scriptures, viz.:—

Book of Job. The common English Version, the Hebrew Text, and the Revised Version. With an Introduction and Notes. By T. J. Conant. 4to. boards, pp. xxx. and 166. 1859. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Gospel by Matthew. The Common English Version and the Received Greek Text; with a Revised Version, and Critical and Philological Notes. By T. J. Conant, D.D Pp. xl. and 172. With an Appendix on the Meaning and Use of Baptizein. Pp. 106. 4to. boards. 8*s.*

Gospel according to Mark. Translated from the Greek, on the Basis of the Common English Version, with Notes. 4to. boards, pp. vi. and 134. 1858. 5*s.*

Gospel by John. Ditto. 4to. boards, pp. xv. and 172. 1859. 5*s.*

Acts of the Apostles. Ditto. 4to. boards, pp. iv. and 224. 1858. 6*s.*

Epistle to the Ephesians. Ditto. 4to. boards, pp. vi. and 40. 1857. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Epistles of Paul to the Thessalonians. Ditto. 4to. boards, pp. viii. and 74. 1858. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Epistles of Paul to Timothy and Titus. Ditto. 4to. boards, pp. vi. and 78. 1860. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Epistle of Paul to Philemon; Ditto. 4to. sewed, pp. 404. 1*s.* 6*d.* 12mo. cloth, 2*s.* 1860.

Epistle to the Hebrews. 4to. boards, pp. iv. and 90. 1857. 4*s.*

Second Epistle of Peter, Epistles of John and Jude, and the Revelation. Ditto. 4to. pp. 254. 5*s.*

The New Testament of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Forty-fifth Thousand. 32mo. cloth, pp. 488. 1866. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Ditto. Thirty-eighth Thousand. 12mo. cloth, pp. 488. 1866. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Ditto. Demy 8vo. cloth, pp. 488. 1866. 7*s.* 6*d.*

American Bible Union.—Il Nuovo Testamento. Traduizione dal Greco per Cura di G. Achilli. Post 8vo. roan, pp. 343. New York, 1854. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Americans (The) Defended. By an American. Being a Letter to one of his Countrymen in Europe, in answer to inquiries concerning the late imputations of dishonour upon the United States. 8vo. sewed, pp. 38. 1844. 1*s.*

Anderson.—PRACTICAL MERCANTILE CORRESPONDENCE. A collection of Modern Letters of Business, with Notes, Critical and Explanatory, and an Appendix, containing a Dictionary of Commercial Technicalities, pro forma Invoices, Account Sales, Bills of Lading, and Bills of Exchange; also an explanation of the German Chain Rule. 17th Edition, revised and enlarged. By William Anderson. 12mo. cloth, pp. 288. 1860. 5*s.*

Anderson and Tugman.—MERCANTILE CORRESPONDENCE, containing a collection of Commercial Letters, in Portuguese and English, with their translation on opposite pages, for the use of Business Men and of Students in either of the Languages, treating in modern style of the system of business in the principal Commercial Cities of the World. Accompanied by pro forma Accounts, Sales, Invoices, Bills of Lading, Drafts etc. With an Introduction and copious Notes. By William Anderson and James E. Tugman. 12mo. cloth, pp. xi. and 193. 1867. 6*s.*

Andrews.—A DICTIONARY OF THE HAWAIIAN LANGUAGE, to which is appended an English-Hawaiian Vocabulary, and a Chronological Table of remarkable Events. By Lorrin Andrews. 8vo, cloth, pp. xvi. and 560. Honolulu, 1865. £1 11*s.* 6*d.*

Anglicus.—A VOICE FROM THE MOTHERLAND, answering Mrs. H. Beecher Stowe's Appeal. By Civis Anglicus. 8vo. sewed, pp. 46. 1863. 1*s.*

Anthropological Review, THE. Vol. I. 1863. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxxiv. and 499. 18*s.*

Ditto	Ditto, Vol. II.	1864.	8vo. cloth, pp. 347 and ccxcii.	18*s.*
Ditto	Ditto, „ III.	1865.	Ditto pp. 378 and cccxviii.	18*s.*
Ditto	Ditto, „ IV.	1866.	Ditto pp. 408 and ccxiv.	18*s.*
Ditto	Ditto, „ V.	1867.	Ditto pp. 376 and cclxxii.	18*s.*

Anthropological Society.—INTRODUCTORY ADDRESS ON THE STUDY OF ANTHROPOLOGY, delivered before the Anthropological Society of London, on the 24th of February. By James Hunt, Ph. D., F.S.A., F.R.S.L., President. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 20. 1863. 6*d.*

Anthropological Society.— MEMOIRS read before the Anthropological Society of London, 1863—1864. In one vol., 8vo. cloth, pp. 542. 21*s.*

CONTENTS.—I. On the Negro's Place in Nature. By James Hunt, Ph. D., F.S.A., F.R.S.L., F.A.S.L., President of the Anthropological Society of London.—II. On the Weight of the Brain in the Negro. By Thomas B. Peacock, M.D., F.R.C.P., F.A.S.L.—III. Observations on the Past and Present Populations of the New World. By W. Bollaert, Esq., F.A.S.L.—IV. On the Two Principal Forms of Ancient British and Gaulish Skulls. By J. Thurnam, Esq., M.D., F.A.S.L. With Lithographic Plates and Woodcuts.—V. Introduction to the Palæography of America; or, Observations on Ancient Picture and Figurative Writing in the New World; on the Fictitious Writing in North America; on the Quipu of the Peruvians, and Examination of Spurious Quipus By William Bollaert, Esq., F.A.S.L.—VI.—Viti and its Inhabitauts. By W. T. Pritchard. Esq., F.R.G.S., F.A.S.L.—VII. On the Astronomy of the Red Man of the New World. By W. Bollaert, Esq., F.A.S.L.—VIII. The Neanderthal Skull: its peculiar formation considered anatomically. By J. Barnard Davis, M.D., F.S.A., F.A.S.L.—IX. On the Discovery of large Kist-vaens on the "Muckle Heog," in the Island of Unst (Shetland), containing Urns of Chloritic Schist. By George E. Roberts, Esq., F.G.S., Hon. Sec. A.S.L. With Notes on the Human Remains. By C. Carter Blake, Esq., F.A.S.L., F.G.S.—X. Notes on some Facts connected with the Dahoman. By Capt. Richard F. Burton, V.P.A.S.L.—XI. On certain Anthropological Matters connected with the South Sea Islanders (the Samoans). By W. T. Pritchard, Esq., F.R.G.S., F.A.S.L.—XII. On the Phallic Worship of India. By Edward Sellon.—XIII. The History of Anthropology. By T. Bendyshe, M.A., F.A.S.L., Vice-President A.S.L.—XIV. On the Two Principal Forms of Ancient British and Gaulish Skulls. Part II. with Appendix of Tables of Measurement By John Thurnam, M.D., F.S.A., F.A.S.L.—APPENDIX. On the Weight of the Brain and Capacity of the Cranial Cavity of the Negro. By Thomas B. Peacock, M.D., F.R.C.P., F.A.S.L.

Anthropological Society.—MEMOIRS read before the Anthropological Society of London, 1863—1866. Vol. II. 8vo. cloth, pp. x. and 464. 1866. 21*s.*

CONTENTS.—I. The Difference between the Larynx of the White Man and Negro. By Dr. Gibb.—II. On the Dervishes of the East. By Arminius Vambéry.—III. Origin and Customs of the Gallinas of Sierra Leone. By J. Meyer Harris.—IV. On the Permanence of Anthropological Types. By Dr. Beddoe.—V. The Maya Alphabet. By Wm. Bollaert.—VI. The People of Spain. By H. J. C. Beavan.—VII. Genealogy and Anthropology. By G. M. Marshall.—VIII. Simious Skulls. By C. Carter Blake.—IX. A New Goniometer. By Dr Paul Broca.—X. Anthropology of the New World. By Wm. Bollaert.—XI. On the Psychical Characteristics of the English. By Luke Owen Pike.—XII. Iconography of the Skull. By W. H. Wesley.—XIII. Orthographic Projection of the Skull. By A. Higgins.—XIV. On Hindu Neology. By Major S. R. I. Owen.—XV. The Brochs of Orkney. By George Petrie.—XVI. Ancient Caithness Remains. By Jos. Anderson.—XVII. Description of Living Microcephale. By Dr. Shortt.—XVIII. Notes on an Hermaphrodite. By Captain Burton.—XIX. On the Sacti Puja. By E. Sellon.—XX. Resemblance of Inscriptions on British and American Rocks. By Dr. Seemann.—XXI. Sterility of the Union of White and Black Races. By R. B. N. Walker.—XXII. Analogous Forms of Flint Implements. By H. M. Westropp.—XXIII. Explorations in Unst, Brassay, and Zetland. By Dr. Hunt, President.—XXIV. Report of Expedition to Zetland. By Ralph Tate.—XXV. The Head-forms of the West of England. By Dr. Beddoe.—XXVI. Explorations in the Kirkhead Cave at Ulverstone. By J. P. Morris.—XXVII. On the Influence of Peat on the Human Body. By Dr. Hunt.—XXVIII. On Stone Inscriptions in the Island of Brassay. By Dr. Hunt.—XXIX. The History of Ancient Slavery. By Dr. John Bower.—XXX. Blood Relationship in Marriage. By Dr. Arthur Mitchell.

Anthropology.—ANTHROPOLOGY AND THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION. Reprinted from The Anthropological Review for October, 1865. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 22. 1865. 6*d.*

Anthropological Society.—ANNIVERSARY ADDRESSES, 1863, 1864, and 1865. Each 1*s.*

Apel.—PROSE SPECIMENS FOR TRANSLATION INTO GERMAN, with copious Vocabularies and Explanations. By H. Apel. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 246. London, 1862. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Arago.—LES ARISTOCRATIES. A Comedy in Verse. By Etienne Arago. Edited, with English Notes and Notice on Etienne Arago, by the Rev. P. H. Brette, B.D., Head Master of the French School, Christ's Hospital, Examiner in the University of London. Fcap. 8vo. pp. 244, cloth. 1868. 4*s.*

Asher.—ON THE STUDY OF MODERN LANGUAGES in general, and of the English Language in particular. An Essay. By David Asher, Ph. D. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 80. 1859. 2*s.*

Asiatic Society.—JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND, from the Commencement to 1863. First Series, complete in 20 Vols. 8vo., with many Plates. Price £10; or in single Numbers, as follows:—Nos. 1 to 14, 6*s.* each; No. 15, 2 Parts, 4*s.* each; No. 16, 2 Parts, 4*s.* each; No. 17, 2 Parts, 4*s.* each; No. 18, 6*s.* These 18 Numbers form Vols. I. to IX.—Vol. X., Part 1, op.; Part 2, 5*s.*; Part 3, 5*s.*—Vol. XI., Part 1, 6*s.*; Part 2 not published.—Vol. XII., 2 Parts, 6*s.* each.—Vol. XIII., 2 Parts, 6*s.* each.—Vol. XIV., Part 1, 5*s.*; Part 2 not published.—Vol. XV.., Part 1, 6*s.*; Part 2, with Maps, 10*s.*—Vol. XVI., 2 Parts, 6*s.* each.—Vol. XVII., 2 Parts, 6*s.* each.—Vol. XVIII., 2 Parts, 6*s.* each.—Vol. XIX., Parts 1 to 4, 16*s.*—Vol. XX., 3 Parts, 4*s.* each.

Asiatic Society.—JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. New Series. Vol. I. 8vo. sewed, pp. 32 and 490. 16*s.*

CONTENTS.—I. Vajra-chhedikâ, the "Kin Kong King," or Diamond Sûtra. Translated from the Chinese by the Rev. S. Beal, Chaplain, R.N.—II. The Pâramitâ-hridaya Sûtra, or, in Chinese, "Mo-ho-pô-ye-po-lo-mih-to-sin-king," i.e. "The Great Pâramitâ Heart Sûtra." Translated from the Chinese by the Rev. S. Beal, Chaplain, R.N.—III. On the Preservation of National Literature in the East. By Colonel F. J. Goldsmid.—IV. On the Agricultural, Commercial, Financial, and Military Statistics of Ceylon. By E. R. Power, Esq.—V. Contributions to a

Knowledge of the Vedic Theogony and Mythology. By J. Muir, D.C.L., LL.D.—VI. A Tabular List of Original Works and Translations, published by the late Dutch Government of Ceylon at their Printing Press at Colombo. Compiled by Mr. Mat. P. J. Vandaatje, of Colombo.—VII. Assyrian and Hebrew Chronology compared, with a view of showing the extent to which the Hebrew Chronology of Ussher must be modified, in conformity with the Assyrian Canon. By J. W. Bosanquet, Esq.—VIII. On the Existing Dictionaries of the Malay Language. By Dr. H. N. van der Tuuk.—IX. Bilingual Readings: Cuneiform and Phœnician. Notes on some Tablets in the British Museum, containing Bilingual Legends (Assyrian and Phœnician). By Major-General Sir H. Rawlinson, K.C.B., Director R.A.S.—X. Translations of Three Copper-plate Inscriptions of the Fourth Century A.D., and Notices of the Châlukya and Gurjjara Dynasties. By Professor J. Dowson, Staff College, Sandhurst.—XI. Yama and the Doctrine of a Future Life, according to the Rig-Yajur-, and Atharva-Vedas. By J. Muir, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D. —XII. On the Jyotisha Observation of the Place of the Colures, and the Date derivable from it. By William D. Whitney, Esq., Professor of Sanskrit in Yale College, New Haven, U.S.— Note on the preceding Article. By Sir Edward Colebrooke, Bart., M.P., President R.A.S.— XIII. Progress of the Vedic Religion towards Abstract Conceptions of the Deity. By J. Muir, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D.—XIV. Brief Notes on the Age and Authenticity of the Work of Aryabhata, Varâhamihira, Brahmagupta, Bhattotpala, and Bhâskarâchârya. By Dr. Bhâu Dâjî, Honorary Member R.A.S.—XV. Outlines of a Grammar of the Malagasy Language. By H. N. Van der Tuuk.—XVI. On the Identity of Xandrames and Krananda. By Edward Thomas, Esq.

Vol. II. In Two Parts. pp. 522. Price 16*s*.

Contents.—I. Contributions to a Knowledge of Vedic Theogony and Mythology. No. 2. By J. Muir, Esq.—II. Miscellaneous Hymns from the Rig-and Atharva-Vedas. By J. Muir, Esq. —III. Five Hundred questions on the Social Condition of the Natives of Bengal. By the Rev. J. Long.—IV. Short account of the Malay Manuscripts belonging to the Royal Asiatic Society. By Dr. H. N. Van der Tuuk.—V. Translation of the Amitâbha Sûtra from the Chinese. By the Rev. S. Beal, Chaplain Royal Navy.—VI. The initial coinage of Bengal. By Edward Thomas, Esq.—VII. Specimens of an Assyrian Dictionary. By Edwin Norris, Esq.—VIII. On the Relations of the Priests to the other classes of Indian Society in the Vedic age. By J. Muir, Esq.—IX. On the Interpretation of the Veda. By the same. -X. An Attempt to Translate from the Chinese a work known as the Confessional Services of the great compassionate Kwan Yin, possessing 1,000 hands and 1,000 eyes. By the Rev. S. Beal, Chaplain Royal Navy. —XI. The Hymns of the Gaupaâyanas and the Legend of King Asamâti. By Professor Max Müller, M.A., Honorary Member Royal Asiatic Society.—XII. Specimen Chapters of an Assyrian Grammar. By the Rev. E. Hincks, D.D., Honorary Member Royal Asiatic Society.

Asiatic Society.—Transactions of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland. Complete in 3 vols. 4to., 80 Plates of Facsimiles, etc., cloth. London, 1827 to 1835. Published at £9 5*s*.; reduced to £1 11*s*. 6*d*.
The above contains contributions by Professor Wilson, G. C. Haughton, Davis, Morrison, Colebrooke, Humboldt, Dorn, Grotefend, and other eminent oriental scholars.

Atharva Veda Prâtiçâkhya, The, or Çâunakîyâ Caturâdhyâyikâ. Text, Translation and Notes. By William D. Whitney, Professor of Sanskrit in Yale College. 8vo., pp. 286. Boards. 1862. 12*s*.

Atkinson.—Change of Air considered with regard to Atmospheric Pressure and its Electric and Magnetic Concomitants, in the Treatment of Consumption and Chronic Disease; with a General Commentary on the most Eligible Localities for Invalids. By J. C. Atkinson, M.D. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 142. 1867. 4*s*. 6*d*.

Atkinson and Martineau.—Letters on the Laws of Man's Nature and Development. By Henry George Atkinson, F.G.S., and Harriet Martineau. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 390. 1851. 5*s*.

Auctores Sanscriti. Edited for the Sanskrit Text Society, under the supervision of Theodor Goldstücker, Vol. I., containing the Jaiminîya-Nyâya-Mâlâ-Vistara. Parts I. to V., large 4to. sewed, pp. 400. 1863. 10*s*. each.

Augier.—Diane. A Drama in Verse. By Émile Augier. Edited with English Notes and Notice on Augier. By Theodore Karcher, LL.B., of the Royal Military Academy and the University of London. 12mo. cloth, pp. xiii. and 146. 1867. 2*s*. 6*d*.

Austin.—A Practical Treatise on the Preparation, Combination, and Application of Calcareous and Hydraulic Limes and Cements. To which is added many useful Recipes for various Scientific, Mercantile, and Domestic Purposes. By James G. Austin, Architect. 12mo. cloth, pp. 192. 1862. 5*s*.

Avas I Hind; or, A Voice from the Ganges. Being a Solution of the true Source of Christianity. By an Indian Officer. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xix. and 222. 1861. 5s.

Baconi, Francisci, Verulamiensis Sermones Fideles, sive interiora rerum, ad Latinam orationem emendatiorem revocavit philologus Latinus. 12mo. cloth, pp. xxvi. and 272. 1861. 3s.

Bader.—The Natural and Morbid Changes of the Human Eye, and their Treatment. By C. Bader, Ophthalmic Assistant-Surgeon to Guy's Hospital. Medium 8vo. cloth pp. viii. and 506. 1868. 16s.

Bader.—Plates illustrating the Natural and Morbid Changes of the Human Eye. By C. Bader, Ophthalmic Assistant-Surgeon to Guy's Hospital. Six Chromo-Lithographic Plates, each containing the figures of six Eyes, and four Lithographed Plates with figures of Instruments. With an explanatory text of 32 pages. Medium 8vo. in a Portfolio. 21s.

Price for Text and Atlas taken together, 32s.

Baitál Pachisi (The); or Twenty-five Tales of a Demon. A New Edition of the Hindí text, with each word expressed in the Hindústání character immediately under the corresponding word in the Nágarí; and with a perfectly literal English interlinear translation, accompanied by a free translation in English at the foot of each page, and explanatory notes. By W. Burckhardt Barker, M.R.A.S., Oriental Interpreter and Professor of the Arabic, Turkish, Persian, and Hindústání languages at Eton. Edited by E. B. Eastwick, F.R.S., Professor of Oriental languages, and Librarian in the East India College. 8vo., pp. viii. and 370. Cloth. 1855. 12s.

Baker.—Lipidhárá. A Murathi Primer, compiled expressly for the use of accepted candidates for the Bombay Civil Service, by F. P. Baker formerly Superintendent of Government Murathi and Canarese Schools in the Bombay Presidency, and lithographed under his supervision. 8vo., pp. 60, sewed. 1868. 5s.

Ballantyne.—Elements of Hindi and Braj Bhakha Grammar, Compiled for the use of the East India College at Haileybury. By James R. Ballantyne. Second Edition. Crown 8vo., pp. 38. Cloth. 1868. 5s.

Barlow.—Francesca da Rimini, Her Lament and Vindication; with a brief notice of the Malatesti, e'l Mastin Vecchio, e'l nuovo da Verrucchio. By Henry Clark Barlow, M.D., Academico Correspondente de Quiritti di Roma etc., etc. 8vo. sewed, pp. 52. 1859. 1s. 6d.

Barlow.—Il Gran Rifiuto, What it was, Who made it, and how fatal to Dante Allighieri. A dissertation on Verses 58 to 65 of the Third Canto of the Inferno. By H. C. Barlow, M.D., Author of "Francisca da Rimini, her Lament and Vindication"; "Letteratura Dantesca," etc., etc., etc. 8vo. sewed, pp. 22. 1862. 1s.

Barlow.—Il Conte Ugolino e l'Arcivescovo Ruggieri, a Sketch from the Pisan Chronicles. By H. C. Barlow, M.D. 8vo. sewed, pp. 24. 1862. 1s.

Barlow.—The Young King and Bertrand de Born. By H. C. Barlow, M.D. 8vo. sewed, pp. 35. 1862. 1s.

Barnstorff.—A Key to Shakspeare's Sonnets. By D. Barnstorff. Translated from the German by T. J. Graham. 8vo. cloth, pp. 216. 1862. 6s.

Bartlett.—Dictionary of Americanisms. A Glossary of Words and Phrases colloquially used in the United States. By John Russell Bartlett. Second Edition, considerably enlarged and improved. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxxii. and 524. 1860. 16*s.*

Barton.—The Reality, but NOT the Duration of Future Punishment, is Revealed. An Appeal to Scripture. By John Barton, M.A. 8vo. sewed, pp. 40. 1866. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Beal.—The Travels of the Buddhist Pilgrim Fah Hian, translated from the Chinese, with Notes and Prolegomena. By S. Beal, a Chaplain in H. M.'s Fleet, a member of the Royal Asiatic Society, and formerly of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo.

Beeston.—The Temporalities of the Established Church as they are and as they might be; collected from authentic Public Records. By William Beeston. 8vo. sewed, pp. 36. 1850. 1*s.*

Beigel.—The Examination and Confession of certain Witches at Chelmsford, in the County of Essex, on the 26th day of July, 1556. Communicated and Prefaced by Hermann Beigel, M.D. Small 4to., pp. 49. 1864. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Bell.—Visible Speech. The Science of Universal Alphabetics; or, Self-Interpreting Physiological Letters, for the Writing of all Languages in One Alphabet. Illustrated by Tables, Diagrams, and Examples. By Alexander Melville Bell, F.E.I.S., F.R.S.S.A., Professor of Vocal Physiology, Lecturer on Elocution in University College, London; Author of "Principles of Speech and Cure of Stammering," "Elocutionary Manual," "Standard Elocutionist." "Emphasized Liturgy," "Reporter's Manual," etc., etc. Inaugural Edition. 4to. cloth, pp. 126. 1867. 15*s.*

Bell.—English Visible Speech for the Million, for communicating the Exact Pronunciation of the Language to Native or Foreign Learners, and for Teaching Children and illiterate Adults to Read in a few Days. By Alexander Melville Bell, F.E.I.S., F.R.S.S.A., Lecturer on Elocution in University College, London. 4to. sewed, pp. 16. 1867. 1*s.*

Bell.—The English in India. Letters from Nagpore. Written in 1857-8. By Captain Evans Bell. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 202. 1859. 5*s.*

Bell.—The Empire in India; Letters from Madras and other Places. By Major Evans Bell. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 412. 1864. 8*s.* 6*d.*

"We commend the letters of Major Bell to every friend of India. He is not only an ardent lover of justice in the abstract, but he has gone deeply into the questions which he discusses, and reasons on them with a force of argument quite irresistible."—Athenæum.

Bell.—Remarks on the Mysore Blue Book, with a Few Words to Mr. R. D. Mangles. By Major Evans Bell. 8vo. sewed, pp. xi. and 74. 1866. 2*s.*

Bell.—The Mysore Reversion. By Major Evans Bell. Second Edition. With Remarks on the Parliamentary Papers, and a few Words to Mr. R. D. Mangles. 8vo. cloth, pp. xvi. and 292. London, 1866. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Bell.—Retrospects and Prospects of Indian Policy. By Major Evans Bell, late of the Madras Staff Corps, author of "The Empire in India," "The Mysore Reversion," etc. 8vo. pp. vi. and 344, cloth, 1868. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Bellew.—A Dictionary of the Pukkhto or Pukshto Language, in which the Words are traced to their Sources in the Indian and Persian Languages. With a Reversed Part, or English and Pukkhto. By Henry Walter Bellew, Assistant Surgeon, Bengal Army. Small 4to., pp. 356. 1867. 42*s.*

Bellew.—A Grammar of the Pukkhto or Pukshto Language, on a New and Improved System, combining Brevity with practical Utility, and including Exercises and Dialogues, intended to facilitate the Acquisition of the Colloquial. By Henry Walter Bellew, Assistant Surgeon, Bengal Army. Small 4to., pp. 155. London, 1867. 1*l.* 1*s.*

Bellows.—English Outline Vocabulary for the use of Students of the Chinese, Japanese, and other Languages. Arranged by John Bellows. With Notes on the Writing of Chinese with Roman Letters. By Professor Summers, King's College, London. 1 vol. crown 8vo., pp. vi. and 368, cloth. 1867. 6*s.*

Bellows.—Outline Dictionary for the use of Missionaries, Explorers, and Students of Language. By Max Müller, M.A., Taylorian Professor in the University of Oxford. With an Introduction on the proper use of the ordinary English Alphabet in transcribing Foreign Languages. The Vocabulary compiled by John Bellows. Crown 8vo. limp morocco, pp. xxxi. and 368. 1867. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Bellows.—Tous les Verbes. Conjugations of all the Verbs in the French and English Languages. By John Bellows. Revised by Professor Beljame, B.A., LL.B. of the University of Paris, and Official Interpreter to the Imperial Court, and George B. Strickland, late Assistant French Master, Royal Naval School, London. Also a New Table of Equivalent Values of French and English Money, Weights, and Measures. 32mo. sewed, 76 Tables. 1867. 1*s.*

Bellows.—The New Dictionary of the French and English Languages, showing both divisions on the same page, distinguishing the genders at sight by different types, and giving Conjugations of all the Irregular Verbs in French, each Irregular Preterite and Past Participle, and the accent of every word in English, the respective Prepositions to be used, etc. By John Bellows, Gloucester. Revised and corrected by Professor Beljame, B.A. and LL.B. of the University, Official Interpreter to the Imperial Court, Paris; G. Beauchamp Strickland, late French Preceptor at the Royal Naval School, London. Dedicated by special permission to Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte. [In the Press.

Bellows.—Two Days' Excursion from Gloucester to Llanthony Abbey and the Black Mountains. By John Bellows. Fcap. 8vo. pp. 32 sewed, Illustrated. 1868. 6*d.*

Benedix.—Der Vetter. Comedy in Three Acts. By Roderich Benedix. With Grammatical and Explanatory Notes by F. Weinmann, German Master at the Royal Institution School, Liverpool, and G. Zimmermann, Teacher of Modern Languages. Post 8vo., pp. 128, cloth. 1863. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Benfey.—A Practical Grammar of the Sanskrit Language, for the use of Early Students. By Theodor Benfey, Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Göttingen. Second, revised and enlarged, edition. Royal 8vo., pp. viii. and 296, cloth. 1868. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Benisch.—Travels of Rabbi Petachia of Ratisbon: who, in the latter end of the twelfth century, visited Poland, Russia, Little Tartary, the Crimea, Armenia, Assyria, Syria, the Holy Land, and Greece. Translated from Hebrew, and published together with the original on opposite pages. By Dr. A. Benisch; with Explanatory Notes, by the Translator and William F. Ainsworth, Esq., F.S.A., F.G.S., F.R.G.S. 12mo. cloth, pp. vii. and 106. 1856. 5*s.*

Benjamin.—Speech of Hon. J. P. Benjamin, of Louisiana, on the Right of Secession, delivered in the Senate of the United States, Dec. 31st, 1860. Royal 8vo. sewed, pp. 16. 1860. 1*s.*

Benjumea.—Gibraltar to Spain; or, the Important Question of the Cession of that Fortress by England, as recently brought before the Spanish Public. Being an Accurate Translation of a Pamphlet just published at Madrid, and written by Nicolas Diaz Benjumea, Esq. 8vo. sewed, pp. 92. 1863. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Bentham.—Theory of Legislation. By Jeremy Bentham. Translated from the French of Etienne Dumont by R. Hildreth. Post 8vo., pp. xv. and 472. Cloth. 1864. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Bentham.—Analysis of Jeremy Bentham's Theory of Legislation. By G. W. H. Fletcher, LL.B. 12mo. cloth, pp. ix. and 86. 1864. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Bethune.—Early Lost, Early Saved; or, Consolation for Bereaved Parents. By the Rev. George W. Bethune, D.D., LL.D., of New York, Author of "Lectures on the Heidelberg Catechism," etc. Edited by the Rev. A. Pope, late of Leamington. In 1 vol. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 173. 1866. 3*s.*

Beurmann.—Vocabulary of the Tigré Language. Written down by Moritz von Beurmann. Published with a Grammatical Sketch. By Dr. A. Merx, of the University of Jena. pp. viii. and 70, cloth. 1868. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Bible.—The Holy Bible. First division, the Pentateuch, or Five Books of Moses, according to the authorised version, with Notes, Critical, Practical, and Devotional. Edited by the Rev. Thomas Wilson, M.A., of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. 4to. Part I. pp. vi. and 84; part II. pp. 85 to 176; part III. pp. 177 to 275, sewed. 1853—4. Each pt. 5*s.*, the work complete 20*s.*

Biblia Hebraica Secundum Editiones J. Athiæ, Joannis Leusdeni, J. Simonis, aliorumque. Imprimis E. Van der Hooght, recensuit Augustus Hahn. 8vo. bound, pp. 1396. 1868. 6*s.*

Bibliomane, Le.—Revue de la Bibliographie antiquaire. Texte et gravures par J. Ph. Berjeau. Nos. 1 and 2. 8vo. pp. 20 and 42, sewed. 1861. 1*s.* each part.

Bibliophile, Le.—Revue de la Bibliographie antiquaire, Texte et gravures par J. Ph. Berjeau. Nos. 1, 2, 3. 8vo. pp. 16, 32, and 48, sewed. 1861. 1*s.* each part.

Bicknell.—In the Track of the Garibaldians through Italy and Sicily. By Algernon Sidney Bicknell. Cr. 8vo. cloth, pp. xx. and 344. 1861. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Bigandet.—The Life or Legend of Gaudama, the Budha of the Burmese, with Annotations. The ways to Neibban, and Notice on the Phongyies, or Burmese Monks. By the Right Reverend P. Bigandet, Bishop of Ramatha, Vicar Apostolic of Ava and Pegu. 8vo. sewed, pp. xi., 538, and v. 1866. 18*s.*

Bigelow.—Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin. Edited from his manuscript, with Notes and an Introduction. By John Bigelow. With a portrait of Benjamin Franklin. Post 8vo., pp. 410. Cloth. 1868. 10*s.*

Biglow Papers (The).—By James Russell Lowell. Newly Edited, with a Preface, by the Author of "Tom Brown's School Days." In 1 vol. crown 8vo. cloth, pp. lxviii. and 140. 1861. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Ditto. People's Edition. 12mo. sewed, fancy cover. 1865. 1*s.*

Biglow Papers (The)—Melibæus-Hipponax. The Biglow Papers, Second Series. With a Portrait of the Author. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. lxiii. and 190. 1867. 3*s.* 6*d.*

"Masterpieces of satirical humour, they are entitled, as such, to a permanent place in American, which is English Literature."—Daily News.

"No one who ever read the Biglow Papers can doubt that true humour of a very high order is within the range of American gift."—Guardian.

"The book undoubtedly owed its first vogue to party feeling; but it is impossible to ascribe to that cause only, so wide and enduring a popularity as it has now."—Spectator.

Blasius.—A List of the Birds of Europe. By Professor I. H. Blasius. Reprinted, from the German, with the Author's Corrections. 8vo. sewed, pp. 24. 1862. 1*s.*

Bleek.—A Comparative Grammar of South-African Languages. By Dr. W. H. I. Bleek. Will be completed in Four parts. Part I., sewed, pp. 104. 1862. 5*s.*

Bleek.—Formenlehre der lateinischen Sprache zum ersten Unterricht, Von W. H. I. Bleek. 8vo. pp. 68, sewed. 1863. 1*s.*

Bleek.—Reynard the Fox in South Africa; or, Hottentot Fables and Tales, chiefly Translated from Original Manuscripts in the Library of His Excellency Sir George Grey, K.C.B. By W. H. I. Bleek, Ph.D. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xxvi. and 94. 1864. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Blyth and Speke.—Report on a Zoological Collection from the Somali Country. By Edward Blyth, Curator of the Royal Asiatic Society's Museum, Calcutta. Reprinted from the Twenty-fourth volume of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal; with Additions and Corrections by the Collector, Capt. J. H. Speke, F.R.G.S., etc. 8vo. pp. 16. One Coloured Plate. 1860. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Bohlen, Von.—Historical and Critical Illustrations of the First Part of Genesis, from the German of Professor Von Bohlen. Edited by James Heywood, M.A., F.R.S. Revised. 2 vols. 8vo., pp. xxxii. and 336, iv. and 298. Cloth. 1868. 6*s.*

Bojesen.—A Guide to the Danish Language. Designed for English Students. By Mrs. Maria Bojesen. 12mo, cloth, pp. 250. 1863. 5*s.*

Boke of Nurture (The); or, Schoole of Good Maners, for Men-Servants, and Children, with stans puer ad mensam. Newly corrected, very necessary for all youth and children. Compyled by Hugh Rhodes of the Kinges Chappell, born and bred in Denonshyre, p. 13 and ii. Imprinted at London in Fleetestreete, beneath the Conduite, at the sign of S. John Euaungelist. By H. Jackson, 1577. 4to., pp. xxx. and 56. Cloth. London, 1868. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Bollaert.—Antiquarian, Ethnological, and other Researches, in New Granada, Equador, Peru, and Chili; with Observations on the Pre-Incarial, Incarial, and other Monuments of Peruvian Nations. With numerous Plates. By William Bollaert. 8vo. cloth, pp. 279. 1860. 15*s.*

Bollaert.—The Expedition of Pedro de Ursua and Lope de Aguirre in Search of Eldorado and Omagua in 1560-1. Translated from Fray Pedro Simon's "Sixth Historical Notice of the Conquest of Tierra Firme." By William Bollaert, Esq., F.R.G.S. With an Introduction by Clements R. Markham, Esq. 8vo. cloth, pp. 237. 1861. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Boltz.—A New Course of the English Language, after a New Practical and Theoretical Method, by T. Robertson. For the use of schools and for private tuition, with numerous analogies of English words, with the corresponding French or German expressions. Translated from his fourth German edition into Russian by Dr. August Boltz, Professor of the Russian, the English, the Spanish, etc., Languages at the Royal Military Academy and the Royal Navy Institution at Berlin. 2 vols. Post 8vo., pp. 166 and 160, cloth. 1865. 7*s.*

Book of God. The Apocalypse of Adam Oannes. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 648. 1867. 12*s.* 6*d.*

Book of God. An Introduction to the Apocalypse. In 1 vol. crown 8vo. pp. iv and 752, cloth. 14*s.*

Bowditch.—Suffolk Surnames. By N. L. Bowditch. Third Edition. 8vo. cloth. pp. xxvi, and 758. 1861. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Bowles.—Life's Dissolving Views By G. C. Bowles. 12mo., pp. 108. 1867. 3*s.*

Bowring.—On Religious Progress beyond the Christian Pale. An Address delivered at St. Martin's Hall, London, by Sir John Bowring, LL.D., F.R.S., etc., on Sunday, 14th January, 1866. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 16. 1866. 3*d.*

Bowring.—Siam and the Siamese. A Discourse delivered by Sir John Bowring at St. Martin's Hall, on February 17th, 1867. Also the Introductory Address of J. Baxter Langley, Esq., M.R.A.S., F.L.S. 8vo. sewed, pp. 12. 1867. 2*d.*

Boyce.—A Grammar of the Kaffir Language. By William B. Boyce, Wesleyan Missionary. Third Edition, augmented and improved, with Exercises, by William J. Davis, Wesleyan Missionary. 12mo., pp. xii. and 164, cloth, 8*s.*

Bracton and his Relation to the Roman Law. A Contribution to the History of the Roman Law in the Middle Ages. By Carl Güterbock, Professor of Law in the University of Koenigsberg. Translated by Brinton Coxe. 8vo., pp. 182, cloth. 1866. 9*s.*

Brazil, The Empire of, at the Paris International Exhibition of 1867. Post 8vo., sewed, pp. 139. Rio de Janeiro. 1867. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Ditto, Ditto, with Maps and Catalogue of the Articles sent to the Universal Exhibition at Paris, in 1867. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 139, iii. and 197. Rio de Janeiro. 1867. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Brentano.—Honour: or, The Story of the Brave Caspar and the Fair Annerl. By Clemens Brentano. With an Introduction, and a Biographical Notice of the Author. By T. W. Appell. Translated from the German. 12mo. cloth, pp. 74. 1847. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Bretschneider.—A Manual of Religion and of the History of the Christian Church, for the use of upper classes in public schools in Germany, and for all educated men in general. By Karl Gottlieb Bretschneider. Translated from the German. 12mo. cloth, pp. 296. 1857. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Brice.—A Romanized Hindustani and English Dictionary, designed for the Use of Schools and for Vernacular Students of the Language. Composed by Nathaniel Brice. New Edition, revised and enlarged. Post 8vo., cloth, pp. 366, 1864. 8*s.*

Bridges.—The Unity of Comte's Life and Doctrine: A Reply to Strictures on Comte's Later Writings, addressed to J. S. Mill, Esq., M.P. By Dr. J. H. Bridges, Translator of Comte's General View of Positivism. 8vo., sewed, pp. 70. 1866. 2*s.*

Brinton.—THE MYTHS OF THE NEW WORLD. A Treatise on the Symbolism and Mythology of the Red Race of America. By Daniel G. Brinton, A.M., M.D. Crown 8vo., pp. viii. and 308. Cloth. 1868. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Brown.—THE DERVISHES; OR, ORIENTAL SPIRITUALISM. By John P. Brown, Secretary and Dragoman of the Legation of the United States of America at Constantinople. Crown 8vo., cloth, pp. viii. and 416, with 24 Illustrations. 1868. 14*s.*

Buchner.—FORCE AND MATTER. By Dr. Louis Buchner. Edited from the Eighth Edition of "Kraft and Stoff," by J. Frederick Collingwood, F.R.S.L., F.G.S. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 320. 1865. 7*s.* 6*d.*

"The work is valuable on account of its close and logical reasoning, and the profound and in many cases striking views taken of the subjects discussed."—Observer.

Buckle.—HISTORIA DE LA CIVILIZACION EN ESPAÑA POR ENRIQUE TOMAS BUCKLE. Capítulo I° del segundo tomo de la historia de la civilizacion en Inglaterra. Traducido de la primera edicion Inglesa por F. G. y T. Post 8vo., cloth, pp. xvi. and 188. 1861. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Bumstead.—THE PATHOLOGY AND TREATMENT OF VENEREAL DISEASES. By F. J. Bumstead, M.D. 8vo. cloth, pp. xvi. and 640. 1866. 21*s.*

Bunsen.—MEMOIR ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS OF THE DUCHIES OF SCHLESWIG AND HOLSTEIN, presented to Viscount Palmerston, by Chevalier Bunsen, on the 8th of April, 1848. With a Postscript of the 15th of April. Published with M. de Gruyer's Essay, on the Danish Question, and all the official Documents, by Otto Von Wenkstern. Illustrated by a Map of the Two Duchies. 8vo., sewed, pp. 166. 1848. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Burgess.—THE PHOTOGRAPHIC MANUAL. A Practical Treatise containing the cartes-de-visite process, and the method of taking stereoscopic pictures, including the Albumen process, the dry Collodion process, the Tanning process, the various Alkaline Toning baths, etc., etc., etc. To which is added an Appendix containing all the recent improvements in the art. By N. G. Burgess. 12mo. cloth, pp. 283. 1865. 6*s.*

Burgh.—THE MANUFACTURE OF SUGAR AND THE MACHINERY EMPLOYED FOR COLONIAL AND HOME PURPOSES. Read before the Society of Arts, Adelphi, London, April 4th, 1866. By N. P. Burgh, Engineer. 8vo. sewed, pp. 31. 1866. 1*s.*

Burgh.—THE PRINCIPLES THAT GOVERN THE FUTURE DEVELOPMENT OF THE MARINE BOILER, ENGINE, AND SCREW PROPELLER. Read before the Society of Arts, Adelphi, London, December 18th, 1867. By N. P. Burgh, Engineer. 8vo., sewed, pp. 30. 1868. 2*s.*

Burton.—CAPTAIN RICHARD F. BURTON'S HANDBOOK FOR OVERLAND EXPEDITIONS: being an English Edition of the "Prairie Traveller," a Handbook for Overland Expeditions; with Illustrations and Itineraries of the Principal Routes between the Mississippi and the Pacific, and a Map. By Captain Randolph B. Marcy (now General and Chief of the Staff, Army of the Potomac). Edited (with Notes) by Captain Richard F. Burton. Crown 8vo., cloth, pp. 278. Numerous Woodcuts, Itineraries, and Map. 1863. 6*s.* 6*d.*

Busch.—GUIDE FOR TRAVELLERS IN EGYPT AND ADJACENT COUNTRIES SUBJECT TO THE PASHA. Translated from the German of Dr. Moritz Busch. By W. C. Wrankmore. Square 12mo., cloth, pp. xxxviii. and 182, with 14 Illustrations, a Travelling Map, and Plan of Cairo. 1858. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Busch.—MANUAL OF GERMAN CONVERSATION: A choice and comprehensive collection of sentences on the ordinary subjects of every-day life, with a copious Vocabulary on an entirely new and simple plan. By Dr. Oscar Busch, Teacher of Ancient and Modern Languages at the establishment of Dr. Krause at Dresden. 12mo., cloth, pp. x. and 340. 1861. 4*s*.

Butchers.—A WAIF ON THE STREAM. By S. M. Butchers. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 200. London, 1866. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Calvert.—LECTURES ON COAL-TAR COLOURS AND ON RECENT IMPROVEMENTS AND PROGRESS IN DYEING AND CALICO PRINTING. Embodying Copious Notes taken at the International Exhibition of 1862, and Illustrated with numerous specimens of Aniline and other colours. By Dr. F. Crace Calvert, F.R.S. 8vo. sewed, pp. 64. 2*s*.

Callaway.—IZINGANEDWANE, NENSUMANSUMANE, NEZINDABA ZABANTU (Nursery Tales, Traditions, and Histories of the Zulus. In their own words.) With a Translation into English and Notes. By the Rev. Canon Callaway, M.D. Volume I. 8vo. pp. vii. and 390. cloth. Springvale (Natal), Pietermaritzburg (Natal) and London. 1868. 16*s*.

Camerini.—L'ECO ITALIANO; A PRACTICAL GUIDE TO ITALIAN CONVERSATION. By E. Camerini. With a Vocabulary. 12mo. cloth, pp. 98. 1860. 4*s*. 6*d*.

Campbell.—NEW RELIGIOUS THOUGHTS. By Douglas Campbell. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 425. 1860. 6*s*. 6*d*.

Canones Lexicographici: or Rules to be observed in editing the New English Dictionary of the Philological Society, prepared by a Committee of the Society. 8vo. sewed, pp. 12. 1860. 6*d*.

Canticum Canticorum, reproduced in facsimile, from the Scriverius copy in the British Museum. With an Historical and Bibliographical Introduction by I. Ph. Berjeau. Folio, pp. 36, with Sixteen Tables of Illustrations. Vellum. 1860. £2 2*s*.

Carey.—THE SLAVE TRADE, DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN, WHY IT EXISTS AND HOW IT MAY BE EXTINGUISHED. By H. C. Carey, Author of "Principles of Political Economy," "The Past, the Present, and the Future," etc., etc. 8vo. cloth, pp. 426. 1853. 6*s*.

Carey.—THE PAST, THE PRESENT, AND THE FUTURE. By H. C. Carey. Second Edition. 8vo. cloth, pp. 474. 1856. 10*s*. 6*d*.

Carey.—PRINCIPLES OF SOCIAL SCIENCE. By H. C. Carey. In Three Volumes. 8vo. cloth, pp. 474, 480, and 511. 1858—1867. 42*s*.

Cape Town.—PICTORIAL ALBUM OF CAPE TOWN, with Views of Simon's Town, Port Elizabeth, and Graham's Town, from original Drawings by T. W. Bowler. With Historical and Descriptive Sketches by W. R. Thomson. Oblong 4to. With Twelve Plates, pp. 44. 1866. 25*s*.

Carpenter.—THE LAST DAYS IN ENGLAND OF THE RAJAH RAMMOHUN ROY. Edited by Mary Carpenter, of Bristol. With Illustrations. 8vo. cloth, pp. v. and 255. 1866. 7*s*. 6d.

Catherine II., MEMOIRS OF THE EMPRESS. Written by herself. With a Preface by A. Herzen. Translated from the French. 12mo., boards, pp. xvi. and 352. 1859. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Catherine II., Mémoires de l'impératrice. Ecrits par elle-même et précédés d'une préface par A. Herzen. Seconde édition. Revue et augmentée, de huit lettres de Pierre III., et d'une lettre de Catherine II. au Comte Poniatowsky. 8vo., pp. xvi. and 370. 1859. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Catholic, The New Church. Second Edition. 8vo., sewed, pp. 15. 1867. 6*d.*

Catlin.—The Breath of Life. By G. Catlin. 8vo., with Illustrations. Pp. 76. 1864. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Catlin.—O-Kee-Pa. A Religious Ceremony and other Customs of the Mandans. By George Catlin. With Thirteen coloured Illustrations. Small 4to. cloth, pp. vi. and 52. 1867. 14*s.*

Cavour.—Considerations on the Condition of Ireland, and its Future. By the late Count Cavour. Translated by W. B. Hodgson, LL.D.

Caxton.—The Game of Chess. A reproduction of William Caxton's Game of Chess, the first work printed in England. 4to. 1862. In cloth, £1 1*s.* Ditto, full morocco antique, £2 2*s.*

Frequently as we read of the works of Caxton, and the early English Printers, and of their black letter books, very few persons have ever had the opportunity of seeing any of these productions, and forming a proper estimate of the ingenuity and skill of those who first practised the "Noble Art of Printing."

This reproduction of the first work printed by Caxton at Westminster, containing 23 woodcuts, is intended, in some measure, to supply this deficiency, and bring the present age into somewhat greater intimacy with the Father of English Printers.

The type has been carefully imitated, and the cuts traced from the copy in the British Museum. The paper has also been made expressly, as near as possible like the original.

Cazeaux.—A Theoretical and Practical Treatise on Midwifery. By J. Cazeaux. Translated by W. R. Bullock. 4th edition, royal 8vo. Pp. 988. 1866. Cloth. 24*s.*

Centoniana.—Revue Analytique des Ouvrages écrits en Centons, depuis les temps anciens, jusqu'au XIXieme Siecle. Par un Bibliophile Belge. Small 4to., pp. 508. 1868. 30*s.*

Chalmers.—The Origin of the Chinese. An Attempt to trace the connection of the Chinese with Western Nations in their Religion, Superstitions, Arts, Language, and Traditions. By John Chalmers, A.M. Fcap. 8vo., pp. 80, cloth. 1868. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Chalmers.—The Speculations on Metaphysics, Polity, and Morality of "The Old Philosopher" Lau-tsze. Translated from the Chinese, with an Introduction by John Chalmers, M.A. Fcp. 8vo. cloth, pp. xx. and 62. 1868. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Channing.—Self-Culture. By William E. Channing. Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 56. 1844. 1*s.*

Chapman.—George Chapman's Tragedy of Alphonsus, Emperor of Germany. Edited with an Introduction and Notes, by Karl Elze, Ph. D., Hon. M.R.S.L. 12mo. sewed, p. 152. 1867. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Chapman.—The Cotton and Commerce of India, considered in relation to the Interests of Great Britain: with Remarks on Railway Communication in Bombay Presidency. By John Chapman, Founder of the Great India Peninsula Railway Company. 8vo. cloth, pp. xvii. and 412. 1851. 6*s.*

Chapman.—Baroda and Bombay; their Political Morality. A Narrative drawn from the Papers laid before Parliament in relation to the Removal of Lieut.-Col. Outram, C.B., from the Office of Resident at the Court of the Gaekwar. With Explanatory Notes, and Remarks on the Letter of L. R. Reid, Esq., to the Editor of the Daily News. By J. Chapman. 8vo. sewed, pp. iv. and 104. 1853. 3*s*.

Chapman.—Indian Political Reform. Being Brief Hints, together with a Plan for the Improvement of the Constituency of the East India Company, and the Promotion of Public Works. By John Chapman. 8vo. sewed pp. 36. 1853. 1*s*.

Chapman.—Remarks on the Legal Basis required by Irrigation in India. By John Chapman. 8vo. sewed, pp. 20. 1854. 1*s*.

Chapman.—Chloroform and other Anæsthetics; their History and Use during Childbed. By John Chapman, M.D. 8vo. sewed, p. 52. 1859. 1*s*.

Chapman.—Christian Revivals; their History and Natural History. By John Chapman, M.D. 8vo. sewed, pp. 53. 1860. 1*s*.

Chapman.—Functional Diseases of Women. Cases illustrative of a New Method of Treating them through the Agency of the Nervous System, by means of Cold and Heat. With Appendix, containing Cases illustrating a New Method of Treating Epilepsy, Infantile Convulsions, Paralysis, and Diabetes. By John Chapman, M.D. 8vo. sewed, pp. xviii. and 74. 1863. 2*s*. 6*d*.

Chapman.—Sea-Sickness: its Nature and Treatment. By John Chapman, M.D. 8vo. sewed, pp. 72. 1864. 2*s*. 6*d*.

Chapman.—Diarrhœa and Cholera; their Nature, Origin, and Treatment through the Agency of the Nervous System. By John Chapman, M.D., M.R.C.P., M.R.C.S. 2nd edition. Enlarged. 8vo. cloth, pp. xix. and 248. 1866. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Charnock.—Verba Nominalia: or Words derived from Proper Names. By Richard Stephen Charnock, Ph.D., F.S.A., F.R.G.S., etc. 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 357. London. 1866. 14*s*.

Charnock.—Ludus Patronymicus; or, The Etymology of Curious Surnames. By Richard Stephen Charnock, Ph.D., F.S.A., F.R.G.S. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 182. 1868. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Chauvenet.—A Manual of Spherical and Practical Astronomy, embracing the general problems of Spherical Astronomy, the special applications to Nautical Astronomy, and the theory and use of fixed and portable Astronomical Instruments. With an Appendix on the method of least squares. By William Chauvenet, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy. Library edition, revised and corrected. 2 vols. 8vo., pp. 708 and 632. With fourteen plates. Cloth. 1864. £2 16*s*. 0*d*.

Chess.—One Hundred Chess Games, played between Mr. J. F. Emmett and Mr. Vivian Fenton, during the Winter of 1864. Small 4to. sewed, pp. 60. Boulogne and London. 1865. 2*s*.

Chess-Strategy.—A Collection of the Most Beautiful Chess Problems, composed by "J. B., of Bridport," and contributed by him to the chief Chess Periodicals during the last fifteen years. Illustrated by Diagrams, and accompanied by Solutions. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 118. 1865. 5*s*.

Chess World (The).—Volumes 1, 2, and 3, each 12*s*. 1865, 1866, 1867. Continued in monthly numbers at 1*s*. each.

Childe.—Investigations in the Theory of Reflected Ray-Surfaces, and their Relation to Plane Reflected Caustics. Also, in the Appendix, A Theory of Plane Caustic Curves, Identified with the Evolute of the Auxiliary Curve of Equiangular Intersection. By Rev. G. F. Childe, M.A., Mathematical Professor in the South African College, Cape of Good Hope. 8vo. Boards. Pp. 140. 1857. 7*s*.

Chronique de Abou-Djafar-Mohammed Ben-Djarir Ben-Yezid Tabari. Traduite par Monsieur Reinmann Zotenberg. Volume I., 8vo., pp. 608, sewed. 7*s*. 6*d*. 1867. (To be completed in four volumes).

Claim (The) of Englishwomen to the Suffrage Constitutionally Considered. Reprinted by permission from the Westminster Review, for January, 1867. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 19. London. 1867. 6*d*.

Clayton and Bulwer Convention, of the 19th April, 1850, between the British and American Governments, concerning Central America. 8vo. Pp. 64, sewed. 1856. 1*s*.

Clegg.—A Practical Treatise on the Manufacture and Distribution of Coal Gas, its Introduction and Progressive Improvement. Illustrated by Engravings from Working Drawings, with General Estimates. By Samuel Clegg, Jun., A. Inst. C.E., F.G.S. Fifth Edition. Greatly enlarged, and with numerous Additional Engravings. 4to. Pp. xii. and 412, cloth. 1868. 21*s*.

Cobbe.—Female Education, and How it would be Affected by University Examinations. A Paper read at the Social Science Congress, London, 1862. By Frances Power Cobbe. Third Edition. 18mo. sewed, pp. 20. 1862. 2*d*.

Cobbe.—Friendless Girls and How to Help Them. Being an Account of the Preventive Mission at Bristol. From a Paper read at the Social Science Congress in Dublin, 1861. By Frances Power Cobbe. Fourth Thousand. 18mo. sewed, pp. 14. 1862. 2*d*.

Cobbe.—The Workhouse as an Hospital. By Frances Power Cobbe. 18mo. sewed, pp. 16. 1862. 2*d*.

Cobbe.—The Religious Demands of the Age. A Reprint of the Preface to the Collected Works of Theodore Parker. By Frances Power Cobbe. 8vo. sewed, pp. 36. 1863. 1*s*.

Cobbe.—Thanksgiving. A Chapter of Religious Duty. By Frances Power Cobbe. 18mo. pp. 40, cloth. 1863. 6*s*.

Cobbe.—The Cities of the Past. By Frances Power Cobbe. 12mo. cloth, pp. 216. 1864. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Cobbe.—An Essay on Intuitive Morals. Being an attempt to popularise Ethical Science. By Frances Power Cobbe. Part I. Theory of Morals. New Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xv. and 289. 1864. 5*s*.

Cobbe.—Italics: Brief Notes on Politics, People, and Places in Italy, in 1864. By Frances Power Cobbe. 8vo. cloth, pp. 534. 1864. 12*s*. 6*d*.

Cobbe.—Religious Duty. Second Edition. Crown 8vo., cloth, pp. vi. and 332. 1864. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Cobbe.—Broken Lights. A Survey of the Religious Controversies of our Times. By Frances Power Cobbe. Second Edition. Crown 8vo., cloth, pp. ix. and 192. 1865. 5*s.*

Cobbe.—Studies, New and Old, on Ethical and Social Subjects. By Frances Power Cobbe. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 446. 1865. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Contents.—I. Christian Ethics and the Ethics of Christ.—II. Self-Abnegation and Self-Development.—III. The Sacred Books of the Zoroastrians.—IV. Hades.—V. The Philosophy of the Poor Laws.—VI. The Rights of Man and the Claims of Brutes.—VII. The Morals of Literature.—VIII. The Hierarchy of Art.

Cobbe.—Hours of Work and Play. By Frances Power Cobbe. Post 8vo., cloth, pp. 374. 1867. 6*s.*

Cobden.—Richard Cobden, roi des Belges; par un ex-Colonel de la Garde Civique. Dédié aux blessés de Septembre. Deuxième Edition. 12mo. sewed, pp. 62. 1863. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Coleccao de Vocabulos e Frases usados na Provincia de S. Pedro do Rio Grande do Sul no Brazil. 16mo., pp. 32. sewed, 2*s.* 6*d.*

Ditto ditto, large paper, small 4to. 1856. 5*s.*

Coleccion de Documentos ineditos relativos al Descubrimiento y á la Historia de las Floridas. Los ha dado á luz el Señor Don Buckingham Smith, segun los manuscritos de Madrid y Sevilla. Tomo primero, folio, pp. 216, con retrato del Rey D. Fernando V. 1851. 28*s.*

Colenso.—First Steps in Zulu-Kafir: An Abridgement of the Elementary Grammar of the Zulu-Kafir Language. By the Right Rev. John W. Colenso, Bishop of Natal. 8vo., pp. 86, cloth. Ekukanyeni, 1859. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Colenso.—Zulu-English Dictionary. By the Right Rev. John W. Colenso, Bishop of Natal. 8vo., pp. viii. and 552, sewed. Pietermaritzburg, 1861. 15*s.*

Colenso.—First Zulu-Kafir Reading Book, two parts in one. By the Right Rev. John W. Colenso, Bishop of Natal. 16mo., pp. 44, sewed. Natal. 1*s.*

Colenso.—Second Zulu-Kafir Reading Book. By the same. 16mo. pp. 108, sewed. Natal. 3*s.*

Colenso.—Fourth Zulu-Kafir Reading Book. By the same. 8vo. pp. 160, cloth. Natal, 1859. 7*s.*

Colenso.—Three Native Accounts of the Visits of the Bishop of Natal, in September and October, 1859, to Upmande, King of the Zulus. With Explanatory Notes and a Literal Translation, and a Glossary of all the Zulu words employed in the same. Designed for the use of Students of the Zulu Language. By the Right Rev. John W. Colenso, Bishop of Natal. 16mo., pp. 160. Stiff cover. Maritzburg, Natal. 1860. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Colenso.—Two Sermons Preached by the Lord Bishop of Natal, in St. Paul's, D'Urban, on Sunday, November 12, 1865; and in the Cathedral Church of St. Peter's, Maritzburg, on Sunday, November 19, and Sunday, November 26, 1865. 8vo., sewed, pp. 12. 1866. 6*d.*

Colenso.—The Preface and Concluding Remarks of Part V. of the Pentateuch and Book of Joshua Critically Examined. By the Right Rev. John William Colenso, D.D., Bishop of Natal. Printed separately by request. 8vo., sewed, pp. xlvi. and pp. 305 to 320. 1865. 1*s.*

Colenso.—On Missions to the Zulus in Natal and Zululand. A Lecture by the Right Rev. J. W. Colenso, D.D., Bishop of Natal. 8vo. sewed, pp. 24. 1866. 6*d.*

Colenso.—Natal Sermons. A Series of Discourses Preached in the Cathedral Church of St. Peter's, Maritzburg. By the Right Rev. John William Colenso, D.D., Bishop of Natal. 8vo., cloth, pp. viii. and 373. 1866. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Colenso.—Natal Sermons. The Second Series. Preached in the Cathedral Church of St. Peter's, Maritzburg. By the Right Reverend John William Colenso, D.D., Bishop of Natal. Crown 8vo. 1868. 5*s.*

Coleridge.—A Glossarial Index to the Printed English Literature of the Thirteenth Century. By Herbert Coleridge. 8vo. cloth. Pp. 104. 1859. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Collet.—George Jacob Holyoake and Modern Atheism. A Biographical and Critical Essay. By Sophia Dobson Collet. 12mo., pp. 54, sewed. 1855. 1*s.*

Comte.—The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Translated and Condensed. By Harriet Martineau. 2 Vols. Large post 8vo. Cloth. Vol. 1, pp. xxxvi. and 480. Vol. 2, pp. xvi. and 561. 1853. 16*s.*

Comte.—The Catechism of Positive Religion. Translated from the French of Auguste Comte. By Richard Congreve. 12mo. cloth. Pp. vi. and 428. 1858. 6*s.* 6*d.*

Comte.—A General View of Positivism. By Auguste Comte. Translated by Dr. J. H. Bridges. Crown 8vo. cloth. Pp. xi. and 426. 1865. 8*s.* 6*d.*

Conant.—The Meaning and Use of Baptizein Philologically and Historically Investigated. By T. J. Conant, D.D. 8vo. cloth. Pp. 164. 1861. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Confessions (The) of a Catholic Priest. Post 8vo. cloth. Pp. v. and 320. 1858. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Congreve.—The Roman Empire of the West. Four Lectures delivered at the Philosophical Institution, Edinburgh, February, 1855, by Richard Congreve, M.A. 8vo. pp. 176, cloth. 1855. 4*s.*

Congreve.—India. By Richard Congreve. 8vo. sewed. Pp. iv. and 35. 1857. 1*s.*

Congreve.—The Catechism of Positive Religion. Translated from the French of Auguste Comte. By Richard Congreve, M.A. 12mo. cloth, pp. 428. 1858. 6*s.* 6*d.*

Congreve.—The New Religion in its Attitude towards the Old. A Sermon. By Richard Congreve. 12mo. sewed, pp. 34. 1859. 3*d.*

Congreve.—Italy and the Western Powers. By Richard Congreve. 8vo. sewed, pp. 18. 1860. 6*d.*

Congreve.—The Propagation of the Religion of Humanity. A Sermon preached at South Fields, Wandsworth, 19th January, 1860, on the Anniversary of the Birth of Auguste Comte, 19th January, 1798. By Richard Congreve. 8vo. sewed, pp. 22. 1860. 1*s.*

Congreve.—The Labour Question. By Richard Congreve. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 24. 1861. 4*d.*

Congreve.—Elizabeth of England. Two Lectures delivered at the Philosophical Institution, Edinburgh, January, 1862. By Richard Congreve. 18mo. sewed. Pp. 114. 1862. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Congreve.—Gibraltar; or, the Foreign Policy of England. By Richard Congreve, M.A. Second Edition. 8vo., pp. 70, sewed. 1864. 1*s.* 6*d*

Congreve.—Ireland. By Richard Congreve, M.A., M.R.C.P.I. 8vo. pp. 40, sewed. 1868. 1*s.*

Contopoulos.—A Lexicon of Modern Greek-English and English Modern Greek. By N. Contopoulos. First Part Modern Greek-English, 8vo., pp. 460, cloth. 1868. 12*s.*

Constitution of the United States, with an Index to each Article and Section. By a Citizen of Washington. 8vo. Pp. 64, sewed. 1860. 2*s.*

Cornelia.—A Novel. Post 8vo., pp. 250. Boards. 1863. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Cornet.—A Manual of Russian and English Conversation. By Julius Cornet. 12mo. Boards. Pp. 424. 1858. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Cornwallis.—Selections from the Letters of Caroline Frances Cornwallis, Author of "Pericles," "Small Books on Great Subjects," etc. Also some Unpublished Poems, Original and Translated. 1 Vol. 8vo. cloth, pp. xv. and 482. 1864. 12*s.*

Cotta, Von.—Geology and History. A popular Exposition of all that is known of the Earth and its inhabitants in pre-historic times. By Bernhard Von Cotta, Professor of Geology at the Academy of Mining, Freiberg, in Saxony. 12mo., pp. iv. and 84, cloth. 1865. 2*s.*

Cotton.—The Famine in India. Lecture by Major-General Sir Arthur Cotton, R.E., K.C.S.I. (late Chief Engineer, Madras). Read at the Social Science Congress, at Manchester, October 12, 1866, and printed at the request of a Special Committee by the Cotton Supply Association. 8vo. sewed. Pp. 46. 1866. 1*s.*

Coupland.—Shall we Not Go Forward? A Discourse delivered in the Unitarian Chapel, Bridgewater. By William Chatterton Coupland, B.A., B.Sc. 8vo. sewed, pp. 20. 1865. 1*s.*

Coupland.—Incentives to a Higher Life. Discourses by William Chatterton Coupland, B.A., B.Sc. Fcap, 8vo. cloth. Pp. xi. and 148. 1866. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Courtenay.—Religious Persecution. Report of the Prosecution at Bow Street. The Queen versus Dumergue. From the shorthand Notes of John Kelley Courtenay. 8vo. sewed, pp. 12. 1867. 2*d.*

Cousin.—Elements of Psychology: included in a Critical Examination of Locke's Essay on the Human Understanding, and in additional pieces. Translated from the French of Victor Cousin, with an Introduction and Notes. By Caleb S. Henry, D.D. Fourth improved Edition, revised according to the Author's last corrections. Crown 8vo., cloth, pp. 568. 1864. 7*s.*

Cousin.—The Philosophy of Kant. Lectures by Victor Cousin. Translated from the French. To which is added a Biographical and Critical Sketch of Kant's Life and Writings. By A. G. Henderson. Large post 8vo., cloth, pp. xciv. and 194. 1864. 9*s.*

Cowan.—Curious Facts in the History of Insects. By Frank Cowan. Crown 8vo., pp. 396. Cloth. 1865. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Cowell.—Prakrita-Prakasa; or, the Prakrit Grammar of Vararuchi, with the Commentary (Manorama) of Bhamaha; the first complete Edition of the Original Text, with various Readings from a collection of Six MSS. in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and the Libraries of the Royal Asiatic Society and the East India House; with Copious Notes, an English Translation, and Index of Prakrit Words, to which is prefixed an Easy Introduction to Prakrit Grammar. By Edward Byles Cowell, of Magdalen Hall, Oxford. Professor of Sanskrit at Cambridge. Cloth. New Edition, with New Preface, Additions, and Corrections. Second Issue. 8vo., pp. xxxi. and 204. Cloth. 1868. 14*s.*

Cowper.—Popery and Common Sense. A Poem. By William Cowper. Post 8vo., sewed, pp. 8. 1866. 6*d.*

Cox.—A Monograph of Australian Land Shells. By James C. Cox, M.D. Univ. Edin., F.R.C.S. Edin., Corresponding Member of the Zoological Society of London, Correspondent of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, Member of Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh, Royal and Entomological Societies of New South Wales. 8vo. pp. v. and 112. Illustrated by 18 plates, sewed. 1868. £2 2*s.*

Cracroft.—Essays, Political and Miscellaneous. By Barnard Cracroft, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge. Reprinted from various sources. Two Volumes. Crown 8vo., pp. xvi. and 322, pp. xvi. and 320, cloth. 21*s.*

Contents of Vol. I.

The Session of 1866.
The State of Affairs in January, 1867.
Analysis of the House of Commons in 1867.
The Session of 1867.

Social Articles:—

Magnanimity.
Work.
Praise.
Vanity.
The Talent of looking like a Fool with propriety.
Jealousy.
Hatred.
Cruelty.
Intellectual Playfulness.
Englishmen's Arguments.
Manners.
Private Theatricals.
County Balls.
Landladies and Laundresses.
Man and Bee.

Contents of Vol. II.

The Jews of Western Europe.
Arabian Nights.
Greek Anthology.
Ovid as a Satirist.
Plautus.
Translation at Cambridge.
On a Translation of Tacitus.
Professor Conington's Horace.
Professor Conington's Æneid.
Hiawatha translated into Latin.
Sir Kingston James' Tasso.
M. Karcher's Rienzi.
The Etching Club.
Macaroneatia.
Professor Tyndall on Heat.
Professor Tyndall on Sound.
Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy.
Dreamthorp.
Mr. Forsyth's Life of Cicero.
The worldly Wisdom of Bacon.
Life and Times of Sir Joshua Reynolds.
Mr. Robert Leslie Ellis.
Madame de Tracy.
Madame de Sevigné.

Cranbrook.—Credibilia; or, Discourses on Questions of Christian Faith. By the Rev. James Cranbrook, Edinburgh. Reissue. Post 8vo., pp. iv. and 190, cloth. 1868. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Cranbrook.—The Founders of Christianity; or, Discourses upon the Origin of the Christian Religion. By the Rev. James Cranbrook, Edinburgh. Post 8vo., pp. xii. and 324. 1868. 6*s.*

Crawfurd.—The Plurality of the Races of Man. A Discourse delivered by John Crawfurd, Esq., F.R.S., President of the Ethnological Society at Martin's Hall, January 13th, 1867, with Explanatory Notes. Also the Inaugural Address of J. Baxter Langley, Esq., M.R.C.S., F.L.S. 8vo., sewed, pp. 12. 1867. 2*d.*

Crosskey.—A Defence of Religion. By Henry W. Crosskey. Pp. 48. 12mo. sewed. 1854. 1*s.*

Current (The) Gold and Silver Coins of all Countries, their Weight and Fineness, and their Intrinsic Value in English Money, with Facsimiles of the Coins. By Leopold C. Martin, of Her Majesty's Stationery Office, and Charles Trübner. In one volume, medium 8vo., 141 Plates, printed in Gold and Silver, and representing about 1,000 Coins, with 160 pages of Text, handsomely bound in embossed cloth, richly gilt, with Emblematical Designs on the Cover, and gilt edges. 1863. £2 2*s.*

This work, which the Publishers have much pleasure in offering to the Public, contains a series of the Gold and Silver Coins of the whole world current during the present century. The collection amounts, numerically, to nearly a thousand specimens, comprising, with their reverses, twice that number; and the Publishers feel confident that it is as nearly complete as it was possible to make it.

It seems almost superfluous to allude to the utility of the work. It is evident that it must become a highly valuable Handbook to the Bullion-dealer and the Money-changer; and to the Merchant and Banker it will prove a sure and safe work of reference, from the extreme accuracy of its details and computations.

The elegance and splendour of the work admirably adapt it as a choice and instructive ornament to the drawing room table; the amusement to be found in the comparison of the taste of different countries as exemplified in their Coins, may chase away many a half-hour's ennui.

In the valuation of the substantial Coins, and the notation of their relative worth in English money, the minutest accuracy has been observed, as also in the statements of their relative purity, which are given according to the legal Mint regulations of each country. In exceptional cases only, where official information was not to be obtained of the weight and fineness of the Coins, assays as found at different places are reported.

The exact weight of the Coins is expressed both in English troy grains and in French grammes, and the fineness by the English technical terms as well as in French millièmes; the general tendency of our time towards the decimal metrical system making such a notation almost indispensable. For easier reference, tables of British reports for millièmes of gold and silver have been affixed.

Da Costa.—Medical Diagnosis: with Special References to Practical Medicine. By J. M. Da Costa, M.D. 2nd edition revised. 8vo. cloth, pp. 784. 1866. 24*s.*

Dadabhai.—The European and Asiatic Races. Observations on Mr. Crawfurd's Paper read before the Ethnological Society. By Dadabhai Navroji. 8vo. sewed, pp. 32. 1866. 1*s.*

Dalton.—A Treatise on Human Physiology. For the Use of Students and Practitioners of Medicine. By John C. Dalton, Jun., M.D. Third Edition, revised and enlarged. 8vo. cloth, pp. 706. 1866. 21*s.*

Dana.—A Text-Book of Geology, designed for Schools and Academies. By J. D. Dana, LL.D. Illustrated by 375 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo., cloth, pp. vi. and 354. 1864. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Dana.—Manual of Geology; treating of the Principles of the Science, with Special Reference to American Geological History. For the Use of Colleges, Academies, and Schools of Science. By James D. Dana, M.A., LL.D. Illustrated by a Chart of the World, and over One Thousand Figures, mostly from American Sources. 8vo. cloth, pp. 798. 1866. 21*s.*

Dana.—Manual of Mineralogy; including Observations on Mines, Rocks, Reduction of Ores, and the Applications of the Science to the Arts; designed for the Use of Schools and Colleges. By James D. Dana. New edition, revised and enlarged. With 260 Illustrations. 12mo., pp. xii. and 456. 1867. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Dana.—A System of Mineralogy, Descriptive Mineralogy, comprising the most recent Discoveries. By James Dwight Dana and George Jarvis Brush. Fifth edition. 1 vol. 8vo., pp 874. 1868. £1 16*s.*

Darby.—Ruggiero Vivaldi and other Lays of Italy. By Eleanor Darby. 8vo. cloth. pp. viii. and 208. 1865. 5*s.*

Day.—The Land of the Permauls, or Cochin, its Past and its Present. By Francis Day, Esq., F.L.S. 8vo. cloth, pp. 577. 1863. 25*s.*

Deichmann.—New Tables to facilitate the Practice of Great Circle Sailing, together with an Application of the Theory of the great Circle on the Globe to the sailing, and an Appendix, containing some mathematical demonstrations. Accompanied by a scale of great circles on a blank chart, to determine without calculation the great circle which passes through two given places, and to show the places at which the spherical courses expressed in fourths of the point, take place on the great circle's arc between the two given places. By A. H. Deichmann. 8vo. boards. pp. viii. and 88. 1857. 5*s.*

Delepierre.—Histoire Litteraire des Fous. Par Octave Delepierre. 184. 1860. 5*s.*

Delepierre.—Analyse des Travaux de la Societe des Philobiblon de Londres. Par Octave Delepierre. Small 4to., pp. viii. and 134, bound in the Roxburghe style. 1862. 10*s.* 6*d.*

"It is probably not generally known, that among the numerous learned associations of the British metropolis there exists one called the Philobiblon Society. This somewhat exclusive union of bibliographic philosophers was established in 1853, under the auspices of the late Prince Consort, and after the model of the French Academy—it being one of the fundamental rules of the Society never to depass in number the immortal Forty. . . . The statutes of the Philobiblon provided for the annual issue of a volume of historical, biographical, critical, and other essays, contributed by any of the forty members, and printed in a very limited edition—not a single book to be disposed of for money. To enhance the value of the works thus published, it was arranged that every member should receive only two copies of each volume, to be signed by the president and secretary of the society, and with the name of the possessor on the title-page. . . . The contents of this half-a-dozen semi-mysterious and rare works have just been revealed in a curious little book published by Messrs. Trübner and Co., and got up in exact imitation of the products of Caxton's press. The work is dedicated by M. Octave Delepierre, the author, to the Duke D'Aumale, the patron of the Philobiblon since the decease of Prince Albert, and one of the leading members from the beginning."—Spectator.

"Two unpretending but very useful books have been lately compiled by M. Delepierre and Mr. Nichols. The former, whose 'History of Flemish Literature' has already been noticed in these columns, has printed an abstract of the multifarious works issued by the Philobiblon Society of London, of which, by the way, he is the honorary secretary. . . . How great a boon such catalogues as these are to historical and literary enquirers can only be estimated by those who have experienced the want of them. . . The gentlemen whose works we have named at the head of this paper, have done, in their way and degree, a service to literature which may be compared with those rendered by the compilers of the Calendars of the State Papers."—Saturday Review.

"M. Delepierre, the secretary, is also a very important contributor. By way of tantalizing the public he issues this 'Analyse,' which is a descriptive catalogue of the precious rarities collected by the society."—Literary Budget.

"The account which M. Delepierre gives of these volumes makes us regret that their contents have remained, as he tells us, almost unknown to the public, since many of the contributions appear to be of much interest."—Parthenon.

Delepierre.—Macaroneana Andra; overum Nouveaux Mélanges de Litterature Macaronique. Par Octave Delepierre. Small 4to., pp. 180, printed by Whittingham, and handsomely bound in the Roxburghe style. 1862. 10*s.* 6*d.*

This Volume, together with the one published by the Author in 1852, form the completest collection of that peculiar form of poetry in existence.

Deliberation or Decision? being a Translation from the Danish, of the Reply given by Herr Raaslöff to the accusations preferred against him on the part of the Danish Cabinet; together with an Introductory Article from the Copenhagen "Dagbladet," and Explanatory Notes. 8vo., pp. 40, sewed. 1861. 1*s.*

Delpech.—The Beginner's Comprehensive French Book. By J. Delpech, French Master at Christ's Hospital. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 326. 1866. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Demarteau.—Galvanized Iron, and its Application: A Treatise by A. Demarteau on J. and G. Winniwarter's Galvanizing and Lead Works at Gumpoldskirchen. Oblong royal 8vo., pp. viii. 42. 1862. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Dennys.—The Treaty Ports of China and Japan. A complete Guide to the open Ports of those Countries, together with Peking, Yedo, Hong-Kong, and Macao. Forming a Guide Book and Vade Mecum for Travellers, Merchants, and Residents in general. With 29 Maps and Plans. With Index to Hong Kong, Canton, Macao, Swatow, Amoy, Foochow, Formosa (General), Takao, Taiwanfoo, Tamsui, Kelung, Ningpo, Shanghai, Yangtz River, Chinkiang, Nanking, Kinkiang, Hankow, Chefoo, Taku, Tientsing, Peking, Newchang, Japan (General), Nagasaki, Yokohama, Yedo, Hakodadi and Hiogo. Appendices, viz., Means of Transport between England, France, and America, and China and Japan. French Mail Steam Ships, Compagnie des Services Maritimes des Messageries Impériales. Extract from Handbook of Information. Overland Route to India, China, and Japan. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company. Alfred Holt's Line of Steamers from Liverpool to China, via the Cape of Good Hope. Distances in Nautical Miles from Shanghae to Towns on the Yang-tse-Kiang, and Catalogue of Books, etc., in China and Japan. By William Frederick Mayers, F.R.G.S., Her Majesty's Consular Service, N. B. Dennys, late Her Majesty's Consular Service, and Charles King, Lieutenant Royal Marine Artillery. Compiled and Edited by N. B. Dennys. 8vo. Half bound. pp. 668, xlviii. and 26. 1867. 42*s.*

De Tracy.—Essais Divers, Lettres et Pensées de Madame de Tracy. 3 volumes. 12mo., paper covers, pp. iv. 404, 360, and 388. 1852, 1854, and 1855. 1*l.* 1*s.*

De Veitelle.—Mercantile Dictionary; a Complete Vocabulary of the Technicalities of Commercial Correspondence, Names of Articles of Trade, and Marine Terms in English, Spanish, and French. With Geographical Names, Business Letters, and Tables of the Abbreviations in Common Use in the three Languages. By J. De Veitelle. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 302. 1864. 7*s.*

De Vere.—Studies in English; or, Glimpses of the Inner Life of our Language. By M. Schele de Vere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Virginia. 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 365. 1867. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Dewey.—American Morals and Manners. By Orville Dewey, D.D. 8vo., pp. 32, sewed. 1844. 1*s.*

Diary of a Poor Young Gentlewoman. Translated from the German, by M. Anna Childs. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 224. 1860. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Dickinson's, (John), Pamphlets relating to Indian Affairs.

The Famine in the North-west Provinces of India: How we might have prevented it, and may prevent another. 8vo. pp. 36, sewed. 1861. 1*s.*

Obstructions to Trade in India. A Letter to P. C. Brown, Esq., of Tellicherry. With his Reply. Edited by John Dickinson. 8vo. pp. 15, sewed. 1861. 6*d.*

DICKINSON'S (JOHN), Pamphlets relating to Indian Affairs—(continued).

ADDRESS TO THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS on the Relation between the Cotton Crisis and Public Works in India. 8vo. pp. 39, sewed. 1862. 6*d*.

OBSTRUCTIONS TO TRADE IN INDIA. A Letter. By F. C. Brown, Esq., of Tellicherry. Edited by John Dickinson. 8vo. pp. 20, sewed. 1862. 6*d*.

REMARKS ON THE INDIAN RAILWAY REPORTS PUBLISHED BY THE GOVERNMENT, and Reasons for a Change of Policy in India. 8vo. pp. 32, sewed. 1862. 6*d*.

A LETTER TO LORD STANLEY, M.P., etc., etc., on the Policy of the Secretary of State for India. By John Dickinson. 8vo. pp. 40, sewed. 1863. 6*d*.

DHAR NOT RESTORED, in Spite of the House of Commons and of Public Opinion. By John Dickinson. 8vo. pp. 110, cloth. 1864. 1*s*.

SEQUEL TO "DHAR NOT RESTORED," and a Proposal to Extend the Principle of Restoration. By John Dickinson. 8vo. sewed, pp. 35. 1865. 1*s*.

LETTERS TO MALCOLM MOSS, ESQ., President of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce. By John Dickinson, F.R.A.S, etc., etc., and John Malcolm Ludlow, Barrister at Law, author of "British India, its Races and its History," "The War in Oude," etc., etc. 8vo. pp. 16, sewed. 1866. 6*d*.

RESULTS OF IRRIGATION WORKS IN GODAVERY DISTRICT, and Reflections upon them. By Major-General Sir Arthur Cotton, R.E. Part I. 8vo. pp. 15, and Appendix, sewed. 1866. 6*d*. Part II. 8vo. pp. 11, sewed. 1866. 6*d*.

Dictionary AND COMMERCIAL PHRASEOLOGY in the German, Dutch, English, French, Italian, and Spanish Languages, including a complete Catalogue of Goods, and Five Tables of References in the above Languages. Compiled by Prof. Dr. Brutzer, Prof. Dr. Binder, Messrs. J. Bos Iz, M. W. Brasch and others. 8vo. pp. 544, cloth. 1868. 10*s*.

Dirckinck-Holmfeld.—ATTIC TRACTS ON DANISH AND GERMAN MATTERS. By Baron C. Dirckinck-Holmfeld. 8vo. sewed, pp. 116. 1861. 1*s*.

Dircks.—THE CENTURY OF INVENTIONS, written in 1655; by Edward Somerset, Marquis of Worcester. Now first translated into French from the first edition, London, 1663. Edited by Henry Dircks, C.E., LL.D., F.R.S.E., M.R.S.L., etc., Author of "The Life of the Marquis of Worcester," "Worcestcriana," etc., etc. Crown 8vo. sewed, pp. 62. 1868. 1*s*.

Discussion (A) AMONG UPWARDS OF 250 THEOLOGICAL INQUIRERS ON THE UNITY, DUALITY, AND TRINITY OF THE GODHEAD. With Discussions on the Creation, Fall, Incarnation, Atonement, Resurrection, Infallibility of Scripture, Inspiration, Miracles, Future Punishment, Revision of the Bible, etc. 8vo. cloth, pp. 206. 1864. 6*s*.

Doherty.—ORGANIC PHILOSOPHY; or, Man's True Place in Nature. Vol. I. Epicosmology. By Hugh Doherty, M.D. 8vo. cloth, pp. 408. 1864. 10*s*.

Doherty.—ORGANIC PHILOSOPHY. Volume II. Outlines of Ontology, Eternal Forces, Laws, and Principles. By Hugh Doherty, M.D. 8vo. pp. vi. and 462. 1867. 12*s*.

Doherty.—PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION. By Hugh Doherty, M.D. 8vo. sewed, pp. 48. 1865. 1*s*.

Dohne.—THE FOUR GOSPELS IN ZULU. By the Rev. J. L. Dohne, Missionary to the American Board C. F. M. 8vo. pp. 208, cloth. Pietermaritzburg, 1866. 5*s*.

Dohne.—A Zulu-Kafir Dictionary, etymologically explained, with copious illustrations and examples, preceded by an introduction on the Zulu-Kafir Language. By the Rev. J. L. Dohne. Royal 8vo. pp. xlii. 418, sewed. Cape Town, 1867. 21*s.*

Dolgoroukow.—La Vérité sur le Procès du Prince Pierre Dolgoroukow, par un Russe. 32mo. sewed. pp. 144. 1862. 8*s.*

Dolgoroukow.—La France sous le Régime Bonapartiste, par le Prince Pierre Dolgoroukow. 2 volumes. 12mo. paper, pp. 478. 1864. 10*s.*

D. O. M.—The Triune; or, the New Religion. By Scrutator. 8vo. cloth, pp. ii. and 50. 1857. 2*s.*

Dominquey's History of the Argentine Republic. Volume I. (1492 to 1807), Translated from the Spanish. By J. W. Williams. Royal 8vo. sewed, pp. vii. and 149. Buenos Ayres. 1865. 9*s.*

D'Orsey.—Colloquial Portuguese; or, Words and Phrases of Every-day Life. Compiled from Dictation and Conversation. For the Use of English Tourists in Portugal, Brazil, Madeira, etc. By A. J. D. D'Orsey. Third Edition, enlarged. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 126. 1868. 3*s.* 6*d.*

D'Orsey.—A Practical Grammar of Portuguese and English, exhibiting in a Series of Exercises, in Double Translation, the Idiomatic Structure of both Languages, as now written and spoken. Adapted to Ollendorff's System by the Rev. Alexander J. D. D'Orsey, of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and Professor of the English Language in that University. Third edition. In one vol. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 296. 1868. 7*s.* 6*d.*

D'Orsey.—A Portuguese-English and English-Portuguese Dictionary. By Rev. Alex. J. D. D'Orsey. [In preparation.

Dour and Bertha. A Tale. 18mo. pp. vi. and 72, sewed. 1848. 1s.

Drummond.—President Lincoln and the American War. A Funeral Address, delivered on Sunday, April 30th, 1865. By Robert Blackley Drummond, B.A. 8vo. sewed, pp. 12. 1865. 3*d.*

Duncanson.—The Providence of God manifested in Natural Law. By John Duncanson, M.D. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. v. and 354. 1861. 7*s.*

Dunglison.—Medical Lexicon. A Dictionary of Medical Science, containing a concise explanation of the various subjects and terms of Anatomy, Physiology, Pathology, Hygiene, Therapeutics, Pharmacology, Pharmacy, Surgery, Obstetrics, Medical Jurisprudence, and Dentistry. Notices of Climate and of Mineral Waters. Formulæ for Official, Empirical, and Dietetic Preparations, with the accentuation and etymology of the terms, and the French and other Synonymes, so as to constitute a French as well as English Medical Lexicon. By Robley Dunglison, M.D., LL.D., Professor of the Institute of Medicine, etc., in the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia. New edition, thoroughly revised, and very greatly modified and augmented. Roy. 8vo. cloth, pp. 1048. 1866. 24*s.*

Dunlop.—Brazil as a Field for Emigration. Its Geography, Climate, Agricultural Capabilities, and the Facilities afforded for Permanent Settlement. By Charles Dunlop. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 32. 1866. 6*d.*

Dwight.—Modern Philology; its Discoveries, History and Influence. With Maps, Tabular Views, and an Index. By Benjamin W. Dwight. First Series. Third edition, revised and corrected. 8vo. cloth, pp. xviii. and 360. 1864.

Second Series. 8vo. cloth, pp. 504. 1864. 2 vols. 8vo. 24s.

Early English Meals and Manners. — John Russell's Boke of Nurture, Wynkyn de Worde's Boke of Kervynge, the Boke of Curtasye, R. Weste's Booke of Demeanor, Seager's Schoole of Vertue, the Babee's Book, Aristotle's A B C, Urbanitatis, Stans Puer ad Mensam, the Lytylle Childrenes Lytil Boke, for to serve a Lord, Old Symon, the Birched School-Boy, etc., etc. With some Forewords on Education in Early England. Edited by Frederick J. Furnivall, M.A., Trinity Hall, Cambridge. 4to., pp. c. and 388. With 16 tables of Illustrations. Cloth. 1868. 42*s.*

Early English Text Society's Publications.

1864.

1. Early English Alliterative Poems. In the West-Midland Dialect of the Fourteenth Century. Edited by R. Morris, Esq., from an unique Cottonian MS. 10*s.*
2. Arthur (about 1440 A.D.). Edited by F. J. Furnivall, Esq., from the Marquis of Bath's unique M.S. 4*s.*
3. Ane Compendious and Breue Tractate concernyng ye Office and Dewtie of Kyngis, etc. By William Lauder. (1556 A.D.) Edited by F. Hall, Esq., D.C.L. 4*s.*
4. Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (about 1320-30 A.D.). Edited by R. Morris, Esq., from an unique Cottonian M.S. 10*s.*

1865.

5. Of the Orthographie and Congruitie of the Britan Tongue; a treates, noe shorter than necessarie, for the Schooles, be Alexander Hume. Edited for the first time from the unique MS. in the British Museum (about 1617 A.D.), by Henry B. Wheatley, Esq. 4*s.*
6. Lancelot of the Lak. Edited from the unique M.S. in the Cambridge University Library (about 1500), by the Rev. Walter W. Skeat, M.A. 8*s.*
7. The Story of Genesis and Exodus, an Early English Song, of about 1250 A.D. Edited for the first time from the unique MS. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, by R Morris, Esq. 8*s.*
8. Morte Arthure; the Alliterative Version. Edited from Robert Thornton's unique MS. (about 1440 A.D.) at Lincoln. By the Rev. George Perry, M A., Prebendary of Lincoln. 7*s.*
9. Animadversions uppon the Annotacions and Corrections of some Imperfections of Impressiones of Chauer's Workes, reprinted in 1598; by Francis Thynne. Edited from the unique MS. in the Bridgewater Library. By G. H. Kingsley, Esq., M.D. 4*s.*
10. Merlin, or the Early History of King Arthur. Edited for the first time from the unique MS. of the Cambridge University Library (about 1450 A.D.). By Henry B. Wheatley, Esq. Part I. 2*s.* 6*d.*
11. The Monarche, and other Poems of Sir David Lyndesay. Edited from the first edition by Johne Skott, in 1552. By Fitzedward Hall, Esq., D.C.L. Part I. 3*s.*
12. The Wright's Chaste Wife, a Merry Tale, by Adam of Cobsam (about 1642 A.D.), from the unique Lambeth MS. 306. Edited for the first time by F. J. Furnivall, Esq., M.A. 1*s.*

1866.

13. Seinte Marherete, ye Meiden ant Martyr. Three Texts of about 1200, 1310, 1330 A.D First edited in 1862. By the Rev. Oswald Cockayne, M.A., and now re-issued. 2*s.*
14. Kyng Horn, with fragments of Floriz and Blanucheflur, and the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin. Edited from the MS. in the Library of the University of Cambridge and the British Museum. By the Rev. J. Rawson Lumby. 3*s.* 6*d.*
15. Political, Religious, and Love Poems, from the Lambeth MS., No. 306, and other sources. Edited by F. J. Furnivall, Esq., M.A. 7*s.* 6*d.*
16. A Tretice in English breuely drawe out of þ book of Quintis essencijs in EARLY ENGLISH TEXT SOCIETY'S PUBLICATIONS—(continued).

Latyn, þ Hermys þ prophete and king of Egipt after þ flood of Noe, fader of Philosophris, hadde by reuelacioun of an aungil of God to him sente. Edited from the Sloane MS. 73. By F. J. Furnivall, Esq., M.A. 1*s.*

17. PARALLEL EXTRACTS from 29 Manuscripts of PIERS PLOWMAN, with Comments, and a Proposal for the Society's Three-text edition of this Poem. By the Rev. W. Skeat, M.A. 1*s.*
18. HALI MEIDENHEAD, about 1200 A.D. Edited for the first time from the MS. (with a translation) by the Rev. Oswald Cockayne, M.A. 1*s.*
19. THE MONARCHE, and other Poems of Sir David Lyndesay. Part II., the Complaynt of the King's Papingo, and other minor Poems. Edited from the first edition by D. Hall, Esq., D.C.L. 3*s.* 6*d.*
20. SOME TREATISES BY RICHARD ROLLE DE HAMPOLE. Edited from Robert of Thorntone's MS. about 1440 A.D. By the Rev. George G. Perry, M.A. 1*s.*
21. MERLIN, OR THE EARLY HISTORY OF KING ARTHUR. Part II. Edited by Henry B. Wheatley, Esq. 4*s.*
22. THE ROMANS OF PARTENAY, OR LUSIGNEN. Edited for the first time from the unique MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge, by the Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. 6*s.*
23. DAN MICHEL'S AYENBITE OF INWYT, or Remorse of Conscience, in the Kentish dialect, 1340 A.D. Edited from the unique MS. in the British Museum, by Richard Morris, Esq. 10*s.* 6*d.*

1867.

24. HYMNS OF THE VIRGIN AND CHRIST; THE PARLIAMENT OF DEVILS, and Other Religious Poems. Edited from the Lambeth MS. 853, by F. J. Furnivall, M.A. 3*s.*
25. THE STACIONS OF ROME, and the Pilgrim's Sea-Voyage and Sea-Sickness, with Clene Maydenhod. Edited from the Vernon and Porkington MSS., etc. By F. J. Furnivall, Esq., M.A. 1*s.*
26. RELIGIOUS PIECES IN PROSE AND VERSE. Containing Dan Jon Gaytrigg's Sermon; The Abbaye of S. Spirit; Sayne Jon, and other pieces in the Northern Dialect. Edited from Robert of Thorntone's MS. (about 1460 A.D.) by the Rev. George G. Perry, M.A. 2*s.*
27. MANIPULUS VOCABULORUM: a Rhyming Dictionary of the English Language, by Peter Levens (1570). Edited, with an Alphabetical Index, by Henry B. Wheatley. 12*s.*
28. THE VISION OF WILLIAM CONCERNING PIERS PLOWMAN, together with Vita de Dowel, Dobet et Dobest. 1362 A.D. By William Langland. The earliest or Vernon Text; Text A. Edited from the Vernon MS., with full Collations. By Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. 7*s.*
29. ENGLISH GILDS, their Statutes and Customs, with an Introduction and an Appendix of translated Statutes. Edited from the MSS. 1389 A.D. By Toulmin Smith, Esq. [In the press.
30. PIERCE THE PLOUGHMAN'S CREDE (about 1394). Edited from the MSS. by the Rev. W. W. Skeat, M.A. 2*s.*

1868.

31. INSTRUCTIONS FOR PARISH PRIESTS. By John Myrc. Edited from Cotton MS. Claudius A. II. By Edward Peacock, Esq., F.S.A., etc., etc. 4*s.*
32. THE BABEES BOOK, Aristotle's A B C, Urbanitatis, Stans Puer ad Mensam, The Lytille Childrenes Lytil Boke. The Bokes of Nurture of Hugh Rodes and John Russell, Wynnyn de Worde's Boke of Kervynge, the Booke of Demeanor, the Boke of Curtasye, Seager's Schoole of Vertue, etc., etc. With some French and Latin Poems on like subjects, and some Forewords on Education in Early England. Edited by F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Trinity Hall, Cambridge. 15*s.*
33. THE BOOK OF THE KNIGHT DE LA TOUR LANDRY, 1372. A Father's Book for his Daughters. Edited from the Harleian MS. 1764. By Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A., and Mr. William Rossiter. 8*s.*

Eastwick.—KHIRAD AFROZ (the Illuminator of the Understanding). By Maulaví Hafízu'd-dín. A New Edition of the Hindústaní Text, carefully revised, with Notes, Critical and Explanatory. By Edward B. Eastwick, F.R.S., F.S.A., M.R.A.S., Professor of Hindústaní at Haileybury College. Imperial 8vo. cloth, pp. xiv., and 319. Re-issue, 1867. 18s.

Echo (Deutsches).—THE GERMAN ECHO. A Faithful Mirror of German Conversation. By Ludwig Wolfram. With a Vocabulary. By Henry P. Skelton. Post 8vo., pp. 130 and 70. Cloth. 1863. 3*s.*

Echo Français.—A PRACTICAL GUIDE TO CONVERSATION. By Fr. de la Fruston. With a complete Vocabulary. By Anthony Maw Border. Post 8vo., pp. 120 and 72. Cloth. 1860. 3*s.*

Eco Italiano (L').—A PRACTICAL GUIDE TO ITALIAN CONVERSATION By Eugene Camerini. With a complete Vocabulary. By Henry P. Skelton Post 8vo., pp. vi., 128 and 98. Cloth. 1860. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Eco de Madrid.—THE ECHO OF MADRID. A Practical Guide to Spanish Conversation. By J. E. Hartzenbusch, and Henry Lemming. With a complete Vocabulary, containing Copious Explanatory Remarks. By Henry Lemming. Post 8vo., pp. xii., 144 and 83. Cloth. 1860. 5*s.*

Edalji.—A DICTIONARY, GUJARÁTÍ AND ENGLISH. By Shápurjí Edaljí. Second edition. 8vo. pp. xxiv. 874, cloth. 1868. £1 1*s.*

Edalji.—A GRAMMAR OF THE GUJARÁTÍ LANGUAGE. By Shapurjí Edaljí. Crown, 8vo. cloth, pp. 127. 1867. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Edda SÆMUNDAR HINNS FRODA. The Edda of Sæmund the Wise. Translated from the Old Norse, with a Mythological Index. Part First. Mythological. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 152. 1866. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Edda SÆMUNDAR HINNS FRODA. The Edda of Sæmund the Learned. From the Old Norse or Icelandic. Part II., Historical. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 170. London, 1866. 4*s.*

Edda SÆMUNDAR HINNS FRODA. The Edda of Sæmund the Learned. Translated from the Old Norse, by Benjamin Thorpe. Complete in 1 vol. fcap. 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. 152, and pp. viii. 170. 1866. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Edgar.—MODERN TIMES, THE LABOUR QUESTION, AND THE FAMILY. A Brief Statement of Facts and Principles. By Henry Edgar. 12mo. sewed, pp. 24. 3*d.*

Edgar.—THE POSITIVIST'S CALENDAR; or, Transitional System of Public Commemoration, instituted by Auguste Comte, Founder of the Positive. Religion of Humanity. With a Brief Exposition of Religious Positivism. By Henry Edgar. 12mo. sewed, pp. 103. 1856. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Edge.—MAJOR-GENERAL MCCLELLAN AND THE CAMPAIGN ON THE YORKTOWN PENINSULA. By Frederick Milnes Edge. With a map of the Peninsula, drawn expressly for this work, by James Wyld, Geographer to the Queen. 12mo. pp. iv. and 204. 1865. 4*s.*

Edwards.—MEMOIRS OF LIBRARIES, together with a Practical Handbook of Library Economy. By Edward Edwards. 2 vols. roy. 8vo. Numerous illustrations. Cloth. Vol. 1, pp. xxviii. and 801. Vol. 2. pp. xxxvi. and 1104. 1859. £2 8*s.*

Ditto, large paper, imperial 8vo. cloth. £4 4*s.*

Edwards.—Chapters of the Biographical History of the French Academy. 1629—1863. With an Appendix relating to the Unpublished Chronicle "Liber de Hyda." By Edward Edwards, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo., pp. 186. cloth. 1864. 6*s*.

Ditto, large paper. Roy. 8vo. 10*s*. 6*d*.

Edwards.—Libraries and Founders of Libraries. By Edward Edwards. 8vo. cloth, pp. xix. and 506. 1865. 18*s*.

Ditto, large paper, imperial 8vo. cloth. £1 10*s*.

Edkins.—A Grammar of the Chinese Colloquial Language, commonly called the Mandarin Dialect. By Joseph Edkins. 8vo., pp. viii. and 266, sewed. 1857. 20*s*.

Edkins.—Progressive Lessons in the Chinese Spoken Language, with Lists of Common Words and Phrases, and an Appendix, containing the laws of tones in the Peking dialect. 8vo., pp. vi. and 104, sewed. 1862. 12*s*.

Eger and Grime.—An Early English Romance. Edited from Bishop Percy's Folio Manuscripts, about 1650 A.D. By John W. Hales, M.A., Fellow and late Assistant Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge, and Frederick J. Furnivall, M.A., of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. 4to. large paper. Half bound, Roxburgh style, pp. 64. 1867. 10*s*. 6*d*.

Elder.—Biography of Elisha Kent Kane. By William Elder. 8vo. pp. 416. Cloth. 1858. 12*s*.

Ellet.—The Mississippi and Ohio Rivers: containing Plans for the Protection of the Delta from inundation, and Investigations of the Practicability and Cost of Improving the Navigation of the Ohio, and other Rivers, by means of Reservoirs. With an Appendix on the Bars at the Mouths of the Mississippi. By Charles Ellet, Junior, Civil Engineer. 8vo. pp. 368. Cloth. 1853. 16*s*.

Elliott.—The History of India as told by its own Historians. The Muhammadan Period. Edited from the Posthumous Papers of the late Sir H. M. Elliott, K.C.B., East India Company's Bengal Civil Service. By Professor John Dowson, M.R.A.S., Staff College, Sandhurst. Vol. I. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxxii. and 541. 1867. 18*s*. To be completed in three volumes.

Elliott.—Memoirs on the History, Philology, and Ethnic Distribution of the Races of the North-west Provinces of India: being an amplified Edition of the Glossary of Indian Terms. By the late Sir H. M. Elliott, K.C.B. Arranged from M.S. materials collected by him, and Edited by Reinhold Rost, Ph. D., Secretary to the Royal Asiatic Society. 2 vols. 8vo. In the press.

Emerson.—The Young American. A Lecture. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. 8vo., pp. 24. 1844. 1*s*.

Emerson.—Representative Men. Seven Lectures. By R. W. Emerson. Post 8vo., pp. 215, cloth. 1850. 5*s*.

Emerson.—Essays. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. First Series, embodying the Corrections and Editions of the last American edition; with an Introductory Preface, by Thomas Carlyle, reprinted by permission, from the first English Edition. Post 8vo. pp. viii. and 192, sewed. 1853. 2s.

Emerson.—Essays. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. Second Series, with Preface by Thomas Carlyle. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 190, 1858. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Emerson.—Poems. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. 16mo. cloth. Blue and Gold Series, pp. 254. With portrait. 1865. 5*s*.

Emerson.—Essays. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. First and Second Series. Blue and Gold Edition. 16mo. cloth, gilt edges, pp. iv. and 515. 5*s*.

Emperor of Austria versus Louis Kossuth. A few words of Common Sense. By an Hungarian. 8vo. pp. 28. 1861. 1*s*.

Epistle, An. In Familiar Verse. To a Young Statesman. By a Loyal Subject. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 11. 1867. 6*d*.

Ethnological Journal.—A Monthly Record of Ethnological Research and Criticism. Edited by Luke Burke. July, 1865, to March, 1866. Nos. 1 to 7, 1*s*. each; 8 and 9, 4*d*. each.

Ethnological Journal.—A Magazine of Ethnographical and Antiquarian Science. Edited by Luke Burke. New Series. No. 1. January, 1854. 8vo. pp. 90, sewed. 3*s*. 6*d*. (No more published.)

Everett.—Self Government in the United States. By the Hon. Edward Everett. 8vo., pp. 44, sewed. 1860. 1*s*.

Everett.—The Questions of the Day. An Address. By Edward Everett. Royal 8vo. sewed, pp. 46. 1861. 1*s*. 6*d*.

Ewbank.—A Descriptive and Historical Account of Hydraulic and other Machines for Raising Water, Ancient and Modern, with Observations on various Subjects connected with the Mechanic Arts: including the progressive Development of the Steam Engine; Descriptions of every variety of Bellows, Piston, and Rotary Pumps; Fire Engines, Water Rams, Pressure Engines, Air Machines, Eolipiles, etc.; Remarks on Ancient Wells, Air Beds, Cog Wheels, Blow Pipes, Bellows of various People, Magic Goblets, Steam Idols, and other Machinery of Ancient Temples. To which are added, Experiments of Blowing and Spouting Tubes, and other original Devices, Natures, Modes, and Machinery for raising Water; Historical Notices respecting Siphons, Fountains, Water Organs, Clepsydræ, Pipes, Valves, Cocks, etc. In Five Books, illustrated by nearly 300 Engravings. 15th edition, with additional matter. By Thomas Ewbank. 8vo. cloth, pp. 624. 1864. 21*s*.

Exposition (An), of Spiritualism; comprising Two Series of Letters, and a review of the Spiritual Magazine, No. 20. As published in the Star and Dial. With Introduction, Notes, and Appendix. By Sceptic. Crown 8vo. sewed, pp. xiv. and 314. Cloth. 1862. 6*s*.

Falkener.—A Description of some Important Theatres and other Remains in Crete. From a MS. History of Candia, by Onorio Belli, in 1586. Being a Supplement to the "Museum of Classical Antiquities." Illustrations and nine Plates. By Edward Falkener. Pp. 32, royal 8vo. cloth. 1854. 5*s*. 6*d*.

Farm (How to Get a) and Where to Find one. Showing that Homesteads may be had by those desirous of securing them, with the Public Law on the subject of Free Homes, and suggestions from Practical Farmers, together with numerous successful experiences of others, who, though beginning with little or nothing, have become the owners of ample farms. By the Author of "Ten Acres Enough." Second edition, pt. 8vo. pp. 345. Cloth. 6*s*.

Faulkner.—A Dictionary of Commercial Terms, with their synonymes in various Languages. By Alexander Faulkner, Assistant Commissioner of Customs, Salt and Opium. Author of the "Orientalist's Grammatical Vade-Mecum," etc. 12mo., pp. iii. and 158, and vii. Half-bound. 1866. 4*s.*

Fay.—Great Outline of Geography for High Schools and Families. By Theodore S. Fay. With an Atlas of 8 plates in folio. 12mo., pp. viii. and 238. Boards. 1867. 16*s.*

Felton.—Selections from Modern Greek Writers, in Prose and Poetry. With Notes. By Dr. C. C. Felton. 8vo. cloth, pp. xv. and 216. 1857. 6*s.*

Felton.—Greece, Ancient and Modern. Lectures delivered before the Lowell Institute. By C. C. Felton, LL.D., late President of Harvard University. Two vols., 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. 511, and iv. 549. 1867. 28*s.*

Feuerbach.—The Essence of Christianity. By Ludwig Feuerbach. Translated from the Second German Edition, by Marian Evans, translator of Strauss's "Life of Jesus." Large post 8vo. cloth, pp. xx. and 340. 1864. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Fichte.—The Characteristics of the Present Age. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated from the German by William Smith. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xi. and 271. 1847. 6*s.*

"We accept these lectures as a true and most admirable delineation of the present age; and on this ground alone we should bestow on them our heartiest recommendation; but it is because they teach us how we may rise above the age, that we bestow on them our most emphatic praise.

"He makes us think, and perhaps more sublimely than we have ever formerly thought, but it is only in order that we may the more nobly act.

"As a majestic and most stirring utterance from the lips of the greatest German prophet, we trust that the book will find a response in many an English soul, and potently help to regenerate English society."—The Critic.

Fichte.—The Vocation of a Scholar. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated from the German by William Smith. Post 8vo. cloth. Pp. 78, sewed, 1847. 2*s.*

"'The Vocation of a Scholar . . . . is distinguished by the same high moral tone, and manly, vigorous expression' which characterise all Fichte's works in the German, and is nothing lost in Mr. Smith's clear, unembarrassed, and thoroughly English translation."—Douglas Jerrold's Newspaper.

"We are glad to see this excellent translation of one of the best of Fichte's works presented to the public in a very neat form . . . . No class needs and earnest and sincere spirit more than the literary class; and therefore the 'Vocation of the Scholar,' the 'Guide of the Human Race,' written in Fichte's most earnest, most commanding temper, will be welcomed in its English dress by public writers, and be beneficial to the cause of truth.—Economist.

Fichte.—The Vocation of Man. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated from the German by William Smith. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 198. 1848. 4*s.*

"In the progress of my present work, I have taken a deeper glance into religion than ever I did before. In me the emotions of the heart proceed only from perfect intellectual clearness; it cannot be but the clearness I have now attained on this subject shall also take possession of my heart."—Fichte's Correspondence.

"'The Vocation of Man' is, as Fichte truly says, intelligible to all readers who are really able to understand a book at all; and as the history of the mind in its various phases of doubt, knowledge, and faith, it is of interest to all. A book of this stamp is sure to teach you much because it excites thought. If it rouses you to combat his conclusions, it has done a good work; for in that very effort you are stirred to a consideration of points which have hitherto escaped your indolent acquiescence.—Foreign Quarterly.

"This is Fichte's most popular work, and is every way remarkable."—Atlas.

"It appears to us the boldest and most emphatic attempt that has yet been made to explain to man his restless and unconquerable desire to win the True and the Eternal."—Sentinel.

Fichte.—On the Nature of the Scholar, and its Manifestations. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated from the German by William Smith. Second Edition. Cloth. Post 8vo. Pp. vii. and 131. 1848. 3*s.*

"With great satisfaction we welcome this first English translation of an author who occupies the most exalted position as a profound and original thinker; as an irresistible orator in the cause of what he believed to be the truth; as a thoroughly honest and heroic man . . . The appearance of any of his works in our language is, we believe, a perfect novelty . . . . These orations are admirably fitted for their purpose; so grand is the position taken by the lecturer, and so irresistible their eloquence."—Examiner.

"This work must inevitably arrest the attention of the scientific physician, by the grand spirituality of its doctrines, and the pure morality it teaches . . . Shall we be presumptuous if we recommend these views to our professional brethren? or if we say to the enlightened, the thoughtful, the serious. This—if you be true scholars—is your Vocation? We know not a higher morality than this, or more noble principles than these: they are full of truth."—British and Foreign Medico-Chirurgical Review.

Fichte.—Memoir of Johann Gottlieb Fichte. By William Smith. Second Edition. Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 168. 1848. 4*s.*

". . . . A Life of Fichte, full of nobleness and instruction, of grand purpose, tender feeling, and brave effort! . . . the compilation of which is executed with great judgment and fidelity."—Prospective Review.

"We state Fichte's character as it is known and admitted by men of all parties among the Germans, when we say that so robust an intellect, a soul so calm, so lofty, so massive, and immoveable, has not mingled in philosophical discussion since the time of Luther . . . . Fichte's opinions may be true or false; but his character as a thinker can be slightly valued only by such as know it ill; and as a man, approved by action and suffering, in his life and in his death, he ranks with a class of men who were common only in better ages than ours."—State of German Literature, by Thomas Carlyle.

Fichte.—The Way towards a Blessed Life; or, the Doctrine of Religion. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated by William Smith. Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. viii. and 221. 1849. 5*s.*

Fichte.—The Popular Works of Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated from the German, with a Memoir of the Author, by William Smith. 2 vols. Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 554, and pp. viii. and 529. 1859. 20*s.*

Fichte.—The Science of Knowledge. By J. G. Fichte. Translated from the German by A. E. Krœger. Crown 8vo., pp. 378. Cloth. 1868. 8*s.*

Filippo Malincontri; or, Student Life in Venetia. An Autobiography. Edited by Girolamo Volpe. Translated from the unpublished Italian MS. by C. B. Cayley, B.A. Two vols., post 8vo. Pp. xx. and 646. 1861. 18*s*

Fitzgerald.—The Boston Machinist. Being a Complete School for the Apprentice as well as the Advanced Machinist, showing how to make and use every tool in every branch of the business, with a Treatise on Screw and Gear Cutting. By Walter Fitzgerald, Inventor and Mechanical Engineer. 12mo. cloth, pp. 80. 1866. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Fletcher.—Analysis of Bentham's Theory of Legislation. By G. W. H. Fletcher, LL.B., of the Civil Service Commission. 12mo. cloth, pp. ix. and 86. 1864. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Fox.—The Service in Commemoration of William Johnson Fox, late M.P. for Oldham, and Minister at South Place, Finsbury. At Finsbury Chapel, on Sunday Morning, June 12, 1864. By M. D. Conway. Post 8vo., sewed, pp. 23. 1864. 6*d.*

Fox.—Memorial Edition of Collected Works, by W. J. Fox:—

Vol. 1. Lectures, Lessons, etc., prior to 1824. 8vo. cloth, pp. 390. 1865. 5s.

Vol. 2. Christ and Christianity. 8vo. cloth, pp. 355. 1865. 5s.

Vol. 3. Miscellaneous Lectures and Sermons, and Twenty Sermons on Principles of Morality Inculcated in Holy Scripture. 8vo. cloth, pp. 350. 1865. 5s.

Vol. 4. Anti-Corn Law Speeches and occasional Speeches. 8vo. cloth, pp. 378. 1866. 5s.

Vol. 5. Letters on the Corn Laws. By a Norwich Weaver Boy, and Extracts from Letters by Publicola. 8vo. cloth, pp. 325. 1866. 5s.

Vol. 6. Miscellaneous Essays, Political, Literary, Critical, and Biographical. From the Retrospective Review, Westminster Review, Monthly Repository, Morning Chronicle, etc. 8vo. cloth, pp. 424. 1867. 5s.

Vol. 7. Reports of Lectures at South Place Chapel, Finsbury. 8vo. cloth, pp. 312. 1865. 5s.

Vol. 8. Reports of Lectures at South Place Chapel, Finsbury. 8vo. cloth, pp. 321. 1865. 5s.

Vol. 9. Reports of Lectures at South Place Chapel, Finsbury, supplementary to the Course on the Religious Ideas. 8vo. cloth, pp. 323. 1867. 5s.

Vol. 10. Reports of Lectures at South Place Chapel, Finsbury, supplementary to the Course on the Religious Ideas, and Miscellaneous Lectures. 8vo. cloth, pp. 314. 1867. 5s.

Vol. 11. Reports of Miscellaneous Lectures at South Place Chapel, Finsbury. 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 322. 1868. 5s.

Vol. 12. Reports of Miscellaneous Lectures at South Place Chapel, Finsbury. 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 358. 1868. 5s.

Foxton.—The Priesthood and the People. By Frederick J. Foxton, A.B., Author of "Popular Christianity," etc. 8vo., pp. 58, sewed. 1862. 1s. 6d.

Foxton.—Popular Christianity; its Transition State, and Probable Development. By Frederick J. Foxton, A.B., formerly of Pembroke College, Oxford, and Perpetual Curate of Stoke Prior and Docklow, Herefordshire. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. ix. and 226. 1849. 5s.

Francis.—Lowell Hydraulic Experiments. Being a selection from experiments on Hydraulic Motors, on the Flow of Water over Weirs, in Open Canals of Uniform Rectangular Section and through Submerged Orifices and Diverging Tubes, made at Lowell, Massachusetts. By James B. Francis, Civil Engineer, Member of the American Society of Civil Engineers and Architects, Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Member of the American Philosophical Society, etc. Second Edition. Revised and enlarged. With many new experiments and additional illustrations. 4to., pp. 250, 23 plates. Cloth. 1868. £3 3s.

Franklin.—Life and Times of Benjamin Franklin. By James Parton. With Steel Portraits. Two vols. 8vo., pp. 1,336. 1864. 21s.

Free Press (Publications of the):

Reasons for demanding Investigations into the Charges against Lord Palmerston. 8vo., pp. 19. 1840. 1s.

The Crisis—France in Face of the Four Powers. With Supplement, by David Urquhart. 8vo., pp. 58. 1840. 1s.

The Sulphur Monopoly. By David Urquhart. 8vo., pp. 8. 1840. 3d.

The Edinburgh Review and the Affghan War. By David Urquhart. 8vo., pp. 61. 1843. 6d.

A Fragment of the History of Servia, 1843. By David Urquhart. 8vo., pp. 96. 6d.

An Appeal against Faction. By David Urquhart. 8vo., pp. 56. 1843. 1s.

FREE PRESS (Publications of the)—continued.

CANADA UNDER SUCCESSIVE ADMINISTRATIONS. By David Urquhart. 8vo., pp. 100. 1844. 1*s.*

THE CHANNEL ISLANDS—NORMAN LAWS AND MODERN PRACTICE. 8vo., pp. 32. 1844. 6*d.*

PUBLIC OPINION AND ITS ORGANS. By David Urquhart. 8vo., pp. 94. 1855. 6*d.*

THE SERF AND THE COSSACK. By Francis Marx. 8vo., pp. 60. 1855. 6*d.*

TUCKER'S POLITICAL FLY SHEETS. 8vo. 1855. 3*s.* Containing:—Palmerston and Poland; Palmerston, what has he done? England's Part in Turkey's Fall; War for Russia—not against Russia; Louis Napoléon, Russia, Circassia; the Invasion of the Crimea; the Words of Palmerston; the Spider and the Fly; the Honey Face of the Four Points.

THE FREE PRESS SERIALS. 8vo. 1855-56. Containing:—The Nation Cheated out of its Food; Visit of David Urquhart to the Hungarian Exiles at Kutayah; Contradictions of Lord Clarendon in reference to Corn; The Story of the Life of Lord Palmerston; the Affghan War; the Will of Peter the Great.

PARLIAMENTARY USURPATIONS in reference to Money Cognizance and Suppression of Treason by leading Statesmen and Diplomatists; Betrayal of Denmark to Russia; the Chartist Correspondence; Selections from the Blue Books as Materials for Study, by Gustavus; the Danger of the Political Balance of Europe; Crimes of Louis Philip; Report of the Newcastle Committee on the Union of the Principalities.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES OF THE BIRMINGHAM CONFERENCE, ON THE RIGHT OF SEARCH AND NEWSPAPER FOLIO. 6*d.*

THE PROPOSED BASIS OF PACIFICATION KNOWN AS THE FOUR POINTS. 1855. 1*s.*

NEWCASTLE COMMITTEE REPORTS, ON THE LIMITATION OF THE SUPPLY OF GRAIN, AND CONSTITUTIONAL REMARKS. 8vo., pp. 48. 1855. 6*d.*

FAMILIAR WORDS AS AFFECTING ENGLAND AND THE ENGLISH. 8vo., pp. 350. 1856. 2*s.*

THE TURKISH BATH, WITH A VIEW TO ITS INTRODUCTION INTO THE BRITISH DOMINIONS. 8vo., pp. 68. 1856. 1*s.*

THE QUEEN AND THE PREMIER. 8vo., pp. 32. 1857. 6*d.*

THE REBELLION OF INDIA. By David Urquhart. 8vo., pp. 46. 1*s.*

THE HOSTILITIES AT CANTON. By Augustus G. Stapleton. 8vo., pp. 16. 1857. 6d.

THE IMMEDIATE CAUSE OF THE INDIAN MUTINY. By G. Crawshay. 8vo., pp. 28. 1857. 6*d.*

THE REPORT OF THE EAST INDIAN COMMITTEE OF THE COLONIAL SOCIETY ON THE MILITARY OPERATIONS IN CHINA. 8vo., pp. 67. 1857. 6*d.*

THE REPORT OF THE BRADFORD COMMITTEE WHAT CONSTITUTES LAWFUL WAR. 8vo., pp. 24. 1857.

THE SRADDHA, THE KEYSTONE OF THE BRAHMINICAL, BUDDHISTIC, AND ARIAN RELIGIONS. By David Urquhart. 8vo, pp. 43. 1858. 1*s.*

THE GROWTH OF RUSSIAN POWER, CONTINGENT ON THE DECAY OF THE BRITISH CONSTITUTION. 8vo., pp. 18. 1858. 6*d.*

PROSELYTISM DESTRUCTIVE OF CHRISTIANITY, 8vo., pp. 44. By G. Crawshay. 1858. 1*s.*

CATASTROPHE OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY. By G. Crawshay. 8vo., pp. 24. 1858. 6*d.*

KOSSUTH AND URQUHART. Estratti di una Corrispondenza. 8vo., pp. 40. 1859. 1*s.*

HOW RUSSIA TRIES TO GET INTO HER HANDS THE SUPPLY OF CORN OF THE WHOLE OF EUROPE. 8vo., pp. 24. 1855. 6*d.*

THE EUROPEAN COMPLICATION EXPLAINED. By G. Crawshay. 8vo., pp. 10. 1859. 6*d.*

FREE PRESS (Publications of the)—continued.

DAVID URQUHART ON THE ITALIAN WAR. To which is added a Memoir of Europe, drawn up for the Instruction of the present Emperor of Russia. 8vo., pp. 40. 1859. 1*s.*

THE RUSSO-DUTCH QUESTION. Obligations of England to Russia contracted to ensure the maintenance of the Kingdom of Poland, and paid for its Suppression. 4to., pp. 15. 6*d.*

A LETTER ON THE DANGER TO ENGLAND OF AUSTRIA'S SUBJUGATION. 8vo. pp. 8. 1859. 6*d.*

THE AFFGHAN PAPERS. Report and Petition of the Newcastle Foreign Affairs Association. 8vo., pp. 32. 1860. 6*d.*

THE INVASION OF ENGLAND. By David Urquhart. 8vo., pp. 13. 3*d.*

THE DUKE OF COBURG'S PAMPHLET. THE DESPOTS AS REVOLUTIONISTS. 8vo. pp. 31. 1*s.*

PALMERSTON UNMASKED. Answer to Ismail's Reply to the Duke of Coburg's Pamphlet. By Edward Fischel. 8vo., pp. 51. 1*s.*

SUCCESSION TO THE CROWN OF DENMARK. Speech of Lord R. Montague. 8vo. pp. 24. 1861. 1*s.*

THE PACIFIC AND THE AMAAR. By Francis Mark. 8vo., pp. 28. 1*s.*

THE DEFENCE OF ENGLAND. Nine Letters by a Journeyman Shoemaker. 8vo., pp. 34. 1862. 6*d.*

CIRCASSIA. Speech of S. E. Rolland at Preston. 8vo., dp. 34. 1862. 1*s.*

THE RIGHT OF SEARCH. Two Speeches, by David Urquhart. January 20 and 27. 8vo., pp. 103. 1862. 1*s.*

THE CIRCASSIAN WAR AND POLISH INSURRECTION. SECRET OF RUSSIA IN THE CASPIANA EUXINE. 8vo., pp. 102. 1863. 1*s.*

THE EXPEDITION OF THE CHESEPEAKE TO CIRCASSIA. 8vo., pp. 18 1864. 6*d.*

THE NEW HERESY—PROSELYTISM SUBSTITUTED FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS. By David Urquhart. 4to., pp. 19. 1862. 6*d.*

THE REASON FOR ABROGATING THE TREATY OF LONDON OF MAY 8TH, 1852. Presented by a Deputation from the Lancashire Foreign Affairs Committee. 4to., pp. 15. 6*d.*

THE STORY OF THE CRIMEAN WAR. From the Times and Herald Correspondents, and the evidence before the Sebastopol Committee. 4to., pp. 24. 3*d.*

DEBATES ON THE MOTION FOR PAPERS, WITH A VIEW TO THE IMPEACHMENT OF VISCOUNT PALMERSTON. 4to., pp. 59. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Friedrich.—PROGRESSIVE GERMAN READER, with Copious Notes to the First Part. By P. Friedrich. Crown 8vo., pp. 166. Cloth. 1868. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Froembling.—GRADUATED GERMAN READER, consisting of a selection from the most popular writers, arranged progressively; with a complete Vocabulary for the first part. By Friedrich Otto Froembling. 12mo., pp. viii. and 256. Cloth. 1867. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Frœmbling.—GRADUATED EXERCISES FOR TRANSLATION INTO GERMAN. Consisting of Extracts from the best English Authors, arranged progressively; with an Appendix, containing Idiomatic Notes. By Friedrich Otto Frœmbling, Ph.D., Principal German Master at the City of London School. Crown 8vo., cloth, pp xiv. and 322. With Notes, pp. 66. 1867. 4*s.* 6*d.* Without Exercises, 4*s.*

Froude.—THE BOOK OF JOB. By J. A. Froude, M.A., late Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. Reprinted from the Westminster Review. New Series, No. 7. 8vo., sewed, pp. 38. 1853. 8*d*.

Fruston.—ECHO FRANÇAIS. A Practical Guide to French Conversation. By F. de la Fruston. With a Vocabulary. 12mo., pp. vi. and 192. Cloth. 3*s*.

Fulton.—THE FACTS AND FALLACIES OF THE SABBATH QUESTION CONSIDERED SCRIPTURALLY. By Henry Fulton. 12mo., limp cloth, pp. 108. 1858. 1*s*. 6*d*.

Furnivall.—EDUCATION IN EARLY ENGLAND. Some Notes used as forewords to a Collection of Treatises on "Manners and Meals in Olden Times," for the Early English Text Society. By Frederick J. Furnivall, M.A. 8vo., sewed, pp. 4 and lxxiv. 1867. 1*s*.

Furnivall.—A CONCISE MIDDLE-ENGLISH DICTIONARY FOR THE PERIOD, 1250—1526, THE BEGINNING OF EARLY ENGLISH TO THE DATE OF THE FIRST ENGLISH NEW TESTAMENT. Edited by F. J. Furnivall, Esq., M.A. 8vo.

Galitzin.—EMANCIPATION-FANTASIA. Dedicated to the Russian people. By Prince George Galitzin. Partition to Orchestra and Piano Duet. Fol. pp. 38, sewed. 1861. 5*s*.

Galitzin.—THE HERZEN VALSE, for two performers on the pianoforte. Composed by Prince George Galitzin. Folio, pp. 20, sewed. 5*s*.

Gavazzi.—LECTURE. By Signor Gavazzi, on "Garibaldi," delivered at the Liverpool Institute, October 3rd, 1864. 12mo., sewed, pp. 20. 1864. 2*d*.

Geiger.—JUDAISM AND ITS HISTORY. By Dr. Abraham Geiger, Rabbi of the Israelitish Congregation at Frankfort. Translated by M. Mayer. Vol. I. Closing with the Destruction of the Second Temple. To which is added an Appendix. "Strauss and Rénan." 8vo., half-bound, pp. x. and 344. 1866. 10*s*. 6*d*.

Geological Magazine (The); OR MONTHLY JOURNAL OF GEOLOGY, with which is incorporated "The Geologist." Edited by Henry Woodward, F.G.S., F.Z.S., Honorary Member of the Geological Societies of Glasgow and Norwich; Corresponding Member of the Natural History Society of Montreal. Assisted by Professor John Morris, F.G.S., etc., etc., and Robert Etheridge, F.R.S.E., F.G.S. Volume III. 8vo. pp. 592, cloth. January to December, 1866. 20*s*. Volume IV. 8vo. pp. iv. and 584, cloth. January to December, 1867. 20*s* Continued monthly.

Germany and Italy.—ANSWER TO MAZZINI'S "ITALY AND GERMANY." By Rodbertus, De Berg, and L. Bucher. 8vo., pp. 20, sewed. 1861. 1*s*.

Gervinus.—THE MISSION OF THE GERMAN CATHOLICS. By G. G. Gervinus, Professor of History in the University of Heidelberg. Translated from the German. Post 8vo., sewed, pp. iv. and 66. 1846. 1*s*.

Gesenius.—Hebrew Grammar. Translated from the 17th edition by Dr. T. J. Conant, including the corrections and additions of Dr. E. Rödiger, with Grammatical Exercises and Chrestomathy, by the Translator. 8vo. cloth. pp. xv. and 297. Exercises, pp. 20. Chrestomathy, pp. 64. 1864. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Gesenius.—Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, including the Biblical Chaldee. Translated by Edward Robinson, with corrections and additions by the Author. 14th Edition. Royal 8vo. cloth, pp. ix. and 1160. 1855. 25*s.*

Gessner.—Le Droit des Neutres sur Mer. Par L. Gessner. 8vo. Paper covers, pp. 437. 1865. 7*s.*

Ghose.—The Open Competition for the Civil Service of India. By Manomohan Ghose, of the Calcutta University and Lincolns' Inn. 8vo., sewed, pp. 68. 1866. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Giles.—Hebrew Records. An Historical Enquiry concerning the Age, Authorship, and Authenticity of the Old Testament. By Rev. Dr. Giles, late Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. Second Edition. 8vo. pp. 356, cloth. 1853. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Gillespie.—A Treatise on Land-Surveying; comprising the Theory developed from Five Elementary Principles; and the Practice with the Chain alone, the Compass, the Transit, the Theodolite, the Plain Table, etc. Illustrated by 400 Engravings and a Magnetic Chart. By W. M. Gillespie, LL.D., C.E. 8vo., cloth, pp. 424 and 84. 8th Edition. 1867. 16*s.*

Gillespie.—A Manual of the Principles and Practice of Road Making; comprising the Location, Construction, and Improvement of Roads (common, Macadam, paved, planked, etc.) and Railroads. By W. M. Gillespie, LL.D., C.E. Ninth Edition, with Additions. Post 8vo., cloth, pp. 372. 1867. 9*s.*

Gillmore.—Engineer and Artillery Operations against the Defences of Charleston Harbour in 1863, comprising the Descent upon Morris Island, the Demolition of Fort Sumter, the Reduction of Forts Wagner and Gregg, with Observations on Heavy Ordnance, Fortifications, etc. By G. A. Gillmore. Illustrated by 76 Plates and Engraved Views. 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 354. 1865. 45*s.*

Glennie.—King Arthur; or, the Drama of the Revolution. By John S. Stuart Glennie, M.A., F.S.A., F.R.A.S., etc. Volume I., Prologue and Overture. 12mo. cloth, pp. vi. and 279. 1867. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Gliddon.—Ancient Egypt. Her monuments, hieroglyphics, history, and archæology, and other subjects connected with hieroglyphical literature. By George R. Gliddon, late United States Consul at Cairo. Fifteenth edition. Revised and corrected, with an Appendix. 4to., pp. 68, sewed. 2*s.* 6*d.*

God's Commandments, according to Moses, according to Christ, and according to our present knowledge. A Sketch suggestive of a New Westminster Confession of Faith. For the Laity of the 19th Century. Addressed to all who deem it their highest duty, as well as right, to think for themselves. 8vo., sewed, pp. 24. 1867. 6*d.*

Goethe.—Female Characters of Goethe. From the original Drawings of William Kaulbach. With explanatory text, by George Henry Lewes. Folio, 21 full page steel engravings. Cloth, gilt. 1868. £7 7*s.*

Goethe's Correspondence with a Child. 8vo., pp. viii. and 498. 1860. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Golden A. B. C.—Designed by Gustav König Engraved by Julius Thater. Oblong, cloth. 5*s.*

Goldstücker.—A Compendious Sanskrit-English Dictionary, for the Use of those who intend to read the Easier Works of Classical Sanskrit Literature. By Theodore Goldstücker. Small 4to., pp. 900, cloth. [In preparation.

Goldstücker.—A Compendious Grammar of the Sanskrit Language for Beginners. By Theodore Goldstücker. 8vo. [In preparation.

Goldstücker.—A Dictionary, Sanskrit and English, extended and improved from the second edition of the Dictionary of Professor H. H. Wilson, with his sanction and concurrence; together with a Supplement, Grammatical Appendices, and an Index, serving as a Sanskrit-English Vocabulary. By Theodore Goldstücker. Parts I. to VI. pp. 480. 1854-1864. Each 6*s.*

Goldstücker.—Panini: His Place in Sanskrit Literature. An Investigation of some Literary and Chronological Questions which may be settled by a study of his Work. By Theodore Goldstücker. A separate impression of the Preface to the Facsimile of M.S. No. 17 in the Library of Her Majesty's Home Government for India, which contains a portion of the Manava-Kalpa-Sutra, with the Commentary of Kumarila-Swamin. Imperial 8vo., pp. 268, cloth. 1861. 12*s.*

Goldstücker. — Manava-Kalpa-Sutra; being a portion of this ancient work on Vaidik Rites, together with the Commentary of Kumarila-Swamin. A Facsimile of the MS. No. 17 in the Library of Her Majesty's Home Government for India. With a Preface by Theodore Goldstücker. Oblong folio, pp. 268, of letter press, and 121 leaves of facsimiles. Cloth. 1861. £4. 4*s.*

Goldstücker.—Auctores Sanscriti. Edited for the Sanskrit Text Society, under the supervision of Theodore Goldstücker. Vol. I., containing the Jaiminîya-Nyâya-Mâlâ-Vistara. Parts I. to V. pp. 400, large 4to., sewed. 1865-7. 10*s.* each.

Golovin.—The Nations of Russia and Turkey, and their Destiny. By Ivan Golovin, author of "The Caucasus." 2 vols. crown 8vo. pp. xvi. and 172; xvi. and 170. Cloth. 1854. 10*s.*

Gooroo Simple.—Strange Surprising Adventures of the Venerable G. S. and his Five Disciples, Noodle, Doodle, Wiseacre, Zany, and Foozle; adorned with Fifty Illustrations, drawn on wood, by Alfred Crowquill. A companion Volume to "Münchhausen" and "Owlglass," based upon the famous Tamul tale of the Gooroo Paramartan, and exhibiting, in the form of a skilfully-constructed consecutive narrative, some of the finest specimens of Eastern wit and humour. Elegantly printed on tinted paper, in crown 8vo., richly gilt ornamental cover, gilt edges, pp. 223. 1861. Price 10*s.* 6*d.*

Gould.—Good English, or Popular Errors in Language. By Edward S. Gould, author of "Abridgment of Alison's Europe. Crown 8vo cloth, pp. v. and 228. 1867. 6*s.*

Grammatography.—A MANUAL OF REFERENCE to the Alphabets of Ancient and Modern Languages. Based on the German Compilation of F. Ballhorn. In one vol. royal 8vo. cloth. pp. 80. 1861. 7*s.* 6*d.*

The "Grammatography" is offered to the public as a compendious introduction to the reading of the most important Ancient and Modern Languages. Simple in its design, it will be consulted with advantage by the Philological Student, the Amateur Linguist, the Bookseller, the Corrector of the Press, and the diligent Compositor.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

Afghan (or Pushto).
Amharic.
Anglo-Saxon.
Arabic.
Arabic Ligatures.
Aramaic.
Archaic Characters.
Armenian.
Assyrian Cuneiform.
Bengali.
Bohemian (Czechian).
Bugis.
Burmese.
Canarese (or Carnâtaca).
Chinese.
Coptic.
Croato-Glagolitic.
Cufic.
Cyrillic (or Old Slavonic).
Czechian (or Bohemian).
Danish.
Demotic.
Estrangelo.
Ethiopic.
Etruscan.
Georgian.
German.
Glagolitic.
Gothic.
Greek.
Greek Ligatures.
Greek (Archaic).
Gujerati (or Gnzerattee)
Hieratic.
Hieroglyphics.
Hebrew.
Hebrew (Archaic).
Hebrew (Rabbinical).
Hebrew (Judæo-German).
Hebrew (current hand).
Hungarian.
Illyrian.
Irish.
Italian (Old).
Japanese.
Javanese.
Lettish.
Mantshu.
Median Cuneiform.
Modern Greek (or Romaic).
Mongolian.
Numidian.
Old Slavonic (or Cyrillic).
Palmyrenian.
Persian.
Persian Cuneiform.
Phœnician.
Polish
Pushto (or Afghan).
Romaic (or Modern Greek).
Russian.
Pânes.
Samaritan.
Sanscrit.
Servian.
Slavonic (Old).
Sorbian (or Wendish).
Swedish.
Syriac.
Tamil.
Telugu.
Tibetan.
Turkish.
Wallachian.
Wendish (or Sorbian).
Zend.

Grattan.—CONSIDERATIONS ON THE HUMAN MIND, its Present State and Future Destination. By Richard Grattan, Esq., M.D., ex M.P. 8vo. cloth, pp. 336. 1861. 8*s.*

Grattan.—THE RIGHT TO THINK. An Address to the Young Men of Great Britain and Ireland. By Richard Grattan, M.D. Crown 8vo. stiff covers, pp. 134. 1865. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Gray.—MANUAL OF THE BOTANY OF THE NORTHERN UNITED STATES, including Virginia, Kentucky, and all east of the Mississippi; arranged according to the Natural System. Third Revised Edition, with Garden Botany, etc. By Asa Gray. With six plates, illustrating the Genera of Ferns, etc. 8vo. half-bound. pp. xcviii. and 606. 1862. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Gray.—FIRST LESSONS IN BOTANY AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY. Illustrated by 360 wood engravings, with copious Dictionary of Botanical Terms. By Dr. Asa Gray. 8vo. half-bound, pp. xii. and 236. 1866. 6*s.*

Gray.—INTRODUCTION TO STRUCTURAL AND SYSTEMATIC BOTANY, AND VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY. By Dr. Asa Gray. With 1300 woodcuts. 8vo. cloth, pp. 1866. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Gray.—NATURAL SELECTION NOT INCONSISTENT WITH NATURAL THEOLOGY. A free examination of Darwin's treatise on the Origin of Species, and of its American reviewers. By Asa Gray, M.D., Fisher Professor of Natural Philosophy in Harvard University. 8vo. pp. 56, sewed. 1861. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Gray.—HOW PLANTS GROW: A Simple Introduction to Structural Botany. By Asa Gray, M.D. Square 8vo., boards. New edition. pp. 233. 1866. 6*s.*

Green.—Shakespeare and the Emblem Writers of his Age; with Illustrations from the original Woodcuts and Engravings. By Henry Green, M.A. In one volume, demy 8vo., of about 400 pages, and upwards of 100 Illustrative Woodcuts or Engravings. [In the press.

Greg.—The Creed of Christendom: its Foundation and Superstructure. By William Rathbone Greg. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. pp. xx. and 280. 1863. 6*s.*

Greg.—Literary and Social Judgments. By William Rathbone Greg. In One Volume, cr. 8vo.

Grey.—Handbook of African, Australian, and Polynesian Philology, etc., as represented in the Library of His Excellency Sir George Grey, K.C.B., Her Majesty's High Commissioner of the Cape Colony. Classed, Annotated, and Edited by Sir George Grey and Dr. H. I. Bleek.

Vol. I. Part 1.—South Africa. 8vo. pp. 186, sewed. 1858. 7s. 6d.
Vol. I. Part 2.—Africa (North of the Tropic of Capricorn). 8vo. pp. 70, sewed. 1858. 2s.
Vol. I. Part 3.—Madagascar. 8vo. pp. 24, sewed. 1859. 1s.
Vol. II. Part 1.—Australia. 8vo. pp. iv. and 44, sewed. 1858. 1s. 6d.
Vol. II. Part 2.—Papuan Language of the Loyalty Islands and New Hebrides, comprising those of the Islands of Nengone, Lifu, Aneitum, Tana, and others. 8vo. pp. 12, sewed, 1858. 6d.
Vol. II. Part 3.—Fiji Islands and Rotuma (with Supplement to Part II., Papuan Languages, and Part I., Austral a). 8vo. pp. 34, sewed. 1859. 1s.
Vol. II. Part 4.—New Zealand, the Chatham Islands, and Auckland Islands. 8vo. pp. 76 sewed. 1858. 3s. 6d.
Vol. II. Part 4.—(Continuation).—Polynesia and Borneo, 8vo. pp. 77—154, sewed. 1859 3s. 6d.
Vol. III. Part 1.—Manuscripts and Incunables. 8vo. pp. viii. and 24. 1862. 2s.
Vol. IV. Part 1.—England. Early Printed Books. 8vo. pp. 264, sewed. 1867. 12s.

Grey.—Maori Mementos: being a Series of Addresses, presented by the Native People to His Excellency Sir George Grey, K.C.B., F.R.S. With Introduction, Remarks, and Explanatory Notes. To which is added a small Collection of Laments, etc. By Charles Oliver B. Davis. 8vo. Pp. 227. Aukland, 1855. 12*s.*

Gross.—A System of Surgery, Pathological, Diagnostic, Therapeutic, and Operative. By Samuel D. Gross, M.D. Illustrated by more than 1,300 engravings. Fourth Edition, much enlarged, and carefully revised. 2 vols. 8vo. sheep, pp. xxxi. 1049, and xxviii. 1087. 1866. £3 3*s.*

Grote.—Review of the Work of Mr. John Stuart Mill, entitled "Examination of Sir William Hamilton's Philosophy." By George Grote, author of "The History of Ancient Greece," "Plato, and the other Companions of Socrates," etc. 12mo. pp. 112, cloth. 1868. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Grout.—The Isizulu. A Grammar of the Zulu Language; accompanied with a Historical Introduction, also with an Appendix. By Rev. Lewis Grout. 8vo. cloth, pp. liii. and 432. 1859. 21*s.*

Grout.—Zulu-Land; or, Life among the Zulu-Kafirs of Natal and Zulu-Land, South Africa. With Map and Illustrations, largely from Original Photographs. By the Rev. Lewis Grout. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 352. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Groves.—John Groves. A Tale of the War. By S. E. De M——. 12mo. Pp. 16, sewed. London, 1846. 2*d.*

Guizot.—Méditations sur L'Essence de la Religion Chrétienne. Par M. Guizot. 12mo. paper. Pp. 384. 1864. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Gunderode.—Correspondence of Fräulein Gunderode and Bettina von Arnim. Cr. 8vo. cloth, pp. 356. 1861. 6*s.*

Gutenberg, John, First Master Printer, his Acts, and most remarkable Discourses, and his Death. From the German. By C. W. 8vo. cloth, pp. 141. 1860. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Hagen.—Norica; or, Tales from the Olden Time. Translated from the German of August Hagen. Fcap. 8vo., ornamental binding, suitable for presentation. Pp. xiv. and 374. 1850. 5*s.*

"This pleasant volume is got up in that style of imitation of the books a century ago, which has of late become so much the vogue. The typographical and mechanical departments of the volume speak loudly for the taste and enterprise bestowed upon it. Simple in its style, pithy, reasonably pungent—the book smacks strongly of the picturesque old days of which it treats. A long study of the art-antiquities of Nürnburg and a profound acquaintance with the records, letters, and memoirs, still preserved, of the times of Albert Durer and his great brother artists, have enabled the author to lay before us a forcibly-drawn and highly-finished picture of art and household life in that wonderfully art-practising and art-reverencing old city of Germany."—Atlas.

"A delicious little book. It is full of a quaint garrulity, and characterised by an earnest simplicity of thought and diction, which admirably conveys to the reader the household and artistic German life of the times of Maximilian, Albert Durer, and Hans Sachs, the celebrated cobbler and 'master singer,' as well as most of the artist celebrities of Nürnberg in the 16th century. Art is the chief end and aim of this little history. It is landed and praised with a sort of unostentatious devotion, which exphains the religious passion of the early moulders of the ideal and the beautiful; and, perhaps, through a consequent deeper concentration of thought, the secret of their success."—Weekly Dispatch.

"A volume full of interest for the lover of old times; while the form in which it is presented to us may incite many to think of art and look into its many wondrous influences with a curious earnestness unknown to them before. It points a moral also, in the knowledge that a people may be brought to take interest in what is chaste and beautiful as in what is coarse and degrading."—Manchester Examiner.

Hall.—The Law of Impersonation as applied to Abstract Ideas and Religious Dogmas. By S. W. Hall. Third edition, with an Appendix on the Dual Constitution of First Causation. 12mo. cloth, pp. xxiv. and 135. 1863. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Hall.—A Contribution towards an Index to the Bibliography of the Indian Philosophical Systems. By Fitzedward Hall, M.A., Inspector of Public Instruction, Saugor and Nerbudda Territories, Published by order of the Government of the North Western Provinces. 8vo. sewed, pp. iv. and 236. 1859. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Hambleton.—The Song of Songs; the Voice of the Bridegroom and the Voice of the Bride; divided into Acts and Scenes, with the Dialogues apportioned to the different Interlocutors, chiefly as directed by M. the Professor Ernest Renan, Membre de l'Institut. Rendered into Verse, from the received English Translation and other Versions. By Joseph Hambleton. Post 8vo., sewed, pp. 70. 1864. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Hamilton.—A Practical Treatise on Fractures and Dislocations. By Frank H. Hamilton, M.D. 3rd edition, revised, 8vo. cloth, pp. 777. 1866. 25*s.*

Hammond.—Military Medical and Surgical Essays. Prepared for the United States Sanitary Commission. Edited by W. A. Hammond, M.D., Surgeon-General. 8vo. cloth, pp. 552. 1864. 15*s.*

Harkness.—Latin Ollendorff. Being a Progressive Exhibition of the Principles of the Latin Grammar. By Albert Harkness, Ph. D. 12mo. cloth, pp. xii. and 355. 1858. 6*s.*

Harris.—A Dictionary of Medical Terminology, Dental Surgery, and the Collateral Sciences. By Chapin A. Harris, M.D., D.D.S., Professor of the Principles of Dental Surgery in the Baltimore College. Third edition, carefully revised and enlarged, by Ferdinand J. S. Gorgas, M.D., D.D.S., Professor of Dental Surgery in the Baltimore College. 8vo. cloth, pp. 744, 1867. 30*s.*

Harrison.—The Meaning of History; Two Lectures delivered by Frederic Harrison, M.A. 8vo., pp. 80, sewed. 1862. 1*s.*

Harrison.—Sundays and Festivals. A Lecture delivered by Frederic Harrison, Esq., M.A., at St. Martin's Hall, on Sunday evening, March 10th, 1867. 8vo. sewed, pp. 15. 1867. 2*d.*

Hartzenbusch, J. E., and H. Lemming.—Eco de Madrid: A Practical Guide to Spanish Conversation. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 240. 1860. 5*s.*

Haslett.—The Mechanics', Machinists', and Engineers' Practical Book of Reference, containing Tables and Formulæ for use in superficial and solid Mensuration; Strength and Weight of Materials; Mechanics, Machinery, Hydraulics, Hydrodynamics, Marine Engines, Chemistry, and miscellaneous Recipes. Adapted to and for the use of all Practical Mechanics. Together with the Engineer's Field Book, containing Formulæ for the various Methods of running and changing Lines, locating Side-tracks and Switches, etc., etc.; Tables of Radii and their Logarithms, natural and logarithmic versed Sines and external Secants, natural Sines and Tangents to every Degree and Minute of the Quadrant, and Logarithms of natural Numbers from 1 to 10,000. By Charles Haslett, Civil Engineer. Edited by Charles W. Hackley, Professor of Mathematics. Fcap. 8vo. tuck, pp. 533. 1866. 12*s.*

Hasty Conclusions; or, the Sayings that went Abroad. 16mo. sewed, pp. 20. 1866. 1*s.*

Haug.—Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsees. By Martin Haug, Dr. Phil. Superintendent of Sanskrit Studies in the Poona College. 8vo. cloth, pp. 278. 1862. 31*s.* 6*d.*

Haug.—Outline of a Grammar of the Zend Language. By Martin Haug, Ph. D. 8vo., sewed, pp. 82. 1862. 18*s.*

Haug.—The Aitareya Brahmanam of the Rig Veda: containing the Earliest Speculations of the Brahmans on the meaning of the Sacrificial Prayers, and on the Origin, Performance, and Sense of the Rites of the Vedic Religion. Edited, Translated, and Explained by Martin Haug, Ph. D., Superintendent of Sanskrit Studies in the Poona College, etc., etc. In 2 Vols. Crown 8vo. Vol. I. Contents, Sanskrit Text, with Preface, Introductory Essay, and a Map of the Sacrificial Compound at the Soma Sacrifice, pp. 312. Vol. II. Translation with Notes, pp. 544. 1863. £2 2*s.*

Haug.—A Lecture on an Original Speech of Zoroaster (Yasna 45), with remarks on his age. By Martin Haug, Ph. D. 8vo. pp. 28, sewed. 1865. 2*s.*

Haug.—An Old Zand-Pahlavi Glossary. Edited in the Original Characters, with a Transliteration in Roman Letters, an English Translation, and an Alphabetical Index. By Destur Hoshengji Jamaspji, High-priest of the Parsis in Malwa, India. Revised with Notes and Introduction by Martin Haug, Ph. D., late Superintendent of Sanscrit Studies in the Poona College, Foreign Member of the Royal Bavarian Academy. Published by order of the Government of Bombay. 8vo. sewed, pp. lvi. and 132. 1867. 15*s.*

Haug.—The Religion of the Zoroastrians, as contained in their Sacred Writings. With a History of the Zend and Pehlevi Literature, and a Grammar of the Zend and Pehlevi Languages. By Martin Haug, Ph. D., late Superintendent of Sanscrit Studies in the Poona College. 2 vols. 8vo. [In preparation.]

Haupt.—Military Bridges: with Suggestions of New Expedients and Constructions for Crossing Streams and Chasms. Including also Designs for Trestle and Truss Bridges for Military Railroads. Adapted especially to the wants of the Service in the United States. By Hermann Haupt, A.M., Civil Engineer. Illustrated by 69 Lithographic engravings. 8vo. cloth, pp. xix. and 310. 1864. 25*s.*

Haupt.—General Theory of Bridge Construction: containing Demonstrations of the Principles of the Art and their Application to Practice; furnishing the means of calculating the Strains upon the Chords, Ties, Braces, Counter-braces, and other parts of a Bridge or Frame of any description. With practical Illustrations. By Herman Haupt, A.M., Civil Engineer. New Edition. Royal 8vo. cloth, pp. 268. Plates. 1867. 16*s.*

Hazard.—Essay on Language and Other Papers. By Rowland G. Hazard. Edited by E. P. Peabody. 8vo. cloth, pp. 348. 1857. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Hazard.—Freedom of Mind in Willing; or, Every Being that Wills a Creative First Cause. By Rowland G. Hazard. 8vo. cloth, pp. xviii. and 456. 1865. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Hazard.—Our Resources. A Series of Articles on the Financial and Political Condition of the United States. By Rowland G. Hazard. 8vo. sewed, pp. 32. 1864. 1*s.*

Hearts in Mortmain, and Cornelia. Two Novels. Post 8vo. Fancy boards. Pp. 206 and 252. 1863. Each 1*s.* 6*d.*

Heatherington.—A Practical Guide for Tourists, Miners, and Investors, and all Persons interested in the Development of the Gold Fields of Nova Scotia. By A. Heatherington, Author of Cosmopolite's Statistical Chart and Petraglot Reviews, adopted by the Department of Mines, and the Paris Exhibition Committee, etc., etc. 12mo. cloth, pp. 180. 1868. 2*s.*

Heaviside.—American Antiquities; or, the New World the Old, and the Old World the New. By John T. C. Heaviside. 8vo. sewed, pp. 46. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Hecker.—The Epidemics of the Middle Ages. Translated by G. B. Babington, M.D., F.R.S. Third Edition, completed by the Author's Treatise on Child-Pilgrimages. By J. F. C. Hecker. 8vo. cloth, pp. 384. 1859. 9*s.* 6*d.*

Contents:—The Black Death—The Dancing Mania—The Sweating Sickness—Child Pilgrimages.

Heine.—Selections from the Poetry of Henrich Heine. Translated by John Ackerlos. 12mo. pp. viii. and 66, stiff cover. 1854. 1*s.*

Heine.—Pictures of Travel. Translated from the German of Henry Heine. By Charles G. Leland. Fifth revised edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 472. 1866. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Heine.—Heine's Book of Songs. By Heinrich Heine. Translated by Charles G. Leland, author of "Meister Karl's Sketch-book, and Sunshine in Thought." Cloth, fcap. 8vo. pp. xiv. and 240. 1868. 7*s.*

Hennell.—An Essay on the Sceptical Tendency of Butler's "Analogy." By Sara S. Hennell. 12mo. sewed, pp. 66. 1859. 1*s.*

Hennell.—Thoughts in Aid of Faith. Gathered chiefly from recent works in Theology and Philosophy. By Sara S. Hennell. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 428. 1860. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Hennell.—Prize Essay. Christianity and Infidelity, an Exposition of Arguments on both sides. By Sara S. Hennell. 8vo. cloth, pp. 173. 1857. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Hennell.—The Early Christian Anticipation of an approaching End of the World, and its bearing upon the Character of Christianity as a Divine Revelation. Including an investigation into the primitive meaning of the Antichrist and Man of Sin; and an examination of the argument of the Fifteenth Chapter of Gibbon. By Sara S. Hennell. 12mo. cloth, pp. 136. 1860. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Hennell.—Present Religion, as a Faith owning Fellowship with Thought. Part I. By Sara S. Hennell, Author of "Thoughts in Aid of Faith." Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 570. 1865. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Hepburn.—A Japanese and English Dictionary. With an English and Japanese Index. By J. C. Hepburn, A.M., M.D. Imperial 8vo. cloth, pp. xii., 560 and 132. 1867. £5 5*s.*

Herbert.—The Sanitary Condition of the Army. By the Right Honourable Sidney Herbert, M.P. 8vo. sewed, pp. 48. 1859. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Hernisz.—A Guide to Conversation in the English and Chinese Languages, for the Use of Americans and Chinese, in California and elsewhere. By Stanislas Hernisz. Square 8vo. sewed, pp. 274. 1855. 10*s.* 6*d.*

The Chinese characters contained in this work are from the collections of Chinese groups, engraved on steel, and cast into moveable types, by Mr. Marcellin Legrand, Engraver of the Imperial Printing Office at Paris; they are used by most of the Missions to China.

Hervey.—The Poems of Thomas Kibble Hervey. Edited by Mrs. Hervey. With a Memoir. 16mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 437. 1866. 6*s.*

Herzen.—Du Developpement des Idées Revolutionnaires en Russie. Par Alexander Herzen. 12mo. sewed, pp. xxiii. and 144. 1853. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Herzen.—La France ou l'Angleterre? Variations Russes sur le thême de l'attentat du 14 Janvier 1858. Par Iscander. 1858. 1*s.*

Herzen.—France or England? 8vo. 1858. 6*d.*

Herzen.—Nouvelle Phase de la Littérature Russe. Par A. Herzen. 8vo. sewed, pp. 81. 1864. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Hester and Elinor; or, the Discipline of Suffering.—A Tale. Crown 8vo., fancy boards, pp. 473. 1863. 2*s.*

Hickok.—A System of Moral Science. By Lawrens P. Hickok, D.D., Author of "Rational Psychology." Royal 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 432. 1853. 12*s.*

Higginson.—Woman and Her Wishes. An Essay. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 23. 1854. 1*s.*

Hincks.—Specimen Chapters of an Assyrian Grammar. By the Rev. E. Hincks, D.D., Honorary Member Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland. 8vo. sewed, pp. 40. 1866. 1*s.*

Histoire du Grand Orient de France. 8vo sewed, pp. 528. 1865. 6*s.*

Historical Sketches of the Old Painters. By the Author of "Three Experiments of Living," etc. Crown 8vo. sewed, pp. 181. 1858. 2*s.*

Hitchcock.—Religious Lectures on Peculiar Phenomena of the Four Seasons. Delivered to the Students in Amhurst College, in 1845-47-48-49. By Edward Hitchcock. 12mo. sewed, pp. 72. 1852. 1*s.*

Hittell.—The Resources of California. Third edition, by John S. Hittell. Cloth, pp. xvi. and 461. 10*s.*

Hoffmann.—Shopping Dialogues in Japanese, Dutch, and English. By J. Hoffmann. Oblong 8vo., sewed, pp. xiii. and 44. 1861. 3*s.*

Hole.—Lectures on Social Science and the Organization of Labour. By James Hole. 8vo. sewed, pp. xi. and 132. 1851. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Holley.—Ordnance and Armour: embracing a Description of Standard European and American Ordnance, Rifling, and Projectiles; and their Materials, Fabrications, and Test, and the Results of Practice; also a Detailed Account of Experiments against Armour. By Alex. L. Holley, B.P. With 480 Engravings and 150 Tables of Results. One vol. 8vo., pp. 950. Half morocco. 1865. £2 5*s.*

Hollister.—The Mines of the Colorado. By Ovando J. Hollister. With map, pp. vii. and 450. 1867. 10*s.*

Holly.—The Carpenter's and Joiner's Hand-book, containing a Complete Treatise on Framing Hip and Valley Roots. Together with much valuable instruction for all Mechanics and Amateurs, useful rules, tables, etc., never before published. By H. W. Holly, Practical Architect and Builder. Illustrated by 37 Engravings. 12mo. cloth, pp. 50. 1868. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Holly.—The Art of Saw-filing, Scientifically Treated and Explained on Philosophical Principles. With full and explicit Directions for putting in Order all kinds of Saws, from a Jeweller's Saw to a Steam Saw-mill. Illustrated by forty-four engravings. By H. W. Holly, Author of "The Carpenter's and Joiner's Hand-book." 12mo. cloth, pp. 56. 1864. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Holmes.—The Poems of Oliver Wendell Holmes. Blue and Gold Series. 12mo. cloth, pp. xi. and 410. 1866. 6*s.*

Home.—Plain Thouhts, by a Plain Man, on the State of the Church of England. By Jeremiah Home, Esq. 8vo. sewed, pp. 8. 1868. 2*d.*

Horrocks.—Zeno. A Tale of the Italian War, and other Poems. To which are added Translations from Modern German Poetry. By James D. Horrocks. 12mo., pp. vii. and 286, cloth. 1854. 5*s.*

Houghton.—An Essay on the Canticles, or the Song of Songs. With a Translation of the Poem and short Explanatory Notes. By the Rev. W. Houghton, M.A., F.L.S., Rector of Preston on the Wild Moors, Shropshire. 8vo. cloth, pp. 67. 1865. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Howells.—Venetian Life. By William D. Howells, formerly United States Consul at Venice. Crown 8vo. cloth. Second Edition. Pp. 401. 1867. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Howitt.—The Düsseldorf Artists' Album. Twenty-seven superb Litho-tint Illustrations, from Drawings by Achenbach, Hubner, Jordan, Lessing, Leutze, Schadow, Tidemand, etc. With Contributions, original and translated, by Mary Howitt, Anne Mary Howitt, Francis Bennoch, etc. Edited by Mary Howitt. 4to, elegantly bound in cloth, 18*s.*; or, in fancy leather binding, £1 1*s* 1862.

Howse.—A Grammar of the Cree Language. With which is combined an analysis of the Chippeway Dialect. By Joseph Howse, Esq., F.R.G.S. 8vo. cloth, pp. xx. and 324. 1865. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Hugh Bryan: The Autobiography of an Irish Rebel. 8vo. cloth, pp. 478. 1866. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Humboldt.—Letters of William Von Humboldt to a Female Friend. A complete Edition. Translated from the Second German Edition by Catherine M. A. Couper, with a Biographical Notice of the Writer. Two vols. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xxviii. and 592. 1867. 10*s.*

Humboldt.—The Sphere and Duties of Government. Translated from the German of Baron Wilhelm Von Humboldt, by Joseph Coulthard, Jun. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xv. and 203. 1854. 5*s.*

Humboldt (Alex. Von).—Letters to Varnhagen Von Ense. Authorised English Translation, with Explanatory Notes, and a full Index of Names. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxvi. and 334. 1860. 12*s.*

Hunt.—On the Chemistry of the Globe. A Manual of Chemical Geology. By Dr. T. Sterry Hunt, F.R.S. 2 vols. 8vo. [In preparation.

Hunt.—Popular Lectures on Chemical and Physical Geology. Delivered before the Lowell Institute, by Dr. T. Sterry Hunt, F.R.S. 1 vol. 8vo. [In preparation.

Hunt.—The Religion of the Heart. A Manual of Faith and Duty. By Leigh Hunt. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxiv. and 259. 1853. 6*s.*

Hunt.—Introductory Address on the Study of Anthropology, delivered before the Anthropological Society of London, February 24th, 1863. By James Hunt, Ph. D., F.S.A., F.R.S.L., President. 8vo. sewed, pp. 20. 1863. 6*d.*

Hunt.—Anniversary Address delivered before the Anthropological Society of London, January 5th, 1864. By James Hunt, Ph. D., F.S.A., F.R.S.L., F.A.S.L., etc., etc. 8vo. sewed, pp. 32. 1864. 6*d.*

Hunt.—Anniversary Address delivered before the Anthropological Society of London, January 3rd, 1865. Dedicated to the British Association for the Advancement of Science. By James Hunt, Ph. D., F.S.A., F.R.S.L., F.A.S.L., etc., etc. 8vo. sewed, pp. viii. and 32. 1865. 6*d.*

Hunt.—A Letter addressed to the Members of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, on the desirability of appointing a Special Section for Anthropology. By James Hunt, Ph. D., F.S.A., F.R.S.L., F.A.S.L. Post 8vo., sewed, pp. 8. Printed for Private Circulation. 6*d.*

Hunt.—On the Negro's Place in Nature. By James Hunt, Esq., Ph. D., F.S.A., F.R.S.L., President of the Anthropological Society of London. 8vo., sewed, pp. 60. 1863. 1*s.*

Hurst.—History of Rationalism: embracing a Survey of the Present State of Protestant Theology. By the Rev. John F. Hurst, A.M. With Appendix of Literature. Revised and enlarged from the Third American Edition. Small 8vo., cloth, pp. xvii. and 523. 1867. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Hutton.—Modern Warfare; its Positive Theory and True Policy. With an application to the Russian War, and an Answer to the Question "What shall we do?" By Henry Dix Hutton, Barrister. 8vo. sewed, pp. 76. 1855. 1*s.*

Ibis (The).—A Magazine of General Ornithology. Edited by Philip Lutley Sclater, M.A. Vol. i. 1859. 8vo. cloth. Coloured Plates.
Vol. ii., 1860.
Vol. iii., 1861. £1 6*s.*
Vol. iv., 1862. £1 6*s.*
Vol. v., 1863. £1 6*s.*
Vol. vi., 1864. £1 6*s.*

Ihne.—A Latin Grammar for Beginners. By W. H Ihne, late Principal of Carlton Terrace School, Liverpool. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 184. 1864. 3*s.*

India.—Breach of Faith in; or, Sir John Lawrence's Policy in Oudh. 8vo. sewed, pp. 40. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Indian Annexations.—British Treatment of Native Princes Reprinted from the Westminster Review. New Series, No. xlv. January, 1863 Revised and corrected. 8vo. sewed, pp. 48. 1863. 1*s.*

Indian Investments, a Guide to, interesting to Shareholders or or intending Shareholders in the following Joint Stock Companies;—East Indian Railway, Great Indian Peninsular Railway, Madras Railway, Scinde Railway, Indus Flotilla, Punjaub Railway, Bombay and Baroda Railway, Eastern of Bengal Railway, Calcutta and South Eastern Railway, Madras Irrigation Company, Oriental Inland Steam Company, Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company. By a Manchester Man. Second edition. With an introduction exposing the hollowness of Indian guarantees. 8vo. sewed, pp. viii. and 40. 1861. 1*s.*

Inman.—Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names. By Thomas Inman, M.D. Vol. 1, 8vo., containing pp. viii. and 790, and illustrated with 5 Plates and numerous Woodcuts. 30*s.*

Inspiration.—By J. B. 24mo. sewed, pp. 51. 1865. 1*s.*

Inspiration; How is it Related to Revelation and the Reason? With a few remarks suggested by recent criticisms on Mansel's Bampton Lectures. 8vo. limp cloth, pp. 64. 1859. 2*s.*

International Exhibition of 1862.—Official Catalogue of the Mining and Metallurgical Products; Class 1, in the Zollverein Department of the International Exhibition, 1862. Compiled under the immediate direction of Mr. Von Dechen. By Dr. Hermann Wedding. Royal 8vo. sewed, pp. 106 1862. 1*s.*

International Exhibition of 1862.—Austria at the International Exhibition of 1862. Upon Orders from the J. R. Ministry for Commerce and National Economy. By Professor Dr. Jos. Arenstein, Vienna, 1862. Royal 8vo., paper covers, pp. 125. 1862. 1*s.*

International Exhibition of 1862.—Special Catalogue of the Zollverein Department. Edited by authority of the Commissioners of the Zollverein-Governments, together with Advertisements, Recommendations, and Illustrations. Royal 8vo., sewed, pp. 180 and lxxix. 1862. 1*s.*
Ditto ditto, in German, pp. 196 and cxv. 1*s.*

Jackson's Gymnastic Exercises for the Fingers and Wrist. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo., cloth, pp. x. and 90. 1865. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Jackson.—Echoes from my Youth, and Other Poems. By J. W. Jackson. 12mo., cloth, pp. 126. 1864. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Jackson. — Ethnology and Phrenology as an Aid to the Historian. By J. W. Jackson. Crown 8vo., cloth, pp. 324. 1863. 4*s.*

Jacobus.—Reflections on the Psalms of David as Inspired Compositions; and as indicating "the Philosophy of Jewish Faith." By Jacobus. 8vo. sewed, pp. iv. and 32. 1863. 1*s.*

Jaeschke. — A Short Practical Grammar of the Tibetan Language, with Special Reference to the Spoken Dialects. By H. A. Jaeschke, Moravian Missionary. 8vo., pp. 60. 1865. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Jamison.—The Life and Times of Bertrand Du Guesclin. A History of the Fourteenth Century. By D. F. Jamison, of South Carolina. Portrait. Two vols. 8vo., elegantly printed, extra cloth, pp. xvi. 287, and viii. 314. 1864. £1 1*s.*

Jay.—The American Rebellion; its History, its Aims, and the Reasons why it must be Suppressed. An Address. By John Jay. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 50. 1861. 1*s.*

Jay.—The Great Conspiracy. An Address. By John Jay. 8vo. sewed, pp. 50. 1861. 1*s.*

Jenkins's Vest-Pocket Lexicon. A Dictionary of all except the common Words which everybody knows. By omitting these it contains the less familiar Words, and the principal Scientific and Technical Terms, Foreign Moneys, Weights and Measures; also the common Latin and French Phrases of two and three Words, Law Terms, etc.

"A little book, entitled, 'Jenkins's Vest-pocket Lexicon,' has just been published by Messrs. Trübner and Co., of Paternoster-row, which has a somewhat novel but very useful design. The object of the work is to compress within the smallest practicable compass a full lexicon of all the words used in writing or speaking English, except—and in the exception lies the essence of the undertaking—those which may fairly be considered familiar to every one. Thus every word which any reader but the most ignorant, and any reader but the most amazingly learned, could need to look for in a dictionary, is to be found in the columns of this little book. We have put it to several tests, by looking out for peculiar scientific words, terms used in art, legal phrases, names of foreign coins, titles of foreign officials, etc., and, so far as our examination went, have not found it to fail in any instance. We can, therefore, cordially recommend it to writers as well as to readers. It really does fit in the waistcoat pocket, and may literally be made a constant companion.—Morning Star, July 17.

64mo. limp morocco, pp. 560. 1861. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Jewish (A) Reply to Dr. Colenso's Criticism on the Pentateuch. Issued by the Jewish Association for the Diffusion of Religious Knowledge. 8vo. cloth, pp. ix. and 147. 1865. 3*s.*

Ἰοαννες.—Φιλολογικὰ παρέργα ὑπὸ Φιλίππου Ἰωάννου Καθηγητοῦ τῆς φιλοσοφίας παρὰ τῷ πανεπιστημίῳ Ἀθηνῶν. (Literary Miscellanies. By Philippe Joannes, Professor of Philosophy at the University of Athens). 8vo. cloth, pp. 488. 10*s.* 6*d.*

John Groves.—A Tale of the War. By S. E. de M—. 12mo. sewed, pp. 16. 1856. 2*d.*

Jolowicz.—The First Epistle of Baruch. Translated from the Syraic, with an Introduction. By the Rev. Dr. H. Jolowicz, ordinary Member of the German Oriental Society. Read at the meeting of the Syro-Egyptian Society, December 12, 1854. John Lee, Esq. LL.D., F.R.S., in the Chair. 8vo sewed, pp. 12. 1855. 1*s.*

Jomini.—The Art of War. By Baron de Jomini, General and Aide-de-Camp to the Emperor of Russia. A New Edition, with Appendices and Maps. Translated from the French. By Capt. G. H. Mendell, and Capt. W. O. Craighill. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 410. 1864. 9*s.*

Jomini.—Treatise on Grand Military Operations, or a Critical and Military History of the Wars of Frederick the Great, as contrasted with the modern system. Together with a few of the most important principles of the Art of War. By Baron Jomini, Commander-in-Chief, and Aide-de-Camp to the Emperor of Russia. Translated from the French by Col. S. B. Holabird, U.S.A. Illustrated with Maps and Plans. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, pp. 448, 496; and an Atlas, containing 39 maps and plans of battles, 1741-1762. 1865. £3.

Jomini.—The Military and Political Life of the Emperor Napoleon. By Baron Jomini, General-in-Chief, and Aide-de-Camp to the Emperor of Russia. Translated from the French, with Notes, by H. W. Halleck, LL.D., Major-General U.S. Army. 4 vols., royal 8vo. cloth, pp. 295, 451, 414, 453, with an Atlas of 60 Maps and Plans. 1864. £4 4*s.*

Jomini.—The Political and Military History of the Campaign of Waterloo. Translated from the French of General Baron de Jomini, by Captain S. V. Benét, United States Ordnance. Third Edition. 12mo. cloth pp. . 6*s.*

This is a separate reprint of the twenty-second chapter of "Jomini's Life of Napoleon," and forms a capital summary of the campaign.

Jones.—Warning; or, the Beginning of the End. An Address to the Jews. By C. Jones. 8vo. sewed, pp. 58. 1866. 2*s.*

Justi.—Handbuch der Zendsprache, von Ferdinand Justi. Altbactrisches Woerterbuch. Grammatik Chrestomathie. Four parts, 4to. sewed, pp. xxii. and 424. Leipzig, 1864. 24*s.*

Kafir Essays, and other Pieces; with an English Translation. Edited by the Right Rev. the Bishop of Grahamstown. 32mo. sewed, pp. 84. 1861. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Karcher.—Les Ecrivains Militaires de la France. Par Theodore Karcher, Professeur à l'Académie Royale Militaire de Woolwich, etc. 8vo. cloth, with numerous Illustrations. Pp. viii. and 348. 1866. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Karcher. — Questionnaire Français. Questions on French Grammar, Idiomatic Difficulties, and Military Expressions. By Theodore Karcher, LL.B. 12mo. cloth, pp. 111. 1865. 2*s.* 6*d.*
Interleaved with writing paper. 3*s.*

Kaulbach.—Album-Thierfabeln, Geschichten und Märchen in Bildern. Nach Original-Federzeichnungen von Wilhelm von Kaulbach, In Holz-schitten von J. G. Flegel. Text von Dr. Julius Grosse. 12 plates. oblong folio. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Kendrick.—Greek Ollendorff. A Progressive Exhibition of the Principles of the Greek Grammar. By Asahel C. Kenrick. 8vo. cloth, pp. 371. 1857. 6*s.*

Keyne.—Spells and Voices. By Ada Keyne. 12mo. cloth, pp. 124. 1865. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Khirad-Afroz (The Illuminator of the Understanding). By Maulaví Hafízu'd-dín. A New Edition of the Hindústání Text, carefully Revised, with Notes, Critical and Explanatory. By Edward B. Eastwick, F.R.S., F.S.A., M.R.A.S., Professor of Hindústání at the late East India Company's College at Haileybury. 8vo. cloth, pp. xiv. and 321. 1868. 18*s.*

Kidd.—Catalogue of the Chinese Library of the Royal Asiatic Society. By the Rev. S. Kidd. 8vo. sewed, pp. 58. 1*s.*

Kidder.—A Treatise on Homiletics; designed to Illustrate the True Theory and Practice of Preaching the Gospel. By Daniel P. Kidder, D.D., Professor in the Garratt Biblical Institute. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 495. 1864-5. 6*s.*

King.—The Patriot. A Poem. By J. W. King. 12mo. sewed, pp. 56. 1853. 1*s.*

King.—Lessons and Practical Notes on Steam, the Steam Engine, Propellers, etc., etc., for young Engineers, Students, and others. By the late W. H. King, U.S.N. Revised by Chief-Engineer J. W. King, U.S.N. Ninth Edition. Enlarged. 8vo. cloth, pp. 229. 1865. 9*s.*

Kingsford.—An Essay on the Admission of Women to the Parliamentary Franchise. By Ninon Kingsford. 8vo. sewed, pp. 40. 1863. 1*s.*

Knight.—The Indian Empire and our Financial Relations Therewith. A Paper read before the London Indian Society, May 25, 1866. By Robert Knight ("Times of India"). 8vo. sewed, pp. 42. 1866. 1*s.*

Knight.—Letter to the Right Hon. Sir Stafford Northcote, Baronet, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, upon the present condition of Bombay, with suggestions for its relief. By Robert Knight, "Times of India." 8vo. sewed, pp. 24. 1867. 1*s.*

Kohl.—Travels in Canada and through the States of New Pennsylvania. Revised by the Author. By I. J. Kohl. Translated by Mrs. Percy Sinnett. Two vols., post 8vo. cloth, pp. xiv. and 794. 1861. 21*s.*

Kortum.—The Jobsiad; a grotesco-comico-heroic Poem. From the German of Dr. Carl Arnold Kortum. By Charles T. Brooks, Translator of "Faust," "Titan," etc., etc. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xviii. and 182. 1863. 5*s.*

Kossuth.—Speeches of Louis Kossuth in America. Edited, with his sanction, by F. W. Newman. Post 8vo. cloth. pp. 388. 1853. 5*s.*

Kossuth.—Sheffield and Nottingham Evening Speeches. Edited by himself. 1854. 2*d.*

Kossuth.—Glasgow Speeches. Edited by himself. 2*d.*

Krapf.—Travels, Researches, and Missionary Labours, during an Eighteen Years' Residence on the Eastern Coast of Africa. By the Rev. Dr. J. Lewis Krapf, late Missionary in the service of the Church Missionary Society in Eastern and Equatorial Africa; to which is prefixed a concise Account of Geographical Discovery in Eastern Africa, up to the present time, by J. E. Ravenstein, F.R.G.S. In demy 8vo., with a Portrait, two Maps, and twelve Plates. Cloth, pp. li. and 566. 1866. £1 1*s.*

Kühner.—An Elementary Grammar of the Greek Language. By Raphael Kühner. Translated by Samuel H. Taylor. One vol. Twentieth Edition. 8vo. half-bound, pp. xii. and 355. 1865. 6*s.*

Kühner.—Grammar of the Greek Language for the use of High Schools and Colleges. Translated from the German by B. B. Edwards and S. H. Taylor. By Raphael Kühner. Fourth Edition. 8vo. cloth, pp. xvi. and 620. 1862. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Küstel.—Nevada and California Processes of Silver and Gold Extraction for General Use, and especially for the Mining Public of California and Nevada, with full explanations and directions for all Metallurgical Operations connected with Silver and Gold, from a preliminary examination of the ore to the final casting of the ingot. Also a description of the General Metallurgy of Silver Ores. By Guido Küstel, Mining Engineer and Metallurgist. Illustrated by accurate engravings. 8vo. cloth, pp. 328. 1868. 14*s.*

Lady Nurses for the Sick Poor in our London Workhouses. Report of Proceedings at the Strand Union Board of Guardians, September 4, 1866. From the Short-Hand Notes of Mr. John White. With an Appendix. 8vo. sewed, pp. 15. 1866. 6*d.*

Laghu Kaumudí.—A Sanskrit Grammar. By Varadarája. With an English Version, Commentary and References. By James R. Ballantyne, LL.D., Principal of the Sanskrit College, Benares. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxxvi. and 424. 1867. £1 11*s.* 6*d.*

Lange.—The Upper Rhine. Illustrating its finest Cities, Castles, Ruins, and Landscapes. From Drawings by Messrs. Rohbock, Louis and Julius Lange. Engraved by the most distinguished Artists. With a History and Topographical Text. Edited by Dr. Gaspey. 8vo., pp. 494. 134 Plates. 1859. £2 2*s.*

Langford.—English Democracy; its History and Principles. By John Alfred Langford. Fcap. 8vo., stiff cover. Pp. 88. 1855. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Langford.—Religion and Education in Relation to the People. By John Alfred Langford. 12mo. cloth, pp. iv. and 133. 1852. 2*s.*

Langford.—Religious Scepticism and Infidelity; their History, Cause, Cure, and Mission. By John Alfred Langford. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 246. 1850. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Lathe (The) and its Uses; or, Instruction in the Art of Turning Wood and Metal. Including a description of the most modern appliances for the ornamentation of plane and curved surfaces. With an Appendix, in which is described an entirely novel form of lathe for eccentric and rose engine turning; a lathe and planing machine combined; and other valuable matter relating to the art. Copiously illustrated. 8vo. cloth, pp. 290. 1868. 15*s.*

Lawrence, Sir John, G.C.B., and the Talooqdars of Oudh. A series of articles contributed to "The Press," showing how the Viceroy of India proposes to undermine and destroy the proprietary rights of the landowners of that province. 8vo. sewed, pp. 46. 1865. 6*d.*

Layman's Faith (A).—Doctrines and Liturgy. By a Layman. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 150. 1866. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Lea.—An Historical Sketch of Sacerdotal Celibacy in the Christian Church. By Henry Carey Lea. 8vo. cloth, pp. 601. 1867. 15*s.*

Lea.—Superstition and Force. Essays on the Wager of Law—the Wager of Battle—the Ordeal—Torture. By Henry C. Lea. 8vo. cloth, pp. 408. 1866. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Le-Brun.—Materials for Translating from English into French; being a short Essay on Translation, followed by a Graduated Selection in Prose and Verse. By Le-Brun. Second Edition. Revised and corrected by Henri Van Laun. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 203. 1865. 4*s.*

Lees. An Inquiry into the Reasons and Results of the Prescription of Intoxicating Liquors in the Practice of Medicine.—By Dr. F. R. Lees, F.S.A. 12mo. cloth, pp. iv. and 144. 1866. 1*s.* 4*d.*

Leeser.—The Twenty-four Books of the Holy Scriptures: carefully Translated according to the Massoretic Text, after the best Jewish Authorities. By Isaac Leeser. 18mo. bound, pp. xii. and 1243. 1865. 7*s.* 6d.

Legge.—The Life and Teachings of Confucius. With explanatory Notes. By James Legge, D.D. Reproduced for General Readers from the Author's work, containing the Original Text. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 338. 1867. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Legge.—The Chinese Classics. With a Translation, Critical and Exegetical, Notes, Prolegomena, and copious Indexes. By James Legge, D.D., of the London Missionary Society. In seven Vols.

Vol. 1, containing Confucian analects, the great learning, and the doctrine of the mean. 8vo. cloth, pp. 526. 1861. 42*s.*

Vol. 2, containing the works of Menucius. 8vo. cloth, pp. 634. 1861. 42*s.*

Vol. 3, part 1, containing the first parts of the Shoo-King, or the Books of T'ang, the Books of Yu; the Books of Hea; the Books of Shang, and the Prolegomena. 8vo. cloth, pp. 291. 1865. 42*s.*

Vol. 3, part 2, containing the fifth part of the Shoo-King, or the Books of Chow, and the indexes. 8vo. cloth, pp. 453. 1865. 42*s.*

Legge.—The Chinese Classics: translated into English. With Preliminary Essays and Explanatory Notes. Popular Edition. Reproduced for General Readers from the Author's work, containing the Original Text. By James Legge, D.D. Vol. 1—The Life and Teachings of Confucius. 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 338. 1867. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Leitner.—The Races and Languages of Dardistan. By G. W. Leitner, M.A., Ph. D., Honorary Fellow of King's College, London, etc. late on Special Duty in Kashmir. 4 vols. 4to. 1868. [In the press.

Lesley.—Man's Origin and Destiny, Sketched from the Platform of the Sciences, in a Course of Lectures delivered before the Lowell Institute, in Boston, in the Winter of 1865-6. By J. P. Lesley, Member of the National Academy of the United States, Secretary of the American Philosophical Society. Numerous Woodcuts. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 392. 1868. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Contents.—Lecture I. On the Classification of the Sciences; 2. On the Genius of the Physical Sciences, Ancient and Modern; 3. The Geological Antiquity of Man; 4 On the Dignity of Mankind; 5. On the Unity of Mankind; 6. On the Early Social Life of Man; 7. On Language as a Test of Race; 8. The Origin of Architecture; 9. The Growth of the Alphabet; 10. The Four Types of Religious Worship; 11. On Arkite Symbolism. Appendix.

Lessing.—Nathan the Wise. A Dramatic Poem. By Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German. With an introduction on Lessing and the "Nathan;" its antecedents, character, and influence. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xxviii. and 214. 1868. 6*s.*

Lessing.—Letters on Bibliolatry. By Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German by the late H. H. Bernard, Ph. Dr. 8vo. cloth, pp. 184. 1862. 5*s.*

Three Generations of British Reviewers on Lessing.

"The work before us is as genuine sour-krout as ever perfumed a feast in Westphalia."—Edinburgh Review, April, 1806.

"As a poet, as a critic, a philosopher, or controversialist, his style will be found precisely such as we of England are accustomed to admire most. Brief, nervous, vivid; yet quiet, without glitter or antithesis; idiomatic, pure without purism; transparent, yet full of character and reflex hues of meaning."—Edinburgh Review, October, 1827.

"The first foreigner who had the glory of proclaiming Shakespeare to be the greatest dramatist the world had ever seen, was Gotthold Ephraim Lessing."—Edinburgh Review. July, 1849.

Lessing.—The Life and Works of G. E. Lessing. From the German of Adolph Stahr. By E. P. Evans, Ph. D. 2 vols., crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xvi. and 383, iv. and 442. 1867. 25*s.*

Letter to Lord Palmerston, concerning the Question of Schleswig-Holstein. 8vo. sewed, pp. 32. 1850. 1*s.*

Letters from the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Capetown, and the Bishop of Natal. With some Observations on the Archbishop of Canterbury's reply to the Bishop of Natal. 8vo. pp. 30. 1866. 1*s.*

Letter to the Right Honorable the Earl of Derby on Political Reform. By one of the People. 8vo. sewed, pp. 46. 1867. 1*s.*

Leverson.—The Reformer's Reform Bill. Being a Proposed New and complete Code of Electoral Law for the United Kingdom. By Montague R. Leverson. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 36. 1866. 1*s.*

Levy (M.).—The History of Shorthand Writing. By Matthias Levy. To which is appended the System used by the Author. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 194. 1862. 5*s.*

Lima.—Sketches of the Capital of Peru, Historical, Statistical, Administrative, Commercial, and Moral. By Manuel A. Fuentes, Advocate. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo. half bound, pp. ix. and 224. 1867. 21*s.*

Little French Reader (The).—Extracted from "The Modern French Reader." Crown 8vo. cloth. 1868. 2*s.* (See p. 63.)

Liturgy.—Ἡ θεία λειτουργία τοῦ ἐν ἁγιοις πατρὸς ἡμῶν Ἰωάννου τοῦ Χρυσοστόμου. Παραφρασθεῖσα κατὰ τὸ κείμενον τὸ ἐκδοθὲν ἐγκρίσει τῆς ἱερᾶς Συνόδου τοῦ βασιλείου τῆς Ἑλλάδος. (The divine Liturgy of our holy father St. Chrysostome, paraphrased according to the text published with the sanction of the Holy Synod of the kingdom of Greece.) 12mo. cloth, gilt edges, pp. 76. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Lobscheid.—English and Chinese Dictionary, with the Punti and Mandarin Pronunciation. By the Rev. W. Lobscheid, Knight of Francis Joseph, C.M.I.R.G.S.A., N.Z.B.S.V., etc. Parts I. and II., folio, pp. iv. and 1 to 980. (Will be completed in Four Parts). 1867. Price, each part, £1 16*s.*

Log Cabin (The); or, the World Before You. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 120. 1844. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Longfellow.—Flower de Luce. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. With Illustrations. Small 4to., extra cloth, gilt edges, pp. 72. 1867. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Longfellow.—Evangeline. A Tale of Acadie. By Henry W. Longfellow. With Illustrations by F. O. C. Darley. Small 4to. extra cloth, gilt edges, pp. 157. 1867. 12*s.*

Longfellow.—The Poetical Works of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. Revised Edition. 4 vols., crown 8vo. cloth, gilt top, pp. 318, v. 283, v. 351, 372. 1866. 40*s.*

Longfellow.—The Prose Works of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. Revised Edition. 3 vols. crown 8vo., gilt top, pp. 364, 391, 365. 1866. 30*s.*

Loomis.—An Introduction to Practical Astronomy, with a Collection of Astronomical Tables. By Elias Loomis, LL.D. Seventh Edition. 8vo. sheep, pp. xi. and 499. 1866. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Loomis.—A Treatise on Astronomy. By Elias Loomis, Professor of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy in Yale College, Author of "An Introduction to Practical Astronomy," and of a series of Mathematics for Schools and Colleges. 8vo. sheep, pp. 338. With eight Plates. 1868. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Lorgion.—The Pastor of Vlietiiuizen, or Conversations about the Groningen School, the Doctrine of the Church, the Science of Theology, and the Bible. By E. J. Diest Lorgion, D.D. Translated from the Dutch. Post 4to., pp. iv. and 128. 1861. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Lowe.—Speech of the Right Hon. Robert Lowe, M.P., on the Irish Tenant Right Bill, and a Letter of Lord Oranmore's to the Times. 8vo. sewed, pp. 22. 1866. 6*d.*

Lowell.—The Vision of Sir Launfal. By James Russell Lowell. With Illustrations by S. Eytinge, jun. Small 4to. 28 leaves, printed on one side only. 1867. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Lowell.—The Poetical Works of James R. Lowell. Complete in two volumes. Blue and Gold Series. 24mo. cloth, pp. ix. 315, 322. With Portrait. 1863. 10*s.*

Ludewig.—The Literature of American Aboriginal Languages, with Additions and Corrections by Professor Wm. W. Turner. Edited by Nicolas Trübner. 8vo. fly and general Title, 2 leaves; Dr. Ludewig's Preface, pp. v.—viii.; Editor's Preface, pp. ix.—xii.; Biographical Memoir of Dr. Ludewig, pp. xiii., xiv.; and Introductory Bibliographical Notices, pp. xv.—xxiv., followed by List of Contents. Then follow Dr. Ludewig's Bibliotheca Glottica, alphabetically arranged, with Additions by the Editor, pp. 1—209; Professor Turner's Additions, with those of the Editor to the same, also alphabetically arranged, pp. 210—246; Index, pp. 247—256; and list of Errata, pp. 257, 258. By Hermann E. Ludewig. 8vo. cloth. London. 1858. 10*s.* 6*d.*

This work is intended to supply a great want, now that the study of Ethnology has proved that exotic languages are not mere curiosities, but essential and interesting parts of the natural history of man, forming one of the most curious links in the great chain of national affinities, defining as they do the reciprocity existing between man and the soil he lives upon. No one can venture to write the history of America without a knowledge of her aboriginal languages; and unimportant as such researches may seem to men engaged in the mere bustling occupations of life, they will at least acknowledge that these records of the past, like the stern lights of a departing ship, are the last glimmers of savage life, as it becomes absorbed or recedes before the tide of civilization. Dr. Ludewig and Prof. Taylor have made most diligent use of the public and private collections in America, access to all of which was most liberally granted to them. This has placed at their disposal the labours of the American Missionaries, so little known on this side of the Atlantic that they may be looked upon almost in the light of untrodden ground. But English and Continental libraries have also been ransacked; and Dr. Ludewig kept up a constant and active correspondence with scholars of "the Fatherland," as well as with men of similar tastes and pursuits in France, Spain, and Holland, determined to leave no stone unturned to render his labours as complete as possible. The volume, perfect in itself, is the first of an enlarged edition of Vater's "Linguarum totius orbis Index." The work has been noticed by the press of both Continents, and we may be permitted to refer particularly to the following.

Opinions of the Press.

"This work, mainly the production of the late Herr Ludewig, a German, naturalized in America, is devoted to an account of the literature of the aboriginal languages of that country. It gives an alphabetical list of the various tribes of whose languages any records remains, and refers to the works, papers, or manuscripts, in which such information may be found. The work has evidently been a labour of love; and as no pains seem to have been spared by the editors, Prof. Turner and Mr. Trübner, in rendering the work as accurate and complete as possible, those who are most interested in its contents will be best able to judge of the labours and assiduity bestowed upon it by author, editors and publisher."—Athenæum, 5th April. 1858.

"This is the first instalment of a work which will be of the greatest value to philologists; and is a compendium of the aboriginal languages of the American continents, and a digest of all the known literature bearing upon these languages. Mr. Trübner's hand has been engaged passim, and in his preface he lays claim to about one-sixth of the whole; and we have no doubt that the encouragement with which this portion of the work will be received by scholars, will be such as to inspire Mr. Trübner with sufficient confidence to persevere in his arduous and most honourable task."—The Critic, 15th Dec., 1857.

"Few would believe that a good octavo volume would be necessary to exhaust the subject; yet so it is, and this handsome, useful, and curious volume, carefully compiled by Mr. Ludewig, assisted by Prof. Turner, and edited by the careful hand of Mr. Trübner, the well-known publisher, will be sure to find a place in many libraries."—Bent's Advertiser, 6th Nov., 1857.

"The lovers of American linguistics will find in the work of Mr. Trübner scarcely any point omitted calculated to aid the comparative philologer in tracing the various languages of the great Western Continent."—Gateway Mercury, 30th Jan., 1858.

"Only those deeply versed in philological studies can appreciate this book at its full value. It shows that there are upwards of seven hundred and fifty aboriginal American languages," —Gentleman's Magazine. Feb., 1858.

"The work contains an account of no fewer than seven hundred different aboriginal dialects of America, with an introductory chapter of bibliographical information; and under each dialect is an account of any grammars or other works illustrative of it."—The Bookseller, Jan., 1858.

"We have here the list of monuments still existing, of an almost innumerable series of languages and dialects of the American Continent. The greater part of Indian grammars and vocabularies exist only in MS., and were compiled chiefly by Missionaries of the Christian Church; and to Dr. Ludewig and Mr. Trübner, we are, therefore, the more indebted for the great care with which they have pointed out where such are to be found, as well as for enumerating those which have been printed, either in a separate shape, in collections, or in voyages and travels, and elsewhere."—Leader, 11th Sept., 1858.

"I have not time, nor is it my purpose, to go into a review of this admirable work, or to attempt to indicate the extent and value of its contents. It is, perhaps, enough to say, that apart from a concise but clear enumeration and notice of the various general philological works which treat with greater or less fulness of American languages, or which incidentally touch upon their bibliography, it contains not less than 256 closely-printed octavo pages of bibliographical notices of grammars, vocabularies, etc., of the aboriginal languages of America. It is a peculiar and valuable feature of the work that not only the titles of printed or published grammars or vocabularies are given, but also that unpublished or MS. works of these kinds are noticed, in all cases where they are known to exist, but which have disappeared among the debris of the suppressed convents and religious establishments of Spanish America"—E. G. Squier, in a paper read before the American Ethnological Society, 12th Jan., 1858.

"In consequence of the death of the author before he had finished the revisal of the work it has been carefully examined by competent scholars, who have also made many valuable additions."—American Publishers' Circular, 30th Jan., 1858.

"It contains 256 closely-printed pages of titles, of printed books and manuscripts, and notices of American aboriginal languages, and embraces references to nearly all that has been written or published respecting them, whether in special works or incidentally in books of travel, periodicals, or proceedings of learned societies."—New York Herald, 26th Jan., 1858.

"The manner in which this contribution to the bibliography of American languages has been executed, both by the author, Mr. Ludewig, and the able writers who have edited the work since his death, is spoken of in the highest terms by gentlemen most conversant with the subject."—American Historical Magazine, Vol. II., No 5, May, 1858.

"Je terminerai en annonçant le premier volume d'une publication appelée à rendre de grands services à la philologie comparée et à la linguistique générale. Je veux parler de la Bibliotheca Glottica, ouvrage devant renfermer la liste de tous les dictionnaires et de toutes les grammaires des langues connues, tant imprimés que manuscrits. L'éditeur de cette précieuse bibliographie est M. Nicolas Trübner, dont le nom est honorablement connu dans le monde oriental. Le premier volume est consacré aux idiomes Américains; le second doit traiter des langues de l'Inde. Le travail est fait avec le soin le plus consciencieux, et fera honneur à M. Nicolas Trübner, surtout s'il poursuit son œuvre avec la même ardeur qu'il a mise à la commencer."—L. Léon de Rosny. Revue de l'Orient, Février, 1858.

"Mr. Trübner's most important work on the bibliography of the aboriginal languages of America is deserving of all praise, as eminently useful to those who study that branch of literature. The value, too, of the book, and of the pains which its compilation must have cost, will not be lessened by the consideration that it is first in this field of linguistic literature."—Petermann's Geographische Mittheilungen. p. 79, Feb., 1858.

"Undoubtedly this volume of Trübner's Bibliotheca Glottica ranks amongst the most valuable additions which of late years have enriched our bibliographical literature. To us Germans it is most gratifying, that the initiative has been taken by a German bookseller, himself one of the most intelligent and active of our countrymen abroad, to produce a work which has higher aims than mere pecuniary profit, and that he, too, has laboured at its production with his own hands; because daily it is becoming a circumstance of rarer occurrence that, as in this case, it is a bookseller's primary object to serve the cause of literature rather than to enrich himself."—P. Tromel, Börsenblatt, 4th Jan., 1858.

"In the compilation of the work the editors have availed themselves not only of the labours of Vater, Barton, Duponceau, Gallatin, De Souza, and others, but also of the MS. sources left by the missionaries, and of many books of which even the library of the British Museum is deficient, and furnish the fullest account of the literature of no less than 525 languages. The value of the work, so necessary to the study of ethnology, is greatly enhanced by the addition of a good Index."—Berliner National-Zeitung, 22nd Nov., 1857.

"The name of the author, to all those who are acquainted with his former works, and who know the thoroughness and profound character of his investigations, is a sufficient guarantee that this work will be one of standard authority, and one that will fully answer the demands of the present time."—Petzholdt's Anzeiger, Jan., 1858.

"The chief merit of the editor, and publisher is to have terminated the work carefully and lucidly in contents and form, and thus to have established a new and largely augmented edition of 'Vater's Linguarum totius orbis Index,' after Professor Jülg's revision of 1847. In order to continue and complete this work the editor requires the assistance of all those who are acquainted with this new branch of science, and we sincerely hope it may be accorded to him."—Magazin für die Literatur des Auslandes, No. 38, 1858.

"As the general title of the book indicates, it will be extended to the languages of the other continents, in case it meets with a favourable reception, which we most cordially wish it."—A. F. Pott, Preussische Jahrbücher, Vol. II., part 1.

"Cette compilation savante est, sans contredit, le travail bibliographique le plus important que notre époque ait vu surgir sur les nations indigènes de l'Amérique."—Nouvelles Annales des Voyages, Avril, 1859.

"La Bibliotheca Glottica, dont M. Nicolas Trübner a commencé la publication, est un des livres les plus utiles qui aient jamais été rédigés pour faciliter l'étude de la philologie comparée. Le premier tome de cette grande bibliographie linguistique comprend la liste textuelle de toutes les grammaires, de tous les dictionnaires et des vocabulaires même les moins étendus qui ont été imprimés dans les différents dialectes des deux Amériques; en outre, il fait connaître les ouvrages manuscrits de la même nature renfermés dans les principales bibliothèques publiques et particulières. Ce travail a du nécessiter de longues et patientes recherches; aussi mérite-t-il d'attirer tout particulièrement l'attention des philologues. Puissent les autres volumes de cette bibliothèque être rédigés avec le même soin et se trouver bientôt entre les mains de tous les savants auxquels ils peuvent rendre des services inappréciables."—Revue Américaine et Orientale, No. 1, Oct., 1858.

"To every fresh addition to the bibliography of language, of which we have a most admirable specimen in this work, the thoughtful linguist will ever, as the great problem of the unity of human speech approaches towards its full solution, turn with increasing satisfaction and hope.

"But Mr. Nicolas Trübner, however, has, perhaps, on the whole, done the highest service of all to the philologer, by the publication of "the Literature of American Aboriginal Languages." He has, with the aid of Professor Turner, greatly enlarged, and at the same time most skilfully edited, the valuable materials acquired by his deceased friend, M. Ludewig. We do not, indeed, at this moment, know any similar work deserving of full comparison with it. In its ample enumeration of important works of reference, and careful record of the most recent facts in the literature of its subject, it, as might have been expected, greatly surpasses Jülg's 'Vater,' valuable and trustworthy though that learned German's work undoubtedly is."—North British Review, No. 59, Feb., 1859.

The Editor has also received most kind and encouraging letters respecting the work from Sir George Grey, the Chevalier Bunsen, Dr. Th. Goldstücker, Mr. Watts (of the Museum), Professor A. Fr. Pott (of Halle), Dr. Julius Petzholt (of Dresden), Hofrath Dr. Grasse (of Dresden), M. F. F. de la Figanière (of Lisbon), E. Edwards (of Manchester), Dr. Max Müller (of Oxford), Dr. Buschmann (of Berlin), Dr. Jülg (of Cracow), and other linguistic scholars.

Luvini.—TABLES OF LOGARITHMS with Seven Places of Decimals. By John Luvini. Crown 8vo, cloth, pp. viii. and 368. 1866. 5*s*.

Lyman.—COTTON CULTURE. By Joseph B. Lyman, late of Louisiana. With an additional chapter on Cotton Seed, and its Uses. By J. R. Sypher. Cloth, pp. VII. and 190. 6*s*.

Lysons.—OUR VULGAR TONGUE. A Lecture on Language in general, with a few words on Gloucestershire in particular. Delivered before the Literary and Scientific Association at Gloucester, January 17th, 1868, with Appendix containing tables of the world-wide affinity of Languages. By the Rev. Samuel Lysons, M.A., F.S.A., Hon. Canon of Gloucester Cathedral, and Rector of Rodmarton, Author of "Our British Ancestors," "The Model Merchant of the Middle Ages," etc., etc. 8vo. stiff cover, pp. 51 and 62. 1868. 2*s*. 6*d*.

Maccall, W.—National Missions. A Series of Lectures. 8vo. pp. viii. and 382. 1855. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Maccall.—Sacramental Services. 12mo. sewed, pp. 20. 1847. 6*d.*

Maccall.—The Agents of Civilization. A Series of Lectures. 12mo. cloth, pp. 126. 1843. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Maccall.—The Doctrine of Individuality. A Discourse delivered at Crediton, on the 28th of May, 1843. 12mo. sewed, pp. 22. 1843. 6*d.*

Maccall.—The Education of Taste: A Series of Lectures. 12mo. sewed, pp. 104. 1846. 1*s.*

Maccall.—The Elements of Individualism. A Series of Lectures. 8vo. cloth, pp. 358. 1847. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Maccall.—The Individuality of the Individual. A Lecture delivered at Exeter on the 29th March, 1844, before the Literary Society. 12mo. sewed, pp. 40. 1844. 6*d.*

Maccall.—The Lessons of the Pestilence. A Discourse delivered at Royston, on the 23rd September, 1849. 12mo. sewed, pp. 22. 1849. 6*d.*

Maccall.—The Unchristian Nature of Commercial Restrictions. A Discourse delivered at Bolton, on Sunday, the 27th September, 1840. 12mo. sewed, pp. 14. 1840. 3*d.*

Macfarlane.—A Letter to our Grandchildren. By William Macfarlane, Esq., Brighton, Author of "A Letter to the Bishop of Natal." 8vo. sewed, pp. 15. 1862. 2*d.*

Macfarlane.—A Letter to the Right Reverend Dr. Colenso, Bishop of Natal, remonstrating against his leaving the Church of England. By William Macfarlane, Esq., Brighton. 8vo. sewed, pp. 8. 1862. 1*d.*

Macfarlane.—A Practical Letter to the Citizens of the World on the Civil Wars among the Bishops and Clergy. By William Macfarlane, Esq., Brighton, Author of "A Letter to our Grandchildren," and "A Letter to the Bishop of Natal." 8vo. sewed, pp. 18. 1863. 3*d.*

Mackellar.—The American Printer. A Manual of Typography, containing complete instructions for beginners, as well as practical directions for managing all departments of a Printing Office. With several useful tables, schemes for imposing forms in every variety, hints to Authors and Publishers, etc., etc. By Thomas Mackellar. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 336. 1867. 9*s.*

Mackenzie.—Condensed Temperance Facts for Christians. With remarks on ancient and modern wines and malt liquors. By J. Mackenzie, M.D., Justice of the Peace, Provost of Inverness. 12mo. sewed, pp. 40. 1868. 3*d.*

Madeira.—A Brief Letter of Advice to an Invalid, in reply to a request for information about Madeira as a winter residence. By an ex-invalid. 8vo. sewed, pp. 8. 1859. 6*d.*

M'Caul.—Jerusalem: its Bishop, its Missionaries, and its Converts; being a Series of Letters addressed to the Editor of the "Daily News" in the Year 1858, by the late Rev. Alexander M'Caul, D.D., with other Letters, etc., illustrative thereof. Collected and Edited by his Son, Samuel M'Caul, B.C.L., of St. John's College, Oxford, etc. 8vo. sewed, pp. 80. 1866. 1*s.* 6*d.*

McCulloch.—A Treatise on the Circumstances which determine the Rate of Wages and the Condition of the Labouring Classes. By J. R. McCulloch, Esq. 12mo. cloth, pp. x. and 114. 1868. 1*s.*

McPherson.—The Political History of the United States of America during the Great Rebellion, from November 6, 1860, to July 4, 1864; with Summary of the Legislation thereon, and the Executive, Judicial, and Politico-Military Facts; together with an Account of the Rebel Administration. By Edward McPherson, of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, Clerk of the House of Representatives. Royal 8vo., bound. 1864. 18*s.*

Mahan.—An Elementary Course of Military Engineering. Part I. Comprising Field Fortifications, Military Mining and Siege Operations. By D. H. Mahan, LL.D., Professor of Military and Civil Engineering in the U. S. Military Academy. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxx. and 284. 1865. 16*s.*

"The best treatise on its subject we know—lucid, accurate, full, and yet concise..it is the book by which most can be learned about the art of war."—United States Service Magazine.

Mahan.—An Elementary Treatise on Military Engineering Part II. Permanent Fortifications. By D. H. Mahan, LL.D. With Plates. 8vo. cloth, pp. 176. 25*s.*

Mahan.—Summary of the Course of Permanent Fortifications, and of the Attack and Defence of Permanent Works. For the Use of the Cadets of the United States Military Academy. By D. H. Mahan, Professor of Military Engineering, at the United States Military Academy. 2 vols. 4to. with folio Plates. Lithographed at the United States Military Academy Press. 25*s.*

Mahan.—An Elementary Course of Civil Engineering for the use of Cadets of the United States Military Academy. By D. H. Mahan, M.A. New Edition, with large Addenda, and many new Cuts. 8vo. cloth, pp. 410. 18*s.*

Maharajahs.—History of the Sect of Maharajahs; or, Vallabhacharyas in Western India. With a Steel Plate. 1 vol. 8vo. cloth, pp. xv. and 183. 1865. 12*s.*

Malleson.—Essays and Lectures on Indian Historical Subjects. I. A Native State and its Rulers.—II. Lord Lake of Laswarrie.—III. Count Lallay.—IV. Havelock.—V. Hyder Ali's Last War.—VI. Sir Hugh Rose. By Major G. B. Malleson, Bengal Staff Corps. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 360. 1868. 6*s.*

Manava-Kalpa-Sutra.—Being a portion of this ancient Work on Vaidik Rites, together with the Commentary of Kumarila-Swamin. A Facsimile of the MS. No. 17, in the Library of Her Majesty's Home Government for India. With a Preface by Theodor Goldstücker. Oblong folio, pp. 268 of letter-press, and 121 leaves of facsimiles. Cloth. 1863. £4 4*s.*

Manipulus Vocabulorum.—A Rhyming Dictionary of the English Language. By Peter Levins (1570) Edited, with an Alphabetical Index, by Henry B. Wheatley. 8vo. cloth, pp. xvi. and 370. 1867. 14*s.*

Mann.—A Few Thoughts for a Young Man. A Lecture delivered before the Boston Mercantile Library Association, on its 29th anniversary. By Horace Mann. Second Edition. 12mo. sewed., 36 pp. 1854. 6*d.*

Mannheimer.—The Study of German Simplified in a New Systematic and Practical Grammar, according to the Systems of Ollendorff and Dr. Ahn. By H. Mannheimer. Third Edition, carefully revised, greatly enlarged, and improved. Post 8vo., stiff covers, pp. 270. 1864. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Ditto. Ditto. Key to. 1*s.*

Manning.—Inquiry into the Character and Origin of the Possessive, Augment, in English and Cognate Dialects. By James Manning, Q.A.S., Recorder-of Oxford. Reprinted from the "Transactions of the Philological Society," with an Appendix and Index. 1 vol. crown 8vo., sewed. Pp. ii. and 90. 1864. 2*s.*

Manning.—Thoughts upon Subjects connected with Parliamentary Reform. By James Manning, Her Majesty's Ancient Serjeant-at-Law. 8vo., sewed. Pp. 20. 1866. 1*s.*

Manual of Punctuation (A), for Self-teaching and for Schools. By a Practical Printer. 12mo. pp. 40, limp cloth. 1859. 1*s.*

Maritime Capture.—Shall England uphold the Capture of Private Property at Sea? By a Lawyer. Post 8vo. sewed. Pp. 40. 1866. 1*s.*

Markham.—Quichua Grammar and Dictionary. Contributions towards a Grammar and Dictionary of Quichua, the Language of the Yncas of Peru; collected by Clements R. Markham, F.S.A., Corr. Mem. of the University of Chili, Author of "Cuzco and Lima," and "Travels in Peru and India." In one vol., crown 8vo., pp. 150, cloth. 1864. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Marmontel.—Bélisaire. Par Marmontel. Nouvelle édition, revue et corrigée par Ernest Brette, Chas. Cassal, Theod Karker. 12mo. cloth, pp. xii. 123. 1867. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Martin.—The Age of Louis XIV. By Henri Martin. Translated from the Fourth Paris Edition, with the author's sanction and co-operation. By Mary L. Booth. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxii. and 563; viii. and 543. 1865. £1 16*s.*

Martineau.—Letters from Ireland. By Harriet Martineau. Reprinted from the "Daily News." Post 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 220. 1852. 6*s.* 6*d.*

Martineau.—A History of the American Compromises. Reprinted (with additions) from the "Daily News." By Harriet Martineau. 8vo. pp. 35. 1856. 1*s.*

Martineau.—Essays, Philosophical and Theological. By James Martineau. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 424. 1866. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Marx.—The Serf and the Cossack. A Sketch of the Condition of the Russian People. By Francis Marx. Second Edition, enlarged. 12mo. sewed, pp. 60. 1865. 1*s.*

Mason.—Burmah: its People and Natural Productions; or, Notes on the Nations, Fauna, Flora, and Minerals of Tenasserim, Pegu, and Burmah; with systematic Catalogues of the known Mammals, Birds, Fish, Reptiles, Insects, Molluscs, Crustaceans, Annalids, Radiates, Plants, and Minerals, with Vernacular Names. By Rev. F. Mason, D.D., M.R.A.S., Corresponding Member of the American Oriental Society, etc., etc. Second Edition, 8vo. cloth, pp xvii. and 913. 1860. 30*s.*

Massey, Gerald.—Havelock's March and other Poems. 12mo. cloth, pp. vii. and 269. 1861. 5*s*.

Mathura.—A Trilingual Dictionary, being a comprehensive Lexicon in English, Urdú, and Hindí, exhibiting the Syllabication, Pronunciation, and Etymology of English Words, with their Explanation in English, and in Urdú and Hindi in the Roman Character. By Mathurâ Prasâda Misra, Second Master, Queen's College, Benares. 8vo. cloth, pp. xiv. and 1330. 1865. £2 2*s*.

Matthay.—Deutsche Literatur und Lese-Buch. German Literature and Reader. By T. Matthay, M.R.C.P., Professor to the Wimbledon College, Clapham Grammar School, and other Military and Ladies' Colleges, etc. Post 8vo., cloth, pp. viii. and 575. 1866. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Matthew.—Schleswig-Holstein. By Patrick Matthew. 8vo. sewed, pp. 62. 1864. 1*s*.

Mayer Papyri, and the Palimpsest Manuscripts of Uranius belonging to M. Simonides, Report of the Council of the Royal Society of Literature, with letters from Messrs. Pertz, Ehrenberg, and Dindorf. 8vo. sewed, pp. 30. 1863. 1*s*.

Mayne.—The Lost Friend. A Crimean Memory. And other Poems. By Colbourn Mayne, Esq. 12mo., cloth, pp. viii. and 134. 1857. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Mazzini.—An Address to Pope Pius IX., on his Encyclical Letter. By Joseph Mazzini. 8vo., sewed, pp. 24. 4th Edition. 1865. 6*d*.

Medhurst.—Chinese Dialogues, Questions, and Familiar Sentences, literally rendered into English, with a view to promote commercial intercourse, and assist beginners in the Language. By the late W. H. Medhurst, D.D. A new and enlarged edition. 8vo. sewed, pp. 225. 1863. 18*s*.

Meditations on Life and its Religious Duties. Translated from the German by Frederica Rowan. Dedicated to H.R.H. Princess Louis of Hesse. Published by Her Majesty's gracious permission. Being the Companion Volume to "Meditations on Death and Eternity." 8vo. cloth, pp. 1863. 10*s*. 6*d*.

Ditto. Smaller Edition, crown 8vo., printed on toned paper, pp. 338. 1863. 6*s*.

Meditations on Death and Eternity. Translated from the German by Frederica Rowan. Published by Her Majesty's gracious permission. 8vo. cloth, pp. 386. 1862. 10*s*. 6*d*.

Ditto. Smaller Edition, crown 8vo. cloth, printed on toned paper, pp. 352. 1863. 6*s*.

Mellet.—Sunday and the Sabbath. Translated from the French of Louis Victor Mellet, Pastor of Yvorne. 12mo., sewed, pp. viii. 106. 1856. 1*s*.

Menke, Dr. T.—Orbis Antiqui Descriptio: an Atlas illustrating Ancient History and Geography, for the Use of Schools; containing 18 Maps engraved on Steel and Coloured, with Descriptive Letter-press. 4th edition. Folio, half-bound morocco. 1866. 5*s*.

Mercer.—Mount Carmel: A Poem. By Edward Smith Mercer. 12mo. sewed, pp. 80. 1867. 1*s*.

Mérimée.—Colomba. Par Prosper Mérimée, de l'Académie Française. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 210. 1867. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Mertens.—Huit Jours à Londres, Guide du touriste et du voyageur. Par Constant Mertens. Small 4to. sewed, pp. 82. 1867. 3*s.*

Michael.—The Social Gospel. By R. J. Michael. First English Edition. To be continued by "The Social Code." Crown 8vo. sewed, pp. 294. 1867. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Michælis.—A New System of Stenography or Short-hand, on the Principles of W. Stolze. By Dr. Gustav Michælis. With 32 lithographic plates. 12mo. stiff covers, pp. viii. and 135. 1864. 3*s.*

Michælis.—The Little Tiro.—A Practical Compendium of English Shorthand. By Gustav Michælis. With Sixteen Lithographic Plates. 12mo. stiff covers, pp. 28. 1864. 1*s.*

Michel.—Les Écossais en France, Les Français en Écosse. Par Francisque Michel, Correspondant de l'Institut de France, etc. Handsomely bound in two Volumes, 8vo., in rich blue cloth, with emblematical designs. Pp. vii. 547 and 551, with upwards of 100 Coats of Arms, and other Illustrations. Price £1 12*s.*—Also a Large Paper Edition (limited to 100 Copies), printed on Thick Paper. Two Volumes, 4to., half morocco, with three additional Steel Engravings. 1862. £3 3*s.*

Michelena y Rojas.—Exploracion Oficial por la primera vez desde el Norte de la América del Sur siempre por Rios, entrando por las Bocas del Orinóco, de los Valles de este mismo y del meta, casiquiare, Rio-Negro ó Guaynia y Amazónas, hasta nauta en el alto Maranon ó Amazónas, arriba de las Bocas del Ucayali bajada del Amazónas Hasta el Atlántico. Comprendiendo en ese imnenso espacio los Estados de Venezuela, Guayana Inglesa, Nueva-Granada, Brásil, Ecuador, Péru y Bolivia. Viaje a Rio de Janeiro desde belen en el Gran Pará, por el Atlántico, tocando en las Capitales de las principales provincias del Imperio en los años, de 1855 hasta 1859. Por F. Michelena y Rójas, Viajero al Rededor del Mundo, Miembro de la Real Sociedad Economica Matritense y de la Real Academia de Arqueologia y de Geografia de la Misma. Publicado bajo los Auspicios del Gobierno de los Estados Unidosdo Venezuela. Royal 8vo. With Map. Sewed, pp. 684. 1867. 18*s.*

Miles.—The Social, Political and Commercial Advantages of Direct Steam Communication and Rapid Postal Intercourse between Europe and America, viâ Galway, Ireland. By Pliny Miles. Illustrated by a Map. 8vo. sewed, pp. 122. 1859. 1*s.*

Mill.—The Enfranchisement of Women. By Mrs. Stuart Mill. (Reprinted from the "Westminster Review.") 8vo. sewed, pp. 16. 1868. 1*d.*

Mill.—Auguste Comte and Positivism. By John Stuart Mill, Esq., M.P. 8vo. cloth, pp. 200. 1866. 6*s.*

Mill.—Speech of John Stuart Mill, Esq., M.P., on the Admission of Women to the Electoral Franchise, spoken in the House of Commons, May 20th, 1867. 8vo. sewed, pp. 18. 1867. 6*d.*

Millhouse.—New English and Italian Pronouncing and Explanatory Dictionary. By John Millhouse. Vol. I. English-Italian. Vol. II. Italian-English. Two vols. square 8vo. cloth. 3rd edition, with Numerous Additions and Improvements. Pp. 608 and 740. 1867. 12*s.*

Millhouse, John.—Manual of Italian Conversation. For the Use of Schools. 18mo. cloth, pp. 126. 1866. 2*s.*

Miscegenation: The Theory of the Blending of the Races, applied to the American White Man and Negro. 12mo. cloth, pp. 92. 1864. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Modern French Reader (The). Edited by the Rev. P. H. Ernest Brette, B.D., of Christ's Hospital, London; Professor Ch. Cassal, LL.D., of University College, London, and Theodor Karcher, LL.B., of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, former and present Examiner in the University of London, and for the Civil Service of India. Crown 8vo. cloth. 1868. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Moffat.—The "Standard-Alphabet" Problem; or, the Preliminary Subject of a General Phonic System considered, on the basis of some important Facts in the Sechwana Language of South Africa, and in Reference to the Views of Professors Lepsius, Max Müller, and others. A Contribution to Phonetic Philology, by Robert Moffat, jun., Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxviii. and 174. 1864. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Molesworth.—A Dictionary, Marathi and English. Compiled by J. T. Molesworth, assisted by George and Thomas Candy. Second Edition, revised and enlarged, by J. T. Molesworth. Royal 4to. pp. xxx. and 922, boards. 1857. £3 3*s.*

Moor.—The Hindu Pantheon. By Edward Moor, F.R.S. A New Edition, with additional Plates, Condensed and Annotated, by the Rev. W. O. Simpson. 8vo. cloth, pp. xvi. and 402. With a Frontispiece and 59 Plates. 1864. £2 8*s.*

Morell.—Russia and England; their Strength and their Weakness. By John Reynell Morell, Author of "Russia as it is," etc. 12mo. sewed, pp. 104. 1852. 1*s.*

Morgan.—A Dictionary of Terms used in Printing. By H. Morgan, Government Printing Establishment. 8vo. cloth, pp. 136. 1863. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Morgan.—The Duke's Daughter. A Classic Tragedy, Acting Edition. Pp. 78, roan. 5*s.*

Morley.—A Descriptive Catalogue of the Historical Manuscripts in the Arabic and Persian Languages preserved in the Library of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland. By William H. Morley, M.R.A.S. 8vo., pp. viii. and 160, sewed. 1854. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Morley.—Sunrise in Italy, etc. Reveries. By Henry Morley. 4to. cloth, pp. 164. 1848. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Morrison.—A Dictionary of the Chinese Language. By the Rev. R. Morrison, D.D. New Edition. 2 vols. small 4to. cloth. Vol. 1, pp. ix. and 762. Vol. 2. pp. 827. 1865. £4 4*s.*

Motley.—Causes of the Civil War in America. By John Lothrop Motley, LL.D. Reprinted from the "Times." 8vo. sewed, pp. 30. 1861. 1*s.*

Muhammed.—The Life of Muhammed. Based on Muhammed Ibn Ishak. By Abd El Malik Ibn Hisham. Edited by Dr. Ferdinand Wüstenfield. One volume containing the Arabic Text. 8vo. sewed, pp. 1026. 21*s.* Another Volume, containing Introduction, Notes, and Index in German. 8vo. sewed, pp. lxxii. and 266. 7*s.* 6*d.* Each part sold separately.

The text based on the Manuscripts of the Berlin, Leipsic, Gotha, and Leyden Libraries, has been carefully revised by the learned editor, and printed with the utmost exactness.

Muir.—Original Sanskrit Texts, on the Origin and History of the People of India, their Religion and Institutions. Collected, Translated, and Illustrated by J. Muir, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D. Volume First: Mythical and Legendary Accounts of the Origin of Caste, with an inquiry into its existence in the Vedic age. Second Edition. Re-written and greatly enlarged. 8vo. pp. xx. and 532, cloth. 1868. 21*s.*

Muir.—Original Sanskrit Texts, on the Origin and History of the People of India, their Religion and Institutions. Collected, Translated, and Illustrated by J. Muir, Esq., D.C.L., LLD. Volume Third. The Vedas: Opinions of their Authors, and of later Indian Writers, on their Origin, Inspiration, and Authority. Second Edition, Enlarged. [In the press.]

Muir.—Original Sanskrit Texts, on the Origin and History of the People of India, their Religion and Institutions. Collected, Translated into English, and Illustrated by Remarks, by J. Muir, D.C.L., LL.D. Vol. Fourth. Comparison of the Vedic with the later representation of the principal Indian Deities. 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 440. 1863. 15*s.*

Mullhall.—Cotton Fields of Paraguay and Corrientes; being an Account of a Tour through these Countries, preceded by Annals of Cotton Planting in the River Plate Territories, from 1862 to 1864. By Michael G. Mulhall. Square 8vo. sewed, pp. 120. 1866. 5*s.*

Müller.—Parallèle entre Jules César, par Shakspeare, et La Mort de César, par Monsieur de Voltaire. Faite par Robert Müller, Philos. Doctor. 12mo. sewed, pp. 20. 1864. 1*s.*

Müller.—The Sacred Hymns of the Brahmins, as Preserved to us in the Oldest Collections of Religious Poetry, "The Rig Veda-Sanhita." Translated and Explained. By Max Müller, M.A., Taylorian Professor of Modern European Languages in the University of Oxford, Fellow of All Souls College. In 8 vols. [Vol. I. in the press.]

Müller.—Outline Dictionary for the Use of Missionaries, Explorers and Students of Language. With an Introduction on the proper Use of the Ordinary English Alphabet in transcribing Foreign Languages. By Max Müller, M.A., Taylorian Professor in the University of Oxford. The Vocabulary compiled by John Bellows. 12mo. morocco, pp. 368. 1867. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Munch.—William and Rachael Russell; A Tragedy, in Five Acts. By Andreas Munch. Translated from the Norwegian, and Published under the Special Sanction of the Poet. By John Heyliger Burt. 12mo. pp 126. 1862. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Münchausen, Baron.—The Travels and Surprising Adventures of. With Thirty original Illustrations (Ten full-page coloured plates and twenty woodcuts), by Alfred Crowquill. Crown 8vo. ornamental cover, richly gilt front and back, pp. xii. and 194. 1859. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Munroe.—The Physiological Action of Alcohol. A Lecture delivered at the Royal Institution, Hull. By Henry Munroe, M.D., F.L.S. 8vo. sewed, pp. 35. 1865. 6*d.*

Nahl.—Instructions in Gymnastics. By Arthur and Charles Nahl. Illustrated with 53 plates. Containing several hundred figures, Designed and Engraved by the Authors, representing the various exercises on the ground, the Vaulting Horse, Parallel Bars, Horizontal Bars, Rings, etc., including construction of Pyramids. Plan of Apparatus, etc. 4to. cloth, pp. 67. 1865. £1 1*s.*

Nayler.—An Appeal from the Prejudices to the Judgments of the Thinking Inhabitants of Pembrokeshire on the Sabbath Question. By B. S. Nayler. Small 4to. sewed, pp. 64. 1859. 1*s.*

Neale.—My Comrade and my Colours; or, Men who know not when they are Beaten. By Rev. E. Neale. 12mo. sewed, pp. 135. 1854. 1*s.*

Neutrals and Belligerents.—The Rights of Neutrals and Belligerents, from a Modern Point of View. By a Civilian. 8vo. sewed, pp. 41. 1862. 1*s.*

New Universal Dictionary of the English, French, Italian, and German Languages, arranged after a new system. Small 8vo. cloth, pp. 1200. 1865. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Newman.—The Difficulties of Elementary Geometry, especially those which concern the straight line, the plane, and the theory of parallels. By Francis William Newman, formerly Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. 8vo. boards, pp. viii. and 144. 1841. 5*s.*

Newman.—On the Relations of Free Knowledge to Moral Sentiment. A Lecture delivered in University College, London, on the 13th of October, 1847, as introductory to the Session of 1847-1848. By Francis W. Newman, Professor of Latin, and formerly Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. 8vo. sewed, pp. 24. 1847. 1*s.*

Newman.—Lectures on Political Economy. By Francis William Newman. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 342. 1851. 5*s.*

"The most able and instructive book, which exhibits, we think, no less moral than economical wisdom."—Prospective Review.

Newman.—A Reply to the Eclipse of Faith; being Chapter IX. of the Second Edition of the Phases of Faith. By F. W. Newman. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 28. 1853. 6*d.*

Newman.—The Odes of Horace. Translated into Unrhymed Metres, with Introduction and Notes. By F. W. Newman, Professor of Latin, University College, London. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xxi. and 247. 1853. 5*s.*

Newman.—The Crimes of the House of Hapsburg against its own Liege Subjects. By F. W. Newman. 8vo. sewed, pp. 60. 1853. 1*s.*

Newman.—The Iliad of Homer, faithfully translated into Unrhymed Metre. By F. W. Newman, Professor of Latin in University College, London. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xxii. and 436. 1856. 6*s.* 6*d.*

Newman.—Theism, Doctrinal and Practical; or, Didactic Religious Utterances. By Francis W. Newman. 4to. cloth, pp. 184. 1858. 8*s.* 6*d.*

Newman.—The Relations of Professional to Liberal Knowledge. A Lecture delivered in University College, London, October 12, 1859. Introductory to the Session of the Faculty of Arts and Laws, 1859-1860. By Francis W. Newman, Professor of Latin, and formerly Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. 8vo. sewed, pp. 30. 1859. 1*s.*

Newman.—Homeric Translation in Theory and Practice. A Reply to Matthew Arnold, Esq., Professor of Poetry, Oxford. By Francis W. Newman, a Translator of the Iliad. Crown 8vo. stiff covers, pp. 104. 1861. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Newman.—HIAWATHA: Rendered into Latin. With Abridgment. By Francis William Newman, Professor of Latin in University College, London. 12mo. sewed, pp. vii. and 110. 1862. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Newman.—THE SOUL: Her Sorrows and her Aspirations. An Essay towards the Natural History of the Soul, as the Basis of Theology. By Francis William Newman, formerly Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. New ed., post 8vo. cloth, pp. xi. and 162. 1868. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Newman.—A DISCOURSE AGAINST HERO-MAKING IN RELIGION, delivered in South Place, Finsbury. By Francis W. Newman. Printed by request, with enlargements. 8vo. sewed, pp. 30. 1864. 1*s.*

Newman.—CATHOLIC UNION: Essays towards a Church of the future, as the organization of Philanthropy. By F. W. Newman. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 113. 1864. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Newman.—A HISTORY OF THE HEBREW MONARCHY from the Administration of Samuel to the Babylonish Captivity. By Francis William Newman, formerly Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford, and Author of "The Soul; its Sorrows and Aspirations," etc. Third edition, crown 8vo. cloth, pp. x. and 354. 1865. 8*s.* 6*d.*

Newman.—PHASES OF FAITH; or, Passages from the History of my Creed. New Edition; with Reply to Professor Henry Rogers, Author of the "Eclipse of Faith." Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 212. 1865. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Newman.—ENGLISH INSTITUTIONS AND THEIR MOST NECESSARY REFORMS. A Contribution of Thought. By Francis W. Newman. 8vo. pp. 32. 1865. 6*d.*

Newman.—THE PERMISSIVE BILL MORE URGENT THAN ANY EXTENSION OF THE FRANCHISE. An Address at Ramsgate, February 17th, 1865. By F. W. Newman. 8vo. sewed, pp. 12. 1865. 1*d.*

Newman.—A HANDBOOK OF MODERN ARABIC: consisting of a Practical Grammar, with numerous examples, etc. By F. W. Newman. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xxx. and 190. 1866. 6*s.*

Newman.—ON THE PHILOSOPHICAL CLASSIFICATION OF NATIONAL INSTITUTIONS. A Lecture delivered at the Bristol Institution for the Advancement of Science, Literature, and the Arts, March 4th, 1867. By F. W. Newman. Published by Request. 8vo. sewed, pp. 24. 1867. 6*d.*

Newman.—THE TEXT OF THE IGUVINE INSCRIPTIONS. With Interlinear Latin Translation and Notes. By Francis W. Newman. 8vo. sewed, pp. 56. 1868. 2*s.*

Newman.—TRANSLATIONS OF ENGLISH POETRY INTO LATIN VERSE. Designed as Part of a New Method of Instructing in Latin. By Francis W. Newman, Emeritus Professor of University College, London, formerly Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. In 1 crown 8vo. vol. cloth, pp. xiv. and 202. 1868. 6*s.*

Newton.—THE OPERATION OF THE PATENT LAWS, with Suggestions for their better Administration. By A. V. Newton. 8vo. sewed, pp. 31. 1864. 6*d.*

Nicholson.—E PUR SI MUOVE. By N. A. Nicholson, M.A., Trinity College, Oxford. 8vo. cloth, pp. 115. 1866. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Nicholson.—One Reserve or Many? Thoughts Suggested by the Crisis of 1866. By N. A. Nicholson, M.A., Trinity College, Oxford. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 21, 1867. 1*s.*

Nicholson.—The Controversy on Free Banking, being a few observations on an Article in "Fraser's Magazine," January, 1868. By N. A. Nicholson, M.A., Trinity College, Oxford. 8vo. sewed, pp. 32. 1868. 1*s.*

Nicholson.—Observations on Coinage, Seignorage, etc., etc. By N. A. Nicholson, M.A., Trinity College, Oxford. 8vo. sewed, pp. 22. 1868. 1*s.*

Norton.—A Treatise on Astronomy, Spherical and Physical; with Astronomical Problems, and Solar, Lunar, and other Astronomical Tables, for the use of Colleges, and Scientific Schools. By William A. Norton, M.A., Professor of Civil Engineering in Yale College. Fourth Edition. Revised, remodelled, and enlarged. 8vo. cloth, pp. 574. With numerous plates. 1867. 15*s.*

Notes and Queries on China and Japan. Edited by N. B. Dennys. Vol. I. January to December, 1867. Royal 8vo., double columns, pp. 186, sewed. £1 1*s.*

Nott.—Lectures on Biblical Temperance. By Eliphalet Nott, D.D. With an Introduction. By Taylor Lewis, LL.D. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 268. 1863. 6*s.*

Ditto. Ditto. sewed. 1863. 1*s.*

Nott and Gliddon.—Types of Mankind; or, Ethnological Researches based upon the Ancient Monuments, Paintings, Sculptures, and Crania of Races, and upon their Natural, Geographical, Philological, and Biblical History. By J. C. Nott, M.D., Mobile, Alabama; and Geo. R. Gliddon, formerly U.S. Consul at Cairo. Plates. Royal 8vo. cloth, pp. 738. 1854. £1 5*s.*

Nott and Gliddon.—The Same, in 4to. £1 16*s.*

Nott and Gliddon.—Indigenous Races of the Earth: or, New Chapters of Ethnological Inquiry: including Monographs on Special Departments of Philology, Iconography, Cranioscopy, Palæontology, Pathology, Archæology, Comparative Geography, and Natural History, contributed by Alfred Maury, Francis Pulszky, and J. Aitken Meigs, M.D.; presenting Fresh Investigations, Documents, and Materials, by J. C. Nott, M.D., and Geo. R. Gliddon. Plates and Maps. 4to. pp. 656, sewed. 1857. £1 16*s.*

Nott and Gliddon.—The same, royal 8vo. £1 5*s.*

Nouvelles Plaisantes Recherches d'un Homme Grave sur quelques Farceurs. 8vo. pp. 58. 1863. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Novalis.—Christianity or Europe. By Novalis (Frederick Von Hardenberg). Translated from the German by the Rev. John Dalton. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 34. 1844. 1*s.*

Nugent's Improved French and English and English and French Pocket Dictionary. Par Smith. 24mo. cloth, pp. 489 and 320. 1867. 3*s.*

Nyström.—Pocket Book of Mechanics and Engineering, containing a Memorandum of Facts and Collection of Practice and Theory. By John W. Nyström, C.E. 10th Edition, pp. 326. Revised with additional matter. 12mo. roan with tuck. 1867. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Oehlschlager's German-English and English-German Pocket Pronouncing Dictionary. New edition, 24mo. strongly bound in cloth. 4*s.*

Ogareff.—Essai sur la Situation Russe. Lettres à un Anglais. Par N. Ogareff. 12mo. sewed, pp. 150. 1862. 3*s.*

Oliver.—A Translation of the Syriac Peshito Version of the Psalms of David, with notes, critical and explanatory. By the Rev. Andrew Oliver, M.A. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xiv. and 332. 1861. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Ollendorff.—Método para aprendu á leer, escribir y hablar el Inglés segun el sistema de Ollendorff. Por Ramon Palenzuela y Juan de la Carreño. 8vo. cloth, pp. xlvi. and 460. 1867. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Key to ditto. 12mo. cloth, pp. 111. 1863. 5*s.*

Omnibus, The.—A Satire. Crown 8vo. limp cloth, pp. 44. 1865. 2*s.* 6*d.*

O'Neill.—The Fine Arts and Civilization of Ancient Ireland, illustrated with chromo and other lithographs, and several woodcuts. By Henry O'Neill, author of the work on "The most interesting of the Sculptured Crosses of Ancient Ireland." 4to. pp. vi. and 118, cloth. 1863. 15*s.*

Oriental Text Society Publications.

1. Theophania, or Divine Manifestations of our Lord and Saviour. By Eusebius, Bishop of Caesarea, Syriac. Edited by Professor S. Lee. 8vo. 1842. 15*s.*
2. Athanasius' Festal Letters, discovered in an ancient Syriac version. Edited by the Rev. W. Cureton. 8vo. 1848. 15*s.*
3. Shahrastani: Book of Religious and Philosophical Sects, in Arabic. Two parts. 8vo. 1842. 30*s.*
4. Umdat Akidat ahl al Sunnat wa al Tamaat: Pillar of the Creed of the Sunnites. Edited in Arabic by the Rev. W. Cureton. 8vo. 1843. 5*s.*
5. History of the Almohades. Edited in Arabic by Dr. R. P. A. Dozy. 8vo. 1847. 10*s.* 6*d.*
6. Sama Veda. Edited in Sanskrit by the Rev. G. Stevenson. 8vo. 1843. 12*s.*
7. Dasa Kumara Charita. Edited in Sanskrit by Professor H. H. Wilson. 8vo. 1846. 15*s.*
8. Maha Vira Charita, or a History of Rama. A Sanskrit Play. Edited by F. H. Trithen. 8vo. 1848. 15*s.*
9. Makhzan ul Asrar; the Treasury of Secrets. By Nizami. Edited in Persian by N. Bland. 4to. 1844. 10*s.* 6*d.*
10. Salaman-u-Ubsal; a Romance of Jami (Dshami). Edited in Persian by F. Falconer. 4to. 1843. 10*s.*
11. Mirkhond's History of the Atabeks. Edited in Persian by W. H. Morley. 8vo. 1850. 12*s.*
12. Tuhfat-ul-Ahrar; the Gift of the Noble. A Poem by Jami (Dshami). Edited in Persian by F. Falconer. 4to. 1843. 10*s.*

Oswald.—Austria in 1868. By Eugene Oswald. Reprinted from the "English Leader." 8vo. sewed, pp. 40. 1868. 1*s.*

Orthodox Catholic Review (The). Edited by Professor J. J. Overbeck. Vol. 1. 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 290. 1868. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Osburn.—The Monumental History of Egypt, as recorded on the Ruins of her Temples, Palaces, and Tombs. By William Osburn, F.S.L. Illustrated with Maps, Plates, etc. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 461; vii. and 643. 1854, £2 2*s*.

Vol. I. From the Colonization of the Valley to the Visit of the Patriarch Abram.
Vol. II. From the Visit of Abram to the Exodus.

Ott.—The Art of Manufacturing Soap and Candles, including the most recent discoveries, embracing all kinds of ordinary Hard, Soft, and Toilet Soaps, especially those made by the Cold Process, the modes of detecting frauds, and the making of Tallow and Composite Candles. By Adolph Ott, Ph. D., Practical and Analytical Chemist. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxi. and 193. 1867. 10*s*. 6*d*.

Our North-West, Frontier. With Map. 8vo. sewed, pp. 20. 1856. 1*s*.

Our Resources. A Series of Articles on the Financial and Political Condition of the United States. 8vo. sewed, pp. 32. 1864. 1*s*.

Overbeck.—Catholic Orthodoxy and Anglo-Catholicism. A Word about the Intercommunion between the English and Orthodox Churches. By J. J. Overbeck, D.D. 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 209. 1866. 5*s*.

Overman.—Mechanics for the Millwright, Machinist, Engineer, Civil Engineer, Architect, and Student; containing a clear elementary exposition of the Principles and Practice of Building Machines. By Frederick Overman, Author of "The Manufacture of Iron," and other scientific treatises. Illustrated by 154 fine Wood Engravings by William Gihon. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 420. 1864. 7*s*.

Overman.—Practical Mineralogy, Assaying and Mining, with a Description of the useful Minerals, and instructions for Essaying and Mining according to the simplest methods. By Frederick Overman, mining engineer, Author of "Manufacture of Iron," and other works of applied sciences. Fifth Edition. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 230. 1862. 4*s*. 6*d*.

Overman.—The Manufacture of Steel; containing the Practice and Principles of working and making Steel. A hand-book for blacksmiths and workers in steel and iron, wagon-makers, die-sinkers, cutlers, and manufacturers of files and hardware, of steel and iron, and for men of science and art. By Frederick Overman, Mining Engineer; Author of the "Manufacture of Iron," etc. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 226. 1860. 4*s*. 6*d*.

Overman.—The Moulder's and Founder's Pocket Guide. A Treatise on moulding and founding in green-sand, dry-sand, loam, and cement; the moulding of machine frames, mill-gear, hollow ware, ornaments, trinkets, bells, and statues; description of moulds for iron, bronze, brass, and other metals; plaster of Paris, sulphur, wax, and other articles commonly used in casting; the construction of melting furnaces, the melting and foundering of metals; the composition of alloys and their nature. With an Appendix, containing receipts for alloys, bronze, varnishes and colours for castings, also tables on the strength and other qualities of cast metals. By Frederick Overman, Mining Engineer; Author of "The Manufacture of Iron," "a Treatise on Steel," etc., etc. With 42 Wood Engravings. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 252. 1866. 4*s*. 6*d*.

Owen.—Footfalls on the Boundary of Another World. An enlarged English Copyright Edition. Ten editions of this work have been sold within a very short time in America. In the present edition, the author has introduced a considerable quantity of new matter. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xx. and 392. 1861. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Owlglass (Master Tyll).—The Marvellous Adventures and Rare Conceits Of. Edited, with an Introduction, and a Critical and Bibliographical Appendix. By Kenneth R. H. Mackenzie, F.S.A., with six coloured full-page Illustrations, and twenty-six Woodcuts, from original designs by Alfred Crowquill. Cloth gilt, pp. xix. and 255. 1860. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Oyster (The): Where, How, and When to Find, Breed, Cook, and Eat It. Second Edition, with a new chapter, 'The Oyster-Seeker in London.' 12mo. boards, pp. viii. and 106. 1863. 1*s.*

Page.—La Plata, the Argentine Confederation and Paraguay. Being a Narrative of the Exploration of the Tributaries of the River La Plata and adjacent countries during the years 1853, 1854, 1855, and 1856, under the orders of the United States Government. By Thomas J. Page U. S. N. Commander of the Expedition. With Map and numerous Engravings. New Edition. 8vo. cloth, pp. 632. £1 1*s.*

Palmer.—Egyptian Chronicles, with a Harmony of Sacred and Egyptian Chronology, and an Appendix on Babylonian and Assyrian Antiquities. By William Palmer, M.A., and late Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, pp. lxxiv. 428, viii. and 636. 1861. 42*s.*

Palmerston.—Lord Palmerston. By R. H. Reprinted from the Westminster Review for January, 1866. 8vo. sewed, pp. 36. 1866. 1*s.*

Pandit (The).—A Monthly Journal of Benares College, devoted to Sanskrit Literature. Vol. 1. Nos. 1 to 24, November, 1866, to May, 1868. Folio sewed, pp. 184. £2 8*s.*

The object of the Pandit is to publish rare Sanskrit works which appear worthy of careful editing hereafter; to offer a field for the discussion of controverted points in Old Indian Philosophy, Philology, History, and Literature; to communicate ideas between the Aryan scholars of the East and of the West; between the Pandits of Benares and Calcutta and the Sanskritists of the Universities of Europe.

The Journal, which will be enlarged as soon as the subscriptions cover the actual expenses of publication, will contain also Original Articles in Sanskrit and English, Critical Notices of new Sanskrit Books, and Translations from and into Sanskrit.

Annual subscription, 24*s.* Intending subscribers are requested to address the European Publishers.

Papers on Picture Flaying at the National Gallery. Reprinted from the Weekly Despatch. By an Artist. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 44. 1867. 1*s.*

Parker.—The Public Function of Woman. A Sermon preached at the Music Hall, March 27, 1853. By Theodore Parker. Post 8vo. sewed. 1855. 1*s.*

Parker.—The Collected Works of Theodore Parker, Minister of the Twenty-Eighth Congregational Society at Boston, U.S. Containing his Theological, Polemical, and Critical Writings; Sermons, Speeches, and Addresses; and Literary Miscellanies. Edited by Frances Power Cobbe. In 12 vols. 8vo., 1863 to 1865.

Vol. I. Containing Discourses on Matters pertaining to Religion; with Preface by the Editor, and a Portrait of Parker, from a medallion by Saulini. Cloth, pp. 380. 6*s.*
Vol. II. Containing Ten Sermons and Prayers. Cloth, pp. 360. 6*s.*
Vol. III. Containing Discourses of Religion. Cloth, pp. 318. 6*s.*
Vol. IV. Containing Discourses on Politics. Cloth, pp. 312. 6*s.*
Vol. V. Containing Discourses of Slavery, Vol. I. Cloth, pp. 336. 6*s.*
Vol. VI. Containing Discourses of Slavery, Vol. II. Cloth, pp. 323. 6*s.*
Vol. VII. Containing Discourses of Social Science. Cloth, pp. 296. 6*s.*
Vol. VIII. Contains Miscellaneous Discourses. Cloth, pp. 230. 6*s.*
Vol. IX. Containing Critical Writings, Vol. I. Cloth, pp. 292. 6*s.*
Vol. X. Containing Critical Writings, Vol. II. Cloth, pp. 308. 6*s.*
Vol. XI. Containing Sermons of Theism, Atheism, and Popular Theology. Cloth, pp. 257. 6*s.*
Vol. XII. Autobiographical and Miscellaneous pieces. Cloth, pp. 356. 6*s.*

Parker.—Lessons from the World of Matter and the World of Man; being Selections from the unpublished Sermons of Theodore Parker. By Rufus Leighton, and Edited by Frances Power Cobbe. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xix. and 332. 1865. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Parker.—The Critical Writings of Theodore Parker. Edited by Frances Power Cobbe. 2 vols. 8vo., cloth, pp. 600. 1864-5. 12*s.*

Parrish.—A Treatise on Pharmacy; designed as a Text Book for the Student, and as a Guide to the Physician and Pharmaceutist. Containing the official and many unofficial formulas, and many examples of extemporaneous prescriptions. By Edward Parrish, Professor of Materia Medica in the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy. Third Edition, revised with important additions. 238 illustrations. 8vo. cloth, pp. 850. £1 4*s.*

Partnership, with Limited Liability. Reprinted, with additions, from the Westminster Review. New Series, No. 8, October, 1853. Post 8vo., sewed, pp. 63. 1854. 1*s.*

Partridge.—The Making of the American Nation; or, the Rise and Decline of Oligarchy in the West. Showing how the American Nation and Democracy have been made, and what they are, with considerations on their tendency and destiny. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxxvii. and 523. 1866. 16*s.*

Partridge.—On Democracy. By J. Arthur Partridge. 8vo. cloth, pp. 418. 1866. 10*s.*

Parvula; or, a Few Little Rhymes about a Few Little Flowers, a Few Little Birds, and a Few Little Girls; to which are added a Few Little Songs, and a Few other Little Things, by Minimus. 18mo. cloth, pp. 192. 1864. 5*s.*

Patell. — Cowasjee Patell's Chronology, containing corresponding dates of the different eras used by Christians, Jews, Greeks, Hindus, Mohamedans, Parsees, Chinese, Japanese, etc. By Cowasjee Sorabjee Patell, 4to. cloth, pp. viii. and 183. 1866. £2 10*s.*

Paterson.—Treatise on Military Drawing. With a Course of 25 Progressive Plates. By Captain W. Paterson, Professor of Military Drawing at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. Oblong 4to. cloth, pp. xii. and 31. 1862. £1 1*s.*

Paton.—Researches on the Danube and the Adriatic; or, Contributions to the Modern History of Hungary and Transylvania, Dalmatia, and Croatia, Servia and Bulgaria. By A. A. Paton, F.R.G.S. In 2 vols. 12mo., cloth, pp. 830. 1861. 12*s.*

Paton.—A History of the Egyptian Revolution, from the Period of the Mamelukes to the Death of Mohammed Ali; from Arab and European Memoirs, Oral Tradition, and Local Research. By A. A. Paton, F.R.G.S., Author of "Researches on the Danube and the Adriatic." 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, pp. xii., 395, and viii. 352. 1863. £1 4*s.*

Paton.—Sketches of the Ugly Side of Human Nature. By A. A. Paton. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 302. 1868. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Percy. — Bishop Percy's Folio Manuscript — Ballads and Romances. Edited by John W. Hales, M.A., Fellow and late Assistant Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge; and Frederick J. Furnivall, M.A., of Trinity Hall, Cambridge; assisted by Professor Child, of Harvard University, U.S.A., W. Chappell, Esq., etc. In 3 vols. Vol. 1, pp. 610. Vol. 2, pp. 681. Vol. 3, pp. 640. Demy 8vo., half-bound, £2 2*s*. Extra demy 8vo., half-bound, on Whatman's ribbed paper, £3 15*s*. Extra royal 8vo., paper covers, on Whatman's best ribbed paper, £5 5*s*. Large 4to., paper covers, on Whatman's best ribbed paper, £10 10*s*.

Perrin.—An English-Zulu Dictionary. By J. Perrin. New Edition, revised by J. A. Brickhiel, Interpreter to the Supreme Court of Natal. 16mo. cloth, pp. 226. Pietermaritzburg. 1865. 5*s*.

Petöfi.—Poems, Selected from the Works of the Great Hungarian Bard, Alexander Petöfi. Translated from the Magyar, with a Biographical and Critical Introduction by Sir John Bowring, K.C.B., LL.D., etc., etc. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 239. 1866. 5*s*.

Petruccelli.—Preliminaires de la Question Romaine de M. Ed. About. Par F. Petruccelli de la Gattina. 8vo. cloth, pp. xv. and 364. 1860. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Petzholdt.—Bibliotheca Bibliographica. Kritisches Verzeichniss der das Gesammtgebiet der Bibliographie betreffenden Litteratur des In-und Auslandes. In Systematischer Ordnung bearbeitet von Dr. Julius Petzholdt. Mit Alphabetischem Namen-und Sachregister. Royal 8vo., paper covers, pp. 939. 1866. 12*s*.

Philological Society.—Proposals for the Publication of a New English Dictionary. 8vo. sewed, pp. 32. 1859. 6*d*.

Pick.—A New Method of Studying Foreign Languages. By Dr. Edward Pick. The French Language, Part 1, the Genders and Irregular Verbs. Part 2, New Method of Studying the Language. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 212. 1863. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Pick.—On Memory and the Rational Means of Improving It. By Dr. Edward Pick. Fourth Edition, with new Applications to the Study of the French and German Languages. Royal 18mo. cloth, pp. vi. and 20. 1866. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Pick.—On Memory. By Dr. Edward Pick. A Condensed Edition. Royal 18mo. limp, pp. 140. 1866. 1*s*. 6*d*.

Pickering.—The Geographical Distribution of Animals and Plants. By Charles Pickering, M.D. 4to. cloth, pp. 214. 1864. 15*s*.

Picture Flaying (Papers on) at the National Gallery. Reprinted from the Weekly Dispatch. By an Artist. 8vo. sewed, pp. 44. 1867. 1*s*.

Piggot.—Chemistry and Metallurgy, as applied to the study and practice of Dental Surgery. By A. Snowden Piggot, M.D., late Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in the Washington University of Baltimore. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo. cloth, pp. 516. 1854. 18*s*.

Piggot.—The Chemistry and Metallurgy of Copper, including a description of the principal Copper Mines of the United States and other countries, the art of mining and preparing ores for market, and the various processes of Copper Smelting, etc. By A. Snowden Piggot, M.D., Analytical and Consulting Chemist. With Illustrations. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 388. 1858. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Pilgrims of Fashion.—A Novel. By R. C. 8vo. pp. xvi. and 338. Cloth. 1862. 16*s.*

Pim.—The Negro and Jamaica. By Commander Bedford Pim, R.N. Read before the Anthropological Society of London, February 1st, 1866, at St. James's Hall. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. vii. and 32. 1866. 1*s.*

Pirazzi.—L'Angleterre et l'Allemagne à propos du Schleswig-Holstein. Par Emile Pirazzi. Mémoire envoyé à plusieurs membres du parlement Anglais et suivi d'un article à l'adresse du Times. 8vo. sewed, pp. 180. 1865. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Plain Papers.—By Pikestaff. Vol. I. 12mo. cloth, pp. vii. and 144. 1866. 3*s.*

Plumb-Line (The); or the True System of the Interpretation of Scripture. Also Queries on the Foregoing Subjects. 8vo. sewed, pp. iv. and 63. 1861. 1*s.*

Poe.—The Works of Edgar Allan Poe. In 4 vols., crown 8vo. cloth. Vol. 1, pp. lv. and 433. Vol. 2, pp. xxvi. and 495. Vol. 3, pp. 607. Vol. 4, pp. 447. 1866. £1 12*s.*

Policy of the Danish Government and the "Misunderstandings." A Key to the Budget Dispute. 8vo. sewed, pp. 74. 1861. 1*s.*

Political (The).—Problem of the Day. Mr. Gladstone the Man to Solve It. 8vo. sewed, pp. 21. 1865. 1*s.*

Ponsard.—Charlotte Corday. A Tragedy. By F. Ponsard. Edited with English Notes and Notice on Ponsard, by Professor C. Cassal, LL.D., of University College, London. 12mo. cloth, pp. xi. and 133. 1867. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Popes' Rights and Wrongs. An Historical Sketch. 12mo. cloth, pp. xiv. and 97. 1860. 2*s* 6*d.*

Popes (The).—Their Temporal Dominion and Infallibility. An Argument between a Lady and an Italian. 12mo. sewed, pp. 8. 2*d.*

Porcari.—The Senate of Rome and the Pope. S. P. Q. R. By Stephano Porcari. 8vo. sewed, pp. 30. 1867.

Powell.—A Working Man's View of Tennyson's "Enoch Arden." By J. H. Powell. 12mo. sewed, pp. 29. 1866. 6*d.*

Powell.—Life Incidents and Poetic Pictures. By J. H. Powell. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 264. 1865. 5*s.*

Preaching Suited to the Times. A Charge from Utopia. 16mo. sewed, pp. 39. 1865. 1*s.*

Preciosa; A Tale. Fcap. 8vo. cloth, pp. 326. 1852. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Prescott.—Life of William Hickling Prescott. By George Ticknor. 4to., pp. x. and 492. Printed on Toned Paper. With Portrait and Illustrations. Ornamental Binding, uncut. Gilt top. 1864. £1 16*s.*

Prescott.—Sir Rohan's Ghost. A Romance. By Miss Prescott. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. x. and 352. 1860. 5*s.*

Prescott.—History, Theory, and Practice of the Electric Telegraph. By George B. Prescott, Superintendent of Electric Telegraph Lines. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 468. 1860. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Priaulx.—Questiones Mosaicæ, or the First Part of the Book of Genesis, compared with the Remains of Ancient Religions. By Osmond de Beauvoir Priaulx. Second Edition, corrected and enlarged. 8vo. cloth, pp. vii. and 548. 1854. 12*s.*

Pritchard.—Admiralty Digest. A Digest of the Law and Practice of the High Court of Admiralty of England, with Notes from Text Writers, and the Scotch, Irish, and American Reports. By William Tarn Pritchard, Proctor in Doctors Commons. Second edition, omitting Prize and Slave Cases. By Robert A. Pritchard, D.C.L., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, and William Tarn Pritchard. With Notes of Cases from French Maritime Law. By Algernon Jones, Avocat à la Cour Impériale de Paris, in 2 vols. roy. 8vo. 1865. £3.

Probyn.—Essays on Italy, Ireland, and the United States of America. By John W. Probyn, Esq. 1 vol., crown 8vo. [In the press.

Pulszky.—Three Christmas Plays for Children. The Sleeper awakened. The Wonderful Bird. Crinolina. By Theresa Pulszky. With Music by Professor L. Jansa, and Illustrations by Charles Armytage. Square 12mo. pp. 130, cloth. 1859. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Quentin.—An Account of Paraguay. Its History, its People, and its Government. From the French of M. Ch. Quentin. 8vo. sewed, pp. 90. 1865. 1*s.*

Quinet.—Ultramontism; or, The Roman Church and Modern Society. By E. Quinet, of the College of France. Translated from the French (Third edition), with the Author's approbation. By C. Cocks, B.L. Post 8vo. pp. ix. and 184, cloth. 1845. 5*s.*

Raja-Niti.—A Collection of Hindu Apologues, in the Braj Bha'sha' Language. Revised Edition. With a Preface, Notes, and supplementary glossary. By Fitzedward Hall, Esq. 8vo. cloth, pp. 204. 1854. £1 1*s.*

Ram Raz.—Essay on the Architecture of the Hindus. By Ram Raz, Native Judge and Magistrate of Bangalore, Corresponding Member of the R.A.S. of Great Britain and Ireland. With 48 Plates. 4to., pp. xiv. and 64, sewed. 1834. Original selling price, £1 11*s.* 6*d.*, reduced (for a short time only) to 12*s.*

Randall.—Fine Wool Sheep Husbandry. By Henry S. Randall, LL.D. Read before the New York State Agricultural Society, February 12, 1862. With an Appendix, containing valuable statistics in reference to wool culture, imports, prices of fine wool from 1840 to August 1, 1863, etc. Small 8vo. cloth, pp. 190. 5*s.*

Randall.—The Practical Shepherd. A Complete Treatise on the Breeding, Management, and Diseases of Sheep. By Henry S. Randall, LL.D. With Illustrations. 8vo. cloth, pp. ix. and 454. 1864. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Rask.—Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Tongue, from the Danish of Erasmus Rask. By Benjamin Thorpe. Second edition, corrected and improved, with Plate. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 191. 1865. 5*s.* 6*d.*

Rask.—A Short Tractate on the Longevity ascribed to the Patriarchs in the Book of Genesis, and its relation to the Hebrew Chronology; the Flood, the Exodus of the Israelites, the Site of Eden, etc. From the Danish of the late Professor Rask; with his manuscript corrections, and large additions from his autograph, now for the first time printed. With a Map of Paradise and the circumjacent Lands. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 154. 1863. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Ravenstein.—The Russians on the Amur; its Discovery, Conquest, and Colonization, with a Description of the Country, its Inhabitants, Productions, and Commercial Capabilities, and Personal Accounts of Russian Travellers. By E. G. Ravenstein, F.R.G.S., Correspondent F.G.S. Frankfurt, with an Appendix on the Navigation of the Gulf of the Amur. By Captain Prutz. In one volume, 8vo., 500 pp. of Letter Press, 4 tinted Lithographs, and 3 Maps, cloth. 1861. 15*s.*

Ravenstein and Hulley.—The Gymnasium and its Fittings. By E. G. Ravenstein and John Hulley. With 14 Plates of Illustrations. 8vo. sewed, pp. 32. 1867. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Ravenstein and Hulley.—A Hand-book of Gymnastics and Athletics. By E. G. Ravenstein, F.R.G.S., etc., President of the German Gymnastic Society, London, and John Hulley, Gynmasiarch of Liverpool. With numerous Woodcut Illustrations from original designs. 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 408. 1867. 8*s.* 6*d.*

Rawlinson.—A Commentary on the Cuneiform Inscriptions of Babylonia and Assyria, including Readings of the Inscription on the Nimrud Obelisk; and a brief Notice of the ancient Kings of Nineveh and Babylon. Read before the Royal Asiatic Society, by Major H. C. Rawlinson. 8vo. pp. 84, sewed. London, 1850. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Rawlinson.—Outlines of Assyrian History, from the Inscriptions of Nineveh. By Lieut.-Colonel Rawlinson, C.B., followed by some Remarks, by A. H. Layard, Esq., D.C.L. 8vo. pp. xliv., sewed. 1852. 1*s.*

Read.—Poems. By Thomas Buchanan Read. Illustrated by Kenny Meadows. 12mo. cloth, pp. vii. and 275. 1852. 6*s.*

Reade—White Lies; a Story. By Charles Reade. In 3 volumes, 8vo., Vol. I., pp. 300; Vol. II., pp. 238; Vol. III., pp. 232. 1857. £1 1*s.*

Reade.—Cream. Contains "Jack of all Trades;" "A Matter-of-Fact Romance," and "The Autobiography of a Thief." By Charles Reade. 8vo. pp. 270. 1858. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Reade.—Love me Little, Love me Long. By Charles Reade. In 2 vols. post 8vo. Vol. I. pp. 390; Vol. II., pp. 35. 8vo. cloth. 1859. 21*s.*

Reade.—The Eighth Commandment. By Charles Reade. 8vo., pp. 380. 1860. 14*s.*

Reade.—The Cloister and the Hearth; a Tale of the Middle Ages. By Charles Reade. In four volumes. Third edition. Vol. I., pp. 360; Vol. II., pp. 376; Vol. III., pp. 328; Vol. IV., pp. 435. 1861. £1 11*s.* 6*d.*

The Same. Fourth edition. In 3 vols. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 328, 391, 338. 1862. 15*s.*

Reform.—Letter to the Right Honourable the Earl of Derby, on Political Reform. By One of the People. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 46. 1867. 1*s.*

Reiff.—English-Russian Grammar; or, Principles of the Russian Language for the Use of the English. With Synoptical Tables for the Declensions and Conjugations, Graduated Themes or Exercises for the Application of the Grammatical Rules, the Correct Construction of these Exercises, and the Accentuation of all the Russian Words. By Charles Philip Reiff. Third edition, carefully revised. 8vo. sewed, pp. viii. and 191. 1862. 6*s*.

Reiff.—Little Manual of the Russian Language. By Ch. Ph. Reiff. 12mo. sewed, pp. 80. 1863. 2*s*. 6*d*.

Renan.—An Essay on the Age and Antiquity of the Book of Nabathæan Agriculture To which is added, an Inaugural Lecture on the Position of the Shemitic Nations in the History of Civilization. By M. Ernest Renan, Membre de l'Institut. In 1 Vol., crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xvi. and 148. 1862. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Renan.—The Life of Jesus. By Ernest Renan. Authorised English Translation. 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 311. 1864. 10*s*. 6*d*.

Ditto. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 311. 1864. 2*s*. 6*d*.

Ditto. Crown 8vo. paper, pp. xii. and 311. New edition. 1867. 1*s*. 6*d*.

Report of the Committee Appointed by the Conference of Members of the Reform League and Others on Mr. Hare's Scheme of Representation, held at their Rooms, on 28th February, and 7th and 21st March, 1868. 8vo. 1*s*.

Report of the Sub-Committee of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Association for watching the war limitation of the supply of grain by the past action of British Diplomacy. 8vo. sewed, pp. 24. 1855. 1*s*.

Revised Army Regulations.—Vol. I. Royal Warrant for the Pay and Promotion, Non-Effective, Pay and Allowances of Majesty's British Forces serving elsewhere than in India. To which are added Instructions to Commanding and Financial Officers. Part I. Pay dated February 3rd, 1866. 8vo. sewed, pp. 182. 1866. 1*s*.

Revolt (The) of Reason against the Revealed. In One Volume, 8vo. (Shortly).

Reynard the Fox; after the German Version of Göthe. By Thomas J. Arnold, Esq.

> "Fair jester's humour and ready wit > Never offend, though smartly they hit."

With Seventy Illustrations, after the designs of Wilhelm Von Kaulbach. Royal 8vo. pp. vi. 226. Printed by Clay, on toned paper, and elegantly bound in embossed cloth, with appropriate design after Kaulbach; richly tooled front and back. Price 16s. Best full morocco, same pattern. Price 24*s*.; or, neatly half-bound morocco, gilt top, uncut edges, Roxburgh style. 1860. Price 18*s*.

Richard Cobden, Roi des Belges. Par un Ex-Colonel de la Garde Civique. Dédié aux blessés de Septembre. Deuxième édition. Crown 8vo. sewed, pp. 64. 1863. 2*s*. 6*d*.

Richter.—Titan; A Romance. From the German of Jean Paul Friedrich Richter. Translated by Charles T. Brooks. 2 vols. 12mo. cloth pp. xv., 522, and v., 521. 1863. 18*s*.

Richter.—Flower, Fruit, and Thorn Pieces; or, the Married Life, Death, and Wedding of the Advocate of the Poor, Firmian Stanislaus Siebenkäs. By Jean Paul Friedrich Richter. Translated from the German, by Edward Henry Noel. With a Memoir of the Author. By Thomas Carlyle. In two volumes. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. 361, and v. 345. 1863. 21*s.*

Richter.—Levana; or, the Doctrine of Education. Translated from the German of Jean Paul Friedrich Richter. 12mo. cloth, pp. xvii and 400. 1864. 10*s.*

Richter.—Life of Jean Paul Friedrich Richter, compiled from various sources. Preceded by his Autobiography. By Eliza Buckminster Lee. 12mo. cloth, pp. xvi. and 539. 1864. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Richter.—Hesperus; or, Forty-Five Dog-Post Days. A Biography, from the German of Jean Paul Friedrich Richter. Translated by Charles T. Brooks. 2 vols. 12mo. cloth, pp. xxviii. 498, and v. 478. 1865. 21*s.*

Riddell.—The Carpenter and Joiner, and Elements of Hand-railing. By Robert Riddell. With 32 Plates. Folio cloth, pp. 26. 1868. £1 1*s.*

Rights (The) of Neutrals and Belligerents. From a modern point of view. By a Civilian. 8vo. sewed, pp. 42. 1862. 1*s.*

Rig-Veda-Sanhita (The). The Sacred Hymns of the Brahmins, as preserved to us in the oldest collection of Religious Poetry. The Rig-Veda-Sanhita, translated and explained. By Max Müller, M.A., Taylorian Professor of Modern European Languages in the University of Oxford, Fellow of All Soul's College. In 4 vols., 8vo. [Vol. I. in the press.

Rig-Veda Sanhita.—A Collection of Ancient Hindú Hymns, constituting the first Aslitáka, or Book, of the Rig-Veda, the oldest authority for the religious and social institutions of the Hindús. Translated from the original Sanskrit. By the late H. H. Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., etc., late Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford. With a postscript, by Dr. Fitzedward Hall. Vol. I., 8vo. cloth, pp. lii. and 348. 1868. £1 1*s.*

Rig-Veda Sanhita.—A Collection of Ancient Hindú Hymns, constituting the second Ashtáka, or Book, of the Rig-Veda; the oldest authority for the religious and social institutions of the Hindús. Translated from the original Sanskrit. By the late H. H. Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., late Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford. Vol. II. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxx. and 346. 1854. 21*s.*

Rig-Veda Sanhita.—A Collection of Ancient Hindú Hymns, constituting the third and fourth Ashtákas, or Books, of the Rig-Veda; the oldest authority for the religious and social institutions of the Hindús. Translated from the original Sanskrit. By the late H. H. Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., late Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford. Vol. III. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxiv. and 525. 1857. 21*s.*

Rig-Veda Sanhita.—A Collection of Ancient Hindú Hymns, constituting the first Ashtáka, or Book, of the Rig-Veda; the oldest authority for the religious and social institutions of the Hindus. Translated from the original Sanskrit by the late H. H. Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., etc., late Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford. Edited by E. B. Cowell, M.A., late Principal of the Sanskrit College, Calcutta, and now Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Cambridge. Vol. IV. 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 314. 1866. 14*s.*

Riley.—Mediæval Chronicles of the City of London.—Chronicles of the Mayors and Sheriffs of London, and the Events which happened in their Days, from the Year A.D. 1188 to A.D. 1274. Translated from the original Latin of the "Liber de Antiquis Legibus" (published by the Camden Society), in the possession of the Corporation of the City of London; attributed to Arnold Fitz-Thedmar, Alderman of London in the Reign of Henry III.—Chronicles of London, and of the Marvels therein, between the Years 44 Henry III., A.D. 1260, and 17 Edward III., A.D. 1343. Translated from the original Anglo-Norman of the "Croniques de London," preserved in the Cottonian Collection (Cleopatra A. iv.) in the British Museum. Translated, with copious Notes and Appendices, by Henry Thomas Riley, M.A., Clare Hall, Cambridge; of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. The Two Parts bound in one handsome Volume. 4to. cloth, pp. xii. and 319. 1863. 1*l.* 7*s.*

Ditto. Morocco, gilt edges, pp. xii. and 319. 1863. £1 1*s.*

Ditto. Vellum, red edges, pp. xii. and 319. 1863. £1 1*s.*

Ripley.—Sacred Rhetoric; or, Composition and Delivery of Sermons. By Henry I. Ripley, Professor of Sacred Rhetoric and Pastoral Duties in Newton Theological Institute. To which are added, Hints on Extemporaneous Preaching. By Henry Ware, Jun., D.D. 12mo. cloth, pp. 234. 1858. 2*s.* 6*d.*

River Plate (The). (South America), as a Field for Emigration; its Geography, Climate, Agricultural Capabilities, and the Facilities afforded for permanent Settlement. With Maps, Third edition. Revised by the Legation of the Argentine Republic. 8vo. pp. 60, sewed. 1867. 1*s.*

Robertson.—Priestcraft. By F. Robertson, F.R., Astron. Soc., late of Royal Engineers. Part I. 8vo. cloth. Second edition, pp. 181. 1867. 4*s.*

Robertson.—An Exposition of the Book of Genesis. By F. Robertson, F.R.A.S., late Royal Engineers, author of "Priestcraft," etc. 8vo. boards, pp. viii. and 262. 1868. 5*s.*

Robinet.—Notice sur les Travaux et la Vie D'Auguste Comte. Par le Dr. Robinet. 8*s.*

Roche.—Histoire de France; Depuis les Temps les Plus Reculés. par Antonin Roche. Troisième edition. Two volumes, 12mo. sewed, pp. vii. 504 and 519. 1867. 7*s.*

Roche.—English Prose and Poetry. Materials for Translation from English into French. By Antonin Roche. 12mo. cloth, pp. xi. 368. 1867. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Roche.—Abrégé de la Grammaire Française. Par Antonin Roche, ouvrage dont l'introduction dans les Ecoles publiques a été autorisée par arrêté du Ministre de l'Instruction publique. 12mo., pp. vi. and 132. 1861. 1*s.*

Roche.—Corrigé de la Syntaxe des Exercises sur la Grammaire Française. Par Antonin Roche, Directeur de l'Educational Institute de Londres, Chevalier de la Légion d'honneur. 3rd éd. 12mo., pp. 140. 1*s.*

Roche.—Exercices sur l'Abrégé de la Grammaire Française. Par Antonin Roche, Chevalier de la Légion d'honneur. 2nd éd. 12mo., pp. vi. and 140. 1*s.*

Roche.—Exercices sur la Grammaire Française. Par Antonin Roche. 12mo., pp. iv. and 244. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Roche.—Grammaire Française, Ouvrage adopté pour les Ecoles publiques par arrête du Ministre de l'Instruction publique en date du 22 Août, 1859. Par Antonin Roche, Directeur de l'Educational Institute de Londres, Chevalier de la Légion d'honneur. 5th éd. 12mo., pp. 208. 1*s* 6*d*.

Roche.—Histoire des Principaux Ecrivains Français, depuis l'origine de la Littérature jusqu'à nos jours, par Antonin Roche, Directeur de l'Educational Institute de Londres. 2 vols. 12mo. pp. 700. 1863. 6*s*.

Roche.—Les Poëtes Français, Recueil de morceaux, choisis dans les meilleurs poëtes depuis l'origine de la littérature française jusqu'à nos jours, avec une notice biographique sur chaque auteur, par Antonin Roche, Directeur de l'Educational Institute de Londres, Chevalier de la Légion d'honneur 7th éd. augmentée. 12mo. pp. 532. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Roche.—Les Prosateurs Français, Recueil de morceaux choisis dans les meilleurs prosateurs depuis l'origine de la littérature française jusqu'à nos jours avec une notice biographique sur chaque auteur par Antonin Roche. Directeur de l'Educational Institute de Londres, Chevalier de la Légion d'honneur. 8th éd. augmentée. 12mo. pp. 544. 1867. 4*s*.

Ronge.—The Autobiography and Justification of Johannes Ronge (the German reformer), translated from the fifth German edition, by John Lord, A.M. 12mo. sewed, pp. x. and 84. 1856. 1*s*. 6*d*.

Rowley.—A Paper upon the Egg of Æpyornis Maximus, the Colossal Bird of Madagascar. By George Dawson Rowley, M.A. 8vo. sewed, pp. 15. 1864. 1*s*.

Rowley.—The Remains of Man and Extinct Mammalian Fauna, found in Eynesbury, near St. Neots, Huntingdonshire. By George Dawson Rowley, M.A., F.Z.S. 8vo. sewed, pp. 15. 1866. 1*s*.

Russia, Central Asia, and British India. By a British Subject. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 48. 1865. 1*s*.

Saint Petersburg, Sights of, Book First; Fact, Feeling, and Fi[illegible] Wahrheit und Dichtung. 8vo. pp. 76, sewed. 1860. 2*s*. 6*d*.

Sa[illegible] The [illegible]tion, r[illegible]—Elements of Art Criticism, comprising a Treatise on the l[illegible]les of Man's Nature as addressed by Art; together with a Historic Sur-v[illegible]—Ca[illegible]he Methods of Art-Execution in the departments of Drawing, Sculpture, Ar[illegible]apita[illegible]ture, Painting, Landscape Gardening, and the Decorative Arts. Designed as a [illegible]1858.-book for Schools and Colleges, and as a Handbook for Amateurs and Artists. By G. W. Samson, D.D., President of Columbia College, Washington D.C. 8vo. cloth, pp. 840. 1867. 16*s*.

Sand.—Molière. A Drama in prose. By George Sand. Edited, with English Notes and Notice on George Sand, by Theodore Karcher, LL.B., of the Royal Military Academy and the University of London. 12mo. pp. xx. and 170, cloth. 1868. 3*s*. 6*d*.

Sanitary Condition of New York. Report of the Council of Hygiene and Public Health of the Citizens' Association of New York, upon the Sanitary Condition of the City. Published, with an Introductory Statement, by Order of the Council of the Citizen's Association. 8vo. cloth, pp. cxliii. and 360. Maps, Plates. 1865. 25*s*.

Sanitary "Reform." "A Model Deputation!" By A Member of the Sanitary Reform Association. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 8. 1866. 3*d*.

Santorin, THE KAIMENI ISLANDS. From Observations by K. von Fritsch, W. Reiss, and A. Stübel. Translated from the German. With 4 Photographic Maps. Folio, sewed, pp. 8. 1867. 16*s.*

Sartorius.—MEXICO. Landscapes and Popular Sketches. By C. Sartorius. Edited by Dr. Gaspey, with Engravings by distinguished Artists, from original Sketches, by Moritz Rugendas. 4to. cloth gilt, pp. vi. and 202. 1859. 18*s.*

Saxe.—THE MASQUERADE and other Poems. By John Godfrey Saxe. 12mo. cloth, pp. vii. and 237. 1866. 5*s.*

Saxe.—THE POEMS OF JOHN GODFREY SAXE. Complete in one volume. Crown 8vo. cloth, gilt top, pp. xii. and 466. With a portrait of the author. 1868. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Scandinavia AND GREAT BRITAIN, Comparative List of the Birds of. Small Folio, pp. 18, sewed. 1859. 1*s.*

Scanzoni.—A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the Diseases of the Sexual Organs of Women. By Professor F. W. Von Scanzoni. Translated by A. K. Gardner. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxi. and 669. 1861. 25*s.*

Sceptic.—AN EXPOSITION OF SPIRITUALISM; comprising two Series of Letters, and a Review of the "Spiritual Magazine," No. 20. As published in in the "Star and Dial." With Introduction, Notes, and Appendix. By Sceptic. 8vo. cloth, pp. 330. 1862. 6*s.*

Schefer.—THE BISHOP'S WIFE. A Tale of the Papacy. Translated from the German of Leopold Schefer. By Mrs. J. R. Stodart. 12mo. cloth, pp. 200. 1851. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Schefer.—THE ARTIST'S MARRIED LIFE: being that of Albert Dürer. For devout Disciples of the Arts, Prudent Maidens, as well as for the Profit and Instruction of all Christendom, given to the light. Translated from the German of Leopold Schefer, by Mrs. J. R. Stodart. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 98. 1853. 1*s.*

Schefer.—THE LAYMAN'S BREVIARY; or, Meditations for Every-day in the Year. From the German of Leopold Schefer. By C. T. Brookes. Square, cloth, gilt, pp. iv. and 452. With a portrait of the author. 1867. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Schoelcher.—DANGERS TO ENGLAND OF THE ALLIANCE WITH THE MEN OF THE COUP-D'ETAT. By Victor Schoelcher, Representative of the People. 12mo., sewed, pp. 190. 1854. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Schimmelfennig.—THE WAR BETWEEN TURKEY AND RUSSIA. A Military Sketch. By A. Schimmelfennig. 8vo. sewed, pp. 68. 1854.

Schlagintweit.—BUDDHISM IN TIBET: Illustrated by Literary Documents and Objects of Religious Worship. With an Account of the Buddhist Systems preceding it in India. By Emil Schlagintweit, LL.D. With a folio Atlas of 20 Plates, and 20 Tables of Native print in the Text. Royal 8vo., pp. xxiv. and 404. 1863. £2 2*s.*

Schlagintweit.—GLOSSARY OF GEOGRAPHICAL TERMS from India and Tibet, with Native Transcription and Transliteration. By Hermann de Schlagintweit. Forming, with a "Route Book of the Western Himalaya, Tibet, and Turkistan," the Third Volume of H., A., and R. de Schlagintweit's "Results of a Scientific Mission to India and High Asia." With an Atlas, in imperial folio, of Maps, Panoramas, and Views. Royal 4to., pp. xxiv. and 295. 1863. £4.

Schlagintweit.—Results of a Scientific Mission to India and High Asia. By Hermann, Adolphe, and Robert de Schlagintweit; undertaken between the years 1854 and 1858, by Order of the Court of Directors of the Honourable East India Company.

The Work will consist of Nine Volumes of Scientific Text, and of an Atlas, in Three Volumes Folio, containing Views and Maps, with explanatory Letterpress.

Her Majesty Queen Victoria has been most graciously pleased to accept the Dedication of the Atlas.

Vols. I. to IV. now ready (Text in 4to., Atlas in folio). 1861—1866. £4 4*s.* each.

Intending Subscribers may obtain Prospectuses, and every information required, of the Publishers.

Schvarcz.—The Failure of Geological attempts made by the Greeks from the Earliest Ages down to the Epoch of Alexander. By Julius Schvarcz, F.G.S. Revised and enlarged edition. 4to. pp. xx. and 154, cloth. 1868. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Sclater.—Catalogue of a Collection of American Birds belonging to Mr. Philip Lutley Sclater, M.A., Th. Doc. F.R.S., Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford; Secretary to the Zoological Society of London; Editor of "The Ibis." 8vo., pp. 354, and 20 coloured Plates of Birds, cloth. 1862. £1 10*s.*

Scott.—Memoirs of Lieut.-General Winfield Scott, LL.D., late Commander-in-Chief of the United States Forces. Written by Himself. With two Portraits. 2 vols. crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xxii. 330 and 653. 1864. 16*s.*

Scully.—Brazil; its Provinces and Chief Cities; the Manners and Customs of the People; Agricultural, Commercial, and other Statistics, taken from the latest Official Documents; with a variety of useful and entertaining knowledge, both for the Merchant and Emigrant. By William Scully, editor of the "Anglo-Brazilian Times." Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 398. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Seabridge.—Connected Poems. By Charles Seabridge. 18mo. cloth, pp. 138. 1866. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Serf (The) and the Cossack; or, Internal State of Russia. Second edition, revised and enlarged. 12mo., sewed, pp. 48. 1854. 6*d.*

Seyd.—California and its Resources. A Work for the Merchant, the Capitalist, and the Emigrant. By Ernest Seyd. 8vo. cloth, plates, pp. 168. 1858. 8*s.* 6*d.*

Shapurji Edalji.—A Dictionary, Gujarátí and English. By Shapurji Edalji. Second edition. 8vo. cloth, pp. xxiv. and 874. 1868. £1 1*s.*

Shapurji Edalji.—A Grammar of the Gujarátí Language. By Shapurji Edalji. 12mo. cloth, pp, 128. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Shaw.—Odontalgia, commonly called Tooth-Ache; its Causes, Prevention and Cure. By S. Parsons Shaw. 12mo. pp. xi. and 258, cloth. 1868. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Sherring.—The Sacred City of the Hindus: an Account of Benares in Ancient and Modern Times. By the Rev. M. A. Sherring, A.M, LL.B., and prefaced with an Introduction by Fitz-Edward Hall, Esq., D.C.L. Shortly. In a handsome 8vo. Volume of about 300 pages, with 10 Full-page Woodcut Illustrations from Photographs. Pp. xxxvi. and 388, cloth. 1868. 21*s.*

Simon.—The Ministry of Original Words in Asserting and Defending the Truth. By B. A. Simon. 8vo. cloth pp. 123. 1865. 4*s.*

Simonides.—Διόκλεους δαμόρου τοῦ καρυστιθοῦ ἡ περὶ ὑγιεινῶν ἐπιστόλη, καὶ Τροφίλου πραξιάδου ὑλλαρίμεως ἐειψάνα. (Diokles' Letter on Hygiene and Trophilus Recipes. Edited by Dr. Const. Simonides). Square 12mo. pp. 24, sewed. 1865. 1*s.*

Simonides.—Ἐπιστολίμαια περὶ ἱερογλυφικῶν γραμματῶν διατρίβε. (A brief Dissertation on Hieroglyphic Letters. By Constantine Simonides, Ph. D.) 8vo. pp. 58, sewed. 1863. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Simonides.—Ὀρθοδοξῶν ἑλληνῶν θεολόγικαί γραφαὶ τεσσάρες. (A. Nikolaos, Bishop of Mothone; B. Genniadios, Archbishop of Constantinople; C. Gregorios, Archbishop of Thessalonich; D. Georgios Kressios). Edited by Constantine Simonides, Ph. D. 8vo. pp. 240, cloth (with portrait of Nicolaos). 1865. 10*s.*

Simonides.—Concerning Horus of Nilopolis, the Hierogrammatist of his native place, son of Amonthis and Thessais. With notices of his works. By Constantine Simonides, Ph. D. 4to. pp. 16, sewed. 1863. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Simonides.—Fac-Similes of Certain Portions of the Gospel of St. Matthew, and of the Epistles of St. James and Jude. Written on Papyrus in the first century, and preserved in the Egyptian Museum of Joseph Mayer, Esq., Liverpool. Edited and annotated, etc., etc., by Constantine Simonides, Ph. D. Folio, pp. 80, with numerous fac-similes, sewed. 1862. £1 11*s.* 6*d.*

Simonides.—Report of the Council of the Royal Society of Literature on some of the Mayer Papyri and the Palimpsest MS. of Uranius belonging to M. Simonides. With Letters from MM. Pertz, Ehrenberg, and Dindorf. 8vo. pp. 27, sewed. 1863. 1*s.*

Simonides.—The Periplus of Hannon, King of the Karchedonians. Concerning the Lybian part of the Earth beyond the Pillars of Heracles, which is dedicated to Kronos, the greatest God, and to all the Gods dwelling with him. 4to. pp. 82, and two fac-similes, sewed. 1864. 10*s.*

Simpson.—An Introduction to the Philosophy of Shakespeare's Sonnets. By Richard Simpson. Crown 8vo. pp. 8vo, cloth. 1868. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Smart.—An Address to Soldiers on Leaving England for Foreign Service. By Newton Smart, M.A. Sixth edition. 12mo. pp. 30. 1866. 3*d.*

Smith.—Reviews and Essays for the Million, from Genesis to Revelations. By Brooke Smith, Esq., Stoke Bishop, Gloucestershire. Fcap. 8vo. pp. 160, cloth. 1868. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Smith.—Local Self-Government and Centralization. The Characteristics of each; and its Practical Tendencies as affecting Social, Moral, and Political Welfare and Progress. Including Comprehensive Outlines of the English Constitution. With copious Index. By J. Toulmin Smith, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 409. 1851. 5*s.*

Smith.—Social Aspects. By John Stores Smith, author of "Mirabeau," a Life History. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 258. 1850. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Smith.—The Common Nature of Epidemics; also Remarks on Contagion and Quarantine. By Southwood Smith, M.D. 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 130. 1866. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Smith.—The Divine Government. By Southwood Smith, M.D. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 276. 1866. 6*s.*

Solling.—Diutiska: an Historical and Critical Survey of the Literature of Germany, from the Earliest Period to the death of Göthe. By Gustav Solling. 8vo. pp. xviii. and 368. 1863. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Solling.—Select Passages from the Works of Shakespeare. Translated and Collected. German and English. By Gustav Solling. 12mo. cloth, pp. 155. 1866. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Somerset.—Une certaine d'inventions, ouvrage écrit en 1655, par Edouard Somerset, Marquis de Worcester, traduit en Français pour la première fois, sur la texte de la première edition (Londres, 1663), et édité par Henry Dircks, C.E., LL.D., F.R.S.E. M.R.S.L., etc., auteur de "The Life of the Marquis of Worcester," "Worcesteriana," etc., etc. 12mo. pp. 62, sewed, 1868. 1*s.*

Somerville.—Eros. A Series of Connected Poems. By Lorenzo Somerville. 18mo. cloth, pp. 142. 1866. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Sophocles.—A Glossary of Later and Byzantine Greek. By E. A. Sophocles. 4to., pp. iv. and 624. 1860. £2 8*s.*

Sophocles.—Romaic, or Modern Greek Grammar. By E. A. Sophocles. 8vo., half-bound, pp. xxviii. and 196. 1866. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Spaggiari.—A Latin, English, Italian, and Polyglot Anthology, with a variety of Translations and Illustrations. To be published once a year; designed to contribute to the cause of classical learning, as well as to forward the cultivation of the English language and literature in Italy, and that of the Italian in Great Britain, America, and Australia. Edited by John Spaggiari. Oct. 1861. No. 1, oblong 4to, sewed, pp. 10. 1831. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Spear.—On the Position of Women. By Mrs. J. H. Spear. 12mo. limp, pp. 37. 1866. 1*s.*

Spellen.—The Inner Life of the House of Commons. By J. N. Spellen. 12mo. sewed. 1854. 6*d.*

Spinoza's Tractatus Theologico-Politicus: A Critical Inquiry into the History, Purpose, and Authenticity of the Hebrew Scriptures; with the Right to Free Thought and Free Discussion asserted, and shown to be not only consistent, but necessarily bound up with True Piety and Good Government. By Benedict de Spinoza. From the Latin. With an Introduction and Notes by the Editor. 8vo. cloth, pp. 386. 1862. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Spinoza.—Tractatus Theologico-politicus. A Theological and Political Treatise in a Series of Essays, showing that freedom of thought and of discussion may not only be granted with safety to religion and the peace of the state, but that both the public peace and piety are endangered when such freedom is denied. By Benedict de Spinoza. From the Latin, with an introduction and note by the Editor. Second edition, revised and corrected. 8vo. pp. 360. (In the press).

Spruner.—Dr. Karl Von Spruner's Historico-Geographical Hand-Atlas, containing 26 Coloured Maps engraved on copper, 22 of which are devoted to the General History of Europe, and 4 are specially illustrative of the History of the British Isles. Oblong, cloth-lettered, 15*s.*, or half-bound morocco. 1861. £1 1*s.*

Stevens.—Seasoning for a Seasoner; or, the New Gradus ad Parnassum; a Satire. By Brook B. Stevens. 8vo. cloth, pp. 48. 1861. 3*s.*

Stewart.—Sorghum and its Products. An account of recent investigations concerning the value of sorghum in sugar production, together with a description of a new method of making sugar and refined syrup from this plant. Adapted to common use, by F. L. Stewart. Post 8vo. pp. xiv. and 240, cloth. 1867. 6*s.*

Stille.—Therapeutics and Materia Medica: a Sytematic Treatise on the Action and Uses of Medicinal Agents. By Alfred Stillé, M.D. Second Edition, revised, 2 vols. 8vo., cloth, pp. xv. 776, and viii. 819. 1864. £2 8*s.*

Stoddard.—Grammar of the Modern Syriac Language as spoken in Oroomah, Persia, and in Koordistan. By Rev. D. T. Stoddard. 8vo. boards, pp. 180. 1865. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Storer.—First Outlines of a Dictionary of Solubilities of Chemical Substances. By Frank H. Storer. Indispensable to the practical chemist. Royal 8vo. cloth, pp. xi. and 713. 1864. £1 11*s.* 6*d.*

Story.—Commentaries on the Law of Promissory Notes, and Guaranties of Notes, and Cheques on Banks and Bankers. With occasional illustrations from the commercial law of the nations of continental Europe. By Joseph Story, LL.D., one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and Dane Professor of Law in Harvard University. 8vo. pp. xliv. and 740. 1868. £1 11*s.* 6*d.*

Story.—Life and Letters of Joseph Story, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and Dane Professor of Law at Harvard University. Edited by his Son William W. Story. 2 vols., royal 8vo. cloth, pp. xx. and 1,250. 1851. £1.

Story.—The American Question. By William W. Story. 8vo. sewed pp. 68. 1862. 1*s.*

Stourton.—Postage Stamp Forgeries; or, the Collector's Vade Mecum. Containing accurate descriptions of nearly 700 Forgeries, exclusive of Essays and chymically changed Stamps. By J. M. Stourton. 12mo, sewed, pp. viii. and 66. 1865. 1*s.*

Stratmann.—A Dictionary of the English Language, compiled from the writings of the 13th, 14th, and 15th Centuries, by Francis Henry Stratmann. 8vo. cloth, pp. x. and 694. 1867. 25*s.*

Stratmann.—An Old English Poem of the Owl and the Nightingale. Edited by Francis Henry Stratmann. 8vo. cloth, pp. 60. 1868. 3*s.*

Strauss.—The Opinions of Professor David F. Strauss, as embodied in his Letter to the Burgomaster Hinzel, Professor Orelli, and Professor Hizig at Zürich. With an Address to the People of Zurich. By Professor Orelli. Translated from the Second Edition of the original. 8vo. sewed. pp. 31. 1844. 1*s.*

Sue.—The Rival Races; or the Sons of Joel. A Legendary Romance. By Eugène Sue. 3 vols., post 8vo. cloth. 1863. £1 11*s* 6*d*.

Sullivant.—Icones Muscorum, or Figures and Descriptions of most of those Mosses peculiar to Eastern North America, which have not been heretofore figured. By William S. Sullivant, LL.D. With 129 copper-plates. 8vo. pp. 216, cloth. 1864. £4 4*s*.

Sullivant.—United States Exploring Expedition, during the years 1838, 1839, 1840, 1841, 1842, under the command of Charles Wilkes, United States Navy. Botany. Musci. By William S. Sullivant. Folio, pp. 32. With 26 folio plates, half morocco. 1859. £10 10*s*.

Surya Siddhânta, (Translation of the); a Text-Book of Hindu Astronomy; with Notes, and an Appendix, containing additional notes and tables, calculations of eclipses, a stellar map, and indexes. By Rev. Ebenezer Burgess, formerly missionary of the A.B.C.F.M. in India; assisted by the committee of publication of the American Oriental Society. 8vo. pp. iii. and 356, Boards. 1860. 15*s*.

Swaab.—Fibrous Substances—Indigenous and Exotic: their Nature, Varieties, and Treatment, considered with a view to render them further useful for Textile and other purposes. By S. L. Swaab. 8vo, sewed, pp. 56. 1864. 2*s*.

Swanwick.—Selections from the Dramas of Goethe and Schiller. Translated with Introductory Remarks, by Anna Swanwick. 8vo. cloth, pp. xvi. and 290. 1846. 6*s*.

Taft.—A Practical Treatise on Operative Dentistry. By J. Taft, Professor of Operative Dentistry in the Ohio College of Dental Surgery. 8vo. pp. 384. With 80 illustrations. Cloth. 1859. 15*s*.

Taney.—Habeas Corpus. The Proceedings in the Case of John Merryman, of Baltimore County, Maryland, before the Honourable Roger Brooke Taney, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. 8vo. sewed, pp. 24. 1861. 1*s*.

Tayler.—A Retrospect of the Religious Life of England or, the Church, Puritanism, and Free Inquiry. By J. J. Taylor, B.A. New Revised Edition. Large post 8vo., cloth, pp. xii. and 330. 1853. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Taylor.—Taylor's System of Shorthand Writing. Edited by Matthias Levy, author of "The History of Shorthand Writing." 8vo. pp. iv. and 16, limp cloth. 1862. 1*s*. 6*d*.

Taylor.—The Claim of Englishwomen to the Suffrage Constitutionally considered. By Helen Taylor. Reprinted from the "Westminster Review." 8vo. pp. 16, sewed. 1867. 1*d*.

Taylor.—The Picture of St. John. By Bayard Taylor. 12mo cloth, pp. vii. and 220. 1866. 7*s*. 6*d*.

Taylor.—The Poems of Bayard Taylor. Portrait. Blue and Gold Series. Third Series. 24mo. cloth, gilt edges, pp. viii. and 419. 1865. 5*s*.

Technological Dictionary: French—German—English; containing the Technical Terms used in Arts and Trades, Civil, Military, and Naval Architecture, Bridges and Roads, Railways, Mechanics, construction of Machines, Artillery, Navigation, Mines and Smelting Works, Mathematics, Physics, Chemistry, Mineralogy, etc., etc. Edited by C. Rumpf and O. Mothes; preceded by a Preface by Charles Karmarsch, Chief Director of the Polytechnic School of Hanover. In one vol. 8vo. pp. vi. and 590, cloth. 1868. 10s. 6d.

Terrien and Saxton.—Liberien hag Avielen; or, the Catholic Epistles and Gospels for the day up to Ascension. Translated for the first time into the Brehonec of Brittany. Also, in three parallel columns, a new version of the same Breizouner (commonly called Breton and Armorican); a version into Welsh, mostly new and closely resembling the Breton; and a version Gaelic, or Manx, or Cernaweg, with illustrative articles, by Christoll Terrien and Charles Waring Saxton, D.D., Christ Church, Oxford. The penitential psalms are also added. Oblong Folio, pp. 156, sewed. 1868. 5s.

Tetraglot.—New Universal Dictionary of the English, French, Italian, and German Languages arranged after a new system. Small 8vo. cloth. 7s. 6d.

Texas Almanac (The) for 1868, with Federal and State Statistics; historical, descriptive, and biographical sketches, etc., relating to Texas. 8vo. pp. 314, sewed. 1868. 3s.

Theâtre Français Moderne. A Selection of Modern French Plays; Edited by the Rev. P. H. Ernest Brette, B.D., Head Master of the French School in Christ's Hospital; Charles Cassal, LL.D., Professor in University College, London; and Theodore Karcher, LL.B., of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich; former and present examiners in the University of London, and for the Civil Service of India. First Series, in one vol. crown 8vo. cloth. 6s. Containing:—

Charlotte Corday, a Tragedy. By F. Ponsard. Edited with English Notes and Notice on Ponsard, by Professor C. Cassal, LL.D. of University College, London. Pp. xii. and 134.

Diane, a Drama in verse. By Emile Augier. Edited with English Notes and Notice on Augier, by Theodore Karcher, LL.B., of the Royal Military Academy and the University of London. Pp. xiv. and 145.

Le Voyage à Dieppe, a Comedy in prose. By Wafflard and Fulgence. Edited, with English Notes, by the Rev. P. H. Ernest Brette, B.D., of Christ's Hospital and the University of London. Pp. 104.

The Boke of Nurture. By John Russell, about 1460—1470 Anno Domini. The Boke of Kernynge. By Wynkyn de Worde, Anno Domini 1513. The Boke of Nurture. By Hugh Rhodes, Anno Domini 1577. Edited from the Originals in the British Museum Library, by Frederick J. Furnivall, M.A., Trinity Hall, Cambridge, Member of Council of the Philological and Early English Text Societies. 4to. half-morocco, gilt top, pp. xix. and 146, 28, xxviii. and 56. 1867. £1 11s. 6d.

The Derbyites and the Coalition. Parliamentary Sketches. Being a second edition of the "History of the Session 1852—1853." 12mo. pp. 222, cloth. 1854. 2s. 6d.

The True Interpretation of the American Civil War, and of England's Cotton Difficulty or Slavery, from a different Point of View, showing the relative Responsibilities of America and Great Britain. By Onesimus Secundus. 8vo. sewed, pp. iv. and 47. 1863. 1s.

The Vision of William concerning Piers Plowman, together with Vita de Dowel, Dobet et Dobest, secundum wit et resoun. By William Langland (about 1362-1380 anno domini). Edited from numerous Manuscripts, with Prefaces, Notes, and a Glossary. By the Rev. Walter W. Skeat, M.A. Pp. xliv. and 158. cloth. 1867. Vernon Text; Text A. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Θεία (ἡ) Λειτουργια τοῦ ἐν ἁγίοις πάτρος ἡμῶν Ἰωάννου τοῦ Χρυσοστομοῦ. Παραφραβεῖσα κατὰ τὸ κείμενον τὸ ἔκδοθεν ἐγκρίσει τῆς ἱερᾶς συνόδου τοῦ βασιλείου τῆς Ἑλλαδος. 8vo. pp. 76, cloth. 1865. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Thom.—St. Paul's Epistles to the Corinthians. An attempt to convey their Spirit and Significance. By the Rev. John Hamilton Thom. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 408. 1851. 7*s.*

Thomas.—A Collection of some of the Miscellaneous Essays on Oriental Subjects. (Published on various occasions.) By Edward Thomas, Esq., late of the East India Company's Bengal Civil Service. Contents—On Ancient Indian Weights; The Earliest Indian Coinage; Bactrian Coins; On the Identity of Xandrames and Krananda; Note on Indian Numerals; On the Coins of the Gupta Dynasty; Early Armenian Coins; Observations Introductory to the Explanation of the Oriental Legends to be found on certain Imperial and Partho-Persian Coins; Sassanian Gems and early Armenian Coins; Notes on Certain unpublished Coins of the Sassanidæ; An Account of Eight Kúfic Coins; Supplementary Contributions to the Series of the Coins of the Kings of Ghazni; Supplementary Contributions to the Series of the Coins of the Patan Sultans of Hindustan; The Initial Coinage of Bengal, introduced by the Muhammadans on the conquest of the country, A.H. 600-800, A.D. 1203-1397. In one vol. 8vo. half-bound, gilt edges. 1868.

Thomas.—Early Sassanian Inscriptions, Seals and Coins. By Edward Thomas, Esq., late of the East India Company's Bengal Service. 8vo. pp. viii. and 138. With numerous woodcuts, a photograph of the Hájiábád inscription, and a copper-plate of the Sassanian coins. Cloth, 1868. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Thomson.—Institutes of the Laws of Ceylon. By Henry Byerley Thomson, Second Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Ceylon. In 2 vols., 8vo. cloth, pp. xx. 647, and pp. xx. 713. With Appendices, pp. 71. 1866. £2 2*s.*

Thomson.—The Autobiography of an Artizan. By Christopher Thomson. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 408. 1847. 6*s.*

Thoreau.—A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers. By Henry D. Thoreau. 12mo. cloth, pp. 413. 1862. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Thoreau.—The Maine Woods. By Henry D. Thoreau. 12mo. cloth, pp. vi. and 328. 1864. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Thoreau.—Excursions. 12mo. cloth, pp. 319. 1864. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Thoreau.—A Yankee in Canada; with Anti-Slavery and Reform Papers. By Henry D. Thoreau. 12mo. cloth, pp. 286. 1866. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Thoreau.—Letters to Various Persons. By Henry D. Thoreau. Edited by Ralph Waldo Emerson. 16mo. cloth, Pp. 229. 1865. 7*s.* 6*d.*

A series of interesting letters selected by Mr. Emerson, with an appendix containing nine charming poems.

Thoreau.—Walden. By Henry D. Thoreau. 12mo. cloth. pp. 357. 1864. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Thoughts OF A LIFETIME; or, my Mind—its contents. An epitome of the leading questions of the day. By the author of "Utopia at Home." Crown 8vo. pp. ix. and 220, cloth. 1868. 3s. 6d.

Thoughts ON RELIGION AND THE BIBLE. By a Layman, an M.A. of Trinity College, Dublin. Second edition, revised and enlarged. Crown 8vo. pp. x. and 42, sewed. 1865. 1s.

Thoughts ON THE ATHANASIAN CREED, ETC. By a Layman. 16mo. cloth, pp. vi. and 75. 1866. 2s.

Three EXPERIMENTS OF LIVING. Within the Means. Up to the Means. Beyond the Means. Fcap. 8vo., ornamental cover and gilt edges, pp. 86. 1848. 1s.

Ticknor.—A HISTORY OF SPANISH LITERATURE. Entirely rewritten. By George Ticknor. 3 vols. crown 8vo. pp. xxiv. 486, xiii. 506, xiv. 524, cloth. 1863. £1 4*s.*

Tolhausen.—A SYNOPSIS OF THE PATENT LAWS OF VARIOUS COUNTRIES. Comprising the following heads:—1. Law, Date, and where recorded; 2. Kinds of Patents; 3. Previous Examination; 4. Duration; 5. Government Fees; 6. Documents Required, and where to be left; 7. Working and Extension; 8. Assignments; 9. Specifications, Inspection, and Copies of; 10. List of Patents delivered; 11. Specifications Published; 12. Originals of Specifications (Models). By Alexander Tolhausen, Ph. D., Sworn Translator at the Imperial Court of Paris, Author of a Technological Dictionary in the English, French, and German Languages, etc. 8vo. sewed, pp. 31. 1857. 1s.

Torrens.—LANCASHIRE'S LESSON: or, the Need of a Settled Policy in Times of Exceptional Distress. By W. T. M. Torrens, Author of "The Industrial History of Free Nations," "The Life of Sir James Graham," etc. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 191. 1864. 3s. 6d.

Toscani.—ITALIAN CONVERSATIONAL COURSE. A new Method of Teaching the Italian Language, both Theoretically and Practically. By Giovanni Toscani, Professor of the Italian Language and Literature in the City of London College, Royal Polytechnic Institution, etc. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 249. 1867. 5s.

Tosswill.—THE BRITISH AND AMERICAN READY-RECKONER: consisting of Tables showing the equivalent values in Currency and Sterling at any rate for Exchange, of the following articles:—PRODUCE, comprising butter, cheese, bacon, hams, lard, tallow, grease, hops, seeds, tobacco, sugar, beeswax, or any article whereof the Standard is the pound in America and the cwt. (of 112 lbs.) in the British Isles, with a list of net freights. Also cotton per lb.—FLOUR, BEEF AND PORK, or any article sold in both countries by the same Standard.—WHEAT transferred from the bushel of 60 lbs. to quarter of 480 lbs.; likewise the equivalent value of the quarter and cental.—INDIAN CORN transferred from the bushel of 56 lbs. to the quarter of 480 lbs. Also freights of wheat and corn.—OIL CAKE AND DYE WOODS, allowing, where necessary, for the difference between the 2,000 lbs. and the gross ton.—REFINED PETROLEUM transferred from the small or wine into the imperial gallon.—CRUDE PETROLEUM transferred from the small gallon into the tun of 252 imperial or 303 small gallons. Also, Sterling Commission or Brokerage, showing the expense of placing any of the above merchandise "free on board." Computed by Edward B. Tosswill, Author of "Produce Tables from par to 400 premium." Imperial 8vo. cloth, pp. x. and 133. 1865. £1 1*s.*

Towler.—THE SILVER SUNBEAM: a Practical and Theoretical Text-book on Sun-Drawing and Photographic Printing, comprehending all the Wet and Dry Processes at present known. By J. Towler, M.D., Prendergast Professor of Natural Philosophy. Third Edition, enlarged. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 443. 1866. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Towler.—DRY PLATE PHOTOGRAPHY; or, the Tannin Process made Simple and Practical for Operators and Amateurs. By J. Towler, M.D. 12mo. sewed, pp. 97. 1865. 4*s.*

Towler.—THE MAGIC PHOTOGRAPH; with full Instructions How to Make it. By J. Towler, M.D. 12mo. sewed, pp. 32. 1866. 1*s.*

Triglot.—A COMPLETE DICTIONARY, ENGLISH, GERMAN, AND FRENCH, on an entirely new plan, for the use of the Three Nations. In Three Divisions. 1 vol. small 4to, cloth, red edges. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Trimen.—RHOPALOCERA AFRICAE AUSTRALIS; a Catalogue of South African Butterflies; comprising Descriptions of all the known Species, with Notices of their Larvæ, Pupæ, Localities, Habits, Seasons of Appearance, and Geographical Distribution. By Roland Trimen, Member of the Entomological Society of London. With Illustrations, by G. H. Ford. 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 353. 1862-66. 18*s.*
Ditto Coloured, 25*s.*

Trübner's AMERICAN AND ORIENTAL LITERARY RECORD. A Monthly Register of the most Important Works published in North and South America, in India, China, and the British Colonies. With Occasional Notes on German, Dutch, Danish, French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese and Russian Books. The object of the Publishers in issuing this monthly publication is to give a full and particular account of every publication of importance issued in America and the East. Vols. 1 to 3 (36 numbers) from March, 1865, to July, 1868, small quarto, 6*d.* per number. Subscription 5*s.* per annum. Continued monthly.

The object of the Publishers in issuing this monthly publication is to give a full and particular account of every publication of importance issued in America and in the East.

Trübner's SERIES OF GERMAN PLAYS, for Students of the German Language. With Grammatical and Explanatory Notes. By F. Weinmann, German Master to the Royal Institution School, Liverpool, and G. Zimmermann, Teacher of Modern Languages. No. I. Der Vetter. Comedy in three Acts, by Roderick Benedix. 12mo. cloth, pp. 125. 1863. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Trübner's GOLD AND SILVER COINS (See under Current Gold and Silver Coins).

Trübner.—TRÜBNER'S BIBLIOGRAPHICAL GUIDE TO AMERICAN LITERATURE: a Classed List of Books published in the United States of America, from 1817 to 1857. With Bibliographical Introduction, Notes, and Alphabetical Index. Compiled and Edited by Nicolas Trübner. In 1 vol. 8vo., half-bound, pp. 750. 1859. 18*s.*

This work, it is believed, is the first attempt to marshal the Literature of the United States of America during the last forty years, according to the generally received bibliographical canons. The Librarian will welcome it, no doubt, as a companion volume to Brunet, Lowndes, and Ebert; whilst, to the bookseller, it will be a faithful guide to the American branch of English Literature—a branch which, on account of its rapid increase and rising importance, begins to force itself daily more and more upon his attention. Nor will the work be of less interest to the man of letters inasmuch as it comprises complete Tables of Contents to all the more prominent Collections of the Americans, to the Journals, Memoirs, Proceedings, and Transactions of their learned Societies—and thus furnishes an intelligible key to a department of American scientific activity hitherto but imperfectly known and understood in Europe.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"It has been reserved for a foreigner to have compiled, for the benefit of European readers, a really trustworthy guide to Anglo-American literature. This honourable distinction has been fairly won by Mr. Nicolas Trübner, the intelligent and well-known publisher in Paternoster-row That gentleman has succeeded in making a very valuable addition to bibliographical knowledge, in a quarter where it was much wanted."—Universal Review, Jan., 1859.

"'Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature' deserves praise for the great care with which it is prepared, and the wonderful amount of information contained in its pages. It is compiled and edited by Mr. Nicolas Trübner, the publisher, of Paternoster-row. It comprises a classified list of books published in the United States during the last forty years, with Bibliographical Introduction, Notes, and Alphabetical Index. The introduction is very elaborate and full of facts, and must be the work of a gentleman who has spared no pains in making himself master of all that is important in connection with American literature. It certainly supplies much information not generally known in Europe."—Morning Star, Jan. 31st, 1859.

"Mr. Trübner deserves much credit for being the first to arrange bibliography according to the received rules of the art. He began the labour in 1855, and the first volume was published in that year; constituting, in fact, the earliest attempt, on this side of the Atlantic, to catalogue American books. The present volume, of course, is enlarged, and is more perfect in every respect. The method of classification is exceedingly clear and useful.

"In short, it presents the actual state of literature, as well as the course of its development from the beginning. Into the subject-matter of this section we shall have to look hereafter, we are now simply explaining the composition of Mr. Trübner's most valuable and useful book."—Spectator, Feb. 5, 1859.

"Mr. Trübner's book is by far the most complete American bibliography that has yet appeared, and displays an amount of patience and research that does him infinite credit. We have tested the accuracy of the work upon several points demanding much care and inquiry, and the result has always been satisfactory. Our American brethren cannot fail to feel complimented by the production of this volume, which in quantity almost equals our own London catalogue."—The Bookseller, Feb. 24th, 1859.

"To say of this volume that it entirely fulfils the promise of its title-page, is possibly the highest and most truthful commendation that can be awarded to it. Mr. Trübner deserves however, something beyond general praise for the patient and intelligent labour with which he has elaborated the earlier forms of the work into the which it now bears. What was once but a scanty volume, has now become magnified, under his care, to one of considerable size; and what was once little better than a dry catalogue, may now take rank as a biographical work of first-rate importance. His position as an American literary agent has, doubtless, been very favourable to Mr. Trübner, by throwing matter in its way; and he confesses, in his preface, that it is to this source that he is mainly indebted for the materials which have enabled him to construct the work before us. Mr. Trübner's object in compiling this book is, he states, two-fold: 'On the one hand, to suggest the necessity of a more perfect work of its kind by an American, surrounded, as he necessarily would be, with the needful appliances; and, on the other, to supply to Europeans a guide to Anglo-American literature—a branch which, by its rapid rise and increasing importance, begins to force itself more and more on our attention. It is very modest in Mr. Trübner thus to treat his work as a mere suggestion for others. It is much more than this: it is an example which those who attempt to do anything more complete cannot do better than to follow a model, which they will do well to copy, if they would combine fulness of material with that admirable order and arrangement which so facilitates reference, and without which a work of this sort is all but useless.

"All honour, then, to the literature of Young America—for young she still is, and let her thank her stars for it—and all honour also, to Mr. Trübner, for taking so much pains to make us acquainted with it."—The Critic, March 19, 1859.

"This is not only a very useful, because well executed, bibliographical work—it is also a work of much interest to all who are connected with literature. The bulk of it consists of a classified list, with date of publication, size, and price, of all the works, original or translated, which have appeared in the United States during the last forty years; and an alphabetical index facilitates reference to any particular work or author. On the merits of this portion of the work we cannot, of course, be expected to form a judgment. It would require something of the special erudition of Mr. Trübner himself, to say how far he has succeeded or fallen short of his undertaking—how few, or how many, have been his omissions. There is one indication, however, of his careful minuteness, which suggests the amount of labour that must have been bestowed on the work—namely, the full enumeration of all the contents of the various Transaction and Scientific Journals. Thus, 'the Transactions of the American Philosophical Society,' from the year 1769 to 1857—no index to which has yet appeared in America—are in this work made easy of reference, every paper of every volume being mentioned seriatim. The naturalist, who wishes to know what papers have appeared in the Boston Journal of Natural History during the last twenty years, that is, from its commencement, has only to glance over the five closely-printed pages of this guide to satisfy himself at once."—The Saturday Review, April 2, 1859.

"We have never seen a work on the national literature of a people more carefully compiled than the present, and the bibliographical prolegomena deserves attentive perusal by all who would study either the political or the literary history of the greatest republic of the West."—The Leader, March 26th, 1859.

"The subject of my letter to-day may seem to be of a purely literary character, but I feel justified to claim a more general interest for it. That subject is connected with the good reputation of the United States abroad. It is likewise connected with the general topic of my two former letters. I have spoken of the friends and the antagonists of the United States among European nations, and among the different classes of European society. I have stated that the antagonists are chiefly to be found among the aristocracy, not only of birth, but 'of mind'—as it has been called—likewise; not only among the privileged classes, and those connected with the Government interests, but among those who live in the sphere of literature and art, and look down with contempt upon a society in which utilitarian motives are believed to be paramount. And I have asserted that, these differences in the opinions of certain classes left aside, the Germans, as a whole take a more lively and a deeper interest in American affairs than in any other nation. Now, I am going to speak of a book just ready to leave the press of a London publisher, which, while it is a remarkable instance of the truth of my assertion in reference to the Germans, must be considered as serving the interests of the United States, by promoting the good reputation of American life in an uncommon degree.

"The London book trade has a firm, Trübner and Co., of whose business transactions American literature, as well as literature on America, form a principal branch. It is the firm who have lately published the bibliography of American languages. Mr. Nicolas Trübner is a German, who has never inhabited the United States, and yet he risks his time, labour, and money, in literary publications, for which even vain endeavours would have been made to find an American publisher.

"The new publication of Mr. Trübner, to which I have referred, is a large 8vo volume of 800 pages, under the title of 'Bibliographical Guide to American Literature, A classified List of Books published in the United States of America, from 1817 to 1857. With Bibliographical Introduction, Notes, and Alphabetical Index, Compiled and edited by Nicolas Trübner.'

"This last remark has but too much truth in it. The United States, in the opinion of the great mass of even the well-educated people of Europe, is a country inhabited by a nation lost in the pursuit of material interest, a country in which the technically applicable branches of some sciences may be cultivated to a certain degree, but a country essentially without literature and art, a country not without newspapers—so much the worse for it—but almost without books. Now, here, Mr. Trübner, a German, comes out with a list of American books, filling a thick volume, though containing American publications only, upward from the year 1817, from which time he dates the period of a more decided literary independence of the United States.

"Since no native-born, and even no adopted, American, has taken the trouble of compiling, arranging, digesting, editing, and publishing such a work, who else but a German could undertake it? who else among the European nations would have thought American literature worth the labour, the time, and the money? and, let me add, that a smaller work of a similar character, 'The Literature of American Local History,' by the late Dr. Hermann Ludewig, was the work of a German, likewise. May be that the majority of the American public will ascribe but an inferior degree of interest to works of this kind. The majority of the public of other nations will do the same, as it cannot be everybody's business to understand the usefulness of bibliography, and of books containing nothing but the enumeration and description of books. One thing, however, must be apparent: the deep interest taken by some foreigners in some of the more ideal spheres of American life; and if it is true, that the clear historical insight into its own development, ideal as well as material, is one of the most valuable acquisitions of a nation, future American generations will acknowledge the good services of those foreigners, who, by their literary application, contributed to avert the national calamity of the origin of the literary independence of America becoming veiled in darkness." New York Daily Tribune, Dec., 1858.

"It is remarkable and noteworthy that the most valuable manual of American literature should appear in London and be published by an English house. Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature is a work of extraordinary skill and perseverance, giving an index to all the publications of the American press for the last forty years."—Harper's Weekly, March 28th, 1859.

"Mr. Trübner deserves all praise for having produced a work every way satisfactory. No one who takes an interest in the subject of which it treats can dispense it with it; and we have no doubt that booksellers in this country will learn to consider it necessary to them as a shop manual, and only second in importance, for the purposes of their trade, to the London Catalogue itself. That a foreigner, and a London bookseller, should have accomplished what Americans themselves have failed to do, is most creditable to the compiler. The volume contains 149 pages of introductory matter, containing by far the best record of American literary history yet published; and 521 pages of classed list of books, to which an alphabetical index of 33 pages is added. This alphabetical index alone may claim to be one of the most valuable aids for enabling the student of literary history to form a just and perfect estimate of the great and rising importance of Anglo-American literature, the youngest and most untrammelled of all which illustrate the gradual development of the human mind."—The Press, Philadelphia, Oct. 11, 1858.

"We do not so much express the wish by this notice, that Mr. Trübner may not find a public ungrateful for his labours, as congratulate, especially American Bibliophiles, upon the advantages within their reach, by the acquisition and use of what Mr. Trübner has so opportunely supplied."—Washington National Intelligencer, March 22nd, 1859.

"This volume contains a well-classified list of books published in the United States of America during the last forty years, preceded by a tolerably full survey of American literary enterprise during the first half of the nineteenth century. The value of such a guide, in itself tolerably evident, becomes more so upon glancing over the five hundred and forty pages of close print which display the literary activity pervading the country of Prescott and Mottley, of Irving and Hawthorne, of Poe and Longfellow, of Story and Wheaton, of Moses Stuart and Channing. This volume will be useful to the scholar, but to the librarian it is indispensable." —Daily News, March 24th, 1859.

"There are hundreds of men of moderate scholarship who would gladly stand on some higher and more assured point. They feel that they have acquired much information, but they also feel the need of that subtle discipline, literary education, without which all mere learning is the rudis indigesta moles, as much of a stumbling-block as an aid. To those in such a condition, works on bibliography are invaluable. For direction in classifying all reading; whether English or American, Allibone's Dictionary is admirable; but, for particular information as to the American side of the house, the recently published Bibliographical Guide to American Literature, by Nicholas Trübner, of London, may be conscientiously commended. A careful perusal of this truly remarkable work cannot fail to give any intelligent person a clear and complete idea of the whole state of American book-making, not only in its literary aspect, but in its historical, and, added to this, in its most mechanical details."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, March 5th, 1859.

"But the best work on American bibliography yet published has come to us from London, where it has been compiled by the well-known bibliophile, Trübner. The work is remarkable for condensation and accuracy, though we have noted a few errors and omissions, upon which we should like to comment, had we now space to do so."—New York Times, March 26th, 1859.

"Some of our readers, whose attention has been particularly called to scientific and literary matters, may remember meeting, some years since, in this country, a most intelligent foreigner, who visited the United States for the purpose of extending his business connections, and making a personal investigation into the condition of literature in the New World. Mr. Nicholas Trübner—the gentleman to whom we have made reference—although by birth a German, and by education and profession a London bookseller, could hardly be called a 'stranger in America,' for he had sent before him a most valuable 'letter of introduction,' in the shape of a carefully compiled register of American books and authors, entitled 'Bibliographical Guide to American Literature,' etc., pp. xxxii., 198. This manual was the germ of the important publication, the title of which the reader will find at the commencement of this article. Now, in consequence of Mr. Trübner's admirable classification and minute index, the inquirer after knowledge has nothing to do but copy from the Bibliographical Guide the titles of the American books which he wishes to consult, despatch them to his library by a messenger, and in a few minutes he has before him the coveted volumes, through whose means he hopes to enlarge his acquisitions. Undoubtedly it would be a cause of well-founded reproach, of deep mortification to every intelligent American, if the arduous labours of the learned editor and compiler of this volume (whom we almost hesitate to call a foreigner), should fail to be appreciated in a country to which he has, by the preparation of this valuable work, proved himself so eminent a benefactor."—Pennsylvania Enquirer, March 26th, 1859.

"The editor of this volume has acquired a knowledge of the productions of the American press which is rarely exhibited on the other side of the Atlantic, and which must command the admiration of the best informed students of the subject in this country. His former work on American bibliography, though making no pretensious to completeness, was a valuable index to various branches of learning that had been successfully cultivated by our scholars but, neither in comprehensiveness of plan nor thoroughness of execution, can it be compared to the elaborate and minute record of American literature contained in this volume. The duty of the editor required extensive research, vigilant discrimination, and untiring diligence; and in the performance of his task we are no less struck with the accuracy of detail than with the extent of his information. The period to which the volume is devoted, comprises only the last forty years; but within that time the literature of this country has received its most efficient impulses, and been widely unfolded in the various departments of intellectual activity. If we were permitted to speak in behalf of American scholars, we should not fail to congratulate Mr. Trübner on the eminent success with which he has accomplished his plan, and the ample and impartial justice with which he has registered the productions of our native authorship. After a careful examination of his volume, we are bound to express our high appreciation of the intelligence, fairness, and industry which are conspicuous in its pages; for exactness and precision it is no less remarkable, than for extent of research; few, if any, important publications are omitted on its catalogue, and although, as is inevitable in a work of this nature, an erroneous letter has sometimes crept into a name, or an erroneous figure into a date, no one can consult it habitually without learning to rely on its trustworthiness, as well as its completeness."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1859.

"Nor is the book a dry catalogue only of the names and contents of the publications of America. Prefixed to it are valuable bibliographical prolegomena, instructive to the antiquary, as well as useful to the philologist. In this portion of the work, Mr Trübner had the assistance of the late Dr. Ludewig, whose early death was a great loss to philological science. Mr. Moran, the assistant-secretary to the American Legation, has added to the volume a historical summary of the literature of America; and Mr. Edward Edwards is responsible for an interesting account of the public libraries of the United States. To Mr. Trübner's own careful superintendence and hard work, however, the student must ever remain indebted for one of the most useful and well-arranged books on bibliographical lore ever published. In addition to this, it is right to congratulate Mr. Trübner on the fact, that his present work confirms the opinion passed on his 'Bibliotheca Glottica,' that among the booksellers themselves honourable literary eminence may exist, without clashing with business arrangements. The booksellers of old were authors, and Mr. Trübner emulates their example."—Morning Chronicle, March 22nd, 1859.

"Mr. Trübner, who is not only a bibliopole but a bibliophile, has, in this work, materially increased the claim which he had already upon the respect of all book-lovers everywhere, but especially in the United States, to whose literature he has now made so important and useful a contribution. So much larger than a former book, under a similar title, which he published in 1855, and so much more ample in every respect, the present constitutes a new implement for our libraries, as well as the most valuable existing aid for those students who, without libraries, have an interest in knowing their contents."—Baltimore American, 2nd April, 1859.

"Lastly, published only the other day, is Trübner's Bibliographical Guide to American Literature, which gives a classed list of books published in the United States during the last forty years, with bibliographical introduction, notes, and Alphabetical index. This octavo volume has been compiled and edited by Mr. Nicolas Trübner, the well-known head of one of the great foreign publishing and importing houses of London, who is also editor of Ludewig and Turner's Literature of American Aboriginal Languages. Besides containing a classed list of books, with an alphabetical index, Mr. Trübner's book has an introduction, in which, at considerable fulness, he treats of the history of American literature, including newspapers, periodicals, and public libraries. It is fair to state that Mr. Trübner's Bibliographical Guide was published subsequent to Allibone's Dictionary, but printed off about the same time."—Philadelphia Press, April 4th, 1859.

"This is a valuable work for book buyers. For its compilation we are indebted to a foreign bibliomaniac, but one who has made himself familiar with American literature, and has possessed himself of the most ample sources of information. The volume contains:—I. Bibliographical Prolegomena; II. Contributions towards a History of American Literature; III. Notices of Public Libraries of the United States. These three heads form the introduction, and occupy one hundred and fifty pages. IV. Classed list of books; V. Alphabetical list of authors. This plan is somewhat after that adopted in Watts' celebrated 'Bibliotheca Britannica,' a work of immense value, whose compilation occupied some forty years. The classified portion of the present work enables the reader to find readily the names of all books on any one subject. The alphabetical index of authors enables the reader to ascertain instantly the names of all authors and of all their works, including the numerous periodical publications of the last forty years. Mr. Trübner deserves the thanks of the literary world for his plan, and its able execution."—New York Courier and Enquirer, April 11th, 1859.

"L'auteur, dans une préface de dix pages, expose les idées qui lui ont fait entreprendre son livre, et le plan qu'il a cru devoir adopter. Dans une savante introduction, il fait une revue critique des différentes ouvrages relatifs à l'Amérique; il signale ceux qui ont le plus contribué à l'établissement d'une littérature spéciale Américaine, et il en fait l'histoire, cette partie de son travail est destinée à lui faire honneur, elle est méthodiquement divisée en période coloniale et en période Américaine et renferme, sur les progrès de l'imprimerie en Amérique, sur le salaire des auteurs, sur le commerce de la librairie, les publications périodiques, des renseignements très intéressants, que l'on est heureux de trouver réunis pour la première fois. Cette introduction, qui n'a pas moins de 150 pages, se termine par une table statisque de toutes les bibliothèques publiques des différents Etats de l'Union.

"Le catalogue méthodique et raisonné des ouvrages n'occupe pas moins de 521 pages, il forme 32 sections consacrées chacune à l'une des branches des sciences humaines; celle qui donne la liste des ouvrages qui intéressent la géographie et les voyages (section xvi.) comprend près de 600 articles, et parmi eux on trouve l'indication de plusieurs ouvrages dont nous ne soupçonnions même pas l'existence en Europe. Un index général alphabétique par noms d'auteurs qui termine ce livre, permet d'abréger des recherches souvent bien pénibles. Le guide bibliographique de M. Trübner est un monument élevé à l'activité scientifique et littéraire Américaine et comme tel, il est digne de prendre place à côte des ouvrages du même genre publiés en Europe par les Brunet, les Lowndes, et les Ebert. (V. A. Malte-Brun)."—Nouvelles Annales des Voyages, April, 1859.

Tuder.—My Own Philology. By A. Tuder. In Two Parts. 8vo. pp. iv. and 40, 60, sewed. 1866. 1*s.* each.

Twenty-five Years' Conflict in the Church, and its Remedy. 12mo. sewed, pp. viii. and 70. 1855. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Uhlemann's Syriac Grammar. Translated from the German by Enoch Hutchinson. 8vo. cloth, pp. 368. 1855. 18*s.*

Ullmann.—The Worship of Genius, and the Distinctive Character or Essence of Christianity. By Professor C. Ullmann. Translated by Lucy Sandford. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 116. 1840. 3*s.* 6*d.*

United States Consular Regulations. A Practical Guide for Consular Officers, and also for merchants, shipowners, and masters of American vessels, in all their consular transactions. Third edition, revised and enlarged 8vo. pp. 684, cloth. 1867. 21*s.*

United States Patent Law (The). Instructions how to obtain Letters Patent for new inventions; including a variety of useful information concerning the rules and practice of the Patent Office; how to sell patents; how to secure foreign patents; forms for assignments and licenses, together with engravings and descriptions of the condensing steam-engine, and the principal mechanical movements, valuable tables, calculations, problems, etc., etc. By Munn and Co., Solicitors of Patents, No. 37, Park Row, New York. Third edition, 12mo., pp. 108, cloth. 1867. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Unity, Duality, and Trinity of the Godhead (a Discussion among upwards of 250 theological enquirers, clergymen, dissenting ministers and laymen, on the). With digressions on the creation, fall, incarnation, atonement, resurrection, and infallibility of the Scriptures, inspiration, miracles, future punishments, revision of the Bible, etc. The press corrected by Ranley, the Reporter of the discussion. 8vo. pp. 200, cloth. 1864. 6*s.*

Unity (The) of Truth. A Devotional Diary, compiled from the Scripture and other sources. By the Author of "Visiting my Relations." 18mo. cloth, pp. iv. 138. 1867. 2*s.*

Universal Correspondence in Six Languages. English, German, French, Dutch, Italian, and Spanish. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth, pp. 664 and 660. 1865. 20*s.*

Universal Church (The); its Faith, Doctrine, and Constitution. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 398. 1866. 6*s.*

Upper Rhine (The). Illustrating its finest Cities, Castles, Ruins, and Landscapes. From drawings by Messrs. Rohbock, Louis and Julius Lange, engraved by the most distinguished artists. With a historical and topographical text. Edited by Dr. Gaspey. 8vo. pp. 496. With 134 steel-plate illustrations, cloth. 1859. £2 2*s.*

Uricoechea. — Mapoteca Colombiana: Catalogo de Todos los Mapas, Planos, Vistas, etc., relativos a la América-Española, Brasil, e Islas adyacentes. Arreglada cronologicamente i precedida de una introduccion sobre la historia cartografica de América. Por el Doctor Ezequiel Uricoechea, de Bogóta, Nueva Granada. One vol. 8vo. cloth, pp. 232. 1860. 6*s.*

Uriel, and other Poems. 12mo. cloth. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Uriel.—Poems. By the Author of Uriel. Second Edition. 12mo. cloth, pp. 169. 1857. 2*s.*

Urquhart.—Progress of Russia in the West, North, and South, by Opening the Sources of Opinion, and appropriating the Channels of Wealth and Power. By David Urquhart. Fifth edition, pp. 490, with Map, 12mo. stiff cover. 1852. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Urquhart.—Recent Events in the East. Letters, Essays, etc. By David Urquhart. 12mo. pp. 312, 1853. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Urquhart.—The War of Ignorance; its Progress and Results: a Prognostication and a Testimony. By David Urquhart. 8vo. 1854. 1*s.*

Urquhart.—The Occupants of the Crimea. An Appeal from To-day and To-morrow. By David Urquhart. 8vo. sewed. 1854. 6*d.*

Urquhart.—The Home Face of the "Four Points." By David Urquhart. 8vo. pp. 32. 1854. 1*s.*

Valetta.—Ὁμήρου βίος καὶ ποιήματα. Πραγματεία ἱστορικὴ καὶ κριτικὴ ὑπὸ Ἰωάννου N. Βαλέττα. (The Life and Poems of Homer. A Historical and Critical Essay. By John N. Valetta). 1 vol. 4to. pp. xii. and 403, with an illustration, sewed, 1866. 21*s.*

Valetta.—Φωτιοῦ τοῦ σοφωτάτου καὶ ἁγιωτάτου Πατριάρχου Κωνσταντινουπόλεως Ἐπιστολαὶ. Αἷς δύο τοῦ αὐτοῦ παρήρτηται πονημάτια. Α. Ἐρωτήματα δέκα σὺν ἴσαις ταῖς ἀποκρίσεσιν, ἤτοι συναγωγαὶ καὶ ἀποδείξεις ἀκριβεῖς, συνειλεγμέναι ἐκ τῶν συνωδικῶν καὶ ἱστορικῶν γραφῶν περὶ Ἐπισκοπῶν καὶ Μητροπολιτῶν καὶ λοίπων ἑτέρων ἀναγκαίων ζητημάτων. Β. Κρίσεις καὶ ἐπιλύσεις πέντε κεφαλαίων, τῷ Θεοφιλεστάτῳ, ὁσιωτάτῳ Λέοντι Ἀρχιεπισκόπῳ Καλαβρίας. Μετὰ προλεγομένων περὶ τοῦ βίου καὶ τῶν συγγραμμάτων Φωτίου κ.τ.λ. ὑπὸ Ἰωάννου N. Βαλέττα. (The Epistles of Photius, the wisest and holiest Patriarch of Konstantinople. To which are attached two works of the same author: 1. Ten Questions with their answers, viz., collections and accurate descriptions gathered from the synodical and historical writings on the Bishops and Metropolitans. 2. Sentences and Interpretations, in five chapters, addressed to Leon, the Archbishop of Calabria. With an Introduction on the Life and Writings of Photius. By John N. Valetta.) 1 vol. 4to. pp. 581 sewed. 1864. £1 10*s.*

Van der Tuuk.—Outlines of a Grammar of the Malagasy Language. By H. N. Van der Tuuk. 8vo. sewed, pp. 28. 1866. 1*s.*

Van der Tuuk.—Short Account of the Malay Manuscripts belonging to the Royal Asiatic Society. By H. N. Van Der Tuuk. 8vo. sewed, pp. 51. 1866. 1*s.*

Van de Weyer.—Choix D'Opuscules Philosophiques, Historiques, Politiques et Littéraires de Sylvain Van de Weyer. Précédés d'Avant-propos de l'Editeur. Première Série.

Table de Matières.

1. Le Roi Cobden.
2. Lettres sur les Anglais qui ont écrit en Français.
3. Discours sur l'Histoire de la Philosophie.
4. Moyen facile et économique d'être bienfaisant, proposé aux jeunes Gens, et suivi de Pensées diverses.
5. Lettre à M. Ernst Münch.

Crown 8vo. pp. 374. Roxburghe style. 1863. 10*s.* 6*d.*
Ditto. Ditto. Seconde Série. (In the Press.)

Van Laun (Henri).—Grammar of the French Language.

Parts I. and II. Accidence and Syntax. In one vol. crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 151 and 117. 5th edition. 1867. 4*s.*

Part III. Exercises. 4th Ed. Crown 8vo. cloth. pp. xii. and 285. 1866. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Van Laun.—Leçons Graduées de Traduction et de Lecture; or, Graduated Lessons in Translation and Reading, with Biographical Sketches, Annotations on History, Geography, Synonyms and Style, and a Dictionary of Words and Idioms. By Henri Van Laun. 12mo. cloth, pp. vi. and 476. 1863. 5*s.*

Varnhagen.—Amérigo Vespucci. Son caractère, ses écrits (même les moins authentiques), sa vie et ses navigations, avec une carte indiquant les routes. Par F. A. de Varnhagen, Ministre du Brésil au Pérou, Chili et Ecuador, etc. Small Folio, pp. 120, boards. 1865. 14*s.*

Varnhagen.—La Verdadera Guanahani de Colon. Memoria communicada a la facultad de humanidades. Por Don Francisco Ad. de Varnhagen, e impresa en el tomo xxvi. de los anales de Chile (Enero de 1864). 8vo. pp. xiv., with a map of the Bahaman and Antillan Archipelago, sewed, 1864. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Velasquez and Simonne's New Method to Read, Write, and Speak the Spanish Language. Adapted to Ollendorff's System. Post 8vo. pp. 558, cloth. 1866. 6*s.*

Key. Post 8vo. pp. 174., cloth. 4*s.*

Velasquez.—A Dictionary of the Spanish and English Languages. For the Use of Young Learners and Travellers. By M. Velasquez de la Cadena. In Two Parts. I. Spanish-English. II. English-Spanish. 12mo. pp. 680, cloth. 1864. 12*s.*

Velasquez.—A Pronouncing Dictionary of the Spanish and English Languages. Composed from the Dictionaries of the Spanish Academy, Terreos, and Salvá, and Webster, Worcester, and Walker. Two Parts in one thick volume. By M. Velasquez de la Cadena. Royal 8vo. pp. 1,280, cloth. 1866. 25*s.*

Velasquez.—An Easy Introduction to Spanish Conversation, containing all that is necessary to make a rapid progress in it. Particularly designed for persons who have little time to study, or are their own instructors. By M. Velasquez de la Cadena. New edition, revised and enlarged. 12mo. pp. 150, cloth. 1863. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Velasquez.—New Spanish Reader: Passages from the most approved authors, in Prose and Verse. Arranged in progressive order. With Vocabulary. Post 8vo. pp. 352, cloth. 1866. 6*s.* 6*d.*

Vera.—Problème de la Certitude. By Professor A. Vera. 8vo. pp. 220. 1845. 3*s.*

Vera.—Platonis Aristotelis et Hegelii de Medio Termino Doctrina. By Professor A. Vera. 8vo. pp. 45. 1845. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Vera.—Inquiry into Speculative and Experimental Science. By Professor A. Vera. 8vo. pp. 68. 1856. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Vera.—Logique de Hégel, traduite pour la première fois et accompagnée d'une introduction et d'un commentaire perpétuel. 2 volumes. 8vo. pp. 750. By Professor A. Vera. 1859. 12*s.*

Vera.—L'Hégélianisme et la Philosophie. By Professor A. Vera. 8vo. pp. 226. 1861. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Vera.—Mélanges Philosophiques (containing Papers in Italian and French. By Professor A. Vera. 8vo. pp. 304. 1862. 5*s.*

Vera.—Prolusioni alla Storia della Filosofia e dalla Filosofia della Storia. By Professor A. Vera. 8vo. pp. 87. 1863. 2*s.*

Vera.—Introduction à la Philosophie de Hégel. Deuxième édition, revue et augmentée de Notes et d'une Préface. By Professor A. Vera. 8vo. pp. 418. (The first edition appeared in 1854). 1864. 6*s.*

Vera.—Essais de Philosophie Hégelienne, contenant la Peine de Mort, Amour et Philosophie, et Introduction à la Philosophie. By Professor A. Vera. 12mo. pp. 203. 1864. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Vera.—Philosophie de la Nature de Hégel, traduite pour la première fois et accompagnée d'une introduction et d'une commentaire perpetuel. By Professor A. Vera. 3 volumes. 8vo. pp. 1637. 1863, 1864, and 1865. 24*s.*

Vera.—Philosophie de l'Esprit de Hégel, Traduite pour la première fois et accompagnée de deux Introductions et d'un Commentaire Perpetuel. Par A. Vera. Tome premiér. 8vo. sewed, pp. cxii. and 471. 1867. 12*s.*

Verkrüzen.—A Treatise on Muslin Embroidery in its Various Branches, including Directions for the different Styles of this Work, with eight beautiful Illustrations, a Receipt to get up Embroidery, etc. By T. A. Verkrüzen, author of a Treatise on Berlin Wool and Colours. Oblong, sewed, pp. 26. 1861. 1*s.*

Verkrüzen.—A Treatise on Berlin Wool and Colours; Needlework, Muslin, Embroidery, Potichomanie, Diaphanie, and Japanerie, for the use of Dealers and Amateurs in Fancy Work. By T. A. Verkrüzen. 4to. pp. 32. 1857. 1*s.*

Versmann and Oppenheim.—On the Comparative Value of certain Salts for rendering Fabrics Non-inflammable; being the substance of a paper read before the British Association, at the meeting in Aberdeen, September 15th, 1859. By Fred. Versmann, F.C.S., and Alphons Oppenheim, Ph. D., A.C.S. 8vo. pp. 32, sewed. 1859. 1*s.*

Vickers.—Imaginism and Rationalism. An Explanation of the Origin and Progress of Christianity. By John Vickers. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 432. 1867. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Villars (De).—Mémoires de la cour d'Espagne sous le règne de Charles II. 1678—1682. Par le Marquis de Villars. Small 4to. pp. xl. and 382, cloth. 1861. 30*s.*

Vishńu Purana.—A System of Hindu Mythology and Tradition. Translated from the original Sanskrit, and illustrated by Notes derived chiefly from other Puranas. By the late Horace Hayman Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., thoroughly revised and edited, with Notes, by Dr. Fitzedward Hall. In 5 vols. 8vo. Vol. I. pp. 340. Vol. II. pp. 348. Vol. III. pp. 348. 10*s.* 6*d.* each. (Vols. IV. and V. in the press).

Voice from Mayfair (A). 8vo. pp. 58, sewed. 1868. 4*d.*

Volpe.—An Italian Grammar. By Girolamo Volpe, Italian Master at Eton College. For the Use of Eton. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 242. 1863. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Volpe.—A Key to the Exercises of Volpe's Italian Grammar. 12mo. sewed, pp. 18. 1863. 1*s.*

Von Cotta.—Geology and History: a Popular Exposition of all that is known of the Earth and its Inhabitants in Pre-historic Times. By Bernhard Von Cotta, Professor of Geology at Freiburg. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 84. 1865. 2*s.*

Voysey.—Dogma versus Morality. A Reply to Church Congress. By Charles Voysey, B.A. Post 8vo. sewed, pp. 12. 1866. 3*d.*

Voysey.—The Sling and the Stone. By Charles Voysey, B.A., St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, Incumbent of Healaugh. Volume I. (12 numbers for 1866). Crown 8vo. cloth. 1866. 6*s.*

Voysey.—The Sling and the Stone. By Charles Voysey, B.A. Volume II. (12 numbers for 1867). 8vo. cloth, pp. 176. 1867. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Voysey.—Humanity versus Barbarism in our Thanksgiving. By Charles Voysey, B.A., St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, Incumbent of Healaugh, Tadcaster. 8vo., pp. 12. 1868. 3*d.*

Wade.—Wén-Chien Tzŭ-Erh Chi. A Series of Papers selected as specimens of documentary Chinese, designed to assist Students of the language, as written by the officials of China. Vol. I. and Part I. of the Key. By Thomas Francis Wade, C.B., Secretary to Her Britannic Majesty's Legation at Peking. 4to., half-cloth, pp. xii. and 455; and iv., 72 and 52. 1867. £1 16*s.*

Wade.—Yu-Yen Tzŭ-Erh Chi. A progressive course, designed to assist the Student of Colloquial Chinese, as spoken in the Capital and the Metropolitan Department. In Eight Parts, with Key, Syllabary, and Writing Exercises. By Thomas Francis Wade, C.B., Secretary to Her Britannic Majesty's Legation, Peking. 3 vols. 4to. Progressive Course, pp. xx. 296 and 16; Syllabary, pp. 126 and 36; Writing Exercises, pp. 48; Key, pp. 174 and 140, sewed. 1867. £4.

Wafflard and Fulgence.—Le Voyage à Dieppe. A Comedy in Prose. By Wafflard and Fulgence. Edited, with English Notes, by the Rev. P. H. Ernest Brette, B.D., of Christ's Hospital, and the University of London. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 104. 1867. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Wake.—Chapters on Man. With the Outlines of a Science of comparative Psychology. By C. Staniland Wake, Fellow of the Anthropological Society of London. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 344. 1868. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Wanklyn and Chapman.—Water Analysis. A Practical Treatise on the examination of potable water. By J. Alfred Wanklyn, M.R.C.S., Professor of Chemistry in London Institution, and Ernest Theophron Chapman. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. x. and 104. 1868. 5*s.*

Ware.—Sketches of European Capitals. By William Ware, Author of "Zenobia; or, Letters from Palmyra," "Aurelian," etc. 8vo. pp. 124. 1851. 1*s.*

Warning; or, the Beginning of the End. By the Author of "Who am I?" 1 vol., 8vo. cloth. 2*s.*

Watson.—Index to the Native and Scientific Names of Indian and other Eastern Economic Plants and Products, originally prepared under the authority of the Secretary of State for India in Council. By John Forbes Watson, M.A., M.D., F.L.S., F.R.A.S., etc., Reporter on the Products of India. Imperial 8vo. cloth, pp. 650. 1868. £1 1*s.* 6*d.*

Watson.—Theoretical Astronomy, relating to the motions of the heavenly bodies revolving around the sun in accordance with the law of universal gravitation, embracing a systematic derivation of the formulae for the calculation of the geocentric and heliocentric places, for the determination of the orbits of Planets and Comets, for the correction of approximate elements, and for the computation of special perturbation; together with the theory of the combination of observations, and the method of least squares. With numerical examples and auxiliary tables. By James C. Watson, Director of the Observatory at Ann Arbor, and Professor of Astronomy in the University of Michigan. 8vo. cloth, pp. 662. 1868. £1 18*s.*

Watts.—Essays on Language and Literature. By Thomas Watts, of the British Museum. Reprinted, with Alterations and Additions, from the "Transactions of the Philological Society," and elsewhere. 1 vol. 8vo. (In preparation).

Watts and Doddridge.—Hymns for Children. Revised and altered, so as to render them of general use. By Dr. Watts. To which are added Hymns and other Religious Poetry for Children. By Dr. Doddridge. Ninth edition. 12mo. pp. 48, stiff covers. 1837. 2*d.*

Way (The) to Have Peace. By S. E. De M. 12mo sewed, pp. 16. 1856. 2*d.*

Way (The) of Truth; or, a Mother's Teachings from the Bible. 12mo. cloth, pp. iv. and 202. 1867. 2*s.*

Wedgwood.—The Principles of Geometrical Demonstration, reduced from the Original Conception of Space and Form. By H. Wedgwood, M.A. 12mo. cloth, pp. 48. 1844. 2*s.*

Wedgwood.—On the Development of the Understanding. By Hensleigh Wedgwood, A.M. 12mo. cloth, pp. 133. 1848. 3*s.*

Wedgwood.—The Geometry of the Three First Books of Euclid. By Direct Proof from Definitions Alone. With an Introduction on the Principles of the Science. By Hensleigh Wedgwood, M.A. 12mo. cloth, pp. 104. 1856. 3*s.*

Wedgwood.—On the Origin of Language. By Hensleigh Wedgwood, M.A., late Fellow of Christ College, Cambridge. 12mo. cloth, pp. 165. 1866. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Wedgwood.—A Dictionary of the English Language. By Hensleigh Wedgwood, M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. Vol. I. (A to D) 8vo. cloth, pp. xxiv. 508, 14*s.*; Vol. II. (E to P) 8vo. cloth, pp. 578, 14*s.*; Vol. III., Part I. (Q. to Sy), 8vo. pp. 366, 10*s.* 6*d.*; Vol. III., Part II. (T to W) 8vo., pp. 200, 5*s.* 6*d.* complete the Work. 1859 to 1865. Price of the complete work 44*s.*

"Dictionaries are a class of books not usually esteemed light reading; but no intelligent man were to be pitied who should find himself shut up on a rainy day in a lonely house in the dreariest part of Salisbury Plain, with no other means of recreation than that which Mr. Wedgwood's Dictionary of Etymology could afford him. He would read it through from cover to cover at a sitting, and only regret that he had not the second volume to begin upon forthwith. It is a very able book, of great research, full of delightful surprises, a repertory of the fairy tales of linguistic science."—Spectator.

Wékey.—A Grammar of the Hungarian Language, with appropriate exercises, a copious vocabulary, and specimens of Hungarian poetry. By Sigismund Wékey, late Aide-de-Camp to Kossuth. 12mo. sewed, pp. viii. and 150. 1852. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Weller.—An Improved Dictionary; English and French, and French and English, drawn from the best Sources extant in both Languages; in which are now first introduced many Technical, Scientific, Legal, Commercial, Naval, and Military Terms; and to which are added, Separate Vocabularies of Engineering and Railway Terms; of those descriptive of Steam Power and Steam Navigation; of Geographical Names, and those of Ancient Mythology, and of Persons of Classical Antiquity; and of Christian Names in present use; together with an English Pronouncing Dictionary for the use of Foreigners. By Edward Weller, late Professor of the Athenæum and Episcopal College of Bruges. Royal 8vo. cloth, pp. 384 and 340. 1864. 7*s.* 6*d.*

What is Truth? Post 8vo. pp. 124, cloth. 1854. 3*s.*

Wheeler.—The History of India. By J. Talboys Wheeler, Assistant Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department, Secretary to the Indian Record Commission, Author of "The Geography of Herodotus," etc. Vol. I. containing the Vedic Period and the Mahá Bhárata. With a Map of Ancient India to illustrate the Mahá Bhárata. 8vo. cloth, pp. lxxv. and 576. 1867. 18*s.*

The Second Volume containing the Rámáyana in the Press.

Wheeler.—Historical Sketches of North Carolina, from 1584 to 1851. Compiled from original records, official documents, and traditional statements. With biographical sketches of her distinguished statesmen, jurists, lawyers, soldiers, divines, etc. By John H. Wheeler. Illustrated with engravings. Vol. I., 8vo. cloth, pp. xxii. and 480. 1851. 15*s.*

Whildin.—Memoranda of the Strength of Materials used in Engineering Construction. Compiled and edited by J. K. Whildin, Civil Engineer. Second Edition. 8vo. cloth, pp. 62. 1867. 8*s.*

Whipple.—Literature and Life. Lectures by E. P. Whipple, Author of "Essays and Reviews." 8vo. sewed, pp. 114. 1851. 1*s.*

Whipple.—Character and Characteristic Men. By Edwin P. Whipple. 12mo. cloth, pp. 324. 1866. 9*s.*

Whitney.—Language and the Study of Language. A Course of Lectures on the Principles of Linguistic Science. By William Dwight Whitney, Professor of Sanskrit in Yale College, New Haven, U.S.A. Crown 8vo. cloth, pp. 500. 1868. 10*s.* 6*d.*

Whittier.—Snow Bound. A Winter Idyl. By John Greenleaf Whittier. 12mo. cloth, pp. 52. 1866. 6*s.*

Whittier.—The Poetical Works of John Greenleaf Whittier, Complete in 2 vols. With a Portrait. Blue and Gold Series. 24mo. cloth gilt edges, pp. viii., 395; vi. 420. 1865. 10*s.*

Whittier.—Maud Müller. By John G. Whittier. With Illustrations, by W. J. Hennessy. Small 4to. extra cloth, with gilt edges; 16 leaves, printed on one side only. 1866. 12*s.*

Whittier.—The Tent on the Beach, and other Poems. By John Greenleaf Whittier. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. vi. and 172. 1867. 6*s.*

Whittier.—The Prose Works of John Greenleaf Whittier. 2 vols., crown 8vo. cloth, pp. viii., 473; viii., 395. 1866. £1 1*s.*

Whitty.—The Governing Classes of Great Britain. Political Portraits. By Edward M. Whitty. 12mo. boards, pp. vi. and 288. With Lord Stanley's Portrait. 1859. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Who am I? By the Author of "Warning." 1 vol., 8vo. cloth. 4*s.*

Wikoff.—A New Yorker in the Foreign Office, and his Adventures in Paris. By Henry Wikoff. 12mo. cloth, pp. 299. 1858. 6*s.*

Williams.—First Lessons in the Maori Language, with a short Vocabulary. By W. L. Williams, B.A. Square 8vo. cloth, pp. 80. 1862. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Williams.—A Dictionary, English and Sanscrit. By Monier Williams, M.A. Published under the patronage of the Honourable East India Company. 4to. cloth, pp. xii. and 862. 1855. £3 3*s.*

Williams.—Lexicon Cornu-Britannicum. A Dictionary of the Ancient Celtic Language of Cornwall, in which the words are elucidated by copious examples from the Cornish works now remaining, with translations in English. The synonyms are also given in the cognate dialects of Welsh, Armoric, Irish, Gaelic, and Manx, showing at one view the connection between them. By the Rev. Robert Williams, M.A., Christ Church, Oxford, Parish Curate of Llangadwaladr and Rhydycroesan, Denbighshire. Sewed. 3 parts. pp. 400. 1865. £2 5*s.*

Williams.—The Middle Kingdom. A Survey of the Geography, Government, Education, Social Life, Arts, Religion, etc., of the Chinese Empire and its inhabitants. With a new Map of the Empire. By S. Wells Williams, Author of "Easy Lessons in Chinese," "English and Chinese Vocabulary," "Tonic Dictionary of the Chinese Language." With Portraits, Wood-cuts, and Maps. 2 vols. 8vo., pp. viii. 614, xxii. and 590. 1861. £1 1*s.*

Willis.—On the Special Function of the Sudoriparous and Lymphatic Systems, their Vital Import, and their bearing on Health and Disease. By Robert Willis, M.D. 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 72. 1867. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Wilson.—A Brief Examination of Prevalent Opinions on the Inspiration of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments. By a Lay Member of the Church of England. With an introduction, by Henry Bristow Wilson, B.D., Vicar of Great Staughton, Hants. 8vo. cloth, pp. lxi. and 254. 1861. 8*s.* 6*d.*

Wilson.—The Holy Bible. By the Rev. Thomas Wilson. (See under Bible.)

Wilson.—Select Specimens of the Theatre of the Hindus. Translated from the Original Sanskrit. By Horace Hayman Wilson, M.A., F.R.S. Second Edition. 2 vols., 8vo. cloth, pp. lxx. and 384, 415. 15*s.*

Contents.—Vol. I.—Preface—Treatise on the Dramatic System of the Hindus—Dramas translated from the Original Sanskrit—The Mrichchakati, or the Toy Cart—Vikrama and Urvasi, or the Hero and the Nymph—Uttara Ramá Cheritra, or continuation of the History of Ramá. Vol. II.—Dramas translated from the Original Sanskrit—Málatí and Mádhava, or the Stolen Marriage—Mudrá Rakshasa, or the Signet of the Minister—Retnávali, or the Necklace—Appendix, containing short accounts of different Dramas.

Wilson.—The Present State of the Cultivation of Oriental Literature. A Lecture delivered at the Meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society. By the Director, Professor H. H. Wilson. 8vo. sewed, pp. 26. 1852. 6*d.*

Wilson.—Works of the late Horace Hayman Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., Member of the Royal Asiatic Societies of Calcutta and Paris, and of the Oriental Society of Germany, etc., and Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford. Vols. I. and II. Also, under this title, "Essays and Lectures" chiefly on the Religion of the Hindus, by the late H. H. Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., etc. Collected and edited by Dr. Reinhold Rost. 2 vols., 8vo. cloth, pp. xiii. 399, vi. and 416. 1861-62. £1 1*s.*

Wilson.—Works of the late Horace Hayman Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., Member of the Royal Asiatic Societies of Calcutta and Paris, and of the Oriental Society of Germany, etc., and Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford. Vols. III., IV. and V. Also, under the title of "Essays Analytical, Critical, and Philological," on subjects connected with Sanskrit Literature. Collected and edited by Reinhold Rost. 3 vols., 8vo. cloth, pp. 408, 406, and 390. 1864-65. £1 16*s.*

Wilson.—Works of the late Horace Hayman Wilson. Vols. VI. VII. and VIII. Also, under the title of the Vishnu Puráná, a system of Hindu mythology and tradition. Translated from the original Sanskrit, and Illustrated by Notes derived chiefly from other Puránás. By the late H. H. Wilson, Boden Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford, etc., etc. Edited by Fitzedward Hall, M.A., D.C.L., Oxon. Vols. I. to III. 8vo. cloth, pp. cxl. and 200, 344, and 344. 1864-66. £1 11*s.* 6*d.* [Vols. IV. and V. in the press.

Wilson.—Catholicity Spiritual and Intellectual. An attempt at vindicating the Harmony of Faith and Knowledge. A series of Discourses. By Thomas Wilson, M.A., late Minister of St. Peter's Mancroft, Norwich, Author of "Travels in Egypt," etc. 8vo. cloth, pp. 232. 1850. 5*s.*

Wilson.—The Village Pearl. A Domestic Poem. With Miscellaneous Pieces. By John Crauford Wilson. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii. and 140. 1852. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Wilson.—The Water-cure, its Principles and Practice. A Guide in the Preservation of Health and Cure of Chronic Disease. With illustrative cases. By James Wilson, M.D. Fifth Edition. 8vo. sewed, pp. 725. 1859. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Wilson.—Phrasis: a Treatise on the History and Structure of the different Languages of the World, with a comparative view of the Forms of their Words and the Style of their Expressions. By J. Wilson, A.M. 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 334. 1864. 16*s.*

Winckelmann.—The History of Ancient Art among the Greeks. By John Winckelmann. From the German, by G. H. Lodge. Beautifully Illustrated. 8vo. cloth, pp. viii. and 254. 1850. 12*s.*

Winer.—Grammar of the Chaldee Language, as contained in the Bible and Targums. By Dr. G. B. Winer. Translated by H. B. Hackett. 8vo. boards, pp. 152. 1845. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Winslow.—A Comprehensive Tamil and English Dictionary of High and Low Tamil. By the Rev. Miron Winslow, D.D., American Missionary, Madras, assisted by competent Native Scholars: in part from Manuscript materials of the late Rev. Joseph Knight and others. 4to. boards, pp. xiv. and 976. 1862. £3 13*s.* 6*d.*

Winthrop.—Life and Letters of John Winthrop, Governor of the Massachusetts' Bay Company at their emigration to New England, 1630. By Robert C. Winthrop. Two Portraits; Plate of Groton Church, Suffolk; and facsimile Autographs. 8vo. cloth, pp. xii. and 452. 1864. 14*s.*

Winthrop.—Life and Letters of John Winthrop. Vol. II. from his Embarkation for New England, in 1630, with the Charter and Company of Massachusetts' Bay to his Death, in 1649. By Robert C. Winthrop. Portrait. 8vo. cloth, pp. xv. and 483. 1867. 14*s.*

Winter Journey from Gloucester to Norway. 18mo. sewed, pp. 100. With a Map. 1867. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Wise.—Captain Brand, of the "Centipede;" a Pirate of Eminence in the West Indies: his Loves and Exploits, together with some Account of the Singular Manner in which he departed this Life. By Lieut. H. A. Wise, U.S.N. 12mo. fancy cover, pp. 304. 1860. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Wise.—Commentary on the Hindu System of Medicine. By T. A. Wise, M.D., Bengal Medical Service. 8vo. cloth, pp. xx. and 432. 1845. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Witt.—An Effectual and Simple Remedy for Scarlet Fever and Measles. With an Appendix of Cases. By Charles Witt. Fourth Edition. 8vo. sewed, pp. 32. 1865. 1*s.*

Wolfram.—The German Echo. A Faithful Mirror of German Every-day Conversation. By Ludwig Wolfram. With a Vocabulary, by Henry Skelton. Third Edition. 12mo. cloth, pp. 69. 1864. 3*s.*

Worcester.—A Pronouncing, Explanatory, and Synonymous Dictionary of the English Language. By Joseph E. Worcester, LL.D. New Edition. 8vo. cloth, pp. 565. 1864. 7*s.* 6*d.*

Worthen.—A Cyclopædia of Drawing. designed as a Text-Book for the Mechanic, Architect, Engineer, and Surveyor, comprising Geometrical Projection, Mechanical, Architectural, and Topographical Drawing, Perspective, and Isometry. Edited by W. E. Worthen. Royal 8vo. cloth, pp. 410. 1864. £1 5*s.*

Wylie.—Notes on Chinese Literature; with introductory Remarks on the Progressive Advancement of the Art; and a list of translations from the Chinese into various European Languages. By A. Wylie, Agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society in China. 4to. cloth, pp. 296. 1868. £1 10*s.*

Xenos.—East and West; a Diplomatic History of the Annexation of the Ionian Islands to the Kingdom of Greece. Accompanied by a Translation of the Despatches exchanged between the Greek Government and its Plenipotentiary at London, and a Collection of the Principal Treaties, Conventions, and Protocols concerning the Ionian Islands and Greece, concluded between 1797 and 1864. By Stefanos Xenos. Royal 8vo. cloth, pp. iv. and 304. 1865. 12*s.*

Yates.—A Bengalí Grammar. By the late Rev. W. Yates, D.D., Reprinted, with improvements, from his Introduction to the Bengáli Language. Edited by I. Wenger. Fcap. 8vo., boards, pp. iv. and 150. 1864. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Yates.—The Elements of the Science of Grammar, put forward and explained in a totally different manner from what they have ever before been, and based on rigid definitions, incontrovertible axioms, and general principles, illustrated by a comparison of the structure of the English and Turkish languages, so as to be at once an introduction to the science of grammar, for all who wish to learn that science, and a complete Turkish grammar for the student of that language. By Edward Yates, B.A., Barrister-at-Law. Most kindly and valuably assisted by Captains Mahmood and Hussein, of the Imperial Guard of the Sultan, and by Hiry Bey. 12mo. cloth, pp. ii. and 226. 1857. 5*s.*

Yates.—Descriptive Catalogue of a Collection of Current Coins of all Countries, in the International Exhibition. Class 13, North Gallery. By James Yates, M.A., F.R.S. 12mo. sewed, pp. 69. 1862. 6*d.*

Zeller.—Strauss and Renan. An Essay by E. Zeller. Translated from the German, with Introductory Remarks by the Translator. Post 8vo. cloth, pp. 110. 1866. 2*s.* 6*d.*

MAGAZINES.

Anthropological Review (The). Published Quarterly, at 4*s.* each each number.

Chess World (The). Published monthly, at 1*s.* each number.

Englishwoman's Review (The). Published quarterly, at 1*s.* each number.

Geological Magazine (The). Published monthly, at 1*s.* 6*d.* e number.

Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland (The). Published twice a year.

Orthodox Catholic Review (The). Published monthly, at 6*d.* each number.

Trübner's American and Oriental Literary Record. Published monthly, at 6*d.* each number.

Westminster Review (The). Published quarterly, at 6*s.* each number.

A LIST of the PUBLICATIONS of TRÜBNER & CO., in the RUSSIAN LANGUAGE, may be had on Application.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY WERTHEIMER, LEA AND CO.
FINSBURY CIRCUS.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS-URBANA
294.1M8901868 C001 V003
ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS ON THE ORIGIN AN
3 0112 014311671

LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS
294.1
M89o
1868
v. 4

Return this book on or before the Latest Date stamped below.

Theft, mutilation, and underlining of books are reasons for disciplinary action and may result in dismissal from the University.

University of Illinois Library

DEC 25 1965

MAY 30 1968

AUG 9 1975
JUL 24 1975

APR 4 1977

APR 4 1977
JUL 16 1990

L161—O-1096

ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS

ON THE

ORIGIN AND HISTORY

OF

THE PEOPLE OF INDIA,

THEIR RELIGION AND INSTITUTIONS,

COLLECTED, TRANSLATED, AND ILLUSTRATED,

BY

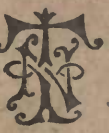
J. MUIR, D.C.L., LL.D., PH.D.,

CORRESPONDING MEMBER OF THE ROYAL PRUSSIAN ACADEMY OF SCIENCES, AND OF THE AMERICAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY, CORRESPONDENT OF THE FRENCH ACADEMY OF INSCRIPTIONS AND BELLES LETTRES, HONORARY MEMBER OF THE GERMAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY, AND FOREIGN MEMBER OF THE LEYDEN LITERARY SOCIETY.

VOLUME FOURTH.

COMPARISON OF THE VEDIC WITH THE LATER REPRESENTATIONS OF THE PRINCIPAL INDIAN DEITIES.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED.



LONDON:

TRÜBNER & CO., 57 AND 59, LUDGATE HILL.

1873.

(All rights reserved.)

HERTFORD:
PRINTED BY STEPHEN AUSTIN AND SONS.

294.1
M890
1868
v.1.4

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.*

THE object which I have had in view in the present Volume is to compare the representations which are given of the Indian deities Brahmā, Vishṇu, and Rudra, and of the goddess Ambikā, in the Vedic hymns and Brāhmaṇas, with the accounts which we find in the legendary poems called Itihāsas and Purāṇas, and to show, so far as the materials at our command will allow, to what extent, and by what steps in each case, the earlier conceptions were gradually modified in the later works.

The First Chapter (pp. 3–62) treats of the deity who is described in the later hymns of the Rig-veda, and in the Atharva-veda, under the different titles of Viśva-karman, Hiraṇyagarbha, and Prajāpati, and appears to correspond with the Brahmā of the more modern legendary books.

Though this god was originally unconnected with Vishṇu and Rudra, while at a subsequent period he came to be regarded in systematic mythology as the first person in the triad of which they formed the second and third members, yet the general idea entertained of his character, if at all altered, has been less modified in the course of his history than is the case in regard to the other two deities.

* [With the exception of the notes in pages xi., viii., and x., and the alterations in the figures showing the pages in which the several chapters and sections begin and end, rendered necessary by the additions made in this second edition, this preface is reprinted nearly as it originally stood.]

Brahmā was from the beginning conceived as the Creator, and he continued to be regarded as fulfilling the same function even after he had sunk into a subordinate position, and had come to be represented by the votaries of Vishṇu and Mahādeva respectively as the mere creature and agent of one or other of those two gods (see pp. 188, 194, 230, 267, 273). In later times Brahmā has had few special worshippers; the only spot where he is periodically adored being at Pushkara in Rajputana.* Three of the acts which the earlier legends ascribe to him, e.g. to Prūshā, the assumption of the forms of a tortoise, a boar,* and a fish, are in later works transferred to Vishṇu (see pp. 27, 33 f., 36 and 38).

* See Professor H. H. Wilson's Essay on the Padma Purāṇa, in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. V., p. 309, reprinted in vol. iii. of his collected works, pp. 74 f.; and the same author's Oxford Lectures, p. 21. In the preface to his edition of the Nārada Pancharātra, published in the Bibliotheca Indica in 1865, p. 4, the Rev. K. M. Banerjea refers to this subject: "Of the three select divinities," (Brahmā, Vishṇu, and Śiva) "the first, however, had never become an object of special adoration, having been guilty of an incestuous attempt on his own daughter." (See pp. 45 ff. of this volume.) "The incident is thus accounted for in the work now presented to the public." The words referred to will be quoted below. They occur in the tenth section, vv. 30 f. It had been previously related that Brahmā had exhorted his son Nārada to take a wife and so people the world (śrishṭiṁ kuru mahābhāga kṛitvā dāra-parigraham, v. 5). Hereupon Nārada, who was a votary of Krishṇa, becomes angry, affirms that devotion to that god is the sole way to attain felicity, and denounces his father as an erring instructor (vv. 7–22). Brahmā in reply curses Nārada, and dooms him to a life of sensuality and subjection to women, etc. (vv. 23–29). Nārada pays back the imprecation in the lines translated by Mr. Banerjea, which I give in the original, with some of those that follow: Tātasya vachanaṁ śrutvā chukopa Nārado muniḥ | śaśāpa pitaraṁ śīghraṁ dāruṇaṁ cha yathochitam | 31. Apūjyo bhava dushṭa tvaṁ tvan-mantropāsakaḥ kutaḥ | agamyāgamanechchhā te bhavishyati na saṁśayaḥ | 32. Nāradasya tu śāpena so 'pūjyo jagatāṁ vidhiḥ | dṛishṭvā sva-kanyā-rūpaṁ cha paśchād dhāvitavān purā | 33. Pumaḥ svadehaṁ tatyāja bharsitaḥ Sanakādibhiḥ | lajjitaḥ kāma-yuktaś cha punar Brahmā babhūva saḥ | 34. Nāradas tu namaskṛitya pitaraṁ kamalodbhavam | vipra-deham parityajya gandharvaś cha babhūva saḥ | 30. "Hearing the words of his father, the muni Nārada became incensed, and straightway cursed him dreadfully, as was befitting. 31. 'Wretch, become no object of adoration: how shall any one be devoted to the forms of thy worship? Thou shalt without doubt lust after her who is no fit object of thy desires.' 32. Through this curse of Nārada, the creator of the world ceased to be an object of worship. Beholding the beauty of his daughter, he formerly ran after her. 33. Afterwards, being reproached by Sanaka and others, he abandoned his corporeal form. Brahmā afterwards became ashamed, being a slave to lust. 34. And Nārada, having made obeisance to his lotus-born father, forsook his Brahmanical body, and became a Gandharva." His loves are then related.

The Second Chapter (pp. 63–298) first of all describes the original conception of Vishṇu as he is celebrated in the hymns of the Rig-veda (pp. 63–97). The particular attribute by which he is there distinguished from every other deity is that of striding across the heavens by three paces. This phrase is interpreted by one of the ancient commentators as denoting the threefold manifestations of light, as fire on earth, as lightning in the atmosphere, and as the sun in the sky; and by another as designating the three stages of the sun's daily movement, his rising, culmination, and setting. The latter explanation seems to satisfy best the idea of movement expressed in the description; but the conception is not distinctly developed in any of the texts. Some of the highest divine functions and attributes are also assigned to Vishṇu; and we might thus be led to suppose that the authors of these hymns regarded him as the Supreme Deity. But this supposition is invalidated by the fact that Indra is sometimes associated with Vishṇu in the performance of these functions, and that several other deities are magnified in terms of similar import (pp. 97–114). The Third Section (pp. 114–121) treats of Vishṇu as one of the sons of Aditi. The origin here assigned to this god would lead us to conclude that he was originally considered as of no higher rank than the other beings who bear the same name of Ādityas. The Fourth

* Compare the passage from the Taittirīya Saṅhitā, vii. 1, 5, 1, quoted in the first volume of this work, p. 52.

Section (pp. 121–156) contains the legends relating to the same god in the Brāhmaṇas, in which he is identified with sacrifice; while in one of them he is spoken of as a dwarf. The later accounts of the dwarf incarnation are next adduced as recorded in the Rāmāyaṇa, the Mahābhārata, and in the Vishṇu and Bhāgavata Purāṇas. In the Fifth Section a passage is quoted from the Nirukta (pp. 156 ff.), in which the gods are classified, and the most prominent places are assigned to Agni, Vāyu or Indra, and Sūrya, who seem to have been regarded by the author as the triad of deities in whom the Supreme Spirit was especially revealed, while Vishṇu and Rudra are merely mentioned as gods who were worshipped conjointly with Indra and Soma, respectively. The later triad of Brahmā, Vishṇu and Rudra, seems therefore to have been then unknown. The remainder of this Section (pp. 163–298), and pp. 441–491 of the Appendix, are chiefly occupied by quotations from the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata, containing a great variety of details relating to Rāma and Kṛishṇa, the two heroes who came ultimately to be regarded as the principal incarnations of Vishṇu; and an attempt is made by an examination of these texts to elucidate the question whether or not a divine nature was ascribed to these two personages by the authors of the two poems as they originally stood. The passages adduced from the Mahābhārata relating to Kṛishṇa make frequent mention of Mahādeva also, and illustrate the conceptions entertained of him at that epoch of Indian history when they were composed. This Section contains also many texts which indicate the existence of a strong rivalry between the adherents of these two gods. In different passages here cited, Vishṇu and Rudra (Mahādeva) are both described by their respective votaries as one with the Supreme Spirit; while in some places they are identified with one another.

The Third Chapter (pp. 299–437) traces the mythological history of Rudra as he is represented in the Rig-veda (pp. 299–320), in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (321–331), in the Atharva-veda (332–339), in the Brāhmaṇas and Mahābhārata (339–355), in the Upanishads (355–363), and in various further texts from the Itihāsas and Purāṇas which describe some of this god's proceedings, and indicate the struggles of his votaries to introduce his worship, as illustrated in the story of Daksha's sacrifice (363–393). A summary of the conclusions deducible from these Sections is given in pp. 393–405. Pages 405–420 contain an inquiry into the origin of the Linga worship,—though unfortunately nothing better than a negative result is obtained;—and into the question whether or not Mahādeva's worship was most prevalent in the South of India in the epic era. This Chapter concludes with an account of the different representations of the goddess called variously Ambikā, Umā, Kālī, Karālī, Pārvatī, Durgā, etc., which we find in the Kena and Muṇḍaka Upanishads, in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, in the Rāmāyaṇa, Harivaṁśa, and Mahābhārata, and in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa (pp. 420–437).

A further indication of the various matters illustrated in this Volume will be obtained by consulting the Index under the names Brahmā, Vishṇu, Rāma, Kṛishṇa, Umā, etc.

It will be apparent to all Sanskrit scholars that the main results at which I have arrived in regard to Vishṇu, Rudra, and Ambikā, are not new. Rosen (in the notes to his translation of the R.V. p. li.), Burnouf (Pref. to Bhāg. Pur. vol. iii. p. xxii.), whose remarks are subjoined in a note,* and Wilson (Pref. to transl. of R.V. i. p. xxxiv.), had already drawn attention to the text of Yāska and to the Commentary of Durga, by which it is shown that the three steps of Vishṇu were interpreted by the ancient commentators in the manner which I have indicated in pp. 64 ff.

In the same way Wilson, Weber, and Whitney (see pp. 394 ff. of this Volume), had pointed out that the Rudra of the Rig-veda is very different from the Rudra or Mahādeva of the Purāṇas. And in pp. 421 ff. I have quoted the dissertations of Professor Weber on the mythological history of Ambikā or Umā. The whole, therefore, that I can claim to have effected is to have brought together, and to have illustrated to the best of my power, all the most important texts which I could discover to have any bearing on the subjects which I have handled.

* "We can at this day go further still, and affirm that the Vishṇu of the Vedas is in no way the Vishṇu of the mythologists. A commentator of a certain authority, Durgāchārya, explaining the Nirukta of Yāska, when he arrives at the text of Medhātithi published by Rosen," (i.e. R.V. i. 22, 17 ff.) "says positively that Vishṇu is the sun, either because he enters into the heaven, or because he entirely occupies it. This interpretation, which he derives from Yāska himself, leaves no doubt on the question what we are to understand by the Vishṇu of the Vedas, who takes three steps. It is manifestly the luminary of day regarded in the three principal moments of his course, his rising, meridional position, and setting; and there is none of the expressions of the Vedic texts in which this god appears, making himself in three steps master of the celestial vault, to which this explanation given by Yāska several centuries before our era does not apply. We learn by this example what prudence it is indispensable to bring to the studies by the aid of which criticism must restore the chain which connects the mythical development of the Indian religion with the conceptions of the primitive naturalism of the Vedas. Neither the identity of the names, nor even that of the sense is a sufficiently sure guide; and the ideas, though originally simple, are clothed in forms either so different, or so easy to be confounded, that we cannot judge of the details without having understood and embraced the whole."

My best thanks are due to the different scholars who are mentioned in the course of the Work as having given me assistance; and in particular to Professor Aufrecht, whose name recurs perpetually in the following pages, and who has favoured me with the most valuable suggestions and information in respect particularly to the sense of the Vedic texts, which long and careful study has rendered him so competent to interpret.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

With the exception of a variety of additions, interspersed through the work, which in all fill about 60 pp., but little alteration has been made in this Edition. The most important additions, chiefly in notes, will be found in pp. 39 f., 78 f., 126–131, 138 f., 143 f., 151–156, 165, 167, 200–203, 255 f., 261 f., 267, 278, 289 f., 298, 301–303, 304, 310, 314 f., 317, 321, 327 ff., 337, 341, 347 f., 381, 393, 403, 406, 415 f., 420, 425, 441 f., 456, 464 f., 472, 474, 476, 491–493, 494, 496, and in the "Additional Notes." The addition in pp. 151–156, from the Matsya Purāṇa, contains a statement (unusual, if not altogether unknown in other Indian works) in reference to Vishṇu's incarnations, which represents seven of them as being the result of a curse uttered against the god by Śukra, the priest of the Asuras, whose mother he (Vishṇu) had slain. At the same time it is affirmed, strangely enough, that these incarnations, though occasioned by a curse, were intended for the repression of unrighteousness when it should become dominant on the earth.

CONTENTS.

PAGES.

v.—xii. PREFACES.

1, 2. PLAN OF THE WORK.

3—62. CHAPTER I. TEXTS FROM THE VEDIC HYMNS, BRĀHMAṆAS, AND PURĀṆAS, ETC., RELATING TO THE CREATION OF THE UNIVERSE, AND TO THE DEITIES VIŚVAKARMAN, DAKSHA, ADITI, HIRAṆYAGARBHA, SKAMBHA, PRAJĀPATI, PURUSHA, NĀRĀYAṆA, AND PRAHMĀ.

3—20. SECT. I. Texts from the Rig and Atharva-vedas regarding the creation and some of the deities just named.

20—62. SECT. II. Creation; primeval waters; mundane egg; Brahmā or Prajāpati; morality of the Indian gods; creation of the gods, etc.; according to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, Manu, the Rāmāyaṇa, the Vishṇu and Bhāgavata Purāṇas, and the Harivaṁśa.

63—298. CHAPTER II. VISHṆU, AS REPRESENTED IN THE VEDIC HYMNS, THE BRĀHMAṆAS, THE ITIHĀSAS, AND THE PURĀṆAS.

63—97. SECT. I. Passages in the Hymns of the Rig-veda relating to Vishṇu.

97—114. SECT. II. Subordinate position occupied by Vishṇu in the Hymns of the Rig-veda, as compared with other deities, Indra, Varuṇa, etc.

114—121. SECT. III. Vishṇu as one of the twelve Ādityas, according to the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas.

121—156. SECT. IV. Stories regarding Vishṇu from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, the Panchaviṁśa Brāhmaṇa, the Rāmāyaṇa, the Mahābhārata, and the Purāṇas.

PAGES.

156—298. SECT. V. Vishṇu, as represented in the Nirukta, and his character and incarnations as described in the Rāmāyaṇa, Mahābhārata, and Purāṇas; with Notices of Mahādeva.

299—437. CHAPTER III. RUDRA OR MAHĀDEVA, AND AMBIKĀ OR UMĀ, AS REPRESENTED IN THE VEDIC HYMNS, BRĀHMAṆAS AND UPANISHADS, AND IN THE ITIHĀSAS AND PURAṆAS.

299—320. SECT. I. Rudra, as represented in the Hymns of the Rig-veda.

321—331. SECT. II. Passages relating to Rudra, and to Ambikā, from the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā of the white Yajur-veda.

332—339. SECT. III. Passages relating to Rudra, Bhava, Sarva, etc., from the Atharva-veda.

339—355. SECT. IV. Passages relating to Rudra from the Śatapatha and Śānkhāyana Brāhmaṇas; and from the Mahābhārata.

355—363. SECT. V. Passages relating to Rudra from the Upanishads.

363—393. SECT. VI. Some further texts from the Itihāsas and Purāṇas relative to Rudra.

393—420. SECT. VII. Conclusions deducible from the preceding sections in regard to the mythological history of Rudra: inquiry in regard to the origin of the Linga worship, and the question whether in the epic era Rudra was especially worshipped in the South of India.

420—437. SECT. VIII. Earlier and later representations of Ambikā, Umā, Kālī, Karālī, Pārvatī, or Durgā, according to the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, the Kena and Muṇḍaka Upanishads, the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, the Mahābhārata, and the Purāṇas.

439—501. APPENDIX, CONTAINING CORRECTIONS AND ADDITIONAL TEXTS.

439. NOTE A. Passage from the Uttara Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa regarding the creation by Prajāpati.

439—441. NOTE B. Passage from the Rāmāyaṇa regarding Vishṇu's three steps.

441. NOTE C. Reference to some variations in the text of Schlegel's and the Bombay Rāmāyaṇa.

PAGES.

441—491. NOTE D. Passages from the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata relating to the legendary history of Rāma, and the question whether in the oldest text of the former poem he was represented as an incarnation of Vishṇu.

491—493. NOTE E. Quotations from the Tāṇḍya Mahābrāhmaṇa regarding the Yatis.

494. NOTE F. Opinions of Professors Roth and Aufrecht regarding the meanings of the root śru.

494. NOTE G. Quotation from the Rāmāyaṇa regarding Rāvaṇa.

494—497. NOTE H. Story of Indra and Indrajit.

497—500. NOTE I. Hymn x. 127 of the Rigveda; and Durgā-stava, or Rātrisūkta.

500—501. NOTE J. Quotation from the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa regarding the tongues of Agni.

502—508. ADDITIONAL NOTES AND CORRECTIONS, including further remarks and quotations regarding the word Śipivishṭa.

509—524. INDEX.

ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS.

VOLUME FOURTH.

PLAN OF THE PRESENT VOLUME.

Reference has already been made in the second volume of this work (pp. 212–216, 1st ed.)[1] to the great difference which is discoverable between the mythology of the Vedas and that of the Indian epic poems and Purāṇas; and this difference was there illustrated by comparing the representations of Vishṇu and Rudra which are given in the hymns of the Rig-veda with those which we find in the productions of a later age. On the same occasion I intimated my intention of treating the same subject in greater detail in a subsequent portion of my work. In pursuance of this design, I propose to collect in the present volume the most important texts regarding the origin of the universe, and the characters of the three principal Indian gods, which occur in the Vedic hymns and Brāhmaṇas, and to compare these passages with the later narratives and popular speculations on the same subjects which are to be found in the Mahābhārata, the Rāmāyaṇa, and the Purāṇas.

This gradual modification of Indian mythological conceptions will indeed be found to have already commenced in the Rig-veda itself, if we compare its later with its earlier portions; it becomes more clearly discernible when we descend from the hymns to the Brāhmaṇas; and continues to exhibit itself still more prominently in the Puranic writers, who, through a long course of ages, gave free scope to their fancy in the embellishment of old, and the invention of new, stories in honour of their favourite gods, till at last the representations given of the most popular divinities became not only at variance with the characteristics ascribed to their prototypes in the Vedas, but even in some respects different from the descriptions which occur in the older Purāṇas themselves.

[1] The passage occurs at pp. 201–204 of the 2nd ed.

These successive mutations in Indian mythology need not occasion us any surprise, as they merely afford another exemplification of a process which may be remarked in the history of all nations which have given free scope to thought, to feeling, and to imagination, in matters of religion.

In carrying out the plan just sketched, I shall, first of all, quote the texts in the Vedic hymns which refer to the creation of the world, and to the deities Viśvakarman, Hiraṇyagarbha, Prajāpati, etc.; these shall be succeeded (2) by passages from the Brāhmaṇas, and (3) by quotations from Manu, the Mahābhārata, the Rāmāyaṇa, and the Purāṇas having reference to the same subjects.

I shall then proceed in a similar order with the various texts which relate to the gods Vishṇu and Rudra, and the goddess Ambikā, with occasional notices of other Indian deities.

CHAPTER I.

TEXTS FROM THE VEDIC HYMNS, BRÂHMAṆAS, AND PURÂṆAS, ETC., RELATING TO THE CREATION OF THE UNIVERSE, AND TO THE DEITIES VIS'VAKARMAN, BRAHMAṆASPATI, DAKSHA, ADITI, HIRAṆYAGARBHA, SKAMBHA, PRAJÂPATI, PURUSHA NÂRÂYAṆA, BRAHMÂ, ETC.

SECT. I.—Texts from the Rig- and Atharva-vedas regarding the creation and some of the deities just named.

SPECULATIONS ABOUT CREATION,—RIG-VEDA, X. 129 (= TAITTIRÎYA BRÂHMAṆA, ii. 8, 9, 3).

R. V. x. 129, 1 ff.[1]—Na asad âsîd no sad âsît tadânîm na âsîd rajo no vyoma paro yat | kim âvarîvaḥ kuha kasya śarmann ambhaḥ kim âsîd gahanaṁ gabhîram | 2. Na mṛityur âsîd amṛitaṁ na tarhi na râtryâḥ ahnaḥ[1] âsît praketaḥ | ânîd avâtaṁ svadhayâ tad ekaṁ tasmâd ha anyad na paraḥ kinchanâsa | 3. Tamaḥ âsît tamasâ gûḷham agre[2] apraketaṁ salilaṁ sarvam âḥ idam | tuchhyena âbhv apihitaṁ yad âsît tapasas tad

[1] The Vishṇu Purâṇa, i. 2, 21 f., quotes (from some source which is not indicated) a verse which seems to be in some degree founded on the text before us, and employs it in support of the Sânkhya doctrine of Pradhâna: Veda-vâda-vido viprâḥ niyatâḥ Brahma-vâdinaḥ | paṭhanti vai tam evârtham Pradhâna-pratipâdakam | 22. Nâho na râtrir na nabho na bhûmir nâsît tamo jyotir abhûd na vâ 'nyat | śrotrâdi-buddhyânupalabhyam ekam prâdhânikam Brahma pumâṁs tadâsît | "Brahmans learned in the tenets of the Veda, firm assertors of its principles, repeat the following statement establishing the doctrine of Pradhâna: 22. 'There was neither day nor night, neither sky nor earth; there was neither darkness nor light, nor anything else. There was then the One, Brahma possessing the character of Pradhâna, the Male, incomprehensible by the ear, or other senses, or by the intellect.'" See Dr. Hall's ed. of Wilson's V. P, vol. i., pp. 23 ff., with the Editor's notes.

[2] These words are quoted by Kullûka or Manu, i. 5, of which passage this may be the germ. In the S'atapatha Brâhmaṇa, x. 6, 5, 1 (= Bṛihad Âraṇyaka Upan-mahinā 'jāyataikam | 4. Kāmas[3] tad agre samavarttatādhi manaso retaḥ prathamaṁ yad āsīt | sato bandhum asati niravindan hṛidi pratīshya kavayo manīshā | 5. (Vāj. S. xxxiii. 74) Tiraśchīno vitato raśmir eshām adhaḥ svid āsīd upari svid āsīt | retodhāḥ āsan mahimānaḥ āsan svadhā avastāt prayatiḥ parastāt | 6. Ko anga veda kaḥ iha pravochat kutaḥ ājātā kutaḥ iyaṁ visṛishtiḥ | arvāg devāḥ asya visarjjanena atha ko veda yataḥ ābabhūva | 7. Iyaṁ visṛishtir yataḥ ābabhūva yadi vā dadhe yadi vā na | yo asyādhyakshaḥ parame vyoman so anga veda yadi vā na veda |

"There was then neither non-entity, nor entity; there was no atmosphere, nor the sky which is above. What enveloped [all]? where, in the receptacle of what [was it hid]? was it water,[4] the deep abyss? 2. Death was not then, nor immortality; there was no distinction of day or night: That, being One, breathed calmly, in self-dependence: there was nothing different from It [that One] or above It. 3. Darkness existed; originally enveloped in darkness, this universe was undistinguishable water; that One which lay void,[5] and wrapped in a husk [or in nothingness], was developed by the power of fervour. 4. Desire first arose in It, which was the primal germ of mind; [and which] the wise, seeking by their intellect, have discovered in their heart to be the bond between non-entity and entity. 5. The ray [or cord] which stretched across these [worlds],—was it above, or was it below? There were impregnating energies, and mighty powers; a self-supporting principle beneath, and energy above. 6. Who knows, who here can declare, whence has sprung, whence, this creation? The gods are subsequent to the development of this [universe]; who then knows from what it arose? 7. From what ishad, pp. 26 ff., in Bibl. Ind.), it is said, Na eva iha kinchana agre āsīt | mṛityunā eva idam āvṛitam āsīt | "Originally there was nothing here. This was enveloped by Death," etc. See also the Taitt. Br. ii. 2, 9, 1 ff., quoted in the first volume of this work, p. 27.

[3] In the passages which I shall quote from the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, etc., further on, we shall see that the creative acts of Prajāpati are constantly said to have been preceded by desire: so 'kāmayata, "he desired," etc. In a hymn of the Atharva V. (ix. 2) Kāma is personified as a deity. See the fifth vol. of this work, pp. 402 ff.

[4] In regard to water, as the origin of all things, see verse 3, and the quotations which are given further on, from Ṛ. V. x. 82, 5 f., x. 72, 6; the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, etc.

[5] See Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon under the words ābhu and tuchhya.

source this creation arose and whether [any one] made it or not,[6]—He who in the highest heaven is its ruler, He knows, or [even] He does not know."

See Professor Müller's translation of this remarkable hymn, his enthusiastic appreciation of its merits, and his remarks in regard to its age, in his "History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature," pp. 559–566; and Professor Goldstücker's observations on the same subject in his "Pāṇini," pp. 144 f. The hymn is also translated and illustrated in the fifth volume of this work, pp. 356 ff., to which I refer.

VIŚVAKARMAN,—RIG-VEDA, x. 81 AND 82 (=VĀJ. SANH. xvii. 17–23; 25–31; AND TAITT. SANH. iv. 6, 2, 1 ff.).

R. V. x. 81, 1 ff.—Yaḥ imā viśvā bhuvanāni juhvad ṛishir hotā nyashīdat pitā naḥ | sa āśishā draviṇam ichhamānaḥ prathama-chhad avarān[7] āviveśa | 2. Kiṁ svid āsīd adhishṭhānam ārambhaṇaṁ kathamat svit kathā 'sīt | yato bhūmiṁ janayan Viśvakarmā vi dyām aurṇod mahinā viśvachakshāḥ | 3. (A. V. 13, 2, 26) Viśvataśchakshur uta viśvatomukho viśvatobāhur uta viśvataspāt | sam bāhubhyāṁ dhamati [namati: T. S.] sam patatrair dyāvā-bhūmī janayan devaḥ ekaḥ[8] | 4. Kiṁ svid vanaṁ [R. V. x. 31, 7] kaḥ u sa vṛikshaḥ āsa yato dyāvā-pṛithivī nishṭatakshuḥ | manīshiṇo manasā pṛichhatedu tad yad adhyatishṭhad bhuvanāni dhārayan | 5. Yā te dhāmāni paramāṇi yā 'vamā yā madhyamā Viśvakarmann utemā | śiksha sakhibhyo havishi svadhāvaḥ svayaṁ yajasva tanvaṁ vṛidhānaḥ | 6. (=S. V. 2, 939.) Viśvakarman havishā vāvṛidhānaḥ svayaṁ yajasva pṛithivīm uta dyām[9] | muhyantu anye abhito janāsaḥ[10] ihāsmākam maghavā sūrir astu | 7. (=Vāj. S. 8, 45.) Vāchaspatiṁ Viśvakarmāṇam ūtaye manojuvaṁ vāje adya huvema | sa no viśvāni havanāni joshad viśvaśambhūr avase sādhukarmā |

R. V. x. 82, 1 ff.—Chakshushas pitā manasā hi dhīro ghṛitam[11] ene

[6] Ob Einer sie schuf oder nicht. Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, under the root dhā (p. 903).

[7] Paramachhado vare | T.S.

[8] The A.V. reads yo viśvacharshaṇir uta viśvatomukho yo viśvataspāṇir uta viśvatasspṛithaḥ | sam bāhubhyām bharati, etc.

[9] Instead of pṛithivīm uta dyām the S.V. reads tanvāṁ svā hi te.

[10] Instead of janāsaḥ the Vāj. S. reads sapatnāḥ.

[11] Compare R.V. v. 83, 3. See the fifth volume of this work, pp. 140 f.

ajanad namnamāne | yadā id antāḥ adadṛihanta pūrve ād id dyāvāpṛithivī aprathetām | 2. Viśvakarmā vimanāḥ ād[12] vihāyāḥ dhātā vidhātā paramā uta saṁdṛik[13] | teshām ishṭāni sam ishā madanti yatra sapta ṛishīn paraḥ ekam āhuḥ | 3. (=A. V. 2, 1, 3.) Yo naḥ pitā janitā yo vidhātā[14] dhāmāni veda bhuvanāni viśvā[15] | yo devānāṁ nāmadhāḥ ekaḥ eva taṁ sampraśnam bhuvanā yanti anyā | 4. Te āyajanta draviṇaṁ sam asmai ṛishayaḥ pūrve jaritāro na bhūnā | [=Nir. vi. 15] asūrtte sūrtte rajasi nishatte[16] ye bhūtāni samakṛiṇvann imāni | 5. Paro divā paraḥ enā pṛithivyā paro devebhir asurair yad asti[17] | kaṁ svid garbham prathamaṁ dadhre āpo yatra devāḥ samapaśyanta viśve | 6. Tam id garbham prathamaṁ dadhre āpo yatra devāḥ samagachhanta viśve | ajasya nābhāv adhy ekam arpitaṁ yasmin viśvāni bhuvanāni tasthuḥ[18] | 7. Na taṁ vidātha yaḥ imā jajāna anyad yushmākam antaram babhūva[19] | nīhāreṇa prāvṛitāḥ jalpyā cha asutṛipaḥ ukthaśāsaś charanti |

R. V. x. 81, 1 ff.—"Our father, who, a rishi and a priest, celebrated a sacrifice, offering up all these creatures,—he, earnestly desiring substance, he, the archetype, entered into later [men]. 2. What was the position, which and whence was the principle, from which the all-seeing Viśvakarman produced the earth, and disclosed the sky by his might? 3. The one god, who has on every side eyes, on every side a face, on every side arms, on every side feet, when producing the sky and earth, shapes them[20] with his arms and with his wings. 4. What was the wood, what was the tree, out of which they fashioned the heaven and

[12] Manasā yad | T.S.

[13] See R.V. iv. 1, 6, and iv. 6, 6, and Roth's Illustrations of Nirukta, x. 26, p. 141.

[14] Instead of yo vidhātā the A.V. has sa uta bandhuḥ.

[15] Yo naḥ sato abhi ā saj jajāna | T. S.

[16] Asūrtā sūrtā rajaso vimāne | T. S.

[17] Guhā yat | T. S.

[18] After this verse the Taitt. Sanh. has the following [=Vāj. S. xvii. 32]: Viśvakarmā hy ajanishṭa devaḥ ād id gandharvo abhavad dvitīyaḥ | tṛitīyaḥ pitā janitā oshadhīnām apām garbham vyadadhāt purutrā | "The god Viśvakarman was born: then the Gandharva was produced the second; the third was the father, the generator of plants; he divided into many parts the source of the waters."

[19] Bhavāti | T.S.

[20] Compare R.V. x. 72, 2, below, p. 61; and R. V. iv. 2-17 (=A. V. xviii. 3, 22): Ayo na devāḥ janimā dhamaptaḥ | "The gods blowing on [or shaping] productions, like iron."

the earth?[21] Inquire mentally, ye sages, what that was on which he took his stand, when establishing the worlds. 5. Do thou, Viśvakarman, grant to thy friends those thy abodes which are the highest, and the lowest, and the middle, and these. Thou who art strong in the oblation, exhilarated, thyself offer up thyself.[22] 6. Do thou, Viśvakarman, delighted by the sacrifice, thyself offer up heaven and earth. Let other men who are round about me become confounded. May a generous son remain here to us.[23] 7. Let us to-day invoke in our conflict the lord of speech, who is swift as thought, Viśvakarman, for succour. May he who is the source of all prosperity, the beneficent, with a view to our protection, receive graciously all our invocations."

R. V. x. 82, 1.—"The father of insight, wise in mind, impregnated with sap these two [worlds] as they bowed down [before him]. When their remotest ends were fixed, then the heaven and earth extended. 2. Viśvakarman is wise, energetic, the creator, the disposer, and the highest object of intuition. The objects of their desire inspire them with gladness in the place where men say that the One dwells beyond [the abode of] the seven rishis. 3. He who is our father, our creator, disposer, who knows all spheres and creatures, who alone assigns to the gods their names,[24] to him the other creatures resort for instruction. 4. The former rishis, who fashioned these creatures in the remote, the near, and the lower atmosphere, offered to him, like worshippers, substance in abundance. 5. That which is beyond the sky, beyond this earth, beyond gods and spirits,—what earliest embryo did the waters[25] contain, in which all the gods were beheld? 6. The waters contained that earliest embryo in which all the gods were collected.

[21] This half verse also occurs in R. V. x. 31, 7. The second half verse, as also the answer given to the question in Taitt. Br. ii. 8, 9, 6, "Brahma was the wood, Brahma was that tree," etc., are quoted in the fifth volume of this work, p. 32.

[22] See, however, Roth, s.v. tanū, and R. V. x. 7, 6; vi. 11, 2.

[23] Prof. Aufrecht proposes to translate this verse as follows: "May all other people around us vanish into nothing, but our own offspring remain blessed in this world." In proof of the sense of "offspring," or "son," here assigned to sūri (though it has not always this meaning), he refers to R. V. v. 42, 4; vi. 26, 7; vi. 63, 11; vi. 68, 7; vii. 66, 9; viii. 26, 12. This sense is perhaps also recommended by the parallel in R.V. i. 181, 4, between sūnakhasya sūrīḥ and divaḥ putraḥ.

[24] Nāma cha pitā eva karoti | Mahīdhara.

[25] Compare verses 1 and 3 of R. V. x. 129, above, p. 3.

One [receptacle] rested upon the navel of the unborn, wherein all beings stood. 7. Ye cannot know him who produced these things; something else is within you. The chanters of hymns go about enveloped in mist, and unsatisfied with idle talk."

I have placed these two hymns together, as they are so similar in character. The sense in some parts of them is clear, in others very obscure. The verses of which they are made up are all to be found in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (xvii. 17–23, and 25–31), in the same order in which they occur in the Rig-veda, and without any various readings of importance. They are also repeated in the Taittirīya Sanhitā, with variations, of which the chief have been noted above. Some of them also occur in the Nirukta; viz., R. V. x. 81, 6 in Nir. x. 27; R. V. x. 82, 2 in Nir. x. 26; the second half of R. V. x. 82, 4 in Nir. vii. 15; and R. V. x. 82, 7 in Nir. Pariśishṭa, ii. 10. Professor Roth, in his Illustrations of the Nirukta (pp. 141, f.), offers some remarks on the 2nd verse of the second, and the 6th verse of the first, of the hymns before us, which I shall translate. He renders the former verse thus: "Viśvakarman, wise and mighty in act, is the creator, the orderer, and the highest image [for the spiritual faculty]. That which men desire is the attainment of good in the world where the One Being dwells beyond the seven rishis." He then proceeds to observe: "Viśvakarman, who is no mythological personage, but the 'creator of all things,' and who in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, 12, 61,[26] is so far rightly identified with Prajāpati, is here celebrated as equally wise in design, and powerful in execution (the highest conception which can be attained by man): and from him the fulfilment of every desire is obtained beyond the starry heaven, where he resides alone, without the numerous deities of the popular creed. . . . . The legend, which relates that Viśvakarman, son of Bhuvana, after he had offered up all beings in sacrifice, concluded by offering up himself, belongs, in my opinion, to the numerous class of stories which have arisen out of a misunderstanding of Vedic passages, viz., in the present instance, verses 1 and 5 of R. V. x. 81."

The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, viii. 2, 1, 10, and viii. 2, 3, 13, identifies Viśvakarman with Prajāpati (Prajāpatir vai Viśvakarmā). See also the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, iv. 22, and Professor Haug's translation, p. 299.

[26] Prajāpatir Viśvakarmā vimunchatu.

The legend here referred to by Professor Roth is given by Yāska, Nirukta, x. 26:

Tatretihāsam āchakshate | Viśvakarmā Bhauvanaḥ 'sarvamedhe sarvāṇi bhūtāni juhavānchakāra sa ātmānam apy antato juhavānchakara | tadabhivādiny eshā ṛig bhavati 'yaḥ imā viśvā bhuvanāni juhvad' iti | "Here they tell a story: Viśvakarman son of Bhuvana offered up all creatures at a universal sacrifice (sarvamedha). He finally offered up himself also. The following verse (R. V. x. 81, 1) is descriptive of this, viz., 'he who offering up all beings,' etc."

Some further passages relating to Viśvakarman will be found below, in the sixth section of the third chapter, to which, as well as to the first volume of this work, pp. 52, 76, and 456 f., and to the fifth volume, p. 372, I may refer.

On the 6th verse of the first of the hymns before us (R. V. x. 81), Professor Roth remarks thus: "For the correct understanding of the second pāda (the latter half of the first line), and similar passages, the reader should compare R. V. x. 7, 6, yathā 'yajaḥ ṛitubhir deva devān evā yajasva tanvaṁ sujāta | 'As thou (O Agni) at the measured times, O god, didst sacrifice to the gods, so sacrifice also to thyself.' Agni is to accept the offering for himself also. In the same way are the words of the 5th verse of the hymn before us to be understood; svayaṁ yajasva tanvaṁ vṛidhānaḥ | 'sacrifice to thyself for thine own glorification': the idea of self-immolation has arisen from a misunderstanding of the word tanū[27] and of the construction of the root yaj. The 1st verse of the same hymn (R. V. x. 81, 1) is, as it appears to me, to be understood in a similar manner: 'He who received all these creatures as offerings.' In the passage before us (the [27] In his remarks on the word Tanūnapāt in p. 117 of his Illustrations, Professor Roth observes: "The signification has been overlooked, which tanū obtains in the older Sanskṛit, as well as in Zend and modern Persian, as it there designates our own person, our self, in contrast to things belonging to us. Hence I might explain the word Tanūnapāt as meaning 'his own son.' Agni is his own son, because he springs into life either as lightning, or from the friction of wood, without being the product of similar phenomena, or powers." See also Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, under the word Tanūnapāt.

6th verse of R. V. x. 81) the words would therefore be rendered as follows: 'Viśvakarman, glorify thyself by the sacrifice, offer up to thyself heaven and earth.' The idea of sacrifice is introduced, because every portion of the created universe which is given as a possession to the gods, comes to them in the shape of a sacrifice. The god who takes anything into his possession is said to offer it to himself. The various reading which we find in the Sāma-veda, ii. 939, as compared with the verse before us (viz., tanvāṁ svā hi te, 'offer thy body, for it is thine,' instead of pṛithivīm uta dyām, 'offer earth and heaven') may be an amendment in support of the legend."

I do not know whether this view is consistent with the 6th and 7th verses of the Purusha Sūkta. See the first volume of this work, pp. 8, 9, and the fifth volume, pp. 367, ff. Possibly both conceptions (that of the gods sacrificing themselves, and that of their sacrificing to themselves) may have been entertained by the Vedic writers.

[I may here remark that the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, ii. 6, 15 ff., gives a sort of paraphrase on the Purusha Sūkta. The author there puts into the mouth of Brahmā the following lines (verses 21 ff.), which are intended to illustrate the 7th and following stanzas of that allegorical hymn:

21. Yadā 'sya nābhyād nalinād aham āsam mahātmanaḥ | nāvindaṁ yajna-sambhārān Purushāvayavān ṛite | 22. Teshu yajnasya paśavaḥ sa-vanaspatayaḥ kuśāḥ | idancha deva-yajanaṁ kālaś choru-guṇānvitaḥ | 23. Vastūny oshadayaḥ snehāḥ rasa-loha-mṛido jalam | ṛicho yajūṁshi sāmāni chāturhotrancha sattama | 24. Nāmadheyāni mantrāś cha dakshiṇāś cha vratāni cha | devatānukramaḥ kalpaḥ sankalpas tantram eva cha | 25. Gatayo matayaś chaiva prāyaśchittaṁ samarpaṇam | Purushāvayavair ete sambhārāḥ sambhṛitāḥ mayā | 26. Iti sambhṛita-sambhāraḥ Purushāvayavair aham | tam eva Purushaṁ yajnaṁ tenaivāyajam īśvaram |

"21. When I was produced," says Brahmā, "from the lotus sprung out of the navel of that great Being, I found no materials for sacrifice excepting the members of Purusha. 22. Among them were the victims, the sacrificial posts, the Kuśa grass; they formed the sacrificial ground, and the seasons with their various qualities. The utensils, the grains, the unctuous substances, the flavours, the metals, the earths, the water, the verses of the Ṛich, the Yajush, and the Sāman, the functions of the four priests, the names [of the rites], the texts, the gifts, the vows, the list of deities, the ritual rules, the designs, the forms, the arrangements, the meditations, the expiation, the dedication,—all these essentials of sacrifice were derived by me from the members of Purusha. Having thus drawn from the members of Purusha all these appliances, I by this means offered up Purusha, the lord [himself], as a sacrifice."]

In his note on the Nirukta, vi. 15, Professor Roth translates the 4th verse of the second hymn before us (R. V. 82) as follows: "They who in still, in moving, and falling vapour (rajas) created those beings . . . . . furnished to him the material." In his Lexicon, however, he renders the word asūrtta, not by "still," but by "distant;" and quotes A. V. x. 3, 9, as another passage in which it occurs.

The later conception of Viśvakarman, as the artificer of the gods, is found in the following passage of the Mahābhārata, i. 2592: Viśvakarmā mahābhāgo jajne śilpa-prajāpatiḥ | kartā śilpa-sahasrāṇāṁ tridaśānāṁ cha vardhakiḥ | bhūshaṇānāṁcha sarveshāṁ kartā śilpavatāṁ varaḥ | yo divyāni vimānāni tridaśānāṁ chakāra ha | manushyāś chopajīvanti tasya śilpam mahātmanaḥ | pūjayanti cha yaṁ nityaṁ Viśvakarmāṇam avyayam | "Then was born the illustrious Viśvakarman, the lord of the arts, executor of a thousand handicrafts, the carpenter of the gods, the fashioner of all ornaments, the most eminent of artisans, who formed the celestial chariots of the deities; on whose craft men subsist, and whom, a great and immortal god, they continually worship."

Brahmaṇaspati, Daksha, and Aditi,—Rig-veda, x. 72.[28]

R. V. x. 72, 1 ff.—Devānāṁ nu vayaṁ jānā pravochāma vipanyayā | uktheshu śaśyamāneshu yaḥ paśyād uttare yuge[29] | 2. Brahmaṇaspatir etā saṁ karmāraḥ[30] ivādhamat | devānam pūrvye yuge asataḥ sad ajāyata[31] |

[28] This hymn is also translated and illustrated in the fifth volume of this work, pp. 48 ff.

[29] See Benfey's Glossary to the Sāma-veda, under the word yuga; and the first volume of this work, p. 45 f.

[30] Karmāraḥ | sa yathā bhastrayā 'gnim upadhamaty evam udapādayat | (Sāyaṇa) "As a blacksmith blows up a fire with a bellows, so he created them." Compare R. V. x. 81, 3, above p. 6, and note 20, there.

[31] Compare Atharva-veda x. 7, 25.—Bṛihanto nāma te devāḥ ye 'sataḥ pari jajnire | ekaṁ tad angaṁ Skambhasya asad āhuḥ paro janāḥ | "Great are those gods who

3. Devānāṁ yuge prathame asataḥ sad ajāyata | tad āśāḥ anv ajāyanta tad Uttānapadas pari | 4. Bhūr jajñe Uttānapado bhuvaḥ āśāḥ ajāyanta | Aditer Daksho ajāyata Dakshād u Aditiḥ pari | (comp. R. V. x. 90, 5.) 5. Aditir hi ajanishṭa Daksha yā duhitā tava | Tāṁ devāḥ anv ajāyanta bhadrāḥ amṛita-bandhavaḥ | 6. Yad devāḥ adaḥ salile[32] susaṁrabdhāḥ atishṭhata | atra vo nṛityatām iva tīvrō reṇur apāyata | 7. Yad devāḥ[33] yatayo yathā bhuvanāni apinvata | atra samudre āgūlham ā sūryam ajabharttana | 8. Ashṭau putrāso Aditer ye jātās tanvas pari | devān upa prait saptabhiḥ parā Mārttāṇḍam āsyat[34] | 2. Saptabhiḥ putrair Aditer upa prait pūrvyaṁ yugam | prajāyai mṛityave tvat punar Mārttāṇḍam ābharat[35] |

"1. Let us celebrate with exultation the births of the gods, in chanted hymns, [every one of us], who may behold them in [this] later age. 2. Brahmaṇaspati shaped all these [beings] like a blacksmith. In the earliest age of the gods, the existent sprang from the non-existent. 3. In the first age of the gods the existent sprang from the non-existent. Thereafter the different regions sprang forth from Uttānapad. 4. The earth sprang from Uttānapad; from the earth sprang the regions. Daksha sprang from Aditi, and Aditi [came] forth from Daksha. 5. For Aditi was produced, she who is thy daughter, O Daksha. After her the gods came into being, blessed, sharers in immortality. 6. When, O gods, ye moved, strongly agitated, on that water, there a violent dust issued forth from you, as from dancers. 7. When ye, O gods, like devotees [or strenuous men], replenished the worlds, then ye disclosed the sun which had been sprang from non-entity. Men say that that remote non-entity is one member of Skambha." This production of the gods out of nothing seems, on one interpretation, to be contrary to the doctrine of the Chhāndogya Upanishad. Tad ha eke āhur "asad evedam agre āsīd ekam evādvitīyaṁ tasmād asataḥ saj jāyeta" | Kutas tu khalu saumya evaṁ syād iti hovācha katham asataḥ saj jāyeta iti? | (Biblioth. Ind. vol. iii. pp. 389, 392.) "Some say 'this was originally non-existent, one without a second; therefore the existent must spring from the non-existent.' 'But how, gentle friend,' he said, 'can it be so? how can the existent spring from the non-existent?'" See the fifth volume of this work, pp. 358 ff.

[32] Compare R. V. x. 129, 1, 3, above, p. 3.

[33] Here Sāyaṇa makes yatayaḥ meghāḥ, "clouds." See the fifth volume of this work, p. 49, note 92.

[34] Parāsyat = upari prākshipat, "tossed aloft" (Sāyaṇa).

[35] Abharat = āharat = dyuloke adhārayat, "placed in the sky" (Sāyaṇa).

hidden in the ocean. 8. Of the eight sons who were born from the body of Aditi, she approached the gods with seven, but cast away [the eighth] Mārttāṇḍa [the sun]. 9. With seven sons [only] Aditi approached the former generation of gods. Again, for birth as well as for death she disclosed Mārttāṇḍa." [36]

In R. V. vi. 50, 2, mention is made of certain luminous gods (sujyotishaḥ) as being the sons or descendants of Daksha (Daksha-pitṛīn).[37] These notices of Daksha which occur in the Rig-veda have been greatly developed in the later mythology, as may be seen by a reference to the passages given in the first volume of this work, pp. 65, 72, 116, 122 ff., etc. Uttānapāda is said in the Vishṇu and other Purāṇas to have been a son of Mānu Svāyambhuva by Satarūpā (ibid. pp. 65, 72, 106, 114).

On the fourth verse of this hymn Yāska remarks as follows in the Nirukta, xi. 23: Ādityo Dakshaḥ ity āhur Āditya-madhye cha stutaḥ | Aditir Dākshāyaṇī | "Aditer Daksho ajāyata Dakshād u Aditiḥ parī" iti cha | tat katham upapadyeta | samāna-janmānau syātām ity api vā deva-dharmeṇa itaretara-janmānau syātām itaretara-prakṛitī | "Daksha is, they say, a son of Aditi, and is praised among the sons of Aditi. And Aditi is the daughter of Daksha, [according to the text] Daksha sprang from Aditi, and Aditi came forth from Daksha. How can this be possible? They may have had the same origin; or, according to the nature of the gods, they may have been born from each other,—have derived their substance from one another." See also Nirukta vii. 4, as quoted below in chapter ii. sect. 5.

Roth, in his Illustrations of the Nirukta (p. 151), translates the 4th and 5th verses of the hymn before us: "Bhū (the world) was born, and from her opened womb (Uttānapad) sprang the Spaces: from Aditi was born Daksha (spiritual force), and from Daksha again Aditi. Yes, [36] The word Mārttāṇḍa is compounded of two words mārtta, apparently derived from mṛityu, death, and aṇḍa, an egg, or place of production. The last line seems to contain an allusion to this derivation of the word. The Harivaṁsa v. 549, thus interprets the word: Na khalv ayam mṛito 'ṇḍa-sthaḥ iti snehād abhāshata | ajnānāt Kaśyapas tasmād Mārttāṇḍaḥ iti chochyate | "Kaśyapa, from affection, but in ignorance, said, 'he is not dead, abiding in the egg;' hence he is called Mārttāṇḍa." See the fifth volume of this work, p. 49, note 94. Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v., assign to the word in this passage the sense of "bird." See R. V. ii. 38, 8–25.

[37] See, however, the fifth volume of this work, p. 51 f.

Aditi was born, O Daksha, she who is thy daughter; after her the gods were produced, the blessed possessors of immortality." He then proceeds to remark: "Daksha, spiritual force, is the male power, which generates the gods in eternity. As Bhū (the World or Being) and Space are the principles of the Finite, so to both of these is due the beginning of divine life."

Sāyana annotates thus on the 8th verse of the hymn:

"Ashṭau putrāsaḥ" putrāḥ Mitrādayo 'diter bhavanti | "Ye Adites tanvas pari" śarīrāj "jātāḥ" utpannāḥ | Aditer ashṭa-putrāḥ Ādhvaryava-brāhmaṇe parigaṇitāḥ | tathā hi | "tān anukramishyāmo Mitraś cha Varuṇaś cha Dhātā cha Aryamā cha Aṁśaś cha Bhagaś cha Vivasvān Ādityaś cheti" | tathā tatraiva pradeśāntare Aditim prastutya āmnātam "tasyāḥ uchchheshaṇam adadhus tat prāśnāt | sā reto 'dhatta tasyai chatvāraḥ Ādityāḥ ajāyanta sā dvitīyam apibad" ityādinā ashṭānām Ādityānām utpattir varṇitā |

"Eight sons, Mitra and the rest, were born to Aditi, who sprang from her body. Eight sons of Aditi are enumerated in the Brāhmaṇa of the Adhvaryus, thus: 'We shall state them in order, Mitra, Varuṇa, Dhātṛi, Aryaman, Aṁśa, Bhaga, Vivasvat, and Āditya.' In another part of the same work, after reference has been made to Aditi, it is recorded: "They placed before her the remnant of the sacrifice. She ate it. She conceived seed. Four Ādityas were born to her. She drank the second [portion],' etc. Thus is narrated the birth of the eight Ādityas." See the first volume of this work, pp. 26 f.

The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (3, 1, 3, 3 ff.) gives the following explanation of the same (the 8th) verse of this hymn:

Ashṭau ha vai putrāḥ Aditeḥ | Yāṁs tv etad "devāḥ Ādityāḥ" ity āchakshate sapta ha eva te | avikṛitaṁ[38] ha ashṭamaṁ janayāṁchakāra Mārttāṇḍam | sandegho[39] ha evāsa | yāvān evordhvas tāvāṁs tiryaṅ purusha-sammitaḥ ity u ha eke āhuḥ | 4. Te u ha ete ūchur devāḥ Ādityāḥ "yad asmān anv ajanimā tad amuyeva bhūd | hanta imaṁ vikaravāma" iti | taṁ vichakrur yathā 'yaṁ purusho vikṛitas tasya yāni māṁsāni saṅkṛitya sannyāsus tato hastī samabhavat | tasmād āhur "na hastinam

[38] Avikṛitam kara-charaṇādi-vikāraḥ iti tad-rahitam | Comm.
[39] Samyag upachitaḥ samaḥ evāsīt | Comm.

pariyṛihṇīyāt purushājāno[40] hi hastī" iti | yam u ha tad vichakruḥ sa Vivasvān Ādityas tasya imāḥ prajāḥ |

After quoting the text of the Rig-veda, the author of the Brāhmaṇa proceeds:

"Aditi had eight sons. But there are only seven [gods] whom men call the Āditya deities. For she produced the eighth, Mārttāṇḍa, destitute of any modifications of shape (without hands and feet, etc.). He was a smooth lump; of the dimensions of a man, as broad as long, say some. The Āditya deities said, 'If in his nature he be not conformable to ours, then it will be unfortunate; come let us alter his shape.' Thus saying, they altered his shape, as this man is modified (by possessing different members). An elephant sprang out of those [pieces of] his flesh which they cut off, and threw away. Wherefore men say, 'let no one catch an elephant, for an elephant partakes of the nature of man.' He whom they then altered was Vivasvat (the Sun) the son of Aditi, from whom these creatures are descended."

Hiraṇyagarbha,—Rig-veda, x. 121.

R. V. x. 121, 1 ff. (Vāj. S. 13, 4: A. V. 4, 2, 7)—Hiraṇyagarbhaḥ[41] samavarttatāgre bhūtasya jātaḥ[42] patir ekaḥ āsīt | sa dādhāra pṛithivīṁ dyām utemāṁ kasmai devāya[43] havishā vidhema | 2. (Vāj. S. 25, 13: A. V. 4, 2, 1.) Ya ātmadāḥ baladāḥ yasya viśve upāsate praśishaṁ yasya devāḥ | yasya chhāyā amṛitaṁ yasya mṛityuḥ kasmai devāya ityādi | 3.

[40] Purushājānaḥ purusha-prakṛitikaḥ | Comm.

[41] Hiraṇye hiraṇya-purusha-rūpe brahmāṇḍe garbha-rūpeṇa avasthitaḥ Prajāpatir Hiraṇyagarbhaḥ bhūtasya prāṇijātasya agre samavarttata praṇijātotpatteḥ purā svayaṁ śarīra-dhārī babhūva | Prajāpati Hiraṇyagarbha, existing as an embryo, in the egg of Brahmā, which was golden,—consisting of the golden male (purusha),—sprang into being before all living creatures; himself took a body before the production of all living creatures." Mahīdhara on Vāj. S. 13, 4. (Compare the words hiraṇmayaḥ śakunir Brahma nāma | "The golden bird, namely Brahma," in Taitt. Br. 3, 12, 9, 7.)

[42] Jātaḥ. Compare R. V. ii. 12, 1; R. V. x. 133, 2, aśatrur Indra jajñishe—"Indra, thou hast been born without a rival;" and R.V. viii. 21, 13. . . . . tvam anāpir Indra janushā sanād asi | "Indra of old art thou by nature without a fellow."

[43] Kasmai devāya | Kasmai Kāya Prajāpataye devāya | "Kasmai, 'to whom,' is for Kāya, the dative of Ka, the god Prajāpati." Comm. on Vāj. S. 13, 4. Prajāpatir vai Kas tasmai havishā vidhema | "Ka is Prajāpati: to him let us offer our oblations." S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, 7, 4, 2, 19.

(Vāj. S. 23, 3: A. V. 4, 2, 2.) Yaḥ prāṇato ṉimishato mahitvā ekaḥ id rājā jagato babhūva | ya īśe asya dvipadaś chatushpadaḥ kasmai ityādi | 4. (Vāj. S. 25, 12: A. V. 4, 2, 5.) Yasyeme himavanto mahitvā yasya samudraṁ rasayā[44] sahāhuḥ | yasyemāḥ pradiśo yasya bāhū kasmai ityādi | 5. (Vāj. S. 32, 6, 7: A. V. 4, 2, 3, 4.) Yena dyaur ugrā pṛithivī cha dṛiḷhā yena svaḥ stabhitaṁ yena nākaḥ | yo antarikshe rajaso vimānaḥ kasmai ityādi | 6. Yaṁ krandasī[45] avasā tastabhāne abhy aikshetām manasā rejamāne | yatrādhi sūraḥ udito vibhāti kasmai ityādi | 7. (Vāj. S. 27, 25: A. V. 4, 2, 6, 8.) Āpo ha yad bṛihatīr viśvam āyan garbhaṁ[46] dadhānāḥ janayantīr agnim | tato devānāṁ samavarttatāsur ekaḥ kasmai ityādi | 8. (=Vāj. S. 27, 26.) Yaś chid āpo mahinā paryapaśyad dakshaṁ dadhānāḥ janayantīr yajnam | yo deveshv adhi devaḥ ekaḥ āsīt kasmai ityādi | 9. (=Vāj. S. 12, 102.) Mā no himsīj janitā yaḥ pṛithivyāḥ yo vā divaṁ satyadharmā jajāna | yaś chāpaś chandrāḥ bṛihatīr jajāna kasmai[47] ityādi | 10. (=Vāj. S. 10, 20: A. V. 7, 79, 4; 7, 80, 3; Nir. x. 43.) Prajāpate na tvad etāny anyo viśvā jātāni pari tā babhūva | yatkāmās te juhumas tan no astu vayaṁ syāma patayo rayīṇām |

"1. Hiraṇyagarbha arose in the beginning; born, he was the one lord of things existing. He established the earth and this sky: to what god shall we offer our oblation? 2. He who gives breath, who gives strength, whose command all, [even] the gods, reverence, whose [44] On the word rasā, see the second volume of this work, p. 343, note 119.

[45] Krandasī | "This word is explained in Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon as meaning (not heaven and earth, as Mahīdhara in loco understands it, and Sayaṇa on R. V. ii. 12, 8, alternatively interprets,—the other sense assigned being, armies,—but) two armies engaged in battle. See the references there given.

[46] Compare with verses 7 and 8, the preceding hymns, x. 129, 1, 3; x. 82, 5, 6; and x. 72, 6.

[47] I have observed another hymn in the R. V., the 168th of the tenth Maṇḍala, of which the fourth verse ends with words similar to those which conclude the first nine verses of the 121st, except that instead of kasmai the 168th hymn has tasmai. I quote this verse with the last words of the 3rd. . . . . kva svij jātaḥ kutaḥ ābabhūva | 4. ātmā devānām bhuvanasya garbho yathāvaśaṁ charati devaḥ eshaḥ | ghoshāḥ id asya śṛiṇvire na rūpaṁ tasmai Vātāya haviṣhā vidhema | "Where was he produced? whence has he sprung? 4. Soul of the gods, and source of the world, this deity marches at his will. His sounds are heard but [we see] not his form: to this Vāta (wind) let us offer our oblations." Compare St. John iii. 8. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth."

shadow is immortality, whose shadow is death—to what god shall we offer our oblation? 3. Who by his might became the sole king of the breathing and winking world, who is the lord of this two-footed and four-footed [creation],—to what god, etc.? 4. Whose greatness these snowy mountains, and the sea with the Rasā [river], declare,—of whom these regions, of whom they are the arms,—to what god, etc. 5. By whom the sky is fiery, and the earth fixed, by whom the firmament and the heaven were established, who in the atmosphere is the measurer of the aerial space;—to what god, etc.? 6. To whom two contending armies, sustained by his succour, looked up, trembling in mind; over whom the risen sun shines,—to what god, etc.? 7. When the great waters pervaded the universe, containing an embryo, and generating fire, thence arose the one spirit (asu) of the gods,—to what god, etc.? 8. He who through his greatness beheld the waters which contained power, and generated sacrifice, who was the one god above the gods,—to what god, etc.? 9. May he not injure us, he who is the generator of the earth, who, ruling by fixed ordinances, produced the heavens, who produced the great and brilliant waters!—to what god, etc.? 10. Prajāpati, no other than thou is lord over all these created things: may we obtain that, through desire of which we have invoked thee; may we become masters of riches."

On Prajāpati, see the fifth volume of this work, pp. 352 f.; 390 ff.

The whole of this hymn is to be found repeated in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, the first eight verses in the Taittirīya Sanhitā iv. 1, 8, 3 ff., and most of the verses recur in the Atharva-veda. In making my translation, I have had the assistance of Mahīdhara's Commentary on the first-named Veda, as well as of the version given by Professor Müller in his Ancient Sanskṛit Literature, p. 569 f. In his annotation on Vāj. S. 27, 5,=verse 7, the commentator Mahīdhara refers to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 1, 6, 1: Āpo ha vai idam agre salilam evāsa | "This [universe] was in the beginning waters, only water;"[48] and explains the words garbhaṁ dadhānāḥ, "containing a germ," thus: tathā garbhaṁ Hiraṇyagarbhalakshaṇaṁ dadhānāḥ dhārayantyaḥ ataḥ eva agnim janayantīḥ agni-rūpaṁ Hiraṇyagarbhaṁ janayantyaḥ utpādayishyantyaḥ | "And also containing an embryo (garbha) distinguished as the golden [48] Compare R. V. vi. 50, 7, quoted in the fifth volume of this work, p. 345; and the quotations from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and other works in the next section.

embryo Hiraṇyagarbha); and consequently generating, being about to produce, fire,—Hiraṇyagarbha in the form of fire." The Atharva-veda reads this seventh verse somewhat differently, thus (A. V. 4, 2, 6): Āpo agre viśvam āvaṅ garbhaṁ dadhānāḥ amṛitāḥ ṛitajnāḥ | yāsu devīshv adhi devaḥ asīt kasmai ityādi | "In the beginning, the waters, immortal, and versed in the sacred ceremonies, protected (covered?) the universe, containing an embryo; over these divine [waters] was the god," etc. The verse which comes next, the seventh in the A. V., is the first in the R. V. The eighth in the A. V., which has none answering to it in the R. V., is as follows: Āpo vatsaṁ janayantīr garbham agre samairayan | tasyota jāyamānasya ulbaḥ āsīd hiraṇyayaḥ | kasmai devāya ityādi—"In the beginning the waters, producing a child, brought forth an embryo, which, as it was coming into life, was enveloped in a golden covering."

The idea of the production of the divine principle by which the gods were animated (asu) from the embryo generated in the waters, contained in the seventh verse of the hymn before us (R. V. x. 121, 7) is replaced, as we shall find, in the Brāhmaṇas and the later mythology by that of the generation of Prajāpati, or Brahmā, from the egg formed in the waters. In the verse attached to the hymn as the 10th, the deity celebrated in the hymn is addressed by the appellation of Prajāpati, which became a title of Brahmā. The last verse which I have quoted from the A. V. (iv. 2, 8) assigns a "golden covering" to the embryo produced by the waters.

In another part of the same Veda (A. V. x. 7, 28) the following verse occurs: Hiraṇyagarbham paramam anatyudyam janāḥ viduḥ | Skambhas tadagre prāsinchad hiraṇyaṁ loke antarā | "Men know Hiraṇyagarbha, the supreme, the ineffable: before him Skambha [the Supporter] shed forth gold in the midst of the world."

I shall make some additional quotations from the hymn of the A. V. in which the last cited verse occurs, and the next following. [The whole of the hymn A. V. x. 7, and a portion of A. V. x. 8, are quoted in the fifth volume of this work, pp. 378 ff., which can be referred to.]

Extracts from the Atharva-veda, x. 7, and x. 8.

A. V. x. 7, 7.—Yasmin staḷdhvā Prajāpatir lokān saṛvān adhārayat | Skambhaṁ tam brūhi katamaḥ svid eva saḥ | 8. Yat paramam avamaṁ

yachcha madhyamam Prajāpatiḥ sasṛije viśva-rūpam | kiyatā Skambhaḥ praviveśa tatra yan na prāviśat kiyat tad babhūva | 9. Kiyatā Skambhaḥ praviveśa bhūtaṁ kiyad bhavishyad anvāśaye 'sya | ekaṁ yad angam akṛinot sahasradhā kiyatā Skambhaḥ praviveśa tatra | . . . . 17. Ye purushe brahma vidus te viduḥ parameshṭhinam | yo veda parameshṭhinaṁ yaś cha veda Prajāpatiṁ | jyeshṭhaṁ ye brāhmaṇam viduś te Skambham anusaṁviduḥ | . . . . 24. Yatra devāḥ brahmavido brahma jyeshṭham upāsate | yo vai tān vidyāt pratyakshaṁ sa brahmā veditā syāt | . . . . 32. Yasya bhūmiḥ pramā antarikshaṁ udaram | divaṁ yaś chakre mūrdhānaṁ tasmai jyeshṭhāya Brahmaṇe namaḥ | . . . . 35. Skambho dādhāra dyāvāpṛithivī ubhe ime Skambho dādhārorv antarikṣam | Skambho dādhāra pradiśaḥ shaḍ urvī(ḥ?) Skambhaḥ idaṁ viśvam bhuvanam āviveśa | 36. Yaḥ śramāt tapaso jāto lokān sarvāṁ samānaśe | somaṁ yaś chakre kevalaṁ tasmai jyeshṭhāya brahmaṇe namaḥ | . . . . 41. Yo vetasaṁ[49] hiraṇyayaṁ tishṭhantam salile veda | sa vai guhyaḥ Prajāpatiḥ |

A. V. x. 8, 2.—Skambhenemē vishṭabhite dyauś cha bhūmiś cha tishṭhatah | Skambhaḥ idaṁ sarvam ātmanvad yat prāṇad nimishachcha yat | . . . . 11. Yad ejati patati yachcha tishṭhati prāṇad aprāṇan nimishach cha yad bhuvat | tad dādhāra pṛithivīm viśvarūpaṁ tat sambhūya bhavaty ekam eva | . . . . . 44. Akāmo dhīro amṛitaḥ svayambhūḥ rasena tṛipto na kutaśchanonaḥ | tam eva vidvān na bibhāya mṛityor ātmānaṁ dhīram ajaraṁ yuvānam |

A. V. x. 7, 7.—"Tell who that Skambha (supporter) is, on whom Prajāpati has supported, and established all the worlds. 8. How far did Skambha penetrate into that highest, lowest and middle universe, comprehending all forms, which Prajāpati created? and how much of it was there which he did not penetrate? 9. How far did Skambha penetrate into the past? and how much of the future is contained in his receptacle? how far did Skambha penetrate into that one member which he separated into a thousand parts? . . . . . 17. Those men who know Brahma (the divine essence) in the Male (Purusha), know him who occupies the highest place (Parameshṭhin): he who knows Parameshṭhin, and who knows Prajāpati,—they who know the highest [49] I know not whether this word has here its ordinary meaning, or the same sense which is assigned to the word vaitasa in R. V. x. 95, 4, 5; S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 5, 1, 1; and Nir. iii. 21. See also R. V. iv. 58, 5; and S'atap. Br. vii. 5, 2, 11; and the fifth volume of this work, p. 384, note.

Brāhmaṇa (divine mystery), they know Skambha. . . . . 24. In the place where the gods, the knowers of sacred science (brahma) reverence the highest Brahma,—that priest (brahmā) who knows them clearly, will be a knower. . . . . 32. Reverence to that highest Brahma, of whom the earth is the measure, the atmosphere the belly, who made the sky his head. . . . . 35. Skamba established both these [worlds] the earth and sky, Skambha established the wide atmosphere, Skambha established the six wide regions, Skambha pervaded this entire universe. 36. Reverence to that highest Brahma, who, sprung from toil and from austere fervour, has pervaded all the worlds, who made soma for himself alone. . . . . 41. He who knows the golden reed standing in the water, is the mysterious Prajāpati."

A. V. x. 8, 2.—"These two [worlds] the earth and sky, stand, supported by Skambha. Skambha is all this which has soul, which breathes, which winks. . . . . 11. Whatever moves, flies, or stands, whatever exists breathing, or not breathing, or winking,—that omniform [entity] sustains the earth; that, combined, is one only. . . . . 44. Knowing that Soul, calm, undecaying, young, who is passionless, tranquil, self-existent, immortal, satisfied with the essence, wanting in nothing,—a man is not afraid of death."

I quote these passages partly because they contain frequent references to Prajāpati, a name which occurs but sparingly in the Rig-veda; and partly because they celebrate a new god called Skambha, the "Supporter," or "Propper," whose personification may have been suggested by the function of "supporting" the earth and heavens, which, as we shall see in the next chapter, is frequently ascribed to Indra, Varuṇa, Vishṇu, and Savitṛi.

The verse last quoted (x. 8, 44) seems to contain the idea of the supreme Soul as the object of knowledge.

On the subject of this and the next sections compare the twenty-first section of the fifth volume of this work, pp. 350 ff.

SECT. II.—Original non-entity; Prajāpati; primeval waters; mundane egg, etc., according to the S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, Manu, the Rāmāyaṇa, Vishṇu Purāṇa, etc.

The Satapatha Brāhmaṇa contains the following legends about the creation.

I. S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 1, 1, 1 ff. (pp. 499 of Weber's ed.)—

Asad vai idam agre āsīt | tad āhuḥ 'kiṁ tad asad āsīd' iti | ṛishayo vāva te 'agre asad āsīt' tad āhuḥ | 'ke te ṛishayaḥ' iti | prāṇāḥ vai ṛishayas te yat purā 'smāt sarvasmād idam ichhantaḥ śrameṇa tapasā 'rishaṁs tasmād ṛishayaḥ | 2. Sa yo 'yam madhye prāṇaḥ esha evendraḥ | tān esha prāṇān madhyataḥ indriyeṇaindha | yad aindha tasmād Indhaḥ | Indho ha vai tam Indraḥ ity ācakshate paroksham | parokṣa-kāmāḥ hi devās te iddhāḥ sapta nānā purushān asṛijanta | 3. Te 'bravan "na vai itthaṁ santaḥ śakshyāmaḥ prajanayitum imān sapta purushān ekam purushaṁ karavāma" iti te etān sapta purushān ekam purusham akurvan | yad ūrddhvaṁ nābhes tau dvau samaubjan | yad avāṇ nābhes tau dvau | pakshaḥ purushaḥ | pakshaḥ purushaḥ | pratishṭhā ekaḥ āsīt | . . . . . 5. Sa eva purushaḥ Prajāpatir abhavat sa yaḥ sa purushaḥ Prajāpatir abhavad ayam eva sa yo 'yam Agniś[50] chīyate | 6. Sa vai sapta-purusho bhavati | saptā-purusho hy ayam purusho yach chatvāraḥ ātmā trayaḥ paksha-puchhāni | chatvāro hi tasya purushasya ātmā trayaḥ paksha-puchhāni[51] | atha yad ekena purusheṇa ātmānaṁ vardhayati tena vīryeṇa ayam ātmā paksha-puchhāni udyachhati | . . . . . 8. So 'yam purushaḥ Prajāpatir akāmayata 'bhūyān syām prajāyeya' iti | so 'śrāmyat sa tapo 'tapyata | sa śrāntas tepāno brahma eva prathamam asṛijata trayīm eva vidyām | sa eva asmai pratishṭhā 'bhavat tasmād āhur 'brahma asya sarvasya pratishṭhā' iti | tasmād anūchya pratitishṭhati pratishṭhā hy eshā yad brahma | tasyām pratishṭhāyām pratishṭhito 'tapyata | 9. So 'po 'sṛijata vāchaḥ eva lokād vāg evāsya sā 'sṛijyata sā idaṁ sarvam āpnod yad idaṁ kincha | yad āpnot tasmād āpaḥ[52] | yad avṛiṇot tasmād vāḥ | 10. So 'kāmayata 'ābhyo 'bhyo 'dhi prajāyeya' iti so 'nayā trayyā vidyayā saha apaḥ prāviśat tataḥ āṇḍaṁ samavarttata tad abhyamṛiśad 'astv' ity 'astu bhūyo 'stv' ity eva tad abravīt | tato brahma eva prathamam asṛijyata trayy eva vidyā | tasmād āhur 'brahma asya sarvasya prathamajam' ity | api hi tasmāt purushād brahma eva pūrvam asṛijyata tad asya tad mukham eva asṛijyata | tasmād anūchānam āhur 'Agni-kalpaḥ' iti | mukhaṁ hy etad Agner yad brahma |[53]

[50] Compare S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa vi. 1, 2, 13, and 21 (pp. 502–3); ix. 2, 2, 2 (p. 713). According to vi. 2, 1, 1; and xi. 1, 6, 14, Agni is the son of Prajāpati.

[51] Comp. vi. 2, 2, 4, and 9.

[52] Compare S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa ii. 1, 1, 3; and vi. 1, 3, 1 ff.

[53] Compare Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa ii. 2, 9, 1 ff. quoted in the first volume of this work, pp. 27 ff.

"In the beginning this [universe] was indeed non-existent. But men say, 'what was that non-existent?' The rishis say that in the beginning there was non-existence. Who are these rishis? The rishis are breaths. Inasmuch as before all this [universe], they, desiring this [universe], were worn out (arishan), with toil and austerity, therefore they are called Rishis. 2. This breath which is in the midst is Indra. He by his might kindled these breaths in the midst: inasmuch as he kindled them, he is the kindler (Indha). They call Indha Indra esoterically: for the gods love that which is esoteric. They [the gods] being kindled, created seven separate males (purusha). 3. They said, 'being thus, we shall not be able to generate; so let us make these seven males one male.' So speaking, they made these seven males one male (purusha). Into the part above the navel, they compressed two of them, and two others into the part below the navel; [one] male [formed one] side; [another] male [another] side: and one formed the base. . . . . 5. This [one] male became Prajāpati. The male who became Prajāpati is the same as this Agni who is kindled on the altar. 6. He verily is composed of seven males (purusha): for this male is composed of seven males, since [four] make the soul, and three the sides and extremity (lit., tail). For the soul of this male [makes] four, and the sides and extremity three. Now inasmuch as he makes the soul [which is equal to four] superior by one male, the soul, in consequence of this [excess of] force, controls the sides and extremity [which are only equal to three]. . . . . 8. This male (purusha) Prajāpati desired, 'may I be multiplied, may I be developed.' He toiled, he performed austerity. Having toiled and performed austerity, he first created the Veda (brahma), the triple science. It became to him a foundation; hence men say, 'the Veda (brahma) is the foundation of all this.' Wherefore having studied [the Veda] a man has a foundation, for this is his foundation, namely the Veda. Resting on this foundation, he performed austerity. 9. He created the waters from the world [in the form of] speech.[54] Speech belonged to him. It was [54] This is illustrated by a passage in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vii. 5, 2, 21 (p. 617), which says: vāg vai ajo vācho vai prajāḥ Viśvakarmā jajāna | "Speech is the mover [or, the unborn]. It was from speech that Viśvakarman produced creatures." And in the Bṛihad Āraṇyaka (p. 290 of Bibl. Ind.) it is said | trayo lokāḥ ete eva | vāg evāyaṁ loko mano 'ntarikṣha-lokaḥ prāṇo 'sau lokaḥ | "It is they which are the three created. It pervaded all this. Because it pervadad (āpnot) all this which exists, it (speech) was called waters (āpaḥ); and because it covered (avṛiṇot), it was called vāḥ (another name of water). 10. He desired, 'May I be reproduced from these waters.' So saying, with this triple science he entered[55] the waters. Thence an egg arose. He handled it. He said to it, 'let it become,' 'let it become,' 'let it be developed.' From it the Veda was first created,[56] the triple science. Hence men say, 'the Veda is the first-born of this whole [creation]. Further, [as] the Veda was first created from that Male, therefore it was created his mouth. Hence they say of a learned man that he is like Agni; for the Veda is Agni's mouth."

The same idea about Prajāpati being composed of seven males, occurs again in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, x. 2, 2, 1, and seems to be connected with the notion of Agni having the size of seven males. (See the commentary on Śatap. Br. x. 2, 2, 1).—Yān vai tān sapta purushān ekam purusham akurvan sa Prajāpatir abhavat | sa prajāḥ asṛijata | sa prajāḥ sṛishṭvā ūrddhvaḥ udakrāmat | sa etaṁ lokam agachhad yatra esha etat tapati | no ha tarhy anyaḥ etasmād atra yajniyaḥ āsa tam devāḥ yajnenaiva yashṭum adhriyanta | tasmād etad ṛishiṇā 'bhyanūktaṁ 'yajnena yajnam ayajanta devāḥ ityādi | "These seven males whom they made one male (purusha) became Prajāpati. He created offspring. Having created offspring, he mounted upwards; he went to this world where this scorches this. There was then no other being fit for sacrifice: the gods began to offer him with sacrifice. Hence it has been said by the rishi (R. V. x. 90, 16), 'the gods offered the sacrifice with sacrifice.'" Part of the passage, Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 1, 1, 6 is repeated in Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, x. 2, 2, 5.[57]

II. In the preceding story, the gods are represented as the creators worlds. Speech is this world, mind is the atmospheric world, and breath is that world (the sky)." Regarding the action of Vāch in the creation, compare Weber's Ind. Stud. ix. 477 f., and the passages quoted from him in the fifth volume of this work, p. 391 f.

[55] Compare A.V. x. 2, 7 | sa ā varīvarti bhuvaneshv antar apo vasānaḥ kaḥ u tach chiketa | "He (Purusha) moves actively in the worlds, clothed with the waters: who has known this?"

[56] It had, however, been created before. See a few lines above.

[57] Compare Śatap. Br. x. 2, 3, 18.—Saptavidho vai agre Prajāpatir asṛijyata. These words are repeated in x. 2, 4, 8.

of Prajāpati, who in his turn is stated to have generated the waters, which he entered, and from which sprang the mundane egg. In the following story, the order of production is different. The waters generate the egg, and the egg brings forth Prajāpati, who creates the worlds and the gods.

S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, xi. 1, 6, 1 ff.—Āpo ha vai idam agre salilam evāsa[58] | tāḥ akāmayanta 'kathaṁ nu prajāyemahi' iti tāḥ aśrāmyaṁs tās tapo 'tapyanta | tāsu tapas tapyamānāsu hiraṇmayam āṇḍaṁ sambabhūva | ājāto ha tarhi saṁvatsaraḥ āsa | tad idaṁ hiraṇmayam āṇḍaṁ yāvat saṁvatsarasya velā tāvat paryaplavata | 2. Tataḥ saṁvatsare purushaḥ samabhavat sa Prajāpatiḥ | tasmād u samvatsare eva strī vā gaur vā vaḍabā vā vijāyate saṁvatsare hi Prajāpatir ajāyata | sa idaṁ hiraṇmayan āṇḍaṁ vyarujat | na aha tarhi kāchana pratishṭhā āsa | tad enam idam eva hiranmayam āṇḍaṁ yāvat saṁvatsarasya velā āsīt tāvad bibhrat paryaplavata[59] | 3. Sa saṁvatsare vyājihīrshat | sa 'bhūr' iti vyāharat sā iyam pṛithivy abhavad[60] 'bhuvaḥ' iti tad idam antarikṣham abhavat 'svar' iti sā asau dyaur abhavat tasmāḍ u saṁvatsare eva kumāro vyājihīrshati saṁvatsare hi Prajāpatir vyāharat | . . . 6. Sa sahasrāyur jajne | sa yathā nadyai pāram parāpaśyed evam svasyāyushaḥ pāram parāchakhyau | 7. So 'rchan śrāmyaṁs chachāra prajākāmaḥ |

[58] S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 7, 1, 17.—Tasya āpaḥ eva pratishṭhā | apsu hi ime lokāḥ pratishṭhitāḥ | "Waters are its support: for these worlds are based upon the waters." S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiv. 8, 6, 1 (= Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, p. 974). —Āpaḥ evedam agre āsuḥ | tāḥ āpaḥ satyam asṛijanta satyam Brahma Brahma Prajāpatim Prajāpatir devān | "In the beginning waters alone formed this universe. These waters created Truth, Truth created Brahma, Brahma created Prajāpati, and Prajāpati the gods." Compare Taitt. Sanh. vii. 1, 5, 1 ff.; Taitt. Br. i. 1, 3, 5 ff.; and Taitt. Āraṇy. i. 23, 1 ff. quoted in pp. 31 and 52 f. of vol. i. this work. To the same effect is Taitt. Sanh. v. 7, 5, 3, Āpo vai idam agre salilam āsīt. The A. V. xii. 1, 8, also says: yā 'ṇave 'dhi salilam agre asīd yām māyābhir anvacharan manīshiṇaḥ | "That earth which formerly was water on the ocean, which the sages followed after by their divine powers," etc. R. V. x. 109, 1, speaks of the "divine first-born waters" (āpo devīḥ prathamajāḥ). The S'atap. Br. xiv. 2, 2, 2, represents the wind as the ocean, which was the source from which the gods and all creatures issued (ayaṁ vai samudro yo 'yam pavate | etasmād vai samudrāt sarve devāḥ sarvāṇi bhūtāni samuddravanti |

[59] Tasya Prajāpater āspadaṁ kimapi na babhūva sa cha nirādhāratvāt sthātum aśaknuvann idam eva bhinnam hiraṇmayāṇḍam punaḥ saṁvatsara-paryantam bibhrad dhārayan tasv evāpsu paryasravat | "There was no resting place for Prajāpati; and he, being unable to stand, from the want of any support, occupying this divided golden egg for a year, floated about on these waters." Commentary.

[60] Compare vol. iii. of this work, 2nd ed. pp. 101, 104, and S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa ii. 1, 4, 11, p. 141.

sa ātmany eva prajātim adhatta sa āsyenaiva devān asṛijata | te devāḥ divam abhipadya asṛijyanta tad devānāṁ devatvaṁ yad divam abhipadya asṛijyanta | tasmai sasṛijānāya divā iva āsa[61] | tad veva devānāṁ devatvaṁ yad asmai sasṛijānāya divā iva āsa | 8. Atha yo 'yam avāṅ prāṇas tena asurān asṛijata | te imām eva pṛithivīm abhipadya asṛijyanta | tasmai sasṛijānāya tamaḥ iva āsa | 9. So 'vet "pāpmānaṁ vai asṛikshi yasmai me sasṛijānāya tamaḥ iva abhūd" iti | tāṁs tataḥ eva pāpmanā 'vidhyat | te tataḥ eva parābhavan | . . . . 14. Tāḥ vai etāḥ Prajāpater adhi devatāḥ asṛijyanta Agnir Indraḥ[62] Somaḥ Parameshṭhī prājāpatyaḥ | . . . . 18. Sa Prajāpatir Indram putram abravīd ityādi |

"In the beginning this universe was waters, nothing but water. The waters desired, 'how can we be reproduced?' So saying, they toiled, they performed austerity. While they were performing austerity, a golden egg came into existence. Being produced, it then became a year. Wherefore this golden egg floated about for the period of a year. 2. From it in a year a male (purusha) came into existence, who was Prajāpati. Hence it is that a woman, or a cow, or a mare, brings forth in the space of a year, for in a year Prajāpati was born. He divided this golden egg. There was then no resting-place for him. He therefore floated about for the space of a year, occupying this golden egg. 3. In a year he desired to speak. He uttered 'bhūr,' which became this earth; 'bhuvaḥ,' which became this firmament; and 'svar,' which became that sky. Hence a child desires to speak in a year, because Prajāpati spoke in a year. . . . . 6. He was born with a life of a thousand years. He perceived the further end of his life, as [one] may perceive the opposite bank of a river. 7. Desiring offspring, he went on worshipping and toiling. He conceived progeny in himself: with his mouth he created the gods. These gods were created on reaching heaven. This is the godhead of the gods (devāḥ) that they were created on reaching heaven (divam). To him while he was continuing to create, it became, as it were, daylight (divā). This is the godhead of the gods, that to him as he was continuing to create, it became, as it were, daylight. 8. Then from this lower breath he created the Asuras. They were created when they reached this world. To him, when creating, darkness, as it were, appeared. 9. He knew: 'I have created evil, since as I was creating, darkness, as it were, appeared.' He then pierced them with evil; and they in consequence were overcome .... 14. These [following] gods were created from Prajāpati,—Agni, Indra, Soma, and Parameshṭhin, son of Prajāpati. .... 18. Prajāpati said to his son Indra," etc.

[61] Divā iva āsa | ākāśaḥ iva babhūva | Comm. Comp. Taitt. Br. ii. 2, 9, 9, translated in the first volume of this work, p. 30.

[62] In R. V. x. 134, 1 ff. Indra is said to be the son of a mother whose name is not mentioned. See, however, the fifth volume of this work, where this subject is referred to.

The mundane egg is also mentioned in the Chhāndogya Upanishad (p. 228 ff.): Ādityo Brahma ity ādeśaḥ | tasyopavyākhyānam | asad eva idam agre āsīt | tat sad āsīt | tat samabhavat | tad āṇḍaṁ niravarttata | tat saṁvatsarasya mātrām aśayata | tad nirabhidyata | te āṇḍa-kapāle rajataṁ cha suvarṇaṁ cha abhavatām | tad yad rajataṁ sā iyam pṛithivī yat suvarṇaṁ sā dyaur yaj jarāyu[63] te parvatāḥ yad ulvaṁ[64] sa megho nīhāro[65] yāḥ dhamanayas[66] tāḥ nadyo yad vāsteyam[67] udakaṁ sa samudraḥ | atha yat tad ajāyata so 'sāv Ādityas taṁ jāyamānaṁ ghoshāḥ ulūlavo[68] 'nudatishṭhan ['nūdatishṭhan?] sarvāṇi cha bhūtāni sarve cha kāmās tasmāt tasyodayam prati pratyāyanam[69] prati ghoshāḥ ulūlavo 'nutishṭhanti sarvāṇi cha bhūtāni sarve chaiva kāmāḥ | which is thus translated by Babu Rājendralal Mittra: "The sun is described as Brahma;—its description. Verily at first this was non-existent; that non-existence became existent; it developed,—it became an egg: it remained [quiet] for a period of one year; it burst into two; thence were formed two halves of gold and silver. Thereof the argentine half is the earth, and the golden half the heaven. The inner thick membrane [of the egg] became mountains, and the thin one cloudy fog; the blood-vessels became rivers, and the fluid became the ocean; and lastly, what was born therefrom is the sun, Āditya. On its birth arose loud shouts [or shouts of 'ulu-ulu'], as well as all living beings, and their desires. Hence on the rising, and re-rising [day after day]

[63] Garbha-veshṭanaṁ sthūlam | Comm.
[64] Sūkshmaṁ garbha-pariveshṭaṁam | Comm.
[65] Avaśyāyaḥ (frost) | Comm.
[66] Śirāḥ | Comm.
[67] Vastau bhavam vāsteyam[?] Comm. "Abdominal," Wilson.
[68] Ururavo vistīrṇa-ravāḥ udatishṭhann utthitavantaḥ |
[69] Pratyasta-gamanam . . . athavā punaḥ punaḥ pratyāgamanam | of the sun, arise shouts of 'ulu-ulu,' as well as all living beings and their desires." (Bibl. Ind. No. 78, p. 65.)

In the next passage, Prajāpati is said to have taken the form of a tortoise:

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vii. 4, 3, 5.—Sa yat kūrmo nāma etad vai rūpaṁ kṛitvā Prajāpatiḥ prajāḥ asṛijata | yad asṛijata akarot tad yad akarot tasmāt kūrmaḥ | Kaśyapo vai kūrmas tasmād āhuḥ 'sarvaḥ prajāḥ Kāśyapyaḥ iti | sa yaḥ sa kūrmo 'sau sa Ādityaḥ | "Having assumed the form of a tortoise, Prajāpati created offspring. That which he created, he made (akarot); hence the word kūrma. Kaśyapa means tortoise; hence men say, 'all creatures are descendants of Kaśyapa.'[70] This tortoise is the same as Āditya."

In the later mythology it is Vishṇu who assumes the form of a tortoise:

Thus in the chapter of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa descriptive of Vishṇu's incarnations it is said (i. 3, 16): Surāsurāṇām udadhim mathnatām mathanāchalam | dadhre kamaṭha-rūpeṇa pṛishṭhe ekādaśe vibhuḥ | "In his eleventh incarnation, the Lord in the form of a tortoise supported on his back the churning-mountain, when the gods and Asuras were churning the ocean."

In its application of the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, 37, 5, the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, 14, 1, 2, 11, makes the following allusion to the elevation of the earth by a boar: "Iyaty agre āsīd" (Vāj. S. 37, 5) iti | iyatī ha vai iyam agre pṛithivy āsa prādeśa-mātrī | tām Emūshaḥ iti varāhaḥ[71] ujjaghāna | so 'syāḥ patiḥ Prajāpatis tenaiva enam etanmithunena priyeṇa dhāmnā[72] samardhayati kṛitsnaṁ karoti ityādi |

"'She (the earth) was formerly so large,' etc.; for formerly this

[70] Kaśyapa is mentioned in the A. V. xix. 53, 10 (see the fifth volume of this work, p. 408); as well as in two rather obscure verses of the Sāma-veda, which do not occur in the Rigveda. The first is i. 90: Jātaḥ pareṇa dharmaṇā yat savṛidbhiḥ sahābhuvaḥ | pitā yat Kaśyapasyāgnir Śraddhā mātā Manuḥ kaviḥ | "Since with thy companions, thou hast been produced through an excellent rite; since Agni is the father, Faith (Śraddhā) the mother, and Manu the bard, of Kaśyapa." The second is i. 361: Kaśyapasya svarvido yāv āhuḥ sayujāv iti | yayor viśvam api vrataṁ yajñaṁ dhīrāḥ nichāyya | "Whom twain the wise, revering, declare to be the companions of the heavenly Kaśyapa; to whom twain [they declare] the entire power (or ceremonial) and sacrifice to belong."

[71] See R. V. viii. 66, 10.

[72] In regard to these words compare Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, iii. 9, 4, 20.

earth was only so large, of the size of a span. Emūsha, a boar, raised her up. Her lord, Prajāpati, in consequence, prospers him with this pair, the object of his desire, and makes him complete," etc. Compare the passages from the Taittirīya Sanhitā and Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, etc., quoted in the first volume of this work, pp. 52 ff., and 181 ff.; and also the fifth volume of this work, pp. 390 ff.

From Weber's Ind. Stud. i. 78, I find that in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka also, the earth is said to have been "raised by a black boar with a hundred arms" (varāheṇa kṛishṇena śata-bāhunā uddhṛitā).

I quote some further texts from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa relative to Prajāpati.

In the following he is said to have in the beginning constituted the universe, and to have created Agni (see above, p. 26).

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, ii. 2, 4, 1.—Prajāpatir ha vai idam agre ekaḥ evāsa | sa aikshata 'kathaṁ nu prajāyeya' iti | so 'śrāmyat sa tapo 'tapyata so 'gnim eva mukhāj janayāṅchakre ityādi | "Prajāpati alone was all this [universe] in the beginning. He considered, 'how can I be reproduced?' He toiled, and performed austerity. He generated Agni from his mouth." Compare the passages quoted in the first vol. of this work, pp. 24, 69 ff.; in volume third, p. 4; and in volume fifth, pp. 390, ff.

In the next passage he is identified with Daksha:[73]

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, ii. 4, 4, 1.—Prajāpatir ha vai etenāgre yajneneje prajākāmo 'bahuḥ prajayā paśubhiḥ syāṁ śriyaṁ gachheyaṁ yaśaḥ syām annādaḥ syām' iti | sa vai Daksho nāma ityādi | "Prajāpati formerly sacrificed with this sacrifice, being desirous of progeny, [and saying] 'may I abound in offspring and cattle, attain prosperity, become famous, and obtain food.' He was Daksha."

In Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 8, 1, 14, Prajāpati is said to be the supporter of the universe (a function afterwards assigned to Vishṇu): Prajāpatir vai bharataḥ sa hi idaṁ sarvam bibhartti | "Prajāpati is Bharata (the supporter), for he supports all this universe."[74]

[73] See R. V. x. 72, 4, 5 (above p. 12).

[74] In R. V. i. 96, 3, the epithet Bharata is applied to Agni. The commentator there quotes another text, no doubt from a Brāhmaṇa, esha prāṇo bhūtvā prajāḥ bibhartti tasmād esha bharataḥ | "He becoming breath, sustains all creatures; hence he is the sustainer."

Compare the first verse of the Muṇḍaka Upanishad, where Brahmā is called the preserver of the world (bhuvanasya goptā).

In the next passage Prajāpati is represented as desirous, not to create, but to conquer, the worlds:

Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiii. 2, 4, 1.—Prajāpatir akāmayata 'ubhau lokāv abhijayeyaṁ deva-lokancha manushya-lokancha' ityādi | "Prajāpati desired, 'may I conquer both worlds,' that of the gods, and that of men," etc. Comp. Śatap. Br., x. 2, 1, 1.

In Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiii. 6, 1, 1, Purusha Nārāyaṇa is introduced: Purusho ha Nārāyaṇo 'kāmayata 'atitishṭheyaṁ sarvāṇi bhūtāny aham eva idaṁ sarvaṁ syām' iti | sa etam purusha-medham pancha-rātraṁ yajnakratum apaśyat tam āharat tena ayajata tena ishṭvā 'tyatishṭhat sarvāni bhūtāni idaṁ sarvam abhavat | atitishṭhati sarvāṇi bhūtāni idaṁ sarvam bhavati yaḥ evaṁ vidvān purusha-medhena yajate yo vai etad evaṁ veda |

"Purusha Nārāyaṇa desired, 'may I surpass all created things; may I alone become all this?' He beheld this form of sacrifice called 'purusha-medha' (human sacrifice) lasting five nights. He took it; he sacrificed with it. Having sacrificed with it, he surpassed all created things, and became all this. That man surpasses all created things, and becomes all this, who thus knowing, sacrifices with the 'purusha-medha,'—he who so knows this." The Purusha-sūkta is shortly afterwards quoted. Comp. Śatap. Br. xii. 3, 41, quoted in the fifth volume of this work, p. 377.

In Śatap. Br., xi. 2, 3, 1, Brahma (in the neuter) is introduced as being the original source of all things: Brahma vai idam agre āsīt | tad devān asṛijata | tad devān sṛishṭvā eshu lokeshu vyārohayad asminn eva loke 'gniṁ Vāyum antarikshe divy eva Sūryam | "In the beginning Brahma was all this. He created the gods. Having created the gods, he placed them in these worlds, in this world Agni, Vāyu in the atmosphere, and Sūrya in the sky." This passage is quoted at greater length in vol. v. of this work, p. 387 ff. Comp. the other passages quoted in pp. 378–390, and Taitt. Br. iii. 12, 3, 1, cited in p. 361, note, of the same volume; and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa xiv., 4, 2, 21, and 23 (=Bṛihadāraṇyaka Upanishad in Bibliotheca Indica, pp. 198 ff., and 335).

In Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiii. 7, 1, 1, Brahma is described as sacrificing himself: Brahma vai svayambhu tapo 'tapyata | tad aikshata

'na vai tapasy ānantyam asti hanta aham bhūteshv ātmānaṁ juhavāni bhutāni cha ātmani' iti | tat sarveshu bhūteshv ātmānaṁ hutvā bhūtāni cha ātmani sarveshām bhūtānāṁ śraishṭhyaṁ svārājyam ādhipatyam paryait | tathaiva etad yajamānaḥ sarvamedhe sarvān medhān hutvā sarvāṇi bhūtāni śraishṭhyaṁ svārājyam ādhipatyam paryeti | "The self-existent Brahma performed austerity. He considered, 'in austerity there is not infinity. Come let me sacrifice myself in created things, and created things in myself.' Then having sacrificed himself in all created things, and all created things in himself, he acquired superiority, self-effulgence, and supreme dominion (compare Manu, xii. 91). Therefore a man offering all oblations, all creatures, in the 'sarvamedha' (universal sacrifice), obtains superiority, self-effulgence, and supreme dominion."[75] See also Śatap. Br. xi. 1, 8, 2 f., quoted in the fifth volume of this work, p. 372, note 554.

The following is the account of the creation, given at a later period by Manu, i. 5 ff., founded, no doubt, on R. V. x. 129, and the passages of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, given above (pp. 20 ff.), or some other ancient sources of the same character, with an intermixture of more modern doctrines:

Āsīd idaṁ tamobhūtam aprajñātam alakshaṇam | apratarkyam avijñeyam prasuptam iva sarvataḥ | 6. Tataḥ svayambhūr bhagavān avyakto vyanjayann idam | mahābhūtādi vṛittaujāḥ prādurāsīt tamonudaḥ | 7. Yo 'sāv atīndriya-grāhyaḥ sūkshmo 'vyaktaḥ sanātanaḥ | sarva-bhūtamayo 'chintyaḥ sa eva svayam udbabhau | 8. So 'bhidhyāya śarīrāt svāt sisṛikshur vividhāḥ prajāḥ | apaḥ eva sasarjjādau tāsu vījam avāsṛijat | 9. Tad aṇḍam abhavad haimaṁ sahasrāṁśu-samaprabham | tasmiṁ jajñe svayam Brahmā sarva-loka-pitāmahaḥ | 10. Āpo nārāḥ iti proktāḥ āpo vai nara-sūnavaḥ | tāḥ yad asyāyanam pūrvaṁ tena Nārāyaṇaḥ smṛitaḥ | 11. Yat tat kāraṇam avyaktaṁ nityaṁ sadasadātmakam | tad-visṛishṭaḥ sa purusho loke Brahmeti kīrtyate | 12. Tasminn aṇḍe sa bhagavān ushitvā parivatsaram | svayam evātmano dhyānāt tad aṇḍam akarod dvidhā | 13. tābhyāṁ sa śakalābhyāncha divam bhūmincha nirmame | madhye vyomā diśaś chashṭāv apāṁ sthānaṁ cha śāśvatam |

5. "This universe was enveloped in darkness, unperceived, undis-

[75] See the discussion on the sense of R. V. x. 81, 1, 5, 6 (above, pp. 9 f.).

tinguishable, undiscoverable, unknowable, as it were entirely sunk in sleep. 6. Then the irresistible self-existent Lord, undiscerned, causing this universe with the five elements and all other things, to become discernible, was manifested, dispelling the gloom. 7. He who is beyond the cognizance of the senses, subtile, undiscernible, eternal, who is the essence of all beings, and inconceivable, himself shone forth. 8. He, desiring, seeking to produce various creatures from his own body, first created the waters, and deposited in them a seed. 9. This [seed] became a golden egg, resplendent as the sun, in which he himself was born as Brahmā, the progenitor of all the worlds. 10. The waters are called 'nārāḥ,' because they are the offspring of Nara; and since they were formerly the place of his movement (ayana), he is therefore called Nārāyaṇa. 11. Being formed by that First Cause, undiscernible, eternal, which is both existent and non-existent, that Male (purusha) is known in the world as Brahmā. 12. That lord having continued a year in the egg, divided it into two parts by his mere thought. 13. With these two shells he formed the heavens and the earth; and in the middle he placed the sky, the eight regions, and the eternal abode of the waters."

It will be observed from verses 9–11, that the appellation Nārāyaṇa is applied to Brahmā, and that no mention is made of Vishṇu.

On verse 8 Kullūka annotates thus: 'Tad aṇḍam abhavad haimam' iti | tad vījam Parameśvarechhayā haiman aṇḍam abhavad haimam iva haimaṁ śuddhi-guṇa-yogād na tu haimam eva | tadīyaika-śakalena bhūmi-nirmāṇasya vakshyamāṇatvād bhūmeśchāhaimatvasya pratyakshatvād upachārāśrayaṇam . . . . . tasminn aṇḍe Hiraṇyagarbho jātavān | yena pūrva-janmani 'Hiraṇyagarbho 'ham asmi' iti bhedābheda-bhāvanayā Parameśvaropāsanā kṛitā tadīyaṁ linga-śarīrāvachhinna-jīvam anupraviśya svayam Paramātmā eva Hiraṇyagarbha-rūpatayā prādurbhūtaḥ | "'That [seed] became a golden egg,' etc. That seed by the will of the deity became a golden egg. Golden, i.e. as it were golden, from the quality of purity attaching to it, and not really golden; for since the author proceeds to describe the formation of the earth from one of the halves of its shell, and since we know by ocular proof that the earth is not golden, we see that a mere figure of speech is here intended. . . . In that egg Hiraṇyagarbha was produced: i.e. entering into the living soul,—invested with a subtile body,—of that person by whom in a former birth the deity was worshipped, with the contemplation of distinctness and identity expressed in the words, 'I am Hiraṇyagarbha,' the supreme Spirit himself became manifested in the form of Hiraṇyagarbha."

The creation is narrated in a similar manner, but without the introduction of any metaphysical elements, in the Harivaṁśa, vv. 35 ff.: Tataḥ svayambhūr bhagavān sisṛikshur vividhāḥ prajāḥ | apaḥ eva sasarjjādau tāsu vījam avāsṛijat | āpo nārāḥ iti proktāḥ āpo vai nara-sūnavaḥ | ayanaṁ tasya tāḥ pūrvaṁ tena nārāyaṇaḥ smṛitaḥ | hiraṇyavarṇam abhavat tad aṇḍam udakeśayam | tatra jajñe svayam Brahmā svayambhūr iti naḥ śrutam | Hiraṇyagarbho bhagavān ushitvā parivatsaram | tad aṇḍam akarod dvaidhaṁ divam bhuvam athāpi cha | tayoḥ śakalayor madhye ākāśam asṛijat prabhuḥ | apsu pāriplavām pṛithvīṁ diśaścha daśadhā dadhe |

"Then the self-existent lord, desiring to produce various creatures, first of all formed the waters, and deposited in them a seed. The waters are called 'nārāḥ,' for they are the offspring of Nara. They were formerly the place of his movement; hence he is called 'Nārāyaṇa.' That seed became a golden-coloured egg, reposing on the water: in it the self-existent Brahmā himself was born, [or, in it he himself was born as the self-existent Brahmā], as we have heard. The divine Hiraṇyagarbha having dwelt [in the egg] a year, divided it into two parts, heaven and earth. In the midst between these two shells, the Lord created the æther, and the earth floating about on the waters, and placed the regions in ten directions."

In a later part of the same work we find another account of the production of Hiraṇyagarbha:

Harivaṁśa, vv. 12, 425 ff.—Jagat-srashṭu-manāḥ devaś chintayāmāsa pūrvataḥ | tasya chintayato vaktrād niḥsṛitaḥ purushaḥ kila | tataḥ sa purusho devaṁ kiṁ karomīty upashthitaḥ | pratyuvācha smitaṁ kṛitvā deva-devo jagat-patiḥ | 'vibhajātmānam' ity uktvā gato 'ntardhānam īśvaraḥ | antarhitasya devasya śaśarīrasya bhāsvataḥ | pradīpasyeva śāntasya gatis tasya na vidyate | tatas teneritāṁ vāṇīṁ so 'nvachintayata prabhuḥ | "Hiraṇyagarbho bhagavān yaḥ esha chhandasā śrutaḥ | ekaḥ prajāpatiḥ pūrvam abhavad bhuvanādhipaḥ | tadā-prabhṛiti tasyādyo yajna-bhāgo vidhīyate | 'vibhajātmānam' ity uktas tenāsmi sumahātmanā | katham ātmā vibhajyaḥ syāt saṁśayo hy atra me mahān" |

"Being desirous to create the world, the deity formerly meditated. As he meditated, a man (purusha) issued from his mouth. This man then approached the deity, [saying] 'what am I to do?' The god of gods, the lord of the world, answered smiling, 'divide thyself.' Having thus spoken, the lord vanished. The path of the radiant embodied deity, when he has vanished, is not known, like that [of the flame] of an extinguished taper. The lord then meditated [thus] upon the word which the deity had uttered: 'This divine Hiraṇya-garbha, who is celebrated in the Vedic hymn, was formerly the one sole Prajāpati, the ruler of the world. Thenceforward the first half of the sacrifice is allotted to him. "Divide thyself,"—thus have I been commanded by that mighty being. But how is the self to be divided? Here I have great doubt.'" Then follow the verses which have been quoted in the third volume of this work, p. 13 f., to which I refer.

The Rāmāyaṇa, which I quote first according to the recension of Schlegel (which here coincides with the Serampore, and essentially with the Bombay, editions), thus describes the origin of the world:

Rāmāyaṇa (Schlegel's ed.), ii. 110, 2 ff.—Imāṁ loka-samutpattiṁ loka-nātha nibodha me | 3. Sarvaṁ salilam evāsīt pṛithivī yatra nirmitā |[76] tataḥ samabhavad Brahmā svayambhūr daivataiḥ saha | 4. Sa varāhas tato bhūtvā projjahāra vasundharām | asṛijachcha jagat sarvaṁ saha putraiḥ kṛitātmabhiḥ | 5. Ākāśa-prabhavo Brahmā śāśvato nityam avyayaḥ | tasmād Marīchiḥ sanjajne Marīcheḥ Kaśyapaḥ sutaḥ | 6. Vivasvān Kaśyapāj jajne Manur Vivasvataḥ smṛitaḥ | sa tu Prajāpatiḥ pūrvam ityādi |

Vaśishṭha says: "Lord of the people, understand from me this [account of] the origin of the worlds. 3. All was water only, in which the earth was formed. Thence arose Brahmā, the self-existent, with the deities. 4. He then, becoming a boar,[77] raised up the earth, and created the whole world with the saints, his sons. 5. Brahmā, eternal, and perpetually undecaying, sprang from the ether; from him was descended Marīchi; the son of Marīchi was Kaśyapa. 6. From Kaśyapa sprang Vivasvat, and Manu is declared to have been Vivasvat's son. He (Manu) was formerly the Prajāpati," etc.

[76] See Appendix A.

[77] Compare S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa, 14, 1, 2, 11, quoted above, p. 27.

It will be observed that here it is Brahmā who assumes the form of a boar to raise up the earth from under the ocean. In the Gauḍa recension of Gorresio, however, this function is transferred to Vishṇu; and this I regard as one proof that this recension of the text is more modern than that followed by Schlegel. I have indicated by italics in my translations the important points in which the two recensions differ from one another.

Rāmāyaṇa (Gorresio's ed.), ii. 119, 2 ff.—Imām loka-samutpattiṁ loka-nātha nibodha me | 3. Sarvaṁ salilam evāsīt vasudhā yena nirmitā | tataḥ samabhavad Brahmā svayambhūr Vishṇur avyayaḥ | 4. Sa varāho 'tha bhūtvemām ujjahāra vasundharām | asṛijachcha jagat sarvam sacharācharam avyayam | 5. Ākāśa-prabhavo Brahmā śāśvato nityam avyayaḥ | tasmād Marīchiḥ sanjajne Marīcheḥ Kaśyapaḥ sutaḥ | 6. Tataḥ paryāya-sargeṇa Vivasvān asṛijad Manum ityādi |

"Lord of the people, understand from me this [account of] the origin of the worlds. 3. All was water only, through which the earth was formed. Thence arose Brahmā, the self-existent, the imperishable Vishṇu. 4. He then, becoming a boar, raised up this earth, and created the whole world, movable and immovable, imperishable. 5. Brahmā, eternal, and perpetually undecaying, sprang from the ether; from him was descended Marīchi; the son of Marīchi was Kaśyapa. 6. By successive creation, Vivasvat created Manu," etc.

It will be noticed that at the end of the third śloka, the reading of the first recension, viz. Brahmā svayambhūr daivataiḥ saha, "Brahmā, the self-existent, with the deities," is, in the second, changed into Brahmā svayambhūr Vishṇur avyayaḥ, "Brahmā, the self-existent, the imperishable Vishṇu," whereby Brahmā becomes a mere manifestation of Vishṇu,—a character of which we have no hint in the earlier recension. Similarly the words which are given in Schlegel's recension, at the close of the fourth śloka, viz. saha putraiḥ kṛitātmabhiḥ, "with the saints, his sons," are in the other recension altered into sacharācharam avyayam, "movable and immovable, and imperishable" —epithets descriptive of the world. This second alteration was rendered necessary by the first: for as soon as the god who is the subject of the passage had been changed from Brahmā to Vishṇu, the mention of sons became inapplicable; as Vishṇu is not described in the accounts of the creation as having any sons, whereas Brahmā is.

Compare with the fifth verse of the passage before us (in Schlegel's text), the Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 7, 1 ff.; quoted in the first volume of this work, pp. 64 f. The accounts of Brahmā's descendants are not, however, always consistent. See Manu, i. 32 ff., and Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 7, 12 ff., quoted in pp. 35 ff., and 64 f., of vol. i.

The origin of the world is similarly described in the Mahābhārata xii. 6805 f.

Bhṛigur uvācha | Prajā-visargaṁ vividham Mānaso manasā 'sṛijat | saṁrakshaṇārtham bhūtānāṁ sṛishṭam prathamato jalam | yaḥ prāṇaḥ sarva-bhūtānaṁ vardhante yena cha prajāḥ | parityaktāś cha naśyanti tenedaṁ sarvam āvṛitam | pṛithivī parvatāḥ meghāḥ mūrtimantaś cha ye 'pare | sarvaṁ tad vāruṇaṁ jñeyam āpaś tastambhire yataḥ | . . . . Brahmakalpe purā brahman brahmarshīṇāṁ samāgame | loka-sambhava-sandehaḥ samutpanno mahātmanām | Te 'tishṭhan dhyānam ālambya maunam āsthāya niśchalāḥ | tyaktāhārāḥ pavana-pāḥ divyaṁ varsha-śatam dvijāḥ | teshām Brahmamayī vāṇī sarveshāṁ śrotram āgamat | divyā Sarasvatī tatra sambabhūva nabhastalāt | purā stimitam ākāśam anantam achalopamam | nashṭa-chandrārka-pavanam prasuptam iva sambabhau | tataḥ salilam utpannaṁ tamasīvāparaṁ tamaḥ | tasmāch cha salilotpīḍād udatishṭhata mārutaḥ |

"Bhṛigu says: Mānasa[78] (the Intellectual) formed by a mental effort the varied creation of living beings. For the preservation of creatures water was first produced,—water which is the breath of all creatures, by which they grow, and forsaken by which they die:—by it all things were covered. The earth, the mountains, the clouds, and other material objects;—all these things must be understood as aqueous, because the waters supported them." Bharadvāja asks how water, fire, air [or wind], and earth were created, and Bhṛigu replies: "Formerly, in an assemblage of Brāhman rishis, in the Brahmakalpa, a doubt arose in their minds as to the production of the worlds. These Brāhmans continued fixed in meditation and in silence, eating no food, drinking in only air, for a hundred years of the gods. A voice, of the essence of Brahmā, reached the ears of them all: the divine Sarasvatī sprang forth from the heavens. Formerly the infinite ether, motionless, like a mountain,—moon, sun and air having been destroyed in it,—appeared as it were asleep. Then water was produced like another darkness (tamas) in darkness, and from the foam of that water arose air."

[78] This word is defined in v. 6775: Mānaso nāma yaḥ pūrvo śiśruto vai maharṣhibhiḥ | anādi-nidhano devas tathā 'bhedyo 'jarāmaraḥ | "The primeval god, without beginning or dissolution, indivisible, undecaying and immortal, who is known and called by great rishis Mānasa," etc.

Before proceeding to quote the other texts which I have to adduce regarding the egg of Brahmā, I shall here introduce two quotations, to show how the assumption of the form of a boar, ascribed in the older recension of this passage of the Rāmāyaṇa to Brahmā, is in works of a later date represented as the act of Vishṇu. The first passage forms a part of the rapid enumeration of the twenty-two incarnations of Vishṇu, in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, i. 3, 7: Dvitīyaṁ tu bhavāyāsya rasā-tala-gatām mahīm | uddharishyann upādatta yajneśaḥ saukaraṁ vapuḥ | "Secondly, with a view to the creation of this universe, the lord of sacrifice, being desirous to raise up the earth, which had sunk into the lower regions, assumed the form of a boar."

The second passage to be adduced is from the Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 4, 1 ff. (p. 57 ff. of Wilson's English trans., Dr. Hall's ed., vol. i.), and has been already partly quoted in the first volume of this work, pp. 50 f.: Maitreya uvācha | Brahmā Nārāyaṇākhyo 'sau kalpādau bhagavān yathā | sasarjja sarva-bhūtāni tad āchakshva mahāmune[79] | Parāśaraḥ uvācha | prajāḥ sasarjja bhagavān Brahmā Nārāyaṇātmakaḥ | prajāpatipatir devo yathā tan me niśāmaya | atīta-kalpāvasāne niśā-suptotthitaḥ prabhuḥ | sattvodriktas tato Brahmā śūnyaṁ lokam avaikshata | Nārāyaṇaḥ paro 'chintyaḥ pareshām api sa prabhuḥ | Brahma-svarūpī bhaga-

[79] I take the opportunity of quoting here an answer given in the Vishṇu Purāṇa, i. 3, 1 ff. (p. 44 of Wilson's trans. in Dr. Hall's ed. vol. i.), to the question how it is conceivable that Brahmā should create;—an answer which, if admitted as the only solution of the problem, would have rendered many speculations of the Indian philosophers unnecessary. Maitreyaḥ uvācha | nirguṇasyāprameyasya śuddhasyāpy amalātmanaḥ | kathaṁ sargādikarttṛitvam Brāhmaṇo 'bhyupapadyate | Parāśaraḥ uvācha | śaktayaḥ sarva-bhāvānām, achintya-jnāna-gocharāḥ | yato 'to Brahmaṇas tās tu sargādyāḥ bhāva-śaktayaḥ | bhavanti tapasāṁ śreshṭha pāvakasya yathoshṇutā | "Maitreya asks: How can the agencies of creation, etc., be possible to Brahma, who is devoid of the [three] qualities, immeasurable, pure, and free from stain? Parāśara answers: Since powers which could not be imagined [?] are actually known to belong to all natures, therefore, O chief of ascetics, these powers of creative agency, etc., belong to the essence of Brahma, as heat is an attribute of fire." Dr. Hall translates differently. See his note. Can the proper reading be dachintyāḥ in place of achintya?

vān anādiḥ sarva-sambhavaḥ | toyānṭaḥ sa mahīṁ jnātvā jagaty ekārṇave prabhuḥ | anumānād tad-uddhāraṁ karttu-kāmaḥ Prajāpatiḥ | akarot sa tanūm anyām kalpādishu yathā purā | matsya-kūrmādikāṁ tadvad vārāhaṁ vapur āshthitaḥ | veda-yajnamayaṁ rūpam aśesha-jagataḥ sthitau | sthitaḥ sthirātmā sarvātmā paramātmā Prajāpatiḥ | janaloka-gataiḥ siddhaiḥ Sanakādyair abhishṭutaḥ | praviveśa tada toyam ātmā-dhāro dharādharaḥ | nirīkshya taṁ tadā devī pātāla-talam āgatam | tushṭāva praṇatā bhūtvā bhakti-namrā vasundharā | Prithvy uvācha | Namas te sarva-bhūtāya tubhyaṁ śankha-gadā-dhara | mām uddhar-āsmād adya tvaṁ tvatto 'ham pūrvam utthitā | . . . . sambhakshayitvā sakalaṁ jagaty ekārṇavīkṛite | śeshe tvam eva Govinda chintyamāno manīshibhiḥ | bhavato yat paraṁ rūpaṁ tan na jānāti kaśchana | avatār-eshu yad rūpaṁ tad archanti divaukasaḥ | tvām ārādhya paraṁ Brahma yātāḥ muktim mumukṣhavaḥ | Vāsudevam anārādhya ko mokshaṁ sama-vāpsyati | . . . . tvaṁ yajnas tvaṁ vashaṭkāras tvam oṁkāras tvam agnayaḥ | . . . . Evaṁ samstūyamānas tu Prithivyā prithivī-dharaḥ | sāma-svara-dhvaniḥ śrīmān jagarjja parighvrgharam | tataḥ samutkshipya dharāṁ sa daṁshṭrayā mahāvarāhaḥ sphuṭa-padma-lochanaḥ | rasātalād utpala-patra-sannibhaḥ samutthito nīlaḥ ivāchalo mahān | . . . . evaṁ samstūyamānas tu Paramātmā mahīdharaḥ | ujjahāra mahīṁ kshipraṁ nyastavāṁś cha mahāmbhasi | tasyopari jalaughasya mahatī naur iva sthitā | vitatatvāt tu dehasya na mahī yāti samplavam |

"Maitreya said: Tell me, great Muni, how, at the beginning of the Kalpa, that divine Brahmā called Nārāyaṇa created all beings. Parāśara replied: Hear from me how the divine Brahmā, lord of the Prajāpatis, who had the nature of Nārāyaṇa, created living beings. At the close of the past (or Pādma) Kalpa, Brahmā, the lord, endowed predominantly with the quality of goodness, awoke from his night-slumber, and beheld the universe void. He [was] the supreme lord Nārāyaṇa, who cannot even be conceived by others, existing in the form of Brahmā, the deity without beginning, the source of all things. [The verse given in Manu i. 10, and the Harivanśa, v. 36, regarding the derivation of the word Nārāyaṇa, is here quoted.] This lord Prajāpati, discovering by inference,—when the world had become one ocean,—that the earth lay within the waters, and being desirous to raise it up, assumed another form. As he had formerly, at the commencement of the [previous] Kalpas, taken the shape of a fish, a tortoise, etc. (so now), entering the body of a boar,—a form composed of the Vedas and of sacrifice, —the lord of creatures, who throughout the entire continuance of the world remains fixed, the universal soul, the supreme soul, the self-sustained, the supporter of the earth, hymned by Sanaka and other saints residing in the Janaloka, entered the water. Beholding him then descended to Pātāla, the goddess Earth, bowing down, prostrated in devotion, sang his praise: 'Reverence, bearer of the shell and club, to thee who art all things: raise me to-day from this place: by thee have I been formerly lifted. . . . . Having swallowed up the universe, when the world has become one ocean, thou, Govinda, sleepest, meditated upon by the wise. No one knows that which is thy highest form: the gods adore that form which [thou assumest] in thy incarnations. Worshipping thee, the supreme Brahma, men desirous of final liberation have attained their object. Who shall obtain liberation without adoring Vāsudeva? . . . . . Thou art sacrifice, thou art the vashaṭkāra (a sacrificial formula), thou art the oṁkāra, thou art the fires.' . . . . Being thus celebrated by the Earth, the glorious upholder of the earth, with a voice like the chanting of the Sāmaveda, uttered a deep thundering sound. Then the great boar, with eyes like the expanded lotus, tossing up the earth with his tusk, rose up, resembling the leaf of the blue lotus, from the lower regions, like the great blue mountain. . . . . [The boar is then again lauded by Sanandana and other saints, in a hymn, in the course of which his different members are compared in detail to some of the materials and implements of sacrifice, etc.—See Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, 2nd ed., i., pp. 63 ff.] . . . . . Being thus hymned, the supreme Soul, the upholder of the earth, lifted the earth up quickly, and placed it upon the great waters. Resting upon this mass of waters, like a mighty ship, the earth does not sink, owing to the expansion of its bulk."[80] See also the Mahābhārata iii. 10932 ff.

[80] Another instance in which an act ascribed to Brahmā by earlier writers is transferred to Vishṇu in the later Purāṇas, may be found in the story of the deluge in the Mbh., Vanaparva, 12, 797 ff. (see the first volume of this work, pp. 196 ff.); towards the conclusion of which, vv. 12, 797 f., the Fish declares himself to be Brahmā: Athābravīd animishas tān ṛishīn sa hitas tada | aham Prajāpatir Brahmā yat-paraṁ nādhigamyate | matsya-rūpeṇa yūyancha mayā 'smād mokshitāḥ bhayāt | "Then the god (lit. the unwinking), kindly-disposed, said to those rishis, 'I am the Prajāpati Brahmā, above whom no Being is discoverable: by me in the form of a fish

The Linga Purāṇa, however, which is of the Śaiva class, and has not, as such, any interest in glorifying Vishṇu, describes Brahmā as the deity who took the form of a boar: Part i. 4, 59 ff.: Rātrau chaikārṇave Brahmā nashṭe sthāvara-jaṅgame | sushvāpāmbhasi yas tasmād Nārāyaṇaḥ iti smṛitaḥ | śarvary-ante prabuddho vai dṛishṭvā śūnyaṁ charācharam | srashṭuṁ tadā matiṁ chakre Brahmā brahma-vidāṁ varaḥ | udakair āplutām kshmāṁ tāṁ samādāya sanātanaḥ | pūrva-vat sthāpayāmāsa vārāhaṁ rūpam āsthitaḥ | "In the night, when all things movable and immovable had been destroyed in the universal ocean, Brahmā slept upon the waters, and is hence called Nārāyaṇa. At the close of the night, awaking, and beholding the universe void, Brahmā, chief of the knowers of Brahma, then resolved to create. Having assumed the form of a boar, this eternal [god] taking the earth, which was overflowed by the waters, placed it as it had been before."

[In Böhtlingk and Roth's Lexicon, s. v. varāha, reference is made to a further passage from the Taitt. S. vi. 2, 42, in which the boar is mentioned (see above, pp. 27 f.). I quote this with another story which follows it: Yajno devebhyo nilāyata Vishṇurūpam kṛitvā | sa pṛithivīm prāvishat | taṁ devāḥ hastān saṁrabhya aichhan | tam Indraḥ upary upary aty akrāmat | so 'bravīt "ko mā 'yam upary upary aty akramīd" iti | "aham durge hantā" iti | atha "kas tvam" iti | "ahaṁ durgād āhartā" iti | so 'bravīd "durge vai hantā avochathāḥ | varāho 'yam vāmamoshaḥ saptānāṁ girīṇām parastād vittaṁ vedyam

you have been delivered from this danger.'" Compare the story as told in the Bhāg. Pur. (and see Burnouf, Pref. to Bhāg. Pur., iii. p. xxiii.). Bhāg. Pur. viii. 24, 4: Ity ukto Vishṇurāteṇa bhagavān Vādarāyaṇiḥ | uvācha charitaṁ Vishṇor matsya-rūpeṇa yat kṛitam | Śukaḥ uvācha | . . . . . 7. āsīd atīta-kalpānte Brāhmo naimittiko layaḥ | samudropaplutās tatra lokāḥ bhūrādayo nṛipa | 8. Kālenāgata-nidrasya dhātuḥ śiśayishor balī | mukhato niḥsṛitān vedān Hayagrīvo 'ntike 'harat | 9. Jñātvā tad dānavendrasya Hayagrīvasya cheshṭitam | dadhāra sapharīrūpam bhagavān Harir īśvaraḥ ityādi | "Being thus addressed by Vishnurāta, the divine Vādarāyaṇi related the deed of Vishṇu done by him under the form of a fish. Śuka said . . . . 7. At the end of the past Kalpa there was a Brāhma, or partial, dissolution of the universe (see Wilson's Vish. Pur., 2nd ed., vol. i., p. 113; vol. v., p. 186); in which the earth and other worlds were submerged under the ocean. The powerful Hayagrīva [coming] near, snatched away the Vedas which had issued from the mouth of the creator, who from drowsiness, which had supervened through time, was disposed to sleep. Having discovered this deed of Hayagrīva, chief of the Dānavas, the divine lord, Hari, took the form of a sapharī fish," etc.

Asurāṇām bibharti tañ jahi yadi durge hantā 'si" iti | sa darbha-punjīlam udvṛihya sapta girīn bhittvā tam ahan | so 'bravīd "durgād vai āhartā avochathāḥ | etam āhara" iti | tam ebhyo yajnaḥ eva yajnam āharat | yat tad vittañ vedyam asurāṇām avindanta tad ekañ vedyai veditvam | Asurāṇāñ vai iyam agre āsīt | yāvad āsīnaḥ parāpaśyati tāvad devānām | te devāḥ abruvann "astv eva no 'syām api" iti | "Kiyad vo dāsyāmaḥ" iti | yāvad iyañ salāvṛikī triḥ parikrāmati tāvan no datta" iti | sa Indraḥ salāvṛikī-rūpañ kṛitvā imāñ triḥ sarvataḥ paryakrāmat | tad imām avindanta | yad imām avindanta tad vedyai veditvam | sā vai iyañ sarvā eva vediḥ |

"The sacrifice, assuming the form of Vishṇu, disappeared from among the gods, and entered into the earth. The gods joined hands, and searched for him. Indra passed over above him. He (Vishṇu) said, 'Who is this who has passed over above me?' (Indra replied:) 'I am he who slays in a castle; but now who art thou?' (Vishṇu said:) 'I am he who carries off from a castle.' He (Vishṇu) said: 'Thou hast said a slayer in a castle. This boar, the plunderer of wealth, keeps the goods of the Asuras on the other side of seven hills. Kill him, if thou art a slayer in a castle.' He (Indra), plucking up a bunch of Kuśa grass, pierced through the seven hills, and slew him. He (Indra) then said: 'Thou hast said I am he who carries off from a castle; so carry him off.' He (Vishṇu), the sacrifice, carried off the sacrifice for them. Inasmuch as they obtained (avindanta) these goods of the Asuras, this is one reason why the altar is called vedi.

"This earth formerly belonged to the Asuras, whilst the gods had only as much as a man can see when sitting. They (the gods) said, 'Let us have a share in this earth also?' 'How much shall we give you?' (asked the Asuras). 'As much as this she-jackal can go round in three (steps).' Indra, assuming the form of a she-jackal, stepped all round the earth in three (strides). Thus the gods obtained (avindanta) it. And from this circumstance the altar derives its name of vedi."

Compare the various stories about the original position of the gods in reference to the Asuras, given above, and in the fifth vol. of this work, p. 15, note].

To return to the mundane egg. In the Vishṇu Purāṇa i. 2, 45 ff. we have the following account of its production, in which the simplicity of the older mythical conceptions is destroyed by the intermixture of metaphysical ideas borrowed from the Sānkhya philosophy. In fact, though it forms here the subject of a magniloquent description, the egg was an element in the cosmogonic traditions with which any writers less ingenious and fanciful than the authors of the Purāṇas would, perhaps, have found it somewhat inconvenient to deal in such a way as to harmonize with the current philosophical speculations: Ākāśavāyu-tejāṁsi salilam pṛithivī tathā | śabdādibhir guṇair brahman saṁyuktāny uttarottaraiḥ | śāntāḥ ghorāś cha mūḍhāś cha viśeshās tena te smṛitāḥ | nānāvīryyāḥ pṛithag-bhūtās tatas te saṁhatiṁ vinā | nāśaknuvan prajāḥ srashṭum asamāgamya kṛitsnaśaḥ | sametyānyonya-saṁyogam paraspara-samāśrayāḥ | eka-sanghāta-lakshyāś cha samprāpyaikyam aśeshataḥ | Purushādhishṭhitatvāch cha Pradhānānugraheṇa cha | mahadādayo viśeshāntāḥ aṇḍam utpādayanti te | tat krameṇa vivṛidhhaṁ tu jala-budbuda-vat samam | bhūtebhyo 'ṇḍam mahābuddhe vṛihat tad udake śayam | prākṛitam Brahma-rūpasya Vishṇoḥ saṁsthānam uttamam | tatrāvyakta-svarūpo 'sau vyakta-rūpī jagat-patiḥ | Vishṇur Brahma-svarūpeṇa svayam eva vyavasthitaḥ | Meru-tulyam abhūt tasya jarāyuś cha mahīdharāḥ | garbhodakaṁ samudrāś cha tasyāsan sumahātmanaḥ | sādri-dvīpa-samudraś cha sajyotir loka-saṅgrahaḥ | tasminn aṇḍe 'bhavad vipra sa-devāsura-mānushaḥ | vāri-vahny-anilākāśais tato bhūtādinā vahiḥ | vṛitaṁ daśaguṇair aṇḍam bhūtādir mahatā tathā | avyaktenāvṛito brahmaṁs taiḥ sarvaiḥ sahito mahān | ebhir āvaraṇair aṇḍaṁ saptabhiḥ prākṛitair vṛitam | nārikela-phalasyāntar vījaṁ vāhya-dalair iva | jushan rajo-guṇaṁ tatra svayaṁ viśveśvaro Hariḥ | Brahmā bhūtvā 'sya jagato visṛishṭau sampravarṭtate |

"Ether, air, fire, water and earth, when joined in order, with sound and the other qualities in succession, are then called specific, being soothing, terrific, or stupefying,[81] but being of different powers, and separated from one another, they could not, without contact, and without being combined together, produce living creatures. [At length] having attained to mutual conjunction, being dependent upon each other, having a tendency to amalgamation, and having so attained an entire unity,—being presided over by Purusha (spirit) and favoured by Pradhāna (matter), these principles, commencing with Mahat (intellect), and down to the gross elements inclusive, generate an egg. Gradually augmented from the elements, smooth like a bubble of water, that vast egg, resting on the water, was the material and appropriate receptacle of Vishṇu in the form of Brahmā. There, undiscernible in his essence, Vishṇu, the lord of the world, himself abode in a discernible shape, in the form of Brahmā. It was like mount Meru; the mountains were the womb, and the seas were the uterine fluids of that vast [production]. In that egg, O Brahmān, were collected the worlds, with their hills, continents, and oceans, the luminaries, the gods, Asuras, and men. This egg was enveloped externally by water, fire, air, ether, and the source of the elements (bhūtādi, i.e. ahankāra) increasing in tenfold progression; and in the same way 'Ahankāra' was invested by 'Mahat'; and Mahat with all these [aforesaid principles] was surrounded by the indiscreet principle (Pradhāna). The egg is enveloped in these seven material coverings, as the seed within the cocoa-nut is surrounded by the outward husks. Assuming there the quality of passion (rajas) Hari, the universal lord, himself becoming Brahmā, engages in the creation of this world."

[81] See Wilson's Sānkhya Karikā, pp. 119 ff., and Vishṇu Pur., 2nd ed., vol. i., p. 38 ff.

The Vishṇu Purāṇa does not connect the egg any further with the creation, or tell us how it became divided, etc., etc.

The Linga Purāṇa, Part i., 3, 28 ff., gives a similar description of the egg: Mahadādi-viśeshāntāḥ hy aṇḍam utpādayanti cha | jala-budbuda-vat tasmāt avatīrṇaḥ Pitāmahaḥ | sa eva bhagavān Rudro Vishṇur viśvagataḥ prabhuḥ | tasminn aṇḍe tv ime lokāḥ antar viśvam idaṁ jagat | aṇḍaṁ daśa-guṇenaiva nabhasā vāhyato vṛitam | ākāśaś chāvṛitas tadvad ahankāreṇa śabdajaḥ | mahatā śabda-hetur vai pradhānenāvṛitaḥ svayam | saptāṇḍāvaraṇāny āhus tasyātmā Kamalāsanaḥ | koṭi-koṭy-ayutāny atra chāṇḍāni kathitāni tu | tatra tatra chaturvaktrāḥ Brahmāṇo Harayo Bhavāḥ | śṛishṭāḥ pradhānena tadā labdhvā Śambhostu sannidhim ityādi |

"And these principles, from Mahat to the gross elements inclusive, generate an egg, like a bubble of water, from which issued the Parent [of the universe], who was the same as divine Rudra, and Vishṇu, the omnipresent lord. Within that egg were these worlds,—this entire universe. The egg was externally invested with a tenfold ether; in like manner, the ether, sprung from sound, was surrounded by 'ahankāra'; the cause of sound (ahankāra) by Mahat, and the latter itself by Pradhāna. These men call the seven coverings of the egg; its soul is Kamalāsana (Brahmā). Here ten thousand crores of crores of eggs are declared (to exist), in which four-faced Brahmās, Haris, and Bhavas (Śivas) were created by Pradhāna, which had attained to proximity with Śambhu (Śiva)."

The Bhāgavata Purāṇa has the following passage on the same subject in the third Book, in answer to an inquiry how the Prajāpatis created the world:

Bhāg. Pur. iii. 20, 12 ff.—Maitreyaḥ uvācha | Daivena durvitarkyeṇa pareṇānimisheṇa cha | jātakshobhād bhagavato mahān asīd guṇa-trayāt | 13. Rajaḥ-pradhānād mahatas trilingo daiva-choditāt | jātaḥ sasarjja bhūtādir viyadādīni panchaśaḥ | 14. Tāni chaikaikaśaḥ srashṭum asamarthāni bhautikam | saṃhatya daiva-yogena haimam aṇḍam avāsṛijan | 15. So 'śayishṭābdhi-salile aṇḍa-kosho nirātmakaḥ | sāgraṁ vai varshasāhasram anvavātsīt tam īśvaraḥ | 16. Tasya nābher abhūt padmaṁ sahasrārkorudīdhiti | sarva-jīva-nikāyauko yatra svayam abhūt Svarāṭ | 17. So 'nuvishṭo bhagavatā yaḥ śete salilāśaye | loka-saṁsthāṁ yathāpūrvaṁ nirmame saṁsthayā svayā |

"Maitreya said:

12. "The Great principle (Intelligence) arose from the three qualities agitated by the Divine Being in consequence of an inscrutable destiny, supreme and ever wakeful. 13. Springing from the Great principle (in which the quality of passion prevailed, and which was impelled by destiny), the source of the elements (bhūtādi or ahankāra), characterized by the three qualities (guṇas), created the ether and other principles, in groups of five. 14. These principles being severally unable to create, deposited, when united by the action of destiny, a golden egg formed of the elements. 15. This egg-shell lay lifeless on the waters of the ocean: the Lord dwelt in it for a complete [period of a] thousand years. 16. From his navel sprang a lotus splendid as a thousand suns, the abode of all living things, where Svarāṭ (Brahmā) himself was born. 17. He penetrated by the Divine Being who reposes on the receptacle of waters, constructed as before, the substance (saṁsthā) of the worlds with his own substance."

The same ideas are repeated in a later chapter of the same book:

Bhāg. Pur. iii. 26, 50 ff.: Etāny asaṁhatya yadā mahad-ādīni sapta

vai | kāla-karma-guṇopeto jagadādir upāviśat | 51. Tatas tenānuviddhebhyo [kshubhitebhyaḥ, Comm.] yuktebhyo 'ṇḍam achetanam | utthitam Purusho yasmād udatishṭhad asau Virāṭ | 52. Etad aṇḍam viśeshākhyaṁ krama-vṛiddhair daśottaraiḥ | toyādibhiḥ parivṛitam pradhānenāvṛitair vahiḥ | yatra loka-vitāno 'yaṁ rūpam bhagavato Hareḥ | 53. Hiraṇmayād aṇḍa-koshād uṭthāya salile-śayāt | tam āviśya mahādevo bahudhā nirbibheda kham [chhidram, Comm.] 54. Nirabhidyatāsya prathamam mukhaṁ vāṇī tato 'bhavad ityādi |

50. "When these seven principles, Mahat and the rest, remained uncombined, the [god who is the] source of the universe entered into them, united with time, action, and the qualities. 51. Then out of these principles penetrated by him; and combined, there arose a lifeless egg, from which sprang Purusha, viz. that Virāṭ. 52. This egg, named Viśesha (the specific) was surrounded by water, and other elements gradually increasing in extent by a tenfold progression, which in their turn were externally invested by Pradhāna. In this egg [was formed] this expanse of worlds, which is the form of the divine Hari. 53. Having arisen out of the envelopment of this golden egg reposing upon the water, the great god, pervading it, opened up many apertures. 54. First his mouth was divided, from which speech issued," etc.

The same process is also described in the second book of the same Purāṇa, sect. 5, 32 ff.; but it is unnecessary to adduce more than a verse or two of the passage.

34. Varsha-pūga-sahasrānte tad aṇḍam udakeśayam | kāla-karmasvabhāva-stho jīvo 'jīvam ajīvayat | 35. Sa eva purushas tasmād aṇḍaṁ nirbhidya nirgataḥ | sahasrorv-anghri-bāhv-akshaḥ sahasrānana-śīrshavān|

34. "At the end of many thousand years, the Life (Jīva) residing in time, action, and nature, gave life to that lifeless egg reposing on the water. 35. Splitting the egg, Purusha issued forth with a thousand thighs, feet, arms, eyes, faces, and heads."

The same subject is yet again referred to in another text of the same work.

Bhāg. Pur. ii. 10, 10 f.: Purusho 'ṇḍaṁ vinirbhidya yadā "dau sa vinirgataḥ | ātmano 'yanam anvichhann apo 'sṛākshīch chhuchiḥ śuchīḥ | tāsv avātsīt svasṛishṭāsu sahasra-parivatsarān | tena Nārāyaṇo nāma yad āpaḥ purushodbhavāḥ |

10. "When, splitting the egg, Purusha first issued from it, seeking a receptacle for himself, he created the pure waters, himself pure. 11. In these waters created by himself he dwelt a thousand years. Hence he is named Nárāyaṇa, because the waters were produced from Purusha."

The story about Brahmā's incestuous passion for his own daughter, which is sometimes alluded to in the Purāṇas, is thus noticed in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, 1, 7, 4,1 ff.[82]—Prajāpatir ha vai svāṁ duhitaram abhidadhyau divaṁ vā ushasaṁ vā 'mithuny enayā syām' iti taṁ sambabhūva| 2. Tad vai devānām āgaḥ āsa 'yaḥ itthaṁ svāṁ duhitaram asmākaṁ svasāraṁ karoti' iti | 3. Te ha devāḥ ūchur 'yo 'yaṁ devaḥ paśūnām īshṭe 'tisandhaṁ vai ayaṁ charati yaḥ itthaṁ svāṁ duhitaram asmākaṁ svasāraṁ karoti vidhya imam' iti | taṁ Rudro 'bhyāyatya vivyādha tasya sāmi retaḥ prachaskanda tathā id nūnaṁ tad āsa | 4. Tasmād etad ṛishiṇā 'bhyanūktam 'pitā yat svāṁ duhitaram adhishkan kshmayā retaḥ sanjagmāno nishinchad' iti tad āgni-mārutam ity ukthaṁ tasmiṁs tad vyākhyāyate yathā tad devāḥ retaḥ prājanayan | teshāṁ yadā devānāṁ krodho vyaid atha Prajāpatim abhishajyaṁs tasya taṁ śalyaṁ nirakṛintan | sa vai yajnaḥ eva Prajāpatiḥ |

"Prajāpati cast his eyes upon his own daughter, either the Sky, or the Dawn, [desiring] 'May I pair with her.' So [saying] he had intercourse with her. 2. This was a crime in the eyes of the gods, who said: '[He is guilty] who acts thus to his own daughter, our sister.' 3. The gods said: 'This god who rules over the beasts, commits a transgression in that he acts thus to his own daughter, our sister: pierce him through.' Rudra aimed at, and pierced, him. Half of his seed fell to the ground. So it happened. 4. Accordingly this has been said by the ṛishi (R. V. x. 61, 7), 'when the father embracing his daughter, uniting with her, discharged his seed on the earth,' etc. This is a hymn addressed to Agni and the Maruts; and it is there related in what manner the gods generated this seed. When the anger of the gods had passed away, they applied remedies to Prajāpati, and cut out of him the arrow. Prajāpati is sacrifice."

The following is the context of the passage of the Rig-veda referred [82] See the passages from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa and the Matsya Purāṇa on the same subject, with the remarks subjoined, in the first vol. of this work, pp. 107 ff.

to in the preceding legend, which refers apparently to some atmospheric phenomenon. It is hard to say what gods or powers of nature are denoted by the father and the daughter respectively,[83] and the passage is obscure and difficult to translate, even with the aid of Sāyaṇa's comment, for a copy of which I am indebted to Professor Müller. The 4th verse is addressed to the Aśvins. The commentator regards verses 5–7 as intended to show how "Rudra Prajāpati created Rudra Vāstoshpati with a portion of himself:" (Yathā svāṁśena bhagavān Rudraḥ prajāpatir Vāstoshpatiṁ Rudram asṛijat tad etad-ādibhir tisṛibhir vadati.)

R. V. x. 61, 4: Krishṇā yad goshu aruṇīshu sīdad divo napātā Aśvinā huve vām | vītam me yajñam āgatam me annaṁ vavanvāṁsā na isham asmṛita-dhrū | 5. Prathishṭa yasya vīrakarmam ishṇad anushṭhitaṁ nu naryyo apauhat | punas tad ā́vṛihati yat kanāyāḥ duhitur āḥ anubhṛitam anarvā | 6. Madhyā yat kartvam abhavad abhīke kāmaṁ kṛiṇvāne pitari yuvatyām | manānag reto jahatur viyantā sānau nishiktaṁ sukṛitasya yonau[84] | 7. Pitā yat svāṁ duhitaram adhishkan kshmayā retaḥ sanjagmāno nishinchat | svādhyo ajanayan brahma devāḥ vāstoshpatiṁ vratapāṁ niratakshan |

"When the dark female (night) stands among the tawny cows (rays of the dawn?), I invoke you twain, Aśvins, sons of the Sky.[85] Come eagerly to my sacrifice, come to my oblation, as desiring sustenance, ye who do not disappoint my longings.[86] 5. That male, whose prolific virile (organ) was extended, now withdrew it, after it had been sent forth. Again the irresistible [god] draws forth that which had been [83] In S'atapatha Brāhmaṇa vi. 1, 2, 1 ff., it is related that Prajāpati, being desirous of creating, connected himself with various spouses, or associates, for this purpose, first,—in the form of, or by means of, Agni,—with the Earth (So 'gninā pṛithivīm mithunaṁ samabhavat): from which union sprang an egg, and thence Vāyu; next, through Vāyu he united himself with the Air (antarikṣha, neuter), and again an egg was produced, and thence Āditya (the Sun); thirdly, through Āditya he connected himself with Dyaus (the Sky); fourthly, fifthly, sixthly, and seventhly, through his mind (manas) with Vāch; the result of which, in each of the last four cases, was his own pregnancy (garbhī abhavat).

[84] The same phrase occurs in R. V. iii. 29, 8.

[85] See the fifth vol. of this work, pp. 234 and 239.

[86] Such is the meaning given by Professor Roth to asmṛita-dhrū from a+smṛita+ +dhru, "not suffering what I have desired to fall." See s.v. 2, dhru. Sāyaṇa renders it, asmṛita-drohau mayi droham asmārantau | "forgetting injury—forgetting injury to me."

introduced [into the womb of] his youthful daughter. 6. [They then did] in the midst that which was to be done at their contact, when the father loved the youthful damsel,—separating from each other, they discharged a little seed which was shed on the surface, on the place of holy ceremonies. 7. When the father, bent on impregnating his own daughter, united with her, discharged his seed on the earth, the benevolent gods generated prayer, they fashioned Vāstoshpati, the protector of sacred rites."

The same story is repeated in the later literature, as in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa iii. 12, 28 ff., only that Vāch is the daughter of Brahmā who is there spoken of: Vāchaṁ duhitaraṁ tanvīṁ Svayambhūr haratīm manaḥ | akāmāṁ chakame kshattaḥ sakāmaḥ iti naḥ śrutam | 29. Tam adharme kṛita-matim vilokya pitaraṁ sutāḥ | Marīchi-mukhyāḥ munayo viśrambhāt pratyabodhayan | 30. Naitat pūrvdiḥ kṛitaṁ tvad ye na karishyanti chāpare | yas tvaṁ duhitaraṁ gachher anigṛihyāṅgajam prabhuḥ | 31. Tejīyasām api hy etad na suślokyaṁ jagadguro | yad vṛittam anutishṭhan vai lokaḥ kshemāya kalpate | 32. Tasmai namo bhagavate ya idaṁ svena rochishā ātmasthaṁ vyanjayāmāsa sa dharmam pātum arhati | 33. Sa itthaṁ gṛiṇataḥ putrān puro dṛishṭvā prajāpatīn | prajāpati-patis tanvaṁ tatyāja vrīḍitas tadā | tāṁ diśo jagṛihur ghorāṁ nīhāraṁ yad vidus tamaḥ |

"We have heard, O Kshatriya, that Svayambhū (Brahmā) had a passion for Vāch, his slender and enchanting daughter, who had no passion for him. The Munis, his sons, headed by Marīchi, seeing their father bent upon wickedness, admonished him with affection: 'This is such a thing as has never been done by those before you, nor will those after you do it,—that you, being the lord, should sexually approach your daughter, not restraining your passion. This, O preceptor of the world, is not a laudable deed even in glorious personages, through imitation of whose actions men attain felicity. Glory to that divine being (Vishṇu) who by his own lustre revealed this [universe] which abides in himself,—he must maintain righteousness.' Seeing his sons, the Prajāpatis, thus speaking before him, the lord of the Prajāpatis (Brahmā) was ashamed, and abandoned his body. This dreadful body the regions received, and it is known as foggy darkness."

This legend of Brahmā and his daughter, though, as appears from the passage in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, it has occasioned scandal among the Indian writers from an early period, is not to be regarded in the same light as many other stories regarding the licentious actions of some of the other gods. The production of a female and her conjunction with the male out of whom she was formed, is regarded in Manu i. 32, as one of the necessary stages in the cosmogonic process (and finds its near parallel in the book of Genesis): dvidhā kṛitvā ''tmano deham arddhena purusho 'bhavat | arddhena nārī tasyām sa Virājam asṛijat prabhuḥ | "Dividing his own body into two, [Brahmā] became with the half a man, and with the half a woman; and in her he created (i.e. according to the commentator, begot)[87] Virāj." Compare also the passage from the Vishṇu Purāṇa i. 7, 12 ff. quoted in the first volume of this work, p. 65, and the passage from the Śatap. Brāhmaṇa cited in the same vol., p. 25 f.[88] On the injustice of ascribing an immoral character to the Hindu writings, or to the deities whom they describe, on the ground of such legends as the one before us, or of the dialogue between Yama and Yamī in the 10th hymn of the tenth Maṇḍala of the Rig-veda, see some instructive remarks by Prof. Roth in the third vol. of the Journal of the American Oriental Society, pp. 332–337.

The case is different, however, with another class of stories, which are frequently to be met with in the Itihāsas and Purāṇas, in which various adulterous amours, of the Aśvins, Indra, Varuṇa, and Kṛishṇa, are described.—See the passages from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, iv. 1, 5, 1 ff.; the Mahābhārata, Vanaparva, v. 10, 316 ff., quoted or abstracted in the fifth vol. of this work, pp. 250 ff., and in Indische Studien, i. 198; the Rāmāyaṇa i. 48, 16 ff. (Schlegel's and Bombay ed., Gorresio's ed. i. 49); and the passages quoted from the Mbh. in the first volume of this work, pp. 310, 466 (with note), and 467. In all these cases a licentious character is evidently attributed to the gods.[89]

[87] Maithuna-dharmeṇa Virāṭ-sanjnam purushaṁ nirmitavān |

[88] "The Matsya P. has a little allegory of its own on the subject of Brahmā's intercourse with S'atarūpā; for it explains the former to mean the Vedas, and the latter the Sāvitrī, or holy prayer, which is their chief text; and in their cohabitation there is therefore no evil: Veda-rūpiṇi smṛito Brahmā Sāvitrī tad-adhishṭhitā | tasmān na kaśchid doshaḥ syāt Sāvitrī-gamane vibhoḥ | "—Wilson's Vishṇu Pur., 2nd ed., vol. i., p. 108, note. See the first vol. of this work, p. 112.

[89] Kumārila Bhaṭṭa, however, attempts to explain allegorically not only the dalliance of Brahmā with his own daughter, but also the adultery of Indra with Ahalyā.—See the passage quoted from him and translated in Müller's Anc. Sansk.

In the case of Kṛishna the following is the reasoning by which the author of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa attempts to quiet the scruples of some of the purer-minded among the devotees of the pastoral deity, and to vindicate his morality, by seeking to impart a mystic character to those loose adventures which had been the occasion of scandal to them, though, no doubt, well suited to the taste of his coarser worshippers.

Bhāg. Pur., x. 33, 27 ff.—Rājā uvācha | saṁsthāpanāya dharmasya praśamāyetarasya cha | avatīrṇo hi bhavagān aṁśena jagadīśvaraḥ | 28. Sa kathaṁ dharma-setūnāṁ vaktā kartā 'bhirakshitā | pratīpam ācharad brahman paradārābhimarśanam | 29. Āptakamo Yadu-patiḥ kṛitavān vai jugupsitam | kim-abhiprāyaḥ etaṁ naḥ saṁśayaṁ chhindhi suvrata | Śrī-Śukaḥ uvācha | 30. Dharma-vyatikramo dṛishṭaḥ īśvarāṇāncha sāhasam | tejīyasāṁ na doshāya vahneḥ sarvabhujo yathā | 31. Naitat samācharej jātu manasā 'pi hy anīśvaraḥ | vinaśyaty ācharan mauḍhyād yathā 'rudro 'bdhijaṁ visham | 32. Īśvarāṇāṁ vachaḥ satyaṁ tathaivācharitaṁ kvachit | teshāṁ yat sva-vacho yuktam buddhimāṁs tat samācharet | 33. Kuśalācharitenaishām iha svārtho na vidyate | viparyayeṇa vā 'nartho nirahaṅkāriṇām prabho | 34. Kimutākhila-sattvānāṁ tiryaṅ-martya-divaukasām | īśituś cheśitāvyānāṁ kuśalākuśalānvayaḥ | 35. Yat pāda-pankaja-parāga-nisheva-tṛiptāḥ yoga-prabhāva-vidhutākhila-karma-bandhāḥ | svairaṁ charanti munayo 'pi na nahyamānās tasyechhayā "tta-vapushaḥ kutaḥ eva bandhaḥ | 36. Gopīnāṁ tat-patīnāncha sarveshām eva dehinām | yo 'ntaś charati so 'dhyakshaḥ krīḍaneneha deha-bhāk | 37. Anugrahāya bhūtānām mānushaṁ deham āśritaḥ | bhajate tādṛiśīḥ krīḍāḥ yāḥ śrutvā tat-paro bhavet | 38. Nāsūyan khalu Kṛishṇāya mohitās tasya māyayā | manyamānāḥ sva-pārśvasthān svān svān dārān Vrajaukasaḥ | 39. Brahma-rātre upāvṛitte Vāsudevānumoditāḥ | anichchhantyo yayur gopyaḥ sva-gṛihān bhagavat-priyāḥ[90] |

Lit., pp. 529 f. In the Rāmāyaṇa i. 49 Indra tells the gods that his adulterous act had tended to their benefit, by exciting the wrath of Gautama and so neutralizing the fruit of those austerities of the saint which threatened danger to the celestials. On this the commentator in the Bombay ed. remarks: Dharma-dhurandharasyāpi Śakrasya adharme pravṛittau vījaṁ darśayitum āha | "What follows is said to show what was the ground of Indra's practising unrighteousness, though he is the supporter of righteousness."

[90] This passage is partly quoted in my Mata-parīkshā, published in Calcutta in 1852, p. 87; and in Prof. Banerjea's Dialogues, p. 383 f.

"The king said: 27. The divine lord of the world became partially[91] incarnate for the establishment of virtue, and the repression of its opposite. 28. How did he, the expounder, author, and guardian of the bulwarks of righteousness, practise its contrary, the corruption of other men's wives? 29. With what object did the lord of the Yadus (Kṛishṇa) perpetrate what was blameable? Resolve, devout saint, this our doubt. Śuka said: 30. The transgression of virtue, and the daring acts which are witnessed in superior beings, must not be charged as faults to those glorious persons, as no blame is imputed to fire, which consumes fuel of every description. 31. Let no one other than a superior being ever even in thought practise the same: any one who, through folly, does so, perishes, like any one not a Rudra [drinking] the poison produced from the ocean.[92] 32. The word of superior beings is true, and so also their conduct is sometimes [correct]: let a wise man observe their command, which is right. 33. These beings, O king, who are beyond the reach of personal feelings, have no interest in good deeds done in this world, nor do they incur any detriment from the contrary. 34. How much less can there be any relation of good or evil between the lord of all beings, brute, mortal, and divine, and the creatures over whom he rules? (i.e. since he is entirely beyond the sphere of virtue and vice, how can any of his actions partake of the nature of either?) 35. Since Munis, who are satisfied by worshipping the pollen from the lotus of his feet, and by the force of abstraction have shaken off all the fetters of works,—since even they are uncontrolled, and act as they please, how can there be any restraint upon him (the Supreme Deity) when he has voluntarily assumed a body? 36. He who moves within the gopīs (milkmen's wives) and their husbands, and all embodied beings, is their ruler, who only in sport assumed a body upon earth. 37. Taking a human form out of benevolence to creatures, he engages in sports such as that those who hear of them may become devoted to himself. 38. The [male] inhabitants of Vraja harboured no ill-will to Kṛishṇa, since, deluded

[91] Comp. Mbh. i. 2785. Yas tu Nārāyaṇo nāma deva-devaḥ sanātanaḥ | tasyāṁśo mānusheshv āsīd Vāsudevaḥ pratāpavān | See further passages to be quoted in chapter ii., sect. v., below.

[92] This refers to the poison drunk by Śiva at the churning of the ocean. See Rāmāyaṇa i. 45, 26, ed. Schlegel, and Wilson's Vishṇu Purāṇa, note p. 78 (1st ed.). The passage of the Rāmāyaṇa will be quoted further in chap. iii., sec. vi.

by his illusion, they each imagined that his own wife was by his side. 39. When Brahmā's night had arrived, the gopīs, beloved and gladdened by Kṛishṇa, departed unwillingly to their own homes."

This passage is followed (v. 40) by an assurance on the part of the author of the Purāṇa, that the person who listens with faith to the narrative of Kṛishṇa's sports with the cowherds' wives, and who repeats it to others, shall attain to strong devotion to that deity, and shall speedily be freed from love, that disease of the heart (vikrīḍitaṁ Vrajavadhūbhir idaṁ cha Vishṇoḥ śraddhānvito 'nuśṛiṇuyād atha varṇayed yaḥ | bhaktim parām bhagavati pratilabhya kāmaṁ hṛid-rogam āśv apahinoty achireṇa dhīraḥ). A remarkable instance of homœopathic cure, certainly!

I quote the remarks of the commentator, Śrīdhara Svāmin, on verses 30 ff. of this passage: 30. Parameśvare kaimutika-nyāyena parihartuṁ sāmānyato mahatāṁ vṛittam āha 'dharmavyatikramaḥ' iti | 'sāhasancha dṛishṭam' Prajāpatīndra-Soma-Viśvāmitrādīnāṁ | tachcha teshāṁ tejasvināṁ doshāya na bhavatīti | 31. Tarhi 'yad yad ācharati śreshthaḥ' iti nyāyena anyo 'pi kuryād ity āśankya āha 'naitad' iti | 'anīśvaro' dehādi-para-tantro yathā Rudra-vyatirikto visham ācharan bhakshayan | 32. Kathaṁ tarhi sadāchārasya prāmāṇyam ataḥ āha 'īśvarāṇām' iti | teshāṁ vachaḥ satyam atas tad-uktam āchared eva | ācharitaṁ kvachit satyam ataḥ 'sva-vacho yuktaṁ' teshāṁ vachasā yad uktam aviruddhaṁ tat tad eva ācharet | 33. Nanu tarhi te 'pi kim evaṁ sāhasam ācharanti tatra āha 'kusale' ti | prārabdha-karma-kshapaṇa-mātram eva teshāṁ kṛityaṁ na anyad ity arthaḥ | 34. Prastutam āha 'kimuta' iti | 'kuśalākuśalānvayo' na vidyate iti kim punar vaktavyam ity arthaḥ | 35. Etad eva sphuṭīkaroti | yasya pāda-pankaja-parāgasya nishevaṇena tṛiptāḥ yadvā yasya pāda-pankaja-parāge nishevā yeshāṁ te tathā te cha te tṛipūścha iti bhaktāḥ ity arthaḥ | tathā jñāninaś cha na nahyamānāḥ bandhanam aprāpnuvantaḥ | para-dāratvaṁ gopīnām angīkṛitya parihṛitam | 36. Idānīm bhagavataḥ sarvāntaryāmiṇaḥ para-dāra-sevā nāma na kāchid ity āha 'gopīnām' iti | 'yo 'ntaś charaty adhyaksho' buddhy-ādi-sākshī sa eva krīḍanena dehabhāk na tv asmad-ādi-tulyo yena doshaḥ syād iti | 37. Nanv evaṁ ched āptakāmasya ninditē kutaḥ pravṛittir ity āha 'anugrahāya' iti | śṛingāra-rasākṛishṭa-chetaso 'ti-bahir-mukhān api sva-parān kartum iti bhāvaḥ | 38. Nanv anye 'pi bhinnāchārāḥ svacheshṭitam evam eva iti vadanti tatrāha 'nāsūyann' iti | evambhūtaiśvaryābhāve tathā kurvantaḥ pāpāḥ jneyāḥ iti bhāvaḥ |

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY

"In order to refute [the charge of immorality] in regard to the Supreme Deity, by the à fortiori argument, the author states generally the conduct of great persons in the words 'the transgression,' etc. The 'daring acts witnessed' are those of Prajāpati, Indra, Soma, Viśvāmitra, and others; and these are not to be charged to them as faults. 31. Having intimated the doubt that according to the reasoning 'whatever an eminent person does,'[93] etc., etc., there is a danger that another person may do the like,—he says, 'Let no one do the same,' etc.; 'no one other than a superior being,' i.e. no one who is in subjection to a body, etc.; 'as any one separate from Rudra using,' swallowing, 'poison.' 32. Whence, then, is the authority for pure conduct? He tells us in the words, 'of superior beings,' etc. Their word is true; therefore let their declarations be followed. Their conduct is [only] sometimes true [correct]: therefore, let 'their correct words,' viz., that, not being contrary [to right], which is declared by their word, be followed. 33. In answer to the question why these superior beings also thus practise 'daring acts,' he states, in the words 'good deeds,' etc., that they have no other concern whatever than merely to nullify [the consequences of] their commenced works [so as to prevent these works from interfering with their final liberation]. 34. He arrives at his main subject in the words 'how much less,' etc.: i.e. [in the case of the supreme Vishṇu] there is no such relation of good or evil: What more is to be said? 35. He makes this clear. [The first words here mean either] 'they who are satisfied by worshipping the pollen of the lotus of his feet'; or 'they who are worshippers of the pollen of the lotus of his feet, and are also satisfied, i.e. devotees'; further, who are wise men, not bound,—finding no restraint. The objection that the gopīs were other men's wives is [here] admitted, and obviated. 36. Now he [further] asserts, in the words 'the gopīs,' that in the case of the divine, all-pervading, Being there is no such thing as an attachment to other men's wives [since he pervades, and is one with, everything]. It is 'he who moves within, the ruler,' the witness of the understanding, etc., who in sport takes a body; but he does not resemble such persons as ourselves, so that he should be in fault. 37. The author now, in the words 'out of benevolence,' answers the question why, if the case be so, the Being who has no want unsatisfied should engage in acts which have been censured: the purport is, that he seeks to incline to himself even such persons as are attracted by sensual love, and greatly devoted to external things.[94] 38. But do not others of a very different mode of life represent their own conduct as of this very description? In reference to this he says 'they harboured no ill-will,' etc. The drift is, that those who without such divine character act in the same way are to be considered sinners."

[93] This text, from the Bhagavad Gītā, will be quoted below.

The following is the passage referred to by the commentator in his annotation on verse 31. It will be seen that it inculcates a doctrine diametrically opposed to that urged in the earlier part, at least, of the argument by which the author of the Bhāgavata endeavours to justify the adulteries of Kṛishṇa, and perfectly coincident with the tenor of the condemnation which the same author (who is inconsistent with himself) had, in an earlier part of his work, pronounced on Brahmā by the mouth of his sons (above, p. 47):

Bhagavad Gītā, iii. 20 ff.—Karmaṇaiva hi saṁsiddham āsthitāḥ Janakādayaḥ | loka-sangraham evāpi sampaśyan kartum arhasi | 21. Yad yad ācharati śreshṭhas tat tad evetaro janaḥ | sa yat pramāṇaṁ kurute lokas tad anuvartate | 22. Na me Pārthāsti kartavyaṁ trishu lokeshu kinchana | nānavāptam avāptavyaṁ varte eva cha karmaṇi | 23. Yadi hy ahaṁ na varteyaṁ jātu karmany atandritaḥ | mama vartmānuvartante manushyāḥ Pārtha sarvaśaḥ | 24. Utsīdeyur ime lokāḥ na kuryāṁ karma ched aham | sankarasya cha kartā syām upahanyām imāḥ prajāḥ | 25. Saktāḥ karmany avidvāṁso yathā kurvanti Bhārata || kuryād vidvāṁs tathā 'saktaś chikīrshur loka-sangraham | 26. Na buddhi-bhedaṁ janayed ajnānāṁ karma-sanginām | joshayet sarva-karmāṇi vidvān yuktaḥ samācharan |

"20. For it was by works that Janaka and other sages attained perfection. You also ought to act, seeking the edification of mankind.[95] 21. Whatever a person of eminence practises, that the rest of men also [do]. Whatever authoritative example he sets, the people follow. 22. There is nothing in the three worlds, son of Pṛithā, which I have to do, nor anything unattained which I have to attain; and yet I continue in action. 23. If I were not to continue diligently engaged in works, O son of Pṛithā, men would follow my course in every respect. 24. These people would be ruined if I did not practise works; and I should occasion a confusion of castes: I should destroy these creatures. 25. In the same way as the ignorant, who are attached to works, perform them, so let the wise man perform them, without attachment, seeking the edification of mankind. 26. Let not the wise man create a distraction of mind among ignorant persons who are attached to works: let him fulfil all ceremonies with alacrity, while he practises them with abstracted mind."

[94] I find this sense of the word bahirmukha in Molesworth's Marathi Dictionary.

[95] Compare Raghuvaṁśa iii. 46. . . . . pathaḥ śucher darśayitāraḥ īśvarāḥ malīmasān ādadate na paddhatim | "Our lords, who point out to us the pure way, do not [themselves] pursue an unclean path."

